"TALKER" INTERESTS INVENTORS

Articles Appearing in Scientific Magazines Indicate That Inventors and Theorists Are Watching the Talking Machine Trend These Days

That young inventors and persons with an original trend of thought are more and more considering the development of the talking machine as a field for their activities is evidenced from the number of new ideas both practical and fantastic which are appearing in a number of publications devoted to various branches of science and invention.

In a recent issue of Science and Invention there appeared no less than seven articles dealing with the talking machine. One article deals with a recordless talking machine, on which selected selections may be played by pressing a series of electrical buttons, which make contact with a central exchange, similar to the telephone exchange. At the exchange there are hundreds of miniature records electrically connected and any number of people can listen in.

Another article deals with a novel talking machine cabinet which was presented to E. C. Morse as a surprise by the joiner shop in his shipyard. Dr. Harry A. Knauss, inventor of a metal phonograph record, describes his invention and other articles deal with a home-made electric talking machine and a patented apparatus for recording and reproducing sound.

A lengthy article entitled "A Scientist's Dream of Future Movies" describes a motion picture theatre which is equipped with various electrical switches at the seats. Several different photoplays are flashed on the screen simultaneously and spectators can view either picture by simply pressing a button. This also has the effect of providing synchronized talking machine music for the picture which the spectator desires to see. The music is heard through an apparatus similar to a telephone receiver which fits over the head. Verily, the world does move!

JONES CO. OPENS IN GRAND ISLAND

GRAND ISLAND, NEB., January 7.—The Jones Music Co. has recently opened a new music store at this point, carrying a complete line of Brunswick phonographs and records, and also the leading lines of pianos and sheet music. Mr. Jones is very well known throughout the Middle West, having formerly been connected with the Gaston Music Co. as manager of its Grand Island branch. He was connected in this capacity for a good many years, and has proved himself a real live musical merchandise man.

Mr. Jones has one of the finest music houses in Grand Island, and anticipates a wonderful amount of business from this new location. He has working with him in the business his two sons, who are both very aggressive salesmen.

NEW VICTOR SHOP IN JOHNSON CITY

JOHNSON CITY, N. Y., January 6.—A new exclusive Victor establishment, to be known as the Music Shop, has been opened at 237 Main street here. This is one of the most attractive stores in this vicinity. Complete modern equipment, consisting of record demonstration booths and record racks and a complete stock of Victrolas and Victor records, has been installed.

THE BRUNSWICK IN MOUNT VERNON

E. Brodbeck & Sons, the well-known music dealers of Mount Vernon, N. Y. have secured the representation of the Brunswick phonograph and records in addition to their other lines for the Mount Vernon territory.

The chronic kicker has a bootless occupation. Most generally he hasn't a leg to stand on.

GETTING IDEAS THROUGH EMPLOYEES

Merchant Forms Idea Club and Awards Prizes to Employes Submitting Best Suggestions

There is great danger in every business establishment of getting into a rut. The talking machine business is no exception and when the manager or head of the business depends upon his own ideas exclusively and neglects to weigh the opinions and suggestions of the members of his staff he is soon operating his business on a stereotyped basis and that vital element which we know as originality is lost.

One merchant has overcome this danger by instituting an "Idea Club," of which all the employes of the establishment are members. Each employe is expected to submit a number of ideas in written form each month to the manager, the most practical of which are selected by the head of the firm and then discussed in a general meeting of the staff. Prizes are awarded each month to the three employes submitting the best suggestions. The success of the innovation is evident from the fact that out of thirty-five suggestions submitted twenty-one were adopted and put into immediate practice.

NEW RAINBOW RECORD DISTRIBUTOR

Cabinet & Accessories Co. to Look After Wholesale Distribution of the Rainbow Records in Rapidly Growing Metropolitan Territory

The Rodeheaver Record Co., manufacturer of the Rainbow records, with headquarters in New York, announces the appointment of the Cabinet & Accessories Co., Inc., 145 East Thirty-fourth street, New York, as exclusive jobber for Rainbow records in the metropolitan district, and all orders from dealers will be handled through the new distributor in the future.

A. J. Heath & Co., recently appointed Rainbow record distributors in the Philadelphia and Baltimore territories, have done a substantial business in those records during and since the holiday season, according to reports received at the Rodeheaver Co. offices.

URGE PATENT OFFICE PAY RAISE

Victor Talking Machine Co. and Edison Co. Notify Congressmen of Their Desire for Action on Patent Office Pay Raise Bill

The Victor Talking Machine Co. and the Thos. A. Edison Co. are actively engaged in the move to stimulate action on the bill providing for increases in the pay of patent office employes. In addition to a large delegation of patent attorneys and business men from New York and New Jersey which visited Washington to attend a conference with New Jersey Congressmen for the purpose of speeding up action on the bill, which is in committee in the House of Representatives, the Victor Talking Machine Co. and the Edison Co., as well as other business houses, sent letters to the Congressmen strongly urging that action be taken immediately.

CONCERTS AID SALES CAMPAIGN

George M. Burt Co. Inaugurates a Series of Concerts as Part of Its Sales Campaign

ENDICOTT, N. Y., January 7.—The talking machine department of the George M. Burt Co.'s store here has been making an effective sales drive in the interests of Victor, Edison and Brunswick machines, which it handles. A series of concerts and extensive advertising in the local papers are proving of considerable value in increasing sales. In addition to the talking machines an extensive stock of Victor, Brunswick and Edison records has been installed for the benefit of patrons.

AUTO OWNERS ARE GOOD PROSPECTS

Names of Automobile Owners in the Community Can Be Secured From Local Garages

A live prospect list is one of the most important adjuncts to a successful business; therefore the talking machine dealer should pay particular attention to the formation of these lists and he should be sure not to overlook any good tips. Automobile owners now form a large part of any community and as a rule this class of people have the money to indulge their tastes in music.

One way of getting the names of automobile owners is through the local automobile agencies and garages. Some of these may be reluctant to give out any information which they have, but the dealer can overcome this by making a trade; that is, by offering in return for the desired information a selected list of names which he already possesses and which might make good automobile prospects—with the understanding, of course, that the matter be entirely confidential.

AN INGENIOUS ADVERTISING IDEA

Victor Dealer Gains Publicity and Stimulates Caruso Record Sales by Furnishing Musical Prologue to Moving Picture Show in His City

LYNN, MASS., January 2.—Some valuable advertising was obtained recently by John Z. Kelley, Victor dealer of this city, through an ingenious publicity stunt. Mr. Kelley persuaded the manager of the Waldorf Theatre in Lynn to allow him to furnish a free "act" consisting of Caruso records exclusively, to be used as a prologue to the regular moving picture show. Permission was granted and when the curtain was raised there appeared a room in the center of which was a Victrola. On one side of the stage was a sign bearing in letters large enough to be seen at the back of the theatre the announcement "Memories of Caruso," and beneath this, in smaller letters, the name of the dealer who furnished the instrument. In the lobby of the theatre was shown a large picture of Caruso.

The reception of this novelty was enthusiastic and the sale of Caruso records was considerably stimulated. The manager of the theatre, who operates several of them, is trying to arrange to have this same feature embodied as part of the program in his other theatres.

MAKES RECORDS OF INDIAN MUSIC

Indian Songs and Chants of Seven Tribes Recorded by Native Singers for Miss Frances Densmore, Who Is Doing Much Good Work

RED WING, MINN., January 2.—A valuable and interesting series of records of Indian war songs, folk songs and chants has been made by Miss Frances Densmore here. Miss Densmore goes among the various tribes, selects the best and most typical musicians and persuades them to sing into her talking machine. The songs of seven tribes of Indians living on reservations have been gathered in this manner. These include songs of all phases of their every-day life, those used in treating the sick, dance songs, war songs and Indian drum playing.

GOES AFTER TRADE AND GETS IT

BURGETTSTOWN, PA., January 3.—"If Mahomet won't go to the mountain the mountain will come to Mahomet." L. M. Lytton, of this city, believes in this proverb and is proving it every day by taking a Granby on the rear of his Ford and going out through the mud-roads to the mining communities. Mr. Lytton also believes in selling the higher-priced Granby, and is now introducing Granby consoles. He wastes no time in his store, but puts his faith in the above quoted proverb.

Making Record Buying Too Easy for the Customer and Some of Its Obvious Dangers

A question that interests a number of talking machine dealers is just how far to go and when to stop in their efforts to make record buying easy for the customer and save him from the confusion that results when he is handed the complete catalog or a supplement and left to select the records that he may feel desirous of buying.

The practice of having close at hand, either as the part of a supplement or a separate hanger, a list of a dozen or more specially selected records calculated to appeal to the average talking machine owner is not a new one and has been found quite effective from the fact that the selections are changed at intervals and after a time give to the talking machine owner an insight into practically all the good things in the catalog.

The practice, too, of determining the particular musical taste of the customer and putting before him either by word of mouth or in printed form the titles of a half dozen or a dozen records of that particular type of music from which to make his selections has also been used effectively and is still a standby of many retailers.

In the way of publicity, of course, it has been found highly desirable to feature one or two records at a time, changing the titles sufficiently to enable the prospective purchaser to become acquainted with practically all the good things in the list before the next supplement appears. All these methods, of course, are used by the majority of record dealers and may be termed standard to the trade. In view of this fact, therefore, there is brought to light at intervals new ideas developed by various dealers for presenting the new records and particularly standard selections to talking machine owners in ways that will appeal by their originality and at the same time produce the desired results in the matter of sales.

As has been said before, however, there is a question as to just how far the dealer should or can go in limiting the list from which his customer may select without either killing all interest in the main catalog or at least interfering with the sale of the general line of records.

One retailer, for instance, conceived the idea of having a local musical authority of considerable reputation pass on the new records each month and select four or five of those which he considered to be the best along musical lines, perfection in recording, etc. On the face of it the idea seems to be a good one, giving the average purchaser the benefit of expert opinion to guide him in selecting the new additions to his record library. From another angle, however, as has been pointed out by another retailer, the announcement that the musical authority considers three or four records to be the cream of the list, from both musical and mechanical standards, intimates that the balance of the records in the current month's list are below par. Meanwhile it may be that the great majority of those who read the announcements or have the expert opinion brought to them some other way may not stop to analyze the matter so carefully, but the thinking individual will naturally feel that after he has listened to or purchased the selected records the balance of the list are mediocre. It is self-evident that the average person is not enthusiastic over buying a product that is not the best in his own opinion and particularly one that is not the best in the opinion of the expert in the employ of the seller.

On the face of it the employment of an expert to give to the record purchaser the benefit of his mature and trained judgment regarding the offerings on the current record lists represents a highly commendable bit of service on the part of the dealer. But the question to be considered is just how far it is liable to react and affect the sale of records not among the chosen few.

On a straight merchandising basis all records are deemed to be well selected and salable and are issued on that basis. For a musical expert to advise his particular friends, or to offer his opinion to those who seek it, is as it should be. For him to call attention to some of the special features of the list as being worth while from his viewpoint is also quite in order, but when he publicly announces a half dozen records or less as being far ahead of the rest of the list from every angle, then there is danger of killing possible sales of other records.

One has but to put himself in the position of the purchaser of some other article of merchandise. Say he is about to select a cravat from a line of a hundred or more all offered at the same price. The salesman does not tell him that only five of the cravats are worth while and far superior to the rest. He simply calls his attention to the desirable features of the design and texture of several of the line and lets him use his own judgment regarding the rest.

The services of a musical expert are highly desirable in the talking machine store, for his advice should prove of inestimable value to those who, being more or less in the dark regarding music, are somewhat at a loss about selecting records that will tend to improve their musical culture. In offering such advice he can do it without reflecting upon other records.

To have him make definite selections from the list, however, and advertise the fact seems to be a good idea gone wrong.

HOSPE CO. ADDS BRUNSWICK LINE

Large Omaha Concern Adds Brunswick Line to Its Extensive Stock of Talking Machines

OMAHA, NEB., January 7. The Brunswick line was recently added to the talking machine department of the A. Hospe Co. of this city. This concern is one of the oldest and largest musical instrument houses in the Middle West, and for the past twenty-five years has been an exclusive Victor dealer and until recently also a Victor jobber.

This is quite an important addition to the list of Brunswick dealers as the Hospe Co. will naturally dispose of a great many phonographs and records in the Omaha territory. Mr. Zitzman, general manager of the Hospe Co., is very much enthused over the latest acquisition to his talking machine department.

What Is a Live Prospect and How Much Is He Really Worth to the Dealer? :: By G. H. Howe

What is a prospect and how much is he worth to the dealer? That was the question recently brought up at a meeting of talking machine dealers and proved a greater problem than appeared on the surface. One dealer, for instance, declared that he had practically 1,500 live prospects on his cards and stated that they had only cost him between $75 and $100, or a little over 5 cents apiece. Another said he had about 1,200 prospects and they had cost him something over 10 cents apiece. Finally an old veteran in the game declared that he had about 150 prospects, that they had cost him over $1 apiece, and were worth the money.

The difference between the various figures offered by the dealers naturally brought forth some quick questioning. It resolved itself into the query, "What is a prospect?" The old-timer, who has been selling musical instruments for a quarter of a century or more, practically settled the matter when he gave as his definition of a prospect a person who, to the best of the dealer's knowledge and belief, is going to buy a talking machine and some records from that particular dealer. When it comes down to lists, he declared, "I have lists of probably 3,000 names and out of these 3,000 names I have one thousand that may be considered in the selected class, and of that thousand there are at least 500 who are worth following up right now, but when it comes down to prospects I have only about 150, but these people are going to buy from me within the next few months. I know in most cases what they desire, what they want to pay and how. I know their financial standing to be satisfactory and I am all ready to deliver the goods when the opportune moment arrives.

Some are waiting for birthdays—some are going to move into new homes—some are waiting for this event or that, but they know what they want and I know what they want, and it is simply a question of getting together. Those are what I call prospects.

"A good list of several thousand names is not to be sneezed at, because it gives the dealer some basis upon which to work, but that list is simply a directory of possible customers. A careful weeding out will bring the list down to a few hundred or a thousand names of those who probably will buy talking machines some day, and then the process of elimination is carried out until we have the final list of those who have committed themselves definitely as to price, terms and style, have agreed that we have what they want and are simply waiting. It may be a few days or several months.

"When I was a younger man I worked for a piano dealer, and finally one day ran across a woman who said she had no piano, but hoped to buy one some day in the future. I came in very cheerfully and reported to the dealer that I had discovered a prospect. 'When will she be in to buy?' he said. 'Oh, some time when she has the money,' was my answer. 'In other words, son, what you got is a name,' and I have never mixed names and prospects since that time.

"I can best describe my idea this way: When a man puts an advertisement in a newspaper the entire circulation of that newspaper represents his list. The answers to the advertisement represent his selected list and those who eventually get down to the closing point, or to the point that promises a definite closing within a reasonable time, are his prospects. Perhaps my idea may appeal more to the pessimist than to the optimist, but at the same time it does not raise false hopes and gives the dealer a better and more certain working basis."

VIEWS RETROSPECTIVE AND PROSPECTIVE

WE have turned over a new leaf—we have started a new chapter—1922 is with us. It is a period for retrospective and prospective thought. We have just witnessed the passing of one of the most trying years in the history of the industry—a year in which every manufacturer, distributor and merchant had to fight strenuously to score any kind of accomplishment. This striving has brought with it many evils consequent upon the unusually keen competition in the price field, due to overproduction and overstocking. Indeed, the closing months of the year witnessed a veritable orgy of price-cutting in machines and selling on terms that can only be considered unhealthy and dangerous to the stability and progress of the industry.

Such a condition should not be allowed to continue during the year 1922. It should be the aim of every business man to discard those policies which work to the detriment of his business and the industry as a whole. The talking machine industry has long been recognized for its splendid trade practices—its adherence to price-maintenance and the utilization of business methods that have come in for no inconsiderable amount of commendation. A departure from this high standard is to be deplored, and it is time that manufacturers, distributors and dealers arrived at a common understanding that this price anarchy in the retail field should cease.

There must be a close line of demarcation drawn as to the kind of men who are entrusted with the retailing of talking machines. A man has the right to be a free agent, but he has no right to endanger the entire industry in his desire to make money at the expense of the well-being of the entire trade. The situation in the retail field to-day needs remedial action, and the question arises: What policy can best be adopted to make the talking machine business better for 1922? Are there weaknesses discoverable when we analyze the several policies and systems now in vogue? These and other queries are timely and worth considering by talking machine men everywhere.

There is something more in life than the mere acquisition of money—there is honor and reputation. The dealer who desires to build a business that will be enduring must have a definite selling policy—one that will augment the reputation of his house for correct business methods. It is not a time to inject any methods which detract in any way from the stability of the trade. There is no good reason why dealers should announce that a talking machine can be purchased for so many cents a day, or no initial payment on a time sale. Such publicity has the effect on the public mind of cheapening the talking machine, and that is the very thing that men interested in its future should avoid.

When we consider the wonderful strides made by the talking machine musically and commercially within recent years it seems criminal for any member of the trade to indulge in practices that cheapen this instrument and undermine the industry. To our mind the public should not be encouraged in the belief that a talking machine can be purchased in this way. It is much more advisable to educate the public to a higher conception of trading ethics.

The Talking Machine World has always preached and believed that price-maintenance is the foundation upon which the security of this industry rests. It believes that the trade should oppose strongly the attempt on the part of any of its members to shatter this foundation by indiscriminate price-cutting.

NO ROOM FOR THE MAN WHO DRIFTS IN 1922

SOME members of the industry, both manufacturers and dealers, have drifted into the new year without any fixed plans, and have simply waited for developments, hoping for the best. Others have entered the new year with a comprehensive program elastic enough to meet any conditions, but sufficiently firm to permit of development and the carrying out of definite plans calculated to bring in the maximum amount of the business available.

During some of the past years in the trade the drifter has managed to get along without any great difficulty because there was more business than all the dealers combined could take care of, and he naturally got a substantial share simply through accident. The dealer who drifts along to-day, however, and has not developed a definite advertising and selling campaign is putting an awful burden on Lady Luck.

We have found retailers who have talked a good deal but have not had one concrete idea regarding special exploitation plans for the year; meanwhile they dwell upon the things they are going to do when "the time is right." On the other hand, we have run across dealers who have mapped out regular advertising campaigns; have arranged for concerts and recitals; have surveyed new fields which they hope to conquer and, altogether, are in a position to give an outline of what their activities are going to be for every month of the year.

It may be that conditions will cause a switch in the program, either in the matter of curtailment or expansion, but at least there is a definite foundation upon which the dealer may work. He is not spending his money for exploitation work in spurts, but has a fixed schedule, knows what it is going to cost him each month and realizes how much business he will have to do to cover that cost, in addition to his other overhead. It is simply a necessary factor in conducting all modern business, whether in selling talking machines or carpets. No merchant can simply drift along. He must have his trade compass and his business charts and be prepared to steer a straight course.

THE TREND IN CABINET DESIGNING

THE putting on the market in recent years of many new styles of talking machine cabinets, including those known as period styles, and particularly the various console models, has naturally encouraged the seekers after new business to endeavor to evolve case designs which would have a strong appeal through their distinctiveness.

For years the trade, and public for that matter, were satisfied with the ordinary upright type of talking machine. Everyone knew what it looked like and recognized it in the home. Eventually it was felt that distinctive designs would make an appeal to those who, although in a position to spend substantial sums for talking machines, found that though they could buy more elaborate cabinets of an accepted design they could not secure anything that was really exclusive and emphasized the fact.

Then came the craze for something different—something that was a talking machine and yet was not a talking machine so far as appearances went, with the result that the console models and the other new styles that have become familiar to the trade were evolved.

It is now maintained, however, that, in the effort to get away from sameness in cabinet design, the pendulum has been swung too far in the other direction, and we are now faced with the danger of seeing a number of freak styles offered to the public. In fact, there already have been evidences of a tendency in this direction.

It is very likely that a variety of styles of talking machine cabinets is to be desired in order that all tastes may be satisfied, but it is a grave question whether the talking machine revealed by the opening of a desk or the moving of a shelf of books, or the sliding of a wall panel, is calculated to help trade development.

There is a wide difference between the artistic and the freak styles. There are so many opportunities for casing the talking machine mechanism so that the result will be distinctive and artistic, while still remaining a talking machine, that there seems to be no real reason to resort to camouflage. It is much better for the industry to offer something that is recognized as a talking machine, although beautifully and expensively cased, than it is to offer some article of furniture or equipment that unexpectedly turns into a talking machine.

Bitter medicine is sugar-coated in order to fool children and placate elders, but the talking machine of to-day is too well known and too widely appreciated to require this coating of camouflage. It is all right to have it different, but at least have it sensible and artistic.

MUSICAL EDUCATION BY MEANS OF RADIO

THE transmitting of talking machine music by radio has become so prominent and so universal within the past few months that the stories of such events have been crowded off the front pages of the newspapers and are now handled as ordinary events, but the opening of this new field for the exploitation of the talking machine is a matter that is of general interest to the trade, for it all means publicity and publicity means business.

The Westinghouse Co. has been for some time past holding a series of nightly radio concerts from its sending stations in Newark, N. J.; Pittsburgh, Pa., and other cities, covering a radius of practically a thousand miles and interesting many thousands of amateurs and radio enthusiasts and their friends.

The sending of music by radio may be considered in the nature of a novelty and without any great value, but the fact that the talking machine has been so closely associated with such work at the outset is a matter of congratulation.

THE NEEDS OF THE PATENT OFFICE

FOR a number of years there has been a persistent demand for Congressional attention to the needs of the United States Patent Office, but the demand has been neglected to such a degree that a situation has developed that represents a real menace to the business life of the country. Two years ago, for instance, the Patent Office was 15,000 applications in arrears, and to-day, according to the Commissioner of Patents, it is 56,000 applications in arrears. These figures offer convincing proof of the seriousness of the situation.

The efficient handling of the business at the Patent Office is a most important matter, for both the development or the ruination of a business may depend upon the decision of the Patent Office regarding the strength of patents under which it operates. There is no question but that the revival of business is hindered to a material extent as a result of this situation, for, of the thousands of patents being handled, there are unquestionably many that, put into force, would mean the establishment of new industries, the employment of many new workers and a material increase in the business activity of the country.

Expert examiners in the Patent Office are paid only from $1,500 to $2,700, ridiculously small salaries in the face of existing conditions and the work the men are called upon to perform. The result is that skilled examiners are resigning from the Patent Office service and finding more profitable employment elsewhere.

In view of the situation, which is now so generally recognized, it would seem that members of the music industry, as well as business men generally, should support strongly the bill now before Congress providing for fair increases in the salaries of Patent Office employes. The fact that the bill provides for an increase of $5 in the patent fee (from $35 to $40) should not serve to weigh against the great relief that the passage of the bill may be expected to afford to industry as a whole.

AIDING SELLING ABILITY OF RETAILERS

WHEN the word school is mentioned in connection with business there is, naturally, a feeling that it is intended for the instruction of the amateur—the man who is seeking to break into the field. It has been demonstrated most impressively, however, during the past couple of years that the veteran salesman and dealer is in a position to gain quite as much from a course in salesmanship as is the beginner and, in fact, to gain more, because he has been drilled in the fundamentals of the business and can profit the greatest from the suggestions offered in the selling course.

The Victor Red Seal School is perhaps an outstanding example in this trade, for not only has it served to add immeasurably to the selling ability of retailers, but it has offered instruction that has proven profitable to leading wholesalers—men who have been in business almost from the time of its inception. Other salesmanship courses and classes have been conducted by various manufacturers and wholesalers, with excellent results in every case, where the instruction is based upon actual experience, and where the classes provide for an interchange of ideas. The individual is handicapped, indeed, who cannot secure from that mass of practical information ideas that can be introduced immediately and advantageously into his own business.

Many of the general salesmanship courses represent simply a mass of theory which depends upon the natural intelligence of the student to put into practical use; but in this industry, at least, the selling instruction has been practical and has, without doubt, proven a tremendous factor in not only keeping the business going as well as it has during the past few months, but it has helped to give many retailers handling talking machines a proper conception of the importance and dignity of the industry.

Developing a Valentine Music Campaign and Other Business-Building Means :: :: By W. B. Stoddard

"Say It With Music," one of the most popular songs of the past season, suggested to the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co. store in St. Louis, Mo., the idea for a Valentine Music Campaign, which proved very successful as a sales maker. Through the papers a special Valentine concert was announced, scheduled to take place a week before St. Valentine's Day. To all of the company's patrons who had purchased machines or records during the past year special invitations were issued. These were heart-shaped, red in color and bore the invitation in gold letters on the first page. Inside was the program: "Little Gray House in the West," Gluck; "Last Rose of Summer," Tetrassini; "Sunshine of Your Smile," McCormack; "Call Me Thine Own," Garrison; "Mighty Lak a Rose," Farrar and Kreisler; "Roses of Picardy," McCormack; "A Dream," Caruso; "Kiss Me Again," Garrison; "For You Alone," Caruso; "When You Look in the Heart of a Rose," McCormack.

The newspaper invitation was a double-column ad, with a border simulating a lace paper valentine, and after extending an invitation to the concert, the date and hour being mentioned, the ad concluded: "Real Love Messages of All Sweethearts—Victor Love Records in Valentine Envelopes. Come and hear these tender songs by the world's greatest artists and then pick out one or more of them and let them be your valentine. Say it with music."

The concert lasted an hour, with an intermission of twenty minutes, during which the operation of the machine was explained, special request records played and any questions answered. No one was asked or expected to buy, but many were anxious to avail themselves of the opportunity, especially after hearing some of the concert records played. Particular interest centered in the valentine records, which were displayed on a table in a bower of red and white, set off with a number of hearts and darts. All of the records played at the concert, and fully a hundred other ballads, ancient and modern, were included in the list. Each was enclosed in a stout manila envelope, with lines for the address of the recipient, and in the corner a fat Cupid and the little verse:

I wish you'd be my Valentine, I haven't words to say it;
I'm sending you this record, so put it on and play it.

The window that complemented the other publicity features showed an outline heart six feet high, the wire frame being completely covered with red paper roses. Inside the heart was a Victrola, and red ribbons ran from it to a number of records set in racks down close to the glass. Each record had a red heart pasted to the center, on which in black letters was the name of the selection, and all of them were records to be played at the Valentine concert. A card set on an easel and bordered with red hearts extended a cordial invitation to the general public to attend the concert.

Catering to the American Legion

The glorious American Legion is an organization that will have to be reckoned with from now on. Its numbers are increasing daily, as more and more of the boys join, and it will pay dealers to make an occasional special appeal to its members. Of course, the most advantageous time to do this is when there is a district or State meeting and large numbers of them are gathered together. Such a plan was adopted during the national gathering at Kansas City last Fall. In order to make a more forcible appeal, instead of individual advertising, all of the leading music dealers joined together in a full-page co-operative ad:

BOYS OF THE AMERICAN LEGION
Here's the best thing you've seen or heard since you first caught sight of the Statue of Liberty. While P. W. L. drop into any of these dugouts and hear the new Legion song, "Hurrah, American Legion!" It's a whiz bang!

Then followed the list of firms: Paul Talking Machine Shop, J. W. Jenkins Sons' Music Co., Eddie Kuhn Song Shop and S. S. Kresge Co. Of course, any other desired records could be substituted for the one advertised here.

Hamburger Gives Wireless Concerts

Hamburger's, Los Angeles, Cal., recently introduced a distinct novelty in the way of increasing the sales of its phonograph department. A short time ago wireless operators, both amateurs and professionals, were surprised to get the following announcement through their receivers: "This is experimental station 6XAK speaking, Hamburger's wireless station, located on the roof of the store. Commencing to-day and continuing for an indefinite period there will be various concerts and other announcements. We will now have a selection from the phonograph." Then followed one of the latest records and thousands of radio operators—there are 10,000 within reach of the instrument—listened in while Hamburger's gave a concert lasting from 4 to 5 p. m. Announcement of the new service was made in the papers, with the statement that in addition to the afternoon concerts the store will give concerts on Monday, Wednesday and Saturday nights, from 8 to 9 o'clock, and will later establish a service between 8 and 9 o'clock in the morning.

Linking Up With the Concert Artists

Now that so many of the world's most famous artists are making records for talking machines, it is very easy to tie up their names with the records. Comparatively few can hear the original artist, even when he appears in the city, but everyone who possesses a talking machine can hear his music. This was the argument advanced by the Powers Co., Portland, Ore., at the time of the recent appearance in the city of Jascha Heifetz, the brilliant young violinist. At the time of his appearance this concern arranged a window fitted up as a sun parlor, with wicker furniture and cretonne draperies in maroon and black. The entire background was given over to a bust painting of Heifetz of heroic size—six feet square. At one side was a talking machine and on a long, low mound, draped with maroon silk, were shown a number of his records. A card advised: "Hear Jascha Heifetz, the wonder violinist, and then come down and make a selection of his records, so that you can continue to enjoy his music regularly until he comes again."

NEW GRANBY DISTRIBUTORS

HIGH POINT, N. C., January 6.—The Granby Phonograph Corp., Norfolk, Va., has announced that the Shipman Organ Co., of this city, has taken on the Granby line in the South as distributors. W. J. Shipman, treasurer and vice-president of the Shipman Organ Co., recently spent a few days at the factory of the Granby Phonograph Corp. at Newport News, Va., and consummated the deal. Through the large business in organs which this company does through the South, it is well known to practically every music dealer, and it is expected that this new connection will greatly increase Granby prestige throughout the Southern States.

The good will of customers is the greatest asset a merchant can have. Without it he is in danger of going on the rocks.

COLUMBIA PRIZE-WINNERS

Harry R. Lamoreaux Wins First Prize in Columbia Dealers' Advertising Contest

The judges in the dealers' advertising contest sponsored by the Columbia Graphophone Co. announced their decision recently and the winner of the first prize was Harry R. Lamoreaux, Columbia dealer at Cherokee, Ia. Hundreds of advertisements were received by the judges and Columbia dealers in all parts of the country participated in this unique advertising idea. The contest started on November 1 and finished on December 1, and the only provision was to the effect that all advertisements entered in the contest must be devoted exclusively to Columbia products and carry the Columbia trade-mark.

Mr. Lamoreaux, in the winning advertisement, offered the farmers 40 cents a bushel for their corn, to be applied as payment for a Grafonola. Mr. Lamoreaux offered to deliver the Grafonola by truck and cart away the corn with the same truck. As winner of the first prize this enterprising dealer will receive free advertising in his local newspaper totaling six times the space of the winning advertisement, which was a full page.

The Hook Drug Co., Indianapolis, Ind., was the winner of the second prize, which consisted of free advertising space totaling five times the space of the winning advertisement. The Type-writer Supply Co., Ft. Worth, Tex., won the third prize, consisting of free advertising space totaling four times the space of the winning advertisement. The Haverty Furniture Co., Houston, Tex., was the winner of the fourth prize, which consisted of free advertising space totaling three times the space of the winning advertisement. H. B. Vanosdall & Bro., Ashland, O., was the winner of the fifth prize, consisting of free advertising space totaling twice the space of the winning advertisement. The Farrar Furniture Co., Bangor, Me., was the winner of the sixth prize, consisting of free advertising space totaling the same size as the winning advertisement.

ABOUT A CERTAIN SALESMAN

Two business men were talking about a salesman who had made a record.

"Yes," said one, "he has made big sales this year, but I wonder how long he can continue doing the work."

"Why?"

"Because he makes people buy instead of making them want to buy."

In that last sentence is a whole book of wisdom for every salesman.

Every salesman should ask himself: "Am I making them buy my goods or am I making them want to buy my goods?"

It is one thing to cram goods down the throat of the customer. It is another thing to handle him so that he will reach for the goods himself, says the Treasure Chest.

NEW REGULATIONS REGARDING CLAIMS FOR TAX REFUNDS

Excess Payments Will Be Returned to Taxpayer Immediately Under New Ruling Issued by Internal Revenue Bureau—No Change in Rules Regarding the Taking of Inventories

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 5.—New regulations regarding the procedure to be followed by the Internal Revenue Bureau in dealing with claims for refund and abatement of Federal taxes have been issued by Commissioner David H. Blair and will result, it is declared by officials of the Bureau, in the more prompt adjustment of such claims.

Heretofore, when an overassessment or overpayment was disclosed by the Bureau in auditing a tax return, the taxpayer was invited to file a claim for the abatement of the overassessment or the refund of the overpayment. When received the claim was filed until reached in due course for consideration, which often meant a delay of many months.

Hereafter taxpayers will not be advised of their privilege of filing such claims, but instead will receive a certificate of overassessment and a check in correction of the error, or, if an assessment is outstanding against the taxpayer for income or excess profits tax, the overpayment will be applied against the assessment and any balance remaining immediately refunded. Although it will no longer be necessary for taxpayers to file such claims when they themselves discover errors, they may continue to do so if they wish.

This action on the part of the Bureau is taken as a result of the inclusion in the new revenue law of a provision requiring the Government to pay interest upon claims for refund in an effort to reduce the amount which must be paid in that way. This provision, according to business men and tax experts, will do more to bring the work of the Bureau up to date and bring about the prompt settlement of claims than any other method which has yet been devised for this purpose.

Bureau of Internal Revenue and transmitted to collectors throughout the country. Merchants, manufacturers and business men generally, it is pointed out, need experience no difficulty in taking their inventories for 1921, as no change has been made in that section of the revenue law relating to inventories.

Present Treasury regulations provide that inventories must now be valued at "cost or market, whichever is lower," the Bureau explains. Taxpayers were permitted, regardless of their past practice, to adopt the "cost or market, whichever is lower" basis in taking their inventories for 1920, but thereafter, the regulations provide, changes can be made only after permission is obtained from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

"In the case of a merchant," it is pointed out, "cost" means the invoice price less trade or other discounts, excepting strictly cash discounts approximating a fair rate of interest, which may be deducted or not at the option of the taxpayer, provided a consistent course is followed. To the net invoice price should be added the cost of transportation and other necessary charges incurred in acquiring possession of the goods.

"In the case of a manufacturer 'cost' means the cost of raw materials and supplies, expenditures for labor and indirect costs incident to production, including a reasonable proportion of management expenses, but not including any cost of selling or securing return on capital.

"Market" means the current bid price prevailing at the date of the inventory for the particular merchandise. The burden of proof as to the correctness of the price rests upon the taxpayer in each case. Where no open market quotations are available the taxpayer must use such evidence of a fair market price at the dates nearest the inventory as may be available, such as specific transactions or compensation paid for cancellation of contracts or purchase commitments. Where, because of abnormal conditions, the taxpayer has regularly sold merchandise at prices lower than the market bid price the inventory may be valued at such prices. The correctness of such prices will be determined by reference to the actual sales of the taxpayer for a reasonable period before and after the date of inventory. Prices which vary materially from the actual prices so ascertained will not be accepted as reflecting the market.

"The value of each item in the inventory may be measured by cost or market, whichever is lower. An entire stock may not be inventoried at cost and also at market price, and the lower of the two inventories used. Inventories on whatever basis taken will be subject to investigation by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the taxpayer must satisfy the Commissioner of the correctness of the prices adopted. He must be prepared to show both the cost and the market price of each article included in the inventory.

"In the conduct of modern business it is of the utmost importance that every business, large or small, whether corporation, partnership or individual, shall maintain an exact record of receipts and expenses. No special system of accounts is prescribed by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, but the books should show in detail inventories, purchases, sales, capital investments, depreciation and similar items required in making up income tax returns."

Forms for the making of returns of 1921 income will be available at an early date.

The "Musical Instrument Theory" of Talking Machine Salesmanship Works Out in Practice

The merchant who reads each month a whole magazine full of articles intended to tell him how to run his business must sometimes think that trade papers are run entirely by men who never sold a thing in their lives. The more abstract, the more general a salesmanship article may be, the less readily is it likely to be swallowed by the merchant who is hungering for something "practical"; that is to say, who wants to know some definite thing which he can do, here and now, to bring in new business, improve collections, move his stationary stock and make himself feel happier generally.

No one writer, of course, possesses any magic key to unlock the secrets of salesmanship. After all, there is a plaguey lot more in selling to an unresponsive public than can be summed up in any course of lectures in salesmanship. It is, no doubt, true that salesmanship is the power (in the words of an authority on the subject) "to persuade people to purchase goods at a profit," but there are a great many possibilities wrapped up in that definition, and a great many of what may rightly be termed impossibilities, too.

The Fundamental Fact

The value of salesmanship articles, of discussions of salesmanship, or of anything else of the kind, rests upon the fact that in modern conditions of life the task of discovering and meeting the needs of the people is often not easily disentangled from the parallel task of inventing articles for sale and then creating a demand for them. The two ideas are not on the same level. But they are parallel.

Now, when the merchant says that he is annoyed by what he calls "theoretical" advice, he is making two different and separate mistakes. He is supposing that general principles cannot be easily applied to concrete cases, and he is confusing the marked difference between the salesmanship that fills acknowledged needs and the salesmanship which has first to prove that the need exists before it can begin to seek that which will fill the need.

Creating the Need

What, for instance, is the talking machine, and what are the records it uses but excellent examples of this second great class of commodities? Before the talking machine was invented its usefulness may, indeed, have been dreamed of by some prophetic-minded writer or thinker, but until it actually came into existence the general public was not so much as conscious that any need, use or place for it existed or could exist. There was not merely indifference, there was complete ignorance. So, from the start, in the talking machine business it has always been necessary to demonstrate the need for the machine and its accessories, to show that the industry itself is legitimate and has its place as a beneficial, indeed an actively benevolent force, not merely for entertaining society, but for helping to make life better worth living. That idea has had to be beaten into the consciousness of the people by slow and persistent effort. To accomplish this task has called for the best brand of salesmanship, whether by the printed or the spoken word. But it has had to be theoretical salesmanship from the start.

That is to say, it has had to be based on some definitely conceived and deliberately worked-out plan, originally deduced not from experience, but from analogy, imagination and logic. When there is no actual previous experience to go upon the man who undertakes to work out a plan of salesmanship must be able to draw upon a wide knowledge of the workings of parallel though different branches of business. He must know what other men, creating demand for other articles, have had to discover, to experience, to achieve. He must know how their plans were conceived, how they were worked out and what lines of reasoning guided those who devised them. He must, therefore, be able to reason according to sound logical processes, and must possess a large fund of historical knowledge (as it may rightly be called) of business processes, upon which to build the new structure of salesmanship which he is planning to erect.

A Theory of Salesmanship

In a word, he must have the materials for a theory of salesmanship and the ability to construct a workable theory out of these materials. He must, therefore, be a "theorist," horrid-sounding as the word may be in the ears of the man who delights in calling himself practical. All salesmanship in the talking machine business began as purely theoretical and was only changed as the terms of the theory were found to agree with the facts actually developed. Where the reasoning was sound the theory remained unchanged; where the reasoning was seen to be unsound it was changed. Finally, in the consciousness of the biggest men of the industry arose the generally perfected theory on which all high-class talking machine salesmanship has been built. This theory may be called the "musical instrument theory" of selling talking machines and records.

Upon this theory, developed in various ways, enlarged here and contracted there, sometimes modified in one way and sometimes in another, has been built up the extraordinary success which has greeted the talking machine during the last fifteen years. It would be highly absurd to reject this theory because one does not understand it or because it is not quite so simple a matter as it seems to be at first sight.

It is, however, evident, from what one hears among dealers and the retail trade generally, that this great theory, which has been so marvelously carried to success by the great manufacturers who have made our industry what it is, finds itself in grave danger. It is in danger from neglect and in equal danger from that impatient earnestness which wants to understand everything in a moment and is always rejecting ideas because they cannot be brought under this momentary yoke.

The Chill Breath of Neglect

Now is the time when the merchants throughout the country who have talking machines and records to sell are asking themselves how they may get larger returns from their efforts. Let them pause and think. A structure built on public confidence and public interest is slow a-building, yet quickly disappears under the chill of neglect. It took fifteen years of advertising according to a carefully developed theory of salesmanship to bring the talking machine to the position it was occupying when the great war-time prosperity was at its height. But the structure thus built up is a structure which cannot be made permanent by any wishing. It must be kept up constantly, it must persistently be built on, over and over again; for it vanishes as a dream before the cold breath of neglect. Advertising is a force which gradually, very slowly but very steadily, pulls its object along with it to success. But advertising is like a gas engine. It must be constantly replenished with fuel. The finest motor car ever made is useless on a rainy night, ten miles from anywhere, with an empty gasoline tank.

Now we accuse the retail trade of failing to replenish their gasoline. They are in danger, that is to say, of forgetting that a structure has been built up of public confidence and public interest in the talking machine. They are actually forgetting that the "musical instrument" theory is the only one which has ever sold talking machines profitably. They are forgetting how to sell music and are trying to sell furniture, terms and talk. They are making a mistake. This trade needs to forget consideration based upon temporary panic and to go back to the well-tested and sound theories of salesmanship already described. Then we shall have that revival for which we are all asking.

TALKING MACHINE SALESMANSHIP

Theories of salesmanship, then, are not nonsense. When they are based upon sound principles they are simply systematic rules for practical application. All great work is done on the basis of sound theory; and the "musical instrument" theory of talking machine salesmanship, the theory which has made the names Victor, Edison, Columbia, Brunswick, Sonora names of world-wide import, known from North to South, from East to West, is the only theory which has ever worked or ever will work. We want more "theory," not less of it; and we want it to be sound theory, unshrinkingly applied.

The road of failure is strewn with merchants who didn't believe in advertising.

MATHUSHEK ADDS VOCALION LINE

Meriden, Conn., Branch of the Mathushek Piano Mfg. Co. Occupies New Store and Secures Aeolian-Vocalion Agency

MERIDEN, CONN., December 20.—The local retail branch of the Mathushek Piano Mfg. Co., at 31 West Main street, which recently moved into its present quarters, has secured the agency for the Aeolian-Vocalion and Vocalion records, according to Carl Strauss, manager of the establishment.

Seven sound-proof record demonstration booths have been constructed, and in order to facilitate the service to customers the store will be conducted on a self-service plan to a certain extent. Each month's latest records will be placed on a counter, and customers will be privileged to select records and try them in the booths.

The new establishment offers unusual opportunities for the display of the full line of Mathushek pianos, which are carried in stock.

it is interesting to know that the old-style cylinder is still finding a ready market among British music lovers.

In a letter to The World, Burt Reynolds, manager of the cylinder department, says in part: "A big majority of people consider the Blue Amberol and the Amberola to all intents and purposes dead. As far as we are concerned it is not dead—it is a pretty 'live' business."

The Jake Graham establishment, of which W. A. Hunt is proprietor, is one of the widely known talking machine houses in Liverpool, and, in addition to featuring Amberola phonographs and Blue Amberol records, various talking machine novelties are handled. The concern also has a large repair parts department in which parts for any make of machine may be obtained.

Ways and Means of Getting People Into the Store as a Stimulus to Business :: By F. H. Parsons

It is an idea, generally accepted as sound, that the more people that can be brought into a store by one means or another the more business will result. In other words, out of 100 people sales are made to ten; a proportionate ratio of sales will be realized if 500 or 1,000 people are brought in contact with the store. It is this idea that is influencing a great many talking machine dealers in the establishing of rest rooms for women shoppers, offices for handling of theatre and concert tickets and other facilities for the comfort and convenience of the public, but which are not ordinarily a part of the talking machine dealer's business.

One retailer has even gone so far as to provide quarters suitably furnished and with competent attendants where children may be left while their mothers are shopping or attending to other affairs in the business section of the city. It all means a certain investment and a certain cost for maintenance, but under most conditions it has been found that these little courtesies extended to the public result in a volume of business that is worth the time and the energy.

There is a certain and very substantial element who, when they make use of conveniences such as are offered by talking machine dealers and others who have carried out the same idea, feel more or less obligated to show their appreciation, and whenever the opportunity presents itself make purchases at the store offering such conveniences. Then, again, there are those who, while ordinarily making their record purchases at other stores, are inclined to switch their business when they find that one particular dealer is willing to provide for their comfort. There are still others who, knowing little or nothing of the talking machine and its musical value, build up an acquaintance as the result of repeated visits to the rest room, the ticket office or the nursery, and eventually make substantial purchases.

The question is how far it is advisable for the retailer to go in providing facilities for comfort and convenience without putting himself under a financial burden out of proportion to the direct results realized. Simply to open a rest room and nursery, for instance, is not sufficient. The fact must be advertised broadly, and advertised in a way that will attract the attention of the female element. On top of this there must be provided some means for entertaining and for taking care of such simple wants as may result from the use of the various facilities. There are stores in the larger cities whose rest rooms provide a rendezvous for thousands of women, and quite frequently their men friends, during the year. The rooms are elaborately and expensively furnished and provided with suitable attendants, and the managers of the stores are able to trace a surprisingly large volume of business to the publicity of these lounging rooms.

Dealers Who Have Arranged Their Store So as to Command Public Patronage Are on the Road to Success

The retailer who can teach the women of his town to accept his rest room as a general meeting place is building up a following not only among those who actually make use of his facilities, but among those who become acquainted with those facilities indirectly. But, having done all this for the good of the public, the retailer is quite within his right in calling attention, delicately, of course, but persistently, to the fact that he is selling talking machines and perhaps other musical instruments. Having of his own free will provided comfort for the public, he is at least entitled to a fair return from his efforts, and a surprising number of people, it has been found, appreciate that fact.

GIVES OPINION ON EXCISE TAXES

Geo. W. Pound Defines Tax Status of Certain Orders and Delayed Deliveries

George W. Pound, general counsel of the Music Industries Chamber of Commerce, has issued the following interesting bulletin regarding the payment of excise tax on goods ordered prior to August 15, 1921, but not paid for or delivered until after December 31, 1921. In this connection Mr. Pound said:

"Section 906 of the Revenue Act of 1921 carries a long and somewhat complicated series of provisions concerning goods subject to the excise tax which were contracted for prior to August 15, 1921, but upon which delivery will not be effected until after December 31, 1921. Perhaps it would be more intelligent if I reduced to a simple statement of fact the principles of law involved in this section. August 15th is supposed to be the date upon which business was put upon its guard regarding these taxes, the date of the introduction in the House of the Tax Bill.

"Most provisions of this section do not apply to our industry in the light of the repeal of the tax upon music. However, under (C) it is provided that any person who prior to August 15, 1921, made a bona fide contract with any other person for the sale or lease after December 31, 1921, of any article taxed under Section 900 of the Act of 1918 (including phonographs, pianos, etc.), but which is not taxed in the new Act, and where the contract price included the tax, and such contract does not permit the deduction of such tax on such goods, then the vendor or lessor shall refund to the dealer such portion of such contract price as includes such portion of the tax.

"Ordinarily in such cases the tax should be simply deducted after December 31, 1921.

"This provision does not in any way affect the tax on band instruments."

Charles A. O'Malley, of Silent Motor Corp.,
Brings Good Report From the West

Charles A. O'Malley, president of the Silent Motor Corp., Brooklyn, N. Y., returned late last Monday from a trade trip covering many of the central northwest States. After spending several days at the New York offices of the company Mr. O'Malley made an additional trip covering the States of New York, Ohio, Michigan and Illinois. In a statement upon his return Mr. O'Malley said:

"There is a distinct turn toward more prosperous conditions. However, there is no time like the present to go after business. I have found conditions quite improved and the demand for silent motors shows very substantial increases. At the present time the Silent Motor plant is working at capacity, but the demand for single and double motors well exceeds production."

Mr. Werrenrath's picture was displayed in the center of the window, against one of the new Victor 300 models, and a score or more of his most popular records were also featured.

The Kay-Graham Co. operates a model establishment in every particular, having a large, well-equipped showroom and a battery of five sound-proof demonstrating booths.

GIVES CHEER TO EXPORTERS

Dr. Julius Klein, Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Tells Exporters Their Feet Are "on Solid Ground"

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 3.—American exporters were told to "hold their heads up, as their feet were on solid ground," by Dr. Julius Klein, director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Commerce Department, in an address late last month before the Philadelphia Export Club.

Despite the wounds suffered by America's foreign trade during the last year, he declared, there was nothing radically wrong with the export situation and no cause for despondency, although there was need for the exercise of prudence and shrewdness.

"The decrease in the value of American export trade in the fiscal year 1920-21," Dr. Klein said, "as compared with the preceding year, was due largely to lower prices rather than to diminished quantities. Considering exports for that year from a weight basis, we find increases of 34 per cent for the groups of raw materials and of 39 per cent for the foodstuffs, with a slight decrease for such manufactured products as can be indicated by weight."

The present situation, he continued, required the most careful selection of American salesmen abroad to avoid entrusting the country's foreign business to representatives connected racially or socially with competitor nations.

"This means," he said, "that we must under no circumstances put our commercial future in Latin America or in Russia in the hands of German agencies, and that our business in the Far East should be conducted as far as possible through American houses, or at least through native rather than European agencies.

"Good times will return to Latin America," he continued, "on a sound basis when the rest of the world's industrial nations, particularly such as Great Britain and the United States, are in a position to buy more of the products of Latin America."

Columbus Talking Machine Store

COLUMBUS, O., January 3.—George T. Cooper, for the past several years manager of the Victrola department of the Goldsmith Music Store, has joined the Elite Music Co., South High street, it was announced Saturday. When the Goldsmith store sold out its Victor department Cooper was much in demand by local music dealers, but he chose the Elite Music Co. because of the fact that this firm specialized in Victor products exclusively. Cooper has built up a strong following of friends while selling Victrolas, and they will be interested to know of his change in connections.

PERSISTENCY IN ADVERTISING ESSENTIAL TO SUCCESS

Continuous Publicity Is a Necessary Factor in the Conduct of a Successful Retail Business—To Indulge in It Haphazardly Is to Invite Failure and Undermine Confidence

There appears to be a more general realization among retail talking machine merchants of the fact that steady advertising is both a legitimate and important factor in the conduct of a successful retail business, and is not something to be indulged in occasionally when the retailer has a little extra money to spend.

Apparently, not all retailers in the industry have succeeded in placing their advertising on an entirely successful and scientific basis. A great many of them are using publicity, in one form or another, steadily and consistently, and this individual publicity, coupled with that of other retailers, large or small, gives to the industry a standing and stability that cannot be reckoned on a cold dollar-and-cents basis.

In an article in Collier's Weekly recently, entitled "The Punching Bag of Business," the writer, I. H. Doutrich, in telling the story of his success as a merchant, sums up the matter of publicity in the following interesting paragraphs:

"Advertising is a most vital part of business. There is no such thing as an 'advertising campaign'—unless you want to admit there is such a thing as a 'breathing campaign' or a 'bathing campaign.' You can stop breathing and let the lungs rest, as Stephen Leacock once said, but more of you will soon be at rest than your lungs. Just so with advertising. It goes on all the time—your advertising or your competitor's advertising. You can make a short, special drive in some one city if you are a manufacturer or a retailer, and you can call that a campaign. But the bread-and-butter advertising which you do for a living can't be defined by any such limited word.

"When Billy Sunday, who is a great advertiser, was in Pennsylvania some time ago a minister told him that his conversions were not permanent. 'Neither is a bath,' said Sunday. If you have something to sell—commodity or service—you must tell the world about it. You can't expect that people will remember you if you give them any interval at all to do the quickest and easiest thing in all the world, which is to forget you."

Mr. Doutrich has hit the nail on the head when he emphasizes the necessity of steadiness and persistency in advertising, rather than the plan of carrying on spasmodic campaigns. It is the constant reiteration of the name of the dealer and of the products he handles that gets under the skin of the public and makes the publicity as a whole prove resultful.

There are many so-called advertising experts who stand out firmly for this or that method of advertising. There are those who insist that under present conditions the thing to do is to advertise a specific product and by concentrating on that one item bring the public to a point where there comes the inclination to purchase. On the other hand, there are advertising men who are just as strongly in favor of institutional advertising—advertising which emphasizes the reputation and standing of the house and which lets that reputation stand as a guarantee of the products offered.

There is no question but that in certain localities and under certain conditions institutional advertising will pay, especially where a concern has followed that practice for many years and is firmly established in the public mind. Moreover, it cannot be disputed that concentration on one or two articles will create a certain demand for those articles. Just what form the advertising should take is largely a matter of location and the situation that exists, but the rule that constant and persistent advertising is necessary—more necessary right now, perhaps, than for many years past—cannot be overlooked.

It is doubtful if any single dealer in the country has so far lost confidence and optimism regarding business as to neglect his advertising entirely, and the retailer who lets down on his publicity campaign is making a grave mistake. The momentum that is lost between periods of spasmodic advertising costs too much money. The live dealer needs to keep moving every minute.

J. J. DAVIN ELECTED SECRETARY

Popular Talking Machine Man Now an Officer of Reincke-Ellis Co.—Well Entitled to Important Promotion—Capable and Talented

The Reincke-Ellis Co., Chicago, has just announced the appointment of J. J. Davin as secretary of the company. This appointment will be welcomed by all the Victor dealers who know of Mr. Davin's work in the promotion of sales and service items for Victor dealers exclusively, for it means they will have some one active and alert in planning and creating business builders for them for some time to come.

Mr. Davin for many years was connected with the New York Talking Machine Co. and is personally acquainted with almost every Victor dealer in the East. Since August, 1920, he has been actively engaged in the promotion of the Reincke-Ellis Victor department and his hard plugging has earned him his new promotion.

Mr. Davin was recently in the East for the holidays and stated that the dealers all over the country are taking advantage of the many sales-producing items the Reincke-Ellis Co. has created during 1921, and stated that this support has made possible for release early in 1922 three new items that have long been needed by the Victor dealers.

The first Reincke-Ellis catalog of "Business Builders for Victor Dealers" was placed in the mails the first week in January and the 1922 campaign will be full of interesting and profitable releases.

NOVEL COLUMBIA DISPLAYS

Live Columbia Dealer Getting Business Through Window Exhibits

LINCOLN, NEB., January 3.—L. N. Cline, of Schmoller & Mueller, Columbia dealers of this city, is utilizing to splendid advantage the attractive show windows in this establishment. He is continually introducing novel ideas in the way of window displays and, recently, the Royal Melody Boys, a popular local orchestra, played in the window during the entire evening. The boys were dressed in proper costumes for the occasion and a young lady also appeared in the window, calling the attention of the crowds to the latest Columbia dance records which were being featured by the orchestra.

The sidewalk was crowded with people all evening and Mr. Cline states that the sale of records was far beyond expectations. While this enterprising dealer has been featuring records exclusively he has by no means neglected Grafonola sales and, within a period of thirteen days, sold twenty-eight standard and two period models.

None of the impressive things in life is ever accomplished now without the aid of music, be it a recruiting party, a marriage or a funeral,

J. A. Bleisenick, of Hahne & Co., Utilizes Victor Artist's Appearance in Concert in Newark to Stimulate Record Sales

NEWARK, N. J., January 6.—A clever sales stunt was put into effect by J. A. Bleisenick, manager of the talking machine department of Hahne & Co., in which the appearance of John McCormack in a local concert was featured. The plan consisted of placing a postcard in every program at the concert on one side of which appeared a picture of the Victor artist and an invitation to visit the Victor department of Hahne & Co. The other side of the card contained a list of McCormack records following the words, "After hearing John McCormack in person this evening you will appreciate the following." Needless to say this publicity greatly increased sales of McCormack records.

Don't make the mistake of believing that there is no sentiment in business. If you do your doom is sealed.

Executive Committee of Caruso Memorial Foundation Endorses National Project

"Caruso Anniversary Week," to begin Saturday, February 25, and to be marked by special concerts and other activities in all parts of the country, was approved at a meeting of the executive committee of the Caruso American Memorial Foundation at the Bankers' Club held in New York recently.

The meeting was held to formulate plans for raising an endowment fund of $1,000,000, the income to be used for scholarships and awards for deserving students of music and for promoting a wider appreciation of music. Paul D. Cravath, president of the Foundation, presided.

Music is to the arts what love is to man; in truth, it is love itself, the purest, loftiest language of passion, portraying it in a thousand shades of color and feeling; and yet, true only once, intelligible at the same time to thousands, no matter how different their ideas and affections.—Weber.

What Does The JOBBER Want?

We give the jobber what we believe he wants. See if we are right in our estimate.

1st—A good machine—good tone, good finish and good mechanically—a machine that doesn't eat up profits in repairs and adjustments.

2nd—Protection in territory and enough territory to furnish ample profits during normal and lean times, as well as during boom times.

3rd—Freedom to run his business as he sees fit. It may be better for the manufacturer to control prices and terms and all retailing conditions, but there are times when a jobber must depart from fixed schedules and extend terms and prices that will meet conditions in his territory.

4th—Economy in distribution methods by the manufacturer. The jobber in North Dakota should not have to pay a share of the cost of an expensive advertising campaign that may only chiefly benefit New York and other large cities.

If you want a jobbing proposition that is planned on sound business principles, and elastic enough to meet your needs, better ask us for the Harponola Proposition at once.

Widdicomb—the phonograph of two-fold appeal

—an incomparable musical instrument and an artistic and decorative article of furniture

Taste in phonographs today is being educated to the point where buyers of discrimination and refinement look upon a phonograph not only as a musical instrument, which must be perfect in its mechanical qualities, but as a permanent part of the appointments of their home, which shall blend harmoniously and unobtrusively with the general decorative plan.

The principal factor in developing this trend of taste has been the Widdicomb—the Aristocrat of Phonographs—whose manufacturers were perhaps the first to sense this new thought in the minds of phonograph buyers. There is no good reason why a phonograph should not combine musical perfection with grace and beauty as an article of furniture, and this is the two-fold aim of the manufacturers of the Widdicomb.

For 56 years manufacturers of fine period furniture, what more natural than that the Widdicomb Furniture Company should follow the same line of thought in the construction of a phonograph?

To the tonal and reproductive excellence produced by the Widdicomb Amplifying Tone Chamber—an exclusive feature developed after years of experimentation by the most expert phonograph designers procurable—is added the exquisite cabinet designs incorporating the best results of 56 years of fine furniture manufacturing.

The appointments of the most luxurious home can be matched in the various styles of console and upright models, including the Adam, Chippendale, Sheraton, Queen Anne and other popular periods in furniture design, finished in beautiful red or antique mahogany and walnut. In no other phonograph on the market will you find the combination of musical perfection and artistic period furniture design offered by the Widdicomb—the Aristocrat of Phonographs.

Buyers with taste are indorsing the Widdicomb idea, and many of the leading phonograph merchants of the country have found a sound, steadily increasing business in meeting that demand that the Widdicomb has done so much to create. You can offer the Widdicomb to your customers with the complete assurance that it is superior to anything on the market in both musical qualities and exquisite design.

The Widdicomb franchise is offered to a limited number of really representative merchants at points where distribution is not yet perfected. Write for complete catalog of the entire line, together with details of the merchandising plan.

The Problem of Cornering the Extra Sales and Making Them Pay a Profit :: By Smith C. McGregor

The average talking machine dealer whose territory is in part through rural sections cannot secure all the sales by action at the store. Some buyers may know where his store is, they may hear he gives good value and is honest in his dealings; yet they may not go to the store to see for themselves. This sounds a bit strange, but if we think it over we will find that we very often do similar things ourselves and never know just why we do them. It is this group of buyers who keep the dealer from realizing the full profits of his field, for their money is paid to mail-order dealers or to dealers in other cities.

The problem of cornering these sales and making them add profit is no easy one, but can be accomplished by the use of unique sales schemes and much hard work. The purpose of this article is to suggest a few methods of winning over these prospects, and special attention will be given to the method of approaching and securing the attention of the customers you want to win over.

The methods to be used should be regulated by the occupations of the people you are trying to attract. If your field of undeveloped customers is largely rural, it is well to know of the problems they have to contend with; then go about showing them how they will benefit by making their purchases at your store, or by any kind of service you can offer them. And you will find many types of rural customers. For example, there are those of foreign birth or descent; they very probably have different tastes than the ones descended from generations of American-born citizens.

Unless you have ample time and a capable sales force in the store you cannot go out and study them personally for the length of time needed to get an accurate line on their likes and dislikes. But you can secure much of this necessary information from those direct sellers, such as insurance agents, who have come into contact with them. A talk with an agent friend will do you both good, and each will receive ideas as to human nature, which is vitally important in bringing over a customer who has been purchasing elsewhere. Then do not try remembering the little points indefinitely; cards are cheap and a few notes on a card, stored away in a file, will prove a bonanza when you have time and opportunity to go out and see that prospect personally.

If the customer you are starting out to win over is worth that effort, then a continued effort should be made to keep him satisfied. Appointments are worth making—and keeping—and the prospect will be easier to approach if he knows when you are coming. A successful dealer recently told me that he always made appointments with prospects, and didn't try to win over too many a day. Rather, he said, one prospect secured permanently is worth more than three who make only a purchase or two and then go back to their old habit of buying elsewhere. This dealer, by the way, has a card index for clippings and notes about his field, and he can thus keep a hand on the pulse of progress and knows how conditions are, the crops, the labor situation, building operations, money and any other items he thinks he can use.

You probably advertise more or less through newspapers, and if so the local editor can probably give you some tips about conditions where his canvassers have been. But don't forget the average editor is a busy man, and an appointment at his convenience, if possible, will bring you some good ideas. Then, if you are planning on some advance circularizing for prospects, he can probably advise you of any changes in addresses. The real estate man is another good idea-vendor, if you will try and give him some sales hints, too, for he knows who is moving and apt to need a musical instrument in the home.

The whole problem of bringing in the extra sales depends on your knowledge of what is happening in your field. The better you know the prospects the finer chance you have of landing them. And the only way to know them is to know their problems, their difficulties and the things they are interested in. When you go out and meet them directly, even if you have a good file of notes, don't act too superior. It kills sales, as any experienced salesman will tell you. Don't start off telling of the money savings alone. The prospect might be interested in getting the most out of life and a few hints of how much better life would be with improved furnishings in the way of a handsome talking machine and its value in a cultural way might be far more efficient as a sales promoter.

The prospect is only human. Those extra sales can be cornered by going after that human in a human way. The world admires a go-getter, but that doesn't mean being a persistent caller with the one idea of increasing your own profits. Try giving the new customer something that will make his life a little more interesting, and after you have secured the initial sale continue to treat him as well as you did while trying to land that first sale.

RECORDS OF INDIAN TRIBAL SONGS

Member of Taos Tribe of New Mexico Contributes Valuable Records to Smithsonian Institute—Carries Atmosphere of Old Mexico

Rosendo Vargas, a member of the old Taos tribe of Indians of New Mexico, has been lending valuable aid to the Smithsonian Institute of Washington in its splendid work of preserving historical data. He has made a number of talking machine records of the tribal songs of his people in their native language. These songs (which include examples of every kind of singing practiced by the Taos Indians) carry the atmosphere of old New Mexico and reflect the spiritual thoughts of a tribal people that once was in a high stage of cultural development. Some of the words of the songs—expressed in a language which, although extremely complicated, is capable of expressing an infinite variety of intricate thoughts, and discloses an advanced stage of mental development—are very long and have delicate shades of meaning that are difficult to translate into English. Many of the songs are action-songs—one of them being called a "Going Song," which simply means a song that is sung by the Indians when going into the fields to work or when starting out to catch their horses preparatory to going on a trip.

OVATION FOR ART HICKMAN

Famous Columbia Artist Makes First Appearance of the Season at Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, and Is Given Wonderful Reception

LOS ANGELES, CAL., January 4.—Art Hickman, famous dance orchestra leader and exclusive Columbia artist, received a tremendous ovation at the Ambassador Hotel recently when the Art Hickman Orchestra made its first appearance of the season. Columbia dealers throughout this territory took advantage of Mr. Hickman's appearance at the Ambassador Hotel through the use of timely publicity, and among the dealers who carried attractive advertising were the Remick Song & Gift Shop, the Bartlett Music Co. and Cooper's Melody Shop.

The night of the Hotel Ambassador opening was the most brilliant social affair of the season. The cafe was filled to overflowing, and every table was crowded. Chas. P. Mack, assistant manager of the Los Angeles branch of the Columbia Graphophone Co., arranged to have a large floral piece in the form of an imitation Columbia record placed at the entrance of the cafe, where it was the center of attraction.

For one week previous to Art Hickman's appearance, large imitation Columbia records four feet eight inches in diameter were on display in the lobby of the Ambassador Hotel, announcing the opening date of Art Hickman's Orchestra. During the week of the opening large records mounted on trucks paraded the streets every day, and the publicity tie-up was most efficient.

RECENT GRANBY ACTIVITIES

Business Shows Pleasing Development—Reports From Various Points—Prominent Men Entertained at Dinner—Conditions in the West

NORFOLK, VA., January 3.—The Granby Phonograph Corp., of this city, is receiving encouraging reports from its representatives in all sections of the country. Austin L. Fordham, who represents Granby in eastern Pennsylvania, reports excellent business and that the various period designs are proving very popular.

F. D. W. Connelly, representing Granby in North Carolina, has been making his headquarters in High Point and in addition to the excellent representation he is giving the line in that State has found time to organize a singing society, join a church choir and otherwise advance interest in music. He has been elected an honorary member of the High Point Chamber of Commerce and the Commercial Club.

E. W. Schumaker, of St. Louis, who represents Granby in the West, writes that business is showing a very decided improvement and states that he does not believe it entirely due to holiday demand but rather indicates a healthy return to normal business. Mr. Schumaker reports a number of new Granby dealers established in his territory.

LAMBERT FRIEDL RESIGNS

General Phonograph Corp. Manager to Take an Extended Rest Owing to Ill Health

Lambert Friedl, manager of the metropolitan distributing division of the General Phonograph Corporation, New York, resigned from his position this week, owing to ill health. Mr. Friedl, who is one of the best known members of the talking machine trade, is planning to take a complete rest for about six months in order to recuperate fully.

As manager of the metropolitan distributing division of the General Phonograph Corp. during the past year, Mr. Friedl was an important factor in the development of Okeh business in this territory. His success may be attributed in a measure to the fact that he numbers among his personal friends the great majority of dealers in this territory, and his familiarity with every phase of retail merchandising in this industry enabled him to give the dealers maximum service and co-operation.

ART IN ADVERTISING AWARDS

Some Members of the Music Industry Whose Advertising and Drawings Have Come in for Commendation From Noted Art Directors

The "Annual of Advertising Art in the United States" for 1921 has recently been issued. This is a catalog of the exhibitions of advertising paintings and drawings made at the galleries of the National Arts Club in the Spring of 1921, which exhibition was held by The Art Directors' Club.

Awards were made by a jury consisting of Richard J. Walsh, chairman; Robert Henri, Charles Dana Gibson, E. H. Blashfield, Arthur W. Dow and Joseph Pennell. The awards made at this exhibition, which is held in the Spring of each year, are looked upon by the advertising profession as authoritative and indicating the companies and specific pieces of the advertising done by said companies, which are the finest published in a given field, from the standpoint of art.

The following awards for 1921 are of interest to the music industry: Piano advertisements—Steinway & Sons, The Packard Co. Organ advertisements—Estey Organ Co. Talking machine advertisements—Victor Talking Machine Co., Columbia Graphophone Co., Wiley B. Allen Co.

NEW RECORD CLEANING DEVICE

CANTON, O., January 3.—Patents covering an automatic device for cleaning phonograph records have been issued Homer Miller and A. B. Kidder, manager of a local machine shop. The manufacture of the new device will be started soon after the first of the year, the inventors announce.

WINDOW DISPLAY SUGGESTIONS

A Score of Really Effective Pointers Which the Dealer Desirous of Stimulating Trade Should Not Only Keep in Mind, but Act Upon

Make your display fit the season—get ideas from merchants in other lines of business.

Plan your displays ahead—days and even weeks ahead.

Get all material ready for the new arrangement before the old display is taken out.

Keep a "window notebook." Jot down in it ideas you see.

To express coolness in a window use gray, light green or light blue for the color scheme.

To show warmth use reds, yellows, oranges—warm colors.

Have the backing of your window high enough to shut off view of the store interior.

Use a dark color in the background when displaying light-colored goods, and vice versa. Get contrast.

Keep your windows clean. Have them washed frequently. If your own employes haven't the time—get outside help. It will pay!

Don't crowd your window.

Avoid the other extreme. Too little in a big window will cause the merchandise to be "lost."

Card holders are useful. They'll keep price cards from falling over on their faces.

Make your display attractive to the eye—and the purse—but don't make it so "pretty" the merchandise is forgotten in admiration of the "trimmings."

Make your store front reflect you. It is the exterior which most people see. Impressions are made by exteriors.

Put the emphasis on the goods, not on the decorations.

Use art only to create a desire to buy the goods displayed.

Be sure your window lighting is the best available.

Dust out the window space frequently.

Never allow soiled or fly-specked cards or merchandise to remain on display.

To help the eye to travel quickly from a card to the object displayed connect the two with white tape or ribbon. An arrow will have the same effect.

Invest a little money in stands on which to better display your merchandise. It will pay.

Never judge a man by his looks. A prospect may look like a fool, but the chances are that he isn't; therefore, treat all customers with respect and consideration.

NEW VOCALION RED RECORD SIGN

Large Replica of Vocalion Record Designed for Use Over Store Doors

The Aeolian Co., in connection with the publicity plans for the Vocalion, has had prepared for the use of dealers in Vocalion records a large metal replica of the Vocalion Red Record measuring two feet in diameter and suspended from a metal cross-arm. The sign is intended for display over the entrance to the retail stores, and is large enough to be easily distinguished at a distance.

ENDORSES THE BRUNSWICK

The "testing home" of To-day's Housewife recently tested the Brunswick electric phonograph exhaustively and endorsed that product. A certificate was issued to the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. authorizing the company to use the diamond seal of To-Day's Housewife's endorsement in all advertising.

SIGN SELLS SELECTED RECORDS

Live Dealer Places Sign at Store Entrance Advertising One Record at a Time

A plan which is proving of considerable success in boosting sales of selected records has been originated by a talking machine dealer in Texas. This consists of a painted sign placed before the street entrance of the store, advertising only one record at a time. This merchant contends that the interested passer-by will not hesitate to come into the store because he will have something definite to ask for. When the prospective customer is once inside the establishment the rest is up to the sales force. Of course, the advertisement can be changed as often as the dealer desires and attention may be centered on a different record each day.

Every wheel you get out of a rut means better going. And every little lift counts. Try it. And, as has been well said, the only difference between a rut and a grave is depth.

If Chippendale had built phonographs—

THEY didn't have phonographs in Chippendale's time. Just what he would have accomplished in designing them is therefore largely guesswork, but it is safe to say that they would be worthy of the name of their builder who worked so beautifully and lastingly in wood.

We dare say Chippendale would have built his phonograph out of Genuine Mahogany—just as he used that wood for his very choicest furniture designs. Not only Chippendale, but Sheraton, Shearer, Hepplewhite and the other famous furniture designers of the last three centuries have favored Genuine Mahogany, "the royal wood."

The cabinet phonograph today occupies as important a place in the decorative scheme of the modern home as the library table and other pieces of furniture. A phonograph of Genuine Mahogany is beautiful in the most beautiful surroundings; it is magnificent in rich ruby color tones, yet restrained and dignified, ever in good taste where good taste is appreciated. When you sell a customer a phonograph built of Genuine Mahogany you both profit.

DECISION FOR CHENEY CO. IN TONE-ARM PATENT SUIT

United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati Reverses Decision of District Court in Important Tone Arm Suit Brought by the Victor Co. Against the Cheney Co. and Finds There Was No Infringement—Decision of the Court, Written by Judge Dennison, Is Most Exhaustive

The decision in the important tone-arm suit of the Cheney Talking Machine Co., appellant, vs. the Victor Talking Machine Co., appellee, and the Victor Talking Machine Co., cross-appellant, vs. the Cheney Talking Machine Co., cross-appellee, was handed down by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit, by Circuit Judges Knappen, Dennison and Donahue, in Cincinnati, O., on December 15. Circuit Judge Dennison wrote the decision, which was in favor of the Cheney Talking Machine Co., in this suit for alleged infringement of the Johnson taper tone arm patents No. 814,786 and No. 814,848, which had been filed against it by the Victor Co. The three presiding judges concurred unanimously in the opinion and reversed the decision of Federal Judge Sessions. The decision in full follows:

DENNISON, Circuit Judge: This is the usual infringement suit brought by the Victor Co. against the Cheney Co., based upon Claims 42 of Patent No. 814,786, and 7 and 11 of Patent No. 814,848, both issued March 3, 1906, to E. R. Johnson and assigned to the Victor Co. The District Court held that Claims 7 and 11 were not infringed, but that Claim 42 was valid and infringed. Both parties appeal.

Passing by other questions we have thought proper to devote our attention chiefly to the issue of infringement of Claim 42. That disposed of, the issues under Claims 7 and 11 give less trouble. Claim 42 is of that type which seems to be simple and clear enough as applied to the particular structure described and shown in the patent, but which becomes thoroughly ambiguous when application is sought to the variant structure of a future defendant. It is also of that type where, without distortion of any word beyond the common meaning, the language may be read upon defendant's structure, but where many things warn against the breadth of construction necessary to such application. Since the case presents an unusually complicated instance of the typical difficulties, and since our conclusion is superficially—though, we think, not substantially—not in accord with some results reached in other courts, it seems fitting to discuss the issue more in detail than we commonly do.

In 1903 there were two classes of sound-recording and reproducing machines. One, which may be called the Edison type, used a record of cylindrical form, and the stylus followed a spiral path around the surface of the revolving cylinder by reason of a positive mechanical feed, which caused relative motion longitudinally of the cylinder between it and the stylus-carrying parts. The other, which may be called the Berliner form, used a flat disc, upon the upper surface of which the stylus traveled in a spiral path. In reproducing the stylus point would tend to remain in the prepared groove, and thus to cause the stylus and its attached parts to travel from the outside of the disc toward the center. Each form was provided with a diaphragm operated by the stylus and communicating with the amplifying horn.

Johnson devised a sectional horn, the preferred and illustrated form of which was adapted particularly for use in the Berliner machines. He filed his application February 12, 1903, upon a talking machine. In February, 1904, using identical drawings and generally the specification of the first application, he filed a divisional application directed to the amplifying horn. Both patents issued on the same day, the one based upon the original application being No. 814,786, and the one based upon the divisional application being No. 814,848. The structure is shown in the following sketch, which is Fig. 1 of the drawings of each patent:

Claim 42 reads as follows: "A talking machine, comprising a tapering sound-conveyor, means for attaching sound-reproducing means to the small end thereof, and horn-coupling and supporting means with which the other end of said conveyor is movably connected." The defendant manufactures a form fully enough shown by the following sketch:

As we approach the question whether Claim 42 may, consistently with its validity, have a reading broad enough to cover defendant's form we do so in an atmosphere colored by two unusual things: The first is that plaintiff declined defendant's offer to submit its machine to plaintiff soon after it came on the market, so as to be advised whether plaintiff would consider it an infringement of any patent, but later brought and prosecuted an infringement suit, substantially the same as the present one; yet, when that suit was about to be heard, voluntarily discontinued it without prejudice to a new suit; and some three years later brought the present action. In this course of conduct we do not find the estoppel which defendant urges; but plaintiffs do not commonly take such action in clear cases, and its presence here strongly suggests that the right to recover in the first suit was doubted by the plaintiff.

The other colorful thing is that this patent application was prosecuted by skillful counsel for nearly three years, through repeated rejections and through the presentation and urging of about 100 varying claims, resulting in a final sifting by which forty claims were agreed upon between examiner and solicitor as covering the varying aspects of the invention—all before any claim occurred to the solicitor which would reach defendant's structure. Just as the case was ready for issue Claims 41 and 42 were added. This suit is not planted on Claim 41, although it is broader than 42. We do not suggest that the applicant may not, at any time before issue, broaden his claims in any way justified by his disclosure and by the state of the art; indeed, matters which develop during the period of prosecution often demonstrate or call attention to the fact that earlier claims are not as broad as they should be; but such a course of conduct as here occurred strongly supports an inference that the claim thus added was intended only to reach some anticipated, possible variations of the general conception already described and claimed, rather than a distinct and largely inconsistent conception which had never so far been suggested. Only in the latter view can the claim reach the defendant here.

Returning to the patented structure, we see that its primary elements are three: (1) The stylus with its diaphragm and diaphragm frame, which, in some form, is drawn down to a central opening opposite to the center of the diaphragm and constituting the beginning of a conduit for the sound waves which have been produced by the diaphragm vibrations. These parts, grouped in this way, seem to be what the patentee means when he speaks, in specification and claims, of a sound box. (2) The sound conveyor or tube which forms a continuation of the conduit and carries the sound waves away from the production point in order to reach the amplifying horn. (3) The amplifying horn itself. Johnson makes his conduit (2) of expanding tapered form, and thus causes elements (2) and (3) to constitute together one continuous amplifying horn. In addition to these three primary he has two secondary elements. These are (4) connecting means between the sound box and the small end of the tapered tube, giving relative movability, whereby the sound box can be raised or lowered for replacing a needle or starting or stopping and without moving the tapered tube. (5) Supporting and connecting means applied to the joint between the large end of the tapered tube and the small end of the horn proper, whereby either the tube or the horn may swing horizontally, and yet the weight of both is carried, and the two are coupled together into a unitary horn.

In order to reach the defendant's form elements 4 and 5 must be considered to cover all known means of operative connection between (1) and (2) and between (2) and (3). Defendant attaches its sound box to the small end of its sound tube by a bayonet joint. There is detachability but no adjustability of any kind. No method of attachment has been suggested which would escape the claim, if this one does not. At the other end of the sound tube defendant, who uses the now familiar cabinet style, supports the horn by permanently and rigidly fastening to the cabinet top, depending therefrom another sound tube which at its other end rigidly carries the horn proper; the member which serves for coupling and two parts of the horn (if there is any such coupling at the movable joint) does not support the horn; seemingly, any form of supporting the horn and the tube so that they effectively communicate, but with relative motion, would respond to the claim, if this one does. In substantial effect, plaintiff says that Claim 42 is for "a talking machine comprising a tapering sound conveyor, carrying, at the small end, sound-reproducing means, and, at the large end, communicating with a suitably supported horn and having a jointed connection therewith." With this—necessary for this suit—construction the claim reads absolutely upon Baynes and Jenson of the prior art, save that their sound tubes were cylindrical and not tapered. We, therefore, meet the questions whether there was any invention in this mere change from straight tube to tapered tube, and whether Claim 42 should be given that breadth of construction which can rest only on the proposition that there was invention in this mere change.

Upon these questions we have no precedent in any earlier decision upon this patent. The opinions of Justice Warrington, in the Chancery Division, and of the judges in the Court of Appeals (Graphophone Co. vs. Ruhl) indicate that no great breadth was accorded to the English patent, which has the same drawings as both the patents here in suit; but the question of broad invention, as we have stated it, was not discussed; indeed, the English patent contained no claim of such scope; its broadest claim was like 7 of 814,848. In the Lindstrom case Judge Learned Hand states the question broadly enough and concludes that there was invention, but though Claim 42 was sued upon, and infringement thereof was found, yet defendant's machine there responded to several other claims and would have infringed Claim 42, even though construed narrowly enough not to reach the defendant here. It is fairly consistent with what Judge Hand says to conclude that he had in mind, not the mere change from straight tube to tapered, but that change associated with Johnson's chief declared object—a continuously amplifying horn from sound box to mouth. In the Wanamaker case Claim 42 was also sued upon and was found valid by Judge Augustus Hand; but here, again, several other claims were infringed, and the validity of the claim to the tapered tone arm, in combination with improvements at both ends which Johnson devised and which defendant used, was the real question involved.

For the purposes of this opinion at least, we will assume that there was invention broadly in this mere change, and that Johnson would have been entitled to a claim like the one we have supposed; it does not follow that Claim 42, as issued, was intended to have, or can receive, this construction. Here, again, we have no precedent in the previous litigation. The claim has received no special attention and has not been applied, except in cases where there was no question of infringement, beyond the definition of "tapering sound conveyor."

In determining the scope, intended or appropriate, we cannot overlook Cannavel. Our foregoing assumption of validity implies, also, that Cannavel is not a complete anticipation; but it has a bearing on the scope. He used an Edison rather than a Berliner machine; but this cannot be controlling, since the Johnson specification does not suggest that his invention fails to reach both classes, and many of his claims, including 42, are as appropriate to one class as to the other. Cannavel showed the complete sound box of Johnson, consisting of a stylus, a diaphragm and a diaphragm frame drawn in back of the diaphragm so as to leave a small central opening opposite the diaphragm center. He then conducted the sound away from this central opening through an expanding taper tube toward the horn. This tube turns and extends parallel to the diaphragm a substantial distance beyond the diaphragm edge, but it is relatively short, it is made integral with the primary sound box and as a development thereof, and Cannavel calls it a diaphragm box. This first tube ("e" in the German, "cl" in the French) is then attached by slip connection to a second tube ("g" in the German, "e" in the French) which continues the progressive taper expansion. At the other and larger end this second tube enters the base member of the horn proper ("i" in the German, "f" in the French), where it is pivoted, and through which the progressive expansion of the sound waves continues. Cannavel distinctly discloses, by his specification and drawings, the same meritorious thought which is at the base of the Johnson invention, as it is now claimed to be formulated in Claim 42, viz., that the expansion in the sound tube should continue in unbroken progression from the immediate vicinity of the diaphragm on through into the main horn, and that there should be a jointed connection between the sections of this expanding horn which would permit the sound box to have the necessary play while the horn itself was otherwise supported. Cannavel's "c" constitutes Johnson's sound box and sound tube combined, save that the tube is so short that it may be thought dominantly a sound box only. Cannavel's "g" is Johnson's tapering sound tube movably connected with the horn at the large end and carrying sound-reproducing means at the small end, save that it is so short that its coupling function may be thought to dominate its function as a tube (Cannavel calls it "a short tube which constitutes a hall joint"); but it was tapered, it was a sound conveyor and it was as long as necessary to reach from the sound box to the horn. However, we pass Cannavel by with the conclusions that, conceding invention in lengthening his intermediate tube coupling member, the field is narrow, and that where we find this tube claimed, in combination with other novel elements which Johnson had devised, the presence in the claim of the latter creates limitations which cannot be minimized by the thought that the tapered tube was a revolutionary invention.

Referring to the small end of the tapered tube, the claim calls for sound-producing means and the means for attaching the latter to the tube. If, in plaintiff's machine, we substitute defendant's means for attaching these two parts, the machine becomes inoperative; and this is sometimes taken as the test of equivalency. It is not a true test, because the inoperativeness may be overcome by compensatory changes at another place which may be within the skill of the ordinary mechanic; and we think that would be true here; hence, infringement is not thus escaped by the difference at this point, and we see no reason for limiting "means for attaching" so as not to include defendant's hayonet joint.

Coming to the large end of the tapered tube we find that structure of the patent provides a curving arm extending out and up from the main frame. This arm carries, rigidly attached and extending therefrom, a horizontal bracket, 4, in the form of a flat-topped ring, 91, with an annular flange rising and a sleeve, 6, depending therefrom. The ring also carries a transverse central bar. The upper surface of the ring supports and carries the main horn positioned by the flange. The large end of the tapered tube enters this depending sleeve, which thus serves as a coupling, and is supported there by a pivot post which, in turn, is supported by the frame arm, but the tapered tube is not supported by the coupling. In many places the horn is considered as a complete unit, with two sections, but in this claim Johnson clearly differentiates between the tube and the horn, and when he says "horn" he means what he sometimes calls the "horn proper," or main horn. We thus find a group of means (arm and ring, with flange and sleeve) specially devised by Johnson, which constitute a combined coupling between the horn sections and support for the large one, and which, when united in composite form, constitutes one means for both functions. We think the fair interpretation of Claim 42 calls for such composite unit, though its form might be much varied. Six prior claims had specified means for the coupling and means for the supporting functions; some of them very specifically and some of them broadly. When Johnson wanted to call for any means which would couple or any means which would support he knew how to do so. In Claim 6, he said, "Said horn and tube being independently supported"; in Claim 10, he said, "Said horn and tube being supported to move"; the language of Claim 1 aptly describes the coupling and supporting functions with the scope which plaintiff now seeks to give to Claim 42; Claim 41 calls, by implication, for the supporting function in the broadest way; the language of Claim 1, omitting the sound box connection limitation, was admirably suited for the construction now claimed for the very different language of 42, which specified "horn-coupling and supporting means." This seems to us, as we have said, to imply the conception of a means, beyond the mere frame of the machine, which, as a composite element or as a group of elements, should both support the horn and couple it and the tube. Defendant does not have any such element, unitary or compound. Its horn, if the horn extends back to this point at all, is of wood and supported by the wooden cabinet top or frame from which it depends, and is held there by an ordinary cabinetmaker's glue joint. The large end of the taper tube rests indirectly upon, and is supported by, the same top or frame. The sleeve or coupling member (if coupling there is in the patent sense) also rests upon the same frame member. It is not supported by, nor does it in any degree, directly or indirectly, support the main horn, though it does immediately support the tapered tube. We cannot find this "horn-coupling and supporting means" in defendant's structure. The same result will follow if the call of the claim is thought to be for means for supporting and coupling both tube and horn.

There is another difference which is not clear as a matter of words, but is substantial and vital as a matter of substance. The claim calls for a "coupling" between the two parts of the horn. This requires that the two should come together so that they can be coupled. Johnson intended that the two parts of this horn, coupled together, should constitute one amplifying horn, without substantial lack of continuity in the amplification. This will be further pointed out. In defendant's sound tube we take the step-by-step enlargement (58-38) to be the equivalent (for the purpose of Claim 42) of Johnson's unbroken taper, and this brings substantially progressive enlargement until the passage has curved downward and has come to tube 73. Here there is a reduction in the cross-section area of nearly 40 per cent. At the bottom of 73 (39) there is a change from round to square form and consequent enlargement which approximately compensates for the 40 per cent constriction above; then the passageway makes a square turn through a cubical chamber, with first an enlargement and then a further constriction of about 15 per cent in passing through what Cheney calls his mechanical throat. Then, and then only, comes the other and larger section of the amplifying horn. The net result is that from the reproducing means the passage is continuously amplifying for a certain distance, then it is very substantially constricted and turns a square corner, all for a distance substantially the same as the length of the first tapered tube, and then only is permitted to expand more freely. This treatment is in the teeth of the teachings of the patent, and upon theories antagonistic to anything which can happen in the structure shown by the drawing.

The specification continually points out the advantages of the invention upon which a monopoly is sought. Collating these statements and omitting those which refer to subordinate features not involved in Claim 42, we find: "By locating the small end of the horn in this manner so that the sound-conducting tube or horn flares outwardly practically from the sound box I have found that it allows the sound waves to advance with a regular, steady and natural increase in their wave fronts, in a manner somewhat similar to that of the ordinary musical instruments, thus obviating the well-known disadvantages due to long passages of small and practically constant diameter; * * * it is also desirable to avoid abrupt turns in the sound-conducting tube or passage; * * * it is, therefore, the object of my invention to provide a talking machine with an amplifying horn meeting these requirements; * * * I provide, in effect, an amplifying horn that extends, practically, from the sound box; * * * it consists of two sections, one of which is the tapering, hollow sound-conducting horn * * * mounted upon the machine, while the other section is the * * * horn proper; * * * the advantage of this is that I secure the requisite length of a constantly flaring or tapering horn which gives the desired result in quality and volume of reproduction; * * * the horn proper forms only a portion of the sound-conducting tube; * * * I have avoided to the greatest degree any abrupt turns; * * * I have produced, in effect, a sectional horn, tapering from end to end." In the progress of the application through the Patent Office the applicant made repeated arguments and discussions pointing out the advantages of his invention and the distinctions over the art cited. Every instance of these claims for merit or for invention, whether stated in the specification or in the arguments, is in such terms as to exclude defendant's construction. With this history the alleged broad language of the claim should be very clear, to justify finding infringement.

We have little hesitation in saying that defendant's horn proper, as that part is intended by the specification, does not extend up through the tube 73 to the cabinet top to be there coupled to the tapered tube, nor in also concluding that the tube 73 does not itself constitute the coupling member which unites the two sections of the horn. The ten-foot section of an ordinary gas pipe, which is interposed between two other similar sections and fastened to both, truly enough couples them together, but it is not commonly spoken of as a coupling; on the contrary, it is a spacer which holds them apart; and an interposed member or element which destroys the theory of operation and of advantage claimed for the invention cannot be that coupling which the patent calls for in order to carry out the invention.

Previous decisions do not throw much light on the question of infringement. The breaks in progressive amplification have been, or have been said to be, unsubstantial, and the limitation to "horn-coupling and the supporting means" has never been interpreted. Infringement of Claim 42 has not been essential to justify any injunction that has been granted; it has never been worth while to determine its scope carefully.

These considerations require a reversal of the decree and a dismissal of the bill as to Patent No. 814,786. As to the other patent, No. 814,848, where the court below held there was no infringement, the views already stated require an affirmation. Claim 7 calls for an amplifying horn which is—"comprising"—a continuously tapering tube, with a joint between the two parts thereof. Claim 11 does not, in set words, require that the horn shall be a continuously tapering tube, but it describes the horn as "a tapering curved tube," and this reference and description are to the tube as a whole and not to any part. Such description does not apply to a tube the central one-third of which is not tapered, but is parallel-sided and is very substantially constructed. As to these two claims the decree is affirmed.

In connection with the foregoing decision by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals the Cheney Talking Machine Co. gave out the following statement:

"The decision of the Court of Appeals supports our contention that the basic principles of the Cheney phonograph construction, together with our octagonal-stepped tone arm, are distinctly different from the basic principles of the Victor talking machine.

"This decision is not only final, but clears this company from all patent litigation.

"The decision conclusively establishes the fact that Cheney construction is based on principles differing radically in form and theory from ordinary tapering tone arm and horn construction.

"These principles, found only in the Cheney construction, mark the greatest advancement of recent years in the art of tone reproduction and are covered by basic patents owned and controlled by this company, thus assuring to the Cheney phonograph exclusively the tonal superiority acknowledged by musical authorities."

STATEMENT BY THE VICTOR CO.

Says Decision in Favor of the Cheney Co. Has No Effect on Other Taper Tone-Arm Cases Which Are at the Present Time Pending

In regard to the decision in the Victor-Cheney suit the Victor Talking Machine Co. made the following statement:

"On December 15, 1921, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Cincinnati handed down its opinion, reversing the decision of Federal Judge Sessions, which had been rendered in favor of the Victor Co. in its suit against the Cheney Talking Machine Co. on the taper tone arm patents No. 814,786 and No. 814,848. The suit was based on claim 42 of patent 814,786 and claims 7 and 11 of patent 814,848, and Judge Sessions had found claim 42 valid and infringed and claims 7 and 11 valid but not infringed, because of certain limitations therein held not applicable specifically to the defendant's particular structure. An accounting for damages and profits had been awarded, together with a permanent injunction, which was stayed pending appeal.

"The Appellate Court affirms the ruling of Judge Sessions as to the non-infringement of claims 7 and 11, but reverses Judge Sessions on claim 42, holding that the claim, though valid and readable on its face on the defendant's device, cannot be interpreted broadly enough to be infringed by the Cheney machine. The step-by-step enlargement of the Cheney tone arm is taken to be the equivalent of the Johnson unbroken taper, and in this the Court accepted one of the Victor Company's main contentions.

"This decision merely holds that the very special and peculiar horn construction of the Cheney machine is not within the three claims at issue as interpreted by the Court. There was no holding of invalidity as to any one of these three claims nor as to any other claims of the respective patents which were not before the Court. The patents, including other claims in addition to those here involved, have been repeatedly passed upon by other courts and their validity sustained, and such validity is recognized by the Court of Appeals, which states that its conclusion is not substantially inconsistent with these prior adjudications. The Victor Company has a number of suits pending based upon these two taper tone-arm patents and involving the application to other talking machines of one or more claims of the patents, in addition to the claims at issue in the Cheney case, and expects to continue the vigorous prosecution of these suits as well as the general assertion of its rights under these patents."

THE VALUE OF A GOOD SIGN

It Should Be Distinct and Readable, Attractive to the Eye, Suggestive to the Imagination and Absolutely Individual in Design and Color

If there is ever a time when a business man can afford to be extravagant, it is when he orders a sign for his place of business. It is something which will remain in public view for years, and every time an eye falls upon it an impression of some sort will be effected. It may not be just, but it is true that the world judges a man by his appearance, and a business by its outward signs. A sign should have a personality, a difference easily distinguished from the other signs on the street. A sign should be distinct and readable at a glance. It should be attractive to the eye and suggestive to the imagination. It should be in keeping with the surroundings so far as shape and color are concerned. It should be conspicuous but not offensive; elegant in its simplicity, and expressive of stability, enterprise and commercial prestige.

UNIFORM EXPORT BILL OF LADING

Interstate Commerce Commission Orders Separate Bill of Lading Issued Next February to Cover Rail and Water Shipments

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 6.—A uniform export bill of lading will be substituted on February 15, next, to replace the present various forms used by the railroads, under orders just issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission following lengthy consideration of complaints filed many months ago by representatives of large shippers.

The shippers asserted that a uniform bill of lading should be prescribed because "the railway carriers and the water carriers jointly undertake as carriers to transport freight from an inland point in the United States to a foreign port. The duty of the carrier by railroad is to deliver the shipment to the vessel as part of its undertaking as a common carrier. There is no cessation in this carrier duty from the time the inland carrier at place of origin accepts the shipment until the carrier by water delivers the same at the contracted port of destination." They also objected to the carriers' practice of making changes, such as in the vessel by which shipments were transported, without giving notice to the shipper, and suggested that provision be made for such notification, as well as for a bill which would be of a size and thickness that would permit its filling out by typewriter.

Testimony and briefs of the carriers indicated a belief on their part that there was no continuity of responsibility for through shipments, and that the rail carriers' responsibility ceased upon delivery of a shipment on the dock, while that of the water carriers did not begin until the shipment was loaded on the vessel.

The new uniform bill of lading which is prescribed by the commission will be of great value to export shippers. It will provide a bill in which there are no fine-typed restrictions as to responsibility, varying with the railroad used—against which the shippers vigorously protested as being, in the present bill of lading, a source of much trouble and loss—and there will be no lapse of responsibility between the rail and the water carrier.

THE LETTER REFLECTS THE HOUSE

Why Talking Machine Dealers Should Be Sure That Their Stationery Is of a Character to Impress the Recipient—Pertinent Remarks

Next to an attractive window there is no form of business advertising that makes a better impression than the correct stationery used by a talking machine firm. In this connection Gilbert P. Farrar recently wrote the following very excellent and timely article on the subject of "What Makes a Good Letter?" in the Office Economist, and it is well worth quoting in part, because of its pertinence:

"First the paper and the letterhead are very important. Sometimes a letterhead of high quality is used with styles of type or arrangement of type so crude as to kill the effect of the paper. A good letterhead has concentrated, closely connected units that are built around the firm name, so that the reader sees, first, the firm name; second, the firm's business, and third, the firm's address.

"Next in importance is the trade-mark. The more widely a trade-mark is advertised the more important is the need of having it appear on the letterhead. But the letterhead should be built in such a way that the heading would look well without the trade-mark. In that case the trade-mark is bound to look well placed.

"The firm name, business, auxiliary businesses, trade-mark and address, all well arranged and balanced, put on a good grade of paper—not so cheap as to look niggardly and not so bristling with quality as to appear that the sender is an unsafe spendthrift—will make the right impression, provided that what the letter says is worthwhile. The letterhead, it must be remembered, can't do all the selling."

If your business is dull don't blame it on your location, the times, etc. Get into a quiet corner and analyze yourself and your business methods, and nine times out of ten you will discover the cause.

RECEIVER FOR CORNISH CO.

New Jersey Piano and Organ Concern Now in Charge of Receiver—Liabilities Are $145,000, With Assets of $125,000, It Is Claimed

TRENTON, N. J., January 5.—Chancellor Edwin Robert Walker has appointed Wesley Fleming, of Washington, N. J., as receiver of the Cornish Co., manufacturer of pianos, organs and talking machines, of Washington. His bond has been fixed at $50,000. The petitioners are: Joseph B. Cornish, Jr., president of the company; Floyd Major and Alvin F. Florey, treasurer, all of Washington.

Mr. Cornish holds 900 shares of the common and 500 shares of the preferred stock of the company, which, it is said, is also indebted to him to the extent of $53,521.51 for money loaned and indorsements. Mr. Major owns ten shares of preferred and five of common stock and is a creditor of the company to the extent of $66.39 for materials furnished. Mr. Florey, who holds 150 shares of the common stock, is a creditor of the company for money loaned amounting to $4,482.20.

It is set forth in the petition that the corporation was chartered in 1901, with an authorized capital of $500,000. The complainants charge that the corporation discontinued business some time ago.

It is said that the liabilities of the company amount to more than $145,000, of which $105,000 are represented by promissory notes, some of which are past due, protested and unpaid, and others are falling due daily. Resources of the company on December 1 last, over and above real estate, and inventoried at full value, were less than $125,000, of which about $65,000 was in stock and materials used in the company's business and which has since been decreased. It is also charged that about $40,000 of customers' instalment notes have been assigned by the company to various banks, which hold them for collateral for notes discounted to the extent of $30,000. The real estate of the com-

Good Reasons Why You Can Use This Service

Each display contains six cards 11x14 inches in size and one card 14x22 inches. These seven cards will not overcrowd your window, and yet they are sufficient in number to make any window strikingly attractive.

Each display will illustrate the titles of the records in a humorous cartoon style. Titles are always different, and so the displays must be.

Displays Fit In Any Window

Because of the limited number of units and their size, these displays will fit any dealer's window. If your window is large spread them out. If it is small use them compactly.

One Record To A Card

Each card will feature only one record. This means that the lettering will be readable across the street! You can always re-use the card.

Only the best records of the month will be featured. This means advertising the records you are sure to carry in stock. No "dead wood" in this display!

The phenomenally low price is possible because we will share the cost of this service. We are asking you to pay only a small amount in return for the benefit it brings you directly.

Business Will Be Better

If you will use this service. It will stop folks and sell records if you give it half a chance. We realize that dealers handle various lines and quite naturally wish to push these lines as well in their windows. We urge this, for variety in window display is absolutely essential. All the more reason, then, for using the Okeh Displays.

Act Quickly!

By HAYWARD CLEVELAND

Do not condemn rival goods. 'Twere better to admit their worthiness and say: "—'s machines (or records) are good, but ours are better." Then prove it!

Once a prospect, always a prospect, until dead or departure for parts unknown!

Regard your buyers as juries. Emulate Lincoln. Admit the merit in the opposition arguments and cap them with better ones.

Take a shot at the moon! You may hit it! Take a try at a remote prospect! You may land it!

No one human invention has contributed more toward the "Gaiety of Nations" than the talking machine.

No one product of man's ingenuity has gone further toward "Making all the world kin" than the talking machine.

"Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast." By that token, then, we are ALL savages and it logically follows that the talking machine, the universal music purveyor, is the greatest of savage tamers!

It is the privilege of most men to have some choice of occupation. Choose that therefore that drags no man down, but uplifts. Of such is the talking machine trade!

SOUSA GETS PLEASING SURPRISE

Lieutenant-Commander John Philip Sousa got the surprise of his life recently, when he received from Germany a New York draft for $2,500 in perfectly good American money for back royalties on sales in Germany of the famous march, "The Stars and Stripes Forever," says The Voice of the Victor. The bandmaster hadn't received a cent out of Germany since the big war and he didn't expect ever again to collect a dime from that source. For exactly twenty-five years he has been putting away royalties on "The Stars and Stripes Forever" from every part of the world. His manager said he and the "March King" both thought the Germans had dropped all such strictly American music since the late unpleasantness.

Whether the $2,500 accrued from sales made in Germany before the war or whether the Sousa marches were in demand all through that period is yet puzzling both Sousa and his manager.

MAKING USE OF NEW IDEAS

Fact That a Plan Has Been Worked Successfully in Some Other Locality Should Not Deter Dealer from Using It in His Territory

Merchants often subdue the impulse to use some good selling or advertising idea because someone else somewhere has used it sometime. Of course if your competitor stages a popularity contest it would be bad policy for you to stage one immediately afterwards. But that is no reason why you should never stage such a contest—the next year, or the year after that.

And it is only necessary for you to be original in your own community. So if you hear of a good one put over by some merchant in some other community don't pass it up because it has been done before. As far as your business is concerned the whole world is right inside your trading area. Your customers are not traveling about from town to town comparing merchants' methods. Nor are they reading the trade papers to see that no one puts the same thing over twice.

Your objective is to sell your customers, not to surprise some traveling salesman for a phonograph house, or some advertising or newspaper man. If you hear of a good one used in California your customers in Ohio are pretty certain to know nothing about it. They are not in the talking machine business.

There are two kinds of merchants. The man who just keeps the door open so trade can walk in, if it wants to, and the man who creates trade and brings it in. Take your choice.

In going after trade remember you are only trying to sell your customers and not your competitors nor phonograph experts.

NEWARK LANDAY SHOP EXPANDS

Names of Salesmen in Charge of Booths Placed on Doors Facilitate Service and Promote Friendship With Customers Who Visit Store

NEWARK, N. J., December 27.—Alterations which have been under way at the Landay Shop, Broad street, this city, have been rushed to completion and the establishment now has a number of additional booths for the demonstration of records.

This is one of the largest Victor establishments in the city and Louis H. Jacobi, recently made manager, in order to insure the best possible service to customers, has placed several of the record demonstration booths in charge of one member of the sales staff. The names of the sales persons in charge have been placed on the doors of the booths, and customers who desire to listen to records are thus enabled to ask for the salesman by name. There are about eighteen booths in this establishment, and besides facilitating service this plan has the advantage of promoting friendship between the sales staff and customers.

Some Practical Suggestions for Developing Trade During the Winter Months :: <sup>By</sup> Aug. N. Hand

Now that the Winter season is with us, the talking machine merchant has an opportunity to turn out some appealing advertising, drawing comparisons between the outside and the inside of the home. A word picture of a cheery home with a warm, comfortable fire and the family gathered around listening to the strains of music emanating from a talking machine compared with the cold, uninviting, blustery outdoors will go a long way toward arousing the desire for a machine in the hearts of householders who do not possess one. Or, if there is a machine, there will in many cases be a desire for some new records.

People who go shopping on a cold wintry day do not desire to stand before a window display, no matter how clever it is; therefore, while a good display still retains its value, it does not exert the strong influence which is the case in Summer. But if a person sits in a comfortable home and reads an advertisement along the lines suggested above the appeal for music is sure to be pronounced.

In the majority of instances when the evening is extremely cold or it is snowing the members of the family are usually to be found at home, unless it is absolutely necessary to go outdoors. This fact affords the dealer an opportunity of increasing his profits through evening activities. He may remain in his store and use the telephone to good advantage by calling up customers and stating his desire to arrange a concert in their homes for the family and any friends whom they may care to have present, making it plain that the selections for the concert may be chosen by the family from the latest list. Thus only records which the particular prospect has not purchased will be selected and several sales are sure to result. Where friends are invited it sometimes happens that one or more of them do not own a talking machine and an avenue is opened up which will either add another live prospect to the dealer's list or result in an immediate appointment which may lead to the sale of a machine.

Then, too, the fact that the merchant takes the trouble to personally arrange a home concert for the enjoyment of his customer and makes his appearance at the home not only gives him the opportunity of making a further study of his patrons, but it also impresses on the customer's mind the service which the dealer extends and cements the friendship for the music house which should have been started when the machine or first record was sold.

Another method of securing business during the Winter months may be found in the many dances and social affairs in churches and homes. In every community there are several churches where the young people have clubs and societies and dances are arranged from time to time. In most cases the only music at these functions is that which is loaned and carried to the place by members, or which is hired.

The local talking machine dealer can get some worth-while publicity by obtaining a list of these organizations and offering to furnish music free of charge on request. The offer, in most cases, will be accepted with delight and a keen appreciation which will travel much farther than one would believe. Young folks usually tell their parents and friends about such things as these, and the mere fact that a machine has been loaned to a few clubs for social events will provide publicity which will reach many people, most of them lovers of good music.

In connection with the latter plan the dealer could increase his prospect list by making the condition that each dancer or member of the club place his name and address and whether his home contains a machine on a card provided for the purpose. The information thus secured can be used to promote the sale of machines where there are none and of records where it is found that a machine is owned.

It is a good thing to be efficient, but some merchants become so darned efficient that they lose sight of the fundamentals of business and run their establishments like a soulless machine. Are you guilty?

Why You Should Sell Sonora Phonographs

Reason One: Quality versus Discount

EVERY dealer must decide whether he will push the Quality line, or the nondescript Discount line.

The Quality line might offer less margin per sale—but the Quality line offers a commanding reputation which means a steadily growing demand.

The Discount line must be sold unaided. One sale does not make another—the inferior instrument does not even stay sold.

Sonora Quality really enables the dealer to do business with less cost—and more net profit on his total investment.

Sonora—the Highest Class Talking Machine in the World—is the most salable proposition in the phonograph industry. Among users everywhere Sonora represents the acme of perfection.

VICTOR DEALER ACTIVITY IN IOWA

Splendid Holiday Trade Closed With Good Demand for Standard Makes of Talking Machines and Records—H. B. Sixsmith Discusses Situation—New Dealers and Changes

DES MOINES, IOWA, January 5.—The holiday season for talking machines in Iowa proved to be the best ever experienced by the trade. This was especially true of the standard makes. Terms were unusually good, in spite of the fact that the farmers were reported as having ceased buying. In a town of about 20,000, mostly a college population, located in the central eastern part of the State, the December business amounted to over $7,000, of which over 40 per cent was cash. This was exceptional when the same store reached a volume of only $2,000 for the same month last year. This store handles pianos, Victrolas and Brunswicks.

H. B. Sixsmith, sales manager for Mickel Bros. Co., Victor wholesaler, reports that the demand for Victrolas far exceeded the supply. "As usual," said Mr. Sixsmith, "the shortage was with us again over the holidays. All finishes, especially in mahogany and brown mahogany, of course, were in great demand and our stock was completely exhausted a week before Christmas. Some stock which we thought slow sellers were eagerly bought by the trade. One thing which pleased me very much were the several reports sent in by the dealers. In a number of cases customers, upon failing to find an instrument of the standard makes to their liking, refused to buy at all."

Over twenty post offices in the State of Iowa have installed Victrolas. The report is that lively music is an incentive to fast working and each postmaster using it is enthusiastic over the results he has obtained. Popular numbers, such as "Wabash Blues" and "Ma," seem to be very effective.

The Morris Sanford Co., of Cedar Rapids, recently installed one of the most effective windows devoted to the Victrola No. 300 yet seen. Small pieces of blotting paper, about six inches square, were used to give the floor the resemblance of tile. A Victor oil painting of the trademark and a large basket of flowers only were used in connection with the instrument. A large claret shade velvet curtain formed the background and the display was flooded with an amber-shaded light at night. Frank Walter, the manager of the department, was responsible for the idea.

A number of dealers throughout the State have adopted the slogan, "Say It With Records," and from the December reports the results were good.

Due to the efforts of the Garst Store at Coon Rapids, Ia., the town has formed a Music Study Club. It is scheduled to meet once a month at which time a different opera is studied, with the help of the Victrola and the Victrola Book of the Opera.

A number of dealers occupied their slow season during July and August by taking a musical census of the community. This idea was carried out very religiously in the northeastern part of the State and from reports the sales made during December were little short of marvelous, most of which were traceable to the information gathered when the census was taken.

Harmony Hall, of Iowa City, made arrangements with the Superintendent of Maintenance of the local railroad to place a No. 50 Victrola on the car of every section superintendent. These section gangs are on the road most of the time and are often obliged to park their cars in some of the most secluded parts of the country. Who wouldn't give almost anything for music when they're a hundred miles from nowhere?

Ralph B. Townsend, for the past nine years manager of the Victrola department of the Davidson Co., in this city, left on January 1 to take a similar position in Youngstown, O. Mr. Townsend is well known to the Iowa dealers, having been very prominent in the workings of the Iowa Victor Dealers' Association, of which he has been twice elected treasurer.

Miss Ruth Uhl, for a number of years associated with Chase & West, has joined the forces of the Davidson Co., and will have charge of its Victor record department.

B. F. Bibighaus, assistant manager of the traveling department of the Victor Co., was a visitor with Mickel Bros. Co. last month. Mr. Bibighaus spent several weeks in this section of the country visiting the various Victor distributors.

G. L. Richardson, Victor traveler, has left Iowa for his vacation at Collingswood, N. J. "Larry" has made a good many friends in Iowa and it is hoped that he will be given this territory for 1922.

Clarence E. Powers, Adel, Ia., has taken over the business formerly known as McCauley & Powers, and in the future his efforts will be devoted exclusively to the marketing of Victrolas.

ANNOUNCE LOWER PRICES

Kirkman Engineering Corp. Makes an Important Announcement to the Trade for 1922

The Kirkman Engineering Corp., of New York City, announces radical reductions in the price of its K-E and Simplex circular record cleaners. These cleaners, protected by United States patents, were put on the market in 1912 and large numbers have been sold to the trade, which is familiar with this design. It is said to be the first round cleaner on the market, this construction being a strongly patented feature. The manufacturer claims for this form of cleaner that a round surface is theoretically correct for the circular motion necessary when cleaning a record most satisfactorily.

By perfection of automatic dies the company claims to be in a position to sell the K-E metal cleaner below pre-war prices and with greater profit to the dealer and jobber. The K-E metal cleaner with oxidized attractive finish is being featured by the company, which claims superiority of this cleaner over the wooden grade.

When interviewed by The World, H. M. Linter, sales manager, stated that the company would maintain its policy of selling to the dealer only, through the recognized jobber. They do not sell direct. Mr. Linter states the sales of K-E automatic stops have been heavy for the holiday trade. The price of these has been reduced as well. The company has been making automatic stops for talking machine manufacturers for ten years.

DEMONSTRATING BY TELEPHONE

Reed & Dady, Brunswick dealers in Hollywood, Cal., have inaugurated a telephone demonstration service for records that has proven very popular with the company's clientele. A special attachment is fixed to the mouthpiece of the telephone in the store, and the customer need only sit in his easy chair and make his desire known over the phone to have the records played for his special benefit. This service has greatly helped record sales.

In this era of the masses it is desirable and necessary every now and then to state that everything that makes life worth living is due to individual effort and the magical power of personality.

BIG HOLIDAY VOLUME OF TRADE IN COLUMBUS

Demand for Records Unparalleled—Generosity of Heaton's Music Store—Lectures on Opera Help Trade—C. C. Baker's Enterprise—Visitors to the Perry B. Whitsit Co.—Other News

COLUMBUS, O., January 4.—Christmas hymns were heard in many homes during the holiday season in this city if the sale of Christmas records is to be taken into consideration. The week preceding Christmas was the busiest week local dealers have experienced during the entire year. "We have sold records and records and then some," is the way E. M. Levy, manager of Heaton's Music Store, 168 North High street, expressed the volume of business during that week. This firm sold more than 500 discs of "Silent Night," sung by various artists. Other Christmas records in large demand were "Oh, Come, All Ye Faithful," by Mme. Schumann-Heink; "Adeste Fideles," by John McCormack, and "Joy to the World," by the Trinity Choir. Many people who had heard Harry Lauder, who appeared in this city recently, bought many of his records. Another red seal record that was a good seller is "The Last Hour," by John McCormack and Fritz Kreisler.

Through the generosity of Heaton's Music Store the Franklin County Home, the county infirmary, had a musical festival, and consequently a much happier Christmas this year. A Victrola, together with a number of the better-known records, among which several Christmas numbers were included, constituted the Christmas gift to this institution by this firm.

The need of such a present at the Franklin County Home was mentioned by a member of the Columbus Exchange Club to Wert Heaton, a member of the club and a member of the firm of Heaton's Music Store. Mr. Heaton immediately responded in the above fashion to this suggestion. The Victrola and records were delivered to the Home in time for the inmates to enjoy them on Christmas morning.

Friends of G. T. Cooper, formerly connected with Goldsmith's Music Store, were glad to learn that he has joined the sales force of the Elite Music Co., Victrola specialists. Mr. Cooper has been selling Victrolas for the past eight years. In this capacity he has made it his hobby to sell these instruments to schools.

Now that the lecture series on the "Psychology of Great Operas" has come to a close, a favorable reaction has followed. One devotee of the opera bought as many as twenty records of the more famous selections included in the five operas of the course. Prof. Thomas Scott Lowden, who conducted the course, declared that he was well pleased with the interest manifested in his lectures. "This was a new thing in this city, but I am happy to say that the response that followed was very gratifying to me."

Mrs. W. L. Matton, chairman of the committee of the City Federation of Women's Clubs in charge of this course, stated that from an educational standpoint this course was one of the very best things the City Federation has ever offered the local public. "The results of this course will, no doubt, prompt the Federation to give another such course, with probably different operas during the next year," said Mrs. Matton.

The program of this course consisted of these operas: "Faust," "Rigoletto," "Aida" and "Orpheus and Eurydice," "Il Trovatore," and "Carmen." In the discussion of each opera the Victrola served as the medium of presenting the arias, duets, trios, choruses and orchestral selections to the audience.

Perhaps the busiest place in the city of Columbus is the store of C. C. Baker, especially since he has attempted to move the new stock of Victrolas and records that he purchased from the Goldsmith's Music Store, which is going out of business. Mr. Baker has added ten new people to his sales force, and in spite of this there seems to be work for as many more. Mr. Baker intends to increase the size of his store in order to take care of the extra stock. In order to relieve the congested conditions, especially in the demonstrating booths, the Sel Rex counters have been installed.

Mr. Baker insists that what he sells is service. "We give the public what they want and when they want it. Service in its true sense is what we give." Mr. Baker sends out as many as 45,000 leaflets, circulars and cards a month announcing new records and player rolls to prospective buyers. "The reason we do this," Mr. Baker said, "is because we want our prospective customers to be informed on what we have to sell. If they want a certain record then they know we have it."

The Perry B. Whitsit Co., Victor wholesaler, had a number of visitors in the last week. Among the dealers who visited this wholesale firm were F. G. Mardis, Mt. Vernon, O.; Guy Smith, London, O.; Robt. Hawken, Springfield, O., and E. O. Collender, Zanesville, O.

The liabilities are stated at $185,000. The assets include plant, $216,000; bills receivable, $132,000, and cash in hand, "not in excess of $500,000."

MILWAUKEE, WIS., January 5.—The Wm. A. As a result of the window the company closed twelve Sonora sales, which indicates the tremendous value of an effective and artistic window display. The window was noteworthy for its simplicity and several Sonora period models with a background of silk hangings gave a rich atmosphere to the display.

"Do You" Contained in Koerber-Brenner Red Seal Analysis Are Worth While Considering

A suggestive list of "Do You" is given in the Koerber-Brenner Red Seal Analysis for December as follows:

Do you play for your customers in a booth where interruptions do not distract attention?

Concentrate.

Do you sell the customer what you want sold or allow the customer to buy what he thinks he wants?

Be a salesman.

Do you keep at least two records in a booth (popular and standard-over-stock) to play while you get the record asked for?

Suggest.

Do you lead customers to listen to music when they are inclined to chat with you?

Efface yourself.

Do you say, "Is there anything else," giving a chance for a negative answer, or "Let me play this for you?"

Be positive.

Do you allow the customer to seek you and ask to be waited on?

Courtesy pays.

Do you say something interesting about every record?

Avoid being automatic.

Do you test the speed of your demonstrating machines regularly?

Be methodical.

Practice what you preach.

Do you close the lid of the Victrola while playing?

It avoids false vibrations.

Do you use the automatic stop always?

Add to the customer's pleasure.

Do you chew gum while trying to sell?

Be dignified.

Do you carry on personal conversation with other employes while customers are present?

Be businesslike.

Do you keep sweet?

Smiles mean dollars.

Finally, do you think of your customer just as a person or as one of a type?

The Cheney line of phonographs is featured by the Curtis Studio, of New Haven, Conn. The firm reports that these machines are increasing in popularity in that section and that business is exceedingly brisk.

Fred J. De Ghuee has been appointed Emerson representative for New Jersey. The latest addition to the recording force of the company is Richard Bolt, who was formerly with the Greenwich Village Follies.

A Victor department was recently added to the Rexall Store at Nashua, Ia.

HOME CONCERTS INCREASE SALES

SALEM, IND., January 2.—E. F. Routh, local Victor dealer, is popularizing Victrola concerts in homes in this vicinity and incidentally he is boosting his own business. Mr. Routh's plan consists of a letter sent to a select few of his prospective customers informing them that he will furnish the Victrola and records if they in turn will invite some of their friends to enjoy a concert by the world's greatest musicians. Neatly typewritten programs listing the records and containing a short description of each one are distributed at the concerts, which are proving extremely good business getters.

WHY "THIRTEEN" IS POPULAR

"Thirteen is lucky for me," says Renato Zanelli, Chilian baritone at the Metropolitan and popular Victor artist. "Thirteen letters in my name, married June 13, made my debut here December 13, and my thirteenth record just put on the market, 'Marianina,' is numbered 66013."

CARUSO ESTATE TO BE DIVIDED

Heirs Petition Court to Enable Widow to Gain Possession of Royalties From Victor Talking Machine Co., and New York Property

Enrico Caruso's heirs have united in asking the Surrogate's Court in New York for ancillary letters of administration to give Mrs. Caruso the right to take possession of his property in this State. The estate is to be distributed under the terms of an agreement in accordance with the Italian law under which half will go to his daughter, Gloria, and the other half be divided equally among his widow, his sons, Rodolfo and Enrico, Jr., and his brother, Giovanni.

The papers showed that the estate in Italy is valued at approximately $2,500,000. There was from $150,000 to $200,000 of property in New York. It was said that other ancillary letters would be asked for in New Jersey to enable Mrs. Caruso to collect royalties on talking machine records made by the Victor Talking Machine Co., which have been estimated at $200,000 a year.

SELLS SONORAS TO MUSICIANS

Boston Musician and Sonora Dealer Closes Many Important Sales—Specializes on Developing Business in Musical World

The sales department of the Sonora Phonograph Co. recently called the attention of Sonora dealers to the splendid record of sales made by Samuel Manus, leader of the Copely Square Orchestra, of Boston, and one of the most prominent musicians in that city. Mr. Manus, in addition to his musical activities, conducts an exclusive Sonora business in Boston which is meeting with exceptional success.

Mr. Manus has sold Sonora phonographs to a large number of musicians, among whom are the following prominent Boston musicians: Walter Smith, one of America's foremost trumpet players; Robert Blake, of the Copely-Plaza Orchestra; Dr. Newinan Cohen, Touraine Hotel Orchestra; Abe Lepow, leader, Touraine Hotel Orchestra; Louis Dalbeck, Boston Concert Trio; Burt Patrick, Majestic Theatre Orchestra; Joseph Daly, United States Navy Jazz Band; Phil Robish, Young Men's Symphony Orchestra, and Harry Levine, concert pianist. Louis Torgrove and Abraham Torgrove, both members of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, were also supplied with Sonoras by Mr. Manus while visiting Boston recently.

A novel use to which the Sonora is put by Mr. Manus has attracted considerable attention. It is his practice to have his orchestra accompany a record made by a famous artist as played on the Sonora, with the orchestration specially arranged so that it synchronizes perfectly with the playing of the record.

THREE NEW VICTOR RECORD ARTISTS

First Records by Mme. Lashanska, Fannie Brice and Miss Patricola in the February List

The preliminary announcement of the Victor records for February is of particular interest to the trade from the fact that the first Victor records of three new members of the Victor family of artists are to be found in that list. Mme. Hulda Lashanska is represented in the list by two records, one of Carl Loewe's Canzonetta, and the other of Barnby's setting of Tennyson's "Sweet and Low," the records, it is said, being well calculated to sustain her reputation as a concert singer.

Fannie Brice, the popular comedienne, at present with the "Ziegfeld Follies," sings "Second Hand Rose" and "My Man" (Mon Homme), and Miss Patricola, popular vaudeville star, sings "I've Got My Habits On" and "Happy Hottentot." In addition to the three new artists, the February list is also interesting from the wide variety of musical selections offered for the consideration of record buyers.

A CLEVER PUBLICITY STUNT

Roy Swanstron, manager of the Brunswick Shop, in St. Paul, Minn., has adopted a clever idea for advertising his new records. He had built a clever replica of the Brunswick record, label and all, and had a glass plate fitted therein to carry the name of the newest record hit. A light back of the glass serves to make the title of the record stand out, and the name of the record is changed as the new favorites develop.

INCREASES CAPITAL TO $60,000

The Phonograph Shop, Inc., of Dallas, Tex., has filed an amendment to its charter providing for an increase of capital stock of this concern from $20,000 to $60,000.

What men call firmness in themselves they call contrariness in others.

DEVELOPING THE RECORD BUSINESS

Some Valuable Suggestions From Geo. K. Stewart Along the Lines of Making the Public Appreciate the Record as an Ideal Gift

INDIANAPOLIS, IND. January. 3.—George K. Stewart, of the Stewart Talking Machine Co., Victor distributor of this city, is a great believer in the theory that the record business is very much what you make it. He is one of the veterans who have advocated teaching the public to appreciate what an ideal gift a record is.

"All we need to do is to get the public to give some thought to what a perfect gift a record can be," said Mr. Stewart, "and now that the Christmas rush is over and there are a lot of new machines around the country, it is the psychological time for dealers to work on this idea.

"We must take a leaf out of the candy manufacturer's book and learn that people buy that which is made attractive to their eye. We all know that an ordinary grade of candy when attractively boxed and beribboned is a big seller. Most gifts of candy go to women, and we know how that sex delights in the appearance of anything.

"The record gift box should likewise be used to boost record sales, even if the dealer finds it necessary to make a charge for the increased cost. It works beautifully in combination with the popular idea of 'Take Home a Record.'

"I have noticed the rapid growth among certain dealers in mail order business, and I think that this is one phase of our business that can be expanded to surprising proportions. In conducting a mail order business there is one thing that I would warn dealers to beware of, and that is cheap and careless packing. Unless they are well packed and wrapped the losses on breakage will overbalance the profit."

REAL STATUS OF FOREIGN TRADE

Greater Quantity of Goods Exported by the United States During Last Fiscal Year, Although Total Valuation Is Much Lower

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 3.—Lower prices rather than diminished quantities are responsible for the three billion dollars decline in the value of American foreign trade in the last fiscal year, as compared with the immediately preceding year, in the opinion of Dr. Julius Klein in his first annual report as Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce.

"In fact," says the Director, "a compilation of exported commodities, reduced, so far as possible, to a quantity basis, shows weight increases of 34 per cent for the groups of raw materials and of 37 per cent for foodstuffs in 1921 over 1920, with a decrease of 4 per cent for such partly or wholly manufactured articles as can be shown in weight.

"It will surprise many pessimists to learn," declares Dr. Klein, "that the final totals in this compilation, which included articles forming 69 per cent of the value of domestic exports in 1921, indicated that the exports of these goods increased 23 per cent in quantity over the amounts sold last year, though their value decreased 19 per cent."

The world-wide exchange situation, revived competition in foreign markets, and decreased demand for American raw materials on the part of Europe, combined with a drastic cut in American imports of raw materials, are the principal factors contributing to the lower foreign trade totals, says the Director.

The Director refers to the fiscal year 1920-21 as "the most dramatic in the entire history of the foreign trade of the United States." He says that "the extraordinary episodes of that year in our business overseas" resulted in a most severe strain upon the facilities of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce—first, as a consequence of the "amazing strides" made by American export interests during the early months of the year and, secondly, as a result of the disorganization and confusion which spread through-

TALKER MUSIC FOR MURDERERS

TRENTON, N. J., January 4.—In order to brighten the last days of murderers condemned to die in the electric chair at the New Jersey State Prison a phonograph will be installed in the death house. It will be given by the men of the Third Presbyterian Church of Trenton. The only music the men have in the death house is that furnished by a talking machine occasionally loaned by another part of the institution.

G. H. Baker, of Ossining, N. Y., owner of the G. H. Baker Music Store, one of the largest establishments in that city, is featuring Victor talking machines and records.

It is always well to keep in mind that scratching the surface will never dig up business. Pays to scratch deeper.

OKEH WINDOW DISPLAY SERVICE

New Service Introduced by General Phonograph Corp. Meeting With Success—Each Display Card Features One Record Only—New Service Based on Drawings by Prominent Cartoonists

The General Phonograph Corp., New York, manufacturer of Okeh records, has inaugurated a new window display service for the use of its dealers which is unique in many respects. The company has called into its service a number of

at a considerable distance. The cards may be so arranged as to fit any size window and with each set is sent a diagram with instructions as to how they can be arranged to the best effect.

Although the first of these new display cards has been out but a few weeks, dealers are sending in enthusiastic reports of the attention the cards are attracting. One New York dealer who placed the cards in his window visited the company's offices personally to tell the sales executives that the crowds were blocking the streets looking at his window, and, better still, the attraction was pulling them inside and making immediate sales, which he stated was decidedly unusual for any window display.

Discussing this new window display service, the Okeh advertising department said:

"In the past it has been the invariable custom in the trade to supply window displays of only a general pictorial been abandoned, and we have decided to prepare each month a group of seven cards, each devoted to a single record.

"This new Okeh display service will depart entirely from 'pretty pictures that don't make sales.' We are going to get away from merely general ideas and the same old stuff one sees in the windows month in and month out. Our whole new plan will be based on the idea that the thing people like best is entertainment, and that folks love to laugh. So every Okeh display for 1922 will be chock full of human interest and a smile. Of course, each display will vary and be entirely different from the preceding one, but in every case it will also be so entertaining that everyone will stop and look at it. It has often been proven that a cartoon will influence more people than the lengthiest editorial, and we are going to utilize this principle. Okeh displays are to be done in cartoon style, because of the proven success of our newspaper advertising, which is also done in cartoon style throughout. The window cards will not only have a compelling interest of their own, but will tie up to the art style of our newspaper campaigns."

MAY SEAL PARCEL POST PACKAGES

Believe That New Post Office Ruling Will Help Department as Well as Business Men

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 3.—Sealed packages may now be sent through the mails by parcel post, under instructions which have been issued to postmasters by the Post Office Department. Changes have been made in the Postal Laws and Regulations liberalizing the conditions under which parcels of fourth-class matter may be accepted for mailing at the fourth-class rates of postage, as it is recognized that the preparation of parcels in this manner is advantageous to both the mailer and the postal service.

Special labels or notations are required on sealed parcel post packages, showing the character of the contents, such as "wearing apparel," "music rolls," "jewelry," etc., and stating that the parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary. It is not required that the quantity of contents be indicated, although this information may be shown if desired. In stating the character of contents a descriptive term of general nature will suffice.

The privilege of sealing parcel post packages will be appreciated by business men in many lines where it will permit of more careful packing. Decision to liberalize the regulations was brought about by this fact, and is part of the Post Office Department's campaign for better packing on the part of mailers.

Okeh Window Display Service Conceived Along New Lines

prominent cartoon artists who have produced humorous illustrations of Okeh record titles. These drawings have been used as the basis for the new window display cards and the titles are prominently displayed. The new cards are not only attractive and interesting from an artistic standpoint, but are proving business stimulants of real value.

Each of the monthly displays will consist of seven separate cards, six of them measuring 11 x 14 inches and one card measuring 14 x 22 inches. All of the cards will be printed in seven colors, and, since they feature but one record, the lettering is of sufficient size to be read easily appeal. Window cards depended for their sales value principally upon the list of records printed thereon in comparatively small type. The dealers could use them advantageously only when they were new and they had a complete list of records in stock. They could not feature any particular record at a particular time when their trade was strongly interested in it without also showing records which may have proved poor sellers in their community. The new Okeh service makes it possible for the dealer to not only make a complete display, using all the cards, but he can use them as single units with telling effect. The old idea of inclusive display has

Some Practical Merchandising Suggestions for the Talking Machine Trade

By Russell R. Voorhees

COLOR AS A SALES INFLUENCE

A dealer in talking machines noticed how some people preferred one color to another and found that color exerts a psychological effect on people.

His store was arranged so that several booths for the playing of records were located across the rear of the store. He had each of these booths decorated in a different color, taking care that everything was in harmony and that the color used predominated in everything in the room.

When a customer entered the store to hear a record he would be invited to step into one of the rooms at the rear of the store. The choice of the rooms was left to the customers and it was noticed that in most instances they showed certain preferences.

It was found that this simple little idea helped the clerks make sales. The color exerted its psychological influence on the customer, and since they picked out the room they liked they were naturally put in a happy frame of mind, just the frame necessary to make a successful sale.

HOOKING UP WINDOW WITH ADS

A talking machine dealer who always made it a point to display in his windows the same goods that he advertised in the newspapers recently worked out a little idea that enabled him to tie up the newspaper advertisements to his window and make each more valuable.

He noticed that many people would pay his window a visit to see what a certain talking machine looked like which he had advertised that day, but with other instruments in the window it was not always easy to tell which one was advertised. In order to overcome this he would paste a copy of the advertisement on his window just as soon as it appeared, and then from the back of the advertisement he would run a red baby ribbon to the machine mentioned in the advertisement. In that way it became an easy matter to locate the machine that was mentioned in his publicity. He found that it also tied up the two forms of advertising and made each much more productive.

A SUPER MAILING LIST

A mailing list is considered an asset to any business, but a retailer of talking machines recently proved that a super mailing list is worth even more.

He had a mailing list to begin with, but felt that if he had more information than this list gave him he could make better use of it. So he secured a small pad for himself and for each of his clerks, and as they learned anything about any of their customers they would jot it down on this pad. Later this information would be transferred to the proper card in the mailing list.

After a time this retailer had what he called a super mailing list that told the likes and dislikes of his customers, what sort of a machine they had, what kind they would like to have, their special liking for certain records and lots of other valuable information.

His direct-by-mail advertising was then done with much more system and much less waste. He would circularize with special mail matter only those people who were interested in certain specialties, and thus eliminate practically all waste. It took a little more work to get this super mailing list in shape, but it more than paid for the extra trouble.

A RAINBOW DISPLAY

The old idea of a pot of gold at the end of the rainbow was recently made use of by a talking machine dealer, but in his case the pot of gold became a pot of happiness. He rigged up an imitation rainbow out of cardboard mounted on a wooden frame and covered with crepe paper of various colors. This rainbow was put diagonally into the window with one end at the front top corner and the other end at the rear back corner. In that way it was easily seen by all who came near the store.

The floor of the window was covered with the same varicolored crepe paper that was used to make the rainbow, and the display of talking machines put in about the same way as in the usual case.

A large sign was suspended in the center of the window with the following message: "Find Your Pot of Happiness at the End of the Rainbow." And then at the end of the rainbow stood one of the choicest instruments that this dealer carried. The riot of color that was used in trimming this window made it one of the most attractive that this dealer ever used.

time he would make worth-while inducements to get people to buy instruments, decided to hook all of these events together with a name. So he called them "Clover Days" and used the phrase "Good Luck for Everybody" with it.

In trimming his window for these events he would make liberal use of artificial clovers for decorative purposes and would use green crepe paper to match for the floor of his window. In the center of the window and suspended from the ceiling he would have a large sign worded as follows: "Clover Days—Good Luck for Everybody." And any price tickets that he used in the displays would always carry the catch phrase "Good Luck for Everybody" as well as the name of the event, "Clover Days." And all of these price cards as well as the large card in the center of the window were done in green ink on a dark background to carry out the color scheme.

M'CORMACK CONCERT BOOSTS SALES

Appearance of Victor Artist in Newark Stimulates Record Sales

NEWARK, N. J., January 5.—The appearance of John McCormack, Victor artist, at a concert in the First Regiment Armory here last week was featured by Victor dealers throughout the city, resulting in a greatly increased demand for records by this famous artist.

The talking machine department of Hahne & Co. featured the appearance of McCormack by some special Victor advertising, which was productive of good results, and other concerns placed pictures of the artist in their windows and in conspicuous places in their establishments. Dealers helped in the distribution of tickets, which were soon disposed of.

PHIL RAVIS HAS A PAIR OF KINGS

Phil Ravis, president of the Peerless Album Co., New York, has been receiving the congratulations of his friends upon the arrival at the Ravis household in New York of a baby boy. This heir to the Ravis fortunes arrived on December 18, and Mr. Ravis is now the proud father of a "pair of kings." We understand that the new baby is taking a keen interest in the talking machine industry, particularly in his ability to compete with vocal records of exceptional volume.

WIDDICOMB CATALOG WORK OF ART

New Catalog Issued by Widdicomb Furniture Co. Noteworthy for Its Quality and Sales Value—Illustrations Exceptionally Attractive—Introductory Traces Company's Progress in Talking Machine Industry

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., January 8.—The Widdicomb Furniture Co., of this city, manufacturer of Widdicomb phonographs, has just issued a new catalog that is in full accord with the prestige of this well-known line of instruments. It is complete in every detail, and Widdicomb dealers who have received advance copies are delighted with its sales value and typographical excellence.

The various models in the Widdicomb line are presented through the medium of handsome photographic designs featuring the instrument in an atmosphere of refinement and beauty. The majority of these illustrations have been used in Widdicomb advertising, and among the instruments that are featured are the Chippendale, Model 4; Chippendale, Model 7; Adam, Model 12; Queen Anne, Model 6; Queen Anne, Model 3; Sheraton, Model 8; Adam, Model 2; Sheraton, Model 5; Early American, Model 1; Early American, Model 9, and Adam, Model 10. Each model is featured on a full page, and brief descriptions accompany the photograph, these descriptions giving the dimensions, the equipment and the woods in which the instrument is furnished.

The last page of the catalog gives a brief résumé of the individual characteristics of Widdicomb phonographs, including a few paragraphs relative to the cabinet, motor, filing system, horn amplifier, tone arm, reproducer and tone control.

The introduction of this catalog is entitled "Widdicomb, the aristocrat of phonographs—its twofold appeal suggests a new standard in phonograph value." This introduction, which sets forth the aims and ideals of the Widdicomb, reads in part as follows:

"The Widdicomb phonograph is not alone a musical instrument of superior type—it is an article of fine furniture, which can fittingly take its place in the most perfectly appointed room. The story of the development of the beautiful Widdicomb designs of to-day forms an interesting and romantic chapter in phonographic history.

"In the pioneer days of the phonograph little heed was given to beauty of design and cabinet work. In the effort to perfect musical reproduction appearance was more or less lost sight of. The Widdicomb Furniture Co. was the first to sense the possibilities of a new idea in phonograph construction—why not combine perfection as a reproducer with artistic design and finish commensurate with the prominence of the phonograph in the home? For fifty-six years it has been a recognized leader as a fashioner of beautiful furniture. Its exclusive creations in period design set the standard for fine cabinet work. With this broad experience of the popular taste for period furniture it visualized the appeal of a phonograph of similar master craftsmanship.

"From that beginning came the exquisite Widdicomb period phonographs of to-day, distinguished by the same artistic skill and master craftsmanship that has always marked Widdicomb furniture creations. Faithful interpretations of the best designs of the old masters of woodworking, they have an added touch of rare charm and individuality that is distinctively Widdicomb. Built in the most popular period designs—Chippendale, Sheraton, Adam, Queen Anne and Early American art—Widdicomb phonographs are reproduced in a variety of styles and finishes to suit any decorative plan and to blend harmoniously and unobtrusively with the furnishings of the most tastefully appointed room. The first impression that comes to anyone seeing the Widdicomb for the first time is that it really 'belongs' in the home—that it is a fitting part of the finished scheme of decoration, commanding only its own share of attention as an article of furniture.

"At the same time that the beautiful cabinet work and designs which distinguish Widdicomb phonographs were being developed phonograph experts were quietly at work perfecting a musical reproducer in keeping with Widdicomb ideals for the new phonograph. After two years of exhaustive research they perfected the Widdicomb amplifying tone chamber, an exclusive feature which is to-day recognized as marking a new era in musical reproduction. Its twofold appeal to every person who appreciates good taste and beautiful furniture has deservedly earned for it the title—the aristocrat of phonographs."

The Widdicomb Furniture Co. is entitled to congratulations on the appearance of this volume.

VALUE OF CHANGE OF ARGUMENT

The difficulty of the small boy in learning to spell because the teacher changed the words every day is nothing to the difficulty of becoming a salesman and meeting new arguments every day. But one way or another the boy generally learns to spell and there is no doubt about it, change of argument is what makes the salesman.

HOLIDAY GIFTS FROM JOBBERS

Dealers Receive Pleasing Reminders of Holiday Season From Leading Wholesalers

Many attractive gifts were sent to the Victor dealers by the wholesalers. The Silas E. Pearsall Co. presented its dealers with a handsome tray made of lacquered brass, featuring the Victor trade-mark with the distinctive Pearsall adaptation of this design. For several years the Silas E. Pearsall Co. has forwarded lacquered brassware to its friends in the trade, and this year's tray is a welcome addition to the set.

Clarence L. Price, general manager of Ormes, Inc., New York, was responsible for the presentation of an exceptionally attractive onyx smoking tray that was enthusiastically received by the Ormes clientele. The smoking tray is complete in every detail, and, in fact, has several unique features which are distinctly up to date.

The C. C. Mellor Co., Pittsburgh, Pa., mailed to its dealers a beautiful gold knife, bearing the name of the recipient, together with the Victor trade-mark in black and gold with the name Mellor underneath. This knife met with a hearty reception from the Mellor clientele, as it combined attractiveness with practicability.

One of the most original gifts in the trade this year was a plum pudding that was presented to the New York Talking Machine Co.'s clientele by Arthur D. Geissler, president of the company, and the members of his organization. The plum pudding was prepared in the kitchen of the New York Talking Machine Co., where the Lunch Club meets daily, and was fashioned after a private recipe owned and controlled by Mrs. Neil, manageress of the Lunch Club's cuisine.

The silver Redi-point pencil presented to the trade with the compliments of the Modernola Sales Corp., of New York City, of which George Seiffert is president, has a distinctive appeal both from an attractive and utilitarian point of view. Mr. Seiffert has received many letters of appreciation from those to whom this very useful holiday reminder was sent.

mastide with a very attractive Shur-rite silver pencil. The attractiveness and usefulness of this gift, together with the good will which prompted it, were much appreciated throughout the trade. These pencils will probably be put to good use in writing off orders for additional quantities of Brilliantone needles throughout the year, if all predictions come true.

Letter of a Veteran Salesman to a friend

(NO. I)

Dear Bill:

In your last letter you complain about the number of repossessions which you have been compelled to make and bad accounts and collection difficulties. Perhaps I can best help you out of your trouble by explaining some of the methods which we use in our store and which have proved very successful in mitigating this evil to a certain degree.

In the first place, from the trend of your gloomy epistle I surmise that your sales staff takes extreme pride in the fact that a customer usually goes out of your store after having purchased a far more expensive machine than she had planned on, and this, I believe, is the root of your trouble.

I have found from long experience that when the average person enters a store to buy a machine she has, as a rule, made a close approximation of the amount of money which she can spend, but all too often a clever salesman has succeeded in foisting upon her a far more expensive instrument than she could afford to buy. The result of this is that the family purse is strained to the limit to meet the weekly or monthly payments. The customer becomes irregular and in many instances discouraged, and if there is any financial difficulty in the home the payments stop altogether and the dealer is forced to repossess the machine, entailing, of course, the loss of a sale and a customer, since it is obvious that a person who has no machine will need no records. Of greater importance, however, is the fact that should this customer again reach an easy financial footing she most assuredly will not come to the establishment which has found it necessary to go so far as to repossess her machine, because she will feel humiliated.

When a customer enters our store we make it our business to try and discover how large an obligation this prospect can assume with safety. For example, if our prospect is a carpenter with a large family we know just about what his income is and approximately how much he can afford to spend for a talking machine. We do not try to sell him the more expensive machine which we would naturally try to sell to a physician or an architect. On the contrary, if his mind is set on purchasing an instrument which is out of all proportion to his ability to pay and he has no other income besides his earnings as a carpenter we would rather sell him a cheaper machine and be fairly sure that it will stay sold and the payments will be met promptly.

On the other hand, if a prospect enters the store and desires an inexpensive model and we find that he is financially able to purchase a better one we do everything in our power to sell him the more expensive model.

Skilful questioning on the part of the salesman will gain the desired information without giving offense to the customer and in the end everyone concerned will be better off. If this method is followed the customer will not only be able to meet his payments promptly, but he will be free from the worry of having spent money for something which he could not afford, and instead of losing him the house will enjoy his steady patronage.

Always your friend,

Jim.

PLANS OF PRINCESS WATAHWASO

Popular Victor Artist, Under Management of Miss Cloud, Being Booked for 1922 to Give Recitals for Distributors and Dealers

Princess Watahwaso, whose Victor records have brought a knowledge of Indian folk lore and song into the homes of the people throughout the country, is now arranging her bookings for the season of 1922. Princess Watahwaso is under the management of Miss M. A. Cloud, well known in talking machine circles through her former connection with the Putnam-Page Co., Inc., Victor wholesaler of Peoria, Ill. During the past year the Princess has appeared in a large number of recitals in dealer warerooms and, where the shop has been too small, in nearby concert halls. Her program consists of Indian dances, songs and legends, which furnish intensely interesting entertainment and invariably create a demand for her Victor records.

A number of dealers have had her appear in conjunction with concerts rendered by musical clubs and a large part of her work has also been in public schools, where the children are intensely thrilled by her work. Miss Cloud reports that in a number of instances no introduction was necessary to the school children, as they had already become familiar with her Victor recordings. Miss Watahwaso appears in the gorgeous raiment of an Indian princess, which increases the general effect greatly.

The Princess Watahwaso has a studio at 111 West Sixty-eighth street, New York City, and during 1922, under the direction of Miss Cloud, the Princess will place her services at the disposal of the Victor distributors and dealers. Following her appearance in the warerooms of a number of New York retailers and in many of the New York public schools, the Princess Watahwaso will leave for the Middle West. The Putnam-Page Co., Inc., has secured her services for a couple of weeks and, accompanied by W. H. Seitz, director of the Putnam-Page Co., she will appear at the warerooms of its many dealers. She has also engagements in Chicago, Louisville and Indianapolis and expects shortly to be booked for almost the entire year.

TWENTY-FIVE DISTRIBUTORS

Situated at Strategic Points in This Country and Canada Will Handle the Brilliantone Co.'s Needle Line—Means Efficiency

The Brilliantone Steel Needle Co., of New York City, of which B. R. Forster is president and H. W. Acton is secretary, has completed one of the most successful years in the history of the organization.

The executives of the company are making extensive plans for 1922, which is expected to even eclipse 1921 in the volume of sales. A change in the distributing plans of the company was made on the first of the year. It is planned during 1922 to market the needles through the medium of only twenty-five distributors situated at strategic points throughout this country and Canada. It is expected that each distributor will order 50,000,000 needles throughout the year. This will not only greatly increase the efficiency of the Brilliantone Steel Needle distribution, but will also provide greatly increased service to the dealer in supplying his demand.

The exceptional success which has attended the efforts of Mr. Forster and Mr. Acton in providing the trade with a needle of uniform and superior quality is obvious and proves beyond doubt the value of specialization.

Advertising men who had been in service could take an important part in shaping the influence of the Legion, as members of it, he said. The most important work for the Legion in politics was for it to act as a body that would oppose class and sectional legislation.

FILM STAR USES SONORA PORTABLE

Mabel Normand Insists on Using Sonora Portable in Film Scene—Yahr & Lange Feature Star's Preference in Forceful Advertising

MILWAUKEE, Wis., January 2.—Mabel Normand, the renowned film star, is a staunch supporter of the Sonora phonograph. This was most forcibly demonstrated when Miss Normand, who appeared at the Strand Theatre here in connection with her latest presentation, "Molly-O," was told that she was to play a small talking machine in a blimp scene. She insisted on using her Sonora portable, which she carries with her on all her travels.

Yahr & Lange, Sonora distributors for the State of Wisconsin and parts of Michigan, featured Miss Normand's use of the Sonora in her film in their advertising. These ads, which covered considerable space in the local papers, were devoted exclusively to the Sonora portable model.

The soloist was Bronislaw Huberman, violinist. There was a wonderfully enthusiastic audience.

E. B. LYONS VISITS NEW YORK TRADE

General Manager of Eclipse Musical Co. Calls Upon Eastern Trade—Speaks Optimistically of Business Conditions in His Territory

Edward B. Lyons, general manager of the Eclipse Musical Co., Cleveland, O., Victor wholesaler, was a visitor to New York this week, calling upon some of his many friends in the trade. Mr. Lyons, accompanied by his family, spent the Christmas holidays at the home of Mrs. Lyons' parents in Baltimore, and while East he took advantage of the opportunity to visit the Victor factory and to call upon some of his old friends in Philadelphia.

Discussing general business conditions, Mr. Lyons said that there seemed to be an undercurrent of optimism that would undoubtedly be reflected in a substantial and healthy industrial activity during 1922. Victor dealers as a whole closed an excellent holiday trade, and the majority of the dealers reported that December business was well in advance of 1920. Mr. Lyons has increased the personnel of his sales and service organization, and his company is in splendid shape to co-operate with its clientele during the coming year.

TRADERS LOOK TO LATIN-AMERICA

International Commission Discusses Program—Will Give Attention to Exchange Conditions as Affecting American Markets

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 5.—An elaborate program for the development of closer trade relations between the United States and the countries of Latin-America was outlined and discussed at the initial meeting recently of the reorganized International High Commission. The principal economic and financial problems confronting this hemisphere were discussed at the meeting for future solution.

New policies to govern the activities of the International High Commission in the furtherance of trade development between the United States and the Central and South American countries were discussed at the meeting. This phase of the Commission's work will be settled definitely before the actual problems to be solved are taken up.

The Commission, according to the tentative program already worked out, will give immediate attention to the question of exchange as affecting trade operations in the American markets. Present exchange conditions are admitted to be adverse to proper trade growth and plans will be devised, if possible, to restore exchange operations upon a more stable basis.

Simultaneously with the Washington conference, meetings were held by other sections of the High Commission in the several countries concerned. Reports of each meeting called to discuss the program already outlined and forwarded to each of the American countries will be submitted to the Commission's headquarters here, to be taken up at later meetings of the American section.

Further meetings will be held by the Commission in January to take up details of the actual problems awaiting solution. Secretary Hoover hopes to begin regular periodical sessions of the Commission at the earliest possible date in order that no time may be lost in bringing relief from handicaps to trade growth now existing.

The Brunswick line of talking machines has been taken on for exclusive representation by the Bannon Music Shop at Ottawa, Ill. Attractive booth arrangements are being made in this establishment.

BUSINESS WORLD IS SOUND

Says Garfield National Bank in Its Annual Review of Conditions Just Issued—Substantial Progress Toward Prosperity Apparent

In a New Year's letter to its customers the Garfield National Bank asserts that, if 1920 was a year of collapse, 1921 has been a year of taking stock, of cleaning up the wreckage, of calling in scattered resources and of weighing the favorable and unfavorable factors before putting into execution hastily redrawn plans. The letter says in part:

"While the damage was great, the situation, as developed by the events of 1921, was not as desperate as the storm clouds of 1920 indicated, and with the clearing of the skies it became apparent that the American business and financial world, while shaken, was inherently sound. The courage and optimism displayed in the early days of 1921 have been amply justified by the substantial progress which has been made by the country as a whole in its efforts to re-establish prosperity, and several features in the business landscape stand out prominently and encouragingly.

"The country's stock of gold and the strong position of the Federal Reserve system promise ample financial aid to all legitimate business, while the pronounced strength in the security markets is a welcome and dependable sign that general business conditions are likely to improve. Prices collectively have traveled a long way down the road that led up to the peak of 1920 and are seeking a new level, which will probably be materially higher than their pre-war starting point. Individual prices, however, show a continued disinclination to travel in company, and as long as one group of prices continues unduly inflated while another group sounds the depths of deflation no healthy revival of business can be expected.

"Various remedies have been proposed to allay the country's ills—tax remedies, tariff remedies, rate remedies, wage remedies, special interest aid remedies—but little has been offered to relieve the underlying disease most potently aggravating all these ills—uncertainty. The Arms Limitation Conference, in its proposed naval holiday, has pointed out the real remedy—an uncertainty holiday.

"If Congress would adopt its tariff, tax, rate, wage, special aid legislation—whatever it is—based on a ten-year schedule and assure us that no changes would be contemplated during that time, then inside of three years the country would enjoy such a measure of prosperity as would, within itself, contain the solution of most of the problems that vex us to-day."

CAMPAIGN PRODUCES SALES

Effective Advertising Used by Columbia Dealer on Coast Proves Successful

SAN DIEGO, CAL., January 3.—M. Tamplain, who recently opened an attractive establishment in this city, handling Columbia Grafonolas and Columbia records, is meeting with pleasing success. Mr. Tamplain is a keen believer in effective advertising, and his advertising campaign incidental to the opening of his new store was carefully planned months ahead of time. For several weeks prior to the opening Mr. Tamplain used indirect publicity of various types, and on one occasion he landed almost a full page of reading matter which told of his experiences on a long automobile trip.

The publicity drive was so well conceived that thirty-eight Grafonolas were sold on the first day, and for the first week the entire sales totaled sixty-eight machines. The advertising featured the well-known time or hour plan, whereby certain offers were made for only a limited time. The idea was a distinct success, and Mr. Tamplain is continuing the use of his publicity in the newspapers and other mediums.

Condy & Dreyfoos is the name of a new firm of talking machine retailers in Sedro Woolley, Wash. The Brunswick line is featured in very attractive quarters.

EVOLUTION OF THE TALKING MACHINE NEEDLE INDUSTRY

B. R. Forster, President of the Brilliantone Steel Needle Co., Tells of the Wonderful Development of the Bagshaw Business From a Modest Output to That of 100,000,000 Needles a Week

B. R. Forster, president of the Brilliantone Steel Needle Co., New York City, is looked upon as one of the highest authorities on talking machine needles in the trade, and in a recent chat with The World he grew reminiscent over the history and progress of the W. H. Bagshaw Co., of Lowell, Mass., for which the Brilliantone Steel Needle Co. is sole selling agent, and said:

"The talking machine needle, although a very small article and sold in quantities of from 100 to 50,000,000, forms a very important part in sound reproduction, upon which this great talking machine industry is built. The perfection and uniformity in length, tone and quality of the Bagshaw needle of the present day did not just happen, but is the result of years of experience and development. Rome was not built in a day, neither was the Bagshaw needle. Back of each individual Bagshaw needle are twenty-five years of experience and development. The history of the Bagshaw Co. and the development of the needle form interesting reading matter.

"Although making talking machine needles for twenty-five years, the Bagshaw Co. is over fifty years old, and celebrated its golden anniversary last year. The W. H. Bagshaw Co. made the first talking machine needles used, although at the time the company made them it did not know for what purpose it was manufacturing them. The company had previously earned an enviable reputation as a manufacturer of textile needles, and one day when it received an order and specifications for 100,000 needles from a commission house in Philadelphia it shipped this order without knowledge of the ultimate use of the points. It was later found that these needles were sold to the Zonophone Co., of Philadelphia, which was the company from which the present great Victor Talking Machine Co. grew, and of which Mr. Royal was then president. These needles gave such satisfaction that it was not long before the yearly demand amounted to 2,000,000 needles, which was then considered an enormous quantity. In comparison with the present output of over 100,000,000 needles a week, this yearly order of 2,000,000 now seems ridiculously small, but it serves to visibly point out not only the increase in growth in the talking machine industry, but the success attained by the Bagshaw Co. through the production of a quality product. At the time the first order was received the force of the Bagshaw shop consisted of three men, W. H. Bagshaw, the founder and then president of the company; John M. Dean, Sr., and another workman. The present large plant of the W. H. Bagshaw Co. in Lowell now houses hundreds of skilled workmen, augmented by the most approved and modern machinery for needle-making known. The present Bagshaw needle is not only the growth of a business from year to year, but is the result of much experimental and laboratory research work. In fact, the Bagshaw plant is equipped with a special laboratory for this purpose, under the excellent supervision of A. E. Bagshaw, laboratory expert and manufacturing superintendent."

The business of the W. H. Bagshaw Co. at the present time is being conducted by C. H. and W. J. Bagshaw, president and secretary, respectively, sons of the founder, who have specialized the greater part of their lives in the production of talking machine needles. The entire output of the plant is distributed by the Brilliantone Steel Needle Co., which has built up an excellent system of distribution throughout the entire United States and Canada, so that at the present time it is hard to find any town, city or hamlet in which it is not possible to obtain Brilliantone products. It is expected that 1922 is going to be a big needle year, and the production of the Bagshaw plant for the coming year is being planned accordingly.

Mr. Kearns reports that the company has closed a very successful season and that "Xmas Joy," a new ConnORIZED roll for the holiday season, has sold exceptionally well. Three thousand two hundred of these rolls were sold in Philadelphia and 2,800 in Baltimore.

The business conducted by this firm is constantly increasing and extensive plans for expansion during 1922 are under way. It is expected that by next Fall a Pittsburgh branch of the company will be opened.

READY FOR MANUFACTURES CENSUS

Work on the 1921 Census of Manufactures to Start Promptly on January 3

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 2.—The taking of the 1921 census of manufactures will begin promptly on January 3, officials of the Census Bureau have announced, and every effort will be made to furnish the results to the public in record time.

Questionnaires for the various industries are now being sent out to manufacturers, and they are being asked to complete and return them with as little delay as possible. The data desired covers the production for the calendar year 1921. The results, when compared with the reports for the census of 1919, will show exactly to what extent business suffered as a result of the post-war depression.

The census schedules on which the information is to be collected have been greatly simplified, and in nearly every case are much shorter than those used in 1919. Much of the data gathered in 1919 will not be collected this time, the 1921 census being the first biennial "census of production" called for under a law enacted by Congress a year ago. As only details of production are desired, manufacturers will be called upon only to give the total output of their various classes of products, together with certain information regarding the sum expended for materials, salaries and wages, etc., and figures showing the percentage of time plants were in operation during the year. This last is considered very important, since from the answers to this question it will be possible to learn to what extent factories closed down or worked on part-time during the year.

While the census figures will be gathered only from manufacturers, they will be of interest to retailers and wholesalers as showing conditions in the various trades.

James Howard, of the Howard and Seymour orchestras, has succeeded W. A. Grubbs as manager of the Robinson & Compton Record Shop, Toledo, O. Mr. Grubbs has opened an exclusive Columbia store in Toledo.

The Brunswick Shop Co., of Galesburg, Ill., has opened a new store for Brunswick representation at Macomb, Ill.

TWENTY LIVE SELLING POINTERS

Talking Machine Dealers and Salesmen Will Find These "Tips" Well Worth While

The Brunswick Dispatch, the live monthly house organ of the phonograph division of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., in a recent issue presented a score of pertinent and interesting pointers for salesmen, which are so sound as to be well worthy of the consideration of anyone engaged in the selling of machines and records. The twenty points, which have evidently been outlined by an expert, are as follows:

1. Prepare the prospect's mind before playing anything. Remember, you are not giving the demonstration to entertain, but to impart knowledge.
2. Be sure the instrument you use is in perfect running order.
3. See to it that the prospect is seated in a comfortable chair at a proper distance from the instrument.
4. Have a specially selected album of records at your finger tips. Also be prepared with any literature you may need during the course of demonstration, as it greatly weakens the effect of the demonstration to be forced to get such material as you feel the need of it.
5. Do not volunteer the price of the instrument at outset.
6. Always refer to different styles of instruments by the model number.
7. Decline to answer mechanical questions until proper time—late in demonstration. If you maintain your control of the demonstration the prospect will not have opportunity of butting in.
8. Do not play every selection in its entirety.
9. Handle records with care—for effect.
10. Do not converse while playing. Appear interested in the music.
11. Inject an element of suspense in the demonstration—keep prospect expectant.
12. Do not tire prospect with too much music.
13. Do not appear to let prospect hurry you.
14. Never mention your competitors by name. If you refer to them at all—speak well of them.
15. Aim to close in store if possible. Do not suggest a home demonstration until you clearly see the necessity for such.
16. Always see that prospect is supplied with literature before departing.

17. Do not use merely tuneful records. The other fellow has catchy melodies, too.

18. Carry prospect with you as you go along. Get the prospect to agree to your statements as you make them. If the prospect dissents, go no further until you have won the point at issue. Ignoring this fact is responsible for "poor closers." The sale is lost before the demonstration is brought to a close.

19. Remember your first impression makes light or hard work for you after the first five minutes. Give particular study to your "get-away."

20. And lastly, if you see that it will be impossible to close in the store, or secure an immediate home demonstration, leave the way open for a future come-back. Put on your most affable manner.

Importance of Sincerity and Atmosphere In Relation to Successful Merchandising

The following excellent article on sincerity and atmosphere as the two prime requisites to successful merchandising was written by George H. Barnes, president of the Barnes Music Co., Los Angeles, Cal., and was printed in a salesman's bulletin issued by that company.—EDITOR'S NOTE.

Throughout the rank and file of economical institutions, both large and small, there stand unshaken the great bulwarks of such eminently successful houses as Marshall Field & Co., John Wanamaker, Tiffany, Woolworth and a few others who stand head and shoulders above all others. These institutions bear indisputable living testimony to the value of those two prime requisites in business—"Sincerity and Atmosphere."

If there is one quality that can least be spared from a salesman's talk it is sincerity. You can strip a selling argument of most everything else—strength of personality, clarity of expression, taste of arrangement, excellence of idea—and still you have something left, something that will reach out and grasp people, if your selling arguments ring true, for you must remember that all the sparkle and persuasion and drive of good salesmanship come when the salesman is so filled with belief in his product and the unquenchable faith in the equitable policy of his house that he can imbue the buyer with the same enthusiasm which he himself enjoys as a result of his knowledge and experience.

People often point out the great variation between the results obtained by two salesmen—both apparently equally equipped to sell and even working for the same house. Sincerity, and the lack of it, are the reasons for the wide difference in results. One may violate every standard of taste, even be a bit slovenly in dress and approach, yet there is something about him which begets confidence. Sincerity is the reason, and it is the noble characteristic of American people to forgive a sincere man almost anything. It is equally true that a lack of sincerity in a salesman can totally ruin a perfectly good prospect no matter how highly polished be his manners. Sincerity is of even greater importance in advertising than it is in personal salesmanship, for advertising is multiplied selling—it reaches too many people, and if it isn't "sincere" too many people will find it out.

Many people still seem to believe that attracting attention is the greatest function of advertising and that even unfavorable attention is preferable to being ignored. It is not sufficient that they make people talk. The German nation has made a great many people talk about it in the last five years, but it has not advanced its position in the esteem of the rest of the world. If you would let sincerity pervade your selling don't let people laugh at you—make them laugh with you—or better yet, smile together; but ridicule is a mighty hindrance to the respect that is inspired by sincerity.

The creation of atmosphere is even more important in advertising and store appearance than in spoken salesmanship, and there is no more vital phase of merchandising than the study and practice of creating atmospheric effects in advertising as well as store and window arrangement. Every business, no matter how young or old, has a personality. To catch the spirit of that personality and to reflect it in every way possible—selling talk, courtesy, store arrangements, sincerity, atmosphere—is the duty of every individual connected with the institution, from janitor to general manager.

fume or china or rugs or kitchen cabinets or vacuum cleaners or fountain pens, hosiery, candy, refrigerators or near-beer—in fact, anything that people want. In selling the masses Marshall Field & Co. recognize this, as you will see from the following article appearing in Printer's Ink:

"To get atmosphere and contrast, Marshall Field & Co. give prominent display to expensive articles, taking valuable space which would sell directly much greater quantities of popular merchandise. That is why we displayed in our most valuable window during the last August fur sale a $7,500 Hudson sable coat; that is why we have displayed and sold men's cravats as high as $10; $400 bedroom sets; $4,500 dining-room sets; $10,000 rugs; a $2,500 painting; $2,400 phonographs; $85 ready-to-wear suits for men; $35,000 pearl necklaces; china service plates at $3,000 a dozen. People reason that if a store carries merchandise like this the proportion of quality must exist in lower priced articles. In other words Mrs. Jones likes to trade where Mrs. Lake-Shore-Drive buys and Mrs. Lake-Shore-Drive comes here because she gets merchandise which is in many cases better than produced elsewhere—plus 'Field Service.'"

The people who most thoroughly realize the importance of atmosphere are those who are selling high-priced merchandise. There is probably no other line of business where atmosphere is so essential to success as it is in the music business. Therefore, let your conversations and conduct reflect the spirit of sincerity and cordiality which the Barnes Music Co. is daily striving to attain.

Let us all be merchants in the truest, biggest sense of the word.

FLEXLUME SIGNS

Make One Music Store Stand Out from the Others

The purpose of a Flexlume Electric Sign is to make one store stand out from all the others—to give it personality, an atmosphere of substantial quality which will induce people to come inside and buy. Flexlumes have raised snow-white glass letters on a dark background. The lamps are enclosed in the body of the sign and so arranged that practically all the light is thrown through the openings which form the letters. This means that Flexlumes are day signs as well as night signs—raised white letters in the daytime, solid letters of light at night. They have greatest reading distance, lowest upkeep cost, most artistic designs.

THE PERSONAL TOUCH IN SELLING

The Value of a Customer Is Rated by the Number of Repeat Orders—Two Types of Salesmen and Their Methods of Handling Purchasers

The value of a customer is not rated by the first sale made to him, but by the number of repeat orders. Repeat orders are the result of service and good service depends to a large extent on the personal touch established between the house and the customer. A person entering the store cannot be termed a customer until a purchase has been made and whether or not the firm takes advantage of this entering wedge to future sales regulates, in a measure, the continued patronage of the customer. In far too many instances the salesman accomplishes his primary object, that of making a sale of a machine or records, and then promptly forgets this customer and concentrates his attention on other prospects, not realizing that the very fact that he has made a sale indicates that that particular person has been convinced that the product represented by the salesman is the best in its field for the price, has confidence in the house and in the salesman and, therefore, offers an extremely fruitful field for further sales effort.

Take for example two record salesmen: Both are intelligent and ambitious. A customer enters the store and the first salesman, after displaying some clever sales ability, sells her several records. She leaves the store and is promptly forgotten by the salesman. He is not looking to future sales to this same person and if she enters the store again it is entirely on her own initiative.

The second salesman also waits on a customer and sells her several records. Before the customer leaves the store the salesman is in possession of her name and address and from the sale which he has just made and from inquiries he has a fairly accurate knowledge of the kind of music which she prefers. He jots this information down. Here is where the personal touch comes in. Instead of forgetting this customer the salesman sees that her name is placed on the mailing list and that she receives monthly record lists and other publicity matter, and he even goes further. He devotes some time to the compilation of letters which contain a more human touch than the average business letter. In his letters he draws this customer's attention to several records which he thinks will please her particularly and subtly conveys the idea that he is not only interested in retaining her patronage but that he is exerting every possible effort to see that she is accorded maximum courtesy and service.

It does not take a very keen mind or very much analysis to determine which of these two types of salesmen is the most profitable for a concern to retain.

The Trade in BOSTON and NEW ENGLAND

JOHN H. WILSON, Manager
324 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, MASS.

BOSTON, MASS., January 5.—The trade is now reviewing the past twelve months of 1921, a year that was full of strange fluctuations and variations, when no single month was like a succeeding one. There was the early call on the part of merchants generally to make ready in due season for Christmas and the talking machine dealers got some of the good effects of this. Instead of there being a rush of people a few days in advance of Christmas the call for goods began early in December and there was a steady stream of buyers right through the month, with few large individual orders, but a great many smaller ones, which, in the aggregate, made a very healthy showing for the month. There is not much disposition to make comparisons of the 1921 business with the year previous for obvious reasons, but comparisons are made with leaner years against which 1921 stands out conspicuously. As for the future, what it is to produce in the way of business for the jobbers and dealers, it is yet too early to forecast, but there is a general feeling that, while 1922 will eventually make a good showing, it is not expected that it will have a very healthy beginning before the latter part of the Winter.

Why the Industry Should Get Together

According to a great many talking machine dealers a real need exists for the reorganization of the trade in such manner that the public may be protected from buying goods that are unworthy of the price and wherein dealers are competing along lines utterly unworthy of the honorable business they represent. Here is the way that a leading dealer in this city expresses it, and, parenthetically, to speak editorially, may there not be some food for serious thought? Therefore, read and digest, you of the army of talking machine dealers:

"Why is it the talking machine manufacturers can't get a great, big, high-grade man back of them to get them massed together for the reorganization of the talking machine industry, which is in such a deplorable condition; where the public is buying goods every day that is unworthy of the price, with no reputation; where dealers are competing, each one trying to hold his own by selling merchandise cheaper than the other fellow, making it necessary for them to go out and buy cheaper products; where manufacturers are trying to give an upright type machine at a cheaper price than their competitor and, by so doing, slight workmanship, quality, etc., and think of just price? There is no regard for the truth; they are offering $150 and $175 machines for $82, $87 and all such prices.

"The industry has degenerated to such an extent that something has got to be done to save it and, I believe, it needs a high-grade man to either go out and fight these cut-price fellows with their own weapons for the next six months and make them sick of it or see that the situation is cleaned up where there is an oversupply of product. There is such a combination, especially in the moving picture industry, to keep control and bring business back to normal and something ought to be done here. The big manufacturers should be brought together, instead of fighting against each other."

Holiday Spirit Manifested

The Christmas spirit was given visible expression by the dealers in no unmistakable manner in this city and, while some of the displays did not involve as much expense as in former years, they amply served their purpose. The Steinert house, both at its Boylston street and Arch street headquarters, had windows that attracted marked attention. In Boylston street there was a beautifully decorated tree at one end, a small stage at the opposite side, on which was set a handsome Victrola, while in the middle was a Wintry scene as glimpsed through a window. Scattered in the foreground were miniature figures of the grand opera characters so familiar to Victor enthusiasts. The C. C. Harvey Co. decorated its warerooms in ropes of laurel and in the window was a Santa Claus coming out of a box with quantities of tied-up gifts scattered about, Edison, Victor and Brunswick records predominating. A Victor display in one of the windows of the Oliver Ditson Co. was effectively set in the midst of a canopy of Southern smilax and red poinsettias. In the window of the Vocalion Co. was a handsomely dressed tree with a display of records suggestive of Christmas gifts. Ropes of laurel and poinsettia blossoms also helped to add to the general effect. The A. M. Hume Co., next door, had a number of wreaths tied with red ribbons, and there were effective displays to be seen in the windows of the Frank S. Horning Co., Henderson's and the Puritan, all on Boylston street; the Tremont Talking Machine Co. in Tremont street, Widener's in West street, and the Grafo-

An interesting announcement is that made by Arthur C. Erisman, head of the Grafonola Co. of New England, who has associated with him Arthur W. Chamberlain in presenting the merits of the Strand, the new and popular-priced console type of talking machine, which Mr. Erisman became interested in only a few weeks ago. Mention was made in last month's issue of The World of this new connection in the wholesale end and since then Mr. Erisman has been able to interest a great many talking machine houses, furniture houses and department

For the past year he has been traveling in the interests of a line of accessories, but these he will not give up, simply representing the Strand as an additional line.

Encouraging Vocalion Report

Manager Wheatley, of the Vocalion Co., makes a most encouraging report of the holiday business and the retail and wholesale were considerably in excess of the same time a year ago. Much of the success of the retail business was due to some good advertising in the daily papers, advertisements that told a story well and convincingly, and for these Mr. Wheatley was responsible, as he put in a lot of time in getting ready the copy. Another drawing card for the good business were the rebates that were offered prospective customers and so many persons seized the opportunity of taking advantage of the offer within the specified time that many sales resulted. Mr. Wheatley went over to New York the end of December to confer with the Aeolian officials relative to the policy to be pursued in 1922, a year that Mr. Wheatley thinks will be a very successful one.

Steinert's Christmas Party

There was a Christmas party Thursday, December 22, at the Steinert Victor headquarters, 35 Arch street, which was the best Christmas festival ever held—that's what Bob Steinert called it, and he ought to know, for he was right in the thick of it and did his share in giving everybody a good time. There was a tree as usual, from which the forty or more employes got presents, both funny and serious, but the best one given out was a handsome safety razor set which found its way into the possession of Bob Steinert, with the compliments of his associates. Kenneth Reed, wholesale manager of the department, was an active factor in the good time and "Shad" Plenty, the negro elevator boy, without whose presence a Steinert party wouldn't be a success, gave some of his imitations and buck and wing dancing, and he was assisted by John Mahoney, for, you see, the place has a lot of good talent. Not to be outdone, Bob Steinert gave a very good imitation of "Shad" himself, provoking great hilarity.

There were refreshments, and dancing brought the Christmas festivities to a close.

PHONOGRAPHS AND RECORDS

MORE THAN BEAUTY OF TONE RECOMMENDS THE BRUNSWICK

Phonograph buyers, who, from lack of experience with phonographs, are unable to appreciate the finer quality of Brunswick Tone, are often moved to buy a Brunswick by another important feature.

And that is its ability to place at the owner's command every type of record made (playing each type according to its individual requirements, and without attachments). No other phonograph can justly claim such an achievement.

And this is only one of the powerful selling arguments with which every Brunswick dealer is armed.

field. Mr. Zerrahn, while with the Emerson Co., was in charge of the New England field for three years and was also in the South for a time, where he represented a record line. Mr. Zerrahn comes of a fine Boston family and has many friends here. He is making a success in handling the Granby machine.

Within the week before Christmas the Widener store was entered and out of the safe was taken $211. The robbery was discovered in the morning. The time indicator showed that the outer door of the store had been opened at 9:22 the night before, then closed a minute later, opened again at 2.32 a. m., and closed at 2.33. It was the opinion of the police, therefore, that whoever was responsible for the break entered at the first-mentioned time and left at the latter hour. The person or persons apparently knew something of the combination of the safe, which was found open.

Grafonola Quarters Rearranged

The Grafonola Co. of New England, of which Arthur C. Erisman is manager, has sublet a part of the property at the corner of Tremont and Avery streets to D. A. Schulte, Inc., who runs a chain of tobacco stores throughout the city. This concern will have the Tremont street end of the building, Mr. Erisman retaining the Avery street side from the main doorway and having at the rear a quick-service department. All the booths will be moved upstairs, as Mr. Erisman has long had elaborate quarters on the second floor. A rearrangement of the quarters will be begun soon, so that the new tenant may take possession by March 1.

Brunswick Plans for 1922

Kenneth T. Finney, wholesale manager of the Brunswick, reports an excellent Christmas business which rather exceeded the best expectations and, furthermore, he stated that there was no appreciable falling off in trade in the week immediately following the holidays. He expressed himself as highly confident of good business during the year 1922, saying that there have been many very encouraging indications already. The Brunswick is planning early in the new year to enter new territory in New England and Harry Spencer, head of Kraft, Bates & Spencer, Inc., which handles the wholesale Brunswick, is on the lookout for advantageous locations. Mr. Spencer, right after Christmas, went to Chicago to confer with the Brunswick officials relative to the plans which are to be worked out during the new year.

Big Demand for Okeh Records

An expansive smile playing over the countenance of E. B. Shiddell is explained when one hears him say that he had a very good business in the Okeh line of records. He says that the way that some dealers ran out of goods rather early in the holiday period served as a sufficient warning never again to take any chances when it comes to carrying an adequate stock. He looks, therefore, to see those handling the Okeh line to place bigger orders than usual early in the new year.

Greetings to the Boston Trade

The greetings of the New England Music Trade Association, of which Frank S. Horning, head of the Frank S. Horning Co., Inc., is now president, are extended to the members of the organization through the medium of a folded card of yellowish buff in an envelope of the same color, which Secretary Merrill has got up. The lines were composed by George W. Willmington, whose verses have often been printed in publications. The lines are headed "A New Year's Thought for 1922," and here they are:

"The war-worn world is sick and thin
Of non-productive toil,
As guns are made where looms should spin
And weeds o'errun our soil.
United we can reconstruct,
But selfish strife must end;
Do what you like will but obstruct,
Like what you do will mend."

Columbia Co.'s Christmas Party

There was a happy Christmas party at the Columbia headquarters with Fred E. Mann, the manager, as master of ceremonies. There was a tree set up in the doorway of the model shop from which presents for everybody were drawn as out of a grab. Miss Helen Connors, one of the office staff, who teaches dancing on the side, brought some of her pupils to the headquarters and they gave an exhibition of fancy dancing. Later there was general dancing with refreshments, and on the breaking up of the party Manager Mann wished everyone a Merry Christmas.

the house has been identified for so long a time. This part of the company's business has been transferred to Henry Smith, who has been with the Lansing Co., beginning his career there during the years that Mr. Lansing was alive. Mr. Smith will continue to manufacture these coverings and will have an establishment in Harrison avenue not far from where the Lansing Sales Co. is now located, Number 170, a location that is convenient and in every way better adapted to the needs of this concern. There will soon be some additional news of interest touching this house, which it is hoped will be ready for the readers of the February issue.

Looks for Greatly Improved Business

Wholesale Manager Herbert Shoemaker, of the Eastern Co., sees every reason for looking for improved business during 1922. He says that on several days following Christmas there were some cancellations of goods, but this was natural at a time so close to the new year, a fact that will become obvious to anyone who stops to think; but the type of dealers who thus canceled their orders are the very ones who will be ordering heavily some time in January. Thus far he says he has found very few timid souls, most of the dealers he has come in touch with being imbued with the idea that 1922 is going to be a very satisfactory year. The Eastern Co. meantime is laying plans to make the current twelve months the most successful ones in its history.

Fitzgerald's Big Holiday Trade

Billy Fitzgerald, whose shop at 28 Cornhill street is becoming widely known to his large following, says he had a very big Christmas sale of Victor goods. He has not yet completed all his improvements in the interior, but when his plans are finally carried out he will have a comfortable, well-equipped store. Among his callers during December were several of the managers of theatrical companies here in town and they were large purchasers of records.

Regret Passing of A. L. Bailey

News was received a few days after Christmas of the death on that day of A. L. Bailey, a well-known music dealer, who ran a series of stores, with headquarters at St. Johnsbury, Vt., which was his home. Starting originally as a piano house he had so developed his business in the last few years that the talking machine end became a valuable adjunct, and he carried several types of machines. He operated as many as sixteen stores in Vermont and New Hampshire, which were known as Bailey's Music Rooms. Mr. Bailey was seventy-seven years of age. He was widely known to the Boston trade and had been a visitor to this city earlier in the month.

Suffers From Fire

The Manganaro Music Co., of Quincy, was a heavy loser through a disastrous fire which swept through a part of the business center of that neighboring city on the morning of December 30, with a total loss of $200,000. This music shop, which was an exclusive Columbia wareroom, is operated by Andrew Manganaro, who is a live wire in the retail trade. His store adjoined the building in which the fire originated. Because of a large Christmas trade there was not a heavy supply of goods on hand. Mr. Manganaro is enough of a hustler not to allow his doors to be closed very long.

To Visit the South

Robert Steinert, of the Steinert Co., is planning to take a trip South some time in January, if business can be so arranged that he can find the time to go. He plans to return to Boston so as not to interfere with the plans of his father, Alexander Steinert, who usually goes South in February or March.

Stephen Colahan Goes Home for Holidays

Stephen Colahan, who is now exploiting the Cheney line, with headquarters at the A. M. Hume Music Co.'s Boylston street warerooms, hurried over to New York to spend Christmas with his parents in Brooklyn, N. Y., and a few days later made his start for home, coming by way of Connecticut and making it a business trip in the interests of the Cheney outfit.

Souvenir From Eastern Co.

The Eastern Co. did not forget its friends during the holiday season and its dealers accordingly received for Christmas artistic oxidized silver paper cutters with the Eastern Co.'s name inscribed on the handle, for which gift "we" all extend our thanks.

Hallet & Davis Holiday Reminder

The Hallet & Davis Co. was early in the field with its Christmas souvenir, and its constituents accordingly received a handsome brass pad calendar which matches the paper cutter of last year. Thanks, again, says the trade and "us."

Executive Board Re-elected

Now that the Christmas rush is over, President Frank S. Horning, of the New England Music Trade Association, has found time to give heed to the executive board of the organization and he, acting on the advice of some of his fellow officials, has come to the conclusion

Kneuper, of Lawrence; Stanwood Miller, Jerome Murphy, E. M. Wheatley, Frank Beal and Leonard Wright. There is also the same membership, publicity and advisory committees, the latter divided into the piano and talking machine departments. The make-up of the latter division is as follows: R. V. Davis, chairman; Harry L. Spencer, Kenneth E. Reed, Walter Gillis and William E. Titus.

J. A. Frye Visits Victor Plant

James A. Frye, of the traveling staff of the Victor, spent several days at the factory following the Christmas holidays. Mr. Frye and his wife, who has lately returned from an extended visit with her people in the South, are now pleasantly settled in the Back Bay.

Encouraged Over Sales

Chester J. Sylvester, manager of the talking machine department of the Osgood Co., is quite encouraged over the sales which he has made, not alone approaching the holidays, but in the week since Christmas, and he is quite optimistic over the prospects for 1922. Just now he is engrossed in stock-taking, as one of the statements has to be in by the tenth of this month. Mr. Sylvester has with him Sturgis Wood, one of the best repair men in the talking machine business, and there is little about a machine which he does not know.

PROBLEMS OF MUSICAL DIRECTOR IN THE LABORATORY

Must Be a Genius at Picking Out Selections That Will Appeal to Popular Favor and Selecting the Right Artists to Sing Them—Recording of Symphony Orchestra Presents Difficulties

Making records that "get across" is very much like producing successful moving pictures, says a writer in The New York American, who points out that a clever story will often be ruined and fall flat because of poor acting or as a result of casting the wrong actors for the leading parts. Just as often the reverse is the case, and a poor story with a weak plot will go over by the saving grace of the star's winning personality and delightful characterization.

The musical director at the recording laboratory has exactly the same problem to face. First he must choose a musical "story" or composition that is sufficiently interesting to insure its popularity and then determine which artist will sing it to the best possible advantage. He must select one whose art is most suitably adapted to that type of song or music and who, because of a particular quality of voice or style, is most likely to infuse into the recording that lyrical grace of execution or that charm of interpretation which makes the record a living embodiment of the art of its creator. There must be more than mechanical reproduction of sound behind a record to make it good. The phonograph is no longer a novelty.

Have you ever stopped to consider what there is in a record that attracts you besides its charm as a musical composition? There are three elemental points on which a recording should be judged—clarity of recording, expression or interpretation and tonal purity or fidelity.

Clarity of recording is not easily achieved, and in spite of the fact that they have been at it many years there are still many and varied difficulties which are eternally presenting themselves. Take, for example, the problem of recording the many instruments in a symphony orchestra of approximately one hundred pieces. Do not forget that the diaphragm which catches and transmits the vibrations sent out by these hundred different musical instruments is less than two inches in diameter, and that each instrument produces an entirely different set of vibrations, all of which strike the diaphragm at the same instant. All this must be recorded in one single groove, one continuous sound wave in the wax matrix. That it is possible to produce the beautiful symphony records which are being offered today is remarkable, and it is due only to unremitting scientific research and experiment, combined with the serious and tireless efforts of the artists themselves.

Expression of interpretation is perhaps the most important single consideration in producing a record of artistic worth. The artist must register the dramatic quality so vital to a song such as "Danny Deever," or "On the Road to Mandalay," or the subtlety of interpretation necessary to Massenet's "Elegie," otherwise the recording will prove flat and uninteresting. The artist must infuse into the record that intangible something that makes you feel his presence.

The matter of tonal purity and fidelity can perhaps be best illustrated by a consideration of violin recordings. Wonderful strides have been made in this direction and it is not unusual to find a record possessing a tone of surprising purity, a tone round and warm in feeling or of scintillating brilliance. Unless a record reflects, with close fidelity, this beauty of tone much is lost, for in the limpid tone of a violin is the fullness of expression, the delicate shading and color that distinguishes artistic achievement.

Tone is the foundation of expression for the virtuosi. The difficult little tricks of technique can be mastered with persistent practise; they are more or less mechanical. Supple fingers can be taught to respond instantly with unerring precision and agility to an instinctive wish, but tone—that is an entirely different matter.

Tone is infinitely difficult of accomplishment. There is a certain something not readily definable about a pure and limpid tone that is hard to separate and analyze as a thing apart. The artist feels, as he plays, that it is the soul within him that breathes into his beloved violin.

A WONDERFUL HOLIDAY TRADE CLOSED IN NEW ORLEANS

Leading Establishments Make Encouraging Reports Regarding Trade Outlook—What J. D. Moore Says—Miss Jalenak Married—Small Music Shops as Sales Mediums—Situation Reviewed

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 5.—Talking machine dealers emerged from the holiday period well satisfied with their share of profits for the season. The rush lasted until closing Christmas Eve and many stores made deliveries with Santa Christmas morning. While the trade has quieted down to normal in machine sales, many stores report increased business in records since Christmas.

Maison Blanche, one of the biggest department stores in the city, reports a wonderful business. The rush started early and stayed until Santa Claus arrived and was waiting for talking machines to put into the stockings. "Xmas week showed a 35 per cent increase over the corresponding week last year," said J. D. Moore, manager of the music department, "and, while I don't expect that the month as a whole will show quite that much improvement over last year, still we are well satisfied with the business. Too, we were especially careful to get a stock large enough to carry us through the season and this is the first time that we have had a big enough stock to last. We still have a few $100 machines left. But machines from $125 up went like hot cakes. The Brunswick $300 Stratford was very popular. Records were excellent sellers and the business has kept up since Christmas." Maison Blanche will discontinue its line of player rolls.

L. A. Guenard, who has two small music shops, one in the business section of the city and one in the residential section, claims that he closed "a world of business last year." Player-pianos have just been added to his stock and he sold three Lindeman & Sons players during the week before Christmas. Player rolls picked up wonderfully, as well as records. Jazz pieces were the most popular, but sentimental music ran a close second. Cash sales were better at Christmastime than in the early part of the year. Mr. Guenard intends to add banjos and other stringed instruments to his line in the early part of this year.

An agreeable surprise in local talking machine circles was the marriage on December 15 of Miss June Bernice Jalenak, for the past four years manager of the Dugan Piano Co.'s Victrola department, to D. J. Trembley, sales manager for the Abbott Automobile Co. Though the engagement had been rumored for some time the couple slipped away quietly, and the an-

Mrs. Trembley has returned to her duties at the Dugan Piano Co. and will, no doubt, remain in charge of the department until Mr. Dugan can make other arrangements, though everyone admits this will be no little task, as Mrs. Trembley has built up a splendid patronage and acquaintanceship among local music dealers, and she will be greatly missed when she steps from the ranks of New Orleans sales folks who are identified with the talker business here.

High-priced period model Victrolas have had the call lately in this section of the South served by the wholesale department of Philip Werlein, Ltd. The Pierce-Goodell Piano Co., representative Victor dealer at Beaumont, Tex., reports the sale of a William and Mary period model to ex-Governor Hobby, of Texas. Ex-Governor Hobby, who is a resident of Beaumont, being proprietor of two daily papers there, installed the Victrola in his handsome home, where it has been seen and heard and favorably commented upon by many of his friends.

At Monroe, La., the Foster Jewelry Co., another live Victor account, reported the sale of an Adam period model to a Shreveport oil magnate and believes it will sell several more directly, as a result of placing this at the disposal of this party, who maintains a beautiful country estate near the city of Shreveport.

J. Henry Blache, who is the head of the Orphone Talking Machine Co., is another believer in small music shops scattered in different parts of the city. Business has been even better than he anticipated in the three months that his store has been operating and he is now thinking seriously of opening up two more small shops. Mr. Blache has found the people liberal spenders this year and not as lacking in funds as reports would indicate. His shop was opened as an experiment and it has more than proved his theory. He has always encouraged a cash business by allowing a liberal discount for cash sales, and in spite of the fact that there were three other competitors in the block his store has established itself and is now on its way to make a good profit in 1922. Mr. Blache has been in the music business for the past seven years and is competent to express himself on the outlook for the future.

that business is really as good since Christmas as it was before, because of the fact that a lot of the machines which were sent out on approval are now being paid for and they are still doing a big closing-out business. Their estimate of the business done this year is about 25 per cent better than that of last December, while for the whole year the percentage is between 25 and 30 per cent better than in 1920. They still sell more of the official laboratory model New Edison machines than any other. The Edison Co. continues to supply restaurants with machines. The Vieux Carre and the Comus were buyers of machines just before Christmas.

The business done by the Philip Werlein Co. was a surprise to all, for it was above what anyone had anticipated. The start was later than usual on the holiday rush, and due to that, and the fact that the stock ran short, the sales were smaller than what they would have been otherwise. The Style 110 Victrola was the most popular machine. Record sales were exceptionally good, both in Red Seals and in popular rags. Miss N. Pavone won the monthly prize for record sales and Miss Hoyt was second. Generous checks were received by all employees of Werlein, Ltd., for Christmas.

The L. Grunewald Co. was one of those at the top of the list in both record and talking machine sales. The season was, in the words of one of the salesmen, a "clean-up." Both the Rampart street branch and the Jackson, Miss., branch reported a wonderful business and the store is very optimistic over the outlook for 1922. The "Little Consul" machine was one of the best sellers in the Mississippi territory. This was the first year that the Grunewald has handled the Victor line and it has proven a very big success.

The Dwyer Piano Co. had the biggest December it has ever had; that is, as a whole. A big improvement was noticed in cash sales, though the buyers were very conservative as a whole, and the higher-priced machines were not sold in the volume that the $100 and $125 machines were.

VICTROLAS FOR SECTION GANGS

Victrolas for the entertainment of railroad section gangs are in order. The manager of Harmony Hall, Iowa City, Ia., recently prevailed upon the Superintendent of Maintenance of Way of the local railroad to place a Victrola and a supply of records in the car of every section superintendent. The section cars are continually moving along the lines of the railroad and are frequently held on sidings in remote districts. It is believed that the Victrola music will serve to brighten many otherwise dark hours for the members of the section gangs, keep their morale at a high level and greatly increase their efficiency while at work.

SETTING THE FIGURES RIGHT

In the very interesting article under the caption of "Sales Formula of Advertising, Salesmanship and Hard Work Still Scores," written by D. G. Baird, which appeared on page 15 of the December World, there was one slight error which, by reason of its extravagance, may take from the value of this admirable story of business expansion. In the first column it states that "a young man just out of high school sold $83,000 worth of talking machines by direct canvassing." The figures should have been $8,300. As this typographical error detracts from the value of the article, we are particularly anxious that our readers should note this correction.

EMANUEL WOLFF PASSES AWAY

ROCHESTER, N. Y., January 2.—Emanuel Wolff, president of the Rochester Phonograph Co. and a pioneer operator of five- and ten-cent stores in this city, died recently at his home at 49 Dorchester road. Mr. Wolff was well known in local business circles, and had been in business here for many years. He is survived by a widow, a son and a daughter.

A Musical Merchandise Department Pays EXTRA Profits

A modest investment—$500.00 or even less—will start a Musical Merchandise Department in any Piano or Phonograph store.

And its profits are clear velvet!

For the new department takes little room (it uses wall space rather than floor space)—needs little technical knowledge—requires no additional selling force. The increase in overhead expense is negligible.

It will sell goods the year around—at a generous profit and with a rapid turn-over. There is no competition with your other lines. On the contrary it brings new customers into your store. And every one of them a prospective Phonograph or Piano buyer.

But why not talk this over with our representative the next time he's in your town? He can explain this interesting idea from a merchant's standpoint, and he can show you, in a common-sense, practical way, just how to start after these EXTRA Profits and get them! You won't be obligated in the least—you aren't promising a thing except that you will give him a little time. Drop us a line today and we'll arrange to have him call.

INDIANAPOLIS TRADE IN DISTINCTLY OPTIMISTIC MOOD

Volume of Holiday Trade Exceeded Expectations—Great Campaign of Stimulating Buying Carried On—Original Plans Employed—General Feeling Is That 1922 Will Reward Those Who Work

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., January 4.—Christmas business in the talking machine stores of this city was sufficient to give the dealers a brighter outlook on life than they have had in many months. Almost without exception they report the holiday trade as being equal to, if not better than, that of the 1920 Christmas season. Some of them say their increase last month over the same period of the preceding year was from 25 to 50 per cent. Record business fell off for some of the dealers, but in most of the stores it was well up with the machine business, while in several of the season's hits it was found impossible to fill the demand.

"Our business in Columbia records was limited only by our ability to get stock," W. G. Wilson, manager of Widener's Grafonola Shop, said. "We could have sold several hundred dollars more of some of the records if we could have got them from the factory. As for our machine business, it was good in both the Columbia and the Granby instruments. It was very noticeable that we sold a better grade of machines this year than we did during the holiday season last year."

Miss Gertrude Woirhaye, former cashier and bookkeeper for the Grafonola Shop, was married recently to Dr. W. F. Johnson, of this city, and is succeeded by Miss L. B. Scott, formerly with the Columbia company.

Among the visitors at Widener's during December was Harry Caplan, sales manager for the Granby Phonograph Corp. He reported business prospects in the talking machine trade as becoming gradually better. He said the success of the Granby in this part of the country is very gratifying.

Tries Out New Record-selling Plan

An altered scheme of introductory selling did much during the holidays to increase the business of the Victrola department of the L. S. Ayres & Co. department store, according to F. R. Follis, manager. Mr. Follis said his business for both November and December was exceptionally good, with the Christmas business running ahead of the previous holiday season.

One special record each day was featured by Mr. Follis in his introductory sales. The plan of selling the featured record was to wait until a customer had purchased the record or records for which he entered the store. Then the clerk would call attention to the featured record with the result that the playing of it generally resulted in a sale.

"The one-feature-a-day idea enabled us to keep track of the sales by each clerk and aided in maintaining rivalry among the clerks to see who could sell the largest number," Mr. Follis said. "We did not attempt to force any lemons on the public in that way, but what we featured were records of merit which were not moving rapidly simply because they were not known. They were such records as sell readily when heard."

Good Season for the Sonora

The Christmas business in Sonora phonographs was much better than in 1920, according to O. C. Maurer, of the Sonora department of the Kiefer-Stewart Drug Co., State distributor, and C. H. Becherer, of Charles Mayer & Co., Indianapolis, retailers. Both refer to the outlook as being particularly bright for Sonoras in this territory.

Some Large Sales of Kimball Phonographs

In many cities where special campaigns were conducted in the sale of Kimball phonographs the Christmas business was better than last year, according to E. H. Jarrard, manager of the phonograph department of the Capital Paper Co.

Miss Minnie Springer, manager of the Victrola department of the Taylor Carpet Co., reports the sale of a larger number of machines during the holidays than during the corresponding period of the previous year. She says, however, that the demand was not so great for the larger types.

An Effective Holiday Window

A unique and unusually effective window display of original design was used during the holidays by A. C. Hawkins, of the Indianapolis Talking Machine Co. The fact that Mr. Hawkins is a practical electrician made it possible for him to construct an appliance that resulted in the striking of music notes being represented by flashing electric lights.

The representation was on an enlarged copy of three bars of music taken from a popular Christmas carol. For the operation of the display Mr. Hawkins removed the felt from the turntable of a talking machine and put in its place a disk of fiber in which he had cut as many slots as there were notes in the three bars of music chosen for display. Above the turntable and resting on the fiber disk he placed a stationary brush which, with the revolving of the turntable, caused a metal contact and a resultant flashing of one of the lights in the music bars at each slot in the fiber disk. In this manner the notes on the two bars of music were made to flash in consecutive order just as they would be struck in playing the music.

Local Concern Reorganized

The Indiana Phonograph & Supply Co., which was organized here five years ago, has been reorganized as the Hoosier Mfg. & Supply Co. The control of the concern remains in the hands of J. C. Mather and J. R. Kuebler. The company now sells "Quality Phono Parts" instead of "Perfection Phono Parts," and is about to distribute a new catalog. Mr. Mather said that his efforts for several months have been directed to making the new catalog a text-book on phonograph education as well as a catalog of parts. Educational matter is used freely.

Gennett Record Sales Increase

"Our business in Gennett records has increased very much in the last three months," said T. H. Bracken, of the Starr Piano Co., in reference to the holiday business of the store. "The recent cut in the price of the records and the fact that we have pushed the sale of them harder than we ever did before are responsible for the larger sales."

Among the dealers most elated with the results of the holiday trade is W. O. Hopkins, of the Edison shop. Although not given to talk concerning his sales and prospects, Mr. Hopkins said that the closing weeks of the year proved beyond a doubt to his sales force that 1921 had rewarded fighters and that 1922 would also.

Caruso Calendar as "Door-opener"

Mr. Hawkins says that his Christmas business was most satisfactory largely as the result of work done by a special crew of house-to-house canvassers. The men used a small calendar with the photograph of Caruso as a "door-opener" and the general results were such, Mr. Hawkins says, as to transfer the bulk of his business from the floor to the field force. Mr. Hawkins is making successful use of many little sales ideas to promote the record sales, which he is convinced is the backbone of the phonograph business. He has now prominently posted in his store classified lists of educational records grouped for quick perusal.

Circle Talking Machine Activities

The Circle Talking Machine Shop is closing the third year of its existence with a record of steadily increasing business. "Individuality in policy and insistence on the importance of the service idea are responsible for the growth of our business," said H. E. Whitman, president and general manager of the concern. "From the very first we have adhered strictly to a few fundamental, basic ideas. We realized when we opened our doors for business that in the old days one of the worst features of many shops and stores asking for the patronage of musically inclined persons was the utter indifference displayed to the wants, requirements and tastes of the individual customer. Such a spirit cannot succeed in modern business and so our one big aim has been to give our customers the utmost in value and in service alike. Individual attention to customers is vital in modern merchandising."

Mr. Whitman says there was a noticeable demand among his customers during the holidays for the Udell console type of cabinet manufactured in Indianapolis for the portable Victrola. This was taken by him as an indication of an increasing interest in medium-priced console models, of which the lowest priced in the Victor line is $250.

Planning Edison Sales School

Satisfactory business among all the Edison dealers of Indiana is reported by H. G. Anderson, general sales manager of the Kipp Phonograph Co. "We are confident," he said, "in view of the accomplishments of the last few months of hard work that the new year will have its reward for every man who keeps on the job and fights for business. Tone-test recitals held throughout the territory have proved a wonderful boon to the Edison business and our dealers are now cashing in on them at a splendid rate."

The company expects to secure one of the ten salesmen's schools that are to be held this year by the Edison company in various cities of the country. Plans are being made for a five-day session and the dealers of the territory are displaying a keen interest in the proposed school.

Sells Carload of Grafonolas

A carload of Columbia Grafonolas was handled by the Hook Drug Co. for the Christmas trade. Large posters were placed on the trucks from which the machines were loaded calling attention to the fact that the company had purchased a carload. It was reported that the merchandising plan of $1 down and $1 a week for the lowest-priced machines, with slightly higher rates for the other machines, resulted in the shipment being practically all sold.

O. M. Kiess, who has been in charge of the Pathé Shop, has resumed his work on the road as general field supervisor for the Pathé Frères Phonograph Co. R. R. Ernsberger, who has been in the music business in Indianapolis for many years, is acting manager of the Pathé Shop. He reports that reduced prices on the Pathé machines resulted in a healthy increase in business for the holidays.

Pearson Piano Co. Buys Department

Arrangements have been made for the sale of the complete stock and equipment of the Victor talking machine department of the Steinhauser Jewelry Store at Shelbyville to the Pearson Piano Co. in that city. The Victor agency was established with the Steinhauser store several years ago and was held by them exclusively until, a few months ago, the agency was extended to the Pearson Piano Co. The Pearson store is managed by D. W. Williams and has one of the most complete Victor departments in the State. The Steinhauser store is going out of business.

Columbias in Public Schools

A Columbia Grafonola has been placed in the Ridgeview public school at Peru and another in the Liberty school near the same city. The instruments were purchased by the school trustee of Peru township. They are being used in connection with the physical culture and recreation work of the schools.

Baldwin Business Shows Increase

The Baldwin Piano Co. reports a phonograph business in Indianapolis that was much better than the business of the store during the 1920 holiday season despite a serious reduction of stock by fire in November. Credit for the increase of business is given largely to sale of Brunswick machines, the agency for which was taken on by the Baldwin company last Summer. A one-cent sale of medallion records was featured by C. P. Herdman, manager of the talking machine department, during Christmas week. One record was sold for 85 cents, the regular price, while two records were sold for 86 cents.

Among the concerts to be given in this city during the Winter are several of especial interest to Victor dealers. They will be by the Flonzaley Quartet, which makes its thirteenth annual appearance in the city; Fritz Kreisler, Rachmaninoff, Heifetz, Galli-Curci and Schumann-Heink. Victor dealers throughout the State have learned to cash in on the many concerts by Victor artists who are heard in the capital city of the State.

E. F. Routh, Victor dealer at Salem, is making Victrola concerts in the home very popular. His plan of promoting the idea is to send a letter to a select few of his prospective customers informing them that he will furnish the Victrola and records if they in turn will invite some of their friends to enjoy a concert by the world's greatest musicians.

SALES TAX BILL OFFERED IN HOUSE

Measure Introduced by Representative Volk Would Place Heavy Burden Upon Business for the Purpose of Providing for Soldier Bonus

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 5.—A bill providing for a sales tax similar to that in operation in Canada has been introduced in the House by Representative Lester D. Volk, of New York, as a means of raising revenue with which to defray the expenses of a soldiers' bonus. Mr. Volk was chairman of the delegation of forty-seven Congressmen which recently made a tour of Canada, studying the law of that country.

The provisions dealing with the bonus are substantially the same as in the Fordney bill which passed the House and was amended in the Senate. The sales tax incorporated therein provides a rate of 1½ per cent on sales and deliveries by manufacturers or producers and wholesalers or jobbers; 2½ per cent of the duty-paid value of importations by manufacturers, wholesalers and jobbers; 3 per cent on sales and deliveries by manufacturers to retailers or consumers and 4 per cent tax on duty-paid value of importations by retailers or consumers.

The tax is made payable by the purchaser to the wholesaler, producer or manufacturer at the time of sales and by the latter to the Government within thirty days after the last day of the month for which the tax is to be paid. Food-stuffs and products of mines and forests would be exempted from the taxes. A tax of ½ per cent on gross receipts of all land and water transportation companies and public utilities (gas, telephone, telegraph and electric light) is also contemplated.

Mr. Volk estimates the taxes will produce $1,000,000,000 in revenue, this amount to increase 50 per cent when business becomes normal.

TALKING MACHINE TRADE SHOWS BIG GAIN IN CLEVELAND

Eclipses All Other Trades as Compared With Previous Year—New Okeh Record Distributors—Wholesalers Oversold—Columbia Carload Sales Drive—New Eclipse Traveler—Granby Activity

CLEVELAND, O., January 8.—The turn of the year brings the talking machine industry of this section into what many believe to be the most enviable position of any industry—showing a gain during 1921 over the business of 1920. Though total figures have not yet been compiled, jobbers assert that the year's business will exceed the highest expectations, and that they surpass the greatest hopes of a few months ago. Since jobbers have had the demands made upon them by dealers, it is reasonable to suppose that retailers have actually sold the machines and records. In a word, the talking machine trade eclipses any other trade in this section, for it is the only one that does not report a loss from 1920 figures. This is an achievement worthy of special emphasis.

Many Orders to Be Filled

Significantly, most lines of talking machines show the same proportionate gain. Shortages, predicted months before the Christmas season began by those who had witnessed similar conditions in former years, were experienced by most jobbers. As a whole, there are still hundreds of machine orders to be filled by the wholesale trade.

Victor Wholesalers Oversold

Victor business was the biggest in the history of the Cleveland Talking Machine Co., according to Howard J. Shartle, general manager, during December. Both November and December business was expected to pass the same period of a year before, and the total for the year was expected to make a similar showing. The Eclipse Musical Co., Victor wholesaler, likewise was oversold, according to Edward B. Lyons, general manager, and deliveries on the business booked will continue through January.

The Activity in the Other Zones

Certain models of the Cheney phonograph were taken in such number by dealers that a decided shortage was experienced before the Christmas season was over, according to George R. Madson, president of the Cheney Phonograph Sales Co. Granby demand exceeded all plans for prompt delivery, according to C. H. Kennedy, the Kennedy-Schultz Co., distributor. Columbia carload sales stimulated business for many dealers in the northern Ohio territory, according to S. S. Larmon, branch manager, and raised the total business done to what, final figures are expected to show, is equal to last year's business. There was practically nothing left for dealers to choose from during the last days of the campaign in Edison instruments, in the opinion of phonograph company officials.

New Okeh Record Distributors

Plans for the new year already are being shaped by leaders in the trade here, the first to be announced being the taking over of the Okeh record distribution by the Record Sales Co. and the opening of a branch office in Pittsburgh by that firm. The Okeh records will be added to the company's present Odeon and Fonotopia lines. With the completion of present plans the company will cover all of Ohio and the greater part of Pennsylvania. The Record Sales Co. has the same personnel as the Cheney Phonograph Sales Co. George R. Madson is president and T. R. Buel, secretary-treasurer. M. O. Giles, special representative of the General Phonograph Corp., was in town this week co-operating in planning the initial campaign. The Okeh records have been distributed by the Kennedy-Schultz Co., which firm will continue as the wholesale representative of the Granby phonograph in this district.

Columbia Carload Sales a Success

The carload sales planned by Columbia branch officials here have been more successful than the most optimistic dealer anticipated. In addition to those named previously, the Standard Music Co., Akron; Robert L. Seeds, Columbus, and Charles L. Yockey, Newark, entered into these events. In nearly all instances the carloads were disposed of long before the Christmas period ended. Truck loads of the machines, on parade, featured all these events. Special salesmen from the Cleveland branch, including Dan Des Foldes, W. H. Inderrieden, William Underwood and J. G. Mejord, aided the dealers in putting the sales across.

Columbia "Family" Celebrates

Christmas was celebrated by the Columbia branch "family" in the salesrooms of the firm. George Krauslick's band played for the dancing. Mr. Krauslick is manager of the record department. E. F. Hughes, Miss Florence Turner, Miss Gwen Tremble and others entertained. Max Levy, Columbia dealer, distributed cigars, and Santa Claus, by proxy, gave presents to everyone, each gift being in a way symbolic of the eccentricities of the one receiving them.

New Eclipse Co. Traveler

The staff of the Eclipse Musical Co. has been augmented by the appointment as traveling representative of Don B. Lightner, formerly of the J. E. Lightner Co., Painesville. Mr. Lightner has been in the retail end of the business for five years, and is well known throughout the district.

Among dealers to broaden their scope for the new year is the Kloefer Music Shoppe, Bucyrus, which adds the Brunswick line. The firm is by no means new to the talking machine trade here, however, having been in the Victor line for several years. The firm plans to extend its operations into the country about Bucyrus.

Howard J. Shartle, Jr., Arrives

Cigars distributed by Howard J. Shartle, general manager of the Cleveland Talking Machine Co., about Christmastime had a double significance. On December 20 a new member to the talking machine fraternity was added in the person of Howard J., Jr. Howard, Sr., now wears his well-known smile all the time.

The Cleveland Talking Machine Co. gave Christmas presents to some 200 friends, among them being bound volumes of all the Victor records for 1921.

John Steel a Welcome Visitor

A gain in popularity for the theatre, the talking machine, the artist and music was acquired during the personal appearance here of John Steel at the Hippodrome Theatre. Excellent cooperation was given to this end by Keith officials and the Cleveland Talking Machine Co. for the trade. Mr. Steel appeared at the Euclid Music Co., the L. Meier & Sons' and the Buescher Co.'s stores and autographed records. Hundreds of persons met him at each establishment. Publicity was prepared by the Keith management to apprise the public of his appearance at these stores. Mr. Steel sang songs, the records of which may have required additional boosting such as this, in the opinion of dealers. He gave a singing lesson to some 500 aspirants for concert or stage honors. And he was one of those who appeared at the request of City Architect J. H. MacDowell to assist in testing the acoustics of the new public hall, critics having declared said acoustics to be inefficient.

An Attractive Window Display

How a talking machine can be used to convey the spirit of Christmas in window display was demonstrated in the picture created by Mrs. M. M. Smith, talking machine department of the Harmony Music Shoppe. The machine was converted into a motor sleigh, with records for wheels, and Santa Claus driving it. The whole was surrounded with snow. The window served to stimulate holiday demand at the tail end of the buying period, according to Walter S. Raeder, member of the firm.

Granby Signs on Door Knobs

Another new retail establishment makes its bow at the turn of the year, the Frey-Fisher Co., in the East End, introducing the Granby phonograph in that section. This is one of the largest departments for a neighborhood store in this district, in the opinion of H. C. Schultz, of the Kennedy-Schultz Co., distributor. The opening was heralded with the placing, in one night, of 10,000 door-knob hangers on front doors in the vicinity. Members of the Kennedy-Schultz organization aided in the opening.

Results of the campaign being conducted by the Phonograph Co. with Edison dealers soon will be announced, according to E. S. Hirschberger, advertising manager. This is a series of sales contests, in progress since August. The object is to see which dealer and salesman dispose of the most merchandise in this period, and also who does the most business in dollars and cents. Prizes include an expensive watch and free trips to the Edison school of salesmanship. The contest has been so arranged that each contestant will have a fairly even break in attaining the higher honors.

Plans of the Euclid Music Co. include the direct-by-mail system of ascertaining the ownership or non-ownership of Victrolas. About 2,500 families will be reached by this medium, offering a prospect list extraordinary for the new year drive.

Shortage of Brunswick Machines

The shortage in instruments was thoroughly demonstrated at Brunswick headquarters here. Orders for hundreds of machines that could not be delivered in time for the holidays were on hand, according to V. K. Henry, phonograph division manager in this district, but these are now being filled since receipts are heavier. A. J. Kendrick, general sales manager, was in town at the beginning of the month to aid in planning the campaign for the new year in this territory.

NEW RECORD TESTING SYSTEM

Columbus, Ohio, Store Installs New System That Eliminates Interruption

COLUMBUS, O., January 3.—An innovation in record selling has been introduced in the talking machine department of Spence's Music Store here, and it is evidently meeting with the complete approval of the company's customers. The record customer obtains the record desired and then places it on the turntable of a talking machine in a box-like compartment. Seating himself on a stool in front of the compartment, the customer inserts the receivers in his ears and is thus able to listen to the music of the record without annoyance from outside noises.

BRUNSWICK SHOP CHANGES HANDS

LAGRANGE, ILL., January 5.—The Forest Park Brunswick Shop, of this village, has been purchased by M. F. Hill, who has been in business locally for twenty-eight years. A complete line of Brunswick machines and records is handled, and in addition a well-stocked sheet music department has been installed.

The Trade in PHILADELPHIA and LOCALITY

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 4.—The talking machine business in Philadelphia finally turned out to be quite satisfactory, very much to the surprise of the jobbers and dealers who, for some reason or other, were experiencing a rather lethargic business through the late Fall and were rather anticipating a bad holiday trade. It all seemed to come in December in such a volume as to be equal to the business done last year, and with the firms in general the business of 1921 came very close to being equal to that done in 1920, which was the banner year.

Machines came through in good shape and there seems to have been plenty to go around. In the Victor Co.'s product, the only machine on which they were short in delivery, owing to the big demand for this style, was in the Style 100, in mahogany. But very few sales were lost on this account, for most of the dealers were able to supply some other machine to take its place.

Little of importance transpired here during the month and the trade enters the New Year in very good shape. The death of George D. Ornstein, in December, took away from the Philadelphia jobbers one of the few of its members, and so far as is known now the business will be continued at its present location, 1025 Arch street, by Mr. Ornstein's widow, through her attorney here, Mrs. Ornstein's residence being in New York.

New Distributor to Be Announced

The Philadelphia Show Case Co., which for some years has figured in the talking machine business here, first as representative of the Sonora and L'Artiste machines, and later as the local Vocalion distributor, left the talking machine field with the first of the new year, and a new distributor is about to replace this firm, though his name has not been announced by the Vocalion Co.

Emerson Business Conducted From New York

During the month Harry Fox, who for several years has been the Emerson distributor here, has relinquished that representation and the Emerson wholesaling is now being conducted from New York. Mr. Fox continues at 810 Arch street, closing up the Emerson machines and records on hand, and expects shortly to make the announcement of a new representation. Mr. Fox has a fine location and a well-appointed establishment and has been one of the brightest, most active and progressive of the young Philadelphia talking machine men.

Getting Matters Straightened Out

There were two Pathé managers here during the month, Mr. Johnson first, who has been replaced by O. M. Kiess, from the New York headquarters, who has come here to put new life and energy into the business and hopes very soon to get matters straightened out in a way satisfactory to the manufacturers and the handlers of this popular machine.

A. J. Heath Sells Controlling Interest

The firm of A. J. Heath has been dissolved, but will be continued under the old firm name of A. J. Heath & Co., by C. A. Malliet, the former vice-president of the company. Mr. Heath has sold his controlling interest in the business he established two years ago. The firm has been the leading distributor here of the Okeh records.

Through the efforts of Mr. Heath the Okeh records are now well established in this territory and Mr. Heath says the present organization, under Mr. Malliet, will be able to carry on the work, while he desires to become identified with a business which will occupy more of his time and effort. The future plans of Mr. Heath will be announced soon. The retirement will not officially take place until January 15. Mr. Heath has been the president and treasurer not only of the Philadelphia, but also of the Baltimore firm operating under his name.

Louis Buehn Discusses Outlook

Louis Buehn reports that his firm enjoyed a most satisfactory holiday business and they had plenty of goods, with the exception of the Victor 100. He believes that business is going to be somewhat quiet during the first few months of the new year. Although not inclined to predict thereafter, he feels that business next year will equal if not exceed the present one.

Columbia Force at Year-end Dinner

The Columbia Co. has had a very good year here and its carload scheme has been the means of getting rid of a big surplus of instruments it had on hand. The heads of departments, as well as the sales force of Columbia, had a Christmas dinner in Philadelphia on Saturday, December 24, starting at one o'clock at the Hotel Adelphia. Those who were present state it was a very great success and that, aside from a number of interesting speeches, J. D. Westervelt initiated those present into the Tank Club as members.

Mr. Lorenzo, of the Dealers' Service department of the Columbia Co., accompanied by C. E. Sheppard, spent a few days during the two holidays visiting dealers at Scranton, Wilkes-Barre, Hazleton and Stroudsburg. At the same period John J. Doherty, the branch credit man, spent several days in Harrisburg, Pa. Miss Margaret Martin, the Columbia's educational representative, spent the holiday week in Wilmington, where she conducted a teachers' meeting instructing the teachers there how to use the Columbia machine in the classroom.

Blake & Burkart Branching Out

Blake & Burkart, the Edison and Vocalion handlers here, at Eleventh and Walnut streets, contemplate moving in a short time, although their lease is not out until July 1. They will have two stores instead of one in the near future. They have already rented a store at 20 South Tenth street, close to the shopping district, which they will open about the first of February under Mr. Elton, who has long been connected with the Blake & Burkart firm. The firm is also negotiating for a main store near Seventeenth and Chestnut streets, in the very heart of the majority of their customers, a fashionable neighborhood where most of the high-class Edison trade lives.

The Blake & Burkart firm report that they enjoyed a very good business in December and are quite well satisfied with the Vocalion business they have been doing. Since Christmas they have had a wonderful record business, not alone on Edison records, but also on the high-class Vocalion records. They will continue, in the new year, the exclusive handling of the Edison and Vocalion, both machines and records.

Penn Co. Reports Business Advance

The Penn Phonograph Co. enjoyed an unusually good year, although goods came in so late that the sales and office forces were compelled to work evenings the last few days in order to get out purchases. The company's record business was in advance of 1920 and it was busy all last week getting out the January records, which arrived several days late. The firm made liberal money distributions among its sales and office force, and sent out handsome wallets to the trade. Miss Bessie Markley, of the Penn clerical force, spent the Christmas holidays at her former home in Zeiglersville, Pa.

Weymann Closed Great Holiday Business

H. A. Weymann & Son, distributors and manufacturers, report that their business in December was remarkable. "In all our departments," said Mr. Weymann, "we went far beyond our expectations. Of course the bulk of the business was done the week before Christmas. All the dealers in our territory report a great shortage of Victrolas, but we were able to complete the orders we had on file, on the last day's shipment, with the exception of Style 100, mahogany. This style failed to reach us, according to schedule, on the 24th. However, most of our dealers managed to hold their sales by substituting types of styles No. 80 and 90. The demand for Victor records was enormous. Likewise in the musical instrument department the demand for the Weymann-Keystone State's string instruments, during the week preceding Christmas, according to reports from all of our dealers, far exceeded any previous December week."

George D. Shewell, Jr., in Harness

George Dunbar Shewell, Jr., a son of G. D. Shewell, the head of the Cheney distribution here, has joined his father's force as city representative and has already made good—a veritable chip of the old block. He is a most affable young man and is well liked by the Cheney customers.

He has entered the business with the enthusiasm of youth, having but recently come out of school.

Handicapped Through Shortage of Stock

Manager Nelson, of the Brunswick here, was handicapped in December on account of the shortness of stock, although many carloads of machines reached this city in the month. They have not been able to appoint any new agencies recently, but hope to do so shortly after the first of the year. Mr. Nelson states that the firm's business was much better than last year, and he believes, with the company's plans for a greater production, that their business here will be helped materially in the new year. The local firm received some of the new Brunswick consoles early in the month and they were quickly taken up and have already become deservedly popular with the local purchasers.

Plans Active Campaign in New Year

O. M. Kiess, shortly after coming here to take charge of the Pathé's local distribution, secured the services of H. S. Pope, who had been with the Pathé for several years, but resigned shortly after Walter L. Eckhardt relinquished the representation here. Mr. Pope is a man of wide experience in the business and is looking for a bright future for the Pathé in this market. He is planning an organization and a campaign here which he feels sure is going to spell success.

Rainbow Records With Heath & Co.

A. J. Heath & Co. have recently added to their line the handling of the Rainbow records, gotten out by the Rodeheaver Record Co., of New York and Winona Lake, Ind. These records consist of gospel songs, messages and sacred music by prominent singers, ministers and evangelists. They have a long list of records of considerable variety.

Joins Columbia Forces

James Robinson was added to the Columbia's sales force during the month to cover southern New Jersey, Delaware and a part of Pennsylvania.

Union Co.'s Attractive Window

The Columbia Co.'s office here recently received a picture from the Union Music Co., Columbia dealer in Harrisburg, of its Christmas window, which was unique and which attracted a great deal of attention. The Columbia firm has been selling Grafonolas by the carload and has been advertising that fact, so the Union Music Co. placed an electric track and cars in its window and attached to the locomotive a

Geo. D. Ornstein's Funeral Largely Attended

The funeral of George D. Ornstein, the Victor jobber here, which took place early in the month, attracted a large number of Victor dealers from all over the country, and was attended by practically all the local dealers.

The People's Talking Machine Co., of this city, is giving away a very fine Grand Opera Book as a present to all its customers.

Some Recent Trade Visitors

Among recent trade visitors here were: Robert Porter, field sales manager of the Columbia Co.; J. A. Wuchter, of Allentown; F. L. Lowry, Berwick, Pa.; Mr. Youngjohns, Norristown, Pa.; Calver Anderson, Wilmington, Del.; Mr. Monroe, of the Brunswick Shop, Williamsport, Pa.; Mr. Zercher, of the Regal Co., Harrisburg, Pa., and Mr. McAllister, of Watt & Shand, Lancaster, Pa.

Visitors to Weymann's included: M. F. Malarkey, Pottsville; Paul Britz, of Reading; Elmer Fouratt, a new Weymann account in Reading; Nathan Worth, Riverside, and R. M. Watts, who recently bought out the J. J. Ryan store at Burlington, N. J.

Charles F. Tracey, of the Aeolian Co., is to be noted as among the recent Aeolian Co. visitors.

New Columbia Agent in Bryn Mawr

The Vassello Music Shop, an exclusive Columbia shop, has been started at Bryn Mawr. It is named for the proprietor, Mr. Vassello. The building, in one of the most desirable locations in the suburban town, is fitted in such a way as to make a striking commercial establishment of the place.

WANAMAKER LOOKS FOR "SETTLING DOWN" YEAR

The Merchant Prince of New York and Philadelphia Believes the Country Will Get Nearer Even Keel Despite Many Vexing Problems

John Wanamaker, commenting early this month on the business outlook for the coming year, pointed out that high wages, costs, rents and taxes still exist and that these will have to be adjusted before business can get back to an even keel. He predicts that 1922 will be a year of settling down and getting near to a normal balance. His statement reads:

"Every good American must look into the new year hopefully. There are still the conditions of high wages, high costs, high rents and high taxes to be dealt with. There will have to be an adjustment of these things before business can get on an even keel.

"Every business man wishes, of course, that it could all be settled at once by some single sweeping action—adjusting wages, adjusting costs, adjusting prices, adjusting rents, adjusting taxes, all coming down together.

"But let us not be discouraged. The nation is full of life and health. It has the right spirit and is not panicky-minded. It has great opportunities, greater than the opportunities of any other nation in the world.

"We made progress, in 1921. We are better off than we were in 1920.

"The year 1922 will continue to be a year of settling down and getting nearer to an even keel."

OPTIMISM IS DOMINANT FEATURE OF PITTSBURGH TRADE

Dealers Manifest Determination to Go After Business—Leading Trade Members Review Present and Future Prospects—Standard Co.'s New Home Near Completion—News of the Month

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 5.—Optimism is the dominant feature in the talking machine fraternity in this city and vicinity since the New Year. While the past twelve months were not as satisfactory from a business standpoint as had been anticipated, the general sentiment of the talking machine dealers here is that this year much better things are in store for the trade as a whole.

At any rate, there is a more pronounced determination on the part of various dealers to go after business than ever before. This has been demonstrated by the business that was handled the week or ten days prior to Christmas. By use of the newspapers as an advertising medium and circularizing of prospects a number of talking machine dealers were enabled to turn what looked like a poor holiday season into a very remunerative one.

Slackness in Steel Trade Hurts Business

Many dealers here are extremely optimistic as far as the business outlook for the next six or eight months is concerned. The prosperity of the talking machine trade in this section is based on the measure of activity that prevails in the iron, steel, coal and coke industries. At present the operations in these respective lines of trade are rather hesitant. While orders are being booked by the large steel companies they are not of sufficient volume to keep the mills operating at anything like normal capacity. The expectation of the mill managers is that with the advent of the Spring months enough orders will have been booked to justify a real resumption of the mills. This will, in turn, stimulate business of all kinds here.

Evans Anticipates Good Victor Trade

Thomas T. Evans, manager of the wholesale Victrola department of the C. C. Mellor Co., is of the opinion that there will be a very satisfactory volume of Victor business handled the next three or four months. He is strongly of the opinion that the era of good business is in sight and that it will be the progressive and enterprising dealer who will obtain a generous share of business during the next twelve months.

George H. Rewbridge, manager of the wholesale Victor department of the W. F. Frederick

Piano Co., also is anticipating a brisk season ahead for the Victor line.

Good Business for Columbia Dealers

S. H. Nichols, manager of the Pittsburgh offices of the Columbia Co., said: "We are absolute believers here in the permanence and continued prosperity for the Columbia line in this territory. We believe that there will be a revival of business conditions soon, not rushing or swift, but moderate and steady, that will be lasting and justify the retail talking machine merchant in making plans for increasing his business capacity. The mills of the Pittsburgh district are an infallible indicator of general business conditions here and when they are running full all other lines of trade prosper." Mr. Nichols stated that he was convinced that the new year would be a prosperous one for the Columbia dealers.

Scanlan Forecasts Brunswick Outlook

J. A. Scanlan, manager of the sales department of the Pittsburgh offices of the phonograph division of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., in a forecast of the year said: "We are prepared to give the Brunswick dealers the best of service and to improve it, if possible. The outlook for business is good and we believe that the Brunswick phonographs and Brunswick records will attain more popularity during the coming year than ever before. The standing of the Brunswick line in this territory is assured and our dealers are highly satisfied with the manner in which the public has taken to the Brunswick phonograph, as well as at the excellent co-operation that was accorded them by the company." Mr. Scanlan stated that all indications pointed to an increase not only of sales, but also of Brunswick dealers the coming year, as many applications had been made by interested persons who wished to handle the Brunswick line.

H. J. Brennan Comments on Business

H. J. Brennan, manager of the Pittsburgh Talking Machine Co., Pathé distributor, said: "The outlook for business is good and there is not the slightest use for anyone to be disturbed or pessimistic over the business field. The talking machine trade in this city and adjacent territory has enjoyed a splendid business in the past and I am more than convinced that this Spring will see a splendid revival of business. With a resumption of the industries that have made Pittsburgh known the world over there must be a corresponding upward trend in all other lines, the talking machine trade included.

Gately & Fitzgerald Feature Pathé

Major "Jack" Barnett, the midget demonstrator of the Pathé, was for several days at Altoona, Pa., prior to the holiday, where the firm of Gately & Fitzgerald had a showing of the Pathé and Actuelle lines. One of the features was the free bestowal of a Pathé machine to Mrs. Grace Harkness, of Altoona. As each woman visitor entered the talking machine shop her name was registered and when the display period was over all of the names were placed in a box and one was drawn from the mass, which had been thoroughly shaken up.

P. S. Mechling Joins Dawson Bros.

Paul S. Mechling has been appointed sales manager of the Dawson Bros. Piano Co., dealers in Starr phonographs and Gennett records.

Bible Classes Give Victor Concert

The Men's Bible Class and the Women's Bible Class connected with the Sunday School of the Fifth Street Methodist Episcopal Church at Harrisburg, Pa., gave a Christmas entertainment to the inmates of the Dauphin

County Home, in which two Victrolas featured. When the entertainment closed one of the Victrolas was presented to the men's tubercular ward and the other to the women's ward, together with a number of Victor records.

Talking Machines for Home Inmates

The Grand Jury of Cumberland County, at Carlisle, Pa., in a recommendation to the court, made the observation that it would prove advisable for the county commissioners to purchase several talking machines and records for the use of the inmates of the Cumberland County Home. At Pottsville, Pa., the Schuylkill County Grand Jury made a like recommendation some time ago. Public-spirited men and women at Reading, Pa., some months ago, presented two Victrolas to the Berks County Home, with a large assortment of records.

W. C. Dierks Receives Present

W. C. Dierks, treasurer of the C. C. Mellor Co., was presented with a handsome desk set for a Christmas gift. The arrangements were made by Miss Hyams.

Talking Machine for Restaurant

The Fulton Cafeteria, one of the large downtown restaurants, located in the Fulton Building, has installed a talking machine in the main dining room.

Passing of Joseph E. Hardwick

Joseph E. Hardwick, a well-known music dealer, died at his home in Uniontown, Pa., on December 26, aged forty-six years. He had been operated on at the Uniontown Hospital for the removal of the small toe on his right foot and was taken home on Christmas Day, apparently on the road to health. Death ensued the following morning. His widow and five children survive.

Mr. Hardwick, who was a veteran music merchant, handled the Aeolian-Vocalion and Vocalion records, in addition to a line of pianos.

Standard Co.'s New Home

The Standard Talking Machine Co., Victor distributor, will soon open its new home on Penn avenue, which is now receiving the finishing touches at the hands of the painters and decorators, after having been remodeled. When ready for the formal opening the new building will be one of the finest in the city. Ample facilities will be employed for giving up-to-the-minute service to Victor dealers. On the second floor will be installed a large room for the use of Victor dealers for holding meetings, etc. The offices of J. C. Roush, president of the company, will also be on the second floor. The offices of French Nestor and Wallace Russell will be on the first floor. The lobby at the entrance will be richly decorated and will form a most fitting entry to the store. A complete printing plant will be installed on the first floor. Ample facilities for railroad service are secured from a siding that is approached from the second floor and where two cars can be unloaded simultaneously.

Bright Outlook for Sonora

H. Milton Miller, manager of the Sonora Phonograph Co.'s Pittsburgh offices, is viewing the New Year with complacency, stating that the excellent record established by the Sonora in the past justifies the expectancy that the public will continue to buy freely of the Sonora line. Mr. Miller is an advocate of the period models and believes that the Sonora dealer who makes a specialty of placing Sonora period models in the homes of his patrons, will score heavily in sales records.

Clark Co. Secures Vocalion Dealers

The Clark Musical Sales Co., Aeolian-Vocalion distributor, is preparing for a brisk season. A number of new dealers have been listed during the past few weeks and the management here is confident of securing a good share of business in 1922.

Victrola School Contest

The prize-winners in the Victrola school contest, held by the educational department of the Johnson Music Co., in which a number of essays were submitted, have been announced. The title of the essays submitted was "Why Should There Be a Victrola in Every School and Home?" The judges were: Mrs. T. C. Donovan, president of the Tuesday Musical Club; Ralph Lewando and Carl Bernthaler, of the good music committee of the Musicians' Club of Pittsburgh.

The first prize of $20, in the sixteen to twenty-one-year-old group, was awarded to Curt L. Blumer, of Millvale, aged nineteen, who attends the Pittsburgh Academy night school.

The $10 cash prize was given to Miss Katherine E. Dunning, of Aspinwall, aged fifteen, of the Aspinwall High School. She was entered in the eleven to fifteen-year-old group.

In the up to ten-year-old group the $5 cash prizes went to Katherine Swanson, of Homestead, aged eight years, who attends the Fourth Ward School, and to John Regis Fisher, aged nine, of Ingram, who is a student in St. Philip's Parochial School, Crafton, Pa. In the latter group the two prizes were awarded because the judges couldn't decide which was the better.

Good Edison Trade in View, Says Buehn

A. A. Buehn, treasurer of the Buehn Phonograph Co., Edison distributor, stated that all indications pointed to a very satisfactory season ahead for the Edison line.

TRADE PROSPECTS IN SOUTH AFRICA

American Consul General at Cape Town Furnishes Interesting Report on Condition and Outlook of Talking Machine Trade

Alfred A. Winslow, American Consul General at Cape Town, South Africa, in a special report to The Talking Machine World regarding the trade in talking machines in his district, states that during the year 1920 the total imports of phonographs and gramophones into South Africa were valued at $367,000. Of this amount the United Kingdom was credited with $243,000, and the United States with $67,000. The bulk of the imports from the United Kingdom consisted of American phonographs and gramophones manufactured in England.

The customs duty on phonographs and gramophones imported into South Africa was 25 per cent ad valorem. A rebate of 3 per cent is granted on the manufactures of the United Kingdom and reciprocating British colonies. Phonograph records are subject to the customs duty with a light rebate on the manufactures of the United Kingdom and reciprocating British colonies.

The higher grades of phonographs and gramophones are becoming very popular in South Africa, although the cheaper grades, particularly from Germany, have been finding a ready sale in this country.

The following list of names of firms importing phonographs and gramophones into South Africa has been furnished by the American Consul General, Cape Town, South Africa. American consular officers in any foreign city will furnish such names directly to any American firm or individual addressing them:

C. Bothner, P. O. Box 1624; Darter & Sons, P. O. Box 174; Forrests & Co., G. R. P. O. Box 88; W. Duncan Gray, P. O. Box 1544; Perry & Co., 104 Adderley street; Petrie & Son, 4 Barrack street; H. Polliack & Son, P. O. Box 227; G. W. Price & Son, P. O. Box 278, and R. Muller, P. O. Box 133.

William Brand, who for a number of years has been connected with several large organizations in the talking machine industry in the capacity of sales manager, some time ago opened offices at 27 East Twenty-second street, New York City, where he has been successfully conducting a distributing business. Mr. Brand now announces that he has secured the exclusive agency for the Carl Lindstrom Co., of Germany, manufacturer of single spring motors and mica diaphragms. These motors are of several designs, thus placing a single-spring motor in the manufacturers' hands that can be used in several types of talking machines.

John A. Sieber Appointed Advertising Manager of General Phonograph Corp.—Well Known in Publicity and Dealer Service Fields

John A. Sieber, who has been associated with the service and publicity divisions of the talking machine industry for many years, has been appointed advertising manager of the General Phonograph Corp., New York. E. L. Sampter, who was formerly advertising manager of the company, is now doing special work as an assistant to W. G. Pilgrim, treasurer and assistant general manager of the company.

Okeh dealers will be glad to learn of Mr. Sieber's appointment to the important post of advertising manager, as he brings with him an intimate knowledge of the dealers' sales and publicity problems. For several years he was associated with the dealer service department of the Columbia Graphophone Co., and more recently was head of the Okeh dealer service department. He is planning to give Okeh jobbers and dealers maximum service and co-operation and several new features in publicity work will be introduced shortly.

WILLIAMS REVIEWS HOLIDAY TRADE

Head of G. T. Williams, Inc., Believes New Year Will Bring Increased Victor Trade

G. T. Williams, head of G. T. Williams, Inc., Victor distributor, of Brooklyn, N. Y., in commenting upon the holiday business, recently said: "Most of the Brooklyn dealers and many others of the metropolitan district anticipated substantial demands during the holiday season and stocked goods accordingly. This, however, was not true in all cases, and there were many last-minute efforts to supply consumer demands. Early January business has shown up well.

"During the coming months business in many other lines will show a gradual improvement, with a natural further call for Victor products. Therefore the retailers' requirements should be planned in advance to meet each new situation."

Van Veen Equipment Service

Complete in Every Detail

It is well known in the talking machine and musical merchandising trade that Van Veen service includes full and complete equipment. All incidental appointments, such as general alterations, lighting and ventilating fixtures, floor coverings and the accessories required in connection with Van Veen hearing rooms and store equipment, are supplied by us and designed to meet the special needs of each individual installation.

We feel that the trade should know how complete an equipment service we render; how painstaking all our efforts are to make every detail of your musical sales room perfect. Quality and fitness come first, prices are no higher than catch penny jobbing products sold without consideration of their suitability. This complete service is not conducted for profit, but is part of the work we feel our customers are entitled to.

A few notable examples of this feature of our business are installations of complete musical merchandising plants for the Columbia Graphophone Co., N. Y. City and Branches throughout U. S.

Hardman, Peck & Co., Brooklyn.
Bloomingdale Bros., Third avenue, Fifty-ninth street, N. Y. City.
Frederick Loeser & Co., Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Jerome H. Remick & Co., 240 State street, Chicago, Ill.
Griswold, Richmond & Glock Co., Meriden, Conn.
Landau's Music House, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

We have quoted above the users of some of our large complete installations. The smallest dealer is assured of the same careful attention and the same low prices, because it is only by this policy of fair dealing that Van Veen & Company have built up the large business they now enjoy.

Van Veen hearing rooms have established a new standard of efficiency. The old joke about blowing smoke through the cracks has been applied solely to the product of others since Van Veen equipment has been available.

Van Veen patented construction positively eliminates open joints by reason of every section being made in one piece. Van Veen double construction is air-chambered throughout, making the rooms more sound-proof than any others on the market today.

Van Veen record racks are all wood. We are replacing many of the racks made by others, of partly cardboard construction, now in use by dealers.

To sum up, we have been directly instrumental in bettering musical merchandise equipment and at the same time have established a standard of low prices which makes us fearless of competition and makes it possible for the dealer in moderate circumstances to have first-class equipment. We give direct and intimate service to our customers, handling our trade directly through trained and efficient traveling representatives, eliminating the annoying red tape of buying through branch agencies, thus saving to the dealer the additional jobber's profit which must either be added to the price or taken out of the quality.

Many of our customers have been saved the cost of expensive blunders; making changes and alterations to their plans by the advice of our traveling representatives.

IMPROVING CONDITIONS HELP BUSINESS IN ST. LOUIS

A Year of Unevenness Went Out in a Blaze of Glory—Better Feeling Regarding the Outlook for 1922—A Time to Resolve to Do More and Better Business—News Review Shows Great Activity

ST. LOUIS, Mo., January 3.—First to last, 1921 was a year of ups and downs in the talking machine business, and with a tendency toward dragginess during the greater part of it, but December business, which was more than brisk, went a good way toward making amends for the shortcomings that had gone before. The talking machines, during the year were in pretty much the same situation as befell the pianos the year before. That is, they discontinued selling themselves and the job of selling them became increasingly difficult. All of the distributors and dealers did a fair business, but they had to work for it. It was largely a console year, with the demand for period models growing as the year passed, and being strongest in the pre-Christmas buying. Stocks of retailers in St. Louis and throughout the St. Louis trade territory are understood to be low. In not a few instances they got so low before Christmas that hasty replenishment was necessary. General conditions throughout the southwest, which were not the best during the greater part of the year, are improving and fairly liberal buying by retailers is expected in the early months of the new year.

For the most part merchandising holds to the necessity basis which has obtained since the reaction in general business commenced in the Fall of 1920.

Brunswick Salesmen Meet

An end-of-the-year meeting of Brunswick salesmen was held on December 30 and 31 at the offices of the Brunswick Co. here, under the direction of Manager Robert W. Jackson and Assistant Manager Bennett. Recognition of the good work during the past year was accorded and plans for the coming year outlined.

To Decide Fate of Association

The fate of the Music Merchants' Association of St. Louis, with its large contingent of talking machine distributors and dealers, will be decided at a meeting to be held January 18 at the Statler Hotel. Rudolph Ganz, new director of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, and Arthur Gaines, manager of the orchestra, will be the guests of honor. Both will deliver addresses. Afterward the members will discuss whether it is best to continue the organization or let it expire. A handsome souvenir of the meeting is being prepared.

New Dealers for Granby Line

H. J. Arbuckle, manager of the Widener Co.,

says the wholesale business in the Granby line, which was taken on a few months ago, is going big. Accounts have been opened with twelve good retailers in St. Louis and a good trade has been secured in the country. E. W. Schumaker, factory representative, is working city and country.

Miss Loraine Merritt, for the past two years manager of the talking machine department of Scruggs, Vandervoort & Barney, and for nine years connected with the department, resigned December 31 to prepare for her marriage, January 24, to F. G. Abbott, a wholesale druggist of Minneapolis, Minn.

Reports 100 Per Cent Increase

Manager Ennis, of the Stix, Baer & Fuller talking machine department, feels that he has a right to be satisfied with 1921, since it registered an increase of 100 per cent over the business of the preceding year.

Manager J. F. Ditzell, of the Famous & Barr Co. talking machine department, says business got under such headway during the year that it could not stop at Christmas but kept right on through the holidays and into January.

Silverstone's Edison Concerts

The Silverstone Music Co. has been giving a series of Edison concerts at the various police stations and for various organizations, with a total attendance in one week of 2,267 people.

Miss Frieda Meyer, formerly with the Silverstone Co., but who gave up work for a while, is back with that company.

A successful tone test was given by Elizabeth Spencer December 17 at the concert hall of the Silverstone Music Co.

New Year's Resolutions Worth Following

Speaking of New Year resolutions the Koerber-Brenner "Red Seal" for January has this:

"January the first—and a time for making promises. What are you going to swear off this year—too much candy—too much temper—too little sleep—just the same as last year? Selfish resolutions, merely intended to benefit me, aren't they?"

"Why not try a new kind this year, a perfectly unselfish resolution for the benefit of the General Public, at least of the General Music Buying Public?"

"Here on the table before us are laid two huge sheets of paper. One is a mass of figures. The other is a beautiful white expanse. The figures are the numbers of the records we sold last year. What a tale they tell—first of the musical taste of the aforesaid General Public—and a lot longer tale of the sales effort we put forth. For some, the sheet shows very, very black with only an occasional dash of red; for others, a more cheerful amount of red, and, oddly, for the one whose total is greatest, a great splash of red with only enough black to form a contrast.

"Now, for our resolution—that that fine, white space will be covered for 1922 with figures which represent the musical happiness of others. Let us resolve that every person who comes in contact with us for this year will carry away the effect of our effort to have him hear real music."

Some Columbia News

Dealers in St. Louis have been laying particular stress in their advertising on "The Sheik," the most recent Columbia record release. It is expected that the great popularity of "The Sheik," both as a book and moving picture play, will be strongly reflected in the coming sales of the record. Mr. Millikan, of Rolens & Millikan, Murphysboro, Ill., was a visitor at the St. Louis branch office of the Columbia last week. Dealers in this territory report excellent Christmas sales. Interest in the improved monthly Window Displays Service for the New Year has been clearly shown by the many new subscriptions. There has been a substantial reduction in the service starting with the January number. Record sales in St. Louis have been unusually heavy throughout the past month.

Some Brieflets

Joseph Hoffman, the celebrated Columbia exclusive artist, appears at the Odeon in St. Louis January 23.

Dealers conducting sell-by-truck campaigns have had such good results that many are going to continue this efficient sales method indefinitely. Period models have sold unusually well during the holiday season.

Nineteen twenty-one was a good year for the Vocalion and December was a good month for it, says R. V. Johnson, local manager. In the wholesale division the showing on records was particularly good, in fact better than was expected.

John Stevenson, formerly with the Wurlitzer Co. at Springfield, O., has joined the Vocalion organization in St. Louis, and will travel in Missouri and Illinois for the wholesale department.

The Boot Music Co., on Champa street, Denver, Col., has erected a large electric sign on the roof of its quarters which can be seen for many blocks. Victrolas are handled here.

QUALITY PRODUCTS PREFERRED BY SAN FRANCISCANS

Period Style Machines and High-class Records Have the Call—Several New Stores Opened Recently—Ready for Tour of the Victor Artists—Business Outlook Viewed Optimistically

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., January 4.—Holiday shopping in most of the principal merchandising centers of California started rather early this season and continued strong right up to Christmas. The volume of business transacted is estimated to be close to normal, the interior districts making a better showing, proportionately, than the large coast cities. Buying was more conservative this year than last and, apparently, more discriminating. Period styles in machines had a specially good movement and classic records sold well. The merchants of San Francisco spared no expense in making their Christmas show windows attractive, but there was no extraordinary amount of advertising space carried in the newspapers. The wholesalers report some shortage of stock, due to late orders from the retailers, but on the whole the trade is well supplied with standard merchandise. Rainy weather, no doubt, cut down the volume of holiday sales a great deal.

George Coster, who was formerly associated with the California Phonograph Shop, of San Francisco, has accepted a position in the Columbia record department of the Remick Song Shop on Market street.

Louis Connor, proprietor of the talking machine department of the Connor Furniture Store, Rialto, Cal., has taken on the Pathé agency.

New Manager Pleased With Results

J. L. Gibbins, manager of the Victor department of the Emporium, San Francisco, is gratified with the large volume of sales in his department this month. Mr. Gibbins took charge of the department about a month ago, succeeding Miss Gertrude Kingston, who resigned. He came just in time for the holiday rush.

William Austin Callahan, sales engineer of the Los Angeles office of the Edison company, was in Bakersfield for two weeks this month conducting a sales promotion campaign in connection with the new store of the Hackett-Bristol & Cowan Co. in Bakersfield. This concern has music stores in Fresno, Dinuba and Visalia also, and they feature the Edison line. Mr. Callahan is spending the holidays at Santa Barbara.

The Baillard-Cramer Co., Santa Barbara, opened a music store on December 15 at 1218 State street. Opening business was very encouraging. The company features talking machine merchandise.

Max Wilmark, formerly of Mill Valley, Cal., is now in charge of the outside sales work for M. Newfield & Sons, phonograph dealers, at Lodi, Cal.

Ready for Edison Tone Test

Bookings are well under way for the Spring tone-test tour of the Edison company on the Coast. The artists to participate are Helen Davis, mezzo-soprano; Victor Young, pianist, and Edward Hungerford, violinist. The recitals will start at Phoenix, Ariz., in February, and end in the Northwest probably in May. Other Edison artists to give recitals on the Coast this season are Emmy Destinn, Arthur Middleton and Vasa Pihoda.

Stores Adding New Lines

The Phonograph Studio, Alameda, Cal., which started in business a month ago, has taken on the Columbia line. The proprietor is Louise M. Pates.

Scott & Kennedy, dealers in musical merchandise at Willows, Cal., have taken on the Brunswick line. They also are Victor dealers who are well established in their community.

R. E. Kane, former assistant manager of the wholesale Victor department of Sherman, Clay & Co., has accepted a position on the traveling force of the Chicago Talking Machine Co., of Chicago.

A. G. Corcoran, Pacific Coast sales manager for the Brunswick phonograph, has had splendid success with Brunswick products for the holiday trade. The San Francisco office is short on all the popular models and does not expect to be able to supply their customers with their requirements for a month or two after New Year's. The Brunswick period styles have made a specially strong appeal to the public.

William J. Campbell, who has recently been with the Columbia Graphophone Co. in Los Angeles, is again back in San Francisco and is now on the staff of the wholesale department of Sherman, Clay & Co. He has been away from San Francisco for several years.

Andrew McCarthy Optimistic

Andrew McCarthy, general manager of the wholesale Victor department of Sherman, Clay

& Co., sums up the business situation thus: "In California, both in the large Coast cities and in the interior districts, we have enjoyed a very satisfactory holiday business, and I think it will be found to be about up to normal. The situation here is much better than in the North, and we have every reason to expect a steady improvement in talking machine business all along the line. In regard to the exclusive Victor dealers, experience has surely proved this year that the policy is a wise one. We have the most gratifying reports from all the exclusive Victor dealers. It pays to concentrate on one line."

Ready for Victor Artists' Tour

Billy Morton, manager of the retail Victor department of Sherman, Clay & Co., is enthusiastic regarding the coming tour of the Victor Eight, the artists supreme, who will give a series of concerts on the Coast very shortly. He has arranged already for recitals at Fresno, Sacramento, Stockton, Oakland, San Francisco, San José and Santa Rosa. Mr. Mountcastle, who represents Philip W. Simon, the manager of the Victor Eight, has just been in San Francisco making arrangements for publicity in connection with the concert tour.

High-class Products in Demand

J. J. Black, of the Wiley B. Allen Co., San Francisco, says the general average of talking machine business of the various stores of the company has been most encouraging for the holidays. In some stores the buying was very "spotty" or spasmodic, but there were many surprise sales and high-class merchandise moved very well in most of the stores. The Christmas decorations in the Wiley B. Allen stores were most artistic. Mr. Black says business for the year as a whole is not quite as good as the year before, but the volume of sales on the highest class of goods has been very satisfactory.

Okeh Records Please Purchasers

Kohler & Chase, in San Francisco and other cities, found the demand for Burnham phonographs and Okeh records very gratifying during the holidays. The dealers are pleased with the promptness with which they get the newest and most popular music hits on the Okeh records.

The Paramount Phonograph Shop, Sixteenth and Cleveland Place, Denver, Col., is engaged in an extensive advertising campaign which is getting results.

A TRIO OF INTERESTING CATALOGS

Starr Piano Co. Issues New Volume Devoted to Starr Pianos, Players and Phonographs, Together with a Complete Catalog of All the Gennett Records up to January, 1922

The Starr Piano Co., Richmond, Ind., has started the New Year right by issuing a trio of very attractive catalogs, one devoted to Starr pianos and players, another to the Starr phonographs and the third to Gennett records.

The phonograph catalog is complete and attractive in every particular, showing in great detail the various mechanical features of the Starr, together with illustrations and descriptive matter covering the several models of Starr phonographs, from the table machine to the elaborate console model. The showing includes several upright period styles that are distinctly attractive.

The record catalog has been carefully compiled, and includes the complete lists of Gennett records up to and including January, 1922, a showing, by the way, that is impressive. The catalog is carefully classified so that dance records of various sorts and the recordings of well-known artists may be found without difficulty. The volume is enlivened with interesting portraits of numbers of the better known artists and musical organizations who record for the Gennett records. A long list of foreign Gennett records is also included in the catalog.

The piano and player catalog is distinctly practical in every sense. There are two pages of text telling of Starr ideals and the progress made in developing Starr pianos and players, and the balance of the volume is devoted to illustrations and descriptive matter of the various Starr-made pianos, including the Starr Concert Grand, the Parlor and Minum Grand, the Starr, Richmond and Remington player-pianos, and several models of Starr, Richmond, Trayser and Remington pianos, all instruments well and favorably known in the trade. The catalog is of the sort calculated to interest the recipient in the instruments themselves as well as in the history of the house making them.

"SOUND" TO EXTINGUISH FIRE

Prof. Hilton I. Jones, of the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, Makes Some Interesting Acoustical Demonstrations

KANSAS CITY, Mo., January 3.—When there is a big fire, find out the flame tone and call a symphony orchestra instead of the fire department.

Prof. Hilton I. Jones, chemistry head of the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, demonstrated vibrations before the City Club here. He let the audience hear a flame "sing" and then put it out by sound.

"Extinguishing a fire by sound is easy when the burning substance is known and when there is only one element, such as hydrogen," he said. "The flame is extinguished when its neutralizing tone is produced, because its own sound waves are flattened out. Without its flame tone the burning gas is cooled immediately to a point below the ignition temperature and the fire is out."

NEW MANAGER IN SHELBYVILLE

SHELBYVILLE, IND., January 4.—The Cory Furniture Co. has announced the selection of J. Edward Briggeman as manager of its music department. Mr. Briggeman was for many years connected with the Pearson Piano Co.'s store here, and prior to coming here he was with the Pearson Co. as a salesman in Kokomo and in Columbus.

The Grafonola Co. of New England, Boston, Mass., has secured a long-term lease on a store at the corner of Tremont and Avery streets.

DENVER, COL., January 6.—The latest addition to the talking machine establishments of this city is the Mae E. Gerarden Music Co., Fifteenth and Cleveland Place. HEIFETZ PLAYS FOR BLIND GIRL

Victor Artist Plays Strangest Concert of His Career With an Audience of One, Miss Helen Keller, Famous and Accomplished Blind Girl

DENVER, COL., January 6.—Jascha Heifetz, the brilliant young violinist and Victor artist, recently played what was probably the strangest and at the same time one of the most appreciated concerts of his career. The audience consisted of one person, Helen Keller, the most celebrated deaf, blind and formerly dumb girl in the country, and the setting was the suite occupied by the artist in the Brown Hotel.

Miss Keller placed her sensitive fingers under the body of Heifetz's Stradivarius while he played and thus listened and was swayed by the playing of "The Hymn to the Sun," from the opera "Le Coq d'Or."

A DEPARTMENT DEVOTED TO PROMOTING RETAIL SALES

Helping to Make the Passer-by Buy

OFTTIMES a talking machine dealer will place a number of models of machines in the window without any apparent arrangement or sales effort other than visualizing the machine to the passer-by. Often a simple card, cleverly worded, will help the sales punch of your window. The next time that you group machines in your window place a card bearing the following inscription, so that it can easily be read: "We have yet to find a person who having once enjoyed the privilege of owning a.....talking machine has been satisfied to continue living without one."

* * *

SO much advertising has been run on the general style of "this machine in your home for $15.00" that it is well to use a window arranged as follows to counteract this: In the rear center of your window place the largest floor model you have. From this model, arranged in a semi-circle grading down on both sides, should be cheaper models, and in the front of the window at the two corners should be placed small portable models. A large sign should be placed in the center of the floor exposed—flat on the floor—bearing the words "Which of These Machines May We Place in Your Home?" On each machine should be placed a small neatly printed card bearing just merely the price per month, for example, "$10 per month." Such a window will stimulate immediate buying.

* * *

AVERY clever attraction and attention-getter can be arranged at a moderate expense in the following manner: Take the turntable of any machine that you have to a tinsmith. Have him solder onto the outside metal flange of it a six-inch strip of copper, so that it projects about one-quarter of an inch from the rest of the turntable. After replacing this turntable, adjust an ordinary lighting outfit which is used to illuminate the turntable of the machine. Run one wire in contact with any metal part of your motor—such as the crankshaft—then place a wire so that, as the turntable revolves, it strikes the copper strip, thus forming a complete circuit. Use any electric motor or winding apparatus in order that the machine will run continuously. Slow down the speed so that the revolutions are about thirty per minute. Cut a piece of white cardboard, the same size as a record, and print in large black letters the name of your store, and underneath it the words: "Extends Real Service." Place this cardboard on your turntable. An apparatus of this sort, placed in your window at night and left to run continuously, will only cost you the price of a battery occasionally—yet it will stop the pedestrian and attract considerable attention as it flashes.

* * *

AFTER all, there are very few ways that a business institution can extend any invitation of real hospitality to prospective customers. Here is one novel way that has been employed with success by several merchants in the industry: Print a card to fit in a No. 9 envelope, reading as follows: Across the top, in large letters, "Why not charge your records at our establishment?"; in smaller print, the following should appear: "It is with the idea of extending old-fashioned hospitality and courtesy that we offer to open up a charge account for you, so that you can purchase, at your convenience, those records which you may desire and pay for them monthly. The usual trouble of waiting for change after purchasing records, or trying to make change on C. O. D. deliveries, can be avoided in this way. We will be pleased to open up a charge account for you whenever you may desire." Send this to people who pay their instalments on talking machines with regularity; also to those people in your community whose reputation for credit is unquestioned.

PRIENT on cardboard stock, postal card size, the resemblance of a theatre ticket. On the part ruled off as the stub print, "One ticket for an enjoyable evening at home." On the main part of the ticket should appear the following: "The highest class professional talent producing medley, jazz and opera can be furnished for your private entertainment at your own home." Then in large letters, across the bottom of the ticket, "The (name machine)." On the top of the postal card should appear the words, "Here's something for you"; at the bottom, "The (name machine), the greatest reproducing instrument in the world," followed by your name and address. This card is unique and has an attractiveness which will appeal to your prospective mailing list.

WHEN the customer has selected the last record which he wishes, ask him if he has heard such and such a record (any new release which you may care to push). If he replies in the negative, place this record on the machine, starting it, saying "Listen to it while I wrap up your selections." The customer, having nothing else to do while waiting for the records to be wrapped, will often listen to the selection, and on many occasions purchase it at that particular moment. This is an old idea, but we do not apologize for reminding you of it, due to the fact that the practice of this idea has always brought exceptional returns.

MANY of you have record brushes which have been lying on your shelves and which you cannot dispose of. Try the following stunt, which will sell quite a number for you: Place a brush in each booth. Before a salesman demonstrates any record, have him go over it with the brush, then have him place the brush on a table conveniently located. A small, conservative card on the wall of the booth should read "Record brushes 50c." This will complete the chain of psychology for the purchase. The customer realizes that if the store uses such a brush it must be of real value. The price card saves the asking of questions.

* * *

INSTEAD of a plain flat card, get up for your salesmen some cards which can be folded the same way as a pamphlet is folded. On the front place the name of your salesman, your firm, etc., the same as on your business card. On the inside list about ten of your best-selling operatic numbers. Place a caption over this list to run as follows: "The Finest Selections From the World of Opera"—also insert the number, price, title, opera, artist. Underneath this list run a line which reads: "Such Great Operatic Stars as (list the names of several) Record Exclusively on (name make) Records. We are the duly authorized representatives for (name make) Records in this City."

* * *

IF you have on your books a list of record customers that has become inactive, you can secure a lot of good-will and revive sales interest in the following manner: Make out a bill all filled in on your regular monthly statement form. Fill in the date, the name, address, etc., and when you come to the column where charges would be itemized, fill in the month, for the date draw a blank line, for the item leave a blank space, and for the dollars and cents columns draw lines. At the bottom of the statement, either in type-writing or by means of a rubber stamp, convey the following message: "This is an accurate statement of your account. Is it our fault you do not owe us a cent? Is there something wrong with our merchandise, service, or salesmanship? Surely, there is something we can sell you! May our representative call, or will you be in to see us within the near future?" Inclose with this statement any good snappy printed matter you may have on hand, such as a record bulletin, etc.

WHENEVER you are using ads in the newspapers, devoted to a theme you know will appeal to certain people on your prospect list, you will find it very good practice to send out a regular U. S. post card to people you feel will be especially interested in a given ad. Use copy somewhat like this: "Dear Friend: We are going to run an advertisement in the New York Times on January 18, in which we feel you will be especially interested. We want to call your attention to it at this time so that you will not miss the important message we are conveying in this particular advertisement. Sincerely yours, JOHN DOUGH & Co., 221 Easy street." Change name of paper and dates to suit your demands.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Mr. Gordon will publish on this page any good ideas submitted by you for the benefit of the trade, and will also answer any questions you ask him concerning merchandising problems. Use this department as much as you like. It is intended to serve you—to be a forum for the discussion and exchange of ideas of interest.

STOCKS WELL CLEANED UP IN KANSAS CITY DISTRICT

Volume of Holiday Trade Proves Better Than Expected—Prospects for 1922 Considered Good—Value of the Special Department—Selling Columbians by the Carload—News of Month

KANSAS CITY, Mo., January 4.—“Better than expected” is the universal report on the Christmas business in talking machines, not only in Kansas City, but throughout the Kansas City trade territory. Some of the jobbers are sold out on all the leading models and are forced to send in rush orders to the factories for supplies. Some of the dealers have sent rush orders to supply machines which were sold at Christmas, but not delivered, owing to the lack of machines in stock to fill all orders.

One jobber who stocked up heavily in the Summer and Fall on leading models in oak, American walnut and mahogany was pleased to find that his estimate of the market had not been amiss and that he finds himself with a relatively low stock. Another jobber reports that his stock of machines is lower than at this time in years. One retailer, who has recently moved to a better location, reports a larger business than he has ever had before and attributes it partly to his better location and better window display.

The Jones Store advertised that machines ordered for Christmas would be put on the February bills, and the store had the biggest sale of machines in its history.

The J. W. Jenkins & Sons Music Co. rented an outlet store and stocked it up with small merchandise and found a good trade as a result. There has been a very satisfactory sale of records during the month and the plan of making Christmas gifts of records, or rather, orders for records, has been a general custom during the last month.

The outlook for the new year is bright. There is a feeling that the first two or three months of the new year will be quiet, but the expectation is that the year will show, as a whole, gradually improving conditions, fully keeping pace with the expected improvement in business in general.

Looking to the Future

It is not expected that 1922 will be an easy year. If 1921 rewarded fighters it is understood that 1922 will do the same. One advantage which the talking machine merchant has now is that a better feeling exists than a year ago. Then, many people would not buy because they did not know what to expect during the year to come and kept their money in their pockets, or banks. Now they know what they are up against and are ready to let loose of their money—if they have it.

The past year has demonstrated the value of the plan, “Sell music to a community and it will buy machines to play it on.” There has been a very general effort throughout the territory to carry out this plan and the work here in Kansas City has been the most extensive. In all the schools, and in numerous clubs and public gatherings, there were given “music appreciation” talks, which have been demonstrated with the use of the talking machine. These have always been followed by the purchase of the records in some of the retail stores and often by the purchase of a machine.

During the past ninety days Miss DeForeest, who is connected with the J. W. Jenkins & Sons' Music Co., has been co-operating with the supervisor of music for the Kansas City public schools and will probably spend January in the same work. After that she will be busy in similar work with Jenkins' stores throughout the territory. Some of the Victor record salesmen in Kansas City are counting the work done in the schools as the very best kind of advertising.

The campaign for 1922 opened with a concert given at the Convention Hall by the Eight Famous Victor Artists on Sunday night, January 1. The eight artists who appeared were Henry Burr, Albert Campbell, John Meyer, Frank Croxton, Billy Murray, Monroe Silver, Fred Van Eps and Frank Banta. The attendance was very large and very enthusiastic.

The Value of Departmentizing

One of the developments in this territory during the year was the practice of the dealers making their talking machine business a distinct department, whether in a music store or in some other kind of store. It is found to have many advantages. It is encouraged by Kansas City jobbers, for it has been found that the plan helps collections. Where there is a distinct department, and the money collected for the machines and records is kept separate, there has been but little trouble in having the bills met, and in most cases discounts taken advantage of. In the same way the distinct department makes the dealer realize more than ever the profits he is making on his talking machine trade, and that means he will give it more attention, which, in turn, means an increase in sales.

The carload Grafonola sale of the J. Ed. Black Music Co., of Springfield, Mo., exclusive Columbia dealer, is meeting with success and Mr. Black is very enthusiastic about the plan. E. R. Smith, Columbia representative, is assisting Mr. Black.

Hulda Lashanska will appear in Kansas City, Mo., and several Kansas towns during January. Arrangements are being made by dealers in each of the town where Lashanska appears to tie up to her appearance, through newspaper advertising, a special window display, distribution of literature, etc.

B. L. Plank, of the J. W. Jenkins & Sons' Music Co.'s Victor wholesale organization, is in Pennsylvania, visiting relatives. He will visit the Victor factory before he returns.

A Practical Booth Suggestion

The value of having higher and lower-priced machines in the same booth has been demonstrated a number of times in Kansas City during the holidays. A lady came into one of the establishments Christmas week with the fixed purpose of buying a $95 machine, and practically bargained for one of that kind. Seeing another type of machine in the demonstration booth, which caught her fancy, she asked about it. The salesman took the opportunity to point out the attractive features of the machine, and the result was a sale of a machine at $300 instead of the $100 one. It was a case of "seeing and buying."

The thousands of talking machines sold during 1921 have greatly increased the field of the record manufacturer for 1922.

The use of our exceptional pressing facilities will help you to substantially increase your record business.

Successful Columbia Sale

The Eads Bros. Furniture Co., of Fort Smith, Ark., exclusive Columbia dealers, have just completed a week's sale of Grafonolas, having purchased a carload of Grafonolas for this purpose, and report that they were successful in selling the entire carload before the campaign was over. One of the features of the advertising in this campaign was a parade of trucks containing Grafonolas, taken from the car to Eads Bros. store through the principal streets of Fort Smith. Two Columbia representatives, D. M. Guthrie and L. S. Blythe, were with Eads Bros. during the campaign.

L. Q. Selzer Praises World as a Merchandising Help—Growth of Talking Machine Department Indicates Small-town Possibilities

BURLINGTON, IA., January 3.—The value of the trade paper in aiding the development of a business and the opportunities contained in the small town and farming community for the talking machine business has been amply demonstrated by Leland Q. Selzer, manager of the talking machine department of the Gulick-McFarland Co. here.

In a letter to The World Mr. Selzer states that from a start of two or three machines the talking machine department has been developed into a $20,000 annual business, and this year, despite the much-talked-of business depression and buyers' strike, Mr. Selzer expects to close the year with a sales volume of $23,000. This is all the more remarkable in view of the fact that Burlington is a town of only 23,000 population and the surrounding country is devoted to farming.

Hard work, consistent advertising and the adoption of live-wire suggestions contained in The World have made the department a success. The Christmas window display of this concern was modeled after one described in The World. Among the many worth-while ideas which this aggressive manager is putting across is the slogan "What Is Home Without Music?" This slogan is keeping the store in the minds of people throughout the entire community and the constant efforts of Mr. Selzer to keep it before the public have been repaid in increased business.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., January 4.—The Reco-Rap Co., of this city, manufacturer of the Reco-Rap, is meeting with pleasing success in the introduction of this package for shipping talking machine records. This package is furnished for all sized records, with metal posts to take care of from one to eight records.

The company recently issued an attractive circular showing reproductions of some of the letters it had received from prominent jobbers and dealers emphasizing the practical value of the Reco-Rap. Although this shipping package has only been on the market a short while, it is now being used by jobbers and dealers throughout the country, who find that it practically eliminates the possibility of record breakage.

Mr. Madson is enthusiastic regarding the sales possibilities of Okeh records, and an aggressive sales campaign has already been started.

Discuss the Business Outlook for 1922

Views of George E. Brightson

Discussing general business conditions and the outlook for 1922, George E. Brightson, president of the Sonora Phonograph Co., New York, said to The World: "It is my belief that during 1922 there will be an absence of that great speculative demand for talking machines which characterized our industry for several years, but there will be an active, healthy demand for merchandise that has been placed in the homes on a satisfactory basis and delivered to the consumer as advertised and represented.

"This thought is substantiated by a conversation which I had a year ago with a well-known talking machine manufacturer who remarked that coming events would bring about the survival of the fittest in our industry. I said at that time that the fittest who survived would not be the ones with the largest pocketbooks or the largest investments, but would be the manufacturers who produced merchandise wherein the pride of possession was the dominant thought of manufacture.

"From the very inception of the Sonora Phonograph Co. it has been our aim and ambition to refrain from endeavoring to secure the largest possible output, but to concentrate on placing our phonographs in the homes of music-loving people who would appreciate a high-grade musical instrument.

"For the coming year we have planned many important new offerings for the trade in the anticipation of relief from one of the burdens which the music trade has been subjected to because of the prevalent thought among so many people that music must be classed as a non-essential and as a luxury. Successful efforts to counteract this view have been made, and the Government has relieved us of one of the burdens—namely the five per cent excise tax.

"There is every reason to be optimistic in considering the outlook for the coming year, and as far as we are concerned, we are well assured of a substantial, healthy business in 1922, and in fact, this business is in hand at the present time."

H. L. Willson Optimistic

"We are going to have a normal year in 1922," said H. L. Willson, vice-president and general manager of the Columbia Graphophone Co., New York, in a chat with The World. "This statement is based on the fact that there is going to be better business generally in all industrial lines. I look for no skyrocket improvement in the early part of the year, but there is going to be a very gradual return to normal conditions generally, for we have the basic requirements for such an improvement.

"The period of liquidation, which was so necessary to curb the false inflation common to all industries during the war period, has been very nearly accomplished with the close of the year, and I believe we may look for each calendar month of 1922 to show a steady improvement in sales and the character of business done, and may expect 1922 figures to exceed those of our most prosperous year during the pre-war period.

"We look forward confidently to a large and healthy business year in 1922, not only for our company, but for our thousands of loyal dealers to whom we pledge our heartiest co-operation."

J. Newcomb Blackman's Opinion

J. Newcomb Blackman, president of the Blackman Talking Machine Co., New York City, Victor wholesaler, gave the following interesting interview to The Talking Machine World in connection with his views regarding the business outlook for 1922:

"It seems to me that 1922 will be a year of real competition, a return to conditions such as were experienced by those in the industry in its earlier stages, when struggles for success and supremacy were the order of the day.

"I believe there are still concerns, chiefly among manufacturers, to whom relief will come only through bankruptcy, while others will bring about the necessary changes and reforms through a reorganization. The future of many concerns financially embarrassed will be definitely known before the year is half spent, because temporary extensions will have matured and will not be renewed, or financial aid given will not be continued if the desired results have not been accomplished.

"I look for changes in types of instruments during the year and believe that there will be a further development in new models of the so-called console type. These, in competition with the upright designs, will definitely determine which type will predominate and be most popular with the public.

"Among the talking machine manufacturers financial strength, plus steady demand, will enable quantity production, embodying quality at a list price hard to compete with. The manufacturer of such a product will occupy an enviable position. However, this may be somewhat counterbalanced by weaker manufacturers if the cost of the former's goods to dealers and jobbers is too high. The best product in great demand still needs the support and co-operation of the dealers and jobbers if the consumer is to be supplied through those channels.

"During hard times sales volume is seldom maintained and a falling off in sales causes overhead charges to mount. Furthermore, cash business diminishes and time sales increase in proportion, all of which contribute to higher overhead costs. Under such conditions the trade may look for a solution in increased discounts. Large discounts are only offered as a rule on goods in little or no demand, and are necessary to induce dealers and jobbers to handle such products.

"Bitter experience has been furnished lately through the necessity to market some goods at great reductions from the list price. More serious, however, is the ill-will created by such sales and the return of goods in lieu of installment payments not continued because of later price reductions on the same goods, or other dissatisfaction with the product.

"In the current year the greatest results will be shown by reorganizing our forces and reviving our energies. Distributors and dealers can no longer expect the business to come to them. They will have to go out after it or make way for those who are willing to do so. The efficient organization will be made up of principals and employes willing to earn what they expect to receive.

"Real profits will be made on goods of quality which will stand the test of time and build good-will. This class of goods will enable the dealer and the distributor to show a quick turnover in capital and make a larger net profit, rather than on goods that cannot measure up to this standard and on which larger discounts are offered.

"Dealers will do well during 1922 if they select a talking machine product and a distributor justifying their full confidence. Business relations should be more on a basis of investment than speculation. It will not be the volume of sales in 1922 that will count so much as the amount of net profit.

"We should avoid straining our business structure to obtain a volume of sales at the expense of good-will and net profit. Then we will be well fortified."

BROOKLYN FIRMS ESCAPE FIRE

The Supertone Talking Machine Co., manufacturer of talking machines, and the Nightingale Phonograph Cabinet Co., occupying the third and fourth floors, respectively, of the building at 280 Nevins street, Brooklyn, N. Pre-holiday Sales of Talking Machines and Records Exceed Expectations—Brisk Demand for Cheney Machines—Other News

CANTON, O., January 3.—Talking machine dealers in Canton and vicinity enjoyed an excellent holiday business and the new year entered with considerable promise for a fair amount of business in both machines and records.

The sales of Cheney machines during the two weeks prior to Christmas were exceedingly brisk in all styles, according to C. M. Alford, head of the firm of Alford & Fryar. Mr. Alford stated that the only trouble in the music business at this time is the difficulty of making collections, but there is a tendency toward improvement in this direction, which is expected to become more pronounced in January.

The Van Fossen Smiley Piano Co. is planning to select a new president to succeed S. B. Van Fossen, late head of the company, and to determine upon the future policy of the business, according to an announcement made last week. The date of the meeting has not been determined upon.

M. M. Potee, manager of the A. B. Smith Piano Co.'s Canton store at the time it was discontinued, has been made manager of the new Rudolph Wurlitzer store, on Market and Sixth streets. The company is planning to add talking machines and small goods to its stock and the present inadequate quarters may be abandoned in favor of a larger establishment.

Record sales during the holidays at the new Rhines Edison Shop, Cleveland avenue, North, were the biggest in the history of the company, which operates another store in Massillon, according to C. R. Rutledge, who was recently appointed manager.

The E. & J. Co., Cleveland avenue, Northwest, has added a line of standard talking machines, which it has been pushing through newspaper advertising and novel publicity stunts.

Otto Heineman, president of the company, was in charge of the sales meeting, and the reports that he received from the members of the staff indicated that the products manufactured by the company were gaining new friends rapidly. Sales policies and plans for 1922 were discussed, and nothing will be left undone during the coming year to enhance the efficiency of the company's service to its clientele and to wage an aggressive campaign for business.

RECORD HOLIDAY TRADE REPORTED IN BROOKLYN

Both Machines and Records Enjoy Lively Demand—Martin Kraus Now Ideal Music Co. Manager—Dominick D'Antonio Enlarging Establishment—General Conditions Reviewed

The holiday rush is over and dealers are a happy lot, for sales were far beyond the fondest hopes of the most optimistic. Many console types were sold, but the more conventional or upright models were in much greater demand, especially those priced at between $100 and $200. Records showed increased sales also, so that in all respects it was one of the most satisfactory holiday periods in sales totals ever experienced.

As January marked the opening of the new fiscal year for the majority of dealers, all are busily engaged in the important task of taking inventory. This work is of first importance and requires the skill of an experienced person. In a good many cases it falls to the lot of the proprietor or store manager to do this work, and they, consequently, are very busy.

Martin Kraus Becomes Manager

Beginning January 1, the Ideal Music Co., Victor dealer, at 6964 Third avenue, is under the management of Martin Kraus, well known in Brooklyn music circles and a talking machine man of several years' experience. Mr. Kraus was formerly assistant manager of the talking machine department of Abraham & Strauss, where he made an enviable record. His wide knowledge of retail merchandising and his ability as a musician will be invaluable to him in serving intelligently the high-class clientele to which this live store caters. In his new appointment he has the best wishes of all for his complete success.

Making Addition to Establishment

Now that the holiday rush is over Dominick D'Antonio, successful Victor dealer at 202 Fifth avenue, is busily engaged in preparing and equipping the new addition to his establishment, which he recently acquired by purchasing the adjoining store. The partition between the two stores is to be torn down and one large showroom made of both, additional booths are to be installed and record racks erected in the center, where they will be easily accessible from all parts of the store. When alterations are completed the floor space will be more than doubled and will present a very attractive appearance. With these increased facilities this establishment can take care of its customers in a much better manner and attract many new and desirable ones as well.

Great Drive for Business

The G. & R. Furniture Co., Columbia dealer, at 5413 Fifth avenue, has just completed one of the most successful drives for business ever inaugurated in Brooklyn. Full pages of advertising were used and very liberal terms were featured, also the large assortment of models carried, from which to choose, was made an incentive to attract prospective buyers. Officials of the company state that the total sales of machines in this intensive advertising campaign was the greatest in the history of their experience as Columbia dealers.

Closed a Big Year's Business

The Brooklyn branch of the Aeolian Co. has enjoyed one of the most successful years of its existence, according to C. C. Davis, manager. The holiday demand for Vocalions was especially good, bringing the total annual sales volume above the figures for last year. Mr. Davis declared that the prospects for the new year are exceedingly bright. The console types of machines in this store are gradually declining in favor, which is growing in a corresponding measure in the direction of the upright period models. The upright models now lead the demand here and their popularity in this section during the new year seems to be assured.

Victor Distributors Are Pleased

According to the reports of General Manager R. H. Morris, of the American Talking Machine Co. and G. T. Williams, of the G. T. Williams Co., Victor wholesalers, the past year was the most prosperous these companies have yet enjoyed. It was very gratifying to every one in these organizations to feel that all played an important part in making the past year a fruitful one, not only for themselves, but for every Victor dealer in Brooklyn and Long Island whom they serve

Co-operative Campaign Brings Good Result

A co-operative advertising campaign carried on just previous to the holidays by three live Columbia dealers, which featured the Columbia foreign record catalog, netted these concerns some additional business that proved the effort well worth while. The dealers in this commendable drive were the Bay Ridge Music Co., at 7218 Third avenue; Harry Druckman, at 5207 Third avenue, and the Sunset Talking Machine Co., at 4803 Third avenue, all of whom are well-known Columbia dealers in this section.

Successful in Placing Period Style

A shop in Brooklyn which has made quite a success of placing period models into the homes of Brooklyn people is the Arthora Shop, exclusive Victor dealer, at 60 Court street. Otto Ruckgaber, who, with his brother, conducts this high-class shop, has made a specialty of selling period models and, by co-operating with one of the leading interior decorators of Brooklyn, period types conforming to the general scheme of decorations were shown and sold.

Made Many Sales of Two Models

Oliver Bros., 250 Fifth avenue, aggressive Columbia dealers, report that the holiday business was exceptionally good. All models of Columbia machines were very much in demand, and especially so were the F-2 model, at $100, and the G-2, which sells for $125.

NEW EMERSON ARTIST

ZeZ Confrey Makes First Emerson Record— Well Known as Pianist and Composer

The Emerson Phonograph Co. has announced several records by ZeZ Confrey, who is well known in musical circles. Mr. Confrey is an accomplished pianist who has been considerably popular in piano concert work and composition. His first record in the Emerson library consists of two of his own compositions.

For a number of years Mr. Confrey was identified with the Q R S Co., making a series of rolls that met with considerable success. He originally played classic selections exclusively, but in recent years has devoted his time to playing piano novelties.

RESIGNS AS DIRECTOR

At the December meeting of the board of directors of the General Phonograph Corp. the resignation of Pliny Catucci as a director of the company was accepted. Mr. Catucci, who is known throughout the trade as one of the best-posted technical men in the industry, is planning to establish offices in Newark, N. J., as a consulting engineer. He was identified with the General Phonograph Corp. for many years, and he is entering upon his new activities with the hearty good wishes of every executive of that organization.

BETTER FEELING IN THE NORTHWEST

1921 Made Better Showing Than Anticipated— Geo. A. Mairs' Views on the Outlook for 1922 —Other Prominent Jobbers Optimistic

MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, MINN., January 6. —Notwithstanding the pessimistic prognostications of the recognized business prophets of the country, who predicted that everything had been shot to pieces and that there was nothing in sight but ruin, the talking machine dealers have but very little complaint to make. The reason is that they have fared fairly well. As a matter of fact, there are quite a number of dealers who insist that 1921 was ahead of 1920 in actual results.

Such a case might be that of W. J. Dyer & Bro. As the oldest talking machine house in the Northwest, it should be entitled to some consideration when it does speak. George A. Mairs, head of the Victrola department, hesitates to compare 1920 with 1921, but confesses that there has been a serious shortage of certain models, greatly to the disadvantage of W. J. Dyer & Bro. Why there should be a shortage he is unable to say.

Mr. Mairs, although satisfied with the net returns for 1921, is not quite sure what 1922 will have in store for the talking machine dealers. "I do not believe that there is much real use in trying to lay out the future. I know that there are many who pretend to tell what is going to happen. I confess that I try, but I am as much wrong as right—so what is the use? I would like to know, however, what one should do or take to enable one to read the future. Personally, I do not believe that the future will be bad, not by any means, and I look for a general revival of interest in music in all public matters."

Laurance H. Lucker, Northwestern distributor of the Edison phonographs and records, states that 1921 was a record-breaker insofar as the retail trade in the twin cities was concerned, but that the wholesale trade was quite disappointing. It appears that St. Paul and Minneapolis are taking very strongly to the Edison machines and are producing nice business for the retail houses.

Following the radical reduction in prices by the Pathé company, G. Sommers & Co. set right out to get all the business in sight. Samuel Levinson, manager of the Pathé department, states that the large increase in machine sales has made a great draft upon the records, and as a consequence, he is hard pushed to supply the calls for records. By pushing both the machines and records somewhat harder than before some good totals are being obtained.

The widespread advertising campaign conducted by the Stone Piano Co. and the Aeolian Co. on behalf of the Vocalion machines and records has gotten results, according to the latest reports.

The Snyder Music Co., Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Columbia dealer, also used a very attractive float in an Old Home Week parade, held in that city a short while ago. This float, which is shown herewith, was one of the most artistic in the parade.

ELKINS ORCHESTRA POPULAR

Exclusive Columbia Artist Scoring Success at Knickerbocker Grill—Eddie Elkins, Well Known in Musical Circles, on Coast

The recent announcement by the Columbia Graphophone Co. that the Eddie Elkins Orchestra would make Columbia records exclusively was received enthusiastically by Columbia dealers everywhere. This orchestra is making a phenomenal success in the Knickerbocker Grill, New York, where it is playing nightly, and its first Columbia records will be awaited with interest.

Eddie Elkins' career has been an interesting and a varied one. As a youngster he showed signs of musical talent and quickly learned to play the violin. He entered the University of California to study medicine, and while there took part in a musical show. The result convinced him that his career lay in music instead of medicine, so from then on he devoted all his energies along the latter line.

The Elkins Orchestra

In 1919 he organized a band which was so unusual that it was immediately booked by the Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco, where it reigned supreme for a year and a half, when the Alexandria Hotel in Los Angeles enticed him to join them.

Here, during the early part of 1921, Al Jolson heard them and prevailed on Elkins to come to New York, where they were engaged by the Pavilion Royale, one of the most popular places on Long Island.

Recently the Knickerbocker Grill acquired the organization on an eighteen months' contract, which will leave them free during the Summer months, when they expect to make a tour of Europe, stopping at London, Paris and Monte Carlo, where they are already booked, returning to the Knickerbocker in time for the Fall opening.

The orchestra is composed entirely of California boys, all of them talented musicians (several of them coming from the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra) and, as Mr. Elkins expressed it, "they have a natural sense of rhythm, which is augmented by close teamwork."

The unusual effects obtained are due, Mr. Elkins said, to their method of grouping different instruments. They put together the trombone and cornet; the E-flat alto and tenor saxophone; the piano and the banjo, etc., so that when all these combinations come together in a selection there are three or four distinct types of rhythm plainly discernible.

ALBUM CREATOR OF RECORD SALES

Increasingly Active Demand for Albums Predicted for 1922 by Phil Ravis

Phil Ravis, president of the Peerless Album Co., New York City, has planned an extensive sales campaign for the year 1922. The arrangements make it possible for the dealer to place before his customers Peerless albums in a manner that should attract increased sales.

In speaking of the development of the album business, Mr. Ravis said: "Manufacturers and dealers have evidently arrived at the conclusion that the album is a creator of record sales. This has been impressively demonstrated during the past season by the new and increased interest shown in such products. The sales have increased most substantially, and albums have become an important adjunct to dealers' stocks. Not only is there a satisfaction to the customer in the protection which an album gives records, but invariably albums make record sales active. Naturally, this alone would be an inducement to the trade, but as there is a substantial profit to the retailer in handling such goods he finds it a product that should be considered."

Study trade papers. A trade paper often prevents a man from making a fool of himself in his own line of business.

RETIREMENT OF MIGUEL VOGLHUT

Made Many Friends in the Trade During His Vice-presidency of the American Odeon Co.

The liquidation of the American Odeon Co., with the consequent retirement of its vice-president, Miguel Voglhut, is the cause of regret to his many friends, whom he made through his genial personality and the intelligent service he has given in the handling of Odeon record business during the past year.

Mr. Voglhut is one of the best informed men in the foreign record field, as his experience covered a period of many years in European countries, as well as a wide knowledge of the South American market, where he introduced successfully a well-known talking machine and record.

His plans for the future are not as yet definitely arranged, for in addition to a very flattering offer from the Carl Lindstrom Co., of Berlin, Germany, he is considering an offer made to him from a well-known record concern in this country, which believes that his wide knowledge of the foreign record field would be valuable to them.

The A. L. Arvidson Piano Co., of Denver, Col., announces that it is disposing of its piano stock and in the future will handle talking machines.

MILWAUKEE TRADE IS PLEASED WITH BUSINESS OUTLOOK

Splendid Holiday Trade Closed—Majority of Concerns Break All Records—Many New Dealers Enter the Field—Future To-day Looks Much Brighter Than a Year Ago—New Stores Opened

MILWAUKEE, WIS., January 9.—Based on a holiday business that exceeded expectations in every way, the talking machine trade in Milwaukee and throughout Wisconsin has been greatly encouraged with respect to future business. In a majority of instances sales by retailers in this territory were the largest on record, with possibly only one exception, namely, the holiday season of 1919, which is so well remembered as the biggest "boom" period in the history of the industry, due largely to unnatural causes. In all cases business was better than in December, 1920, when the music business generally was feeling the worst effect of the reaction from the hectic days of the late war and immediate post-war period.

The wholesale trade entered the new year with a decided advantage, which was found in the fact that the average retailer's stock was the lowest in years. Dealers bought conservatively all through the year and went into the holiday season with stocks of considerably smaller size than they have ever been accustomed to carry in anticipation of Christmas business. The demand was beyond expectations, and as a consequence there has been a very pleasing tendency to place orders with jobbers.

"There is no question that the future to-day looks much brighter than it did a year ago," said Harry A. Goldsmith, secretary of the Badger Talking Machine Co., Victor wholesaler. "Conditions have been on the mend for five or six months, and there is every reason to believe that the improvement will be steadily accentuated. Our dealers in this territory are in a much more cheerful mood than they were after the holidays last year, and they are more disposed to buy fresh supplies of instruments and records because the future looks good to them and fears of calamity have been pressed out of their hearts by the glad some experiences of the last six to eight weeks in being able to sell practically everything they had in stock."

Brunswick Branch Breaks Record

One of the happiest men in the local wholesale trade as the new year made its advent was Thomas I. Kidd, manager of the Milwaukee branch of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. Brunswick phonograph and record business in 1921 was the largest in the history of the house, and Mr. Kidd's joy was made complete when at the end of the year he found that holiday trade exceeded by a long margin anything his branch had ever done. The Brunswick has long been favorably known in this territory, but the vigorous efforts of the Milwaukee branch all through the year have given it still a higher rank and a greater prestige, so that to-day it must be reckoned with as one of the most popular lines in the entire field.

Many New Sonora Dealers

The Sonora, represented exclusively in the Wisconsin and Upper Michigan territory by the music merchandise division of the Yahr & Lange Drug Co., has hung up entirely new records by its 1921 business. Its dealers throughout the district have co-operated thoroughly with the headquarters. The dealer list in Milwaukee has been augmented by the acquisition of some of the best-known stores in this city, which include the following: Wm. A. Kaun Music Co., 90 Wisconsin street, downtown headquarters; George Durner, 745 Third street; Alfred W. Fuchs, 1403 Green Bay avenue; Thien & Pentler, 3401 North avenue, and Luebtow Music Shop, 923 Third street, North Side dealers; Carl Euler, 1611 Vliet street and 468 Twelfth street; Wm. Klug & Sons, Twelfth and Walnut streets; A. Kittelman, 1819 Center street, West Side dealer; Joe Goldman, Fourth avenue and Mitchell street; Noll Piano Co., 1015 Muskego avenue; Winter Piano Co., 375 Grove street, and Kunzelman & Esser Co., 460 Mitchell street, South Side dealers. In addition, there are well-known dealers in the downtown district, such as the C. W. Fischer Furniture Co., 217-223 Second street; Gether Piano Co., 625 Grand avenue, and the J. B. Bradford Piano Co., 411 Broadway, with a South Side branch at 596 Mitchell street.

Pushing the Record Lite

The Badger Co. at present is pushing hard the Record Lite, an automatic illuminating device for the turntable, which is made for Victor instruments only by the Record Lite Co., owned by the principal stockholders in the Badger wholesale house. The Record Lite has been on the market for several years and is now recognized as one of the most efficient and simplest appliances of this kind known to the trade.

Long List of Columbia Dealers

Robert H. Walley, district representative of the Chicago branch of the Columbia in Wisconsin, likewise has set a splendid mark of distribution which will give him ample work to improve this year. In Milwaukee the Columbia has made an especially distinct impression. Local dealers now embrace the following well-known establishments: Winter Piano Co., 516 Grand avenue, with a South Side branch at 375 Grove street; Smith Piano Co., 274 West Water street; Waldheim & Co., 206-212 West Water street; Wm. A. Kaun Music Co., 90 Wisconsin street; Flanner-Hafsoos Music House, 417 Broadway; Mrs. D. J. Carpenter, 3613 North avenue; A. Kittelmann, 1819 Center street; Edward Kupper, 1071 Teutonia avenue; Luebtow Music House, 923 Third street; Newdale's, 219 West Water street; Noll Piano Co., 1055 Muskego avenue; Frank Preuss Co., 1216 Walnut street; Sanborn's, three stores; August Zamka, 47 Center street, and several others.

Progress of Local Industries

The Edison branch reports an excellent year's business, with prospects for 1922 considered excellent in all respects, and much improved over the year just ended.

The Milwaukee Talking Machine Mfg. Co. has had a memorable year in producing and marketing the Dalion, and its holiday business was of an exceptionally high order.

Phono-Lamp Mfg. Co. Incorporated

A new industry manufacturing a combination talking machine and home lighting fixture has been established at Beloit, Wis. It is the Phono-Lamp Mfg. Co., which has been incorporated under the laws of Wisconsin by M. W. Wiegand, C. A. Riemer and E. R. Lucas. Some time ago the American National Mfg. Co., of St. Louis, Mo., purchased the brass foundry and machine shop of the Slater & Tuck Co. at Beloit and converted it into a plant for producing the combination instrument and lighting fixture. Now a separate corporation has been organized to take over and develop this business.

New Multitone Co. Activities

The Multitone Mfg. Co., of Eau Claire, Wis., which was thrust into bankruptcy following the disappearance of its founder and president, Edwin J. Sailstad, in August, 1920, has been discharged from bankruptcy. The business recently was acquired by a group of Eau Claire men, some of whom were heavy creditors. The settlement was effected despite the refusal of life insurance companies to pay claims amounting to $75,000 on policies made to the company by Mr. Sailstad, it being alleged that there is reason to believe that he is alive and was not burned to death in the fire which destroyed his Summer cottage. Mrs. Sailstad was remarried on Christmas day to a well-known Eau Claire man, having established her widowhood to the satisfaction of the marriage license authorities.

E. J. Skelton Opens Store

Edward J. Skelton, of Madison, Wis., who began business as a piano and talking machine dealer on a small scale two years ago while director of the Orpheum Theatre orchestra, has opened a complete store on King street, adjoining the Capitol Hotel, and is adding a furniture department.

Noll Piano Co.'s Fine New Home

One of the events of the month of December in the retail field in Milwaukee was the formal opening during the week immediately preceding Christmas of the beautiful new store of the Noll Piano Co., at 1015 Muskego avenue. There is no handsomer building in the Middle West than this new music shop, according to the opinion of experts. It covers a quarter of a block, being 60 x 125 feet in size and two stories high. It represents an investment of nearly $45,000. The Noll Co. was established seven years ago in a small way at 1055-1057 Muskego avenue and has grown to be one of the largest and best-known music houses on the South Side. To accommodate this business it has now erected a separate building, which is an artistic triumph and a showplace of Layton Park, the district in which it stands out as the finest establishment owned by any retail concern.

Opens Store in Old Home Town

Arthur Hamann, for eighteen years an executive of the P. A. Starck Piano Co., at Chicago, has returned to his native city, Sheboygan, Wis., after an absence of a quarter of a century, to establish a talking machine shop which later he intends to develop into a general music store. It is located at 922 Michigan avenue, in the building where his father for more than thirty years conducted a general store. A new building will be erected next Spring, when pianos and other musical merchandise will be added.

Some employees are an asset at $10,000 a year; others are a liability at $1,000 a year. Which class are you heading for? asks Forbes Magazine.

KNIGHT-CAMPBELL CO. CONVENTION

RECORD TO HELP ORCHESTRA TRIP

Starr Piano Co. Offers to Make Record of Playing of High School Orchestra in Order to Pay Expenses of Concert Tour

RICHMOND, IND., January 3.—A proposed trip of the Richmond High School Orchestra to Nashville, Tenn., next March was insured recently when the Starr Piano Co. announced that to assist in paying the expenses of the trip it would make a phonograph record of selections rendered by the orchestra and would give the orchestra all profits derived from the sale of the record.

The orchestra will sell the records at the national music supervisors' conference at Nashville. The numbers which the record is to include are two selections said to have never been recorded. They are "The Red Man," from "Dwellers of the Western World," by Sousa, and "In the Village," from the "Caucasian Sketches," by Ippolitowivanow, and also the "Valse Triste," by Sibellius, and "Praeludium," by Jarnefelt.

NORMAN B. MEYER WITH EINSON

Takes Over Duties of Sales Manager of Einson Products—Is Nationally Known—Rounds Out Strong Organization of Specialists

Einson Litho., Inc., New York, manufacturer of dealer service helps, window displays and other display advertising material, announces that Norman B. Meyer, vice-president of the National Service Bureau, of Chicago, and previously advertising manager of the Chicago Examiner, joined the Einson organization on January 1. Mr. Meyer takes over the duties of sales manager for Einson products, and present plans call for an extensive and country-wide campaign in the interest of many new features of dealer service display material which the company is to introduce to the trade during 1922.

The addition of Mr. Meyer to the Einson Co. rounds out one of the most complete organizations in the lithographing field, as the company now includes such well-known names as Lawrence Harris, Joseph Ellner, A. J. Edgell, William G. Adams, Dennison Babcock, Leo Einson, Harry N. Stein, Francis D. Gonda and F. S. Goodspeed, who in bringing Einson products to the highest standards possible will give the dealer the best that can be produced in advertising material for the stimulating of sales in 1922.

TAKES OVER BRUNSWICK SHOP

Walter J. Baker Assumes Control of the Brunswick Shop in Indianapolis

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., January 3.—Walter J. Baker, manager of the local branch of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., has purchased the Brunswick Shop at 124 North Pennsylvania street. He assumes active control of the shop, succeeding C. A. Grossart, who has been manager during the last year for the All Records Phonograph Co. Mr. Grossart plans to visit in California before making other business connections. No successor has as yet been named for Mr. Baker as manager of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender store.

Mr. Baker was with the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. twelve years, being employed at Toledo, Grand Rapids and Chicago before coming to Indianapolis a year ago. The phonograph department of the Indianapolis branch was transferred recently to Chicago.

The Brunswick Shop is the only exclusive Brunswick store in the city and was the only store handling the Brunswick machines until last Summer, when the agency was extended to the Baldwin Piano Co. The sales of both the Brunswick machines and records increased steadily in the city during 1921. Mr. Baker contemplates no immediate changes in the sales organization of the shop.

Record Business Particularly Good During the Holidays—Business Men Underwrite Concerts

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, January 4.—The Christmas business was, on the whole, very satisfactory and continues to hold up fairly well. George A. Bolduc, manager of the talking machine department of the Glen Bros.-Roberts Co., said the record business was excellent but machines were not so good. This was the experience generally. Some of the stores did a fairly good business in pianos.

Much sympathy is felt for Thomas O. Leaver, of the Consolidated Music Co., who lost his mother, Mrs. Mary A. Leaver, recently.

Sidney D. Hampton, of the Consolidated, says player-pianos have picked up a little of late. A. B. Irvine, president of the Consolidated Music Co., has gone to Ocean Park, Cal., on a trip.

The O'Loughlin Co., exclusive talking machine dealer, has had a good demand for "Period" model machines, according to H. R. O'Loughlin, who said the company has enjoyed a big record business.

VERY SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS YEAR CLOSED IN CINCINNATI

Volume of Trade Satisfactory as a Whole—A. H. Bates Discusses Situation—New Edison Co. Sales Campaign—Six Carloads of Columbias Shipped—Brunswick Expansion—Other News of Interest

CINCINNATI, O., January 4.—And now another year has passed, as years will. Whatever it bore of opportunity, grasped or let pass unrecognized, it is irrevocably gone. Another year shall have gone its way before the gray dust of months is brushed from the miraculous flat discs of Christmas carols and "God Rest Ye, Merry Gentlemen," sounds in a million homes. Now, too, is the day of the inventory, bane of irresponsible clerks and fateful record of responsible tradesmen.

The years, indeed, have shown progress. The year of 1921 has shown success and progress in Cincinnati. Throughout every department of the talking machine trade in this city there is a glow of optimism. Not one manager but concedes that the year's business was better, much better, than expected. Every business, of course, but the bootlegger's, was somewhat below normal. But in view of economic depression in general, unemployment, high transportation rates; prices and all the impedimenta of the still new peace, the talking machine business was a rip-roaring success. Compared with other years, the result, of course, is less bright. Yet, there is satisfaction with the past year, quiet confidence in the present and a good measure of optimism for the future.

As to December, almost every dealer has the same words: "Holiday business was fine!" In most cases the dealer adds that it was much better than December of last year. And virtually every dealer believes that 1922 is going to be much better than 1921.

Some Shortage of Victrolas

One wholesale distributor of Victrolas was in the position, unique in these times of depression, of being unable to obtain enough machines to satisfy the demand made upon the company. This was the Ohio Talking Machine Co. A. H. Bates, of that company, said: "Our holiday business was very good, indeed. We sold out entirely in the Christmas trade. We could have sold a great many more Victrolas in popular models if they had been obtainable, but the demand upon our stock was so much greater than the number we could secure that we could not possibly catch up." Mr. Bates said, also, that business for the year of 1921 had been more than satisfactory. He commented particularly on the large number of moderate-priced machines which were sold.

In looking forward to 1922, Mr. Bates said: "The willingness of dealers to take out greater stocks of machines at cost should stimulate business. There is a demand now, even so shortly after the holiday rush, for certain models, so that it will be several months, probably, before the production catches up. The Kentucky district looks very good, because of prospects of substantial prices in the tobacco market. West Virginia is not so promising. The low coal demand, brought on by the mild Winter, and the incessant labor trouble, which will not be settled, apparently, until March or April, probably will make the market dull, especially in mining sections."

The New Edison Co. Progress

This company was not, by any means, the only one successful during the Christmas season or the past year. The New Edison Co., 224 West Fourth street, partook of these good things. P. H. Oelman, of this company, said: "Our Christmas business was fine, although, after a flying start two or three weeks before Christmas, it fell off a little just before the holidays. Sales of records were exceptionally good up to, and after, Christmas. The year, in the main, has been better than expected. Business looks very good, also, for 1922; much better than in January, 1921. We have a considerable number of substantial orders already on file for January, which is about the best sign we have seen recently."

The New Edison Co. began some time ago a sales contest in the Cincinnati district, and the results have been very gratifying. The prizes being competed for are scholarships for the winners in various divisions of the district, assuring instruction in the Edison school for salesmen. The leaders in the divisions—the divisions are designated as "classes"—are: Class 1, J. A. Gregory, Harlan, Ky., and Jesse C. Huff, Har-dinsburg, Ky.; Class 2, E. C. Earhart, Franklin, O., and Cade Schulenberg, New Bremen, O.; Class 3, Charles D. Hayt, Williamson, W. Va., and G. Bruce Edelen, Lebanon, Ky.; Class 4, A. B. Simpson, Piqua, O., and Geo. E. Jenkins, Circleville, O.; Class 5, O. U. Briggs, Nashville, Tenn., and William C. Griffith, Bluefield, W. Va.

There is also a "sweepstake prize" for the salesman who heads the entire list. This prize, now that the contest is nearly concluded, is almost certain to fall to Joe McKee, Charleston, W. Va., who will win, in addition to the Edison scholarship, a fine Gruen watch. Mr.

McKee has established something of a record for salesmen to shoot at. In three days he sold $2,300 worth of Edisons.

Retailers Have a Good Season

The feeling of satisfaction in December business, and business of the past year, spread throughout the trade. The Baldwin Piano Co., retailer of Victrolas, experienced a good year and a good holiday trade, both in machines and records, as did the Otto Grau Piano Co., handler of the Brunswick phonograph.

All of the department stores which have instituted departments for the sale of talking machines experienced a good Christmas trade and a good year. These stores, the H. & S. Pogue Co., the John Shillito Co., the McAlpin Co. and many others, advertise their talking machines extensively, and have gone into this popular business in earnest.

Six Carloads of Columbia Grafonolas

The Columbia wholesale branch in this city is proud of its record of business done during December. Ross H. Wilson, manager of the service department of the branch, said: "Our business was splendid. We shipped six carload lots of machines to dealers in the Cincinnati branch territory. These carload lots were delivered respectively to Hook Drug Co., Indianapolis, Ind.; Finke & Co., Evansville, Ind.; Lewis Furniture Co., Portsmouth, O., and Logan, W. Va.; the Grafonola Shop, Owensboro, Ky., and G. C. Garsuch, Springfield, O. Reports of quick sales from two of these concerns were remarkable. The Grafonola Shop, Owensboro, Ky., sold twenty-nine machines the first day after receipt of the shipment, and 120 machines in a week. The Evansville dealer disposed of forty-five of the carload lot on the day of its arrival and 178 machines during the week.

Growth of Brunswick Distribution

There is enthusiasm in the office of the Brunswick Co. over the showing made during 1921. The percentage of growth in distribution, noted in increase of number of new dealers in the Cincinnati territory, was 150 per cent over 1921. S. Reis, Cincinnati branch manager of the company, said: "Very many dealers in Cincinnati and nearby districts are realizing the value of the Brunswick line and are adding it to their stock of goods with fine success. During December our business was very large; much better than for the same period last year. Because of conditions, of course, the outlook for 1922 is not exceedingly brilliant, but we are quite encouraged. We are going out to get business and we will get it."

Prize for Good Sales Campaigning

The Hook Drug Co., Indianapolis, dealer in Columbia products, has won second prize in the national advertising contest conducted by the Columbia Co. The prizes were awarded for general excellence in sales campaigning. Emerson McCord, manager of the talking machine department of the Hook Drug Co., and Miss Elizabeth Horner, who write advertisements, must receive credit for their prize-winning work.

Howard L. Chubb, of the Chubb-Steinberg Music Shop, said: "We have been in the Victrola and record business but five months, and yet we are encouraged to believe that we will go on next year with a splendid business, as we have had thus far. Our trade during and before December was excellent. Even in the great rush just preceding Christmas we were able to satisfy every demand upon us. It seems to me that this speaks for a remarkably good stock of goods."

E. M. Abbott, dealer in machines and records, who has three stores in Cincinnati, has developed a remarkably fine trade. His Christmas business was good, as was that of the year. He looks forward with confidence to 1922.

Ross H. Wilson, manager of the Dealer Service department of the Columbia wholesale branch here, visited friends and relatives at Chicago during the holidays. R. H. Woodford, wholesale branch manager of the company, passed last week in New York. He attended there a meeting of the Columbia branch managers.

A surprising number of drug stores in the suburbs of Cincinnati, and even a delicatessen or two, have taken on talking machines as an auxiliary line. They have had little trouble in disposing of the necessarily limited stocks which they handled.

Advertising Brings Big Results

F. X. Donovan, manager of the Victrola department of the John Shillito Co., said: "A review of the year's business is very satisfactory. Although we undertook the sale of Victrolas slightly more than a year ago our business in machines and records has been surprising. We attribute our success in a great measure to our extensive advertising of this special department. We intend to continue this advertising campaign, particularly in newspapers, during the next year."

Holiday Demand for Jazz

Manager Pauling, of the Starr Piano Co., distributor of Starr talking machines and records, said: "Our holiday business in talking machines and records was very good. There were surprisingly few calls for Christmas hymns and carols. There seems to be such a demand for jazz records that not much time can be given to other records."

E. A. Gekow, talking machine dealer of Gorman, Tex., is planning to open a branch store in the Nowlin Building, De Leon, Tex.

The talking machine department of the Messerschmitt Jewelry & Optical Co., Fort Collins, Col., is now in charge of Miss Lillie Welch.

BELIEVES IN BILLBOARDS

Enterprising Columbia Dealer Uses Billboards to Advantage—Sells Many Grafonolas to Schools

Although A. F. Hibbard, Columbia dealer at Huntington, W. Va., has had his store only two years, he has already sold quite a number of Grafonolas to schools in his territory. He not only pushes Grafonola sales, but has a systematized method of attack in the record department, which consists of an intensive circularizing campaign among the schools, school teachers and principals, coupled with a unique sales idea.

Among Mr. Hibbard's latest publicity enterprises is a thirty-two sheet billboard, located near a street-car switch, where every car stops to wait for others to pass. This billboard is seen by many passengers who pass the switch day by day and it represents timely publicity.

MUSICAL CENSUS BRINGS SALES

The Lippert Jewelry & Music Store, Dyersville, Ia., took advantage of the lull last Summer to make a complete musical census of the 5,000 inhabitants of that town, together with some thousands of the rural population, and as a result of having the facts at hand has been closing an excellent business all Fall, disposing of twenty-two cabinet Victrolas in the month of November.

Whatever a man does, if that act is reinforced by his "upper story," he will come out on top.

Mid-West Point of View

WESTERN DIVISION OF THE WORLD, CHICAGO, ILL., JAN. 10, 1922.

WE did our New Year's resolving early, to avoid the rush. And so have others, so that by this time, no doubt, most of the mid-West members of the talking machine industry are settled down to the contemplation of the year 1922, and are asking themselves what it is likely to bring forth. Well, one guess sometimes may be no better or worse than another, nor are we wise enough to know whether our particular guess does, or does not, possess any especial virtues over those of our friends. But for so much as it may be worth, it is here presented for consideration.

Doing
Early

IN the first place, let us look at some facts; not deductions, not rumors, but facts. It is not a bit of use denying what everyone knows, namely, that during the greater part of the year now happily past the talking machine business was in rather a poor way. Its own vitality has pulled it through the worst time it ever experienced.

Facts,
Not

And that says much for its ability to take care of itself. It would likewise be ridiculous to deny that retailers have been stocked up for the greater part of the Summer and Fall and have not been ordering, during this period, save in the smallest possible quantities. The natural result—overstocked factories running, if at all, on short time—has been with us during these past months pretty continually. Nevertheless, the conditions which began to prevail at the beginning of last month (December), and which have continued to prevail right up to the date of writing without sign of relaxation, indicate a very remarkable probability. During December, as we can say on the very highest authority, retail business throughout the mid-West territories picked up wonderfully, with the natural result that many dealers found themselves short on certain favorite styles of machines and certain favorite record titles. Factories were unable to supply the last-minute demand, in spite of their generally stocked-up condition, for the demand was for certain styles and the stocks of these were rapidly exhausted. In consequence—as again we can say on high authority—many orders were taken at retail for future delivery of these favorite styles. These orders are now being filled. The outlook for the immediate future is therefore, from the narrow trade standpoint, not unfavorable at all.

BUT there are other and equally important factors to be considered, broader in latitude and reaching towards the general conditions of national and international industrial activity. For the benefit of our mid-West readers, therefore, it gives us much pleasure to be able to say that, as of January 1, 1922, the employment situation in our territories is steadily improving. The revival is slow, but it is none the less certain. Factories in various lines, such as clothing, shoes, furniture and so on, are reopening, or, if they had been on part time, are going gradually on to full time. The purchasing power of the people is thus being gradually restored. The process will be slow, without a doubt, and there will be reactions, arrests of progress, hesitations, difficulties. Still, whereas one year ago we could only hope that things might not become even worse, to-day we can say that things have been as bad as they can be. The clean-up has been appallingly complete, and the survivors are the strong and the sound only. We look forward, then, to the coming twelve months with unabated confidence, strengthened by the knowledge that world conditions are gradually coming towards a settlement, if only because it has finally been seen that some sort of settlement is essential to the future of civilization. Moreover, the American people by now generally recognize that their own prosperity has become so bound up with the prosperity of the world that they must take their share in the labor of house-cleaning. Thus it becomes certain that, with a clearer view of the facts, with a cleaner state of business, now down to rock-bottom and reaching upwards again, we may all join in looking forward with clear-eyed confidence, not blinking the facts, but taking advantage of them,

Broader

THE announcement carried in a news column of this month's Talking Machine World to the effect that W. H. Wade has taken over one of the oldest and most famous of Chicago's retail piano houses and proposes to carry on its business in connection with his own, directs attention to the career of a merchant who has known, better than most men, how to make the merchandising of talking machines into a process of constant growth and success. To-day "Bill" Wade is one of the largest sellers at retail of both Columbia and Brunswick machines to be found in the mid-West territory, and his handsome warerooms on Chicago's magnificent Michigan Boulevard are by this time in the nature of a trade landmark. Ever since the old days with Lyon & Healy he has been a worker and a thinker. He to-day is showing some discouraged merchants that the talking machine business is a big and worth-while, success-bringing business to those who treat it rightly.

Wonderful
William

NOT everyone realizes how the mid-West is becoming the center—a new and strong center—for the manufacture and distribution of records.

Progress
in Variety

We would not say a word against the great and wonderful collections which were first begun in the old days when no one believed in the talking machine, and which retain their foremost position today. But at the same time we do believe that it is a very good thing to have as much variety as possible in this particular department of our industry. It is very necessary that there should be as much as possible of healthy competition in this line, as in all others, simply because our industry is still in a fluid state and still holds in solution unlimited possibilities for development. Not all those possibilities can ever be worked out by any one group or even by any small number of groups. It seems quite obvious that the future progress of the industry rests, as much as on anything else, upon the perfection of the art of recording. As one finds things at present, each make of record has its peculiar advantages. One is noticeably free from mechanical scratch. Another excels in clarity, i. e., in ability to render the individual voices of a tone mass with distinctness and cleanness. Another, again, is superior in durability, lasting through many hundreds of successive playings without perceptible deterioration of the surface. Each make, we say, has its own peculiar virtues, but no one make can possibly combine them all, just as no one make can be without some distinct virtues. Wherefore the value of competition. We are glad to see a variety of makes, and still more glad to see them all steadily improving as time goes on. No one can question the immense value in a musical way of the records of standard music, both vocal and instrumental. They are playing a vital part in the upbuilding of musical knowledge in America and particularly among those people who have little opportunity of hearing our great artists or our great musical organizations. The talking machine record has a divine mission because musical culture aids in the refinement of our civilization.

AND now, as we reach the last few lines of our page, may we say to our friends of the mid-Western trade one word of a more strictly personal and confidential nature? May we say that it is a pleasure to note how, month by month, the asperities, the back-bitings and the personal irritabilities which used to disfigure the relations existing between individual members of the industry, between rival dealers, and between newcomers and old standbys in the manufacturing branches, are being smoothed down into nothingness? It shows that the trade, as a trade, is rapidly becoming settled, staple, steady; that the wildcat days are over and that those who to-day survive are worthy associates of the great pioneers. Gentlemen, you want, and we want, to see the industry do big things in 1922 and ever after. One essential towards those wished-for big doings is mutual forbearance and friendliness. You are beginning to show these qualities; and though it be late to wish you a Happy New Year, at least we can congratulate you on your wider vision.

Concluding With Compliments

CHICAGO, ILL., January 8.—The keynote of business during the year of 1922 will be keen competition. This deduction is based on a census of dealers' opinions derived from the holiday business just passed. All indications point to a feeling of unconcern regarding haphazard makes of instruments that were placed on the market in the past two or three years. Many of the dealers who had instruments of this type on their floors during the Christmas rush still had them after the rush was over. In many instances these instruments have been consigned to the basement "for keeps." The buyers during the holiday season showed what they wanted. The dealers had to have goods of a high quality and reasonable price or else the customer invariably walked out. On the other hand, the dealers who had goods of quality and workmanship did a splendid business. Furthermore, these very same dealers who sold only goods of quality feel that they may be sure of good business for 1922. Consequently, they have no fear for the future. For the inferior grades of machines, as a matter of fact, there has been no demand to speak of for a number of months, and it seems as though these goods cannot be disposed of even at a sacrifice. The accumulated factory stocks of such machines were sent into storage by the hundreds, at charges which, by now, have accumulated until the total costs have become prohibitive.

On the other hand, there was quite a shortage on some of the well-known brands of instruments during the holidays. This condition had been predicted in these columns for several months and reasons had been given. For the sake of argument we again state them briefly.

During the Summer months the factories curtailed manufacturing to a considerable extent and did not cut any lumber or manufacture any instruments until the finished goods on their floors should be depleted. By the time this had happened the trade was already well into the Fall season. Then, and only then, the great number of manufacturers began to prepare for the late Fall and Christmas season. But even then they only manufactured enough to keep up with current demands. It was not until November that they put on full forces and began working at top speed. Then warnings were sent out to all dealers asking them to anticipate as nearly as possible their Christmas business. Many dealers did this and many did not. Those who did met with no serious shortages, whereas those who did not suffered considerable loss.

There is a tendency on the part of some dealers to offer goods to the public on long-time payments, with a small initial down payment. The most conservative dealers are not taking kindly to this plan, because, in many instances, these men have been handling pianos for years and know what the piano trade went through when it instituted the so-called "banking system." By that is meant leaving goods out on long time with small payments and depending upon accrued interest to fatten their wallets. The piano men did this for a long time, but, several years ago, found out that the best way to fatten a pocketbook and keep it fat was by the quick turnover route. They found out that it paid in greater revenue to turn over a dollar several times within a year than it did to leave it out at a certain amount of interest per year. It took them quite a long time to figure this out, but they finally got out of the rut and have been making good money ever since. Therefore, there is no reason why the talking machine men should not take advantage of this lesson, which cost the piano men many a dollar.

Wolf Mfg. Industries Open Chicago Office

The Wolf Manufacturing Industries of Quincy, Ill., have just opened a Chicago sales office at 123 West Madison street. At the new office the company are exhibiting their entire line of high-grade talking machines of both upright and console types. This office is under the supervision of Carl Knittel, sales manager of the concern. Mr. Knittel expects to spend most of his time in and about Chicago, but contemplates making monthly visits to surrounding territory. The Wolf Industries are bringing out many new instruments in 1922 models and, as Mr. Knittel says, these models are built along the lines desired by the public, and in bringing them out the officials of the Wolf concern have closely adhered to the aforesaid desires.

Brunswick Service Was Efficient

Harry B. Bibb, sales manager of the Chicago division of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., stated during an interview with a representative of the Talking Machine World that, with the exception of certain slight and forewarned shortage, Brunswick dealers throughout his territory received their holiday goods in good time and in very large quantities. Most of the shortage was for Stratford consoles and No. 117 uprights. This seems to indicate that the public demand is for the higher class of instruments. Quite a number of dealers lost a great amount of business during the holiday rush by not an-

FROM every part of the United States we are receiving letters like the four reproduced below. Hundreds of stores who have ordered our "Demonstration Package" of three Geer Repeaters have found to their surprise and profit that all three repeaters were "sold out" the same day they were received. To say that Geer Repeaters sell on sight, therefore, is not a figure of speech. It is the truth. In nine cases out of ten a demonstration makes the sale.

The Geer Repeater is as simple and easy to use as a record. It repeats instantly and as often as wanted. It cannot break or get out of order. It protects the record, the machine and the needle. # L & H Fibre Needle Cutter

While every talking machine merchant understands the advantage of using fibre needles, particularly for the expensive records, sometimes the sale of these needles is small because of their seemingly higher price.

As a matter of fact, the fibre needle is very economical when used with the improved L & H Fibre Needle Cutter.

The L & H Fibre Needle Cutter will repoint each needle ten to twelve times. It is as simple to operate as a cigar cutter and almost as small. The new, improved method of manufacture makes the cutter practically unbreakable. For this reason, Lyon & Healy absolutely guarantee each cutter against breakage or trouble of any kind. Should one fail to give satisfaction, it will be replaced or repaired, free of charge.

Despite these remarkable improvements, the price of the L & H Fibre Needle Cutter has been reduced to pre-war level.

icipating their wants earlier. In spite of the fact that warnings were sent out months ago, some dealers waited until the last minute to order their holiday goods, and consequently were disappointed.

Mr. Bibb is sure that all dealers in his territory are looking ahead to a good year.

Changes Company Name

The R. C. Wade Co., of Chicago, which manufactures the Tonofone talking machine needles, announces that it has reorganized the company and has changed its corporate name to the Tonofone Co. The change in officers has been completed and the new men filling the official chairs are: J. F. Johantgen, president; Alfred Enger, vice-president, and E. E. Powell, secretary and treasurer. The financial condition of the company has been materially strengthened by the addition of new stockholders, who have added considerable to the capital of the company.

The Tonofone needle made its appearance in the field several years ago and since its introduction has met with great favor throughout the trade. It is a two-piece affair, with a point made from resilient, flexible metal, which embodies many striking characteristics. For example, the ingredients of the metals making up the flexible point have been calculated to such nicety that when traversing the record groove the needle acts in the same manner as a pneumatic tire rolling over a cobblestone pavement; that is, it does not bounce from one wave to the next, as does the steel tire of a wagon wheel, but, like the pneumatic, rides the hills with perfect smoothness and falls down into the depressions. The shank of the needle is made of brass because the manufacturers believe that the ideal needle should have no definite vibratory sound-making quality of its own. The resilient point is toneless, and so is the shank; therefore, neither part adds or takes away from the tonal qualities of the record.

New Brunswick Traveler

The latest addition to the Brunswick traveling forces is Harry L. Ferris, who has just been appointed to cover northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin. For many years Mr. Ferris had been associated with his brothers in the manufacturing business at Waukesha, Wis., which is his home town. Mr. Ferris succeeds H. R. Mirich, who resigned after lengthy service to open an exclusive Brunswick shop in the cooperative store at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.

Lead Christmas Caravan

One of the most novel Christmas decorations that have been seen around Chicago in a long time was put into use by Bill and Gus Fricke, proprietors of the Lakeside Supply Co., during the holiday week. Each year these gentlemen make it a point to get out with other business men and form a line of good fellows for the purpose of donating Christmas gifts and delivering Christmas baskets throughout the poorer sections of the city.

This year both Bill and Gus decided that they were going to lead the parade or know the reason why. They gained their leadership in the parade by means of a Christmas tree, about three feet in height, which was mounted on the radiator of their car. The tree was decorated with brightly colored glass bells, tinsel and fancy little Santa Clauses, and was illuminated by sixteen small electric lights of various colors. These electric lights were wired in multiple and run from the electric circuits of the car. Most of the delivering was done during the evening, and the Fricke car, being the only one decorated with an electrically lighted Christmas tree, naturally was placed at the head of the procession.

Opens New Brunswick Shop

The Deimel Furniture Co., of this city, has just opened another new, exclusive Brunswick shop at 2701 North avenue. This new shop was opened for the Christmas holidays, and the proprietors were well pleased with the results obtained. The Deimel Furniture Co. now operates three Brunswick shops. The first is located in its furniture establishment at 2522 West North avenue, and the second was opened during November, 1920, at 3957 North avenue. All these shops are exclusively Brunswick, and equipped with up-to-date demonstration booths and record racks.

Purchases Twichell Store

The Wade Talking Machine Co., of 12-14 North Michigan avenue, gave out the announcement this week through its president, W. H. Wade, that negotiations had just been completed to take over the retail establishment of J. O. Twichell. The Twichell business is one of the oldest retail establishments in Chicago, and was organized in 1879. The merger includes, with stock and good will, the agencies for the Sohmer, Emerson, Schomacker and Lindeman piano lines.

Murray Harrison, who has been manager of the Twichell concern for twenty years, will continue in that capacity. For the present it is planned to conduct both the Wade store and the Twichell store at their present addresses, but on or about May 1, 1922, both stores will be merged and located under one roof somewhere along Piano Row. The lease of the Michigan avenue store has been sold by Mr. Wade and after May 1 it is expected that some new retail talking machine store will be opened there. In his Michigan avenue place of business Mr. Wade retails Brunswick and Columbia talking machines and the same line is handled by the Twichell concern.

Sends Out New Calendar Fillers

The mailing department of the Chicago Talking Machine Co. spent some mighty busy hours the week between Christmas and New Year's sending out new calendar fillers for the year 1922 to Victor dealers. Some years ago the Chicago Talking Machine Co. sent out a beautiful red leather covered desk calendar which is very cleverly made. Between the calendar pad and the frame work is a piece of isinglass on which is painted a red line, and by the turn of a screw at the top of the calendar the line extends and indicates each day. The frame work is a permanent affair and the fillers containing the months are replaced each year.

Vacationing in Florida

F. S. Spofford, local Sonora dealer, with headquarters in the Republic Building, left Chicago last week for Sarasota, Fla., where he maintains a Winter home. At this time every year Mr. Spofford spends a several weeks' vacation there, as he believes that after the Christmas holidays is a logical time for a dealer to rest up.

Issue New Catalog

Lyon & Healy have just issued their 1922 abridged catalog, which contains the latest additions to their extensive line of musical instruments and supplies. The catalog also contains the latest revised prices. It has more than 100 pages and every article described is beautifully illustrated. The talking machine section of the catalog is devoted exclusively to Victor goods. In conjunction with the regular catalog this new abridged edition covers everything handled or manufactured by Lyon & Healy.

Columbia Artists in the City

Gus Van and Joe Schenck, exclusive Columbia record artists, are now appearing in the Ziegfeld Follies at the Colonial Theatre, Chicago. Van and Schenck's visit to this city last year will be remembered by the music industry of Chicago for their willingness to participate in any and all of the interests of the industry.

What of 1922?

When a World representative asked Leigh J. Hunt, of the Oro-Tone Co., to make a prediction relative to the business outlook for 1922, Mr. Hunt replied: "That's a big thing to ask a man to do. In fact, I do not believe any man can do it. However, here is my guess: I am of the opinion that the greatest trials to which the trade could ever be put have already been gone through. This ought to augur well for 1922. The ups and downs of 1921 ought to teach a wonderful lesson to the trade. We learned things during that year which were unheard of before and the experience gained should stand us in good stead in the years to come. Too rapid expansion brought about many a failure in the past, and this alone causes me to believe that the failures will be fewer in 1922. But, above all else, the man in our trade, and every other trade, learned that the fighter is rewarded and the fellow who gets out and works is going to end up the year of 1922 with a very satisfactory business report. On the other hand, the fellow who is spending his time hanging crepe will most likely continue to do the same for the balance of the year, instead of working, and at the end of 1922 is going to have a very unsatisfactory balance sheet. For 1921 the Oro-Tone Co.'s business was very pleasing to its officers and increased to a considerable extent even in the face of the difficulties through which the trade went. Every man in our company believes that the business for 1922 is going to be what we make it. And we are determined to make it satisfactory."

Music With Meals

Arnold Shircliffe, superintendent of dining car service of the Monon Route, has the honor of being the first to bring music to the patrons of that railroad. Some time ago Mr. Shircliffe purchased a Brunswick talking machine, and in due time became an ardent Brunswick fan. Recently, when suggestions were asked by the company toward the betterment of the road and the greater comfort of the passengers, Mr. Shircliffe proposed that the Monon dining service should install talking machines in the dining cars. This plan was given a trial, and a No. 117 upright

Price Reductions on Enclosed Motors

We have recently made sharp reductions in the prices of enclosed, self-lubricated motors—due to decreased costs in labor and material and a larger output.

This will put the Enclosed Motor within the reach of those manufacturers whose desire has been to use this motor, but whose lines have not been high enough in price to do so.

The same quality and high degree of inspection will be maintained.

REMEMBER

You don't have to tune this motor. It comes to you silent and smooth running. It reaches your customers in the same condition.

Ask about various models and prices.

Brunswick model was placed aboard the diner of the Indianapolis flyer, which leaves Chicago at 5:30 every evening. During the dinner hour the Brunswick is kept busy playing all the latest Brunswick operatic and popular selections. After the dinner hour has passed a continuous musicale is given, which lasts until about ten o'clock and to which all passengers are invited. Of course, all passengers aboard the train cannot be accommodated in the diner at one time, so Mr. Shircliffe has hit upon the plan of issuing tickets to all passengers, inviting them to appear at a specified time. In this way all passengers are treated to a high-class musicale.

Planning Expansion

The Fletcher-Wickes Co., manufacturer of the well-known Fletcher tone arm and sound box, expects to enlarge the size of its present offices at 6 East Lake street. The contemplated expansion calls for practically the entire floor of the building. At present the company occupies about half of this space, with a similar space on the third floor and a large stockroom in the basement.

Brunswick Man Disabled

E. J. Ackerman, city salesman for Brunswick, had the misfortune to meet with a severe accident on Christmas eve, when he fell, dislocating his left shoulder and breaking his left wrist. The accident happened when he was coming out of his garage after putting up his car.

Rudolph Wurlitzer Suffers From Burglars

Four safe-blowers broke into the store of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., at 700 West Jackson boulevard, their wholesale branch, on the night of December 23 and escaped with quite a sum of money secured from the sale of Christmas goods. The robbery was quite spectacular. Fred Begason, an employe of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., was bound, gagged and forced to watch three of the men while they drilled into the two safes. One of the men stood over him with a gun, threatening to blow out his brains if he moved. According to his story, the quartet got in through a rear door, confronted him before he was aware of it and bound him securely. After the four had left the building Mr. Begason started working at his bonds. He finally freed himself and gave the alarm.

Now Handle "True Time"

The Lakeside Supply Co., of this city, announces that it has taken on the "True Time" electric motor, manufactured by the Efficiency Electric Corp., of New York City. In speaking of the new line, W. F. Fricke, secretary of the company, said: "We have always advocated electric drives and in the past year have used over 3,000 electric motors in our business. The electric motor has many advantages over the spring drive in that, for one thing, the come-backs and repairs are perhaps 70 per cent less than we have on spring motors. The troubles are usually trifling—such as, for instance, a broken wire or a loose connection—and repairs are very readily made.

"The trade has to a great extent contended that electric motors do not constitute an important selling point, but I believe this is a mistake, because they are very much easier to maintain and keep in shape than spring motors. We want to try to make 1922 an electric year, and we are sure that we can do this. In addition to having machines electrically equipped the replacement business is very lucrative and brings good returns."

Now With Chicago Talking Machine Co.

R. E. Kane, who for the past three years has been connected with the traveling sales force of Sherman, Clay & Co., San Francisco, has joined the Chicago Talking Machine Co. and will work with the inside sales force. Mr. Kane is very well known on the Coast and his many friends in the trade there were very sorry to see him leave. He comes to Chicago at an opportune time, for just now the Chicago Talking Machine Co. is about to hold its annual conclave, when the traveling men in from the road go over their plans for the new year.

Firestone With Bissell-Weisert

Fred Firestone is now associated with the Bissell-Weisert Co., Victor retailers. In this new connection Mr. Firestone is in charge of the Bissell-Weisert Co.'s outside sales forces and at present is busily engaged in organizing a large canvassing crew. His addition to the Bissell-Weisert sales force is in line with the expansion that the new quarters on Michigan avenue will permit when it moves on January 15. Mr. Fire-

Chairman of New Association

At a recent meeting of the Western Advertising Managers' Association C. E. Byrne, vice-president of Steger & Sons Piano Mfg. Co., was appointed chairman of the By-laws Committee. Mr. Byrne is a man of much eminence in Chicago advertising circles, who, as advertising manager of the Steger Co., received numerous compliments for the manner in which he maintained its constructive policies. His abilities have received additional recognition recently in his election as secretary and treasurer of the Steger & Sons Piano Mfg. Co., maker of Steger phonographs and pianos.

B. J. Duesler Stirs Up Fort Wayne

Probably the most sensational of all the many carload sales conducted throughout the United States by the Columbia Graphophone Co. was that of B. J. Duesler, Columbia dealer in Fort Wayne, Ind.

A solid carload of Columbia Grafonolas was bought by Mr. Duesler to supply the large demand created by the holiday season. Upon the arrival of the car in Fort Wayne a fleet of motor trucks was sent to the switch track and loaded with Grafonolas. Large canvas signs were placed on both sides of each truck, telling of the arrival of the Christmas Grafonolas. The trucks then staged a big parade through the downtown business section. A Grafonola and Magnavox on the first truck entertained the Saturday afternoon throng through which the trucks passed as a demonstration to the public. One of the trucks broke down at a busy street intersection and the traffic was held up for a while.

One of the interesting features of the demonstration was the fact that The Better Business Association of Fort Wayne questioned whether or not the Grafonola packing cases actually contained Grafonolas. An invitation on the part of Mr. Duesler to the officials of the Association to participate in unloading the "empty cases" from the trucks brought from the Association a hearty congratulation on the unique advertising and sales stunt. All the local papers took photos of the trucks in action and tremendous publicity was given the sale in all papers for the succeeding week.

Visits the East

H. L. Fricke, who travels the northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin territories for the Chicago Talking Machine Co., spent the holiday season visiting relatives, friends and trade acquaintances in New York and Philadelphia.

About Victor

Something rather original as far as Christmas remembrances go was received by the officers of the Chicago Talking Machine Co. this year when the Krausgill Piano Co., of Louisville, Ky., sent them a live opossum. Shortly after its arrival a christening was held and he was named Victor. After a jolly party, during which Victor proved to be very much alive, the folks all got into automobiles and drove to Lincoln Park, where it was presented to the Zoo with the compliments of the Chicago Talking Machine Co.

Returns From Trip

Manager John McKenna, of the Columbia Graphophone Co.'s Chicago office, has returned from a trip through Wisconsin, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan and Illinois, where he has been looking over the field. He reports that the trade did an excellent holiday business and that there are very few dealers who do not look forward to a steadier and bigger business for 1922.

Changes Hands

M. F. Hill, who for the past twenty-eight years has been in the mercantile business at Lagrange, Ill., a suburb of Chicago, is reported to have purchased the Forest Park Brunswick Shop. This shop, it is said, will be conducted by Mr. Hill and his wife. Mr. Hill plans to spend most of his time on the outside looking after business and canvassing, while Mrs. Hill will look after the store. The Forest Park Brunswick Shop is exclusively Brunswick, but carries a full line of sheet music besides.

Sawkins Purchases Westfall

News has reached Chicago that the Sawkins Piano Co., of Alma, Mich., has purchased outright the complete business of E. J. Westfall, of Mt. Pleasant, Mich. The new company makes the announcement that work will be begun immediately to remodel the store and put in a new stock. Besides a complete line of pianos and musical instruments this company carries both the Brunswick and Columbia lines of talking machines. The store will be under the supervision of E. P. Mahr, who formerly was in charge of the music section of the Cleveland Department Store.

Records in Libraries

During a recent meeting of librarians from public libraries all over the United States, which was held in Chicago recently, the feasibility of carrying a complete library of all talking machine records was discussed. Just how the discussion ended has not been made public as yet, but from the little rumors picked up here and there by The World correspondent it seems certain that ere long operatic and popular records will be obtainable in all of the public libraries throughout the country. It might be a good idea for the manufacturers of talking machine records to get in touch with their local librarians and find out what the plans will be.

Now Illustrious Potentate

At the annual election of officers of the Medinah Temple, Chicago, A. A. O. N. M. S., which was held on the evening of December 29, William H. Wade, head of the Wade Talking Machine Co., was unanimously elected Illustrious Potentate. The local Shrine boasts of a membership of over 20,000 Nobles and is said to be the largest single fraternal organization in the world. Shriners throughout the trade kept Potentate Wade's place of business at 14 North Michigan avenue jammed for the balance of the week. The visitors represented other temples in all parts of the country and were calling to pay their respects. Numerous telegrams of a congratulatory nature were received by him, as were also many beautiful floral offerings, which went to decorate the store.

Fine New Shop in Decatur

After months of careful planning and preparation, Richard Calhoun, of Decatur, Ill., opened his doors to the public on December 20 with one of the most beautiful music stores in the Central West, under the title of Calhoun's Music Shop.

Mr. Calhoun has been a resident of Decatur for several years, being formerly connected with a Decatur newspaper. The new store is decorated in blue paneling with white enamel work. Columbia Grafonolas and Columbia records, Q R S player rolls and sheet music are being handled exclusively.

Binger Gets Large Order

F. S. Binger, representative of the Columbia Graphophone Co. in northern Indiana territory, has taken the largest individual order ever received from any Fort Wayne phonograph dealer and has turned over to B. J. Duesler a complete carload of present model Columbia Grafonolas. One week later Mr. Binger visited Logansport, Ind., and sold to E. F. Watkins, Columbia dealer in that city, a similar carload of Grafonolas. He will conduct a similar carload sale.

This is "Bing's" thirteenth year with the Columbia Grafonola Co., being connected with the auditing department before going on the road.

Increase in Record Mailing

The past Christmas season has revealed a surprising increase in the quantity of records which are now being delivered by mail. A few years ago the amount of mail orders for records was negligible among Chicago dealers. To-day, due largely to a growing appreciation on the part of the public, records ordered by mail and delivered by mail mount into huge figures.

Many machine owners who live in the suburbs surrounding Chicago have been unable to find sufficiently big stocks to select from in the stores of their local dealers. The result has been that they have formed connections with some of the big concerns in town and by judicious use of the catalogs and the names of alternate selections have been able to make as satisfactory purchases as though they were able to hear the records before buying.

One very essential thing has been secure packing, for many dealers have learned through bitter experience that to trust records to the parcel post when insufficiently protected has meant complete loss, not only of the stock itself but of the patronage of the customer.

One of Chicago's most successful dealers recently said to The World representative: "I have one customer who, this Christmas season, sent thirty-seven records away to his relatives and friends. He explained that every one of these people had a talking machine, that this sort of gift was always a very welcome one and that he was able, because of these conditions, to go into one store and do all his Christmas shopping at one time. He is, of course, a great lover of music and evidently his family and relatives are, too. He selects the better-class records, such as operatic, and in this way helps his friends to build up a library and at the same time perpetuates the memory of the gift in their minds. As he is a very busy man who travels and is obliged to spend most of his time on the road, he finds it a great convenience to go in and get all his shopping done at once. He never comes back to the city but he remembers his mother and a sister and sends them both two or three records. I imagine he is the sort of a man who does not write letters, but expresses his regards and his thoughtfulness in his own way.

"During the holiday season he fussed quite a bit because the Christmas boxes which we had were not sufficiently elaborate. He maintained that the biggest half of a gift was in its wrapping, especially if the recipients were women, and next year I am going to have some very elaborate boxes made and, using him as a nucleus, I am going to see if I can't build up a good business in this one direction. Of course, I will make a charge for the special boxes, not necessarily a high price, but one that will at least cover the cost and give me a fair profit."

To Protect Instalment Sales

At a recent luncheon of the Chicago Piano Club C. L. Davies, of the Illinois Furniture Association and the Chicago Retail Credit Men's Association, told of the movement to protect instalment sales from "skips." Mr. Davies mentioned the city ordinance recently nullified in a decision by Judge Trude, which required moving and van companies to keep a record of the removal of household furniture, giving the address at which received and the address at which delivered. The decision of Judge Trude has been carried up to the Court of Appeals in an effort to prove that the ordinance is legal.

It is difficult to understand who would oppose this, inasmuch as no honest man objects to having people know where he goes, nor where he lives.

Where Will Be "Phonograph Row"?

The recent move of the Bissell-Weisert Co. from the Fine Arts Building to a ground floor location on Michigan avenue, near Madison street, has aroused considerable interest among music men generally as to the future center of the local musical instrument business. At present it is strongly entrenched at Wabash avenue, centering around Jackson boulevard, where four of the biggest houses of the music industry are located.

Many talking machine men are of the opinion that because of the growing popularity of Michigan boulevard as a promenade and the immense improvement resulting from the boulevard link bridge there will be a tendency to locate new talking machine shops on Michigan avenue from Madison street north.

Stores of the ultra exclusive "shop" type are the sort which thrive best on such a boulevard as Michigan avenue. It will be interesting to see if this prediction will materialize.

New Corporation

The Bowen Music Shop has been incorporated with a capital of $10,000 to deal in musical instruments. The shop is located at 5516 South Halsted street. Its incorporators are John King, John J. Bowen and Margaret Bowen. The lines to be handled have not yet been announced.

Another new house is the Quigley Music Co., at 129 North Clark street. It is to publish and deal in musical instruments, sheet music and so forth. The firm has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000 by Benjamin Garrison, J. Lewis Guyon and Thomas J. Quigley.

Pushing Quality Goods

Of genuine value to every dealer in talking machines or, in fact, any other class of merchandise are the conclusions reached in an editorial entitled "Old Convictions Are Verified," which appears in the January issue of Field Quality News, one of the house organs published by the great house of Marshall Field & Co. This editorial says, in part:

"The record of a year is completed and time is placing before us a fresh sheet upon which to chronicle another chapter of industrial history.

"On the brightest page of the narrative is written the epic of workers, of those who marched successfully through a difficult business year by means of untiring effort. Our records show that the alert, hard-working salesmen of this house have continued to make a creditable record, regardless of their territory or the difficulty of the period.

"The same significant fact characterizes the year for our customers. In every section of the country there have been merchants, awake to opportunities their communities afforded, untiring in their effort to develop business, for whom the closing year has proved successful beyond their expectations. The year has rewarded industry.

"Another bright memory and significant lesson of 1921 is that merchandise of high quality enjoyed the surest sale. It has proved that Americans understand that there is economy in quality; the merchants whose reputation for quality in merchandise was strongest were best able to maintain a large volume of business.

"These two golden rules—assayed in the crucible of 1921—may safely guide us through the coming year. Your business and ours cannot be endangered by chance circumstances; through the years they must hold to an unfluctuating standard of quality in merchandise and meet adversity with the surest weapon—alert, tireless industry."

little instrument, but at the present time he is negotiating for larger manufacturing facilities whereby he hopes to put the instrument on the market in large numbers.

Importance of Advertising in 1922

William H. Rankin, president of the William H. Rankin Co., one of the largest of Chicago's advertising agencies and which the last few years has handled as much talking machine advertising as probably any agency in the country, has written a very interesting article for the Chicago Journal of Commerce. It is entitled "Advertising to Be Greatest Producer of the New Year" and is worthy of the most careful attention of everyone in this or any other trade, whether he be manufacturer, jobber or retail merchant. He naturally includes salesmanship as an integral part of his subject. Mr. Rankin directs his talk largely to the manufacturer, but what he has to say can be applied equally well to the business of the wholesaler and dealer. He starts off in this pertinent manner:

"Nineteen twenty-two will be a real advertising year. When you compare business conditions just now with those conditions that were with us and in front of us for 1921 we can say with a sigh of relief that we prefer the outlook for 1922. One thing certain, 1921 proved the necessity of both salesmen and advertising. I believe these two factors, combined intelligently, will be far more important in the promotion of business in 1922 than in any one year during the last ten.

"The manufacturer wants, and must have, the salesman who really sells—sells on such a basis that when he goes back he will get repeat orders. The same manufacturer wants, and must have, advertising that will educate the consumer to ask for—to insist on having—the goods advertised. Instead of advertising only for prestige—instead of so-called 'institutional' advertising—most manufacturers now look upon advertising for just what it is, namely, the most economical way to create a consumer demand for their goods."

Further on in his article Mr. Rankin has these paragraphs:

"The prime factors in selling in 1922 will be the salesman, advertising to the dealer and, last and most important, advertising to the consumer.

"We must plan to help the dealer more through advertising to create the demand for products he handles and also to teach him how to advertise and sell the products he handles, so that the consumer will get lower prices because of quicker turnover in sales of advertised products.

"Advertising will help manufacturers to realize their fondest hopes in 1922.

"Go ahead!" means saner and safer use of advertising—better sales and business conditions resulting in 1922.

"Set the example and work ten, twelve or sixteen hours a day, and in that way we can catch up for the time lost in 1920.

"Newspapermen, salesmen and advertising men can do much to improve business conditions, as they always do—and as I believe they will do—in the year which has just opened.

"One of the best ways to help is to encourage buying at readjustment prices. Every buying and selling transaction helps to bring back prosperity, helps the retailer clear his shelves, helps the manufacturer sell to the retailer and it helps the man who works for the manufacturer, so that man can buy from the retailer and his purchase can move again in the same beneficial circle. Therefore, I say 1922 will be a real advertising year."

Addition to Rodeheaver Staff

Mrs. Sue Hewling, who has been connected with the Martin Band Instrument Co., of this city, for some time and who is well known locally as a musician, is now connected with the sales force of the Rodeheaver Co., 218 South Wabash avenue. Mrs. Hewling will cover the Chicago territory in the interests of the records manufactured by the company.

Brunswick on the Canadian Pacific

Word comes from Vancouver, B. C., that the Kent Piano Co., Ltd., with retail stores at that city and Victoria is reporting most encouraging sales in its Brunswick departments. Although the Brunswick is a recent acquisition by the Kent Co., the well-known phonograph has proven decidedly popular on the Canadian Pacific Coast. With the aid of the progressive merchandising methods of the Kent Piano Co. the Brunswick has been placed in the front ranks of the talking machine trade of British Columbia.

Changes in Texas House

Some important changes have taken place in the Bush & Gerts Piano Co. in Dallas, Texas. Robert L. Mayhew has been elected first vice-president and general manager, and Paul E. Burling becomes the general sales manager. Mr. Mayhew is an experienced man in the piano trade, but has been more recently with the Mayhew Investment Co., of Dallas. Mr. Burling, who was already second vice-president of the company, has been a special salesman for the Bush & Gerts Co. and is strongly affiliated with various Dallas musical organizations.

Early this year President W. L. Bush, who is again in Texas after a Winter spent in Chicago at the piano factory of the Bush & Gerts Co., will go to Houston for the reorganization of the company's two stores in that city, which will be merged under one roof. Instead of maintaining separate locations for the Victrola, record and player roll headquarters three very desirable stores, with a total frontage of seventy-five feet on Travis street and one hundred feet on Rusk avenue, will be redecorated and equipped for occupancy, giving a big corner location, affording not only ample space for the piano department, but also for the Victor record department, which needs the additional space it will now have.

Arthur D. Geissler a Visitor

Arthur D. Geissler, president of the Chicago Talking Machine Co., with headquarters in New York City, has been spending some time, as usual, at the Chicago office. He is gratified with the amount of Victor business being done in the Middle West. He found out that the December business of the Chicago Talking Machine Co. was a little more than an even break over last year and that it showed an even greater increase over the Decembers of the pre-war period. He returned to New York this week, as did also Vice-president Dan Creed.

He's Been Europing

Samuel Rosenau, who owns a chain of Columbia stores on the West Side, recently returned from a protracted trip through Europe. Most of his time was spent in Hungary. He got many good points and some bad ones from a study of the conditions in the talking machine industry abroad and is going over there again next Spring to see if he cannot get some more good ones.

Accepts Important Position

F. K. Pennington, who was formerly associated with the Columbia Co. of New York, has accepted the very responsible position of general sales manager of the A. S. Dick Co., the large manufacturer of mimeographs, etc., whose headquarters are located in this city.

Among the Visitors

J. B. Ryde and Jewett Fuller, proprietors of Fuller-Ryde, Indianapolis, Ind., were visitors to Chicago the first week of the new year. Both gentlemen, who, by the way, handle Victor talking machines exclusively, reported an excellent business for the holiday trade.

J. E. Meagher, of Ford's Meagher Music Co., of Madison, Wisconsin, paid a visit to his friends in the Chicago trade the first of the week. Mr. Meagher had to say that the dealers as a whole throughout Madison were well satisfied with their year's work.

A conference was held the first week in January by all Victor travelers of Lyon & Healy. Manager L. C. Wiswell presided and plans for the year of 1922 were gone over. Immediately after the conference all the travelers departed for their respective territories.

E. J. Pruin, of Grand Rapids, and his Grand Rapids store manager, L. A. Shoppe, were visitors here the first of the year.

Ben F. Dvorak Sells

Ben F. Dvorak, who conducted a retail Victor shop at 7339 West Madison street, Chicago, has sold out his interests to Wesley H. Wiehe. Mr. Wiehe was formerly connected with Montgomery Ward. Mr. Dvorak, who conducted this place of business for the last six years, has made no plans as to the future other than a visit to Los Angeles.

Keep Their Dealers Busy

The national advertising campaign, which was put into operation several months ago by the W. W. Kimball Co., is bringing splendid results, according to J. V. Sill, wholesale manager of that company. Kimball advertising is appearing in national publications which are known in advertising circles as the quality group, and to date many interesting inquiries have been received. All inquiries received are turned over to Kimball dealers, who are located in the terri-

Chicago, Illinois.

The Sterling Reproducer with Edison attachment not only harmonizes in appearance with the Edison machine, but harmonizes with it in its perfect adaptation to all Edison requirements.

To say that the Sterling Reproducer plays all records and plays them beautifully is no idle statement. It is based on scientific facts which talking machine experts will appreciate.

The Sterling Reproducer when used on the Edison absolutely synchronizes when playing both hill and dale and lateral records. The Edison machine automatically moves the reproducer 150 threads to the inch and sufficient free motion is allowed by the Sterling for the difference between 150 and 80 threads. Upon completion of the record, when the lever is operated to release the reproducer from the record, the reproducer automatically returns to its original or starting position.

ories from which these inquiries originated and Kimball dealers are being kept busy getting after these prospects. According to Mr. Sill, one dealer who conducts a retail establishment in a small town in New York State has sold over 425 Kimball talking machines since September 1. Just shows what can be done!

The Cheney Resonator

The Cheney Resonator for January is made up of news which is of particular interest to Cheney dealers. The bulk of the paper is given over to news of the Victor-Cheney suit, the full text of the decision occupying five full newspaper columns. Other lengthy articles in this issue are editorials concerning this case and an interview with Professor Forrest Cheney telling how he originated the instrument which now bears his name. The issue is newspaper size and is four pages. The fourth page contains many artistic cuts, showing some of the merchandising helps which make the Cheney line profitable. C. E. Swanson, sales manager of the Cheney Talking Machine Co., who supervises the editing of the Cheney Resonator, plans to send the January issue to some fifteen thousand retailers throughout the United States.

In commenting upon the business situation Mr. Swanson stated that the Cheney plant is working almost to capacity, but, even at that, the company is still oversold. During January the Cheney Co. is participating in the semi-annual Furniture Show at Grand Rapids and is exhibiting its full line of instruments at its showrooms in that city.

Attracts the Crowds

Over at the Song and Gift Shop, a Columbia account, which is located between Quincy and Jackson boulevard on State street, in the heart of Chicago's Loop, the sidewalks have been jammed with passers-by. The attraction is nothing less than a spinning turntable in the window, whereon two little kewpie dolls go through the movements of a shimmy dance. The little dolls are caused to zigzag back and forth above the whirling turntable by means of a magnet, which is concealed on the platform which rests on the turntable. The little dolls in turn are mounted on a wire support which the magnet attracts.

uttered by E. A. Fearn, of the Consolidated Talking Machine Co., and, continuing, he said: "The year 1922 is going to be the best the Consolidated Talking Machine Co. ever enjoyed. For example, we know that there are more dealers in the business to-day than there were in 1917, which was practically one of the last normal years the trade experienced. In that year we brought out our little Liberty device, with its three flags, which proved a tremendous success, and in the short space of two months we sold over a million and a half of these Liberty bells. At that time it was indicated to us that there were practically a million and a half users of talking machines who were making use of their instruments. Since that time there has been a tremendous increase in the number, and this means to the Consolidated Talking Co. that there are a tremendous number of talking machine owners all over the States who are in the market for records and accessories. That is the market which the Consolidated Co. is going to tackle with full force for 1922, and we firmly believe that ere the end of this year rolls around every one of these users will have been made acquainted with our goods."

Mr. Reinhardt and Mr. Gruner were for many years connected with the Corley Co. as general manager and sales manager, respectively.

CLOSED HEALTHY BUSINESS

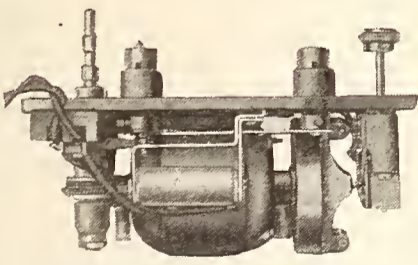

General Phonograph Corp.'s Business for December Very Satisfactory—Okeh Sales in New York Particularly Pleasing

"Okeh record sales for the month of December were very satisfactory," said Otto Heine-man, president of the General Phonograph Corp., in a chat with The World. "Practically all of our jobbers closed a splendid month, and the demand for foreign language records in particular was far beyond our expectations. The sale of Okeh records in New York territory was especially gratifying, and new accounts are being opened daily in the metropolitan district.

"Motor business for December was generally satisfactory, and there seems to be a better feeling at the start of the New Year than there was last year. When 1921 started we all looked for the worst, but with the beginning of this year we all feel that better business is coming. Apparently we have been through the worst, and the tide has turned for the better."

DETROIT TRADE WELL PLEASED WITH GENERAL BUSINESS

Dealers and Jobbers Gratified Over Showing for December—New Jewett Models Coming—G. W. Hopkins Believes in Action—Vocalion Progress—Grinnell Booms Michigan Composer

DETROIT, MICH., January 4.—The month of December turned out just as we predicted it would be early in the month. Dealers had a very good December business, making the year show up considerably better than it would have otherwise. This week we found dealers very busy taking inventory of their stock, to find out just what they would have to reorder. We are frank in saying that, while no dealer will make as much profit in 1921 as he did in 1920, he feels mighty happy to know that he has been able to stand up during the depression and the worst slump that Detroit has ever had. So, after all, there is really a great deal to be thankful for, as prospects are certainly bright for 1922, and especially for the dealer who is willing to "go and get business" and not rely entirely upon the national advertising of leading manufacturers to bring the business to them. When Roger W. Babson, the famous economist and statistician, was in Detroit recently, he said: "There will be plenty of business in 1922, but those who want it will have to go out and look for it with a lantern."

Jobbers Pleased With Holiday Demand

The wholesalers did not fare so well in the month of December, which was not unusual. November is invariably the best month of the year for the jobbers, because it is during that month that they make their greatest number, and largest, of shipments to dealers who want them for the month of December. Orders do not come in very heavily to the jobbers during December, as dealers are already stocked up, only ordering a number here and there as they need them. But we'll say this much—the jobbers are very well pleased with their holiday trade and they do anticipate a revival in talking machine business within the next few months.

Record business seems to be holding up very good for everybody, and January is proving an excellent month for records. The thousands of people who received talking machines for the holidays are naturally good buyers of records, and we find the record departments very busy places these days. In fact, January is one of the best months of the year for records.

Grinnell Bros. Featuring Guest

All of the Victor stores are boosting the first record made by Edgar A. Guest, Michigan's famous composer of sentimental poems, who writes daily for the Detroit Free Press. Almost every Victor store in Detroit is boosting the record and pushing it. Grinnell Bros. even went so far as to have the three poems printed in white on a black card, placing them in their window with a large photo of Mr. Guest, with the record. The display is drawing crowds every hour of the day and the record is proving a big seller. Dealers say they have noticed it brings them a new clientele of customers, many of whom are school teachers, who want it for their school.

Good Year for the Vocalion

S. E. Lind, of the Lind & Marks Co., Detroit distributor for the Vocalion, reports that he had a very good year, despite the fact that his company did not start in until March—the worst month of the year. Each month business improved and November was the best month of the whole year. Right on January 1 orders began coming in from dealers, which indicates that Vocalion dealers enjoyed a good holiday trade. Mr. Lind is extremely enthusiastic over 1922 and believes that the industry will enjoy even greater prosperity than it did in the year just ended. Some weeks ago Mr. Lind was in New York, accompanying Henry Theis and some members of the Ritz Detroit Orchestra. While in New York City Mr. Theis made four records for the Vocalion, which are to be released as a special some time in January. Mr. Lind no sooner notified his dealers of the new records to be released than he was swamped with orders, as Mr. Theis and the Ritz Orchestra are very popular in Detroit and their new records are certain to be a tremendous success. Mr. Lind is planning a number of novelty advertising and exploitation stunts to increase the demand for the Theis records.

New Jewett Models Ready Soon

The salesmen of the Jewett Phonograph Co. left for their respective territories this week, after spending a week at the home office conferring with executives of the company on plans for the new year. A. A. Fair, sales manager, went over the Jewett product in detail and announced that within a few weeks some beautiful new models would be ready for the market. Several of them were on exhibition and the salesmen almost gasped for breath when they looked them over and were told the low prices at which they would be sold. "This company is trying to make the greatest phonograph in the world, and at the least possible profit," remarked Mr. Fair to the writer. As a wind-up to the sales conferences Fred Underwood, general manager of the Jewett Phonograph Co., tendered to the salesmen and the various department heads a dinner at the Hotel Statler on Tuesday, January 3. There were a few short talks, in which the various salesmen assured Mr. Underwood that they would work as never before in 1922 and that they felt sure of "bringing home the bacon." During the evening Elmer Wilkinson, production manager in charge of the factory at Allegan, Mich., explained in detail the making of the Jewett phonograph, from the time the tree was chopped in the forest to its finished state in the phonograph. Mr. Wilkinson opened the salesmen's eyes when he described the quality and the fine selection of woods that were put into the Jewett, although the average person or dealer would not thoroughly appreciate it. Still, it was there, just the same, and meant lifetime endurance.

Some Big Plans for 1922

The Jewett Phonograph Co. has great plans for 1922 in the way of increasing selling force and increasing manufacturing facilities, in addition to more attractive designs and models. New accounts galore have been added in the past two months in the East, as well as in the Middle West, and applications are received every day for the line in every part of the country. Recently the company leased storage space in the Old Farrand Organ Building, at Twelfth street and the Grand Trunk railroad, from where all shipments are now being made.

Records of Detroit Are Popular

A record made by the Emerson Co., and which is certain to prove popular in Detroit, if not all over the country, and especially in the large cities, is that of I. Leonard Braun, just released. Mr. Braun has been in Detroit the past six weeks, giving recitals before Jewish and other organizations, and he has been a great success. He has also made a record for the Victor Co., which will be released later. He is to give a series of twelve recitals in Michigan, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin before returning to New York some time the latter part of January. Mr. Braun has written the Ritual of the B'na Brith, a Jewish organization with over a million members. His home is in Detroit. He will continue to record for the Victor Co.

To Open New Brunswick Shop

The Brunswick Music Shop, of Muskegon, Mich., is opening an exclusive branch at Grand Haven, Mich., under the management of Art Wingerden. The company recently opened its new and handsome shop in Muskegon.

George W. Hopkins Visits Columbia Branch

H. E. Gardner, manager of the Detroit branch of the Columbia Co., recently made an extended trip through the State and said he found business improving in the small towns. He reports that new Columbia dealers in his territory are: Ypsi Phonograph Shop, Ypsilanti, Mich.; Grubbs' Music Shoppe, Toledo, O., and the Harper Music Co., Detroit.

Since our last letter George W. Hopkins, general manager of the Columbia Graphophone Co., was in Detroit and spent a day in conference with Mr. Gardner. Mr. Hopkins said that America had been through a slump which came suddenly and unexpectedly and that American industries had stood up exceedingly well, considering the chaotic condition of things, and that he believed that if phonograph dealers would put their shoulders to the wheel and work harder than ever before they would find the public ready to respond. It has always been the contention of Mr. Hopkins that the average phonograph dealer is too easily satisfied and lacks the ambition because sales are created for him in advance. "Just imagine what these same dealers could do if they would go out and create new business themselves," he has often remarked. "The opportunities in this industry are unlimited for the man who is willing to work, and a man's success is judged by the amount of work he does."

Oscar W. Ray, manager of the record department of the Vocalion Co., was here recently, conferring with Sam Lind, of Lind & Marks Co. He also visited Cleveland and Chicago while in the Middle West.

Jules H. Roos, director of sales for the needle department of the General Phonograph Co., maker of True-Tone needles, was here Christmas week and said business was very satisfactory.

Carload Sale Goes Over

The Detroit Music Co. bought two carloads of Columbia phonographs just before Christmas, which they advertised very extensively at special prices. When the machines arrived they loaded them on two great, big trucks, and had banners painted for all sides announcing "A carload shipment of Columbia Graphophones, to be sold for ten days at special prices." Charles Smith, secretary of the company, says the sale was very successful.

Takes in the Jewett Line

The Friedrich Music House, of Grand Rapids, Mich., has added the Jewett phonograph line.

OGDEN REPORTS GREAT ACTIVITY

Tremendous Holiday Demand for Ogden Specialties Throughout the Country

LYNCHBURG, VA., January 6.—J. B. Ogden, president of the Ogden Sectional Cabinet Co., of this city, reports that the demand for Ogden stands for table model and portable machines has been very brisk and that immediately prior to the Christmas holidays a large number of telegram rush orders were received for immediate express shipment, indicating that a number of dealers were completely sold out of the stands. Mr. Ogden further reports that he has received a number of substantial orders from Victor jobbers who stated, when ordering, that they found the stands and service tables were much in demand in conjunction with the table models. The factory has been working at full capacity and, although it was originally planned to close the factory for a day or so during the Christmas holidays, the rush of business made this impossible. Referring to foreign business, Mr. Ogden stated that Latin-American business is constantly improving and that shipments to South Africa and Australia are likewise improving. It is expected that the Ogden stands will be shortly introduced in talking machine circles in Africa, India and Indo-China. Mr. Ogden believes that the trend of the times points toward greatly increased business during 1922.

TO PARTICIPATE IN THRIFT WEEK

Members of Music Industry Throughout Country Indicate Intention of Taking an Active Part in Forthcoming Thrift Celebration

That the members of the music industry throughout the country are planning to participate actively in the Thrift Week campaign during the week of January 17-23 is indicated by the demand being made upon the Trade Service Bureau of the Music Industries Chamber of Commerce, as well as upon the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music for advertising and publicity matter hooking up the music trade with the thrift idea.

During December the first issue of 50,000 booklets, "Music an Aid to Thrift," was almost exhausted, and a second lot of 50,000 was ordered. Dealers who want the booklets, window streamers, display cards and newspaper advertising copy offered to the trade are advised to send in their orders at once to the Chamber office at 105 West Fortieth street, New York City, in order to allow time for filling orders before January 17.

A special notice has been sent to music merchants in towns and cities, which have registered for local observance of Thrift Week, calling attention to the special thrift service of the Chamber.

COLUMBIA CO. VISITORS

There were quite a number of visitors at the Columbia executive offices in New York over the holidays, among the callers being Thomas B. Niles, assistant manager of the Pittsburgh branch, accompanied by Mrs. Niles; D. H. Deltzell, manager of the Salt Lake City branch of the Columbia Stores Co.; R. H. Woodford, manager of the Columbia Co.'s Cincinnati branch; Mr. Markson, of Markson Bros., Columbia dealers at Syracuse, N. Y., and Carl Buechner, sales representative of the Boston branch. The visitors were all optimistic over trade prospects.

The Modernola Sales Corp., New York City, Eastern distributor for the Modernola phonograph, reports that its dealers completed a very successful Fall and holiday season, and that from present indications 1922 will be a very satisfactory year. George Seiffert, president of the company, stated that the recent newspaper campaign conducted in the metropolitan dailies was highly productive for both the Modernola Sales Corp. and its dealers. This campaign elicited replies from foreign countries although only appearing in New York papers. Mr. Seiffert has in his possession an order, received from an ad appearing in the New York Times, from a town in Ohio, where the reader was so highly impressed that he immediately ordered a model of the Modernola and sent in payment several shares of stock in a farmers' supply company.

A TREMENDOUS DEMAND FOR RECORDS IN LOS ANGELES

Holiday Trade, Despite Unfavorable Weather Conditions, Most Satisfactory—Many Concerns Report Phenomenal Business—New Local Record Manufacturers—Interesting Review of Conditions

LOS ANGELES, CAL., January 4.—December ended in a blaze of glory in respect to sales of talking machines and records, according to reports from practically all music stores in Los Angeles. With many extra assistants the record departments had great difficulty in coping with the big crowds that surged into the stores every day, and all day, for several days, meeting with an almost greater problem in keeping track of records and returning them to their proper places so that they could be found when wanted; but, owing to the fact that record stocks were in much better shape than in former years, records sales were extraordinarily good. Rain fell almost continuously during the last week before Christmas, but appeared to have no effect upon shoppers, except that it probably served to prevent them from wandering from one store to another on their purchasing quest.

Barnes' Sales Break Records

George H. Barnes, president of the Barnes Music Co., declares himself to be extremely well pleased with the sales of the Brunswick department for the month of December, which far exceeded those for the corresponding period of last year, and particularly for Christmas week; next week will see them with a practically depleted stock.

Phenomenal Sales at Barker Bros.

J. W. Boothe, general manager of the music department at Barker Bros. reports that the December, 1921, sales in the talking machine department will exceed by a large margin those of 1920. On the Wednesday immediately preceding Christmas the high-water mark in sales of instruments for one single day was reached, namely, eighty-seven. Of the eighty-seven machines sold, one consisted of a thousand-dollar period model, three were in excess of $500 each, while the remainder varied in prices from $50 to $500. Mr. Boothe emphasized the fact that all advertising of talking machines by his firm during the last two or three weeks before Christmas omitted all reference to specific terms; in many cases advertisements actually stated that the goods were not offered at bargain prices on terms—N. B.: Would one call this kind of advertising appealing to the customer's pride, getting the customer's goat, or raising the house's prestige? A combination of all three, perhaps. Anyhow, it seems to have brought home the bacon.

Southern California Music Co. Crowded

The talking machine departments of the Southern California Music Co., both on the first and third floors, were crowded to capacity during the last two weeks before Christmas. Edisons, Victors and Burnhams were sold in large quantities, and the record departments smashed all former—er—er—totals, Manager Westphal states.

Hamburger's Require More Space

Sales of Victors, Brunswicks and Vocalions were excellent throughout the month and the expected rush occurred during Christmas week; some difficulty was experienced in taking care of all record customers, all demonstration rooms being filled. Harry N. Briggs, general manager of the music department, is looking forward to big extension plans in the very near future, at which time the present space occupied by the department will be doubled or trebled.

Among the Wholesalers

Charles Ruggles, Los Angeles, manager of Sherman, Clay & Co., Victor distributor, reports that sales for December were the largest in the history of the branch.

W. F. Stidham, manager of the Los Angeles wholesale branch of the Columbia Graphophone Co., is well pleased with the sales for December; the Los Angeles branch has led the United States for seven successive months, according to quota.

Howard L. Brown, manager of the phonograph division of the Los Angeles branch of the Brunswick-Balke Collender Co., states that sales for the month of December, 1921, exceeded those for December, 1920, by over 100 per cent. The Los Angeles branch occupied top place for every month of 1921 in the listing of all the branches of the United States for sales per capita, and showed a larger percentage of gain than any other branch.

E. R. Darvill, Vocalion manager of the Commercial Associates, successors to the Western Jobbing Trading Co., distributors of Vocalions and Vocalion records, reports that sales for 1921 were very satisfactory. Dealers have been loud in their praises of the record service which has been given to them, and are pleased at the new fifteenth of the month release, which will go into effect at once.

Irving C. Franklin, sales manager of the Burnham Phonograph Corp., stated that extra shifts had been employed at the Burnham factory, keeping the wheels turning daily until 11 p. m. up to within a few days before Christmas in order that they might cope with the demand.

Mr. Franklin looked forward to a still larger increase in 1922.

M. F. Fybush, general manager of the Blue Bird Talking Machine Co., declared that work at the Blue Bird factory during the latter part of the year had called for extra pressure, especially due to the demand for certain models; 1922, in his opinion, should bring excellent business for all lines.

Record Factory and Laboratory in Los Angeles

Los Angeles is to have its own recording laboratories and record presses in the immediate future. The Golden Record Co. is the name of a new concern, which plans to record and manufacture records here. The record which it will make will be golden in color, and special attention will be given to the recordings by private persons of records for their own private use. Theophilus Fitz is at the head of the company, and has had many years of experience in the business.

New York Man Stays in Los Angeles

J. G. Pierce, for many years assistant to Herbert Brennan, of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., New York, has located in Los Angeles and is at present connected with the sales force of the Starr Piano Co.

Will Go Into Business

J. A. Sabine, Columbia jobber for the province of Ontario, Canada, has arrived in Los Angeles and is believed to have decided to make this part of the world his future home, and, with an inherent dislike for idleness, will engage actively in the music business, principally phonographs, in this section.

HONOR LOUIS D. ROSENFELD

Emerson Sales Executive Guest of Honor at Testimonial Dinner Given by Artists and Dealers—Presented With Handsome Loving Cup—S. J. Corsover in Charge of Arrangements

Louis D. Rosenfield, head of the foreign language record department of the Emerson Phonograph Co., New York, was the guest of honor at a dinner given on January 4 at the Little Roumanian Restaurant, 108 West 116th street, New York. The dinner was in the nature of a testimonial to Mr. Rosenfield by the dealers and artists with whom he has been associated for the past nine years, and there were also present Emerson executives who have been associated with Mr. Rosenfield for the past four years.

The committee in charge of the dinner emphasized the fact that the surprise testimonial to Mr. Rosenfield had been planned in order to express the dealers' and artists' appreciation of the co-operation and consideration that he had extended them during the past nine years. Mr. Rosenfield's popularity in the trade is indicated by the fact that over sixty people attended the dinner, all of whom were glad to have the opportunity of joining in the testimonial to one of their friends and associates.

The toastmaster of the evening was E. H. Davis, advertising manager of the Emerson Phonograph Co., who filled the post with signal ability. As the first speaker of the evening, Mr. Davis introduced Victor H. Emerson, president of the Emerson Phonograph Co. and one of the pioneers of the talking machine industry. Mr. Emerson gave a semi-humorous, reminiscent talk, bringing the guests back to the early days of the industry, and outlining some of the difficulties that had been faced and solved. As one of the foremost technical experts of the industry, Mr. Emerson's comments regarding the various phases of the development of the talking machine were received with keen enthusiasm.

Other speakers of the evening included H. T. Leeming, vice-president and general manager of the Emerson Phonograph Co.; Harry G. Neu, sales manager; Miss Lillian M. Guth, credit manager, and Sidney J. Corsover, chairman of the dinner arrangement committee, who was largely responsible for the success of the event.

Louis D. Rosenfield

In the course of his address Mr. Corsover paid a signal tribute to Mr. Rosenfield's indefatigable efforts in behalf of the artists and the dealers, and also referred to Mr. Rosenfield's willingness and desire to aid the artists along helpful, practical lines. At the close of his address Mr. Corsover presented Mr. Rosenfield with a handsome silver loving cup, which he stated was a token of esteem from the artists, dealers and the business and personal friends with whom Mr. Rosenfield had been associated for many years.

In expressing his appreciation of the honor conferred upon him by the guests present, Mr.

Rosenfield outlined briefly the aims and ideals which had formed the foundation for his activities in this industry. He stated that he would cherish the cup as his most valued possession because it represented the good will and love of his fellowmen.

The musical program for the evening was a lengthy one, and each number was received with enthusiastic applause by the guests. All of the artists appearing are well known in talking machine and musical circles, and among the artists on the program were Mme. Louisa Tuzier, formerly a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Joseph Feldman, S. Berini, S. J. Corsover, Simon Paskal, Fred Duff, A. Schwartz and daughter, and the Misses Lindeman and Lipman.

M. Röss, of the Rialto Phonograph Co., was chairman of the committee which planned the dinner, and was ably assisted by Harry Duff and Mr. Corsover. They left nothing undone to make the dinner a success, and well deserved the congratulations which they received at the close of an evening which was greatly enjoyed by everyone in attendance.

RECUPERATION NOW AT HAND, SAYS HERBERT HOOVER

He and Secretary Weeks See Great Promise of Better Conditions in All Lines During 1922—Period of Liquidation Is About Over and Recuperation Is Bound to Follow

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 3.—Much of promise in the new year is seen by Secretaries Hoover and Weeks, who in statements issued on Saturday last declared that the American people could look forward to 1922 as a year of recuperation.

“Considering that we have gone through the greatest war in history and considering the dangers that we have passed through in the great readjustment of 1921,” said Secretary Hoover, “we have a lot to be cheerful over and we have ahead of us very substantial hopes of steady improvement both at home and abroad.”

“The industrial and social upheaval resulting from the war reached its crisis during the old year,” said Secretary Weeks. “The period of adjustment has been trying for the people and the Government alike, but the rapidity with which the American people have been putting their affairs in order during the past few months makes the outlook for complete industrial adjustment and resulting prosperity during the coming year bright.”

Mr. Hoover in his statement said:

“The economic situation for the New Year holds much good promise. Our year of liquidation is over and we can look forward to a year of recuperation. Except for the seasonal dip of the Winter we should have a continuous lessening of unemployment and an increasing betterment in the agricultural situation. We have passed through the most precipitous price drop in our history—a drop averaging nearly 50 per cent—and necessitating the writing of something more than $20,000,000,000 off our books as a Nation during 1921.

“We have still a good many readjustments to be made, due to the inequality in the fall of prices and wages. The former has fallen too much. Some of the industries, such as coal, railways and construction, are far above the average levels of the country; but economic pressures, although painful, are in motion which will eventually reduce the expenses and the charges of these industries against the community.”

“A secondary part of our recuperation must depend upon the recuperation abroad. In Europe the most promising thing is that there is a more general realization that German reparations, land armaments, unbalanced budgets, inflated currencies, unnecessary barriers against economic movements, must all be reduced if Europe is to attain economic stability and if the very solid progress made in other directions during the last three years is not to be lost.”

After the governor shaft is made, it is polished by drilling it hundreds of times in a piece of maple. Every burr is removed and the shaft, when finished and buffed, feels smooth as velvet and glistens like silver. A man can polish only about 100 shafts a day.

Experience has demonstrated that only by rigidly holding to such high standards can we maintain dynamic balance in the governor and assure dealers that perfection of Cheney motors which has added so much to the reputation of The Cheney.

Three-fourths of 1/1000 part of an inch! Can you conceive of it?

Divide one thirty-second part of an inch into 32 parts, and one of those microscopic divisions represents the outside limits of variation permitted in the making of the governor shaft in the Cheney motor.

It is the most exacting test in all of the manufacture of The Cheney where we are accustomed to hold mechanical parts to thousandths of an inch. It explains why the Cheney motor runs as smooth as a watch, practically without noise.

Equally high manufacturing standards for Cheney cabinet and acoustic parts have made The Cheney "the master instrument." Though offering such supreme value, Cheney prices are remarkably low.

ANNOUNCES NEW DEVELOPMENT

C. A. Fullerton, of Architectural Bronze Fame, Enters Phonograph Industry—Fullertone Phonograph Products, Inc., to Manufacture New Musical Instrument, the "Fullertone," a Radical Departure in Phonograph Construction

By H. N. McMENIMEN

For several months past there have been rumors around the phonograph shops, telling of a sensational phonograph invention. Rumors of this kind are plentiful in the trade. Nobody paid much attention to this one until they heard that Clarence A. Fullerton, head of the Fullerton enterprises, had started the manufacture of this invention. The name of C. A. Fullerton is known to but few people in the phonograph business, but after having had the opportunity of investigating the merits of his new invention I may safely believe that it is going to be a name to conjure with in the talking machine industry as it is to-day in the field of art bronze working.

When I was requested by Mr. Fullerton to investigate the invention of Antal Fodor, an engineer of Paris, and to make an exhaustive laboratory test of this invention, I was impressed with the fact that the tone was the most natural that has ever been brought to my attention in twenty-eight years of constant association in the phonograph industry. I was fully convinced that there never was a time in the history of the talking machine business when essential and basic improvements were more needed than at the present time. I mean improvement upon the sound wave regenerating device, of what is technically known as the graphophone.

An instrument of this kind, I felt, should not only be an artistic achievement in reproducing music, but also prove to be a real business-getter for the trade. I believe the "Fullertone," the trade name given to this device, to be such an instrument that it opens new vistas in the field of phonograph construction as well as in the field of merchandising.

Too great stress cannot be laid on the fact that the "Fullertone" is a new entity in musical instruments, which consists of a small wooden resonator, having the shape of a lyre, resembling a violin in its construction and finish. It can be used as a reproducer on any of the existing phonographs, as it replaces all of the mechanical parts of the phonograph, excepting the motor and turntable. It will play all makes of records and its wonderful tone qualities as a musical instrument are chiefly due to the fact that the whole instrument excepting the needle holder is constructed of wood.

Wood has been recognized by scientists and musicians for ages as the most resonant material known to mankind. A large vibrating wooden surface enables the "Fullertone" to move a large body of air, producing sound waves that create a large volume of sound of great carrying power, which is mellowed by the inherent qualities characteristic of all wooden instruments. It regenerates sound waves, substantially corresponding in intensity with the general recording, besides giving it a tone quality entirely free of megaphonic or nasal rendering of the artist's efforts.

As to merchandising possibilities the "Fullertone" offer, I only call attention to the fact that it can be used on any existing phonograph, irrespective of cabinet style, and it can be placed on any piece of furniture in which a motor and turntable can be installed. This feature of the "Fullertone" will give the trade a wide range of models which are bound to suit every conceivable taste. The Fullerton Phonograph Products, Inc., plant has started quality production of this remarkable instrument, which I believe will be the means of bringing a renaissance in the industry, pointing to a new departure in phonograph construction and artistic development.

CLOSED A SATISFACTORY YEAR

HEALTH-BUILDING RECORDS

Leading Metropolitan Stores Tell of Increasing Appreciation of Course by Public—Outlook Reported by the President to Be Excellent

R. B. Wheelan, president of Health Builders, states that he has received many encouraging reports from dealers relative to the good holiday business they did in this health-building course of records. One dealer reported that a customer purchased ten sets of the course for Christmas presents, and it was not an uncommon custom for two and three sets to be bought at a time for gifts.

Wanamaker, Lord & Taylor, Fredk. Loeser & Co., Davega and other metropolitan stores report increasing demands for this course. In the case of the S. B. Davega Co. it was found that the Health Builders' course was the direct cause of the sale of two machines, as the customers who desired the course did not have the machines to play it on. Mr. Wheelan states that the outlook for 1922 is very promising. Not only is the record course getting more and more popular, but the Winter season is acknowledged as the best for this indoor exercise and the keeping-fit movement is rapidly spreading throughout the entire country.

SOUTH BEND, IND., January 3.—Shortly before Christmas the Dodge Mfg. R. Seabrook, a Canadian engineer, who has specialized in acoustics. He began development work on the instrument in May, 1920, and the result is said to be a radical departure from all accepted types of sound-reproducing machines.

As it stands the Seabrook phonograph, it is announced, has fourteen distinctive improvements. The plan is to place the new instrument on the market immediately.

STOCKS LOW IN PORTLAND OWING TO HOLIDAY DEMAND

Continued Buying of Machines and Records Since the Holidays Affords Encouragement to Merchants Regarding Continuation of Good Business—What a Talk With Leading Dealers Reveals

PORTLAND, ORE., January 4.—A better Christmas trade than was enjoyed last season was experienced by the dealers in talking machines and records of Portland in the period just ended. Dealers throughout the city have expressed surprise at the condition and to-day the stocks are decidedly low.

One of the most heartening factors for the dealers is the condition since Christmas. The amount of buying of both machines and records since the holidays has eclipsed former similar periods. The same condition seems to be true in all lines of trade in Portland and the Pacific Northwest.

E. B. Hyatt, of the Hyatt Talking Machine Co., reports business for the month of December better by far than expected. The sale of the better grade of machines took a big jump just before Christmas and this popular shop was so busy during the holiday buying that people were turned away. Mr. Hyatt proved himself to be a wonderful Santa Claus to his employes.

Frank M. Case, manager of the Wiley B. Allen store, is very greatly pleased over the December business. C. L. Neilson, formerly of the Sherman, Clay Victrola department, has been secured by Mr. Case, to assist Paul B. Norris, sales manager. Bertha Serr, for the past three years manager of the record department, has resigned her position and Erma Ewart has taken Miss Serr's place as manager of the department. Margaret Corbett has been added to the record sales force.

D. C. Peyton, manager of the Meier & Frank talking machine department, who advertises extensively "The House of the Big Four"—Victrola, Vocalion, Columbia, Edison—reports a rushing December business, with over 300 machines being placed in Portland homes during the month.

A. C. Sherbet has returned to the Meier & Frank department and Marvel Case and Flora Wakefield have also been added to the force.

Charles T. Corbin, general manager of the Seattle branch of the Bush & Lane Piano Co., extended an invitation to the Portland firm to participate in the annual banquet which was given by them on New Year's Eve. As many of the force as could get away gladly accepted the invitation and motored to Seattle.

Garrett Stetzel, credit man for the Bush & Lane Piano Co., has gone to California and J. F. O'Gara, formerly of Lipman, Wolfe & Co. and president of the Portland Credit Association, has been secured by J. H. Gallagher, manager, to fill his position. F. E. Shaw, formerly of the Sherman, Clay & Co. Victrola department, has been added to the sales force of the Bush & Lane phonograph department.

The Harold S. Gilbert Music Co., which for the past six years has occupied quarters at 384 Yamhill street, has moved to bigger and better quarters in the Pittock Block, at 103 West Park street. The store has very fine window space and with a fine big electric sign being installed Mr. Gilbert expects to attract a great amount of new trade to his store.

Clyde Freeman, manager of the Remick Song Shop, reports a good December in the Columbia department and when the Christmas rush began he added three salesmen to his force to accommodate the throngs of customers. W. B. Maxwell, for some time assistant to Mr. Freeman, has accepted a position with the wholesale Victrola department of Sherman, Clay & Co., and will assist Elmer Hunt, manager.

Ray Feldenheimer, manager of the Lipman, Wolfe & Co. phonograph department, reports an excellent sale of Sonoras and Brunswicks during December.

Charles D. Carter, Northwest representative of the Sonora Phonograph Co., who had his headquarters at Seattle, Wash., has moved to Portland, where he is now making his home.

Andrew Noble, formerly of the Berkey & Gay Co., of Grand Rapids, Mich., has been secured as superintendent and designer for the Stradivara Phonograph Co. Mr. Noble is proving a very valuable man and has designed some very artistic work.

C. A. Alphonse, of the Hyatt Talking Machine Co., was an active member, acting as vice-president on the Christmas tree committee of the Portland Elks, 142, who entertained 3,200 poor children at a Christmas party given by them at the public auditorium Monday, December 26. Gifts and baskets of food were generously given.

CHEER INVALIDS AND MAKE SALES

Smith & Stout, Brunswick Dealers, Send Machines to Homes of Sick and Reap Profits of Several Sales and Much Publicity

LA PLATA, Mo., January 9.—A clever stunt which is selling Brunswick machines and records for the firm of Smith & Stout, Brunswick dealers, this city, is the loaning of a machine and records to persons who are ill. Upon hearing of any person confined to the house by illness or accident, a machine and records are immediately sent out to the house in an effort to cheer up the invalid. There is no solicitation to buy, but in every instance where this plan has been tried a sale was made.

A. C. IRETON'S OPTIMISTIC LETTER

Edison Phonographs, Ltd., Edison jobbers on the Pacific Coast, with headquarters in San Francisco, and branches in Los Angeles and Portland, sent out on the first of the year a most optimistic letter to the trade regarding the business opportunities that were in view for 1922. The letter was signed by A. C. Ireton, manager, and was of a character to instill confidence.

The New Year

1921 was spent in the further liquidation and reduction of prices of commodities to a normal basis.

This year we start with this liquidation practically completed, which means an increase in production and an increase in employment.

With this splendid outlook for the present year, there is every reason why Victor dealers throughout the country should enjoy a greatly increased business.

We trust that each will secure his share, and we also trust that we may be given the opportunity to help and co-operate in furthering this prosperity of the Victor dealer.

TENDENCY TOWARD A BETTER TYPE OF POPULAR MUSIC

"Melody" Songs Appear to Be Finding Much Favor With the Public During the Current Season and Some Have Proven Real Hits—The Relation of Jazz and the Dance Craze

While it is true that there have been, this season, several big song and, particularly, instrumental successes that can be described as "jazz" or "blue" numbers the contributions as a whole have been of a much better musical standard. The jazz numbers are not having quite the large sales they once had and there are not so many of them. The real big things have been melody songs, and the jazz, if there still be any, gets most of its encouragement from the dance field.

Songwriters and publishers, naturally, endeavor to turn out those things which will have the largest returns and it is the melody songs and ballads that can be arranged as dances that reach the top figure in sales. Their life being much longer, it gives the publisher opportunity to cash in over an extended period, whereas the jazz or novelty type is short-lived and must be exploited intensively in a short space of time. A comparison of songs of this season and those of the last shows a decided improvement from a musical standpoint and, as these are the most profitable issues, the natural result is that they get the most attention.

There has been much propaganda against jazz, columns have been written in the newspapers and civic bodies and others interested in improvement have bewailed the present-day standards. But all this has resulted in little or nothing. Protest did not accomplish anything and jazz will not be entirely eliminated until it spends itself.

From a song standpoint it is almost passé. At least, no such number nowadays acquires national importance as a song. In the dance field such numbers still have big popularity and as long as numbers are issued of that type that have a wide appeal as a dance they, undoubtedly, will continue to enjoy prominence in dance programs. The improvement in the dance field is somewhat slower. The lure of jazz for the dancer is quite decided and will take a much longer time to spend itself.

J. Hartley Manners, husband of Laurette Taylor, of "Peg o' My Heart" fame, has just starred his wife in a new production, the title of which is "The New American Anthem." The show has not yet reached New York, but the reports from the towns where it has appeared describe it as a satire on present-day life in which, of course, jazz is made the "anthem." Of course, it is all exaggerated and it is not expected that it will be taken overseriously, although it may prove quite entertaining.

After all, quite an injustice is done the average American in making it appear that he is jazz mad, for, as a matter of fact, the things that are popular here are proving successful in all other parts of the world. Some of the newer English publications, particularly of the one-step variety, have their jazz effects and there are any number of French fox-trots which show jazz at its best, if there is such a thing. At least two of these latter numbers have been successful in America and, we understand, there are still more to come, so we are not alone in our worship at the shrine of jazz.

But the tendency is toward better things and, while the change has not been revolutionary in character, it is probably more healthy, and in this manner makes for permanence.

The songwriters and publishers, of course, are only giving the public what it wants, which is good business. Thousands of dance orchestras throughout the country must be satisfied, and as long as they feature music of the jazz variety someone will supply them with such material. But such demands are becoming more and more limited and, as the royalties on the better-class songs are more assured, the writers, in the future, will more and more endeavor to issue numbers of that type.

SPECIAL WINDOW FOR "THE SHEIK"

The new Victor record success, "The Sheik," was featured most successfully recently by Simon's Music Store, Uniontown, Pa. The window represented a real desert scene with sand, a palm tree, and a real Sheik to give it tone. An increase in the sales of the record was directly traceable to the window.

Gottschalk & Co., 732 Market street, Chattanooga, Tenn., have opened a phonograph department in which various Brunswick models are featured.

SCORING A BIG HIT

Yerkes S. S. "Flotilla" Orchestra Winning Wide Reputation for Its Dance Music

Harry A. Yerkes and his S. S. "Flotilla" dance orchestra opened an engagement at the S. S. "Flotilla" restaurant, 100 West Fifty-fifth street, New York, last month.

This dance orchestra has gained the reputation of making "dancing the poetry of motion." Through his many novel orchestra combinations Harry A. Yerkes has gained almost international fame for the dance records recorded for the various leading talking machine record companies. This, his newest orchestra combination, the S. S. "Flotilla," has already been given recognition as a leader. Among the numbers he is now featuring is "Arkansas Blues," published by the Frances Clifford Music Co., Chicago.

FEATURING "WABASH BLUES"

Lyon & Healy, Chicago, Devote an Elaborate Window Display to That Number

The success the larger talking machine stores of the country have had with attractive window displays, and the increased sales resulting therefrom have served to encourage dealers with smaller stores to follow suit. Among the stores which can be credited with materially advancing the interest of popular numbers with special displays is that of Lyon & Healy, Chicago, Ill., who, throughout the past year, have shown a series of most attractive windows, all of which were the means not only of attracting attention to their popular record department, but also of increasing sales.

One of the more recent displays shown by this well-known firm was the window featuring "Wabash Blues." The photograph shows a scene on the Wabash and is presented, along with a Victrola and records, in a most attractive manner. Dave N. Allen, one of the Western traveling representatives for Leo Feist, Inc., the publisher of the number, states that the success Lyon & Healy have had with this particular display was the means of inducing numerous dealers in his territory to allot special display space to "Wabash Blues," which has helped to increase the popularity of the number.

POPULAR MUSIC ON THE COAST

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., January 5.—Henry Grobe has been featuring the "Lilac Tree," by George H. Gartlan, Hinds, Hayden & Eldridge, New York, and reports that the sale is very favorable. The "Four Castilian Sketches," by Frederick K. Logan, Forster Music Co., are proving attractive to customers at Sherman, Clay & Co.

"Honolulu Honey," by Louis Weslyn, Eva Applefield and Hal Dyson—Edw. B. Marks Co., New York—is also having a good sale, according to the Elite Music Shoppe. Miss Applefield is a San Francisco composer and is the author of "Hawaiian Chimes," published by Leo Feist.

The Elite Shoppe reports also that "Plantation Lullaby" and "Maybe It's All for the Best" are having brisk sales.

THE "HAPPY SIX" IN CHICAGO

The Balaban & Katz Co., Chicago, has secured the services of the "Happy Six" to play in its two new theatres, the Chicago and Tivoli, for the weeks of January 9 and 16. Chicago record buyers undoubtedly will anxiously await this personal appearance of the well-known dance organization. One of the numbers the "Happy Six" will feature during their Chicago stay is the Frances Clifford Music Co.'s "Arkansas Blues."

NEW IRVING BERLIN DRIVE

"Say It With Music" to Be Featured During Week of February 4

Irving Berlin, Inc., announces a national sales week on the big song and dance success from Irving Berlin's "Music Box Revue," "Say It With Music." This campaign will be similar to the previous publicity drives on "My Mammy" and "All By Myself." The week will be from February 4 to February 11, inclusive.

"Say It With Music" has probably had more free publicity than any musical number of the past decade. Upon its original release it was most favorably received by not only sheet music dealers but talking machine record and player roll dealers as well. Since that time its sales have steadily mounted and the talking machine record companies which originally released the number in dance form now announce a re-issuance of the number in vocal form.

"Say It With Music," together with "Tuck Me to Sleep" (In My Old Tucky Home) and the two new songs recently added to the Berlin catalog, "Delia" and "Granny, You're My Mammy's Mammy," are among the current big sellers.

TO OPEN JOBBING BUSINESS

Maurice Richmond to Establish Jobbing Headquarters in New York

Maurice Richmond, formerly active head of the Enterprise Music Supply Co., which latter was some time ago purchased at auction by the Crown Music Co., will, as announced some time ago in these columns, open up a music jobbing business in New York. The name of the new company will be the Richmond Music Supply Co., and it is understood the new firm has leased offices on West Forty-second street, New York City.

NEW POST FOR J. J. BREGMAN

J. J. Bregman, who for many years was business manager for the Enterprise Music Supply Co. and later auditor and office manager for Maurice Richmond, Inc., will, it is announced, join the staff of the new Richmond Music Supply Co., Inc., which recently opened up offices in the Bush Terminal Building, West Forty-second street, New York City. It is understood that Mr. Bregman will also act in an advisory capacity to the firm of Richmond-Robbins, Inc.

INFRINGEMENT SUIT ENDED

A formal order of discontinuance of the copyright infringement suit brought by G. Ricordi & Co. against Jerome H. Remick & Co. was signed by Judge Knox in the Federal District Court last week. The plaintiff had charged that Remick's "Avalon" song, written by Al Jolson and Vincent Rose, was an infringement on the melody of Puccini's opera "Tosca," which copyrighted composition the plaintiff controlled.

SAM FOX ON VISIT TO NEW YORK

Sam Fox, head of the Sam Fox Publishing Co., Cleveland, Ohio, arrived in New York quite recently. Mr. Fox has just completed a trans-continental tour covering the larger trade centers of the United States, including many points in Pacific Coast territory. He is completing plans for an Eastern publicity campaign on the current Fox successes, but returned to Cleveland in time for the holidays.

The new publishing firm recently organized by Albert Von Tilzer has been named the A. V. T. Music Pub. Co. Neville Fleeson and Seymour Brown are associated with the concern.

"In Maytime" Being Used Extensively by Vaudeville Singers and Orchestras

Jack Snyder, the author, composer and publisher, who some time ago opened offices at 1658 Broadway, New York City, and who is responsible for such songs as "Frankie" and "In Maytime," has been receiving many letters and telegrams of congratulation on the success of his catalog, and particularly "In Maytime," in waltz form.

Among the vaudeville stars who are singing "In Maytime" is Sophie Tucker, now appearing on the Keith circuit. The reception of the number would indicate that others will quickly take it up. In the orchestra field there are many organizations featuring this number in dance form. Recently Jack Snyder received a letter from the King's Favorite Syncopators, of Jersey City, N. J., in which "In Maytime" was shown to be a big favorite.

The sales of this recent addition to the Jack Snyder catalog have been steadily mounting and show indications of its becoming one of the

"ARKANSAS BLUES" A HIT

Western Number Proving One of the Successes of the Season

"Arkansas Blues," described as a down-home chant, and which is published by the Frances Clifford Music Co., Chicago, Ill., is fast establishing a record for a number of its type. For a period of months it has been one of the most successful of the novelty song and instrumental numbers. Generally speaking, the life of a "blues" number is quite short, but such is not the case with "Arkansas Blues." It is apparently easy to sing and as it is featured extensively in theatres, cabarets, dance halls, amusement parks, etc., its sales should be quite large during the present season.

The writer of the number, Spencer Williams, in describing it, said:

"The melody of 'Arkansas Blues' is similar to the chant of the Voodoo doctors at a time when they are indulging in their witchcraft dances." Mr. Williams, by the way, is the writer of other successes, as "Royal Garden Blues" and "Tishomingo Blues," and the Frances Clifford Music Co. will shortly release his latest number, entitled "The Mississippi Blues."

Nature makes no allowance for a man who lies down; he must face the music.

MUSIC PUBLICITY OF MANY USES

Advertising Material Prepared by Leo Feist, Inc., Found Available for Use of Talking Machine Dealers in Window Displays, Etc.

During the past year Leo Feist, Inc., has issued much of its advertising material in a form which allows it to be used in many ways, all of which, however, carry the same idea on any individual song title. This includes the material for window strips, counter display, material for the band and orchestra field and for trade papers. Smaller reproductions embodying the same idea have recently been used by many of the salesmen, song pluggers and others in the company's employ as a "back-up" on their personal cards.

Invariably the Feist advertising material can be most appropriately used by the talking machine record dealer, the player roll retailer or by those handling sheet music. In this manner special material need not necessarily be issued for any particular record, roll, etc., but the same material can be used advantageously in any one of these fields or in all of them.

The Feist active sellers are invariably announced in The World, the material usually ap-

SURVEY OF CONDITIONS IN THE RETAIL FIELD IN AKRON

Reports From Leading Dealers Show Marked Increase for 1921 Over Previous Year—Big Holiday Trade Inspires Confidence That 1922 Will Make a Satisfactory Showing

AKRON, O., January 5.—A survey of the retail music industry this week by a representative of The World disclosed that, without exception, every dealer enjoyed a very profitable business during the holiday season and in many instances the volume of sales was beyond their expectations. Another encouraging report, which is putting the industry on a better footing, is the fact that collections have improved in the past four weeks almost 25 per cent and that sales are, in a large majority, for cash instead of instalments.

Double the volume of business of 1920 was done the past year by the A. B. Smith Piano Co., according to Ernest E. Smith, manager of the company. "Our books show that twice the number of pianos and talking machines were moved during 1921 as in the year previous," said Mr. Smith. Continuing, he declared that the piano and talking machine business is steadily improving and he predicts a busy Spring for the retail music trade of the Akron district. He expressed himself as being highly pleased with the improvement in collections the past four weeks, which change is attributed to the revival in the rubber industry and the relieving of the unemployment situation, hundreds of workers having returned to their jobs since the middle of December. Talking machines moved well the three weeks prior to Christmas and records held their own. Small goods helped swell the volume of holiday trade.

George S. Dales, of the George S. Dales Co., Victor dealer, said this week that the holiday talking machine business was beyond expectations this year and that much more merchandise was moved than he anticipated. He declared that there was practically no business on cheaper-grade machines and that sales in his store were confined to merchandise from $100 up. "Taking the holiday business as a whole, it was 50 per cent better than a year ago," said Mr. Dales.

Phenomenal record sales characterized the holiday business at the Windsor & Poling store, another Victor store, according to Earl Poling, of the firm. He said that the business the day prior to Christmas was so heavy that it was almost impossible for the augmented sales force to handle the crowds.

J. A. Perry, well-known music dealer at New Castle, Pa., has taken over the entire stock formerly owned by John C. Rote, bankrupt, 30 East street, and will dispose of same at a sale. The stock includes a varied line of talking machines and records. Mr. Perry has been connected with several New Castle music firms.

Thomas B. Johnson, formerly manager of the Union Piano Co., Akron, has joined the sales force of the A. B. Smith Piano Co. This is the first addition to the sales force of this music house for many months and is an indication that business is on the up-grade, according to Manager Ernest Smith.

Business in the music department of the M. O'Neil department store, largest Akron department store, was of a very satisfactory volume during the holiday season, William H. Corcoran, merchandising manager, said this week. The talking machine sales were ahead of last year and records held up amazingly well for three weeks prior to Christmas.

DEALERS INSTALL EQUIPMENT

Report by Van Veen & Co. Indicates That Dealers Plan Lively Campaign for Business

Van Veen & Co., Inc., New York City, report that a large number of dealers are planning to increase their facilities during 1922. Leon Tobias, secretary of the company, is spending much time in and out of town calling upon the various dealers and co-operating with them in planning these improvements. A. L. Van Veen, president of the company, states that the recent installation in the talking machine department of the James A. Hearn department store, New York City, is exciting considerable comment, because of its exceptional soundproof qualities.

THE INFLUENCE OF GREAT MUSIC

"Great music is a physical storm, agitating to unimaginable depth the mystery of the past within us. Or we might say it is a prodigious incantation, every different instrument and voice making separate appeal to different billions of prenatal memories. There are tones that call up all the ghosts of youth and joy and tendencies. There are tones that evoke all phantom pain of perished passion. There are tones that resurrect all dead sensations of majesty and might and glory—all expired exultations—all forgotten magnanimities. Well may the influence of music seem inexplicable to the man who idly dreams that his life began less than a hundred years ago! But the mystery lightens for whomsoever learns that the substance of self is older than the sun. He finds that music is a Necromancy; he feels that to every ripple of melody, to every billow of harmony, there answers within him out of the Sea of Death and Birth some eddying immeasurable of ancient pleasure and pain.

"Pleasure and pain: They commingle always in great music, and therefore it is that music can move us more profoundly than the voice of ocean or than any other voice can do. But in music's larger utterance it is ever the sorrow that makes the undertone, the surf matter of the Sea of Soul. . . . Strange to think how vast the sum of joy and woe that must have been experienced before the sense of music could evolve in the brain of man!"—Lafcadio Hearn.

APPRECIATION OF RECORD MUSIC GROWING IN TORONTO

Musical Clubs and Literary Societies to Be Followed Up by Dealers—Figures on Male and Female Purchasers—Edison Artists Heard—Canadian Plant of General Phonograph Corp.—Recent Visitors

TORONTO, ONT., January 2.—The talking machine trade should not overlook the important fact that musical clubs and literary societies are doing a great deal to stimulate and create a demand for all that is up to date and best in music. Although they have no thought in regard to the commercial aspect, they nevertheless are the mand for all that is up to date and best in music. music trade that would not otherwise be spent with it. The reason for this is that through them the influence and power of music is being taught and understood. As a consequence, there is an ever-increasing and steady demand for talking machine records, vocal and instrumental selections and publications, which should not escape the notice of music dealers, whose encouragement and hearty co-operation would result in benefit to both parties.

Mrs. Christine Frederick, director of the Applecroft Experiment Station, Greenlawn, L. I., in an address recently before the Advertising Affiliation Convention in Hamilton, Ont., stated that only 24 per cent of the talking machines bought were purchased by men. This would mean, therefore, that women do the bulk of the buying, the percentage being 76 per cent.

C. J. Pott, of the General Phonograph Corp., reports a much brighter outlook from all quarters, and that plans are now being made for a greatly increased production of motors and tone arms during the Winter and Spring at the Kitchener factory.

Recent visitors to the Canadian headquarters of the Columbia Graphophone Co. were L. L. Leverich, advertising manager at the New York office, and T. H. Johnson, of the George Batten Advertising Agency. Mr. Pratt, of the New York office, also called on the Toronto Columbia dealers recently.

An event in the trade in Ottawa was the personal appearance recently of several Edison artists in a special demonstration of re-creation qualities in the Edison instrument. This stunt has been featured in many cities, but it was staged in fine style in Ottawa through the initiative of Arthur Mandy, Ottawa branch manager of R. S. Williams & Sons Co., Ltd., in having the soloists at the luncheon of the Rotary Club of Ottawa on the same day as the public concert and in making a speech on the subject of the origin of the phonograph before the club luncheon.

H. S. Berliner, proprietor of the Compo Co., of Lachine, Que., recently renewed his contract to personally supervise the manufacture of the material and the pressing of Starr-Gennett records for the Starr Co. of Canada, in connection with which W. D. Stevenson, of the latter company, recently met Mr. Berliner here.

Arthur B. Pollock, of the Canadian Division of the General Phonograph Corp., and in charge of the Canadian factory at Kitchener, when seen recently in Toronto was enthusiastic over the quality of the motors being produced in Kitchener, and also over the production facilities at the plant. With modern equipment, a large, thoroughly trained staff and experienced engineers and inspectors, the output of motors for 1922, Mr. Pollock feels confident, will, in point of both quality and quantity, be a credit to Canadian manufacturing enterprise.

John A. Croden, president of the Starr Co. of Canada, Ltd., London, recently visited dealers in the Western provinces. He was accompanied by Mrs. Croden, who, unfortunately, was hurriedly called home owing to the serious illness of her mother.

An intelligent, living counterpart of "Nipper," the His Master's Voice dog, trots sedately back and forth in a Western talking machine store with a monthly record supplement in his mouth. He courteously presents the booklet to customers entering the store.

With the addition of Roy Howells to the selling staff of the Sun Record Co., distributor of Apex records, the Howells family can truly be called a musical family.

J. W. Nichols, who is well known in the talking machine trade through his dealers' service and promotion work for His Master's Voice, Ltd., has joined the staff of the Musical Merchandise Sales Co. in the same capacity. Mr. Nichols has already taken up his new duties and will devote all his time to co-operating with

HOLIDAY SALES IN MONTREAL WERE ABOVE THE AVERAGE

Prices, However, Were Very Elastic, an Evil Which Should Be Remedied—Julien & Co., Ltd., Assigns—Recent Edison Tone-tests—Wm. Lee's Great Columbia Sales—Month's News Budget

MONTREAL, CAN., January 3.—Christmas talking machine sales this year were excellent, and why shouldn't they be? Never before in the history of the industry has so much newspaper advertising been used by the manufacturers, and this was largely supplemented by the retail dealers, and in addition talking machines were offered at any old terms. Montreal is situated a little differently than most cities inasmuch as the English population caters more to gift-giving at Christmas than the French citizens, who observe New Year's Day as a day for exchanging presents. So the dealers get the benefit of both weeks.

Nora Bayes, the well-known Columbia artist, played a week's engagement at His Majesty's Theatre. Her appearance in person was certainly profitable for Columbia dealers, who cashed in largely on the sale of her records.

The McCaw-Bissell Furniture Co., Sherbrooke, Que., recently advertised the Aeolian-Vocalion as follows: "While not the best-known phonograph, the Aeolian is positively the best of known phonographs to-day. It stands without a peer in the phonograph world."

New firms registered in Montreal include the Artrola Co., manufacturer of talking machines.

The first community Christmas tree ever put up in Montreal was placed in Dominion Square on Christmas eve and a community sing of Christmas songs and carols was held. Brown's Talking Machine Shop as usual supplied the Magnavox.

The McCaw-Bissell Furniture Co., Sherbrooke, Que., has received its first shipment of English records made by the Aeolian Co., of London, Eng.

C. J. Pott, Canadian manager of the General Phonograph Corp., Ltd., Toronto, was a recent visitor to this city in the interests of Heineman and Meisselbach motors and tone arms. He reported improved business conditions in the Prov-

Brunswick dealers by preparing all sorts of dealer helps and in helping solve these retail problems. He has had a wide experience in both wholesale and retail talking machine work in the West as well as here in the East.

W. F. Hitchcock, proprietor of the Phonomotor Co., Rochester, N. Y., and maker of the Hitchcock patented electric drive and automatic stop for talking machines, finds that business conditions in Canada, as far as his line is concerned, are picking up more quickly than those in the United States.

With the co-operation of the Liberal-Conservative Association, which installed a telegraph and receiving station in the Ryrie Building, where Sonora offices are located, I. Montagnes & Co., Canadian distributors, announced the recent Dominion election returns from the Sonora offices through the Magnavox and the Sonora. The results were plainly heard for some blocks distant.

ince of Quebec, which he found to be confirmed by the observations of other business men in Montreal.

Phinney's, Ltd., Halifax, N. S., brought to that city recently Edison tone test recital artists Miss Leola Lucey, Adrien Freiche and Raymond Barry. It has always been the custom of this firm to issue invitations for these annual events, but this year the public was invited to attend, all that was necessary being to ask at their store for tickets. The recital was held in the Majestic Theatre.

W. B. Puckett and F. A. Trestrail, of the Musical Merchandise Sales Co., Toronto, and A. J. Kendrick, sales manager of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., Chicago, visited Montreal the middle of last month.

The stork recently visited the home of W. W. O'Hara, of W. W. O'Hara, Ltd., Columbia dealer, and deposited therein a bouncing baby girl.

Eugene Julien & Co., Ltd., Quebec, have made a voluntary assignment. The assets of the firm are $1,300,000, while the liabilities are said to exceed a million dollars. The failure is ascribed to difficulty of collections, reduced sales and loss on heavy stock. The firm deals in talking machines, musical merchandise, sheet music, pianos, automobiles, furniture, agricultural implements and vehicles of all kinds.

The appearance in Montreal of Harry Lauder, exclusive Victor artist, stimulated the sale of this artist's records. The demand for the new double-faced ones of his recording was considerably stimulated.

In connection with the recent Edison tone test recital held in the Ritz-Carlton Hotel under the auspices of Layton Bros. this firm ran a photograph of the event in the leading newspapers showing the large and fashionable audience present, and they are to be congratulated upon providing a recital of such high artistic merit.

An attractive display inaugurated by Wm. Lee, Ltd., paraded the main thoroughfare featuring a freight car of Columbia Grafonolas, numbering 130 cabinet models. Mr. Lee, the president and managing director, was most emphatic in his statement that this carload of $10,000 of Grafonolas would be sold within ten days—and they were.

V. Sgroi, Columbia distributor, had a similar parade featuring the sale of a carload of Columbia Grafonolas and likewise was most enthusiastic as to the disposal of the same within a very short period.

Christmas clubs were all the rage during December, and from what we can learn all makers participating in the same reaped the benefit of an increased volume of sales.

TRADE GLEANINGS FROM WINNIPEG

Melotone Co. Makes Offer of Preferred Stock—Masterpiece Co. Incorporated—Incident Which Shows the Extent of Talking Machine Popularity—How Calgary Dealer Builds Trade

WINNIPEG, MAN., January 5.—The Melotone Talking Machine Co., of this city, which for the past six years has been engaged in the manufacture of talking machines, is offering to the investing public of the Province $50,000 of 8 per cent preferred stock.

The Fowler Piano Co., which has been established for some years at 432 Main street, is moving to splendid, large, new quarters at Portage and Edmonton streets.

The Child & Gower Piano Co., Regina, Sask., is specializing in Columbia Grafonolas and Brunswick phonographs.

Mr. Johnson, of the Mason & Risch Regina store, reports that they carry so complete a supply of His Master's Voice records that they could easily arrange classified selections for use in almost any sort of a lecture-recital on short notice.

W. G. F. Scythes & Co. tendered the music lovers of Regina a phonograph concert at the City Hall auditorium recently which was greatly appreciated by the many who attended. The phonograph used was a New Edison. Miss Helen Newitt, soprano, Miss Virginia Powell, reader, and Miss Whitaker, violinist, helped to make the event a success.

The Masterpiece Music Co., Ltd., 519 Burrard street, Vancouver, B. C., has incorporated for $40,000, taking over the business of the Masterpiece Phonograph Co.

The manner in which the talking machine has penetrated into the remotest country districts of our Canadian West is indicated by this item in one of the Edmonton papers: "A young woman called at the warerooms of a music dealer in Saskatoon to see some talking machine records. She mentioned that her home was two hundred miles from the railroad, and that she had come to the city by motor car. The dealer, naturally, began to show her some of the newer and more popular records. She was not particularly interested. 'We have that one,' was her invariable remark. After inquiry the dealer learned that the family received every month the catalog of one of the leading manufacturers, and purchased the records largely by mail order."

A Calgary, Alta., phonograph firm watches for wedding announcements of daughters of its regular customers. To the recent bride goes a letter calling to her attention the fact that her family has been a customer of the store for many years and that they offer the same service to her. Of course, they close the letter by inviting her to open an account, and store statistics prove that many of the brides thus invited do so.

Claire Dux, soprano of the Chicago Opera Co. and Brunswick artist, was one of the soloists at a morning musicale in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York City last week.

BUFFALO DEALERS ARE OPTIMISTIC

Business Steadily Improving, With Better Prospects in Sight—G. W. Peace Resigns—Victor Dealers' Association Honors Victor Artists—The Enterprise of Oliver E. Dake

BUFFALO, N. Y., January 9.—It is with a hopeful spirit that the talking machine dealers here are looking forward to 1922. The impetus derived from Christmas trade provided them with considerable encouragement, after a year that had been rather a dull one.

Business here is still improving, with better prospects in sight. Industrial conditions are very much better than they were a few months ago and there is a greater plentitude of ready money. Record business picked up considerably, also, during the holiday season. Popular syncopated numbers went rapidly. The record business was still continuing strong after Christmas.

G. W. Peace has announced his resignation from the Columbia branch office here, where he has been assistant branch manager. The resignation takes effect January 14. Mr. Peace is not announcing his future plans at the present time.

In honor of John Steel and Walter C. Kelley, Victor artists, who were appearing that week at Shea's Theatre here, the Victor Dealers' Association of Western New York held a luncheon at the Hotel Iroquois on December 30. C. E. Siegesmund, president of the Association, presided at the luncheon. Among those present were Curtis N. Andrews and O. L. Neal. Covers were laid for about thirty members of the Association.

The Columbia carload sales which have been held in this vicinity have proven very successful. In frequent cases it is reported Grafonola sales mounted to the 100 mark. Much enthusiasm is reported from the places where the sales were held.

The Brunswick branch here reports a good business in records during the holiday season. Among the popular numbers that are going well are the "Wabash Blues" and "Canadian Capers." The Brunswick operatic records are growing rapidly in popularity here, according to reports at the branch office.

T. R. Tracy, who has been connected with the Columbia branch here as city representative, has tendered his resignation, effective January 1. He is succeeded by Milton H. Batz.

Oliver E. Dake, Brunswick dealer at Springville, N. Y., and also proprietor of a moving picture theatre in that town, recently combined his two lines so as to feature the Brunswick. He held a special "Brunswick Day" at the theatre, when a fine program of movies was shown and an exhibition given of the qualities of the Brunswick. Admission was free. His move proved a great hit, large crowds attending the theatre from whom he got a long list of prospects.

OUR FOREIGN CUSTOMERS

Interesting Figures Showing the Leading Importers of Talking Machines, Records and Supplies in Foreign Countries

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 9.—Details of the statistics relative to exports of talking machines, records and accessories from the United States during November, 1921, issued by the Department of Commerce, which appear elsewhere in this issue of The World, show that Canada was the leading importer of talking machines, its purchases possessing a value of $73,918. Mexico was second, with imports valued at $13,194, and Australia was third, with imports valued at $8,169.

Canada was also the leading importer of records and accessories, which were valued at $80,196. Argentina was second, with imports valued at $7,499, and Mexico was third, with imports valued at $6,221.

the first successful application of wood as a diaphragm in the phonograph reproducer

THE VIOLIN SPRUCE DIAPHRAGM

The Violin Spruce Diaphragm will earn acceptance as the greatest step in the tonal development of the phonograph.

It has been brought to the stage of commercial possibility under the supervision of the world's leading authority on acoustics. The application of the same scientific principles as applied to the forming of a violin top results in tone reproduction of a quality that is unattainable with any mica or fiber diaphragm.

So strikingly favorable is a comparison demonstration that the sale of a Violin Spruce Diaphragm almost invariably follows.

This diaphragm is adaptable to any well-made phonograph; interchangeable with any reproducer; unaffected by atmospheric conditions.

Mischa Elman and Mme. Schumann-Heink Achieve Triumphs During Their Recent Concert Tours in the Land of the Nipponese

It is generally understood that the Oriental's conception of what constitutes good music differs materially from that of the Occidental and vice-versa, and that for an American or European artist to attempt to win favor among the natives in the Orient with European or American music is likely to prove a mistake.

The recent visits of Mischa Elman, the noted an artist can give them. They are in every way equal to the finest audiences I have played before on any American or European stage.

"Substantially the same thing is true of Mme. Schumann-Heink's concerts—which the quiet and undemonstrative Japanese took at their full artistic value.

"The Japanese do not care for what is artistically imperfect or insincere; they will not have it, they will not tolerate its presence. All must be perfect in technique; must embody sincere human feeling; must, in short, touch life into responsiveness.

"Therefore, when we tell you that, immediately after the concerts of these two great Victor artists, Japanese dealers in Victor products were literally swamped with orders for their Victor records, you will agree with us that high tribute has been paid not only to the genius of Mischa Elman and to Mme. Schumann-Heink, but also to the innate quality and the supremacy of the products that we are proud to manufacture and you to sell."

The wonderful response accorded these artists on their tours is indicative of the progress of American music in Japan and the splendid opportunities for developing the talking machine trade in that country.

violinist, and Mme. Schumann-Heink to Japan, however, and the wonderful receptions accorded those artists by the Japanese has shed a new light on the progress of the Japanese, at least in matters musical as we understand them. The results of the tours are set forth as follows in The Voice of the Victor:

"The tours of both of these artists were something more than ordinary 'successes.' They not only drew audiences, but they drew audiences of high responsiveness.

"Few except the most far-seeing American manufacturers and merchants know the eager curiosity with which Japan looks upon the Western world. It is not a curiosity born of ignorance, but one which has grown out of an appreciation of the arts developed through centuries, and pursued to a degree of connoisseurship hardly known in the Western world.

"Hear Elman himself. When he gave his first Japanese concert he said: 'Do these people really appreciate my music or do they applaud because they think it is the proper thing to do?' He gave his own reply before leaving Japan when he said to the same person: 'I am convinced that these people appreciate the very best

INVENTION ATTRACTS INTEREST

Several members of the local trade have expressed keen interest in a new invention recently completed by Hugo Schroeder, who has perfected several improvements in the automobile field. Mr. Schroeder's invention, when attached to a talking machine, will play from one to twelve records consecutively, or will repeat the whole or a part of any record. The invention is noteworthy for its simplicity, as it is controlled entirely by two buttons and does not mar or injure the cabinet in any way. After each record is played it is thrown off automatically, and the succeeding record is placed on the turntable ready for playing.

Featuring the MUSICAL POSSIBILITIES of the TALKING MACHINE

[EDITOR'S NOTE:—This is the fifteenth of a new series of articles by William Braid White, devoted to the various interesting opportunities which prevail in the domain of education for the retailer of talking machines. The subject is one of great interest and we commend these articles to the consideration of all who are devoting attention to the featuring and developing of the musical possibilities of the talking machine.]

A WAY TO GET AT THE MUSICIANS

Why do not merchants try harder to sell the talking machine to singers and students of singing, as well as to other musicians? The question when asked sounds so obvious and there seems to be so very little need of asking it that the reader may wonder if, in putting it forward, we are not showing ourselves hard pressed for a subject. Yet such is not the case. For, obvious as the idea may be, the fact remains that talking machine dealers have been singularly slow to connect up their selling machinery with the musical people in their communities. Yet these musical people form a large and eminently desirable element in the buying mass, an element which ought to be encouraged, brought into the buying circle and exploited for all it is worth. As a subject to be discussed at the opening of the year, it is highly apropos.

Repertoire and Study

The writer happens to be acquainted with a young lady who for some years has been studying the vocal art. She possesses an excellent contralto voice and most of the qualities which go to make up a successful singer. She finds, however, like many others, that one of her greatest difficulties is to keep in touch with the progress of the art as exemplified by its great exponents. In order to perfect her repertoire she finds it necessary not only to hear a great deal of music, but to be continually studying new things and working to gain the right interpretations of the great standard works. This means usually that one must engage the services of a coach, which is very expensive. Even when a singer has graduated, as it were, and is no longer a mere pupil, the need persists for acquiring a large and perfected repertoire. A singer must be letter perfect and note perfect in a great many songs, arias, recitatives, etc., and at the same time must be acquainted with the traditional method of rendering many of these that are old enough to have acquired a tradition. That is only another way of saying that the great mass of classic and operatic music suited for each type of voice, soprano, mezzo-soprano, contralto, tenor, baritone and bass, must be studied by each possessor of one of these voices, not merely as to word and music but as to interpretation, too.

The singer who cannot go on forever paying out large fees to a coach has, however, one excellent substitute. This, of course, is the talking machine. Just as soon as this fact is clearly recognized by, and demonstrated to, any singer there will be an immediate response. And in the case of the young lady to whom I have already referred the talking machine has become a truly adequate substitute for the ordinary process of coaching.

A Practical Example

This young singer has not only a good talking machine but has gradually acquired an excellent library of contralto songs and airs as sung by such great contraltos as Clara Butt, Louise Homer and others. She has thus been able not only to learn the traditional method of rendering most of the important classic airs, such as the great solos in Handel's oratorios and in the best-known Italian operas still in use, but also of comparing one artist's rendering with another. This has been a most wonderful help to her and has enabled her to learn for herself what otherwise she would have had to pay others to tell her.

What has here been set forth as the experience of one singer has been the experience in fact of many others. But still there is comparatively very little understanding by singers of the possibilities of the talking machine. That this ignorance should exist is not very creditable to the retail merchants of the industry.

Numbers vs. Influence

If it be alleged that the past trade apathy of which we speak has been fostered by a belief that in all probability very little could be gained by cultivating the trade of the musicians the answer is that all experience points the other way. Here is a feature of all such situations. The musical community is always a small fraction of the larger community of which it forms a part, but its influence is always out of any proportion with its numbers. Musicians, for instance, who are important enough to appear on the concert platform with concert grand pianos are very few in number, and the actual quantity of concert grand pianos made at any time is very small. Yet it is the concert grand which dominates and directs the construction of every other piano, while it is the concert grand user who advertises pianos in general to the public more effectively than any other medium does or can. The same reasoning holds good with the talking machine business.

The musicians who use talking machines as aids for study are few in number as yet, and even when the talking machine shall have become as much a feature of the vocal studio as the piano is, they will still constitute only a small fraction of the complete community. But if every vocal studio where is now a piano also held a talking machine and library of records, the talking machine would be ipso facto placed in a position of superiority which it in no other way could possibly achieve. The musicians of the community would be behind it—that is what it would come to—and it would, therefore, step at once into a public position of respect and regard on the part of the whole community which it otherwise would and could not attain.

How to Do It

Is there anything unreasonable, therefore, in the idea of a merchant setting aside a part of his advertising appropriation and of his floor space for the purpose of cultivating, obtaining and exploiting to the general advantage the talking machine trade of the musicians? There are many ways in which such a scheme might legitimately be worked out. For instance, it would be a simple matter to provide a room especially for the purpose of enabling singers to select records. This should be comfortably furnished, and contain a piano, which should be kept in tune constantly. It should be in charge of a saleswoman who knows something about music and who could, for instance, be trusted to see that the pitch of a record and the pitch of the piano were in agreement when a musician might wish to try on the piano the accompaniment to a record, as is often done. And there are many other details which will suggest themselves.

But this is not all. Suppose that each month the musicians of the community, especially vocal teachers, students, church soloists, etc., should receive lists of the extant vocal records classified for soprano, contralto, tenor, baritone, etc., for the purpose not only of showing the new things which come out each month, but also to give information and suggestions as to choice of music for the different voices. This would be a simple scheme, but most effective. It would, of course, entail a good deal of work, but the manufacturers of records are always ready to co-operate, and many of them already put out educative matter.

Similar work in the advertising columns of the newspapers, if kept up persistently, would have the best of effects. In a word, it is a question (1) of arresting the attention of vocal teachers and students of singing, (2) of demonstrating to them that the talking machine and its records are actually a genuine and authentic record of interpretation and style, and (3) of showing that the store actually possesses enough knowledge to co-operate intelligently with musicians who wish to avail themselves of the musical possibilities of the talking machine.

One could go along indefinitely in this strain, but enough has been said to outline the general idea. It need hardly be added that, given intelligent direction by the merchant and intelligent service by a trained clerk, the same idea may easily be broadened to include instrumental music and the students thereof.

LIVELY MEETING OF THE TALKING MACHINE MEN, INC.

Entertainment Features Overshadow Business at Monthly Meeting of Local Organization—Elaborate Plans for the Future of the Association Announced and Discussed by Members

The monthly meeting and luncheon of The Talking Machine Men, Inc., the first meeting since the joining with that body of the United Phonograph Dealers' Association, attracted about 125 members of the association and their friends, one of the biggest gatherings in the history of the organization.

During the course of the luncheon President Kurtz took the opportunity of making a list of those present and introducing them all individually. Before proceeding with the general program he announced that a new swindler of talking machine dealers had been captured. This man had made a practice of visiting Victor dealers and while a record was being demonstrated for him in the booth he would remove the Victor sound-box and substitute therefor a cheap imported sound-box of similar design. Local retailers who have suffered at the hands of the swindler are urged to communicate with Mr. Kurtz at once in order that they may appear against him in court.

The E. B. Marks Music Co. was the music publisher invited to this month's meeting, and Ed Bloedon, of the company's staff, introduced Billy Jones and Ernest Hare, well-known and successful record artists, who rendered in their inimitable manner "Down at the Ol' Swimmin' Hole" and two brand new Marks numbers, "Eddie Leonard Blues," and "Lullawanna Lullaby."

After this demonstration the Princess Watawaso was introduced, appearing in costume, and gave a very interesting talk regarding her work of interpreting Indian music and legends. The Princess also sang several characteristic Indian songs, explaining each in detail, and demonstrating several Indian dances, her work creating a decidedly good impression. It is very likely that she will be heard on numerous occasions in and about New York under the auspices of various Victor dealers, for which company she has made a number of records.

M. V. DeForeest, president of the National Association of Music Merchants, was next introduced and told briefly of what was being accomplished by the national organization for the benefit of music and talking machine dealers as a whole. He also called attention to the forthcoming convention of the various national music trade organizations in New York in the Spring, to be preceded by a big music week celebration.

President Kurtz next introduced the several division vice-presidents, namely, L. Tylkoff, for the Columbia; V. J. Faeth, for the Victor; A. Bersin, for the Brunswick, and J. H. Mayers, for the Sonora. The several vice-presidents in turn gave their ideas of what was to be accomplished and the best way to proceed. Mr. Tylkoff particularly pointed out the growing menace offered by the price-cutter and "gyp" dealer.

The attention of the members of the association was called to the forthcoming celebration of the 125th anniversary of the birth of Franz Schubert on January 29, and they were urged to feature records of Schubert's popular compositions, as well as portraits of the composer, in their window and store displays and in their publicity.

President Kurtz announced that artists were now working on a new design for an association insignia, with a record as the basis, and that a suitable slogan to be placed thereon was much desired, suggestions being sought. It is the plan to have the insignia reproduced on decalcomania for pasting on store windows, etc.

The president also announced that several leading manufacturers had been approached with the suggestion that a certificate be issued with every machine leaving the factory, the certificate to bear the machine number, and that the advertising to the public urge that the buyer insist upon receiving a certificate with the machine to insure its being as represented.

It was also suggested that manufacturers print two list prices in their catalogs, one applying to cash sales and one to instalment sales. No action was taken on this at present.

The annual entertainment and dance of The Talking Machine Men, Inc., will be held in April, and plans are under way to make it one of the most elaborate of the series. Plans are also being considered for a big musical affair in the Fall in one of the theatres featuring the Eight Famous Victor Artists, some of the prominent recording orchestras and other artists known to the public through the medium of their records.

Among the out-of-town visitors at the meeting were S. Semels, president, and H. A. Glasser, secretary, of the Victor Retailers of New Jersey.

At the next meeting of the Talking Machine Men, Inc., to be held on February 15, the L.

Wolfe Gilbert Music Corp. will send representatives to tell of its plans for the New Year and demonstrate some of its late song successes. The rest of the session will be devoted exclusively to business.

AN IMPORTANT "PRICE" DECISION

While Beechnut Packing Co.'s Policy Is Declared Illegal, U. S. Supreme Court Reaffirms Right of Refusal to Sell to Price-Cutters—Views of Justice Holmes, Who Dissented

Believers in the value of price maintenance in the retail field and in the protection of trademarked merchandise have been interested in and surprised at the recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in the Beechnut Packing Co.'s case which, while reaffirming the right of a manufacturer, or merchant, to refuse to sell to price-cutters—in other words, goods may be withheld from those who will not sell them at the prices fixed—the court, by a five to four decision, held that the company cannot consistently, under the Sherman Act, go beyond the exercise of this right, and by contracts, or combinations, expressed or implied, unduly hinder or obstruct the free and natural flow of commerce in the channels of interstate trade. In this respect the Beechnut Co. went beyond its legal rights, according to Supreme Court Justice Day, who wrote the majority opinion, reversing the ruling of the Federal Court of Appeals, which refused to uphold the complaint of the Federal Trade Commission.

Justice Holmes, who, with McReynolds, McKenna and Brandeis, dissented from the majority opinion, in a prepared statement pointed out in part: "The ground on which the respondent is held guilty is that its conduct has a dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or to create monopoly. It is enough to say that this I cannot understand. So far as the Sherman Act is concerned I had supposed that its policy was aimed against attempts to create a monopoly in the doers of the condemned act, or to hinder competition with them. Of course there can be nothing of that sort here. . . . The worst that can be said, so far as I can see, is that it hinders competition among those who purchase from it. But it seems to me that the very foundation of the policy of the law to keep competition open is that the subject matter of the competition would be open to all but for the hindrance complained of. I cannot see what that policy has to do with a subject matter that comes from a single hand that is admitted to be free to shut as closely as it will. And to come back to the words of the statute I cannot see how it is unfair competition to say to those to whom the respondent sells and to the world, you can have my goods only on the terms that I propose, when the existence of any competition in dealing with them depends upon the respondent's will. I see no wrong in so doing, and if I did I should not think it a wrong within the possible scope of the word unfair. Many unfair devices have been exposed in suits under the Sherman Act, but to whom the respondent's conduct is unfair I do not understand." Justice McKenna and Justice Brandeis concurred in this view of the case.

FILE ANSWERS IN "SUPERBA" SUIT

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 10.—The May Co. and the May Department Stores Co., both of Cleveland, O., have filed separate answers to the suits brought against them several months ago by the Schiller Piano Co., of Oregon, Ill., charging infringement of its trade-mark for phonographs and asking $50,000 damages, according to advices received here by the United States Patent Office.

The May concerns state that the advertisements were withdrawn as soon as it was learned that the word "Superba" was used as a trade-mark by the Schiller Piano Co. They state further that no machines were sold under that name and deny that there was any intention to defraud.

American People Beginning to Like the Classics, Declares Paul Whiteman, the Noted Orchestra Leader—Wide Jazz Craze Is Wearing Out

Paul Whiteman and his orchestra were the subject of a very interesting article in the magazine section of the New York World on January 8, the article being written by John Wiley and telling how Mr. Whiteman came to organize his own orchestra in San Francisco and of the success won by the orchestra in Atlantic City and finally in New York. The popularity won by the Whiteman orchestra through the medium of Victor records is country-wide and, therefore, the opinion offered by that well-known conductor regarding the change of public taste in music is of unusual interest.

In this connection Mr. Whiteman is quoted as saying:

"I think the attitude of the American people toward music has changed. They like things that were formerly considered classic and fit only for opera or the concert stage. Even in the jazziest homes there is a section of the album where the red seal records are kept. I think that the phonograph and the player-piano are accountable for this. Of course, rhythm and tone are the fundamentals of jazz, yet when people hear classical music that they know set to jazz they particularly enjoy it.

"I think that the days of jazz being popular simply because it is jazz are over. It is no longer new to see a man play a trombone walking around his chair or blow a horn through his hat, or playing two instruments at the same time and simultaneously playing the traps. That sort of stuff doesn't get by any more. The novelty has worn off. They do enjoy, though, renditions of favorite composers such as Grieg, Massenet, Schubert, Chopin and Puccini. They are always popular. It is familiarity with these pieces that people enjoy.

"We were the first to start playing soft. Now that there aren't so many drunk parties as there were, this comes as a relief, because sober people don't like the blare. Of course, in scoring for dance music, the field is limited. People for some reason will not dance waltzes. Dances like the tango and the maxixe passed out a long time ago."

Mr. Whiteman smiled. "Of course, you can't tell," he said, "how long the vogue for this kind of music is going to last. The public is pretty fickle. Still we have been pretty successful." He flicked the ash from his cigarette. "Next summer we may go abroad if our contract permits." He smiled. "I guess we haven't anything to complain about," he added.

Loomis Temple of Music Attracts Enthusiastic Audiences With the Pictures Shown to Accompaniment of Victrola and Ampico

NEW HAVEN, CONN., January 9.—The Loomis Temple of Music attracted a host of lovers of music and art to its warerooms throughout last week with the showing of the "Dream Pictures," originated and presented by Branson DeCou, which have already been described at some length in The World.

The pictures were shown each afternoon and always attracted a capacity audience, and there were special evening presentations on Thursday and Friday to take care of those who could not attend the afternoon session. The Victrola and the Ampico in the Knabe piano were used in furnishing the musical accompaniments to the pictures, of which twelve in all were shown.

The showing of the Dream Pictures was well advertised by the Loomis Temple of Music and was also given much free publicity by the newspapers.

E. R. Strauss Attending Conference in Chicago—E. Wolf Returns to Toronto—O. J. Miller Visits Headquarters and Tells of Factory Activities in Chicago

E. R. Strauss, manager of the New York branch of the phonograph division of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., left on Saturday for a visit to the Brunswick headquarters in Chicago, to attend a sales conference of branch managers, to be held this week. This is the annual reunion held at this time each year for the purpose of discussing business done the past year, and the preparation of policies and plans for the new year. Mr. Strauss expects to be gone for a period of ten days.

Before leaving, Mr. Strauss announced that E. Wolf, who has been covering Brooklyn territory, has resigned and is returning to his home in Toronto, Canada. Mr. Wolf was formerly with the Musical Merchandising Sales Co., Canadian distributor for the Brunswick line in Toronto, and is going back to take up the post of sales representative, which he formerly held.

O. J. Miller, assistant superintendent of the Brunswick factories in Chicago, and son of C. P. Miller, vice-president of the New York branch of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., came East to spend the Christmas holidays with his parents at their home in Mt. Vernon. Mr. Miller called at the New York offices while here, and stated that the factories had been working overtime since the month of September, and that despite the night and day schedule at the plant they were unable to meet the demand, which is simply enormous.

YOU don't have to tell people what the Pathé red rooster on your window stands for. You may stake your reputation as a dealer on this: That they already know it and are entirely familiar with its significance—both as an identification of Pathé phonograph product and as an instantly recognized message of quality flashed daily on ten thousand motion picture screens.

You've got an asset in that red rooster and the Pathé name as big as the world-wide Pathé repertoire—as broad as the claims you can make for Pathé product—and as solid as the business you can build on the exclusive features and TONE and quality of both the Pathé Phonographs and Pathé Records. And it's one asset worth more to you each time we remind the public of what it stands for—as we are regularly doing it with increased force.

FOUR STAGES OF BUSINESS LIFE

Benjamin H. Jefferson, of Lyon & Healy, Describes Various Stages of Business Existence in a Very Interestingly Written Article

"How to Keep a Business From Growing Old" is the title of an interesting and lengthy article appearing in the current issue of Printers' Ink. The article, which was written by Benjamin H. Jefferson, advertising manager of the enterprising house of Lyon & Healy, Chicago, compares the average business life with that of a man. He points out that the life of a business has four distinct stages, as follows: An enterprise, an established enterprise, an enterprising establishment and an establishment.

Excerpts from the article, which possesses distinct merit and will form the basis for self-analysis by wise dealers, follow:

"A young man must go forward—and so must his enterprise. A middle-aged man proceeds vigorously but with caution; so does an established enterprise. A mature man looks carefully at the risk before trying new things, and so does an enterprising establishment. And, finally, an old man is busy hanging on to what he has. And so is an establishment.

"The relation of an enterprise to youth in another direction is also most interesting. An enterprise is willing to spend itself freely. Therefore, like a young man, it must absorb energy in great waves. Nature has fixed it that every enterprise must either perish or eventually turn into an establishment. Just as in every man's life the time must arrive when he is no longer able to give out endless radiations of pep, when he feels that he must conserve his strength, so this moment comes in a business house. But this time may be greatly retarded, and it is this fact that makes a study of the matter so well worth while. A man who is afraid of his shadow has a hard time of it; a business house that is unduly concerned with safety will quickly reach the fourth and final phase of its existence. When the business arrives where it 'won't take a chance' either on the human race, the vitality of the United States, the ability of an individual, the soundness of an idea, or the salability of goods, then the legal undertakers are near.

"In conclusion, it seems to me that a business man should hold fast to the spirit of joy in the conduct of his affairs. When office duties cease to be a pleasure, are they worth while? The bardic note should be encouraged in the visions of achievement yet to come. Enterprise for its own self, as well as for definite gains, should be treasured. Each division of the house should be viewed as embryonic, just as in the beginning. The full glory of the institution should still be visualized as something to be brought about in the years to come, as the fruition of plans conceived in happiness and brought forth in triumphant hope."

JOBBER'S COMMITTEE AT CAMDEN

Association Officials Confer With Company's Executives on Various Matters Connected With Merchandising of Victor Product

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 10.—Louis Buehn, president of the National Association of Talking Machine Jobbers, together with J. Newcomb Blackman, W. F. Davisson, L. C. Wiswell and E. C. Rauth, of the executive committee of that organization, visited the Victor Co. factory yesterday for the purpose of conferring with Victor officials regarding various matters of general importance to the trade. It is understood that many matters of interest were taken up, including a discussion of the record exchange, of cabinet styles and various distributing problems.

It was felt that there were a sufficient number of matters pending to warrant a conference between the jobbers and factory officials at this time without waiting for the calling of a meeting of the full executive committee of the association.

PRONOUNCED ACTIVITY PREVAILS IN BALTIMORE TRADE

Holiday Trade Exceeded Expectations—New Year Has Opened Up With Continued Buying Indicating That Baltimoreans Are Appreciative of the Talking Machine as a Musical Factor

BALTIMORE, Md., January 9.—Last-minute buying—that is, the purchasing of machines and records during the last week before Christmas—saved the holiday business for this city and section and not only came up to but in many cases exceeded the expectations of the most optimistic. A canvass of both the wholesale and retail business shows that the volume of business done during the month of December will run away ahead of the 1920 Christmas trade and bids fair to almost equal the banner years of 1918-19, which were due to wartime prosperity.

As was to be expected, this has been followed by a big sale of records ever since Christmas and dealers are having a hard time keeping their stocks supplied with most of the popular selections. The Victor Co. made a ten-strike by releasing its January records right after the holidays and its local distributors, Cohen & Hughes, have been kept busy trying to keep up with the orders which have been coming in ever since, especially "Ku-Lu-A," "Blue Danube Blues" and "Everybody Step," fox-trots, played by Paul Whiteman's Orchestra; "Weep No More, My Mammy," "April Showers," "Birds of a Feather," "Leavé Me With a Smile," "I Want Mammy" and "Mandy 'n' Me," by the Peerless and American quartets.

Handsome window displays featured the holiday trade, almost every dealer in the city, and especially those in the downtown section, having attractively arranged and in most cases original creations that held the attention of crowds at all times. The majority of them followed this up with liberal newspaper advertising calling attention to their unusual and beautiful displays.

The Columbia Branch is still pushing its carload lot proposition and meeting with great success, according to J. H. Marshall, who has just returned from Roanoke, Va., where he spent ten days helping Hobbie Bros. dispose of their carload order. He said the business done was remarkable and the best in the history of the firm, selling sixty-seven Grafonolas in ten days and disposing of as many in the last days before Christmas as were sold by the firm during the months of September, October and November. W. H. Swartz, of the Columbia sales force, was also busy just about the same time helping Gutman's, of Bristol, Va., dispose of their carload in what was record time for a sale of that kind. W. T. McCoy, of Charlotte, N. C., is another dealer who not only disposed of a carload but has placed his order for another one, due to the excellent work of Mr. Swartz and Paul E. Merker.

The Bubble Books had a big sale during Christmas and repeat orders are still coming in in such volume that the local agency is having a hard time in keeping the dealers supplied.

David Rufkind, 1534 Seventh street, Washington, is another new Columbia dealer who opened just before Christmas and reports an excellent business.

The Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. here reports a very gratifying year for the Brunswick machine, and that total sales for 1921 will no doubt greatly exceed all expectations. The business so far this month indicates that the improvement noted the last two months of the year can be counted upon to continue, and the outlook is very encouraging. The Brunswick is rapidly coming to the front in this territory, according to the local agency, and the list of dealers taking on the Brunswick line is being augmented each month.

The unusually large Christmas business was not confined to the downtown district by any means. Dealers in all sections of the city report not only a good holiday trade but, with few exceptions, business for the year, considering the industrial depression through which Baltimore and vicinity has passed, showed a very gratifying increase. Leonard Trout, of Trout's Music

Shop, 511 South Third street, Highlandtown, in commenting on business, said that while a number of the residents of his section had been hard hit by the closing down of the shipyards and other war plants, their business as a whole had been really better than they anticipated, especially the Christmas trade, and that they closed the year with a substantial balance on the right side of the ledger.

Going over into the western section of the city, Berlin & Lewis, 1317 West Baltimore street, had practically the same experience. They are located in a section of the city where their trade comes almost entirely from the working people, and notwithstanding that many of them lost considerable time during the year through furloughs from the railroad shops and other manufacturing plants, business for the year was very satisfactory and had shown a marked improvement during the past few months. It is expected that this improvement will continue.

CHINESE RECORDS PROVE PUZZLE

Collector of Customs Thought the Music Was a New Brand of Jazz Until Owner of Chop Suey Restaurant Made Explanation

LOUISVILLE, Ky., January 9.—Although "there's nothing new under the sun," more than a score of Chinese phonograph records proved a new importation to Collector of Customs Thomas L. Walker, who collected the tariff due and turned them over to their owner, Chan Fong, of the Liberty chop suey emporium.

The records represent the best vocal and instrumental talent of the Far East—the Paderewskis, Kreislers and Galli-Curcis of China.

Although the music was at first mistaken for American jazz by the unaesthetic ears about the Federal building, all were correctly informed to the contrary when Fong called for the prized records.

They were made in Canton and Berlin, whence they were imported through the Oriental firm of Eng Chow Co., of Vancouver, B. C.

Whether patrons of the chop suey cafe will be treated to Chinese opera and orchestral music with the meals, Fong could not say. He imported the records for the personal delectation of himself and compatriots at the cafe, but explained that he would play them for those "who like music with their meals," if appreciated, instead of American jazz.

Do you know of any device on the market to enable you to use old main springs which have broken in the center?

I find that many springs only break at the very end, and in many cases, as they are odd-sized springs which I have not in stock, I have been unable to make the repairs. Yours truly, Frank Rase.

Answer—It is impossible to use this main spring which has been broken in the center a second time. Those that break near the cage end, say up to about two feet from the end, can be used again if they are properly cut and holed. To make a new hole in the spring it is necessary to first take the temper out of the spring for about three inches back from its end. Then drill a hole a little larger than the head of the cage rivet, say an inch and a half from the end of the spring, and directly in front of this hole drill a second one the size of the body of the cage rivet; place the spring in a vise and, with a rat-tail file, file out the metal remaining between the two holes and then with a small, flat file shape up to a pear-shape hole. This completes the operation, as it is not necessary to re-temper the end of the spring. There is not at the present time any tool on the market that would be of any use to you other than those mentioned.

Repairing Broken Springs

Youngstown, O., January 7, 1922.

A. H. Dodin, care Talking Machine World:

Will you advise the writer if you know of any device whereby old, broken phonograph springs can be repaired and used a second time? The reason the writer asks this is that he has an idea that he could utilize about 95 per cent of all broken springs which at the present time are discarded for new ones used in their place. For the past two and a half years I have been repairing different makes of phonographs, and find that out of 1,700 springs which were broken and which I repaired and used a second time only nine of them were returned broken to me within that period of time. I believe that it would be a great saving to the repair department of the different stores to use my method of repairing these broken springs, and it would also obviate the necessity of carrying a stock of many different sizes of main springs which are seldom used. Trusting that you will give me your opinion of the value of a tool of this description and purpose, I am,

Very truly yours,

Domenick Ruff.

Answer—As to a device for repairing broken main springs I refer you to my answer to Mr. Frank Rase in the letter above. I am of the opinion that if you have only had nine returns out of 1,700 springs repaired your tool and method of doing this work must be very good, and I can see no reason why a tool of this nature would not find a ready sale among the many repair shops throughout the country. I would be very pleased to have you give me a description of this tool, or inform me when you have same ready to market and I will bring it to the attention of the various repairmen through this column as soon as received.

The establishment is fitted up very attractively and a complete line of Steger phonographs, with a full library of Okeh records, affords Atlanta music-lovers an opportunity to secure maximum service and cooperation.

TAX RELIEF IS USHERED IN

Elimination of Excise, Transportation and Other Taxes Means Substantial Savings for the Music Industry and Other Trades

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 6.—The first concrete evidence that the war is really "over" reached the music industry on January 1, when the repeal of the tax on musical instruments provided for in the new revenue law became effective. While benefiting directly from the lifting of this tax the industry also will feel the effect of the repeal of other taxes which during the past four years have been a material factor in the cost of production and distribution.

More than $13,000,000 was collected from the tax on musical instruments during the fiscal year ended June 30 last, and while business since the first of the year has fallen off somewhat it is believed that the taxes for the fiscal year of 1921 would have been not less than $10,000,000.

The repeal of the transportation taxes will save the business of the country hundreds of millions of dollars a year. Since January 1 there has been no tax on freight, express or parcel post shipments, on personal transportation tickets, or on berths, staterooms or similar accommodations.

The repeal of the excess profits tax and the lowering of the surtax rates became effective on the first of the year, and so taxpayers will not benefit by these provisions of the law in paying their income taxes for 1921. Heads of families, however, will benefit this year by the provision increasing the exemption for dependents from $200 to $400 each and increasing the personal exemption from $2,000 to $2,500 where the net income is not more than $5,000.

AN AGGRESSIVE MUSIC DEALER

Campbell Pomeroy, piano merchant of Santa Rosa, Cal., was the subject of an interesting cartoon and article in a recent issue of the Press Democrat of that city. The cartoon showed a portrait of Mr. Pomeroy resting on a Baldwin piano and bore the caption, "Campbell Pomeroy, Who Has Made 3,000 Homes Vibrate to the Baldwin Tone."

Mr. Pomeroy established his business in Santa Rosa in 1909 under the name of the Sonoma Music Co. and established a number of sub-agencies which enable him to cover the country thoroughly. He features Baldwin pianos particularly, and also handles Brunswick and Columbia machines.

Latest Brunswick Dealer in Central New York Gets Magnificent Send-off at Opening

ALBANY, N. Y., January 9.—The latest addition to the Brunswick retailer list in central New York State is Pommer's modern music store of this city, which was formally opened early in December by John W. Pommer. The Brunswick Co. spared no effort to make the opening a successful one and to properly introduce this new exclusive Brunswick dealer to the people of Albany. During the day a musical program was furnished by Carl Fenton's orchestra, exclusive Brunswick artists. E. R. Strauss, manager of the New York branch of the Brunswick Co., attended the opening and with Chester I. Abelowitz, metropolitan representative, planned and personally took charge of the arrangements.

The equipment of the store is modern in every respect, a feature of which is the installation of the Sel-Rex record counter, the newest device in the trade for hearing records. Seven private record booths have also been installed, of a design to conform with the rest of the store. Two large show windows, artistically arranged, add to the store's attractive appearance, which, as a whole, is a credit to the retail section.

MUSIC MEMORY CONTEST BULLETIN

Educational Department of Sanger Bros., Dallas, Tex., Prepares Elaborate Series of Plans and Suggestions for Carrying on Such a Contest With the Aid of the Victrola

The value of the music memory contest in the work of developing interest in the Victrola and Victrola music is strongly emphasized by the wholesale Victrola department of Sanger Bros., Dallas, Tex., which has recently issued a comprehensive set of instructions and suggestions for conducting a music memory contest. The outline is the work of L. A. Inman, director of the Victrola educational department of Sanger Bros., and is based largely upon suggestions made by many noted supervisors of music.

The outline includes suggestions for securing the support of school officials, newspapers, churches, etc., methods for raising necessary funds, the materials needed and the cost, the Victor literature of special value in the carrying on of the contest, and detailed plans for the carrying on of the contest itself. A number of the suggestions offered by the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, which was responsible for the music memory contest idea, are included in the bulletin, which is an admirable production in every respect.

The Tonepen Co., New York, manufacturer of Tonepen needles, states that its product is being well received by the dealers throughout the country. Distribution has been established from coast to coast, and the company has received enthusiastic letters from the dealers relative to the quality of its product and its sales value.

A few weeks ago the Tonepen Co. also received an interesting letter from a prominent manufacturer of an automatic repeater, who stated that he had tested the Tonepen needle and was delighted with its tone and wearing qualities, the contents of which, in detail, will be gladly sent to members of the trade. The company is making plans to give its dealers practical co-operation during 1922, and an intensive sales and merchandising campaign is under way.

D. L. Hogan, of Kankakee, Ill., who was a visitor to the Chicago office of the Columbia Co. the other day, reported a fair sale of Grafonolas during the holidays.

A LETTER FROM A DEALER

"New York, December 17, 1921.

"Editor, Talking Machine World, New York.

"Dear Sir: Tremendous changes are taking place in our business. It is now in a state of flux, but only the purblind fail to perceive the new order emerging from the chaos. This new order is not a thing of progress, but is rather a case of atavism, a reversion to the pre-A.T. Stewart era, when merchandising was only another name for 'doing' somebody.

"This condition has been brought about by a few unscrupulous jobbers, apparently with the tacit approval of the manufacturers. No attempt is being made to stop price cutting, misrepresentation and all-around rascality now running riot in our business. Nay, it is actually encouraged by certain jobbers by granting franchises to the lowest element and most notorious despoilers of our industry. Their advice to the dealers seems to be: 'Make sales, honestly if you can, but make them anyway.' And the present avalanche of 'gyps' infesting the whole country, and New York in particular, is one of the results.

"It is obvious that the legitimate dealer cannot continue much longer. I must sound an alarm and say to my friends who persist in living in a fool's paradise: 'Beware, the new order is upon you! Either fight for your business with your backs to the wall or get out while the getting out is good!' You are not wanted any longer. You were the goose that had been laying the golden eggs; the new order is for the killing of the goose. You must step aside and make room for the new darlings of these jobbers—the Pitch Blacks, the Blackbergs and their class.

"But you still have a powerful weapon in your hands. If you use it with unswerving resolve, then your battle is won; but if you are weak-kneed, if the temptation to get a missing record is too strong for you—better don't start. Bow your head and receive all the cuffs and kicks which are the heritage of the puny. This is your weapon: Trade only with the fair and square jobbers, of whom a few are still left. Refuse absolutely to have any dealings with those jobbers who have made themselves conspicuous by their treacherous actions.

"You may think yourself safe in your locality because you have always been on the level. But as sure as you are born a jobber is lurking around, giving you 'the once over,' trying to find an opening for a licensed gyp. Big sales is all that jobber cares for, and the gyp will always outsell you ten to one. Remember, it is a matter of life and death to your business. Many gyms, I am informed, have filed applications for franchises, among them the well-known Mr. Blackberg. He, too, gave 'his word of honor' to be 'good' (after pledging himself to purchase several carloads of goods). Who knows but the same jobber who whitewashed Mr. Pitch Black might also declare Mr. Blackberg 'kosher'?

(Signed) "Theo. Arison."

F. W. SCHWOEBEL WITH CORLEY CO.

Becomes Wholesale Manager of the Victor Department of the Widely Known Richmond House—Experienced, Capable and Popular

RICHMOND, VA., January 10.—F. W. Schwoebel, well known in the Victor trade throughout the South, joined the forces of the Corley Co., of this city, on January 1. He will act in the capacity of wholesale manager of the Victor department.

For a period running over several years Mr. Schwoebel has been affiliated with the Victor product. For a considerable length of time he was employed by the Victor Co. as traveling representative in the South. Later on in his career he became attached to the staff of one of the Southern Victor jobbers. A short time ago he severed this connection and joined the staff of the Eclipse Musical Co. He left this last position to assume the duties of manager of the Victor wholesale department of the Corley Co.

The many years of experience which Mr. Schwoebel has had in selling the Victor line and his personal intimate contact with the Southern trade and Southern conditions make him admirably suited for his new position. There is no doubt that the addition of Mr. Schwoebel to the staff of the Corley Co. will prove a very valuable asset to the house for the ensuing year and years to come.

SHELTON ELECTRICS FOR NOTED MEN

John D. Rockefeller Again Joins Forces with A. I. du Pont and Henry Ford in Paying Tribute to Merits of This Motor

W. Gentry Shelton, president of the Shelton Electric Co., New York City, reports that another Shelton electric motor for the talking machine has been purchased by John D. Rockefeller. Among the users of this efficient electric motor, which is placed on the top of the motor board next to the turntable, are such well-known men as Henry Ford and Alfred I. du Pont. Some time ago Mr. Rockefeller purchased a Shelton motor for his Pocantico Hills estate. It evidently gave entire satisfaction, as last week another one was ordered. It is expected that still another will be purchased within the next few months for use in his Summer home. Mr. Shelton has also been granted patents on a non-set automatic stop, which efficiently stops the motor as the last record groove is reached. He is negotiating with several prominent talking machine manufacturers relative to the exclusive use of this stop.

NEW THROW-BACK TONE ARM LIKED

Wm. Phillips, president of the Wm. Phillips Phono-Parts Co., reports that the new throw-back tone arm No. 5, which is octagon in shape, together with the No. 5 octagon sound box, is meeting with much popularity wherever shown. Mr. Phillips describes this new product as having a dual appeal. The octagon shape and excellent finish are very pleasing to the eye, and this new combination produces an exceptionally fine, full tone.

The Wm. Phillips Phono-Parts Co. completed a satisfactory year during 1921, and Mr. Phillips predicts that 1922 will see a continuance of good, normal business.

Expect New Year to Show Up Favorably in Comparison With Trade Prospects of a Year Ago—Christmas Trade Makes Satisfactory Showing—Annual Report of Federation of British Music Industries—Review of Conditions in Germany—The Record as a Censor of the King's English—Important Issues by the Record Companies—"His Master's Voice" in Electricity—Trade Figures Show Business Progress—New Baby Record—News of Month

LONDON, ENG., December 29.—With this issue we enter upon a new year, which it may reasonably be anticipated will show up favorably in comparison with trade prospects one year ago. One year ago our hopes of a big trade revival all over the world were at least bright in promise of fulfilment. But, oh! what a sad result! 1921 will go down into history, in the opinion of 90 per cent of traders, as a commercial failure of the first magnitude. It is useless to cry over spilled milk, and equally useless to waste time racking one's brains about what might have been. The only satisfaction possible is to make full use of our 1921 experiences, to profit by them in whatever way seems best calculated to forward along our trade plans for the new year.

1922, however, promises to make a really good start. The industrial and social unrest existent for so long throughout the world at last shows definite signs of improvement. This better understanding will strengthen as the year proceeds along its allotted course, establishing a firmer foundation upon which to build and develop commercial structures for the benefit of the community.

Throughout the world of politics good will among nations has manifested itself. In the domestic sphere full credit must be given the value Britain and Ireland will derive from a settlement of their centuries-old disagreements. Along the peaceful path of commercial development progress of permanent utility can now be registered. In a hundred-and-one directions the outlook is distinctly brighter than it has been for years. It just means that the wheels of commerce throughout the world will gradually move toward normal revolution and stability. With this gradual improvement unemployment must, in proportion, become steadily less and less. To reorganize the shattered forces of industrialism is an evolutionary attainment which may yet take a year or more to accomplish, but to know that we are at least on the road is in itself a satisfaction, the beneficent influence of which will spread good cheer throughout the communities of the world. That is the kind of good cheer required to help and accompany us all throughout the year 1922.

Christmas Trade Very Satisfactory

By optical evidence at the large London warehouses and reports from different trade centers I am confirmed in the belief that the gramophone industry experienced as satisfactory a turnover as any during the Christmas season. At such a time most firms are busy; it is, therefore, a little difficult to make comparisons. Though it may be true that sales registered did not constitute a record in the annals of our business, the position this Christmas was infinitely better than last. Indeed, more than one wholesale firm assured me that, if anything, the retail trade seemed brighter and more responsive than for the past two seasons. The class of trade experienced generally was more in the direction of cheap and medium-priced goods. And this is perhaps quite understandable, considering the state of unemployment during the whole of 1921. The high-class trade is nevertheless fairly good, though far below what it should be at this time of year. As to records, the popular-priced ones are selling quite well. The majority of dealers are doing a brisk trade in discs up to 3/- each.

The Federation's Annual Report

The Federation of British Music Industries has just issued its Blue Book, being the second annual report for the year ended August, 1921. Its seventy pages make quite a voluminous volume, the contents of which make interesting reading. The extent of the Federation's activities and wide interests, as reflected in the report, is really surprising. From every angle the welfare of the music industries is nurtured and developed under the expert direction of the Federation's staff. A great amount of most valuable work has been accomplished to the benefit of every section of the trade. If this good work is to go forward the Federation must receive financial support. Its new chairman, Louis Sterling, has already made a very successful appeal to traders, resulting in subscriptions totaling several thousands of pounds. But this is not enough. Some idea of the amount required is shown by the fact that for the fiscal year above mentioned expenditures exceeded income by no less than £3,584 9s. 10d. To meet this amount the Federation Fund was drawn upon, but that will not do again. If it is to continue, and we all want it to, the Federation

Excess Profits Duty on Easy Payment Terms

An important concession to business firms has been announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. It refers to the payment of the excess profits duty. The welcome statement by the Chancellor is as follows: "With a view to assisting industry in its present difficulties, I intend to propose to the House of Commons, in connection with the Finance Bill of next year, a scheme for spreading payment of outstanding arrears of excess profits duty, in suitable cases, over a period of five years from January 1 next. The instalments would be payable quarterly, and 5 per cent interest charged on all outstanding arrears. Thousands of pounds' arrears are involved in some cases, the prevalent trade depression being responsible for inability of business firms to pay at time of assessment."

Needed Reform of Bankruptcy Laws

Our bankruptcy laws are very much in need of revision. Even though he may be aware of his insolvency, there is nothing to stop a man juggling with money and goods at the expense of his creditors. Debts are piled up and up without responsibility until a creditor becomes suspicious and forces the debtor to file his petition in bankruptcy. There is little or no protection for the creditors, though a recent case brings to light that it is an offense if within two years of bankruptcy petition it can be shown that the debtor materially contributed to or increased the amount of his insolvency by gambling. The punishment for this may be two years' hard labor.

German Trade Policy Varied

The depreciation of the mark in nearly all countries of the world is not benefiting German exporters to the extent that seems probable at first glance. The German Government is seeking to secure a larger share of the plunder by an increase of the export tax on gramophone goods from 2 to 6 per cent. And in addition to the previous regulations insisting that German exporters must deliver against foreign currencies, and not against payment in marks, the new regulations state that all dealings must be effected through banks, which must report to the Reichsbank the amount of foreign exchange involved. It is said that so far these regulations have exerted little or no influence, though by this effort speculation in marks and foreign currencies may perhaps be reduced.

As regards German trade, it is generally admitted to be in a flourishing state, though high-water mark has been reached. According to some reports the tide is even now on the turn and a reaction has set in.

The British Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the course of a recent speech upon the subject, informed his audience that German exports to the United Kingdom were very much on the decline. During nine months ended September last we imported German goods to the value of only £15,000,000—in value just about a quarter of the figures for 1913. He said some people thought the trade depression was because we were exacting reparations from Germany, but he thought that was not the reason, as the United States, which had waived any reparation claim, had as great, if not a greater, degree of unemployment than we had here.

Edison Bell and Winner News

J. E. Hough, Ltd., are keeping dealers well advised of seasonable selling lines for Christmas and New Year trade. This is conveyed by means of attractive publicity matter, a batch of which is just to hand. One leaflet advertises a special offer of hornless gramophones at a really remarkable selling figure. In addition, dealers are offered a special discount and given every inducement to place substantial orders for this entirely British machine.

Great success has attended the issue of the little Bell record, diameter 5½ inches, double sided, retailing at 1/3. As explained in a previous report, these miniature records are real shellac discs—not cardboard—and all have been specially recorded. Nursery rhymes, popular hits and dance numbers comprise some of the many items already programmed.

The December "Winner" record list evokes high praise from factors and dealers. It represents a seasonable collection of pleasing titles, of which there are some special to the kiddies and some for the grown-ups. The contributors comprise such popular artists as Charles Penrose, Stanley Kirkby, the Elliotts, Jay Laurier, Miss Marie Novello (the popular pianist) and Talbot O'Farrell, among others. The latter artist, by the way, has been exclusively engaged by Messrs. Hough for the recording of the great Irish peace song, "The Tears of an Irish Mother," a copy of which has been accepted by Lloyd George. The song is listed on Winner No. 3611 and is coupled with "Muldooney's Christening," by the same artist.

H. M. the King Orders a Winner

In aid of the Variety Artists' Benevolent Fund a grand performance by a number of "stars" was given before Their Majesties the King and Queen, Princess Mary and Lord Lascelles. Billy Merson in "The Society Entertainers" came under favorable notice and the King and Queen were so tickled by his droll presentment that they inquired if it was obtainable on a record. Being informed that a recording of the piece by Billy was on "Winners," made by J. E. Hough, Ltd., at the Edison Bell Works, Peckham, His Majesty ordered that a record should be sent to Buckingham Palace. Acknowledgment has since been received.

A Speaking Trade-mark

The work upon the erection of the "His Master's Voice" trade-mark on the front of the company's fine Oxford street premises is, at time of writing, almost complete. This wonderful electric sign is probably the largest in size and certainly the most ambitious in design to be seen anywhere in London. That it will attract great attention when in operation is a foregone conclusion. The value of this electric sign as a speaking trade-mark will outweigh all other forms of gramophone publicity on the highways of our great city.

Survey of the King's English by Records

The officials of the London University College have given themselves over to a close study of the many fascinating changes in the English language—of the past, the present, and will also give attention to the likely pronunciation of the future. Professor Jones avers that our language has changed and is changing according to certain laws as immutable as those of the Medcs and the Persians. Periodic changes can only be registered by means of the gramophone. Therefore, a complete phonetic survey of the dialects, past and present, of the English language is to be attempted. It is said that so perfect are the recording instruments installed at the University for the purpose stated that there is no dialect which could not be recorded both in sound and symbol to-day, so that in, say, a thousand years' time scientific workers could know how each human group held converse. The records taken will be sealed for that purpose and deposited in a safe place.

November Trade Figures Show Improvement

Though the increase is but slight, it is satisfactory that some progress is indicated by the Board of Trade returns for the month of November, showing exports of the value of nearly £73,000,000 and imports just over £89,000,000. Compared with November, 1920, the export figures are less by £60,000,000, so we have a lot to catch up. It is a hopeful sign that industrial conditions continue to show gradual improvement.

Some New Zonophone Record Issues

The new Zonophone list itemizes a welcome number of attractive vocal and instrumental items for Christmas trade. As will be appreciated by the following examples, these records are of a class to appeal to a wide musical taste: No. 2182 is another brilliant contribution by the famous St. Hilda Colliery Band. It gives a well-balanced performance of "Orpheus" and "St. Hilda March," the latter being especially good. No. 2180 carries selections I and II of a pot-pourri of "hits" under the appropriate title of "Rages and Crazes," a really good selling record, by the Black Diamond Band. Record 2191 is a real jazzer by Jack Hylton's Jazz Band. The titles are "Mooning" and "Coal Black Mammy," both fox-trots. G. H. Elliott, the popular comedian, is heard to advantage on 2190. "There's Going to Be a Wedding" and "My Old Home in Virginia" are characteristic of his style and will be welcomed by a large Elliott clientele. No. 2185 bears a couple of acceptable songs, "Cheery Song" and "The Memory of a Song," by Robert Woodville. Both are of the robust order and particularly well sung. Sydney Coltham's fine tenor voice is finely used in the rendition of "Provence" and "Ah! Though the Silver Moon Were Mine" (Lohr) on record No. 2183.

Twenty-three Years Ago

That's a catchy caption; it makes one wonder what happened all those years ago. The answer is found in an advertisement that is now appearing in the Belfast newspapers. It reads in part: "The evolution of mechanical devices during the past twenty-three years has been truly phenomenal. . . . One cannot help recalling October, 1898, when a word unknown to our citizens was just printed in our columns. That word appeared in a paragraph advertisement inserted by a well-known merchant. We refer to the word 'gramophone,' and our advertiser was T. Edens Osborne, Belfast," etc.

It is this interesting kind of publicity that stands for distinctive methods in the conduct of the very fine business which Mr. Osborne so ably directs.

Bigger Discount for Pathé Dealers

The London house of Pathé Frères has announced concessions on trading discounts that will please their retail agents all over the country. In addition to the usual retail discount there will be an increased discount up to 10 per cent cash monthly on accounts for machines and accessories. This also applies to records, and in every case is subject to prompt payment within one month from date of invoice.

For goods of the value of £5 and over packing cases are free, and carriage is paid on all parcels of not less than £2 net value.

Another Little Record—the "Pop"

Advance information reaches me from the Sound Recording Co., Ltd., this city, of the issue of a baby "Popular" record, about 5½ inches in diameter, double sided, to retail at the nominal figure of 1/-. The little "Pop," as it is called, is, of course, begotten of the well-known "Popular" standard-size record. A first list of fifty titles is now in the hands of dealers. Every known style of music is listed—band, orchestral, solo instrumental, piano, etc., and vocals. The titles are mainly of the tip-top "hit" order. Some of them I have played over; they are excellently well recorded, good volume and tonal quality. The little "Pop" is a first-class new trading line for dealers everywhere.

SMALL-TOWN OPPORTUNITIES
Talking Machine Dealer by Developing Friendly Spirit Can Build Up His Business

The small-town talking machine merchant has opportunities which are denied to dealers in the large cities. He can, if he is energetic and disposed to friendliness, become personally acquainted with a great many people in his community. This is a valuable asset which should not be overlooked and the small-town dealer is wise and showing foresight if he enters into the civic work which is such an integral part of these communities.

Henry Blumberg, son of J. Blumberg, Columbia dealer at Waukegan, Ill., took an extra week's vacation from his allotted Christmas vacation at Harvard this year to assist his father in a holiday campaign on Columbia Grafonolas in their store at Waukegan. It was a great success.

LATEST PATENTS RELATING TO TALKING MACHINES AND RECORDS

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 8.—Sound-reproducing Machine. Forest Cheney, Chicago, Ill., assignor to the Cheney Talking Machine Co., same place. Patent No. 1,395,092 and Patent No. 1,395,093.

The first-named invention relates to sound-reproducing machines, and more particularly to sound amplifier means therefor.

As is well known to those skilled in the art, while the initial vibrations of the diaphragm of such machines potentially set up all of the complex air vibrations necessary to produce the fundamental tones and overtones going to make up the character and tone color of all the instruments or voices (the tones of which are being reproduced), said air vibrations are nevertheless very weak and must be amplified and strengthened in order that the sounds will be reproduced in sufficient volume.

One of the objects, therefore, of this invention is to increase, in a novel manner, the volume of sound-reproducing machines.

Another object is to provide a simple and effective combination of parts to increase the volume of sounds adapted to meet the various requirements for commercial operation.

These and other objects are accomplished by providing in a sound-reproducing machine a sound chamber having an inlet and an outlet, the latter of which is smaller than the inlet.

of the same machine, and Fig. 3 is a detail sectional view taken in the plane of line 3—3 of Fig. 2.

Patent No. 1,395,093 relates to sound-reproducing machines, and more particularly to an improved sound amplifier therefor.

As is well known to those skilled in the art, while the initial vibrations of the diaphragm of such machines potentially set up all of the complex air vibrations necessary to reproduce the fundamental tones and overtones going to make up the character and tone color of the recorded sound of instruments or voices, said air vibrations are nevertheless very weak and must be amplified and strengthened in order that the recorded sounds will be developed and reproduced in sufficient volume.

It has been discovered that the volume of sound which can be reproduced by a sound box and tone arm of a given size may be greatly increased by conducting the sound waves from the tone arm through a cubical distributing chamber and therefrom by a plurality of outlets the area of each of which is less than the area of the cubical chamber, the effect of this arrangement being to control the sound by providing a slightly restricted aperture from the cubical chamber to the outlet. Such a chamber is employed in combination with a plurality of amplifiers, each comprising a mechanical throat, orchestral sections and a violin resonator such as described in Letters Patent of the United States No. 1,170,800 and No. 1,170,801, granted on February 8, 1916.

One of the objects of the invention is to provide a talking machine with a plurality of amplifiers so constructed and arranged as to increase, in a novel manner, the volume of the reproduced sound.

Another object is to provide a talking machine with a distributing or tone chamber into which the sound is delivered from the tone arm and from which it is directed through a plurality of outlets, which outlets are in connection with the usual amplifiers or resonators. The distributing chamber which is found most desirable for the proper reproduction of sound is a cubical one, and it is with the cubical chamber that the outlets communicate.

These and other objects of the invention are accomplished by providing a sound-reproducing machine having a distributing chamber, a plurality of resonators and connections between the distributing chamber and resonators comprising orchestral sections and mechanical throats.

One of the primary objects of this invention is to provide a resonance chamber possessing features which will adapt it to modulate and at the same time improve the quality of the tones reproduced and thus obviate all harsh and discordant sounds and greatly increase the faithfulness with which the sounds are reproduced. Another object is to provide for an increase in the carrying quality of the reproduced sounds.

A further object of the invention is to provide a resonance box, sound chamber or basin so constructed as to adapt it to contain a volume of water or other liquid in order to produce the advantageous results above mentioned.

Figure 1 is a perspective view of a cabinet phonograph equipped with the resonance chamber and sound outlet embodying the invention; Fig. 2 is a horizontal sectional view through the forward portion of the cabinet and illustrating the forward portion of the said chamber in plan; Fig. 3 is a view partly in side elevation and partly in front to rear section illustrating the manner in which the resonance chamber is arranged within the cabinet of the phonograph, and also clearly showing method of draining the said chamber of its contents; Fig. 4 is a perspective view of the resonance box removed from the cabinet.

Reproducer. Abraham Atlas, Philadelphia, Pa. Patent No. 1,395,937.

The invention relates to phonographs and has for an object to provide a reproducer for reproducing vocal, instrumental or other sounds.

Among other features the invention comprehends a reproducer, designed to be cheaply manufactured and to effectively produce sounds from the grooves or sound undulations of a phonograph record, and to this end use is made of a body preferably carried on a suitable swinging support so that it can operate over the record and with the aid of a stylus produce the sound simulating the nature of the particular sound record from the same by instrumental or vocal production, the usual amplifier or horn being dispensed with.

Lid Support. Frank Oberst, Glendale, N. Y., assignor to the Sonora Phonograph Co., New York. Patent No. 1,395,350.

This invention relates to devices for supporting the lid or cover of a talking machine in a partly open position whereby the tone arm, turntable, record, speed regulating and braking devices are rendered accessible, and has for its objects to provide a device which will automatically support the cover when the latter is raised to a predetermined position; which will be capable of easy release to enable the cover to be closed, which will be noiseless in operation, which will be cheap to construct and which will not get out of order.

Process of Making Styli and Products Thereof. Byron E. Eldred, New York, assignor to the Commercial Research Co., same place. Patent No. 1,396,412.

This invention relates to processes of making styli and products thereof, and it comprises a method wherein a rod or bar of hard low heat-conductive metal, such as tungsten or tungsten group metal or alloy, of any desired cross section, is covered with a sheath of protecting metal, advantageously high heat-conductive stiff and strong, high-melting metal, such as iron, steel, nickel, nickel steel, or the like, and the two are co-worked down to stylus diameter, cut into stylus lengths and the core of one or both ends of each such length exposed and pointed if desired, and it further comprises a compound stylus having a core of hard low heat-conductive metal, such as tungsten or tungsten group metal or alloy and a sheath of higher heat-conductive high-melting stiff and strong metal, such as steel, iron, nickel, nickel steel and the like, the core being exposed at one or both ends and pointed if desired.

In the drawing Figure 1 is a longitudinal section showing two metals assembled; Fig. 2 is a similar view after the metals have been heated and united; Fig. 3 is a longitudinal section on an enlarged scale showing the compound metal bar after it has been drawn or swaged; Fig. 4 is an elevation of the complete stylus on an enlarged scale.

Sound-selecting Apparatus. Wm. H. Bristol, Waterbury, Conn. Patent No. 1,396,402.

The invention relates to the reproduction of sound, particularly when under amplification, and either directly or through the medium of a permanent record and a reproduction apparatus therefor.

The invention is concerned more especially with sound reproduction involving the use of super-sensitive devices such as thermionic and other amplifiers in combination with telephonic transmitting means, for example, as more particularly set forth in co-pending application Serial No. 330,119. In the reproduction of sound in this manner it becomes necessary as a result of the extreme sensitiveness of the amplifying means to exclude all extraneous sounds, echoes and reflections. To this end it has heretofore been found necessary to suitably pad the walls and ceiling of the room in which desired sound waves were produced for recording purposes. While this expedient may be satisfactory for some purposes, it of course excludes the making of records, for example, in auditoriums, churches, court rooms and under various other conditions where it would be desirable to obtain a record of a speaker or speakers or of musical selections.

It is found by locating the electrical transmitting mechanism employed at the rear of a suitable protector box, which is lined with sound-deadening material, as heavy felt or like material, that the expensive and troublesome lining of the walls and ceiling, formerly necessary, may be dispensed with and the desired sounds selected so that entirely satisfactory records may be obtained under conditions which have heretofore precluded the making of such records.

The principal object of this invention is to provide new and improved means for mounting the movable sound-conveying arm of a talking machine so as to allow the usual freedom of movement of the sound box carried by said arm and to co-operate with said arm in providing a smooth, sound-tight and unobstructed passage-way for sound.

Another object of this invention is to provide new and improved means for connecting said movable arm to the stationary amplifying member or horn, which means may be quickly and easily assembled and taken apart.

elevation, partly in section, of the supporting deck, sound-conveying arm and associated parts of a talking machine.

Phonographic Record Cleaning Device. Leonard A. Wellington, Keene, N. H. Patent No. 1,396,544.

This invention relates to a cleaning means for removing particles of dust from the sound grooves of a phonographic record and the object is to provide a cleaning brush of soft material which is mounted in such a manner as to be moved across the face of the disc or sound record during the playing of the same.

Another object is to provide means for the vertical adjustment of said brush to accommodate the same to different machines which may vary somewhat as to the height of the sound record.

of the inner end of the roller support, and Fig. 5 is a modified form disclosing a different form of means for mounting the device upon the machine.

Stylus Holder for Phonograph Reproducers. Martin Elmer, Hastings, Mich. Patent No. 1,397,835.

This invention relates to improvements in stylus holders for phonograph reproducers and the main objects are:

First, to provide an improved stylus holder which eliminates the scratching noise commonly incident to phonographs.

Second, to provide a stylus holder which is adapted for use with the numerous types of phonograph sound boxes now on the market and in more or less extensive use.

the record being shown conventionally and a portion only of the sound box being shown; Fig. 2 is a detail transverse section through the improved stylus holder on a line corresponding to line 2—2 of Figs. 1 and 3, parts being shown in full lines for convenience in illustration; Fig. 3 is a vertical section on a line corresponding to line 3—3 of Fig. 2, parts being shown in full lines; Fig. 4 is a plan view of the blank from which the body and jaws of the holder are formed; Fig. 5 is a plan view of the blank.

Sound-reproducing Apparatus. Henry K. Sandell, Chicago, Ill. Patent No. 1,399,403.

The present invention relates to apparatus for reproducing sounds, and more particularly to apparatus wherein a plurality of vibratory diaphragms may be actuated independently and simultaneously by a single reproducing needle or stylus to produce different series of sound waves.

Figure 1 is a side elevation, partially in section, of a device constructed in accordance with the present invention; Fig. 2 is an end elevation, partly in section on line 2—2 of Fig. 1 of the

This invention relates primarily to sound boxes for playing the well-known zigzag sound records, but the underlying principles of the invention can be utilized in connection with sound boxes for playing other types of records. The object of the invention is to modulate the audible reproduction, so as to play one record or selection more softly, and another more loudly, or to play the same record more softly on one occasion and more loudly on another, without in any case distorting the music.

The invention comprises broadly a plurality or series of interchangeable attachments, each readily securable to and removable from the sound box, and each comprising its own particular stylus bar or lever fulcrumed thereon, each lever (with its stylus or needle) differing from the others in the series (as in dimensions or material, or both), so as to produce (with its needle) the softer or the louder playing as the case may be.

WM. MAXWELL POPULAR LECTURER

William Maxwell, vice-president of Thos. A. Edison, Inc., has been in great demand recently as an expert on salesmanship. On Friday, January 6, he addressed the Century Club of the R. L. Dollings Co., of Indianapolis, and on Thursday, January 12, went to Cambridge, Mass., to talk before the business school class of Harvard University. He made another address at Harvard on the following day and was received with great enthusiasm.

CONDESCENSION IS POOR BUSINESS

The talking machine dealer or manager who affects an air of condescension toward his customers is making enemies every day. One customer treated in this manner tells his or her friends and they tell others, ad infinitum, until the tale has spread to many people. Remember, a reputation takes hard work and constant effort to build up, but a breath of wind can blow it down.

Elly Ney, famous Brunswick artist, will make her tenth New York appearance this season at Carnegie Hall, January 22, when she will play with the Philharmonic Orchestra.

The Highest Class Talking Machine in the World

SONORA dealers do not change—they are loyal to Sonora through all conditions.

In a world of unlimited competition, this is a most impressive fact.

Dealers have a large field to choose from—they invest their own money, time and brains—they naturally line up behind the instrument that makes this investment repay the largest profits. That Sonora dealers are loyal is the highest tribute to Sonora's selling power.

Sonora dealers know from actual experience that Sonora sells to a better class of customer, with less effort than any other phonograph. No matter what other make or makes you sell at the present time, you will find the Sonora a valuable addition. No other instrument supplies the universal satisfaction given by SONORA.

CLEVER PLAN GETS PROSPECTS

Merchant Distributes Scratch Pads to School Children, Offers Present for Filling Out Questionnaire and Thereby Gains Prospects

A task which the merchant usually finds extremely difficult is the gathering of names for his prospect list which make live prospects. Many plans have been tried with more or less success, but one clever plan for obtaining the names of prospects, as well as important data, which it is important that the dealer should possess, was put into effect recently by a merchant at very little expense and trouble.

This progressive dealer had a large quantity of small scratch pads prepared, each one mounted on an index card, so that when the pad was turned over the holder could not avoid seeing the very simple questionnaire which the card contained.

These pads were given to the teachers in the public schools for distribution among the pupils in their classes. Naturally, the children read the card and the first thing that they saw was an announcement to the effect that each one answering the questions on the card and bringing it to the store would be rewarded with a present. The questions which the children were asked to fill in were as follows: The child's name and address, date of birth, father's name, if living; where employed; mother's name, if living, and the names of brothers or sisters.

The cards were returned by the hundreds, and the merchant had a first-class prospect list at hand, not only for the present, but also for future years, since it is obvious that the school children of to-day are the buyers of to-morrow. The printing of the cards and the distribution of novelties to the children, who returned the cards with the required answers, cost only a comparatively small sum.

BOOSTS ONE RECORD EACH MONTH

Texas Dealer Builds Up Record Business by Sending Sales Promotion Letter to One-third of Mailing List Each Month—Proves Success

EL PASO, TEX., February 3.—The talking machine record business of the Tri-State Talking Machine Co. here is booming due to the fact that the concern concentrates on one particular record each month, through the medium of a personal letter signed personally by the manager. These letters are sent to one-third of the patrons whose names appear on the mailing list in addition to the regular supplements and enclosures. In this manner the clientele of the company is reached in connection with the sales promotion of a special record every three months. The advantage in reaching a customer in this manner at such lengthy periods is that the customer does not gain the impression that the company is merely actuated by selfish motives in drawing attention to particular records, but feels that a sincere attempt is being made to render a real service.

WORLD'S CHAMPION RECORD CRITICS

Steamship Men Select Records in All Languages for Use of Steerage Passengers

Thomas Hardy, commissary superintendent, and W. T. Robertson, shore steward of the United States Lines, are the world's first steamship talking machine music critics.

The United States Lines, after providing cabins for their steerage passengers, decided to furnish music. Talking machines were placed in the third-class quarters of each of the company's steamships. Messrs. Hardy and Robertson, delegated to select records in every language, have listened to hundreds of records and boast of having whistling repertoires of the world's best operas, waltzes and jazzes.

C. A. C. HONORS T. H. TOWELL

CLEVELAND, O., February 1.—T. H. Towell, president of the Eclipse Musical Co., and also president of the Cleveland Cadillac Co., has captured another presidency, and one that does him particular honor in that it reflects the esteem in which he is held by some of the leading business men of Cleveland.

Mr. Towell, in short, has been elevated to the position of president of the Cleveland Athletic Club, one of the leading clubs of its kind in the West, after having been a director of the club for the past seventeen years.

T. H. Towell

Mr. Towell, who has been connected with the talking machine industry since its infancy, and as head of the Eclipse Co. has proven an important factor in the distributing of Victor products, is distinctly popular among the members of the talking machine trade, who will be glad to learn of the new honor conferred upon him.

WINDOW DISPLAY FOR THE CURIOUS

Merchant Plays on Curiosity of Public by Making Window Opaque and Arranging Peep Holes, Through Which to View Display

Curiosity is one of the most easily aroused emotions in human existence, and one dealer, knowing this, reaped much profit through the aid of his display window. The first thing which he did was to take out the merchandise which had been in the window. He next painted the entire window opaque, leaving only a few small peep holes. Over the peep holes the following words were printed in large, striking letters: "Stop! Look! Listen!" Curiosity impelled about nine out of every ten persons to stop and take a look through the peep hole. They saw several beautiful models of talking machines, one of which was playing, operated electrically. The theme of the display was the living-room of a comfortably furnished home, and in a prominent place in the window was a selected list of the most popular records. The plan proved extremely valuable as a business and publicity stimulator.

NEW VICTOR STORE IN MASSILLON

MASSILLON, O., February 5.—The C. J. Duncan Co. plans to open an exclusive Victor shop in its newly completed building in Main street about February 15, Mr. Duncan announced this week. The parlors will be on the second floor over his new jewelry store and already many of the furnishings and the fixtures are on hand and are being installed. For years Mr. Duncan has confined his efforts to jewelry merchandising.

YAHR & LANGE CO. CONFERENCE

Sonora Phonograph and Okeh Record Jobbers in Milwaukee Entertain Dealers in That Territory at Important Successful Sales Meeting

MILWAUKEE, WIS., February 8.—A most successful conference of dealers in Sonora phonographs and Okeh records in Wisconsin and Upper Michigan was held in this city recently at the headquarters of the Yahr & Lange Drug Co., wholesale distributor for those products in this territory.

The conference was snappy and right to the point and produced many excellent business ideas for the benefit of the retailers. The General Phonograph Corp. provided an elaborate demonstration of Okeh records, and the recording process was explained in detail. The various models of Sonora phonographs were also studied and discussed at length.

During the course of the conference the visiting dealers were entertained at dinner by the Yahr & Lange Co., the speakers of the evening being Fred H. Yahr, president of the company; R. H. Lanz, chairman of the dinner, and Charles Neumeister, representing the General Phonograph Corp.

In discussing the general business situation and the outlook, Mr. Yahr said, in part: "The year 1922 will be one of inevitable competition, and as never before business men will seek recorded practical facts. Emphasis must also be placed on the ill-advised business policy of price-cutting. The manufacturers have tried mighty hard to save the dealer from himself in this respect, by insisting that a price standard be maintained. The shortest route to bankruptcy is by employing such tactics. We cannot prosper unequally and our interests are so interwoven that to break one thread means to weaken the whole fabric of business relations. Good will always has been, and always will be, the only sure road to the realization of our ambitions, that is, a healthy and prosperous phonograph and record business."

THIS IS REAL MERCHANDISING

Garver Bros. Co., Located in Town of 1,000 Population, Closed a Gross Business of Over $700,000 During Past Year—Quite a Record

STRASBURG, O., February 5.—Although corn fields are visible from the windows of the Garver Bros. Co. store here, it did more than $700,000 worth of business in 1921, according to G. A. Garver, head of this unique country store.

"Our music department did a remarkable business in 1921 and we intend making the present year the best in the history of the store," he declared. All business comes from the rural districts. The store handles Victor products.

The company is completing a new $250,000 warehouse, which when completed will be used partly for the storage of musical instruments and talking machines. The store is located in a town of less than 1,000 people.

BUSINESS CHANGE IN ZANESVILLE

Spence Music Co. Takes Over Stock and Fixtures of Home Music Co., That City

ZANESVILLE, O., February 3.—The business of the Home Music Co., which handles the Columbia, Sonora and Brunswick lines at 310 Main street, this city, was discontinued recently, the entire stock of the company, together with the equipment of the store, being taken over by the Spence Music Co.

The Spence Music Co. will continue to handle the several lines featured by the Home Co. in addition to the Victor line, which the Spence Co. has handled for some time past.

Developing a Store Atmosphere That Impresses the Desirable Customer :: By Thornton Hall

On the occasion of a recent visit of the writer to the Broadway store of a talking machine dealer there occurred an incident with a moral. It is a concrete example of what we mean by "store atmosphere," in this case atmosphere of a negative kind. We are going to use it as a text for this article on "store atmosphere," a neglected subject, which plays an important part in the fortunes and failures of talking machine retailers.

While the clerk in charge was busy with another customer, a stout, prosperously dressed gentleman, probably a business man with plenty of ready cash, stepped briskly in. He had to wait a few moments to be waited upon, and his gaze roved about the store. Suddenly his gaze rested upon a framed notice upon one of the walls, and he turned to the writer and exclaimed:

"Look at that sign, there! Read it! 'Positively no checks cashed.' Fine way for a business man to greet a customer. Why, that man is telling me in advance that he doubts my honesty! Perhaps he does, but is it going to do me any good to tell me about it in a bold sign flaunted on the wall? Why bring up the subject at all unless it arises? Will that sort of greeting get my trade? I should say not!" And he turned and left the store.

That dealer lost a potentially good customer through a thoughtless plan of saving himself a little extra trouble. A dealer must, of course, use discretion in cashing checks, and his rule of cashing "positively no checks" was very likely a wise one. But the number of persons who request this favor would probably be so small that he could wait and meet each request with a tactful statement of his rule and his reasons for maintaining this rule.

Granting that this particular customer was unreasonable in his attitude, the psychological reason for his anger is perfectly apparent. The implication in the sign is that there is a possibility of his cheating the proprietor of the store. Here is a merchant who does not trust him—he cries it from his wall.

Now, this is distinctly a case of creating store atmosphere, but atmosphere of a negative sort. This merchant is creating an impression of hostility in the minds of customers. Little things like this must be considered carefully for the effect upon customers. Everything the merchant does must be analyzed, particularly from the all-important viewpoint of store atmosphere.

Let us take the question of store atmosphere in the positive sense. Here is a practical example of what we mean by it. The noonday concert idea serves the purpose of attracting persons to the store, but more important than this is the effect it creates on the visitor to the store. A beautiful concert, such as is the daily event with a number of talking machine merchants, gives a great deal of pleasure to its audience. The customers are thankful to the merchant for providing them with this music and consciously, or subconsciously, put him down as a thoughtful merchant. The daily organ recitals at John Wanamaker's stores make those stores a pleasant place in which to shop.

It Is the Little Features of Service That Never Fail to Arouse Appreciation and Support of the Customer

The Ward chain of shoe stores in New York have caught the spirit of creating "store atmosphere." Here is an example of their method: They have observed that nine out of ten purchasers of shoes immediately go to a shoe shine parlor for a shine to get rid of that "new" look. Accordingly, they have installed a pair of chairs and dark-skinned "shine-'em-ups," and as each customer receives his change he is politely informed that he may have the new shoes shined on the way out. The result is an appreciation of the thoughtfulness on the part of the merchant that cements the good will of the customer.

If the store should be located at the terminus of a suburban trolley line, the public should be made welcome to use the store as a waiting room. The music of the "talker" makes the store a pleasant place to wait for street cars.

Often sales will be made to suburbanites who are waiting for the trolley home and are reminded of records that they ought to take home. This waiting room should be made comfortable with a few easy chairs. This idea will pay dividends, both in extra sales and good will.

A fine example of what the writer means by store atmosphere may be found in the case of a Cleveland dealer who operates a concert ticket bureau for the convenience of his patrons. This dealer assigns one of his clerks to the management of the details, and this person keeps a record of all of the better type of musical entertainments and events that are to be held in the city. Posters and advertisements of each event are furnished to the store's bureau and are displayed prominently in the store, and tickets to the concerts are always on sale at the bureau a few days in advance.

In this way the general public in Cleveland has come to subconsciously associate this dealer's name with music. There is, of course, no charge made for this service, but one may be sure that there are ample profits accruing to the dealer in the form of good will, which, after all, is a very material form of profit. It is every bit as necessary to the permanent success of a retailer as anything he has in stock. A close association with the local musical profession has developed as a natural consequence of the activities of this bureau, and the public at large has come to recognize the store as a sort of clearing house for musical events. Consequently, the prestige of this particular dealer as a purveyor of a high standard of musical instruments has been greatly enhanced.

The type of dealer who believes that the little things that go to make up the proper store atmosphere are "too much bother" will profit greatly by considering the experiences of some of these dealers, who are making their customers feel their desire to serve them. The month of January is an excellent time for the dealer to start putting some of these principles into practice.

We cannot imagine a complete education of man without music. It is the gymnastic of the affections. In suitable connection with exercise, it is necessary to keep body and soul in health. —John Paul Richter.

The Question of Exchanging Records for Customers and Some of the Problems It Offers

The argument that the customer is always right is an old one in general commercial lines, but it is a question as to just how far that argument can be made to apply to the talking machine trade, particularly in the matter of record exchange. This question has been threshed out time and time again at various meetings of dealers and, despite the resolutions pro and con, there has not been evolved any effective rule that will always work to the satisfaction of the dealer and the customer. It still remains the problem of the individual retailer.

Not long ago a man came into a talking machine store and, in the face of signs announcing that no records would be exchanged, demanded that the dealer take back two of five records he had bought, offering the very logical explanation that his daughter had already purchased those same records without his knowledge. The dealer forgot the rule and returned the price of the two records, after some slight argument.

On another occasion a woman came in to return a record of a musical comedy hit purchased by her little son. The excuse this time was that she wanted a vocal record of the number, which was "Sweet Lady," and did not care for the dance orchestra arrangement. The dealer gave her another record. An irate customer walked into a third store and declared that the expensive record he had bought was scratchy and faulty. The record had been tried out at the store and gave satisfaction, but on the owner's machine sounded poorly. An investigation showed the dealer at once that the record had been tried out with a badly worn needle. When he informed the customer of the fact he aroused further indignation. The result in this case was a firm refusal to do any exchanging whatsoever.

Before a dealer can be condemned for making certain exchanges it is always well for the critic to understand the circumstances and decide what he would have done in a similar situation. Dealers have been known to exchange records when the customer had apparently no right to demand an exchange. It is simply a question of losing one record for the sake of selling many more to the same individual in the future. On other occasions dealers have held be, and generally are, nipped in the bud. The customer who habitually buys four or five records and then wants to have two or three of them exchanged in a week or so, for instance, is simply endeavoring to get the use of seven or eight records for the price of five.

In the case of popular songs, especially, the customer frequently finds that they become tiresome within a few days and fixes up a fairly good excuse to get them back into the hands of the dealer in exchange for new records. For the retailer who knows a little something of human nature and makes a study of his customers, however, the handling of this situation is more or less easy. He simply calls a halt and tells why. It is a simple matter to decide, because the business interest is negative. Even the perfectly honest individual who duplicates on record purchases can be cured by a little diplomatic argument from the dealer to find out first what is wanted and then to buy it. The customer who selects records by name only and does not have them tested can likewise be converted by being urged to hear each record bought and then enforcing the "no exchange" rule.

In the case of the casual exchange the retailer must judge for himself anent the status of the customer when it comes to a decision between sticking to a principle and offending a generous buyer. The "no-exchange" sign, however, in the last analysis is a mighty good thing to have around the store. There will be enough of people convinced by the sign to make it worth while, and it gives the dealer a very substantial argument to advance in cases where he does not want to capitulate until the last moment.

The Difficulty in Maintaining a Hard and Fast "No Exchange" Rule in the Handling of Records

closely to the no-exchange rule and have lost good business.

Just at the present time a good customer is one of the greatest treasures a dealer can desire and he is perfectly right in considering every angle of the question before he refuses definitely to hold fast to the "no exchange" rule. There are, of course, frauds perpetrated on the dealers in the matter of record exchanges that should

PUTTING "PEP" INTO SALES CAMPAIGN PLANS

WE wonder what would happen were talking machine merchants to exercise the same amount of initiative and enterprise during the Spring months that they do around the Holiday season. During December it is customary to inaugurate lively advertising campaigns, to arrange stores in a very attractive manner and to dress the windows in a fashion to interest the passing public—to concertize—to circularize—all with the object of developing sales of talking machines, records and other musical accessories. The question arises: Why shouldn't advertising, store arrangement, window display and other business-building means have the same appeal in March as in December? We believe they would be just as resultful. Custom or tradition, however, has made it habitual to slow up for a couple of months after the New Year, with the result that little is done to develop trade. The attitude generally is to find fault with inventory and assume a bilious, despondent viewpoint.

We are largely victims of habit in the matter of merchandising, as in everything else, and it would be a good thing to get away from a bad habit and usher in the Spring of 1922 in a vigorous and successful way by demonstrating that the high-pressure system of developing sales, so customary around the Holiday season, may be practiced with success at any time of the year.

During the Summer months a few years ago one of the leading music houses of the country determined to test out the old shibboleth that everybody takes a vacation in the Summertime and that people do not buy. This concern carried on an active advertising campaign in the daily papers to stimulate sales, with the idea that business may be had if sought, and the result was simply as amazing as it was heartening—it showed a volume of business for two Summer months equal to any two months of the year.

Now what this house did in the Summertime could be done more satisfactorily in the Spring months, because in March, April and May people have not yet got used to outdoor pleasures—they are more content to stay in the house and hear the best in music through the medium of the latest records, which, of course, is a factor in the development of sales.

The point we wish to emphasize is that it is not wise to ring down the curtain on business activity during the post-holiday period. It is a time for real action—a time for developing 100 per cent ideas in the way of sales promotion. Nineteen twenty-two can be made a great year in the talking machine field if we discard the "glooms" and reason out that business can be had by seeking it—not along the lines of slaughtering prices, but by an educational "contact" campaign for real music in the home through the greatest musical factor in the world—the talking machine.

THE PROBLEM OF THE "GYP" DEALER

THE "gyp" dealer who has been abroad in the land for many years is at the present time causing considerable disturbance in the talking machine trade in the larger cities because of the increase in his activities. Legitimate dealers as individuals, and through various associations, have endeavored to eliminate the "gyp" dealer, or at least reduce the volume of his business, but have found out that he is a thick-skinned person who is not discouraged by condemnation or drastic association resolutions. There is only one way to get him, and that is by means of the law, when it can be made to apply, coupled with plentiful publicity regarding his methods.

Dealers who are earnest in their endeavors to eliminate the "gyp" find some measure of comfort in the attitude of certain newspapers, which scrutinize their classified advertising columns and are particularly careful regarding the statements therein, and will find very frequently that if such newspapers are put in possession of the facts concerning the operations of the "gypts," who utilize their columns under various pretenses and aliases, that co-operation will be given in exposing the work of the "gypts" and warning the public against them.

What can be done along this line is well indicated in the case of the Bronx Home News, with a circulation of over 100,000, which does not hesitate to throw the light on the operations of individual "gyp" dealers whenever the facts can be obtained. The newspaper has its own investigator, who has been particularly active recently in making things unpleasant for those who advertise "$350 talking machine, Victrola style, $95," or similar offers. On several occasions recently this paper has given a column of space or more to exposing the tactics of this or that "gyp," presenting the facts so fully that only a person absolutely lacking in intelligence would fall for the game.

There are no doubt other newspapers which, like the Home News, are interested in protecting their readers and would be willing to expose the activities of "gyp" dealers in their columns if accredited members of local talking machine dealer associations would investigate easily recognizable ads of the "gypts" and furnish the newspapers with the facts of the case. It takes patience and ability to get the confidence of the "gyp" and learn the name of the machine—it is always new—and where manufactured, and to check up the "gyp's" story of the reason for making the "sacrifice." It can be done, however, and with particular success, if the investigation is conducted by a woman.

In view of the great number of comparatively unknown machines that have been dumped on the market during the past few months, at practically any price that will insure some cash return to the manufacturer, the "gyp" dealer has found it possible to "sacrifice" big machines at a price to tempt the ignorant buyer and still make several hundred per cent profit. The answer to the question is not that of cutting off supplies, for this has already proven to be a hopeless task. The remedy lies in securing the honest co-operation of newspapers in presenting so many facts regarding various "gypts" that even the most ignorant of the public will be convinced that the proper place to buy a talking machine is in a regular store.

RECORD POLICY AFFECTS PUBLIC FAVORABLY

THE decrease in the price of various lines of talking machine records announced during the week of January 16, and which served to bring the list prices of the popular series of ten or twelve-inch records back to the pre-war figures of 75 cents and $1.25 respectively, has been received with considerable enthusiasm by record dealers generally, who have already experienced a sufficient increase in record business to indicate that the reduction made a definite appeal to the public.

The reduction of the price of Victor Black Label records from $1.35 to $1.25 for the twelve-inch and 85 cents to 75 cents for the ten-inch was formally announced to the public through the newspapers on the morning of January 18, and immediately various other companies made similar reductions in list prices. The fact that present lists prices are, in most cases, the same as they were in 1914, if properly presented to the buying public, should serve immediately to overcome any hesitancy about buying in the belief that lower-priced levels will be reached.

A great many retailers were quick to take advantage of the reduction by emphasizing the fact through the medium of newspaper advertisements and special announcements in their show windows and stores. Coming at a time when special sale advertising is the rule rather than the exception, the announcements of the reduced prices of records appeared to hit the public right. At least the record buying has been stimulated materially, it is reported, which was the main idea.

LEGISLATION ON PRICE MAINTENANCE NEEDED

THE decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Beechnut case recently, which has been widely commented upon in both the daily and the trade press, emphasizes most emphatically the genuine necessity of having passed some sort of national legislation to legalize the maintenance of retail prices on trade-marked articles, not alone for the protection of the name of the product and of the reputation of the name of the manufacturer, but also for the purpose of giving manufacturers who desire to keep their products on a high level some definite basis upon which to operate in protecting their interests.

There have been so many decisions regarding the right of manufacturers in relation to the maintenance of prices that there exists much confusion in the minds, even of skilled attorneys, as to what may or may not be done by the manufacturer to preserve the dignity of his name-right and to keep his product from being made the plaything of the cut-price artist. There is no question but that a broad decision such as that handed down in the Beechnut case, taking from the manufacturer, apparently, many of the rights which he believed he was entitled to under the common law, if under no other authority, has had, and will have, a bad effect upon business by encouraging those who have refrained from price-cutting through fear to take a chance along that line.

Price maintenance is not calculated to place additional burdens on the public and act as a cloak for squeezing out excessive profits, for any law that may be enacted can be easily framed to prevent such abuses. What price maintenance will do, however, is to fix a definite standard of price and value in the mind of the consumer and prevent the professional price-cutter from prostituting that standard for the purpose of attracting trade to which other unmarked products of unknown value can be sold. It is a known fact that the big price-cutters do not shave profits for their love of the public, but simply use trade-marked goods as bait to push the sale of inferior products bringing larger profits and bearing their own marks or names.

If there is no protection afforded the manufacturer of a trade-marked article in the matter of maintaining the status of that article before the public, then the trade-mark law loses much of its value. If any move that the manufacturer makes to protect himself is to be construed as a violation of the Anti-Trust Law, then there must be some law enacted that will guarantee to him definite rights which he is at present apparently denied. The simplest move along this line would be the drafting and passing of a price-maintenance measure definitely setting forth to what extent the manufacturer may go in guarding his trade-mark rights.

There is at present before Congress the Stephens-Kelly bill, designed to protect the manufacturer in the good will established for his trade-marked articles and protecting the public against deception. This bill is the latest development of similar measures that have been introduced at recent sessions of Congress, but have died without being made into laws. The better element of the talking machine trade has been persistent in its endorsement of these various measures looking toward price maintenance, and in view of the situation brought about by the decision in the Beechnut case, and in other cases of like character, support for the Stephens-Kelly bill should be stronger and more emphatic than ever, for it offers the quickest road to protection of industry.

The manufacturer and marketer of trade-marked articles of recognized standing and reputation is just now in a desperate position. Every move he makes for his own protection seems to put him deeper into the toils of the law. There can be no longer any delay in the work of establishing legislation that will grant him legal protection upon which he can rely without himself running afoul of the statutes and facing prosecution for guarding his own interests.

Getting Out of the Beaten Path in Making the Effective Selling Appeal

:: By W. B. Stoddard

A music store in San Diego, Cal., attracted wide attention to its instruments recently by displaying a talking machine in its window with a long card on which in bold letters was printed: "This Phonograph for a Penny To-day." It brought everybody to a halt—and then they read, in smaller letters, "Two cents to-morrow; four the next day; eight the next day; and so on for fifteen days, and the instrument is yours." It was seen to be an exceptionally fine instrument, so even the balance of the ad seemed to intimate that it would be sold for a ridiculously small sum. This caused many people to stop in to make inquiries, and the polite salesmen assured them that it was correct, and asked them to do a little figuring. When they had done this they ascertained that the price of the talking machine would amount to $327. They also learned that the machine could be purchased on monthly payments as well as on the fifteen-day price. The novel sign set everybody to talking and gave wide publicity to that particular machine, while all who stopped to read and admire could not help seeing the line of new records displayed in racks close to the window pane, and thus had the need of some new records brought forcibly to mind.

A Collection Idea Worth Noting

At the beginning of the year all dealers like to start with a clean slate, and it is sometimes quite a problem to collect the bills without offending delinquents. A jeweler in San Francisco successfully solved it by having some special letter-heads printed. They contained at the top a drawing of several heads of birds, featuring prominently their various sized bills—the long bill of the stork, the broad one of the pelican, the short one of the owl, the little one of the baby chick, etc. The letter itself was designed to prompt the recipient to an immediate response without in any way giving offense. This letter read:

"Dear Sir: For some reason or other, possibly because our products were once trees, our store has developed into a nesting place for bills. I find upon investigation that we have a number of Little Bills, Big Bills, New Bills, Long Bills, Short Bills, Old Bills and Young Bills.

"These bills apparently have just naturally accumulated, and while they do not represent anything to actually worry about, I feel they should all be attended to before they all get to be Old Bills.

"One of these bills—a small one—is yours.

"Will you kindly send us a few new bills for this old one? Yours very truly."

Selling Records by Telephone

The public of Los Angeles was recently notified through the local newspapers that if it wished to hear any of the new records—or old ones, either, for that matter—all it had to do was to telephone Hamburger's and call for 14925. The record might then be ordered or not—the service was entirely complimentary. The response was immediate, almost overwhelming. In the first week seventy-five records were sold through this booth alone. "We shall continue it indefinitely," said the manager, "as it is more satisfactory, if anything, than selling over the counter. A new class of patrons has also been developed by this method—invalids, who find it impossible to go to the store. A letter received from the nurse of a wealthy shut-in, voicing her appreciation, was so good that they used it as an ad, omitting the name of the lady, who did not desire any notoriety:

"Your idea of playing records over the telephone has proved an undreamed-of diversion to my patient. Her talking machine is her chief joy. Yet she is personally unable to go to the store and until now has had to depend upon others to select her music. To choose for herself is a rare delight, and she thanks you most enthusiastically."

The reading of this letter almost doubled the telephone requests, since patrons discovered it was "the thing" among the wealthy and cultured classes to select their records in this manner.

Department Store Rents Records

The Blanchfield Mercantile Co. for over a year has been adding materially to the sales of slow-moving records by keeping a standing one-inch want ad in the columns of the local papers. This ad reads:

FOR RENT—Phonograph records of the following makes: Edison, Victrola and Columbia. Selections from a large assortment. Fifty cents for four records a month. Four, for one-half the price of one. Good music at a very small cost. BLANCHFIELD MERCANTILE CO.

It is necessary for the customers interested to visit the store, as no deliveries of rented records are made. When they make their payment of fifty cents they get a card and one record, the number and title of which, with the date, are entered on the card. They can take only one record at a time, and this must be returned within a week, which is the limit any record can be kept; while the fourth record must be returned at the close of thirty days. They merely present their card each time. They can take out two, three or more cards in case they wish to have more than one record at a time, as many of them do. The selection must be made from the rental file. In this room there is an alphabetical list of records in rental stock for each make of record. While many of the records are slow-goers or overstock, the lot is made interesting by the addition from time to time of new and popular selections. In addition to securing revenue from the old records, this plan helps to sell new ones each month, for a bulletin of the new arrivals is placed where the rental patrons cannot miss it, and they often add a purchase to their rental. At any rate, it means a steady stream of visitors coming into the store, all of whom have a chance to observe several makes of talking machines, and hundreds of records.

RECORDS FOR MUSICAL TALENT TEST

Specialty Prepared Records Are Used in Schools for Classifying Talent of Pupils

Tests for the measurement of musical talent were given to seventy students in the Summer session of the University of Wisconsin. Five faculties are measured by the tests: (1) The sense of pitch, which is the ability to discriminate between higher and lower tones; (2) the sense of time, or rhythm; (3) the sense of time, which is the ability to tell that which is more pleasing and that which is less pleasing; (4) the sense of intensity, and (5) the musical memory, or the number of tones that can be remembered from a single hearing. The tests are given by means of talking machine records prepared for this purpose. They are used in many public schools as a quick method of classifying pupils.

C. A. Severs, manager of the Blue Bird Shop, Elkhart, Ind., is planning to purchase the talker business of E. L. Burch, of South Bend.

DEMONSTRATIONLESS RECORD SALES

Frederic Tietz, Jr., Advocates Selling Records Without Demonstrations

Frederic Tietz, Jr., a successful talking machine dealer of Albany, N. Y., has built his business through the use of many original merchandising ideas. Mr. Tietz, who is planning a trip abroad in the near future, in a communication to The World makes the following interesting comments regarding the successful merchandising of records:

"I do not believe in the selling of records that it is necessary to play them, but that it is very unnecessary.

"It is the biggest waste of time and selling cost in the entire business.

"It costs more to sell a record (for the dealer) than it does to make it.

"The profits on records do not allow for costly demonstrations.

"Playing records does not sell them, but many times spoils the sale.

"Records play only fifty to a hundred tunes (decently). Why give away any of these tunes?

"Why should every Tom, Dick and Harry hear a Caruso record free? It is not appreciated because it is free.

"The real buyer of Caruso would prefer it sealed up and get all of the tunes for which he pays but does not get with the free-music-for-all plan.

"Some very fine records should have been held at $50 each; others as low as 50 cents.

"The masses will never like high-class music because it is cheap."

Some dealers state that they could not sell any records under this plan. Mr. Tietz's reply is that:

"A Victrola owner must buy records.

"The large mail-order houses sell millions without the costly playing plan.

"Advertise, make them want it, and then selling is easy."

A CLEVERLY CONCEIVED WINDOW

Daynes-Beebe Music Co. Features Sonora Phonographs in Very Artistic Window Display Symbolical of the New Year

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, February 4.—One of the most attractive window displays seen in this city in a long time was that of the Daynes-Beebe Music Co., in which the Sonora phonograph was featured and the spirit of the new year was typified. As can be seen by a glance at the illustration, the layout of the window was not only clever, but tasteful as well, and the manner in which the Sonora machines were featured was both dignified and appealing. The window aroused considerable comment and many passers-by stopped to view the display.

The Daynes-Beebe Music Co. is the largest music house in the city and one of the largest in the State. The optimism of this aggressive concern toward the future is reflected in a vigorous campaign for business which is bound to result in a fair volume of sales. The establishment itself is a model of its kind and many modern improvements are in use to provide the maximum of efficiency in service to customers.

People who parade their virtues seldom lead the procession in this or any other trade.

PROBLEM OF OPENING A NEW STORE

Analysis of Conditions to Determine Chances of Success in New Location Before Opening Establishment Is a Wise Precaution

The merchant who contemplates moving his establishment or opening a branch store has many things to consider. Before going to the expense of opening a new store and stocking it with a quantity of expensive merchandise he should analyze conditions in the territory to which he is moving as accurately as possible. An accurate survey of the class of people which his store will attract and conditions in the neighborhood, such as the buying power of members of the community, will illuminate to a considerable degree the chances of success. Many a business has failed dismally because the proprietor had too high or too low ideals for the community which he was seeking to serve.

The opening of a new store in a different community offers many more difficulties than the opening of a branch store in another part of the city wherein the headquarters, or main store, is located. Before a merchant can even make a rough approximation of his chances for success he must take into consideration the various expenses and problems which he will be required to meet, such as rate of insurance in that locality, tax rate, local advertising rates, wage rates for help, the practices of other business enterprises in that vicinity and whether or not they co-operate or fight each other through the practice of destructive price cutting; the number of people passing the store location, etc. This latter is very important. It is reasonable to assume that if the establishment is located on a side street where few people pass business volume will be less than in the more frequented thoroughfares.

There's a tonic for business in the news that hundreds of thousands more men are at work in the United States.

ENTERTAIN 15,000 WIRELESS FANS

Van and Schenck, Columbia Artists, and Distinguished Stars From Ziegfeld Follies, Sing and Play for Detroit News Radio Family

DETROIT, MICH., February 6.—The local branch of the Columbia Graphophone Co. has been instrumental in placing in the hands of the Detroit News wireless station all new Columbia releases. Quite recently Van and Schenck, Columbia artists, and stars in the Ziegfeld Follies, entertained approximately 15,000 wireless fans in the Detroit region.

After Van and Schenck sang their way through nine musical numbers Monday night, an enthusiastic listener phoned the radio department of the Detroit News, praised the production and asked for more. Almost on his heels came a number of other radio calls for encore after encore.

The singers were requested to present themselves to the radio audience, and the introduction was given by Gus Van, whose modesty neglected to mention names until the close of the program.

The program was opened with "Yoo-Hoo," the latest song hit of the partners. Following in rapid succession were character songs and a minstrel bit of jazz, "I've Got the Joys."

By telephone request from one who had heard Mr. Schenck's phonograph records, he sang "Sally, Won't You Come Back to Our Alley," taking the falsetto notes in the clear and bell-like tones that characterize his singing. Mr. Van followed with a laughable imitation of Bert Williams singing "Who's Been Aroun'?" The program closed with the comic, "Ain't Nature Grand," sung as a duet, and the "Wabash Blues" was given as an encore.

The operator at the wireless station gives a full history of the record before playing it, stating what kind of a record it is, the composer and the number.

The Detroit branch has been co-operating to the fullest possible extent with the Detroit News wireless station. Records are sent over on memorandum and as new releases are sent over the others are brought back.

Through the courtesy of a friend, Mr. Gardiner, manager of the Detroit branch, and Mrs. Gardiner had listened in and heard many Columbia records played.

EMBODIES CONSTRUCTIVE IDEA

Knickerbocker Talking Machine Co. Uses Report of Babson Service to Good Purpose

In a communication sent by the Knickerbocker Talking Machine Co., Victor wholesaler, New York City, to its dealers, a recent statistical report from the Babson Service is quoted. "During the year 1922 we believe the best business in the United States will prevail in New England, New York, New Jersey, eastern Pennsylvania and a few other well-selected localities. During the next year or so the efficient concern should find conditions better, the inefficient will find them worse." This encouraging statement is of particular interest to the dealers using Knickerbocker service, as it affects their particular territory. Abram Davega, president of the company, has followed this statement with a series of excellent suggestions to the dealer for increasing business during 1922.

MOVING TO NEW QUARTERS

The Bertha Rosamond Music Store, which has been located in the general merchandise establishment of Yoder & Rosamond in Haddam, Kans., will, on February 1, move to the new, spacious brick store next to the post-office, the present quarters having been outgrown. It is the intention to add a line of pianos later on. Since the foundation of this business nearly two years ago, a very remarkable business has been built up in talking machines.

The tired business man should be retired.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., February 2.—The tour of the Eight Famous Victor Artists through this State was a tremendous success. They were greeted like long-lost brothers. They have become so widely known through their records that the people flocked to hear and see them in large numbers. When they visited this city on January 7 they faced a house crowded to the doors, which included more than fifty enthusiastic Victor dealers and employes from Central Oklahoma, who were the guests of the Oklahoma Talking Machine Co., the new Victor distributor for Oklahoma. The Victor delegation in the audience was identified by white badges inscribed: "With the Victor in Oklahoma," and the artists recognized them by wearing similar badges.

Prior to the concert, W. B. Gratigny, president, and P. A. Ware, sales manager, of the Oklahoma Talking Machine Co., entertained the artists at luncheon, which was a delightfully informal affair. The visit of the octet of famous artists to this city was certainly an event which will long be remembered with pleasure.

The Importance of Proper Executive Supervision in the Developing of Salesmanship

At the close of an old year or the opening of a new one, business men often are to be found in a teachable mood. They realize the many sins of commission and of omission which have been justly laid to their charge during the twelve months gone by, and they are ready in most cases to think about reform. Here, then, is something to be thought about by gentlemen who are in such a chastened and generally admirable mood, following inventory.

"Pep" and Practice

There has been an enormous amount of writing, speaking and thinking about "salesmanship" during the last year, especially since business has been depressed. At the beginning of 1921 the grand cry was "More Pep." All would be well, it was freely said, if only the salesmen would buck up and fight harder. For a month or two, words of this sort managed to soothe or to encourage. Doubtless they had their value, but they did not last very long. It was soon found that salesmen were working as hard as they thought themselves capable of working, and were decidedly impatient of schemes for making them work harder, especially when very little difference appeared after all. It soon became evident that what was wanted was less noise and more thought. But since thinking is to most persons a very painful process, we shall here try to do some of it for the benefit of those who do not care to make the attempt for themselves. Our text is especially directed, not towards salesmen, but towards their bosses.

Words and Things

And what we would say is this: Salesmanship is a nice word which, like charity, covereth a multitude of sins. But unhappily there appears to be an incurable tendency on the part of the human mind to confuse words with things and to suppose that, because a given word is convenient, expressive and in common use, it necessarily corresponds with some tangible concept. Now of course this is all wrong. We have come, to take our present example concretely, to group certain widely scattered notions about thoughts, processes and activities directed along certain lines under a classification, to which we have applied a word as a name. We have applied in this case the word "Salesmanship." Having done this, we suppose that we have erected a sort of geomancy around our selling activities and that it is only necessary to master some incantations called "rules of salesmanship" to find ourselves in the seller's heaven, where overhead does not exist, prices are always high, costs always low, and cash the invariable rule.

As a matter of fact, nevertheless, no one has ever yet attained to this state of commercial bliss by mastering any "rules of salesmanship," simply because that sort of work cannot be reduced to rules. Salesmanship in the concrete is a matter of hard work, honesty, knowing the

*It Frequently Happens That Faulty Executive Guidance Is Responsible for Disappointing

goods and obtaining the confidence of the buyers. If a salesman can obtain the buyer's confidence, by knowing his goods and talking honestly about them, then, barring any personal defects of a specially intractable kind, he is a good salesman and can sell talking machines, records, or other goods if anyone can.

The Basic Factor

But who is to see that salesmen work hard, talk honestly and know the goods? When all the rules have been digested, all the courses assimilated, all the conferences held, the final fact remains that hard work, by an honest man who knows his goods and can gain the buyer's confidence, is the basic factor in the entire progress. And how can the salesman be led to work hard, to be honest, to study and know his goods, and to work to obtain the confidence of the buyer, if the executive, the man at the head, the boss himself, does not first set a good example, and then make it his personal business to see that the same is followed by his subordinates?

Bringing It Home

This is bringing it home, indeed, and we intend just that. The fact is, as anyone can see for himself by personal investigation, that as a business grows there is more and more a tendency towards opening a gap between the heads and the manufacturing, accounting and sales forces. Of course, as a business increases in magnitude, the executive must be charged less and less with details. He must have more time to think, to plan, to consider the application of the principles (if he has any) on which the business is conducted. But the selling of his goods is the aim and end of his business. It is for that his business was organized in the first place. It is for that the goods are manufactured. It is for that the elaborate departments of accounting, credits and collections are organized and sustained. In a word, the blood of the business is derived from its sales department. Accordingly, the duty of the executive is especially to nourish and sustain that department. The details of the accounting, of the credits and (in a healthy business) of the production, are rightly left to the work of the various minor executives charged with those departments; but no president ought to leave to a sales manager the direction of sales policy. That is an axiom.

The Personal Touch

The executive who has got into the habit of imagining that he can safely neglect his sales department, to any degree whatsoever, is almost sure to find himself imagining also (if and when he can be brought to an analytical state of mind) that if his salesmen only understand "salesmanship" better all will be well. But this is to rest one's confidence on a fallacy. In order to apply the rules of any system of salesmanship to one's own business, one must be ready as well as able to give one's time and attention personally to training, encouraging, directing the sales work. Here, though nowhere else, the president of a large corporation can best be his own departmental manager. It is necessary to success.

A New Record-Selling Idea!

“Say It With Flowers” is a slogan which has increased the daily sales of hundreds of florists.

“Say It With Music” is going to increase every Dealer’s sales of Columbia Records. This new “Gift Record” idea will sell records to an entirely new market, and the stronger the support it receives from all Columbia Dealers, the bigger results it will get.

Think how wonderfully personal the gift of a record can be! Where other gifts are mute, heart may speak to heart in an old song of tender meaning.

Think of all the holidays there are during the year—for every one there are certain types of music which make particularly appropriate and acceptable gifts. Remember that every day in the year is the birthday or wedding anniversary of thousands of people—soon you will realize the amount of new business that can be secured by telling your customers to “Say It With Music.”

“Say It With Music” will lead people who do not own phonographs to purchase records as gifts for friends who do. It will bring them into your store, where you will have an opportunity to interest them in your phonographs.

Here is a fine “Plus Record” selling help, too. “Say It With Music” will enable you to draw the attention of your regular customers to the attractiveness of records as gifts. Every recipient of a gift becomes a good prospect, and both parties to the gift are excellent “repeat” customers.

All phonograph dealers, jobbers and manufacturers can profit by supporting this new record-selling plan.

The Columbia Graphophone Company has believed in the possibilities of this plan from the very beginning. The first Columbia Record Gift Envelopes which were introduced over a year ago gave Columbia Dealers a practical means of merchandising Gift Records. They add the final touch of atmosphere to an ideal gift.

“When Words Fail— Send a Columbia Record”

February has THREE special events—the birthdays of Lincoln and Washington, for which a Columbia Patriotic Record makes an appropriate gift, and St. Valentine’s Day, which kindles a warm glow in the heart of many a lad and lassie.

St. Patrick’s Day, March 17, with Ireland’s recently acquired freedom, will be celebrated more enthusiastically than ever.

Then there are Memorial Day, May 30, and Independence Day, July 4, when suitable favors and remembrances are purchased.

During the summer, when week-end vacation visits are the thing, a few new dance records make a delightful gift that adds zest to the parties.

Practical Columbia Support

So that all Columbia Dealers may contribute their efforts to make this new plan a success and reap early profits, we are furnishing free, as illustrated, a beautiful pastel display card.

This will serve as permanent Gift Record advertising. It may be used for all the different holidays, and in between times for occasions which are not seasonal.

Columbia Dealers who subscribe to the display service will receive their poster with the March Display. Others may secure copies free upon application to their regular Columbia Distributing Branch.

Get your free poster and an assortment of Record Gift Envelopes now and help accomplish the purpose of the slogan “Say It With Music” by creating another slogan, “When Words Fail—Send a Columbia Record.”

SUPERVISORY SALESMANSHIP

There has been a great deal of talk about the science of salesmanship and the science of business building and the science of this and of that. Some of it is very good, and really has practical bearings. Some of it, as always happens in the course of movements like this one, has been rather silly. A little of it has been arrant nonsense. Bad psychology, cheap mental suggestion and general pseudo-scientific clap-trap have been the foundation of more than one successful (to the promoters thereof) "course of instruction in salesmanship." Yet still stands the ancient rule undisturbed and undimmed:

The salesman must be honest: he must not lie about the goods to make a sale.

The salesman must know the goods: he must not try to cover ignorance with smooth talk.

The salesman must work hard: for no job is more wasteful of time and effort than his, unless it be carefully watched.

The salesman must apply honesty, knowledge and hard work to the task of gaining the buyer's confidence: for honestly gained confidence is the salesman's most valuable asset and his brightest jewel.

That ancient rule has to be drilled into the men who are to carry it out. It is the executive's job, first, to know that here is a rule vital to the success of his business; and, second, to see personally that it is applied. That is his job, to see personally that his salesmen are doing these things. When he knows that they are, then it is his business to be their general, their divisional commander, leading them into battle; not merely a far-away commander-in-chief, invisibly planning, unseen to the soldier on the firing-line.

USE FILMS TO PROMOTE TRADE

Foreign Trade to Be Stimulated by Educational Films, Says Department of Commerce

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 8.—Moving pictures are to be used extensively by the Government as a means of foreign trade promotion, it was just announced by the Commerce Department. Arrangements are being made for the co-operation of the motion picture experts of the Bureau of Mines and of Manufactures, as the cost of the films to be shown must be borne by the company whose product is pictured.

"In the opinion of the Department of Commerce," said an executive, "representative industrial films will provide a very effective method in promoting export trade. They should prove exceedingly helpful in convincing the people of other countries regarding the industrial ability and the extraordinary facilities of the United States."

L. E. GILBERT AGAIN WITH MICKEL

Old-time Victor Man Joins Traveling Forces of Mickel Bros. Co. in Des Moines

DES MOINES, IOWA, February 6.—Lee E. Gilbert, one of the old-time Victor men of Iowa, who joined the forces of Mickel Bros. Co. on January 1, has a host of friends throughout the Middle Western territory, having originally blazed the Victor trail through this section when the line was in its infancy. His early associations were with the Victor Co. during 1905, later joining the forces of Chase & West, of Des Moines, who were at that time wholesalers for the Victor Co. When the Des Moines office of Mickel Bros. was opened, Mr. Gilbert and Geo. Beaver, the manager, established practically all of the larger dealers who are active to-day. In 1915 he left the talking machine field for other endeavors, and it was only recently that Mickel Bros. were able to again secure his valuable services. Mr. Gilbert will supplement the work of the other four travelers, with headquarters in Des Moines.

THE GROWTH OF DIE-CASTING

Discussing the history of die-casting, now so general in the talking machine trade, C. T. Roder, in the Iron Age of recent date, points out that die-casting is produced by forcing liquid metal into dies under pneumatic pressure. Until 1914 only metals fusing below 1,300° F. were successfully die-cast, chiefly zinc alloys. Advantages of die-casting are the small amount of machining necessary, reduction of assembly, the small cost, great accuracy, good appearance, etc. The pneumatic pressure assures uniformity. Aluminum die-castings are a recent development. Design of die is the most important feature of the work.

The Kind of Advertising That Attracts and Makes the Greatest Impression on Women

Talking machine merchants who have given particular study to newspaper advertising are keenly interested in the type of advertisement which makes the greatest impression upon women. The value of the exhaustive study of retail advertising just concluded by C. J. Suedhoff, of the Suedhoff-Ross Advertising Agency, of Ft. Wayne, Ind., is timely in this connection.

In order to get the necessary information Mr. Suedhoff asked a hundred average shoppers a number of questions relative to the effect that store advertising had upon them. From these answers the following was compiled:

Number who had not read any of the store's advertising for two days, one.

Number who came with the specific intention of inspecting some of the offerings listed in the store's advertising during the last two days, eighty-three.

Number who came for the purpose of inspecting some of the offerings listed in store's advertising previous to the last two days, three.

Number just "shopping" without being specifically interested in any of the advertised offerings, fourteen.

Number visiting the store who were interested in bargain offerings advertised in the morning newspaper, twenty-seven.

Number visiting the store who were interested in goods advertised in the previous afternoon's paper, fifty-six.

Number who carried clippings of advertisements for reference, one.

Number who had made engagements to meet friends at the store, eleven.

Absolutely new customers among 100 shoppers, one.

Number who had some sort of comment to make regarding the store's advertisements, fifty-one.

Number who in answer to question stated that they read store's advertisements every day, seventy-nine.

Number who stated they read ads very frequently, eleven.

Number who read advertisements infrequently, ten.

Mr. Suedhoff believes that the figures secured

Out of 100 Shoppers—

- 83 came in in response to the previous two days' advertising;
- 14 were "just shopping" without having advertised values in mind;
- 27 came in because of the copy in the morning paper;
- 56 were attracted by the advertisements of the previous afternoon;
- 37 were accompanied by feminine friends;
- 11 made engagements to meet friends at the store;
- 79 said they read the store's advertisements every day;
- 11 read the announcements "very frequently";
- 10 read them "only now and then."

in this survey are typical of those that would be secured from a similar investigation in stores in other cities about the size of Fort Wayne.

"This phase of the survey showing how little attention is paid by customers to advertisements which are more than two days old should be of especial interest to all retail advertising men," declared the advertising man. "It is evident from these figures that women, as a whole, follow a store's advertising very carefully, and that they realize that business conditions change from day to day, just as the news of the world changes, and that the goods which were offered in advertisements last week may not be sold at the same prices to-day or may not even be on hand in the store.

"It is an encouraging thing to the man who prepares retail copy to know that his ads play such a large part in the lives of the women of his city. Perhaps the average retail advertising man is not fully aware of just how important his advertisements are to the women, and these figures may prove rather astonishing to him. He may have realized, of course, that the women are attracted to his store by the ads, but he may not have realized that the vast percentage of all the women in the city read his ads regularly, no matter whether they come to his store every day or not."

Eight Famous Victor Artists on Visit to Tulsa, Okla., Are Photographed at Attractively Arranged Victor Store in That City

TULSA, OKLA., February 1.—When the Eight Famous Victor Artists visited this city early last month and played to a packed house, they made their headquarters at the Edgar Shoppe, a new Victor store, which has the distinction of being the only all-Victor store in Oklahoma. There are lots of stores in Oklahoma carrying the Victor line exclusively as a talking machine, but most of them are general music stores. The Edgar Shoppe is, perhaps, the most complete Victor store in the Southwest, and the equipment and furnishings, which include Unico booths and counters, cost upward of $20,000, exclusive of merchandise.

Friendly Receivership Proceedings Brought—Arrangements Made to Carry on the Business

Negotiations have been going on for some time looking toward a reorganization of the Astoria Mahogany Co., Inc., a New York corporation, having its executive offices and manufacturing plant in Astoria, L. I., under a plan of reorganization which will place the company on a sound financial basis and provide new working capital.

In order to enable a continuance of the company's operations and also to conserve the assets of the company pending such reorganization, friendly receivership proceedings have been brought in equity. Douglas H. Allen, who has been appointed, with Edward W. McMahon, a member of the law firm of Graham, McMahon, Buell & Knox, with offices at Manhattan, as one of the receivers by Judge Garvin of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, is familiar with the operations of the company, having acted for the past six months as representative of the principal creditors in connection with the company's affairs.

The receivers have been authorized by the Court to carry on the business as heretofore, and arrangements have already been made with the principal creditors for financing the raw material requirements of the company during the term of the receivership. As a going concern the assets of the company, having a book value of approximately four and a half million dollars, exceed its liabilities by a substantial amount, and the proposed plan of reorganization contemplates payment of all trade creditors in full upon discharge of the company from receivership.

The appointment of receivers for the Astoria Mahogany Co. will not affect the company's tropical subsidiaries, the Nicaragua Mahogany Co. and the Compania Mexicana de Caoba y Godro.

PROGRAM OF GENERAL EDUCATION

Outlined by Leading Makers of Talking Machines and Records—Has Bearing on Value of Music for the Young People

Writing to the Toronto Globe, a correspondent pleads for better music for the young folks and pays homage to the talking machine as a medium which will educate them to a higher appreciation of music. The letter runs:

"The talking machine is rapidly coming into a place as an instrument of instruction and interpretation of better music for the young. And the writer wishes here to suggest to parents the valuable service to which this instrument can be put in any ordinary household.

"Fortunately, the makers of the talking machine seem to be agreed on a program of general education toward a higher class of music for the school and the children in general. For example, they are now making many records intended to teach or bring back into favor the quiet, the natural calmness and the refined over-soul of refined types of voice and instrumentation.

"The songs and instrumental selections, which have stood the test of time and which are now, and long have been, an expression of the sentiment and the sympathy of the great and good heart of common humanity—these types are being featured by the makers of talking machines and are coming rapidly into favor

Any musical selection really worth your time and money will still be alive next week, next year and probably next generation.

"Moreover, there is a strange matter here which the parent is prone to overlook, namely, that the ragtime music thrills quickly, racks and fatigues the nerves and soon becomes a sort of nausea. Conversely, they must understand that the better music for children—the real music—grows sweeter and dearer through repetition and slowly finds a delightful abiding place in the soul of the habitual listener.

"Do not be impatient with your child regarding the matter. If his nerves are all unstrung from the continuous clank and rattle of the loud and noisy selections the higher class of music will probably not be especially pleasing to him. However, if you will but continue to present to his ears the harmony of the sweeter strains at length he will be led to discover the soul of the musical art."

WORKING FOR CARUSO MEMORIAL

Project for Caruso Anniversary Week Late This Month Meeting With Much Success—Music Industry Promises Support to the Plan

It is announced by the Caruso Memorial Foundation that the plans for Caruso Anniversary Week, starting February 27, the forty-ninth anniversary of Caruso's birth, are progressing most satisfactorily. The Music Industries Chamber of Commerce at a meeting of the Board of Directors last month endorsed the project and promised the support of the industry, and the Governors of several States, including Massachusetts, Kansas, Colorado and Nevada, have agreed to serve as honorary chairmen of the committees being formed in their respective States.

It was stated at the headquarters of the Foundation in the Woolworth Building, New York, that the response from artists and musical organizations who have promised their co-operation for Anniversary Week has been especially gratifying. Among the artists who say they will appear in benefit concerts for the fund are Emilio de Gogorza, Elena Gerhardt, Reinald Werrenrath, Arturo Bonucci, Cantor Josef Rosenblatt, Mary Mellish, Julia Claussen, Ernest Hutcheson, Max Gegna, Edward Lankow, Ellen Beach Yaw, Nelson Illingworth, Olive Nevin, Daisy Jean, Harriet Scholder, Sara Sokolsky-Freid and Harold Bauer.

A national committee of artists is now being formed to co-operate with the executive committee of the foundation.

STRONG DEMAND FOR COVERS

A. Bruns & Son Report That Many Talking Machine Owners Are Now Buying Covers to Protect Instruments in the Home

A. Bruns & Son, manufacturers of talking machine delivery covers, Brooklyn, N. Y., report that the demand for their several covers has been very gratifying during the past few months. Especially is this true in the Bruns "made-right" fleece-lined rubberized dust cover which they recently introduced to the trade. They state that talking machine jobbers and dealers are very enthusiastic about this new cover and that dealers especially have been able to sell one with most every talking machine purchased. Heretofore the sales of covers designed for the safe delivery of talking machines have been limited to dealers and jobbers, but this new fleece-lined dust cover has been found adaptable for talking machine owners as well as dealers, and in consequence has opened up a new and broad field for the covers.

Recently this company prepared a very attractive circular which went to dealers of talking machines all through the country. This, accompanied by a strong sales letter, was productive of real results, and officials of the company are confident that 1922 will prove a most prosperous year for them.

(NO. II)

Dear Bill:

I was mighty glad to receive the copy of the local paper containing your advertisement and I believe I know the reason for the poor returns from your ads. Your copy reads like a catalog price list and from that I gather that you are gradually adopting the extremely dangerous practice of running your business on a price basis alone. Take my advice, Bill, and get away from that practice or you will soon find yourself on the rocks. The average person is naturally suspicious of the house and the line carried where price slashing is made the feature of the enterprise.

In your newspaper copy you have got to produce something that will not only attract the attention of the reader, but the ad must also arouse a desire for ownership of the particular machines mentioned. Your advertisement must carry a distinct appeal to the people whom you are trying to reach, and since a large majority of the people in your community are middle-class, decently educated, intelligent people, these are the ones for which your message should be designed.

An analysis of this class of people will convince you that price is not of absolutely first importance, especially when the purchase of a talking machine is under consideration. Fair value for money spent, playing quality and adaptability of the machine as an article of furniture are perhaps the three primary considerations. As a rule, these people possess imaginations and, therefore, your advertisements, to be effective, must play upon this human quality. Feature the talking machine, not as a cheap proposition, but as a valuable aid to home enjoyment and comfort and bring out strongly, but without exaggeration, the mechanical qualities and beautiful finish which will make it a valuable addition to home adornment.

Another factor which is detrimental to success in advertising carried on by inexperienced advertising men like yourself, if you will pardon me for saying so, is the lack of continuity in copy. It is just as important for the talking machine dealer to map out a campaign as it is for the manufacturer to do so. However, dealers do not seem to realize this and they continue to spend perfectly good money in advertising which brings in only half the profit which would accrue if a good, strong campaign were planned. This does not necessarily mean that large space must be taken to get the message across. On the contrary, the dealer who uses small space can get big returns if his copy appeals to the people whom he desires for customers, and a large business can be built up in this manner.

The newspaper campaign can be made even more effective by tying up the window displays with each particular ad. If the advertisement is read by a prospective customer and creates a favorable impression a state of mind has been reached which is easily swayed toward the purchase of a machine. In a small community like yours a prospective customer who has read the advertisement will, no doubt, have occasion to pass your store, and if the window display is forcible enough to remind the prospect of the ad additional interest will have been aroused which might stimulate the prospect sufficiently to enter the establishment. The rest is up to the salesman.

Yours for better business,

Jim.

SENDS MESSAGE ON RECORDS

Head of International Corporation Has 1922 Message Recorded and Sent to 20,000 Representatives Throughout the Country

A novel and successful use of talking machine records in connection with an insurance publicity campaign has been effected by Cecil F. Shallcross, United States manager of the North British & Mercantile and president of the American companies affiliated in the group. Mr. Shallcross has sent a personal message for 1922 to each of the 20,000 agents of the companies. Mr. Shallcross brought the idea into being and Chauncey S. S. Miller, advertising and publicity manager for the companies, made the idea a reality and worked out the details of the plan.

Mr. Shallcross, in a conversation with Mr. Miller, spoke of the manner in which he had been impressed by the sound amplifiers on the Madison Square Garden and other places which brought President Harding's address at the burial of America's unknown hero to the ears of thousands. Mr. Shallcross said that he wished he could place a sound amplifier in the office of every agent of his companies so that he could speak to all the agents. Mr. Miller suggested that Mr. Shallcross make a talking machine record of the message and send a disc to each agent. A contract was entered into with a manufacturer of records and the record was made. One side contains a brilliant military march by a band and the other Mr. Shallcross' message. The discs are being sent to the agents as fast as they are received from the factory.

From expressions already heard the agents are "tickled to death" over the innovation, and many of them have sent in complimentary lines in token of their appreciation. Some of the agents have loaned the record to their friends, who have played it over and over again. Other agents hearing the record have wanted to know what it all was about, and consequently were hearers of Mr. Shallcross' message.

Have you noticed that the man who has been "through the mill" invariably knows all he tells, but never tells all he knows?

Where There is Only 2-1000ths of an Inch Between Perfection and the Scrap Pile

Although the spindles for the Cheney motors are manufactured with exceptional care, each one must be subjected to the exacting test illustrated at the top of this page.

Resting on its bearing points, the spindle is tested under conditions of actual use in the motor. A registering shoe is placed on the fibre worm gear and then the spindle is revolved. If the dial records an eccentricity of more than .002 of an inch, the spindle is rejected.

To eliminate all metallic sound, the worm gear on this spindle is made of fibre, compressed to almost the hardness of metal. To eliminate friction as nearly as possible, the shaft is polished until it is smooth as glass. It is such attention to each tiny detail in the construction of The Cheney which has earned for it the name of "The Master Instrument."

There can be no "ifs" and "ands" in the Cheney Factories. We demand perfection as nearly as it is humanly possible. We make our motor parts exact to the thousandth part of an inch.

Take the case of the spindle in our motor, for example. It is the heart of the motor—and unless it is made just so, the motor will be noisy and throb when it runs. No Cheney motor may do that, and pass inspection.

As a result, we set a limit of 2/1000ths of an inch upon its eccentricity. Every spindle is tested, and unless it meets the test, it is thrown out.

Such manufacturing standards are unusual. They account for the supreme quality embodied in The Cheney. It is remarkable that such quality is combined in The Cheney with prices notably low.

Recognizing the Psychological Moment for Ending the Argument and Closing the Sale

Those who have made extended and intensive studies of selling tactics agree that almost as many sales are lost through too much talk on the part of the salesman as are lost for other reasons. The ability of the salesman to gauge the effect of his talk and recognize the psychological moment for ending his arguments and closing the deal is the trait that gets the results. This question is summed up very neatly in an article which appeared in The Voice of the Victor lately under the caption "It's Time to Stop When You've Said Enough," and which read:

There are two things in the conversational selling of goods, Victrolas and Victor records among them, which every salesman ought to know. Some of them do know by experience, others have to learn. The trouble is that while they are learning their employers, as a rule, are paying them full salary and commission.

These things are so important, and so definite in their effect, that each ought to be supplied with a maxim. The first thing is to know how to begin a sale, and the second is to know how to stop. Any locomotive engineer will tell you that a good brake is as important a part of his train equipment as the engine itself.

Many a salesman has sold a customer into a purchase, and then, by talking too long, talked him out of it. There is a classical story in the East of a real estate salesman who, young, managed to find a buyer for a beautiful big country estate that was going to rack and ruin for the want of a good householder. He sold the house on quality. Dissatisfied, conscientious, he began to go into details—after his customer was sold. The details were good, they were important—but the young man talked too long. He lost sight of the fact that half the customer's pleasure in buying was to be able to go over the place and find out for himself. He was psychologically sold; his mind wanted to follow detail for itself; to receive it from another mind tired him. He decided to "think over it." He never came back.

Now that man, we repeat, was fully sold when he came into the real estate agent's office. He came in in obedience to his own demand for something — not in obedience to a call from someone else, for something he was only halfway interested in. He wanted a house, the salesman had exactly what he wanted—but by injudicious and too-prolonged talking he worked a fourfold injury. He hurt the customer's mind, he lost his own commission, he served his employer badly, and he lost money for his employer's client, the seller of the house, by turning it back on the market and letting depreciation and taxes run on. And to this day he doesn't know how near he was to making one of the biggest sales of his time, nor why he didn't make it. There's the tragedy of the thing.

There is another classical story in the East, of a lawyer who defended, in a certain Federal court, three men who had been arrested upon a serious Government charge. The evidence against them was not strong; even the District Attorney admitted it, and conducted the case in an absolutely impersonal style. The evidence was largely circumstantial, the witnesses for the prosecution were none too sure. When the attorney for the accused men arose he could have won the case for his clients in five minutes. Instead, he talked for three solid hours—that being the time granted by the court for his argument. He actually put into the heads of the jury a multitude of considerations that had not been there in the beginning. The patience of the jurors was worn down by three hours' continuous repetition and re-repetition of things which only muddled their minds and they eventually brought in a verdict of "guilty." He didn't talk his clients into jail, for the judge in the case was ancient and wise, and the men were dismissed with the lightest possible fine.

Two Leading Salesmanship Points Are: To Know When to Begin a Sale and to Know Exactly When to Stop

It is quite true the men did not suffer; but suppose the lawyer had been selling them something!

There are few men who have been in business any length of time who have failed to see similar instances. An excess of zeal in such matters is nearly as bad as indifference. If a sale is lost by indifference, or if it is lost by overtalking, the cause of the loss doesn't matter—good money is gone and good business impaired.

Now for the question of maxims. "How," you ask, "shall I approach a new customer?" Well, that is largely a matter for yourself.

You have been trained, or you have learned of your own experience, that the secret of selling music is to learn the tastes of your customer. These cannot always be told by his appearance, or by his first words. Has it never occurred to you that it might be a good thing to ask him?

There is nothing easier than to say to the frequently embarrassed citizen who comes into your place: "Is there anything in particular you would like to hear?"

We know, in suggesting this, that we may be treading upon some sore spot—that not every stock is so inclusive that it will give the customer the chance to hear his particular favorite out of the thousands of tunes that have been given civilization—but it will at least give you what explorers, detectives, writers and sales experts alike call a "lead."

From this your path is easy—or should be easy.

But when to quit? That is another question. It will call for skill, or for instinct. And instinct will manifest itself in as many ways as there are human souls.

It is well to be enthusiastic — enthusiasm catches. But it doesn't consist in loud talk, in stamping feet and pump-handling elbows. It doesn't consist in "gassing" a customer with a "line of talk"; that may be left to the side-show men. Tell what you know and then—subside.

LARGEST SIGN IN THE WORLD ERECTED BY SONORA CO.

Mammoth Billboard Advertisement of the Sonora Phonograph, Eight Hundred Feet in Length, Can Be Seen About an Hour's Ride Out of New York City on the N. Y. Central R. R.

That the Sonora Phonograph Co., 279 Broadway, New York, is a believer in advertising on a large scale so that its publicity will be noticeable to a marked degree is no more forcefully less than an hour from the city, where the tracks leave the river for a short distance and there is nothing to be seen but embankments on either side of the train. As the latter rounds the curve world. It is eight hundred feet in length, forty-three feet high, comprising an area of nearly 33,000 square feet. It required the work of forty men and five weeks to erect it. The entire woods covering two acres was removed in order to put the sign in its proper position. Five hundred post holes were dug and 42,000 board feet of lumber were used, as the sign was constructed to withstand a wind pressure of ninety manifested than in a sign which it has had erected on the main line of the New York Central between Albany and the Grand Central Depot in New York, a reproduction of which appears herewith. This sign is located a little where the engineer is compelled to slow down the passengers are confronted with a vast snow-clad range of mountains in the center of which is the word Sonora in stupendous letters.

This is considered the largest sign in the miles per hour. It took thirty kegs of nails to hold the boards on the frame and 450 gallons of paint were used by six painters, who required three weeks to paint the picture. Every six months the entire sign is repainted.

IMPORTANCE OF COLORS IN BOOTHS

Varied Color Schemes in Demonstration Booths Are Being Found Effective in Stimulating Sales of Records, Etc.—Please Aesthetic Taste

Several modern talking machine dealers, realizing the influence which various colors exert on certain people, have decorated their record demonstration booths in various hues and the results have been apparent in increased sales and more pleased customers. Prospective purchasers, when entering the establishment, invariably chose the booth where the color scheme was most pleasing to their eyes.

It is becoming more and more recognized by students of the psychology of color that certain colors exert a strong influence toward good-nature or the reverse on different people. For example: Certain people are attracted by a soft gray. It is restful to their eyes and fits well with their quiet, conservative natures. On the other hand, there are others who are so filled with life and "pep" that a modest color such as gray tends to make them less happy and induces a state of mind which is detrimental to the success of the salesman in his efforts to dispose of a record or a machine. A harder and more forceful color, such as a deep green or red, will fit much better with a person of this character than the soft gray. They are then in surroundings which are sympathetic to their natures and the salesman's job is much simplified.

RECORD PLAYED AT BURIAL SERVICE

Track Layer in Alaska Requested That Record of W. J. Bryan's "Prince of Peace" Be Played at His Funeral Service

A burial service with the music and sermon on a talking machine was conducted recently at a railroad camp 386 miles inland from Anchorage, Alaska.

Ellis Donley, a popular track layer, fatally injured, left a dying request that he be buried in the grade of the new Alaska Railroad, and for his obsequies W. J. Bryan's "Prince of Peace" record at the camp bunkhouse be used.

The man's desire was complied with by his friends. The services were uplifting and largely attended. The company's foreman took charge of the funeral and read some Scripture, followed by sacred music by several of the world's greatest artists on the talking machine, then part of the famous lecture.

Princess Watahwaso Appears Before Group of Principals and Teachers at Wurlitzer Auditorium to Demonstrate Character of Work

The first of a series of concert programs featuring the Victrola and Victor records and designed to be given in the public schools of New York under the direction of Miss Lenna Rudy, educational director of the Wurlitzer Co. Victrola department, was presented at the Wurlitzer Auditorium on Saturday morning, January 21, for the benefit of more than seventy-five public school principals and teachers who attended.

The concert featured Princess Watahwaso, whose Victor records are already quite familiar in the schools and who in the course of a program recited a number of Indian legends and sang the songs of various Indian tribes, preceding each number with a detailed explanation as to its meaning.

The Princess is quite well known to many New York public school teachers and it is expected that under the direction of Miss Rudy she will visit practically all the public schools of New York in a systematic manner, varying her program so that the pupils and teachers during the season will have heard the legends and songs of all the better-known Indian tribes.

PHONOGRAPH

The Aristocrat of Phonographs

A fitting companion to the most beautiful furniture in period design

The first thing that impresses you when you see a Widdicomb phonograph in any home is that it really "belongs"—that it is a harmonious part of the appointments of the most luxuriously and tastefully furnished room.

Built in period designs after the best work of Chippendale, Sheraton, the Adam Brothers and other master craftsmen of all times in the art of furniture building, the Widdicomb phonograph is produced in a variety of styles and finishes to suit any decorative plan or any suite of good furniture. It adds taste and beauty to any home.

A Masterpiece of the Cabinet Maker's Art

The Widdicomb Furniture Company were the first manufacturers to visualize the growing wish in the minds of the phonograph-buying public for a phonograph which would combine perfection as a musical instrument with beauty and artistic design as an article of furniture.

For 56 years recognized leaders as builders of furniture in period design, the Widdicomb Furniture Company gave to the production of phonographs the same painstaking preparation and artistic skill that have always marked their furniture creations.

An initial survey of the phonograph market proved the real possibilities for such a phonograph. Music lovers and persons of refined tastes generally received the idea with open arms. Leading phonograph merchants gave it their unqualified endorsement.

Unsurpassed as a Musical Instrument

Phonograph experts were then called together—men who had spent a lifetime in the practical side of phonograph manufacture. For two years these experts worked quietly to produce a musical instrument in keeping with Widdicomb ideals. At the end of this time they perfected the Widdicomb Amplifying Tone

Chamber. This is an exclusive feature which gives a supremacy of tone to be found on no other phonograph. It imparts the full tonal value—no more nor less—to every note of the chromatic scale from the clear, high notes of the upper register to the rich, deep tones at the other extreme.

Today the Widdicomb phonograph holds a unique position in the trade and among music lovers. Leading merchants have found that it gives them an enviable prestige among the best class of buyers.

The Widdicomb franchise is being offered to a limited number of dealers who pride themselves on the quality of their clientele. Its distribution affords an opportunity for constantly increasing business. Complete details and catalog will be furnished upon application.

WANT IMPORTED MASTER RECORDS TO BE FREE OF DUTY

Consideration of That Matter Asked by Senator McLean, of Connecticut, in Special Brief Filed With the Senate Finance Committee—Some Interesting Arguments Presented

(Special Correspondence to The World)

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 6.—The entry into the United States free of duty of foreign-made master records and matrices made therefrom, in the interest of our export trade, was advocated in a brief filed with the Senate Finance Committee by Senator McLean, of Connecticut, on behalf of the Columbia Graphophone Mfg. Co., of Bridgeport, Conn.

The Treasury Department has ruled that these articles have been manufactured in a foreign country and in appraising the value for duty purposes considered every element of expense entering into their procurements, including cost of wax blank, in the United States, expense of transporting the blank both ways, salaries and expenses of recording experts, cost of recording rooms, fees to artists, bands or orchestras, and every other ascertainable element of cost, assessing the duty on the aggregate at 25 per cent ad valorem.

"This attitude of the Treasury Department, while possibly warranted under the existing law, should be remedied by the inclusion of these articles under the free list," this company contends. "Otherwise the markets in South and Central America will be closed to the American manufacturer of sound records and handed over to the foreign manufacturer who has no such handicaps to hamper him.

"Germany was our keenest competitor prior to the war in these countries and in this industry. With her lower production costs and her subsidies we cannot hope to survive in that market if this relief is not granted.

"Unless relieved from the burden imposed under the Treasury ruling American manufacturers will be faced with one of two alternatives—

"1. Be forced to abandon those export markets to European competitors entirely, or

"2. Establish plants in one or more foreign countries where no such handicaps or burdens are imposed and manufacture there the records for export.

"Whichever of these alternatives is adopted American labor will be the loser, because in the manufacture of this export product large numbers of American workmen are employed and this employment would be definitely and permanently terminated. It is a fact that thousands of American workmen would be adversely affected by the happening of either of these contingencies."

The Columbia Graphophone Mfg. Co. asks for the inclusion under the free list of the forthcoming new tariff law, as now provided in the Fordney Tariff bill as No. 1677, "Discs of soft wax, commonly known as master records, or metal matrices obtained therefrom, to be used in the manufacture of sound records for export purposes."

"The inclusion of these articles in the free list will enable American manufacturers to successfully compete for valuable export markets which are especially attractive in this and other respects to the United States, namely, South and Central America. Development of these countries by the export of sound records will aid greatly in the creation of markets for other lines of American manufacture," the company tells the Finance Committee.

The company explains that in the development of substantial trade relations in graphophones and graphophone records with a foreign country employing a language other than English it is vitally necessary that the sound records be in the language of the country to be developed; a sound record in English would command no sale at all in a Spanish-speaking country. In the case of musical selections or compositions the music recorded must be of the native character, type or class. If instrumental it must be recorded by individual performers or organizations of native repute or renown. If vocal in character it must be sung by native vocalists or artists of native reputation and popularity.

"A native air of Brazil, for example, sung by an American even of the highest artistic caliber would have no sale at all in Brazil," it is added. "An Argentine native dance played by an American band or orchestra of the highest musical attainments would find no market whatever in Argentina. For these reasons it is necessary to send recording expeditions to the foreign countries to secure local artists, bands, orchestras and instrumentalists on the native heath and to make the recordings then and there.

"The recording expeditions are sent from the United States and usually include at least two high-salaried expert record makers. In addition to their salaries they must be furnished funds for traveling and living expenses and for the rental of suitable laboratories or recording rooms for the transportation and handling of recording machinery and paraphernalia and for the fees of bands and artists which they employ in the making of the records. When it is considered that an expedition must remain in one country until it has accumulated a fairly representative repertoire of the music of that country, and that this may mean a stay of months with heavy daily expense, it will be apparent that the procurement of the wax masters and metal matrices is attended with much difficulty and enormous expense.

"A highly important part of the paraphernalia carried on these expeditions is a large supply of wax blanks on which the wax master is recorded. The blank with the wax master recorded on its surface is returned to the United States as soon as a quantity sufficient to make up a shipment has accumulated, there to be put through the electroplating process. If facilities can be found in the foreign country the electroplating is done there, so as to minimize the danger of loss or damage to the wax master in transit. In such cases it is the metal matrix which is returned."

The company further explains that neither of these articles can be used in a commercial way or to produce sound records in commercial quantities—they are merely preliminary steps. They are procured for the prime object of developing export business and, while it is true some are utilized for domestic purposes, the number is very small, and if domestic needs alone were considered they would not be made at all.

The continued free importation of copal gum and shellac, two highly essential ingredients in the manufacture of records, for which there is absolutely no substitute, was also requested.

ANECDOTES TO HELP RECORD SALES

Manner in Which Little Stories Regarding Noted Composers and Artists May Be Used to Stimulate Interest of Customers

There are many suggestions offered from time to time as to ways and means for arousing and maintaining the interest of record customers, and particularly for turning their desires toward the better class of records. It is generally admitted, however, that one of the best ways for arousing the customer's interest is for the salesman to be able to offer some really worth-while information regarding the record itself, the recording artist or the composer of the music thereon. In this connection "The Voice of the Victor" last month had the following to say on this subject which is of such great importance and value to those members of the industry who desire to be equipped as real salesmen:

"Yes, Beethoven was deaf when he wrote that!"

"My!" said the customer. "D'you mean he never heard it played?"

"No," answered the salesman. "That is, not properly. He'd been going deaf for some time, but not till he wrote the Fifth Symphony did he realize it to the full. He put everything he felt into that music. Listen to the opening. He called it 'Fate knocking at the door.'" And the salesman played just the opening of Victor record No. 18124.

"My!" said the lady again, stunned as many another has been by the appalling force and simplicity of that tremendous theme.

"All through the record you'll hear that bit of tune. Not always the same notes, of course, nor always loud. Sometimes it crops up in the bass just a little—hardly noticeable unless you are listening for it; but it's there all the same."

"That surely is interesting," said the lady. "I'll take that record. What others have you got by Beethoven? I wish I knew as much about music as you do."

The salesman bowed and blushed. He would have liked to tell her that he knew nothing of music—didn't know B flat from A sharp. As a good salesman, however, he kept silent and failed to explain that you don't have to know anything about music in order to acquire a little knowledge about the men who make it.

This salesman was not a highbrow, but he had contracted the habit of reading magazines and newspapers on the train and in hotels while on the road. Having settled down to an inside job in a Victor department it occurred to him he might just as well read a few stories and biographies about musicians. It was a bit hard to begin; but having begun it was hard to quit. Alice M. Diehl's "Life of Beethoven," for instance, proved to be quite as interesting as any newspaper account of the life of Jack Dempsey. The facts about Mozart proved far more fascinating than the fiction in "Snappy Scraps." He was surprised to find on reading Streatfield's "Handel" that Handel was no dry-as-dust musician, but a real live business man, who went bankrupt half a dozen times, paid his debts and began again as an opera impresario. He picked up Crowest's "Anecdotes of Musicians" and discovered that Rossini was as full of quips as he was of melodies. He enjoyed Wagner's fight for his ideals; Schubert's unconquerable simplicity; Chopin's delicate frailties; Liszt's romances and Mendelssohn's cheery optimism. He found that understanding the men enabled him to understand their music.

Perhaps fifteen or twenty books were enough to give him the material that set him up for life as an expert record salesman. Customers came to him because he gave them a new slant on the better kinds of music. He had a background for his sales talk.

He supplemented his book reading by studying the current musical magazines so as to keep track of the Victor artists. He watched with interest their new ventures from opera to concert platform, or vice versa. He watched them grow in favor; saw how each new development of their art was reflected in their records.

Did it pay? You know it did!

TO SEE NEEDS AND CREATE NEEDS

The foundation of all business is to see needs and to create needs. The man who wants to become rich must not believe that it is sufficient to open one more shop of a certain kind in a city where there are already a thousand of such shops. If he cannot offer an improvement, a novelty, a stimulant to the public, he will fail. Those who complain about ruinous competition complain in reality about the lack of ideas. Moreover, a business man ought to realize that his appeal must be either very intense or very general if he wants to be a success. If I want to sell for a million dollars I must either induce a thousand people to buy for a thousand dollars each or I must find one hundred thousand people who will bring me ten dollars each for my goods. To succeed with my new needs I have to figure with the old needs of customers.

INTERESTING DATA ON HANDLING OF TALKING MACHINES

Report Compiled by National Retail Dry Goods Association After Countrywide Survey of Talking Machine Trade and Its Possibilities Offers Many Facts for Consideration

A most interesting survey of the talking machine trade as now constituted and of the sales possibilities of talking machines and records from the viewpoint of the general drygoods or department store has been prepared by the National Retail Dry Goods' Association through its Bureau of Research and Information. The survey is most exhaustive and goes into great detail regarding the comparative sales values of various makes and styles of machines and records based upon actual reports gathered from various sections of the country. The survey has to do particularly with the handling of talking machines in one of the departments of a department store, rather than buying or selling them as distinctive products.

Early in the report it is stated that the appearance and quality of a phonograph or a record cannot be regarded as a prime sales factor if the machine is not widely known. Although there are more than 150 phonograph manufacturers who have been producing machines for the past four years, less than a dozen are known to the layman, it is pointed out, and, of this number, only a few machines have obtained prominence. The answer to the question asked the stores as to the advisability of carrying less well-known brands was invariably that the standard makes are by far the best profit-making propositions. A table is furnished in the report giving a list of well-known machines and the number of stores handling each.

Some Interesting Figures

On the basis of the sales for 1919, as determined by the census, and the rapidly increasing interest in phonograph music from the social and educational standpoint, one authority has estimated that the next twelve months will develop sales aggregating 1,500,000 machines and 100,000,000 records. According to the best available information, 6,000,000 phonographs have already been sold in the United States, the 1919 census disclosing that 2,226,000 talking machines were produced in that year. If the estimate of a million and a half machines this year is verified one new machine would be provided for every seventy-two inhabitants.

A few of the technical details with respect to phonographs are given in the report, so that the merchant may familiarize himself with the different makes.

Where Department Should Be Located

Passing on to a consideration of where the talking machine department should be located, the report states the thirty-four stores questioned indicated a wide range in selection. Ten stores located the department on the fourth floor, while nine located it on the third floor. Only five of the thirty-four stores advised locating the department on the main floor. There was, moreover, a unanimous sentiment expressed that a talking machine department could be successful without a musical or a furniture department in the same store.

Where the sale of records has been tested out for desirable location some interesting results have been obtained. A large department store in the East recently put on a sale of dance records. They used a small four-foot table on the ground floor, and, without demonstration, sold twelve times as many records as were sold in the regular talking machine department, located on the sixth floor, where all the facilities for demonstrating the records were available. It is explained in the report that this should be conclusive evidence that records of this type are impulse goods and are bought by customers hurrying through the store who never think of going all the way to the upper floors to buy them. A small booth located on the main floor with a sample machine and new releases of dance and song music should, therefore, add a new stimulus to the talking machine department.

"The employment and training of sales persons for a talking machine department," says the report, "is an important feature. They should have an appreciation of music and be able to talk music and to bring out the fine points of the machine and cabinet as an adorning adjunct to the living-room furniture. The value of a salesperson knowing some of the technical details of the machine is obvious. Customers often want technical explanations, and the sale may depend upon the ability of the salesperson to prove the technical superiority of one machine over another."

Questionnaire for Salesmen

A list of questions which their salespersons must answer has been prepared by a Brooklyn concern. There are fifty-nine questions on the list, and they cover a wide range of desired information, covering wood finishes, motor types, reproducers, record types, needles, etc. These questions, which are given in full in the report, are drawn up by the training department in cooperation with the department buyers. They are given to the salesperson at the beginning of the training course, and she is supposed to find out the answers for herself from all available sources in the store within a limited time.

All of the stores reporting to the Association in the inquiry on talking machine departments make use of time payments and this is said to be the case with practically every large store. The percentage of phonographs sold on the instalment basis in twenty-seven stores reporting ranged from 10 to 100 per cent. The average was 67.2 per cent.

DATA ON HANDLING OF "TALKERS"

clines on the deferred payment plan," the report explains, "approximately 90 per cent of them pay out the full amount. Of these about 30 per cent take the full time to make their payments. About 10 per cent pay up the full amount in four months, and approximately 20 per cent complete the payment in one-half the time allowed them. Retailers have to take back only 10 per cent of the machines they sell on the instalment plan. One of the principal manufacturers has lost only five machines in three years from people moving and taking the machines with them.

"It is pointed out that the great stumbling-block which department stores encounter in handling talking machine sales is that they make their terms of contract too liberal. This, it is claimed, should not be done. The consensus of opinion seems to be that the term of contract should not run longer than a year and each payment should be as large as possible. 'You will find,' one successful manager says, 'if you ask higher monthly payments than the average, and show to the people that the service you give is worth that extra charge, you will be able to get the larger payment without any trouble.'

The Problem of Collections

"Following up delinquents on instalment payments, according to a buyer for a large Western house, has developed into one of the most valuable adjuncts to his sales promotion work. Realizing that customers resent the call of the most diplomatic collectors, yet, being confronted with the necessity of securing the money, this buyer tried to 'sugar coat' the pill. He 'fired' two intelligent women whom he employed as collectors and hired them over again as a service corps. When he sent them out to see delinquents he furnished them with grips containing the latest and best records, with instructions to use them to test the customer's machine.

"Ostensibly these women were to see that the machines they had sold were in good condition and were giving satisfactory service. On such a mission they received the most courteous treatment. The plan soon developed into the women being so pleased with the visit of the store representative and the opportunity to hear new records that orders were taken in nearly every home. It rested with the service corps whether they sought to collect on the overdue instalments in case no records were bought. If records were bought, attention was called on the bill to the overdue account. In a surprisingly large number of cases the customer is so pleased with the personal service that little difficulty is experienced in keeping the collections up to date."

The total expense reported by the stores in operating their phonograph departments averages 30.63 per cent, with 46.9 per cent for the highest and 19.1 per cent for the lowest. The average mark-up is 40 per cent. Full figures on these items and others are given in the report.

JORDAN JOINS WURLITZER FORCE

Brooklyn Man Appointed Assistant to Manager Brennan—Growth in Business of Victrola Department Expected During the Year

The Victrola department of Wurlitzer's, New York, has just closed a most successful year and, according to Herbert Brennan, manager of this department, all indications point to a larger and better business during 1922.

J. M. Jordan, formerly manager of the Arthora Shop, Victor dealer in Brooklyn, N. Y., has been appointed assistant to Mr. Brennan, to take the place of T. F. Moran, who has resigned from the company. Mr. Jordan is a man of ten years' experience in the talking machine business, all of which has been devoted to the merchandising of Victor products, and comes to the Wurlitzer Co. with a fine reputation. Mr. Moran is to be connected with an export and import concern, of which he is a member, and carries with him the best wishes of the New York talking machine trade for his success in this new venture.

CARUSO RECORD INCOME $250,000

New Jersey Court Appoints Late Tenor's Widow Administratrix of New Jersey Estate

TRENTON, N. J., February 1.—The appointment of Mrs. Dorothy Park Benjamin Caruso as ancillary administratrix of the estate of Enrico Caruso, late Victor artist and world-famous tenor, in New Jersey brought out the fact that the property left by Caruso includes a contract with the Victor Talking Machine Co. under which the deceased tenor or his personal representative is to receive in perpetuity royalties amounting to 10 per cent of the catalog price of all his records sold by the company. The amount of these royalties is estimated at not less than $250,000 per annum.

CLOSING OUT PIANO LINES

CUYAHOGA FALLS, O., February 4.—Business the first two weeks of the new year was not over-active with the retail music dealers of Cuyahoga Falls, according to W. M. Hale, local Victor representative, and whose store is the largest handling musical instruments in this city. Mr. Hale will close out his piano stock and will handle talking machines exclusively hereafter, he announces.

GRIGGS PIANO CO. BUYS BRANCH

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF CENTRAL OHIO VICTOR DEALERS

Will Be Held at Hotel Chittenden, Columbus, February 14—More Than 150 Dealers Expected to Attend—Caruso Records in Demand—Many Whitsit Co. Visitors—Notable Artists Heard

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 5.—Word just comes from Leslie I. King, president of the Central Ohio Victor Talking Machine Retail Dealers' Association, that the first annual convention of this Association will be held at the Hotel Chittenden on Tuesday, February 14. More than 150 retail dealers are expected to attend this meeting. Frank Sell, of the firm of Sell Bros., of Delaware, O., is the secretary and is in charge of the program. According to Mr. Sell, men of national prominence are being secured to address the delegates attending this convention.

In commenting on this coming convention, Mr. King stated that its purpose will be educational. "It is the hope of the officers and executive committee of this organization that each delegate will go away from this meeting better equipped with knowledge for carrying on a more successful business than ever before." Columbus will be represented at this convention by seven delegates.

Columbus was particularly favored recently in having Victor Herbert, the famous conductor, composer and, last, but not least, gifted 'cellist, for the period of one week. Mr. Herbert conducted an orchestra at the James Theatre, one of the leading theatres in this city. No sooner did Victor Herbert complete his Columbus engagement at the James than large quantities of records of his well-known song, "Kiss Me Again," were sold to his many admirers.

Not a single day goes by without our selling a number of Caruso records. This is the statement invariably made by Victor dealers when interviewed on the general sale of records. "Some folks seem to be afraid that Caruso's records will advance in price, which, at the present time, does not seem likely, however, and therefore are purchasing this artist's records in considerable numbers," said one of the Victor dealers. During the past month the public here has shown a strong leaning toward Alma Gluck's records.

With the coming of Kreisler to this city heavy sales of his records are anticipated.

The record "Ka-Lu-A"—"Blue Danube Blues," which is Hawaiian in style, is not only having a wide sale itself, but it is creating a demand for some of the older Hawaiian records.

All of a sudden, and without being able to account for it, Heaton's Music Store, 168 North High street, completely sold out a large number of Evan Williams' "Open the Gates of the Temple," by Mrs. Joseph Knapp. There has been an unusual demand, too, for the Mad Scene from "Lucia," sung by Galli-Curci, according to reports made by the Morehouse-Martens Co., South High street.

Mrs. Esther Reynolds Beaver, educational director of the Perry B. Whitsit Co., left recently for a trip to the East. Among the cities she will visit are New York, Philadelphia and Camden, N. J. While in the last-named city Mrs. Beaver will visit the Victor Talking Machine Co.'s offices.

Reports coming from Ashland, Ky., make particular mention of the window decorations of W. S. Carter's store. An old Kentucky cabin, with the proper interior decorations and appropriate furniture arranged in an attractive manner, advertises the record "Tuck Me to Sleep." This window display attracted wide attention, not only from the residents of Ashland and other Kentucky cities, but critics from the metropolitan cities made very favorable comments.

Among the concerts which were given successfully during the past month are the Zimbalist-Werrenrath concert, which took place in Portsmouth, O., and the Lambert Murphy concert in Marion, O. The seat sale for the former concert was held at the Kay-Graham Co., Victor dealer. Henry Ackerman & Co. and the

C. G. Wiant Co., of Marion, co-operated in making Murphy's concert a success. Olive Kline, another Victor artist, will appear in concert in Marion on March 30.

The business of the Morehouse-Martens Co., Victor dealer, has increased to the extent that it warranted the addition of three new people to its sales force, they being E. R. Todd, who formerly was connected with the Goldsmith Music Store (now going out of business); Fred Baer and Miss Hazel Underwood.

Retail dealers who visited the Perry B. Whitsit Co., wholesale Victrola jobber, 211 North Fifth street, include John Saum, of the Rike-Kumler Co., Dayton, O.; Don D. ## NEED FOR ENACTMENT OF THE STEPHENS-KELLY BILL

Hon. Joseph E. Davies, Former Chairman of Federal Trade Commission, Sees Danger in Beech-Nut Decision—Public Should Be Protected Against Deception—An Illuminating Analysis

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 8.—Edmond A. Whittier, secretary-treasurer of the American Fair Trade League, has given out a statement by Hon. Joseph E. Davies, former Commissioner of Corporations, and for several years chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, on the scope of the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Beech-Nut case, referred to in The Talking Machine World last month, and concerning which there has arisen much controversy. Since his retirement from public office Mr. Davies has been the general counsel of the American Fair Trade League. The statement, which was prepared for the information of members of the organization, is undoubtedly of interest to readers of The World and reads, in full, as follows:

"This decision holds that a system of resale price maintenance, involving the co-operation of dealers or others which has the effect of restricting the competition of dealers in the sale of the product of the manufacturer employing such a system, is an unfair method of competition in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, even though no agreement, either express or implied, between the manufacturer and his distributors is proved. Such a restriction of dealer competition is held contrary to the declaration of public policy embodied in the present Anti-Trust Acts.

"But, on the other hand, the decision reaffirms the right of a manufacturer to refuse to sell to others who will not sell his goods at the prices he fixes for their resale if without any purpose to acquire a monopoly. While the individual right to refuse to sell is recognized by the court, its condemnation of any co-operative means of accomplishing the maintenance of resale prices makes necessary the use of the utmost caution in following such a policy.

"The order as amended by the court enjoins the company from carrying into effect the Beech-Nut policy by co-operative methods in which the respondent and its distributors, customers and agents undertake to prevent others from securing the company's products at less than the price designated by it. It thus requires the company to refrain from any co-operation with distributors, customers or even its own agents designed to prevent other distributors or the ultimate consumer from securing the company's products from any source or at whatever price they may be able to secure them. Such co-operative methods accomplished by the following means are condemned:

"1. The practice of reporting the names of dealers not observing the resale prices.

"2. The listing of dealers as undesirable customers not to be supplied until they give satisfactory assurance of their purpose to maintain the designated prices in the future.

"3. The employment of salesmen or agents to report dealers not observing resale prices and the diversion of orders of purchase secured by specialty salesmen from wholesalers and jobbers who fail to observe resale prices to those who do observe them.

"4. The use of numbers and symbols on cases for the purpose of ascertaining the names of dealers who sell at less than the suggested price or who sell to others who sell at less than the suggested price in order to prevent such dealers from obtaining the products of the company, or

"5. Any other equivalent co-operative method.

"While this decision again recognizes the individual right of refusal to sell in the absence of a monopolistic intent or effect, there has been injected into the situation a new factor so far as the exercise of a resale price policy is concerned, to wit: that even co-operative methods employed between manufacturers and dealers without any agreement may result in a violation of the law. To effectively conduct a resale price selling policy free from any element of co-operation with dealers, in the practical conduct of the business, would require the highest order of legal knowledge and discernment and constant legal supervision over the sales department. Otherwise, even though projected with the best of intentions, there would be grave danger of unconsciously coming within the inhibitions of the law.

"This decision confirms not only my own opinion frequently expressed but the good judgment of the directors of the American Fair Trade League who have based their policy upon the theory that what is required to protect this

GENNETT ARTIST IN VAUDEVILLE

Flo Bert's Singing With One of Her Own Gennett Records on a Starr Phonograph Proved a Big Feature of Popular Act

One of the features of big-time vaudeville at the present time is Flo Bert, well-known vaudeville star and Gennett record artist, who, as a member of the new vaudeville act of Brendel and Bert, wins great applause by singing with one of her own Gennett records played on the Starr phonograph.

In order to be sure of having a Starr phonograph on the stage in every city where she appeared, so that she might use it in her act, Miss Bert purchased a Style X phonograph through the Starr Piano Co. branch in Pittsburgh, Pa., and in writing to the district manager, H. C. Niles, regarding the purchase she said:

"In giving you my order for a Style X Starr phonograph for use in my present vaudeville act, may I at the same time express to you my appreciation of the truly wonderful tone quality this phonograph gives forth? That I believe this tone quality is necessary for the exact requirements of my use is well shown by the fact that I have gone to the expense of purchasing legitimate right of manufacturers is modernized legislation—a position which is supported by the commendation not only of the leading economists, publicists and statesmen of the United States, but recommended as well by the Federal Trade Commission.

"The constructive solution of this vexatious situation, so far as manufacturers are concerned, lies in the enactment of the Stephens-Kelly Bill protecting the manufacturer in the good will established for his trade-marked articles and protecting the public against deception and depreciation of the high quality of trade-marked merchandise. The law must be made responsive to modern business facts and the most progressive thought of the country." The talking machine trade will agree with these sentiments.

this machine and will be compelled to ship this rather than run the risk of not finding a Starr available in every city where we will appear. 'Harmonizing' with myself is quite easy when I have my Gennett record and the Starr phonograph to play it."

SALES POINTER WORTH KNOWING

Publicity Either in Advertising or Catalog Form Must Be Tied Up With Sales Force

Speaking of the catalog and its importance when rightly conceived, J. F. Cameron recently pointed out in Printers' Ink Monthly that the catalog should not act as a substitute, but rather as a supplement of the sales force. This is a subject frequently overlooked by manufacturers, and the same really applies to trade paper advertising. The catalog or the advertising in the trade papers will not alone bring business to the manufacturer, they must be supplemented by personal calls of the sales force. In this way the manufacturer reaps the harvest from the seed of information laid by the catalog or the advertisement. It is the combination of publicity with personal solicitation and intercourse that counts.

Reason Two—New Models

Lafayette

SONORA never sleeps—never rests on its laurels. Instead, Sonora craftsmen and designers are constantly adding new triumphs to old. This unceasing progress means keeping alive and alert the public interest in Sonora, galvanizing the buying impulse, bringing ever new relays of customers to Sonora Dealers.

The Canterbury

For example, the Canterbury, a striking development in Period Models, has met with a popularity even its makers could not have predicted. Beautifully designed and finished along the celebrated Hepplewhite lines, it has created a demand far greater than the possibility of supply. In construction, tone quality and number of special features, the Canterbury has no match among Period Phonographs other than the Sonora.

The Lafayette

The Lafayette is still another step forward in Period Phonograph evolution. In its elegance there is that simplicity of line that bespeaks the utmost of aristocratic taste. There will be an unprecedented rush for this latest Sonora Period, which embodies all the quality that has made Sonora that ever-profitable line for dealers to feature.

Whatever phonographs you carry at the present time, it will pay you to add the famous Sonora, which brings prestige and increases profits.

COLUMBIA DEALERS ELECT OFFICERS

Grafonola Dealers' Association of Philadelphia Holds Enthusiastic Meeting and Chooses Officers and Directors for Ensuing Year

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 2.—The Columbia Grafonola Dealers' Association of Philadelphia met on Tuesday of last week in the Model Shop of the local branch. The most important business before the house was the election of officers, which resulted as follows: President, G. J. Oldewurtle; vice-president, Thomas Kenny; treasurer, J. E. Williams; secretary, E. J. Foley, Jr. The directors are as follows: Miss Eastburn, B. Futernik, R. Borrelli, H. Sommers and Mr. Kelleher.

The dealers unanimously elected the management of the local branch, namely: P. C. Cummin and E. A. Manning as honorary members of the association. While about fifty of the dealers of Philadelphia and vicinity were represented at the meeting, the plans at present are to include eventually all of the dealers that come under the territory of the Philadelphia branch.

The dealers displayed much enthusiasm over their organization, and in this connection President Oldewurtle said: "The officers are going to make the meeting so interesting that the members will 'miss a meal to attend'." Messrs. Cummin and Manning assured the organization of their co-operation and the heartiest support of the company.

LOUISVILLE, KY., February 3.—A number of changes have been made recently in the management of the various departments of the Stewart Dry Goods Co., Victor dealer, of this city. W. R. Finigan, who has been in charge of the company's large talking machine division for the past few years, has been made assistant merchandising manager. His former position is being filled by W. G. Frederick, manager of the piano department. Robert John has been promoted to the detail manager's position of the talking machine department, and George Thixton has rejoined the company after an absence of several years.

Miss Mildred Gilligan has joined the sales staff of the H. C. Prange Co., Sheboygan, Wis. The talking machine department of this establishment was recently enlarged to handle an increasing business.

BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU REPORT

Number of Matters Relating to Misleading Advertising, "Gyp" Dealing, Fake Publishers, Etc., Handled During Month of December.

The Better Business Bureau of the Music Industries Chamber of Commerce has issued a report covering the activities of the Bureau during the month of December. This is the first monthly report issued in some time and indicates that the Bureau is still functioning actively. When the Bureau was under the direct auspices of the National Association of Music Merchants the director, C. L. Dennis, issued a complete monthly report which in itself proved a deterrent to many who might otherwise have taken a chance in the matter of fake advertising or unscrupulous sales methods. It is interesting, therefore, to see the report again resumed.

The December record of the Bureau is as follows:

Under the Bureau instructions to a clipping service to furnish questionable music trade advertisements from all parts of the country, a total of 669 clippings were submitted to and examined by the Bureau during December. This examination removed 198 of the advertisements from the doubtful class, while 138 represented various dealers' versions of an aggressive campaign on one line of phonographs, and the remaining 333 were subject to suspicion or condemnation as regards "bait" features which the Bureau is seeking to modify or eliminate.

Only 24 matters affecting the music trade during the month were taken up by the Bureau in the usual direct way, and only five of these were new complaints. Six cases arising through the activity of other agencies, like the local Bureaus of the Associated Advertising Clubs, came to the attention of the Bureau indirectly.

The complaint in Docket No. 541 of the Federal Trade Commission was dismissed by that body on December 13. This is the last of five cases initiated by the Better Business Bureau in its general contention against over-pricing as a basis for false reductions, as outlined in No. 5 of our "Standards of Practice," which "condemns advertising or offering of instruments at prices higher than the standard market value as represented by prices fixed in a majority of sales actually made." In three of the cases, the Commission issued orders for the defendants to "cease and desist," while the last two cases to be disposed of were dismissed "without prejudice" in no way affecting the Commission's attitude of disapproval of the practices complained.

The continuation of "gyp" dealing, particularly in the phonograph field, constitutes a menace which weakens established methods of distribution. Every individual member of the music trade owes it to his business to expose the vicious methods of the "gyp" and his sources of supply.

A request from the Dallas Music Industries Association for comment on price cutting was answered by the Bureau.

A flare-back from a Bureau case in the Southwest, in the form of an appeal against a Bureau criticism, was discouraged by the manufacturers to whom it was addressed, upon an explanation of the facts.

The danger of a destructive controversy in the reproducing piano field was averted by the prompt and creditable action of one of the interested principals advising his representative against further advertising like that which was complained of.

Further agitation against fake music publishers has resulted in plans for a definite campaign against their activity.

Starr phonographs and Gennett records are being featured by Wise, Smith & Co., one of the largest department stores in Hartford, Conn.

TWO NEW REGAL STORES

Noble Sissle and Bronx Record Shop Open New Stores—Are Handling Regal Records Exclusively and Doing a Large Business

Noble Sissle, star of "Shuffle Along," which has had a long run, has recently opened a talking machine shop at Thirty-eighth street and Seventh avenue, New York. He is featuring Regal records exclusively, making a particular feature of his own records which he has made for this company. Mr. Sissle is an exclusive Regal artist.

Another new concern recently formed in New York is the Bronx Record Shop at 149th street and Courtlandt avenue. J. A. Greenwald is the proprietor and Regal records are handled exclusively. For the period of five weeks since the opening of the store, Regal record sales were far beyond expectations. Actual figures show that in this time the average output of Regal records from the store was something over 2,500 per day, which affords ample evidence that the demand for this popular-priced record is large.

ORCHESTRA DEVELOPS RECORD SALES

Phillips & Crew Piano Co. Forms Orchestra and Augments Machine and Record Sales

SAVANNAH, GA., February 3.—A number of sales of Victor records and talking machines have resulted from a clever plan recently inaugurated by the Phillips & Crew Piano Co., Victor dealers, of this city. Through the efforts of Manager Bickman a dance orchestra, known locally as the Dixie Serenaders, has been formed. This organization has become extremely popular at dances and entertainments. At every performance a Victrola is used, which is placed well in the foreground, and as each selection is played the record number is announced on a neatly printed card.

THE TIRED BUSINESS MAN

When Mr. Jones exchanged a week of being tired at the office for one of being tired on the golf links, says Forbes Magazine, his office boy, George, was left in charge, with orders to report daily by letter. His first effort read:

"Dear Mr. Jones: Everything going fine at the office. No telephone calls, no buyers, and no orders. Faithfully yours, George."

"Business, to my mind, is the means to exchange knowledge, labor and skill for a living."

GENNETT RECORDS LIKED ON COAST

Starr Piano Co. Opens New Agencies in California—Price Reduction Received with Favor by Many Dealers in That Section

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., February 3.—The popularity of the Gennett records manufactured by the Starr Piano Co. is enjoying a steady increase in this territory, according to Manager Steinkamp, of the local headquarters. The company has opened several new accounts in San Francisco, Oakland and Berkeley. A recent Berkeley addition is the firm of Tupper & Reed, who find the Gennett line a very valuable addition to their stock. Letters have been received from various dealers congratulating the Starr people on their price reduction in phonographs and records. The addition of five new accounts in San Francisco alone was due in part to the reduction being made before the holidays.

PULLING TEETH TO MUSIC

Pulling teeth to the melody of a talking machine is the latest innovation put into effect by a London, Eng., dentist. The music is not credited with making the operation of extracting a big molar from the jaw of a patient any less painful, but it is said to be exceedingly effective in diverting the mind of the patient from the operation.

If the dealer is informed he can inform his customer, but it's up to you to inform the dealer.

NEW PEERLESS SHOW CARD

Handsomely Lithographed Display Card, Featuring Peerless Albums, Now Being Distributed in the Trade—A Sales Help for the Dealer

The Peerless Album Co., New York City, is now sending to the trade a new show card, lithographed in several colors and equipped with easel support, for display in the window, on the counter or in any other conspicuous position.

Phil Ravis, president of the Peerless Album

Peerless Album Co.'s New Show Card

Co., in speaking of the purposes of this new sign, said: "It is not designed so much as an advertisement, but as a means of educating the public to the permanent use of record albums.

"It is the duty of every manufacturer in these times to devote a considerable part of his advertising appropriation to dealers' sales helps. We are giving these expensive signs to any talking machine dealer who will display them, irrespective as to whether the dealer stocks Peerless albums or not. The fact is that this sort of material sells goods at the point of purchase, an important thought right now, and we realize that a larger distribution of albums of any description will mean greater record sales opportunities for the dealer because the empty album in the home is a constant invitation to the consumer to buy more records.

"It has been the policy of the Peerless Co. for the past two years, to suggest ways and means by which dealers could increase their record sales, and we believe this new sign, for both window and counter, is a forward step.

"Besides, there is a positive value at this season of the year in dealer window displays which carry the thought of record collections and classification. So many recipients of records of large and small assortments during the past two months are more than willing to be shown how to preserve and index their records properly. We believe that our new show card, which is most attractive, if exhibited in a dealer's windows along with albums, will go a great way toward making the 'record library' a universal custom among talking machine owners."

The Well-Managed Credit Department Can Sell Goods

By J. H. TREGOE, Secretary-Treasurer, National Association of Credit Men

A business enterprise of any proportions without a well-managed credit department is like a ship without a rudder. As another illustration, we would wonder if a splendidly built and equipped vessel were permitted to sail with an untrained officer in command.

It is high time we were waking up to the real position of the credit department in a successful business enterprise. Some people do not rank it as a productive department. They consider it merely an expense. Such people lack vision and have not carefully analyzed the component parts of a successful business enterprise. A well-managed credit department can sell goods just as profitably and successfully as a well-trained salesman. The commodities may be purchased right and sold right, but profits do not accrue until the commodities sold are converted into money. This conversion is the chief responsibility of the credit department, and to charge in the face of this potent fact the credit department with being nonproductive is perfectly foolish and is one of the reasons, perhaps, why some enterprises have not been more thrifty and progressive.

Co-equal in position, powers and results with the purchasing department and the sales department, the place of credits in a business enterprise can, if properly understood and generously treated, prove its worth and illustrate its productive powers. Getting cheap men, withholding proper facilities for the credit department, is just as unwise and expensive as to buy the services of untrained and unqualified men for the purchasing and sales departments. The manager of a credit department should be allowed to feel the seriousness of his position, the obligations resting upon him and allowed every facility he needs for conducting the department in an efficient and productive manner. It is too great a custom with us to refuse the credit department what would be gladly given other departments of the enterprise, merely because it is looked upon as an expense and a nonproducer. Having the credit manager mingle with other managers, bringing them to the surface, making them realize the importance of their position and its place in the productive capacity of the enterprise would be felt in added income and a far safer situation in credit granting than we have ever enjoyed. This is not talking shop, it is talking common sense. It is a defense of something which has been badly neglected and not until the neglect is realized and everywhere credit departments are placed under skillful management and conceded to be one of the most important and productive, shall we get things right and decrease the merchandising inefficiency so prevalent in the land.

CONCERTS DEVELOP BUSINESS

Introduction of New Records Each Month Increases New York Victor Dealer's Business Until He Is Compelled to Enlarge Store

Paul Helfer, Victor dealer at 1539-41 Third avenue, New York, has made it a practice to introduce new records to his customers at the beginning of each month by a Victor concert held in a large recital hall which is an important adjunct of the establishment. As a direct result of these concerts the business of the concern has increased to such proportions that a number of additional record demonstration booths had to be constructed. There are now twenty of these booths and the concerts are proving a greater attraction each month.

The talking machine department of the Cline-Vick Drug Co., Victor dealer, of Marion, Ill., was recently enlarged and remodeled.

INAUGURATES INTENSIVE CAMPAIGN

Emerson Phonograph Co.'s Foreign Record Department Secures Many New Artists and Increases Its Executive and Selling Force

The foreign record department of the Emerson Phonograph Co. has inaugurated an intensive campaign to promote the sale of Italian and Jewish records to the trade. L. D. Rosenfield, director of this department, states that new releases of records in Italian and Hebrew-Jewish are being issued each month and special literature featuring these records is being sent out to the trade. Paolo Bolognese, well known in the foreign record field, and a musician and conductor of some note, has been placed in charge, under Mr. Rosenfield's direction, of the Italian foreign record catalog. He has been calling on dealers in New York City and has been instrumental in the acquiring of several new artists to make Italian records.

Louis Gilrod has been taken on in a similar capacity, and will devote his time exclusively to the promotion of the Hebrew-Jewish records, of which the company is issuing new numbers each month. An artist of some note in Hebrew and Jewish circles recently acquired to make records for the Emerson Co. is Aaron Libedeff, comedian, who is to make recordings of several Jewish comic songs. Another artist to make Jewish records is Joseph Feltman, a one-time partner of Billy Williams, famous English comedian, whose records, it is expected, will make a decided hit with the trade.

Mr. Rosenfield is very enthusiastic about a new record of Russian and Jewish folk melodies, to be issued soon by the Emerson Co., of a piano duet, double-faced, played by two brothers, J. and J. Kammer, which is to be featured extensively with special advertising, and, it is expected, will be one of the most popular yet recorded by these artists.

NEW YEAR OPENS AUSPICIOUSLY

Max Willinger, President of New York Album & Card Co., Tells of Progress

Max Willinger, president of the New York Album & Card Co., New York City and Chicago, manufacturers of Nyacco albums, reports that the first month of the new year opened in a far more auspicious manner than the same month of 1921. The buying is reported not only more active but Mr. Willinger reports that there seems to be far more confidence manifested in future conditions. Mr. Willinger is optimistic over the balance of the year and predicts good normal business. The New York Album & Card Co. is now producing the shelves of the album set for the Victrola 80 in wood instead of cardboard. These sets have proved popular from the time they were first produced and it is expected with the wooden construction providing greater durability their popularity will be further increased.

The Presanplay Phonograph Co. has been incorporated at Wilmington, Del. Capital, $50,000.

WORKING ON MANUFACTURES CENSUS

Census Bureau Now Compiling Facts and Figures Regarding Sixty-five Leading Industries, Including Musical Instrument Trade

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 3.—Work on the 1921 census of manufactures is now well under way in the Census Bureau, and E. F. Hartley, chief statistician, under whose direction the census is to be taken, has a number of agents already in the field.

Schedules for the various industries regarding which special information is desired are now being sent out, among them being questionnaires covering phonographs, graphophones and talking machines (including records, parts and accessories), pianos and musical instruments generally. Only about 65 industries are considered sufficiently important to warrant the use of special schedules, all other industries making returns on the general schedule.

All schedules have been materially revised since the taking of the 1919 census, the law under which the 1921 census is taken not requiring as much detailed information. In all cases, in preparing the questionnaires, the suggestions of the industry affected were sought, and the schedules now being sent to the music trade have been fully approved by the national association and by leading members of the industry.

Efforts will be made to conclude the field work within as short a time as possible, in order to minimize the delay which must elapse before production figures for 1921 can be issued. In the 1919 census approximately fifteen months elapsed before the first reports were issued, but it is hoped that at least three months will be cut from this time, and that the reports may begin to come out by January, 1923.

ORGANIZES A STRONG SALES FORCE

Regal Record Co. Appoints Salesmen to Cover Leading States—Business Output Reported Unusually Large—Clever Portfolio Prepared

The Regal Record Co., New York City, reports that business for the past two months has been exceptionally large in total sales. Dealers everywhere are cashing in on this popular price record, it reports, and the result is that the Regal plant is being pushed to its utmost limit to produce records enough to meet the demand.

New salesmen are being allotted territory all through the country. The latest additions to this list are: S. Grant, who is to cover New England; A. Friedman in Indiana; S. A. Price in Michigan; A. S. Dillon, Ohio; R. G. Ross, Pennsylvania; W. F. Sullivan, New York, and R. H. Nolan, New York, all of whom were sent out from Regal headquarters the first of the year.

E. H. Davis, advertising manager, has prepared a very attractive portfolio for the use of Regal salesmen on the road. It contains samples of Regal advertising issued by the company, and many letters of commendation from dealers who have made a success in marketing the Regal record. Statistics and figures showing a large turnover of these records are included, all of which is designed to help the salesman in closing new accounts for Regal records.

VALUE OF PERSONAL CONTACT

For difficult matters a decision can rarely be reached by letter. The written word makes for suspicion. The man who is writing feels that he is binding himself by his words; the man who receives the letter tries to read between the lines. The problem of letter writing is to force the reader to read the letter in the spirit of the writer, and this problem cannot be solved. When you meet your correspondent personally for the first time both parties will say: "Well, I thought he was worse!" If they do not feel that way the meeting is useless.

The Kipp Phonograph Co., of Indianapolis, Ind., has been chartered in that State, with a capital of $150,000. Directors of the new concern are: W. E. Kipp, H. G. Anderson and Jewell Cartmell.

W. J. BEARD ENTERTAINS EMPLOYEES

Host to Members of His Staff at Turkey Dinner Given at His Home in Paragould, Ark., Recently—Sixteen Years of Business Success

PARAGOULD, ARK., February 3.—In appreciation of the good work done by the members of the staff during the past year, and particularly during the holiday season, W. J. Beard, head of Beard's Temple of Music, this city, entertained all his employes at a turkey dinner at his residence, the dinner being prepared and served by Mrs. Beard with the assistance of some of the wives of the employes.

Following the dinner the evening was spent in the enjoyment of a fine musical program, in story telling and in games, and the guests enjoyed themselves greatly.

Mr. Beard established his store here in 1904 and has met with most substantial success. He handles the Chickering, Starr, Schulz, Foster & Co., Marshall & Wendell, Haines Bros., Cable-Nelson and Brambach pianos and players, Seeburg electric pianos and the Edison, Victor and Columbia lines of talking machines. Mrs. Beard assists her husband in the conduct of the business, and their son Jay also helps out after school hours. Three traveling salesmen work the territory for business, with close to a dozen employes in the store proper.

Mr. Beard reports that business in his territory has kept up in good shape considering conditions generally, and that the outlook for the current year is very encouraging.

Success after all is nothing but doing your full duty to the very best of your ability. Whatever rewards come are only trimmings. This is how Forbes Magazine puts it.

Some Outstanding Principles Which Should Be Observed by Dealers Who Desire to Win

There is room for growth in every business, but no enterprise can possibly expand or become successful unless:

Consistent and result-getting advertising is used in the local papers, circulars, letters, etc.

Systematic methods of obtaining free publicity are employed. These consist of sales stunts, unique window displays, concerts, contests, etc.

The staff consists of expert salesmen and canvassers.

Territory is covered thoroughly and constantly enlarged and no prospects are overlooked.

Courtesy and service is made the motto of the business.

The window displays are planned to attract customers.

The store is kept neat and clean; the stock is attractively arranged and provision is made for the comfort of patrons.

The atmosphere of the establishment is one of cheer.

A business will grow in a measure equal to the effectiveness with which the above are carried out.

ADVERTISING COPY THAT APPEALS

The average merchant, in many instances, has become so imbued with business that when he prepares his advertisements he often does it in such an uninteresting manner that the newspaper reader passes over them. He fails to make a study of the kind of copy which would appeal to the people whom he is trying to reach and, consequently, a large percentage of the money spent on advertising is absolutely wasted.

COLUMBIA RECORD EXCHANGE COMING

In connection with the announcement last week of the reduction in the list price of Columbia double-disc records from 85 cents to 75 cents, George W. Hopkins, general sales manager, stated that a record cut-out exchange would be announced by the company at once. The record price reduction also carries with it a special rebate proposition for the benefit of the dealer.

GOLDSMITH MUSIC CO. CHARTERED

The Goldsmith Music Co., of Columbus O., was recently incorporated in that State, with a capital of $3,000. Incorporators are W. W. Goldsmith, A. M. Taylor, E. Bragunier, Carl Tresemer and P. Cozad.

TAKES OVER VICTROLA STORE

ALLIANCE, O., January 16.—Announcement is made by the Vernon Piano Co., this city, of the purchase of the Victrola store located on Fifteenth street, Sebring, O. It will be possible now to obtain the latest Victor records without leaving Sebring. All models of the Victrola will be exhibited in the new store.

DELAWARE CONCERN INCORPORATES

A charter of incorporation was recently granted to the Qualitiphone Sales Corp., under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a capital of $50,000. Incorporators of the new concern, which will deal in talking machines, are Louis B. Bernei, H. F. Bauman and Seymour O'Brien.

J. Wilbur Speiker and C. A. Brittsen, of Van Wert, O., have purchased an interest in the Brunswick shop of Charles F. Eversole, Middleport, O. The business will be continued under the name of the Van Wert Furniture Co.

R. L. FRENCH IN IMPORTANT POST

Heads Traffic Committee of Manufacturers' Association of Connecticut—Adopt Resolution of Protest Against High Freight Rates

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., February 9.—Raymond L. French, traffic superintendent of the Columbia Graphophone Co., member of the Manufacturers' Association here, became chairman of the traffic committee of the Manufacturers' Association of Connecticut at Hartford at a meeting held in this city last week.

The Association went on record as favoring a horizontal reduction in freight rates applied to all classes alike. The preamble of the resolution says that the present high rate of freight rates materially restricts the prosperity "of our industries and is an impediment to the commerce of New England with other parts of our country." And further that it is the general opinion among our manufacturers that a reduction in transportation costs at this time would materially aid in restoring business.

COMBINE MOVIE AND "TALKER"

New Moving Picture and Talking Machine Promises to Amuse Movie and Music Fans

A combination moving picture machine and talking machine, invented by a Californian, is the latest development which promises to furnish amusement both to lovers of music and movie fans. The talking machine is similar in appearance to any ordinary machine, with the exception that it contains a moving picture projector. The picture is thrown from the cabinet to a tiny screen in front and appropriate records may be played as the pictures are shown. The first instrument has been purchased by Jackie Coogan, the famous child moving-picture comedian.

RELIGIOUS RECORDS FOR CHILDREN

A committee representing twelve religious denominations is negotiating with record manufacturers for the production of discs that will provide proper musical instruction for children in primary grades of Sunday schools. Prayer songs and nature songs which refer to God as the Creator will be selected for the first records, according to Miss Brockway, director of children's work for the American Baptist Publication Society, who is a member of the committee.

The manner of speaking is as important as the matter to be discussed. Remember that when you are greeting a new customer or an old one, and especially when talking over the telephone.

SAUL BIRNS TENDERS ELABORATE BANQUET TO EMPLOYEES

Well-known New York Dealer Entertains Over 100 Members of His Staff, Together With Families and Friends, at Entertainment, Dinner and Dance at Hotel Commodore

Saul Birns, well-known talking machine dealer of New York, who recently opened the fifth of a chain of stores in this city, has made it a practice for several years past of giving his employes a dinner early in the year as a mark of his appreciation of their efforts. This year was no exception, beyond that Mr. Birns outdid all former efforts and provided his employes and store, with a capital of less than $300, and the success of the venture is indicated by the fact that the five stores operated at present do a business estimated at three-quarters of a million dollars annually. During the course of the evening Mr. Birns was presented with three handsome sterling silver loving cups, one from all the members of the organization and the associates with a most elaborate banquet at the Hotel Commodore on Sunday evening, January 15, followed by a dance to the accompaniment of music by Paul Whiteman's Pavilion Royale Orchestra and the Happy Six.

During the course of the evening several well-known and capable artists entertained guests to the number of one hundred or more. Among the artists were Lucy Tonge, a prominent contralto; Princess Watahwaso, well-known interpreter of Indian legends and music, who has made a number of very successful Victor records; Morton Downey, tenor, and Miss Esther Furshtenberg, daughter of one of the managers of Mr. Birns' Capitol store, and a violinist of ability.

The occasion marked the fifteenth anniversary of the establishment of Mr. Birns' first other two from different groups of his managers and partners.

The entire staffs of the five stores owned and controlled by Mr. Birns were present, accompanied by William Hains, manager of the Second avenue store; Hyman Gordon, manager of the Strand; Abraham I. Wolf and Harry H. Levy, of the recently opened Fifth avenue store; Hyman and Joseph Furshtenberg, of the Capitol store, and David Siebner, of the 181st street store. H. C. Ernst, of Paul Whiteman, Inc., acted as master of ceremonies in introducing the artists and in presenting the several cups to Mr. Birns. The other guests included A. D. Geissler, Mr. and Mrs. Thos. F. Green, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Landay, Lloyd Spencer, Paul Whiteman and other prominent members of the trade.

DIGGING OUT BURIED TREASURES FOR THE MUSIC LOVER

The Exploration of the Record Catalog Will Be Found a Profitable Move on the Part of the Salesman as Well as the Purchaser of Records—Many Hidden Musical Gems to Be Found

The proper exploration of the record catalog formed the subject of some very pertinent and timely comments in a recent "record page" of the New York American. Although written ostensibly for public consumption, it may be remarked, en passant, that a great many salesmen would do well to give the catalog their closer consideration, in this way enabling them to bring to the attention of the buying public hundreds of splendid records—real musical gems—which are little known to the rank and file of buyers. Indeed, it would pay a great many salesmen to study not only the catalog, but at their leisure moments to try over the innumerable records which ordinarily make little appeal to the public, but which are of real musical merit. This acquaintance would enable them to be better equipped in the matter of introducing them to the public. Furthermore, they would be still better fortified were they to read up the literature or history of the opera or the composer of these numbers. This knowledge is invaluable as a means of interesting the buyer—in fact, it is an essential.

The article which follows was obviously written for the general public, but the viewpoint in connection with "adventuring into a record catalog" is so important that dealers could utilize the same general material in reaching the public either by circular or by means of a little talk when giving invitation concerts. The article reads:

"We have heard, all of us, of Captain Kidd's treasure. That bold and notorious buccaneer, who plundered ships on the high seas, left many folks wondering and speculating as to just where his fabulous loot was cached.

"Many and afar have been the vain quests in search of treasure, whether it was that of the pirate Morgan or Kidd, or the fabled pot of gold buried at the end of a rainbow.

"It is but natural psychology that we should always think of 'treasure' as something beyond our reach, inaccessible—and yet there are literal treasures and pots of gold always within our easy grasp could we but see them. The greatest treasure of all lies within ourselves; the ability to see and appreciate the beauty of nature and the wonder of human existence in its varied and modern form.

"To-day we enjoy innumerable pleasures and conveniences that a king's ransom could not have bought but a century past. Whether we turn to the right or to the left, we see all about us the miracles and the monsters of modern inventive skill and yet we rarely give them a passing thought; so rapid is our progress that what is new to-day is to-morrow but a commonplace.

"'Buried treasure' and 'commonplace'—words to think about. How inviting the first, how shabby the latter! The buried treasures of what is past—reminiscence; the buried treasures of what is to come, as yet unearthed—expectation. Treasures in retrospect, stirred by the magic of a familiar old melody that hearkens back to the days of happiness and youth. Music, the key that unlocks the gateway to yesterdays.

"Many are the hidden gems to gladden the heart of a music lover, forgotten or overlooked by the great majority because they are not of popular moment or popularly commonplace. Many are the records and rolls that have been pressed and cut only to go down into the oblivion of obscurity, undiscovered gems of beauty. Every month adds to their number, and still we overlook them because of a human weakness to follow the crowd.

"Out of the thousands of records and rolls now available there are less than a few hundred that are constantly in big demand, and yet there are numberless others that are deserving of recognition because of their charm and grace or their inherent beauty of composition. There are songs and symphonies of every description and to suit every possible taste.

"If your record or roll collection is beginning to pall on you it is, in all probability, because you have grown tired of the sameness of your collection. You may have all the popular, operatic and concert selections that your friend has and still feel but a lukewarm pride in their possession. If you will seek for something different—some of those undiscovered gems—and thereby cultivate and develop your individuality, you will be surprised how rapidly your interest will revive.

"There is a tangible pleasure in adventuring into a catalog that compensates us for our trouble, and each new discovery means a new acquisition that perhaps the other fellow has overlooked. Why not break away from the commonplace and build up a collection that is different—a collection that will reflect your individuality? That would be a pleasure indeed."

PLAN FOR SCHOOL CAMPAIGN

An important visitor to Columbia headquarters last month was Calvin Anderson, the well-known dealer at Wilmington, Del. Mr. Anderson is one of the oldest Columbia dealers, having been associated with the merchandising of this product for many years, and has been connected with several of the educational movements which the Columbia Co. has inaugurated from time to time. The purpose of this visit was for the discussion of plans for an educational campaign among the schools in Wilmington and vicinity, which is to be launched shortly and is to be carried on in co-operation with Columbia headquarters.

That a vast undeveloped field for the sale of electric talking machines exists in this country is made evident by figures recently made public by the National Electric Light Association. The Association states there are approximately 7,000,000 homes equipped with electricity in the United States. It is estimated that there are in the neighborhood of 4,000,000 talking machines in the homes of the land. Of this number many are in the homes un-wired for electricity, and of the machines owned by people having electricity in the home, only a small percentage are operated by electric current.

OUTLOOK IMPROVES IN MEMPHIS

Ellis-Jones Drug Co. Tells of Increasing Demand for Starr Phonographs and Records

MEMPHIS, TENN., February 7.—Discussing business conditions in this section of the country, P. C. Scholz, sales manager of the Ellis-Jones Drug Co., Starr distributor, said: "They show an inclination to improve and the sale of Starr phonographs and Gennett records is larger than it has been for some time. The Gennett records are gaining headway in this section because of the popular music which is now recorded on them and the trade which has been handling records of other makes is constantly complimenting us on the improvement which has been made in the Gennett record."

LEADERSHIP

In a recent letter from the Victor Co. the opening paragraph reads :

"That leadership in an industry, as in any other field of activity, carries with it responsibilities that must be promptly met and converted into opportunities for further development has always been a fundamental of our policy. No more striking example of the application of this principle could be had than the announcement following."

The announcement is the one in which the Victor Co. reduced the list price of its 10 and 12-inch Black Label Double Face Victor Records 10 cents each. This action on the part of the Victor Co. fully demonstrates its willingness to accept the responsibilities of leadership and emphasizes Victor Supremacy.

When a company, under no obligation to do so, rebates its wholesalers the difference in cost between old and new prices (on a basis averaging the equivalent of stock on hand) it justifies something beyond mere appreciation. We, therefore, were glad to place our dealers in a position to benefit on the same basis of rebate. Our announcement that we would rebate our Victor Dealers 6 cents each on one-quarter of their entire purchases of this class of records affected by the price reduction, purchased during 1921, accomplishes the same result.

We are confident that when better talking machines and records can be made, they will bear the famous Victor Trade Mark—that when costs of manufacture or conditions make possible or advisable a reduction in prices, the Victor Co. will lead. Any dealer who overlooks the fact that the Victor Co. will maintain Victor Supremacy, regardless of cost, during the year 1922 may make some serious errors.

Our Victor Dealers will find us willing and able to assume our responsibilities as a leading Victor distributor.

The Victor Co. has achieved leadership among manufacturers. Blackman Dealers will tell you how well prepared we are to reflect that leadership and share it with our dealers.

*Write or see us if you are not a Blackman Dealer

SAN FRANCISCO

Brisk January Business, With Records in Demand—The Need of Real Salesmanship—Period Styles Are Popular—Trade News and Changes

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., January 28.—Post-holiday business in San Francisco is fairly brisk and the leading talking machine dealers of the city say the omens portend a prosperous year. The January record demand was heavy. There is usually a very lively record demand after the holidays from the new owners of machines bought as Christmas gifts. In records, dance selections head the list, but there is a drawing away from jazz stuff and a tendency toward more melody in the dance pieces. The waltz shows signs of becoming one of the most popular dances again. Period styles, console table types, and art models continue to appeal to the best class of trade, but the demand for the cheaper machines has increased also.

In spite of the many efforts to promote efficiency in salesmanship it is still pitiful to watch the average retail clerk kill a sale. The widespread interest in psycho-analysis does not appear to have had any noticeable effect on the methods of the majority of salesmen. The principal fault of these salesmen is too quick work. It is the testimony of the most successful salesmen that jazzy methods do not appeal to the talking machine prospect. The average person who contemplates purchasing a talking machine regards it as a matter of considerable importance and does not wish to be rushed. A salesman who knocks the other fellow's line is, of course, a detriment to the general welfare of the trade, but still there is no lack of knockers.

Executives on Visits to Branches

J. J. Black, of the Wiley B. Allen Co., has just returned from a business trip to Portland in company with the general manager, Frank Anrys. The company is short on Brunswick machines. The holiday business in the various stores of the company on the Coast is reported encouraging. January business was better than the same month a year ago.

Morley Somers, manager of the Sonora Phonograph Shop, of this city, sees a bright prospect of continued increasing business this year. He is selling more high-priced merchandise than ever before and the record business is brisk. Mr. Somers has just gone on a business trip to the principal cities of Oregon and Washington in the interests of the Sonora line.

F. B. Travers, manager of the Sonora and Magnavox companies, is in southern California on a business trip this week. He says there is a big demand for wireless apparatus for amateurs who have the fad of listening to the wireless concerts now in vogue.

Records Used for Radio Concerts

The Newberry Electric Co., of San Francisco, Sonora agents, give radio concerts on the roof of the Fairmount Hotel from four to five every afternoon. Victor and Vocalion records supply the concert numbers and the music has been picked up as far away as Honolulu.

J. L. Gibbins Resigns

J. L. Gibbins, manager of the Emporium Victor department, San Francisco, has resigned his position after a stay of but two months. His place is being temporarily filled by Mr. Bosworth, of the Emporium sales force.

Open New Victor Department

The Einselen Music Stores on Mission street, San Francisco, are now both handling Victor goods, a Victor department having just been opened in the store at Twenty-second street. The Edison is also handled.

C. A. Ackley Resigns as Columbia Manager

C. A. Ackley, San Francisco manager of the Columbia Graphophone Co., severed his connection with the Columbia Co. on the first of January and has gone to Los Angeles to join his father in the investment securities business. Mr. Ackley has been with the Columbia Co. for a number of years, and before coming to San Francisco he was the Seattle representative.

P. S. Kantner, of the Columbia traveling force, is acting as San Francisco manager for the present. William Pickering, who has been traveling for the Columbia Co. in the Los Angeles district, has just been transferred to territory in northern California, working out from this city.

Some of the Popular Records

The wholesale Victor department of Sherman, Clay & Co. received increased shipments of popular records this month and is again able to meet the full requirements of the dealers. "The Sheik" and "Molly O" are two big record hits on the Coast. Mr. Scott, acting manager of the wholesale department, says popularity of records is greatly stimulated when the records are associated with a motion picture production. The "movies" are just as efficient boosters for popular records as the grand opera is for the standard classics.

Death of F. J. Christopher

The San Francisco talking machine fraternity lost one of its progressive members on January 16 by the death of F. J. Christopher, the proprietor of two thriving talking machine shops in the Mission district. Mr. Christopher was one of the pioneer promoters of interest in talking machine merchandise in his district and he had many warm personal friends in the local trade. He was thirty-nine years of age and leaves a widow, but no children. His shops feature the Victor, Edison and Sonora lines.

Department to Be Moved

The talking machine department of the John Breuner Co. at Sacramento is soon to be moved to prominent space on the first floor of the large store. When completed the department will be one of the most convenient and handsomely appointed talking machine departments in the Sacramento Valley. Manager Schrader was in San Francisco last week on business in connection with the proposed improvements.

Manager Humphrey Resigns

Manager Humphrey, of the well-known talking machine department of Hamburger & Sons, Los Angeles, has resigned his position and is now in San Francisco, where he expects to locate in the future. He got his early training in this city.

Interesting News Brieflets

P. S. Kantner, of the Columbia Co., has returned from a business trip in the San Joaquin Valley. He found conditions improving in the talking machine line.

The store of the Oakland Phonograph Co., Oakland, has been remodeled along modern lines. The company features Victor and Edison goods. B. S. Goldsmith is the proprietor.

Byron Mauzy, of San Francisco, has just returned from the Orient, where he went on a trade-extension trip with the Oriental Relations Committee of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce.

The first San Francisco concert of the "Victor Eight" will be held at the Century Theatre on the afternoon of February 4. Shirley Walker, manager of Sherman, Clay & Co., has been conducting a live publicity campaign in their behalf.

ALBERT BLACKMAN CAN NOW VOTE

Son of J. Newcomb Blackman Attains Majority and the Event Is Properly Celebrated

J. Newcomb Blackman, president of the Blackman Talking Machine Co., with Mrs. Blackman, went to Philadelphia on February 2 to celebrate in proper fashion the twenty-first birthday of his son, Albert Blackman, who is in his junior year at the University of Pennsylvania. The Blackman family enjoyed a dinner and theatre party to mark the event. Mr. Blackman has had a difficult time lately in convincing some of his friends that he really has a son who has attained his majority, for Blackman, Sr., himself, is far from being a graybeard.

Distributors and Dealers Pursuing a Vigorous Policy in Getting After Business—Are Reaping a Merited Reward—Live Budget of News

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 4.—The Pathé Shop, 17 East Ohio street, closed its doors the first of this month. This leaves the People's Outfitting Co., a furniture concern at 133 West Washington street, the only retail distributor of Pathé machines in the city. C. O. Mueller, manager of the Pathé department of the Mooney-Mueller-Ward Co., State distributor, reported that numerous orders for both machines and records continue to be received.

C. E. Collins, of the Collins Talking Machine Co., distributor of Emerson, Meteor and Jewel phonographs, says that there has been a healthy increase in sales of those products. He reports that in the last fifty days he has received from ten to twelve machine orders a day and that the orders have come chiefly from dealers who have not been solicited by his salesmen.

Increased Gennett Record Activity

Sales of Gennett records have increased by leaps and bounds since November, when their distribution was taken up with renewed vigor, according to T. H. Bracken, manager of the Starr Piano Co. The number sold in January was several times greater than the number sold in November or any month prior to that time. Mr. Bracken has placed two extra wholesale salesmen on the road to cover half the State.

"Service is the basis on which we are increasing our record sales," Mr. Bracken said. "Proof that quick service is appreciated is shown by the fact that we are receiving many long-distance telephone orders. Very frequently we have been able to get records to an out-of-town dealer within a few hours after the order had been sent to us. Dealers in the city have learned that we deliver immediately orders that are given shortly before the close of their day's business. Such service means more sales by the dealer, because customers generally want an order filled the day it is given and if that is not done the sale is apt to be lost."

In developing his record business on a service basis Mr. Bracken is taking full advantage of unusual opportunities afforded by the fact that Indianapolis is the terminal for a large number of electric traction lines that connect the city with the leading communities of the State. Cars running every hour or two in every direction enable him to ship orders with exceptional promptness.

Victor Distributor Is Busy

Another dealer of the city who is giving increased attention to the sale of records is A. C. Hawkins, manager of the Indianapolis Talking Machine Co. He has a stock of 25,000 Victor records over which he has established complete individual control by the development of a stock card system numerically arranged. Mr. Hawkins is of the opinion that record sales should be the backbone of a talking machine dealer's business, and it is with that end in view for his own business that he is laying stress on that feature of service to his customers.

An advertising scheme that promises big possibilities for Mr. Hawkins has been put in operation by him in connection with the rapidly increasing interest displayed in wireless telephony. He has contracted with Francis F. Hamilton, of this city, to have Victor records used exclusively for talking machine features of concerts broadcasted from Mr. Hamilton's radio station at 2011 North Alabama street. Each number thus sent out is preceded by announcement that it is a Victor record furnished by the Indianapolis Talking Machine Co.

The value of this advertising is indicated by the fact that Mr. Hamilton is the leading radio operator among 500 in Indianapolis and some 3,500 in Indiana. Mr. Hamilton conducts a "Radio Waves" column daily in the Indianapolis News, which paper has a radio receiving station.

Penny Sales Idea in Record Selling

C. P. Herdman, manager of the talking machine department of the Baldwin Piano Co., utilized the penny sales idea to stimulate the sales of Medallion records during two days soon after the holidays. The records were sold at the rate of 85 cents for one or 86 cents for two, with the result that 1,500 records were moved in the two days. Mr. Herdman considers the plan an exceptionally good one, as it apparently moves considerably more than double the number of records that would be moved by a straight half-price sale.

Granby Grows in Popularity

The Granby phonograph continues to gain in popularity in the Indianapolis territory, according to W. G. Wilson, manager of Widener's Grafonola Shop. The $150 console model is being received particularly well, he says.

Some Good Selling Practices

Miss Minnie Springer, manager of the Victor department of the Taylor Carpet Co., is making use of the multiplex racks for Victor hangers to move heavy stock. The racks have been placed in each booth and contain classified lists of records showing the name of each record, but not the number nor the price. She says the plan has been very successful.

A feature of Miss Springer's method of selling current numbers has also won considerable notice from patrons of the store. With the advent of theatrical performances, including music recorded by the Victor Co., she features the records of particular interest and the photographs of artists in the show window and in a frame that is constructed for the purpose on top of a

January Business Shows Gain

F. R. Follis, manager of the Victor department of L. S. Ayres & Co., reports that his January business in both machines and records was ahead of the corresponding month of 1921. Increased Victor business is reported also by the Pearson Piano Co. E. W. Stockdale, manager, says he has been met by a shortage of Victor goods, especially lower-priced models.

Reports Large Sonora Business

"A beautiful Sonora business in the last few weeks reminds us of the days before the war," said O. C. Maurer, manager of the Sonora department of the Kiefer-Stewart Drug Co., State distributor. "The sales since the first of the year demonstrate that the Sonora is gaining in popularity daily. Our January sales have exceeded those of January last year. The action of the Sonora Co. in rebating the dealers to cover declines in price has left a pleasant feeling between the retailers and the Sonora Co., with the result that activity has been stimulated."

Higher-priced Kimballs Popular

C. F. Kahn, of the Capital Paper Co., distributor of Kimball phonographs, reports a January business that was better than had been expected to follow the holidays. He says that the higher-priced models continue to sell better than the lower-priced models and that sales generally in Indiana are picking up better than in the adjoining States comprising the territory covered by the Capital Paper Co.

"Novelties are giving way to staple models," Mr. Kahn said. "Special deals are no longer worth while in merchandising talking machines, because people are looking particularly for honest values. They are buying machines now just as they buy pianos. It is noticeable that the Kimball machines are selling better in the cities at the present time than in the country.

Preparing for Music Memory Contest

Widespread preparations are being made for the memory contest which will close with the giving of prizes during the last weeks of the school year. The Stewart Talking Machine Co., State distributor, is sending out much literature to the dealers in an effort to have them take full advantage of the contest, which, the Stewart Co. says, will mean more commercially to Victor dealers than any other educational project undertaken in the past.

Miss Caroline Hobson, head of the educational department of the company, after several months of careful work, has prepared a numerical list of records, giving every arrangement of every record which will be used in the contest. In addition to this, an attractive eight-page booklet has been printed in which is found the alphabetical arrangement of every record which will be used in the contest. Besides containing the alphabetical arrangement of the different records, this booklet, entitled "Ready Reference for All Selections on the State Music Memory Contest Lists," has detailed information concerning the name, correct spelling and pronunciation of the composer, name abbreviation, list price and place where the different text-books may be obtained; the numbers of the records upon which the composition has been recorded and the pages in the different educational booklets where detailed description is to be found.

Miss Hobson's Popular Lectures

Miss Hobson's lectures on "Music Appreciation" and "Music in the Home" have won such general approval that she is receiving numerous requests to lecture before organizations which offer to pay all expenses in connection with such lectures. On February 1 she conducted part of a municipal program given in the auditorium of the normal school at Danville, Ind. She is to lecture within the next few weeks before 400 teachers attending the teachers' short course at Purdue University, and before 200 women who will attend a session of the Montgomery County Economic Club at Crawfordsville.

Walter J. Baker's New Venture

Walter J. Baker, who has purchased the Brunswick Shop at 124 North Pennsylvania street, and who assumed control of the store January 1, is continuing his duties as manager of the local branch of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., pending the appointment of a new manager, which probably will be April 1.

A window display that is attracting more than usual attention is being used by Mr. Baker to feature the Brunswick record, "Ty-tee," as played by Carl Fenton's orchestra. That is the only record shown in the window, and its South Sea Island theme is carried out vividly by an ingenious use of a mirror to represent water, of sand and of miniature figures of a South Sea Island maid, a monkey and a dog. A drawing in colors forms a romantic-appearing background.

Ira Williams, manager of the Victor department of the Pettis Dry Goods Co., took advantage in January of the fact that there is no Victor dealer in Hendricks County and that there is a widespread interest in the country in the State music memory contest to send salesmen into the county, who sold over $700 worth of machines and records.

Good Salesmanship Getting Results

"Reports from our travelers indicate that conditions in our territory are gradually growing better," says H. G. Anderson, general sales manager of the Kipp Phonograph Co., Edison distributor for Indiana. "The sections that are showing improvement are the ones where the dealer and his sales department are on their toes going after business rather than playing the waiting game for prospects. These are the ones who realize that successful salesmanship is largely a matter of courage—courage to believe in a bigger and better business than they have ever had, courage to go after and stick with it. "Pledges received from dealers who are planning to attend our Edison school for salesmen indicate that we will have a very large attendance. We are thoroughly convinced that this school is going to be the most important event that has ever taken place in the history of the Edison business in this territory."

Twelve salesmen of the territory won free trips to the school, with all railroad and living expenses paid, during the course of a recent contest conducted by the Kipp Phonograph Co. They were: G. E. McCracken, Home Furniture & Music Co., Bloomfield; Joseph Alles, Alles Bros. Furniture Co., Mt. Vernon; S. I. Echelbarger, Reitenour Jewelry Co., Union City; Leo Sowerwine, C. W. Sowerwine Store, Huntington; Calvin Long, R. L. Leeson & Sons Co., Elwood; H. W. Kline, Hoover & Crumrine, Wabash; B. F. Houser, Benjamin Temple of Music, Danville; G. Cleo Warren, Claypool-Miller Music Co., Lafayette; George Rosenbaum, G. A. Ensenberger & Sons, Bloomington, Ill.; H. T. Castello, Baldwin Piano Co., Louisville, Ky., and Wade L. Quick and Leonard T. Carlin, of the Hopkins Music Co., Indianapolis. Twelve other salesmen also won trips to the school with their railroad fare paid. They were: George M. Oswald, of Oldendorf's Music House, Lawrenceville, Ill.; R. R. Robinson, J. A. Cofing, Attica; E. A. Schulz, Aurora; August Rupert, New Home Furniture Co., Linton; H. H. Forcum, More-Mitchell Dry Goods Co., Charleston, Ill.; Harry Jones, Peru Cycle Exchange, Peru; Harold Watson and W. H. Baumbaugh, of the Butler Music Co., Marion; M. J. Harrison, Harrison's Edison Shop, Louisville, Ky.; B. C. Humphrey, Haines & Essick, Decatur, Ill., and E. E. Long, of the Baldwin Piano Co., Louisville, Ky.

Importance of Using the Best Type of Machine and Records in Demonstration Booth

The average person interested in the purchase of a talking machine possesses considerable intelligence and, therefore, it is up to the merchant to use every means in his power to convince the prospect that the machine which he is trying to sell is up to the mark in quality and is a good buy, and to devise ways and means for the stimulation of record sales.

Most talking machine establishments contain several booths for the demonstration of records and, naturally, these are the center of interest for the customers. Here they get their impressions of the quality and playing ability of the machines and records handled by the store and their like or dislike for that particular line of instruments is the result of the impression made in the booth while listening to the playing of a record.

In view of these facts it would seem to be of extreme importance that the dealer take every precaution toward making the demonstration of records as flawless as possible, because he is not only trying to sell his records but he is also advertising his line of talking machines. It is obvious that if a prospect listens to a record played on an imperfect or cheap machine an impression will be created that will not only militate against the sale of records, but the prospect is very apt to comment about the matter to friends who, in turn, will unconsciously become antagonized.

Many talking machine dealers pay too little attention to this phase of their business. In many cases a cheap machine is taken from stock and placed in the booth for demonstration purposes, and some dealers even seem to believe that the playing of a few records will eventually tend to damage the playing qualities of their instruments. Even for the sake of argument, admitting that a machine in the demonstration booth is bound to deteriorate in value, the increase in the sale of records, with the occasional sale of a machine directly due to the fact that several of the best models are used for demonstration purposes, will more than make up for any loss in this direction. As a matter of fact, however, there is very little wear on the mechanism of a machine in a booth and this can be further reduced by occasional changes, returning the booth machine to the display room and replacing it from stock.

It is a curious fact that people often come into talking machine stores for the purchase of records accompanied by a friend. This is undoubtedly to the advantage of the dealer if he is keenly after business. In many cases the friend of the prospective record buyer does not own a machine, but is desirous of some day possessing one. When this is so the importance of the impression made on the mind of this live prospect by the display of a really good machine in the booth cannot be overestimated. On the other hand, the cheap machine of inferior playing quality is most certainly not going to arouse a desire for ownership of that particular instrument in the mind of this prospect.

Too many dealers depend entirely upon their sales staff to make sales. They do not seem to realize that the most silver-tongued oratory will not induce a prospect to part with several hundred dollars of hard-earned money when there is a doubt as to whether the line being demonstrated is the best and when previous visits to the store in company with friends have aroused antagonism toward that particular line. Atmosphere has a great deal to do with the making of sales and it is much easier to sell a customer who has never visited the store than one who is doubtful.

URGES USE OF TALKERS IN SCHOOLS

The installation of phonographs with records in the public schools throughout Canada was urged by Bruce A. Carey, supervisor of music in the Hamilton (Ont.) schools, in a talk before the Wentworth County Teachers' Association at Hamilton recently.

Mr. Carey classified the benefits derived by the pupils of musical teaching as not only musical, but physical, mental and spiritual as well. It was valuable, he declared, as a developer of intellect—a mental stimulator that aided pupils immeasurably.

NEWLY MARRIED COUPLES PROFITABLE SALES PROSPECTS

Paul H. Cagle, Sales Manager of the Starr Piano Co. in Nashville, Has Developed a Plan of Operations That Has Been Successful and Is Worthy of Emulation by Dealers Everywhere

There are many dealers who realize and fully appreciate the possibilities for more sales to newly married couples. The greater number, however, make no attempt to follow up the issuance of marriage licenses and announcements of weddings with aggressive sales methods, despite the fact that sales in this direction are much more easily made than in most cases.

A profitable plan is to keep a separate file for information concerning marriage licenses and weddings and as soon as the data are obtained an attempt should be made to reach these possible customers. Young men and women of today who are about to get married are naturally looking about for furniture and the acquisition of a talking machine is considered necessary to make the modern home complete. Few couples think of starting housekeeping without some form of music in the home, and the dealer who gets there first is likely to make a sale.

There are also many young married people who, due to the high rents and the lack of apartments, are forced to live with their parents until they are able to secure quarters and here it is well for the merchant to keep in close touch with the prospects so that when they finally decide upon an apartment he can immediately approach them with regard to the purchase of a talking machine.

An enterprising dealer who is out after this class of business and has secured excellent results is Paul H. Cagle, sales manager of the Starr Piano Co., 240-242 Fifth avenue, N., Nashville, Tenn. Mr. Cagle makes contact with newlyweds through the medium of a personal letter. The reprint of the letter which follows is a sample of these communications and while this particular one is devoted primarily to boosting the Starr piano it can easily be adapted to talking machines and records. The letter follows: Mr. _____,

Address: _____

"Dear Sir—Have you ever stopped to think just what a world this would be without music? I know you love music, every one does, for music is really one of the basic points in civilization. Music is the fine art which more than any other ministers to the human welfare. Where there is beautiful music it is difficult for discontent to live. Music has an undeniable right in every home. Have you ever stopped to think music in the home is thrift? An economical aid to contentment, culture, education and enjoyment of home life? It is an essential contribution to the family well-being. Music, and I might add books, serve to keep within the home that which might be frittered away otherwise in outside diversions.

"Did you have a piano in your home when you were growing up? If so, isn't it one of the sweetest memories of your younger days, and don't you still look on the old piano as just one of the family? It certainly did bring its share of happiness into your home, didn't it?

"Did you ever walk along the street at night and notice one house with parlor lights shining brightly, and hear some one, or perhaps a crowd of young people, playing the piano and singing, and right next door you noticed the other house with darkened rooms and all the shades pulled down with seemingly no life at all within? In which of these two homes would you naturally expect to find the most happiness? Why, the home with music, of course, that would be anyone's answer.

"Whenever I read or hear of a couple getting married I want to picture that couple in my mind as starting out with music in their home. It is so much easier to buy that piano or phonograph then than at any other time. Perhaps you don't know just how easily you can purchase a musical instrument, just a few dollars down and a few dollars per month. At the present time we have a beautiful shipment of new instruments in our parlors, and we would certainly appreciate a visit from you, whether you purchase or not. We will take pleasure in showing you through these instruments, playing them for you, and showing you the construction of them.

"The Starr piano (for that is what I have been talking about) does not need any introduction to you, I am sure, for it has been sold right here in Nashville for the past fifty years. It is manufactured by the Starr Piano Co., one of the oldest and most reliable concerns in the piano business. We are located at 240 Fifth avenue, N., just a couple of doors from the Arcade, and right across the street from Kresge's 5-10-25 Cent Store. Now, can't we look for you to visit us in the near future? I will certainly be glad to get acquainted with you and will try my best to make your visit entertaining.

"Trusting that you will give this letter your earnest consideration, and thanking you in advance for this visit to our store, and with best wishes, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,
STARR PIANO CO.,
Paul H. Cagle, Sales Manager."

BILL WILL AID MERCHANTS

Amendment to Civil Rights Law Introduced at Albany, N. Y., Provides That Persons Moving and Moving Men Must File New Address

ALBANY, N. Y., February 4.—Talking machine dealers throughout New York State will hail with pleasure an act recently introduced into the Assembly here by H. H. Booth, of Oneida, N. Y., which provides that all persons moving from one address to another anywhere within the State must file, within five days after they move, with the town or city clerk in their former place of residence a certificate giving their new address as completely as possible.

The Booth bill would also require all persons or corporations engaged to move household goods to ascertain whether the moving of goods entailed a change of residence on the part of their employers, and, if so, to file with the town or city clerk a similar certificate giving the address to which the goods were taken.

Passage of this bill, which is an amendment to the civil rights law, would do away with many future losses on the part of talking machine dealers who have been fooled in the past by persons who purchase an expensive machine, make one or two payments and then quietly slip from town without leaving their address or any means whereby the merchant can discover their whereabouts. Under the new bill the merchant could simply go to the city clerk and in a few moments he would have the desired information and could then take steps to collect the money due him.

Thomas Gibson, one of the best-known economists, says: "Conservatism is a very good thing in its place, but the term is frequently used as a simile for apprehension or lack of knowledge, in which case it is likely to prove very stultifying and mischievous."

THE DOWNWARD MOVEMENT OF POPULAR RECORD PRICES

General Reduction of Ten Cents in the List Prices of $1.35 and 85-cent Records Enthusiastically Received by the Trade in Most Cases—Announcements of Cut-out and Exchange Plans

The big news feature of the month in the talking machine trade was naturally the general reduction in the list prices of the popular types of records as announced by the different manufacturers on January 18 and immediately thereafter, a uniform reduction of 10 cents being made in every instance, bringing the $1.35 records down to $1.25 and the 85-cent records down to 75 cents—figures at which the records sold before the war.

The first gun was fired by the Victor Talking Machine Co., which, in advertisements in the newspapers on January 18, announced the reductions in the ten- and twelve-inch Black Label records as noted above. The same day, or immediately thereafter, various other prominent manufacturers announced corresponding reductions, they being the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., who announced a cut in the list prices of Brunswick records; the General Phonograph Co., who announced reductions in the prices of Okeh records as being of January 18; the Aeolian Co., with its Vocalion Red records; the Columbia Graphophone Co., on ten-inch records only, the twelve-inch having already been reduced; the Emerson Phonograph Co., Inc., and the Pathé Frères Phonograph Co., which announced that the entire 20,000 and 22,000 series and all foreign ten-inch records had been reduced from 85 cents to 75 cents, with similar reductions in the corresponding series of Actuelle records.

In announcing the list price reductions the several companies also announced rebate plans for the protection of the dealers. The Victor Co. allowed a credit of 5 cents per record to jobbers to an amount not exceeding one-fourth of the jobbers' purchases of the special classes of records during 1921. The jobbers for the most part made an allowance to their dealers of 6 cents per record on the same basis, the credits to apply to new stock purchases within a period of a month.

The Columbia Co. extended to dealers a rebate of 6 cents per record to the amount of not more than 25 per cent of the purchases of the same class of records during the year of 1921, and for January, 1922, up to the time the price reduction went into effect. As the cut in Brunswick twelve-inch records applied only to releases after January 18, there was no occasion for a rebate there.

Although some manufacturers were not enthusiastic over the general record price reduction, the move appeared to meet with the entire approval of the majority of retailers, who saw therein a better opportunity to appeal to the public and develop a greater volume of business, and also to meet competition.

On top of the cuts in record prices come announcements of record cut-out or exchange plans that have been, or will be, put into effect by various companies, and which will serve to move from the dealer's shelves a considerable stock of slow-moving records.

Whatever the ultimate effect of the cut in record prices on the record business of the future, the one fact remains that talking machine dealers are in a position to offer to the public one product that has actually been brought back to a pre-war price level, and this in itself should provide the opening for some worth-while sales arguments.

AN ARTISTIC STEGER SOUVENIR

From the Steger & Sons Piano Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill., The World is in receipt of an unusual paper weight of solid bronze which is most attractively designed. On the surface of the tablet, under the caption "Insure Your Success" and above the name and address, appears the following: "The Steger institution has a plan of sound financing and sales promotion that will stabilize and vitalize the piano or phonograph business of the dealer who merits appointment as the representative of artistic pianos, player-pianos and phonographs because of his standing in his community. Conservative, constructive and consistently progressive, the Steger policy guarantees success and prestige for capable business builders." This artistic Steger souvenir will be preserved and will act as a permanent reminder of the house and its policy of trade co-operation.

As the tide goes clear out, so it comes clear in. In business, sometimes, prospects may seem darkest when really they are on the turn.

ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT MAKES COAST-TO-COAST TRIP

M. V. DeForeest, President of National Association of Music Merchants, to Visit Principal Cities of Country in Interest of Association and Music Advancement—A Splendid Move

An announcement of unusual importance and interest to every talking machine and music merchant of the country generally is to the effect that M. V. DeForeest, of Sharon, Pa., president of the National Association of Music Merchants, will shortly start on a coast-to-coast trip in the interests of that Association and in support of the propaganda for the advancement of the cause of music. In the course of the trip Mr. DeForeest and those who will accompany him will stop in a number of the principal cities for the purpose of delivering the message direct to local music merchants.

It is the first time in the history of the industry that the president of the Music Merchants' Association, or of any other trade association, has attempted such a feat, involving, as it does, the sacrifice of five weeks or more of the time of Mr. DeForeest, as well as a very substantial outlay of money.

At a meeting of the Jubilee Convention committee, held recently at the Hotel Commodore, New York City, Mr. DeForeest said: "I am very happy, indeed, that circumstances are such as to make possible this trip. It is a sort of token of appreciation by me, not only for the honor of being president of such a wonderful organization, but a recognition of the direct and personal benefits I have received for my business through membership in the organization.

"From the beginning of my career in the music business I have attended the conventions of the Association. The ideas I received there, and the information I received, were the basis of the merchandising policy that has developed our business success. This trip, then, is a kind of thank-offering—to tell others about the Association and what it means.

"The recognition that has come to music, the splendid upbuilding of the Bureau for the Advancement of Music, all point to bigger accomplishments in the future. It will be a great pleasure, indeed, to meet the music merchants of the various cities, most of whom, I am delighted to say, are my personal friends."

The following cities are in the itinerary: Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Denver,

M. V. DeForeest

Los Angeles, Ft. Worth, Little Rock, Salt Lake City, Spokane, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, El Paso, Dallas and St. Louis.

Alex. McDonald, of Sohmer & Co., vice-chairman of the Jubilee committee, and chairman of the press committee of the National Association of Music Merchants, will make the entire trip with Mr. DeForeest, as will Charles

The Arrow Motor & Machine Co., 727-739 Frelinghuysen avenue, Newark, N. J., manufacturer of special machinery and tools, and whose product, the Waterman motor, is well known, is now shipping samples of a new electric talking machine motor to the trade. This product, the invention of Benjamin Hutches, who is well known in talking machine inventive circles, is a motor which runs equally well on alternating or direct current and is unaffected by fluctuations in voltage. It is silent and of light weight and is of such compact size that it can be installed in place of a spring motor without cabinet alterations. The motor is to be exploited on a wide scale and the manufacturers, who have had long experience in the machinery field, expect to market it in large quantities.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 7.—H. C. Fry, of the National Publishing Co. of this city, reports that the new year has opened with an exceptionally strong demand for the albums produced by this company. In referring to the marked betterment in present-day conditions over conditions of the same period of a year ago, Mr. Fry stated: "A year ago this time dealers were generally overstocked with albums. The demand from the buying public was not heavy and prices were still high. In the past year we were able to reduce the prices on our albums 35 to 40 per cent. The present year opened with dealers in an understocked condition, low prices and the buying power of the general public greatly improved and still growing better."

At the present time the bindery of the National Publishing Co. is working at full capacity and is still over a week behind in production. The National Publishing Co.'s albums are also proving popular abroad as well as at home, as may be evidenced by the substantial export orders that are being received.

Samuel A. Halsey Scores 100 Per Cent in Edison Test—Meets Charles Edison's Sister-in-law in Plant, to Whom He Is Now Married

Miss Charlotte W. Hawkins, sister-in-law of Charles Edison, son of the famous inventor, was married on February 1 in the former's home to Samuel A. Halsey, manager of the Phonograph Corporation of Manhattan, one of the allied Edison interests.

Miss Hawkins has been active for some time in social welfare work. It was while doing welfare work in the big Edison plant that she met Mr. Halsey.

Mr. Halsey was graduated from Brown University. His preparatory work was done at St. Paul's School, Concord, Mass. Following his graduation from Brown he entered the University of Pennsylvania Medical School. He later traveled extensively throughout this country and South America.

On February 21, 1921, at the height of the discussion of the Edison questionnaire, Mr. Halsey presented himself for examination. Mr. Edison himself happened to come into the room just as

Mr. Halsey completed his paper. The inventor read the paper carefully. Mr. Edison marked the paper AA and declared that Mr. Halsey was the only man who had ever answered all of the questions correctly. He was told to report for work the following Monday.

THE TALKING MACHINE BUSINESS TODAY DEMANDS THE VERY HIGHEST PLANE OF PRESENTATION

H. A. Beach, Vice-president of Unit Construction Co., Tells, After Direct Contact With Trade Throughout the Country, Why Good, Continuous, Constructive Work Is More Necessary Than Ever

A careful survey of prevailing conditions in the talking machine industry based upon direct contact with the trade in all sections of the United States during recent months reveals a greater necessity than ever before for good, continuous, constructive work.

During the past several months many very poisonous influences, particularly in the nature of reckless abandon on the part of a portion of the trade, have been seriously felt by those constituting the more substantial element, and unless all manufacturers, distributors and dealers combine toward a well-conducted, constructive campaign there is a strong likelihood of public interest in the talking machine suffering a wane in another year.

The fight for business must not overshadow development work. The most wonderful strides made in the last ten or twelve years must not be offset by the slightest abandonment of the kind of effort which is responsible for the headway made to date.

Only comparatively a few years ago it was indeed difficult to interest the merchant of recognized big caliber in the handling of talking machines. He felt it beneath his dignity. That condition has changed, and to-day there is a sufficient number of highly reputable retail merchants with heavy investments in the talking machine line to guarantee its successful handling—to present a most formidable array against the marauder type—that is, if each can be made to realize the extent of his responsibility.

Unfortunately, the destructive element does not always come within the pale of the law in its operations and cannot be combated by organized resistance, except such resistance as is offered by strictly high-class merchandising and publicity work and a high-class presentation of the line through properly equipped stores, high-class salesmanship, high-class and instructive advertising. These are the things which are going to prove the real solution of the problems at hand.

The factory must uphold the quality of its products. It must gauge as accurately as is humanly possible market needs, providing sufficient quantities, yet guarding against reckless overproduction. It must exercise a stabilizing influence over the balance of trade. It must, through its officials, maintain the closest possible contact with outside conditions and with its outlets, constantly guiding and counseling along lines which represent the highest ideals of a business, the real success of which, because of its very nature, is fundamentally based upon such ideals.

The distributor, in order to properly function in the general scheme, should, by all means, maintain a well-balanced working equipment, one that will draw his trade to his place of business with as great frequency as possible in order that the much-needed contact may be complete. There should be a highly capable efficiency man who can gather together and, in turn, impart advanced ideas of business promotion and business getting to visiting dealers, and, by the way, there are no dealers of real worth who are not hungry for worth-while ideas.

The outside sales force must be alive and alert, must enjoy the confidence and respect of its trade and, above all, must be big enough to look well into the future, thinking and working beyond immediate sales accomplishments.

Above all else, the distributor must know his trade, know not only his value as an outlet for merchandise, but, of equal importance, what influence he is exerting locally toward the general uplift of business. A dealer who does not lend something toward the future development of the line is not safe to entrust with the responsibility of representation.

The dealer must, first of all, satisfy himself as to the commercial value of the line; he must determine to what extent he is going to depend upon his business or branch of his business for his future livelihood. Should his findings and decisions be favorable, his first procedure is to put his organization and store in such order as will insure maximum returns offered in his working district.

Never before has real salesmanship been such a potent factor in the talking machine business. Therefore, every possible care should be taken in the training of the dealer's sales force. Store conditions and setting should be so arranged as to create an atmosphere which will draw and hold the prospective buyer of machine and subsequent record purchases. No mechanic can do proper work without correct tools. A sales organization, no matter how capable, is just as much at a loss as the mechanic without the necessary tools with which to work. Store equipment of right order is absolutely necessary to success. His local publicity work should be high-class and, as far as possible, on a par with national campaigns.

The dealer should constantly bear in mind the one salient fact that any line of merchandise is just as good as he makes it. If the promotion work is right and the presentation of the line what it should be, its acceptance by the public will be full and complete—if the merchandise possesses the merits claimed.

To maintain the strength of this magnificent industry every one involved must be a contributor, else in time its entire structure will give way. The Unit Construction Co.'s part in the general program is no small one, as is testified by the numerous letters received from dealers Unico-equipped, telling of the most satisfactory increases in their business following Unico installations, and we are going on bettering the business opportunities of this and that dealer until the presentation of the talking machine will be on a par with and beyond that of other standard lines of merchandise.

Quality will always be the basis upon which we will work, but this does not mean Fifth avenue elaborateness where not consistent, and we will always be just as much interested in the small town dealer as those in metropolitan centers, with preparations for his needs just as complete. If you believe in your business, defend it and protect it with every means at your command. The talking machine business is a delightful business, a gentleman's business, and is worthy of all you can put into it.

AWARDS MADE BY THOS. A. EDISON, INC., FOR SLOGANS

Henry C. Lawrence, of Webster Groves, Mo., Captures First Award of $5,000 and Gets $500 Additional From Silverstone Co.—Twenty-two Other Prizes in the List

Thos. A. Edison, Inc., has announced the awards in the phrase contest which opened last Spring and closed early in September, bringing in over a million answers from almost all parts of the world. In announcing the competition Mr. Edison said: "I want a phrase which will emphasize that our new instrument is not a mere machine, but that it is an instrumentality by which the true beauties and the full benefits of music can be brought into every home."

The great volume of answers received made the job of the judges a formidable one and they worked steadily for several weeks before they were able to sort out the best of the slogans and make their final decisions.

The first prize was awarded to Henry C. Lawrence, of Webster Groves, Mo., who received $5,000 for the slogan, "A Fireside Encore of the Artist," from Thos. A. Edison, Inc., and an additional $500 from the Silverstone Music Co., Edison jobber in St. Louis.

The second prize of $2,000 was awarded to Edmund A. Knoll, Erie, Pa., for the slogan, "Artists Responding to the Encores of Home," and the third prize, $1,000, to William J. Palmer, of Los Angeles, Cal., for the slogan, "All the Artist Gives the Home Receives." There were also twenty prizes of $100 each awarded to G. R. Glass, Kansas City, Mo.; Adelaide S. Boekhoff, Omaha, Neb.; Louise T.

Sherry, Minneapolis, Minn.; Mrs. Edith J. Williams, Mamaroneck, N. Y.; M. Mulvey, Newark, N. J.; Geo. E. Wallace, Highland Park, Ill.; Paul Moschcourtz, New York; Ellalie J. Stillman, Bloomfield, Ia.; Ed. Wolff, Milwaukee, Wis.; L. A. Helfer, Gastonia, N. C.; John A. Offord, St. Petersburg, Fla.; Edward H. Buckley, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. C. G. Bierbower, San Antonio, Tex.; John S. MacLeod, London, Ont., and D. P. McKeithan, Carthage, N. C.

The winner of the first prize, Henry C. Lawrence, of Webster Groves, Mo., a suburb of St. Louis, is credit manager for the Blackwell-Wielandy Book & Stationery Co. He has been with the company for twenty years, and since 1905 has been one of the directors. Mr. Lawrence has written considerable advertising matter for the firm and gave them the slogan: "Everything New From Everywhere." He has also written four books on business, each of which has gone through several editions. He is the possessor of an official laboratory model, Chippendale mahogany, and is an enthusiast regarding Edison Re-creations, his favorite artists being Frieda Hempel, Anna Case, Walter Scanlan and Elizabeth Spencer.

The Trade in BOSTON and NEW ENGLAND

JOHN H. WILSON, Manager

324 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, MASS.

BOSTON, MASS., February 6.—With most of the talking machine houses it was a case of better business than was expected during January, but, as one dealer expressed it, it largely depended upon the amount of pep and energy one put into it, for if one sets the machinery going properly to get business he'll get at least a large percentage of what he sets out to acquire. That seems to be only common sense, and there is absolutely nothing new in the idea. It has often been iterated and reiterated that there is business to be had. This was true in the lowest stages of business depression, and the right man with the right approach and the right methods can get it; and that's exactly why some dealers are finding business good, for they put into practice these very factors. February, though a short month, is expected to show up very well. A fact that is noted by many is the increasing demand for high-priced machines of established reputation, especially the period models.

When Will That Dinner Be Held?

When will the next dinner of the New England Music Trade Association be held? That is a question that is holding the attention of the local music trade. With Frank S. Horning, a hustling Victor dealer, as president, he is very naturally looking for the hearty co-operation of the talking machine trade of the city, for with a representative of this branch as head of the organization there is every reason why its representatives should put their shoulders to the wheel, though it must be said with some misgivings that the piano trade needs a little prodding once in a while, as the ever-faithful Secretary Merrill well knows. The main question touching a prospective gathering of the Association is, what shall be the magnet that will draw the men together? Some are in favor of a speaker who will discuss some live topic of the hour, wherein there shall be enough meaty substance that may leave some lasting thought in the minds of the members, some constructive idea that they can carry away with them. Another class is all for an entertainment, possibly of a vaudeville character, so right at the start is the difficulty of pleasing everybody. President Horning and Secretary Merrill have been in frequent conference lately as to what plan to pursue, so it may be that there will be something definite to offer the Association members soon. Is there any valid reason why the organization should not get together at least bi-monthly, the same as other business organizations?

Important Shiddell-Bay State Deal

One of the important pieces of news this month is the announcement made by the E. B. Shiddell Co., Inc., distributor of Okeh records, of its decision to transfer this distributing business to the Bay State Music Corporation, formerly distributor of Odeon records. The transfer went into effect February 1. The Bay State Music Corp., with which Herbert L. Royer has been identified, has had quarters in a nearby building, but it is quite possible, now that it has acquired the Shiddell Co. business, that the other quarters will be given up and the business concentrated at 142 Berkeley street, which has been the Okeh headquarters now for about two years. At this address there is opportunity for increasing the working capacity if the growth of the business under Mr. Royer demands.

In a circular which the Shiddell Co. has distributed to the Okeh dealers it is stated that all shipments made on and before February 1 will be shipped and billed by the Bay State Music Corp., and that all orders now on hand will be looked after by the same corporation unless orders to the contrary are received.

Mr. Shiddell, in thanking the dealers for their business and co-operation, announces that he is to continue in the music trades distribution and that his plans will be announced in a short time. He has a certain talking machine under consideration which he may decide to handle. John W. Connelly, who has been with Mr. Shiddell for about a year, will continue with him.

It is of more than interest that Mr. Shiddell has been confined to his home several days because of illness. He was over in New York toward the end of January and contracted a light attack of the influenza, which necessitated his remaining indoors.

Larger Territory for Joseph Burke

By a rearrangement of territory Joseph Burke, of the Musical Supply & Equipment Co., now has that part of Massachusetts which lies west of Springfield as a part of his field. This was formerly handled from the Vermont headquarters of the company. Mr. Burke, who has lately been on an extended tour of inspection in his territory, makes a most encouraging report of the future of the Sonora, and new and old dealers are taking hold of this proposition with vigor that promises well.

F. V. Goodman Looks Over Local Field

A visitor for several days here in Boston and making his headquarters with Manager Burke was F. V. Goodman, assistant director of sales for the Sonora Co. Mr. Goodman had not been in Boston before for some time, but he plans to be here oftener in the future, as according to a new plan he will give more of his time to surveying the field at close range. His mission here was largely in regard to a new advertising campaign which the company is to carry on at some of the high spots in New England, such as Boston, Springfield, Worcester, Providence and Hartford, and on leaving this city it was his plan to spend a couple of days in each of these other four cities, completing the arrangements for said campaign.

Mr. Goodman while here had a good opportunity to look over conditions as they obtain locally and in an interview with The World correspondent he waxed quite enthusiastic over the prospects for business generally and especially for the Sonora product. He stated that with the disappearance of the nondescript instruments and the survival of a choice line of superior machines the industry was now getting to have a distinct place; in fact it has already been proved that an instrument of this character was a necessity in the home and that it has an advantage over the piano in that it is something that comes within the means of the humblest, and as for price he believed that with an eventual reduction in the cost of supplies and of labor there was no reason why machines of superior make should not be selling at lower figures at some time in the future. Speaking especially for his experience with the Sonora he said that there was a growing demand for the period models and he believed it would not be long before 50 per cent of the Sonora's business would be in this advanced type of machine.

Victor Enthusiasts Welcome Edgar Guest

Edgar Guest was in town the middle of January, coming here under the enterprising auspices of M. Steinert & Sons, which concern had this distinguished "poet of the plain people" entertain a large company of Victor enthusiasts in Steinert Hall. Mr. Guest was introduced by Robert Steinert, who has his office at the company's Victor headquarters in Arch street. Kenneth Reed, wholesale manager of the Victor department, was on hand to welcome the visitors and to see that everyone was happily seated. Mr. Steinert in his introduction referred to the fact that Mr. Guest was now a Victor contributor and coming from Detroit he sometimes makes people forget that Henry Ford is that city's first citizen, a sally that caused much merriment. After a few words of merry introduction Mr. Guest recited a group of poems including the three which he has lately recorded for the Victor company. It is conceded by those who applaud good business enterprise that it was a capital stroke on the part of the Steinerts to get Mr.

Guest here just at this time and if the invitations sent around to Victor dealers had all been properly distributed Steinert Hall wouldn't have been big enough to hold the crowd.

Why Brunswick Records Are Superior

Brunswick owners and Brunswick dealers often ask why Brunswick Records are so much better than other records and what is done in Brunswick Studios to make them so.

The answer is, that while recording itself requires both the skill of the artist and the knowledge of the scientist, there is no magic formula for fine record making.

In the last analysis it is simply the combination of the best men, methods, materials and machines that money can buy—and then the taking of infinite pains in every detail.

Brunswick Records are often made and remade many times before Brunswick standards are entirely satisfied.

with inscriptions in bold lettering such as "You'll know them by their color," or "Vocalion records play on all phonographs," or "You'll buy them for their tone," or "Vocalion records wear longer." These are attracting a great deal of attention from passers-by on this thoroughfare. Manager Wheatley reports that the January business was very good, which in part was due to the clever way that some export models were advertised and which found quick purchasers.

To Establish Central Display Rooms

Kraft, Bates & Spencer, Inc., which have their Brunswick wholesale headquarters at 1265 Boylston street, which is quite a ways out from the downtown business section, are about to establish a display room in the heart of the retail section, and it will be a joy to Harry Spencer to again get back into the old atmosphere with which he is so familiar. Which is to say that quarters have been leased in the Vose building, 160 Boylston street, and these are now being prepared for occupancy, the interior being repainted and new draperies and carpets put in. There will be no retail business done here, the idea being to have Brunswick dealers bring their customers so that they may inspect the wide variety of styles of machines that will be kept on hand. Mr. Spencer will make this his headquarters and later he may have someone to assist him. He expects to have the quarters ready for occupancy inside of a week.

Herbert Shoemaker Visits Victor Plant

Herbert Shoemaker, of the Eastern Co., was over at the factory toward the latter part of January, relative to some record matters, and also to inspect the new console models of Victors, which should be shipped here within the next few weeks. Mr. Shoemaker plans to make periodic trips over to the factory every three or four weeks. He says that the January business was excellent.

chines, were a part of the large company that dined a few nights ago at the Hotel Victoria, the others being the polishers and truckmen of the house. But the party was not confined to the workers from the Boston warerooms, for there were those from the Brockton, Quincy and Lynn establishments of the company, too. Manager White says that the Edison, Brunswick and Victor business was unusually good during January, and even exceeded January of 1921.

Interested in City Betterment

Several of the talking machine dealers who are members of the Boylston Street Retail Merchants' Association were in attendance at the annual meeting of that body, which was held at the Hotel Brunswick on the evening of January 30, the election of officers following dinner. This organization has been in existence for several years and it has done a good deal in furthering the business interests of the various concerns located on this popular thoroughfare.

D. Stuart Pope Takes Charge at Henderson's

Henderson's, at 156 Boylston street, which is more officially known as Henderson's Brunswick Shop, has a new manager in the person of D. Stuart Pope, who has long been identified with the music business of Boston, though more with the piano end. Mr. Pope is a man of highly musical tastes, and has been an organist and choir director in his spare time, but this he gave up more than a year ago when new duties necessitated his traveling more or less. Mr. Pope is popular in the trade, has a wide acquaintance locally and there is every assurance he will make good in his new undertaking. He will likely renew his identity in a more pronounced form with the New England Music Trade Association, of which in the days when it was the Boston Association he was a very active member.

Close Many Good Contracts

January appears to have been a very good month for the Puritan product according to Manager John W. Ellsworth of the Boylston street headquarters, and several good contracts have lately been signed up for representation of this instrument. Benjamin F. Drake, who is associated with Mr. Ellsworth, has been making a canvass of the Maine and New Hampshire territory lately, and he has been able to interest a great many people in the Puritan proposition.

Some Trade Brieflets

Miss Mabel Aulson, formerly in the talking machine department of the R. H. White Co., has associated herself with Henderson's, where she is making many new friends.

The Hallet & Davis Co. was one of those Boston concerns to make a generous contribution to the Instructive District Nursing Campaign which has just closed a drive.

The Edison School of Salesmanship

A school of salesmanship for the benefit of New England Edison dealers will be begun Monday, February 20, lasting through the week, and the Copley-Plaza has been selected by the Pardee-Ellenberger Co. as the scene of the sessions. This class follows the recent contest in the New England field which closed on December 31, the winners of which were to be privileged to attend this school. The final standing of dealers which represented winners were as follows: Division 1, F. S. Dyke, of Northfield, Vt., and Johnston Co., of Fort Fairfield, Me.; Division 2, Cushman Furniture Co., of Attleboro, Mass., and Trask Brothers, Milford, Mass.;

Division 3, Otis Skinner Co., Bangor, Me., and A. D. Elster, of Meriden, Conn.; and Division 4, C. C. Harvey Co., of Boston, and J. A. Foster Co., of Providence, R. I. Then the individual free trip winners were W. E. Birdsall, of the Phonograph Shop, Boston, and L. F. Harmon, of the Bon Marche Dry Goods Co. of Lowell, Mass. These two men, as well as representatives of the named concerns, will attend the class in salesmanship and have all their expenses paid. It is expected that nearly 150 will be in attendance at the session. The special speaker at the sessions will be William Maxwell, vice-president of the Edison Co. Either Mr. Silliman or some other representative of the Pardee-Ellenberger Co. will take part in the daily conferences.

Frederick Silliman, head of the Pardee-Ellenberger Co., went over to New York the first of the month to meet his son, Horace Silliman, who was coming home from England, where he is engaged in business. Mr. Silliman at the beginning of the year gave up the storehouse at New Haven, Conn., and removed the Edison merchandise to this city.

Discontinues Making Talking Machines

The Haywood-Wakefield Co., which is known the world over for its rattan furniture, has discontinued making talking machines, some hand-some models of which now adorn the living-rooms of many exclusive homes. Accordingly, the Shepard Stores in this city have been advertising a sale of these machines at less than half price and in the display in the daily papers it is stated "The most remarkable selling of phonographs Boston has ever seen is about to become a matter of history."

Vigorous Cheney Campaign

A Boston visitor for several days has been C. E. Sanders, general sales manager of the Cheney line, which is now handled for the New England territory by Stephen A. Colahan, whose headquarters are at 196 Boylston street. Mr. Sanders went over the situation carefully with Mr. Colahan and plans were made to start in upon a vigorous advertising campaign. Mr. Sanders expressed himself as well satisfied at the

Kenneth E. Reed on the Go

Kenneth E. Reed, the hustling wholesale Victor representative for the M. Steinert & Sons Co., is here, there and everywhere these days, as he pushes the Victor product among the dealers. A day or two ago he hustled over to several central Massachusetts towns and was accompanied by Robert Steinert, of the Arch street headquarters, and Jerome Murphy and E. T. P. Jenks, of the Boylston street Steinert house.

Jerome Murphy Honored

The mention of Jerome Murphy's name reminds one to speak enthusiastically of his long service with the Steinert Co., and his twenty-fifth year with this concern was fittingly observed the middle of January when a dinner was tendered him at the Hotel Brunswick. Alexander Steinert sat at the head of the table, and all the Steinert staff were present. Mr. Steinert, by way of giving adequate expression to his own appreciation of Mr. Murphy's services, presented him with a handsome silver service, while from his associates in the business Mr. Murphy received a beautiful gold watch.

GRANBY SALES OFFICES IN BOSTON

Located at 21 West Street, With E. F. Carson, Assistant General Manager, in Charge

BOSTON, MASS., January 27.—The general sales offices of the Granby Phonograph Corp., formerly located in Norfolk, Va., are now located at 21 West street, this city. Edward F. Carson, assistant general manager of the Granby Phonograph Corp., in commenting upon this move, stated: "For a long time the company has felt that it was somewhat handicapped by operating from a general sales office located so far South. We believe that the big talking machine field is to be found in the section of the country north of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi. The large portion of the Granby business was located in the eastern part of this territory, so it was natural that in looking for new headquarters the selection should have fallen upon Boston."

To move the offices of a corporation from one city to another is always a serious matter, but the Granby move was carried out without a hitch and the business which closed on Saturday, January 14, in Norfolk was continued Monday, January 16, in Boston. The new quarters of the company are more commodious than the old and have the facilities for caring for the steadily growing business of the company.

Edward F. Carson, who for the past eight months has been assistant general manager of the company, will continue in that work in Boston. He will reside in Virginia, however, and make frequent visits to Boston to direct the work.

The executive offices of the company will continue as heretofore in Norfolk, with H. H. Schumaker, general manager of the company, in charge.

The factory will remain as heretofore in Newport News. Owing to the rapid increase in the Granby business, elaborate plans have been completed for increasing the size of the factory and its ability for handling increased production, which the business will undoubtedly call for during the year 1922.

RADIO FANS ENJOY GUEST'S POEMS

Radio Concert Featuring Edgar A. Guest's Verses Heard by Many in Coast States

They are picking Edgar A. Guest's verse out of the air now. In January the Victor Talking Machine Co. released the first of a series of Guest records, on which was recorded the poet's own voice reciting three of his poems, "It Couldn't Be Done," "Ma and the Auto" and "Wait Till Your Pa Comes Home."

Early in January Mr. Guest received a letter from G. E. Reynolds, editor of the Stockton Record, in which he said: "This evening, January 3, we are going to radiate the sound of your voice throughout the West. The Stockton Record has installed one of the most powerful radio outfits on the Pacific Coast. The radiophone room is located on the third floor of the Record Building and the aerial is placed on the roof. Every afternoon from 4 to 4.30 o'clock we give a half hour of news service. Every Tuesday and Friday evenings from 8 to 9 o'clock and every Sunday afternoon from 2 to 3 we give a concert, usually from talking machine records, but frequently by well-known artists.

"Splendid reports come to us from wireless enthusiasts who have been 'listening in' at distant points. They tell us that we are very Q. S. A. (loud and clear) at points as far distant as Vancouver, Los Angeles, San Diego, Yuma, Denver, Salt Lake, Seattle and Walla Walla, Wash., and Portland, Ore. So, you see, you will have quite an 'extended' audience when your voice goes out through the ether to-night."

On the same day Mr. Guest received a report from Radio 7 Z U, at Polytechnic, Montana, which said: "We heard your voice Q. S. A. (loud and clear) here about 10 o'clock to-night (January 3). Copied your poems O. K. but was not sure of call letter. Please verify this and send us your story. Did you use a portable wireless telephone?"

Another operator, Hubert H. Coate, 18 James street, Santa Cruz, Cal., wrote: "Was tuning up for a local concert and accidentally ran onto you about 375 meters at 8:50 p. m., January 3 (San Francisco time). Heard last part of poem, but lost you about 9 p. m. You were very Q. S. A. but faded out at 9 p. m. I was using a single detector tube and honeycombs when I picked you up."

All of this was a complete surprise to "The Poet That All America Reads." And that's how it happens they are picking Edgar Guest's poems out of the air.

G. D. Lake House of Music, of New York City, Opens Attractive Store in New Rochelle

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., February 6.—The G. D. Lake House of Music, of New York City, opened an attractive branch store at 316 North avenue here last week. The new branch is completely equipped with all modern improvements, including record demonstration booths, record racks, service counter and a spacious talking machine display room. A complete stock of Vocalion, Sonora, Columbia and Brunswick machines is handled. The main store of this concern is located at 1487 Madison avenue, New York City. Besides talking machines and records musical instruments and accessories are handled.

TALKER GUIDES LONDON CROWDS

Reinforced Tones of Talking Machine Warn Passengers on Underground to Hustle

According to reports from London, England, the citizens of that city not only enjoy the best of music in their homes through the medium of talking machines but even have the talking machine in the underground railway to admonish them to "step lively" while on the escalator. The apparatus used is known as the Stentorphone and is the adaptation of a device for reinforcing and strengthening the tone given out by the ordinary talking machine record, through the medium of a strong blast of air produced by a special blower.

The Stentorphone has been used to some extent in providing talking machine music of sufficient volume to fill a large ballroom with dance music or to provide music for theatres, but the machines used in the underground are provided with repeating attachments so that they may constantly reiterate the warning, "Step lively." It is understood that the mechanical announcer is quite as effective as the brass-throated guard who formerly held sway.

Movement of Machines and Records Active in Comparison With Previous Months—Reduction in Record Prices Has Stimulated Trade

MILWAUKEE, Wis., February 7.—One of the outstanding features of business in the last two or three weeks has been the spurt experienced in the call for records under the stimulation of reductions in prices. The announcement that record lists have come back to the pre-war basis seemed to strike immediately a most responsive chord in the minds of the public, for sales at once showed a healthy increase, which is being sustained well.

The movement of instruments naturally is not active in comparison with the previous two or three months, when the holiday shopping season, as usual, brought sales to the highest point of the year. Nevertheless, retail dealers express themselves as gratified over the amount of business that has come their way and they look for a generous increase in thirty to sixty days, when the Easter holidays again will provide the occasion for vigorous selling campaigns.

The wholesale and manufacturing trade is coming forward nicely, being favored with moderate orders since the beginning of the new year to replenish stocks brought to a low level by holiday demand. January and February always are "off-peak" months so far as retail trade is concerned, but the wholesale trade is kept fairly busy filling in broken lines and otherwise assisting dealers in readjusting stocks.

Strong Record Demand Reported

"Our business in records is excellent and we cannot complain about the state of demand for instruments," said Harry A. Goldsmith, secretary of the Badger Talking Machine Co., Victor jobber. "The return of pre-war list prices on records has been a material help, although we have been doing an active business for a long time. Our dealers are keeping very busy selling records, especially to people who probably purchased their first machines at the recent holiday time and therefore are buying new records right along. The outlook is good and we look for an excellent year's business all through 1922. General business conditions are picking up nicely and all musical merchandise seems destined for improvement."

Lively Business at Columbia Branch

Robert H. Walley, wholesale representative of the Columbia, with headquarters at 1575 Third street, is all smiles due to the active state of business in Grafonolas and Columbia records. Since prices of records went back to pre-war levels Mr. Walley had experienced considerable difficulty in keeping his territory in eastern Wisconsin supplied adequately and back orders have recently been increasing, more and more. Mr. Walley has done some splendid promotional work in this district in the last two years, and is now reaping the actual results of his vigorous efforts.

Starr Publicity Pleases Dealers

The Hoeffler Piano Mfg. Co., distributor of the Starr phonograph and Gennett records, is meeting with a good response to its active solicitation for new business and its established dealers are doing effective work as well in this territory.

The high grade of advertising being done nationally by the Starr industries of Richmond, Ind., has aroused an exceptional interest in merchants to the extent of inducing their voluntary requests for franchises.

An Excellent Edison Demand

Edison dealers in Wisconsin and upper Michigan are favoring the Phonograph Co. of Wisconsin with a fine run of orders for records and instruments as well.

New Brunswick Dealers

The Brunswick, which has been "going strong" for more than a year, is establishing new marks every month, and Thomas I. Kidd, manager of the local branch of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., says it looks as if there were no more "seasons" in Brunswick trade, for one day is as good as another with respect to the orders coming from the field organization. In Milwaukee the Brunswick has gained a new foothold in the downtown business district by the appointment of the Lyric Music Co., 86-88 Wisconsin street, as an accredited dealer. The Lyric house is pushing its new line in a most conspicuous manner and during the first week in February devoted its entire display window to a striking trim featuring the Brunswick No. 2180 record "Stealing" and "Ty-Tec." This was designed and executed by Mrs. J. Rousellot, wife of the head of the company, who has gained a national reputation for her window trims featuring pianos, small goods, music rolls and now merits new laurels for her record trim.

FENTON MFG. CO. NOW ORGANIZED

New Company With Factory at Fenton, Mich., Will Make Automatic Stop and Repeater—C. C. Brooks Elected General Manager—Edwin O. Klemm Appointed Consulting Engineer

The Fenton Mfg. Co., Fenton, Mich., was recently organized to manufacture and sell the devices covered by the Brooks-Klemm patents, and two of these devices are now being placed on the market. One of these is a simple stop that sets automatically and has only two working parts. This stop is furnished to the brake on either the turntable or governor disc, and also acts as a switch for machines having electric motors.

The other device consists of an automatic repeater, stop and tone arm combined that has been on the market for the past five years as part of the equipment of the Brooks phonographs made at Saginaw, Mich. During the past year the repeater has been redesigned and improved, so that it may be attached to any make or style of cabinet, taking the place of the usual tone arm. It sets automatically to any size record, the operator simply placing the needle on the record and setting a dial for the number of times the record is to be repeated. The record may be played continually or any desired number of times. It will replay any part of the record, stopping automatically when through and with the tone arm and needle in an elevated position over the record in order to make record changing easy. The company states that many manufacturers of talking machines are equipping their lines with this device.

C. C. Brooks, who is well known to the talking machine industry, has been elected vice-president and general manager of the Fenton Mfg. Co. Mr. Brooks was for many years president and general manager of the Brooks Mfg. Co., and while associated with the latter concern brought out the Brooks automatic repeating phonograph.

Edwin O. Klemm has disposed of his phonograph business at Dayton, O., and accepted a position as consulting engineer of the Fenton Mfg. Co. Mr. Klemm has been identified with the talking machine industry for many years, and has to his credit a number of important patents in this field.

ROOS BROS. FORM NEW COMPANY

They both left for the Coast this week, and plan to visit several important trade centers en route for the Coast.

TWO NEW SONORA PERIOD MODELS

The Improved Pembroke and the New Lafayette Destined to Make a Wide Appeal to Buyers

This month the Sonora Phonograph Co., Inc., is introducing the improved Pembroke and the new Lafayette, each the fullest expression of Sonora quality in tone, beauty of finish and mechanical perfection. Both are priced at $175, well within the reach of people of modest income, who, nevertheless, take real pride in the appearance of their home.

The Sonora Hepplewhite Pembroke (improved) is one of the finest achievements in period model design ever created by Sonora's artisans and cabinetmakers. A period phonograph of this type will appeal particularly to those desiring an instrument of small proportions, who wish something other than the ordinary conventional upright model. Space is provided in this instrument for record albums.

Sonora Pembroke

The Lafayette is a still further step forward in period phonograph evolution. In its elegance there is that simplicity of line that bespeaks the utmost of aristocratic taste. The Sonora Lafayette will undoubtedly prove a big seller among those who desire a console phonograph of exclusive design at a moderate price.

The Sonora Phonograph Co. was among the first manufacturers to put out an instrument in period cabinets. The company states that the production of new period models of medium price has been made necessary by the large and increasing vogue for phonographs of period design.

The talking machine and record department of the Brasted & Jeffers music store is now in charge of Miss Alice Doty.

Success often brings poise, but more often it brings avoirdupois.

OPPORTUNITY IS KNOCKING!!

If there ever was a time for Victor dealers to capitalize an incident, the time is right now—this very moment.

The new list prices of Victor Black Label Records begin a new era of added profits for energetic Victor dealers. This downward revision will push your sales more than ever, will make your store the center of attraction, and certainly, the "talk of the town."

An extensive advertising campaign is now under way which will reach every city, town and hamlet in the country. This publicity is going to work to the benefit of Victor dealers to the fullest extent, but only if they tie up with the general scheme.

Circularize your customers and prospective buyers—advertise liberally in your local papers—announce by showcards and billboards—use every practical means so that the public may know of the benefits of the new prices.

Do this and your 1922 sales, likewise your profits, will far outdistance your previous top-notch records. Opportunity is there for every Victor dealer. Open up the door!!

AKRON, O.

Business Favorably Affected by Bettered Industrial Conditions—Good January Sales

AKRON, O., February 6.—The advent of February brings the talking machine industry of the Akron district into what many believe to be the most enviable position of any industry—showing a gain during 1921 over the volume of 1920 business. Though total figures are not yet available dealers assert that the year's business will exceed the highest expectations of a few months ago. Dealers who failed to get the required quota of machines for the Christmas trade report that they still have orders unfilled.

Industrially Akron is showing gradual improvement and music dealers say that the increased factory operations are beginning to reflect in their business. Collections are somewhat better and sales for January were in excess of those for the corresponding month a year ago.

Victor business was very satisfactory during January, according to Earl Poling, a member of the firm of Windsor Poling Co. Many machines were moved during the month and the sale of records was surprising. He said he views the future very optimistically and believes that Spring will see much activity in the talking machine industry locally.

E. G. Rockwell, musical instrument and small goods dealer, reports that January business was beyond his expectations. Violins, he says, have been the mainstay of the business, and small goods, especially orchestra accessories, have been exceptionally good for several weeks.

The talking machine department of the A. B. Smith Piano Co. experienced an active month in January, according to Ernest Smith, manager of this store. He says that Sonora sales were more than the month's quota and that records made a big gain. The record and player roll department, which had been located in the rear of the store, has been moved to the front of the main floor.

George S. Dales, head of the George S. Dales Co., Victor dealer, is spending several weeks with his family in Basso, Fla. Ray Porter, general manager of the store, is also in the South with the Dales family and will return to Akron within a week. Mr. Dales expects to remain South until April 1.

The talking machine department of the Dales store experienced a very satisfactory month, according to A. E. Jones, now in charge of this rapidly developing business.

MICE HELP RECORD DISPLAY

South Bend Talking Machine Store Finds New Way of Attracting Attention

SOUTH BEND, IND., February 6.—Curious crowds were attracted to the large show window of the Elbel Bros. music store several days by the antics of two ordinary but extremely active mice which found evident pleasure in operating a phonograph record that had been placed at an angle on a pivot so that it revolved easily. To all appearances the mice discovered and enjoyed the experience of hopping on the record and making it revolve by racing around its edge.

The advertising value of the stunt was greatly enhanced when some humane persons reported to the Humane Society that the mice were being cruelly treated because of some mechanical device which made it necessary for them to run on the phonograph record whether they wished to run or not. A representative of the Humane Society learned, on investigation, that no mechanical device was used to operate the record and that it revolved only at the will of the sportive mice. The charges of cruelty fell flat and the mice spent several joyous days entertaining the crowds gathered to watch them.

OKEH DEALER USES NEW DISPLAYS

Among the many Okeh dealers who are getting splendid results from the new series of window displays introduced recently by the General Phonograph Corp. is the Melodyland Music Shop, of Belleville, N. J. This dealer featured the January display to excellent advantage, and not only obtained good-sized direct results from the advertising but also received valuable indirect publicity.

Two selections that are also coming in for their share of commendations are "Blue Danube Blues" and "Ka-Lu-A," numbers recorded from "Good Morning, Dearie," now playing at the Globe. These selections are played during the period between the acts.

INTERCHANGEABLE MILEAGE BOOKS

Bill to Provide for the Issuance of Mileage Books for Convenience of Travelers Introduced in House of Representatives

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 6.—Interchangeable mileage books, good on any railroad in the country, are provided for in a bill which has just been passed by the House of Representatives.

The measure directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to order all carriers to issue mileage books of not less than 1,000 nor more than 5,000 miles. Before issuing this order, however, the Commission is to promulgate regulations surrounding the use of such mileage, prescribing whether the tickets are to be transferable or not, and, if not, what identification may be required, and setting forth the baggage privileges to which lawful holders of such tickets are entitled.

The Commission will also have authority to set the rate of fare to be charged for such mileage books.

The Trade in PHILADELPHIA and LOCALITY

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., February 6.—Talking machine business in Philadelphia was quite satisfactory in the month just closed. The first week of January there was much activity, and then came a lull. The dealers did not understand why and felt that another period of dullness was coming, but from the middle of the month on there was a gradual increase in business and the trade entered February with sales steady and with signs pointing to a very good Spring business.

There were not nearly as many changes in January as members of the trade had expected, for the rumor-monger had been busy about the financial affairs of some small concerns. Nothing occurred, however, and the only important change of the month was that the Philadelphia jobbers of the Victor got together and purchased the business of the late George D. Ornstein from his widow, thereby reducing the Philadelphia Victor jobberships to five.

New Vocalion Jobber Appointed

Another important announcement of the month is that the Vocalion Co. has found a new distributor here in the Lincoln Business Bureau, located at 1011 Race street. This business concern operates establishments in Philadelphia, Washington and Newark, N. J., but the handling of the Vocalion machine and records will be confined to the Philadelphia store, with a wide territory, including the eastern part of Pennsylvania, southern part of New Jersey and Delaware. Oscar W. Ray, the general manager of the Vocalion Co., was in Philadelphia last week to complete the arrangements, and the firm is now going ahead to give this fine musical instrument the best possible recognition in this territory. It has already gotten in a number of machines and quite a large stock of records. The Philadelphia Show Case Co., which was the former Vocalion distributor here, has removed all its stock still unsold to the new headquarters, and the Lincoln Co. has already done considerable business in the supplying of Vocalion records.

The Vocalion will be given adequate space in the firm's building at 1011, which is now taken up almost entirely by office furniture, and B. H. Rogers, the treasurer of the Lincoln Co., will be in charge of the Vocalion jobbership. F. S. Lincoln is the president of the company and is in charge of the Washington store and resides in the Capital City.

Blake & Burkart Open New Store

Blake & Burkart opened their new store, 20 South Tenth street, on Monday of this week, and they have it fixed up in an unusually attractive way. It looks as if they were bound to do a good business there, and they have the genial Mr. Elton in charge. There are two large display windows, one of which they are using at present to display a big Red record advertising the Vocalion, surrounded by electric lights.

Doing Well With the Starr Line

The Witlin Musical Instrument Co., 807 Chestnut street, has very fine quarters in the I. Press Building, where it handles the Starr pianos and phonographs and the Gennett records. It has been doing a splendid business in both lines and has very fine offices and sample rooms at the address stated, with a large warehouse at 243 Church street.

The Witlin Co. had a very good year last year, much better than was expected. For a considerable time this concern was merely a distributor, but last Fall it also entered the retail field. Among some of the leading firms here with whom it does business are the Grand Union Piano Co., of 853 East Allegheny avenue; Walter A. Williams, 1410 Porter street, and George B. Davis, 3930 Lancaster avenue. This firm handles the Starr piano, but many of our leading dealers here handle the Gennett records. The head of the firm is Benjamin Witlin. The local firm was recently visited by Fred Gennett, secretary of the Starr Piano Co.

Will Occupy Ornstein Quarters

The stock of the late George D. Ornstein Co., which was recently purchased by the five Philadelphia Victor jobbers, Louis Buehn & Co., the Penn Phonograph Co., C. J. Heppe & Son, H. A. Weymann & Son and the Talking Machine Co., is being transferred to these various houses from the late Ornstein headquarters, 1025 Arch street, which have been leased by the distributing department of the Talking Machine Co., which will shortly move to this address from its present address at 1933 Market street. Harry A. Ellis will be in charge of the distribution of the Victor product of the Talking Machine Co. He has long been connected with this company as general manager, with offices at the Thirteenth and Chestnut streets store, but will move to the Arch street address, and John A. Snyder, long connected with the Talking Machine Co., will be in charge of the Chestnut street main retail store.

why he made that rapid rise at the Shubert Theatre in the "Greenwich Village Follies of 1921." All Columbia dealers in Philadelphia have been provided with streamers announcing Ted Lewis, and four dealers, Starr & Moss, Ross' Frankford Music Shop, Meyers F. Hall and O'Halloran, have purchased space in the program as a further tie-up. The sales of Ted Lewis recordings are very gratifying.

A Live-wire Columbia Dealer

Here is a story of a real, live-wire Columbia dealer: George Ross, of the Frankford Music Store, decided to run a "Ton Sale" of Columbia Record No. A-3512. He purchased a large quantity and sent out over his mailing list an announcement that he had a ton of "Leave Me With a Smile" records. His customers started coming in and he started selling records.

One Italian who could not read English came and wanted to know what it was all about. He was told that this record was for sale. The Italian confessed that he would like the record but had no phonograph on which to play it. With this information as a cue Mr. Ross sold the Italian an F-2 Grafonola.

However, Mr. Ross' customers continued to come in and, due to a short shipment of A-3512, he could not fill all the orders, so Mr. Ross immediately asked for another shipment of that record, and when he got it another Grafonola was sent out informing those who were disappointed when his first shipment ran out that they could now purchase this record at the Frankford Music Store. The results from the second Grafonola were equally as great as the first one.

Brunswick Dealers Report Progress

The Philadelphia Brunswick distributor, R. M. Nelson, has been paying an extended visit to the trade throughout Pennsylvania and has returned with the opinion that everything is going well with the Brunswick in this district. Nearly all of the Brunswick firms complained to him of a shortage of stock, but several carloads have just arrived in Philadelphia and Mr. Nelson hopes to even them up in such a way that the dealers will have little of which to complain at present.

Mr. Nelson says: "The McWilliams Stores' manager in Wilkes-Barre states that December business was far beyond expectations, both in Wilkes-Barre and Nanticoke, and that business is continuing very good in both places. At the Leader Store in Bloomsburg business was reported as quite satisfactory; B. W. Leiby, who opened a Brunswick department in Danville in December, said that he had sold out everything he had in the way of machines in December and that he is having a most satisfactory business in records. The Snyder Service Store at Sunbury is operating an exclusive Brunswick department and states that the only thing that keeps it from doing a very big business is the shortage of Brunswick merchandise. The Reigle Store and Yohn Bros., of Harrisburg, both report having had a large post-holiday business, but could have done a lot more if they had been able to get the goods. The Watt & Shand phonograph department at Lancaster, under the able management of W. R. McAlister, closed a most successful year, and the Brunswick Music Hall, of Scranton, where an exclusive Brunswick department was opened late in the Fall, reports having had a wonderful business."

Among the recent Brunswick visitors were: George H. Eldridge, of Pitman Grove, N. J.; Mr. Zerker, of the Regal Store of Hamburg and York, Pa., and J. I. Monroe, of the Brunswick Shop, Williamsport.

Optimistic Over the Pathé

O. M. Kiess, the new Pathé distributor here, is bending every effort to get things back to normal again and is highly gratified with the encouraging letters that his firm has been receiving from dealers who are entering into the sales of the Pathé with renewed energy. He states: "Business is progressing right along and things are looking better to us from day to day. There seems to be no question but that there will be an early reorganization of the Pathé Co. and we expect business to come along better in 1922 than ever before. The big price reductions that went into effect last December have moved immense quantities of merchandise and I believe things are going to get better right along."

Some Recent Callers on Buehn Co.

Louis Buehn & Co. are well satisfied with the volume of business they were able to do in January and are looking to this month with confidence. Among the recent Buehn visitors here were: Mr. Coles, from the Ventnor Pharmacy, Ventnor, N. J.; A. Paul Yerger, Soudertown, Pa.; Mr. Moore, of the Johnston Co., Lancaster, Pa.; Paul Erhardt, Salem, N. J.; M. J. Malarkey, Pottsville, Pa.; Mr. Loser, of the Miller Piano Co., Lebanon, Pa.; Leon Wittig, of the Wittig Piano Co., Reading, and I. C. Kennaro, Phoenixville, Pa.

Entertain Principals and Teachers

The second of a series of demonstrations given to the representative teachers, principals, etc., of Philadelphia schools and vicinity, in the Model Shop, on Music Appreciation was given January 14. The teachers were very enthusiastic over the demonstration, requesting that Miss Martin, the educational representative, continue to give such demonstrations. The second demonstration had twice the attendance of the first, which was extremely good encouragement.

During the week starting January 16 the local Columbia branch had the use of a display window in the Philadelphia Inquirer Building at Twelfth and Market streets, where at least 100,000 people pass daily. There was an attractive young lady in the window demonstrating the exclusive features of the Grafonola in a very

Recent visitors to the Columbia branch here were: W. B. Hill, Pottsville, Pa.; S. H. Sortman, Newark, Del.; J. A. Wuchter, Allentown, Pa.; O. K. Fink, Pottstown, Pa.; H. B. Newkirk, Salem, N. J.; L. The Music Shop Has Entire Building

The Music Shop, talking machine and Okeh record dealer, of this city, has found 1921 business very good with every evidence of the new year surpassing it. L. P. Morsbach, proprietor of the shop, has announced that he has bought the entire building where the shop is now located, at 1620 West Passyunk avenue, and extensive alterations are planned to be made in the Spring, thereby providing greatly increased and needed facilities.

Doing a Large Okeh Business

The Okeh distributing business of A. J. Heath & Co., in this city, is reported to have opened the new year well. C. A. Malliet, who is now in charge of the company, is energetically planning for a big year. A. J. Heath, formerly in charge and who recently severed his connections with the company, is a frequent visitor at the headquarters, where he is placing his experience at the disposal of the new management.

Alterations at F. A. North & Co.

F. A. North & Co. have decided to bring their talking machine department from the mezzanine gallery, in which it has been housed since they entered this line of the business, to the first floor, and they have given the contract to the Unit Construction Co. to build them a series of booths and record racks. The music roll department of the firm will be moved to the present talking machine department.

Looks for an Increasing Business

Everybody's Talking Machine Co. reports having a very fair business since the first of the year and it is looking for it to increase right along. Among recent visitors were Louis Unger, of the Brilliantone Co., and A. B. Schechter, of the General Phonograph Corp.

W. W. Weymann Pleased With Outlook

W. W. Weymann, head of H. A. Weymann & Son, says that the outlook for an increase in business is decidedly promising. He said: "Regarding the talking machine business, the demand from our dealers for the February list of Victor records shows a very great increase over last year's February list, and orders for stock records likewise show a decided improvement. We are taking orders from our dealers for the new art model Victrolas and we will begin making shipments as soon as the machines are received from the Victor Co."

"We received in this morning's mail a number of reorders from our dealers for the new Motrola, which is proving a ready seller wherever it is being featured. In the Q R S roll section of our business some very good numbers have just been received and this department shows a continued increase in sales."

M. Rotter, of Bridgeport, Conn., dealer in talking machines and toys in that city, has been declared bankrupt.

CLOSE OUT ORNSTEIN CO. BUSINESS

Other Victor Jobbers in Philadelphia Take Over Assets and Stock of That Company Following Recent Death of Geo. D. Ornstein

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 3.—It having been decided to discontinue the business of the George D. Ornstein Co., Victor wholesaler of this city, following the recent death of George D. Ornstein, arrangements were made whereby the other Victor wholesalers of this city purchased the assets and stock of the company, each wholesaler taking a proportionate share of the property. The move of the jobbers was in line with the desire of Mrs. Elsie T. Ornstein, the surviving partner, to be relieved of the burden of the business, as set forth in a letter to the trade, under date of January 21.

The work of inventorying the stock was a trying task and much credit is due to Louis Buehn, president of the Louis Buehn Co., local Victor wholesaler, and also president of the National Association of Talking Machine Jobbers, for his successful efforts as representative for the other Philadelphia jobbers in the handling of the details of the matter.

The distributors participating in the purchase of the Ornstein stock were: The Louis Buehn Co., Inc.; Penn Phonograph Co., Inc.; H. A. Weymann & Son, Inc.; C. J. Heppé & Son and the Talking Machine Co. of Philadelphia.

REMINGTON STOCKHOLDERS MEET

Reconstruction of the Business Is Favored, but No Definite Action Taken—To Meet Again in New York City at Early Date

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 1.—A meeting of the stockholders of the Remington Phonograph Corp. was held at a local hotel in this city yesterday. This corporation was placed in the hands of a receiver in equity on December 1 of last year and at the instigation of the officers of the company an unofficial meeting of the stockholders was previously held on December 13. At that meeting a special committee was appointed to make the necessary investigation and the reports of this committee were rendered at the meeting yesterday.

It was stated by a representative of the company that although the company's by-laws do not provide for the holding of meetings outside the State of New York the directors, in response to a request from the committee and also due to the fact that the majority of the stockholders are residents of Philadelphia and places adjacent thereto, amended the by-laws for the holding of the stockholders' special meeting on January 30 in Philadelphia. Lengthy parliamentary debate delayed the development of plans for the future. James S. Holmes, vice-president of the Remington Phonograph Corp., stated that the stock represented in person and by proxy was largely in favor of a reconstruction of the business, but the meeting was adjourned without definite action being taken. Mr. Holmes states that the officers will promptly place the matter before the stockholders again at a meeting to be called in New York City and has full hopes for the continuance of the business with added capital.

TO INCREASE MANUFACTURING PLANT

Business of the National Decalcomania Co. Steadily Expanding—Products Grow in Favor

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 9.—The need for increased facilities is again apparent in the business of the National Decalcomania Co., of this city. When the present management took over this business some four years ago only about one-third of the present plant was used. Under the management of George C. Grunewald the business of this company has grown steadily. During this period of time adjoining real estate has been acquired and additional buildings erected. However, this space is again insufficient for the steadily growing business of this company. Additional presses are needed, but there is no floor space for them. Accordingly, it is the plan of the company to erect additional buildings on adjoining property which they own in the near future. The National Decalcomania Co. produces decalcomania for all conceivable purposes. The department devoted to talking machine decalcomania is busy and the products of this company are being used for this purpose all over the country. There is also a good foreign demand.

Observe how all passionate language does of itself become musical, with a finer music than the mere accent; the speech of a man even in zealous anger becomes a chant, a song.—Carlyle.

KANSAS CITY

Business Decidedly Improved—Prospects Grow Brighter—Stocks Are Low—Higher Priced Talking Machines and Records Have the Call

KANSAS CITY, Mo., February 6.—January has been a record month in the sale of records, the jobbers and the dealers report, in the Kansas City territory. This is partly accounted for on the ground that the month followed a big month in the sale of machines; that the new records for the month have been unusually attractive; that the prices have been reduced, and that the public is buying more intelligently and systematically than in the past. The sale of machines has been good in the higher-priced models in the cities and dealers are stocking up on all classes of machines, following the cleaning-out sales of December. In some cases there has been activity in the advance orders for March and April delivery. Business is considered good in contrast with this time last year, when the dealers were overstocked, owing to the failure of the holiday sales and the slump in all kinds of buying that was going on. Dealers to-day, on the other hand, are optimistic and are not only doing a good business now but are looking confidently forward to an extra-good year, with a satisfactory turnover.

Brunswick Console Is Popular

F. M. Briggs, of the Brunswick, says that the Stratford console at $300 is holding up as the best seller and that the demand is good and constant. The demand in certain lines is in advance of the factory output. F. W. Cooper, factory representative, was in Kansas City recently and reports that the factory is working full force and full time, but has not been able to meet the demand. Reports from over the territory are to the effect that the stocks are lower than at any previous time, and orders to fill up the stocks are coming in. Dealers are not ordering beyond their immediate needs, however. The Brunswick branch here will add a new salesman soon to travel this territory.

The business of the local Brunswick shop in Kansas City has been better in December and January than in either 1919 or 1920, or January, 1921. The orders for records indicate that there is a dance craze on just now and there are an unusually large number of orders for "Wabash Blues" and some of the newer favorites. "Leave Me With a Smile," especially, is one of the biggest hits of the day.

To Attend Edison Jobbers' Convention

M. M. Blackman, manager of the Phonograph Co., of Kansas City, will attend the conference of jobbers at New York in February and take part in the celebration of Mr. Edison's birthday. While Mr. Blackman usually has some sort of a drive for business on, he is now waiting for this conference to decide on the plan of sales campaign for 1922. The sale of records in January is reported good, the new Re-creations released are meeting with exceptional favor.

Mr. Blackman is regretting that the Chicago office is taking away his assistant, N. A. Bailey, who becomes the assistant of C. E. Goodwin. The larger opportunity offered Mr. Bailey in the Chicago office has been earned by persistent and intelligent efforts that are highly appreciated.

Awaiting the New Victrola Models

Arthur A. Trostler, of the Schmelzer Co., Victor wholesaler, says that everything looks good to him. He says that the record sales for January have been phenomenal; that the dealers are filling up after a good holiday trade, and that the difference between now and a year ago is very marked. Then they were pretty blue, because they were left with large stocks on hand and little prospects of selling them. To-day they have very little stock on hand and there is every reason to hope for a good year. January business, both in records and in machines, has been good, and the general attitude of the dealers is very optimistic. The new console models of the Victor promise to be popular with the trade. Orders are coming in and the comments that have been received from dealers who have not yet ordered show appreciation of the models themselves and of the company for furnishing them to the trade. Mr. Trostler expects soon to be able to announce a successor to D. R. Walsh, who was the head of the educational department of the Schmelzer Victor department and who resigned some months ago.

Strong Columbia Advertising

Mr. Johnson, of the Columbia branch, is calling attention to the aggressive advertising policy that is being carried out in this territory in local papers and reports that it is bearing rich fruit in sales of both records and machines.

New Post for Charles R. Lee

Charles R. Lee, who has been the manager of the Edison Shop in Kansas City, has become the manager of the Victor department of the Jones Stores Co. This department had an unusually large business during the holidays and was holding up well in January. An unusual opportunity for the development of a big business is offered to Mr. Lee with the Jones Stores.

Demand for the Better Records

H. J. Ivey, manager of the Victor department of the Peck Dry Goods Co., is calling attention to the high grade of business that is being done this month. He says that the sales of records have run to the Red Seals and that the ordinary records are not nearly so much called for now as during the holidays. Asked for an explanation of the fact, he ventured the opinion that the buyers now were the real lovers of music who bought persistently throughout the year and not those who bought thoughtlessly, to a large degree, just before the holidays. He sees in this feature of the trade an encouraging omen and thinks that it speaks well for a fine business throughout the year. He also spoke of the fact that the sales had been mostly of machines which were priced above $150 rather than below that sum. This corresponds, in a way, with the feature in the sales of pianos, where the high-grade instruments are selling unusually well and the sale of the lower-priced instruments is not so good.

M. C. Schoenly to Resign

M. C. Schoenly, manager of the wholesale Victor department of the J. W. Jenkins' Sons Co., reports that the most optimistic letters are coming from over the territory as to the closing up of the year that has passed and the opening of the new year. The dealers have taken advantage of the big advertising campaigns of the Victor and have put things over in a very satisfactory manner. He thinks that the large advertising that has been done during the dull months of 1921 will bear fruit in a very large way in 1922. Dealers visiting the wholesale department, as well as those writing in, are expressing their confidence in the future. The reports that are coming in from the field men are to the same effect.

Mr. Schoenly, who has made an enviable sales record with the Jenkins Co. during the hardest of hard years, will soon sever his connection with that company. He is not now ready to announce his future connection. The date of his closing with the Jenkins Co. will depend in part upon the time that company can provide a successor.

Secures the Victor Agency

The Paul Music Co. has secured the Victor agency heretofore held by the Boyce Voice Shop and has purchased the stock of records and machines. The removal of the stock took place on February 1 and this made things pretty busy at the Paul shop. This company has been an exclusive Columbia shop and the adding of the Victor line is considered by the management as a very valuable addition. The Paul shop is located between two of the most popular picture shows in the city, on one of the busiest streets, and close to some of the leading hotels. During the evening hours the shop enjoys a very satisfactory trade, not only from those who come to the theatres, but from the transient trade stopping at the hotels. Some very attractive show windows play an important part in attracting the trade.

The Gennett Record Demand

The Starr Piano Co. reports a very large sale on its Gennett records. They have been introduced to the public here by an aggressive campaign of advertising featuring the pre-war price at which they have been offered. The company management reports that the repeat orders from persons who were induced to buy on account of the price and publicity have been most gratifying. This popularity makes them look forward to increasing sales during the year.

Happy Six Scheduled to Appear

The Happy Six Dance organization has made several bookings for appearances in the Kansas City territory, and will appear under the auspices of local Columbia dealers in Topeka, Kans., Herrington, Kans., and Atchison, Kans., in the very near future. Probably appearances will be scheduled in other towns of the territory through the Columbia dealers, and in the three towns mentioned above considerable enthusiasm is being worked up and dealers anticipate a big increase in Happy Six Columbia records as a result of the appearances.

J. W. Buck, vice-president, and R. V. Brown, president, of the Rorabaugh-Brown Dry Goods Co., Wichita and Oklahoma City, stopped off in Kansas City on their way back from a buying trip in New York City, and are pleasingly optimistic about business prospects for this year.

S. Brenner, formerly connected with the Brenner Furniture Co., of this city, will open an exclusive Grafonola Shop at 718 Minnesota street within a few days. Mr. Brenner is intensely enthusiastic about his opening and expects to do a splendid Grafonola and Columbia record business during 1922.

Several new appearances of Barbara Maurel, an exclusive Columbia artist, have been scheduled for the Kansas City territory, and Columbia dealers in the towns where these appearances will be have arranged splendid tie-up so as to secure all of the publicity and Columbia record business possible through Barbara Maurel appearances.

Mr. Waldo, of Ross & Waldo, Ellis, Kans., exclusive Columbia dealers, was in town this week to purchase his Spring stock of Grafonolas and Columbia records, and to attend the hardware convention.

The M. T. Abernathy Music Co., of Independence, Kans., will be exclusive Columbia dealers in Independence, Kans., from now on.

F. J. Williams, formerly of the transportation department of the Central Vermont Railway, has joined the sales staff of E. E. Clarkson & Co., talking machine and piano dealers.

TO DISTRIBUTE THE RECORDOLA

Cabinet & Accessories Co. Plan Active Campaign on Making Records in the Home

The Cabinet & Accessories Co., Inc., New York City, has been appointed distributor of the Recordola, made by the Recordophone Co., Inc., of New York City. This ingenious device for the making of records in the home is attracting favorable comment from the dealers and many orders have been placed. The Cabinet & Accessories Co., Inc., is presenting the Recordola in a particularly high-class manner. It is its policy not to sell by mail on this particular device, but rather to carefully demonstrate the proper working of the instrument.

GRAFONOLA AT KIWANIS LUNCHEON

TAMPA, FLA., February 6.—Six new members were initiated recently into the Kiwanis Club at the regular Wednesday luncheon at the Plaza Club. Dan Galvin and J. L. Lawrence, in charge of the entertainment program for the luncheon, introduced a new stunt at the meeting. A Columbia Grafonola was brought into the Plaza's main dining room and ten selections were played, each member being asked to write the names of as many of the selections as possible. Three prizes were offered by Mr. Lawrence in the contest and the winners were as follows: Miss Edith Price, first prize; Nick Palaveda, second prize, and Merle Price and Edgar Holt-singer tying for third place.

Olin S. Grove, talking machine dealer of Oakland, Cal., has added the Victor line of machines and records to his stock.

When we introduced our "CONSOLES" to the dealers last year, we knew that we were offering the trade a quality product with unlimited sales possibilities.

Our sales during 1921 substantiated our belief that the dealers would find LONG CONSOLES an important sales stimulant, for we have been working day and night to meet the requirements of the trade.

BUFFALO

Trade Optimistic—Luncheon of Victor Dealers—Important Trade Changes—News

BUFFALO, N. Y., February 9.—Talking machine dealers are more optimistic now than they have been for some time past. Industrial conditions are showing improvement and there is a general opinion that with building and lake navigation under way the unemployment problem will be close to solution in Buffalo. Dealers report January trade was considerably above their expectations, while February started with a good volume of business.

The Victor Dealers' Association of Western New York held an enthusiastic meeting at the Hotel Iroquois on January 26, following noon luncheon. This meeting was the first of a series at which it is planned to hear and discuss the releases for the following month. The dealers devoted three hours to hearing and discussing the March releases. President C. E. Siegesmund, of the association, spoke briefly on general conditions. The two jobbing houses, the Buffalo Talking Machine Co. and C. N. Andrews, were both represented at the meeting. It is planned to hear the April releases at a similar meeting to be held late this month.

Nora Bayes was a recent caller at the Buffalo Columbia branch. She was the star of a Schubert vaudeville program at the Teck Theatre and her local appearance has greatly stimulated the sale of her already popular records. Another Columbia artist who was recently in the district is Josef Hofmann, pianist.

G. W. Peace has resigned as assistant manager of the local Columbia branch and has been succeeded by H. W. Cardozo, who was formerly with the New York branch. O. F. Benz, record sales manager from the Columbia executive offices, called upon Branch Manager Haring and with him visited a number of dealers. Out-of-town dealers who have visited the local Columbia branch recently include Mr. Besch, of Gowanda; Mr. Mann, of Warsaw; Mrs. Reichoff, of Niagara Falls; Mr. Martin, of Fredonia; Mr. Murdock, of LeRoy; Mr. Caskey, of Eden, and Mr. Burtch, of Tonawanda.

Charles Hoffman, Sonora distributor in Buffalo, reports business showing steady improvement. Mr. Hoffman is planning to spend a month in Florida, returning in time to help make the Spring a record-breaker for the Sonora in this district.

The store of Houck & Emons, at 1476 Genesee street, has been sold to J. Kibler, the former owners going into another field of business. Mr. Kibler, who carries a general line of musical instruments, plans to make a big specialty of talking machine records.

J. C. Du Breuil, who has been placed in charge of a large district by the Brunswick Co., was a recent visitor here, calling upon Branch Manager C. W. Markham. Mr. Du Breuil has supervision over the Buffalo, Cleveland and Pittsburgh districts. He was greatly pleased with the outlook for Spring business as reported by Mr. Markham.

F. E. Russell, formerly manager of the talking machine department of J. N. Adams & Co., is now with Neal, Clark & Neal's sales department. F. S. Barber, formerly of Neal, Clark & Neal, is now manager of the talking machine department of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co. store.

H. C. Culp is the new manager of the Adam Co.'s talking machine department. He is planning many improvements.

An alarm of fire was sounded from the Main street store of C. E. Siegesmund a few days ago, but when the firemen arrived it was found that a rag burning in a furnace pipe was responsible for smoke which filled the store. No damage was done by the blaze.

Elbridge Glantz has been appointed manager of the talking machine department of the Stranburg music store at Bradford, Pa.

Neal, Clark & Neal have been conducting a ten-day Victrola show, which has attracted many visitors. Much newspaper publicity was given the show and business was greatly stimulated during the period, the firm reports.

Dealers report price reductions on records have greatly stimulated sales and continued good business in record departments is expected for some time.

O. W. HANSON REMODELING STORE

KANE, PA., February 7.—O. W. Hanson, exclusive Columbia dealer, of this city, is making extensive improvements in his establishment which, when finished, will make it one of the most completely equipped in this part of the State. Mr. Hanson, through aggressive sales methods, has built up a large business which is steadily growing.

H. L. Martin, music merchant of Loveland, Col., has sold out his entire stock, with the exception of Edison phonographs and Baldwin pianos, which he will handle exclusively in the future.

EDISON SCHOOL IN QUAKER CITY

Sessions for Local Salesmen to be Held in Auditorium of Snellenburg Store

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 8.—The Edison School for Salesmen, which is to be held in this city on February 20, 21 and 22, will be conducted in the spacious auditorium of the N. Snellenburg Co.

Dr. Benjamin W. Robinson, whose services were secured through the Carnegie Institute of Technology, will be the instructor in charge. William Maxwell and Gene Lockhart will be among those from the Edison Laboratories who will attend the Philadelphia school. The Edison jobber in Philadelphia, the Girard Phonograph Co., has worked hard on the preparation for this school, and the enrollment already made insures a complete success from the standpoint of attendance.

Just bear in mind that everybody was talking depression a year ago. To-day they are busy discussing improvement.

PERSONALITY AN IMPORTANT FACTOR

Informative Article by H. B. Sixsmith, of Mickel Bros. Co., Embodies Suggestions Well Worth Consideration by the Trade

The following interesting and informative article, headed "Personality," and written by H. B. Sixsmith, sales manager of the Mickel Bros. Co., Des Moines, Ia., Victor wholesaler, appeared in a recent issue of the folder that is mailed regularly by this company to its dealers:

"Someone once remarked to me that 'selling was 10 per cent merchandise and 90 per cent personality.' While I might have doubted it at the time, I have since realized that the statement was not much overdrawn at that.

"The need for personality in business and the success that it brings are not to be disputed. By business personality I mean the little personal attentions that some of us forget to display at times, and which show a discriminating observance of the desires of our customers.

"The common term for such things might be 'service.' Satisfaction in service might be termed the keynote of personality in any business. Personality furnishes the keynote to every business proposition. More than that, it is the vital element in every enterprise, particularly in the big Victor business of to-day.

"The prices of Victrolas have become standardized. It is, therefore, imperative that every Victor dealer develop a personality that makes his store stand out above all others. By your personality you induce a customer to take a little more than a casual interest in your business and attract him into coming in again to trade.

"Strive constantly to impress upon all customers that behind every sale there is a personality that is trying to develop their good will. Study the 'ins' and 'outs' of human nature. We have long since discarded the 'public-be-damned' policy and in its place we have a modern one, 'the public be pleased.' A complaint from a customer is not sufficient excuse for you to 'fly off the handle,' but an opportunity to exercise your personality in dealing with human nature.

"Personalities have a far-reaching effect. In the western part of the State there is a town which has two dealers who sell Victrolas. One is an energetic, ambitious chap with a personality that is a marvel. To have met and talked with him is equal to a 'shot in the arm.' His hand-shake comes from his heart, and when he backs it up with one of his effervescent smiles you get a 'thrill that comes once in a lifetime.'

"The other fellow is an apostle of gloom. You're afraid to shake his hand for fear of pulling his arm out of its socket. He greets you with a mournful face and his first words are always something like this: 'Hello, how are you? Don't waste any time trying to sell me anything. Business is all shot to pieces and I can't collect a cent on my accounts. Better go over and talk to Frank. This business will soon have me in my grave.'

"Whenever I'm in this section of the country I always run in to see these two fellows, but I never call on 'Old Man Gloom' first. I always manage to get there about a half hour before train time. If I called on him first he would utterly ruin a perfectly good day for me, so I take no chances.

Forbids Broadcasting of Concerts and Addresses by Amateur Sending Stations Until Interference Can Be Avoided

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 3.—The Department of Commerce has issued a temporary order forbidding amateur radio sending stations from broadcasting addresses and music until some system is worked out which will eliminate interference, which has been causing no end of trouble since the boom in this form of wireless communication started, about three months ago.

Professionals who hold commercial licenses are not affected by this order, but have been advised that they should work out some program among themselves if action by the Government is to be withheld indefinitely. It is estimated that there are more than 14,000 amateur radio-sending stations scattered about the country. The law provides that all sending stations must take out licenses.

BRUNSWICK STORES IN NEW JERSEY

B. Kemilhor in Madison, N. J., and the Merlon Corp., of Newark, to Handle Brunswick Line

The phonograph division of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., New York, announces the appointment of two new dealers in New Jersey. B. Kemilhor has opened a well-equipped store in Madison, N. J., and intends to cover his territory for the Brunswick in a very aggressive way. This agency goes to the credit of T. J. Garland, Brunswick representative for this territory.

Another agency recently established was that of the Merlon Phonograph Corp., of Newark, N. J., which conducts a chain of stores in various cities in the State with headquarters in Newark. It has taken on the Brunswick line for the Newark, Bloomfield and Clinton stores and intends to feature it exclusively.

"The worst part of it is that his store reflects his miserable personality and even his clerks have caught it. Can you imagine what impression the customer gets, and do you think that such a personality will ever attract that customer again?"

"If you haven't a personality, develop one. If you can't do that, then pick out a fellow who has a good personality and imitate him."

J. A. BLIESENICK BUYS BUSINESS

Manager of Hahne & Co.'s Talking Machine Department Resigns and Buys Ridgewood Victor Store—J. Blake Made Hahne Manager

NEWARK, N. J., February 4.—J. A. Bliesenick, for a number of years manager of the talking machine department of the Hahne & Co. department store, New and Broad streets, this city, resigned his position last week to assume ownership and management of the Ridgewood Talking Machine Co., Ridgewood, N. J. Mr. Bliesenick started with Hahne & Co. about sixteen years ago as a polisher in the piano department and from there he gravitated to the talking machine department, which he helped to build up and managed successfully for some years. His new establishment is one of the most attractive in Ridgewood and his wide experience in the retailing of talking machines assures success. Victor talking machines and records will be handled exclusively.

J. Blake, Mr. Bliesenick's assistant in the management of the Hahne & Co. department for the past five years, has succeeded to the management, and although he has been in charge but a few days he is already considering ambitious plans for expansion and increased business. Mr. Blake has been connected with the talking machine business since 1907 and he is also an experienced merchandiser of machines and records. Victor talking machines and records and Sonora phonographs are handled in this department.

FISKE SINGERS ON COLUMBIA LIST

The Fiske University Jubilee Singers visited New York recently, and while here made several records for the Columbia Graphophone Co. They had made one song when G. C. Jell, of the Columbia recording division, called the employes of the company together, so that they might hear the Jubilee Singers make their second recording. The Columbia staff was keenly enthusiastic regarding the splendid voices of this well-known organization, and Columbia records will undoubtedly be given a hearty reception by the dealers.

Gibson M. Hall, manager of the United Phonograph Stores' branch at Middletown, Conn., has severed his connections with that company to enter another business.

Business Is Quiet but Dealers Are Working Along Trade-making Lines—Record Demand Is Active—Albums Aid in This Connection

CINCINNATI, O., February 6.—Talking machine business may indeed be rushing in Cincinnati, but there is a great deal of concerted and energetic investigation being made to discover in just what direction it is moving so rapidly. Its course, apparently, is not altogether toward the stores of machine and record dealers, though just enough of it is being isolated and lured into paying money for this sort of entertainment to make the dealers admit that they are fairly satisfied. Cincinnati dealers in talking machines and records seem sensibly not to have joined themselves with the great army of strident economic katyids who make the business grass resound with their pessimistic twitterings.

The Popularity of "The Sheik"

There is, at least, a tacit agreement that if every department of the stock-in-trade sold as well as that meteoric record, "The Sheik," all would be delightful. Morris Fantel, of Widener's Grafonola Shop, 117 West Fourth street, is one of several to pronounce "The Sheik" to be the month's best seller. He accords second honors to "The Wabash Blues." Mr. Fantel made a very encouraging report. He said: "Our record business for January equaled that of December! It was a 50 per cent improvement over last January. Our business in machines is much better, and we are optimistic enough to believe it will continue."

E. D. Fallin, of Widener's, Inc., spent several days in Cincinnati on his way to New York. A cash prize of $100, offered by Widener's to the salesman making the greatest volume of sales, net business and largest down-payments during December, was won by R. O. Kindt, of the Cincinnati shop.

To Attend Edison Jobbers' Convention

Manager Oelman, of the New Edison Co., 314 West Fourth street, reported a fair trade during the month. He said: "Our business was satisfactory both in machines and records. We had not expected anything of exceptional nature, but for results obtained we are encouraged, though future conditions are considerably puzzling. Our best record sales were made of a piano record, 'Kickin' On the Keys.'" Mr. Oelman plans to attend the Edison jobbers' convention in New York February 11, Mr. Edison's birthday. Mr. Oelman will remain in New York during the week of the convention.

E. M. Abbott, of the Abbott Record Shop, Seventh and Elm streets, reports a fair business during January. He said: "Our January business was about medium. I am satisfied with the business done, but we did not do quite as well as we expected. One gratifying fact was that the greater proportion of sales was made on high-priced machines."

Again Proves Talents as a Drummer

When the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, preparing to take its annual Southern tour on January 23, found itself without the services of its regular drummer, Clifford Link, son of George Link, of Link's Record Shop, Vine street, filled the vacancy. Mr. Link was formerly with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, and last year with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. He is a master at the instruments of percussion.

E. I. Pauling, of the Starr Piano Co., reports a good business in both records and machines. Mr. Pauling visited the Starr factory at Richmond, Ind., in January, and reports that the record-making department of the factory is working both day and night.

Strong Victrola Demand

W. G. Rowbotham, of the Victrola department of the Baldwin Piano Co., is another dealer who accords first place in sales appeal to "The Sheik." He said: "The Sheik" is by far our biggest seller, both in records and music rolls. It is a tremendous hit. In the main, our business for January was very good, about the same, or perhaps a little better, than last year. We are very well satisfied, although January business could be better."

Mr. Rowbotham calls attention to the new console models of Victrolas to come out the first of April. These are to be priced from $115 to $350.

Mr. Rowbotham conducted a "one set" sale of record albums in January and was most successful. He was soon sold out, and plans soon to launch another campaign of the same nature. The window of the Baldwin Victrola Shop was very attractive, centering on the new Victor catalog, many copies of which have been called for at the store.

With the Columbia Dealers

The Columbia wholesale branch in Cincinnati reports a number of interesting happenings in the business throughout the Cincinnati district. When a competing store in Madison, Ind., announced that it would give a free record concert each Saturday night at 7 o'clock, Edward Kirkwood, Columbia dealer at Madison, promptly hired a small "darker" to play a Grafonola at the door of his store and announced a free concert every day from 8 a. m. to 10 p. m.

J. E. Israel, of D. Sommers & Co., Indianapolis, is spending part of the Winter in Florida.

W. T. Breeze, Brooksville, Ky., Columbia dealer, married Miss Nan M. Hancock, of Brooksville. It is remarked that here is an opportunity for someone to allude to the Breezes and the "little Zephyrs."

Miss Lee Hatton, of the record department of the E. M. Abbott Co., was married January 7 to E. L. Kane.

Rodney Martin, proprietor of Martin's Music Store, Dayton, O., has issued an attractive circular calling attention to the advantages of having music at hand when it is desired. Mr. Martin, who is a Columbia dealer, remarks in his circular: "Happy Homes Mean Success, and Music and Its Appreciation Will Bring Happiness." Other parts of the circular are devoted to pointers for compiling a library of music.

Big New Brunswick Account Opened

S. Reis, manager of the Cincinnati branch of the Brunswick Co., reported one of the largest accounts to be opened by any store handling Brunswick goods in this territory as being that of the Sterche Bros. Co., which has stores in eleven cities in Tennessee and Kentucky.

Mr. Reis reports satisfactory business during January. He said: "Our business has been very encouraging, and we think there is an excellent outlook for the continuation of our good trade. We are out to get the business, and we will continue to push Brunswick products to the limit."

Calling On Pathé Dealers

A. R. Saunders, manager of the Pathé department of the Alms & Doepke Co., said: "Pathé sales in Cincinnati, and, in fact, throughout the Cincinnati territory, have been growing steadily during January. We are very much encouraged, and believe that the outlook is good for a successful year." Mr. Saunders left Wednesday, February 1, on a two weeks' trip through the northern part of Ohio, during which he expects to visit all Pathé dealers in the State.

What H. L. Chubb Reports

H. L. Chubb, of the Chubb-Steinberg Music Shop, reports a good business done during January. He said: "Although the month was not a record-breaker, business, nevertheless, was very satisfactory. Record sales were as good as December, and sales of machines were better."

F. X. Donovan, manager of the Victrola department of the John Shillito Co., reports a brisk trade for January. He said: "We were completely sold out on 'The Sheik,' although other record sales were good."

Music Week Discussed by Association—Industrial Situation Improves —Distributors and Dealers Display Activity—Trade Outlook Good

PITTSBURGH, PA., February 6.—Talking machine dealers here are much interested in the proposed "Music Week" plans that are being formulated for an observance of the same under the direction of the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music. The movement was formally launched some months since at a meeting of the Piano Merchants' Association of Pittsburgh, and was followed by the naming of a committee in behalf of the Musicians' Club of Pittsburgh. At first it was intended to hold the Music Week last Fall, but owing to the unsettled business conditions that developed it was deemed advisable to hold the matter in abeyance.

At the January meeting of the Association the president, Wm. C. Hamilton, who is also president of the S. Hamilton Co., Victor dealer, again broached the matter and was given hearty endorsement by M. V. DeForeest, the president of the National Association of Music Merchants, who was a guest at the meeting and who has stores at Sharon and Greenville, Pa., and at Warren, O., in which he has well-arranged talking machine departments. It is now planned to have Robert Lawrence, of the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, arrange to come to Pittsburgh during May and address a meeting of representative music men and others interested in music and fix on a date some time in the Fall for a Music Week in the Steel City.

Among the talking machine dealers who attended the meeting were: Theodore Hoffmann, of the J. M. Hoffmann Co., Brunswick dealer; A. O. Lechner, of the Lechner & Schoenberger Co., Victor, Edison and Columbia dealer; W. C.

Dierks, of the C. C. Mellor Co., Victor distributor; Arthur O. Armbruster, of the Henricks Piano Co., Brunswick dealer; D. L. Aaron, of Kaufmann's, Victor dealer, and E. B. Heyser, of the W. F. Frederick Piano Co., Victor dealer. Another out-of-town guest was E. E. Schellhase, a Victor dealer of Waynesburg, Pa.

Starr Line Making Gains

H. C. Niles, secretary of the Starr Phonograph Co. of Pennsylvania, distributor of the Starr phonograph and Gennett records, reports a very satisfactory demand for the Starr and Gennett lines. The company has a very extensive territory, which is well covered by live-wire Starr dealers. One of the new places where the Gennett records are sold is a shoe-shining parlor in the concourse of the Pennsylvania station here. It is a very neatly fitted-up parlor, finished in white. In the showcase that adjoins the front of the shop is kept an assortment of Gennett records. The posters and other advertising matter of the Starr and Gennett lines are well displayed.

Jacob Schoenberger, president of the Lechner & Schoenberger Co., Victor, Edison and Columbia dealer, will leave this week for the South with Mrs. Schoenberger, to spend the greater portion of the remainder of the Winter in Florida.

Business in Carload Lots

S. H. Nichols, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the Columbia Graphophone Co., stated that trade conditions, as far as the Columbia line is concerned, were showing a good improvement over the same period last year. Mr. Nichols is quite optimistic over the outlook for the next quarter and believes that the Columbia dealers in his territory will establish some new sales records. It is reported that features of the sales in the Pittsburgh district the past few weeks have been "carload lots." It was stated by one in a position to know that in a great many cities and towns in the territory covered by the Pittsburgh Columbia branch carloads of Columbia Grafonolas were sold and that in Wheeling, W. Va., a two-carload order was booked.

Victor Wholesaler Is Confident

Thomas T. Evans, manager of the wholesale Victor department of the C. C. Mellor Co., is optimistic concerning the Victor trade outlook in his territory and believes that with consistent effort and the employment of enterprising methods Victor dealers need not be alarmed as to the solidity of their future business. Mr. Evans is confident that the Victor trade will show a marked increase as soon as the stability of the industrial centers here is assured.

Industrial Situation Improves

Returning from a business trip to West Virginia and eastern Ohio, H. J. Brennan, manager of the Pittsburgh Talking Machine Co., Pathé distributor, had nothing but good words to say of the prospects for future business. In speaking with The World representative Mr. Brennan said: "The trade conditions, as I have observed them the past two weeks, indicate to me that there will be a slow but steady recovery of business in this district and the immediate vicinity. All indications go to show that the mills and mines will gradually resume and when they do their percentage of operation will increase rather than decrease. I have talked with a great many of the Pathé representatives in the various cities and towns that I visited and I have yet to meet one who took a discouraging view of business." Mr. Brennan stated that sales of the Pathé and Actuelle and the Pathé records for January were highly satisfactory and showed an increase over the same month a year ago.

East Liberty store of the S. Hamilton Co. The blaze originated in an adjacent building and later reached the Hamilton store, but luckily the firemen were able to control the flames before much damage was done.

Health-builder Records Popular

John Henk, the well-known proprietor of the Columbia Music Co., Columbia dealer, is specializing on the Walter Camp health records and is giving daily demonstrations in his demonstration rooms. Mr. Henk stated that the Walter Camp records were bound to make a hit, as a number of business men and others who had seen and heard the records were delighted with their simplicity and practicability.

The estate of Joseph Hardwick, of Uniontown, Pa., music dealer, is being managed by Joseph Hardwick and his sisters, the Misses Lena, Sylvia and Ethel Hardwick. The late Mr. Hardwick was widely known and just prior to his death took possession of a fine new music and talking machine store on South Gallatin avenue. The Aeolian-Vocalion is handled by the store.

In the talking machine parlors of the Joseph Horne Co., dealer in Victor, Columbia, Cheney and Pooley, a fine demonstration in the shape of an object lesson in the making of the Cheney phonograph is shown. All of the parts that go to make up a Cheney phonograph are displayed on a large board. From this exhibit a close-up and detailed view is given of the methods and material used in the construction of the Cheney.

Pleased With Business Outlook

I. Goldsmith, president of the Player-Tone Talking Machine Co., in conversing with The World representative stated that the outlook for business was very bright. He said: "I feel as though we are about to enter a very satisfactory business era. Our sales the past few months have been most gratifying and we have placed new distributors and district agencies in various sections of the country. We are making what I term a talking machine that meets with the approval of the trade and also the man and woman in the home. We have no complaint to make regarding business conditions and we feel that the Spring season will be most satisfactory."

Columbia News Happenings

The Galperin Music Shop, exclusively Columbia, certainly deserves the success it is meeting in Charleston, W. Va. Every important sales plan put out by Columbia recently has been put over enthusiastically. It never misses a chance. When it booked the Happy Six Orchestra recently it had 1,500 people out to the dance. The Galperin Music Shop has a sales organization that knows no figurehead. Everyone is a hustler from S. H. Galperin, manager, throughout, including Dan Nicholson, record salesman; E. Glesancamp, musical instrument salesman; Miss Marcella Salomon, bookkeeper, and Miss Dorothy Hemings, in charge of the sheet music department.

Joseph Horne's phonograph department is worthy of the fine reputation it has earned in Pittsburgh. It has an atmosphere of wholesomeness which encourages parents to bring their children and a big business is developed.

E. G. Dudley's drug store, Columbia headquarters in Wilkinsburg, Pa., has a reputation of being absolutely up to date. Columbia enthusiasts will accept this statement as true when we tell them every menu has a Columbia monthly record supplement pinned inside of it.

M. Mosesson isn't always through for the day when he closes his exclusive Columbia shop on the North Side for the night. He's enjoying the coon-hunting season, and the other night he and his party bagged three coons and a terrible appetite for breakfast.

More Music for the Schools

Under the caption "More Music for the Schools" the Pittsburgh Sun, an afternoon daily newspaper, has this to say: "The announcement at the meeting of the Pennsylvania Educational Association that music is to be taught more generally hereafter will arouse no opposition from those who have investigated the subject. The move is in accord with the ideas of the foremost educators of the day. They find in the study of music mental training of the best sort; moreover, it serves better, perhaps, than any other study to inculcate in the children appreciation of the beautiful.

"Music is an anodyne to soothe the spirit when it is wounded or oppressed by the unpleasant things of life. It is desirable that everyone should be able to call music to his aid when there is need of it. And that will be possible if it is taught generally in the public schools.

"Another reason why instruction concerning music should be given children is that they may be placed on guard against the degrading influence of jazz or similar atrocities now masquerading as music. This so-called 'music' is having a pernicious effect. It is corrupting the people's taste. And there can be no better way of counteracting it than by teaching the children in the public schools to enjoy the kind of music which has always been associated with ennobling and inspiring things."

Developing Sonora Trade

H. Milton Miller, manager of the Sonora distributing agency in the Pittsburgh district, is looking forward to a brisk Spring season. He is enlisting the interest of his dealers in keeping the period models of the Sonora before their customers. He is of the opinion that in time the period model will dominate the talking machine industry in popular favor.

Some Trade Brieflets

Ben Hammond, of the Talking Machine Co., of Birmingham, Ala., Victor distributor, was the guest of his brother-in-law, W. C. Dierks, of the C. C. Mellor Co. Mr. Hammond is a brother of Mrs. Dierks.

W. F. Beck & Son, music dealers, are now located at 155 North Fairview street, Lock Haven, Pa. They carry Pathé and Sonora phonographs.

Fred C. Bitner has opened a Columbia Grafonola Shop at 23 Baltimore street, Hanover, Pa.

The Manley Piano Co. of Welch, West Va., has been incorporated with a capital of $20,000 and will deal in pianos and talking machines. W. H. Needham is the general manager.

TO INTRODUCE NEW COUNTER DISPLAY

The Reflexo Products Corp., New York City, will shortly present to the trade a new and improved counter display stand for the Reflexo Gilt-Edge needles. The needle boxes in this new stand, while being visible, are not available from the front of the stand. This feature will protect the dealer against minor thefts which occur from time to time. This stand will be tastefully decorated in colors and is expected to prove very efficient as a silent salesman.

Business Shows Improvement—Association Activities—Firms Appreciate Work of Sales Forces—News Budget From the Saintly City

St. Louis, Mo., February 9.—January business, taken altogether, has been only fair to middling. It was not that during the first half of the month, but the improvement the latter half helped to pull up the average. At that, though, it was up to expectations because nobody expects a great deal from January, and in some instances it appears to have been better than was expected. The foregoing refers more particularly to talking machines. The record business was very good, as it always is in January, partly due to the large number of new owners incidental to the holidays. While the machine sales have not been brisk, the recovery from the after-Christmas slump is proceeding normally and a pronounced improvement is expected this month.

Review of Columbia Activities

The local branch office of the Columbia Graphophone Co. has made a careful analysis of Columbia business done in this territory for the past year. One of the most striking results of this survey was dealer advertising. Without exception the dealers who have visibly increased their business have been the largest advertisers. These dealers have consistently advertised in the newspapers and have followed up their advertisements with a heavy distribution of circulars, supplements and attractive window displays to entice the public inside their stores. Their experience has been that the public, in buying records, is invariably habitual and that after a casual customer has come into the store several times there is a reasonable certainty that he will become a permanent buyer there. The dealer's real problem has been to sufficiently interest the public to come into the store. Hence the progressive dealer has turned to advertising as the best medium of enticing new buyers to his store. Naturally, it has taken money to do this, but the added business which has subsequently resulted has more than paid for the advertising and has given the dealer large profits. As the year of 1922 advances it is to be hoped that the germ of clear vision as to the great value of advertising, with which many of the dealers have been gifted, will propagate and bring its rich reward to many others who sow it. Dealers who have had a foreign trade have discovered that the introduction to the public of the international records has resulted in a substantial increase in their record sales and the records have been acknowledged by their buyers as unusually good. The reduction of the price of 85-cent records to 75 cents has brought forth much enthusiasm from all the dealers in this vicinity who already see increased business as a result of this move.

Famous & Barr Co. Forces Banqueted

Nineteen twenty-one was a mighty good year in the talking machine department of the Famous & Barr Co. and Manager J. F. Ditzell, to show his appreciation of the good work of his organization, which helped to make it mighty good, gave a banquet for them at the Missouri Athletic Association. There was no formality about it. The guests ate to the music of a Victor and a Brunswick, one at each end of the banquet room, and after the eating they danced to the same music. The guests other than members of the organization were C. F. Jackson and Charles Shaw, of the St. Louis Brunswick branch, and Mark Duncan, of the Chicago Talking Machine Co.

To Manifest Appreciation

Another talking machine department that did a good business last year is that of the Stix, Baer & Fuller Dry Goods Co. and the firm, to show its appreciation, will give a banquet soon to the members of F. J. Ennis' talking machine organization. At the annual dinner of the executives President Aaron Fuller complimented Manager Ennis on the showing made by the department since he had been at its head.

Manager Ditzell's Birthday Remembered

Manager J. F. Ditzell, of the Famous & Barr Co. talking machine department, had a birthday February 2 and the employes of his department found it out some way and presented him with a beautiful potted plant for his desk. It gave him as much satisfaction as the inventory for the fiscal year ending January 31, which showed 1921 to have been the most successful year in the history of the department by a very safe margin.

A. W. Hosier Appointed Manager

A. W. Hosier is the new manager of the Scruggs, Vandervoort & Barney talking machine department, succeeding Miss Loraine Merritt, who resigned to get married. Mr. Hosier, who has been manager of the Victor department of the J. W. Jenkins' Sons Music Co., of Kansas City, Mo., for the past seven years, took charge here February 1. He has always been a Victor man, having been with the Schmelzer Arms Co. before going with the Jenkins house. The Vandervoort department handles both the Victor and the Brunswick. Mr. Hosier thinks the Vandervoort organization is wonderful. He plans to give most of his building-up attention to service. A large bunch of carnations from the employes was on his desk when he took charge.

Association to Be Active Force

Anxiety about the continuance of the Music Merchants' Association of St. Louis was allayed by a large attendance and an enthusiastic spirit at the annual meeting of the association at the Statler Hotel. The association had not been functioning very well for a few months and Secretary Ditzell felt so discouraged about it that he said as much in his letter to the members announcing the meeting, to this effect:

Columbia Graphophone Co.
NEW YORK

"We expect that this meeting will decide the future of the Music Merchants' Association. It is rather hard to admit failure, but, to be frank, I believe the St. Louis Music Merchants' Association, considering the past and what might be possible in the future, is a failure. This failure might be due to many causes, but nevertheless in my opinion it is absolutely unnecessary to continue as an association. The present directors have tried in every way to make a successful association and at a recent meeting it was almost unanimously declared that we have failed. However, we want the expression of the members, as each has made a substantial payment covering dues, etc., therefore at this coming meeting we will decide whether to continue as an association or disband."

He talked to the same effect at the meeting, but the members, faced with the alternative of quitting or going ahead, voted to go ahead. The social feature is to be stressed more in the future. There are as many talking machine men as piano men in the association.

By unanimous vote the officers and directors who served last year were re-elected, as follows: President, P. A. Lehman, Lehman Piano Co.; vice-president, Mark Silverstone, Silverstone Music Co.; Secretary, John M. Ditzell, Famous & Barr Co.; treasurer, J. J. Kleekamp, Kleekamp Bros.; directors, P. E. Conroy, Conroy Piano Co.; E. A. Kieselhorst, Kieselhorst Piano Co.; and Val Reis, Smith-Reis Piano Co.

Increasing Demand for Gennett Records

Manager Earl E. Fay, of the Connorized Music Roll Co., which handles the Starr talking machines, says business is picking up and dealers are beginning to send in orders, following a lull in the early part of January. The demand for Gennett records has been so good that orders have outrun the supplies, so that on February 1 thirty-five orders were on hand which could not immediately be filled, but the promise was that the situation would soon be straightened out by day-and-night work at the factory.

Silverstone Gave $500 Additional

When Thomas A. Edison, Inc., offered $5,000 for the best Edison slogan, Mark Silverstone, president of the Silverstone Music Co., Edison distributor for the St. Louis territory, offered an additional $500 if the winner was in this territory. Henry C. Lawrence, of Webster Groves, a St. Louis suburb, won the $5,000 and received an additional $500 from the Silverstone company. His suggestion was "The Fireside Encore of the Artist."

Books "The Happy Six"

The Walther Furniture & Undertaking Co., Columbia dealers at Cape Girardeau, Mo., has succeeded in booking "The Happy Six," Columbia exclusive dance orchestra, for February 16. The "Happy Six" will give a concert followed by a dance. This performance represents the initial appearance of Columbia artists in this city and the Walther Co. is making energetic plans to capitalize this opportunity.

C. F. Shaw Goes to Baltimore

C. F. Shaw, who has been city salesman for the Brunswick Co., has been transferred to the company's Baltimore branch, where he will be district manager. R. F. Novy, who has been Missouri and Illinois traveler, takes his place here. N. O. Fiske, formerly of Kansas City, takes the Missouri and Illinois territory.

Mark Silverstone, president of the Silverstone Music Co., and his wife went to Orange, N. J., to help Thomas A. Edison celebrate his seventy-fifth birthday, February 11, and to attend the jobbers' convention.

A Tribute to the Columbia Motor

May Stern & Co., Columbia dealers in St. Louis, have featured in their window this week a handsome period model phonograph, purchased abroad by Mr. Walheim, president of the company, and copied minutely from a cabinet masterpiece of Italian art. The cost of the cabinet alone was $1,000. After a careful scrutiny of the various motors on the market Mr. Walheim finally decided upon a Columbia motor as one that he could thoroughly depend upon. Mr. Walheim has given this beautiful period phonograph to his daughter, who was recently married, as a wedding gift.

A Remarkable "Find"

Two Greeks, proprietors of a "Kandy Kitchen" on Delmare avenue, St. Louis, are the proud possessors of an imported "hurdy gurdy" piano from which many strange instrumentations issue when played. Upon investigation the interior of the piano disclosed among other instruments a small Columbia Grafonola, over twenty-five years old, and in perfect condition. The piano was originally constructed in Germany.

"Birmingham Blues," the latest Columbia special release, promises a run equal to the best of popular dance records in this territory.

Returns from Visit to Headquarters

A. B. Creal, Columbia branch manager, has returned from a sales conference in New York with Mr. Hopkins, general sales manager for the Columbia company.

The record department of the local Columbia branch reports unusually heavy record sales for the month of January.

Other News Brieflets in Sainly City

R. W. Jackson, manager of the Brunswick St. Louis branch, has returned from a business trip to Chicago.

STARR PRODUCTS POPULAR IN IOWA

The Duning Co., Distributor of Starr Phonographs and Gennett Records, Gets Enlarged Territory—Reports New Agencies

DES MOINES, IA., February 6.—The Duning Co., of this city, distributor of Starr phonographs and the Gennett records, reports that its territory has been enlarged to include practically the entire States of Iowa and Nebraska.

Walter Duning, head of the concern, states that there is a more optimistic feeling among dealers in this territory and business generally seems to be improving slowly. The Duning Co. has been experiencing a fairly active business during the past few weeks, especially in connection with the distribution of Starr products. Among new dealers who have recently taken on a line of Starr phonographs and Gennett records are the Germain Music House, Webster City, Ia., and the Nelson Electric Co., of Ames, Ia.

The Pleasing Sound Phonograph Co., of New York City, is planning to double its present floor space during the next year. Increased business makes expansion necessary. Other plans of this concern include a dealer campaign.

FEBRUARY MAKES GOOD SHOWING IN BROOKLYN

Business Getting Back to Normalcy—New Brunswick Ambassador—Jedlicka Expands—Leading Brooklyn Jobbers Getting Close to the Retail Trade—Weber Bros. in Bensonhurst

Despite the usual reaction of dull buying following the holidays in all retail lines, talking machine dealers in Brooklyn territory state that sales of records and machines have more than held their own. In the sales of machines the shopping and questioning type of prospective customer is in evidence. "This tendency brings us back to old times," remarked one old-established dealer, "which to me is a criterion that we are well on the way to a good, prosperous year of sound business." This statement reflects the attitude of all legitimate dealers in this busy section of metropolitan New York.

Frank Elliot to Represent Brunswick

Frank Elliot, who formerly covered upper New York State, has been promoted to the more important section of Brooklyn, where he will now center his activities in the interest of the Brunswick phonograph and records. Mr. Elliot was very successful in his former territory and for this reason officials of the company promoted him to the more important post he now holds.

Jedlicka Opens in Southampton

Reference is made elsewhere to the purchase by Jedlicka Bros., who conduct an exclusive Victor store at Bayshore, L. I., of the stock and good will of the store owned by Benjamin Rosen, at Southampton, an exclusive Victor agency. Many improvements are to be made in the store, among which are new record rack equipment and an enlarged show window. This store caters to many wealthy patrons and during the Summer months is extremely busy catering to a large number of Summer residents.

Weber Bros. Open in Bensonhurst

The latest addition to the Victor dealer list is the store recently opened by Weber Bros. at Eighty-sixth street and Bay Parkway, in the Bensonhurst residential section. It has been equipped in the most approved style, with every known modern convenience to insure the efficient handling of the very best class of trade, to which this company plans to cater. Weber Bros. are brothers of the Weber Bros. who conduct a successful talking machine store on Broad-

Opportunity

NEVER was the Victor dealer offered a greater opportunity for developing record sales than through the recent reduction of list prices of Victor records to pre-war levels.

Coupled with the substantial cuts in Red Seal list prices, there is offered the medium for a tremendous appeal to the public.

Are you taking full advantage of this great opportunity and getting your share of the business and profits?

Practical Help for the Dealers

Helping the dealer become a better merchandiser of Victor products is the plan of the American Talking Machine Co., Victor wholesaler. This work is being done by Charles Offerman, traveling representative, under the supervision of R. H. Morris, general manager of the company. Each dealer is being loaned the services of Mr. Offerman, who is classifying the dealers' record stock by groups, according to the plan laid out by the Victor Co. in its Red Seal School. Each group represents a certain class of record and the different records in this class are listed by a system of card index, which enables the sales person to quickly suggest a substitute of any number called for, which may, at the moment, be out of stock, and thereby save many sales that might otherwise be lost. Dealers are eagerly waiting their turn in this work and in consequence of this novel plan this wholesale establishment is a very busy place these days.

George Martin With G. T. Williams Co.

George Martin, formerly connected with the Victor department of the Sterling Piano Co., has been added to the sales staff of G. T. Williams Co., Victor wholesaler. Just prior to coming to this new position Mr. Martin represented the Starr Phonograph Co. in Greater New York, where he was successful in placing many new agencies. In his new position he will be thoroughly at home, as he has had a long experience in the merchandising of the Victor product. He is to be assigned the New York territory, which he has covered for some time past.

WINDOW DISPLAY PRODUCES SALES

Okeh Dealer in Brooklyn, N. Y., Features New Okeh Window Display Service—Sells Records as Result of His Very Attractive Display

One of the most enthusiastic Okeh dealers in local territory is the American Phonograph Exchange, Central avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., which

Mr. Grumann's Attractive Window is owned by Mr. Grumann. This dealer is most enthusiastic regarding the new Okeh display service, which he states is an instrumental factor in producing sales for every record featured in the display.

The accompanying illustration will give some idea of the attractiveness of this display in Mr. Grumann's window. As soon as he received the January service Mr. Grumann arranged to display it effectively, and his enthusiasm was reflected in the direct sales which the display produced.

NEW ORLEANS

*Dealers Working Hard for Trade Are Being Splendidly Rewarded
—Big Stores Are Expanding—New Piano House to Handle Talkers*

NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 6.—Satisfactory sales totals seem to be the reward of those dealers who are "on the job," who follow up every tip and who are constantly keeping their wares before their customers by means of circulars and extraordinary salesmanship. This, in brief, is the way the sales managers of the New Orleans music stores told their story about their business for the month of January.

It has been the smaller stores that have felt the January lull the most, though none seems to be disheartened, and the bigger stores report that they are satisfied with the results after everything is considered, especially when other lines are at a standstill.

Probably the best proof of their confidence is the fact that two of the big stores are planning the expansion and remodeling of their quarters. One of these is the House of Grunewald, the other is not quite ready to make public its plans, but promises news for the next issue.

The Harris-Loeb Piano Co. will open about March 1 and will be one of the largest stores in the city, handling a complete line of talking machines and records, as well as pianos. That is some indication of what the New Orleans dealers think of reported hard times.

To begin, R. A. Young, the new sales manager of the Grunewald Co., reports a very erratic business all through the month of January. At times the demand was so great that the force had to run to get around and serve all customers, while at other times it seemed as if there were a small-pox sign on the front door. This was true of both machine and record sales. An excellent business was done in the $125 and $150 Victrolas. A wonderful demand prevailed for Red Seal records. At the Rampart street branch the Okeh records have been featured and the results have been very satisfactory. Mr. Young attributes the good showing made by his department to advertising and aggressiveness of his force. He regrets having lost Morris Thomson from his department. He was lured to the footlights and is now singing tenor with "Chu Chin Chow."

Plans for the improvement and expansion of the talking machine department of the Grunewald Co. have been definitely decided upon, said Mr. Young. These plans call for a concert hall in the front part of the fifth floor, for the office to be moved from the second floor to the back part of the fifth and for the second floor to contain about fifteen additional display rooms for talking machines. When finished it intends to have the largest and finest quarters in the South. Work will be started on the remodeling some time this Summer.

Manager Powell, at Philip Werlein, Ltd., is in an optimistic mood, for since New Year's Day he has not let up once. It has been a steady grind. Circulars have been sent out and the salesmen have been following up the slightest clue that might lead to a sale. Mr. Powell stated that he had passed the mark of last January by a good margin. The company gave a dance for its employes on the second floor of the store on a recent Saturday, to which all Victor representatives in the city were invited.

Mrs. Trembely, formerly Miss Jalenack, manager of the talking machine department of the Dugan Piano Co., though just returned from her honeymoon, has entered the business whirl with increased energy and reports that the higher-priced Victrola is coming into its own since the holidays. One Victrola was sold to the Sacred Heart Convent recently.

There has been a big demand for Sousa's records since his appearance here January 25 and 26. Mrs. Trembely also reports a good business done through big exporters here with Latin-American countries.

It is not known where the marriage bug got its start, possibly at Dugan's, but, at any rate, it seems to be sweeping through the trade in New Orleans. The latest victim is C. E. Sadler, assistant manager of the Victrola department of Philip Werlein, Ltd. He married Miss Angela Viosca January 31. There are rumors of a few more.

At the Collins Piano Co. E. J. Wilson, Jr., has been getting excellent results from a plan, which he got out of The Talking Machine World, of sending out circulars containing suggestions for customers in the record line. In many instances they have come in and asked for the entire selection, said Mr. Wilson. He has added two very attractive show windows in the Theatre Arcade, and while the amount of business done is nothing to become enthused over Mr. Wilson believes that the future will bring a better demand.

BERT WILLIAMS A POPULAR ARTIST

Bert Williams, exclusive Columbia artist, scored quite a victory recently in a New York school on the East Side at a session of the Wednesday Afternoon Story Club. Miss Goldsmith, the teacher, thought she would vary the interest in the club by asking the children to bring their favorite records. She brought along her portable Grafonola, and twenty-one out of the twenty-eight children brought Bert Williams records along with them as their favorites.

C. A. FULLERTON'S ACTIVITIES

Head of the Fullertone Phonograph Products, Inc., Identified With Many Important Undertakings—Prominent in Decorative and Architectural Arts—New Fullertone Phonograph Has Numerous Distinctive Features

The recent announcement in The World that the Fullertone Phonograph Products, Inc., of New York, would shortly place on the market a new instrument based on absolutely new principles attracted wide attention in the trade. This instrument, which is made entirely of wood, with the exception of the needle-holder, is modeled on the graceful lines of the classic Greek lyre, and has the finish and charm of a rare violin. It will be known as the Fullertone and is the latest link in the chain of Fullerton enterprises.

Although Clarence A. Fullerton is a newcomer in the talking machine industry, his past record is replete with important accomplishments in other industries. Mr. Fullerton designed and superintended the first all-steel and bronze interior of architectural pretensions ever executed in this country and also produced what were probably the first designs prepared for the steel interior of a passenger car, from which has since evolved the present Pullman steel interior. This is also true of the decorative handling of steel interiors for battleships, and Mr. Fullerton was probably the first designer to employ a wood finish on steel interior work. Both as an architect and producer in the architectural and decorative metal arts, he has designed and been identified with many of the country's most notable buildings.

The Fullerton enterprises include a group of complementary art industries producing architectural, monumental, sculptural and art works in metal plastics, wood and even leather and ceramics. To this will be added the Fullertone phonograph, the invention of Antol Fodor, a Parisian engineer, whom Mr. Fullerton has known for a number of years as a man of exceptional creative ability.

HERBERT A. BRENNAN RESIGNS

Tenders Resignation as Manager of Talking Machine Department at Wurlitzer's Which Will Take Effect on March 1

Herbert A. Brennan, well known in the talking machine trade in metropolitan New York, who has been manager of the Victrola department of the Wurlitzer Co. for the past year, has tendered his resignation to this concern, effective March 1. Mr. Brennan's wide experience in the Victor field qualifies him as one of the best informed men in the retail merchandising of the Victor product, and this experience, coupled with his knowledge of the Victor policy of selling this product, was responsible for the splendid showing in sales made during his regime as manager of this store. He leaves this post after a year's hard work with a well-planned and efficient organization that is prepared to pave the way for his successor.

Mr. Brennan's plans for the future are not ready for publication at this time, but plans are now under way which, when perfected, will establish him firmly in the talking machine trade.

ISHAM JONES AT ELKHART

Famous Brunswick Artist Appears at Kiwanis Luncheon—Entertained by C. G. Conn, Ltd.

ELKHART, IND., February 4.—Isham Jones and his famous orchestra, exclusive Brunswick artists, playing at the College Inn in Chicago, appeared in this city recently at a luncheon given by the Kiwanis Club at the Elks' Temple. The orchestra came to Elkhart at the invitation of James F. Boyer, of C. G. Conn, Ltd., whose instruments this dance organization uses exclusively.

C. D. Greenleaf, president of C. G. Conn, Ltd., presented each member of the orchestra with a beautiful engraved medal and, as a mark of their appreciation, the Isham Jones Orchestra played a series of dance numbers with the exceptional skill and art that have made it nationally prominent in the dance entertainment field.

TAKES NO HEED OF "HARD TIMES"

Schwartz Furniture Co., New London, Conn., Uses Effective Publicity to Feature Columbia Product—Sales Steadily Increasing as Result of Company's Progressiveness

NEW LONDON, CONN., February 9.—The Schwartz Furniture Co., of this city, exclusive Columbia dealer, apparently takes no cognizance of the so-called bugaboo of “hard times.” This enterprising dealer is utilizing every possible form of effective publicity, and as a result of this progressiveness its Columbia sales are steadily increasing.

An example of this company's progressiveness was shown recently when a waiting room for passengers using the trolley system in New London was being installed. The main furnishings consist of three large settees for the comfort of the public, and the Schwartz Furniture Co. hit upon the idea of carrying attractive signs on these settees telling the public that it carries a complete line of Columbia Grafonolas and records.

Various associations, private clubs, volunteer fire departments and private parties are supplied with bridge score cards, and the reverse side of these cards are devoted to advertising Columbia records over the signature of the Schwartz Furniture Co. Through this medium of advertising this dealer has had hundreds of people calling at its store in order to secure the cards.

Twenty-five metal signs, with steel frames, measuring 20 x 40 inches, have been installed on five main roads, leading to and from New London, designating the number of miles from the different points. Incorporated in these signs is the fact that Columbia products may be purchased from this dealer.

In connection with a K. of C. frolic the Schwartz Furniture Co., assisted by advertising in the program, then issued a special form of ticket, the main idea being that these tickets must be exchanged for the original reserved seats to be handled at the box office. Columbia advertising was featured on the reverse side of the ticket. Every piece of advertising leaving this dealer's store contains something pertaining to Columbia and each and every individual in the organization is sold 100 per cent on Columbia product.

J. H. Haeske, of Bartlesville, Okla., will open a Columbia shop in that town in the near future. Mr. Haeske states that his opening business drive will consist of a carefully considered house-to-house campaign.

OGDEN SERVICE TABLES POPULAR

Favored in the Home as Well as in the Demonstration Booth

LYNCHBURG, VA., February 4.—J. B. Ogden, president of the Ogden Sectional Cabinet Co., reports that the Ogden service tables are steadily increasing in popularity. In a recent conversation with The World, Mr. Ogden stated:

"Of course, the talking machine dealer has found the service table in the demonstration

How Service Tables May Be Utilized

booth an indispensable adjunct. Many dealers are also finding, however, that these service tables are an excellent article for re-sale for use in the home. Following this idea we have prepared illustrations showing a few of the other uses to which the service table may be devoted. Dealers tell us that many of their customers already have accumulated a record library far in excess of the filing capacity of their talking machines. These same dealers are finding the service table solving this problem. Space is provided in these tables on a lower shelf for six extra albums and the top may be used for either an open book, vase, telephone or smoking stand; in fact, the uses are practically without limit. These stands have also attracted the attention of the furniture trade, which is selling them as bedside tables in large numbers. Our January ad in The Talking Machine World has brought many direct returns from all over the country, including a very substantial order from San Juan, Porto Rico. Another order was received from an old customer in Panama. We also heard from many talking machine dealers throughout this country."

The Ogden Sectional Cabinet Co. is making extensive plans for featuring these service tables during 1922 and expect to greatly increase the output.

MILWAUKEE RANKS HIGH AMONG THE MUSIC-USING TOWNS

Survey of Musical Conditions in Milwaukee Reveals Some Very Interesting and Remarkable Facts Which Are of Value Alike to Manufacturers, Distributors and Dealers in Musical Merchandise

MILWAUKEE, WIS., February 6.—A decidedly interesting survey of the Milwaukee market on music has been made by the merchandising service bureau of the Milwaukee Journal under date of January 15, 1922.

The facts and figures presented are taken from personal interviews with 10,000 Milwaukee housewives. In order that the territory should be covered with the greatest accuracy, the number of interviews in each part of the city was based on the respective populations of the twenty-five wards comprising the city of Milwaukee. The questionnaire was very complete, developing such facts as the number of children, if any, and, if so, of what sex. The statistics obtained included the number of families having musical instruments, the make of instrument, whether it were a stencil bearing the manufacturer's name, whether other instruments than pianos are owned, the number of homes in which children study music, etc., etc.

Some of the most important totals appearing in the general survey are here given:

Of the 10,000 homes interviewed there was some kind of musical instrument used in 7,942 homes, or 79.4 per cent.

Of the 7,236 homes having children it was found that 1,982, or 27 per cent, study music, while the balance of 5,254, or 73 per cent, did not study music of any kind.

There are approximately 105,000 families in the city of Milwaukee. Based upon the reports obtained through the interviews from 10,000 families as a basis, we find the following:

45.9 per cent, or 48,205 homes, have pianos or player-pianos of 698 different makes or names.

42.43 per cent, or 44,551 homes, have talking machines.

6.96 per cent, or 7,308 homes, have violins.

.14 per cent, or 147 homes, have pipe organs.

The remaining homes have a miscellaneous assortment of musical instruments.

STEADMAN MUSIC HOUSE ROBBED

YONKERS, N. Y., February 7.—The Steadman Music House, Warburton avenue, this city, was robbed last week of stock valued at $1,500. Among the things stolen were a number of Edison and Victor reproducers and about 200 records. Frank Steadman, senior member of the firm, is spending the Winter in Florida, where he is regaining his health, following an operation, and the business was in charge of Frank Steadman, Jr., at the time of the robbery. The police are now following up the matter.

Many Big Days of Trade During January—New Recording Plant at Santa Monica—Sales by Carloads—Canadian Jobber Opens Stores

LOS ANGELES, CAL., February 1.—January seemed comparatively quiet in the talking machine business after the great rush of December; however, as usual, there have been many surprisingly big days and the average showing for the past month will compare favorably with the first four weeks of previous years. Departments have run with full staffs of salespeople, many of the extra holiday assistants being retained, but there are a number of applicants for positions, many of whom are armed with first-class references showing previous experience and ability. Managers are making it a practice to retain employes who have been with them some time, and find it impossible to create new positions. This may serve as a warning to many who might be inclined to leave posts elsewhere, believing that new "jobs" can easily be obtained in Los Angeles.

Price Reduction in Records Surprises

The sudden announcement of the reduction of the price of the 85-cent record to 75 cents came as a surprise to all. The bookkeeping departments rejoiced whole-heartedly and unstintedly—it is so much easier to figure. Owners and managers looked a little thoughtful and wistful. Salesladies—especially those working on commission—were inclined to resent the reduction. The public made no comment, according to reports, but seemed pleased.

Eight Famous Victor Artists' Concert

The Eight Famous Victor Artists appeared in concert at the Philharmonic Auditorium on Wednesday, January 25. The concert, which was given under the auspices of the Victor dealers of Los Angeles and arranged for in detail by the Victor dealers' committee of the Music Trades Association of Southern California, was a complete success. A capacity house listened with delight to the series of old familiar songs given by the Sterling Trio and Peerless Quartet, as well as solos by Henry Burr and Billy Murray, funny stories by Monroe Silver and piano and banjo selections by Banta and Van Eps. The artists were generous with encores and the concert continued to a late hour.

Recording Laboratory in Santa Monica

What is claimed to be the first permanent recording laboratory put in operation on the Pacific Coast has now been in full swing at Santa Monica for some weeks. The Nordskog Phonograph Recording Co. has made a number of test records and recently made some of the famous Cherniavosky Trio. Special success has been attained in recording piano records, which are generally considered difficult. The recording by students and private individuals is also being featured and meeting with great success. A second recording laboratory will be opened in Los Angeles. The management is under the direction of Arne Nordskog, who is a well-known impresario in the Beach City, maintains a studio and is an opera and concert tenor of wide experience.

Miss C. C. Irvin to Head Hamburger Dept.

Harry N. Briggs, manager of the music department of Hamburger's, announces the appointment of Miss C. C. Irvin as the manager of the Brunswick, Victor and Vocalion record department. Miss Irvin comes direct from Wanamaker's, New York, where she was formerly assistant to Louis Jay Gerson in the Wanamaker music department.

Former Canadian Jobber Arrives Here

John A. Sabine, formerly senior partner of the Music Supply Co., of Toronto, Canada, Columbia jobber and distributor for the Province of Ontario, arrived in Los Angeles early in the month. It is his intention to operate a chain of phonograph stores in Southern California, with R. L. Tamplin, a former associate. An exclusive Columbia store was opened by Mr. Tamplin in San Diego some months ago and plans are now being made to open stores in other towns.

New Victor Models Announced

R. P. Hamilton, special factory representative of the Victor Talking Machine Co., was the much-welcomed announcer of several new console or period Victor models. Mr. Hamilton smashed all previous walking records on Los Angeles streets while hurrying from one Victor store to another to spread the good news. He has been in Los Angeles for a few days only, but has already made many friends.

Barker Bros. to Move Soon

Work is progressing rapidly on the new quarters which will be occupied in the future by the music department of Barker Bros., which already extends for some two hundred feet on Broadway, and will have an additional seventy feet through this new frontage. No expense is being spared to put these new spacious quarters in shape as quickly as possible.

Columbia Sells by Carload

Charles Mack, assistant manager of the Los Angeles branch of the Columbia Graphophone Co., reports special carload sales by the following Columbia dealers: Bartlett Music Co., of Los Angeles; Columbia Stores Co., of San Diego; Elliot Music Shop, of Long Beach;

S. D. Frank, of San Diego, and San Pedro Furniture Co. Each of these houses sold a carload of Grafonolas during the holidays through special featuring of carload sales. Similar sales are now being made by the Sheahan Music Co., of Venice; Kenny Music Co., of Glendale, and the Linne Music Shop, of San Fernando.

Salt Lake Music Man Here

John Elliot Clark, Victor distributor of Utah, visited Los Angeles on private business. He took the opportunity of paying calls on the several Victor dealers of Los Angeles.

Ralph Freeman Expected Here

Ralph L. Freeman, director of distribution of the Victor Co., is expected to arrive in Los Angeles early in February. His visit is looked forward to by all the local Victor dealers.

EDISON SCHOOLS FOR SALESMEN

Much Interest Evidenced in the Plans for Series of Salesmanship Schools—Omaha Substituted for Des Moines, Week of April 17 to 22

ORANGE, N. J., February 10.—There have been no changes in the itinerary of the Edison Schools for Salesmen, as announced in The World last month, with the exception that Omaha has been substituted as a school point for Des Moines, week of April 17 to 22.

Interest in the Edison Schools for Salesmanship is not confined to Edison circles. Telegrams and letters of invitation have been received at the Edison Laboratories from the mayors of Syracuse, Cleveland, Dallas, Detroit and Atlanta, and from the Chambers of Commerce and other civic bodies at the various points where schools are to be given, insistently urging the establishment of schools in their cities. In many of the cities, too, the press has taken up solicitation of the schools. The result of this has been a lot of good newspaper publicity not only for the schools but for the New Edison as well.

William Maxwell has been invited to address prominent civic bodies and educational institutions along the route to be followed by the schools and plans to accept as many of these as his other duties will permit.

C. K. HADDON SAILS FOR EUROPE

Charles K. Haddon, of the Victor Talking Machine Co., of Camden, N. J., accompanied by his wife, sailed recently on the S. S. "Caronia" for the Mediterranean, where he will spend the balance of the Winter. William T. Haddon, president of the Ohio Talking Machine Co., Victor jobber, of Cincinnati, O., visited New York to see his parents off.

Discussing human virtues, a talking machine man the other day said: "Some men grow so upright that they fall over backward."

NEW JEWETT UPRIGHT MODELS

Jewett Phonograph Co. Has Three New Uprights—Another Model to Retail at $90 Ready Shortly—New William and Mary Console Will Round Out Console Line—Factory Is Running at Full Blast—Outlook Is Satisfactory

DETROIT, MICH., February 4.—The Jewett Phonograph Co., of this city, manufacturer of the Jewett phonograph, is announcing a new line of upright designs, consisting of three models, retailing at $125, $150 and $175. Jewett dealers who have visited this company during the past few weeks are keenly enthusiastic regarding the new line, and in all probability the new models will be ready for delivery about the 15th of the month. The company is also planning to announce very shortly another upright model retailing for less than $100, with a probable list price of $90.

The new upright model No. 5, retailing for $125, is 44¾ inches high, 19¾ inches wide and 19½ inches deep. It is standard Jewett construction, as, in this instrument as well as in all others, only ¾-inch five-ply panels throughout are used, with the best veneers, finishes, etc., that the company can secure.

The new upright No. 6, retailing at $150, is 45¾ inches high, 20 inches wide and 20 inches deep. This instrument is made in a two-tone effect in both mahogany and walnut, the front doors being paneled as well as the sides.

The new upright No. 7, retailing at $175, is 46¾ inches high, 21½ inches wide and 21½ inches deep. This instrument is also made in two-tone effects in mahogany and walnut, and is paneled in the front and the sides with something new to the trade in that it is paneled in a two-tone effect in the back. This will enable the purchaser of this instrument to place it in the center of the room or any place where the back of the instrument may show, as the back is finished the same as the sides, with the same quality of veneer.

The Jewett Phonograph Co. will shortly announce a William and Mary console, which will retail around $165, and with this addition the company will have four consoles, retailing at $145, $165, $195 and $225, thereby rounding out the complete list.

A. A. Fair, sales manager of the company, states that he recently added four new salesmen to his staff and the factory is running full blast. The company is endeavoring to co-operate with its dealers in every possible way, and the results of its efforts to date are emphasized in its steadily increasing sales totals.

BRILLIANTONE FORCES ACTIVE

United States and Canada Being Well Covered—Orders Indicate That Dealers Look for Bigger Business—Working for It Anyway

The entire sales force of the Brilliantone Steel Needle Co., New York City, is out on the firing line developing 1922 business. H. W. Acton, secretary of the company, reports that orders are coming in from all sections of the country and that he is kept very busy taking care of them.

Sidney Risser, in charge of metropolitan territory, is doing excellent work in the Greater City. V. C. Kent, one of the newer additions to the Brilliantone sales staff, is covering New England and reports conditions very favorable. L. J. Unger is back again in Canada and reports that the talking machine trade in the Dominion is very active and is proving his assertions through the substantial orders he is sending in. B. R. Forster, president of the company, is on the Pacific Coast and will work his way back to headquarters through the Southern States. Upon Mr. Forster's return Mr. Acton will immediately leave on a contemplated trip.

The go-getter wins business and cashes in on it while the timid and complaining keep on waiting for the horn of plenty to empty its contents upon them.

NEW COLUMBIA CAMPAIGN

Newspaper Advertising Being Used to Feature Popular Artists and Music—Dance Music Given Prominence in the Advertisements

The Columbia Graphophone Co. has just inaugurated a newspaper campaign that is nationwide in scope. The advertising draws attention to the tremendous demand for popular music, song and dance hits, also ballad, band music, vaudeville and comic opera tunes, and old familiar melodies. Many Columbia stars that are famous for their popular music are featured in the advertising, including Al Jolson, Ted Lewis, Nora Bayes, Dolly Kay, Bert Williams Van and Schenck, Frank Crumit and Marion Harris.

Included in many of the advertisements are lists of specially selected records, representing some of the best sellers in the newest and latest music. Dance music is particularly emphasized in this Columbia advertising campaign, several advertisements being devoted exclusively to a list of suggestions for dance entertainment.

TO RE-ENTER COLUMBUS TRADE

Goldsmith Music Co. Incorporated to Deal in Musical Instruments of All Kinds

The company is chartered with $30,000 in preferred stock and 500 shares of common stock with no par value, and a suitable location is now being sought in which to establish the business, temporary offices being maintained at 36 West State street. ### EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE TO MEET

Governing Body of National Association of Talking Machine Jobbers to Hold Two Meetings Next Month, One in Chicago and the Other in New York—All Members Welcome

Plans are now being completed for the regular mid-year meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Association of Talking Machine Jobbers, which, as was the case last year, will be divided into two sessions, one of which will be held in Chicago on March 12 and 13, and the other in New York on March 15 and 16. As has been the practice during the past few years, the meetings will be open to the general membership of the association, and it is expected that practically all the members will find it possible to attend either the Chicago or New York meetings. In the Spring of 1921 executive meetings were held in St. Louis and Boston, and over 90 per cent of the membership were present at one or the other of the meetings.

After the meetings in Chicago on Sunday and Monday, March 12 and 13, members of the Executive Committee will travel to New York on a special car attached to the Broadway Limited of the Pennsylvania line, arriving in Gotham on the morning of March 15 in time for the first meeting here.

A reputation for square dealing is the best advertisement a merchant can have.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 6.—Plans are being completed rapidly for a big combined business and educational convention to be held in the Rose Garden of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 6, 7 and 8, under the auspices of the Victor Talking Machine Co., supported by Victor distributors in Philadelphia. Delano, director of the Red Seal School. Mrs. Frances Elliott Clark, director of the educational department of the Victor Co., will be present with a corps of assistants, and will give a number of talks on the educational phases of the Victor business.

The talking machine department of the Connor Furniture Store, of Rialto, Cal., recently installed a complete stock of Pathé machines and records.

BUBBLE BOOK PRICES REDUCED

Popular Little Volumes Now Offered at Old Retail Price of $1 Each—Bubble Book Division Offices Removed to Harper Building—Two New Releases Just Announced

The Bubble Book Division of Harper & Bros. has removed from 130 West Forty-second street to the Harper building in Franklin Square, New York, where it will be under the same roof with the other Harper activities, which is expected to result in greater efficiency in operation. There is now being conducted a nation-wide campaign among talking machine dealers in the interest of Bubble Books, the list price of which has been reduced from $1.25 to the old price of $1. The price reduction is being announced in national advertising and is expected to have a distinct effect in increasing sales.

W. R. Richardson, in charge of the Bubble Book Division, states that there is now being prepared a most complete series of dealer helps designed with the special idea in mind of stimulating the sale of the books in talking machine stores. Two new Bubble Books will shortly be released to the trade. The first of these, No. 13, will be known as "A Child's Garden of Verse," and will contain three familiar verses by Robert Louis Stevenson. The other, No. 14, will be known as "The Chimney Corner Book."

Stinchfield, a graduate of the Carnegie Institute of Technology, will direct the school. Local Edison jobbers, the Pardee-Ellenberger Co. and the Iver-Johnson Sporting Goods Co., have, through energetic effort, enlisted a dealer attendance that insures the success of the school. The dealer attendance will be increased by a delegation of about fifty students from Harvard University. William Maxwell, together with Gene Lockhart, the well-known actor, will play an important part in this Salesmanship School.

H. W. ACTON'S LATEST PURCHASE

H. W. Acton, secretary of the Brilliantone Steel Needle Co., New York City, recently purchased property adjoining his home at East Williston, L. I., which makes his holdings now include practically a whole city block. He plans to improve this property, making his home one of the show places in this community.

The Coffing Music Store, of Attica, Ind., has added a talking machine department to its establishment, in which Victor and Edison machines are featured.

Trade Is Steadily Developing Toward Permanent Improvement—New Accounts Opened by Leading Companies—The Latest News

BALTIMORE, MD., February 5.—The talking machine business here is gradually emerging from the usual after-Christmas quietness and dealers generally are looking forward to a normal business from now on. The slump for the past six weeks is a natural aftermath of the holiday trade and is more than offset by the volume of business which was done during December, which, as a rule, went away ahead of 1920, making the year's business, as a whole, very satisfactory.

Carload Sales Boom Columbia Business

This was attributable, to a large extent as far as his company was concerned, according to Manager Parks, of the Columbia agency, to the carload sales idea, which was taken advantage of by many dealers in this territory with very satisfactory results. This is considered very gratifying when it is taken into consideration that sales were made only to the very best-approved credit and a considerable number of sales were rejected on investigation.

New Columbia Agencies

Among new Columbia accounts is that of the United Phonograph Stores, Inc., which conduct two stores in Washington and will shortly open four stores in Baltimore. The local stores will be managed by Leonard C. Welling, who is now here supervising the remodeling of the establishments which have been leased.

New Victor Accounts

The reduction in the price of records will be a great stimulus to business in this territory, according to H. T. Bosee, sales manager of Cohen & Hughes, Victor distributors. Record sales have already shown improvement, he said, and he looks for a big increase right along now. New Victor dealers in this territory include Wm. M. Muller, who is opening up a new music shop at 3052 West North avenue; the Shevitz Piano Co., 746 Columbia avenue, and the McCready Co.

M. Nathan Co. to Open Branch

The M. Nathan Co., of Cambridge, Md., recently held an employes' co-operation meeting, at which H. T. Bosee, sales manager for Cohen & Hughes, made an interesting talk on salesmanship, which was not only very instructive, but entertaining as well. It was announced at this meeting that the firm planned to open a branch house in Salisbury, taking the place of the Salisbury Music Co., which is going out of business.

L. A. Randall Completes Victor Course

L. A. Randall has just returned from a trip to the Victor factory, where he spent a week under instruction, and Cohen & Hughes plan to use him along new lines in sales-promotion propositions.

C. F. Shaw Gets Important Post

C. F. Shaw, formerly of the St. Louis branch, has taken charge of the phonograph department of the Brunswick agency here, which embraces Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia and parts of Delaware, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and North Carolina. Mr. Shaw, although still a young man, has spent thirteen years in the business and intends to go after sales in this section. As he put it: "I am satisfied there is business in this territory and we intend to get it, if the best of efforts and a high-class product count."

Phonolamp Co. Starts Ad Campaign

One of the most striking advertisements of talking machines seen in Baltimore is that of the Monumental Phonolamp Music Stores Co., 108 North Eutaw street. It consists of a handsomely finished truck, with Phonolamps in operation on each side, and has attracted considerable attention in its trips through the city, playing the latest music and illuminated at night. S. Clayman and H. Kippnes, who are the distributors of the Phonolamps for Maryland and the District of Columbia, are undertaking a big campaign of advertising in introducing this novelty in this section and meeting with good results, according to Mr. Clayman. In addition to newspaper and other advertising they have closed a contract for a booth at the "Better Homes and Building Exposition," which will be held at the Fifth Regiment Armory from April 29 to May 6.

C. S. Jones Succumbs to Influenza

C. S. Jones, for many years superintendent of the Columbia warehouse here, died on January 22, after a short illness of influenza. Mr. Jones was one of the best-known and liked men in the Columbia agency and his death was a shock to the whole force. A. S. Cross, who was assistant for some time, was appointed to the position of superintendent.

Sickness Cripples Local Trade

L. E. Larman, of the Washington branch, and Z. A. Jones, of the Baltimore house, have been confined to their homes, suffering with attacks of grip, while P. W. Peck, of the North Carolina house, is convalescing from illness.

News Brieflets

Visitors to Baltimore the past month included Ernest Thompson, of Warsaw, Va.; J. Davis, of Havre de Grace, Md.; H. W. Yeager, J. V. Morris and Myer Goldman, of Washington.

C. D. Cogdill is going to open a talking machine shop at Goldsboro, N. C.

The Scott & Kennedy Music Store, at Willows, Cal., has added the Brunswick line of phonographs and records to its stock. Victor machines and records are also handled by this establishment.

COLUMBIA SECURES AL HERMAN

Prominent Vaudeville Artist to Record Exclusively for Columbia Graphophone Co.

The Columbia Graphophone Co. announced this week that it has secured Al Herman, the well-known vaudeville comedian, as an exclusive Columbia artist. This comedian is perhaps one of the most popular vaudeville artists in the country to-day, and his records will no doubt be looked for by record enthusiasts everywhere.

The first records to be released appear in the February list and consist of numbers which Mr. Herman has featured in this year's production of the "Greenwich Village Follies" and the "Music Box Revue." The first number is "I Hold Her Hand and She Holds Mine" from the "Follies" show and the second is "They Call It Dancing," from the "Music Box Revue." In the March list the company is to release a double-faced record by Al Herman of "Which Hazel" and "You're Outa Luck." Well-known artists on the vaudeville stage whose records appear in the February list are Vernon Dalhart, tenor, and Al Bernard, baritone, who are represented by a duet record. The first number is entitled "I Want My Mammy," a new lyric written around the theme of home and the South.

NEW TONE ARM WINS FAVOR

Wm. Phillips Pays Tribute to The World as a Real Business Getter

Orders for the new throw-back octagon tone arm, with octagon sound box, are increasing steadily in popularity. In speaking of the demand for this tone arm Wm. Phillips, president of Wm. Phillips Phono-Parts Mfg. Corp., New York City, stated: "The Talking Machine World is keeping true to form in its remarkable ability in developing business. My first ad of this new sound box and tone arm appeared in the January issue of the Talking Machine World and I can directly trace fifty replies to this one ad so far. Samples of the tone arm sent out have resulted in orders in almost every case. The exceptionally attractive appearance of both the arm and box catches the eye and when the tone value is demonstrated the sale is usually completed."

NATIONAL ALBUM LINE IN NEW YORK

James E. Maguire Appointed New York Representative With Offices at 54 Franklin Street

James E. Maguire has been appointed New York representative of the National Publishing Co., manufacturer of albums for talking machine records, with headquarters in Philadelphia, Pa. His offices are at 54 Franklin street. He intends to cover the trade in this territory very thoroughly and inasmuch as the National products are well and favorably known throughout the country he should have little difficulty in extending the sale of these products.

A recent caller at the executive offices of the Columbia Graphophone Co., New York, was W. C. Thomas, president of the Tampa Hardware Co., Columbia distributor at Tampa, Fla. Calvin Anderson, owner of the Columbia Grafonola Parlors at Wilmington, Del., Columbia dealer, was another recent caller at the executive offices, bringing with him excellent reports of the holiday trade that he closed in 1921.

VIRGINIA BURT NEW OKEH ARTIST

New Okeh Artist Possesses Rare Ability to Imitate Steel Guitar—Well Known in Musical Comedy Field—Has Quite a Following

The General Phonograph Corp. has just announced as a part of a recent Okeh record list several records by Miss Virginia Burt, featuring the selections "Dreamy Hawaiian Shore," "Hawaiian Chimes," "Ka-Lu-A" and "Hawaiian Starlight." Miss Burt is well known to theatre-goers throughout the country, and she possesses the unusual gift of being able to produce in her throat tones resembling with marvelous accuracy the notes of a steel guitar string. When producing her melodies of the guitar in combination with the famous Hawaiian guitar artists, Ferera and Franchini, it is almost impossible for the hearer to believe that it is not a third guitar playing.

For two seasons Miss Burt was featured in all the Keith and Orpheum vaudeville houses. The musical comedy field then attracted her attention and in the ranks of "Glorianna" she found a small part which she quickly outgrew and later was asked to play the lead in support of Miss Fritzi Scheff, star of the production. It was during the following Summer that Miss Burt, decided, half in earnest and half in fun, to write a musical play in which she could bring the happy family of "Glorianna" together again. She went to work immediately to write the necessary songs. While her manager was having arrangements made for the musical numbers of the production which will shortly be produced, he discovered Miss Burt's ability to imitate a Hawaiian guitar, and her Okeh records emphasize her unique gift to splendid advantage.

"MARION HARRIS WEEK" A SUCCESS

Sale of Records of That Popular Artist by Cluett & Sons Greatly Stimulated Through Timely Publicity—Visitors to Troy

TROY, N. Y., February 4.—The local store of Cluett & Sons, which in addition to pianos handles Columbia Grafonolas, Aeolian-Vocalions and both makes of records, has just completed the celebration of "Marion Harris Week," coincident with the appearance at Proctor's Theatre of that popular comedienne and Columbia record artist. Miss Harris visited the Cluett store and autographed a number of her records, the sale of which was stimulated materially as a result of the publicity.

A. E. Russell, manager of the talking machine department of the company, reports that sales during January showed a substantial gain over those for the same period last year and that February is starting off exceedingly well.

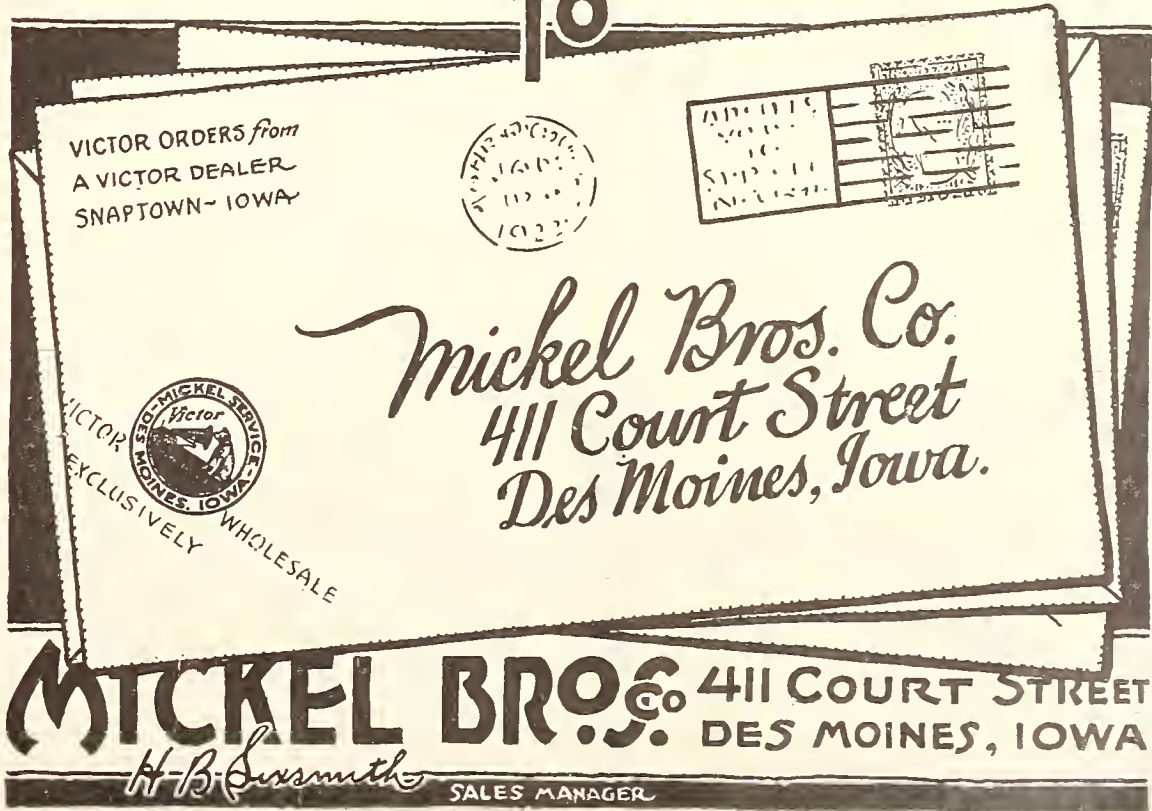

Among the recent visitors to the Cluett store were Arthur Olsen, of the Jones-Motrola, Inc., and Neal Lynch, of the traveling staff of the Aeolian Co.

DEALER USES TIMELY PUBLICITY

The advertising department of the Columbia Graphophone Co. recently received from M. T. Chapman, Columbia dealer of Holdenville, Okla., a copy of an artistic gift catalog which this dealer issued around the holiday season. Besides handling the Columbia line, Mr. Chapman is one of the most successful dealers in jewelry and optical goods in his section of the State, and he utilized the back cover of his gift catalog to feature Columbia Grafonolas. The advertisement was noteworthy for its typographical attractiveness, and also conveyed an effective sales appeal.

OPENS ELABORATE NEW STORE

Over 2,000 Visitors Attend Formal Opening of New Victor Establishment of Chas. M. Zitzer in Mansfield, O.—A Successful Event

MANSFIELD, O., February 4.—It was a real event in this city when Charles M. Zitzer, Victor dealer, opened his new store at 35 North Main street, considered by many as one of the best locations in that city. According to conservative estimates fully 2,000 people attended this premier opening.

Yuncker's Orchestra played throughout the evening and vocal numbers were rendered by Prof. R. A. Chubb and Eddie Fisher. It was the consensus of opinion of all the visitors that this store is not only one of the most modern in the city of Mansfield, but one of the most up-to-date stores in the entire State of Ohio.

Floral tributes were sent by the Perry B. Whitsit Co., Victor wholesaler, of Columbus, O.; the Phonograph Co., of Cleveland; the management of the Opera House, the Mansfield News and other friends of Mr. Zitzer's. Narcissus and jonquils were among the favors given to the numerous guests. A banquet at the Southern was the culminating feature of the opening.

Out-of-town visitors included W. F. Davisson, vice-president and general manager of the Perry B. Whitsit Co.; W. P. Miller, Newark, O.; F. L. Fritchey, district representative, and Mrs. Esther Reynolds Beaver, educational director of the Perry B. Whitsit Co.; F. H. Smith, Ashland; Donald Slaybaugh, Crestline; Don Johns, Lima, O.; O. E. Soderburg, Sandusky; John E. Saum, Dayton; Henry Ackerman, Marion; Merle Phillips, Mt. Gilead, and Henry Doran, Detroit, Mich.

LONDON SHELLAC STOCKS INCREASE

Despite Material Increase in Warehouse Holdings Stock Is Still Below Pre-war Days—Little Possibility of Price Reduction

Advices that have just come by mail state that there had been a material change in the statistical position of shellac in London within the past month, as indicated by the unusually big increase of 4,000 cases in warehouse holdings. Commenting on this development a London authority says:

"The total stock of about 11,000 cases is still very low. It is not surprising that the market has not been much affected by a replenishment which was very badly needed in order to protect consumers against the usually aggressive views of actual holders. The December arrivals happened to be rather liberal, and this coincided with some restriction on the outgoings incidental to the holiday period. The deliveries proved much short of those for November, but it is probable that trade needs will this month call for more important quantities. In contrast to the increased stocks the supplies afloat, to this side especially, are limited, while the bulk of the supplies on the way from Calcutta is going to the United States, as usual.

"Assuming that the London stocks will remain comparatively light for an indefinite period it is obvious that holders would be able to continue to exact a substantial premium for the shellac on the spot. While the December deliveries were only about 3,000 cases, the fact deserves notice that the monthly average for the past year represents 4,450 cases, which shows a moderate excess over the average for the previous year. The total receipts for the year were 52,463 cases, thus showing an increase of nearly 5,000 cases as compared with 1920, and the stocks are some 1,200 cases less than a year ago. There is no mistaking the fact that the outcome of the war has revolutionized the aspect of the market in this commodity, and it is difficult to imagine that the stocks will for some years to come reach anything like the dimensions that existed before the war, and the result is that prices are now still four to five times higher than they were before the war."

BROOKS BUSINESS GROWING

SAGINAW, MICH., February 6.—In a chat with the World, A. W. Seeley, general manager of the Brooks Mfg. Co., of this city, stated that the talking machine business is gradually coming back and that December sales were exceptionally gratifying. The company is, at the present time, receiving many inquiries and is laying the foundation for a much larger business than it has had for the past eighteen months. Mr. Seeley feels certain that ultimately the Brooks Mfg. Co. will secure sufficient business to keep the plant going at a maximum capacity, owing principally to the automatic inbuilt repeating device, a special feature of the Brooks phonograph.

A CARUSO MEMORIAL RECORD

New Record by Dead Tenor Released by Victor Co. on Occasion of Caruso Week

In honor of the celebration of the forty-ninth anniversary of Caruso's birth by a country-wide observance of Caruso Week, beginning February 27, under the auspices of the Caruso American Memorial Foundation, the Victor Talking Machine Co. has announced as an addition to the March supplement a new record by Caruso, namely, "Messe Solennelle—Crucifixus" (Crucified to Save Us). It is considered that the record is particularly timely, not only in view of the Caruso celebration, but from the fact that the Lenten season is approaching when music of that character is much desired. A special window card featuring the new Caruso record has been provided and is to be placed on sale on March 1.

NEW PLAYER-TONE DEALS

Geo. Seiffert Will Represent Player-Tone Phono. Co. in Metropolitan Territory—Weil Bros. Appointed Representatives for New Jersey

PITTSBURGH, PA., February 4.—I. Goldsmith, president of the Player-Tone Talking Machine Co., 967 Liberty avenue, announced recently that arrangements had been completed whereby Geo. Seiffert, 929 Broadway, New York, would represent the company in the New York metropolitan territory. Mr. Seiffert is one of the best-known members of the wholesale talking machine business in the East and numbers among his personal friends dealers throughout the entire territory. He has made a specialty of giving his clientele efficient service, and his enthusiasm regarding the Player-Tone line is substantiated by the fact that he has already closed important agency connections for this instrument.

Mr. Goldsmith also announced that arrangements had been made whereby Weil Bros., well-known furniture manufacturers' representatives, at 220 Mulberry street, Newark, N. J., would be sales representatives for Player-Tone phonographs in the State of New Jersey. The company has placed a good-sized order and is planning to institute an aggressive campaign in behalf of this line.

Mid-West Point of View

WESTERN DIVISION OF THE WORLD, CHICAGO, ILL., FEB. 10, 1922.

EVERYBODY continues to be interested in the state of business, and almost everybody continues to be on the fence when it becomes a question of advice or opinion. Yet, as a matter of fact, the inquiries which the mid-West staff of The Talking Machine World have been making during the six weeks past show conclusively that a good deal of what was anticipated two months ago has failed to materialize, while much has materialized which was not anticipated. For instance, there was a general belief throughout the trade two months ago that the Christmas betterment would be in the nature of a sort of flash-in-the-pan, and that it would not last over the middle of January. Moreover, our inquiries developed the fact that the reduction in prices came at the right time to improve a situation already better than had been anticipated. Orders were given during the month of January for delivery during April, May and June, some of which were booked even before the reductions were announced. Furthermore, it appears that manufacturers in general are not at all feeling blue. They have written down their inventory and to-day they know where they stand. Dealers also are struggling to the surface, looking around them and again seeing the familiar landscape which they had thought they would never see again. Inquiry among retail stores in this district reveals some interesting facts. During the last two years the housing situation had compelled many families to "double up," so that two groups would be occupying an apartment designed for one. The recent depression in business caused this condition to be even intensified, for thousands of families found that they must, at all costs, economize on rent expense. Now there is a process of separation and splitting-up going on. Apparently the people are getting tired of living in discomfort and are coming out of the shell of depression in which they have been wintering. The Superintendent of Banks of the State of Illinois has issued his annual report, which shows savings bank deposits of staggering magnitude. The money is there, the fine weather is coming on and the manufacturers are taking time by the forelock. What more can we ask for?

PRESIDENT BOND, of the Packard Piano Co. of Fort Wayne, Ind., is a wise man. He does not manufacture talking machines, but he fully recognizes that they are an integral feature of the music industries. He would like to see the retailers in the piano industry taking a more potent interest in the talking machine and its records. In the course of an instructive article from his pen, which appeared in the holiday number of The Music Trade Review, he points out that piano dealers often overlook the opportunity to make their stores the music-merchandising centers which they rightly are and always ought to be. In fact, piano dealers are often narrow-minded in this respect and make the mistake of overlooking the steady every-day opportunity to sell smaller lower-priced items when the high-priced ones, like the piano and the player-piano, are for the time being going slowly. Indeed, this is only one way of looking at the matter, though we agree that the gospel is thoroughly sound. Whether times be good or bad, whether pianos are selling fast or not, the piano dealer who does not seize the opportunity of making his store a center for all music merchandise is simply refusing to take advantage of the logic of his own position. That is only another way of saying that every piano dealer should handle a line of good talking machines and records. He should take as much trouble in proportion to these as he gives to pianos and player-pianos. Thus fortified he will find himself financially and economically stronger. For this is a case where it is eminently much wiser not to put all one's eggs in one basket. Whether, indeed, talking machine dealers who have not before dealt in pianos should take on such lines is another question entirely. It is, as may be seen at once, quite different from the first one. But piano dealers, if we may venture to advise them, will be better piano dealers for handling the best in talking machines and the best in records.

AND this reminds us that the typical mid-West product known as the Piano Club of Chicago to-day numbers among its most active members many able and energetic talking machine men. Harry Bibb, William Wade, Harry Schoenwald and the ever-hustling John McKenna, secretary of the club, and local boss for the Columbia Co., will at once come to mind, but the owners of the other names which might and should be remembered will simply have to take the intent for the deed, since we cannot possibly find space for them all. There have been many noticeable results flowing from the injection of this current of talking machine mentality into the deep stream of the Piano Club's existence. Perhaps the most apparent have been the remarkable entertainments which the members have enjoyed week after week, through the courtesy of their fellow-members who have been in a position to command the services of musical artists. Singers and instrumentalists, many of them highly distinguished, have appeared before the Piano Club at the instance of members who represent in various capacities the interests of leading companies. For all this the other members of the club are appreciative.

WHICH again leads to the thought that the National Association of Music Merchants would certainly be the stronger if it had more talking machine merchants among its members. President DeForest, of that Association, himself a music merchandiser of widest interests, has recently spoken very definitely on this subject. He thinks that more talking machine merchants ought to be in the National Association of Music Merchants, which should not, he rightly says, be composed of piano men only. The National Association of Music Merchants, in fact, offers to the talking machine man many advantages, some of which were clearly set forth by President DeForest at the Executive and Advisory Boards' meetings held on January 12 in New York City. These include legal, business and legislative helps. The Association is endorsing the Stephens-Kelly bill for price maintenance and is performing other services to every talking machine man, of direct and immediate benefit. To our mid-West talking machine trade friends, then, we pass the word: Get into the N. A. of M. M. You need it and it needs you!

SPEED. This is not intended as a funny title. It is quite literal and means just what it says. We are referring to plain, ordinary, physical speed, otherwise velocity; and our reason for so doing is, we believe, worth while. A representative of The World's Western Division was visiting a certain wholesale office in Chicago the other day and happened in just when a well-known tenor of our opera had come in to listen to one of his own records, which was being put out by this company for January. The World man took up a modest position in the rear while the entire sales force somehow got into the room, and as the singer sat down in front of the machine a salesman stepped forward and put on the new record. Hardly had the first chords of the accompaniment begun to sound when our artist began to wriggle in his chair and look uneasy. The very moment his first voice-tones sounded out he literally jumped up and, as we say, figuratively "hit the ceiling." "That is not my voice," he cried and, stooping over the turntable, he changed the speed regulation. Then he listened again, looked satisfied and said, "Now that is my voice." Exactly! All very simple and no doubt the result of a mere accident. But how very significant! There was a roomful of expert salesmen who did not sense the fact that a record is simply not genuine unless it is played at the right rotational speed of the turntable. Every salesman knows that pitch varies with speed, but how often is the knowledge put to good use? Just suppose that that salesman had been trying to sell this singer a talking machine which was in a similar maladjusted condition. He would simply have lost his sale. Any singer, in fact, would have detected the nasal imperfections of the vocal sounds and would at once have blamed the machine. Which emphasizes that those who sell talking machines should know their product.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 8.—With no exception wholesale and retail concerns in this city have been able to report that the year 1921 closed in a more satisfactory manner than was expected. These facts were brought to light when the annual inventories were made and in several instances some of our most ardent howlers of "rotten business" received the surprise of their life when they found out they had fewer goods than they thought they had and had sold more than they imagined they had. These facts caused them to desert the blue ranks and come over to the optimistic side, so that to all intents and purposes everyone in the Chicago trade today is feeling in better spirits and looking forward to exceptionally good business throughout the whole of 1922.

The month of January was exceptionally good. Everyone was out, working hard and getting orders. Moreover, an increase was brought about toward the latter part of the month and the first week or so of February, when the reduction announcements came thick and fast. The first was made by the Victor Co. regarding its records, followed in short order by all other companies. However, the reduction did not stop here. It included part of the hardware, motor and accessory trade, but was not general at the time. One peculiarity about this reduction was that it had the desired effect. It increased business. It was not like the reduction of several months ago that knocked the bottom out of business, so to speak, and brought about a sort of industrial stasis. This reduction turned the trick; and that is what was wanted of it. It increased business to a great extent in all phases.

The retail men were the first to feel the effects of it and soon began reporting increased activities and calling for more goods. This had the desired effect on the manufacturers and caused them to begin opening all departments and putting on more help in order to take care of the sudden and increased demand. Nor was the activity confined to regular customers. Inquiries came pouring in thick and fast from all directions from men who had been practically out of the game for some time, and many were from well-rated concerns who heretofore had been in no way connected with the talking machine industry. Some, when looked up, were found to be from commercial firms of high rating, particularly from this section of the country. We may, therefore, expect, before the end of 1922 to see some new instruments on the market, for apparently these expected new faces are strongly entrenched financially and capable of turning out good instruments once they begin.

All of which augurs well for the men handling hardware, such as motors, tone arms and accessories, nor can the trade here be blamed at this rate for expecting a good business year. The retailers are taking advantage of every possible tie-up that presents itself. For example, whenever theatrical stars, grand opera, legitimate or vaudeville, make their appearance, the dealers are not hesitating in notifying their clientele of the fact, provided, of course, these particular headliners have recordings on the market. In the past nothing like this was taken advantage of—that is to say, not for the last couple of years at least. It was unnecessary. Business came without trying to get it, and, therefore, headliners came and went unnoticed, so far as those dealing in records were concerned. However, the appearance of a star nowadays brings forth great activity among the record dealers and these activities are rewarded by good sales. In many instances some of the very dealers who are now doing this tie-up work report that even though their record sales in the past were very satisfactory their sales today are even more so, and quite a few of them are wondering what would have happened in the past if they had done some tie-ups on top of their easy business.

Music in the Air

One of the latest fads to interest Chicago and vicinity is "radio-in-the-home." The original impetus came when transmitting antennae were installed at the Auditorium Theater during the grand opera season. The daily papers began publishing data about Hertzian waves and the wireless stations throughout the country were permitted to operate for the purpose of public entertainment.

Of course, all sending stations are under government control and have specified times during the day when they are permitted to work, and for this reason the locations of the various stations and the time of their program is printed. There is no governmental control over the receiving equipment and as a consequence wireless telephone antennae are daily seen rising in increasing numbers over the housetops of Chicago.

Perhaps the most popular radio-in-the-home instrument is manufactured by the Westinghouse Electric Mfg. Co., of East Pittsburgh, Pa., for which the National Radio Sales & Service Co., of Chicago, has been appointed sales agent. This latter company is located in one of the Chicago, Illinois.

The Sterling Reproducer with Edison attachment not only harmonizes in appearance with the Edison machine, but harmonizes with it in its perfect adaptation to all Edison requirements.

To say that the Sterling Reproducer plays all records and plays them beautifully is no idle statement. It is based on scientific facts which talking machine experts will appreciate.

The Sterling Reproducer when used on the Edison absolutely synchronizes when playing both hill and dale and lateral records. The Edison machine automatically moves the reproducer 150 threads to the inch and sufficient free motion is allowed by the Sterling for the difference between 150 and 80 threads. Upon completion of the record, when the lever is operated to release the reproducer from the record, the reproducer automatically returns to its original or starting position.

four salesmen in your window

If you could afford to hire four salesmen to stand in your display window and hold up new records, you would probably sell a good many of the records, wouldn't you? The passers-by, of course, could not hear through the glass what your salesmen might tell them was the name of the record. And unless the salesmen were willing to fox-trot for the benefit of the onlookers or to move their lips as though singing, no one could know what kind of a record it might be. The salary of these four salesmen would be prohibitive. But they would sell a tremendous lot of records.

Lyon & Healy offer you four new salesmen each month. The salary for all four will be only two dollars. They will shout the name of the record clear through the window. And they will clearly tell whether it is a dance record or a song or a violin solo.

They are the L & H Victor Record Window Display Cards.

This service was instituted for the benefit of our merchants who wanted a card service that would be high-class, attention-compelling and low in cost. The L & H service is of all of these.

Four cards are issued each month, two of them 14 by 22 inches; two are 11 by 14 inches. They feature the four best numbers of the monthly Victor release. They attract attention because, being printed in several colors, they are very striking. The drawings are of the finest character done by a high-priced commercial artist.

There is no similarity between these cards and the average gaudy lithographs. The L & H Cards are individual, different, and of the highest standard.

You can use the Lyon & Healy Display Cards equally well in your windows, about your store, in your booths or under the glass of your counter.

large Loop buildings and has been instrumental in popularizing talking machine-record concerts via wireless telephone daily at 4 o'clock, continuing for about fifteen minutes, during which time a series of talking machine records are played at the K. Y. W. radio station, located in the Commonwealth Edison building. At this time amateur radio operators, located for hundreds of miles around Chicago are listening in on the concert, and many talking machine dealers report a great number of record sales traceable to these concerts. At 8 p. m. sharp during the recent grand opera season in Chicago performances were also "listened in."

The little Westinghouse instruments sold by the National Radio Sales & Service Co. vary in price and the literature put out by this company pertaining to these outfits contains the following paragraph of appreciation:

"Radio history is being written broadcast in opera. It is only right that acknowledgement should be made to the Chicago Opera Association, Mary Garden, general director, and the Commonwealth Edison Co. for making such a program a reality."

Columbia and Kerekjarto

Under the auspices of L. L. Sebok, of the international record department of the Columbia Graphophone Co., Chicago branch, Duci de Kerekjarto, violinist, appeared in concert at the store of the Winter Piano Co., Columbia dealers, 516 Grand avenue, Milwaukee, Wis., recently. Upon his return to Chicago Mr. Sebok said that evidently Kerekjarto Columbia records have built a large following for this artist in Milwaukee, judging from the select audience of professional musicians and amateur music-lovers gathered for the occasion. The audience kept Kerekjarto playing selections which he recorded for the Columbia Co., and after the concert the audience expressed its gratitude and appreciation for the artist's work by purchasing his records in large quantities.

Souvenir Memo Books

A recent addition to Columbia's long line of dealer service articles is the Columbia souvenir memo book and yearly calendar, which consists of 106 pages. These little books are intended primarily to appeal to women who, according to the opinion of the Chicago sales force of the Columbia branch, purchase 80 per cent of all records bought. The service department believes that housekeepers as a rule never possess, and always have a need for, an attractive memorandum book in which to keep track of their household or personal needs, engagements, recipes, etc., which they can carry with them for ready reference. By presenting an attractive and useful gift such as this Columbia dealers are expected to meet with immediate response, for most women value such courtesies highly.

A new idea is said to have been incorporated in the making of these books. A number of the pages are for personal data, while the remaining pages are ruled with the heading, "Records I Want to Hear," and at the bottom of each sheet some Columbia record is suggested by title, artist, number and price.

"The Sheik" Tie-up

"The Sheik," a Paramount picture which met with tremendous success, proved a wonderful tie-up for the record of the popular song, "The Sheik," in Chicago. Columbia dealers especially reported unusual sales of the Columbia record of "The Sheik," played by Ray Miller's Black and White Melody Boys. The method by which the Columbia dealers tied up was not elaborate or expensive, but very effective. Many of the dealers rented Arabian costumes and hired colored men to impersonate "The Sheik." It was the duty of "The Sheik" to parade around the vicinity of the retail stores. While doing his stunts he passed out a card which on one side bore the simple statement "The Sheik is out," and on the other side was the dealer's name and address. Needless to say this method of tie-up created considerable interest while "The Sheik" was fresh in the minds of the public.

Another tie-up was made through the assistance of Dan Roache, publicity manager of the Lasky Film Corp., Chicago branch, who made arrangements to tie up with every Columbia dealer in town who has a place in the vicinity of the theatre where "The Sheik" was shown.

January Furniture Market

The January furniture market was the means of bringing many talking machine dealers to Chicago from all parts of the country. The local branch of the Columbia Co. used a special register for the enrollment of Columbia dealers only, which, at the end of the show, contained numerous names, showing that dealers had come here from all parts of the country. A brief canvass of the furniture manufacturers exhibiting at the Chicago branch of the Furniture Show this year shows that there is a very optimistic trend to business in general for the coming year.

Coming and Going

T. W. Williams, of the sales department of the Chicago Talking Machine Co., left Chicago recently for a two weeks' vacation to Little Rock, Ark., where he is visiting his folks. During the summer months Mr. Williams was unable to take his regular vacation, owing to business activities. From present indications, beginning with the first of February, there will be necessity for intensive activity in the Chicago trade, and Mr. Williams is, therefore, making preparations.

One of the recent visitors to Chicago was Frank Ashworth, of Weber & Ashworth, Victor dealers, of Cadillac, Mich. He reported that the holiday season proved exceptionally good and that all indications are for a very prosperous year.

W. W. Clarke, of London, Visits Chicago

The Chicago trade was recently visited by none other than Walter W. Clarke, assistant general manager of the Gramophone Co., of London, England, who is in this country studying American business methods with a view to getting ideas from us that will be applicable to British and European business.

In making a comparison of the British retail business with ours, Mr. Clarke mentioned that they had not adopted over there the American idea of demonstrating booths. When a person comes in to hear a record in the British Isles he purchases several slugs similar to those used in telephones. He is then given a seat and a list of the records with numbers. The seat he is given is before a prepared dial which has an indicator. He then deposits the slug in the slot, sets the indicator dial and places two listening tubes to his ears. The indicator dial automatically operates a similar one downstairs in the basement, and the employe in attendance there puts the desired record on a small machine and sets it in motion. Therefore, it will be seen that a charge is made for the hearing of each record, but whether or not this charge is deducted from the purchase price of the record was not mentioned by Mr. Clarke. He did mention that the Unit Construction Co. has fitted up two splendid stores on the American plan for the Gramophone Co. in London.

Another interesting topic he touched on was that in the British countries the dealers have not as yet adopted the deferred payment plan so popular in this country. Their business has been done on a strictly cash basis.

W. C. Griffiths Likes Indianapolis

Dame rumor has it that W. C. Griffiths, assistant sales manager of the Chicago Talking Machine Co., will soon become a Benedict. At this writing we do not know who the fortunate young lady is, but we have every reason to suspect that her home is in Indianapolis. Putting two and two together we have come to the conclusion that this is probably the cause of his recent trips to that city.

Hoot! Mon!

The appearance of Sir Harry Lauder at the Great Northern Theatre on January 23 brought about a great increase in the sale of his Victor records. Dealers in all sections of the city reported tremendous sales on all of his numbers, especially the latest releases.

Why Victor Dealers Are Optimistic

While the first of the year showed every indication of a normal increase in business, according to W. D. Geissler, of the Chicago Talking Machine Co., the Victor Co.'s reversion to pre-war prices acted as an incentive which brought about a tremendous increase in volume of sales. These pre-war prices are applicable to the records only. Every Victor dealer in Chicago is exceptionally happy and active. They all report an increased and steady demand for all Victor goods and a feeling of optimism maintains throughout their ranks.

An Interesting Attachment

A new company has just been formed in Chicago which bears the name of the Myers Mfg. Co. The offices are in the Manhattan Building, near Van Buren street, on Dearborn. Papers of incorporation bear the following names: B. Myers, president; Irving J. Dorf, vice-president; R. Graebert, second vice-president; J. G. Kaso, secretary and treasurer. The sales manager is Ernest Zietler. The amount of the incorporation is $25,000.

This company has just put on the market a little instrument which they call the Universal record re-cutter. Their claims for this little instrument are very interesting, as they state their invention was perfected only after years of study and expenditures of large sums of money. The purpose of the instrument is to renew old, worn-out records by simply attaching them to the sound box and allowing the device to run through the record grooves, just as though it were playing. When the last groove has been reached the record is practically recut, and in better condition to play than was the case before the operation was commenced.

The instrument is of metal, cylindrical in form, one end being closed off and the other end pointed, having a set screw and a small hole for the insertion of a needle. The second part of the instrument is a collar, held in place by a threaded arm which, when screwed into the opening of the collar, causes a wedge between the collar and the cylinder. The other end of this arm is cut to fit into the regular needle-slot of the sound box. Within the hollow cylinder is a small piece of machined steel, which is oscillatory in an up-and-down direction within the cavity.

In operating, the following procedure is carried out: A very hard steel needle is placed in the cutter. The cutter, in turn, is attached to the sound box, its position being such that when ready for playing it will ride the record in a horizontal position. The record is started and the needle in the cutter, traversing the grooves, causes the little piece of steel within the cylinder to vibrate, which vibration in turn acts, as it were, like a trip-hammer. This trip-hammer effect causes the needle to plunge through the dirt and other particles which have been ironed into the record grooves, and to dig out all foreign material. After the operation the re-cutter is detached and the record can then be played in the ordinary way. Of course, objection will be raised by those unfamiliar with this instrument that it will cut and destroy the record grooves, but the instrument must be actually seen in operation before its merits can fully be appreciated.

Reduction in Tonofone Prices

The recent reduction in price of Tonofone needles, made by the Tonofone Co., proved to be quite a stimulus to business, and the reaction was greater than anticipated. This reduction benefits dealers greatly in that the retail list price remains the same, which brings them a greater profit and at the same time does not affect the consumer. The reduction in needles was brought about by a reduction in costs of raw material and labor. The increased profit to dealers is especially noticeable on the twenty-five cent packages and the trade as a whole has been taking advantage of this as may be seen by the number of orders which have been coming in daily.

J. F. Johantgen, president of the Tonofone Co., tells The World that there have been several changes made in packing recently, which, when put into effect, brought about a marked saving in advertising expenses and this saving was one of the items which went for making the reduction in the price of needles possible. The saving was effected by making their parcel post mailing cartons a trifle larger, and this permitted the insertion of leaflets and samples of needles to be used for advertising purposes by the dealers. Heretofore this went out packed in separate envelopes, and plus the cost of mailing, proved very expensive at the end of the year. It was then that Mr. Johantgen got the idea of weighing the carton of Tonofone needles, in doing which he found that the weight was considerably under two pounds but that the charges for mailing were the same nevertheless. He, therefore, hit upon the idea of making the carton a little larger and enclosing the samples and advertising leaflets, so as to make up two pounds, but at the same time eliminating extra cost of mailing and packing.

The Tonofone Co. is also getting out a large quantity of dummy cartons for dealer show purposes, and the printers are now working on a variety of little easel-backed showcards. All of these items are being sent to dealers as quickly as received from the printers and the dealers in turn are sending back many congratulatory letters showing their appreciation of these helps which are being given them by the Tonofone Co.

Preparing New Models

The Federal Phonograph Co. of this city is preparing to bring out a new line of console talking machines. The new styles, which are to be placed upon the market early in March, will be medium-priced, and especially attractive for jobbers. The models will be of the Queen Anne, Adam and Sheraton periods, and will be furnished in mahogany and walnut. The sizes of these new models will be 35 by 38 by 21 inches.

Welcome Patricola

Loop-hounds in Chicago are a happy bunch nowadays because they can get, and take home with them, the voice of their favorite songbird, Patricola. This was made possible by her debut into talking machine land by way of Victor record No. 18838. This is Miss Patricola's first appearance on Victor records and her offerings are two vocal selections, "I've Got My Habits On" and "Happy Hottentot." Miss Patricola made her first hit in Chicago years ago as an entertainer. Her voice, plus her ability as a violinist, brought her almost immediate recognition, and when she made her first vaudeville appearance in Chicago it is said by old-timers that she proved one of the biggest hits that ever showed in the big Loop houses.

Funny Fanny Brice

Another Victor artist to make her initial bow in February is funny Fanny Brice, of the Ziegfeld Follies. It surely was a happy idea to release her records right at the time she was making such a tremendous hit at a local theatre, and it was a still happier idea that the record embodied two of her songs with which she has been making this hit, namely, "Second-Hand Rose" and "My Man." All told, therefore, the personal appearance of Miss Brice at one theatre and of Sir Harry Lauder at another ought to be the means of getting in a great deal of record business for Victor dealers in Chicago.

Important Brunswick Announcement

The Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. has just made the announcement that it has appointed John L. Du Breuil as district manager of the phonograph division in the territories covered by the Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Buffalo branches. Mr. Du Breuil was formerly connected with the Columbia Graphophone Co. at its branch in Cleveland and his many friends in that district will be glad to welcome him back to his old territory. After personally meeting the entire personnel of the executive offices of the Brunswick-Balke headquarters in Chicago, and after a visit to the motor and cabinet plants of the Brunswick Co., he became greatly enthusiastic over the possibilities of Brunswick and assured all members of the Brunswick Co. with whom he came in contact that he was going to make them all sit up and take notice.

A Suggestion for Use of Windows

Over in one of the big show windows of the Peoples' Gas, Light & Coke Co., on Adams and Michigan, will be seen one of the prettiest and most cleverly gotten up displays depicting a modern kitchen seen in these parts in many a long day. The most interesting feature of it all is a sign on one of the small white tables which says that Edith Mason and her husband, Maestro Polacco, of the Chicago Grand Opera Co., had purchased this particular kitchen and that it had been sent to their villa in Milan, Italy.

The reason this particular item is mentioned is merely to give readers of The Talking Machine World a little idea of how other lines of activities tie up to possibilities. Surely it is a far cry between the opera and the kitchen, but nevertheless if it weren't for the kitchen there would be no opera. Maybe this is how the gas company's window decorator figures it up.

Change Line of Operations

The firm of C. W. Howe & Co. have made the announcement that they are closing out their interest in the talking machine business and have just been appointed agents for the Harsha tire storage battery. In the future this company will confine their activities to this line. C. W. Howe & Co. were one of the oldest concerns in Chicago to place on the market tone arms, sound boxes, motors and other items. Their tone arms and motors were patented in the United States and other countries, and the patents are being disposed of. Negotiations have just been closed for the manufacture of the motor under foreign patent-rights and domestic negotiations for these rights are now under way. The same procedure applies to their rights on tone arms and other accessories controlled by them.

Sterling Devices Activities

The Sterling Devices Co. reports a very great increase in January business for Sterling Edison attachments and No. 41 tone arms. The report comes from W. O. Miessner, who states that this increase indicates to him that dealers and manufacturers are exceptionally busy in all parts of the country. "There is no reason why our trade should not be busy," says Mr. Miessner, "and the fellows who are doing good, conscientious, hard work, getting out and getting after the business, are those who are sending in orders for attachments. This is not because of any work on my part, but is merely a summary of the letters that I have been receiving recently from these dealers. I furthermore gather from these letters that this activity is not a spasm but a long-thought-out plan which these dealers have put into effect. That plan is: 'If you want it, go out and get it.'"

Besides the activity at the headquarters of the Sterling Devices Co. there are several other interesting happenings which will be announced in forthcoming editions of The Talking Machine World, which Miessner says will cause a whole lot of favorable comment because of their filling a long-felt want. Just what these coming events will be has not been stated as yet, but it is needless to add here that The World representative is just as anxious to find out what it is all about as is the general trade.

On Western Trip

H. L. Mills, secretary and treasurer of the United Mfg. & Distributing Co., left Chicago the latter part of January for an extended western trip which will carry him to the Coast, and upon his arrival on said Coast it is his intention to pay a visit to Los Angeles for a short rest before returning to his desk in Chicago. Before leaving Chicago Mr. Mills stated that the price reduction on enclosed motors, as announced in recent issues of The Talking Machine World, has brought innumerable inquiries from all parts of the country and many new names, which, when looked up, were found to be names of firms of high standing in the commercial field. A great number of the inquiries were from the Middle and Far West, which was the primary reason for his trip west which will take him to the Coast.

Hold Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Wizard Talking Machine Co. was held on the evening of January 27, and all the officers were re-elected. Sales Manager Hadley, who will remain in charge of the sales, stated that they had an exceptionally good business year during 1921 and that plans were now well under way for even better business in 1922. There is a possibility that the price of their instrument, the Valuephone, will be increased, as it is planned to put out a machine of exceptionally high workmanship, finish and value.

In New Quarters

The Nupoint Mfg. Co. has moved its quarters from Fifty-ninth street and Racine avenue to 630 South Wabash avenue. This company took up its headquarters on the South Side about a year or so ago and in a short time has grown to be of considerable importance in the supply branch of the talking machine industry. In its new headquarters it will occupy practically the entire second floor.

Changes Managers

S. F. Patchin has been appointed manager of the retail Victrola department of the Cable Company, to succeed Lionel Tompkins, who has officiated in this capacity for several years. Mr. Tompkins is now managing the retail piano department at Jackson and Wabash avenues. Mr. Patchin is widely known in the talking machine trade in the mid-West, and for several years was in charge of the Victrola department of the J. B. Bradford Co., of Milwaukee, Wis.

Remodeling Store

The Woodlawn Phonograph Co., at 1314 East Sixty-third street, has just finished remodeling its place of business. Proprietor Richard Randall, who opened this retail shop several years ago, has been quite successful in making it one of the best-known and busiest retail shops in that section of Woodlawn. He formerly had six demonstration booths, but during the remodeling of the store he increased this number by three.

A Visitor From Australia

G. H. Horton, of G. H. Horton Co., Sydney, Australia, spent the last two weeks of January visiting the Chicago trade. He is making a tour of the United States in the interests of his company, visiting manufacturing plants, with the idea of gaining information pertaining to manufacture. The Horton Co. puts out a talking machine of its own make, and while in Chicago Mr. Horton signed up quite a number of contracts for motors, tone arms and accessories for talking machines.

Swiss Yodeler Visits

Charles Schoenenberger, said to be one of the world's foremost yodelers, visited Chicago recently, in company with Edwin C. Ingold, vice-president and sales manager of the Ferdinand-Ingold Import Co., of Monroe, Wis. The aforementioned company is marketing a new record known as the "Helvetia" Swiss and German yodeling records, which are produced in the original German-Swiss and German tongues.

The Ferdinand-Ingold Co. was recently formed in Monroe, Wis., for the purpose of marketing exclusively these German and Swiss yodels and have been fortunate in securing such international artists as Mr. Schoenenberger and Mme. Schneckenbuehl. The officers of the company are: Ferdinand Ingold, president; E. C. Ingold, vice-president and sales manager, and Walter W. Ingold, secretary and treasurer.

Speedy Publicity Department

Some of the quickest publicity that we have seen turned out in many a day was recently accomplished by the advertising department of Lyon & Healy. On Friday afternoon, January 27, they received an announcement from the Victor Talking Machine Co., with illustrations showing the new line of console Victrolas. By Saturday night a large folder of this announcement, together with electrotypes showing the five new Victrola consoles, was being mailed out. These folders were in the hands of the Chicago trade on Monday morning. Where the speed came in was in the matter of getting out the electrotypes. The photographs which Lyon & Healy received from the Victor Co. were retouched by their artists and immediately sent to the electrotypers. These cuts show models Nos. 240, 260, 280, 300 and 330, and range in price from $115 to $350.

Joins Brunswick Staff

Robert W. Churchill, who for the past year or so has been looking after a part of the Chicago trade for the Emerson Phonograph Co., has severed his connections with that company and is now associated with the wholesale sales force of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. He will look after the North Side territory for this concern.

Takes a Long Lease

H. I. Mirick, president and general manager of the University Music Shop, Inc., 508 State street, Madison, Wis., when in Chicago recently announced that he had just signed a five-year lease for the building in which his store is located.

Good for Electric Motors

There is an association in Chicago known as the Electric Club, which occasionally gives out news that should interest dealers and manufacturers of electric talking machine motors. One piece of information recently given out was that there are 21,000,000 homes in the United States, of which 8,000,000 are already wired for, and using, electricity, and that all these are located in electric zones; that is, in districts easily accessible to electric current. During 1921 1,700,000 of these homes were electrically equipped. The fact that there are 8,000,000 prospects for electric talking machine motors ought to be good news to the trade and give it something to think about should it begin to won-

Quigley Back With Witmark

A short time ago we reported that Thomas J. Quigley, one of the most popular sheet music publishers' representatives in the mid-West, had resigned as manager of the Chicago house of M. Witmark & Sons, to become the head of his own newly organized concern, the Quigley Music Co. Now, however, Tom announces that he has already severed his relations with the Quigley Co. and is back at his old desk with M. Witmark & Sons. There are a whole lot of people in the trade who always wish Tom the very best thing that can happen to him, just because he is not only a fine fellow, but a man of distinguished ability in his line. M. Witmark & Sons are certainly to be congratulated to again have at the head of their progressive Chicago business and offices a man of such long experience in the trade and who knows their own business so thoroughly.

Phil Deterling in Chicago

Phil Deterling, head of the Deterling Phonograph Co., of Tipton, Ind., was in Chicago the latter part of January, both buying and selling. Mr. Deterling's plans indicate that a big year is expected by the Hoosier organization. An impressive assortment of new and improved styles is in the course of preparation and dealers in the Deterling line will be well equipped for 1922.

Happy Six Entertain

The recent appearance of the Happy Six, exclusive Columbia artists, at the Chicago and Tivoli theatres, registered that organization very favorably in the minds of Chicagoans. The Happy Six used numbers in this act which they have recorded for Columbia and played them with the same combinations and variations as in the records. It is announced by the Columbia office here that this dance orchestra is available for concert work by any Columbia dealer in the country, and that bookings are being arranged for their appearance through all Columbia branches.

Vaughn De Leath Drops In

The entertainment committee of the Chicago Piano Club put on a number at their recent meeting, January 23, which went a great way toward making up one of the best shows they have ever had. This number, which was none other than Miss Vaughn De Leath, prominent stage favorite and Okeh record artist, was made possible by the quick work of E. A. Fearn, of the Consolidated Talking Machine Co., and Charles M. Neumeister, sales manager of the Okeh Western division. Miss De Leath had been en route from California to New York and had stopped off between trains. While waiting for her train she called on Messrs. Fearn and Neumeister and arrangements were speedily made. Although Miss De Leath was in the city only a few hours, she succeeded in making a tremendous hit with members of the Piano Club by her singing.

Open New Department

Under the direction of L. C. Wiswell, manager of the Victrola department, Lyon & Healy have just opened a new service department which they believe will be of great benefit to their dealers. The purpose of this new department is to get out and help dealers in all phases of selling, stocking and canvassing. This "dealers' building department," as it is known, will be looked after by Joe Gannon, who formerly had charge of their retail canvassing force. Mr. Gannon is now engaged in instructing his men who are to call on the dealers, teaching them to keep track of their stocks of machines and records and to order supplies of all sorts, keep after prospects, get up prospect lists, and, if necessary, get behind the counters and instruct sales people.

New Columbia Store

A new Columbia store has been opened at 1221 East Forty-seventh street by N. H. Shoukair. The formal opening on the first of the month was attended by a large gathering of local residents. Favours were presented, and besides the musical entertainment rendered by Columbia Grafonolas some of the best local talent helped make things merry. The new store is up to the minute in equipment, having six modern hearing rooms and up-to-date record racks. The color scheme throughout is white enamel.

This window display is used by the Brunswick Phonograph Shop, 225 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill. It has increased sales of Geer Repeaters more than 200% and is proving an exceptional window attraction.

Put This In Your Window and Watch Results

HERE is an idea that will increase the attention value of your window at least 200 per cent. Many stores have put in similar displays and, without exception, the sales of Geer Repeaters and records have jumped from the day the displays were put in.

Why Geer Repeaters Sell Quickly

The Geer Repeater is as near fool proof as a repeater can be made. It fills a real want. It can be put on or taken off as easy as a record. For dancing, dining, or when working or resting, this repeater doubles the joy of owning a phonograph.

Geer Repeaters repeat instantly and as often as desired, without injury to the needle, the record or the machine.

Our "Demonstration Package" Now Ready

Send for our "Demonstration Package" and make a window display similar to that shown in the above cut. You will be surprised at the increased value of the window and the quick sales which result.

Read This Letter.

Enclosed find order for one gross of Geer Repeaters. Our books show that this is the third time we have reordered these repeaters since the first of the year. A few weeks before Christmas we placed an electric machine in the window demonstrating this repeater, and the sales tripled at once. This demonstration is still running and we are convinced that it has increased our business considerably in all departments. You might be interested in sending a representative to our store to see a record that has been playing continuously in this demonstration since the beginning. We estimate that it has played some three thousand (3000) times and outside of minor surface noises the reproduction is almost as good as a new record. Wishing you success, we beg to be considered, yours truly, Brunswick Phonograph Shop, Arnold B. Stoll, Manager.

Big Victor Night at Marigold

Monday evening, January 30, was Victor night at the Marigold Gardens. The Victor dealers and jobbers of the city were there in full force to enjoy one of the best shows ever put on at this famous café. The show included more good music, more good dancing and more pretty girls than ever before. One of the biggest hits of the program, which will be continued during the ten weeks of their engagement, was an exclusive Victor "stunt."

Number six on the program was entitled "My Victor Record Girls." From the doors of a huge Victrola some ten feet high emerged girls dressed to represent various well-known popular song hits brought out during the last decade. Each girl, as she came out of the Victrola, sang the particular hit which she represented and, as a finale, all of them sang Will Rossiter's song, "Music Is Wonderful When You Are Lonesome." In our opinion, number six was the hit of the program.

Not only Victor dealers, but habitués of the Marigold, were on hand to hear and enjoy. The affair was an excellent advertisement for the Victor line and decidedly appropriate at the Marigold, where Roy Bargy and his Benson's Orchestra hold forth.

The orchestra that has made so many popular Victor dance records was there in all its glory to furnish a brand of dance music not excelled in any part of the United States.

This was one of a series of meetings of Victor jobbers at the Marigold since the Benson Orchestra has been making Victor records. If we are to judge by the enthusiastic appreciation by the Victor merchants present the dance records by Benson's Orchestra have a group of energetic supporters in this city.

Will Rossiter, the Chicago publisher, was on hand to hear his songs, "Music Is Wonderful When You Are Lonesome" and "Crystal Gazing," go over big. The first number has been officially endorsed by the Chicago Piano Club as highly valuable musical propaganda. We extend to Mr. Rossiter best wishes for its success and congratulate him upon placing it with the Marigold Revue.

An Attractive Music Shop

One of the most attractive little talking machine shops in Austin is that conducted by Charles Wolf. It is located at 115 North Cicero avenue, next door to the West End Art Shop, which is conducted by Mrs. Wolf. Both these places of business have attracted considerable attention in that locality for their extreme beauty and it seems as though there were a happy competition between Mr. and Mrs. Wolf for honors in interior decoration. At night the talking machine shop, which is confined to Kim-

Attends Milwaukee Convention

Charles W. Neumeister, Western sales manager for the Okeh division of the General Phonograph Corp., has just returned from Milwaukee, where he went to attend a joint convention of Okeh and Sonora dealers, which was held under the auspices of the Yahr & Lange Drug Co., in that city. The convention was held at the Milwaukee Athletic Club, with Fred E. Yahr presiding as chairman. Mr. Neumeister said that the convention was one of the most successful of its kind ever held in Milwaukee. An elaborate program was given after the banquet, during which Mr. Neumeister told how Okeh records are made and explained the mysteries of master and mother records.

Visited New York

John McKenna, manager of the Chicago branch of the Columbia Graphophone Co., has returned from a short visit to the executive offices of the Columbia Co. in New York.

Moves Offices

The Templar Mfg. Co. has just moved to a new location at 3225 Lexington street, where the main sales office and assembling department are now under the same roof. Heretofore these two departments have been separated, but it was found that the work could be more efficiently handled by having them together.

About two months ago some radical improvements were made on the Templar automatic stop and the company now feels that it is offering to the trade something extremely simple and efficient, to say the least. A new model which will be ready for delivery about the middle of February has just been perfected.

The business of the company has grown remarkably in the last six months and the salesmen have opened many new accounts and gained considerable new friends. A new inspection department has been installed recently, where every part is carefully tested before and after assembly, as it is the aim of the company to

In New Headquarters

A. C. Hoffer, of the A. C. Hoffer Music Co., Vincennes, Ind., was a recent visitor to the Chicago trade and while here gave out the news that his store had been moved from 118 Main street to 429 Main street, across from the new Pantheon Theatre. The Hoffer Music Co. is said to be carrying one of the largest lines of musical instruments in that part of the State. The new store was formerly occupied by L. E. Wanke Music Co., which has ceased to operate. The Hoffer Music Co. is strictly a Vincennes concern, in which a number of local business and professional men are interested. When the new store was taken over numerous improvements and alterations were made in addition to repainting and redecorating the interior and installing six new demonstration booths.

Symphony Music Co. Expands

C. B. Cordner, head of that energetic wholesale and retail music house, the Symphony Music Co., located at Sheridan and Wilson avenues, the "uptown" of Chicago, has plans in mind for the swift expansion of his wholesale branch. He announces that Thos. G. Leddy, for five years with the Commonwealth Edison Co., in charge of one of its retail stores, has been secured as manager of the retail department of this company. This appointment will give Mr. Cordner much more time for the jobbing activities of the concern.

A. E. Nelson will continue in active charge of wholesale sales and during the next few months will direct most of his attention to cultivating the States of Illinois and Wisconsin. The Symphony Music Co. has advanced with rapid strides in the jobbing field since it entered it a short time ago. Its small talking machine in particular has attracted wide attention in the trade. It has been found necessary to add two road men to the wholesale force for the purpose of covering the territory adjacent to Chicago. Activities in the wholesale end of the business during the month of February will be concentrated on the Geer repeater and the Efficiency electric motor.

Fuhri Visits Chicago

W. C. Fuhri, general sales manager for the Okeh division of the General Phonograph Corp., spent three days in Chicago recently visiting the Okeh trade. Mr. Fuhri stated that he was well pleased with the business Chicago's Okeh jobbers and dealers were doing, and predicted that ere long Chicago's Okeh family would grow to be one of the biggest factors in the Western trade. "Our dealers are fast taking advantage of the progress Okeh is making," said Mr. Fuhri, "and down at our plant we are doing everything humanly possible to make Okeh records absolutely faultless." After his visit to the trade here, Mr. Fuhri boarded a train for St. Louis and points West. From there he goes to Kansas City, thence southward to Texas, Atlanta and finally, after about one month, he will travel up the Eastern States to Okeh's home office.

New Fibre Needle Envelope

The Hall Mfg. Co. has just changed the design and coloring scheme of the small envelopes in which it packed its needles for the retail trade. The new envelopes are printed in four colors, something on the order of the display literature which it put out to the trade some time ago. This same color scheme is carried out in a new display carton which it is also about to send to the trade. This carton is to be used by the dealer for counter purposes and when set up it makes a very attractive layout.

Dream Pictures at Lyon & Healy's

During the past week or so visitors to Lyon & Healy's recital hall have been given a treat by means of Branson De Cou's Dream Pictures, described as "a musical visualization of nature's moods." The pictures are in reality photographic slides which were made from views taken by Mr. De Cou in his travels. The pictures were transferred to stereopticon slides, beautifully colored by some of the country's foremost landscape painters. A picture is thrown upon the screen and simultaneously music is started either by a Victrola or a Duo-Art reproducing piano, as the case may be. The picture is allowed to remain on the screen for a certain length of time, and then, by means of a dissolving apparatus, slowly fades out, while another scene takes its place. For example, when a Victrola rendition of "From the Land of the Sky Blue Water,"

Each bit of music has its own particular series of slides and the combination is offered for the use of intimate gatherings where such imaginative programs appeal. There is no lecture beyond a brief preliminary description of each number. There is perfect synchronization to the music and pictures. As Mr. De Cou says, he does not attempt definitely to illustrate program music, but rather to visualize its mood by the impressions called forth in the imagination.

Local Gennett Publicity

Spread in every nook and corner of Chicago, and especially on the busy elevated platforms, one sees on every hand posters ranging in size from one sheet to twenty-four sheets announcing the latest releases of Gennett records. The placing of these posters is done according to zones. All Gennett dealers in each zone come in for a share of the publicity. The posters are printed in the following manner. The numbers and names of the records are printed with their retail prices and immediately under the tabulated list are the words "Get Them at These Stores." Then comes another tabulated list giving the names and addresses of each Gennett dealer in that particular zone. This method of publicity has been in effect for some time now, and Gennett dealers in Chicago assert that this method of exploitation has great pulling power, and numerous sales of Starr phonographs and pianos are traceable directly to these record posters.

The Penalty of Hustling

A lot of people make haste by running around in circles and never getting anywhere. Still others "make haste slowly" and accomplish everything they tackle. The latter method is the one to which the Fricke "Twins," over at the Lakeside Supply Co., adhere. And that they accomplish lots of things is readily acknowledged by everyone in the Chicago trade. One of their greatest accomplishments has been to keep their customers satisfied, not only by giving them the goods they order, but by shipping the goods when the customer wants them. And to do that one must hustle to get the right kind of goods and, after this is done, to get them ready for shipment on time. Carrying on business according to this plan has been the keynote of both Bill and Gus Fricke, proprietors of the Lakeside Supply Co. They started out this way several years ago, and have been doing it ever

Just where they are going on May 1 is not as yet definitely settled, but, we are assured of one thing, the new location must be in the Loop.

New Boston Album

The Boston Book Co., of this city, has just brought out a new album which has already met with the approval of a great number of the Chicago trade who have been fortunate enough to secure samples.

The new album is made along entirely new lines. Instead of a metal back it now has one of wood, which performs the function of giving the album more rigidity and prevents the cover from becoming loose. This solid wood back also enables the new albums to be of loose-leaf construction. The purpose of the loose leaf is that if one of the envelopes becomes loose or torn it may be easily taken out, and a new one inserted in its place. Heretofore the envelopes or leaves were permanent affairs, but with this new loose-leaf arrangement they can easily be changed at will, so that an owner may have both ten-inch or twelve-inch envelopes, if he so desires, in the same album.

A Victor Visitor

Ralph L. Freeman, general manager of the Victor Talking Machine Co., Camden, N. J., was a recent visitor to Chicago, calling on the Victor trade here. During his short stay Mr. Freeman was very busy, and as soon as possible left for Omaha for a short call, after which he will journey to the Pacific Coast.

Clarence Campbell Calls

Clarence Campbell, of the Knight-Campbell Co., Denver, Col., stopped in Chicago for a short call en route from an Eastern visit.

Visits Victor

W. P. Roach, assistant manager of the Victrola department of Lyon & Healy, is spending a week or so visiting the Victor factory. The purpose of his visit is to attend the Victor school of instruction.

Printing Immense Catalog

Barnhart Bros. & Spindler, who enjoy the reputation of being one of the biggest, if not the biggest, type foundries in the country, are getting up a catalog which, upon its completion in three to four months, will certainly create much comment throughout printing and advertising circles.

For over two years R. N. McArthur, manager of the advertising department, has been working on this immense volume of more than 600 pages. The dummy shows that the book will be large and handsome. The estimated cost of publishing is $100,000. It will be of special interest to advertising men in the talking machine industry, all of whom are invited to apply for a copy when the announcement is made that it is finally off the press. An idea of what the catalog will be like may be gleaned from the single fact that every known type face will be displayed in it, as well as borders, decorative materials and other effective accessories to typography.

Mr. McArthur states that the talking machine

He further remarked that, even though his company has not pushed sales in this department for the past year, it has, nevertheless, enjoyed a fine business. Just as soon as this large catalog is disposed of it is the intention of Barnhart Bros. & Spindler, through Mr. McArthur, to direct a great deal of publicity to their talking machine department. In the course of a few months they feel they will be justified in launching a big drive for these products.

WHAT BRUNSWICK CO. THINKS ABOUT 1922

A. J. Kendrick, Sales Manager of Phonograph Division of Company, Shows How Success Lies in the Hands of the Dealers Themselves

The Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., so far as its phonograph and record interests are concerned, regards the prospects of 1922 from quite an optimistic viewpoint.

Business is rapidly steadying down. Sensational skyrocketing ascensions, succeeded by marked and sudden declines, have given way to far healthier growths and developments.

We are advising conservatism, spiced with energetic effort—the kind of effort which seeks a market only to be found as a result of careful, steady and constructive activity.

For a new company we occupy the unique position of being closely related to all American markets. Our distributing system is countrywide and is a fixed part of this company's organization. In the five years since Brunswick phonographs were first introduced, followed three years later by Brunswick records, our approach to the United States market has been broadcast and in no sense sectional.

The same relative activity is pursued in each section of the country. In that experience we have found the human element in our organization the determining factor in result-finding.

By this same token the retail phonograph dealer can determine his commercial destiny for the forthcoming year.

There is seldom an economic problem in any field which cannot be successfully met, especially in this land where "resourcefulness" is a watchword.

We find the trade in a different position than in the early months of 1921, namely, now with insufficient stocks to meet even ordinary demands, whereas in the early months of 1921 merchants were carrying overloaded stocks, if not of phonographs, of other merchandise, and so were confronted with a house-cleaning problem of more than ordinary proportions. The liquidating process necessary to the reduction of these stocks took longer than has been true in many commercial periods. But now the house is clean, the stocks are fresh, the public is exhilarated by the holiday business of buying, the banker has again, in many localities, put the old "Welcome" mat, with the readable side up, on his door-step.

These clouds seem all cleared away; we are pushing our factories to capacity, are extending our sales plans to meet and obtain the results which will now surely be forthcoming in response to earnest and serious effort.

SONORA SIGN AT BUSY CORNER

Immense Sign Gives Sonora Valuable Publicity —Dominates Corner Where It Is Located

The Kansas City Sonora sign, at the southeast corner of Grand and Twelfth streets, Kansas City, Mo., is in one of the most effective locations that could be found in that city or its territory. It faces diagonally so that it can be seen by persons approaching this busy center from two directions, and, being on top of the two-story building, is seen against the sky, so that no eye can miss it.

Kansas City is the metropolis of that part of the West in which it lies. Therefore, this sign gives publicity to Sonora not only to the people of Kansas City but to large numbers of people from the far West, Southwest and other localities who come to that city constantly on business or for pleasure.

This is only one sign of an endless chain of Sonora posters and billboards, stretching from coast to coast and from the Gulf to Canada, repeating day and night the Sonora story.

A charter of incorporation was recently granted to the Mark Sales Co., 11 S. LaSalle street, Chicago, under the laws of Illinois, to manufacture and deal in talking machine supplies, with a capital of $10,000. Incorporators are Harvey L. Happer, Albert L. Wilbur and Mark S. Porter.

THE MANDEL TONE ARM AND REPRODUCER

It's better because it's different. No loose joints. No unnecessary vibrations. No springs to make it lighter. No weights to make it heavier. The Mandel is correct down to the last little detail.

These highly efficient sound reproducing units are now available for phonograph manufacturers and assemblers.

A few hundred thousand Mandel tone arms and reproducers are now in use. That in itself is an eloquent testimonial.

We offer a tried product and a proven success.

HALLET & DAVIS IN HARTFORD

Open Attractively Equipped Talking Machine and Piano Warerooms on Asylum Street—Will Feature Brunswick Phonographs and Records in Artistically Arranged Quarters

HARTFORD, CONN., February 9.—The Hallet & Davis Co., well known in New England as piano and talking machine merchants and who conduct a prosperous establishment in Boston, have recently acquired one of the most desirable locations in this city, where they have opened a very attractive talking machine store. This new store is located on Asylum street, in the heart of the retail business section, and two entire floors will be occupied, which have been equipped with the most modern fixtures, designed to harmonize with the general scheme of decorations. Two large show windows have been specially constructed, which reflect the high-class character of the store. The second floor, according to present plans, is to be devoted to a spacious concert hall, where artists well known in the talking machine trade will be heard from time to time, a feature that has never been promoted to any extent in this city and one which will greatly interest patrons.

This beautiful new store will feature Brunswick phonographs and records exclusively, which will give this company one of the most up-to-date and most progressive representations in the East. Chester Abelowitz, of the New York Brunswick office, negotiated this important deal, and it is one more addition to the already large list of notable agencies opened by his efforts since becoming a member of the Brunswick organization.

International General Electric Places Order for Shipment to South America

The Shelton electric motor is growing steadily in popularity, not only in this country but in many foreign lands as well. W. Gentry Shelton, president of the Shelton Electric Co., New York City, recently received an order from the International General Electric Co. to ship 500 of these electric phonograph motors to South America. The shipment was made in record time and is expected to be the forerunner of big business south of the equator.

A little more persistence, a little more effort, and what seemed hopeless failure may turn to glorious success.

Records in Greater Demand Than Machines—Console Types Favored—Stocks Rather Low—Important Events of the Month

MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, MINN., February 6.—Much interest is being shown in talking machines and the indications are that the dealers in them will not have a great deal to worry about, despite the fact that sales are not as numerous as they would like. Records are going like hot cross buns on Easter, but not so the machines. And yet there is a lively interest in machines, particularly the better grades, and the sales will appear later. Dealers are keenly interested in the new models and they doubtless reflect the sentiment of the purchasing public. In the meantime the demand for records continues very strong.

George A. Mairs, head of the Victor department of W. J. Dyer & Bro., states that the dealers are keenly interested in the new console types of Victrolas and predicts that they will jump into public favor at once. Dealers generally appear to be satisfied with conditions and predict that they will be on an even keel by next Fall. It is necessary to fight for business, he says, but it is worth fighting for.

Sommers & Co. Open Many New Accounts

New accounts are being opened by G. Sommers & Co. for Pathé phonographs and records. Old dealers are showing considerable activity and the call for supplies is much better than had been expected. Particular interest is being exhibited in records. Samuel Levinson is making the rounds of the trade in the Northwest and is expected to make an interesting report on his return to headquarters.

Stone Piano Co.'s Vocalion Campaign

The advertising campaign conducted by the Stone Piano Co., in behalf of the Vocalion phonographs and records, has produced excellent results, according to Manager Gerlick. He is more than proud of the record sales, which have increased several hundred per cent.

Foster & Waldo Report Increasing Cheney Sales

Foster & Waldo Co. is having splendid success with the Cheney phonographs, which constitute one of the four lines carried by this well-known house. The phonograph department still leads the piano department and will continue to do so for some time to come if the present conditions are any indication.

Forty Billboards Feature Starr and Gennett

Forty billboards in Minneapolis exploit the fame of the Starr phonographs and Gennett records. M. L. McGinnis & Co., who distribute both, state that the increase in business has been almost phenomenal. Fred Megson now devotes his entire time to the wholesale department and is one of the busiest men in the Twin Cities. Many of the old dealers who have conducted exclusive houses in the past have taken on the Gennett records, because of the public demand for them.

Stocks With Victor Dealers Are Low

Old Victor dealers are satisfied with conditions, says Eugene F. O'Neill, of the Beckwith-O'Neill Co. The stocks at present are lighter than they have been for some time and the dealers show a keen interest in filling up. At the same time, they are buying on a sounder basis than formerly and as a consequence they and the distributors are on a more satisfactory footing.

Sewall D. Andrews Honored

Sewall D. Andrews, of the Minneapolis Drug Co., which distributes Sonora phonographs and Okeh records all over the Northwest, has been elected president of the elite Minneapolis Club. But this is not interfering with his pushing Sonoras, which are very popular.

J. J. Davin Visits Twin City Trade

James J. Davin, secretary of the Reincke-Ellis Co., Chicago, has been visiting with the Twin City dealers for a few days. He tells The World that everything is working out satisfactorily. He is an optimist and believes that the man who works will win.

The Victor Talking Machine Co. late last month made formal announcement of the fact that there are now in process of manufacture four new instruments to be added to the Victrola line and which will be ready for delivery to the trade in limited quantities within the next couple of months. The four new models are of the console type and the designs follow along the lines of the design of Victrola 300, which proved so distinctly popular during the past year. The new instruments are most attractive in appearance and are offered at list prices that

The coming of the new models has been heralded for some time past, but the actual announcement of their approaching readiness has been received with much enthusiasm by Victor wholesalers and retailers.

The new instruments are to be known as Victrola 240, listed at \$115, an attractive instrument measuring 34 $\frac{3}{4}$  inches high, 29 inches wide and 21 $\frac{1}{2}$  inches deep, fitted with nickel-plated parts,

Following the advice of the Victor company the dealers are already advising their wholesalers of their requirements in the matter of the new models, and according to reports the estimates of the dealers have been liberal.

FRENCH NESTOR'S TIMELY ADVICE

Manager of Standard Talking Machine Co., Pittsburgh, Contributes Interesting Article to Rotary Club Magazine—Timely Suggestions

PITTSBURGH, PA., February 6.—There appeared in a recent issue of "Live Steam," the official publication of the Pittsburgh Rotary Club, the following article entitled "Service and Profits," written by French Nestor, manager of the Standard Talking Machine Co. of this city, Victor wholesaler, and one of the recognized leaders in the Victor wholesale industry.

"No man ever said more, nor in fewer words, than 'He profits most who serves best.' As a classic business and social proverb this simple sentence will stand, unequaled to the end of time. Profits and service are inseparably linked together. You cannot create one without creating the other, nor can you impair or destroy one without impairing or destroying the other. Society rewards a man richly for whatsoever he gives in a spirit of true service, but robs him in the end of whatsoever he withholds in a spirit of selfishness. Unless the service of a man, or a business, renders honest value or permanent good, society will find out and repay that man or business with distrust and dubious profits.

"In business we must actually benefit the people with whom we deal. In exchange for the money they pay us, we must serve them honestly and reliably with something they actually need or want. The commercial pedestal on which a man may elevate himself above his fellows will stand only if builded upon some form of helpfulness to those from whose shoulders he climbed upon it. The earth was not created and blessed with abundance for one man, or for little groups of men, but for the great family of mankind in its entirety. We prosper in proportion to our usefulness in supplying to that family some one or more of its myriad human needs, and our reward at the end will be found to reflect the kind and quantity of service rendered."

The stock of musical instruments of the Mt. Pleasant Music Co., Mt. Pleasant, O., has been purchased by the Sawkins Piano Co. The line will be given a strong representation.

A DEPARTMENT DEVOTED TO PROMOTING RETAIL SALES

Enterprise Is What Will Count

THERE'S a fascination about numbers, and here's a way to use them for the benefit of your cash register. Take the number only of a new record you wish to feature—for example, such as "66014." Get a local showcard writer to fix up this number in the exact style of an automobile license of your State—same colors, same lettering and all. Put one in your window, with no explanation, one near the front of your store, and one in each record booth. People seeing the license "66014" in your window will wonder what it is. When they see it the second time inside your store they'll wonder still more, and the third time they'll ask your salesman, "What does '66014' mean?" Then he comes back with "Oh, that's the greatest record hit you ever heard, 66014. The title is 'O! Carlina'." (Use popular numbers only.) At reasonable time intervals feature a different record number in the same way. You'll sell records and start people talking, because curiosity is a great moving force.

* * *

A LEADING dealer of New York has had much success with a window display which takes the form of an entertainment program for the current week. A handsome, permanent frame encloses a changeable card, on which is lettered "Entertainment Program For This Week." Then follows a list of ten records, beginning with an overture or other appropriate number, then a soprano record, a violin selection, a baritone solo, an orchestra record, and so forth—varying the records so as to form a suitable program. The manager of the store says that many people come to the store without any definite record in mind, and they are given a suggestion by the list shown in his window. He chooses records of which he has an ample stock, and in this way is able to get rid of records which otherwise might remain on his shelves. After the sign is removed and a new one inserted the old sign is displayed on the counters inside the store and continues to create sales. The frame enclosing the sign includes electric lights, which are illuminated at night.

* * *

DON'T forget that the thing you are selling to the people is "music," and everything which helps to sell them the idea of music is helping your business as well. Many famous writers, poets and philosophers have expressed themselves on the subject of music in quotable phrases. Select a half dozen of these musical mottoes, have them lettered attractively by your local showcard writer and frame them. They may then be hung on the walls of your store, in the record booths, or occasionally displayed in your window. Any good bookstore can furnish you with a volume of musical quotations.

* * *

CLIP out the manufacturer's advertisements of national character bearing on your talking machine or records. Mount them on sheets of black paper, and display them on your counters or in your record booths. Many of these ads are in colors, and all are extremely useful in helping to impress upon your customers the prestige of your line. Customers like to feel that the instrument or records they are buying are nationally known and accepted as leaders. These attractive and inexpensive counter-cards and hangers will strengthen your selling talk enormously.

EVERY dealer has had trouble in cold weather on account of a coating of frost forming on his display windows, thus temporarily destroying their value. The cause of this is the unequal temperature on the opposite sides of the window, and it can be corrected by the right kind of ventilation. Warm air carries more water than cold air and when it comes in contact with the cold window-pane its water vapor deposits on the glass and immediately freezes. The remedy is to keep the temperature on both sides of the window approximately the same. If no ventilation was provided when your windows were built a successful solution is to bore a row of half-inch holes at the top of the window and another at the bottom. This will allow sufficient air to pass over the inner surface of the glass. A metal tube should be inserted in these holes to make them more slightly. There should also be a filter or fine wire cloth to prevent dust and dirt from blowing in off the street. In warm weather clogs may be placed in the tubes to keep out all dust.

A NEW ENGLAND dealer has been successful in selling talking machines to photographers for use in their studios. His sales argument is that most people come to the studio with an expression far from that which the photographer would prefer to appear on the photographic plate. But if the camera man puts on a record of a type suitable for the client and lets its strains be heard while the client is getting ready to have his picture taken the right expression is forthcoming and the photograph stands a much better chance of being successful. This plan, he claims, works equally as well for children as for older people.

THERE are many dealers who are taking advantage of the plan of keeping track of requests for records which are out of stock, then selling the record when it comes in. The plan is operated as follows: If a customer asks for a record which is not in stock he is given a printed card on which there is a space where he can insert the number of the record he wants, also its name, and his own name and address, and the date. On the same side of the card there are three spaces headed "Notice Sent," "Hold Until" and "Record Claimed." This card is kept on file. As soon as the record is in stock a notice is sent as follows: "Your record is here. We have just received a supply of Record No. _____. One of them is being reserved for you and will be held for three days." The date when this notice was sent is entered on the card in the file. When the record is claimed another check is made on the card and this completes the transaction. One retailer in New York City reports that its file of record requests never numbers less than a thousand, and these records are as good as sold. The filing system is handled by one young lady who devotes part of the quiet morning hours to this work.

* * *

IN some modern talking machine booths a bench is built along the rear wall. When upholstered and covered with tapestry it makes a comfortable, attractive seat, which will hold three people without crowding, yet takes much less space than three chairs.

* * *

IF your window has a dark background you can secure a very striking effect by adapting the principle illustrated by the dress shirt-front, which, being a gleaming white, stands out against its dark frame like the headlight of an engine. Get half a dozen pieces of white cardboard 14x20 inches in size. A border of gold and red will enrich these cards. In the center at the top of each card fasten the record you wish to display. Below it paint a red star outlined in gold, and at the bottom of the card show the title of the record. Half a dozen of these set in your window in a semi-circle, with no other wording or signs to distract attention, and no other white surfaces to compete with them, will give you a window that will stop the crowds and make them look.

* * *

SUCCESSFUL selling comes from giving your customer a favorable impression, and often a very little thing will go a long way toward giving the impression you desire. A small article that counts a lot is a coat tree in one corner of each record booth. During Winter, when heavy wraps are worn, your store guests are likely to make short calls unless you can get them to remove coats and wraps, and your coat tree gives you an excellent excuse. Moreover, your patrons are impressed by your hospitality and your evident consideration for their comfort and convenience. And this attitude means that you will make regular customers out of all the new ones that drift in. Don't neglect the little things. They mark the difference between success and mediocrity.

* * *

FOR Washington's Birthday, cover the floor of your window with white crepe paper. Upon a raised mount to one side of the window, place a small cherry tree and a little hatchet (these may be purchased at any souvenir store). At the opposite side of the window group several records on racks so that their labels show. Place a card under the cherry tree and hatchet bearing the words "Symbols of a Great Patriot." Place another card under the records bearing the words "Symbols of a Good Time." Decorate the back of your window with red, white and blue crepe paper, or any other type of patriotic material.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Mr. Gordon will publish on this page any good ideas submitted by you for the benefit of the trade, and will also answer any questions you ask him concerning merchandising problems. Use this department as much as you like. It is intended to serve you—to be a forum for the discussion and exchange of ideas of interest.

TORONTO TRADE OPPOSES THE REGISTRATION OF LIENS

Appear Before the Public Service Commission and Tell How Industry Would Be Affected—Proof That It Pays to Tie Up With High-class Concerts—Post-holiday Trade Has Been Favorable

TORONTO, CAN., February 7.—Representatives of companies selling pianos, talking machines and other products on lien notes, under the Conditional Sales Act, appeared recently before a special session of the Public Service Commission to protest against the suggestion, previously submitted to them at a meeting some time ago, that the Conditional Sales Act be changed to make it compulsory that all lien notes covering articles sold in this manner should be registered with County Court clerks. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association and its Ontario division were also represented and opposed such a change.

The Public Service Commission had previously suggested that all notes be registered in order than when a sheriff was instructed to seize certain goods he could ascertain before going to make the seizure whether or not there was a lien against them. It was also suggested that some legal process should be provided whereby a merchant who had ordered goods seized could have his claim satisfied by disposal of the debtor's equity in the goods under lien, despite the fact that the lien was undischarged. Such procedure, the commission had pointed out, would have to be subject to the full satisfaction of the claim of the seller of the goods covered by the lien.

For the purpose of determining what price and what class of records enjoy the most active demand, a dealer of your correspondent's acquaintance has established an effective card system. A rack above the cash register holds a series of cards in assorted colors. Each time a record sale is made a card—black for popular song records, yellow for dance records, green for band selections, red for the better class of records, such as operatic, oratorio and symphony, and so on—is placed in the till. The dealer is therefore in close touch with local record demand and can order accordingly from his jobber.

J. C. Pickard, Columbia dealer of Thamesville, Ont., has rented a store in the local Parks Block, where he is carrying a large-sized stock of Columbia Grafonolas and records.

A survey of the Canadian advertising field by Marketing, Toronto, shows that for 1922 30 per cent of advertisers will spend more, 60 per cent will spend the same and 10 per cent will spend less for advertising than they did in 1921.

Bruce Beattie, the well-known dealer who conducts three stores in various parts of this city, has changed the location of his Danforth avenue store slightly. He has moved into fine large premises a few doors farther east on the same side of the street, the address now being 575 and 577 Danforth avenue. The other two stores are in the Yonge street Arcade and at the Beach, respectively. His Master's Voice and Sonora lines are carried in the new store.

The Apex phonograph, to retail at $100, is being announced by the Sun Record Co., of Toronto, Ontario distributors of Apex records.

The Flonzaley Quartet, the well-known His Master's Voice string organization, attracted a capacity audience to Massey Hall, this city, recently—an event worthy of special mention, because it serves to show how the cream of music will draw the public when it is offered at a price within the average person's reach. The event was an experiment on the part of the newly formed Toronto Chamber Music Society to bring chamber music of a high order to as large a number of citizens of Toronto as possible. So successful was the experiment that no doubt other organizations of a similar character will be brought to the city more frequently in the future. Such concerts can have no other effect than creating more popular interest in the better-class music—a condition which will certainly benefit phonograph and record dealers.

One or two advertisers this year carried their Christmas copy past the holidays and attempted to take advantage of presents in the form of cash in the hands of the consumer. "I'm going to buy a Brunswick with my Christmas check" was the heading of one advertisement put out by the Musical Merchandise Sales Co., Canadian distributor of the Brunswick.

The Columbia Graphophone Co. has increased the price of Blue Label twelve-inch records from $1.25 to $1.50 and twelve-inch Symphony from $1.50 to $1.65. Model X Grafonola in mahogany only has been increased in price from $95 to $97.50.

Proof of the wide recognition attained by Vocalion records, for which the Scythes Vocalion Co., Ltd., is Canadian distributor, is seen in the inquiry for Vocalion records this firm has received from "Heaven." Readers must not be misled, however. "Heaven" does not refer to "that land beyond the sun" we read about in Scripture, but to a gentleman by that name who has become fascinated with the delightful tonal qualities of Vocalion records as a whole.

Hector Garand, manager of the Columbia Gramophone Co.'s branch at Montreal, who visited the local headquarters recently, is planning for an active business year.

C. J. Pott, Canadian manager of the General Phonograph Corp., has returned from spending several days in New York in conference with the firm's president, Otto Heineman, Mr. Ribolla, of the Chicago district, and Eastern sales managers of the General Phonograph Corp. The spirit of optimism prevailed and reports from every district were most gratifying. The outlook for business in the future was considered bright, and it was the general opinion that 1922 would produce a good volume of sound business.

Aldermanic candidates for the City of Toronto Boys' Council included two representatives from the firm of I. Montagnes & Co., the well-known Sonora distributors. The young son of Mr. Pickering, of that firm, was elected, while Mr. Montagnes' son, who made an excellent run in the most difficult part of the city, was fourth in the running in his ward.

MONTREAL REPORTS BIG POST-HOLIDAY RECORD TRADE

Sales of Records Remarkably Active in January—Advertising Through the Theatre Curtain—Many New Concerns Open—R. L. Chilvers Resigns From Berliner Co.—Live News of the Month

MONTREAL, CAN., February 6.—The large number of new converts to the use of the talking machine through sales made during the holiday season had its effect on the sales of records, which were particularly active during the month of January. The plan of one aggressive dealer in particular, already made mention of in these columns, had a stimulating effect on the sale of not only records but talking machines as well. He suggested newspaper publicity which would advocate the spending by the public of Christmas gift money in an investment of a phonograph. It had telling results to the trade in general.

The severance of his connection with Berliner Gramophone Co., Ltd., Montreal, is announced by R. L. Chilvers, since 1910 general sales manager for that firm, and who latterly acted as recording manager.

The firm of Carette & Lesieur, one of Quebec's most progressive music houses, have recently added the Brunswick agency to their line and reports a most satisfactory volume of business since assuming the representation.

A very beautiful and unusual theatre curtain has attracted much attention at the Auditorium Theatre, Quebec City. The Lee, Lash Studios are responsible for the ingenious idea, depicting an attractive home interior, with a Brunswick phonograph much in evidence. Through a large French window you look out on a well-laid-out residential street, on one corner of which is shown a billboard advertising Brunwick phonograph dealers in Quebec City—Marceau & Fils, Lavigueur & Hutchison and Carette & Lesieur. These firms report this curtain has a real business-pulling power and sales have been traced directly to this unusual form of advertising.

George S. Layton, manager of the phonograph department of Layton Bros., the well-known music house of Montreal, called on a number of his Toronto friends in the trade on the occasion of a honeymoon visit to the Queen City.

The Starr Phonograph Co., according to reports of Manager Beaudry is enjoying a period of prosperity and a healthy tone to business exists at this branch. Manager Beaudry is most optimistic as to the future. The past month's volume of sales in Starr phonographs and Starr-Gennett records has been most gratifying.

Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Layton have left on a two months' pleasure trip to Bermuda.

George O'Reilley, for ten years manager of the St. Catherine street branch of C. W. Lindsay, Ltd., passed away recently after a two days' illness of pneumonia. He has been succeeded by Mr. Trudeau, who has been in charge of the Three Rivers branch.

Through Layton Bros. a Brunswick phonograph was recently sold to Prof. J. J. Goulet, a musician of local and national fame.

handling Columbia Grafonolas and records, also Starr machines and Gennett records.

The handsome show window of C. W. Lindsay's, Ltd., West End store recently contained a display of Columbia Grafonola models and was the center of much interest, particularly the decorated Adam type, which attracted considerable attention.

The Berlin Phonograph Co., Ltd., was recently acquired by the Mount Royal Exchange, Decorated Adam type, which attracted considerable attention on St. Catherine street East.

B. A. Trestrail, of the Musical Merchandise Sales Co., Toronto, was in this city recently, and we understand Brilliantone needles and Brunswick phonographs and records and other lines handled by this progressive firm have increased in favor considerably since his visit.

S. J. O'Donnell, Montreal manager of the Musical Merchandise Sales Co., is at present in the Maritime Provinces, opening up many new accounts for Brunswick phonographs and records among prominent dealers.

Norman F. Rowell, since assuming the management of Goodwin's, Ltd., phonograph department, reports increased sales in Brunswick phonographs and His Master's Voice records.

Layton Bros. have taken on the representation of Brunswick records.

Madame Elly Ney, the noted pianist and exclusive Brunswick artist, gave to Montreal the past week one of the red-letter recitals of the present season. Brunswick dealers report most gratifying sales of her records.

Walter C. Kelly and John Steel, Victor artists, recently appeared at the Princess Theatre and sustained their reputation as high caliber artists.

SONORA DISPLAY AT VICTORIA, B. C.

The photograph below shows a novel window display prepared by Fletcher Bros.' music store at Victoria, B. C., Canada. The color scheme was blue and silver, the bell being entirely covered with silver and pulled by ropes of blue silk ribbon. The lighting was unusually effective, and the appearance of the window excited widespread comment, besides being the means of making many sales and new customers for the Fletcher Bros.' store. The large Sonora trade-mark shown against a background of imitation snow gives unusual unity and strength to this display.

NEWS HAPPENINGS IN WINNIPEG

Lectures on Musical Appreciation by Misses Skilling and McKee—Apex Records at Potters—Howe Publicity—Fowlers' Big Trade

WINNIPEG, MAN., February 6.—The phonograph department of Potters, Ltd., has acquired the distribution of Apex records. R. B. Knox has assumed charge of this department.

Commencing very shortly and continuing for six Monday evenings, a series of lectures on musical appreciation is to be given by Miss Mae E. Skilling and Miss Ethel McKee, both of the educational department of the Columbia Graphophone Co., in the small recital hall of the Toronto Conservatory of Music. The lectures will be illustrated by records from the Columbia educational series, especially recorded for such purposes. Both Miss Skilling and Miss McKee are to be congratulated for having undertaken such splendid work, which will have the effect of stimulating more public interest in music and musical appreciation generally.

A page advertisement appeared recently in the Morning Albertan by W. M. Howe, proprietor of Willis and Knabe Warerooms in Calgary. The growth of Mr. Howe's business is shown by the fact that ten years ago he occupied very modest premises in the Hope Block comprising about 700 square feet, whereas to-day the store gives 10,000 square feet for display, demonstration and storage purposes. The Columbia line is featured.

The Fowler Piano Co., of this city, has just completed a successful Brunswick week. Tastefully decorated window, store displays, and messages being sent direct to the homes through the medium of circulars helped to make the Brunswick more popular than ever in Winnipeg.

The dealer who believes that small "hooker" advertisements do not pay should take a leaf out of the Winnipeg Brunswick Shop's notebook. Recently this progressive store ran a small ad alongside of the regular Brunswick issues and featured a special model, style 212, retailing at $270. In one day the entire stock of this particular model was exhausted and many more could have been sold if they could have been secured.

MARSH & LEVE QUIT PARTNERSHIP

DENVER, COL., February 7.—Marsh & Leve, exclusive Victor dealers at 1547 Larimer street, this city, have dissolved partnership. Mr. Marsh has taken over the Sonora Shop, at 1527 Welton street, and Mr. Leve will retain the present establishment. Mr. Marsh retains the agency for Victor products and, therefore, Mr. Leve is seeking the agency for some other well-known line.

Genuine Mahogany Always in Good Taste

NINETY percent of the pianos built in this country today are made of Genuine Mahogany. When one considers the number of pianos produced every year, this in itself is no small tribute to the beauty and elegance of this desirable wood.

These same characteristics have made Genuine Mahogany the favored wood for phonographs. The high polish it takes, the charm of color and grain, the good taste and refinement it represents, all contribute to make Mahogany increasingly popular.

The stylish beauty of Genuine Mahogany is as welcome in the drawing room as in the parlor of the fourth floor apartment. Whether the ultra-fashionable period cabinet, or the modest model made to stand on the table, it will retain its good looks longer if it's built of Genuine Mahogany.

THE STARR PIANO COMPANY

Established 1872

RICHMOND, INDIANA

PORTLAND, ORE.

Trade Optimism Grows—Earnest Workers Are Getting Results—Tying Up With Great Artists Pays—Happenings of the Month

PORTLAND, ORE., February 4.—The first month of the new year has been encouraging to all dealers in this section of the country and, in most cases, January, 1922, has shown a gain over the same month in 1921.

All dealers have been doing a great deal of newspaper advertising, setting forth the delights of owning a talking machine. The reduction in the price of records has also been pointed out very forcibly and all reports are that the record business has been greatly stimulated.

Art W. Stein, new manager of the Victrola department of Sherman, Clay & Co., believes that, with the Portland public greeting the many artists that have appeared in concert so far this season with capacity houses, the Red Seal business, which already has shown a big increase in sales, will go ahead by leaps and bounds. After the appearance of Schumann-Heink and Jascha Heifetz in concert the demand for their records took a big jump. For the joint appearance of Alma Gluck and Zimbalist at the Municipal Auditorium, which has a capacity of 5,000, the house was sold out a week before the concert and 500 chairs put on the stage, as was the case with Schumann-Heink.

The Wiley B. Allen Co., which has been located at the corner of Broadway and Morrison streets for the past fifteen years, has been forced to vacate and has taken a four-year lease on property at 148 Fifth street, and is preparing to move into the new store about February 15. Frank M. Case, manager, says, "The new store, which includes about 5,000 feet of space on the ground and mezzanine floors, will be fitted up in an elaborate fashion for the needs of the music house. On either side of the main store-room will be built cabinets for the filing of talking machine records, following the style of large Eastern houses. The main floor also will be used for talking machines and there will be departments for pianos and player rolls."

Frank Anrys, general manager of the Wiley B. Allen Co., and James J. Black, treasurer, from the San Francisco house, were in Portland conferring with Mr. Case.

Paul B. Norris, for years the popular manager of the talking machine department of the Wiley B. Allen Co., has been transferred to the piano department and will travel for the firm. C. L. Neilson has been made manager of the talking machine department.

R. C. Stevenin, of the talking machine department of the Wiley B. Allen Co., and Miss Josephine Reynolds were married January 11. The honeymoon was spent at the famous Columbia Gorge Hotel, on the Columbia highway.

J. C. Gallagher, manager of the Bush & Lane Co., reports January sales of Victrolas and Bush & Lane phonographs in advance of last year and anticipates an active Spring business in both machines and records.

Deborah Jefferson, for several years manager of the record department of the Bush & Lane Co., has resigned her position and married Henry Hendrickson. Madeline Larson, former assistant, has been placed in charge.

D. C. Peyton, manager of the "Big Four" phonograph department of the Meier & Frank Co., reports sales for January, 1922, far in advance of last year's sales, with a marked improvement in the Edison sales, which, he reports, were better in December and January than at any time for two years. Mr. Peyton also reports a big record business.

Horace M. Hull, Western representative of the Aeolian Co., with headquarters in San Francisco, was a Portland visitor during the past month and called on D. C. Peyton, manager of the Meier & Frank phonograph department, who is handling the Vocalion phonograph exclusively in Portland.

A. C. Ireton, general manager of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., was a recent Portland visitor, calling on the Hyatt Talking Machine Co. and the Reed-French Co., two of Portland's active Edison dealers. M. C. Collins, manager of the Reed-French Edison department, reports business holding up in spite of the cold weather.

The exclusive agency for the Cheney has been secured by Joe Andree, of Astoria, Ore., who has this month opened up an attractive new music shop on Commercial street. The Andree Music Shop is anticipating a big business in the new field.

Wm. E. Smith, the new Oregon manager of the Columbia Co., reports excellent business throughout the district and, upon returning from a trip through the Willamette Valley, was most enthusiastic over the outlook for the coming year. More activity is being shown among the farmers and the dealers are all placing larger orders than for some time. Mr. Smith has recently placed several new Columbia agencies, among them the Couch Pharmacy, of Grants Pass, Ore., which will be exclusive Columbia dealers.

Paul Kuhl, manager of the Grafonola department of the Remick Song Shop, is feeling the effects of the reduced price in records and reports a decided improvement in sales.

L. D. Heater, jobber in phonograph accessories, who returned from a recent trip throughout Oregon and Washington, reports excellent business.

Unable to get enough Sonora machines to supply the increasing demand is the report of Roy Feldenheimer, owner and manager of the phonograph department of Lipman, Wolfe & Co. Mr. Princehouse, sales manager, says, "Four Sonora baby grands sold in one day is a sample of what is going on in this department."

Jack Hoeg has been placed in charge of the Columbia Grafonola and record department of the McDougall-Conn Music Co., to take the place of Carl H. Williams, who resigned his position with the firm.

The many Portland friends of Wm. H. Lawton, Northwest representative of the Columbia Grafonola Co., are extending him congratulations on the announcement of his marriage to Mrs. Lou Kirkendall, of the McCormick Music House, of this city.

Art W. Stein, former salesman in the piano department of Sherman, Clay & Co., has been transferred to the Victrola department to take the place of F. D. Addis, manager for several years, who has gone to Salem, Ore., to take a position with Stife & Co.

NEW ZEALAND OPPORTUNITY

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 7.—A request from a concern in New Zealand has been received by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce that it be placed in communication with United States manufacturers of motors, reproducers, metal fittings, etc., for talking machines. References will be given and payment will be made through New York and New Zealand banks. Further details can be obtained from the Bureau or any of its district offices upon application by mentioning inquiry No. 325.

A talking machine store has been opened at 1221 Lexington avenue, New York City, by Walter Bahr.

The Greatest Step in Tone Reproduction

The first successful commercial use of wood as a diaphragm for the phonograph reproducer

Tonal purity, resonance, individuality, are perfectly reflected by the ideal medium—violin spruce—scientifically adapted in the Violin Spruce Diaphragm.

Tonal purity is reproduced faithfully because violin spruce, unlike mica, has no tone of its own to interfere with the original. The wonderful resonance is attained through the natural cellular construction of violin spruce—each cell in itself forming a minute sounding-board. Tonal individuality is reproduced with remarkable faithfulness, each instrument and voice retaining its distinctiveness in the highest degree.

Graduated with scientific exactness—like the top of a violin—the Violin Spruce Diaphragm reproduces the intensity of the shrillest tone without shattering the pure quality of the softest tone, without loss of vibrancy, and the full volume of big tones without sacrificing roundness.

The Violin Spruce Diaphragm is adaptable to any well made phonograph; interchangeable with any reproducer; unaffected by atmospheric conditions.

Seeds, for sixteen years in the talking machine and record business, now located at 303 South High street, this city. The Plaza Music Co., well-known jobbers of sheet music and talking machine accessories, recently added to its catalog a new record which retails for 50 cents and is manufactured under the trade name "Banner Record." According to H. Germain, of the above company, since the initial release of these new records there has been a constantly increasing demand for the goods and both the trade and public seemingly are receiving these new issues with much favor. The demands for the "Banner Record" have been so healthy that it has been decided to increase production materially during the coming months.

Dealers Hear March Releases and Interesting Talk by Abram Davega on Vital Topics

Upon the invitation of the Knickerbocker Talking Machine Co., Victor wholesaler, New York City, a representative number of Victor retailers in the metropolitan district gathered at the headquarters of the Knickerbocker Talking Machine Co. at 9.30 on Tuesday morning, February 7. The occasion was a record recital at which the March releases of Victor records were played. Abram Davega, president of the company, gave a very helpful and interesting talk on the efficient ordering of records and dwelt upon the exceptional sales possibilities of the various March releases. Mr. Davega also made a preliminary announcement of a new record display stand for the show window which the Knickerbocker Talking Machine Co. plans to distribute throughout the trade. The outstanding feature of this new display stand is that the records may be subjected to heat while on display and yet so held that they will not warp. This is a very important contribution.

J. A. MARSHALL'S NEW PLANS

J. A. Marshall, formerly assistant dealer service manager, terminated his connections with the Columbia Graphophone Co. a short time ago. Mr. Marshall leaves many staunch friends behind, and he has their hearty wishes for his success in his new connections.

The Decca is the most popular portable phonograph in the World. Its success has been overwhelming. First manufactured early in 1914, it proved the very thing for Active Service. Nearly 100,000 Deccas were sold during the War. And today, despite the flood of "portables," the Decca is still supreme and the demand enormous.

The Decca owes its supremacy to its ingenious and fully patented construction. A concave aluminum "Dulciflex," fitted into the top portion of the Decca, not only deflects the sound with power, naturalness and clearness, but it houses every part except the driving mechanism. Everything fits perfectly and nothing has to be detached. There are no loose parts. Light, compact and strong, the Decca has before it a future even greater than its great past, for it is as musical as it is portable.

MAKING RECORDOLA SHIPMENTS

The Recordophone Co. Filling Many of Large Number of Orders Received—Lord & Taylor Recordola Display Attracts Attention

The Recordophone Co., manufacturer of the Recordola, a new home-recording device, reports that its production is being pushed to the utmost capacity, and with the additional equipment now installed deliveries are now being made in such quantities as to insure the taking care of all inquiries which the company receives. Orders for this ingenious device have been received from all parts of the world, and the officials of the company are very enthusiastic over the way dealers have received the Recordola as a sales possibility in the talking machine store.

Recently the Lord & Taylor Co. featured the instrument in very attractive advertisements in the New York papers, and also devoted an entire Fifth avenue window to a very effective home scene, showing the Recordola in use in the home. Following the appearance of this publicity the warerooms of the store were visited by crowds of people, and in consequence many machines were sold.

This splendid publicity was the first given in Greater New York to the Recordola, and the results obtained more than verified the convictions of the officials of the Recordophone Co. that the instrument has an unlimited field for its market, and that it has a big future. One of the strongest features of this device is its simplicity and reliability. These are basic factors which the manufacturers believe will insure the Recordola being introduced into millions of homes.

WORKING TO ORGANIZE CREDIT MEN

Strong Efforts Being Made to Bring All Local Retail Credit Men Into Association

Valentine J. Faeth, manager of the Union square store of Winterroth & Co., New York, piano and talking machine dealers, is a member of the publicity committee of the Associated Retail Credit Men of New York, which organization is at the present time making earnest efforts to bring into its ranks all retail credit men in New York, including those in the music trade field, and particularly those having to do with instalment accounts.

It has been proven that close co-operation between retail credit men not only proves beneficial to the individual, but serves to decrease materially the operations of persistent frauds. The frank interchange of information between credit men has done much to check swindlers and make their practices widely known, thus saving many houses from serious losses.

MORE INTEREST SHOWN IN SELLING OF SHEET MUSIC

Large Percentage of Talking Machine Dealers, Particularly in Metropolitan District, Now Carrying Line of Popular Sheet Music and Finding It Profitable

During the past year there has been a concerted drive by sheet music distributors, particularly the jobbers of New York, to install popular sheet music departments in strictly talking machine stores. Generally these installations are simplified by the use of racks that set on or hang flush against the wall, thus occupying little space.

From the standpoint of accomplishing their aims the New York distributors have achieved unusual results, as a very high percentage of talking machine dealers in the metropolitan district are now serving their trade with the big successes in the sheet music line as well as in records. The present wholesale and retail prices of such goods are attractive, and as the demand is quite substantial and seemingly has not lowered record sales of the same numbers, evidently there are no drawbacks to adding a sheet music line.

The plans of the jobbers to care for the requirements of talking machine stores have invariably been well arranged and have the support and co-operation of all the popular publishers who welcome this new and increased outlet for sales.

Speaking of the present retail prices of sheet music, which allow such a good margin for the retailer, it might be well, as a matter of information, to call attention to the fact that, despite unsettled conditions, the song and instrumental selections that are acknowledged successes are having almost as big a sale as was achieved by the average popular number in the days of 10-cent music. They do not reach quite so high a figure, but this can be traced to general business conditions as much as to increased prices. The publishers to-day, with the aid of the talking machine dealer, have as large a sales outlet—as many points of distribution—as in the height of success of 10-cent prints.

In the old days the legitimate music dealer paid little or no attention to any sheet music and sometimes absolutely refused to handle 10-cent music, but to-day he is giving the publisher co-operation. This, then, with the talking machine dealers who have been induced to handle sheet music, gives the publisher increased distribution, and with business showing a revival, the improvement will, under more normal conditions, undoubtedly give the publisher larger sales than were ever heretofore possible.

All of this will tend in the end to be of distinct benefit to the record manufacturer and, of course, to his dealers, for the publisher will have as many sales outlets as he ever had, almost if not as many sales, and greater profits with which to exploit his works. In fact, the gamble has been taken away, his business is more stabilized and is of a more permanent character. All of this means a healthy condition, not only for the publisher but for the many organizations that are not in any way related to him.

MUSIC IN LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Music Division of Library Shows Substantial Growth During Last Fiscal Year

The annual report of Herbert Putnam, Librarian of Congress, just issued, shows substantial growth of the music division. The accessions for the year ending June 30, 1921, were 34,814, including 32,191 on music, 1,856 on literature of music and 767 on instruction. On June 30 the music division contained 919,041 volumes, pamphlets and pieces, of which 856,688 were music.

Among notable accessions to the music division during the last year was a fine collection of original manuscripts by American composers.

Many other gifts of original autographed choruses of Richard Wagner's "Gastmahl der Apostel" and four autographed songs by Franz Schubert, composed in 1816, "Frühling," "Auf den Tod einer Nachtigall," "Die Knabenzeit," and "Winterlied."

THE PASSING OF JAZZ MUSIC

Survey of Present Catalogs of Music Publishers Indicates That There Is Very Little So-called Jazz Offered—Blame Placed on Some Orchestras for the Weird Musical Effects Secured

As was noted before in these columns, there is much ado about the present jazz craze in America and, naturally, music, particularly of the jazz variety, comes in for its share of condemnation. In looking over the current catalogs of the publishers, however, we find only comparatively few real jazz numbers. We find, however, more good ballads and waltz numbers than in some seasons past and the typical love song, which can hardly be termed jazz, is not lacking. We also find a tendency, at the present time, to issue Hawaiian numbers. This latter is so true that at the present moment there is hardly a catalog that has not at least one or two such numbers, and these cannot be termed jazz.

We also find that in arranging numbers many publishers are getting music-box effects, and these can hardly be called jazz for they are melodious—and real music.

All the above being true, which can be substantiated by a close analysis of current releases, it would seem that music is being charged with crimes of which it is not guilty.

We might say, however, that one of the reasons why the average popular song, particularly in its dance form, is described as jazz is the fault of the present-day orchestras, which on too numerous occasions add their own original arrangements and effects to the orchestra arrangements placed in their hands by the publishers. This is not to say that the orchestras are putting the jazz in music, but they often do put in their own special ideas—effects which the publisher more often than not would be glad to see left out. Sometimes these special arrangements chop up the melody and fail to carry out the theme in its original form. The publisher, of course, is interested in seeing the melody carried out and repeated because the reputation of the melody is what makes for popularity and sells the music.

"BLUSHING BRIDE" ON BROADWAY

New Musical Comedy Has in Score Several Numbers of Considerable Interest

There opened in New York early this month at the Astor Theatre a new musical comedy produced by the Shuberts, called "The Blushing Bride," which, according to newspaper reports, will mark one of the season's big successes. "The Blushing Bride" has been built from and along the lines of the well-known farce "The Third Party," the book having been written by Cyrus Wood, who also is responsible for the lyrics. The music is by Sigmund Romberg and the show itself is scheduled for an early New York opening.

Cecil Lean and Cleo Mayfield are both starred in the new piece, accompanied by a good supporting cast. It is said that Mr. Romberg's score has some of the most tuneful music he has ever produced. There are seven outstanding songs, "Mr. and Mrs. Rosy Posy," "Good-bye," "Bad Little Boy and Bad Little Girl," "Spring-time," "A Regular Girl" and "Love's Highway." The music of "The Blushing Bride" is published by M. Witmark & Sons.

NEW RECORD AND ROLL DIRECTORY

Music Publishers' Protective Association Issues Valuable Directory and Data Concerning Record and Music Roll Companies

Under the direction of E. C. Mills, chairman of the board of directors of the Music Publishers' Protective Association, that organization has compiled and issued a complete directory of all talking machine record and player roll companies. Copies of the directory, which is issued in two forms, have been placed in the hands of all members of the Association. The directory proper is in leather binding, loose-leaf style, which allows the insertion of additional data from time to time. It contains the list of manufacturers and their addresses; the names of sales and recording managers; the addresses of recording laboratories, pressing and manufacturing plants, and the product or products as well as the trade names of the various companies.

In addition, there is issued in paper-bound form a booklet carrying the alphabetical lists of the companies and the minute data regarding their activities, which is valuable for ready reference. There also appears in the latter part of this paper-bound folio an index to brands whereby any given trade-marked product in either the player roll or record field can be immediately traced to the manufacturer.

"THE BLUE KITTEN" ON BROADWAY

New Musical Production at Selwyn Theatre Full of Good Melodies

There recently opened at the Selwyn Theatre, New York City, a new Arthur Hammerstein production entitled "The Blue Kitten," in which Lillian Lorraine and Joseph Cawthorn appear in the leading roles.

"The Blue Kitten" is the work of Otto Harbach and W. C. Duncan, as respects the libretto, while Rudolph Friml composed the music, the whole being adapted from a French piece called "Le Chasseur de Chez Maxim's." The music, which is published by Harms, Inc., has at least two successes, "Cutie," a fox-trot, and "I've Found a Bud Among the Roses." In addition there are such numbers as: "Daddy," "Madeline" and "Smoke Rings."

GEORGE M. COHAN ENTERS FIELD

It is understood that George M. Cohan, who in recent months has been very inactive in the producing field, has been writing some songs in his spare time. It is also understood that a large publishing house will shortly announce their release.

"IN MAYTIME" PROVING A BIG HIT

New Waltz Ballad Being Featured by John Steel and Other Well-known Singers

"In Maytime (I Learned to Love You)," the waltz ballad published by Jack Snyder, Inc., was recently programmed by John Steel, the well-known tenor, during his Boston engagement in the Keith Theatre, that city. It is being placed in the repertory of a long list of other stars and indications of the last few weeks are that it will be one of the big successes the early part of the year.

Imposing Display of "In Maytime" at McCrory's in Baltimore

The trade, too, is finding the popularity of this number on the increase and this seems to have justified many dealers in making special window displays of the song.

According to reports from Baltimore, Md., "In Maytime" is one of the outstanding successes of that territory, and the J. G. McCrory store, of that city, states that it is running first in point of sales. We herewith show a recent window display of "In Maytime" in the Baltimore store of that company. Sales since that time have even been greater than during the special showing.

TWO NEW HARMS, INC., SONGS

Among the new numbers recently released by Harms, Inc., are "Tell Her With Kisses," a fox-trot ballad by Harry Rosenthal and Alex Sullivan, and "U. S. A. Blues" by Willie Caesar, Bud de Sylvia and George Gershwein.

NEW FEIST PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN

Some Elaborate Advertising Planned for the Present Popular Catalog of That House—Some of the Current Feature Numbers

Leo Feist, Inc., recently completed plans to exploit its publications during the early part of this year. The Feist catalog, seemingly, was never in a more healthy condition and the sales report shows that all of the active numbers are making constant increases in the way of popularity. The company has changed the title of the song, "I Hold Her Hand and She Holds Mine," to "Ain't Nature Grand?", this being the catch line of the chorus and the number being called for repeatedly by that title. "I Hold Her Hand and She Holds Mine" will be continued as a subtitle. This is one of the most successful songs in the program of Van and Schenk in this season's Ziegfeld "Follies."

The new Oriental fox-trot, "Good-Bye, Shanghai," written by Howard Johnston and Joe Meyers, is showing up advantageously. Meyers, by the way, will be remembered as the writer of "Down in Chinatown."

By special arrangement with Francis, Day & Hunter, London, Eng., the big English waltz ballad, "Lovely Lucerne," composed by Felix Godin, will be published by Feist.

"Thanks to You," a new ballad by Howard Johnston and Violinsky, is also to be featured. Violinsky will be remembered as the composer of "Honolulu Eyes," and "When Francis Dances With Me."

"Venetian Love Boat," a new song, written by Frank Magine, who was responsible for the success of last year's "Venetian Moon," is included. Also in the new issue is a song by Isham Jones, well-known orchestra leader, who records exclusively for the Brunswick records. The number is entitled, "What'll You Do?"

Leo Feist, Inc., has also purchased from Kendis & Brockman a new ballad entitled "When the Tide Comes In." Kendis & Brockman were known as the James Boys and are responsible for such successes as "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles" and "Feather Your Nest."

"Stealing," which was purchased from the Orpheum Music Co., Boston, Mass., has now reached the point where it is considered a national hit. It is booked for early release by all the leading record and roll companies.

GIVES SERIES OF RADIO CONCERTS

Irving Berlin, Inc., Getting Some Good Publicity in Co-operating With Newspapers in Broadcasting Music by Wireless

Irving Berlin, Inc., in conjunction with some of the leading daily papers throughout the country, has been running a series of wireless concerts. Newspapers in the leading trade centers of the East, Middle West and Pacific Coast have taken part in these musical activities and the result has been that the Berlin catalog has received publicity over a wide territory and what could be called on a national scale.

Among the most successful of the recent radio concerts was the one given under the auspices of the Buffalo Courier-Enquirer, at which Miss Edna Zahm was the main participant, assisted by Hildredth Morrow, Richard Miller and F. H. Rose, the well-known and popular vaudeville artist. Among the songs sung were: "Granny, You're My Mammy's Mammy," "Delia," "Just a Little Love Song" and "Tuck Me to Sleep" (In My Old Kentucky Home), while the Broadway Syncopators, a well-known orchestra organization, rendered "Say It With Music" and several other selections in dance form.

"SHUFFLE ALONG" FOR THE ROAD

A Number Two show of "Shuffle Along" has been arranged by Harry L. Cort and was placed on the road in the middle of February. The original company is still playing at the Sixty-third Street Music Hall and is expected to run far into the Spring. M. Witmark & Sons publish the music.

The Economy Stores Co., Inc., of Danville, Pa., has taken over the G. Shoop Hunt agency for the Victor talking machines and records.

*Trade Steadily Improves—Association Meets and Acts
—Grinnell Bros. Activities*

DETROIT, MICH., February 6.—Judging from the way the talking machine business has been going since the first of January it certainly looks as if 1922 is going to be a very profitable year for the dealers. Not only were record sales excellent during the first month, but machines have been selling at a very satisfactory pace. Collections are certainly holding up well and there is a better feeling among both the dealers and the customers; there is more activity in the stores and it rather reminds one of the "good old days." There is no doubt that the number of artists who make records for various companies, who have been in Detroit the past month, have also had a lot to do with stimulating sales. And there is where the retailers are alive—they always take advantage of these personal appearances with attractive window displays and newspaper advertising, and it makes the public anxious to hear the records, whether or not they have heard the artists. It works both ways—if they have heard the artist, then they are all the more anxious to get the records, especially if the performance has pleased.

Detroit Association Elects Officers

The Detroit Talking Machine Dealers' Association at its annual meeting, held in January, elected new officers as follows: President, Philip B. Lang, Summerfield & Hecht Co.; first vice-president, Joe Adcock, of the W. E. Metzger Co.; second vice-president, Edward Jeffery, of the Jeffery Music Co.; secretary, Percy Keene, of Gardner-White Co.; treasurer, Sidney J. Guest, of the Sidney J. Guest Music Co.; and the executive committee, Charles H. Grinnell, manager of Grinnell Bros.' wholesale Victor department; Max Strasburg, of the Max Strasburg Co., and Sam E. Lind, of Lind & Marks, Vocalion distributors.

Dealers Consider Important Matters

The Association has under consideration a very live program of business for 1922. It is planned to make every meeting a strictly important one and subjects will be brought up that are vital to the industry. At present the organization is considering the matter of approvals and the matter of charging interest. On the approval question the matter was discussed pro and con. It was the general belief of those present that the approval method should be eliminated as much as possible and that dealers should return to the policy that was in vogue during the war when the customer was required to keep a certain number of records sent on approval and that all records not desired must be returned within twenty-four hours. One dealer said he was asking that these conditions be lived up to by his customers and that he was enforcing them. He stated that he thought the approval method was all right providing it was not too liberal—that where the customer was made to understand the drastic rules laid down must be enforced, approval business was all right. The trouble is, however, that when you send records out on approval the customer has so many excuses for not bringing them back on time and not desiring to keep the number called for by the rule.

Then as to charging interest. Dealers feel that there should be some standard on this matter, otherwise the customer goes to one dealer and says he won't buy because another dealer won't charge interest. The Association feels that all dealers should have the same charge, because in that way they would all benefit and it would end forever a bugaboo that has been one of the big evils in the industry. The furniture retailers say they cannot charge interest, inasmuch as they do not charge it for their furniture and it would break up their whole policy and system, and naturally there are some dealers who are not going to let the furniture houses make any better inducements than they do.

Local Vocalion Artists' Records Popular

Sam Lind, of Lind & Marks, Vocalion distributors, is having a big call for the two records made a few months ago by the Henry Theis Ritz Detroit orchestra. The orchestra went to New York under an arrangement made by Mr. Lind with the recording department and the records, recently released, are proving a big hit all over the State. Mr. Lind has already had to place reorders.

Grinnell Bros. Elect Officers

Grinnell Bros. held their annual meeting and their annual branch managers' convention the past week. Clayton A. Grinnell was elected president; A. A. Grinnell, first vice-president; Elmer W. Grinnell, second vice-president; S. E. Clark, secretary. Charles L. Grinnell was elected to the board of directors to succeed his father, the late Ira L. Grinnell. The managers held business sessions twice daily for four days, discussing ways and means for increasing sales and reviewing business the past year. The talking machine was up for considerable discussion and several excellent recommendations were made as to how sales could be increased, as well as on talking machine records. There were a number of special entertainments, including the annual banquet and the annual dance given under the auspices of the Grinnell Bros. employes. This took place at the Elks Temple and was a big success.

Fire Damages Whitehead Co.

The C. H. Whitehead Music Co., of Saginaw, Mich., was damaged to the extent of $10,000 a few weeks ago when the adjoining building was almost completely destroyed by fire. The store is being renovated and will be continued.

A unique performance was given at the J. L. Hudson music store during January each afternoon for one week. "Dream Pictures" were shown, accompanied by music on the talking machine. The recitals were free and were largely attended.

New Okeh Dealer

Cunningham's drug store, at 1065 Woodward avenue, Detroit, is now handling Okeh records and pushing them. A large sign has been placed in front of the store announcing these records. On January 26 the store gave a free recital by

OHIO VICTOR DEALERS TO MEET

Retailers From Neighboring States Also Expected to Attend Association Session This Month—Many Prominent Speakers

COLUMBUS, O., February 6.—Seventy cities in the States of Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia will be represented at the first annual convention of the Central Ohio Victor Retail Dealers' Association, which will be held in the Chittenden Hotel February 14.

Prominent among the speakers who will address the delegates are F. A. Delano, of the Victor Talking Machine Co., Camden, N. J., who will speak on "Possibilities for Business in 1922." H. C. Bard, vice-president of the Moorehouse-Martens Co., will deliver an address on "Business Conditions Generally"; Miss Ruth Finney, of the educational department of the Victor Talking Machine Co., will tell the delegates of music possibilities in the public schools.

Don Johns, proprietor of the Johns Music Store, Lima, O., will render a number of songs. On the entertainment program with Mr. Johns is C. A. Summers, Jackson, O., who will impersonate Harold Lloyd. Leslie L. King, president of the organization and manager of the music department of the Moorehouse-Martens Co., is also on the program. His topic for discussion is "How You Can Get More Business."

The convention opens at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. This is to be followed by a dinner at which Perry B. Whitsit, of the Perry B. Whitsit Co., local Victor wholesalers, this city, will be toastmaster.

WOULD REORGANIZE REGINA CO.

Creditors' Committee Suggests That Stock in Reorganized Company Be Accepted by Creditors in Lieu of Claims to Avoid Heavier Loss

The creditors' committee of the Regina Co., manufacturers of talking machines, music boxes and other musical instruments, has suggested to the creditors a plan whereby the company will be reorganized and the creditors accept stock in the company in proportion to the amount of their respective claims. It is the opinion of the creditors' committee that as the Regina Co. is forced into liquidation through bankruptcy proceedings the creditors will realize only about 10 cents on the dollar, and believe that through the reorganization plan a better return will be secured.

The proposition was submitted to all creditors of the Regina Co. in a letter sent out on February 2, and the sentiments of the creditors toward the plan have not been learned as yet.

Interesting the Supervisors and Teachers of Our Rural Schools in Music :: By Louise F. Troxell

Salesmen for talking machine companies usually are not much affected by what the teachers do. However, action taken recently by a convention of county superintendents in Madison, Wis., may have a good deal to do with stimulating business for them.

These people were gathered there from all of the seventy-one counties of the State. They talked about teachers' pensions, about health of pupils, about consolidation of schools and housing of teachers. All this they went through in more or less the usual fashion of conventions.

Then the man was introduced who has charge of community music at the big University of Wisconsin. He is Peter W. Dykema, and, while anything that pertains to music interests him, the thing that is really next to his heart is the bringing of joy into out-of-the-way country places by the introduction of music.

Mr. Dykema appeared with his assistant, bringing four small phonographs. He put these on a table for future reference and started his talk. In ten minutes the staid superintendents were sitting up smiling. They drummed on tables, made circles in the air and nodded their heads—all according to directions from Mr. Dykema—and in five minutes more were marching around the Senate chamber of the Capitol.

Marching? That is what they were supposed to be doing, but most of them were jigging. And why was it? All because a man who believes in the musical education of country children and who never loses a chance to demonstrate what can be done had got up and told that dignified assemblage to please be pupils and let him be teacher so he could show them what they, in turn, could pass on to the 6,500 rural teachers in the State.

The whole demonstration started and stopped with the four little phonographs on the table before him. Two different makes were represented with two machines of each kind. The object was to show what results could be obtained by the expenditure of only the little amount of money necessary to purchase a small machine.

Mr. Dykema spoke purely from the standpoint of one to whom the phonograph is a means to an end but not the end itself. But any salesman who canvasses rural schools could take at least half his speech as a sales talk. In fact, an energetic salesman skilful enough to get the ear of a county teachers' meeting could conduct a meeting such as Mr. Dykema did with the superintendents with the possibility of a rich harvest of orders.

"I can't teach the children to sing because I can't sing a note myself." This objection of the average teacher has been the great deterrent to the introduction of music in the schools, and it was around this objection that Mr. Dykema arranged his demonstration of how pupils can be taught with the phonograph.

Demonstration Programs of Music That Serve to Interest Rural Instructors in Talking Machines

Proceeding with himself in the role of teacher and with the superintendents as pupils, he put on the record of a simple folk song, asking the pupils to follow it as if they were hearing it for the first time. He announced himself as a "teacher who knows nothing of music and cannot sing."

The record was played entirely through, in good time, the pupils all listening. It was then played again and this time the pupils looked at the words, forming them silently with their lips. The third time through they hummed the air quietly and on the fourth playing of the record they sang the words.

Learning songs, thus, in rote fashion, it is easy for a child to master both words and music of at least 100 songs by the time he has finished the common school. These should be songs from which he will get pleasure all his life—quaint folk songs, simple selections from the classics, and the national airs. What volumes could be written on these last! But already we are too familiar with the tra-la-la method of singing patriotic pieces. A generation of children brought up on a musical diet taken from well-selected phonograph records will release us from the pain we older ones have suffered in this respect, as they will not only have the correct words but will sing in standard time and tune these much-abused airs.

After going over one or two songs rote style the teacher puts on a sturdy record. On this the song is sung through once, using the regular words. Then there is a pause. The teacher explains that the song will now be repeated in Italian and the music begins again, using the do, re, mi, etc., words. For study, the children learn these the same as they do the others.

Appreciation is the third method demonstrated. Simple, beautiful songs or music without words is played, and during these the children either listen or hum quietly. Appreciation of all fine music and familiarity with some is acquired in this way.

The lively part of the program came fourth and last with the physical expression records. To such tunes as "Wild Horsemen," "Amaryllis," "Oats, Peas, Beans and Barley," and the like, the children gave bodily expression. These selections furnish excellent opportunity for some invigorating gymnastic exercises. It is always fun for the children to play that they are an orchestra. Each one decides what instrument he would like to play and then, as a good, lively march record is put on, he plays his imaginary violin, trombone or drum, keeping time to the music. An old horseshoe tapped with a spike furnishes a good makeshift instrument. Cultivation of rhythmic sense is also accomplished by marching exercises in which interest is stimulated by allowing the children to pretend that they are high-stepping horses.

Songs Selected by Supervisors

The National Conference of Music Supervisors has selected fifty songs admirably suited to community and school singing. Introduction of these into school work is sure to be followed by an increase of general community interest in music.

Box suppers or school plays will soon secure the money needed for the necessary musical equipment. Mr. Dykema recommends the use of at least a $35 machine, though the $25 makes have been used successfully. He believes that any instrument costing over $50 has no added value except in the case. A minimum of $15 worth of records is best. These will naturally be added to by gifts from people in the community, but here lies the danger that the music thus secured will not be up to the high standard it should be. As Mr. Dykema points out, "Time is precious; it should not be wasted on poor music."

The county superintendents of Wisconsin voted unanimously in favor of a movement which will end by placing in every rural school of the State a phonograph with an assortment of records. Other States will take up this plan. Here is a real chance for some follow-up work on the part of talking machine manufacturers.

The National Bureau for the Advancement of Music has added a new booklet to its list of instructive and inspirational literature on Music Weeks.

BROWNING GETS "DOOR" PATENT AFTER FOURTEEN YEARS

U. S. Letters Patent Granted to J. B. Browning on Invention Covering Adjustable Doors Mounted at Delivery End of Amplifier—Application for Patent Pending Since 1908—Important Claim Allowed

John Bailey Browning, Camden, N. J., has just been granted a very important patent which covers "adjustable doors mounted at the delivery end of the amplifier or inclosed horn of a talking machine." The application for this patent was filed in 1908, and it has been in litigation since that time. This patent, which is known as U. S. Letters Patent No. 1,402,738, was issued to Mr. Browning on January 10, 1922, and to the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. as assignee to the extent of 51 per cent of the invention.

The issue in this patent is claim No. 1, which reads as follows: "The combination with sound-reproducing means, of a co-operating amplifier, a cabinet enclosing the major portion of said amplifier and provided with an opening of substantially the same size as the delivery end of said amplifier, and means to vary the quality of the reproduction at will on either side of said cabinet." This claim is identical with claim No. 19 of the patent issued January 11, 1910, to Eldridge R. Johnson, president of the Victor Talking Machine Co., and assigned to the Victor Talking Machine Co., this patent being known as U. S. Letters Patent No. 946,442.

During the fourteen years the Browning patent application was pending in the Patent Office Mr. Browning was continually delayed in his efforts to secure a patent for his invention by numerous interferences involved in his application, and in these interferences Mr. Browning has been the successful party.

The principal litigation in the patent courts was known as the Browning vs. Johnson interference, being based on claim No. 19 of the Johnson patent and claim No. 1 of the Browning application mentioned above. This interference was declared in 1915, and as Mr. Browning was at the end of his resources at that time he went to the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. as a last resort and told his story. This company, after investigating Mr. Browning's story, agreed to carry on the litigation in which he was involved and acquired a controlling interest in his invention.

The Browning vs. Johnson interference was first argued in the Patent Office before the Examiner of Interferences in September, 1918, who decided in Mr. Browning's favor three months later, holding that Mr. Browning was the inventor. The Examiner, however, recommended to the Commissioner of Patents that no patent be granted to Browning because of his delay in claiming that Johnson had derived his invention. Mr. Johnson appealed from the Examiner's award of priority to Browning to the Board of Examiners-in-Chief, the second highest tribunal of the Patent Office. This appeal was argued in April, 1919, and decided in Mr. Johnson's favor six months later. Thereupon Mr. Browning appealed to the Commissioner of Patents, the highest Patent Office tribunal, who in April, 1920, in an opinion of nearly fifty pages, sustained the Board and decided for Mr. Johnson.

Mr. Browning next appealed to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, in July, 1920, which court in April, 1921, reversed the decision of the Commissioner and awarded the invention to Browning, holding that the evidence showed that Johnson had derived the invention from Mr. Browning, who was entitled to his patent.

U. S. Letters Patent No. 1,402,738 just issued to Mr. Browning covers the claim that has been in litigation the past fourteen years, and places him in a position to realize on his invention.

Victor Co. Brings Action in U. S. District Court in Delaware Asking That Claim One of Patent Recently Issued Be Declared Inoperative and Invalid Throughout the United States

The Victor Talking Machine Co. on February 6 made the following announcement regarding legal action brought in connection with the recently issued Browning patent, No. 1,402,738:

"On February 1, 1922, the Victor Talking Machine Co. filed its bill of complaint in the United States District Court at Wilmington, Del., against the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. and John Bailey Browning, based on Johnson Patent No. 946,442, and praying that Claim One of the Brown Patent, No. 1,402,738, be adjudged void, inoperative and invalid throughout the whole of the United States. This Browning patent was issued on January 10, 1922, following the interference in the Patent Office between Browning and Johnson. The issue of this Browning patent has for the first time made it possible for the Victor Co. to bring the controversy into a court in which a judgment binding on the parties may be had."

HIMMELREICH ON OKEH RECORDS

Well-known Pianist Makes Several Okeh Records—Artist Is Prominent on Concert Stage

The General Phonograph Corp., New York, manufacturer of Okeh records, is acquiring a very fine list of artists who are internationally prominent, and who are making records of the leading standard and classic numbers. One of the most recent additions to this list is the well-known pianist, Ferdinand Himmelreich, who has attained wide renown on the concert stage. Mr. Himmelreich, in addition to his skill as a pianist, has won recognition as a transcriptionist. His compositions show marked creative ability and he excels in the style of music that demands force and brilliancy.

Four selections have been played by Mr. Himmelreich for the Okeh library, and among these are his transcription of "Suwanee River," "The Lure of Spring," "Silver Threads Among the Gold" and the "Sextet" from "Lucia." All of these selections are now being released, and Okeh dealers have evinced keen interest in Mr. Himmelreich's addition to the Okeh library.

The Elm City Phonograph Repair Shop was recently opened in New Haven, Conn., by C. L. Chadwick, an expert talking machine repair man. Mr. Chadwick is also in the market for cabinet makers' supplies.

REPAIRS

TALKING MACHINE TROUBLES AND HOW TO REMEDY THEM

Conducted by Andrew H. Dodin

ON THE REPAIRING OF OLD SPRINGS

Bloomfield, N. J., January 19, 1922.

A. H. Dodin, care Talking Machine World:

The letter of Dominick Ruff, of Youngstown, O., printed in the January issue of The Talking Machine World interested me sufficiently to drop you a few lines. A rough calculation would prove that, repairing 1,700 motors with springs in two and one-half years, this gentleman evidently ran across approximately two and one-fifth broken springs per day, working six days per week, which experience tells me is rather unusual. Also to have only nine springs returned broken out of 1,700 old ones repaired, an average of about one-sixteenth of 1 per cent, speaks well for Youngstown, O., springs.

Many a manufacturer of motors and talking machines has had his reputation injured by the repair man returning a broken spring fixed over or inserting an improper spring. A repair man who takes any pride in his work would refrain from such methods. After such repair work is done in the manner described by Mr. Ruff it remains unfinished and unsatisfactory, besides causing an undue strain on the motor.

I would like to see you discourage such methods in an issue of The Talking Machine World, not alone for the sake of the owner of a machine whereon such methods have been practiced, but also for the benefit of the manufacturers and dealers.

Yours for a square deal

(Signed) ERNEST A. EDDEN.

Answer—It has always been my opinion that the proper way to replace a broken mainspring in a Victor motor was to put in a Victor spring, and in a Columbia motor a Columbia spring, etc.

The question as to whether the efficiency of a motor is impaired by the use of other than its own make of parts is an open one. I would say that the result depended more on the ability of the man making the repair than on the parts he used.

In the case of using a mainspring a second time after it has been broken near the cage end: I cannot see how the use of a spring which has been shortened two feet can make any material difference in the running of the motor. If you take a two-spring motor, for an example, you find that the average playing time will be about three and one-half ten-inch records. There is, as a rule, reserve power enough to insure good tension on the drive gears after three records have been played. There is not enough power left to play another record and the motor must be rewound. Now, what harm results in slightly diminishing this reserve power by shortening one of the mainsprings? In the case of a single-spring motor I will agree that the proper length and size spring should be used in order to maintain maximum efficiency.

I quote a paragraph from a letter received from Mr. Ruff since my article appeared in the January issue: "As soon as I receive some material to complete some of them I will send you a sample that you can test for yourself and see that all the statements are correct. Of course, you are aware that there is nothing perfect, but we can have a sworn statement that the letter sent to you which was published in the January Talking Machine World is the truth."

I will admit that many reputations have been spoiled by inexperienced repair men. I have seen many a fine piece of mechanism ruined after passing through the hands of these near mechanics. Many times during the past years I have called this to the attention of the dealers in this column, and I claim that the fault is more the dealer's than anyone's else.

The average dealer pays too little attention to the upkeep of the instruments he sells. He should maintain some sort of follow-up service which would keep him in touch with the customer in such a way that whenever anything goes wrong the machine would get to his hands for repair. In this way he would be able to not only maintain efficiency in each particular machine but would also uphold the reputation of the goods he sells.

MASON APPOINTED SALES MANAGER

Popular Sales Executive Promoted to Important Post With New York Talking Machine Co.—Well Known Throughout the Victor Trade

Charles B. Mason, one of the most popular members of the Eastern Victor wholesale trade, has been appointed sales manager of the New York Talking Machine Co., 521 West Fifty-seventh street, Victor wholesaler. Mr. Mason assumed his new duties a few weeks ago, and as he was assistant sales manager of the company for over a year, he is thoroughly familiar with his new post.

Since 1916 Mr. Mason has been associated with the Chicago Talking Machine and the New York Talking Machine Co., with the exception of the period that he spent in the United States army during the war. He has held important sales positions with both companies, and his success may be attributed in a considerable measure to the fact that he thoroughly appreciates the value of co-operation with the Victor dealer. He is now preparing important plans for the coming year, which will undoubtedly be received enthusiastically by the New York Talking Machine Co.'s clientele.

Famous Victor Artist Appears at Rotary Club in Peoria—Sings New Number Dedicated to Music—It Was a Jolly Occasion

PEORIA, ILL., February 6.—Sir Harry Lauder, famous artist who records exclusively for the Victor library, was the guest of honor at the Rotary Club luncheon, held here Saturday. Fred Putnam, president of the Putnam-Page Co., Victor wholesalers in this city, was host to Sir Harry Lauder, and during the course of the luncheon, Sir Harry sang a number which he wrote on the train en route to Peoria.

This selection, which was rendered for the first time and was dedicated to music, was entitled "It's a Fine Thing to Sing," and the chorus was as follows:

"It's a fine thing to sing,
Singin' is the thing
For it brightens everything that's dark and dreary.
It helps you on the road when you have a heavy load.
Singin' is the thing to make you cheerrrrrry."

Many a growing business has been ruined by lack of attention to details by salesmen.

Her success was so great in the Cuban capital that a second concert was demanded, which Miss Hempel gave on February 7. Miss Hempel returned North to sing with the Harvard Glee Club on February 14, and to sing at the New York Hippodrome on February 19—Titta Ruffo appearing with her at the later concert. EDISON JOBBERS IN CONVENTION

Annual Meeting of National Body Being Held at Waldorf-Astoria, New York—Congratulate T. A. Edison on 75th Birthday Anniversary

As The World goes to press the members of the Edison Disc Jobbers' Association are opening the annual convention of that organization at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York, the sessions extending over February 13, 14 and 15. Judging from the reports of the advance arrivals, the attendance at the convention promises to come close to 100 per cent, and there are a number of very important matters scheduled for discussion among the jobbers themselves and between the jobbers and the factory officials.

The second day of the convention will be, as usual, "Laboratory Day," when William Maxwell, vice-president, and other officials of Thos. A. Edison, Inc., will attend the meeting of the Association and present the Edison sales plans for the balance of the year.

On the evening of February 15 the jobbers will be the guests of Thos. A. Edison, Inc., at an elaborate banquet at the Waldorf, where the entertainment will be furnished by a number of the stars of the Edison recording artists.

The time of the convention is deemed most appropriate in that Thos. A. Edison celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday anniversary on Saturday, February 11. A number of the jobbers made it a point to get to New York in time to extend to Mr. Edison their personal congratulations and best wishes upon his passing another milestone of life.

The present convention is the first held here in two years by the Jobbers' Association, the 1921 convention of that organization having been held in Montreal, Canada.

signal success. The display for February is unusually attractive, and is even more effective than the January display. As shown in the accompanying photograph, its sales possibilities

Featuring the MUSICAL POSSIBILITIES of the TALKING MACHINE

[EDITOR'S NOTE:—This is the sixteenth of a new series of articles by William Braid White, devoted to the various interesting opportunities which prevail in the domain of education for the retailer of talking machines. The subject is one of great interest and we commend these articles to the consideration of all who are devoting attention to the featuring and developing of the musical possibilities of the talking machine.]

TIE-ING UP WITH THE CHILDREN

It has been said that the education which we receive in our earliest days is the only education we carry with us to the grave. Other ideas may be imparted to us in late years, but none of these has the adhesive power, the capacity to stick up out of any imaginable complexity of later accumulated impressions, which pertain to those notions which were implanted in us during our infancy and early childhood. And this statement is true whether the notions are in themselves scientific or nonsensical, loving or malicious, wise or stupid.

"Music to the People"

It is being said within our trade that we must bring music to the people. So we must. But does anyone seriously suppose that there is any use in trying to educate into musical-thinking a people which has grown up outside musical influences? There are signs that this fallacy is believed in; but a little reflection will show that it is as fantastic as it is common. The truth is that if we wish to cultivate a musical feeling among the people of America we must begin with the young. We must begin with the child in the school and in the home; the younger the better.

Now, the talking machine merchant may realize with rueful clearness that there is not much use in trying to work up a desire for the ownership of a library of fine records amongst a people which is not in the least bit interested in music, and is showing that it never acquired any musical ideas in its young days. He is likely to realize this as he notes that it is harder to sell records of good music than it ought to be and that it is still harder to awaken in his customers any general desire to own libraries of fine vocal and instrumental records. But if he supposes that it is easy to convert adults, masculine or feminine, to musical desire, as embodied in the finer side of the talking machine and its records, he is much in error. At the best the musical education of the adult is a difficult and unsatisfactory process. The merchant, however, who is looking always for new selling ideas or for ways of improving old ones knows that he needs to sell every kind of machine, every kind of record and every kind of accessory, if his business is to be in a healthy state. If he sells only cheap machines and cheap records his business is not and cannot be in a healthy state. He needs to sell the best as well as the worst of his goods, and he knows that in order to make a balanced showing with a reasonable profit he must be able to draw from all sections of the community and from the highest grades of public taste.

For this very reason, in our judgment, every intelligent attempt to interest parents, through their children, by encouraging the acquirement of musical ideas in the latter's earliest years, is certain to bring immediate returns. Parents love their little ones, and are more easily moved by their desires than by any other cause that can be imagined. If they truly believe that the talking machine, for instance, with its records, can be instrumental in doing some real good to their children they will usually respond at once. But it must be a genuine value which the merchant offers. He must know what he is talking about and he must be able to offer substance, not a gold brick.

A Children's Department

We believe that there is good business, good advertising and good profit on systematically working out a children's department in connection with an up-to-date music store. We have always believed that the talking-machine man should also be a seller of general musical merchandise, should in fact try at least to be the Lyon & Healy of his community, the "everything in music" man. But whether he is this in any degree, or not at all, the fact remains that he should be a music man to the children, a music man to them par excellence. We believe that if the talking machine merchant can attract children to his store, steadily and regularly, he will be able to build up a public community interest in the musical merchandise he has to sell, more perfectly than he can in any other way. We believe, in short, that in order to educate the community to music buying you have to begin with the children. But you do not have to wait till they grow up. Get them started, and their fathers and mothers will quickly and unfaillingly follow.

Ways and Means

That this is not a dream the educational work of the Victor Talking Machine Co. in the public schools plainly shows. The American custom is to look to the public schools for almost all the cultural background with which the child is to be provided as it grows up. So that it is extremely important to work in with the schools in any attempt which may be made to tie up with the musical interests of the children for the purpose of promoting talking machine and record sales.

A merchant, then, might begin by establishing in a corner of the store a counter for children especially. This should display records for child use, such as nursery rhymes, school musical games, school songs and all the various items of the kind which interest children. If it were possible to have a room arranged where children might be left to play while their parents were elsewhere, a room like the playrooms of big department stores, where a supply of good records for children was kept—and played constantly—under the supervision of a competent woman, that alone would do a great deal to tie up with the minds of the parents the double idea that (1) talking machines are good to keep children in order and that (2) this particular store is the one place for merchandise of that kind.

Of course, one can always depend upon the kids talking. Leave it to them and they will chatter till the cows come home about the nice music they heard and about how nice it would be to have a talking machine at home. Nor will their chatter be ineffective. All merchandising experience goes to show that every dollar of money and every hour of time expended on catering to the child instinct for music is profitably expended.

Get the children to like your music and they will be your best salesmen. That is the message that can now be formulated.

For every child is naturally open to the influence of music. Children too soon can be hardened and narrowed by lack of cultural influences until they neither know nor care anything about music or any other fine thing. But if they are supplied at a tender age with the music for which every child nature hungers they will absorb musical ideas and desires so rapidly and so thoroughly that from that time onward no possible influence will be able to wean them from the same love. Catch them young and you will be able to build up, in a surprisingly short time, a music-loving community feeding your store each day with more and more sales.

More of the Same

All children like to sing and dance. Very well, then, offer to the boys and girls of every family on your talking machine books a ticket to a children's party at the store some Saturday afternoon (using a special room for the purpose). Have prizes for dancing, for the nicest costume and so on. Let each prize be one or more records of such music as children like. With each prize wrap up a notice to the effect that a large supply of similar child music (giving a list) is on hand at the store. The kids will take the records home and the old folks will Offer as a prize a talking machine and a set of kindergarten records chosen by the kindergarten teacher, to be presented to the class which comes out ahead in the competition. Every parent of one of the winners will want a talking machine after that, for the kids will never cease talking about it. Moreover, the parents of all the children who do not win may be circularized and reminded how nice a thing it is to have in the home for the children a talking machine like the one which the kindergarten class of the Blank school has just won.

Talented children are sure to be in every community. If you can find a clever boy and girl who can dance, put them in the window and let them dance to the music of one of your best talking machines. This will attract a crowd and then you can offer prizes for the best children dancers who can be found in town, offering each the chance of exhibiting and putting on an afternoon of public dance demonstrations before judges and an invited audience. Limit the audience to those who call at the store for tickets. You will get a crowd and you will sell more records than you ever thought you could sell.

Of course, all these features emphasize constantly the musical possibilities of the talking machine. The whole secret of talking machine merchandising is summed up in the fact that it is the music we are selling, not the machine. Hook up the children of your community with the idea of satisfying their own musical yearnings through the talking machine, and you will build up a rampart of community thought around your business which will protect you from the storms and keep you prosperous.

INTRODUCE LINE OF PERIOD MODELS

The Orsenigo Co. Opens Its Entire Line to the Trade—The Orsenigo Phonograph Soon to Be Announced Will Embody New Features

The Orsenigo Co., the widely known manufacturer of high-grade furniture and period model phonographs, with a spacious and well-equipped plant in Long Island City, N. Y., is announcing this month that its entire line of period models of exclusive design, hitherto supplied to a limited number of well-known concerns, is now being offered to the trade at large. Some twenty-one distinct patented designs have been created by this company which are manufactured under the supervision of internationally known designers by workmen who are recognized as leaders in the period furniture field.

Henry Orsenigo, president of the company, is keenly interested in the future of the period phonograph and has been very active in its development in the past few years. He believes that this phase of the talking machine business has great possibilities and that it affords the enterprising dealer a field for exploitation that will pay handsomely. "Our modern factory and skilled workmen," remarked Mr. Orsenigo, "are prepared to take care of everyone, and we believe that we are preparing the way for a greater appreciation of the period phonograph and thereby raising the standard of the present-day phonograph to a higher level."

In addition to the designs mentioned, according to Thomas Davis, general manager, a new phonograph, which will embody several new and distinct features and to be known as the Orsenigo, will soon be placed on the market. It will represent an entirely new departure in period phonograph construction and design, which, when ready, it is expected, will create a most favorable impression.

One of the greatest dangers in business life consists of getting into a rut.

"DA-LITE" ELECTRIC DISPLAY SERVICE SELLS RECORDS

We furnish you the Electric Display. Each month we mail you four artistic, hand-colored Panels, advertising Victor Records exclusively, at the low cost of $6.00. The profit on one 75c record pays the total daily cost, including electricity (24 hours). The records featured each month are selected through information obtained from fifty wholesale distributors and are always the leading sellers.

One dealer in Cleveland, Ohio, says our service is of no value to him, as he sells all the records we advertise the first few days of the month. But he did not stop to consider there is nothing to prevent him ordering ten times as many or all that he could sell during the month.

All of the leading distributors have this display installed in their salesroom for your inspection and will advise you to order the service if you desire to increase your sale of Victor Records.

SEEK RECEIVER FOR COLUMBIA GRAPHOPHONE MFG. CO.

Owners of Small Amount of Common Stock Apply for Receiver in U. S. Court at Wilmington, Del.—F. S. Whitten, Chairman Board of Directors, Attaches Little Importance to Action—His Statement

An application for a receivership for the Columbia Graphophone Mfg. Co. was filed on Thursday, February 9, in the United States District Court at Wilmington, Del., by the Universal Security Co., owner of 1,000 shares of common stock; May B. Shera, owner of 1,226 shares, and Henry W. Runyon, owner of 275 shares, all of Jersey City, N. J. Insolvency is alleged, and an order to show cause was made returnable February 17 by Judge Morris.

In the application the amount of the liabilities is placed at $19,900,000 to banks and financial creditors, in addition to $3,000,000 to merchandise and other creditors. The general affidavit charges that the increase in the business of the company at no time has been proportionate to the enlargement of the capital stock and the making of loans, and that since the middle of 1920 this has been steadily decreasing. There are stated to be outstanding preferred 7 per cent stock to the value of $9,883,731, par value $100, and 1,268,286 shares of common stock of no par value.

Francis S. Whitten, chairman of the board of directors of the Columbia Graphophone Mfg. Co., when shown the report that the Universal Security Co. had filed a bill in the Federal court at Wilmington, Del., asking for the appointment of a receiver for the company, said:

"I attach very little importance to this action. Although I have not seen a copy of the bill I understand it was filed by a stockholder. I am at a loss to understand why a stockholder should attempt to embarrass the company at a time when its creditors are co-operating in splendid fashion to preserve this property.

"I am confident that the suit will have no effect upon the carrying out of plans under consideration for the adjustment of the company's financial structure so as to insure the successful continuation of the company's business.

"I know of no grounds, whatever, upon which a stockholder could base the application for the appointment of a receiver, as the company is being conducted by the management elected by the stockholders and everything possible is being done in co-operation with the company's creditors to preserve the stockholders' equity.

"The Universal Security Co. owns of record only about one thousand shares of common stock."

The plans which were under consideration for the adjustment of the company's financial structure, as mentioned in Mr. Whitten's statement, were announced to the trade a few weeks ago. At that time a committee was formed of representative holders of the $6,000,000 five-year 8 per cent notes of the Columbia Graphophone Mfg. Co. The committee is composed of Harold Stanley, vice-president of the Guaranty Trust Co.; Hermann Kinnicutt, of Kissel, Kinnicutt & Co.; Bcyard Dominick, of Dominick & Dominick, and A. W. Butler, of Butler, Herrick & Kipp.

This committee, which was formed to seek deposits of the 8 per cent notes, was the result of the efforts of the various committees representing substantially all of the company's bank and merchandise creditors who were busy for some time in preparing a plan to readjust the company's indebtedness without interference with the continuation or development of the business. These banks and merchandise creditors hold about 75 per cent of the Columbia Graphophone Mfg. Co.'s total indebtedness. After the committee of note-holders had been formed, arrangements were made whereby the note-holders depositing their holdings were assured the interest payments which were due on February 1.

Subsequent to the formation of this committee, Mr. Stanley, as chairman, sent a circular to the five-year 8 per cent holders, urging them to deposit their notes with the Guaranty Trust Co. in an effort to make possible a readjustment of the company's finances without resort to a prolonged court reorganization. The circular contained a very interesting letter over Mr. Whitten's signature, in which he gave in detail a statement of the company's present industrial and financial condition, this statement reading as follows:

"In common with many other companies we have been through a period of severe shrinkage in the volume of our business, accompanied by large depreciation of inventory values and other unfavorable factors.

"At the beginning of the period the company had outstanding contracts for large amounts of cabinets and other materials necessary for an extensive manufacturing program, anticipating that 1921 business would be commensurate with 1920 business. However, 1921 sales were approximately $19,000,000 as against $47,000,000 in 1920.

"On December 31, 1921, the company owed large amounts to banks and merchandise creditors; this debt, with the $6,000,000 five-year 8 per cent gold notes, and approximately $250,000 real estate mortgages, made a total direct indebtedness of about $23,200,000. Representatives of the creditors have made an intensive study of the company's condition in an effort to get a correct view of the company's present situation and prospects for the future.

"As a result of their efforts substantial concessions have been made by the merchandise creditors and marked progress has been effected in the reduction of the company's commitments. In my judgment the company has a good future under fair normal operating conditions, with economies that have not been possible in the circumstances with which we have been confronted.

"On December 31, 1921, the company had current assets valued on a conservative going concern basis in excess of $21,600,000, after writing off upward of $7,700,000. These figures were arrived at by a very recent and thorough reappraisal of the current assets. The company has in addition plants and investments that are carried at a figure in excess of $9,000,000.

"The company has also contingent liabilities in respect of $1,625,000 first mortgage bonds and $1,925,000 preferred stock of Columbia Graphophone Factories Corp., which owns the company's plants in Toronto and Baltimore. These plants are leased to this company, which also owns all the common stock of the Factories Corp. The matter of the company's obligations on the Factories Corp.'s lease is now under consideration.

"The company is faced with the necessity of being relieved for the time being from payments on account of its indebtedness. The representatives of the banks and merchandise creditors, speaking for over $15,000,000 of the company's debt, are agreed upon the necessity for this relief, and it is hoped that your committee will co-operate with them to obtain this result.

"Prompt action by the note-holders is essential to carry out necessary plans for a voluntary readjustment of the company's finances and is to the interest of all creditors, including note-holders. The sooner this can be brought about the more rapidly will the inevitable benefits in operation accrue to the company. The only alternative is an expensive and protracted court reorganization, resulting in needless delay in the financial readjustment and loss for all concerned, which can and should be avoided.

"Note holders should bear in mind that the notes are wholly unsecured and have no priority over any of the other indebtedness of the company."

It is the consensus of opinion in the financial world that the plans which were recently completed for the adjustment of the company's financial affairs, practically insure the continuation of the business without interruption, and there is an undercurrent of optimism and confidence that is keenly appreciated by the Columbia organization.

THE 1922 VICTOR RECORD CATALOG

The Latest Issue of This Remarkable Book Really Represents a Forward Step in the Production of Musical Literature

There is now in the hands of Victor dealers for distribution the 1922 catalog of Victor records, an impressive volume of 500 pages or more, and offering what is considered an unparalleled collection of music of all sorts and of all nations, to say nothing of musical information and facts regarding famous artists that form in themselves the basis for a liberal musical education.

The Victor trade is so familiar with the Victor record catalog that it is likely that many of those most active in the selling of Victor products fail to realize just what is really offered to them and to the public in that comprehensive volume which, as it stands to-day, represents the results of over twenty years' work in developing a magnificent library of the best in music. Incidentally, the Victor record catalog presents to the public an introduction to the voices of those great artists who will never be heard again in the flesh, among whom, of course, Enrico Caruso stands first, with the list including Evan Williams, Maud Powell, Plancon and an impressive number of others.

The catalog does not represent simply a listing of records, but tells the story of those responsible for the music, of those who recorded it, something about the character of the selection and the message it conveys, and information generally that would, if gathered by the individual, require many months of research.

The Victor record catalog for 1922 has been featured most emphatically in the company's advertising in the February magazines and is presented to the public in a manner that should bring strong and immediate response to the retailer.

P. HENRY KERLER HONORED

Edward Earl, president of Ilsley-Doubleday & Co., 229 Front street, New York City, manufacturers of Eureka noiseless talking machine lubricant and Ilsley graphite phono string lubricant, has announced the election of P. Mr. Kerler is well known throughout the talking machine industry, as he has devoted much of his time to the talking machine lubricant division of the business.

Important Brunswick Move—DuBreuil Becomes Manager—Granby Expansion—To Hold Edison School—Columbia Changes—The News

CLEVELAND, O., February 6.—The announced consolidation of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co.'s phonograph division in this territory has become a reality. This move includes Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Buffalo, together with western Pennsylvania, western New York, Ohio and parts of West Virginia. Headquarters have been established at Cleveland and the staff has been so augmented as to facilitate prompt and efficient service to the dealer.

J. L. Du Breuil, who has made a name for himself in this territory as branch manager for the Columbia Graphophone Co., has been appointed district manager. His first official act was to make a complete tour of the district conferring with dealers and salesmen. During the trip he lined up several big business interests with whom he is conducting negotiations for handling phonographs.

Mr. Du Breuil has announced the appointment of E. F. Hughes as dealers' service director. Mr. Hughes was formerly connected with the local Columbia branch in the same capacity. He is well versed in the conditions that govern the industry in this district and, backed by a wealth of practical experience covering many years, he should prove a valuable addition to the Brunswick forces.

V. K. Henry, who has been associated with the Cleveland Brunswick branch, has left for Kansas City, where he will resume his old post.

Simultaneously with the announcement of the consolidation came the announcement that in the future the phonograph department of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. would be conducted separately from the rest of the firm's interests.

To Hold Edison School for Salesmen Here

The Phonograph Co., Edison distributor, announces that a session of the Edison School for Salesmen will be held in Cleveland from March 6 to 11. The plans call for the installation of novel instruction to be given through the services of actors coached to illustrate different selling points, ways of handling customers, the right and wrong methods of approach, and other essential details of salesmanship.

This is the first school of the sort to be held in the Cleveland district and is expected to develop much interest in view of the fact that there are already a great number of applications for admission. As yet no definite place has been decided upon for holding the sessions, but an announcement is expected shortly.

Appearances of Artists Boost Sales

Local record men are finding great sales stimulation in the personal appearances of various record artists. Colin O'Moore, Vocalion artist, appeared for a week recently at the Allen Theatre. Claire Dux, of the Chicago Opera Co. and record artist for Brunswick, sang at the formal opening of the Cleveland Discount Building, Cleveland's newest skyscraper. Miss Patricia, whose records are listed in the February Victor catalog, appeared personally at the Keith Theatre. Fritz Kreisler, violinist; Gigli, of the Metropolitan Opera Co., and various others are scheduled for local concerts in the near future and dealers are preparing to make the most of their appearances.

Edison Publicity Through Actor-Artist

The Phonograph Co., Edison distributor, recently got much publicity from a tone test by Signor Frisco, xylophonist, who was on the bill at the local Keith vaudeville house. The test was unique inasmuch as Signor Frisco incorporated an Edison instrument in his act and repeated it at every performance. Harry R. Tucker, sales manager of the Phonograph Co., helped to put the stunt across in this big way.

Signor Frisco played his instrument before a curtain which suddenly parted, revealing an Edison machine. He stopped playing—the music was taken up by the machine. It is estimated that the audience totaled 10,000 persons during the week and the act proved to be one of the most popular on the bill. Manager Tucker distributed cards with the listings of the various Frisco records and reports that there was a hearty response from Edison owners.

Fisher Co. Gives Up Pathé Jobbing

The Fisher Co., Pathé representative in Ohio, has disposed of its stock in the wholesale business to the Alms & Doepke Co., of Cincinnati, the new Ohio distributors. They will, however, continue in the retail business, and may eventually accept another machine for wholesale distribution.

In connection with the wholesale retirement in Pathé a special sale of the wholesale stock was held which met with almost unprecedented success. During the last few weeks of the sale the turnover averaged 100 machines a day, while the greatest daily total reached was 167 machines. This last is believed to be a record in this territory.

Under the new plans of the Fisher Co. the following officers will continue in their positions: Mrs. C. J. Caldwell, president; R. J. Jamieson, sales manager; F. W. Nearing, special representative.

Tone Test Transmitted by Wireless

During the week Frisco's act was also transmitted by radiophone from the laboratories of the Cox Manufacturing Co. He appeared in conjunction with various other artists from the theatre. It was probably the first time that a tone test over wireless had ever been held, and it created much interest as there are about 3,000

Try New Machine by Radio

Another feature of the radio program was the trial of a new type phonograph invented by Dr. W. D. Gans. The most unique feature of the new invention is a violin spruce diaphragm. This device worked remarkably well and, in the opinion of Warren R. Cox, who personally supervised the concert, it is the best reproducing device yet tried.

Plan Two New Granby Warehouses

The Kennedy-Schultz Co., distributors of Granby phonographs, who recently extended their service, plan on maintaining two separate warehouses, one in Cincinnati and the other in Cleveland, which system will enable them to insure distributors against short stocks. H. C. Schultz, member of the firm, and Harry S. Coplan, general sales manager of the Granby interests in Ohio, recently completed a tour of the territory and announce that dealers and salesmen were never more enthusiastic about the Granby machine.

Eight Victor Artists to Appear

This season's contract for the appearance of the Eight Famous Victor Artists was recently signed. The date will be March 6. The concert will be under the auspices of the Northern Ohio Talking Machine Dealers' Association. Samuel H. Deutsch, of the retail trade, will be at the helm as far as arrangements are concerned.

Changes in Columbia Branch

George Krauslick, manager of the record department of the Cleveland Columbia branch, has been appointed service department manager for the local Columbia office. Mr. Krauslick is also a musician and orchestra director, and this, coupled with his experience in the record business, will undoubtedly make him a big aid to the dealers of the territory.

Miss Frances E. Miller becomes secretary to S. S. Larmon, branch manager. George Krauslick has been appointed service manager, and George Murray becomes record department manager. Miss Eleanor Nemic, Miss Gertrude B. George and Miss Blanche Price will assist Messrs. Krauslick and Murray. H. C. Cooley, assistant branch manager, is receiving compliments from dealers who recognize the good service the new organization is giving them.

A. R. Wiggins Becomes Vocalion Jobber

A. R. Wiggins has taken over the northern Ohio territory, including Cleveland, as Vocalion representative.

The Hoover-Bond Co., of Ashtabula, announce that they will handle the Brunswick line.

J. H. Barnes Wins Edison Sales Contest

The sales contest conducted by the Phonograph Co. for Edison dealers in this territory was won by J. H. Barnes, of George E. Buss Co., New Philadelphia, taking the grand prize for volume of business in dollars and cents. His record was fifty-two sales. The prize was a valuable Hamilton watch. Ten others won prizes of trips to Edison salesmanship schools.

"Talker" Displaces Artists at Musicale

Artists are not necessary for a musical club concert. That startling fact was proved at a recent meeting of the Tiffin (O.) Women's Club when a Columbia Italian Renaissance period model instrument took the place of singers at its weekly musicale. The concert was given before a full turnout numbering in the neighborhood of 100, and created such a favorable impression that other events of like nature are contemplated. Carl Abbott, of the Tiffin Music Co., put the plan across with the co-operation of H. C. Cooley, assistant branch manager of Columbia at Cleveland.

According to Mr. Abbott the affair is bound to have a great influence among similar organizations in the smaller towns, because the difficulty of securing talent is great and the perfection of present-day instruments makes them entirely applicable for use in this capacity. He expresses great enthusiasm over the outcome of the idea, and says it has caused much comment throughout the district.

New Cheney Offices in Pittsburgh

Announcement that offices have been established in Pittsburgh follows the notice of enlargement of territory that recently came from headquarters of the Cheney Phonograph Sales Co. and the Record Sales Co., of which George R. Madson is president. Marion Cheney will be in charge of the Pennsylvania territory representing both companies. Headquarters are on the sixth floor, 806 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh.

Plan Increase in Size of Bailey Co.

Plans for increasing the size of the graphophone department of the Bailey Co. are receiving serious consideration by the official of the concern. E. A. Friedlander, department manager, announces that there has been a steady increase in the amount of business since the beginning of the year and present conditions augur well for a continuance.

the music memory contest, which will be held March 8, with the Cleveland Orchestra in charge of the program, more closely with the record end of their business.

This event has potentialities of unbelievable importance inasmuch as all the school children of Cleveland and Lakewood are interested and many of them will be in the actual competition. According to Miss Grazella Puliver, publicity director of the Cleveland Talking Machine Co., the effects of this event are already becoming evident, especially as regards children. At the present time it is nothing uncommon for a youngster to come into a store and ask for a record correctly, the name of which would defy the average grown-up.

Hold Successful Children's Parties

Miss Lillian Meier, branch manager of the L. Meier & Sons Co., recently put over an idea that is both unique and practical. She interviewed school officials and obtained the names of 100 pupils and their addresses, then sent a hand-written invitation to each of them to be present at a party at the firm's West Twenty-fifth-Denison store.

The response was 100 per cent and Miss Meier did herself proud as hostess. Each child received a bag of candy together with a miniature edition of the famous Victor dog. Records with a direct appeal to the children were played and the children as well as the Meier Co. voted it one grand afternoon. Another party held at the same store was termed a chocolate luncheon. The Forbes Chocolate Co., a local concern, supplied the chocolate, and all the latest records were played for the benefit of the women and their children who had been invited to the store. A list of those attending was obtained, which will prove useful in a follow-up campaign.

Harmony Music Shoppe Pushes Steger

The Harmony Music Shoppe announces that with the first of February it will devote its entire efforts to the Steger agency. Mrs. M. M. Smith, department manager, says that the move was decided upon in view of the fact that Steger prices have been cut to a pre-war basis. The event has been marked with an extensive advertising campaign and special window displays.

The Harmony also announces that it is handling German-made records for the first time since the conclusion of the war. Walter S. Raeder, member of the firm, expresses the belief that the new records are the clearest he has ever heard. Okeh records are also being featured.

Magnolia Machine Makes Début

Another new machine has made its appearance here. It is the Magnolia, manufactured by the M. Schulz Co., Chicago. F. L. Stelker, local manager, is busy preparing a publicity campaign.

SECURING IDEAS FROM EMPLOYEES

George W. Gray's Timely Comment on a Subject of Outstanding Importance

The following interesting discussion, relative to executives securing valuable ideas and suggestions from employes, appeared in Business, of which George W. Gray is the author:

"All managers know that among the ranks of the employes, even in the upper ranks, there are very few minds from which proceed original ideas, simple or complex. Creative genius is laggard, at least in expressing itself. Two closely related feelings entertained by employes are partly responsible for this dearth of suggestions. The first is a lack of self-confidence. The second is a diffidence about offering advice to the management, which is based on the assumption that ideas from below are not welcomed. Employes must be systematically encouraged to study the problems of production and management, and to reveal their conclusions.

"The management, however, is not universally to blame for the employes' conviction that suggestions are unwelcome. One executive tells of low, as a boy, he went to his foreman with a suggestion for a new foot control that would speed up the machines. The foreman ultimately rejected the idea as too expensive. The executive states that the essence of his idea is now embodied in machines of the type affected. This problem of the adverse attitude toward suggestions, frequently persisted in by foremen and other minor executives, is an exceedingly serious one. A mere invitation is not enough to combat this situation and to stimulate the self-confidence and enthusiasm of the employes. An effective suggestion system really has to create a market for suggestions, has to bid for suggestions and place a premium on them. There must be some extra incentive to produce the extra work. It must be made perfectly clear from the outset that the management regards the making of suggestions as extra work for which the employe is entitled to receive additional compensation.

"A large specialty store in New York has placed a suggestion box in the vestibule of its employes' entrance. This store is an active concern, advertising on a large scale and enjoying a wide patronage. But recently the manager realized that the big profits were leaking out through small but insidious inefficiencies. He summoned an efficiency engineer, but, like some other managers, he refused to take the engineer's advice. He wouldn't install a real suggestion system. He wouldn't offer the additional and essential incentive. He took the attitude that he was paying the employes for their time, and that he was entitled to everything they could do without further cost to him. The result has been that the suggestion box is regarded as a joke. A few anonymous, trivial, flippant and generally worthless suggestions have been passed in, but that is all.

"It is not true, however, that the additional incentive must be supplied in the form of cash. In principle the requirement is for recognition and for some token of esteem. One manager finds that he can operate by giving the maker of a helpful suggestion a purse, a fountain pen or some similar article. In order to avoid selecting an article which will not satisfy the tastes of the particular person making a suggestion, as may easily happen in a concern employing a large number of people, some companies have arranged to have an assortment of articles from which the individual may choose. This array of prizes may be displayed, or it may be photographed and the photograph may be exhibited. Another firm has found that a well-defined yearning for honor and distinction has made the award of medals a satisfactory compensation for suggestions."

ALBANY, N. Y., February 7.—Rudd & Rix, talking machine dealers, of this city, have completed the moving of their stock into new quarters on Main and Otsego streets. The new home is much larger and more advantageously located than the former establishment. A number of record demonstration booths and other modern fixtures are features of the new store.

NEW FOREIGN LANGUAGE RECORDS

Columbia Co. Announces New List of Records of Great Importance—Recorded in Europe by Messrs. Kubieus and Gloetzner, of Foreign Language Division — Comprise Recordings Made in All Important European Countries

The Columbia Graphophone Co. will shortly announce to the trade a complete new list of foreign language records which will be added to the company's present extensive foreign language catalog. These records comprise a wide selection of foreign language numbers recorded in Europe by H. C. Kubieus, of the foreign language department, who, in conjunction with John Gloetzner, a Columbia recording expert, has just returned from a trip through European countries.

Mr. Kubieus directed this enterprising trip for the Columbia Co., while Mr. Gloetzner was responsible for the recordings. In order to secure the best possible results, a Columbia recording machine was taken along for the purpose, and all of the wax blanks used in the recordings were imported for this purpose. This step was taken to insure perfect recordings, as they believe that recording machines and recording wax blanks are considered superior to those of European manufacture.

These new records will comprise native songs and selections from the following countries which the Columbia representatives visited: Bohemia, Poland, Germany, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Austria and all the Scandinavian countries. As they are both familiar with the foreign language field in every detail, the records made under their supervision promise to be a noteworthy addition to the Columbia foreign record catalog.

Mr. Kubieus, in a chat with The World, stated that the talent obtained for the making of these records were the best in their respective countries, and that no pains were spared to make them perfect in every way. It is expected that the demand for these records will more than repay for the effort, time and money spent by the Columbia Co. in securing them, and this trip emphasizes the splendid service which this company is endeavoring to give its large foreign record trade.

DA-LITE SIGNS PROVING POPULAR

Over Fifty Victor Jobbers Now Distributing This Sign Service—Signs Act as Record Sales Stimulant Whenever They Are Used

TOLEDO, O., February 8.—The Da-Lite Electric Display Co., of this city, manufacturer of the popular series of display signs being used by Victor dealers throughout the country, is meeting with considerable success in developing a market for its product. At the present time Harry Cuddeback, head of the company, is co-operating with the Victor jobbers in presenting this sign to the dealers and, as a result of his efforts, over fifty Victor wholesalers are now distributing the service.

The sign service, conceived by the Da-Lite Electric Display Co., embodies many unique features which have found a hearty welcome from Victor dealers. The selections presented on these signs are chosen with exceptional care and consideration and the Victor dealers have found that the use of these signs acts as a marked stimulant to the sale of the records that are featured.

NEW SONORA POSTER READY

Twenty-four-sheet Poster Announced by Sonora Advertising Department Will Produce Sales for Dealers—Striking in Character

The new twenty-four-sheet poster illustrated herewith has just been received from the lithographers, and is one of the most magnificent pieces of outdoor display advertising ever put out by Sonora. It will prove a tremendous business bringer for Sonora dealers who make use of it, and because of its brilliant coloring and

One of the Latest Sonora Posters striking design will stand out from the mass of billboard advertising.

The name Sonora in white letters with a red outline is over six feet long and appears against a background of rich, deep blue. The big French windows to the left are life size and disclose an outdoor scene beyond in high sunlight, brilliantly painted in natural colors. Against this gorgeous landscape, and just to one side of the window, the bulge model Sonora stands out like an actual machine. The whole is eight feet by ten inches high and nineteen feet by eight inches wide.

No adequate idea of the size and beauty of the poster can be obtained from the cut or a mere description. It must be seen to be appreciated. Big space is allowed at bottom for the dealer's name and address.

The salesman who is not "sold" on his own line had better attach himself to another.

EFFICIENT PLANT OF CHENEY TALKING MACHINE CO.

Some of the Many Modern Features of the Big Cheney Factory in Grand Rapids That Make Possible the Production of Phonographs of Quality—Absolute Accuracy a Factor

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., February 8.—The word "quality," as applied to a manufactured product of almost any kind, is often grossly misused. Even if one buys the very best material and employs the most skilled and experienced men, the product cannot on that account alone be legitimately called a "quality" product. One may go even further than that. Concerns with splendid ideas, and whose products have been protected by absolute patents which, if properly worked out commercially, would have made immense fortunes, have failed utterly because they have not been able to translate those ideas into terms of dependable merchandise.

Granted a good idea for a product, financial ability to purchase the best materials, to provide adequate machinery and adequate brains for intelligent workmanship, there are still other conditions absolutely necessary in order to obtain the highest success. There must be executive ability to so utilize materials, processes and money as to carry out to the fullest the ideas of the inventor. Furthermore, there must be a continuous inspection system, a checking-up at every stage of the manufacture, so as to assure complete co-ordination of skilled labor, material and processes.

The writer has never seen more perfect co-ordination of the factors necessary in the production of a "quality" product than during a recent visit to the factories of the Cheney Talking Machine Co., in this city. It would take twice the space of this article to give an adequate description of the wood-working plant alone, and similar space to do justice to the metal-working plant which turns out their motors, tone arms and similar equipment. Consequently one can only generalize.

After one has walked through ten acres of wood-working plant and over the many thousands of square feet occupied by the metal-working departments one has amassed a collection of very distinct impressions. One has become convinced not only that every possible provision has been made for eliminating or correcting errors, but that the whole force, from inventor, general manager and staff down to the humblest worker, stands back of the factory's work solidly and enthusiastically.

As everyone in the talking machine field knows, the Cheney instrument is in many respects unique. It owes its existence to Forrest Cheney, a professional musician of wide reputation, who planned it after years of careful and painstaking experimentation. He sought to embody in it the principles which have been worked out in the resonating air chambers of the pipe organ, merged into one synchronized series of tone chambers with a resonator carved from the pattern of that violin to which, as an artist, he devoted years of his life. To produce commercially an instrument equal in tonal effect to the model he had built in his own study on radically new lines was indeed a task of large proportions.

The visitor to the Cheney factories to-day goes away convinced that this task has been done well. Special machinery had to be devised to meet the particular needs. Extraordinary accuracy had to be used in order to secure in quantity uniformity of product, so that every Cheney would get the tonal results of the laboratory-made model. They tell one over there that a variation of a sixteenth of an inch in the offset of the little palate in the resonator was found to cause a defect in the reproduction of certain tones. It was also discovered that a seemingly minor detail like the casting of an inner ridge in the base of the tone arm perceptibly affected the quality of tone produced.

From their experience in production they have evolved a system of inspection which is simply wonderful. Every worker in every department must know whether the part he is to work on has been made correctly, whether the material is right and the processes have done their perfect work. Besides this, there is an army of special inspectors at the close of every process and the beginning of every other. It is a system of check upon check, producing results to which Cheney distributors and dealers can testify. One little item will show the extreme care used in the construction of the tone-reproducing apparatus of the Cheney. The wood used in the acoustic throat and orchestral section is selected with the greatest care. Specific logs are selected and their wood is seasoned for a long time before being used for the acoustic parts.

The Cheney Co. attribute the smoothness with which their organization works and the perfect co-operation of the workers with their department heads to their regular system of conferences, which is developed to the highest degree in this institution. The factories are divided into four organizations under their respective heads, who in turn are directly responsible, for all which comes within their scope of authority, to the factory manager. Meetings of these sections convene automatically each day at appointed hours. Each has its permanent chairman and vice-chairman, so that there is no chance of postponement because an executive is absent. Certain topics are thoroughly gone over at each of these meetings, such as production, quality, standards, labor, etc. Then there is a meeting held daily, including two or more of the leaders in each of the respective organizations, at which are discussed general matters common to all of the divisions. At these meetings certain schedules are set and it is an old saying in the Cheney organization that once a schedule is set it is an unwritten law that it must be met. In fact, schedules are always met and often exceeded.

In this whole great organization every man is made to realize his individual responsibility. Each must make his goal or he has retarded the progress of the entire unit.

Anyone who has spent a day in the Cheney factory, after talking with Forrest Cheney, Factory Manager F. H. Doerr and the staff of enthusiastic department heads, must be convinced that the company is laying its foundations sure and strong. In a chat with Professor Cheney he said: "The advent of the Cheney was not heralded with a blare of trumpets nor have we used sensational advertising methods at any time. Some people think that we have been too conservative, but we have simply sought to inform the public and give them actual news regarding the Cheney and setting forth the technical means by which our results are secured. Notwithstanding any statement you may hear to the contrary, the judgment of the public can be trusted to the last degree. Any good violinist will draw a crowd, but only a supreme master like Kreisler or Heifetz will pack the largest auditorium you can find. We have reason to be especially pleased that so many skilled musicians, orchestra leaders, orchestral specialists and vocalists have purchased Cheney instruments and are enthusiastic over their tonal beauties. This is to us convincing proof that we are realizing the artistic ideals upon which this business was founded."

HEALTH BUILDERS IN TRUTH

President of Health Builders, Inc., Tells Why He Is Not Afraid of the "Flu"—The "Daily Dozen" Set to Music Grows in Favor

"Why I Am Not Afraid of the Flu," by Robert B. Wheelan, was the title of a timely advertisement placed in several of the metropolitan dailies during the period when the number of flu cases were steadily growing day by day. Mr. Wheelan is president of Health Builders, Inc., New York, which produces a set of health building records of the same name which are Walter Camp's "Daily Dozen" set to music. This advertisement, which was in the form of a news article, interestingly set forth the ability to ward off the attacks of a contagious germ when the body is kept fit. The efficiency and timeliness of this advertisement is to be found in the report that three days subsequent to the appearance of this advertisement the business of the metropolitan retailers carrying the Health Builders' course increased 300 per cent.

Mr. Wheelan reports that the Health Builders' course is increasing steadily in popularity among talking machine dealers. It was last October that this course was originally placed in the hands of the dealers and every month since then the volume of sales through the talking machine retailer has doubled itself. It was remarkable that the month of January, which is ordinarily expected to be a quite month, doubled the total sales of December to retailers.

As an instance of progressiveness, Mr. Wheeler called attention to a Columbia dealer of Warsaw, Va., who, with the aid of a Ford truck, placed a set of Health Builder records on trial in every school that was equipped with a talking machine and those who were not he also provided with a phonograph. This dealer received considerable encouragement in that out of the first twenty-four outfits placed twenty-two sales were consummated and he plans to extend this work throughout the entire State of Virginia.

Health Builders, Inc., is conducting an extensive advertising campaign and in this month of February is represented in fifty-four advertising mediums.

JOBBER MAKING ARRANGEMENTS

The arrangements committee of the National Association of Talking Machine Jobbers is holding a meeting at the offices of the Silas E. Pearsall Co., New York, just as the February issue of The World is going to press. At this meeting detailed arrangements will be made regarding this year's convention, and as soon as everything is arranged the jobbers will be advised accordingly.

M. E. LYLE JOINS STRAND FORCES

Well-known Executive Will Represent Manufacturers' Phonograph Co. in South—Ideally Qualified for New Work

Mervin E. Lyle, formerly associated for fifteen years with the Columbia Graphophone Co., and well known in the industry from coast to coast, has joined the staff of the Manufacturers Phonograph Co., New York, manufacturer of the Strand phonograph. He will represent the company in the South, with headquarters at Atlanta, Ga., and he left New York the early part of the week to establish offices in that city.

The acquisition of Mr. Lyle to the organization of the Manufacturers' Phonograph Co. is a distinct tribute to the success that the Strand phonograph has achieved since it was placed on the market a few months ago. A keen student of merchandising and familiar with every phase of the industry in all of its important developments, Mr. Lyle became identified with the Strand organization after a careful investigation of the product and its sales possibilities. Mr. Lyle has studied the talking machine field from every possible angle, having occupied important executive posts in the manufacturing, sales and development divisions of the business. He has been particularly interested in co-operating with the dealers wherever possible and will be in a splendid position to give practical service to the Strand representatives in his territory.

Clifford, formerly Eastern sales manager of the Cardinal Phonograph Co., has been appointed exclusive sales representative for New England for the Puritan record, which will be manufactured by the Bridgeport Die & Machine Co., Bridgeport, Conn. This record will retail at 50 cents, and Mr. Clifford, who has established temporary offices at 351 West Fifty-fifth street, New York, is planning an intensive drive for dealers throughout New England.

E. J. DINGLEY GUEST AT LUNCHEON

Edward J. Dingley, assistant sales manager of the Victor Talking Machine Co., was a visitor to New York recently. An informal luncheon in his honor was arranged by Clarence L. Price, vice-president of Ormes, Inc., Victor distributor, at which other New York jobbers were present.

W. C. Thomas, president of the Tampa Hardware Co., Columbia distributor at Tampa, Fla., was a visitor at Columbia headquarters in New York recently. His visit was for the discussion of plans for the distribution of Columbia Grafonolas in southern Florida during the coming year. He predicts a healthy and normal demand for Columbia products during 1922.

TRADE IN CANTON ON UP GRADE

Business Shows Improvement Following a Quiet January—Leading Companies Are Optimistic Regarding Outlook—Cope & Son's Purchase

CANTON, O., February 6.—The talking machine and record business here seems at last to be on the up-grade after what is said to have been one of the most quiet business periods during the past year. Following a brisk holiday business, there was a decided slump during the first few weeks of January, which is now happily past history.

Prospective purchasers of talking machines here desire the better grade of instruments, but they are unable to assume the obligation which a purchase such as this entails, due to slack industrial conditions here, and, consequently, most sales consist of the cheaper machines. The industrial situation is picking up, however, and dealers are looking to the future with considerable optimism.

C. M. Alford, head of the Alford & Fryar Co., reports the Starr phonograph business as very satisfactory in the face of existing conditions. This firm is making many sales, and the volume of business this year is already in excess of the corresponding period of last year.

January proved a fair month for the Edison product here, according to an official of the Rhines Edison shop, the newest music shop in Canton. He reports that Edison records experienced an unusually good month.

The George C. Wille Co., Victor distributor, has acquired a large storeroom at Cleveland avenue and Third street, which will be used for a talking machine and piano storeroom. The company expects to change locations soon and it is believed the store will be located at the Cleveland avenue site in about another year. Victor business in January fell off, compared to previous months, but optimism prevails with this concern, and February is doing well.

Purchase of the entire stock of the Cassaday Co. and lease of the entire store building at 314 East Main street, Alliance, O., have been made by T. W. Cope & Sons, that city, Pathé distributors. After March 1 the Cope Co. will be located in the new location.

The Van Fossen-Smiley Co., Sonora dealer, is without a president as the result of the recent death of S. B. Van Fossen. Mr. Smiley has been made acting president until the annual meeting in April, when new officers will be elected.

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., which recently opened a store in the New Northern Hotel building, Sixth street and Market avenue, here, will add a line of talking machines and sheet music, it was announced by M. M. Potee, manager.

No successor to R. E. Jones, recently resigned manager of the talking machine department at the William A. Zollinger & Sons Co., has been named. Mr. Jones is now with the George R. Dales & Sons Co., Akron, O.

REPAIR MEN CAN BOOST SALES

One factor for increasing business, particularly record sales, which is often overlooked by the talking machine merchant is through the medium of the repair staff. The repairman should be kept supplied with a few of the latest records for demonstrating when his work is finished. A catchy air will often arouse interest and terminate in a sale.

RETIRE FROM HARGER & BLSH

Geo. C., Herman F. and Gustave U. Silzer Terminate Active Connection With This Old-time Firm—Future Plans Not Announced

DES MOINES, IA., February 10.—The plans for the formation of Silzer & Bros. to conduct the Edison jobbing business from this city did not materialize as described in a previous issue of The World. George C. Silzer and Herman F. Silzer, of Des Moines, and Gus. U. Silzer, of Sioux City, have announced the termination of their active connection with the firm of Harger & Blish, Inc., Edison jobbers of Des Moines and Sioux City.

George C. Silzer had been connected with the Harger & Blish concern for a period of twenty-eight years, G. U. Silzer for fourteen years and H. F. for twelve years, the three together constituting the minority stockholders in the company. George Silzer was president of the Edison Disc Jobbers' Association in 1920. He is now only forty-two, though with twenty-eight years of experience in the phonograph field—in fact, his Edison jobbing connection is the only business connection he ever had. His future plans have not as yet been announced. His brothers are already located in other lines of industry.

Thomas O'Dowd, the well-known singer of Irish songs for records, composer of Irish patriotic songs, has just placed upon the market, in record form, a series of his compositions, under the trade name O'Dowd Record. He thus becomes a composer, publisher, singer and manufacturer, which is, indeed, a unique position. Among his latest record issues are several timely numbers released under the caption "St. Patrick's Day Records." The address of this new company is 260 East 129th street, New York City. Mr. O'Dowd made a transcontinental tour with Mr. De Valera, the former President of the Irish Republic, and is quite active in Irish circles.

In a chat with The World Mr. Coté stated that the company is making rapid headway and at the present time its list of distributors comprises the following well-known concerns: Cabinet & Accessories Co. ### COMPANIES MUST NOT BE CONFUSED

Starr Piano Co., Richmond, Ind., Issues Important Statement Regarding Remington Product

A statement has been issued to the trade by the Starr Piano Co., of Richmond, Ind., calling attention to the fact that the Remington phonographs or pianos made by it should in no way be confused with the Remington Phonograph Co. or the products of the latter concern, the affairs of which were recently put in the hands of receivers. The name "Remington," as applied to musical instruments, has been the property for a great many years of the Starr Piano Co., which is one of the oldest and financially strongest manufacturing concerns of the music industry. The Remington name controlled by this concern and used on its products has attained an excellent standing in the trade.

DOLBEER TALKS TO PHILA. DEALERS

Manager of Traveling Department of Victor Co. Addresses Philadelphia Victor Dealers' Association on "The Outlook for 1922"

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 9.—Frank K. Dolbeer, manager of the traveling department of the Victor Talking Machine Co., was the principal speaker at the luncheon and meeting of the Victor Talking Machine Dealers' Association of Philadelphia, held at the Bellevue-Stratford to-day. Mr. Dolbeer had for his subject "The Outlook for 1922," and summed up the situation as he saw it in a most interesting manner. He stated that the success of the Disarmament Conference and the savings that would result would have a great influence for business improvement, as would the general solution of the various international problems.

The general improvement of exchange, which is gradually getting back to a more or less normal level, would also have the effect of stimulating the business of this country by encouraging foreign trade on a more substantial basis.

In the course of his talk Mr. Dolbeer pointed out as two noteworthy conditions the easing up of the money market, which made the financing of business simpler, and also the general settling of the labor situation and the decreasing number of strikes, which indicated smoother sailing in the matter of production.

The speaker made reference to the developments in connection with the soldier bonus bill and the burden it was likely to throw on business, but declared that the bonus burden would, in a sense, be offset through the greater activities on the part of the railroads in developing their lines, improving and increasing their rolling stock, and thereby reducing the volume of unemployment and increasing the amount of money in circulation.

In closing, Mr. Dolbeer emphasized the importance at this particular time of exercising care in the selection and building up of the sales force in order to establish a proper and resultful contact with the public. He also outlined what the Victor Co. was doing for the development of the retailer's business and for the development of public interest in Victor goods.

On the whole, it was a talk that made a strong appeal to the local dealers and sent them away from the meeting with something to think about.

ITS FIRST LIST OF IRISH RECORDS

Gaelic Phonograph Record Co., Inc., New York, Makes Debut—Has Spacious and Well-equipped Quarters—H. P. Fay Chief Executive

After many months of careful preparation the Gaelic Phonograph Record Co., Inc., New York City, which terms itself "the only all-Irish phonograph record company," has presented its first list of Irish records to the trade. The first release consists of thirty-four double-faced numbers, although over 200 masters have been made and will shortly be ready for presentation. Great care has been taken both in the selection of artists and in the recording of the records, and they are aptly claimed by the company to "Bring the Breath of Ireland to Your Home."

The Gaelic Phonograph Record Co. has as its chief executive H. P. Fay, who has had not only many years' experience in the production of records through his former connections with some of the largest houses in the country, but who is also thoroughly conversant with the particular record requirements of the Irish people. Harold Suikert, vice-president of the company, is in charge of the recording, and, like Mr. Fay, he has had many years' experience in the recording laboratory. Thomas F. Dwyer, a well-known business executive, is secretary and treasurer.

The Gaelic Phonograph Record Co. is handsomely housed in a palatial building which at one time was the home of Thomas Carroll, a former well-known Tammany politician. The company occupies four floors. In the basement is situated the plating department as well as the record presses. On the second floor is a personal recording laboratory. This is a new department which will shortly be inaugurated by the company for private recordings of individual records. This salon is handsomely furnished and equipped. On the third floor is an equally attractive reception room and on the sixth floor another recording room for the regular record business of the company. The offices of the company are also located on this floor. The building is handsomely decorated and furnished with many valuable antiques. It provides an excellent home and location for the company in the uptown business center of the city. The new company has started in an auspicious manner. Mr. Fay reports that many dealers have already taken on this new line and predicts a big future for it everywhere, due to the fact that it is individual and non-competing.

WEIL BROS. TO PUSH PLAYER-TONE

NEWARK, N. J., February 8.—Weil Bros., of this city, have secured the representation in New Jersey for the Player-Tone line of talking machines, manufactured by the Player-Tone Talking Machine Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., according to S. K. Weil, a member of the company. Mr. Weil stated that he was planning an extensive campaign in behalf of this product.

SOME NOTABLE INSTALLATIONS

Van Veen & Co. Equip the New Buckley Newhall Quarters, the Staten Island Ferry Terminal and the Alexander Store in Long Branch

A very appreciable stimulus of the talking machine trade in general is noted by Van Veen & Co., Inc., New York. Many inquiries have been received from dealers desiring to refit their present stores or from new dealers requiring equipment for the Spring business. A large number of these orders have already been booked.

Van Veen & Co. are equipping the new quarters of the Buckley Newhall Co., at Forty-first street and Sixth avenue, New York, with a handsome installation of eight booths, with complete record rack equipment sufficient to carry 15,000 records. The Buckley Newhall Co. owns the building and is occupying this large corner store as headquarters for its chain of retail furniture establishments.

Another notable installation is that of N. Alexander, 130 Broadway, Long Branch, N. J. This will be one of the show places of Long Branch and is designed to be the handsomest and most complete phonograph shop in that city.

An interesting development in the merchandising of records, talking machines and supplies will be an installation in the New York terminal of the Staten Island ferry of a handsome booth in the main waiting room. This will be fully equipped in every way for the display and sale of Columbia records and general talking machine supplies. The owners are very enthusiastic over this new departure. It is expected that it will be a great convenience for Staten Island commuters to purchase their supplies while waiting for their boat and filling in the spare time by record demonstration, at the same time furnishing entertainment for those who are waiting in the ferry house and saving them the nickels that they formerly dropped into slot machines for similar entertainment.

OFFER TO PLAYERPHONE CREDITORS

President of That Company Seeks Settlement on Cash Basis of 15 Per Cent of Claims

CHICAGO, ILL., February 8.—The attorneys for the Playerphone Talking Machine Co., of this city, have presented to the creditors of that company an offer made by B. W. McKenzie, its president, to raise enough money to settle with the creditors on the basis of 15 per cent cash. The attorneys state that the indebtedness of the company is approximately $80,000, that the total inventory amounts to only 15 per cent of that amount and at forced sale only about $5,000 would be realized. The response of the creditors to the offer has not yet been announced.

Greater New York Representative of Victor Co. Resigns to Become Connected With McGuckin Advertising Agency in Philadelphia

Thomas McCreedy, who for the past five years has represented the Victor Talking Machine Co. in Greater New York, resigned his post on February 11, in order to enter the advertising field, becoming connected with the Eugene McGuckin Advertising Agency in Philadelphia. Mr. McCreedy, who traveled for the Victor Co. in Ohio and Kentucky before coming to New York, rendered excellent service in this territory and was extremely popular with both Victor wholesalers and retailers. He goes into his new work with the best wishes of the officers of the Victor as well as the Victor representatives in Greater New York.

At the Victor factory it was stated that up to the time of going to press a successor to Mr. McCreedy had not been selected.

WILL APPEAL TO LOCAL TRADE

Max Landay at Head of Committee to Raise $50,000 for Jewish War Relief Work—Well-known Talking Machine Men Associated With Him in Drive That Starts Next Week

Max Landay, of Landay Bros., is chairman of the committee that has been appointed to raise the quota in the New York music trades for the Jewish war relief committee. This campaign will start on February 19 and end on March 4 and associated with Mr. Landay in this work are Chester Abelowitz, of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co.; A. Davega, of the Knickerbocker Talking Machine Co.; Paul L. Baerwald, of the General Phonograph Corp.; M. Max, of Gimbel Bros. and B. Abrams, of the Grand Talking Machine Co.

The quota set for the music trades in Greater New York is $50,000 and Mr. Landay is positive that the sum received will far exceed this quota, as he feels sure that the trade understands and appreciates the terrible suffering of the millions of unfortunates in the war's devastated countries. The committee states that all checks should be made payable to Paul L. Baerwald, treasurer of the committee, but should be mailed to Mr. Landay, at his offices, 311 Sixth avenue, New York City.

Montague, counsel for the Association, will address both the Chicago and New York meetings.

Both sessions will be open to members of the Association in general and Lloyd L. FREEMAN HOME FROM COAST TOUR

Director of Distribution of Victor Talking Machine Co. in Transcontinental Tour Makes First-hand Survey of Business Situation

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 10.—Ralph L. Freeman, director of distribution of the Victor Talking Machine Co., returned to his office in the Victor plant yesterday from a coast-to-coast trip, in the course of which he got in direct touch with Victor wholesalers and dealers in a number of the larger cities of the country, with a view to getting a first-hand impression of general business conditions.

Mr. Freeman left Camden on January 18, and in the course of his tour visited Cleveland, Chicago, Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Kansas City and St. Louis. He stated that he found a general improvement in the business situation throughout the country and that even in sections where conditions were considerably below par they represented an improvement over conditions as they had existed. He was thoroughly optimistic regarding the Victor trade throughout the country and its immediate prospects.

During the course of his tour Mr. Freeman was entertained by both wholesalers and retailers in a number of the cities and was afforded the opportunity of meeting many members of the trade.

MAY OPEN KNOXVILLE PLANT

Brunswick Co. May Add Assembling Plant to Veneer Factory at Lonsdale—Important Deal With Sterchi Bros.—Handle Brunswick Line

KNOXVILLE, TENN., February 6.—There is a strong possibility that the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. may add a phonograph assembling plant to its veneer plant at Lonsdale in the near future, according to an announcement made by J. B. Morgan, Southern representative of the company, a few days ago.

Mr. Morgan also announced that a deal had just been closed, whereby Sterchi Bros., of this city, will distribute Brunswick phonographs in all of its stores. Sterchi Bros. operate fourteen stores throughout the South, and the consummation of arrangements with the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. is one of the most important talking machine deals that have been closed in the South in recent years.

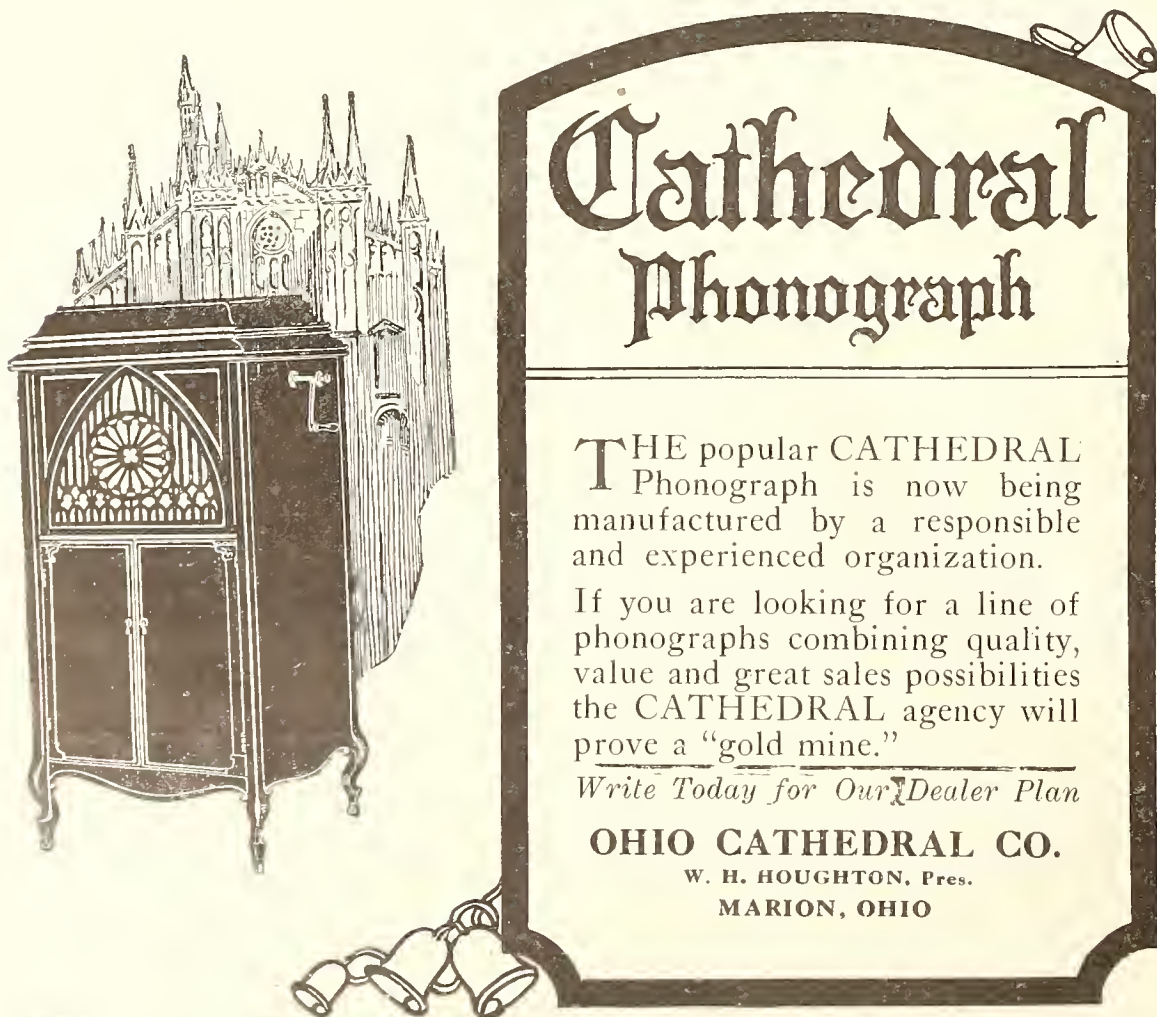

The veneer plant of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. at Lonsdale (a suburb of Knoxville) is running full time. The plant was opened about two years ago and the company is so pleased with the factory here that Mr. Morgan advises he was authorized by John Shank, treasurer of the company, to state that an assembling plant for Knoxville is more than a possibility.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Feb. 9.—The A. C. #### DEATH OF C. R. HUTCHINGS

Popular Pearsall Representative Dies From Pneumonia—Well Known in Victor Trade

C. Raymond Hutchings, of the sales staff of the Silas E. Pearsall Co., New York, Victor wholesaler, died at his home in South Orange, N. J., on January 26. Mr. Hutchings, who was twenty-nine years of age at the time of his death, was ill only a few days from an attack of pneumonia and his death was a keen shock to his associates.

During the five years he had been associated with the Pearsall organization Mr. Hutchings had won the admiration and esteem of the Victor dealers throughout his territory. He had visited the trade in New England, Pennsylvania, Brooklyn and New Jersey, and wherever he called he was given an enthusiastic welcome, as he was a keen student of retail merchandising, with a thorough knowledge of the dealers' problems.

Prior to joining the Pearsall organization Mr. Hutchings was associated with Hunt's Music House, White Plains, N. Y., and Stahl's Book Store, Trenton, N. J., Victor retailers, and in addition to his commercial activities he was a singer of considerable prominence.

The funeral services were held from his late home on January 28 and were attended by the members of the Pearsall staff. Mr. Hutchings is survived by a widow and two children.

Talk the language of the man you are trying to sell. Clear, simple English is appreciated by the educated and the uneducated alike, and it is much more forceful.

EXTENSIVE KIRKMAN CAMPAIGN

Sales Manager of Kirkman Engineering Corp. Well Pleased with Results from Campaign Started on Circular Metal Record Cleaner

The Kirkman Engineering Corp., New York City, manufacturer of record cleaners and automatic stops, opened an extensive campaign on the first of the year on the K-E circular metal record cleaner. The opening announcement appeared in the January issue of The World and this advertisement was ably augmented by an excellent series of follow-up letters with appreciable results.

Commenting upon this campaign, H. M. Linter, sales manager of the company, spoke as follows: "Our advertising campaign in The World is producing quite satisfactory results. The value of our circular cleaner is evidently appreciated because our announcement of reduced prices brought in a large number of requests for samples and quotations and also considerable business. Our present price on this circular record cleaner is, as a matter of fact 25 per cent below pre-war prices. Our automatic stops have been largely used by manufacturers of talking machines for a number of years and we are gratified to have recently received orders from new customers who, although manufacturing talking machines for a number of years, either have not used automatic stops previously or are changing to the stop which we make. This is the tenth year of its successful manufacture, so, therefore, we can place in back of each automatic stop that we produce ten years of experience and our unqualified guarantee."

The respect of a sales staff for the manager is necessary for the success of any business.

The wise man profits by his mistakes—and others' also.

THREE NEW STRAND MODELS

Three Consoles Added to Line—W. F. Standke and A. H. Dankman Appointed Representatives—Over 300 Dealers Now Handling Line

Geo. W. Lyle, president of the Manufacturers Phonograph Co., New York, manufacturer of the Strand phonograph, announced recently that the company had added three new console models to its line, all of which are fully as attractive as the No. 8 Queen Anne console, which has met with an enthusiastic reception from the dealers throughout the country.

It was also announced recently that W. F. Standke and A. H. Dankman had been appointed representatives for the company. Mr. Standke was formerly manager of the Columbia Graphophone Co.'s wholesale branches at New Orleans and Denver, and will represent the Strand line in Kansas City and adjacent territory. Mr. Dankman was formerly city salesman for the Columbia Graphophone Co. in Buffalo, and will represent the Strand line in Buffalo and adjacent territory. Mr. Lyle states that over three hundred representative dealers are now handling the Strand line and the company has important plans in process of completion which will undoubtedly assist these dealers materially in developing Strand business.

OPERATIC STARS TO HONOR CARUSO

Business Shows Favorable Trend for First Month of New Year—Big Outcry of Importation of Cheap Gramophone Supplies—Critical Situation Reviewed—Reasons Why German Trade Is Prosperous—The Great British Industries Fair Attracts Large Crowds—Aircraft Co. Creditors Meet—Death of H. Smart Regretted—Meeting of Travelers—Record Preservative—The News of the Month in Detail

LONDON, ENG., January 31.—The first month of the New Year has been somewhat slack from the viewpoint of Gramophone and record sales. The trade did not indulge in any very great hopes of radical progress, believing that the Christmas rush time would leave us a bit cold in January. But it must be admitted that a more favorable turnover than has been experienced generally was expected. Business is quite good in some directions, but, on the whole, is a little patchy. It is not uncommon to receive optimistic reports from one firm and just the reverse from its neighbor.

Before we approach anywhere near to normality I am afraid there is a long road to travel. Unemployment is still as rife as a month or more ago. This, in itself, is an unwelcome index of the parlous state of our main industries. I believe the tide of adversity has turned, that the light of revival shows dimly ahead, and that trade improvement will make progressive headway during 1922. But we are not out of the woods and it is as well to remind ourselves that special effort must be maintained in every direction to make good the losses of 1921 and build solidly for the future. This is the basis of that gradual improvement of trade that we look for during the present year and that we shall surely reap concurrently with the adjustment of the world's political and social amenities.

Importation of Cheap Foreign Goods

In the gramophone trade, as in other industries, there is existent a big outcry against the importation of gramophone motors, sound boxes, springs, needles and other parts and accessories. It is nothing new; foreign competition has been the bugbear of British trade interests throughout the history of the gramophone. But now and then a British manufacturer sends up a cry of distress and the consequent publicity brings the matter once again within the compass of current politics.

Prior to 1914 there were only two or three British-made gramophones, and parts and accessories were almost unknown. Much came from Switzerland, the bulk from Germany. We imported simply because we could do so at a price (assured, too, of fair value) that could not be touched by any British firm. With years of experience behind them, the Germans and the Swiss could indulge successfully in massed production of cheap motors, sound boxes, etc., and though attempts were made this side to compete they mostly ended in disappointment.

Since 1914, when foreign supplies were cut off by the war, there is no part of a gramophone which has not received attention from British firms. The result is a series of first-class gramophone products of all grades and prices bearing the hall-mark of British manufacture. After the war things went merrily enough for a time. But the Germans quickly got busy and soon complaints were registered around of so-called "unfair" competition. An attempt made by British manufacturers and wholesalers to arrive at a common understanding not to handle German goods failed of its object, as did the effort to enlist support of the retail trade along the same lines. In other words, you cannot stifle open competition by academic means, nor by any other means, except a crushing import duty. Is such a duty justified? That is the question. Free trade has been the basis of British commercial endeavors for so long that, under normal conditions, we should hesitate to suggest a reversion to permanent tariff imposition. But the conditions, not being normal, demand a close examination of the position in which, as a result, British manufacturers find themselves. The great trouble is the depreciated value of foreign currency. Here, for instance, the German mark is down to the value of about a fourth of a penny. At that rate the importation of German sound boxes, motors, springs, etc., leaves the British makers' price in the air. In this business there is little or no sentiment today—your average trader simply buys cheapest, without question, and there's an end to it. And the beauty of it, too, is that cheapest often carries with it an article of remarkably good quality and workmanship. This is the position up against which the British manufacturer finds himself. He is making a good article often at a cut price, ordinarily has a fair market, but to-day cannot maintain his sales because of the cheaply imported foreign article. What is he to do? There is little possibility of cutting costs or profits; that has already been reduced to the lowest level. His only hope is a stronger tariff protection. The existing tariff is 33 1-3 per cent. If a case is made out under the terms of the Industries Protection Bill an additional 33 1-3 per cent may be levied. Owing to opposition or lack of unanimity in the trade the Federation of British Music Industries has decided against collective representation to the Board of Trade Committee, leaving it to individual associations to make their own claims in submission of a demand for protection by the extra import levy above mentioned. This is, of course, a great pity in the sense of the old adage that "United we stand; divided we fall." That extra 33 1-3 per cent is absolutely necessary to British manufacturers and they are entitled to it just so long as depreciated currency permits foreign manufacturers to dump goods here at absurdly low prices to the entire disorganization and maintenance of legitimate British trade endeavor. The associations should press the Government and press it mighty hard.

German Talking Machine Trade Still Busy

Notwithstanding reports that orders for German gramophones, motors and parts show signs of having passed the high-water mark, it is evident that a remarkably prosperous state of things still obtains throughout the Fatherland. Mainly to balance the low value of the mark abroad and to meet increased labor values, a general rise has taken place in the price of records particularly and parts and accessories generally. Big export orders are on hand, though British importers are not so freely disposed as formerly to commit themselves to accept delivery of large consignments of goods unless almost immediate delivery is guaranteed. This is not often possible. Time delivery means considerable dislocation of business and, owing to the fluctuating value of the mark, often a considerable financial loss. One London importer told me that he had placed a big order for goods from Germany when the value of the mark here was just under four hundred to the pound. The goods are expected any day now and he is faced with a mark of eight hundred to the pound value. Trade has slackened off and the sale of the goods is likely to hang fire for a time. Similar goods imported by others at the higher mark rate can be sold for much less than his. The consequence is that importers are getting more and more shy of ordering German goods. Substantial consignments, however, are still coming in, but this difficulty over the fluctuating value of the mark may eventually react to the benefit of our home manufacturers.

The British Industries Fair Opens

From February 27 to March 10 the great British Industries Fair will attract buyers, it is expected, from all parts of the world. The exhibition is at the White City, Shepherd's Bush London. There are five and one-half miles of stalls; the music section only totals a couple of hundred yards. Among talking machine firms attractive exhibits are shown by the Disque Cabinet Co., Johnson Talking Machine Co., Garrard Engineering Co., C. H. Roberts Mfg. Co., Gramophone Components, Ltd., Craies & Stavridi, Melodia, Ltd., Jordan & Carpenter, The Sterno Mfg. Co., Electric Gramophones, Ltd., and Barnett Samuel & Sons, Ltd.

Several of last year's exhibitors have not taken representation this year on the ground that results were unsatisfactory. At that time, unfortunately, the great trade slump had just set in and, though we are far from being out of the woods to-day, there can be little doubt that the present exhibition will show infinitely better trading results than last. It will not be the fault of the Board of Trade if good business is not registered by all exhibitors. Over forty thousand prospective buyers overseas have been eight times circularized or written to on the subject of the fair. These communications were printed in eight languages. Over 250,000 home-buyers have received invitations. So that, altogether, it is a reasonable assumption to expect a satisfactory attendance.

Gramophone Replaces Orchestra at Restaurants

There is a growing movement to utilize the gramophone at restaurants in place of small orchestras. An instrument, called the "Magnifone," is connected up to the tables and music is delivered through cunningly concealed sound chambers. It has infinite possibilities for the purpose mentioned and, indeed, any social function. One advantage over the human element, we are humorously informed by a newspaper scribe, is that the Magnifone never has influenza or other disabling ailments at the last moment! And it requires no supper.

Creditors of the Aircraft Mfg. Co. Meet

At a recent meeting of the creditors of the above company, which embarked upon the manufacture of gramophones, the liquidator said that until 1920 the firm had a prosperous career. Mainly on the aircraft side, profits had amounted to as much as £176,000 in one year of trading. In the Autumn of 1919 the company developed its peace program and went in for the manufacture, among other things, of gramophones. From October 1, 1919, to December 4, 1920, the company lost £620,000.

"In the opinion of counsel the contracts for motor car and gramophone bodies," said the liquidator, "were ultra vires and if they resulted in a loss to the company the liquidator appeared to have cause for commencing misfeasance proceedings. The point might arise as to whether these contracts were entered into before or after control of the company had passed to the Birmingham Small Arms Co."

The latter concern, by the way, has supplied a large number of gramophone motors for assembly into complete machines which are marketed here by a well-known gramophone company.

It is anticipated that there will be a surplus of funds for distribution among the creditors of the Aircraft Mfg. Co.

Miscellaneous Items of Trade News

The third annual dinner of the Federation of British Music Industries, at which many notabilities in the world of music will be present, is due to take place on January 26, just too late for a complete report to be included in this issue.

The death, under somewhat painful circumstances, of H. Smart has caused widespread regret among his many friends in gramophone trade circles. Mr. Smart counted many years' experience of the trade, covering service with the British Zonophone Co., and for the past decade as manager of Perophone, Ltd.

Complaint is made against the dumping of foreign gramophone springs on this market at cut prices. The Invicta Spring Co., maker of the "Eel" brand, says that unless some official action is taken it is only a question of time before British spring-makers are driven out of business.

For some unknown reason (perhaps for the protection of home industries) Poland has prohibited the importation of gramophones and certain other musical instruments.

The famous electric sign, said to be the finest in London, which adorns the Gramophone Co.'s Oxford street building, is now in full and bright swing. It attracts many thousands of eyes daily and that means good advertising.

A new gramophone in the design of a miniature grand piano, with digitorium keyboard, is due to appear on this market shortly. It is for the assistance of elementary pianoforte students. Suitable records will dictate instruction while the student manipulates the keyboard.

The Latest Grand Opera Zonophone Records

Most of the Zonophone records issued for some time past have been of the ordinary ten-inch variety. There has been a dearth of twelve-inchers and grand opera numbers. All the more welcome, therefore, is the inclusion of some of this class in recent issues. A selection from the new list follows: twelve-inch record No. A-258, "Don Giovanni," overture by the Black Diamond Band, whose magnificently well-balanced rendition of Mozart's grand work is a musical treat. The other side of this record carries another attractive item by the same band—"Mirèlla" Overture (Gounod). The second twelve-inch on the list, No. A-259, is a vocal by George Parker. His baritone voice is certainly very effectively used in two pleasing operatic excerpts—"A Word Allow Me" (Si Puo?), Leoncavallo, and "The Tempest of the Heart," from "Il Trovatore." A further attraction is that Mr. Parker sings both in English, clearly enunciated.

Of the two ten-inch grand opera records special welcome will be accorded the reappearance of the mysterious L'Incognita, whose beautiful soprano is heard in "Softly Sighs the Voice of Evening" and "Villanelle." In the latter the flute obbligato by John Amadio is exquisite. On G. O. 53 Marjorie Hayward gives us a fine example of the art of bowing, her two violin numbers for this disc being exceptionally fine. The titles are "Hungarian Dance," No. 5 (Brahms), and "Intermezzo" (Marcella).

Lastly, we have two records from the ordinary ten-inch double-side list. On 2195 is the great hit "Coal Black Mammy" and "I Shall Remember Your Kisses," from "The Co-optimists." Both are well sung by Dick Denton. Two typical numbers, "Cherie" and "My Sunny Tennessee," on 2194, by Herbert Payne, complete the program.

A Record Preservative

Some attention has been given this side to a new introduction called "Glissoline." The makers claim that by its use the life of a record is tripled.

So-called record revivers have been inflicted upon an unsuspecting gramophone public from the beginning of trade history. Such revivers seldom outlive the life of the record they are supposed to preserve. The fact is that new records do not want reviving and old ones are usually past resuscitation.

"Glissoline," however, comes to us with positive claims that it arrests the wear on a record and that on glissolined records any needle can be used at least ten times. These are strong claims. I have not had an opportunity of testing the solution, but it is spoken well of in several quarters.

A New Style of Retail Advertising

Looking through some of the Belfast newspapers I was particularly impressed with an editorial advertisement by Thos. Edens Osborne. At least, I take it as an advertisement, though the ordinary reader would not, perhaps. It is simply in the form of a letter, in which Mr. Osborne expresses his appreciation of the Gramophone Co.'s excellent advertisement in the Belfast Telegraph, whereby the famous "His Master's Voice" products were brought under the notice of many thousands of potential buyers at an appropriately good time. This introduces quite a new style of publicity, which, I think, deserves the recognition here given.

Manufacturers' Travelers Meeting

A meeting of Manufacturers' Travelers was held at the office of the Federation of Music Industries on December 21, the idea being to give to those present such information as to the work of the Federation as would insure their interest and co-operation.

The organizing director explained the Federation activities in some detail and pointed out how it was possible for a corporate body, representing the whole of the industries, but not itself a trade concern, to accomplish what was beyond the powers of any individual firm.

As the result of the organizing director's remarks many of the travelers present said that they were extremely glad to have had their previous hazy views as to the Federation's work clarified and unanimously resolved to do all in their power to support the Federation.

LATEST PATENTS RELATING TO TALKING MACHINES AND RECORDS

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 8.—Phonograph Resonator. John Herzog, Saginaw, Mich., assignor to the Sonora Phonograph Co., New York. Patent No. 1,397,733.

This invention relates to resonators and pertains more particularly to an improved construction for horns of sound-reproducing instruments such as phonographs and the like.

The objects of the improvement are, first, to provide a horn having a sound-carrying channel of angular cross-sectional shape, the walls of the channel being in the form of warped or twisted planes, whereby the resonance of the horn is increased and the quality or timbre of the sound is unimpaired by its transmission through the resonator.

A further object is to provide a horn of such construction and shape that it can be made of wood at relatively small expense and yet be of such shape that that part of the tapered body near the smaller end of the horn may be bent laterally and upwardly to a position such that the tone arm of a phonograph may be joined to the upper end of the horn at one corner of the motor board of the instrument, while enabling the horn to deliver the sound from its flared end extending across the front of the cabinet of the phonograph. Thus the horn, in its preferred form, passes underneath the motor and then laterally and upwardly to the corner of the motor board, occupying small space and enabling the horn and the mechanism of the phonograph to be arranged compactly.

This invention relates to amplification of sonorous vibrations and the object is to make possible the delivery of a complex vibration sound of large volume in such a manner and of such qualities that it can be perceived by an audience as if identical with the perception of an original sonorous vibration.

The invention is applicable particularly to the amplification of the complex vibrations of a phonograph, although it is also applicable to those of a telephone receiver and, in fact, any complex vibration source of a volume too weak for practical purposes without amplification of any kind whatsoever.

An object of the invention is to provide this and it is accomplished by preventing the direct passage of the air vibrations from the sound conduit through the amplifying sound chamber and, by deliberately deflecting them against elastic sounding boards designed particularly to be responsive to the harmonics and overtones which require generous amplification, then, as it were, to focus the generously amplified harmonics and overtones together with the amplified vibrations primarily created by air column resonance.

Brush for Talking Machine Records. Joseph F. Borst and William Borst, Brooklyn, N. Y. Patent No. 1,399,714.

The present invention relates more particularly to an attachment for the sound box or reproducer thereof. The primary object is to provide a brush attachment for talking machine sound boxes.

It is a further object to provide a brush which is capable of use with sound boxes so mounted as to adapt them for playing records of both the hill-and-dale and lateral types; a brush that will in either position engage the record in advance of the stylus of the sound box and in the path of the stylus in order that the sound grooves may be cleaned of foreign matter before they are engaged by the stylus.

Brushes have heretofore been used in this connection, but have ordinarily been attached to the tone arm of the talking machine rather than to the sound box itself, which method of support has disadvantages in that the path of the brush and the path of the stylus are not always coincident, which is especially true during the playing of the central part of a disc record, and it is a further object of the invention to so mount the brush that its path of travel will at all times coincide with the path of travel of the stylus.

Reproducer. Jobby Belpedio, Bridgeport, Conn. Patent No. 1,399,922, December 13.

This invention relates to new and useful improvements in reproducers for talking machines and has for a primary object the provision of a device of the above-stated character, which is capable of reproducing sounds on different records now on the market and known by the following names: Columbia, Victor, Pathé and Edison, thereby providing a device for universal use and one that will successfully operate on different kinds of talking machines that employ tone arms.

Another object of this invention is the provision of a sound box having the usual diaphragm to which different stylus holders are connected and which have the desired type of styli for reproducing the kinds of records mentioned.

A further object is the provision of means for connecting the sound box to the tone arm and which will permit adjustment of said sound box to different angles or positions for playing the different types of records.

A further object is the provision of means whereby the sound box may be easily and quickly disassembled when desiring to make repairs or adjustments to the diaphragm or the means that connects the same to the stylus holder.

Figure 1 is a side elevation illustrating a reproducer constructed in accordance with the invention and showing the same positioned to play a Victor or Columbia record; Fig. 2 is a similar view, illustrating the reproducer positioned to play a Pathé record; Fig. 3 is a similar view partly in section, illustrating the reproducer positioned to play an Edison record; Fig. 4 is a sectional view illustrating the same; Fig. 5 is a detail sectional view taken on the line 5—5 of Fig. 3; Fig. 6 is a fragmentary sectional view illustrating a modified form of means of connecting the diaphragm to the stylus holders.

Phonographic Tablet. Victor H. Emerson, New York. Patent No. 1,399,757.

This invention relates to improvements in phonographic tablets, particularly tablets having a special shape and capable of reproducing sounds of special character.

An aim of this invention is to provide a tablet made in imitation of the appearance of a well-known animate or inanimate object and comprising a phonographic record that can reproduce sounds which the hearer generally associates with that object. For example, if the tablet represents a living creature the record will be adapted to reproduce sounds characteristic of that creature or pertaining to it, or appropriate in some other way. Hence, the tablet can be used for purposes both of entertainment and instruction, especially when the record is played in the presence of young persons.

Sound Box. Henry K. Sandell, Chicago, Ill., assignor to Herbert S. Mills, same place. Patent No. 1,399,404.

The present invention relates to improvements in sound-reproducing devices, and more particularly to sound boxes in which a diaphragm is supported, which is caused to vibrate and thereby emit sound waves.

Figure 1 is a plan view of a portion of a tone arm, showing the sound box in position thereon; Fig. 2 is a side elevation of a portion of a tone arm, with the sound box attached thereto in position for playing records with lateral sound wave impressions; Fig. 3 is a front elevation of the sound box, and Fig. 4 is a section through the sound box on the lines 4 of Figs. 1 and 2.

Sound Box. Leo L. Hughes, Washington, D. C. Patent No. 1,399,302.

This invention relates to phonographs and has for its object to provide means for improving the quality of the sound reproduced by such instruments.

a section on the line 3—3 of Fig. 2; Fig. 4 is a section on the line 4—4 of Fig. 2, and Fig. 5 is a section on the line 5—5 of Fig. 2.

Turntable for Talking Machines. Anthony Vasselli, Newark, N. J., assignor to the General Phonograph Corp., New York. Patent No. 1,399,171.

This invention relates to turntables for talking machines, and has for its object to produce a device of the character described, which will be light in weight, cheap to manufacture, ornate in appearance, and from which the record disc may be easily removed.

The invention relates to means for securing a pad to turntables of disc talking machines and the production of means so that such pad will not become disarranged in use and to prevent the unraveling of the fabric constituting the pad.

elevation of the same; Fig. 3 is a sectional view of the device at one stage of the operation of forming the turntable; Fig. 4 is a fragmentary side elevation partly in section showing a further step in the manufacture, and Fig. 5 is a detail section showing a modification.

Talking Machine Cabinet and Amplifier. John Bailey Browning, Camden, N. J., assignor to the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., Chicago, Ill. Patent No. 1,402,738.

This invention relates more particularly to sound-reproducing or talking machines having an enclosed horn or amplifier to which the sound is transmitted through a suitable sound conduit from the sound box or sound-reproducing means.

In the drawings: Fig. 1 is a sectional side elevation of a machine embodying the invention; Fig. 2 is a front elevation of the same on a reduced scale and with the front doors open; Fig. 3 is a rear elevation; Fig. 4 is a vertical section of the collar for securing the horn section to the opening in the back of the cabinet;

Fig. 5 is a side elevation of the turntable brake; Fig. 6 is a plan view of the brake escutcheon; Fig. 7 is a longitudinal section of the turntable brake; Fig. 8 is an inverted plan view of the cabinet, and Fig. 9 is a vertical section of line x—x of Fig. 8 with the position of the cabinet reversed.

Phonograph Reproducer. Pius Sucher, Philadelphia, Pa. Patent No. 1,402,909.

The invention relates to phonographs, and more particularly to reproducers for use in connection therewith, and has for an object to provide a reproducer which is of a simple construction and which will effectively reproduce the desired sounds from a phonograph record and transmit the same to the usual apparatus of a phonograph machine.

The invention comprehends, among other features, a reproducer which is almost entirely made up of non-vibratory parts and materials, excepting, of course, the usual diaphragm, the material employed in the body construction of the reproducer being preferably wood or some other similar material which will not be susceptible to the vibrations of sound, when used in the body formation of the article.

In the further disclosure of the invention reference is to be had to the accompanying drawings constituting a part of this specification, in which similar characters of reference denote corresponding parts in all the views, and in which—

Metal Knockdown Phonograph Horn and Method of Making Same. Louis Jay Gerson, Palisades, N. Y., assignor of one-half to Frank W. Wood, New York. Patent No. 1,403,314.

This invention relates to phonograph horns for phonograph structures, the object thereof being to provide an improved metal horn and method of making the same, which can be readily used with a phonograph cabinet, particularly a cabinet of metal construction, such as that shown and described in contemporaneously pending application, Series No. 371,711, filed April 6, 1920, the object of the present improvement being to provide what may be considered a knockdown horn simple in construction, inexpensive to make and readily assembled without any bolts or similar fastening means.

In the drawings accompanying and forming a part of this specification Fig. 1 is a perspective view of this improved horn looking toward the bottom thereof; Fig. 2 is a perspective view of the horn looking toward the top thereof; Fig. 3 is a detail view illustrating the manner of assembling the sides of the top and Fig. 4 is a sectional view taken on line 4—4, Fig. 2.

Fig. 5 is a side elevation of the turntable brake; Fig. 6 is a plan view of the brake escutcheon; Fig. 7 is a longitudinal section of the turntable brake; Fig. 8 is an inverted plan view of the cabinet, and Fig. 9 is a vertical section of line x—x of Fig. 8 with the position of the cabinet reversed.

“I was astounded to find that I could not tell when Prihoda was playing or when your phonograph was playing.”

Thus wrote the venerable John C. Freund, editor of “Musical America” and President of the Musical Alliance of America, to Mr. Thomas A. Edison after hearing Vasa Prihoda play his violin in comparison with the Edison RE-CREATION of his art.

The proof showing that there is no difference between the artists’ actual playing or singing and the Edison RE-CREATION of their performance continues to pile up. And among all the phonographs manufactured, the New Edison is the only one which can sustain this acid test of direct comparison.

USES BUNGALOW AS SALES QUARTERS

How the Cottage Music Shop of Cincinnati Enables Customers to Hear the Talking Machine Play Exactly as in Their Own Home

Store arrangement and attractiveness are essentials of importance to dealers who are really catering to the public and who desire not only to hold but to augment their trade. One of the most popular and live talking machine houses of Cincinnati—the Cottage Music Shop, of Twelfth and Vine streets—has, as will be noticed in the picture appearing herewith, built a bungalow within the store in order to demonstrate to the music-loving public the pleasure to be derived from having a talking machine in the home. The cottage is completely furnished like an ordinary home and all tests are made directly within the cottage, thus demonstrating how the talking machine would brighten up the home of the customer. This plan of being able to hear a talking machine and records just as they would be heard in their own home is a very important means of closing sales, but better than all that it gives an idea to prospective purchasers of the enterprise and go-aheadedness of the institution that inaugurates such up-to-date merchandising methods.

CAPITALIZE THE RIDICULED PHRASE

Pointer for the Salesmen When "Canned Music" Is Referred to Sneeringly—Make Capital of It

It has been the practice of a great many writers and talkers to refer sneeringly to "canned music" when discussing the reproduction of music on the talking machine. Recently a salesman in an address before the Kiwanis Club, of New York dwelt on this much-used phrase and made a suggestion which salesmen may apply when handling a customer or others who talk sarcastically of "canned music." To the customer, the salesman says in effect: Yes, call it canned music if you will, but it is canned only as someone might say that the telephone, telegraph and wireless can human thought and expression, or as you would say that important documents are canned when you put them in the cornerstone of a great public building. You can ridicule anything by giving it a sneering nickname, but it is often possible for the shrewd man to adopt the term and make capital out of it. If your customer talks about canning music tell him how the wisdom of the ages is canned in the printed word, how beauty is canned in sculpture or fine architecture.

ANTAGONIZING CUSTOMERS RUINOUS

One of the impossibilities of selling is to antagonize and influence at the same time. Antagonizing a customer or a prospect means not only the loss of one sale but also of future patronage. A few of the things that antagonize and which the salesman should steer clear of are lack of knowledge of the product, inattention to the customer, servility and slovenliness. A few of the qualities which help to close sales are the reverse of those that antagonize.

HE WHO READS MAY WIN IDEAS

The Man Who Keeps in Touch With the Mail Literature Reaching His Desk Will Often Strike a Vein of Gold—Don't Discard It

Quantities of direct mail literature are received by business men—manufacturers, dealers, jobbers—every day. A great many people have made it a practice of throwing practically all circular matter into the waste basket without investigation. The other day the general manager of a company, who was receiving a lot of this literature, conceived the idea of literally putting the waste paper basket on a pedestal. He read and digested the business literature thrown away, not only by himself, but by other people in the same firm, and as a result was able to give the "Boss" a suggestion which got him his first raise in salary.

The cost of labor turnover shrivels into nothingness compared to the cost of preparing sales literature which is consigned to the waste basket unread and unwept. Even trade periodicals are slighted—but not by the successful business man! The business man who is always too tired to be interested in new developments in his own line of business is on the toboggan slide for the sanitarium.

There is a great deal of excellent direct literature being sent out by manufacturers and jobbers of the talking machine industry, and it behooves every enterprising member of the industry who is on the mailing list to receive this literature to look it over for new and valuable ideas.

AN AID TO MUSIC MEMORY CONTESTS

Valuable Booklet Regarding the Victrola in Music Memory Contests Just Issued by the Victor Co.—Rich in Pertinent Information

The Victor Talking Machine Co., through its educational department, has just issued a most interesting and practical new booklet on "The Victrola in Music Memory Contests," with descriptive and informative notes on two hundred standard selections compiled by Robert J. Coleman, A.B., Mus.B., of DePauw University, with an introduction and some practical suggestions for organizing and conducting a Music Memory Contest by Mrs. Frances E. Clark, director of the educational department of the Victor Co. For further particulars on the conducting of contests readers are referred to C. M. Tremaine, director of the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, New York.

The new booklet should be of particular value from many angles, for it serves to identify the dominant features of the many selections offered and also to impress them on the mind in order to make simpler the rendition of that particular selection.

Owing to the growing popularity of the music memory contest, and the fact that such contests are now being held annually in many cities and towns of the country, the new Victor Co. booklet represents a particularly timely and stimulating piece of literature.

INCREASE CAPITAL STOCK

The United Phonograph Stores, Inc., of New York City, have filed a certificate at the office of the Secretary of State of Delaware, increasing the capital stock of the corporation from $5,000,000 to $25,000,000.

The Smith-Woodward Piano Co., 1017 Capitol avenue, Houston, Tex., distributor of the Brunswick phonograph and records in Houston, Tex., removed on March 10 to 908 Capitol avenue, the building formerly occupied by the Haverty Furniture Co.

VALUE OF THE ARTISTIC WINDOW

Demonstrated by Interest Created in Display of a Miniature Theatre Made by the F. L. Steers Co., Inc.—It Is Most Ingeniously Arranged

A miniature theatre installed in one of the display windows of the F. L. Steers Co., Inc., at 145th street and Broadway, New York, drew the attention of numbers of shoppers of Washington Heights for the past few weeks. Designed by Bradley Barker, the well-known motion picture actor, as a toy for his own use, the theatre is a perfect miniature of the interior of the average American theatre. No trivial detail is missing. An ornate plaster proscenium arch frames a small stage for which Mr. Barker has designed several charming settings. There is a lifelike orchestra of twenty-two men, all made of plaster and the crowds that viewed the window marveled at the fidelity with which the musicians and their various orchestral instruments were designed. As a matter of fact, it took Mr. Barker six months of painstaking labor to create the little plaster orchestra.

Miniature Theatre Interests

The principal idea of the theatre, however, was the use of the stage-settings to feature records, and during the first week the Steers Co. featured Victor record 35710, "In a Monastery Garden." The setting caught the eye at once. It depicted a garden of one of the old California missions, with its red-tiled adobe buildings, a cool-looking fountain, pigeons, flowers and stately palm trees. Soft-colored lights thrown on the scene gave the impression of a delightful California twilight. During the second week the stage-setting was changed to a view of a street in Bagdad. Here were Oriental shops with merchandise, beggars asking alms, minarets, ox-carts and other details that conveyed at once the atmosphere of the ancient Arabian city.

The records featured in connection with the Arabian setting were the two Victor numbers from the popular Scheherazade suite of Rimsky-Korsakow, played by the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, 74593, "Festival at Bagdad," and 74691, "The Young Prince and the Princess." All in all the window proved to be one of the most attractive ever seen on the Heights and demonstrated the progressive spirit of the Steers organization under the guiding hand of its snappy president, Stuart J. Steers.

NEW STORE IN SANTA MONICA, CAL.

SANTA MONICA, CAL., March 3.—A new music establishment has been opened at Wavecrest and Ocean Front Walk here by Ed. Young and Ray Seward. The concern handles Brunswick phonographs and records and a line of pianos and player-pianos. Mr. Young has had a wide experience in the music business, having been connected for a number of years with the Barnes Music Co. Mr. Seward has been on the beach for the past fifteen years and he is well known in this vicinity.

PAYING INTEREST ON DEFERRED PAYMENTS

The Justice of the Interest Charge—This Vital Question Will Not Down Until It Is Settled Right—Stability Will Be Lacking in Any Trade That Straddles or Ignores the Question

By HAYWARD CLEVELAND

In any transaction the cash buyer should have preference. The cash merchant of to-day is the prosperous one and deservedly so. His is a quick turnover and he can afford to take a smaller profit. Next comes the thirty-day account business, wholesale and retail, without penalty. Even much of this is booked wholesale, with a 2 per cent ten-day clause. This is all sound and conservative and is not complained of here. Then follows the sixty or ninety-day wholesale account, without interest, on seasonal goods. There is a reason for the omission of the interest in this case too. That is about all. When it comes to the granting of sixty, ninety and 120 days' time on wholesale charges for all-the-year-round products and the writing of instalment contracts, without interest, at cash prices, the whole trade structure is threatened, for the proceedings thus indulged in are unethical, inequitable and unsound from a financial point of view. They breed in the buying public a sense of injustice and disrespect that checks the establishment of that good will that is so essential to the successful conduct of any business.

The retail ethics appear to be justly these:

The instalment furniture house that has two prices, instalment and cash, and declares them, is right: the two sets of prices are justified if interest is to be waived. If only the instalment price is quoted an essential fact is wrongfully withheld. This same reasoning applies to piano and talking machine houses that have two sets of prices.

The music house that charges interest on deferred payments and collects it, from month to month, is all right. The house that charges the interest but does not attempt to collect until the end shows lack of moral courage, knowing full well that it will be lucky to collect one-half of it. The policy of collecting the interest, if one can, is inherently dishonest, is unfair to the cash buyer and to the customer who lives up to his contract as written. Further, such a policy creates a steadily increasing set of uncollectible accounts receivable, pads the assets, as it were, and when the crash comes that only too often follows such a policy, the reprehensibility of the plan is brought home to its users and those whose funds are invested in the enterprise.

TO act with the honesty we ask of others—to buy with a thorough knowledge of our market—to sell with the tactics we would admire in competitors—to credit when credit is a blessing—to refuse when credit is a curse—to direct the work of subordinates so that each day is for them a day of self-development—to treat customers as honored guests in our homes—to see our business as a vital necessity in the wholesomeness of life—to realize that above the universal tangle is a sure, omnipotent God waiting for man to use the infinite power He gave him to disentangle the whole—this is the foundation for better business.

The Cleveland Talking Machine Co. Cleveland, Ohio

The talking machine house that has an instalment and a cash price for the same article and that proclaims both, or that charges and collects interest on deferred payments, is doing the right thing by itself and its trade. The house that sells, at the same price, for cash and on instalment is doing an indefensible thing. The cry that it is a trade custom is no excuse. The act will not stand up under analysis. It cannot claim analogy to the furniture and piano trade customs, for in both the attempt is generally made and more or less successfully carried out of differentiating between the cash and time trade. There is a distinctly discernible line of demarcation between the two as evidenced by the grade of goods offered or terms granted, or both.

Introspection, realignment, a new order of things are in the air. Would it not be well to comprehend within the horizon of proposed reforms this old but important defect in the selling system? Until this canker is removed from the body phonographic its growth will be retarded.

Action Is the Keynote of Success in Making the Show Window Interesting :: :: By James J. Davin

Sec'y, Reinecke-Ellis Co.

The Grant Music Parlors in Racine, Wis., are using a living Victor dog as a drawing card and employing one of the first principles of advertising—ACTION. The dog, an exact counterpart of the pup that made Victor famous, paces back and forth with the current monthly supplement in his mouth, which he presents to customers as they come into the store.

The value of a living, moving dog over an inanimate image cannot be measured—that there is a value cannot be disputed.

Action is the keynote of all successful advertising. The reason is clear when one realizes that our enjoyment in life comes from action.

The verb is the part of speech denoting action, but there are passive and active verbs. To illustrate: The pleasure one gets out of a new automobile is not in owning it, but in driving it. Women love to shop, not merely to order goods over the telephone. The former is the active method of buying, the latter is the passive.

To have a massive moose-head adorn the wall of your home brings a certain amount of pleasure, but the greatest joy is in the hunting and shooting of the moose. Adorn and shoot are both verbs, but there is no question as to which implies the most action, and which brings the greatest sense of pleasure through achievement. The trophy that graces your wall gives you far greater pleasure than the one that your friend owns, although your own may be smaller, and the antlers carry fewer points.

Now, how can this delight in ACTION be translated into the advertising world to the merchant's profit?

As you walk through the streets of your city have you ever noticed the kind of display windows that attract the largest crowds? The value of an advertising medium (whether it be a display window, a picture, a phrase, or a story) can be accurately determined by its ability to attract and hold attention.

You will always find the largest crowds watching a display built around ACTION. People like to watch things moving. Hence you will always find the greatest crowds looking at a human demonstrator. This is an example of pre-determined, conscious ACTION.

The next in order in its power to attract and hold attention is the animal store. Have you ever seen the window of an animal or bird store during the business hours, before which no one was standing? People like to watch animals even though they are untrained and their movements are more or less unconscious. Perhaps there is a greater charm for the reason that the action is natural.

When you see a piano revolving in a display window do you stop because you have any desire to see the rear view of the piano or is it because it is moving? Would you pause as long in front of a window in which there were two pianos on display, neither of them moving, one of which showed the front view and the other the rear view?

You have noticed many times that many more people are admiring and inspecting the display in the window of a sporting goods store than there are at the adjacent window, no matter what it may be displaying, although there is motion in neither window.

The reason is that the goods on display in the sporting goods store suggest ACTION to the mind of the individual.

Another form of action, which we might term potential action, used to good effect is that of a picture. The picture itself, of course, is motionless, but the idea it conveys is one of action, either about to take place—imminent action, taking place or suppressed action.

The power of suggestion lends a great appeal to the imminent action picture. A good example of this is to be seen in one of the largest sporting goods stores in Chicago. The center of the window was taken up with a picture of a guide standing in the doorway of a cabin leaning negligently against the door-sill. But for two things the picture would not call for a second glance.

These two features in the picture caught and held the attention of the passerby and led him to study the scene and speculate on the possibilities suggested but not expressed. The two elements that intrigued the eye were a rifle and the eyes of the guide.

The rifle was held carelessly, the muzzle pointing downward. The eyes of the guide were looking off across unseen distances. Rather idly, speculative one might say. Yet through the entire ensemble of carelessness, idle ease there seemed to breathe a spirit of alertness, an idea of quiet, efficient readiness. Potential or imminent action was expressed in every line, and the speculator was left to his own musings as to what that action would be should the occasion arise.

Such pictures, while in themselves motionless, express action. If you cannot put action into your window displays with a literal use of motion, at least it can be suggested in a manner that will call attention and arouse interest in the display. Action in some form carries a pulling power that can hardly be overestimated.

PERSISTENT ADVERTISING NECESSARY TO-DAY

THE importance of advertising is not always as seriously considered by a great many members of the trade as it should be; in fact, with many the use of publicity is a matter of mood rather than of sound business practice. When times are good and business is booming they limit their advertising because they seem to be getting business without it. When times are bad and they are depressed about the general outlook they feel that they haven't got the money to spare for advertising. The result, consequently, is a business that in boom times is little above the average and in bad periods is simply stagnant.

This attitude shows a lack of concentration, an absence of the proper comprehension of the importance of publicity as an outstanding factor in achieving success. Too many people consider the money spent for advertising as a gift—as just thrown away—when, as a matter of fact, the money spent for advertising is an investment that pays large dividends when the publicity is correctly conceived and properly presented to the trade.

It is steady, persistent advertising, year in and year out, in both good and bad periods, that builds business and enhances prestige. The publicity that is seemingly unnecessary when the demand exceeds the supply is nevertheless working steadily to build up and maintain a reserve demand when there is any form of depression in the trade field.

Look around and you will observe that the successful concerns—those that dominate every industry—are without exception the big advertisers and, mark you, they are big advertisers not because they happen to have the money to spend, but rather because the advertising which they put forth has been a vitally important factor in the growth of their enterprises. Many of the successful concerns started in a humble way, but they were dominated by men who had vision and a full comprehension of the value of advertising. They put money into this department of their business, fully realizing that it would pay a profit and that it was as vital to their success as the money spent in making reliable products and in selling them through their traveling men.

The matter of publicity should really receive greater consideration from those who made the mistake of cutting down appropriations last year. The manufacturer who desires to emerge from the "recuperation" period successfully, with his name and fame augmented, should invest heavily in advertising and thus realize its importance and value as an element in his success.

When a trade paper talks about advertising it is viewed by some people suspiciously. They are apt to say that the publisher is making a plea for himself, but, be that as it may, there is a fundamental truth that can't be denied, and that is that advertising is the greatest possible factor in achieving business success to-day. Those who believe in this policy will win out; those who play with it in part are only in a degree successful; those who ignore it fail. It is, therefore, necessary to study the facts and be governed by the conclusions.

WILL RADIO CRAZE AFFECT OUR INDUSTRY?

THE great spread of interest in radio broadcasting services established and maintained by the various electrical companies, and the featuring of talking machine music and in many cases the talking machine artists in person in connection with the daily concerts sent out by the broadcasting stations have led a number of members of the talking machine trade to wonder just what effect this radio craze will have on future sales of talking machines and records.

Just at the present time it is impossible to judge the permanency of the enthusiasm regarding radio concerts, and any possible danger to the talking machine trade lies in the development and improvement of radio music reproduction to a point where it offers a real musical value rather than simply a novelty. Under existing conditions the radio enthusiast who establishes a receiving station in his home must depend upon various conditions to permit him to receive perfectly the broadcasting service, and when the music is heard it almost always lacks the quality which would be demanded of the living artist or of the instrument reproducing the singing or playing of the living artist.

There is, of course, equipment available that will receive the radio waves from stations hundreds of miles away as distinctly as though the operator were really sitting in the same room in which the concert is given, but such receiving stations represent an investment that the average talking machine purchaser will hardly consider unless he is given a definite guarantee for what he is going to receive in the matter of broadcasting service and just how permanent that service will be.

Just at present the interest in wireless telephony does not in any sense represent a menace to the sales of talking machines, records, or other musical instruments, any more than does the opening of a new theatre or music hall represent a menace. It is more likely, in fact, to stimulate interest in talking machine music on the part of the comparatively few citizens who can claim complete ignorance regarding the musical possibilities of that instrument.

It may be that the radio craze will develop into something permanent, but that is likely to be far in the future and may be expected to supplement rather than replace the actual music produced or reproduced by talking machines or other instruments. One of the big thoughts is that the radio enthusiast has no choice in the type or quality of the music offered to him in the broadcasting program and must accept what is given without question. With the musical instrument in his own home he is free to arrange his own programs and listen to the sort of music that appeals to him most. This possibility for individual musical expression is something that no radio service, however elaborate, can hope to take away from the musical instrument in the home.

HOW SOCIAL SIDE OF ASSOCIATION HELPS

AT quite regular intervals there is heard in the trade criticism of trade associations, the argument most generally used being that their accomplishments are of a social rather than a business nature. Judging from results, however, it is a question as to just how strongly the social activities of business associations should be condemned. It is quite evident that the active business man hesitates about leaving his establishment for one day, or perhaps several, for the sole purpose of participating in a jamboree with his contemporaries and competitors, but it is equally evident that the same business man is not overenthusiastic about giving up such time as he can snatch from his business to association activities entirely for the consideration of deep problems.

Experience has shown that associations wherein both business and social affairs receive a fair proportion of recognition are generally the most successful in the long run, both in size and in accomplishments. The primary function of an association is to bring members of the industry together and have them co-operate in the consideration and development of plans for the betterment of the industry and for the elimination of any evils that may exist. Certainly members who, through a strict adherence to business in the meetings, come as strangers and go away as strangers through lack of opportunity for mixing with their fellows, cannot be expected to work to the best advantage of the association membership as a whole. The social side of the association work must receive attention. The individual who meets his competitor in association circles, learns to call him by his first name, finds out his many good points as a man and his real personal views on various phases of business, is doing much to make impossible competitive conditions that are unethical and annoying.

There are so many things that might be done to a stranger without a twinge of conscience that would seem rather raw and unclubby when tried on a fellow, even though he is a competitor, who is regarded as a personal as well as a business friend.

AVOIDING LOSS ON INSTALMENT SALES

TALKING machine merchants in New York State, in common with members of the piano and furniture industries, are interested in the efforts now being made to have transformed into a law the bill which is now before the State Legislature making it obligatory upon moving men to report to the police all removals of household goods, with the name of the householder together with both the old and new addresses.

The need for such a law is obvious, for such registration provides a most direct means of avoiding loss of goods out on instalment contracts. In the larger cities, particularly, talking machine and furniture men will find such protection of great value. It will virtually put an end to a practice, common unfortunately, of buying on instalments and then removing the product purchased to parts unknown.

The plan of having all movers of household goods registered has worked out successfully in various sections of the country, and has unquestionably saved to merchants hundreds of thousands of dollars, not only in the value of the goods taken away by careless and dishonest purchasers, but in the expense of maintaining searchers to trace such goods. The bill is one of a sort that imposes no hardship on the honest citizen, while at the same time it serves to discourage the activities of a type whose ethics are not commendable.

CARUSO FOUNDATION WINNING SUPPORT

THE work of the American Caruso Memorial Foundation is, according to reports, progressing rapidly, and during the past few weeks there have been given in connection with the celebration of Caruso's birthday anniversary a number of elaborate concerts in New York and elsewhere that have added materially to the fund, which has a million dollars as its ultimate goal. Prominent artists who have been closely associated with the talking machine have appeared prominently in the various programs, and it would seem as though the members of the talking machine trade as a whole should be inclined to take an active part in the work for the memorial, for no individual artist did more to establish the standing of the talking machine as a musical instrument than Caruso. He was one of the first great stars to see the possibilities of talking machine reproduction, and his willingness to associate his name with a comparatively new product without question had a great influence in dictating the attitude of other artists of almost equal standing.

THE PROBLEM OF THOROUGH DISTRIBUTION

THE question of the successful distribution of talking machines, or, for that matter, any other product, does not lie alone in the number of dealers established in a given territory, but depends primarily upon the efforts put forth by dealers already established to cover the territory thoroughly and properly.

It might be well for talking machine manufacturers and wholesalers in some cases to make a study of what a given territory may be expected to yield in the matter of business, and what the present dealer is doing to get that maximum business with a view to helping him in his sales campaign, if the proper spirit is shown, rather than to simply open up other dealers in the same section.

To divide a certain quantity of business between two dealers simply means the opening of a new wholesale account and frequently prevents either retailer from getting a sufficient volume of sales to offer him a fair income. If the retailer does not appreciate the value of his franchise and neglects his territory, it frequently proves a matter of policy either to replace him with a live retailer or to put competition in the territory to stimulate his efforts. Dividing the territory under other conditions, unless the territory is so large that it cannot be handled properly by one concern, is likely to act as a detriment to the distribution plan through causing a let-down of effort. Reaching the greatest number of people and reaching them effectively and in a way to encourage buying is the big problem of to-day in this and other industries, but it might be well to determine whether or not existing agencies may be stimulated to increased efforts before the established dealer is asked to divide with another a volume of trade that is not any too large as it stands.

NEW YORK'S THIRD ANNUAL MUSIC WEEK

EVERY indication points to the ultimate success of the Third Music Week Celebration which is to be held in New York from April 30 to May 6, and active preparations for which are already under way. The success of the two previous Music Week celebrations has made a deep impression on those who, for one reason or another, are interested in music, its exploitation and its advancement, and even before the dates for this celebration were announced the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music received numerous inquiries regarding the contemplated plans.

This campaign for the propagation of music should enlist the aid of all branches of the talking machine trade.

Possibilities of Increasing Record Sales Through the Co-operation of Repair Men

The repair department can be made one of the most valuable adjuncts to the talking machine business if properly handled. Many establishments have efficient and profitable repair departments, but very few realize the many ways in which this branch of the business can be made to bring profits to the coffers of the company in addition to the returns from actual repair work.

Repairmen should be chosen not only for their mechanical skill in putting broken and defective machines back in shape, but they should also be selected for their qualities as salesmen. This is extremely important when the fact is taken into consideration that the repairman has welcome access to the homes of talking machine owners and has opportunities for sales talk either in the interests of records or machines which the average outside salesman or canvasser very seldom encounters. In short, the day of the untidy, often discourteous, purely mechanical repairman is rapidly drawing to a close, and it will not be long before the species is extinct. The man with sales ability will be given preference.

The repairman of the future will understand the mechanics of the talking machine thoroughly and he will be a clever and intelligent salesman. One large progressive dealer specializes in his repair department and the returns in increased record sales and the sale of an occasional machine bring a steady stream of profits to him. When he sends a man out to repair a machine in response to a call from a customer he lays a subtle campaign. First he goes through his list and finds out the particular kind of music which appeals to this customer. He then selects several of the latest records containing the kind of music which that customer prefers and turns them over to the repairman, who takes them with him on his call.

He arrives at the home, and when the job of fixing the machine is completed, instead of testing with some of the customer's records, he places one of the latest records on the instrument.

In many cases the mistress of the house is an interested spectator while the repairing is going on, and she certainly is present when the

*Repair Men Possessing Real Sales Ability Can Make Many Record
Sales While Calling on Customers of House*

job is completed and the machine is being tested. The playing of the new record naturally interests her because she likes that brand of music. The repairman, who has a considerable knowledge of salesmanship and records, does not make a direct attempt to make a sale. Instead, he casually remarks that the disc which is playing is one of the latest recordings and mentions the name of the artist. The sale in the majority of cases makes itself. If the lady of the house is interested he produces his other records and demonstrates them for her.

The wise dealer will do everything in his power to train his repair staff in salesmanship and encourage it in this manner of making sales. The dealer mentioned above stimulates his staff to make sales by an equitable system of commissions. When a man knows that his efforts will be rewarded in proportion to the results produced it follows that he will try by every means known to him to produce the greatest possible results.

Where a dealer employs only one repairman the possibilities in this direction may seem infinitesimal, but, as has been said and written many times, it is the little things that count, and if the above plan is tried out for a year and a close record is kept it will be found, provided that the proper methods are pursued, that considerable profits have resulted, a large part of which would have been lost otherwise. It is truly the little things that make or break a business, especially the talking machine business, and the dealer who overlooks several of these possibilities is not doing the business he should. The survival of the fittest is still a maxim of business life as well as any other kind of life, and overlooking bets, no matter how small, is a sign of unfitness.

WHAT GOES INTO UDELL CABINETS

Udell Works Explains Just What Descriptive Terms in Catalog Mean

The Udell Works, Indianapolis, prominent manufacturer of music roll and talking machine record cabinets, together with book cases, writing desks, etc., has included in its latest catalog the following definite notice regarding the quality of materials entering into the Udell products:

"The following explanation is made in order that there should be no misunderstanding of the descriptive terms used in this catalog:

"When a piece is described as mahogany front, it means that it is mahogany veneered over some other wood.

"When a piece is described as mahogany, it means that it is mahogany veneered, top, front and ends.

"When a piece is described as solid mahogany, it means that all exteriors, except back, bottom and shelves, are of solid wood of the kind designated."

These descriptions are in conformity with the official standard descriptions adopted by the National Alliance of Case Goods Associations at Atlantic City last October.

"TALKER" HELPS TO SELL BANJOS

Banjo Manufacturer Places Talking Machine in Salesroom as Demonstrating Aid—Good Publicity for Machine Used by Dealer

Demonstrating banjos with the aid of a Victor talking machine is the effective plan followed by William Lange, banjo manufacturer. Mr. Lange has placed a Victrola in his salesroom and when a prospective customer enters the store with the intent of looking over the line of instruments the tone is demonstrated by means of an ordinary record on which banjo selections are played. Of course, he only chooses those records the artist of which he knows uses one of his instruments. The plan is not only proving worth while in promoting the sale of banjos, but it is also a good avenue of publicity for the talking machine.

Where both talking machines and small goods are handled the dealer has an opportunity of selecting records which feature the instruments he carries, such as the trombone, violin, cornet, etc.

Some Timely Suggestions and Selling Ideas for Talking Machine Dealers

By Thornton Hall

Resourcefulness is one of the most essential characteristics of the successful salesman, whether he be a retailer of talking machines or a vendor of any other kind of merchandise. The writer was the witness of an interesting demonstration of sales resourcefulness that was rewarded by a substantial sale in a talking machine shop the other day.

The proprietor had just made a memorandum that he was out of a certain record and that he must replenish his supply of that number without delay. Just at that time a lady entered the store and asked if he had that particular record. Knowing that there was not a single one in the store it was with some little surprise that I heard him say, "Just a moment, please, I shall have to go back to the stock room and see if I can find you one."

He was gone some little time, obviously in search of the requested record. During his absence the resourceful merchant's ruse became apparent to me as soon as I observed the glance of the customer straying about the salesroom. While she waited for the return of Mr. Proprietor she read the various advertising streamers and posters, as well as the various record lists on the counters. She also discovered a record album which seemed to remind her that she needed one. Right then and there I decided that there was a method in the dealer's search, which was quite obviously a vain one.

At this point the dealer returned with the regret that the record was out of stock. He would, however, be very glad to supply the lady with it the day after the next. To this she acquiesced and then proceeded to purchase the album she had remembered she needed and a John Mc-

Cormack record suggested by a poster which she had read during her wait. A little persuasion on the part of the dealer and he sold her several other Red Seal records. This merchant knew what he was doing. He tells me his motto is: "Keep Them in the Store as Long as Possible."

Speaking of John McCormack records. Saint Patrick's Day is with us again, or rather it will be with us in a couple of days. We now have the Irish Free State, which should mean that that portion of the American population which proudly traces its ancestry back to the Emerald Isle is more responsive than ever to Saint Patrick's Day suggestions. Let us consider a few of these appropriate suggestions.

In the first place, it will be well to make sure that your stock is sufficient to meet the demands for such appropriate records as those of John McCormack, Walter Scalan, etc., etc. In case your supply of them is low you have just about time to rush an order to your nearest jobber. It is a matter of record that these records always sell well with very little pushing at this season of the year. Do not be caught without them. With the exception of Christmas, no holiday appeal is ever quite so effective as the birthday of Ireland's patron saint.

Last year a Pennsylvania dealer carried out the idea with the following newspaper ad:

KELLEY—THE POPULAR NAME OF THE WEEK

The name of Kelley has always connoted something rich and ripe in the way of wit and humor. Saint Patrick's Day is the Day of the Kelleys, the world over.

The particular Kelley we have in mind is Walter C. Kelley—the famous Virginia Judge, Story Teller Extraordinary, Raconteur of Raconteurs.

You know Judge Kelley—how rich in humor and human interests his anecdotes always are! Have you heard his latest record on the Victor? A ten-inch series of witty yarns it is—a chuckle to the inch, and another bunch on the other side.

And they're not like other stories; you can hear them with pleasure over and over again. Come in and hear them once.

This year you have another opportunity for a timely tie-up. For example, there are the O'Neil records, "Peggy" and "Micky." Remember how popular "Peggy O'Neil" was? She is not dead yet. Give her a new lease of life by associating her with Saint Patrick. And her brother, "Micky O'Neil," the companion piece that has already begun to share her popularity. Launch this hit effectively by linking it up with the Seventeenth of March.

SUGGESTIONS AND SELLING IDEAS

And there are many other selling ideas that can be utilized in the month of March. There is the case of the New York City dealer who last year brought in the universally noted tendency of the wintry winds to blow during this turbulent month. He introduced a "weather motif" into his window display in the following manner:

He first divided his window space in halves by means of a cardboard partition representing the exterior wall of a house. The left side was the outdoor part of the picture and the right side showed the comfortable interior of a home. In the outdoor section he concealed a rapidly revolving electric fan and cut up thousands of flakes of white paper snow. The whirling snow effectively and picturesquely gave a shuddering idea of March weather at its worst.

By way of contrast the other half of the display offered a living room of the most comfortable sort. There was a cardboard fireplace, a handsome talking machine, a beautiful lamp and heaps of records strewn about. No need for explanatory posters. The artistic display pointed out its own obvious moral. This brainy merchant received many congratulations upon the cleverness of the idea and he attributes the sale of a number of machines and of countless records to this "Marchy" display.

While on the subject of window trims it might also be well to speak of one that this same dealer is going to use this month. This time it is a Saint Patrick's trim, but, in keeping with the policy of the store, it will be a departure from the stale and hackneyed window idea commonly used. That is, instead of merely sprinkling about the window a profusion of stove-pipe hats garnished with Shamrocks and clay pipes, he plans to show his customers something out of the ordinary.

He is using the same divided window effect that proved to be such a sure-fire winner a year ago. The subject is "Exercise," for it features the "Daily Dozen" exercises on talking machine records which he includes among his wares. The left part of the window is given over to the March Seventeenth tie-up. Its title is: "One Way to Exercise" and it shows a group of Blackthorn Shillalabs. The trimming is done with green crepe paper and a large oil painting of the famous "Donnybrook Fair" has been borrowed from a library for the center of the display.

"The Modern Way to Obtain Your Daily Exercise" is the title of the contrasted half of the display, which is an arrangement of an effective exhibit of the "Daily Dozen" system of exercising. The details of this part of the trim have not yet been worked out in full, but the idea is a good one and well worth using by other dealers who are carrying this proposition.

Use the biting winds of March to blow its "pep" into your salesmen's lungs. Let us hope that the Irish displays will imbue them with the desire to fight hard for more business, not only in March, but from now on.

GIVING RECITAL IN MIDDLE WEST

Princess Watahwaso, Well-known Victor Artist, Interesting Large Audiences Wherever Heard
—Under Auspices of Distributors

The Princess Watahwaso, mezzo-soprano and well-known Victor artist, is touring the Middle West giving recitals under the auspices of Victor distributors and dealers. In a large auditorium in St. Louis Princess Watahwaso gave a series of three recitals of Indian songs, dances and folklore under the auspices of Miss Blanche Rosebrugh, in charge of the Victor educational department of Scruggs, Vandervoort & Barney. Princess Watahwaso also gave a series of recitals among the retailers of the Koerber-Brenner Music Co. Among these enterprising dealers was the Cline-Vick Co., which operates many stores in Southern Illinois. Fay Luyster, who is in charge of the activities of this company, has recently completed the salesmanship course at the Victor factory and is using many of the helpful ideas gleaned there in the advancement of this business. Following the completion of this Middle West trip Princess Watahwaso will appear in Camden, Bryn Allyn, and will then return to New York to continue her work in the New York schools.

INCREASING USE OF SIGNS

Harry Cuddeback, of the Da-Lite Electric Display Co., Toledo, O., was a recent visitor to The World sanctum in the course of his monthly visit to New York, and spoke in very enthusiastic terms regarding the general outlook. The increasing use by dealers in talking machines and music of the signs made by this company is testimony of the keener appreciation by merchants generally of the value of modern and artistic advertising methods in bringing the products which they handle to the attention of the purchasing public.

TO MOVE TO LARGER QUARTERS

The Cable Piano Co.'s store in Chattanooga, Tenn., will be moved on April 1 from its present location at 117 East Eighth street to handsome new quarters at 115 East Seventeenth street, where double the present space will be available for the requirements of the business. The store, of which J. H. Shaw is manager, reports a large and growing business in both pianos and Victrolas.

FARGO MUSIC CO. IN NEW HOME

The Fargo Music Co., of Fargo, N. D., has leased the store adjoining its present quarters to provide increased floor-space made necessary by its rapidly growing business. The new store is one of the most attractive in this section.

Is There a Definite Science of Talking Machine and Record Salesmanship? By W. Braid White

Ever since men began to think in terms of scientific accuracy about their daily affairs there has been more or less attempt to formulate some sort of science of business conduct. The aim has always been to provide a set of rules whereby a man may direct his thinking, and translate that thinking into action, in such a manner as to give him the result to which he naturally looks forward as the reward of his efforts.

Within the last generation many efforts have been made to translate rules for business guidance into practical form from a basis of scientific reasoning. Unfortunately the attempt has been founded on premises often patently false and sometimes even nonsensical. But within the last ten years the art of salesmanship has been studied under conditions which allow for something like precise and scientific observation, and it ought by now to be possible to state with some approach to finality what that art really amounts to and how much of it can be charted and plotted in a scientific way. In other words, we should be able now to answer these questions:

Is there a science of salesmanship?

Can it be applied in daily life?

To which, in our case, may be added a third question: How far, supposing that a favorable answer can be given to the other questions, can any rules or principles be applied to the art of selling the talking machine, its records and its accessories?

The Suggestion Fallacy

A good deal of what is called "scientific salesmanship" rests upon theoretic considerations whose validity has never been above question and, in fact, has frequently been called in question. Some years ago there was a craze for teaching the mental-suggestion sort of salesmanship, the "look your man in the eye" sort of salesmanship, the sort of salesmanship which depended upon committing to memory a lot of rules intended in fact to give the salesman the power to persuade the prospect against the latter's will. It was a combination of psychological misinformation with undigested hypnotism, mixed into a sort of literary hotch-potch and sold to gullible young persons as an infallible method for coining money out of the profession of salesmanship.

The Scientific Basis

Like all previous business panaceas this one has pretty nearly had its day. In the reaction from its absurdities there has been a tendency to overlook the fact that salesmanship is as much a matter for analysis as is any other feature of men's daily conduct. Genuine psychology simply tries to find out everything about why men do thus and so in given conditions. Now the man who is trying to sell anything, whether a talking machine or a million-dollar life insurance policy, is undertaking a task in which obviously it will be extremely important for him to do everything in the best way possible. He needs all the help he can get. Hence the importance of any scientific inquiry into those mental processes and physical actions which together make up the work of selling or of trying to sell.

The Order-taker Ideal

In the talking machine industry we have not proceeded much beyond the old "order-taker" ideal. That ideal is most perfectly represented by the department store clerk. The woman who goes to a department store to buy has usually been persuaded in advance by newspaper advertising. She is usually after a bargain; and if she is not after a specific bargain she is looking around to see what she can get for a certain sum of money in terms of some goods which she wants or needs. The clerk does not need to do any scientific work with her, for she knows what she wants and in most cases cannot be persuaded to do anything which she had not previously determined to do. To the department store's customer then, the clerk is principally a sort of mechanism for showing goods and giving information about them in response to questions. Not once in a hundred times is there, or can there be, any systematic salesmanship.

Consider the Opportunity

It might be argued by some that talking machine salesmanship is really not much better. Yet this would be a great mistake. For there is just as much opportunity for the display of selling talent in retail talking machine stores as in the offices of bond brokers. The American people are popularly supposed to be thoroughly acquainted with the merits and beauties of the talking machine and to need no education in respect of its desirability as a possession. Yet this is not so. The American people are gradually getting to that frame of mind, but they have yet a long way to go. Neither in reference to principles of value, nor in respect of musical choice, nor as regards appreciation of its possibilities, has the public in general any adequate ideas about the talking machine. The task of placing these ideas before the American people in an effective manner is a task of peculiar importance just now and one which should engage the

Testify for this Service

NON-SUBSCRIBING Columbia Dealers should carefully consider the weight of this recommendation now. Merchandisers generally are learning that the creation of a buying impulse at the place of sale is the most effective form of present-day advertising.

People buy more carefully today. Window-shopping precedes nearly every purchase.

How do your windows explain the attractiveness of your merchandise and your service?

They used to go looking to see what they could buy.

What is there about your displays that overrules present-day caution?

Most folks want more things than they have dollars to spend.

How do you argue that they need music—instead of something else?

A mere phonograph and some records in the window don't mean as much as they did.

How do you illustrate the enjoyment a Grafonola will bring unless the Records it will play are made pictorially interesting?

These are modern conditions. It is penny-wise and pound-foolish to economize on your valuable display windows at the expense of store sales. We urge you to join the ranks of the big majority of Columbia Dealers who have found the Display Service profitable. If it sells only one 75c Record every three days, you're not spending a cent.

The desire for music still exists.

What is there about your exhibit which stimulates this desire?

Not so long ago any record was worth a dollar.

What is there in your windows to satisfy anybody there's 75c worth of real fun in every Columbia Record?

As far as appearance goes, one record looks pretty much like another.

Who can prefer the Record by Jolson or Van and Schenck unless they know these artists sing only for your Records?

There are prospects passing your store regularly who have never come in

Has your store faded into the surrounding scenery to them, or do you keep it fresh and interesting by constant change in displays?

THE SCIENCE OF SALESMANSHIP

attention of all retail merchants. Just as soon as it is generally recognized by business men that in our industry the selling of talking machines and records at retail is a subject which can be scientifically formulated and studied there will be, we think, a movement which will not be checked until it has placed the entire matter of music-means merchandising upon a new and permanent level of method and system.

There Is a Science

There is indeed a science of talking machine selling. It has nothing to do with secrets, with suggestion or with half-baked pseudo-psychology. It, however, rests upon the unshakable basis of genuine psychological observation; that is to say, upon observations which have been made solely with a view to discovering why men act thus and so in these or those conditions. This science of talking machine salesmanship is not yet completely formulated, but its main outlines may be laid down very briefly. In so laying them down the writer asks the indulgence of the reader for any faults or crudeness of expression, since the whole subject is very new and its paths almost as yet untrodden.

Five Leading Ideas

In the first place, then, we may say that the selling of talking machines involves the following ideas:

1. Clearly realizing ourselves that the object of the sale is, fundamentally, to put the buyer in possession of means to entertainment, pleasure, interest, through the medium of reproducing music in any of its forms.

2. Clearly realizing likewise that the prospect is only half convinced of this fact in advance, since the best of advertising copy can but start into action processes of thought in the prospect's mentality.

3. Understanding consequently that the first requisite of the salesman is that he or she be personally persuaded that the talking machine is an unsurpassed instrument for musical entertainment, pleasure and education; which involves and necessitates the salesman's personally using, and enjoying the use of, the talking machine, knowing its musical possibilities, appreciating its powers, understanding how to dance to its music, listen to its music, enjoy and know its music.

4. Learning how to tell the prospect a story which will bring that man or woman into approximately the mental state toward the talking machine which the salesman already possesses.

5. Demonstrating that there exists a monetary basis on which the prospect may organize the possession of the entertainment, pleasure and education which has been envisaged by the salesman, without undue hurt to his present financial condition, engagements or prospects.

These five simple ideas comprehend the entire technique of salesmanship and embrace demonstration, talk and close. They are formulated here strictly in accord with what is known of the probabilities of individual reaction toward the talking machine as a possible purchase, in the light of accepted psychological investigation, such as may be studied in detail in the works of the best authorities on business science. In the course of a short article like this no more can be done than clear the ground in order that the salient facts to be grasped may be set forth in their full light.

With these preliminary considerations, then, let us close this present article, hoping to reopen the subject and consider in detail the ideas here briefly foreshadowed, in a further article at an early date.

1906 ADVERTISING SELLS RECORDS

Woman Selects Three Caruso Records From Program Issued Sixteen Years Ago

James J. Davin, secretary of the Reincke-Ellis Co., cites a case that came to his attention recently to prove that there is no accurate way of judging the time it takes for advertising literature to exhaust its selling power. A woman recently visited the store of the E. W. Owens Co., Mankato, Minn., and asked to hear some records from a program she held in her hand, finally purchasing three Caruso records. The clerk asked to see the program and discovered that it was one issued in 1906, entitled: "Three Programs by the Master Musician—the Victor-Victrola." Doing business on advertising sixteen years old probably sets a new record—it proves that an investment in publicity is continually paying dividends.

TRENTON STORE IS ENLARGED

TRENTON, N. J., March 4.—Joseph P. Fee, proprietor of the Record Shop, 236 North Warren street, has enlarged his store and made a number of other improvements to take care of increasing business. Mr. Fee was the first dealer to open a phonograph shop in Trenton, having started eight years ago with a practical experience in talking machines and their construction. The repair end of the business has been greatly enlarged to facilitate the handling of repair work.

BECKER'S DOG LIKES MEDICINE

John H. Becker, the talking machine repairman, of 1207 Chestnut street, Milwaukee, Wis., has a dog that is proving a good advertisement. The dog, a bull terrier named Pyro, has learned to take even the bitterest medicine without a whimper and is used as a shining example by the parents in the neighborhood who desire to dose the children with castor oil or other medicine bitter to the youthful taste.

Dealers Tell of the Hardest Talking Machine Sale They Have Ever Made :: By Frank H. Williams

What is the hardest talking machine sale you ever made, Mr. Dealer? How did you put it over?

It is always worth while for a dealer to think over his hard sales every now and then for the purpose of checking up on the points that enabled him to put the sales over and in this way gain suggestions and ideas for putting over other hard sales.

For the purpose of learning how some successful dealers have clinched their hardest sales of talking machines the writer recently interviewed a number of successful dealers. And, undoubtedly, other dealers will be able to get good pointers from the things said by the men.

Here, for instance, is what a leading Middle Western dealer in talking machines had to say about his hardest sale:

"I think my hardest sale," said this dealer, "was to a very well-to-do retired farmer. This farmer had never had any real money in his life until within recent years, when his farm land increased in value to unheard-of heights and then he sold out at the peak price and retired to the city to spend the rest of his days. This farmer brought to the city with him his wife and his orphan granddaughter, and he also brought with him an ingrained tightness which made it almost impossible to get him to loosen up and buy anything beyond the mere necessities of life.

"I got on to this farmer through a patron of mine who told me I ought to sell the farmer a talking machine, because he enjoyed music and had plenty of money to spend for phonographs and other things. Of course I went around to see this prospect at once—as it looked good for a quick sale. But—nothing doing! The farmer was perfectly willing to talk—in fact, I think he was mighty glad to have someone to talk to. But as for even considering the purchase of a musical instrument—I should say not!

"This old man interested me because he was such a hard nut to crack and because he seemed to take an evident delight in watching me butt my head against a stone wall and because I felt that some time or other someone would sell of her girl friends, rather than at her own home.

"As soon as I learned this I saw that I had an opening. Right away I talked to the girl, to whom I had been introduced and found out that she liked music and dancing and that at her friends' homes there were talking machines and dance records and that she had a fine time at these homes dancing and listening to the music.

"After this talk with the girl I felt certain that I would soon make the sale. I went right back to the store, got out a $250 machine, stocked it with a good supply of dance records, popular music and records of the sort of music I knew the old man was interested in and sent it out to his house with a note reading like this: 'This machine and these records will keep your granddaughter at home nights.' I instructed the delivery man to give the farmer the note first because he had positively refused time and again to let me send a machine out on trial. I felt sure this note would win a hearing for the machine. I was right. The note did win a hearing for the machine. And eventually the sale was made. Since then this retired farmer has become one of my best patrons in purchasing records.

"And my deduction from all this is that when it comes to hard sales you can generally find some opening which will lead to a sale if you will become friends of the prospects rather than treating them merely as prospects alone."

Another successful Middle Western talking machine dealer had this to say about his hardest sale:

"My hardest sale was to the trustee of a town-him a talking machine and I couldn't see why I shouldn't be the person to do so.

"So I kept on calling on him. Eventually we became friends. Finally, I learned that he had one worry in life—his pretty granddaughter, who was just about twenty years old, didn't stay home in the evenings hardly at all. She didn't do anything wrong, of course, but she preferred to spend her evenings at the homes

DIFFICULT TALKING MACHINE SALES

ship near our city. This man was a backnumber all right. He wouldn't buy a tractor for his farm, he wouldn't have a farm lighting system installed, he wouldn't have a phone in his house. But he was genial and likable and had a big following in his township. I knew that if I once sold him a machine I could make a lot more sales in that township on the strength of the trustee having purchased a machine of me.

"So I worked on this trustee hard. I took a talking machine to his home and demonstrated it. I made friends with him, had him look me up when he came to town and pumped him full of information and enthusiasm about music. But still he wouldn't buy—he simply couldn't get out of his lifelong rut—he simply couldn't get into the attitude of mind where he could feel that a 'new-fangled contraption' such as the talking machine was actually worth the money asked for it.

"I almost despaired of ever making a sale to this man, but I persisted in my efforts, trying out new angles of attack from time to time. And at last my efforts met with success. And what do you suppose it was that put the sale over? Simply making a sale to his township political rival! It was merely by chance that I learned of a bitter rivalry between the two men. The minute I learned of this rivalry I saw my chance. I told the rival that a talking machine in his home would bring people to his home and thereby help him in politics. He saw the point at once and purchased a machine. Then I went to the township trustee, told him what his rival had done and how it was helping the rival's political aspirations and I then told the township trustee that it was up to him to get an instrument at once and combat the inroads on his popularity which were being made by his rival's talking machine. And the sale was closed right then."

A third dealer, in speaking about his hardest sale, said:

"While it is rather difficult to pick out some specific sale and say that it is the hardest sale I ever made, still I can tell you about one recent sale which was very hard indeed.

"This sale was to a women's club. The club as a whole wanted the machine but, individually, the club members felt they shouldn't obligate themselves for the expense involved. And so while the sentiment was all for a machine the sale hung fire from week to week and from month to month.

"I suggested various methods of raising money—such as an amateur play. The club finally did decide to give a play, but the proceeds amounted to only $47.65, and it then looked as though the sale was off for good.

"But I continued skirmishing around for ways and means of raising the money. Finally I hit on the idea of having the club give a rummage sale. I suggested that every member of the club contribute something toward the sale in the way of old clothes, old furniture, etc. This idea took in spite of the failure of the play idea. After much work the club raised $75 in this way. Six months later they had another rummage sale which realized even more money. And the talking machine was purchased. But it sure took a lot of hard thinking and digging on my part to get the money for that club to pay for the machine!"

Aren't there suggestions and ideas in all this for other dealers and talking machine salesmen? Here's hoping so. And if other dealers and salesmen do get some good out of this article, then the interviewing and writing will have been worth while.

NEW OKEH AND FONOTIPIA JOBBER

Lansing Sales Co., of Boston, Appointed Distributor for New England Territory

BOSTON, MASS., February 17.—The Lansing Sales Co., of this city, general talking machine accessories, distributor for the New England territory, has been appointed a distributor for Okeh and Fonotipia records. The Lansing Sales Co., under the enterprising direction of A. J. Cullen, president, and R. G. Lipp, secretary and manager, is excellently equipped to handle these lines. Not only is the organization live, but it has built up for itself a wide circle of friends throughout New England through the quality of service rendered in other accessories in the past.

CHALIAPIN RECORDS POPULAR

The recent visit to the United States of Feodor Chaliapin, the noted Russian basso, and his successful appearance with the Metropolitan Opera Company and in concert, gave a great stimulus to the sales of his records, three of which are produced by the Victor Co. in its March list. The great voice of this masterful singer is splendidly reproduced, and the demand for his records is quite a tribute to the increasing musical taste and appreciation of users of talking machines.

DISPLAY WINDOW AS SALES FACTOR

Artistic Windows Arranged by Milwaukee Dealers Win Praise of Evening Sentinel

The artistic display windows of talking machine dealers in Milwaukee have been the subject of much praise from the Evening Sentinel of that city. The novel window display recently made by the Lyric Music Co. came in for particular comment in this wise:

"The old-time conservative window display of the music store is giving way to the latest in feature advertising, in accordance with modern publicity methods. Talking machine dealers, especially, are finding the window display an effective means of advertising their records.

"One of the most interesting displays is that of the Lyric Music Co., 86 Wisconsin street, advertising the new Brunswick record 'Ty-Tee.' 'Ty-Tee' is a South Sea maiden and the display depicts a scene on a tropical island, with a painted background and small palms, dolls in Tahitian costume, a lagoon and a bamboo hut in the foreground. A bright orange moon in the background makes the window very attractive in the evening. Mrs. J. C. Rousselot, wife of the proprietor of the store, is the designer."

The Valentine day window display made by the Badger Talking Machine Co. also came in for favorable mention, the red hearts and Cupids against the black records with the famous Victor dog wearing a huge heart about his neck, made, in combination with love ballads and appropriate records for Valentine day, a very effective display.

The artistic use by dealers of Lincoln portraits in connection with well-arranged record displays on Lincoln's birthday also attracted much favorable notice.

As the Talking Machine World has been emphasizing month after month a little intelligent interest in the window in the way of artistic displays on holidays and current events will do much to bring the talking machine store and its products to the attention not only of the general buying public but to all those interested in progressive merchandising.

KELLEY CO.'S NEW STORE OPENED

Formal Opening Attended by Over 5,000 People—New Establishment Is One of the Finest in West Virginia—Large Columbia Grafonola Department Feature of Second Floor

FAIRMONT, W. VA., March 6.—The formal opening of the Kelley Music Co.'s new store, at 420 Main street, this city, has just occurred, with a large turnout of the residents of this and the adjoining territory. It is estimated that over 5,000 persons visited the handsome music shop, which is one of the finest in the Mountain State. The new music shop has an area of 4,500 square feet. The lower floor, especially, is said to be the largest single room devoted to the display of musical instruments in West Virginia and is equalled in size only by stores in other cities. The upper floor is given over principally to the Columbia Grafonola department where eight record demonstration booths are installed. Each of the booths is sound-proof and handsomely furnished with comfortable settees and heavy rugs on the floors.

The front portion of the street floor is a large reception space, with rugs on the floor and chairs for visitors, and a few instruments are cleverly displayed, including a Duo-Art reproducing piano. From this section one passes along an aisle leading between the rows of record shelves to the business office at the rear and also to the wide stairway to the lower floor which embraces the main display of pianos, player-pianos, the complete Columbia Grafonola stock and the player demonstration rooms.

The decorations throughout are artistic and an original color scheme of soft tones of tan has been utilized to splendid effect. An ivory tint has been used throughout the lower floor and on the walls candelabra effect lighting fixtures are used in addition to handsome overhead fixtures which diffuse a brilliant glow of light.

W. G. Kelley, the proprietor, has been engaged in the music business in Fairmont for the past twelve years and is widely known in the State. For ten years his place of business was but two doors from his new location. In addition to the Duo-Art piano Mr. Kelley also handles the Steinway, J. & C. Fischer, Packard, Stultz & Bauer, Ludwig and Behr Bros. pianos and player-pianos and is exclusive Columbia Grafonola dealer. Souvenirs were presented to all callers on the opening day and an orchestra furnished special music.

Dear Bill:

Yes, the Blank Music Co. has just gone out of business and the events leading up to this incident are so clearly defined and yet so little realized by the average talking machine dealer that I am going to pass them along to you for analysis and also as a warning of what can happen when a business gets into a rut and the dealer fails to realize the fact.

Five years ago this concern was one of the most progressive in this part of the State. For a year or so business remained good and the company made a substantial profit and then trade commenced to die down gradually and the profits declined accordingly, until Mr. Blank was running his store at an actual loss. The failure followed.

As I size up the situation, Mr. Blank got into a rut from which he seemed unable to extricate himself. He did the same things in the same way with a monotonous regularity, which finally ruined him. He built up a prosperous business by hard work and attention to details and then lay down on the job when he was fairly started. He came to the erroneous conclusion that since he had made a reputation for himself and his business he could sit back and reap the profits from a few years of hard work indefinitely. His advertisements were mere announcements of the line which he handled, window displays consisted of showing a few instruments and records without any effective attempts at originality and freshness, and he made no serious attempt to build up his business by the acquisition of new customers.

In short, his establishment became similar to any one of a hundred in the surrounding communities and he found to his sorrow, when it was too late, that the growth of a business depends entirely upon continued aggressiveness and hard work as well as the constant searching and taking advantage of new plans to increase business and arouse the interest of the public.

When a business has reached that stage known as a "growing concern" it has reached a dangerous period in its growth. From this time onward the enterprise continues to grow or stands still for a short period and then retrogresses.

A business will grow only in proportion to the ability and growth of the human units which compose the personnel. There must be a constant striving to surpass past performances. Each window display should be equal to or better than the last. Perfection of service, complete stock and facilities for the comfort of patrons all tend to bring a business to a state of prosperity. Advertising, free publicity, effective circularization of prospects, unique plans for the stimulation of trade and for the purpose of adding new names to the prospect list, are all prime essentials to success and not one of them should be overlooked or slighted. Trade papers in the talking machine field are an invaluable help in bringing to the dealer the experiences and plans of other dealers which have proved successful and many of these can be duplicated with advantage.

In closing, I want to emphasize that while there is nothing new in these few paragraphs they are items which are liable to be slighted and if the failure of the Blank Music Co. has made you analyze your business methods I shall have done some good.

As ever,

Jim.

EFFECTIVE VICTOR ADVERTISING

The Presentation of the "Victor Immortals" in Magazine Advertising Proves Most Timely

The great value of the talking machine in preserving to posterity the voices of great artists who have passed away was emphasized with particular strength by the Victor Talking Machine Co. in an unusually attractive advertisement which appeared on the back cover of recent issues of the Saturday Evening Post. The advertisement, which represented the reproduction from a bas relief, showed the busts of famous Victor artists who have passed away, among them those of Caruso, Powell, Williams, Plancon, Patti, Tamagno, Gilibert and Gerville-Réache, above the caption: "Victor Immortals." The Victrola has transformed their art into a living reality that will endure for all time.

Coming at a time when much interest is being shown in the establishment of the Caruso Memorial Foundation and the celebration of Caruso Week the advertisement was timely.

TRI-STATE MUSIC CO. OPENS STORE

Concern Whose Activities Extend Over the States of Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York Secures Location in Conneaut, O.

CONNEAUT, O., February 28.—The Tri-State Music Co. has completed arrangements for the location of its headquarters here. The site which the company has secured is on Harper street, one of the best locations in this vicinity. H. A. Copeland, president of the concern, states that pianos, player-pianos, talking machines and small musical instruments of all kinds will be handled and a large repair department will be installed. The activities of this company cover the States of Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York.

What people do not understand they oppose; therefore, the talking machine salesman must implant in the mind of the prospect a clear knowledge of the instrument which he represents and prove to the prospect's satisfaction that his machine is a worth-while product.

HARPONOLA

The Phonograph with the "Golden Voice"

Common Sense

The factor that decides whether you make a little or a lot of money in the phonograph business is your ability to convince your customers of some very simple, easily understood facts.

Briefly:—To make a lot of money, you have to show your trade that there are no longer any exclusive patents and improvements in talking machines—that any maker, who honestly wants to, can build a fine and satisfactory machine—then show the customer that you have such a machine, and this last is the easiest part if you happen to be selling the Harponola.

If you doubt your ability to convince people of these easily proved truths, then your only choice is to handle a heavily advertised machine and be satisfied with your small share of a trade that is distributed among a great host of dealers.

We have many hustling dealers who are making huge profits with us because the available business for the "independents" is hardly yet scratched.

Later, there will be greater competition, even in our particular field. The subject is worth investigating carefully. Ask for the Harponola proposition.

They have issued strict instructions to him that before any Cheney instrument leaves the factory it must be as nearly perfect as a phonograph can be made. Without fear or favor, he rejects every Cheney that shows even the tiniest blemish.

Stand and watch him. Get down under his searchlight, and try to discover some of the infinitesimal imperfections which he demands must be corrected before the instrument shall leave the factory.

It may surprise you to learn that standards worthy of the most exacting arts are maintained in this commercial organization—that here fineness and quality of product, and reputation for superiority are placed above all else.

Why Music Broadcasted by Radio Should Not Hurt Sales of Talking Machines and Records

Editor, The Talking Machine World:

Will you please advise me what effect the wireless telephone is going to have, in your judgment, upon the phonograph industry. It occurs to me that you have investigated the matter, hence my inquiry. Yours truly,

J. M. Noel, Portage, Pa.

The rapid development of the wireless telephone craze has caused a number of members of the talking machine trade to make the same inquiry as that propounded by Mr. Noel, particularly in view of the fact that talking machine music is featured very prominently in the concert programs of the various broadcasting stations.

The wireless telephone craze has spread so rapidly that even the big electrical companies who instituted the broadcasting concert idea for the purpose of stimulating the sale of radio sets for the home have no really definite idea of the permanence of the movement and in a letter to The World an official of one of the largest companies declared that in the matter of wireless telephony they themselves were faced by a "chaotic condition."

There is no reason to assume that music broadcasted by radio will affect the sale of talking machines and records to any appreciable extent, and there are many who believe that, on the contrary, the featuring of talking machine music in radio concerts will serve to attract to talking machines and records the attention of many who have up to this time not been fully acquainted with the great variety of entertainment offered through that medium.

Those who have concluded to listen in on the wireless concerts through the ordinary home radio receiving sets will realize that there must be some substantial developments in the art of transmitting music through the air before the results are sufficiently impressive from a musical standpoint to warrant serious consideration. The experience of listening to music out of the air, as it were, is unique and interesting in itself and the novelty naturally makes a strong appeal, but the quality of the music itself does not compare with that of the actual playing of the talking machine. It may be that some system will be devised for improving this quality, but that remains for the future.

In considering the effect of the permanent popularity of radio music in the talking machine field it must be remembered that the talking machine, although it has offered the faithful reproduction of the singing and playing of great artists, as well as of music hall favorites, has not served to detract from the interest shown by music lovers in concerts and operas, nor has it cut down the attendance at the theatres. As a matter of fact, the talking machine has been credited with playing a great part in developing a keener and nation-wide appreciation of the good things in music. It is to be assumed, therefore, that, barring the unexpected development of radio telephony along new lines, the music carried by wireless will simply stimulate interest in the living artists or their records and inculcate a desire to own the records or listen to them in the quiet of the home.

A most important point is that the radio broadcasting program is fixed and represents the music selected by those in charge of the broadcasting rather than that desired by the listener. The talking machine, on the other hand, enables the individual to listen to the class of music he likes best, when he wants it, and in his own home.

He arranges his own concert and does not depend upon the whims of others. So long as the talking machine makes this possible there is little to fear from any system of radio music broadcasting. It may supplement the talking machine and serve to cultivate interest in it, but it cannot supplant it.

Another thought. It is not impossible that we will find music by certain famous artists of the talking machine field being sent out by radio for advertising purposes. When a manufacturer wants to attract public attention to a given record by a given artist he may feel that radio distribution, on a limited basis of the selection in question, will constitute good sales promotion. That the radio work of artists famous in the talking machine field can be definitely limited seems certain, because the artists who are great enough to earn handsome record royalties will not hastily or undiplomatically proceed to do extensive radio work against the wishes of the manufacturer who pays such record royalties. Such action would be too much like killing the goose that lays the golden egg before a new goose capable of laying as many or as good eggs has grown up.

Another angle to be considered is that the music publishers are paying considerable attention to the radio, considering it rightly as constituting a public performance of copyrighted works, and will probably exercise their rights to demand royalties for broadcasting privileges.

Our feeling on the whole matter of radio development, so far as it bears on the talking machine industry, is just this. The progress of music by radio must, and will, be carefully watched by manufacturers and retailers of the talking machine industry and, this being true, the future may find the two industries closely allied and co-operating with each other, both as regards production and distribution. The Talking Machine World proposes to work to the end that the talking machine industry may take every possible commercial advantage of opportunities offered by the radio and to keep its readers accurately and properly informed as fast as developments of import occur to any branch of the talking machine business.

ILLUSTRATIONS A GREAT FACTOR

Their Use in Retail Advertising Generally Considered to Be Helpful and Stimulative

The value of illustrations in retail advertising is generally admitted, although there are those who believe that a type display properly arranged will catch the eye and do as good work in attracting interest as the illustrated advertisement. It is, however, the opinion of Arthur Weisenberger, who holds forth in The Dry Goods Economist, that "the use of well-selected and well-placed cuts is an extremely important factor in securing a maximum return for advertising expenditure. This is proved by the consensus of opinion of advertising men from widely scattered parts of the country. While they vary somewhat as to details, ad men agree on certain very definite values in illustration. People want pictures; they like to see what is offered to them without having to visit the store. A good illustration provides a mental image far more accurate than the best piece of copy could inspire. How to use illustrations is a subject of some dispute. One point stressed is that there should not be too many cuts as a general thing. For ordinary advertising a few cuts well distributed are most profitable. Only high-grade art work is worth using. The size of cuts also should be carefully considered; they should be large enough to admit of detail being shown."

PATENTS ELECTRICAL TALKING MACHINE REPRODUCERS

E. T. Jones, of New Orleans, Claims His Devices Transfer Vibrations From Records So That Music Is Produced From Reproducing Apparatus in the Home

NEW ORLEANS, LA., March 9.—Entertainment of friends with phonograph music received by telephone in the same distinct tone as that furnished by the phonograph may be a possibility through the invention of E. T. Jones, radio supervisor of the Gulf division of the United States Shipping Board, who resides in this city. Mr. Jones has obtained two patents on electrical phonograph reproducers which he believes will make more interesting the reproduction of music from ordinary phonographs.

While several inventions have been patented which take the sounds after they are received from a phonograph and transfer them for some distance, Mr. Jones' invention is said to be the first that transfers the vibrations from the record so that the sound is not produced from the phonograph, but from the reproducing apparatus at the other end. This system eliminates any false tones that may be reproduced when the sound itself is transferred instead of the vibrations. Mr. Jones also points out that "The carbon granule principle used in the telephone, while it enables persons to converse over the wires, yet does not faithfully produce a great singer's voice."

Mr. Jones' invention is a small generating machine which generates current from the feeble vibrations from the needle arm holder through wires to the reproducing apparatus. No extra batteries are used because the reproducer generates its own current.

If these wires were stretched all over the city every house could be furnished with music from the main wires. Mr. Jones says it would be a simple matter to run a pair of wires throughout the city and take leads off at subscribers' residences. These wires would run into a house in the same way the electrical current and telephone wires do, and after passing through a controlling switch they would be connected to an electrical horn which would reproduce the music faithfully and at any strength desired.

Different records could be continually operated and changed at the main office, where an ordinary phonograph would be installed. Whenever one of the subscribers wanted music, all he would have to do would be to turn on the switch.

The "Magnavox," which is an invention that reproduces the sounds in a greater or lesser degree of loudness, would be attached to the other end of the wire.

Mr. Jones points out that one of the advantages of his invention is that scratching is entirely eliminated in his reproducer. The reason for that is the vibrations imparted from the scratching of the needle are not of sufficient strength to generate electrical current and therefore they are not reproduced at the receiver end, thereby increasing enjoyment of the music.

While this electrical reproducer can be made use of to very good purpose in dictaphone machines for use in the business office, yet one of the greatest uses which the new device can be put to is the furnishing of music for entertainments and amusement places, such as theatres, ball parks and dance halls. By connecting the reproducer to a two-stage amplifier and a set of loud-speaking Magnavoxes it will be an easy matter to provide music of great volume and faithful reproduction, Mr. Jones points out.

In the use of the reproducer ordinary phonograph records are used. Any phonograph instrument that revolves the record and moves the needle arm can be used. The mechanism in the phonograph that produces the sound is not called into use at all, the reproducing machinery being confined entirely to the disc-shaped needle point and holder invented by Mr. Jones.

A scientific study of phonograph records can also be made with the new instrument, Mr. Jones said. By connecting the reproducer to a printing tape recorder the actual grooves of the records could be recorded on a small strip of paper passing under the inking pen. The movement of the pen is actuated by the electrical impulses from the electrical reproducer. With this tape the different qualities of records can be ascertained and many voice problems solved.

Mr. Jones has not yet made plans for putting his invention on the market, but expects soon to make some such arrangements.

R. F. Bolton Returns to New York After Trip to Chicago to Supervise Making of Records by Several Prominent Columbia Artists

R. F. Bolton, director of the Columbia recording studios, returned to New York a few days ago after a trip to Chicago in connection with making additional recordings for the Columbia library. Mr. Bolton was accompanied on this trip by Chas. A. Prince, musical director of the company; Hal Houseman, recording operator, and Geo. Stehl, first violinist of the Columbia orchestra.

When the Columbia party arrived in Chicago they made arrangements to secure a series of records by Van and Schenck, Bert Williams, the Paul Biese Orchestra and Frank Westphal's Rainbow Gardens Orchestra. In addition, several records were made for the foreign language library, and all of the recordings were made at the Columbia headquarters in Chicago, 325 West Jackson Boulevard. Mr. Bolton states that the trip was a signal success, and that the new records by these Columbia artists will be announced shortly.

CONTRIBUTING TO CARUSO FUND

Victor Talking Machine Co. Subscribes $5,000 in Support of Movement—Music Industries Chamber of Commerce Also Co-operating

The Victor Talking Machine Co. has subscribed $5,000 to the permanent endowment fund of the Caruso American Memorial Foundation, according to an announcement by John Aspegren, chairman of the Executive Committee, which is directing the memorial movement.

The subscription has come through the Music Industries Chamber of Commerce, which is conducting special activities with a view to having all branches of the music industry participate nationally in the memorial movement. Although Caruso was related more directly to the talking machine industry, the Chamber of Commerce feels that all branches of the music industry should co-operate, as one of the important objects of the Foundation is to advance generally the musical arts and their appreciation. The Chamber will endeavor to raise a fund sufficient to support one or more perpetual annual scholarships, to be named in its honor.

It was announced that the Victor Co., in addition to its contributions, will endeavor to enlist the co-operation of the Victor dealers throughout the United States. They are being asked to co-operate by direct contribution to the fund, by distributing the Foundation's leaflet appealing for funds, and by assisting any local movements that may be initiated in the future in behalf of the Foundation.

Wanted His Records From the Red Seal List and Insisted on Getting Them

It has been proven time and time again that the musical tastes of the record customer cannot always be judged by personal appearance, and Neil P. Brennan, of O'Neil, Neb., relates an incident that again proves that fact. According to Mr. Brennan, he was recently visited by a real son of the Plains with a cowboy Stetson, chaps, spurs and all the rest of the characteristic costume, who asked regarding some good records. A number of the most popular dance records were demonstrated, after which the cowboy remarked: "Now, if you have some good records, I'll buy them." "Just what do you call good records?" he was asked. "Well, I'd like to hear one or two by Louise Homer and Heifetz and something of that order." The cowboy proved he wasn't bluffing by buying a substantial number of records when the proper sort were demonstrated for him.

CONVENTION OF THE CENTRAL OHIO VICTOR RETAILERS

Members of Ohio Association Sound Note of Optimism for 1922—Proper Direction of Sales Efforts Stressed by J. W. Pierce—Other Interesting Addresses and News

COLUMBUS, O., March 3.—Optimistic forecasts for business in general for the year 1922 were given by every one of the four speakers on the program of the Central Ohio Retail Victor Dealers' Association convention held at the Hotel Chittenden, this city, last month.

Utilizing the Victrola as the mouthpiece of America for the purpose of spreading the real ideals of a nation by offering the music and songs of that nation was advocated by J. W. Pierce, of the intelligence department of the Hoover Suction Sweeper Co., Canton, O., in his address before the members of this Association. Mr. Pierce maintained that the Victrola could be used as an Americanization agent.

Some Good Hints on Selling

The development of the customers' good will by dealers, the importance of giving service to the public, the proper training of salesmen and the necessity for business men to have their business properly analyzed were among the other points emphasized by Mr. Pierce. In the course of his address Mr. Pierce suggested the establishment of a service department constituted of men who would visit Victrola owners and examine the machines at frequent intervals, thus enabling the owners to have their talking machines in good order at all times. A house-to-house canvass, preferably by women, for the purpose of demonstrating records in the homes of talking machine owners was another suggestion offered the delegates who attended this convention by Mr. Pierce. "I believe there is a big field for this type of service and in time you would get a large business from this sort of approach," said Mr. Pierce.

Speaking on profits, Mr. Pierce said: "I can buy a watch for $35 and sell it for $50 in a short time and make money on it, and I can buy this watch for less money and sell it for more money and lose on it if I keep it in stock for a long period. The solution to making a reasonable profit on your merchandise is to make your stock turn. It is in your turnover that your profits lie. Do not let your rent, heat and light eat up your profits."

In selling Victrolas as well as any other product it is necessary to find a logical appeal, Mr. Pierce told his audience. In this connection he said: "Sell the thing that the thing does. Look upon your work as the physician and surgeon looks upon his work. Look upon your work from a social and religious standpoint and stick to your logical appeal. When you are selling a Victrola educate the public to what the Victrola is. Point out the trade-mark in order that they may know that this talking machine is a Victrola and no other talking machine."

Concluding his speech, Mr. Pierce advocated the importance of developing good personality in salespeople and the necessity of real service to the public. "Service has always paid good dividends."

Methods employed in advertising that has brought the best results to dealers of varied products, including the talking machine, were given in an address to the delegates by James J. Davin, of the Reincke-Ellis Co., Chicago. According to Mr. Davin, advertising and publicity are the best means of securing business. He urged every dealer present to accept the slogan, "The more you tell the more you sell," and in applying it assured them a greater success in their business.

"Advertising is a force in industry just like steam and electricity. The newspaper and magazine are some of the best media for advertising, for through them the greatest number of people are reached. In advertising it is desirable to have a lot of white space." He illustrated this statement by showing a number of advertisements of nationally known products. "Plan your advertising in advance and extend your advertising campaign for a period of time," Mr. Davin advised the delegates. The building up of mailing lists, the proper way of employing billboard advertising and the value of having Victrola shows and concerts were also mentioned in his speech.

How to Get More Business

Statistics compiled by Leslie I. King, president of the Association and manager of the Victrola department of the Morehouse-Martens Co., were the outstanding points mentioned by Mr. King in his address on "How to Get More Business." He stated that he found by actual experience that there are six sales in every hundred solicitation calls.

That better business is in store for every merchant provided he goes after it was the contention of H. C. Bard, vice-president of the Morehouse-Martens Co. "The fact that conditions were not so favorable the beginning of this year is really a good thing for the business man," said Mr. Bard. "It is like sand thrown upon the ice to keep us from skidding."

The Educational Question

Speaking on better music in the home, community and the school, Miss Marie Finney, of the educational department of the Victor Talking Machine Co., Camden, N. J., said: "What is our big social and economic problem to-day? Isn't it the problem of the foreigner? Isn't our failure in the past to provide for the Americanization of the foreigner the cause of most of our labor, our industrial and our social problems of to-day? Has not our failure in the past to provide this means been because we have not known enough about the foreigner and what he has brought to us in exchange for what we have to offer him?"

"In these problems we must meet the foreigner on some common ground of understanding. Music is the one common ground, and no greater truism has ever been formulated than Longfellow's 'Music is the Universal Language of Mankind.' It is the language of the heart; it needs no interpreter. It speaks in words intelligible to every man, no matter what his native tongue may be.
