"Make haste—my little Rachel—do,
 As hath this little orphan Boy,
 There is a little unpretending Rill
 Little we see in Nature that is ours;
 When little could be gained from that rich dower
 Forthwith that little cloud, in ether spread
 Because the lovely little flower is free
 Deep in the vale a little rural Town
 This little bay; a quiet road
 Of little infants, when their eyes
 Have romped enough, my little Boy!
 And this the little blind Boy knew;
 The blind Boy's little dog took part;
 Within this little lonely isle
 The little trembling flowers that peep
 Make merry, wives! ye little children, stun
 Showed little of his state;
 Go forth, my little Book! pursue thy way;
 Deserve a thought! but little known to fame—
 Shoot but a little way—'tis all they can—
 Grows from a little edge of light
 And what the little careless innocent
 How little that she cherishes is lost!
 As little she regards the sight
 And little children by the hand
 From Were, and all the little rills
 Apart, some little space, was made
 Thus checked, a little while it stayed;
 A little thoughtful pause it made;
 "As thou these ashes, little Brook! wilt bear
 And seeming, at a little distance, slow,
 How little boots that precedent of good,
 From Little down to Least, in due degree,
 And joins his little children in their sleep.

 Gave to her thought, that in a little space
 "My little Child, then will I come for thee
 For it was done a little while ago—
 Within a little time, as hath been found,
 Through all this May that I have little sleep;
 Full little joy have I now of thy cry.
 Hence hast thou stayed a little while too long;
 For whose gets of love a little bliss,
 Was baffled still, the crumbs in little showers
 And the blue sky, one little span of earth
 Sheltered, and flourish in a little grove
 Of high way side, and with the little birds
 Yet Adam prized little the feast and the bowl,—

 His wish was gained: a little time
 See, at his feet, some little plan or chart,
 The little Actor cons another part;
 Thou little Child, yet glorious in the might
 For then, ev'n then, the little heart would beat Rest, near the little steps the little pathway twines,
 Rest, round their little plots of wheat glad;
 Peeps out the little speck of smiling green,

Little—continued.

The little cottage of domestic Joy,
 Soon flies the little joy to man allow'd,
 Stretched forth his little arms and smil'd.
 Her little charge consign'd.
 The multitude of little rocky hills,
 Six little ones at home had left,
 No little hand of yet remembered names
 A little boat tied to a willow tree
 A little weekly stipend, and we lived
 I travelled round our little lake, five miles
 From little emitties and low desires,
 Such glory was but little sought by me,
 And little won. Yet from the first crude days
 With few wise longings and but little love,
 In narrow cares, thy little daily growth
 Honoured with little than filial love.
 Attended, doubtless, with a little pride,
 Much pains and little progress, and at once
 Once more the circuit of our little lake,
 Little, in this abstraction, did I see;
 Acquaintances of every little child,
 And lingered near the door a little space,
 Food for the hungry ears of little ones,
 Still undischarged; yet doth she little more
 Trooping together. Little suits it me
 May not come near him, nor the little throng
 Each little drop of wisdom as it falls
 Wert thou extinguished, little would be left
 A little yellow, canvas-covered book,
 A little space of intermediate time
 Rests underneath the little rock-like pile
 His little stage in the vast theatre,
 Though but a little family of men,
 How little they, they and their doings, seem,
 Intent on little but substantial needs,
 Of this I little saw, cared less for it,
 Some vagrant mother, whose arch little ones,
 And little hustling passions that eclipse,
 Prizing but little otherwise than I prized
 Abject as this would in a little time
 The doleful sequel. But our little bark
 Divided from me by one little month,
 And one, moreover, little graced with power
 (If like desires of innocent little ones
 Be little profited, would see, and ask
 In which the little oft outweighs the great;
 Which, seeing little worthy or sublime
 Great truths, than touch and handle little ones.
 And teach the little birds to build their nests
 Theme this but little heard of among men—
 He found the little he had stored to meet
 Could they have lived as do the little birds
 That for a little time it stole away
 A little while; then turned her head away
 And, when she ended, I had little power
 And for her little orphan boy, she said,
 She told me that her little babe was dead,
 The little child who sate to turn the wheel
 Beneath our feet, a little lowly vale,
 Though not of want: the little fields, made green
 To weather-fend a little turf-built seat
 Though little suited to surrounding things:
 "A little mourner, whom it is my task
 Fronting the window of that little cell,
 Into my little sanctuary rushed—
 "I, who weep little, did, I will confess,
 Honour my little cell with some few tears
 This little Vale, a dwelling-place of Man,
 A humming bee—a little tinkling rill—
 Some little space disjoined, a pair were seen,
 Little to praise, and nothing to regret,
 The little sinuous path of earthly care,
 Accorded little with his present mind;
 But all within the sphere of little things;
 Though soothing, and the little floating isles
 The little flower her vanity shall check;
 Or grassy bottom, all, with little hills—
 May yet become more little; wagging thus
 On stormy waters, tossed in a little boat
 The little rills, and waters numberless,
 Our little Page: the rustic pair approach;
 For one day's little compass, has preserved
 With little mitigation. They escape,
 His soul is pit! How little can be known—
 With little change of general sentiment,
 Screened by its parent, so that little mound
 And little would his presence, or proof given
 Is lost within a little tuft of trees;
 That little shady spot, that sylvan tuft,
 Too little checked. An active, ardent mind;
 Though simply, from their little household farm;
 His little smiling Grandchild, were no more.
 But Heaven was gracious; yet a little while,
 Whither, as to a little private cell,
 Mother and little children, boys and girls,
 Or in dispatch of each day's little growth
 These, bred to little pleasure in themselves,
 Happily spared, a little Gothic niche
 And multitudes of little floating clouds, 613 Desc. Sk. Quarto 601

Little—continued.

For you, in presence of this little band
 His little rake with cunning sidelong look,
 When in the woods the little Fowles
 The little cottage that is near,
 On thee, bright Spring, a bashful little one,
 Which to his father's little farm belonged,
 Of full contentment, in a little shed
 Differing but little from the Man elsewhere,
 Sprinkles these little pastures but the same
 Their little boons of animating thought
 The heifer in yon little croft belongs
 Those little fountains, sparkling in the sun,
 In the bare twigs, each little budding place
 Some little feeble stars, but all is thine,
 The multitude of little rocky hills,
 How little dost thou speak of earthly gloom!
 As little as the unblemish'd Queen of Night,
Littleness. Is littleness; that he who feels contempt
 Their littleness was not; the least of things
 With the perverse attempt, while littleness
Little-one. This Little-one—'t' outcme to the heart—
 But you were then a tottering Little-one—
 "My own dear Little-one will sigh
 Who with him?—even the senseless Little-one.
 My careless Little-one, for thee and thine!"
 Are bearing him, my Little-one," he said,
 That feeds him; and the tottering little-one
 While she was yet a little-one, had learned.
 Yet this departed Little-one, too long
 A Little-one, subjected to the arts
 While yet an innocent little-one, with a heart
Little-ones. And her brown little-ones around her leads,
 A month, sweet Little-ones, is past
 Not loth, and listening Little-ones, heart-touched,
 their fancies feed.
 To all the Little-ones on sinful earth
 Yon busy Little-ones rejoice that soon
 And yours, my buried Little-ones! am I;
 Ye little-ones! Earth shudders at your fate,
 Your hands, dear Little-ones, do all
Liturgy. Recites the holy liturgy,
Live. Here will I live, of all but heaven disowned,
 Nor could we live together those poor boys and I;
 He cried—"Do pity me! That thou shouldst live
 Dear Father! how could I forget and live?
 That's all—God save you, Sir. Ha! as I live,
 He does his Master credit. As I live,
 Who live in these disputed tracts, that own
 We'll lead him to the Convent. He shall live,
 And none look grave but dotards. He may live
 Who are we, Friends? Do we not live on ground
 It cannot live with thought; think on, think on,
 That I should ever live to see this moment!
 Of living without knowledge that you live:
 For this most cruel murder: let him live
 A Man by pain and thought compelled to live,
 So let us strive to live, and to our Spirits will be given
 "These Tourists, heaven preserve us! needs must live
 You live, Sir, in these dales, a quiet life:
 Live to such end is what both old and young
 To live in peace upon his father's land,
 A place in which he could not hear to live:
 When I was well, I wished to live,
 Where they may live, with no one to behold
 And should he live a thousand years,
 'Tis Johnny! Johnny! as I live.
 I wished that thou shouldst live the life they lived,
 Nay, Boy, be of good hope!—we both may live
 You live each moment of your day
 But thou wilt live with me in love;
 We two will live in honesty.
 And there, my babe, we'll live for aye."
 To live for many a day."
 And should I live through sun and rain
 Let them live upon their praises;
 And there for gentle pleasure live;
 To be confounded with live growths,
 While she and I together live
 Lyre! though such power do in thy magic live
 She seemed to live; her thoughts her own;
 To live at liberty.
 And once again he wished to live
 "How is it that you live, and what is it you do?"
 Is of the clime in which we live;
 That not by bread alone we live,
 Predestined here to live.
 Does no one live near this green grass?
 Shall live the name of Walton: Sage benign!
 Among the lonely mountains.—Live, ye trees!
 To live and die, the peace of heaven his aim;
 Thy Art be Nature; the live current quaff,
 Divine communion; both do live and move,
 With all that live?
 With them no strife can last; they live
 And, had it been thy lot to live
 To live in peace on shore.
 Wisdom doth live with children round her knees:

Live—continued.

The destiny of Man, and live in hope.
 Live, and take comfort. Thou hast left behind
 Think that a State would live in sounder health
 But the live scales of a portentous nature;
 Have we not known—and live we not to tell—
 Your kindred Deities, Ye live and move,
 Thy law, and live henceforth in peace, in pure good will.
 Shall live enrolled above the starry spheres.
 On the great flood were spared to live and move.
 Stringent as flesh can tolerate and live;
 To be; by Faith, not sight, his soul must live;
 To live, and act, and serve the future hour;
 Came those live herbs? by what hand were they sown
 If not, O Mortals, better cease to live!
 His rank 'mong freborn creatures that live free,
 Verily so to live was an awful choice—
 Yet in this moral Strain a power may live,
 And live at home in blameless ease,
 "Plant it,—by this we live or die."
 To live and die in a shady bowyer,
 Dead—but to live again on earth.
 To live and move exempt from all control
 What joy to live, what blessedness to die!
 That mutually assisted they may live
 Your spirit freely let me drink, and live.
 I live and sing my idle songs
 Of friends, who live within an easy walk,
 Great gains are mine; for thus I live remote
 Live in the spirit of this creed;
 And in the light of truth thy Bondman let me live!
 When the live chords Alcans smote,
 If Power could live at ease with self-restraint!
 Would that the little Flowers were born to live,
 How could he think of the live creature—gay
 Into strange woods, where he at large may live
 And forced to live on alms, this old Man fed
 There insects live their lives, and die;
 Will often live in one small cottage;
 That, live as long as live he may,
 Save in the rolls of heaven, where hers may live
 Nor ever while I live Love's yoke to draw.
 Now say—in such belief I'll live and die;
 Yet if I live it shall amended be,
 And live and die I will in thy belief;
 Will live, and spread, and kindle: even such minds
 The prosperous and unthinking, they who live
 Who live a life of virtuous deceacy,
 To breathe and live but for himself alone,
 Long yet may'st thou live I for a teacher we see
 And this alone—the life which now I live
 And live as long as its pure stream shall flow.
 But truly did He live his life. Urbino,
 Did Fernor live and die.
 Is something that doth live,
 To live beneath your more habitual sway.
 Thanks to the human heart by which we live,
 Now living, or to live in future years.
 Of zeal and just ambition, than to live
 But huge and mighty forms, that do not live
 In youth, but oh! what happiness to live
 We live as if those hours had never been.
 That mocks the recreant age we live in, then
 Itself a living part of a live whole,
 Man, if he do but live within the light
 All things are put to question; he must live
 Or else not live at all, and seeing too
 Of these will live till man shall be no more.
 The time of trial, ere we learn to live
 Without contamination doth she live
 How could the innocent heart bear up and live!
 Month after month. Obscurely did I live,
 And genuine virtue they possess who live
 Must live within the very light and air
 As found among the best of those who live—
 To rouse them; in a world of life they live,
 The name of Calvert—it shall live, if words
 All but a scattered few live out their time,
 His animal being; in them did he live,
 And by them did he live; they were his life.
 That live in darkness. From his intellect
 —And surely never did there live on earth
 Might live on earth a life of happiness.
 She had no wish to live, that she must die
 With this content, that he will live and die
 Oh! best are they who live and die like these.
 "And now I live! Oh! I wherefore do I live?"
 Take the live heritage from the dead, and strip
 Who, having o'er the past no power, would live
 As soldiers live by courage; as, by strength
 —Endeavour thus to live; these rules regard;
 You walk, you live, you speculate alone;
 "We live by Admiration, Hope, and Love;
 Of the live deer, or goat's depending beard,
 The will to reason's law, can strictest live,
 Where he had lived, and could not cease to live,
 "There live who yet remember here to have seen
 Its birthplace; none whose figure did not live

We perish also; for we live by hope
And so we live, or else we have no life.
The wish for liberty to live—content
In crowded cities, without fear shall live
From the live rock with grace inimitable
Live through Heaven's eternal year:
Dear Aristogiton, live;
The things that live, the things that move?

I do not live for what I see.
My friends, you live, and yet you seem
And yet, my friends, you live and move.
When I could live without a pain,

"What happy fortune were it here to live!
(For I who live to register the truth
Shall live,—it is not in their power to die."

Lived. See Long-lived, Short-lived.

"We lived in peace and comfort; and were blest
Bring to her but; and so the Wretch has lived
Have I lived many days—my sleep was bound
If she had never lived I had not done it!—
The life he had lived there; both for the sake
If still his Brother lived, or to the file
Yet not while Walter lived to—far, though their parents

Though from the cradle they had lived with Walter,
It seems, these Brothers have not lived to be
He was the child of all the dale—he lived
She lived unknown, and few could know
As one that lived ungrateful for the stay
The visitor retired. Thus lived the Youth
So lived he till his eightieth year was past
That thrifty Pair had lived. For, as it chanced,
While in this sort the simple household lived
Have we all lived; yet, if these fields of ours
And I have lived to be a fool at last
Both of them sleep together: here they lived,
I wished that thou shouldst live the life they lived,
May'st bear in mind the life thy Fathers lived,
Once lived a happy life!
But ill he lived, much evil saw,
My whole life I have lived in pleasant thought,
By Voices how men lived of old.
That men have lived for whom,
For she had learned how Peter lived,
Lived thankful for day's light, for daily bread,
That 'tis a fault in Us to have lived and loved
And thus among these rocks he lived,
He from his birth had lived.
Thus lived he by Loch Leven's side
How loud! yet lived in peace with shame.
In One who lived unknown a shepherd's life
Was happy that she lived to greet
And none had lived before you!
Full five-and-thirty years he lived
For thou hadst lived till every thing that cheers
Yet still he lived in pining discontent,

There lived, and on the cross His life resigned,
Lived with honour on his lands.
As in the eye of Nature he has lived,
I, who on shipboard lived from earliest youth,
Lived I—then yielded to a slow disease.
So lived I, and repined not at such fate:
If he had lived, of Him whom I deplore,
O, he was good, if e'er a good Man lived!
From week to week, from month to month, we lived
A little weekly stipend, and we lived
My dwelling-place, and lived for ever there
With my own modest pleasures, and have lived
I made it, for it only lived to me.
Of those who lived distinguished by the badge
A d spot in which she lived, and through a grace
Re-ving in their bold, henceforth I lived
Baffle: my understanding: how men lived
Mary! may now have lived till he could look
Of rich Clitumnus; and the goat-herd lived
Shunned and not tolerated, freely lived
Than this lived never, nor a more benign,
Lived not to see, nor what we now behold,
Lived in the shade; and to Harmodius known
Lived long enough, nor in the least survived
I said unto the life which I had lived,
This Vision; when and where, and how he lived;—
So not without distinction had he lived,
His calling laid aside, he lived at ease:
Thus had he lived a long and innocent life.
Could they have lived as do the little birds
No tidings of her husband; if he lived,
She knew not that he lived; if he were dead,
Chequered the green-grown batch. And so she lived
Than a soldier among soldiers—lived and roamed
So lived he; so he might have died. But now,
Full seventy winters hath he lived, and mark!
Relinquished, lived dependent for his bread

I lived and breathed; most grateful—if to enjoy
Recalls! He lived not till his locks were nipped
Where he had lived, and could not cease to live,
That they have lived for harsher servitude,
And lived by his forbearance. From the coast
Lived in an age conspicuous as our own
To most strange issues. I have lived to mark
Air unimprisoned, and had lived at large;
Who, but for this intrusion, would have lived,
Thus would have lived, or never have been born.
I could have lived another day.

That from his very childhood he had lived
Than others have, for Michael had liv'd on
And lived so long in quiet, side by side.

Liveller. And grey-haired men look up with liveller brow,—

Pleasure on pleasure crowded in, each liveller than the last.
No livelier love in such a place could be:
Stirred him up to liveller wrath;
Glisten with a liveller ray:
A liveller sisterly resemblance show
Have we pursued, with liveller stir of heart
Gain a fresh impulse, run a liveller course;
Partakes a liveller cheer;
Impelled to liveller pace. But now, my Book!
Ne'er kindled with a liveller streak
With liveller hope a region wider far.
Crush out a liveller fragrance from the flowers
Liveller, and flinging out less guarded words
Rest, and be welcomed there to liveller joy.
Far liveller than hewilded traveller feels,
Of liveller interest to his hopes and fears,
Livellest. Livellest of the vernal train
Never enlivened with the livellest ray
All colours,—and the livellest streak
The fairest, softest, livellest of them all!
Source of their livellest hope, and tenderest
prayer!—
With livellest peals of birth-day harmony:
With which, more zealous than the livellest bird

Expressing livellest thoughts in lively words
Than any livellest sight of yesterday.

Livellness. A more than sunny livellness.

More than inherent livellness and power.
Yet, with a revelation's livellness,
The livellness of dreams. Nor did he fail,

Livelong. In youth's keen eye the livelong day was bright,

And, passing thus the live-long day,
Throughout the live-long day,
In youth's wild eye the livelong day was bright,
In soft forgetfulness the livelong hours,
Lively. So lively a remembrance of their griefs,
Whose skill can speed the day with lively cares,
Prompt, lively, self-sufficing, yet so meek
A course of lively pleasure;
The lively beauty of the leopard shows?
Clear, loud, and lively is the din,

Shoot forth with lively power at Spring's return;
Which we will now resume with lively hope,
Were roused, and lively natures rapt away!
Expressing livellest thoughts in lively words
And ere our lively greeting into peace
Upon my naked branches—lively thoughts
"The lively Grecian, in a land of hills,
Lively and beautiful, in rural forms,
Thy lively spirits to partake,

Liver. Happy, happy Liver,

Livered. In liveried poverty.
Noise that brings forth no liveried Page of state,

Liver, yet a liveried schoolboy, in the depths

Liveries. With chaises, grooms, and liveries, and within

Livers. Such as grave Livers do in Scotland use,

Loose livers he can make abate their vice,
Pure livers were they all, austere and grave,

Lives. That lives but in the torpid acquiescence

The Eagle lives in Solitude! Even so,
All thoughts whose idle composition lives
Who lives but to protect the weak or injured.
Without the strength to rise. Well, well, he lives,
For twenty lives. The daylight dawned, and now—
A gem that glitters while it lives,
Of one who came to disunite their lives
Then close the peaceful lives of flowers?
Proof that the hermitic still lives,
Of all that love their lawless lives,
Lives in the light of youthful glee,
Is Fortune's frail dependant; yet there lives
Hence lives He, to his inner self endeared;
Lives in exultantly in precious gems,
Else it deserts him, surely as he lives,
Even as if bent on perishing. There lives
That Francis lives, he is not dead?
Your brother lives—he lives—is come

Living—continued.

"Now from the living pass we once again:
Which tells her that a living child is born;
Are seen incorporate with the living rock—
Of living nature, cannot be portrayed
Or to propitiate. And, if living eyes
Transmitted far as living memory,
Thy living chaplet of fresh flowers and fern,
How sweet thus living without life to lie,
To many living now, have I described.
Yield not, to scorn, or sorrow, living men
Far from the living and dead wilderness
Even he, who yoked the living to the dead,
Lizard. To rest where the lizard may bask in the palm
And the green lizard and the gilded newt.

Lo. But, lo! the Alps, ascending white in air,
Lo, where she sits beneath yon shaggy rock,
But lo! the boatman, overawed, before
Lo! where through flat Batavia's willow groves,
Lo from the flames a great and glorious birth;
His raiment of angelic white, and lo!
A second darted by;—and lo!
That way look, my Infant, lo!
And, lo!—up Castriegg's naked steep
They dart across my path—but lo,
"Protesláus, lo! thy guide is gone!
Lo! when the gates are entered, on each hand,
Thou speak'st—and lo! the polar Seas
Lo! the dwindled woods and meadows;
Lo! the clouds, the solemn shadows,
But lo! the vanished company again
—I sang; and lo! from pastimes virginal
Lo, in the vale, the mists of evening spread!
One loud cascade in front, and lo!
Through the grey west; and lo! these waters,
stealed
And lo! with crimson banners proudly streaming,
For lo! the Imperial City stands released.
Lo, Justice triumphs! Earth is freed!
Lo! while I speak, the labouring Sun
Lo! in the burning west, the craggy nap
Grasped in his hand; and lo! with upright sword
Lo! he harangues his cohorts—there the storm
Lo! by a destiny well known
And lo! those Birds, far-famed through Love's dominions,
And, for like use, lo! what might seem a zone
Lo! ships, from seas by nature barred,
Lo! busy towns spring up, on coasts
Lo! how the people are flocking in,
Again he lifts his eyes; and lo!
Almost as soon as seen:—and lo!
"Lo, Francis comes," they were who cried,
Lo! Discord at the altar dares to stand
Lo! John self-tripped of his insignia—crown,
Thus spake—and lo! a Fleet, for Gaul address,
Their forefathers; lo! sects are formed, and split
Spread through all ranks; and lo! the Sentinel
Save by Self-will. Lo! from that distant shore,
And lo! a stables pile, the Abbey of St. Bees.
Lo! where the Moon along the sky
When, lo! the ice, so thinly spread,
"My faithful followers, lo! the tide is spent.
But lo! where darkness seems to guard the mouth
Lo! Streams that April could not check
For lo! an uncouth melancholy sight—
By mouths of Innocents, lo! here Thy might;
Lo, yonder saw I mine own Lady dance,
Lo! yonder is my own bright Lady free,
The Sheep-boy whistled loud, and lo!
Lo! Fear looks silent down on Uri's lake,
Lo! by the lazy Seine the exile roves,
Lo! from th' innocuous flames, a lovely birth!
When lo! the heavenly goddess thus began,
She sheds her beam, and, lo! the shades dissolve;
But lo! what sudden cloud has darkened all
Sound there was none—but, lo! an uncouth shape,
The champion, Jack the Giant-killer! Lo!
Lo! everything that was indeed divine
I learnt to dream of Sicily; and lo,
All objects from my sight; and lo! again
Fell like a flash, and lo! as I looked up,
"Lo! what is here?" and, stooping down, drew forth
With timid lapse;—and lo! while in this strait
Of these wild hills. For, lo! the dread Bastille.
The waste of death; and lo! the giant oak
Lo! in such neighbourhood, from morn to eve,
But lo! where from the rocky garden-mound
Lo! Smiling Nature's lavish hand
Too distant are they for plain view, but lo!
Load. See Cart-load.
A few short steps to totter with their load,
From her full eyes their watery load released.
I see them yonder—what a load
The Wagon moves—and with its load
Was stopped, and could not breathe beneath the load

Load—continued.

Eternal Lord! eased of a cumbrous load,
Bent by a load of Mulberry leaves!—most hard
Earth, till the flesh lay on him like a load,
When with her load she turned about,
Importunate and heavy load!
And, ruining from the cliffs their deafening load
Be the dead load of mortal ills forgot,
A vagrant Merchant under a heavy load
With my accustomed load; in heat and cold,
Or shall the groaning Spirit cast her load
Composing darkness, with a quiet load
Rid of a vexing and a heavy load,
Loaded. Life left my loaded heart, and closing eye;
Caught by the hawthorns from the loaded wain,
Loads. Will come with loads of January snow,
That loads the middle heaven; and clear and bright
But whence yon swarm that loads the western bridge,
Loan. The loan with usury.
Loathe. Even as I do; but I should loathe the light,
The same that tempted me to loathe the gift.—
Here, there, a banded few who loathe the chain
Loathad. Of a tyrannic Master whom they loathed.
By Poets loathed; from which Historians shrink!
Loathes. Hardening a heart that loathes or slights
Loathing. Yet loathing life—till anger is appeased
And with an oriental loathing spurned, Loathsome. To loathsome vaults, where heart-sick anguish tossed,
To upper air from Mammon's loathsome den.
A loathsome pit, whence noisome scents exhale;
That could no longer hold its loathsome charge,
Local. Survive of local sympathy,
To match the spark of local fire,
The local Genius ne'er befriends
The local Deity, with oozy hair
With local sanctities in trust,
Yet a dread local recompense we found;
These local recollections ne'er can cloy;
The local Genius hurries me aloft,
Ye kindred local influences that still,
That name, a local Phantom proud to mock
But now once more the local Heart revives,
And aid my verse, content with local bounds
Her natural sanctuaries, with a local soul
A local spirit of his own, at war
Old usages and local privilege,
Transcendent to all local patrimony,
And local accidents, shall tend alike
A local summons to unceasing toil!
Localise. To localise heroic acts—could look
Localised. Nor deem that localised Romance
Or clond of darkness, localised in heaven;
Localises. Or fancy, localises Powers we love.
Locarno. But let us hence; for fair Locarno smiles
Hence shall we seek where fair Locarno smiles
Locarno! spreading out in width like Heaven,
Locarno's. O'er breezeless water, on Locarno's lake,
And thus proceeding to Locarno's Lake,
Loch. Alone upon Loch Veol's heights,
And by Loch Lomond's braes,
Thus lived he by Loch Leven's side
Of spirit, from Loch Leven's side,
On the green margin of Loch Tay,
The maize reaches of Loch Katherine,
Loch Lomond's beauties to discuss,
Lock. Lovers lock up as pearls, though oft no better
Hath yet his bracelet or his lock of hair, Locked. Each in the other locked; and down the path,
Of airy voices locked in mission,—
And regular as if locked in certainty—
Locked in our world's embrace through weal and woe;
Locked in a dungeon needs must eat the heart.
Shall he frequent these precincts; locked no more
—With backward gaze, lock'd joints, and step of pain,
A frame locked up in wood and stone, dot still,
Of that gone by, locked up, as in the grave;
Locked up in quiet. For myself, I fear
From least beginnings; how, together locked
Are memorable, but from him locked up,
Locks. Down fell in straggling locks his thin grey hair;
Redundant are thy locks, thy lips as fair
Thy temples fringed with locks of gleaming white,
Those watery locks, that bloodless cheek!
As golden locks of birch, that rise and fall
Bright locks of silver hair, thick spread,
His thin autumnal locks where Monks abide
Would braid his golden locks at Wisdom's side;
Clapped hands, and shook with glee their matted
locks;
Those heights (like Phoebus when his golden locks
Those locks from summer's golden skies,
And 'mid his bright locks never shorn
Beat his grey locks against his withered face.
Play with the locks of his white hair,

Lofty—continued.

Spread by a brotherhood of lofty elms,
 And when these lofty elms once more appeared
 A linnet warbled from those lofty elms,
 Of water, or some lofty eminence,
 And well those lofty brethren bear their part
 Till, chancing on that lofty ridge to pass
 Lofty, and steep, and naked as a tower.
 By natural piety; nor a lofty mind,
 That are not lofty as her rights; aspiring
 Rising behind a thick and lofty grove,
 In some calm season, when these lofty rocks
 The lofty sight [? site], by nature framed to tempt
 An anxious duty! which the lofty site,
 To lofty raised; and to the highest, last
 How, from his lofty throne, the sun can fling
 Along the sharp edge of yon lofty crags,
 Throughout the lofty range of these rough hills,
 With brodered housings. And the lofty Steed—
 Low things with lofty) I too shall be doomed.
 Or, in its progress, on the lofty side
 A lofty stature undepressed by time,
 Where the bare columns of those lofty firs,
 Woods waving in the wind their lofty heads,
 Cherish, and lofty Minds approve the past—
 And as these lofty barriers break the force
 The Alban Sites and walls of lofty Rome.

Lofty-minded. Those lofty-minded Lawgivers shall meet,

Log. I'll fill your carcass like a log
 Logic. Which spake perpetual logic to my soul,
 What memory and what logic! till the strain
 And Truth had blest the logic of his sword.
 Logician. And Peter is a deep logician
 Loire. Washed by the current of the stately Loire.
 Upon the borders of the unhappy Loire,
 Along that very Loire, with festive mirth
 When by the gliding Loire I paused, and cast
 Loiret's. Yes, as I roamed where Loiret's waters glide
 Loiter. Or let me loiter, soothed with what is given,
 Oft does the White Doe loiter there,
 To blush for me. Thou loiter not nor halt
 To loiter wilfully within a creek,

Loitered. "The roads I paced, I loitered through the fields;

I loitered long ere I began
 Unchecked, or loitered 'mid her sylvan combs,
 Loiterer. The loiterer, not unnoticed by his comrades,
 Both to allure the casual Loiterer,
 I play the loiterer: 'tis enough to note
 Are gone, what summer loiterer will regard,
 Loiterers. Some other loiterers beguiling
 Loitering. The loitering traveller hence, at evening, sees

The Vagrant must, no doubt, be loitering somewhere
 The loitering journey to its end.
 Thou hast been loitering on the road!
 On, loitering Muse—the swift Stream chides us—on!

Loitering in glassy pool
 A pleasant loitering journey, through three days
 Than I beheld loitering on calm clear nights
 Loitering, I watched the golden beams of light
 Alone, with loitering step, and upward eye

Lomond's. And by Loch Lomond's braes,
 Danc'd to the murmuring rill on Lomond's wave,
 Loch Lomond's beauties to discuss,

London. Went up to London, found a master there,
 Whether for London bound—to trill
 To London were the Chieftains bent;
 In London, "and masquerading,"
 To London—a sad emigration I ween—
 Like London with its own black wreath,
 Of London, and from cloisters there, thou camest,
 At full command, to London first I turned,
 And thought of London—held me by a chain
 Summoned from school to London; fortunate
 The very shrillest of all London cries,
 London, to thee I willingly return.
 In London chiefly harboured, whence I roamed,

London's. He dwells in the centre of London's wide Town;

This did I feel, in London's vast domain.
 I ranged at large, through London's wide domain,
 Lone. The lone black fir, forsakes the faded plain;
 Thy open beauties, or thy lone retreats;
 Such tale of this lone mansion she had learned,
 Reposing on a lone sick-bed;
 Who first, weighed down by scorn, in some lone bower

Toll from thy loftiest perch, lone hell-hird, toll!
 Thou too be heard, lone eagle! freed
 Meek aspirations please her, lone endeavour,
 Lone Flower, hemmed in with snows, and white as they

To the lone shepherd on the hills disclose
 In his lone Isle, the dreams of night;
 Lone vigils through the hours of sleep,
 Guarded by lone San Salvador;
 Than a lone obelisk, 'mid Nubian sands,

Lone—continued.

Slept amid that lone Camp on Hardknot's height,
 Like a lone criminal whose life is spared.
 Where he is perched, from yon lone Tower
 Lone Sufferer! will not she believe
 In his lone course the Shepherd oft will pause,
 Still is he seen, in lone sublimity,
 An abhey in its lone recess,
 Remote St. Kilda, lone and loved sea-mark
 By whom in that lone place espied?
 When the lone shepherd sees the morning spread
 And to the lone Recluse, whate'er
 In these lone vales, if aught of faith may claim,
 On the lone mountain top, their chang'd estate.
 Round a lone fane the human Gem mourn,
 And down the lone vale sails away
 Like a lone shepherd on a promontory.
 Walks a lone Monk, when service hath expired,
 The heacon crowning the lone eminence,
 Nothing but happiness, in some lone nook,
 A lone Enthusiast, and among the fields,
 From this lone valley, to a central spot
 A lone pedestrian with a scanty freight,
 Musing, the lone spot with my soul agrees

Loneliest. (It is the loneliest place of all these hills)
 The loneliest place we have among the clouds.
 Through busiest street and loneliest glen

Loneliness. Thy loneliness: or shall those smiles he called

Her loneliness she cheers:
 To mitigate and cheer thy loneliness.
 A penitential loneliness.
 Your dual loneliness. The sacred tie
 Of loneliness gave way to empty noise
 The feeling pleasures of his loneliness,
 By loneliness, and goodness, and kind works,
 The loneliness of this sublime retreat!
 Of rustic loneliness: that grey-haired Orphan—
 From year to year in loneliness of soul;
 She withering in her loneliness. Be this

Lonely. Where peace to Grasmere's lonely island leads,

Bright beams the lonely mountain-horse illumine
 Or yell, in the deep woods, of lonely bound.
 By lonely farms and secret villages.
 From age to age, throughout his lonely bounds
 With shrill winds whistling round my lonely way
 Nay, Traveller! rest. This lonely Yew-tree stands
 So lonely, but that thence might come a pang
 From lamp of lonely toll-gate streamed athwart
 the night.
 A lonely Spital, the belated swain
 Only were told there stood a lonely cot
 In these my lonely wanderings I perceived
 The innocent Boy, else shelterless, his lonely head must hide.

Yet, not the less, in children's hymns and lonely prayer delights.

Once in a lonely hamlet I sojourned
 He lengthens out his lonely shout,
 That lonely union, privacy so deep,
 Hath to this lonely Summit given my Name.
 By myself a lonely pleasure,
 While in her lonely bower she tries
 The last stone of a lonely hut;
 I wandered lonely as a cloud
 Yet it befell that, in this lonely place,
 While he was talking thus, the lonely place,
 "I'll think of the Leech-gatherer on the lonely moor!"
 Though lonely, a deserted Tower;
 Though each is but a lonely Tower:—
 The sleep that is among the lonely hills
 But oft, in lonely rooms, and 'mid the din
 Of the deep rivers, and the lonely streams,
 Who, for thy service trained in lonely woods,
 Of nature, and the lonely elements,
 So blooms this lonely Plant, nor dreads
 Pervade the lonely ocean far
 —The light had left the lonely taper,
 The like on heath, in lonely wood;
 Her dwelling was a lonely house,
 Till to a lonely house he came,
 Faith in the whispers of the lonely Muse,
 Among the lonely mountains.—Live, ye trees!
 Produced as lonely Nature or the strife
 Measuring the periods of his lonely doom,
 Or where "mid" lonely heights and hows,"
 Hath led me to this lonely place.
 Whose Fancy in this lonely Spot
 Lies buried in this lonely place.
 And in the lonely Highland dell
 Within this little lonely isle
 Shot lightning through this lonely Isle!
 And, even to sadness, lonely and serene,
 Breathed from a soft and lonely instrument,
 That lurks by lonely ways!
 Where our Milton was wont lonely vigils to keep
 She spied the lonely Cast-away,
 On infant bosoms lonely Nature lies.
 The lonely Primrose yet renews its bloom,
 But love, as Nature loves, the lonely Poor

 A Herdsman on the lonely mountain-tops,
 The light extinguished of her lonely hut,
 This lonely Cottage. At the door he stood,
 Of this one cottage and this lonely dale,
 The peasants of these lonely valleys used
 To lonely nature's casual work : they bear
 And soon the Tenant of that lonely vale
 —Wild were the walks upon those lonely Downs,
 Free as the sun, and lonely as the sun,
 Here closed the Tenant of that lonely vale

 I saw the Tenant of the lonely vale
 This, in the lonely dell discoursing, you
 Passed on, while still his lonely efforts found
 In lonely reading found a meek resource :
 In whom, as by her lonely hearth she sate,
 Of Margaret, sinking on the lonely heath
 To place those hillocks in that lonely guise.
 Striving to entertain the lonely hours
 The pensive Sceptic of the lonely vale
 From her own lonely altar ? Do not think
 Beaten by lonely billows, hear the songs
 Of every clime, to till the lonely field,
 To the one cottage in the lonely dell :

 And long shall be so yet—God willing!" . . .
 Nor could the waggon long survive, . . .
 Though timid scruples checked me long; . . .
 Our roads, through many a long year's space, . . .
 A temper known to those who, after long . . .
 That long has leaned forward, leans hour after . . .
 hour!— . . .
 Long is it as a barber's pole, or mast of little boat, . . .

 Pace the long avenue, or glide adown . . .
 Listening, and listening long, in rapturous mood, . . .
 On Deva's banks, ye have abode so long; . . .
 But, long as cook shall crouch from household perch . . .
 Go faithful Portrait! and where long hath knelt . . .
 This Work, I now have gazed on it so long . . .
 Love pitying innocence, not long to last, . . .
 Our minds when, lingering all too long, . . .
 Continued long as life shall last. . .
 And battles long ago: . . .
 Long after it was heard no more. . .
 The treasured dreams of times long past, . . .
 Hath long been of thy family. . .
 Nor long this mystery did detain . . .
 Through long, long windings of the hills, . . .
 As long as earth shall last. . .
 And long the story will repeat . . .
 When her long life hath reached its final day: . . .
 How long shall vengeance sleep! Ye patient . . .
 Heavens, how long? . . .
 Through the long chain of Alps from mound to . . .
 mound . . .
 Alas! what boots the long laborious quest . . .
 O'erweening Statesmen have full long relied . . .
 And loud and long of Winter's triumph sing! . . .
 And sage Mnemosyne,—full long debarred . . .
 From your first mansions, exiled all too long . . .
 Of popular reason, long mistrusted, freed . . .
 England's illustrious sons of long, long ages; . . .
 And long procession—there to lie, . . .
 Above whose heads the tide so long hath rolled, . . .
 That moved in long array before admiring eyes. . .
 From a long train—in hooded vestments fair . . .
 Than the fair Forms, that in long order glide, . . .
 Across thy long deep Valley, furious Rbone! . . .
 —Long may these homely Works devised of old, . . .

And grasp of purpose, long ere sailed his ship . . .
 Long has the dew been dried on tree and lawn; . . .
 We have pursued, through various lands, a long . . .
 As a true man, who long had served the lyre, . . .
 Ere long their fates do each to each conform: . . .
 Not long the Nuptials were delayed; . . .
 Bandusia, prattling as when long ago . . .
 Such fruitless questions may not long beguile . . .
 That told of days long past, when here I roved . . .
 Rough ways my steps have trod;—too rough and . . .
 long . . .
 Long left without a warder, . . .
 Here stood an Oak, that long had borne affixed . . .
 Relics of long and distant wars— . . .
 Harp! we have been full long beguiled . . .
 Nor did he fail ere long to hear . . .
 In the cold grave hath long been laid: . . .
 Of trellis-work in long arcades, . . .
 Such confict long did he maintain, . . .
 And she hath wandered, long and far, . . .
 Long past, delights and scrowings? . . .
 Of a long life; and, in the hour of death, . . .
 Nor long (that crossed) would Grecian hills detain . . .
 His whole life long tills it, with heartless toil . . .
 Where long and deeply hath been fixed the root . . .
 Have long borne witness as the Scriptures teach?— . . .
 Vigils, and fastings rigorous as long; . . .
 Like ships before whose keels, full long embayed . . .
 In dusty sequestration wrapt too long, . . .
 And long privation, now dissolves amain, . . .
 And sickness, listen where they long have lain, . . .
 Closing the sacred Book which long has fed . . .
 With evening lights, advance in long array . . .
 Shall long survive, to shelter the Abode . . .
 Long lines of mighty Kings—look forth, my Soul! . . .
 The sun has long been set, . . .
 But long as god-like wish, or hope divine, . . .
 Of power, through long and melancholy war. . .
 Of wealth and power and honours, long for rest; . . .
 Even till long gazing hath dimmed his eye, . . .
 To cheer the long dark hours of vacant night— . . .
 With step preclusive to a long array . . .
 Mists rose to hide the Land—that search, though . . .
 long . . .
 And revelling in long embrace with thee, . . .
 But in old times Love dwelt not long . . .
 Through all the long green fields has spread, . . .
 Which they shall long obey: . . .
 At which the poor old Man so long . . .
 And all the long year through the heir . . .
 "Yon cloud with that long purple cleft . . .
 Better than such discourse doth silence long, . . .
 Long, harken silence, square with my desire; . . .
 Long hast Thou served a man to reason true; . . .
 How nourished here through such long time . . .
 I long for a repose that ever is the same. . .
 And long, unspeaking, sorrow: . . .
 Long, long in darkness did she sit, . . .
 As whose enters shall ere long perceive) . . .
 Long as the heat shall rage, let that dim cave . . .
 Or, from long stress of real injuries fly . . .
 The tender Infant who was long . . .
 Before my window, oftentimes and long . . .
 Hath it not long been said the wrath of Man . . .
 Then mark him, him who could so long rebel, . . .
 And long ere eze the uprising of the Sun . . .
 Long as we gazed upon the form and face, . . .
 The whole day long, and all days of the year. . .
 And in Death's arms has long reposed the Friend . . .
 But Fortune, who had long been used to sport . . .
 You, whom, though long deserted, be loved best; . . .
 (By throbbing waves long undermined) . . .
 Long as the sun his gladsome course renews. . .
 Long, and long was he unheard of: . . .
 A long posterity reowned, . . .
 The long, warm, lightsome summer-day, . . .
 Now Harry he had long suspected . . .
 That, live as long as live he may, . . .
 Through long and perilous fight; . . .
 So long the lost as dead, . . .
 In long succession, pre-existing ghosts . . .
 Troubled long with warring notions . . .
 Long impatient of Thy rod, . . .
 After long exercise in social cares . . .
 And longing of sweet thoughts that ever long . . .
 Hence hast thou stayed a little while too long; . . .
 As long as in that swooning-fit I lay, . . .
 If long time from thy mate thou be, or far, . . .
 Long for sole moments in a weary life . . .
 And, long as he can wander, let him breathe . . .
 Been doomed so long to settle upon earth . . .
 For his live had so long been replenished with . . .

Long—continued.

Long yet may'st thou live ! for a teacher we see . . .
 Long patience hath such mild composure given,
 Long to continue in this world ; a world
 Toils long and hard.—The warrior will report
 With an untoward fate was long involved . . .
 In odious litigation ; and full long,
 And live as long as its pure stream shall flow.
 Not long your pastime to prevent ;
 Long time his pulse hath ceased to beat ;
 Returns from her long course i'—anon . . .
 Long as these mighty rocks endure,—
 Too long abashed thy Name is like a rose . . .
 As long as verse of mine shall breathe the air . . .
 But it will not be long . . .
 Long rails into the shallow lake extend ;
 And long, with wistful gaze, his walk survey'd
 And desert stone-chaï, all day long, is heard . . .
 And with long rays and shades the landscape shines ;
 Long may ye roam these hermit waves that sleep,
 The solemn curfew swinging long and deep ; . . .
 Long streaks of fairy light the wave illumine . . .
 The death-dog, howling loud and long, below ;
 The summer long to feed from stage to stage ;
 'Till Hope-deserted, long in vain his breath
 My heart, alive to transports long unknown,
 Chasing those long dreams the falling leaf
 Britain, who long her warriors had adored,
 Long undecided lay th' important choice . . .
 Through the long day to swear and tittle ; . . .
 For it had long been droughty weather ; . . .
 Paced the long Vales—how long they were—and yet
 Troubling a heart that had been long at rest . . .
 He rais'd the howl, and took a long deep draught ;
 Too long insulted by the Spoiler's shock,
 From the vast city, where I long had pined
 Long months of peace (if such hold word accord
 Long months of ease and undisturbed delight
 Perhaps too there performed. Thus long I mused,
 No otherwise than as it lasts too long . . .
 Made one long bathing of a summer's day ;
 And by the waters, all the summer long . . .
 But husbanded through many a long campaign . . .
 After long absence, thither I repaired . . .
 Midway on long Winander's eastern shore,
 Beginning not long after that first time
 A prospect in the mind. 'Twere long to tell
 That gave thee liberty, full long desired,
 Albeit long after the importunate bell . . .
 Of those long vistas, sacred catacombs,
 Old humourists, who have been long in their graves,
 Long unsaluted, nor the sunny seat
 With half the length of a long field between . . .
 The long lake lengthened out its hoary line,
 Such pleasant office have we long pursued . . .
 When from our better selves we have too long
 My homeward course led up a long ascent,
 Long were his arms, pallid his hands ; his mouth
 Make a strange hack-ground. From his lips, ere long,
 As long as he shall be the child of earth,
 Of living nature, which could thus so long
 And long halloos and screams, and echoes loud,
 A long half hour together I have stood
 Beneath her and about her. May she long
 Who might have there been bathing. Long I watched,
 Sounding with grappling irons and long poles . . .
 A precious treasure had I long possessed,
 And, in the long probation that ensues,
 That cannot take long leave of pleasant thoughts . . .
 All winter long, whenever free to choose,
 With a long staff upon the sand, and thus
 Of that sole Sister, her who hath been long
 Of a long exile. Nor could I forget . . .
 That frame of social being, which so long
 That shall endure as long as man endures,
 Where England's sovereigns sit in long array,
 They give it welcome. Long ere heat of noon,
 Long springs and tepid winters, on the banks
 Ye long deep channels for the Atlantic's voice,
 There, 'tis the shepherd's task the winter long
 (Though they had long been carefully observed),
 Seated, with open door, often and long
 Ere long, the lonely mountains left, I moved,
 When, having thridded the long labyrinth
 Where'er it comes ! needful in work so long,
 Into a noisier world, and thus ere long
 How far they travel, and how long endure ;
 Fashioned his life ; and many a long discourse,
 The streets were still ; not so those long Arcades ;
 Of what the People long had been and were
 That, if France prospered, good men would not long Through months, through years, long after the last heat . . .
 In long orations, which I strove to plead . . .
 And how through hardships manifold and long
 And that the multitude, so long oppressed,
 Long time have human ignorance and gullit
 All ear ; but never long without the heart . . .
 Lived long enough, nor in the least survived . . .

We had not travelled long, ere some mischance . . .
 In times long past ; but still, from year to year,
 Long time in search of knowledge did I roage . . .
 With long long ways before, by cottage bench,
 Long mouldered, of barbaric majesty . . .
 Oh ! who is he that hath his whole life long . . .
 Oh ! our long labour ; we have traced the stream . . .
 Retained too long a countenance severe ; . . .
 When Nature, destined to remain so long . . .
 —I long before the blissful hour arrives . . .
 While yet a child, and long before his time,
 With long and ghostly shanks—which once
 seen . . .
 Thus had he lived a long and innocent life . . .
 The gooseberry trees that shot in long lank slips,
 He lingered long ; and, when his strength returned,
 "A sad reverse it was for him who long
 That had not cheered me long—ere, looking round
 Was ended, that long anxious day, I learned,
 To cheer us both. But long we had not talked
 'It grieves me you have waited here so long,
 'Tis long and tedious ; but my spirit clings
 From their first separation, nine long years,
 Through the long winter, reckless and alone ;
 He ceased. Ere long the sun declining shot
 From his long journeyings and eventful life,
 Greeted us all day long ; we took our seats . . .
 Mount slowly, sun ! that we may journey long,
 The Child, who long ere this had stilled his sobs,
 And long and hopelessly we sought in vain : . . .
 Through the long year in constant quiet bound,
 Through a long course of later ages, drove,
 So long, and be at once cast down for ever . . .
 Companions daily, often all day long ;
 To inquisition, long and profitless ! . . .
 To a long voyage on the silent deep ! . . .
 "Long wished-for sight, the Western World appeared ; . . .
 As long and perseveringly to mourn . . .
 Shall feel congenial stirrings late and long,
 And, all day long, moisten these flowery fields !'
 Throughout a long and lonely summer's day
 And from long banishment recall Saint Giles,
 Not long accustomed to this breathing world ;
 Yet where is glowing Summer's long rich day,
 Of long companionship, the artist's hand,
 Around us a domain where you have long . . .
 High on that mountain where they long have dwelt
 My words too long have hiddered." Undeterred,
 They may endure long as the sea surrounds
 To the mine's mouth ; a long and slanting track,
 Where he had long existed in the state . . .
 In which the Scottish Laird had long possessed
 A long stone-seat, fixed in the Church-yard wall ;
 Of their long twilight, pore upon her book
 Amid a perilous waste that all night long . . .
 They stayed not long.—The blameless Infant grew ;
 "With these high comrades he had revealed long,
 With which the Cure not long had been endowed :
 Of pastoral homesteads, had been long inlaid . . .
 Into its graveyard will ere long be borne
 Oft stretches toward me, like a long straight path
 How long, and by what kindly outward aids,
 And mark that daisied hillock, three spans long !
 Yet this departed Little-one, too long
 Long to protect her own. The man himself . . .
 In long procession calm and beautiful . . .
 Of her close tasks, and long captivity . . .
 Of what this stock hath long produced to enrich
 After long struggle, had escaped at last—
 Of music, lute or harp, a long delight
 So long unthanked) hast cheered a simple hoard
 Long as Heaven and Earth survive,
 There to defend themselves the winter long . . .
 Had stayed so long. The shepherd took his way
 This day, who dropped, or seemed to droop, so long ;
 And lived so long in quiet, side by side . . .
 Through this their mountain sanctuary. Long,
 Oh long may it remain inviolate . . .
 A stranger long ; nor will the blind man's guide,
 Whose nobler will hath long been sacrificed ;
 That other hope, long mine, the hope to fill
 To those, who all day long, through a busy life,
 And months, and let me add the long year through,
 A fugitive of fate. Long time was he . . .
 These seven long years to Grenville's onion head . . .
 All brothers, long endeared by kindred pain,
 So would I plead for York ; but long disgrace
 Long-hafted. Long-hafted hope's slow fever in his veins . . .
 Long-bearded. Beheld long-bearded teachers, with white wands
 Long-continued. In breaking up a long-continued frost . . .
 Long-continuing. Of long-continuing winter, he repaired . . .
 Long-deferred. And trembling grasp the long-deferred reward . . .
 Long-departed. Of the changed City's long-departed
 power, . . .

Long-deserted. Hallows once more the long-deserted
 Quize
Long-drawn. In long-drawn vista, rustling in the breeze;
 Saw, at a long-drawn gallery's dusky bound,
 Hosannas peeling down the long-drawn aisle,
 Sees long-drawn files, concentric rings
 Of long-drawn rampart, witness what they were.
 Battering the Temple's front, its long-drawn nave
 That girl her waist, spinning the long-drawn thread
 Up through the trenches of the long-drawn vales
Longed. Still longed for, never seen.
 By her sweet farewell looks, I longed to aid.
 And bloodshed, longed in quiet to be laid Vellombrosa! I longed in thy shadiest wood
 "Vallombrosa—I longed in thy shadiest wood
 She longed to ravish;—shall she plunge, or climb
 And can reap nothing better,—child-like longed
 For human habitation; but I longed
 Had swept away; and now her Spirit longed Long-enduring. Tough moss, and long-enduring mountain-plants,
Longer. Glimmered our dear-loved home, alas! no longer ours!
 Wanderers whose course no longer now agrees,
 But now no longer mine. You know Lord Clifford;
 A little longer stay in sight!
 That, afterwards, a little longer,
 Are withered; thou no longer canst be mine,
 —That pillow is no longer to be thine,
 And seems no longer in a hurry.
 And the guilt-burthened soul is no longer oppress.
 And breathless calms no longer dreaded,
 In hearts no longer young;
 No longer) with what ecstasy upborne
 Plead with the sovereign Sun for longer stay
 Shall they no longer bloom upon the stock
 The Lily floats no longer!—She hath perished.
 No longer: ye, whom to the saving rite
 Air slumbers—wave with wave no longer strives,
 Makes known, when thou no longer canst be seen,
 Which he can till no longer?
 Before the STONE OF POWER no longer stand—
 And, though no longer upon rapine hent,
 Those silent inmates now no longer share,
 If love exist no longer, it must die,—
 Its place no longer to be found;
 No longer, scattering to the heedless winds
 No longer would I in my bed abide,
 By this mishap no longer be dismayed,
 The day is more, and longer every night
 By longer way than he was wont to go;
 The mighty Minstrel breathes no longer,
 Nor longer naked be your way-worn feet,
 No longer steal their indurated hearts
 That the weight can no longer be borne,
 No longer breathe, but all be satisfied,
 Oft when the dazzling show no longer new
 No longer haunting the dark winter night.
 Some skill, and longer time than may be spared,
 But feeling it no longer. Our discourse
 But, for such purpose, flowers no longer grow:
 No longer a mute influence of the soul,
 That could no longer hold its loathsome charge,
 No longer keep their ground, by faith maintained
 The longer I remained, more desolate:
 No longer in subjection to the past,
 Melts, and dissolves, and is no longer seen.
 Humiliation, when no longer free.
 For all that can no longer feed themselves,
 A plant no longer wild; the cultured rose
 No longer led or followed by the Sons;
 Of that which is no longer needed, see
 No longer greeted—to the tottering sire,
 No longer flourish, he entirely gone,
Longest. Is the longest of the year.
 Take thy bliss, while longest, shortest,
 Even in the longest day of midsummer—
 The heaviest storms not longest last;
 He found the longest summer day too short,
 And longest life is but a day;
 The longest date do melt like frosty rime,
 At the calm close of summer's longest day,
 The earliest summoned and the longest spared—
 To swell thee into voice; nor longest drought Long-exiled. Long-exiled Dion marching at their head,
Long-expected. For some high day of long-expected pressure.
Long-expecting. A voice, from long-expecting thousands sent,
Long-favoured. Long-favoured England! be not thou misled
Long-forsaken. Above the hermit's long-forsaken cell!
 To books, and to the long-forsaken desk,
Long-frozen. My long-frozen heart grows warm!
Longing. The longing look alone on you.
 He towards his native country cast a longing look.
 With sailors longing for a breeze in vain,

Longing—continued.
 —Perplexed, and longing to be comforted,
 Is the longing of the Shield—
 Longing for his Beloved—who makes Ye who are longing to be rid
 And longing of sweet thoughts that ever long.
 And of that longing heaviness doth come,
 As thou dost mine with longing her to see,
 But speedily an earnest longing rose
 Vague longing, haply bred by want of power,
 Longing for skill to paint a scene so bright
 Of other longing, I pursued what seemed
 The longing for confirmed tranquillity,
 Of living man, though longing to pursue.
 And daily longing that the same were reached,
 A not unnatural longing felt,
 What longing would ye know?
 The longing, the contempt, the undaunted quest,
Longings. With love and longings infinite.
 Such earnest longings and regrets as keen
 With few wise longings and but little love,
 As may suppose longings of pure desire;
 And by ambitious longings undisturbed;
Long-linked. Hear ye that Whistle? As her long-linked Train
Long-lived. Through long-lived pressure of obscure distress,
 That long-lived servitude must last for ever.
 Under a long-lived storm of great events—
 But as the remnant of the long-lived tree
Long-lost. Thy long-lost praise thou shalt regain;
 'Mid that soft air, those long-lost bowers.
Long-loved. For Duddon, long-loved Duddon, 'tis my theme!
Long-parched. Brood o'er the long-parched lands with Nile-like wings!
Long-past. Better to thank a dear and long-past day
 Of long-past times, nor obsolete in ours.
 Vivid remembrance of those long-past hours;
 Of long-past banquetings with high-born friends:
Long-polluted. See Too-long-polluted.
Long-practised. With combinations of long-practised art
Long-privileged. And the long-privileged house left empty—swept Long-protected. The long-protected to assume the part
Long-reverenced. Long-reverenced titles cast away as weeds;
Long-roofed. This long-roofed Vista penetrate—but see
 The long-roofed chapel of King's College lift Longs. Look up—and help a hand that longs to set thee free."
 He longs to press her to his heart,
 Too clearly; feels too vividly; and longs
 Weary and faint, and longs to be released.
Long-suffering. Patience his law, long-suffering his school,
Long-suspended. Whose long-suspended rights are now on the eve
 A long-suspended office in the House
Long-treasured. Joy's second spring and Hope's long-treasured smile,
Long-tried. The Curate's Dog—his long-tried friend, for they
 The sober sympathies of long-tried friends.
Long-vanished. Long-vanished happiness refines.
Long-wished. Com'st thou long-wished for? After thousands lost,
Lonsdale. Lonsdale! it were unworthy of a Guest,
 Before thee, LONSDALE, and this Work present, Lonsdale's. Must honour still to Lonsdale's tail be bound?
Loe. And to the combat, Loe or Whist, led on Look. The longing look alone on you.
 And he can look beyond the sun, and view
 To glance a look upon the well-matched pair;
 And grey-haired men look up with livelier brow,—
 Is ever on himself doth look on one,
 When Fortune might put on a kinder look;
 Forth with the pair passed on; and down they look
 A look was in her face which seemed to say,
 When on his own he cast a rueful look.
 And look upon the pleasant face of Nature—
 Flashes a look of terror upon guilt,
 You will look down into a dell, and there
 This charge of thine, then ill befall thee!—Look,
 A look of mine would send him scouring back,
 This they can do, and look upon my face—
 With look as sad as he were dumb; the cur,
 I cast a look upon the Girl, and felt
 To look upon you. In a peasant's dress
 With such a look—it makes me tremble, Sir,
 But vigorous Spirits look for something more
 By showing that you look beyond the instant.
 To look upon the dead. Before we enter
 I look at him and tremble like a child.
 You say he was asleep,—look at this arm,
 Must needs step in, and save my life. The look

Look—continued.

Which doth play tricks with them that look on it :
 And none look grave but dotards. He may live .
 To share your triumph ? Yes, her very look,
 Defend the innocent. Lacy ! we look,
 To lisp the name of Father—could he look
 But softly ! we must look a little nearer,
 So pious in demeanour ! in his look
 But they will soon be lightened. Ay, look up—
 Ill can I hear that look—Plead for me, Oswald !
 To look up at this roof in storm or fair,
 Ay, come to me and weep. Yes, Varlet, look,
 Look at it—the flower is small,
 As, if you look up, you plainly may see ;
 And ring a sharp 'larum !—but, if you should look,
 "What ails you, child?"—she sobbed, "Look here!"
 "Alas, the mountain-tops that look so green and fair !
 For she looked with such a look, and she spake with such a tone,
 Look thou to Eternity !
 The Boy no answer made by words, but, so earnest was his look,
 Will look and scribble, scribble on and look,
 Many a long look of wonder : and at last,
 He towards his native country cast a longing look.
 To them who look not daily on thy face ;
 Look at the common grass from hour to hour :
 Look at the fate of summer flowers,
 I look—the sky is empty space ;

But when I cease to look, my hand is on my heart.

Do thou look gladly on the sight ;
 On me how strangely did he look !
 I'll look upon your tents again.
 I look at the fields, but I cannot go in !
 I look for ghosts ; but none will force
 Thou hast, I think, a look of ours,
 And looked, as mothers ne'er were known to look,
 To look his trouble in the face, it seemed
 I look upon thee, for thou art the same
 But 'tis a long time to look back, my Son,
 By word, look, deed, with hope that he might love
 again.
 Look up—and help a hand that longs to set thee
 free."

"Humble love in me would look for no return,
 One chiefly, who with voice and look
 Alas ! Alas ! that look so wild,
 By any who should look beyond the dell
 Who look upon the hills with tenderness,
 Look up ! and think, above your head
 That you might look at me and say,
 Look hut at the gardener's pride—
 He needs but look about, and there
 And one chance look to Thee should turn,
 Still as we look with nicer care,
 He turned, and watched with kindred look
 Take root (so seems it) and look up
 That way look, my Infant, lo !
 If you look to vale or hill,
 Look fairly like a lawful earning.
 But, pretty Maid, if you look near,
 Thence look thou forth o'er wood and lawn
 Across your meadowy bottom look,
 Which made me look a thousand ways
 Stirred with his staff, and fixedly did look
 Whene'er you look on it, 'tis plain
 Are but three bounds—and look, Sir, at this last—
 To look on nature, not as in the hour
 What doth she look on ?—whom doth she behold ?
 Whence angry perturbations,—and that look
 Not doubtfully perceived.—Look homeward now !
 Is mute ; and, in his silence, would look down,
 That opening—but a look ye cast
 And from aloft look down into a cove
 Look up—and you shall see me soon !
 And look, where clothed in brightest green
 And does no little cottage look
 A look more tender than severe ;
 'Twas but one mild, reproachful look,
 He looks, he cannot choose but look ;
 Well may you tremble and look grave !
 And look at Peter Bell !
 And made the good man round him look.
 A piercing look the Widow cast
 As many do, repining while they look ;
 Old Skiddaw will look down upon the Spot
 Angels of love, look down upon the place ;
 Yet I pursued her with a Lover's look ;
 Nor one look more exchanging, grief to still
 But by the Chieftain's look, though at his side
 Where herbs look up, and opening flowers are seen ;
 Shall look more bright—the happy, happier still ;
 Others look up, and with fixed eyes admire
 Perchance without one look behind me cast,
 The embarrassed look of shy distress,
 Look at him—look again ! for he
 To look on thee—delight to rove
 O Friend ! I know not which way I must look

Look—continued.

And calls a look of love into her face,
 And look and listen—gathering, whence I may,
 Look now on that Adventurer who hath paid,
 Burial and death : look for them—and descry,

Look round, and by their smiling seem to say,
 But, gradually a calmer look bestowing,
 What e'er we look on, at our side
 What eye can look upon thy shrine
 To share his wanderings ! him whose look
 While we look round with favoured eyes,
 Whose heaviest sin it is to look
 Trembling, I look upon the secret springs
 Given with a voice and by a look returned
 When gratitude, though disciplined to look
 To localise heroic acts—could look
 Look like a cloud—a slender stem the tie
 Drawn to his side by look or act of love
 An altered look upon the advancing Stranger
 Meanwhile, for further guidance, look
 Last lingering look of clay, that tames
 Moments, to cast a look behind,
 As this we look on. Distant Mountains bear,
 Sworn with chill rains, nor ever cast a look
 Look again, and they all are gone ;
 "Look, there she is, my Child ! draw near ;
 Look down, and see a griesly sight ;
 Look down among them, if you dare ;
 But look again at the radiant Doe !
 He glanced a look of lofty pride,
 But look not for me when I am gone,
 Of Bracepeth look in doubt and fear,
 On you we look, with dearest hope ;
 Then look at them with open eyes !
 To win some look of love, or gain
 And, with a look of calm command
 Though without one uplifted look,
 A look of pure benignity,
 The pleading look the Lady viewed,
 From look, department, voice, or mien,
 And thence look round her far and wide,
 To look upon Saint Mary's shrine ;
 A dear look to her lowly Friend ;
 By flames, look up to heaven and crave redress
 With understanding spirit now may look (While we look round) that Heaven's decrees are just :

Is to the sky while we look up in love ;
 Look only on the Gospel's brighter page :
 His drowsy rings. Look forth !—that Stream behold,
 Long lines of mighty Kings—look forth, my Soul !
 Look for the stars, you'll say that there are none ;
 Look up a second time, and, one by one,
 Look round ;—of all the clouds not one is moving ;
 Offenders, dost put off the gracious look,
 On British waters with that look benign ?
 Among the speechless clouds, a look
 Come forth, ye drooping old men, look abroad,
 A look of thine the wilderness pervades,
 "To look on tempests, and be never shaken ;"
 But look we now to them whose minds from far
 Look to thy plumage and thy life !—The roe,
 Which he forbears again to look upon ;
 "You look round on your Mother Earth,
 And from the look of the Falconer's eye ;
 The gentlest look of spring ;

Retirement then might hourly look
 His look of pitiable gratitude !
 She may look for serene weather ;
 Look up to Heaven ! the industrious Sun
 Thou and thy train are proud to look,
 Upon the mountains. Look at her, whose'er
 That posture, and the look of filial love
 On thee I look, not sorrowing ; fare thee well,
 To mutual tyranny a deadlier look ?
 Their first look—blinded as tears fell in showers
 Were tempting all astrir to look aloft or climb ;

To every act, word, thought, and look of love,
 329 * Thase breathing

But look, and to the watchful eye
 Her earnest tone, and look beaming with faith,
 No second look she cast,
 Go look on the fresh daisy ; then say I,
 And scanned them with a fixed and serious look
 Watches the aged Beggar with a look
 In look and motion, that the cottage cubs,
 And his bright eyes look brighter, set off by the streak
 With a look of such earnestness often will stand,
 Poor winter look fine in such strange masquerade,
 Through the lost look of dotage, is cunning and sly :
 'Tis a look which at this time is hardly his own,
 His look and hending figure, all bespeak
 I yet to see the look with which it braves,
 I love for one happy issue ;—and I look
 Such look the Oppressor might confound,
 Look round her when the heavens are bare,

Looked—continued.

And, looking backwards when he looked, mine eyes
Drew to the spot an anxious crowd; some looked
Not without trembling, we in safety looked
Of social life, I looked upon these things . . .
And now I looked upon the living scene;
Romantic almost, looked at through a space,
Not to be looked at by the common sun.
Looked out for admiration. Folly, vice,
Of those who passed, and me who looked at him,
Thus have I looked, nor ceased to look, oppressed
And manners which my childhood looked upon
Of most to move in, but that first I looked
I looked for something that I could not find,
Looked thitherward. One, reckoning by years,
Fresh as the morning star. Elate we looked
And on these spots with many gleams I looked Courage to them who looked for good by light
That once looked up in faith, as if to Heaven
And everything she looked on, should have had
Which, while I looked all round for my lost guide,
I looked in such anxiety of hope;
I chiefly looked (what need to look beyond?)
Fell like a flash, and lo! as I looked up,
That stared upon each other!—I looked round,
Rise up, and bathe the world in light! He looked—
The fence where that aspiring shrub looked out
The broken wall. I looked around, and there,
But, when I entered, Margaret looked at me.
And with a brighter eye she looked around
And well remember, o'er that fence she looked,
So calm and still, and looked so beautiful
Looked on this guide with reverential love?
We had looked down upon it. All within,
And pleased I looked upon my grey-haired Friend,
When ye looked down upon us from the crag,
But through all quarters looked for him in vain.
So saying, round he looked, as if perplexed;
And, with a holier love inspired, I looked Impudently;—looked up, and asked the Heavens
Respiring I looked round.—How bright the sun,
Carried so high, that every thought, which looked
Looked on the polar star, as on a guide
They looked; were humbly thankful for the good
I looked for counsel as unbending now;
—For me, I looked upon the pair, well pleased:
Even as the same is looked at, or approached.
I looked with steadiness as sailors look
Of prosperous fortune. On the fields he looked
From some commanding eminence had looked (Ill home for bird so gentle), they looked down
At this the boy looked round him, and his heart
And looked at him as with a poet's eye.
The station whence he looked was soft and green,
That must be looked for here, paternal sway,
Looked-for. But enters as a looked-for guest, Lookers. Deftly prolonged, though grey-haired lookers on . . .
Lookers-on. Of Lookers-on how pleased and proud!
The pride and pleasure of all lookers-on . . .
Look'st. "Thou look'st upon me, and dost fondly think,
Looking. See Back-looking, Backward-looking, Down-looking, Forth-looking, Forward-looking, Further-looking, Happiest-looking, Onward-looking.
Rooted I stood; for, looking at the woman,
And, looking down, espies
And, looking o'er the hedge, before me I espied
And, looking round, imagined that he saw
Which will bear looking at. These boys—I hope
As I remember, looking round these rocks
And, looking at the grave, he said, "My Brother!"
Looking down on the kine, and our treasure of sheep
The Doctor, looking somewhat grim,
Was busy, looking back into past times.
Joanna, looking in my eyes, beheld
And envies him that's looking;—what an insight must it be!
The Shepherd, looking eastward, softly said,
When, looking on the present face of things,
Looking far forth from his aerial cell,
"Tis night: in silence looking down,
Who, looking round the fair assemblage, feels
And to those graves looking habitually
The mountains looking on.
Thus looking out did Harry stand:
Where I was looking on, a babe in arms,
And from my pillow, looking forth by light
And oft, looking round was moved to smiles
And, looking backwards when he looked, mine eyes
Mute, looking at the grave in which he lies!
Who, looking inward, have observed the ties
Some sweet lass of the valley, looking out . . .
With looking on, some ancient wedded pair
Honour and shame, looking to right and left,
When, looking up, thou seest, in clearer view
And, looking up to those enormous clms,
That had not cheered me long—ere, looking round
And, looking round me, now I first observed . . .

Looking—continued.

We listened, looking down upon the hut,
Called me; and, looking down the darksome aisle,
Around him looking; "Where shall I begin?
Weeping and looking, looking on and weeping,
Or of the blessed Virgin, looking down
Both have been fairly dealt with; looking back
Than, looking forth, the gentle Lady said,
I, thus holdly looking at you,
Down looking on that hollow, where the pool
Looking-glass. In crystal clearness Dian's lookingglass;
And soon approach Diana's Looking-glass!
Looks. Upward he looks—"and calls it luxury:"
His humble looks no shy restraint impart;
Of looks where common kindness had no part,
True sympathy the Sailor's looks expressed,
His looks—for pondering he was mute the while.
And stern looks on the man her grey-haired Comrade cast.
The stranger's looks and tears of wrath beguile
Have power to yield? perhaps he looks elsewhere.—
Which looks like a transition in my soul,
You said you did not like his looks—that he
I bore her in my arms; her looks won pity;
Of infant playfulness with piteous looks
Of what he says, and looks, and does, and is,
And innocence, embodied in his looks,
To dignify arch looks and laughing eyes;
And never looks behind;
It looks just like the rest; and yet that man
"But, if my looks did with my words agree,
That Nature prompts them to display, their looks,
He knew it not) and from his happiest looks,
An infant's face and looks are thine . . .
Thy looks, thy cunning, and thy wiles,
And feed his countenance with your own sweet looks,
She stops, she stands, she looks about;
She looks again—her arms are up—
Would Michael exercise his heart with looks
Or looks, or threatening gestures, could perform.
—If looks as if they never could endure
What wicked looks are those I see?
He with grave looks demanded for what cause,
That eastward looks, I there stopped short—and stood . . .
It seems that all looks wondrous cold;
Looks in and out, and through and through;
Bent earthwards; he looks up—the clouds are split
Nor uniformed with Phantasy, and looks
She looks, and her heart is in heaven: but they fade,
By her sweet farewell looks, I longed to aid.
She looks as if at them—but they . . .
There is a Thorn—it looks so old,
It looks so old and grey.
Her looks were calm, her senses clear.
And that it looks at you;
The baby looks at you again.
—This chase it looks not like an earthly chase;
To the clouds of heaven she looks;
He looks on festal ground with fruits bestrown;
Looks to the earth, and to the vacant air;
Loves his own glory in their looks, and showers
Their soul-subduing looks might cheat
Beneath his looks so bare and bold,
More steady looks the moon, and clear,
He looks, he cannot choose but look;
He looks, he ponders, looks again;
Sky-ward he looks—to rock and wood—
The Ass looks on—and to his work
He pulls—and looks—and pulls again;
The meagre shadow that looks on—
Thy looks, thy gestures, all present
Its second twilight, and looks gay;
The Eternal looks upon her sword that gleams,
Looks on delighted—meet in festal ring,
With feet, hands, eyes, looks, lips, report your gain;
Looks down—the bright and solitary Moon,
Am free to rove where Nature's loveliest looks,
And shrubs, whose pleasant looks gave proof how kind
Looks up in all places, for joy or for rest,
Such looks of love and honour
Holy as princely, who that looks on thee
"This meeting, noble Lords! looks fair,
Who with mild looks and language mild
It fronts all quarters, and looks round . . .
From looks conceiving her desire;
Looks down upon her with a smile,
For change, to whom the new looks always green!
Looks on, and Grace descendeth from above
That to the Almighty Father looks through all.
Pleasure, or Grief, and Toil that seldom looks
Up! up! my Friend, and clear your looks;
But who is He, with modest looks,
Looks round, to learn the history.
Looks forward, persevering to the last,
That looks for evil like a treacherous spy;

 Words which the virtues of thy Lord inspired, . . . 539
 " O Lord, our Lord ! how wondrously," (quoth she) . . . 552
 By a great Lord, for gain and usury, . . . 553
 How mighty and how great a Lord is he ! . . . 556
 And thereat shall the Eagle be our Lord, . . . 562
 But, Lord, this simple Troilus was woe, . . . 562
 Dread Lord ! so fearful when provoked, thine ire . . . 563
 Now mercy, Lord ! thou know'st well I desire . . . 563
 Now, blissful Lord, so cruel do not be . . . 563
 A trembling solace to her widowed Lord, . . . 576

 Lords of the visionary eye whose lid,
 Lords, lawyers, statesmen, squires of low degree,

 Dim-gleaming through imperfect lore,
 In heathen schools of philosophic lore ;
 Sweet is the lore which Nature brings ;

Lot—continued.

And milder breezes,—melancholy lot !
But doubly fortunate my lot ; not here
As was thy melancholy lot, dear Friend !
So was I favoured—such my happy lot—
Far other lot, yet with good hope that soon
Was comfortless, and her small lot of books,
General distress in his particular lot ;
It were your lot to dwell, would soon become
For different lot, or change to higher sphere,
“ A piteous lot it were to flee from Man—
And its small lot of life-supporting fields,
For my own peaceful lot and happy choice ;
Do tend their flocks) partake man’s general lot
To joy be their lot, and happiness, he cried,
“ His lot and hers, as misery must be mine !
Which did to him assign a pensive lot—
The lot is wretched, the condition sad,
And female care.—“ A blessed lot is yours !
Of this unhappy lot, in early youth
We both have witnessed, lot which I myself
Blest in their several and their common lot !
When they, whose choice or lot it is to dwell
Through joy and sorrow ; if my lot be joy
The lot of others, never could be his.

Loth. Their breakfast-doe, the pair, though loth, must part ;
Though loth to be a burthen on his age.
The little fool is loth to stay behind.
And the heart is loth to deaden . . .
Not loth, and listening Little-ones, heart-touched,
their fancies feed.
Loth to rule by strict command ;

Loth to restrain the moving interview,
At length their time was come, they were not loth
I was not loth to be so catechised,
The redbreast near me hopped ; nor was I loth
Drunken Lark ! thou wouldst be loth
Not loth to furnish weapons for the bands
Softly she treads, as if her foot were loth
Is man, though loth such help to seek,
There also is the Muse not loth to range,
Not loth to thank each moment for its boon
Then, why should I be loth to stir ?
Nor am I loth, though pleased at heart,
Yet he, not loth, in favour of thy claims
Should we be loth to stir from home,
Be loth that we should breathe awhile exempt
—Not loth the sleepy lance to wield,
Nor are his Followers loth to seek defence,
We, nothing loth a lingering course to measure,
Not loth we quit the newly-hallowed sward
Lingering—and wandering on as loth to die ;
Calm is the fragrant air, and loth to lose
Her head, and nothing loth her Majesty
Departing sunbeams, loth to stop,
Loth should I be to use it : passing sweet

For who is loth the God of Love to obey,
Harsh judgments, if the song be loth to quit
Quitted, not loth, the mild magnificence
Loth to believe what we so grievous to hear,
—Nor was he loth to enter ragged huts,
These festive matins ?”—He replied, “ Not loth . . .
I interposed, though loth to speak, and said,
Loth to forsake the spot, and still more loth
Though loth and slow to come ! A battlefield,
Loth to disturb what Heaven hath hushed in peace.
Was loth to assault the majesty he loved :
Of yet another summer’s day, not loth

Loth. The dog, loud harking, ‘mid the glittering rocks

Where with loud voice the power of water shakes
Rock to incessant neighings shrill and loud,
And, weeping loud in this extreme distress,
Check his loud whip and hail us with mild voice,
And laughed so loud it seemed that the smooth sea
But loud and bitterly she wept,
And carols loud and strong,
The people answered with a loud acclaim :
Thou Thrush, that singest loud—and loud and free,

As loud as any mill, or near it ;
From the loud waterfall.
That there was a loud uproar in the hills.
Came thundering loud and fast ;
With menace proud, and insult loud,
The whp’s loud notice from the door,
Hangs a Thrush that sighs loud, it has sung for three years :
He sways them with harmony merry and loud ;
That heareth not the loud winds when they call ;
Loud voice the Land has uttered forth,
The iterated summons loud,
And whistling loud may yet be heard,
He gives a loud and frightful shriek,
And Peter, wont to whistle loud,

Loud—continued.

Away goes Rachel weeping loud ;—
Sobs loud, he sobs even like a child,
So loud, so clear, my Partner through life’s day,
Faith had her arch—her arch, when winds blow loud,
How loud ! yet lived in peace with shame.
One loud cascade in front, and lo !
And loud and long of Winter’s triumph sing !
Loud its threatenings—let them not
Loud was the rifle-gun’s report—
Into a Brook of loud and sately march,
Dread swell of sound ! loud as the gusts that lash
Vexed is he, and screams loud. The last I saw
The bells ring loud with gladsome power ;
The sight was hailed with loud acclaim
Deep feeling, that found utterance loud,
Merry and loud and safe from prying search,
Hurried and hurrying, volatile and loud.
Clear, loud, and lively is the din,

So loud, that with his voice the place did ring.
Yet may I sing, O Alma ! loud and clear.
Some, singing loud, as if they had complained ;
That her clear voice made a loud rioting,
The Sheep-boy whistled loud, and lo !
Loud is the Vale ! the Voice is up . . .
Loud is the Vale —this inland Depth . . .
The death-dog, howling loud and long, below ;
Loud thro’ that midway gulf ascending, sound
Dropp’d loud at once, Oppression shriek’d, and flew.
While loud and dull ascends the weeping cry,
Rang loud through the meadow and wood.
Loud shouts,—the Trojans echo the applause.
With what strange utterance did the loud dry wind
It was a time of rapture ! Clear and loud
The pack loud chiming, and the hunted hare . . .
Gave out to meadow-grounds and hills a loud
Continued and the loud uproar : at last,
A loud prophetic blast of harmony ;
And long halloos and screams, and echoes loud,
All hearts were open, every tongue was loud !
Still as a sheltered place when winds blow loud !
With speed and echoes loud of trampling hoofs
That ‘mid the loud distractions of the world
Near the loud waterfall ; or her who sate . . .
A thrush sang loud, and other melodies,
Into a loud and white-robed waterfall,
Loud echoing, add your speed to the pursuit ;
With the loud streams : and often, at the hour
Repelled the storm and deadened its loud roar.
All unsubstantialized,—how loud the voice
Dark discontent, or loud commotion, each

Loud-chiming. The pack loud-chiming, and the hunted hare.
Louder. And louder torrents stun the noon-tide hill,
Louder and louder did he shout,
Those louder cries give notice that the Bird,
Of calmer lakes and louder streams ; and you,
To laughter multiplied in louder peals . . .
Loudest. We loudest in the faithful north :
Who loudest rang his pulpit ‘larum bell,
Nor hear the loudest surges of St. Bees.
Such dismal service, that the loudest voice
Loudly. And never heart so loudly panted ;
So loudly, that I with that song awoke.

Louvet. Louvet walked single through the avenue,

Love. See Lady-love, Over-love, Self-love, True-love.
I love to mark the quarry’s moving trains,
Or desperate love, bewildered, he came there.
That clung to Nature with a truant’s love,
Awe in his breast with holiest love unites,
Though martial songs have banished songs of love,
What if the bee love not these barren boughs ?
Instructed that true knowledge leads to love ;
Though he had little cause to love the abode
And I in truth did love him like a brother,
He well could love in grief ; his faith he kept ;
About their love, as if to keep it warm.
Yourself, you do not love him. I do more,
To love him. I remember, when a Boy
And that was the beginning of my love.
All gentleness and love. His face speaks
Had given her love to a wild Freebooter,
But sure he loves the Maiden, and never love
Should in his love admit no rivalry,
Sir Host ! by all the love you bear to courtesy,
For love of God I must not pass their doors ;
Now I do love thee. I am thunderstruck.
I love her, though I dare not sell her daughter.

 To every act, word, thought, and look of love,
 (How can it where love never dies ?)
 Months passed in love that failed not to fulfil,
 That still he loves the Bird, and still must love ;
 If love exist no longer, it must die.—
 Where Love for living Thing can find a place.
 On her I looked whom jocund Fairies love,
 Heaven prosper it ! may peace, and love,
 That seemed to play with it in love or scorn,
 A Voice—devoted to the love whose seeds
 Of admiration and respectful love,
 Whose tender love, here faltering on the way
 Of a diviner love, will be forgiven—
 Favour divine, exalting human love ;
 Blended with praise of that parental love,
 " To put your love to dangerous proof.
 By cautious love supplied.
 Of his imperious love,
 Where mutual love is not ;
 With love abridged the day ;
 The weakness of their love.
 Soon gratitude gave way to love
 And Love protect it from all injury !
 But by an industry that wrought in love ;
 Of slighted love, and scorn, and jealous rage,
 And love ceases to rebel,
 If thou in the dear love of some one Friend
 Will sometimes in the happiness of love
 The God of Love—ah, beneficite !
 Whoever against Love mean aught amiss.
 Who do not think in love their life to lead ;
 For who is loth the God of Love to obey,
 That all must love or die ; but I withdraw,
 For Love in young folk is but rage, I wis ;
 And Love in old folk a great dotage is ;
 For whose gets of love a little bliss
 The God of Love afflict thee with all teen,
 Who had been nought, if Love had never been.
 For evermore his servants Love amendeth,
 For Love no reason hath but his own will ;—
 Of Love, and of his holy services ;
 Now, God of Love ! thou help me in some wise,
 Unto the God of Love I make a vow,
 For Love, and it hath done me mighty woe.
 For love of thee, as loud as I may cry ;
 " Beshrew all them that are in love untrue."
 And, God of Love, that can right well and may,
 And joy of love to send her evermore ;
 Of that false Bird whom Love can not abide.

 On works of love or freedom, or revolved
 Of custom, language, country, love, or hate,
 Self-sacrifice the firmest ; generous love,
 And love ; for where hope is, there love will be

 The maiden from the bosom of her love,
 What countenance to promote this second love !
 Of fortitude and energy and love,
 Upon our side, us who were strong in love !
 This threw me first out of the pale of love ;
 Already said of patriotic love,
 By all varieties of human love
 When from afar invoked by anxious love ?

 That should preclude humility and love ?
 Of early love, the loved one at my side,
 To look with feelings of fraternal love . . . 675 Prædæ 6, 38
 Of pure imagination, and of love ;
 Through field or forest with the maid we love,
 Who doth not love to follow with his eye

Love—continued.

Love cannot be; nor does it thrive with ease . . . 743 Prelude 13. 202
 And miserable love, that is not pain . . . 743 Prelude 13. 247
 Actual, divine, and true. To fear and love, . . . 748 Prelude 14. 162
 To love as prime and chief, for there fear ends, . . . 748 Prelude 14. 163
 Who know not what they speak. By love subsists . . . 748 Prelude 14. 168
 All lasting grandeur, by pervading love; . . . 748 Prelude 14. 169
 Shall touch thee to the heart; thou callest this love, . . . 748 Prelude 14. 174
 And not inaptly so, for love it is, . . . 748 Prelude 14. 175
 Unless this love by a still higher love . . . 748 Prelude 14. 181
 Be hallowed, love that breathes not without awe; . . . 748 Prelude 14. 182
 Love that adores, but on the knees of prayer, . . . 748 Prelude 14. 183
 This spiritual Love acts not nor can exist . . . 749 Prelude 14. 188
 So also hath that intellectual Love, . . . 749 Prelude 14. 207
 For all that friendship, all that love can do, . . . 749 Prelude 14. 221
 I too exclusively esteemed that love, . . . 749 Prelude 14. 244
 Placed on this earth to love and understand, . . . 750 Prelude 14. 278
 And from thy presence shed the light of love, . . . 750 Prelude 14. 279
 Among the mysteries of love and hate, . . . 751 Prelude 14. 337
 Yet centring all in love, and in the end . . . 751 Prelude 14. 386
 Some pleasure from this offering of my love. . . . 752 Prelude 14. 429
 Others will love, and we will teach them how . . . 752 Prelude 14. 447
 Of Truth, of Grandeur, Beauty, Love, and Hope, . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 767
 In love and holy passion, shall find these . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 807
 Be with me —so shall thy unflinching love . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 859

 Irksome sensations; but by love of truth . . . 791 Excursion 3. 378
 Love with despair, or grief in agony;— . . . 792 Excursion 3. 449
 That the properties of love and joy . . . 793 Excursion 3. 505
 In the devotedness of youthful love . . . 794 Excursion 3. 565
 That earthly Providence, whose guiding love . . . 794 Excursion 3. 569
 Immates, and heirs of our united love; . . . 795 Excursion 3. 607
 And, with a holier love inspired, I looked . . . 796 Excursion 3. 682
 Blameless, so intimate with love and joy . . . 801 Excursion 4. 23
 And the defence that lies in boundless love . . . 803 Excursion 4. 121
 And holiest love; as earth, sea, air, with light, . . . 803 Excursion 4. 156
 For any object of his love, removed . . . 804 Excursion 4. 172
 With bodily eyes, they are borne down by love . . . 804 Excursion 4. 190
 From sleep, and dwell with God in endless love . . . 804 Excursion 4. 237
 And strengthen love, rejoicing secretly . . . 806 Excursion 4. 345
 Sincere, and humble spirit, teaches love: . . . 806 Excursion 4. 347
 Breeds love: yet, suited as it rather is . . . 806 Excursion 4. 349
 It teaches less to love, than to adore; . . . 806 Excursion 4. 350
 If that be not indeed the highest love! . . . 806 Excursion 4. 364
 Whom, for the very sake of love, he loves. . . . 807 Excursion 4. 444
 And a strict love of fellowship, combined. . . . 811 Excursion 4. 641
 Tidings of joy and love.—From those pure heights . . . 811 Excursion 4. 660
 With hope, and love, and gratitude, and fear; . . . 812 Excursion 4. 763
 "We live by Admiration, Hope, and Love; . . . 812 Excursion 4. 768
 "Love, Hope, and Admiration—are they not . . . 814 Excursion 4. 878
 Lacked not, for love, fair objects whom they wooed . . . 815 Excursion 4. 912
 To watch again with tutelary love . . . 815 Excursion 4. 930
 With joy, and gratitude, and fear, and love; . . . 817 Excursion 4. 1095
 For acts of service? Can his love extend . . . 819 Excursion 4. 1213
 The joy of that pure principle of love . . . 819 Excursion 4. 1229
 But seek for objects of a kindred love . . . 820 Excursion 4. 1244
 No feeling, which can overcome his love. . . . 820 Excursion 4. 1274
 Of true philanthropy. The light of love . . . 820 Excursion 4. 1296
 Of divine love, our intellectual soul." . . . 823 Excursion 5. 59
 Though bound to earth by ties of pity and love, . . . 824 Excursion 5. 116
 And with the blessings of domestic love. . . . 828 Excursion 5. 414
 Who does not love his native soil?—he prized . . . 830 Excursion 5. 496
 Embosomed happiness, and placid love; . . . 830 Excursion 5. 541
 Love, admiration, fear, desire, and hate, . . . 835 Excursion 5. 855
 Of life, of love, and gladness doth dispense . . . 836 Excursion 5. 911
 I love to hear of those, who, not contending . . . 837 Excursion 5. 1002
 To charity and love, that have provided, . . . 837 Excursion 5. 1022
 That life is love and immortality . . . 838 Excursion 6. 4
 Life, I repeat, is energy of love . . . 838 Excursion 6. 29
 In veneration and the people's love; . . . 839 Excursion 6. 43
 And human charity and social love . . . 840 Excursion 6. 109
 Detached from pleasure, and the love of gain . . . 840 Excursion 6. 120
 By unrequited love, he sealed the rocks . . . 840 Excursion 6. 163
 At length to tell his love, but sued in vain; . . . 840 Excursion 6. 163
 That Love will not submit to be controlled . . .

Love—continued.

To her, a monument of faithful love . . . 841 Excursion 6. 210
 Who saw enough for blame and pitying love. . . . 843 Excursion 6. 362
 His gentler sentiments of love and hate, . . . 844 Excursion 6. 429
 Those very bickerings made them love it more. . . . 845 Excursion 6. 474
 Where love and pity tenderly unite . . . 848 Excursion 6. 642
 Feelings with these accordant; love, esteem, . . . 848 Excursion 6. 648
 And a strange thraldom of maternal love, . . . 849 Excursion 6. 710
 Their spring-time with one love, and that have need . . . 851 Excursion 6. 876
 Of his triumphant constancy and love; . . . 851 Excursion 6. 885
 The unconquerable pang of despised love. . . . 852 Excursion 6. 905
 For all concerns of fear, or hope, or love, . . . 853 Excursion 6. 1012
 Into that pure and unknown world of love . . . 854 Excursion 6. 1050
 His knowledge, wisdom, love of truth, and love . . . 854 Excursion 6. 1067
 And love, benignant mother of the vale, . . . 855 Excursion 6. 1107
 I better love to sprinkle on the sod . . . 861 Excursion 7. 238
 Pangs are there not enough in hopeless love— . . . 864 Excursion 7. 367
 Nor husband's love, nor father's hope or care. . . . 864 Excursion 7. 427
 By the pure bond of independent love, . . . 864 Excursion 7. 434
 Were met with answering sympathy and love. . . . 864 Excursion 7. 462

Loveliness—continued.

The loveliness of Nature, prove a bar
Crescent in simple loveliness serene,
Grandeur as much, and loveliness far more,
And loveliness endeared which they removed.
To find, in midst of so much loveliness,

Love-lorn.

Where, for the love-lorn maiden's wound,
A love-lorn Maid, at some far-distant time,
For slaughtered Youth or love-lorn Maid!

Lovely.

Even now she shows, half-veiled, her lovely face:
As lovely visions by thy side
Ye lovely maidens that in noontide shade.
On the more distant scene,—how lovely 'tis
Three lovely babes had lain upon my breast;
Lovely as Spring's first rose; a little dog,
I watched them with delight, they were a lovely pair.

And, having seen that lovely Maid,
Such union, in the lovely Girl maintained
Then, lovely baby, do not fear,
My lovely baby, thou shalt be.
Have called the lovely rock, JOANNA'S ROCK,
With all its lovely images, was changed
Wings lovely as his own.
For those seven lovely Campbells,
Shall on some lovely Alien set
The lovely dell is all his own.
The lovely Danish Boy is blest
A lovely Apparition, sent
The lovely Fugitive:
He was a lovely Youth! I guess
There is a fresh and lovely sight,
All lovely colours there you see,
"Ah me! what lovely tints are there
Shall be a mansion for all lovely forms,
And lovely as a Lapland night,
O lovely Wanderer of the trackless hills,
Come, youngest of the lovely Three,
Two lovely Sisters, still and sweet
Appear so lovely, never, never,—
Among the lovely shades of things;
By lovely forms, and silent weather,
A scene of soft and lovely hue!
The lovely Cottage in the guardian nook
A lovely Beauty in a summer grave!
An old place, full of many a lovely brood,
Because the lovely little flower is free
Was lovely as a Grecian maid
The grave of lovely Ellen:
And all is lovely to the sight.
Spread over Grasmere's lovely dale,
Too lovely to be pensive in themselves
—How lovely robed in forenoon light and shade,
A lovely One, who nothing hears
Comes gliding in with lovely gleam,
He pointed to a lovely Doe
This lovely chronicler of things
The lovely Nun (submissive, but more meek
I saw the figure of a lovely Maid
And many a blooming, many a lovely, cheek
Yes, lovely Moon! if thou so mildly bright
Keep, lovely May, as if by touch
Creations lovely as the work of sleep—
And there was many and many a lovely note,
And lovely is the Rose,
Is lovely yet:
She lifts in silence up her lovely face;
Lo! from th' innocuous flames, a lovely birth!
Fix on a lovely object, nor my mind
Among all lovely things my Love had been;
Gaz'd on thy lovely Nymphs with fond delight,
Of visionary things, those lovely forms
Far from those lovely sights and sounds sublime
Of sedentary peace. Those lovely forms
Some lovely Image in the song rose up
Foot-bound uplooking at this lovely tree
One, at whose centre ate a lovely Boy
The lovely Boy as I beheld him then
And lovely region, I had forms distinct
Two lovely Children—all that they possessed!
(Whatever of good or lovely they might bring)
Called on the lovely wanderer who bestowed
Which makes the sabbath lovely in the sight
—But to what object shall the lovely Girl
The lovely Girl supplied—a simple song,
Yet nothing to be seen but lovely pomp
On lovely objects, and we wish to part
A sad and lovely face, with upturn'd eyes,
Such sorrow is more lovely in its guise.

Love-prompted.

Mount, daring warbler!—that love-

Lover.

And Grief, uneasy lover! never rest
Some thought he was a lover, and did woo:
And the lover is beloved.
The Lover, thus bereft, stung with his loss,
Her Lover!—thence a stolen interview,
Let one grave hold the Loved and Lover!
But pangs more lasting far that Lover knew

A lover of the meadows and the woods,

Lover—continued.

Orphean Insight! truth's undaunted lover,
The Youth, her chosen lover,
Felt for thee as a lover or a child!
When, from the soft couch of her sleeping Lover,
He might have been, Lover alike he was—
And proves the Lover true;
Is happy as a Lover; and attired
If for a Lover the Lady wept,
Be with some lover far away, or one
As ever he to Lover yet did send.
Therewith when this true Lover 'gan behold,
Hath, like the Lover, his unruly times;
Like a sick Lover, then this dog was used
An eye of scorn—"The lover," said he, "doomed
So will I ensure a Lover,
Seat-Sandal, a fond lover of the clouds;

Lovers'. There doth the maiden watch her lover's
But in the Lover's ear alone,
Into a Lover's head!
Yet I pursued her with a Lover's look;
There watch at eve her lover's sun-gilt sail
As with a lover's passion. Yet his moods
And in the lover's fancy; and to feed.

Lovers. Lovers lock up as pearls, though off no better
The happiest lovers Arcady might boast,
O happy time of youthful lovers (thus
Oo making (so the Lovers had agreed)
Fond lovers! yet not quite hob nob,
The haunts of happy Lovers,
The Lovers took within this ancient grove
I of a token thought which Lovers heed;
For lovers, of all folk that be alive,
True lovers doth so bitterly annoy,
Lovers of truth, by penury constrained,
O, happy time of youthful lovers, (thus
Lovers'. And thou, in lovers' hearts forgiven, Love's. One of Love's simple bondsmen—the soft chain.

Or sprightly maiden, of Love's court,
This precious Flower, true love's last token.
From Love's uneasy sovereignty—
And lo! those Birds, far-famed through Love's
dominions,
Whom I have left, Love's mildest birth,
Seats of glad instinct and love's carolling,
A knight of proof in love's behoof,
Guide, from thy love's abundant source,
In love's disport employ;
Reviewed through Love's transparent veil of years?
In which Love's dart its fiery point doth steep.
Nor ever while I live Love's yoke to draw.
To speak of Love's true Servants in this mood;
For he that faithfully Love's servant is,
The Cuckoo trust not thou, nor his Love's saw;
Those shadowy breasts in love's snft light array'd,
Drawn from love's purest earthly fount for him
"In sooth, with love's familiar privilege,
Loves. While tender cares and mild domestic loves
And Silence loves its purple roof of vines.
Bears not to those he loves their needful food.
To a proud Soul.—Nobody loves this Oswald—
'Tis plain he loves the Maid, and what he said
But sure he loves the Maiden, and never love
What she can urge in his defence; she loves him.
Yes, loves him; 'tis a truth that multiplies
And I loved her, and she loves the Lord Clifford!
No heart that loves them, none that they can love,
A Poet, one who loves the brooks
And dearly he loves me.
She loves her fire, her cottage-home;
So that it shall be softened, and our loves
Him whom she loves, her Idiot Boy.
And Johnny makes the noise he loves,
Him whom she loves, her Idiot Boy.
Him whom she loves, her Idiot Boy;
Betray the Elf that loves to dwell
Cried they, "Your Father loves to roam:
Art thou the bird whom Man loves best,
Not the less she loves her husband
In that sweet mood when pleasure loves to pay
And steady bliss, and all the loves
The one only dwelling on earth that she loves.
For the offending creatures whom he loves.
God loves the Child; and God hath willed
Though, where she is beloved and loves,
So gleams the crescent moon, that loves
And the wind loves them; and the gentle gales—
Loves his own glory in their looks, and showers
Starn Winter loves a dirge-like sodad
Prepared by one who loves the buoyant swell
She loves to gaze upoo a crystal river—
Time loves Thee! at his call the Seasons twine
That Gordon loves as dearly,
That loves on sullen thoughts to brood!
(Who loves the Cross, yet to the Crescent's gleam
The frolic Loves, who, from yon high rock, see
But love, as Nature loves, the lonely Poor;

Love-sick. "Whence strains to love-sick maiden dear, . . .
 The love-sick Stripling fancifully sighs, . . .
 There might the love-sick maiden sit, and chide . . .

Love-songs. Their love-songs ; but, where'er my feet might roam, . . .

Love-spell. To chant a love-spell, never intertwined Lovest. Thy secrets, thou that lov'st to stand and hear . . .

Aspiring Road ! that lov'st to hide . . .
 Who lov'st with Night and Silence to partake, . . .
 Of him thou lovest ; need I dread from thee . . .

Love-tale. Of that shy songstress, whose love-tale . . .

Loveth. For His own service ; knoweth, loveth us, . . .

Love-vows. Her blushing cheek, love-vows upon her lip, . . .

Love-whispers. Scorning love-whispers shrinks from love itself . . .

Loving. See Cloud-loving, Earth-loving, Laughter- loving, Moonlight-loving, Tempest-loving.
 My husband's loving kindness stood between . . .
 And in her ample heart loving even me— . . .
 Loving she is, and tractable, though wild ; . . .
 Wrote loving letters, full of wondrous news, . . .
 Your most loving father's rage : . . .
 Who, loving most, should wiseliest love, their only
 strife . . .

Loving and liking are the solace of life, . . .
 In loving words he talks to him, . . .
 Love cannot have than that in loving thee . . .
 Neighbours we were, and loving friends . . .
 Places forsaken now, though loving still . . .
 Some true Partakers of his loving spirit . . .
 Beneath a loving old Man's view . . .
 'Tis the still hour of thinking, feeling, loving . . .
 A loving creature she, and brave ! . . .
 I, loving freedom, and untried ; . . .
 Loving the dewy shade,—a humble band, . . .
 Admiring, loving, and with grief and pride . . .
 Loving is aye an office of despair, . . .
 My Brother, too, in loving thee, . . .
 Who sang in ancient Greece his, loving lay, . . .
 Loving the sports which once he gloried in . . .
 Faithfully watched, and, by that loving care . . .
 Loving what no one cares for but ourselves ; . . .
 Unheard-of days, though loving peaceful thoughts . . .

Loving-kindness. Thus a rich loving-kindness, redundantly kind . . .
 And loving-kindness ever bright : . . .
Lovingly. Lie down in peace, and lovingly . . .
 That lovingly consigns the babe to the arms . . .
 Which in his soul he lovingly embraced, . . .

Low. The solitary heifer's deepened low ; . . .
 And merry fageolet ; the low of herds, . . .
 Fitting his low voice to the minstrel's harp, . . .
 Small and low, though fair as any : . . .
 Bending low before the Donor, . . .
 Still higher—to be cast thus low ! . . .
 In high and low, above, below, . . .
 Restless with fixed to balance, high with low, . . .
 And dancing high and dancing low, . . .
 I have seen thee, high and low, . . .
 I spake, when whispered a low voice, . . .
 Warbles by fits his low clear song ; . . .
 What bustling—jostling—high and low ! . . .
 Hung low, begin to rise and spread ; . . .

Low—continued.

Low sunk beneath the horizon !—List !—I heard,
 In the low vale, or on steep mountain-side ;
 To us who stood low in that hollow dell,
 Fearfully low, nor all your judgment scorn.
 From high to low, ascent from low to high,
 Allured him, sunk so low in self-respect
 Yet were the windows of the low abode
 —From the low tenement, his own abode,
 Low things with lofty ! too shall he be doomed.
 Glistening along the low and woody dale ;
 That dignified and cheered a low estate ?
 Whose flexible boughs low bending with a weight
 The low wide windows with their mullions old ;
 And lays the generations low in dust.
 For high—yet not for low ; for proudly graceful—
 In like low voice to my particular ear,
 Whose low tones reached not to the distant rocks
 In a low voice, yet careless who might hear,
 That puzzled high and low,
 Ah then, lest you awaken me, speak low.
 Then wake me not, I pray you. Hush, speak low.
 From high to low, from low to high, yet still
 One household under God for high and low,
 Shall he who gives his days to low pursuits
 Low-born. Can any low-born care pursue her,
 Low-howed. At his approach, and low-howed necks entreat
 Low-breathed. By your low-breathed interpretations,
 Lower. To this lower world descending,
 Now he leaves the lower ground,
 And, if an unexpected cloud should lower,
 Thus did the waters gleam, the mountains lower,
 Nothing ? Heaven keep us from a lower stage !
 They thus would rise, must low and lower sink
 Himself above each lower thought uplifting,
 No lower than I fell. I did not love,
 And in the meadows and the lower grounds
 These, bold in conscious merit, lower down ;
 And the creation (by no lower name
 Blinding the lower panes. I turned aside,
 To lower : can you question that the soul
 Hold lower rank than this sequestered pair :
 Lowest. Thou rocky corner in the lowest stair
 To the least fibre of their lowest root,
 Feels through her lowest depths thy sovereignty ;
 Lowest of these and humblest in attempt,
 This the soul's last and lowest ebb ; I drooped,
 The darkest pit of lowest Erebus,
 Dame Nature's pupil of the lowest form,
 Who, to the lowest region of the soul,
 He was a peasant of the lowest class :
 Such (we will hope the lowest in the scale)
 Low-hung. —When low-hung clouds each star of summer hide,
 Of low-hung vapour : on the freshened mead
 Heavy his low-hung lip did oft appear,
 Low-hung and think that covered all the sky ;
 Through some Helvetian dell, when low-hung mists Lowing. When shouts and lowing herds the valley fill,
 Nor hushed be service from the lowing mead,
 That sigh and shudder to the lowing herd.
 Lowings. And melancholy lowings intervene
 Lowlands. And all along the Lowlands fair,
 Lowlier. A lowlier pleasure ;
 Lowliest. As lowly as the lowliest dwelling,
 The lowliest duties on herself did lay.
 That guards the lowliest of the poor.
 The lowliest flower possesses in its place ;
 Nor is power given to lowliest innocence
 Lowliness. In lowliness of heart,
 But with majestic lowliness endued
 In lowliness—a mid-way tract there lies
 The Harp in lowliness obeyed ;
 And bounty, lowliness, and courtesy,
 Beseech her meekly with all lowliness.
 Lowly. Thy lowly cots that sprinkle all the shore,
 By lowly nature reared, as if to make her
 —A gentle Maid, whose heart is lowly bred,
 A nun demure of lowly port ;
 As lowly as the lowliest dwelling,
 From out the lowly hedge-rows flung ;
 For lowly shepherd's life is best ! I
 —Queen, and handmaid lowly !
 And, like the lowly reed, her love
 If I along that lowly way
 They came to lowly bench or sculptured stall,
 The flower of sweetest smell is shy and lowly.
 Oft shall the lowly weak, fill nature bring
 Of herbs and lowly flowers,
 By antique Fancy trimmed—though lowly, bred
 To mild ; to lowly, and to seeming weak
 A crimson splendour : lowly is the mast
 Bereft Ones, and in lowly anguish weep
 Meek as that emblem of her lowly heart
 Through the Vale retired and lowly,
 Of Barden's lowly quietness,
 A dear look to her lowly Friend ;

Lucky. And he must lead me back. You are most lucky;
 A lucky woman—go, you have done good service.
 Him Benjamin, with lucky glance,
 And there, by lucky hap, had been preserved.
 The lucky venture of sage Whittington,
Lucretilla's. Of cool Lucretilla, where the pipe was heard
Lucy. Oft I had heard of Lucy Gray:
 No mate, no comrade Lucy knew;
 But the sweet face of Lucy Gray
 He plied his work;—and Lucy took
 And many a hill did Lucy climb:
 That you may see sweet Lucy Gray
 "If Lucy should be dead!"
 When Lucy ceased to be;
 The bowers where Lucy played;
 Such thoughts to Lucy I will give
 I led my Lucy to the spot, "Look here!"
Lucy's. The priot of Lucy's feet.
 The sinking moon to Lucy's cot
 That Lucy's eyes surveyed.
 How soon my Lucy's race was run!
Lugano. And orange gale that o'er Lugano blows;
 Lugano! on thy ample bay;
Lugano's. The Votress by Lugano's side;
Lujah's. See Hallelujahs.
Luka. Was ended, Luke (for so the Son was named)
 And now, when Luke had reached his eighteenth year,
 But soon as Luke, full ten years old, could stand
 Our Luke shall leave us, Isabel; the land
 Thriving in trade—and Luke to him shall go,
 She said to Luke, while they two by themselves
 With Luke that evening thitherward he walked:
 But we were playmates, Luke: among these hills,
 Luke had a manly heart; but at these words
 Another Master. Heaven forgive me, Luke,
 Here, lay it for me, Luke, with thine own hands.
 To leave me, Luke: thou hast been bound to me
 As I requested; and hereafter, Luke,
 And all temptation, Luke, I pray that thou
 The Shepherd ended here; and Luke stooped down.
 Of Luke and his well-doing: and the Boy
 Wrought at the Sheep-fold. Meantime Luke began
 Of "Matthew, Mark, and Luke, and John."
 But soon as Luke, full ten years old, could stand
Luke's. Make ready, Luke's best garments, of the best
 A prouder heart than Luke's. When Isabel Lull. While pastoral pipes and streams the landscape lull,
 That break against the shore, shall lull thy mind:
 They lull perchance ten thousand thousand flowers.
 Too high, or idle agitations lull!
 Where they deep voice could lull me! Faint the beam.
 No solemn songstress lull the fading green,
 Shall with its murmur lull me into rest?
Lullaby. See Cottage-lullaby.
 His lullaby. From crowded streets remote,
Lulled. Or wild Aosta lulled by Alpine rime,
 Of happy millions lulled in sleep;
 Lulled by the fountain in the summer-tide;
 With green hills fenced, with ocean's murmur
 lulled;"
 Lulled by the sound of pastoral bells,
 That lulled me asleep, bids me listen once more.
 And lull'd the warring passions into rest,
 'Mid groves Idalian, lull'd to gentle sleep,
 That, in an easy temper lulled asleep,
 Perchance too lightly occupied, or lulled
 With music lulled his indolent repose:
 Stretched upon fragrant heath, and lulled by sound
Lulling. Lulling the leisure of that high-perched town,
 More lulling than the busy hum of Noon,
 Lulling the year, with all its cares, to rest!
 A soft and lulling sound is heard
 Lulling the mourner's best good thoughts asleep,
 Then, from those lulling fits of vain delight
Luminary. Dimness o'er this clear luminary crept.
Luminous. Luminous or gloomy, welcome to the vale
 Luminous, blithe, and debonair?
 Than the bare axe more luminous and keen.
 Of luminous faith, heavenward hath raised that head.
 Luminous region, fair as if the prime
Luna. Luna by night, with heavenly influence
 For which, oh, gentle Luna, bright and clear,
Lunar. On Dion's virtues, while the lunar beam
 Of the untrodden lunar mountains;
 When side by side with lunar gentleness,
 The labours of the Sun, the lunar wanderings; Lurcher. The shepherd's lurcher, who, among the crags,
Lure. Vainly Morning spreads the lure
 Inviting him with cheerful lure:
 And if to lure the truant-back be well,
 Who scorns a false utilitarian lure

Lure—continued.
 Yield to the lure of vain regret, and hover
 Stops not at this low point, nor wants the lure
 Brute rapine, or with gentle lure she tames.
 Her melancholy lure!
 To lure my mind from firm habitual quest
 As scattered birds troop to the fowler's lure,
 All other progeny—doth sometimes lure,
Lured. By vague thoughts, lured by fancies wild;
 The bat, lured forth where trees the lane o'ershade,
 Or lured along where green-wood paths he trod.
 Me, lured by hope her sorrows to remove,
 France lured me forth; the realm that I had crossed
 What pleasant expectations lured me on Lured by the crystal element in times
Lures. And lures from bay to bay the vocal barge.
 Lures not from what they deem the cause of God.
Lurid. Is to be seen a lurid light,
 And near that lurid light, full well
 The torch that flames with many a lurid flake,
Lurk. Or lurk in woody sunless glens profound,
 To harm that might lurk here,
 Lurk near you—and combine
 And, in spite of the shame that may lurk in his mid,
 Lurk in its cells—and thinks himself enriched,
 And shrunk from vain observances, to lurk
Lurked. My husband lurked about the neighbourhood;
 Lurked in his face—Pshaw! Never to these eyes
 Seven days she lurked in brake and field,
Lurking. Lurking berries, ripe and red,
 Lurking in a double shade,
 Among the lurking powers
 Intent each lurking frailty to disclaim,
 Nor wanted lurking hamlet, dusky towns,
 Of lurking cloistral arch, through trees espied
 Mingles, and lurking consciousness of wrong;
 By lurking Dernbrook's pathless side,
 Far-kenned, her Chapels lurking among trees,
 Though pride's least lurking thought appear a wrong
 And lurking dimly in their shy retreats,
 Of colours, lurking, gleaming up and down
 Yon azure smoke betrays the lurking town;
 And single cottages and lurking towns,
 Villa, or cottage, lurking among rocks
 Most delicate, a lurking eyelet, small,
 As if they had within some lurking right
 These were the lurking Satyrs, a wild brood
 A bondage lurking under shape of good,
Lurks. "Temptation lurks among your words;
 There lurks his home; in that Abode,
 That lurks by lonely ways
 Where lurks a Spirit that replies
 And all its branchy vales, and all that lurks
 Lurks in it, Memory's Helper, Fancy's Lord,
 That startle Conscience, as she lurks
 This efficacious spirit chiefly lurks
 Or, shall I say?—disdained, the game that lurks
 Spread, from disease, whose subtle injury lurks
 In the sweet spring that lurks 'mid yon green fields;
 How could the might, that lurks within her, then
 Lurks in safe shelter from the winds of March,
Luscious. That ill supports the luscious fig;
 The casement shade more luscious woodbine binds,
Luss. And more than once been free at Luss
Lust. O matchless perfidy! portentous lust
 Of proud Self-will, Rapacity, and Lust,
Lustily. And lustily the master carved the bread,
 And lustily along the bay she strode,
 She was an elfin pinnacle; lustily
 Fellows to those that lustily upheld
Lustre. Fades like the Lustre of an evening cloud;
 Revealed by lustre brought with it from heaven;
 Or with a less uneasy lustre shine;
 Shall with Mount Ida's triple lustre fill
 All light and lustre. Did no heart reply?
 Joined with the lustre of her rich attire
 With starry lustre; yet had power to throw
 Meek lustre, nor forget 'st the humble Vale;
 While on the warlike groups the mellowing lustre falls.
 Their lustre re-assume!
 And, kindling at their lustre, if I burn,
 And pallid hrow, a melancholy lustre.
 No fancied lustre on the wall
 With lustre of a saintly show;
 Their partly lustre—coming but to go;
 When first our infant brows their lustre won;
 Catching the lustre they in part receive—
 Of beamy lustre from a tower of strength;
 Hope wanes with her, while lustre fills.
 A freshening lustre mellow
 Of lustre too intense
 As if their lustre flowed from ether's purest blue.
 Their fill of promised lustre, wait in vain.
 Diamonds dart their brightest lustre
 Its mellow lustre round thy honoured head;

Lustre—continued.

- The torrent, travers'd by the lustre broad,
Round your pale eyes a wintry lustre wake.
Wide o'er the main a trembling lustre plays,
Before the lustre of Religion's eye;
Fresh with lustre all their own.
Upon this lustre lustre have I gazed,
Still linger, and a farewell lustre sheds
Shines with some portion of that heavenly lustre
Of pleasing lustre.—But no more of this;
A golden lustre slept upon the hills;
In twinkling lustre, ere the boat attained
Whose lustre we alone participate,
Why does this inward lustre fondly seek,
Lustras. Soft o'er the surface creep those lustras pale
To where afar rich orange lustras glow
Will mingle with her lustras gliding
Who scattereth lustras o'er noon-day,
Soft o'er the surface creep the lustras pale
From play-house lustras thrown without reserve
Lusty. You are a lusty Traveller. But how fare you?
— Shame on me, Sir! I this lusty Lamb,
—This lusty Lamb of all my store
And gives another lusty cheer;
With what?—a Ship of lusty size;
Duly pronounced with lusty call,
The youngest, then a lusty boy,
Proceeds from infancy to lusty youth;
Young Harry was a lusty drover,
And scattered many a lusty splinter
I heard the lusty Nightingale so sing,
Of lusty vigour, more than infantine
There, too, the lusty Wrestlers shall contend;
"Those lusty twins," exclaimed our host, "if here
But, green in age and lusty as he is,
—Seven lusty Sons sate daily round the board
Flew open, and a pair of lusty Boys
Lute. She bears the strung lute of old romance,
While thy tired lute hangs on the hawthorn-tree,
From harp or lute, kind influence to compose
Of this small lute gave ease to Petrarch's wound;
Her own Æolian lute.
To the low-warbled breath of twilight lute,
Of passion; was obedient as a lute.
A heedless Youth, who touched a golden lute,
Of music, lute or harp, a long delight
Lute-enlivened. The sylvan cabin's lute-enlivened gloom.
Lute-resounding.—Thy fragrant gales and lute-
resounding streams,
Lutes. Whence lutes and voices down the en-

Have lutes (believe my words)
And wild-wood mountain lutes of saddest swell.

Luxuriant. An arch thrown back between luxuriant wings
Luxuriant wreaths around thy forehead hoar;
To a luxuriant bounty I—As our steps
Luxuriate. The notes luxuriate, every stone is kissed Luxuriates. The heart luxuriates with indifferent things,
Luxuries. And luxuries extract from bleakest moors;
Mid a trim garden's summer luxuries,
Enlivened, braced, by hardy luxuries,
For I, bred up 'mid Nature's luxuries,
Yet still in me with those soft luxuries
Luxurious. Vain pleasures of luxurious life,
A treasured and luxurious gloom of choice
With less regret for its luxurious pomp,
The wealthy, the luxurious, by the stress
All that luxurious nature could desire,
Luxury. Upward he looks—"and calls it luxury:"
To feed the tender luxury,
Heart-killing luxury, on your steps await.
In luxury of disreput
Days undefied by luxury or sloth,
The day, in luxury my limbs repos'd,
There is a luxury in self-dispraise;
Luz. Gave, in the field of Luz, to Jacob's sight
Lybia. Of Lybia; and not seldom, on the banks Lycoris. Lycoris (if such name befit

Lying. Old man lying stretched upon the ground—
Their two books lying both on a dry stone,
Then, old, beside him, lying at his feet.
While I am lying on the grass
Shade upon the sunshine lying
But now the Knight beholds him lying dead.
Upon his side the Hart was lying stretched:
To sink, perhaps, where he is lying,
Some lying fast at anchor in the road,
And all that mighty heart is lying still!
From rapture, lying softly on her breast!

Lying—continued.

- Both lying right before us;
And left them lying in the silent sun,
A folded paper, lying as if placed
Lying full three parts buried among tufts
With mounds transversely lying side by side
Lying insensible to human praise,
Lymph. That wakes the breeze, the sparkling lymph
Thy murmurs heard; and druck the crystalymph
Gazing intensely, the translucent lymph
Lynx. Old Man! you were a very Lynx, you knew
Lyre. Or sink, with heart alive like Memnon's lyre;
Soft as the dying throbs of the lyre.
In presence of the lyre.
Though 'mid the stars the Lyre shine bright,
Love animates my lyre—
Sung to the plaintive lyre in Grecian vales.
Lyre! though such power do in thy magic lyre
So may the thrillings of the lyre
Where is the Orphean lyre, or Druid harp,
Hell to the lyre bowed low; the upper arch
Whose waves the Orphean lyre forbade to meet
And taught her faithful servants how the lyre
As a true man, who long had served the lyre,
Mæsus, stationed with his lyre
Woe! woe to Tyrants! from the lyre
Hush, feeble lyre! weak words refuse
And fiction animate his sportive lyre,
Touch'd with his wither'd hand an aged lyre;
To court majestic truth, or wake the golden lyre;
Awake, awake! and snatch the slumbering lyre,
Thoughtfully fitted to the Orphean lyre;
The poet fits it to his passive lyre.
The highest, holiest, raptures of the lyre;
Of inspiration for the conscious lyre.
Lyra-enliven'd. The bosom'd cabin's lyre-enliven'd gloom;
Lyre's. "Appear!—obey my lyre's command!
Lyres. Strike audibly the noblest of your lyres,
Tune in the mountain dells their water lyres.
Lyluph's. List, ye who pass by Lyluph's Tower

Rise, and to-morrow greet magnificent Rome.
 Thy gifts, magnificent Region, ever young
 Magnificent, and beautiful, and gay.
 And homeward led my steps. Magnificent
 Of that magnificent region. On the front
 Magnificent, by which they are embraced:
 Thoughts without bound, magnificent designs,
 That this magnificent effect of power,
 Thence look for these magnificent results!
 Magnificent. Behold, how with a grace
Magnified. Well worthy to be magnified are they Ere dwarfed, or magnified?
 Led by the stream, ere noon-day magnified
 Divulged by Truth and magnified by Fame;
 When copious rains have magnified the stream
Magnifies. To hide himself, but only magnifies;
 —Oh! 'tis the heart that magnifies this life,

And by that thinning magnifies the great,
 Its currents; magnifies its shoals of life
 Sets forth and magnifies herself; thus feeds
Magnify. Mists that distort and magnify,
 And vapours magnify and spread
 Unite, to magnify the Ever-living,
 And magnify Thy name, Almighty God!
 Her simple cares to magnify;
 And magnify the glorious name of God,
Magnitude. The stars pre-eminent in magnitude,
 With magnitude and strength fit to uphold
 Through every magnitude distinguishable,
Magnolia. He told of the magnolia, spread Magog. The Magog of Legherthwaite dale.
Magpie. The magpie chatters with delight;

Maid. See Milk-maid, Mother-maid.
 'Tis plain he loves the Maid, and what he said
 The cruel Viper! — Poor devoted Maid,
 There's witchery in 't. I never knew a maid
 From the first moment that I loved the Maid;
 "Sisters and brothers, little maid,
 Sweet Maid, how this may be."
 These did the little Maid reply,
 "You run about, my little Maid,
 The little Maid replied,
 The little Maid would have her will,
 Thus, thought I, to her lamb that little Maid might sing—
 She might prove our Maid of Arc.

—A gentle Maid, whose heart is lowly bred,
 And, having seen that lovely Maid,
 A Maid whom there were none to praise
 O be thou wise as they, soul-gifted Maid!
 Dear Maid, this truth believe,
 Was the Youth's birth-place. There he wooed a Maid
 The threatened shame, the parents of the Maid
 Upon the altar, to the Maid he loved.
 Desperate the Maid—the Youth is stained with blood;
 By the unbending Parents of the Maid,
 If she, a timid Maid, hath put such boldness on.
 "How fares Joanna, that wild-hearted Maid!
 Or rather of some gentle maid,
 The fancy-stricken Youth or heart-sick Maid,
 But, pretty Maid, if you look near,
 Recall the not unwilling Maid,
 Such tales as told to any maid
 What could he less than love a Maid
 But Stephen to another Maid
 And, with this other Maid, to church
 Maid and Mother undefiled,
 Will thank you. Faultless does the Maid appear;
 Was lovely as a Grecian maid
 For, high-souled Maid, what sorrow would it be Shall tend, with his own dark-eyed Maid,
 How blew the Maid whose heart—yet free
 Such, haply, yon ITALIAN Maid,
 The breath of an HELVETIAN Maid.
 Fetched by our art, the EGYPTIAN Maid
 This is the wished-for Bride, the Maid
 King Arthur led the EGYPTIAN Maid,
 The Maid to Jesu hearkened,
 A love-lorn Maid, at some far-distant time,
 For maid and mother, when despair
 And a solitary Maid;
 For She it was—this Maid, who wrought
 This to himself—and to the Maid,
 He kissed the consecrated Maid;
 A Maid o'er whom the blessed Dove
 When Francis, uttering to the Maid
 But see the consecrated Maid
 Attempts which still the heart-sick Maid
 Then on this height the Maid had sought,
 Oh hear me, hear me, gentle Maid,
 The old Man to the silent Maid,
 Fair Vision! when it crossed the Maid

 Came forth the Maid—"In me 540 Grace Darl. 29
 "Are you the Maid," the Stranger cried,
 Which did Thee bear, and is a Maid for aye,
 "O Mother Maid! O Maid and Mother free!
 For slaughtered Youth or love-lorn Maid!
 Soft as the gentle kiss of amorous maid
 Guide hither, O sweet Moon, the maid I love so well.
 Another maid there was, who also shed
 From our own ground,—the Maid of Buttermere,—
 Each with his maid, before the sun was up,
 Upon her palfrey, or that gentle maid
 Seems hard to shun. And yet I knew a maid,
 Even like this maid, before I was called forth
 Through field or forest with the maid we love,
 Of soul impetuous, and the bashful maid
 Unjustly dealt with; but the Maid was gone!
 Silly Maid as ever was!
 Stormy and fierce, the Maid of Arc withdrew.

 But sure he loves the Maiden, and never love

 Pity the Maiden did not wait a while;
 A Maiden innocent till ensnared by Clifford,
 I'll point him out;—a Maiden is his guide,
 He is the Man to whom the Maiden—pure
 A snow-white mountain-lamb with a Maiden at its side.
 With one knee on the grass did the little Maiden
 kneel,
 Now with her empty can the Maiden turned away:
 Be thou wiser, youthful Maiden!
 "One, are we not?" exclaimed the Maiden—
 "One,
 Or sprightly maiden, of Love's court,
 "Whence strains to love-sick maiden dear,
 Then, dearest Maiden, move along these shades
 Had wooed the Maiden, day and night
 Maiden! now take flight—inherited
 And this light-hearted Maiden constant is as he.
 Whate'er the theme, the Maiden sang 280 Sal. Reab. 25
 Each maiden to her dwelling!
 She was a maiden City, bright and free;
 From the Maiden at my side;
 Nor shall forget the Maiden coy
 Of wind or wave—a meek and guileless Maiden.
 Thy fatal work, O Maiden, innocent as good!
 Of mother's love with maiden purity,
 Upon a Maiden trembling as she knelt;
 To sound the crystal depth of maiden rights;
 Of a young maiden, only not divine.
 The rescued Maiden lay 469 * Why stand 8
 A Maiden gentle, yet, at duty's call,
 Beneath whose watchful eye the Maiden grew
 In honour of that blissful Maiden free,
 Like a maiden of twenty he trembles and sighs,
 There might the love-sick maiden sit, and chide
 The maiden spread the haycock in the sun,
 Maiden of Buttermere! She lives in peace
 The maiden from the bosom of her love,
 To Youth or Maiden gone before their time,
 The spotless ether of a maiden life;
 From youth or maiden, or some honoured chief
 When the market Maiden,

Majestically. Majestically huge and slow:
 Majesties. Thy visionary majesties of light,
 Majesty. In Nature's pristine majesty outspread,
 How'er disguised in its own majesty,
 The majesty of Him who rules the world.
 We'll not insult thy majesty by time,
 No, no, this cannot be;—men thirst for power and majesty!

[Fair is the Swan, whose majesty, prevailing
 To confess their majesty!
 To take thee in thy majesty away?
 When it reveals, in evening majesty,
 The foliaged head in cloud-like majesty,
 And all his majesty—
 Queen both for beauty and for majesty.
 A sight so touching in its majesty:
 In France, before the new-born Majesty.
 And daring not to feel the majesty of right!
 Thy power and majesty,
 Awake! the majesty of God revere!
 In simple democratic majesty;
 But with its peaceful majesty content.
 Supplanted the whole majesty of Rome
 To vindicate the majesty of truth.
 Firm in its pristine majesty hath stood
 His power, his beauty, and his majesty.
 The majesty of England interposed
 Her head, and nothing loth her Majesty
 The majesty of honest dealing,
 Clothed with impressive majesty, and graced
 If she, self-shorn of Majesty, ordain
 In heavenly majesty she seem'd to move.
 In all the majesty of light array'd,
 Before thy Majesty, in humble trust
 Dimpling along in silent majesty,
 Keen ridicule; the majesty proclaims . . .
 To majesty. Like virtue have the forms
 There I conversed with majesty and power
 Of life and death, in majesty severe
 Long mouldered, of barbaric majesty.
 To dwindle, and give up his majesty,
 But, in the majesty of distance, now
 And majesty with this gigantic stream,
 Even to thy Being's infinite majesty!
 To avenge their own insulted majesty.
 On which, now fallen, erewhile in majesty
 Fresh in the strength and majesty of age,
 The majesty of both, shall pray for both;
 Nor will, I trust, the Majesty of Heaven
 Was loth to assault the majesty he loved:

And an impassioned majesty, exclaimed—

Heavens! who sees majesty in George's face?

Major-domo. And bowed to many a major-domo

Make. When crowding cattle, checked by rails that make Recovering heart, like answer did she make;
And groans which, as they said, might make a dead man start.

To make the proud and vain his tributaries,
To fling't away from you; you make no use
To make it what thou wilt. Thou hast been told,
Snapped fierce to make a morsel of his head:
To make a bed for me—My Girl will weep
And no return have I to make but prayers;
Than make me change my course, Dear Marmaduke,
I could forgive him. And should he make the Child
And make the spotless spirit of filial love
Her bonds and chains, which make the mighty feeble.

To make mankind merry for evermore,
Soon would her gentle voice make peace between us.
Between my breast-plate and my skin than make
That make the fields their dwelling. If a snake
To God above will make him feel for ours.
I should make wondrous revolution here;
But let us make the attempt.
On evil instigation, to make sport
By lowly nature reared, as if to make her
Make your bed, or make your bower;
Who of thy words dost make a mock apparel,
Where earth and heaven do make one imagery;
And, kneeling, supplication make to our Lady de la Paix;

Your years make up one peaceful family;
But do not make her love the less.
To this did Johnny answer make
Make subterraneous music, like the noise
Make ready Luke's best garments, of the best
'Twill make a thing endurable, which else
She wasted no complaint, but strove to make
Oh, gracious Heaven, in pity make her thine!
"Yet you make all courage fruitless,
Make one being of a pair."
"Make it known that my Companion
Though some may frown and make a stir,
The leaves that make the softest bed:
And make dear friendships with the streams and groves.

The meteors make of it a favourite haunt;
The harmony thy notes most gladly make
The love they to each other make,
But now my own delights I make,—
Make all one hand of paramours,
Little Flower—I'll make a stir,
They themselves make the reel,
Full often make you stretch and strain,
That make the good, tow'ards which he's yearning,
And, if they had a prayer to make,
We make a kind of handsome show!
Where a tribe of them make merry,
The echoes make a glad reply.—
She shall be mine, and I will make
A gentle answer did the old Man make,
And when the little breezes make
And they who do make mention of the same,—
" And, gallant Stag! to make thy praises known,
We will make merry in that pleasant bower.
And come and make his death-bed near the well.
My dear, dear Sister! and this prayer I make,
The coronal that coiling vipers make;
Will to composure lead—nr make thee blithe as bird in bower.

Will make thee happy, happy as a child;
And make no better use of it;
Together make as sweet a scene
That make, with curses not a few,
" Make haste—my little Rachel—dn,
The prayers I make will then be sweet indeed
And doth with his eternal motion make
Have glimpses that would make me less fondorn;
Make sadder transits o'er thought's optic glass
Could scarcely make more placid, heaven more bright)

Than will hereafter move them, if they make .
And of your Father's name will make
This fall of water that doth make
" We have a passion—make a law,
If not, make merry in despite
A sight to make a stranger sigh!
And, like Montrose, make Loyalty your pride—
Make merry, wives! ye little children, stent
" Make straight a highway for the Lord—repent!"
Which Angels make, on works of love descending.
Yes, they can make, who fail to find,
Make to the eyes of men thy features known.

Make—continued.

The curves, a loosely-scattered chain doth make;
Checking the stream, make a pool smooth and clear
That make the Patriot-spirit bow her head
But you, at least, may make report
In holy ground a grave would make;
Pinions of high and higher sweep, and make
Or seek to make assurance doubly sure.
" The which would endless matrimony make;"
To courses fit to make a mother rue
And make the serious happier than the gay?
Make thy young thoughts acquainted with the grave;

She helps to make a Holy-land at home;
Doth man of brother man a creature make
To make this Gem their own,
Make haste, your morning task resign;
Some silent laws our hearts will make,
Perhaps a tale you'll make it.
For Matthew a request I make
If kindred humours e'er would make
To mix with hymns that Spirits make and hear;
The kindness that would make him less forlorn;
Stone-walls a prisoner make, but not a slave.
Glad proclamation make, and heights and dells
Storms make in rising, valued in the moon
Offspring of soul-bewitching Art, make me
And Truth, whose eye guilt only can make dim;
Learn to make Time the father of wise Hope;
Here as elsewhere, to notices that make

To make a fair recess more fair;
And make himself a freeman of this spot
Rains, that make each rill a torrent,
Make the heart sink, then wilt thou reverence
For he of low hearts can make high, of high
He can make low, and unto death bring nigh;
And hard hearts he can make them kind and free.
He can make sick folk whole and fresh and sound;
He can make sick,—bind can he and unbind
Foolish men he can make them out of wise;—
Loose livers he can make abate their vice,
And proud hearts can make tremble in a trice.
Such uncouth singing verily dost thou make.
Unto the God of Love I make a vow,
Failing, we finally shall make accord.
Men thence a book might make, a history
Somewhat his woeful heart to make more light;
To comfort him, and make his heart more light;
Make slow to feel, and by sure steps resign
Make him a captive!—for that pent-up din,
And yours, love prompted me to make.
Will make a touching melody.
The birds shall sing and ocean make,
Have power to make thy virtues known,
Ye to each other make; I see
To make her Foster-child, her Inmate Man,
Uphold us, cherish, and have power to make
And watch, while on your brows the cross ye make,
Laid snares to make the babe her own.
The frosty wind, as if to make amends
Doth make the happy happier. This have we Thus far, O Friend! did I, not used to make
Make rigorous inquisition, the report
And make them dwellers in the hearts of men
Make ceaseless music that composed my thoughts
Of danger or desire; and thus did make
And almost make remotest infancy
Or make their dim abode in distant winds.
Those human sentiments that make this earth
Where all stand single; this I feel, and make
With such discoveries as his eye can make Impediments that make his task more sweet;
Make a strange back-ground. From his lips, ere long,
A centre to the circle which they make;
To manage books, and things, and make them act
Make green peninsulas on Esthwaite's Lake:
To make this bnok our own. Through several months,

Who make our wish, our power, our thought a deed,
Descending from the mountain to make sport
Would issue, let one incident make known.
The invisible world, doth greatness make abode,
As if to make the strong wind visible.
To make the sounds more audible? What crowd
The other to make music; hither, too,
Of this I heard, and saw enough to make
Last look, to make the best amends he may:
Were impotent to make my hopes put on
Do of itself blow fresh, and make the vanes
Thirsting to make the guardian crook of law
Justice, and make an end of Liberty.
And shall continue evermore to make,
And their impassioned sounds, which well might make Proves to the most; and called to make good search

My knowledge, as to make me capable
Have been laid open, needs must make me feel
Her temper had been framed, as if to make

Man—continued.

What he must never feel : and so, lost Man !
 Is in its infancy. The man whose eye . . .
 The wise man to that scorn which wisdom holds . . .
 And scarce could any trace of man decay,
 All he had feared from man, but roused a train
 A man there wandering, gave a mournful shriek,
 Of man, or covet sight of mortal face,
 The man half raised the stone with pain and sweat,
 "By Derwent's side my father dwelt—a man
 Was hest, could I but shun the spot where man might come.
 And groans which, as they said, might make a dead man start.
 'Twas not for him to speak—a man so tried.
 And met a man who foamed with anger vehement.
 And stern looks on the man her grey-haired Comrade cast.
 Even for the man who wears the warmest fleece;
 Thou know'st me for a Man not easily moved,
 An image of this old Man still was present,
 The house is hidden by the shade. Old Man,
 Her virtues are his instruments.—A Man . . .
 He dreads the presence of a virtuous man . . .
 Hovering round Herbert's door, a man whose figure
 And the blind Man was told how you had rescued
 Yet whence this strange aversion? You are a man
 Let this old Man find at your hands; poor Leader,
 No matter—he's a dangerous Man.—That noise!—
 If you can melt a rock, be his your man;
 Against this venerable Man? I'll tell you:
 Speak. Speak! He is a most hard-hearted Man.
 He is a man, if it should come to his ears . . .
 The blind Man—at the silent Girl he looked
 Where, if a famishing man stretch forth his hand,
 No law but what each man makes for himself;
 You are a Man—and therefore, if compassion,
 And see your Friend again. The good old Man
 A sleeping man uneasy in his bed.
 Than twenty armies. How? The old blind Man,
 Why are you not the man you were that moment?
 Since that Man left me.—No, I am not lost.
 May love his Child. Thank you, old Man, for this!
 Fallen am I, and worn out, a useless Man;
 And smothered all that's man in me?—away!—
 Are brave: Clifford is brave; and that old Man
 Of that blind Man. 'Twas not your money,
 Sir,
 Would I could find the old Man and his Daughter.
 The old Man in that dungeon is alive.
 Were there a Man who, being weak and helpless
 But in a world like ours— This self-same Man—
 —We recognise in this old Man a victim . . .
 He is the Man to whom the Maiden—pure
 Of my own child, this Man must die; my hand,
 I know no cheaper engine to degrade a man,
 These are strange sights—the mind of man, up-
 turned.
 Said one, "It is agreed on. The blind Man . . .
 They say Lord Clifford is a savage man;
 I would not give a denier for the man . . .
 But first, how wash our hands of this old Man?
 And I have loved this Man! and she hath loved him!
 In which a man may come to his end, whose crimes
 Commend me to the place. If a man should die . . .
 The Spirit of a murdered man, for instance—
 Lost Man! if thou have any close-pent guilt . . .
 Old Man! you were a very Lynx, you knew . . .
 Even such a Man my fancy bodied forth . . .
 —It may not be—I am cut off from man;
 No more shall I be man—no more shall I . . .
 And whither were you going? Learn, young Man,—
 Therefore I bless her: when I think of Man, . . .
 Here is a Man by Nature's hand prepared . . .
 Old Man! my wrath is as a flame burnt out, . . .
 There is no crime from which this man would shrink;
 Were that man, who could draw the line that parts
 What there is not another living man
 Time, since Man first drew breath, has never moved,
 Now, whither are you wandering? (That a man,
 That bears the shape of man; and for what purpose,
 My Office is fulfilled—the Man is now
 A human groan. Ha! what is here? Poor Man—
 By man and nature;—if a breeze had blown,
 Or inanimate large as the body of man,
 Or mourn him dead. A man by men cast off,
 The man was famished, and was innocent!
 Impossible! The man had never wronged me.
 And from that hour the miserable man
 —So much for my remorse! Unhappy Man!
 Mutually consecrated. Poor old Man!
 My own wild words? Young Man, the seed must lie
 The man he was. I will retire;—good night!
 that is the blood of an unhappy Man.
 To-night I met with an old Man
 let us take heart; this Man may be rich;
 This old Man may have a wife,

Man—continued.

Permit to visit any but a man . . .
 Have you, good Peasant, seen a blind old Man?
 An aged Man, and such as you describe.
 That in the shape of man do cross our path
 Entangled this poor man? Where was it? where?
 This old man had a Daughter. To the spot
 A wicked Man should answer for his crimes,
 Hard by a Man I met, who, from plain proofs
 A hideous plot, against the soul of man:
 And dies in solitude: all things but man,
 The dead Man heave a groan; or from his side
 And such a Man—so meek and unoffending—
 Helpless and harmless as a babe: a Man . . .
 Left to the mercy of that savage Man!
 It must be told, and borne. I am the man,
 some signal judgment has befallen the man
 I thought there was no harm: but that bad Man,
 The Spectre of that innocent Man, my guide.
 A Man by pain and thought compelled to live,
 So is it now I am a man;
 The Child is father of the Man;
 As warm a cloak as man can sell!"
 A Man on the peak of the Crag,
 Nor kept by Nature for herself, nor made by man
 his own,
 Until a man might travel twelve stout miles,
 Of carded wool which the old man had piled
 The happy man will creep about the fields,
 The good Man might have communed with himself,
 The thought of death sits easy on the man
 It looks just like the rest; and yet that man
 Year after year the old man still kept up
 His pace was never that of an old man:
 The old man was a father to the boys,
 This old Man, in the day of his old age,
 They loved this good old Man?— They did—and truly:
 A thriving man, and trafficked on the seas:
 The loveliest spot that man hath ever found,
 Ah! piteous sight it was to see this Man
 A noticeable Man with large grey eyes,
 He would entice that other Man to hear
 Because the wretched man himself had slain,

Man—continued.

With such fell mastery that a man may dare
The social rights of man breathe purer air;
Under a rock too steep for man to tread,

Swells like the homom of a man set free;
Where Man and Muse complained of mutual wrong;

I know an aged Man constrained to dwell
And forced to live on alms, this old Man fed
O that the good old Man had power to prove,
Lives there a man whose sole delights
Oh! cae a brave Man wish to take
Living man, it must be he!
And any man who passed her door
As every man who knew her says,
No word to any man he utters,
For whom, belike, the old Man grieves still more.
The bold good Man his labour sped
On timid man) of Nature's processes
That from the shore a full-grown man might wade,
Who didst vouchsafe for man to die;
That sheltered him, a self-secluded Man,
A Fellow-labourer, whom the good Man loved
"This Abbot, for he was a holy man,
May thence remount at ease. The aged Man
He travels on, a solitary Man,
The old man does not change his course, the boy
He travels on, a solitary Man;
But deem not this Man useless.—Statesmen! ye
Which man is born to—sink, how'er depressed,
This old Man creeps, the villagers in him
Where want and sorrow were. The easy man
—But of the poor man ask, the abject poor;
No—man is dear to man; the poorest poor
For he's not like an old Man that leisurly goes
O Man, that from thy fair and shining youth

Old Man! whom so oft I with pity have eyed,
A man who does not move with pain, but moves
With envy, what the Old Man hardly feels.
There never breathed a man who, when his life
A blessed Man! who of protracted days
Thou drooping sick Man, bless the Guide
A meek man and a brave!
That Man, who is from God sent forth,
And still we struggle when a good man dies.
To a good Man of most dear memory
O, he was good, if'er a good Man lived!
The love established between man and man,
Man and his help-mate in fast wedlock joined
At length the Man perceives it die away,
To make her Foster-child, her Inmate Mao,
Nor Man nor Boy,
Nought else of man or life remains behind
There with his infants man undaunted creeps
Soon flies the little joy to man allow'd,
Go to the world, peruse the book of man,
'Mid tumult and uproar this man must repose;
A friendless Man, a travelling Cripple!
What a man finds is all his own,
For any dwelling-place of man
Freedom, such as man may claim
When, as becomes a man who would prepare
How, in tyrannic times, some high-souled man,
Not with the mean and vulgar works of man,
The labourer, and the old man who had sate
In conversation between man and man
A man of business and expense, and went Examinations, when the man was weighed
Of that first Paradise whence man was driven;
I am not heartless, for there's not a man
Have felt, and every man alive can guess?
If ever happiness hath lodged with man,
Man, if he do but live within the light
Where an old man had used to sit alone,
Whether held forth in Nature or in Man,
Stiff, lank, and upright; a more meagre man
Commended him as a poor friendless man,
The farewell blessing of the patient man,
Even then I sometimes grieve for thee, O Man,
As her prime teacher, intercourse with man
A deathless spirit. Thou also, man! hast wrought,
No more shall need such garments; and yet man,
To cleave unto this man; but when I prayed
A substance, fancied him a living man,
Wherever man is found? The trickling tear
Their sure foundations in the heart of man,
Oh! where had been the Man, the Poet where,
At last; the dead man, 'mid that beauteous scene
And o'er the heart of man; invisibly
Of these will live till man shall be no more.
Than that most noble attribute of man,
Duly to serve the mind of earth-born man;
Or as a man, who, when his house is built,
That ever harboured in the breast of man.
That shall endure as long as man endures,
Of unrestricted and unflinching man.
Those sanctified abodes of peaceful man,
Perpetually recumbent; Stanes—man,
Among the crowd all specimens of man,

Man—continued.

Humanity, splitting the race of man
This One Man, with a sickly babe outstretched
And, on the shape of that unmoving man,
The whole creative powers of man asleep!—
The Stone-eater, the man that swallows fire,
Of man, his dullness, madness, and their feats
A lame man or a blind, the one to beg,
Man free, man working for himself, with choice
And ordinary interests of man,
Man suffering among awful Powers and Forms;
To native man. A rambling schoolboy, thus
Of the Chartreuse, for worship. Thus was man
Was, for the purposes of kind, a man
This sanctity of Nature given to man—
Of Nature and of Man that this was so;
At man through objects that were great or fair;
Was Man in my affections and regards
To help him to his grave? Meanwhile the man,
Of life and glory. In the midst stood Man,
Is possible, the unity of man,
A punctual visitant, to shake this man,
The face of one, who, whether boy or man,
Upon the faculties of man, receive
As of a different caste. A meeker man
To a religious order. Man he loved
As man; and, to the mean and the obscure,
And placid, and took nothing from the man
Unfeeling, where the man who is of soul
Man and his noble nature, as it is
On rational liberty, and hope in man,
Be free to breathe in, and the heart of man
On this and other spots, as doth a man
The man who had an ill surmise of him
The one bold man, whose voice the attack had sounded,
How much the destiny of Man had still
That Man is only weak through his mistrust
It was a lamentable time for man,
Making man what he is, creature divine,
With sound of voice and countenance of the Man,
What there is best in individual man,
That promised to abstract the hopes of Man
A more exalted nature; wished that Man
"Twas even so; and sorrow for the man
In temperament, withal a happy man,
Even as the goatherd, blessed man! had lips
And outward troubles, between the heart of man
The man to come, parted, as by a gulph,
If reason be nobility in man,
Can aught be more ignoble than the man
Colours and words that are unknown to man,
Oh! mystery of man, from what a depth
In man, and in the frame of social life,
Once more in Man an object of delight,
And dignity of individual man,
No composition of the brain, but man
Of whom we read, the man whom we behold
Whereby society has parted man
From man, neglect the universal heart.
When all the external man is rude in show,—
No other than the very heart of man,
That intermingles with those works of man
Must come, or will by man be sought in vain.
A meditative, oft a suffering, man—
The works of man and face of human life;
Dividually.—Here must thou be, O Man!
Or dear voice utter, to complete the man,
Didst chaunt the vision of that Ancient Man,
Instruct them how the mind of man becomes
"On Man, on Nature, and on Human Life,
Into our Minds, into the Mind of Man—
For the discerning intellect of Man,
Contemplated, describe the Mind and Man
Where the wren warbles, while the dreaming man,
The Friend I sought; a Man of reverend age,
Afforded, to the figure of the man
Hears least; else surely this Man had not left
To sympathy with man, he was alive
A man of kindlier nature. The rough sports
For sabbath duties; yet he was a man
Where sate the old Man on the cottage-bench;
Nor we alone, but that which each man loved
And begged of the old Man that, for my sake,
A man whose garments showed the soldier's red,
The old Man ceased: he saw that I was moved;
The old Man, noting this, resumed, and said,
The old Man rose, and, with a sprightly mien
And, sometimes—where the poor man held dispute
Said the old man, abruptly breaking silence,—
Whereon a full-grown man might rest, nor dread
His famous Optimist. "Unhappy Man!"
To see the Man who owned it, dwelling here,
Must that Man have been left, who, hither driven,
Behold the Man whom he had fancied dead!
Said the old Man, "is of an age to weep
"That poor Man taken hence to-day," replied
Answered the sick Man with a careless cheer—
And his frail creature Man!—but ye shall hear
Thoughts are not busier in the mind of man

Man—continued.

I loved the old Man, for I pitied him !
 This little Vale, a dwelling-place of Man,
 Of purposes akin to those of Man,
 Rudely to mock the works of toiling Man.
 Through wood or open field, the harmless Man
 "Far happiest," answered the desponding Man,
 Full on that tender-hearted Man he turned
 Of living man, though longing to pursue.
 Yet, mark the contradictions of which Man
 Indignantly—resolved to be a man,
 Of dire rapacity. There, Man abides,
 —Man is of dust: ethereal hopes are his,
 Shrinking from admonition, like a man
 The loss of confidence in social man,
 'Knowing the heart of man is set to be
Erect himself, how poor a thing is man!
 Up from the creeping plant to sovereign Man.
 Is still a happier man, who, for those heights
 Of man, offended, liberty is here,
 And felt, deeply as living man could feel.
 The liberty, for frail, for mortal, man
 "A pitious lot it were to flee from Man—
 Why need such man go desperately astray,
 Man walked; and when and whereso'er he moved,
 And grief spread wide; but Man escaped the doom
 Not then was Deity engulfed; nor Man,
 Of dim futurity, to Man revealed.
 While man grows old, and dwindles, and decays;
 Or in the cultured field, a Man so bred
 Yet so it pleased a fond, a vain, old Man,
 The estate of man would be indeed forlorn
 With inarticulate language. For, the Man—
 In the relations which they bear to man,
 So shall they learn, while all things speak of man,
 The Man, whom, furthermore, a hope attends
 In sign of farewell. "Nay," the old Man said,
 The outward functions of intelligent man;
 Are all renounced; high as the thought of man
 "Rites which attest that Man by nature lies
 Of sages, martyrs, confessors—the man
 And Man," said I, "be in his noblest shape
 The Solitary, "in the life of man,
 Grave, and in truth too often sad,— "Is Man
 Reason, best reason, is to imperfect man
 —Look forth, or each man dive into himself;
 To keep and cherish? how shall man unite
 Is aught so certain as that man is doomed
 For our disputes, plain pictures. Say what man
 And by frail man most equitably judged.
And look upon the dust of man with awe.
 A tired way-faring man, once I was brought
 In such a man, so gentle and subdued,
 In him who bled for man upon the cross;
 Not from the naked Heart alone of Man
 Even such a Man (inheriting the zeal
 "Such was that strong concussion; but the Man,
 By mastery:—and the good Man lacked not friends
 Man has his strength," exclaimed the Wanderer,
 "Oh!
 And yet in both rejoicing; man unblest;
 A man like this should choose to bring his shame
 Of Man degraded to his Maker's sight
 More holy in the sight of God or Man;
 "Ah! what a warning for a thoughtless man,
 And reason that in man is wise and good,
 Mild Man! he is not gay, but they are gay;
 This old Man stood, the patriarch of the Vale!
 A man of hope and forward-looking mind
 Thus silence broke—"Behold a thoughtless Man
 In this one Man is shown a temperance—proof
 Of worldly intercourse between man and man,
 That lowly, great, good Man. A simple stone
 Of whose society the blameless Man
 Not more endangered than a man whose eye
 Nor fail to note the Man who guides the team."
 "A Man he seems of cheerful yesterdays
 That, fondly seeking in dispraise of man
 Long to protect her own. The man himself,
 In God; and reverence for the dust of Man."
 Of all-beholding Man, earth's thoughtful lord;
 To serve the will of feeble-bodied Man.
 This ardent sally pleased the mild good Man,
 Hangs on the old Man with a happy look,
 A like glad impulse; and so moves the man
 That Man descends into the VALE of years;
 Of Man may rise, as to a welcome close
 Out of her course, wherever man is made
 Was Man created; but to obey the law
 "Alas! what differs more than man from man!
 Are scattered at the feet of Man—like flowers.
 So wide a difference between man and man.
 "I love to hear that eloquent old Man
 To those inventions of corrupted man
 That paradise, the lost abode of man,
 At least so seems it to a man who stands

Man—continued.

The old man afterwards was heard to say—
 Before the man with whom he so conversed
 A conquest? who must bear the blame? sage man
 —What Being, therefore, since the birth of man
 Admonishing the man who walks below
 Or with immoderate pain. I look for Man,
 Differing but little from the Man elsewhere,
 He, happy man! is master of the field,
 Or must we seek that stream where Man is not?
 But a glad function natural to man.
 The paralytic man, and for the brute—
 Of what in man is human or divine.
 More than a wise man ought to be. I wish,
 Arms and the Man I sing, the first who bore
 Manacles. His slender manacles; or romping girl Managa. To manage books, and thiogs, and make them act
 The horse is taught his manage, and no star
 Managad. A proud One docile as a managed horse;
 To see how things are made and managed there.
 Thou tread; or sweep—borne on the managed steed—
 Managment. And management of nations; what it is
 Mandate. And in due season send the mandate forth;
 Drown not at once mandate and prophecy?
 The comprehensive mandate which they give—
 The Church, by mandate shadowing forth the
 power
 But all availed not; by a mandate given
 Thy timely mandate, I deferred
 Rebuke us not!—The mandate is obeyed
 Hear, and assist;—the father's mandate calls
 Captivity by mandate without law
 Week after week, the mandate they enforced.
 Of increase and the mandate from above
 Mandates. Some who had early mandates to depart,
 To unrelenting mandates that pursue
 To pen the mandates nature doth disown.
 His mandates, given rash impulse to control
 Her mandates, severing whom true love had joined,
 To reason's mandates; and the hopes divine
 Reached her with supernatural mandates charged
 Mana. Upon the couchant lion's mane!
 Old as the tiger's paw, the lion's mane
 Manes. Upon his Leaders' bells and manes,
 Manger. The young horse must forsake his manger, Mangled. Dead, and with mangled limbs. The third day after
 Maimed, mangled by inhuman men;
 There, where with mangled throat he lay upright,
 Manhood. To manhood, seems their title to disown;
 For manhood to enjoy his strength;
 Father of all! though wilful Manhood read
 Declining Manhood learns to note the sly
 From manhood—back to childhood; for the age—
 Through the whole land—to Manhood, moved in spite
 From infancy, through manhood, to the last
 May spur me on, in manhood now mature,
 With other signs of manhood that supplied
 In manhood then, have seen a pastoral tract
 Was in the prime of manhood, and erewhile
 Than age or manhood, even. To Nature, then,
 To reconcile his manhood to a couch
 Hither, in prime of manhood, he withdrew
 And when, mature in manhood, he beheld
 —Can hope look forward to a manhood raised
 Patents of manhood for eight hundred years.
 Manhood's. Such further deep in manhood's name forbade;
 Come, come, for manhood's sake! These drowsy shiverings,
 That brought him up to manhood's prime.
 Life to consume in Manhood's firmest hold;
 Would bring him back in manhood's prime
 And manhood's vain anxiety dismissed;
 I read,—how in his manhood's earlier day
 From his youth up, and high as manhood's noon,
 Maniac. As ever made a maniac dizzy,
 No—some fierce Maniac hath usurped her name;
 Rash Polity begin her maniac dance,
 Maniac's. That maniac's fond anxiety, and go
 Maniaes. Nor of those maniaes is she one that kiss
 Bedlam, and those carved maniacs at the gates,
 Manifest. With plain and manifest intent
 Gathered his power, a manifest ally;
 As she survives in ruin, manifest
 Or heaven made manifest, that I could share
 Made manifest in Nature's sovereignty,
 Made manifest. "Come now, ye golden times,"
 With manifest emotion, and exclaimed;
 Manifestad. Distinctly manifested at this time,
 Manifold. From perils manifold, with some small wealth
 And there are reasons manifold
 With intimations manifold and dear,
 Of Earth's first blood, have titles manifold.
 Powers manifold we have that intervene

Manifold—continued.

A reader book of manifold contents,
Of colours manifold and bright
For reasons dear and manifold—
And hardships manifold did I endure,
For many a one hath virtues manifold,
Of manifold pleasures and many desires:
From manifold distinctions, difference
And how through hardships manifold and long
Attractions manifold—and this he chose.
Change manifold, for better or for worse:
For manifold privations; he refers
Through manifold degrees of guilt and shame;
So manifold and various are the ways
And bleatings manifold of mountain sheep,
Love, knowledge, all my manifold delights
Thy motions, intricate and manifold,

Mankind. To make mankind merry for evermore.

Thou didst command me to bless all mankind;
That, while the generations of mankind
Fleet as the generations of mankind
" There was a time when all mankind
Becoming that mankind should learn
To chase mankind, with men in armies packed
Our virtue, and to vindicate mankind.
More for mankind at this unhappy day
Against the life of virtue in mankind!
Our ears, and near the dwellings of mankind!
Mankind of yore were prompted to devise
Announcing, ONE was horn mankind to free;
From Sages justly honoured by mankind;
Of Science laid them open to mankind—
Upon the proud enslavers of mankind!
Foremost in freedom, noblest of mankind?
Broken with all mankind, solicit death.
Issuing in pomp, shall come to judge mankind.
And eke His Mother, honour of Mankind:
O rest, thou doleful Mother of Mankind!
" False Parent of Mankind!
By reverence for the rights of all mankind.
Amid the fretful dwellings of mankind
Of all mankind, who covets not at times
Be many, and a blessing to mankind.
But all the meditations of mankind,
And universal reason of mankind,
Now, fixed amid that concourse of mankind
Shape for mankind, by principles as fixed,
Among mankind he was in service bound,
To all mankind. But, these things set apart,
Hereafter brought in charge against mankind.
To suit my ends; I moved among mankind
This sorrowful reverse for all mankind.
With most delight the passions of mankind,
May boldly take his way among mankind
And with the generations of mankind,
In life among the passions of mankind,
For my excuse. Discovered from mankind,
And these were the first parents of mankind:
Permitted to descend, and bless mankind.
For the gross spirit of mankind,—the one
By which mankind now suffers, is most just.
That spirit only can redeem mankind;
And countless generations of mankind
That shines for him, and shines for all mankind.
The generations of mankind have knelt
And from the private struggles of mankind
For their dear countrymen, and all mankind.

Manliness. Of manliness and freedom all conspired

Manly, Luke had a manly heart; but at these words
And know that noble feelings, manly powers, . . .

But manly sovereignty its hold retains;
Of rational and manly sympathy.
Of manly virtues, mildly bright,
But each of manly sex, a docile page,
To mix the manly brown with silver grey,
Whether through manly instinct to conceal

Manna. Like showers of manna, if they come at all

For manna, take a lesson from the dog
Manner. This was the manner in which Vaudracour
This, and the manner, and the voice,
Some with their notes another manner feigned;
Do I perceive her manner, and her look,
In manner of a bird that takes delight.
State in humbler manner keep

Manners. Of manners, like thy viewless fence,

And so were better manners bred,
Poor in estate, of manners base, men of the multitude,
O the charm that manners draw,
And give us manners, virtue, freedom, power.
Fall, ancient Manners! sure defence,
~ All speak of manners withering to the root,
A land where gentle manners ruled.
Of good, o'er manners arts and arms, diffused:
Firm self-denial, manners grave and staid,
From thy mild manners quietly exhaled.
His graceful manners, and the temperate ray
The gentler manners of the private dome
Time, place, and manners do I seek, and these (How could we less?) the manners and the ways . . .

Manners—continued.

And manners finely wrought, the delicate race
Of manners put to school I took small note,
And manners which my childhood looked upon
Coarse manners, vulgar passions, that beat in Manners and characters discriminate,
Of manners and familiar incidents.
Domestic manners, customs, gestures, looks,
By manners studied and elaborate;
More wise desires, and simpler manners—nurse
Their manners, their enjoyments, and pursuits,
Speech, manners, morals, all without disguise.
Of simple manners, feelings unexpressed.
Two sets of manners could the Youth put on;
And unaffectionate manners might at once
If mild discourse, and manners that conferred
His gentle manners; and his peaceful smiles,
Conciliatory manners and smooth speech;
Her simple manners, and the stable worth
Resumed the manners of his happier days;
Old Michael's manners and discourse, and thus
Untaught manners; born among the hills,
But ye who make our manners laws, and hence
Man-of-war. A gallant stately Man-of-war,
Manorial. And one a turreted manorial hall

Man's

To soothe and cheer the poor man's solitude.
Nor taper glimmered dim from sick man's room;
More of man's thoughts and ways than his experience
To end her wrongs. But if the blind Man's tale
To hear a part in this Man's punishment.
Of this Man's crimes beyond the reach of thought?
This man's the property of him who best
As if the blind Man's dog were pulling at it.
The least of which would beat out a man's brains;
Though it were tottering over a man's head,
Man's intellectual empire. We subsist
Of that old Man's forgiveness on thy heart,
Nor emblem of our hopes; the dead man's home
And that the old Man's heart seemed born again?
The old Man's grief broke from him; to his heart
Ran with a young man's speed; and yet the voice
And an eye practised like a blind man's touch.
Becomes an echo of man's misery.
Not shunning man's abode, though shy,
But in Man's fortunes. Hence a thousand tales
'Twere worth a wise man's while to try
She had a tall man's height or more;
The old Man's shape, and speech—all troubled me:
For shelter, and a poor man's bread!
As is a landscape to a blind man's eye:
On that best portion of a good man's life,
" The end of man's existence I discerned,
Display august of man's inheritance,
Of man's enquiring gaze, but to his hope
And type of man's far-darting reason, therefore
The blind man's gloom, exalts the veteran's mirth;
O Silence! are Man's noisy years
And now among the dead man's hair
A faith that for the dead man's sake
Perplexed the good man's gentle soul.
Thought Peter, 'tis the poor man's home.
That man's heart is a holy thing;
Heed not the pillage of man's ancient heart.
Disparaging Man's gifts, and proper food.
Through narrow be that old Man's cares, and near,
In man's perturbed soul thy way benign;
That cry can reach; and to the sick man's room
Thou com'st to man's abode the spot grew dearer
For thou wert still the poor man's stay,
The poor man's heart, the poor man's hand;
Devised out of a sick man's dream!
Of that Man's mind—what can it be? what food
And love, and man's unconquerable mind.
Fade, and participate in man's decline.

And thou henceforth wilt have a good man's calm,

A great man's happiness; thy zeal shall find
For its own honour, on man's suffering heart.
As were performed in man's heroic prime;
Bestowed by Nature, or from man's great deeds
Appointed by man's common heritage,
St. Francis, far from Man's resort, to abide How subtly works man's weakness, sighs may have

Man's headstrong violence and Time's fleetness,

And, through the passions of man's fretful race
Who ne'er embittered any good man's chalice.
Whether the rich man's sumptuous gate
Aimed at the White Man's ignorance the while,
Beneath a loving old Man's view.
" An old man's privilege, I take . . .
They might deserve a good Man's blame;
His wing who could seem lovelier to man's eye
" Man's life is like a Sparrow, mighty King!
And prayer, man's rational prerogative,
But theirs the wise man's ordinary lot,
As a last token of man's toilsome day!
(By transit not unlike man's frequent doom)
In man's intelligence sublimed by grace?
In her esteem the thirst that wrought man's fall,

Man's—continued.

- Her lawful offspring in Man's art; and Time,
Discourse was deemed Man's noblest attribute,

Mantle—continued.

- When winter the grove of its mantle bereaves,
And stood, far-kenned by mantle furred with ermine,
That very mantle on a day of glory,
Sceptre and mantle, sword and ring, laid down
Time a chequered mantle wears—
A mantle such as Spanish Cavaliers
Enwrought upon thy mantle; satisfied
Mantle upon his cheek. Is this the form,
Or by his mantle's help to find
Time, in his mantle's sunniest fold
Mantles. As sound—blithe race! whose mantles were bedecked
Mantling. Close by her mantling wings' embraces prest.
Mantling in the tiny square.
Behold! the mantling spirit of reserve
The mantling triumphs of a day too blest.
While the warm hearth exalts the mantling ale,
Manx-harvest. For the old Manx-harvest to the Deep repair,
Many. In many a whistling circle wheels her flight;
By many a votive death-cross planted near,
For many a marvellous victory renowned,
What marvel then if many a Wanderer sigh,
Fixing his downcast eye, he many an hour
But faded, and stuck o'er with many a patch and shred.
A Sailor he, who many a wretched hour
'Mid the green mountains many a thoughtless song
And many perished in the whirlwind's sweep.
And, after many interruptions short
Of many things which never troubled me
Mocked me with many a strange fantastic shape!
Where now we dwell.—For many years I hope
We must not part.—I have measured many a league
Was of Kirkoswald—many a snowy winter
Nor be its witness? I had many hopes
Of many autumns in the cave had piled.
I would have given, not many minutes gone,
So you bethought you of the many ways
Thou wilt have many guides if thou art innocent;
My Friends, his heart shall have as many wounds
Did my pride tame my pride;—for many days,
The same dead calm, continued many days.
Have I lived many days—my sleep was bound
Where, hid from me, he counted many years,
Many there be whose eyes will not want cause
We must spare them—here are many:
Pull as many as you can.
As many will be blowing here.
As if the wind blew many ways,
With many a wanton stroke
And many a hill did Lucy climb:
Her hair was thick with many a curl
How many may you be?
"How many? Seven in all," she said,
"How many are you, then," said I,
Many flocks were on the hills, but thou wert owned by none.
I think of thee with many fears
Through the bounds which many a star Far happier lot, dear Boy, than brings full many to this shrine;
Give to Him prayers, and many thoughts, in thy
most busy days;
Many a captive hath she rescued,
Many a long look of wonder: and at last,
Of many darling pleasures, and the love
(For many years ago I passed this road)
As many of their betters—and for Leonard!
Had done so many offices about him,
And many, many happy days were his.
Of a vast building made of many crags;
You say that he saw many happy years?
Grew many a pinnisnood weed;
In many a court, and many a warren's tent,
He landed; and by many dangers scared,
Full many a time, upon a stormy night,
Yourself; and many did to him repair,
For I had many things to say.
And I may say, that many a time
"I had a Sm, who many a day
He kept it: many voyages
I'll tell him many tales of Thee."
So many bars between his present state
With many a most diverting thing,
And thence full many a sound she hears,
And many dreadful fears beset her,
Amid the heart of many thousand mists,
So many incidents upon his mind
With two brave sheep-dogs tried in many a storm,
Who, out of many, chose the trusty hoy
These thoughts, and many others of like sort,
With many tasks that were resigned to thee:
With many hopes; it should be so—yes—yes—
So, many months passed on: and once again . . .

Mark. See Sea-mark.
 I love to mark the quarry's moving trains,
 Who is it that hath wronged you? Mark you me;
 Mark the Almighty Wisdom, which decreed . . .
 And I had been—no matter—do you mark me?
 Yet we mark it not!—fruits redder, . . .
 Oh! I mark the beauty of his eye: . . .
 Of "Matthew, Mark, and Luke, and John,
 Mark the spot to which I point!
 "Mark him, how his power he uses, . . .
 Mark, ere for his haunt he chooses . . .
 Gave to the days a mark and name . . .
 Mark that Cripple who leans on his crutch; like a tower . . .
 To mark its eddy foam-balls prettily distrest
 Mark how the feathered tenants of the flood, . . .
 But mark her glowing cheek, her vesture green!
 Yet still I ask, what haven is her mark? . . .

The marks were still the same ; 83 Lucy Gray 50
 Marks, not mindless of frail mortals,
 And that which marks thy bed. 348 Lulled by 72*
 But marks of infancy and shame—
 When Nature marks the year's decline,
 Some scattered leaf, or marks which, in one track,
 Unsignally marks of violence or harm.
 For whom it registers the birth, and marks the growth,
 I glance but at a few conspicuous marks,
 Extrinsic differences, the outward marks
 Some vain distinctions, marks of earthly state Marmaduke. The name of Marmaduke is blown away :
 This Marmaduke— O could you hear his voice :
 Marmaduke ! I suspect unworthy tales
 That will be soon despatched. Did Marmaduke
 Than make me change my course. Dear Mar-maduke,
 What, Marmaduke ! now thou art mine for ever.
 I shall have business with you, Marmaduke ;
 Follow me to the Hostel. Marmaduke !
 Alope partake of it ?—Belovèd Marmaduke !
 "MARMADUKE."
 And Marmaduke in fearless mail,
 And one, the pensive Marmaduke,
 To Marmaduke, cut off from pity !
Maro. What Maro loved, shall we enfold ?

Marquess. Scrub lives a genuine Marquess above stairs,
Marquis. To see the arch grimace of Marquis Scrub, Marred. Have marred this Work ; the calm ethereal
 grace,
 Their peace, perhaps, our lightest footfall marred ;
Marriage. That on his marriage day sweet music made !
 We talked of marriage and our marriage day ;
 Small help ; and, after marriage such as mine,
 Of love and marriage bonds. These words to thee
Marriage-bed. O sacred marriage-bed of death, Marriage-vow. Divine displeasure, broke the marriage-vow.
Married. And then I married, and was rich
 I married my sixth wife !
 The gentle Lady married to the Moor ;
 And wisdom married to immortal verse ?"
Marrow. Then said my "winsome Marrow,"
 We'll keep them, winsome Marrow !
 Or seeks, a "winsome Marrow."
Mars. In bloodiest battle since the days of Mars !
 High o'er the red-haired race of Mars,
 Jove, Venus, and the ruddy crest of Mars
 The dancing Salii—on the shields of Mars
 Whose Guardians bent the knee to Jove and Mars :
 The latter chiefly ; from the field of Mars
Marsh. Till they have crossed the quaking marsh,
 The fainting creature took the marsh,
 Across the marsh, the game in view,
 O'er Anet's hopeless seas of marsh to stray,
Marshal. Marshal the banquet, giving with due grace
 Marshal forth—with a pair of oars in gules.
Marshalled. Not virgin lilies marshalled in bright row,
 In marshalled thousands, darkening street and moor
Marshes. "Mid ready fens wide-spread and inarshes drear,
Marsh-marigold. Bright gowau, and marsh-marigold, farewell !
Mart. Trusting to crowded factory and mart
 To seek the general mart of Christendom ;
 Or soil endured a transfer in the mart
Martha. Since she (her name is Martha Ray)
 Poor Martha ! on that woful day
 That Martha Ray about this time
 They had to do with Martha Ray.
Martha's. Ere I had heard of Martha's name, Martial. Though martial songs have banished songs of love.
 By martial sports,—or, seated in the tent,
 Who, from a martial pageant, spreads
 Of more than martial courage in the breast
 The martial courage of a day is vain.
 From all that martial feats could yield
 Such martial service disapprove.
 All martial duties to fulfil ;
 Of martial banner, in procession bear ;
 Enter betimes with more than martial fire
 Of music, martial tuques, and banners spread,
 The shepherd's grey to martial scarlet changed.
Martre. And from Mont Martre southward to the Dome
Martyr. Ere martyr burns, or patriot bleeds !
 England's first Martyr, whom no threats could shake ;
 Martyr, or King, or sainted Eremité,
 "O Martyr" 'stablished in virginity !
 And lifted up this Martyr from the bier,
 For never did the uxorious martyr seek

Martyrdom. Of martyrdom, and fortitude, and right.
 And eke of martyrdom this ruby bright,
 So that they burn forth in great martyrdom . . .
 Founded in truth ; by blood of Martyrdom . . .
Martyred. Unto their martyred Countrymen decreed,
Martyr's. She smiles as if a martyr's crown were woa :
 Encouraged with a martyr's confidence ;
Martyrs. See Battle-martyrs.
 Aid, glorious Martyrs, from your fields of light,
 The headless martyrs of the Covenant,
 Where Christian Martyrs stand in hues portrayed,
 In the cleansed faith for which her martyrs died ;
 The Heavens are thronged with martyrs that have risen
 Holden where martyrs suffered in past time,
 The life and death of martyrs, who sustained,
 Of sages, martyrs, confessors—the man
Marvel. What marvel then if many a Wanderer sigh,
 The later Sidney, Marvel, Harrington,
 And marvel not that antique Faith inclined (Stilled from afar—such marvel story tells—
 The marvel of the PERILOUS SEAT,
 I marvel how Nature could ever find space Marvellous. For many a "marvellous victory re-sowned,
 The marvellous current of forgotten things ; . . .
 (Sentient by Grecian sculpture's marvellous power),
 And terror of that marvellous night !
 I thought of Chatterton, the marvellous Boy,
 Yet did the glowing west with marvellous power . . .
 As aught that marvellous coast thro' all its length
 Through marvellous felicity of skill,
 Ye heard, a rocking marvellous
 A marvellous study of wild accident ;
 Was frozen at his marvellous source ;
 Faith in the marvellous things which then I felt ?
 When craving for the marvellous gives way
 And mocks the prompter's listening. Marvellous things
 The Wax-work, Clock-work, all the marvellous craft
 Each lost in each, that marvellous array
 And what a marvellous and heavenly show
 Though marvellous in its kind. A place there is A marvellous spectacle," the Wanderer said,
 The trunk and body of its marvellous strength,
 Upon the cross, this marvellous advance
Marvellously. How clear, how keen, how marvellously bright
 A habitation marvellously planned,
 As marvellously seized as in that moment
Marvels. What nobler marvels than the mind
 From your infinite marvels, the sadness was just.
 Of Death and Time, the marvels it hath wrought.
 Of marvels, broad-day wonders permanent :
 (Could they depict the marvels of thy call)
Mary. So, Mary, let it be
 And therefore, my sweet MARY, this still Nook,
 O blissful Mary, Mother mild,
 Of God, and Heaven's pure Queen—the blissful Mary.
 And, MARY ! oft beside our blazing fire,
 They knelt in prayer, or sang to blissful Mary.
 O us, for reverence of His Mother Mary !"
 By a best Husband guided, Mary came
 Mary ! may now have lived till he could look
Mary's. For MARY's humble, SARAH's silent claim,
 The swan on still St. Mary's Lake
 Yea, let our Mary's one companion child—
 And, through her depths, Saint Mary's Lake
 And lay it on Saint Mary's shrine ;
 To look upon Saint Mary's shrieve ;
 St. Mary's Church, the preacher then would cry :—
 Of Nightshade, to St. Mary's honour built,
 Of Nightshade, and St. Mary's mouldering fane,
Mask. A holier name ; and, under such a mask,
 Have you betrayed me ? Speak to that. The mask,
 Loose idless to forego her wily mask.
 This face of rural beauty be a mask
 Of subtle Treason, in his mask of law,
Masked. Is masked, "if house it be or power,"
Masonry. On a low structure of rude masonry Masquerade. Poor winter look fine in such strange masquerade.
 Is, peradventure, one in masquerade.
Masquerading. In Luddon, and masquerading,"
Mass. Where but a mass of shade the sight can trace,
 Along the steaming lake, to early mass.
 'T' the name of all the Saints, and by the Mass
 And, by the Mass, to see him at his prayers !—
 In mass opposed to mass,
 It is a mass of knotted joints,
 Buried together in yon gloomy mass
 And a huge mass, to bury or to hide,
 Where tapers burned, and mass was sung,
 And virtues through the mass infused,
 To mass or some high festival ;
 Saug mass,—and tore the book of prayer,—
 A greedy flame ; the pompous mass proceeds ;
 Like those the Heathen served ; and mass is sung ;

Mass—continued.

Before the altar while the Mass doth last : . . . 555
 Spotting the steaming deeps, to early mass : . . . 604
 And of some other Being. A rude mass . . . 642
 Or linked them to some feeling: the great mass . . . 651
 Between the show, and many-headed mass . . . 693
 That huge fermenting mass of human-kind . . . 696
 Till the whole cave, so late a senseless mass, . . . 707
 And ocean's liquid mass, in gladness lay, . . . 759
 Enclosed between an upright mass of rock . . . 777
 A mass of rock, resembling, as it lay . . . 787
Massacre. Of massacre, in which the senseless sword
Massacres. I thought of those September massacres,
Massed. Abodes of men irregularly massed . . . 478
Masses. The solace beads and masses yield, . . . 835
 Masses of every shape and size, that lay . . . 391
Massier. Beneath a massier Highland Broach . . . 180
Massy. Of massy gloom and radiance hold . . . 240
 Massy and black, before him lay : . . . 349
 And massy grove, so near you blazing town, . . . 382
 Is that embattled House, whose massy Keep . . . 390
 The silver Broach of massy frame, . . . 477
 Speak Thou, whose massy strength and stature score . . . 549
 The massy Ways, carried across these heights . . . 707
 Erelong, the massy roof above his head, . . . 814
 Shrine, altar, image, and the massy piles . . . 824
 But large and massy; for duration built; . . . 865
 Stretched on his pier—that massy timber wain; . . . 881
 Rose the slim ash and massy sycamore, . . . 891
 Supporting gracefully a massy dome . . . 31
Mast. See Gibbat-mast.
 A thought resigned with pain, when from the mast
 And so, flag flying at mast head,
 Long is it as a barber's pole, or mast of little boat,
 Nor mount the mast, nor row, nor float
 A crimson splendour: lowly is the mast
 By the strong sunbeams smitten. Like a mast
 Upon the tall mast streaming. But, ye Powers
 Her strong knee-timbers, and the mast that hears Master. See Task-master.
 Hunts, where his master points, the intercepted
 flocks. . . . 5
 And lustily the master carved the bread, . . . 34
 Be cautious, my dear Master! I perceive . . . 37
 Dear Master! gratitude's a heavy burden . . . 38
 What life is this of ours, how sleep will master . . . 45
 He does his Master credit. As I live, . . . 45
 You are now in truth my Master; you have taught me . . . 64
 Of a tyrannic Master whom they loathed. . . . 69
 The goal is reached. My Master shall become . . . 73
 There will be need of preparation. Master! . . . 74
 Of which I have been proud. O my poor Master!
 "O Master! I am seven." . . . 84
 For that her Master never uttered word . . . 125
 Went up to London, found a master there,
 Another Master. Heaven forgive me, Luke,
 Yes, let my master fume and fret,
 Cannot shield thee from thy Master,
 For the Master sees, alas!
 With eager eyes the Master spies; . . . 203
 O Master! it has been a cruel leap.
 To see her Master and to cheer—
 And a true master of the glowing strain,
 Sweeps his harp, the Master rides : . . . 234
 "No doubt," quoth he, "he is the Master
 No master spirit, no determined rod;
 A Roman Master stands on Grecian ground,
 The Master of whose humble hoard
 Pass from their Master, sojourning here to guard
 Issues the master Mind, at whose fell swoop
 To each new Master, like a steer or hound,
 That master them. How enviously blest
 Rare master has it been thy lot to know; . . . 489
 On his morning rounds the Master . . . 490
 Strong as could then be borne. A Master meek
 The Master died, his drooping servant's grief . . . 525
 With such a master would I never be;
 His fields seemed to know what their Master was doing; . . . 569
 Broods like the Day, a Master o'er a Slave, . . . 589
 He passed—nor was I master of my eyes . . . 649
 The trunk and every master branch were green
 Of a new master; bleat the flocks aloud. . . . 676
 As of a lord and master, or a power,
 Master my fancy while I wandered on . . . 699
 The mind is lord and master—outward-sense
 To a kind master on a distant farm . . . 703
 Thought I, if master of a vacant hour,
 "What other yearning was the master tie,
 Or late, a perilous master. He—who off,
 Of Time's eternal Master, and that peace,
 By some accomplished Master, while he sate
 In vain, if he were master of their fate;
 With scantiest knowledge, master of all truth
 He, happy man! is master of the field, . . . 716
Master-bias. Is yet a Soul whose master-bias leans
Master-current. The master-current of her brain
Mastered. Over material forms that mastered reason.

Mastered—continued.

Are mastered by the breathing haze : . . . 167
 As indignation mastered grief, my tongue . . . 367
 But both will soon be mastered, and the corpse . . . 455
 And difficulty mastered, with resolve . . . 541
 His temper was quite mastered by the times, . . . 711
Masterful. An instant kiss of masterful desire— . . . 433
Master-Idol. To Gain, the master-idol of the realm, Master-light. Are yet a master-light of all our seeing;
Master-pamphlets. With care, the master-pamphlets of the day; . . . 711
Masterpiece. A pretty prospect this, a masterpiece
 Stood with eyes fixed upon that masterpiece, . . . 609
Master's. Let the Steed glory while his Master's hand
 His master's hands in sign of bliss, . . . 297
 Of Neville, at their Master's call . . . 403
 Labouring as ever in your Master's sight, . . . 444
 Now near his master's house in open view . . . 472
 His Master's dead,—and no one now . . . 483
 Or by his master's side : . . . 492
 Your Master's throne is set.—"Deaf was the Sea;
 The Dirge which for our Master's sake . . . 778
 A kerchief sprinkled with his master's blood, . . . 860
 Meanwhile the unsendatory Master's hand . . . 860
 Upon its Master's frame, a wintry grace; . . . 860
Masters. See Posture-masters.
 God bless and thank you both, my gentle Masters.
 I now perceive we do mistake our masters,
 Of the world's masters, with the musty rules . . . 64
 The prey or masters of our own past deeds. . . . 65
 Proclaim it, let your Masters hear . . . 402
 Nor were we ever masters of our wish. . . . 672
 Among the unthinking masters of the earth . . . 761
Mastery. 'Tis vain to strive for mastery.
 Of reckless mastery, hitherto unknown.
 With such fell mastery that a man may dare . . . 518
 And, with a resolute mastery shaking off . . . 730
 By its inevitable mastery, . . . 747
 By mastery :—and the good Man lacked not friends
 An intellectual mastery exercised . . . 840
 Till perfect mastery crown the pains at last. . . . 877
Mastiff. See Jail-mastiff.
 A surly mastiff kennels at the gate, . . . 60
 The mastiff, from beneath the wagon, . . . 178
 The Mastiff wondering, and perplexit . . . 179
 The Mastiff, ill-conditioned car! . . . 179
 Salutes the Mastiff on the head; . . . 179
Mastiff's. The Creature, by the Mastiff's side,
 By his noble Mastiff's side, . . . 181
 A wound upon the Mastiff's head, . . . 181
Mast's. Survive upon the tall mast's height;
Masts. That like to leaning masts of stranded ships appear. . . . 18
 So said, so done; and masts, sails, yards, . . . 178
 The skiffs with naked masts at anchor laid,
 Like leaning masts of stranded ships appear . . . 611
Match. The gloomy lantern, and the dim blue match,
 To match the spark of local fire,
 And I will mate and match him blissfully.
 Better, if Reason's triumphs match with these,
 "Now, Matthew!" said I, "let us match . . . 468
Matched. See Ill-matched, Well-matched.
 For matched with these shall policy prove vain,
 Chosen for ornament—stone matched with stone . . . 320
 Match'd with an equal number of like age, . . . 378
 Is matched unequally with custom, time, . . . 624
 Of two brave vessels matched in deadly fight, . . . 804
Matchless. They sport beneath that mountain's matchless height . . . 21
 Stood single, and, from matchless depth of shade,
 Thy matchless courage I bewail no more, . . . 133
 O matchless perfidy! portentous lust . . . 210
 A liquid coherent matchless by nice Art, . . . 213
 See! there she is, the matchless Earth! . . . 237
 With matchless beams, . . . 285
 Thy matchless worth to all posterity, . . . 316
 Whom I should choose for love and matchless labours, . . . 372
 The day when he achieved that matchless feat, . . . 373
 I see a matchless blazonry unfurled . . . 430
 Or Gehol's matchless gardens, for delight . . . 700
 They are matchless in story; . . . S.3.

Mate. See Co-mate, Helpmate.

No mate, no comrade Lucy knew; . . . 82
 And, sooth to say, an apter Mate . . . 165
 There to the brooding bird her mate . . . 168
 Thee and thy mate and sister of the sky . . . 172
 Her Father took another Mate; . . . 192
 Among the shepherd-grooms no mate . . . 205
 Winds the mute Creature without visible Mate . . . 212
 And I will mate and match him blissfully. . . . 220
 Am all unfit to be your mate. . . . 237
 The joyous Woman is the Mate . . . 294
 And cheers thy melancholy Mate! . . . 294
 And, when she took unto herself a Mate, . . . 305
 No brother, no mate has he near him—while I . . . 484
 Thee his loved servant, his inspiring mate! . . . 480
 And to one purpose cleave, their Being's godlike
 mate! . . . 529
 If long time from thy mate thou be, or far, . . . 560

Mate—continued.

No night-duck clamours for his wilder'd mate,
 To my heart's wish, my tender Mate became . . .
 The funeral train, the Shepherd and his Mate . . .
 Until the expected hour at which her Mate . . .
 Of his own board, where sat his gentle Mate . . .
Mated. Than kindred wishes mated suitably
 Alone or mated, solitude was not. . .
Mat. And sang, O Alma Redemptoris Mater!
Material. Over material forms that mastered reason.
 And the material finest gold; . . .
 On mere material instruments—how weak . . .
Materials. A thing of such materials framed, by a builder such as he. . .
 The gross materials of this world present . . .
 From earth's materials—waits upon my steps; . . .
 Upon the dark materials of the storm . . .
 And with such soft materials line, her nest . . .
Maternal. So, unwatched by love maternal,
 Maternal Flora! show thy face,
 And the maternal sympathy itself, . . .
 Nice ad mat maternal fingers lend; . . .
 Mute Spirit of maternal love, . . .
 Did pass dependent on maternal care, . . .
 In sadness listen. With maternal zeal . . .
 Bold in maternal Nature's care, . . .
 Thy lost, maternal heart to re-infuse! . . .
 That look upheld as with maternal care . . .
 And she herself from the maternal bond . . .
 From her maternal cares, had taken up . . .
 The thankful captive of maternal bonds; . . .
 And a strange thraldom of maternal love, . . .
 From the maternal breast; then scruples rose; . . .
 Her fond maternal heart had built, a nest . . .
 Of one maternal spirit, bringing forth . . .
Mates.
 I lay where, with his drowsy mates, the cock . . .
 Thou, thou and all thy mates, to keep . . .
 This Boy was taken from his mates, and died. . .
 To tread for pasture, talking with his mates, . . .
 And small birds singing happily to mates . . .
Matin. Thy glittering steeples, whence the matin bell
 The current of this matin song; . . .
Matin-bell. From thickly-glittering spires the matin-
 bell . . .
 And for the Matin-bell to sound no more . . .
Matins. These matins mounting towards her native sphere.
 From thorn or vill his matins sound for me, . . .
 To matins joined a mournful voice, . . .
 Matins and vespers of harmonious verse! . . .
 At matins froze, and couched at curfew-time, . . .
 Said matins at the hour that suited those . . .
 These festive matins?—"He replied, "Not loth . . .
 Rise with the lark! your matins shall obtain . . .
Matrimony. "The which would endless matrimony make;" . . .
Matron. Repaired, but only found the matron there,
 His Helpmate was a comely matron, old—
 Of man mature, or matron sage? . . .
 A Matron dwells who, though she bears . . .
 I praise thee, Matron! and thy due . . .
 The fetters which the Matron wears; . . .
 No answer did the Matron give, . . .
 While over her the Matron bent . . .
 Decking the matron temples of a place
 (The same kind Matron whom your tongue hath praised) . . .
 Come," said the Matron, "to our poor abode; . . .
 Pass," said the Matron, "and I never see, . . .
 The Matron ended—nor could I forbear . . .
 How on her head of death the Matron lay, . . .
 And, close behind, the comely Matron rode, . . .
 This goodly Matron, shining in the beams . . .
 Peace to the sober matron who shall dip . . .
Matron's. And like a Roman matron's was her mien and gait. . .
 Broke from the Matron's strong black eye— . . .
 But not in scorn—the Matron's Faith may lack . . .
 And in the Matron's countenance may be read . . .
 Was trimmed and brightened by the Matron's care, . . .
 As gathered from the Matron's lips, and tell . . .
Matrons. Matrons and Sires—who, punctual to the call . . .
 Haste, Virgins, haste, and you, ye Matrons grave,
 Maids and Matrons, dight . . .
 When teeming Matrons—yielding to rude faith . . .
 Of maids and youths, old men, and matrons staid,
 And Matrons and unwedded Sisters old; . . .
Mats. Like Indian mats, that with appropriate grace
Matted. His wife sat near him, teasing matted wool,
 Through beds of matted fern, and tangled thickets,
 The matted forests of Ontario's shore . . .
 Clapped hands, and shook with glee their matted
 locks; . . .
 His black matted hair on his shoulder is bent, . . .
 Of garden ground run wild, its matted weeds . . .
 Dived into caves, and pierced the matted woods, . . .
Matter. With caution, sift the matter artfully, . . .
 No matter—he's a dangerous Man.—That noise!—

Matter—continued.

By mingling natural matter of her own . . .
 Your favourite saint—no matter—this good day . . .
 Be larger than the peas—prove this—"twere matter . . .
 And I had been—no matter—do you mark me? . . .
 Dead, dead!—A dismal matter, Sir, for me, . . .
 What matter? if the waters sleep . . .
 Touching the matter of his passion, still, . . .
 It plays not for them,—what matter? 'tis theirs; . . .
 Matter for a joud thought, . . .
 What matter! he's caught—and his time runs to waste; . . .
 And soon with this he other matter blended, . . .
 But there is matter for a second rhyme, . . .
 Not negligent the style,—the matter?—good . . .
 Familiar matter of to-day? . . .
 Of matter for the dawning day! . . .
 Matter and Spirit are as one Machine; . . .
 To us save matter for a thoughtful sigh, . . .
 Matter wherein right voluble I am, . . .
 Each takes in this high matter, all may move . . .
 Oh! what's the matter? what's the matter? . . .
 'Twas all in vain, a useless matter, . . .
 Calling to mind this matter when I may, . . .
 This matter asketh counsel good as grave, . . .
 A present joy the matter of a song, . . .
 Cheap matter offered they to boyish wit, . . .
 With kindred matter, 'twas to me, in truth, . . .
 To have a house (what matter for a home?) . . .
 The matter that detains us now may seem, . . .
 To humbler matter that detained us of . . .
 Matter not lightly to be heard by those . . .
 I mix more lowly matter; with the thing . . .
 Abstrusest matter, reasonings of the mind . . .
 Are like an idle matter. Still she sighed, . . .
 Are made of; an ungracious matter this! . . .
 I treat the matter lightly, but, alas! . . .
 Imparted—to brute matter, I rejoice, . . .
 Some weighty matter; then, with fervent voice . . .
 Hath furnished matter for a thought; perchance, . . .
Matters. (Abused, betrayed, but how it matters not)
 What matters it?—I blame them not . . .
 And, if not so, what matters beauty gone . . .
 Of matters which not falsely may be called . . .
 Whether in matters various, properties . . .
 Our origin, what matters it? In lack . . .
Matthew. Of "Matthew, Mark, and Luke, and John,
 To me my good friend Matthew spake, . . .
 For Matthew a request I make . . .
 Poor Matthew, all his frolics o'er, . . .
 The sighs which Matthew heaved were sighs . . .
 And Matthew stopped, he looked, and said, . . .
 A second time did Matthew stop; . . .
 Matthew is in his grave, yet now, . . .
 And Matthew seventy-two . . .
 "Now, Matthew!" said I, "let us match
 In silence Matthew lay, and eyed . . .
 "And, Matthew, for thy children dead . . .
Matthew's. Has travelled down to Matthew's name,
 The tears which came to Matthew's eyes . . .
Mattock. The mattock tottered in his hand;
 With spade and mattock o'er his shoulder hung;
 His spade and hoe, mattock and glittering scythe,
Mature. Of man mature, or matron sage?
 Mature release, in fair society . . .
 May spur me on, in manhood now mature, . . .
 The fold protecting. I myself, mature . . .
 If future years mature me for the task, . . .
 And when, mature in manhood, he beheld
Matured. When these wild ecstasies shall be matured
 If steady moods of thoughtfulness matured
 To higher things; more naturally matured,
 Matured, and in the summer of their strength.
 —But when the lord of seasons had matured
Maturer. Now, to a maturer Audience, . . .
 Of their maturer years, his present mind . . .
 Maturer Fancy owes to their rough noise . . .
 Until maturer seasons called them forth . . .
 In the belief, that my maturer age, . . .
 Maturer years. A grove there is whose boughs . . .
 And hence a blow that, in maturer age, . . .
Matures. And image of right reason; that matures
Maulverers. The Claphams and Maulverers stand;
Maurence. Far as Sr. MAURICE, from yon eastern FORKS, . . .
Mausolean. And mausolean pomp? Yet here they stand . . .
Mausoleum. Rude Mausoleum! but wrens nestle
 there, . . .
Maxim. This is our maxim, this our piety . . .
Maximilian. Of Maximilian Robespierre; "the hand,
Maximins. Hoards may come forth of Trajans, Maximins, . . .
Maxims. Dragging all precepts, judgments, maxims, creeds . . .
May. (Partial list.)
 We two had sung, like gladsome birds in May; . . .
 Well may we wonder he has gained such power . . .
 Let us begone—the Band may else be folled . . .
 May He whose eye is over all protect you!

May—continued.

Be better fed. Ne'er may I own the heart
 May well deceive his Child—What! leave her thus, Enemies!—of his own coinage. That may he,
 To think of it. Enough! you may depart.
 You will be firm: but though we well may trust,
 I would preserve thee. How may this be done?
 A notice for your Daughter, that she may know
 Let us begone with speed, that he may hear
 With proper speed our quarters may be gained
 This is a time, said he, when guilt may shudder;
 That well may put some fears into your heart.
 May love his Child. Thank you, old Man, for this!
 May you in age be blest with such a daughter!—
 And none look grave but dotards. He may live.
 Now may I perish if this turn do more
 I am of flesh and blood, and may I perish
 May touch, whene'er her Vassals are at work.
 That may not be retold to any ear.
 To welcome in the May.
 Like rivulets in May
 Dost lead the revels of the May;
 Nor pastimes of the May;
 Whose zeal outruns his promise! Blue-eyed May
 At like unlovely process in the May

Upon a sun-bright morn of May,
 Are cheerful as the rising sun in May.
 Nor art thou wronged, sweet May! when I compare
 Thy pleased associates—light as endless May (October's workmanship to rival May)
 Delightful blossoms for the May
 Spring takes, O sprightly May! thy shape,
 For May is on the lawn.
 To honour thee, sweet May!
 The sovereignty of May.
 Since thou, blithe May, wert born,
 When May is whispering, "Come!
 And what if thou, sweet May, hast known
 Keep, lovely May, as if by touch
 "Wherefore I praise, the worthiest that I may,
 Not that I may increase her honour's dower,
 That I the weight of it may not sustain;
 Calling to mind this matter when I may,
 What may your ill intentions you avail?
 Know, that the honour of high God may spread,
 Yet may I sing, O Alma! loud and clear.
 To tell his might my wit may not suffice.
 For he may do all that he will devise;
 In brief, the whole of what he will, he may;
 But most his might he sheds on the eve of May.
 Now against May shall have some stirring—whether
 For now when they may hear the small birds' song,
 And thus in May their hearts are set on fire,
 Yet have I felt of sickness through the May,
 Through all this May that I have little sleep;
 And it was then the third night of the May.
 Began to honour May with all their powers.
 All men may understanding have of me,
 But, Nightingale, so may they not of thee;
 Thou say'st OSSE, OSSE, then how may I
 Have knowledge, I thee pray, what this may be?
 He may full soon go with an old man's hair.
 For he, in sooth, is blind, and may not see,
 That vengeance on this Cuckoo I may wreak.
 That all this May I will thy songstress be.
 When next May comes, if I am not afraid.
 For love of thee, as loud as I may cry;
 And, God of Love, that can right well and may,
 For since we yet may have no other feast,
 Yet, since I may no better, would I kiss
 Men said, what may it be, can no one guess
 That absent was, 'gan sing as ye may hear.
 Then shall she come, that with her bliss may bring,
 May thence remount at ease. The aged Man
 But stops,—that he may safely lodge the coin
 And lifts the latch for him that he may pass.
 May never House, misnamed of Impuſtry,
 And, in spite of the shame that may lurk in his
 mind,
 The breath of the cows you may see him inhale,
 May one blade of grass spring up over thy head;
 And, the first moment that the sun may shine,
 "The sunshine may not cheer it, nor the dew;

And yet, into whatever sin they may fall,
 May read them not without some bitter tears.
 The May had then made all things green;
 And with the heart of May Feel the gladness of the May!
 When the fresh eagle, in the month of May,
 Of giving welcome to the first of May
 Around whose trunk the maidens dance in May—May-bush. Their May-bush, and along the street in flocks
May-day. By Shepherd-groom or May-day queen,
May'st. (Partial list.)
 Then may'st thou think upon the dead.
 Now may'st thou sing for eye before the throne,
 Although for pain thou may'st be like to die,
 Long yet may'st thou live I, for a teacher we see.

May-fly. Nought but the char that for the may-fly leaps
May-garlands. May-garlands, there let the holy altar
 stand
May-morn. Hark to the peals on this bright May-morn!
May-morning. How did he die at last? One sweet
 May-morning,
 This sweet May-morning,
Mayor. Nor least, Heaven bless him! the renowned Lord Mayor:
Mayors. And worship Mayors, Tipstiffs, Aldermen
 and all.
May-pole. Tales of the May-pole dance, and wreaths that decked
 Of gold, the Maypole shines; as if the rays
May's. O'er town and tower we fled, and fields in May's fresh verdure dress;
 When hums the mountain bee in May's glad ear,
May-showers. Roused by this kindly of May-showers,
May-storm. One roaring cataract! a sharp May-storm
May-time. From May-time and the cheerful Dawn;
 This May-time, every day before thou dine,
Maze. Adown a rocky maze;
 Or down the tempting maze of Shawford brook—
 Beginning, lead his voice through many a maze
Mazes. But once I pierced the mazes of a wood
 There he wheels in downward mazes;
 How oft along thy mazes,
 Mounts, as you see, in mazes serpentine,
 Along the mazes of this song I go
Mazy. And the mazy stream unravelled
 A mazy course along familiar things,
 The mazy Forth unravelled;
 With mazy boundaries, as the astronomer
 By sound, or ghost of sound, in mazy strife;
 Among a last game of mazy hoverings
 With mazy streams that backward went,
 Among the mazy streams that backward went,
 The mazy reaches of Loch Katerine,
Me. (Partial list.) See Forget-me-not.
 Oh! leave me to myself, nor let me feel
 The officious touch that makes me droop again.
 To show what pleasures yet to me remain,
 Even now she decks for me a distant scene,
 Or let me die!
 Stay near me—do not take thy flight!
 Float near me; do not yet depart!
 She gave me eyes, she gave me ears;
 "Then come with me into the chaise."
 Her beauty made me glad.
 And wondering looked at me.
 And dearly he loves me.
 My boy beside me tripped, so slim
 In careless mood he looked at me,
 My little Edward, tell me why—"—
 Stranger to me and yet my friend, a simple notice came,
 Me had the dream equipped with wings, so I took him in my arms,
 Those paths so dear to me.
 The difference to me!
 With what thou art to me.
 Yet hear me up—else faltering in the rear
 Of a steep march; support me to the end.
 In friendship she to me would often tell.
 O gentle Muses! let me tell
 Why of your further aid bereave me?
 And can ye thus unfriended leave me;
 Oh me! it is a merry meeting
 And She who dwells with me, whom I have loved
 Can ever be a solitude to me,
 The redbreast near me hopped; nor was I loth
 If stately passions in me burn,
 That breath'st with me in sun and air,
 Up with me, up with me into the clouds!
 Lift me, guide me, till I find
 Only read, perhaps, by me;
 Praise it is enough for me,
 Yet tho' to me the pencil's art
 They dance not for me,
 Sweet Bird! to do me wrong;
 ('Tis Fancy guides me willing to be led,

 Not mine, and such as were not made for me . . . 632 Prelude 1. 25
 My own voice cheered me, and far more, the mind's . . . 633 Prelude 1. 107
 Continued, brought me to my hermitage . . . 633 Prelude 1. 126
 And mock me with a sky that ripens not . . . 634 Prelude 1. 32
 And now it would content me to yield up . . . 634 Prelude 1. 122
 With me is now such passion, to be blamed . . . 634 Prelude 1. 144
 Sometimes it suits me better to invent . . . 635 Prelude 1. 221
 Betray me, serving often for a cloak . . . 635 Prelude 1. 244
 Now dupes me, trusting to an anxious eye . . . 635 Prelude 1. 247
 Low breathings coming after me, and sounds . . . 637 Prelude 1. 323
 Towered up between me and the stars, and still . . . 637 Prelude 1. 382
 That fed, and, flying still before me, gleamed . . . 638 Prelude 1. 451
 Behind me did they stretch in solemn train, . . . 639 Prelude 1. 461
 Haunting me thus among my boyish sports, . . . 639 Prelude 1. 469
 And bringing with me no peculiar sense . . . 640 Prelude 1. 575
 And common face of Nature spake to me . . . 641 Prelude 1. 587
 May spur me on, in manhood now mature, . . . 641 Prelude 1. 624
 The road lies plain before me ;—'tis a theme . . . 641 Prelude 1. 640
 Those chiefly that first led me to the love . . . 642 Prelude 2. 4
 And to my Friend who knows me I may add, . . . 643 Prelude 2. 73
 Yet, to this hour, the spot to me is dear . . . 644 Prelude 2. 154
 Into my heart, and held me like a dream ! . . . 644 Prelude 2. 174
 Analogous, the moon to me was dear ; . . . 645 Prelude 2. 191
 And thou wilt doubt, with me less aptly skilled . . . 645 Prelude 2. 222
 Abode with me ; a forming hand, at times . . . 647 Prelude 2. 363
 Than alyotic industry to me . . . 647 Prelude 2. 379
 Saw blessings spread around me like a sea . . . 648 Prelude 2. 395
 Behold me rich in monies, and attired . . . 649 Prelude 2. 37
 Near me hung Trinity's loquacious clock, . . . 650 Prelude 2. 53
 Such glory was but little sought by me, . . . 650 Prelude 2. 74
 I called on both to teach me what they might ; . . . 650 Prelude 2. 112
 I had a world about me—'twas my own ; . . . 651 Prelude 2. 141
 I made it, for it only lived to me, . . . 651 Prelude 2. 142
 That flashed upon me from this novel show . . . 652 Prelude 2. 202
 And independent musings pleased me so . . . 652 Prelude 2. 228
 That spells seemed on me when I was alone, . . . 652 Prelude 2. 229
 Bounding before me, yet a stripling youth— . . . 653 Prelude 2. 289
 Hast placed me high above my best deserts, . . . 653 Prelude 2. 318
 Alas ! such high emotion touched not me . . . 654 Prelude 2. 342
 All sense,—but other passions in me ruled, . . . 654 Prelude 2. 365
 Passions more fervent, making me less prompt . . . 654 Prelude 2. 366
 Whose studious aspect should have bent me down . . . 654 Prelude 2. 373
 Have made me pay to science and to arts . . . 654 Prelude 2. 375
 This truth escaped me not, and I confess, . . . 655 Prelude 2. 423
 That fell in ruins round me. Oh, what joy . . . 655 Prelude 2. 427
 Remembrances before me of old men— . . . 657 Prelude 2. 574
 Came and returned me to my native hills . . . 658 Prelude 2. 632
 While she perused me with a parent's pride . . . 658 Prelude 2. 29
 Walked proudly at my side : she guided me ; . . . 659 Prelude 2. 65
 The thankfulness with which I laid me down . . . 659 Prelude 2. 81
 To watch me, an attendant and a friend, . . . 660 Prelude 2. 106
 To give me timely notice, and straightway . . . 660 Prelude 2. 124
 The peaceful scene oft filled me with surprise . . . 661 Prelude 2. 194
 Her talk, her business, pleased me ; and no less . . . 661 Prelude 2. 224
 But now there opened on me other thoughts . . . 662 Prelude 2. 239
 Were then made for me ; bond unknown to me . . . 663 Prelude 2. 335
 A thought is with me sometimes, and I say,— . . . 666 Prelude 2. 29
 Sleep seized me, and I passed into a dream . . . 666 Prelude 2. 70
 And saw the sea before me, and the book, . . . 667 Prelude 2. 139
 Me hath such strong entrancement overcome, . . . 668 Prelude 2. 162
 Detain me from the best of other guides . . . 668 Prelude 2. 168
 It might have well besemed me to repeat . . . 668 Prelude 2. 177
 That did bewitch me then, and soothes me now . . . 668 Prelude 2. 180
 That might have dried me up, body and soul . . . 669 Prelude 2. 229
 Did never fail to entrance me, and are now . . . 674 Prelude 2. 550
 And phrases pleased me chosen for delight, . . . 674 Prelude 2. 557
 Of freedom which encouraged me to turn . . . 675 Prelude 2. 33
 The Poet's soul was with me at that time ; . . . 675 Prelude 2. 62
 Which also first emboldened me to trust . . . 675 Prelude 2. 53
 Some monument behind me which pure hearts . . . 676 Prelude 2. 56
 Are dearest to me now ; for, having scanned, . . . 676 Prelude 2. 100
 So was it then with me, and so will be . . . 677 Prelude 2. 157
 And specially delightful unto me . . . 677 Prelude 2. 161
 And yet a power is on me, and a strong . . . 678 Prelude 2. 238
 Which met me issuing from the City's walls) . . . 687 Prelude 2. 3
 Smote me, and, listening, I in whispers said, . . . 687 Prelude 2. 28
 Through a thick forest. Silence touched me here . . . 687 Prelude 2. 36
 Wakes in me agitations like its own, . . . 687 Prelude 2. 47
 Commingled—shapes which met me in the way . . . 692 Prelude 2. 318
 The sorrow of the passion stopped me there . . . 693 Prelude 2. 399
 But let me now, less moved, in order take . . . 693 Prelude 2. 508
 Me, rather, it employed, to note, and keep . . . 696 Prelude 2. 508
 That passes by me is a mystery !" . . . 696 Prelude 2. 629

Me--continued.

The Spirit of Nature was upon me there ;
 And Shepherds were the men that pleased me first ;
 His form hath flashed upon me, glorified
 To me became an index of delight,
 Won from me those minute obeisances
 'Twas now for me a burnished silver shield
 With vulgar men about me, trivial forms
 All that took place within me came and went
 Have pleased me, seeking knowledge at that time
 Had never much delighted me. And less
 Weighed with me, could support the test of thought ;
 Of human life : Nature had led me on ;
 France lured me forth ; the realm that I had crossed
 The wish to bring me over to their cause . . .
 That would have pleased me in more quiet times ;
 Pressed on me almost like a fear to come . . .
 Divided from me by one little month,
 Erewhile my tenebrous haunt ? If pleased me more
 My sorrow ; for I brought with me the faith
 That voice, ill requiem ! seldom heard by me
 To me came rarely charged with natural gifts,
 Changed, and the unbroken dream entangled me
 And holy passion overcame me first,
 On me uplifted from the vantage-ground
 To mock me under such a strange reverse . . .
 Fell from me in my own despite. But now
 Would have loved me, as one not destitute
 Yet, in me, confidence was unimpaired ;
 To daunt me, in the People was my trust,
 This intuition led me to confound . . .
 To me, what an inheritance, new-fallen,
 That from the cradle had grown up with me,
 This threw me first out of the pale of love,
 Searched to its heart. Share with me, Friend !
 the wish . . .

Me--continued.

But me hath Nature tamed, and bade to seek Hath dealt with me as with a turbulent stream,
 And Moore and Partridge stare me in the face . . .
Mead. Of low-hung vapour : on the freshened mead
 O'er lake and stream, mountain and flowery mead,
 Nor hushed be service from the lowing mead,
 The mead is crossed—the quarry's mouth . . .
 For the blood-thirsty mead of Odin's riotous Hall . . .
 Mid-noon is past ;—upon the sultry mead . . .
 But what if One, through grove or flowery mead,
 Green dewy lights adorn the freshen'd mead,
 Take the live herbage from the mead, and strip . . .
Meadow. Of scattered herds, that in the meadow graze,
 The lambs that in the meadow go . . .
 A little field of meadow ground ;
 But field or meadow name it not ;
 Of the green meadow hangs his head
 A sweeter meadow ne'er was seen,
 The sweets of Burn-mill meadow ;
 And down the meadow ranging,
 Or in the meadow wandered wide !
 Such are thoughts !—A wind-swept meadow
 At Woodstock, on the meadow green and gay . . .
 And turnips, and corn-land, and meadow, and lea,
 There was a time when meadow, grove, and stream,
 Rang loud through the meadow and wood . . .
 When to a convent in a meadow green,
 A meadow carpet for the dancing hours . . .
 From the flat meadow lonely there . . .
Meadow-flower. How does the Meadow-flower its bloom unfold ?
Meadow-flowers. Of the soft breeze ruffling the meadow-flowers,
 Butter that had imbibed from meadow-flowers . . .
 Of meadow-flowers into a tuft of wood,
Meadow-ground. Strews twenty acres of good meadow-ground . . .
 Once more the little meadow-ground . . .
 The Ass in that small meadow-ground ;
 Of bells ;—those boys who in yon meadow-ground
 From the smooth meadow-ground, serene and still !
 What flower in meadow-ground or garden grows
 Green meadow-ground, and many-coloured woods,
 Through a parched meadow-ground, in time of drought,
Meadow-grounds. Gave out to meadow-grounds and hills a loud . . .
Meadow's. No tree was there, no meadow's pleasant
 green,
Meadows. No meadows thrown between, the giddy steps . . .
 That babbled on through groves and meadows
 green ;
 A lover of the meadows and the woods,
 Smoothly skims the meadows wide ;
 Lo ! the dwindled woods and meadows ;
 From rocky steep and rock-hustled meadows
 If, while through the meadows green . . .
 As that of the sweet fields and meadows green . . .
 In the flower-hesperent meadows his genius we trace
 And to green meadows changed the swampy shores ?
 And O, ye Fountains, Meadows, Hills, and Groves,
 And through the meadows homeward went, in grave
 Or, from the meadows sent on gusty days,
 And in the meadows and the lower grounds
 See trees, and meadows, and thy native stream,
 To the green meadows of another vale . . .
 O'er the flat meadows and indented coast . . .
 Through the meadows, over stiles,
 Through quiet meadows, after he has learnt
Meadowy. Across yon meadowy bottom look,
Meads. To willowy hedge-rows, and to emerald meads ;
 And the fresh meads—where flowed, from every nook
 Of morning dew upon the untrodden meads,
Meagre. The meagre beast lay still as death ;
 The meagre shadow that looks on—
 To these few meagre Vales confined ;
 In dreary billows, wood, and meagre cot,
 Of things gone by, her meagre monuments
 Black hair, and vivid eye, and meagre cheek,
 Stiff, lank, and upright ; a more meagre man
 To endure this state of meagre vassalage,
 Through meagre lines and colours, and the press
 Upon that meagre soil, helped out by talk
 In which the meagre, stale, forbidding ways
 Pampering myself with meagre novelties
 A meagre person, tall, and in a garb
 From which she draws her meagre sustenance . . .
Meal. See Cottage-meal.
 Is cropping audibly his later meal :
 To his spare meal he calls the passing poor ;
 When threatened war reduced the children's meal :
 While to that mountain-lamb she gave its evening
 meal . . .
 And their plain home-made cheese. Yet when the meal . . .

Meal—continued.

And blend its waters with his daily meal, . . .
 Now that our morning meal is done,
 Entering, we find the morning meal prepared : . . .
 A natural meal—days, months, from Nature's hand ;
 Not venturing yet to peck their destined meal,
 By her own wants, she from her store of meal
 Shares his chance-gathered meal ; and, finally,
 From him, a brother at the cottage meal,
 —Yes, were it mine, the cottage meal to share
 We landed—took with them our evening meal,
 Their noon-tide meal. Hastily rose our guide,
 While on the board she spread our evening meal,
 For winter fuel—to his noontide meal . . .
 Contented to partake the quiet meal
 Withdrew, on summons to their well-earned meal ;
Meals. Our daily meals were frugal, Sabine fare !
Mealy. With all its mealy clusters of ripe nuts, Mean. How now, what mean you ? Truly, I was going.
 What do they mean ? were this my single body . . .
 Is he alive ? What mean you ? who alive ?
 The world is poisoned at the heart. What mean
 you ?
 Ay, what is it you mean ? Harkee, my Friends !—
 What can this mean ? There is a psalm that speaks
 The worm was in her— Mercy ! Sir, what mean you ?
 What if he mean to offer up our Captain
 To give it back again ! What mean your words ?
 What can this mean ? Alas, for my poor husband !—
 Howsoever mean it be,
 What else can mean the visual plea
 Thought Peter, What can mean all this ?
 Let no mean hope your souls enslave ;
 For show ; mean handy-work of craftsman, cook,
 The genuine features of the golden mean ;
 Not to the golden mean, and quiet flow
 He, too, is no mean preacher . . .
 With no mean earnest of a heritage
 What, is there then no space for golden mean
 "This holy Monk, this Abbot—him mean I
 Their mean I, that I should be wondrous fain
 Whoever against Love mean aught amiss . . .
 Had in high places built her lodge ; though mean
 Not with the mean and vulgar works of man,
 Could mean, the Arab told me that the stone . . .
 In a mean city, and among a few . . .
 Perform their feats. Nor was it mean delight
 I mean, O distant Friend ! a story draw
 And all the mean upholstery of the place . . .
 Though surely no mean progress had been made
 I mean the brawls of lawyers in their courts . . .
 Were tasteless, and truth's golden mean, a point
 Mean shapes on every side : but, at the instant,
 Mean, miserable, wilfully depraved,
 As man ; and, to the mean and the obscure,
 Be mean, have nothing lofty of their own ;
 Wilfully to mean cares or low pursuits,
 Nor is it a mean praise of rural life . . .
 And a most frivolous people. Him I mean
 Such do I mean who, unperplexed by doubt,
 Of no mean Being ? One who should be clothed
 As a brute mean, without acknowledgment . . .
Meandering. Along the " wild meandering " shore to view . . .
 And thus the bark, meandering with the shore,
Meanderings. With uncontrolled meanderings ;
Meaneer. Huge Cruachan, (a thing that meaneer hills
 No meaneer Poet than the whistling Blast,
 No meaneer leaf was seen ;
 Content with meaneer prowess, must have lacked
Meaneest. Did not virtue give the meaneest
 Life turned the meaneest of her implements,
 With sorrow of the meaneest thing that feels."
 I see one man, of men the meaneest too !
 He is a Slave ; the meaneest we can meet !
 That none, the meaneest of created things,
 To me the meaneest flower that blows can give
 He tastes the meaneest note that swells the gale . . .
 The meaneest thrives the most ; where dignity,
Meaning. What is your meaning ? Two days gone
 I saw,
 Hence had he learned the meaning of all winds,
 If such thy meaning, O forbear,
 And we have in one meaning read ;
 And their meaning is, whence can comfort spring
 That he the meaning of this song would show,
 That I beheld respired with inward meaning,
 To carry meaning to the natural heart ;
 Licensed to take the meaning that we love !
 That have no law, no meaning, and no end—
 Devout about the meaning of your will.
Meanings. For modest meanings dear,
 Unquestionable meanings—still bespeak
 Have meanings of their own ;
 To show to her some pleasant meanings writ
 Some inner meanings which might harbour there,
 Shaggy and grey, had meanings which it brought

Meantly. To secret 'spousals meantly disavowed.
 Objects of false pretence, or meantly true !
Meanness. Against the weight of meanness, selfish cares,
Means. What means this riotous noise ? The villagers
 Should he resolve to taint her Soul by means . . .
 —I see I have disturbed you. By no means,
 and could he be saved by your means,
 That skill or means of his could add, but the architect had wrought
 Foud means to hurry her away by night,
 What means this bustle, Betty Foy ?
 Of an industrious life, and ample means ;
 By what means it could thither come, and whence ;
 Whose means are fair and spotless as his ends."
 Zealous co-operation of all means
 By unthought means for gracious purposes ;
 She means no harm ;"—but still the Boy,
 Changes her means, the Enthusiast as a dupe
 What feebler means had fallen to give, one aim
 Motions and Means, on land and sea at war
 What means the Spectre ? Why intent
 Rises by open means ; and there will stand
 Lie in the means required, or ways ordained,
 Who means to charity no wrong ;
 His means are run out,—he must beg, or must borrow.
 Thanks to the means which Nature deigned to employ ;
 I have endeavoured to display the means . . .
 Directly, but to tender thoughts by means
 By means refined attaining purest ends,
 As sometimes to the best of feeble means . . .
 And, lastly, if the means on human will,
 Could I eadeavour to unfold the means
 Whom Nature, by whatever means, has taught
 And vainly by all other means, has strove
 Slight, if you will, the means ; but spare to slight
 Built up of life, and food, and means of life !
 He shall discern, how, through the various means
 Their slender means ; so, to that parent's care
 The ungentle mind can easily find means . . .
Meant. Indeed we meant no harm ; we lodge sometimes . . .
 That sign of thine, not meant for human ear,
 Thankfully took an effort that was meant . . .
 And what he meant was " Keep away,
 She who was meant to be a bride
 With things that were not, yet were meant to be.
 Methough I wist right well what these birds meant,
 Of mighty Nature, if 'twas ever meant
 Drawn from his vitals ? Say what meant the woes
 The grieved one whom it meant to send away . . .
Meantime. Wrought at the Sheep-fold. Meantime
 Luke began . . .
 Meantime in canisters is head'd the bread,
 I triumphed. Meantime, day by day, the roads
 Into sensations near the heart : meantime,
 Meantime the sovereignty of these fair Isles
 Meantime the father had returned aloof . . .
Meanwhile. Meanwhile discourse ensued of various kind,
 Meanwhile the storm fell heavy on the woods ;
 Meanwhile, do you two hasten back and see
 Moved not ; meanwhile the galaxy displayed
 Them and their object : but, meanwhile, prevailed
 Meanwhile, a noise was heard, the busy mirth
 Meanwhile were mine ; till one bright April day,
 Meanwhile, uncertain what to do,
 Meanwhile, as thus with him it fared,
 Meanwhile untroubled I admire . . .
 Meanwhile the Ass to reach his home . . .
 Meanwhile the persevering Ass . . .
 Meanwhile that veil, removed or thrown aside,
 Meanwhile, and be to her a glorious crest . . .
 Meanwhile, for further guidance, look
 We, meanwhile, our hope will keep ;
 Meanwhile the stream, whose bank I sate upon,
 —Meanwhile his wife and child with cruel hope
 By royal visages. Meanwhile abroad
 Meanwhile, my hope has been, that I might fetch
 And heights meanwhile were slowly overspread
 His countenance, meanwhile, grew more disturbed ;
 Meanwhile old grandame earth is grieved to find
 But no one owned them ; meanwhile the calm lake
 And that meanwhile, by no uncertain path,
 Meanwhile the roar continues, till at length,
 Meanwhile the Fvangelists, Isaiah, Job,
 Meanwhile, as if the whole were one vast mill,
 Meanwhile this creature—spiritual almost . . .
 To help him to his grave ? Meanwhile the man,
 Such was the state of things. Meanwhile the chief
 Meanwhile the Invaders fared as they deserved :
 Of inland waters ; the great sea meanwhile
 What passion makes them ; that meanwhile the forms
 And their place knew them not. Meanwhile, abridged
 The same sad question. Meanwhile her poor Hut
 But seeing no one : meanwhile from below . . .

Meet. Now meet we other pilgrims ere the day
 Rushing and racing came to meet me at the waterside !
 For never could I hope to meet with such another.
 We soon shall meet again. If thou stoodest
 Whom no one comes to meet, I stood alone ;—
 So meet extremes in this mysterious world,
 That thou shouldst ever meet a like occasion
 You should prepare to meet him. I have nothing
 And thus we meet again ; one human stay
 The extremes of suffering meet in absolute peace.
 " In heaven we all shall meet ;"
 Where thousands meet to worship God under a mighty Dome ;
 To hear, to meet them !—From their house the school
 As any that should meet him— Happy ! Sir—
 That friends, by death disjoined, may meet no more !
 With hope that we, dear Friends ! shall meet again.
 Is slow to meet the sympathies of them
 When we, and others whom we love, shall meet
 We meet thee, like a pleasant thought,
 A Holy-histle here we meet
 Each peering forth to meet the other :—
 May meet at noontide ; Fear and trembling Hope,
 A countenance in which did meet
 Near the stately Pantheon you'll meet with the same
 Seem to meet with little gain, seem less happy than before :
 " Once I could meet with them on every side ;
 Of a wide arm pressing on to meet . . .
 Then starts the sluggard, pleased to meet . . .
 Meet Statue for the court of Fear ! . . .
 This very night will meet his fate— . . .
 The first you meet with—bid him come,
 Does joy approach ? they meet the coming tide ;
 Who meet most feelingly the calls of sadness.
 With service meet ;
 And, starting up to meet the same,
 For fear and melancholy meet ;
 To meet the watry season.
 Yet, yet, Biscayans ! we must meet our Foes
 Those lofty-minded Lawgivers shall meet,
 Looks on delighted—meet in festal rings
 And for a moment meet the soul's desires !
 Fresh risen, and beautiful within !—there meet
 To sink, and meet them in their fretted caves,
 But faintly picture, 'twere an office meet
 Whose waves the Orphean lyre forbid to meet
 I move at ease ; and meet contending themes
 For my enjoyment meet in vision strange ;
 Were but the Gift a meet Return to thee
 Your praise, in meet accordance with your claims
 To meet the shade of Horace by the side
 The gentle breezes waft—or airs that meet
 Meet on the solid ground of waking life,
 That we, who part in love, shall meet again.
 Like guests that meet, and some from far,
 Did meet me with unaltered face,
 His sky-born warblings—does aught meet your ken
 To meet such need as might befall—

Meet—continued.

A just memorial; and thine eyes consent 472 The captive* 13
Darken the brow of this memorial Stone,
Inscribed with this memorial here is raised
His bitter loss by this memorial Stone;
Unlocking bleeding Thought's "memorial cell;"
Memorial revered by a thousand storms;
From this memorial tribute to my theme
Is no where touched by one memorial gleam)
The prized memorial of relinquished toils,
Even of the good is no memorial friend!
This sad memorial of their hapless friend!
Statues and temples, and memorial tombs;
And, at the last of those memorial words,
Faithless memorial! and his family name

TREE!

Memory—continued.

Revived a memory of those hours . . . 407
 Sustained by memory of the past . . . 414
 And fond unclouded memory . . . 414
 Received the memory of old loves, . . . 415
 And bears a memory and a mind . . . 416
 Around meek Walton's heavenly memory. . . 441
 Giving to Memory help when she would weave . . . 448
 Those forest oaks of Druid memory, . . . 450
 Never but in the world of memory; . . . 458
 With some internal lights to memory dear, . . . 460
 Sickened, or died) in pious memory kept : . . . 467
 To shun the memory of a listless life . . . 470
 Does little on his memory rest, . . . 485
 —What trick of memory to my voice hath brought . . . 496
 Are the domains of tender memory ! . . . 498
 Are well assigned to Memory . . . 499
 Not He, whose last faint memory will command . . . 504
 All who revere the memory of Penn . . . 515
 Or charm it out of memory; yea, might fill . . . 517
 Dim memory keeping of its old intent. . . 523
 I leave unsearched : enough that memory clings, . . . 525
 As a chance-sunbeam from his memory fell . . . 528
 No successors; and, lodged in memory, . . . 531
 For thy better memory. . . 535
 Raised this frail tribute to his memory; . . . 547
 When I the process have in memory, . . . 563
 With a thousand soft pictures his memory will teem, . . . 570
 No—he was One whose memory ought to spread . . . 574
 An everlasting spring ! in memory . . . 575
 May touches of his memory bring . . . 578
 From memory, prolong their stay . . . 578
 To a good Man of most dear memory . . . 584
 Of memory, or see the light of love. . . 585
 While, Memory at my side, I wander here, . . . 592
 If, while a half-slumber his memory beddins, . . . 621
 My simplest Lay that to their memory . . . 626
 Will pass so soon from human memory; . . . 627
 May soothe thy memory of the chains of Rome. . . 627
 No picture of mere memory ever looked . . . 633
 No conscious memory of a kindred sight, . . . 640
 Wearied itself out of the memory, . . . 641
 Disowned by memory—ere the breath of spring . . . 641
 But is not each a memory to himself ?— . . . 651
 Libations, to thy memory drank, till pride . . . 653
 Thy memory languidly revolved, the heart . . . 653
 Yet to the memory something cleaves at last, . . . 658
 The memory of one particular hour . . . 663
 That here, in memory of all books which lay . . . 668
 Bask in the sunshine of the memory; . . . 685
 Which yet survive in memory, appears . . . 692
 Is fading out of memory, but I see . . . 692
 By which the world of memory and thought . . . 694
 What memory and what logic ! till the strain . . . 694
 In memory, those individual sights . . . 696
 And comprehensiveness and memory flow, . . . 698
 And grateful memory, as a thing divine. . . 707
 In memory of the farewells of that time, . . . 713
 Or personal memory of his own worst wrongs, . . . 718
 Of memory, to virtue lost and hope, . . . 733
 To thee, in memory of that happiness, . . . 752
 That to his memory were most endeared. . . 762
 The life where hope and memory are as one; . . . 792
 With joy, and—oh ! that memory should survive . . . 792
 These acts of mind, and memory, and heart, . . . 794
 For, like a plague, will memory break out; . . . 798
 Crowned was he, if my memory do not err, . . . 816
 That shall survive his name and memory. . . 823
 And it is named, in memory of the event, . . . 842
 Upon her memory, faithfully as stars . . . 848
 In memory and for warning, and in sign . . . 854
 Of memory, images and precious thoughts, . . . 857
 The memory of the just survives in heaven : . . . 863
 Their monuments and their memory. The vast . . . 872
 Frame . . . 872
 Transmitted far as living memory, . . . S. 3. 435
 Would I your fights of memory cramp. . . S. 3. 438
 Hath now escaped his memory—but the hour, . . . K. 8. 236
 Of memory faithful to the call of love; . . . K. 8. 247
Memory's. To memory's shadowy moonshine ! . . . 386
 Lurks in it, Memory's Helper, Fancy's Lord, . . . 480
Memphis. That would lament her;—Memphis, Tyre, . . . 425 are gone . . .
Men. See Countrymen, Fellow-men.
 Dwarf pannered steeds, and men, and numerous . . . 5
 wains . . . 13
 Where beasts and men together o'er the plain . . . 13
 And who, that walks where men of ancient days . . . 15
 And grey-haired men look up with livelier brow, . . . 21
 Great God ! by whom the strifes of men are . . . 22 weighed . . . 26
 For sacrifice its throngs of living men, . . . 26
 To join those miserable men he flew . . . 29
 At houses, men, and common light, amazed. . . 31
 That fear is like a cloak which old men huddle . . . 38
 Of peace and order. Aged men with tears . . . 48
 Men who are little given to sift and weigh— . . . 49

Men—continued.

Twelve honest men, plain men, would set us right; . . . 53
 And most despise the men who best can teach us : . . . 54
 Henceforth it shall be said that bad men only . . . 54
 Shall be proclaimed : brave Men, they all shall bear . . . 55
 it. . . 55
 And old, and blind— Blind, say you ? Are we . . . 57
 Men, . . . 58
 And Men alone are Umpires. To the Camp . . . 61
 About your Daughter ! Troops of armed men, . . . 61
 In Story, what men now alive have witnessed, . . . 62
 I know the need that all men have of mercy, . . . 63
 We wonder at ourselves like men betrayed : . . . 65
 Hear me, ye Men upon the cliffs, if such . . . 67
 Or mourn him dead. A man by men cast off, . . . 68
 That we are praised, only as men in us . . . 70
 Was off for ever; and the men, from whom . . . 70
 You heard !—he called you to him ? Of all men . . . 73
 And know how busy are the tongues of men ; . . . 74
 Of this too much. Men are there, millions, Oswald, . . . 77
 A little Prattler among men. . . 79
 Drive them down, like men in a battle : . . . 81
 But these are all the graves of full-grown men ! . . . 100
 Discord in hearts of men till they have braved . . . 105
 I travelled among unknown men, . . . 109
 Maimed, mangled by inhuman men; . . . 117
 Was made to seize him by three armed men, . . . 125
 Of Shepherds, dwellers in the valleys, men . . . 131
 And watchful more than ordinary men. . . 131
 When thou art gone away, should evil men . . . 137
 Of reapers, men and women, boys and girls. . . 149
 Nor be less dear to future men . . . 158
 Eyes of some men travel far . . . 160
 Men that keep a mighty rout ! . . . 160
 Poets, vain men in their mood ! . . . 160
 All men who know thee call their brother, . . . 162
 The darling of children and men ? . . . 162
 Lift men from their native stations, . . . 163
 Burned like a fire among his men; . . . 178
 Men, women, heartless with the cold; . . . 182
 Poor in estate, of manners base, men of the multi- . . . 189
 tude, . . . 189
 No, no, this cannot be;—men thirst for power and . . . 189
 majesty ! . . . 192
 Men, women, children, yea the frame . . . 192
 With men to whom do better law . . . 194
 And all the ways of men, so vain and melancholy. . . 195
 Of ordinary men; a stately speech; . . . 196
 Religious men, who give to God and man their dues. . . 196
 " Alas ! when evil men are strong . . . 204
 I said, when evil men are strong, . . . 204
 By Voices how men lived of old. . . 205
 And, if that men report him right, . . . 205
 Love had he found in huts where poor men lie; . . . 205
 Rash judgments, nor the sneers of selfish men . . . 207
 And I (as all men may find cause, . . . 215
 The Pharaohs of the earth, the men of hardened . . . 215
 heart ! . . . 216
 The reasoning Sons of Men, . . . 225
 That men have lived for whom, . . . 226
 Bright Seraphs mixed familiarly with men; . . . 226
 Whether men sow or reap the fields, . . . 228
 Where men were monsters. A last grace he craves, . . . 234
 —Let good men feel the soul of nature, . . . 245
 From men of pensive virtue go, . . . 245
 As men who with their purpose play, . . . 245
 Like planet-stricken men of yore, . . . 246
 That ever among Men or Naiads sought . . . 251
 From the submissive necks of guiltless men . . . 252
 Heed not such onset ! nay, if praise of men . . . 255
 In all men, sinful is it to be slow . . . 275
 Takes fire:—The men that have been reappear; . . . 275
 While thus these simple-hearted men are moved ? . . . 283
 Deep in the general heart of men . . . 286
 For honest men delight will take . . . 286
 Remote from men, Thou dost not need . . . 288
 In this still place, remote from men, . . . 288
 Tried men, at Killcranky were arrayed . . . 293
 Like coquet would the Men of England see; . . . 293
 Such gifts had those searating men . . . 296
 World-wearied Men withdrew of yore; . . . 298
 Thus, like the men of earliest days, . . . 301
 Among men who do not love her, linger here. . . 303
 Men known, and men unknown, sick, lame, and . . . 303 blind, . . . 303
 'Tis ever thus. Ye men of prostrate mind, . . . 303
 Men are we, and must grieve when even the Shade . . . 305
 Toussaint, the most unhappy man of men ! . . . 305
 Of inward happiness. We are selfish men ! . . . 307
 Great men have been among us; hands that penned . . . 307
 But equally a want of books and men ! . . . 307
 When men change swords for ledgers, and desert . . . 307
 In thee a bulwark for the cause of men; . . . 308
 Unfit for men; and that in one great band . . . 308
 Even rich men, brave by nature, taint the air . . . 308
 Men unto whom sufficient for the day . . . 308
 I see one man, of men the meanest too ! . . . 309

Mere—continued.

Or left (by mere timidity betrayed)
But a mere mountain-chapel, that protects
Or a mere fiction of what never was?
Of mere humanity, you clomb those heights;
And towards a crystal Mere, that lay beyond
Of mere humanity, present their Charge,
(For the mere sound and echo of his own
Fixed at their seat, the centre of the Mere,
On mere material instruments;—how weak
Aghast we might behold this crystal Mere (Tho' a mere goblet to the careless eye)

Merely. Or merely silent Nature's breathing life.
Even files of strangers merely seen but once,
Our Shepherds, this say merrily, at that time
Not one hour merely, but till evening's close,
Among the inferior kinds; not merely those
Directing notice, merely from a wish

Meres. Of far-stretched Meres whose salt flood never rests—
Merge. She in her own would merge the eternal will:
Merged. The power is merged, the pomp a grave has found.

Merit. The punishment they merit. All is plain:
I felt that merit has no surer test
With patience merit the reward of peace,
Such honour could not merit.
As sages taught, where faith was found to merit
A Judge, who, as man claims by merit, gives;
If Hope's familiar whispers merit faith,
And deem'd all merit centred in the sword;
These, hold in conscious merit, lower down;
His unobtrusive merit; but his life,
Merited. Gained merited respect in simpler times;
Merits. You take it as it merits— One a King,
This wonder merits well.
Told what best merits mention, further pains Merlin. The power of Merlin, Goddess! This should be:

While Merlin paced the Cornish sands,
Sage Merlin gazed with admiration:
Grave Merlin (and belike the more
Into a cave had Merlin fled
Sailed" (hear me, Merlin!) "under high protection,
Then Merlin! for a rapid flight
Merlin, as fixed in thought he stood,
Quoth Merlin, "Even as I was bidden,
Sage Merlin, at the Slumberer's side,
Said Merlin: "Mighty King, fair Lords,
"The tomb," said Merlin, "may not close

Merlin's. The sage enchanter Merlin's subtle schemes; Merlins. Of modern Merlins, Wild Beasts, Puppet-shows,

Mermaid. Or, like a Mermaid, warbles on the shores
Mermaids. No Mermaids warble—to allay the wind Merrier. And laugh with merrier blaze her evening fires;

Merrily. And they're dancing merrily.
We travelled merrily, to pass
How merrily it goes!
Full merrily theo would he sing and cry,
Merrily seated in a ring, partook

Merriment. And, in anger or merriment, out of the north,
Frisking, leaping merriment,
Made merriment within that pleasant bower.
Of boisterous merriment, and music's roar,
Of merriment a party-coloured knot,

Merry. In foamy breaks the rill, with merry song,
And merry flageolet; the low of herds,
Whistled the waggoner with merry note,
Garlands and flowers, and cakes and merry thoughts,
I'll be his Godfather. Oh Sir, you are merry with me.

To make mankind merry for evermore,
'Tis gone—and in a merry fit
All merry things are now at rest,
Her Messenger's in merry tune;
Oh me! it is a merry meeting
As merry as the birds in spring.
Where a tribe of them make merry
Which, with slant ray, the merry sun
He sways them with harmony, merry and loud;
Each whooping with a merry shout,
We will make merry in that pleasant bower.
And merry Carlisle had he been;
If not, make merry in despite
When, all alive with merry chimes
Make merry, wives! ye little children, stun
And "Merry Christmas" wished to all!
At all the merry pranks of Donnerdale!
To kill for merry feast their venison.
Merry and loud and safe from prying search,
Unchecked as when by merry Outlaw driven,
They called Thee MERRY ENGLAND, in old time;
Forbid it, Heaven!—and MERRY ENGLAND still
A running hunsman merry;
Far from the chimney's merry roar,
Who tripping lips a merry song
Clustered together with a merry crowd

Merry—continued.

And whistled many a snatch of merry tunes
Or with some merry outlaws of the wood;
Like one who would he merry. Seeing this,
Failed not to greet the merry Mocking-bird;
A merry journey, rich in pastime, cheered
And, on the freight of merry passengers
Of merry England, are obstructed less
If it's not the merry Tinker?
With a merry note,
Merry-making. Can merry-making enter here?
Of merry-making beggars,—now, provoked
Begin their merry-making,
Merry-night. That 'tis the village MERRY-NIGHT!
Mess. Each with a mess of pottage and skimmed milk.

Message. Could I with thee a message send;
By message sent through air or visible token,
Messenger. A messenger he sends;
Both for her Messenger and Nurse;
And that fleet messenger of summer days,
This messenger of good was launched in air,
Ye, like a heavenly messenger.

Messenger's. Her Messenger's in merry tune;
Messengers. Earthward or heavenward, radiant messengers,
With winged Messengers; who dally brought
Like those celestial messengers hehild

Met. He met a traveller, robbed him, shed his blood;
Winds met in confid; each by turns supreme;
Well met from far with revelry secure
And met a man who foamed with anger vehement.
I have good business there. I met you at the threshold.
I met a peasant near the spot; he told me,
I met your Father, then a wandering Outcast:
I met in the roads, would bless us; little children,
To-night I met with an old Man
Has met unkindness; so indeed he told me,
Hard by a Man I met, who, from plain proofs
In joy I meet thee, but a few hours past;
I met a little cottage Girl:
The Shepherds met him with his charge,
Whom, one bleak winter's day, she met upon the dreary Wild.

"By heavenly Powers conducted, we have met;
Their nearest kin with deadly purpose met)
I met Louisa in the shade,
And in the broad highway, I met;
A Woman on the road I met,
He surely met with strange adventures.
On all sides doubts and terrors met her;
When once again we met in Grasmere Vale,
Which I, wherever thou art met,
Since we needs must first have met
They met me in a genial hour,
Like one whom I had met with in a dream;
Met by the rainbow's form divine,
All creatures met in peace, from fierceness free,
Be thankful we again have met;—
And, verily, have seldom met
When first they met the placid light of thine,
With trees, whose lofty umbrage met;
The pageant haunts me as it met our eyes!
We met, while festive mirth ran wild,
When there the youthful Nortons met,
They met, when they had reached the door,
Mercy and Love have met thee on thy road,
Who in the penitential desert met
(Of truth) are met by fulminations new—
Their Country's woes. But scarcely have they met,
Of a proud slavery met by tenets strained
By corresponding hope was met,
"And, turning from her grave, I met,
Falseness and Treachery, in close council met,
Relenting met his wishes; and to you

What signs of mutual gladness when they met!
You would have said, if you had met her,
In civil conflict met on Bosworth-field;
—The face of every neighbour whom I met
Such was his custom; but when'er he met
Or as the soul of that great Power is met
From smooth Cam's silent waters: had we met,
A peasant met us, from whose mouth we learned
Which met me issuing from the City's walls)
Commingled—shapes which met me in the way
Creatures of one ethereal substance met
To watch and question those I met, and speak
We saw a throng of people,—wherefore met?
Met in an angle, hung a penthouse, framed
Beside a fire whose genial warmth seemed met
In sober conclave met, to weave a web
As if the sunshine of the day were met
We met, and passed, like shadows. I have heard,
An undisturbed abode. Here, then, they met,
Were met with answering sympathy and love.
Partook of every motion, met, retired,
And met again. Such playful sympathy,
Surpassed in strength, I heard of danger, met

Falsehood and Treachery, in close council met,
Relenting met his wishes; and to you

Metamorphosis. To crowd the world with metamorphosis.
But metaphor dismissed, and thanks apart,

Meteor. A meteor weth thou crossing a dark night:
Not like a dancing meteor, but in line
Meteors. The meteors make of it a favourite haunt:
Metinks. Though I have never seen his face, methinks.

His voice—methinks I hear it now, his voice
This last device must end my work.—Methinks
Where is our common Friend? A ghost, methinks—

Methinks I see it now—how in the sun
Methinks that I should recognise that face,
Methinks you take small heed!
Frail, feeble, Moathing!—by that name, methinks,
Methinks 'twould heighten joy to overleap
For I, methinks, till I grew old,
And should, methinks, when all was past,
Methinks that we shall hail thee, Champion brave,
Methinks 'twere no unprecedented feat
And eye, methinks, this hoary Pilg,
Methinks that to some vacant hermitage
Methinks that I could trip o'er heaviest soil,
Methinks their very names shine still and bright;
Methinks, if audibly repeated now
His feelers, methinks, I can see him put forth
Methinks that there abides in thee
Methinks, I see him stand,
Methinks that in my dying hour
At other time, methinks, in like degree,
That in my soul methinks I yet do hear
Philosophy, methinks, at Fancy's call,
I would not willingly, methinks, lose sight
Methinks that I have heard them echo back
Among these rocks and stones, methinks, I see
These were your words; and, verily, methinks
Is of such incapacity, methinks,
"Methinks," persuasively the Sage replied,
—Knowledge, methinks, in these disordered times,
Methinks, would better suit another place.
But still, methinks, I see them as they passed
—Methinks I see him—how his eye-balls rolled,
Methinks 'tis strange I did not perish

Methinks I could repeat in tuneful verse, K. 8. 248 Recluse 1. 1. 413

Mew. See Sea-mew.
Or spied where thou sitt'st moping in thy mew
Into the castle-dungeon's darkest mew.

Michael. There dwelt a Shepherd, Michael was his name;
When Michael, telling o'er his years, began
Old Michael, while he was a babe in arms,
Had put on boy's attire, did Michael love,
Would Michael exercise his heart with looks
Then Michael from a winter coppice cut
Had prest upon him; and old Michael new
Here Michael ceased, and to the fields went forth
She gave consent, and Michael was at ease.
In that deep valley, Michael had designed
Michael, and thou, St. George, whose flaming brand
Old Michael and his son one day went forth
Old Michael for this purpose had driven down
Than others have, for Michael had liv'd on Michael's. Have loved his Helpmate; but to Michael's heart

Michael's—continued.

From day to day, to Michael's ear there came
By Michael's side, she through the last two nights
Old Michael's manners and discourse, and thus
Mickle. Send unto thee as mickle joy this day

Microscopic. In microscopic vision, Rome herself;
Less spiritual, with microscopic view

Mid. (Partial list.) See Amid.
And knock for entrance, in mid holiday.
Lay passive as a dormouse in mid winter.
Their branches in mid air.
From her rock-fortress in mid air,
Their curious pastime, shaping in mid air,
A single One, in mid career
—Thy lake, mid smoking woods, that blue and grey
And still, below, where mid the savage scene . . .
Or like two birds, companions in mid air,
Risen on mid noon; blest with the presence,
Friend!

Darkness ere day's mid course, and morning light
The cloud of rocks descending through mid air

Mid. (Partial list.)
'Mid the deep holds of Solway's mossy waste,
Not 'mid the World's vain objects that enslave
'Mid the dews, in the sunshine of morn,—mid the joy
'Mid coaches and chariots, a waggon of straw

Mid-day. At mid-day when the sun was shining bright
His mid-day warmth abate not, seeming less
Of the fierce wind, while mid-day lightnings prowl
The respite of the mid-day hour
The Cripple in the mid-day heat
Soft airs were stirring, and the mid-day sun
Given out while mid-day heat oppressed the plains.
The mid-day hours with desultory talk;

Mid-day's. Moves there a cloud o'er mid-day's flaming eye?
Middla. Into the middle of the plank;
The middle of the arch.
Is in the middle of her story.
Poised like a weary cloud, in middle air
That loads the middle heaven; and clear and bright
Right in the middle of the thicket;
Sung from that heavenly ground in middle air,
And in the middle parts the braided hair,
Are opening round her; those of middle age,
Right in the middle of the roaring stream.

Middle-aged. Pregnant with good. Young, Middle-aged, and Old.
Of middle-aged, and old, and young.

Midland. Upon the midland Sea. You knew his bearing
Ye winds of ocean, and the midland sea,
I watch thee sailing o'er the midland hrine;

Mid-leg. Ay, more than once I have seen him, mid-leg deep;

Midnight. Or to the drowsy crow of midnight cock
At midnight listens till his parting ear,
The bag-pipe dinning on the midnight moor
O'er moor and mountain, midnight theft to hatch!
At midnight, I betook me to the Churchyard:
A noise at midnight does so frighten me.
Ere with cold beads of midnight dew
Among the mountains, through the midnight watch
Its head-rod of midnight,
"The stars of midnight shall be dear
The wakeful Ruth at midnight shed
Of midnight makes reply;
Dead pause abrupt of midnight winds,
In many a midnight vision bowed
A midnight harmony; and wholly lost
Fierce as a flood-gate hursting at midnight
The midnight virtues of your harmony—
Of midnight,—cities, plains, forests, and mighty streams.

What wonder if at midnight, by the side
How touching, whee, at midnight, sweep
On the shrill wind of midnight? or where floats
The midnight stars outshining, or the blaze
When all the world with midnight gloom was dark.—
Thou, too, dost visit oft my midnight dream;
Followed by drowsy crow of midnight cock.
There list at midnight till is heard no more.
And bright will shine in misery's midnight hour;
A like dominion, and the midnight storm
Was uttered, midnight darkness seemed to take
Thus might we wear a midnight hour away,
Of midnight hours, unseasonably twinkling

Midnight's. At morn, and eve, and midnight's silent hour,
Mid-noon. Mid-noon is past;—upon the sultry mead Midst. And in the midst is one particular rock
Which to this day stands single, in the midst
Green pastures she views in the midst of the date,

Take pleasure in the midst of happy thoughts,
Of first, and last, and midst, and without end.
In coronal, with Phyllis in the midst—
Of life and glory. In the midst stood Man,
Uppermost in the midst of fiercest strife.

 And mightiest billows ever have confessed
 In vision—forms uncouth of mightiest power . . .
 In perfect wisdom guiding mightiest power, . . .
 An equal among mightiest energies ;
 True ; as the mightiest ; upon thee sequestered
Mightiness. What mightiness for evil and for good !
Mighty. Move on—a mighty caravan of pain :
 A crucible of mighty compass, felt . . .
 A mighty waste of mist the valley fills, . . .
 Over the mighty stream now spreading wide :
 "Some mighty gulf of separation passed,
 What an odd moaning that is !—Mighty odd
 Her bonds and chains, which make the mighty feeble.
 A mighty evil for a strong-built maid !—
 What mighty objects do impress their forms
 Availed against the mighty ; never more
 Into a chasm a mighty brook . . .
 Toward the mighty gulf of things, . . .
 Where thousands meet to worship God under a
 mighty Dome ;
 A mighty wonder bred among our quiet crew.
 Why are you in this mighty fret ?
 Though Betty's in a mighty flurry,
 And struck him with a mighty stroke,
 Men that keep a mighty rout !
 Herald of a mighty hand,
 And mighty Fairfield, with a chime
 Behold the mighty Moon ! this way
 And mighty Poets in their misery dead.
 Happy day, and mighty hour,
 From this green earth ; of all the mighty world
 That Ocean is a mighty harmonist ;
 Listen ! the mighty Being is awake,
 Of a dark chamber where the Mighty sleep :
 And all the mighty ravishment of spring.
 These mighty barriers, and the gulf between ;
 And all that mighty heart is lying still !
 In his calm presence ! Him the mighty deed
 But one of mighty size, and strange ;
 Whether of mighty towns, or vales ;
 Down to the mighty Sea.
 One of the mountains ; each a mighty Voice :
 With mighty Nations for his underlings,
 Shout, for a mighty Victory is won !
 Another mighty Empire overthrown !
 Whether the mighty beam, in scorn upheld,
 True to herself—the mighty Germany,
 See the first mighty Hunter leave the brute—
 Here, mighty Nature ! in this school sublime
 Else how, whena mighty Throave were put to shame,
 Yet see (the mighty tumult overpast)
 But mighty Winter the device shall scorn.
 "The mighty debt which nothing can repay !"
 Support their mighty theme from age to age ;
 By one day's feat, one mighty victory.
 And slaves are pleased to learn that mighty feats are done ;
 And well might it besem that mighty Town
 Did mighty Tell repair of old—
 Where, from a deep lake's mighty urn,
 Of midnight,—cities, plains, forests, and mighty
 streams,
 But in his breast the mighty Poet bore
 Said Merlin, "Mighty King, fair Lords,
 These mighty forests, once the hison's screen,
Yea, what were mighty Nature's self ?
 Where shields of mighty heroes hung,
 Can such a mighty host be raised
 What mighty forest in its gloom
 The mighty sorrow hath been borne,
 "Man's life is like a Sparrow, mighty King !
 Of your own mighty instruments beware !
 "My Oarsmen," quoth the mighty King, "draw
 near,
 Loog lines of mighty Kings—look forth, my Soul !
 No ; 'tis the earth-voice of the mighty sea,
 (Thy Paramount, mighty Nature ! and Time's Lord)
 "Think you, 'mid all this mighty sum
 Is to the Being of a mighty nation,
 The mighty tumults of the House of KEYS ;
 A mighty One upon me gazed ;
 O more than mighty change ! If e'er
 To tell abroad thy mighty worthiness,
 "There was in Asia, in a mighty town,
 How mighty and how great a Lord is he !
 For Love, and it hath done me mighty woe.
 I could have fancied that the mighty Deep
 Long as these mighty rocks endure,—
 A mighty union of streams !
 The mighty Minstrel breathes no longer,
 Mighty Prophet ! Ser best !
 And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.
 Where in a mighty crucible expire . . .
 In the deep snow the mighty ruin drown'd,
 My care, if the arm of the mighty were mine,

Mighty—continued.

But huge and mighty forms, that do not live . . .
 And mighty depth of waters. Wonder not
 Where mighty minds lie visibly entombed,
 These mighty workmen of our later age,
 Was but a block hewn from a mighty quarry—
 Of mighty Poets. Visionary power
 Of mighty names was softened down and seemed
 With Poets ever. Mighty is the charm
 And mighty forms, seizing a youthful fancy,
 Hail to the mighty projects of the time !
 A motionless array of mighty waves,
 That hides her, like the mighty flood of Nile
 Enough ;—the mighty concourse I surveyed
 When, having closed the mighty Shakspeare's page,
 Of what the mighty City is herself,
 (Beyond that mighty wall, not fabulous,
 Should have such mighty sway ! yet so it was),
 With that in which her mighty objects lay.
 How quickly mighty Nations have been formed,
 For mighty were the auxiliars which then stood
 How are the mighty prostrated ! They first,
 Had never been when throes of mighty Nations
 Connected in a mighty scheme of truth,
 Shaken by arms of mighty bone, in strength,
 Of mighty Poets : upon me bestow
 He gazed upon that mighty orb of soog,
 In mighty current ; theirs, too, is the song
 Was of a mighty city—boldly say
 Through all the mighty commonwealth of things ;
 Of mighty Nature, if 'twas ever meant
 Stirs in the mighty woods.—So did he speak :
 The head and mighty paramount of truths,—
 Oa which the soas of mighty Germaay
 For, not unacquosious of the mighty debt
 Of all the mighty, withered and consumed !
 And by this law the mighty whole subsists :
 And hear the mighty stream of teadeacy
 Expect these mighty issues : from the pains
 The Vale is by a mighty sound possess'd.
 One of a mighty multitude, whose way
 A mighty gain, that Labour here preserves
 A moon among her stars, a mighty vale,
Migration. Aerial, upon due migration bound
 Of our migration.—Ere the welcome dawn
 Migration strange for a stripling of the hills,
 Their grave migration, the good pair would tell,
Migratory. At will, and stay thy migratory flight ;
Milan's. Hath past to Milan's loftiest spire,
Mild. And eve's mild hour invites my steps abroad.
 While tender cares and mild domestic loves
 Shedding, through paly loop-holes mild and small,
 Or rather stay to taste the mild delights
 Suffering not doing ill—fate far more mild.
 Near his own home !—but he was mild and good ;
 Check his loud whip and hail us with mild voice,
 Her Pony, that is mild and good ;
 Even he, of cattle the most mild,
 The Pony he is mild and good,
 Mild Offspring of infern humanity,
 The praises of mild Benjamin.
 Ere he replied, a flash of mild surprise.
 Blissful Mary, Mother mild,
 Mild Hermespake—and touched her with his wand
 Of a too-axious world, mild pastoral Muse !
 "But, in its helplessness, grew mild
 Wilt smile upon this gift with more than mild content !
 It cheered mild Spenser, called from Faery-land
 Mild dawn of promise ! that excludes
 And ye mild Seasons—in a sunny clime
 O gentle Power of darkness ! these mild hues ;
 And hence, O Virgin Mother mild !
 The sky was blue, the air was mild.
 To mild, to lowly, and to seeming weak,
 To that mild breeze with motion and with voice
 Mild—as the verdure, fresh—the sunshine, bright—
 With tenderness and mild emotion,
 For mild Soreanto's breezy waves ;
 Then, with mild Uoa in her sober cheer,
 Who with mild looks and language mild
 Mild, and grateful, melancholy
 The recognition ! the mild glance
 May not the less, through Heaven's mild countenance,
 Oh could we copy their mild virtues, then
 From his mild advent till his countenance.
 So with our own the mild Instructor deals,
 Stealthy withdrawals, interminglings mild
 Spares thy mild splendour ; still those far-shot beams
 Yet thy mild aspect does not, cannot, cease
 Albeit of the Virgin-mother mild
 It is the first mild day of March :
 Or mild conceros of ordinary life,
 I gaze upon a Portrait whose mild gleam
 So spake the mild Jeronymite, his griefs
 A mild domestic pity kept its place,
 For moonlight fascinations mild,

Mild—continued.

Not soon does aught to which mild fancies cling
The way, mild Lady! that hath led
More mild doth Heaven ordain
The mild necessity of use compels
That first mild touch of sympathy and thought,
Of the silver-rimmed horn whence he dealt his mild ale!
Long patience hath such mild composure given,
From thy mild manners quietly exhaled.
Like these, there comes a mild release;
Thence, from three pale loopholes mild and small,
To the mild influence of the finer arts;
But I would call thee beautiful, for mild
"Infancy, by Wisdom mild,
Mild influence; nor left in me one wish
A stately air of mild indifference,
Listening, a gentle shock of mild surprise
Quitted, not loth, the mild magnificence
Had fitted their own thoughts, schemers more mild,
Mild interests and gentlest sympathies.
My soul, too reckless of mild grace, had stood
Admitted more habitually a mild
Such easy cheerfulness, a look so mild,
Fondly, though with an interest more mild,
Mild, inoffensive, ready in his way,
From mild to angry, and from sad to gay,
To One on whose mild radiance many gazed
And mild paternal sway. The potent shock
Where mild enthusiasts tuned a pensive lay
The mild assemblage of the starry heavens;
That her mild nature can be terrible;
Approached; and, with a mild respectful air
"Our nature," said the Priest, in mild reply,
Eyes beaming courtesy and mild regard;
But with a mild and social cheerfulness;
If mild discourse, and manners that conferred
Mild Man! he is not gay, but they are gay;
—Nor deem that his mild presence was a weight
Which the mild sunbeam hath not power to pierce.
Benevolence is mild; nor borrows help,
How much the mild Directress of the plough,
This ardent sally pleased the mild good Man,
Shared, though in mild and merciful degree,
What witchcraft, mild enchantress, may with thee
With the mild summons; in mates though they be Hath said, "Be mild and cleave to gentle things,
Milder. But in the milder grief of pity,
When from October clouds a milder light
That, in his milder moods, he has expressed
And speak with milder voice to his poor beasts.
But he is milder far than she,
Or with a milder grace adorning
Yet sometimes milder hours she knew,
But at the coming of the milder day
To milder climes; or rather do ye urge
And milder echoes from their cells
His mild Genius (thanks to the good God
And temples, doomed to milder change, unfold
Here hath a milder doom prevailed;
And Russell's milder blood the scaffold wet;
Before the path of milder suns;
And open thy sad eyes upon a milder day,
Nor was there want of milder thoughts, of love,
And milder breezes,—melancholy lo!
Brought to such spectacle a milder sadness,
Put on a milder face; Terror had ceased,
The milder minstrelries of rural scenes
At distance heard, peopled the milder air.
Had fixed his milder loyalty, and placed
And milder worth: nor need we travel far
Bishops, of milder Spanish breed, shall boast Mildest. And peach and citron, in Spring's mildest breeze
Whom I have left, Love's mildest birth,
Or mildest visitations of pure thought,
Of universal ferment; mildest men
Mildew. His drought consumes, his mildew taints with death;
Mild-hearted. Of the mild-hearted Champion, save this stone,
Mildly. The Sun, that seemed so mildly to retire,
Yes, lovely Moon! if thou so mildly bright
Of many virtues, mildly bright,
To tax you with this journey;"—mildly said
"Is this," the grey-haired Wanderer mildly said,
Mildly, and with a clear and steady tone.
Mildly-gleaming. (But seldom trod) of mildly-gleaming ore;
Mildness. And mildness, and spirit both forward and coy.
With the same ghastly mildness in his look,
Yet keeping her first mildness, was advanced.
Mile. A long mile thence. While thither they pursued
To travel half a mile alone.—Good Lady!
There's not a house within a mile,
And she can see a mile of road:
But pass a mile—and then for trial,
The fourth part of a mile I ween,
Their pace from mile to mile,

Mile—continued.

Was set, and visible for many a mile
Beneath the trees, clear footing many a mile—
Miles. A thousand miles. I am in poverty,
Until a man might travel twelve stout miles,
Is distant three short miles, and in the time
And I have travelled weary miles to see
Ten thousand miles from all his brethren?
Two long Scotch miles, through rain or snow,
I travelled round our little lake, five miles
Where there are no measured miles,
Even at the utmost distance of two miles
Have driven him twenty miles."
Drive one of these poor creatures miles and miles, Mile-stone. A mile-stone propped him; I could also ken
Militant. Under such banners militant, the soul
Military. A coat he wore of military red
A military casque he wore,
A sound of military cheer,
Of vengeful military force,
That he was clothed in military garb,
Arms flashing, and a military glare
A march it was of military speed,
The military Idler, and the Dame,
A band of military Officers
Of Chaplain to a military troop
Of military sway. The shifting aims,
Milk. Round as a pillow, and whiter than milk,
I bring thee draughts of milk, warm milk it is and new.
Each with a mess of pottage and skimmed milk,
Who fills the mother's breast with innocent milk,
Milk-maid. The milk-maid followed with her brimming pail,
And, in disguise, a Milkmaid with her pail
They not the trip of hairless milkmaid feel.
The milkmaid stops her ballad, and her pail Milkmaid's. Yon isle, which feels not even the milkmaid's feet,
Happy milk-maids, one by one Milk-thistle. Then the milk-thistle flourished through the land,
Then the milk-thistle had those herds demand
Milk-white. The graceful form of milk-white Steed,
The milk-white Lamb which in a line she led,—
Why thus the milk-white Doe is found
Not distant far, the milk-white Doe—
And heavenly Una with her milk-white Lamb,
With milk-white clusters hung; the rod and line,
Of milk-white Swans, wherefore are they not seen
Milky. And twinkle on the milky way,
Mill. See Burn-mill, Wind-mill
Each clacking mill, that broke the murmuring
streams,
As loud as any mill, or near it;
By their floating mill,
To their mill where it floats,
To their house and their mill tethered fast:
Clustering, with barn and byre, and spouting mill!
A bridge to copy, or to paint a mill,
Beside the pleasant Mill of Trompington
Meanwhile, as if the whole were one vast mill,
To turn a slender mill (that new-made plaything)
Mill-dog's. And at long intervals the mill-dog's howl;
Miller. The Miller with two Dames, on the breast of the Thames!
Millions. Of this too much. Men are there, millions,
Oswald,
Of happy millions lulled in sleep;
Millions of waves into itself, and run,
As millions thus shall do, the Headlands of St. Bees.
Millions from glorious aims. Our chains to sever
The servile million bow;
Is joy for tens of millions. Southward thence Why may not millions be? What bars are thrown
To that inheritance which millions rue.
Millions of kneeling Hindoos at this day Mill-race. In a small mill-race severed from his stream,
Mills. See Water-mills.
Milton. And those that Milton loved in youthful years;
Fell found the path of Milton, in his hand
Milton! thou shouldst be living at this hour:
Young Vane, and others who called Milton friend,
Which Milton held.—In every thing we are sprung
The sightless Milton, with his hair
Where our Milton was wont lonely vigils to keep Such Milton, to the fountain-head
Romantic tale by Milton left unsung;
Shakespeare, or Milton, labourers divine!
And sought that beauty, which, as Milton sings,
The divine Milton. Lore of different kind,
Miltonian. And now, ye Miltonian shades! under you Milton's. Honoured by Milton's name. O temperate Bard!
Miltons. And like the Pymys and Miltons of that day,
Mimic. The mimic notes, striking upon his ear
To mimic Time's forlorn humanities.

Mimic—continued.

Ensigns of mimic outrage are unfurled.
 A more substantial name, no mimic show,
 Blew mimic hootings to the silent owls,
 Their steeds bestriding,—every mimic shape
 Liking; by rules of mimic art transferred.
 With mimic trees inserted in the turf,
Mimicked. Like blighted buds; or clouds that mimicked land
Mimicking. Mimicking a troubled sea,
Mimicries. Of April's mimicries!
Mimicry. That mimicry should thus disgrace
Mimics. Yon rampant cloud mimics a lion's shape;
 A toy that mimics with revolving wings
Mina. And Mina, nourished in the studious shade, Minarets. Yon minarets, would gladly leave for his worst home."
Mind. A mind that, in a calm angelic mood
 The soft gloom deepening on the tranquil mind.
 While Slavery, forcing the sunk mind to dwell
 The mind condemned, without reprieve, to go
 But now with other mind I stand alone
 But brings some past enjoyment to his mind;
 And here the unwilling mind may more than trace
 Why does their sad remembrance haunt the mind?
 That break against the shore, shall hurt thy mind
 Left his mind still as a deep evening stream.
 He hoped, to calm her mind; but ill he sped,
 Which by degrades a confidence of mind
 And nothing to my mind a sweeter pleasure brought.
 Is rooted in his mind; this Band of ours,
 Out of thy mind? My dear, my only, Child;
 Something I strike upon which turns my mind
 Else could so strong a mind have ever known
 Nor any half so sure. This Stripling's mind
 The senseless body, and why not the mind?—
 These are strange sights—the mind of man, up-
 turned,
 I strove to ease my mind, when our two Comrades,
 One happy thought has passed across my mind.
 How, when the People's mind was racked with doubt,
 A mighty evil for a strong-built mind!—
 From action up to action with a mind
 'Tis a poor wretch of an unsettled mind,
 My wife and children came into my mind.
 That fettered your nobility of mind—
 Is out of mind—or done.
 And hade them better mind their trade.
 And eased his mind with this reply:
 Lest all that passed should melt away in silence
 from my mind,
 A cheerful mind,—and buffeted with bond,
 And you believe, then, that his mind was easy?—
 Thou art reputed wise, but in my mind
 And his own mind did like a tempest strong
 Heaven grants even to the guiltiest mind
 And wicked fancies crossed my mind;
 One that will answer to my mind;
 Those several qualities of heart and mind
 From bodings, as might be, that hung upon his mind.
 Of their maturer years, his present mind
 Uncharitable crossed his mind, no sense
 He suffered—breaking down in heart and mind!
 His days he wasted, an imbecile mind!
 Was, "Johnny! Johnny! mind that you
 "Oh! Johnny, never mind the Doctor;
 And, as her mind grew worse and worse,
 And, while her mind was fighting thus,
 And, Johnny, mind you tell us true."
 Of an unusual strength: his mind was keen,
 So many incidents upon his mind
 Of fathers, but with patient mind enforced
 Albeit of a stern unbending mind,
 And Isabel sat silent, for her mind
 Passed quickly through the mind of Isabel,
 May'st bear in mind the life thy Fathers lived,
 My father for slave's work may seek a slave in
 mind."
 That store the mind, the memory feed,
 Even, as your happy presence to my mind
 Pleasant conviction flashed upon my mind
 Each other's mind was fashioned; and at length,
 That spot which seems so to thy mind!
 And so may we, with charmed mind
 Ye pulled together with one mind;
 "Go you your way, and mind not me;
 Proceeding with a mind at ease;
 And in a moment calls to mind
 At length the Vision closes; and the mind,
 * Does, then, a deep and earnest thought the blissful mind employ
 Ye, who within the blameless mind
 To wander with an easy mind;
 Did to his mind impart
 Full soon that better mind was gone:
 Of mind than beauty's wretchedness,
 In that decrepit Man so firm a mind.
 And in my simple mind we cannot tell
 And passing even into my purer mind,

Mind—continued.

The picture of the mind revives again:
 And the blue sky, and in the mind of man:
 The mind that is within us, so impress
 Into a sober pleasure; when thy mind
 Within the mind strong fancies work,
 Won from the world of mind, dost thou prepare
 When but a single Mind resolves to crouch no more.
 By all that mind invents or hand prepares;
 That truth informing mind and heart,
 By art to unsensualise the mind
 As if within thee dwelt a glancing mind,
 That taints the purer, better, mind;
 What nobler marvels than the mind
 Come, Spirits of the Mind! and try,
 And now the Spirits of the Mind
 Breathless and motionless, the mind
 A holy sense pervades his mind;
 As if his mind were sinking deep
 Yet to my mind this scanty Stream is brought Do Thou, then, breathe those thoughts into my mind
 Love, faithful love, recalled thee to my mind—
 Of nature trusts the Mind that builds for aye;
 To elevate the more-than-reasoning Mind,
 Demands the service of a mind and heart,
 Cool air I breathe; while the unnumbered Mind,
 The immortal Mind craves objects that endure:
 From stain or taint; in which thy blameless mind
 Just Heaven, contract the compass of my mind
 We rather think, with grateful mind sedate,
 Strains that recalled to mind a distant day;
 By favouring Nature and a saintly Mind
 To thy large heart and humble mind, that cast
 From mind and spirit, grudge a short-lived fence.
 Power in my breast, wings growing in my mind,
 But heart with heart and mind with mind,
 So have I, not unmoved in mind,
 In peace, and peace of mind.
 "All freakishness of mind is checked;
 How fairly to his mind!
 Beneath worse ailments of the mind.
 Nor had a melancholy mind;
 That story flashed upon his mind;—
 Upon a mind with love o'erflowing—
 And cheer my mind in sorrow,
 "Is ever thus. Ye men of prostrate mind,
 Of that Man's mind—what can it be? what food
 And love, and man's unconquerable mind.
 That, burning independent of the mind,
 Among the many movements of his mind,
 From van to rear—and with one mind would flee,
 Like him of noble birth and noble mind;
 Of justice which the human mind can frame,
 To those all-pondering mind a noble aim,
 Say can he think of this with mind serene
 Avault all specious pliancy of mind
 Whom no weak hopes deceived; whose mind ensued,
 Go forth with rival youthfulness of mind,
 Of warfare waged with desperate mind
 Mounts to the seat of grace within the mind:
 If clay could think and mind were weight,
 Of that licentious craving in the mind
 Nor further outlet left to mind or heart?
 Not, therefore, shall my mind give way to sadness—
 Relax, to fix and satisfy the mind
 To feed his mind with watchful eyes could share
 Preyed upon body and mind—yet not the less
 Of thoughtful sentiment for every mind
 So with the internal mind it fares; and so
 Else more and more the general mind will droop,
 To soberness of mind and peace of heart
 Of freedom, with mind grasping the whole theme
 Of mind, that dread heart-freezing discipline.
 That everywhere, before the thoughtful mind,
 Of that holiest of Bards, and the name for my mind
 The mind, depressed by thought of greatness flown.
 I gladly commune with the mind and heart
 Becomes with all her years a vision of the Mind.
 There are whose calmer mind it would content
 Body and mind, from molestation freed,
 The drooping mind of absence, by vows sworn
 Prepared, in peace of heart, in calm of mind
 The freeborn mind enthralling,
 Into a vacant mind. Can written book
 Concord that elevates the mind, and stills.
 In mind the landscape, as if still in sight;
 O, that my mind were equal to fulfil
 Nor to the Child's enquiring mind
 A mutual hope, a common mind;
 Far back—far back my mind must go
 To your nobility of mind!
 This would I beg; but on my mind
 Rushed through his mind the prophecy
 He heard, and with misgiving mind.
 Of mind, to Rylstone back she came;
 Although with no unwilling mind
 And bears a memory and a mind
 Repeatedly his own deep mind he sounds

 Debasement undergone by body or mind, . . . 708 Prelude 8. 606
 The mind of Adam, yet in Paradise . . . 708 Prelude 8. 646
 Alike to body and to mind: his port, . . . 709 Prelude 8. 659
 To license some unruliness of mind; . . . 711 Prelude 9. 146
 Balanced these contemplations in his mind; . . . 712 Prelude 9. 190
 And continuance of mind, and sense of right, . . . 714 Prelude 9. 330
 So call it, of a youthful patriot's mind; . . . 715 Prelude 9. 388
 To animate the mind that ever turned . . . 716 Prelude 9. 499
 His days he wasted,—an imbecile mind, . . . 717 Prelude 9. 534
 But vainly connects of a calmer mind . . . 718 Prelude 9. 585
 Or sunshine to my individual mind, . . . 719 Prelude 10. 89
 In safe obedience; that a mind, whose rest . . . 720 Prelude 10. 122
 On the other side, I called to mind those truths . . . 720 Prelude 10. 173
 But that the virtue of one paramount mind . . . 721 Prelude 10. 191
 By ancient lawgivers. In this frame of mind, . . . 721 Prelude 10. 211
 For lingering yet an image in my mind' . . . 725 Prelude 10. 509
 After strict question, left within my mind . . . 726 Prelude 10. 574
 And intermixed with something, in my mind, . . . 728 Prelude 11. 59
 Must needs have given—to the inexperienced mind, . . . 728 Prelude 11. 96
 Less occupied the mind, and sentiments . . . 730 Prelude 11. 199
 Grow into consequence, till round my mind . . . 730 Prelude 11. 220
 Like culprits to the bar; calling the mind, . . . 731 Prelude 11. 295
 The perturbations of a youthful mind . . . 732 Prelude 11. 373
 Until that natural graciousness of mind . . . 735 Prelude 12. 50
 What wonder, then, if, to a mind so far . . . 735 Prelude 12. 88
 Remissness and inaptitude of mind, . . . 736 Prelude 12. 108
 A twofold frame of body and of mind, . . . 736 Prelude 12. 126
 Such strength in me as often held my mind . . . 736 Prelude 12. 130
 Perplex her mind; but, wise as women are . . . 736 Prelude 12. 156

Mind—continued.

The mind is lord and master—outward sense . . . 737 Prelude 12. 222
 A chastisement; and when I called to mind . . . 739 Prelude 12. 311
 From her that happy stillness of the mind . . . 740 Prelude 13. 9
 The field of human life, in heart and mind . . . 740 Prelude 13. 17
 Holds up before the mind intoxicate . . . 740 Prelude 13. 29
 And, as the horizon of my mind enlarged, . . . 740 Prelude 13. 51
 Fields with their rural works; recalled to mind . . . 741 Prelude 13. 103
 Through storm and darkness, early in my mind . . . 742 Prelude 13. 154
 Here, calling up to mind what then I saw, . . . 743 Prelude 13. 221
 Is mainly to the pleasure of the mind . . . 744 Prelude 13. 289
 That then and there my mind had exercised . . . 745 Prelude 13. 355
 Moreover, each man's Mind is to herself . . . 745 Prelude 13. 366
 There I beheld the emblem of a mind . . . 747 Prelude 14. 70
 In one continuous stream; a mind sustained . . . 747 Prelude 14. 78
 One function, above all, of such a mind . . . 748 Prelude 14. 147
 That, whatsoever falls my better mind . . . 749 Prelude 14. 191
 And clearest insight, amplitude of mind, . . . 750 Prelude 14. 304
 And consummation of a Poet's mind, . . . 751 Prelude 14. 344
 More profitable also; for the mind . . . 751 Prelude 14. 372
 And I have other tasks. Recall to mind . . . 752 Prelude 14. 412
 Felt, that the history of a Poet's mind . . . 752 Prelude 14. 420
 Keen and enduring, which the mind and heart, . . . 752 Prelude 14. 448
 Instruct them how the mind of man becomes . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 761
 Or elevates the Mind, intent to weigh . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 772
 Of the individual Mind that keeps her own . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 793
 Into our Minds, into the Mind of Man— . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 816
 How exquisitely the individual Mind . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 821
 The external World is fitted to the Mind; . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 848
 Contemplated, describe the Mind and Man . . . 757 Excursion 1. 65
 Abstruse matter, reasonings of the mind . . . 757 Excursion 1. 95
 But, as the mind was filled with inward light, . . . 757 Excursion 1. 101
 His observations, and the thoughts his mind . . . 758 Excursion 1. 132
 So the foundations of his mind were laid . . . 758 Excursion 1. 138
 Upon his mind like substances, whose presence . . . 758 Excursion 1. 161
 He traced an ebbing and a flowing mind, . . . 758 Excursion 1. 167
 And gave the Mind that apprehensive power . . . 759 Excursion 1. 211
 In such access of mind, in such high hour . . . 759 Excursion 1. 217
 His mind was a thanksgiving to the power . . . 759 Excursion 1. 237
 Oft as he called those ecstasies to mind, . . . 760 Excursion 1. 256
 And feeling is suppressed) preserve the mind . . . 760 Excursion 1. 284
 Of his own mind; by mystery and hope, . . . 761 Excursion 1. 321
 His restless mind to look abroad with hope . . . 761 Excursion 1. 355
 His mind in a just equipoise of love . . . 762 Excursion 1. 403
 But by the native vigour of his mind, . . . 763 Excursion 1. 483
 That steal upon the meditative mind, . . . 764 Excursion 1. 513
 She was a Woman of a steady mind, . . . 764 Excursion 1. 536
 Can scarcely bear it now in mind, there came . . . 765 Excursion 1. 599
 Why should we thus, with an untoward mind, . . . 765 Excursion 1. 610
 Passed from my mind like a forgotten sound, . . . 768 Excursion 1. 773
 But I am now in mind and in my heart . . . 768 Excursion 1. 797
 The careless stillness of a thinking mind . . . 770 Excursion 1. 948
 Amid the uneasy thoughts which filled my mind, . . . 772 Excursion 2. 46
 In his capacious mind, he loved them all: . . . 772 Excursion 2. 66
 With his own mind, unable to subdue . . . 774 Excursion 2. 173
 And straight, incited by a curious mind . . . 774 Excursion 2. 191
 "For this fair Bride, most rich in gifts of mind, . . . 775 Excursion 2. 250
 Stole by degrees upon his mind; and hence . . . 775 Excursion 2. 274
 From nature, an intense and glowing mind . . . 775 Excursion 2. 287
 For moral dignity, and strength of mind . . . 775 Excursion 2. 315
 Not moving to his mind!" These serious words . . . 782 Excursion 2. 723
 Thoughts are not busier in the mind of man . . . 780 Excursion 3. 193
 The mind is full—and free from pain their pastime." . . . 780 Excursion 3. 228
 The consolations of a hopeful mind? . . . 791 Excursion 3. 266
 By natural pity; nor a lofty mind, . . . 791 Excursion 3. 358
 Accorded little with his present mind; . . . 793 Excursion 3. 528
 Gave modest intimation to the mind . . . 794 Excursion 3. 574
 These acts of mind, and memory, and heart, . . . 797 Excursion 3. 803
 Was most inviting to a troubled mind; . . . 798 Excursion 3. 875
 With abject mind—from a tyrannic lord . . . 799 Excursion 3. 940
 With mind that sheds a light on what he sees; . . . 802 Excursion 4. 77
 Of other converse which mind, soul, and heart, . . . 803 Excursion 4. 106
 Loved haunts like these; the unimprisoned Mind . . . 804 Excursion 4. 211
 And, in the private regions of the mind, . . . 810 Excursion 4. 624
 Or, if the mind turn inward, she recoils . . . 813 Excursion 4. 776
 Doth most debase the mind; the genuine seats . . . 813 Excursion 4. 820
 To waste her powers, as in the worldling's mind, . . . 813 Excursion 4. 831
 For noble purposes of mind: his heart . . . 815 Excursion 4. 921
 Against idolatry with warlike mind, . . . 816 Excursion 4. 1019
 A noble mind to practise on herself, . . . 816 Excursion 4. 1035
 "O! best seclusion! when the mind admits . . . 817 Excursion 4. 1080
 "But how begin? and whence?—'The Mind is . . . 817 Excursion 4. 1102
 free— . . . 822 Excursion 5. 21
 Back to my mind rushed all that had been urged . . . 823 Excursion 5. 60
 To seek that comfort which the mind denies; . . . 823 Excursion 5. 73
 Thus occupied in mind I paced along, . . . 824 Excursion 5. 108
 He yielded, though reluctant; for his mind . . . 825 Excursion 5. 213
 And something also of his inner mind . . . 827 Excursion 5. 220
 Upturned, as if his mind were rapt, or lost . . . 828 Excursion 5. 372
 Hath mournfully pronounced, then, in my mind, . . . 828 Excursion 5. 421
 Rise to the notice of a serious mind . . . 831 Excursion 5. 581
 On humble life, forbid the judging mind . . . 831 Excursion 5. 605
 The ingenuous mind, apt to be set aright; . . . 832 Excursion 5. 640
 Body and mind in one captivity; . . . 833 Excursion 5. 716
 What qualities of mind she bears, who comes, . . . 834 Excursion 5. 797
 With evening cheerfulness. In powers of mind, . . . 838 Excursion 5. 38
 As books record, and even the careless mind . . . 840 Excursion 6. 146
 (Depraved, and ever prone to fill the mind . . . 840 Excursion 6. 165
 The steadfast quiet natural to a mind . . . 840 Excursion 6. 166
 Who strove to instil this truth into his mind, . . . 840 Excursion 6. 166
 A mind in all heart-mysteries unversed. . . . 840 Excursion 6. 166

Mind—continued.

And an entire simplicity of mind 841 Excursion 6. 178
 By many pitied, as insane of mind; 841 Excursion 6. 225
 Whom sight of this green hillock to my mind . . . 842 Excursion 6. 274
 Be genuine knowledge, bear we then in mind . . . 847 Excursion 6. 594
 In power of mind, and eloquent discourse . . . 848 Excursion 6. 677
 Wanting all relish for her strenuous mind, . . . 848 Excursion 6. 693
 Save the contentment of the builder's mind; . . . 849 Excursion 6. 729
 A mind by nature indisposed to aught . . . 849 Excursion 6. 730
 A mind intolerant of lasting peace, . . . 849 Excursion 6. 732
 To sight or miod. Nor less than care divine . . . 850 Excursion 6. 770 —Serious and thoughtful was her mind; and yet, . . . 850 Excursion 6. 824
 With vacant mind, not seldom may observe . . . 852 Excursion 6. 936
 The ungentle mind can easily find means . . . 852 Excursion 6. 954
 From Ellen's thoughts; had perished to her mind . . . 853 Excursion 6. 1011
 Her mind she strictly tutored to find peace . . . 854 Excursion 6. 1026
 Call to my mind dark hints which I have heard . . . 854 Excursion 6. 1075
 And her obsequious shadow, peace of mind, . . . 855 Excursion 6. 1090
 I turned, that ye in mind might witness where, . . . 856 Excursion 6. 1190
 Before our eyes, awakened in my mind . . . 857 Excursion 7. 3
 Too little checked. An active, ardent mind; . . . 859 Excursion 7. 116
 On his own mind, to quarrel with the choice . . . 859 Excursion 7. 146
 The sick in body, or distrust in mind; . . . 859 Excursion 7. 153
 Io youth, and sanctioned by the riper mind, . . . 860 Excursion 7. 197
 A man of hope and forward-looking miod . . . 861 Excursion 7. 276
 Were gathered to each other." Calm of miod . . . 861 Excursion 7. 291
 Smooth task, with his compared, whose mind could . . . 862 Excursion 7. 306

 No wish for wealth had place within his mind; . . . 864 Excursion 7. 475
 And in what pure contentedness of mind, . . . 864 Excursion 7. 491
 What terror doth it strike into the mind . . . 865 Excursion 7. 503
 Enriched with knowledge his industrious mind; . . . 865 Excursion 7. 521
 And to the mind among her powers of sense . . . 866 Excursion 7. 571
 The obligation of an anxious mind, . . . 867 Excursion 7. 659
 But most of all and with most thankful mind . . . 872 Excursion 7. 986
 Who, in the hodyly image, in the mind, . . . 875 Excursion 8. 55
 While solitude permits the mind to feel; . . . 877 Excursion 8. 206
 That, by the thinking mind, have been compelled . . . 878 Excursion 8. 244
 A thought of refuge, for a mind detained . . . 878 Excursion 8. 274
 Nothing to speed the day, or cheer the mind; . . . 879 Excursion 8. 321
 The limbs increase; but liberty of mind . . . 879 Excursion 8. 328
 To impress a vivid feeling on the mind . . . 880 Excursion 8. 433
 In brief, what liberty of mind is here? . . . 880 Excursion 8. 438
 Within his mind, he seemed prepared to give . . . 882 Excursion 8. 526
 Dropping from every mind, the Solitary . . . 883 Excursion 8. 583
 As beautiful—as grateful to the mind, . . . 883 Excursion 8. 589
 Glistened with tenderness; his mind, I knew, . . . 884 Excursion 9. 19
 And least respected in the human Mind, . . . 885 Excursion 9. 65
 Yea almost on the Mind herself, and seems . . . 886 Excursion 9. 168
 Yet was the mind to hinderances exposed, . . . 887 Excursion 9. 204

Mind's—continued.

To the mind's eye Religion doth present ;
 In his mind's eye thy crescent horns ascend,
 To the Mind's gaining that prophetic sense
 The Mind's internal heaven shall shed her dew
 Blest Statesman He, whose Mind's unselfish will
 To regulate the Mind's disordered frame,
 My own voice cheered me, and, far more, the mind's
 And shook the mind's simplicity.—And yet
 Even now appears before the mind's clear eye
 That awful Power rose from the mind's abyss
 And evil, not as for the mind's delight
 Not treacherous, to the mind's excursive power.
 "And in your judgment, Sir! the mind's repose
 Are worthiest of the mind's regard; with these
 For the mind's government, or temper's peace ;
Minds. Till all our minds for ever flow
 Would he forget those Beings to whose minds
 That should be scourged, not pitied. Restless
 Minds,
 Such Minds as find amid their fellow-men
 Minds that have nothing to confer
 (Fancy that sports more desperately with minds
 To some whose minds without disdain
 Thine infant history, on the minds of those
 Their eyes, or minds? or, finally, is you resplendent vault?
 Of joy in minds that can no further go,
 And, in their anguish, bear what other minds have borne!"
 The heavens, whose aspect makes our minds as still Yet pure and powerful minds, hearts meek and still,
 Yet a rich gerudon waits on minds that dare,
 Over the minds of Poets, young or old!
 Our minds when, lingering all too long,
 And minds not stunted or untilled are given,
 When our enlightened minds shall bless his sway;
 Chosen by Rome's legendary Bards, high minds
 As to be likened in his Followers' minds
 Those helps rejected, they, whose minds perceive
 Vague minds, while men are growing out of boys;
 Pure minds with sinless envy, than the Abode
 If on one thought our minds have fed,
 And said; "The Minds of Men will own
 Can do for minds disposed to feel its power!
 Wrought in men's minds, like miracles achieved;
 But look we now to them whose minds from far
 Black in the people's minds and words, yet they
 Which of themselves our minds impress ;
 Our minds and hearts to bless—
 Our minds shall drink at every pore
 That into breezes sink; impetuous minds
 Of those pure Minds that reverence the Muse.
 By their good works exalted, lofty minds,
 Will live, and spread, and kindle: even such minds
 A silent monitor, which on their minds
 Feverish with weary joints and heating minds.
 Have since flowed in between us, and, our minds
 To passive minds. My seventeenth year was come;
 On visionary minds; if, in this time
 Done visibly for other minds, words, signs,
 Where mighty minds lie visibly entombed,
 Of more unthinking natures, easy minds
 To set our minds on edge, and did no more.
 Or draws for minds that are left free to trust
 On infant minds as surely as the sun
 Be these the daily strengtheners of their minds;
 To watch crude Nature work in untaught minds;
 Oppression, under which even highest minds
 Eyes that perceive through minds that can inspire.
 To youthful minds, by objects over near
 To aspirations then of our own minds
 But in the minds of all ingenuous youth,
 Of those enormities, even thinking minds
 Was given to old opinions; all men's minds
 Of ordinary intercourse, our minds
 To Nature, and the power of human minds
 Accomplished; minds whose faculties are then
 That higher minds bear with them as their own.
 Such minds are truly from the Deity,
 Into our Minds, into the Mind of Man—
 And go to the grave, unthought of. Strongest minds
 Of many minds, of minds and bodies too;
 That an appearance which hath raised your minds
 On serious minds: then, as the Hindoos draw
 Expressed the tumult of their minds, my voice
 Of native feeling, grateful to our minds;
 And plety is sweet to infant minds.
 Or move the pity of unthinking minds,
 Some acceptable lesson to their minds
 Over both minds, when they awhile had marked
 "A noble—and, to unreflecting minds,
 And expectations of self-flattering minds!
 For strife and ferment in the minds of men;
 Them only can such hope inspire whose minds
 From this communion with uninjured Minds,
 Cherish, and lofty Minds approve the past—
 By night, here only; or in chosen minds
 If put the temper of our minds to proof,

Minds—continued.

Associates in the joy of purest minds,
Mine. (Partial list.) See MINE'S.
 Nor friendless he, the prisoner of the mine,
 He springs the hushed Volcano's mine,
 You further help? The mine of real life
 And the vast engine labouring in the mine,
 Far from my dearest Friend, 'tis mine to rove
 That but half of it was hers, and one half of it was mine.
 Take all that's mine "beneath the moon,"
 In more delightful verse than skill of mine
 Theirs be the blame who caused the woe, not mine!
 That ravishment of mine, and laughed aloud.
 There's a flower that shall be mine,
 Yet mine is their glee!
 Your Mother has had aims of mine.
 Small difference lies between thy creed and mine:
 A thousand tender pleasures, thine and mine,
 Her summer's faithful joy—that still is mine,
 When thou didst flit before mine eyes,
 Far more than any heart but mine can know,
 Enfold within its core. The faith be mine,
 Life's cup when almost filled with years, like mine.
 Ye Catacombs, give to mine eyes a glimpse
 Oh, what a gush of tenderness was mine!
 Yet, would that Thou, with me and mine,
 Then, too, this Song of mine once more could please,
 Were mine the justy staff that Jewel gave,
 Mine ear has rung, my spirit sunk subdued,
 If e'er, through fault of mine, in mutual pain
 That verse of mine, what e'er its varying mood,
 My sister! ('tis a wish of mine)
 Great gains are mine; for thus I live remote
 Though these dull hours (mine is it, or their shame?)
 O now that the genius of Bewick were mine.
 Ah! THEN, if mine had been the Painter's hand,
 —Brother and friend, if verse of mine . . .
 As long as verse of mine shall breathe the air
 No more shall grief of mine the season wrong;
 My care, if the arm of the mighty were mine,
 My own; and not mine only, for with me
 Not mine, and such as were not made for me.
 The calm existence that is mine when I . . .
 In solitude, such intercourse was mine;
 Mine was it in the fields both day and night,
 What independent solaces were mine,
 Mine eyes were crossed by butterflies, ears vexed
 That day consummate happiness was mine,
 And damp those yearnings which had once been mine—
 Of magic fiction, verse of mine perchance . . .
 Mine, through heaven's grace and inborn aptitudes.
 This I repeat, was mine; mine be the blame.
 O Friend! few happier moments have been mine
 To cheer the thoughts of those I love, and mine.
 Be mine to follow with no timid step
 Now as his choice directed, now as mine;
 And therefore no incompetence of mine
 And now 'tis mine, perchance for life, dear Vale,
 Such pleasure now is mine, albeit forced,
 Possessions have I that are solely mine,
 That other hope, long mine, the hope to fill
Mineral. And mineral crown, beside his jagged urn,
 With sparkling mineral, or should crystal cube
Miners. 'Twas by a troop of miners made,
Minerva's. Minerva's self would stigmatize
 Thou, too, wert present at Minerva's side—Mine's. For mine's a song that is both true and plain,
 The mine's dire earthquake, and the pallid host
 Rich as the mine's most bright creations,
 And far above the mine's most precious ore
 To the mine's mouth; a long and slanting track,
 At the mine's mouth under impending rocks;
Mines. Not in the mines beyond the western main,
 Fleed panting to the centre of her mines;
 Help at his need in Dalecarlia's mines:
 Mines opened, forests planted, and rocks split,
Mingla. Sweet are the sounds that mingle from afar,
 Will mingle with her lustrous gliding
 A Stream, to mingle with your favourite Dee,
 And thou, too, mingle in the ring!
 Where mingle, as for mockery combined,
 I mingle with the best on those pure heights
 And soul, to mingle with Eternity!
 Now to mingle and to move
 Ye mingle, or divide,
 And mingle colours, that should breed
 To mingle in the rustic dance,
 To mingle, I beheld the vessels lie,
 Their aspects lead, and mingle in their turn
 How few who mingle with their fellow-men
Mingled. Had mingled tears of thine,
 And Emont's murmur mingled with the Song—
 Their several features, mingled like the sound
 Until their spirits mingled in the sea
 Your glories mingled with the brightest hues
 By aught that mingled with the tragic scene
 Yet mingled not unwillingly with sneers
 He mingled, where he might, the various tasks

Mingled—continued.

There mingled, heard or not, The powers of song Mingles. Mingles, and lurking consciousness of wrong ;
 What heartfelt fragrance mingles with the gale . . .
Mingling. By mingling natural matter of her own
 Mingling most earnest wishes for the day . . .
 To which our fancies, mingling, gave free scope
 An earthquake, mingling with the battle's shock,
 Mingling with thy soft breath ! That morning too,
 Of good works, mingling with the visions, raise
 Mingling their glances with grave flatteries
 That thickens, spreads, and, mingling fold with fold,
 Mingling with night, such twilight to compose . . .
 Fit for the shades of heroes, mingling there . . .
 If, mingling with the world, I am content . . .
 And mingling playful with pathetic thoughts.
 When, after the first mingling of our tears
Miniature. A miniature ; belike some Shepherd-boy,
 "Gay Sylphs this miniature will court,
 Objects immense portrayed in miniature, . . .
 Like Mona's miniature of sovereignty . . .
 Some miniature of famous spots or things,—
Minion. Thou buoyant minion of the tropic air ;
Minion's. Food for sick passion in a minion's cheek, Minions. These might thy Minions crown, and chant thy power,
Minister. Never shall ruthless minister of death
 Death's minister ; then came his glad release,
 Your Minister would brush away
 Dread Minister of wrath !
 Invisible, unlooked-for, minister
 Or minister to finer art,
 Should some benignant Minister of air
 Oh ! while they minister to thee,
 Though minister of sorrow ;
 Nor he, nor minister of his—intent
 To minister to works of high attempt—
Ministered. Which ministered, erewhile, to a sacrifice
 In mortal stillness ; and they ministered
 And gentle aspect off has ministered Ministering. This Height a ministering Angel might select :
 Like bands of ministering Spirits, or when they lie,
 Each ministering to each, didst thou appear
 Ministering to our need. In genial mood,
Minister's. What'er the minister's old self supplied ;
Ministers. Of fierce barbarians into Ministers
 And gratitude to ministers of vice,
 With all the ministers of hope
 Only ministers to quicken
 —Fly, ministers of Fame,
 To kindred contemplations ministers
 (We know not whence) ministers for a bell
 These jealous Ministers of law aspire,
 Confession ministers the pang to soothe
 Inspired, the Church sends ministers to kneel
 Wander the Ministers of God, as chance
 Of Power whose ministers the records keep Ministers of grace divine
 Came ministers of peace, intent to rear
 The most assiduous of her ministers ;
 Their ministers—who in lordly wise had stirred
 Proceed all visible ministers of good
 Are they not mainly outward ministers
 Of those pure altars worthy ; ministers
 Disorged are now the ministers of day ;
Ministrant. Is in its beauty ministrant
Ministration. A ministration humble but sincere,
 The ministration ; while parental Love
 A ministration of your own was yours ;
Ministry. The wholesome ministry of pain and evil,
 Vouchsafed, in radiant ministry
 Your ministry ; that, as ye rise and take
 They daunt not him who holds his ministry,
 Went single in his ministry across
 Severer interventions, ministry . . .
 Such ministry, when ye through many a year
 He, on that ministry already bound,
 And you, ye groves, whose ministry it is
 He to the Ministry was duly called ;
Minnow. Both for tiny harmless minnow . . .
Minor. When they, who for this Minor hold in trust Minster. Temple of Greece, and minster with its tower
 Of minster clock ! From that bleak tenement
 Of ancient minster lifted above the cloud . . .
Minster-bell. The death-sounds of the Minster-bell :
Minster-clock. The minster-clock has just struck two,
Minster's. Of some old Minster's venerable pile)
 Thou, chequering peaceably the minster's gloom,
Minstrel. See Border-minstrel.
 High in the breathless Hall the Minstrel sat,
 Alas ! the impassioned minstrel did not know
 Ethereal minstrel ! pilgrim of the sky !
 "Why, Minstrel, these untuneful murmurings—
 This Minstrel lead, his sins forgiven ;
 Great Minstrel of the Border !
 By the "last Minstrel," (not the last !)

Minstrel—continued.

The Royal Minstrel, ere the choir is still, . . .
 The mighty Minstrel breathes no longer, . . .
 The Minstrel of the Troop, and left him there,
 Of monkeys on his back ; a minstrel hand
 The Minstrel ! wandering on from hall to hall,
 Hired minstrel of voluptuous blandishment ;
 But that the minstrel of the rural shade
Minstrel's. Fitting his low voice to the minstrel's harp,
 And with the dancers and the minstrel's song . . .
 And with the dancers and the minstrel's song
 O that some Minstrel's harp were near,
 May sometimes greet the strolling minstrel's harp,
Minstrels. "The Minstrels of Pygmean bands, . . .
 Of the old minstrels and the border bards.—
 That spake of bards and minstrels ; and his spirit
 The Minstrels played their Christmas tune
 Farewell ! no Minstrels now with harp new-strung
 The far-off minstrels of the haunted hill,
 My threshold,—minstrels from the distant woods
Minstrelsies. As laboured minstrelsies through ages wear !
 The milder minstrelsies of rural scenes . . .
Minstrelsy. Were dancing to the minstrelsy.
 And notes of minstrelsy were heard
 And din of arms and minstrelsy,
 Is yet uncheered by other minstrelsy . . .
 'Tis sung in ancient minstrelsy
 Of the time-hallowed minstrelsy) required
 Than their too happy minstrelsy,—a voice
Mint. A garden stored with peas, and mint, and thyme,
Minuet. A minuet course ; and, winding up his mouth,
Minute. A minute past, he went to fetch a draught
 Alone but for a swarm of minute creatures
 Notice punctual as the minute, . . .
 Each minute sweeter than before, . . .
 How restless, how minute !
 Near or remote, minute or vast ; an eye
 Throughout the landscape ; tuft, stone, scratch minute—
 No stammerer of a minute, painfully
 Won from me those minute obeisances
 In life or nature of those charms minute
 With her minute and speculative pains,
 By processes minute), even so—when thought
Minutely. Minutely linked with diligence uninspired,
 For hence, minutely, in his various rounds,
 Minutely spoken of that aged Lamp
Minuter. Turn to minuter changes at our feet ;
 A pause ensued ; and with minuter care
Minutes. The friends whom she had left but a few minutes past,
 Few minutes gone a faintness overspread . . .
 I would have given, not many minutes gone, . . .
 They have no substance. Pass but a few minutes,
 Five minutes past—and, O the change
 Of old companionship, Time counts not minutes . . .
 So the balmy minutes pass,
 His minutes, by reiterated drops, . . .
 The minutes fly—till, at the queen's command,
 Not scantily, bright minutes on the thread . . .
Minutes'. —When I had gazed perhaps two minutes'
 space,
 Unnoticed did I stand some minutes' space . . .
Minute-steps. Attend, or dare with minute-steps their way ;
Miracle. A home that by such miracle of sound
 Free Fancy prized each specious miracle, . . .
 And call the Fountain forth by miracle, . . .
 Appears to shine, by miracle restored ;
 Of the resplendent miracle . . .
 Or His pure Word by miracle revealed . . .
 A miracle of scientific lore, . . .
Miracles. To aid the Votress, miracles believed
 Wrought in men's minds, like miracles achieved ;
 Have had, as thou reportest, miracles
 Showered miracles, and ceased not to dispense
Miraculous. By a miraculous finger stilled at once.
 Or seek, from saints above, miraculous aid—
 Emblem of faith untouched, miraculous attestation !
Mire. Besoiled with mire, and let the houseless snail
 Given or acquired, to raise us from the mire, . . .
Mirror. Isushed, and like a burnished mirror glows,
 Stretch o'er the pictured mirror broad and blue,
 In you a mirror of my youthful self ;
 The mirror of the crystal flood, . . .
 Is in the mirror slighted.
 Is it a mirror ?—or the nether Sphere
 As on a mirror that gives back the hues
 Mirror of Princes ! Indigent Renown
 No winds disturb ; the mirror of whose breast
 And breaks the mirror of the circling deaps ;
 Stretch, o'er their pictur'd mirror, broad and blue,
 Expressing, as in mirror, sea and land,
 No more than as a mirror that reflects . . .

Mirror—continued.

And no vain mirror glittered upon the walls, . . .
Mirrored. Mirrored, yet not too strictly, may refine Mirror's. Within the mirror's depth, a world at rest—
Mirrors. Not stripped, nor voiceless in the mirrors,
Mirth. The valley rings with mirth and joy ;
 The crickets long have ceased their mirth ;
 Meanwhile, a noise was heard, the busy mirth
 Prophet of delight and mirth,
 Moves all nature to gladness and mirth.
 All have laid their mirth aside,
 And implements of frolic mirth ;
 The hare is running races in her mirth ;
 With sighs of self-exhausted mirth
 The blind man's gloom, exalts the veteran's mirth ;
 Swift Mercury rescounds with mirth,
 Suffices me—her tears, her mirth,
 Her humblest mirth and tears,
 When, to upset his spiteful mirth,
 Might need for comfort, or for festal mirth ;
 With mirth elate,
 Beat like the heart of Man : songs, garlands, mirth,
 Should come in frenzy and in drunken mirth,
 We met, while festive mirth ran wild,
 Would mirth run round, with generous fare ;
 To meet the coming hours of festal mirth,
 It is the man of mirth.
 Sound sense, and love itself, and mirth and glee
 Let easy mirth his social hours inspire,
 And jollity, fresh cheerfulness, and mirth ;
 When link'd with thoughtless Mirth I cours'd the plain,
 The night in dancing, gaily, and mirth,
 You and your not unwelcome days of mirth
 Along that very Loire, with festal mirth
 For sacrifice, and struggling with fond mirth
 That had no mirth in them ; or with his knife
 In their repose, the living in their mirth,
 Into the troop of mirth, a soldier, sworn
 Of speech as wild as ever heightened mirth.
 But here's a thought which well our mirth may cross
 Mirth that to aching ribs will not submit . . .
Mirthful. What shall it be ? a mirthful throug' ? or that holy place and calm . . .
 Over their mirthful triumph clapping hands . . .
 Is this a place for mirthful cheer ? . . .
Miry. The boisterous carman, in the miry road,
 And walked with me along the miry road,
Mirza's. He who stood visible to Mirza's eye,
Misappled. And sorceries of talent misappled, Misbelievers. Though with misbelievers bred ; but that dark night . . .
Miscellaneous. From miscellaneous converse, ye were taught . . .
Mischance. But, through severe mischance and cruel
 wrong,
 That would have been a vile mischance. It would,
 When you had told him the mischance, was troubled
 Thy Father perished. Perished—by what mischance ?
 Sheds round the transient harm or vague mischance
 Without a shadow of mischance,
 We had not travelled long, ere some mischance
 By passion or mischance, or such misrule . . .
Mischances. Of sad mischances not a few,
Mischief. Anxiety lest mischief should befall her
 That, wanting not wild grace, are from all mischief
 free !
 Who shun the mischief which they cannot heal . . .
 Weighing the mischief with the promised gain,
 From mischief, caused by spells himself had muttered ;
 That shield from mischief and preserve from stains
 What mischief cleaves to unsubdued regret,
 Plotting new mischief—out again he leaps
 Pondering the mischiefs of these restless times,
 Pride, anger, mischief, poverty, and madness,
 Which, as a deadly mischief, and a foul
 I spake of mischief by the wise diffused
 And lifts his wilful hand on mischief bent, Misconceived. From honour misconceived, or fancied
 wrong,
 A spiritual presence, oft times misconceived,
Miscreant. We've solved the riddle—Miscreant !
 Do you,
Misdeem. (Misdeem it not a cankerous change) may grow
 Where gentlest judgments may misdeem,
 Misdeem most widely, lodging it elsewhere :
Miser. All treasures hoarded by the miser, Time,
 Ease from this noble miser of his time
Miserable. And when the miserable work was done
 " It was indeed a miserable hour . . .
 To join those miserable men he flew,
 And drop, as he once dropped, in miserable trance.
 And in that miserable place we left him,
 And from that hour the miserable man
 I have the proofs !— O miserable Father ! . . .

Mislead—continued.

How we mislead each other; above all,
How books mislead us, seeking their reward
Misleading. For not misleading us. That subtle
Grey-beard—
Misleads. Our pride misleads, our timid likings kill.
Misled. Or sadly he has been misled,
Harboured where none can be misled,
"Gone are they, bravely, though misled;
Err not, by hasty zeal misled,
Long-favoured England! be not thou misled
My story early—not misled, I trust,
Misled in estimating words, not only
From sleep awakened, and misled by sound
Not pressed upon, nor dazzled or misled
May have sustained, that, howso'er misled,
Though far misled? Shall men for whom our age Misnamed. Which the sweet Bird, misnamed the melancholy,
May never House, misnamed of INDUSTRY,
A Power misnamed the SPIRIT of REFORM,
Misplaced. How sadly in your love misplaced,
Oh! if through confidence misplaced
Nor deem the Poet's hope misplaced,
Honour misplaced, and Dignity astray;
Is all too true; and surely not misplaced:
My Sister, here misplaced and desolate,
Misrule. Analogy to uproar and misrule,
By passion or mischance, or such misrule
Miss. Your piety would not miss its due reward;
I catch at them, and then I miss;
Amusement, where the Mother does not miss
For what I have and what I miss
Such insolent temptations wouldst thou miss,
For whom the gravest thought of what they miss,
From ill we meet or good we miss,
I cannot miss my way. I breathe again!
On the dead letter, miss the spirit of things;
Ye could not miss the funeral train—they yet
And I shall miss him; scanty tribute! yet,
Miss not the humbler good at which they aim,
Nor Miss Taylor, Captain Stamp,
Missed. And, caught by glimpses now—now missed,
And thus is missed the sole true glory
Missed not the truth, retains a single name
What benefits are missed, what evils bred, Whose virtues called them forth. That aim is miss'd;
Who only misses what I missed, who falls
And, with the half-shaped road which we had missed
By multitudes was missed, perhaps attained
Were missed, I should at least secure my own.
—Yet, while the better part is missed, the worse.
Thus comprehension fails, and truth is missed;
Misses. Who only misses what I missed, who falls
Mis-shapen. Stranger! this hillock of mis-shapen stones
Or mis-shapen to the sight,
Mis-shapes. Mis-shapes the beauteous forms of things:—
Missing. But two are missing—two, a lonely pair
Mission. Their transient mission o'er,
Grants to thy mission a brief term of silence,
Go forth upon a mission best fulfilled
Whate'er its mission, the soft breeze can come
Or sent on mission to some northern Chief

Mist. Here, vanish, as in mist, before a flood
A mighty waste of mist the valley fills,
Pines, on the coast, through mist their tops uprear,
One calm September morning, ere the mist
While neither mist, nor thickest cloud
By breathing mist; and thine appears to be
Blend with the mist—a moving shroud
In pomp of mist or pomp of snow,
The mist and the river, the hill and the shade:
Raises a mist; that, glittering in the sun,
" 'Twas mist and rain, and storm and rain:
Like morning mist; and, where it lay,
The towering headlands, crowned with mist,
In naked splendour, clear from mist or haze,
His head from mist; and, as the wind sohhed through
Like sunny mist;—at length the golden hair,
His sides, or wreath with mist his forehead high:
And, while the mortal mist is gathering, draws
The mountain top, or breathed the mist
'Tis storm; and hid in mist from hour to hour
Or lost at eve in sudden mist the day
Mounts thro' the nearer mist the chaunt of birds,
Mist into air dissolving! Then a wish,
Of curling mist, or from the level plain
Straining my eyes intensely, as the mist
The noise of wood and water, and the mist
The mountain-side. The mist soon girt us round,
Rested a silent sea of hoary mist.
A cloud of mist, that smitten by the sun
By mist and silent rain-drops silvered o'er,
The mist, the shadows, light of golden suns,
Lay shrouded in impenetrable mist;
Through the dull mist, I following—when a step,

Mist—continued.

When, from the blind mist issuing, I beheld
Or through the groves gliding like morning mist Mistake. And you mistake the cause: you hear the woods
I now perceive we do mistake our masters,
Which, after a short time, by some mistake
And ye—who might mistake for sober sense
Deceived, mistake calamities for wrongs;
Mistaken. Nay, then—I am mistaken. There's a weakness
Yet not to be mistaken. Hark again!
A poor mistaken and bewildered offering,— Mistakes. And thus a way was opened for mistakes
Mistakes for sorrow darting beams of light Mistaking. Sometimes the ambitious Power of choice, mistaking
Mis-timad. Shrinks from the note as from a mistimed thing,
Mistress. Bean mistress also of a clock,
Of her loved mistress; soon the music died,
This day, he mistress of a single pearl
And now her sainted Mistress dear?
Which her dear Mistress once held dear:
Of a kind mistress, fairest of the land,
"Dear child, sweet Mistress, say not so!
Deign, Sovereign Mistress! to accept a lay,
Her eye was not the mistress of her heart;
Left one day mistress of her mother's stores,
Sole Mistress of this house, when I am gone?
Mistrust. See Self-mistrust.
"Whence the undeserved mistrust? Too wide apart
That wretched boon, days lengthened by mistrust.
Taught to mistrust her flattering horoscope
Mistrust thyself, vain Country! cease to cry,
Mistrust and jealousy, despite, debate,
Nor did by habit of her thoughts mistrust
Beginning to mistrust their boastful guides,
That Man is only weak through his mistrust
Ensures to all believers?—Yet mistrust
Mistrusted. Of popular reason, long mistrusted, freed Mistrusting. Mistrusting her evasive skill,
Mists. Where mists, suspended on the expiring gale,
—At once bewildering mists around him close,
Amid the heart of many thousand mists,
The mists, that o'er the streamlet's bed
Most potent when mists veil the sky,
Mists that distort and magnify,
Lo, in the vale, the mists of evening spread!
Which mists and vapours from mine eyes did shroud—
Those steps I clomb; the mists before me gave Like smoke mountain-tops whose mists have rolled away—
Did sullen mists hide lake and skies
Toward the mists that hang over the land of my Sires,
Reflected through the mists of age, from hours
Rock-built, are hung with rainbow-coloured mists—
Its perilous frown in mists and clouds?
Nourish the sufferers then; and mists, that brood
Mists rose to hide the Land—that search, though
long
And mists that spread the flying shroud;
These mists, and lead you to a safer place,
Such gentle mists as glide
Into the mists of fabled Time
While mists, suspended on th' expiring gale,
Ye dewy mists the arid rocks o'er-spread
Condemn'd, in mists and tempests ever rife,
And sounding cataracts, ye mists and winds
Blown from their favourite resting-place, or mists
By mists bewildered, suddenly mine eyes
Clouds, mists, streams, watery rocks and emerald turf,
Among the many there; and while the mists
The fountain of the mists. The father stooped
Through some Helvetian dell, when low-hung mists
Misty. Dilated hang the misty pines on high,
And Kirkstone tossed it from his misty head.
And let the misty mountain-winds be free
Or with the Moon conquering earth's misty air,
To seize whate'er, through misty air,
And some we gather from the misty air,
Of water-lilies veiled in misty steam—
When, as day broke, the Maid, through misty air,
And neither cloud conceal, nor misty air
By the still borders of the misty lake,
Spread like a halo round a misty moon,
To lift thee high above the misty air
Misusa. And will misuse me, Sir! No trifling, Woman!
Misused. He had been sore misused; but he forgave
Raised by remembrances of misused life,
Though slighted and too oft misused. Besides, Mithridates. How vanquished Mithridates northward passed,
Mitigate. Yet frequent transports mitigate the gloom:

Moment—continued.

Who happier for the moment—who more blithe
Then, reappearing in a moment, quits . . .
In one blest moment. Like a shadow thrown
Came at that moment, ringing noisily . . .
Is stricken in the moment when her throes
That there should pass a moment of the year,
And at the self-same moment, works its way
(For every moment hath its own to-morrow!)
Delusion which a moment may destroy!
That rapturous moment never shall I forget
A parting moment with her loveliest look,
Compare! thy earthly head a moment past
The moment I was left behind. . . .

Moment's. Nor voice, nor sound, that moment's pain expressed,

Ha! ha!—As 'twill be but a moment's work,
To shield her from a moment's harm. To you,
A moment's heaviness they feel, . . .
Could lend out of that moment's store
Red, green, and blue; a moment's sight!
To be a moment's ornament . . .
Who, through the portal of one moment's guilt,
And then, without a moment's stay,
Moves an without a moment's stop,
Such transport, though but for a moment's space;
Not worth a moment's pains.
(Though it were only for a moment's space)
Mounts on rapt wing, and with a moment's flight
Too free to one bright moment's hope?
There Francis for a moment's space
Might give to serious thought a moment's sway,
We breathed together for a moment's space,
Forbidden a moment's rest;
Brings not a moment's care.
For one poor moment's space to Thee,
That I am trifling: 'twas a moment's pause,—
Or deemed it worth a moment's thought to stir,
Would I give a moment's pain;

What happy moments did I count!
My very moments are too full
And, in their happiest moments, not content,
No more than moments of thy life?
To the flying moments, and is seen no more.
Think rather of those moments bright
Moments, to cast a look behind,
In thoughtful moments, wafted by the gales
Blest are the moments, doubly blest,
By moments thus increaseth in my face,
Long for some moments in a weary life
Our noisy years seem moments in the heing
Oft in these moments such a holy calm
On those ingenuous moments of our youth
But memorable moments intervened,
Narrowing itself by moments—they, rash men,
O Friend! few happier moments have been mine
(As at some moments might not be unfelt
The pensive moments by this calm fire-side,
The obedient servant of her will. Such moments
At other moments—(for through that wide waste
And giving to the moments as they pass

Gæ'd by his sister-wives, the monarch stalks;
To his chamber the monarch is led,

And where the very monarch of the brook,
Monarch's. Cleared for a monarch's progress.

The innocent eyes of youthful Monarchs driven
And monarchs surly at the wrongs sustained . . .

Mona's. And visibly engirding Mona's Isle
Like Mona's miniature of sovereignty . . .
What shall I treat of? News from Mona's Isle?

Monasteries. For eastern monasteries, sunny mounts Monastery. At early dawn. The monastery bells . . .
Monastic. That, shaped like old monastic turrets, rise
From Bolton's old monastic tower . . .
Monastic Domes! following my downward way,
And that monastic castle, 'mid tall trees,
Of the monastic brotherhood, upon rock . . .

Money. A piece of money glittering through the dust?
Of that blind Man. "I was not your money, Sir,—
And I gave money to the host,
To the neighbours he went,—all were free with their money . . .
Pieces of money carefully enclosed, . . .
Money's. If money's slack, . . .

Monies. See Monies.
The monies he possessed, and heard up more,
Monig. See Among.
His rank 'mong freeborn creatures that live free,
Who, 'mong those thousands, friend hath none,
'Mong Christian folk, a street where Jews might he,
'Mong other consolations, we may draw

Monied. These times strike monied wordlings with dismay . . .
Monies. See Monies.
And left estates and monies to the poor, . . .
Behold me rich in monies, and attired . . .

Monition. Divine monition Nature yields,
Monitor. Discerning Monitor, my faithful Wilfred,
And pensive monitor of fleeting years
The monitor revives his own sweet strain;
I thank the silent Monitor, and say
A silent monitor, which on their minds
Murmurings, whereby the monitor expressed . . .
Might wait on thee, a silent monitor

Monitors. To catch from Nature's humblest monitors
On a wild coast, rough monitors to feed . . .
Solemn monitors are ours . . .
Monitory. He heard the monitory growl;
With vital sounds and monitory gleams
Can hear the monitory clock
A monitory sound that never failed,—
The monitory voice? But most of all . . .

Monitress. Then, silent Monitress! let us—not blind
Monk. Then might the passing Monk receive a boon
Thus sensitive must be the Monk, though pale
Else will the enamoured Monk too surely find
That to a Monk allots, both in the esteem
Where once came monk and nun with gentle stir,
One above all, a Monk who waits on God . . .

Monks. The Monks of Fountain's thronged to force
Defeating, put the Monks to shame,
By a few Monks, a stern society,
What aim had they, the Pair of Monks, in size
The Monks still repeat the tradition with pride,
While the Monks prayed in Maiden's Bower
His thin autumnal locks where Monks abide
From Monks in Ely chanting service high,
That we the sweet song of the Monks may hear!
The Monks relax or break these iron chains;
The thoughtful Monks, intent their God to please,
Among a grave fraternity of Monks,
As all Monks are, or surely ought to be,
No jarring monks, to gloomy cell confined,
Monster. Her whom the Monster, Clifford, drove to madness.
Whate'er the monster brooding in your breast
Contains not such a Monster! For, this purpose
Oh Monster! Monster! there are three of us,
Hast thou pursued the monster? I have found him—
Wrest from the guardian Monster of the tomb
From this dull Monster and her sooty crew;
Let Ignorance o'er the monster swarms preside,
Monsters. Among the monsters of the Deep;
Where men were monsters. A last grace he craves,
A Parliament of Monsters. Tents and Boths
Ephemeral monsters, to be seen but once!
Monstrous. This monstrous crime to he laid open—
here,
That monstrous perfidy! Keep down your wrath,
Of monstrous crime!—that horror-striking blade,
The pyramid extend its monstrous base,
Their monstrous Idol if the dead e'er spake,
Whose monstrous riches threatened. So the shaft
Upon his monstrous urn, the farewell moan
Man to curse man, (thought monstrous and appalling) . . .

Monstrous—continued.

By monstrous theories of alien growth,
Rise up, thou monstrous ant-hill on the plain.
Monstrous in colour, motion, shape, sight, sound!

Nature's rebellion against monstrous law;
And false as monstrous I Can the mother thrive.
Strange, then, nor less than monstrous, might be deemed Monstrously. Tho' miserably, off monstrously, abused

Mont. Unveiled the summit of Mont Blanc, and grieved

And from Mont Martre southward to the Dome
Monte. Of Monte Rosa—there on frailer stone
Days passed—and Monte Calvo would not clear
Month. A month, sweet Little-ones, is past
Sing at thy Mother's breast. Month followed month,

From month to month, life passing not away:
From month to month trembling and unassured,
Month falls on month with heavier weight;
From week to week, from month to month, we lived

To quit my pleasure, and, from month to month,
Month after month. Obscurely did I live,
Divided from me by one little month.
Through a whole month of calm and glassy days

And fed him there, alive, month after month,
When the fresh eagle, in the month of May,
Which told it was the pleasant month of June;
What lamentable change, a year—a month—

Monthling. Frail, feeble, Monthling!—by that name, methinks,
Monthly. Is hidden, buried in its monthly grave;
And from example of thy monthly range

The Moon re-entering her monthly round,
Twelve times her monthly round,
When thou wert hidden in thy monthly grave;
For what reward!—The moon her monthly round

Months. Chancing to pass this way some six months gone,
Comes to this church-yard once in eighteen months;
Leonard, the elder by just eighteen months,
Three months with one, and six months with another;

For two months now in vain we shall be sought;
Two burning months let summer overleap,
Fresh sprigs of green box-wood, not six months before,

So, many months passed on: and once again
" They say, full six months after this
To vanish—fleet as days and months and years,
Uncounted months are gone,

Months perish with their moons; year treads on year;
Ib painful struggles. Months each other chase,
But many months,
—Hours, Days, and Months, have borne them in the sight

Few months of life has he in store
A natural meal—days, months, from Nature's hand;
Months passed in love that failed not to fulfil,
Months passed on, and no Sir Eustace!
Months and years went smilingly;
That gave them birth!—months passed, and still this hand,

Six months to six years added he remained
Long months of peace (if such hold word accord
Long months of ease and undisturbed delight
The months passed on, remissly, not given up
Eight months I rolled pleasantly away; the ninth
Than pathless wastes. Once, when those summer months

To make this book our own. Through several months,
A few short months before. I turned my face
Through months, through years, long after the last beat

That he had disappeared—not two months gone.
A course of days composing happy months,
Of his day's work. "Three dark mid-winter months
Two months unwearied of severest storm,
Through these two months of unrelenting storm,
And months, and let me add the long year through,

Months. In five months' time, should he be seen,
And, after ten months' melancholy,
This Dog, had been through three months' space
Of golden cities ten months' journey deep
A sportive infant, who, for six months' space,
"Through four months' space the Infant drew its food

Montrose. And, like Montrose, make Loyalty your pride—
Monument. He died,—this seat his only monument.

His death will be a monument for ages.
Raise on that dreary Waste a monument
Is neither epitaph nor monument,
Another monument shall here be raised;
Wrinkled Egyptian monument;
Like a Form sculptured on a monument
Your Country rears this sacred Monument!
What offering, what transcendent monument!

Monument—continued.

Pleased could my verse, a speaking monument,
Thou monument of peaceful happiness!
Will gladly stand a monument of thee.
A lasting monument of words

Uphold a Monument as fair
That yet survive, a shattered monument
Some monument behind me which pure hearts
The Monument, and that Chamber of the Tower
Thy monument of glory will be raised;
A token (may it prove a monument!)
To her, a monument of faithful love
As their own private monument: for this
All buried with me without monument

Monumental. His church with monumental wreck bestrown;

The monumental pomp of age
By plate of monumental brass
That monumental grace
Here let a monumental Stone

Of state, equipped in monumental trim;
The monumental letters were inscribed
The monumental hillocks, and the pomp
From monumental hints; and thou, O Friend!
To monumental pillars; and, from these
That leans upon a monumental urn
And now that monumental stone preserves
Intent upon a monumental stone,

Monuments. These monuments shall all be overgrown.

And monuments that soon must disappear:
Feelingly told by living monuments—
With monuments decayed or overthrown,
Of things gone by, her meagre monuments
Nor these, nor monuments of eldest name,
For other monuments than those of Earth;
And Christian monuments, that now must burn
Open your gates, ye Monuments of love
Are monuments of his unfinished task.

Where'er I roamed, were speaking monuments.
Of evidence from monuments, erect,
Religious, 'mid those frequent monuments
And marble monuments were here displayed
Their monuments and their memory. The vast

Mood. A mind that, in a calm angelic mood
His home approaching, but in such a mood
I, too, infected by their mood,
In careless mood he looked at me,

Bring back a humbler mood!
Of the dry wreck. And, in our vacant mood,
Poets, vain men in their mood!
Though wrought in Vulcan's happiest mood,
While Benjamin in earnest mood

So forth in dauntless mood they fare,
In that sweet mood when pleasure loves to pay
In vacant or in pensive mood,
As if life's business were a summer mood;
Of aspect more sublime; that blessed mood,
Is lightened:—that serene and blessed mood,
Spoke of heroic arts in graver mood,

Ere shaken by that mood of stern disdain
And let some mood of thine in firm array
All worlds, all natures, mood and measure keep
But quietly Peter's mood is changed,

In quiet uncomplaining mood,
It suited Peter's present mood,
Her rowed mood, and softliest reprehend;
Of higher mood, which now I meditate;—
Those words were uttered as in pensive mood

Who trembles now at thy capricious mood?
Listening, and listening long, in rapturous mood,
Or in his nobly-pensive mood,
An outlaw of as daring mood;
When disenchanting from the mood
And an unthinking grief! The tenderest mood

Roused though it be full often to a mood
To stillet mood of softest skies,
By the joint pressure of his musing mood
And thus in joyous mood they lie
Or melancholy's sickly mood,

Harsh thoughts with her high mood agree—
And spake in firm and earnest mood.
Walked quick or slowly, every mood
Deafening the region in his irreful mood,
And the Laod's humblest comforts. Now her mood
Of Ocean roused into his fiercest mood,
To fiercer mood the frenzy-stricken brain,

That verse of mine, what'er its varying mood,
In that sweet mood when pleas'ant thoughts
Blank ocean and mere sky, support that mood
There let me see thee sink into a mood

oft snapping at revenge in sullen mood,
Charged with those lays, and others of like mood,
To speak of Love's true Servants in this mood;
The kindly mood in hearts which lapse of years,
No mood, which season takes away, or brings:
In more than happy mood
And serious mood; but after I had seen

 "Here Man more purely lives, less oft doth fall,
 Not more attractive to the dazzled sight
 A thousand times more exquisitely sweet,
 One duty more, last stage of this ascent,
 Of nicely-calculated less or more ;
 What boots the gain if Nature should lose more?
 There's more of wisdom in it. . .
 May teach you more of man, . . .
 One moment now may give us more . . .
 For still, the more he works, the more . . .
 But thee I now would serve more strictly, if I may.
 My hopes no more must change their name,
 Of more than mortal recompense ?
 Words that can soothe, more than they agitate ;
 With life's best sinews more and more unknit.
 More could my pen report of grave or gay . . .
 O may he never more be warm ! " . . .
 Out of a farewell yearning—favoured more . . .
 The day is more, and longer every night . . .
 And you guess that the more than his body must stir.
 More of soul in his face than of words on his tongue ; . . .
 That shrinks, like many more, from cold and rain ;
 So once it would have been,—'tis so no more ;
 Indifference is no more ; . . .
 The things which I have seen I now can see no
 more.
 No more shall grief of mine the season wrong ;
 Even more than when I tripped lightly as they:
 Swell more gigantic on the steadfast sight ;
 Weak and more weak the issuing current eyes
 But, ah ! th' unwilling mind may more than trace
 More than all the world beside,
 Sometimes, more sternly moved, I would relate
 Of ampler or more varied argument, . . .
 That more than one of you will think with me
 More than we wished we knew the blessing thee . . .
 More deeply read in thy own thoughts ; to thee . . .
 Is more poetic as resembling more . . .
 A more than Roman confidence, a faith . . .
 Let others that know more speak as they know.
 Passions more fervent, making me less prompt
 Stiff, lank, and upright ; a more meagre man
 "Is something of more worth ;" and at the word
 That hath more power than all the elements.
 The mountains more by blackness visible . . .
 Or more mechanic artist represent . . .
 Fulfilling (could enchantment have done more?)
 Far more of an imaginative form . . .
 More orient in the western cloud, that drew
 Strives, from that height, with one and yet one more
 Retaineth more of ancient homeliness,
 To the whole city, "sleep no more." The trance
 Can aught be more ignoble than the man . . .
 More subtle and less easily explained,
 More grand, more fair, more exquisitely framed
 Once more in Man an object of delight,
 Grandeur as much, and loveliness far more.
 Age after age, till Time shall be no more.
 "So prayed, more gaining than he asked, the Bard—
 I mix more lowly matter ; with the thing
 More wise desires, and simpler manners;—nurse
 Her heart was still more sad. And by yon gate,
 More might have followed—but my honoured
 Friend . . .
 So, with more ardour than an unripe girl . . .
 May yet become more little ; waging thus
 Not with more transport did Columbus greet . . .
 More holy in the sight of God or Man ;
 Unfolded still the more, more visible,
 "Alas ! what differs more than man from man !
 More grateful still : while wrong and shame shall last,
 Grateful is Sleep, more grateful still to be . . .
 More than one thought of death, and his last hour.
 More grateful, more harmonious than the breath,
 The more I see the more delight my mind
 To rouse me, and a hundred warblers more ;
 What need of more ? that we shall neither droop,
 More than a wise man ought to be. I wish,
 Oft help to make bold fancy's flight more bold ;
 And not a frugal plan without more words,
 Not virtuous Seneca on Nero more.

Morion. Which a brown morion half-concealed,
Morn. See Birth-morn, May-morn.

Or, from the neighbouring water, hear at morn
Her dawn, far lovelier than the moon's own morn,
"This morn: with gold the verdant mountain glows;
Fresh gales and dews of life's delicious morn,
And flowers for posies, oft on Sunday morn,
At morn my sick heart hunger scarcely stung,
One morn we strolled on our dry walk,
Thou art a dew-drop, which the morn brings forth,
Through the gates of night and morn;
While he the issue waits, at early morn
Was restless morn and night, and all day long
The happy idleness of that sweet morn,
Waking at morn he murmured not;
From morn to evening dews.
Had loved her, night and morn:
"With sacrifice before the rising morn
Reveal thyself, like pensive Morn
From morn to eve, with hallowed rest.
When Peter on some April morn,
With each recurrence of this glorious morn
Fresh as the star that crowns the brow of morn;

As in life's morn: permitted to behold,
Morn into noon did pass, noon into eve,
(The balance trembling between night and morn,
To watch while Morn first crowns thee with her rays,
Upon a sun-bright morn of May,
When, far and wide, swift as the beams of morn
He comes like Phœbus through the gates of morn
Filling from morn to night the heroic scene
The dews of morn, or April's tender shower?
When morn returns, beneath the clear blue sky,

Familiar, as the Morn with pearly dews?
The Morn, that now, along the silver MEUSE,
Grant to the morn of life its natural blessedness!
In his ancestral palace, where, from morn
We Men, who in our morn of youth defied
Brisk Youth appeared, the Morn of Youth,
Among the novelties of morn,
At morn, and eve, and midnight's silent hour,
All sacred things are covered: cheerful morn,
Springs from the ground the morn to gratulate;
Man is as grass that springeth up at morn,
And the fresh air of incense-breathing morn
Shall hymns of praise resound at morn and even;
From roseate hues, far kenne'd at morn and eve,
Where'er it wandered in the morn
Appeared the Crag of Ailsa, ne'er did morn
Speak, Giant-mother! tell it to the Morn
Were in the sky, that April morn,
The voice of praise at early morn,
We need not toil from morn to night;
And if, on this thy natal morn,
Just half protruded to the light of morn,

That cheek—a kindling of the morn,
And Who, from out the regions of the morn,
Night or day, at even or morn;
Refreshed, the Wanderer rose at morn,
At morn, at noon, and under moonlight skies
Deceitfully goes forth the Morn;
'Mid the dews, in the sunshine of morn,—mid the joy

Safe from your door ye hear at breezy morn,
 Wooing her varying charms from eve to morn.
 While fill each pause the ringing woods of morn.
 Craz'd by the strength of hope at morn he eyes
 With earlier smile the ray of morn to view
 Soft gales and dews of life's delicious morn,
 At early morn the careful housewife, led
 At morn, our various journey, sad and slow.
 Let this bright morn and Sandys the song inspire.
 Smiled like the morn, and vanish'd into air.
 More heavenly bright than when it leads the morn,
 The self-congratulation, and, from morn
 Above all joys, that seemed another morn
 In the wild turf: the lingering dews of morn
 Nor day nor night, evening or morn, was free
 On my imagination since the morn
 In peace, from morn to night, from year to year.
 Pace to and fro, from morn till eventide,
 For morn and evening service, with her pail,
 "At morn or eve, in your retired domain,
 This baneful diligence:—at early morn
 At morn and evening from that naked perch,
 And solemn chase—from morn to sultry noon
 Had also witnessed, in his morn of life,
 Lo! in such neighbourhood, from morn to eve,
 Whom Morn awakens, among dews and flowers
 They know if I be silent, morn or even:
 Heard now and then from morn till latest eve,

Morning. See Market-morning, May-morning.

The sun at morning, and the stars at night,
Where falls the purple morning far and wide
For whom at morning tolled the funeral bell;
The jolting road and morning air severe.
Have hailed the morning sun. But cheerily,
Father—

This morning, when I spoke of weariness,
The morning came, and still he was unheard of:
Gone like a morning dream, or like a pile
Thou, like the morning, in thy saffron coat,
Of the rejoicing morning were their own?
One morning (raw it was and wet—
Not a soul in the village this morning will stay;
Until the babe was born. When morning came,
And when they rose at morning she could see
It was an April morning: fresh and clear
One summer morning we had walked abroad
And silent morning, I sat down, and there,
One calm September morning, ere the mist
—So fared we that bright morning: from the fields,

Fresh-smitten by the morning ray,
Joyous as morning,
They from morning to even take whatever is given;

Of this morning bright and fair,
Vainly Morning spreads the lure
The Morn, who scents the morning air,
Which soon the morning shall enfold,
And the morning light in grace
And what the morning brought to light,
The landscape of a summer's morning,
In the silence of morning the song of the Bird.
The morning doth return.
To me that morning did it happen so:
"This morning gives us promise of a glorious day."
The morning that must wed them both;
A rout this morning left Sir Walter's Hall,
He heard the birds their morning carols sing;
To which, on some unruddied morning, clings
Like morning mist: and, where it lay,
Or blooming, thicket moist with morning dews;
How far off yet a glimpse of morning light,
We'll sport amid the boreal morning;
Soul-soothing Art! whom Morning, Noon-tide,
Even,

When I step forth to hail the morning light;
The beauty of the morning; silent, bare,
And to that hrow life's morning wreath restore;
By morning shed around a flower half-born;
That mounts not toward the radiant morning sky,
Now peaceful as the morning,
The morning sun may shine
'Mid the deep quiet of this morning hour,
Of morning dew upon the untrodden meads,
That screen the morning dew.
Are sweet as morning fragrance shed
Her morning splendours vanish, and their place
Mingling with thy soft breath! That morning too,
All hail, ye mountains! hail, thou morning light!
Pure as the morning, fretful, hoisterous, keen,
That Life is but a tale of morning grass
Her sabbath morning, foul or fair.
When Emily by morning light
At morning to the dewy field,
Of a new morning, to the nature
For ever hallowed he this morning fair,
(O great Precursor, genuine morning Star)
Of light, which tells that Morning is awake.
That in the morning whitened hill and plain
As a fresh morning for new harmony;
Mounting while earth her morning incense breathes,
One morning thus, by Estwaite lake,
Now that our morning meal is done,
Make haste, your morning task resign;
Uprose the morning sun;
And on that morning, through the grass,
With points of morning dew.
On his morning rounds the Master
Come forth; and, while the morning air is yet
When the lone shepherd sees the morning spread
Moving along a tract of morning shade,

Entering, we find the morning meal prepared:
Filled with delight three summer morning hours.

Softly as morning vapours glide
Whence the tall window drinks the morning rays:
At night, at morning, and at noon,
And the fifth morning gave him sight
Hopes what are they?—Beads of morning
For which, by earliest gleams of morning light,
Next morning Troilus began to clear
If you pass by at morning, you'll meet with him
there.
The sun at morning, and the stars at night,
When Life rear'd laughing up her morning sun;
The ray the cot of morning trav'ling night,
Those turrets tipp'd by hope with morning gold,

Mortality—continued.

- Whatever shadings of mortality,
The trepidations of mortality,
Fraught with the relics of mortality,
Mortality's. Of sad mortality's earth-sullyng wing,
Mortality's last exercise and proof
Mortals. Do we poor mortals cater for ourselves !
From the unpertending ground we mortals tread ;—
Marks, not mindless of frail mortals,
Which abject mortals vainly court !
Where Mortals call thee Eurydice
How soaring Mortals glide between Mere Mortals, bodied forth in vision still,
Mortals, rejoice ! the very Angels quit
That he is yet where mortals dwell
Where ruthless mortals wage incessant wars
Of mortals, hurrying like a sudden shower
To mortals, joy is turned to sorrow ;
Was it by mortals sculptured ?—weary slaves
That mortals do or suffer
If not, O Mortals, better cease to live !
To be sustained ; and Mortals bowed
Of mortals (if such fables without blame Mortar. And there they built up, without mortar or lime,
Mortgages. Interest, and mortgages ; at last he sank,
Mortification. Mortification with the shirt of hair,
Mortified. Of mortified presumption, I adhered Mortifies. Through all that humbles flesh and mortifies
?
Mortify. Earth to despise, and flesh to mortify ;
Morto. Of Lago Morto, dreary sight and name,
Morven. Summoned from streamy Morven—each
and all
Morven's. Appears, on Morven's lonely shore,
Mosaic. Of art mosaic, in a roofless floor,
Moscow. By Moscow self-devoted to a blaze
" From Moscow to the Wilderness
And universal Moscow shared Moscow's. Through Moscow's gates, with gold un-barred,
Of Moscow's glittering spires
Mosedale's. The Boy must part from Mosedale's groves,
Moses. Like Moses hold our hands erect, till ye Caught from the hand of Moses as it passed
Moses, and he who penned, the other day,
Moses's. O bush unburnt ! burning in Moses's sight !
Mosgiel. " Is Mosgiel Farm ; and that's the very field
Mosques. And mosques, and spires, and abbey-windows,
The mosques and spires change countenance,
Moss. Inverted shrubs, and moss of gloomy green,
By lichens grey, and scanty moss, o'ergrown ;
That turns its goat's-beard flakes of pea-green moss
Or lay upon the moss by brook or tree,
Repeats a moan o'er moss and stone,
Couched on a casual bed of moss and leaves,
That, fleeced with moss, under the shady trees,
And hung with heavy tufts of moss,
A beauteous heap, a hill of moss,
This heap of earth o'ergrown with moss,
This pond, and beauteous hill of moss,
And what the hill of moss to her ?
Beneath that hill of moss so fair,
" I've heard, the moss is spotted red
But instantly the hill of moss
Beneath that hill of moss so fair
With heavy tufts of moss that strive
Reclining on this moss grown bar,
Are seldom free to touch the moss that grows
The desolate Slumberer with moss and with leaves.
There to alight upon crisp moss and range,
The Place unfolds, from pavement skinned with moss,
Of brilliant moss, instinct with freshness rare ;
Wafted o'er sullen moss and craggy mound—
O'er heaps of slain ;—from Cambrian wood and moss
Shall woefully embrace it ; and green moss
Or, Pilgrim-like, on forest moss reclined,
From the peat-yielding Moss on Gowdar's head
Spangling a cushion green like moss ;
Inverted shrubs, and moss of darkest green,
To him most pleasant who on soft cool moss
Green with the moss of years, and subject only
A book, that, in the midst of stones and moss
And tufts of mountain moss. Mechanic tools
Tough moss, and long-enduring mountain-plants,
By the grey moss, but not a single stone
Moss-built. In clearer light the moss-built cell Moss-clad. When o'er those interwoven roots, moss-clad,
And choice of moss-clad stones, whereon we couch'd
Moss-covered. To slumber, reclined on the moss-covered floor,
To slumber, reclined on the moss-covered floor !"
Mosses. Up from the earth these mosses creep,

Mosses—continued.

- Reclined on flowers and mosses ?
A concave free from shrubs and mosses grey ;
What slopes are planted, or what mosses drained :
Moss-grown. See Grown, Moss, Whose moss-grown root might serve for couch or seat,
Green moss-grown tower ; or hoary tent ;
Beside their moss-grown hut of clay,
And moss-grown alleys, circumscribing shades,
And one old moss-grown wall— a cool recess,
And pleasant awning. On the moss-grown wall
Moss-lined. This moss-lined shed, green, soft, and dry,
Green-house, shell-grot, and moss-lined hermitage.
Mossy. Green unmolested light upon their mossy bed,
That piled these stones and with the mossy sod
" Mid the deep holds of Solway's mossy waste,
Girt round with a bare ring of mossy wall,
Of some old cave, or mossy nook,
A violet by a mossy stone
Within the mossy garden wall
Or Nature's DARLING of this mossy shed ?
For She who planned the mossy lodge,
With altars undisturbed of mossy stone,
Of hazels, and the green and mossy bower,
And mossy network too is there,
That mossy slope, o'er which the woodbine throws
Sleeping alone within a mossy cave,
A light around his mossy bed ;
Now rich with mossy ornament ?
—Why tell of mossy rock, or tree,
Whose nursing current hrawls o'er mossy stones,
Beside a mossy seat ;
Might see it, from the mossy shore
Of mossy turf defended from the sun,
And mossy seats, detained us side by side,
That he, who now upon the mossy wall
Danced in the breeze, chequering its mossy roof
Mast. (Partial list.)
Though even to die near one she most had loved
And he must lead me back. You are most lucky ;
Justice had been most cruelly defrauded
And most despise the men who best can teach us :
With brutal laughter and most foul allusion,
Than that most strange incontinence in crime
They please Him best who labour most to do in peace His will :
A most strange working did I see ;
And Betty's most especial charge,
Even he, of cattle the most mild,
Who, loving most, should wiseliest love, their only
strife,
Where earth resembles most his own domain !
Most pleased when most uneasy ;
Most dainty, most admired,
Then most of all, then far the most,
The most familiar bane of life
In neighbourhood with One to me most dear,
Still last to come where thou art wanted most !
Toussaint, the most unhappy man of men !
Of Providence. But now did the Most High
Is feared as what may most deceive ?
To a chilled age, most pitiahy shut out
And enter, with prompt aid from the Most High,
Most fair, most welcome, when they drank the dew
The most profound repose his cell can give
Of the Most High. Again do they invoke
Most sweet it is with unlighted eyes
The Godhead's most benignant grace ;
And the most ancient heavens, through Thee, are fresh and strong
Up to the sovereign seat of the Most High ;
But most on some peculiar nook
Alas ! with most, who weigh futurity
To be most dreaded ? Lawgivers, beware,
But most the Bard is true to unborn right,
But most his might he sheds on the eye of May
At length, what to most is a season of sorrow,
To a good Man of most dear memory
From the most gentle creature nursed in fields
Otherwise wrought the will of the Most High ;
Favourite of all, in this the most of all,
Clustered like stars some few, but single most,
In most, abated or suppressed ; in some,
With general tendency, but, for the most,
And yet the hooks which then I valued most
Oh, most beloved Friend ! a glorious time,
Of most to move in, but that first I looked
The meaneast thrives the most ; where dignity,
The most despotic of our senses, gained
Most active when they are most eloquent,
And elevated most when most admired
And Reason in her most exalted mood
In everything that stood most prominent,
Surpassing the most fair ideal Forms
The book that most had tempted his desires
When wanted most ; a confidence impaired
In all ; in most with superadded foes,
And his most perfect image in the world

Most—continued.

And into most of these secluded vales . . .
In times when most existence with herself . . .
Flow with most quiet and most silent death . . .
We rose together : all were pleased ; but most . . .
The most assured seat of [poesy ?] . . .
But most of all the Birds that haunt the flood . . .
Not even the nearest to me and most dear . . .

Mostly. "And mostly profitless. And, sooth to say,
Moth. "Rich robes are fretted by the moth ;
The busy dor-hawk chases the white moth
Thanks to the moth that spared it for our eyes ;
Mother. See Foster-mother, Giant-mother, Lady-mother, Virgin-mother.

Press the sad kiss, fond mother ! vainly fears . . .
Close by my mother in their native bowers : . . .
Thy Mother too—scarce had I gained the door, . . .
Where is she—holla ! You are Idonea's Mother ?— . . .
And most forlorn, should I bribe a Mother, pressed . . .
Since your dear Mother went away,— . . .
And shouted, "Mother, come ! me !" . . .
Your tender mother cannot hear : . . .
And all "since Mother went away !" . . .
Your mother through the snow." . . .
—When in the snow the mother spied . . .
Dwell near them with my mother." . . .
Have left the mother and the nest ; . . .
And thy mother from thy side for evermore was . . .
gone.
" My Mother," said the Boy, " was born near to a . . .
bless'd Tree,
" Hither the Afflicted come, as thou hast heard thy . . .
Mother say, . . .
As the dying mother witnessed . . .

Was half a mother to them.—If you weep, Sir, . . .
A woman who was not thy mother, . . .
A little lamb, and then its mother ! . . .
Heard by his mother unawares ! . . .
Years to a mother bring distress ; . . .
Kind mother have I been, as kind . . .
The Mother, in her turns of anguish, worse . . .
Amusement, where the Mother does not miss . . .
One moment let me be thy mother ! . . .
An infant thou, a mother I ! . . .
She with her mother crossed the sea ; . . .
The babe and mother near me dwell : . . .
The promise of a mother. To conceal . . .
And while the Mother, at the door, . . .
Oh ! what a wretched Mother I ! . . .
The Mother mourned, nor ceased her tears to flow, . . .
The Mother hails in her descending Son . . .
You love your father and your mother, . . .
For I thy own dear mother am : . . .
All-children of one mother : . . .
With thankfulness the Mother pressed ; . . .
Not to speak of babe and mother ; . . .
That Mother, whose spirit in fetters is bound, . . .
Your Mother has had alms of mine." . . .
It was your Mother, as I say ! . . .
Hunt the Mother and the Child, . . .
Blissful Mary, Mother mild, . . .
Maid and Mother undefled, . . .
Save a Mother and her Child ! . . .
The Mother—her thou must have seen, . . .
And left her mother at sixteen, . . .
" My mother ! oh my mother ! . . .
Heard plainly by the wretched Mother— . . .
And Peter hears the Mother sigh, . . .
The Mother o'er the threshold flies, . . .
Dear mother of fresh thoughts and joyous health ! . . .
How sweet it is, when mother Fancy rocks . . .
Smile on his Mother now with bolder cheer, . . .
His Mother, too, no doubt, above . . .
His Mother often thought, and said, . . .
His Mother, she who loved him best, . . .
But most of all, his Mother dear, . . .
The Mother then mourns, as she needs must mourn ; . . .
O Silence ! thou wert mother of a shout . . .
Meek Virgin Mother, more benign . . .
And hence, O Virgin Mother mild ! . . .
And, when thy Mother weeps for Thee, . . .
Lost Youth ! a solitary Mother ; . . .
Revered her Mother, sage Mnemosyne, . . .
Mother of Heroes, from thy death-like sleep ! . . .
For the distracted Mother to assuage . . .
Sacred Religion ! " mother of form and fear," . . .
Mother of Love ! (that name best suits thee here) . . .
Mother of Love ! for this deep vale, protect . . .
For maid and mother, when despair . . .
Again the Mother whispered low, . . .
A fondly-anxious Mother strove . . .
Mother ! whose virgin bosom was uncrost . . .
Do Thou, in truth a second Mother, strive . . .
Beloved Mother ! Thou whose happy hand . . .
In and for whom the pious Mother felt . . .
And such vibration through the Mother went . . .
To courses fit to make a mother rue . . .
Feel with the Mother, think the severed Wife . . .
" You look round on your Mother Earth, . . .
But, O Mother ! by the close . . .

Mother—continued.

And sweet Mother ! under warrant . . .
Mother ! blest be thy calm ease ; . . .
His Mother leaves him free to taste . . .
Dear Mother ! if thou must thy steps retrace, . . .
The Mother Church in yon sequestered vale, . . .
To cast their shadows on our mother Earth . . .
" O Mother, Maid ! O Maid and Mother free ! . . .
Of Jesu's Mother, as he had been told, . . .
Our blissful Lady, Jesu's Mother dear, . . .
Of Jesu's Mother," said this Innocent ; . . .
On Jesu's Mother fixed was his intent. . . .
The sweetness of Christ's Mother pierced so . . .
And ever on Christ's Mother meek and kind . . .
And eke His Mother, honour of Mankind ; . . .
His Mother swooning by the body lay : . . .
And, for the worship of His Mother dear, . . .
" This well of mercy, Jesu's Mother sweet, . . .
Weeping and praising Jesu's Mother dear ; . . .
On us, for reverence of His Mother Mary ! " . . .
O rest, thou doleful Mother of Mankind ! " . . .
Upon its mother) may be both alike . . .
His Acidalia mother, by degrees . . .
Queen, Wife and Mother ! may All-judging Heaven . . .
While she as deuteous as the mother dove . . .
My honoured Mother, she who was the heart . . .
Mother and child !—These feelings, in themselves . . .
The mother ; but, upon her cheeks diffused, . . .
Contending after showers. The mother now, . . .
Some vagrant mother, whose arch little ones, . . .
The mother from the cradle of her babe, . . .
And the lamb's mother, and their tender ways . . .
Urged by his Mother, he essayed to teach . . .
Had from its mother caught the trick of grief, . . .
The Mother followed :—miserably bare . . .
Into his mother earth without such pomp . . .
The Mother now remained ; as if in her, . . .
The Wife and Mother pitifully fixing . . .
And to the winds and mother elements, . . .
Of a young fowl beneath one mother hatched, . . .
The Mother oft was seen to stand, or kneel . . .
My Infant ! and for that good Mother dear, . . .
The Child whom Ellen and her Mother loved . . .
The Mother, oft as she was sent abroad, . . .
And love, benignant mother of the vale, . . .
" Here rests a Mother. But from her I turn . . .
—Thrice happy, then, the Mother may be deemed, . . .
The warm lap of his mother earth : and so, . . .
Mother and little children, boys and girls, . . .
The Mother left alone,—no helping hand . . .
And false as monstrous ! Can the mother thrive . . .
From earth, the common mother of us all . . .
Have a Mother, once a Statue, . . .
She being herself a Mother, happy Beast . . .
Thy mother to the fold must go

Mother-bird. Rest, Mother-bird ! and when thy young
Moved we as plunderers where the mother-bird Mother-church. Grave doctors strenuous for the mother-church, . . .

Mother-ewe. The common growth of mother-earth
Mother-ewe. Beneath my shade the mother-ewe
Motherless. I'm fatherless and motherless.
And thither took with him his motherless Babe, . . .

Motherly. Thoughts motherly, and meek as womanhood. . . .
From my old Dame, so kind and motherly, . . .
Of motherly humanity, outspread . . .
Domestic, and in spirit motherly . . .

Mother-maid. The Mother-maid, whose countenance
bright . . .

Mother's. See Foster-mother's.
She, in a mother's care, her hearty's pride . . .
Fair Swan ! by all a mother's joys caressed, . . .
" Twelve steps or more from my mother's door, . . .
And, while with all a mother's love . . .
And placed him at his mother's side ; . . .
That " thy mother's heart which is working so in . . .
thee ?
And the bleating mother's Young-one . . .
Mother's care no more her guide, . . .

An orphan could not find his mother's grave :
Are aught of what makes up a mother's heart, . . .
Oh ! do not dread thy mother's door : . . .
Daily before the Mother's watchful eye . . .
Shrunk from his Mother's presence, shunned with . . .
fear
Is gone, and twilight to the Mother's wish . . .
And sure a mother's heart is mine : . . .
Thy own dear mother's far away, . . .
Contentment, hope, and mother's glee, . . .
Upon the Mother's bosom ; resting thus . . .
The sentence, by her mother's lip pronounced, . . .
No answer, only took the mother's hand . . .
Sing at thy Mother's breast. Month followed . . .
month, . . .
Thou art thy mother's only joy ; . . .
Who might have wandered with thee.—Mother's . . .
love
Nor less than mother's love in other breasts, . . .

Ecc. Sonn. 2. 28. 3
 9 Ev. Wh. 372

Motion. The boat's first motion—made with dashing oar ; . . .
 Thro' worlds where Life, and Voice, and Motion sleep ; . . .
 He fell, and without sense or motion lay ; . . .
 Which with the motion of a virtuous act . . .
 The motion of a muscle—this way or that—
 The breeze-like motion and the self-born carol ; . . .
 Smiles, that with motion of their own . . .
 Their starts of motion and their fits of rest,
 With a leisurely motion the door of his hut.
 From earth to heaven with motion fleet
 Slumbers without sense of motion, . . .
 No motion has she now, no force ; . . .
 With the slow motion of a summer's cloud,
 And even the motion of our human blood
 A motion and a spirit, that impels
 With grace of motion that might scarcely seem
 And every motion of his starry train
 Respond with sympathetic motion ; . . .
 Only the Ass, with motion dull, . . .
 —Once more the Ass, with motion dull, . . .
 He sees a motion—hears a groan ; . . .
 And doth with his eternal motion make
 Where even the motion of an Angel's wing
 Nor could I let one thought—one motion—slip
 He felt the motion—took his seat ; . . .
 That with a motion overthrow
 With such invisible motion speed thy flight,
 In motion rapid as the lightning's gleam ; . . .
 Of nun-like females, with soft motion, glide ! . . .
 Impetuous motion to the Stars above her,
 While they the Church engird with motion slow,
 The form and motion of a stream to take ; . . .
 To that mild breeze with motion and with voice
 Of motion, whether in the embrace
 And griefs whose aery motion comes not near
 To a lingering motion hound, . . .
 With the fleet motion of a dove ; . . .

Motion—continued.

Crimes that might stop the motion of the sun) . . . 439
 Or down the nave to pace in motion slow ; . . . 457
 A tall-tale motion ! soon will it be laid, . . . 454
 But the least motion which they made, . . . 482
 To regulate the motion of our dreams . . . 508
 Of motion they renounce, and with the head . . . 508
 And of all visible motion destitute, . . . 523

Motionless. Stand motionless, to a wulfenice hound : . . .
 How motionless !—not frozen seas . . .
 More motionless ! and then . . .
 The green hough motionless and dead : . . .
 Where all things else are still and motionless.
 Motionless as a cloud the old Man stood,
 Ascending from behind the motionless brow
 Breathless and motionless, the mind . . .
 Of mountains, silent, dreary, motionless : . . .
 I listened, motionless and still ; . . .
 You foaming flood seems motionless as ice ; . . .
 And motionless ; and, to the gazer's eye,
 And sultry air, depending motionless. . . .

Both silent and both motionless alike ; . . .
 A motionless array of mighty waves ; . . .

Motions. Tracking the motions of the fitful gale.
 All motions, sounds, and voices, far and nigh,
 Would watch my motions with suspicious stare,
 From the motions that are made,
 The feeble motions of thy life, and cheers . . .
 And sullen motions long and slow,
 Her household motions light and free, . . .
 Even in the motions of the Storm . . .
 But your smooth motions suit a peaceful aim ;
 On those revolving motions did await Motions of thought which elevate the will . . .
 He tracks her motions, quick or slow . . .
 Hence motions, even amid the vulgar throng,
 Beauty, and life, and motions as of joy ; . . .
 With intermingling motions soft and still,
 O for those motions only that invite
 Motions and Means, on land and sea at war
 Its motions, too, are wild and shy ; . . .
 The motions that it graces—and forbear . . .
 Your motions, glittering Elves ! . . .
 Those hallowed and pure motions of the sense
 All finite motions overruling, lives . . .
 And wavering motions sent he knows not whence,
 Attends the motions of the viewless winds,
 And sometimes rustling motions nigh at hand,
 Motions not treacherous or profane, else why
 Had watched all gentle motions, and to these
 Ye motions of delight, that haunt the sides
 Of music swayed their motions, and the waste
 Motions of moonlight, all come thither—touch,
 And all the tender motions of the soul, . . .
 For consciousness the motions of thy will ; . . .
 The form, port, motions, of this Cottage-girl
 So joyful in its motions, is become . . .
 As inward motions of the wandering thought . . .
 And not feel motions there ? He thought of clouds
 With motions of true dignity and grace ? . . .
 They try all frolic motions ; flutter, plunge,
 Motions of savage instinct, my delight
 Thy motions, intricate and manifold, . . .

Mountains—continued.

- Mid the green mountains many a thoughtless song
Ran mountains high before the howling blast,
Burst on the mountains with hell-raising force.
Left among her native mountains
- Yes, the wild Girl of the mountains
- Among the mountains, and he in his heart
Saw mountains; saw the forms of sheep that grazed
Who has been born and dies among the mountains.
Among the distant mountains, flower and weed,
Among thy mountains did I feel
Among the vine-clad mountains of Auvergne,
The pastoral mountains front you, face to face.
The mountains have all opened out themselves,
Up to the mountains: he had been alone
And on the mountains; else I think that thou
Of ancient mountains, or my ear was touched
Among the mountains, through the midnight watch
Yet they find among the mountains
Lambs, that through the mountains went
The mountains against heaven's grave weight
Had seen him through the mountains go,
There's joy in the mountains;
"Till the foundations of the mountains fail
Our fields rejoice, our mountains ring,
Upon the mountains visitant;
I bounded o'er the mountains, by the sides
And mountains; and of all that we behold
From caves of India mountains hear!
Of the unfrodden lunar mountains;
Gigantic mountains rough with crags; beneath,
Leaving this Daughter of the mountains free,
Cheering the wakeful tent on Syrian mountains,
The shadowy forms of mountains bare,
Of mountains and of dreary moors,
Among the mountains far away;
Among the lonely mountains.—Live, ye trees!
Thus did the waters gleam, the mountains lower,
Of mountains, silent, dreary, motionless,
Clear tops of far-off mountains we descry,
Proud were ye, Mountains, when, in times of old,
Mountains, and Vales, and Floods, I call on you.
Whose mountains, torrents, lake, and woods, unite
And the pure mountains, and the gentle Tweed,
- But this we from the mountains learn,
One of the mountains; each a mighty Voice:
Sweet Nymph, O rightly of the mountains named!
Like his own lightning, over mountains high,
These venerable mountains now enclose
While the thrill of her fibres thro' the mountains was blown:
- And mountains from your view?
The mountains (as ye heard) rejoice
When universal sea the mountains overflowed.
Of mountains, through a deep ravine,
And ye that guard them, Mountains old!
All hail, ye mountains! hail, thou morning light!
As this we look on. Distant Mountains hear,
Of distant moon-lit mountains faintly shine,
Of Mountains varying momentarily their crests—
Must walk the sorrowing mountains, drest
The Relics of the sword flee to the mountains:
Off to the mountains, like a covering
Shall dissipate the seas and mountains hoary.
A sea-horn service through the mountains felt
Dazzling the mountains, but an overflow
Of its vague mountains and unreal sky!
Seems, 'mid inverted mountains, not unheard.
The aspiring Mountains and the winding Streams,
Among the mountains were we nursed, loved
Stream!
- Beneath stern mountains many a soft vale lies,
To the bare trees, and mountains bare,
The mountains looking on
Upon the mountains. Look at her, whose'er
Ancient castle, woods, and mountains
Among the mountains) and beneath this roof
An inmate of these mountains—'tis disturbed
And from the mountains, to thy rural grave
I hear the Echoes through the mountains throng,
The mountains, glowing hot, like coals of fire,
Or steal beneath loose mountains, half-deter'd,
A solemn sea! whose vales and mountains round
Forc'd from my native mountains bleak and bare;
Her bed, his mountains mad Ambition piles;
Of thy renown, from Cambrian mountains, fans
When he had left the mountains and received
Made all the mountains ring. But, ere nightfall,
To speak of you, ye mountains, and ye lakes
Ye mountains! thine, O Nature! Thou hast fed
And mountains, ranging like a fowl of the air,
The trees, the mountains shared it, and the brooks,
Mountains and clouds, reflected in the depth,
The solid mountains shone, bright as the clouds,
With mountains for its neighbours, and in view
Of distant mountains and their snowy tops,
The mountains more by blackness visible
Over still mountains, or appears in dreams;

Mountains—continued.

- And mountains over all, embracing all;
Moors, mountains, headlands, and ye hollow vales,
Ere long, the lonely mountains left, I moved,
Child of the mountains, among shepherds reared,
Traditionary round the mountains hung,
But in the mountains did he feel his faith.
Before us, mountains stern and desolate;
Some secret of the mountains, cavern, fall
Among the mountains; even as if the spot
Among the mountains; never one like this;
In thunder down the mountains; with all your might
On thinly-peopled mountains and wild heaths,
High in these mountains, that allured a hand
Upon the mountains gemmed with morning dew, Ranged through the mountains, slept upon the earth,
His fields, or mountains by the heath-cock ranged,
These mountains echoed to an unknown sound;
And mountains white with everlasting snow!
And distant mountains echoed with a sound
The Spirit of its mountains and its seas,
Each had his glowing mountains, each his sky,
And mountains bare, or clothed with ancient woods,
By rocks impassable and mountains huge.
Among the mountains, fells which might be drained,
Whether he loved the mountains, true it is
The fields and mountains, not alone for this
And mountains not less green, and flocks, and herds,
Sent from the mountains or the sheltered fields;
And treads the mountains which his fathers trod.
These mountains will rejoice with open joy
Some nursing of the mountains, which she leads
The mountains too are thine, some clouds there are,
Embowering mountains, and the dum: of Heaven
Mountain-shades. Or stops the solemn mountain-shades to view

Mountebanks. At Walkes and Fairs with wandering Mountebanks, Mounted. Till higher mounted, strives in vain to cheer A salient spire of energy ; I mounted
 From crime to crime he mounted, till at length
 Mounted aloft, is suffered not to use
 As high as we have mounted in delight
 Sir Walter he mounted him ; he was the third
 Which he had mounted on that glorious day
 And, as I mounted up the hill,
 Mounted through every intricate defile,
 Too timidly was mounted
 And high her blushes mounted
 Their spirit mounted, crying, " God us aid !"
 The Buzzard mounted from the rock
 Whose transient pleasure mounted to the head,
 Upon a dromedary, mounted high,
 Mounted—from province on to province swept,
 Which they had struggled for : up mounted now,
 I mounted, and we journeyed towards the hills :
 Mounted the roar of waters, torrents, streams
 'Twas summer, and the sun had mounted high :
 His genius mounted to the plains of heaven :
 The inglorious football mounted to the pitch
Mourning. In streaks diverging wide and mounting high ;
 These matins mourning towards her native sphere.
 Still mourning to a higher height ;
 Mourning from glorious deed to deed
 Fresh as a lark mounting at break of day,
 Mounting as if to reach the moon,
 The spectacle, is mounting high
 While clouds of incense mounting veiled the rood,
 Mourning while earth her morning incense breathes,
 Trances of thought and mountings of the mind
 Here to record that I was mourning now
 And mourning spirit, pitiably repaid,
 Who, mounting fearlessly the rocky heights,
Mounts. Mounts from the road, and spreads its moving shroud ;
 Which high and higher mounts with silver gleam :
 Mounts with a tune, that travels like a blast
 With that resolve he boldly mounts
 That mounts not toward the radiant morning sky,
 Mounts to the seat of grace within the mind :
 Mounts on rapt wing, and with a moment's flight
 Some lofty elm-tree, mounts the daring vine ;
 Mounts, in this fine illusion, toward the skies :
 The smoke, and mounts in silver wreaths.
 From Bethlehem, from the Mounts of Agony
 Of victory mounts high, and hood is quaffed.
 As the sun mounts, by sea-born breezes fanned ;
 Mounts to pellucid Hippocrene, but he
 Anon, in order mounts a gorgeous show
 Inconstant glancing, mounts like springing fire,
 Mounts thro' the nearer mist the chaunt of birds,
 My last and favourite aspiration, mounts
 Cloud-like it mounts, or touched with light divine
 For eastern monasteries, sunny mounts
 Mounts on the breeze the butterfly ; and soars,
 Mounts, as you see, in mazes serpentine,
 Through a strong net, and mounts upon the wind,
 It mounts to reach the State's parental ear ;
Mourn. I greet thee, Chartruse, while I mourn thy doom.
 Or mourn him dead. A man by men cast off,
 Faint I, nor mourn nor murmur ; other gifts
 Thy transports moderate ; and meekly mourn
 Mourning hills and groves of Attica I and mourn
 Mourn, and lament for him whose spirit dreads
 If still the reckless change we mourn,
 Rejoice, as through that power, it ceased to mourn.
 The Mother then mourns, as she needs must mourn ;
 Trophies that led the good and wise to mourn
 For them who do not mourn,
 "What boots," continued she, "to mourn ?"
 So beautiful is Clyde) forgot to mourn
 For the old and holy Church we mourn,
 The song of Taliesin—"Ours shall mourn
 Mourning, Italy, the loss of him who stood
 For thee she mourns, nor e'er will cease to mourn ;
 Mourn, Shepherd, near thy old grey stone ;
 And mourn when thou art all alone,
 And mourn, thou poor half-witted Boy !
 Not without hope we suffer and we mourn,
 Affecting type of him I mourn !
 Why should we weep or mourn, Angelic boy,
 Then wherefore should we mourn ?

Mourn—continued.
 Mourn rather for that holy Spirit,
 Round a lone fane the human Geni mourn,
 They call upon the hills and streams to mourn,
 This simple Child will mourn his one short hour,
 As long and perseveringly to mourn
 "Here," said the Pastor, "do we muse, and mourn
Mourned. From one who mourned in sleep, he raised his head.
 The Child she mourned had overstepped the pale
 The big and lesser griefs with which she mourned
 The Mother mourned, nor ceased her tears to flow,
 Ere she had wept, ere she had mourned,
 His death was mourned by sympathy divine,
 Nor should the change be mourned, even if the joys
 Are mourned by man, and not by man alone,
 And, while he lay like one that mourned,
 I mourned with thousands, but as one
 When Lady Ailiza mourned
 Of thought, she neither shrunk nor mourned
 Angels and Saints, in every hamlet mourned !
 'Twas when the Parents, who had mourned
 That dazzled me, but rather what I mourned
 Loved with such love, and with such sorrow mourned !"
 A mother's loss, but mourned in bitterness
 Lastly I mourned for those whom I had seen
Mourner. The mourner is cheered, and the anxious have rest ;
 As fitly spring from turf the mourner weeps on—
 Guid'st the pale Mourner to the lost one's tomb ;
 The Mourner, thy true nature was defamed,
 Peace to the Mourner, But when He who wore
 "A little mourner, whom it is my task
Mourner's. Lulling the mourner's best good thoughts asleep, Mourners. Lift up your hearts, ye Mourners ! for the might
 Of humble mourners testified,
 Yea, by the very mourners who had knelt
Mournful. Sole sound, the Soudr prolongs his mournful cry ;
 A man there wandering, gave a mournful shriek,
 Along the waste no line of mournful light
 Their way, the Woman thus her mournful tale renewed.
 What mournful sighs have here been heard, and, when the voice was stopt
 Fond Youth ! that mournful solace now must pass
 With thine, and gave the mournful name which thou wilt ever bear.
 And to her mournful habits fondly cleaves.
 A mournful labour, while to her is given
 A mournful thing, so transient is the blaze !"
 Oh ! spare to sweep, tho' mournful blast,
 The mournful passion ended
 Yet why prolong this mournful strain ?—Fallen Power,
 Here walks amid the mournful waste
 The spirit of a mournful tale,
 To matins joined a mournful voice,
 This mournful iteration ? For though Time,
 Beautiful, yet in mournful durance bound,
 One to whom Heaven assigns that mournful part
 A mournful change, should Reason fail to bring
 A mournful murmur for his sake ;
 And mournful sounds, as of a Spirit lost,
 Soft o'er the waters mournful measures swell,
 Sole sound, the sould renews his mournful cry :
 In mournful thoughts, and always might be found,
 Was heard ascending ; mournful, deep, and slow
 And heard meanwhile the Psalmist's mournful plaint,
 That on mine ear ticked with a mournful sound.—
 His mournful narrative—commenced in pain,
 Of the path worn by mournful tread of her
Mournful. Sing, mournfully, oh ! mournfully,
 Sing, mournfully, oh ! mournfully,
 Sing, mournfully, oh ! mournfully,
 Sing, mournfully, oh ! mournfully,
 Sing, mournfully, oh ! mournfully,
 Sing, mournfully, oh ! mournfully,
 Sing, mournfully, oh ! mournfully,
 Among a People mournfully cast down
 Hath mournfully pronounced, then, in my mind,
Mourning. Back to his former cause of mourning,
 For these, and mourning for our errors,
 Hath offered left me mourning,
 To joy, or be it to some mourning ; never
 A mourning or a funeral ;
Mourns. Sons of the Bard, my heart still mourns
 The Mother then mourns, as she needs must mourn ;
 Mourns she for lordly chamber's hearth
 Mourns less for what age takes away
 For these she mourns, nor e'er will cease to mourn ;
 And Ettrick mourns with her their Poet dead,
Mouse. Save one uee, hungry, nibbling mouse,
 Long may you love your pensioner mouse,
 Deadly foe both of mouse and rat ;
 You might have heard a nibbling mouse ;
Mouth. Nor morsel to my mouth that day did lift,
 The name of daughter in his mouth, he prays !

- Mouths. For some whose rugged northern mouths would strain 495 Fact 17
 But by the mouths of children, gracious God!
 By mouths of Innocents, lo! here Thy might;
 From mouths of men obscure and lowly, truths
 From other mouths, the language which they speak,
Move. Move on—a mighty caravan of pain:
 Move, as the verdure leads, from stage to stage;
 The least of Nature's works, one who might move
 He saw his Wife's lips move his name to bless
 It seemed to move away from us; and yet
 Are not the enemies that move my fears. 43 Bord. 321
 Great actions move our admiration, chiefly
 The faintest breath that breathes can move a world;
 And move in terror of the elements;
 "Oh, move, thou Cottage, from behind that oak!"
 Surcharged, within him, overblest to move
 She screams—she cannot move for joy;
 My feet might move without concern or care;
 Then, dearest Maiden, move along these shades
 As on their silent tasks they move!
 And moveth all together, if it move at all.
 Move where the blasted soil is not unworn,
 Star-guided contemplations move
 O'er which they move, wherein they are contained,
 They move; but soon the appointed way 233 Power of Sound 58
 Shot from the dancing Graces, as they move
 Which they would stifle, move at such a pace!
 And trust that spiritual Creatures round us move,
 Nor dares to move unpropped upon the staff
 Divine communion; both do live and move,
 Than will hereafter move them, if they make
 With legs that move not, if they can,
 But soon they move with softer pace;
 Your kindred Deities, Ye live and move,
 What steps so suitable as those that move
 Each step hath its value while homeward we move 29
 I move at ease; and meet contending themes
 To move in sunshine?—Utter thanks, my Soul!
 On the great flood were spared to live and move.
 Me did a reverent pity move
 To live and move exempt from all control
 Move Princes to their duty, peace or war;
 Even such the contrast that, where'er we move,
 Concord and Charity in circles move.
 As to the deep fair ships which though they move
 Nor has her gentle beauty power to move 455
 *Had this 17
 From hill or valley, could not move
 Or crossed by vapoury streaks and clouds that move
 Of a cloud flat and dense, through which must move
 Can nowhere move uncrossed by some new wall
 And move around it now as planets run, 467
 *Tranquillity! the 13

 Each takes in this high matter, all may move
 Or was it Dian's self that seemed to move
 Should move the tenor of his song 532 *Once I 19
 Delivered and Deliverer move
 They move along the ground; and, evermore,
 A man who does not move with pain, but moves
 Together move in fellowship without end.—
 On as we move, a softer prospect opens,
 In heavenly majesty she seem'd to move 573

Moveless. Their moveless boughs and leaves like threads of gold ;
Proud of the varying arch and moveless form of snow.
Moveless o'er-hang the deep secluded vale.
Movement. A backward movement surely have we here, Movements. And their glad animal movements all gone by)
If there be movements in the Patriot's soul,
Among the many movements of his mind,
And, in its movements, circumspect and slow.
Mover. Prime mover in a plot to damn his Victim
Moves. With furtive watch pursue her as she moves,
Pleased, as she moves, her pomp of clouds to fold
Moves there a cloud o'er mid-day's flaming eye ?
While the pale moon moves near him, on the bound
Nor moves her hands to any needful work :
Tied by a woollen cord, moves on before
Moves me beyond my hearing.—I will try
And, while the Pony moves his legs,
Meek as a lamb the Pony moves
" Pluck that rose, it moves my liking,"
Moves all nature to gladness and mirth.
The Waggon moves—and with its load
Light as the wheeling butterfly she moves ;
Invisible, the long procession moves
Moves on without a moment's stop,
The unheeding Ass moves slowly on,
It moves us not.—Great God ! I'd rather be
And on she moves—with pace how light !
Moves, handed on with never-ceasing care,
As through a zodiac, moves the ritual year
The innocent Procession softly moves :—
Where'er he moves along the unclouded sky,
His eyes are turned, and, as he moves along,
A man who does not move with pain, but moves
The talking boat that moves with pensive sound,
Whole hamlets disappearing as he moves,
Moves through the vault of heaven, and dissipates
the night ;
O'er all that moves and all that seemeth still ;
Moves the great spirit of human knowledge, spare
Moves through the air, or as a fish pursues
Has failed ; too slowly moves the promised work,
The bust that speaks and moves its goggling eyes,
Along the line of low-roofed water, moves
For that which moves with light and life informed,
Bent as he moves, and needing frequent rest ;
Then from the threshold moves with song of peace,
A like glad impulse ; and so moves the man
Run o'er with gladness ; whence the Being moves
Our pinnacle moves ; then, coasting creek and bay,
Movest. O Thou who movest onward with a mind
Moveth. And moveth all together, if it move at all Moving. See Heart-moving, Slowly-moving, Slow-moving, Soul-moving, Spirit-moving.
Mounts from the road, and spreads its moving
shroud ;
I love to mark the quarry's moving trains,
Of horsemen-shadows moving to and fro ;
Her lips for ever moving. At her door
His lips were moving ; and his eyes, upraised to sue for grace,
Loth to restrain the moving interview,
Its playmate, rather say, its moving soul.
At every impulse of the moving breeze,
Say, when the moving creatures saw
Moving untouched in silver purity.
Blend with the mist—a moving shroud
The moving image to detain ;
The moving accident is not my trade ;
Of still or moving imagery—
As if the moving time had been
When Peter spied the moving thing,
Be conscious of Thy moving spirit !
Look round ;—of all the clouds not one is moving ;
And nothing save the moving ship's own light
Moving along a tract of morning shade,
No motion but the moving tide, a breeze,
Six wecks beneath the moving sea
Moving about in worlds not realised,
The faces of the moving year, even then
Sweet Spenser, moving through his clouded heaven
His ghostly figure moving at my side ;
Moving in heaven ; or, of that pleasure tired,
Thou endless stream of men and moving things !
Amid the moving pageant, I was smitten
On all things which the moving seasons brought
As one, and moving to one glorious end.
Not moving to his mind." These serious words
From moving spectacles ;—but let us on."
To regulate the moving spheres, and weigh —Within their moving magazines is lodged
The moving waters, and the invisible air.
And moving dialogues between this pair,

Much. Much done, and much designed, and more desired,—
Much wondering by what fit of crazing care,
Much sorrow ere the fleet its anchor weighed ;
Much need have ye that time more closely draw
I feel myself much bounden to you, Oswald ;
We, neighbours of the Esk and Tweed : 'tis much
Thus much to speak ; but think not I forget—
After his death. I have been much deceived.
Resembled much that cold voluptuary
Ere can he know to you how much a Father
That, in my zeal, I have caused you so much pain.
Whether too much for patience, or, like mine,
I have much to say, but for whose ear ?—not thine.
And never can you know, how much he loved me.
—So much for my remorse ! Unhappy Man !
Of this too much. Men are there, millions, Oswald,
Much converse do I find in thee,
With so much happiness to spare,
For length of days so much revered, so famous where it stands
That chasm is much the same— But, surely, yonder—
They, notwithstanding, had much love to spare,
Though much disguised by long adversity !
I bear it with me, Sir ;—he took so much delight in it."
Much how the Youth, in scanty pace of time,
Was traversed from without ; much, too, of thoughts
This piteous news so much it shocked her,
The Housewife answered, talking much of things
Much she rejoiced, trusting that from that hour
To thee I know too much I owe ;
Delighted much to listen to those sounds.
Much wondering how I could have sought in vain
The Briar quaked—and much I fear
Much did it taunt the humble Light
Be one of much infirmity ;
You'll find you've much in little here !
Seen fairly, is not much amiss !
As much as may be of the blame,
And bounty never yields so much but it seems to do her wrong ?
Much witnessing of change and cheer,
So much of earth—so much of heaven,
But ill he lived, much evil saw,
Whose heart with so much nature played ?
Who have felt the weight of too much liberty,
The world is too much with us : late and soon,
To think how much of this will be thy praise.
Much have ye suffered from Time's gnawing tooth :
Too much from this frail earth we claim,
I Much have my books disclosed, but the end is hidden."
Ah ! if their fluttering hearts should stir too much,
Celestial Power, as much with love as light ?
Much injured Bards ! by these preferred,
And sift her laws—much wondering that the wrong,
We, differing once so much, are now Compensers,
And much it grieved my heart to think
And attention full ten times as much as there needs ;
Pride where there's no envy, there's so much of joy ;
I am not One who much or oft delight
More brave for this, that he hath much to love :—
This modest charm of not too much,
Too much the heroic Daughter feared
On this commodious Seat ! for much remains
Well did I watch, much laboured, nor had power
For much that truth most urgently required
Much wondering what sad stroke of crazing Care
A heart, that could not much itself approve,
With warmth, as much as needed, from a sun
Much wanting, so much wanting, in myself,
Like a false steward who hath much received
Much favoured in my birthplace, and no less
Thus far, O Friend ! have we, though leaving much
And I was taught to feel, perhaps too much,
I had received so much, that all my thoughts
Much pains and little progress, and at once
Earth's paramount Creature ! not so much for woes
Much I rejoiced, not doubting but a guide
As if from Fairy-land. Much I questioned him ;
Had never much delighted me. And less
Awaits us ! Oh, how much unlike the past !
As much as any that was ever seen,
How much the destiny of Man had still
His unsuccessful issue much excite
Oh ! much have they to account for, who could tear,
Much, as it seemed, I was no further changed
Was never much my habit—giving way
In what the Historian's pen so much delights
Enquire," said I, " how much of mental power
But much was wanting : therefore did I turn
Grandeur as much, and loveliness far more.
Yet much hath been omitted, as need was ;
Of hooks how much ! and even of the other wealth
With due regret) how much is overlooked
Is nearer now, much nearer ; yet even then,

Much—continued.

Thus was he reared; much wanting to assist . . . 760 Excursion 1. 302
 He wandered far; much did he see of men, . . . 761 Excursion 1. 341
 Not speaking much, pleased rather with the joy . . . 764 Excursion 1. 515
 But, in good truth, I've wandered much of late ;
 And to myself, said she, 'have done much wrong'
 'Mid much abasement, what he had received
 Had vanished, much was come and coming back—
 So much I felt the awfulness of life, . . . 779 Excursion 2. 552
 Reviewing my past way, much to condemn, . . . 790 Excursion 3. 496
 Too much of frailty hath already dropped ;
 But that too much demands still more. You know,
 To rules and habits, whereby much was done,
 Much less, retraced in words. If she, of life . . . 795 Excursion 3. 681
 To me, or I to them ? As much, at least . . . 799 Excursion 3. 886
 Are not unfelt ; and much might recommend,
 How much they might inspire and endear,
 Of much exalted good by Heaven vouchsafed
 "Much," he continued, with dejected look,
 "Much, yesterday, was said in glowing phrase
 Regrets, or trembles, wrongly, or too much ; . . . 830 Excursion 5. 308
 Yet much, I feel, is wanting—else the task
 "Much was I pleased," the grey-haired Wanderer said, . . . 833 Excursion 5. 728
 Who, drawing near their final home, and much . . . 844 Excursion 6. 388
 Nor should I much condemn it, if it spring
 Enough—I fear, too much.—One vernal evening,
 And pleasure in endurance. Much she thought,
 And much she read ; and brooded feelingly
 —Much did she suffer : but, if any friend,
 Much to the last remained unknown : but this
 How much of this is but the blind result
 And, in requited passion, all too much . . . 863 Excursion 7. 368
 Not worldly-minded, for it bears too much
 How much the mild Directress of the plough
 And miserably hunger. Much, too much,
 "Much as I glory in that child of yours, . . . 888 Excursion 9. 274
 Not too much a thinker :
 And oh ! how much, of all that love creates
 As we pronounce them, doing them much wrong,
 But that their state so much resembled ours, . . .
 To find, in midst of so much loveliness,
 Love, perfect love ; of so much majesty
 On much repentance Grace will be bestow'd.

 By multitudes was missed, perhaps attained
 Multitudes, who from infancy had breathed
 And multitudes of little floating clouds, . . .
 Of glory, fronted multitudes in arms . . .

Multitudinous. To the south-west, a multitudinous

 As multitudinous a harmony . . .
 Of visual sovereignty—hills multitudinous,
 However multitudinous, to move
 More multitudinous every moment, read
 Perpetual, multitudinous ! Finally,
 Mumbling. Bounced, leapt, and pawed the air ; or mumbling sere, . . . 693 Prelude 7. 422
Munificent. Munificent, and love, and ladies' praise ;
Mural. An Ossian out of mural rock,
 Mural or level with the trodden floor,
 And carved, on mural cliff's undreaded side,
Murder. Murder—perhaps asleep, blind, old, alone,
 His staff—his figure—Murder !—what, of whom ?
 It is most strange. Murder !—what's in the word !—
 For this most cruel murder : let him live . . .
 That will sustain me. Did you murder him ?
 "Some say that here a murder has been done,
 We murder to dissect.
 The adage on all tongues, "Murder will out,"
 Murder will out ; certes it will not fail ;
 That of this murder wist, and that anon :
 And murder causes some sad tears to flow,
 A tool of murder ; they who ruled the State,—

Muses—continued.

On whom the Muses smile ; 499 *Departing summer 27
 You, Muses, books, fields, liberty, and rest ! . . . 529 *Those breathing 125
 Then the Muses might deal with me just as they chose,
 To wait upon the bright and gracious Muses . . . 573 Chiabrera 2. 7
 Of the fair Muses. Not a covert path 574 Chiabrera 5. 9
 Chosen by the Muses for their Page of State—
 The high and tender Muses shall accept
 Song of the muses, sage historic tale, 864 Excursion 7. 450
 For loftier intercourse. The Muses, crowned
 Muses'. If these brief Records, by the Muses' art
 The Muses' modest musings underwent
 Wet with the Muses' nectar. Thus I soothe Museum. As through a wide museum from whose stores
 Music. See Eye-music, Muscle's.
 Blanch, Swift, and Music, noblest of their kind,
 Music has no heart to follow,
 Little Music, she stops short.
 While music, stealing round the glimmering deeps,
 To catch the spiritual music of the hill,
 And amorous music on the water dies,
 Soft music o'er the aerial summit steal ?
 Blend in a music of tranquillity ;
 That on his marriage day sweet music made !
 Resound with music, could you see the sun,
 I never saw. The music of the birds 49
 His music, and to view his imagery :
 Who heard the heart-felt music of his suit
 Make subterranean music, like the noise
 Light to the sun and music to the wind ;
 Bright gem instinct with music, vocal spark ;
 As if with pipes and music rare 155
 His ears are by the music thrilled,
 While to the music, from on high,
 The music stirs in him like wind through a tree.
 And music from that pipe could draw
 To music suddenly 192
 The still, sad music of humanity,
 Those quivering wings composed, that music still !
 Of music, audible to him alone 209
 While there the music runs to waste,
 Shall be our hand of music ; he shall sweep
 When Music deigned within this grosser sphere
 No scale of moral music—to unite
 Was it the music of the spheres 234
 That the poor Harp distempered music yields
 Soft is the music that would charm for ever ;
 Be gracious as the music and the bloom
 Of her loved mistress : soon the music died,
 Or float with music in the festal barge ;
 Embodied in the music of this Lay,
 Music that sorrow comes not near 289
 The music in my heart I bore,
 They were they chosen music, Liberty !
 Old songs, the precious music of the heart !
 Their voices into liquid music swell,
 Drown the music of a song 336
 Of music opened, and there came a blending 371
 Nor check, the music of the strings ;
 The greeting given, the music played,
 Of music reached its height, and even when sank
 While thus he brooded, music sweet
 Their sabbath music—"God us adore !"
 With vocal music, "God us adore ;"
 A pleasant music floats along the Mere,
 Glad music ! yet there he that, worn with pain
 This day, when, forth by rustic music led,
 Where light and shade repose, where music dwells
 The music bursteth into second life ;
 By its soft music whence the waters flow :
 The music, and extinct the lay ?
 Of softest music some responsive place.
 Fit music for a solemn vale !
 How sweet his music ! on my life,
 A music sweeter than their own 481
 Than music of the Spring 498
 Catch the blithe music as it sinks and swells,
 Delicious odours ! music sweet,
 Surpasses sweetest music. There she sits
 In music all-unversed, nor blessed with skill
 But we, we lacked not music of our own, 529
 On their quick sense our sweetest music jarred ;
 Snatches of music taken up and dropt
 From soul-felt music, and the treasured page
 List'ning th' aereal music of the hill,
 Soft music from th' aereal summit steal ?
 Would, with its rattling music, come,
 Would, with its rattling music, come,
 Make ceaseless music that composed my thoughts
 Like harmony in music ; there is a dark
 To hear such music. Through the walls we flew
 With music, incense, festival, and flowers !
 Where silence dwells in music be not there
 Articulate music. Above all, one thought
 Music, and shifting pantomimic scenes,
 The other to make music, hiser, too,

Music—continued.

With tutelary music, from all harm 701
 That into music touch the passing wind 708
 Of music, martial tunes, and banners spread, . . 713
 Wild blasts of music thus could find their way
 Oh ! that I had a music and a voice 725
 And the bleak music from that old stone wall,
 Of music swayed their motions, and the waste . . 734
 And now the music of my own sad steps, 739
 Blithe notes of music, suddenly let loose 745
 Said I, "The music and the sprightly scene
 And instruments of music, some half-made,
 Music of finer tone ; a harmony,
 And music waits upon your skillful touch,
 With music lulled his indolent repose :
 Dispersed, like music that the wind takes up
 By music, prank, and laughter-stirring jest ;
 With music ?" (for he had not ceased to touch
 Heart-stirring music ! hourly heard that name ;
 Of music, lute or harp, a long delight 809
 Light to the sun and music to the wind ; 814
 An art, a music, and a strain of words 820
 Musical. Nor hallowed less with musical delight
 Notes shrill and wild with art more musical : . . 836
 Had a musical charm, which the winter of age
 Swain by that voice—whose murmur musical
 A musical but melancholy chime,
 Was now an Island musical with birds
 Musician. She sees the Musician, 'tis all that she sees !
 As fast as a musician scatters sounds
 Musician, gardener, builder, mechanist,
 Music's. And their music's a prey which they seize ;
 Yield to the music's touching influence ; 340
 Disturb the liquid music's equipoise,
 Of boisterous merriment, and music's roar,
 Musings. Deprest by weight of musings Phantasy ;
 To serious musing and to self-reproach 149
 Nor from this vestige of thy musings hours
 To holy musing, it may enter here 151
 So Fancy, to the musings Poet's eye,
 Haunts, with sad echoes, musings Fancy's ear :
 From the Pier's head, musing, and with increase
 By the joint pressure of his musing mood 362
 Sate musing ; on that hill the Bard would rove,
 Or musing sits forsaken halls among 463
 While musings here I sit in shadow cool,
 Heedless how Pliny, musing here, survey'd
 To vacant musings, unprovoked neglect
 That, musing on them, often do I seem
 Thus musing, in a wood I sate me down
 Musing in solitude, I oft perceive
 In silence musing by my Comrade's side,
 As choice as musing Leisure can bestow ;
 For ever musing. Sunken were her eyes ;
 Musing, the lone spot with my soul agrees
 Musings. To trust a Poet in still musings bound,
 Oft with his musings does thy image blend,
 Blithe hopes and happy musings soon took flight,
 And independent musings pleased me so 652
 Some pensive musings which might well beseem
 Those musings or diverted, save that once
 Accompanied these musings ; fervent thanks . . . 706

 And leading Herbert. We must let them pass—
 You are too fearful ; yet must I confess, 39
 But when thy Father must lie down and die, . . 40
 Idonee, we must part. Be not alarmed—
 There must be truth in this. Truth in his story !
 He must have felt it then, know what it was,
 A thing worth further notice, we must act
 We must not part,—I have measured many a league
 Holla ! No, no, the business must be done.—
 And he must lead me back. You are most lucky ;
 The Vagrant must, no doubt, be loitering somewhere
 But here he is, it must have been a dream 44
 I must have more of this ;—you shall not stir
 For love of God I must not pass their doors ;
 What must be done ? We will conduct her hither ;
 Caution must not be flung aside ; remember, . . 48
 As you must needs have deeply felt, it is 48
 Must fall in the execution of his office ?
 Could not come after us—he must have perished ;
 Over your head twice twenty years must roll,
 Touch not a finger—What then must be done ?
 It must be ended !—Softly ; do not rouse him ;
 Must never come before a mortal judgment-seat,
 But softly ! we must look a little nearer 58
 This last device must end my work.—Methinks
 Nay, we must travel in another path,
 Who on her journey must proceed alone, 59
 To them I must relate the Tale 278
 Turn from the sight, enamoured Muse—we must ;
 Ye, too, must fly before a chasing hand,
 For the brief course that must for me remain ;
 That all must love or die ; but I withdraw,
 Now farewell, quoth she, for I hence must wend ;
 We must the Palace see of Cressida ;
 Or yonder is it that the tents must be 564

Mustered. "They mustered their host at Wetherby,

Mustering. And splendour slowly mustering. Since the Sun, . . .
 Mustering a face of haughty sovereignty, . . .
Musty. Of the world's masters, with the musty rules
Mutability. Of mutability, those far-famed Piles

Mute. Or tracked the passenger, in mute distress,
 On the mute Image and the troubled walls . . . 20 Desc. Sk. 544
 In mute devotion on the thankful breast !
 He too was mute : and, ere her weeping ceased,
 His looks—for pondering he was mute the while .
 A while the astonished Artegal stood mute,
 Mute strains from worlds beyond the skies,
 Is not more still and mute than he . . .
 And, still and mute, in wonder lost,
 Mute memento of that union
 Come forth at evening, keeps Thee still and mute ;
 Each invisible and mute,
 United worship ; or in mute repose
 Of mute insensate things . . .
 That oaten pipe of hers is mute,
 Winds the mute Creature without visible Mate
 Is mute ; and, in his silence, would look down,
 The Charm is over ; the mute Phantoms gone,
 In mute aerial harmonies ;
 Is wafted in mute harmonies ;
 Nor mute the forest hum of noon ;
 Now that the cottage Spinning-wheel is mute ;
 Mute in her nest love-chosen, if not love-built
 He is as mute as Jedborough Tower :
 Mute fixture on a stuccoed wall ;
 Mute as the snow upon the hill,
 And to all living mute memento breathes,
 Mute are all creatures, as this couchant fawn,
 Come two mute Swans, whose plumes of dusky white
 No voice replies,—both air and earth are mute ;
 Though mute, of all things blending into one,
 The pibroch's note, discontinued or mute ;
 Tradition, he thou mute ! Oblivion throw
 Not mute, where now the linnet only sings :
 For us the voice of melody was mute . . .
 With mute obeisance gladly paid,
 Sad words to that mute Animal,
 Mute Spirit of material love . . .
 Her mute Companion as it lay
 By voices never mute when Heaven unites
 The tapers shall be quenched, the belfries mute,
 On the mute sea in this unruffled bay ;
 Or the mute rapture ended in a sigh—
 With quickening impulse answered their mute pleas,
 For her mute Powers, fixed Forms, or transient Shows . . .
 Mute as a lark ere morning's birth . . .
 With mute astonishment, it stands sustained . . .
 Unheeded, and the mute repose . . .
 Though mute the song—to grace the rite . . .
 —But why this stealing tear ! Companion mute,
 Espied him on his legs sustains a blank, mute,
 Accept, mute Captives ! thanks and praise ;
 And watch these mute Companions, in the pool,
 Mute offerings, tribute from an inward sense . . .
 To one mute Presence, above all . . .
 That said, "Let praise be mute where I am laid ;"
 Crowded behind the swain, in mute distress,
 —Ah me ! all light is mute amid the gloom,
 —The pomp is fled, and mute the wondrous strains,
 I held mute dialogues with my Mother's heart,
 Mute, looking at the grave in which he lies !
 Add to these exhibitions, mute and still,
 Now mute, for ever mute in the cold grave . . .
 No longer a mute influence of the soul,
 So that he questions the mute leaves with pain,
 Not mute, and then retire, fearing no storm ;
 Shall I be mute, ere thou be spoken of ? . . .
 And the mute fish that glances in the stream,
 Of the mute train, behind the heathy top . . .
 A mute procession on the houseless road ;
 Than the mute agents stirring there :—alone . . .

Mute—continued.

As the mute insect fixed upon the plant . . . 794 Excursion 3, 579
 Even less than these !—Be mute who will, who can,
 Is the mute company of changeful clouds ;
 Here,—if the solemn nightingale be mute,
 And man's substantial life. If this mute earth
 Mute register, to him, of time and place,
 As the mute swan that floats adown the stream,
 With mute astonishment, themselves to see
 Better my tongue were mute. And yet there are,
 Mute or conversing, single or in pairs . . .
 In mute composure, o'er the shadowy lake,
Mutilated. Ere from the mutilated bowler I turned O'er mutilated arches shed their seeds ;
Mutinously. Yet mutinously knits his angry brow,
Mutiny. The Villains rose in mutiny to destroy me ;
Mutter. Though not unused to mutter lonesome songs,
 The Poet mutter his prelusive songs
Muttered. See Inly-muttered.
 Muttered the Father,—From these words the Youth
 Muttering the verses which I muttered first
 From mischief, caused by spells himself had muttered ;
 Some muttered to the torrent-fall ;—
 Issued low muttered sounds, as if of pain . . .
 The rocks that muttered close upon our ears,
 Muttered on black and spiteful instigation
Muttering. while he was muttering something about his Child—
 Muttering the verses which I muttered first
 Pace between door and window muttering rhyme,
 Mid muttering prayers all sounds of torment meet,
 Dead muttering lips, and hair of hungry white,
 Muttering along the stones, a busy noise
Mutters. But ever to himself he mutters, Mutuel. And mutual interest failed not to create . . .
 All but the mutual mockeries of body,
 Mutual was the sudden transport ;
 Ever beheld. Up-led with mutual help,
 Pregnant with mutual exaltation,
 Or watch, with mutual teaching,
 Nor aught of mutual joy or sorrow knew
 To mutual respect in thought and deed ;
 Extended, clasp the winds, with mutual moan
 The mutual nod,—the grave disguise . . .
 Given and received in mutual jeopardy,
 What feuds, not quenched but fed by mutual woe.
 Mutual the victory, mutual the defeat !
 A mutual hope, a common mind ;
 Bless, tender Hearts, their mutual lot,
 Is killed by death, does mutual service fail ?
 If e'er, through fault of mine, in mutual pain
 Their mutual loyalty—
 To mutual tyranny a deadlier look ?
 With every hope that mutual cares provide ;
 For mutual pleasure glide ;
 Where Man and Muse complained of mutual wrong ;
 What signs of mutual gladness when they met !
 From mutual good—some strain of thine, my Book !
 Where mutual love is not ; . . .
 Taught that the mutual hope was dust,
 With mutual help, and sailing—to their league
 In chains of mutual passion, from the tower,
 That mutual domination which she loves
 Enriched by mutual and reflected wealth,
 For signs and tokens of a mutual bond ;
 Or through dependence upon mutual aid,
 Was he received, and mutual joy prevailed.
 And recommending for their mutual need,
 The mutual aptitude of seed and soil . . .
 This mutual confidence ; if, from such source,
 Of mutual pity and forgiveness, sweet . . .
 An unrelaxing bond, a mutual need ;
 And unripe sex with sex, for mutual taint ;
 Through mutual injury ! Rather in the law
 Studious of mutual benefit ; and he,
 In mutual stillness ; or, if some faint breeze
Mutually. Mutually consecrated. Poor old Man !
 Illustrated, and mutually endeared . . .
 That mutually assisted they may live . . .
 The billows lengthening, mutually crossed
 Though mutually unknown, yea, nursed and reared
 Shone mutually indebted, or half lost
 Of madding passions mutually inflamed ;
 Confused, commingled, mutually inflamed,
 In solitude : and mutually addressed
 Graced mutually by difference of sex,
 That, mutually protected and sustained,

 (Sole bourn, sole wish, sole object of my way ;
 Where we, my Friend, to happy days shall rise,
 From such romantic dreams, my soul, awake
 My heart leaps up when I behold
 So was it when my life began ;
 And I could wish my days to be
 Historian of my infancy !
 A solemn image to my heart,
 My father's family !
 My sister Emmeline and I
 My Father's house, in wet or dry
 My sister Emmeline and I
 The Blessing of my later years
 Was nigh ; and, sitting by my side,
 My thoughts on former pleasures ran ;
 My boy beside me tripped, so slim
 At this my boy hung down his head,
 At remembrance whereof my blood sometimes will flag.
 And for the Subject of my Verse I heaved a pensive
 sigh.
 Nor could my heart by second thoughts from heaviness be cleared,
 For bodied forth before my eyes the cross-crowned but appeared ;
 But the poor ragged Thing whose ways my human heart had warned.
 And bore him high through yielding air my debt of love to pay.
 I whispered, " Yet a little while, dear Child ! thou
 art my own,
 Strong as an Eagle with my charge I glided round and round

 Lest all that passed should melt away in silence
 from my mind,
 93 Poet's Dream 71
 My trees they are, my Sister's flowers ;
 With quickening pace my horse drew nigh
 My horse moved on ; hoof after hoof
 The joy of my desire ;
 106 I've watched 11
 A fountain at my fond heart's door,
 My fancy's own creation.
 To feed my heart's devotion,
 Through my very heart they shine ;
 Trembling, through my unworthiness, with fear
 Proud was I that my country bred
 I looked at her again, nor did my pride abate.
 My song the workings of her heart expressed.
 In silence, though my memory could add
 Why will ye thus my suit repel ?
 And with the owls began my song,
 For passions that were not my own, and think
 Will be my second self when I am gone.
 I roamed in the confusion of my heart,
 My EMMA, I will dedicate to thee."
 —Soon did the spot become my other home,
 My dwelling, and my out-of-doors abode.
 Tracing the lofty barrier with my eye
 Joanna, looking in my eyes, beheld
 Of ancient mountains, or my ear was touched
 Hath to this lonely Summit given my Name.
 My Friend, Myself, and She who then received
 And therefore, my sweet MARY, this still Nook,
 At a short distance from my cottage, stands
 Would watch my motions with suspicious stare,
 My feet might move without concern or care ;
 Pleasant conviction flashed upon my mind
 Year followed year, my Brother ! and we two,
 My Brother, and on all which thou hast lost.
 Timing my steps to thine ; and, with a store
 But now my own delights I make,—
 My thirst at every rill can slake
 Then, cheerful Flower ! my spirits play
 Hath often eased my pensive breast
 When all my reveries are past,
 Their snow-white blossoms on my head,
 To sit upon my ochraceous seat !
 My last year's friends together.
 My dazzled sight he oft deceives,
 And to-day my heart is weary ;
 Alas ! my journey, rugged and uneven,
 Serving at my head's command,
 Who will love my little Flower.
 My half-formed melodies,
 Or second my weak Muse ?
 The spirit of my song ;
 Love animates my verse—
 That way look, my Infant, lo !
 O'er my little Dora's face ;
 Thee, Baby, laughing in my arms,
 And I will have my careless season
 Find my wisdom in my bliss ;
 I sing of these ;—it makes my bliss !
 But a shy spirit in my heart,
 The same whom in my schoolboy days
 With a huge wauld o'er my shoulders slung,
 A nutting-crook in hand ; and turned my steps
 Forcing my way, I came to one dear nook
 And—with my cheek on one of those green stones
 Confound my present feelings with the past, . . . 86 Rural Arch. 22

My—continued.

When first she gleamed upon my sight ;
 How soon my Lucy's race was run !
 A slumber did my spirit seal ;
 For oft, when on my couch I lie
 And then my heart with pleasure fills,
 A humbler bliss would satisfy my heart.
 They dart across my path—but lo . . .
 And to my heart are still endeared . . .
 The pleasant season did my heart employ ;
 My former thoughts returned : the fear that kills ;
 The moving accident is not my trade ;
 'Tis my delight, alone in summer shade,
 And, pulling now the rein my horse to stop,
 Which in my former rhyme I have rehearsed.
 And passing even into my purer mind,
 Have hung upon the beatings of my heart—
 How often has my spirit turned to thee !
 The guide, the guardian of my heart, and soul
 Of all my moral being. Nor perchance,

My—continued.

And joys of distant home my heart enchain . . . 340
My Song, encouraged by the grace . . . 342
Even yet my heart can scarcely brook,
O Ye, who guard and grace my home . . . 342
Have spared my Dwelling to this hour ; . . . 344
For in my Fancy thou dost share . . . 345
My thoughts become bright like yon edging of Pines . . . 345

My spirit is the scene of such wild art . . . 350
Down the main avenue my sight can range : . . . 350
For my enjoyment meet in vision strange ; . . . 350
Go forth, my little Book ! pursue thy way ; . . . 351
Not, therefore, shall my mind give way to sadness ; —

Of my own Fairfield. The glad greeting given,
To move in sunshine ?—Utter thanks, my Soul !
If one—while tossed, as was my lot to be,
Christian Traditions ! at my Spirit's call . . . 357
My heart—may have been moved like me to think,
Of that holiest of Bards, and the name for my mind
And the realised vision is clasped to my heart.
As indignation mastered grief, my tongue
My heart, and filled that heart with conflict strong.
From far, forgive the wanderings of my thought :
So rich to me in favours. For my lot . . . 367
Is to my heart of hearts endeared . . . 375
For Duddon, long-loved Duddon, is my theme !
Pleased could my verse, a speaking monument,
My frame hath often trembled with delight
The One for whom my heart shall ever beat
Rough ways my steps have trod,—too rough and long

O, that my mind were equal to fulfil . . . 395
If, undeceived, my skill can trace . . . 398
Monastic Domes ! following my downward way,
Mine ear has rung, my spirit sunk subdued, . . . 449
Long lines of mighty Kings—look forth, my Soul !
Breathe through my soul the blessing of thy grace,
Informs my spirit, ne'er can I believe
—Wings at my shoulders seem to play ;
Survived, 'twas only in my dreams.
If aught unworthy be my choice,
My soul, though yet confined to earth,
Such as my verse now yields, while moonbeams play
Speak one of you, my doubts remove,
A point of life between my Parent's dust, . . . 464
And yours, my buried Little-one ! am I ;
And You, my Offspring ! that do still remain,
Name that first struck by chance my startled ear)
That animate my way where'er it leads ! . . . 472
While a dark storm before my sight
To my life's neighbour dues of neighbourhood ;
Fell suddenly upon my Spirit—cast
To me my good friend Matthew spake,
And dream my time away."
And much it grieved my heart to think
And 'tis my faith that every flower . . . 482
We from to-day, my Friend, will date
Received my proffered aid . . . 484
And he creeps to the edge of my stove.
Can draw warmth from the cheek of my Love ;
As if green summer grass were the floor of my room,
At this he grasped my hand, and said,
To season my fireside with personal talk,— . . . 488
Or neighbours, daily, weekly, in my sight ; . . . 488
And, for my chance-acquaintance, ladies bright,
Long, barren silence, square with my desire ; . . . 488
In the loved presence of my cottage-fire, . . . 488
And thus from day to day my little boat
Oh ! might my name be numbered among theirs,
Thou art a tool of honour in my hands ;
My spirit droop for drooping's sake, . . . 490
Too blindly have reposed my trust : . . . 492
And oft, when in my heart was heard . . . 492
Through no disturbance of my soul,
My hopes no more must change their name, . . . 492
That my submissiveness was choice : . . . 492
Oh, let my weakness have an end !
—What trick of memory to my voice hath brought
—O my own Dora, my beloved child ! . . . 496
We may be taught, O Darling of my care ! . . . 496
Thee, thee my life's celestial sign ! . . . 497
But something whispers to my heart . . . 497
Fall, rosy garlands, from my head ! . . . 498

But turn, my Soul, and from the sleeping pair
My Country ! if such warning be held dear,
Nor hedge-row screen invites my steps abroad ;
Tired of my books, a scanty company !
And aid my verse, content with local bounds . . . 522
When You might read, my credit would be gone . . . 522
Startling us all, dispersed my reverie ; . . . 524

More could my pen report of grave or gay . . . 525
Laughs at my pains, and seems to say, " Be done." . . . 525
Fair Damsel ! o'er my captive mind,
Impelled to livelier pace. But now, my Book !
From mutual good—some strain of thine, my Book ! . . . 530

My—continued.

Witness how oft upon my noble Friend . . . 539
I saw an aged Beggar in my walk ; . . . 566
Him from my childhood have I known ; and then
My neighbour, when with punctual care, each week,
And, in my spleen, I smiled that it was grey . . . 571

For I'd take my last leave both of verse and of prose.

What feats would I work with my magical hand !
Oh, what would they be to my tale of two Thieves ?
Such, in the fond illusion of my heart, . . . 578
A deep distress hath humanised my Soul . . . 578
The feeling of my loss will ne'er be old ;
My Brother, too, in loving thee, . . . 579
—A few (my soul oft sees that sight)
Have lent his wing, my Brother dear, . . . 580
Thus in the weakness of my heart . . . 580
Upon my thoughts his saintly Spirit fed ;
Thou wert a scorner of the fields, my Friend,
Transported, my soothed spirit bovers o'erbomb
But turn we rather, let my spirit turn
The Ettrick Shepherd was my guide.
My steps the Border-minstrel led . . . 588
My heart is at your festival, . . . 588
My head hath its coronal, . . . 588
The Pansy at my feet . . . 590
Be now for ever taken from my sight,
Return Delights ! with whom my road begun,
When Transport kiss'd away my April tear,
While, Memory at my side, I wander here,
Say, will my friend, with soft affection's ear,
Where we, my friend, to golden days shall rise,
With pensive step to measure my slow way,
My heart, alive to transports long unknown,
Forc'd from my native mountains bleak and bare ;
Her shrill winds roaring round my lonely way ;
Still have my pilgrim feet unfeeling found,
Threw back my eyes, return'd, and gazed again.
Through all my frame the pleasing accents ran,
Dim were my swimming eyes—my pulse beat slow,
And my full heart was well'd to dear delicious pain.
Life left my loaded heart, and closing eye ;
A sigh recall'd the wanderer to my breast ;
My own ; and not mine only, for with me
The only daughter of my parents, dwells . . . 622
Aye, think on that, my heart, and cease to stir,
Or not far off. Where'er my footsteps turned,
In all my goings, in the new and old . . . 622
Of all my meditations, and in this . . . 622
Your guardianship ; I take it to my heart ;
Among all lovely things my Love had been ;
Glimmers before my sight through thankful tears,
A visitant that while it fans my cheek . . . 632
That burthen of my own unnatural self, . . . 632
Was blowing on my body, felt within . . . 632
Pour forth that day my soul in measured strains
My own voice cheered me, and, far more, the mind's
Beneath a tree, slackening my thoughts, by choice,
Continued, brought me to my hermitage,
The many feelings that oppressed my heart, . . . 634
A tale from my own heart, more near akin . . . 635
To my own passions and habitual thoughts ; . . . 635
My last and favourite aspiration, mounts . . . 635
To blend his murmurs with my nurse's song,
That flowed along my dreams ? For this, didst thou,

Make ceaseless music that composed my thoughts
Much favoured in my birthplace, and no less . . . 636
With store of springes o'er my shoulder hung
O'erpowered my better reason, and the bird . . . 637
Became my prey ; and when the deed was done . . . 637
Blow through my ear ! the sky seemed not a sky
And through the silent water stole my way . . . 637
That spectacle, for many days, my brain . . . 638
By day, and were a trouble to my dreams . . . 638
By day or star-light thus from my first dawn . . . 638
Haunting me thus among my boyish sports, . . . 639
And twice five summers on my mind had stamped
Planting my snowdrops among winter snows : . . . 641
Might fix the wavering balance of my mind, . . . 641
One end at least hath been attained ; my mind . . . 641
Through later years the story of my life . . . 641
The simple ways in which my childhood walked ;
On my corporeal frame, so wide appears . . . 642
Which yet have such self-presence in my mind, . . . 642
And dead still water lay upon my mind . . . 644
Into my heart, and held me like a dream !
Thus were my sympathies enlarged, and thus
For I could dream away my purposes, . . . 645
My heart to rural objects, day by day . . . 645
" This portion of the river of my mind
Came from yon fountain ? " Thou, my Friend !
art one

For now a trouble came into my mind . . . 645
The props of my affections were removed,
For this, that one was by my side, a Friend,
My first creative sensibility ;
My soul was unsubdued. A plastic power
Grew darker in the presence of my eye :
Hence my obeisance, my devotion hence, . . . 647

My—continued.

And hence my transport. Nor should this, perchance,
To passive minds. My seventeenth year was come;
My own enjoyments; or the power of truth
With my own modest pleasures, and have lived
That fails not, in all sorrow my support,
The blessing of my life; the gift is yours,
My lofty speculations; and in thee,
In many things my brother, chiefly here
My spirit was up, my thoughts were full of hope;
From shop to shop about my own affairs,
The Evangelist St. John my patron was:
Was my abiding-place, a nook obscure;
Her pealing organ was my neighbour too;
And from my pillow, looking forth by light
About my future worldly maintenance,
Pored, watched, expected, listened, spread my thoughts
Amid my strongest workings evermore
Which spake perpetual logic to my soul,
Did bind my feelings even in a chain.
The glory of my youth. Of genius, power,
I have been speaking, for my theme has been Symbols or actions, but of my own heart
Have I been speaking, and my youthful mind.
To follow, and if thou, my honoured friend I
Who in these thoughts art ever at my side,
Support, as heretofore, my fainting steps,
My deeper pleasures (nay, I had not once,
Coversers there were within my mind which sun
Among the band of my compeers was one
Hast placed me high above my best deserts,
My easy spirits, and discountenance
As far as doth concern my single self,
To quit my pleasure, and, from month to month,
Had also left less space within my mind,
And written rove, acknowledged my liege lord,
In my own mind remote from social life,
Did better suit my visionary mind,
The cottage threshold where my journey closed,
From my old Dame, so kind and motherly,
And many of them seeming yet my own!
But with more shame, for my habiliments,
In my accustomed bed, more welcome now
Obssequious to my steps early and late,
My hand upon his back with stormy joy,
My name from piteous rumours, such as wait
Regretted!—that word, too, was on my tongue,
A human-heartedness about my love
Of my own private being and no more;
And Jupiter, my own beloved star!
To lure my mind from firm habitual quest
Preyed on my strength, and stopped the quietstream
And all my deeper passions lay elsewhere,
My homeward course led up a long ascent,
Subduing my heart's specious cowardice,
Then sought with quiet heart my distant home.
In progress through this Verse, my mind hath looked
My senses yielding to the sultry air,
Close at my side, an uncouth shape appeared
O Friend! O Poet! brother of my soul,
My honoured Mother, she who was the heart
To my half-infant thoughts; that very week,
Possessed me, for my inner eye had seen
Dead - in my eyes, dead as a theatre
And in my own unlovely cell state down
From regulations even of my own
And some remain, hopes for my future life,
Not seldom differed from my taste in books,
My calmer habits, and more steady voice,
On wanderings of my own, that now embraced
To whom my worldly interests were dear.
But Nature then was sovereign in my mind,
Thus by conflicting passions pressed, my heart
Spread round my steps like sunshine o'er green fields,
Upon this morning, and my favourite grave,
And all my young affections out of doors.
Of what my fond simplicity believed
Baffled my understanding: how men lived
From this memorial tribute to my theme
Are now my theme; and foremost of the scenes,
I heard, and for the first time in my life,
Yet was the theatre my dear delight;
Was more than full, amid my sobs and tears
Where to the sense of beauty first my heart
And manners which my childhood looked upon
My daily walk along that wide campaign,
And thus my heart was early introduced
That men before my inexperienced here
But doubly fortunate my lot; not here
But secondary to my own pursuits
Was Man in my affections and regards
That made my fancy restless as itself.
Of vice and folly thrust upon my view,
Such was my new condition, as at large
Erewhile my verse played idly with the flowers
In which my early feelings had been nursed—
Here then my young imagination found
Nor all the misery forced upon my sight,

My—continued.

My thoughts by slow gradations had been drawn
In my habitual thoughts; the scale of love,
But hence to my more permanent abode
Given to the people, and my love was theirs.
It was my fortune scarcely to have seen,
Through the whole tenour of my schoolday time,
Less than might well befit my youth, the cause
Were impotent to make my hopes put on
The shape of theirs, my understanding bend
Told by my Patriot friend, of sad events,
High was my room and lonely, near the roof
Or sunshine to my individual mind,
In some sort seeing with my proper eyes
Of eloquence even in my native speech,
Nor did the inexperience of my youth
Well might my wishes be intense, my thoughts
With all my resolutions, all my hopes,
Erewhile my tuneful haunt? It pleased me more
To rivet my affections; nor did now
What, then, were my emotions, when in arms
Exulted, in the triumph of my soul,
Were my day-thoughts,—my nights were miserable;
In the last place of refuge—my own soul.
Then was the truth received into my heart,
For lingering yet an image in my mind
An honoured teacher of my youth was laid,
Began to spin, with toil, my earliest songs,
Great was my transport, deep my gratitude
And tell, since juvenile errors are my theme,
Was now a shame; my likings and my loves
Could through my understanding's natural growth
Of, as my thoughts were turned to human kind,
With my true self; for, though bedimmed and changed
And that alone, my office upon earth;
My own delights do scarcely seem to me
My own delights; the lordly Alps themselves,
Nor can my tongue give utterance to a name
That doth not yield a solace to my grief:
When thinking on my own beloved friend,
Zealously laboured to cut off my heart
Was never much my habit—giving way
From the retirement of my native hills,
Too forcibly, too early in my life,
An ancient servant of my father's house
Was with me, my encourager and guide:
Of early love, the loved one at my side,
Such is my hope, the spirit of the Past
Upon my right hand couched a single sheep,
Upon my left a blasted hawthorn stood;
With those companions at my side, I watched,
Straining my eyes intensely, as the mist
To God, Who thus corrected my desires;
And, as the horizon of my mind enlarged,
My sense of excellence—of right and wrong:
And built thereon my hopes of good to come.
In my esteem, next to such dear delight,
Hope to my hope, and to my pleasure peace
In the familiar circuit of my home,
Pour rapture, tenderness, and hope,—my theme
Where knowledge leads me: it shall be my pride
Of Sarum's Plain, my youthful spirit was raised;
That then and there my mind had exercised
My earliest visitations, careless then
That, whatsoever falls my better mind,
Child of my parents! Sister of my soul!
My soul, too reckless of mild grace, had stood
Foremost in my affections, had fallen back
Thy kindred influence to my heart of hearts
Suppose my powers so far confirmed, and such
By a bequest sufficient for my needs
He deemed that my pursuits and labours lay
O Friend! The termination of my course
Some pleasure from this offering of my love.
Gladly would I have waited till my task
To noble raptures; while my voice proclaims
A gift of genuine insight; that my Song
My Heart in genuine freedom!—all pure thoughts
Were baffled; nor could my weak arm disperse
The host of insects gathering round my face,
The wished-for port to which my course was bound.
And to my wish and to my hope espied
For my grave looks, too thoughtful for my years.
As I grew up, it was my best delight
Passed from my mind like a forgotten sound.
A heart-felt chilliness crept along my veins.
I could not choose but beckon to my Guide,
My eyes were busy, and my thoughts no less,
For my own peaceful lot and happy choice
Cheering my days, and with industrious thought;
Musing, the lone spot with my soul agrees
And now, my lads, the Election comes
Hath ruled my steps, and seals me to thy side,
Mindful that thou (ah! I therefore by my Muse
Thus while my fancy wanders, thou, clear Spring,
Of my own cunning, earth mysteriously
My Lord and Lady Darlington,
And dipped my hand in dancing wave
Through joy and sorrow; if my lot be joy

My—continued.

The dear companion of my lonely walk,
 My hope, my joy, my sister, and my friend,
 One of thy lowly dwellings is my Home.
 Here as it found its way into my heart
 Recal my song the ungenerous thought; forgive.
 To regulate my hopes. Pleased with the good,
 A task above my skill; the silent mind
 My Sister, here misplaced and desolate,
 The more I see the more delight my mind
 A chosen one of my regards. See there
 In my affections. Witness the delight
 I and the modest partners of my days
 Love, knowledge, all my manifold delights
 Motions of savage instinct, my delight
 Brook, that has been my solace days and weeks,
 I come to thee, thou dost my heart renew;
 What wonder? on my soul 'twould split a tub
 Good honest souls!—if right my judgment lies
 My Lord can muster (all but honest spent)
 My Lady ne'er approached a thing so coarse

Myriads. Myriads of notes attest her subtle skill;
 The leaves in myriads jump and spring,
 I sang—Let myriads of bright flowers,
 Their myriads?—endlessly renewed,
 Of knowledge; that whole myriads should unite
 Myriads of daisies have shone forth in flower
 That shook the leaves in myriads as it passed—
 Of myriads and boon nature's lavish help;
 Cased with its several beads, what myriads there
 That hang aloft in myriads—nay, far less,

Myrtle. And bays with myrtle fringed, the southern breeze
 Which the myrtle would delight in
 The Sonnet glittered a gay myrtle leaf
 Adorned with wreaths of myrtle;
 Of Swains reposing myrtle groves among!
 Ye myrtle wreaths, your fragrance shed

The gentle Power that haunts the myrtle plain,
 When warm from myrtle bays and tranquil seas,
 Leaves of myrtle in her Crown,
 Those scattered along Adria's myrtle shores:
 The unendangered myrtle, decked with flowers,
 With the green myrtle, to endear the hours
 With the myrtle [? myrtle's] boughs arrayed,

Myrtle-braided. With the myrtle-braided sword,
 With the myrtle-braided sword
Myrtle-crowned. And some recline on couches, myrtle-crowned,
Myrtle's. While, in the flowering myrtle's neighbourhood,
 With the myrtle's boughs arrayed,
Myrtles. From the climate of myrtles contented I go.

Myrtle-wreathed. With myrtle-wreathed tiara on his brow,

Myself. (Partial list.)
 Oh! leave me to myself, nor let me feel
 With which, though bent on haste, myself I decked;
 I feel myself much bounden to you, Oswald;
 I dare not trust myself with such a thought—
 I'll plant myself before Lord Clifford's Castle,
 Landed with a small troop, myself being one:
 A shadow of myself—made by myself.
 "O mercy! to myself I cried,
 This Child, I chanted to myself a lay,
 I but repay a gift which I myself
 I gazed and gazed, and to myself I said,
 At break of day, Joanna and myself.
 And there myself and two beloved Friends,
 My Friend, Myself, and She who then received
 By myself a lonely pleasure,
 This Child I to myself will take;
 "Myself will to my darling be
 While I these thoughts within myself pursued,
 I could have laughed myself to scorn to find
 Remembrance of myself and of my peers
 And leave me to myself!"
 Myself sn satisfied in heart before.
 Which I myself could scarcely brook.
 I would myself have hung it high,
 Yet being to myself a guide,
 I call thee: I myself commend
 To brace myself to some determined aim,
 For such an arduous work, I through myself
 Take refuge and beguile myself with trust
 Much wanting, so much wanting, in myself,
 Am worthy of myself! Praise to the end!
 To understand myself, nor thou to know
 Two consciousnesses, conscious of myself
 Appeared like something in myself, a dream,
 Of pride and pleasure! to myself I seemed
 Even with myself divided such delight,
 Inexorably adverse: for myself
 The balance, and with firm hand weighed myself.
 Myself unseen. He was of stature tall,
 Peculiar to myself, let that remain
 With one not richer than myself, I made

Myself—continued.

I to the sport betook myself again.
 Recall what then I pictured to myself,
 Nor made unto myself a secret boast
 Unto myself, "The face of every one
 Myself from frequent perils; nor were tales
 The fold protecting, I myself, mature
 When to myself it fairly might be said,
 Less genuine and wrought up within myself—
 And in this way I wrought upon myself,
 A Poet only to myself, in men
 To yield myself to Nature, when that strong
 Upon his tombstone, whispering to myself:
 Review the past, I warred against myself—
 Pampering myself with meagre novelties
 My brothers and myself. There rose a crag,
 To speak, what I myself have known and felt;
 For having given the story of myself,
 And to myself, said she, 'have done much wrong
 And to myself I seem to muse on One
 "Though now sojourning there, he, like myself,
 Upon myself."—The other left these words
 Though comfortable!—Not of myself I speak;
 "Yet he it said, in justice to myself,
 Only by records in myself not found.
 Once more did I retire into myself.
 Lack virtue to receive; what I myself,
 Within myself, not comfortless.—The tenour
 Joy to myself! but to the heart of her
 Beneath my Hawthorn, planted by myself
 Myself have seen, a gateway, last remains
 (If I may venture of myself to speak,
 We both have witnessed, lot which I myself
 Would lead me, I should whisper to myself;
 Shall I reprove myself? Ah no, the stream

Mysteries. See Heart-mysteries.
 The mysteries that cups of flowers enfold,
 Unbosom their last mysteries
 Point not these mysteries to an Art
 Whose pen, the mysteries of the rod and line
 Of mysteries revealed,
 And mysteries above her years.
 Spreads wide: though special mysteries multiply,
 Of England's Church; stupendous mysteries!
 In mysteries of birth and life and death
 And wedded Life, through scriptural mysteries,
 But these poetic mysteries I withhold;
 Discovered both from all the mysteries
 Diffused through all the mysteries of our Being,
 Those mysteries of being which have made,
 Among the mysteries of love and hate,
 Exemplified by mysteries, that were felt
 With mysteries—for, if Faith were left untried,
 Would draw out of his heart the mysteries

Mysterious. That dark mysterious gulf ascending, sound
 Within that fabric of mysterious form
 So meet extremes in this mysterious world,
 All die in solitude. Mysterious God,
 Her fires, that like mysterious pulses beat
 Mysterious safeguard, that, in spite
 These types mysterious (if the show
 And vanish by mysterious art;
 For the same service, by mysterious ties;
 Brings to thy food, mysterious Sacrament!
 And strive to fathom the mysterious laws
 Thou a mysterious intercourse dost hold,
 Do still perform mysterious offices!

 Where'er her course; mysterious Bird!
 Unto Thee, mysterious God!
 The Spirit ended his mysterious rite,
 Bending beneath our life's mysterious weight
 To presences of God's mysterious power
 For admiration and mysterious awe.
 Mysterious union with its native sea.
 Guide of our way, mysterious comforter!
 Mysterious rites were solemnised; and there—
Mysteriously. Mysteriously remote and high;
 Of soul and sense mysteriously allied,
 Of my own cunning, earth mysteriously
Mysteriously-united. To a mysteriously-united pair
Mystery. No—no—the thing stands clear of mystery;
 O wretched Human-kind!—Until the mystery
 She was not with the mystery
 Lady, is a mystery rare;
 Depends upon that mystery.
 To solve the mystery, not in Nature's laws
 A voice, a mystery;
 In which the burthen of the mystery,
 Blest times when mystery is laid bare,
 Initiation in that mystery old.
 To tuneful tongues in mystery versed;
 Yet—though dread Powers, that work in mystery,
 spin
 Nor long this mystery did detain
 There let a mystery of joy prevail,
 Which in this mystery belong,
 This mystery if the Stranger can reveal,
 A mystery potent human love to endow
 Or gulf of mystery, which thou alone,

 Notice or name !—It quivers down the hill,
 Shall live the name of Walton : Sage benign !
 Nor heat, at Tam o' Shanter's name, their blood)
 Who may respect my name that I to thee
 At this late day, its sanctifying name

Name—continued.

After her throes, this Stream of fame more dear
 "Miserrimus!" and neither name nor date,
 In Heaven; hence no one blushea for thy name,
 Where, Cavendish, thine seems nothing but a name!
 And of your Father's name will make
 At sound of Rob Roy's name.
 Fixed on him an unhallowed name;
 First open traitor to the German name!
 Axious an acry name to immortalize.
 Yet shall thy name, conspicuous and sublime,
 Temptation; and whose kingly name and state
 And utter England's name with sadly-plausible voice.
 And magnify Thy name, Almighty God!
 For to a few collected in His name,
 And to the enormous labour left his name,
 The name of Aloys Reding.
 Clouds do not name those Visitants; they were Thy very name, O Lady! flings,
 Thy name, O SCHWYZ, in happy freedom keep!
 Of Winter—but a name.
 Oh GODDARD!—what art thou?—a name—
 Missed not the truth, retains a single name
 That name, a local Phantom proud to mock
 His bitter tears, whose name the Papal Chair
 Save in this Rill that took from blood the name
 That awful name to Thee, thee, simple Cuckoo,
 Of that holiest of Bards, and the name for my mind
 Of Lago Morto, dreary sight and name,
 And took from men her name—THE WATER LILY
 But worthy of the name she bore
 And to her name my soul shall cleave in sorrow;
 In honour of each household name,
 Mother of Love! (that name best suits thee here)
 Derives its name, reflected as the chime
 Of that serene companion—a good name,
 Avon—a precious, an immortal name!
 Shrink from thy name, pure Rill, with unpleased ears.
 Is but a name, no more is Ingleswood,
 A valiant man, and a name of dread
 Bethink you of your own good name,
 That name—pronounced with a dying fall—
 The name of his only Daughter dear,
 "Thou, Richard, bear'st thy father's name,
 Grave Gentry of estate and name,
 For, with a high and valiant name,
 Shall Percy blush, then, for his name?
 Stands single—Norton Tower its name—
 Vea, by her brother's very name,
 But for lost Faith and Christ's dear name,
 The name untouched, the tear unshed;
 The Norton name hath been unknown.
 That legend and her Grand sire's name;
 And of that lonely name she thought,
 Or some of humbler name, to these wild shores
 Nor these, nor monuments of eldest name,
 And for the faith; nor shall his name forsake
 ANGLI by name; and not an ANGEL waves
 Who, having learnt that name, salvation craves
 These legalized oppressions! Man—whose name
 No—some fierce Maniac hath usurped her name;
 Hear also of that name, and mercy cast
 That bigotry may swallow the good name,
 A holier name! then lightly do not bear
 And magnify the glorious name of God,
 Or like the Alpine Mount, that takes its name
 A happy people won for thee that name
 Shall be thy rightful name, in prose and rhyme!
 Name that first struck by chance my startled ear)
 Of old grey stone, and high-born name
 Repeats but once the sound of thy sweet name:
 Yet wants heaven knows what to be worthy the name.
 Has travelled down to Matthew's name,
 Oh! might my name be numbered among theirs,
 And, therefore, shalt thou be an honoured name!
 He instantly recalled the name,
 O Duty! if that name thou love
 My hopes no more must change their name,
 And leave a dead unprofitable name—
 A name which it took of yore
 A thousand years hath it borne that name,
 A name more sad than Yarrow.
 Deserves the name (this truth the billows preach)
 Of humbler name; whose souls do, like the flood
 Lycoris (if such name befit
 The pole, from which thy name
 A holy name—the Bird of Heaven!
 Region that crowns her beauty with the name
 Grieve for the land on whose wild woods his name
 Dead to the very name? Presumption fed
 On empty air! That name will keep its hold
 Why bears it then the name of "Weeping Hill"?
 Shed on their chains; and hence that doleful name.
 Such name Italian fancy would have given,

Name—continued.

And Thou, wild Stream, that giv'st the honoured
 name
 Inspired by ONE whose very name bespeaks
 Yea, to celestial Choirs, GRACE DARLING's name!
 "Thy name in this large world is spread abroad!
 Upon the breast Thy name do glorify.
 Fie, quoth she, on thy name, Bird ill beseen!
 And other Peers, whose names are on record;
 Where'er Permissus bears an honoured name,
 FRANCESCO was the name the Youth had borne,
 From nearest kindred, Vernon her new name;
 This Tablet, hallowed by her name,
 Was nothing but a name.
 Too long abashed thy Name is like a rose
 Had been derived the name he bore—a name,
 Now honour'd Edward's less than Bacon's name.
 Pronounced the name of HOPE:—The conscious child
 "At thy name though compassion her nature resign,
 And left the Glow-worm, blessing it by name,
 A Book time-cherished and an honoured name
 Madly proud to win a name;
 "VICTORIA be her name!"
 How Wallace fought for Scotland; left the name
 Far better never to have heard the name
 By the proud name she bears—the name of Heaven.
 To inspiration, sort with such a name;
 Honoured by Milton's name. O temperate Bard!
 A seemingly plainness, name it what you will,
 (At least from what we commonly so name),
 A more substantial name, no mimic show,
 Can bear never will I forget thy name.
 My name from piteous rumours, such as wait
 That in the name of all inspired souls—
 The wandering beggars propagate his name,
 And knowledge, rightly honoured with that name—
 Poems withal of name, which at that time
 A name it now deserves, this cowardice,
 Maintained even by the very name and thought.
 And hath the name of God, Transcendent peace
 With amity and glee; we bore a name
 Honoured in France, the name of Englishmen,
 Strangers, not knowing each the other's name.
 To mention by its name, as in degree,
 Ere the broad world rang with the maiden's name,
 One, of whose name from childhood we had heard
 A Father—for he bore that sacred name—
 Born in a land whose very name appeared
 Of whom I speak. So BEAUFU (let the name
 Or to that rural castle, name now slipped
 Assumed the body and venerable name
 A conflict of sensations without name,
 Nor could have been, without her blessed name,
 Which then was going forward in her name!
 A Poet, made me seek beneath that name,
 Nor can my tongue give utterance to a name.
 Then, near some other spring—which by the name
 Some unknown hand had carved the murderer's
 name.
 The name of Education, have to do
 Known by whatever name, is falsely deemed
 Is but another name for absolute power
 Poet, or destined for a humbler name;
 The name of Calvert—it shall live, if words
 And the creation (by no lower name
 I cannot tell how she pronounced my name:—
 Fantastic pomp of structure without name,
 And not less glad, for sake of her good name,
 By sounding titles, hath acquired the name
 The substance classes by some barbarous name,
 Place worthier still of envy. May I name,
 Which bears the name of action, howsoever
 To the dishonour of his holy name.
 And when the One, ineffable of name,
 He only knows by name; and, if he hear,
 And only then, be worthy of her name:
 That shall survive his name and memory.
 "Philosophy! and thou more vaunted name.
 Is virtue, or no better than a name,
 The vanquished Whig, under a borrowed name,
 A century shall hear his name pronounced,
 His name, and unambitiously relates
 For in that female infant's name he heard
 The silent name of his departed wife;
 Heart-stirring music! hourly heard that name;
 No higher name; in whom our country showed,
 Faithless memorial! and his family name
 These, and the name and title at full length,
 (Or call it comfort, by a humbler name),
 The sceptre of his sway; his country's name,
 It bears no sounding name, nor ever bore;
 "Once, while the Name, Jehovah, was a sound
 Of humbler name, whose souls do like the flood
 Their common sire, thou only bear'st his name.
 Do the name of Paphus bear,
 Through him the Antipodes in thy name delight.

Native. Dear native regions, I foretell,
 Sweetly ferocious, round his native walks,
 The native Genii walk the mountain green ?
 Beyond his native valley seldom stray,
 And as his native hills encircle ground,
 Close by my mother in their native bowers ;
 Green fields before us, and our native shore,
 Shall sun himself before his native doers ;

 These matins mounting towards her native sphere.
 Lift men from their native stations,
 Bear for me to my native land,
 Shone meekly 'mid their native dust,
 To his own native greatness to desire
 And, far beyond thy native East,
 Affect my native habitations ;
 Up from their native ground they rise . . . 226

 Kind Nature keeps a heavenly door

Of Nature leading back to life; . . . 350
Which Nature and these rustic Powers,
Outruns his fellows, so hath Nature lent
On infant bosoms lonely Nature lies.
Sink, and forget their nature—now expands
But love, as Nature loves, the lonely Poor;
No common light of nature blessed
Lo! ships, from seas by nature barred,
By Nature, softening and concealing,
With heart by simple nature moved;
Such rights did feeble nature claim;

Cold though your nature be, 'tis pure;

Harmonious Powers with Nature work
But Nature, though we mark her not,
Yet are by nature careless of the sun
Or gentle Nature-close her eyes,

As in the eye of Nature he has lived,
So in the eye of Nature let him die!
The quiet of nature was Adam's delight.
But nature is gracious, necessity kind,
And Nature, while through the great city he hies,

Ye mountains! thine, O Nature! Thou hast fed
As natural beings in the strength of Nature.
That way I leaned by nature; for my heart
Yet Nature, or a happy course of things
Which I had paid to Nature. Toil and pains
Are not so pure by nature that they needs
That are by nature most unneighbourly,
By birth and call of nature pre-ordained
For books and nature at that early age.
Whether held forth in Nature or in Man,
For commerce of thy nature with herself,
In nature somewhat nearer to her own?
Of living nature, which could thus so long
And things that teach as Nature teaches: then,
Our nature, but had virtual faith that He
May books and Nature be their early joy!
With living Nature hath been intimate,
From the great Nature that exists in works
What love of nature, what original strength
Of Nature, in that knowledge I possessed . . . 648
But Nature then was sovereign in my mind,
And human nature seeming born again.
Where tones of Nature smoothed by learned Art
Of every nature, and strange plants convened
To watch crude Nature work in untaught minds;
All freaks of nature, all Promethean thoughts
By nature an unmanageable sight, . . . 649
The Spirit of Nature was upon me there; . . . 650
With deep devotion, Nature, did I feel,
Where sovereign Nature dictated the tasks
There; for her own delight had Nature framed
Or genius, under Nature, under God
Of human nature; hence the human form
This sanctity of Nature given to man—
Of Nature and of Man that this was so;
Nature herself was, at this unripe time, . . . 651
And gradually expired, and Nature, prized
And Nature and her objects beautified
The human nature unto which I felt . . . 652
Of human nature. Neither vice nor guilt,
Of human life: Nature had led me not; . . . 653
Endowed by Nature with her fairest gifts . . . 654
Made him more gracious, and his nature then
Man and his noble nature, as it is . . . 655
They are to put the appropriate nature on . . . 656
If nature then be standing on the brink
One nature, as there is one sun in heaven; . . . 657
Or our infirm affection Nature pleads,
Should to the breast of Nature have gone back,
Given to my moral nature had I known . . . 658

To yield myself to Nature, when that strong . . . 660
And human nature faithful to herself . . . 661
With Nature,—hence, oft-times, with reason too—
Than age or manhood, even. To Nature, then,
Of human nature from the golden side, . . . 662
In brief, a child of Nature, as at first, . . . 663
Infirmities of nature, time, and place,
A more exalted nature; wished that Man . . . 664

Through these distracted times; in Nature still O Soul of Nature! excellent and fair!
O Soul of Nature! that, by laws divine
Which Nature studiously employs to thwart
From Nature doth emotion come, and moods
By Nature in the way of such a hope?
If man's estate, by doom of Nature yoked
Of vulgar nature; that its growth requires
Oppose a deeper nature; there, indeed,
To Nature, and the power of human minds,
Nature for all conditions wants not power
Of Nature have a passion in themselves,
Wherever Nature leads; that he hath stood
Had Nature shadowed then, by putting forth,
Acknowledge when thus moved, which Nature thus
Among the ways of Nature, for a time . . . 665
In the recesses of thy nature, far . . . 666
In life or nature of those charms mioute
When Nature, destined to remain so long
In human nature and her subtle ways,
Flowed in the bent of Nature. Having now
Prophets of Nature, we to them will-speak
"On Man, on Nature, and on Human Life

 If willing audience fail not, Nature's self,
 In Nature's presence stood, as now I stand,
 Of calmness equally are Nature's gift:
 Of the affections, and to Nature's self
 In Nature's presence: thence may I select
 By Nature's side among the men of old,
 A power like one of Nature's. To a hope

A draught of water? Nay, to see you thus Away! away! Nay, I have done with you:

Nay, you leave me behind. That such a One,
Nay, then—I am mistaken. There's a weakness
—Nay, you are pale. It may be so. Remorse—
Nay, think not so: come, let me raise you up:
Left without burial I nay, not dead nor dying,
The Crew deceived you? Nay, command yourself.
Nay, you have had the worst. Ferocity
Nay; bear my tale, 'tis fit that you should hear it—
Is left me still in thee. Nay, shake not so.

Nazareth. From Nazareth—source of Christian piety,
Near. See Over-near.

While, near the midway cliff, the silvered kite
'Tis pleasant near the tranquil lake to stray
The weary hills, impervious, blackening glare;
Rest near your little plots of wheaten glad;
Howls near and nearer yet the famished wolf.
By many a votive death-cross planted near,
While the pale moon moves near him, on the bound
And the near heavens impart their own delights.
Some labourer, thought he, may perchance be near;
Tempered fit words of hope; and the lark warbled
near.
And homeless near a thousand homes I stood,
And near a thousand tables pined and wanted food.
Near the sea-side I reached a ruined fort;
Though even to die near one she most had loved.
The wain pursued its way; and following near Till now I did not think my end had been so near.
Near Portland lighthouse in a lonesome creek,
Whose hody near our cottage chanced to lie;
Near his own home!—but he was mild and good;
I thank you; but, a resting-place so near,
I met a peasant near the spot; he told me,
Detained them near the gateway of the Castle.
Near the wood's edge—rest there to-night, I pray
you:
But some one must be near to count his groans.
Stay near me—do not take thy flight!
Float near me; do not yet depart!
Dreading, tho' wishing, to be near it.
With witless hope to bring her near!—
Dwell near them with my mother."
Nor sheep nor kine were near; the lamb was all alone,
" My Mother," said the Boy, " was born near to a blessed Tree,
His wife sate near him, teasing matted wool,
Another grave,—near which a full half-hour
The only kinsman near them, and though he
Sit near us on the bough!
And placed together near our rocky Well.
Came near, and nearer still.
Our comfort was near if we ever were crost;
The babe and mother near me dwell;
But seeing some one near, as on the latch
As loud as any mill, or near it,
" 'Tis on the stroke—" He must be near,"
But he is neither far nor near,
Who's you, that, near the waterfall,
And westward to the village near the lake;
Under the large old oak, that near his door
Then, pointing to the staves near which they stood,
Foes might hang upon their path, snakes rustle near,
And if a man should plant his cottage near,
The redbreast near me hopped; nor was I loth
Glittering and twinkling near yon rosy cloud;
And near the cliff I passed.
Near the green holly,

Nearer—continued.

And when the Cripple nearer drew,
 As near and nearer to the spot we drew,
 In nature somewhat nearer to her own?
 Or boldly seeking pleasure nearer heaven
 Nearer ourselves. Such often might be gleaned
 Is nearer now, much nearer; yet even then,
 Were now come nearer to her: weeds defaced
 Wisdom is oft-times nearer when we stoop
 On nearer view, a motley spectacle
 Even were the object nearer to our sight,
 Far nearer, in the habit of her soul,
 To have a nearer view of thee, in heaven.
Nearest. Their nearest kin with deadly purpose met)
 And to the nearest homesteads ran
 From nearest kindred, Vernon her new name;
 So passed the time; yet to the nearest town
 The nearest in affection or in blood;
 Not even the nearest to me and most dear,
Nearing. The echoed hoof nearing the distant shore,
Nearly. How nearly joy and sorrow are allied!
 Too nearly, or intent to reinforce Nearness. Two glow-worms in such nearness that they shared,
Neat. When market-morning came, the neat attire
 'Twas my Son's bird; and neat and trim
 To the neat mansion, where, his flock among,
 Yet is you neat trim church a grateful speck
 The floor was neither dry nor neat, the hearth
Neater. And to the door a neater pathway winds, Neatness. Its pride of neatness. Daisy-flowers and thrift
Necessary. A necessary maintenance insures,
Necessities. Till checked by some necessities severe.
Necessity. And law was from necessity received.
 Turns his necessity to glorious gain;
 The mild necessity of use compels
 But nature is gracious, necessity kind,
 But its necessity in being old.
 Through sinful choice; or dread necessity
 By strict necessity, along the path
 Whom a benign necessity compels
 Necessity, the stationary host
 Or the necessity that fixed him here;
 In-whom a premature necessity
 Did, in the time of their necessity,
Necessity's. Cold from necessity's continual snow.
Neck. With forward neck the closing gate to press—
 His neck, a varying arch, between his towering
 wings:
 Their frozen arms her neck no more can fold;
 Or the swan stirs the reeds, his neck and bill
 Shoots upward, darting his long neck before.
 With one bright bell a favourite heifer's neck;
 Round his wife's neck; the prize of victory laid
 Like one revived, upon his neck I wept;
 Fashions his neck into a godly curve;
 He stoops the Ass's neck to seize
 The little Ass his neck extends,
 And up about his neck he climbs;
 Lies fixed for ages on his conscious neck;
 Of the beautiful countenance, twine round his neck;
 His Mother's neck entwined;
 " Ere I absolve thee, stoop! that on thy neck
 Yes, Lady, while about thy neck is wound
 In a white vest, white as her marble neck.
 His bridling neck between his warring wings;
 Death, as she turns her neck the kiss to seek,
 As ever clung around a mother's neck,
 With those that stretch the neck and strain the eyes,
Necks. See Serpent-necks.
 From the submissive necks of guiltless men
 And their necks play, involved in rings,
 At his approach, and low-hoed necks entreat
 From unsubmissive necks the bridle shook
 At peace inverted your lithe necks ye leave,
 Your vassal necks how poor the garter's pride!
Necromancer. Thus to the Necromancer spake Need. Much need have ye that time more closely draw
 Hath need of rest; the sight of Hut or Hostel
 When these old limbs had need of rest,—and now
 And need repose. Could you but wait an hour?
 O Lady, you have need to love your Father.
 I know the need that all men have of mercy,
 Yes, you are right, we need not hunt for motives;
 As there are daggers here. What need of swearing!
 I am your friend. What need of this assurance
 We need an inward sting to goad us on.
 At my worst need, my crimes have in a net
 There will be need of preparation. Master!
 Should the country need a heroine,
 We have no need of names and epitaphs;
 Hast taken gifts which thou dost little need.
 Of its own bounty, or my need.
 Hard labour in a time of need!
 There is no need of boot or spur,
 There is no need of whip or wand;

Need—continued.

To any that might need it.
 That these are things of which I need not speak.
 His flock had need. 'Tis not forgotten yet
 What need there is to be reserved in speech,
 Why need our Hero then (though frail
 Or what need of explanation,
 More ragged than need was! O'er pathless rocks,
 That had no need of a remoter charm,
 " These given, what more need I desire
 You need a strong and stormy gale
 Peter, you need not fear!
 And with like force, if need there be,
 What need of clamorous bells, or ribands gay,
 Or (if need be) impediment to spurn,
 Might need for comfort, or for festal mirth;
 What need of fields in some far clime
 There will be need;
 Remote from men, Thou dost not need
 Said generous Rob, " What need of books?
 A dog, too, had he; not for need,
 England hath need of thee: she is a fen
 And that we need no second victory!
 And that we need no second victory!
 By gross Utilities enslaved we need
 Eternal things; and, if need he, defy
 Farewell!—but go thy way, no need hast thou
 What served they in her need?
 Such wrong; nor need we blame the licensed joys,
 To meet such need as might befall—
 At need, he stood, advancing high
 Less would not at our need he due
 And yet want courage at their need:
 And said—" We need not stop, my Son!
 Help did she give at need, and joined
 Tended at need, the adopted Plant may thrive
 When wisdom stands in need of nature's grace;
 These modest walls, amid a flock that need,
 What need, then, of these finished Straits?
 And, from invisible worlds at need laid bare,
 To serve thy need, in union with that Clyde
 " If there be one who need bemoan
 Yet seek thy firm support, according to their need.
 Come when it will, is equal to the need:
 Or need, of counsel breathed through lips divine.
 We need not toil from morn to night;
 Nor do they need, our hospitable care,
 But gladly would escape; and, if need were,
 Crowded with thoughts that need a settled home,
 What need is there against the truth to strive?
 What need to seek a conquest over me
 All trades, as need was, did old Adam assume,—
 He hath no need. He is by nature led Another's need to suit,
 From fear and grief, and from all need
 May cling;—hard fate! which haply need not be
 To a servile yoke. What need of many words?
 Help at his need in Dalecarlia's mines:
 Of him thou lovest; need I dread from thee
 That in its broken windings we shall need
 Ah! need I say, dear Friend! that to the brim
 No more shall need such garments; and yet man,
 And now and then, alike from need of theirs
 A dreary mansion, large beyond all need,
 I wanted not that joy, I did not need
 Frugal as there was need, and, though self-willed,
 Diversified the allurements. Need I fear—
 An ordinary sight; but I should need
 I chiefly looked (what need to look beyond?)
 They need not extraordinary calls
 Emotions which best foresight need not fear,
 Here, if need be, struggling with storms, and there
 Yet much hath been omitted, as need was;
 In holiest mood. Urania, I shall need
 He had small need of books; for many a tale
 And, sometimes—to my shame I speak—have need
 Ministering to our need. In genial mood,
 Ye need her favours, ye shall find her not;
 Or, for confession, in the sinner's need,
 What special record can, or need, be given
 And orient gems, which, for a day of need,
 Of the world's interests—such a one hath need
 Why need such man go desperately astray,
 That laid their country waste. No need to speak
 To be deposited, for future need,
 To those who need the gift. But, after all,
 The eye of roving plunderer—for their need
 And recommending for their mutual need,
 Need a bewildered traveller wish for more?
 From each day's need, out of each day's least gain
 Their spring-time with one love, and that have need
 An unrelaxing bond, a mutual need;
 Nor need the windings of his devious course
 Yet, when need was, with no reluctant will,
 And milder worth: nor need we travel far
 " Though born a younger brother, need was none
 And functions dying and produced at need,—
 Save at worst need, from bold impetuous force,
 In due proportion to their country's need;
 But for some favour, suited to our need?

Need—continued.

Declares his due, while he makes known his need.
Of urgent need.—Your Country must complete
Defended, and appropriate to man's need.
What need of more? that we shall neither droop,
Need only blush for what they once have been,
Needed. See Much-needed.
One upward hand, as if she needed rest
The heavenly sanction needed to ensure
Should that be needed for their sacred Charge;
Alms may be needed) which that House bestowed?
More than is needed, but the precious Art
Which Horace needed for his spirit's health;
As needed kindness, for this single cause,
Age might but take the things Youth needed not!
With warmth, as much as needed, from a sun
For rest not needed or exchange of love,
Guide faithful as is needed—I began
Unutterable love. Sound needed none,
Of that which is no longer needed, see!
Needest. For rain and mountain-storms! the like thou need'st not fear,
"Here thou need'st not dread the raven in the sky;
From body pains and pains of soul thou needest
no release.
Needeth. "God for His service needeth not proud
work of human skill;
Needful. Bears not to those he loves their needful food,
Nor moves her hands to any needful work:
The game is up!— If it be needful, Sir,
Things needful for the journey of her son.
As if all needful things would come unsought
Dawns on a kingdom, and for needful haste
Why throw away a needful day
Needful when o'er wide realms the tempest breaks,
Needful amid life's ordinary woes;—
A Cause, which on a needful day
Of needful sunshine; prosperous enterprise,
Was needful round men thirsting to transgress;—
Two aspects bears Truth needful for salvation;
For needful listening, pledge is here.
A needful journey, under favouring skies,
And circumspection needful to preserve
Perhaps some needful service of the State
And needful to build up a Poet's praise.
And that a needful part, in making up
Not doing in their stead the needful work.
That lies before us, needful to be told,
When'er it comes! needful in work so long,
Thrice needful to the argument which now
With needful knowledge, had abruptly passed
To give her needful help. That very time
With the few needful things that life requires.
And prudent caution needful to avert . . .
The courage that was needful to leap back
Needful. To greet the traveller needing food and rest;
Bent as he moves, and needing frequent rest;
Needle. While needle peaks of granite shooting bare
Even her own needle that subdued . . .
Where needle peaks of granite shooting bare
Needle-case. As a humble Needle-case . . .
Needles. Needles for strings in apt gradation!
Needless. 'Tis needless; spare your violence. His Daughter—
Thy sting was needless then, perchance unknown,
Excuse is needless when with love sincere . . .
As renders needless spells and magic wands,
Than toil in needless sleep from dream to dream:
Needless renewal of an old delight?
Whence idle fears, and needless pain,
Then, moved by needless fear of past abuse,
With needless services, from hardship free.
The attempt was made;—'tis needless to report.
Needlework. And needlework and flowers.
Of needle-work; no bustle at the fire,
Needs. As you must needs have deeply felt, it is Must needs step in, and save my life. The look
The feeble and the strong. She needs not here
I know him well; there needs no other motive
For both our needs; must I, and in thy presence,
A tiny tenement, forsooth, and frail, as needs must be
"These Tourists, heaven preserve us! needs must live
"Tis one of those who needs must leave the path
Should come, 'twould needs be a glad day for him;
Imagination needs must stir;
And one domestic for their common needs,
The Shepherd, if he loved himself, must needs
By tendency of nature needs must fail.
He needs not fear the season's rage,
He needs but look about, and there
A wisdom fitted to the needs . . .
Since we needs must first have met
Thou must needs, I think, have had,
And seldom needs a laboured roof;
No farther than her story needs;
If, as needs he must forbode,
Or, if such faith must needs deceive—
And stately needs must have their share

Needs—continued.

Sore aches she needs must have! but less
Koit every thought the impending issue needs,
Pleased if some Souls (for such there needs must be)
The Mother then mourns, as she needs must mourn;
Our slack devotion needs them all;
Must needs be fatal to our cause.
Dear be the Church that, watching o'er the needs
And attention full ten times as much as there needs;
Must needs be conversant with upward looks,
Locked in a dungeon needs must eat the heart
Must needs impress a transitory thought
Nor needs a warning voice to tame the pride
Are not so pure by nature that they needs
Even at that early time, needs must I trust
Must, in such Temple, needs have offered up
Must needs bring back the moment when we first,
Intent on little but substantial needs,
Of past and present, such a place must needs
Must needs have given—to the inexperienced mind,
By a bequest sufficient for my needs
Have been laid open, needs must make me feel
A Wife and Widow. Needs must it have been
As ye must needs be here? in such a place
All that Abstraction furnished for my needs
I deem not arduous; but must needs confess
All weakness fathoms, can supply all needs:
No vengeance, and no hatred—needs must feel
Her dreary pillow, waited on her needs;
To which her frowardness must needs submit.
The will, the instincts, and appointed needs
This spot to me must needs be dear,
Or single. And although it needs must seem Must needs themselves be bellowed, they require
Needy. No board inscribed the needy to allure Neither checked by the rich nor the needy they room;
Ne'er. (Farthel list.) See Never.
Be better fed. Ne'er may I own the heart
I ne'er had heart to separate—my grave,
Neglect. All but neglect. The world, for so it thought,
We soon shall meet again. If thou neglect
Neglect me! no, I suffered long
Want, through neglect of hoar Antiquity
Of cold neglect she leaves thy head ungraced,
In no confusion or neglect
Hear, then, and neglect me not!
To vacant musing, unproved neglect
From man, neglect the universal heart.
Of sudden overthrow; and cold neglect
Have not been starved by absolute neglect; Neglected. "There were we long neglected, and we bore . . .
In the blank earth, neglected and forlorn,
Shun not this Rite, neglected, yea abhorred,
For all that seem neglected or bereft;
Scorned, or neglected, fear not such a dearth.
Neglected and ungratefully thrown by . . .
Nor is my aim neglected if I tell . . .
Had been neglected; left a register
And lay till now neglected in the grass.
Which the neglected veteran had dropped,
How that neglected Pensioner was sent
With the neglected house to which she clung.
Meek and neglected thing, of no renown!
Neglecting. Neglecting in imperial state
Neglects. His book he prizes, nor neglects his sword;
Alters that piety neglects;
Negligence. Bespake a sleepy hand of negligence;
Negligent. Not negligent the style;—the matter?—
good . . .
This parting glance, no negligent adieu!
Are strict observers; and not negligent
This generous Youth, too negligent of self,
Negress. Queen and negress chaste and fair!
Negress excellently bright!
Negro. A white-robed Negro, like a lady gay,
And Negro Ladies in white muslin gowns.
The silver-collared Negro with his timbrel,
Upon the traffickers in Negro blood;
Negro princess, ebon bright!
Neighbour. For her good neighbour Susan Gale,
Their ancient neighbour, the old steeple-tower,
His neighbour thus addressed:—
Each leaf, that and this, his neighbour will kiss;
Some willing neighbour must be found.
Arrived a neighbour with his horse;
Its neighbour and its namesake—town, and flood
To my life's neighbour dues of neighbourhood;
While, day by day, grim neighbour! huge Black
Comb
My neighbour, when with punctual care, each week,
I was thy neighbour once, thou rugged Pile!
Her pealing organ was my neighbour too;
—The face of every neighbour whom I met
An hourly neighbour. Paradise, and groves
Lies guarded by its neighbour; the small heap Neighbourhood. My husband lurked about the neighbourhood;

 Though I have never seen his face, methinks,
 I thought the Convent never would appear ;
 I never should have thought of it again
 'Tis never drouth with us—St. Cuthbert and his Pilgrims,
 Alas ! I creep so slowly. Never fear ;
 And never speaks ! Who is it ? I have seen her.
 And never heard a sound so terrible.
 Henceforth, then, will I never in camp or field
 Must never come before a mortal judgment-seat,
 And never more will be.
 For never saw I mien, or face,
 Can never cease to bear celestial fruit
 Yet never once doth go astray,
 That never fleshly woman they did know.
 I in so fair a one had never been.
 And for delight, but how I never wot,
 Then, quoth she, let me never hope for bliss,
 Who had been nought, if Love had never been.

Night—continued.

With weary face is drawing nigh ; . . . 249 P. B. 1106
 With Ships the sea was sprinkled far and nigh,
 Of providential goodness ever nigh !
 Banners, and happy faces, far and nigh !
 And, in awe-stricken Counties far and nigh,
 Far-distant images draw nigh.
 And, drawing nigh, with his living eye,
 A Lawyer art thou?—draw not nigh ! . . . 485
 The Dog, which still was hovering nigh,
 But list !—though winter storms be nigh,
 He can make low, and unto death bring nigh ;
 Well nigh for sorrow down he 'gan to fall,
 And, therefore, Nightingale ! do thou keep nigh,
 The ray the cot of morning trav'ling nigh,
 Unmow'd with each rude form of Danger nigh,
 And could not stoop—no help was nigh,
 By moonlight, doubting not that day was nigh,
 And sometimes rustling motions nigh at hand,
Night. See Feast-night, Merry-night, To-night.
 The sun at morning, and the stars at night,
 Blends with the solemn colouring of night ; . . . 7
 Unheeded night has overcome the vales :
 Spires, rocks, and lawns a browner night o'erspreads ;
 Nor is she more at ease on some still night,
 Dark is the region as with coming night ; . . . 11
 In the least star of scarce-appearing night ;
 That holds no commerce with the summer night,
 Housed for the night, or but a half-hour's guest,
 That cease not till night falls, when far and nigh,
 On he must pace, perchance fill night descend,
 And be it so—for to the chill night shower
 From lamp of lonely toll-gate streamed athwart the night.
 From the night terrors of that waste to shield :
 "O come," he cried, "come, after weary night
 Dismally tolled, that night, the city clock !
 All night from time to time under him shook
 And midway on the waste ere night had fallen
 You and the story of that doleful night
 But every night at the first stroke of twelve
 But 'twas an angry night, and o'er our heads
 'Tis a wild night. I'd give my cloak and bonnet
 Let us examine it. 'Tis a bitter night ;
 In such a night as this. Stop, stop. Perhaps,
 How goes the night. 'Tis hard to measure time
 In such a weary night, and such a place.
 And in a night like this to lend your cloaks
 This bitter night. Ha ! Oswald ! ten bright crosses
 It ever could be otherwise ! Last night,
 Here to impart the tale, of which, last night,
 Last night, when moved to lift the avenging steel,
 Wherein I have offended you ;—last night
 His tool, the wandering Beggar, made last night
 It is a dismal night—how the wind howls !
 Whose heads are shelterless in such a night !
 Hush ! They are gone. On such a night my husband,
 The man he was. I will retire ;—good night !
 The night was wasting fast ;
 In the cold, cold night,
 The first hours of last night were rough with storm :
 And let him, when he would lie down at night,
 We were his guides. I on that night resolved
 With the disastrous issue of last night,
 By night, by day, never shall I be able
 Of time and distance, night and day ;
 "To-night will be a stormy night—
 The wretched parents all that night
 Night and day thou art safe,—our cottage is hard by.
 To the harbinger of night,
 Last forerunner of "Good night !"
 Through the gates of night and morn ;
 Almost as vivid as a dream, produced a dream at night ?
 And in one night send twenty score of sheep . . . 92
 The very night before he went away . . . 97
 That often, rising from his bed at night, . . . 101
 That night, he wrote a letter to the Priest, . . . 102
 Full many a time, upon a stormy night, . . . 107
 And in sickness, if night had been sparing of sleep,
 Of him I wait for day and night, . . . 116
 Found means to hurry her away by night, . . . 122
 Accomplished under friendly shade of night, . . . 123
 Shady as night, and beautiful as heaven, . . . 123
 Conceived a terror ; and, by night or day . . . 123
 Found dreadful provocation : for at night, . . . 123
 'Tis eight o'clock,—a clear March night, . . . 126
 And Susan has a dreadful night, . . . 127
 Such night as this was ne'er before, . . . 129
 The owlets through the long blue night . . . 129
 The owls have hooted all night long, . . . 131
 Where all this long night you have been,
 Now Johnny all night long had heard . . . 131
 Father and Son, while far into the night . . . 133
 Was restless morn and night, and all day long . . . 135
 Ere the night fell—with morrow's dawn the Boy Paused not, and through the depth of night she kept
 Though with misbelievers bred ; but that dark night

Night—continued.

And so, when night with grateful gloom had fallen,
 When clouds gave way at dead of night . . . 143
 One winter's night, when through the trees . . . 155
 The Frost hath wrought both night and day, . . . 156
 Last night I heard a crash—'tis true, . . . 156
 Her speech, until the stars of night . . . 157
 "One night, my Children ! from the north . . . 157
 Night has brought the welcome hour, . . . 163
 Dewy night o'ershades the ground ; . . . 163
 When chill night that care demands, . . . 166
 Day and night my toils redouble, . . . 166
 Night and day, I feel the trouble . . . 166
 That now, when day was fled, and night . . . 167
 On the blank plains,—the coldness of the night, . . . 172
 Confiding Glow-worms, 'tis a night . . . 173
 Companion of the night and day, . . . 173
 And terror of that marvellous night ! . . . 178
 Although it be a moonless night, . . . 178
 Through the still night proceeds again ; . . . 179
 Yet here we are, by night and day . . . 179
 Beguile the remnant of the night ; . . . 180
 Reproved his scourgings of the night, . . . 180
 And sure it is that through this night, . . . 182
 Of shades, and dews, and silent night ;
 As the Moon brightens round her the clouds of the night,
 And is as happy in his night, for the heavens are blue and fair ;
 Now deep and red, the colouring of night ;
 Our shed at night to rear ;
 Had wooed the Maiden, day and night
 Had loved her, night and morn :
 There was a roaring in the wind all night ;
 "At all times of the day and night
 "Now wherefore, thus, by day and night,
 "And all that winter, when at night
 By day, and in the silent night,
 Of night, my slaughtered Lord have I required [:]
 While tears were thy best pasture, day and night ;
 Or Rival, save the Queen of night . . . 212
 But should she labour night and day,
 Nor grieves—tho' doomed thro' silent night to bear
 And lovely as a Lapland night,
 On the swift wings of day and night,
 In memory, through silent night,
 The night that calms, the day that cheers ;
 They were his dwellings night and day,—
 ONE NIGHT, (and now, my little Bess !
 One beautiful November night,
 A rover—night and day !
 Which ever till this night befell,
 This very night will meet his fate—
 And for the fact will vouch,—one night
 At night o'er any pious book,
 In darkness and the stormy night ;
 Turn to him, seek him day and night,
 Of night his grief and sorrowful fear—
 And Peter Bell, who, till that night,
 This tiresome night, O Sleep ! thou art to me
 Thus thus last night, and two nights more, I lay
 It is unstable as a dream of night ;
 Uprisen, as if to check approaching Night,
 Nor dull art Thou as undiscerning Night,
 With shady night. Soft airs, from shrub and flower,
 As pensive Evening deepens into night,
 (The balance trembling between night and morn . . . 279
 Night after night ? True is it Nature hides . . . 281
 Night fell I heard, or seemed to hear,
 The sun, the day ; the stars, the night ;
 For to this lake, by night and day . . . 295
 In his lone Isle, the dreams of night ; . . . 299
 Along thy banks, at dead of night . . . 300
 A meteor wert thou crossing a dark night :
 Filling from morn to night the heroic scene . . . 317
 From bleak hill-top, and length of march by night
 And lamentably wrapped in twofold night, . . . 320
 The heaven of sable night . . . 324
 While the Sun rules, and cross the shades of night—
 Hail, orient Conqueror of gloomy Night ! . . . 329
 That, slowly making way for peaceful night, . . . 333
 Or something night and day between, . . . 343
 That guards the Temple night and day ; . . . 343
 To night, the desecrated floors are worn . . . 359
 Till Night, descending upon hill and vale, . . . 363
 Her Night not melancholy ; . . . 385
 That he may watch by night, and lessons con
 A phantasm like a dream of night !
 That guides them through a stormy night,
 He hence may learn, ere fall of night,
 "Tis night : in silence looking down,
 Aloft is roosted for the night,
 By the night insects in their play, . . . 406
 "Grant that the Moon which shines this night
 "This night yon faithless Towers must yield,
 "This night,—the Banner shall be planted !"
 "Yet, Lady ! shines, through this black night,
 Of Pagan night. Afflicted and dismayed,
 And awes like night with mercy-tempered frown,
 Grows sad as night—no seemly garb is worn, . . . 427

Night—continued.

Worse than the product of that dismal night,
Last night, without a voice, that Vision spake
Apart—like glow-worms on a summer night;

Like those good Angels whom a dream of night
We need not toil from morn to night;

Stepped One at dead of night,
Erst a religious House, which day and night
" Now this poor Widow waiteth all that night

The sun at morning, and the stars of night,
Blends with the solemn colouring of the night;

'Tis like the solemn shelter of the night.
While riding near her home one stormy night

In these night wanderings, that a strong desire
Mine was it in the fields both day and night,

Night—continued.

That night our lodging was a house that stood
A character more stern. The second night,
We sat and sate, wondering as if the night

As that of war, which rests not night or day,
Their vigils kept; where tapers day and night
The journey of another night,

Night-hrd. Nor night-bird chambered in the rocks,
The clouds, or night-bird sang from shady bough;

Night-cap. And one hand rubs his old night-cap.
Night-duck. No night-duck clamours for his wilder'd
mate,

Nightfall. Ere nightfall—truth that well may claim a sigh.

Nightingales. And nightingales desert the village grove,
Nightingales. And nightingales desert the village
grove,

 More keenly than elsewhere in night's blue vault,

Nights. On cold blue nights, in hut or straw-built shed,
 A stone than what I am.—But two nights gone,
 Drove by the place of my retreat : three nights
 Three sleepless nights I passed in sounding on,
 The wolf keeps festival these stormy nights :
 As is heard often after stormy nights.
 Thy mornings showed, thy nights concealed,
 The days are cold, the nights are long,
 By Michael's side, she through the last two nights
 On busy days, with thankful nights, be mine,
 The Beast four days and nights had past ;
 Even thus last night, and two nights more, I lay
 On favouring nights, she loved to go ;
 Seven nights her course renewed,
 Post seaward,—what impedes the tardy nights.
 At noon and 'mid the calm of summer nights,
 Of those soft starry nights, and that old Dame
 Had lain awake on summer nights to watch
 Relinquished, and your nights of revelry,
 Then I beheld loitering on calm clear nights
 Were my day-thoughts,—my nights were miserable ;
 As at a fountain ; and on winter nights,
 Tempestuous nights—the conflict and the sounds
 O, calm contented days, and peaceful nights !
 A stirring foot, a head which beat at nights
 Of play-thing fire-works, that on festival nights Nightshade. The wild rose, and the poppy, and the nightshade :
 Of Nightshade happily yet may tell ;
 Of Nightshade, to St. Mary's honour built,
 Of Nightshade, and St. Mary's mouldering fane,
 Laurels to some a night-shade wreath to thee,
Night-time. None could tell if it were night-time,

Nobliest. Which you've collected for the noblest ends,
 Earth's noblest penitent ; from bondage freed
 Blanch, Swift, and Music, noblest of their kind,
 "Supreme of Heroes—bravest, noblest, best !
 Show me the noblest Youth of present time,
 Than noblest objects utterly decayed. . . .
 Strike audibly the noblest of your lyres,
 Art's noblest relics, history's rich bequests,
 Our noblest blood is given in trust,
 Transcendent Boon ! noblest that earthly King
 The noblest drops to admiration known,
 Discourse was deemed Man's noblest attribute,
 Foremost in freedom, noblest of mankind ?
 Where Reynolds, 'mid our country's noblest dead,
 And help life onward in its noblest aim. . . .
 Yet not the noblest of that honoured Race
 And Man," said I, "be in his noblest shape
 "Amid the noblest relics, proudest dust,
 Tells from what pool the noblest had been dragged ;
 When, prizing knowledge as her noblest wealth
Nobliest-born. The noblest-born must abdicate ;
Nobly. No doubt you have been nobly entertained ?
 Shall Nature be avenged. 'Tis nobly thought ;
 A perfect Woman, nobly planned,
 Meek, nobly versed in simple discipline—
 The Emathian phalanx, nobly obstinate ;
 Thou wouldst have nobly stirred thyself,
 As nobly graced by Sculpture's patient toil ;
 And nobly wilt thou brook the chains . . .
Nobly-pensive. Or in his nobly-pensive mood,
Nobody. To a proud Soul.—Nobody loves this Oswald—
 Ay, Sir, there's nobody that feels for us. . . .
 For mercy's sake, is nobody in sight ?
 You will have nobody to close your eyes—
 That nobody had seen him all that day :
 Shouts from nobody knows where ;
 And then there's nobody to say
 Will work for nobody but me !
 And at an hour which nobody could name.
Nod. Cloud-piercing pine-trees nod their troubled heads, . . .
 That nod to welcome transient guests ;
 And nod their helmets, smitten by the wing
 Nor doubt but He to whom yon Pine-trees nod
 The mutual nod,—the grave disguise
 Nod the cloud-piercing pines their troubl'd heads,
Nodded. The feathers nodded in the breeze,
 And antique towers nodded their foreheads high,
Nodding. For thus to see thee nodding in the air,
 With nodding plumes, and lightly drest . . .
 Of him who gloried in its nodding plume. . . .
 Each in his basket nodding drowsily ;
Noise. Or, starting up with noise and rude delight,
 —To towns, whose shades of no rude noise complain,
 What means this riotous noise ? The villagers
 That noise !—would I had gone with her as far
 No matter—he's a dangerous Man.—That noise !—
 With deafening noise,—the benediction fell
 A noise at midnight does so frighten me.
 Now fast up the dell came the noise and the fray,
 And Johnny makes the noise he loves,
 Make subterranean music, like the noise . . .
 Runs a deafening noise of welcome !—
 A noise of laughter ; southern Loughrigg heard,
 Meanwhile, a noise was heard, the busy mirth
 At noise of man and steed,
 And all the air is filled with pleasant noise of waters.
 The noise of danger's in your ears,
 A muffled noise—a rumbling sound !—
 A gladsome and a welcome noise.
 Your grandame's ears with pleasure of your noise !
 An empty noise of death the battle's roar,
 While from the crowd bursts forth a rapturous noise
 From social noise—silence elsewhere unknown ?—
 Unwelcome mixtures as the uncouth noise
 Maturer Fancy owes to their rough noise . . .
 Thus scarcely given, a noise was heard,
 Made halt—but bark ! a noise behind . . .
 When, with a noise like distant thunder,
 Around their ancient grove with cawing noise
 Noise that brings forth no liveried Page of state,
 By noise and strife, and questions wearisome,
 Are trivial pump and city noise,
 —He hears a noise—he's all awake—
 Was making such a noise as it ran on
 Their veteran foes mock as an idle noise ;
 Protracted yelling, like the noise of wolves
 Of loneliness gave way to empty noise . . .

 He's the terror of boys in the midst of their noise.

Noiseless. Where, without hurry, noiseless feet
 No more ; Time halts not in his noiseless march—
 And seek through noiseless pains and moderation
 And noiseless fortitude. Beholding still . . .
 While, listening, he had paced the noiseless turf,
 And noiseless commonwealth. The simple race . . .
 Who, in their noiseless dwelling-place, can hear
Noises. Send forth such noises—and that weary hell
 To bring the noises of the Swale . . .
 Which Peter in those noises found ;—
 Tumultuous noises filled the hall ;
Noisier. Unto a noisier world, and thus ere long Noisily. Came at that moment, ringing noisily.
Noisome. A loathsome pit, whence noisome scents exhale ;
 From out thy noisome prison ;
Noisy. But soon, with proud parade, the noisy drum
 Was swoln into a noisy rivulet,
 Noisy he was, and gamesome as a boy ;
 I know that Wanton's noisy station,
 Because not of this noisy world, but silent and divine !
 O Silence ! are Man's noisy years
 Far from their noisy haunts retire, . . .
 Where be the noisy followers of the game
 From every side came noisy swarms
 The birds, of late so noisy in their bowers,
 Turns with less noisy wheels to the roadside,
 I come, ye little noisy Crew,
 Our noisy years seem moments in the being
 We were a noisy crew ; the sun in heaven
 Are often those of whom the noisy world
Noisance. Cakes for the noisance, and butter fit to lie

Nook—continued.

And felt through every nook of town and field.
Than any other nook of English ground,
Of Enna! is there not some nook of thine,
Nothing but happiness, in some lone nook,
Joined in a cold damp nook, espied a well
And prized in his peculiar nook of earth
Then, not less idly, sought, through every nook
A quiet treeless nook, with two green fields,
Henceforth in whatsoever nook he may,
By cobwebs, stood within a dusty nook;
Which appetite required—a blind dull nook,
The hidden nook discovered to our view
Leaving this nook unvisited: but, in sooth,
This covert nook reports not of his hand)
Of stillness and close privacy, a nook
Then, as we issued from that covert nook,
Piled in a nook, through malice, as might seem,
Retreat, within this nook of English ground,
" In that green nook, close by the Churchyard wall,
Hath passed him in a nook,
Down into every nook;
Prying through every nook. Meanwhile the rain
Nooks. And off alone in nooks remote
For sheltered places, bosoms, nooks, and bays,
Than those few nooks to which my happy feet
All England through, where nooks and slips of ground
These have we, and a thousand nooks of earth
Noon. See Mid-noon.
When, in the south, the wan noon, brooding still,
Dear Brook, farewell! To-morrow's noon again
One day in silence did we drift at noon
Some hasted; some ran to the lake: ere noon
If I with her but half a noon
That all his hopes were gone. That day at noon
By chance retiring from the glare of noon
The time was March, a cheerful noon—
And trust me, on some sultry noon,
In silence deeper far than that of deepest noon!
Nor mute the forest hum of noon;
" At noon, when, by the forest's edge
Morn into noon did pass, noon into eve,
And snow-feld torrents, which the blaze of noon
Is shed, the languor of approaching noon;
More lulling than the busy hum of Noon,
Life's temperate Noon, her sober Eve,
That suits a summer's noon;
In the still summer noon, while beams of light,
At night, at morning, and at noon,
He makes his summer couch, and here at noon
At morn, at noon, and under moonlight skies
—Sweet rill, farewell! To-morrow's noon again,
The star of noon that glitters small and bright,
At noon and 'mid the calm of summer nights,
Bright was the summer's noon when quickening
steps
That once in the stillness of a summer's noon,
Risen on mid noon; blest with the presence, Friend!
Of insects, which with noise like that of noon
They give it welcome. Long ere heat of noon,
To him who slept at noon and wakes at eve."
He said, "Tis now the hour of deepest noon.
You will receive, before the hour of noon,
Aid, in the grim and breathless hour of noon,
From his youth up, and high as manhood's noon,
And solemn chase—from morn to sultry noon
At least, whatever fate the noon of life
At noon, the bank and hedgerows all the way
Noon-day. That on the noon-day bank of leisure lie.
Till a winter's noon-day placed her buried Son
A Spirit of noon-day is he;
Of the noon-day. Nor doubt that golden cords
Or fountain in a noon-day grove;
Who scattereth lustrous o'er noon-day,
On which the noonday sun shed light
Led by the stream, ere noon-day magnified
Beat on my roof, or, haply, at noon-day, Noontide. By the lake's edge, she rose—to face the noontide heat;
Host of his welcome inn, the noon-tide bower,
Ye lovely maidens that in noontide shade
And louder torrents stun the noon-tide hill,
By veil of noontide darkness overcast?
May meet at noontide; Fear and trembling Hope,
Her face from summer's noontide heat
The noon-tide hour; though truly some there are Where oft the venturesome heifer drinks the noontide
breeze.

Myriads of notes attest her subtle skill;
The harmony thy notes most gladly make
From the shore come the notes . . .
As if his heart by notes were stung
These notes of thine—they pierce and pierce;
Check with thy notes the impulse which, betrayed
List to those shriller notes!—that march
"Come, if the notes thine ear may pierce,
The birds pour forth their souls in notes
The mimic notes, striking upon his ear
Vast is the compass and the swell of notes:
Your inarticulate notes with the voice of words!
Some intermingled notes that plead
The sweetest notes must terminate and die;
Dull, flagging notes that with each other jar?"
And perfect harmony of notes, achieved
With its twin notes inseparably paired.
More welcome notes to weary haods
White grove and river notes would lead,
To utter notes of gladness,
And gladsome notes my lips can breathe,
Soft notes, awful as the omen
Apt language, ready as the tuneful notes
Notes shrill and wild with art more musical:
Thy mountain notes with simple skill;
Heart-deaf to those rebounding notes,
Verse to glad notes prophetic of the hour
The notes whose first faint greeting startled me,
And notes of minstrelsy were heard
Is traceable a vestige of the notes
The notes, in prelude, ROSLIN! to a blank
Notes could we hear as of a fairy shell
Wild notes she in his hearing sang,
Of awful notes, whose concord shall not fail;
The notes luxuriate, every stone is kissed
To a grieved heart the notes are benisons.
I heard a thousand blended notes,
Some notes prelusive, from the round of songs

Like those self-solacing, those under, notes
Some with their notes another manner feigned;
—As thro' th' astrooish'd woods the notes ascend,
Or, led by distant warbling notes, surveys,
Beneath some rock, listening to notes that are
But hardly less industrious; with shrill notes
Our shores in England,—from those loftiest notes
His flageolet to liquid notes of love
Sing notes of greeting to strange fields or groves,
Blithe notes of music, suddenly let loose
Your prized companions.—Many are the notes
Not unaccompanied with tuneful notes
Inaudible by daylight, blend their notes
Continuation haply of the notes
Winds pipe through fading woods; but those blithe notes
Around him, drinking in the impassioned notes
'Is this the whistling plough-boy whose shrill notes
This he is freed from, and from thousand notes
In notes which mountain echoes would take up

Nothing. Marks nothing but the red sun's setting round,
In converse that ensued she nothing spake;
And nothing to my mind a sweeter pleasure brought.
Were not for me, brought up in nothing ill:
And nothing less would satisfy him? No less;
Shine calmly as if nothing ailed the sky:
And substance, nothing differing from his own,
say nothing which might have set you at ease?
Is there nothing to be done?
But did he utter nothing? See him there!
You should prepare to meet him. I have nothing
'Twas nothing more than darkness deepening darkness,

In search of nothing that this earth can give,
There's nothing to see but a cushion of snow,
Nothing but silence and empty space;
Was nothing, scarcely can be caught, yet 'twas bounteously bestowed,
Minds that have nothing to confer
There's nothing stirring in the house
Shall I admit that nothing can restore
There's nothing that can ease my pain."
As careless as if nothing were,
But nothing from their inward selves had they to fear.
Yet nothing daunted,
Praise of which I nothing know.
Sees nothing, and can scarcely hear them.
Says nothing—till at last he spies
Is nothing that that radiant pomp so good as we have here?
Where nothing was; and firm as some old Tower

Nothing—continued.
And breathe as in a world where nothing can go wrong.
There's nothing that I would not do;
And it was nothing more.
There's nothing to be seen but woods,
He sees the Ass—and nothing living
Hath shown that nothing human can be clear

That of its native self can nothing feed:
With action, were as nothing, patriot Friend!
And, seeing this, own nothing in its stead.
Where, Cavendish, thine seems nothing but a name!
Thus nothing here provokes the strong
Of which we nothing know.
Yet in themselves are nothing! One decree
Seem vain and hollow; I find nothing great:
Nothing is left which I can venerate;
The mighty debt which nothing can repay!
And nothing in our hearts we found
A lovely One, who nothing hears
Hope nothing, if I thus may speak
Hope nothing, I repeat; for we
On the green herb, and nothing heeding,
For what contend the wise?—for nothing less
We, nothing loth a lingering course to measure,
And nothing save the moving ship's own light
Her head, and nothing loth her Majesty
This Homestead, placed where nothing could be seen,

That nothing of itself will come,
Nothing? Heaven keep us from a lower stage!
Which nothing less than Infinite Power could give.
Before me?—nothing blemished the fair sight;
Nothing has he now to dread.
Then Goody, who had nothing said,
Of some old British Chief: 'tis nothing more
"This Latin knew he nothing what it said,
All green and white; and nothing else was seen.
Nay, nothing shall we bring thereto, quoth I,
All else is nothing,—Did occasion suit
A power is gone, which nothing can restore;
Was nothing but a name.
Though nothing can bring back the hour
Be nothing better than a wandering cloud,
And renders nothing back. Was it for this
Was nothing but the stars and the grey sky
And nothing cheered our way till first we saw
Nothing but a wild field where they were sown.
Working within us,—nothing less, in truth,
Herself were nothing, a mere pensioner
Submits to nothing less than taking in Nothing is listened to. But these, I fear,
Nothing was safe: the elder-tree that grew
Of orders and degrees, I nothing found
Seemed nothing out of nature's certain course,
And placid, and took nothing from the man
Dread nothing? From this height I shall not stoop
That nothing hath a natural right to last.
A river of Blood, and preached that nothing else
And nothing less), when, finally, to close
Nothing but happiness, in some lone nook,
Be mean, have nothing lofty of their own,
Was nothing either seen or heard that checked
Which speak of nothing more than what we are,
We parted, nothing willingly; and now
Little to praise, and nothing to regret,
With nothing better, in the still night air,
Such doom was hers; yet nothing could subdue
Nothing to speed the day, or cheer the mind;
Nothing to praise, to teach, or to command!
Who here forgets her errand, nothing loth
Yet nothing to be seen but lovely pomp
These narrow bounds, and think of nothing more,
And exaltation. Nothing at that time

Nothing-doing. Who might have found a nothing-doing hour
Nothingness. Flesh to exalt than prove its nothingness.
Notice. A thing worth further notice, we must act
A notice for your Daughter, that she may know
Stranger to me and yet my friend, a simple notice came,
Notice punctual as the minute,
Might see and notice not. Beside the brook
Which, if at such short notice he should go,
Some shining notice will be there,
The whip's loud notice from the door,
With some uncertain notice, as might seem
He not unmoved did notice now
Notice or name!—It quivers down the hill,
She sate, from notice turning not away,
Those louder cries give notice that the Bird,
Those had given earliest notice, as the lark
The Infant's notice of his second birth—
A puzzling notice of thy whereabouts—
On mortal notice.—Glory of the vale,
And, by that simple notice, the repose
Others do rather from their notice shrink,
To public notice, with reluctance strong,

Notice—continued.

Sent welcome notice of the rising moon,
An artless rustic's notice, this way less,
To give me timely notice, and straightway,
Would now direct thy notice. Yet in spite
Offered to notice by less daring pens,
Without a separate notice: many books
Due to this timely notice, unawares
Of public notice—an offensive light
Deserving notice have escaped regard,
To notice old forgotten principles,
That fragrant notice of a pleasant shore
From the world's notice to a rural home.
Will force upon his notice; undeterred
His countenance comes too late, With joy I saw
His countenance gave notice that my zeal
With a brief notice when, and how, and where,
Attract your notice; staller than could else
Rise to the notice of a serious mind
And notice forced upon incurious ears;
Are capable to notice or discern
When to those shining fields our notice first Cannot but notice among men and things)
In courting notice; and the ground all paved
To such will we restrict our notice, else
By notice indirect, or blunt demand
Retired from notice, lost in attributes
Failed not to notice, inly pleased, and said:—
Directing notice, merely from a wish
Noticeable. A noticeable Man with large grey eyes,
That noticeable kindness of heart.
Noticeful. Is it possible? One thing you noticed not:
He reck's not human law; and I have noticed
And unbridged stream, such as you may have noticed
Shades of the Past, oft noticed with a sigh,
You might have noticed, busily engaged,
Not wished for; sometimes noticed with a sigh.
Notices. Here as elsewhere, to notices that make
Of these and other kindred notices
How arch his notices, how nice his sense
My earliest notices; with these compared Closed the preparatory notices
Of less particular notices assigned
Nothing. Of even the least emotion. Noting this,
To the sea-coast, noting that each man frames
And, noting that my eye was on the tree,
The old Man, noting this, resumed, and said,
Noting that in despite of their commands
Notion. No notion have they—not a thought,
Were a vain notion; but the hope is dear
Their notion of its perfect rest.
Promptly replied—"My notion is the same.
By each new upstart notion? In the ports
Notions. See Book-notions.
With speculative notions rashly sown,
Troubled long with warring notions
And heard their notions; nor did they disdain
And thought that other notions were as sound,
To certain general notions, for the sake
And moral notions too intolerant,
Of spurious notions—worn as open signs
Enough if notions seemed to be high-pitched,
His notions to this standard; on this rock
How far those erring notions were reformed;
Notre. St. Denis, filled with royal tombs, or the Church of Notre Dame?
Notwithstanding. They, notwithstanding, had much love to spare.
This notwithstanding, being brought more near Naught. See Naught.
Naught but the chalets, flat and bare, on high
Naught round its darling precincts can he find
I yielded up those precious hopes, which naught
If naught in loveliness compare
Naught but the world-redeeming Cross
Though naught was left undone which staff, or voice,
Nor grieved if thou be set at naught:
Naught is there that you shall not see.
This Ship was naught to me, nor I to her,
And naught untunes that Infant's voice; no trace
Naught but that word assigned to the unknown,
For naught but what thy happiness could spare.
To thy beginning naught that doth present
Of that rash levy naught remained.
Naught heard, of ocean troubled or serene?
Naught but her changes. Thus, ungrateful Nation!
Naught equals when the hours are winged with crime)
Prayer's voiceless service; but now, seeking naught
And shunning naught, their own peculiar life
Naught I perceived within it dull or dim;
Naught but the heaven-directed spire,
Who had been naught, if Love had never been.
Naught wakens or disturbs it's tranquil tides;
Naught but the char that for the may-fly leaps,
Naught else of man or life remains behind
Naught but the herds that pasturing upward creep,
Striving to hide, what naught could heal, the wounds

Nourish. Nourish the hope that memory lacks not power
Ere they descend to nourish root and stalk
Nourish the sufferers then; and mists, that brood
Nourished. A morbid pleasure nourished, tracing here
I had been nourished by the sickly food
And Mina, nourished in the studious shade,
Here did not kill, but nourished, Piety.
How nourished here through such long time
Are nourished and invisibly repaired;
Nourished Imagination in her growth.
Nourishment. With a hard bed and scanty nourishment,
By nourishment that came unsought; for still
And deals it out, their regular nourishment
It draws its nourishment imperceptibly—
Some nourishment, as trees do by their roots,
That gave them ourishment. When frosty winds Novel. With aspects novel to my sight; but still Prompt transformation works the novel Lore
When novel trusts by folly are betrayed,
That flashed upon me from this novel show
A novel scene, did often in this way
And through the nation spread a novel heat
In the French tongue, a Novel of Voltaire,
Novelties. Among the novelties of morn,
Of novelties in Church and State;
Thao shaping novelties for times to come,
I hasten; there, by novelties in speech,
Pampering myself with meagre novelties
And all the laboured novelties at best
Novelty. Of novelty amid the sacred wreck
And brooks were like a dream of novelty
Of novelty survived for scenes like these;
Custom and habit, novelty and change;
Worn out in greatness, stripped of novelty,
Amusing, yet uneasy, novelty,
Was catching at some novelty of spring.
November. One beautiful November night,
With stinted kindness. In November days,
November's. With a step quickened by November's cold,
Novice. An eager Novice robed in fluttering gown!
Yet many a Novice of the cloistral shade,
Even to the rudest novice of the Schools.
Teaching some Novice of the sisterhood
Now. (Partial list.)
In what alone is ours, the living Now.
Past, future, shrinking up beneath the incumbent
Now;
When I gave way to your request; and now,
Where now we dwell.—For many years I bore
It could not be. And yet I now remember
Now she is gone, I fain would call her back.
Why now—but yesterday I overlooked
But 'tis all over now. That good old Lady
Now I do love thee. I am thunderstruck.
His voice—methinks I hear it now, his voice
That I have been his comforter till now!
How now, what mean you? Truly, I was going
Why do I tremble now?—Is not the depth
It now becomes my duty to resume it.
Now, on my life, I grieve for you. The misery
Perchance you think so now? I cannot do it:
I now perceive we do mistake our masters,
With which he gave the boom—I see it now!
Now may I perish if this turn do more
Now I could laugh till my ribs ached. Oh, Fool!
With understanding spirit now may I look
Whose blaze is now subdued to tender gleams,

Now—continued.

That patience now doth seem a thing of which
 And this alone—the life which now I live . . .
 Now is there not good reason to break forth
 Not for a moment could I now behold . . .
 It is not now as it hath been of yore :—
 Where is it now, the glory and the dream ?

Nowhere. But where the sower dwelt was nowhere to be found.
 And nowhere upon earth is place so fit
 Stirred nowhere without weapons, that full soon
 Up-raught in whirlwinds, nowhere can find rest.
 Stirred nowhere but an urgent equipage
 Would wrong these nowhere ; least of all
 Can nowhere move uncrossed by some new wall
 Are found in plenteous store, but nowhere such Earth, nowhere unembellished by some trace . . .
 Here, nowhere, there, and everywhere at once.
 Nowhere, dominion o'er the enlightened spirit
 Or nowhere ; days unruffled by the gale
 Words of assurance can be heard ; if nowhere
 Issuing, however feebly, nowhere flows
 Seeks, yet can nowhere find, the light of truth.
 Upon this sacred ground, if nowhere else."

Noxious. Scorching blight or noxious dew,
 The dullest or most noxious, should exist . . .
 Strong to subvert our noxious qualities :

Nubian. Than a lone obelisk, 'mid Nubian sands,
Nuisances. To rid the world of nuisances ; ye proud,
Numa. As Numa loved ; when, in the Egerian grot,

Numb. My hands are numb. Ha ! ha ! 'tis nipping cold.
 Shakes her numb arm that halbers with its weight,
Number. That absorbs time, space, and number ;
 And all day long I number yet,
 Yet of their number no one dares to die ?
 Number their signs or instruments ?
 I see them there, in number nine,
 Of number, pure and silent Votaries
 Ten times their number, man and horse ;
 And strives the towers to number, that recline
 Match'd with an equal number of like age,
 Of tenderness, which I may number now
 With its rich freight ; their number he proclaims ;
 —Accomplish, then, their number ; and conclude
Numbered. Of sheep I numbered a full score . . .
 Oh ! might my name be numbered among theirs,
 Though here the Hermit numbered his last day
 Yet here at least, though few have numbered days
Numberless. With glorious forms in numberless array,
 The little rills, and waters numberless,
Numbers. And now to the sea-coast, with numbers more, we drew . . .
 If Nature to her tongue could measured numbers bring,
 Of tones and numbers all things are controlled,
 While trees, dim-seen, in frenzied numbers, tear
 Perhaps the plaintive numbers frow
 What if our numbers barely could defy
 Which, without aid of numbers, I sustain,
 Numbers exceeding credible account
 Whose were the numbers, where the loss,
 The foe from numbers courage drew . . .
 For One who speaks in numbers ; ampler scope
 With numbers near, alas ! no company . . .
 A prophetic, poetic numbers came . . .
 In lines and numbers, and, by charm severe,
 The appropriate sense, in Latin numbers couched :
 Of numbers crowded on their native soil,
 Where numbers overwhelm humanity,

Numerous. Dwarf pannered steeds, and men, and numerous wains :
 Else can ye hope but with such numerous foes
 Perchance as numerous, overpeers the rock
 Gave to my charge Urbino's numerous flock . . .
 Forms, images, nor numerous other aids
 668 Prelude 5. 200
 Whether by native prose, or numerous verse . . .
 I would give utterance in numerous verse . . .
 His Parents, with their numerous offspring, dwelt ;
 To numerous self-denials, Margaret
 Numerous as stars ; that, by their onward lapse,
 She with a numerous issue filled his house,
Nun. A nun demure of lowly port ;
 The holy time is quiet as a Nun . . .
 And, if the glory reached the Nun,
 There Venus sits disguised like a Nun,—
 The lovely Nun (submissive, but more meek
 Where once came monk and nun with gentle stir,
 Pure as the holiest cloistered nun
 Dumb creatures find him tender as a nun,
 Velled nun, or pilgrim resting on his staff ;
Nun-like. Of nun-like females, with soft motion, glide Nunnery. What change shall happen next to Nunnery Dell ?

Nun's. Listening to nun's faint throbb of holy fear,
 Of the pure spring (they call it the " Nun's Well,"
Nuns. Nuns fret not at their convent's narrow room ;
 Unhappy Nuns, whose common breath's a sigh
 That voice which soothed the Nuns while on the steps . . .

Nuns—continued.

To mind the living presences of nuns ; . . .
Nuptial. Their nuptial song, a gladsome air ; . . .
 Give, on this well-known couch, one nuptial kiss . . .
 Flowers strewed the ground ; the nuptial feast . . .
Nuptials. These ? humble nuptials to proclaim or grace ?
 Not long the Nuptials were delayed ; . . .
Nurse. —And let him nurse his fond deceit,
 Could find delight to nurse itself so strangely,
 A faithful nurse thou hast ; the dam that did thee
 year . . .
 The nurse said to me, ' Tears should not . . .
 Both for her Messenger and Nurse ;
 "The anchor of my purest thoughts, the nurse,
 Him Virtue's Nurse, Adversity, in vain
 And " O beloved Nurse," she said,
 The homely Nurse doth all she can
 Off he descends to nurse the brother pair,
 None but myself shall nurse my boy,"
 Wherewith to nurse the child—and still he pin'd.
 Upon the smooth flat stones : the Nurse is here,
 More-wise desires, and simpler manners :—nurse
 And nurse ' the dreadful appetite of death ?'
 They soon were proud of ; tended it and nursed ;
 The pair, whose infant she was bound to nurse,
 Must tune his pipe, insidiously to nurse . . .
Nursed. No common soul. In youth by science
 nursed,
 Though at my bosom nursed ; this woeful gain . . .
 Thee winged Fancy took, and nursed
 Where Trent is nursed, far southward ! Cambrian hills
 O, nursed at happy distance from the cares . . .
 But, nursed in mountain solitude,
 Have they, who nursed the blossom, seen . . .
 He, nursed 'mid savage passions that defile . . .

What dreams encompassed ? Was the intruder
 nursed
 Bards, nursed on blue Plinlimmon's still abode,
 Among the mountains were we nursed, loved
 Stream !
 Nursed in the quiet Abbey of St. Bees . . .
 Produced you nursed in various climes,
 From the most gentle creature nursed in fields
 Nursed in his Mother's arms, who sinks to sleep,
 Though mutually unknown, yea, nursed and reared
 In all my early feelings had been nursed—
 Tall ash-tree, soign by winds, by vapours nursed,
Nurses. Ye sacred Nurseries of blooming Youth !
Nurse's. To blend his murmurs with my nurse's song,
Nursing. Be tender as a nursing mother's heart ;
Nursling. See Flower-pot-nursing,
 A nursing babe her only comforter ;
 Upon the nursing which his arms embraced . . .
 The softest Nursing of a gorgeous palace
 A nursing couch upon her mother's knee,
 Take, cradled Nursing of the mountain, take
 Whose nursing current brawls o'er mossy stones,
 Conscious Nursing, to thy breast !
 And the besprinkled nursing, unrequired
 Some nursing of the mountains, which she leads Nurslings. And that, so placed, my Nurslings may requite . . .
 The Muse's modest nurslings underwent
Nurture. Can drink its nurture from the scantiest rill :
 For nurture or repose ;
 And all that generous nurture breeds to make . . .
Nurtured. Nurtured, as thy mien he speaks, in high degree,
 Nurtured by hospitable hands : . . .
 And nurtured in a fickle clime, . . .

Nuts. See Earth-nuts,
 With all its mealy clusters of ripe nuts,
Nutting-crook. A nutting-crook in hand ; and turned my steps . . .

Nymph. See Sea-nymph, Wood-nymph.
 The Patriot nymph starts at imagined sounds,
 Vouchsafes her lessons, bounteous Nymph . . .
 While to these shades a sister Nymph I call . . .
 Swift as a Thracian Nymph o'er field and height !
 Dear Liberty ! stern Nymph of soul untamed,
 Sweet Nymph, O rightly of the mountains named !
 And that intrepid Nymph, on Uri's steep descended !
 The thousandth part of what the Nymph bestows ;
 From the sage Nymph appearing at his wish . . .

Nymph-haunted. Like some Nymph-haunted grot beneath the roaring sea . . .
Nymph-like. That, nymph-like she is fleet and strong,
 Thy nymph-like step swift-bounding o'er the lawn,
 A nymph-like liberty, in nymph-like form,
Nymphs. See Sea-nymphs, Wood-nymphs.
 Those laureat wreaths ungathered which the Nymphs
 Gaz'd on thy lovely Nymphs with fond delight,
 Thy Nymphs with more than earthly beauty bright ;
 And hence, a beaming Goddess with her Nymphs,
 Wasting that love the nymphs implored in vain . . .
Nysa's. In Nysa's isle, the embellished grot ; . . .

Observance—continued.

Vain thoughts, and speed ye, with observance due
 Cast upon this observance may renew
 In due observance of her pious wish Observances. And shrunk from vain observances, to lurk
 Of these benign observances prevail :
Observant. Observant, studious, thoughtful, and refreshed
Observation. By observation of affinities
 As nicest observation furnished hints
 From human observation, as if yet
 With transient observation ; and thence caught
 From sense and observation, it subsists
Observations. The observations made in later youth,
 His observations, and the thoughts his mind
 By observations transient as the glance
 Of observations natural ; and, thus
Observe. Do you observe him, and endeavour
 It was our occupation to observe
 Observe each wing—a tiny van !
 Observe the faithful flowers ! if small to great
 Observe how dewy Twilight has withdrawn
 Content to observe, to achieve, and to enjoy
 Ruaming at large, to observe, and not to feel
 They act, or they recede, observe, and feel !
 Observe their ways ; and, free from envy, find
 With vacant mind, not seldom may observe
 Here reigns the Russian, there the Turk ; observe
 Their tardy steps give leisure to observe,
 —“ Observe,” the Vicar said, “ you rocky isle
 If rightly we observe and justly weigh)
Observed. Have you observed a tuft of winged seed
 Of those plain-living people now observed
 Have seen her,—her direction have observed
 Observed where pastime only had been sought,
 Who, looking inward, have observed the ties
 (Though they had long been carefully observed),
 I felt, observed, and pondered ; did not judge,
 He had observed the progress and decay
 And, looking round me, now I first observed
 Have acted, suffered, travelled far, observed
 Observed the liberating stroke—and blessed
 —“ ‘Tis strange,” observed the Solitary, “ strange
 Or rather, let us say, how least observed,
Observers. Are strict observers ; and not negligent
Observes. The one that feels, the other that observes
Obsolete. Reviving obsolete idolatry
 Obsolete lamps, whose light no time recalls ;
 Nor is, they feel, its wisdom obsolete—
 Conjuring up scenes as obsolete in freaks
 Of long-past times, nor obsolete in ours
Obstacle. Our daily raiment seems no obstacle
 Triumphant over every obstacle Obstacles. What obstacles hath he failed to overcome ?
 O'er chasms with new-fallen obstacles bestrown,
Obstinate. The obstinate bolt of a small iron door
 The Emathian phalanx, nobly obstinate ;
 Clarkson ! it was an obstinate hill to climb :
 Revive, their obstinate winter pass away,
 The obstinate pride and wanton revelry
 But for those obstinate questionings
 Though obstinate on this way, yet on that
 But though not deaf, nor obstinate to find Obstinately. Yet obstinately cherishing itself :
Obstreperous. But by the obstreperous voice of higher still ;
 The obstreperous city ; on the barren seas
Obstruct. See, hear, obstruct, or mitigate
 And all that they can further or obstruct !
Obstructed. Of merry England, are obstructed less Obstruction. Viewless obstruction ; whence, all unforewarned,
 Free from obstruction ; and the boat advanced Obstructions. Are these obstructions insurmountable ?
 By these obstructions, 'round the shady stones
 Of near obstructions, and is privileged Obtain. And such chance food as outlaws can obtain,
 And something also did my worth obtain ;
 More humble favours may obtain
 Obtain reluctant hearing. Plain his garb ;
 Rise with the lark ! your matins shall obtain
 Raising his voice triumphantly, “ obtain
 “ The way,” said I, “ to court, if not obtain
 The unhappy Alia hoping to obtain
 By ruinous contest, to obtain a seat
 Fallacious, or shall righteousness obtain Obtained. Full off, our wish obtained, deeply we sigh ;
 “ The pledge obtained, the solemn word
 Had been obtained ;—the Wanderer then resolved
 From sense and reason less than these obtained,
 Who, when such good can be obtained, would strive
 Began in honour, gradually obtained
Obtaining. Obtaining ampler boon, at every step,
Obtains. Where Piety, as they believe, obtains Obtrusive. Or, from the bending rocks, obtrusive cling,
 If ever an obtrusive word were dropped

Obvious. Of obvious shelter, as a shipless sea
 By obvious signal to the world's protection
 For what was now so obvious. To abide,
 Oft as appears a grove, or obvious hill,
 For health, and time in obvious duty spent,
 And for less obvious benefits, that find
 That obvious emblem giving to the eye
 If each most obvious and particular thought,
 Is scarcely obvious ; but, that common sense
 Gave obvious instance of the sad effect
Obviously. Most obviously simplicity and power.
 More obviously the self-same influence rules
Occasion. That thou shouldst ever meet a like occasion
 The occasion of his woe, as best he might ;
 All else is nothing.—Did occasion suit
 Such apt occasion that I dread a snare
 Pointed upon occasion to the site
 Oft was occasion given me to perceive
 Of grief, depart without occasion given
 As might from that occasion be distilled,
 For this occasion daintily adorned,
 Occasion given him to display his skill,
Occasional. Occasional, an accidental grace
Occasion's. Meek, yielding to the occasion's call,
Occasions. Happy occasions oft by self-mistrust
 On kind occasions I may wait,
 Is pleasurable—because occasions rise
 Even as the heart's occasions might require,
 Those helps for his occasions ever near Occult. For practising occult and perilous lore) Occupants. Asks of the clouds what occupants they hide—
 Through fields whose thrifty occupants abide
 Whose cawing occupants with joy proclaim
Occupation. Of occupation led from height to height
 “Where was their occupation and abode
 It was our occupation to observe
 I know him and his occupation ;
 “ What occupation do you there pursue ?
 Of occupation, not by fashion led,
 For occupation of a magic wand,
 Who lacking occupation looks far forth
 Hence endless occupation for the Snul,
 “Seven years of occupation undisturbed
 Of household occupation ; no nice arts
 Betray their occupation, rising up,
Occupations. And from their occupations out of doors
 For patriarchal occupations, named
 Whose occupations really I loved ;
 His comforts, native occupations, cares,
 And occupations which her beauty adorned,
 In trivial occupations, and the round
 These occupations oftentimes deceived
 The simple occupations of their sires,
 Of trivial occupations well devised,
Occupied. See Self-occupied.
 That occupied his days in solitude
 Are occupied with one delight !
 Of the spectators occupied
 Less occupied the mind, and sentiments
 Perchance too lightly occupied, or lulled
 Thus occupied in mind I paced along,
 Was occupied by oaken benches ranged
 But, while his blindness thus is occupied,
 Are occupied ; and the Soul, that would incline Occupies. It occupies—what consciousness retains Occupyy. See Pre-occupyy.
 To occupy—both fools, or wise alike,
 For life to occupy in love and rest ;
 Your noble birthright, ye that occupy
 For fickle, short-lived clouds to occupy,
 To those who occupy and till the ground,
 That occupy their places, and, though off
 Were they, to seize and occupy the sense ;
 And with their parents occupy the skirts
Occurrence. The dignities of plain occurrence then Ocean. The very ocean hath its hour of rest
 How quiet 'round me ship and ocean were !
 Is, after conflict, quiet as the ocean,
 In sky, air, earth, and ocean
 —Back to the joyless Ocean thou art gone ;
 How would it please old Ocean to partake,
 And the Sea-horse, though the ocean
 He 'cross the ocean came
 To view the ocean wide and bright,
 And the round ocean and the living air,
 Ridge, and gulf, and distant ocean
 Main ocean, breaking audibly, and stretched
 Pervade the lonely ocean far
 Renewed throughout the bounds of earth or ocean,
 That Ocean is a mighty harmonist ;
 There spreads the famed Pacific Ocean !
 Huge Ocean shows, within his yellow strand,
 Sky without cloud—ocean without a wave ;
 And Ocean bellow from his rocky shore,
 ‘Tis said, fantastic ocean doth enfold
 Like something out of Ocean sprung
 But Ocean under magic heaves,
 Sleep fell upon the air, and stilled the ocean,
 Ve winds of ocean, and the midland sea,

Ocean—continued.

Of ocean for her own domain.
 And angry Ocean roars a vain appeal.
 Into main Ocean they, this deed accoust
 Purer than foam on central ocean tost;
 Like Ocean burning with purple flame;
 Of Ocean roused into his fiercest mood,
 Deeper than ocean, in the immensity
 Nought heard, of ocean troubled or serene?
 Through every clime and ocean did I range,
 Since risen from ocean, ocean to defy,
 Ocean has proved its strength, and of its grace
 Blank ocean and mere sky, support that mood
 Of Ocean, press right on; or gently wind,
 Ocean and Earth contending for regard.

Even though the Atlantic ocean roll between.
 On earth, air, ocean, or the starry sky,
 The birds shall sing and ocean make
 From the same beach one ocean to explore
 Sweet as the spring, as ocean deep;
 Where summer Suns in ocean sink to rest,
 The Ocean; not to comfort the oppressed,
 From a tumultuous ocean, trees and towers
 To the broad ocean and the azure heavens
 Old Ocean, in his bed left singed and bare,
 Sees annually, if clouds towards either ocean
 All over this still ocean; and beyond,
 Upon the billowy ocean, as it lay
 Ocean and earth, the solid frame of earth
 Of a living ocean; or, to sink engulfed,
 And ocean, and look down upon the works,
 The ocean paid him tribute from the stores
 The sleepless ocean murmurs for all ears;
 Of ocean press right on, or gently wind,

Ocean's. 'Twas dark and void as ocean's watery realm

And of the ocean's dismal breast
 With green hills fenced, with ocean's murmur
 lulled."

Upon the battle field, or under ocean's waves;
 Ocean's o'erpowering murmurs have set free
 We sojourn stuned by Ocean's ceaseless roar;
 Bays, gulfs, and ocean's Indian width, shall be,
 So when on Ocean's face the storm subsides,
 And ocean's liquid mass, in gladness lay

Ocean-tide. While rising, like the ocean-tide,
 O'clock. Alas! 'tis the sound of the eight o'clock bell.
 'Tis eight o'clock,—a clear March night,
 From eight o'clock till five.

October. When from October clouds a milder light
 At the first nipping of October frost,
 October's. (October's workmanship to rival May)
Odd. What an odd moaning that is!—Mighty odd
 Such an odd such a kind happy creature as he.
 Some quaint odd plaything of elaborate skill,
 To what odd purpose have the darlings turned

Ode. An Ode, in passion uttered, which foretold Odin. Odin, the Father of a race by whom Odin's. For the blood-thirsty mead of Odin's riotous Hall.

Odious. Odious to me the pomp of regal court,
 In odious litigation; and full long,
 Stood almost single; uttering odious truth—
 Formal, and odious, and contemptible.

Odorous. The tapers burn; the odorous incense feeds
 Of odorous incense; while a hundred more
Odours. Exhaled, the essential odours climb,
 With bright jonquils, their odours lavishing
 Wide-spreading odours from her flowery wreaths.
 Like odours, sweet as if the same)
 Of elevation; let their odours float
 More sweet than odours caught by him who sails
 Delicious odours! music sweet.

O'er. (Partial list.) See Over.
 But 'twas an angry night, and o'er our heads
 Has peered o'er the beeches, their work is begun:
 And One a Tempest—and, the voyage o'er,
O'erborne, etc. See Overborne, etc.
 Yet Nature, with excess of grief o'erborne,

O'erhung. And soon she reached a spot o'erhung with trees
 Rolled over a wide plain o'erhung with clouds, O'erlabour'd. Shot stinging through her stark o'erlabour'd bones.
O'erleap. In scanty strings, had tempted to o'erleap O'erload. And we will ne'er o'erload thee more."
O'erlook. Where antique roots its bustling course o'erlook,
 Where antique roots its bustling path o'erlook,
O'erlooks. O'erlooks the torrent breathing showers O'erpowered. O'erpowered my better reason, and the bird
 With still increasing weight; he was o'erpowered.
O'erpowering. Ocean's o'erpowering murmurs have set free

O'ershade. The bat, lured forth where trees the lane o'ershade,
O'ershades. The eagle of the Alps o'ershades her prey.
 Dewy night o'er shades the ground;
 The eagle of the Alps o'er shades his prey.
O'ershadow. To o'ershadow by no native right
 The thick-ribbed walls that o'er shadow the gate.
O'ershadowing. Words cannot paint the o'er shadowing yew-tree bough,
O'ershrouds. Thus often, when thick gloom the east o'er shrouds,
O'er spread. Thou turn'st the Wheel that slept with dust o'er spread;
 Ye dewy mists the arid rocks o'er-spread
 With cheeks o'er spread by smiles of baleful glow,
 By which it had been bleached, o'er spread the board.
O'er spreads. Spires, rocks, and lawns a browner night o'er spreads,
O'er take. The post-boy, when his rattling wheels o'er take.
O'er tasked. Striding along as if o'er tasked by Time, O'erthrow. Death blasted all. Death suddenly o'er-threw
 That violent commotion, which o'erthrow, O'erthrown. That was no life for me—I was o'er-thrown,
 And mortal hopes defeated and o'erthrown
 Yet hints at peace to be o'erthrown,
 Memento uniscribed of Pride o'erthrown,
 This melancholy waste of hopes o'erthrown,
 When Englishmen by thousands were o'erthrown,
 How they had prospered; how they were o'erthrown

O'ertook. That a fierce storm o'er took us, worn with travel,
O'ertops. That, carried sceptre-like, o'ertops the head
O'erturn. Strong to o'erturn, strong also to build up.
O'erturned. She almost has o'erturned the Horse, O'erwalk. O'erwalk the slender plank from side to side;
 O'erwalk the viewless plank from side to side;
 O'er-walk the chasmy torrent's foam-lit bed,
O'erweening. O'erweening Art was caught as in a snare,
 O'erweening Statesmen have full long relied
 With o'erweening complacency our state to compare.
O'erwhelm. And his crime, through the pains that o'erwhelm him, desoried,

 Like fate; was hurried off, a helpless prey,
 The cock far off sounded his clarion throat;
 Why, this is noble I shake her off at once.
 Cast off by her Betrayer, she dwells alone,

 Or mourn him dead. A man by men cast off,
 Was off for ever; and the men, from whom

 Cut off from all intelligence with man,
 Then off she hies; but with a prayer,
 Or hast thou put off wings which thou in heaven
 dost wear?
 Here broke off the dangerous converse
 And starting off again with freak as sudden;
 Off, off! or, puny Thing!
 At once far off, and near.
 Off to some other play the joyous Vagrants flew!
 A jutting crag,—and off I ran,
 —Cast off your bonds, awake, arise,
 Off flew the Boat—away she flees,
 Then clear the weeds from off his Grave,
 She rose, and off at once the yoke she threw.
 I saw far off the dark top of a Pine
 Far off and faint, and melting into air,
 And smote off his head on the stones of the porch!
 Or He, whose bonds dropped off, whose prison doors
 Off to the mountains, like a covering
 Set off her brightness with a pleasing shade.

Of his old cottage,—as it chanced, that day,
 Of carded wool which the old man had piled
 The old house-clock is decked with a new face ;
 A little—yet a little,—and old Walter,
 Year after year the old man still kept up
 His pace was never that of an old man :
 The old man was a father to the boys,
 This old Man, in the day of his old age,
 They loved this good old Man ?— They did—
 and truly : . . . 99 Brothers 240

 Not old, though something past her prime :
 Old times, thought I, are breathing there ;
 Old Timothy took up his staff, and he shut

 Or she will die, old Susan Gale, . . . 126 Idiot Boy 24

 Who is it, but old Susan Gale ? . . . 129 Idiot Boy 276
 An old man, stout of heart, and strong of limb . . . 131 Michael 42
 His Helpmate was a comely matron, old—
 To deem that he was old,—in shepherd's phrase,
 And his old Father both betook themselves
 There by the light of this old lamp they sat,
 Both old and young, was named THE EVENING
 STAR. . . . 133 Michael 139
 This son of his old age was yet more dear—
 Old Michael, while he was a babe in arms, . . . 133 Michael 143
 Under the large old oak, that near his door . . . 133 Michael 165
 Two steady roses that were five years old ;
 But soon as Luke, full ten years old, could stand
 And that the old Man's heart seemed born again ?
 Had prest upon him ; and old Michael now
 That any old man ever could have lost,
 What can be gained ? " At this the old Man
 paused, . . . 134 Michael 179
 And her face brightened, The old Man was glad,
 Had to her house returned, the old Man said,
 And thus the old Man spake to him :—" My son . . . 135 Michael 255
 136 Michael 316
 136 Michael 331

Old—continued.

As well thou knowest, in us the old and young
He sobbed aloud. The old Man grasped his hand,
Received at others' hands; for, though now old
That thou shouldst go." At this the old Man
paused;

The old Man's grief broke from him; to his heart
Remember the old Man, and what he was
For the old Man—and 'tis believed by all
Then old, beside him, lying at his feet.
In those old romantic days
Which old folk, fondly pleased to trim
Familiarly of you and of old times.
Their ancient neighbour, the old steeple-tower,
Carried the Lady's voice,—old Skiddaw blew
In memory of affections old and true,
Sole-sitting by the shores of old romance.
How would it please old Ocean to partake,
That may respect the good old age
Our being, whether young or old,
Attained a good old age.
Than in old time;—thou not in vain
Or old man toying with his age?
Glad sight wherever new with old
The old mythologists, more impressed than we
Yet, while he thinks on times of old,
Under the brow of old Helvellyn—
While the old Familiar of the seas,
The lame, the sickly, and the old;
Old as the hills that feed it from afar,
And take to herself all the wonders of old;—
From the old and the young, from the poorest;
and there!

And Ruth, not seven years old,
Be broken down an old;
My old remembrance went from me wholly;
Nor all asleep—in his extreme old age;
Motionless as a cloud the old Man stood,
A gentle answer did the old Man make,
To gather leeches, being old and poor:
The old Man still talked talking by my side;
The old Man's shape, and speech—all troubled me:
"There is a Thorn,—it looks so old,
It looks so old and grey.
The pond—and Thorn, so old and grey;
"But that she goes to this old Thorn,
"Here in old time the hand of man hath been."
"A jolly place," said he, "in times of old!
And all old troubles now are ended.—
Hear it, good man, old in days!
By Voices how men lived of old.
Old frailties then recurred:—but lofty thought,
Then, when old Helvellyn won thee
A light to young and old.
But an old age serene and bright,
Haunts the old trunk; lamenting deeds of which
She bears the stringed lute of old romance,
Features to old ideal grace allied,
'Tis gone—with old belief and dream
Where nothing was; and firm as some old Tower
Old as the tiger's paw, the lion's mane
Thou wilt salute old memories as they throng
In old time worshipped as the god of verse,
Initiation in that mystery old.
Old Andes thrusts yon craggy spear
And through the yawning fissures old,
A Juggler's balls old Time about him tossed;
Old Skiddaw will look down upon the Spot
Shines with poetic radiance as of old;
Sick, hale, old, young, who cried before that cloud,
Of the old Sea some reverential fear,

Or hear old Triton blow his wreathed horn.
An old place, full of many a lovely brood,
Yon old grey Stone, protected from the ray
Though narrow be that old Man's cares, and near,
The poor old Man is greater than he seems:
Old Time, though he, gentlest among the Thralls
Over the minds of Poets, young or old!
To old affections, had been heard to plead
That Pile of Turf is half a century old;
And the old day was welcome as the young,
A poor old Dame will bless them for the boon:
Proud were ye, Mountains, when, in times of old,
And thrills the old sepulchral earth, around,
Shall dwell together till old Time
For I, methinks, till I grow old,
For old, unhappy, far-off things,
"For why?—because the good old rule
"Of old things all are over old,
The fate of those old Trees; and oft with pain

Till he was ten years old.
The cries which broke from old and young
Which old idolatry abused.
The homely beauty of the good old cause
Armoury of the invincible Knights of old:
Old things have been unsettled; we have seen
The great events with which old story rings
Come forth, ye old men, now in peaceful show
Old songs, the precious music of the heart!

Old—continued.

And, if old judgments keep their sacred course,
And piety towards God. Such men of old
Hath painted Winter like a traveller old,

That old decrepit Winter—He hath slain
On the remorseless hearts of men grown old
By piouss men of old;
Of some old Minster's venerable pile)
Withered, grotesque, immeasurably old,
That, shaped like old monastic turrets, rise
To sweep from many an old romantic strain
Thrice happy, burghers, peasants, warriors old,
Did mighty Tell repair of old—
But Truth inspired the Bards of old
Old Cham, the solar Deity, who dwells
The towers of old LUCERNE,
—Long may these homely Works devised of old,
Of old companionship, Time counts not minutes
Of the old minstrels and the border bards.—
Had flown with mine to old Helvellyn's brow, Pregnant with good. Young, Middle-aged, and Old,

Of young or old, warrior, or saint, or sage,
Those old credulities, to nature dear,
For old remembrance sake. And oft—where Spring
Whate'er assemblages of new and old,
See, where his difficult way that Old Man wins
If with old love of you, dear Hills! I share
A new magnificence that vies with old;
The old Egyptian's emblematic mark
And ye that guard them, Mountains old!
It lacked not old remains of hawthorn bowers,
Some Statue, placed amid these regions old,
New rites ordaining when the old are wrecked,
The old inventive Poets, had they seen,
By humble choice of plain old times, are seen
Feed it 'mid Nature's old felicities,
And of old honours, too, and passions high:
And echoes from old verse speak true,
While young delights on old encroach,
Needless renewal of an old delight?
Like this old helmet, or the eyeless skul
From Bolton's old monastic tower
And thither young and old repair,
For old magnificence undone;
Of middle-aged, and old, and young,
And heard old tales by the convent-fire,
That Old Man, studious to expound
Who, standing on this old church tower,
Beneath a loving old Man's view,
For the old and holy Church we mourn,
And greet the old paternal shield,
Fraternity of Barons old;
We, we, the sanctities of old
Where Rylstone's old sequestered Hall
"An old man's privilege I take:
You with my Father have grown old
"Hope," said the old Man, "must abide
And the stern old Lord of Rylstone-hall
Who with her Father had grown old
The old Man to the silent Maid,
Received the memory of old loves,
How they have scourged old foes, perfidious friends:

And some indignant Hills old names preserve,
Old laws, and ancient customs to derange,
Uncouth proximities of old and new;
Hope guides the young; but when the old must pass
Ah! if the old idolatry be spurned,
Where frauds were hatched of old, hath sorrow
past—

One (like those prophets whom God sent of old)
An old weak Man for vengeance thrown aside,
Come forth, ye drooping old men, look abroad,
Daily to think on old familiar doors,
They called Thee MERRY ENGLAND, in old time;
She smiled; but Time, the old Saturnian seer,
The old Tower's brow yellowed as with the beams
Off with you cloud, old Snafell! that thine eye
Of old grey stone, and high-horn name
Alas! too busy Rival of old Tyre,
With old poetic feeling, not for this,
But in old times Love dwelt not long
"Why, William, on that old grey stone,
I sit upon this old grey stone,
An old Man dwells, a little man,—
Old Simon to the world is left
This old Man doing all he could
To unearth the root of an old tree,
That at the root of the old tree
At which the poor old Man so long
With some old border-song, or catch
And thus the dear old Man replied,
A happy youth, and their old age
About the crazy old church-clock,
Extreme old age had wasted thee away,
Old household thoughts, in which thou hadst thy share
Old Wharf might heal her sorrow.

- Interpreting; or counting for old Time 498 * Enough of climbing 35
- The skies will weep o'er old men desolate:
The Old, by these revived, have said,
And I, grown old, but in a happier land,
Young England—what is then become of Old,
Of dear Old England? Think they she is dead,
Thousands, as toward yon old Lancastran Towers,
In angry spirits for her old free range,
On old temptations, might for ever blast.
An old resource to cheat a froward time!
For the old Manx-harvest to the Deep repair,
Of those old Patriarchs when from well to well
Dim memory keeping of its old intent. 505
- In days of old romance at Archimago's gate. 523 Epist. Beaumont 128
- With Young and Old warm greetings we exchange,
And forced to live on alms, this old Man fed
O that the good old Man had power to prove,
Issued forth with old and young,
Once he sate, as old hooks say,
Old Goody Blake was old and poor;
Two poor old Dames, as I have known,
Oh then how her old bones would shake!
And made her poor old bones to ache,
Than an old hedge to Goody Blake?
When her old bones were cold and chill,
This trespass of old Goody Blake;
He watched to seize old Goody Blake.
A-hed or up, to young or old;
And reconcile: and both with young and old
For whom, helike, the old Man grieves still more
Of some old British Chief: 'tis nothing more
For old Sir William as a gentle Knight,
By old Sir William and his quarry, leave
But as a child of twelvemonths old or less,
A little scholar, scarcely seven years old,
Old am I, and to genial pleasure slow;
And Love in old folk a great dotage is;
He may full soon go with an old man's hair.
Both his new sorrow and his joys of old,
He fell again into his sorrows old;
Thy horns were old as now upon that morrow,
He was so old, he seems not older now;
Within the old Man's hat; nor quits him so,
The old man does not change his course, the boy
This old Man creeps, the villagers in him
Of this old Mendicant, and, from her door
Be his the natural silence of old age!
That I sing of old Adam, the pride of old men.
All trades, as need was, did old Adam assume,
For he's not like an Old Man that leisurously goes
Old Adam will smile at the pains that have made
Like a magnet, the heart of old Adam can draw;
Now farewell, old Adam! when low thou art laid,
But its necessity in being old. 531
- The One, yet unbreeched, is not three birthdays old,
Is a cart-load of turf at an old woman's door?
Old Daniel his hand to the treasure will slide!
Old Daniel begins; he stops short—and his eye,
And now with old Daniel you see how it fares;
Old Man! whom so oft I with pity have eyed,
With envy, what the Old Man hardly feels.
Which Sion's Kings did consecrate of old;
To young and old; and how revered
Mourn, Shepherd, near thy old grey stone;
And hessings half a century old.
The feeling of my loss will ne'er be old;
Cased in the unfeeling armour of old time,
No more of old romantic sorrows,
Old Roman boats and figures thro' the shade,
The old grey stones the plaided chief surveys,
In all my goings, in the new and old
Our truth, when we, old yet unchilled by age,
Old Camus, too, on that prophetic night
New stores, or rescue from decay the old
Will settle on some British theme, some old
Old as creation, drinking in a pure
The labourer, and the old man who had sate
Gone was the old grey stone, and in its place
Of those soft stary nights, and that old Dame
Of the old grey stone, from her scant board, supplied.
Of the old church, that—though from recent showers
The old Lion and usurped his place, in slight
By poets in old time, and higher up
Wake where they waked, range that inclosure old,
Those venerable Doctors saw of old,
Appeared a different aspect of old age;
Remembrances before me of old men—
Old humourists, who have been long in their graves,
For the old Ferryman; to the shout the rocks
From my old Dame, so kind and motherly,
Where an old man had used to sit alone, 531

Old songs, the product of his native hills;
Whate'er the minister's old shelf supplied;
Where sate the old Man on the cottage-bench?
Why should a tear be on an old Man's cheek?
And begged of the old Man that, for my sake,
The shade, and look abroad. On this old bench
The old Man ceased: he saw that I was moved;
The old Man, noting this, resumed, and said,
The old Man rose, and, with a sprightly mien
As if the thought were but a moment old,
Old freedom was old servitude, and they 755 Recluse 1. 1. 801

One—continued.

One morning thus, by Esthwaite lake,
One impulse from a vernal wood
For so many strange contrasts in one human face :
And bring no book : for this one day
One moment now may give us more
And bring no book : for this one day
One prop he has, and only one,
One summer-day I chanced to see
—First learn to love one living man ;
Or art thou one of gallant pride,
Physician art thou ?—one, all eyes,
One that would peep and botanize
One to whose smooth-rubbed soul can cling
Of one tired out with fun and madness ;
I am not One who much or oft delight
Painted on rich men's floors, for one feast-night.
Thinly by a one night's frost ;
Now hear what one of elder days,
—Enough for one soft vernal day,
One precious, tender-hearted, scroll
That, with a perfect will in one accord
Voice but serves for one brief cry ;
Known but to this one release—
Can such a One, dear Babe ! though glad and proud
Revolve in one sure track ;
That, drawn from this one hour of rest,
Strip is the haughty one of pride,
While, as one kindly growth retires,
Permit not for one hour
One above all, a Monk who waits on God
For One, but surely not for One alone,
Are with one voice ; their flinty heart grew soft
One who would gather from eternal truth,
Be one fixed mind for all, thy rights approve
Copying with awe the one Paternal mind.
Is one great aim of penalty, extend
A creature horn of time, that keeps one eye
For One who speaks in numbers ; ampler scope
Where one poor Plane-tree, having as it might
One chimney smoking and its azure wreath,
While not one joy of ours by them was shared,
And to one purpose cleave, their Being's godlike
mate !
And humbler growths as moved with one desire
There, at the root of one particular tree,
Laid one by one, or scattered on the ground,
One living Stay was left, and on that one
One to whom Heaven assigns that mournful part
All in one deuteous task agree.
All that appeared was suitable to One
No one upon living ground,
Will often live in one small cottage ;
Of humblest Friends, bright Creature ! scorn not
one :
Yet one word more—one farewell word—a wish
Inspired by one whose very name bespeaks
Beating on one of those disastrous isles—
One is a Woman, a poor earthly sister,
That no one breathing should be left to perish,
Stepped One at dead of night,
A mighty One upon me gazed ;
For One who breathed unquiet air
To one muted Presence, above all,
One wooed the silent Art with studious pains :
And hither does one Poet sometimes row
As one of the departed,
If thou in the dear love of some one Friend
I in so fair a one had never been.
That shamefully they one and all were slain,
And one thing is therein which is not fair ;
For many a one hath virtues manifold,
Not one word have I now, I am so forlorn,
And one thing will I counsel thee also,
And I will sing one song, of many new,
And gathered each and all into one place ;
Then spake one Bird, and full assent all gave ;
For which I ask for guerdon but one boon,
With thy bright beams to guide me but one hour,
He drew his scraps and fragments, one by one ;
And the blue sky, one little span of earth
Some scattered leaf, or marks which, in one track,
That we have all of us one human heart.
—Such pleasure is to one kind Being known,
Takes one unsparring handful for the scrip
May one blade of grass spring up over thy head ;
The One, yet unbreached, is not three birthdays old,
' Twas a path trod by thousands ; but Daniel is one
And three, were it asked, would be rendered for one.
His gain, is one expression : every limb
I learned that one poor moment can suffice
We sail the sea of life—a Calm one finds,
And One a Tempest—and, the voyage o'er,
No—he was One whose memory ought to spread
One heart-relieving tear may claim ;
With one blind Sailor, rich in joy
Through one accord our voices raise,
But one dear remnant of the night—

One—continued.

For one poor moment's space to Thee,
 Of all her Voices, One! —and I look
 Yet for one happy issue; —and I look
 With two collateral stems sprung from one root;
 From the same beach one ocean to explore
 The rapt One, of the godlike forehead,
 —But there's a Tree, of many, one,
 I only have relinquished one delight
 Gives one bright glance, and sinks behind the hill.
 And one sole light shifts in the vale profound;
 —Without one hope her written grieis to blot,
 Deluded Hope for one short hour
 But for the poor dear sake of one
 Its one green island and its winding shores;
 A Glow-worm, never one, and this I knew.
 That last and dreary living one
 Be changed for one whose glory cannot fade.

One word he softly uttered,
 Of the one cottage which methought I saw.
 Mild influence; nor left in me one wish
 Found all about me in one neighbourhood—
 To dwell and to perish one by one,
 How that one Frenchman, through continued force
 That one, the fairest of all rivers, loved
 Made one long bathing of a summer's day;
 In one society. How strange that all
 One summer evening (led by her) I found
 Until they melted all into one track
 One end at least hath been attained; my mind
 One is there, though the wisest and the best
 Of some small island steered our course with me
 To thee and thy grey huts, thou one dear Vale!
 Came from yon fountain? Thou, my Friend!
 art one.

For him, in one dear Presence, there exists
 Doth like an agent of the one great Mind
 For this, that one was by my side, a Friend,
 Far earlier, ere one smoke-wreath had risen
 One song they sang, and it was audible,
 As one far mightier, hither I had come,
 Come forth, perhaps without one quiet thought.
 Among the band of my compeers was one
 One of a festive circle, I poured out
 The memory of one particular hour
 Consorting in one mansion unimproved.
 One day, when from my lips a like complaint
 A lance he bore, and underneath one arm
 The one that held acquaintance with the stars,
 The one to be a stone, the other a shell;
 One precious gain, that he forgoes himself.
 One of those open fields, which, shaped like ears,
 Repeating favourite verses with one voice,
 I bade farewell; and, one among the youth
 The only one, who had been lingering there
 A type, for finite natures, of the one
 And gathered with one mind a rich reward
 To seek the same delights, and have one health,
 One happiness. Throughout this narrative,
 Let this one temple last, be this one spot
 And rage of one State-whirlwind, insecure.
 Would issue, let one incident make known.
 Were all like workings of one mind, the features
 Of the same face, blossoms upon one tree;
 Not rich one moment to be poor for ever;
 And life and labour seem but one, I filled
 Was One, a cripple from his birth, whom chance
 Articulate music. Above all, one thought
 'Is, peradventure, one in masquerade.
 'Tis one encountered here and everywhere;
 One, at whose centre sate a lovely Boy,
 Like one of those who walked with hair unsinged
 When one among the prime of these rose up,—
 One, of whose name from childhood we had heard
 Appeared more touching. One will I select;
 This One Man, with a sickly babe outstretched
 Full of one passion, vengeance, rage, or fear?
 Take one,—that ancient festival, the Fair,
 Meanwhile, as if the whole were one vast mill,
 To one identity, by differences
 A lame man or a blind, the one to heg,
 But one there is, the loveliest of them all,
 One night, or haply more than one, through pain
 These cravings; when the foxglove, one by one,
 I did not pine like one in cities bred,
 Is no where touched by one memorial gleam
 One spirit over ignorance and vice
 One sense for moral judgments, as one eye
 Strives, from that height, with one and yet one more
 One spirit ruling in each heart; alike
 (Save only one, hereafter to be named)
 Looked thitherward. One, reckoning by years,
 The face of one, who, whether boy or man,
 In honour, as in one community,
 Among that band of Officers was one,
 Capable of clear truth, the one to break
 One body, spreading wide as clouds in heaven.
 Hatred of absolute rule, where will of one
 One day to meet a hunger-bitten girl,
 Whether by edict of the one or few;

One—continued.

Divided from me by one little month;
 The one bold man, whose voice the attack had
 sounded,
 And one, moreover, little graced with power
 One nature, as there is one sun in heaven;
 But that the virtue of one paramount mind
 A revolution, save at this one time;
 By violence, at one decisive rent,
 Into one service, busy with one work.
 In one inseparable glory clad,
 Creatures of one ethereal substance met
 One victory with another, higher far,—
 One guide, the light of circumstances, flashed
 One great society alone on earth:
 Trust the elevation which had made me one
 Of the whole human race one brotherhood.
 Of early love, the loved one at my side,
 The single sheep, and the one blasted tree,
 One only in ten thousand? What one is,
 Oh I next to one dear state of bliss, vouchsafed
 One daily present to my eyes, that crossed
 Innumerable, roaring with one voice!
 In one continuous stream; a mind sustained
 One function, above all, of such a mind
 In one perpetual progress smooth and bright?
 The One who is thy choice of all the world:
 One whom with thee friendship had early paired;
 Even as one essence of pervading light
 As one of many schoolfellows compelled,
 The one that feels, the other that observes.
 Yet one word more of personal concern
 One sadness, continued he, "of One whose stock
 "I speak," continued he, "of One whose stock
 One while he would speak lightly of his babes,
 And to myself I seem to muse on One
 And this rude bench, one torturing hope endeared,
 Nor more would she have craved as due to One
 One evening sumptuously Indged; the next,
 Not one hour merely, but till evening's close,
 From sight of One who lives secluded there,
 In the short course of one undreaded year,
 The one Survivor stood; he wept, he prayed
 As one, and moving to one glorious end.
 For one hostility, in friendly league,
 One courage seemed to animate them all:
 Was one small opening, where a heath-clad ridge
 And one hare dwelling; one ahode, no more!
 Among the mountains; never one like this;
 Or several voices in one solemn sound,
 And one old moss-grown wall;—a cool recess,
 With one poor shepherd, far from all the world—
 In that one moment when the corse is lifted
 Four dear supporters of one senseless weight,
 This simple Child will mourn his one short hour,
 And, one among the orderly array
 Of this one cottage and this lonely dale,
 "Then," said I, interposing, "One is near,
 Through time or space—if neither in the one,
 One after one, collected from afar,
 The life where hope and memory are as one;
 To One on whose mild radiance many gazed
 Shall with one heart honour their common kind.
 The Wanderer said:—"One adequate support
 Exists—no one only; an assured belief"
 And the weak functions of one busy day,
 Single and one, the omnipresent God,
 And when the One, ineffable of name,
 That one, poor, finite object, in the abyss
 Which no condition can preclude; of One
 One deeper than another, self-condemned
 One voice—the solitary raven, flying
 "Farewell, deep Valley, with thy one rude House,
 And one a turreted memorial hall
 One only solace—that he had espoused
 One that hath barely learned to shape a smile,
 For one day's little compass, has preserved
 Death and its two-fold aspect! wintry—
 Body and mind in one captivity;
 One picture from the living. You behold,
 Were of one species with the sheltered few,
 The being one, and one the element.
 Some farewell words—with one, but one, request;
 Of a young fowl beneath one mother hatched,
 One with himself, and one with them that sleep."
 Far from the family vault.—A Chieftain one
 One spirit seldom failed to extend its sway
 To have one Enclosure where the voice that speaks
 Their spring-time with one love, and that have need
 One of God's simple children that yet know not
 Those six fair Daughters, budding yet—not one,
 Not one of all the band, a full-blown flower.
 One after one, with intervals of peace.
 In one blest moment. Like a shadow thrown
 In this one Man is shown a temperance—proof
 To think of one, blind and alone, advancing
 One after one, their proudest ornaments.
 Have sense of one connatural will, nor yet
 "One day—a summer's day of annual pomp
 Hung in his rustic hall. One ivied arch
 Of one maternal spirit, bringing forth

One—continued.

One spirit animating old and young,
Of one day's pleasure, and all mortal joys
Of good from evil ; as if one extreme
To the one cottage in the lonely dell :
Unheard of, save in one small hamlet, here
Entering the cell gave restlessness to one,
The grieved one whom it meant to send away,
On thee, bright Spring, a bashful little one,
As one unknown by others, aptly called
More than one thought of death, and his last hour.
One of a golden summer holiday,
Scarcely a wish, but one bright pleasing thought,
One of thy lowly dwellings is my Home.
The one sensation that is here ; 'tis here,
That she should entertain for this one day,
One of a mighty multitude, whose way
One death, and that were mercy given to both.
A chosen one of my regards. See there
To one who holds it dear ; with duteous care
First one and then another silver spout,
As one or other takes the fit of glee,
Upon one tree, while all the distant grove
Of many into one incorporate.
One household under God for high and low,
One family, and one mansion ; to themselves
Take me at once this one sufficient hope,
And one, like them, a brother of our hearts,
By one, sole keeper of his own intent,
The cry is six to one upon the Duke.
One-pennied. The one-pennied Boy has his penny to spare.
One's. A criminal in no one's eyes but theirs—
In walks whose boundary is the lost One's grave,
Part of her lost One's glory back to trace
Guid'it the pale Mourner to the lost one's tomb ;
No one's eye had seen him enter,
No one's ear had heard the Horn.
Ones. See Little-ones, Young-ones.
Yet two sweet little ones partook my bed ;
Smiles hast thou, bright ones of thy own ;
For Baohs ! " Yes, heartless Ones, or be it proved
Bereft Ones, and in lowly anguish weep
Where be the wretched ones, the sighs for pity ?
For if than other rash ones more thou know,
Take those dear young Ones to a fearless nest ;
Was smitten by the great ones of the world,
Six little ones at home had left,
Food for the hungry ears of little ones,
Behold a race of young ones like to those
Some vagrant mother, whose arch little ones,
(If like desires of innocent little ones
And great in large ones, I had oft revolved,
Ran in new channels, leaving old ones dry ;
With an impassioned life, what feeble ones,
Great truths, than touch and handle little ones.
Onion. These seven long years to Grenville's onion
head.
Only. (Partial list.)
Though seeking only holiday delight ;
Out of thy mind ? My dear, my only, Child ;
As if he were the only Saint on earth,
Henceforth it shall be said that bad men only
For joy and rest, albeit to find them only
Will build their savage fortunes only there ;
Let both meet only on thy royal shield !
How hard, alas ! to bear, I only know.
Is only fit to die, I dare well say,
Of all this town, save only in this place,
Only by god. And now a simple stone
This only grieves me, for it seems a wrong,
I only have relinquished one delight
Onset. Heed not such onset ! nay, if praise of men
Whom onset, fiercely urged at Jove's command,
Who on that day the word of onset gave !
Of that first memorable onset made
For onset, for resistance too inert,
Ontario's. The matted forests of Ontario's shore
Onward. Right onward to the Scottish strand
I stagger onward—heaven knows how ;
—Pass onward (even the glancing deer
The shepherd struggles with them. Onward thence
I thanked the Leader of my onward way.
They come—and onward travel without dread,
Ye mariners, that plough your onward way,
Furrowing its way right onward. The most rude,
"A little onward lend thy guiding hand
O Thou who movest onward with a mind
And drove us onward like to ships at sea,
And help life onward in its noblest aim.
Onward we drove beneath the Castle ; caught,
Departs, intent upon his onward quest !—
Numerous as stars ; that, by their onward lapse,
If Stephen's distanced, onward see him strive Onward-looking. Me rich in many onward-looking thoughts,
Onwards. Swept onwards, did the vision cross your view ?
Ooze. Not undistinguished, for of wells that ooze
Oozy. The local Deity, with oozy hair

Open. All night the door at every moment open ;
Open. See Half-open.
They open beauties, or thy lone retreats ;
When, from the sunny breast of open seas,
Dismissed, again on open day I gazed,
In open air forgetful would I sit
And clear and open soul, so prized in fearless youth.
Beneath their roof, but to the open air
The truth shall be laid open, his guilt proved
A few leagues hence we shall have open ground,
The Sheriff read, in open Court, a letter
This monstrous crime to be laid open—here,
All gathered to the spot, in open day
Henceforth new prospects open on your path ;
If e'er I open out this heart of mine
his eyes may yet open upon those that love him.
He will never open them more ;
In the open streets, and let him think he sees,
And then an open field they crossed :
Weary of the open sky.
Who, in the open air, with due accord
Hanging in the open air—but, O good Sir !
In open fields ; and when the glare of day
And in the open sunshine of God's love
And in the open fields my life was passed
A length of open space, where to and fro
Could Father Adam open his eyes
And in this smooth and open dell
In the broad open eye of the solitary sky,
Of Him who slept upon the open lea :
Into open sign of joy :
Of open house and ready fare.
Of open door and shining light.
Haloing from an open throat,
With careless air and open mien.
Have been a traveller under open sky,
Open, ye thickets ! let her fly.
Who deem that ye from open light
Wide open for the scattered Poor.
The grave shall open, quench the stars.
Against the wild and open sky !
Now running o'er the open plains.
The open moonlight reach.
A length of green and open road—
And green vales open out, with grove and field,
Open unto the fields, and to the sky ;
O'er hilly path, and open Strath
In the open sunshine, or we are unblest :
Of British freedom, which, to the open sea
'Tis his who walks about in the open air,
First open traitor to the German name !
When he himself was tried in open light.
For they have learnt to open and to close.
When duty bids you bleed in open war :
For victory shaped an open space,
Your council-seats beneath the open sky,
To lay a new world open. Nor less prized
And through each window's open fret-work looked
From all her Sanctuaries !—Open for my feet
And down the path through the open green,
Leads through space of open day,
Who gave their wishes open vent ;
He saw her where in open view
Appeared, with free and open hate
In open victory o'er the weight.
Then look at them with open eyes !
In open field their gathering foes,
In open moonlight doth she lie ;
To open moonshine, where the Doe
The breach is open—on the wall,
Where Francis stood in open sight.
Lies open on the sabbath day ;
Flew open, by an Angel's voice unbarred ?
As oft, 'mid some green plot of open ground,
Open a passage to the Romish sword,
While through the Convent's gate to open view
Unlooked-for outlet to an open sea,
Open your gates, ye everlasting Piles !
Open your gates, ye Monuments of love
And, from the wide and open Baltic, rise
" I come to open out, for fresh display,
Then, while the Sailor, 'mid an open sea
Of Science laid them open to mankind—
To glide in open prospect through clear sky.
Now near his master's house in open view
We talked with open heart, and tongue
Rises by open means ; and there will stand
Lie open ; and the book of Holy Writ,
To open a bright eye.
Hooded the open brow that overawed
With door left open makes a gloomy spot,
And while thus in open day
Open their hearts before Thee, pouring out
" Leave open to my wish the course,
He looks, through the open door-place, toward the lake.
And open thy sad eyes upon a milder day.
Along a bare and open valley,

Oppportunity—continued.

For opportunity bestowed . . . 534
 For opportunity presented, thence . . . 832
 And pride of opportunity made poor ; . . . 835
Oppose. The work of Freedom daring to oppose,
 Whom hardy Rome was fearful to oppose ;
 If—when they shrink, nor dare oppose
 Oppose, or bear with a submissive will.
 Which no one dared to oppose or mitigate.
 Oppose a deeper nature ; there, indeed,
Opposed. Opposed to armies, not a nerve would tremble :
 In mass opposed to mass, . . . 51
 The fetters of a dream opposed to love,—" . . . 165
 Opposed to hopes that battered upon scorn,
 Opposed to dark, deep plots of patient skill,
 No record tells of lance opposed to lance,
 We schemed and puzzled, head opposed to head.
 That foolish men opposed them. To a strain
 Britain opposed the liberties of France.
 As they who have opposed her ; in which Virtue
Opposer. Thus far the Opposer, and repelled
Opposing. As up the opposing hills they slowly creep.
 As up th' opposing hills, with tortoise foot, they creep.
Opposite. Right opposite to Dungeon-Ghyll,
 In opposite directions urged their way . . .
 To Her, as to her opposite in peace,
 While, opposite, the waning moon hangs still,
 A stone, and in the opposite hand a shell
 Appeared distinctly on the opposite shore
 From regions opposite as heaven and hell.
 You have been driven far as its opposite,
 If to the opposite extreme they sank.
Opposites. And opposites thus melt into each other.
 By conflict, and their opposites, that trust
 To opposites and fierce extremes her life,
 In faithful scales, things and their opposites,
 Sad opposites out of the inner heart.
Opposition. On opposition and impediment.
 Heard—and in opposition quaffed
 In no discordant opposition, strong
 Set off ; such opposition as aroused
 Had slumbered, now in opposition burst
 Of opposition and of remedies ;
 Of desperate opposition from without—
 Earthward, as if in opposition set
 In no ungracious opposition given
 That, in assent or opposition, rose
Oppress. Felt only there, oppress his labouring soul,
 Unelowed by such objects as oppress . . .
 To sinners whom their sins oppress and goad.
Oppressed. See Oppress.
 To be the friend and father of the oppressed,
 And all the oppressed, who wanted strength, . . .
 And as a swift by tender cares oppress'd . . .
 The many feelings that oppressed my heart . . .
 The Ocean ; not to comfort the oppressed,
 Given out while mid-day heat oppressed the plains,
 Thus have I looked, nor ceased to look, oppress'd
 And that the multitude, so long oppress'd,
 Would be oppress'd no more. But when events
 Compelled to look, and inwardly oppress'd
 Or by predomance of thought oppress'd,
 But if the spirit be oppress'd by sense
 Not, as before, like one oppress'd with awe, Oppression. The oppression of the tumult—wrath and scorn—
 From qualified oppression, whose defence
 Dropp'd loud at once, Oppression shriek'd, and flew.
 And dark Oppression builds her thick-ribb'd tow'rs ;
 Oppression, under which even highest minds
 How, between heart and heart, oppression thrust
 From its oppression. But, O Power Supreme !
 That throwing off oppression must be work
 True is it, where oppression worse than death
 In this oppression ; none are proud of it ;
 Now, when oppression, like the Egyptian plague
Oppressions. These legalized oppressions ! Man—whose name . . .
 From palpable oppressions of despair," . . .
Oppressive. And round our path darted oppressive beams.
Oppressor. The oppressor he withstood ; . . .
 Such look the Oppressor might confound,
 Withering the Oppressor : how Gustavus sought
 To pity dead, the oppressor and the oppress ;
 The oppressor breathes, their human form divine,
Oppressor's. Be just, be grateful ; nor, the oppres-
 sor's creed
Oppressors. But now, become oppressors in their turn,
 " Power to the Oppressors of the world is given,
Opprest. See Heat-opprest, Oppressed.
 Yet, when oppress by sickness, grief, or care, . . .
 And when, at dusk, by devils oppress'd
 And the guilt-burthened soul is no longer oppress't.
 For comfort, being, as I am, oppress't,
 Of discontent, and inwardly oppress't . . .
 Opprest, far less becoming ornaments . . .

Opprest—continued.

While thankless thousands are opprest and clogg'd
 To pity dead, the oppressor and the oppress ;
Opprobrious. Baronial hails the opprobrious insult feel ;
 Whence these opprobrious leaves of dire portent ?
 Down to their "dark opprobrious den,"
 In not a desperate or opprobrious time, Opprobrium. This last opprobrium, when we see a people.
Optic. Make sadder transits o'er thought's optic glass Optic-glass. Daughter and Sire through optic-glass discern,
Optimist. His famous Optimist, "Unhappy Man,"
 Or, omitted,
Oracle. "Thou knowest, the Delphic oracle foretold
 The oracle, upon the silent sea ; . . .
Oracles. How Brutus came, by oracles impell'd,
 Let Babes and Sucklings be thy oracles. . . .
Oracular. To enter than oracular cave ; . . .
 Which, out of thy young heart's oracular seat,
 Speaking no dream, but things oracular ; . . .
Oral. To oral record, and the silent heart ; . . .
Orange. To where afar rich orange lustrous glow,
 And orange gale that o'er Lugano blows ; . . .
 Garden and field all decked with orange bloom,
 The orange sky of evening died away . . .
Orange-bower. As we rest in the cool orange-bower side by side,
Orange-trees. Of orange-trees bedecked with glowing fruit . . .
Orations. In long orations, which I strove to plead
Orator. Delivered. No ! the Orator hath yok'd
Oratory. Seek in domestic oratory small,
 Within thy innocent lodge and oratory,
 Nor did the Pulpi's oratory fail . . .
 And find a secret oratory there . . .
Orb. A long blue bar its ægis orb divides,
 And now that orb has touch'd the purple steep,
 Of the ethereal Orb there came . . .
 And in the aspect of each radiant orb ;—
 To a full orb, this Pinnacle bright
 With orb and cycle girds the starry throng,
 But element and orb on acts did wait
 That orb whose beams round Saxon Alfred shone ;
 Ye, when the orb of life had waned, . . .
 As if his orb, that owns no curb, . . .
 And flying fleet behind his orb to view
 The western mountain touch his setting orb, . . .
 The sunset caanon. While the orb went down
 He gazed upon that mighty orb of song,
 Rests his substantial orb ;—between those heights
 As if with wish to veil the restless orb ; . . .
 Now suddenly diverging from the orb . . .
Orbed. See Full-orbed.
 Seemed to bisect her orb'd shield, . . .
Orbit. Each in its orbit round the central Sun, . . .
Orbs. Broke from the sable orbs of his yet-vivid eyes,
 When the fierce orbs abate their glare ;—
 Find a free entrance to their languid orbs, . . .
 Communicates with heaven's ethereal orbs
 This vital warmth too cold, these visual orbs,
 Between the orbs of our apparent sphere . . .
Orchard. See Garden-orchard.
 You shall go to the orchard, and then you will see
 We can behold it from our orchard seat ; . . .
 Must hear, first uttered from my orchard trees ; . . .
 In desultory walk through orchard grounds,
 'Mid the dark pines a little orchard blooms, . . .
 Under you orchard, in you humble cot,
 I went into the Orchard quietly ; . . .
 Fruits of her father's orchard are her wares, Orchard-ground. This plot of orchard-ground is ours ;
 How glorious to this orchard-ground ! . . .
Orchard-plot. And now we reached the orchard-plot ;
Orchard's. Made this orchard's narrow space,
Orchards. And with wild flowers and blooming orchards blend ;—
 Thy reddening orchards, and thy fields of gold ;
 Those woods and farms and orchards did present,
Orchard-seat. To sit upon my orchard-seat !
Orchard-tufts. These plots of cottage-ground, these orchard-tufts, . . .
Ordain. Throned in the hearts of men. Should Heaven ordain
 And solemn ceremonials they ordain
 Whatever discipline they Will ordain
 With whose perfection it consists to ordain
 If she, self-born of Majesty, ordain
 More mild doth Heaven ordain . . .
Ordained. See Pre-ordained.
 Sad blindness ! but ordained to prove . . .
 The Baptist might have been ordained to cry
 What Bridgetroom was for her ordained by Heaven :
 By human feeling, had ordained.
 As the supreme Artificer ordained.
 Lie in the means required, or ways ordained,
 As piety ordained ; could I submit
 If grief be something hallowed and ordained, . . .

Orleans. Of Orleans; coasted round and round the line . . . 719 Prelude 10. 95
 Of Orleans eagerly I turned; as yet . . . 86 She was 4*
Ornament. To be a moment's ornament;
 Yet more for love than ornament, . . . 221 Triad 118
 Chosen for ornament—stone matched with stone . . . 378 Dutton 9. 5
 And loved to borrow, ornament; . . . 390 Highland Broach 42
 Now rich with mossy ornament?
 397 White Doe 125
 That ornament, unblamed. The flowerest, held
 509 F. Stone 63
 That took his station there for ornament:
 704 Prelude 8. 380
 Of use or ornament; and with a strange,
 764 Excursion 1. 574
 Nor wanting ornament of walks between,
 778 Excursion 2. 426
 Whose blue roofs ornament a distant reach
 844 Excursion 6. 408
 Which might be lacked for use or ornament.
 860 Excursion 7. 173
Ornamental. Each, in its ornamental scroll, enclosed;
 824 Excursion 5. 151
 Of ornamental interest, and the charm
 838 Excursion 6. 27
Ornaments. With ornaments—the prettiest, nature yields . . . 124 V. and J. 200
 Some ornaments to me are left—
 155 Waterfall 46
 And ornaments of seemlier pride,
 191 Seq. Beggars 6
 Would, in their turas, lend ornaments and flowers
 695 Prelude 7. 569
 Opprest, far less becoming ornaments . . . 316 Excursion 4. 1002
 These ornaments, that fade not with the year,
 856 Excursion 6. 1156
 One after one, their proudest ornaments . . . 866 Excursion 7. 594
 Of all the lighter ornaments attached . . . 878 Excursion 8. 250
 Their skeletons, turned to brilliant ornaments . . . 5. 3. 434 The doubt 54*
Oroonoko. Conspicuous yet where Oroonoko flows;
 S.30 Dutton 16. 3
Orphan. The little Orphan then would be your succour, . . . 52 Bord. 841
 Wild words for me to hear, for me, an orphan,
 76 Bord. 2198
 Who, through most wicked arts, was made an orphan . . . 78 Bord. 2330
 The little orphan, Alice Fell!
 82 Alice Fell 60
 Fared this little bright-eyed Orphan . . . 93 Westmoreland Girl 31
 An orphan could not find his mother's grave:
 98 Brothers 169
 To attend upon the orphan, and perform
 125 V. and J. 277
 As hath this little orphan Boy,
 249 F. B. 1109
 Too late, I feel, sweet Orphan I was the day
 275 Rotha 0. 5
 Her Mother's favourite; and the orphan Girl,
 509 F. Stone 66
 But chanted by your Orphan Quire
 577 I come 31*
 A younger orphan of a home extinct,
 622 Recluse 1. 1. 78
 And for her little orphan boy, she said,
 769 Excursion 1. 849
 Of rustic loneliness; that grey-haired Orphan—
 835 Excursion 5. 885
Orphan's. Perhaps is shedding orphan's tears; you also . . . 779 Excursion 2. 541
Orphans. But those two Orphans! Orphans!—
 Such they were— . . . 98 Brothers 226
 Outcasts and homeless orphans— . . . 505 Warning 157
 And I and my three brothers, orphans then, . . . 738 Prelude 12. 308
Orphean. Where is the Orphean lyre, or Druid harp,
 Orphean Insight! truth's undaunted lover,
 230 Clouds 60
 Whose waves the Orphean lyre forbid to meet . . . 434 Power of Sound 115
 Thoughtfully fitted to the Orphean lyre; . . . 336 Darius 9
Orpheus. An Orpheus! an Orpheus! yes, Faith may grow bold . . . 188 Music 1
 One measure, Orpheus! of thy verse; . . . 472 Ossian 38
Orrest-head. Baffle the threat, bright Scene, from Orrest-head . . . 282 Railway 9
Osea. Thou say'st OSEE, OSEE, then how may I 559 Cuck and Night 124
 Oft as I say OSSE, OSSE, I wis, . . . 559 Cuck and Night 127

Other—continued.

With other signs of manhood that supplied
Done visibly for other minds, words, signs,
A winning power, beyond all other power,
All sense,—but other passions in me ruled,
Of these and other kindred notices
Followed each other till a dreary moor
Saw her go forth to church or other work
But now these opened on me other thoughts
Of heady schemes jostling each other, gawds,
Is treading, where no other face is seen)
The other that was a god, yea many gods,
The one to be a stone, the other a shell;
Detain me from the best of other guides
That other spirit, Coleridge! who is now
Yes; for even then no other than a place
Sole link that binds them to each other; walks,
With less delight upon that other class
The antics striving to outstrip each other,
Each to the other, and the curious props
Moses, and he who penned, the other day,
The other to make music; hither, too,
Into each other their obsequious hues,
Gleaming through colouring of other times,
Than other intellects had mine been used
A hundred other names, forgotten now,
Than any other nook of English ground,
Already hinted at, of other mould—
Bondage, the other to build liberty
And fan each other; thought of sects, how keen
And let remembrance steal to other times,
On this and other spots, as doth a man
On the other side, I called to mind those truths
Or saw, like other men, with holly eyes,
And thought that other notions were as sound,
I had approached, like other youths, the shield
And losing, in no other way than light
Of other longing, I pursued what seemed
Then, near some other spring—which by the name
To counteract the other, and themselves,
Or any other cause that hath been named;
From many other uncount vagrants (passed
How we mislead each other; above all,
No other than the very heart of man,
Men may be found of other mould than these,
At other moments—for through that wide waste
To be transmitted, and to other eyes
No other can divide with thee this work:
Of hooks how much! and even of the other wealth
The one that feels, the other that observes.
And I have other tasks. Recall to mind
"Among other consolations, we may draw
Far other lot, yet with good hope that soon
That stared upon each other!—I locked round,
And vainly by all other means, he strove
And with a cruel tongue; at other times
A thrush sang loud, and other melodies,
Each with the other pleased, we not pursued
Some other tenant of lone solitude."
That it could be no other; a pale face,
Upon myself."—The other left these words
Nor in such other converse as is here,
That from some other vale peered into this.
His course, on errands bound, to other vales,
Nor in the other region, nor in aught
Than when we soar."—The Other, not displeased,
" What other yearning was the master tie
Other support, not scrupulous whence it came;
Of other converse which mind, soul, and heart,
The Sage continued—" For that other loss,
Affiance in each other; faith more firm
What other spirit can it be that prompts
From other mouths, the laugage which they speak,
The other—like a stately gycamore,
Is to that other state more apposite.
The other, which the ray divine hath touched,
To reach it, destitute of other hope.
The other that empowers him to perceive
While both, embellishing each other, stood
All other progeny—doth sometimes lure,
Fancies, and loose conjectures. Other trace
" The other, born in Britain's southern tract,
Had moralised on this, and other truths
Such leaning towards each other, that their days
Meanwhile, relinquishing all other cares,
That skill in this or other household work,
Were gathered to each other." Calm of mind
Of other progeny, a Daughter then
Her temper changed, and bowed to other laws)
More deeply tinged. Twin might the other be
Of other expectations,—in which course
Antipodes unconscious of each other,
We seek that other, on the western shore;
Leaving, in quest of other scenes, the shore
Were left, the other gained,—O ye, who come
Finds some place or other
The other, glassed in thy unruined breast,
For the reception of far other sounds
Of Sheep-cot-cove, and those two other coves,
For other pastures would exchange the same
Pursue each other through the yielding plain . . .

Other—continued.

Dispensed indeed to other solitudes,
Nor let me pass unheeded other loves . . .
As one or other takes the fit of glee,
For other agitations, or be calm;
That other hope, long mine, the hope to fill
Alas! 'twas other cause than lack of years
Eight hundred years uncalled to other tasks Others. Your Dalesmen, then, do in each other's thoughts . . .
And it all went into each other's hearts. . .
Each other's advocate, each other's stay;
Of neighbouring billows from each other's sight.
Each other's mind was fashioned; and at length,
Are calm; they knew each other's worth.
With heavenly, each more prized for the other's sake;
How could we feel it? each the other's blight,
Have faithfully prepared each other's way—
These groves have heard the Other's pensive strains;
Strangers, not knowing each other's name.
Insensibly, each with the other's help.
Each in the other's blaze, a galaxy
That flashed and sparkled from the other's eyes;
Each other's path; but, as the Intruder seemed Others. While others, not unseen, are free to shed
Ioly disturbed, to think that others felt
And others who survived the wreck, beheld
To do with others; help me to my Father—
Others saved from lingering pain.
The peace which others seek they find;
The word, by others dreaded, he can hear
When others heeded not, He heard the South
Service beyond all others of its kind.
With others round them, earnest all and blithe,
These thoughts, and many others of like sort,
When we, and others whom we love, shall meet
But hearing thee, or others of thy kind,
Others, too, of lofty mien;
Others are pent-housed by a brae
Others slunk to moor and wood,
Or is it good as others are, and he their eyes in fault?
But how can He expect that others should
And others, I've heard many swear,
Some say that they are bees, others elms—
And others of your kind, ideal crew!
For others; for thy future self, a spell
Like others, with like temporal hopes to die;
Others look up, and with fixed eyes admire
Young Vane, and others who called Milton friend.
Mindful how others by this simple Strain
And others like in fame, created Powers
Consorted, Others, in the power, the faith,
Of the Great King; and others, as they go
Happy as others of her kind,
And others follow;—Sire and Son
Of sacred home;—with pony are others gored
Their eyes away in sorrow, others burn
Who will be served by others on their knees,
Who on the good of others builds his own!
Trusting in hope that Others may advance
And faults of others—gently as he may,
The things which others understand.
False fires, that others may be lost.
Charged with those lays, and others of like mood,
Others do rather from their notice shrink,
'Thou'dt be as others that forsaken are;
Who went something farther than others have gone,
Was to your souls, and, to the thoughts of others,
Let others that know more speak as they know.
Of others but my own; I should, in truth,
To others, all supplanted in their turn;
Than others have, but from the times, perhaps,
While from a boat others hug o'er the deep,
Is stirred to ecstacy, as others are,
Had vanished, leaving others in their stead:
Others of wider scope, where living men,
Professedly, to others tilted higher,
Leaving a thousand others, that, in hall,
Like others, I had skimmed, and sometimes read
Tears from the hearts of others, when their own
If not, then others vanish into air.
As native passion dictates. Others, too,
Others will love, and we will teach them how;
As others are; and I could never die.
In others ye shall promptly find,—and all,
But others, far beyond this narrow sphere,
Some scattered o'er the level, others perched
The vital air; others, which, though allowed
And, leaving it to others to foretell,
By others dreaded as the luckless thrall
That sympathy, which you for others ask;
(Prized avenues ere others had been shaped
Are profitless to others. Turn we then
To look into the eyes of others, thence
Others shall e'er be able to undo.
As one unknown by others, aptly called
Than others have, for Michael had liv'd on
The lot of others, never could be his.
Beneath our roof. And others whom we love . . .

Others'. Received at others' hands; for, though now old
 And some break forth when others' sorrows crush
 Balanced by vigilance for others' weal.
 With any thought that looks at others' blame;
 At others' tears in pity; and in scorn . . .
Otherwise. — There be whose lot far otherwise is cast:
 It ever could be otherwise! Last night,
 Knowing what otherwise we know too well,
 "Yes, kind Lady! otherwise man could not hear
 Not otherwise, O Nature! we are thine,
 Otherwise wrought the will of the Most High;
 No otherwise than as it lasts too long.
 Far otherwise amid this rural solitude,
 And howsoever; were it otherwise,
 Nor otherwise continued to be moved,
 Prizing but little otherwise than I prized
 How could it otherwise? for not in vain
 If living now, could otherwise report
 Were otherwise, we have within ourselves . . .
Otter. And there my good friend, Stephen Otter;
 The otter crouching undisturbed,
Ouen's. "St. Ouen's golden Shrine? Or choose what else would please thee most . . .
Ought. See Aught.
 And felt, if ought on earth deserves a curse,
 Did all he wished, and wished but what he ought.
 But not destroyed. The proofs—you ought to have seen . . .
 As if a blooming face it ought to be;
 Measured by what we are and ought to be,
 The thing which ought to be; is raised above
 If that be revered which ought to last.
 For him, or any one,—the thing that ought
 As all Monks are, or surely ought to be,
 With a sore heart well ought I to bewail,
 No—he was One whose memory ought to spread
 Ruled not, and feeling that they ought to rule.
 Is where it ought to be, in self-restraint,
 And ought to be; and strove to learn how far
 You have regealed us as a hermit ought;
 That ought to follow faithfully expressed?
 Or so he ought to move. Ah! why in age
 (If sound, and what we ought to be ourselves,
 More than a wise man ought to be. I wish,
Ought'st. Thou ought'st to fall and I to die;
 since she . . .
Our, omitted.
Ours. (Partial list.)
 What life is this of ours, how sleep will master
 But in a world like ours— This selfsame Man—
 Small cause there is for that fond wish of ours
Ourselves. Do we poor mortals cater for ourselves!
 I would fain hope that we deceive ourselves;
 We've overslept ourselves.—Sirs, have you seen
 him?
 We wonder at ourselves like men betrayed:
 In all things like ourselves but in the agony
 Nor did we fail to see within ourselves
 Ourselves, no prison is: and hence for me,
 And worse, against ourselves.
 That in ourselves our safety must be sought;
 Ah why deceive ourselves! by no mere fit
 Both of ourselves and of the universe;
 In painting to ourselves the miseries
 Like credit to ourselves where less was due,
 But this is passion over-near ourselves,
 Uplifted; why deceive ourselves? in sooth,
 Of that injustice which upon ourselves
 Ourselves entail." Such estimate to frame
 Nearer ourselves. Such often might be gleaned
 Trusting ourselves, we wound from crag to crag,
 Peace in ourselves, and union with our God.
 And social neighbourhood; look we to ourselves;
 The object as it is; but, for ourselves,
 Thus do we soothe ourselves, and when the thought
 Loving what no one cares for but ourselves;
 (If sound, and what we ought to be ourselves,
 Were otherwise, we have within ourselves . . .
 Or profit unto any but ourselves.
 Between ourselves! The noble laid aside),
Out, omitted.
Outbrave. But scorn with scorn outbrave;
 Her blossoms which, though shed, outbrave
Outbreak. By casual outbreak of his passionate words,
 At the sun's outbreak, as with light divine,
 If at the first great outbreak I rejoiced
Outcast. I met your Father, then a wandering Outcast:
 A wretched Outcast—but this strain of thought
 But when you were an Outcast?—Heaven is just;
 Not like an outcast with himself at strife;
 To mock the Outcast—O ye Heavens, be kind!
 Thou wretched Outcast, from the gift of fire
 And here I dwell an outcast from all joy,
 That outcast of pity behold.
 No outcast he, bewildered and depressed:
Outcasts. Wild outcasts of society!
 Outcasts and homeless orphans—
Outcry. No kid with piteous outcry thrill thy bowers;

3 Ev. Wh. 77

Outcry—continued.
 The sportive outcry of the mocking owl;
 Swelling the outcry dull, that long resounds . . .
 And perished, what a piercing outcry you . . .
 A startling outcry made by bound and horn . . .
 This outcry, on the heart of Peter, . . .
 Jubilant outcry! rock and glade . . .
 The outcry of his son; he stretched his staff . . .
Out-did. Out-did the sparkling waves in glee . . .
Outdone. Some, tired of honest service; these, outdone . . .
 In their own arts outdone, their fame eclipsed,
Outer. And outer spray profusely tipped with seeds Outhouse. From the cross-timber of an outhouse hung;
Outlandish. And wild outlandish walks of simple youth
 Decked as in pride, and with outlandish grace . . .
 With his outlandish look,
Outlaw. An outlaw of as daring mood;
 Unchecked as when by merry Outlaw driven . . .
Outlaws. To guard the Innocent—he calls us "Outlaws."
 And such chance food as outlaws can obtain,
 Or with some merry outlaws of the wood;
 Outlet. Nor further outlet left to mind or heart?
 Unlooked-for outlet to an open sea,
 An outlet nor a restiug-place!
 Of that off-sloping outlet, disappeared,
 Of that brown ridge, sole outlet of the vale
 Led towards an easy outlet of the vale.
Outline. In the main outline, such it might be said Outlive. That things obscure and small outlive the great:
 To outlive the kindly use and fair esteem . . .
Outnumbered. Shrink not, though far outnumbered by their Foes,
Out-of-doors. My dwelling, and my out-of-doors abode.
Out-o'-the-way. All out-o'-the-way, far-fetched, perverted things,
Out-pourings. And, should the out-pourings of her eyes suffice not . . .
Outrage. Subdued by outrage and decay . . .
 Ensigns of mimic outrage are unfurled,
 In bursts of outrage spread your judgments wide,
 Their native Land, for outrage provident;
 And for the outrage which he had devised
 Outrage and bloody power, and—in despite
 Such outrage done to nature as compels . . .
Outraged. Avenger you of outraged innocence!
 Beggared and outraged!—Many hearts deplor'd . . .
 From outraged Nature; but the sense of most Outrageous. All that she said is an outrageous lie . . .
 Which to outrageous wrong the sufferer owes,
Outrages. Past outrages, and shape the way for new, Outright. While he, uplifted towards thee, laughs outright,
Outrun. He all the country could outrun,
 To outrun the rest in exultation, groaned
Outruns. Whose zeal outruns his promise! Blue-eyed May
 Outruns his fellows, so hath Nature lent
Outset. Such thy meek outset, with a crown, though frail,
 In his first outset; so have we, my Friend!
 At her aspiring outset. Mark the babe
 That on the outset wastes its gay desires,
 Granted alike in the outset of their course
Outshine. Outshine the splendour that imbues
 Striving in peace each other to outshine.
Outshining. Outshining like a visible God
 The midnight stars outshining, or the blaze
Outside. This was the outside proclamation,
 By her exulting outside look of youth
 The outside of her creatures, and to breathe
 Of all this outside bravery, within . . .
 And a coarse outside of repulsive life
Outskirts. From the remotest outskirts of the grove,
 Possessed like outskirts of some large domain,
Outspread. In Nature's pristine majesty outspread,
 Outspread, as if to save himself from falling!—
 With outspread arms and fallen upon her knees
 In gloom on wings with confidence outspread
 There, should vain thoughts outspread their wings and fly
 More effcaciously than realms outspread, . . .
 With nets and sails outspread and streamers gay,
 A lowly Dwelling, here to be outspread, . . .
 And the whole surface of the out-spread map,
 The umbrageous Oak, in pomp outspread,
 Of speculation, joyfully outspread . . .
 Of motherly humanity, outspread . . .
 Before their eyes lay carefully outspread,
 On whose capacious surface see outspread Outstretched. Then, when he lies, out-stretched, at even-tide . . .

18 Desc. Sh. 425

Outstretched—continued.

Outstretched, and turning on a restless bed . . .
Softly he stroked the child, who lay outstretched
His outstretched hand He tauntingly withdraws—
Outstretched and listless, were by hunger roused :
With outstretched hands and earnest speech—in vain !
This One Man, with a sickly babe outstretched
Are leagued to strike dismay ; but outstretched hand

Outstretching. Outstretching flameward his upbraided hand

Outstrip. Yet may outstrip me in the appointed race,
The antics striving to outstrip each other,
Art to outstrip in her peculiar walk

Outstrips. Outstrips the heart's demand ;

Out-thrown. And when its potent branches, wide out-thrown,
Outvied. Till Egypt sees her antient fame outvied . . .

Outward. Heart-blessings—outward treasures too which the eye
And a steadfast outward power

Too sedate for outward show,
But what is time ? What outward glory ? Neither
Benjamin, this outward glory
That doth reject all show of pride, admits no outward sign,
Of outward change, there blooms a deathless
flower,
Till they, who saw his outward frame,
The outward service of this day ;
Of outward symbol, nor will deign to rest
Upon no help of outward friend ;
These outward images of fate,
By works of Art, that shed, on the outward frame
Truth fails not ; but her outward forms that bear
The outward shows of sky and earth,
But would rejoice to barter outward show
So prized, and things inward and outward held
Of sense and outward things,
Came hopes still higher, that with outward life
By outward gestures and by visible looks :
What passed within me. Not of outward things
In climate, and my nature's outward coat
From the same cause produced, 'mid outward
things
And their own size, than any outward light
On outward forms—did we in presence stand . . .
And part through outward hindrance. But I heard,
In twain, yet leaving the same outward form.
Though reared upon the base of outward things,
And the strong hand of outward violence
From Nature's way by outward accidents,
And outward troubles, between man himself,
The mind is lord and master—outward sense
Extrinsic differences, the outward marks
Who to the letter of the outward promise
To exert upon the face of outward things,
From any reach of outward fellowship,
Whether from breath of outward circumstance,
Self-occupied ; to which all outward things
Inward and outward ; humble, yet sublime :
Of flying sunbeams, or to the outward form
On outward things, with formal inference ends ;
Are they not manly outward ministers
The outward functions of intelligent man ;
The outward ritual and established forms ;
Of outward sunshine and internal warmth ;
To outward argument ; the passive will
Watched both the outward course and inner heart :
Within the heart no outward sign appeared
In place from outward molestation free,
Upon his life an outward dignity
How long, and by what kindly outward aids,
Lead me, or outward circumstance impels
And to whatever else of outward form
And gladly blend with outward fellowship ?

Outwardly. With the vain world ; who, outwardly as here
Ennobled outwardly before my sight,
Outwardly, inwardly contemplated,
In action, give it outwardly a shape,
He outwardly, and inwardly perhaps,
Outweigh. But, to outweigh all harm, the sacred Book,
Outweighed. Outweighed, or put to flight, the sot events
The world of human-kind outweighed not hers

Outweighs. Outweighs the world ; whom self-deceiving wit
In which the little oft outweighs the great ;
Outwell. Softens his heart, till from his eyes outwell
Outworn. If some, by ceaseless pains outworn,
A Pagan suckled in a creed outworn ;

Oven. Which this comfortless oven environ !

Over. (Partial list.) See O'er.

Over our much-loved Captain. I have heard
May He whose eye is over all protect you ! . . .
That casts its shade over our village school, . . .

Over—continued.

But 'tis all over now. That good old Lady . . .
Into the torrent over which he hung
This mortal stupor which is creeping over me,
Over your head twice twenty years must roll,
You will forgive me, but my heart runs over.
It is all over then ;—your foolish fears
Think not of that ! 'tis over—we are safe
Terror over,
The Charm is over ; the mute Phantoms gone,
The ground was green, with daisy powdered over ;
What need to seek a conquest over me,
Like one whose own country's far over the sea ;
Yet he watches the clouds that pass over the streets ;
May one blade of grass spring up over thy head ;
Over the well-steered galleys I'd rule :—
And buoyant spirit triumphed over pain ;
Durance to sustain, be over ;

Over-anxious. Nor avarice, nor over-anxious care.
For (blinded by an over-anxious dread

Over-arch. Might overarch thee, from pomicious heat Over-arched. Beneath a shed that over-arched the gate
Lofly and over-arched, with open space
Thus having reached a bridge, that over-arched

Overawe. To overawe the turbulent
When empty terrors overawe ;

Overawed. But, lo ! the boatman, overawed, before
Hooded the open brow that overawed
Ashamed, and tender pity overawed."

Overawes. Proud thoughts that Image overawes,
Overblest. Surcharged, within him, overblest to move
Overblown. Moreover, the first storm was overblown, Overborne, etc. See O'erborne, etc.
Not prostrate, overborne, as if the mind
Or by creative feeling overborne, Overbridged. Who, with a broad highway, have overbridged

Over-bright. A flash of something over-bright !

Overbrowed. With huge and black projection over-browed

Overburthened. And often, like one overburthened with sin,
Whose overburthened hand could scarcely hold

Over-busy. And, to tired limbs and over-busy
thoughts,
Overcame. That overcame some not ungenerous
Knights ;
The tempest overcame her,
And holy passion overcame me first,
Overcast. By veil of noontide darkness overcast ?
—The sky is overcast
Without a spirit overcast by dark
Overcharged. Till the whole air is overcharged ;
Let sorrow overcharged with pain

Overcome. Unheeded night has overcome the vales :
To pilgrims overcome by summer's heat,
To stay his steps with faintness overcome ;
What obstacles hath he failed to overcome ?
He, thus by feverish passion overcome,
Yea, many overcome in spite

Over-great. Would to a child be transport over-great, Overgrowings. And silent overgrowings, still survived.
Overgrown. With lichens is it overgrown.
 These monuments shall all be overgrown.
 With greenest ivy overgrown,
Overhanging. See Fondly overhanging.
Overhangs. That overhangs a brook.
 That overhangs his head from the green wall,
Overhead. That overhead are sailing in the sky.
 Takes down the canvas overhead ;
 What thumping—stumping—overhead !
 For overhead are sweeping GABRIEL'S HOUNDS
 Along the walls and overhead,
 Breaks—and the greyhound, DART, is overhead !
 Left by the west wind sweeping overhead
 And all the tradesman's honours overhead :
 Stretched overhead, and at my pensive feet
 And spin—and pant—and overhead again,
Overhear. Or shall we overhear him, as we pass,
Overheard. I overheard the Villains—every word
 I overheard her as she spake
 "The voice, which we so lately overheard,
 Of such conjectures, overheard, or seen
Overhung. That overhung the road : he there stopped short,
 Hung round and overhung with gloom ;
 From an adjoining pasture, overhung
 Along the steep that overhung the brook,
Overlying. And overlying them with mountain sods ;
Overlays. That overlays the pile ; and, from a bag
Overleap. Two burning months let summer overleap,
 Methinks 'twould heighten joy, to overleap
 Imaginative Faith ! canst overleap,
Overleaped. This flimsy barrier you have overleaped,
 But He hath overleaped the eternal bars ;
Overloaded. Of one so overloaded with his years.
Overlook. "But, not to overlook what thou may'st know,
 Whom without blame I may not overlook ;
 To go and overlook his merchandise
 Yet I long could overlook
 Of what is won, we overlook or scorn
 Apart, to overlook the circle vast—
 Yet may we not entirely overlook
 Too easily, despise or overlook
 Pure and serene, diffused—to overlook
 He sought not praise, and praise did overlook
 No eye can overlook, when 'mid a grove
Overlooked. That overlooked the moor ;
 But that was what we almost overlooked,
 I overlooked the bed of Windermere,
 An open place it was, and overlooked,
 Ascending, overlooked them both, far stretched ;
 With due regret how much is overlooked
 Not overlooked but courting no regard,
 Were he and his attainments overlooked,
 That feared, or wholly overlooked the truth,
Overlooking. Alps overlooking Alps their state up-well !
Over-love. Gave treacherous sanction to that over-
 love
Overmuch. Beut overmuch on superficial things,
Over-near. But this is passion over-near ourselves,
Overpast. Then, when some o'er or hill is overpast,
 Yet see (the mighty tumult overpast)
 The threshold now is overpast, (how strange
 And the rude boy—who, having overpast Overpeers. Perchance as numerous, overpeers the rock
Overplus. He duly went with what small overplus
Overpowered. That overpowered your mortal ears ?
 Spain may be overpowered, and he possess,
 That overpowered their natural green.
 And overpowered that gallant few.
 Coldly we spake, The Saxons, overpowered
 Pale Passion, overpowered, retires and woe
 Inly distressed or overpowered with awe,
 Hath overpowered his forefathers, and soon
 And, with a sudden influx overpowered
Overpowering. But what a sudden burst of overpowering light !
 On that overpowering sight,
 Of overpowering light.—While yet a child,
Overpowers. Gardens and groves ! your presence overpowers
Overpressure. Gave way to overpressure from the times
Overprized. And such as lift their foreheads over-prized,
Overrule. A time to overrule the power
 And, measuring heaven by earth, would overrule
Overruling. All finite motions overruling, lives
Overseeing. Shall feel an overseeing power
Overset. Would overset the brain, or break the heart :
Overshade. To overshadow than multiply his beams Overstept. We've overslept ourselves.—Sirs, have you seen him ?
Overspread. Green water-rushes overspread the floor ;
 Few minutes gone a faintness overspread

Overspread—continued.

When sudden blackness overspread
 A face with gladness overspread
 A way with shadows overspread ;
 On couches lie, with purple overspread :
 Would overspread my soul, that homily eyes
 And heights meanwhile were slowly overspread
 That overspread the countenance of earth,
 That overspread and chilled the sacred turf,
 And overspread the future years with hope,

Overspreads. A sudden blankness overspreads his face.
 When a Tartarean darkness overspreads
 805 Excursion 4. 297

Overstepped. The Child she mourned had over-stepped the pale
 Whose progress had a little overstepped
 And they had hopes that overstepped the Grave.
Over-sternness. This over-sternness ; but for thee,
 dear Friend !

Overtake. Or overtake some unknown enemy ?—
 Intruded, for we failed to overtake
 Spinning amain, as if to overtake
Overtasked. "You're overtasked, good Simon Lee,
Overthrow. That with a motion overthrow
 And all that hopeless overthrow.
 Dire overthrow, and yet how high
 Perplex the wise, the strong to overthrow ;
 In Reformation's sweeping overthrow.
 Availed not to my Vessel's overthrow.
 For the individual and the overthrow
 Most feelingly, could overthrow my trust
 For the Sicilian Tyrant's overthrow,
 Culloden's fatal overthrow. Escaped
 Is thirsting for their overthrow, who yet
 These yield, and these to sudden overthrow :
 Of sudden overthrow ; and cold neglect
Overthrown. What kingdoms overthrown,
 Another mighty Empire overthrown !
 With monuments decayed or overthrown,
 Overthrown and desolate !
 With weeds ; the bowers are overthrown,
 Issues for that dominion overthrown :
 When Severn's sweeping flood had overthrown
 Fell to the ground !—by violence overthrown
 Lamenting ancient virtues overthrown,
Over-toll. In lineaments, and red with over-toll.
Overtook. The darkness overtook me—wind and rain

Why now—but yesterday I overtook
 I overtook him, Sirs, my Babe and I,
 Worn in the moorland, till I overtook
Overtop. Beneath those lofty firs, that overtop Overtopped. Of yellowing corn, the same that overtopped

Overturn. In recklessness flung out to overturn
 Of big zeal madly to overturn ;
Overturned. Which neither can be overturned nor bought.

Is overturned ; the mace, in battle heaved
 Laws overturned ; and territory split,
Over-watchful. From the restraint of over-watchful
 eyes

Overweening. The overweening, personates the mad—
 With overweening trust alone we give
 Her overweening grasp ; thus thoughts and things
 An overweening trust was raised ; and fear
 To overweening faith ; and is inflated,
 Which, to your overweening spirits, yields
Overweeningly. And evil, overweeningly so called ;
Overwhelm. Might overwhelm, but could not separate !

That neither overwhelm nor cloy,
 And plot, and pant to overwhelm
 Where numbers overwhelm humanity,
Overwhelmed. Has overwhelmed him,—I must follow. Lady !
 That overwhelmed and prostrate lies,
 Thus overwhelmed, and desolate,
Overwhelming. Thence sickness comes, and overwhelming sadness,
Overwrought. To a late hour, and spirits over-wrought

Were false, and in their splendour overwrought,
Owe. I owe him no ill will, but in good sooth
 To whom I owe the best of all the good
 To thee I know too much I owe ;
 Until the debt I owe be paid.
 Owe to a troubled element their forms,
 For that Almighty God to whom we owe,
 And prompt self-sacrifice to which I owe
 As if a Church, though sprung from heaven, must owe

Which her poor treasure-house is content to owe,
Owed. Owed him no service ; wherefore he at once
 Of towns and cities, I have owed to them,
 To them I may have owed another gift,
 Owed many years of early liberty.
 With gleams that owed not to the sun their birth,
 Of men and things, what benefit I owed
 That later seasons owed to thee no less ;
 Launched into Morecambe-bay, to him hath owed

Owen. Through life was OWEN LLOYD endeared
Owes. Owes to the fit in which his soul hath tossed
 To serve me so, and knowing that he owes
 The sky owes somebody a grudge!
 While here sits One whose brightness owes its hues
 To whom the wild sequestered region owes
 Maturer Fancy owes to their rough noise
 Or ought that watchful Love to Nature owes
 He labours good on good to fix, and owes
 Owes that presiding aspect which might well
 Which to outrageous wrong the sufferer owes,
 Owes to alliance with these new-born arts!
Owning. To thee am owing;
 Yet to their sturdiness 'tis owing
Owl. See Screech-owl.
 The sportive outcry of the mocking owl;
 But you may love a screaming owl,
 Blithe ravens croak of death; and when the owl
 But save us from you screeching owl
 "Yon owl—pray God that all be well!
 This vagrant owl is playing here—
 The presence even of a stuffed Owl for her
 Crisp, yellow leaves my bed; the hooting owl
 The owl of evening and the woodland fox
 Of sapience in thy aspect, headless Owl!
 The tremulous soul of the complaining owl;
 Whence the scared Owl on pinnacles grey
 A fearful apprehension from the owl
 Where no one dwells but the wide-staring owl
 The owl that gives the name to Owlet-Crag
Owlet. The owlet, in the moonlight air,
 I'll teach him how the owlet sings.
Owlet-Crag. The owl that gives the name to Owlet-
 Crag
Owlet's. Save when the Owlet's unexpected scream
 Brushed by the owlet's wing;
Owlets. The owlets hoot, the owlets cull,
 The owlets through the long blue night
OW's. And the owl's prey; from these hare haunts, to which
Owls. The owls have hardly sung their last,
 The owls have hooted all night long,
 And with the owls began my song,
 And with the owls must end.
 The owls in tune of concert strive;
 And owls alone are waking,
 Blew mimic hootings to the silent owls,
Own. (Partial list.)
 Be better fed, Ne'er may I own the heart
 Who live in these disputed tracts, that own
 Or own we baby Spirits? Genuine courage
 And Reason's godlike Power be proud to own.
 This the Sun's Bird, whom Glendoveers might own
 Perverse, self-willed to own and to disown,
 And, seeing this, own nothing in its stead.
 Own—that the progeny of this fair Isle
 Of flowers the Virgin without fear may own,
 Stretched far as earth might own a single lord;
 And all the assembly own a law
 And said; "The Minds of Men will own
 And own that Art, triumphant over strife
 Or waves that own no curbing hand,
 Which seem, in their simplicity, to own
 Of virtuous feeling. For myself, I own
 (How far soe'er a stranger) does not own
 A task it was, I own, to hold discourse
 From its fantastic birthplace! And I own,
 Its cares and sorrows; he, though taught to own
 To hearts that own not him? Will showers of grace,
 To use of reason. And, I own that, tired
 Who, if indeed she own a mother's heart,
 And its own twilight softens the whole scene,
 Her dawn, far lovelier than the moon's own morn,
 And the near heavens impart their own delights.
 Rouse hell's own aid, and wrap thy fields in fire:
 An emblem of his own unfruitful life
 Howe'er disguised in its own majesty,
 The Woman thus retraced her own untoward fate.
 I have a house that I can call my own;
 When on his own he cast a rueful look.
 By mingling natural matter of her own
 Are hushed to sleep, by your own act and deed,
 From my own threshold I looked up to Heaven
 Ha! what is here? and carved by her own hand!
 Spin motives out of their own howls, Lacy!
 Some uncouth superstition of its own.
 The prey or masters of our own past deeds.
 But his own crime had brought on him this doom,
 If his own eyes play false with him, these freaks
 Tranquil as he had died in his own bed.
 Like the old Roman, on their own sword's point.
 He may work his own will, and what shall we care?
 That I almost received her heart into my own.
 I whispered, "Yet a little while, dear Child! thou
 art my own
 Relinquished by his own;
 On his own time here would he float away,
 And his own mind did like a tempest strong
 Smiles, that with motion of their own
 Of its own hauty, or my need.
 My fancy's own creation.

Own—continued.
 Tears due unto their own.
 Thy own dear mother's far away,
 "My own dear Little-one will sigh
 The Housewife plied her own peculiar work,
 Here, lay it for me, Luke, with thine own hands.
 Her own angelic glory seems begun.
 Of Grasmere safe in its own privacy:
 Wings lovely as his own.
 But now my own delights I make,—
 Thyself thy own enjoyment.
 Beside a grotto of their own,
 A crimson as bright as thine own:
 Even her own needle that subdued:
 The lovely dell is all his own.
 But enjoy their own the more!
 —Blithe spirits of her own impel
 A Lady of my own.
 A slighted child, at her own will
 She seemed to live: her thoughts her own;
 Herself her own delight;
 That our own children to our eyes
 Our own, my own adopted bride,
 To his own powers, and justified
 The breeze their own languor lent;
 And gave them back his own.
 Over his own sweet voice the Stock-dove hroods;
 By our own spirits are we defied:
 A Clifford to his own restored!
 As in a dream her own renewing.
 "My own, my own, thy Fellow-guest
 He hath it to himself—'tis all his own.
 Their own domain;—but ever, while intent
 Their own fair farms, upon the glimmering plain,
 All happens her own.
 And marked it for my own;
 Charms of their own;—then come with me,
 237 P. B. 87
 And he thy own delight!
 From his own thoughts did Peter start;
 Its own small pasture, almost its own sky!
 No fleeting Spirit, but my own true Love?
 Its own; though Rulers, with undue respect,
 Kind Nature's various wealth was all your own;
 Of her own Being is her paramount end;
 The river glideth at his own sweet will:
 I slight my own beloved Cam, to range
 Nor doubt that He marked also for his own
 But from its own divine vitality,
 To reverence, suspends his own; submitting
 And we our own Rob Roy!
 Go back to Yarrow, 'tis their own;
 We have a vision of our own;
 This corner is your own.
 He in a vessel of his own
 Each hut, perchance, might have its own;
 Till Nature cannot find her own,
 And what if I enwrathed my own!
 Must either win, through effort of his own,
 Of thy own mountain, set to keep
 And to his Father give its own unerring aim.
 Another's first, and then her own?
 Of my own Fairfield. The glad greeting given,
 Prefiguring his own impendent doom,
 Into thy own prophetic hook;
 As thy own Yarrow gave to me
 Thus, in the net of her own wishes caught,
 Him his own thoughts did elevate,—
 Her own thoughts loved see; and could bend
 Repeatedly his own deep mind he sounds
 By wrong triumphant through its own excess,
 Who on the good of others builds his own!
 The monitor revives his own sweet strain;
 And nothing save the moving ship's own light
 On this fair Mount, a Poet of your own,
 To make this Gem their own,
 Our own domestic mountain. Thing and thought
 Himself his world, and his own God;
 A music sweeter than their own.
 That broods and sleeps on his own heart.
 Whose mind is but the mind of his own eyes,
 And joy its own security.
 Of my own wish; and feel past doubt
 And in himself possess his own desire;
 —O my own Dora, my beloved child!
 Making a truth and beauty of her own;
 Her own Aeolian lute.
 To their own far-off murmurs listening.
 Less for his own than for thy innocent sake?
 Their own mysterious groves.
 That our own hands have dressed,
 And shunning nought, their own peculiar life
 In his own storms he hides himself from sight.
 But we, we lacked not music of our own,

Pace—continued.

- Gathering upon us ; " quickening then the pace . . . 667
 At a slow pace. The immeasurable height . . . 684
 Some Hermit from his cell forth-strayed, might pace
 On which, with a diversity of pace . . . 716
 With eager pace, and no less eager thoughts . . . 746
 But still he loved to pace the public roads . . . 762
 And now, when free to move with lighter pace . . . 772
 Travelling at steeper pace than ours, had risen
 Pace to and fro, from morn till eventide, . . . 824
 Keeps pace, a harvest answering to the seed—
 Paced. See Slow-paced, Soft-paced.
 The roads I paced, I loitered through the fields ;
 You paced along, when the bewildering moonlight
 He paced along ; and pensively . . . 32
 Into my spirit, when I paced, enclosed . . . 355
 While Merlin paced the Cornish sands, . . . 369
 But now, as silently she paced . . . 407
 Pealed to his orisons, and when he paced . . . 551
 Paced the long Vales—how long they were—and yet
 A respite to this passion, I paced on . . . 622
 And I paced alone the level fields . . . 633
 For ever near us as we paced along ; . . . 650
 Then paced the beaten downward way that led
 Of the huge town's first presence, and had paced
 I paced, a dear companion at my side, . . . 688
 Trackless and smooth, or paced the bare white roads
 And ever with me as I paced along . . . 725
 And, while I paced along the foot-way path, . . . 744
 There, to and fro, she paced through many a day
 Before us ; savage region ! which I paced . . . 766
 His judgments, near that lonely house we paced . . . 769
 While, listening, he had paced the noiseless turf, . . . 776
 Thus occupied in mind I paced along, . . . 805
 Or paced the ground—to guide her Husband home,
 With prompt yet careful hands. This done, we paced . . . 814
 Paces. She paces out the hour 'twixt twelve and one—
 She paces round and round an Infant's grave,
 He paces on, a trusty Guide,—
 Which thus assiduously she paces, . . . 44
 Paces softly, or makes halt, . . . 174
 Paces the deck—no star perhaps in sight, . . . 397
 Not twenty paces from the door, . . . 417
 Pacific. There spreads the famed Pacific Ocean !
 The vast Pacific gladdens with the freight—
 Pacified. She wept, nor would be pacified . . . 460
 Now pacified ; on them, and on the coves . . . 483
 Pacing. And not in vain, while they went pacing side by side.
 Long did I watch, and saw her pacing round . . . 237
 By pacing here, unwearied and alone, . . . 327
 Art pacing thoughtfully the vessel's deck
 Went pacing side by side, this public Way
 In heart as dull in brain—while pacing ground
 Pacing behind along the silent lane . . . 82
 Pacing, two social pilgrims, or alone . . . 784
 Each evening, pacing by the still sea-shore,
 Compared with ours ! who, pacing side by side,
 Paek. The pack loud chiming, and the hunted hare.
 Packed. To chase mankind, with men in armies packed
 Paestum. To range through the Temples of PAE-
 STUM, to muse . . . 32
 Pagan. A Pagan suckled in a creed outworn ;
 Best of the good—in pagan faith allied
 Of Pagan night. Afflicted and dismayed,
 Helps to restore and spread a Pagan sway :
 Her Temples rose, 'mid pagan gloom ; but why,
 And from Pagan chains had rescued,
 To the unlightened swains of pagan Greece.
 Survive, as pagan temples stood of yore,
 Pagans. Were those bewildered Pagans of old time.

 Paid. Except for that abatement which is paid
 Paid to One who loved her well . . . 68
 Until the debt I owe he paid . . . 84
 Your seats, and quickly shall he paid
 Glory to that eternal Peace is paid,
 He paid to Nature tuneful vows ;
 A seemly reverence may be paid to power ;
 Yet shall some tribute of regret be paid
 Look now on that Adventurer who hath paid
 That all observance, due to them, he paid
 Fit obsequies the Stranger paid ;
 Paid simple tribute, such as might have flowed
 Flowing of time and place, and paid to both
 And who but listened ?—till was paid . . . 182
 With mute obeisance gladly paid
 By blind ambition, he this tribute paid.
 Of ritual honours to this Fountain paid.
 Have unto Heaven and You been paid :
 To them and nature paid !
 He paid what he could with his ill-gotten pelf,
 She paid, for in our age the heart is ruled
 To be performed, and paid all holy fees . . . 238
 Wrongs to redress, harmonious tribute paid
 Which I had paid to Nature. Toil and pains
 Paid to the object by prescriptive right . . . 256

Pain—continued.

A thought resigned with pain, when from the mast
Nor pain nor pity in my bosom raised.
The Soldier's Widow learned with honest pain
The wholesome ministry of pain and evil,
With all their natural weight of sorrow and pain,
That, in my zeal, I have caused you so much pain.
To cold and hunger!—Pain is of the heart,
In the entire forgetfulness of pain.
He is a puny soul who, feeling pain,
A Man by pain and thought compelled to live,
Till God released her of her pain;
I could not feel a pain.
I thought of times when Pain might he thy guest,
Others saved from lingering pain.

Proof shalt thou furnish that misfortune, pain,
My calmest faith escapes not pain;
His love was such a grievous pain.

My fire is dead: it knew no pain;
For strong and without pain I lay,
I should not feel the pain of dying,
In spite of all my weary pain.
Think not of me with grief and pain:
And kissed it; seemingly devoid of pain,
Old Susan lies a-bed in pain,
Whether he be in joy or pain,
"What can I do to ease your pain?"
There's nothing that can ease my pain."
Poor Betty! it would ease her pain
How she loved a Christian Slave, and told her pain
Eases her pain, and helps her prayers.
And in my head a dull, dull pain,
Draw from my heart the pain away.
From weakness now and pain defended,
Is opened of still deeper pain.
I felt a sense of pain when I beheld
There came a respite to her pain;
The engines of her pain, the tools
Solitude, pain of heart, distress, and poverty.
As if some dire constraint of pain, or rage
Cold, pain, and labour, and all fleshly ills;
From her exceeding pain.
If solitude, or fear, or pain, or grief,
Hollow excuses, and triumphant pain;
And nightly tosses on a bed of pain;
Of being, smites with irresistible pain,
To ease his conscience of its pain.
He knew not one forewarning pain;
I have no pain that calls for patience, no;
No trace of pain or languor could abide
Of harmony!—a shriek of terror, pain,
I shrink with pain;
Some natural sorrow, loss, or pain,
The fate of those old Trees; and oft with pain

The strife of happiness and pain,
That triumph, when the very worst, the pain,
In these usurping times of fear and pain?
Admonished by these truths, and quench all pain
As though his weakness were disturbed by pain:

And with an infinite pain the spirit aches,
Pain entered through a ghastly breach—
Her peace from images to pain allied.
A softened remembrance of sorrow and pain,
Dismay, and superstitious pain,
Hath any sway? or pain, or fear?
Not unperplexed nor free from pain,
O'ER PAIN AND GRIEF A TRIUMPH FURE.
Whence idle fears, and needless pain,
She shrunk!—with one frail shock of pain
—What now is left for pain or fear?
No moment steals; pain narrows not his cares.
Or would have taught, by discipline of pain
Glad music! yet there be that, worn with pain
Encounters, armed for work of pain and death.
If e'er, through fault of mine, in mutual pain
And pain, hath powers to Eternity endeared.
Such strength as, if ever affliction and pain
"There came from me a sigh of pain
Who, doomed to go in company with Pain,
If this great world of joy and pain
And proud deliverance issuing out of pain
They must forbid the State to inflict a pain,
Amazement rose to pain,
What is peace?—when pain is over,
Although for pain thou mayst be like to die,
Well hast thou wreaked on me by pain and grief;
Feel I a wind, that soundeth so like pain;
A weary while in pain he toseth thus,
A man who does not move with pain, but moves
And buoyant spirit triumphed over pain;
Reader! if to thy hosom cling the pain
Let sorrow overcharged with pain
Sad was I, even to pain deprest,
—With backward gaze, lock'd joints, and step of
pain.
By Pain and her sad family unfound,
Can guess the high resolve, the cherish'd pain

Pain—continued.

Labour, and Pain, and Grief, and joyless Age,
Where the charm'd worm of pain shall gnaw no
more.
And my full heart was swell'd to dear delicious pain.
(Alive to all a mother's pain,
In the pain of my spirit I said,
A thousand sharp punctures of cold-sweating pain,
For which, with pain, he caused due obsequies
Both pain and fear, until we recognise
Uneasiness, or pain, or jealousy;
Issued low muttered sounds, as if of pain
To travel without pain, and I beheld
Of pain, and doubt, and fear, yet yielding not
A world of pain, ripened a thousand hopes,
Without uneasy forethought of the pain,
One night, or haply more than one, through pain
And, through dislike and most offensive pain,
So that he questions the mute leaves with pain,
Sorrow for human kind, and pain of heart.
Whose souls were sick with pain of what would he
A lonely wanderer art gone, by pain
And miserable love, that is not pain
With the adverse principles of pain and joy—
From sources deeper far than deepest pain,
With pain the regions of eternity.
Of pain were keen as those of better men,
Sickness, or accident, or grief, or pain.
"To the dark pit; but he will feel no pain;
The mind is full—and free from pain their pastime."
Not as a refuge from distress or pain,
By pain of heart—now checked—and now impelled—
His mournful narrative—commenced in pain,
In pain commenced, and ended without peace:
To unsettle or perplex it: yet with pain
Divine or human; exercised in pain,
Of pain and grief?" the Solitary asked,
Resolved to quell his pain, and search for truth
Their virtue's humbler mark; a sigh of pain
Would I give a moment's pain;
When I could live without a pain,

Or with immoderate pain. I look for Man,
All brothers, long endeared by kindred pain,
Painful. In painful struggles. Months each other chase,
While thus illumined, tells of painful strife
Upon the pressure of a painful thing,
A few short steps (painful they were) apart
Thy part is done—thy painful part;
Laud, "in the painful art of dying," tried,
And painful struggle and deliverance—prayed
Enough;—before us lay a painful road,
Where the brook brawls along the painful road,
Threading the painful cragg surmounts the cliff.
Yea, afterwards—truth most painful to record!
And therefore bold to look on painful things,
He had no painful pressure from without
Beginning, ends in servitude—still painful,
From painful and discreditable shocks
Whose visual nerve shrinks from a painful glare
The weakness painful and most pitiful,
To cast from time to time a painful look
Painfully. So painfully in the wood?
No stammerer of a minute, painfully
Less fair, I grant, even painfully less fair, Painful. See Hardly-painful.
Pain's. Pain's wild rebellions burst proclaims her rights aloud.
Pains. Turning past pleasures into mortal pains;
"The pains and plagues that on our heads came down,
There, pains which nature could no more support,
Your pains shall ever with your years increase?"
Than you have entered, were it worth the pains.
But our joint pains unloosed the cloak,
The hut stood finished by his pains, nor seemingly lacked aught
From body pains and pains of soul: thou needest no release,
With all my care and pains,
Who told him that his pains were thrown away,
Is worth the best with all their pains;
God help thee, Ruth!—Such pains she had,
Calm pleasures there abide—majestic pains.
If some, by ceaseless pains outworn,
Him hath he sought with fruitless pains;
And once again those ghastly pains,
There is a pleasure in poetic pains

Slackening the pains of ruthless banishment
Upturned with curious pains, the Bard, a Seer,
Pains which the World inflicts can she requite?
Have I received this proof of pains hestowed
Not worth a moment's pains.
What pains to dazzle and confound!
Or pains abstruse—to elevate the will,
To suffer pains with heathen scorn and hate
Even to the inmost seat of mortal pains,
For the departed, built with curious pains

 White as the pair that slid along the plains
 Which ye feel not, happy pair ! . . . 402 White Doe 603
 But turn, my Soul, and from the sleeping pair . . . 414 White Doe 1665
 A Pair who smilingly sat side by side, . . . 415 White Doe 1737
 Was formed between the solitary pair,
 That of the pair—tossed on the waves to bring
 The dwelling of this faithful pair . . . 437 Ecc. Sonn. 2. 34. 10
 The pair sally forth hand in hand : ere the sun
 Off he descends to nurse the brother pair,
 Of deep and stately vales ! A lonely pair,
 Followed that pair of golden days that shed
 Or drummed, with an antic pair
 With looking on, some ancient wedded pair
 Sometimes methought I saw a pair of knights
 The ill-fated pair) in that plain tale will draw
 And joyous creatures ; see that pair, the lamb
 A pair of falcons wheeling on the wing,
 Some little space disjoined, a pair were seen,
 If I must take my choice between the pair . . . 487 Fountain 3
 " In privacy we dwell, a wedded pair,
 Our little Page : the rustic pair approach ;
 Each also crowned with winged heads—a pair
 —For me, I looked upon the pair, well pleased :
 A wedded pair in childless solitude.
 Hind lower rank than this sequestered pair :
 " To a mysteriously- united pair
 Him, farther off ; the pair, who here are laid ;
 Survives, for worthy mention, of a pair
 The pair, whose infant she was bound to nurse,
 Their grave migration, the good pair would tell,
 That now divides the pair, or rather say,
 Flew open, and a pair of lusty Boys
 Upon the brighter scene. How blest that pair
 With caution we embarked ; and now the pair
 But two are missing—two, a lonely pair . . . 490 Incident : Dog 7
 They strangers, and we strangers ; they a pair,
 And we a solitary pair like them.
 And neither pair be broken ? Nay perchance—

- How wide a space can part from inward peace
 I repose, nor am forced from sweet fancy to part,
 Part from thee without pity dyed in shame: . . .
 Must, when my part is done, be ready;
 The thousandth part of what the Nymph bestows;
 That we, who part in love, shall meet again.
 Part fenced by man, part by a rugged steep
 To what dread Powers He delegates his part . . .
 Whom the Dog Hercules persecuted—his part . . .
 Remaineth one protected part; . . .
 Thy part is done—thy painful part . . .
 The best part of their Yeomanry!
 And must not part with. But beware—
 Their part in this effectual prayer. . .
 Fulfilled, and she sustains her part!
 Part of her lost One's glory back to trace . . .
 Filled with mementos, satiate with its part
 Catching the lustre they in part reprove—
 That there's a sensitive, a tender, part . . .
 A little part, and that the worst, he sees . . .
 To bear thy part in this good work, St. Bees.
 A part so charmed the pensive soul: . . .
 Through every part in symmetry, to endure,
 And part far from them.—sweetest melodies . . .
 If he be one that feels, with skill to part . . .
 Hers is now another part: . . .
 Gave him first the wished-for part . . .
 The Future made to play so false a part, . . .
 Part seen, imagined part!
 Dependent as in part its blessings are . . .
 Out of his own humanity, and part . . .
 Its hinder part concealed by hedge-row thorn. . .

Part—continued.

"And must we then part from a dwelling so fair?"
 In contradiction; with no skill to part
 Within my mind, should e'er have borne a part,
 And that a heedful part, in making up
 Itself a living part of a live whole,
 Yet often is perplexed and cannot part
 How could I ever play an ingrate's part?
 Though fledged and feathered, and well pleased to part
 Doth also for our nobler part provide,
 With a dear friend, and for the better part
 To part from company and take this book
 And part through outward hindrance. But I
 heard,
 In part by fear to shape a way direct,
 In part lay here, that unto me the events
 Whereof he was a part: yet this was meek
 He, on his part, accounted for the worst,
 The indecision on their part whose aim
 That I was led to take an eager part
 When erring, erring on the better part,
 Too justly bore a part. A veil had been
 The sympathies erewhile in part discharged,
 It seemed the better part were gnawed away
 With malady—in part, I fear, provoked
 And well those lofty brethren bear their part
 Beneath the sun, like Ganges, to make part
 And be in part compensated. For rights,
 Heavenward; and chide the part of me that flags,
 Sons of the morning. For your nobler part,
 We must not part at this inviting hour.
 —Yet, while the better part is missed, the worse
 Of earth, and human nature's mortal part.
 And sufferings meekly borne—I, for my part,
 Part shaded by cool sycamore, and part
 As you have seen, bear such conspicuous part
 A willing, nay, at times, a forward part;
 An obligation, on her part, to teach
 Said he, "shall shine upon us, ere we part;
 Of winds, this deep Vale,—as it doth in part
 On lovely objects, and we wish to part
 On earth we dimly see, and but in part Partake. Alone partake of it?—Belovéd Marma-duke!
 That Leonard would partake his homely fare:
 How would it please old Ocean to partake,
 And the sweet joy which they partake,
 And gladly Nature's love partake
 Their inspiration I partake;
 That sullenly refuses to partake
 "Let heaves and home-hred kine partake
 And yet a higher joy partake:
 Sad thoughts, avauat!—partake we their blithe cheer
 Again we wandered, willing to partake
 And sorrow moved him to partake
 Of safoiaty Friends the "murderer's chain partake,
 Yet, my beloved Country! I partake
 Union that shadows forth and doth partake
 Who lov'st with Night and Silence to partake,
 Partake its inclination towards earth
 From the Vale's peace which all her fields partake,
 Which they partake at pleasure. Early died
 From kindred, friends, and playmates, to partake
 Partake of, each in their degree; 'tis mine
 If thou partake the animating faith
 To linger I would here with you partake,
 These may be range, if willing to partake
 Do tend their flocks) partake man's general lot
 Contented to partake the quiet meal
 Invited, summoned, to partake the cheer
 Do, by the almighty Ruler's grace, partake
 Thy lively spirits to partake,
Partakers. Some true Partakers of his loving spirit
Partakes. The infection of the ground partakes,
 Of the dull earth partakes not, nor desires?
 With sweets that she partakes not some distaste
 Now some gloomy nook partakes
 Partakes, in her degree, Heaven's grace;
 By her commands partakes not, in degree,
 Partakes a livelier cheer;
Partaking. The faith partaking of those holy times,
 Partaking this day's pleasure? From afar
Parted. See Death-parted.
 I parted with the Child. Parted with whom?
 In such sad service; and he parted with him.
 Was sadly crossed.—Poor Leonard! when we parted,
 He would pursue his journey. So they parted.
 Death in a moment parted them, and left
 They parted; and the generous Vaudracour
 Impelled;—they parted from him there, and stood
 Now are they parted, far as Death's cold hand
 Was from his team and waggon parted;
 Could draw, when we had parted, vain delight,
 We parted upon solemn ground
 Be parted from his ancient ground:
 He parted from them; but at their side
 They parted.—Well with him it fared
 Within whose shade they parted.

Parted—continued.

They parted, sorrow was at hand
 Parted and re-united by the blast.
 Been parted by the hurrying world, and droop,
 And so we parted. Back I cast a look,
 The widely parted hours; the noise of streams,
 The man to come, parted, as by a gulph,
 Whereby society has parted man
 We parted, nothing willingly; and now
 We parted.—'Twas the time of early spring;
 That she had parted with her elder child;
 For him whom she had lost. We parted then—
 Have parted hence; and still that length of road,
 Discreetly parted to preserve the peace,
 Parted and re-united: his compeer
 And parted them; or haply both are gone
Parterre. Each kind in several beds of one parterre;
Parterres. From thy most secret haunts; and ye Parterres
 And easy contemplation; gay parterres, Parthenopa. Waiting your Charge to soft Parthenope!
Parthenopa's. Parthenope's Domain—Virgilian haunt, Partial. If I could think one weak or partial feeling—
 That thou, if not with partial joy elate,
 Shall a few partial breezes only creep?
 Of custom that prepares a partial scale
 A partial judgment—and yet why? for then
 By partial bondage. In his steady course,
 Of angry umpires, partial and unjust;
 Trust not to partial care a general good;
Partially. Of reason partially let in
 When into air had partially dissolved
Participate. Seem to participate, the while they view
 Fade, and participate in man's decline.
 Not seeking those who might participate
 We all too thanklessly participate,
 Whose lustre we alone participate,
Participation. Beyond participation lie than by participation of delight
Particula. To the least particle of sentient dust;
 The particle divine remained unquenched;
Parti-coloured. See Party-coloured.
 A parti-coloured show of grave and gay,
Particular. That, as he knew in what particular spot
 And in the midst is one particular rock
 Of old tradition, one particular flower
 Huge trunks! and each particular trunk a growth
 There, at the root of one particular tree,
 If each most obvious and particular thought,
 The memory of one particular hour
 That this particular strife had wanted power
 General distress in his particular lot;
 That my particular current soon will reach
 Of less particular notices assigned
 Was the particular spot, in which they wished
 In like low voice to my particular ear,
 When these particular interests were effaced
 Strangers to all particular amity,
Particulars. And all particulars that dull brains require
Parties. See Treason-parties.
 Friends, enemies, of all parties, ages, ranks,
 Split into parties by the fickle mind.
Parting. See Hollow-parting.
 Though to the vale no parting beam
 Slant watery lights, from parting clouds, apace
 The "parting Genius" sighs with hollow breath
 At midnight listens till his parting oar,
 From gulf of parting clouds one friendly beam,
 The parting signal streamed—at last the land withdrew.
 Peace to my parting soul, the fulness of content."
 A parting word—though not of grace,
 Since parting Innocence bequeathed
 The grace of parting Infancy
 Gaze on the moon by parting clouds revealed,
 Parting; the casual word had power to reach
 This parting glance, no negligent adieu!
 Has with that Parting mixed a filial sigh!
 It is the last, the parting song;
 His parting charge—but ill obeyed—
 (Earth's lingering love to parting reconciled, Brief parting, for the spirit is all but fled)—
 Brings on her parting hour.
 And this our parting spring.
 The parting moment and its fond regret.
 Where every parting agony is hushed,
 For that last thought of parting Friends
 That was indeed a parting! oh,
 To the least world where parting is unknown.
 Below, the echo of his parting oar.
 Be mentioned as a parting word, that not
 Added no farewell to his parting counsel,
 Our final parting; for from that time forth
 A parting tribute to a spot that seemed Insensibly the foretaste of this parting
 A parting moment with her loveliest look,

Parting-place. Beside our Parting-place;
Partings. Glad meetings, tender partings, that up-stay
Partisan. An active partisan, I thus convoked . . . 580 John Words. 54
Partition. In union, in partition only such;
 The union, the partition where, that makes
 Yet, in partition, with their several spheres,
Partly. Mix strangely; trifles light, and partly vain,
 More justly balanced, partly at their feet,
 Partly from voluntary holiday,
 Even as a river,—partly (it might seem)
Partner. Stood his dumb partner in this glorious feat;
 So no unworthy Partner in their flight
 So loud, so clear, my Partner through life's day,
I thought of Thee, my partner and my guide,
 Hath yet this faithful Partner left;
 And when the partner of those varied walks
 Her wedded Partner lacked not on his side
 For Nature called my Partner to resign
 And partner of my loss.—O heavy change!
 Of his fond partner, silent in the nest.
 And where yet dwells her faithful Partner, left
 When the meek Partner of his age, his Son,
Partners. What ghastly partners hath your call
 Partners in faith, and brothers in distress,
 Her work and her work's partners she can cheer,
 I and the modest partners of my days
Partnership. Mock-chastisement and partnership in play
 To both; and if, that partnership must cease,
Partook. Yet two sweet little ones partook my bed;
 That sanctifies its confines, and partook
 Came not, but in a lane partook his bread.
 Was spread, and we partook a plain repast.
 Merrily seated in a ring, partook
 Partook of every motion, met, retired,
Partridge. And Moore and Partridge stare me in the face.
Parts. Were that man, who could draw the line that parts
 Spring parts the clouds with softest airs,
 The Phantom parts—but parts to re-unite,
 As humanising graces, are but parts
 When a soft summer gale at evening parts
 And in the middle parts the braided hair,
 Just three parts blown—a cottage-child—if e'er,
 All moveables of wonder, from all parts,
 An under-sense of greatest; sees the parts
 As parts, but with a feeling of the whole.
 Lying full three parts buried among tufts
 The veil, or where it parts at once, to spy
 That parts the individual from his kind,
 That parts the image from reality;
Party. Watchwords of Party, on all tongues are rite;
Party-coloured. See Party-coloured.
 Whose party-coloured garments gay
 Of merriment a party-coloured knot,
 And wreck of party-coloured earthenware,
Party-strife. That came but as a curse to party-strife;
Pass. See Mountain-pass.
 The horse alone, seen dimly as I pass,
 Nibbling the water lilies as they pass,
 And quickens the blithe sound of oars that pass.
 One flower of hope—oh, pass and leave it there!
 And leading Herbert, We must let them pass—
 For love of God I must not pass their doors;
 Chancing to pass this way, some six months gone
 He was that One so young should pass his youth
 They have no substance. Pass but a few minutes
 (For other impulse let it pass) was driven,
 Despatch him!—If I pass beneath a rock
 And ever, as they pass away,
 If human Life do pass away,
 The clouds pass on; they from the heavens depart:
 pondering that Time-to-night will pass
 Have power to shake me as they pass:
 I pass the raptures of the pair;—such theme
 Fond Youth! that mournful-slow now must pass
 But for one object which you might pass by,
 Should pass into a stranger's hand, I think
 Startling the timid as they pass,
 But Hiberns come, and pass away;
 Amid the smoke of cities did you pass
 From heaven to earth our thoughts will pass,
 Pass high above those fragrant bells
 But pass a mile—and then for trial,—
 And oft, as they pass slowly on,
 From hill to hill it seems to pass
 Were fellow-travellers in this gloomy Pass,
 Shall pass into her face.
 What crowd is this? what have we here! we must not pass it by;
 Pass by her door—'tis seldom shut—
 No thoughts hath he but thoughts that pass
 For yet it is broad day-light: clouds pass by;
 Oft as I pass along the fork
 Gives to this savage Pass its name.
 —Pass onward (even the glancing deer

 Wanting accustomed food, must pass from earth,
 In a straight and treacherous pass.
 From hence my hope and snare forth did pass.
 And lifts the latch for him that he may pass.
 And urchins newly breeched—all pass him by:
 Then let him pass, a blessing on his head!
 —Then let him pass, a blessing on his head!
 Yet he watches the clouds that pass over the streets;
 If you pass by at morning, you'll meet with him
 there.
 And to the few who pass this way,
 A summons to the sound of oars, that pass,
 Nor pass unprais'd the robe and veil divine,
 Will pass so soon from human memory;
 Pass unrecorded, that I still had loved
 My lordly dressing-gown, I pass it by,
 Unmoved. I could not always lightly pass
 The day pass lightly on, when foresight sleeps,
 That all would come to pass of which the voice
 Think not that I could pass along untouched
 Pass we from entertainments, that are such Heard as we pass, when no one looks about
 Of things that pass away, a temperate show
 I pass them unalarmed. Not Chaos, not
 To pass the remnant of his days, untasked
 Did many seasons pass ere I returned
 Unfailing: not a hamlet could we pass,
 Of public news or private; years that pass
 Impatient to pass on, when I exclaimed,
 Till, chancing on that lofty ridge to pass
 Or to pass through; but rather an abyss
 This universe shall pass away—a work
 The words he uttered shall not pass away.
 Shall pass unincensured; 'tough the issue prove,
 Brush it away, or cloud pass over it;
 Pass, said the Matron, 'and I never see,
 If so approved and sanctified, to pass,
 Shall cease to fade, till ages pass away;
 And strange disasters, but I pass them by,
 Or shall we overhear him, as we pass,
 "Now from the living pass we once again:
 To all that come, almost to all that pass;
 Over thy last abode, and we may pass
 Pass with the respirations of the tide.
 That there should pass a moment of the year,
 Days will pass on, the year, if years be given,
 Thence northward did they pass by Arthur's seat,
 And giving to the moments as they pass,
 Nor let me pass unheeded other loves
 Them leaving to their joyous hours I pass,
 Pass with a thought the life of the whole year
 That must not die, that must not pass away,
 And the great name of Troy; now all things pass

Passage. At once the grinding iron passage found;
 Through a strait passage intricate and dim?
 Hard passage forcing on, with head
 Where'er the streams a passage find;
 Strict passage, through which sighs are brought,
 And force their passage to the salt-sea tides!
 Through it have won a passage to thy heart;
 Through the rocks our passage smooth
 And through this wilderness a passage cleave
 And fervent words a passage found.

Passing—continued.

And every passing breeze will testify.
 Passing before him, such as God will not Told this day the passing bell.

Lay stretched at ease; but, passing by the place
 "But is that gloom dissolved? how passing clear
 In the world's voice, was passing fair;
 No, passing through strange sufferings toward the tomb,
 Now cooling, with his passing wing,
 Just three days after, passing by
 From month to month, life passing not away;
 As chance would have it, passing by
 When, passing through this narrow strait,
 Was passing by, and, down the vale
 That errand-bound "Prentice was passing in haste—
 And, passing thus the live-long day,
 And passing even into my purer mind,
 Yet, passing, here might pause,
 The passing traveller sighs;
 Was passing sweet; the eyeballs of the leopards,
 And now is passing by an inn
 As if its hues were of the passing year,
 Speak, passing winds; ye torrents, with your strong
 And let us chant a passing stave,
 If even a passing Stranger sighs
 Then might the passing Monk receive a boon
 The royal Guinever looked passing glad
 The passing Winds memorial tribute pay;
 "LAUS DEO." Many a Stranger passing by
 But, on the third day, passing by
 The last dear service of thy passing breath!
 Of villain-service, passing with the soil
 That swells the bosom of our passing sail!
 Sweet voices for the passing wind;
 Losh should I be to use it: passing sweet

My passing Spirit cheer.
 And to exalt the passing hour;
 A Power is passing from the earth
 "Passing the love of women;" and between
 Now, passing Urseren's open vale serene,
 Passing his father's bones in future days,
 Some horseman who was passing by,
 If child-like fruitfulness in passing joy,
 The passing day; should learn to put aside
 Their faintest whisper to the passing breeze,
 A passing word erewhile did lightly touch
 That into music touch the passing wind.
 Of nations and their passing interests,
 Even by these passing spectacles my heart
 That passing shows of Being leave beheld,
 Or passing by some single tenement
 In set rotation passing to and fro,
 Softly and lightly from a passing cloud,
 On rural business passing to and fro
 Passing, as accident or fancy led,
 Not without awe. Thence passing on, she said

Passing-knell. That precedes the passing-knell
Passion. Of him whom passion rivets to the spot,
 The peasant, wild in passion, made reply
 His passion drove him—thence a Voyager
 Would wreak on us the passion of the moment.
 Highways of dreaming passion, have too long,
 Two columns, one for passion, one for proof;
 Passion a unit and against us—proof—
 Or we're stuck fast for ever;—passion, theo,
 Shall be a unit for us; proof—no, passion!
 Than feathers clinging to their points of passion.
 He, thus by feverish passion overcome,
 Strange fits of passion have I known:
 Those shocks of passion can prepare
 Touching the matter of his passion, still,
 While Venus in a passion of despair
 And, patience coveting yet passion feeding,
 Haunted me like a passion: the tall rock,
 Rebellious passion: for the Gods approve
 For this the passion to excess was driven—
 To the first leagues of tutored passion climb,
 To share the passion of a just disdain.
 "We have a passion—make a law,
 Where every passion shall the sway attest
 The mournful passion ended
 By Works of spirit high and passion pure!
 From voices into zealous passion stung,
 With tenderest passion; leaving him to pine
 Imperious passion in a heart set free:—

Of purblind mortal passion,
 That slights this passion, or condemns;
 That passion, prudently gave way;
 Of infant passion, scarcely dare to show
 Life's rule from passion craved for passion's sake;
 With will, and to their work by passion linked.
 Where Passion caught what Nature taught,
 Our tears from passion and from reason came,
 It is his darling passion to approve;
 From death, and from the passion of death—
 With finest touch of passion swayed

Passion—continued.

Of sudden passion roused shall men attain
 Against time present, passion holds the scales:
 And, guilt escaping, passion then might plead
 The passion of a moment came
 Pale Passion, overpower'd, retires and woos
 And rising, by the moon of passion sway'd.
 Of him whom passion rivets to the plain,
 Of passion at the bosom's inmost seat.
 With passion for Æneas, such strong love
 A respite to this passion, I paced on
 With me is now such passion, to be blamed
 How Nature by extrinsic passion first
 Of rivers, woods, and fields. The passion yet
 And purest passion. Thou, my Friend! wert reared
 From transitory passion, unto this
 Of passion; was obedient as a lute
 Of amorous passion. And that gentle Bard,
 By reason built, or passion, which itself
 An Ode, in passion uttered, which foretold
 For their own sakes, a passion, and a power;
 To tell us what is passion, what is truth,
 Nor touched by weterings of passion—
 The sorrow of the passion stopped me there.
 Keen struggles, and black clouds of passion raised;
 Full of one passion, vengeance, rage, or fear?
 And viewless agencies: a passion, she,
 The land all swarmed with passion, like a plain
 Inflamed by passion, blind with prejudice,
 A passion and a gallantry, like that
 In chains of mutual passion, from the tower.
 And holy passion overcame me first,
 But this is passion over-near ourselves,
 Of wise in passion, and sublime in power,
 As selfish passion urged, would act amiss;
 In such strange passion, if I may once more
 Yet in the deepest passion, I howed low
 No heat of passion, or excessive zeal,
 To every angry passion. There I heard,
 That whose feels such passion in its strength
 And sanctity of passion, speak of these,
 As native passion dictates. Others, too,
 What passion makes them; that meanwhile the forms

Of Nature have a passion in themselves,
 In love and holy passion, shall find these
 And the first virgin passion of a soul
 By passion or mischance, or such misrule
 Of human passion. Sympathies there are
 As with a lover's passion. Yet his moods
 Of natural passion, seemingly escaped,
 For any passion of the soul that leads
 Of passion: whatso'er he felt or feared,
 Whom he had loved in passion; and to send
 "A kinder passion opened on her soul
 And, in requited passion, all too much
 Food for sick passion in a minion's cheek,
Passionate. But now the passionate lament,
 By casual outbreak of his passionate words,
 Attract us still, and passionate exercise
 Into a passionate lament?—O Soul!
 O 'tis a passionate Work!—yet wise and well,
 No tears of passionate regret
 With meditations passionate from deep
 A passionate intuition; whence the Soul,
 "Fled!" was the Wanderer's passionate response,
 That faced us with a passionate welcoming,
Passionately. If she too passionately wretched
 Then passionately loved; with heart how full
 For though I was most passionately moved

Passion's. And discipline was passion's dire excess.
 Silent, but not to high-souled Passion's ear—
 Life's rule from passion craved for passion's sake;
 Woven out of passion's sharpest agonies,
 And passion's feverish dreams.

Spurn Reason's law and humour Passion's rage;
 War is passion's basest game
 Have ye withdrawn from passion's crooked ways,
Passions. Scarcely less than sacred passions,

For passions that were not my own, and think
 If stately passions in me burn,
 For passions linked to forms so fair
 Regent of sound, have dangerous Passions trod!
 That curbed the baser passions, and left free
 To social cares from jarring passions freed;
 He, nursed 'mid savage passions that defile

And, though the passions of man's fretful race
 And of old honours, too, and passions high;
 But passions spread like plagues, and thousands wild
 Their forms are broken staves; their passions, steeds
 Smooth passions, smooth discourse, and joyous
 thought:
 Man's feverish passions, His pure light of love,
 And wider range to passions turbulent,
 God, whom their passions dare defy,
 Of Faith, which doth all passions tame
 And hull'd the warring passions into rest,
 And quench the passions kindling into flame

Passions—continued.

To my own passions and habitual thoughts ;
The passions that build up our human soul ;
All sense,—but other passions in me ruled,
Passions more fervent, making me less prompt
Passions unworthy of youth's generous heart
And all my deeper passions lay elsewhere.
Thus by conflicting passions pressed, my heart
From dangerous passions free. Three years had flown

And measured passions of the stage, albeit Coarse manners, vulgar passions, that beat in Instinctively to human passions, then
And little bustling passions that eclipse
And burial-place of passions, and their home
Of passions and opinions, filled the walls
Where passions had the privilege to work,
With most delight the passions of mankind,
Of selfish passions ; nor did ever yield
Of earth-born passions, on the wings of praise
In life among the passions of mankind
Of madding passions mutually inflamed ;
Their passions and their feelings ; chiefly those
Big passions strutting on a petty stage ;
Of her own passions ; and to regions haste,
And passions hold a fluctuating seat :
Ill-governed passions, rankings of despite,
No morbid passions, no disquietude,
A choice that from the passions of the world
With empty actions and vain passions stuffed,
Two passions, both degenerate, for they both
And still his harsher passions kept their hold—

Passions'. If e'er these precepts quell'd the passions' strife,

Passive. Lay passive as a dormouse in mid winter.
Thy passive beauty—parallels have risen,
Passive yet pleased. What ! with this Broom in flower
The Princess, passive to all changes :
A passive stillness is enjoined.
Captivates like passive meekness.
To passive minds. My seventeenth year was come ;
In passive expectation from the shore,
Of forms and colours, passive, yet endowed
Far less did rules prescribed by passive taste,
Who thrust themselves upon the passive world
To outward argument ; the passive will
Or implement, a passive thing employed
And beat the passive water with their wings.

Passiveness. In a wise passiveness.

Past. See Long-past, Passed.
A little moment past so smiling !
But brings some past enjoyment to his mind ;
And oft, when that dread vision hath past by,
Turning past pleasures into mortal pains ;
But the calm summer season now was past.
The friends whom she had left but a few minutes past.
Whom, but some few days past, I saw in Eskdale,
A minute past, he went to fetch a draught
About your own ; but for these two hours past
The prey or masters of our own past deeds.
In joy I met thee, but a few hours past ;
A month, sweet Little-ones, is past
Five minutes past—and, O the change !
Past softly, leading in the Boy ; and while from roof to floor,

To say that you are heedless of the past :
Of half these graves ? For eight-score winters past,
Twelve years are past since we had tidings from him.
Clouds of disgrace and envious fortune past !
'Tis past, that melancholy dream !
An amnesty for what is past ;
Were but the bitter struggle past.
Not old, though something past her prime :
A coffin through Timothy's threshold had past ;
And what, through strong compunction for the past,
But now that time is gone and past.
That happy time all past and gone,
A green-grown pond she just has past.
So lived he till his eighteenth year was past.
Was busy, looking back into past times.
And till these three weeks past the land was free.
Doth in its silence of past sorrow tell,
Shall with its pleasantness be past,
While I was seated, now some ten days past,
Hoping the danger would be past ;
When all my reveries are past,
And many a blithe day they have past.
Well ! that is past—and in despite
A Caesar past the Rubicon !
All past forgiveness it repeated ;
Confound my present feelings with the past,
Of sickness felt by him in times long past,
Full twenty years are past and gone
What thoughts must through the creature's brain have past !
Her thirty years of winter past,
Five years have past ; five summers, with the length
Unborrowed from the eye.—That time is past,
Of past existence—wilt thou then forget

Past—continued.

"This visage tells thee that my doom is past :
The past unsigh'd for, and the future sure ;
The hours are past—too brief had they been years ;
Upon the irrevocable past,
Of Palestine, of glory past,
The Beast four days and nights had past ;
Now, turned adrift into the past,
Had past a sudden shock of dread.
In my past verse ; or shall be, in the lays
And, though past pomp no changes can restore,
Into one vision, future, present, past.
Like thee, shall gladden, as in seasons past,
In them—in Her our sins and sorrows past.
(Not three weeks past the Stripling died.)
To give new pleasure like the past,
And should, methinks, when all was past,
The treasured dreams of times long past,
The future scorned, the past defied ;
A dirge devoutly breathed o'er sorrows past ;
These hardships ill-sustained, these dangers past,
Of past adventures ; to whom, in vision clear,
Hath past to Milan's loftiest spire
And that the past might have its true intents
Of past exploits, nor fondly after more
More of ennobling impulse from the past,
Eftsoons astonishment was past,
And all the far-off past reveal.
Rough as the past ; where Thou, of placid mien,
That told of days long past when here I roved
Mid-noon is past ;—upon the sultry mead
As being past away.—Vain sympathies !
Past, present, future, all appeared
Ah, no ! the visions of the past
While native song the heroic Past recalls."
The past he calmly hath reviewed :
Of trial past without offence
Their joy till every pang was past.
Along the plain of York he past ;
Sustained by memory of the past
Long past, delights and sorrows ?
Past things, revealed like future, they can tell
He listens (all past coquets and all schemes
Where frauds were hatched of old, hath sorrow

past—
'Tis past away ; far other thoughts prevail ;
On our past selves in life's declining day :
And some, too heedless of past danger, court
—'Tis past, the visionary splendour fades ;
For eye and mind, the present and the past ;
Utterance of thanks that we have past with ease,
The prayer for them whose hour is past away
Desire we past illusions to recall ?
And of the towering courage which past times
Why grieve for these, though past away
Iona's Saints, forgetting not past days,
From the dread bosom of the unknown past,
His fame may spread, but in the past
And, when Thou art past service, worn away,
We grieved for thee, and wished thy end were past ;
That, if it could, would hurry past ;
Of my own wish ; and feel past doubt
That not an image of the past
Past, future, shrinking up beneath the incumbent
Now ;

Why is the Past belied with wicked art,
Nor gain, from past or future, skill
Thinking of past and gone, with what is left
A prison's crown, along this way they past
Before the world had past her time of youth
Then, moved by needless fear of past abuse,
On that proud pageant now at hand or past,
The light from past endeavours purely willed
Shades of past bliss, or phantoms that, to gain
Now, when the frost was past enduring,
Dark is the past to them, and dark
Past deeds and offices of charity,
Glad am I, glad that it is past :
For on the past hath fallen a light
Shades of the Past, oft noticed with a sigh,
That there hath past away a glory from the earth.
The thought of our past years in me doth breed
With wishes the past to undo ;
Think calmly on the past, and mark at leisure
Oh ! in the past if cause there was for shame,
Remembered the Future by the Past,
Remembering the bold promise of the past,
And clearer insight. Thus my days are past
Incumbent o'er the surface of past time
Whence he had landed scarcely three weeks past ;
To turn from present hardships to the past,
Fetching her goodness rather from times past,
I guess not what this tells of Being past,
But thou art with us, and with us in the past,
But oh ! if Past and Future be the wings
Holden where martyrs suffered in past time.
Of past and present, such a place must needs
Await us ! Oh, how much unlike the past !
Of history, the past and that to come !
The experience of past ages, as, through help
Was prayed to as a judge ; but these were past,

Past—continued.

Past outrages, and shape the way for new,
The gloom, that, but a moment past, was deepened
To illuminate the abyss of ages past,
Review the past, I warred against myself—
In times long past; but still, from year to year,
Such is my hope, the spirit of the Past
That day so lately past, when from the crag
Our dim ancestral Past in vision clear;
This for the past, and things that may be viewed Spread over time, past, present, and to come,
—But, from past liberty, and tried restraints,
He left his house: two wretched days had past,
Lonesome and lost: of whom, and whose past life,
Youth's season yet with him was scarcely past,
Of past discussions with this zealous friend
In past or future; far as she can go
Reviewing my past way, much to condemn,
Of my past course to which these thoughts advert,
So like the past, and both so firm a pledge
There could I meditate on follies past;
Who, having o'er the past no power, would live
No longer in subjection to the past,
"Life's autumn past, I stand on winter's verge;
Stuffed with the thorny substance of the past
Though somewhat past the fulness of his prime,
The future cannot contradict the past:
(Full eight years past) the solitary prop
Their lenient term of separation past,
With silenti increase: summers, winters—past,
Past or to come; yea; boldly might I say,
Deploping changes past, or dreading change
Is past for ever.—An inventive Age
And oft-times Death, avenger of the past,
Cherish, and lofty Minds approve the past—
Compare I thy earthly bed a moment past
Is past we blame it not for having come.
But few weeks past, and would be so again
As rich in folly as the past in crime.

Pastima. See Field-pastime.

It were a pleasant pastime to construct
The little brooks that seem all pastime and all play,
Anglers, bent on reckless pastime,

For pastime and delight, as is the use . . .
Since I their pastime witnessed here . . .
While tears were thy best pastime, day and night;
Their curious pastime, shaping in mid air
Whom Sylphs, if e'er for casual pastime they . . .
Oo with your pastime I till the church-tower bells
For summer pastime into wanton air;
In sundry moods, 'twas pastime to be bound . . .
To his loved pastime given by sedgy Lee,
Pastime their idol, give their day of life
And babble of her pastime!—On, dread Power!
The Season's harmless pastime. Ruder sound
Our pastime and our happiness will grow . . .
For pastime plunge—into the "abrupt abyss."
On which the warbling birds their pastime take.
Not long your pastime to prevent;
Our pastime was, on bright half-holidays,
Nor wanted we rich pastime of this kind,
(Whose in-door pastime, lighted up, survived,
Observed where pastime only had been sought,
The mind is full—and free from pain their pastime."
To tread for pastime, talking with his mates,
And makes me pastime when our tempers suit;
A not unrequited pastime from the hum
A merry journey, rich in pastime, cheered
Such product, and such pastime, did the place

Pastime's. Thou giv'st, for pastime's sake, by shriek or shout,

Pastimes. Fancy, who leads the pastimes of the glad,
Nor pastimes of the May;
—I sang; and lo! from pastimes virginal
Then, for the pastimes of this delicate age,
And superficial pastimes; now and then
The simple pastimes of the day and place.
And pastimes in plenty;

Pastor. A Pastor such as Chaucer's verse portrays;
The learned Pastor dwells, their watchful Lord.
Around the Pastor, each in new-wrought vest,
Pastor and Patriot!—at whose bidding rise
Lax, huoyant—less a pastor with his flock
The reverend Pastor toward the churchyard gate
The Pastor learned that his approach had given
You," to the Pastor turning thus he spake,
Experienced faith, the reverend Pastor said,
The Pastor cast his eyes upon the ground;
The Pastor said, "I willingly confine "Doubt can be none," the Pastor said, "for whom The Pastor pressed by thoughts which round his theme
"Here," said the Pastor, "do we muse, and mourn
The Pastor answered, "You have read him well."
The Pastor, even as if by these last words
The Pastor said: "So Providence is served;
The Pastor ceased.—My venerable Friend
"And yet, O happy Pastor of a flock
I grieve not," to the Pastor here he turned,
Alert to follow as the Pastor led,

Pastor—continued.

On us the venerable Pastor turned . . .
Your Pastor is emboldened to prefer . . .
Pastoral. Through bare grey dell, high wood, and pastoral cove;
While pastoral pipes and streams the landscape lull,
Of pensive Underwalden's pastoral heights.
The pastoral Swiss begin the cliffs to scale,
The pastoral mountains front you, face to face.
Of sportive wood run wild: these pastoral farms,
And this green pastoral landscape, were to me
Of a too-anxious world, mild pastoral Muse!
To pastoral dales, thin-set with modest farms,
And pastoral melancholy.
And, here and there, between the pastoral downs,
Lulled by the sound of pastoral bells,
Thickens, the pastoral River will forgive
From pastoral graves extracting thoughts divine;
Sweet pastoral flowers, and laurels that have crowned
The pastoral Swiss begins the cliffs to scale,
And more than pastoral quiet, 'mid the stir
Sweet covert did we cross of pastoral life,
Since, travelling southward from our pastoral hills,
In manhood then, have seen a pastoral tract
Celestial, lay unseen the pastoral vales
Thou wilt recline of pastoral Arethuse;
There, as I ranged at will the pastoral downs
While at our pastoral banquet thus we sate
His round of pastoral duties, is not left
To pastoral melody or warlike air,
By books unsteadied, by his pastoral care
Of pastoral homesteads, had been long inlaid.
The pastoral Muse laments the Wheel—no more

To pastoral fancies? Is there such a stream,
Pastor's. When they no more their Pastor's voice
The Pastor's mansion with the house of prayer.
Pastors. Pastors who neither take nor point the way
Pasture. There, over rock or sloping pasture creep.
Green pasture and the soft warm air
Its own small pasture, almost its own sky!
Searches pasture after pasture,
Of level pasture, islanded with groves . . .
Free as a colt at pasture on the hill.
The turf of yon large pasture will be skimmed;
Her garden, from the pasture fetched her kine;
From an adjoining pasture, overhung . . .
To that green pasture; place before our sight
In grove or pasture; cheerfulness of soul,
He learned to pasture at his mother's side.
To the green plot of pasture in the brook.
Pasture-field. Is but a fellow to that pasture-field.
Pastures. Nor Hunger driven the herds from pastures bare.
With our pastures about us, we could not be sad;
On the slopes of the pastures all colours were seen;
From half-stripped woods and pastures bare,
Green pastures she views in the midst of the dale,
And the green silent pastures, yet remain.
Remembering, and green Alpine pastures decked
Nor Hunger forc'd the herds from pastures bare
Of Fancy, happy pastures ranged at will,
Looks out, and all the pastures dance with lambs,
In fertile pastures—was beheld with eyes
All over their own pastures, and beyond.
For other pastures would exchange the same
Sprinkles these little pastures but the same

Pasfiring. Or distant herds that pasturing upward

creep,
Nought but the herds that pasturing upward creep,
How the calm pleasures of the pasturing herd

Patch. But faded, and stuck o'er with many a patch and shred.

Beneath their little patch of sky
Like a patch of April snow—

Patents. Patents of manhood for eight hundred years.

Paternal. To his paternal home he is returned,
For his paternal Gods, the Trojan raised?
This spot is my paternal home,
And his bones lie in his paternal vale.—
'Mid his paternal fields at random thrown?
(High Servant of paternal Love)
To the paternal floor; or turn aside,

And greet the old paternal shield,
That took where, on paternal ground,
A tired Ship-soldier on paternal laud,
Copying with awe the one Paternal mind.
On the soft down of my paternal home.
And mild paternal sway. The potent shock
His flock he slighted: his paternal fields
That from the floor of his paternal home
Of thy paternal splendours, and the pomp
That must be looked for here, paternal sway,

Path. See Foot-path.

Shot, down the headlong path darts with his sledge;
Oh! when the sleety showers her path assail,
Winds neither road nor path for foot to tread:

Path—continued.

Up from the lake a zigzag path will creep . . .
 Or woodbine wreaths, a smoother path is wound ;
 In spite of all the larks that cheered our path,
 Nay, we must travel in another path,
 Oh yes, that mole, that viper in the path ;
 Henceforth new prospects open on your path ;
 Light to thy path, warmth to thy blood !—Together
 That in the shape of man do cross our path
 Then pity crossed the path of my resolve :
 Each in the other locked ; and down the path,
 He had forgotten. He had lost his path,
 "His one of those who needs must leave the path"
 I've met see him tripping down the path
 I wot my path with tears like dew,
 You will suppose that with an upright path
 Foes might hang upon their path, snakes rustle
 near,
 Christian meekness smoothed for all the path of life,
 Into a path or public way
 There was no road, nor any woodman's path ;
 And with the sight of this same path—begin,
 Alone I tread this path—'for aught I know,
 His lonesome path, with unobserving eye
 They dart across my path—but lo,
 The glorious path in which he trod.
 Not five yards from the mountain path,
 The churchyard path to seek ;
 Intu to trace the ideal path of right
 Thou strew'st temptation o'er the path
 Here is my body doomed to tread, this path,
 But, chancing to espy a path
 There's little sign the treacherous path
 The path grows dim, and dimmer still ;
 With the green path ; and now he wends
 Fell round the path of Milton, in his hand
 Some path of steep ascent and lofty aim ;
 O'er hilly path, and open Strath,
 The path that leads them to the grove,
 Honour that knows the path and will not swerve ;
 That bind thee to the path which God ordains
 A verdant path before us lies ;
 Our path that straggled here and there ;
 Along his path ? His unprotected bed
 Yet are allowed to steal my path athwart . . .
 On road or path, or at the door
 Path, or no path, what care they ?
 And down the path through the open green,
 O'er path and road, and plain and dell,
 With prayers and blessings we your path will sow ;
 That can secure for you a path of light
 Of awe-struck wisdom droops : or let my path
 Whate'er the path these mortal feet may trace,
 Whate'er path he chooses ;
 To pace the ground, if path be there or none,
 That makes the path before him always bright :
 Before the path of milder suns ;
 That life—the flowery path that winds by stealth—
 Beheld with wonder ; whether floor or path
 Will guide me in my forward path ;
 Than treading a path trod by thousands before.
 "I was a path trod by thousands ; but Daniel is one
 Of the fair Muses. Not a covert path
 Where antique roots its bustling path o'erlook,
 Oh ! when the bitter showers her path assail,
 Tracking with silvery path the changeful gale.
 A zig-zag path from the domestic skiff
 And let thy path be hewn out of the Rock,
 Augmented and sustained. Yet is a path
 Of all that breathe ?—what in the path of all
 Of fitting pleasures tempt him from his path ;
 And that meanwhile, by no uncertain path,
 Seemed best, and the straightforward path of those
 All else was progress on the self-same path
 Would only follow, in the path of shame,
 Along this intricate and difficult path,
 Or obscure records of the path of fire.
 And, while I paced along the foot-way path,
 That made her heart beat quick. You see that path,
 The little sinuous path of earthy care,
 Advance, swerving not from the path prescribed ;
 By strict necessity, along the path
 —Adown the path that from the glen had led
 And round our path darted oppressive beams.
 Thus darkness and delusion round our path
 While tens of thousands falter in their path,
 Each other's path ; but, as the intruder seemed
 The path remains that linked his cottage-door
 THE PATH OF PERSEVERANCE. "Thou from whom
 Treading their path in sympathy and linked
 Of the path worn by mournful tread of her
 Off stretches toward me, like a long straight path
 —We followed, taking as he led, a path
 Receiving, took the slender path that leads
 The works by faith ordained. Pursue thy path,

Pathetic. Of that pathetic story :
 Nor of the setting sun's pathetic light . . .
 Of time's pathetic sanctity ;
 And mingling playful with pathetic thoughts.

Pathetic—continued.

And balanced by pathetic truth, by trust . . .
 For the pathetic records which his voice
Pathless. More ragged than need was ! O'er path-less rocks,
 Nor leaf-crowned Dryad from a pathless wood,
 Now gads the wild vine o'er the pathless ascent :—
 By lurking Dernbrook's pathless side,
 Than pathless wastes: Once, when those summer months
 Ships he can guide across the pathless sea,
Paths. Have far to travel,—and on these rough paths
 Those paths so dear to me.
 Thy Husband walks the paths of upper air :
 The paths which we had trod—these fountains,
 flowers ;
 Through paths of wickedness and woe,
 Their smoothest paths, to wear their lightest chains ?
 Or feed his eye in paths sun-proof
 Ere, from accustomed paths, familiar fields,
 Through paths and alleys roofed with darkest green ;
 These only, Duddon ! with their paths renewed
 Fields which they love, and paths they daily trod,
 Or lured along where green-wood paths he trod.
 Through crags, and smoothing paths beset with danger,
 By paths no human wisdom can foretrace !
 In the bright paths of fair majestic Truth :
 Firm in the sacred paths of moral truth,
 Oft have I said, the paths of Fame pursue,
 Of that sweet Valley ; when its paths, its shores,
 So revered by us both. O'er paths and fields,
 And, once, three days successively, through paths
 Led me to these by paths that, in the main,
 And the wild paths ; and, by the summer's warmth
 O'er paths they used to deck : carnations, once
 And those wild paths were left to me alone.
 To ecstasy ; and all the crooked paths
 Traversed but by a few irregular paths,
 With tenderness embosom ; to your paths ;
Pathway. The pathway leads, as round the steeps it twines ;
 Our pathway led us on to Rotha's banks ;
 Pathway, and lane, and public road, were clogged
 A hoary pathway traced between the trees,
 And there the pathway ends.
 A fair smooth pathway you discern,
 A gravelled pathway treading,
 More than by smoothest pathway may be brought Undressed the pathway leading to the door ;
 The downward pathway taking,
 Pathway, or cultivated land ;
 And held the pathway down by a brookside ;
 Till dipp'd his pathway in the river shade ;
 Shot, down the headlong pathway darts his sledge ;
 Chok'd is the pathway, and the pitcher broke.
 Wild round the steeps the little pathway twines,
 And to the door a neater pathway winds,
 By road or pathway, or through trackless field,
 And open field, through which the pathway wound,
 Said—"Shall we take this pathway for our guide ?—
 And thus the pathway, by perennial green
Pathway's. Or through her true pathway's native charms,
Pathways. Or where her pathways straggle as they please
 Let itself in upon him :—pathways, walks,
 The turf unites, the pathways intertwine ;
 These pathways, yon far-stretching road !
 Trips down the pathways of some winding dale ;
 Their golden leaves upon the pathways,
 Thy lofty steeps, and pathways roofed with vines,
 With those delightful pathways we advanced,
 To you, ye pathways, and ye lonely roads ;
 Beside our roads and pathways, though, thank Heaven !
Patience. See Mock-patience.
 And tears which flowed for ills which patience might not heal.
 Whether too much for patience, or, like mine . . .
 But patience ! Curses on that Traitor, Oswald !—
 In his old age—Patience—Heaven grant me patience !—
 Doth haunt your memory, Patience, hear me further !—
 "Nay, patience ! patience, little boy ;
 Listen yet awhile ;—with patience . . .
 With patience merit the reward of peace,
 And, patience coveting yet passion feeding,
 With all the patience that he can ;
 Called for his patience and his skill ;—
 Soothe it into patience—stay
 I have no pain that calls for patience, no ;
 Wilt thou find patience ! Yet die not ; do thou
 Patience and temperance with this high reserve,
 As boundless patience only could endure ?
 Labour accomplishes, or patience bears—

Patience—continued.

Of female patience winning firm repose ; . . .
 And a patience to her grief.
 In cunning patience, from the head that wears it.
 On Patience coupled with such slow endeavour,
 Patience his law, long-suffering his school,
 Patience, with trust that, whatsoever the way
 By fortitude and patience, and the grace . . .

Long patience hath such mild composure given,
 That patience now doth seem a thing of which,
 Her patience, and humility of mind
 Thrice welcome Presence ! how can patience e'er Wisdom, which works thro' patience ; thence he learned

Will give me patience to endure the things
 Soul-strengthening patience, and sublime content.
 Forgiveness, patience, hope, and charity !"
 Meek Saint ! through patience glorified on earth !
 Tending to patience when affliction-strikes ;
 Listened with readier patience than to strain
 Or rocky biel'd with patience they retire.

Patient. Was meek and patient, feeble, old and blind,
 Less patient in their wretchedness, have fallen,
 Of fathers, but with patient mind enforced
 May pierce the earth with the patient mole,
 With languid limbs and patient head
 The patient Briar suffered long,
 While the patient primrose sits . . .
 He was patient, they were strong,
 The patient, and the tender-hearted,
 The patient Beast on Peter turned
 Then let him how with patient stroke
 How long shall vengeance sleep ? Ye patient
 Heavens, how long ?

As nobly graced by Sculpture's patient toil ;
 Opposed to dark, deep plots of patient skill,
 Was ever built with patient care ;
 What patient confidence was here !
 Deep into patient Earth, from whose smooth breast it came !

Meek, patient, kind, and, were its trials fewer,
 By which the soul—with patient steps of thought
 The purest stream of patient Energy.
 Though meek and patient as a sheathed sword ;
 Isis and Cam, to patient Science dear !
 Meek, patient, steadfast, and with loftier scope,
 Are patient of thy rule . . .

With patient care. What tho' assaults run high,
 But welcome fortitude, and patient cheer.
 Days of sweet leisure, taxed with patient thought
 To patient courage and unblemished truth,
 Spare diet, patient labour, and plain weeds.
 The farewell blessing of the patient man,
 Through length of time, by patient exercise
 Fierce, moody, patient, venturesome, modest, shy ;
 China's stupendous mound) by patient toil
 The meek, the lowly, patient-child of toil,
 By patient exercise of reason made
 But taught with patient interest to watch
 And patient spade ; praise to the simple crook,
 And patient listening, thanks accept from me.
 We to the patient creatures carried food
 In Scripture sanctified—the patient brute,
 So patient Senates quibble by the hour

Patiently. I pondered patiently your wish and will Deformed and sullied, patiently gave up
 How patiently the weight of wrong is borne ;
 How patiently the yoke of thought they bear !
 So patiently ; and through one hand has spread
 How patiently you've waited,
 O ye, who patiently explore . . .

Patmos. And guiding, like the Patmos Saint,
 In Patmos wrote, who saith of them that go

Patriarch. Patriarch of a wide-spreading family,
 This old Man stood, the patriarch of the Vale !

Patriarchal. For patriarchal occupations, named
 Diluvian truths, and patriarchal lore.
 To patriarchal dignity of mind,

Patriarch's. Bless'd with his herds, as in the patriarch's age,

Patriarchs. And, like the Patriarchs in their simple age,
 For Faith, which to the Patriarchs did dispense
 Of those old Patriarchs when from well to well
Patrician. And they who feed with this Patrician wit
Patrimonial. A portion of his patrimonial fields.
 Hence, on my patrimonial grounds, have I
 For patrimonial honour set apart,
 A patrimonial sanctity. And thus,
 His native vale and patrimonial fields

Patrimony. Transcendent to all local patrimony, Patriot. The Patriot nymph starts at imagined sounds,
 Ere martyr burns, or patriot bleeds !
 With action, were as nothing, patriot Friend !
 Your patriot sons, to stem invasive war,
 Chanting for patriot heroes the reward
 And oft he tempts the patriot Swiss
 The patriot Mother's weight of anxious cares !

Patriot—continued.

They—who have heard some learned Patriot treat
 The Saint or Patriot to the world that heals
 Pastor and Patriot—at whose bidding rise
 That best betoken Patriot loyalty . . .
 Became a patriot ; and my heart was all
 At dearest separation, patriot love . . .
 A patriot, thence rejected by the rest,
 Told by my Patriot friend, of sad events,
 A patriot of the world, how could I glide
 Sage, warrior, patriot, hero ; for it seemed
 Was a true patriot, hopeful as the best
 The patriot to play . . .

Patriotic. Glory, and patriotic Love,
 Ye furious waves ! a patriotic Son
 To patriotic and domestic love
 The best of names, when patriotic love
 Already said of patriotic love . . .
 With patriotic confidence and joy . . .

Patriot's. If there be movements in the Patriot's soul,
 The Patriot's heart with pictures rude and stern,
 A Patriot's heart, warm with undying fire.
 Or judgments sanctioned in the Patriot's mind
 Responded ; " Honour to the patriot's zeal !
 So call it, of a youthful patriot's mind ;

Patriots. Of Patriots scoop their freedom out, with hand
 Upon the Patriots, animates their task ;—
 Patriots informed with Apostolic light

Patron. Then, to her Patron Saint a previous rite
 The Evangelist St. John my patron was :
 Of Patron, famous school or friendly nook,
 The patron, on the shoulders of his priests,
 By an unthought-of patron. Bleak and bare

Patronage. By hopes of coming patronage beguiled

Pause. Hark ! over the roof he makes a pause,
 He, having made a pause, the same discourse renewed.
 No pause admitted, no design avowed !
 When life is at a weary pause,
 Yet, passing, here might pause,
 Dead pause abrupt of midnight winds,
 To pause at last on more aspiring heights . . .
 Why, making here a sudden pause,
 Before it humbly let us pause,
 High sacrifice, and labour without pause,
 Yet may a sympathising spirit pause,
 Here pause : the poet claims at least this praise,
 (Or pause) the summit of the Leaning-tower.
 She ventures once again—another pause !
 And then a thoughtful pause ensued :
 My heart is sick ;—this weary pause . . .
 A little thoughtful pause it made ;
 Ye, who have duly weighed the summons, pause . . .
 In his lone course the Shepherd oft will pause,
 Pause with no common sympathy . . .
 'Twere well in little, as in great, to pause,
 Pause, Traveller ! whose'er thou be
 Intent upon thy way, pause, though in haste !
 Pause, courteous Spirit !—Balbi supplicates
 While fill each pause the ringing woods of morn.
 Dear was the pause of life, and dear the sigh
 I pause ; and at length, through the glimmering grate,
 Pause upon that, and let the breathing frame
 Of jocund din ; and, when a lengthened pause
 Here must we pause : this only let me add,
 In motion without pause ; but ye have left
 That I am trifling : 'twas a moment's pause,—
 But let him pause awhile, and look again,
 When a dead pause ensued, and no one stirred,
 Here might I pause, and bend in reverence
 Enabled me to pause for choice, and walk
 A pause ensued ; and with minuter care
 A pause of silence followed ; then, with voice
 Still linger'd, after a brief pause, resumed ;
 Shall pause, the skill admiring that can work
 Could pause between a Raleigh and a James ?

Paused. Here paused she, of all present thought forlorn,

Paused—continued.

They paused, and heard a hoarser voice blaspheme,
What can be gained?" At this the old Man
paused,
That thou shouldst go." At this the old Man
paused;
Paused not, and through the depth of night she kept
And when will she return to us?" he paused;
Alike indulged to all, we paused, one now,
He paused—for shadows of strange shape,
Abruptly paused the strife;—the field throughout
He paused, and stood entranced by that still face
Or some deep chestnut roved, oft have I paused.
All night the storm had raged, nor ceased, nor paused,
Nor paused, till o'er the stag he blew
When by the gliding Loire I paused, and cast
Heaved at safe distance, far retired. I paused,
'Made my heart bleed.'" At this the Wanderer
paused;
He paused, as if unwilling to proceed,
He paused—and having lifted up his eyes
The Vicar paused; and toward a seat advanced,
Fronting the noontide sun. We paused to admire
He paused, as if revolving in his soul
Pauses. He turns aside his head, he pauses;
Catch, in the pauses of their keenest play,
Pausing. And, wildly pausing, oft she hangs aghast,
The tall sun, pausing on an Alpine spire,
Given to the pausing traveller's rapturous glance:
And heard, the pausing village hum between,
Pausing at will—our spirits braced, our thoughts
This said, oft pausing, we pursued our way;
Pave. Of genuine crystals, pure as those that pave Paved. (More fair than heaven's broad causeway paved with stars)
Of its Arcades paved with sepulchral slabs,
A channel paved by man's officious care,
In courting notice; and the ground all paved Pavement. By sudden pangs; what bitter tears have on this pavement dropt!
That o'er the pavement of the surging streams

Dawns this time-buried pavement. From that mound
Heaven's sapphire pavement, yet breathed well
content,
The grass-unfold pavement tread.
The Place unrolls, from pavement skinned with
moss,
"Eke the whole Convent on the pavement lay,
Of houses, pavement, streets, of men and things,—
As on the pavement of a Gothic church
Paves. That paves the brooks, the stationary rocks,
Pavilions. From rich pavilions spreading wide,
Uplifted; here, serene pavilions bright,
Paw. Would crush the lion's paw with mortal anguish,
Old as the tiger's paw, the lion's mane
Pawed. While his horse pawed the floor with furious
heat;
Bounced, leapt, and pawed the air; or mumbling
sire,
Paws. Crouches, stretches, paws, and darts!
From the brink her paws she stretches,
Pay. And bore him high through yielding air my debt of love to pay,
In that sweet mood when pleasure loves to pay
Stooped down to pay him fealty;
Shall Fancy pay to thee a grateful vow?
Is there no debt to pay, no boon to grant?
With chastened feelings would I pay
To pay the homage; and with these are joined,
Less tribute could she pay than this.
The passing Winds memorial tribute pay;
Yet will yourselves to God no service pay;
Measuring thy course, fair Stream! at length I pay
Instinctive homage pay;
It would not pay for candle-light.
We pay a high and holy debt;
To pay the filial debt, for food to roam,
Have made me pay to science and to arts
Pay fruitless worship to humanity,
Forgetfully; uncalled upon to pay
Upon their knees, and daily homage pay
Paying. Who, paying deadly hate in kind
Than slow and torpid; paying in this wise
Paynim. Flaming till thou from Paynim hands release Pays. Then pays submissively the appolated debt
The lonely redreast pays!

Peace. Where peace to Grasmere's loely island leads,
And breathes in peace the lily of the vale!
A peace enveloped, not disturbed, by wreaths
Till peace go with him to the tomb.
"We lived in peace and comfort; and were blest
But what afflicts my peace with keenest ruth,
And that among so few there still be peace?
On shipboard, bound till peace or death should set him free.
Peace to my parting soul, the fulness of content."
She slept in peace,—his pulses throbb'd and stopped,

And be at rest. Oh, Sir! Peace, my good Wilfred;
Receive that letter? Be at peace.—The tie
Of peace and order. Aged men with tears
And every sacrifice his peace requires.—
But listen, for my peace— Why, I believe you.
Soon would her gentle voice make peace between us.
Remembered terror, there is peace and rest.
Banish the thought, crush it, and be at peace.
The earth for sure redemption of lost peace.
Be at peace; I am innocent.
Tranquil—why not? Oh, peace! He is at peace;
The extremes of suffering meet in absolute peace.
Thy hours as they flow on are spent, if not in joy in peace.
They please Him best who labour most to do in peace His will:
Peace and rest, as seems, before them

To live in peace upon his father's land,
The peace which others seek they find;
It robs my heart of peace.

Peace settles where the intellect is meek,
No peace, no comfort could I find,
Who must now be a wanderer! but peace to that strain!
He clove to her who could not give him peace—
Of suffering or of peace, I know not which:
—Hushed was that House in peace, or seeming
peace,
Are of inward peace secure:
With patience merit the reward of peace,
Peace ye deserve; and may the solid good,
Ensuring peace to innocence.
These died in peace each with the other,—
May peace come never to his nest,
To peace, or fond regret.
In such a heedless peace. Alas! full soon
Through accidents of peace or war,
"But if thou goest, I follow—" "Peace!" he said—
But in calm peace the appointed Victim slept,
"Him only pleasure leads, and peace attends,
Peace to embosom and content—
All creatures met in peace, from fierceness free,
His peace hath no offence betrayed;
And spreads in steadfast peace her brooding wing.
In thoughtful reverence to the Prince of Peace,
Glory to that eternal Peace is paid,
And hope of endless peace in me grew hold:
Peace in these feverish times is sovereign bliss:
But where untroubled peace and concord dwell,
To live and die, the peace of heaven his aim;
To breathe in rural peace, to hear the stream,
Peace let us seek,—to steadfast things attune
Plead for thy peace, thou beautiful romance
Wills that your peace, your beauty, shall be sold,
Nor by soft Peace adopted; though, in place
In peace, and peace of mind.
To live in peace on shore.
How loud! yet lived in peace with shame.
Is gone; our peace, our fearful innocence,
Peace that should claim respect from lawless Might.
In peace of spirit, and sublime content!
Now, from Heaven-sanctioned victory, Peace is sprung;
Nor will the God of peace and love
Thy law, and live henceforth in peace, in pure good will.
And to the heavenly saints in peace who dwell,
For liberty confirmed, and peace restored!
A deeper peace than that in deserts found!
A portion of God's peace.
The melodies of Peace in love!
That fosters peace, and gentleness recalls;
And, therefore, art thou blest with peace, serene
Yet hints at peace to be o'erthrown,
Peace greets us;—rambling on without an aim
Husband to a depth of more than Sabbath peace:
Peace to their Spirits! why should Poesy
Peace, leisure, freedom, moderate desires;
To soberness of mind and peace of heart
Striving in peace each other to outshine.
Now all is sun-bright peace. Of that day's shame,
Her peace from images to pain allied.
How wide a space can part from inward peace
To Her, as to her opposite in peace,
And now, if men with men in peace abide,
Prepared, in peace of heart, in calm of mind
Win rest, and ease, and peace, with bliss that Angels share.
Even to the fountain-head of peace divine."
Lie down in peace, and lovingly.
And peace is none, for living or dead!
In solitude, and utter peace:
Of peace on our humanity.—
Then peace to cruelty and scorn,
Peace, peace to all indigity!
Confirmed the deed in peace profound.
And with a deeper peace endured

Peace—continued.

But chastisement shall follow peace despised,
Justice and peace:—bold faith! yet also rise
Justice and Peace through Her uphold their claims;
Move Princes to their duty, peace or war;
The peace of God within his single breast!
For every wave against her peace unites,
Her peace destroyed! he hopes a wilderness!
The peace of mind is Virtue's sure effect.
To human kind; though peace be on his tongue,
Yield timely fruit of peace and love and joy.
In hours of peace, or when the storm is driven
As on a bed of death? Some lodge in peace,
Vain is the pleasure, a false calm the peace,
The shadow—and the peace supreme!
Lead Power! whom peace and calmness serve
Love to promote and purity and peace;
Intrudes on peace, I pray the eternal Sire
Peace to the Mourner. But when He who wore
Would be rational peace—a philosopher's ease.
That he below may rest in peace,
In peace fulfilling.
To breathe the Elysian peace in upper air.
For the blissful calm, the peace
Justice and peace to a secure abode,
Wherever peace is on the brow
Gleams 'mid the peace of this deep dale
Loves it, while there in solitary peace
And love the end, which all through peace must seek.
From the Vale's peace which all her fields partake,
And peace among yourselves.
Their peace, perhaps, our lightest footfall marred;
Think of their common peace, their simple play.
All peace depends, all safety rests.
Heaven prosper it! may peace, and love,
Come ministers of peace, intent to rear
So may it set in peace, to rise again
Sent forth her peace to cheer.
With all his ancestry. Then peace to him,
What is peace?—when pain is over,
And asked for peace on suppliant knee;
And peace was given,—nor peace alone,
Praise be to such, and to their slumbers peace!
To peace so perfect that the young behold
In peace eternal; where desire and joy
For peace on earth and bliss in heaven.
A steadfast peace that might not be betrayed.
The tender peace of rural thought:
To comfort and to peace.
In peace is roaring like the Sea;
And thou, O rescued Earth, by peace and love,
At peace inverted your lithe necks ye love,
The scene is waken'd, yet its peace unbroke,
That breath'd a death-like peace these woods around,
The redbreast peace had bury'd it in wood,
But deeper lies the heart of peace.
In bond of peace, in bond of love,
The sea, or trod the earth, to peace estrang'd,
As bland as the reed of peace:
Long months of peace (if such bold word accord
And seemed to be a trouble to the peace
Of quietness or peace; yet have I stood,
Our horses grazed. To more than inland peace,
Of peace and quiet and domestic love,
In glory immutable. But peace! enough
Of sedentary peace. Those lovely forms
But peace to vain regrets! We see but darkly
Intense desire through meditative peace;
And hath the name of God. Transcendent peace
Of peace and self-command. Of rivers, fields,
And didst sit down in temperance and peace,
Spake with a sense of peace, at intervals
Tumult and peace, the darkness and the light—
Maiden of Buttermere! She lives in peace
Possession of the faculties,—the peace
To thee, and those domains of rural peace,
That spreads its leaves in unmolested peace,
Justice and peace. But far more sweet such toil—
In peace and silence. But if e'er was heard,—
Promised soft peace and sweet forgetfulness.
Was gentleness and peace. Upon a small
March firmly towards righteousness and peace.—
Triumphs of unambitious peace at home,
Whence grew that genuine knowledge, fraught with peace,
So neither were complacency, nor peace,
Of peace and excitation, finds in her
Where I could meditate in peace, and cull
Hope to my hope, and to my pleasure peace
May with fit reverence be applied—that peace
Strewing in peace life's humblest ground with herbs,
Would chant, in lonely peace, the spousal verse
The peace required, he scanned the laws of light
Amid the hounities of the year, the peace
And ere our lively greeting into peace
A Being, who by adding love to peace
In peace and comfort; and a pretty boy
Had filled with plenty, and possessed in peace,
At this still season of repose and peace,

Peace—continued.

She sleeps in the calm earth, and peace is here.
It could not be more quiet; peace is here
"He is departed, and finds peace at last!"
Then from the threshold moves with song of peace,
To which thou may'st resort for holier peace,—
For independent happiness; craving peace,
But for its absolute self; a life of peace,
As times of quiet and unbroken peace,
Which I had trod in happiness and peace,
Against my peace. Within the cabin stood
In pain commenced, and ended without peace:
Nor rapt, nor craving, but in settled peace,
Have still the keeping of their proper peace;
Where peace and happy consciousness should dwell,
Peace in ourselves, and union with our God.
And central peace, subsisting at the heart
In peace and meditative cheerfulness;
In peace, from morn to night, from year to year.
Than this, to graze the herb in thoughtless peace,
For the mind's government, or temper's peace;
To virtue lost, insensible of peace,
Where health abides, and cheerfulness, and peace,
Discreetly parted to preserve the peace,
Of Time's eternal Master, and that peace.
From peace like exiles on some barren rock,
Loth to disturb what Heaven hath housed in peace.
"A woman rests in peace; surpassed by few
A mind intolerant of lasting peace
Her mind she strictly tutored to find peace
And her obsequious shadow, peace of mind,
Wretched at home, he gained no peace abroad;
That wears a look so full of peace and hope
From some staid guardian of the public peace,
One after one, with intervals of peace.
To spend the sabbath of old age in peace,
This hallowed grave demands, where rests in peace
Impregnable of Liberty and Peace.
Oh! where is now the character of peace,
Possessed of health, and strength, and peace of
mind;
With what Heaven grants, and die—in peace of
mind,
Cannot subsist, nor confidence, nor peace.
As if preparing for the peace of evening.
Seems but a fleeting sunbeam's gift, whose peace
Your very poorest rich in peace of thought
Society excites, and love.
S.3.426 Through Gubrian* 3
Peace to the sober matron who shall dip
To be waylaid by her betrothed, peace
The greeting "peace be with you" unto them,
For peace they have, it cannot but be theirs.
To breathe in peace, we shall moreover find —Such is our wealth; O Vale of Peace, we are
From such a desperate breaker of the peace?
Peaceable. —"The peaceable remains of this good Knight
A peaceable dominion, wide as earth,
Peaceably. Watch also, shifting peaceably their place
Thou, chequering peaceably the minster's gloom,
Rocks in its harbour, lodging peaceably.
And there we found him breathing peaceably,
Peaceful. "Peaceful as this immeasurable plain
And end my days upon the peaceful flood."
—Maintained, for peaceful ends beyond our view.
Up to heaven, thro' peaceful ways.
Your years make up one peaceful family;
Farewell!—we leave thee to Heaven's peaceful care,
Thus often would he leave our peaceful home,
A habitation in this peaceful Vale.
Of Silver-hose, and Grasmere's peaceful lake
There close the peaceful lives of flowers?
Within that warm and peaceful berth,
Which slowly settles into peaceful calm,
Now sleeping in these peaceful groves.
Has raised thy spirit to a peaceful stand
But your smooth motions suit a peaceful aim;
Peaceful striving, gentle play
Hail, Twilight, sovereign of one peaceful hour!
Breathed forth beside the peaceful mountain Stream
Not small like ours, a peaceful flood;
Now peaceful as the morning,
Come forth, ye old men, now in peaceful show
Of peaceful civic virtue: thy attest
Attire the peaceful corpse in vestments white;
The triumph hail, which from their peaceful clime
The peaceful guest advancing from afar.
That, slowly making way for peaceful night,
Spreading her peaceful ensigns, calls the swains
Gently wound the peaceful flood,
But with its peaceful majesty content.
Its shining forehead through the peaceful rent
Yet peaceful Arts did entrance gain
"Even she will to her peaceful woods
Than from her wily praise, her peaceful gown,
And cheering off his peaceful reveries,
Peaceful abodes, where Justice might uphold
In peaceful earth: for, doubtless, he was frank,
A peaceful spot where Nature's gifts abound;

Peaceful—continued.

Thou monument of peaceful happiness !
But from this peaceful centre of delight
On the humanities of peaceful fame,
Of peaceful years ; a chronicle of heaven —
A peaceful cradle given :
When pure Religion rear'd the peaceful breast
Though peaceful, full of gladness. Thou art pleased,
Whereon Britannia rests her peaceful fame.
Opening the peaceful clouds ; or she may use
Of holdest projects, and a peaceful end
The peaceful scene oft filled me with surprise
And, save the flowing water's peaceful voice,
Those sanctified abodes of peaceful man,
Of peaceful houses with unquiet sounds.
Of hospitality and peaceful rest.
Even here, though less than with the peaceful house
And in the region of their peaceful selves —
Release from fear ; and cherished peaceful days
O, calm contented days, and peaceful nights !
For my own peaceful lot and happy choice ;
Gathered together in their peaceful fold ?
As if, amid these peaceful hills and groves,
Intrudes, the peaceful concert to disturb
His gentle manners ; and his peaceful smiles,
Murmurs, not idly, o'er his peaceful grave,
In what may now be called a peaceful bed.
From out the labours of a peaceful Land
With peaceful admonitions for the heart
Into our hearts ; and charmed the peaceful flood.
Called to such office by the peaceful sound
Yet in this peaceful Vale we will not spend
Unheard-of days, though loving peaceful thoughts.

Pearly—continued.

The flowers in pearly dews their bloom renewing !
As the pearly car of Amphitrite,
Save where that pearly whiteness
Thrilling each pearly cleft and sparry grot,
Familiar, as the Morn with pearly dews ?
" My pearly Boat, a shining Light,
And in the pearly shallow placed,
Their pearly lustre—coming but to go ;
Shakes off that pearly shower.
A pearly crest, like Dian's when it threw
Frosting with hoary light the pearly ground, Peas. A garden stored with peas, and mint, and thyme,
But hear the proots— Ay, prove that when two peas
Be larger than the peas—prove this—twere matter
Had twined about her two small rows of peas,
Peasant. The peasant, from you cliff of fearful edge
The kneeling peasant scarcely dares to gaze ;
No peasant leans upon his pole, to tell
Behind his sail the peasant shrinks, to shun
Think not the peasant from aloft has gazed
The peasant, wild in passion, made reply
I met a peasant near the spot ; he told me,
No traveller, peasant, herdsman ? Not a soul !
Have you, good Peasant, seen a blind old Man ?
Thus talking of that Peasant, we approached
Where gazed the peasant from his door,
To king, to peasant, to rough sailor, dear,
Peasant and mail-clad Chief with pious awe ;
He had insulted—Peasant, King, or Thane ?
Whence the blithe hail ? behold a Peasant stand
Aw struck, the kneeling peasant scarce surveys ;
Behind his sail the peasant strives to shun
Tho' now, where erst the grey-clad peasant stray'd, Peasant and king ; when boys and youths, the growth
Monarch and peasant : he the house redeemed
A peasant met us, from whose mouth we learned
Upon those tidings by the peasant given
I knew a Scottish Peasant who possessed
He was a peasant of the lowest class :
Peasantry. Of that young peasantry, who, in our days,
Peasant's. Strong terror checks the female peasant's sighs,
By silent cottage-doors, the peasant's home
I spied him skulking in his peasant's dress.
To look upon you. In a peasant's dress
Attired in peasant's garb, who stood alone,
Unscorned the peasant's whistling breath, that lightens
Cheer'st the low threshold of the peasant's cell !
In one meek smile, beneath a peasant's shed,
My dull forehodings in a Peasant's ear
And lean upon a peasant's staff.
The far-off peasant's day-deserted home ;
Was never heard the plodding peasant's tread.
But every word that from the peasant's lips Peasants. She eats her food which every day the peasants
Thrice happy, burghers, peasants, warriors old,
Of Peasants in their homely gear ;
The Wharfdale peasants in their prayers.
The peasants of these lonely valleys used
From dateless usage which our peasants hold Peasant-youth. A Peasant-youth, so call him, for he asked
Peat-tire. Our home-amusements by the warm peat-fire
Peat-yielding. From the peat-yielding Moss on Gowdar's head.
Pebbles. In the slope-channel floored with pebbles
bright,
Did o'er the pebbles play.
Among the stones and pebbles he
Of wave-worn pebbles, pleading on the shore
Grots, pebbles, roots of trees, and fancies more, Pebbly. Across the pebbly road a little runnel strayed.
In a calm hour to kiss the pebbly shore,
In flower and tree, in every pebbly stone
Peck. Then peck or perch, fond Flutterer ! nor forbear
Not venturing yet to peck their destined meal,
That peck along the road, regard him not.
That peck along the hedge-rows, or the kite Pecked. The red-breast, known for years, which at my casement pecked.
Pecked, as at mine, thus boldly, Love might say,
While Robin pecked the crumbs upon his knee
Peccar. Her fishes peculiar, and peculiar skies.
And not here only, their peculiar charms
The Housewife plied her own peculiar work,
Drawn by what peculiar spyl,
Or herb that claimed peculiar sympathy,
Now, whether it were by peculiar grace,

Peculiar—continued.

Peculiar ground for hope to build upon.
A constant influence, a peculiar grace;
But most on some peculiar nook
And shunning nought, their own peculiar life
Yet, as she may, for each peculiar case
And blended, in peculiar harmony,
Of each recalling his peculiar boons.
Awed by the theme's peculiar sanctity
And bringing with me no peculiar sense
Yea, appertained by a peculiar right
Peculiar to myself, let that remain
Have each his own peculiar faculty,
Or from the power of a peculiar eye,
And prized in his peculiar nook of earth
For the peculiar pains they had required,
Yields no peculiar reason of complaint
For which peculiar requisites are mine;
His own peculiar utterance for distress
Art to outstrip in her peculiar walk.
Hath now his own peculiar sanctity;
Of his peculiar humour, would let loose
Her own peculiar family of love.

Pecus. The serenum pecus of a Gallic breed?
Pedantry. For them whom precept and the pedantry
Pedestal. Each fondly reared on his own pedestal,
Cast from the pedestal of pride by shocks.

Pedestrian. A lone pedestrian with a scanty freight, Pedigree. From sovereigns deep in pedigree intrenched.

Pedlar's. A basket, which they filled with pedlar's wares;

Upon the Pedlar's toil—supplied their wants,
Peep. Come, let us take a peep at both together,
His glimmering eyes that peep and doze!
At will the crystal tattlements, and peep
Such Forms as from their covert peep
The little trembling flowers that peep
Flowers that peep forth from many a cleft and chink.

One that would peep and botanize
At peep of dawn would rise,
Peep forth, and are admitted.
If peep between the clouds a star on high,
Glades we behold, and into thickets peep,
Soon will peep forth the primrose; ere it fades

Peeped. A low-roofed house peeped out the trees between;
Or peeped they often from their beds,
The huddling flowers, peeped forth the nest
Invited, forth they peeped so fair to view,
Peeped forth, to give an earnest of the Spring.
Cherished in shade though peeped at by the sun;

Peeping. Of the sun peeping through the clouds can spy,
And, through the cottage-lattice softly peeping,
Before the boat-house peeping thro' the shade;
From depth of shaggy covert peeping forth
From mountain ridges peeping as they passed

Peeps. Where scarce the foxglove peeps, or thistle's beard;
Heard by calm lakes, as peeps the folding star,
And peeps the far-off spire, his evening bourn!
Peeps often ere she darts into her nest,
Into the cavern's mouth he peeps;
Where, bosom'd deep, the shy Winander peeps
Where scarce the foxglove peeps, and thistle's
beard,

Peeps out a little speck of smiling green,
To where a scanty knot of verdure peeps,
Peeps often ere she dart into her nest,
Of transitory interest, and peeps round
Scarce peeps the curious star, till solemn gleams

Peer. Our own contrivance, Building without peer!
This day, distinguished without peer,
A goodly Knight that hath no peer that liveth!"
The Lady, once her playmate,
Oft, through thy fair domains, illustrious Peer!
Peered. Has peered o'er the heeches, their work is begun:

That from some other vale peered into this.
Peering. Peering above the trees, the steeple tower
The pointed steeple peering forth from the centre
of the shade.
Each peering forth to meet the other—
Peering in air and backed by azure sky,

Peerless. A peerless Youth expectant at my side,
Her freight, it was a Damsel peerless;

Peers. This grass is tender grass; these flowers they have no peers
The feats of Arthur and his knightly peers;
Of all his peers, before the multitude
And Eson stood a youth 'mid youthful peers.
"And while my youthful peers before my eyes
Remembrance of myself and of my peers
On the soft west-wind and his frolic peers;
While Anna's peers and early playmates tread,
Thee, neither know I, nor thy peers;
Who, to recall his daunted peers,
That sumptuous Pile, with all its peers,
Amid his playful peers?"

Peers—continued.

And other Peers whose names are on record,
The harsard gave some favorite (favourite) stocks of peers

Peevish. Hence am I cross and peevish as a child:
To rock the cradle of her peevish harp;

Peevishness. No languor, peevishness, nor vain complaint:

Pelf. Who knows not pomp, who heeds not pelf;
He paid what he could with his ill-gotten pelf.

Pelican. The pelican and ostrich of the desert,
By the shy rivers, and the pelican

Pelton. Pelton and Ossa flourish side by side, Pelton's. Which, at Jove's will, descends on Pelton's top.

Pellucid. In happier beauty; more pellucid streams,
In this pellucid Current slaked his thirst?
Mounts to pellucid Hippocrene, but he
Pellucid water for the hands is borne
Or the pellucid lake." "Small risk," said I,
Had tended them and O pellucid Spring!

Pelorus. From huge Pelorus to the Atlantic pillars, Pelting. Through hot and dusty ways, or pelting
storms,

Pembroke. Who dragged Earl Pembroke from Ban-bury church
Earl Pembroke, slain so impiously!

Pen. To pencil dear and pen,
Whose pen, the mysteries of the rod and line
In the just tribute of thy Poet's pen!
Are felt the fashes of his pen;

A pen unwearied—to indite
Of stagnant waters; altar, sword, and pen,
I dropped my pen; and listened to the Wind
Ah! where is Palafox? Nor tongue nor pen
He sate, and eulogised with earnest pen
Should animate, but not mislead, the pen.
Did no responsive harp, no pen,
More fit to animate the Poet's pen,
By civil arts and labours of the pen,
Record we too, with just and faithful pen,
To pen the mandates nature doth disown.
So fair as these. The feather, whence the pen
If aught (intrusted to the pen
A pen—to register; a key—
Due to the days' unfinished task; of pen
Let more substantial themes the pen engage,
More could my pen report of grave or gay

Lady! a Pen (perhaps with thy regard,
And the small critic wielding his delicate pen,
Had from a faltering pen been asked in vain:
Inform'd his pen, or wisdom of the heart,
Or stormy Cross-fell, snatches he might pen
Genius of Burke! forgive the pen seduced
In what the Historian's pen so much delights
Than this dull product of a scoffer's pen.

Penal. The penal instruments, the shows of crime,
The penal caverns groan

Penalties. The common penalties of mortal life,
And penalties of miserable life,

Penalty. A grievous penalty, but little less
From the penalty a sense
Thou wilt provoke a heavier penalty.
Is one great aim of penalty, extend
A penalty, if penalty it were,
Of such inhospitable penalty,

Penance. (Penance their trust, and prayer their store);
If penance be redeemable, thence alms
And what is Penance with her knotted thong;
Were making night do penance for a day
Inviting penance, fruitlessly endured:

Pence. They made a gathering for him, shillings, pence,

Pencil. Pencil in hand and hook upon the knee,
To pencil dear and pen,
Or pencil pregnant with ethereal hues,
Here by thy pencil shown in truth of lines
Of pencil ever clothed with light and shade;
What though the Italian pencil wrought not here,
By apter pencil, from the light had flown.
A Pencil to her hand;
More than the pencil can, and verily
To drop his pencil! Flowers of every clime
Inspired the pencil, lines to trace,
Portrayed with happiest pencil, not untrue
At evening, when with pencil, and smooth state

Pencil's. Yet tho' to me the pencil's art
Began the pencil's strife,

Giordano, verily thy Pencil's skill
Should fear that pencil's touch!
By words, nor by the pencil's silent skill;
Pendant. See Pendant.
Under mouldering banners pendant,
More glorious, with spread sail and streaming pendant.
Than the loose pendant—to the idle wind.

Pendent. See Pendant.

The pendent grapes glittered above the door;—
 About the pendent nest, did thus espy
 Is the light ash! that, pendent from the brow
 And pendent rocks, where'er, in gliding state,
 From Cadenabbia's pendent grapes.
 And murmur issuing from yon pendent flood,
 (While from the pendent woodbine came
 All, while he slept, treading the pendent stairs
 And the smooth green of many a pendent field,
 Whose hoary diadem of pendent rocks
 In the dry cranicles of the pendent rocks;
Pendle-hill. As Pendle-hill or Pennygent
Pendragon. How glad Pendragon—though the sleep Penetrable. Hath placed beyond these penetrable bounds,
 Or the least penetrable hiding-place
Penetrate. My heart, could penetrate its inmost core.
 This long-roofed Vista penetrate—but see,
 And penetrate the hearts of all;
 Shall penetrate the heart without a wound;
 Could never penetrate, yet did there not
 To penetrate the loft and the low;
 May'st penetrate, wherever truth shall lead;
 These pure sensations; that can penetrate
 Easy and bold, that penetrate the gloom
Penetrated. And penetrated all with tender light, Penetrates. Whose softened image penetrates the deep.
 And penetrates the glades.
 And penetrates the forest's inmost shades;
 That penetrates, enables us to mount,
Penetrating. Of penetrating harps and voices sweet!
 What penetrating power of sun or breeze,
 The penetrating bliss; oh surely these Penetration. But, to Thy sovereign penetration, fair, Penetrative. The penetrative eye which can perceive Peninsulas. Make green peninsulas on Esthwaite's Lake;
Penitent. Earth's noblest penitent; from bondage freed
 Some Penitent sincere
 For penitent guilt, and innocent distress.
 On a true Penitent. When breath departs
 Soon the relapsing penitent may boast
 The crime confessed, a kneeling Penitent
 Then did the Penitent adorn
 Her own transgression; penitent sincere
Penitential. Of penitential anguish, yea with tears,
 With brow in penitential sorrow bent!
 A penitential loneliness.
 Do penitential cogitations cling;
 Who in the penitential desert met
 With penitential sorrow, and aloft
 Into that world where penitential tear
 A doleful bower for penitential song,
 For penitential tears and trembling hopes
 Grieving for sin, and penitential tears
Penitents. To some offenders; other penitents,
 Of tardy penitents; or for the best
Penmanmaur. On Cader Idris, or huge Penmanmaur
Penn. All who revere the memory of Penn Penned. Just as those final words were penned, the sun broke out in power,
 Great men have been among us; hands that penned
 For whom this simple Register was penned.
 Penned these sad lines, nor can forbear to pray
 In Araby, romances; legends penned
 Moses, and he who penned, the other day,
 Are penned in cotes; the chaffering is begun,
 Each in his separate cell, or penned in crowds
 Who penned, to ridicule confiding faith,
Pennied. See One-pennied.
Penniless. In penniless poverty. But now to school Pennine. Down from the Pennine Alps how fiercely sweeps
Penny. The one-pennied Boy has his penny to spare.
 A penny on the ground had thrown;
 He saw the penny on the ground.
 He stooped and took the penny up;
 Crying, "An obolus, a penny give Pennygent. As Pendle-hill or Pennygent
Pens. Offered to notice by less daring pens, Pensioned. Where, pensioned, they in shelter might sit down.
Pensioner. Long may you love your pensioner mouse,
 A Miser's Pensioner—behold our lot!
 Herself were nothing, a mere pensioner
 Her doors to admit this homeless Pensioner;
 How that neglected Pensioner was sent
 Perhaps you loose sods cover, the poor Pensioner
Pensive. See Nobly-pensive.
 Stay! pensive, sadly-pleasing visions, stay!
 Of wisdom, moralise his pensive road.
 Of pensive Underwalden's pastoral heights.
 The whilst her comrade to her pensive cheer
 And for the Subject of my Verse I heaved a pensive sigh.

Pensive—continued.

Were yet with pensive fear and gentle awe
 But pensive fancies putting by,
 Hath often eased my pensive breast
 Upon the pensive solitude
 Startles the pensive traveller while he treads
 In vacant or in pensive mood,
 Brought from a pensive though a happy place.
 And sylvan places heaved a pensive sigh;
 Reveal thyself, like pensive Morn
 From men of pensive virtue go,
 And students with their pensive citadels;
 For worthless brows, while in the pensive shade
 Their pensive light from a departed sun!
 And thou, grey Stone, the pensive likeness keep
 Those words were uttered as in pensive mood
 And pensive monitor of fleeting years!
 May I ead on thoughts though pensive not austere;
 Theo, pensive votary! let thy feet repair
 As pensive Evening deepens into night.
 How in thy pensive glooms our hearts found rest.
 Bear witness many a pensive sigh
 My thoughts;—she told in pensive strain
 A pensive recollection.
 Touches me not, though pensive as a bird
 With its grey rocks clustering in pensive shade—
 Like vision, pensive though not cold,
 Too lovely to be pensive in themselves
 The dome of Florence, pensive and alone,
 Fulfill thy pensive duty,
 The pensive warbler of the ruddy breast
 What harmonious pensive changes
 Ah, pensive Scholar, think not so,
 And one, the pensive Marmaduke,
 To cheer this sad and pensive time;
 The pensive visitant is seen.
 And what a pensive Sage doth utter, hear!
 Into the pensive heart ill fortified,
 To all that Earth from pensive hearts is stealing,
 A tender Spirit broods—the pensive Shade
 A grey-haired, pensive, thankful Refugee
 A part so charmed the pensive soul:
 Came studious Taste; and many a pensive stranger
 Sweet is thy voice at pensive even;
 A gentle, pensive, white-robed sisterhood,
 May pensive Autumn ne'er present
 From out the pensive shadows where they lie)
 What pensive beauty autumn shows,
 (Surely I do not err) that pensive air
 These groves have heard the Other's pensive strains;
 To tender offices and pensive thoughts.
 But if the pensive gloom
 The talking boat that moves with pensive sound,
 With pensive step to measure my slow way,
 A smile sat beaming on her pensive face.
 A pensive feeling! It spread far and wide;
 A pensive sky, sad days, and piping winds,
 Some pensive musings which might well beseech
 As even their pensive influence drew from mine.
 The pensive moments by this calm fireside,
 In pensive idleness. What could he do,
 By each and all of these the pensive ear
 The poet fits it to his pensive lyre.
 Where mild enthusiasts tuned a pensive lay
 With the same pensive office; and make known
 The feathered kinds; the fieldfare's pensive flock,
 A gay or pensive tenderness prevailed,
 Here did our pensive Host put forth his hand
 Stretched overhead, and at my pensive feet
 The pensive silence, saying—"Blest are they
 —Which did to him assign a pensive lot—
 The pensive Sceptic of the lonely vale
 And pensive quiet, an unnatural light
 By virtue.—He, sighing with pensive grief,
 Her pensive beauty; from the breeze her sweets.
 A pensive stranger, journeying at his leisure.
 And oh! dear sougher of the pensive breast,
Pensively. He paced along; and pensively,
 And somewhat pensively he wooed:
 Faint and somewhat pensively;
 As pensively his steps advance,
 Pensively with downcast eyes,
 In dreams and fictions, pensively composed:
 With our conductor, pensively we sank
 The grey-haired Wanderer pensively exclaimed,
Pensiveness. In humble grace, and quiet pensiveness
Pent. See Close-pent.
 A lamb, that in the pool is pent
 The Hamadryad, pent within, bewailed
 A murmur, pent within the earth,
 Pent in, a Tyrant's solitary Thrall:
 Than either, pent within her separate sphere,
 For lordly Wharf is there pent in
 And in the sluggish pools where ships are pent:
 While Ye, in lasting duration pent,
 His soul is pent! How little can be known—
 And in the sluggish Ports where ships were pent.

Penthouse. Met in an angle, hung a penthouse, framed

Pent-housed. Others are pent-housed by a brae

Pent-up. Make him a captive — for that pent-up din,
The pent-up air, struggling to free itself,

Penurious. Raised for enabling this penurious stream

Penury. The churlish gales of penury, that blow
To save thee from the extreme of penury;

By penury, to yield him up her Daughter,
From cold, from hunger, penury, and death;

"Here Penury oft from misery's mount will guide
Lovers of truth, by penury constrained,

That extreme penury is here unknown,

Penury's. For come Diseases on, and Penury's rage,
People. With a vexed people, and the tyrant chased;

Then to his people cried, "Receive your lord,
The people answered with a loud acclaim:

Like happy people round a Christmas fire,
Who leads them on?—The anxious people see

Of shouting people deified

A people, on their own beloved Land
And to the people at the Isthmian Games

ARMINIUS!—all the people quaked like dew
A people sunk in apathy and fear.

Which a brave People into light can bring
So shall the people gather and believe

When a whole people shall kneel down in prayer,
None but a noble people could have loved

With people in their best array

With one consent the people rejoice,
—But now again the people raise

While stand the people in a ring,
Lo! how the people are flocking in,—

And all the people that stood round
And called the people to the place.

Of people, sees them in one spot—
Comes with the people when the bells

When laws, and creeds, and people all are lost!
The people work like congregated bees;

Moulding the credulous people to his will,
Him in their hearts the people canonize;

And all the people bow their heads, like reeds
And rob the people of his daily care,

By unrelenting Death. O People keen
The Fathers urge the People to be still,

A happy people won for thee that name
Lost people, trained to theoretic feud!

Among a people famed for strength of mind,
"People! your chains are severing link by link;

By their own daring. But the People prayed
This People, once so happy, so renowned

Not scourge, to save the People—not destroy.
Among a People mournfully cast down,

"A little school of Christian people stood
O Hebrew people!" said he in his wrath,

And scarcely could the people that were near
"Thus, Christian people, God his might hath shown

And He will teach thy people to obey.

To people the steep rocks and river banks,
Of those plain-living people now observed

Are falling hard with people yet astir,
Given to the people, and my love was theirs.

Before us, in a people from the depth
Between the sovereign and the people stand,

Should see the people having a strong hand
Of what the People long had been and were

To daunt me, in the People was my trust,
This last opprobrium, when we see a people,

We saw a throng of people;—why before met?
And a most frivolous people. Hail! I mean

The father of his people. Such is he,
To king and people true. A brazen plate,

That the whole people should be taught and trained.

To me the people of a dream;

Whence flows the Latin people, whence come
With shouts the assembled people rend the skies

Peopled. See Thinly-peopled.

But soon a peopled region on the sight
And saves the peopled fields of earth

Through peopled Vales; yet something in the guise
A peopled world it is; in size a tiny room.

Peopled the mind with forms sublime or fair,
At distance heard, peopled the milder air.

—Hence is the wide sea peopled,—hence the shores

People's. How, when the People's mind was racked with doubt,

Gladdening the people's heart from shore to shore;
For holy Church, and the People's right!"

'Tis the most fearful when the people's eye
Pleased with the thanks that in His People's eye

Black in the people's minds and words, yet they
Of Nations," sacrifice a People's health,

In veneration and the people's love;
Were Kings a free born work, a people's choice.

Peopling. Peopling the harmless fields with signs of woe:

And many a legend, peopling the dark woods,

Peradventur. The wishes, peradventure the despites

Is, peradventure, one in masquerade.

Another sun, and peradventure more;

Perceive. Be cautious, my dear Master! I perceive

I now perceive we do mistake our masters,

Find little to perceive.

You hardly can perceive his joy.

And what perceive; well pleased to recognise

You might perceive, his spirit cold

Of the propitious hour, thou may'st perceive

Ever too heedless, as I now perceive:

Which the gross world no sense hath to perceive,

Those helps rejected, they, whose minds perceive

My gentle Reader, I perceive

(As whoso enters shall ere long perceive)

That we perceive, and not that we have made.

Eyes that perceive through minds that can inspire.

Heaven's gift, a sense that fits him to perceive

That men, least sensitive, see, hear, perceive,

Musing in solitude, I oft perceive

Now happily apprenticed,—I perceive

Do I perceive her manner, and her look,

Oft was occasion given me to perceive

Impatience through inaptness to perceive

Who, in this frame of human life, perceive

Our solitude. It soothes me to perceive.

Pleased to perceive his own unshackled life,

"Angels may weigh and fathom: they perceive,

The other that empowers him to perceive

Who, with ancestral feeling, can perceive

The penetrative eye which can perceive

Are each and all enabled to perceive

Perceived. In these my lonely wanderings I perceived

Of popular applause. I now perceived

O terror! what hath she perceived?—O joy!

Not doubtfully perceived.—Look homeward now!

Ruin perceived for keener sympathies;

In classic ages men perceived a soul

Nought I perceived within it dull or dim;

Perceived in things, where, to the unwatchful eye,

Had he perceived the presence and the power

(Especially perceived where nature droops

I felt: the transformation I perceived,

And heeded not: you lingered, you perceived

And emanations were perceived; and acts

Enrapt, as if his inward sense perceived

Or foot, or lip, in summer's warmth—perceived.

Perceives. Can scarcely trust his eyes, when he perceives

At length the Man perceives it die away,

Of gravest import. Early he perceives,

Accordingly he by degrees perceives

That what the Soul perceives, if glory lost,

Perception. To the perception of this Age, appear

Both in perception and discernment, first

Eludes perception, not by rippling air

Perchance—continued.

If I perchance a Nightingale might hear,
His charters and exemptions; and, perchance,
And hence my transport. Nor should this, perchance,
Of magic fiction, verse of mine perchance
Tricked out for that proud use, if I perchance
And, 'mid the simple worshippers, perchance
A box, perchance, is from your casement hung
Perchance too lightly occupied, or lulled
Unseen, perchance above all power of sight—
Perchance, the heavier woes of guilt; feel not Perchance you not unfrequently have marked
A Foster-mother's office. 'Tis, perchance,
May cover him; and by its help, perchance,
Ranged round the garden walk, while she perchance
The habitations empty! or perchance
"The Father, if perchance he still retain Idlers perchance they were,—but in his sight;
To-morrow—nay perchance this very hour
Nor yet, perchance, translucent Spring, had tolled
And now 'tis mine, perchance for life, dear Vale.
And neither pair be broken? Nay perchance,
Hath furnished matter for a thought; perchance,
Perched. See High-perched.
Perched on the forehead of a jutting crag,
Some, perched on stems of stately port
Behold him perched in ecstasies,
Fluttered, perched, into a round
See, perched upon the naked height
Perched on whose top the Danish Raven croaks;
Where he is perched, from yon lone Tower
Some scattered o'er the level, others perched
Perchival. Even for Sir Perchival was no disclosure;
Percy. Of Umravflore or Percy ere they marched
To noble Percy; and a force
Shall Percy blush, then, for his name?
Were such your servant Percy! (he it tried)
Percy's. In Percy's and in Neville's right,
At Percy's voice; and Neville sees
Pardita. Or there where Perdita and Florizel
Perdition. Led by my hand to save thee from perdition;
To bring perdition on the universe.
Alive or dead, I'll find him. Alive—perdition!
Perennial. Of that perennial shade, a cloistral place
And these perennial bowers and murmuring pines
With their perennial hills;—but Crime,
Careless of flowers that in perennial blow
For recompense—their own perennial bower.
Perennial of the ancient hills; nor less
And thus the pathway, by perennial green
Perennially. And beneath whose sable roof
Perfect. And clanking chains are perfect liberty.
Their busy limbs in perfect rest,
Leans smilingly, and sinks into a perfect rest.
But thou art no such perfect thing:
Due requisites a perfect shepherd's staff,
I love the fir-grove with a perfect love.
In perfect fitness for its aim,
Hours of perfect gladness.
A perfect Woman, nobly planned,
But here is perfect joy and pride
In perfect shape (whose beauty Time shall spare
And perfect harmony of notes, achieved
With finished sweep into a perfect round,
Ripening in perfect innocence.
Their notion of its perfect rest.
Books, leisure, perfect freedom, and the talk
For one hour's perfect bliss, to tread the grass
For perfect triumph o'er your Enemies.
With perfect cunning framed as well
And perfect sway, through many a thought
For Faith, more perfect still, with which the Lord
Our mortal ken! Inspire a perfect trust
What perfect glory ye in Heaven shall reap!—
Glad, through a perfect love, a faith sincere
No perfect cure grows on that bounded field.
And if not so, whose perfect joy makes sleep
The image of its perfect bow.
That, with a perfect will in one accord
Infinite Power, perfect Intelligence.
Where joys are perfect—neither was nor wane.
Far perfect secrecy
Where he had felt such perfect pleasure once.
To peace so perfect that the young behold
How perfect was the calm! It seemed no sleep;
More touching still, more perfect was the pleasure,
A perfect stillness. Many were the thoughts
Whom I, in perfect confidence, might hope
And gratitude, and perfect joy of heart—
Having a perfect faith in all that passed.
Nor would I praise her but in perfect love.
The scene before him stands in perfect view
Of that great change wandered in perfect faith,
And perfect triumph for the better cause.
And through a perfect happiness of soul,
Perfect him, made imperfect in himself,
In perfect wisdom, guiding mightiest power;
And his most perfect image in the world.

Perfect—continued.

Sweet, perfect, to be wished for! save that here
For their sweet purposes, with perfect skill.)
Made perfect, and from injury secure.
Till perfect mastery crown the pains at last.
Blended in perfect stillness, to our sight!
Reflected all in perfect lineaments—
For rest of body, perfect was the spot,
Perfect Contentment, Unity entire.
Love, perfect love; of so much majesty
That satisfies and ends in perfect rest.
Perfected. For the perfected Spirits of the just!
Perfection. Thirsting after all perfection,
With whose perfection it consists to ordain
That are their own perfection and reward,
Contemplating perfection absolute
Perfections. Of his perfections; with habitual dread
For her benign perfections; and yet more Perfectly. Too perfectly his headstrong will;
More perfectly of purer creatures;—yet
So lonesome, and so perfectly secure; Perfidious. How they have scourged old foes, per-fidious friends:
Perfidy. That monstrous perfidy! Keep down your wrath.
O matchless perfidy! portentous lust
Perforce. Will turn perforce and seek for sympathy
We were perforce connected, men whose sway
We shall be wise perforce; and, while inspired Perforce? Are we a creature in whom good
Perform. Aught that my feeble nature could perform,
To attend upon the orphan, and perform
Or looks, or threatening gestures, could perform.
—Soon did the Knight perform what he had said;
That which we would perform in arms—we must!
Rite to perform, or boon to ask?
That Courage may find something to perform;
What knowledge can perform, is diligent to learn;
Do still perform mysterious offices
"O That great God that dost perform Thy laud Works which the enthusiast would perform with love.
Perform their feats. Nor was it mean delight
Where senators, tongue-favoured men, perform,
A task he was unable to perform.
Reclaiming and extirpating, perform
Or could perform; a zealous actor, hired
Whence dire dependence. What could she perform Enables them to be and to perform.
As zealously perform! I cannot share Performance. Profession mocks performance. Earth is sick,
Performed. An aged utensil, which had performed
Performed all kinds of labour for his sheep,
As were performed in man's heroic prime;
Shall he performed at pregnant intervals;
The vow performed, in cross-legged effigy,
And now, his task performed, the flood stands still,
Thy worship is performed and precious laud;
To be performed, and paid all holy fees.
Perhaps too there performed. Thus long I mused,
As aught by wooden images performed
What in those days through Britain was performed
How oft high service is performed within,
For whom this pious service is performed;
So moved he like a shadow that performed
If but with hers performed; climb once again,
"Change wide, and deep, and silently performed,
By priestly hands, for sacrifice performed.
And now, its task performed, the flood stands still
That which in stealth by Nature was performed
Performing. She seems performing as she flies Performs. Performs these delicate services, and therefore
Performs its functions; rarely competent Perfume. Rich steam of sweetest perfume comes and goes.
Perfumes. A garden-plut the desert air perfumes,
Perhaps. And still, perhaps, with faithless gleam,
By seamen, who perhaps themselves had shared
'Gainst all that in his heart, or theirs perhaps, said
nay.
And that he hates you!—Pardon me, perhaps
Have power to yield? perhaps he looks elsewhere.—
Would there perhaps have gathered the first fruits
Thanks for your care. Perhaps it would be useful in such a night as this. Stop, stop. Perhaps,
Murder—perhaps asleep, blind, old, alone,
And I have felt, more than perhaps becomes me
Perhaps you are his son? The All-seeing knows,
Perhaps I might; and, on a winter evening,
Perhaps some dungeon hears thee groan,
Perhaps to himself at that moment he said;
That Johnny may perhaps be drowned;
Or lost, perhaps, and never found;
Johnny perhaps his horse forsook,
Perhaps he's climbed into an oak,
Perhaps he's gone along the dell,
Perhaps, and no unlikely thought!
Perhaps he's turned himself about,
And now, perhaps, is hunting sheep,

Perhaps—continued.

Perhaps, with head and heels on fire,
Their hands by the fire-side; perhaps to card
And left, the couple neither gay perhaps
Have told this fancy, two or three, perhaps,
—When I had gazed perhaps two minutes' space,
Only read, perhaps, by me,
A Heart's-ease will perhaps be there,
Another; then perhaps a pair
Perhaps at earlier Crecy, or Poitiers,
Perhaps it was a bower beneath whose leaves
"Here on the grass perhaps asleep he sank,
This water was perhaps the first he drank
And he perhaps, for aught we know, was born
Of unremembered pleasure: such, perhaps,
Perhaps a ring of shining fairies?
To sink, perhaps, where he is lying,
Even then we may perhaps in vain implore
Perhaps are seated in domestic ring
Perhaps the plaintive numbers flow
I would keep, perhaps with many a fruitless tear,
Is known; by none, perhaps, so feelingly:
But thou, perhaps, alert as free
Never perhaps to reappear. The Stream
Perhaps already to his home;
Paces the deck—no star perhaps in sight,
And "hopes, perhaps more heavenly bright than thine.
Perhaps a tale you'll make it.
See that Fly,—a disconsolate creature! perhaps
That he, perhaps for the hundredth time,
Ere he had ceased to gaze, perhaps to speak:
Perhaps for touch profane.
Their peace, perhaps, our lightest footfall marred;
Perhaps the sole survivor of thy race,
Lady! a Pen (perhaps with thy regard,
From earth, perhaps by Shakespeare's self approved,
The block on which these lines are traced, perhaps,
Perhaps some needful service of the State,
Perhaps too there performed. Thus long I mused,
Of less regard, though won perhaps with toil
And I was taught to feel, perhaps too much,
Come forth, perhaps without one quiet thought.
Judging not ill perhaps, the timid course
Glad welcome had I, with some tears, perhaps,
Perhaps than if it had been more desired
Than others have, but from the times, perhaps,
That I had heard (what he perhaps had seen)
The times, too sage, perhaps too proud, have dropped
Perhaps was round me than it is the privilege
Meek men, whose very souls perhaps would sink
(And the progressive powers perhaps no less
More tranquil, yet perhaps of kindred birth,
Perhaps it is not he but some one else
Perhaps is shedding orphan's tears; you also
He outwardly, and inwardly perhaps,
By multitudes was missed, perhaps attained
Of Britain circumscribed me; else, perhaps
May be divined—perhaps it hath been said:—
For succour; but perhaps he sits alone
And they perhaps er least, the lowly class
Perhaps you loose sods cover, the poor Pensioner?
Perhaps incited rather, by these shocks,
For strangers who have travelled far perhaps,
Perhaps for many genial days to come,
Peril. Unmowed with each rude form of peril nigh;
In such peril to engage;
Thine arm from peril guards the coasts
So fair, to which with peril he must cling,
And he at once from peril freed!
Or slippery even to peril! and each step,

Perilous. And, from the perilous ground dislodged, through storm
That smile hath life in it! This road is perilous;
Through words and things, a dim and perilous way;
And perilous waters; wild the mariners
To perilous weakness, and entrust his cause
A perilous wound—shuddered to behold
In a perilous moment these
Were perilous to hear.
Ye are their perilous offspring; and the Sun—
The perilous Deep, the Boy was saved;
Of perilous war her weightiest armies fall
Through perilous war, with regal fortitude,
Glory, and wealth, which, perilous as they are,
For practising occult and perilous lore)
For the marvel of the PERILOUS SEAT,
Its perilous front in mists and clouds?
And suffering under many a perilous wound—
From Childbirth's perilous throes. And should the Heir
Hail to the virtues which that perilous life
This perilous bay, stands clear of all offence;
From those abrupt and perilous rocks
By rough waves on a perilous coast,
Perilous is sweeping change, all chance unsound.
They stem the current of that perilous gorge,
Through long and perilous flight;
By stealthy entrance of a perilous guest,

Perilous—continued.

While on the perilous ridge I hung alone,
His perilous duty, and retire lamenting
But through the inclement and the perilous days
Smitten with perilous fever. In disease
Went sounding on a dim and perilous way!
Or late, a perilous master. He—who oft,
Amid a perilous waste that all night long
Their sleep might neither want (from perilous
 storms
Perils. And enterprise—what perils hath he shunned?
From perils manifold, with some small wealth
Abates the perils of stormy night;
What perils meet Æneas in his course,
Myself from frequent perils; nor were tales
After the perils of his moonlight ride,
Period. So that disastrous period did not want
Periods. Measuring the periods of his lonely doom,
Of periods fixed, and laws established, less Perish. Nor shall the perish there, untended and alone!
The Baron Herbert perish in the waves
Now may I perish if this turn do more
I am of flesh and blood, and may I perish
A thing so great to perish self-consumed.
No, not the pitying moon! And perish so.
We are not all that perish.—I remember,
And perish all of poverty.
Will perish in one hour.
Grows but to perish, and entrust
Months perish with their moons; year treads on year;
May perish; time may come when never more
Must perish;—how can they this blight endure?
Should perish; and to evil and to good
To have one Soul, and perish to a man,
And navies perish in their ports;
Perish without reprieve for flower or tree!
Whose only business is to perish!—true
In Forms that must perish, frail objects of sense;
Are doomed to perish utterly:
Should perish, self-subverted. Black and dense
Good aims lie down, and perish in the road
Perish the grovelling few, who, prest between Duly before thy sight, unless they perish here.
That no one breathing should be left to perish,
They perish;—but the Intellect can raise,
He lets them perish through that grievous ill.
To perish never:
Fall fires—but let us perish heart to heart."
A Nation's strength that will not perish
To dwindle and to perish one by one,
That they must perish. Tremblings of the heart
"Your impious work forbear: perish what may,
What more that may not perish?—Thou, dread
 source,
Of what is lost, and perish through regret:
Perish the roses and the flowers of kings,
We perish also; for we live by hope
And the kind never perish? Is the hope
Methinks 'tis strange I did not perish

And would not wholly perish even in this,
Perishable. Is it a perishable cloud? Or there
And all the perishable gauds
These perishable spheres have wrought
They dream not of a perishable home
That hind the perishable hours of life
Aught by these perishable heavens disclosed
Perished. And many perished in the whirlwind's sweep.
All perished—all in one remorseless year,
And ravenous plague, all perished: every tear
Could not come after us—he must have perished;
And perished, what a piercing outcry you
I know not how he perished; but the calm
Oh! would that thou hadst perished in the flames!
Thy Father perished. Perished—by what mis-chance?
And so no doubt he perished. When the Youth
The sleepless Soul that perished in his pride;
She perished; and, as for a wifful crime,
She could not rescue, perished in her sight!
And perished, save one narrow cell;
An image that hath perished!
Have "perished by his choice, and not his fate!"
Have perished in the field;
Have perished?—Verily, to her utmost depth,
The Lily floats no longer!—She hath perished.
The weaker perished to a man;
Learned and wise, hath perished utterly,
And perished utterly; but her good deeds Had perished. Then might Sea-nymphs (and with sighs
Have perished in thy sight;
He perished; and a voice was heard—
Perished the Roman Empire: how the friends
He perished fighting, in supreme command,
With some who perished; haply perished too,
The warrior from the field—all perished, all—
From Ellen's thoughts; had perished to her mind
Have fought and perished for Helvetia's rights—

Perished—continued.

When good Jemima perished in her bloom ; . . .
Perishes. In that which perishes ; nor will he lend .
 Of power that perishes, and rights that fade . . .
 Till the world perishes, a field for thee ! . . .
Perisheth. Thou strikes—absence perisheth . . .
Perishing. Perishing yet more swiftly than the flower,
 Even as if bent on perishing. There lives
 Through park and field, a perishing . . .
 To save the perishing ; and, henceforth, I breathe
Periwinkle. The periwinkle trailed its wreaths ;
Perjured. Then, when before the Perjured on his way Permanence. Of kindred permanence, unchanged in form . . .
Permanent. Suffering is permanent, obscure and dark,
 Ran permanent and free ; . . .
 Of permanent relations, else unknown . . .
 For permanent possession, better fruits,
 Of permanent and universal way . . .
 Of marvels, broad-day wonders permanent :
 But hence to my more permanent abode
 Hangs permanent, and plentiful as wreaths Permessus. Where'er Permessus bears an honoured
 name . . .
 Twine near their loved Permessus.—Finally,
 And his Permessus found on Lebanon . . .
Permission. Must come and ask permission when to blow . . .
 Permission to attend its obsequies . . .
 Of fruit or flower, permission asked or not . . .
Permit. Permit to visit any but a man . . .
 "But should suspense permit the Foe to cry,
 Nor would permit the thin smoke to escape,
 Permit his heart to kindle, and to embrace
 Permit not for one hour . . .
 Will not permit us ; but pursue the mind,
 Permit, like honours, dance and song, are paid . . .
Permits. Well as the wreck I am permits. And you,
 Sir ? . . .
 Permits a second and a darker shade . . .
 How slackly, for the absent mid permits
 Whose absolute rule permits not to withstand
 While sluttitude permits the mid to feel ; . . .
Permitted. See Heaven-permitted.
 Reserved, had fate permitted, for support
 As in life's morn ; permitted to behold,
 On the last skirts of their permitted ground,
 Should be permitted, oft-times, to endure
 Permitted to descend, and bless mankind.
 Imagination—not permitted here . . .
 They also were permitted to receive . . .
 This transfer is permitted,—not alone . . .
 Are still permitted to extend their pride,
 Have been permitted to enjoy the dawn ;
 Of the frail earth, permitted to behold . . .
Pernicious. Might overarch thee, from pernicious heat
Perpetrate. To perpetrate his crimes, serve as a Saactory . . .
Perpetual. Where daylight lingers on perpetual snow ;
 Of that perpetual weight which on her spirit lay .
 His arms have a perpetual holiday ;
 Perpetual flight, unchecked by earthly ties,
 And life he one perpetual growth
 And before him dath dawn perpetual run .
 Perpetual emptiness ! unceasing change !
 Is breathed upon by Hope's perpetual hreath ;
 Spared for obeisance from perpetual love,
 For their great deeds, perpetual memory,
 And a perpetual growth secure
 Fed by the stream with soft perpetual showers,
 Perpetual industry. Sublime Recluse !
 Kept in perpetual verdure by the steam
 Perpetual lessons of forbearance yield ;
 Laws that lay under Heaven's perpetual ban . . .
 Of a perpetual dawo from brow and cheek . . .
 To the perpetual silence of the grave . . .
 Perpetual benediction : not indeed
 Which spake perpetual logic to my soul,
 In silence visible and perpetual calm . . .
 Living amid the same perpetual whirl
 In one perpetual progress smooth and bright ?
 Or the perpetual warbling that prevails
 Perpetual sabbath ; come, disease and want ;
 Carrying through ether, in perpetual round,
 Perpetual, multitudinous ! Finally,
 Perpetual sacrifice. Even thus of old
 What want we ? have we not perpetual streams,
 Is a perpetual harmony, and dance . . .
Perpetually. Is present and perpetually abides
 Perpetually recumbent ; Statues—man . . .
 We are not so,—perpetually we touch
 To be perpetually attacked by foes
Perplex. Perplex the wise, the strong to overthrow ;
 Perplex the Church ; but be thou firm,—be true
 With many rules perplex the weary mind ;
 Perplex her mid ; but, wise as women are
 To unsettle or perplex it : yet with pain . . .
Perplexed. See Perplexit.
 Perplexed and comfortless he gazed around, . . .

Perplexed—continued.

I am perplexed. What hast thou heard or seen ?
 Which way so'er I turn, I am perplexed.
 Such as he is, and sore perplexed as I am,
 He listens, puzzled, sore perplexed,
 In such perplexed and intricate array,
 —Perplexed, and longing to be comforted,
 Becoming less and less perplexed,
 Perplexed the good man's gentle soul . . .
 Henceforth a humbler course perplexed and slow ;
 Perplexed as if between a splendour lost
 Perplexed her fingers seem,
 At consciences perplexed with scruples nice ! . . .
 Yet often is perplexed and cannot part
 That to the spot which had perplexed us first
 Now disbelieving, endlessly perplexed
 Perplexed the bodily sense. He had received
 Struggling against it ; with a soul perplexed,
 So saying, round he looked, as if perplexed ;
 Perplexed with currents ; of his weakness sick ;
 At once—or, not receding, is perplexed—
Perplexing. See Thought-perplexing.
 His guilt a thousand-fold. 'Tis most perplexing :
 Through what perplexing labyrinths, abrupt
Perplexity. And somewhat of a sad perplexity,
 Is such perplexity confined . . .
 In listlessness from vain perplexity,
Perplexit. See Perplexed.
 The Mastiff wondering, and perplex
Persecute. As fathers persecute rebellious sons,
Persecuted. Concealed the persecuted boy . . .
 To whom all persecuted men retreat ; . . .
 To shelter persecuted men : . . .
Persecutes. Remembrance persecutes, and Hope betrays . . .
Persecuting. Dread of the persecuting sword, remorse . . .
Persecution. That persecution, blind with rage extreme,
 He taught, till persecution chased him thence,
 Where Persecution decks with ghastly smiles
 Of persecution, and the Covenant—times . . .
 Then, nor till then, shall persecution cease,
Persepolis. Rites such as yet Persepolis presents
 Of famed Persepolis ; each following each,
 Alcairo, Babylon, or Persepolis ; . . .
Perseverance. Till we by perseverance gain the top
 By Roman perseverance, are destroyed,
 By perseverance in this track of life
 Not falling, perseverance from their steps
 By perseverance in the course prescribed . . .
 The PATH OF PERSEVERANCE." "Thou from whom
 To dread his perseverance in the chase . . .
 A perseverance fed ; almost a soul . . .
 And perseverance their deserved reward . . .
Persevere. Yet still I persevere, and find them where I may . . .
 And strength to persevere . . .
 For, strength to persevere and to support,
 And persevere in good, that they shall rise,
Persevering. Who in the field of contest persevered,
Persevering. He urged his persevering suit in vain.
 The persevering wedge of tyranny
 Meanwhile the persevering Ass
 Looks forward, persevering to the last,
 It is most serious : persevering rain
 May be, through pains and persevering hope,
Perseveringly. As long and perseveringly to mourn
Persian. Of Persian mornings would ye fill, and stand
 Round the moist marge of Persian fountains cling ;
 Whether the Persian—zealously to reject,
 Which Persian kings might envy ; and thy meek
Persist. If thou persist, and, scorning moderation,
Persisted. Persisted openly that death alone
Persistis. The witless shepherd who persists to drive Person. I think, good Woman, you are the very person . . .
 Person, and place—the where, the when, the how,
 Who, casting as I thought a guilty Person
 Majestic in her person, tall and straight ;
 His person to the law, was lodged in prison . . .
 She towered, fit person for a Queen
 And flowers are on his person thrown
 Thy warlike person with the staff and scrip ;
 And the whole person. Words have something told
 His men and person, nor was free, in sooth,
 The beauty of his person, doing wrong
 Or person singled out among the rest . . .
 In person and appearance, and of thing . . .
 Cast out, alike of person and of thing . . .
 He answered "to the Person suited well . . .
 A meagre person, tall, and in a garb
Personage. Was with this goodly Personage ;
Personal. Or personal memory of his own deep wrongs . . .
 To season my fireside with personal talk,—
 There find I personal things, a pteuteous store,
 That did not leave us free from personal fear ;
 By personal ambition unenslaved, . . .

Persuasion. With like persuasion honoured, we maintained :
 Of one in whom persuasion and belief
 With this persuasion thitherward my steps Persuasions. Those new persuasions. Not that I rejoiced,
Persuasive. By your persuasive wisdom shall the heart
Persuasively. "Methinks," persuasively the Sage replied,

Perturbed. In man's perturbed soul thy sway benign ;
 Perturbed she issues. She will go !
 Foretaste deliverance ; but the least perturbed

 What sees he but a creature too perturbed ;

Peruse. Go to the world, peruse the book of man,
 Would he peruse these lines ! For many years
 Inquisitive the countenance, will peruse,
Perused. Perused him with a gay complacency.
 Perused, with him, the starry sky ;
 I looked for universal things ; perused
 While she perused me with a parent's pride.

 Does that benignity pervade, that warms
 A holy tenderness pervade his frame.

 As Peter struck—and struck again . . . 847 Excursion 6. 597
 Who Peter was, let that be told, . . . 227 Verbal Ode 112
 Full twenty times was Peter feared
 For once that Peter was respected.
 And Peter, by the mountain-rills,
 "As well might Peter in the Fleet
 Into the heart of Peter Bell,
 When Peter on some April morn,
 "Within the breast of Peter Bell
 For, he it said of Peter Bell,
 At once that Peter Bell and she Had Peter joined whatever vice
 Peter was travelling all alone ;—
 Did Peter holdly press his way
 Is Peter driving through the grass—
 "A prize !" cries Peter—but he first
 Peter, you need not fear !
 The halter seizing, Peter leapt
 Then Peter gave a sudden jerk,
 Qnoth Peter, leaping from his seat,
 Thought Peter, What can mean all this ?
 The patient Beast on Peter turned
 And not till now hath Peter seen
 This outcry, on the heart of Peter,
 Joy at the heart of Peter knocks ;
 Was something Peter did not like.
 Is Peter of himself afraid ?
 Ah, well-a-day for Peter Bell !
 While Peter o'er the river bends,
 That Peter Bell, if he had been
 Is Peter quietly resigned ;
 His sapling Peter has entwined.
 And Peter draws him to dry land ;
 And through the brain of Peter pass
 But no—that Peter on his back
 Thought Peter then, come weal or woe,
 And Peter honestly might say,
 And Peter, wont to whistle loud
 But Peter—when he saw the Ass
 And look at Peter Bell !
 When Peter spied the moving thing,
 And Peter, ever and anon
 And Peter is a wicked man.
 On hearts like that of Peter Bell ;
 What may be done with Peter Bell !
 And Peter many tricks is trying,
 And Peter is a deep logician
 So from his pocket Peter takes
 "I was Peter Bell the Potter.
 Thought Peter, in the shire of Fife
 Which Peter in those noises found ;—
 For well did Peter know the sound ;
 And followed Peter Bell,
 And, when she followed Peter Bell,
 For she had learned how Peter lived,
 Arc busy with poor Peter Bell ;
 Thought Peter, 'tis the poor man's home.
 At the same moment Peter Bell
 Of Peter sadly was confused ;
 His tale did Peter tell,
 Poor Peter from a thousand causes
 Beside the Woman Peter stands ;
 And Peter bears the Mother sigh,
 And now is Peter taught to feel,
 From his own thoughts did Peter start ;
 And Peter turns his steps aside . . . 248 P. B. 1091
 There, self-involved, does Peter sit
 This Peter sees, while in the shade
 And Peter Bell, the ruffian wild,
 Peter went forth with him straightway ;
 And Peter Bell, who, till that night,
 A Book came forth of late, called PETER BELL ;
Peter's. "Small change it made in Peter's heart ;
 But quickly Peter's mood is changed,
 Fell at the sight from Peter's tongue ;
 And Peter's lips with fury quiver ;
 What is there now in Peter's heart !
 From Peter's hand the sapling dropped !
 And close by Peter's side he stands ;
 It suited Peter's present mood. . . . 239 P. B. 251

Peter's—continued.

The sweat pours down from Peter's face,
A voice to Peter's ear ascends,
Did plainly come to Peter's ears;
At length, by Peter's arm sustained,
Crowned with St. Peter's everlasting Dome.
Unless to Peter's Chair the viewless wind
St. Peter's Church; or, more aspiring aim, Petrarch's. Of this small lute gave ease to Petrarch's wound;
Patted. And poverty brought on a petted mood
Petticoats. Nor safe the petticoats of dames that hear
Petty. Shall it be law to stab the petty robber
And petty quarrels, had grown fond again;
Mid trivial care and petty cross
By doubts and thousand petty fancies crost
You petty Steep in truth the fearful Rock,
The petty pleasures of the garish day,
And formal fellowship of petty things!

That gathers up each petty straggling rill
Its petty promises, to build a tower
One of those petty structures. "His it must be!"
Big passions strutting on a petty stage;
Into their contraries the petty plagues
Meeting as strangers, in a petty town
Earth's petty grievances;—its toil and care:—
Pew. Green with fresh holly, every pew a perch
Yet undiscoloured. A capacious pew
Pewter. The pewter clatters on the wall;
Phæton. That Phæton his son is yet alive,
Phalanx. The Emathian phalanx, nobly obstinate;
Phantasies. I might endure some airy phantasies;
Phantasm. A phantasm, in which roof and wall
A phantasm like a dream of night!
Phantasma. Even so the dire phantasma which had crossed
Barbarian and infernal,—a phantasma
Phantasy. Deprest by weight of musing Phantasy;
Nor uninformed with Phantasy, and looks
These Shapes of awful phantasy?
The weeds of Romish phantasy, in vain
Phantom. Some terrible phantom I believe is now
She was a Phantom of delight
The Phantom parts—but parts to re-unite
A woman's garb the Phantom wore,
And give the phantom an array
That name, a local Phantom proud to mock
This Arab phantom, which I thus behold,
Sets like an Opera phantom. Thus, O Friend!
She came, no more a phantom to adorn

Phantom-like. Her countenance, phantom-like, doth appear:
Phantoms. Which unsubstantial Phantoms sacred keep;
Of the mind's phantoms, horrible as vain.
I left him. I believe that there are phantoms,
The Charm is over; the mute Phantoms gone,
Into the land where ghosts and phantoms be;
"Hell-gates are powerless Phantoms when we build."
The clang of arms is heard, and phantoms glide,
Shades of past bliss, or phantoms that, to gain
Their human names, have into phantoms passed
And phantoms from the crags and solid earth
For less important ends those phantoms move,
The vapoury phantoms of futurity?
Pharaoh. Of Pharaoh, said to Famine, Snow, and Frost,
Pharaoh-plague. From this curst Pharaoh-plague to rid
the land?
Pharaohs. The Pharaohs of the earth, the men of hardened heart!
Pharisaic. See Pharisaic
Pharisaic. The Pharisaic [? Pharisaic] sneer that treats as dross Philanthropy. Of true philanthropy. The light of love
Phillip. For, like brave Philip Sidney,

Philoctetes. When Philoctetes in the Lemnian isle Philomal. Steeped in dire grief the voice of Philomel;
Lark of the dawn, and Philomel of night,
Philosopher. Haply the untaught Philosopher may speak
Strewn far and wide. Think, proud Philosopher!
Philosopher!—a fingering slave,
Thou best Philosopher, who yet dost keep Philosopher or Bard, Empedocles,
As bonds, on grave philosopher imposed
Philosopher and Poet, in whose sight
Philosopher's. Would be rational peace—a philosopher's ease.
Philosophers. Led by Philosophers. With harder fate,
And visible to philosophers of old,
Philosophers, who, though the human soul
Philosophic. For philosophic Sage; or high-souled
Bard
Shall range of philosophic Tusculum;

Philosophic—continued.

In heathen schools of philosophic lore;
In years that bring the philosophic mind.
With yearning toward some philosophic song
Sailed from Zacynthus,—philosophic war,
By philosophic discipline prepared
Or gladness)—No," the philosophic Priest
Philosophy. Now for the corner-stone of my philosophy:
Which no philosophy can brook!
That no philosophy can lift,
Though serving sage philosophy),
That sense, the bland philosophy of life,
Secure she walks, Philosophy her guide.
Philosophy will call you: then we feel
Philosophy, methinks, at Fancy's call.
By false philosophy had caused the woe,
That, in the light of false philosophy,
Why should not grave Philosophy be styled,
Of science, and philosophy, and sense!
"Philosophy! and thou more vaunted name
Which a divine philosophy rejects,
Is the Philosophy whose sway depends

Phœbe. Ere Phœbe sighed for the false Ganymede; Phœbus. The lagging shower, and force coy Phœbus out.
Of all-beholding Phœbus! But, alas,
He comes like Phœbus through the gates of morn
Those heights (like Phœbus when his golden locks
That Phœbus wont to wear
Phrase. To deem that he was old,—in shepherd's phrase
Choice word and measured phrase, above the reach
Forgive me if the phrase be strong;—
In phrase that now with echoes soft
Of their sensations, and in voluble phrase
The dangerous craft of cunning term and phrase
Shy, and unpractised in the strife of phrase;
Of public worship, where, the glowing phrase
"Much, yesterday, was said in glowing phrase
Repeated without loss of simple phrase, Phrased. Which, as the Housewife phrased it, were throughout
Phrases. For a few swelling phrases, and a flash
And phrases pleased me chosen for delight
Phyllis. In coronal, with Phyllis in the midst—
Physician. Physician art thou?—one, all eyes,
Physiognomias. Or physiognomies of real men.
Phibros's. The phibros's note, discountenanced or mute;
Picking. Tied to her arm, and picking thus from the lane
Picks. And hurries on; or from the fragments picks
Pictish. The Pictish cloud darkens the enervate land
Picture. The picture of the mind revives again:
Might learn to picture, for the eye of faith,
The picture of a life well spent:
In picture, speaking with heroic tongue,
But faintly picture, 'twere an office meet
To paint this picture of his lady-love:
This picture from nature may seem to depart,
The appropriate Picture, fresh from Titan's hand,
A picture on the cabin wall
A Picture had it been of lasting ease,
Such Picture would I at that time have made:
No picture of mere memory ever looked
But though the picture weary out the eye,
From books and what they picture and record.
One picture from the living. You behold,
A Titan's hand, address to picture forth
Was silent as a picture: evermore
Nor must I leave untouched (the picture else Pictured. Stretch o'er the pictured mirror broad and blue,
The pictured fane of Tell suspends his oar;
The robes of pictured glass.
Vividly pictured in some glassy pool,
Of saintly pleasure from these pictured walls,
Is pictured, or their epitaphs can speak,
The pictured Saviour!—By Augustin led,
That flings his shadow on the pictur'd deep.
Stretch, o'er their pictur'd mirror, broad and blue,
Recall what then I pictured to myself,
Have faithfully been pictured; we have reached
Upon his brain; and on their pictured lines
Pictures. What shifting pictures—clad in gleams
On pictures to gaze where they drank in their hues;
The Patriot's heart with pictures rude and stern,
With a thousand soft pictures his memory will teem,
Is thronged with staring pictures and huge scrolls,
Of hawk's wares—books, pictures, combs, and pins—
Of gay or tragic pictures. You have seen,
For our disputes, plain pictures. Say what man
A cabinet stored with gems and pictures—draws Pie. The pie, and chattering breaks the night's repose.
Piece. A piece of money glittering through the dust?
It touches on that piece of native rock

Pieces. Pieces of money carefully enclosed.
Piedmont's. To scent the sweets of Piedmont's breathing
Pier. One, who daily on the pier
 Had staid his oars, and touched the jutting pier,
 Pursued her voyage, till a natural pier.
Pierce. May pierce the earth with the patent mole,
 These notes of thine—they pierce and pierce;
 "Come, if the notes thine ear may pierce,
 He—whose experienced eye can pierce the array,
 Shall lack not power the "meeting soul to pierce!"
 Could pierce through a temper that's soft to disease,
 No thorns can pierce her tender feet.
 Once did I pierce to where a cabin stood,
 Or pierce the gloom of her majestic woods;
 Which the mild sunbeam hath not power to pierce.
Pierced. But once I pierced the mazes of a wood
 It pierced the caverns of the sluggish North—
 The crown of thorns, hands pierce through the tree,
 Was pierced by whizzing shaft of hunter keen!
 For Her, who, pierced by sorrow's thrilling dart,
 Some pierced to the heart through the ineffectual shield
 The sweetness of Christ's Mother pierced so
 Yet my fancy has pierced to his heart, and pourtrays
 Pierced by thy spear in glorious victory.
 Dived into caves, and pierced the matted woods,
 Through their ethereal texture pierced—ere we,
Pierces. Pierces the ethereal vault; and 'mid the gleam
Piercing. See Cloud-piercing, Ear-piercing, Sky-piercing.
 And perished, what a piercing outcry you
 Whose piercing sweetness can unloose
 Of that intense and piercing cry
 A piercing look the Widow cast
 The piercing eye, the thoughtful brow,
 Counsellors for the world, of piercing ken;
 Piercing the Papal darkness from afar!
 Heavenward, so piercing deep the lake below.
Pierlan. And ye, Pierian Sisters, sprung from Jove Pier's. From the Pier's head, musing, and with increase
Piety. Your piety would not miss its due reward;
 Round each to each by natural piety.
 A pledge of endless bliss in acts of early piety,
 Would bless such piety— It may be then—
 Of his full bosom, gladsome Piety!
 A blest estate when piety sublime
 Is ancient Piety for ever flown?
 Of fortitude, and piety, and love,
 This is our maxim, this our piety;
 And piety towards God. Such men of old
 Made known the spot where piety should raise
 Where haply (kind service to Piety due!)
 And piety shall guard the Stone
 Here did not kill, but nourished, Piety.
 Altars that piety neglects;
 The rites of ancient piety
 Through force of natural piety;
 Where Piety, as they believe, obtains
 Of heaven-descended Piety and Song.
 From Nazareth—source of Christian piety,
 To harassed Piety, "Dismiss thy fear,
 Of headstrong will! Can this be Piety?
 Or a Platonic Piety confined
 For Rite and Ordinance, Piety is led
 So piety took root; and Song might tell
 And awed to piety.
 Saved out of many by his piety,
 And Heaven still lacked its due, though piety
 Trained up through piety and zeal to prize
 Her clear though shallow stream of piety
 Are piety, her life is gratitude.
 As piety ordained; could I submit
 And an habitual piety, maintained
 Blossoms of piety and innocence.
 By natural piety; nor a lofty mind,
 When piety more awful had relaxed.
 And piety is sweet to infant minds.
 Her anchorites, like piety of old;
 Of unambitious piety he chose,
 Hamlet, and town; and piety survive
 Their place; and genuine piety descend,
Piety's. Is this her piety's reward?
 Where Christian piety's soul-cheering spark
Pig. The Horse of knowledge, and the learned Pig, Pigny. A six years' Darling of a pigmy size!
Pike. And feeding pike starts from the water's edge,
 And the fierce sharp-toothed pike.
 That does not play you false.—On that tall pike
 And watch from pike to pike amid the sky
Pikes. And Fikes, of darkness named and fear and storms,
 O'er azure pikes serene and still, they go,
 Huge Pikes of Darkness named, of Fear and Storms,
Pile. See Convent-pile.
 Pile of Stone-henge, so proud to hint yet keep Gone like a morning dream, or like a pile

Pile—continued.

And now have reached that pile of stones,
 The Pile of Turf is half a century old;
 Prescriptive title to the shattered pile,
 Frozen by distance; so, majestic Pile,
 There stood a consecrated Pile,
 Thus (where the intrusive Pile, ill-graced
 A Pile that Grace approves, and Time can trust
 Of some old Minister's venerable pile)
 Thou sacred Pile! whoseurrets rise
 From the Cathedral pile; and with the twain
 For see, Laverna! mark the far-famed Pile,
 Under the shadow of a stately Pile,
 Forth from the towers of that huge Pile, wherein
 When this low Pile a Gospel Teacher knew;
 Of a once warm Abode, and that new Pile,
 That sumptuous Pile, with all its peers,
 Round and through this Pile of state
 And now before this Pile we stand
 But most to Bolton's sacred Pile,
 We stood before this ruined Pile,
 And eye, methinks, this hoary Pile,
 Shall gart that symbol crowning the low Pile:
 Lead to that younger Pile, whose sky-like dome
 And lo! a slatelier pile, the Abbey of St. Bees,
 Witness yon Pile that greets us from St. Bees,
 Survive, and once again the Pile stands fast:
 Lowther! in thy majestic Pile are seen
 A pile beforehand, turf or stick,
 That may recall to mind that awful Pile
 From airy words alone, a Pile that ne'er decays.
 Thou see'st a homely Pile, yet to these walls
 Of that intended Pile, which would have been
 But frost had reared the gorgeous Pile
 That overlays the pile; and, from a bag
 Upon the second step of that small pile,
 I was thy neighbour once, thou rugged Pile!
 I would have planted thee, thou hoary Pile
 Thence down the steep a pile of grass he throws
 Haste, and rebuild the pile."—But not a stone
 Stands yet a mouldering pile with fractured arch,
 To a schoolboy's vision, I had raised a pile
 Rests underneath the little rock-like pile
 On golden evenings, with the charcoal pile
 By a brook-side, we came, a roofless pile,
 "Inspect the basis of the social pile:
 Ere we built up a pile of better thoughts,
 Not less than that huge Pile (from some abyss
 As chanced, the portals of the sacred Pile
 Not raised in nice proportions was the pile,
 The Dame returned. Or ere that glowing pile
 Within the bosom of her awful pile,
 "Thus all was re-established, and a pile
 Of the rude pile; as ofttimes trunks of trees,
 And old religious house—pile after pile;
 And, as they issue from the illumined pile,
 The mansion's self displayed;—a reverend pile
 To kneel devoutly in yon reverend Pile,
Piled. See Up-piled.
 Nor Winter yet his frozen stores had piled,
 That piled these stones and with the mossy sod
 Hurtle the clouds in deeper darkness piled,
 Of many autumns in the cave had piled,
 Of carded wool which the old man had piled
 Sat round the basket piled with oaten cakes,
 Of children's industry, in hillocks piled;
 With freight of slippers piled beneath his arm!
 Had been piled up against the corner panes
 Piled in a nook, through malice, as might seem,
 Remote and deep, piled round with rocks, where foot
Piles. Slackens his course—to mark those holy piles
 Open your gates, ye everlasting Piles!
 Who daily piles up wealth in Mammon's cave—
 Of mutability, those far-famed Piles
 Her bed, his mountains mad Ambition piles;
 Shrine, altar, image, and the massy piles
Pilifer. If a thief could be here he might pilfer at ease;
Pilifered. Pilifered away, by what the Bard who sang Pilifering. See A-pilifering.
 Pilifering secrets we would but cannot keep;
Pilgrim. A Pilgrim, when the summer day
 And from the gate the Pilgrim turned,
 Ethereal minstrel! pilgrim of the sky!
 Tempering recess as ever pilgrim chose,
 Fair Pilgrim! I harbours she a sense
 Even such this blessed Pilgrim trod,
 Claim for the pilgrim; and, though chidings sharp
 Short while a Pilgrim in our nether world,
 Still have my pilgrim feet unfalling found,
 But as a Pilgrim resolute, I took,
 Or given upon report by pilgrim friars,
 Veiled nun, or pilgrim resting on his staff:
 A youthful pilgrim; above all reviewed
 Now resting with a pilgrim by the side
 A never-resting Pilgrim of the Sea, Pilgrimage. They placed me—there to end life's pilgrimage.

Pilgrimage—continued.

In caravan your hasty pilgrimage
 Our pilgrimage, nor distant far from home,
Pilgrim-like. Or, Pilgrim-like, on forest moss reclined, Pilgrim's. Was to the Pilgrim's soul endeared,
 'Twill be the traveller's shed, the pilgrim's cot,
 The Kirk of ULPHA to the pilgrim's eye
 A wandering Pilgrim's humbleness.
 And many a Pilgrim's rugged heart did melt.
 The pilgrim's wistful eye hath never stay'd.
 Such is the summer pilgrim's frequent wish;
Pilgrims. To pilgrims overcome by summer's heat.
 Now meet we other pilgrims ere the day
 'Tis never drought with us—St. Cuthbert and his Pilgrims,
 Has been forgotten, Farewell! Gentle pilgrims,
 And the vain rank the pilgrims bore while yet on earth.
 You pilgrims see—in lagging file
 (From time to time, like Pilgrims, here and there . . .
 Rude Nature's Pilgrims did we go,
 Age after age to Pilgrims from all lands
 Blest Pilgrims, surely, as they took for guide
 Back to the Land those Pilgrims left of yore,
 And meet the gladdening pilgrims on their way.
 Pacing, two social pilgrims, or alone
Piling. Wherefore, Sexton, piling still Pillage. Heed not the pillage of man's ancient heart.
 His children up to waste and pillage.
 Will all be train'd to waste and pillage;
Pillar. See Kirk-pillar. Stone-pillar.
 Whence by our shepherds it is called THE PILLAR.
 His shepherd's staff; for on that Pillar of Rock
 Memorial Pillar! 'mid the wrecks of Time
 Is, and the pillar of the throat would be
 Of Pompey's pillar; that I gravely style
 Want due consistence; like a pillar of smoke,
 That to the decorated pillar lead.
Pillared. That threaten the profane; a pillared shade,
 While from one pillared chimney breathes
 That cleaves to rock or pillared cave
 Infinite Power. The pillared vestibule,
 The pillared porch, elaborately embossed;
Pillars. At once to pillars turned that flame with gold:
 Three several pillars, each a rough-hewn stone,
 Three pillars of rude stone Sir Walter reared,
 I saw three pillars standing in a line,
 The glacier Pillars, join in solemn guise
 Pillars, and arches,—not in vain time-proof,
 And stalking pillars built of fiery sand.
 These lofty pillars, spread that branching roof
 And storms the pillars rock. But we such schools
 Of pillars, branching off from year to year,
 From huge Pelorus to the Atlantic pillars,
 To monumental pillars; and, from these . . .
 On these two pillars rested as in air
 With pillars crowded, and the roof upheld
 Like pillars fixed more firmly, as might seem,
Pillory. Are to the pillory due.
Pillow. Point to his wife the blood-drops on his pillow!
 Round as a pillow, and whiter than milk,
 Thou know'st the pillow of my breast;
 —That pillow is no longer to be thine,
 Shed round her pillow from her aloft,
 And on the pillow lays her burning head,
 But Angels round her pillow
 Has o'er their pillow brooded;
 And quietness pillow his head.
 And from my pillow, looking forth by light
 And made of it a pillow for her head.
 Her head from off her pillow, to look forth,
 Her dreary pillow, waited on her needs;
 Upon its pillow with a thousand schemes.
Pillow'd. Pillow'd in some deep dungeon's earless den;
Pillowly. And pillowly; yet not wanting love that makes
Pilot. Poor pilot I, by snows confounded,
 Her only pilot the soft breeze, the boat
 And Hope gay Pilot of the bold design.
Pincian. (Then first apparent from the Pincian Height)
Pincushion. Is doom'd a Pincushion to be.
Pin'dus. Or hath not Pin'dus fed thee, where the band
Pine. See Weymouth-pine.
 Where, mixed with graceful birch, the sombrous pine
 Between interminable tracts of pine,
 That thou, the slave of slaves, art doomed to pine
 Pine not like them with arms across,
 Whate'er befell she could not grieve or pine;
 Whiteness a pine tree's northern side,
 How cattle pine, and droop the shivering fowl,
 Of central earth, where tortured Spirits pine
 Instead of gathering strength, must droop and pine;
 And pine, of human hope bereft,

Pine—continued.

With tenderest passion; leaving him to pine . . .
 Yet will the Wanderer sometimes pine
 I saw far off the dark top of a Pine
 With pine and cedar spreading wide
 Whose curtain pine or thorn,
 The embowering rose, the acacia, and the pine,
 Thou wilt be eased, and less wilt droop and pine.
 Bright'ning the cliffs between where sombrous pine,
 Her crest a bough of Winter's bleakest pine,
 My haunt the hollow cliff whose Pine
 Round the stone table under the dark pine,
 I did not pine like one in cities bred,
 In happy infancy. He could not pine
 Of that tall pine, the shadow of whose bare
 Nor pine for want of pleasure in the fare Pined. And near a thousand tables pined and wanted food.
 Stolen from his cheek; he drooped, and pined,
 and pined—
 Drooped and pined till life was spent,
 She drooped and pined like one forlorn;
 Ill health of body; and had pined
 And yet he neither drooped nor pined,
 Or he had pined, and sunk to feed the worm:
 Alas! they pined, they languish'd while they shone;
 Forgot the beverage—and gin'd away.
 Wherewith to nurse the child—and still he pin'd.
 From the vast city, where I long had pined
 Had pined; upon his watery duplicate
Pine's. Dilated between the pine's enormous boughs descri'd Pines. Dilated hang the misty pines on high,
 Aerial pines from loftier steeps ascend,
 And pines the unripen'd pear in summer's kindliest
 ray;
 Thunders through echoing pines the headlong Aar;
 Pines, on the coast, through mist their tops uprear,
 'He pines,' they'll say, 'it is his doom,
 As budding pines in spring;
 —I sing in vain;—the pines have hushed their waving;
 Couched in the shadow of Mænalian pines,
 And these perennial howers and murmuring pines
 Aloft, where pines their branches toss!
 My thoughts become bright like yon edging of Pines
 In the pines pointing heavenward her beauty
 austere;
 'Mid sheltering pines, this Cottage rude and grey;
 Nod the cloud-piercing pines their troubl'd heads,
 Gives way, and half it's pines torment the flood;
 Shade above shade the desert pines ascend,
 'Mid the dark pines a little orchard blooms.
 The pines that near the coast their summits rear
 She ceased to speak, but while St. Bruno's pines
 Bend the complying heads of lordly pines,
 The dark pines thrusting forth their spiky heads;
Pine-trea. His flight, 'mid eddying pine-tree tops!
 The rescued Pine-tree, with its sky so bright
 That glimmered like a pine-tree dimly viewed
 Of pine-tree foliage poised in air, forth darts,
 —And yon tall pine-tree, whose composing sound
Pine-tree's. If still beneath that pine-tree's ragged bough
 Upon a pine-tree's storm-uprooted trunk,
Pine-trees. Cloud-piercing pine-trees nod their troubled heads,
 Nor doubt but He to whom yon Pine-trees nod
 Against the ancient pine-trees of the grove
 And pine-trees made a heavy shade
 The sun above the pine-trees showed
 Whose state, like pine-trees, waving to and fro, Pine-wood's. Beneath the cliffs, and pine-wood's steady sigh;
Pinfold. Within the pinfold of his own conceit.
Pining. By sheddings from the pining umbrage tinged
 The Worldling, pining to be freed
 Yet still he lived in pining discontent,
 And not a captive pining for his home.
 Immoderate wishes, pining discontent,
 The pining Solitary turned aside;
 Whether a pining discontent survive,
Pinion. In joy of voice and pinion!
Pinioned. It should be told you pinioned in your bed,
Pinions. On slowly-waving pinions, down the vale;
 On her pinions swift and strong?
 Fluttering its pinions, almost within reach,
 Pinions that fanned the teeming mould
 Flung from off the purple pinions,
 Thy pinions, universal Air,
 O'er which her pinions shed a silver gleam.
 But fleetest far the pinions of the Wind,
 And folds thy pinions up in blest repose.
 'Mine is she,' cried the Knight,—again they clapped their pinions.
 Pinions of high and higher sweep, and make
 And his two pretty pinions of blue dusky gauze
 She soars—and here and there her pinions raise

Pinions—continued.

By fluttering pinions here and busy bill ;
On red slow-waving pinions down the vale,
Whence the scared Owl on pinions grey

Pink. Roof-high ; the wild pink crowns the garden-wall.

Pink-vested. Blue-breched, pink-vested, with high-towering plumes.

Pinnacle. To a full orb, this Pinnacle bright.

His pinnacle, a small vagrant barge, up-piled

She was an elfin pinnacle ; justly

When in our pinnace we returned at leisure

Our pinnace moves ; then, coasting creek and bay,

Pinnacle. And pinnacle and spire

Fix us upon some lofty pinnacle,

High on the topmost pinnacle, a sign

And on the top of either pinnacle,

As from the pinnacle of worldly state

Up to the dwarf that tops the pinnacle.

Pinnacles. Huge convent domes with pinnacles and towers,

As they did love. Ye kindred Pinnacles—

Fall if ye must, ye Towers and Pinnacles,

Turrets and pinnacles in answering files,

Pinned. And blankets were about him pinned ;

Pins. Of hawk's wares—books, pictures, combs, and pins—

Piny. Sole human tenant of the piny waste,

—Vex'd by the darkness, from the piny gulf

Pioneer. Her Pioneer, the snow-dissolving Sun,

Pioneers. Use them, full oft, as pioneers to ruin,

Pious. And watered duly with the pious tear,

Kind pious hands did to the Virgin build

Of virtuous life, by pious parents bred ;

And, when he rose, he thanked her pious care

So pious in demeanour ! in his look

Easily a pious training

He bore the lasting name of " pious Elidure ! "

Of pious faith the vanities of grief ;

Due to that good and pious deed

The pious bird with the scarlet breast,

O pious Bird ! whom man loves best,

At night o'er any pious book,

But many good and pious thoughts

Of good and pious works Thou art the seed,

O haply there some pious hermit chose

O murdered Prince ! meek, loyal, pious, brave !

By pious men of old ;

To check this pious haste of erring duty.

The pious Lady built with hope sublime.

A pious structure, fair to see,

The pious ALFRED, King to Justice dear !

The pious, humble, useful Secular,

Of pious Edward kneeling as he knelt

Watched, and with love and pious industry

In and for whom the pious Mother felt

Sickened, or died) in pious memory kept :

Peasant and mail-clad Chief with pious awe ;

Blest in their pious ignorance, though weak

This daughter of thy pious care,

Pious and pure, modest and yet so brave,

Had been that pious spirit, a tide

Which pious, learned, MURFIT saw and read ;—

Who, faithful to a pious trust,

Find easier access to the pious mind,

Republican or pious. If these thoughts

At home in pious service, to your bells

For whom this pious service is performed ;

Pious beyond the intention of your thought ;

Of pious sentiment diffused afar,

In due observance of her pious wish,

That in the steeple hang, his pious gift."

Pipe. See Bagpipe.

The wind should pipe a little, while we stand

A pipe on which the wind would deify play ;

And pipe its song in safety,—there

His flock, and pipe on shepherd's reed

And she had made a pipe of straw,

And music from that pipe could draw

That oaten pipe of hers is mute,

To pipe a simple song for thinking hearts.

The pipe of Pan, to shepherds

Long as the thrush shall pipe on Groggar Hill !

A thousand times this pipe did Tasso sound ;

And the shepherd's pipe was playing,

Ye that pipe and ye that play,

Pipe wild along the hollow-bustering coast,

Within the groves of Chivalry, I pipe

Of cool Lucretias, where the pipe was heard

Pipe solitary anguish ; or must hang

Which the bright season favours,—Labor and pipe

Winds pipe through fading woods ; but those bilthe notes

Must tune his pipe, insidiously to nurse

The idle breath of softest pipe attuned

Piper. See Sand-piper.

And restless piper wearying out the shore ;

Pipes. While pastoral pipes and streams the land-

Pity—continued.

No pity asking, on the group she gazed
 He cried—"Do pity me! That thou shouldst live
 —Pity that our young Chief will have no part
 Pity the Maiden did not wait a while;
 I bore her in my arms; her looks won pity;
 Of doubt is insupportable. Pity, the facts
 Compassion!—pity!—pride can do without them;
 I pity, can forgive, you; but those wretches—
 Mercy! I said I know not what—oh pity me—
 Pity me, I am haunted;—thrice this day
 Then pity crossed the path of my resolve:
 "He took thee in his arms, and in pity brought thee home:
 Dear caresses given in pity,
 They pity me, and not my grief.
 Remain unpitied, pity is not in man.
 The pity which was then in every heart
 Oh, gracious Heaven, in pity make her thine!
 Women, in your land, may pity
 No more of pity for regrets
 165 Parrot 21
 Stop," it exclaimed, "and pity me!
 And less in pity than in wonder,
 Celestial pity I again implore;—
 By the just Gods whom no weak pity moved,
 Where Pity sheds sweet tears—and Love,
 For terror, joy, or pity
 And, did not pity touch my breast
 In pity to this poor drowned man.
 For God took pity on the Boy,
 And Pity sanctifies the Verse
 Of pity pleading from the heart in vain—
 Nor pity idly born,
 And with regret and useless pity haunt
 For unasked alms in pity given.
 But in sweet pity; and can hear
 Vouchsafed in pity or with wrath assigned;
 Destroy in pity, or with care remove.
 Part from thee without pity dyed in shame:
 Still pity to this last retreat
 And meet their pity face to face;
 Me did a reverent pity move
 To Marmaduke, cut off from pity!
 In love and pity at her feet;
 Is tender pity then of no avail?
 Of pity or fear; and More's gay genius played
 Pity that such a promise e'er should prove Looked down with pity upon eyes beguiled
 The heart to pity, train the mind in care
 Where be the wretched ones, the sighs for pity?
 A mild domestic pity kept its place,

Of heaven in pity visiting the place.
 Where pity, to the mind conveyed
 But wonder, pity, soon were quelled;
 "With Mother's pity in her breast enclosed
 Old Man I whom sa oft I with pity have eyed,
 That outcast of pity beheld.
 Of pity cast from inward tenderness
 This heard, I said, in pity, "Come with me."
 Pity the tree.—Poor human vanity,
 Daily upon me, mixed with pity too
 Oh, pity and shame! with those confederate
 Powers!
 Of pity and sorrow to a state of being
 With unavailing pity. Rich in love
 To my benign Companion,—"Pity 'tis
 Pity and scorn, and melancholy pride,
 Of scornful pity be the just reward
 At others' tears in pity; and in scorn
 But spare your pity, if there be in me
 This triumph, yet the pity of my heart
 Or move the pity of unthinking minds,
 Though bound to earth by ties of pity and love,
 To pity dead, the oppressor and the oppress;
 Then, Pity could have scarcely found on earth
 How would you pity her who yonder rests;
 Where love and pity tenderly unite
 Of mutual pity and forgiveness, sweet
 Give way to words of pity or complaint,
 Ashamed, and tender pity overawed."
 With pity mixed, astonishment with scorn!"
 Pity away, soon shall ye quake with fear!
 For the least boon that pity can bestow.
 That seemed to pity what he could not spare.
 "Ah! what a pity were it to disperse,
 Ill neighbourhood—pity that this should be—
 Where pity shrinks from unremitting calls,
Pitying. No, not the pitying moon! And perish so.
 Bright boon of pitying Heaven!—alas,
 For such, by pitying Angels and by Spirits
 Of pitying Heaven, at least were free
 Inly illumined by Heaven's pitying love;
 Love pitying innocence, not long to last,
 And oh for Thee, by pitying grace
 Of pitying human nature? Once again
 No pitying voice commands a halt,
 Wharf shall be to pitying hearts

Pitying—continued.

Can the pitying spirit doubt
 A guardian Spirit sent from pitying Heaven,
 Till pitying Saints conduct her bark
 Weak sinful folk, that God, with pitying eye,
 But doubly pitying Nature loves to show't
 Of blessed angels, pitying human cares.
 Who saw enough for blame and pitying love.
 Think not, that, pitying him, I could forget
 The fair Narcissus, by some pitying God
Pity's. Then, they, for Christian pity's sake,
 Pivots. Upon the pivot of his skull
 Upon the pivot of his skull
Placable. Is placable—because occasions rise
 And in the kinder spirit; placable,
Place. See Abiding-place, Birth-place, Breathing-

ing-place, Death-place, Door-place, Dwelling-place, Halting-place, Hiding-place,

 Shine, Poet! in thy place, and be content:—
 Shine, Poet! in thy place, and be content.
 Feels not the spirit of the place control,
 From that day forth no place to him could be
 Of human shelter in that dreary place.
 Should hold a place, as if 'twere robbery,
 And nowhere upon earth is place so fit
 And very superstition of the place,
 The fittest place? He is growing pitiful.
 In such a weary night, and such a place.
 I was alarmed. No wonder; this is a place
 Has been but comfortless; and yet that place,
 There are the strangest echoes in that place!
 No! this is not the place to hear the tale:
 Person, and place—the where, the when, the how,
 Commend me to the place. If a man should die
 Oh that I had but strength to reach the place!
 This is a dismal place—well—that is well—
 And in that miserable place we left him,
 Drove by the place of my retreat: three nights
 Their veil, but not for me—'twas in fit place
 Oh I lift me up and carry me to the place.
 —Yet seek him,—and what shall you find in the place?
 Kive, thought I, was a favoured place,
 Right towards the lamb she looked; and from a shady place
 With soft illumination cheered the dimness of that place.
 What shall it be? a mirthful throng? or that holy place and calm
 And yet, some changes must take place among you:
 (It is the loneliest place of all these hills)
 Among these rocks, and every hollow place
 Lay stretched at ease; but, passing by the place
 A place in which he could not bear to live:
 How changed from him who, born to highest place,
 Who to this blessed place
 Within this realm a place of safe retreat;
 Did place upon his brother's head the crown,
 And O most constant, yet most fickle Place,
 No livelier love in such a place could be:
 My heart again is in its place!
 To some remote and solitary place,
 Find place within his bosom—Once again
 Shocked at his savage aspect, from the place

Place—continued.

My Soul, an Apparition In the place, . . . 208 * It is no 16
 And re-assume his place before her sight, . . . 210 Laod. 30
 Come, blooming Hero, place thee by my side!
 Brought from a pensive though a happy place.
 Shed kindly influence on the place,
 All accidents of time and place;
 Watch also shifting peaceably their place
 That in the living Creature find on earth a place.
 These silent raptures found no place; . . . 239 P. B. 279
 In many a solitary place, . . . 246 P. B. 319
 As ruinous a place it was, . . . 246 P. B. 361
 Angels of love, look down upon the place;
 An old place, full of many a lovely brood,
 Such place to me is sometimes like a dream
 Substantially expressed—a place for bell
 Not while—to aid the spirit of the place—
 Or feed, each planted on that lofty place—
 Margaret, the saintly Foundress, take thy place;
 Tinged, we may fancy, in this dreary place
 Thanks to the place, blessings upon the hour;
 All seem to feel the spirit of the place,
 May He, who halloweth the place,
 Hath led me to this lonely place.
 I feel this place was made for her;
 In this still place, remote from men,
 In this still place, where murmurs on
 Lies buried in this lonely place.
 Were in this place the guests of Chance:
 Of something without place or bound;
 Nor by soft Peace adopted; though, in place
 There's such a place as Yarrow.
 Is this a place for mirthful cheer?
 From shades, her chosen place of short-lived rest.
 Of the rash Spirit that still holds her place,
 No eye can follow, to a fatal place
 An offering not unworthy to find place,
 This was the hour, and that the place.
 Is not the chamois suited to his place?
 The Place unfolds, from pavement skinned with moss,
 Flowing of time and place, and paid to both
 Her morning splendours vanish, and their place
 That would yield him fit help white prefiguring that Place
 Where Man, yet mortal, rarely finds a place.
 Still was its inner world a place
 The circuit of this hallowed place.
 Of God had in her heart found place—
 And, in his place, among son and sire,
 Thy place be on my better hand;
 And in a second father's place,
 And smiles, that dared to take their place,
 Of God, and fill thy destined place:
 A place of shelter, till the rage
 And took a place in all men's sight;
 Then let us leave this dreary place.
 That to what place soever feed
 That like a place of vantage showed;
 And called the people to the place.
 Of time, and place, and thought, and deed—
 Who, having filled a holy place,
 Closes the gates of every sacred place.
 Who teach the intrepid guardians of the place—
 Of God and man, place higher than to him
 Transcendent over time, unbound by place,
 Opened a vision of that blissful place
 "Is well—but what are helps of time and place,
 And only love keep in your hearts a place.
 And Wisdom, as she holds a Christian place
 Was glorified, and took its place, above
 Of softest music some responsive place.
 Shall place thy virtues out of Envy's reach.
 He ranges on from place to place,
 By whom in that lone place espied?
 Shalt take thy place with Yarrow!
 Go, carry to some fitter place
 The Man had fallen, that place of fear!
 A dweller in that savage place!
 The lowliest flower possesses in its place;
 These mistis, and lead you to a safer place,
 Another takes its place.
 To their lost place, or meet in harmony
 In lofty place, or humble Life's domain,
 And oft a Prisoner in the cheerless place,
 A mild domestic pity kept its place,
 Of heaven in pity visiting the place. . . . 525 Epist. Beaumont 145
 A place where joy is known,
 And admiration lost, by change of place
 Time, place, and business, all at his command!
 Where Love for living Thing can find a place.
 Its place no longer to be found;
 To the high altar its determined place;
 And feeling, suited to the place and time
 Will not unwillingly their place resign;
 Of words unsuited to the place . . . 550 Hermit's Cell 2. 7
 That in an alley had a privy place,
 To every place wherein she hath supposed
 To every Jew that dwelleth in that place . . . 555 Prioresse 150

Place—continued.

So loud, that with his voice the place did ring.
 And gathered each and all into one place;
 How shut was every window of the place,
 The blissful sound; and in that very place
 Of all this town, save only in this place,
 Of resignation find a hallowed place.
 Round this dear Vale, his native place.
 A place upon thy Poet's grave,
 A place of thought where we in waiting lie;
 To young Ascanius, should assume his place;
 To cup or wand its appointed place.
 Resumed its place. Age after age went by,
 To a green shady place, where down I sat
 Time, place, and manners do I seek, and these
 More often turning to some gentle place
 Gone was the old grey stone, and in its place
 Internal breezes, sobbings of the place
 But 'twas a splendid place, the door beset
 The old Lion and usurped his place, in slight
 Nor for that place. But therefore he cast down?
 To mitigate the injurious sway of place
 Decking the matron temples of a place
 Place also by the side of this dark sense
 The place itself and fashion of the rites.
 A random choice, could shadow forth a place
 Of the whole place should bear a stamp of awe;
 And often, starting from some covert place,
 Give ready place to any random seed
 Not less delighted did I take my place
 Leave let me take to place before her sight
 Without unkindness, in another place.
 Thy after-sojourn in the self-same place
 Yes; for even then no other than a place
 An open place it was, and overlooked,
 An idler's place; an idler well content
 Still as a sheltered place when winds blow loud!
 Set forth, too serious theme for that light place—
 That, thither driven from some unsheltered place,
 In whatsoever place, but seemed in this
 And all the mean upholstery of the place,
 Poured forth harangues, how sadly out of place!
 Of time, and place, and object; by his wants,
 When but a half-hour's roam through such a place
 Thus early took a place pre-eminent;
 All that took place within me came and went
 Of past and present, such a place must needs
 Like independent natures. Hence the place
 Continually, like an uneasy place
 The place, all hushed and silent as it was,
 Their place of convocation—there I heard,
 In the last place of refuge—my own soul.
 Before them, in some desolated place,
 Of all of us,—the place where, in the end,
 Infirmitis of nature, time, and place,
 The affections and the spirit of the place,
 In that wild place and at the dead of night,
 Into a second place, pleased to become
 With star-like virtue in its place may shine,
 Low thoughts had there no place; yet was his heart
 And their place knew them not. Meanwhile,
 abridged
 And I exhorted her to place her trust
 Still in its place; his Sunday garments hung
 The simple pastimes of the day and place.
 And every day and every place enjoyed
 Shouteth faint tidings of some gladder place.
 Such book in such a place! "A book it is,"
 Heard anywhere; but in a place like this,
 As ye must needs be here? in such a place
 Maintained his place; or heedfully pursued
 Seeking a place of refuge at the root
 Place worthier still of envy. May I name,
 The place where now we stand that certain men
 We signified a wish to leave that place
 Of winter, and protect that pleasant place.
 Of wit in the scale of being fill the place;
 This deep abiding place, before your sight
 Through consciousness that silence in such place

Place—continued.

Around the porch, and seems, in that trim place,
To place those hillocks in that lonely guise.
No wish for wealth had place within his mind;
Whose place of rest is near yon ivied porch.
From what the place afforded, have been given;
Or easier links connecting place with place)
—We enter—by the Lady of the place
In awful sovereignty; a place of power,
Their place; and genuine piety descend,
Their place I took—and for a grateful office
Of some thick wood, her place of covert, cleaves
They ceased not to surround us; change of place,
Such product, and such pastime, did the place
Finds some place or other
Smooth summer dreams, old favours of the place,
By her side I'll take my place,
In such a lonely place.

An island in the brook. It was a place
Since that day furth the place to him—to me
They who are dwellers in this holy place
Who here abide, the persons like the place.
Not want, for this, your own subordinate place
In the bare twigs, each little budding place

Placed. They plac'd me—there to end life's pilgrimage,
And plac'd him at his mother's side;
Where he, in his poor self so weak, by Providence
was plac'd.
And on the vacant throne his worthier Brother
plac'd.
And plac'd together near our rocky Well.
He as a watchman oftentimes was plac'd.
Till a winter's noon-day plac'd her buried Son —Within our fearless reach are plac'd.
And that, so plac'd, my Nurslings may requite
What treasures would have then been plac'd.
Their God, and plac'd their trust in human pride!

All our hope is plac'd in Thee;
Will judg'd the Friend who plac'd it there
Mercy has plac'd within our reach
For dignity not plac'd beyond her reach,
Fit to be plac'd in that pure diadem;
And in the pearly shallop plac'd,
Some Statue, plac'd amid these regions old
Man plac'd him here, and God, he knows, can save.
Plac'd there—that he might go before
Were under her dominion plac'd.
This Homestead, plac'd where nothing could be seen,
Of conscience souls are plac'd by deeds that lack
The power of years—pre-eminent, and plac'd
Plac'd in the little boat, then n'er the deep
Had plac'd his staff across the broad smooth stone
The Grison gypsy here her tent has plac'd,
Hast plac'd me high above my best desires,
Deck'd with refreshments had this child been
plac'd,
Here plac'd to be the inheritor of heaven,
The gift which God has plac'd within his power,
Plac'd on this earth to love and understand,
A folded paper, lying as if plac'd
That must have plac'd it there; and ere that day
So plac'd, to be shut out from all the world!
Hath plac'd beyond these penetrable bounds,
Plac'd, among flowery gardens curtain'd round
Not plac'd by fortune within easy reach
Had fix'd his milder loyalty, and plac'd
There, where they plac'd them who in conscience
prized
Not seeking from that source, she plac'd her trust
“And may it not be hoped, that, plac'd by age
When, heretofore, I plac'd before your sight

Places. See Hiding-places, Resting-places.
When my father found thee first in places far away;
Above and round the sacred places
Strange places, covers unendear'd,
And sylvan places heaved a pensive sigh;
When she is, far from these wild places,
I see the places where they once were known,
For sheltered places, bosoms, nooks, and bays,

Here, there, and in all places at one hour.
Of consecrated places,
And, in the desert places of the earth,
In shady places, to proclaim
Places forsaken now, though loving still
Looks up in all places, for joy or for rest,
But say, among these holy places,
To distant places and unknown.
All Powers and Places that abhor the light
Came as he rode by places of the town
Had in high places built her lodge; though mean
And Souls of lonely places I can't think
In lonely places; if a throng was near,
And all known places and familiar sights
That occupy their places, and, though oft
For men who in such places, feeling there

Placid. Upon the bosom of a placid lake,
I may not trust thy placid cheer!
For endless constancy, and placid truth;
Say, Dora! tell me, by yon placid moon,
When first they met the placid light of thine,
And sage content, and placid melancholy;
(Which even the placid innocence of death
Could scarcely make more placid, heaven more bright)
In the wife's smile; and in the placid sky;
But hark—the summons I—down the placid lake
Around his placid temples curled;
Rough as the past; where Thou, of placid mien,
The day is placid in its going,
Touched by accordance of thy placid cheer,
In placid beauty and sublime content!
Thus, gifted Friend, but with the placid brow

The true Ascanius steep'd in placid rest;
'Twas autumn, and a clear and placid day,
And placid under-countenance, first endear'd;
And placid, and took nothing from the man
In strength, reflecting from its placid breast
Did, in the placid clearness of the night,
To mark their placid state, who never heard
Embosomed happiness, and placid love;
Anchors her placid beauty? Not a leaf,
So placid, so inactive, as content;
Sails in smooth weather by the placid coast
Who, in some placid day of summer, looks
The silvery lake is streaked with placid blue;
In placid beauty and entire content.
On the broad water's placid breast—
And placid way of life, and constant love
And entertained as in a placid sleep.

Plac'ing. And plac'ing trust in privilege confirm'd Plague. See Pharaph-plague.
And ravenous plague, all perished: every tear
Plague on my memory, him I had forgotten.
Hedge in the life of every pest and plague
Or plague the fancy 'mid the sculptured shows
To plague her beating heart; and there is one
A plague on your languages, German and Norse!
A worse affliction in the plague of war:
Plague from this union spread, whose subtle bane
For, like a plague, will memory break out;
As by a plague. Yet no rapacious plague
Now, when oppression, like the Egyptian plague.

Plagued. Baffled and plagued by a mind that every hour
Plagued with uncharitable thoughts the church;
Plagues. “The pains and plagues that on our heads came down,
But passions spread like plagues, and thousands wild
Into their contraries the petty plagues
Plaid. Against an equal host that wore the plaid,
In crimson stockings, tartan plaid,
Plaided. The old grey stones the plaided chief surveys,
In plaided vest,—his fellow-countrymen.
Plain. In thoughtless gaiety I coursed the plain,
The lone black fir, forsakes the faded plain;
Where beasts and men together n'er the plain
On Zutphen's plain, or on that highland dell,
With stern composure watches to the plain—
A Traveller on the skirt of Sarum's Plain
Or whistling thro' thin grass along the unfurrow'd
plain.
Rolled at his back along the living plain;
The Plain resounding to the whirlwind's sweep,
And now the walls are named the “Dead House”
of the plain.
“Peaceful as this immeasurable plain
And, for yourself, in plain terms he asserts
‘Tis plain he loves the Maid, and what he said
With which he taints her ear,—for a plain reason;
The punishment they merit. All is plain:
Twelve honest men, plain men, would set us right;
These trepidations? Plain it is that Heaven
Or on some vast and solitary plain
Then plain it is as day that eyes were made
A plain confession, such as leaves no doubt,
Hard by a Man I met, who, from plain proofs
It caught his eye, he saw it plain—
No symbols, Sir, to tell us that plain tale:
And, scouring toward him n'er the grassy plain,
And, while they stood upon the plain apart,
And their plain home-made cheese. Yet when the meal
But only give some plain directions
Thrills not the less the bosom of the plain:
And transient feignings with plain truth
Vainly glitter hill and plain,
Along the smooth unpathway'd plain,
While Grasmere smoothed her liquid plain
Can lie upon the plain
The Girl, in rock and plain,
As might from India's farthest plain
With plain and manifest intent
Her state to any eye was plain;

 For she who planned the mossy lodge,
 His own conceit the figure planned,
 A perfect Woman, nobly planned,
 A habitation marvellously planned,
 Where once his airy helpers schemed and planned
 With ill-matched aims the Architect who planned—
 And there he planned an artful Cot
Plans. Shrunk from me; plans and schemes, and Conceits, devices, plans, and schemes,

 I'll plant myself before Lord Clifford's Castle,
 Or with that plant which in ourdale
 Plant lovelier, in its own retired abode
 And if a man should plant his cottage near,
 In truth a favoured plant!
 This Plant can never die.
 Shall grace the fairest, sweetest, plant
 Chequering the ground—from rock, plant, tree, or tower.
 So blooms this lonely Plant, nor dreads
 Why art thou silent! Is thy love a plant
 And on my True-love's forehead plant
 "Plant it,—by this we live or die."
 Shouting to Freedom, "Plant thy banners here!"
 Tended at need, the adopted Plant may thrive
 For some rare plant, yon Headland of St. Bees.
 Queen art thou still for each gay plant
 Yet still we plant, like men of elder days
 Even here I feel it, even this Plant
 Would plant thee where yet thou might'st blossom
 again.
 Confusion, and I seem to plant thee there.
 Beneath the plant despoiled, but crested still
 But thou didst plant its crevices with flowers,
 Where many a sheltered and well-tended plant
 For some rare floweret of the hills, or plant
 As the mute insect fixed upon the plant
 Up from the creeping plant to sovereign Man.
 Or plant a tree. And did you hear his voice?
 A plant no longer wild; the cultured rose
 Was busier with his task—to rid, to plant,
 He should depart, to plant himself anew,
 And court the wind; and leaves of that shy plant,
 Did plant the green plant had aptly recompensed
 The sterner, now flourishing, while they Plantagenet. To stern Plantagenet resigned her keys) Planted. The Cross, by angels planted on the aerial rock.
 By many a votive death-cross planted near,
 Write fool upon his forehead.—Planted thus
 Which he with flowers hath planted, finding there
 Had been so thickly planted and had thriven
 And planted where thy hoofs the turf have grazed.
 Or feed, each planted on that lofty place
 This night,—the Banner shall be planted!
 Then chiefly dear, when foes are planted round,
 What slopes are planted, or what mosses drained:
 Planted by Beaumont's and by Wordsworth's hands.
 Planted with such fond hope the tree;
 I would have planted thee, thou hoary File
 By angels planted on the aerial rock.
 Which with cold kiss Devotion planted near,
 Unhallowed actions—planted like a crown
 Been planted, hither come and find a lodge
 Tower eight times planted on the top of tower,
 With laurel planted upon hoary hairs,
 Beneath yon hawthorn, planted by myself
 A guardian planted to fence off the blast,
 Mines opened, forests planted, and rocks split,
 Were planted by her husband and herself,
 He planted, and in Latium fixed his Gods,
Planter. A planter, and a rearer from the seed?
Planting. —By planting on thy naked head the crest
 While I was planting green unfading bowers,
 Planting his favourite silver diadem,
 Planting my snowdrops among winter snows:
Plants. See Mountain-plants.
 And plants were wholesome, now of deadly taste:
 This wood is rich in plants and curious simples.
 Bringing thee chosen plants and blossoms blown
 When files of statelike plants have ceased to bloom,

Plants—continued.
 He spake of plants that hourly change
 With trailing plants and trees were intertwined,— Green herbs, bright flowers, and berry-bearing plants,
 She plants well-measured terrors in the road
 Strange "weeds" and alpine plants her helm
 entwine,
 Of every nature, and strange plants convened
 Of nature, 'mid her plants, and weeds, and flowers,
 With books, maps, fossils, withered plants and
 flowers,
 Boldest of plants that ever faced the wind,
 Those native plants, the holly and the yew,
 Who throw, like plants, uninjured by the storm.

Plashy. And with her feet she from the plashy earth
 And formidable length of plashy lane,

Plastic. My soul was unsubdued. A plastic power
 And stuff at hand, plastic as they could wish,— Plate. See Breast-plate.
 Here's neither head nor foot-stone, plate of brass,
 Demure with porringing and plate
 By plate of monumental brass
 On this dreary dull plate of black metal.
 To king and people true. A brazen plate,
 Around the margin of the plate, whereon
 To scheme and counter-scheme for purse and plate.
Platform. On this platform, light and free;
 From this platform, eight feet square,
 The platform is small, but gives room for them all;
 That Hill, whose flowery platform seems to rise
 On the smooth platform, whether skill prevailed
 Upon some showman's platform. What a shock
 Into a platform—that lay, sheepfold-wise,
Plato. Did Dion hold with Plato; ripened thus Platonic. Or a Platonic Piety confined
 Among the schoolmen, and Platonic forms
Plato's. Of Plato's genius, from its lofty sphere,
 Would ill suffice: for Plato's lore sublime, Platted. Whose temples bled beneath the platted thorn.
Plaudits. For the plaudits of the crowd?
 Though sure of plaudits on his costly stage,
Plausive. See Sadly-plausive.
 Fanned by the plausive wings of Love.
 No mightier work had gained the plausive smile
 Of Liberty, and smote the plausive string
Play. The shining glow-worm; or, in heedless play,
 On the tall peaks the glistening sunbeams play,
 When we began to tire of childish play,
 How in a simple freak of thoughtless play
 I will not play the sluggard. Nay, sit down.
 Which doth play tricks with them that look on it:
 Rushing along in the full tide of play,
 His senses play him false; and see, his arms
 If his own eyes play false with him, these freaks
 Mock-chastisement and partnership in play.
 You yet may see the fawn at play,
 Among the hills the echoes play
 On pipes of sycamore they play
 The little brooks that seem all pastime and all play,
 That does not play you false.—On that tall pike
 A pipe on which the wind would deftly play;
 That come and go with endless play
 When full of play and childish cares,
 Thy little sister is at play;—
 Here's grass to play with, here are flowers;
 And while these right affections play,
 While hare and leveret, seen at play,
 Then, cheerful Flower! my spirits play
 I sit, and play with smiles,
 Thou dost play at hide-and-seek;
 Takes delight to play upon.
 Nor is it I who play the part,
 A pair of little Boys at play,
 Off to some other play the joyous Vagrants flew!
 And, when he chose to sport and play,
 Did o'er the pebbles play.
 And he was free to sport and play,
 The spirits at your bidding play
 Peaceful striving, gentle play
 How ye, that play with soul and sense,
 As men who with their purpose play,
 (Above it shivering aspens play)
 Who, while the flattering Zephyrs round them play,
 Of noontide suns;—and even the beams that play
 Catch, in the pauses of their keenest play,
 But one to play with and to feed;
 And their necks play, involved in rings,
 From this deep chasm, where quivering sunbeams
 play
 By the night insects in their play,
 Encouragement to sport or play;
 —Wings at my shoulders seem to play;
 Such as my verse now yields, while moonbeams play
 United us; when thou, in boyish play,
 Where Fact with Fancy stooped to play;
 This ceaseless play, the genuine life

Play—continued.

The reasoning mind, or with the fancy play,
 The Future made to play so false a part,
 Or listens to its play among the boughs
 Of pretty fancies that would round him play
 Think of their common peace, their simple play,
 That seemed to play with it in love or scorn,
 Driven by strong winds at play among the clouds,
 Heard my own Cressid's laugh; and once at play
 With the locks of his white hair,
 Of that arch fancy which would round him play,
 Ye that pipe and ye that play
 Of that she taught them on her lap to play
 Of exercise and play, to which the year
 I play the loiterer: 'tis enough to note
 How could I ever play an ingrate's part?
 That, from the rural school ascending, play
 And watchful, as a kitten when at play
 Play on her streamers, fails she to assume
 The patriot to play.

To play on water, or in endless chase
 I should not grieve with thee to play;

Played. With his oak-staff the cottage children played;

Together round her grave we played,
 They played like two young ravens on the crags:
 The bowers where Lucy played;
 Have played together, nor with me didst thou
 Played with our time; and, as we strolled along,
 Were her antics played in the eye
 Among the flowers, and with the flowers I played;
 Whose heart with so much nature played?
 Well have you played your friendly part;
 I've played, I've danced, with my narration;
 Such strains of rapture as the Genius played
 While Hope and Love around thee played,
 The Minstrels played their Christmas tune
 The greeting given, the music played,
 Sole listener, Duddon I to the breeze that played
 But breezes played, and sunshine gleamed—
 Of border tunes was played to cheer
 When the bells of Rylstone played
 Of pity or fear; and More's gay genius played
 (Or was it sleep that with my fancy played?)
 And where the rugged colts their gambols played,
 The birds around me hopped and played,
 While on the wing the Urchin played,
 Madly played to win a name:
 There, while through half an afternoon we played
 We sauntered, played, or floted; we talked
 Present before my eyes, have played with times
 Ate, drank, and with the fruit and glasses played,
 Erewhile my verse played idly with the flowers

Play-fellows. The play-fellows of fancy, who had made Playford. To illumine Playford hall, Playful. From home and company remote and every playful joy,
 And I bethought me of the playful hare:
 A sweet and playful Highland girl,
 Of tuneful Caves and playful Waterfalls—
 The Lady, once her playful peer,
 The gift exalting, and with playful smile:
 Amid his playful peers?
 By playful smiles, (alas! too oft
 With playful zest of fancy, did we note
 And mingling playful with pathetic thoughts,
 And met again. Such playful sympathy,
 And in and all about that playful band,

Playfulness. Of infant playfulness with piteous looks
 Of playfulness, and love, and joy,
Playground. And rocks that were the play-ground of thy youth,
 A play-ground,—or a couch of rest;
 War's favourite playground, are with crimson stains

On the smooth playground of the village-school?
Play-house. See Country-playhouse.
 From play-house lustres thrown without reserve
Playing. Or playing wanton with the floating grass.
 Three good round years, for playing the fool here
 Or playing with the waterfall.
 This vagrant owl is playing here—
 Was playing with some inward bait.
 In white-sleeved shirts are playing; and the roar
 But they are ever playing,
 And the shepherd's pipe was playing,
Playmate. My playmate thou shalt be; and when the wind is cold
 Its playmate, rather say, its moving soul.
 Other playmate can I see.
 A tempting playmate whom we dearly loved.
Playmate's. To deck some slighted playmate's homely cheek.
Playmates. Till all the band of playmates wept together;
 But we were playmates, Luke: among these hills,
 Playmates in the sunny weather,
 While Anna's peers and early playmates tread,
 From kindred, friends, and playmates, to partake
Plays. Around him plays at will the virgin heart.

Plays—continued.

The time, when in our childish plays,
 He plays the expert ventriloquist;
 It plays not for them,—what matter? 'tis theirs;
 But gentle Nature plays her part
 The current as it plays
 Of an eye where feeling plays
 Like a hold Girl, who plays her agile pranks
 Thy courtesies, about these plays;
 Her sunshine plays upon thee!
 Plays false with our affections
 Plays, in the many games of life, that one
 And as round mountain-tops the lightning plays,
 Wide o'er the main a trembling lustre plays,
Plaything. Light plaything for the sportive wind
 Some quaint odd plaything of elaborate skill,
 Not more than a mere plaything, or a toy
 But, with the plaything at arm's length, he sets
 To turn a slender mill (that new-made plaything)
 Of play-thing fire-works, that on festal nights
Playthings. Playthings that keep the eyes awake
 The playthings, which her love designed for him,
 And sighed among its playthings. I withdrew

Playtime. From the first playtime of the infant world

Plea. Have heard my suit, and urged my plea at Court.
 And begged an alms with doleful plea
 What else can mean the visual plea
 The world which we inhabit? Better plea
 And wise reserve the plea of indolence—
 And boldly urged a general plea,
 Rests on a hollow plea of recompense;
 Yet why take refuge in that plea?—the fault,
 Enough, 'tis true—could such a plea excuse
 That will be deemed no insufficient plea
 The perturbation; listened to the plea;
 This universal plea in vain addressed,
 Be ready and unwearyed without plea

Plead. Ill can I hear that look—Plead for me,
 Oswald!
 Pours forth in shady groves, shall plead for me;
 Some intermingled notes that plead
 To old affections, had been heard to plead
 Plead for thy peace, thou beautiful romance
 Plead with the Sovereign sun for longer stay
 Nor plead in vain, if heauty could preserve,
 And, guilt escaping, passion then might plead
 Our bodily life, some plead, that life the shrine
 In long orations, which I strove to plead
 And the LORD'S OAK—would plead their several rights
 So would I plead for York; but long disgrace

Pleaded. Ruin upon the cause for which they pleaded.
 Thus wronged in woman's breast: in vain I pleaded—

Pleading. His pleading face, and feel his clasping arms,
 I would urge this moral pleading,
 Of pity pleading from the heart in vain—
 The pleading look the Lady viewed,
 Of wave-worn pebbles, pleading on the shore

Pleads. Pleads for him from the chimney-nook,
 So pleads the town's cathedral quire,
 As the high service pledges now, now pleads,
 But, when the Lady Catherine pleads,
 Or our infirm affections Nature pleads,

Pleas. With quickening impulse answered their mute pleas,
 In wicked pleas, were strong as demons now;
Pleasant. How pleasant, as the sun declines, to view
 'Tis pleasant near the tranquil lake to stray
 Chasing those pleasant dreams, the falling leaf
 No tree was there, no meadow's pleasant green,
 Into a narrow valley's pleasant scene
 And look upon the pleasant face of Nature—
 It was a pleasant pastime to construct
 Most tunable. In faith, a pleasant scheme;
 Oh! pleasant, pleasant were the days,
 Our pleasant home when spring began,
 Pleasant conviction fashed upon my mind
 When thou hadst quitted Esthwaite's pleasant shore,
 It is my pleasant heritage;
 We meet thee, like a pleasant thought,
 Thy pleasant course,—when day's begun
 Thou dost show thy pleasant face
 Ply the pleasant labour, ply!
 As if the morning's pleasant hour
 Like pleasant sunbeams shifting still
 At length a pleasant instantaneous gleam
 Their pleasant Indian town,
 "How pleasant" then he said, "it were
 And all the air is filled with pleasant noise of waters.

The pleasant season did my heart employ
 My whole life I have lived a pleasant thought,
 We will make merry in that pleasant bower.
 Made merriment within that pleasant bower.
 "Now, here is neither grass nor pleasant shade;

Pleased—continued.

And Shepherds were the men that pleased me first ;
 Have pleased me, seeking knowledge at that time,
 That would have pleased me in more quiet times ;
 Erewhile my tenebrous haunt ? It pleased me more
 Pleas'd in some open field to exercise
 And is half pleas'd with things that are amiss, Flattered the young, pleas'd with extremes, nor least.
 But through presumption ; even in pleasure pleas'd
 Ambitious projects, pleas'd me less ; I sought
 Pleas'd with some unpremeditated strains
 Into a second place, pleas'd to become
 We sat—we walk'd ; he pleas'd me with report
 With gracious smile, deliberately pleas'd,
 Or pleas'd their fancies, with the wares he brought.
 Not speaking much, pleas'd rather with the joy
 With half a harvest. It pleas'd Heaven to add
 Each with the other pleas'd, we now pursued
 And gardens interposed. Pleas'd with the sight,
 Pleas'd and pleas'd, he shared their simple sports,
 And pleas'd I look'd upon my grey-haired Friend,
 The antiquarian humour, and am pleas'd
 By the reflection of your pleasure, pleas'd
 Pleas'd to have been, contented not to be
 From discontent, indifferent, pleas'd to sit
 Pleas'd to perceive his own unshackled life,
 Yet so it pleas'd a fond, a vain, old Man,
 Of unprovoked enjoyment ; and is pleas'd
 —For me, I look'd upon the pair, well pleas'd :—
 " Much was I pleas'd," the grey-haired Wanderer
 said,
 You turn'd ; and yet more pleas'd have from your lips
 Was graceful, when it pleas'd him, smooth and still
 Of kindred import, pleas'd and satisfied—
 (And Heaven was pleas'd to accomplish the desire)
 Though with the silence pleas'd that here prevails,
 Confess'd the power of nature.—Pleas'd though sad,
 More pleas'd than sad, the grey-haired Wanderer ate ;
 To end my days ; well pleas'd was I to see
 Of rights to him ; but he remained well pleas'd
 Down on this spot, well pleas'd would be have seen
 Failed not to notice, inly pleas'd, and said :—
 Till the spectator, who awhile was pleas'd
 This ardent sally pleas'd the mild good Man
 We rose together : all were pleas'd ; but most
 The fancy pleas'd by spectacles unlook'd for Pleas'd to detect the dimpling stir of life,
 His guests, and make them jocund. They are pleas'd,
 To regulate my hopes. Pleas'd with the good,
 How pleas'd he is where thin and thinner grows
 Had soothed his ear while they were hidden : how pleas'd
 And fighting to the death, but I am pleas'd
Pleasing. See Sadly-pleasing, Self-pleasing.
 Of present pleasure, but with pleasing thoughts
 Wrapped in a fit of pleasing indolence,
 Pleasing remembrance of a thought foregone ;
 Of high astonishment and pleasing fear
 Ah, then, Belov'd ! pleasing was the smart,
 Set off her brightness with a pleasing shade
 Through all my frame the pleasing accents ran
 O ever pleasing Solitude,
 More pleasing, and whose character I deem
 Pleasing and pleas'd, he shared their simple sports,
 This pleasing fancy (cherished and upheld
 " Those pleasing works the Housewife's skill produced :
 Of pleasing lustre.—But no more of this ;
 Unknown and unknown. A pleasing thought
 Had learn'd the art of pleasing, and had now
 Scarcely a wish, but one bright pleasing thought,
 And lap in pleasing rest, and bear us on Pleasingly. Eight months ! rolled pleasingly away ;
 the ninth
Pleasurable. A pleasurable feeling of blind love
Pleasure. To sterner pleasure, where, by Uri's lake,
 That virtue languishes and pleasure falls
 A morbid pleasure nourished, tracing here
 And hope return'd, and pleasure fondly made Sight which, tho' lost at once, a gleam of pleasure shad
 And nothing to my mind a sweeter pleasure brought Attends your pleasure. We are ready— Sir !
 Which purported it was the royal pleasure
 I was the pleasure of all hearts, the darling
 Seemed to feast with head and ears ; and his tail with pleasure shook Pleasure on pleasure crowded in, each livelier than
 the last
 No pleasure now, and no desire
 Twins had they been in pleasure ; after strife
 Betty a drunken pleasure quaffs
 The pleasure which there is in life itself
 Lack any pleasure which a hoy can know
 If seen, and with like pleasure stirr'd
 Of common pleasure : beast and bird, the lamb,
 Devoured like pleasure ere it spreads

Pleasure—continued.

What pleasure through my veins you spread
 Of pleasure high and turbulent,
 A lowlier pleasure ;
 By myself a lonely pleasure,
 " Who but hails the sight with pleasure
 And there for gentle pleasure live ;
 Thus pleasure is spread through the earth
 Of her own exceeding pleasure !
 To stand or go is at their pleasure ;
 His eyes take pleasure in the road
 In that sweet mood when pleasure loves to pay
 And then my heart with pleasure fills,
 Of the pleasure it spreads through so thankful a band ;
 Of pleasure and of fear ;
 New objects did new pleasure give
 And built a house of pleasure in the dell
 Never to blend our pleasure or our pride
 A taste of this great pleasure, viewing
 No life is good, no pleasure long
 No life is good, no pleasure long
 Of unremembered pleasure : such, perhaps,
 Of present pleasure, but with pleasing thoughts-
 Into a sober pleasure ; when thy mind
 " Him only pleasure leads, and peace attends,
 Ask, for its pleasure, screen or canopy
 Lucida ! from domes of pleasure,
 Pour pleasure forth, and solaces that trace
 With more than vernal pleasure feeding,
 By pleasure running in his head,
 A thought received with languid pleasure !
 Ye waited then on my good pleasure ;
 There is a pleasure in poetic pains

Plighted. And, mocking its own plighted word,
Had freed his Realm, he plighted word
Be plighted, not to ease but sullen sloth,
And hope that kept with me her plighted troth.
Thy smile is sure, Thy plighted word
Severely honest, break no plighted trust.

Plinlimmon's. Bards, nursed on blue Plinlimmon's still abode
Pliny. And study Trajan as by Pliny seen ;
Headless how Pliny, musing here, survey'd Plod. I, with my fate contented, will plod on,
—An irksome drudgery seems it to plod on,
Plodded. Now, as he plodded on, with sullen clang
Plodding. Of labourer plodding for his daily gains,
Was never heard the plodding peasant's tread.
Plods. And plods through some wide realm o'er vale and height,
—The whistling swain that plods his ringing way
Who plods o'er hills and vales his road forlorn.

Plot. See Garden-plot, Grass-plot, Orchard-plot.
Appears a scanty plot of smiling green,
"A little croft we owned—a plot of corn,
To win belief, such as my plot requires.
Prime mover in a plot to damn his Victim
The plot to rid themselves, at any cost,
His body is at rest : there was a plot,
A hideous plot, against the soul of man :
Thy plot of grass is soft, and green as grass can be ;
This plot of orchard-ground is ours ;
Their cottage on a plot of rising ground
Call it of earth a small green plot,
"There is some plot against me laid ;"
Within the Sonnet's scanty plot of ground ;
A field or two of brighter green, or plot
And plot, and pant to overwhelm
And now, upon a chosen plot
Where now—within this spacious plot
As oft, 'mid some green plot of open ground,
Upon the public way. It was a plot
A plot of green-sward, seemingly preserved
But 'tis a plot of cultivated ground,
He spied the sheep upon a plot of grass,
To the green plot of pasture in the brook.

Plots. See Kerchief-plots.
Here, plots of sparkling water tremble bright . . .
Rest near your little plots of wheaten glade ;
Winds rustling over plots of unripe grain,
These plots of cottage-ground, these orchard-tufts,
Opposed to dark, deep plots of patient skill,
And, wherever they carry their plots and their wiles,
Rest, near their little plots of wheaten glade ;
Of these, thy chestnut woods, and garden plots

Plotting. Plotting new mischief—out again he leaps Plough. Then I'll yoke thee to my cart like a pony in the plough ;
Following his plough, along the mountain-side :
And ground fresh-cloven by the plough
Of an Imperial Castle, which the plough
Full soon the Aspirant of the plough,
Made blithe with plough and harrow :
Whether the whistling Rustic tend his plough Given though we seek them not, but, while we plough
Fearless of plough and scythe ; or darkling wren
Then, by the spade, or cleaving plough,
And he who guides the plough, or wields the crook,
Ye mariners, that plough your onward way,
The labours of the plough,
The pale Recluse—"I praise to the sturdy plough,
But herepined not. Though the plough was scared
The plough he guided, and the scythe he swayed ;
How much the mild Directress of the plough

Ploughboy. The Ploughboy is whooping—anon—anon :
The unlettered ploughboy pities when he wins
"Is this the whistling plough-boy whose shrill notes
Ploughed. A child is born or christened, a field ploughed,
Off have I seen, ere Time had ploughed my cheek,
The region that in hope was ploughed . . .
From early youth I ploughed the restless Main, Where Burns ploughed up the Daisy." Far and wide

Ploughing. And ploughing storm, the spirit of Nassau
Ploughs. While reapers strove, or busy ploughs
Ploughs her bold course across the wandering seas ; Ploughshare. Is gone—the ploughshare has been through the ground
Who with the ploughshare clove the barren moors,
That, by the unwhiling ploughshare, died to prove Ploughshares. With naked feet walked over burning ploughshares.
Ye ploughshares sparkling on the slopes !
Plover. 'Tis not a plover of the moors,
Plovers. While plovers screamed with tumult harsh Pluck. Pluck them, and another year
"Pluck that rose, it moves my liking,"
"Pluck it for me, gentle gardener,
To pluck, some flower or water-weed, too fair
'Tis hers to pluck the amaranthine flower . . .
Green twigs would pluck, as rapidly . . .

Pluck—continued.
Sauntering to pluck the strawberries wild unseem.
Plucked. Plucked while the church bells rang their earliest chime.
Who with bare hands would have plucked out thy heart . . .
Long blades of grass, plucked round him as he lay,
Hath plucked such foes, like weeds, from out the land ;
Till they were plucked together ; a blue flower
Had plucked up mercy by the roots, were glad
A calendar of flowers, plucked as they blow . . .
Plucks. Has roused the lion ; no one plucks the rose, Plumage. Rare beasts, and birds with plumage
bright ;
Look to thy plumage and thy life !—The roe . . .
Cage for a Bird of plumage bright . . .
And all the strength and plumage of thy youth,
Plumb. Yon snow-white torrent-fall, plumb down it drops
Plumbing. And yet, in plumbing the abyss for judgment,
Plume. Though he can neither stir a plume, nor shout ;
That simple crest, a heron's plume, is worn . . .
The cypress waves her sombre plume
A dark plume fetch me from yon blasted yew,
Of him who gloried in its nodding plume.
Toss in the fanning wind a humbler plume."
A glow-worm underneath a dusky plume
A high-prized plume which female Beauty wears . . .
Oh ! shame ! is this thy service boastful plume ?
Plumless. Thrilling the unweaponed crowd with plumless heads ?—
Plumes. With uninjured plumes !"
They tempt the sun to sport among their plumes ;
The white plumes of the floating swan ;
Glance on the conscious plumes touched here and there ?
Fine as the mother's softest plumes allow . . .
With nodding plumes, and lightly drest
Came two mute Swans, whose plumes of dusky white
Such was this Prisoner once ; and when his plumes
Plumes that might catch, but cannot keep, a stain ;
Scatter the colours from the plumes that bear
High as the pitch of their swift plumes
Blue-breeched, pink-vested, with high-towering plumes—
Bedded among rich plumes of tropic birds ;
I well remember that those very plumes,
Though with her plumes impaired. If they, whose souls
Still gleams upon their polish'd plumes—the bright
Plummet. The heaviest plummet of despair can go—
Plump. A rosy Man, right plump to see ?
Plumy. Her plumy mantle's living hues,
Where ravens spread their plumy vans, at ease !
Shrouded with willow-flowers and plumy fern.
How often I have marked a plumy fern
Plunder. What kind of plunder he was hunting now ;
On barbarous plunder bent . . .
Plundered. Like a poor bird—her plundered nest Plunderer. The eye of roving plunderer—for their need Plunderers. Moved we as plunderers where the mother-bird . . .
Plunge. Plunge, and fling back a spiteful ear,
She longed to ravish ;—shall she plunge, or climb
His arms, as swimmers use, and plunge—dread
thought,
For pastime plunge—into the "abrupt abyss,"
Or drops his anchor down with plunge profound ;
Plunge with the Russ embrown'd by Terror's breath,
They try all frolic motions ; flutter, plunge,
Plunged. Seeing, plunged into the torrent, . . .
Together plunged into the deep,
In plunged the Knight !—when on firm ground
Basked in the sun, and plunged and basked again
Plunged—'mid a gay and busy throng convened
Plunging. To instantaneous plunging in, deep Sea !
Pluto's. Deep under ground, in Pluto's cabinet,
Ply. He had repaired to ply a gainful trade :
Ply the pleasant labour, ply !
I saw them ply their harmless robberies,
Might hear his busy spade, which he would ply,
Nor unskill'd his darts to ply ;
Plying. Plying with gunpowder their trade,
Po. Of Rhine—or by the sweeping Po,
As Po was heard to give where Venice rose
Pocket. And in his pocket bring it home . . .
So from his pocket Peter takes
Pocketed. And pocketed the relic, in the guise

Poet. Shine, Poet! in thy place, and be content:—
Shine, Poet! in thy place, and be content.
Such as did once the Poet bless,
A Poet, one who loves the brooks
A silent Poet: from the solitude
Once hung, a Poet harbours now,
A poet could not but be gay,
The gentlest Poet, with free thoughts endowed,
"Ne'er in the breast of full-grown Poet
Brook! whose society the Poet seeks,
The sweet-souled Poet of the Seasons stood—
To trust a Poet in still musings bound.
And thick and feel as once the Poet felt.
A Poet!—He hath put his heart to school,
A Poet worthy of Rob Roy
What wonder if a Poet now and then,
Here pause: the poet claims at least this praise.
A young Ascetic—Poet, Hero, Sage,
But in his breast the mighty Poet bore
No meaner Poet than the whistling Blast,
And may thy Poet, cloud-born Stream! be free—
Which yet in thy behalf the Poet claims,
On this fair Mount, a Poet of your own,
Poet! that, stricken as both are by years,
Here often hast Thou heard the Poet sing
Than the industrious Poet, taught to prize,
Some future Poet meditate his lays;
And hither does one Poet sometimes row
And Ettrick mourns with her their Poet dead.
Thus was the tenderest Poet that could be,
The Poet, gentle creature as he is,
Yes, our blind Poet, who, in his later day,
O Friend! O Poet! brother of my soul,
Oh! where had been the Man, the Poet where,
A Poet only to myself, to men
A Poet, made me seek beneath that name,
And that the Genius of the Poet hence
Poet, or destined for a humbler name;
By mortal cares. Himself no Poet, yet
The poet fits it to his pensive lyre.
The Poet, fostering for his native land
But that the heaven-born poet must stand forth,
Vouchsafe sweet influence, while her Poet speaks
The Poet mutter his prelusive songs
Philosopher and Poet, in whose sight
Poetic. Embodied to poetic eyes,
Shines with poetic radiance as of old;
There is a pleasure in poetic pains

Of thought, that give the true poetic thrill;
A pure poetic Spirit—as the breeze,
Unhelped by the poetic voice 356

The tender charm of poetry and love.

More fit to animate the Poet's pen,

Nor deem the Poet's hope misplaced
A Poet's hand first shaped it; and the steps

And thankful to build up a Poet's praise.
More worthy of a poet's love, a hut
A Poet's history, may I leave untold
The Poet's soul was with me at that time;
To feed a Poet's tender melancholy
A spirit friendly to the Poet's task,
In harmony amid the Poet's world,
And consummation of a Poet's mind,
Felt, that the history of a Poet's mind
For honest worth one poet's trade is,
And looked at him as with a poet's eye,

Poets. Is, by innumerable poets, touched
Of youthful Poets, who among these hills
Poets, vain men in their mood!
We Poets in our youth begin in gladness;
And mighty Poets in their misery dead.
Then Poets fearlessly rehearsed
Which only Poets know; —'twas rightly said; 265 There is a pleasure*

Over the minds of Poets, young or old!
Kings, warriors, high-souled poets, saint-like sages,
That burns for Poets in the dawning east;
The old inventive Poets, had they seen,
By Poets loathed; from which Historians shrink!
Shall ye, by Poets even, be judged amiss!
The Poets, who on earth have made us heirs
And poets sage, through every age,
By poets in old time, and higher up
Of mighty Poets. Visionary power
With Poets ever. Mighty is the charm
Tales of the poets, as it made the heart
He loved the Poets, and, if now alive,
That Nature gives to Poets, now by thought
Worthy of poets who attuned their harps.
"Go to the Poets, they will speak to thee
That Poets, even as Prophets, each with each

His thoughts, the central point of all his joys.
I'll point him out;—a Maiden is his guide,
Looked at from every point of fear or hope,
Quick—to the point—if any untold crime
Point to his wife the blood-drops on his pillow!
Like the old Roman, on their own sword's point
Point after point did she discuss;
And now the other, to point out, perchance
Before us, on a point of jutting land,
And POINT RASH-JUDGMENT is the Name it bears.
To the last point of vision, and beyond,
Point not these mysteries to an Art
And, to a point of just relief, abate
The wished-for point was reached—but at an hour
Press the point home, or falter and demur, 19

Point—continued.

- Attain a point that showed the valley—stretched
A very hero till his point was gained,
Who from truth's central point serenely views
In aspect and forbidding, yet a point
The failure, if the Almighty, to this point
Shadow and substance kissing point to point
At the sword's point, visions conceived in love.
- Pointed. See Iron-pointed.
The pointed steeple peering forth from the centre
of the shade.
He pointed towards his dwelling-place, entreating
Sharper than the pointed thorn.
Who the first with pointed rays
A Telescope upon its frame, and pointed to the sky:
The pointed horns of my canoe;
Or rain-drop lingering on the pointed thorn.
- He pointed to a lovely Doe,
To the Horn Sir Eustace pointed
With his lance Sir Eustace pointed,
If e'er they pointed forth the blissful way
The road that pointed toward the chosen Vale.
For still we had hopes that pointed to the clouds,
Echoes and waterfalls, and pointed crags
Pointed upon occasion to the site
- Pointedly. Was pointedly addressed; and to the thoughts
- Pointing. And wild Impatience, pointing upward, showed
By pointing to the gliding moon on high.
And, pointing to a little child that lay
Then, pointing to the stones near which they stood,
And pointing with a feeble hand
Hung—head pointing towards the ground—
Hope, pointing to the cultured plain,
And drop thy pointing finger bright
Star-high, and pointing still to something higher;
In the pines pointing heavenward her beauty
austere;
Pyramid pointing to the stars,
"There!" said a Stripling, pointing with meet pride
By pointing to a shooting star on high:
Whence Danger leans, and pointing ghostly, joys
Uplifted, pointing to the starry sky,
Pointing towards a sweet-hriar, bade me climb
Let us proceed." Then, pointing with his staff
He yielded not; but, pointing to a slope
"There," said the Vicar, pointing as he spake,
Now pointing this way, and now that.—"Here flows,"
- Points. Or from high points of rock looked out for fanning gales;
With thousand thousand twinkling points of light;
Hunts, where his master points, the intercepted
flocks.
Than feathers clinging to their points of passion.
No leaves it has, no prickly points;
True to the kindred points of Heaven and Home!
- Points she to aught?—the bliss draws near,
Points heavenward, indicate the end and way.
With glittering finger points at nine.
With points of morning dew.
This Oak points out thy grave; the silent tree
Hunts, where he points, the intercepted flocks;
Is there a flower, to which he points with hand
Points have we all of us within our souls
Of character, in points of wit as broad,
These are the points," the Wanderer said, "on which
And spires whose "silent finger points to heaven;"
His own discoveries; or to favourite points
- Poise. On wings from broad and steadfast poise let loose by this reply
Or on thy head to poise a show
- Poised. See Self-poised, Well-poised.
Self-collected, poised, and steady
Poised like a weary cloud, in middle air
High poised—or as the wren that sings
That bound it to its native earth—poised high
Absolute stillness, poised aloft in air
Of pine-tree foliage poised in air, forth darts,
Vivid as fire; clouds separately poised.
- Poising. Poising your splendours high above the heads
- Poison. Sweet poison spreads along the listener's
veins
Poison, which not a frame of steel can brave,
And mix the poison, they themselves must drink.
Strong poison not a firm of steel can brave
Instil thy subtle poison, and inspire,
Poisoned. The world is poisoned at the heart.
What mean you?
Poisonous. At the same poisonous fountain! 'Twas an island
Grew many a poisonous weed;
Whence thickly-sprouting growth of poisonous weeds;
Poisons. I know the poisons of the shade;

Poisons—continued.

- And deadlier poisons in the chalice blend. 330 Ode: Thanks. 124
- Poker. And the tongs and the poker, instead of that horse
484 A plague* 3
- Polar. Shall lift his country's fame above the polar star!
In his bark the polar sea;
Thou speak'st—and lo! the polar Seas
Is she for tropic suns, or polar snow?
- Land 4
And temples flashing, bright as polar ice,
In polar ice, propitious winds have made
Floating or fixed of polar ice, allow.
Forth like a Polar summer: every word
Looked on the polar star, as on a guide
Like fields of ice rent by the polar wind,
Is known to all beneath the polar star,
- Pole. See May-pole.
No peasant lays upon his pole, to tell
Long is it as a barber's pole, or mast of little boat,
Lodged above the starry pole;
That host, when from the regions of the Pole
- Still loftier, and to climes more near the Pole.
The pole, from which thy name
To roam from heaven to heaven, from pole to pole,
Beyond the seas, and to the farthest pole,
Polemia. "Mid clouds enveloped of polemic dust,
Poling. Sounding with grappling irons and long poles,
With chattering monkeys dangling from their poles,
Policies. He knows the policies of foreign lands;
Polity. For matched with these shall policy prove vain,
Polish. By breezeless air to smoothest polish, yield
The final polish of the Plasterer's hand.
Polished. Around its polished strings;
Of the sea-beach, when, polished with nice care,
We hissed along the polished ice in games
Polished in arts, and in punctilio versed;
Still gleams upon their polish'd plumes—the bright
POLLICE. There, too, ere wiles and politic dispute
Glory, and triumph. Yet with politic skill
Polity. For Polity was then too strong—
Of polity which wise men venerate,
Rash Polity begin her maniac dance,
While polity and discipline were weak,
To reason well of polity or law,
In arguments of civil polity,
Of civil polity, and early trained
The powers of civil polity were given."
- Pollard. The forehead of a pollard oak,
Through the stiff lance-like shoots of pollard ash, Polluted. To soothe and cleanse, not madden and pollute!
Polluted. See Too-long-polluted.
Stained and polluted, brightened as they roll,
Her fields of carnage, and polluted air.
Pollution. Of foul pollution—The whole visible world
Pollution tainted all that was most pure.
Pomp. Blue pomp of lakes, high cliffs and falling floods,
Winding in ordered pomp their upward way,
Pleased, as she moves, her-pomp of clouds to fold
To see a planet's pomp and steady light
Odious to me the pomp of regal court,
In pomp of mist or pomp of snow,
Is nothing of that radiant pomp so good as we have here?
When they in pomp depart
Be present at his setting; or the pomp
And, though past pomp no changes can restore,
In that that fades not; everlasting snows;
That, not for Fancy only, pomp hath charms;
Would hasten, that such pomp may float on high?
Can pomp and show allay one heart-born grief?
Over the pomp and beauty of a scene
With Yarrow winding through the pomp
Streamed with the pomp of a too-credulous day.
Hath flowed, "with pomp of waters, unwithstood,"
An intermingled pomp of vale and hill,
By a visual pomp, and by the tie
(Whose tranquil pomp and spotless purity
Who knows not pomp, who needs not pelf;
Of splendor unextinguished, pomp unscathed,
The pomp, the glory of that hour
And mausolean pomp? Yet here they stand
Nor in broad pomp, or courtly state;
The monumental pomp of age
To see her in her pomp arrayed—
Of sacred home;—with pomp are others gored
She whose high pomp displaced, as story tells,
An intermingling of Heaven's pomp is spread
The power is merged, the pomp a grave has found.
Cathedral pomp and grace, in apt accord
Whose day departs in pomp, returns with smiles—
In pomp foreseen by her creative eye,
And how he rules the pomp of light and shade;
Are trivial pomp and city noise,
Issuing in pomp, shall come to judge mankind.

Poor—continued.

Sat the poor girl, and forth did send
 "It will not, will not rest!—Poor creature, can it be
 And the poor Boy was busier still, with work of anxious heed.
 Where he, in his poor self so weak, by Providence
 was placed.
 But the poor ragged Thing whose ways my human heart had warmed.
 "Poor Shepherd of the naked Down, a favoured
 lot is thine,
 Alas the dream, to thee, poor Boy! to thee from whom it flowed,
 Poor Walter! whether it was care that spurred
 him
 Was sadly crossed.—Poor Leonard! when we parted,
 I buried him, poor Youth, and there he lies!
 There is a change—and I am poor;
 Of my fond heart, hath made me poor.
 My poor forsaken Child, if I
 They cried, "what to the poor is due?"
 My Son, if thou be humbled, poor,
 She begged an alms, like one in poor estate;
 To a poor neighbouring cottage; as I found,
 To my poor heart, if thou wouldst be
 These tears—and my poor idle tongue.
 There's none to help poor Susan Gale;
 Oh! then for the poor Idiot Boy!
 Now, though he knows poor Johnny well,
 To comfort poor old Susan Gale.
 But Betty, poor good woman! she,
 Poor Susan moans, poor Susan groans;
 Poor Susan moans, poor Susan groans;
 "Oh God forbid!" poor Susan cries.
 That God poor Susan's life would spare,
 At poor old Susan then she sailed,
 Poor Betty, in this sad distemper,
 And I have lost my poor dear Boy,
 Poor Betty! it would ease her pain
 To comfort poor old Susan Gale.
 Poor Betty now has lost all hope,
 What can be done? Where every one is poor,
 And left estates and monies to the poor,
 Honour ascends among the humblest poor,
 And what if my poor cheek be brown?
 But he, poor man! is wretched made;
 And in thy iteration, "WHIP POOR WILL!"
 Thus threatened a poor Briar-rose,
 Poor pilot I, by snows confounded,
 Poor Susan has passed by the spot, and has heard Poor in estate, of manners base, men of the multitude,
 Deserted his poor Bride, and Ruth
 To gather leeches, being old and poor:
 And this poor Thorn they clasp it round
 To bury this poor Thorn for ever.
 Does this poor Woman go?
 Poor Martha! on that woeful day
 For what became of this poor child
 With drops of that poor infant's blood;
 The poor Hart toils along the mountain-side;
 For shelter, and a poor man's bread!
 Love had he found in huts where poor men lie;
 A nobler counsellor than my poor heart.
 How poor, were human life!
 Wide open for the scattered Poor.
 O'er this poor family,
 On two poor legs, toward my stone-table
 Groaned the poor Beast—alas! in vain;
 The poor Ass staggered with the shock;
 "I'm helping this poor dying brute."
 And he whom the poor Ass had lost,
 Of this poor miserable Ass!
 In pity to this poor drowned man.
 Like a poor bird—her plundered nest
 And this poor slave who loved him well,
 But he hath said, poor gentle wight!
 "This poor man never but for me
 Are busy with poor Peter Bell;
 Thought Peter, 'tis the poor man's home.
 The poor Ass standing by her side,
 Poor Peter from a thousand causes
 She calls the poor Ass by his name,
 Oh! would, poor beast, that I had now
 And many years did this poor Ass,
 The very flowers are sacred to the Poor,
 That the poor Harp distempered music yields
 From the poor! yet shall kind Heaven protect
 The poor old Man is greater than he seems:
 Whence the poor unregarded Favourite, true
 A poor old Dame will bless them for the boon:
 Thou "poor Inhabitant below,"
 For thou wert still the poor man's stay;
 The poor man's heart, the poor man's hand;
 A poor blind Highland Boy,
 Than did the poor blind Boy,
 Woe to the poor blind Mariner!
 Which he, poor Child, had studied well;
 She saw her poor blind Boy.

Poor—continued.

And welcomed the poor Child.
 Of such poor Instruments, with thoughts sublime
 Could they, poor Shepherds, have preserved an aim,
 Which shall not fall, though poor men cleave with pride.
 That guards the lowliest of the poor.
 But love, as Nature loves, the lonely Poor;
 What poor abodes the hellloom hide,
 And this poor verse, and worthier lays,
 While the Poor gather round, till the end of time.
 —"Even these poor eight of mine would stem—"
 To hide her poor afflicted head?
 Flow to the poor, and freedom to the slave;
 (Like a poor bird entangled in a snare)
 Not in the breathing-times of that poor slave.
 Poor as thou art. A welcome sacrifice
 For poor to Sea I went, and poor I still remain.
 Though poor to Sea I went, and poor I still remain.
 Though poor, yet rich, without the wealth of books,
 Eying the sea's blue depths. Poor Bird! even so
 The poor, the lonely, herdsman's joy and pride.
 Are poorest of the poor.
 At which the poor old Man so long
 Has seduced the poor fool from his winter retreat,
 Led, Heaven knows how! to this poor sod:
 Poor Matthew, all his frolics o'er,
 Said to his servile Courtiers,—"Poor the reach,
 For the poor Many, measured out by rules
 Soon shall the Rich be levelled down—the Poor
 Where one poor Plane-tree, having as it might
 Not oftentimes, I trust, as we, poor brute!"
 From his poor inch or two of daisied sod?
 Poor Robin is yet flowerless; but how gay
 Poor Robin as a sure and crafty friend,
 When he could creep about, at will, though poor
 Though poor and destitute of friends thou art,
 Old Goody Blake was old and poor;
 Might see how poor a hut she had.
 All day she spun in her poor dwelling:
 Two poor old Dames, as I have known,
 But she, poor Woman! housed alone.
 And made her poor old bones to ache,
 And sprang upon poor Goody Blake.
 "Poor Harry Gill is very cold."
 As in a cloister. Yet the grateful Poor
 One is a Woman, a poor earthly sister,
 A poor Man's counsel take;
 To end life here like this poor deer,
 But take it in good part:—alas! the poor
 "Now this poor Widow waiteth all that night
 Alas, poor Book! for thy unworthiness,
 At distance still the same. Poor Traveller!
 —But of the poor man ask, the abject poor!
 No—man is dear to man; the poorest poor
 For Adam was simple in thought; and the poor,
 Poor winter look fine in such strange masquerade.
 I learned that one poor moment can suffice
 And mourn, thou poor half-witted Boy!
 For one poor moment's space to Thee,
 When the poor heart has all its joys resign'd,
 For thy poor babes that, hurrying from the door,
 "Poor victim! no idle intruder has stood
 But for the poor dear sake of one
 For this poor crawling helpless wretch
 But the poor Cripple was alone
 Seemed friends, poor simple schoolboys, now hung round.
 To a poor scholar!"—when illustrious men,
 And poor misguided Shame, and witless Fear,
 Of trivial pleasures was a poor exchange
 Commended him as a poor friendless man,
 Poor earthly casket of immortal verse,
 Strung like a poor man's heifer at its feed,
 Pity the tree.—Poor human vanity,
 Not rich one moment to be poor for ever;
 Eyed the poor babe with love unutterable.
 For, born in a poor district, and which yet
 With the most noble, but unto the poor
 A poor mistake and bewildered offering,—
 A virtuous household, though exceeding poor!
 Hath blessed poor Margaret for her gentle looks,
 Sank down, as in a dream, among the poor;
 And of the poor did many cease to be,
 Of the poor innocent children: "Every smile,"
 I thought of that poor Woman as of one
 Nor how to speak to her. Poor Wretch! at last
 To that poor Woman!—so familiarly
 The same sad question. Meanwhile her poor Hut
 How the poor brute's condition, forced to run
 And, sometimes—where the poor man held dispute
 With one poor shepherd, far from all the world!
 And he too hath his comforter. How poor,
 "That poor Man taken hence to-day," replied
 That the poor Sufferer had escaped with life.
 If from my poor retirement ye had gone
 Erect himself, how poor a thing is man!
 Of a poor lamb—left somewhere to itself,
 That poor men's children, they, and they alone,
 Of his poor hut, or on the mountain-top,

Poor—continued.

Which his poor skill could make, his fancy fetched,
 Beyond their own poor natures and above
 That one, poor, finite object, in the abyss . . .
 And rich and poor, and young and old, rejoice
 Come," said the Matron, "to our poor abode;
 And pride of opportunity made poor;
 Perhaps yon loose sods cover, the poor Pensioner
 And burthensome; and lastly, that poor few
 Of poor humanity's afflicted will "Wish could be ours that you, for such poor gain,
 To a poor dissolute Son, her only child.
 Of the fresh shower, but of poor Ellen's tears
 To grant, or be received; while that poor bird—
 When that poor Child was born. Upon its face
 Like a poor singing-bird from distant lands;
 See him a constant preacher to the poor!
 Which her poor treasure-house is content to owe,
 Behind yon hall, a poor and rugged wild,
 Of the poor calling which my youth embraced
 Of a poor brotherhood who walk the earth
 For grateful converse: and to these poor men
 Of some poor hamlet, rapidly produced
 How art thou blighted for the poor Man's heart!
 Which the poor broom no sooner fell
 You know where my poor bones shall be, . . .
 Drive one of these poor creatures miles and miles,
 Your vassal necks how poor the garter's pride!
Poorest. From the old and the young, from the poorest; and there!
 Proud be this Land! whose poorest huts are halls
 Are poorest of the poor.
 No—man is dear to man; the poorest poor
 Your very poorest rich in peace of thought
Poorly. "Poorly provided, poorly followed,"
 And wayworn Wanderers, poorly fed,
Pope. Happy is he, who, caring not for Pope,
 And 'tis the Pope that welds it:—whether rough
 The vacillating Bondman of the Pope
 And seal up all the gains of France, a Pope Popinjay. Kept crying, "Farewell!—farewell, Popin-jay!"
Popinjays. By chattering popinjays; the inner heart
Poplar. And swings above the roof the poplar tail.
Poplars. And while those lofty poplars gently wave Poppy. The wild rose, and the poppy, and the night-
 shade
 Gathering green weeds to mix with poppy flower,
 While rose and poppy, as the glow-worm fades,
Popular. Of popular applause, I now perceived
 Not on the breath of popular applause . . .
 Of popular reason, long mistrusted, freed
 With those of Greece compared and popular Rome,
 From popular government and equality;
 Thither his popular talents he transferred;
 A popular equality reigns here.
Populous. No more: for now into a populous plain
 Her rivers populous with gliding life;
Porch. The shady porch ne'er offering a cool seat
 There, to the porch, helike with jasmine bound
 The roses to the porch which they entwine:
 The cluster round the porch, and the folk
 And smote off his head on the stones of the porch
 Porch, door-way, or kirk-pillar; and of youths,
 The honeysuckle, crowding round the porch,
 The corner stones, on either side the porch,
 And the wild birds that gather round my porch.
 Around the porch, and seems, in that trim place,
 Whose place of rest is near yon ivied porch.
 The pillared porch, elaborately embossed;
Pore. Whatever be the cause, 'tis sure that they who pry and pore
 Our minds shall drink at every pore . . .
 A shadow, a delusion, ye who pore
 That we should pore, and dwindle as we pore,
 Of their long twilight, pore upon her hook Pored. Pored, watched, expected, listened, spread my thoughts
Poring. While poring Antiquarians search the ground
Porlezza's. Porlezza's verdant lawn.
Porringer. I take my little porringer,
 Demure with porringer and plate
Port. For me—farthest from earthly port to roam
 Some, perched on stems of stately port
 A nun demure of lowly port;
 Erect his port, and firm his going;
 Of contemplation, the calm port
 Ere thrice the Moon into her port had steered,
 Of rainbow colours; One whose port was bold,
 Into a natural port, a tideless sea,
 Her port she could not win it,
 Turn into port; and, reckless of the gale,
 Fresh gales to waft them to the far-off port;
 Alike to body and to mind; his port,
 The wished-for port to which my course was bound.
 Within a port of rest had lodged me safe;
 The form, port, motions, of this Cottage-girl
 Is that the countenance, and such the port,

Port—continued.

Cordially greeted. Graceful was her port:
Portal. He rose, and to the ruin's portal went,
 He through the portal takes his silent way,
 Who, through the portal of one moment's guilt,
 Lay hushed; till—through a portal in the sky
 Who through the silent portal arch
 The dark cave's portal gliding by,
Portals. Through the year's successive portals;
 The portals of the dawn; all Paradise
 Between the portals of the shadowy rocks
 As chanced, the portals of the sacred Pile
Portended. And the waves rose, and sky portended danger.
Portending. Portending ruin to each haleful rite Portent. Whence these opprobrious leaves of dire portent?
Portentious. Portentious through her old woods'
 trackless bounds,
 A burning of portentous red;
 O matchless perfidy! portentous lust
 But the live scales of a portentous nature;
 All steeped in this portentous light!
 Portentious fellowship. Her silver car,
 Portentious change when History can appear
 Assumed a voice of deep portentous sound,
 Nay brighter shone, by this portentous gloom Porter. The Porter sits down on the weight which he bore;
 Like a gaunt shaggy Porter forced to wait
 Served as stable-boy, errand-boy, porter, and groom;
Porter's. Through hours of silence, till the porter's bell,
Portion. A final portion from his father's hand;
 A portion of the tale may well be left
 A portion of his patrimonial fields.
 On that best portion of a good man's life,
 Should be thy portion, with what healing thoughts
 Thy lot, O Man, is good, thy portion fair!
 And, through the sunny portion of the year,
 Curses are his dire portion, scorn, and hate,
 A portion of God's peace.
 From wolves your portion of His chosen sheep:
 A portion of the gift is won;
 Therein a portion claim.
 How faint their portion of his vital beams!
 "This portion of the river of my mind
 I cannot say what portion is in truth
 That portion of my story I shall leave
 In this late portion of my argument,
 So, did a portion of that spirit fall
 That were our daily portion when we first
 And some small portion of his eloquent speech,
 The better portion of his time; and there
 The portion gave of coarse but wholesome fare
 And will possess my portion in content!
 Can portion out his pleasures, and adapt,
 To me some portion of a kind regard;
 Shines with some portion of that heavenly lustre
 Hath issued any portion of the joy
 Some portion of its human history
Portioned. Thy scanty breathing-time is portioned out Portions. The last and later portions of this gift Portland. Near Portland lighthouse in a lonesome creek,
Portrait. Go, faithful Portrait! and where long hath knelt
 I gaze upon a Portrait whose mild gleam
 Domestic Portrait! have to verse consigned type,

Portraits. Your portraits still may reach the heart
 (Even like their persons in their portraits clothed
 For, in such portraits, though a vulgar face
Portraiture. Like portraiture, from loftier source, endears
 With thy memorial flower, meek Portraiture!
 This portraiture is sketched. The great, the good, Portraitures. Their Portraitures, their stone-work glimmers, dyed
 Or portraitures for special use designed,
Portray. Who rashly strove thy Image to portray?
Portrayed. See Pourtrayed.
 Is it a gallows there portrayed?
 All praise the Likeness by thy skill portrayed;
 Objects immense portrayed in miniature,
 Broods, visibly portrayed, the mystic Dove,
 Hath here portrayed with Nature's happiest grace
 Where Christian Martyrs stand in hues portrayed,
 Portrayed with happiest pencil, not untrue
 On many a staring countenance portrayed
 Have been portrayed, I guess not; but it chanced
 Of living nature, cannot be portrayed
Portrays. See Pourtrays.
 A Pastor such as Chaucer's verse portrays;
Ports. And navies perish in their ports;
 By each new upstart notion? In the ports
 Of keels that rest within her crowded ports,

- Possessed. See Country.
 Possessed the country, far and near;
 What we possessed, and now is wholly thine!
 Youth should be awed, religiously possessed
 The worth I knew of powers that I possessed,
 Possessed me for my inner eye had seen
 A precious treasure had I long possessed,
 The money he possessed, and hoard up more,
 Of Nature, in that knowledge I possessed
 And unrelentingly possessed by thirst
 Have been possessed by similar desire;
 Quiet and lorded over and possessed
 How far so'er transported and possessed,
 Was his existence oftentimes possessed.
 Had filled with plenty, and possessed in peace,
 Two lovely Children—all that they possessed!
 Our housewife knew full well what she possessed!
 I knew a Scottish Peasant who possessed
 And prompt to exhibit all that he possessed
 In which the Scottish Laird had long possessed
 Possessed like outskirts of some large domain,
 Possessed of health, and strength, and peace of mind;
 The Vale is by a mighty sound possessed'd.
Possesses. The lowliest flower possesses in its place;
 An insight that in some sort he possesses,
Possession. Love, the treasure worth possessing Possession. One small possession lacked not power,
 E'er took possession of her cell
 This Walk, his loved possession, to the care
 For permanent possession, better fruits,
 An empire, a possession,—ye whom time
 Possession of the faculties,—the peace
 And in serene possession of himself,
 Nor could be given, possession of the good
 I cannot take possession of the sky Possessions. And its possessions, what it has and craves,
 Abused, as all possessions are abused
 "Possessions vanish, and opinions change,
 Frail life's possessions, that even they whose fate
 Of his possessions that which most he prized;
 Possessions have I that are solely mine,
Possessors. Human and brute, possessors undisturbed Posset. See Possessed.
 Thus, duties rising out of good posset Possible. Should yet be true? Would it were possible!
 Is it possible? One thing you noticed not:
 I saw that every possible shape of action
 Of possible sublimity, whereto
 Is possible, the unity of man,
Post. See Guide-post.
 Back to our post, and strip the Scottish Foray
 Up to the tavern-door we post;
 And he must post without delay
 With brightness! leaving her to post along,
 Children, thus post ye over vale and height
 Have stiffened them, maintain their post;
 Post forward all, like creatures of one kind,
 Fetch, ye that post o'er seas and lands,
 Went Norton, and resumed his post
 (Unbashful dwarfs each glittering at his post)
 Post seaward,—what impedes the tardy nights.
Post-boy. The post-boy drove with fierce career,
 The post-boy, when his rattling wheels o'er take Posterity. Thy matchless worth to all posterity.

Posts. While to the town she posts away;
Posture. In moody posture there he sate,
 That posture, and the look of filial love
 Rise from that posture,—and in concert move
 Him from that posture did the Sexton rouse;

Pot. See Fire-pot-nursling.
Potency. Called forth by wondrous potency
Potent. Of magic potent over sun and star,
 Most potent when mists veil the sky,
 Potent was the spell that bound thee
 Or to repay the potent Charm,
 Too potent over nerve and blood,
 "A potent wand doth Sorrow wield;
 Yet, potent Spirits! well I know,
 Announce a season potent to renew,
 "A watchword was pronounced, a potent sound—
 Provoke all potent symphonies to raise
 With thrilling word, and potent sign
 A potent vassalage, to fight
 But Gospel-truth is potent to allay
 Increasing multitudes. The potent call
 A mystery potent human love to endow,
 And when its potent branches, wide out-thrown,
 Inspired—works potent over smiles and tears.
 How potent a mere image of her sway;
 Most potent when impressed upon the mind
 However potent their first shock, with me
 Imagination, potent to inflame
 The tendency, too potent in itself,
 And mid paternal sway. The potent shock
 Wielding her potent enginery to frame
Potentate. He sits a more exalted Potentate,
 Follow this wondrous Potentate. Be true

Potter. Coming on with a terrible potter,
 And, without making a potter,
Pottage. Each with a mess of pottage and skimmed milk
 By the same fire to boil their pottage,
Potter. Of Peter Bell the Potter."
 —"A Potter, Sir, he was by trade,"
 'Twas Peter Bell the Potter.
Potter's. Earth crouches, the elements are potter's clay,
Potters. Their panniered train a group of potters goad,
 "Rough potters seemed they, trading soberly Pounded. Pounded,—and the Dove, which from its ruthless beak
Pouncing. Ere, pouncing like a ravenous bird of prey,
 The grassy rock-encircled Pound
 To drive him back, and pound him, like a stray, Pounds. Knocked here—and knocked there, pounds still adding to pounds.
Pour. All day the floods a deepening murmur pour:
 Whence thou dost pour upon the world a flood
 The birds pour forth their souls in notes
 Pour pleasure forth, and solaces that trace
 Pour out indulgence still, in measure
 He can pour forth his spirit. In heaven above,
 Free to pour forth their common thankfulness,
 Happy the crew who this have felt, and pour
 May He pour round you, from worlds far above
 All day the floods a deeper murmur pour,
 Pour forth that day my soul in measured strains
 And, by these thoughts admoished, will pour out
 Pour rapture, tenderness, and hope,—my theme
 Pour forth his meditations, and descaut
Poured. He turned, while rain poured down smoking on every side.
 He poured rewards and honours on the good;
 Poured through the echoing hills around
 Be thanks poured out to Him whose hand bestows,
 Such beauty hath the Eternal poured
 For praise and ceaseless gratulation, poured
 Shall praises be poured forth, and thanks ascend, Thop, who upon those snow-clad Heights hast poured
 Poured from his vaults of everlasting snow;
 Rest from enjoyment only. Thanks poured forth
 Poured down the hills, a choral multitude!
 The turbaned Race are poured in thickening swarms
 Poured forth, while summer suns at distance shine,
 Charged with rich words poured out in thought's defence;
 Poured from the bosom of thy Church, St. Bees!
 And poured out truth in words by thoughtful love
 Then sip'd the bowl whence she the wine had pour'd
 From sources inexhaustible, poured forth
 One of a festive circle, I poured out
 Poured from his fount of Abyssinian clouds
 Poured out (saluted by that quickening breeze
 Poured forth harangues, how sadly out of place!
 Poured out for all the early tenderness
 Poured forth his aspirations, and announced
 Poured forth with fervour in continuous stream,
 Was smitten, and poured forth a quenching stream,
 And even the touch, so exquisitely poured
 Joy be poured, and thou the giver,

Pouring. See Forth-pouring.
 Thus Hope, first pouring from her blessed horn
 Pouring out praise to the almighty Giver,
 Open their hearts before Thee, pouring out
 And pouring deeper blue to Æther's bound;
 Pouring above his head its radiance down
Pourings. See Out-pourings.
Pours. And pours a deeper blue to Æther's bound;
 On me such bounty Summer pours,
 Pours forth his song in gushes,
 Pours forth in shady groves, shall plead for me;
 The sweat pours down from Peter's face,
 And pours forth streams more sweet than Castaly.
 Pours forth his bounty like the day doth cheer,
 Pours on the surface of the turbid Stream!
 Of many-coloured life that Fortune pours,
 Pours out his choicest beverage high and higher
 To cheer the Itinerant on whom she pours
 Till pours the wakeful bird her solemn strains Pourtrayed. See Portrayed.
 Collaterally pourtrayed, as in mock fight,
 A specimen pourtrayed with faithful hand.
Pourtrays. See Portrays.
 Yet my tancy has pierced to his heart, and pour-
 trays
Poverty. A thousand miles. I am in poverty,
 Dire poverty assailed;
 And perish all of poverty,
 Solitude, pain of heart, distress, and poverty.
 Of poverty and wrong,
 To poverty, and grief, and disrespect,
 For discontent, and poverty, and crime;
 In liveried poverty.
 Pride, anger, mischief, poverty, and madness.
 In penniless poverty. But now to school.
 Which might not be withstood, that poverty
 Their power or weakness, wealth or poverty,
 And poverty and labour in excess
 Busy in solitude and poverty.
 The keen, the wholesome, air of poverty,
 And poverty brought on a petted mood
 More plainly still, that poverty and grief
 It seemed the home of poverty and toil,
 Beyond all poverty how destitute,
 From childhood up, the ways of poverty;
 Of vagrant poverty; from rifted barns
Powdered. The ground was green, with daisy powderdered over;
 Powdered like riny trees, when frost is keen.
Powdery. Her feet disperse the powdery snow,
Power. See Sister-power.
 Yet still, the sport of some malignant power,
 Where with loud voice the power of water shakes
 Whither is fled that Power whose frown severe
 Yet are thy softer arts with power induced
 Itself all trembling at the torrent's power.
 —And sure there is a secret Power that reigns
 An unknown power connects him with the dead:
 —Yet hast thou found that Freedom spreads her
 power
 Crowed with ear-piercing power till then unheard;
 Well may we wonder he has gained such power
 Has given him power to teach: and then for courage
 Have power to yield? perhaps he looks elsewhere.—
 Has left a power of riches; and I say it,
 External praises on the power that saved her!—
 His Power is this way tending. It befits us,
 Which haunts this Oswald, Power is life to him.
 He was forsaken? There is a power in sounds:
 The tale was spread abroad; my power-at once
 That waking life had never power to give.
 Why should a thrust of the arm have such a power,
 God has given a kindlier power
 That Cross he now was fastening there, as the surest power and best
 Just as those final words were penned, the sun broke out in power,
 And a steadfast outward power
 The power of speech. Both left the spot in silence;
 And stripped of power! me, feeble, destitute,
 Far as in power the eagle doth the worm;
 Down would he sit; and without strength or power
 What power is in his wildest scream,
 Have power to shake me as they pass;
 To imprint a kiss that lacked not power to spread
 Careless of books, yet having felt the power
 Appeared, and spiritual presence gained a power
 Hath power to part the Spirits of those who love
 In power of wing and never-wearied voice.
 Have I derived from thy sweet power
 Help, as if from fairy power;
 "Mark him, how his power he uses,
 Gazing she feels its power beguile
 Hath power to injure mine.
 (Sentient by Grecian sculpture's marvellous power),
 Has it in her power again:
 And Reason's godlike Power be proud to own?
 His bones, and those of all his Power,

Power—continued.

Had for their joys a killing power.
 Motley accoutrement, of power to smile
 Shall feel an overseeing power.
 He fills with his power all their hearts to the brim—
 No, no, this cannot be;—men thirst for power and majesty!
 Lyre! though such power do in thy magic live
 A time to overrule the power
 And one night's diminution of her power,
 When our Shepherd in his power,
 While with an eye made quiet by the power
 Of harmony, and the deep power of joy,
 Nor harsh nor grating, though of ample power
 Was princely Dion, in the power,
 Hath stained the robes of civil power with blood,
 As variously thy power was shown,
 For the power of hills is on thee,
 Of Britain's calm felicity and power!
 Pure as herself—(song lacks not mightier power)
 What spirit-stirring power it gained
 Suddenly raised by some enchanter's power,
 Her darkness splendour gave, her silence power,
 And is she brought within the power
 The double note, as if with living power,
 Power, glory, empire, as the world itself,
 Nonrish the hope that memory lacks not power
 Of power ethereal and celestial grace,
 That voice of Freedom, in its power
 And with a soul of power.
 Twined round him by demonic power,
 And if I had the power to say
 To how to some transforming power,
 A stifling power compressed his frame,
 A gentle, a relaxing, power!
 Praised be the Art whose subtle power could stay
 From her own overflow, what power sedate
 But in chaste hearts, uninfluenced by the power
 That I may have the power to sing of Thee,
 But how could I forget thee? Through what
 power,
 And let my spirit in that power divine
 Rejoice, as, through that power, it ceased to mourn.
 Imagination is that sacred power,
 These might thy Minions crown, and chant thy
 power,
 While health, power, glory, from their height decline,
 Yet did the glowing west with marvellous power
 Day's mutable distinctions.—Ancient Power!
 At thy meek bidding, shadowy Power! brought forth:
 The power of Merlin, Goddess! this should be:
 Such power possess the family of floods
 That neither feeds nor wastes its vital power
 Like them. The unguilty Power pursues his way,
 In power, where once he trembled in his weakness;
 Now, for your shame, a Power, the Thirst of Gold,
 Power in my breast, wings growing in my mind,
 His power survives.
 Its power was felt; and while my eye
 Youthful as Spring.—Shade of departed Power,
 That they should take, who have the power,
 That there is One who scorns thy power—
 When maddening Power her bolts had hurled,
 Brought low a Power, which from its home
 Quakes—conscious of thy power;
 A seemly reverence may be paid to power;
 True Power doth grow on; and her rights are these.
 A span of waters; yet what power is there!
 Strength to the brave, and Power, and Deity;
 And give us manners, virtue, freedom, power.
 And by the power, of wrong.
 All power was given her in the dreadful trance;
 And hable of her pastime!—On, dread Power!
 O joyless power that stands by lawless force!
 Is there a power that can sustain and cheer
 Oak of Guernica! Tree of holier power —That he has power to inflict what we lack strength to bear.
 The power of Armies is a visible thing,
 But who the limits of that power shall trace
 —That power, that spirit, whether on the wing
 Gathered his power, a manifest ally;
 With starry lustre; yet had power to throw
 Had power as lofty actions to achieve
 The power of retribution once was given:
 Of irksome change, or threats from saddening
 power.
 —Thy power and majesty,
 That less than power unbounded could not tame
 Not all the light of earthly power could fill;
 Lodge it within us!—as the power of light
 Shall lack not power the "meeting soul to pierce!"
 (Streamed from the west) as with a robe of power:
 O gentle Power of darkness! these mild hues;
 To a voice of thrilling power.
 Fling the shadow of thy power,
 With tutelary power,
 And all-controlling power.

Power—continued.

Rest where thy course was stayed by Power divine!

Who triumphed o'er diluvian power!—and yet Power must resolve to cleave to it through life, Of the changed City's long-departed power, Destroy the ideal Power within, 'twere done Assent is power, belief the soul of fact.

Yet why prolong this mournful strain?—Fallen Power, Rapt though He were above the power of sense, Consorted, Others, in the power, the faith, And the changes it brings had no power to unbind. Rapt above earth by power of one fair face, Parting; the casual word had power to reach Yet glorious Art the power of Time defies, Though on her brow a sign of heathen power "Though vast thy power, thy words are weak," She guards thee, ruthless Power! who would not space By ghostly power,—but Time's usurping hand Of power usurped; with proclamation high, Enough, if something from our hands have power Hast shed the power of Yarrow. Spirits of Power, assembled there, complain For kindred Power departing from their sight; His power, his beauty, and his majesty. One small possession lacked not power.

Celestial Power, as much with love as light? Of power that perishes, and rights that fade. Ensign of civil power, weapon of war, Nor will the Power we serve, that sacred Power, Yet in this moral Strain a power may live, The bells ring loud with gladsome power; Is standing with a voice of power. Stood He, whose arm yet lacks the power. While, like a tutelary Power, Until Lord Dacre with his power To God descending in his power. For I am come with power to bless, Of power to comfort or rejoice; He sighed, submitting will and power Who with a power like human reason Nor lacked she Reason's firmest power; Encouraged of celestial power; Power which the viewless Spirit shed Shall draw the limits of the power define, For Power that travels with the human heart: Fell on thy tomb; but emulative power For wounds that death alone has power to heal, The Church, by mandate shadowing forth the power In abject sympathy with power is lost. By superstition, spread the Papal power; So does her Unity its power attest The Church, whose power hath recently been checked,

Of civil slaughter. Yet, while temporal power No sacrifice avert, no power dispute; As to a visible Power, in which did hieud From subterranean Treason's darkling power: Fathers! your Virtues, such the power of grace, Where dwells a Sister-child? And was power given Woman! the Power who left His throne on high, The Power that thro' the straits of Infancy Glory to God! and to the Power who came Power at whose touch the sluggard shall unfold Thou Power supreme! who, arming to rebuke Nor has her gentle beauty power to move. Can do for minds disposed to feel its power! Soft shades and dews have shed their blended power But 'tis ended with power to stay, Dread Power! whom peace and calmness serve Of power, through long and melancholy war. Of wealth and power and honours, long for rest; Enthroned aloft in undisputed power, O still beloved (for thine, meek Power, are charms As not unconscious with what power the thrill Oh may that Power who hushed the stormy seas, That no adventurer's bark had power to gain Of Power whose ministers the records keep A youth too certain of his power to wade The Power that saved him in his strange distress. The power is merged, though a grave has found. Infinite Power, The pillared vestibule, The power of years—pre-eminant, and placed And from the blessed power that rolls They fail, thy saving arms, dread Power! around them cast.

To humbler functions, awful Power! In face of these doth exercise a power That, were power granted to replace them (fetched

Before the STONE OF POWER no longer stand— If Power could live at ease with self-restraint! The Power least prized is that which thinks and feels.

Which nothing less than Infinite Power could give. In fierce solstitial power, That has power to baffle death— The thirst for power in men who ne'er concede; To be blown off at will, by Power that spares it.

Power—continued.

Is in the thankful Creature's power. Foreran the expected Power, Time was, blest Power! when youths and maids Should praise thee, genial Power! Or sacred wonder, growing with the power At will, your power the measure of your troth!— Young power to punish crime, and so prevent. Infinite Power, perfect Intelligence, Seemed stopt, though by some other power than death.

Fearless (but how obscured!) the golden Power, Mixed with the green, some shine not lacking power Such rapture, nor want power to feed; And with a more than earthly power O that the good old Man had power to prove, Or soothe it with a healing power Tried the Horn,—it owned his power; And, if power to speak he had, Power hath been given to please for higher ends Of things which their united power called forth That scorns temptation, power defies. As sovereign power could give. Shout forth with lively power at Spring's return; Choice flowers are gathered! But, if Power may spring,

To tell a story I will use my power; Our Lady I will praise with all my power. Your talents, power, or wisdom, deem him not Well did I watch, much laboured, nor had power A power is gone, which nothing can restore; And let me calmly bless the Power. Have power to make thy virtues known, A Power is passing from the earth. A power that never ceased to abide in him, Disarmed of power to unsettle present good Since every mortal power of Coleridge Uphold us, cherish, and have power to make Where rocks and groves the power of waters shakes Soft on his wounded heart her healing power, Where now is fled that Power whose frown severe The gentle Power that haunts the myrtle plain, And who but feels a power of strong controul, While strives a secret Power to hush the croud, And crouching fearful at the feet of Pow'r, The Power of EDUCATION seemed to rise; Arise superior to the Siren's power, What radiant fires were drown'd by day's malignant pow'r,

To that false INNOCENCE'S power "O son, my strength, my power! who dost despise What Power unseen diffuses far A Power misnamed the SPIRIT OF REFORM, In Power, and Poesy would lend her voice; For thirst of power that Heaven disowns, I gazed with growing love, a higher power Sometimes the ambitious Power of choice, mistaking

With skill and power that might not be withstood, Vague longing, haply bred by want of power, As if with voluntary power instruct And haply meet reproaches too, whose power The self-sufficing power of Solitude. Art thou of that false secondary power For feeling has to him imparted power Which, but for this most watchful power of love, Have felt whate'er there is of power in sound Thence did I drink the visionary power; And tranquil scenes, that universal power My soul was unsubdued. A plastic power My own enjoyments; or the power of truth Could find no surface where its power might sleep; The glory of my youth. Of genius, power, A winning power, beyond all other power. With a conviction of the power that waits How the immortal soul with God-like power Or as the soul of that great Power is met Into the soul its tranquillising power, Had voices more than all the winds, with power Great and benign, indeed, must be the power There registered; whatever else of power Knowledge not purchased by the loss of power! That hath more power than all the elements. Who make our wish, our power, our thought a deed, For their own sakes, a passion, and a power; Yet was there surely then no vulgar power Of mighty Poets. Visionary power And yet a power is on me, and a strong Imagination—here the Power so called That awful Power rose from the mind's abyss In their submissiveness with power as sweet In its degree of power, administered O, wondrous power of words, by simple faith A whole horizon's circuit, do with power. By Siddons trod in the fulness of her power. Of these, I feel the imaginative power. By power of contrast, made me recognise, Declares the vital power of social ties Endowed with various power to search the soul; More than inherent liveliness and power. Most obviously simplicity and power.

Powers—continued.

Powers that survive but in the faintest dream
Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers :
Unswep't, unstain'd ? Nor shall the aerial Powers
The dream, to time and nature's blended Powers .
The visual powers of Nature satisfy,
Yet—though dread Powers, that work in mystery,
spin
Oh ! there is life that breathes not ; Powers there are
Else verily the sober powers
Powers that will work for thee ; air, earth, and skies ;
And know that noble feelings, manly powers,
Among the lurking powers
By all the blended powers of Earth and Heaven.
Powers have they left, an impulse, and a claim
Your thrones, ye Powers, from duty fear to swerve !
With all her armed Powers,
Hath failed ; and now, ye Powers ! whose gorgeous wings
Fetch, sympathising Powers of air,
Of bounty infinite. Between Powers that aim
By no profane ambition, Powers that thrive
And others like in fame, created Powers
Powers manifold we have that intervene
Of evil with good Powers
Which Nature and these rustic Powers,
To what dread Powers He delegates his part
And prompt a harmony of genuine powers ;
Somay'the Soul, through powers that Faith bestows,
Fate, fortune, sweep strong powers away,
Memory, like sleep, hath powers which dreams
obey,
Or Fancy localises Powers we love,
A song of Nature's hidden powers ;
Him will I seek : the insurgent Powers
What Powers, presiding o'er the sacred well
Warbled a while with faint and fainter powers,
Nor one of all those winged powers is seen,
Of Powers ended with visible form, instinct
For her mute Powers, fixed Forms, or transient Shows.
And pain, hath powers to Eternity endeared.
" Nor less I deem that there are Powers
Whose powers shed round him in the common
strife,
Kindles intense desire for powers withheld
For deathless powers to verse belong,
That wastes us off, we think, its tuneful powers,
Thanks to the Powers that yet maintain their sway,
All Powers and Places that abhor the light
Is to control and check disordered Powers ?
On Love and Fear, their several powers he blends,
Stript of its frightful powers by slow decay,
To rural incidents, whose genial powers
Harmonious Powers with Nature work
May Nature's kindest powers sustain the Tree,
Began to honour May with all their powers.
Those rare accomplishments, and varied powers,
All softening, humanising, hallowing powers,
The father forc'd by Powers that only deign
Close at her side were all the powers, design'd
Whence human kind, and brute ; what natural powers
Are haunted by majestic Powers,
And their congenial powers, that, while they join
Bear witness Truth, endowed with holy powers
Breathings for incommunicable powers ;
The worth I knew of powers that I possessed,
Why, gifted with such powers to send abroad
Their benediction ; speak of them as Powers
In reconciliation with our stinted powers ;
Of human forms with superhuman powers,
Hands of angelic powers had fixed it there,
The whole creative powers of man asleep !—
Armies of clouds,—even so, its powers and aspects
Man suffering among awful Powers and Forms ;
Powers of my native region ! Ye that seize
Nor to be heard of more ; yet, they were powers,
Oh, pity and shame ! with those confederate
Powers !
All powers of swiftness, subtilty, and strength
Prevailed among the powers of heaven and earth,
In glorious apparition, Powers on whom
For they are Powers ; and hence the highest bliss
Suppose my powers so far confirmed, and such
(And the progressive powers perhaps no less
There mingled, heard or not. The powers of song
Upon the tall mast streaming. But, ye Powers
" And what are things eternal ?—powers depart,"
Restor'st us, daily, to the powers of sense .
What visionary powers of eye and soul
" Vain-glourious Generation ! what new powers
The constitutions, powers, and faculties,
Nor let the hallowed powers, that shed from heaven

Powers—continued.

—Jehovah—shapeless Power above all Powers,
To waste her powers, as in the worlding's mind,
The forms of Nature, and enlarge her powers ?
Now simply guarded by the sober powers .
Unbaffed powers of vision hath prepared,
His privacy to principles and powers .
High-titled Powers, am I constrained to ask,
With evening cheerfulness. In powers of mind,
Powers not unjustly likened to those gifts
" You do not err : the powers, that had been lost
Among the first of Powers and Virtues—proved ?
And what to higher powers is justly due .
The powers of nature : and a few short steps
And to the mind among her powers of sense .
Restless, and restless generation, powers
Measuring the force of those gigantic powers .
Our active powers, those powers themselves become
The powers of civil polity were given."
Tricks out her blustering powers,
By powers celestial tossed on land and sea .
Pozzobonelli. POZZOBONELLI his illustrious house ;
Practicable. Their practicable way.
Practice. (A practice till this time unknown to him)
Your practice prove, faithless though but in thought,
—Not He, who from her mellowed practice drew
Whose practice teaches, spite of names to show
The practice flow,—if thence, or from a deep
Doth practice give) that neither in the flocks .
Practice. To practise games and archery :
A noble mind to practise on herself,
Practised. See Long-practised.
Who has so practised on the world's cold sense,
Gond Baron, have you ever practised tillage ?
And an eye practised like a blind man's touch.
Six thousand veterans practised in war's game,
Which practised talent readily affords,
The keenness of that practised eye,
Practised to commune with her royal knight .
By nature yielded to his practised hand—
Both understood and practised,—so that none,
A Youth, I practised this delightful art :
Practising. For practising occult and perilous lore)
Praise. Bandusia's praise, wild stream, should yield to thine !
Have wrought with godlike arm the deeds of praise,
That, when your praise was warm upon my tongue,
Your generous qualities have won due praise,
And we too chant the praise of his good deeds.
Is bland, and would relieve itself by praise.
Resound the praise of your morality—
" Then offer up thy heart to God in thankfulness and praise,
A Maid whom there were none to praise
Receiving from his Father here of praise ;
Thy long-lost praise thou shalt regain ;
I give to thee, for praise or blame,
Pouring out praise to the almighty Giver,
Taken praise that should be thine,
Hymns in praise of what I love !
Praise of which I nothing know.
And thy store of other praise .
Praise it is enough for me,
Accept, O Friend, for praise or blame,
Praise, blame, love, kisses, tears, and smiles.
If they speak 'tis to praise, and they praise with a smile.
—Give Sir Lancelot Threlkeld praise !
And venture on your praise.
For praise and ceaseless gratulation, poured
Heed not such onset ! nay, if praise of men
To think how much of this will be thy praise,
Nor will I praise a cloud, however bright,
Haydon ! let worthier judges praise the skill
All praise the Likeness by thy skill portrayed,
Hath sounded (shame upon the Bard !) thy praise
I praise thee, Matron ! and thy due
Is praise, heroic praise, and true !
So be it !—but let praise ascend
Our sires set forth their grateful praise :
Of the world's praise, from dark antiquity
With deeds of hope and everlasting praise—
Here pause : the poet claims at least this praise,
To rob our Human-nature of just praise
—Chant the Deliverer's praise in every tongue !
Songs of victory and praise .
A holy Structure to the Almighty's praise,
Another's praise from envy clear .
Not vain is sadly-uttered praise ;
Your praise, in meet concordance with your claims
With praise, as genuine admiration prompts.
The grief, the praise, are severed from their dust,
Then eased his soul at length by praise
The Sabine Bard was moved her praise to sing ;
And tender Goldsmith crowned with deathless praise !
The Torrents chant their praise, inspiring scorn
Shall yield no light of love or praise ;
But Praise can waste her voice on work of tears,
This Sabbath-day, for praise and prayer .
With awful cheer a voice of praise ;

Prater. Their solemn joy—praising the Eternal
King,
Pratling. Joy sparkled in the prancing courser's eyes
Prank. By music, prank, and laughter—stirring jest ;
Pranks. Like a bold Gil, who plays her agile pranks
At all the merry pranks of Doonedale !
Prate. While clariens prate of kingdoms to be won—
Prate somewhat loudly of the whereabouts
Prater. This woman is a prater. Pray, good Lady !
Prattle. Mid the gay prattle of those infant tongues,
Or when the prattle of Bandusia's spring
And unaimed prattle flying up and down ;
Articulate prattle—Child as beautiful
Prattled. On which so oft he prattled when a boy.
Prattler. A little Prattler among men,
While yet a prattler on the knee,
Prattlers. In arms, now rosy prattlers at the feet
Prattling. A little prattling child, he oft descends,
Prattling upon his knee, to call him Father—
Bandusia, prattling as when long ago
And later down, in prattling childhood even,
The wild brooks prattling from invisible haunts ;
Pray. And pray that never child of song
I could not pray :—through tears that fell in showers
No more, I pray, of this. Three days at farthest
This woman is a prater. Pray, good Lady !
Pray tell me what this land is worth by the acre.
Near the wood's edge—rest there to-night, I pray
you :
There be who pray nightly before the Altar.
And lays it to his heart— I pray you speak !
Be calm, I pray thee ! Oswald— Name him not !
Watch over her, I pray—sustain her— Captain !
" And where are they ? I pray you tell."
Yet ye are seven ! I pray you tell,
I only pray to know the worst ;
My Johnny, do, I pray you, do,
And all temptation, Luke, I pray that thou
" Tempt me not, I pray ; my doom is
I pray thee have no fear of me ;
And every day we two will pray
" Yon owl !—pray God that all be well !
Pray in ghostly agonies.
Confirm, I pray, the vision with thy voice :
216 P. B. 897
If Thou the spirit give by which I pray :
With earnest feeling I shall pray
Thus did he cry, and thus did pray,
Therefore the wise pray for thee, though the freight
Intrudes on peace, I pray the eternal Sire
Edward will come with you,—and pray,
Then come, my Sister ! come, I pray,
O turn aside,—and take, I pray,
Thus on her knees did Goody pray ;
Now think, ye farmers all, I pray,
" Tears might be shed, and I might pray,
Of his Companion, he would pray that both
For sometimes, Lady ! ere men pray to thee
Even so fare I ; and therefore, I thee pray,
Her to salute, and also her to pray
His heart, that her to praise, to her to pray,
" She asketh, and she piteously doth pray
Pray also thou for us, while here we tarry
But hear you now a wondrous thing, I pray ;
Have knowledge, I thee pray, what this may be ?
I pray to God with her always to be.
And now I pray you all to do me right
Now, my sweet Troilus, love me well, I pray !
Unto the blood of Troy, I pray of thee to
Penned these sad lines, nor can forbear to pray
And pray that in his faithful breast the grace
For which we pray, and for the wants provide
The majesty of both shall pray for both :
Where, Sir, I pray you, where are laid the bones
Then wake me not, I pray you. Hush, speak low.

Praised. Fervently cried the housewife—" God be praised,
And it was you, dear Lady ! God be praised,
That we are praised, only as men in us
But when the fruit, so often praised
" Oh ! God be praised—my heart's at ease—
Praised be the Art whose subtle power could stay
And by the general reverence God is praised :
That God might suitably be praised.
Has ended, though no Clerk, with " God be praised !
Praised be the Rivers, from their mountain springs
" The blossom you so fondly praised
Admired for beauty, for her sweetness praised ;
The weak were praised, rewarded, and advanced ;
Is styled, when most affectionately praised,
And praised the gallant bearing, of a Knight
(The same kind Matron whom your tongue hath praised)
Praised the consummate harmony serene
Praises. Eternal praises on the power that saved her !
Thanks and praises, each a gage

Prayed. Bidding me trust in God, he stood and prayed ;—
Ravage for which no knell was heard. We prayed
28 Guilt 241
29 Guilt 284

Prayed—continued.

But you prayed by him?
 And then I would have prayed, and had no voice.
 And what, for my part, I have often prayed:
 I prayed, yet every day I thought
 Mere slave of them who never for these prayed,
 For which it prayed!
 I to my Father knelt and prayed;
 And prayed the Earls in self-defence
 While the Monks prayed in Maiden's Bower
 With tears, and of his Father prayed—
 And painful struggle and deliverance—prayed
 And the Lady prayed in heaviness
 By their own darling. But the People prayed
 And, kneeling on the sticks, she prayed
 She prayed, her withered hand uprearing,
 So prayed he:—as our chronicles report,
 But to his comrade he repaired, and prayed
 To cleave unto this man; but when I prayed
 Was prayed to as a judge; but these were past,
 Have prayed that throughout earth upon all men,
 "So prayed, more gaining than he asked, the Bard—
 The one Survivor stood; he wept, he prayed—
 And with that pang I prayed to be no more!
 She prayed, she moaned;—her husband's sister
 watched
 Who bore me; and hath prayed for me in vain;—
Prayer. While prayer contends with silenced agony,
 Died in his arms; and with those thanks a prayer
 And hear his prayer that I would not forsake him
 Is ringing it—'twould stop a Saint in prayer,
 The thunder send him on his knees to prayer.
 With this dear holy shepherd-boy breathe a prayer
 of earnest heart,
 I saw, within, the Norman Boy kneeling alone in prayer.
 Yet, not the less, in children's hymns and lonely
 prayer delights.
 Prayer that Grace divine may raise
 Why did ye listen to my prayer?
 In prayer, yet blending with that solemn rite
 Then off she hies; but with a prayer,
 But why that prayer? as if to her could come
 But why so early with this prayer?
 If Wytheburne's modest House of prayer,
 And, if they had a prayer to make,
 The prayer would be that they may take
 My dear, dear Sister! and this prayer I make,
 That calms all fear; "Such grace hath crowned thy prayer,
 Nor doth the general voice abstain from prayer,
 Why should it daunt a blameless prayer?
 Dwell fruitless day-dreams, lawless prayer,
 To sailor's prayer breathed from a darkening sea,
 Through the long year the House of Prayer would seek:
 Yet failed to seek the sure relief of prayer,
 Prayer, text, or symbol, graven upon the stone;
 But why to Him confine the prayer,
 (Penance their trust, and prayer their store;)
 To labour, and to prayer, to nature, and to heaven.
 When a whole people shall kneel down in prayer,
 Spiry and dark, around their House of prayer,
 O come, if undishonoured by the prayer,
 For converse with God, sought through study and prayer.
 Might else have triumphed, baffling prayer,
 Now toiling, wuffed now on wings of prayer—
 This Sabbath-day, for praise and prayer.
 The pang of unavailing prayer;
 And sorrow of his fruitless prayer.
 But said; "The prayer which ye have heard,
 Sang mass,—and tore the book of prayer,—
 At length, the issue of a prayer
 All prayer for this cause or for that;
 This dying prayer, and he thou blest!
 Fulfilment of a Father's prayer
 Received and followed by a prayer,
 Their part in this effectual prayer,
 Chanting in barbarous ears a tuneful prayer—
 For prayer in stillness, or the chanted rite;
 Wan cheek, and knees indurated with prayer,
 And prayer, man's rational prerogative,
 Source of their liveliest hope, and tenderest
 prayer—
 An apostolic hand, and with prayer seals
 Beside the afflicted; to sustain with prayer,
 She knelt in prayer—the waves their wrath appease;
 The prayer for them whose hour is past away
 Of prayer and praise forget their rosaries,
 Above his head uplifted in vain prayer,
 They knelt in prayer, or sang to blissful Mary.
 When Prayer is of no avail?
 May not avail, nor prayer have for God's ear
 And chanted hymns and stiller voice of prayer,
 While they give utterance to the prayer
 That would unite in prayer and praise;
 As my last earnest prayer ere we depart.

Prayer—continued.

 Which came, but it has passed into a prayer—
 And inwardly sustained by silent prayer,
 Be thou my safeguard!—"such her prayer
 The prayer is heard, the Saints have seen,
 At her own prayer transformed, took root,
 The light to us vouchsafed of thy prayer,
 A prayer to the Redeemer of the world.
 Shall be attended with a bolder prayer—
 The hermit, exercised in prayer and praise,
 Is hospitable dealing, grant my prayer!
 Nor wilt thou blame an aged Poet's prayer,
 Ah, with how different spirit might a prayer
 And momentary hope, and worn-out prayer,
 Love that adores, but on the knees of prayer,
 The imperfect offices of prayer and praise,
 In God's good love, and seek his help by prayer,
 The unbounded might of prayer; and learned,
 with soul
 Foretold, and added prayer to prophecy;
 Vigils of contemplation; praise; and prayer—
 The wisdom of the prayer that daily asks Restores not to their prayer! Ah! who would think
 "That prayer were not superfluous," said the Priest,
 Which waits that prayer to heaven, is due to all,
 The congregation joined with me in prayer
 Not to our prayer, but far beyond our prayer;
 With each repeating its allotted prayer,
 And prayer and thought can bring to worst distress
 The Pastor's mansion with the house of prayer.
 Urge it is vain; and, therefore, like a prayer
 —Father of good! this prayer in bounty grant,
 A prayer both bold and sly
Prayer-hell. Or prayer-hell by the dull cicada drown'd.
Prayerless. Aghast and prayerless. Into a deep wood Prayer's. Prayer's voiceless service; but now, seeking nought
Prayers. And in his hearing there my prayers I said:
 In such dismay my prayers and tears were vain:
 The God in heaven my prayers for you will hear;
 Hope cheered my dreams, and to my daily prayers
 And no return have I to make but prayers;
 Though but a glimpse, it sent me to my prayers.
 To haffle me—it put me to my prayers.
 And, by the Mass, to see him at his prayers!—
 Give to Him prayers, and many thoughts, in thy
 most busy days;
 Came forth with wishes and with farewell prayers,
 Eases her pain, and helps her prayers.
 The prayers I make will then be sweet indeed
 Present your prayers—go—and rejoice aloud—
 Blessings and prayers in nobler reitance
 Their prayers out to the wind and naked skies.
 Ye multitude, pursue your prayers;
 All prayers for this cause, or for that!
 The Wharfedale peasants in their prayers,
 And prayers that would undo her forced farewell;
 The unarmed Host who by their prayers would turn
 Hence, prayers are shaped amiss, and dirges sung
 With prayers and blessings we your path will sow;
 The prayers, the contrite struggle, and the trust
 Alternate; carrying holy thoughts and prayers
 To like hope our prayers will cling.
 Mid muttering prayers all sounds of torment meet,
 Kneeling at prayers; or watchman on the top
 To their great Father, prayers were offered up,
 Our prayers have been accepted; thou wilt stand
 Of my best prayers to bring me back again.
 That spite of the defrauded Kitchen's prayers
Praying. What I am now— Praying or parleying?
 —tut!
Prays. By cells upon whose image, while he prays,
 The name of daughter in his mouth, he prays!
 And, as the saint he prays to, still.
 So prays the Church, to consecrate a Vow
 And skyward lift, like one that prays, his hand,
 By cells whose image, trembling as he prays,
Preach. A whipping to the Moralists who preach
 Yet listen, Child!—I would not preach;
 Copy their hearty more and more, and preach,
 Ages ere Valdo raised his voice to preach
 Deserves the name (this truth the billows preach)
Preached. A river of Blood, and preached that nothing else
Preacher. He, too, is no mean preacher:
 St. Mary's Church, the preacher then would cry:
 See him a constant preacher to the poor!
Preaching. Is preaching to no heedless flock!
 —Preaching, administering, in every work
Preamble. A glad preamble to this Verse: I sang Precarious. And earth's precarious days.
Precede. And now precede thee, winding to and fro,
Precedent. How little boots that precedent of good,
Precedes. That precedes the passing-knell!
 While the joy that precedes the calm season of rest
Preceding. The Cross preceding Him who floats in air
Precept. By precept only, and shed tears by rule.
 For them whom precept and the pedantry
 The precept eye for eye, and tooth for tooth,

Preceptor. Duty, like a strict preceptor, Preceptress. Grave Teacher, stern Preceptress ! for at times
Precepts. That builds, as thy unerring precepts teach,
 For "precepts over dignified,"
 Not she whose rigid precepts trained the boy
 The golden precepts of the classic page ;
 If e'er these precepts quell'd the passions' strife,
 Dragging all precepts, judgments, maxims, creeds,
Precincts. Nought round its darling precincts can he find
 "These nether precincts do not lack
 In precincts nearer to the Saviour's tomb,
 Making the precincts ye adorn . . .
 Shall he frequent these precincts ; locked no more
 Seemed humbled in these precincts thence to be
 About its narrow precincts all beloved,
 Within these precincts, a capacious bed Precious. Dear Daughter ! precious relic of that time—
 Of sending to his grave our precious Charge ;
 Your words are precious to my ears ; go on . . .
 I yielded up those precious hopes, which nought
 The thing most precious that it now contains :
 By light of lamp and precious stones, that glim-
 mered here, there glowed,
 "Sir ! 'twas a precious flock to me,
 Obsequious service to the precious child,
 For a crowning recompense, the precious grace
 He saves for me my precious soul ; . . .
 This precious Flower, true love's last token,
 This precious boon ; and blest a sad abode."
 That brought their precious liberty again . . .
 And all the sad and precious things
 Chains, such precious chains of sight . . .
 This precious leaf, with harsh impiety,
 All that to each is precious, as we float
 More precious than a hermit's dust ;
 Old songs, the precious music of the heart !
 Built of all precious substances,—so pure
 Lives inexhaustibly in precious gems,
 Bleeding on that precious Rood ;
 From what a precious source of truth it came . . .
 My vehicle shall prove—O precious Charge !
 Avon—a precious, an immortal name !
 And the tear precious in compassion shed . . .
 The precious folds—"behold," said he,
 This was for you a precious greeting ;
 The precious Current they had taught to flow ?
 And far above the mine's most precious ore
 The precious Tomb, their haven of salvation.
 To stay the precious waste. Through every brain
 Yet will we not conceal the precious Cross,
 For precious tremblings in your bosom found !
 But for some precious boons vouchsafed to thee,
 One precious, tender-hearted, scroll
 Their gifts she hails (deemed precious, as they prove
 More than is needed, but the precious Art
 Creatures—how precious in the Maiden's sight !
 Thy worship is performed and precious laud ;
 And in a tomb of precious marble clear
 (A thing more precious far than all that books
 And when the precious hours of leisure came,
 Fitting to guard the precious dust of him
 Shall Southey feed upon your precious lore,
 But that the precious love this friend hath sown
 One precious gain, that he forgets himself . . .
 A precious treasure had I long possessed,
 How precious when in riper days I learned
 A precious gift ; for, as he grew in years,
 'Tis more than human ! Many precious rites
 And precious interests ? Smoothly did our life
 Preserved from age to age ; more precious far
 Shall he be a precious visitant ; and then,
 In search of precious ore : they tried, were foiled—
 There, by her innocent Baby's precious grave,
 Of memory, images and precious thoughts,
 The precious gift of hearing . . . He grew up
 "Oh ! pang unthought of, as the precious boon
 To me as precious as my own !—Green herbs
Precipice. And it had led him towards the precipice,
 You see you precipice,—it wears the shape
 He to the margin of the precipice
 The air or laugh upon a precipice ;
 By chasm or dizzy precipice ;
 The humid precipice, and seize the guest
 A lofty precipice in front,
 Right at the foot of that moist precipice,
 Of a rough precipice ; and some, apart,
Precipice's. Travel along the precipice's base ;
 Straight toward some precipice's airy brink !
Precipices. Smitten, the precipices rang aloud ;
Precipitate. Him from that height shall Heaven precipitate capitate
Precipitated. Those sooty knaves, precipitated down Precipitates. Nor stagnates, nor precipitates his course,
Precipitations. Precipitations, and untoward straits,

Precipitous. To listen to ANIO's precipitous flood,
 High on the brink of that precipitous rock,
 That lurled precipitous from steep to steep ;
 Of some smooth ridge, whose brink precipitous
Precise. Expanding yet precise, the roof embowed,
Precision. With dread precision, ye made clear
Preclude. And being, to preclude or quell the strife
 Preclude conviction, that a spirit strong
 That should preclude humility and love ?
 Which no condition can preclude ; of One
 Of proofs and reasons ye preclude—in those Preclude forgiveness, from the praise debarred,
 Our system is not fashioned to preclude
Precludes. Precludes, and charity beyond the bounds Preconceived. Abrupt—as without preconceived design
Preconsumes. Blocks out the forms of nature, pre-consumes
Precursor. And see ! a bright precursor to a train
 Precursor to a timid sigh
 (O great Precursor, genuine morning Star)
 Like the Precursor when the Deity
Precursors. Precursors to Aurora's car, Predecessor's. Which some have named her Predecessor's ghost.
Predecessors. Enjoys the walks his predecessors trod,
Predefined. Predefined here to live . . .
 Predestined, if two beings ever were,
Predominance. Or by predominance of thought oppressed,
Predominant. Predominant in good and evil hearts ;
 With genial feelings still predominant ;
Predominate. Doth sometimes here predominate, and works
 Predominate ; whose strong effects are such . . .
Predominates. Predominates, and darkness comes and goes,
Pre-eminence. And Reason's sway predominate ; even so far,
Pre-eminence. Of God himself from dread pre-eminence—
 Such genuine state, pre-eminence so free,
 That with distinct pre-eminence retain
Pre-eminence. The stars pre-eminent in magnitude,
 Pre-eminent in beauty is the vale
 Spirit in him pre-eminent, who guides,
 The power of years—pre-eminent, and placed
 Pre-eminent till death. From early days,
 Thus early took a place pre-eminent ;
Pre-eminently. Two shall be named, pre-eminently dear,—
Pre-existing. In long succession, pre-existing ghosts
Preface. And without further preface,—In my youth, Prefaced. She prefaced half a hint of this Prefer. This Ship to all the rest did I prefer :
 Blessings to give, news ask, or suit prefer
 Here laid in mortal darkness, wouldst prefer
 Disclose, had accusations to prefer
 Your Pastor is emboldened to prefer
Preference. He in the preference, modest Youth, might take,
 And now, in preference to the mightiest names,
 That in the act of preference he had been . . .
Preferred. For ever—sad alternative I preferred,
 Much injured Earls ! by these preferred,
 Then, Twilight is preferred to Dawn,
 Jealous that Hope had been preferred
 Have been preferred, that this fair creature, checked Preferr'd. Preferr'd a garland culled from purple heath
Prefering. Preferring studious leisure, I had chosen
 Rush on the fight, to harps preferring swords,
 To a voluptuous unconcern, preferring
 Preferring me to parents, and the choir . . .
 Preferring bonds and darkness to a state
Prefigured. Prefigured to his sense the Egyptian Lady
Prefiguring. Prefiguring his own impending doom,
 That would yield him fit help while prefiguring that Place
Pregnant. A pregnant dream, within whose shadowy bonds
 Pregnant with mutual exaltation,
 Or, pencil pregnant with ethereal hues,
 Shall be performed at pregnant intervals,
 Pregnant with good. Young, Middle-aged, and Old,
 Is pregnant with anxiety,
 Through pregnant vision, separate or conjoined . . .
 It slept, even in the pregnant season of youth . . .
 What grandeur not unmet, what pregnant show
 For, from this pregnant spot of ground, such thoughts
 A fancy pregnant with resource and scheme . . .
 Pregnant with recollections of the time
Prejudged. Prejudged by foes determined not to spare,
Prejudice. Besides, I know not what strange prejudice
 Inflamed by passion, blind with prejudice,
 Of civic prejudice, the bigotry . . .
 By prejudice, the miserable slave
 Of prejudice subdued—still he retained,
 Barbarian torpor, and blind prejudice ;
Prelate's. A Prelate's blessing ask on bended knees.
