DEDICATION,

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE

THE EARL OF MINTO,

GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.

&c. &c. &c.

My Lord,

I HAVE taken the liberty of giving to the following little work the sanction of your Lordship's name, not with the idea, that so humble a tribute can add any thing to it's lustre; but with the hope, that it may reflect some credit upon the pages to which it is prefixed.

New to public criticism, and reasonably ambitious of public approval, I am naturally anxious to introduce this first production of my literary labors, under the most eligible auspices, to the notice of the world; and I am confident that the countenance of one who has always professed himself an encourager of letters, and who is known to merit the palm which he bestows, will ensure me, in the first instance at least, a favorable reception.

DEDICATION.

It must be a matter of indifference to Society, and still more so to your Lordship, that an unimportant individual should express his admiration of the firmness and energy which India has witnessed in your Lordship's political career, and which have been so successfully exerted in suppressing internal commotion, and prosecuting foreign conquest: I am unwilling however to pass over the present opportunity of joining in the voice of an English public, and applauding the justice that has crowned your Lordship's administration of the East, with the dignities of Great Britain.

Wishing that the country to which your Lordship's services are about to be transferred, may long continue to benefit by them,

I HAVE THE HONOR TO BE,

YOUR LORDSHIP'S,

MOST OBEDIENT SERVANT,

CALCUTTA, }

THE antiquity and excellence of the sacred language of the Hindus, have naturally attracted attention, and excited curiosity: possessing considerable claims to be regarded as the most ancient form of speech with which mankind is acquainted, it appeals strongly to the interest that invests the early ages of the world; and constructed upon perhaps the most perfect plan, which human ingenuity has devised, it tempts us to an enquiry whether its perfection be limited by its structure, or whether the merits of Hindu compositions partake, or not, of the beauty of the language, in which they are composed.

It has fallen to the lot of the English nation especially, to prosecute these enquiries, and the result has been conformable to the patriotic wish of Sir Wm. Jones, that as the continental nations of Europe had been the most diligent cultivators of the other oriental tongues, the merit of Sanscrit research might chiefly belong to his own countrymen: influenced by his advice and example, his countrymen have labored with no contemptible success, in this interesting pursuit, and have rendered the language and literature of this division of the east accessible to the world. The efforts of Sanscrit Scholars have hitherto however been directed rather to the useful, than the pleasing, rather to works of science than imagination. The complicated grammar of the Hindus has been most successfully investigated, their mythology amply illustrated, and much of their philosophy satisfactorily explained; their astronomical works have been exhibited to the philosophers whose modern attainments have rendered ancient science an object rather of curiosity than information, and their laws are no longer concealed behind the veil of an unknown tongue, from the knowledge of those who are charged with the administration of justice in Hindoostan. It only remains, to explore the field of their lighter literature, and transfer some of it's most elegant flowers to a European soil.

The Drama of Sacontala, and the songs of JAYADÉVA have prepared the readers of the west, for the character of Sanscrit Poetry. To those who know how much poetical beauty depends upon poetical expression, it is needless to observe, that these works have been much injured by a translation into prose, although that prose proceeded from the elegant pen of Sir WM. JONES: even in this state however they have received the admiration of the Scholars of Europe;¹ even in their present dress it is impossible to avoid discovering, that they teem with fanciful imagery and natural feeling, and that beyond the pale of mythological allusion they offer little to offend the most fastidious taste.

It has been observed by Mr. COLEBROOKE,² and higher authority cannot be desired, that the profane Poetry of the Hindus affords better specimens of style and taste, than are to be found in the poems which are considered by them as sacred: such are the Purānas, the Mahab'hārāt, and the Rāmāyana: the portions of these works therefore, which on various occasions have appeared before the public, cannot be allowed to detract from the general merits of Sanscrit composition, even though it should appear that they have more charms in the eye of literary curiosity, than of public taste: they are recommended to the Hindus themselves, not by their beauty, or sublimity, the conduct of the story, or the elegance of the style; but they owe their celebrity to their traditionary divineness, to the force of habit, and the power of religious faith: the stories related in them, the followers of BRAHMÁ have been accustomed to venerate, and the excellence of the compositions it would be sacrilege in them to deny: at the same time, there are few Pandits of real learning who would not rather peruse the Mégha Dūta than the Rāmāyana; there are few, who in the sincerity of unbiassed delight, do not transfer the palm of poetical pre-eminence from VALMÍCI³ to CÁLIDÁS.

Of the latter of these eminent Bards little is ascertained by history, though much is detailed by tradition: he is the real or supposed author of a number of poetical works, each of which is of the highest merit. The Drama of SACONTALA is attributed to him, and the text of another of his works, the Rītu Sanhāra or Assemblage of the Seasons, has been printed under the inspection of Sir WM. JONES. The present poem is believed to be the offspring of his fertile imagination, and to the same source are ascribed the Raghu Vaṅsa or Race of RAGHU, an epic poem; Cumāra

Samb'hava, the birth of the deity CUMARA, a poem chiefly mythological; a regular Drama entitled URVASI, the name of one of the courtezans of Swerga; and a farce called Hásyáráva, or the Sea of laughter; the Sringára Tilaca and Praśnóttara Mála, two short amatory poems, and a small treatise in verse upon poetical metre, called Sruta Bód'ha. Several other works are said to be the compositions of CÁLIDÁS, many of which it has been conjectured are attributed to him, merely in consequence of the reputation derived from those of which he was really the author.

The æra of CÁLIDÁS is generally asserted to be that of VICRAMÁDITYA, in whose court he formed one of the nine illustrious writers, characterised by the epithet of the Nine Gems; as the name VICRAMÁDITYA however has been undoubtedly applied to more than to one monarch, the establishment of this fact leads us no satisfactory result, with respect to the age of the poet. Sir WM. JONES⁴ conceiving the VICRAMÁDITYA mentioned, to be the same as the sovereign from whom the present Hindu year, 1870, is dated, places the poet in the century preceding the Christian æra: Mr. BENTLEY,⁵ trusting the Bhoja Prabandha and Ayeen Achery, conceives VICRAMÁDITYA to have been the same as Raja VICRAMA, successor to Raja BHOJA, and places the Nine Gems in the court of this monarch, in the end of the 11th, or the beginning of the 12th century after CHRIST; and Mr. COLEBROOKE,⁶ relying chiefly upon the testimony of an inscription found at Bud'dha Gayá is inclined to consider the age of AMERA SINHA author of the Amera Cōsha, to be at least 900 years; and AMERA SINHA was also one of the Nine Gems, and consequently a contemporary of CALIDAS: this last opinion seems entitled to the preference.

To whatever name or period the Cloud Messenger may be assigned, it is the production of a poet: the circumstances of eastern society and climate, tend in a great measure to exclude sublimity, either moral or physical from their literary compositions, but the same circumstances are favorable to the less awful graces of poetry, to the elegantly minute observation of nature, and the tender expression of natural sensibility: the frowning rock, or foaming cataract, the furious tyrant, or undaunted patriot are not to be traced in Sanscrit verse, but we shall frequently meet with the impassioned lover, or affectionate husband, with the unobtrusive blossoms of the flower, and the evanescent tints of the sky: in point of language Sanscrit writers are certainly unsurpassed, and perhaps unequalled, and their style in general is as full as it is sweet, as majestic as it is harmonious; the exceeding copiousness of the language sometimes leads them into those tricks of composition, which formerly exercised the misdirected ingenuity of Europe, and puns, and quibbles and endless alliteration constitute the stanza; their attention also to minute objects sometimes terminates in quaintness, and affectation, but from the faults of either style, or fancy, the subject of our present enquiry is entirely exempt: there are also a copiousness and consistency in it, which are not often paralleled in oriental writings; a quick succession of thought and description, which the title of the work does not lead us to expect, and a successful avoiding of inconsistency or absurdity, which so protracted an apostrophe as forms the theme of the poem might have induced us to apprehend ; the style of the work is also exceedingly simple, while at the same time, it is exquisitely polished ; the merits of the work are so highly appreciated by the Hindus, that notwithstanding its shortness, it is classed amongst their *Maha Cávya*s or Great poems, and notwithstanding its perspicuity, it is the object of much critical acumen, and learned elucidation : the manuscript from which the text of the following pages is printed, and for which the translator is indebted to the kindness of Mr. COLEBRIDGE, unites with the original, no fewer than six Commentaries, the respective works of MALLI NÁT'H, CALYÁNA MALLA, SANÁTANA GÓSWAMI, BHARATA MALLICA, RÁMANÁT'H TERCA LANCAÁRA and HARA GÓVINDA VÁCHESPATI,

In the conversion of the Mégha Dúta into English the translator has in general endeavored to avoid being licentious, without attempting to be literal ; the idioms of the languages are too different to admit of a very precise transfusion of the one into the other, and it has been more the object of the following translation, to render thoughts, than words : with a few exceptions however, most of which are specified in the notes, it is believed that the ideas of CALÍDÁS, will be found conveyed with tolerable fidelity : to the English reader, whose critical sagacity may discover, that the number of lines in the translation is nearly double the amount of those of the original, it may be sufficient to observe, that this excess is balanced by the number of syllables, of which one line of Sanscrit contains nearly double the syllables of which one line of English consists, and that the little connective particles which take up much space in the translation, are in a great measure unknown to the readily compounded language of the original text,

The translator believes that some apology may be requisite for the length, and nature of many of the notes accompanying the translation: some of them were indispensable; it was absolutely necessary to explain the allusions to customs, or notions, to domestic manners, or religious belief, to render the text intelligible in many places, and in others, to enable the European reader to judge of the beauty or propriety of the thoughts. The notes to the geographical part of the poem, it is hoped will not be regarded as useless or irrelevant, as they may perhaps throw some light upon the ancient geography of central Hindoostan. Illustrating passages in the poem, by extracts from other Sanscrit authors, as well as a few verbal and etymological remarks, may possibly be serviceable or interesting, to the few and meritorious students of the beautiful though intricate language of the original. Tracing the analogies between Greek, and Hindu Mythology, furnished an amusement to the translator, which he thinks communicable to others; and the analogies between the poetry of the east, and west, are given especially for the benefit of those liberal critics, who admire upon the strength of prescription, the beauties of classical and modern writings, and deny all merit to the same or similar ideas, when they occur in the works of oriental writers. It is also entertaining to observe, how much men resemble each other, in spite of the accidental varieties of complexion or education of place, or time.

There are perhaps other subjects in the following pages which require explanation, or apology; as however this preface has already exceeded reasonable limits, they must be consigned to the forbearance of the reader, or they may be attributed to the inexperience of the translator, and the occupation of his time and attention in more serious pursuits.

MÉGHA DÚTA;

OR,

CLOUD MESSENGER:

ARGUMENT.

A YACSHA, or Demigod so called, and a servant of the Hindu God of wealth, CUREVA, had incurred the displeasure of his lord, by neglecting a garden entrusted to his charge, and allowing it to be injured by the entrance of AIRAVATA, the elephant of INDRA, Deity of the firmament: as a punishment for his offence, he was condemned to twelve months banishment from Alaca, the city of the Yacshas, and consequent separation from his home and wife. The seat of his exile is the mountain Rámagiri, and upon the opening of the poem, he is supposed to have passed a period of eight months in solitary seclusion: the poem opens at the commencement of the rainy season, when heavy Clouds are gathering in the south, and proceeding in a northerly course, or towards the Himála mountains, and the fictitious position of the residence of the Yacshas. To one of these, the distressed Demigod addresses himself, and desires the Cloud to waft his sorrows to a beloved and regretted wife. For this purpose he first describes the route which the messenger is to pursue, and this gives the Poet an opportunity of alluding to the principal mountains, rivers, temples, &c. that are to be met with on the road from Rámagiri to Oujein, and thence, nearly due north, to the Himálaya or snowy mountains: the fabulous mountain Cailása, and the city of Cuvera, Alaca, which are supposed to be in the central part of the snowy range, are next described, and we then come to the personal description of the Yacsha's wife. The Cloud is next instructed how to express the feelings and situation of the exile, and he is then dismissed from the presence of the Deity, and the Poem of CA' LIDÁ SA.

N O T E.

It may be necessary to observe that in reading the Sanscrit names which occur in the following work the consonants are to be pronounced as in English with the exception of C which is uniformly used for K agreeably to Sir WM. JONES's system. The vowels have their natural pronunciation, and the accent above a vowel marks its being long. The vowels may be thus pronounced :

A as in America .	A' as in Far .
I as in City .	I' as in Italian or like our ee .
U as in Full .	U' do. ——— or like oo .
E as in Italian or like a in made .
O as in English .

WHERE Rámagiri's shadowy woods extend,

Annotations.

VERSE I. Rámagiri] Is a compound term signifying the mountain of RA'MA, and may be applied to any of those hills in which the hero resided during his exile, or peregrinations. His first and most celebrated residence was the mountain Chitracút a in Bundelcund, now known by the name of Comptah, and still á place of sanctity, and pilgrimage. We find that tradition has assigned to another mountain, a part of the Kimoor range, the honor of affording him, and his companions, SÍTA and LACSHMANA, a temporary asylum upon his progress to the south, and it is consequently held in veneration by the neighbouring villagers: see Capt. BLUNT's journey from Chunarghur to Yertnagoodum, Asiatic Researches, 7. 60. An account of a journey from Mirzapore to Nagpore, however, in the Asiatic Annual

Spoiled of his glories, severed from his wife,
 A banished Yacsha passed his lonely life;
 Doomed by CUVÉRA's anger to sustain,
 Twelve tedious months of solitude and pain.

Annotations.

Register for 1806, has determined the situation of the scene of the present poem, to be in the vicinity of the latter city: the modern name of the mountain is there stated to be Ramtéc; it is marked in the maps Ramtege, but I understand the proper word is Ramtinci, which in the Mahratta language has probably the same import as Rámagiri, the hill of RÁMA. It is situated but a short distance to the north of Nagpore, and is covered with buildings consecrated to RÁMA and his associates, which receive the periodical visits of numerous and devout pilgrims.

VERSE 2. Where SÍTA bathed.] In his exile RÁMA was accompanied by his younger brother LACSHMANA, and his faithful consort SÍTA, or as she is called in the original, the daughter of JANACA, until the latter was carried off by the demon or giant RÁVANA: see the Rámáyana: the performance of her ablutions in the springs of the mountain, is here stated to have rendered their water the object of religious veneration.

VERSE 3. Spoiled of his glories.] In the original, "His greatness was gone to its setting" a figure with which English poetry is perfectly familiar; thus Woolsey in Henry the 8th.

Nay then farewell!
 I've touched the highest point of all my greatness,
 And from that full meridian of my glory,
 I haste now to my setting.

VERSE 4. A Yacsha] Is a demigod of which there exists a Gańa or class; they have few peculiar attributes, and are regarded only as the companions or attendants of CUVÉRA, the god of wealth; the word is derived from यक्ष् to worship, either because they minister to CUVÉRA, are revered themselves by men, or are beloved by the APSARAS, the courtezans of INDRA's heaven: they have however their own female companions, or wives, as appears by the poem. One writer cited and censured by a Com-

To these drear hills through circling days confined,
 In dull unvaried grief, the God repined;
 And sorrow withering every youthful charm,
 Had slipped the golden bracelet from his arm,

Annotations.

mentator on the Amera Cosha, derives the name from जक्ष to eat, because he says they devour children; occasionally indeed the Yacshas appear as imps of evil, but in general their character is perfectly inoffensive.

VERSE 5. CUVÉRA] In Hindu mythology performs the functions of the grecian PLUTUS; he is the lord of wealth, and master of nine inestimable treasures, his capital is situated on mount Cailása, and inhabited by Yacshas, Cinnaras, and other inferior deities: he has a variety of appellations alluding to these circumstances, but is most commonly designated by the one here employed; the term is expressive of his deformity, being derived from कु vile, and वेर body, and he is described as having three legs, and but eight teeth: no images of him occur, nor is any particular worship paid to him, and in these respects there is a considerable analogy between him, and his grecian paralell: PLUTUS is described as blind, malignant and cowardly, and seems to have received but very slender homage from Greek or Roman, devotion. The term Anger here used is more literally, Curse; Imprecation is the great weapon of a Brahman, saint, and deity, and in either case is deadly and inexpiable: The gods themselves are subject to its force whether denounced by other deities, or by holy men, thus INDRA was cursed by the Sage, GAUTAMA, and the circumstance of BRAHMA, not receiving any peculiar worship from the Hindus, is still attributed to the operation of an Anathema pronounced upon him by SIVA.

VERSE 10. Had slipped the golden bracelet from his arm.] This is a favorite idea with Hindu poets, and repeatedly occurs; thus in the elegant drama of Sacontala; DUSHMANTA says:

इदं मे शशिरैरन्तस्तापा दिवर्णमणीकृतं निशि निशिभुज्जन्मस्तापांगदसारिभिरश्रुभः ।

अनभिल्लितज्याघातांकं मुहुर्मणिबन्धनात्कनकवलयं स्रंसं स्रंसं मया प्राप्ति सार्थते ॥

or in Sir WM. JONES's version, "This golden bracelet sullied by the flame which preys

When with Ashárha's glooms the air was hung,
 And one dark Cloud around the mountain clung; 12
 In form some elephant, whose sportive rage,
 Ramparts, scarce equal to his might, engage.

Long on the mass of mead-reviving dew,
 The heavenly exile fixed his eager view; 16
 And still the melancholy tear suppressed,
 Though bitterest sorrow wrung his heaving breast;

on me, and which no dew mitigates, but the tears gushing nightly from my eyes, has fallen again and again on my wrist, and has been replaced on my emaciated arm."

VERSE 11. When with A'shárha's glooms] The month A'shád'ha or A'shár'ha comprehends the latter part of June, and the commencement of July, and is the period about which the south-west monsoon, or rainy season usually sets in.

VERSE 13. In form some elephant] Thus in the Purána Sarcaswa clouds are described as महिषाश्वराहास्यमत्तमातङ्गरूपिणः Shaped like buffaloes, boars and wild elephants. In CHAPMAN'S Bussy D'Ambois they are said to assume,

In our faulty apprehensions
 The forms of dragons, lions, elephants

And SHAKESPEARE although he omits the elephant, gives them with his usual overflow of imagery, a great variety of shapes.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
 A vapour sometime like a bear or lion,

Reflexion told what promise of delight,
 Sprang from such gathering shades to happier sight, 20
 Where the worn traveller is joyed to trace,
 His home approaching, and a wife's embrace:
 What hope alas was his! yet fancy found,
 Some solace in the glooms that deepened round, 24
 And bade him hail amidst the laboring air,
 A friendly envoy to his distant fair:

ANTHONY, and CLEOPATRA.

VERSE 20. Sprang from such gathering shades to happier sight] The commencement of the rainy season being peculiarly delightful in Hindoostan, from the contrast it affords to the sultry weather immediately preceding, and also rendering the roads pleasant, and practicable, is usually selected for travelling. Hence frequent allusions occur in the poets to the expected return of such persons, as are at this time absent from their family and home.

Who charged with grateful tidings might impart,
New life and pleasure to her drooping heart. 28

Cheered with the thought he culled each budding flower,
And wildly wooed the fertilizing power;

Annotations.

VERSE 32. The expression of this passage is somewhat different from its construction in the original, the simplicity of which perhaps unfits it for English verse: the sentiment has been translated rather than the words, which are to this effect: "A Cloud is but an assemblage of smoke, fire, wind and water, how therefore should tidings be obtained from it by those who have life, and sensible organs. The Guhyaca from his excessive affliction not remembering this, addressed his suit to it; and verily, those pained with desire, are unable to discriminate animated from inanimate beings." The author has here with great ingenuity apologized for the whole plan of his poem, and attributed the apparent absurdity of talking rationally to a Cloud, to the state of the Yacsha's mind. The term Guhyaca which occurs in the original, is an appellative of the same celestial being who is understood by the word Yacsha explained above. It is severally derived by Etymologists from गुह् to conceal, गुह्य a disagreeable sound, or गुच्य a privity, because these beings are in charge of the treasures of CUVĒRA, emit unpleasant sounds, or are attached to sensual objects. A recent and superficial writer has derived it from गुच्य the podex, founded upon a legend cited in an Essay upon mount Caucasus, by Mr. WILFORD, Asiatic Researches, Vol. 6, which has no relation to the followers of CUVĒRA; and has asserted that the dark souls of men addicted in

And as to creatures sensible of pain,
 To lifeless nature, loves not to complain?)
 Due homage offered, and oblations made,
 The Yacsha thus the Cloud majestic prayed.

VERSE 35. And oblations made,] The oblation of the blossoms of the Cul'aja, (Nerium antidyentericum) is called Argha (अर्घ) in the original, a religious rite which seems to be analogous to the libation of the earlier periods of the Grecian ritual. अर्घ in the Amera Cōsha, is described as a species of worship, and is perhaps more properly the act of offering a libation to a venerable person, or to a deity, although it also implies the oblation itself, otherwise denominated अर्घ्य; this oblation, of which water forms the basis, is presented in a cup, a shell, or any metallic oblong and boat shaped vessel; the vessel in the spoken dialects is called by a similar name (ارگيا) Argha; indeed Mr. WILFORD states, Asiatic Researches, 3, 364, & 8, 274, that Argha in Sanscrit means a boat, whence he deduces the ship Argo, &c. and whence with Mr. BRYANT's assistance we may deduce the Ark of scripture: the Sanscrit word however has not been found in any of the vocabularies of the language with the import Mr. WILFORD has assigned to it.

The oblation called Argha or Arghya, generally considered, comprises eight articles, thus enumerated,

आपःशोरंकुशाग्राणिदधिसर्पिश्चन्द्रदाः । यवाःसिद्धार्थकञ्चैवअष्टाङ्गार्घ्यं प्रकीर्तितं ॥

"The eight-fold Arghya is formed of water, milk, the points of Cus'a grass, curds, clarified butter, rice, barley, and white mustard." In the A'chāra Ders'a of S'ridatta, in a passage quoted from the Dēvī Purāna, they are stated somewhat differently, thus,

रक्तविल्लाक्षैःपुष्यैर्दधिदूर्वाकुरैस्त्रिलैः । सामान्यःसर्वदेवानामर्घ्यपरिकीर्तितः ॥

Hail! friend of INDRA, counsellor divine,
Illustrious offspring of a glorious line;

जातं वशे भवनविदिते पुष्करवर्तकानाम्
जानामित्वां प्रकृतिपुरुषङ्गामरूपममघोनः ॥

Annotations.

“The general Argha proper for any of the gods consists of Saffron, the Bél, unbroken “grain, flowers, curds, Dúrva grass, Cusa grass, and Sesamum.” Water is not mentioned here, being considered as the vehicle of the whole: the same author adds, that should any of these not be procurable they may be supplied by the imagination,

अभावे दधिदूर्वादे मानसं वा द्रव्यं कल्पयेत् ॥

Besides the Argha common to all the Gods, there are peculiar ones for separate deities: thus we find a few new blown buds, are sufficient for a Cloud, and in the Saraswa Purána the Argha for the Sun is thus enumerated,

चन्द्रोदकसंमिश्रं दत्त्वा र्घ्यं कुसुमैः ॥

“Having presented an Arghya to the Sun of water mixed with sandal, and flowers,” and an oblation to the same planet as given by Mr. COLEBROOKE, Asiatic Researches, 5, 357; is said to consist of Tila, flowers, barley, water and red sanders. Water alone is also sufficient to constitute the Argha. In the articles which form the Argha of the Hindus, as well as in the mode of presentation, that of pouring it out or libating, we trace its analogy with the ancient libation; of course wine could never enter into Hindu offerings of this kind, but we find that the Greeks had their νηφάλια ιερὰ or sober sacrifices, from which wine was excluded: these were of four kinds; τὰ ὕδρῶσπονδα, libations of water, τὰ μελίσπονδα of honey, τὰ γαλακίσπονδα of milk, and τὰ ἐλαιῶσπονδα of oil; which liquors were sometimes mixed with one another. According to PORPHYRY most of the libations in the primitive times were νηφάλια. See POTTER's Antiquities of Greece. We have here then three of the four fluid substances of an Argha, as first enumerated above, if we may compare the clarified butter with the oil: honey would of course be omitted on the same account as wine, being a prohibited article in Hindu law: with respect to the solid parts of the offering, a reference to the same authority will shew, that they consisted of green herbs, grains, fruits, flowers and frankincense, analogous to the grasses, rice, barley, flowers, sandal, &c. of the Sanscrit formulæ.

VERSE 37. Hail! friend of INDRA] INDRA is the sovereign deity of Swerga, or the

Wearer of shapes at will; thy worth I know,
 And bold entrust thee with my fated woe; 40
 For better far solicitation fail,
 With high desert, than with the base prevail.

Hindu Olympus; the Cloud is here considered as his friend or counsellor, in allusion to his functions as regent of the atmosphere, where he appears in the character of the JUPITER tonans, or νεΦαληγερέτα Zeus; the appellative मघवन् used in the original, is considered by Etymologists as irregularly derived from the passive form of मह् to adore, to worship.

VERSE 38. Illustrious offspring of a glorious line.] According to the original, "Descended from the celebrated line of the Pushcarāvartacas," translated in a prose version of this passage, "Diluvian Clouds;" see COLEBROOKE, on Sanscrit and Pracrit prosody, Asiatic Researches, Vol. 10. Clouds, agreeably to the Brahmānda Purāna are divided into three classes according to their origin from fire, the breath of BRAHMA, or the wings of the mountains, which were cut off by INDRA (पञ्च). These latter are also called पुष्करवर्तक being especially the receptacles of water, thus in the Purāna Sarvaswa,

पुष्करनामतेर्मेघावृहत्सोयमत्सराः। पुष्करवर्तका स्नेनकारणेनेह शब्दिताः ॥

"The name Pushcarā is applied to those Clouds which are swollen with abundant water, and which are on that account termed Pushcarāvartaca, (or receptacles of that fluid)."

VERSE 39. Wearer of shapes at will] Or Camarupa from काम desire, and रूप form, shape; thus Socrates, in the Clouds.

Σω. Γίνονται πανθ' ὅτι ἂν βαλῶνται

Soc: Why then,

Clouds can assume what shapes they will, believe me.

CUMBERLAND'S Translation.

VERSE 40. For better far solicitation fail, &c.] This a sentiment of rather an original strain, and indicates considerable elevation of mind: something of the same kind occurs

Thou art the wretch's aid, affliction's friend!
 To me, unfortunate, thy succor lend; 44
 My lonely state compassionate behold,
 Who mourn the vengeance of the God of gold;
 Condemned amidst these dreary rocks to pine,
 And all I wish, and all I love resign. 48

VERSE 50. Where SIVA's crescent realms surrounding gilds.] The crest of SIVA is the new moon, which is sometimes described as forming a third eye in his forehead; the Himála mountains amongst which we shall hereafter find Caílāsā to be situated: are SIVA's favorite haunts; he also resides occasionally on that mountain, and is represented as the particular friend and frequent guest of CUVÉRA.

 There shalt thou find the partner of my woes,

 A painful life she leads, but still she lives,

Annotations.

VERSE 52. I have here taken a liberty with the order of the original, and brought the description of the Yacsha's wife a little in advance, in order to preserve the description which follows of the Cloud's progress more connected: the Hindu poets are not very solicitous in general about arrangement, but it is possible that in this case I may not have improved upon that of CALIDA'S. The 10th stanza of the Sanscrit corresponds with these lines.

VERSE 53. Alaca is the capital of CUVE'RA, and the residence of his dependant deities.

VERSE 56. And count the moments of the lingering year.]

Tempora si numeres bene quæ numeramus amantes. OVID.

Or count the time like those who faithful love.

VERSE 58. While hope it's aid invigorating gives.] Thus in the Tristia of OVID, 3. 3. 16.

Spesque tui nobis causa vigoris erit.

And hope in you shall be our cause of strength.

For female hearts, though fragile as the flower;
Are firm, when closed by hope's investing power. 60

Still as thou ridest on the friendly gale,
Shall widowed wives thy march advancing hail;
And all whom no tyrannic laws control,
Shall bless thy shadows, deepening as they roll: 64

Annotations.

VERSE 60. The thought is not explained much more fully in the original than in the translation, but the allusion is sufficiently obvious: the poet treating the heart as a flower, assigns to Hope the function of shutting up its petals, an office thus given by Dr. DARWIN to some of his, "Pellucid forms."

Guard the coy blossom from the pelting shower,
From each chill leaf the silvery drops repel,
And close the timorous floret's golden bell,
So should young Sympathy, &c. Botanical Garden.

VERSE 62. Shall widowed wives thy march advancing hail.] This refers to the circumstances mentioned above: Note on V. 20.

VERSE 63. And all whom no tyrannic laws control,] Or in the original, "Every one "who is not dependant as I am upon the will of another."

The gentle breeze shall fan thy stately way,
In sportive wreathes the Cranes around thee play;

कर्तुं यच्च प्रभवति महीमुच्छ्रितीं ध्रुतपत्रान्

Annotations.

VERSE 65. Nothing can be more beautifully harmonious than the original language of this stanza: the exact adaptation of sound to sense, is a school boy absurdity, founded upon the excessive admiration entertained by early scholars of the expressiveness of the Greek tongue, and is a thing which experiment does not verify: general notions are all that can be conveyed by mere sounds, and although the harshness, or softness of the lines, which describe the steady or clamorous march of the Greeks or Trojans, (see the opening of the third Book of HOMER'S Iliad), may convey some ideas of discipline or disorder, yet to those who are ignorant of the precise meaning of the words, they can convey even those ideas but very imperfectly; as far however as.

“The sound can be an echo to the sense,”

The present lines instance it very favorably; and the मद्मद्मद्नुदति &c. of the text proceeds as equably and as smoothly as the gentle breeze which it describes.

VERSE 66. Valáca, (बलाका) is said in Mr. COLEBROOKE'S Amera Cōsha, to mean a small Crane; the word is always feminine, and perhaps therefore means the female bird only; indeed some of the Commentators on this poem call it the female of the Vaca, (वक्) Ardea Torra and Putea; the rainy season is that of their gestation, which explains their attachment to the Cloud, and the allusion to its impregnating faculty mentioned in the text of the original, गर्भाधानश्चमपरिचयं—The periodical journies and orderly flight of this kind of bird, have long furnished classical poetry with embellishments; they are frequently alluded to by HOMER, as are the wild geese, of which mention is also made below:—thus in the passage of the Iliad, referred to in the preceding note, and again, B. 2. 459.

Ἰῶν δ', ὥστ' ὄρνιθων πετεηνῶν ἔθνεα πολλὰ,

Χηνῶν, ἢ γεράνων, ἢ κύνων δουλιχοδείρων,

Ἄσιω ἐν λειμῶνι, Καύστρου ἀμφὶ βέεθρα

Not less their number than th' embodied cranes,

Or milk white swans in Asia's watery plains,

That o'er the windings of Cayster's springs,

Stretch their long necks and clap their rustling wings. · POPE.

Pleased on thy left the Chátaca along,
Pursue thy path, and cheer it with his song;

68

तच्छ्रुत्वा तेश्च वणशुभगङ्गर्जितम्मानसोक्ताः ॥

Annotations.

The translator has omitted the geese. MILTON also describes the flight of these birds,
So steers the prudent Crane,
Her annual voyage borne on winds.
Paradise Lost, 7. 436.

And again line 442.

Others on silver lakes and rivers bathed,
Their downy breast,
Yet oft they quit,
The dank, and rising on stiff penons tower,
The mid aerial sky.

VERSE 67. The Chátaca is a bird supposed to drink no water but rain water; of course he always makes a prominent figure in the description of wet or cloudy weather; thus in the rainy season of our author's, (ऋतुसंहार) Ritu Sanhára or assemblage of seasons.

दृषाकुलैश्चानकपक्षिणांकुलैः । प्रयाचितस्योयभरवलम्बिनः ॥
प्रयान्तिमन्दंनववारिधरिणः । वलाहकाः श्रोत्रमनोहरस्वनाः ॥
The thirsty Chátaca impatient eyes,
The promised waters of the laboring skies;
Where heavy Clouds with low but pleasing song,
In slow procession murmuring move along.

In the translated Amera Cósha, it appears that the Chátaca is a bird not yet well known, but that it is possibly the same as the Pipiha, a kind of cuckoo, (Cuculus radiatus). The term वाम is rendered by the Commentators in general left, on the left side, but RÁMANA'T'H TURCALANCA'RA interprets it beautiful, and maintains that the cry of birds to be auspicious should be upon the right side, not upon the left; BHARATA MALLICA however cites astrological writers to prove, that the Chátaca is one of the exceptions to this rule.

वर्हिणश्चानकाश्चाषायेचंपुंसङ्गिनाः खगाः । मृगावा वामगाहृष्टाः सैन्यसम्पत्त्वलप्रदाः ॥
“Peacocks, Chátacas, Chashas, (blue jays) and other male birds, occasionally also Anti-

Annotations.

“lopes, going cheerfully along the left, give good fortune to the host.” The Greek notions agreed with those of RA'MANA'T'H and considered the flight of birds upon the right side to be auspicious, the Romans made it the left, but this difference arose from the situation of the observer, as in both cases the auspicious quarter was the east; the αιωνοπολος facing the north and Aruspex the south: in general, according to the Hindus, those omens which occur upon the left side are unpropitious. The musical accompaniment described in the text is perfectly classical, thus VIRGIL speaking of the birds has,

Variae circumque supraque

Æthera mulcebant cantu.

Around, above, the birds of various kind,
 Charmed all the air with song.

Æneid 7. 32.

VERSE 71. “The Rājahansas desirous of going to the lake Mānasa, shall accompany thee as far as Cailāsa, having laid in their provisions for the road, from the new shoots of the filaments of the stalk of the lotus;” This is the closer reading of the text. The Rājahansa, is described as a white Gander with red legs and bill, and together with the common Goose is a favorite bird in Hindu poetry: not to shock European prejudice, I have in all cases substituted for these birds, one to which we are rather more accustomed in verse, the Swan; which however owes its dignity to the idle fable of its musical death: the motion of the goose is supposed by the Hindus, to resemble the shuffling walk which they esteem graceful in a woman, thus in the Ritu Sanhāra, or the Seasons, of our poet,

हसैर्जितासुललितागतिरङ्गनानाम्

Nor with the goose the smiling fair,
 In graceful motion can compare,

Short be thy greeting to this hill addressed ;
 This hill with RĀMA's holy feet imprest ;
 Thy ancient friend, whose scorching sorrows mourn,
 Thy frequent absence, and delayed return.

Annotations.

Mount Cailāsa is the destination of the Cloud, and the Rājahansas are supposed to migrate annually to the celebrated lake Mānasa or Manasarour, which if it exists at all, lies in the bosom of the Himālaya mountains, the supposed situation of the mythological Cailāsa.

VERSE 73. The term आपृच्छस्व in the original does not seem to convey any very precise idea : if translated "ask," or "address," both which meanings may be affixed to it, is still leaves us in the dark as to the object of the address, or enquiry : one commentator explains it "ask the way," but this the Yacsha is to tell, not the mountain ; the others seem to agree that it means to address, that is perhaps to take leave of it &c. previous to its departure ; the cause of the friendship supposed to exist between the Cloud and mountain we shall have further occasion to notice.

VERSE 74. With RĀMAS holy feet imprest.] In the original text we have, "marked " with the venerable feet of RĀGHUPATI." This appellation is given to RĀMA, as the most distinguished, the lord or master as it were, of the line of RĀGHU, an ancestor of that warrior and himself a celebrated hero and sovereign. RĀMA is hence also termed RĀGHAVA, (रघव) a regular derivative from RĀGHU, implying family descent ; the exploits of the two heroes form the chief subject of another poem by our author entitled Raghuvansā, (रघुवंश) or the race of RĀGHU. The Commentator Bharata Mallica has taken much pains with the word पदैः which occurs in the original and which being in the plural number he is apprehensive may be translated "with many feet," he there-

Yet ere thy ear can drink what love inspires,
 The lengthened way my guiding aid requires;
 Oft on whose path, full many a lofty hill,
 Shall ease thy toils, and many a cooling rill;

fore cites Médini to shew that it may have other senses, and that it also implies the mark of a foot, or a mark, an impression in general, and that consequently we may render the passage “the hill whose sides are marked with many traces of RAMA, or, with many “impressions of his feet.”

VERSE 77. To drink with the ear is a figurative expression, common in English and classical writers. Thus SHAKESPEARE.

My ear hath not yet drunk a hundred words,
 Of that tongue's utterance, yet I know the sound.

ROMEO and JULIET.

And Horace in the 13th Ode of the 2d Book.

*Pugnas et exactos tyrannos,
 Densum humeris bibit aure vulgus.*
 But thronging crowds will press to hear,
 And drink the strain with eager ear,
 That tells of bloody fight, or sings;
 The downfall of tyrannic kings.

VERSE 80. In the construction of the text of the original, a pleasing artifice occurs, of which Hindu poets are in the frequent use; the repetition of the same word in order to increase its force, and heighten its effect, thus we have above, खिन्नः खिन्नः and क्षीणः क्षीणः or “weary, weary; feeble, feeble; you may repose, &c.” In no language perhaps has this figure been carried farther than in the English, and it may be a question whether in the well known,

Rise from these streams and seek the upper sky;
 Then to the north with daring pinions fly:
 The beauteous Sylphs shall mark thee with amaze,
 As backward bent thou strik'st their upward gaze,

we may not be justified in saying, "something too much of this." A fine instance of the figure occurs in HORACE's masterly Ode.—Justum et Tenacem, &c.

Ilion, Ilion.

*Fatalis incestusque judex,
 Et mulier peregrina vertit in pulverem.*
 The stanger Harlot, and the judge unjust,
 Have levelled Ilion, Ilion, with the dust.

VERSE 81. We now begin the geographical part of the Poem, which as far as it can be made out through the difference of ancient and modern appellations, seems to be very accurately conceived; the two extreme points of the Cloud's progress are the vicinity of Nagpur, as mentioned in the note on Verse 1, and the mountain Cailása, or rather the Himálaya range. During this course the poet notices some of the most celebrated places, with the greater number of which we are still acquainted. In the first instance we have here his direction due north from the mountain of Rámagiri; and we shall notice the other points as they occur.

VERSE 83. Literally the wives of the Sidd'has; the Sidd'has are originally human beings, but who by devout abstraction have attained superhuman powers, and a station apparently intermediate between men and Gods: they tenant the upper regions of the air.

In doubt if by the gale abruptly torn,
 Some mountain peak along the air is borne:
 The ponderous Elephants who prop the skies,
 Shall view thy form expansive with surprize;
 Now first their arrogance exchanged for shame,
 Lost in thy bulk their long unrivalled fame.

VERSE 86. Some mountain peak along the air is borne.] Thus LUCRETIVS, 4, 140.

*Interdum magni montes avulsaque saxa,
 Montibus anteire and so'em subcedere propter.*

Mountains hence, ⁴⁵

And mountain rocks torn from their base abrupt,
 Seem oft to hover, blotting now the sun.

Good's translation. Also, B. 6. 188:

*Quum montibus adsimilata,
 Nubila portabunt venti transversa per auras,
 For mark what Clouds of mountain bulk the winds,*

Drive through the welkin when the tempests rave. Ibid.

VERSE 87. Each of the four quarters, and the four intermediate points of the compass, has according to the Hindus, a regent or presiding deity; each of these deities also has his male and female elephant; the names of them all are enumerated in the Amera Cōsha: see Mr. COLEBROOKE'S translation.

Eastward where various gems with blending ray,
 In INDRA'S bow o'er yonder hillock play, 92
 And on thy shadowy form such radiance shed,
 As Peacock's plumes around a CRISHNA spread,
 Direct thy course; to Mālas smiling ground,
 Where fragrant tillage breathes the fields around; 96

Annotations.

VERSE 91. A reference to the map will shew, that it was necessary for the Cloud to begin the tour by travelling towards the east, in order to get round the lofty hills which in a manner form the eastern boundary of the Vindhya chain. It would otherwise have been requisite to have taken it across the most inaccessible part of those mountains, where the poet could not have accompanied it, and which would also have offended some peculiar notions entertained by the Hindus of the Vindhya hills, as we shall again have occasion to remark.

VERSE 92. INDRA'S bow is the Rain-bow.

VERSE 93. The body of CRISHNA is represented of a dark blue color, and the plumes of the peacock are frequently arranged upon the images of this deity: the plumage of this bird has been often compared to the Rain-bow; thus MILTON in the 7th Book, line 445, of Paradise lost.

Whose gay train,
 Adorns him colored, with the florid hue,
 Of Rain-bows, and starry eyes.

The color of the Cloud, and that of the deity being similar, we thus have a very close and pleasing comparison.

VERSE 95. It is not easy after the lapse of ages to ascertain precisely the scite of several places enumerated in the poem before us. The easterly progress of the Cloud,

Thy fertile gifts, which looks of love reward,
Where bright-eyed Peasants tread the verdant sward.

Thence sailing north and veering to the west,
On Amracútas lofty ridges rest;

and the subsequent direction by which he is to reach the mountain Amracúta, prove that the place here mentioned must be somewhere in the immediate vicinity of Ruttunpour, the chief town of the northern half of the province of Cheteesger'h, and described in Captain BLUNT's tour, Asiatic Researches, Vol. 7, and also in that of the intelligent though anonymous traveller, in the Asiatic Annual Register, for 1806. The only modern traces that can be found of it are in a place called Malda, a little to the north of Ruttunpour. In PROLEMY's map there is a town called Maleta, and situated with respect to the Vindhya mountains, similarly with the Mála of our poet. I should have supposed that the Mála mentioned from the geography of the Puráñas by Mr. WILFORD, (Asiatic Researches, 8, 336), was the same with the place alluded to in the text of CALIDAS: if however that gentleman is correct in applying the name to the Malbhoom of Midnapoor, it will be much farther to the east than will do for our present purpose, and must be an entirely different place. There is little reason to think that either of these Málas are the country of the Malli who are mentioned by PLINY, and who are more probably the same with the Μαλλοι of Arrian, and the inhabitants as is stated by Major RENNELL of the province of Multan.

VERSE 100. The course pointed out to the Cloud, and an allusion which follows to the vicinity of the Narmada river, furnish us with reasons for supposing, that the mountain here mentioned, is that more commonly designated by the name of Omercuntuc. The change of sound is not more violent, than it is in a number of evident corruptions

Oft have thy showers the mountain's flames allayed,
 Then fear not wearied to demand its aid;
 Not e'en the vilest, when a falling friend,
 Solicits help it once was his to lend,
 The aid that gratitude exacts denies;
 Much less the virtuous shall the claim despise.

from the Sanscrit language, now current in the dialects of India. The term Ámracúta means the Mango Peak, and refers to the abundance of Mango trees in the incumbent and surrounding forests. Should this conjecture be correct, it will invalidate the derivation assigned with some ingenuity to the word Omercuntuc, in a prefatory note to a pleasing little oriental poem, published in England, called the Metamorphosis of Sona. The author of that note imagines the proper name to be Omer C'handaca, and he is happy in the affinity of the sound, though not in his definition of the sense, as "the district of Omer," is exceedingly unmeaning, and erroneous. Amera C'handaca might mean the "immortal portion," but I do not know of any reason for assigning such an epithet to the mountain in question.

VERSE 103. The Hindus have been the object of much idle panegyric, and equally idle detraction; some writers have invested them with every amiable attribute, and they have been deprived by others of the common virtues of humanity. Amongst the excellencies denied to them, gratitude has been always particularized, and there are many of the European residents in India, who scarcely imagine that the natives of the country ever heard of such a sentiment. To them, and to all detractors on this head, the above verse is a satisfactory reply, and that no doubt of its tenor may remain, I add the literal.

When o'er the wooded mountain's towering head,
 Thy hovering shades like flowing tresses spread; 108
 Its form shall shine with charms unknown before,
 That heavenly hosts may gaze at, and adore;
 This earth's round breast; bright swelling from the ground,
 And with thy orb as with a nipple crowned. 112

Next bending down-wards from thy lofty flight,
 On Chitracūṭa's humbler peak alight;

and part of the same range; the name signifies, "the variegated or wonderful peak," and is applied to a number of hills; the most famous hill of this name, as was mentioned in the first note, is situated in Bendel c'hand.

VERSE 119. The Vind'hya range of mountains holds a very distinguished station both in the mythology and geography of Hindoostan, these points are both discussed at some length in the tour from Mirzapore to Nagpore, already cited, and as in those passages which I have been able to investigate, I find a perfectly accurate statement, I shall here transcribe the words of its author.

"Bind'h, in Sanscrit named Vind'hya, constitutes the limit between Hindoostan and the Deccan, the most ancient Hindu authors assign it as the southern boundary of the region, which they denominate Aryabhuma or Aryaverta. Modern authors, in like manner make this the line which discriminates the northern from the southern nations of India. It reaches almost from the eastern to the western sea: and the highest part of the range, deviates little from the line of the tropic. The mountainous tract, however, which retains the appellation, spreads much more widely; It meets the Ganges, in several places towards the north; and the Godaveri is held to be its southern limit.

 The royal elephant's rich trappings show,
 Arduous she winds, and next through beds of flowers,
 She wins her way, and washes Jambu bowers; 124

Sanscrit etymologists deduce its name from a circumstance to which I have just now alluded; it is called Bind'hya, says the author of a Commentary on the Amercosh, because people think (ध्यायन्ति) the progress of the sun is obstructed (बन्ध) by it; suitably to this notion, the most elevated ridge of this tropical range of mountains is found to run from a point, that lies between Chhota Nagpore, and Palamu, to another that is situated in the vicinity of Ougein. But the course of the Nermada river better indicates the direction of the principal range of the Vind'h hills. From Amracuta, where this river has its source, on the same spot with the Sone, and the Hatsu, to the gulf of Cambaya, where it disembogues itself into the sea, the channel of the Nermada is confined by a range of hills, or by a tract of elevated ground, in which numerous rivers take their rise; and by their subsequent course towards the Sone and Jamuna on one side, and towards the Tapti and Oodaver on the other; sufficiently indicate the superior elevation of that tract through which the Nermada has forced its way.

The vast extent of this mountainous tract, contrasted with the small elevation of these hills, viewed from the plains of Hindoostan, has furnished grounds for a legend, to which the mythological writings of the Hindus often allude; Vind'hya having once prostrated himself before his spiritual guide, AGASTYA, still remains in that posture by command of the holy personage. This humiliation is the punishment of his presumption in emulating the lofty height of Himálaya and Meru. According to this legend, Vind'hya has one foot at Chunar: and hence the real name of that fortress is said to be Cherenadri, (चरणाद्रि) his other foot is, I think placed, by the same legend, in the vicinity of Gaya: the vulgar, very inconsistently, suppose the head of the prostrate mountain, near the temple of Vind'hya Vasini, four miles from Mirzapore."

VERSE 120. The Réva is a name of the Nermada river, which as we have seen in

Here the soft dews thy path has lost resume,
 And sip the gelid current's rich perfume,
 Where the wild Elephant delights to shed,
 The juice exuding fragrant from his head;
 Then swift proceed, nor shall the blast have force,
 To check with empty gusts thy ponderous course.

the preceding note, rises from the mountain Amracūt'a or Omercuntuc. It may be here observed that the rivers are always personified by the Hindus, and are in general female personifications. Thus we have GANGA' the daughter of JA'HNU, YAMUNA, the daughter of the Sun, and Revá or Nermáda' the daughter of Himála, as is said in the hymn, translated from the Vayu Purána', and given by Captain BLUNT, Asiatic Researches, 7, 103. The names of the Nermada river are thus stated in the Amera Cosha,

रैवानुनर्मदासोमोद्भवामेकलकन्यका

“Réva, Nermada', Sómódbhava' and Mecala-Canyaca'” which are explained by the best Commentators, thus, “who flows, who delights, who is descended from the line of the moon, and who is the daughter of Mecala;” the last term is applied either to the Vind'hya mountain, or is considered to be the name of a Rishi or saint, and progenitor of the river Goddess. Tradition has assigned to this river a very Ovidian kind of tale, which is related in Captain BLUNT's tour, and which has been repeated in verse, with much elegance and spirit, by the author of the Metamorphosis of Sona.

of rut, should have been unnoticed by writers on natural history. I have not found any mention of it in the works of BUFFON, nor in the more recent publication of SHAW; neither do any other writers on this subject seem to have observed it: the author of the Wild sports of the East states that "on each side of the elephant's temples there is an aperture about the size of a pin's head, whence an ichor exudes;" but he does not appear to have been aware of its nature; indeed his descriptions though entertaining are frequently defective, owing to his extreme ignorance of the languages, the literature of which he so liberally devotes to the flames: in the Amera Cōsha this fluid is termed मद्: and दानं and the elephant while it flows is distinguished by the terms प्रभिन्ने गज्जिनीमत्तः from the animal out of rut, or after the juice has ceased to exude, and who is then called उद्धानः or निर्मद्: all these names are expressive of the circumstances; the exudation and fragrance of this fluid is frequently alluded to in Sanscrit poetry; it's scent is commonly compared to the odor of the sweetest flowers and is then supposed to deceive and attract the bees: these circumstances occur in this passage from a work already referred to, the Ritu Sanhāra,

Respectful Demigods shall curious count,
 The chattering Storks in lengthening order mount;
 Shall mark the Chátacas who in thy train,
 Expect impatiently the dropping rain: 140

And when thy muttering thunders speak thee near,
 Shall clasp their brides half extasy, half fear.

 Nor flowery plain persuade prolonged delight?

VERSE 147. Or can the Peacock's animated hail.] The wild peacock is exceedingly abundant in many parts of Hindoostan, and is especially found in marshy places; the habits of this bird are in a great measure aquatic, and the setting in of the rains is the season in which they pair; the peacock is therefore always introduced in the description of cloudy or rainy weather, together with the Cranes and Chatacas, whom we have already had occasion to notice. Thus in a little poem descriptive of the rainy season, &c. entitled Ghatacarpara, (घटकर्पर) the author says, addressing his mistress,

नवाभ्रमत्ताःशिखिनोदन्तिमेघागमेकुट्टसमानदन्ति ॥

Oh thou whose teeth enamelled vie,

With smiling Cunda's pearly ray;

Hear how the Peacock's amorous cry,

Salutes the dark and cloudy day.

And again in one of the Satacas or Centos of BHARTRI HARI, where he is describing the same season,

शिखिकुलकलकेकाएवरम्यावनान्ताः। सुखिनमसुखिनन्वास्वमुत्तरण्यन्ति ॥

When smiling forests whence the tuneful cries,

Of clustering pea fowls shrill and frequent rise,

Teach tender feelings to each human breast,

And please alike the happy or distressed.

Lo! where awhile the Swans reluctant cower,
Dasárna's fields await the coming shower:
 Then shall their groves diffuse profounder gloom,
 And brighter buds the deepening shade illumine: 152
 Then shall the ancient tree whose branches wear,
 The marks of village reverence and care,
 Shake through each leaf, as birds profanely wrest,
 The venerend boughs to form the rising nest. 156

VERSE 150. Dasarna's fields await the coming shower.] No traces of this name are to be found in modern maps; it is enumerated in Major WILFORD's lists from the Puranas, Asiatic Researches, Vol. 8, amongst the countries situated behind the Vindhya mountains, and corresponds according to him with the Dosarene of Ptolemy and the Periplus; Ptolemy's map has also a Dosara and Dosaronis Pluvium, and in the Pauranic list of rivers, there is also a Dosarna river, which is said to rise from the mountain Chitracūta. It may possibly correspond at least in part with the modern district of Cheteesger'h, as the etymology of both words refers to similar circumstances: Cheteesger'h is so named from its being supposed to comprise Thirty-six forts, and according to BHARATA, the Commentator on our text, Dasarna is derived from Dasa, (दश) Ten, and Rīna (रिण), a strong hold or DURGA, the Droog of the Peninsula, and thence means the district of the Ten-citadels.

VERSE 153. Then shall the ancient tree, &c.] A number of trees receive particular veneration from the Hindus, as the Indian fig, the Holy fig tree, the Myrobalan trees, &c. In most villages there is at least one of these which is considered particularly sacred, and is carefully kept and watered by the villagers, is hung occasionally with garlands, and receives the Pranām or veneratory inclination of the head, or even offerings and libations. The birds mentioned in the text by the epithet गृहवलिभुज् are the Vacas or Cranes; the term signifies, "who eats the food of his female," गृह् commonly a house, meaning in this compound a wife; at the season of pairing it is said, that the female of this bird assists in feeding the male, and the same circumstance is stated with respect to the crow, and the sparrow, whence the same epithet is applied to them also.

VERSE 157. Where royal Vidisa confers renown.] Vidisa is described as the capital of the district of Dasārṇā. It appears to be the modern Bhilsah in the province of Malwa. It is still a place of some note, and is well known in India for the superior quality of the Tobacco raised in its vicinity.

VERSE 159. The VÉTRAVATI is the modern Betwah; it rises on the north side of the Vind'hya chain, and pursuing a north easterly course of 340 miles, traverses the province of Malwa, and the south-west corner of Allahabad and falls into the Jumna below Calpee; in the early part of its course it passes through Bhilsa or Vidisa.

VERSE 163. Next o'er the lesser hills thy flight suspend.] The term in the text नीचैरख्यङ्गिरि is explained by the Commentators, to signify either the hill named Nichais; a mountainous range of little note; or, of little elevation. It is of no great moment but perhaps the latter, which meaning we select, is the most satisfactory.

VERSE 164. And growth erect to drooping flowrets lend.] This passage more literally rendered is "that hill which with upright flowers is like the body with its hair on end;" the erection of the hairs of the body is with the Hindus constantly supposed to be the effect of pleasure or delight.

VERSE 167. On Naga Nadi's banks.] Some of the Commentators notice various readings of the name of this river, which occurs as given in the translation Naganadi, (नगनदी) the mountain stream; Nava Nadi, (नवनदी) the new river; and Vananadi, (वननदी) the forest river. It is probably one amongst a number of small streams falling from the Vind'hya range of hills, and indeed the whole province of Malwa abounds in water, so that as is stated in the Ayeen Acbery, "you cannot travel two or three cose, without meeting with streams of good water, whose banks are shaded by the wild willow and other trees, and decorated with the hyacinth and other beautiful and odoriferous flowers." GLADWIN'S translation, Vol. 2. I have given the preference to the Naga Nadi as above, from finding a river west of the Betwah, which we have crossed, named the Parbatty, and which rising in the Vind'hya chain runs north-west, till it joins another called in ARROWSMITH'S map the Sepra, and the two together fall into the Chumbul: the word Parbatty or Parvali means sprung from the mountains, and Naga Nadi, as I have mentioned, bears a similar import; so that they possibly are synonymes of the same stream.

VERSE 171. As while the garland's flowery stores they seek.] The use of garlands in the decoration of the houses and temples of the Hindus, and of flowers in their offerings and festivals, furnishes employment to a particular tribe or cast, the Málacáras or wreath makers; the females of this cast are here alluded to.

VERSE 177. Ujayini, or the modern Oujain, is supposed to have been the residence of our poet, and the capital of his celebrated patron VICRAMĀDITYA ; few cities perhaps can boast of a more continuous reputation, as it has been a place of great note from the earliest periods of Hindu tradition, down to the present day. It is now in the possession of the family of Sindiah, and is the capital of his territories. A full and highly interesting account of it is to be found in the sixth Volume of the Asiatic Researches, in the narrative of a journey from Agra to this city by the late Dr. HUNTER ; a gentleman, the activity of whose mind was only equalled by the accuracy of his judgement, and the extensiveness of whose acquirements was only paralleled by the unwearied continuance of his exertions. His recent death has inflicted a severe blow upon literature in general, and particularly upon the literature of the east.

VERSE 179. Those lightning looks unseen.] Thus Tasso speaking of Clorinda
Lampeggiar gli occhi e folgorar gli sguardi
Keen flash her eyes, her looks like lightning glow.

VERSE 180. Dark are thy days.] The expression of the poet is simply “if you do not enjoy the glances, &c. you are defrauded,” (वच्चितोसि) and the Commentators explain it by adding, “of the object of your life.” That is, if you have not seen these beauties, you might as well have been blind, or not have existed at all; this compliment is rather hyperbolic but we are acquainted with it in Europe, and the Italian proverb, “He who has not seen Rome has not seen any thing” conveys a similar idea.

VERSE 182. Famed Nirvind'hya leads.] This stream has not been found by name in the maps, but a number of small rivers occur between the Parbatty, and the river mentioned below, the Sipra, one of which must be the Nirvind'hya of the poet: the four following lines descriptive of the female personification of the current are englished, rather with respect to the sense, than the words, the plainness of which might perhaps offend European fastidiousness. There is not however any one of CALIDA'SA'S river ladies who behaves so indecorously as several of Drayton's similar personifications, and there is not one of them possessed of speech at all, to say nothing of such speech as is made use of by the Hayle, and other like "lusty nymphs;" of that author's Poly-olbion.

are not acquainted by name; as however it is the nearest river to Oujein, it may probably be the same with that now called Ságunnuttee; the river having been diminished by the preceding hot weather, the poet compares it to a long single braid of hair, and conformably to the personification of it as a female, he supposes the braid to have been bound in consequence of the absence of the Cloud, after the fashion in which the hair is worn by those women whose husbands are absent: a custom we shall again be called upon to notice.

residence of the learned," the story of UDAYANA, or VATSARA'JA, as he is also named, is thus told concisely, by the Commentators on the poem: PRADYÔTA was a sovereign of Oujein, who had a daughter named VA'SAVADATTĀ, and whom he intended to bestow in marriage upon a king of the name of SANJAYA. In the mean time the princess sees the figure of VATSARA'JA sovereign of Cusha Dwipa in a dream, and becomes enamoured of him; she contrives to inform him of her love, and he carries her off from her father and his rival. The same story is alluded to in the Malati Madhava, a Drama by BHAVABHŪTI, but neither in that nor in the Commentary on the Mégha Duta, is mention made of the author, or of the work in which it is related. Mr. COLEBROOKE in his learned Essay on Sanscrit, and Pracrit Prosody, in the 10th Volume of the Asiatic Researches, has stated that the allusion by BHAVABHŪTI was unsupported by other authority, not having perhaps noticed the similar allusion in this poem. He has also given an abstract of the Vásavadattā of SUBAND'HU; a tale which corresponds in many points with that of UDAYANA as here explained.

VERSE 200. The only recompense then left to heaven.] To understand this properly it is necessary to be acquainted with some of the Hindu notions regarding a future state. The highest kind of happiness is absorption into the divine essence, or the return of that portion of spirit which is combined with the attributes of humanity, to its original source. This happiness according to the Philosopher is to be attained only by the most perfect abstraction from the world, and freedom from passion even while in a state of terrestrial existence, but there are certain places, which in the popular creed are invested with so much sanctity, as to entitle all who die within their precincts, to final absorption or annihilation; one of these is Oujein or Avanti, and they are all enumerated in this verse.

“Ayodhyá, Mat'hurá, Máyá, Cás í, Cánchí, Avanticá, and the city Dwáráratí, are the “seven places which grant eternal happiness.”

Besides this ultimate felicity the Hindus have several minor degrees of happiness, amongst which is the enjoyment of INDRA's Swerga or in fact of a MOHUMMEDAN paradise. The degree and duration of the pleasures of this paradise are proportioned to the merits of those admitted to it, and “they, who have enjoyed this lofty region of Swerga, but whose virtue is exhausted, revisit the habitation of mortals.” the case now alluded to seems however to be something different from that so described by Sir Wm. JONES; it appears by the explanation of the Commentators, that the exhausted pleasures of Swerga, had proved insufficient for the recompence of certain acts of austerity, which however were not such as to merit final emancipation; the divine persons had therefore to seek elsewhere for the balance of their reward, and for that purpose they returned to earth bringing with them the fairest portion of Swerga, in which they continued to live in the discharge of pious duties, till the whole account was settled, and their liberated spirits were reunited with the great, uniform, and primeval essence. The portion of Swerga thus brought to earth was the city Avanti, whose superior sanctity and divine privileges are here alluded to, and thus explained by the poet.

VERSE 201. There as the early Zephyrs waft along.] So in Paradise lost, 4, 611.

Sweet is the breath of morn, her rising sweet,
 With charm of earliest birds.

And again in Samson Agonistes.

The breath of heaven fresh blowing, pure and sweet,
 With day spring born.

With friendly zeal they sport around the maid,
 Who early courts their vivifying aid,
 And cool from Sipra's gelid waves embrace,
 Each languid limb, and enervated grace. 208

Here should thy spirit with thy toils decay,
 Rest from the labors of the wearying way,
 Round every house the flowery fragrance spreads;
 O'er every floor the painted footstep treads; 212

VERSE 207. The Sipra is the river upon the banks of which Oujein stands, and which is called Sipparali in the maps. In ARROWSMITH however there is another stream with a similar name, the Sipra, which appears to be a continuation of the Sagarmuttee, considerably to the north-east of Oujein; there can be no doubt of the position of the river mentioned by the poet.

VERSE 212. The painted footstep.] Staining the soles of the feet with a red color derived from the Mehndee, the Lac, &c. is a favorite practice of the Hindu toilet; it is thus elegantly alluded to in the ode to one of the female personifications of music, the Ragini ASAUVEREE.

The rose hath humbly bowed to meet,
 With glowing lips her hallowed feet,
 And lent them all its bloom.

Hindu odes by JOHN DAVID PATERSON, Esq. published in the new series of GLADWIN'S Oriental Miscellany, Calcutta.

Breathed through each casement, swell the scented air

Soft odors shaken from dishevelled hair ;

Pleased on each terrace dancing with delight,

The friendly Peacock hails thy grateful flight : 216

All that restores the frame, or cheers the mind,

Hence with new zeal to SIVA homage pay,

VERSE 220. The God whom earth and heaven, and hell obey.] Lord of the three worlds is the expression of the original text, the worlds are Swerga or heaven, Patala or hell, and Bhūmi or the earth.

VERSE 222. With awe in thee the same celestial hue.] The dark blue of the Cloud is compared to the color of the neck of SIVA, which became of this hue, upon his swallowing the poison produced at the churning of the ocean; the story is thus related in WILKINS's translation, of an episode of the Mahabhārat, affixed to his Bhāgavat

Soft through the rustling grove the fragrant gale,
 Shall sweets from Gand'havati's fount exhale; 224
 Where with rich dust the lotus blossoms teem,

"As they continued to churn the ocean more than enough, that deadly poison issued from its bed, burning like a raging fire, whose dreadful fumes in a moment spread throughout the world, confounding the three regions of the universe with its mortal stench, untill SEEV at the word of BRAHMA swallowed the fatal drug to save mankind, which remaining in the throat of that sovereign Dew of magic form, from that time he was called NEEL-KANT because his throat was stained blue."

VERSE 228. Till evening brings its sacred ritual rest.] There are three daily and essential ceremonies performed by the Brahmans termed Sand'hya, (सन्ध्या) either from the word Sand'hi, (सन्धि) junction, because they take place at the joinings of the day as it were, that is, at dawn, noon, and twilight, or as the term is otherwise derived from (सम्) with, and (ध्या) to meditate religiously. When the ceremonies of the Sand'hya are of a public nature they comprehend the ringing of bells, blowing the Conch, beating a tabor &c. and this kind of sound the Cloud is directed by the Yacsha to excite as an act of devotion.

Then reap the recompense of holy prayer,

VERSE 231. They who in SIVA's fane the measure tread.] The female attendants upon the idol.

VERSE 234. The gorgeous Chowrie.] The Chowrie or more properly Chounri, (چونري) is a brush of Peacock's feathers, or the tail of a particular kind of Cow, &c. set in a handle of such materials as suit the fancy, or the means of the proprietor; it is used as a fan, or to whisk off flies and other insects, and this piece of attention is always paid by the Hindus to the figures of their gods.

VERSE 236. Whose glances gleam like bees along the sky.] Although this allusion may be new to European imagery, it is just and pleasing; the consequence of the glance is well conveyed by the sting of the bee, while its poetically radiating nature is not unaptly compared to the long flight of a line of these insects: the lengthened light of a glance is familiar to us, for SHAKESPEARE speaks of, "Eyes streaming through the airy region," and the continuous flight of bees was noticed so long back as the time of HOMER, who describes them as proceeding in branches, a circumstance which his translator POPE has omitted.

Βολυδοὺν δὲ πετοῦσαι ἐπ' ἀνθεσιν εἰαρινῶϊσιν

Branching they fly abroad o'er vernal flowers,

Or as in POPE,

Clustering in heaps on heaps the driving bees, &c.

Etymologists might find a resemblance here between the Greek (πετοῦσαι) and the Sanscrit (पतन्ति) Patanti, they go, fall, or alight.

VERSE 238. And soothe their tender feet.] It is to be recollected that these ladies are dancing bare-footed. Divesting the feet of the shoes upon entering an apartment being a mark of reverence or respect exacted by oriental arrogance, and readily paid by oriental servility.

VERSE 239. BHAVANI shall herself approve.] BHAVANI is one of the many names of the consort of SIVA; the reason of her satisfaction, and indeed the whole of this passage, although familiar to a Hindu and although much amplified in the translation,

For at his shoulders like a dusky robe,
 Mantling impends thy vast and shadowy globe :
 Where ample forests, stretched it's skirts below,
 Projecting trees like dangling limbs bestow ; 218
 And vermil roses fiercely blooming shed,
 Their rich reflected glow, their blood-resembling red.

requires a little explanation to be rendered intelligible to the English reader. SIVA is supposed to be dancing at the performance of the evening Sand'hya and to have assumed as his cloak the bloody skin of an elephant formerly belonging to an Asur destroyed by him ; as this is no very seemly ornament, BHAVANI is delighted to find it supplied by the Cloud which being of a dusky red, through the reflexion of the China roses now abundant, and being skirted, as it overhangs a forest, by the projecting branches of trees, resembles the elephant hide in color and it's dangling limbs, as well as in it's bulk, and is mistaken for it by SIVA in his religious enthusiasm ; the office performed by the Cloud has often been assigned to it in the west, thus HORACE Ode 2, Book 1,

*Nube candentes humeros amictus,
 Augur APOLLO.*

Or come APOLLO versed in fate, and shroud,
 Thy shining shoulders with a veiling Cloud.

So MILTON in his Penseroso speaking of the morning describes it as,
 " Kerchiefed in a comely Cloud.

LEE invests sentiments of the mind with a similar garb and has,
 For true repentance never comes too late,
 As soon as born she makes herself a shroud,
 The weeping mantle of a fleecy Cloud.

And a Poet of later day, but of no inferior name has made a very fine use of this figure,

Amidst the darkness palpable that shrouds,
 Deep as the touchstone's gloom, the night with clouds, 252
 With glittering lines of yellow lightning break,
 And frequent trace in heaven the golden streak:

Miss BAILLIE'S DE MONTFORT.

The action, the elephant skin, and other attributes of SIVA, are well described in a passage cited by Mr. COLEBROOKE in his Essay on Sanscrit prosody, from the Drama of BHAVABHŪTI, though there assigned to a form of his consort DURGA.

प्रचलितकरिक्कृत्तपर्यन्तचंचन्नखाघातभिन्नेदुनिस्यद्मानामृत
 श्रोतजीवन्कपालावलीमुक्तचण्डाट्टहासत्रसङ्घ्रिभूतप्रवृत्तलुतिः

Which, with the leading member of the sentence, may be thus rendered,
 May from thy dance terrific spring success!
 The elephant hide that from thy waist depends,
 Swings to thy motions, and the whirling claws
 Have rent the crescent that adorns thy crest;
 From the torn orb immortal Amrit falls,
 And as the drops celestial trickle down,
 They dew thy necklace, and each hollow skull,
 Laughs loud with life: attendant spirits yield,
 The shout of wonder, and the song of praise.

VERSE 251. Amidst the darkness palpable that shrouds.] So MILTON'S celebrated expression,

And through the palpable obscure find out,
 His uncouth way.

The literal interpretation of the original passage is "the darkness that may be pierced with a needle."

To those fond fair who tread the royal way,
 The path their doubtful feet explore betray; 256
 Those thunders hushed, whose shower-foreboding sound,
 Would check their ardour, and their hopes confound.

On some cool terrace, where the turtle dove
 In gentlest accents breathes connubial love, 260
 Repose awhile, or plead your amorous vows
 Through the long night, the lightning for your spouse;
 Your path retraced, resumed your promised flight,
 When in the east the Sun restores the light; 264
 And shun his course; for with the dawning sky,
 The sorrowing wife dispels the tearful eye,

VERSE 255. To those fond fair who tread the royal way.] We must here make an allowance for Indian prejudices which always assign the active part of amorous intercourse to the female, and make the mistress seek her lover, not the lover his mistress.

Her Lord returned; so comes the Sun to chase,
 The dewy tears that stain the Padma's face, 268
 And ill his eager penitence will bear,
 That thou should'st check his progress thro' the air.

Now to Gambhira's wave thy shadow flies,
 And on the stream's pellucid surface lies, 272
 Like some loved image faithfully imprest,
 Deep in the maiden's pure unsullied breast:

Annotations.

VERSE 268. The dewy tears that stain the Padma's face.] The Padma is a name of that exquisitely beautiful flower the Lotus; comparing the dew to tears occurs thus in the Latin Anthology in the Idyllium de Rosá.

Quam matutinus flentem conspexit Eous.

Whom weeping marked the early eastern gale.

And again SHAKESPEARE in the Midsummer night's dream.

That same dew which some time on the buds,
 Was wont to swell like round and orient pearls,
 Stood now, within the pretty flowret's eyes,
 Like tears.

VERSE 271. Now to Gamb'hira's stream.] This river and the Gandhavatí in the vicinity of the temple of SIVA which lately occurred, are probably amongst the numerous and nameless brooks with which the province of Malwa abounds.

And vain thy struggles to escape her wiles,
 Or disappoint those sweetly treacherous smiles,
 Which glistening Sapharas insidious dart,
 Bright as the lotus, at thy vanquished heart:

Annotations.

VERSE 277. Which glistening Sapharas.] The Saphara is described as a small white glistening fish, which darting rapidly through the water, is not unaptly compared to the twinkling glances of a sparkling eye. Assigning the attributes of female beauty to a stream ceases to be incongruous, when we advert to it's constant personification by the Hindus; and it is as philosophical as it is poetical to affiance a river and a Cloud: the smiles of rivers, nay of the ocean itself, have often been distributed by poetical imagination, thus Lucretius invoking Venus says,

Tibi rident æquora ponti,

The ocean waves laugh on you.

for his late translator Mr. Good is very angry at the conversion of this laugh into a smile, as effected by less daring of his predecessors; MILTON again gives the Ocean nose as well as dimples,

Cheered with the grateful smell old Ocean smiles,

And Metastasio in his beautiful ode to Venus has,

E i flutti ridono,

Nel mar placati.

The waves now placid play,

And laugh amidst the deep.

All these however as well as our author are far surpassed by DRAYTON in his Poly-Olbion, where hill and dale, forest and river, are constantly described with male or female attributes: with respect to the streams he is not satisfied with wedding them to various objects, but fairly subjects them to the pains of parturition; the instances are frequent, but we may be content with the following, especially as it is explained and defended by his very learned illustrator,

What breast so firm unmoved by female charms?
 Not thine my friend; for now her waving arms, 280
 O'erhanging Bayas, in thy grasp enclosed,
 Rent her cœrulean vest, and charms exposed,
 Prove how successfully she tempts delay,
 And wins thee loitering from the lengthening way. 284

When Pool, quoth she, was young, a lusty sea-born lass,
 Great ALBION to this nymph an earnest suitor was,
 And bare himself so well, and so in favor came,
 That he in little time upon this lovely dame,
 Begot three maiden isles his darlings and delight.

“As Albion (son of NEPTUNE), from whom that first name of this Britain was supposed, is well fitted to the fruitful bed of this Pool, thus personated as a sea nymph, the plain truth (as words may certify your eyes saving all impropriety of object) is that in the Pool are seated three isles Bryntsey, Fursej and St. Helen's, in situation and magnitude as I name them, nor is the fiction of begetting the isles improper seeing Greek antiquities tell us of divers in the Mediterranean, and the Archipelagus, as Rhodes, Delus, Hiera, the Echinades and others which have been as it were brought forth out of the salt womb of AMPHITRITE.” SELDEN's illustrations.

VERSE 281 O'erhanging Bayas.] The Vetasa, (वेतस) or Bayas, is a kind of reed growing near brooks. I am not aware if the botanists have yet assigned it any scientific name: the translation of the whole of this passage is not very literal.

VERSE 290. Dévagiri is the mountain of the deity, and may perhaps be the same with a place called in the map Dewagur, situated south of the Chumbul, in the centre of the province of Malwa, and precisely in the line of the Cloud's progress, which as we shall hereafter find has been continued nearly due north from Oujein. This hill is the scite of a temple of CARTISÉYA, which as well as that of SIVA described above, we must suppose to have enjoyed in the days of antiquity considerable reputation, or they would not have been so particularly specified in the poem.

There change thy form, and showering roses shed,

VERSE 291. Then change thy form, and showering roses shed.] The Cloud as the Commentators say is directed to fall in flowers, because it can take what shape it pleases; we generally understand a poet much better than we comprehend his learned and laborious annotators: raining flowers, or by authority, roses, is a common event in English poetry. Thus THOMPSON in the opening of his Spring.

 Of shadowing roses on our plains descend.

And MILTON, rather more intelligibly,

 Showered roses.

VERSE 293. Several instances of the solitary production of offspring, occur in the Hindu as well as in the Grecian mythology. Thus as PALLAS sprang from the brow of JUPITER, we have SCANDA generated solely by the deity SIVA; GUNGA springs from the head of the same deity, and GANE'SA is the self-born son of the goddess PARVATĪ: the miraculous birth of the warrior deity SCANDA, was for the purpose of destroying TARACA an Asur or demon, who by the performance of continued and severe austerities had acquired powers formidable to the gods: the eccentric genius of SOUTHEY, has rendered it unnecessary, by his last poem, the Curse of Kehāma, for me to explain the nature, or results of these acts of devotion: the germ of SCANDA was cast by SIVA into the flame of AGNI, the god of fire, who being unable to sustain the encreasing burthen, transferred it to the goddess GUNGA; she accordingly was delivered of the deity SCANDA, who was afterwards received and reared amongst thickets of the Sara reed, (Saccharum Sara) by the six daughters of a king named CRITICA, or according to other legends by the wives of seven great Rishis or Saints; in either case they form in astronomy the asterism of the Pleiades: upon his coming to maturity SCANDA encountered and killed the demon, who had filled the region of INDRA with dismay,

VERSE 306. RANTIDÉVA is the name of a king of the Chandrabans or family of the moon: from his performance of the Gomé'd'ha, (गोमेघा) or sacrifice of the cow, which is prohibited in the present period of the world, he must belong to one of the preceding Yugs or ages: I find in Sir WM. JONES's lists, (see his Chronology of the Hindus, Asiatic Researches Vol. 2), the eighteenth name in the line of the moon, in the second age, is RANTINA'VA, and as that is the only name resembling the appellation in our text, it is perhaps a corruption or error for RANTIDÉVA.

horse or of the cow, the गौमेघा or अश्वमेघा appears to have been common in the earliest periods of the Hindu ritual; It has been conceived that the sacrifice was not real but typical, and that the form of sacrificing only was performed upon the victim, after which it was set at liberty: the text of this passage however is unfavorable to such a notion, as the metamorphosis of the blood of the kine into a river, certainly implies that blood was diffused. The expression of the original literally rendered is, "sprung from the blood of the daughters of SURIBHI." that is, kine; SURIBHI being a celebrated cow produced at the churning of the ocean, and famed for granting to her votaries whatever they desired. "Daughter of SURIBHI" is an expression of common occurrence to denote the cow.

VERSE 308. And a fair river through the regions spread.] The name of this river is not mentioned in the text of the poem; but is said by the Commentators to be the Charmanvati, and such a name occurs in Major WILFORD's lists from the Purānas, amongst those streams which seem to arise from the north-west portion of the Vind'hya mountains: the modern appellation of the Charmanvati is generally conceived to be the Chumbul which corresponds with it in source and situation, and which as it must have been traversed by the Cloud in it's northerly course, would most probably have been described by the poet. It may be curious to trace the change of Charmanvati into Chumbul, which seems very practicable notwithstanding their present dissimilarity. Tavernier describing the route from Surat to Agra by way of Brampore, calls this river the Chammelnadi; the possessive termination Vati (वती) having been confounded with Nadi (नदी) a river; Chammelnadi is therefore the Chammel river: again the addition Nadi, being regarded as superfluous it has been dropped altogether, and we have the Chammel or Chambel; the word Chammel may readily be deduced from Charman as in the dialects of Hindoostan, the letters N. and L. are constantly interchangeable, and careless pronounciation may easily convert Charmel into Chammel, or Chambel.

VERSE 310. These two lines occur a little earlier in the Sanscrit, but as they seemed more connected with the two following, and to be rather awkward in their original position, they have been introduced here.

VERSE 315. In sacred darkness not thine own.] Being of the same dark blue color as CRISHNA; a hue the poet charges the Cloud with having stolen.

VERSE 320. Dasapura according to its etymology should mean a district; that of the ten cities; it is said however by the Commentators to be the name of a city, and by one of them, MALLINĀT'H, to be that of the city of RANTIDĒVA: if he is correct it may possibly be the modern Rintimpore or Rantampore, especially as that town, lying a little to the north of the Chumbul, and in the line from Oujein to Tahnesar, is consequently in the course of the Cloud's progress, and the probable position of Dasapura.

VERSE 325. Such contrast as the lovely Cunda shews.] The Cunda (Jasminum pubescens) bears a beautiful white flower, and the large black bee being seated in the centre of its cup, they afford a very delicate and truly poetical resemblance to the dark Iris, and white ball of a full black eye.

VERSE 327. Hence to the land of BRAHMA'S favored sons.] Brahmāvarta (ब्रह्मावर्त) is the abode of BRAHMA or the holy land of the Hindus, it is thus described by Menu. 2, 17.

brated battle between them and the PANDUS, which forms the subject of the Maháb'hárata; it lies a little to the south-east of Tahnesar, and is still a place of note and pilgrimage. It is not far from Panniput, the seat of another celebrated engagement, that between the assembled princes of Hindoostan, and the combined strength of the Muhrattas. This part of the country indeed presenting few obstacles to the movement of large armies, has in every period of the history of Hindoostan been the theatre of contention.

VERSE 331. ARJUN was the friend and pupil of CRISHNA, and the third of the PANDAVA princes. He has been long ago introduced to European readers, especially in Mr. WILKINS's masterly translation of the B'hágavat Gita, and appears in the opening of that philosophical poem, in a very amiable light.

 “ me unguarded in the field.”

VERSE 332. As the horses and swords of Chivalry received particular names, so the weapons of the Hindu knights have been similarly honored; Gándīva is the bow of ARJUN.

VERSE 333. Thick as thy drops that in the pelting shower.] This verse has abundant analogies in western composition; thus, in Lucretius, Lucida tela diei.

The lucid arrows of the day.

 And to these banks, and holy musing flew, 340

The "sharp sleet of arrowy shower," of MILTON, and its imitation by GRAY,
 Iron sleet of arrowy shower,
 Hurtles in the dusky air,

Are passages well known.

VERSE 335. The Saraswati, or as it is corruptedly called, the Sarsooty, falls from the southern portion of the Himálaya mountains, and runs into the great desert where the maps lose it. It flows a little to the nor-west of Curucshétra, and though rather out of the line of the Cloud's progress, not sufficiently so to prevent the introduction into the poem of a stream so celebrated, and so holy.

VERSE 331. We have here the reason why the waters of the Saraswati are objects of religious veneration: BALARÁMA is the elder brother of CRISHNA, he is called (लङ्गलीय) LÁNGALÍYA, (हलभृत्) HALABHRĪT, &c. from his being armed with a ploughshare, which he is said to have employed as Bills were formerly used, for pulling his enemies down from their horses, &c. which enabled him then to dispatch them with his club: although CRISHNA took an active part in the warfare between the Curus and Pandus, BALARÁMA refused to join either party, and retired into voluntary seclusion, filled with grief at the nature of the contest, deserting even according to CALIDÁSA, the inebriating eyes of his wife.

VERSE 339. RÉVATI is the wife of BALARÁMA; see the preceding note.

Thy journey next o'er Canac'hala bends,
Where JAHNU's daughter from the hills descends,

तस्माद्गच्छेरनु कनखलं शैलसजावतीर्णा
ब्रह्माः कन्यां सगरतनयः स्वर्गसोपानपङ्क्तिम् ॥

Annotations.

VERSE 341. The name is CALAC'HALA in the original but it more properly is as given above; the meaning of the word agreeably to a forced etymology, is thus explained in the Gungádwára Mahátmya section of the Scanda Purána,

खलः को नाचमुक्तेर्वभजेतचमज्जनात् । अतः कनखलं तीर्थं नाम्नाचक्रुर्मुनीश्वराः ॥

“What man (कः) so wicked, (खल) as not to obtain, (न) future happiness from bathing
“there, thence the holy sages have called this Tirtha by the name of Canac'hala.”

It also occurs in this passage of the Heri Vansá portion of the Mahab'harat,

गङ्गादारं कनखलसोमेदिवचसंस्थितः ॥

“Gangádwára, Canac'hala, and where the moon impends.”

And in both instances is applied to the place where the Ganges descends into the low ground of Hindoostan. The name is still retained as appears from the testimony of an impartial witness, Lieut. WEBB, in his survey of the sources of the Ganges, a survey which has essentially improved the geography of those regions; “the party arrived at Haridwára and encamped at the village of Canac'hala,” (Kank'hal) on the west bank of the Ganges, at the distance of about two miles from the fair.” Asiatic Researches 11, 449.

VERSE 342. [Where JAHNU's daughter from the hills descends.] JAHNU's daughter is GUNGA or the Ganges, which river “after forcing its way through an extensive tract “of mountainous country here first enters on the plains.” It is rather extraordinary that CALIDA'SA should have omitted the name of Haridwára (Hurdwár), and preferred Canac'hala; especially as the former occurs in the Puranas, in the Scanda Purana as mentioned in the note, page 450, Vol. 11. of the Researches, and in this passage from the Matsya Purána cited in the Purána Sarvaswa.

“The Ganges is every where easy of access except in three places, Haridwára, Prayága,
“and her junction with the sea.” JAHNU is the name of a sage who upon being disturbed in his devotions by the passage of the river, drank up its waters. Upon relenting

Whose lengthening stream, to SÁGAR'S virtue given,
 Conducts his numerous progeny to heaven; 344

however, he allowed the stream to re-issue from his ear, and the affinity of GUNGA' to the saint arises from this second birth.

VERSE 343. To SAGAR'S virtue given.] The Ganges according to the legend was brought from heaven, by the religious rites of BHAGIRAT'HA the great grandson of SÁGAR, who as well as that king had engaged in a long series of acts of austerity, for the purpose of procuring the descent of the river to wash the ashes of SAGAR'S 60,000 sons; the youths had been reduced to this state, by the indignation of CAPILA, a saint, whose devotions they had disturbed in their eager quest of the horse, that was to be the victim of an As'wamed'ha by their father; their misfortunes did not however cease with their existence, as their admission to Swerga depended according to the instructions of GARUDA, upon the use of the water of the Ganges in the administration of their funeral rites. At this period the Ganges watered the plains of heaven alone, and it was no easy undertaking to induce her to resign those for an humble and earthly course. SAGAR, his son ANSUMAN, and grandson DWILIPA, died without being able to effect the descent of the heavenly stream, but his great grandson BHAGIRAT'HA was more fortunate, and his long continued austerities were rewarded by the fall of the Ganges, the bathing of the ashes of his ancestors with the holy water, and the establishment of them in the enjoyments of Swerga: the whole story is told in the first Book of the Ramáyana, from the 32d, to the 35th, section; see the Ramáyana with translation, by the worthy and indefatigable missionaries, Messrs. CAREY and MARSHMAN.

VERSE 345. She who with smiling waves disportive strayed,] The earth being unable to bear the sudden descent of so great a river as the Ganges, SIVA was induced at the intercession of BHAGIRATHA, to interpose his sacred head: accordingly GUNGA first alighted on the head of the deity and remained for a considerable period wandering amongst the tresses of his long and entangled hair, to the extreme jealousy and displeasure, according to CALIDASA, of the Goddess GOURI or PARVATI, SIVA'S consort.

VERSE 351. Thy form like INDRA'S Elephant.] We have already noticed that presiding deities are attached to the various points of the compass, and that each of these deities is furnished with a male and female Elephant; amongst these the most distinguished is AIRAVATA; the Elephant of INDRA in his capacity of Regent of the east.

VERSE 354. As where the Jumna mingles with the tide.] The waters of the Jumna or Yamuna are described as much darker than those of the Ganges at the point of their confluence, from the circumstances of the stream being less shallow and less discolored with clay or sand: occasionally indeed the waters of the Ganges there are so white from the diffusion of earthy particles, that according to the creed of the natives, the river flows with milk. The confluence of rivers always forms a sacred spot in India, but the meeting of the Ganges and Jumna, at Prayaga or Allahabad, from the sanctity of both the currents, and from the supposed subterraneous addition of the Saraswati, is a place of distinguished holiness,

As SIVA's Bull upon his sacred neck,

VERSE 360. And the Musk Deer spring frequent from the caves.] This animal is what is called the Thibet Musk "but its favorite residence is among the lofty Himalley " (Himālaya) mountains, which divide Tartary from Hindoostan." See the best account of the Musk Deer yet published, in GLADWIN'S Oriental Miscellany, Calcutta 1798, accompanied with accurate drawings by Mr. HOME of the figure, teeth, hoofs, &c.

VERSE 361. Should forest flames arise.] The conflagration of the woods in India, is of frequent occurrence, and the causes of it are here described by the poet. The intertwining branches of the Saral, (Pinus longifolia) of the Bambu, and other trees, being set in motion by the wind, their mutual friction engenders flame; this spread abroad by the air, and according to the Poet by the thick tails of the Yac of Tartary or Bos Grunniens (from which Chowries are made), readily communicates to the surrounding foliage, dried up by the heat of the sun and exceedingly inflammable; the burning of a forest is so well described in the Ritu Sanhāra that I cannot avoid citing the passage although its length perhaps requires an apology.

 Bursts in a blaze beneath the torrid sky;
 Fanned by the gale the fires resplendent grow,
 Brighter than blooming Safflower's vermil glow,

Shame is the fruit of actions indiscreet,
 And vain presumption ends but in defeat; 368
 So shall the Sarabhas who thee oppose,
 Themselves to pain, and infamy expose;
 When round their heads, amidst the lowering sky,
 White as a brilliant smile, thy hail stones fly. 372

Brighter than Minium's fierceness, as they wind
 Around the branch, or shoot athwart the rind,
 Play through the leaves, along the trunk ascend,
 And o'er the top in tapering radiance end:
 The crackling Bambu rushing flames surround,
 Roar through the rocks, and through the caves resound;
 The dry blade full to their rage supplies,
 And instant flame along the herbage flies;
 Like palest gold the towering ray aspires,
 And wafting gusts diffuse the wasting fires,
 Wide fly the sparks, the burning branches fall,
 And one relentless blaze envelops all.

VERSE 369. The Sarab'ha is a fabulous animal described as possessing eight legs, and of a fierce untractable nature; it is supposed to haunt these mountains especially.

VERSE 372. White as a brilliant smile.] It is remarkable that a laugh or smile, is always compared to objects of a white color by Hindu writers.

Annotations.

VERSE 373. Next to the mountain with the foot imprest.] The fancied or artificial print of some saint or deity, on hills or detached stones, is a common occurrence in the creeds of the east; the idea is not confined to the inhabitants of Hindoostan, but is asserted similarly by those of Nepal, Ceylon, and Ava, as may be seen in TURNER'S journey to Nepal, SYMES'S Embassy to Ava, &c. The Mussulmans also have the same notion with respect to many of the Prophets, for they believe that the marks of ADAM'S feet remain on a mountain in the centre of Ceylon, and that those of ABRAHAM were impressed upon a stone which was formerly at Mecca, and which he had used as a temporary scaffold in constructing the upper part of the primary Caaba: a number of similar stories may be found in Mirkhond, and other Mohammedan authors. The Himaláya mountains are the scene of most of SIVA'S adventures, his religious abstraction, his love, marriage, &c. and the place here mentioned may have some connexion with the Ghát, and neighbouring hill at Haridwára, mentioned in Capt. RAPER'S account of the survey of the Ganges, by the name of Haraca Pairi, the foot of HARA or SIVA.

VERSE 376. Around the spot in pious circles go.] Circumambulating a venerable object, or person, is a usual mark of profound respect; thus in Sacotala, CANNA thus addresses his foster daughter on the eve of her departure,

वन्देऽतःसद्योऽङ्गताग्नीन्द्रक्षिणीकुरुष्व ।

“ My best beloved come and walk with me round the sacrificial fire.”

And again in the Ramayana we have the same ceremony described thus;

जनकस्यवचःश्रुत्वापाणीन्पाणिभिरस्पृशन् । चत्वारस्तेचतसृणांविशिष्टस्यमतेस्थिताः ॥

अग्निंप्रदक्षिणांघृत्वावेदिंशजानमेवच । ऋषींश्चापिमहान्मानःसहभार्यारघूदृष्ट्वाः ॥

For there have Saints the sacred altar raised,
 And there eternal offerings have blazed;
 And blest the faithful worshippers, for they,
 The stain of sin, with life shall cast away: 380
 And after death a glad admittance gain,
 To SIVA's glorious, and immortal train:

Here wake the chorus: bid the thunder's sound,
 Deep and reiterated roll around, 384
 Loud as a hundred drums; while softer strains,
 The swelling gale breathes sweetly through the canes;

VERSE 387. The lovely songsters of the skies, are the females of the Cinnaras or demigods attendant upon CUREA, and the musicians of Swerga.

VERSE 388. Hymns to the victor of Tripura rise.] Tripura is the name of a city or rather as its etymology implies, three cities collectively; these formed the domain of a celebrated Demon or Asur destroyed by SIVA, and were reduced to ashes by that Deity: according to the Commentators we have here a full and complete concert in honor of MAHADEVVA.

VERSE 384. And Croucha's celebrated pass select.] I have not been able to make any thing of this pass or hole (क्रौञ्चरन्ध्र) the original text states it to be on the very skirt (उपतट) of the snowy mountain, and calls it also हंसद्वार the gate of the geese, who fly annually this way to the Manasarovara lake: Croucha is described as a mountain in the Mahabharat, and being personified is there called the son of Maināca: a mountain also called Croucha Meru occurs in Mr. WILFORD's lists amongst these mountains situated in the north. It must lie at some distance from the plains, and perhaps the Poet by using the term उपतट implies its relative situation with the loftiest part of the range or proper snow clad mountains.

VERSE 386. And erst a Hero's mighty arrows tore.] The Croucha pass, or defile

in the Croucha mountain, is said to have been made by the arrows of BHRĪGUPATI, or PARASURĀMA who was educated by SIVA on mount Cailasa, and who thus opened himself a passage from the mountains upon the occasion of his travelling southwards to destroy the Cshetriya or military race. PARASURĀMA is an Avatar or descent of VISHNŪ in the person of the son of the Saint JAMADAGNI, and this Saint being also descended from the celebrated sage BHRIGU his son is named BHRIGUPATI, or, Chief of that race.

VERSE 390. The sable foot that BALI marked with dread.] The story of BALI and the VĀMANA or dwarf Avatar has been frequently repeated from the account of SONNERAT and the relations in the Asiatick Researches. As the former is not very prolix it may be here inserted to save the trouble of further reference. “The fifth incarnation was in a Bramin dwarf, under the name of VAMEN; it was wrought to restrain the pride of the giant BELY. The latter, after having conquered the Gods, expelled them from Sorgon; he was generous, true to his word, compassionate, and charitable. Vichenou, under the form of a very little Bramin, presented himself before him, while he was sacrificing, and asked him for three paces of land to build a hut. BELY ridiculed the apparent imbecility of the dwarf, in telling him, that he ought not to limit his demand to a bequest so trifling; that his generosity could bestow a much larger donation of land. VAMEN answered, that being of so small a stature, what he asked was more than sufficient. The prince immediately granted his request, and to ratify his donation, poured water into his right hand, which was no sooner done, than the dwarf grew so prodigiously, that his body filled the universe! He measured the earth with one pace—and the heavens with another—and then summoned BELY to give him his word for the third. The prince then recognized VICHENOU, adored him, and presented his head to him; but the God, satisfied with his submission, sent him to govern the Pandalon, and permitted him to return every year to the earth, the day of the full moon, in the month of November.”

VERSE 398. Cailāsa's venerated guest.] Cailāsa, as it here appears, a part of the Himala range, is in fable a mountain of costly gems or of crystal, the scite of CUVERA's capital, and the favorite haunt of SIVA; I shall borrow from the notes to SOUTHEY's Curse of Kehāme, a description of it from BALDÆUS, curious enough in itself, but still more so for its strange medley of accuracy and incorrectness, and its uncouth transformation, and commixture of the Sanscrit names. "The residence of IXORA (Isvara or ईश्वर) is upon the silver mount Calaja (Cailāsa or कैलास), to the south of the famous mountain Mahameru, being a most delicious place, planted with all sorts of trees, that bear fruit all the year round. The roses and other flowers send forth a most odoriferous scent; and the pond at the foot of the mount is inclosed with pleasant walks of trees, that afford an agreeable shade whilst the Peacocks and divers other birds entertain the ear with their harmonious noise, as the beautiful women do the eyes. The circumjacent woods are inhabited by a certain people called Munis or Rixis, (Rishis or ऋषि), who avoiding the conversation of others, spend their time in offering daily sacrifices to their God.

It is observable, that though these Pagans are generally black themselves, they do represent these Rixis to be of a fair complexion, with long white beards, and long garments hanging cross-ways, from about the neck down over the breast. They are in such high esteem among them that they believe whom they bless are blessed, and whom they curse are cursed.

Within the mountain lives another generation, called Jexaquinmera (Yacsha or यक्ष and Cinnara or किन्नर) and Quendra, (Indra or इन्द्र) who are free from all trouble, and spend their days in continual contemplation, praises and prayers to God. Round about the mountain stand seven ladders by which you ascend to a spacious plain, in the middle whereof is a bell of silver and a square table, surrounded with nine precious stones of

Whose base a RÁVAN from its centre wrung,
 Shaken not sundered, stable though unstrung:
 Whose lofty peaks to distant realms in sight,
 Present a SIVA's smile, a lotus white:

divers colours; upon this table lies a silver rose called Tamarapua (?) which contains two women as bright and fair as a pearl : one is called BRIGASIRI, (?) i. e. the lady of the mouth, the other TARASIRI, (?) i. e. the lady of the tongue. Because they praise God with the mouth and tongue. In the centre of this rose is, the triangle of Quivelinga, (Siva-linga) which they say is the permanent residence of God." BALDÆUS. The latter part of this description is quite new to the Pandits and I suspect is rather Mohummedar than Hindu.

VERSE 402. Shaken not sundered, stable though unstrung.] This alludes to a legend of RÁVANA's having attempted to remove the mountain from its situation, although he did not succeed as well as Satan and his compeers, when

"From their foundations loosening to and fro,

"They plucked the seated hills,"

He considerably unhinged its foundations. The story perhaps originates with the curious vibrating rock at Mahabalipuram, of which it may be said as is observed by SELDEN of Main-amber i. e. Ambrose's stone in Cornwall, not far from Penzance, that "it is so great that many men's united strength cannot remove it, yet with one finger you may wag it."

VERSE 403. Whose lofty peaks to distant realms in sight.] The lofty peaks of the Himalaya range of mountains are very justly stated by the Poet, to be visible to surrounding regions (प्रतिदिग्मं) they are seen in the south from situations more remote than those in which any other peaks have been discerned, and the supposition of their exceeding even the Andes in elevation, has been confirmed by recent enquiries, which will become public with the appearance of the 12th Volume of the Asiatic Researches.

And lo! those peaks than ivory more clear,
 When yet unstained the parted tusks appear,
 Beam with new lustre, as around their head,
 Thy glossy glooms metallic darkness spread;
 As shews a HALABHRĪTA's sable vest,
 More fair the pallid beauty of his breast.

Annotations.

VERSE 408. Thy glossy glooms metallic darkness spread.] The expression in the original (स्निग्धभिन्नाञ्जनाभे) may be rendered, "shining like antimony mixed up with oil," a mixture used for darkening the eye lashes or the edges of the eye-lids, a practice common to the females of the east. It is also explained to mean merely, "black divided antimony," and the shining greyish blue of the sulphuret of antimony, the substance alluded to, may often be observed in the hue of heavy Clouds.

VERSE 409. HALABHRĪTA is a name of BALARĀMA, and implies as has been before explained his use of a plough share as a weapon; he is represented of a white color, clothed in a dark blue vest, and is thus alluded to in the introduction to the Gita Govinda of JAYADĒVA.

Thus translated by Sir WM JONES in his Essay on the Chronology of the Hindus. "Thou bearest on thy bright body a mantle shining like a blue Cloud, or like the water of the Yamuna tripping towards thee through fear of thy furrowing ploughshare, Oh CĒSAVA! assuming the form of BALARĀMA, be victorious Oh Heri! Lord of the universe."

Haply across thy long and mountain way,
 In sport may GOURI with her SIVA stray, 412
 Her serpent bracelet from her wrist displaced,
 And in her arms, the mighty God embraced :
 Should thus it fortune, be it thine to lend,
 A path their holy footsteps may ascend ; 416
 Close in thy hollow form thy stores comprest,
 While by the touch of feet celestial blest.
 Next let each maid of heaven, each blooming girl,
 Thy graceful form in sportive mischief whirl ; 420

VERSE 412. In sport may GOURI with her SIVA stray.] I have already noticed that these mountains are the scene of SIVA's loves and sports: they may still be considered as his favorite haunts for some traces of him seem to start up in every direction amongst them. See the late travels to the source of the Ganges, and Col. HARDWICKE's Tour to Sirinagur.

VERSE 420. Thy graceful form in sportive mischief whirl.] The meaning of this can

While lightning gems around each wrist that wind,
 Release the treasures in thy breast confined :
 Nor fear their aim thy progress to delay ;
 A grateful succor in the sultry day ; 421
 For soon thy thunders shall disperse a train,
 Of heart as timid, as of purpose vain.

 Explore the golden lotus-covered lake: 428 only be readily conceived by those who know what a Goolab-pash is; a small vessel for sprinkling rose water, &c. In such a capacity is the Cloud to be used by the youthful goddesses.

VERSE 421. While lightning gems around each wrist that wind.] The diamond and thunderbolt according to Hindu notions are of one substance, and are called by the same appellation, (वज्र) as the fall of the thunderbolt is usually followed by rain, and may thus be considered as it's cause, the propinquity and the mutual friction of the same substance upon the wrists of our young ladies, is in like manner supposed to occasion the dispersion of the fluid treasures of the Cloud.

VERSE 426. Of heart as timid as of purpose vain.] "Unsteady in their sports," is the literal expression of the original, but the Commentators dilate the sentiment in the manner here adopted: our joint want of gallantry may find a precedent even in the poet of this science, for OVID makes Hero write thus to Leander.

Ut corpus teneris ita mens infirma puellis,
 Weak as her frame the tender virgin's mind.

Imbibe the dews of Mánasa, and spread,
 A friendly veil round Airavata's head;
 Or life dispensing with the Zephyrs go,
 Where heavenly trees, with fainting blossoms blow. 432

Now on the mountain's side like some dear friend,
 Behold the city of the Gods impend;

Annotations.

VERSE 429. Mánasa, Manasarovara or commonly Man-sarour is a celebrated lake situated in the centre of the Himálaya mountains, and was long said to be the source of the Ganges, and Brahmaputra rivers; with respect to the first of these the statement has been found to be erroneous, and we have no positive proofs of its accuracy with regard to the latter. Some period has elapsed since it was visited by Europeans, and the chief information possessed at present, has been derived from the vague reports of Hindu Pilgrims, the lake being of great note in their sacred books and an object of their veneration.

We here take leave of the geographical part of the poem which is highly creditable to CALIDASA's accuracy, and now come to the region of unmixed fable, the residence of CUVÉRA and his attendant demigods.

VERSE 430. A friendly veil round AIRAVATA's head.] INDRA's Elephant ut supra, Verse 351.

VERSE 432. Where heavenly trees, with fainting blossoms blow.] Literally the Calpa trees, one of the five kinds which flourish in INDRA's heaven. They are thus enumerated in the Amera Cosha.

 Where brilliant pearls descend in lucid showers,
 And Clouds like tresses, clothe her lofty towers,
 There every palace with thy glory vies,
 Whose soaring summits kiss the lofty skies; 440
 Whose beauteous inmates bright as lightning glare,
 And tabors mock the thunders of the air;
 The rainbow flickering gleams along the walls,
 And glittering rain, in sparkling diamonds falls. 444
 There lovely triflers wanton through the day,

VERSE 440. I have availed myself of the aid of the Commentators to make out this passage rather more fully than it occurs in the original, and consequently more intelligibly to the English reader: the poet describes the toilet of the Yacshinis, or female Yacshas, through the six seasons of the year, by mentioning as the selected flowers, those peculiar to each period. Thus the Lotus blooms in Sarat or the sultry season, two months of our autumn; the Cunda (Jasminum pubescens) in Sis'ira or the dewy season, the Lod'h, a species of tree, (Symplocos racemosa Rox.) is in blossom in Himanta or winter; the Curuvaca (Gomphræna globosa) in Vasanta or spring, the Sirisha (Mimosa Sirisha) in the hot months or Grishma, and the Nipa or Cadamba (Nauclea Cadamba) at the setting in of the rains: it is to the Commentators also, that I am indebted for the sole occupation of the Goddesses being pleasure and dress: the fact is,

Sirisha blossoms deck the tender ear; 352

To sing, to dance,

To dress, and troll the tongue, and roll the eye, constitutes a very well educated female according to the customs of Hindoostan: we cannot help however being pleased with the simplicity and propriety of taste, which gives to the graceful ornaments of nature so prominent a part in the decoration of feminine beauty.

Thus graced they woo the Yacshas to their arms,
 And gems, and wine, and music, aid their charms; 456

 And wines from grapes of heavenly growth distil;
 The gems bestrew each terrace of delight,
 Likē stars that glitter through the shades of night. 460

Annotation.

VERSE 466. Speak of fond maids and wanderers from home.] I have already mentioned that the Hindus always send the lady to seek her lover, and they usually add a very reasonable degree of ardor and impatience; our poet in another place, compares the female so engaged to a rapid current: thus in the Ritu Sanhāra.

सत्पातयन्त्याःपरितस्तट्टुमान्प्रवृद्धवेगैस्सलिलैरनिर्मलैः ।

स्त्रियःप्रकामाद्बजातविभ्रमाःप्रयान्तिनद्यस्वरितंपयोनिधिं ॥

Fast flow the turbid torrents as they sweep,
 The shelving vallies to rejoin the Deep,
 And like the damsel prodigal of charms,
 Who seeks impatiently her lover's arms,
 Bound o'er each obstacle with headlong force,
 And banks and trees demolish in their course.

VERSE 468. The splendid lamp glows vivid through the night.] The meaning is given more nearly in an Epigram in the Anthology.

Ludite, sed vigiles nolite extinguere lychnos.

I have indeed in this place concentrated and in part omitted, two verses of the original, as offensive to our notions of the décorum of composition. I cannot admit however that Hindu literature, speaking generally, is more liable to the reproach of indecency than that of Europe: nothing can be found in their serious works half so licentious as are many passages in the writings of OVID, CATULLUS, PROPERTIUS, and even the elegant FLACCUS; to descend to modern times ARIOSTO and BOCCACCIO amongst the Italians; BRANTOME, CREBILLON, VOLTAIRE, LA FONTAINE, and the writers of many recent philosophical novels amongst the French, furnish us with more than parallels for the most indelicate of the Hindu writers; with respect to ourselves, not to go back to the days in which “obscenity was wit,” we have little reason to reproach the Hindus with want of delicacy, when we find the exceptionable though elegant poetry of LITTLE generally circulated, and avowedly admired. We should also recollect the circumstances of Indian society before we condemn their authors for the ungarbled expressions, which we conceive to trespass upon the boundaries of decorum. These authors write to men only; they never think of a woman as a reader: now even in polished European society, amongst men alone, conversation takes commonly greater liberties than any Hindu composition, and it is fair to infer that were our writings addressed only to the male portion of society, they would partake of a similar character: extreme attention to delicacy would in that case be regarded as puerile or fastidious; it is so now in works of science, and GIBBON and HUME, seem to consider it so in historical writing: if then we were not apprehensive of sully-ing those minds whose purity we are interested in preserving, the breach of the rules of delicacy would take place to a greater extent than it has done in works of imagination. I am not sure that were this to happen the quantity of virtue in the world would be much diminished; what is natural, cannot be vicious: what every one knows, surely every one may express; and that mind which is only safe in ignorance, or which is only defended by decorum, possesses but a very feeble defence and impotent security. I have said more upon this subject than was perhaps necessary, but I am anxious that the Hindus should have justice done to them, and not be held up to the world, as they have been by a mistaken, and I am afraid, a spiteful zeal, as monsters of impurity.

Or the soft glories of the lunar beam,

VERSE 469. The moon gem or Chandracánta (चन्द्रकान्त).

 That speeds unerring to the beating heart.

Annotation.

VERSE 473. The Lord of Love remembering former woe.] This alludes to the fate which befell the Hindu CUPID upon his assailing SIVA, whom at the desire of the Gods he inflamed with the love of PÁRVATI: SIVA in his wrath reduced the little deity to ashes by a flame from the eye in his forehead, and although he was subsequently restored to animation, he is here supposed to remain in dread of his former enemy; the whole story is spiritedly told in Sir WM. JONES's hymns to CAMDEO and to DURGA.

VERSE 488. The tall Mandára.] The Coral tree, Erythrina Indica.

VERSE 490. And nurtures like a child.] Tender attachment to natural objects is one of the most pleasing features in the poetical compositions of the Hindus. It is very frequently expressed, and perhaps in few places with more beauty than in the Drama of SACONTALA, where upon departing from the bower of her foster father, she bids adieu to the plants she had carefully tended, and the orphan fawn she had reared. The whole of this scene must be read with pleasure, and may be classed with the departure of GOLDSMITH'S village family from Auburn, and the farewell of EVE to the bowers of Paradise.

VERSE 505. These are my rivals, &c.] These allusions refer to some particular notions of the Hindus respecting the Cesara and Asoca, which plants are said to blossom upon being touched respectively by the face, or foot of a female; the story is probably originally poetical, thus DRAYTON in his Shepherd's Serina, expatiates upon a similar idea,

The verdant meads are seen,
 When she doth view them,
 In fresh and gallant green,
 Straight to renew them:
 And every little grass,
 Broad itself spreadeth,
 Proud that this bonny lass,
 Upon it treadeth.

पद्मोद्धियंमहापद्मःशंखोमकरकच्छपौ । मुकुटंनन्दनीलस्रखर्वश्चनिधयोऽनव ॥

“The Padma, Mahapadma, Sanc'ha, Macara, Cach'hapa, Mucunda, Nanda, Nila and C'harna, are the nine Nid'his.” The S'abda Retnavali also has the same reading. In Hemachandra and the S'abda Māla कुट्ट is substituted for नन्द. Nid'hi (निधि), is the generic name, but how it should be rendered into English, I am not prepared to say. Mr. COLEBROOKE, calls the particular Nid'his, auriferous gems: See his translation of the Amera Cosha. Some of the words bear the meanings of precious or holy things, thus Padma is the lotus, Sanc'ha the shell or conch: again, some of them imply large numbers, thus Padma is 10,000 Millions and Mahapadma is 100,000 Millions, &c. but all of them are not received in either the one or the other acceptation: we may translate almost all into Things, thus, a lotus, a large lotus, a shell, a certain fish, a tortoise, a crest, a mathematical figure used by the Jainas, Nila refers only to color, but C'harva the ninth means a Dwarf: Mr. KINDERSLEY translating through the medium of the Tamul has called eight of CUVĒRA's gems, the coral, pearl, cat's eye, emerald, diamond, sapphire, ruby and topaz. The ninth he leaves undetermined. In Dr. HUNTER's Dictionary, I find one only of the nine in the Hindoostance language, نیلم or نیل من Neelum, or Neelmun, derived from नीलमणि a blue gem, and interpreted the Sapphire. पद्मरंग Padma-color means a ruby, and possibly the Padma may be the same; perhaps कच्छप the tortoise, means tortoise shell, and Macara may be an error for Maraca or Maracata an emerald, or it may imply the same stone from the green color of the fish: these however are mere conjectures. Agreeably to the system of the Tantrics the Nid'his are personified, and upon certain occasions, as the worship of LACSIMI, the goddess of prosperity, &c. come in for a share of religious veneration; they have also their peculiar mantras, or mystical Verses.

VERSE 522. The Camala is a name of the lotus.

To those loved scenes repaired, that awful size,
 Like a young Elephant, in haste disguise; 524
 Lest terror seize my fair one, as thy form
 Hangs o'er the hillock, and portends the storm.
 Thence to the inner mansion bend thy sight,
 Diffusing round a mild and quivering light, 528
 As when through evening shades, soft flashes play,
 Where the bright fire-fly wings his glittering way.

VERSE 530. Where the bright fire-fly wings his glittering way.] The fire-fly presents a very beautiful appearance, as it's soft and twinkling light is contrasted with the deep shade of the bushes, in which it may be seen in great numbers during the wet season. The phenomenon is common to the east and the west Indies, and it may be amusing to see the effect produced by it on different persons and at different periods: MOORE meeting with it in America, writes some elegant stanzas on the subject, and adds to the lightness of his verse, the solidity of prose in the authority of this note. "The lively and varying illumination with which these fire-flies light up the woods at night gives quite an idea of enchantment. Puis ces mouches se developpant de l'obscurité de ces arbres, et s'approchant de nous, nous les voyions sur les orangers voisins, qu'ils mettoient tout en feu, nous rendant la vue de leurs beaux fruits, que la nuit avoit ravie &c. L. HISTOIRE DES ANTILLES." See MOORE'S Odes and Epistles. We have now to hear the description of a traveller of 1672, the learned and very devout, JOHANNES FRYER, M. D.

"The next Day at Twelve a Clock at Noon we struck into our old Road at Moorbar, from whence before we were misguided; we packed hence by Five in the Afternoon, and left our Burnt Wood on the Right-hand, but entered another made us better Sport, deluding us with false Flashes, that you would have thought the Trees on a Flame, and presently, as if untouch'd by Fire, they retained their wonted Verdure. The Coolies beheld the Sight with Horror and Amazement, and were consulting to set me down, and shift for themselves; whereof being informed, I cut two or three with my Sword, and by breathing a Vein, let Shitan (the Devil) out, who was crept into their Fancies, and led them as they do a startling Jade, to smell to what their Wall-Eyes represented amiss; where we found an Host of Flies, the Subject both of our Fear and Wonder, which the sultry Heat and Moisture had generated into Being, the certain Prodromus of the ensuing Rain, which follow'd us from the Hills.

This gave my Thoughts the Contemplation of that Miraculous Bush crowned with Innocent Flames, that gave to Moses so pleasant and awful a Prospect; the fire that consumes every thing, seeming rather to dress than offend it."

VERSE 532. The first best work of the Creator's hands.] Literally the first creation of BRAHMA and first may refer to time, or to degree; it most probably here means best; So MILTON speaking of EVE.

Oh Fairest of creation, last and best,
 Of all God's works. Paradise lost 9, 896.

We now enter upon perhaps the most pleasing part of this elegant little poem, the description of the YACSHA's wife. I may perhaps come under the denomination of those who according to the illiberal and arrogant criticism of such a writer as a Mr. PINKERTON prove, "That the climate of India, while it inflames the imagination, impairs the judgment," when standing in very little awe of such a poetical censor, I advance an opinion, that we have few specimens either in classical or modern Poetry, of more genuine tenderness or delicate feeling.

Annotation.

VERSE 535. Whose lips like Bimbas show.] The Bimba (Bryonia grandis) bears a red fruit to which the lip is very commonly compared.

VERSE 537. The Chacraváci is the ruddy goose (Anas Casarca), more commonly known in India, by the appellation, Brahmany Duck or Goose. These birds are always observed to fly in pairs during the day, but are supposed to remain separate during the night: in the Hindoostanee Philology of Messrs. GILCHRIST and ROEBUCK, an amusing account of the popular belief on this subject is thus given, “ This bird in the “ poetry of the Hindus is their turtle dove, for constancy and connubial affection,
“ with the singular circumstance of the pair being doomed for ever to nocturnal separa“ tion for having offended one of the Hindu divinities (Munis or Saints) whence,

“ Chukwa chukwee do june in mut maro ko,e “ Ye mare kurtar ke ruen bich hora ho,e

“ To aim thy shafts or puny thunder,

“ At these poor fowls a hapless pair,

“ If we believe popular tradition and assertions, the cause is so far confirmed by the “ effect observable in the conduct of these birds to the present day, who are said to “ occupy the opposite banks of a water, or stream regularly every evening, and exclaim
“ the live long night to each other, thus

“ Chuckwa muen a,oon? Nuheen nuheen chucku,ee,

“ Say shall I come my dear to thee,

“ Ah no indeed that cannot be,

“ But may I wing my love to you,

“ Nay chuck alas this will not do.”

VERSE 540. Half of my soul and partner of my life.] So MILTON,

Part of my soul I seek thee and thee claim,

My other half,

(जीवित्तमेद्वितीयं) “ My second existence,” are the words of the original; and the other expression, my half, is not more uncommon in Sanscrit than in western poetry; thus these tender, and as Mrs. MALAPROP thinks, profane expressions of endearment, seem to have obtained a very extensive circulation: my life, my soul are common to most of the European languages, and the most frequent epithet, by which a mistress is addressed in Persian or Hindoostance ان جان is of a similar import. Amongst the Romans, vita and anima were used in the same manner, or even in the temperate warmth of friendship, as HORACE calls VIRGIL,

Animæ dimidium meæ,

Half of my soul,

And PROPERTIUS addressing his mistress calls her his life;

Æratas rumpam, mea vita, catenas,

I'll burst, my life, the brazen chains.

We may suppose the Romans derived these pretty words from the Greeks, and indeed as we learn from Juvenal 6, 194, they were very fond of employing, though not in the most becoming manner, the original terms Ζηη και ψυχη , the English translation of which has been given at some length by Mrs. TIGHE, in her poem of Psyche, and with some addition by Lord BYRON in his Anglo-Greek song, the burthen of which is the old sentiment in a modern antique shape, or my life I love you in the Ζηη με σας αγαπω of the Greek of the Morca.

Nipped by chill sorrow, as the flowers enfold,
Their shrinking petals, from the withering cold.

I view her now! long weeping swells her eyes,
And those dear lips, are dried by parching sighs; 544
Sad on her hand her pallid cheek declines,
And half unseen through veiling tresses shines;
As when a darkling night the moon enshrouds,
A few faint rays break straggling through the Clouds. 548

VERSE 541. Nipped by chill sorrow as the flowers enfold.] So in Lord LITTLETON'S Monody.

A sudden blast from Appenninus blows,
Cold with perpetual snows;
The tender blighted plant shrinks up its leaves, and dies.

VERSE 543. Long weeping swells her eyes.] In this she resembles the Lesbia of Catullus.

Flendo turgiduli rubent oculi,
Her swollen eyes are red with weeping.

Now at thy sight I mark fresh sorrows flow,
 And sacred sacrifice augments her woe;
 I mark her now, with fancy's aid retrace,
 This wasted figure, and this haggard face; 552
 Now from her favorite bird she seeks relief,
 And tells the tuneful Sáricā her grief,
 Mourns o'er the feathered prisoner's kindred fate,
 And fondly questions of it's absent mate. 556

Annotation.

VERSE 550. And sacred sacrifice augments her woe.] Thus LAODAMEIA to PROTESILAUS in OVID.

Thura damus lacrymamque super,

We offer incense up, and add our tears.

The commentators however are not agreed how to interpret this passage in the original text, (वलिव्याकुला) nor the expression, (निपततिपुरे) "She falls before thee," they seem however to conceive it means, that the approach of the Cloud reminding her of its being the period at which absent husbands usually return home, she recollects that the return of her own lord is proscribed, and therefore either falls in a swoon, or with excess of affliction: the sacrifice is to be performed to render the Gods propitious, or it is a sacrifice called काकवलि usually performed by women at the beginning of the rainy season: some interpret पुरे "In the city," not, "Before, in front."

VERSE 554. The Sáricā (Gracula religiosa) is a small bird better known by the name of Maina; it is represented as a female, while the Parrot is described as a male bird, and as these two have in all Hindu tales, the faculty of human speech, they are constantly introduced, the one inveighing against the faults of the male sex, and the other exposing the defects of the female: they are thus represented in the fourth story of that entertaining collection the Buetal Pucheesee.

मैना बोली कि पुरुष अधर्मी पापी दगावाज स्त्री हत्या करने वाले होते हैं । यह
 हुनकर तोता ने कहा कि नारी भी दगावाज जुठी बेवकुफ लालची हत्यारी होती है ॥

Ladies have always been distinguished for maintaining pet animals, and the fancy seems to have been equally prevalent in the east and west, and in ancient or modern times: the swallow of Lesbia, Passer delicæ meæ puellæ, may rival the Sárica of the wife of the Yacsha, and Bullfinch of Mrs. TEROCKMORTON: see COWPER'S POEMS.

VERSE 557. In vain the lute for harmony is strung.] The lute is here put for the Veena or Been, a stringed instrument of sacred origin, and high celebrity amongst the Hindus. In Bengal however players on this instrument are very rarely met with, and amongst the natives of this province, the English fiddle is its substitute: in the Jatras or Dramatic performances still current amongst them, I have seen the entrance of NÁREDA, the traditionary inventor of the Veena, bearing in its stead a violin. The Veena is much the most harmonious and scientific of all the Hindu instruments of music: a description of it may be found in the first Volume of the Asiatic Researches.

VERSE 558. Robe-neglected is here put for मलिनवस्त्रे dirty clothes, so LAODAMEIA says

Et quæ possum squalore tuos imitare labores, &c.

And with my squalid vesture ape thy toils.

VERSE 560. Our race's old commemorative strain.] "The verse made in honour of my kindred" a circumstance that points out some affinity to the songs of the ancient minstrels, and family bards.

The falling tear that from reflexion springs,
 Corrodes incessantly the silvery strings;
 Recurring woe still pressing on the heart,
 The skilful hand forgets its grateful art, 564
 And idly wandering strikes no measured tone,
 But wakes a sad wild warbling of its own.

At times such solace animates her mind,

Fæmineâ tardas fallimus arte moras,

With arts, as women use, we cheat the lazy time.

VERSE 570. That graced with monthly piety the door.] The Hindus pay a species of adoration to many inanimate objects: amongst others the door way, or door post receives such homage as is rendered by hanging up a flower or a garland there once a month.

Thence reckons up the period since from home,
 And far from her, was I compelled to roam; 572
 And deeming fond my term of exile run,
 Conceives my homeward journey is begun.
 Lightened by tasks like these the day proceeds,
 But much I dread a bitterer night succeeds: 576
 When thou shalt view her on the earth's cold breast,
 Or lonely couch of separation rest,
 Disturbed by tears those pallid cheeks that burn,
 And visions of her dearer half's return. 580

 Conceals the charms, no more her pleasing care; 588
 And with neglected nails her fingers chase,
 Fatigued, the tresses wandering o'er her face.

Neglecting the ornament of this part especially, has been in all ages, except the present perhaps, an indication of grief; we have thus in OVID.

*Nec mihi pectendos cura est prebere capillos,
 Nor yield I now my tresses to the comb.*

THEOCRITUS takes the hair off entirely, from one of his amorous damsels, Idyll 2, 89.

VERSE 645. MAIT'HILÍ is a name of SITA, derived from Mit'hila, the place of her nativity, and the modern Tirhut: the allusion relates to the discovery of her in Lanca, by RÁMA'S envoy HANUMAN, the monkey chief, said to be the son of the wind.

VERSE 151. Scarce less than mutual meeting to the heart.] They have a proverb similar to this in the Hindoostanee language, "a letter is half a meeting," the expression is common in the Poetry of the Rekhtu, and occurs thus in a Ghuzul by JIRAT.

کہتے ہیں کہ مکتوب یہی ہی نصف ملاقات

It also exists in the Arabic language, and is thus given in one of the exercises of Capt. LOCKETT'S translation of the Mecut Amil, and the Shereh Mecut Amil, or an Arabic Grammar, and Commentary.

"Correspondence they say is half an interview."

Being, of years protracted, aid thy friend,
 And with my words thine own suggestions blend ;
 Say thus ; ‘ Thy lord o’er RÁMA’s mountain strays,
 ‘ Nor cares but those of absence blight his days ; 656
 ‘ His only wish by me his friend to know,
 ‘ If he is blest with health, that thou art so ;
 ‘ For still this fear especially must wait,
 ‘ On every creature of our passing state. 660
 ‘ What though to distance driven by wrath divine
 ‘ Imagination joins his form with thine ;
 ‘ Such as I view is his emaciate frame,
 ‘ Such his regrets, his scorching pangs the same ; 664

VERSE 659. For still this fear especially must wait.] It is to be recollected here that even these heavenly beings are of a perishable nature, and subject to the infirmities of existence: the whole are swept away at each Maha pralaya or destruction of the universe,
 Which like the baseless fabric of a vision,
 Leaves not a wreck behind.

- ' To every sigh of thine, his sigh replies,
 ' And tears responsive trickle from his eyes.
 ' By thee unheard, by those bright eyes unseen,
 ' Since fate resists, and regions intervene, 668
 ' To me the message of his love consigned,
 ' Pourtrays the sufferings of his constant mind ;
 ' Oh, were he present, fondly would he seek,
 ' In secret whiser that inviting cheek ; 672
 ' Woo thee in close approach his words to hear,
 ' And breathe these tender accents in thine ear.'
 " Goddess beloved, how vainly I explore,
 " The world to trace the semblance I adore ; 676
 " Thy graceful form the flexile tendril shews ;
 " And like thy locks the peacock's plumage glows ;

Annotations.

VERSE 679. Mild as thy cheeks the moon's new beams appear.] Comparing a beautiful face to the moon has been supposed peculiar to oriental poets; instances however may be found in English verse; perhaps that passage in POPE, where speaking of an amiable female and the moon, he says, “Serene in virgin modesty she shines,” may not be exactly in point, although the general idea is similar. SPENSER however is sufficiently precise.

Her spacious forehead like the clearest moon,
 Whose full grown orbe begins now to be spent,
 Largely displayed in native silver shone,
 Giving wide room to Beauty's regiment.

VERSE 682. But only view combined these charms in thee.] This turn of the compliment, closely faithful to the original, conveys a high idea of the gallantry of a Hindu Bard; and as this gallantry cannot be the ten times repeated retail of Romantic folly, or Chivalrous frenzy, it may be considered as the natural expression of unsophisticated tenderness. We have in these lines a complete description of beauty agreeably to Hindu fancy, and I do not think the series of comparisons will much suffer, by being contrasted with any similar series in classical or modern writers. I am not aware indeed that so continued and simple a strain of imagery is often to be found in the latter, and it may be doing them an injustice to bring forward as analogous a passage and its imitations which is certainly of inferior beauty. To begin with POPE.

Sylvia's like autumn ripe, yet mild as May,
 More bright than morn, yet fresh as early day:

This as well as the rest of the Pastoral is borrowed from THEOCRITUS, OVID, and “ E'en in these wilds our unrelenting fate,

“ Proscribes the union, love and art create;

VIRGIL. In the 7th Eclogue of the latter Poet, these comparisons occur.

Nerine Galatea, thymo mihi dulcior Hyblæ,

Candidior eyenis, hederâ formosior albâ,

Oh Galatea nymph, than swans more bright,

More sweet than thyme, more fair than ivy white. WARTON.

This is an imitation of THEOCRITUS in his 11th Idyll.

Λευκώτερα παλίας ποτιδείν, ἀπαλωτέρα δ' ἀρνός,

Μόσχῳ γαυροτέρα, Φιαρωτέρα ὄμ. Φακος ὠμῶς

Softer than Lambs you seem, than curds more white,

Wanton as calves before the uddered kine,

Bright as the unripe fruitage of the vine. FAWKES.

OVID also has imitated and amplified this same passage.

Candidior nivei folio Galatea ligustri,

Floridior pratis, longo procerior alno,

Splendidior vitro, tenero lascivior hædo,

Lævior assiduo detritâ œquore conchis,

Solibus hybernis, æstivâ gratior ambrâ,

Nobilior pomis, platano conspectior altâ,

Lucidior glaciæ, maturâ dulcior uvâ,

Mollior et cygni plumis, et lacte coacto,

Et si non fugias riguo formosior horto. METAMOR: B. 13.

DRYDEN has translated, and much improved this passage:

Oh lovely Galatea, whiter far,

Than falling snows; and rising lilies are,

More flowery than the meads, as crystal bright,

Erect as alders, and of equal height;

“ When with the colors that the rock supplies,
 “ O'er the rude stone thy pictured beauties rise,
 “ Fain would I think, once more we fondly meet;
 “ And seek to fall in homage at thy feet;
 “ In vain; for envious tears my purpose blight,
 “ And veil the lovely image from my sight.

More wanton than a kid ; more sleek thy skin,
 Than orient shells that on the shore are seen ;
 Than apples fairer when the boughs they lade ;
 Pleasing as winter sun, or summer shade :
 More grateful to the sight than goodly plains,
 And softer to the touch than down of swans,
 Or curds new turned ; and sweeter to the taste,
 Than swelling grapes that to the vintage haste,
 More clear than ice, or running streams that stray,
 Through garden plats, but Ah ! more swift than they.

OVID's description is very much in the style of Persian Poetry, and infinitely less appropriate, less simple and less delicate than the passage above. We may add another specimen of perhaps superior merit, from one of that school which can never be too highly rated ; the Lover in one of FORD's dramas thus describes his mistress.

View well her face, and in that little round,
 You may observe a world of variety:
 For coral, lips ; for sweet perfume, her breath ;
 For jewels, eyes ; for threads of purest gold,
 Hair ; for delicious choice of flowers, cheeks ;
 Wonder in every portion of that form.

VERSE 685. When with the colors that the rock supplies.] “ Having painted you with mineral colors ;” (घादुरगैः) that is, according to the Commentators with red chalk, &c.

“ Why should the God who wields the five-fold dart,

“ Direct his shafts at this afflicted heart;

Annotations.

Our very limited acquaintance with the high land which is the scene of the Yacsha's exile, prevents our specifying the mineral substances which he may be supposed to have employed: the expression in the text however is one of many circumstances that render it probable, that the mountains which run across the northern-most part of the Peninsula, are rich in the objects of mineralogical enquiry: we know that copper mines have been discovered in the eastern extremity of them, the Ore of which is very productive: The Salagram stones or Ammonites are found in the Narmada, and the several kinds of Macshicas, a class of ores not yet investigated, are usually called नदीज and ताप्तीज or River-born, and Tapti-born, in reference to their being found in the course of the Tapti river.

VERSE 691. Why should the God who wields the five-fold dart.] CA'MADÉVA, the Hindu CUPID, is represented, as the Eros of the Greeks, armed with a Bow and arrows; These weapons are of peculiar construction and most poetically formed; the bow is of sugar cane, the bow string consists of a line of bees, and the arrows are tipped each with a separate flower; the weapons and application of the allegory, will be best explained by a verse in Sir WM. JONES's, hymn to this Deity.

He bends the luscious cane, and twists the string,
With bees how sweet, but ah! how keen their sting:
He with five flowrets tips the ruthless darts,
Which through five senses pierce enraptured hearts:
Strong Chumpa, rich in odorous gold,
Warm Arca nursed in heavenly mould;
Dry Nagesar in silver smiling;
Hot Kriticum our sense beguiling,
And last to kindle fierce the scorching flame,
Love shaft, which Gods bright Béla name.

In the Romaunt of the Rose, there is something of a similar allegory: CUPID is armed with “ten brode arrows,” of which, “five were shaven well and dight,” and of a nature to produce virtuous attachment; while the other five, “also black as fiend in hell,” were Pride, Villaine, &c. and of pernicious properties.

“ Nor spare to agonize an aching breast,
 “ By sultry suns, and banishment oppressed ;
 “ Oh ! that these heavy hours would swiftly fly,
 “ And lead a happier fate, and milder sky. 696

“ Believe me Dearest that my doom severe,
 “ Obtains from heavenly eyes the frequent tear ;
 “ And where the spirits of these groves attend,
 “ The pitying drops in pearly showers descend ; 700

VERSE 699. And where the spirits of these groves attend.] St'hali Dévatas are literally the Deities of the soil ; so completely has Hindu like Grecian faith, peopled inanimate nature ; our poetical creed is addicted to a similar practice, as in the beautiful modern imitation of the ancient Drama, TOBIN'S Honey moon, where Zamora exclaims,

And if as some believe,
 There is a spirit in the waving woods ;
 Life in the leaping torrent ; in the rocks,
 And seated hills, a contemplative soul,
 Brooding on all things round them ;
 Here, to all nature, I repeat my Vow,
 Never to love but you.

VERSE 710. Has it not touched; does it not breathe of thee?] We have here another elegant and tender compliment, in a strain even superior to the similar thought in BEN. JOHNSON'S admired little Ode from the Greek.

 And sent it back to me,
 Since when it looks and smells I swear,
 Not of itself but thee.

“ Who trust myself, nor sink beneath my care;

Annotations.

VERSE 717. Let then my firmness save thee from despair.] We are scarcely prepared for this sudden fortitude of the Yacsha, but it is not by any means unnatural: the task of consoling partners in affliction, necessarily diverts the mind from its own distress; the lofty reliance upon one's self here recommended, is analogous to the advice given by the dream which JUPITER sends to AGAMEMNON. HOMER's Iliad. B. 2d.

σὺ δὲ σῆσιν ἔχε Φρεσὶ

Do you rely upon your own mind.

Or it is something in the manner of a passage in the elegant poem of CATULLUS addressed to Himself.

*Quin te animo offirmas, teque istinc reducis,
Et Diis invitis, desine esse miser,
Trust to thy self, on strength of soul rely,
And hostile Gods, and wretchedness, defy.*

GOLDSMITH's Traveller winds up with morality of this description when he remarks.

Still to ourselves in every place consigned,
Our own felicity we make or find.

MILTON's strain however in Satan's sublime apostrophe to Hell, is still more elevated.

Hail horrors hail! and thou profoundest Hell,
Receive thy new possessor: one who brings,
A mind not to be changed by place or time;
The Mind is its own place, and in itself,
Can make a Heaven of Hell, a hell of Heaven.

Reference to this noble principle is very frequent in the writings of the Hindus. The Atmana Bódha or Knowledge of Spirit, a small treatise which contains the ethical part of the Vedanta philosophy, and which has been lately translated and published by Dr. TAYLOR,

- “ Trust to futurity, for still we view ;
 “ The always wretched, always blest are few ; 720
 “ Life like a wheel’s revolving orb turns round ;
 “ Now whirled in air, now dragged along the ground.

“ He who has made the pilgrimage of his own spirit, a pilgrimage in which there is no concern respecting situation, place, or time, which is every where ; in which neither cold nor heat are experienced, which bestows perpetual happiness and freedom from sorrow ; he is without action, knows all things, pervades all things, and obtains eternal beatitude.” A fine passage inculcating the same feeling occurs in MĒNU, where the legislator exhorts a witness to speak the truth.

“ The soul itself its own witness, the soul itself is its own refuge ; offend not thy conscious soul, the supreme internal witness of men.” Sir WM. JONES’s Translation.

VERSE 720. The always wretched always blest are few.] We have here a fine tone of morality, in which the writings of the Hindus are generally very abundant : the vicissitudes of fortune have been commented on much in the same strain by a great variety of poets, amongst whom the Sanscrit bard is entitled to a pre-eminent station. Several passages, and indeed whole poems, De Fortunâ are given in Burmānus; as thus in Epigram 113. By AUSONIUS.

*Fortuna nunquam sistit in eodem statu,
 Semper movetur, variat et mutat vices,
 Et summa in imum mergit, ac mersa erigit.
 Fortune in one position never stays,
 But still unceasing and unwearied strays,*

- “ When from his serpent couch that swims the deep,
 “ Sárangí rises from celestial sleep; 724
 “ When four more months unmarked have run their course;
 “ To us all gloom; the curse has lost its force:
 “ The grief from separation born expires,
 “ And Autumn’s nights reward our chaste desires. 728

And still diversifies each human state,
 Exalts the lowly, or subverts the great.

Again in the same collection we meet with fortune’s wheel.

*Tuta nec in solido rerum Fortuna favore est,
 Cum minime credas, impulit illa rotam.*

No trust in fortune’s favor should’st thou feel,
 When least expected, lo! she whirls her Wheel.

Tibullus consoles himself with a similar reflection,

*Vexatur celeri fors levis orbe rotâ,
 Fate round the world is driven on whirling wheel.*

VERSE 724. The serpent couch is the great snake ANANTA, upon which VISHNÚ, or as he is here called the holder of the bow Sarnga, (the horn bow) reclines, during four months, from the 11th of Áshárhá to the 11th of Cartic or as it has occurred in this year (1813) from the of 23d June to the 26th of October: the sleep of VISHNÚ, during the four months of the periodical rains in Hindoostan, seems to bear an emblematical relation to that season; it has been compared to the Egyptian Hieroglyphical account of the sleep of HORUS, typical of the annual overflow of the Nile, by the late Mr. PATERSON in his ingenious essay on the origin of the Hindu religion; Asiatic Researches Vol. 8.

- “ Once more I view thee as mine eyes unclose, “ Laid by my side, and lulied by soft repose ;
 “ And now I mark thee startle from thy sleep,
 “ Loose thy enfolding arms, and wake to weep ; 732
 “ My anxious love long vainly seeks reply ;
 “ Till, as the smile relumes that lucid eye,
 “ Thy arch avowal owns, that jealous fear,
 “ Affrighted slumber, and aroused the tear. 736
 “ While thus, Oh Goddess with the dark black eyes,
 “ My fond assurance confidence supplies ;
 “ Let not the tales that idle tatlers bear,
 “ Subvert thy faith, nor teach thee to despair : 740

VERSE 748. Nor ask that promise nor expect reply.] We cannot help pausing here to remark the ingenuity of the Poet in the conduct of his work. He sets out with excusing the apparent absurdity of the Yacsha's addressing himself to a Cloud as to a rational being, by introducing a pleasing and natural sentiment, see Verse 32. The Cloud has now received his charge and something is expected by way of reply, expressive either of refusal or assent. To have given the Cloud any thing like the faculty of speech, would have been
