 Preserved, enlarged, this freedom in himself?
 And there, by lucky hap, had been preserved
 From unreflecting ignorance preserved,
 A plot of green-sward, seemingly precious
 Preserved from age to age; more precious far
 Is yet preserved to principles of truth,
 For one day's little compass, has preserved
 'Gathers, and is preserved; and feeding dew
 In undecaying beauty were preserved;
 For public use preserved, and thus survive
 From vice and premature decay preserved
 By horror of their impious rites, preserved;

Preside. To the just cause; and, oh! do thou preside
 Let Ignorance o'er the monster swarms preside,
Presidents. Ye Presidents and Deans, and, till the spirit
Presides. Fidelity presides;
 His lineaments by day, yet there presides,
 Her treasures less and less.—Man now presides
 Supports, adorns, and over all presides;
 A gracious spirit o'er this earth presides,
Presiding. Presiding Spirit here to-day,
 What Powers, presiding o'er the sacred well
 Presiding; and severest solitude
 Owes that presiding aspect which might well
 In majesty presiding o'er fields
 Which speaks from a presiding Spirit here,
Presignified. Their purposes. Behold, pre-signified,
 Presignified by that dread strife
Press. With forward neck the closing gate to press—
 Press the sad kiss, fond mother! vainly fears
 That you do press upon me. There—indeed
 What strong temptations press upon the Poor.
 Speak out.
 Wherefore press this on me? Because I feel
 Oh! press me with thy little hand;
 Did press this semblance of unpitted smart
 Did Peter boldly press his way
 He longs to press her to his heart,
 Will press me down: to think of what is gone
 Press the point home, or falter and demur,
 Her doom it is to press a weary bed—
 Off weight—nor press on weight!—away
 (As the crowd press devoutly down the aisle
 That press upon me, devoting the career
 Thoughts press, and time is hurrying on—
 Thy thundering battle-axe as it cleaves the press
 Shut close the door; press down the latch;
 I press thee, through the yielding soil, with pride.
 Of Ocean, press right on; or gently wind,
 In dance, amid a press
 While thoughts press on, and feelings overflow,
 Press forward by the teasing dogs unscared.
 How Want may press thee down, and with thee sink
 In the press of twenty thousand thoughts,
 Press forward, in all colours, on the sight;
 Above the press and danger of the crowd,
 Through meagre lines and colours, and the press
 That from the press of Paris duly brought
 A child of hope? Do generations press
 Who sits, is disencumbered from the press
 Of ocean press right on, or gently wind,
Pressed. See Press.
 Kindly the housewife pressed, and they in comfort fed.
 And most forlorn, should bribe a Mother, pressed
 But things substantial have so pressed on me—
 Proof after proof was pressed upon me; guilt
 All pressed on him with such a weight, that now,
 Of agony had pressed the Sufferer down:
 Or care, that what so tenderly he pressed;
 He pressed his Son, he kissed him and wept;
 With thankfulness the Mother pressed;
 Against the yielding gate he pressed
 With his hands pressed against his brow,
 Invades a Realm, so pressed that in the scale
 Such feeling pressed upon my soul,
 Sighed on the wing as her foot pressed the strand,
 So spake Sir Eglamore, and pressed
 "But we are pressed by heavy laws;
 Duly as Friday comes, though pressed herself
 When his fetters at night have so press'd on his limbs,
 Pressed closely palm to palm, and to his mouth
 Thus by conflicting passions pressed, my heart
 When, pressed by tragic sufferings, the heart
 Not pressed upon, nor dazzled or misled
 Harassing both; until he sank and pressed
 Pressed on me almost like a feat to come.
 And all the accidents of life were pressed
 Accumulated feelings pressed his heart
 The Pastor pressed by thoughts which round his theme
 That pressed upon his brother's house; for books
 Began to fail, this sheep by hunger pressed
Presses. A tranquillising spirit presses now
Press-gang. I wish the press-gang or the drum
 And wish'd the press-gang, or the drum
Pressing. Pressing upon his solitary heart.
 Pressing upon thy heart, and this the hour
 Pressing as heavily as it doth on mine.
 The foremost prow in pressing to the strand,—
 Time pressing on with stary crest
 Of a wide army pressing on to meet

Pressing—continued.
 Nor wanted 'mid the pressing crowd
 Pressing behind, adown a rugged slope,
Pressure. Through long-lived pressure of obscure distress,
 Upon the pressure of a painful thing,
 Thy sense from pressure of life's common din;
 By the joint pressure of his musing mood
 Drawn forth by pressure of his gilded chains,
 But, under pressure of a private grief,
 He had no painful pressure from without
 Against the pressure of beleaguering war.
 Who, from the pressure of their several fates,
 Caught from the pressure of elastic turf
Pressures. Here, too, were "forms and pressures of the time," Prest. See Pressed.
 Close by her mantling wings' embraces prest . . .
 In that glad moment when your hands are prest . . .
 Had prest upon him; and old Michael now
 I feel thy little fingers prest.
 By random footsteps to be prest,
 If she is prest by want of food,
 On tombs, with palms together prest,
 Or prest together by the appetite,
 And hands in resignation prest,
 So, when upon sad thoughts had prest
 Prest in the tenderness of virgin love
 Than even now await her prest,
 Perish the grovelling few, who, prest between Presume. "Dost thou presume my course to block?
 A very reptile could presume
 Presume those interweavings to reprove
 That doth presume no more than to supply
 Unless they chasten fancies that presume
 Presume to offer; we, who—from the breast
Presumed. Presumed to grapple with their scorn,
 (Which words less free presumed not even to touch)
Presumes. Dazzling the vision that presumes to gaze.
Presumption. To see Presumption, turning pale, refrain
 Dead to the very name? Presumption fed
 Had no presumption, no such jealousy,
 Like engines; when will their presumption learn,
 Of mortified presumption, I adored
 But through presumption; even in pleasure pleased
 Presumption, folly, madness, in the men
 Renew, if their presumption make them such?
Presumptuous. Who cries presumptuous, "Here the flood shall stay."
 Been most presumptuous. There is guilt in this,
 I am not of the world's presumptuous judges,
 Presumptuous above all that ever breathed,
 Begone, thou food presumptuous Elf!
 To thee would offer no presumptuous hymn!
 A sense of seemingly presumptuous wrong
 Presumptuous Book! too forward to be read,
 Inherited:—presumptuous thought!—it fed
 Issues, revealed in no presumptuous vision,
 Of judgment such presumptuous doom repeat!)
 And for presumptuous wrongs atone;—
 For the presumptuous thoughts that would assign
 Yet on presumptuous wing as far would fly
 Who cries, presumptuous, "here their tides shall stay."
 Presumptuous cloud, on whose black front was written
 A proud and most presumptuous confidence
 Are abject, vain, presumptuous, and perverse.
Presumptuously. Presumptuously) their roots both wide and deep,
 When we may, not presumptuously, I hope,
 And not presumptuously, I trust, of Age,
Presumptuousness. When youth's presumptuousness is mellowed down,
Prentice. Under pretence of violence, be seized.
 Of haughtiness without pretence,
 Law but a servile dupe of false pretence,
 In men of low degree, all smooth pretence!
 Objects of false pretence, or meanly true!
 Before a flying season's rash pretence
 And therefore fugitive or on what pretence; Prentended. But the prentended Father—Earthly law
Pretensions. To whose pretensions, sedulously urged,
 Appeared, of high pretensions—unproved Preternatural. That left half-told the preternatural tale,
Prettiest. With ornaments—the prettiest, nature yields
 "The prettiest letters that were ever seen."
 The prettiest of the grove!
 Prettiest Tumbler ever seen!
Prettily. To mark its eddying foam-balls prettily distract
Pretty. Aloft upon the elm-tree. Pretty Maids,
 Smiling in sleep— A pretty feat of Fancy!
 A pretty prospect this, a masterpiece
 When the pretty flowerets die;
 And feats of cunning; and the pretty round

Pretty—continued.

I heard a voice; it said, "Drink, pretty creature, drink!"
 "Drink, pretty creature, drink," she said in such a tone
 A pretty flock, and which, for aught I know, . . .
 He loved—the pretty Barbara died;
 The pretty flock which I had reared
 Save thee, my pretty Love!
 I've none, my pretty Innocent!
 My pretty thing! then thou shalt sing
 If thou art mad, my pretty lad,
 Then, pretty dear, be not afraid:
 Chanted his pretty songs, when you
 And then thou art a pretty star;
 Who fancied what a pretty sight
 What a pretty baby-show!
 'Tis a pretty baby-treat;
 Pretty Kitten I from thy freaks,—
 But, pretty Maid, if you look near,
 And drinks up all the pretty rills
 Askance upon her pretty Self.
 And his two pretty pinions of blue dusky gauze
 Of pretty fancies that would round him play
 "Ha," quoth I, "pretty prisoner, are you there!"
 This pretty Shepherd, pride of all the plains,
 In peace and comfort; and a pretty boy
 And with a pretty restless hand of love.
 At the pretty Maiden's dread
 I, whose pretty Voice you hear,
Prevail. And hopes are strong and will prevail.
 Shall e'er prevail against us, or disturb
 Prevail to further our desire,
 Her buoyant spirit can prevail
 There let a mystery of joy prevail,
 And for Thy righteous purpose they prevail;
 And what melodious sounds at times prevail!
 'Tis past away; far other thoughts prevail;
 Hopes that within the Father's heart prevail,
 And the "wild justice of revenge" prevail.
 Thus gaily and cheerfulness prevail,
 Of these benign observances prevail;
 Why do not these prevail for human life,
 Be yet far distant, let thy Word prevail,
 Oh! let thy Word prevail, to take away
 Prevail, 'tis best to neither hear nor see.

Prevailed. Such earnest vigils, that belief prevailed
 Them and their object; but, meanwhile, prevailed
 Prevailed a like indulgent law
 Who paints how Britain struggled and prevailed
 Her recreant Brother—he prevailed
 Here hath a milder doom prevailed;
 Yet do not deem the Autocracy prevailed.
 On the smooth platform, whether skill prevailed
 Prevailed among the powers of heaven and earth,
 Stillness prevailed around us: and the voice . . .
 A gay or pensive tenderness prevailed,
 Was he received, and mutual joy prevailed.
 Prevailed; and, from those bonds released, she went Prevailing. Blue sky prevailing;
 [Fair is the Swan, whose majesty, prevailing
 Temptation so prevailing as to change
Prevails. Still have I found, where Tyranny prevails,
 Is it by rocks and woods that man prevails?
 Hence equal ignorance of both prevails,
 But wrought with mightier arm than now prevails.
 Or the perpetual warbling that prevails
 Did never break the stillness that prevails
 Though with the silence pleased that here prevails,
Prevalence. Usurping, with a prevalence
Prevalent. Is prevalent, where he who tills the field,
Prevent. Thence bursting shrill did all remark prevent;
 My further labour might prevent!
 Fall to prevent or beautify decay;
 Prevent omission, help deficiency,
 As oft befalls, prevent or turn aside
 Your power to punish crime, and so prevent.
 Sadness which no indulgence could prevent;
 That, still attempting to prevent the waste,
 Not long your pastime to prevent;
 With his brave sword endeavoured to prevent Prevented. Prevented each desire:—
 To listen, is prevented or deterred.
Preventive. To the prevention of all healthful growth
Preventiva. Religion deepens her preventive care;
Prevents. Prevents me not from owning, that the law,
Previous. Then, to her Patron Saint a previous rite
 Would I, by previous wiles, inflame the queen
 The straggler during all the previous day
Previously. Of moral anger previously had tinged
Prey. His prey, through tracts abrupt of desolate space,
 The eagle of the Alps o'er shades her prey.
 Like fate; was hurried off, a helpless prey,
 Doth prey alike on two distracted Countries,
 A prey to a deceiver?—no—no—no—

Our Captain made a prey to foul device —
 Shall prey upon the tallest. Solitude —
 The prey or masters of our own past deeds.
 Upon the prey;—with leaps and springs
 When they are angry, roar like lions for their prey.
 Of fears the prey, of hopes the sport;
 Ere, pouncing like a ravenous bird of prey,
 And their music's a prey which they seize;
 'Tis gone—a ruthless spoiler's prey,
 Now she meets the coming prey,
 When falcons were abroad for prey,
 Man left this Structure to become Time's prey,
 They steal upon their prey.
 High lodged the Warrior, like a bird of prey;
 Where the wild waves resigned their prey—
 Sun, moon, and stars, and beast of chase or prey;
 Seized it, as hunters seize their prey;
 Drives from their Cures, a voluntary prey
 How baffled projects on the spirit prey,
 Entering my dungeon, didst become a prey
 The Figure called to mind a beast of prey
 Her babe's small cry, that leads him to his prey.
 The eagle of the Alps o'er shades his prey.
 Cries out, and leads her Spectres to their prey,
 Became my prey; and when the deed was done
 Eager as birds of prey, or as a ship
 To drive their prey enclosed within a ring
 His coiled-up prey with barkings turbulent.
 Will conscience prey.—Feebly must they have felt
 And the owl's prey; from these bare haunts, to which
 As only capable to prey on things
 For Time's invisible tooth to prey upon,
Preyed. Preyed upon body and mind—yet not the less
 Hath preyed with ruthless appetite
 Preyed on my strength, and stopped the quiet stream
Priam. Of Priam ask'd, of Hector,—o'er and o'er—
 Of Hector asked if [of] Priam o'er and o'er,
Price. Before his eyes, to price above all gold;
 The crown of thorns; whose life-blood flowed, the price
 And gradually enriched with things of price,
 And would preserve as things above all price,
Prick. The mountain-ponies prick their ears,
Prickled. Who from Keswick has pricked forth, Prickly. Through prickly moors or dusty ways must wind;
 No leaves it has, no prickly points;
 Fixed in the centre of a prickly brake,
Pride. Pride of his sister-wives, the monarch stalks;
 While, flapped with conscious pride, resound his wings!
 How graceful, pride can be, and how majestic, ease.
 She, in a mother's care, her beauty's pride
 Unstained by envy, discontent, and pride;
 And with the food of pride sustained his soul.
 Stranger! henceforth be warned; and know that pride,
 The swans that with white chests upreared in pride
 Yet, reason as he is, his pride has built
 Pride and her daughter, Cruelty, from Madness,
 Compassion!—pity!—pride can do without them;
 Did my pride tame my pride;—for many days,
 And, tired with slights his pride no more could brook,
 As the clear Moon with modest pride
 My little joy! my little pride!
 My pride was tamed, and in our grief
 Said, "Pride shall help me in my woe."
 I looked at her again, nor did my pride abate.
 May fill your breast with joyful pride;
 Apt emblem (for reproof of pride)
 Look but at the gardener's pride—
 "Abate this unbecoming pride,
 Then for the pride of self-denial;
 By generous pride within the breast;
 To Nelson, England's pride and treasure,
 And the ship, in all her pride,
 There is a Yew-tree, pride of Lorton Vale,
 That doth reject all show of pride, admits no outward sign,
 And ornaments of seemlier pride,
 When I, in confidence and pride,
 The sleepless Soul that perished in his pride;
 Never to blend our pleasure or our pride
 But here is perfect joy and pride
 Still may a veteran Few have pride
 Nor shall the tongue of envious pride
 And no pride blended with their dignity.
 Heaven will not tax our thoughts with pride
 The Christian of his pride:
 The trumpet (we, intoxicate with pride,
 His staff high-raising, in the pride
 With pride, the Muses love it evermore.
 For human-kind, weak slaves of cumbersome pride!
 With one calm triumph of a modest pride.
 The vestments brodered with barbaric pride:
 Chatsworth! thy stately mansion, and the pride
 Is given to triumph and all human pride!

Pride—continued.

There, too, a Son, his joy and pride,
The pride, the fury uncontrollable,
How might he flourish in his pride,
A land of promise and of pride
He launched his vessel,—and in pride
He, struggling in the net of pride,
My Country! and 'tis joy enough and pride
And, like Montrose, make Loyalty your pride—
Than all the pride of intellect and thought?
Which shall not fail, though poor men cleave with pride
Their God, and placed their trust in human pride!

But aye ascending, restless in her pride
Such sweet wayfaring—of life's spring the pride,
Memento uninscribed of Pride o'erthrown,

Our pride misleads, our timid likings kill.
Pride of two nations, wood and lake and plains,
The Monks still repeat the tradition with pride,
The obstinate pride and wanton revelry
Chanting her low-voiced hymn, take pride
Whose souls take pride in freedom, virtue, fame,
"My Art shall help to tame her pride—"
All pride; by which all happiness is blighted.
And the solidities of mortal pride,
Her trophies, Fancy crouch; the course of pride
In which the castle once took pride!
High was the trophy hung with pitiless pride;
A warrior, with his shield of pride
As if in some respect of pride;
He glanced a look of holy pride,
These Eight, and this is a day of pride!
This Banner raised with joyful pride,
These were their triumph, these their pride;
The lordly Mansion of its pride
With heart brimful of pride and joy!
Round the decaying trunk of human pride,
So vaunt a throng of Followers, filled with pride
And meekness tempering honourable pride;
Pride to be washed away by bitter tears!
Of Justice armed, and Pride to be laid low.
In thankful bosoms to a modest pride,
Imporing, or commanding with meet pride,
The poor, the lonely, herdsman's joy and pride.
"There!" said a Stripling, pointing with meet
pride

Pride where there's no envy, there's so much of joy;
For she, with scanty cause for pride,
Or art thou one of gallant pride,
Unchecked by pride or scrupulous doubt,
The pride of all the vale;
I press thee, through the yielding soil, with pride.
Not seeking in the school of pride
Then Genius, shunning fellowship with Pride,
And harboured ships, whose pride is on the sea,
Strip it the haughty one of pride,
"The frost of England's pride will soon be thawed;
Of yet more heinous guilt, with fiercer pride.
Assaults the pride she strove in vain to quell.
And cottage comfort shunned not seemly pride.

May turn indifference to pride;
Admiring, loving, and with grief and pride
What is pride?—a whizzing rocket
Pride, anger, mischief, poverty, and madness.
Heart-swollen, while in your pride ye comprehend
That I sing of old Adam, the pride of old men.
I knew the force; and hence the rough sea's pride
Take pride in him!—O Passenger, farewell!
She came, though meek of soul, in seemly pride
His pride and his delight!
Some day, to see it in its pride,
And with new joy and pride
Stately, and burning in his pride, divides
Sublime o'er Conquest, Avarice, and Pride,
The Pride of the Islands, VICTORIA THE QUEEN!

Nor needs a warning voice to tame the pride Conquered and conqueror. Thus the pride of strength,
Of pride and pleasure! to myself I seemed
And conscious step of purity and pride.
Libations, to thy memory drank, till pride
While she perused me with a parent's pride.
Attended, doubtless, with a little pride,
Glanced on their promises in restless pride.
Decked as in pride, and with outlandish grace:
Up to the loftiest towers of Pride ascend,
Or father fondly gazed upon with pride.
The pride and pleasure of all lookers-on Abandoned, and the pride of public vice:
This pretty Shepherd, pride of all the plains,
Is law for all, and of that barren pride
From the best youth in England their dear pride,
Was taken up by scoffers in their pride,
In kind more dangerous. What had been a pride,
Where knowledge leads me; it shall be my pride
Keenly industrious. She with pride would tell
Its pride of neatness. Daisy-flowers and thrift

Hypocrisy, not leagued with fear, but pride.
And fruitless indignation; galled by pride;
Hardened by impious pride!—I did not fear
Pity and scorn, and melancholy pride,
And unavenged, defeated pride,
(Only except some impulses of pride
Cast from the pedestal of pride by shocks
The trailing worm reprove her thoughtless pride?
Or pride of heart abating: and, when'er
From out the crumbling ruins of fallen pride
And pride of opportunity made poor;
Superior, insusceptible of pride,
And tears, in pride suppressed, in shame concealed—
The Vicar answered,—"No disdainful pride
A pride in having, or a fear to lose;
The household lost their pride and soul's delight.
With a gay confidence and seemly pride;
Are still permitted to extend their pride,
When joy of war and pride of chivalry
By those untravelled Dalesmen. With less pride,
Where once the dinner was prepared with pride;
Have caused her to abate the virgin pride,
(As doth his comrade too) a look of pride:
Even as she shares the pride and joy of both.
And all that ye look down upon with pride,
Changed to a crimson flower: when he, whose pride
Of ill-advised Ambition and of Pride
Could aught but envy now his pride rebuke?
Your vassal necks how poor the garter's pride!
Blush Pride to see a farmer's wife produce

Pride's. Rejoice, brave Land, though pride's perverted ire
Though pride's least lurking thought appear a wrong
Yet, yet rejoice, tho' Pride's perverted ire
Pried. Pried into Yorkshire dales, or hidden tracts
Pries. With eager eyes the Master pries;
Priest. See Druid-priest.
Thus spake the homely Priest of Ennerdale,
While half an hour went by, the Priest had sent
By this the Priest, who down the field had come,
Approached; he recognised the Priest at once,
It hung;—and mouldered there. The Priest here ended—
As the Priest lifted up the latch, turned round,—
All that the Priest had said: his early years
That night, he wrote a letter to the Priest,
I like a Runic Priest, in characters
Of the good Priest: who, faithful through all hours
For though the priest, more tranquilly,
And Romish priest, in priest's attire,
That, if the Priest should yield assent
The Council closed, the Priest in full career
Such Priest, when service worthy of his care
The Priest bestows the appointed consecration;
Weep with the good, beholding King and Priest
In Statesman, Priest, and humble Citizen:
The Vested Priest before the Altar stands;
Where priest and layman with the vigilance
Must travel, still is Nature's Priest,
A Romish chapel, where the vested priest
When squire, and priest, and they who round them dwelt

On the green turf following the vested Priest,
The priest announces from his holy seat:
Me didst thou constitute a priest of thine,
Abides, from year to year, a genuine Priest,
"Our nature," said the Priest, in mild reply,
The Priest replied—"An office you impose
Or gladness—No," the philosophic Priest
Not deviating,—a priest, the like of whom,
"That prayer were not superfluous" said the Priest,
"Yes," said the Priest, "the Genius of our hills—
"Though," said the Priest in answer, "these be terms
So, at his dwelling-place the Priest arrived
"A Priest he was by function; but his course
A Priest abides before whose life such doubts
From Age," the Priest continued, "turn your thoughts;
With a sedate compliance, which the Priest
The Priest in holy transport thus exclaimed:
Priestless. A cherished Priestess of the new-baptized!
The vestal priestess of a sisterhood who knows

Priesthood. Open or covert, be that priesthood still, Priestly. In priestly vest, with holy offerings charged,
Who thinks that priestly cunning holds the keys
Spontaneously to clothe in priestly robe
By priestly hands, for sacrifice performed
Priest's. And Romish priest, in priest's attire.
Priests. Cleared for a monarch's progress, Priests might spin
The priests are from their altars thrust;
The priests and damsels of Ammonian Jove
Bishops and Priests, blessed are ye, if deep

Priests—continued.

Bishops and Priests, think what a gulf profound
 'Mid temples, served by sapient priests, and choirs
 The patron, on the shoulders of his priests,
Primal. Fit countenance for the soul of primal truth;
 Of disobedience to the primal law.
 And still, 'mid yon thick woods, the primal truth
 On all that marked the primal flight
 In the primal sympathy
 Whose gracious favour is the primal source
 The primal duties shine aloft—like stars;
Prime. The cowslip-gathering in June's dewy prime;
 Prime mover in a plot to damn his Victim
 Was, I believed, prime Agent. The wind fell;
 He was among the prime in worth,
 Not old, though something past her prime:
 His stripling prime. A town of small repute,
 When the year was in its prime,
 That brought him up to manhood's prime.
 A soaring spirit is their prime delight.
 Fair Prime of life! were it enough to gild
 Fair Prime of life! arouse the deeper heart;
 From desolation toward the genial prime;
 But thou, who, starting in thy fervent prime,
 As were performed in man's heroic prime;
 With a thought he would flee to these haunts of his prime,
 And, gazing, saw that Rose, which from the prime Flower than the loveliest of the vernal prime
 Of a pure faith the vernal prime—
 But Daughter of the Eternal Prime!
 Both for the adventurer starting in life's prime;
 But makes his moral being his prime care;
 Luminous region, fair as if the prime

Such happy privilege hath life's gay Prime,
 Would bring him back in manhood's prime
 Nature, as in her prime, her virgin reign
 As her prime teacher, intercourse with man
 On every side, in prime of youthful strength,
 When one among the prime of these rose up—
 Was in the prime of manhood, and erewhile
 When I began in youth's delightful prime
 A prime enchantress—to assist the work
 The bliss of waking daily in life's prime
 To love as prime and chief, for there fear ends,
 The prime and vital principle is thine
 And she was in youth's prime. How free their love,
 For spendthrift feats, excesses of his prime.
 As the prime object of a wise man's aim,
 Prime, self-existing cause and end of all
 Hither, in prime of manhood, he withdrew
 Though somewhat past the fulness of his prime,
 While she was yet in prime of health and strength,
 In the prime hour of sweetest scents and airs.
 Now, when destruction is a prime pursuit,
 Who in their prime of wedlock, with joint hands

Primer. His Primer conning with an earnest cheer,
 Although I for my Primer shall be shent,
 Or puzzling through a primer, line by line,
Primeval. As man in his primeval dower arrayed
 The traces of primeval Man appear;
 Union with those primeval energies
 Far as she may, primeval Nature's style.
 Since the primeval doom. Such is the grace
 Primeval like its neighbouring cottages,
 Its own protection; a primeval grove,
 Primeval Nature's child. A creature weak
 Primeval forests wrapped these round with dark

Primitive. Where I was reared; in Nature's primitive gifts
Primrose. Pull the primrose, sister Ahne!
 While the patient primrose sits
 Had to a Primrose looked for aid
 The Primrose for a veil had spread
 And one coy Primrose to that Rock
 And to the Primrose of the Rock
 A primrose by a river's brig
 A yellow primrose was to him,
 The lonely Primrose yet renews its bloom,
 Upon a primrose bank, her throne
 Through primrose tufts, in that green bower,
 Or "the rathe primrose as it dies
 Now when the primrose makes a splendid show,
 When on its sunny bank the primrose flower
 Soon will peep forth the primrose; ere it fades

Primroses. Primroses, the Spring may love them—
 Here, thronged with primroses, the steep rock's
 breast
 Primroses will have their glory;
Primrose-time. Before last primrose-time. Belovèd
 Friend!
Primrose-tuft. Housed near the growing Primrosetuft
 Since first I spied that Primrose-tuft

Prince. In thoughtful reverence to the Prince of Peace,
 O murdered Prince! meek, loyal, pious, brave!
 Better fate have PRINCE and SWALLOW—
 Prince, in these collegiate bowers,
 And the PRINCE whom we greet

Prince—continued.

Yet doth remembrance, like a sovereign prince,
 Are these the studies that besem a prince?
 Go, modern Prince, at Henry's Tomb proclaim Princely. Was princely Dion, in the power
 Released from life and cares of princely state,
 How Verse may build a princely throne
 Upon a princely company below,
 And softly touched; but, to his princely cheer
 Holy as princely, who that looks on thee
Princes. More fresh, more bright, than princes wear;
 Mirror of Princes! Indigent Renown
 Move Princes to their duty, peace or war;
 Whose merchants Princes were, whose docks were thrones;
 Not to be tracked or fathered. Princes then
 Princes, ad emperors, and the crowns and palms
Princess. "Princess fair, I till the ground, but may not take
 "Princess, at this burst of goodness,
 "Feeling tunes your voice, fair Princess!
 Done to the Princess, and her Land
 The Princess, passive to all changes:
 Here, where the Princess lies, begin the trial;
 Negro princess, ebon bright!
 Sable princess, ebon bright.

Principalties. —Melt, Principalties, before hcr melt!
Principle. "Tis that worst principle of ill which dooms
 And sound in principle, I seek repose
 If to expedience principle must bow;
 In the great social principle of life
 A never-failing principle of joy
 The prime and vital principle is thine
 The thinking principle—shall they in fact
 The joy of that pure principle of love
 The inward principle that gives effect
 "An active Principle!—how'er removed Principle's. Of vital principle's controlling law,
Principles. For in the principles of things
 All principles of action that transcend

Shape for mankind, by principles as fixed,
 To notice old forgotten principles,
 The immediate proof of principles no more
 With the adverse principles of pain and joy—
 In their unhalloved principles; the bad
 Is yet preserved to principles of truth,
 His privacy to principles and powers
 That basis laid, those principles of faith
Print. The first whose footsteps print the mountain dew.
 The print of Lucy's feet.
 Well pleased, her foot should print earth's common grass,
 And yet not utterly. I could not print
Printed. Even while he printed kisses on the cheek
 Yet, haply, on the printed page received,
 Of printed books and authorship, began
 Prompt as the voice, held forth a printed speech,
Printing. Whether printing desert sands
 Then followed Printing with enlarged command Printless. While, free as air, o'er printless sands we march,
Prior. When the Prior of Durham with holy hand
Priores. By which the Priores beguiled the way,
Prior's. Who sate in the shade of the Prior's Oak!
Priory. To Bolton's mouldering Priory.
 Rose up, this stately Priory!
 New life in Bolton Priory;
 Bear it to Bolton Priory,
 In the Churchyard of the Priory.
 Toward Bolton's ruined Priory.
 A stately Priory!"
 The stately Priory was reared;
Prism. Of Newton with his prism and silent face,
Prismatic. Prismatic colours from the sun;
Prison. Descending, shuts for aye his prison door.
 His person to the law, was lodged in prison,
 And in a prison housed;
 She from her prison fled;
 In truth the prison, unto which we doom
 Ourselves, no prison is: and hence for me,
 Slips from his prison walls: and Fancy, free
 Even at this hour. And thou Mamertine prison,
 While to the prison they are borne,
 "And so in Prison were they laid—
 Or He, whose bonds dropped off, whose prison doors
 And in his prison breathes celestial air.
 Yet might your glassy prison seem
 That from his hauble prison used to cast
 From out thy noisome prison;
 The prison where the unhappy Monarch lay,
 Their life's appointed prison; not more free

Prison-bars. Imbue your prison-bars with solemn sheen,
Prisoner. "Prisoner! pardon youthful fancies,
 Nor friendless he, the prisoner of the mine,
 Such was this prisoner once; and when his plumes
 'A Prisoner once, but now set free!
 Canst reach the Prisoner—to his grated cell

 Tamper with conscience from a private aim;
 But, under pressure of a private grief,
 To private interest dead, and public care.
 Of private life licentious displayed
 Of public news or private; years that pass
 And, in the private regions of the mind,
 Of truth and justice. Turn to private life
 And from the private struggles of mankind
 As their own private monument: for this

 Trained up through piety and zeal to prize
 That never set the pains against the prize;
 When first I learnt, that this dear prize of mine
 I did not hunt after, nor greatly prize,
 And twice ten thousand interests, do yet prize
 To prize the breath we share with human kind;
 Nor summoned to contend for virtue's prize,
 Fondly to prize the silence which he kept,
 There too did Fancy prize the murmuring wheel;

Profanation—continued.

Debased and under profanation, made . . . K.8. 246 Recluse 1.1.342
Profane. That threaten the profane; a pillared shade.
Profane Despoilers, stand ye not reproved,
By no profane ambition, Powers that thrive
One with profane and harsh intent
Perhaps for touch profane,
Hadst shared, when, from profane regards apart,
Motions not treacherous or profane, else why
That would profane the sanctity of verse.
Profaneness. "And shall," the Pontiff asks, "profaneness flow
Profanor. "Triumph who will in these profaner rites
Profane. Here, where no trace of man the spot Profess. As Truth herself, whom they profess to seek.
Professed. See Profest.
That he professed; attached to him in heart;
As by some tie invisible, oaths professed
Can carry virtue, virtue is professed;
Professedly. Professedly, to others titled higher,
Profession. Profession mocks performance. Earth is sick
Profest. See Professed.
Of good or bad (what'er he sought for or profest)
Proffer. And came her services to proffer;
Proffered. But on all proffered intercourse did lay
The fond heart proffered it—the servile heart;
Whose proffered beauty in safe shelter blows
Accepts from your bold hands the proffered crown
Received my proffered aid.
The Captive shunned all converse proffered there.
No thanks he breathed, he proffered no request;
Proffered to all, while yet on earth detained.
Proffers. Half grot, half arbour—proffers to enclose Proficient. Your pupil is, you see, an apt proficient
To a proficient of the tragic scene
A grave proficient in amusive feats
Profiri. So, but from toil less sign of profit reaping,
O may these lessons be with profit scanned
And profit by those kindly rays
Says to the Living, profit while ye may!
What profit riches? what does your avail?
Whence profit may be drawn in times to come.
Or profit unto any but ourselves.
Profitable. A profitable life: some glance along,
More profitable also; for the mind
Too young for any profitable task.
Profited. Be little profited, would see, and ask Profitless. All profitless dejection;
How profitless the relics that we cull,
But these had fallen for profitless regret
Nor profitless, if haply they impressed
And deem not profitless those fleeting moods
To inquisition, long and profitless!
And mostly profitless. And, sooth to say,
Are profitless to others. Turn we then
Profits. Or question deep? what profits all that earth,
Profound. Toll, small as pygmies in the gulf profound;
The distant forge's swinging thump profound;
Or lurk in woody sunless glens profound,
In some dense wood or gulf of snow profound,
Innumerable streams with roar profound.
Into the gulf profound.
Warning solemn and profound.
Profound his forehead was, though not severe;
Profound entreaties, and hand-shaking!
Of vast circumference and gloom profound
Solitary, clear, profound,
Or when the church-clock's knell profound
Profound of night's ethereal blue;
Tier under tier, this semicircle profound?
And rolls the planets through the blue profound;
O listen! for the Vale profound (Albeit of effect profound)
And makes this rural stillness more profound.
But list! in the avalanche—the hush profound.
The most profound repose his cell can give.
The starry treasure from the blue profound
Confirmed the deed in peace profound.
Bishops and Priests, think what a gulf profound
He felt with spirit so profound.
Chastised by self-abasement more profound,
They know the dread requital's source profound;
Disturb its solitude profound.
Or drops his anchor down with plunge profound;
And one sole light shifts in the vale profound;
And neighbouring moon, that coasts the vast profound,
Unnumber'd streams with hollow roar profound.
In quiet more profound;
To more profound repose!
Solid and light, short-sighted and profound;
A character of quiet more profound
A pleasure quiet and profound, a sense
Hushed in profound repose. We left the town
Vivid the transport, vivid though not profound;
Of that profound abyss a solemn voice,

Profound—continued.

For quietness profound! Upon the side
Profounder. Profounder quiet, when the fit retires,
To the profounder stillness of the grave.
Profoundest. Light deepening the profoundest sleep of shade.
Profoundest knowledge to what point, and how,
Is heaven's profoundest azure; no domain
Profusely. For sway profoundly felt as widely spread;
An impulse more profoundly dear
Profuse. Profuse in garniture of wooden cuts Profusely. And outer spray profusely tipped with seeds
Along the window's edge, profusely grew
Grey locks profusely round his temples hung Profusion. Profusion bright! and every flower assuming of shade.
Progenitor. Alfred, dear Bahe, thy great Progenitor!
Progenitors. Ye heavenly Birds! to your Progenitors.
Where their serene progenitors are laid;
Their fugitive Progenitors explored
From your progenitors, have ye received,
Upon our brave Progenitors, who rose
Profy. In you, which that fair progeny of Jove
Hastless progey. A humble walk
Of all thy feathered progeny
Own—that the progeny of this fair Isle
Of all thy progeny
To waff the heroic progeny of Greece;
To bind his spiritual Profogy, with rules
Up to the flowers whose golden progeny
Modest and sweet, a progeny of earth,
Returned,—a progeny of golden years.
All other progeny—Goth sometimes lure,
Of other progeny, a Daughter then Prognostications. Hopeful prognostications from a creed,
Prognostics. Prognostics that ye rule;
Progress. May in its progress see thy guiding hand,
Cleared for a monarch's progress. Priests might spin
Whose progress had a little overstepped
And first;—thy sinless progress, through a world
No—sad progress of my story!
Upwards and downwards, progress intricate
And in its sparkling progress read
The Birds with progress smooth and swift
Held; but in radiant progress toward the Deep
Confirmed alike in progress and decline.
You, on whose progress dazzling trains await Wanderer by spring with gradual progress led,
This straight-lined progress, furrowing a flat lea,
In progress toward the fount of Love,—the throne
And gradual progress?—Twilight leads to day,
Or, in its progress, under laws divine, maintained,
Our Being's earthly progress,) blest the Babe,
Much pains and little progress, and at once
In progress through this Verse, my mind hath looked
That in the unreasoning progress of the world
In progress from their native continent
To note the laws and progress of belief;
Though surely no mean progress had been made
Complacently the progress of a cause,
The spacious city, and in progress passed.
All else was progress on the self-same path
In one perpetual progress smooth and bright?—
And lastly, from its progress have we drawn
To an attentive eye. For progress meet,
He had observed the progress and decay
All further progress here was barred;—And who,
And unremitting progress to ensure
On generations, without progress made?
With an ascent and progress in the main;
Or, in its progress, on the lofty side
Alternate progress and impediment Progressive. (And the progressive powers perhaps no less
Or for progressive virtue, by the search
Project. A shallow project;—you of late have seen
His project crowned, his pleasant travel o'er?
Projecting. High on the trunk's projecting brow, Projection. With huge and black projection over-browed
But in projection carried, as she walked
Projections. From the projections, wrinkles, cavities,
With hold projections and recesses deep;
Projects. How baffled projects on the spirit-prey,
Of holdst projects, and a peaceful end
Hail to the mighty projects of the time!
Ambitious projects, pleased me less; I sought
Of open projects, and his inward hoard
Prolific. And while the youthful year's prolific art—
Prolong. Inferior to angelical, they prolong
Yet why prolong this mournful strain?—Fallen Power,
The service to prolong!
In woman's shape. But why prolong the tale,

Prolong—continued.

Know, if thou grudge not to prolong thy rest,
From memory, prolong thy stay
That seek you pool, and there prolong thy stay

Prolongation. The prolongation of some still response,
Prolonged. Prolonged beneath the bordering deep;
Echo prolonged a tell-tale sound
Were, in the conscious sea, roused and prolonged
Prolonged in summer till the day-light failed:
Deftly prolonged, though grey-haired lookers on
Prolonged till sprinklings of autumnal snow
Their dread vibration to this hour prolonged?
From day to night, from night to day, prolonged!"
Did, after trials not in vain prolonged,
Prolongs. Sole sound, the Sourd prolongs his mournful cry;
That vale or hill prolongs or multiplies!
Promethean. Hast loved the painter's true Promethean craft
All freaks of nature, all Promethean thoughts
Prometheus. That ancient story of Prometheus chained
Prominent. His prominent feature like an eagle's beak;
In everything that stood most prominent,
Of luckless rock or prominent stone, disguised
Promiscuous. 'Mid casual tokens and promiscuous shows
Promises. All cannot be: the promise is too fair
Upon that promise, nor the hope disown;
With rays of promise, north and southward sent;
And for that promise spare the flower!
The promise of a mother. To conceal
That wert a promise to me ere thy birth,
"This morning gives us promise of a glorious day."
Even for such promise—serious is her face,
Whose zeal outruns his promise! Blue-eyed May
A land of promise and of pride
Mild dawn of promise! that excludes
What joy to read the promise of her men!
And to the attendant promise will give heed—
And neither hope nor steadfast promise yield
Bright be thy course to-day, let not this promise fail!
No breach of promise in the fruit?
No promise. Still, in more than ear-deep seats,
Do neither promise ask nor grace implore
To a sincere repentance promise grace,
A timely promise of unlooked-for fruit,
For promise fails of Howard's aid;
Now promise, grant this one request,
What hath he done? what promise made?
The promise in that speaking face;
Shall, by regenerate life, the promise claim.
The solemn promise. Strongest sinews fail,
Pity that such a promise e'er should prove
From hope and promise, self-betrayed;
Flattered with promise of escape
Instinct with light whose sweetest promise lies,
Whispering of promise, where no blight
The promise in thy song;
The Promise, with uplifted ear;
From tossing boughs, the promise of a calm,
How treacherous to her promise, is the world;
Comes in the promise from the Cross,
Remembering the bold promise of the past,
Which Fate, beyond the promise of their birth,
Their highest promise. If the mariner,
A promise scarcely earthly. Instantly,
The town of Arras, whence with promise high
Of promise, nor relying the kind hope
The beauty wose of promise—that which sets
A pleasant promise, waited from her shores,
The promise of the present time retired
Who to the letter of the outward promise
The written promise! Early had he learned
But speedily the promise was fulfilled;
When in the sky no promise may be seen,
Might, by the promise that is here, be won
A dedication made, a promise given
Replete with vivid promise, bright as spring."
Of unexpected promise, where a grief
The Christian promise with attentive ear;
But turned not without welcome promise made
Promised. And what was holdly promised, truly shall be done.
Began the promised Tale.
We've reached at last the promised Tale)
That promised to cut short the way;
Weighing the mischief with the promised gain,
And, as I promised, I will tell
No tempest from his breath, their promised rest
Their all of promised lustre, wait in vain.
The promised hiding-place;
It promised to defend
He promised comfort; and the flattering thoughts
Has failed; too slowly moves the promised work.
Promised soft peace and sweet forgetfulness.
That promised to abstract the hopes of Man

Promised—continued.

Promised, now is; & far more sober cause
Of humble industry that promised best
That promised everlasting joy to France!
I promised also,—with undaunted trust
Promises. And for its promises to future years,
Nor for the world's best promises renounced.
Sweet records, promises as sweet;
Of promises, shrill, wild, and sweet!
And so, His gifts and promises between,
All promises vouchsafed by Heaven will shine
Nor aught that makes men's promises a blank,
For airy promises and hopes suborned.
Blest the starry promises,—
Fields gaily sown when promises were cheap.—
With any promises of human life),
Bring with them vernal promises, the hope
Conversed with promises, had glimmering views
With all its pleasant promises, was gone
Glanced on their promises in restless pride.
Gladly the highest promises, and hail,
Its petty promises, to build a tower
With loftiest promises of good and fair.
Such grateful promises his youth displayed:
—With promises the Hebrew Scriptures teem:
"Which reason promises, and holy writ
That promises to the end a blest old age!"
Smitten while all the promises of life
Yet to the measure of thy promises Promising. Flowers to measure and promising with buds and flowers
And promising to keep his hold on earth
Or bold adventure; promising to skill
Promontories. Lake, islands, promontories, gleaming bays,
Promontory. Like a lone shepherd on a promontory
In headlands, tongues, and promontory shapes,
Promote. But to promote and fortify the weal
The Soul's eternal interests to promote:
Love to promote and purity and peace;
Good to promote or curb depravity,
Enjoining, as may best promote the aims
What countenance to promote this second love!
Gods which themselves had fashioned, to promote Promotion. Office, alliance, and promotion—all Prompt. Herbert is innocent. What fiend could prompt
And in his shepherd's calling he was prompt
And prompt to many a gentle deed:
The Waggoner, with prompt command,
'Tis what can be most prompt and eager;
Prompt voyage shall to you reveal
Prompt, lively, self-sufficing, yet so meek
More prompt, more glad, to fall than drops of dew
With prompt embrace all beauty to enfold,
The prompt, the brave,
And prompt to welcome every gleam
In prompt obedience to spontaneous measures
And prompt self-sacrifice to which I owe
And enter, with prompt aid from the Most High,
Of a baptized imagination, prompt
To learn thy course; farewell! be prompt and steady."
Prompt offering to thy Foster-mother, Earth!
With prompt emotion, urging them to pass;
To prompt the thought?—Upon the steep rock's
breast
And prompt a harmony of genuine powers;
For prompt forgiveness will not sue in vain.
Was then reviewed, and prompt word given,
Prompt transformation works the novel Lore;
And lays as prompt would hail the dawn of Night:
Yet none so prompt to succour and protect
For the unconscious Babe so prompt-a love!)—
Its duties;—prompt to move, but firm to wait,
Then let the Book receive in these prompt lines
Still let him prompt the unlettered villagers
And gave to Bitias, urging the prompt lord;
Are prompt attendants, 'mid that giddy bliss
Nor will it seem to thee, O Friend! so prompt
With prompt rebound seemed fresh as heretofore.
So be it, if the pure of heart be prompt
Passions more fervent, making me less prompt
Went back to Granta's cloisters, not so prompt
Is prompt, or slow, to feel. What say you, then,
Prompt as the voice, held forth a printed speech,
But by their quickening impulse made more prompt
Prompt answer; they proclaim the annual Wake,
And prompt to exhibit all that he possessed
To urge unthinkingly their prompt departure,
She stilled them with a prompt reproof, and said,
Her Father's prompt attendant, does for him
Generous and charitable, prompt to serve;
Prompt utterance; but the Vicar interposed
The Wanderer ever welcome! A prompt kiss
Used or abused, as selfishness may prompt.
With prompt yet careful hands. "This done, we paced
Prompt aid, forgiveness speedy and entire.
Prompted. See Heaven-prompted, Love-prompted.

Prompted—continued.

Mankind of yore were prompted to devise
That prompted even a sigh.
Which love had prompted, yielding scope
And yours, love prompted me to make.
Prompter's. And mocks the prompter's listening.
Marvellous things
Promptest. And all the promptest of her spirits, linked
Prompting. That child of winter, prompting thoughts that climb
Prompting the world's audacious vanities!
Of many fancies, prompting many hands.
Promptly. The captive promptly coos;
Departed promptly as a Page
More promptly rises, walks with stricter heed,
Such as will promptly flow from every breast,
Who promptly undertook the Wain to guide
So promptly from her lofty throe?—
Promptly replied—"My notion is the same.
In others ye shall promptly find;—and all,
I spake with vehemence; and promptly seized
Promptly received, as prodigally brought,
But we are kindly welcomed—promptly served Promptness. With an obsequious promptness, yet the storm
Prompts. That Nature prompts them to display, their looks,
That prompts such work, a Spirit strong,
With praise, as genuine admiration prompts.
Earth prompts—Heaven urges; let us seek the light,
(What weakness prompts the voice to tell it here?)
As impotent fancy prompts, by his fireside,
What other spirit can it be that prompts
This, self-respecting Nature prompts, and this
Instructs, and prompts her to supply defects Promulgate. The laws to promulgate, enrobed and crowned;
Prono. Shame on you, feeble Heads, to slavery prone!
Of inexperienced judgment, ever prone
Have rendered prone, can upward look to heaven;
(Depaved, and ever prone to fill the mind
Pronounce. Their honours, and should, once for all,

Epitomise the life; pronounce, you can,
As we pronounce them, doing them much wrong,
Pronounced. The sentence, by her mother's lip pronounced,
"A watchword was pronounced, a potent sound—
Duly pronounced with lusty call,
That name—pronounced with a dying fall—
Pronounced the word,—and the Earls descry,
That sullen stroke pronounced farewell
Pronounced the name of HOPE:—The conscious child
The same that had been recently pronounced,
I cannot tell how she pronounced my name!—
Hath mournfully pronounced, then, in my mind,
Of the encomiums by my Friend pronounced
Let judgment here in mercy be pronounced;
A century shall hear his name pronounced,
By the almighty Lawgiver pronounced
Pronounces. Pronounces, ne'er abandons Charity.
Pronouncing. Trust me, pronouncing on your own desert,
Proof. See Air-proof, Shower-proof, Storm-proof,
Sun-proof, Time-proof, Wrong-proof.
Two columns, one for passion, one for proof;
Passion a unit and against us—proof—
Shall be a unit for us; proof—no, passion!
We'll go together, and, such proof received
Proof after proof was pressed upon me; guilt
Proof shalt thou furnish that misfortune, pain,
Proof that the hermitess still lives,
Full proof of this the Country gained;
The CHERRY TREE shows proof of this;
Till, not incensed though put to proof,
Far less could this with proof be said;
And in its silence even, no heart is proof;
Have I received this proof of pains bestowed
Affections which, if put to proof, are kind;
And shrubs, whose pleasant looks gave proof how kind
Came to the proof, nor grieved that there ensued
His budding courage to the proof; and here
Bold proof that with no selfish aim,
They hem him round—"Behold the proof,"
And put her fortitude to proof;
Like thoughts whose very sweetness yieldeth proof
A knight of proof in love's beoof,
Yes, proof was plain that, since the day
Claimed by proof upon the Horn:
"To put your love to dangerous proof
Whereof her hourly hearing proof doth give;
She of her liking proof to me would give;
Through ignorance and false teaching, sadder proof
Though with such awful proof before their eyes
Not proof against the injuries of the day;
The immediate proof of principles no more

Proof—continued.

The sanction; till, demanding formal proof,
Be proof of gratitude for what we have;
Deem not that proof is here of hope withheld
To see disclosed, by such dread proof, how ill
Mortality's last exercise and proof
And little would his presence, or proof given
This tale gives proof that Heaven most gently deals
Was put to proof, and exercise supplied
In this one Man is shown a temperance—proof
"Beings like these present! But proof abounds
Proof of the sacred love she bears for all;
It put the temper of our minds to proof,
Fair proof of this, newcomer though I be.
Proofs. But hear the proofs— Ay, prove that when two peas
But not destroyed. The proofs—you ought to have seen
Hard by a Man I met, who, from plain proofs
I have the proofs!—O miserable Father!
Proofs of a higher sovereignty I claim;
Proofs thickening round her that on public ends
Of proofs and reasons ye preclude—in those Prop. And friends too rarely poor the languid head.
By more deserving brows.—Yet so ye prop,
The towering maize, and prop the twig
Can prop, as you have learnt, our nobler being:
One prop he has, and only one,
Who shall preserve or prop the tottering Realm?
But as a succedaneum, and a prop
I tremble yet to think of—our last prop,
(Full eight years past) the solitary prop
Propagate. The wandering beggars propagate his name,
And propagate, by liberty of life,
And propagate its kind, far as he may?
Propagating.—So bad proceeded propagating worse;
Propelled. By doubt, propelled thee to the fatal shore;
Propels. And, as the sea propels, from zone to zone, Propensities. Of fine propensities, that tends, if urged
Propensity. Distracted in propensity; content Proper. With proper speed our quarters may be gained
If the wind do but stir for his proper delight,
Disparaging Man's gifts, and proper food.
Labour their proper greatness to subdue;
Tardily sinking by its proper weight
As in a mansion like their proper home,
Its sport, or feeds in its proper element;
In some sort seeing with my proper eyes
Of modern statist to their proper test,
Have still the keeping of their proper peace;

Propitious. Propitious to your earth-born light !
Of the propitious hour, thou may'st perceive
With something more propitious to high aims
In many a calm propitious hour,
In polar ice, propitious winds have made
Propitious hour ! had we, like them, endured
Caught at propitious intervals, may wia
Proportion. To fit proportion with my altered state !
Dependence infinite, proportion just ;
Of colour and proportion ; to the moods
Into its true proportion ; sanguine schemes,
Their due proportion, under all the weight
If, in proportion, it be just and meet,
In due proportion to their country's need ;
Proportions. Of those proportions where the almighty hand
Proportions more harmonious, and approached
That here in dwarf proportions were expressed
More rational proportions ; mystery,
Not raised in nice proportions was the pile,
And undisturbed proportions ; but a thing
Their fair proportions ; nor the blinder rage
Proposed. To be cast off, upon an oath proposed
Or of the end stops short, proposed to all Propounds. Toward the pure truths this Delegate propounds,
Propped. We propped his steps, he leaned upon us both.
Himself he propped, limbs, body, and pale face,
His head upon his elbow propped,
Her body propped against his knee,
Propped on a staff, and, through the sullen day,

A mile-stone propped him ; I could also ken
Stood, propped against a wall, upon his chest
Propping. Propping a pale and melancholy face
Proprietor. Thou, thou art king, and sole proprietor.
Props. Imprisoned 'mid the formal props
Whatever props may fail,
These humble props disclaimed not ! O green dales !
The props of my affections were removed,
Each to the other, and the curious props
And sundry moral sentiments as props Proscribed. Proscribed the spirit fostered by that rule.
Proscription. As merciless proscription ebbs and flows.
Prose. Shall be thy rightful name, in prose and rhyme !
Now prose and verse sunk into disrepute
For I'd take my last leave both of verse and of prose.
With copious eulogy in prose or rhyme
Whether by native prose, or numerous verse,
Prosecution. In prosecution of their deadly chase, Proserpine. Fit for the glimmering hrow of Prose-pine.
Prospect. With towers and woods, a " prospect all on fire ;"
In sea-like reach of prospect round him spread,
A pretty prospect this, a masterpiece
Alone amid a prospect wide ;
Stood single, with large prospect, north and south,
Of unobstructed prospect may be seen
Or, in no doubtful prospect, let me see
May in life's daily prospect find,
" On a fair prospect some have looked
Of prospect, whereof many thousands tell.
And even the prospect of our brethren slain,
Fair prospect, such as Britain only shows !
She vanished ; leaving prospect blank and cold
How sweet the prospect of yon watery glade,
And prospect right below of deep caves shaped
Conjoined in prospect mutable or fixed
Here wants not stealthy prospect, that may tempt
Our inward prospect over,
But the familiar prospect shed
Upon a prospect without bound.
Such is the prospect far as sight can range,
To glide in open prospect through clear sky.
With golden prospect for futurity,
Cheered with the prospect of a brighter day,
Rich prospect left behind of stream and vale,

Could strip, for aught the prospect yields
Is all his prospect. Thus, from day to day,
Where silver rocks the savage prospect cheer
O'er as we move, a softer prospect opens,
Of weedless herbs a healthier prospect sees,
Are mine in prospect ; whither shall I turn,
A prospect in the mind. "I were long to tell
It was a goodly prospect ; for, in sooth,
And giddy prospect of the raving stream,
With distant prospect among gleams of sky
What temper at the prospect did not wake
Prospect so large into futurity ;
Gave intermitting prospect of the cope
Vast prospect of the world which I had been Renowned for splendid prospect far and wide)
Shut out from prospect of the open vale,
But stoop, and place the prospect of the soul

Prospect—continued.

Then will a vernal prospect greet your eye,
A dismal prospect yields the wild shore strewn
With prospect of the company within.
Aloft, in prospect of the shouting field !
With no unworthy prospect. But enough ;
Fair prospect, intercepted less and less,
And doubled (prospect ever bettering)
With prospect underneath of Striding edge,
In prospect far above the denser air
And yet a growing prospect in the main.
Prospective. And by the care prospective of our wise Prospects. Henceforth new prospects open on your path ;
Unfolding prospects fair as human eyes
And prospects of the inferior Creature !
—No purple prospects now the mind employ
Her prospects, nor did he believe,—he saw,
Had vanished from his prospects and desires ;
Prosper. Will prosper, though untended and alone ;
For the still growths that prosper here ?
Heaven prosper thee, be hope thy guide !
Prosper the new-horn College of St. Bees !
Heaven prosper it ! may peace, and love,
Go forth and prosper ; and, ye purging fires,
And flowers that prosper in the shade. And who Prospered. And grateful Britain prospered far above
Think how ye prospered, 'thou and thine,
When Wisdom prospered in his sight
That, if France prospered, good men would not long
How they had prospered ; how they were o'er-thrown
Prosperities. That the prosperities of love and joy
Prosperity. He who in proud prosperity
Prosperity subverted, maddening want,
Prosperous. Oh find me, prosperous or undone !
In this distress. He is a prosperous man,
And so hath gained at length a prosperous height,
On prosperous tyrants with a dazzled eye ;
Or needful sunshine ; prosperous enterprise,
Prosperous or adverse, to his wish or not—
This just reproof the prosperous Dane
The prosperous and unthinking, they who live
Than talents, worth, and prosperous industry.
Of prosperous fortune. On the fields he looked Prostrate. Though the red Flower, not prostrate, only droops,
Have souls which never yet have risen, and therefore prostrate lie ?
Thy call a prostrate Nation can restore,
That overwhelmed and prostrate lies,
When haughty expectations prostrate lie,
Not prostrate, not like those that rest
'Tis ever thus. Ye men of prostrate mind,
—O prostrate Lands, consult your agonies !
By admonition from this prostrate Stone !

For all that tottering stands or prostrate lies,
None bleed, and none lie prostrate but the foe ;
Of prostrate altars, shrines defaced,
The prostrate, then my spring-time is renewed,
When Europe prostrate lay, the Conqueror's aim,
While all lie prostrate, save the tyrant few
And prostrate at some moment when remorse
Not prostrate, overborne, as if the mind
Prostrate, or leaning towards their common rest
Her prostrate frame with unrelaxing power, Prostrated. How are the mighty prostrated ! They first,
Protean. As if some Protean art the change had wrought,
A Protean change seems wrought while I pursue
Protect. May He whose eye is over all protect you !
Will bring me back—protect him, Saints—farewell !
And helpless innocence—do they protect
But to protect themselves from extirpation ?—
Who lives but to protect the weak or injured,
Torn from the Poor ! yet shall kind Heaven protect
Or muse in solemn grove whose shades protect
And, strenuous to protect from lawless harms

Even so doth God protect us if we be Mother of Love ! for this deep vale, protect Protect from heating sunbeams, and the sweep
Protect them ; and the eternal snow that daunts
Of a shrewd Counsellor, eager to protect
That shall protect from blasphemy the Land.
Yet none so prompt to succour and protect
Protect us, then deciphering as we may

Shame that our laws at distance still protect
And Love protect it from all injury !
Whose shades protect the hidden vale serene ;
Of winter, and protect that pleasant place,
Whose oath had virtue to protect the land
Long to protect her own. The man himself
For they protect his walk from sun and shower,
Protected. See Long-Protected.
Kindly have you protected me to-night,
Protected from this cold damp air ?

Protected—continued.

Yon old grey Stone, protected from the ray
Remaineth one protected part;
A spear,—and, so protected, watched
There hears, protected by the woods behind,
He walked—protected from the sword of war
By this dark hill protected from thy beams!
How tenderly protected! Far and near
That, mutually protected and sustained,
Protected, say enlightened, by his ear;
And flowering shrubs, protected and adorned:
Protecting. There was a time, when this protecting hand
For thy protecting care,
The fold protecting, I myself, mature Protection. But wherefore slight protection such as you
Made weakness a protection, and obscured
By obvious signal to the world's protection
That, for protection from the nipping blast,
The firm protection she bestows;
A covert for protection
Ah no! though Nature's dread protection fails,
For silence and protection;
To Thy protection for a safe abode.
Sailed! (hear me, Merlin!) "under high protection,
Of their protection, gentle virtues thrive;
Its own protection; a primeval grove,
And best protection, this Imperial Realm,
For the protection of his innocence;
A power and a protection for the mind,
His Grace and his protection win the prize.
Protector. You a protector of humanity!
Of a protector, the first filial tie
Protectors. I found in you the kindest of Protectors;
Protectress. Merciful protectress, kindling
Protects. Protects the lingering dew-drop from the Sun.
In that delightful island which protects
But a mere mountain-chapel, that protects Protending. His staff protending like a hunter's spear.
Protesiláus. "Protesiláus, lo! thy guide is gone!
Protest. And constant voice, protest against the wrong.
Protestants. See Compatriot-protestants.
Proteus. Have sight of Proteus rising from the sea;
Protracted. Of gentler thought, protracted till thine eye
A blessed Man! who of protracted days
Protracted, and the twilight storm foretells,
Protracted yelling, like the noise of wolves
Protracted among endless solitudes;
I have protracted, in the unwearied heavens
Near and more near; for this protracted strain
Protruded. Just half protruded to the light of morn,
Of yon black Yew-tree, whose protruded haughts
Proud. See Purse-proud.
And round the west's proud lodge their shadows
throw,
Pile of Stone-henge! so proud to hint yet keep
But soon, with proud parade, the noisy drum
To a proud Soul.—Nobody loves this Oswald—
To make the proud and vain his tributaries
Of which I have been proud. O my poor Master!
That looked up at the sky so proud and big
Proud creature was she the next day,
Of any wonder Normandy, or all proud France, can boast!"
"God for His service needeth not proud work of human skill;
Proud as a rainbow spanning half the vale,
Can I be proud that jealous fear
Proud was I that my country bred
Proud of herself, and proud of him,
Daughter of the proud Soldan;
Yet might'st thou seem, proud privilege! to sing
"But now proud thoughts are in your breast—
Proud be the rose, with rains and dews
With menace proud, and insult loud,
That Star, so proud of late, looked wan;
Over happy to be proud,
And Reason's godlike Power be proud to own.
And with proud cause my heart is light:
Thus they, with freaks of proud delight,
Tricked out in proud disguise of cast-off weeds
O blest are the hearers, and proud be the hand
Is proud to walk the earth with Thee!
Ye daunt the proud array of war,
And would ye, tracking your proud lord the Sun,
Fully surely, when with such proud gifts of life
And proud Jerusalem!
A proud One docile as a managed horse;
Entering the proud Jerusalem,
And proud discoveries of the intellect,
Yet no proud gladness would the Bride display
Rein the proud steed, or through the dance are led;

Proud—continued.

And might of its own beauty have been proud,
Proud were ye, Mountains, when, in times of old,
Proud thoughts that Image overawes,
Proud Gordon, maddened by the thoughts
The proud heart flashing through the eyes,
And proud she was of heart, when clad
Proud Remnant was he of a fearless Race,
Which lingering Nin is proud to show
Stoop their proud heads, but not unto the dust—
He, whose heaped waves confounded the proud boast.
So shall the characters of that proud page
Even the proud Realm, from whose distracted borders
The very humblest are too proud of heart;
In the proud Isle of liberty!
A sea-green river, proud to lave,
Of a proud Ararat! and, thereupon,
A shattered Convent, yet rose proud to have
That name, a local Phantom proud to mock
And yon resplendent Church are proud to bear.
Faith crushed, yet proud of weeds, her gaudy
crown;
From the proud margin of the Thames,
Proud tomb is none; but rudely-sculptured knights,
Proud be this Land! whose poorest huts are halls
Proud was the field of Sons and Sire;
He who in proud prosperity
How proud and happy they! the crowd
Of Lookers-on how pleased and proud!
Realms quake by turns: proud Arbitress of grace,
At a proud Legate's feet! The spears that line
Proud Glastonbury can no more raise
Proud Tiber grieves, and far-off Ganges, blind
(Proud triumph is it for a sullen Queen!)
Of proud Self-will, Rapacity, and Lust
Of a proud slavery met by tenets strained
Of the proud Bearer. To the wide church-door,
Upon the proud enslavers of mankind!
Might seem designed to humble man, when proud
Strewn far and wide. Think, proud Philosopher!
The inviolable God, that tames the proud!
In those proud days, he little cared
An age bath been when Earth was proud
Thought of gorgeous drapery proud,
On proud towers, like this humble cottage, blest
Can such a One, dear Babe! though glad and proud
Thou and thy train are proud to look,
Where sea-nymphs might be proud to dwell:
On proud deliverance issuing out of pain
On proud temptations, till the victim groaned
On that proud pageant now at hand or past,
The soaring lark is blest as proud
He proud to please, above all rivals, fit
Which She is pleased and proud to call her own,
E'er struggled with a heart so proud,
And proud hearts can make tremble in a trice.
To rid the world of nuisances; ye proud,
Where proud Covent-garden, in desolate hours
Obdurate, proud, and blind,
However proud and strong.
Proud of the varying arch and moveless form of snow.
Though in virtue's proud mouth thy report he a stain,
And goblets crown the proud festivity,
Puts off his wings, and walks with proud delight,
And, proud of her award,
Proud spring-tide swellings for a regular sea,
Proud of his skill, to reach a chosen point
Proud and exulting like an untired horse
We from our funds drew largely;—proud to curb,
Proud of its own bright fire and sycamore shade.
By the proud name she hears—the name of Heaven.
And kindred, proud rebellion and unkind.
The saucy air. In this proud company
Tricked out for that proud use, if I perchance
The times, too sage, perhaps too proud, have dropped
To sanction the proud workings of the soul,
Who was not lost, abandoned, selfish, proud,
Spared not the empty throne, and in proud haste
When the proud feet that bears the red-cross flag
From her first ground expelled, grew proud once more.
Proud of her own endowments, and rejoiced
Could scarcely hold a bridle, with proud hopes
A proud and most presumptuous confidence
Whose skill had thronged the floor with a proud
show
Sparkle the stars, as of their station proud.
A proud communication with the sun
To proud Self-love her own intelligence;
And proud insensibility to hope,
—Stoop from your height, ye proud, and copy
these!
He had descended from the proud saloon,
To suit this place; yet built in no proud scorn

Prouder—continued.

They soon were proud of; tended it and nursed; With no engagement, in his thoughts, more proud "All that this world is proud of. From their spheres
Could the proud quest of chivalry do more?"
Or straggling burgh, of ancient charter proud,
His proud complacency—yet do I exult,
With dignity befitting his proud hope;
In this oppression; none are proud of it;
That now he might be proud, for he that day
He leapt upon the island, with proud heart,
Of proud Tarentum, proud to share the fame.

Prouder. To which the sage would give a prouder name.

Comfort by prouder mansions unbestowed
A prouder heart than Luke's. When Isabel
My youth here witnessed, in a prouder time;
Such as at least do wear a prouder face,
Prouder itinerant, mountebank, or he
More keen and prouder daring; yet hath she,
For prouder service were address; but each,
Proudest. With the proudest thou art there,
"O Lady, worthy of earth's proudest throne!"
A palace of the proudest show,
Was happiest, proudest, of them all!
And seemed the proudest thing on earth.
A trifer only in her proudest day;
Indifferent judges. "Spite of proudest boast,
"Amid the noblest relics, proudest dust,
One after one, their proudest ornaments.

Proudly. "Let him come, with his purse proudly grasped in his hand;

And proudly shook the bridle too;
The treasure proudly did I show
Bears him on while proudly sailing
And lo! with crimson banners proudly streaming,
And proudly think, beside the chaofog sea,
Proudly the Horsemen bore away
Till the checked torrent, proudly triumphing,
And proudly did its branches wave;
With help from female hands, that proudly strove
Proudly revealed with instantaneous burst,
Walked proudly at my side: she guided me;
The River proudly bridged; the dizzy top
They made it proudly, eager as a child,
Is worshipped in that idol proudly named.
For high—yet not for low; for proudly graced—

Prove. But hear the proofs— Ay, prove that when two peas

Be larger than the peas—prove this—'twere matter
The Cross, fixed in his soul, may prove an allsufficing stay.
She might prove our Maid of Arc.

That self might be annulled: her bondage prove
Prove that thy heaven-descended sway
And not unfelt will prove the loss
Yea, veriest reptiles have sufficed to prove

Rise, tardy Sun! and let the Songster prove
Now is the time to prove your hermitage!
For matched with these shall policy prove vain,
Sad blindness! but ordained to prove
My vehicle shall prove—O precious Charge!
To rise, and prove their innocence—
Nor did he turn aside to prove
And, if the endeavour prove not vain,
And may it prove a fruitful meeting!
Your practice prove, faithless though but in thought,

Prove that her hand has touched responsive chords;

Pity that such a promise e'er should prove
Flesh to exalt than prove its nothingness.
That, by the unwilling ploughshare, died to prove
The loveliness of Nature, prove a bar
To her I left, shall prove Their gifts she hails (deemed precious, as they prove
And may this tribute prove
Though it should prove a farewell lay
O that the good old Man had power to prove,
Their constancy to prove,
The smoothest seas will sometimes prove,
I prove it thus; for in no other space
When, after pains dispensed to prove
Prove vain, and thus should neither I be taught
Arguments sent from Heaven to prove the cause
That prove to what low depth had struck the roots,
More firmly to old tenets, and, to prove
A token (may it prove a monument!)
Yet, should this confidence prove vain, the wise
Prove a degraded Race? and what avails
His royal state to show, and prove his strength
Shall pass uncensured; though the issue prove,
The stream, that bears thee forward, prove not, soon
Dark as a riddle, prove a favourite theme;
And prove with endless puns a monarch's power,
Proved. True; and, remembering how the Band have proved

Proved—continued.

The truth shall be laid open, his guilt proved
This, one of those small builders proved
Proved last year's leaves, pushed from the spray
And it was proved in Bosworth-field.
For Books! "Yes, heartless Ones, or be it proved
And now their faithfulness is proved:
Where faith was proved?—while to battle moved
Ocean has proved its strength, and of its grace
That woman's fortitude—so tried, so proved—
Your proved fidelity."
In aught to earth pertaining? Death has proved Proved tedious, and I gradually withdrew
To re-appear, 'twas proved that not in vain
From the great City, else it must have proved Proved that such hope was vain:—for now we stood
Proved all unable to support the weight
Among the first of Powers and Virtues—proved?
Else had the strongest fastnesses proved weak

Proverbial. That they were as a proverb in the vale

Proverbial. Proverbial words of comfort be applied,
Proves. For a brief absence, proves that love is true;
Then, the strained heart of fortitude proves weak;
History that proves by inward evidence

And proves the Lover true;
Like an unshifting weathercock which proves
O dread reverse! if aught be so, which proves
Proves to the most; and called to make good search
Where Fortune led:—and Fortune, who oft proves Provide. Better provide thee with a Cuckoo-clock,
There lives Who can provide
With every hope that mutual cares provide;
Doth also for our nobler part provide,
Her vesper,—Nature fails not to provide
For which we pray; and for the wants provide
A hardy Girl continues to provide;

Provided. "Poorly provided, poorly followed,"

Provided in a calmer hour,
To charity, and love, that have provided,
Providence. Our wanderings together. Providence
But there's a Providence for them who walk
In his providence, assigned
Where he, in his poor self so weak, by Providence was placed.

How Providence edueth, from the spring

Of Providence, such emptiness at length
Of Providence. But now did the Most High
Are weighed by Providence, in balance even;
Of all-disposing Providence,
And east the future upon Providence;
But not to them had Providence foreshown
The glorious work of time and providence,
Of the great Vision,—faith in Providence;
Too late—or, should the providence of God
Servant of Providence, not slave of Fate—
In Him whose Providence your rage hath served!
Fanned by the breath of angry Providence.
Forced by the gracious providence of Heaven,—
Who doubted not that Providence had times
Of Providence; and in reverence for duty
(Should Providence such grace to us vouchsafe)
That earthly Providence, whose guiding love
Nor unproved by Providence, thus speaking
In Providence, for solace and support,
Is in controlling Providence, admit
To Providence submissive, so she thought;
The Pastor said: "So Providence is served;
And Heaven's good providence, preserved from taint!

Of gratitude to Providence, will grant

Provident. Their native Land, for outrage provident;
Providential. Of providential goodness ever high!
At providential judgments, undismayed
Provides. Of nature, for our wants provides
That Rome provides, less dreading from her frown
Of Infancy, provides a timely shower
For the spent hurricane the air provides
That in a land where charity provides

Provincia. Might scan the narrow province with disdain

Split like a province into round and square?
Mounted—from province on to province swept,
Wide as a province, but, the signal given,
Its most illustrious province, must be found
Providing. And thus, experience proving that no few Provision. He followed till provision for his wants
For due provision to control and guide,
Provocation. Who, on such provocation as this earth
Of provocation. Leave me, with the weight
Found dreadful provocation: for at night,
This complicated provocation,

Provoke. To see him thus provoke her tenderness

Of trespasses, affected to provoke
If to provoke such doom the Impious dare,
Provoke all potent symphonies to raise
Crimes which the great Avenger's hand provoke,

Thy fortunes, twice exalted, might provoke
Thou wilt provoke a heavier penalty.
Why with such earnest pains dost thou provoke

Provoked—continued.

May roll in chariots, or provoke the hoofs . . . 773 Excursion 2. 99
 The test of act and suffering, to provoke
Provoked. Alas! that human guilt provoked the rod
 He had provoked his father, who straightway,
 Yet was I grievously provoked to think
 That doth concern this Herbert? You are provoked,
 Provoked responses with shrill canticles; . . . 346 Processions 22
 Provoked to envious spleen, he cast
 The wrong, by love provoked, let love arraign,
 Dread Lord! so fearful when provoked, thine ire
 Provoked out of herself by troubles strange,
 But human vices have provok'd the rod
 With ominous change, which, night by night, provoked
 With malady—in part, I fear, provoked
 Of merry-making beggars,—now, provoked
 Provoked a retribution too severe.
Provokes. Thus nothing here provokes the strong.
 Provokes no echoes, but must softly tread;
 No vain conceits; provokes to no quick turns
Provoking. A pair of Leverets each provoking each
 Provoking punishment, to win reward;
Provost. And hastily they for the Provost sent;
 This Provost doth for those bad Jews prepare
Prow. The foremost prow in pressing to the strand,—
 That downy prow, and softly cleaves
 The crescent moon clove with its glittering prow
 Though on her prow a sign of heathen power . . .
 An Idol at her prow . . .
 Our youthful Voyagers bound fast her prow,
Prowess. By strength of prowess or of wit;
 Hence hath your prowess quelled that impious crew.
 Who can forget thy prowess, never more
 For, when my prowess from invading Neighbours
 To Prowess guided by her insight keen
 This genuine prowess, which I wished to touch
 That may attest her prowess, blest in thoughts
 Content with meaner prowess, must have lacked
 Of that day's prowess! Him might I compare,
 Are called to try their prowess with his Grace.
Prowl. Of the fierce wind, while mid-day lightnings prowl
Prowling. That roar, the prowling lion's Here I am, Proximities. Uncouth proximities of old and new;
Prudence. A hope, that prudence could not then approve,
 Of moral prudence, sought through good and ill;
 Of awful prudence, keep the unvanquished soul:
 Equality by Prudence governed,
 In the delight of moral prudence schooled,
 By sleepless prudence ruled, glides slowly on;
 Of Prudence, disentangling good and ill
 Think not that Prudence dwells in dark abodes,
 A timorous capacity from prudence,
 The Senate stood aghast, her prudence quenched,
 To that complexion brought which prudence trusts in
 Did Prudence convey,
 Of moral prudence, clothed in images
 Thy prudence, thy experience—thy desires;
Prudent. Where She—a staid prudent to confer
 May guide them in a prudent fight!
 At any hour he chose, the prudent Knight
 I was disturbed at times by prudent thoughts,
 And prudent caution needful to avert
Prudently. That passion, prudently gave way;
Pruned. They pruned themselves, and made themselves right gay,
Prussia's. From Prussia's timid region. Go, and rest
Pry. Whatever be the cause, 'tis sure that they who pry and pore
 We pry among them all; have shot . . .
 Or, in their cells, with him did pry . . .
 That we should pry far off yet be unraised;
Prying. To winds abandoned and the prying stars,
 Prying into the darkness rent;
 Merry and loud and safe from prying search,
 Prying through every nook. Meanwhile the rain Psalm. What can this mean? There is a psalm that speaks
 A Christian psalm for thee.
Psalmist's. And heard meanwhile the Psalmist's mournful plaint,
Psalms. And psalms they sing—a holy sound
 The cadence, as of psalms—a funeral dirge!
Pshaw. Lurked in his face— Pshaw! Never to these eyes
 Have roused all Nature up against him—pshaw!
Public. Where the brook brawls along the public road
 Weep in the public roads, alone . . .
 Full speedily resounded, public hope,
 If from the public way you turn your steps
 And was a public symbol of the life
 The public way, he put on a bold face;
 Into a path or public way
 Along the public way, this Peak, so high
 Pathway, and lane, and public road, were clogged

Public—continued.

See, when public perturbations . . . 163 Hint 22
 Should be to public justice brought;
 Unjustly shed, though for the public good.
 Surviving near the public way,
 That animates the scenes of public life
 No public harm that Genius from her course
 Went pacing side by side, this public Way
 To appease the Gods; or public thanks to yield;
 Though public care full often fills . . .
 No public and no private care . . .
 Of rash change, ominous for the public weal . . .
 Of a sad market, ranged for public sale,
 Of public quiet; unambitious Men,
 That searching test thy public course has stood;
 Of public conflicts trained and bred?
 Remote from public road or dwelling,
 Proofs thickening round her that on public ends
 In a large house of public charity, . . .
 That public order, private weal,
 The natural heart is touched, and public way
 To public notice, with reluctance strong,
 And when at evening on the public way
 And feast and dance, and public revelry,
 Sometimes embodied on a public road,
 He would not linger in the public ways,
 For pomp, or love. Off, in the public roads,
 And window-garlands. On the public roads,
 Of public notice—an offensive light
 Abandoned, and the pride of public vice;
 In public room or private, park or street,
 Had shed beside the public way its bells,
 And public news; but having never seen
 Whence the main organs of the public power
 Its freight of public news, the fever came,
 In thought or conversation, public acts,
 And public persons, and emotions wrought
 By public power abused, to fatal crime,
 Full speedily resounded, public hope,
 The Senate's language, and the public acts
 Even when the public welfare is their aim,
 The windings of a public way? the sight,
 Nor was in any public hope the dupe
 And stationed in the public way, with face
 But still he loved to pace the public roads
 Upon the public way. It was a plot
 Sought daily bread from public charity,
 Its course of suffering in the public road,
 To private interest dead, and public care . . .
 Of public news or private; years that pass
 Upon the laws of public charity,
 Of public worship, where, the glowing phrase
 To which the lips give public utterance
 On the distempered food of public life,
 For public use preserved, and thus survive
 From some staid guardian of the public peace,
 And was a public symbol
Puffed. Was not puffed up by false unnatural hopes,
Puffs. And him who at the trumpet puffs his cheeks, Puissant. To puissant efforts. Nor was this the blame
 And puissant to range the solemn walks
Pulling. And not to purchase pulling sympathy.
Pull. To pull the cord. I guess he must have heard it;
 Pull the primrose, sister Anne!
 Pull as many as you can.
 "What ails thee, young One? what? Why pull so at thy cord?
 Why bleat so after me? Why pull so at thy chain?
 That he might pull the sledge for me . . .
 But the horses stretch and pull;
 Stick after stick did Goody pull:
 Pull at her rein like an impetuous courser;
Pulled. Hung at my breast, and pulled at me;
 Ye pulled together with one mind;
 Would have pulled up an iron ring;
Pulling. As if the blind Man's dog were pulling at it.
 And, pulling now the rein my horse to stop,
 Pulling the strings of his boxed raree-show;
Pulls. He pulls—and looks—and pulls again;
Pulpit. Who loudest rang his pulpit 'larum bell,
 He from the pulpit lifts his awful hand;
 And, from the pulpit, zealously maintained
Pulpit's. Nor did the Pulpit's aratory fail
Pulse. And stir the pulse of lazy charity.
 His pulse is stopped, his breath is lost,
 The very pulse of the machine;
 And requiems answered by the pulse that beats
 Never did pulse so quickly throb,
 The throbbing pulse—else troubled without end:
 Divorced from good—a spirit and pulse of good,
 Long time his pulse hath ceased to beat;
 Dim were my swimming eyes—my pulse beat slow,
 Reposed in noamtime rest, the inner pulse
 When everywhere a vital pulse was felt,
Pulseless. With pulseless hand, and fix'd unwearied gaze,
Pulses. She slept in peace,—his pulses throbbed and stopped, . . .

Pulses—continued.

Her fires, that like mysterious pulses beat
Punctilio. Polished in arts, and in punctilio versed;
Punctual. Notice punctual as the minute,

Matrons and Sires—who, punctual to the call
Whether thy punctual visitations smite
With punctual care, Lutheran harmonies.
Thy way for increase punctual as of yore,
Soon may the punctual sea in vain respire
And he accepts the punctual hymn
My neighbour, when with punctual care, each week,
Astruse, nor wanting punctual service high,
A punctual follower on the stroke of nine,
Year after year, a punctual visitant!
Was not a punctual presence, but a spirit
A punctual visitant, to shake this man,
Or from its death-like void, with punctual care,
To punctual labour in his sacred charge.
His recollections, "and the punctual stars,

Punctually. Have scored thine age, and punctually timed

Punctures. A thousand sharp punctures of cold-sweating pain,

Puniest. Their puniest flower-pot-nursing dares
Punish. Your power to punish crime, and so prevent.
Punished. See self-punished.

Already I've been punished to the height
Punishment. The punishment they merit. All is plain:

To bear a part in this Man's punishment,
To cover him from punishment? Shame!—Justice,
Who to their destined punishment dost urge
His punishment in soul-distress,
Was wrought her punishment.

Conduct them to their punishment:
And punishment without remorse.
Of death had drunk their punishment,
Provoking punishment, to wio reward;
And open punishment, if not the air
Of their offences, punishment to come;
Remorseless punishment; and so retreats

Puns. And prove with endless puns a monarch's power,

Puny. He is a puny soul who, feeling pain,
Off, off! or, puny Thog!

Why does this puny Church present to view
Deem that our puny boundaries are things

Pupil. Your pupil is, you see, an apt proficient
Behold a pupil of the monkish gown,

(Then first a self-taught pupil in its truths)
She was, and with her ready pupil turned
Dame Nature's pupil of the lowest form,
A pupil in the many-chambered school,

Pupilage. That scarcely as my term of pupilage
Pupils. Are pupils of your school,

By Thee to guide thy Pupils on the road
Pupils of Heaven, in order stand

Puppetry. Of puppetry, that from the lap declare Puppet-shows. Of modern Merlins, Wild Beasts,
Puppet-shows,

Purbblind. To her purblind guide Expediency;
and so

Of purblind mortal passion,
Woe to the purblind crew who fill

Purchase. And not to purchase puling sympathy.
Purchased. Knowledge not purchased by the loss of power!

Pure. Of young imagination have kept pure,
In pure compassion she her steps retraced
He is the Man to whom the Maiden—pure
So saintly and so pure!—Harksee, my Friend,

And, from this triumph of affection pure,
Through the pure light of female eyes
While across her virgin cheek pure blushes strayed,
That their pure joy in nature may survive
Of a sky serene and pure;

In strains of rapture pure and holy
Pure hopes of high intent:
In worlds whose course is equitable and pure;
[So pure, so bright, so fitted to embrace
And what pure homage then did wait
Pure transport undisturbed by doubt or fear
The spectacle, how pure!—Of Nature's works,
Pure as herself—(song lacks not mightier power)
As pure a sunshine and as soft a gale
She, in benign affections pure,

Features half lost amid their own pure light.
For the pure keeping of those waxen cells;
Pure modulations flowing from the heart
Smooth fields, white sheets of water, and pure sky;
Yet pure and powerful minds, hearts meek and still,
As hallows and makes pure all gentle hearts.
If there be aught of pure, or good, or great,
Though clad in colours beautiful and pure,
White, radiant, spotless, exquisitely pure,
Of genuine crystals, pure as those that pave
Pure element of waters! wheresoe'er

Of fretful temper sullies her pure cheek;
Of pure delight, come wheresoe'er it may,
Aught dost thou see, bright Star! of pure and wise
In youth, and 'mid the busy world kept pure

Pure—continued.

And the pure mountains, and the gentle Tweed,

And pure religion breathing household laws.
Pure as the naked heavens, majestic, free,
Pollution tainted all that was most pure.
In whose pure sight all virtue doth succeed.
In thankful joy and gratulation pure.
With happy garlands of the pure white rose:
A garland fashioned of the pure white rose
Of his pure song, which did not shrink from hope
Of a deliverance absolute and pure.
Built of all precious substances,—so pure
By Works of spirit high and passion pure!
Oh, for a kindling touch from that pure flame
O genuine glory, pure renown!
In working out a pure intent;
Thy law, and live henceforth in peace, in pure good will.

Though sprung from bleeding war, is one of pure delight;

Pure undecaying beauty is their lot;
Of his half-open hand pure from blemish or speck;
Of number, pure and silent Votaries
A pure poetic Spirit—as the breeze,
Fit to be placed in that pure diadem;
Which yet it bears, sweet Stream! as crystal pure.
So pure, so fraught with knowledge and delight,
I mingle with the blest on those pure heights
Of joy immortal and of pure affection.
Less pure in spirit could have done;
Of God, and Heaven's pure Queen—the blissful Mary.

With ambient streams more pure and bright
Pure flow the verse, pure, vigorous, free, and bright,
Abodes of Naiads, calm abysses pure,
Truth's holy lamp, pure source of bright effect,
Of yon pure waters, from their aery height
Pure as the morning, fretful, boisterous, keen,
In his pure presence near the trusting thorn—
Pure minds with sinless envy, than the Abode
Shrink from thy name, pure Rill, with displeas'd ears.

Of a pure faith the vernal prime—
A pure religion, and the claim
Between him and the pure intent
OFER PAIN AND GRIEF A TRIUMPH PURE.
This did they,—but in pure respect
A look of pure benignity,
Toward the pure truths this Delegate propounds,
How soon—alas! did Man, created pure—
Where that pure Church survives, though summer heats.

Supremacy from Heaven transmitted pure,
Emerging pure, and seemingly more bright:
And the pure spirit of celestial light
For everlasting bloom. Benign and pure
The spirit of Laud is pleased in heaven's pure clime,
Studious of that pure intercourse begun
Their way, with thy pure help, to heart and mind;
Of the pure spring (they call it the "Nuo's Well,"
Of heaven contemplated by Spirits pure
The moon is not more pure
What withery, for pure gifts of inward seeing,
It was a pure delight!
Are a substantial world, both pure and good:
Of truth and pure delight by heavenly lays!
And elegant enjoyments, that are pure
As nature is;—too pure to be refined.
More skilful in self-knowledge, even more pure,
Of pure Simonides.

Affections pure and holy in their source
Man's feverish passions, His pure light of love,
Converse with Nature in pure sympathy;
On wings that fear no glance of God's pure sight,
Hence thoughtful Mercy, Mercy sage and pure,
Cold though your nature be, 'tis pure;
Above all grandeur, a pure life uncrossed
Grateful to Thee, while service pure,
From the pure qualities that called it forth.
From the pure depths of her humanity!
Pious and pure, modest and yet so brave,
At nature's pure command;
The soul's pure brightness he beheld
Of those pure Minds that reverence the Muse.
Like marble, white, like ether, pure;
Gracious God, the pure oblation
And his pure native genius, lead him back
And live as long as its pure stream shall flow.
Pure as the holiest cloistered nun
So pure the sky, so quiet was the air!
On any earthly hope, however pure!
And the pure vision closed in darkness infinite.
As climbing jasmine, pure—
When pure Religion rear'd the peaceful breast
Some lingering fragrance of the pure affection,
Womanhood in pure renown,
Those hallowed and pure motions of the sense
Old as creation, drinking in a pure
If in my youth I have been pure in heart,
For (not to speak of Reason and her pure

Pure—continued.

So be it, if the pure of heart be prompt
 Are not so pure by nature that they needs
 Or His pure Word by miracle revealed.
 This was her creed, and therefore she was pure
 Some monument behind me which pure hearts
 Created out of pure intelligence,
 Exchanged—to equalise in God's pure sight
 Cerulean ether's pure inhabitants,
 And pure simplicity of wish and will,
 Or mildest visitations of pure thought,
 And the independent spirit of pure youth
 Feelings of pure commiseration, grief
 By pure Imagination : busy Power
 In a pure stream of words fresh from the heart :
 On the pure bliss, and takes her rest with God.
 Good, pure, which no one could stand up against,
 As just in regulation, and as pure
 To health and joy and pure contentedness ;
 For me that image of pure gladness
 Or Archimedes, pure abstracted soul !
 Of pure imagination, and of love ;
 The excellence, pure function, and best power
 In moral judgments which from this pure source
 Pure, or with no unpleasing sadness mixed ;
 My Heart in genuine freedom !—all pure thoughts
 Still deeper welcome found his pure discourse :
 Pure lives were they all, austere and grave,
 Was wanting yet the pure delight of love
 Who to the model of his own pure heart
 And pure as dew bathing their crimson leaves.
 The seat and bosom of pure innocence,
 By the example of his own pure course,
 Her share in the pure freedom of that life,
 Yielded to mortal reflux ; her pure glory,
 The help desiring of the pure devout.
 But that pure archetype of human greatness,
 Of the pure intellect, that stand as laws
 Of pure, imperishable, blessedness,
 That finds no limits but her own pure will.
 As may support longings of pure desire ;
 These pure sensations ; that can penetrate
 Tidings of joy and love.—From those pure heights
 Pure and serene, diffused—to overlook
 The joy of that pure principle of love
 Less pure and exquisite, he cannot choose
 Open, and day's pure cheerfulness, but veiled
 At the baptismal font. And when the pure
 To the pure heaven, he cast them down again
 Of pure imagination ;—above all,
 From the pure soul, the soul sublime and pure ;
 Of those pure altars worthy ; ministers
 Shedding sweet influence from above ; or pure
 Your own pure spirit. Not a step we look for
 By which a virtuous woman, in pure youth,
 She gazed as on a pure and spotless gift
 Into that pure and unknown world of love
 Thanks to his pure imaginative soul
 To the pure course of human life which there
 Rose this pure eloquence. And, when the stream
 —These transports, with staid looks of pure goodwill.
 Yet, by the solace of his own pure thoughts
 By the pure bond of independent love,
 And in what pure contentedness of mind,
 Descending, and supporting his pure heart
 And pure good-will, and hospitable cheer ;
 Drink the pure water of its innocent stream
 With lip almost as pure.—Domestic bliss
 With pure cerulean gravel, from the heights
 Kind wishes, and good actions, and pure thoughts—
 How pure his spirit ! in what vivid hues
 Pure, cloudless, ether ; and the star of eve
 And pure, from further intercourse ensued ;
 With beverage pure as ever fixed the choice
 Of pure affections, shedding upon joy
 Indicted upon confidence so pure.
 Their healing offices a pure goodwill
 Pure and unswelled, flowing from the heart
 How goodly, how exceeding fair, how pure
 Shine for Clarkson's pure delight

Purely. Shall simply feel and purely meditate—
"Here Man more purely lives, less oft doth fall,
The light from past endeavours purely willed.

Pure-minded. Flattery in Ancient Rome's pure-minded style :

Purer. No purer essence, than the ooe that burns,
 While all the future, for thy purer soul,
 And passing even into my purer mind,
 That taints the purer, better, mind ;
 With purer robes than those of flesh and blood,
 To something purer and more exquisite
 With gleams of fresher, purer, light ;
 Together of a purer faith ;
 The Soul to purer worlds : and who the line
 Purer than foam on central ocean tost ;
 Sublimier transport, purer love,
 A happier, brighter, purer Heaven than theirs.

The social rights of man breathe purer air ;
 That they are kindred to our purer mind

Purer—continued.

For, ever as a thought of purer birth
 For ever in a purer element—
 More perfectly of purer creatures—yet
 The purer elements of truth involved
 Of higher reason and a purer will,
 Their purer service, in this realm at least,
Purest. The anchor of my purest thoughts, the nurse,
 A flaky weight of winter's purest snows !
 Large space ('mid dreadful clouds) of purest sky,
 On the frail heath the purest share
 Lovellier—transplanted from heaven's purest clime !
 A pledge of grace from purest heaven.
 Uplifted to the purest sky
 Uplifted to the purest sky
 We read of faith and purest charity
 The purest stream of patient Energy
 As if their lustre flowed from ether's purest blue.

Drawn from love's purest earthly fount for him
 And purest passion. Thou, my Friend ! wert reared
 And wedded soul to soul in purest bond
 Of Grecian art, and purest poesy.
 By means refined attaining purest ends,
 His best and purest friend ; from her receives
 Lifted, in union with the purest, best,
 Associates in the joy of purest minds,
Purge. Gifted to purge the vapoury atmosphere
 And purge from Vice's dross my tender charge.

Purging. Go forth and prosper ; and, ye purging fires,
Purified. The faith reformed and purified.
 Did first present themselves thus purified,
 Retirement, leisure, language purified
Purify. Thro' Time and Nature's influence, purify
 Can give us inward help, can purify,
Purifying. A purifying instrument—the storm
 With life and nature—purifying—thus Purity. Moving untouched in silver purity,
 Its homage offered up in purity,
 (Whose tranquil pomp and spotless purity
 Have striven by purity to gain
 And purity of nature spread before your sight !
 Of mother's love with maiden purity
 And Faith preserved her ancient purity.
 Love to promote and purity and peace ;
 And all-enraptured with its purity ?—
 In purity were such,
 With emblematic purity attired
 In vestal purity,
 And conscious step of purity and pride.
 Retained its purity inviolate,
 The strong hand of her purity ; and still
 Now in its morning purity arrayed.
 Sublime from present purity and joy !
 Both for the love of purity, and hope

Purifies. In forest purifiers ; and the like are bred,
Purloined. Purloined, in times less jealous than our own.
Purple. Come forth, and here retire in purple shade ;
 Feeding 'mid purple heath, "green rings," and broom ;
 A crest of purple tops the warrior's head.
 And now that orb has touched the purple steep,
 Of fainter gold, a purple gleam betray.
 Where falls the purple morning far and wide
 And Silence loves its purple roof of vines.
 Upon the fragrant mountain's purple side :
 Of purple lights and even-vernial plains ;
 Before the purple dawn."
 Flung from off the purple pinions,
 Beneath the shadow of his purple wings
 Preferr'd a garland culled from purple heath,
 While the stars shine, or while day's purple eye
 With purple of the trellis-roof,
 Blithe Autumn's purple crown, and Winter's icy mail !
 —So, pleased with purple clusters to entwine
 The thyme her purr, like the blush of Even ;
 Tells that their turf drank purple from the veins
 The fostered hyacinths spread their purple bloom.
 The gadding bramble hang her purple fruit ;
 Art thou a Man of purple cheer ?
 "Yon cloud with that long purple cleft
 Sky streaked with purple, grove and craggy field,

Purpled. Fair smiling lights the purpled hills illumine !
Purpling. While from the purpling east departs
Purported. Which purported it was the royal pleasure
Purpose. And cease the acknowledged purpose to withstand ;
 Confirmed of purpose, fearlessly prepared
 Hath falsely trained—shall he fulfil his purpose ?
 Contains not such a Monster ! For this purpose
 For a wise purpose—verily to weep with !
 That bears the shape of man ; and for what purpose,
 With such a purpose in thine heart as mine was.
 With a determined purpose to resume
 Full soon this generous purpose thou may'st rue,
 Or from my purpose ruin may ensue.
 Their nearest kin with deadly purpose met)
 When I began, my purpose was to speak
 For this same purpose he had gathered up
 Handmaid's privilege would leave my purpose free,
 Or boughs, as if for festal purpose decked
 The sullen Spectre to her purpose bowed,
 Had crossed her purpose with some quaint vagary,
 As men who with their purpose play
 A Foe's most favourite purpose to fulfil
 The hostile purpose of wide-wasting Time—
 And for Thy righteous purpose they prevail ;
 A crouching purpose—a distracted will—
 A purpose to a sickle clime.
 And grasp of purpose, long ere sailed his ship
 Of tortured hope and purpose shaken !
 So high, a rival purpose to fulfil ;
 And would have laid his purpose by,
 A rumour of this purpose ran,
 Their purpose—then did he divide
 But that Heaven's purpose might be known
 As if she for no purpose bore you ;
 To aid a covert purpose, cried—"O ye
 By deeds the blackest purpose, to lay here—
 And to one purpose cleave, their Being's godlike mate !
 And on his purpose bent so fast to ride,
 For so it seemed, with purpose of its own
 'Tis not my present purpose to retrace
 A change of purpose in young Whittington,
 But, for such purpose, flowers no longer grow :
 Of all who had a purpose, or had not ;
 For purpose, at a time, how different !
 From moral purpose—early tutored me
 Our present purpose seems not to require,
 In purpose join to hasten or reprove
 To aim and purpose, he consumed his days,
 To what odd purpose have the darlings turned Hears, and forgets his purpose ;—furnished thus,
 O'er the blind elements ; a purpose given,
 It frustrates its own purpose, and recalls
 Old Michael for this purpose had driven down Purposed. This day we purposed to intrude.—"I did so,
Purposes. To purposes of reason—not a dream
 So he relinquished all his purposes.
 Its natural gifts for purposes of rest,
 My purposes. Lay now the corner-stone,
 And thus, for purposes benign,
 From human thoughts and purposes,
 Things incomplete and purposes betrayed
 By unsought means for gracious purposes ;
 Of purposes which no false thought shall cross,
 But to his purposes, that burned
 Their purposes. Behold, pre-signified,
 Or hindrance raised by sordid purposes,
 Seedtime and harvest for his purposes !
 While truth and love their purposes fulfil,
 For I could dream away my purposes,
 Was, for the purposes of kind, a man
 Of intermeddlers, steady purposes
 The purposes of wisdom ask no more :
 To flow, when purposes are lightly changed ?
 Of purposes akin to those of Man,
 Or purposes ; nor scrupled to proclaim,
 Whose everlasting purposes embrace
 For noble purposes of mind ; his heart
 Diverting evil purposes, remorse
 Subversive still to moral purposes.
 "Yet for the general purposes of faith,
 For knavish purposes ! The city, too,
 For their sweet purposes, with perfect skill.)
 The good man's purposes and deeds ; retrace
 But for remorse purposes of love
 With hostile purposes the blessed Isle,
 Ill purposes, and flatter foul desires.
Purpleal. And fields invested with purpleal gleams ;
 With emerald floored, and with purpleal shell
 Like Ocean burning with purpleal flame ;
 This is the tranquil hour, purpleal Eve !
Purse. Who aims but at our purse ; and shall this Parricide—
 "Let him come, with his purse proudly grasped in his hand ;
 And what if he cherished his purse ? "I was no more

Purse—continued.
 No whimsy of the purse is here,
 To scheme and counter-scheme for purse and plate.
Purse-proud. By feet of purse-proud strangers ;
 they—who have read
Purses. We came with weightier purses, that sufficed
Pursue. With furtive watch pursue her as she moves ;
 Flying till vision can no more pursue !
 No, no, my Friend, you may pursue your business—
 He would pursue his journey. So they parted.
 So looked ; not ceasing to pursue
 And, when at evening we pursue our walk
 What allied thee, Robin, that thou couldst pursue
 The horses cautiously pursue
 Can any low-born care pursue her,
 Nor what ye are flying, nor what ye pursue !
 "What occupation do you there pursue ?"
 Pursue thee with their deadly aim !
 Such as pursue their feared vagaries
 Confirm the Spirit glorying to pursue
 And whom the curious Painter doth pursue
 Your steps pursue ;
 A boat is ready to pursue ;
 The unconquerable Stream his course pursue.
 Go forth, my little Book ! pursue thy way ;
 A Protean change seems wrought while I pursue,
 For the clear waters to pursue their race
 The clouds and fowls of the air thy way pursue !
 Ye multitude, pursue your prayers ;
 As with the Stream our voyage we pursue,
 To unrelenting mandates that pursue
 Friends strike at friends—the flying shall pursue—
 To thy first hope, and this good work pursue,
 That he might fly, where no one could pursue,
 Their way pursue,
 And the hare whom they pursue,
 Obsequious Grace the winking swan pursue.
 Oft have I said, the paths of Fame pursue,
 May'st thou pursue thy course by God approved,
 I might I pursue this theme through every change
 Have something to pursue. And not alone,
 Will not permit us ; but pursue the mind,
 Through quaint obliquities I might pursue
 Of living man, though longing to pursue.
 Pursue each other through the yielding plain
 The works by faith ordained. Pursue thy path, Pursued. Pursued his vagrant way, with feet half bare ;
 But, when the trance was gone, feebly pursued his way.
 A long mile thence. While thither they pursued
 The wain pursued its way ; and following near
 So we pursued our voyage : when we landed,
 Hast thou pursued the monster ? I have found him—
 The challenger pursued his march ;
 The Story tells what courses were pursued,
 And hitherward pursued its way ;
 The Broom might have pursued
 His meditations thus pursued,
 I left her, and pursued my way ;
 While I these thoughts within myself pursued,
 Revived, with finer harmony pursued ;
 As ever hue-and-cry pursued,
 Yet I pursued her with a Lover's look ;
 The unwearied arrow hath pursued its flight !
 Thus far pursued (how gloriously !) by Man,
 We have pursued, through various lands, a long
 Pursued its way with bird-like sweep,
 Return, Content ! for fondly I pursued,
 As eagerly pursued ; the umbrella spread
 Whom the Dog Hercules pursued—his part
 And down the valley then pursued,
 While she the holy work pursued."
 His words, more calmly thus pursued.
 Pursued ;—and, at the dawn of day,
 Have we pursued, with livelier stir of heart
 And eager, might he still pursued in vain.
 Pursued by thoughts that haunt me still ; thou also—
 Pursued by destiny !
 Week after week pursued !—To him was given
 So, like a home-bound labourer, I pursued
 Eager and never weary we pursued
 And languidly pursued. When summer came,
 And everything encountered or pursued
 Measuring our steps in quiet, we pursued
 Too fine to be pursued ; or standing forth
 Of exultation, I pursued my way
 Of other longing, I pursued what seemed
 Each with the other pleased, we now pursued
 Maintained his place ; or heedfully pursued
 (Not as an intellectual game pursued.
 And self-indulgence—without shame pursued.
 This said, oft pausing, we pursued our way ;
 Upheld he deviously pursued the round
 Pursued our way, a broken company,
 Pursued her voyage, till a natural pier

Pursued—continued.

Descending, we pursued our homeward course,
Pursued his way toward a brook, whose course
Pursues. Unhurt pursues his lengthened flight, while all . . .
The boat her silent course pursues !
While she pursues her course through the dreary sea.
He thus pursues his thoughts at leisure.
Pursues, with Ass and all his store,
Where Toil pursues his dally round ;
And while the Ass pursues his way
Pursues the Enthusiast to the social board,
Like them. The unguilty Power pursues his way,
Regrat pursues and with it blends,—
While each pursues his several road.
Whom Obloquy pursues with hideous bark :
Pursues thy brother—this to thee is known ;
Moves through the air, or as a fish pursues
When through the region he pursues at will Pursuing. Or in the castle he's pursuing
A most delightful tale pursuing !
But, while these pleasures you're pursuing
That Nature takes, her counter-work pursuing.
Her way pursuing among scattered clouds,
A track pursuing, not untrod before.
Snap,—and, pursuing leisurely my way,
Pursuit. To daylight known deters from that pursuit,
As grief can be in grief's pursuit ?
In keen pursuit and gave, where'er she flew,
The smoking steam-boat eager in pursuit,
The pangs of vain pursuit ;
Pursuit and evidence so far must fail,
Till Daphne, desperate with pursuit
Intrusted safely each to his pursuit,
Equals in pleasure, fellows in pursuit.
Loud echoing, add your speed to the pursuit ;
An air and mien of dignified pursuit ;
In heart or soul, in station or pursuit,
Now, when destruction is a prime pursuit,
Pursuits. Yet, in his worst pursuits I ween
And liberate our hearts from low pursuits.
And from their own pursuits in field or grove
Which, through all seasons, on a child's pursuits
But secondary to my own pursuits . . .
Their manners, their enjoyments, and pursuits,
That he would share the pleasures and pursuits
As boyish his pursuits ; and, sighing, said,
Shall he who gives his days to low pursuits
Pursuivants. Swift insects shine, thy hovering pur-suvivants :
Wild pursuivants ! until their breath is lost,
Push. Is seized with strong incitement to push forth
Would push this censure farther ;—for, if smiles Pushed. Proved last year's leaves, pushed from the spray
In what they see of virtues pushed to extremes,
Pushed from the shore. It was an act of stealth
Who pushed by thoughtless youth to deeds of shame
Put. When Fortune might put on a kinder look ;
I put a slip of foxglove in his hand,
And put your head, good Woman, under cover.
That well may put some fears into your heart.
'Twas this that put it in my thoughts—that countenance—
To baffle me—it put me to my prayers.
And put an end to his insolence, but my Comrades
I put denial on thy suit, and hence,
In my own house I put into his hand
Good Betty, put him down again ;
Oh could I put it into rhyme,
Had put on boy's attire, did Michael love,
The public way, he put on a bold face ;
Or-hast thou put off wings which thou in heaven
dost wear ?
If she, a timid Maid, hath put such boldness on.
Feelers of love, put forth as if to explore
Till, not incensed though put to proof,
A hoaster that, when he is tried, fails, and is put to shame ?
Shall here put on her beauty and her bloom.
Ye can put forth your agency
And she put on her gown of green,
Put on fresh raiment—till that hour unworn :
Ever put on ; a miserable crowd,
A Poet!—He hath put his heart to school,
Defeating, put the Monks to shame,
They knew how genuine glory was put on ;
Impatient to put out the only light
Whose panoply is not a thing put on,
Else how, when mighty Thrones were put to shame,
Affections which, if put to proof, are kind ;
What countenance hath thy Day put on for you ?
Of earthly hope put on with trembling hand ;
No one knows how ; nor seldom is put forth
Neither put forth that way Thy arm severe ;

Put—continued.

Is now a course : then put aside . . .
" Rise, noble Earls, put forth your might . . .
And put her fortitude to proof ;
Put forth to wither, many a hopeful shoot)
Through gloomiest shade ; put on (nor dread its weight)
Offenders, dost put off the gracious look,
Should fall ; that She, whose virtue put to shame,
Put on with speed your woodland dress ;
With speed put on your woodland dress ;
His feelers, methinks, I can see him put forth
Put on, to welcome spring, their best attire,
Together they put forth, Father and Child !
" To put your love to dangerous proof
A Presence which is not to be put by ;
But now her Spirit hath put forth its claim
Or Beauty, Nature's dally face put on . . .
Put on a lowly and a touching grace
The passing day ; should learn to put aside
And having almost in my mind put off
Put off her veil, and, self transmuted, stood
Of manners put to school I took small note,
All things are put to question ; he must live
A match not familiarly, my mind put on,
A touch of glory, which doth put to shame
Outweighed, or put to flight, the set events
All loosely put together, hobbled in
Thou canst put together, an aspect most severe ;
Were impotent to make my hopes put on
They are to put the appropriate nature on,
Their leaves, as often Winter had put on
Britain put forth her freshborn strength in league,
The Herculean Commonwealth had put forth her arms,
Put on a milder face ; Terror had ceased,
That ever was put forth in personal form—
Most willingly she put her work aside,
Or heaven's blue vault, is suffered to put forth
Time's fetters are composed ; and life was put Bright apparition, suddenly put forth,
Here did our pensive Host put forth his hand
Who have put off their mortal spurs—ah no !
Two sets of manners could the Youth put on !
The ghastly face of cold decay put on
And freak put on, and arch word dropped—to swell
Was put to proof, and exercise supplied
Then she would instantly put forth
And put forth Blue at last . . .
It put the temper of our minds to proof,
Puts. He that puts his trust in me shall not fail !
A stern face if puts on, as if ready to say,
Festively she puts forth in trim array ;
He puts the Earthquake on her still design,
Puts, when the high-swoll Flood runs fierce and wild,
Of languor puts his rosy garland by ;
Cynthia, who puts the little stars to flight,
Puts off his wings, and walks, with proud delight,
In wantonness of conquest, or puts on Putting. But pensive fancies putting by,
Albeit putting forth a fainter light.
Had Nature shadowed there, by putting forth,
Puzzled. He listens, puzzled, sore perplexed,
And sorely puzzled are the twain,
" And, puzzled, blinded thus, we lose
We schemed and puzzled, head opposed to head
That puzzled high and low,
Puzzles. Puzzles the listener with a doubt
Puzzling. Puzzling aloft his curious wits ;
A puzzling notice of thy whereabouts—
Of puzzling out that faded narrative,
Or puzzling through a primer, line by line,
Pygmalion's. Fam'd Pygmalion's Son and Heir,
Pygman. " The Minstrels of Pygman bands,
Pygmies. Toil, small as pygmies in the gulf profound ;
Pym's. A Pym's brave heart, or stir a Hampden's arm ?
Pyms. And like the Pymys and Miltons of that day,
Pyramid. Bear who will a pyramid ;
The pyramid extend its monstrous base,
Pyramid pointing to the stars,
On Sarum's naked plain—than pyramid
Pyrenean. Then would I seek the Pyrenean Breach

Quail. I swear the sight of him would quail me more
Quails. Of scattered quails by signs do reunite,
 Resist—the thunder quails thee—crouch—rebuff
Quaint. It were a quaint experiment to show
 Quaint stories of the bird's attraction!
 Tow'rd some far-distant wood, a Figure quaint,
 Had crossed her purpose with some quaiot vagary,
 In this quaint medley, that might seem
 Thy handmaid Frost with spangled tissue quaint
 Of quaint apparel for a half-spillt boy;
 Some quaiot odd plaything of elaborate skill,
 For thou hast made a foolish and quaint cry:—
 Ay, quoth the Cuckoo, that is a quaint law,
 For trust me well, in spite of thy quaint cry,
 By chance collisions and quaint accidents
 Through quaiot obliquities I might pursue

Quake. And, with a voice at which the dead will quake,
 Believed that earth was charged to quake
 Reains quake by turos: proud Arbitress of grace,
 Into his English breast, and spare to quake
 Pity away, soon shall ye quake with fear!
Quaked. The Briar quaked—and much I fear
 Hills quaked, the rivers backward ran;
 ARMINIUS!—all the people quaked like dew Quakes. Listens, or quakes while from the forest's gulf
 Quakes—conscious of thy power;
 He quakes not like the timid forest game,
Quaking. To barren heath, bleak moor, and quaking fen,
 Till they have crossed the quaking marsh,
Qualified. From qualified oppression, whose defence
 "This qualified respect, the old Man's due, Qualities. Your generous qualities have won due praise,
 Of moral qualities in their diverse aspects;
 Those several qualities of heart and mind
 From the pure qualities that called it forth.
 Unfolded transitory qualities,
 And fitness in the latent qualities
 And qualities determined.—Among men
 What qualities of mind she bears, who comes,
 Unite the graceful qualities of both,
 Strong to subvert our noxious qualities:
 The excellence of moral qualities
Quality. Is not an accidental quality,
 And what in quality or act is best
 The same in quality,—that, as the worse
 The quality of the metal which I saw.
 That is the visible quality and shape
 Of quality and fabric more divine.
 In quality of page among the train

Quandary. And Betty's in a sad quandary
 —She's in a sad quandary.
Quantock. Upon the Quantock hills they fed;
 The Quantock woodman hears.
Quantock's. Upon smooth Quantock's airy ridge we roved
Quarrel. He seemed to quarrel with the very thought
 He rose not in this quarrel, he,
 On his own mind, to quarrel with the choice
Quarrelled. Have quarrelled with that blameless spectacle
Quarrels. And petty quarrels, had grown fond again;
 To mix in quarrels; that were far beneath
Quarry. And blasted quarry thunders, heard remote!
 Till brought to a deserted quarry—
 Right through the quarry;—and behold
 Fleet as the west wind, is for him no quarry;
 Desisted, and the quarry and the mound
 By old Sir William and his quarry, leave
 Was but a block heva from a mighty quarry—
 Had seen the anticipated quarry turoed
 On which the cripple, in the quarry maimed,
Quarry's. I love to mark the quarry's moving trains,
 The mead is crossed—the quarry's mouth
 From the far-distant quarry's vault returns;
Quarter. Or wind from any quarter, ever come;
 When cross-winds on her quarter heat;
 Crowding the quarter whence the sun comes forth
 How cold the quarter that the wind best loves,
 Look, from the quarter whence the lord of light,
 Hope from that quarter would, I know, have brought
 In every quarter something visible,
Quarter-deck. Cries out—"Tis there, the quarterdeck
Quartered. Through three divisions of the quartered year
Quarters. With proper speed our quarters may be gained
 It fronts all quarters, and looks round
 In all her quarters temptingly displayed!
 Who never let the quarters, night or day,
 In different quarters of the bending sky,
 From the four quarters of the winds to do
 But through all quarters looked for him in vain.
 In quarters unobnoxious to such chance
 To the four quarters of the winds, proclaims
Quaver. Although I cannot quaver so in vain

Quays. The streets and quays are thronged, but why disowa

Queen. See Malden-queen, Shepherd-queen.
 That proclaims a genuine queen;
 A sister Queen, against the bont
 Ere the tired head of Scotland's Queen
 So stately, of the Queen Osmundā named;
 A queen in crown of rubies drest;
 By Shepherd-groom or May-day queen,
 In honour of their Queen.
 She towered, fit person for a Queen Forth sprang the impassioned queen her Lord to clasp;

Or Rival, save the Queen of night
 Domestic queen, where grandeur is unknown;
 —Queen, and handmaid lowly!
 All powers that serve the bright-eyed Queen
 Is Harmony, blest queen of smiles and tears,
 Is a sweet Isle, of isles the Queen;
 Queen both for beauty and for majesty.
 But if the Nereid Sisters add their Queen,
 From the dread summit of the Queen
 Savona, Queen of territory fair
 Of God, and Heaven's pure Queen—the blissful Mary.
 It was the time when England's Queen
 A just and gracious Queen have we,
 Behold her, like a virgin Queen,
 And rapt Cecilia, seraph-haunted Queen
 (Proud triumph is it for a sullen Queen!)
 Hail, Virgin-Queen! o'er many an envious har
 The Virgin-Mountain, wearing like a Queen
 Which is the attendant, Page and which the Queen?
 Queen of the stars!—so gentle, so benign,
 The Queen drew back the wrimple that she wore;
 Like that pale Queen whose hands are seen
 Queen art thou still for each gay plait
 How beautiful the Queen of Night, on high

No queen before a shouting crowd
 "My knowledge is so weak, O blissful Queen!
 Before the chamber-window of the Queen,
 The Queen of Beauty thus her court address'd)
 Would I, by previous wiles, inflame the queen
 Reclin'd in festal pomp the Tyrian queen.
 Then seeks the queen; with her his arts he tries;
 Queen, Wife and Mother! may All-judging Heaven
 They tell that your future Queen is born.
 It named the future Queen;
 Welcomes the Consort of a happy Queen.
 The Pride of the Islands, VICTORIA THE
 QUEEN!
 Together danced, Queen of the feast, and King;
 Hath not completed since our dame, the queen
 Even at that age she ruled, a sovereign queen,
 Or the clear moon. The queen of these gay sports,
 To Scotland's court in service of his Queen,
Achilles—but, O Queen, the whole relate.

Queen and negress chaste and fair!
 Hayti's shining queen was made
 As little as the unblemish'd Queen of Night, Queen's. The minutes fly—till, at the queen's command,

Queens. Queens gleaming through their splendour's last decay,
Queen. Lady, (you will think it queer)
Quell. "Quell the Scot," exclaims the Lance—
 Or awed he weeps, struggling to quell dismay.
 Nor craved he more to quell his foes,
 The shock, nor quell the inevitable rout,
 Exalt his still small voice;—to quell that Host
 Of One whose spirit no reverse could quell;
 To quell the RISING of the NORTH;
 He spake—"would stem, or quell, a force
 And being, to preclude or quell the strife
 Assaults the pride she strove in vain to quell.
 To quell the rage of literary War!
 Resolved to quell his pain, and search for truth
Quelled. I could have quelled the Cowards, but this Stripling

And Albion's giants quelled,
 Its even tenor, and the foe was quelled,
 Hence hath your prowess quelled that impious crew.
 His whole bold carriage (which had quelled
 The Dragon quelled; and valiant Margaret
 All vain desires, all lawless wishes quelled,
 But woader, pity, soon were quelled;
 If e'er these precepts quell'd the passions' strife,
 Would have abashed those impious crests—have quelled

Doubt shall be quelled and trouble chased away;
 By man's imperishable spirit, quelled.
Quelling. See Giant-quelling.
Quench. The grave shall open, quench the stars.
 Quench those felicities whose light I find
 Admonished by these truths, and quench all pain
 Bear with me, Brother! quench the thought
 That quench, from hut to palace, lamps and fires,
 And quench the passions kindling into flame;
Quenched. What feuds, not quenched but fed by mutual woe.

Quiet—continued.

Made quiet as he is. Why came you down?
 And did not want glimmerings of quiet hope.
 The only quiet heart on earth. In terror,
 Our quiet home all full in view,
 You live, Sir, in these dales, a quiet life:
 A mighty wonder bred among our quiet crew.
 The Babe was drawing in its quiet food.
 Who knew not to what quiet depths a weight
 Where in forgotten quiet he might dwell,
 That I could not lie quiet in my grave.
 From years of quiet industry, to love
 Its own deep quiet to restore our hearts.
 Lashed out of life, not quiet in the grave.
 Let them all in quiet lie,
 Thy quiet with no ill intent,
 The horses made a quiet stand;
 Sickening into thoughtful quiet;
 Their quiet heing: and unless I now
 He sang of love, with quiet blending,
 This health, this calm, and quiet scene;
 So passed in quiet bliss,
 The landscape with the quiet of the sky.
 While with an eye made quiet by the power
 Of blissful quiet 'mid unfeeling bowers.
 Safe through the winter storm in quiet dwells!
 In listless quiet o'er the etheral deep
 Transmits him to a wretch from quiet hurried—
 Less quiet regions to explore
 But he flowed quiet and unseen:
 Across the deep and quiet spot:
 In quiet uncomplaining mood,
 And touch more quiet skies.
 The holy time is quiet as a Nun
 Gently hark sunk into the quiet tomb.
 Couch near their dams, with quiet satisfied;
 Of glory lavished on our quiet days.
 For he is safe, a quiet bed
 This little bay; a quiet road
 It is not quiet, is not ease;
 Still hint that quiet best is found,
 And bloodshed, loaged in quiet to be laid
 'Mid the deep quiet of this morning hour,
 Though false to Nature's quiet equipoise;
 For quiet contemplation:
 Lie quiet in your churchyard bed!
 What quiet watch she seems to keep,
 Of quiet to the neighbouring fields;
 Eager to build the quiet Fortresses
 Of public quiet; unambitious Men,
 Not to the golden mean, and quiet flow
 Seen in her course, nor 'mid this quiet heard;
 One, who has watched thee at some quiet hour
 In kindred quiet I repose my trust.
 Nursed in the quiet Abbey of St. Bees.
 On woman's quiet hours;
 The harvest of a quiet eye
 Are quiet when they will.
 Is quiet in its sheath,
 In humble grace, and quiet pensiveness
 Can thy enduring quiet gently raise
 Far from our home by Grasmere's quiet Lake,
 Within your quiet range.
 Out of the quiet rock the elements
 This quiet spot; and, Stranger! not unmoved
 The quiet of nature was Adam's delight.
 To settled quiet: he is one by whom
 Death is the quiet haven of us all.
 So pure the sky, so quiet was the air!
 Elysian quiet, without toil or strife;
 His quiet heart's selected home.
 Her quiet is secure;
 O gift divine of quiet sequestration!
 —Then Quiet led me up the huddling rill
 By silver'd wreaths of quiet charcoal smoke,
 In cataracts, or sleeps in quiet lakes.
 By the deep quiet gloom appall'd, she sighs,
 Her quiet streams, and hills of downy green,
 Turning with quiet touch the valley's hay,
 To break the quiet of the village shade
 And quiet now are the depths of air,
 In quiet more profound;
 A quiet independence of the heart;
 Under the quiet stars, and at that time
 Of peace and quiet and domestic love,
 Health and the quiet of a healthful mind
 Full of the quiet and exalted thoughts
 Come forth, perhaps without one quiet thought.
 For quiet things to wander in; a haunt
 And more than pastoral quiet, 'mid the stir
 I saw the quiet woodman in the woods,
 Preyed on my strength, and stopped the quiet
 stream
 A character of quiet more profound
 And with a quiet uncomplaining voice,
 Then sought with quiet heart my distant home.
 A pleasure quiet and profound, a sense
 Measuring our steps in quiet, we pursued
 Quiet and lorded over and possessed
 Locked up in quiet. For myself, I fear
 Then from the quiet of that scene passed on,

Quiet—continued.

That would have pleased me in more quiet times;
 By day, a quiet sound in silent night;
 Happy, and quiet in his cheerfulness,
 And she forgotten in the quiet grave.
 A quiet treeless nook, with two green fields,
 It could not be more quiet: peace is here
 Or introduced at this more quiet time.
 Through the long year in constant quiet bound,
 Who, for the sake of sterner quiet, closed
 Where earth is quiet and her face unchanged.
 As times of quiet and unbroken peace,
 In the best quiet to her course allowed;
 That keeps the raven quiet in her nest,
 Before his time into a quiet grave,
 On the hill-sides, a cheerful quiet scene,
 Here to lie down in lasting quiet, he,
 The steadfast quiet natural to a mind
 The visible quiet of this holy ground,
 No quiet in the darkness of the night,
 Amid the quiet of the green recess,
 Contented to partake the quiet meal
 That, near the quiet churchyard where we sate,
 The innocent troubler of their quiet, sleeps
 And pensive quiet, an unnatural light
 Quiet and calm. Behold him—in the school
 How with most quiet and most silent death,
 Like that reflected in yon quiet pool,
 Quiet and dark; for through the thick-wove trees,
 In quiet hopelessness I sleep,
 Alas! how quiet, and how deep!
 Composing darkness, with a quiet loud
 And lived so long in quiet, side by side.
 Our beautiful and quiet home, enriched
 Through quiet meadows, after he has learnt
 From frightful storms into a quiet road.
 Quieted. And all was calmed and quieted.
 And quieted in character—the strife,
 And, quieted and soothed, a torrent small,
 "But all was quieted by iron bonds
 Quietly. How quietly her Johnny goes.
 As quietly as spots of sky
 Is Peter quietly resigned;
 And quietly passed through.
 That you can listen quietly:
 Or quietly self-buried in earth's mould,
 Stood quietly in Rylstone-hall.
 The same who quietly was feeding
 That quietly restores the natural mien
 From thy mild manners quietly exhaled.
 He lay in slumber quietly;
 Is listening quietly.
 I went into the Orchard quietly;
 Or sate reclined; admiring quietly
 Quietness. For shadowy quietness.
 With quietness and beauty, and so feed
 In quietness withdraws;
 What groans! what shrieks! what quietness in death!
 In quietness she lays her down;
 Of Barden's lowly quietness.
 Of quietness, she sits alone;
 Now with her own deep quietness content;
 Health, meekness, ardour, quietness secure,
 But in the quietness of thought:
 And quietness pillow his head.
 The heart of quietness is here
 Of quietness or peace; yet have I stood,
 The safeguard for repose and quietness.
 In quietness, without anxiety:
 Then fading with unusual quietness,—
 To meditation in that quietness!
 For quietness profound!" Upon the side
 Our thoughts unite in kindred quietness!
 Of glad emotion and deep quietness;
 Quire. See Choir.
 And while the town, a ruddy quire,
 So pleads the town's cathedral quire,
 Besprinkled with a careless quire,
 (So might he seem) of all the glittering quire!
 To Nature's tuneful quire, this rustling dry
 For I have heard the quire of Richmond hill
 Hallows once more the long-deserted Quire
 And add your voices to the quire
 Can she be grieved for quire or shrine,
 Till the whole City rings like one vast quire.
 The silent stars, among the angelic quire,
 Supreme among the Elysian quire,
 But chanted by your Orphan Quire
 Quires. See Choirs.
 Mount, tuneful Bird, and join the immortal quires!
 Touch not the tapers of the sacred quires;
 Have let it, not the happy Quires of Spring,
 Quit. Let us quit the leafy arbour,
 Nor will I quit thy shore
 All that could quit my grasp, or flee,
 To quit the slow-paced waggon's side,

Quivered. The startled bird quivered upon the wing,
 Quivered and seemed almost to leave,
Quivering. A woman stood with quivering lips and pale,
 Those quivering wings composed, that music still!

 From this deep chasm, where quivering sunbeams play
 And jealousy, and quivering strife,
 Responsive to his call, with quivering peals,
Quivers. Notice or name!—It quivers down the hill,

Quoth. Quoth Betty, "and will soon be here,
 Quoth Peter, leaping from his seat,
 Quoth he, "You little mulish dog,
 That I am here, they'll think" quoth he,
 "No doubt," quoth he, "he is the Master
 "Blood drops—leaves rustle—yet" quoth he,
 Quoth Merlin, "Even as I was bidden,
 "My Oarsmen," quoth the mighty King, "draw near,
 "O Lord, our Lord! how wondrously," (quoth she)
 Following the Lamb celestial," quoth she,
 Now, God, quoth I, that died upon the rood,
 What! quoth she then, what is't that ails thee now?
 Ah, fool! quoth she, wist thou not what it is?
 Ay, quoth the Cuckoo, that is a quaint law,
 What! quoth she, thou art all out of thy mind,
 Then, quoth she, let me never hope for bliss,
 Fie, quoth she, on thy name, Bird ill beseen!
 Quoth she, to hear this churlish bird thus speak
 Nay, nothing shall me bring thereto, quoth I,
 Yea, hath it? use, quoth she, this medicine;
 Now farewell, quoth she, for I hence must wend;
 Quoth Andrew, "Under half-a-crown,
 "Ha," quoth I, "pretty prisoner, are you there!"

Rabbits. Hares couch, and rabbits burrow!
Rabble. The glittering rabble housed to . . . and swear
Rabblement. Amid the uproar of the rabblement, Raby. Had sate together in Raby Hall!
Race. See After-race, Eagle-race, Mill-race.
 The general sorrows of the human race:
 They run up stairs in gamesome race;
 "We'll for our whistles run a race."
 —They were the last of all their race: and now,
 Thou easy-hearted Thing, with thy wild race
 Figures with armorial signs of race and birth,
 From whom the Race of human kind proceed,
 How soon my Lucy's race was run!
 Such race, I think, was never seen before.
 Where is the throng, the tumult of the race?
 "For thirteen hours he ran a desperate race;
 In him the savage virtue of the Race,
 That I might step beyond my natural race
 Enquire not if the faery race
 The shadow-casting race of trees survive:
 High o'er the red-haired race of Mars,
 As ever ran a felon's race,
 Running among the clouds a Wood-nymph's race!
 Checked oft-times in a devious race,
 That Ossian, last of all his race!
 Proud Remonaat was he of a fearless Race,
 And feel, thou Earth, for this afflicted Race!
 For some Aspirant of our short-lived race,
 Ne'er saw a race who held, by right of birth,
 The blood of Heroes runs its race!
 To the Valerian, Fabian, Curian Race,
 And, though the passions of man's fretful race
 For the clear waters to pursue their race
 Yet, though a wild vindictive Race, untamed
 The Race of Alfred covet glorious palms
 The turbaned Race are poured in thickening swarms
 Each with the other in a lingering race
 Yet may outstrip me in the appointed race,
 Far different we—a froward race,
 All the four are in the race:
 Already half his race hath run;
 To Beardless Boys—an imitative race,
 Perhaps the sole survivor of thy race,
 When Fanmor's race is run;
 Another race hath been, and other palms are won.
 Albert, in thy race we cherish
 Odin, the Father of a race by whom
 And wasted down by glorious death that race
 Daily with chaunted rites. In such a race
 In uncouth race, and left the cross-legged knight,
 And manners finely wrought, the delicate race
 Behold a race of young ones like to those . . . 671 Prelude 5. 407

Raced. I saw the hare that raced about with joy;
Racers. By the fleet Racers, ere the sun be set,
Races. The hare is running races in her mirth;
Rachel. My little Rachel, you must run,—
 "Make haste—my little Rachel—do,
 Away goes Rachel weeping loud;
 Remove this second Rachel from the hier.
Racing. Rushing and racing came to meet me at the waterside!
 Or racing o'er your blue ethereal field
Rack. And in such wise to rack her gentle heart,
 But what is colour, if upon the rack
Racked. How, when the People's mind was racked with doubt,
Racking. And groans that rage of racking famine spoke;
Of racking malady. And true it is Radiance. Strong flakes of radiance on the tremulous
 stream:
 Where oaks o'erhaug the road the radiance shoots
 Of massy gloom and radiance bold.
 Shines with poetic radiance as of old;
 Dwell, clothed in radiance, their immortal vest;
 Their radiance through the woods—may yet suffice
 Of beamy radiance, that imbues . . . 4 Eu. Wk. 109

Raised. See Half-raised, Self-raised.

Raised by yon travelling flock, a dusty cloud . . .

From one who mourned in sleep, he raised his head, The man half raised the stone with pain and sweat, Half raised, for well his arm might lose its force Nor raised my hand at any door to knock, Nor pain nor pity in my bosom raised, He rhand in his, and raised it, but both dropped, Heavier than work, raised it: within that hut A sad spectacle: I raised him up And flung it to the dogs; but I am raised At this the Father raised his hook, His head he raised—there was in sight, That Cross helike he also raised as a standard for the true . . .

His paternal Gods, the Trojan raised? He raised, and never stopped: . . .

Born all too high, by wedlock raised . . .

And other sheep from her I raised, . . .

Full fifty comely sheep I raised, . . .

For beauty, to your lip is raised, . . .

Another monument shall here be raised; . . .

Be thy affections raised and solemnised, . . .

Once raised, remains agast, and will not fall! Has raised thy spirit in a peaceful stand Through space, though calm, not raised above Suddenly raised by some enchanter's power, The staff was raised to loftier height, He raised her up; and while he held As if the sun were not. He raised his eye 'Gainst him who raised it,—his last work on earth: . . .

Raised—continued.

That wide-spanned arch, wondering how it was raised, . . .

Or with a new ambition raised; . . .

The thing which ought to be; is raised above . . .

Raised up to sway the world, to do, undo, . . .

Raised and sustained by memory of Him . . .

From that depression raised, to mount on high Bound him, nor, since he raised yon House, have ceased . . .

Seated alone, with forehead sky-ward raised, . . .

And, while she raised her from the ground, That raised, for centuries, a bar Can such a mighty hst be raised . . .

Not raised in nice proportions was the pile, To lofty raised; and to the highest, last; . . .

So, where the mouldered tree had stood, was raised And saturnine; her head not raised to hold As ever raised to heaven a streaming eye! Beyond its natural elevation raised . . .

Raised in the tender passage of the throat Raised from his seat within the chosen shade, Raised by his hands. And now no trace is left . . .

And the Arts died by which they had been raised, —Can hope look forward to a manhood raised . . .

With shouts we raised the echoes;—stiller sounds Where cunch the spnted deer; or raised our eyes His beaming-eye that had been raised to Heaven, Was raised again: and to a happy few, Thoughts raised above the Earth while here he sits

 Was making such a noise as it ran on
 And to the brook I ran and got a stone,
 Through all my frame the pleasing accents ran.
 We ran a boisterous course; the year span round
 Before that hour, or since. Then, forth I ran
 Ran, ostrich-like, to reach our chapel door
 That ran on Sabbath days a fresher course;
 Ran in new channels, leaving old ones dry;
 Were seen descending,—forth to greet them ran.

Rancour. From evil-speaking; rancour, never

 She burns, she frets—by Juno's rancour stung;
Random. (At random and imperfectly indeed)
 By random footsteps to be prest,

 With modulated echoes rang,
 And hill and valley rang with glee
 Rang loud through the meadow and wood.

 And from example of thy monthly range
 Made room where wolf and boar were used to range?

Rapture. With not unfrequent rapture fondly hailed.
What tears of rapture, what vow-making,
In strains of rapture pure and holy
Of rapture from a thousand throats—
In silent rapture, credulous desire
Such strains of rapture as the Genius played
Thy countenance—the still rapture of thy mien—
Of silent rapture; but we felt the while
To rapture! Mabel listened at the side
From rapture, lying softly on her breast!
Thy saintly rapture with celestial aim:
And, at one moment, in one rapture, strive
As with a rapture caught from heaven—
Where life and rapture flow in plenitude sublime.
The simple rapture;—who that travels far
In strains of rapture, or subdued delight!
Deep was the awe, the rapture high,
Gives to that rapture an accordant Rhyme.
Who comes—with rapture greeted, and caressed
With genuine rapture and with fervent love
Or the mute rapture ended in a sigh—
In rapture,—yet suspending her embrace,
They mount for rapture as their songs proclaim

A faith more fixed, a rapture more divine 504 Warning 58

Given to the pausing traveller's rapturous glance:
Ah! that a boon could shew such rapturous joys!

Rare beads, and birds with plumage bright;
Of brilliant moss, instinct with freshness rare;
Rare sight to embedden and inspire!
Remaining still distinct green thin and rare,
For some rare plant, yon Headland of St. Bees.
Rare master has it been thy lot to know;
Those rare accomplishments, and varied powers,
To those dear intervals, not rare nor brief,
Rare, or at least so seeming, every day
Abruptly, with the view (a sight not rare)
And intellectual strength so rare a boon—
For some rare floweret of the hills, or plant
Some rare advantages. Your early days

Rarely. One rarely absent from thy train
And friends too rarely prop the languid head.
Where Man, yet mortal, rarely finds a place.
Knowing, things rashly sought are rarely found;
Such sympathies, though rarely, were betrayed
Rarely and with reluctance would I stoop
Falls rarely in entire discomfiture
To me came rarely charged with natural gifts,
Rarely a house, that did not yield to him
Performs its functions; rarely competent

Rarest. The rarest was a Turtle-shell

them:
With speculative notions rashly sown,
Who rashly strove thy Image to portray?
Knowing, things rashly sought are rarely found;
Nor, as perchance thou rashly dem'st, the Cairn
Evil as one is rashly named by men
Rashly, to fall once more; and that false fruit,
Hopes rashly, in disgust as rash recoils;
The rash betrayer could not face the shame

Rather—continued.

May rather seem
 Turn rather, though I love her well:
 Deem rather that the fervent Youth, who saw
 Its playmate, rather say, its moving soul.
 Or rather of some gentle maid,
 I rather think the gentle Dove
 Yet, trust the Muse, it rather hath
 Doth rather deepen than disturb the calm
 Or is it rather that Conceit rapacious is and strong,
 Unwearing in that service; rather say
 Exclaimed the Chieftain—"let me rather see
 Him rather suits it, side by side with thee,
 To milder climes; or rather do ye urge
 It moves us not.—Great God! I'd rather be
 At early dawn, or rather when the air
 We rather think, with grateful mind sedate,
 Think rather of those moments bright
 Wear rather in thy bonde a cheerful brow:
 Say rather, one in native fellowship
 Or rather thou appear'st a glistening snake,
 Or rather felt, the entrancement that detains
 Say, rather, with that generous sympathy
 Unbent, which rather seemed to rise,
 My feet would rather turn—to some dry nook
 Or rather rose the day to antedate,
 Which showers of blood seem rather to incite
 Nay, rather speak with gratitude:
 Pleased rather with some soft ideal scene,
 The while a Thrush, urged rather than restrained
 Others do rather from their notice shrink
 Rather than her disgraced, would chuse to die.
 Ask rather a triumphal strain
 Was given (say rather thou of later birth
 But turn we rather, let my spirit turn
 Mourn rather for that holy Spirit,
 We will grieve not, rather find
 Entrenched, say rather peacefully embowered,
 I choose it rather at this time, than work
 Into the houndless sea, and rather makes
 And what may rather have been called to life
 Nor have I pitied him; but rather felt
 Or rather like a stalled ox debarred
 Fetching her goodness rather from times past,
 More than its timely produce; rather loved
 This spurious virtue, rather let it bear
 Me, rather, it employed, to note, and keep
 That dazzled me, but rather what I mourned
 A gift that was come rather late than soon.
 Of condensation; but did rather seem
 Not speaking much, pleased rather with the joy
 Or, rather say, state down by very chance,
 Or to pass through; but rather an abyss
 Fraught rather with depression than delight,
 Breeds love: yet, suited as it rather is Yet rather would I instantly decline
 To this would rather bend than see and hear
 And they who rather dive than soar, whose pangs
 Say rather, all his thoughts now flowing clear,
 Or rather, as we stand on holy earth,
 Perhaps incited rather, by these shocks,
 Would rather shun than seek the fellowship
 Who rather would not envy, men that feel
 With its appropriate grace, yet rather seeking
 Whose sorrow rather is to suffer wrong
 That now divides the pair, or rather say,
 Or rather seemed to have grown into the side
 Or rather, let us say, how least observed,
 "Then let us rather fix our gladdened thoughts
 Through mutual injury! Rather in the law
 And neighbourhood serves rather to divide
 Or rather skulking for the common weal

Ratify. Which, with a generous shout, the crowd did ratify.

Rational. Which ill can brook more rational relief:

And prayer, man's rational prerogative,
 Of rational and manly sympathy.
 Would be rational peace—a philosopher's ease.
 On rational liberty, and hope in man,
 Of rational Experience, for the shoots
 More rational proportions; mystery,
 Human and rational, report of thee
 The rational creature, left, to feel the weight
 Yet is the creature rational, endowed
 Say, what can follow for a rational soul

Rattle. Right in the slates, and with a huge rattle

Rattled. Rattled his chain;—twas all in vain,

Rattles. Rattles the salt-box, thumps the kettle-

Rattling. And hear the rattling thunder far below;

The post-boy, when his rattling wheels o'ertake

Would, with its rattling music, come,

The voice of spears was heard, the rattling spear

Ravage. Ravage for which no knell was heard. We prayed

And merciless ravage: and the shady nook

Had found, in ravage widely dealt,

Ravage the world, tranquillity is here!"

Is stripped; the ravage hath spread wide

Of ravage saved—sate Emily.

Ravage—continued.

A ravage out of season, made by thoughts
Ravaged. Of towns in flames, fields ravaged, young and old

Its courts are ravaged; but the tower
Rave. With omnipresent murmur as they rave
 Until this storm hath ceased to rave:

Raven. And, hovering, round it often did a raven fly.
 Gone is the raven timely rest to seek;
 He'd not have robbed the raven of its food,
 She was my Raven in the wilderness,
 "Here thou need'st not dread the raven in the sky;
 If on windy days the Raven
 Perched on whose top the Danish Raven croaks;
 Aloft the Raven hangs a visible nest,

As sent from heav'n the raven of the skies,
 That keeps the raven quiet in her nest,
 One voice—the solitary raven, flying
 The raven lodged in safety,—Many a ship
 The raven croaks, and fills the upper air

Raven-crag. Of Raven-crag—black as a storm—

Ravenous. And ravenous plague, all perished: every tear

 Ere, poucing like a ravenous bird of prey,
 That would engulf him soon in the ravenous sea—

Raven's. The mountain-raven's youngling brood
 In colour like a raven's wing;
 The crags repeat the raven's croak,
 Above the raven's nest, by knots of grass

Ravens. And fling him to the ravens. But his aspect,
 To feed the ravens; or a shepherd dies
 They played like two young ravens on the crags:
 Blithe ravens croak of death; and when the owl
 Two ravens now began to croak

Where ravens spread their plumy vans, at ease!
Raves. Where the whirlpool frets and raves
 He raves, or through some moody passage creeps

Ravine. Of mountains, through a deep ravine,
Ravish. And giddy prospect of the raving stream, Ravish. She longed to ravish;—shall she plunge, or climb

That down didst ravish from the Deity, Ravishment. That ravishment of mine, and laughed aloud.

And all the mighty ravishment of spring.
 And filled the illumined groves with ravishment.

Raw. One morning (raw it was and wet—
 For cold and raw the air was, and untuned;
 Not only in that raw unpractised time

Ray. Since she (her name is Martha Ray)
 That Martha Ray about this time
 They had to do with Martha Ray.
 Tip their smooth ridges with a softer ray;
 While coves and secret hollows, through a ray
 Gilding that cottage with her fondest ray,
 Blesses the moon that comes with kindly ray,
 'Mid smoking woods gleams hid from morning's ray
 And pines the unripened pear in summer's kindest ray;

—Alas! in every clime a flying ray
 Fresh-smitten by the morning ray
 Never enlivened with the liveliest ray
 Are smitten by a silver ray;
 Which, with slant ray, the merry sun
 Wherever strikes the sun's glad ray;
 Glisten with a livelier ray
 Yon old grey Stone, protected from the ray
 Glistening with unparticipated ray,
 His judgment with benignant ray
 A ray of fancy still survives—
 Dread King of Kings, vouchsafe a ray divine
 Nor take one ray of light from Thee;
 My noble fire emits the joyful ray
 Nor lose one ray of glory!
 Shines in the greeting of the sun's first ray
 Communication, like the ray
 Most glorious sunset! and a ray
 A guiding ray; or seem—like stars on high,
 Cheers these Recluses with a steady ray
 The sun's first greeting, his last farewell ray!
 The hastiest sunrise yields a temperate ray;
 Where, sensitive of every ray
 And all shall welcome the new ray
 His graceful manners, and the temperate ray
 The ray the cot of morning trav'ling nigh,
 The coves and secret hollows thro' a ray
 Who faint, and beat by summer's breathless ray,
 Delighted, with the glow-worm's harmless ray
 Blesses the Moon that comes with kindest ray
 Gleams, streak'd or dappled, hid from morning's ray
 To throw the "sultry ray" of young Desire;
 And apple sickens pale in summer's ray,
 With earlier smile the ray of morn to view
 Enlivening Hope display'd her cheerful ray,
 With steadfast ray benign
 Was conscious of the ray;
 The other, which the ray divine hath touched,
 From which it did itself imbibe a ray

Rays. Hope with reflection blends her social rays
 Scarce hides a shadow from her searching rays;

Razed. Tents of a camp that never shall be razed—Reached. To reach a small-wood-but hung boldly on the steep.

In sea-like reach of prospect round him spread,
Of this Man's crimes beyond the reach of thought?
Oh that I had but strength to reach the place !
That venturesome foot could reach, to one or both.

It was not long ere Leonard reached a grove . . .
And now we reached the orchard-plot ;
Reached speedily the native threshold, bent . . .
And now, when Luke had reached his eighteenth
year,
And soon, when he had reached his eighteenth year,
And soon as they had reached the place he stopped,
Began his journey, and, when he had reached . . .
And now have reached that pile of stones, . . .
Had almost reached the festive door, . . .
Till he had reached a summit sharp and bare, . . .
We've reached at last the promised Tale ;)
And now has reached the skirting trees ; . . .
Is reached ; but there the trusty guide . . .
The Beast hestriding thus, he reached . . .
Is reached, where, forfeiting his bright attire, . . .
The wished-for point was reached—but at an hour
When her long life hath reached its final day :
The roving Spanish Bands are reached at last, . . .
And, if the glory reached the Nun, . . .
Hath reached the encincture of that gloomy sea . . .
We reached a votive Stoe that bears . . .
He reached that ebon car, the hier . . .
She reached the destined strand. . .
Of music reached its height, and even when sank
Reached by the dews of heavenly grace ; . . .
Faint—but it reached that sheltered spot ; . . .
They met, when they had reached the door, . . .
She reached the grave, and with her breast
Till they have reached the eternal City—built
The pair have reached that fearful chasm,
And reached the lonely Isle.
For ye have reach'd at last the happy shore, . . .
Nor rest till they had reached the very door
We reached a cottage. At the door I knocked,
Following a band of multesters, we reached
Which, when the spirit of evil reached its height,
Have faithfully been pictured ; we have reached . . .
Had reached its close ; but Life is insecure,
O'er the flat Common—With quick step I reached
And, ere the stars were visible, had reached
Her voice of social transport reached even him !
A steep ascent ; and reached a dreary plain, . . .
And, to my feeling, ere we reached the door, . . .
And reached a small apartment dark and low,
And I descended. Having reached the house,
Rises ; but, having reached the thinner air, . . .
The Sun, before his place of rest were reached,
Nor reached the village-churchyard till the sun
And daily longing that the same were reached,
She reached the house, last of the funeral train ;
That filled her plains, that reached her utmost
shores,
Or as a stranger reached this deep recess, . . .
Thus having reached a bridge, that overarched
Whose low tones reached not to the distant rocks
Was reached, the Solitary checked his steps ;
Reached her with supernatural mandates charged
And now when he had reached his eighteenth year
That Shepherd's voice, it may have reached mine ear
Look back till we had reached the boundary . . .
Reached. Winds far in reaches hidden from our sight,
The mazy reaches of Loch Katerine.

Reached. That, reaching to her gates, spreads east and west,
Read. I read, and loved the books in which I read ;
The Sheriff read, in open Court, a letter . . .
And he disturbed, as I am. I have read . . .
Books have we to read,—but that half-stifed knell,
If I may dare to cherish hope that gentle eyes will read
There too we read of Spenser's fairy themes,
You plainly in her face may read it,
Of such we in romances read :
The letter was read over ; Isabel
Both parents read them with rejoicing hearts.
Of which we in the Ballad read.
Sighed to think I read a book
Only read, perhaps, by me ;
A wound where plainly might be read . . .
The language of my former heart, and read
Wild as it is, he there can read . . .
The snow-white page on which he read . . .
What joy to read the promise of her mien !

Read—continued.

We read the dictate in the infant's eye ;
 And in its sparkling progress read
 Father of all ! though wilful Manhood read
 Presumptuous Book ! too forward to be read,
 By feet of purse-proud strangers ; they—who have read
 Did we together read in Spenser's Lay
 And we have in one meaning read ;
 For she hath ventured now to read
 Had in her childhood read the same ;
 That confident assurance may he read ;
 We read of faith and purest charity
 Read o'er these lines ; and then review
 When You might read, my credit would be gone.
 To read that they, who mark thy course, behold
 That is to say, to sing and read also,
 May read them not without some bitter tears.
 Which pious, learned, MURFIT saw and read—
 More deeply read in thy own thoughts ; to thee
 Read lazily in trivial books, went forth
 Bucer, Erasmus, or Melancthon, read
 I read, without design, the opinions, thoughts,
 With thoughts unfelt till now I saw her read
 And can read lectures upon Innocence ;
 And tell you all their cunning ; he can read
 And there have read, devouring as I read,
 To think of, to read over, many a page,
 Before our eyes, we could not choose but read
 Like others, I had skimmed, and sometimes read
 Into a thousand colours ; while he read,
 Shall beat no more. Thou, also, there may'st read,
 Being written in a tongue he cannot read,
 The scale of liberty. I read her doom
 Of whom we read, the man whom we behold
 Were open schools in which I daily read
 Do read the invisible soul ; by men adroit
 But eagerly he read, and read again,
 And in their silent faces could he read
 While at the stall he read. Among the hills
 For the meek Sufferer. Why then should we read
 And in the silence of his face I read
 And in the Matron's countenance may be read
 Duly we paid, each after each, and read
 I read,—how in his manhood's earlier day
 This honest sheep-dog's countenance I read ;
 Thither we turned ; and gathered, as we read,
 And much she read ; and brooded feelingly
 The Pastor answered, " You have read him well.
 And tottering towers ; I loved to stand and read
 Their looks forbidding, read and disobey,
 Yea to this hour I cannot read a tale
 The sage has read the stars with skill so true,
Re-addressed. To bend, he stoutly re-addressed himself,
Reader. (Reader, forgive the intolerable thought)
 Oh Reader ! now that I might tell Reader, farewell ! My last words let them be—
 My gentle Reader, I perceive
 O Reader ! had you in your mind
 O gentle Reader ! you would find
 Now, Reader, learn from this my fate, how false
 Reader ! if to thy bosom cling the pain
Read'st. Think not, O Passenger! who read'st the lines
 That, deaf and silent, read'st the eternal deep,
Reader. A reader book of manifold contents,
 Listened with reader patience than to strain
Readlest. Through Paris lay my readiest course, and there
Readily. Befriends the observance, readily they join
 Will now so readily be found
 More readily the more my years require
 Which practised talent readily affords,
 As readily by syllogistic words
 Which my life holds, he readily may conceive
 Or death-watch ; and as readily rejoice,
 More readily, the more my years require
Readiness. Or both, with equal readiness of will,
Reading. As if he had been reading in a book :
 Like some one reading in a book—
 This man was reading in his room ;
 Conversing, reading, laughing,—or they sing,
 Reading or thinking ; either to lay up
 In which I had been reading, at my side.
 On the vague reading of a truant youth
 Of reading them with quick and curious eye ;
 Reading of nations and their works, in faith,
 Reading at intervals ; the fear gone by Reading, where'er we turn, of innocent lives,
 In lonely reading found a meek resource :
Ready. See Ever ready.
 Brisk toll, alternating with ready ease,
 Attends your pleasure. We are ready—
 I have no cases by me ready made
 A stern face it puts on, as if ready to say,
 By ready nature for a life of love,
 Make ready Luke's best garments, of the best
 Lay thrown together, ready for the work.
 Was ready with her cavern ; Hammar-scar,
 So humble, yet so ready to rejoice
 A steady to salute the sun

Ready—continued.

Of open house and ready fare.
 Espies—and instantly is ready,
 Calm, though impatient, is the crowd ; each stands
 ready with the fee,
 Each ready with a plaintive whine !
 With tools for ready wit to guide ;
 To freeze the blood I have no ready arts :
 With ready heels his shaggy side ;
 With ready unbeans every straggling shower ;
 Hangs ready to be grasped in sympathy
 A hoat is ready to pursue ;
 Apt language, ready as the tuneless notes
 Must, when my part is done, be ready ;
 She has a world of ready wealth,
 To which I listen with a ready ear ;
 And ready for the gentlest stroke of death.
 Are with a ready heart bestowed
 The Wain stood ready, at our Cottage-door,
 And couch—all ready to a wish
 Here will he gather stores of ready bliss,
 For simple infant hath a ready ear.
 Who have a broom still ready in your hands
 On board a ship then ready for the seas.
 Give ready place to any random seed
 She was, and with her ready pupil turned
 That time was ready to set all things right,
 Found ready welcome. Tempting region that
 Mild, inoffensive, ready in his way,
 And with that ready answer satisfied,
 The internal pang, are ready ; the dread strife
 Were ready comrades whom he could not tire ;
 Instructing simple childhood's ready ear :
 So cowardly, so ready to betray,
 The ready Organ of articulate sounds
 Be ready and unweary without plea
Real. Among the tasks of real life, hath wrought
 Or, from long stress of real injuries fly
 A race of real children ; not too wise,
 Or physiognomies of real men.
 How casual incidents of real life,
 As may be hoped, of real modesty,—
 In spite of real fervour, and of that
 With real feeling and just sense ; how vain
 By courage, to demand from real life
 Your further help ? The mine of real life
 And real evil, yet he sweet withal, Realised. See Realised.
 Europe, a realised romance,
 And the realised vision is clasped to my heart.
 Moving about in worlds not realised,
 No few of which have since been realised ;
Realities. Has spared of sound and grave realities,
 From the hushed vale's realities, transferred
 When most enslaved by gross realities !
 And reconciled us to realities ;
 Save when realities of act and mien,
 Yea, the realities of life so cold,
Really. Death, life, and sleep, reality and thought,
 More like a grave reality :
 The absolute presence of reality,
 Reality too close and top intense,
 In sober contrast with reality,
 That parts the image from reality ;
Realize. To realize the vision, with intense Realized. See Realised.
 And which, with caution due, may soon be realized."
 And dear Imaginations realized
Really. With things that really are ; I, at this time,
 Whose occupations really I loved ;
Realm. And plods through some wide realm o'er vale and height,
 'Twas dark and void as ocean's watery realm
 From realm to realm the humbled Exile went,
 Within this realm a place of safe retreat ;
 Of Britain's realm, whose leafy crest
 " Or we'll into the realm of Faery,
 Whose realm had dwindled to one stately room ;
 Invades a Realm, so pressed that in the scale
 Even the proud Realm, from whose distracted
 borders
 Had freed his Realm, he plighted word
 All ancient honour in the realm.
 Realm there is none that if controlled or sway'd
 For England's shame, O Sister Realm ! from wood,
 O'er the wide realm, as o'er the Egyptian plain
 Who shall preserve or prop the tottering Realm ?
 Stretched forth with trembling hope ?—In every realm,
 Through every realm confided to thy sway ;
 France lured me forth ; the realm that I had crossed
 A mightier river, winds from realm to realm ;
 Of England's realm, this vale he might have seen
 Their purer service, in this realm at least,
 To Gain, the master-idol of the realm,
 And best protection, this Imperial Realm,
Realms. Through these wide realms a festive peal ;
 The finest palace of a hundred realms !
 Swift, toward the realms that know not earthly day,

Reap. Our hopes such harvest of affliction reap,
 Or reap an acre of his neighbour's corn,
 Of years he on her !—She shall reap . . . 204 Brougham 41
 228 Devot. Incit. 70
 Whether men sow or reap the fields,
 What perfect glory ye in Heaven shall reap !—
Eise shall your blood-stained hands in frenzy reap
 To reap the whirlwind on a Libyan rock,
 The child, whose love is here, at least, doth reap
 Saying, " Behold the harvest that we reap
 And can reap nothing better,—child-like longed
 That the brief hours, which yet remain, may reap Reaped. And reaped—what hath been, and what is, our own, . . . 683 Prelude 6, 536
Reaper. There doth the reaper hind the yellow sheaf,
Reapers. Of reapers, men and women, boys and girls,
 While reapers strove, or busy ploughs
 You might think he'd twelve reapers at work in the Strand, . . . 570 Farmer 72
 Among the jocund reapers. For himself,
Reaping. So, but from toil less sign of profit reaping,
 Reaping and singing by herself ;
 So have we argued ; reaping for our pains
Re-appear. Even so thy latent worth will re-appear,
 The violets of five seasons re-appear
 Takes fire :—The men that have been reappear ;
 Never perhaps to reappear. The Stream
 Her countenance, phantom-like, doth re-appear :
 Will reappear before the uplifted eye
 Until her fellow sinks to re-appear no more.
 And all the scenes of childhood reappear,
 To re-appear, 'twas proved that not in vain
Re-appear'd. When the green earth re-appear'd ;
 The hold Arch-despot re-appear'd—again
Re-appearing. From his grey re-appearing tower shall soon
 Like a re-appearing Star, . . . 205 Brougham 154
 And, reappearing, she no less
 He hath hailed it re-appearing—
 Then, reappearing in a moment, quits
Re-appears. Aloud she shrieked ! for Hermes reappears . . . 549 Hermit's Cell 1, 23

Reaps. That he, who would sow death, reaps death, or worse,
Rear. The rear through iron brown betrays a sullen gleam,
 Or hovering over wastes too bleak to rear . . . 15 Desc. Sh. 256
 Even if thou saw'st the giant wicker rear . . . 26 Guill 122
 She strove, and not in vain, her head to rear ;
 Yet bear me up—else faltering in the rear
 Rear who will a pyramid ;
 Shall rear her form to stately height,
 Or shed at night to rear ;
 Beaumont ! it was thy wish that I should rear
 From van to rear—and with one mind would flee,
 Flinging round van and rear his ghastly net, . . . 321 * Humanity, delight- ing 14
 But Norton lingered in the rear, . . . 406 White Doe 892
 Came ministers of peace, intent to rear
 And be not slow a stately growth to rear
 The pines that near the coast their summits rear
 If virtue be indeed so hard to rear,
 To rear for food, for shelter, and delight ;
Reared. On tiptoe reared, he strains his clarion throat,
 The fountains reared for them amid the waste !
 By lowly nature reared, as if to make her
 Through twenty seasons ; but he had been reared
 The pretty flock which I had reared
 In which this Child of Spring was reared
 Three pillars of rude stone Sir Walter reared,
 Or fortress, reared at Nature's sage command.
 The ground where we were born and reared !
 Who saw the Banner reared on high
 Types of the spiritual Church which God hath
 reared ;
 The Pleasure-house is reared,
 The stately Priory was reared ;
 Firm and unfinching, as the Lighthouse reared
 But frost had reared the gorgeous Pile
 Was reared and taught ; and humbly earned his bread,
 When Life reard'd laughing up her morning sun ;
 On tiptoe reard'd he blows his clarion throat, . . . 584 Ch. Lamb 4

 Child of the mountains, among shepherds reared,
 Thus was he reared ; much wanting to assist
 Reared by the industrious hand of human art
 Reared for thy presence : therefore am I bound
 Cemented ; by the hands of Wisdom reared
 Of furze-clad commons ; such are horn and reared
 She reared it, and in speaking of her charge . . . 733 Prelude 11, 424
Rearer. A planter, and a rearer from the seed ?
Rears. Just where a cloud above the mountain rears
 Your Country rears this sacred Monument !
 Her heaven-offending trophies Glory rears :
 This tablet, that thus humbly rears
 Hung o'er a cloud, above the steep that rears
Reascend. A ladder for thy spirit to reascend Reascending. Then, reascending the bare common, saw
Re-ascend. The re-ascend in sanctity !
Reason. Awed soher Reason till she crouched in fear ?
 Confessed no law but what his reason taught,
 Yet not for this will sober reason frown
 With which he taints her ear ;—for a plain reason ;
 And craft of age, seducing reason, first
 By heaven, his words are reason ! Yes, my Friends,
 Where Reason has an eye that she can use,
 And you should see how deeply I could reason
 To purposes of reason—not a dream
 Give me a reason why the wisest thing
 There surely must some reason be
 And that's the reason why . . . 57 Bord. 1094

 'Twere no offence to reason ;
 But British reason and the British sword.
 Of Reason, seated on her sovereign hill ;
 Of popular reason, long mistrusted, freed
 That she too lacks not reason to rejoice,
 Imagination feels what Reason fears not Substantial motive, reason clear,
 And strength of Reason ; held above
 Who with a power like human reason
 The lucid shafts of reason to employ
 From sense, faith, reason, fancy, of the cause,
 And conquering Reason, if self-glorified,
 Then sure I have no reason to complain,
 Impotent wish ! which reason would despise
 Have I not reason to lament
 Than years of toiling reason :
 Or on his reason,
 Long hast Thou served a man to reason true ;
 Our tears from passion and from reason came,
 The confidence of reason give ;
 —'Tis he whose law is reason ; who depends
 The cause of grateful reason to sustain ;
 To truth and sober reason blind,
 A mournful change, should Reason fail to bring
 Who tempt their reason to deny
 That Reason dictates ; and, as even the wish
 That Reason should control ;
 For Love no reason hath but his own will ;—
 Of reason ; yet prepares that after-joy
 Which reason cherishes. And thus the soul,
 Now is there not good reason to break forth
 In whom thy reason and intelligent heart
 Tam'd "sober Reason" till she crouch'd in fear ?

Recognise. —We recognise in this old Man a victim
Submits to recognise; the immediate law,
Do recognise some image of themselves,
Methinks that I should recognise that face,
And what perceive; well pleased to recognise
To recognise, the lasting virtue lodged
And in that grisly object recognise

Both pain and fear, until we recognise
This dawning earth, to recognise, expect,
"I recognise thy glory;" in such strength
By power of contrast, made me recognise,
By which she is made quick to recognise
And now distinctly could I recognise
Which in that iteration recognise Recognised. Approached; he recognised the Priest at once,
He recognised the earth-born Star,
Within me when I recognised thy light;
Recognised intelligence!
Shrunk as he recognised the face,
He recognised the face;
And recognised it, though an altered form,

At least I more distinctly recognised
Present themselves as objects recognised,
And paramount belief; there recognised
Be recognised by all—"Ah! do not think,"
A heavenly comfort; there she recognised
For she hath recognised her honoured friend,
Recognises. And recognises ever and anon
Recognising. As recognising one Almighty sway:
Recognition. The recognition! the mild glance
Recognitions. With many recognitions dim and faint,
To common recognitions while the line
Like recognitions, but with some constraint
By recognitions of transcendent power,
Wake sudden recognitions, that were like Recoll. Things that recoll from language; that, if shown

That I recoil and droop, and seek repose
By reason; if, with sharp recoil, from one
We should recoil, stricken with sorrow and shame,
Recolled. Recolled into the wilderness.
Recolled—and wings alone could travel—there
At once—or, not recoiling, is perplexed—
Recols. Stretched on the block the glittering axe recoils;
The friend shrinks back—the foe recoils
Or, if the mind turn inward, she recoils
Hopes rashly, in disgust as rash recoils;
Recollect. Nay, God forbid!—You recollect I mentioned
Full well I recollect. We often crossed
I breathed (for this I better recollect) Recollected. Those recollected hours that have the charm
Uproused by recollected injury, railed
Recollection. And oh what joy this recollection now
At this insidious recollection
Faint recollection seems to tell
Of private recollection sweet and still!
A pensive recollection.
The naked recollection of that time,
I speak in recollection of a time
All recollection; and that simple tale
A grateful recollection must supply
Recollections. Undying recollections; Nature there
That kindled recollections
These local recollections ne'er can cloy;
Of recollections vivid as the dreams
For these, and hopes and recollections worn
Of recollections clear and bright;
Those shadowy recollections,
—Fading recollections! at this hour
By sundry recollections of such fall
His recollections, "and the punctual stars,
Pregnant with recollections of the time
Of grateful recollections, tribute due

Recommending. And recommending for their mutual need.
Recompense. In recompense for what themselves required.
For a crowning recompense, the precious grace
Abundant recompense. For I have learned
A soothing recompense, his gift, is thine!
I bear away my recompense.
Yet a dread local recompense we found;
Due recompense, and safe return
And worship, seemed a recompense
And, of the recompense that conscience seeks,
For recompense—their own perennal bower.
Shall be thy recompense! from land to land
The soothing recompense, the welcome change.
As we for most uncertain recompense

Rests on a hollow plea of recompense;
Of more than mortal recompense?
What recompense is kept in store or left
Some recompense for all that he had lost.
Her sacred recompense for many wants)
His spirit, but the recompense was high;
More than sufficient recompense! Her love
With ample recompense) giants and dwarfs,
Appeared to recompense the traveller's pains
Unthwarted in her wish to recompense
Good recompense, I hope, for this day's toil,
Some recompense of knowledge or delight?
Fit recompense of new desert? what claim
This knowledge ample recompense affords
No visible recompense. For our relief
Abundant recompense for every want.
No recompense, derided; and at length,
That the benefit their recompense may win;
Winning no recompense but deadly hate
—What though no higher recompense be sought
These fertile fields, that recompense your pains;
Recompensed. Of this green plant had aptly recompensed

Reconcile. Of Time's sure help to calm and reconcile,
Whose goodness, sinking deep, would reconcile
The sleeping dust, stern Death. How reconcile
And reconcile; and both with young and old
To reconcile his manhood to a couch

Reconciled. He kissed his son—so all was reconciled.
Softened her pangs, and reconciled the child
Yet more hath Nature reconciled in thee;
How will her Sire be reconciled
Yet ever willing to be reconciled:
Yet he was pleased and reconciled
All that was mixed and reconciled in Thee
Of light with shade in beauty reconciled—
(Earth's lingering love to parting reconciled,
So was he reconciled to life:
And reconciled us to realities;
Of daily comforts, gladly reconciled

Reconciliation. In reconciliation with our stunted powers;
Of reconciliation, then when they denounced,
In reconciliation with an utter waste
By reconciliation exquisite and rare,
Of reconciliation after deep offence—
Reconciles. So well she reconciles,
Inscrutable workmanship that reconciles
Reconciling. A reconciling thought may turn Re-confirmed. And re-confirmed—are scoffed at with a smile

Re-consecrate. Uprooted; would re-consecrate our wells
Re-constructed. Even so, in many a re-constructed fane, Reconverted. "Thus was I reconverted to the world;

Record. That may record my story: nor let words—
Nathless, a British record (long concealed)
A record which I dared to frame,
And a record of commotion
Thus in your books the record shall be found,
Than a soft record, that, whatever fruit
No record tells of lance opposed to lance,
Record we too, with just and faithful pen,
To stop—no record hath told where!
Lie here, without a record of thy worth,
Heirs from times of earliest record
Do no imperishable record find
And other Peers whose names are on record;
Behold a record which together binds
Might have their record among sylvan bowers.
The imperfect record, there, may stand unblamed
Of natural heroes: or I would record
And ask no record of the hours, resigned
I could record with no reluctant voice
Here to record that I was mounting now
From books and what they picture and record,
Of record or tradition; but a sense
Of record or report swept over us;
The record; and, in faithful verse, was given
Yea, afterwards—truth most painful to record!—
A separate record. Over the smooth sands
For her great cause record or prophecy

Record—continued.

Will I record the praises, making verse
Had dealt with—I will here record in verse ;
—But why this tedious record ?—Age, we know,
What special record can, or need, be given
Or to record ; we judge, but cannot be
As books record, and even the careless mind
To oral record, and the silent heart ;

Recorded. Sleep fled, and with it fled the dream—
Recorded in this book, 93 Poet's Dream 70
Recorded : to the open fields I told
Recorded by Cervantes, these same thoughts
That would be found in all recorded time,
And in his mind recorded it with love !

Records. Sweet records, promises as sweet ;
Those many records of my childish years,
As aught that song records of Robin Hood ;
If these brief Records, by the Muses' art
Records on which, for pleasure of all eyes,
These records take, and happy should I be
Yet in his page the records of that worth
Thy veil in mercy o'er the records, hung
These Records wrought in pledge of love
Upon her records, listen to her song,
Of Power whose ministers the records keep Diluvian records ; or the signs of Earth

(As records mouldering in the Dell
Left, 'mid the Records of this Book inscribed,
Triumphantly displayed in records left
Or obscure records of the path of fire.
Only by records in myself not found.
The tribute by these various records claimed,
So, by your records, may our doubts be solved ;
For the pathetic records which his voice
Recount. "But nay—the fatal wiles, O guest, recount.

Recorded. Ere he his Tale recounted.
Her Champion's praise recounted ;
Recorder. Its brightness to recover.
Recovered. The Boy recovered heart, and told
His freedom he recovered on the eve
Recovered heart. That evening her best fare
Lost and recovered, as the rays of light
For fifty kingdoms by my sword recovered.
And yet again recovered ! But descending
Recovered ; or, if hitherto unknown, Recovering. Recovering heart, like answer did she make ;
And he, recovering sense, upon her breast
Recovering breath, and pleased to win
Recovering, to my Friend I said, "You spake, Recovers. Recovers not his loss ; but walks with shame.
Recreate. "A recreant harp, that sings of fear
Her recreant Brother—the prevailed
The recreant soul, that dares to slun the debt
Turns recreant to her task ; takes heart again,
That mocks the recreant age we live in, then
Recreation. For recreation, leading into each :
Recross. Of their rich Spoil, ere they recross the Border.
Recruit. Her bane, her vital energies recruit.
Recruited. Wrapped in our cloaks, and, with recruited strength,
May issue thence, recruited for the tasks
Rectify. Father of Mercy ! rectify his view, Recumbent.—Recumbent : Him thou may'st behold, who hides
Perpetually recumbent ; Statues—man,
Recumbent in the shade, as if asleep ;
Recur. Cause should recur, which righteous Heaven avert !
Recurred. Old frailties then recurred :—but lofty thought,
Recurrence. With each recurrence of this glorious morn
Recurring. See Off-recurring.
Recusants. Half-and-half idlers, hardy recusants,
Red. See Blood-red, Dull-red.
Tipt with eve's latest gleam of burning red. 6 Ev. Wk. 211
Only the waning moon hangs dull and red
Tinged like an angel's smile all rosy red—
Red on the hills her beacon's far-seen blaze ;
A coat he wore of military red
The gathering clouds grew red with stormy fire,
Marks nothing but the red sun's setting round,
No labourer watched his red kiln glaring bright,
Lurking berries, ripe and red,
Though the red Flower, not prostrate, only droops,
A burning of portentous red ;
Red, green, and blue ; a moment's sight !
Now deep and red, the colouring of night ;
Green, red, and pearly white !
"I've heard, the moss is spotted red
The red rose is a gladsome flower,
The red rose is revived at last ;
Both roses flourish, red and white :
All bright with berries ripe and red,
And though your sins be red as scarlet,
And the red cross on my breast ;

Red—continued.

And her lips, quickening with uncertain red, 374 Eg. Maid 329

We walked along, while bright and red
Towers where red streamers float the breezy sky
Self-smitten till thy garments reek dyed red
With his red stalks upon this sunny day !

Of red Morocco fello saw displayed 483 Simon Lee 8

Red on his hills his beacon's comet blaze ;
On which a dull red image of the moon
In lineaments, and red with over-toil 536 Goody Blake 19

With dull red stains discoloured, and stuck o'er

Whose shelving sides are red with naked mould.

And let the redbreast hop from stone to stone.

Redeem. That spirit only can redeem mankind ;
Redeem by love the individual sense
Redeemable. If penance be redeemable, thence alms
Redeemed. Nor yet redeemed from scorn
Redeemed to baffle that imperial Slave,
For privilege redeemed of godlike sway)
By aught redeemed out of the hollow grave :
Redeemed, from miserable fear set free
Monarch and peasant : be the house redeemed
Redeemed, according to example given

Redeeming. See World-redeeming.
Is God's redeeming love ;
Had wakened some redeeming thought
Of a redeeming happiness.
Of holy freedom, by redeeming love
Redemption. The earth for sure redemption of lost peace.
Of your redemption. Shun the insidious arts
Demptomors. The Alma Redemptoris did he bear ;
O Alma Redemptoris ! high and low :
The Alma Redemptoris 'gao to sing
And sang, O Alma Redemptoris Mater !
Red-haired. High o'er the red-haired race of Mars,
Red-hot. Like red-hot iron burnt into my heart.
Reding. The name of Aloys Reding.
Redoub. Day and night my toils redoub,
Redoubled. Redoubled and redoubled, concourse wild
Redoubt. (Freedom's impregnable redoubt,
Redoubted. Redoubted Viriathus breathes again ;
Advance in order the redoubted Bands,
Redoubted King, of courage leonine,

Redounding. Through fancy's heat redounding in
To the brain 863 Excursion 7. 380
Of trivial objects, melted and reduced 698 Prelude 13. 248
Redounds. To hear of, for the glory that redounds.
Redress. I mused; and, thirsting for redress,
What could they gain but shadows of redress?
By flames, look up to heaven and crave redress
Wrongs and the terror of redress, would wean
Wrongs to redress, harmonious tribute paid
As he must bear, being powerless to redress;
Bound by his vow to labour for Evans
Red-ribboned. Said red-ribboned Evans:
Reduced. When threatened war reduced the children's meal:
Of trivial objects, melted and reduced 29 Guilt 267
Redundancy. Redundancy of youth's contentedness.
Redundant. Redundant are thy locks, thy lips as fair
There's weakness, and strength both redundant
And vain;
Graced with redundant hair, Topas sings
A tempest, a redundant energy,
Redundantly. Thus a rich loving-kindness, redundantly kind,
Re-echoed. Re-echoed by a naked rock,
Reed. Thou wouldst be leaning on a broken reed—
His flock, and pipe on shepherd's reed
And, like the lowly reed, her love
Is it a reed that's shaken by the wind,
Farewell the solace of the vagrant reed!
As bland as the reed of peace:
Reeds. Or the swan stirs the reeds, his neck and bill
Or whispering like two reeds that in the cold moonbeam
Great Pan himself low-whispering through the reeds,
And all the people how their heads, like reeds
Reedy. 'Mid reedy fens wide-spread and marshes drear,
Of joyous comrades. Soon as the reedy marge
Reek. Self-smitten till thy garments reek dyed red Reeking. See Blood-reeking, Warm-reeking.
Reel. They themselves make the reel,
Though worlds to their foundations reel
Reeled. And reeled with visionary stir
He reeled, and was stone-blind.
Reels. Beneath her vine-leaf crown the green Earth reels:
(What time a State with madding faction reels)
Re-embarked. And season yield; but, as we re-embarked, Re-entered. Opened, and she re-entered with glad looks,
Re-entering. The Moon re-entering her monthly
round,
Re-establish. Would re-establish and uphold:
Re-established. Were re-established now those watchful thoughts
"Thus all was re-established, and a pile
Refectory. Graced the Refectory: and there, while

Refers. For manifold privations; he refers
Refine. To soothe or cheer, to soften or refine.
The affections, to exalt them or refine;
For wholesome sadness, troubling to refine,
Or feel, shall tend to quicken and refine;
Examples efficacious to refine
Mirrored, yet not too strictly, may refine
Refine the selfishness from which they spring,
Refined. Harmonious thoughts, a soul by truth refined,
With goodly arts and usages refined;
Hues more exalted, "a refined Form,"
To the refined indignity?
Refined, as with intent to show
Imagination lofty and refined:
Whose mortal lineaments seem all refined
And a refined rusticity, belong
And pleasure-grounds where Taste, refined Co-mate
As nature is,—too pure to be refined.
'Tis not for the unfeeling, the falsely refined,
Faith had refined; and to her heart
By means refined attaining purest ends,
Of courteous usages refined by art.
Of more refined humanity, thy breath,
Malice so subtle, vengeance so refin'd.
Refines. Long-vanished happiness refines,
Refitted. In strength, in power refitted, he renewed Reflect. O'er the chilled heart—reflect; far, far within Reflects, in glowing hues that shall not fade,
Streams that reflect the poetry of things!
The glittering waves reflect the dazzling blaze;
Oh! laughter for the page that would reflect
Who can reflect, unmoved, upon the round
Reflected. Reflected from the mountain's side
Reflected beams of that celestial light
Reflected from the years gone by,
Reflected in my bosom all too late!
With light reflected from the invisible sun
Reflected in the pool below.
Shine on his soul, reflected from the days
Reflected in some crystal brook;

With which thou dost refresh the thirsty lip,
Fall to refresh a parched and withered land?

Refreshed, the Wanderer rose at morn,
And thou, O Friend! wilt be refreshed. There is Observant, studious, thoughtful, and refreshed
By flowers embellished, and by springs refreshed,
Beguiled his leisure hours; refreshed his thoughts;
Refreshing. Pleased in refreshment from the West!
For this refreshing water, by the care
As cool refreshing water, by the care 757
Grateful to sight, refreshing to the soul 830
Refreshment. Had shaped for their refreshment;
nor did sun,
Refreshment, strawberries and mellow cream.
Then, cheered by short refreshment, sallied forth.
When she upheld the cool refreshment drawn
Without refreshment!" Quickly had he spoken,
Refreshments. Decked with refreshments had this child been placed,

Refuse—continued.

Refuse to echo the sublime decree ?
Refused. Now coldly given, now utterly refused.
Of faith was wanting. Tell me, why refused
Yet not with stroke so sudden as refused
Which our endeavours have refused to till,
Refuses. That sullenly refuses to partake
Regain. Suppliant for aid his kingdom to regain;
Thy long-lost praise thou shalt regain;
With firmer soul, yet labour to regain
The Banner strive thou to regain;
As, when a storm hath ceased, the birds regain
With frantic love—his kingdom to regain?
Nor can regain. How languidly I look
Regained. The deep she hath regained;
By slow degrees, were gradually regained;
Regal. Odious to me the pomp of regal court,
A regal vest of fur he wears,
From the babe's first cry to voice of regal city,
Banners at enmity with regal sway,
Through perilous war, with regal fortitude,
He gained what'er a regal mind might ask,
On regal decks beheld ! yet in the end
Droops, and o'er canopies his regal brow,
Yet in the regal sceptre, and the pomp
For robes with regal purple tinged ; convert Regale. Their wearied frames, she hoped, would soon regale.
Regaled. You have regaled us as a hermit ought ;
Regales. Regales them as they wind along ;
Regard. And to enliven in the mind's regard
Regard not her—oh, better wrong and strife
To thy regard, with thoughts so fortunate,
Studious regard with opportune delight,
Into the compass of distinct regard
Nor more regard doth she bestow
Claim Heaven's regard like waters that have wet
Ocean and Earth contending for regard.
Those breathing Tokens of your kind regard,
Lady ! a Pen (perhaps with thy regard,
That peck along the road, regard him not.
Of less regard, though won perhaps with toil
The hours for what they are, than from regard
Than duty called for, or, without regard
Solicit our regard ; but when I think
There is no end. Such candidates for regard,
For feeling and contemplative regard,
Which they embosom, all without regard
Deserving notice have escaped regard,
Of exquisite regard for common things,
Is labour not unworthy of regard :
For her son's use, some tokens of regard,
Some way-beguiling tale. Nor less regard
Upon these uncouth Forms a slight regard
I cried, " more worthy of regard, the Power,
But that some leaf of your regard should hang
Not overlooked but courting no regard,
Which a detached spectator may regard
—Endeavour thus to live ; these rules regard ;
As individual objects of regard,
From mortal adoration or regard,
To me some portion of a kind regard ;
Of wedlock richly crowned with Heaven's regard,
Are worthiest of the mind's regard ; with these Eyes beaming courtesy and mild regard ;
An object worthier of regard than he,
His treasures forth, soliciting regard
Are gone, what summer loiterer will regard,
Regarded. Or been regarded with too careless eye,
Whether regarded as a jocular time,
Regarding. See Heaven-regarding.
Regardless. Gently along ; regardless who shall chide
Or book regardless, and of that fair scene
Regards. See Chance-regards.
The Sun regards it from the West ;
As little she regards the sight
Hadst shared, when, from profane regards apart,
Was Man in my affections and regards
An intermingling of distinct regards
The vengeful Furies. Beautiful regards
And all the nice regards of flesh and blood)
Experience daily fixing his regards
And our regards confining within bounds
" And whence that tribute ? wherefore these regards ?
From those to whom our last regards were paid,
A chosen one of my regards. See there Re-gathering. And shattered, and re-gathering their might ;
Regenerate. Shall, by regenerate life, the promise claim.
Regent. Regent of sound, have dangerous Passions trod !
. . . the scaly regent of the Nile.
Reginald. There's George Fisher, Charles Fleming, and Reginald Shore.
Region. But soon a peopled region on the sight
Dark is the region as with coming night ;
An idle voice the sabbath region fills

Region—continued.

Did from some distant region echo us.
Into a region of futurity,
O, happy Britain ! region all too fair
From that wild region where the crownless king
In some far region, here, while o'er my head,
Within the region of a father's thoughts,
Or like a man from some far region sent,
And vacant doth the region which they thronged
The region of his inner spirit teems
To whom the wild sequestered region owes,
Into some other region, though less fair,
To travel through that region bright.
And in this region flowers delight,
O say to what blind region flee
That region left, the vale unfolds
From Prussia's timid region. Go, and rest
The region that in hope was ploughed
Thou fortunate Region ! whose Greatness incurred
Thy gifts, magnificent Region, ever young
Beneath an ampler sky a region wide
The mountain region of the west,
Amid a fertile region green with wood
Deafening the region in his ireful mood.
While a fair region round the traveller lies
Some region of impatient life :
Region that crowns her beauty with the name
The encircling region vividly express
Luminous region, fair as if the prime
—And thou ! fair favoured region ! which my soul
No other region, but belonged to thee.
Of a too gaudy region. Different sight
Of my own native region, and was blest
With livelier hope a region wider far.
That far famed region, though our eyes had seen,
The unfettered clouds and region of the Heavens,
Of that magnificent region. On the front
In look and air, from that new region brought,
With heads ; the midway region, and above,
When through the region he pursues at will
Powers of my native region ! Ye that seize
And lovely region, I had forms distinct
The region left behind him ; and, if aught
A solemn region. Off amid those haunts,
From whatsoever region of our cares
Into another region. As a light
And in the region of their peaceful selves ;—
Found ready welcome. Tempting region that
My haunt, and the main region of my song.
Before us ; savage region ! which I paced
Nor in the other region, nor in aught
Upon the region whither we are bound,
Who, to the lowest region of the soul,
Above our human region, or below,
The blank air—for the region all around
Descending from the region of the clouds,
Their town, and foodful region for support
Beautiful region ! o'er thy towns and farms,
Through the calm region, fades upon the ear,
'There was a stony region in my heart ;
To that still region whither all are bound.
Then, in full many a region, once like this
In this delicious region."—Cultured slopes,
Thrice favoured Region, the conjecture harsh
Which in this happy region they behold !
Regions's. Snows, torrents ;—to the region's utmost bound,
Along the nether region's rugged frame !
Regions. Dear native regions, I foretell,
Far in the regions of the west,
Save that the bustard, of those regions bleak
Transferred to regions upon which the clouds
That is from joyless regions brought !
Far into silent regions blue and pale ;—
Come to regions solitary,
Regions in destruction steeping,)
Could from sad regions send him to a dear
Through India's spicy regions wing their way,
Less quiet regions to explore,
That host, when from the regions of the Pole
He sought the regions of humanity,
Dear native regions where we went to rove,
—Wide-wasted regions—cities wrapt in flame—
Through regions fair as Paradise
As thougnt, when through bright regions memory ranges
Some Statue, placed amid these regions old
Through these bright regions, casting many a glance
Diffused thro' all the regions of the West ;
Warned these these upper regions to forego,
Into broad light, and sends, through regions airy,
Through wide-spread regions errant ;
Rapt into upper regions, like the bee
And Who, from out the regions of the morn,
" From regions where no evil thing has birth
The unfenced regions of society.
To privileged regions and inviolate,

- Registered. Making all kindness registered and known;
 Whose pangs are registered in heaven—
 There registered: whatever else of power
 Another tablet registered the death,
Registers. Deliberate traces, registers of thought
 For whom it registers the birth, and marks the growth,
Regret. But neither lost to love, nor to regret,
 To peace, or fond regret.
 Do I regret what we have lost;
 I watch, and long have watched, with calm regret
 Regret pursues and with it blends,
 Yet shall some tribute of regret be paid
 And with regret and useless pity haunt
 Could I leave them unseen, and not yield to regret?
 Yield to the lure of vain regret, and hover
 And, if thou canst, leave them without regret!
 But these had fallen for profitless regret
 Untouched by due regret I marked your fall!
 What mischief cleaves to unsubdued regret,
 Hence, while in you each sad regret
 Doubt came not, nor regret—
 And thought in silence, with regret too keen,
 The parting moment and its fond regret.
 Of fond regret he still thy choice,
 No tears of passionate regret
 But Death alone their vain regret destroys.
 And vain regret and vain desire shall fail;
 Or been more often thought of with regret;
 Of change, congratulation or regret,
 In these enquiries with regret I speak,
 With less regret for its luxurious pomp,
 To soothe the regret, though deepening what it soothed,
 With due regret how much is overlooked
 Little to praise, and nothing to regret,
 Stability without regret or fear;
 Signs of regret, for the familiar good
 Of what is lost, and perish through regret.
 Or, if the change demanded no regret.
 —Oh! pang of sorrowful regret for those
 Bound—by vexation, and regret, and scorn,
 Yet cause was none, whate'er regret might hang
 Love, or regret,—whose lineaments would next
 Sadness and keen regret, we who reverse,
 My voice the utterance of a keen regret,
Regrets. Some fond regrets to entertain;
 No more of pity for regrets
 Our fond regrets tenacious in their grasp?
 Their feeble Souls; and bear with his regrets,

Reject. That doth reject all show of pride, admits no outward sign,
 (Like influence never may my soul reject),
 With vernal flowers. Yet may we not reject . . .
 Nor shall the eternal roll of praise reject
 Enormities, which they at home reject!
 With modest scorn reject whate'er would blind

Rejoice—continued.

I hear thee and rejoice.
Our fields rejoice, our mountains ring,
Speak, and the floor thou tread'st on will rejoice.
Mortals, rejoice! the very Angels quit
Lift up that grey-haired forehead, and rejoice
Rejoice, as, through that power, it ceased to mourn.
Yon busy Little-ones rejoice that soon
With which the very hills rejoice:
In both from age to age thou didst rejoice,
That she too lacks not reason to rejoice,
Present your prayers—go—and rejoice aloud—
The mountains (as ye heard) rejoice
Even so, and unblamed, we rejoice as we may Go, in thy enterprise rejoice!
And it is given thee to rejoice:
With one consent the people rejoice,
Of power to comfort or rejoice;
Heard near fresh streams; and thousands, who rejoice
At Jesu's bidding. We rejoice, "O Death,
Teach me with quick-eared spirit to rejoice
When Flowers rejoice and Larks with rival speed
How did the cliffs and echoing hills rejoice
Fraid—else how might they rejoice?
Yet will I temperately rejoice;
Are grateful and rejoice!
Does in this change exceedingly rejoice:
But would rejoice to barter outward show
Well may the villagers rejoice!
Yet, yet rejoice, tho' Pride's perverted ire
That in its beauty Cardiff may rejoice!
To transitory themes; yet I rejoice,
I saw the Spring return, and could rejoice,
That didst rejoice with me, with whom I, too,
To weigh with care his words, and to rejoice
Yet not rejoice in Nature. He, whose hours
Or death-watch: and as readily rejoice,
And rich and poor, and young and old, rejoice
All generous feelings flourish and rejoice;
Imparted—to brute matter. I rejoice,
Rejoice!—and ye have special cause for joy.
These mountains will rejoice with open joy.
The thundering Thurlow, Apis! shall rejoice Rejoiced. Will be rejoiced to greet you. It seems but yesterday
Much she rejoiced, trusting that from that hour
Rejoiced is Brangh, right glad, I deem,
Rejoiced that clamorous spell and magic verse
Rejoiced when waking she espies
How had we then rejoiced! But we have felt,
Rejoiced in—take, what'er thou be, a share,
Rejoiced to bid the world farewell,
Rejoiced'd her solemn pomp of clouds to fold
Stern was the face of Nature. We rejoiced
Much I rejoiced, not doubting but a guide
If at the first great outbreak I rejoiced
And tossed about in whirlwind, I rejoiced,
Rejoiced through early youth, before the winds
Proud of her own endowments, and rejoiced
Rejoiced with them and me in those sweet sounds,
Those new persuasions. Not that I rejoiced,
And is rejoiced, and loses while it grasps;
Rejoices. The sky rejoices in the morning's birth;
Rejoices in a second birth!
At which his heart rejoices;
But Human-kind rejoices in the might Rejoicing. Rejoicing in the glory of her rays:
He gazed rejoicing, and again he gazed,
Of the rejoicing morning were their own?
Both parents read them with rejoicing hearts.
Rejoicing, from her loftiest height she drops
We stood rejoicing, as if earth were free
Rejoicing did they cast upon the ground
Rejoicing o'er a female in the midst,
Upon a living and rejoicing world!
And strengthen love, rejoicing secretly
And yet in both rejoicing; man unblest;
Bless him, rejoicing in his neighbourhood."
Rejoicings. Mobs, riots, or rejoicings? From these sights
Rejoined. "Happy," rejoined the Wanderer, "they who gain
The Sage rejoined, "I thank you—you have spared
Rekindled. It cannot be rekindled. Thou art here
Rekindled thou, from dens and savage woods
Relapse. Our virtuous hopes without relapse advance,
Culpably cherished, or corrupt relapse
Relapsing. Soon the relapsing penitent may boast Relate. Thou wilt relate the story. Am I neither Homely and rude, I will relate the same
Were as companions, why should I relate
I will relate to thee some little part (Perchance the pages that relate
To them I must relate the Tale
Was closing, might not of that life relate
Thus does the father to his sons relate,

Relate—continued.

Sometimes, more sternly moved, I would relate
In this endeavour simply to relate
No further. Let me then relate that now—
I will relate a tale for those who love
Were as companions, why should I relate
Achilles—but, O Queen, the whole relate.
Related. Some tale will be related.
I have related that this Shepherd-loved Relates. His name, and unambitiously relates Relation. In dim relation to imagined beings.
On the relation those abstractions bear
With order and relation. This, if still,
Relations. Only in our relations to the brutes
Of permanent relations, else unknown.
In the relations which they bear to man,
Relax. Relax, to fix and satisfy the mind
The Monks relax or break these iron chains;
Disputes would then relax, like stormy winds
Relaxed. Did also find its way. Thus fear relaxed
Seemed present; and, attention now relaxed,
When piety more awful had relaxed.
Returned with sinews weakened and relaxed,
Relaxes. The formal World relaxes her cold chain
Relaxing. A gentle, a relaxing, power!
Relaxing in their hold, henceforth I lived Release. Death's minister; theo came his glad release,
you waited the hour of his release?
From body pains and pains of soul thou needest
no release,
Mature release, in fair society
Their natural utterance? whence this strange release
Flaming till thou from Paynim hands release
But unoffending creatures find release
Known but to this one release—
Like these, there comes a mild release;
Release from fear; and cherished peaceful days
Save when the sabbath brings its kind release,
Nor for their bodies would accept release;
He is a slave to whom release comes not,
Now would you be content with bare release
Released. From her full eyes their watery load released.
Till God released her of her pain;
My soul from darkness is released,
Released from life and cares of princely state,
Released from fear and doubt;
For lo! the Imperial City stands released.
And she was left alone. She now, released
Prevailed; and, from those bonds released, she went
Till gentlest death released him. Far from us
Like Youths released from labour, and yet bound
Weary and faint, and longs to be released.
874 Excurstion 8. 28
210 Laod. 86
Relent. Yet further may relent: for mightier far Relenting. The father, and relenting thoughts awoke;
When, to the mouth, relenting Death
Relenting met his wishes; and to you
And sometimes, so relenting justice wills,
Constrained forgiveness, and relenting vows,
Of a relenting soul, have now availed;
Relentless. On the relentless sea that holds him fast
Relentlessly. Relentlessly shut out.
Reliance. See Self-reliance.
Relic. See Relique.
Dear Daughter! precious relic of that time—
Relic of Kings! Wreck of forgotten wars,
Saint Cuthbert's Relic—far and near
Lonely relic! which, if seen
Will lay the Relic on the shrine."
With this last relic, soon itself to fall,
And pocketed the relic, in the guise
Relics. See Reliques.
His flock, along the woodland's edge with relics sprinkled o'er
Like relics in an urn.
Art's noblest relics, history's rich bequests,
How profitless the relics that we cull,
Relics of long and distant wars—
The Relics of the sword flee to the mountains:
Scooped from the sacred earth where his dear relics lie.
Bulls, pardons, relics, cows black, white, and grey—
Fraught with the relics of mortality,
"Amid the noblest relics, proudest dust,
Abstract those gleaming relics, and uplift them,
Relied. O'erweening Statesmen have full long relied To stir in useless struggle) hath relied Relief. We had no hope, and no relief could gain:
A hermitage has furnished fit relief
Insensible to all relief
To her thankful mind's relief.
I of the Parish asked relief.
My troubles, and beyond relief:
But, seeing no relief, at last
From love that cannot find relief.

Relief—continued.

And, to a point of just relief, abate
 Yet failed to seek the sure relief of prayer,
 And Faith—these only yield secure relief.
 To seek relief.
 Murdered without relief. Oh! blind as hold,
 Nor cease to gaze upon the bold Relief
 Which ill can brook more rational relief:
 That looked not for relief!
 Found at the Widow's feet some sad relief;

That flings itself on wild relief
 From silent admiration wins relief.
 A timely utterance gave that thought relief,
 Serves as a solemn background, or relief,
 Have somewhere found relief." He, at the word,
 And yielding surely some relief to his,
 No visible recompense. For our relief
 That opens, for such sufferers, relief
 Carrying relief for nature's simple wants.

Relieve. Yet, to relieve her heart, in friendly style
 Is hold, and would relieve itself by praise.
 For those who can relieve. Here may the heart Relieved. Thus Eldure, by words, relieved his struggling heart.

If, when that interference hath relieved him,
 In sign of misery relieved,
 Tell what rushed in, from what she was relieved—
 For wounds inflicted, nor what toil relieved

And spirit—interrupted and relieved
 Relieves. Alternately relieves their weary feet;
 And thus divides and thus relieves the time;
 Relieves the tedious holiday of age—

Relieving. See Heart-relieving.

Religion. And pure religion breathing household laws.

Religion in the sainted grove,
 Sacred Religion! "mother of form and fear,"
 A pure religion, and the claim
 Religion finds even in the stern retreat
 To the mind's eye Religion doth present;
 Religion depends her preventive care;
 When pure Religion rear'd the peaceful breast
 That sometimes his religion seemed to me
 How feelingly religion may be learned
 Religion tells of amity sublime
 Religion! with thy stately retinue,
 Spread true religion and her genuine fruits)
 Not less than a religion in his heart.
 Religion hailed her creeds by war restored,

Religion's. And to Religion's self no friendly will,
 Before the lustre of Religion's eye;

Religious. Now, with religious awe, the farewell light
 To those religious walls. He, too, departs—
 Religious men, who give to God and man their dues.
 Of religious eloquence,—
 Suffers religious faith. Elate with view
 By these Religious saved for all posterity.
 (Swerves not, how blest if by religious awe
 From her religious Mansion of St. Bees.
 Erst a religious House, which day and night
 The ents, those dim religious graves embow'r,
 To feed the spirit of religious love
 To a religious order. Man he loved
 Religious, 'mid these frequent monuments
 Not unexalted by religious faith,
 Humbly in a religious hospital;
 And if religious tenderness of heart,
 Less worthy, less religious even, than his!
 And old religious house—pile after pile
 Watching to God. Religious men were they;
 On all who entered those religious doors.
 The mind with moral and religious truth,

Religiously. Youth should be awed, religiously possessed
 Religiously that vow; but firmness failed,
 Religiously, in silent blessedness;

Relinquish. And skies that ne'er relinquish their repose;
 This is not easy—to relinquish all

Relinquished. So he relinquished all his purposes.
 Relinquished by his own;
 Relinquished half his empire to the host
 Lance, shield, and sword relinquished—at his side
 I only have relinquished one delight
 Relinquished, and your nights of revelry,
 The prized memorial of relinquished trails,
 His office he relinquished; and retired
 Relinquished, lived dependent for his bread

Relinquishes. Relinquishes its hold upon the sense,

Relinquishing. Relinquishing this lofty eminence
 But now, relinquishing the scrip and staff,
 Meanwhile, relinquishing all other cares,
 (While war, relinquishing the lance and shield,
 Relinquishing, but treasuring every law

Relique. See Relic.

Wild Relique! heautenus as the chosen spot
 Sad relique, but how fair the while!
 No dearer relique, and no better stay,
 Were incomplete) a relique of old times

Reliques. See Relics.

Dim shades—for reliques, upon Lethe's shore,
 Dear Reliques! from a pit of vilest mould
 Start at the reliques of that very thigh,
 Gaudy with reliques of that festival,

Relish. Wanting all relish for her strenuous mind, Relished. Despire, as senseless: for my spirit relished
 In ears that relished the report;—but all
 Reluctance. To public notice, with reluctance strong,
 Rarely and with reluctance would I stoop
 And I, without reluctance, could decline
 With wise reluctance; you would I extol,
 Is paid without reluctance; but in truth,
 Reluctant. And cheering oft-times their reluctant gloom.
 Of duty with reluctant will)
 To which, with no reluctant strings,
 Reluctant call it was; the rite delayed;
 That Thou, with no reluctant voice, for him
 I could record with no reluctant voice
 When at reluctant distance he hath passed
 Obtain reluctant hearing. Plain his garb;
 He yielded, though reluctant; for his mind
 Yet, when need was, with no reluctant will,
 Reluctantly. And halted, though reluctantly.
 Where silence yields reluctantly
 Rose, though reluctantly, and forth we went.
 Or, less reluctantly to hounds of sense?
 Reluctantly amid the bustling crowd?

Rely. All sufferers that no more rely
 Where no misgiving is, rely

Remain. To show what pleasures yet to me remain,
 But there no human being could remain,
 Unless beneath your roof I may remain:
 For my old age, it doth remain with thee
 Yes it is dead, and I remain
 If aught which he had owned might still remain for me.
 She might remain shrouded in privacy,
 Remain unpitied, pity is not in man.
 The travellers know it not, and 'twill remain.
 Calls to the few tired dogs that yet remain:
 And the green silent pastures, yet remain.

(Thanks to high God) forests of such remain:
 Whatever fate remain behind,
 For the brief course that must for me remain;
 And You, my Offspring! that do still remain,
 For poor to Sea I went, and poor I still remain.
 Though poor to Sea I went, and poor I still remain.
 Are all that must remain of thee?
 Yet the lost fragments shall remain
 That his life hath received, to the last will remain.
 Were earlier raised, remain to hear
 To shew her yet some joys to me remain,
 Peculiar to myself, let that remain
 And some remain, hopes for my future life.
 When Nature, destined to remain so long
 And fears of men, doth still remain unchanged)
 That the brief hours, which yet remain, may reap
 "If, such as now he is, he might remain!
 And still remain self-governed, and apart,
 'What titles will he keep? will he remain
 In utter night; and of his course remain
 Oh long may it remain inviolate,

Remainder. This last remainder of the crew are all
 And wastes the sad remainder of his hours,

Remained. The course interred, not one hour he remained
 As if he had stumped to drink, and so remained
 He had remained; but, as he gazed, there grew
 Would Leonard then, when elder boys remained —Sn be it! In the city he remained
 No hope, no wish remained, not one,
 Till not a wreck of help or hope remained,
 Of that rash levy nought remained.
 Six months to six years added he remained
 Remained imperishably interwoven
 Remained behind; the ship the following day
 Remained, no pleasant images of trees,
 Remained in their substantial lineaments
 No chair remained before the doors; the bench
 Remained for all whose fancies had run wild
 Of the two spirits then at strife remained
 Was hidden from my view, and he remained
 The longer I remained, more desolate:
 In sickness she remained; and here she died;
 Remained, nor sign of sickness on his face.
 The Mother now remained; as if in her,
 The particle divine remained unquenched;
 Of this far-winding vale, remained as friends
 Much to the last remained unknown: but this
 A consciousness remained that it had left,
 Of rights to him; but he remained well pleased,
 A happiness that ebb'd not, but remained
 Under a faded sky. No trace remained

Remaineth. Remaineth one protected part;
 Remaining. Remaining still distinct grew thin and rare.

Rendering. See Heart-rendering.
A rendering o'er his head begins the fray again.
Rends. Save when the startling cliff unrequent rends :
Renew. With a light heart our course we may renew,
Nor only did for him at once renew
You have guessed right. The trees renew their murmur :
Like a scared Bird encouraged to renew
My question eagerly did I renew,
If some have thirsted to renew . . .
Their fellowship renew ;
Announce a season potent to renew,
Intent his wasted spirits to renew ;
—Fly, wretched Gauls ! ere they the charge renew
That faith which no devotion may renew !
All that I felt this moment doth renew ; . . .
His best endeavours to renew,
Cast upon this observance may renew
The Sabbath bells renew the inviting peal ;
Had three times called us to renew our walk,
She still renewed and could not but renew
In fresh abodes—their labour to renew ;
I come to thee, thou dost my heart renew
Renewal. Needless renewal of an old delight ?
Renewed. Their way, the Woman thus her mournful tale renewed,
Sight that inspired accordant thoughts ; and speech
I thus renewed :
Ere sorrow be renewed,
But oft the woods renewed their green,
Their journey had renewed ;
He, having made a pause, the same discourse renewed.
Renewed throughout the bounds of earth or ocean,
Their myriads ?—endlessly renewed,
Yet evermore, through years renewed . . .
Enriched—too transient, were they not renewed . . .
And for the sway of equity renewed,
His soul her daily tasks renewed, . . .
These only, Duddon ! with their paths renewed
And so to Francis he renewed
Have the survivors of this Storm renewed
And soft Italia feels renewed alarms ;
The prostrate, then my spring-time is renewed,
This glimpse of glory, why renewed ? . . .
And have renewed the tributary Lay,
To thy own conscience gradually renewed ; . . .
Renewed—renewed incessantly—renewed ; . . .
Seven nights her course renewed . . .
Light pleasures, every day renewed ; . . .
Impediments from day to day renewed . . .
With these blithe friends our voyage we renewed
Uprisen betimes, our journey we renewed,
Of Goslar, once imperial, I renewed
With morning we renewed our quest : the wind
A serious eye, and his speech thus renewed . . .
Who lacks not will to use them ; vows, renewed
And invitation every hour renewed,
In strength, in power refitted, he renewed . . .
She still renewed and could not but renew . . .
With invitation urgently renewed . . .
Renewing. Tasks that are no tasks renewing,
As in a dream her own renewing . . .
As if he were his grief renewing ; . . .
Erroneously renewing a sad vow . . .
The flowers in pearly dew their bloom renewing !
To hail the exploratory Bird renewing . . .

Renewing—continued.

Receiving, when the rosy summits glow
Empurpled hills, conspicuously renewing . . .
Renews. Eve renews her calm career ;
Both feel, when he renews the wished-for aid :
The lonely Primrose yet renews its bloom,
Renews. Through every forest, cave, and den,
Long as the sun his gladsome course renews.
Sole sound, the sound renews his mournful cry :
Renounce. Pleased to renounce, does this dear
Thrush attune
Of motion they renounce, and with the head
Would tempt me to renounce that humble aim.
Renounced. Nor for the world's best promises renounced.
Forsook his crimes, renounced his folly,
Renounced, abandoned by degenerate Men
"His sacred function was at length renounced ;
Are all renounced ; high as the thought of man —Would I had ne'er renounced it !" A slight

Renovation. Hope, and a renovation without end.

In annual renovation thus it stands—
A renovation from the dead,
The glorious renovation would proceed.

Mayor :
Felicity, in Grecian song renowned ;
Renowned for splendid prospect far and wide)
Rent. Within that black and frightful rent.
There was he, where of branches rent and withered
and decayed,
Was rent with lightning—one hath disappeared ;
Rent, weeping over him, her golden hair . . .
To house and home in many a craggy rent
Where rocks were rudely heaped, and rent
Towers rent, winds combating with woods,
Glad acclamation by which air was rent !
If foresight could have rent the veil
Its shining forehead through the peaceful rent
Or altar, whence the cross was rent,
Prying into the darkness rent ;
Yielded by this craggy rent,
With tens of thousands rent from off the tree
And in the narrow rent at every turn
By violence, at one decisive rent,
Like fields of ice rent by the polar wind,
From his wife's Faro-bank a decent rent,
Rents. Then rents and factors, rights of chase,
Re-opened. Re-opened that inspired my youth ;

Repair. Repair to Liddesdale, and tell the Band
Good Dame, repair to Liddesdale and wait

Where she was childless, daily would repair
Wool for the Housewife's spindle, or repair
He quickly will repair this loss, and then Did he repair, to build the Fold of which Do thou, as thou art wont, repair . . .
Eager to repair lost time ;
Another could repair ;
As I from Hawes to Richmond did repair,
Then, pensive Votary ! let thy feet repair
Through reverence, touch it only to repair
Did mighty Tell repair of old—
And thither young and old repair,

Repair—continued.

For the old Manx-harvest to the Deep repair,
But chiefly to Smithfield he loves to repair,—
Who will gladly repair all the damage that's done ;
And with a deep sadness I turned, to repair
Its wasted splendour to ply the gairful trade :
To Calaterium's forest he repaired.
Repaired, but only found the matron there,
Hither repaired.—A single beech-tree grew
But to his comrade he repaired, and prayed
After long absence, thither I repaired,
Are nourished and invisibly repaired ;
My expectation, thither I repaired,
To which I oft repaired, and thence would drink,
Of long-continuing winter, he repaired,
He broke from his contracted bounds, repaired
Once every day he dutiously repaired . . .
Repairs. Repairs to a road-side ;
Repast. By fancy what a rich repast !
Pleased looks around the delicate repast—
The vulture, the inexhaustible repast . . .
Was spread, and we partook a plain repast.
A choice repast—served by our young companions
Repay. I but repay a gift which I myself
Their union brought, will they repay the debt,
That did your cares repay . . .
Or to repay the potent Charm,
The mighty debt which nothing can repay !
Your scaly panoplies repay
The laggard Rustic ; and repay with booms Repayment. A just repayment, both for conscience-sake
Repays. When earth repays with golden sheaves
Who repays in season due
Repealed. All past forgiveness it repealed ;
The tidings passed of servitude repealed,
Care may be respited, but not repealed ;
That flowing years repealed not : and distress
Repeat. Three humble bells their rustic chime repeat ;
Repeat her Father's terrible adventures,
To her these tales they will repeat,
This song to myself did I oftentimes repeat ;
Again, and once again, did I repeat the song ;
He with a smile did then his words repeat ;
Does she repeat that doleful cry ?
Repeat the bridal symphony.
And long the story will repeat
Hast heard the constant Voice its charge repeat.
This vast design might tempt you to repeat
The Monks still repeat the tradition with pride,
Hear and repeat, the turmoil that unites
Hope nothing, I repeat ; for we
Of judgment such presumptuous doom repeat !
The crags repeat the raven's croak,
From Heaven, and feel what they repeat,
The whilst the rest their anthem-book repeat
Doth the same tale repeat :
It might have well heeded me to repeat
This I repeat, was mine ; mine be the blame.
But I might here, instead, repeat a tale,
Of tender feeling, she might dare repeat
Nature (I but repeat your favourite boast)
Repeat the dictates of her calmer mind,
Take up, the cloud-capped hills repeat, the Name),
Methinks I could repeat in tuneful verse,
Repeated. Repeated—heard, and heard no more :
Methinks, if audibly repeated now
Of that same Bard—repeated to and fro
By pleasure and repeated happiness,
So frequently repeated, and by force
Repeated through his tributary vales,
Like earthquakes, shocks repeated day by day,
Repeated o'er and o'er his plaintive cry,
Old things repeated with diminished grace ;
Repeated without loss of simple phrase,
A volley, thrice repeated o'er the Corse
To be repeated thence, but gently sank
Repeated ; but with unity sublime !
Repeated, like the whistling of a kite.
Repeatedly. Repeatedly his own deep mind he sounds
Repeater's. Forbear to covet a Repeater's stroke,
Repeating. Repeating the same timid cry,
Repeating favourite verses with one voice,
With each repeating its allotted prayer,
His yell repeating ; yet it was in truth
Repeats. Repeats a moan o'er moss and stone,
Repeats but once the sound of thy sweet name :
Repel. Why will ye thus my suit repel ?
And, rising to repel or to subdue
No courage can repel the dire assault ;
That doth the living stars repel,
Than heartless misery called them to repel.
Yet not alone, nor helpless to repel
Even when they rose to check or to repel
To welcome thee, repel the fears that crowd

Repel—continued.

- Armed to repel them? Every hazard faced
And energy to conquer and repel—
- Repelled. Thus far the Opposer, and repelled
Rejected, yea repelled; and, if with scorn
Repelled the storm and deadened its loud roar.
- Repelling. The mortal spear repelling.
With objects wanting life, repelling love;
- Repent. In this deserted Castle—I repent me.
I do repent me, Sir; I fear the curse
Yes, be it so;—repent and be forgiven—
"Repent! repent!" he cries aloud,
"Repent! repent! though ye have gone,
Then I repent not. But my soul hath fears
"Make straight a highway for the Lord—repent!"
He will repeat him of his troth;
So may I hope, if truly I repent
From further havoc, but repent in vain.—
Bitterly shall you repent,
- Repentance. Repentance is a tender Sprite;
To a sincere repentance promise grace,
Till, by repentance stung, they fear to think;
For—save the calm repentance sheds o'er strife
Of meek repentance, wafting wallflower scents
On much repentance Grace will be bestow'd.
- Repentant. And while, repentant all too late,
His last, repentant breath; and closed his eyes,
Repenting. But, of his scorn repenting soon, he drew
- Repents. Oh! it repents me I have neither wit
Repetition. Strange repetition of the deadly wound
A vivid repetition of the stars;
That with blunt repetition of your words
- Repetitions. The repetitions wearisome of seese,
Repine. That almost I could repine
Yet why repine, created as we are Near the bright River's edge. Yet why repine?
Then why repine that now in vain I crave
Lamenting, do not hopelessly repine
Hush, not a voice is here! but why repine,
Repine as if his hour were come too late?
—Vain thought! but wherefore murmur or repine?
Repine not for his cottage-comrade, whom Replied. So lived I, and repined not at such fate:
But be repined not. Though the plough was scared Repines. Yet he repines not, if his thought stand clear,
- Repining. As many do, repining while they look;
Not without repining from the covets and heights
Not wishing more; repining not to tread
Without repining or desire for more,
From trepidation and repining free.
- Replace. That were power granted to replace them fetched
- Replenished. For his live had so long been replenished with honey,
- Upborne, at evening, on replenished wing,
For her defence, replenished with a band
From cups replenished by his joyous hand.
- Replete. Replete with honour; sounds in unison
Replete with vivid promise, bright as spring."
- Replied. The little Maid replied,
"I do not blame thee," Eldred replied;
"Exalted Star!" the Worm replied,
To courteous Benjamin replied,
Ere he replied, a flash of mild surprise
A voice to which the hills replied!
The elements have heard, and rock and cave replied.
And thus the dear old Man replied,
To that calm word a shriek replied,
Replied, and when the Charon of the flood
He would resume his story. He replied,
These festive matins?—"He replied, "Not loth
"That poor Man taken hence to-day," replied
Promptly replied—"My notion is the same,
The grey-haired Wanderer steadfastly replied,
"Methinks," persuasively the Sage replied,
Or power," replied the Wanderer, "to that House
The Priest replied—"An office you impose
- Replies. The Turtle dove replies:
Where lurks a Spirit that replies
No voice replies;—both air and earth are mute;
And Dacre to our call replies
- Reply. The peasant, wild in passion, made reply
Then did the little Maid reply,
Quick was the little Maid's reply,
He blushed with shame, nor made reply;
And eased his mind with this reply:
On wings from broad and steadfast poise let loose
by this reply,
And this was my reply:—"As it befell,
He ventured to reply,
The echoes make a glad reply.—
Unsolicited reply
Of midnight makes reply;
All light and lustre. Did no heart reply?
Yield to such after-thought the sole reply?
The caves reply with hollow moan;
The Council-roof and Clermont's towers reply;—
And thus I made reply:
To me he made reply:

Reply—continued.

- His history, the veteran, in reply,
Came in reply, translated by our feelings,
We spake—he made reply, but would not stir
Stooped to this apt reply:—"As men from men
"Our nature," said the Priest, in mild reply,
—Blest as they are—to furnish a reply,
- Report. And you remember such was my report:
Who dares report, the tidings to the lord
A good report did from their Kinsman come,
Making report of an invisible breeze
And, if that men report him right,
To reverend watching of each still report
Such bold report I venture to gainsay;
With feet, hands, eyes, looks, lips, report your gain;
The bold report, transferred to every clime;
Report of storms gone by
Report of comfortless despairs,
Loud was the rifle-gun's report—
So fair, of such divine report—
But you, at least, may make report
More could my pen report of grave or gay
- Upon the exalted hills. He made report
So prayed he:—as our chronicles report,
Toils long and hard.—The warrior will report
Though in virtue's proud mouth thy report be a
stain,
Make rigorous inquisition, the report
Of good or ill report; or those with whom
Or given upon report by pilgrim friars,
Of record or report swept over us;
We sat—we walked; he pleased me with report
Human and rational, report of thee
Led on, those shepherds made report of stars
The silent hours; and who to that report
Gathered this fair report of them who dwell
If living now, could otherwise report
The attempt was made;—'tis needless to report
In ears that relished the report;—but all
And feelingly the Sage shall make report
- Reportest. Have had, as thou reportest, miracles
Reports. Reports of him, his dwelling or his grave!
(So fame reports) and die,—his sweet-breathed kine
Or fountain, listen to the grave reports
A mansion visited (as fame reports)
This covert nook reports not of his hand!
Now she is not; and the swelling turf reports
For, as reports the dame, whose fire sends up
- Repose. In rocky basin its wild waves repose,
And now the whole wide lake in deep repose
And need repose. Could you but wait an hour?
Think of evening's repose when our labour was done,
Where He that made them blesses their repose.—
Her eggs within the nest repose,
United worship; or in mute repose
And now, too happy for repose or rest,
The day is come when I again repose,
And she expects the issue in repose.
In languor; or by Nature, for repose
A canopy, is smoothed for thy repose!
That vision of endurance and repose.
In which some ancient Chieftain finds repose
In Nature's face the expression of repose;
And skies that ne'er relinquish their repose;
Gleams from a world in which the saints repose.
Burst, when repose grew wearisome;
Repose at length, firm friend of human kind!
Sleep, Warriors, sleep! among your hills repose!
Through its wide circuit, that, in deep repose,
Where Spirits dwell in undisturbed repose—
Friendly; as here to my repose bath been
And folds thy pinions up in best repose.
The most profound repose his cell can give.
I repose, nor am forced from sweet fancy to part,
On Laura's breast, in exquisite repose;
The still repose, the liquid lapse serene,
If we advance unstrengthened by repose,
Of valley flowers. Nor, while the limbs repose,
Of female patience winning firm repose;
An undisturbed repose of heart.
In soft repose he comes. Within his cell,
Who near his fountains sought obscure repose,
Where light and shade repose, where music dwells
Hiats to the thrush "tis time for their repose;
In kindred quiet I repose my trust.
And sound in principle, I seek repose
And, by that simple notice, the repose
Sequestered with repose;
Is empty of repose.
In hermits' weeds repose be found,
I long for a repose that ever is the same.
Such the repose that sage and hero find;
Unheeded, and the mute repose
Or seems to charm it, into like repose;
To circumscribe this Shape in fixed repose;
That yet disturb not its concealed repose
- Day-thoughts while limbs repose;
To interrupt the deep repose!
For nurture or repose;

Repose—continued.

In dark-brown bason its wild waves repose,
—Mid the dark steep reposes the shadowy streams,
There turns for glad repose the weary eye;
The pie, and chattering breaks the night's repose.
Mid tumult and uproar this man must repose;
To more profound repose!
That I recoil and droop, and seek repose
The safeguard for repose and quietness.
Of innocence, and holiday repose;
Assured that now the traveller would repose
Whose evening shadows lead him to repose.
Hushed in profound repose. We left the town
Appeared unfit for the repose of night,
And steadiness, and healing and repose
Which passeth understanding, that repose
Detained for contemplation or repose,
He asked repose; and, falling oft to wit
At this still season of repose and peace,
Whose meditative sympathies repose
The universal instinct of repose
Repose and hope among eternal things—
And sink at evening into sound repose."
With music lulled his indolent repose:
A grateful couch was spread for our repose;
Obscurity, and undisturbed repose.
In their repose, the living in their mirth,
"And in your judgment, Sir! the mind's repose.
Went with me to the place of my repose.
And end their journey in the same repose!
Its best attainment fits of such repose
To hope and love; to confident repose
Might still preserve the beautiful repose
Such the repose that Sage and Hero find,
Sunk down, and lay immersed in dead repose
Of majesty, and beauty, and repose.
Reposed. Reposed upon the block!
At which the bearers halted or reposed,
They, like a nested pair, reposed,
Too blindly have reposed my trust:
And in Death's arms has long reposed the Friend
Where she in childhood had reposed,
The day, in luxury my limbs reposed,
Reposed in noontide rest, the inner pulse
Flung from the setting sun, as they reposed
Upon that cottage-bench reposed his limbs,
Reposeth. The eye reposes on a secret bridge,
Brooding on her eggs reposes
Reposeth. Of rock or sand reposes, there to sun itself;
Reposing. On a friendly deck reposing
Reposing on a lone sick-bed;
They lie like fawns reposing,
And hand reposing on the board in ruth
Of Swains reposing myrtle groves among!
Reposing here, and in the aisles beyond
Then here reposing let us raise
Upon her lap reposing, holds—but mark
Along the brighten'd gloom reposing deep.
Amid reposing knights by a river side
Look down upon them; the reposing clouds;
Reprehend. Her froward mood, and softliest re-prehend;
Reprehended. And reprehended, by a fancied blush
Represent. Shall represent her labouring with an eye
Could represent the countenance horrible
Had dignified, and called to represent
Or more mechanic artist represent
Shaped by the Druids, so to represent
Representative. Of obscure feelings representative
Representing. Yet representing, amid wreck and wrong Reprive. The mild condemned, without reprive, to go
Perish without reprive for flower or tree!
To fortitude without reprive.
Reproach. See Self-reproach.
And I divine the cause. Do not reproach me:
None will reproach you, for our truth is known;
"Reproach me not—your fears be still—
A contrast and reproach to gross delight,
From self-reproach, reproach that he must share
And clears Oblivion from reproach,
Glad Hearts! without reproach or blot;
Too full for that reproach. My aged Dame
Till with a sudden-bound of smart reproach,
Which 'tis reproach to hear? Anon I rose
Who feels that to exhort is to reproach.
Bringing from age to age its own reproach,
She was to him a sickness and reproach.
From all reproach is you ethereal vault,
By keen reproach or blind ingratitude,
Reproached. See Self-reproached.
There I reproached him with his treachery.
As Lear reproached the winds—I could almost Reproaches. See Self-reproaches.
Reproaches from their lips are sent,
And haply meet reproaches too, whose power
Tender reproaches, insupportable!

Reproachful. 'Twas but one mild, reproachful look,
Reproduce. And reproduce the troubles he destroys.
Reproof. With that reproof I do resign a station
No word of indignation or reproof,
Of fond correction and reproof bestowed
Apt emblem (for reproof of pride)
Is murmuring a reproof,
I looked reproof—they saw—but neither hung his head.
Their spirit; or, unless they for reproof
This just reproof the prosperous Dane
Such as his state required. At this reproof,
But on the front of his reproof confessed
Some words of indirect reproof had been
Severe reproof, if we were men whose hearts
For the reproof of human vanity,
She stilled them with a prompt reproof, and said,
Not for reproof, but high and warm delight,
Reprove. My torpor to reprove!
Who shall reprove thee!
Life which the very stars reprove
Tread there with steps that no one shall reprove!
Presume those interweavings to reprove
The selfish to reprove.
Than tremblings that reprove
Ye feelingly reprove;
Whose rage the gentle skies in vain reprove,
Watching the lustre they in part reprove—
To check the erring, and reprove;
Yet, Beaumont, thou wilt not, I trust, reprove
In purpose join to hasten or reprove
The trailing worm reprove her thoughtless pride?
And with soft smile, his consort would reprove.
Shall I reprove myself? Ah no, the stream
Reproved. Reproved his soarings of the night,
Thus, all in vain exhorted and reproved,
Profane Despoilers, stand ye not reproved,
Nor feel the fulness of that joy reproved?
Reptile. A very reptile could presume
To kill harmless reptile coiling in the sun, Reptiles. Yea, veriest reptiles have sufficed to prove it
Republic. Of a Republic, where all stood thus far
Of a Republic. Lamentable crimes,
Life from the young Republic; that new foes
Leave this unknight Republic to the scourge
Republican. Republican or pious. If these thoughts
Repusive. And a coarse outside of repulsive life
Reputa. His stripling prime. A town of small repute,
This high repute, with bounteous Nature's aid,
Reputed. Thou art reputed wise, but in my mind Request. When I gave way to your request; and now,
This last request. You know me, Sir; farewell!
But of his father begged, a last request,
Now promise, graat this one request,
For Matthew a request I make Fulfillment of his own request;—
Fixed on the Suitor; frustrate her request—
Turned inward; or at my request would sing
No thanks he breathed, he proffered no request;
—But your compliance, Sir! with our request
Some farewell words—with one, but one, request;
The gladsome child bestows at his request;
Requested. As I requested; and hereafter, Luke,
And, as his Father had requested, laid Requests. To which, requests were added, that forthwith
Requiem. A most melodious requiem, a supreme
Am I deceived? Or is their requiem chaated Requiem which Earth takes up with voice undaunted,
Come, and my requiem sing,
That voice, ill requiem! seldom heard by me
Requiem's. Are not, in sooth, their Requiem's sacred ties
Requiem's. And requiem's answered by the pulse that beats
Require. And all particulars that dull brains require
Of spirit too capacious to require
His father!—Him doth he require—
More readily the more my years require
When I of thee require the same:
Words that require no sanction from an oath,
No rampart's stern defence require,
Even as the heart's occasions might require,
Our present purpose seems not to require,
What from my fellow-beings I require,
Do, with united urgency, require,
Among us,—hence the more do we require
Impending evil, equally require
Must needs themselves be hallowed, they require
More readily, the more my years require
Required. Beholds, of all from her high powers required,
In recompense for what themselves required,
With such allowance as his wants required
Of night, my slaughtered Lord have I required[:]
Lie in the means required, or ways ordained,
For much that truth most urgently required

Required—continued.

Such as his state required. At this reproof,
The peace required, he scanned the laws of light
For the peculiar pains they had required,
Which appetite required—a blind dull nook,
That mine was a condition which required
Of mountain turf required the builder's hand
Even upon mine, the more are we required
Of the time-hallowed minstrelsy) required
Requires. To win belief, such as my plot requires.
And every sacrifice his peace requires.—
And from their secret loyalty requires
No door the tenement requires,
Requires for nobler deeds;
Lycoris! life requires an art
Survive not Judgment that requires his own?
Of vulgar nature; that its growth requires
With the few needful things that life requires.
—Come, labour, when the worn-out frame requires
And course of service Truth requires from those
Which the salvation of his soul requires.
Requiring. O'er high and low, and if requiring rest,
Requisites. Due requisites a perfect shepherd's staff,
For which peculiar requisites are mine;
Requital's. They know the dread requital's source profund;
Requite. And this good Man, whom Heaven requite,
Pains which the World inflicts can she requite?
And that, so placed, my Nurslings may requite
It chastens only to requite
With gladness must requite Thee.
Requited. See Ill-requited.
And ill requited by this heartfelt sigh!
And, in requited passion, all too much
Re-salute. I re-salute these sentiments confirmed
Rescue. Thee from bondage would I rescue
She could not rescue, perished in her sight!
"A rescue for the Standard!" cried
And to the tomb for rescue flies
That thou wert near to rescue me; and now,
New stores, or rescue from decay the old
Rescued. And the blind Man was told how you had rescued
Many a captive hath she rescued,
Not wholly rescued from the pale
The rescued Pine-tree, with its sky so bright
The rescued Maiden lay,
And from Pagan chains had rescued,
Was rescued by the Bard:
And thou, O rescued Earth, by peace and love,
Let rescued Europe tell the story,
I found its rescued inmate safely lodged,
And from debasement rescued.—By thy grace Research. Severe research, that in our hearts we know
The deepest and the best, what keen research,
Lost in a gloom of uninspired research;
That meditation and research may guide
Re-seated. Re-seated on thy throne,
Resemblance. Some new resemblance we may trace
Whose countenance bore resemblance to the sun,
A livelier sisterly resemblance show
Resemblance of that glorious faculty
With brotherly resemblance. Turn your steps
With a resemblance not to be denied,
Of contrast and resemblance. To an oak
Are graced with some resemblance. Errant those, Resemblances. Resemblances, or contrasts, that connect,
Stood fixed; and fixed resemblances were seen
Resemble. The Dames resemble whom we here behold,
Did most resemble him. Degrees and ranks,
Resembled. Resembled much that cold voluptuary,
But that their state so much resembled ours,
Resembles. Where earth resembles most his own domain!
To something that resembles an approach
Resembling. Delight resembling love.
Is more poetic as resembling more
A mass of rock, resembling, as it lay
Resented. But not on high, where madness is resented.
Resentment. By sharp resentment, or helike to taunt
Of a false prophet. While resentment rose
Or cherishing resentment, or in vain
Which anger and resentment could not dry.
Resentments. When all resentments were at rest,
Reserve. Behold! the mantling spirit of reserve
And wise reserve the plea of indolence—
Patience and temperance with this high reserve,
Without reserve to those whom we love well—
And why that scrupulous reserve? In sooth
From courtesy and delicate reserve;
Locks every function up in blank reserve,
Her just opinions, delicate reserve,
From play-house, lutes thrown without reserve
Without reserve to them, the lonely roads
In sight of that forbearance and reserve
Without reserve descending upon both,
Casting reserve away, exult to see

Reserve—continued.

And answer flowed, the letters of reserve . . . 882
Without reserve or veil; and as a power
Reserved. Reserved, had fate permitted, for support
What need there is to be reserved in speech,
She was reserved by me her life's betrayer;
And something, it might be, reserved for himself:
For her, who [all too timid and reserved
More winningly reserved! If ye enquire
Reserves. Reserves for either, sure it is that both Reservoir. But a terrific reservoir of guilt Reservoirs. The sullen reservoirs whence their bold brood—
Residence. Within a world, a midway residence
Imperial, their chief living residence.
"Twixt her high-seated residence and his
Truth's consecrated residence, the seat
A residence afford them, 'mid the bloom
A settled residence, or be from far,
Residue. What are they but a wreck and residue,
Residues. We love, but that the residues of flesh,
Resign. With that reproof I do resign a station
O pleasant transit, Grasmere! to resign
Make haste, your morning task resign;
Will not unwillingly their place resign;
I resign my soul's emotions
Make slow to feel, and by sure steps resign
Support us, teach us calmly to resign
"At thy name though compassion her nature resign,
Which now we too unwillingly resign
For Nature called my Partner to resign Resignation. The gentlest breath of resignation drew
And hands in resignation prest,
In resignation to abide
Of resignation find a hallowed place.
A soul by resignation sanctified;
Fearful; but resignation tempers fear,
With resignation; and no jarring tone
With resignation sink into the grave;
Due resignation. Therefore, though some tears
Resigned. When long familiar joys are all resigned,
And, to a natural sympathy resigned,
A thought resigned with pain, when from the most can feel his crimes. I have resigned a privilege;
The breathless corse; then peacefully resigned
With many tasks that were resigned to thee:
Thy votaries, woefully resigned
Is Peter quietly resigned;
To female hands the treasures were resigned;
Of business, care, or pleasure; or resigned
Where the wild waves resigned their prey—
The sweets of earth contentedly resigned,
There lived, and on the cross his life resigned,
When the poor heart has all its joys resign'd,
And ask no record of the hours, resigned
A misery to him; and the Youth resigned
(Resigned with sadness gently weighing down
And He—to whom all tongues resigned their rights
To stern Plantagenet resigned her keys)
Resists. Where Machination her fell soul resigns,
Resist. Till no one can resist him.—Now, even now,
If he resist that tempting door,
If he resist those casement panes,
Resist—the thunder quails thee!—crouch—rebuff
Resistance. Admitting no resistance, bends alike
Resistance strong as heretofore, I thought
For onset, for resistance too inert, Resistless. Stings to the quick, and, with resistless force,
Resolute. Wert kind as resolute, and good as brave;
Till the arched roof, with resolute abuse
Informed, were resolute to do his will,
Resolute, at all hazards, to fulfil
Though young so wise, though meek so resolute—
Though resolute when duty called
But as a Pilgrim resolute, I took
And, with a resolute mastery shaking off
Or by a resolute few who for the sake
Resolution. A resolution, or enlivening thought?
And resolution competent to take
Resolutions. With all my resolutions, all my hopes,
Decrees and resolutions of the Gods;
Resolve. Should he resolve to taint her Soul by means
Oh, Wisdom! a most wise resolve! and then,
Then pity crossed the path of my resolve:
Such was his first resolve; he thought again,
With that resolve he boldly mounts
Power must resolve to cleave to it through life,
How no one can resolve; but every eye
Abides by this resolve, and stops not there,
And difficulty mastered, with resolve
Can guess the high resolve, the cherish'd pain
A calm resolve of mind, firmly addressed
That mood, or undermine my first resolve!"
A chip or splinter—to resolve his doubts;
Resolve, the haughty Moralist would say,
Grant to the wise his firmness of resolve!"

Resolve—continued.

She mused, resolved, adhered to her resolve ; . . . 849
 So shall licentiousness and black resolve . . . 889
Resolved. The weakest of God's creatures, stand resolved . . . 65
 We were his guides, I on that night resolved . . . 76
 Resolved to try his fortune on the seas . . . 100

 Resolved the dubious point; and sentence gave . . . 772
 Its own voluptuousness;—on this resolved, . . . 776
 These feeling no contentment, I resolved . . . 798
 Indignantly—resolved to be a man, . . . 798
 Resolved to quell his pain, and search for truth . . . 840

 Attuned, or sprightly fife resounding far . . . 702
 Resounding at all hours, and innocent yet . . . 716
 And ponderous loam—resounding while it holds . . . 831
Resounds. Downward the ponderous timber-wain resounds ; . . . 4
 And heron, as resounds the trodden shore, . . . 7
 Swelling the outcry dull, that long resounds . . . 12
 The crash of ruin fitfully resounds ; . . . 21
 Swift Mercury resounds with mirth, . . . 237
 Through "Nature's hollow arch" that voice re-sounds . . . 427
 The voice of Ruin, day and night, resounds . . . 614
 Take flight ; while with their clang the air resounds . . . 808
Resource. The Shepherd's sole resource to sell at once . . . 134
 An old resource to cheat a froward time ! . . . 521
 In lonely reading found a meek resource : . . . 852
 A fancy pregnant with resource and scheme . . . 859

 And as a swallow, at the hour of rest, . . . 19
 Remembered half the year and hoped the rest, . . . 19
 To greet the traveller needing food and rest ; . . . 21
 Nay, Traveller ! rest. This lonely Yew-tree stands . . . 22
 And rest ; but now along heaven's darkening cope . . . 25
 Come is the raven timely rest to seek ; . . . 26
 The very ocean hath its hour of rest . . . 30
 And gave me food—and rest, more welcome, more desired . . . 31
 And be at rest. Oh, Sir ! Peace, my good Wilfred ; . . . 38
 You are quite exhausted. Let us rest awhile . . . 39
 Hath need of rest ; the sight of Hut or Hostel . . . 41

 And, while you take your rest, think not of us ; . . . 43
 Do you tell fortunes ? Oh Sir, you are like the rest . . . 44
 Before her face. The rest be left to me . . . 45
 Thee I adore, and find my rest in faith . . . 48
 And under covert rest till break of day, . . . 53

 That I may rest; and neither blame
 All merry things are now at rest,
 Their starts of motion and their fits of rest,
 Of our weak nature rest not, must be deemed
 Rest, little Stranger, rest thee here!
 That keep no certain intervals of rest,
 Its natural gifts for purposes of rest,
 That small, for flax; and, if one wheel had rest,
 'Tis thine, sweet babe, there to rest;
 And while the rest, a ruddy quire,
 To rest, or murmur there.
 Thou sink'st, the image of thy rest!
 Self-poised in air thou seem'st to rest;—
 Hail to Thee, far above the rest
 Thou hast a rest for thy love and thy rest,
 When the flocks are all at rest,
 But drops not here to earth for rest;
 Of the sun going down to his rest,
 Are fairer than the rest;
 Rest, Mother-bird! and when thy young
 And while they strain, and while they rest,
 But drop the rest;—this aggravation,
 The mourner is cheered, and the anxious have rest;
 By ever-changing shape and want of rest;
 The weary Sun betook himself to rest;—
 There did she rest; and dwell alone
 Which might not burn itself to rest.
 And now, too happy for repose or rest,
 I may not be; but rest thee, rest,
 Thou tree of covert and of rest
 A play-ground,—or a couch of rest;
 Up-caught in whirlwinds, nowhere can find rest.
 As if they scorned both resting-place and rest!
 Approach;—and, thus invited, crown with rest
 Each grief, through meekness, settling into rest.
 From morn to eve, with hallowed rest,
 To sink upon your mother's lap—and rest?
 For joy and rest, albeit to find them only
 Can draw, and sing his griefs to rest.
 Even Joy could tell, Joy craving truce and rest
 The wise man, I affirm, can find no rest
 This Ship to all the rest did I prefer:
 Here roving wild, he laid him down to rest
 For life to occupy in love and rest;
 And Catherine said, Here I set up my rest.
 And honour rest upon the senseless clay.
 And neighbours rest together, here confound
 Elates not, brought far nearer the grave's rest,
 One upward hand, as if she needed rest
 And in a moment charmed my cares to rest.
 How in thy pensive glooms our hearts found rest,
 Withdrawn from noontide rest. They sit, they walk
 Their notion of its perfect rest.
 Roars in thy hearing; but thy hour of rest
 And you shall bring your stool and rest;
 For many saw; among the rest
 Not prostrate, not like those that rest
 On England's bosom; yet well pleased to rest,
 Oh grief that Earth's best hopes rest all with Thee!
 How sweet to rest her wide-spread wings beneath!
 Threatened her foes,—or, pompously at rest,
 From shades, her chosen place of short-lived rest.
 And lead us on to that transcendent rest
 From Prussia's timid region. Go, and rest
 If on Thy love our Land her hopes shall rest,
 To rest where the lizard may hark in the palm
 To rest the universal Lord:
 Rest where thy course was stayed by Power divine!
 As we rest in the cool orange-blower side by side,
 O'er high and low, and if requiring rest,
 To shady rest withdrawing or withdrawn
 Looks up in all places, for joy or for rest,
 Of outward symbol, nor will deign to rest
 Had sunk to rest with folded wings:
 And for their sakes, and love of all that rest,
 Lulling the year, with all its cares, to rest!
 Win rest, and ease, and peace, with bliss that Angels share.
 No loyal rest while England's Crown
 Whereon the Banner-staff might rest
 His weary spirits gather rest,
 Exhaust itself and sink to rest;
 But ere the Moon had sunk to rest

Rest—continued.

Of that same Temple have found rest:
 And left—but he the rest unsaid,
 Nor liberty nor rest could gain:
 When all resentments were at rest,
 Upon the ground received the rest,—
 There did she rest, with head reclined,
 If there be prophets on whose spirits rest?
 That ever looked to heaven for final rest?
 And Victory sickens, ignorant where to rest!
 From fields where good men walk, or howers wherein they rest.
 From finite cares, to rest absorbed in Thee!
 The sun is couched, the sea-fowl gone to rest,
 Or in the haven rest, or sheltering hay,
 Ere some commanding star dismiss to rest
 Rest smooths the way for sleep; in field and bow
 Of wealth and power and honours, long for rest;
 Her intercessions made for the soul's rest
 Shall hold their passage to eternal rest."
 Brief words may speak the rest;
 That he below may rest in peace,
 Does little on his memory rest,
 Doth seldom on a right foundation rest,
 Such measured rest the sedulous and good
 Forbid a moment's rest;
 Kindlier issues, holier rest,
 She soars—and here and there her pinions rest
 That, drawn from this one hour of rest,
 When we shall sink to final rest.
 No tempest from his breath, their promised rest
 Rest not in hope want's icy chain to thaw
 Within the mirror's depth, a world at rest—
 Soon did the Almighty Giver of all rest 410 White Doe 1277

 They rise, or rest the weary head,
 Half of a Vessel, half—no more; the rest
 Rest, shielded by our Lady's grace,
 These rude habiliments, and rest
 Stay, bold Adventurer; rest awhile thy limbs
 Know, if thou grudge not to prolong thy rest,
 So let it rest; and time will come
 The whilst the rest their anthem-book repeat
 In close self-shelter, like a Thing at rest.
 Here, brought from far, his course found rest,—
 "Rest, rest, perturbed Earth!
 O rest, thou doleful Mother of Mankind!"
 Calm as the dew-drop's, free to rest
 Could private feelings meet for holier rest.
 On whom those truths do rest,
 Of Childhood, whether busy or at rest,
 Where summer Suns in ocean sink to rest,
 Rest, near their little plots of wheaten glade;
 And lull'd their warring passions into rest,
 But coldly rest not here—be more than just;
 Spurn the soft fetters of lethargic rest.
 That call'd the wanderer home, and home to rest.
 While the joy that precedes the calm season of rest
 Shall gratitude find rest? Mine eyes did ne'er
 The true Ascanius steep'd in placid rest;
 Troubling a heart that had been long at rest.
 Shall with its murmur lull me into rest?
 Nor rest till they had reached the very door
 Reposed in noontide rest, the inner pulse
 Give seasonable rest, for 'tis a sound
 Grasping his twofold treasure.—Lance in rest,
 To break upon the sabbath of her rest,
 Through the whole summer have I been at rest,
 Of nature's intermediate hours of rest,
 Helvelly, in the silence of his rest,
 For rest not needed or exchange of love,
 Could teach, admonish; or suffered with the rest
 Prostrate, or leaning towards their common rest
 On the pure bliss, and takes her rest with God.
 Sequestered from the rest, societies
 This was their rest and only hope; therewith
 Or person singled out among the rest,
 A patriot, thence rejected by the rest,
 Of hospitality and peaceful rest.
 Saw them and touched: the rest was conjured up
 In safe obedience; that a mind, whose rest
 I saw them in their rest, a sojourner
 Above the rest raised infinite ascents
 To outrun the rest in exultation, groaned
 Rest, and be not alone, but have thou there
 Rest, and be welcomed there to livelier joy.
 Bent as he moves, and needing frequent rest;
 This hour when all things which are not at rest
 In death thy faithfulness?"—"God rest his soul!"
 Whereon a full-grown man might rest, nor dread
 His body is at rest, his soul in heaven."
 Such as she had, the hemel of his rest!
 There in commodious shelter may we rest.
 'His body is at rest, his soul in heaven.'
 And with the imagination rest content,
 And on that couch loving us to rest,
 Within a port of rest had lodged me safe;

Rest—continued.

"Here then we rest; not fearing for our creed
 Stillness and rest, with disapproving eye
 Descending, there might rest; upon that height
 Our dark foundations rest, could he design
 To rest upon their circumambient walls;
 The Sun, before his place of rest were reached,
 And through that conflict seeking rest—of you,
 And with their humble birthright rest content.
 Through shades and silent rest, to endless joy."
 In rest established; and the jarring thoughts
 Sought for his weariness a place of rest
 No evidence appears that they who rest
 Speaks for itself; an Infant there doth rest;
 There doth he rest. No theme his fate supplies
 Within the garden, like the rest, a bed
 In them who rest beneath, nor any course
 Whose place of rest is near you ivied porch.
 And she lies conscious, in a blissful rest,
 Vague thoughts are these; but, if belief may rest
 Of keels that rest within her crowded ports,
 And frustrate all the rest! Believe it not:
 The stars shine brightly between clouds at rest,
 Such measured rest the diligent and good
 At breathless eventide at rest
 Athens sings 'tis thine to rest
 For rest of body, perfect was the spot.
 And lap in pleasing rest, and bear us on
 Wheel through the sky, and see them now at rest,
 Yet not at rest, upon the glassy lake.
 They cannot rest, they gambol like young whelps;
 Incapable although they be of rest
 That satisfies and ends in perfect rest.

Rested. And thankfully there rested side by side
 That never rested—without meat or drink
 We rested in the garden bower;
 Came, and rested without fear;
 Rested a golden harp;—he touched the strings;
 He rested 'mid an arbour green and shady;
 He rested not; its depths his mind explored;
 Where they had rested them all night; and they,
 We rested in the shade, all pleased alike,
 Rested within an awful solitude:
 Rested a silent sea of hoary mist.
 "A child of earth, I rested, in that stage
 On these two pillars rested as in air
 Till nature rested from her work in death.

Resting. See Never-resting.
 Calm is all nature as a resting wheel.
 Upon the Mother's bosom; resting thus
 Resting the harp upon his knee,
 Resting upon his arms each warrior stood,
 The labouring many and the resting few;
 Then, resting on her upright mind,
 Upon herself resting immovably.
 And sun-buried travellers resting their tired limbs,
 Through faith and meditative reason, resting.
 Veiled auro, or pilgrim resting on his staff:
 Now resting with a pilgrim by the side
 Beside the coffin, resting on its lid
 Roaming, or resting under grateful shade
 Here, resting in cool shelter, we beguiled

Resting-place. That I, at last, a resting-place had found;
 I thank you; but, a resting-place so near,
 As if they scorned both resting-place and rest!
 Won for herself a lasting resting-place;
 Give to their Faith a fearless resting-place.
 Yet I at last a resting-place have found,
 An outlet nor a resting-place!
 To Him a resting-place should fit,
 And hailed him. Slowly from the resting-place
 Fit resting-place for such a visitant.
 Blown from their favourite resting-place, or mist
 A village-inn,—our evening resting-place.
 Yet, ere that final resting-place be gained,
 In which they find an equal resting-place.
 Of an old yew, their favourite resting-place.
 Offering a sunny resting-place to them

Resting-places. Resting-places calm and deep.

Restless. Lashed the cool water with their restless tails
 And restless stone-chat, all day long is heard.
 With restless interchange at once the bright
 Outstretched, and turning on a restless bed:
 That should be scourged, not pitied. Restless
 Minds,
 Was restless morn and night, and all day long
 Restless with fixed to balance, high with low,
 Involved and restless all—a scorse
 Among the restless sails of vanity,
 Sir Walter, restless as a veering wind,
 Of restless ownership!
 Her restless progeny. A humble walk
 Fur, restless Wanderer! I, in truth,
 Nur veil, with restless film, his staring eyes.
 Yet he had many a restless dream;
 But aye ascending, restless to her pride
 But restless Fancy left that olive grove
 Where anguish, strange as dreams of restless sleep,
 Nor yet the restless crown had been

Restless—continued.

Once more this restless neighbourhood
 From early youth I ploughed the restless Main,
 My mind as restless and as apt to change;
 Then would be closed the restless oblique eye
 Pondering the mischiefs of these restless times,
 Tossed ashore by restless waves,
 The bad man's restless walk, and haunt his hed—
 Who are so restless in your wisdom, ye
 How restless, how minute!
 And restless piper wearying out the shore;
 'Tis restless magic all; at once the bright
 Tluence red from different heights with restless
 gleam
 From the dark sylvan roofs the restless spire,
 Refract in rainbow hues the restless fires!
 Glanced on their promises in restless pride.
 Imagination restless; nor was free
 Upon this restless lustre have I gazed,
 That made my fancy restless as itself.
 Feverish, and tired, and restless, I went forth
 His restless mind to look abroad with hope.
 The calm of nature with our restless thoughts?
 Was wasted.—Back I turned my restless steps;
 With battlements that on their restless fronts
 Giddily and restless, ever and anon
 As if with wish to veil the restless orb,
 Restless, and restless generation, powers
 And with a pretty restless hand of love,
 From all intrusion of the restless world

Restlessly. Restlessly flashing, seems to mount like fire
 Most restlessly alive when most confined.
 Of her new office, blushing restlessly.
 On its own axis restlessly revolving,
 Of infinite Being, twinkling restlessly!

Restlessness. In that habitual restlessness of foot
 With morbid restlessness—the ecstatic fit
 That with intrusive restlessness beats off
 Wake sometimes to a noble restlessness—
 Entering the cell gave restlessness to one,
 78 Bord. 2337
 With tranquil restoration—feels too
 At least not felt; and restoration came
 For future restoration.—Yet another
 A blessed restoration, to behold
 Of restoration, fashioned to the steps

Restorative. Kept sacred to restorative delight,
Restora. Restore him, Heaven! The desperate Wretch—A Flower,
 the hope that we might shelter and restore him.
 we may restore him, and his eyes may yet open
 Nor can the winds restore his simple gift.
 That now I should restore what hath been held in trust."
 Shall I admit that nothing can restore
 Its own deep quiet to restore our hearts.
 Restore him to my sight—great Jove, restore!"
 Thy call a prostrate Nation can restore,
 Could to my sight that heavenly face restore.
 That no to-morrow shall our beams restore!
 And to that brow life's morning wreath restore;
 And, though past pomp no changes can restore,
 If vital hope he wanting to restore,
 Thy function was to heal and to restore,
 To attest my Faith, if not restore.
 And there may Emily restore
 Helps to restore and spread a Pagan sway:
 If thou hast fallen, and righteous Heaven restore
 Whether they would restore or build—to Thee,
 Was fondly seized by Sculpture, to restore
 Would their lost strength restore and freshen the pale cheek?
 But if the change restore his hirthright, then,
 A power is gone, which nothing can restore;
 Restore their languid spirits, and recall
 To generate, to preserve, and to restore;
Restored. A British ship I waked, as from a trance restored."
 Should be forthwith restored. The hearing, Lady,
 Or till the storm abate. He has restored you,
 Of his own rights restored, his gratitude
 Of Arthur,—who, to upper light restored,
 Fur, if, by such strange sacrifice restored,
 Garbolan's first-born son, your rightful king restored!"
 A Clifford to his own restored!
 To his ancestors restored
 For liberty confirmed, and peace restored!
 To be triumphantly restored.
 The voice restored, the eye of Truth
 And to her God restored by evidence
 And has restored to view its tender green,
 Appears to shine, by miracle restored;
 Banished, nor ever, haply, be restored
 Restored to me—such absence that she seemed
 If new strength be not given nor old restored,
 Restored to us in renovated health;
 Restored it to its owner. "Gentle Friend,"
 To sight restored, and glittering in the sun.
 To harmony restored.—But you dark mould

Restored—continued.

Restored me to my native valley, here
In its original beauty, here restored,
Religion hailed her creeds by war restored,
Restores. And he, whose power restores thee, hath decreed
That quietly restores the natural mien
Restores not to their prayer! Ah! who would think
Restor'st. Restor'st us, daily, to the powers of sense Restrain. Is hushed, am I at rest. My Friends!
restrain
Nor could his sunken eyes the starting tear restrain.
And restrain the vague desire?
Loth to restrain the moving interview,
To support, restrain, or raise.
To kindle or restrain.
Does the hour's drowsy weight his glee restrain?
Triumph, and thoughts no bondage can restrain.
Dissension, checking arms that would restrain
But O, restrain compassion, if its course, Restrained. Walked none restraining, and by none restrained:
With pleasure sometimes by this thought restrained—
The while a Thrush, urged rather than restrained
Restraining. See Self-restraining.
Walked none restraining, and by none restrained:
Under God's restraining laws.
Restrains. By Him who raised the Tempest and restrains:
Restraint. See Self-restraint.
His humble looks no sly restraint impart;
Virtuous restraint—ah, speak it, think it, not!
Under privation and restraint, and what
As joy delights in; and with wise restraint
With no restraint, but such as springs
Without restraint. How swiftly have they flown,
Denial and restraint I prize
When the third summer freed us from restraint,
Not violating any just restraint,
From the restraint of over-watchful eyes
Rule and restraint—my guardian—shall I say
Without restraint of all which they behold.
Restraints. That made us) over those severe restraints Ritual restraints, within some sheltering nook
Nor only palpable restraints unbind,
As from restraints and bonds. Yet who can tell—
Which, to the blind restraints of general laws
—But, from past liberty, and tried restraints,
To know restraints; and who most boldly drew
To impose severe restraints and laws unjust,
Restrict. To such will we restrict our notice, else
Restriction. Be left, is no restriction laid; Restrictions. With scrupulous care; but these restrictions soon
Rests. Where Derwent rests, and listens to the roar
Arch that here rests upon the granite ridge
Of far-stretched Meres whose salt flood never rests—
And rests not thankful? Whether cheered by talk
More safely rests, dies happier, is freed
Rests upon ankles swollen and thick;
Rests on a hollow plea of recompense;
All peace depends, all safety rests.
Now rests her weary head.
He rests a prisoner of the ground.
Whereon Britannia rests her peaceful fame.
Rests underneath the little rock-like pile
Or well-spring where the weary traveller rests.
Rests his substantial orb;—between those heights
A stranded ship, with keel upturned, that rests
Rests his desires; and hence, in after life,
That, for support, rests on them; the decayed
How would you pity her who yonder rests;
"A woman rests in peace; surpassed by few
Here rests a Mother. But from her I turn
This hallowed grave demands, where rests in peace
As that of war, which rests not night or day,
Learning, though late, that all true glory rests,
The carter's whip that on his shoulder rests
Re-subjecting. For re-subjecting to divine command
Result. How much of this is but the blind result
Results. Thence look for these magnificent results!
Resume. Gay lark of hope, thy silent song resume!
It now becomes my duty to resume it.
With a determined purpose to resume
Resume, my Friends! within the shade
To resume its native light.
Which we will now resume with lively hope,
He would resume his story. He replied,
The Stuart, landing to resume, by force
Thy ancient honours when shalt thou resume?
Resumed. And thus resumed—"Well, Isabel! this scheme
With daylight Isabel resumed her work;
Thus, after a short silence, he resumed:
Went Norton, and resumed his post.
Resumed its place. Age after age went by,
Returned my salutation; then resumed

Resumed—continued.

The Old Man, noting this, resumed, and said,
I ceased, and he resumed.—"Ah! gentle Sir,
I felt their invitation; and resumed
And, in soft tone of speech, thus he resumed.
By a fierce tempest shaken, soon resumed
His office, uninvited, he resumed.
Still linger'd, after a brief pause, resumed;
Resumed the manners of his happier days;
Resumes. Lays it by, at will resumes!
Then, for a moment, he, in spirit, resumes
Enter, and each the wonted task resumes
Resuming. "Yes," said the Sage, resuming the discourse
Resurrection. Of resurrection. Miserable Woman, Retain. Retain his lawless will,
Despair not of our nature, but retain
That with distinct pre-eminence retain
Some trace am I enabled to retain
"The Father, if perchance he still retain"
Retained. Yet still her eyes retained their tropic fire,
A plenitude of love retained:
Be not forgotten, that I still retained
Retained its purity inviolate,
Retained too long a countenance severe;
Of prejudice subdued—still he retained,
An amicable smile retained the life
Conquered, and in tranquility retained!
Retained a flashing eye, a burning palm,
Retainers. Seven hundred Knights, Retainers all
And his Retainers of the embattled hall
Retainers won away from solid good;
Retaineth. Retaineth more of ancient homeliness, Retaining. That harboured them,—the souls retaining yet
Retains. Still the cold cheek its shuddering tear retains.
Missed not the truth, retains a single name
But manly sovereignty its hold retains;
Remembering not, retains an obscure sense
It occupies—what consciousness retains
"The fragrant air its coolness still retains;
And which, once built, retains a steadfast shape
Retinue. Whose good works formed an endless retinue:
Blessings and prayers in nobler retinue
Of clouds—his glory's natural retinue—
Time with his retinue of ages fled
Sink, with a retinue of flaming clouds
Religion! with thy stately retinue,
Retire. Come forth, and here retire in purple shade;
From the bright wave, in solemn gloom, retire
Have blessed their steps, the fatherless retire
The man he was. I will retire;—good night!
Retire in fear of shame;
Far from their noisy haunts retire,
Skilled to approach or to retire,—
The Sun, that seemed so mildly to retire,
On honourable terms, or else retire,
Quick to the secret grotto they retire
His perilous duty, and retire lamenting
Not mute, and then retire, fearing no storm;
Once more did I retire into myself.
Instinctively disposed him to retire
Or rocky bield with patience they retire.
Retired. When up the hills, as now, retired the light,
Where bleeding Sidney from the cup retired,
The lanes I sought, and, as the sun retired,
Retired in that sunshiny shade he lay
When to his chamber he retired, attempt
The visitor retired. Thus lived the Youth
Dwelling retired in our simplicity
Sauntered on this retired and difficult way.
Plant lover, in its own retired abode
Framed in the schools where Wisdom dwelt retired,
Ere northward they retired;
Whither, at length, a Wretch retired
From Tasso's Convent-haven, and retired grave,
Horse charging horse, 'mid these retired domains,
Through the Vale retired and lowly,
He is retired as noontide dew,
Not seldom from the uproar I retired
And tingled through the veins. Ere we retired,
If not already from the woods retired
Heaved at safe distance, far retired. I paused,
The promise of the present time retired
His office he relinquished; and retired
"At morn or eve, in your retired domain,
Retired and covert; so that ye shall have Retired from notice, lost in attributes
Retired behind the mountain-tops or veiled
Partook of every motion, met, retired,
Retiredness. Thus, Lady, is retiredness a veil
Retirement. Of his retirement, to the forest lodge
From rash assault? Schemes of retirement soon
Retirement then might hourly look
Or such retirement, Friend! as we have known
From the retirement of my native hills,
Retirement, leisure, language purified
Involate retirement, subject there
If from my poor retirement ye had gone

Retirement—continued.

In that retirement; withier, by such course . . . 833
Retirements. And mountainous retirements, only trod . . . 809
Retires. Profounder quiet, when the fit retires, The wounded deer retires to solitude, Now, risen ex the light-footed Chamois retires Where'er they rise, the sylvan waste retires, While, as one kindly growth retires. Pale Passion, overpowered, retires and woos
Retiring. By chance retiring from the glare of noon Never retiring, in thy large dark eyes, . . . 525
 Retiring or approaching from afar . . . 716
Retold. That may not be retold to any ear. . . 59
Retorted. By the cloud-capt hills retorted; . . . 324
Retrace. By Conscience governed do their steps retrace.—
 Dear Mother! If thou must thy steps retrace, Retrace the Grecian cunning from its source, Unvisited, endeavoured to retrace . . . 642
 'Tis not my present purpose to retrace . . . 682
 From risk and hardship, inwardly retrace . . . 794
 The good man's purposes and deeds; retrace . . . 863
Retraced. The Woman thus retraced her own untoward fate. . . 28
 In pure compassion she her steps retraced . . . 34
 And it seemed, as I retraced the ballad line by line, And here, O Friend! I have I retraced my life . . . 651
 Descending, have I faithfully retraced . . . 732
 A humbler destiny have we retraced, In bleak December, I retraced this way, . . . 748
 Much less, retraced in words. If she, of life The story that retraced the slow decline . . . 796
 Be here retraced;—enough that, by mishap
Retracing. On tracing and retracing that large round, . . . 218
Retreads. Remorseless punishment; and so retreads
Retreat. As by enchantment, an obscure retreat . . . 3
 Felt the loose walls of this decayed Retreat . . . 27
 Drove by the place of my retreat: three nights Within this realm a place of safe retreat; . . . 69
 Their steps he followed to the Maid's retreat. . . 104
 That a retreat might be assigned to him, . . . 122
 Sir Lancelot gave a safe retreat to him, . . . 125
 In some complaining, dim retreat, . . . 180
 And torn him from his loved retreat, . . . 288
 To whom all persecuted men retreat; . . . 301
 Near that Cell—yon sequestered Retreat high in air—
 O'er hill and valley to this dim retreat! Still pity to this last retreat . . . 382
 The footsteps of a quick retreat; . . . 390
 Then from within the embowered retreat Is that the Sufferer's last retreat? . . . 406
 Religion finds even in the stern retreat In their afflictions a divine retreat; . . . 430
 But, from the process in that still retreat, Oh may this work have found its last retreat . . . 456
 Has seduced the poor fool from his wioter retreat, Sends the pale Convict to his last retreat . . . 461
 The joy in that retreat . . . 484
 Whom chance may lead to this retreat, Should find an undisturbed retreat . . . 520
 Are paid to Him upon whose shy retreat Retreat within retreat, a sheltering-place The loneliness of this sublime retreat! . . . 778
 Withdrew, and fixed me in a still retreat; Retreat, within this nook of English ground. From sire to son, in this obscure retreat . . . 823
 A termination, and a last retreat, . . . 872
 Their safe retreat. We knew them well, I guess
Retreated. The snow hath retreated, . . . 190
 The tide retreated from the shore, . . . 296
 Retreated towards a brake of thorn, . . . 412
Retreating. Such retreating and advancing . . . 180
 For gently each from each retreating . . . 371
Retreats. Thy open beauties, or thy lone retreats; True beauty dwells in deep retreats, . . . 111
 Devoutly in life's last retreats! Through the beloved retreats your arms enfold! Subalpine vales, in quest of safe retreats For Gods in council, whose green vales, retreats When up the hills, as now, retreats the light, And lurking dimly in their shy retreats, As fierce a successor; the tide retreats In a few fortunate retreats like this;
Retribution. Will retribution show itself again The power of retribution once was given: . . . 325
 And final retribution,—
 Fit retribution, by the moral code Of vengeful retribution, theirs who throned Glimpses of retribution, terrible, Provoked a retribution too severe.
Retrim. Their cheerfulness, and busily retrim
Retrospect. For ever withered. Through this retrospect
Retrospective. The retrospective virtues. Festive songs
Return. Binds her wild wreaths, and whispers his return. . . 18

Return—continued.

And thou, lost fragrance of the heart, return! . . . 20
 Seemed to return, dried the last lingering tear, . . . 30
 With strength did memory return; and, thence, . . . 31
 That when, on our return from Palestine, . . . 40
 Exacted thy return, and our reunion, . . . 41
 For my return; be sure you shall have justice. . . 46
 And no return have I to make but prayers; . . . 52
 This instant we'll return to our Companions—
 But will return to you by break of day. . . 66
 let us return, I can help you. . . 72
 let us return to the spot; . . . 74
 And she to-morrow will return; . . . 81
 If e'er he should grow rich, he would return, . . . 100
 On their return, they found that he was gone. . . 101
 Of weeds and flowers, till we return be slow, . . . 107
 The sabbath's return; and its leisure's soft chain! Of future happiness. "You shall return, . . . 124
 He may return to us. If here he stay, . . . 135
 "Humble love in me would look for no return, . . . 140
 "Hie thee to the Countess, friend! return with speed, . . . 141
 And when will she return to us?" he paused; . . . 147
 Where, till the fitting bird's return, . . . 168
 The morning doth return." . . . 194
 Of sense were able to return as fast . . . 210
 Not seldom may the hour return . . . 215
 Nor will return—but droop not, favoured Youth; Will to the road return! . . . 240
 To my most grievous loss!—That thought's return The bright assurance, visibly return: . . . 258
 That winds into itself for sweet return. . . 284
 Oh! raise us up, return to us again; . . . 307
 Return us to the dust from which we came; . . . 319
 Due recompense, and safe return . . . 342
 Were but the Gift a meet Return to thee . . . 352
 Return, Content! for fondly I pursued, . . . 382
 May Health return to Mellow Age, . . . 386
 Return, and to her murmuring floods, . . . 402
 And must in joy to her return. . . 403
 Their labours end; or they return to lie, . . . 440
 And usages, whose due return invites . . . 438
 Since thy return, through days and weeks Return, and sound the Horn, that we . . . 535
 Shoot forth with lively power at Spring's return; . . . 546
 Constrain her heart as quickly to return, . . . 563
 Doth yet again to God return?— . . . 581
 Are conscious;—may the like return no more! Return Delights! with whom my road begun, . . . 592
 Of pleasure ebbed but to return as fast . . . 693
 London, to thee I willingly return. . . 693
 Or was departing never to return, . . . 708
 But to return out of its hiding-place . . . 719
 But from these bitter truths I must return To feel it;—but return we to our course. . . 732
 She whispered still that brightness would return, I saw the Spring return, and could rejoice, . . . 735
 Return upon me almost from the dawn . . . 738
 Through men return to servitude as fast . . . 752
 Where now we sit, I waited her return. . . 767
 And infant's smile awaited my return. . . 794
 So, wearied to your hut shall you return, . . . 808
 Thankful for my beloved child's return. . . 812
 And if heart-rending thoughts would oft return, . . . 852
 Deserve the least return of human thanks; . . . 870
 And in return for sympathy bestowed . . . 874
 Ne'er to return! That birthright now is lost. If he can crawl, he will return again . . . 878
 Return, Helvellyn's eagles! with the pair . . . K. 8.
 We who behold thee! But why thus return? . . . K. 8.
Returned. And hope returned, and pleasure fondly made . . . 25
 Even in the desert's heart; but he, returned, . . . 25
 You rushed into the murderous flames, returned, . . . 40
 Filled my dim eyes with tears.—When I returned . . . 49
 When from the Holy Land I had returned . . . 52
 When I returned with water from the brook, . . . 59
 That here us through the water— You returned To his paternal home he is returned, . . . 68
 Feebly returned by daunted Artagal, . . . 104
 Of war, had I returned to claim my right; . . . 104
 To what he saw, he gradually returned, . . . 118
 Uphrained him with slackness, he returned . . . 125
 Had to her house returned, the old Man said, . . . 136
 And to the house together they returned. . . 137
 Soon returned a trusty Page . . . 141
 The snows dissolved, and genial Spring returned . . . 150
 And are returned into themselves, they cannot but be sad? . . . 189
 My former thoughts returned: the fear that kills; Returned, to seek a Consort upon earth; . . . 197
 Returned to animate an age forlorn? . . . 220
 Given with a voice and by a look returned . . . 314
 Within him, instantly returned: . . . 353
 And when she from the abyss returned . . . 410
 But to the world returned no more, . . . 416
 And oft returned, again, and yet again. . . 535
 Beheld their only Child returned . . . 545
 Threw back my eyes, return'd, and gazed again. . . 618
 Or centre of these sports; and when, returned . . . 642

 And by the general reverence God is praised :
 To reverence, suspends his own ; submitting
 A seemly reverence may be paid to power ;
 Bold with the thought, in reverence I sat down,
 Who, to spread wide the reverence they claimed
 Of sorrow, or of reverence ?
 In reverence, and unarmed, I hear
 Yet shall it claim our reverence, that to God,
 And strike with reverence. The Monarch leans
 The Sensual think with reverence of the palms
 Men, who have ceased to reverence, soon defy
 Small reverence for the mitre's offices . . .
 Bowing with reverence to the ancient creed,
 With undistracted reverence, the effect
 Of those pure Minds that reverence the Muse.
 Make the heart sink, then will thou reverence
 Help me to tell it in thy reverence !
 For he so young to Christ did reverence.
 " Aod is this song fashioned in reverence
 Which is against the reverence of our laws !"
 On us, for reverence of His Mother Mary !"
 Though I be far from her I reverence,
 Reverence the hope whose vital anxiousness
 By reverence for the rights of all mankind,
 Fit reverence for the glorious Dead, the sight
 Reverence was due to a being thus employed ;
 Should reverence. The instinctive humbleness,
 In sympathetic reverence we trod
 To an unconscious love and reverence
 With a due reverence on earth's rightful lord,
 Of heroes ; or, in reverence to the gods,
 I had been taught to reverence a Power
 Here might I pause, and bend in reverence
 May with fit reverence be applied—that peace
 Of Providence ; and in reverence for duty,
 Stern self-respect, a reverence for God's word,
 To reverence the volume that displays
 And reverence for himself ; and, last and best,
 With a submissive reverence they beheld ;
 They fortified with reverence for the Gods ;
 And natural reverence which the place inspired.
 Of reverence done to the spirit of the place,
 In reverence, or in courtesy ; they prized
 In God ; and reverence for the dust of Man."
 With conscientious reverence, as a day
 The reverence by the fierce Anubis lost.
 (Fit token of thy reverence and love)
Reverenced. See Long-reverenced.
 Reverenced, like a sister loved . . . 142 Arm. Lady 148
 Thee Athens reverenced in the studious grove ;
 If that be reverenced which ought to last.
 So reverenced by us both. O'er paths and fields
 Memorial reverenced by a thousand storms ;
 That I belonged, and reverenced with love,
 Of conscience—conscience reverenced and obeyed,
 The more we know ; and yet is reverenced least,
 And the strong wind have reverenced . . . 884
Reverend. To reverend watching of each still report
 Nor spared the reverend blood that feebly runs ;
 —So speaking, he his reverend head
 You reverend hawthorns, hardened to the rod
 To snatch a sprig from Chaucer's reverend brow—
 These reverend aisles, these hallowed towers,
 The Friend I sought ; a Man of reverend age,
 Broke from the happy old Man's reverend lip ;
 The reverend Pastor toward the church-yard gate
 Experienced faith, the reverend Pastor said,
 Approach their reverend graces, unopposed ;
 My reverend Father tell that, 'mid the calm
 The mansion's self displayed ;—a reverend pile
 To kneel devoutly in you reverend Pile,
Reverent. Me did a reverent pity move
 Then to our Bishop's [? Bishops] reverent let us fall.
Reverential. Maintains a deep and reverential care
 Of the old Sea some reverential fear,
 In reverential modesty demand,
 Of reverential awe will chiefly seek
 And not by reverential touch of Time
 With gratitude, and reverential thoughts.
 Looked on this guide with reverential love ?
Reverently. And reverently the Band went forth.
 To which her judgments reverently defer . . .
Reverie. But while I gazed in tender reverie
 Startling us all, dispersed my reverie ; . . .
 Into a waking dream, a reverie
Reveries. When all my reveries are past,
 And cheering off his peaceful reveries,
Reverses. Of One whose spirit no reverse could quell ;
 O dread reverse ! if aught be so, which proves
 To mock me under such a strange reverse.
 This sorrowful reverse for all mankind.
 " A sad reverse it was for him who long
 Struggling against the strange reverse with zeal
Reversed. When will my sentence be reversed ?

Revert. Let us revert, and place before our thoughts
 Do we revert so fondly to the walks . . . 814
Reverted. See Half-reverted.
 Shame follow'd after with reverted eye,
 Power had reverted : habit, custom, law,
 Again I halted with reverted eyes ;
Review. Read o'er these lines ; and then review
 For breathing-time, is tempted to review
 Review the past, I warred against myself—
Reviewed. See Self-reviewed.
 And, sitting down beneath the trees, reviewed
 The past he calmly hath reviewed :
 Was then reviewed, and prompt word given,
 Reviewed through Love's transparent veil of years ?
 A youthful pilgrim ; above all reviewed
 Reviewed that Woman's sufferings ; and it seemed
 " What followed cannot be reviewed in thought ;"
Reviewing. By Nature, nor reviewing in the mind
 Reviewing my past way, much to condemn,
Revilings. With bitter insult and revilings sad ;
Revisiting. And journey far, revisiting the scenes
Revisal. A true revival of the light
 Than thy revival yields, for gladsome hope !
Revive. Dead times revive in thee . . .
 Revive unenvied ;—mightier far,
 With annual verdure, and revive the woods,
 Revive, their obstinate winter pass away,
 Of ancient times revive, and youth be trained
 Revive its ashes. What care we for this,
Revived. Like one revived, upon his neck I wept ;
 The red rose is revived at last ;
 Revived, with finer harmony pursued ;
 Revived a memory of those hours
 The Old, by thee revived, have said,
 On earth, will be revived, we trust, in heaven.
 Hath been revived, and if this genial mood
 Of day returning and of life revived.
 The wreck of gaiety ! But soon revived
Revives. The picture of the mind revives again :
 His scorn returns—his hate revives ;
 The monitor revives his own sweet strain ;
 But now once more the local Hart revives,
Reviving. Nature reviving, with a deep-drawn sigh
 Reviving obsolete idolatry . . .
 Reviving, heavier chastisement deserve
 Whose tone bespeak reviving interests . . .
Revolt. Of instability, revolt, decay,
Revolts. Revolts, offended at the ways of men
Revolution. I should make wondrous revolution here ;
 Of earthly revolution,
 Of revolution, impiously unbound !
 A revolution, save at this one time ;
 (Which 'mid all revolution in the hopes
Revolutionary. I saw the Revolutionary Power
Revolutions. No piteous revolutions had he felt,
 Those revolutions of disturbances
Revolve. Revolve in one sure track ; . . .
Revolved. "The wished-for wind was given :—I then revolved . . .
 The memory languidly revolved, the heart
 To steady me : each airy thought revolved
 On works of love or freedom, or revolved
 Service however dangerous. I revolved,
 And great in large ones, I had oft revolved,
Revolving. On those revolving motions did await
 Of the revolving week. Away, away,
 The Gods revolving the decrees of Fate,
 A toy that mimics with revolving wings
 Of life and death, revolving. Above all
 Revolving with the accidents of life,
 Breathed immortality, revolving life,
 And greatness still revolving ; infinite :
 Alternate and revolving ! How benign,
 On its own axis restlessly revolving,
 Of the revolving world's disturbances
 He paused, as if revolving in his soul
Reward. That not for thy reward, unrivall'd Vale !
 Full long endured in hope of just reward,
 Here's what will comfort you. The Saints reward
 you
 Your piety would not miss its due reward ;
 his gratitude may reward us.
 With patience merit the reward of peace,
 But in reward of thy fidelity.
 —But oh ! what transports, what sublime reward,
 Whose just reward is shame.
 In rich reward all suffering ; Balm that tames
 Stilling to be strenuous for the bright reward,
 Chanting for patriot heroes the reward
 Is this her piety's reward ?
 Provoking punishment, to win reward ;
 Meek Catherine had her own reward ;
 And in his hands I saw a high reward ;
 Is still with Innocence its own reward,
 And gathered with one mind a rich reward
 That are their own perfection and reward,
 Pains-taking thoughts, and truth, their dear reward)
 How books mislead us, seeking their reward
 And listening Time reward with sacred praise,
 For what reward !—The moon her monthly round

Upon the borders of the Rhine, and leagued
 Thus would he say, 'the Rhine, that famous stream!
 With Guards and Uhlaus run along the Rhine,
Rhine. Across thy long deep Valley, furious Rhone!
 This Valdo brooks not. On the banks of Rhone
 Swift Rhone! thou wert the wings on which we cut Rhyme. Oh could I put it into rhyme,
 But there is matter for a second rhyme,
 Which in my former rhyme I have rehearsed.
 And all that fetched the flowing rhyme
 Gives to that rapture an accordant Rhyme.
 Shall be thy rightful name, in prose and rhyme!
 Pace between door and window muttering rhyme,
 With copious eulogy in prose or rhyme
Rhymes. Not undeserv'd, of the memorial rhymes
 That half-mad thing of witty rhymes
 He sang those witty rhymes
 The rhymes so homely in attire . . .
 But—though the rhymes were gone that once inscribed
 Parading with a song of taunting rhymes,
Ribaldry. From ribaldry, impety, or wrath
Ribands. What need of clamorous bells, or ribands gay Ribbed. See High-ribbed, Thick-ribbed.

 Wensley's rich Vale and Sedbergh's naked heights.
 Behold me rich in moonies, and attired
 Unknown, unthought of, yet I was most rich—
 Nor wanted we rich pastime of this kind,
 Rich with indigenous produce, open ground
 And gathered with one mind a rich reward
 Five rivers broad and vast, most rich amends,
 Not rich one moment to be poor for ever
 The children now are rich, for the old to-day
 Bedded among rich plumes of tropic birds;
 Yet rich in beauty, beauty that was felt.
 Of rich Clitumnus; and the goat-herd lived
 Of these vagaries, with an eye so rich
 Upon his rich domains, vineyard and tilth,
 And waking thoughts more rich than happiest dreams.
 Not like a temple rich with pomp and gold,
 Rich in true happiness if allowed to be
 That in our best experience he was rich,
 The hardships of that season: many rich
 With unavailing pity. Rich in love
 "For this fair Bride, most rich in gifts of mind,
 How rich in animation and delight,
 Father of heaven and earth! and I am rich,
 Than those resplendent lights, his rich bequest;
 And rich and poor, and young and old, rejoice
 Yet where is glowing Summer's long rich day,
 A world, his rich discovery! But our Swain, Thoughts, which the rich are free from, came and crossed
 A merry journey, rich in pastime, cheered
 With its richest freight; their number he proclaims;
 Your very poorest rich in peace of thought
 And sent "warm-reeking, rich and sweet,"
 Me rich in many onward-looking thoughts,
 As rich in folly as the past in crime.
Richard. There's Richard Bateman, thought she to herself,
 "Thou, Richard, bear'st thy father's name,
 Stood Richard, Ambrose, Christopher, . . .
 I mark thee, Richard! urgent to equip . . .
Richer. And ripening foliage shone with richer gold:
 You are no richer than when you left me?
 Wish not for a richer streak;
 Flowers—or a richer produce (did it suit . . .
 The gilded turf arrays in richer green . . .
 And glowed the sun-gilt groves in richer gold:
 Richer, or worthier of the ground they trod . . .
 With one not richer than myself, I made . . .
 Of these privations, richer in the main!
 Should open while they range the richer fields
Riches. Has left a power of riches; and I say it,
 Are vital,—and that riches are akin
 Whose monstrous riches threatened. So the shaft
 What profit riches? what does youth avail?
Richest. His richest splendour—when his veering gait
 Displayed her richest blossoms among files
 Gleams by the richest jewel unsurpass'd;
 Spring's richest blossoms; and ye may have marked,
Richly. How richly glows the water's breast
 Beautiful in yourselves, and richly graced . . .
 So richly decked in variegated down, . . .

Richly—continued.

Yet richly graced with honours of her own,
Of wedlock richly crowned with Heaven's regard,
The cornice, richly fretted, of grey stone ;
Richly-laden. Whence they, like richly-laden merchants, come
Richmond. As I from Hawes to Richmond did repair,
For I have heard the quire of Richmond hill
Rick. And once, behind a rick of barley,
Rid. The plot to rid themselves, at any cost,
Ye who are longing to be rid
To rid the world of nuisances ; ye proud,
Was busier with his task—to rid, to plant,
Rid of a vexing and a heavy load,
From this curst Pharaoh-plague to rid the land ?
Ridden. The Knight had ridden down from Wensley Moor
Riddle. We've solved the riddle—Miscreant ! Do you
And there's a riddle to be guessed,
Dark as a riddle, prove a favourite theme ;
Ride. The spirit of vengeance seemed to ride the air.
And there will safely ride when we are gone ;
On which her Idiot Boy must ride,
The horsemen-travellers ride,
When Jesus humbly deigned to ride,
Come boats and ships that safely ride,
Does yet the unheard-of vessel ride the wave ?
And to the hattle ride.
All horsed and harnessed with him to ride —
And through this street who list might ride and wend ;
And on his purpose heat so fast to ride,
Yonder I saw her to her Father ride,
Oh give, great God, to Freedom's waves to ride
To ride the ring, or toss the beamy lance ;
After the perils of his moonlight ride,
Or ride at anchor in her sounds and bays ;
Rides. He rides over the water, and over the snow,
Sweeps his harp, the Master rides ;
Rides forth, an armed man, and huris a spear
Behind her hill the Moon, all crimson, rides,
Rides high ; then all the upper air they fill
Rides to and fro : I know them and their ways.
Rideth. Forth from the spot he rideth up and down,
Ridge. Like an untended watch-fire, on the ridge
Half grey, half shagged with ivy to its ridge ;
That I may see him. On a ridge of rocks
Risen from his seat, beside the snow-white ridge
Beneath yon ridge, the last of those three graves ?
Forth from a jutting ridge, around whose base
Mount to the ridge of Nathdale Fell ;
" High on a mountain's highest ridge,
Ridge, and gulf, and distant ocean
At the spectator's feet.—Yon azure ridge,
Sweeps now along this elevated ridge ;
It found no barrier on the ridge
Arch that here rests upon the granite ridge
O'er which his Fathers urged, to ridge and steep
Beside the ridge of a grassy grave
Above the loftiest ridge or mound
Soft as a cloud is yon blue Ridge—the Mere
Of some smooth ridge, whose brink precipitous
And mountain-tops, a harrea ridge we scale ;
Beneath yon eastern ridge, the craggy bound,
While on the perilous ridge I hung alone,
Upon the summit of a craggy ridge
Was crossed, a hare ridge clomb, upon whose top
And crept along a ridge of fractured wall,
From a bare ridge we also first beheld
In silent beauty on the naked ridge
Upon smooth Quantock's airy ridge we roved
Was one small opening, where a heath-clad ridge
Till, chancing on that lofty-ridge to pass
Of that brown ridge, sole outlet of the vale
Ridge rising gently by the side of ridge,
And from her grave.—Behold—upon that ridge,
The ridge itself may sink into the breast
In cyphers on Helvellyn's highest ridge,
Crams through the arch, and bellies o'er the ridge ?
Ridges. Tip their smooth ridges with a softer ray ;
Which a thousand ridges yield
The ridges of grim war ; and at their head
Yon hazy ridges to their eyes
Of all her peaks and ridges. What he draws
Varying her crowded peaks and ridges blue ;
No ridges there appeared of clear black mould,
From mountain ridges peeping as they passed
Ridicule. Keep ridicule, the majesty proclaims
Objects of sport, and ridicule, and scorn,
Not unamused.—But ridicule demands
Who panned, to ridicule confiding faith,
Ridiculous. Of the ridiculous ; not blind is he Riding. Less fair is summer riding high
While riding near her home one stormy night
Riding-coat. That day he wore a riding-coat,
Ridley. See Latimer and Ridley in the night
Rife. Watchwords of Party, on all tongues are rife ;
Condemn'd, in mists and tempests ever rife,

Rife—continued.

Were rife about him as the songs of birds
Rifled. Lady ! I rifled a Parnassian Cave
Rifle-gun's. Loud was the rifle-gun's report—
Rifles. That rifles blossoms on a tree,
Rift. All meek and silent, save that through a rift—
Rifted. Cowering beside her rifted cell,
To dwell these rifted rocks between,
Enfolds her ?—is a rifted tomb
Or from a rifted crag or ivy tod
Of vagrant poverty ; from rifted barns
Right's. On Right's silent brow.
Right. You have guessed right. The trees renew their murmur :
Twelve honest men, plain men, would set us right ;
" She is right willing—strange if she were not !—
Yes, you are right, we need not hunt for motives :
Right in the sates, and with a huge rattle
Right opposite to Dungeon-Ghlyl,
Right towards the lamb she looked ; and from a shady place
Preserve for thee, by individual right,
Of war, had I returned to claim my right ;
Would balance claim with claim, and right with right ?
And sorrow, have confirmed thy native right to reign.
Sweet heaven forefend ! his was a lawful right ;
Yea, his first word of greeting was,—" All right
How turn to left, and how to right
He's at the guide-post—how he turns right ;
His steed and he right well agree ;
And while these right affections play,
Whole Summer-fields are thine by right ;
Some chime of fancy wrong or right ;
Right onward to the Scottish strand
Away they fly to left, to right—
They are happy, for that is their right !
The Horses have worked with right good-will,
The place to Benjamin right well
Right gladly had the horses stirred,
" And now, as fitting is and right,
Of blessed Angels crowned the right.
Rejoiced is Brough, right glad, I deem,
And, if that men report him right,
Intent to trace the ideal path of right
Right at the imperial station's western base,
Ye did not forfeit one dear right,
Presentiments ! they judge not right
Right through the quarry ;—and behold
Right in the middle of the thicket ;
As if to vindicate her beauty's right,
When to the consciousness of right
And seemed to give me spiritual right
" Since, then, the rule of right is plain,
And battled for the Right.
Noth lying right before us ;
No right had he but what he made
Of a just God for liberty and right.
That by our own right hands it must be wrought ;
And daring not to feel the majesty of right !
Fixed as a star : such glory is thy right.
Of virtuous hope, of liberty, and right,
Of martyrdom, and fortitude, and right.
Ne'er saw a race who held, hy right of birth,
Upon the future advocates of right ;
Of right and wrong, of weal and woe,
On Sarnen's Mount, there judge of fit and right,
And prospect right below of deep caves shaped
In Percy's and in Neville's right,
I, by the right of eldest horn,
For holy Church, and the People's right ! "
Was on his right, from that guardian hand
And find, find anywhere, a right
To o'ershadow by no native right
He only judges right who weighs, compares,
And Heaven will crown the right."—The mitred Sire
To trace right courses for the stubborn blind,
Furrowing its way right onward. The most rude,
And I for five centuries right gladly would he
And at the word right gladly he
A rosy Man, right plump to see ?
Matter wherein right voluine I am,
Doth seldom on a right foundation rest,
Of right, press right on ; or gently wind,
Of right affections climbing or descending
Will not be found. Her right hand, as it lies
Right gladly answering signals we displayed,
But most the Bard is true to inborn right,
Who of right had held the Lordship
So were both right well content :
He is come to claim his right ;
Right glad was he when he beheld her :
—There, though by right the excelling Painter sleep
They pruned themselves, and made themselves right gay.
And that was right upon a tree fast by,
Methought I wist right well what these birds meant,

Right—continued.

And, God of Love, that can right well and may,
And now I pray you all to do me right
And they right forth to Cressid's Palace went ;
I am right sorry Troilus will die :
And that the sun did take his course not right,
Where gold determines between right and wrong.
This to the dead by sacred right belongs ;
Yea, appertained by a peculiar right
Right underneath, the Colledge kitchens made
To wilful alienation from the right,
The head turns round and cannot right itself ;
To see again, was one by ancient right
Right to a rough stream's edge, and there broke off ;
Paid to the object by prescriptive right.
And continence of mind, and sense of right,
Arbiter undisturbed of right and wrong,
That nothing hath a natural right to last
Humanity and right, that Robespierre,
Yea, could not but be right, because we saw
To turn all judgments out of their right course ;
As if they had within some lurking right
That time was ready to set all things right,
With impulse, motive, right and wrong, the ground
Upon my right hand couched a single sheep,
And image of right reason ; that matures
My sense of excellence—of right and wrong :
Never did I, in quest of right and wrong,
Honour and shame, looking to right and left,
Right in the midst, where interspace appeared
Right at the foot of that moist precipice, Established seemingly a right to hold
Right to expect his vigorous decline,
By right of birth ; within whose spotless breast
—Right toward the sacred Edifice his steps
Of common right or interest in the end ;
This sacred right, the Hsping babe proclaims
—This sacred right is fruitlessly announced,
Of the still evening. Right across the lake
Right before the Farmer's door
Right good ale he bowses ;
Of ocean, press right on, or gently wind,
Critics, right honourable Bard, decree
And Fairfield's highest summit, on the right
Right in the middle of the roaring stream.
Right gladly would I lie awake
Good honest souls !—if right my judgment lies

Righteous. And therefore leave thee to a righteous judgment.
Upon Heaven's righteous judgment, did become
All neighbouring countries through his righteous sway :
That this great Servant of a righteous cause
Of righteous Vengeance side by side appear,
And for Thy righteous purpose they prevail ;
Have chased far off by righteous victory
If thou hast fallen, and righteous Heaven restore
To righteous Gods when man has ceased to feel,
Exclaimed he : " righteous Heaven,
For righteous triumphs are the base
The city of Timoleon ! Righteous Heaven !
" That righteous cause (such power hath freedom)
bound,
To see the moment, when the righteous cause
Cause should recur, which righteous Heaven avert !
And fear of him who is a righteous judge ;
With righteous Joshua ; nor appeared in arms
Righteously. Yet trained to judgments righteously severe,
Righteousness. The towers of righteousness ;
To Christ, the Sun of righteousness, espoused,
Works not the righteousness of God ? Oh bend,
Of righteousness, of sins forgiven,
March firmly towards righteousness and peace."—
Fallacious, or shall righteousness obtain Rightful. Corbonian's first-born son, your rightful king restored !
Where sits in state our rightful Lord,
The heroes bless him, him their rightful son.
In vain who, for a rightful cause, give breath
Shall be thy rightful name, in prose and rhyme !
Save He who came as rightful Heir
Firm Independence, Bounty's rightful sire ;
With a due reverence on earth's rightful lord,
And rightful government subverted, found
Rightfully. Have rightfully been laid at last
Taught us how rightfully a nation shone
Rightfully borne ; for Nature gives thee flowers
Rightlier. Or were ye rightlier hailed, when first mine eyes
Rightly. Nor seldom, if I rightly guess, while Thou,
Which only Poets know ;—twas rightly said ;
And, therefore, was it rightly said
Sweet Nymph, O rightly of the mountains named !
And one brief day is rightly set apart
And why shouldst thou ?—If rightly trained and bred,
As one who rightly taught how zeal should burn,
Awaits you then, if they were rightly taught .

So different, may rightly be compared),
All grateful, if rightly understood.
Of hopeful nature. Rightly it is said
If rightly we observe and justly weigh)
Rights. —Well taught by that to feel his rights, prepared
Where none but those who trampled on my rights
Of his own rights restored, his gratitude
Whose long-suspended rights are now on the eve
Urge her powers their rights to shield.
Upon the rights of visual sense
For natural rights, a mockery and a shame ;
And having rights in all that we behold.
To have my ends, maintain my rights,
Then rents and factors, rights of chase,
True Power doth grow on ; and her rights are these.
In hideous usages, and rights accursed,
Nor covets legal rights in lands and towers.
Of power that perishes, and rights that fade.
" Rights have you, and may well be bold :
Such rights did feeble nature claim ;
The sons who for thy civil rights have bled !
To sound the crystal depth of maiden rights ;
Ye shadowy Beings, that have rights and claims
Rights to compare and duties to discern !
Rights equal, laws with cheerfulness obeyed,
Be one fixed mind for all ; thy rights approve
Of all who for her rights watched, toiled and bled.
They urge, " have interwoven claims and rights
The social rights of man breathe purer air ;
That all the seasons shared with equal rights ;—
By reverence for the rights of all mankind.
Pain's wild rebellious burst proclaims her rights aloud.
That I should here assert their rights, attest
Against all systems built on abstract rights,
Of natural rights and civil ; and to acts
As best, the government of equal rights
Of ancient loyalty, and chartered rights,
When Reason seemed the most to assert her rights
Gives rights to error ; and aware, no less,
Of sex and age, and heaven-descended rights,
Their rights acknowledging he felt for all.
And her discernment ; not alone in rights,
And he in part compensated. For rights,
That are not lofty as her rights ; aspiring,
Rights that transcend the loftiest heritage
Had earned for him sure welcome, and the rights
Of rights to him ; but he remained well pleased,
And the Lorn's OAK—would plead their several rights
Have fought and perished for Helvetia's rights—
Its rights and virtues—by that Deity
Yea, to avenge her violated rights.
Her equal rights, her churches and her schools—
And He—to whom all tongues resigned their rights
To vindicate the ideal rights
Rigid. The rigid features of a transient smile,
Not she whose rigid precepts trained the boy
Rigorous. Though stern and rigorous, melancholy !
Vigils, and fastings rigorous as long ;
Those Unconforming ; whom one rigorous day
Make rigorous inquisition, the report
A fervent love of rigorous discipline.—
A rigorous student. What a stormy course
Rigours. Join to the rigours of the sires of Rome
Rill. See Gold-rill, Mountain-rill.
Then, while I wandered where the huddling rill
While thick above the rill the branches close,
In foamy breaks the rill, with merry song,
" Roll back, sweet Rill ! back to thy mountain-
bounds,
Be anything, sweet Rill, but that which thou art now.
My thirst at every rill can slake,
Save a little neighbouring rill,
Can drink its nurture from the scantiest rill :
Save from the trickling household rill ;
There is a little unpretending Rill
Lingers beside that Rill, in vision clear.
Save in this Rill that took from blood the name
Starts from a dizzy steep the undaunted Rill
The struggling Rill insensibly is grown
And Tiber, and each brook and rill
Shrink from thy name, pure Rill, with displeased ears.
In vain, upon the growing Rill may gaze.
Rains, that make each rill a torrent,
—Then Quiet led me up the huddling rill,
—Sweet rill, farewell ! To-morrow's noon again,
Danc'd, to the murmuring rill on Lomond's wave,
Greta, or Derwent, or some nameless rill,
That gathers up each petty straggling rill
A humming bee—a little tinkling rill—
And saw the water, that composed this rill,
His thirst from rill or gushing fount, and thanked Busy in that enclosure ; while the rill, .

Rills. See Mountain-rills.

Or wild Aosta lulled by Alpine rills,
Beside the habbling rills;
Between two sister moorland rills
Crag, woodlands, waterfalls, and rills;
His daily teachers had been woods and rills,
And drinks up all the pretty rills
Borne by the Muse from rills in shepherds' ears
On airy upland, and by forest rills,
From Were, and all the little rills
And by the steaming rills
And gurgling rills, assist her in the work

By rills that tumble down the woody steeps,
The little rills, and waters numberless,
Rim. A blue rim borders all the lake's still brink;
Rime. The longest date do melt like frosty rime,
Rimless. The other wore a rimless crown
Rimmed. See Silver-rimmed, White-rimmed.
Rimy. And, rimy without speck, extend the plains:
Powdered like rimy trees, when frost is keen.

Ring. These, by the pale-hine rocks that ceaseless ring,

The druid-stones a brightened ring unfold;
Must bid the tocsin ring from tower to tower —
A hollow ring; they say it is knee-deep —
And ring a sharp 'larum;—but, if you should look,
Girt round with a bare ring of mossy wall,
To-night the church-tower bells will ring
For thee a funeral bell shall ring,
And far and wide the fame thereof did ring.
Our fields rejoice, our mountains ring,
How tunefully the forests ring!
"The dragon's wing, the magic ring,
Would have pulled up an iron ring;
Perhaps a ring of shining fairies?
Or what she tells within the chosen ring;
Perhaps are seated in domestic ring;
And thou, too, mingle in the ring!
But the ground lay within that ring
Looks on delighted—meet in festal ring,
The spangled turf, and neighbouring thickets ring
The bells ring loud with gladsome power;
While stand the people in a ring,
Like those eight Sons—who, in a ring,
That used to spread its boughs, and ring
As Menai's foam; and toward the mystic ring
Sceptre and mantle, sword and ring, laid down
Satellites burning in a lucid ring
With the symbolic ring, and willing hands
'Mid fruitful fields that ring with jocund toil,
By love untaught to ring,
So loud, that with his voice the place did ring.
O ring of which the ruby now is lost,
Two hundred times around the ring of heaven,
To ride the ring, or toss the beamy lance;
Made all the mountains ring. But, ere nightfall,
Found everywhere, but chiefly in the ring
We rose at signal given, and formed a ring
To drive their prey enclosed within a ring
Yet ring with all their voices, or before
Merrily seated in a ring, partook

Ringling. From ringing team apart and grating wain—

Is ringing it—'twould stop a Saint in prayer,
With clouds and sky about thee ringling,
To tend their silent boats and ringing wains,
—The whistling swain that plods his ringing way
To ringing team unknown and grating wain,
With hollow ringing ears and darkening gaze,
While fill each pause the ringing woods of morn.
In every grove were ringing, 'War shall cease;
Came at that moment, ringing noisily.

Ringlets. For us your yellow ringlets comb,
But the ringlets of that head

Ringlet-tossing. Lip-dewiog soog, and ringlet-tossing dance;

Rings. Feeding 'mid purple heath, "green rings," and broom;
Again with his shrill voice the mountain rings,
Involve their serpent-necks in changeful rings,
It rings, as if a human hand were there
The valley rings with mirth and joy;
O Thou, through whom the temple rings with praises,

Upon the Beast the sapling rings;
This cry—that rings along the wood,
The great events with which old story rings
Sees long-drawn files, concentric rings
And their necks play, involved in rings,
The time is come that rings the knell
A thousand, thousand rings of light
Till the whole City rings like one vast quire.
His drowsy rings. Look forth!—that Stream
behold,

And if the harp pleased his gay youth, it rings
Whose echo rings through Scotland to this hour!

Riot. And, after their high-minded riot,

Rioted. We sauntered, played, or rioted; we talked

Rioters. And in their fashion very rioters,

Rioting. "Woe to you, Prelates! rioting in ease

Riots. Mobs, riots, or rejoicings? From these sights

Ripe. Waves the ripe harvest in the autumnal gale;

Lurking berries, ripe and red,

With all its mealy clusters of ripe nuts,

For youthful faults ripe virtues shall atone;

All bright with berries ripe and red,

Ripe for the hand, or under a thick shade

Was ripe to send its thousands forth,

The time is ripe. With festive din

(Ripe men, or blooming in life's spring)

Is red as a ripe cherry.

The season's sprinklings of ripe strawberry fruit.

O'er ripe fruit, seasonably gathered,

Of red ripe currants; gift by which he strove,

Like a ripe date which in the desert falls

Her lavish pomp, and ripe magnificence?

And the ripe corn before his sickle fell

Ripe for the block that might have spared his son,

Ripen. There berries ripen, flowerets bloom;

Ripened. Suspicion ripened into dread;

A world of pain, ripened a thousand hopes,

Did Dion hold with Plato; ripened thus

Had ripened into faith, and faith become

Ripeness. Its ripeness to the feeding gaze;

Ripening. And ripening foliage shone with richer gold.

With ripening harvest prodigally fair,

Ripening in perfect innocence.

The ripening corn beneath it. As mine eyes

And ripening fruits and forest leaves

Ripens. And mock me with a sky that ripens not

Riper. For domination at some ripier day

That mellow years will bring a ripier mind

And stung with injury, at this ripier day

How precious when in ripier days I learned

This he remembered in his ripier age

In youth, and sanctioned by the ripier mind,

Rippled. Fell where the blue flood rippled into white;

Rippling. Tremble on dancing waves and rippling-

streams

With darkness, and before a rippling breeze

Eludes perception, not by rippling air

Rise. Where we, my Friend, to happy days shall rise,

The rocks rise naked as a wall, or stretch

Sink with his servile hands, to rise no more!

Rise various wreaths that into one unite

Without the strength to rise. Well, well, he lives,

Do spread, and sink, and rise;

Thus rise and thus descend,—

That rose, and now forgets to rise,

Did Susan rise up from her bed,

When the wings of genius rise,

Rise up, and grow to wondrous height.

Rise low, begin to rise and spread;

The stream will not flow, and the hill will not rise,

Did incense-hearing altars rise,

Shall rise, and breathe again;

Up from their native ground they rise

Full suddenly the Ass doth rise!

Yet round our sea-girt shore they rise in crowds:

Rise, then, ye votive Towers! and catch a gleam

Rise from the dead, erewhile the Cottage-dame

Rise, GILLIES, rise: the gales of youth shall bear

Rise into life and in thy train appear:

Rise, tardy Sun! and let the Songster prove

That, under hills which rise like towers,

Though fallen thyself, never to rise again,

Never to rise again—the work is done,

Go back, and see the Tower of Babel rise

Europe breaks forth; then, Shepherds! shall ye rise

And let imperishable Columns rise

Knows that the source is nobler whence doth rise

That, shaped like old monastic turrets, rise

Thou sacred Pile! whose turrets rise

Shouts rise, and storms of sound from lifted

trumpets blow!

Forth from their coverts; slighted objects rise

Rise, and to-morrow greet magnificent Rome.

Rise as he may, his grandeur scorns the test

And some unbidden tears that rise

And thou hast also tempted here to rise,

As golden locks of birch, that rise and fall

Yet undelivered, rise with sure ascent

"O Father! rise not in this fray—"

To rise, and prove their innocence.—

"Rise, noble Earls, put forth your might

Unbent, which rather seemed to rise,

The delegates of Heaven we rise,

That he is unprepared to rise,

Could see the Tower of Bolto rise.

That Hill, whose flowery platform seems to rise

Rise!—they have risen: of brave Aneurin ask

Justice and peace—hold faith! yet also rise

Rise—continued.

Where'er they rise, the sylvan waste retires,
Your ministry; that, as ye rise and take
The star of Liberty to rise. Nor yet
That, if the Sufferer rise from his sick-bed,
In rival haste, the wished-for Temples rise!

They rise, or rest the weary head,
So may it set in peace, to rise again
And round this earthly tomb let roses rise,
He loved the sun, but if it rise
Alas, how feebly! but our feelings rise

From earth the dust of morning, slow to rise;
Rise from that posture!—and in concert move
All act of iniquity whence we rise,
A golden palace rose, or seemed to rise,
The sun rise up, from distant climes returned

And I must rise to industry;
Rocky or green, that do like islands rise

Rison. See Uprisen.

Risen from his seat, beside the snow-white ridge
But He is risen, a later star of dawn,
Have risen from out the deep
Thy passive beauty—parallels have risen,
No moon hath risen her light to lead;

And hirsch-trees risen in silver colonnade.
Rise!—they have risen: of brave Aneurin ask
And has a Champion risen in arms to try
Since risen from ocean, ocean to defy,

Green ivy risen from out the cheerful earth
Far earlier, ere one smoke-wreath had risen
Risen on mid noon; blest with the presence,
Friend!

With courage, and new hope risen on our toil.
All shall he his: and he whose soul hath risen
More firmly; and a comfort now hath risen
Travelling at steadier pace than ours, had risen
I yet had risen too late to interchange.

Rises. Each rises as the other falls: and first,
That rises up like smoke.

That rises like a column from the vale,
The Woman rises from the ground—
Who rises on the banks of Seine,
Not with a grief that, like a vapour, rises
That rises here, and humbly spread, the sail;

Rising. Salute with gladsome note the rising moon,
"Through tears the rising sun I oft have viewed,
His voice with indignation rising high

Rising—continued.

Sinking, rising, on they go,
That often, rising from his bed at night,
Of hasty anger, rising in the eclipse
Cried Betty, rising from the bed,
Their cottage on a plot of rising ground
Rising to no ambitious height; yet both,
When the rising sun he painted,
Rising like an exhalation,
But now the sun is rising calm and bright;
" With sacrifice before the rising morn
Have sight of Proteus rising from the sea;
The rising sun, and on the plains descend;
Even as I speak the rising Sun's first smile
And touch from rising suns in vain
Is round the rising sun diffused,
And, rising from those lofty groves,
Are cheerful as the rising sun in May.
And, rising to repel or to subdue,
Rising like water from the soil, to find
Immortal Fabrics, rising to the sound
The rising pang to smother.
Of rising ground, yon heathy spot!
To quell the RISING OF THE NORTH;
The shepherd, bent on rising with the sun,
Not like the rising sun's impatient glow
Rising from what may once have been a lady's bower;

With grateful thoughts, doth now thy rising hail
—Then Canute, rising from the invaded throne,
Swift as the rising sun his beams extends Storms make in rising, valued in the moon
Lord! since his rising in the East,
While rising, like the ocean-tide,
Rising or setting, let the light at least
When rising from the rock at will,
While in sweet cadence rising small and still
The mountain streams their rising song suspend;
Salute with boding note the rising moon,
And rising, by the moon of passion sway'd,
Sent welcome notice of the rising moon,
Full-formed, like Venus rising from the sea;
Of that sharp rising, glittered to the moon
Rising or setting, would he stand alone
In halmy spring-time full of rising flowers
From that low bench, rising instinctively
Of accident. But when the rising sun
Rising behind a thick and lofty grove,
Upon a rising ground a grey church-tower,
Ridge rising gently by the side of ridge,
Thus, duties rising out of good possess
A Grecian temple rising from the Deep."
Betray their occupation, rising up,

Risings.

And banked with woody risings; but the Plain
Risk. Life to risk by sea and land,
From risk and hardship, inwardly retrace
Or the pellucid lake." "Small risk" said I,

Rite. In prayer, yet blending with that solemn rite
In due observance of an ancient rite,
Hadst heard this never-failing rite,
Rite to perform, or boon to ask?
Portending ruin to each baleful rite
In the new Rite—the pledge of sanctity,
For prayer in stillness, or the chanted rite;
From Rite and Ordinance abused they fled
For Rite and Ordinance, Piety is led
Even to this Rite? For thus She kneelt, and ere
No longer: ye, whom to the saving rite
Shun not this Rite, neglected, ye abandoned,
Blest Rite for him who hears in faith, "I know
Through Alpine vapours. Such appalling rite
Strains suitable to both.—Such holy rite,
Though mute the song—to trace the rite
Reluctant call it was; the rite delayed;
Then, to her Patron Saint a previous rite
With hymns resounded, and the chanted rite:
The Spirit ended his mysterious rite,
And savage Nature humbly joins the rite,
Who deigns to grace our festal rite,
Administration of the holy rite,

Rites.

Of holy rites chanted in measured round?
He sees the bending multitude, He hears the choral
rites,
On tables set, as if for rites divine:—
And solemn rites and awful forms
Be it not unordained that solemn rites,
Erewhile, with rites impure.
Rites such as yet Persepolis presents
Of Christian rites, in Christian ground to lay her,
New rites ordaining when the old are wrecked,
Though Christian rites be wanting! From what bank
The rites of ancient piety
Their holy rites with vocal gratitude:
Rites that console the Spirit, under grief
Ditches are graves—funereal rites denied;
From rites that trample upon soul and sense,
Less scanty measure of those graceful rites

Amid reposing knights by a river side
To people the steep rocks and river banks,
Of feudal ward, the bright blue river passed
"This portion of the river of my mind
To see the river flow with ampler range
Like a vast river, stretching in the sun,
I sauntered, like a river murmuring
Weep, and the river sides are all forlorn.
Inspired;—that river and those mouldering towers
The rapid river flowing without noise,
And by the river side. That very day,
Into a lordly river, broad and deep,
The River proudly bridged; the dizzy top
Even as a river,—partly (it might seem)
On a strong river holdly hath been launched;
A river of Blood, and preached that nothing else
—'Take, running river, take these locks of mine—
A mightier river, winds from realm to realm;

Hills quaked, the rivers backward ran;
Of the deep rivers, and the lonely streams,
Murmuring; the fall of rivers, winds and seas,
While flowing rivers yield a blameless sport,
Their courses, like two new-horn rivers, they
And rivers large and strong:
Cliffs, fountains, rivers, seasons, times—
Where mightiest rivers into powerless sleep
Rocks, rivers, and smooth lakes more clear than glass
And fresh with rivers, well did it become
Praised be the Rivers, from their mountain springs
Or mountain rivers, where they creep
Of which the rivers in their secret springs,
Their courses, like two new-horn rivers, they
Where murmuring rivers join the song of ev'n;
That one, the fairest of all rivers, loved
Of rivers, woods, and fields. The passion yet
With those crystalline rivers, solemn heights,
By the shy rivers, and the pelican
Of peace and self-command. Of rivers, fields,
Five rivers broad and vast, made rich amends,
Rivers and fertile plains, and sounding shores,—
Her rivers populous with gliding life;
Ask of the channelled rivers if they held
River-side. ALL by the moonlight river-side
The Ass is by the river-side,
Rivet. To rivet my affections; nor did now
Rivets. Of him whom passion rivets to the spot,
Of him whom passion rivets to the plain,
Riv'let's. See Rivulet's.
Rivulet. No sparkling rivulet spread the verdant herb?
A cart and horse beside the rivulet stood;
Was swoln into a noisy rivulet,
The humblest rivulet will take
The Rivulet, delighting in its strength,
Upon a fretful rivulet, now above,
As by the rivulet sparkling where it runs,
The hasty rivulet where it lay becalmed
Rivulet's. Silent the hedge or steamy rivulet's bed,
—She stops—is fastened to that rivulet's side;
A spot, that angles at the riv'let's feet,
Silent the hedge or steaming rivulet's bed,
Rivulets. 'Mid lawns and shades by breezy rivulets fanned.
Like rivulets in May?
Where rivulets dance their wayward round,
Yet is it one that other rivulets bear
Here lawns and shades by breezy rivulets fann'd,
Road. See Mountain-road.
Through passes yet unreach'd, a brighter road.
But now the sun has gained his western road,
Mounts from the road, and spreads its moving
shroud;
Winding from side to side up the steep road;
Where oaks o'erhang the road the radiance shoots
Or taugh their limbs along the dusty road
Where the brook hrawls along the public road
By wisdom, moralise his pensive road.
Starts, like a horse, beside the glaring road—

Road—continued.

Winds neither road nor path for foot to tread :
 They looked and saw a lengthening road, and wain
 They saw and heard, and, winding with the road
 Across the pebbly road a little rannel strayed.
 The jolting road and morning air severe,
 Trotting along along the beaten road,
 A cave that opened to the road presented
 The hoisterous carman, in the miry road,
 That smile hath life in it! This road is perilous;
 (For many years ago I passed this road)
 That overhug the road: he there stopped short,
 A Woman on the road I met,
 And to the road she turns her ears,
 Appears along the moonlight road;
 And she can see a mile of road:
 That hobbles up the steep rough road?
 —Ill suits the road with one in haste; but we
 There was no road, nor any woodman's path;
 Pathway, and lane, and public road, were clogged
 The splinters took another road—
 The road we travel, steep, and rough;
 The road is black before his eyes,
 The rain rushed down—the road was hattered,
 Descends along the sloping road;
 His eyes take pleasure in the road
 Thou hast been loitering on the road!
 Where the road it fringes, sweet,
 Where, save the rugged road, we find
 Aspiring Road! that lov'st to hide
 Will to the road return!
 A length of green and open road—
 In the dead earth beneath the road,
 Some lying fast at anchor in the road,
 By Thee to guide thy Pupils on the road
 These pathways, yon far-stretching road!
 This little bay; a quiet road
 Then hurries back the road it came—
 No master spirit, no determined road;
 The Arabian desert shapes a willing road
 On road or path, or at the door
 While each pursues his several road,
 O'er path and road, and plain and dell,
 At this he from the beaten road
 Mercy and Love have met thee on thy road,
 To keep this new and questionable road?
 And if some traveller, weary of his road,
 Remote from public road or dwelling,
 Good aims lie down, and perish in the road
 She plants well-measured terrors in the road
 Enough—before us lay a painful road,
 Turn from a spot where neither sheltered road
 Up many a sharply-twining road and down,

Ab, Beaumont! when an opening in the road

And to the fields his road would take;
 Who lead their horses down the steep rough road
 She turns her wheel, if on the road she sees
 Impressed on the white road,—in the same line,
 That peck along the road, regard him not.
 Upon this lonely road;
 Return Delights! with whom my road begun,
 Where winds the road along the secret bay;
 To teach their limbs along the burning road;
 Where the brook brawls along the painful road,
 Who plods o'er hills and vales his road forlorn,
 Her road elms rustling thin above my head,
 Starts like a horse beside the flashing road;
 By road or pathway, or through trackless field,
 The road that pointed toward the chosen Vale.
 The road lies plain before me,—'tis a theme
 Advancing, we espied upon the road,
 Saluted the chance comer on the road,
 Upon the road, some busy at their work,
 Sometimes embodied on a public road,
 Shown by a sudden turning of the road,
 All accidents, and to the very road
 Along the Simplon's steep and rugged road,
 Crossing the unbridged stream, that road we took,
 We must descend, and there should find the road,
 And, with the half-shaped road which we had missed,
 Entered a narrow chasm. The brook and road
 The plain straight road, for one no better chosen
 When the world travels in a beaten road,
 That did but cross a lonely road, and now
 Faltering and faint, and ignorant of the road:
 Thither, uncertain on which road to fix
 And took my rounds along this road again
 And walked with me along the miry road,
 That bars the traveller's road, she often stood,
 Have parted hence; and still that length of road,
 And walked along my road in happiness.
 Now meeting on his road an armed knight,
 Its course of suffering in the public road,
 Invite us; shall we quit our road, and join
 A mute procession on the houseless road;
 For you, assuredly, a hopeful road
 Following the rugged road, by sledge or wheel

Road—continued.

Whence the hare road descended rapidly
 Dark on my road the autumnal evening fell,
 —The road is dim, the current unperceived,
 By length of road that from yon mountain's base
 The which the road is hidden, also hides
 From frightful storms into a quiet road.
 Road-elms. Her files of road-elms, high above my head
 Road's. Where the road's watery surface, to the top Roads. Where'er the dreary roads their hare white lines extend.
 "The roads I paced, I loitered through the fields;
 Met in the roads, would bless us; little children,
 Crossing our roads at every hundred steps,
 Weep in the public roads, alone.
 Our roads, through many a long year's space,
 But we, by different roads, at length have gained
 For pomp, or love. Oft, in the public roads,
 And widow-garlands. On the public roads,
 With their thin umbrage, on the stately roads
 I triumphed. Meantime, day by day, the roads
 That on the line of each of those two roads
 To you, ye pathways, and ye lonely roads;
 Without reserve to them, the lonely roads
 Trackless and smooth, or paced the bare white roads
 But still he loved to pace the public roads
 Hath hee the fields, the roads, and rural lanes,
 Beside our roads and pathways, though, thank Heaven!
 Rough and forbidding were the choicest roads
 Have vanished—swallowed up by stately roads
 Road-slide. Repairs to a road-side;
 Turas with less noisy wheels to the road-side,
 Road. Yet not unrecompensed the man shall roam,
 Left vacant for the day, I loved to roam.
 For me—farthest from earthly port to roam
 A blessed day for thee! then whither wouldst thou roam?
 Friendships that will not break, and love that cannot roam
 Out of our Valley's limits did he roam:
 Yet o'er the moorland will she roam
 And hide my head where wild beasts roam.
 He with his Pony now doth roam
 For me, why should I wish to roam?
 Cried they, "Your Father loves to roam:
 Take fight, and thou art free to roam,
 Type of the wise who soar, but never roam;
 Whole ages if I here should roam,
 Sure never man like him did roam!
 These cleave to it; from these it cannot roam,
 If we, who thus together roam
 Where'er we roam—along the brink
 While in far-distant lands we roam,
 Their love-songs; but, where'er my feet might roam,
 Else let the dastard backward wend, and roam,
 (Couched in their den) with those that roam at large
 Not sedentary all; there are who roam
 Or through the aisles of Westminster to roam;
 While in Judea Fancy loves to roam,
 Neither coked by the rich nor the needy they
 roam;
 Direst of savage beasts, would roam in fear,
 Long may ye roam these hermit waves that sleep,
 By lonely silent cottage-doors to roam,
 'Tis his with fearless step at large to roam
 To pay the filial debt, for food to roam,
 To roam from heaven to heaven, from pole to pole,
 Did wife and husband roam;
 But, like a thirsty wind, to roam about
 The shepherd road the hills. With new delight,
 When but a half-hour's roam through such a place
 Defenceless as a wood where tigers roam.
 Here may I roam at large;—my business is,
 To roam at large among unpeopled glens
 Their way before them—that a joy to roam Roamed. Was heard, or woodcocks roamed the moonlight hill.
 Yes, as I roamed where Loiret's waters glide
 I roamed in the confusion of my heart,
 Had roamed about, with vagrant bands
 From pond to pond he roamed, from moor to moor;
 Once on those steeps I roamed at large, and have
 Hath roamed in trouble and in grief.
 They roamed through Wastes where now the tented
 Arabs dwell.
 Or the first woodcocks roam'd the moonlight hills.
 I was the Dreamer, they the Dream; I roamed
 This was not wanting. Carelessly I roamed
 Where'er I roamed, were speaking monuments.
 I roamed from hill to hill, from rock to rock,
 I roamed, in daily presence of this scene,
 Three summer days I roamed) where'er the Plain
 In London chiefly harboured, whence I roamed,
 In youth I roamed, on youthful pleasures bent;
 Than a soldier among soldiers—lived and roamed

Roaming. Roaming the illimitable waters round ;
 Roaming, I carried with me the same heart :
 Roaming at large, to observe, and not to feel :
 I bent my way ; and, roaming far and wide,
 Roaming, or resting under grateful shade . . .

Roams. The half-seen form of Twilight roams astray ; . . .

Roar. Where Derwent rests, and listens to the roar
 The Demon of the snow, with angry roar
 Innumerable streams with roar profound.
 When they are angry, roar like lions for their prey.
 Roar down many a craggy steep,
 When, startled by the Sailor's roar,
 Now, coaches and chariots ! roar on like a stream ;
 I heard the woods and distant waters roar ;
 That as they galloped made the echoes roar ;
 (Above the general roar of woods and crags)
 But the winds roar, shaking the rooted trees,
That roar, the prowling lion's Here I am,
 Had heard the Atlantic surges roar
 The wilderness shall bear the lion roar ;
 And when he heard the torrents roar,
 In white-sleeved shirts are playing ; and the roar
 Till the caves roar,—and imbecility
 An empty noise of death the battle's roar,
 Thy green leaves rustle or thy torrents roar.
 Where these troubled waters roar !
 Wheo the stillness of evening hath deepened its roar ;
 Gay June would scorn us. But when bleak winds
 roar
 Soothed by the unseen River's gentle roar.
 The wind with terror while they roar for food.
 "Roar on, and bring him with thy call ;
 Far from the chimney's merry roar,
 Where torrents roar, or hear the tinkling knell

We sojourn stunned by Ocean's ceaseless roar ;
 Staying his silent waves, to hear the roar
 —"Breaking" ascending roar of desert floods,
 Unnumber'd streams with hollow roar profound.
 Swing on th' astounded ear it's dull udding roar :
 Roar, and the rain beat hard ; where I so oft
 Meanwhile the roar continues, till at length,
 Of bolsterous merriment, and music's roar,
 With roar of cannon by a furious host.
 Mounted the roar of waters, torrents, streams
 Amid the roar of torrents, where they send
 A softened roar, or murmur ; and the sound
 Repelled the storm and deadened its loud roar . . .

Roared. Roared in the tempest, was within an ace
 When roar'd the sullen Arve in anger by . . .

Roaring. Alike in whelming snows and roaring waves.
 Roaring with storms beneath night's starless
 gloom ;
 Into deep chasms troubled by roaring streams ;
 One roaring cataract ! a sharp May-storm
 The roaring waterfall she hears,
 The wind was roaring, on his knees
 The wind, the tempest roaring high,
 There was a roaring in the wind all night ;
 With breakers roaring to the gales
 The woods, my Friends, are round you roaring,
 Rocking and roaring like a sea ;
 A grace the sinuous vale and roaring stream
 Nor does that roaring wind deaden his strain
 Bear back the roaring storm—but how subdued
 Upon thy margin, roaring Bran !—
 Like some Nymph-haunted grove beneath the roaring sea . . .

Into rude shape by fire, with roaring blast
 In peace is roaring like the Sea ;
 Her shrill winds roaring round my lonely way ;
 And roaring waters, and in lights and shades
 The mariner who sails the roaring sea
 Innumerable, roaring with one voice !
 A rock with torrents roaring, with the clouds
 With roaring sound, that ceases not to flow,
 Of heart, the sailor fights with roaring seas.
 Orushed ; the roaring waters, and the still—
 And was borne headlong by the roaring flood.
 Right in the middle of the roaring stream . . .

Rears. And like a torrent roars the headstrong gale ;
 While roars the sullen Arve in anger by
 The lion roars and gluts his tawny brood
 When windows flap and chimney roars,
 Roars in thy hearing ; but thy hour of rest
 Of rock that frowns, and stream that roars,
 And angry Ocean roars a vain appeal.
 They came,—and, while the moral tempest roars
 And roars between the hills the torrent gale,
 That roars along the bed of Jewish song,
 Among the clouds, and roars through the ancient woods . . .

Roasted. Say next you love a roasted fowl,
Rob. She has her brave Rob Roy !
 Heaven gave Rob Roy a dauntless heart
 Yet was Rob Roy as wise as brave ;
 A Poet worthy of Rob Roy
 Said generous Rob, "What need of books ?

Rob—continued.
 And Rob was lord below.
 Rob Roy had never lingered here,
 And we our own Rob Roy !
 At sound of Rob Roy's name.
 To rob our Human-nature of just praise
 And rob the people of his daily care,
 Swindle and rob, is no informer there . . .

Robbed. He met a traveller, robbed him, shed his blood ;
 He'd not have robbed the raven of its food.
 Which robbed us of good Benjamin ;—
 Though robbed of many a cherished dream,
 And venial error, robbed of competence,
 Is meditated action ; robbed of this
Robber. Shall it be law to stab the petty robber
 Him, sleeping or awake, the robber spared ;
 A Norman Robber then,
Robberies. I saw them ply their harmless robberies,
Robbery. Should hold a place, as if 'twere robbery,
Robb. If it confined the robe of sovereignty.
 What robe can Gratitude employ
 (Streamed from the west) as with a robe of power :
 Mere Fibula without a robe to clasp ;
 And deigned to wear the robe of flesh we wear,
 Nor pass unprais'd the robe and veil divine,
 Spontaneously to clothe in priestly robe
 Expire ; and nature's pleasant robe of green, . . .

Robed. See Lawn-robbed, White-robbed.
 An eager Novice robed in fluttering gown !
 —How lovely robed in forenoon light and shade,
 Robed instantly in garb of snow-white foam ;

Robert. Ere Robert come again." When to the House
Roberto. Was I, Roberto Dati, and I took
Robert's. Intent to guard St. Robert's cell,
Robes. In robes of azure, fleecy-white, and gold.
 The robes of pictured glass
 Hath stained the robes of civil power with blood,
 With purer robes than those of flesh and blood,
 In robes of dazzling white ;
 "Rich robes are fettered by the moth ;
 For robes with regal purple tinged ; convert Robespierre. Of Maximilian Robespierre," the hand,
 When Robespierre, not ignorant for what mark
 "I, Robespierre, accuse thee !" Well is known
 Humanity and right, that Robespierre,
 Cried, "Robespierre is dead !"—nor was a doubt,
Robin. Brisk Robin seeks a kindlier home :
 Some Robin Good-fellow were there,
 Our little English Robin ;
 What ailed thee, Robin, that thou couldst pursue
 As aught that song records of Robin Hood ;
 A famous man is Robin Hood,
 Poor Robin is yet flowerless ; but how gay
 Poor Robin as a sure and crafty friend,
 Stay, little cheerful Robin ! stay,
 While Robin pecked the crumbs upon his knee
 Of Jack the Giant-killer, Robin Hood,
Robin's. In Robin's bosom, as a chosen cell.
 For the whole house is Robin's cage.
Rob Roy. See Rob and Roy.
Robb. It robs my heart of peace. . . .

Robust. Feeds in the sunshine ; the robust and young,
 Robust as ever rural labour bred." . . .

Rock. See Island-rock.
 Or from high points of rock looked out for fanning
 gales ;
 Dashed o'er the rough rock, lightly leaps along ;
 The Cross, by angels planted on the aerial rock . . .

Lo, where she sits beneath yon shaggy rock,
 There, over rock or sloping pasture creep . . .
 And sometimes, as from rock to rock she bounds,
 Rock to incessant neighings shrill and loud,
 Was hopeless, as if cast on some bare rock ;
 That ragged Dwelling, close beneath a rock
 If you can melt a rock, he is your man ;
 The barren Moor, hangs from a beetling rock
 Why so ? a roofless rock had been a comfort,
 These stifling blasts—God help me ! Better this bare rock,
 By a bare rock, narrow, and white, and bare ;
 Despatch him ! If I pass beneath a rock
 Sometimes he'll hide in the cave of a rock,
 Beneath a rock, upon the grass,
 Hath fallen, and made a bridge of rock :
 It touches on that piece of native rock
 And in the midst is one particular rock
 They found him at the foot of that same rock
 His shepherd's staff ; for on that Pillar of rock
 To-day I fetched him from the rock ;
 To-day I fetched it from the rock . . .
 Rock the cradle of joy, smooth the death-bed of strife . . .

In this continuous glen, where down a rock
 Some uncouth name upon the native rock,
 And, when we came in front of that tall rock . . .

Rock—continued.

The Rock, like something starting from a sleep,
 Beneath this rock, at sunrise, on a calm
 Have called the lovely rock, JOANNA'S ROCK."
 I'll hush thee headlong with the rock
 "Eight weary weeks, through rock and clay,
 In youth from rock to rock I went,
 If to a rock from rains he fly,
 A hundred times, by rock or bower,
 This Rock would be if edged around
 Who loved the little Rock, and set
 To nestle in the rock.
 Chequering the ground—from rock, plant, tree, or tower.
 The Girl, in rock and plain,
 To hunt their fluttering game o'er rock and level
 green.
 The lambs from rock to rock were bounding;
 Of rock or sand reposest, there to sun itself;
 "Like rock or stone, it is o'ergrown,
 Haunted me like a passion: the tall rock,
 Nor hiat of mao; if stone or rock
 A Rock there is whose homely front
 And one coy Primrose to that Rock
 And to the rock the root adheres
 Close clings to earth the living rock,
 And to the Primrose of the Rock
 Of that tall rock, as from a hidden world,
 Perchance as numerous, overpeers the rock
 Sky-ward he looks—to rock and wood—
 Re-echoed by a naked rock,
 Aerial Rock—whose solitary brow
 On the bare rock, or through a leafy bower
 In his first splendour, valley, rock, or hill;
 Thou, on thy rock reclined, though kingdoms melt
 Then, when some rock or hill is overpast,
 Fair hangs the apple frae the rock,
 Of rock that frowns, and stream that roars,
 An Ossian out of mural rock,
 But half their host is buried!—rock on rock
 Firm as a rock in stationary fight;
 On jutting rock, and curved shore,
 Jubilant outcry! rock and glade
 In Fortune's rhetoric. Daughter of the Rock,
 A Saint, the Church's Rock, the mystic Keys
 Yon petty Steep in truth the fearful Rock,
 Of History, stript naked as a rock
 Checked not its rage; unafelt the ground did rock,
 High on the brink of that precipitous rock,
 A bare rock of the Scilly cluster;
 Of Egypt, from a rock conveyed
 The frolic Loves, who, from yon high rock, see
 Dance, like a Bacchanal, from rock to rock,
 To wash the fleece, where haply bands of rock,
 Dishonoured and ruin'd that, by law
 On rock and ruin darkening as we go,—
 Or some aspiring rock, that shrouds
 High-climbing rock, low sunless dale,
 —Why tall of mossy rock or tree,
 Scooped out of living rock, and near a brook
 The elements have heard, and rock and cave replied.
 Leapt from this rock, and but for timely aid
 That cleaves to rock or pillared cave
 Aad, ere we came to Leonard's rock,
 And storms the pillars rock. But we such schools
 As, at his touch, it rocks, or seems to rock;
 If, mixed with what appeared of rock, lawn, wood,
 Under a rock too steep for man to tread,
 Or like the invincible Rock itself that braves,
 Out of the quiet rock the elements
 I saw this Rock, while vernal air
 And naked left this dripping Rock,
 From the rock eternity!
 Less for the love of stream and rock,
 —At length delivered from the rock,
 The Buzzard mounted from the rock
 When rising from the rock at will,
 Dash'd down the rough rock, lightly leaps along;
 By angels planted on the aerial rock.
 Yet, arts are thine that rock th' unsleeping heart,
 And let thy path be hewn out of the Rock,
 The living Rock of God's eternal Word.
 To reap the whirlwind on a Libyan rock.
 Of yellow ragwort; or when rock and hill,
 And half-inch fissures in the slippery rock
 Of native rock, left mid-way in the square
 Alone upon the rock—oh, then, the calm
 Beneath some rock, listening to notes that are
 To every natural form, rock, fruit, or flower,
 And on a rock sate down, to wait for day.
 Had been ensnared by witchcraft. On the rock
 Than he lies down upon some shining rock,
 Stationed alone upon a spiry rock
 A smooth rock wet with constant springs) was seen
 Or palace built by fairies of the rock;
 On some grey rock—its birthplace—so had I
 (Itself like a sea rock) the low remains

Rock—continued.

I roamed from hill to hill, from rock to rock,
 Laden with summer's thickest foliage, rock
 A rock with torrents roaring, with the clouds
 Enclosed between an upright mass of rock
 And fanciful! For where the rock and wall
 Than it appeared when from the beetling rock
 Of a tall rock, their airy citadel—
 A mass of rock, resembling, as it lay
 Diffused adown that barrier of steep rock,
 Of luckless rock or prominent stone, disguised
 Of the monastic brotherhood, upon rock
 From yon huge breast of rock, a voice sent forth
 On new-blown heath; let yon commanding rock
 His notions to this standard; on this rock
 By echo multiplied from rock or cave,
 —So we descend: and winding round a rock
 Backed also by a ledge of rock, whose crest
 From peace like exiles on some barren rock,
 To the bare rock, on frozen Caucasus;
 But He, at whose command the parched rock
 Of the living rock, to be adorned
 To rock the cradle of the slumbering babe:
 Are seen incorporate with the living rock—
 To rock the cradle of her peevish babe;
 Even till the smallest habitable rock,
 Of jutting rock invited us to laud.
 First offered help that the deficient rock
 From the live rock with grace inimitable
 To fit from field to rock, from rock to field, Rock-bestedd. From rocky steep and rock-bestedd meadows
Rock-bull. Rock-built, are hung with rainbow-coloured mists—
Rocked. Rocked the charmed thought in more delightful dreams;
 Like mountain oaks rocked by the stormy wind.
 To acts of tenderness; and he had rocked
 (That would have rocked the sounding trees,
 Rocked on the surge, there tried his spirit's strength
 Or, in the hollow surge, at anchor rock,
 Rock'd on the dizzy larch's narrow tread,
 Rocked on his Mother's breast; who with his soul
 She rocked with every impulse of the breeze,
 Toss like a ship at anchor, rocked by storms;
 Rocked high above their heads; and, anon, the din
 —Rocked by the motion of a trusty ass
Rock-enriched. The grassy rock-enriched Pound
Rocket. What is pride?—a whizzing rocket.
Rock-foreless. From her rock-foreless in mid air, Rock-hewn. From rock-hewn steps the sail between the trees;
 Where altar-stone and rock-hewn seat
Rock-honey. And with rock-honey flow'd the happy land.
Rocking. Couched upon the rocking wave.
 Rocking and roaring like a sea;
 Upon the rocking wave,
 Ye heard, a rocking marvellous
 "Rocking as in a dream the tedious year,"
 Than waters dashing wild, or rocking shades.
 Rocking the trees, or driving cloud on cloud.
Rock-like. Rests underneath the little rock-like pile
 Rock's. See Sea-rock's.
 Here, through primroses, the steep rock's
 breast
 His giant body o'er the steep rock's brink,
 To prompt the thought?—Upon the steep rock's
 breast
Rocks. The echoes of your rocks my carols wild;
 Cling from the rocks, with pale wood-weeds between;
 And yew-tree o'er the silver rocks recline,
 These, by the pale-blue rocks that ceaseless ring,
 Each slip of lawn the broken rocks between
 The dog, loud barking, 'mid the glittering rocks,
 Spires, rocks, and lawns a browner night o'erspreads;
 Or, from the bending rocks, obtrusive cling,
 Round undistinguished clouds, and rocks, and snow:
 By rocks that, shutting out the blessed day,
 Cling tremblingly to rocks as loose as they;
 The rocks rise naked as a wall, or stretch
 Where huge rocks tremble to the bellowing herd.
 From out the rocks, the wild bees' safe abode:
 'Mid savage rocks, and seas of snow that shine,
 With rocks and gloomy woods her fertile fields:
 And on these barren rocks, with fern and heath,
 You could not hear, for the foam beat the rocks
 That I may see him. On a ridge of rocks
 A thousand lambs are on the rocks,
 She from the lofty rocks above
 By those huge rocks encompassed round,
 Among the woods and fields, and that the rocks,
 And you, who dwell here, even among these rocks,
 By some untoward death among the rocks:
 As I remember, looking round these rocks
 Among these rocks, and every hollow place
 And down the rocks can leap along
 With a few sheep, with rocks and stones, and kites
 That the green valleys, and the streams and rocks,
 Of an unusual strength. Among the rocks
 But 'twas the foliage of the rocks—the birch,

Rocks—continued.

And rocks that were the play-ground of thy youth,
Winds our deep Vale, two heath-clad Rocks ascend
Among these rocks did I
Among the rocks; with weight of rain,
Are steadfast as the rocks; the brook itself,
More ragged than need was! O'er pathless rocks,
With rocks, and stones, and trees,
That shaped her sorrow, rocks and pools,
He knew the rocks which Angels haunt
And pendent rocks, where'er, in guiding state,
To rocks, fields, woods. Nor doth our human sense
From these wild rocks thy footsteps I will guide.
The rocks, and quivering trees, and hillowy lake,
To dwell these rifted rocks between,
Among the rocks and winding scars;
With rocks encompassed round,
The Swale flowed under the grey rocks,
And rocks that spread a hoary gleam,
All, all is silent—rocks and woods,
But in the echo of the rocks
Among the rocks and winding crags;
And the rocks staggered all around.
More like themselves the rocks appear
Nor night-bird chambered in the rocks,
Among the rocks, behind the trees;
The rocks that tower on either side
How sweet it is, when mother Fancy rocks
From that young Stream, that smites the throbbing
rocks,
And these grey rocks; that household lawn;
Where rocks were rudely heaped, and rent
And thus among these rocks he lived,
Between the woods and lofty rocks;
Thy shelving rocks among,
Is it by rocks and woods that man prevails?
With its grey rocks clustering in pensive shade—
Through the rocks our passage smooth;
Deliverer of the steadfast rocks
Strewn with grey rocks, and on the horizon's verge,
In the cloud-piercing rocks doth her grandeur abide,
North-looking toward the rocks of Scilly,
The clouds and thrill the chambers of the rocks;
Through tangled woods, impeding rocks between;
Rocks, rivers, and smooth lakes more clear than glass
Ours couch on naked rocks,—will cross a brook
Among the rocks and holly bowers.
On the steep rocks of winding Tees;—
And thy bold rocks are worthy of their fame.
Rocks in its harbour, lodging peaceably.
Among the scattered rocks:
O'er rocks and stones, following the Dog
From those abrupt and perilous rocks
With rocks on either side,
That the river was strong, and the rocks were steep?—
Along the loose rocks, or the slippery verge
As, at his touch, it rocks, or seems to rock;
Yet, for the Initiate, rocks and whispering trees
There, under shadow of the neighbouring rocks,
(Winds behind, and rocks before!)
Long as these mighty rocks endure,—
Where silver rocks the savage prospect clear
And yew-trees o'er the silver rocks recline,
Each speck of lawn the broken rocks between;
That, barking busy 'mid the glittering rocks,
Where rocks and groves the power of waters shakes
Or, under rocks that from the water tow'r
Bend o'er the smoke that curls beneath the rocks.
Hiding their fiery clouds, their rocks, and snows;
Loose-hanging rocks the Day's blood'd eye that hide,
Tower like a wall the naked rocks, or reach
Th' insuperable rocks and severing tide.
Ye dewy mists the arid rocks o'er-spread
Hang from the rocks that tremble o'er the steep,
Mixed with auricular Rocks, three hundred Forms;
Oft as those sainted Rocks, three hundred spread,
His father helpless as the babe he rocks,
Rush down the living rocks with whirlwind sound.
To people the steep rocks and river banks,
By rocks and pools shut out from every star,
We scampered homewards. Oh, ye rocks and streams
For the old Ferryman; to the shout the rocks
The shadow from the substance, rocks and sky,
With all its solemn imagery, its rocks,
Between romantic Dovedale's spiry rocks;
Between thy lofty rocks. Enchanting show
Between the portals of the shadowy rocks
To industry, by glistenings flung on rocks,
The rocks that muttered close upon our ears,
Villa, or cottage, lurking among rocks
Loves, as it glistens on the silent rocks;
And them the silent rocks, which now from high
Rocks, dens, and groves of foliage taught to melt
Hazards and strange escapes, of which the rocks
Of Pan, Invisible God, thrilling the rocks
Bare hills and valleys, full of caverns, rocks,
The Savoyard to quit his naked rocks,
And senseless rocks; nor idly; for they speak,

Rocks—continued.

That makes her dwelling on the mountain rocks!
With rocks encompassed, save that to the south
From rocks, woods, caverns, heaths, and dashing sluices,
Clouds, mists, streams, watery rocks and emerald larks
Clouds of all tincture, rocks and sapphire sky,
Among these rocks and stones, methinks, I see
Whose hoary diadem of pendent rocks
Inverted trees, rocks, clouds, and azure sky;
Who fled to woods, caverns, and jutting rocks,
In woods, and dwell under impending rocks,
In some calm season, when these lofty rocks
And blind recesses of the caverned rocks;
And guardian rocks—Farewell, attractive seat!
Amid a wilderness of rocks and stones
Those dark rocks hide it! Entering, I beheld
By unrequited love, he scaled the rocks,
Of yon white torrent falling down the rocks
Its rocks and woods—the Cottage where she dwelt;
That sparkling thrids the rocks, attunes his voice
In the dry crannies of the pendent rocks;
Glow as her feet, and all the gloomy rocks
Among the rocks below. Men, maidens, youths,
At the mine's mouth under impending rocks;
That paves the brooks, the stationary rocks,
Whose low tones reached not to the distant rocks
By rocks impassable and mountains huge.
Amid impending rocks and gloomy woods—
These barren rocks, your stern inheritance;
His light high up among the gloomy rocks,
Mines opened, forests planted, and rocks split,
Remote and deep, piled round with rocks, where foot
Upwards among the o'erhanging rocks; nor
And those bare rocks, if you had asked if he
We shall not scatter through the plains and woods
Rocky. Her rocky sheepwalks, and her woodland bounds;
In rocky basin its wild waves repose,
Through wood, and through vale; and o'er rocky height,
Whirled adown the rocky chancel,
Thou rocky corner in the lowest stair
And placed together near our rocky Well.
Of Scotland's rocky wilds, did seem
Upon a rocky islet, side by side,
You stirred me on my rocky bed—
The Torrent down the rocky dell
That from out the rocky ground
Last king of rocky Cumberland;
Adown a rocky maze;
The brook adown the rocky steeps.
Their birthplace in the rocky cleft
From rocky steep and rock-bested meadows
On farthest Cornwall's rocky shore,
Softly resounded through this rocky glade;
But now the horizon's rocky parapet
Through rocky passes, among flowery creeks,
When giants scooped from out the rocky ground,
Thundering adown a rocky wood.
And Ocean hellow from his rocky shore,
Not there; but in dark wood and rocky cave,
Where unremitting frosts the rocky crescent bleach.
Hues ever fresh, in rocky fortress blowing;
And looming thickets; nor by rocky bands
Or behind a rocky screen—
Within some rocky cavern laid,
Fixed by her smile, upon some rocky seat;
"No fountain from its rocky cave
Among the birch-trees of this rocky isle.
The multitude of little rocky hills,
And, from his alder shades and rocky falls,
Within a rocky cave, its usual home.
Of Cumbria's rocky limits, they can tell
While I was seated in a rocky cave
Frank-hearted maids of rocky Cumberland,
And mused to rocky cell or sylvan tent,
Of some huge cave, whose rocky ceiling casts
Leapt out together from a rocky cave;
Halting together on a rocky knoll,
In his own valley's rocky guardianship,
By rude hands built, with rocky knolls in front,
Down a rocky mountain, buried now and lost
Who, mounting fearlessly the rocky heights,
But to! where from the rocky garden-mountain
—"Observe" the Vicar said, "you rocky isle
Or rocky bidd with patience they retire.

 With milk-white clusters hung; the rod and line,
 Haunting with rod and line the craggy brooks?
Rode. And all the happy Souls that rode Aloft, yet in a tilting vessel rode,
 Rode full of years to Flodden-field,

Roe. Not blither is the mountain roe:
 I came among these hills; when like a roe
 Look to thy plumage and thy life!—The roe, Roe-bucks. Like roe-bucks they went bounding o'er the hills;
Roland. That ROLAND clove with huge two-handed sway,
 The illustrious wife of Rolaad, in the hour
Roll. See Bead-roll.
 Like sun-lit tempests, troubled transports roll;
 Over your head twice twenty years must roll,
 "Roll back, sweet Rill! back to thy mountain-
 bounds,
 But they are silent;—still they roll along
 Virtuous and wise. Winds blow, and waters roll,
 Nor shall the eternal roll of praise reject
 Stained and polluted, brighten as they roll,
 Even though the Atlantic ocean roll between.
 Roll on, ye spouting whales, who die or keep . . . 99 Brothers 277
 Like lighted tempests troubled transports roll; . . . 612 Desc. Sh. Quarto 547
 Drove far away the savage thoughts that roll
 Voices of gladness roll the walls around;
 May roll in chariots, or provoke the hoofs
 Still roll; where all the aspects of misery
 Be your frequented watch-tower; roll the stone
 This Land shall witness; and as days roll on,
Rolled. Rolled wantonly between their slippery wings,
 With more majestic course the water rolled,
 Rolled at his back along the living plain;
 Too little marked how fast they rolled away:
 Rolled fast along the sky his warm and genial moon.
 The thunder rolled in peals that would have made
 Rolled round in earth's diurnal course,
 Rolled audibly!—it swept along,
 Like mountain-tops whose mists have rolled away—
 Above whose heads the tide so long hath rolled,
 Of wind-swept corn that wide around us rolled,
 Volumes of sound, from the Cathedral rolled,
 For tutelar service, thence had rolled,
 Like vapours, years have rolled and spread;
 The transport was rolled down the river of Wère,
 Like stars when clouds are rolled away;
 Her waves rolled on, respecting his decree
 A more majestic tide the water rolled,
 Wheeled by me—even as if the earth had rolled
 Rolled over a wide plain o'erhanging with clouds,
 Eight months! rolled pleasingly away; the ninth
 Hath rolled along, and this bright faucet,
 And vein of water, glad to be rolled on,
 —Methinks I see him—how his eye-balls rolled,
 To time and season, as the year rolled round?"
Rolling. Bright sparks his black and rolling eye-ball hurle
 These waters, rolling from their mountain-springs
 With rolling years thy strength increased;
 Rolling a solemn sea-like bass, that floats
 Nor has the rolling year twice measured,
 And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.
 When vapours rolling down the valley made
 The shepherd strays, a rolling hut his home:
Rolls. And rolls through all things. Therefore am
 I still
 And rolls the planets through the blue profound;
 And from the blessed power that rolls
 Save in the rolls of heaven, where hers may live
 Upon the beach, rolls back into the sea.

Romances. Of such we in romances read:
 In Araby, romances; legends penned
Romanist. The Romanist exults; fresh hope he draws Roman's. They—who have seen the noble Roman's scorn
Romans. Romans for travel girl, for business gowned;
Romantic. From such romantic dreams, my soul, awake
 In those old romantic days
 To sweep from maoy an old romantic strain
 Nor is it silver of romantic Spain;
 Fair sights, and visions of romantic joy!
 No more of old romantic sorrows,
 Romantic tale by Milton left unsung;
 Between romantic Dovedale's spy rocks;
 Romantic almost, looked at through a space,
 Aught of romantic interest, it is gone.
 Did we come hither, with romantic hope Rome. "Holy as that far seen which crowns the sumptuous Church in Rome
 Whom hardy Rome was fearful to oppose;
 The beauty of Florence, the grandeur of Rome,
 Descend, and, on the brow of ancient Rome
 Rise, and to-morrow greet magnificent Rome.
 Supplanted the whole majesty of Rome
 The glory of Infant Rome must disappear,
 From ancient Rome, downwards through that bright dream
 When here with Carthage Rome to conflict came,
 His way to Rome? Ah, no,—round hill and plain
 The exultations, pomps, and cares of Rome,
 Till Rome, to silent marble unconfined,
 Aloft, the imperial Bird of Rome invokes
 Troubling the last holds of ambitious Rome,
 That Rome provides, less dreading from her frown
 By Rome abandoned; vain are suppliant cries,
 Was the supremacy of crafty Rome;
 And the vain splendours of Imperial Rome?
 To moulder in a far-off field of Rome;
 Join to the rigours of the sires of Rome
 May soothe the memory of the chains of Rome.
 Authentic history better set forth of Rome,
 In microscopic vision, Rome herself,
 With those of Greece compared and popular Rome,
 The Alban Sites and walls of lofty Rome,
 Never did Rome herself so set at naught
Romeo. Who told of Juliet and her Romeo,

- Drops deadened from a roof so thick with leaves.
to look up at this roof in storm or fair . . .
The roof, self-moved, unsettling o'er his head ;
Hark ! over the roof he makes a pause,
Past softly, leading in the Boy ; and while from roof to floor,
From floor to roof, all round his eyes the Child with wonder cast,
And, when he dwelt beneath our roof, we found
Thy couch the dewy earth, thy roof the forest thorn !"
When down behind the cottage roof,
To hasten, for I found, beneath the roof
A lodging hegged beneath a castle's roof ;
And seldom needs a labour'd roof ;
Perennially—beneath whose sable roof
Beneath her father's roof, alone
It seemed—wall, window, roof and tower—
Even thine, though few thy wants—Roof, window, door,
Upon that roof, amid embowering gloom,
Than his who breathes, by roof, and floor, and wall,
As if the fretted roof were riven.
And, high above that length of cloistral roof,
Of silence, how it thrilled thy sumptuous roof,
The walls are cracked, sunk in the flowery roof,
Roof, raiment, bread, or burial :
A phantasm, in which roof and wall
Hath seen again her Father's roof,
Till the arched roof, with resolute abuse
Beneath the roof of settled Modesty.
Fidliest beneath the sacred roof proceeds
These lofty pillars, spread that branching roof
Expanding yet precise, the roof embowed,
Towards a low roof with green trees half concealed,
Though wavs, to every breeze, its high-arched roof,
Its living roof above our heads . . .
In course of nature under a low roof
For I have left my Father's roof,
Nor roof, nor window ;—all seemed wild
As shaggy as were wall and roof
Among the mountains) and beneath this roof
Here stood his threshold ; here was spread the roof
Beneath yon roof began her heavenly reign ?
Reared Hawkshead's happy roof, and call'd it mine.
On Gotha's dual roof, and on
Of the huge city, on the leaded roof
Entered thy vast dominion ? On the roof
Erelong, the massy roof above his head,
High was my room and lonely, near the roof
Beat on my roof, or, haply, at noon-day,
Of virtues bloomed beneath this lowly roof.
Of a clear brook ;—beneath an abbey's roof
And wholly without roof (the bleached remains
Of gay companions, to the natal roof,
Save for yon stately House beneath whose roof
With pillars crowded, and the roof upheld
The natural roof of that dark house in which
Danced in the breeze, chequering its mossy roof.
But towering high the roof above, as if
Altar, and cross, and church of solemn roof,
And uncouth fancy. From behind the roof
Use, comfort, do this roof endear ;
Beneath our roof. And others whom we love
That humble roof embowered among the trees,
Roofed. See Flat-roofed, Long-roofed, Low-roofed,
Sky-roofed.
In the roofed bridge ; the bridge, in that dread hour,
I spied a Cover walled and roofed with sods—
Ceilinged and roofed ; that is so fair a thing
Through paths and alleys roofed with darkest
green ;
In the roof'd bridge, at that despairing hour,
Thy lofty steeps, and pathways roofed with vines,
Roof-high. Roof-high ; the wild pink crowns the garden-wall ?
Roofless. Why so ? a roofless rock had been a comfort,
Through shattered galleries, 'mid roofless halls,
Thou art discovered in a roofless tower,
Of art mosaic, in a roofless floor,
She clasps them at that dim-sen roofless stone.—
And respirations, from the roofless walls
By a brook-side, we came, a roofless pile,
Appeared a roofless Hut ; four naked walls
Rooflike. Spread rooflike o'er the deep secluded vale, Roofs. While, from amid the darkened roofs, the spire,
Even while I speak, the sacred roofs of France
From the dark sylvan roofs the restless spire,
Where danger rooks the narrow walks of death ;
And roofs of temples built by human hands—
Whose blue roofs ornament a distant reach
And on the very turf that roofs her own, Roofs. The throng of rooks, that now, from twig or nest,
The cawing rooks, and sea-mews from afar,
The cloud of rooks descending through mid air

Oft leaves a saving moisture at its root,
Whose moss-grown root might serve for couch or
seat,
Take root (so seems it) and look up
The stems are faithful to the root,
And to the rock the root adheres
Thy youth to hopeless wasting, root and stem—
Down to its root, and, in that freedom, bold ;
Take root again, a boundless canopy . . .
All speak of manners withering to the root,
Ere they descend to nourish root and stalk
The root sincere, the branches bold to strive
Where long and deeply hath been fixed the root
Root there, and not in forms, her holiness ;—
So piety took root ; and Song might tell
To unearth the root of an old tree, . . .
That at the root of the old tree . . .

And the root of this delightful tree . . .

There, at the root of one particular tree, . . .
At her own prayer transformed, took root,
For she herself its honour, and the root
Illumined ! root of beauty and goodness,
With two collateral stems sprung from one root ;
The yellow stone-crop, suffred to take root
Of a young apple-tree, lay at its root ; . . .

Rose. See Brlar-rose.

On the dark hills where first he rose,
By the lake's edge, she rose—to face the noontide heat;

More high the snowy peaks with hues of rose,
To scent the sweets of Piedmont's breathing rose,
He rose, and to the ruin's portal went,
The breathing pestilence that rose like smoke
She rose and bade farewell! and, while her heart
And, when he rose, he thanked her pious care.
The wild rose, and the poppy, and the nightshade:
Lovely as Spring's first rose; a little dog,
The Villains rose in mutiny to destroy me;
Imperious at all times, his temper rose;
Rose from the spot;—the Daughter clapped her hands,
Fields smiled, and temples rose, and towns and cities grew.
Rose,—and, to consummate this just intent,
Fresh as a rose in June,
Her sweets, and triumph o'er the breathing rose?
That rose, and now forgets to rise,
That rose a brief league distant from the town,
And when they rose at morning she could see
"Pluck that rose, it moves my liking"
The spring's first rose by you espied,
The half-blown rose, the lily spare?
Proud be the rose, with rains and dews
Of devastation; but the hazels rose
And on the vacant air. Then up I rose,
The red rose is a glad some flower.
The red rose is revived at last;
With Idalian rose enwreathed?
Down to that hidden gulf from which they rose
And wild rose tip-toe upon hawthorn stocks,
A half-blown rose had tempted thee to sip
She rose, and toward the close-shut casement drew,
Rose out of darkness: the bright Work stood still;
Rose like a star that touching earth,
Stirred by the breeze; they rose, a Nation, true,
She rose, and off at once the yoke she threw.
With happy garlands of the pure white rose:
A garland fashioned of the pure white rose
Anon before my sight a palace rose
A shattered Convent, yet rose proud to have
And the waves rose, and sky portended danger.
"Change me, some God, into that breathing rose!"
Of the GREAT WATERS telling how they rose,
And, gazing, saw that Rose, which from the prime
I rose while yet the cattle, heat-oppress,
Where the wild rose blossoms fair;
Rose up, this stately Priory!
He rose not in this quarrel, he,
They rose, oh! wherefore should I fear
They rose—embraces none were given—
Rose to the God from whom it came!
From false assumption rose, and fondly hailed
As Po was heard to give where Venice rose
Or rather rose the day to antedate,
Has roused the lion; no one plucks the rose,
Rose, where she touched the strand, the Chantry of St. Bees.
Mists rose to hide the Land—that search, though long
Even when they rose to check or to repel
Her Temples rose, 'mid pagan gloom; but why,
Above sea-clouds, the Peaks of Arran rose,
We rose up from the fountain-side;
Till he rose a lifeless corpse.
That rose, and steadily advanced to fill
Ere on its banks the few grey cabins rose.

Or human habitation rose
He rose, and straight—as by divine command,
Or loftier pitch if higher rose the theme,
Refreshed, the Wanderer rose at morn,
A single Island rose
Amazement rose to pain,
The embowering rose, the acacia, and the pine,
Thy fragments to the bramble and the rose;
And after that they rose, and took their way,
Of the unfaded rose that still blooms on his cheek.
Too long abashed thy Name is like a rose
And lovely is the Rose,
While rose and poppy, as the glow-worm fades,
Now flush'd as Hebe, Emulation rose;
The Rose of England suffers blight,
From that soft couch I rose not, till the sun
But speedily an earnest longing rose
And, as I rose upon the stroke, my boat
Some lovely Image in the song rose up
The morning rose, in memorabilia pomp,
He rose, and with a lean and wasted arm
Beset me, and to height unusual rose,
Rose, with his ghastly face, a spectre shape
We rose at sigal given, and formed a ring
Their noon-tide meal. Hastily rose our guide,
That awful Power rose from the mind's abyss
Whose import then we had not learned, we rose
That we must tread—thy image rose again,
He was in limb, in cheek a summer rose.

Rose—continued.

Rose to ideal grandeur, or, called forth
When one among the prime of these rose up,
Sparkling from out a copse-clad bank that rose—
On the dear mountain-tops where first he rose.
Intended, rose in hardihood, and dared
The budding rose above the rose full blown.
Of a false prophet. While resentment rose
Thus expectation rose again; thus hope,
That rose in splendour, was alive, and moved
My brothers and myself. There rose a crag,
The given it greeting as it rose once more,
Which 'tis reproach to hear? Anon I rose
Had newly scooped a running stream. He rose,
I rose; and, having left the breezy shade,
She rose from off her seat, and then,—O Sir!
The voice was silent. From the bench I rose;
The old man rose, and, with a sprightly mien
Rose, though reluctantly, and forth we went.
A golden palace rose, or seemed to rise,
Upon our brave Progenitors, who rose
Taken from air and sunshine when the rose
Upon a fickle Ingrate. Thrice he rose,
From the maternal breast; then scruples rose,
Against his conscience rose in arms, and, drawing
A plant no longer wild; the cultured rose
Rose this pure eloquence. And, when the stream
These structures rose, commingling old and young,
That, in assent or opposition, rose
And that smooth slope from which the dwelling rose,
Rose the slim ash and massy sycamore,
Or courtesy prescribed. While question rose
We rose together: all were pleased; but most
That rose, and steadily advanced to fill
Roseate. Upon those roseate lips a Stygian hue.
With the morning's roseate Spirit
The roseate bloom on woman's cheek;
From roseate hues, far kenne'd at morn and even,
A roseate fragrance breathed.—O human life,
Rose-hud. That lip—a rose-hud from the thorn,
Enough of rose-hud lips, and eyes
Rose's. Within a breeze-fanned rose's breast
Roses. On infant cheeks there fresher roses blow;
While youth's roses are thy crow.
Two steady roses that were five years old;
Roses, lilies, side by side,
Both roses flourish, red and white:
The roses to the porch which they entwine:
In trellised shed with clustering roses gay,
With fancied roses, than the unblemished moon
And round this earthly tomb let roses rise,
Her infant's cheeks with fresher roses glow,
Of virgins crowned with roses. Not in vain
Pleasant as roses in the thickets blown,
Perish the roses and the flowers of kings.
Roslin. The notes, in prelude, ROSLIN I, to a blank
Roslin's. In the low dell 'mid Roslin's faded grove:
Rossland. At length conducted us to Rossland,— there,

 Of welcome faces up and down I roved ;

 " I roved o'er many a hill and many a dale,
 Such intercourse I witnessed, while we roved,
Rover. Across the wave, a Rover brave
 Taking her for some way-worn rover,
 Had been a wild and woodland rover ;
 Now up, now down, the Rover wends,
 A rover—night and day !

 —It is my royal state that yields
 Is of royal eastern blood
 Call not the royal Swede unfortunate,
 " Shame ! should a Child of royal line
 Ye saw, throughout this royal House,
 The royal Guinever looked passing glad
 Whether she graced a royal chair,
 A Royal army is gone forth
 But to remote Northumbria's royal Hall,
 The Royal Minstrel, ere the choir is still,
 Let both meet only on thy royal shield !
 Tax not the royal Saint with vain expense,
 The Danish Conqueror, on his royal chair,
 Some solace under weight of royal care,

Off to royal hearts denied,"
 By royal visages. Meanwhile abroad
 Of royal courts, and that voluptuous life
 Practised to commune with her royal knight
 Baronial court or royal ; cheered with gifts
 His royal state to show, and prove his strength
 To guard the royal brood. The sailing glead,
 Do arts like these a royal mind evince ?

Rush. Rush in—the villains seize us— Seize !
 Yes, they—
 Then grasp our swords and rush upon a cure . . .
 A very hunter did I rush
 Rush on the fight, to harps preferring swords,
 Some with ungovernable impulse rush ;
 Rush down the living rocks with whirlwind sound.
 To rush and disappear. But soon broke forth Rushed. The crows rushed by in eddies, homeward borne.
 Deluge of tender thoughts then rushed amain,
 You rushed into the murderous flames, returned
 That instant rushed between us, and I heard
 Rushed in between us : then did I insist
 Rushed o'er the wood with startling sound ;
 The rain rushed down—the road was battered,
 And forth she rushed into the light
 Rushed forth, and at the heart of Bruce
 So had they rushed into the groat
 Rushed through his mind the prophecy
 Rushed in ; and—white, O grief to tell !
 Tell what rushed in, from what she was relieved—
 The desperate deer rushed on, and near
 Forth rushed from Envy sprung and Self-conceit,
 Into my little sanctuary rushed—
 A kindling eye :—accordant feelings rushed
 Back to my mind rushed all that had been urged Rushes. See Water-rushes.
 While the coarse rushes, to the sweeping breeze,
 Thridding with sinuous lapse the rushes, through
 And a far-off wind that rushes,
 Fresh water rushes strew the verdant floor ;
Rushing. Rushing and racing came to meet me at the waterside !
 Rushing along in the full tide of play,
 The gazers feel ; and, rushing to the plain,
 Transformed, and rushing on a bold exchange
 For One, among those rushing deer,
 Of winter rushing in, to close
 The Tyrians rushing in, an eager band,
Russ. Plunge with the Russ embrow'd by Terror's

 Here reigns the Russian, there the Turk ; observe Rustle. Three humble bells their rustic chime repeat ;
 It was a rustic inn ;—the board was spread,
 She had a rustic, woodland air,
 And graceful in his rustic dress !
 Thence in our rustic dialect was called
 Of whom I sing this rustic lay,
 Well pleased in rustic garb to feed
 The rustic washing-gate !
 The Rustic sate.
 Whether the whistling Rustic tend his plough
 The rustic Maidens, every hand
 Which Nature and these rustic Powers,
 Till in the bosom of our rustic Cell
 As she approached you rustic Shed
 This day, when, forth by rustic music led,
 His rustic chimney with the last of Thee !
 To mingle in the rustic dance,
 Of Beauties yet unborn—the rustic Lodge
 Hence rustic dinners on the cool green ground,
 And mockery of the rustic painter's hand—
 They hold a rustic fair—a festival,
 In rustic sequestration—all dependent
 Such as might suit a rustic Sire, prepared
 The laggard Rustic ; and repay with boons
 Of rustic persons, from behind the hut
 Not rustic—dull and faded like himself !
 Of a most rustic ignorance, and take
 Our little Page : the rustic pair approach ;
 Of rustic loneliness : that grey-haired Orphan—
 Of sweet civility, on rustic wilds.
 Of rustic homeliness ; they only aimed
 This rustic tenement, had gently shed,
 So, through a simple rustic garb's disguise,
 Hung in his rustic hall. One ivied arch
 To rustic, and the rustic to urbane.
 The rustic Boy, who walks the fields, untaught ;
 The chosen rustic urged a warlike steed
Rusticity. And a refined rusticity, belong
Rustic's. An artless rustic's notice, this way less,

Rustling. Armour rustling in his halls

- Rustle. Foes might hang upon their path, snakes rustle near,
 " Blood drops—leaves rustle—yet," quoth he,
 Thy green leaves rustle or thy torrents roar.
 Then all is hushed ; the bushes rustle near.
Rustled. The leaves that rustled on this oak-crowned hill,
 Dislodged, through sere leaves rustled, or at once
 Of that great kingdom, rustled o'er our heads,
Rustling. See Faintly-rustling.
 Where the duck dabbles 'mid the rustling sedge,
 Hurrying the timid hare through rustling corn ;
 In long-drawn vista, rustling in the breeze ;
 Through rustling aspens heard from side to side,
 Winds rustling over plots of unripe grain,
 And that green corn all day is rustling in thy ears !
 In rustling conflict through the skies,
 I dread the rustling of the grass ;
 And startled only by the rustling brake,
 To Nature's tuneless quire, this rustling dry
 And that soft rustling of invisible wings
 Crowded together under rustling trees
 Comes that low sound from breezes rustling o'er
 Hurrylag the feeding hare thro' rustling corn ;
 Her road elms rustling thin above my head,
 Breaks from the rustling boughs,
 And sometimes rustling motions nigh at hand,
 And rustling leaves. Enchanting age and sweet !
Rusty. Their rusty hats they trim :
 Rusty lance, I ne'er shall grasp thee,
 Her eyebrows have a rusty stain,
Ruth. But what afflicts my peace with keenest ruth,
 When Ruth was left half desolate,
 And Ruth, not seven years old,
 " Sweet Ruth ! and could you go with me
 " Beloved Ruth ! "—No more he said.
 The wakeful Ruth at midnight shed
 That to sweet Ruth that happy day
 " O Ruth ! I have been worse than dead ;
 Dear Ruth ! more happily set free
 Deserted his poor Bride, and Ruth
 God help thee, Ruth !—Such pains she had,
 When Ruth will, long before her day,
 Ill-fated Ruth, in hallowed mould
 Assaulting without ruth,
 And had reposing on the board in ruth
 Ugentale, or untouched by seemly ruth,
 The consummation, the whole ruth,
 That fills the Soul with unavailing ruth.
 Ruth does what Simon cannot do ;
 Had of him ruth, and facied that they said,
Ruthless. Never shall ruthless minister of death
 'Tis done ! The ruthless traitor ! A rash deed !—
 Had slain his paramour with ruthless sword :
 'Tis gone—a ruthless spoiler's prey,
 Slackening the pains of ruthless banishment
 Pounced,—and the Dove, which from its ruthless beak
 And must he too the ruthless change bemoan
 Where ruthless mortals wage incessant wars.
 By the blind Goddess,—ruthless, undismayed ;
 Of Chiefs triumphant after ruthless wars ;
 She guards these, ruthless Power ! who would not spare
 In the ruthless wars of the White and Red ;
 Hath preyed with ruthless appetite
 " Now ruthless Tempest launch thy deadliest dart !
 " Calm as a frozen lake when ruthless winds Struggling in vain with ruthless destiny."
Ruthlessly. Won confidence, now ruthlessly betrayed
Rydal. Along the banks of Rydal Mere
 As when he clomb from Rydal Mere ;
Rydal-cove. Down Rydal-cove from Fairfield's side, Rydale's. Of giant yews that frown on Rydale's mere ;
Rydal-heights. Though Rydal-heights and Dunmail-raise,
Rydalian. Adieu, Rydalian Laurels ! that have grown
Rylstone. From Rylstone she hath found her way
 Among the wastes of Rylstone Fell,
 To Rylstone he the tidings brought ;
 Where Rylstone brook with Wharf is blended.
 Of mind, to Rylstone back she came ;
 When the bells of Rylstone played
 The bells of Rylstone seemed to say,
 —In Rylstone Church her mortal frame
Rylstone-hall. Stood quietly in Rylstone-hall.
 Herself beloved in Rylstone-hall.
 And the stern old Lord of Rylstone-hall
 To Rylstone-hall her way she took.
 —How desolate is Rylstone-hall !
 And forth from Rylstone-hall stepped she,—
 Bore it, or led, to Rylstone-hall
Rylstone's. Where Rylstone's old sequestered Hall
 In Rylstone's woeful neighbourhood,
 O'er Rylstone's fair domain have blown ;

Sabbath. For ever broke, the sabbath of her bowers. An idle voice the sabbath region fills Or tempt them to an hour of sabbath breach. Free for a sabbath of the heart : Sad may I be who heard your sabbath chime To Kirk he on the sabbath day Hushed to a depth of more than Sabbath peace : Enter in dance. Of church, or sabbath ties, 'Tis a work for sabbath hours Her sabbath couch has made. Over the hills this sabbath day ; Her sabbath morning, foul or fair ; Their sabbath music—"God-us agite !" And every sabbath here is found ; Lies open on the sabbath day ; The Sabbath bells renew the inviting peal ; I hear their sabbath bells' harmonious chime And ere the Sabbath he had three. Where Death and Glory a joint sabbath keep, Again to bend the Sabbath at that time That ran on Sabbath days a fresher course ; To break upon the sabbath of her rest. For sabbath duties ; yet he was a man Alone, through half the vacant sabbath day ; Perpetual sabbath ; come, disease and want ; Save when the sabbath-brings its kind release, Which makes the sabbath lovely in the sight With foresight ; hears, too, every sabbath day, To spend the sabbath of old age in peace, Like vernal ground to sabbath sunshine left. Where now the beauty of the sabbath kept Of sabbath bells ; and ye, who steep in earth, Sabbath-day. Twice every Sabbath-day. This Sabbath-day, for praise and prayer. Imparted to their sabbath-day. And every sabbath-day its golden sun." Sabbath-days. Large measures shall be dealt. Three sabbath-days. The sabbath's return ; and its leisure's soft chain !

Sabina.—Did Sabine grace adorn my living line, Or Sabine vales explored inspire a wish. The Sabine Bard was moved her praise to sing ; Upon the Sabine farm he loved so well ;

Our daily meals were frugal, Sabine fare ! 16
Sable. Those fast-receding depths of sable blue 16
Perennially—beneath whose sable roof 18
Broke from the sable orbs of his yet-vivid eyes. 19
Green, sable, shining yellow, shadowy brown, 23

The heaven of sable night 324
Th' interminable sea of sable blue. 609
Sable princess, ebon bright. L. 2. 190
Sabra. And Sabra in the forest with St. George ! 670
Sabrina. Sabrina,—vowing that the stream should bear 103
Sacerdotal. And food cut off by sacerdotal ire, 419
Sackcloth. In sackcloth, and God's anger deprecate 364
Sacked. While, to dislodge his game, cities are sacked ! 313
Sacrament. Brings to thy food, mysterious Sacrament ! 446
Sacred. Which unsubstantial Phantoms sacred keep ; 520
While they are drawing toward the sacred floor 16
Father, I would not change that sacred feeling 20
That misery is a sacred thing ; for me, 40
Scarcely less than sacred passions, 58
Above and round the sacred places 144
Sacred to flowerets of the hills, 165
And sacred to the sky. 165
But through dependence on the sacred laws 213
The very flowers are sacred to the Poor, 250
Yet sacred is to me this Mountain's head, 252
Imagination is that sacred power 259
Ye sacred Nurseries of blooming Youth ! 270
When at the sacred font for thee I stood ; 274
See how her ivy clasps the sacred Ruin, 283
And, if old judgments keep their sacred course, 318
And sacred home—ah ! why should hoary Age be blind ? 321
Your Country rears this sacred Monument ! 326
With his most sacred wealth, heroic dust, 327
Surrendering the whole heart to sacred pleasures ? 331
The sacred ENCHANTING, celestial Bands, 338
Thou sacred Pile ! whose turrets rise 341
And thus, in order, 'mid the sacred grove 342
O'er the blank Era of sacred earth 353
My fault, nor hear it with Thy sacred ear ; 356
Sacred Religion ! "mother of form and fear," 380
For great and sacred is the modest claim 392
Nor will the Power we serve, that sacred Power, 394
Attuned to words with sacred wisdom fraught ; 395
The sacred Cross ; and figured there 400

Touch not the tapers of the sacred shires ; 426
Scooped from the sacred earth where his dear relics lie. 426
Closes the gates of every sacred place. 427
All sacred things are covered : cheerful morn 427
Should that be needed for their sacred Charge ; 432
But they desist not ;—and the sacred fire, 432
But, to outweigh all harm, the sacred Book, 435
Upon that circle traced from sacred story 445
Fitless beneath the sacred roof proceeds 445
Closing the sacred Book which long has fed 448
Even while I speak, the sacred roofs of France 449
Of sacred truth may enter—till it brood 450
Are not, in sooth, their Requiem's sacred ties 467
Of novelty amid the sacred wreck 474
Enraptured Art draws from those sacred springs 500
—Not from a source less sacred is derived 509
Or sacred wonder, growing with the power 510
The sacred limits of humanity. 514

So sacred, so informed with fight divine, 519
Receive the curb of sacred truth, 533
Her sacred recompense for many wants) 539
To sacred studies ; and the Roman Shepherd 573
This to the dead by sacred right belongs ; 576
Stand—sacred as a Shrine ; 581
This Stone is sacred. Here he lies apart 584
Your dual loneliness. The sacred tie 586
Since Science first, with all her sacred train, 618
Fair to the view is sacred Truth display'd, 619
Firm in the sacred paths of moral truth, 619
O sacred marriage—hed of death, 623
Guards the sacred heart of youth, 629
Of those long vistas, sacred catacombs, 654
As toward the sacred mansion we advanced, 681
A Father—for he bore that sacred name— 696
Upon our native country's sacred ground, 721
Kept sacred to restorative delight, 733
Life, human life, with all its sacred claims 741
And listening Time reward with sacred praise. 758
By virtue of that sacred instrument 771
"His sacred function was at length renounced ; 775
And when that sacred spirit shall appear, 806
Men, who, from faction sacred, and unstained 823
His rank and sacred function. This deep vale 824
As chanced, the portals of the sacred Pile 824
That overspread and chilled the sacred turf, 830
A thing most sacred in the eye of Heaven ; 841
Upon this sacred ground, if nowhere else." 847
By sacred charter, holden for her use, 856
To punctual labour in his sacred charge. 859
And lend the echoes of his sacred shell, 863
Whose sacred influence, spread through earth and heaven, 864
May find chance-mention on this sacred ground)— 868
—Right toward the sacred Edifice his steps 871
Proof of the sacred love she bears for all ; 885
This sacred right, the fispig babe proclaims 888
—This sacred right is fruitlessly announced, 889
The sacred truth to acknowledge, finger still ; 894
My fault, and keep it from thy sacred ear K. 8. 266

Sacrifice. See Self-sacrifice.
A more benignant sacrifice approve— 3
For sacrifice its throngs of living men, 26
And every sacrifice his peace requires— 50
Prepared already for the sacrifice. 57
An expiation and a sacrifice 64
For, if, by such strange sacrifice restored, 105
A sacrifice of birthright to attain 123
For every tender sacrifice her heart had made. 141
"With sacrifice before the rising morn 209
Thence offer nightly sacrifice) 214
Which caught the blaze of sacrifice, 216
High sacrifice, and labour without pause, 316
Of dreadful sacrifice ; by Russian blood 322
Heroes !—for instant sacrifice prepared ; 326
Which ministered, erewhile, to a sacrifice 326
The quickening spark of this day's sacrifice ; 329
To sulphurous bolts a sacrifice, 341
His acts, his wrongs, his final sacrifice ; 351
Or leading victims drest for sacrifice. 394
Deserve they further sacrifice ?— 406
By Nature decked for holiest sacrifice. 420
No sacrifice avert, no power dispute ; 433
Poor as thou art. A welcome sacrifice 465
So often that demand such sacrifice ; 493
Of Nations," sacrifice a People's health, 501
(Would that it were !) the sacrifice unmeet 520
Drawn from the Sacrifice fulfilled, 533
From the altar of this sacrifice, 544
Of truth and justice, either sacrifice, 721

 A pensive sky, sad days, and piping winds,
 Through sad incompetence of human speech,
 And all the sad etcetera of the wrong,
 From those sad scenes when meditation turned,
 Told by my Patriot friend, of sad events,
 Sad opposites out of the inner heart,
 “A sad reverse it was for him who long
 With the sad news, that he had joined a troop
 And now the music of my own sad steps,
 I sate with sad impatience. From within
 I found her sad and drooping; she had learned
 Her heart was still more sad; and by yon gate,
 The same sad question. Meanwhile her poor Hut
 Sad contrast! all too often smote his heart
 And wastes the sad remainder of his hours,
 This sad memorial of their hapless friend!
 And, of the sad appearance which at once
 From mild to angry, and from sad to gay,
 Sad or disturbed, is ordered by a Being
 And sad exclusion through decay of sense;
 Her sad dependence upon time, and all
 Grave, and in truth too often sad—“Is Man

- Sadly-plausible. And utter England's name with sadly-plausible voice.
- Sadly-pleasing. Stay! pensive, sadly-pleasing visions, stay!
- Sadly-uttered. Not vain is sadly-uttered praise;
Sadness. The spirit sought not then, in cherished sadness,
A sadness at the heart:
Of inward sadness had its charm;
Of careful sadness,
The cheerer Thou of our in-door sadness,
A flower how rich in sadness! Even thus stoops,
Dim sadness—and blind thoughts, I knew not, nor could name.
Though given to sadness and to gloom,
The weight of sadness was in wonder lost.
Who meet most feelingly the calls of sadness.
So sadness comes from out the mould
That fills my heart with sadness!
Which, while it makes the heart with sadness shrink,
And, even to sadness, lonely and serene,
And escaping from that sadness
Amid this dance of objects sadness steals
A holy sadness shared.
Twice-glorified fields! if in sadness I turned
From your infinite marvels, the sadness was just.
Not, therefore, shall my mind give way to sadness;—
To sadness not their own, when, with faint smile
Ah! who could think that sadness here
That hill and vale with sadness hear.
Fear to my Soul, and sadness which might seem
In sadness listen. With maternal zeal
While unreprising sadness is allied
Caught at the point where it stops short of sadness.
Sadness which no indulgence could prevent;
For wholesome sadness, troubling to refine,
Thence sickness comes, and overwhelming sadness,
Though blind, thy tunes in sadness hum;
And with a deep sadness I turned, to repair
That sadness finds its fuel. Hitherto,
And fond conceits of sadness, with the sound
And from that source how different a sadness
Brought to such spectacle a milder sadness,
Pure, or with no unpleasing sadness mixed;
One sadness, they and I. For them a bond
Sheds, I exclaimed, 'no sadness upon me,
(Resigned with sadness gently weighing down
With only such degree of sadness left
In creeping sadness, through oblivious shades
No sadness, when I think of what mine eyes
To cheat the sadness of a rainy day;
Sadness and keen regret, we who revere,
That no self-cherished sadness could withstand:
- Safe. From out the rocks, the wild bees' safe abode:
You are as safe as in a sanctuary;
Think not of that! 'tis over—we are safe.
But yet I trust, Idonea, thou art safe.
You are safe; the whole world shall not harm you.
And all is safe: what said he? But few words:
And safe without a bruise or wound
Night and day thou art safe,—our cottage is hard by.
Within this realm a place of safe retreat;
But safe as in a cradle, here
Of Grasmere safe in its own privacy:
Here, in safe covert, on the shallow snow,
Now am I fairly safe to-night—
And your huge burthen, safe from harm,
Sir Lancelot gave a safe retreat.
Among thy branches safe he lay,
Safe through the winter storm in quiet dwells!
For he is safe, a quiet bed
That he is safe at last.
Safe from his step-dame Rheea's eye;
Due recompense, and safe return
To Thy protection for a safe abode.
Safe from the wintry tempest. Fluttering,
Subalpine vales, in quest of safe retreats
Thou offerest up for safe Delivery
Merry and loud and safe from prying search,
Whose proffered beauty in safe shelter blows

Safe—continued.

- Safe from the feudal Castle's haughty frowns;
Forth to a safe abiding-place,
Safe from your door ye hear at breezy morn,
It keeps them safe, and far
Where she may work, safe, undisquieted,
Safe from an evil which these days have laid
Nothing was safe: the elder-tree that grew
In safe obedience; that a mind, whose rest
Heaved at safe distance, far retired. I paused,
Not safe within its bosom. Thus prepared,
Forgotten,—at safe distance from 'a world
Within a port of rest had lodged me safe;
Safe from temptation, and from danger far?
From diminution safe and weakening age;
At a safe distance from our native land,
And safe from all our sorrows.' With a sigh
Lurks in safe shelter from the winds of March,
The unquestionable good—which, England, safe
There safe as a Spinster . . . 468 St. Bees 128

- The boy was safe.
Their safe retreat. We knew them well, I guess.
Nor safe the petticoats of dames that hear
- Safeguard. Mysterious safeguard, that, in spite
And was the safeguard of the west: the worth
Be thou my safeguard! "—such her prayer
The safeguard for repose and quietness.
Was founded a sure safeguard and defence
To fly, for safeguard, to some foreign shore
Soul of our Souls, and safeguard of the world!
- Safely. There, safely guarded by the woods behind,
Our boat is safely anchored by the shore,
And there will safely ride when we are gone;
Come boats and ships that safely ride
All worse assaults may safely be defied.
More safely rests, dies happier, is freed
To the ice, and safely crost;
Are safely borne, landed upon the beach,
But stops,—that he may safely lodge the coin
Laid safely by itself, beneath a Tree.
I found its rescued inmate safely lodged,
Intrusted safely each to his pursuit
We safely may affirm that human life
- Safer. And hath bestowed on thee a safer good;
With tenderest love;—or, if a safer seat
These mists, and lead you to a safer place,
Into a safer sea—
To reach a safer shore—how near,
Safer, of universal application, such
A safer, easier, more determined, course.
- Safest. Of safest guidance or of firmest trust—
- Safety. Doth lodge, and feed, and coil, and sleep, in safety,
And pipe its song in safety,—there
Into the consciousness of safety thrilled;
That in ourselves our safety must be sought;
For safety, they of yore enclasped the Cross
Of these thus kneeling, safety he may find.
And all who from the law firm safety crave.
Food, shelter, safety, there they find;
All peace depends, all safety rests.
Had for the common safety striven in vain,
When safety was so near.
Not without trembling, we in safety looked
I added, work of safety: from all doubt
Elsewhere will safety now be sought, and earth
For their own safety; laughed with my compeers
And fears for our own safety drove us home.
The raven lodged in safety.—Many a ship
All praise, all safety, and all happiness,

Sagaclous. Sagacious, into sheltering coves he drives

Sage—continued.

- All hail, sage Lady, whom a grateful Isle
May sage and simple, catching with one eye
Such the repose that sage and hero find;
From the sage Nymph appearing at his wish
- Of boundless suffrage, at whose sage behest
Hence thoughtful Mercy, Mercy sage and pure,
And poets sage, through every age,
The consecrated works of Bard and Sage,
The times, too sage, perhaps too proud, have dropped
- A time when sage Experience would have snatched
Sage, warrior, patriot, hero; for it seemed While, in this strain, the venerable Sage
The Sage continued:—"For that other loss,
"Yes," said the Sage, resuming the discourse
"Methinks," persuasively the Sage replied,
"And his compeers—the laughing Sage of France—
Here closed the Sage that eloquent harangue,
By calculations sage, the ebb and flow
The natural crown that sage Experience wears.
The lucky venture of sage Whittington,
Song of the mouse, sage historic tale,
And feelingly the Sage shall make report
Thus calmly spoke the venerable Sage.
The Sage rejoined, "I thank you—you have spared
The Sage broke off. No sooner had he ceased
Such the repose that Sage and Hero find,
Sprung from high Jove, of sage Menesyme
A conquest? who must bear the blame? sage man
The sage has read the stars with skill so true,
- Sages'. The Sage's theory? The Poet's lay?
Were gladdened by the Sage's voice, and lung
How did Buchanan waste the Sage's lore!
- Sages. As sages taught, where faith was found to merit
- Where Heroes, Sages, Bards sublime,
Kings, warriors, high-souled poets, saint-like sages,
From Sages justly honoured by mankind;
To cope with Sages undevoutly free.
Than all the sages can.
Not in vain those Sages taught,—
Sages who in their prescience would control
"Behold a cabinet for sages built,
Of sages, martyrs, confessors—the man
Sages'. Far better than the sages' books,
Sagest. Exclaimed—"The sagest Antiquarian's eye
Said. (Partial list.)
"Tis plain he loves the Maid, and what he said
(As you have said) he coins himself the slander
He said to me, that he had seen his Child,
You said you did not like his looks—that he
This is a time, said he, when guilt may shudder;
Henceforth it shall be said that bad men only
Said one, "It is agreed on. The blind Man
It said, "I will be with thee." A little boy,
And said, with tears, that he would be our guide;
But there was something which most plainly said
I know not what I said—all may be well.
"Tis said that warnings ye dispense,
For, he it said of Peter Bell,
"Tis said, meek Beast! that, through Heaven's grace,
And, therefore, was it rightly said
Said generous Rob, "What need of books?
And to his Sword he would have said,
Then said my "winsome Marrow,"
"Oh! green," said I, "are Yarrow's holms,
His Mother often thought, and said,
Of Pharaoh, said to Famine, Snow, and Frost,
"Tis said, fantastic ocean doth enfold
To whom the words were softly said,
"Twas said that She all shapes could wear;
And Matthew stopped, he looked, and said,
"Our work," said I, "was well begun,
At this he grasped my hand, and said,
The Falconer to the Lady said;
Said Secrecy to Cowardice and Fraud,
Hath it not long been said the wrath of Man
- Nay, said a voice, soft as the south wind's breath,
I stopped, and said with inly-muttered voice,
- Meek Flower! To Him I would have said,
That said, "Let praise be mute where I am laid;
Oft have I said, the paths of Fame pursue,
In the pain of my spirit I said,
He said, "because he loves
He said, "My trust is in the God of Heaven,
Was "Euclid's Elements," and "This," said he,
"It is," said he, "the waters of the deep
When to myself it fairly might be said,
In agitation said, "Tis against that
I said unto the life which I had lived,
I said, "And, did in truth those vaunted Arts
More had she said—but sportive shouts were heard
"Turn where we may," said I, "we cannot err
- Sail. Now, while the solemn evening shadows fall,
From rock-hewn steps the sail between the trees;
Slow glides the sail along the illumined shore,

Sail—continued.

- There doth the maiden watch her lover's sail . . . 15 Desc. Sh. 250
Behind his sail the peasant shrinks, to shun
The impatient mariner the sail unfurled,
Between the tropics filled the steady sail,
Set every inch of sail upon her."
Following after in full sail!
With him to sail across the sea,
That Figure, like a ship with snow-white sail!
As sail hath been unfurled;
Fast through the clouds my Boat can sail;
With joy I sail among them.
With all the sail that he can carry,
For He must never handle sail;
More glorious, with spread sail and streaming pendant.
- That rises here, and humbly spread, the sail;
That swells the bosom of our passing sail!
That landward urged the great Deliverer's sail,
Thou near the eagle's nest—within brief sail,
This independence upon oar and sail,
Thy whereabouts, to warn the approaching sail.
Spread, tiny nautilus, the living sail;
Toward my death with wind I steer and sail;
We sail the sea of life—a Calm One finds,
Sets sail:—in season due,
And sail that glides the well-known aiders by.
There watch at eve her lover's sun-gilt sail
Behind his sail the peasant strives to shun
And told him not to sail as was his aim,
Set sail, was wrecked, and all on board was lost.
Her waters, Air her breezes; and the sail
That sail on winds, of breezes that delight
- Sailed. Sailed on the seas, but he is dead;
When last he sailed, he left the bird behind;
Sailed through the sky—the brooks ran clear;
The Gordon, sailed away to Spain;
His father's ship, and had sailed far—
When the first Ship sailed for the Golden Fleece—
And grasp of purpose, long ere sailed his ship
Sailed" (hear me, Merlin!) under high protection,
Of Cam sailed boisterously, and let the stars
Of strangers, till day closed, we sailed along,
Sailed from Zacynthus,—philosophic war!
That, on the steady breeze of honour, sailed
Than that brave vessel, though she sailed so far;
- Sailing. That overhead are sailing in the sky.
Small clouds are sailing,
Bears him on white proudly sailing . . .
In sunshine sailing far away,
I watch thee sailing o'er the midland brine;
For dwarts the tallest seem while sailing by,
With mutual help, and sailing—to their league
To guard the royal brood. The sailing glead,
- Sailor. A Sailor he, who many a wretched hour
His battered head, a groan the Sailor fetched
Ere to his lips it came, the Sailor them bespoke.
The Sailor knew too well. That wickedness
That haunts the Sailor, measuring o'er and o'er
The Sailor—Sailor now no more,
And the rough Sailor instantly
The Sailor gathers up his bed,
For, cries the Sailor, "Glorious chance
The Sailor, Man by nature gay,
Up springs the Sailor from his chair—
"This," cries the Sailor, "a Third-rate is—
The Sailor through the story runs
"Yon screech-owl," says the Sailor, turning
Summoned the Sailor to rejoice;
To king, to peasant, to rough sailor, dear,
The Sailor knows; he best, whose lot is cast
Then, while the Sailor, 'mid an open sea
The forlorn traveller, or sailor wrecked
Like a shipwrecked Sailor tost
Thou one blind Sailor, rich in joy
Of heart, the sailor fights with roaring seas.
- Sailor-friend. And with him goes his Sailor-friend
Sailor's. True sympathy the Sailor's looks expressed,
Though inward anguish damped the Sailor's brow,
"A sailor's wife I knew a widow's cares,
When, startled by the Sailor's roar,
To sailor's prayer breathed from a darkening sea,
In sailor's ship, or fisher's boat,
That bid me hail thee as the SAILOR'S FRIEND;
And thou art still, O Moon, that SAILOR'S FRIEND!
And stumbling on his arms. In sailor's garb
Before the sailor's eye; or diamond drops
- Sailors. With sailors longing for a breeze in vain,
Or as the wily sailors crept
I looked with steadiness as sailors look
- Sails. So said, so done; and masts, sails, yards,
Sails spread, as if to catch the wind!
There in a black-blue vault she sails along,
Among the restless sails of vanity.
And, slighting sails and scorning oars,
That stretch a thousand thousand sails,
Furl we the sails, and pass with tardy oars
More sweet than odours caught by him who sails
Sails with her happy destiny;
With nets and sails outspread and streamers gay,

Same—continued.

She for her Son in that same spot did cry . . . 555 Prioresse 154.
 The same as they had chosen for the year,
 Impressed on the white road,—in the same line,
 At distance still the same. Poor Traveller!
 From the same beach one ocean to explore
 Doth the same tale repeat:
 Of things forgotten, these same scenes so bright,
 No difference is, and hence, from the same source,
 Through the same gateways, sleep where they had slept.
 The things which were the same and yet appeared
 With the same ghastly mildness in his look,
 Twin labourers and heirs of the same hopes;
 Recorded by Cervantes, these same thoughts
 Of the same isthmus, which our spirits cross
 More frequently from the same source I drew
 From the same cause produced, 'mid outward things
 In bend at last to the same discipline,
 To seek the same delights, and have one health,
 Of the same face, blossoms upon one tree;
 Seemed sent on the same errand with the choir
 In twain, yet leaving the same outward form.
 Living amid the same perpetual whirl,
 Where passage opens, but the same shall have
 The same that had been recently pronounced,
 And this same city, that did then appear
 And that what was in degree the same was likewise
 The same in quality—that, as the worse . . .
 Roaming, I carried with me the same heart:
 She knew not he was dead. She seemed the same
 The same sad question. Meanwhile her poor Hut
 To that same child, addressing tenderly
 Promptly replied—"My notion is the same.
 Of this same life, compelling us to grieve
 With the same pensive office; and make known
 Are various engines working, not the same
 To the same point, attainable by all—
 Even as the same is looked at, or approached.
 (The same kind Matron whom your tongue hath praised)
 And end their journey in the same repose!
 Speaks, less distinctly, to the same effect.
 Men of all lands shall exercise the same.
 With the same upright form! The sun is fixed,
 Of the same breath are shattered and destroyed.
 'Another and the same! Most beautiful,
 The same should be continued to its close.
 For other pastures would exchange the same
 Was that same young and happy being) became
 Sprinkles these little pastures but the same
 See yonder the same pageant, and again
 Of cities, 'mid the same eternal flow
 Of the same objects, melted and reduced

Sample. The bread they eat. A sample should I give Samples. So many divers samples from the growth
San. Guarded by lone San Salvador;
Sanative. Thine be such converse strong and sanative,
Sanctified. Even so for me a Vision sanctified
 A Soul by contemplation sanctified.

A feeling sanctified
 By those dread symbols sanctified;
 As faith thus sanctified the warrior's crest
 How the bold Teacher's Doctrine, sanctified
 A will by sovereign Conscience sanctified;
 As he before had sanctified;
 A soul by resignation sanctified;
 But truth divine has sanctified their rage,
 Those sanctified abodes of peaceful man,
 From hell came sanctified like airs from heaven.
 A lasting inspiration, sanctified . . .
 If so approved and sanctified, to pass,
 In Scripture sanctified—the patient brute,
Sanctifies. That sanctifies its confines, and partook
 And Pity sanctifies the Verse
 Which with the lofty sanctifies the low.
Sanctify. That sanctify the cottage fire
 Solemnly joined. Now sanctify the bands
 And sanctify one closing day,
 To sanctify the Escorial palace. He—
Sanctifying. At this late day, its sanctifying name.
 And sanctifying, by such discipline,
Sanction. Have gained a sanction from thy falling tears;
 The heavenly sanction needed to ensure
 Her sanction inwardly she bore,
 Words that require no sanction from an oath,
 The murderer, ye, by sanction to that thought,
 Faint sanction given, the Cavalier
 Gave treacherous sanction to that over-love
 To sanction the proud workings of the soul,
 The sanction; till, demanding formal proof,
Sanctioned. See Heaven-sanctioned.
 Encouraged, sanctioned, chiefly for that end;
 Or judgments sanctioned in the Patriot's mind
 By reason sanctioned—Can the choice mislead,
 Sanctioned, of danger, difficulty, or death.
 Of amity and gratitude." "Thus sanctioned,"
 In youth, and sanctioned by the ripper mind,
 Hath Reason sanctioned. Her deliberate voice

Sanctions. Or duty sanctions. We will have ample justice.

 Sanctions the forfeiture that Law demands,
Sanctities. Alas! the sanctities combined
 With local sanctities in trust,
 We, we, the sanctities of old
 'Mid these decaying sanctities.
 That Tomb, dread centre of all sanctities
Sanctity. Their sanctity revealing!
 To crown their abbey's sanctity.
 In glory will they sleep and endless sanctity.
 The re-ascend in sanctity!
 In the new Rite—the pledge of sanctity,
 Of time's pathetic sanctity;
 In the last sanctity of fame is laid.
 And merciful desires, thy sanctity approve!
 Awed by the theme's peculiar sanctity
 This sanctity of Nature given to man—
 An elevation, and a sanctity,
 That would profane the sanctity of verse.
 And sanctity of passion, speak of these,
 A patrimonial sanctity. And thus,
 Though with the Encincture's special sanctity
 And from the sanctity of elder times
 Then, o'er that mould, a sanctity shall brood
 Hath now its own peculiar sanctity; Sanctuaries. From all her Sanctuaries!—Open for my feet
 Her natural sanctuaries, with a local soul
Sanctuary. You are as safe as in a sanctuary;
 To perpetrate his crimes, serve as a Sanctuary
 For, deftly framed within the trunk, the sanctuary showed,
 Here lodge as in a sanctuary!
 And if full off the Sanctuary save
 A sanctuary seemed the spot
 To see a sanctuary for our country's youth
 Stands single in her only sanctuary;
 Into my little sanctuary rushed—
 Can be attained,—a better sanctuary
 Through this their mountain sanctuary. Long,
Sanctuary's. Lodged only at the sanctuary's door,
Sand. Of rock or sand repositeth, there to sun itself;
 Mine the first blood that tinged the Trojan sand.
 And stalking pillars built of fiery sand,
 Freshening the waste of sand with shades and springs.
 We beat with thundering hoofs the level sand,
 With a long staff upon the sand, and thus
 We beat with thundering hoofs the level sand.
Sandal. See Seat-sandal.
 Seat Sandal, a fond suitor of the clouds,
 Which staff and cockle hat and sandal shoon
Sand-lark. The sand-lark chants a joyous song;
Sand-piper. The stone-chat, or the glancing sandpiper:
Sands. Whether printing desert sands
 Vagrant over desert sands,
 Or caught amid a whirl of desert sands—
 Yon tawny slip is Libya's sands;
 Among Arabian sands:
 That this most famous Stream in bogs and sands
 Than a lone obelisk, 'mid Nubian sands,
 While Merlin paced the Cornish sands,
 Majestic Duddon, over smooth flat sands
 As lonely he stood as a crow on the sands.
 Hazard or toil; among the sands was seen
 The sands of Westmoreland, the creeks and bays
 The roving Indian, on his desert sands:
 A separate record. Over the smooth sands
 Who crossed the sands with ebb of morning tide.
 Said I forth-pouring on those open sands
 Like Niger, in impetrate sands
 While, free as air, o'er printless sands we march,
 That moistened Dunkirk's sands with blood and tears.
Sandy. And forth I leapt upon the sandy plain;
 As to the sandy desert fountains are,
 The sandy fields, leaping through flowery groves
 Of sandy wilderness, all black and void
 On sea-shells that bestrew the sandy beach,
 Above the sandy desert, in the light
Sandys. Then noble Sandys, inspir'd with great design,
 Let this bright morn and Sandys the song inspire,
Sang. Of which I sang one song that will not die.
 He sang of love, with quiet blending,
 —I sang; and lo! with pastimes virginal
 I sang—Let myriads of bright flowers,
 He sang—"No wintry desolations,
 The clouds, or night-bird sang from shady bough;
 He sang, his genius "glinted" forth,
 He sang of battles, and the breath
 Whate'er the theme, the Maiden sang
 Sang through the adventurer's hair.
 That sang of trees up-torn and vessels tost—
 Humanity, sang feats that well might call
 Well sang the Bard who called the grave, in strains
 Wild notes she in his hearing sang,
 And first we sang of the greenwood shade . . .

Sang—continued.

- Sang mass,—and tore the hook of prayer,—
Sang in this Presence kindred themes ;
While choirs of fervent Angels sang
They knelt in prayer, or sang to blissful Mary.
And then she sang ;—she would have been
He sang those witty rhymes
The haunt of him who sang bow spear and shield
- Sang youthful tales of shepherds and their flocks ;
And then he sang it well and fearlessly,
And sang, O Alma Redemptoris Mater!
A Spirit sang in tones more plaintive than the wind :
Her Voice was like a hidden Bird that sang,
Who sang in ancient Greece his loving lay,
That sang and ceased not ; now a Sister Isle
Which one day sang so sweetly in the nave
Sang to herself, that there I could have made
One song they sang, and it was audible,
Pilfered away, by what the Bard who sang
A glad prelude to this Verse : I sang
A thrush sang loud, and other melodies,
We heard the hymn they sang—a solemn sound
With their belief, I sang Saturnian rule
- Sanguinary. To hear the sanguinary trumpet sounded, Sanguine. So drooped Adonis, bathed in sanguine dew
And learn how sanguine expectations fade
He opens of his feet the sanguine tides,
Into its true proportion ; sanguine schemes,
Sanguineto. Of Sanguineto or broad Thrasymene,
Sanily. His sanity of reason not impaired,
Sank. Of hideous sense, I sank, nor step could crawl:
Then sank upon her straw with feeble moan.
Interest, and mortgages ; at last he sank,
They sank, delivered o'er
Swarmed with enchantment, till his spirit sank,
" Here on the grass perhaps asleep he sank,
Sank in our hearts, we felt as men should feel
Belief sank deep into the crowd
Of music reached its height, and even when sank
Both sank and died, the life-veins of the chased
Now pleased, when down the Straggler sank
Hever before so beautiful, sank down
Harassing both ; until he sank and pressed
With our conductor, pensively we sank
Sank down, as in a dream, among the poor ;
Sank to decay ; for he was gone, whose hand,
No—they sank into me, the bounteous gift
If to the opposite extreme they sank
Thrice sank as willingly. For he—whose nerves
To be repeated thence, but gently sank.
- Santo. In Pisa's Campo Santo, the smooth floor
Saone. Upon the bosom of the gentle Saone
Sap. To say your hardy virtue, and abate
Sapience. Of sapience in thy aspect, headless Owl!
Conceived was the Father's sapience,
Caused by the wish, as knows your sapience,
Sapient. If sapient Germany must lie deprest,
Calming to raise ; and, by a sapient Art
"Mid temples, served by sapient priests, and choirs
Sapless. Kindled and burnt among the sapless twigs Sapling. With his own hand a sapling, which he hooped
Of weed and sapling, along soft green turf
Upon the Beast the sapling rings ;
From Peter's hand the sapling dropped !
His sapling Peter has entwined,
That to the sapling ash gives birth ;
- Sapped. That sapped good thoughts, or scared them with defiance.
Sapped by the very beam that gilds.
Was sapped; and while she slept, the nightly damps Sapphire. Heaven's sapphire pavement, yet breathed well content,
The trembling eyebright showed her sapphire blue,
Clouds of all tincture, rocks and sapphire sky,
Saps. That saps the individual's bodily frame,
Saracens. There the Saracens were tamed,
Sarah. For George and Sarah Green ;
Sarah's. For MARY's humble, SARAH's silent claim, Sarcastic. Well might sarcastic Fancy then have whispered,
The Solitary, with a faint sarcastic smile
Sarnen's. On Sarnen's Mount, there judge of fit and right,
Sarum. And well he knew the spire of Sarum ;
Along the plain of Sarum, by the ghost
Sarum's. A Traveller on the skirt of Sarum's Plain
Of Sarum's Plain, my youthful spirit was raised ;
On Sarum's naked plain—than pyramid
Sat. Sat the poor girl, and forth did send
Sat round the basket piled with oaten cakes,
And Isabel sat silent, for her mind
Did she bring forth, and all together sat
And silent morning, I sat down, and there,
I sat within an undergrove
Who sat a ruler on his throne
A Pair who smilingly sat side by side,

Set—continued.

- He sat, and ate his food in solitude ;
A smile sat beaming on her pensive face.
Of his own hoard, where sat his gentle Mate
Satan. Whither spiteful Satan steered ;
" The Serpent, Satan, our first foe, that hath Satchel. Equipped with satchel, to a school, that stood
Sate. In that forsaken building where they sate
These ten years she had sate all day alone
We sate us down. The sky grew dark and darker :
I sate me down, and cannot but believe—
But when she sate within the touch of thee.
It was a July evening ; and he sate
His wife sate near him, teasing matted wool,
Or butterfly sate down, they were, I weeo,
Sate yesterday, and made a nest
There by the light of this old lamp they sate,
Sate with a fettered sheep before him stretched
I who ne'er sate within their bowers,
The banquet ;—or beneath the trees I sate
High in the breathless Hall the Minstrel sate,
Frail man ne'er sate in such another ;
Have sate and talked where gowans blow,
The Rustic sate.
Fair Ellen Irwin, when she sate
While there he sate, alone and blind,
She sate, from notice turning not away,
Sate watching in a forest shed,
He sate, and engulged with earnest pen
Enormous, dragged, while side by side they sate,
Bold with the thought, in reverence I sate down,
In moody posture there he sate.
Sate musio ; on that hill the Bard would rove,
Who sate in the shade of the Prior's Oak !
She sate beneath the spreading yew—
Had sate together in Raby Hall !
Of ravage saved—sate Emily.
While she sate listening in the shade,
For that she came ; there oft she sate
Your love of Him upon whose forehead sate
Of daisies, shepherds sate of yore and wove
His Eagle's favourite perch, while round him sate
While in a grove I sate reclined,
And, as good men do, he sate
Once he sate, as old books say,
The Foster-parents sate ;
In which he sate alone, with unclosed eyes,
" This little Child, while in the school he sate
There sate I down among the fair fresh flowers,
Meanwhile the stream, whose bank I sate upon,
And there she sate and sung—upon that tree—
To a green shady place, where down I sate
Cherry or maple, sate in close array,
The labourer, and the old man who had sate
From whom the stone was named, who there had sate,
Was audible ; and sate among the woods
Here sate in state, and fed with daily alms
Thus musing, in a wood I sate me down
And in the sheltered coppice where I sate,
While listlessly I sate, and, having closed
And in my own unlovely cell sate down
And on a rock sate down, to wait for day.
We sate and sate, wondering as if the night
Sate on a stone, and heard the bells speak out
One, at whose centre sate a lovely Boy,
And there he sate surrounded with a throng
A spacious grass-plot ; there, in silence, sate
Of an itinerant water I sate,
Of the Bastille, I sate in the open sun,
He had sate lord in many tender hearts ;
Whom no one owned, sate silent, shall I add,
From indiscriminate laughter, nor sate down
I sate half-sheltered by a naked wall ;
Near the loud waterfall ; or her who sate
We sate—we walked ; he pleased me with report
He sate, and even in their fixed lineaments,
Where fear sate thus, a cherished visitant,
Where sate the old Man on the cottage-bench ;
I sate with sad impatience. From within
We sate together, sighs came on my ear,
That in your arbour oftentimes she sate
For hours she sate ; and evermore her eye
The little child who sate to turn the wheel
We sate on that low bench : and now we felt,
Or, rather say, sate down by very chance,
Or sate companionless ; and here the book,
While at our pastoral banquet thus we sate
While we sate listening with compassion due,
Enkindled by the sun. He sate—and talked
Sate by my side, had vanished, if a wish
Sate down ; and to her office, with leave asked,
But more was given ; I studied as we sate
Beneath the shade we all sate down ; and there
' Nay, ye must wait my time ! ' and down she sate,
In whom, as by her lonely hearth she sate,
More pleased than sad, the grey-haired Wanderer
sate ;
By some accomplished Master, while he sate
That, near the quiet churchyard where we sate,

Sate—continued.

Seven lusty Sons sate daily round the board
Whereon our fathers sate. And mark his brow!
Seen, from the shady room in which we sate,
Or sate reclined; admiring quietly
Round which the Shepherd and his household sate

Satellites. Satellites burning in a lucid ring
Satiate. Beats frequent on thy satiate ear,
Satiates these; and stilled to eye and ear;
Filled with mementos, satiate with its part
Was never satiate. Their familiar voice,
Satisfied. Lingers, but Fancy is well satisfied;
Who, with her heart's experience satisfied,
Couch near their dams, with quiet satisfied;
Myself so satisfied in heart before.
And with the embrace was satisfied.
Be thou then satisfied in heart!
With my condition satisfied;
There stopped; her thirst was satisfied.
Is with that wholesome office satisfied,
And who was then ill satisfied but I?
Well satisfied, I thanked her, and she said,
(All claims of duty satisfied)
No longer breathe, but all be satisfied.
Enwrought upon thy mantle; satisfied
The earthquake is not satisfied at once;
Of all this glory filled and satisfied.
The humble worth that satisfied her heart:
And, with that ready answer satisfied,
So to declare the conscience satisfied;
Of kindred import, pleased and satisfied—
Until at length her soul was satisfied.
Be satisfied, 'tis well,—the end is gained;
Is satisfied, I cannot but believe.

Satisfies. That satisfies the simple and the meek,
By aught that innocently satisfies
That satisfies and ends in perfect rest.

Satisfy. And nothing less would satisfy him? No less;
A humbler bliss would satisfy my heart.
Their subtle flight could satisfy:
Which ever strives in vain itself to satisfy,

The visual powers of Nature satisfy,
Alone could satisfy her wide embrace.
Relax, to fix and satisfy the mind
Wherewith to satisfy the human soul?

Satisfying. See Self-satisfying.

A satisfying view upon that state

Saturn. The towns in Saturn are decayed,
Not such as Saturn ruled 'mid Latian wilds, Saturnian. She smiled; but Time, the old Saturnian seer,
With their belief, I sang Saturnian rule

Saturnine. And saturnine; her head not raised to hold
Satyr. While Fauns and Satyrs beat the ground
Of Satyrs in some viewless glade, with dance
These were the lurking Satyrs, a wild brood

Saucy. Beware of him! Throu, saucy cockatoo,
The saucy air. In this proud company

Saunter. Not yet in sight!—We'll saunter here awhile;
The wayward brain, to saunter through a wood!
I choose to saunter o'er the grassy plain,

Sauntered. Sauntered on this retired and difficult way.
We sauntered, played, or rioted; we talked
I sauntered, like a river murmuring

Sauntering. "A little idle sauntering Thing!"
The sauntering Horseman throws not with a slack
Sauntering to pluck the strawberries will unseen.

Savage. Yet here and there, if 'mid the savage scene
Shouts from the echoing hills with savage joy.
'Mid savage rocks, and seats of soot that shine,
In spot so savage, but with shuddering pain;
Upon these savage confines, we have seen you
They say Lord Clifford is a savage man;
In any corner of this savage Waste
Left to the mercy of that savage Man!
By Christian disturbers more savage than Turks,
Shocked at his savage aspect, from the place
So beautiful, through savage lands
In him the savage virtue of the Race,
Gives to this savage Pass its name.
"A savage wildness round him hung
A savage character was seen
Wild Chieftain of a savage Clan!
He, nursed 'mid savage passions that defile

Through park, or chase, or savage wood.
And bless for both this savage spot;
Of Christian Faith, this savage Island blessed
Will build their savage fortunes only there;
Rekindled thus, from dens and savage woods
How savage hosoms melted at the sound
A dweller in that savage place.
In life-long exile on a savage coast,
Direst of savage beasts, would roam in fear,
Where silver rocks the savage prospect clear
And still, below, where mid the savage scene
And savage Nature humbly joins the rite,
Drove far away the savage thoughts that roll

Savage—continued.

A naked savage, in the thunder shower.
Before us; savage region I which I paced
Such as, remote, 'mid savage wilderness,
Raising, through just gradation, savage life
By savage Nature? Shrivelled are their lips;
A savage horde among the civilised,
Unheard, the savage nations bowed the head
Motion of savage instinct, my delight

Savages. Wild beasts, or uncouth savages impure!
Savannah. Regions of wood and wide savannah, vast Savannahs. The Youth of green savannahs spake,
And green savannahs, she should share

Sava. Save where aloft the subtle sunbeams shine
Save where, with sparkling foam, a small cascade
Save where, along the shady western marge,
Of splendour—save the beacon's spiry head
Save when the avalanche breaks loose, to rend
Save when, a stranger seen below, the boy
Save cornfields stretched and stretching without bound;

Save that the bastard, of those regions bleak
To save thee from the extreme of penury
That's all—God save you, Sir. Ha! as I live,
Must needs step in, and save my life. The look
Led by my hand to save thee from perdition
That Woman will come o'er this Waste to save thee.
But what is done will save you from the blank
Holla! to hed, good Folks, within! O save us!
Outspread, as if to save himself from falling!—
I hurried back with her.—Oh save me, Sir,
Save, in a corner, a heap of dry leaves,
Save those who to my sorrows lend
Save six feet of earth where our forefathers lie!
Save thee, my pretty Love!
Save one wee, hungry, nibbling mouse,
Me to save from chance of harm:
Save a little neighbouring rill,
Save that above a single height
"But save us from you-screaming owl!"
Save a Mother and her Child!
Or Rival, save the Queen of night
Where, save the rugged road, we find
And save your souls alive!
Save from the trickling household rill;
Save one, one only, when I stood forlorn,
Save only far as thought and feeling blend
Save haply for some feeble glimmering
Softly!—To save the contrite, Jesus bled.
Save when the wind sweeps by and sounds are caught
And perished, save one narrow cell;
All, all were dispossessed, save him whose smile
Save where that pearly whiteness
Or save this honoured Laad from every Lord
Till all is dim, save this bright Stone
Save insect-swarms that hum in air afloat,
Save that the Cock is crowing, a shrill note,
Save in this Rill that took from blood the name
Or aught in Syrian deserts left to save Attended but by thy own voice, save when
With no one near save the omnipresent God,
Man placed him here, and God, he knows, can save.
"My all save one, a Daughter dear!
Thought he, may want not skill to save.
For why?—to save his Father's land;
DE-IRIANS—he would save them from God's IRK;
And if full oft the Sanctuary save
Save by Self-will. Lo! from that distant shore,
Save when the Owllet's unexpected scream
And nothing save the moving ship's own light
To us save matter for a thoughtful sigh,
And fondly strives her struggling friend to save.
While all lie prostrate, save the tyrant few
"Knowledge will save me from the threatened woe."
Not scourge, to save the People—not destroy.
For—save the calm repentance sheds o'er strife
Save hope that we, yet bound to Earth, may share
Is smooth as clear, save where with dimples small
Save He who came as rightful Heir
Save in the rolls of heaven, where hers may live
Of all this town, save only in this place,
Save that, atop, the subtle sunbeams shine,
Save when the startling cliff unfrequent rends:
Save that the stranger seen below, the boy
Save in the land where all things are forgot, (What, save thyself, none dares through earth and skies)

Save when, amid the stately grove of oaks,
To give and take a greeting that might save
And, save the flowing water's peaceful voice,
Save when realities of act and mien,
And stood of all dismantled, save the last (Save only one, hereafter to be named)
In anything, save only as the act
Save when the stings of viperous remorse,
A revolution, save at this one time;
Those musings or diverted, save that once
All meek and silent, save that through a rift—
With rocks encompassed, save that to the south
Was silent; save the solitary clock

 I saw when, from the melancholy walls . . . 702 Prelude 8. 210
 Of this I little saw, cared less for it. . . . 703 Prelude 8. 292
 Though fallen from bliss, when in the East he saw . . . 709 Prelude 8. 660
 I saw the Revolutionary Power . . . 710 Prelude 9. 50
 Upon their virtues; saw, in rudest men, . . . 715 Prelude 9. 386
 Sometimes methought I saw a pair of knights . . . 716 Prelude 9. 454
 Saw them and touched: the rest was conjured up . . . 719 Prelude 10. 75
 I saw them in their rest, a sojourner . . . 722 Prelude 10. 319
 Or saw, like other men, with bodily eyes, . . . 724 Prelude 10. 444
 That through the time's exceeding fierceness saw . . . 724 Prelude 10. 451
 I clearly saw that neither these nor ought . . . 725 Prelude 10. 474
 And when I saw the turf that covered him, . . . 726 Prelude 10. 540
 As I advanced, all that I saw or felt . . . 726 Prelude 10. 553
 Yea, could not but be right, because we saw . . . 728 Prelude 11. 51
 The quality of the metal which I saw. . . . 728 Prelude 11. 82
 I saw the Spring return, and could rejoice, . . . 735 Prelude 12. 33
 I loved whate'er I saw: nor lightly loved, . . . 737 Prelude 12. 176
 Then, rescending the bare common, saw . . . 738 Prelude 12. 248
 There saw into the depth of human souls, . . . 742 Prelude 13. 166
 Here, calling up to mind what then I saw, . . . 743 Prelude 13. 221
 Backwards, nor checked his flight until I saw . . . 744 Prelude 13. 319
 Saw multitudes of men, and, here and there, . . . 744 Prelude 13. 321
 As if on wings, and saw beneath me stretched . . . 751 Prelude 14. 380

After short absence, curiously I scanned
Misery not lightly passed, but sometimes scanned
But seemed there present ; and I scanned them all,
Was scanned, as I had scanned the moral world ?
The peace required, he scanned the laws of light
We scanned the various features of the scene :

Scarcely—continued.

It seems, and scarcely less than pitiful,
And, on the burial-day, could scarcely gain
For me, the emotion scarcely was less strong
(Ye scarcely can) amid its sheltering trees
And scarcely could you fancy that a gleam
Scarcely a wish, but one bright pleasing thought,
Of ceaseless motion, that might scarcely seem
With impulses that scarcely were by these

Scare. To scare him as a trespasser,
Thou art I—a friend at hand, to scare ;
I am not sent to scare thee or deceive ;
The flame-eyed eagle oft wouldst scare

Scare-crow. From any garden scare-crow dangled.
A scare-crow pattern of old age dressed up

Scared. Scared by the fite and rumbling drum's alarms,
He landed ; and by many dangers scared,
Like a scared Bird encouraged to renew
Scared them, while they lay still beneath the shears.
That sapped good thoughts, or scared them with defiance.

Whence the scared Owl on pinions grey
Joyous, nor scared at its own liberty,
Whose white felt scared him thence, or wind that blew

Her wisdom stiffed, and her justice scared.
But he repined not. Though the plough was scared

Scarf. Of stole and doublet, hood and scarf.
Scarlet.—Of coats and of jackets grey, scarlet, and
green.

Rich store of scarlet hips is mine,
The pious bird with the scarlet breast.
—Of flowers that with one scarlet gleam
Of olive green and scarlet bright,
A Woman in a scarlet cloak,
And there sits in a scarlet cloak,
And though your sins be red as scarlet,
Ye wrangling Schoolmen, of the scarlet hood !

To rival summer's brightest scarlet flower ;
The shepherd's grey to martial scarlet changed,
And, in his scarlet coat.

Scars. And, while he talked of blows and scars,
Covered from top to toe with scars ;
Among the rocks and winding scars ;
And to his grave will go with scars,
By scars which his activity has left

Scathed. (Blighted or scathed tho' many branches be,
Scatter. Along—and scatter and divide,
To scatter seeds of life on barbarous shores ;
Oh may the Almighty scatter with His grace
Scatter the colours from the plumes that bear
We shall not scatter through the plains and rocks
I heard her scatter some endearing words

Scattered. See Loosely-scattered, Thinly-scattered,
Wildly-scattered.

Cheering its naked waste of scattered stone,
Deep yellow beams the scattered stems illumine,
Of scattered herds, that in the meadow graze,
And if they had care, it has scattered their cares
But where the scattered stars are seen
As in a natural temple scattered o'er
Lay round me, scattered like a flock of sheep—
Wide open for the scattered Poor.

Scattered, a Cyclades of various shapes
Among the scattered stars.
Where they bloomed singly, or in scattered knots,)
Here scattered, like a random seed,
Of scattered quails by signs do reunite,
And scattered rural farms of aspect bright ;
Scattered on all sides by the hideous jars
Influence, at least among a scattered few,
Scattered all Britain over, through deep glen,
Réunions, till among the scattered clouds
Among the scattered rocks ;

Laid one by one, or scattered on the ground.
Her way pursuing among scattered clouds,
And scattered many a lusty palisade
And ever, scattered from his palsied hand,
Some scattered leaf, or marks which, in one track,
Deep yellow beams the scatter'd holes illumine,
From town to town and through wide scattered realms

Among my schoolfellows I scattered round
Or sleeping nameless in their scattered graves,
As scattered birds troop to the fowler's lure,
Exposed on the bare fell, were scattered love,
A sort of alien scattered from the clouds.
Are scattered everywhere, no rarities,
A sort of alien scattered from the clouds.
Are scattered everywhere, no rarities,
A sort of alien scattered from the clouds.
Are scattered everywhere, no rarities,
A sort of alien scattered from the clouds.

Scattered—continued.

Some scattered o'er the level, others perched . . .
Scattered about under the mouldering walls . . .
That all the scattered subjects which compose . . .
Are scattered at the feet of Man—like flowers. . .
Wild tracts of forest-ground, and scattered groves,
Scattered through half the circle of the sky ;
Certes were self-taught damsels, scattered births . . .
Then to be greeted by the scattered huts. . .
Scattered about us, nor through dearch of aught . . .
Scattereth. Who scattereth lustre o'er noon-day,
Scattering. See Leaf-scattering.

Scattering thy gladness without care,
Scattering fresh flowers ; though happier far, I ween,
Scattering a ditty each to her desire,
By scattering gleams, through your distress,
Scattering, like birds escaped the fowler's net,
No longer, scattering to the heedless winds
Scattering this far-fetched moisture from my wings,
While in soft gloom the scattering bowers recede,

Scatterings. Deep, gloomy were they, and severe ;
the scatterings
Sparry and bright, rough scatterings of the hills.
Scatters. While thro' the stillness scatters wild dismay.

As fast as a musician scatters sounds
Scavenger. The begging scavenger, with hat in hand ; Scawfell. Ranging the heights of Scawfell or Black-comb.

Scawfell's. See Scawfell's
Scene. And round the broad-spread oak, a glimmering scene.

And its own twilight softens the whole scene,
Even now she decks for me a distant scene,
How hlest, delicious scene ! the eye that greets
Gently illumine a sober scene ;
Yet here and there, if 'mid the savage scene
A scene more fair than what the Grecian feigns
And led by nature into a wild scene
On the more distant scene,—how lovely 'tis
The world, and human life, appeared a scene
Into a narrow valley's pleasant scene
But for the scene which we by chance have witnessed.

Of the dark firs, a visionary scene !
Involved and restless all—a scene
Is left to muse upon the solemn scene.
A virgin scene !—A little while I stood,
This health, this calm, and quiet scene ;
That on a wild secluded scene impress
The scene that opens now ?
Might stop before this favoured scene,
A thing as steadfast as the scene
A scene of soft and lovely hue !
Together make as sweet a scene
Build up a wild fantastic scene ;
Baffle the threat, bright Scene, from Orrest-head
Over the pomp and beauty of a scene
O froward Fancy ! 'mid a scene
And yet how fair the rural scene !
Strange scene, fantastic and uncasy
Filling from morn to night the heroic scene
Oh Life ! without thy chequered scene
My spirit is the scene of such wild art
These are before me ; and the varied scene
By aught that mingled with the tragic scene
Pleased rather with some soft ideal scene,
Upon a soothing scene,
Or book regardless, and of that fair scene
In a deep vision's intellectual scene,

More than theatric force to Shakspeare's scene ;—
And round the humming elm, a glimmering scene !
While, by the scene compos'd, the breast subsides,
No wrack of all the pageant scene remains,
The scene is waken'd, yet its peace unbroke,
Light up of tranquil joy a sober scene ;
And still, below, where mid the savage scene
—When the Sun bids the gorgeous scene farewell,
So fair, and while upon the fancied scene
A lonely scene more lonesome, among woods,
A visible scene, on which the sun is shining ?
A lonely scene !—Along the smooth green turf
—Of that external scene which round me lay,
The peaceful scene oft filled me with surprise
Of mountain torrents ; or the visible scene
At last, the dead man ; 'mid that heauteous scene
Led, as before, we should behold the scene,
And now I looked upon the living scene ;
Some half-frequented scene, where wider streets
To have, for instance, brought upon the scene
With the ever-shifting figures of the scene,
And yielded to all changes of the scene
The scene before him stands in perfect view
A novel scene, did often in this way
Then from the quiet of that scene passed on ;
Was laid with tears. Then suddenly the scene
Longing for skill to paint a scene so bright
To a comparison of scene with scene,
What'e'r the scene presented to her view
I roamed, in daily presence of this scene, . . .

Scene—continued.

With side-long eye looks out upon the scene, . . . 756
 Said I, "The music and the sprightly scene . . . 773
 We scanned the various features of the scene . . . 788
 To a proficient of the tragic scene . . . 793
 On the hill-sides, a cheerful quiet scene, . . . 823
 Is either fair and tempting, a soft scene . . . 830
 The words he uttered, and the scene that lay . . . 857
 The agitated scene before his eye . . . 863
 Upon the brighter scene. How blest that pair . . . 888

 Yet happy they who in life's later scene . . . L.I. 96
Scenes. Fair scenes, erewhile, I taught, a happy child,
 Than those soft scenes through which thy childhood strayed,
 That animates the scenes of public life . . . 269
 Fair scenes for childhood's opening bloom, . . . 302
 Than for like scenes in moral vision shown, . . . 360
 Withered at eve. From scenes of art which chase . . . 388
 To homefelt pleasures and to gentle scenes; . . . 494
 Here, as 'mid busier scenes, ground steep and rough, . . . 497
 To scenes Arcadian, whispering, through soft air,
 Fair scenes! with other eyes, than once, I gaze, . . . 591
 Through ever-changing scenes of votive quest . . . 634
 The scenes which were a witness of that joy . . . 641
 Of things forgotten, these same scenes so bright, . . . 641
 And tranquil scenes, that universal power . . . 647
 In the great city, 'mid far other scenes; . . . 648
 Conjuring up scenes as obsolete in freaks . . . 657
 Or scenes renowned for beauty, I explored . . . 677
 Music, and shifting pantomimic scenes, . . . 691
 Are now my theme; and, foremost of the scenes, . . . 692
 Of novelty survived for scenes like these; . . . 693
 Builds for herself; scenes different there are, . . . 697
 And all the scenes of childhood reappear, . . . 699
 From those sad scenes when meditation turned, . . . 709
 Which they were wont to be. Through kindred scenes,
 The milder minstrelsy of rural scenes . . . 737
 And journey far, revisiting the scenes . . . 762
 Of duke or earl, from scenes of courtly pomp . . . 859

Schoolfellow. " His Schoolfellow, who elder was than he
 " His Schoolfellow, whom he had so besought, Schoolfellows. Among my schoolfellows I scattered
 round
 As one of many schoolfellows compelled,
Schoolmaster. A village schoolmaster was he
 His Schoolmaster supplied; books that explain Schoolmen. Ye wrangling Schoolmen, of the scarlet hood
 Among the schoolmen, and Platonic forms
Schools. I could fetch lessons out of wiser schools
 Framed in the schools where Wisdom dwelt retired,
 That shames the Schools.
 Beneath the brutal sword?—Her haughty Schools
 Alas! the Genius of our age, from Schools
 In heathen schools of philosophic lore;
 And storms the pillars rock. But we such schools
 Fetched with cupidity from heartless schools,
 Such course he held! Bologna's learned schools
 Let them parade among the Schools at will,
 Even to the rudest novice of the Schools.
 That are the commonplace of the schools—
 Were open schools in which I daily read
 Amid the wrangling schools—a snarling hung,
 Her equal rights, her churches and her schools—
 And faithful care of unambitious schools
School-time. My school-time, an apartment he had owned,
Schoolward. Homeward or schoolward, aye what ye behold!
 Homeward and schoolward whensoe'er he went,
Schwytz. To dignity—in thee, O Schwytz! I am seen
 Thy name, O Schwytz, in happy freedom keep!
Science. No common soul. In youth by science nursed,
 Science advances with gigantic strides;
 Stood Science waiting for the hour
 Science, wide-spread and spreading still as he
 Shames the degenerate grasp of modern science,
 Of solitude, with love of science strong,
 Isis and Cam, to patient Science dear!
 Of Science laid them open to mankind—
 Truths whose thick veil Science has drawn aside?
 Enough of Science and of Art;
 Surpass all science and all utterance;
 Since Science first, with all her sacred train,
 Science with joy saw Superstition fly
 Where, throned in gold, immortal Science reigns;
 Where science, leagued with holier truth,
 Science appears but what in truth she is,
 Have made me pay to science and to arts
 Suffers for this. Even Science, too, at hand
 Of geometric science. Though advanced
 But turned to abstract science, and there sought
 Of science, and among her simplest laws
 Of science, and philosophy, and sense!
 The burthen of existence. Science then
 O'er which enchained by science he had loved
 Science severe, or word of holy Wit
 Lodged in her bosom; and, by science led,
Scientific. A miracle of scientific lore,
Scilly. Forth-looking toward the rocks of Scilly,
 A bare rock of the Scilly cluster;
Scimitar. His icy scimitar, a foretaste yields
 The scimitar, that yields not to the charms
Scoff. The insinuated scoff of coward tongues,
Scoffed. Some scoffed at him with hellish mockery,
 The last of their humanity, and scoffed
 And re-confirmed—were scoffed at with a smile
Scoffer's. Than this dull product of a scoffer's pen,
Scoffers. Was taken up by scoffers in their pride,
 With scoffers, seeking light and gay revenge Scoffs. With scoffs and taunts, like Vulcan out of heaven
Scolding. Of sharp command and scolding intermixed.
Scop. See Scrap.
 She saw the carman bend to scoop the flood
 Of Patriots scoop their freedom out, with hand
 Of hermit, dubious where to [?] scoop] his cell;
Scooped. When giants scooped from out the rocky ground
 Scooped out of living rock, and near a brook
 Scooped from the sacred earth where his dear relics lie.
 Self-poised, and scooped into ten thousand cells,
 That it was scooped within the living stone,—
 Nor aught of blinder vacancy, scooped out
 Had newly scooped a running stream. He rose,
 From the beginning, hollowed out and scooped
 Fresh as the freshest field, scoop'd out, and green Scoops. Death's hireling, who scoops out his neighbour's grave,
Scope. While Fancy ranging with free scope
 When some great change gives boundless scope
 Buried in glory, far beyond the scope
 To which our fancies, mingling, gave free scope
 That virtuous Liberty hath been the scope
 With wishes of still bolder scope
 Which love had prompted, yielding scope
 Had mortal action e'er a nobler scope?

Scope—continued.
 Meek, patient, steadfast, and with loftier scope,
 But Sculpture here, with the divinest scope
 Yes, for them whose souls have scope
 Into those jarring fractions.—Let thy scope
 For One who speaks in numbers; ample scope
 From all that lies within the scope
 Others of wider scope, where living men,
 The moral properties and scope of things.
 May yet have scope to range among her own,
 That, far as kindly Nature hath free scope

Scorched. Had summer scorched the fields; not twice had fallen,
Scorching. Scorching blight or noxious dew,
 And from the scorching noon-tide sun,
Scorn. See Eight-score.
 And in one night sent twenty score of sheep
 Of sheep I numbered a full score,
 (Take from him what you will upon the score
Scorned. Have scored thy time, and punctually timed
 The cross upon thy shoulder scored
Scorn. Be scorn and fear and hope alike forgot
 And scorn,—against all enemies prepared,
 The wise man to that scorn which wisdom holds
 Asked him in scorn what Business there he had;
 We call, and scorn the other as Time's spendthrift;
 Through good and evil, obliquy and scorn,
 Or fear disguised in simulated scorn,
 To me a kingdom! spare the bitter scorn:
 But scorn with scorn outbrave;
 To scorn the declaration,
 And your brow is free from scorn,
 Who first, weighed down by scorn, in some lone

 In scorn I speak not;—they are what their birth
 I could have laughed myself to scorn to find
 Smile if thou wilt, but not in scorn,
 As his distress is sharp, would scorn my theme,
 But, of his scorn repenting soon, he drew
 Nor yet redeemed from scorn.
 His scorn returns—his hate revives;
 Scorn not the Sonnet; Critic, you have frowned,
 Have killed him, Scorn should write his epitaph.
 Must scorn a timid song.
 —Strange words they seemed of slight and scorn;
 That less should scorn the abandoned clay;
 Whether the mighty beam, in scorn upheld,
 The rough Ætolians smiled with bitter scorn.
 Curses are his dire portion, scorn, and hate,
 But mighty Winter the device shall scorn.
 With impious thanksgiving, the Almighty's scorn!
 Opposed to hopes that batted upon scorn,
 To suffer pains with heathen scorn and hate
 Of what is won, we overlook or scorn
 They—who have seen the noble Roman's scorn
 But not in scorn:—the Matron's Faith may lack Due audience, how for aught but scorn defy
 Gay June would scorn us. But when bleak winds
 roar
 The Torrents chant their praise, inspiring scorn
 'Tis meet that I endure your scorn;
 Presumed to grapple with their scorn,
 Thus to become at once the scorn
 I scorn your Chiefs—men who would lead,
 Then peace to cruelty and scorn,
 Aloft in sign of taunting scorn,
 The oppression of the tumult—wrath and scorn—
 Nor scorn the aid which Fancy oft doth lend
 With scorn, invoking a vindictive ban
 Be lost, through apathy, or scorn, or fear,
 When I shall scorn thy voice or mock thy mien!
 Ah! scorn not hastily their rule who try
 Greedy ambition, armed to treat with scorn
 Speak, Thou, whose massy strength and stature
 scorn
 His thrift thy uselessness will never scorn;
 Witness those glances of indignant scorn
 Thy gifts, thy beauty scorn,
 With modest scorn reject whatever would blind

- Scorned. As if they scorned both resting-place and rest!
 The future scorned, the past defied;
 Could gentleness be scorned by those fierce Men,
 Scorned or forgotten, Thou canst testify,
 The strength of backward-looking thoughts is scorned.
 Scorned, or neglected, fear not such a dearth.
 So low as to be scorned without a sin;
 Nor arduous, yet will not be scorned by them,
 I scorned indifference; but, inflamed with thirst
 His scorned, or unacknowledged, sovereignty.
Scorner. Thou wert a scorner of the fields, my Friend,
Scornful. As if in scornful mockery of me;
 Of scornful pity be the just reward
Scorning. Thou art laughing and scorning;
 And, slighting sails and scorning oars,
 Dead to the world and scorning earth-horn joys.
 Scorning that world whose blindness makes her strong?
 If thou persist, and, scorning moderation,
 Scorning love-whispers shrinks from love itself
Scorns. Who scorns a false utilitarian lure
 That there is One who scorns thy power—
 But this swift travel scorns the company
 Rise as he may, his grandeur scorns the test
 That scorns temptation; power defies
Scorpion. The Crab, the Scorpion, and the Bull—
Scorpions. Ay, in the word a thousand scorpions lodge:
Scot. "Quell the Scot," claims the Lance—
Scotch. Of those Scotch Rovers echo through the vale.
 Two long Scotch miles, through rain or snow,
Scotland. Such as grave Livers do in Scotland use,
 The hoary peaks of Scotland that give birth
 And Scotland has a thief as good,
 We'll wander Scotland thorough
 How Wallace fought for Scotland; left the name
 Whose echo rings through Scotland to this hour!
 Among the wilds of Scotland, in a tract
 Who swept from Scotland, in a flame of zeal,
Scotland's. Or where dank sea-weed lashes Scotland's shores:
 Of Scotland's rocky wilds, did seem
 Ere the tired head of Scotland's Queen
 To Scotland's heaths; or those that crossed the sea
 The fatal end of Scotland's King.
 To Scotland's court in service of his Queen,
Scott. For thee, O Scott! compelled to change
Scottish. Back to our post, and strip the Scottish Foray
 Would drive those Scottish Rovers to their dens
 Right onward to the Scottish strand
 Or Roy, renowned through many a Scottish dell;
 The Scottish Church, both on himself and those
 I knew a Scottish Peasant who possessed
 In which the Scottish Laird had long possessed
 The Scottish Broom on Bird-nest brye.
Scoured. Alternate, all a summer's day, or scoured
Scourge. Who, while they struggle from the scourge to flee,
 Of vain conceit, an iron scourge!
 Not scourge, to save the People—not destroy.
 Leave this unknit Republic to the scourge
 Whose country groan'd under a foreign scourge?
Scourged. That should be scourged, not pitied.
 Restless Minds,
 How they have scourged old foes, perfidious friends:
 Saw we not Henry scourged at Becket's Shrine?
Scourges. And the winds roused the Deep with fiercer scourges.
 And scourges England struggling to be free:
Scouring. A look of mine would send him scouring back,
 And, scouring toward him o'er the grassy plain,
Scours. See Scow's.
 Or Boreas when he scours the snow
Scout. With breath suspended, like a listening scout.
Scout-like. Scout-like, and gained the summit;
 'twas a day . . .

Scrap. A scrap of land they have, but they

- Scratch. Throughout the landscape; tuft, stone, scratch minute—
Scratches. She scratches, ransacks up the earth for food,
Scream. Fair spectacle,—but instantly a scream
 What power is in his wildest scream,
 She saw—and uttered with a scream,
 Both when he heard the eagles scream,
 Save when the Owl's unexpected scream
 That had been ours. There let the fiddle scream,
 Thrilled by some female vendor's scream, belike
Screamed. While plovers screamed with tumult harsh Screaming. But you may love a screaming owl,
 Ye screaming Sea-mews, in the concert join!
 Grimacing, writhing, screaming,—him who grinds
Screams. From Bruno's forest screams the affrighted jay,
 She screams—she cannot move for joy;
 Vexed is he, and screams loud. The last I saw
 Screams round the Arch-druid's brow the sea-mew—white
 From Bruno's forest screams the trighted jay,
 And long halloos and screams, and echoes loud,
Screeching. But save us from you screeching owl!
Screech-owl. "You screech-owl," says the Sailor, turning . . .
Screen. Interposed so bright a screen—
 No screen, no fence could I discover;
 Ask, for its pleasure, screen or canopy
 To serve—an unscorched screen
 That screen the morning dew.
 To stir the heart that would too closely screen
 Those mighty forests, once the bison's screen,
 Or behind a rocky screen—
 Nor hedge-row screen invites my steps abroad;
 Is here—how grateful this impervious screen!
Screened. Screened from the sun. Supine the Wanderer lay,
 Whose battlements were screened by tufted trees.
 Screened by its parent, so that little mound
 Screen'd from assault of every bitter blast . . .
- Srees. See Glennidding-srees.
Scribble. Will look and scribble, scribble on and look,
Scribbled. With crosses and with cyphers scribbled o'er,
 Scribbled with verse: a broken angling-rod
Scrlbe. But History, time's slavish scribe, will tell Scrlp. You from my shoulder took my scrip and threw it
 The scrip that held his food, and I forgot
 Thy warlike person with the staff and scrip . . .
 Sustained by what her scrip might yield,
 Takes one unsparing handful for the scrip
 But now, relinquishing the scrip and staff,
Scriptural. And wedded Life, through scriptural mysteries,
Scripture. From Scripture she a name did borrow;
 The whole design of Scripture history;
 And that most awful scripture which declares
 The voice of wisdom whispering scripture texts
 In Scripture sanctified—the patient brute,
Scriptures. Have long borne witness as the Scriptures teach?
 —With promises the Hebrew Scriptures teem:
Scroll. One precious, tender-hearted, scroll . . .
 And Strangers even the slighted Scroll may prize,
 Each, in its ornamental scroll, enclosed;
Scrolls. The very gilding, lamps and painted scrolls,
 Is thronged with staring pictures and huge scrolls,
Scroop. See Scroop.
 Of hermit, dubious where to scroop [sic] his cell;
Scrub. To see the arch grimace of Marquis Scrub,
 Scrub lives a genuine Marquess above stairs,
Scruple. And so without scruple they called him Ralph Jones.
 If cloistered Avarice scruple not to wrong
 No just remembrance, scruple, or wise doubt?
Scrupled. Or purposes; nor scrupled to proclaim,
Scruples. Their verdict would abolish these weak scruples.
 Her virtuous scruples to remove, her fears allay.
 Though timid scruples checked me long;
 The Stranger sighs, nor scruples to upbraid
 For this Adventurer scruples not
 And doubts and scruples seldom teased the brain,
 At consciences perplexed with scruples nice!
 Of forward youth—that scruples not to solve
 Or what their scruples construed to be such—
 From the maternal breast; then scruples rose;
Scrupulous. Would that our scrupulous Sires had dared to leave
 Unchecked by pride or scrupulous doubt,
 And why that scrupulous reserve? In sooth
 To forward reason's else too scrupulous march.
 With scrupulous care; but these restrictions soon
 Other support, not scrupulous whence it came;
 How many scrupulous worshippers fall down
Scudding. Of trusty anchorage, or scudding o'er

Sculpture—continued.

- Scudding away from snare to snare, I plied
Sculpture. But Sculpture here, with the divinest scope
 Was fondly seized by Sculpture, to restore
Sculptured. See Rudely-sculptured.
 Where a cross-legged Knight lies sculptured
 They came to lowly bench or sculptured stall,
 Like a Form sculptured on a monument
 But sculptured out of living stone
 Was it by mortals sculptured?—weary slaves
 Or plague the fancy 'mid the sculptured shows
 Share with their sculptured fellows, that, green-
 grown,
 And sculptured Forms of Warriors brave:
 The virgin sculptured on his Christian shield:—
 If sculptured emblems of our mortal doom
 Of sculptured oak stood here, with drapery lined;
 The semblance bearing of a sculptured form
 What hoots the sculptured tomb? And who can blame,
 The sculptured image of some patron-saint,
Sculpture's. (Sentient by Grecian sculpture's marvellous power),
 As nobly graced by Sculpture's patient toil;
'Scutcheon. And if the Motto on thy 'scutcheon teach Scythe. Some injury done to sickle, flail, or scythe,
 Cuts like a scythe, while through the clouds
 Of Desolation, and to Ruin's scythe
 Fearless of plough and scythe; or darkling wren
 A prellation to the mower's scythe.
 The plough he guided, and the scythe he swayed;
 His spade and hoe, mattock and glittering scythe,
Sea. See Salt-sea.
 A solemn sea! whose billows wide around
 Gapes in the centre of the sea—and, through
 The silent sea. From the sweet thoughts of home
 Torn from our hut, that stood beside the sea
 Upon the midland Sea. You knew his bearing
 Of obvious shelter, as a shipless sea.
 On a dead sea under a burning sky,
 And laughed so loud it seemed that the smooth sea
 The moonlight desert, and the moonlight sea:
 And two are gone to sea,
 And two are gone to sea,
 "On Kilmve's smooth shore, by the green sea,
 For Kilmve by the green sea,"
 Till all was traquill as summer sea.
 Fix thine eyes upon the sea
 Was gone to sea, and he was left alone,
 In lands beyond the sea;
 Chains tie us down by land and sea;
 A loog, long way of land and sea!
 She with her mother crossed the sea;
 From the wild sea a cherished Visitant;
 While she pursues her course through the dreary sea.
 But thou, a School-boy, to the sea hadst carried
 Of the vast sea didst bring a watchful heart
 In his bark the polar sea;
 Let this be land, and that be sea,
 Will say't, who know'st both land and sea,
 To Scotland's heaths; or those that crossed the sea
 Upon the tropic sea.
 With him to sail across the sea,
 The eagle, lord of land and sea,
 The oracle, upon the silent sea,
 In earth, and air, and earth-embracing sea,
 In endless union, earth and sea above,
 What more changeful than the sea?
 Contend ye with each other? of the sea
 To sailor's prayer breathed from a darkening sea,
 Could humanize the creatures of the sea,
 Rocking and roaring like a sea;
 Where, shining like the smoothest sea,
 The gentleness of heaven broods o'er the Sea:
 Of the old Sea some reverential fear,
 With Ships the sea was sprinkled far and nigh,
 This Sea that bares her bosom to the moon;
 Have sight of Proteus rising from the sea;
 Until their spirits mingled in the sea
 Of the wild sea; and I would have
 Down to the mighty Sea.
 She must espouse the everlasting Sea.
 And saw, while sea was calm and air was clear,
 Two Voices are there; one is of the sea,
 Thou hadst a voice whose sound was like the sea:
 Of British freedom, which, to the open sea:
 She of the Danube and the Northern Sea,
 Or the soft breezes from the Atlantic sea,
 The azure sea upswelled upon the sight,
 Like some Nymph-haunted grot beneath the roaring sea.
 And fame as largely spread as land and sea,
 That landward stretches from the sea,
 Borne gaily o'er the sea.
 Thou who trod'st the billowy sea,
 Hath reached the encincture of that gloomy sea
 When universal sea the mountains overflowed.
 And proudly think, beside the chafing sea,

Sea—continued.

- As the dread Voice that speaks from out the sea
 A sea of foliage, tossing with the gale,
 Of either sea, an Islander by birth,
 Into a natural port, a tideless sea,
 This sea of life without a visible shore,
 For whom the sea was made un navigable.
 Air, earth, sea, and heaven, success betoken."
 Ye winds of ocean, and the midland sea,
 Sea, desert, what do these avail?
 Rich conquest waits them!—the tempestuous sea
 Unlooked-for outlet to an open sea,
 From sea to sea, impervious to the sun
 No; 'tis the earth-voice of the mighty sea,
 But near, or hanging sea and sky between,
 On the relentless sea that holds him fast
 On the mute sea in this unroofed bay;
 Thy domination; as the whole vast Sea
 Then, while the Sailor, 'mid an open sea
 A Bard, who, lately near the wide-spread sea
 To instantaneous plunging in, deep Sea!
 On the smooth bottom of this clear bright sea,
 He, in disgust, turned from the neighbouring sea
 For poor to Sea I went, and poor I still remain.
 Though poor to Sea I went, and poor I still remain.
 Towering above the sea and little ships;
 But when a storm, on sea or mountain bred,
 While heaven's vast sea of voices chants their praise.
 Soon may the punctual sea in vain respire
 Of earth, sky, sea, and air, was vivified.
 Motions and Means, on land and sea at war
 That dances on the sea.
 Your Master's throne is set.—Deaf was the Sea;
 Whose everlasting laws, sea, earth, and heaven obey."
 Whose smiles, diffused o'er land and sea,
 And harboured ships, whose pride is on the sea,
 Earth, sea, thy presence feel—nor less,
 Tossed on land, with you grey towers that still
 Of sea and land the bosom of a stormy sea.
 And tired of listening to the boisterous sea—
 That smites this thy sea,
 O yield him back his privilege!—No sea
 On sky, earth, river, lake and sea;
 Life to risk by sea and land,
 "But courage, Father! let us out to sea—
 Were, in the conscious sea, roused and prolonged
 Into a safer sea—
 And, to far-travelled storms of sea and land,
 Mimicking a troubled sea,
 Like one whose own country's far over the sea;
 We sail the sea of life—a Calm One finds,
 Thy Form was sleeping on a glassy sea,
 The light that never was, on sea or land,
 Beside a sea that could not cease to smile;
 A smiling sea, and be what I have been:
 This sea in anger, and that dismal shore.
 But He, who was on land, at sea,
 Six weeks beneath the moving sea,
 And all who struggled with the Sea,
 Sea—Ship—drowned—Shipwreck—so it came,
 In peace is roaring like the Sea;
 Gone from this world of earth, air, sea, and sky,
 Land and sea
 Our Souls have sight of that immortal sea
 Th' interminable sea of sable blue.
 A solemn sea! whose vales and mountains round
 Where Horror-led his sea of ice assails,
 And drove us onward like two ships at sea,
 As a sea without a wave.
 The sea, or trod the earth, to peace estrang'd."
 Proud spring-tide swellings for a regular sea,
 Of sea or sky, no colours of green fields;
 Work like a sea? Not uselessly employed,
 How, when the Sea threw off his evening shade
 Lighted by gleams of moonlight from the sea
 Saw blessings spread around me like a sea
 Into the boundless sea, and rather makes
 A creek in the vast sea; for, all degrees
 Full-formed, like Venus rising from the sea;
 The sea lay laughing at a distance; near
 The hook, had turned my eyes toward the wide sea.
 And saw the sea before me, and the hook,
 Ships he can guide across the pathless sea,
 Land-warriors, kings, or admirals of the sea,
 Expressing, as in mirror, sea and land,
 And, as the sea propels, from zone to zone,
 That would engulf him soon in the ravenous sea—
 And smooth as marble or a waveless sea,
 And as the desert hath green spots, the sea
 (Itself like a sea rock) the low remains
 Of inland waters; the great sea meanwhile
 Along the margin of the moonlight sea—
 On Btina's summit, above earth and sea,
 The mariner who sails the roaring sea
 Rested a silent sea of hoary mist,
 Heard over earth and sea, and in that hour,
 Are vain, as billows in a tossing sea,
 Islanders 'mid a stormy mountain sea,
 Where the salt sea innocently breaks,

betrayed,
Scarce hides a shadow from her searching rays ;
More searching than the breath of spring.
Thou' searching damps and many an envious flaw
To worlds unthought of till the searching mind
That searching test thy public course has stood ;
Was searching out the lines of difference
With searching damp, and seemingly had lain
And so, not searching higher, we may learn

Seas. When, from the sunny breast of open seas,
Mid savage rocks, and seas of snow that shine,
Stand like an isthmus 'twixt two stormy seas
A band of Pirates in the Norway seas ;
When seas and continents shall lie between us—
Was half a shepherd on the stormy seas.
A thriving man, and trafficked on the seas :
Resolved to try his fortune on the seas.
How motionless !—not frozen seas ;
Sailed on the seas, but he is dead ;
Beyond the seas ; where he grew wondrous rich,
To seek a hiding-place beyond the seas.
The old Familiar of the seas,
Thou speak'st—and lo ! the polar Seas
Through seas of ether, where the ruffling sway
Nor the green Islands, nor the shining Seas ;

Mid seas how steadfast ! objects all for the eye

Season—continued.

For a light heart in a dull season.
—'Twas that delightful season when the broom,
Sharp season followed of continual storm
By the season multiplied?
Of the dreary season near?
And I will have my careless season
Which, when the appointed season hath arrived,
The pleasant season did my heart employ:
Which at this season, with their unripe fruits,
And in due season send the mandate forth;
Which at no season fade,
Announce a season potent to renew,
Glad thought for every season! but the Spring
Freely as in youth's season bland,
To meet the wintry season.
With a hope (and no more) for a season to come,

Discerns the favourable season,
Glad to expand; and, for a season, free
Full happy season, when was known,
The spirit of the season.
Aod every season?
Which that sweet season gave,
To season my fraside with personal talk,—
Who repays in season due
Season of fancy and of hope
For time and season, rules that work to cheer—
The season) sprinklings of ripe strawberry fruit.
May season apathy with scorn,
Of summer, in the season of sere leaves;
And every season has soft arms,
The respite of the season, he, at least,
At length, what to most is a season of sorrow,
Nor in life's vigorous season did I shun
No mood, which season takes away, or brings:
Sets sail—in season due
No more shall grief of mine the season wrong;
Hence in a season of calm weather
Then Summer lengthen'd out his season bland
While the joy that precedes the calm season of rest
And in the frosty season, when the sun
And every season wheresoe'er I moved
Of life's sweet season—could have seen unmoved
If in the season of unperilous choice,
Nor with impatience from the season asked
Who, summoned by that season, reunite
And at a later season, or preserved;
A gladness o'er that season, then to me,
Called forth, at every season, new delights
It slept, even in the pregnant season of youth.
How Fancy, in a season when she wove
A ravage out of season, made by thoughts
Withal a season dangerous and wild,
Of time and season, to the moral power,
At every season green, sweet at all hours.
(Which, in the docile season of their youth,
Thao in his earlier season did he love
The hardships of that season: many rich
At this still season of repose and peace,
To lag behind the season, and had lost
Which the bright season favours.—Tabor and pipe
Youth's season yet with him was scarcely past,
Whom earth, at this late season, hath produced
In some calm season, when these lofty rocks
In man's autumnal season is set forth
Of life's autumnal season.—Shall I tell
It was the season of unfolding leaves,
Drawn by the sunshine—at that hoped season?
To time and season, as the year rolled round?"
Its very spring a season of decay!
And season yield; but, as we re-embarked,
And season favours." To enteebled Power,
Bleak season was it, turbulent and bleak,

Seasonable. Give seasonable rest, for 'tis a sound
When wisdom shows her seasonable fruit,
By seasonable frost of age; nor died

Seasonably. O'er ripe fruit, seasonably gathered, Seasoned. That had been seasoned in the wars, and all

Seasoning. Seasoning his wickedness. The De-bauchee

Season's. He needs not fear the season's rage,
The Season's harmless pastime. Ruder sound
The time's and season's influence disown;
Before a flying season's rash pretence
In spite of season's change, its own demand,
And season's difference—a doubtful tree
Or season's difference; the immortal Soul

Seasons. Here all the seasons revel hand in hand:
Through twenty seasons; but he had been reared
All seasons through, another debt,
The viclets of five seasons re-appear
When Ruth three seasons thus had lain,
Of seasons balancing their flight
Strains that support the Seasons in their round;
The sweet-souled Poet of the Seasons stood—
Time loves Thee! at his call the Seasons twine
Like thine, shall gladden, as in seasons past,
And ye mild Seasons—in a sunny clime,
Cliffs, fountains, rivers, seasons, times—

Seasons—continued.

(Life's three first seasons having passed away)
All seasons through, is humbly pleased to braid
Hence have I genial seasons, hence have I
Inviting, at all seasons, ears and eyes
How happy at all seasons, could like aim
For seasons and for hours.

There are ninety good seasons of fair and foul weather
That all the seasons shared with equal rights;—
Which, through all seasons, on a child's pursuits
Until maturer seasons called them forth
And sorrow is not there! The seasons came,
And seasons serve; all Faculties to whom
With danger, varying as the seasons change),
The elements, and seasons as they change,
Forgot, at seasons, whence they had their being;
The later seasons owed to thee no less;
On all things which the moving seasons brought
Two blighting seasons, when the fields were left
Did many seasons pass ere I returned
Or solace, varying as the seasons change.
With all its seasons. Grant that Spring is there,
—But when the lord of seasons had matured
Through all the seasons of the changeful year,

Seats!—And thus through many seasons' space
Seat. See Cloud-seat, Judgment-seat, Mercy-seat,

Orchard-seat, Stone-seat, Window-seat.
At times, while young Content forsook her seat,
When with her infants, from some shady seat
The shady porch ne'er offered a cool seat
He died,—this seat his only monument.
His seat beneath the honied sycamore
So in they bear her to the chimney seat,
And down from off her seat she leapt.
Risen from his seat, beside the snow-white ridge
In Troynovant, his seat by silver Thames's side!
We can behold it from our orchard seat;
Whose moss-grown root might serve for couch or
seat,

Your favourite seat of empire find—
And though his favourite seat be feeble woman's breast.

Quoth Peter, leaping from his seat,
Take, then, thy seat. Vicegerent unproved!
There I take your seat, and let me see
He felt the motion—took his seat;
Where altar-stone and rock-hewn seat
Which, out of thy young heart's oracular seat,
Peasant and lord, in their appointed seat,
Mounts to the seat of grace within the mind:
That we approached the Seat of Charlemaine?

Seated—continued.

- The darts of anguish fix not where the seat
And passions hold a fluctuating seat :
These helps solicit ; and a steadfast seat
Meanwhile, the heart within the heart, the seat
And guardian rocks !—Farewell, attractive seat !
Gone forth already to the far-off seat
Continued, " 'tis not in the vital seat
Whose steps are equity, whose seat is law.
By ruinous contest, to obtain a seat
The Vicar paused ; and toward a seat advanced,
And by the unclosed coffin kept her seat
Fixed at their seat, the centre of the Mere,
Raised from his seat within the chosen shade,
Truth's consecrated residence, the seat
The most assured seat of [poesy ?]
Thence northward did they pass by Arthur's seat,
Seated. See Deep-seated, High-seated, Re-seated.
He shall be seated in his Barony,
If you were seated at my chimney's nook,
While I was seated, now some ten days past,
That ancient Woman seated on Helm-crag
Were seated round their blazing fire,
A Woman seated on the ground.
By martial sports,—or, seated in the tent,
Perhaps are seated in domestic ring
Of Reason, seated on her sovereign hill ;
Seated alone, with forehead sky-ward raised,
Was seated in her gleaming shallop,
Seated alone beneath a darksome tree,
And he was seated, by the highway side,
Seated on her lineal throne ;
To shepherd swains, or seated harp in hand,
Be it confessed that, for the first time, seated
While I was seated in a rocky cave
Almost as deeply seated and as strong
Seated, with open door, often and long
That he was often seated at his loom,
The moment I was seated here alone,
In open circle seated round, and hushed
Their courtly figures, seated on the stump
When seated next my venerable friend
A grave assemblage, seated while they shear
Stretched on the grass, or seated in the shade,
Affections seated in the mother's breast,
Merrily seated in a ring, partook
Seated in a British chair.
Seats. See Council-seats, Judgment-seats, Sod-seats.
Your seats, and quickly shall be paid . . .
No promise. Still, in more than ear-deep seats,
Seats of glad instinct and love's carolling,
A land whose azure mountain-tops are seats
While Faith aspires to seats in that domain
May she, who once disturbed the seats of bliss
The seats of lea-roving brave the distant skies.
Farewell for ever to the sheltered seats
Greeted us all day long ; we took our seats
From seats of power divine ; and hope, or trust,
And mossy seats, detained us side by side,
Doth most debase the mind ; the genuine seats
In seats of wisdom, not to be approached
Shall fix, in calmer seats of moral strength,
Our seats ; and thus the Solitary spake,
Seat-sandal. See Sandal.
And all Seat-Sandal was laid bare !
Seat-Sandal, a fond lover of the clouds ;
Seaward. Sloped seaward, turf whose tender April
green,
A plain below stretched seaward, while, desecrated
Post seaward,—what impedes the tardy nights.
Sea-water. The great Sea-water finds its way Sea-weed. Or where dank sea-weed lashes Scotland's
shores ;
Sea-wind. From the stern breathing of the rough sea-
wind ;
Seheto. For her heart's grief, she will entreat Seheto
Not to withhold his bounteous aid, Seheto
Secluded. See Self-secluded.
In these secluded vales, if village fame,
Spread rooflike o'er the deep secluded vale,
That on a wild secluded scene impress
Moveless o'er-hang the deep secluded vale,
In this secluded glen, and eagerly
From sight of One who lives secluded there,
Aerial, or in green secluded vale,
To our secluded vale) it may be told—
Secluded, but not buried ; and with song
And into most of these secluded vales
He turned to this secluded chapelry ;
Seclusion. O happy Garden ! whose seclusion deep Thoughts of more deep seclusion ; and connect
" O blissed seclusion ! when the mind admits
At sight of this seclusion, he forgot
Seclusions. And audible seclusions, dashing lakes,
Second. " So passed a second day ; and when the third Joy's second spring and Hope's long-treasured smile
I think I see a second range of Towers ;
I hurried on, when straight a second moan,
Nor could my heart by second thoughts from heaviness be cleared,

Second—continued.

- Possess a kind of second life ; no doubt
A second time ; for still I seem . . .
Slew, and as quickly to a second gave . . .
Will be my second self when I am gone . . .
On human nature's second infancy . . .
A second time, in Grasmere's happy Vale . . .
Or second my weak Muse ?
A second darted by ;—and lo !
The second glory of the Heavens ?—Thou bast ;
But there is matter for a second rhyme,
To me, this day, a second time thy bride !"
Into a second swoon !
Breathes into him a second breath,
Its second twilight, and looks gay ;
Hath called for thee a second spring ;
And Rover whine, as at a second sight
With second life the deed of Marathon
And that we need no second victory !
And in a second father's place,
A second and yet nobler birth ;
Permits a second and a darker shade
The Infant's notice of his second birth—
Do Thou, in truth a second Mother, strive
The music bursteth into second life ;
Look up a second time, and, one by one,
Hark to that second larum !—far and wide
Rejoices in a second birth !
A second time did Matthew stop ;
No farther than they breed a second Will more wise.]
Or never hope to reach a second birth.
No second look she cast,
Remove this second Rachel from the hier.
Upon the second step of that small pile,
Such was the tenour of the second act
A character more stern. The second night,
In the great deep ; all things have second birth ;
What countenance to promote this second love !
And hopeful blossoms of a second spring :
Into a second place, pleased to become
With cheerful hope, until the second autumn,
Was all consumed. A second infant now
This second visitation had no power
Tried in the sea-fights of the second Charles.
Into the second ark, Christ's church, with trust
An inmate of a second family ;
Thence, journeying on a second time, they passed
I will go back and range a second time
And waters in the midst, a Second Heaven.
Secondary. Of secondary birth, the Jung-frau's cone ;
To transports from the secondary founts
And secondary, now at length was sought
Art thou of that false secondary power
But secondary to my own pursuits . . .
No secondary hand can intervene . . .
Far more : for Nature's secondary grace
Second-sight. In second-sight appearances, or crust
A second-sight procession, such as glides
Secrecy. Said Secrecy to Cowardice and Fraud,
For perfect secrecy . . .
Secret. The eye reposes on a secret bridge,
While coves and secret hollows, through a ray
Where, winding on along some secret bay,
By lonely farms and secret villages,
—And sure there is a secret Power that reigns
Thy secret for its sake, or verily
In old Armoria, whose secret springs
And from their secret loyalty requires
Carried about her for a secret gift
To secret 'sponsals meanly disavowed.
Be violets in their secret mews . . .
In many a secret place
In secret, like a smothered flame ?
The shell from out its secret nook,
Trembling, I look upon the secret springs
The secret thou art bent on keeping :
In secret revels—haply after theft
Into the secret of to-morrow's fare ;
Yet sometimes, when the secret cup
That winds through secret wards ;
Not unadvisedly those secret springs
From thy most secret haunts ; and ye Parterres,
To undermine with secret gulle,
Of which the rivers in their secret springs,
The coves and secret hollows thro' a ray
Where winds the road along the secret bay ;
By secret villages and lonely farms,
Far o'er the secret water dark with beach,
While strives a secret Power to hush the croud,
Ev'n by the secret cottage far away
Quick to the secret grotto they retire
And follow Nature to her secret springs ;
In secret did, we trust, her less bosom.
Nor made unto myself a secret boast
Maintained for me a secret happiness . . .
That secret spirit of humanity . . .

Secret—continued.

Some secret of the mountains, cavern, fall . . . 776
 To keep the secret of a poignant scorn . . . 799
 By poets skilled in nature's secret ways . . . 840
 She bore a secret burthen; and full soon . . . 851
 And find a secret oratory there; . . . 852
 Of greedily foretaste, from the secret stand . . . 872
Secreted. Or some secreted island, Heaven knows where! . . . 729
Secretly. Of tens of thousands, secretly, . . . 403
 And strengthen love, rejoicing secretly . . . 804
Secrets. Thy secrets, thou that lov'st to stand and hear . . . 26
 The secrets of the burning Waste; . . . 216
 "I know the secrets of a land . . . 237
 Come secrets, whispered nightly to his ear; . . . 441

 I do not see Idonea. Dutiful Girl, . . . Guilt 585
 But there are Mothers who can see the Babe . . . 39
 'Tis Herbert and no other! 'Tis a feast to see him, . . . Bord. 147
 Lord Clifford—did you see him talk with Herbert? . . . 40
 'Twill glad her heart to see her father's signature. . . 41
 And see your Friend again. The good old Man . . . 41
 I think I see a second range of Towers; . . . 41
 A draught of water? Nay, to see you thus . . . 43
 With which he gave the boon—I see it now! . . . 45
 'Twas dark—dark as the grave; yet did I see, . . . 45
 I'd rather see my father's ghost. My Captain, . . . 45
 And, by the Mass, to see him at his prayers!— . . . 45
 Meanwhile, do you two hasten back and see . . . 45
 But, faith, to see him in his silken tunic, . . . 45
 And you should see how deeply I could reason . . . 45
 You know we left him sitting—see him yonder. . . 45
 Who dama where they can neither see nor feel, . . . 45
 And light them joined, and you will see the less . . . 45
 —I see I have disturbed you. By no means. . . 45
 Oh bow I long to see their faces again! . . . 45
 That I should ever live to see this moment! . . . 45
 Of my offence. I see you love me still, . . . 45
 Methinks I see it now—how lo the sun . . . 45
 Were there not eyes that see, and for good ends, . . . 45
 But did he utter nothing? See him there . . . 45
 His senses play him false; and see, his arms . . . 45
 That I may see him. On a ridge of rocks . . . 45
 Who, so he feared, would never see him more; . . . 45
 Oh Sir, I would not see that hour again . . . 45
 In such a wilderness—to see no thing, . . . 45
 But enter there and see him how he sleeps, . . . 45
 abstain from conjecture till you see me. . . 45
 Your pupil is, you see, an apt proficient . . . 45
 As, if you look up, you plainly may see; . . . 45
 There's nothing to see but a cushion of snow, . . . 45
 You shall go to the orchard, and then you will see . . . 45
 Untouched by his breath see the candle shines . . . 45
 bright, . . . 45
 —But see, the evening star comes forth! . . . 45
 I chanced to see at break of day . . . 45
 That you may see sweet Lucy Gray . . . 45
 It was a spot which you may see . . . 45
 His face is fair and fresh to see; . . . 45
 I unobserved could see the workings of her face: . . . 45
 And dreams of things which thou canst neither see . . . 45
 nor hear. . . 45
 But oh! that Country-man of thine, whose eye, . . . 45
 loved Child, can see . . . 45
 And see, that with our threescore years and ten . . . 45
 To see an acre's breadth of that wide cliff . . . 45
 You see it yonder! and those few green fields. . . 45
 I almost see him trampling down the path . . . 45
 Was two years taller: 'twas a joy to see, . . . 45
 And those two bells of ours, which there you see— . . . 45
 You see you precipice;—it wears the shape . . . 45
 Oft could we see him driving full in view . . . 45
 Ah! piteous sight it was to see this Man . . . 45

 To see thy arch thus stretch and head, . . . 45

See—continued.

Our faith hath been,—O would that eyes could see

 Oh joy for me that sight to see !
 The breeze I see is in the tree :

 ’Tis well for me thou canst not see ?
 What wicked looks are those I see ?

 Nor did we fail to see within ourselves
 We see not nor suspect a hound,
 But see ! where'er the hailstones drop
 What grief is mine you see,
 I see thee yonder,—what a load
 And o'er your head, as what you may see,
 Lies with her infant lamh ; I see
 With little here to do or see . . .
 158 * With little 1
 I see thee glittering from afar—
 Whether we will see or no ;
 And see this sight beneath the skies,
 See, when public perturbations
 Wait—and you shall see how hollow
 And in this dell you see
 Other playmate can I see.
 Stand back, and you shall see her gratis !
 And you shall see her in full trim . . .
 With their enraptured vision see—
 And see, beyond that hamlet small
 And, sitting by my fire, I see
 See, perched upon the naked height
 And now I see with eye serene
 Nor shall she fail to see
 Was beautiful to see—a weed of glorious feature.
 In my mind's eye I seemed to see him pace
 You see a little muddy pond
 All lovely colours there you see,
 Which close beside the Thorn you see,
 “ Now would you see this aged Thorn,
 And if you see her in her hut—
 A storm came on, and I could see . . .

 ‘Mid groves and copses. Once again I see
 We see into the life of things. If this
 Who leads them on ?—The anxious people see
 Exclaimed the Chieftain,—“ let me rather see
 Shed from thy countenance, as I see thee stand
 Where thou, a Wife and Friend, shalt see . . .
 218 Young Lady 4
 Or, in no doubtful prospect, let me see
 Her brow hath opened on me—see it there,
 And see ! a bright precursor to a train
 I see the dark-brown curls, the brow,
 Yon pilgrims see—in lagging file
 Look up—and you shall see me soon !
 To see how ye are all distressed,
 See ! there she is, the matchless Earth !
 And see the town where I was born !
 Naught is there that you shall not see.
 I see them there, in number nine,
 I see them—there they are !
 To see his gentle panniered train
 To see him was to fear him.
 And tender sounds, yet you might see
 “ If any one should come and see
 I see a blooming Wood-boy there,
 And see things as they are.
 Whose cunning eye can see the wind,
 Whom once it was my luck to see
 I see the places where they once were known,
 Little we see in Nature that is ours ;
 But harder far, once more I see thee bend
 All that we see—is dome, or vault, or nest,
 So styled by those fierce Britons, pleased to see
 By the habitual light of memory see
 Eyes unheeded, see bloom that cannot fade,
 I see its truth with unreluctant eyes ;
 Aught dost thou see, bright Star ! of pure and wise
 See how her ivy clasps the sacred Ruin,
 To see how things are made and managed there . . .
 288 Highland Girl 59
 “ The creatures see of flood and field,
 A signal this which all can see !
 And see the Braes of Yarrow.”
 We will not see them : will not go,
 Like conquest would the Men of England see ;
 This do I see ; and something more . . .
 294 Jedbor 41
 Ah ! see her helpless Charge enclosed
 There ! take your seat, and let me see
 And all were pleased to hear and see,
 Have watched the event, and now can see
 There where you see his Image stand
 I see—but not by sight alone.
 Or what is it that ye go forth to see ?
 Of England once again, and hear and see,
 To see the sun how brightly it will shine,

 Not unregioed I see thee climb the sky
 Ha ! what a ghastly sight for man to see ;
 What stirring wonders wilt thou see . . .

 See, where his difficult way that Old Man wins
 The frolic Loves, who, from you high rock, see
 I see what was, and is, and will abide ;
 Beheld what I had feared to see,
 On cloud-sequestered heights, that see and hear
 See what gay wild flowers deck this earth-built Cot,
 And, up among the moorlands, see . . .
 390 Highland Hut 1
 A pious structure, fair to see,
 Look down, and see a griesly sight ;
 His eye could see the hidden spring,
 But see—they vanish one by one,
 And seven as true as thou, I see,
 Of this brave man, when he shall see
 See, hear, obstruct, or mitigate.
 And horse and harness followed—see
 Full sixteen thousand fair to see ;
 Who sees him ?—thousands see, and One
 Am grieved this backward march to see
 But see the consecrated Maid
 But, see, the sacred Standard falls !—
 Which it had been his lot to see.
 Then, then—had I survived to see
 To see her in her pomp arrayed—
 Again this piteous object see ?
 Could see the Tower of Bolton rise . . .
 412 White Doe 1441
 In what they see of virtues pushed to extremes,
 In conquered Cyprus see thy Bride decline
 And see love-emblems streaming from thy ship,
 Yes, to thy domination, Roman See,
 I see a matchless blazonry unfurled
 Enough ! for see, with dim association
 See Latimer and Ridley in the might Shines through his soul—“ that he may see and tell
 Listening within his Temple see his sword
 A stream is heard—I see it not, but know
 That frail Mortality may see—
 And see to what fair countries ye are bound !
 Hush, hush, the busy Sleeper see !
 “ The eye—it cannot choose but see ;
 Of health, strength, friends, and kindred, see !
 One summer-day I chanced to see . . .
 484 Simon Lee 26
 484 Simon Lee 73
 See that Fly,—a disconsolate creature ! perhaps
 His feelers, methinks, I can see him put forth
 A rosy Man, right plump to see ?
 Given to no other flower I see
 As blithe a man as you could see
 To see a child so very fair,
 Methinks, I see him stand,
 A foolish strife ; they see
 “ Yet life,” you say, “ is life ; we have seen and see,
 See a hare before him started !
 See them cleaving to the sport !
 There let me see thee sink into a mood
 Nor grieved to see (himself not unbeguiled)—
 To see Presumption, turning pale, refrain
 The treasure,—what mine eyes behold see thou,
 See the Condemned alone within his cell
 Once did I see a slip of earth
 But all might see it float, obedient to the wind ;
 Might see it, from the mossy shore . . .

 To see or not to see, as best may please
 His fancy cheated—that can see
 Might see how poor a hut she had.
 And all who see him say, ‘tis plain,
 See cheerfulness undamped by stealing Time ;
 See studied kindness flow with easy stream,
 And how dying tapers fare !
 See see the huddling leaves the branches throng,
 For he, in sooth, is blind, and may not see,
 We must the Palace see of Cressida ;
 As thou dost mine with longing her to see,
 I might her see again coming to Troy !
 And shall, unless I see her soon in Troy.
 To the end that he the Grecian host might see ;
 The breath of the cows you may see him inhale,
 And now with old Daniel you see how it fares ;
 You see to what end he has brought his grey hairs.
 Long yet may'st thou live ! for a teacher we see,
 But he could see the wood and plains,
 I love to see the look with which it braves,
 But we will see it, joyful tide !
 Some day, to see it in its pride.
 Of memory, or see the light of love.
 The things which I have seen I now can see no more.
 Ye to each other make ; I see

 Him will I seek: the insurgent Powers
 To seek her Brother forth she went,
 But now she dares to seek a haven
 Now seek upon the heights of Time the source
 Which the chaste Votaries seek, beyond the grave;
 To seek the general mart of Christendom;
 Seek in domestic oratory small,
 Nor are his Followers loth to seek defence,
 Softly she glides, another home to seek.
 Some seek with timely flight a foreign strand;
 Or seek to make assurance doubly sure.
 Go, seek, when Christmas snows discomfort bring,
 Or grovelling thought, to seek a refuge here;
 Earth prompts—Heaven urges; let us seek the
 light,
 And sound in principle, I seek repose
 Yet seek thy firm support, according to their need.
 Of reverential awe will chiefly seek
 As Truth herself, whom they profess to seek.
 Seek for the good and cherish it—the ill
 For liberty, would seek from God defence
 And seek through noiseless pains and moderation
 And seek the Sufferer in his darkest den,
 And love the end, which all through peace must seek.

 What evidence I seek, and vainly seek;
 Inspire me with ability to seek Distress and care. What then remains?—To seek Between them seek the point whereon to build
 That seek yon pool, and there prolong their stay
 But seek for objects of a kindred love
 To seek that comfort which the mind denies;
 Seek from the torturing crucible. There lies
 Would rather shun than seek the fellowship
 Wisdom enjoins; but if the thing we seek
 Who seek the House of worship, while the bells
 And thence let loose, to seek their pleasant homes
 We seek that other, on the western shore;
 To seek, in degradation of the Kind,
 Coming thus to seek my Parent;
 Or must we seek that stream where Man is not?
 Will seek us also, sisters of our hearts,
 Why does this inward lustre fondly seek,
 But me hath Nature tamed, and made to seek
 For never did the uxorious martyr seek Seeking. Though seeking only holiday delight;
 Seeking a higher object. Love was given, . . . 395 White Doe 1115

 Brook! whose society the Poet seeks,
 That seeks its wisdom through the heart?
 That seeks to stifle it;—as in those days
 The Wanderer seeks that receptacle vast
 Or seeks, a "winsome Marrow"
 And, of the recompense that conscience seeks,
 Or in warm valley, seeks his part to fill;
 She seeks a shelter from the battering show'r.
 Then seeks the queen; with her his arts he tries;
 Seeks for no trophies, struggles for no spoils
 That energy by which he seeks the truth,
 Who seeks not; and to him, who hath not asked,
 Seeks, yet can nowhere find, the light of truth.
 And seeks for good; and finds the good he seeks:

 In this quaint medley, that might seem
 Thou hangest, stooping, as might seem, to sink
 Seem vain and hollow; I find nothing great:
 Look round, and by their smiling seem to say,
 With threads that seem part of his own silver hair.
 A product of that awful Mountain seem,
 And, for like use, lo! what might seem a zone
 Languish the flowers; the waters seem to waste
 Where dew falls not, where rain-drops seem unknown?
 Yet through that darkness (infinite though it seem
 For all things are less dreadful than they seem.
 His wing who could seem lovelier to man's eye
 Might seem a saintly Image from its shrine
 Which showers of blood seem rather to incite
 Fear to my Soul, and sadness which might seem

—Wings at my shoulders seem to play ;
 So might it seem, the cares of that wake ;
 For dwarfs the tallest seem while sailing by,
 Might seem designed to humble man, when proud
 Perplexed her fingers seem,
 This picture from nature may seem to depart,
 He will seem worthy of your love.
 Seem to recall the Delty
 And seem to love it best.
 Yet might your glassy prison seem Whate'er ye seem, whate'er ye are—
 And flowers they well might seem to passers-by
 For all that seem neglected or bereft ;
 With the sharp wind, and seem to court the shower,
 Since that thy throat is cut, as it doth seem.
 That patience now doth seem a thing of which
 To thy exalted nature only seem
 To me did seem
 Our noisy years seem moments in the being Doth seem half-conscious of the joy it brings
 Is often cheering ; for I neither seem
 Which seem, in their simplicity, to own
 Nor will it seem to thee, O Friend ! so prompt
 That, musing on them, often do I seem
 As some might seem, so aptly do they serve
 While this was uttering, strange as it may seem,
 Even in what seems our most unfruitful hours ?
 Confusion, and I seem to plant thee there.
 I heard it then, and seem to hear it now—
 And life and labour seem but one, I filled
 Trite, do yet scarcely seem so when I think
 The matter that detains us now may seem,
 How little they, they and their doings, seem,
 As both may seem, are fastening on the heart
 Even as a river,—partly (it might seem)
 Which may seem strange : but I was unprepared
 Of condescension ; but did rather seem
 My own delights do scarcely seem to me
 And to myself I seem to muse on One
 That scarcely seem to have belonged to me)
 Less, as might seem, for general guardianship
 Piled in a nook, through malice, as might seem,
 Soft, as may seem, but, under that disguise,
 To stretch his limbs, bemocking, as might seem,
 Like pillars fixed more firmly, as might seem,
 A work of art more sumptuous than might seem
 Would seem in no distinction to surpass
 Upon the earth that faculties, which seem
 Less, as might seem, in rivalry with men
 Of sombre foliage, seem to imitate
 That, lodged within thy crystal depths, seem bright,
 And wherefore do I seem to love
 My friends, you live, and yet you seem
 In lines, that seem to keep themselves alive
 Or single. And although it needs must seem
 And was the cost so great ? and could it seem
 Of ceaseless motion, that might scarcely seem
 There is a stillness, and they seem to make
 Thy changes, which to wiser Spirits seem

Seemed. Were bardy, though his cheek seemed worn with care
 He seemed the only creature in the wild
 When hearing a deep sigh, that seemed to come
 We seemed still more and more to prize each other ;
 Seemed to return, dried the last lingering tear,
 Until it seemed to bring a joy to my despair.
 I seemed transported to another world ;
 " Rough potters seemed they, trading soberly
 Yet calm he seemed as thoughts so poignant would allow.
 A look was in her face which seemed to say,
 He seemed to quarrel with the very thought.
 It seemed to move away from us : and yet
 And he seemed angry. Angry I well he might ;
 The spirit of vengeance seemed to ride the air.
 Seemed to remember me. To the wide world
 With two Companions ; one of them, as seemed,
 That Chapel-bell in mercy seemed to guide me,
 And laughed so loud it seemed that the smooth sea
 I seemed a Being who had passed alone
 Made evident, as seemed, by blacker guilt,
 She looked at it and seemed to fear it ;
 It seemed to follow with the chaise,
 Seemed to feast with head and ears ; and his tail
 with pleasure shonk.
 And it seemed, as I retraced the ballad line by line,
 And while around it storm as fierce seemed troubling earth and air,
 This vale, where he had been so happy, seemed
 Our father's spirit seemed in thee to breathe again.
 And a pale face that seemed undoubtedly
 Sturdy he seemed, though he was sad ;
 My flock it seemed to melt away.
 To their full hearts the universe seemed hung
 And that the old Man's heart seemed born again ?
 To look his trouble in the face, it seemed Seemed—continued.

As seemed, their soft self-satisfying light,
 The budding groves seemed eager to urge on Which, while I listened, seemed like the wild growth
 Across the welkin seemed to spread
 'Tis gone ! (so seemed it) and we grieved
 She seemed a thing that could not feel
 Yet they, so blithe of heart, seemed fit
 She seemed to live ; her thoughts her own ;
 A kindred impulse, seemed allied
 And seemed as if let loose from chains,
 The oldest man he seemed that ever wore grey hairs.
 Such seemed this Man, not all alive nor dead,
 In my mind's eye I seemed to see him pace
 It seemed as if the spring-time came not here,
 The deep sigh that seemed fatherless,
 It seemed—wall, window, roof and tower—
 His nerves, his sinews seemed to melt ;
 So narrow seemed the brooks, the fields so small !
 Alas ! even then they seemed like fleecy clouds
 With her face up to heaven ; that seemed to have Night fell I heard, or seemed to hear,
 And stepping westward seemed to be
 And seemed to give me spiritual right
 Would all have seemed but paltry things,
 —Strange words they seemed of alight and scorn ;
 (So seemed it) down a strange descent :
 Weak, destitute, as seemed, of hope or aim
 Seemed to bisect her orb'd shield
 That Justice seemed to hear her final knell ?
 The strain seemed doubly dear,
 Quivered and seemed almost to heave,
 While glory seemed betrayed, while patriot-zeal
 Seemed churlish. And behold, both far and near,
 In that announcement, greeting seemed to mock
 Of a bright Ship that seemed to hang in air,
 Of a Divinity, that seemed to smile
 And worship, seemed a recompense
 Seemed from each other a faint warmth to hallow.
 Unfruitful solitudes, that seemed to upbraid
 All kinds alike seemed favourites of Heaven.
 That seemed from heaven descending, like the flood
 Unbent, which rather seemed to rise,
 That was the sound they seemed to speak ;
 The bells of Rylstone seemed to say,
 The Sun, that seemed so mildly to retire,
 It seemed a thrill of pleasure.
 And thanks and praises seemed to run
 It seemed as if he drank it up—
 For so it seemed, than till that day
 She seemed as happy as a wave Seemed stopt, though by some other power than death.
 Or was it Dian's self that seemed to move
 That seemed to play with it in love or scorn,
 A sanctuary seemed the spot
 Nor roof, nor window,—all seemed wild
 And seemed the proudest thing on earth.
 His fields seemed to know what their Master was doing ;
 How perfect was the calm ! it seemed no sleep ;
 Thou shouldst have seemed a treasure-house divine
 The Power of EDUCATION seemed to rise ;
 In heavenly majesty she seem'd to move.
 Some fond hearts to COMPLIANCE seem'd inclin'd ;
 And seemed to be a trouble to the peace
 But ill sustained, and almost (so it seemed)
 Blow through my ear ! the sky seemed not a sky
 For so it seemed, with purpose of its own
 Of shining water, gathering as it seemed,
 It seemed to suck us in with an eddy's force.
 Seemed friends, poor simple schoolboys, now hung
 round
 Of pride and pleasure ! to myself I seemed
 With prompt rebound seemed fresh as heretofore.
 That spells seemed on me when I was alone,
 Seemed humbled in these precincts thence to be in awful soul—I seemed to see him here
 Seemed trivial, and the impress without
 While on I walked, a comfort seemed to touch
 It seemed the very garments that I wore
 He might have seemed, but that in all he said
 He seemed an Arab of the Bedonin tribes :
 Yet independent study seemed a course
 Of mighty names was softened down and seemed
 Above all joys, that seemed another morn
 Restored to me—such absence that she seemed
 I seemed to move along them, as a bird
 Seemed sent on the same errand with the choir
 In whatsoever place, but seemed in this
 I shuddered, for a barrier seemed at once
 Transcendent, superhuman as it seemed,
 This label seemed of the utmost we can know,
 Left at the tapering ladder's top, that seemed Capacious found, or seemed to find, in me
 And oft amid the " husy hum " I seemed
 But seemed there present ; and I scanned them all,

 That seemed to cling upon me, she enquired
 That seemed the very sound of happy thoughts.
 Its customary look,—only, it seemed, . . . 759 Excursion 1. 231
 It seemed she did not thank me. I returned,
 She knew not he was dead. She seemed the same

 Reviewed that Woman's sufferings; and it seemed
 One courage seemed to animate them all:
 It seemed the home of poverty and toil, . . . 763 Excursion 1. 507

 Guarded and graced, seemed fashioned to unite, . . . 776 Excursion 2. 340
 That seemed to pity what he could not spare . . . 782 Excursion 2. 733
 And each seemed centre of his own fair world:
 And that the old man's heart seem'd born again?
 He seemed to hear a voice, which was again
 They seemed to say; "What would ye," said the shower, . . . 784 Excursion 2. 839
 Disturbed, uneasy in itself as seemed,
 This day, who drooped, or seemed to droop, so long;
 Of superstitious fancy, might have seemed . . . 785 Excursion 2. 884
Seem'st. Self-poised in air though seem'st to rest:
 As thou seem'st now to do; might one day trace

 I started—seeming to espy
 With seeming unconcern and steady countenance.
 —Hushed was that House in peace, or seeming
 peace,
 Yet seeming still to hover;
 Of yon dim cave, in seeming silence makes
 His mid-day warmth abate not, seeming less
 To mild, to lowly, and to seeming weak,
 And seeming, at a little distance, slow,
 False in the issue, that yon seeming space
 Of shame scarcely seeming to know that she's there,
 O'er this seeming Castaway . . . 785 Excursion 2. 899
 So genius triumphed over seeming wrong,
 Rare, or at least so seeming, every day
 And many of them seeming yet my own!
 And human nature seeming born again.
 I should adhere, and seeming to possess
 And Childhood, seeming still more busy, took Seemingly. The hut stood finished by his pains, nor seemingly lacked aught
 Both seemingly in vain its fragrance yield,
 Till seemingly no doubtful tale;
 And kissed it; seemingly devoid of pain,
 A sense of seemingly presumptuous wrong . . . 793 Excursion 3. 737
 But seemingly a Thig despised;
 Which, though seemingly doomed in its breast to sustain
 Emerging pure, and seemingly more bright:
 Seemingly given, debase the general mind;
 With searching damp, and seemingly had lain
 Established seemingly a right to hold . . . 795 Excursion 3. 623

 My lips are parched with thirst, but you, it seems, . . . 762 Excursion 1. 449
 That seems by Nature hollowed out to be . . . 781 Excursion 5. 412
 This fertile valley! Not a house but seems . . . 828 Excursion 5. 377
 It seems, and scarcely less than pitiful, . . . 844 Excursion 6. 393
 Who seems, by these stupendous barriers cast . . . 855 Excursion 6. 1135
 Of what he seems to take; or gives it back, . . . 855 Excursion 6. 1150
 Around the porch, and seems, in that trim place, . . . 856 Excursion 6. 1187
 And the whole house seems filled with gaiety. . . . 866 Excursion 7. 557
 "A Man he seems of cheerful yesterdays . . . 885 Excursion 9. 65

 I am perplexed. What hast thou heard or seen? . . . 44 Bord. 383
 For any lady I have seen this twelvemonth. . . . 46 Bord. 495
 What she had seen and suffered turned her brain. . . . 47 Bord. 567
 We've overlept ourselves.—Sirs, have you seen . . . 47 Bord. 572
 him? . . . 48 Bord. 606
 And never speaks! Who is it? I have seen her. . . . 50 Bord. 716
 Within those empty walls. I too have seen her; . . . 63 Bord. 1442
 Upon these savage confines, we have seen you . . . 65 Bord. 1574
 He said to me, that he had seen his Child, . . . 69 Bord. 1769
 I have seen traces of it. Once he headed . . . 73 Bord. 2041
 A shallow project;—you of late have seen . . . 75 Bord. 2167
 But not destroyed. The proofs—you ought to have . . . 76 Bord. 2227
 seen . . . 83 Lucy Gray 12
 Have you, good Peasant, seen a blind old Man? . . . 84 We are Seven 37

 Ay, more than once I have seen him, mid-leg deep, . . . 114 Last of Flock 2
 That nobody had seen him all that day : . . . 118 Maternal Grief 6
 Have we not seen the glories of the spring . . . 118 Maternal Grief 7
 As happy spirits as were ever seen; . . . 118 Maternal Grief 39
 And, having seen that lovely Maid, . . . 120 Childless Father 6
 And yet I have not often seen . . . 120 Emigrants Mother 9
 By the returning substance, seen or touched, . . . 124 V. and J. 212
 Seen by mine eyes, or clasped in my embrace. . . .
 And her twin Brother, had the parent seen,
 Seen by mine eyes, or clasped in my embrace.
 And her twin Brother, had the parent seen,
 Seen by mine eyes, or clasped in my embrace.
 Or on the slopes of the pastures all colours were seen;
 Once having seen her clasp with fond embrace
 Appeared but seldom; offener was he seen

 The Boy had seen her, yea, more bright; . . . 398 White Doe 193

Seen—continued.

Almost as soon as seen:—and lo!
 Lonely relic which, if seen
 Change wide and deep the Land had seen,
 Hath seen again her Father's roof,
 (Such have I seen) whom chance of birth
 May on these holy bells he seen,
 The pensive visitant is seen.
 Storm-driven; who, having seen the cup of woe
 Housed near a blazing fire—is seen to fit
 Drops, and the God himself is seen no more.
 Of things not seen, drawn forth from their recess,
 Of counter-proclamation, now are seen,
 A guiding ray; or seen—like stars on high,
 Good, which they dared not hope for, we have seen;
 As now, when She hath also seen her breast
 Not one of all those winged powers is seen,
 Seen in her course, nor 'mid this quiet heard;
 May the night never come, nor day be seen,
 Glories of evening, as ye there are seen
 Nor less attractively when by glimpses seen
 This Homestead, placed where nothing could be seen.
 Still is he seen, in lone sublimity,
 Makes known, when thou no longer canst be seen,
 Lnwther! in thy majestic Pile are seen
 Like that pale Queen whose hands are seen
 "Nine summers had she scarcely seen,
 "Yet life," you say, "is life; we have seen and see,
 Or dimly seen,
 And instantly a dog is seen,
 For never more was young Romilly seen
 To hope, and makes truth willing to be seen!
 Part seen, imagined part!
 Mona from our Abode is daily seen,
 Could have seen my Brother die!
 No one's eye had seen him enter,
 No threshold could be seen,
 The prayer is heard, the Saints have seen,
 No meager leaf was seen;
 Rude is this Edifice, and Thou hast seen
 Hast thou seen, with flash incessant,
 In the Jews' street, and there he last was seen.
 And, when the Abbot had this wander seen,
 All green and white; and nothing else was seen.
 Oft have I seen it muffled up from harm,
 Hazard or toil; among the sands was seen
 And seen the soul of truth in every part,
 That Ship was goodly to be seen,
 The things which I have seen I now can see no more.
 And antique castles seen thro' drizzling show'rs.
 Save that, the stranger seen below, the hoy
 Hath seen in grim array amid their Storms
 About her home; but she had never seen
 Whose grave may here be seen.
 The sharers of her golden couch, was seen
 Ever blest wherever seen,
 And serious mood; but after I had seen
 In that sequestered valley may be seen,
 But for this cause, that I had seen him lay
 His beauty on the morning hills, had seen
 May in these tutored days no more be seen
 Of life's sweet season—could have seen unmov'd
 The stars of Heaven, now seen in their old haunts—
 Is treading, where no other face is seen)
 Was never seen before by night or day.
 Oo what he might himself have seen or felt.
 Possessed me, for my inner eye had seen
 To strengthening love for things that we have seen;
 Or less I might have seen, when first my mind
 O Friend! we had not seen thee at that time,
 That far-famed region, though our eyes had seen,
 Oh! sorrow for the youth who could have seen
 Clear-shining, like a hermit's taper seen,
 Have seen her,—her discretion have observed,
 Or in some sheltering vale, was seen a babe
 And yet no shaped, had seen and scarcely seen,
 There have I seen a comely bachelor,
 That I had heard (what he perhaps had seen)
 In manhood then, have seen a pastoral tract
 A smooth rock wet with constant springs) was seen
 Of that huge city, oftentimes was seen
 And public news; but having never seen
 As much as any that was ever seen,
 It was my fortune scarcely to have seen,
 Even files of strangers merely seen but once,
 Had seen the anticipated quarry turned
 Ephemeral monsters, to be seen but once!
 His honary crown, since I had seen the surge
 And in the virtues which mine eyes had seen.
 Is seen, heard, felt, and caught at every turn,
 Both of the object seen, and eye that sees.
 Was nothing either seen or heard that checked
 There was he seen upon the cottage-bench,
 Of things which he had seen; and often touched
 With long and ghostly shanks—forms which once seen
 If I had seen her husband. As she spake
 But yet no motion of the breast was seen,
 —Have I not seen—ye likewise may have seen—
 A few days earlier; then would you have seen

Seen—continued.

This had I seen, and saw; but, till she spake,
 Glory beyond all glory ever seen
 Stood fixed; and fixed resemblances were seen
 Some little space disjoined, a pair were seen,
 Such as is sometimes seen, and hardly seen,
 The brother followed; and was seen no more!
 Glory—beyond all glory ever seen,
 In some still passage of its course, and seen,
 Melts, and dissolves, and is no longer seen,
 Of gay or tragic pictures. You have seen,
 When in the sky no promise may be seen,
 By tenderness of heart; have seen your eye,
 Opinion, ever changing! I have seen,
 Were seen descending;—forth to greet them ran
 Till a betraying sickness was seen.
 "There live who yet remember here to have seen
 The Mather oft was seen to stand, or kneel
 Of anger never seen in her before,
 Of such conjectures, overheard, or seen
 As seen not seldom on some gusty day,
 As you have seen, bear such conspicuous part
 —Then, for the first time, here you might have seen
 Down on this spot, well pleased would he have seen
 Are seen incorporate with the living rock—
 Of England's realm, this vale he might have seen
 Myself have seen, a gateway, last remains
 He who had seen his own bright order fade,
 Do I remember ofttimes to have seen
 Seen, from the shady room in which we sate,
 Of the smooth lake, in compass seen,—far off,
 And with that help the wonder shall be seen
 And seen the Simoleon's forehead hoary
 Before the boy knew well what he had seen
 Of earth and sky, then truly had you seen you then had seen
 Of milk-white Swans, wherefore are they not seen
 That sweeten labour, make it seen and felt
 Yet nothing to be seen but lovely pomp

Sees—continued.

When the lone shepherd sees the morning spread
 Sees that, apart from magnanimity,
 Who sees, foresees; who cannot judge amiss,
 She turns her wheel, if on the road she sees
 And seldom knowing that he sees, some straw,
 —A few (my soul oft sees that sight)
 He sees it in his joy;
 I hear, while in the forest depth he sees,
 The viewless lingerer hence, at evening, sees
 Of weedless herbs a healthier prospect sees,
 And to the God who sees into the heart,
 Sees many heauteous sights—weeds, fishes, flowers,
 All that the traveller sees when he is there.
 An under-sense of greatest; sees the parts
 Sees actually, if clouds towards either ocean
 For gains, and who that sees her would not buy?
 Or sees in his day's march; himself he feels,
 Yordas; he looks around and sees the vault
 Widening on all sides; sees, or thinks he sees,
 Both of the object seen, and eye that sees.
 The bond of brotherhood, when he sees them go,
 With mind that sheds a light on what he sees;
 Oh! no, the innocent Sufferer often sees
 Who sees all suffering, comprehends all wants,
 What sees he but a creature too perturbed;
 He sees the barren wilderness erased,
 Even as he sees; but when his voice hath ceased,
 Heavens! who sees majesty in George's face?
 Till Egypt sees her ancient fame revived.

See-saw. The hard dry see-saw of his horrible fray!
Seest. Thou seest, and he would gaze till it became
 And, as thou see'st, under the arch of heaven
 Thou see'st me what I am. It was most heinous,
 Thou see'st a homely Pile, yet to these walls
 When, looking back, thou seest, in clearer view

Selgnorias. The seignories of Herbert are in Devon;
Selgnory. He who will gain his Seignory when Idonea
Seine. Or by the lazy Seine, the exile roves;
 Who rises on the banks of Seine,
 Lo! by the lazy Seine the exile roves,
Seize. Rush in—the villains seize us— Seize!
 Yes, they—
 Was made to seize him by three armed men,
 And their music's a prey which they seize;
 He stoops the Ass's neck to seize
 To seize (while on the Deep it slept)
 To seize what'er, through misty air,
 The humid precipice, and seize the guest
 Then did he seize the staff, and say:
 Back therefore will they lie to seize
 Seized it, as hunters seize their prey;
 What rapture! could ye seize

Lest alien frenzy seize thee, waxing wroth,
 He watched to seize old Goody Blake.
 Powers of my native region! Ye that seize
 Were they, to seize and occupy the sense;
Selzed. As, in these long commotions, have been seized.
 Under pretence of violence, he seized.
 When Benjamin had seized the howl,
 Of him whom sudden death had seized
 He should be seized, alive or dead.
 Seized it, as hunters seize their prey;
 Once more the Church is seized with sudden fear,
 Was fondly seized by Sculpture, to restore
 Is seized with strong incitement to push forth
 And whither could they dart, if seized with fear?
 This cruel Jew him seized, and held him fast
 Steep seized me, and I passed into a dream.
 As marvellously seized as in that moment
 I spake with vehemence; and promptly seized
 Ruefully seized, and shedding bitter tears,
 "A sudden illness seized her in the strength Seized him, that self-same night; and through the space
 Dropped the light or his eager hand had seized.
Seizes. Till madness seizes on the whole wide Flood,
 A holder transport seizes. From the side
Seizing. The halter seizing, Peter leapt
 And mighty forms, seizing a youthful fancy,
Seizure. Oswald, Oswald! This is some sudden seizure.

Seldom. Beyond his native valley seldom stray,
 For better lore would seldom yearn
 Appeared but seldom; oftener was he seen
 Not seldom did we stop to watch some tuft
 Nor seldom, if I rightly guess, while Thou,
 And seldom needs a laboured roof;
 Pass by her door—"his seldom shut—
 Not seldom may the hour return
 And witness ye who seldom passed
 Bear, verily, have seldom met
 Are seldom free to touch the moss that grows
 (But seldom trod) of mildly-gleaming ore;
 No one knows how; nor seldom is put forth
 Not seldom, when with heat the valleys faint,
 And seldom hath ear listened to a tune
 Not seldom foremost in the way;
 Though bleak and bare, and seldom free

Seldom—continued.

Though seldom heard by busy human kind—
 And doubts and scruples seldom teased the brain,
 Pleasure, or Grief, and Toil that seldom looks
 Doth seldom on a right foundation rest,
 Or changed and changing, I not seldom gaze
 Not seldom, clad in radiant vest,
 Not seldom Evening in the west
 Within this court full seldom Truth avails,
 And seldom knowing that he sees, some straw,
 Of Lybia; and not seldom, on the banks
 By duty chained. Not seldom did those tasks
 Such as start forth, not seldom, to approve
 Not seldom from the uproar I retired
 Not seldom even in that tempestuous time,
 Nor seldom did I lift our cottage latch
 Not seldom differed from my taste in books,
 Not seldom since that moment have I wished
 Of vigour seldom utterly allayed;
 But seldom led, or wished to go; in truth
 That voice, ill requiem! seldom heard by me
 Not seldom, and his own uneasy heart
 Her goodness, that, not seldom, in my walks
 Of stream and headlong flood that seldom fails;
 And suffer now, not seldom, from the thought
 One spirit seldom failed to extend its sway
 With vacant mind, not seldom may observe
 As seen not seldom on some gusty day,
 Was pallid; seldom hath that eye been moist
 Not seldom over anxious to make known
 Of man or beast was seldom used to tread.

Select. This Height a ministering Angel might select:
 Appeared more touching. One will I select;
 In Nature's presence: thence may I select
 He now was summoned to select the course
 And such as my best judgment could select

Selected. Which selected spirits wear,
 The Bruce had been selected;
 As a selected treasure thy one cliff,
 Was once selected as the corner-stone
 His quiet heart's selected home.
 With rival oars; and the selected hourne
 Who shall be first selected from my flock

Self. Is that I have my inner self abused,
 In you a mirror of my youthful self;
 Where he, in his poor self so weak, by Providence
 was placed.
 Unfolded,—beauty, for its present self,
 The Doctor's self could hardly spare
 Will be my second self when I am gone.
 That for my single self I looked at them,
 Urania's self might welcome with pleased ear
 "Nor dare to thrust thy foolish self
 Minerva's self would stigmatize
 That self might be annulled: her bondage prove
 A type of her capacious self and all
 Softer than Nature's self could mould
 Of fire his desperate self is tethering?
 His very self in form and feature
 What was the great Parnassus' self to Thee,
 That of its native self can nothing feed:
 For others; for thy future self, a spell
 Hence lives He, to his inner self endeared;
 Askance upon her pretty Self
 Although invisible as Echo's self,
 Yea, what were mighty Nature's self?
 For self, and struggles with himself alone.
 And to Religion's self no friendly will,
 Her very self stood there.
 That to this mountain-daisy's self were known
 When Nature's self, amid such blending, seems

Or was it Dian's self that seemed to move
 And an habitual disregard of self
 From earth, perhaps by Shakespeare's self approved,
 That hurthen of my own unnatural self,
 Even the great Newton's own ethereal self,
 As far as doth concern my single self,
 Than Nature's self, which is the breath of God,
 This verse is dedicate to Nature's self,
 May never tread; but scarcely Spenser's self.
 Love for the human creature's absolute self,
 Not in my single self alone I found,
 With that which makes our Reason's naked self
 With my true self; for, though bedimmed and changed
 If willing audience fail not, Nature's self,
 Of the affections, and to Nature's self.
 In her original self too confident,
 But for its absolute self; a life of peace,
 Of mountaineers (by nature's self removed
 As virtue's self; like virtue is beset
 From visible nature, or the inner self
 This generous Youth, too negligent of self,
 By the division of her inward self
 The mansion's self displayed;—a reverend pile
 Bending its apex toward a paler self
 No self, and whom the selfish scorn—

Self judged, can with such discipline dispense,

L. 1. 97 Juvenal 3. 76

Self-abasement. Chastised by self-abasement more profound.
A spirit meek in self-abasement clad.
Self-abuse. To self-abuse a not inelegant tongue.
Self-accused. Contentedly, yet sometimes self-accused.
I gazed—and, self-accused while gazing, sighed
Self-applauding. Of self-applauding intellect; but trains
Self-applause. Which, in the giddiness of self-applause
Self-betrayed. From hope and promise, self-betrayed;
Self-blame. Though not unconscious of self-blame;
His shadow lay, and moved not. From self-blame
Self-born. The breeze-like motion and the self-horn carol;
Self-buried. Or quietly self-buried in earth's mould,
Self-cast. Self-cast, as with a desperate course,
Self-catechised. Self-catechised, self-punished.—
Some there are
Self-cherished. That no self-cherished sadness could withstand;
Self-collected. Self-collected, poised, and steady;
Self-command. Of peace and self-command. Of rivers, fields,
Self-complacent. Of self-complacent innocence;
Self-conceit. Forth rushed from Envy sprung and Self-coceit,
That framed them; flattering self-conceit with words,
Self-condemned. One deeper than another, self-condemned
Self-congratulation. Of self-congratulation, to the heart
With self-congratulation on the Book
The self-congratulation, and, from morn
Self-consumed. A thing so great to perish self-consumed
But if grief, self-consumed, in oblivion would doze,
Self-contented. Harbours a self-contented Wren,
Self-control. A Maa who without self-control
Self-created. The self-created sustenance of a mind
Self-debarred. With him who grovels, self-debarred
Self-deceiving. Outwights the world; whom self-deceiving wit
Self-defence. And prayed the Earls in self-defence
In self-defence with warlike brow
The front in self-defence
Frenchmen had changed a war of self-defence
Self-defended. Where Souls are self-defended, free to grow
Self-delighting. For self-delighting fancy to endure
Self-denial. Then for the pride of self-denial;
Firm self-denial, manners grave and staid,
Stern self-denial round him spread, with shade
Self-denials. To numerous self-denials, Margaret
Self-destroying. Of self-destroying, transitory things,
Self-devoted. A self-devoted chief—by Hector slain.
While we go forth, a self-devoted crowd,
By Moscow self-devoted to a blaze
And self-devoted sought the monarch's tent,
Self-devotion. And self-devotion, and terrestrial hope,
Self-disparagement. And inward self-disparagement affords
Self-dispraise. There is a luxury in self-dispraise;
Self-dissatisfaction. Could tell with self-dissatisfaction
Self-disturbance. Abodes where self-disturbance hath no part.
Self-doomed. Self-doomed, to worse inaction, till his eye
Self-esteem. Or, to the giddy top of self-esteem
Of intellect and virtue's self-esteem?
Of self-esteem; and by the cutting blasts
Self-examination. That seemed for self-examination made;
Self-excuse. Solace and self-excuse, had sometimes urged
Self-exhausted. With sighs of self-exhausted mirth
Self-exiled. Are shattered into dust; and self-exiled
Self-existing. Prime, self-existing cause and end of all Self-exalted. Which we, a generation self-exalted,
Self-flattering. And expectations of self-flattering minds!
Self-forgetfulness. In self-forgetfulness secure,
Of self-forgetfulness. Yes, that heartless chase
Self-forgetting. With self-forgetting tenderness of heart
Self-glorified. And coquering Reason, if self-glorified,
Self-governed. And still remain self-governed, and apart,
Self-government. In reason, in self-government too slow
Self-haunting. In the self-haunting spirit learned to take Self-hidden. Self-hidden praise, and Friendship's private tear
Self-illuminated. The self-illuminated Brigantine
Self-importance. To self-importance, hallowed it, and veiled

Self-indulgence. And self-indulgence—without shame pursued.
Self-indulging. Steeped in a self-indulging spleen, that wants not Self-involved. There, self-involved, does Peter sit Selfish. Rash judgments, nor the sneers of selfish men,
The selfish to reprove.
But a bold Knight, the selfish aim
Of inward happiness. We are selfish men;
In selfish interest perverts the will,
Bold proof that with no selfish aim,
And, 'mid their choirs unroofed by selfish rage,
Rash schemes, to abjure all selfish agitation,
Nor selfish with unnecessary cares,
Against the weight of meanness, selfish cares,
Who was not lost, abandoned, selfish, proud,
As selfish passion urged, would act amiss;
Of selfish passions; nor did ever yield
The held of selfish difference and dispute,
In the perverseness of a selfish course:
No self, and whom the selfish scorn—
Selfishness. To selfishness and cold oblivious cares.
To a more subtle selfishness; that now
To selfishness, disguised in gentle names
As generous as a fountain; selfishness
To timid selfishness withdrew, I sought
Of selfishness; so senseless who could be
Of selfishness, and cruelty, and vice;
Used or abused, as selfishness may prompt.
For selfishness, and envy, and revenge,
Reface the selfishness from which they spring
Self-justified. Not unresentful where self-justified;
Self-knowledge. More skilful in self-knowledge, even more pure,
How glorious! In self-knowledge and self-rule,
Self-love. To proud Self-love her own intelligence;
Self-mistrust. Happy occasions oft by self-mistrust
Self-moved. The roof, self-moved, unsettling o'er his head;
Self-multiplied. Like fleecy clouds self-multiplied)
Self-occupied. Self-occupied; to which all outward things
Self-offered. Self-offered victim, for his friend he died,
Self-pleasing. Self-pleasing, which, if we would wish to think
Self-poised. Self-poised upon that yellow flower;
Self-poised in air thou seem'st to rest;—
Self-poised, and scooped into ten thousand cells,
Self-presence. Which yet have such self-presence in my mind,
Self-presented. Simplicity and self-presented truth.
Self-punished. Self-catechised, self-punished.—
Some there are
Self-questioned. I looked and looked, self-questioned what this freight
Self-questioned where it did not understand,
Self-raised. That it had sprung self-raised from earth, or grown
Self-reliance. The self-reliance of despair!
Self-reproach. Did she extract the food of self-reproach,
To serious musing and to self-reproach.
And self-reproach! for, from aloft, a Kite
From self-reproach, reproach that he must share
Of self-reproach) have chanted elegies
No self-reproach; who of the moral law
Hereafter, not escaping self-reproach,
Of self-reproach familiarly assailed;
Acknowledging, and grievous self-reproach,
Of self-reproach, it passed away. Said he,
The sting of self-reproach, with healing words.
Self-reproached. And if too often, self-reproached, he felt Self-reproaches. Whose self-reproaches are too strong!
Self-respect. Of self-respect, and virtue in the few
Stern self-respect, a reverence for God's word,
Allured him, sunk so low in self-respect
Self-respecting. And self-respecting slowness, disinclined
This, self-respecting Nature prompts, and this
From self-respecting interests, deem them not Self-restraining. Of self-restraining art,
The self-restraining, and the ever-kind;
Self-restraint. If Power could live at ease with self-restraint!
Is where it ought to be, in self-restraint.
Self-reviewed. In his individual being, self-reviewed
Self-rule. How glorious! in self-knowledge and self-rule,
Consistent in self-rule; and heaven revealed
Self-sacrifice. And prompt self-sacrifice to which I owe Forbearance and self-sacrifice;
The spirit of self-sacrifice;
Each from his fountain of self-sacrifice!
Self-sacrifice the firmest; generous love,
Self-same. Upon the self-same spot, in rain or storm,
Upon the self-same spot, still round and round,

Self-same—continued.

But in a world like ours— This self-same Man—
That gives to all the self-same bent
Of human Beings, in the self-same spot !
Not half a furlong from that self-same spring.
The self-same Vision which we now behold,
And at the corner of that self-same house .
The self-same bourn— And for this cause to thee
That self-same village church ; I see her sit
Thy after-sojourn in the self-same place .
All else was progress on the self-same path
Upon the self-same nail ; his very staff
To an exalted pitch (the self-same cause
More obviously the self-same influence rules
Seized him, that self-same night ; and through the
space
And at the self-same moment, works its way
Self-satisfying. As seemed, their soft self-satisfying
light,
Self-secluded. That sheltered him, a self-secluded
Man,
Self-shaken. Self-shaken, as I closed my airy journey.
Self-shelter. In close self-shelter, like a Thing at rest.
Self-shorn. If she, self-shorn of Majesty, ordain Self-smitten. Self-smitten till thy garments reek dyed red
Self-solaced. Sad is thy doom, self-solaced dove,
Of that self-solaced, easy-hearted churl,
Self-solacing. Like those self-solacing, those under, notes
Self-sown. Far as it dares to follow. Herbs self-sown,
Ground-flowers, beneath your guardianship, self-
sown.
Self-stationed. Yours is no common life. Self-stationed here,
Self-stilled. Then, like a blast that dies away self-stilled,
Self-stripped. Lo ! John self-stripped of his insignia ;
—crown,
Self-submission. Through courteous self-submissioo, as a tax
Self-subverted. Should perish, self-subverted. Black and dense
Self-sufficing. With self-sufficing solitude,
Prompt, lively, self-sufficing, yet so meek
A reasoning, self-sufficing thing,
The self-sufficing power of Solitude.
Self-supported. Or fostered, self-supported chiefs,— like those
Self-surpass. From well to better, daily self-surpass :
Self-surviving. A self-surviving leafless oak
Self-suspicion. Exciting self-suspicion strong, Self-taught. (Then first a self-taught pupil in its truths)
Self-taught, as of a dreamer in the woods ;
Certes were self-taught damselfs, scattered births .
Self-tormenting. Into a grievous sore of self-tormenting earth.
Self-transmuted. Put off her veil, and, self-transmu-tated, stood
Self-will. Of proud Self-will, Rapacity, and Lust,
Save by Self-will. Lo ! from that distant shore,
Self-willed. Perverse, self-willed to own and to disown,
Is stormy and self-willed ;
Frugal as there was need, and, though self-willed,
Self-withdrawn. And self-withdrawn into a boundless depth,
Selkirk. " Let Yarrow folk, frae Selkirk town,
Sell. As warm a cloak as man can sell !"
The Shepherd's sole resource to sell at once
Whether to buy or sell, or led
Though I sell shirt and skin,
Selling. Who have been buying, selling, Selves. But nothing from their inward selves had they to fear.
Upon their conscious selves ; their own lips
speak
On our past selves in life's declining day :
When from our better selves we have too long
And in the region of their peaceful selves —
They from their native selves can send abroad
Semblance. Did press this semblance of unpieted smart
But whether in the semblance drest
And free from semblance of decline —
With every semblance of entire content ;
In semblance fresh, as if, with dire affray,
In semblance of a lady fair ;
While Bacchus, clothed in semblance of a Friar,
Of stormy weather-stains that semblance wrought,
" Nay, nay, I come with semblance feigned
Thou, whose exterior semblance doth belie
And bore the semblance of another stream
The ghostly semblance of a hooded monk,
A semblance strange of power intelligent,
The semblance bearing of a sculptured form
Semicirque. Tier under tier, this semicirque profound ?

Semicirque—continued.

Upon a semicirque of turf-clad ground,
Semi-Quixote. This semi-Quixote, I to him have given
Sempstress. For a Sempstress thorough-bred,
Senate. Of an assembled Senate unredeemed
And in the Senate some there were who doffed
The Senate stood aghast, her prudence quenched,
In Britain's senate. Fruitless-was the attempt :
Or 'mid the factions senate unappalled
Senate's. The Senate's language, and the public acts
Sena'ss. So patient Senates quibble by the hour Senators. Where senators, tongue-favoured men, perform,
And uncorrupted senators, alike
Send. A look of mine would send him scouring back,
Arc here, to send the sun into the west
And send ye dancing to the clouds, like leaves.
And send it with a fillip to its grave.
Send forth such noises—and that weary bell !
The thunder send him on his knees to prayer .
Sat the poor girl, and forth did send
And in one night send twenty score of sheep
Could I with thee a message send ;
Then come to me, my Son, or send
She quite forgot to send the Doctor,
Buy for him more, and let us send him forth
And send a thankful spirit back to you,
Is visible ; and often seems to send
This water doth send forth a dolorous groan .
Fair greeting doth she send to all
And in due season send the mandate forth ;
Could from sad regions send him to a dear
Fame taxes him,) that he could send forth word .
They, too, who send so far a holy gleam .
A cry of lamentation send ;
Was ripe to send its thousands forth,
Send through the tarn a lonely cheer ;
Send forth a song of triumph. Waves and Winds,
Send unto thee as mickle joy this day,
As ever he to Lover yet did send.
And joy of love to send her evermore ;
That Cresida again thou send me soon.
Why, gifted with such powers to send abroad
They from their native selves can send abroad
Amid the roar of torrents, where they send
Far forth to send his wandering eye o'er land
Whom he had loved in passion ; and to send .
Those visitations, ceased to send her forth ;
The forked weapon of the skies can send
Her swarms, and in succession send them forth ;
The grieved one whom it meant to send away,
Have virtue to send forth. Upon the marge
Into the homestalls, ere they send them back Sendeth. And, when it likes him, joy enough them sendeth.
Sending. Of sending to his grave our precious Charge :
And sending upward sparkling light .
Sending sad shadows after things not sad,
Can cheat the time ; sending her fancy ont
Sit like a thrond Lady, sending ont
Sends. A messenger he sends ;
What hopes it sends to Betty's heart !
And countless blessings which God sends ;
Blows keenly, it sends forth a creaking sound
Which sends so far its melancholy light,
Sends gladness, by no languid smile, declared,
Inspired, the Church sends ministers to kneel
Unto broad light, and seeds, through regions airy,
Sends the pale Convict to his last retreat .
Of-times from Alpine chalets seeds a greeting.
Through earth and sky, spreads widely, and sends deep
Beyond all compass ; spreads, and sends aloft
Sends inspiration from the shadowy heights,
For, as reports the dame, whose fire sends up
Seneca. Not virtuous Seneca on Nero more.
Sensation. The spectacle : sensation, soul, and form,
The one sensation that is here ; 'tis here,
Swarms with sensation, as with gleams of sunshine,
Sensations. In hours of weariness, sensations sweet,
And sweet sensations that throw back our life,
Of their sensations, and in vobule phrase .
With strong sensations teeming as it did
A conflict of sensations without name .
Into sensations near the heart : meantime,
Irksome sensations ; but by love of truth
These pure sensations ; that can penetrate
Haunted him with sensations of disgust
Sense. See Common-sense, Under-sense.
Awoke a fainter sense of moral grief ;
He fell, and without sense or motion lay ;
His sense, in sudden vacancy quite lost,
Of hideous sense, I sank, nor step could crawl :
" These things just served to stir the slumbering sense,
Who has so practised on the world's cold sense,
You have obeyed the only law that sense .

 I felt a sense of pain when I beheld . . . 186 Nothing 52
 So that it seems a thing endowed with sense :
 While here I stand, not only with the sense
 Of elevated thoughts ; a sense sublime . . . 207
 In nature and the language of the sense . . . 207
 It is—if sense deceive her not—'tis He !
 Of sense were able to return as fast . . . 209
 To rocks, fields, woods, Nor doth our human sense
 Of vulgar sense,—and, being such, . . . 225
 Emboldened by a keener sense ; . . . 225
 To lie and listen—till o'er-drowsed sense
 A sense of seemingly presumptuous wrong
 I speak as if of sense beguiled ; . . . 232
 Betray not by the cozenage of sense
 Terrible for sense and soul !
 Of common sense you're surely sinning ;
 How ye, that play with soul and sense,
 Upon the rights of visual sense . . . 245
 A holy sense pervades his mind ;
 (For what delights the sense is false and weak)
 'Tis sense, unbridled will, and not true love,
 Benignity and home-bred sense . . . 257
 Which the gross world no sense hath to perceive,
 Of sense despised, a world forgot.
 When truth, when sense, when liberty were flown,
 And ye—who might mistake for sober sense
 To the general sense of men by chains confined
 Say, what is Honour ?—'Tis the finest sense
 On the tired household of corporeal sense,
 By the deep soul-moving sense . . . 323
 Of contemplation, by no sense of wrong
 A tender sense of shadowy fear,
 And Faith—so oft of sense the thrall,
 Thy sense from pressure of life's common din ;
 Admonished not without some sense of fear,
 Her conquests, in the world of sense made known,
 Involved a history of no doubtful sense, . . . 359

Rapt though He were above the power of sense,
 In Forms that must perish, frail objects of sense ;
 Prefigured to his sense the Egyptian Lady.
 Till sense in death was darkened,
 Remnants of love whose modest sense
 Fair Pilgrim ! harbours she a sense
 " For thee, for thee, is left the sense
 'Tis flown—the Vision, and the sense
 And how—unless it were the sense . . . 411
 A glimmering sense still left, with eyes
 From outraged Nature ; but the sense of most
 From rites that trample upon soul and sense,
 Than that the Soul, freed from the bonds of Sense,
 Through all her nerves with finer sense endowed,
 As men the dictate of whose inward sense
 Deep in your hearts the sense of duty lie ;
 So deemed the man who fashioned for the sense
 That listening sense is pardonably cheated
 From sense, faith, reason, fancy, of the cause,
 To the Mind's gaining that prophetic sense
 Which seems a sense of joy to yield
 Sound sense, and love itself, and mirth and glee
 For love, that comes wherever life and sense
 Upon the genial sense of youth :
 —He who, though thus ended as with a sense
 As soon it must, a sense to sip, . . . 497
 Inflamed by sense of wrong ; . . . 499

Opinion how before the naked sense . . . 500
 From the penalty a sense . . . 502
 His social sense of just, and fair, and true ;
 To a like salutary sense of awe . . . 510
 Might soothe in human breasts the sense of ill,
 And fortify the moral sense of all.
 Even so ; but measuring not by finite sense
 Through tyranny of sense.
 On their quick sense our sweetest music jarred ;
 Exalt the sense of thoughtful gratitude
 Mute offerings, tribute from an inward sense
 To appear before my Lady ? but a sense
 That sense, the bland philosophy of life,
 Is but a lonely bed without the sense or sight
 Of sense and outward things, . . . 589
 Dead to the sense of every finer joy ;
 All soothers of sense their soft virtue shall yield,
 Worked with a dim and undetermined sense
 Those hallowed and pure motions of the sense
 And bringing with me no peculiar sense
 Not in a mystical and idle sense,
 Objects through widest intercourse of sense,
 That through the growing faculties of sense
 Remembering not, retains an obscure sense
 Place also by the side of this dark sense . . . 653
 All sense,—but other passions in me ruled,
 And though an aching and a barren sense . . . 658

Sense—continued.

Yes, I had something of a subtler sense, . . . 661
 Is scarcely obvious ; hut, that common sense
 How arch his notices, how nice his sense . . . 670
 From heart-experience, and in humblest sense
 What reason, what simplicity and sense . . . 674
 A pleasure quiet and profound, a sense
 To sense embodied : not the thing it is
 Spake with a sense of peace, at intervals . . . 681
 Of conquest over sense, hourly achieved
 Of usurpation, when the light of sense . . . 684
 Words follow words, sense seems to follow sense :
 Lies to the ear, and lies to every sense—
 Where to the sense of beauty first my heart
 Favoured no less, and more to every sense
 Of record or tradition ; but a sense
 One sense for moral judgments, as one eye
 And continence of mind, and sense of right,
 Hath called upon to embody his deep sense
 Imaginations, sense of woes to come,
 Labouring, a brain confounded, and a sense,
 Among the grandest objects of the sense,
 As we grow up, such thraldom of that sense
 The mind is lord and master—outward sense
 My sense of excellence—of right and wrong :
 With real feeling and just sense ; how vain
 Heaven's gift, a sense that fits him to perceive
 In sense conducting to ideal form, . . . 744
 To bodily sense exhibits, is the express
 Under a growing weight of vulgar sense,
 When every day brought with it some new sense
 The incumbent mystery of sense and soul,
 Without some hazard to the finer sense . . . 751
 Perplexed the bodily sense. He had received
 That we beheld ; and lend the listening sense
 By waking sense or by the dreaming soul !
 But if the spirit be oppressed by sense . . . 788
 Of admiration, and all sense of joy ? . . . 791
 Of soul and sense mysteriously allied,
 And sad exclusion through decay of sense ;
 Restor't us, daily, to the powers of sense . . . 802
 And domineering faculties of sense . . . 810
 The repetitions wearisome of sense,
 Of his own reason, without sense or thought
 Or, less reluctantly to bonds of sense
 Of art, this palpable array of sense,
 Of science, and philosophy, and sense !"
 Bestowed ; were glad some,—and their moral sense
 From sense and reason less than these obtained,
 And speak to social reason's inner sense,
 The glorious habit by which sense is made
 From sense of degradation, not the less
 Are yet made desperate by ' too quick a sense
 Froze them, to seize and occupy the sense ;
 Was something which to mortal sense might sound
 And to the mind among her powers of sense . . . 861
 Discovered in their own despite to sense . . . 868
 Have sense of one conatural wish, nor yet
 Enrapt, as if his inward sense perceived . . . 871
 For with the sense of admiration blends . . . 877
 From sense and observation, it subsists
 Relinquishes its hold upon the sense, . . . 884
 By which the finer passages of sense . . . 885
 Into all hearts. Throughout the world of sense,
 To the infirmity of mortal sense . . . 893
 Is the firm basis of habitual sense . . . S. 3. 435

 Ye Kings, in wisdom, sense, and power supreme,
 All plain blunt sense, all subtlety of thought, . . . L. 1. 88 Senseless. The senseless body, and why not the mind ?—
 Who with him ?—even the senseless Little-one . . . 125
 And honour rest upon the senseless clay . . . 270
 To senseless ashes. Mark ! how all things swerve
 From councils senseless as intolerant . . . 422
 Upon his senseless grave . . . 580
 Of senseless horsemanship, or on the breast
 Till the whole cave, so late a senseless mass,
 Of massacre, in which the senseless sword . . . 719
 And senseless rocks ; nor idly ; for they speak,
 Four dear supporters of one senseless weight,
 From doubt and sorrow, than the senseless grave ?"
 Despise, as senseless : for my spirit relished
 Of selfishness ; so senseless who could be
 Or sorrow which his senseless guilt had caused ;
 The senseless member of a vast machine, . . . 853

Senselessness. The senselessness of joy was then sublime !
 Senses. That grief for which the senses still supply
 Beyond the senses and their little reign.
 Cold stony horror all her senses bound.
 His senses play him false ; and see, his arms
 No wonder if her senses fail ; . . . 129
 Her senses back again : . . . 199
 Her looks were calm, her senses clear . . . 199
 Whate'er the senses take or may refuse,
 My senses yielding to the sultry air,
 The most despotic of our senses, gained . . . 736

Sequestered—continued.

- Unsociably sequestered, and encroaching . . .
 And fixed his home in this sequestered vale . . .
 In town and city and sequestered glen,
 True; as the mightiest; upon thee sequestered . . .
- Sequestration. In dusty sequestration wrapt too long,
 O gift divine of quiet sequestration!
 In rustic sequestration—all dependent . . .
- Seraph. King, child, and seraph, blended in the mien
Seraph-haunted. And rapt Cecilia, seraph-haunted
 Queen
- Seraphic. His rostrum, with seraphic glance look up,
Seraphim. The six-days' Work by flaming Seraphim
 By Seraphim,
 Even like the radiant Seraphim, . . .
- Seraph's. May Discord—for a Seraph's care
 Are they—and might demand a seraph's tongue, . . .
- Seraphs. Bright Seraphs mixed familiarly with men;
 Or crown of burning seraphs as they sit . . .
- Sere. In gentle bosoms, while sere leaves . . .
 Me, conscious that my leaf is sere, . . .
- Hopeless of further growth, and brown and sere
 Of summer, in the season of sere leaves;
 Dislodged, through sere leaves rustled, or at once
Serenade. Tears brightened by the serenade
Serene. Long may they float upon this flood serene;
 How bright, how solemn, how serene!
 Appalling havoc! but serene his brow,
 Like a dead Boy he is serene.
 Of a sky serene and pure;
 Earth, spangled sky, and lake serene,
 And now I see with eye serene . . .
 Is lightened—that serene and blessed mood,
 Serene, and fitted to embrace,
 But an old age serene and bright,
 In depth, in height, in circuit, how serene . . .
 In this serene and solemn hour, . . .
 Of aspect winning and serene;
 Say can he think of this with mind serene
 And, even to sadness, lonely and serene,
 Or top serene of unmolested mountain,
 Where their serene progenitors are laid;
 From the smooth meadow-ground, serene and still!
 For faith, 'mid ruined hopes, serene?
 And, therefore, art thou blest with peace, serene . . .
 The still repose, the liquid lapse serene,
 Of that serene companion—a good name,
 Fair fruit of pleasure and serene content
 Comes gliding in serene and slow,
 And carrying inward a serene
 Wonder that aught of aspect so serene
 Glory of night, conspicuous yet serene,
 Nought heard, of ocean troubled or serene?
 Extracting from clear skies and air serene,
 Serene will be our days and bright,
 Contented and serene;
 She may look for serene weather;
 Crescent in simple loveliness serene,
 From whose serene companionship I passed
 Once I could hail (how'er serene the sky)
 Resolves devotedly serene;
 This, which I know, I speak with mind serene.
 And, floating there, in pomp serene,
 Whose shades protect the hidden vae serene;
 Now, passing Urseren's open vale serene,
 O'er azure pikes serene and still, they go,
 Lift, all serene, their still, illum'd forms,
 Serene he towers, in deepest purple dy'd;
 Stern was her forehead, but a smile serene
 Confiding in that Star serene,
 To night, unbroken cheerfulness serene.
 A sober hour, not winning or serene,
 Your beauty with me, a serene accord
 Though under skies less generous, less serene:
 Interposition—a serene delight
 Serene it was, unclouded by the cares
 The most serene, with most undaunted eye!
 Uplifted; here, serene pavilions bright,
 And in serene possession of himself,
 Night hushed as night, and day serene as day!
 But no—for the serene was also bright;
 Pure and serene, diffused—to overlook
 Capacious and serene. Like power abides
 He stood; or if not so, whose top serene
 To your serene authorities conform;
 When he beholds the first pale speck serene
 Capacious and serene; his blameless life,
 Praised the consummate harmony serene
 That combinations so serene and bright
Serenity. Or when along thy breast serenely float
 —But hers are eyes serenely bright,
 Who from truth's central point serenely views
Serenity. Blended in absolute serenity,
Serious. Is a most serious thing. Not I alone,
 To serious musing and to self-reproach,
 Of serious faith, and inward glee
 Even for such promise—serious is her face,
 Might give to serious thought a moment's sway,
 And make the serious happier than the gay?
 Of still and serious thought went round, . . .

Serious—continued.

- And scanned them with a fixed and serious look . . .
 And serious mood; but after I had seen . . .
 In serious mood, but oftener, I confess, . . .
 Set forth, too serious theme for that light place—
 Not moving to his mind!" These serious words
 Cheered, plainly, and yet serious. What a wreck
 It is most serious: persevering rain . . .
 On serious minds: then, as the Hindoos draw
 A serious eye, and his speech thus renewed.
 And undisguised, and strong and serious thought;
 Rise to the notice of a serious mind . . .
 While in this serious mood we held discourse,
 —Serious and thoughtful was her mind; and yet,
 Inspire the serious song, and gentle Hearts

 In grisly folds and strictures serpentine; . . .

Serptorius. And followers of Serptorius, out of Spain . . .
Servant. Swiftly went that grey-haired servant,
 (High Servant of paternal Love)
 That this great Servant of a righteous cause . . .
 While on each head his lawn-robed servant lays
 Thee his loved servaunt, his inspiring mate!
 Servant of Providence, not slave of Fate—
 With this tried Servant of a thankless Court, . . .
- For he that faithfully Love's servant is,
 The obedient servant of her will. Such moments
 An ancient servant of my father's house . . .
 The faithful servant, who must hide his head . . .
 His rosy face, a servant only here . . .
 Thou good and faithful servant of the Cross."
- Were such your servaunt Percy! (he it tried)
Servant's. The Master died, his drooping servant's grief

- Servants. The pair were servants of his eye . . .
 Upon those servants of another world . . .
 Thy servants, who can trifle thus;
 And taught her faithful servants how the lyre
 Servants of God! who not a thought will share
 To speak of Love's true Servants in this mood;
 For evermore his servants Love amendeth,
 Such hope, entreats that servants may abound
- Serve. Let me have leave to serve you! My Companion
 To serve me so, and knowing that he owes
 To perpetrate his crimes, serve as a Sanctuary
 Than obloquy; that, if we wish to serve
 His words and tones and gestures, did but serve
 To serve them for a guide.
 Whose moss-grown root might serve for couch or
 seat,
 All powers that serve the bright-eyed Queen
 Serve Thee, invisible Spirit, with untired powers;
 Do serve with all their changeful pageantry;
 And earth below, they best can serve true gladness
 To serve—an unsuspected screen
 Here only serve a feeling to invite
 And fittest serve to crown with fragrant wreaths
 Off for a holy warning may it serve,
 Or warning serve, thus let them all, on ground
 To live, and act, and serve the future hour;
 Nor will the Power we serve, that sacred Power,
 How can I serve you? point the way!"
 What serve they? if, on transitory good
 Dread Power! whom peace and calmness serve
 And under one blest ensign serve the Lord
 To serve thy need, in union with that Clyde
 But thee I now would serve more strictly, if I may.
 Of those terrestrial fabrics, where they serve,
 Of strict obedience, serve the Almighty Lord;
 To serve the glorious Henry, King of France,
 Though but a doubting hope, that they might serve
 To serve in Nature's temple, thou hast been
 As some might seem, so aptly do they serve
 And seasons serve; all Faculties to whom
 Duty to serve the mind of earth-horn man;
 For all things serve them; them the morning light
 Among new objects serve or give command,
 Therefore to serve was high bestitude;
 Serve to exalt; they build up greatest things
 And something that may serve to set in view
 Who would forbid them, if their presence serve,
 Contingences of pomp; and serve to exalt
 The processes of things, and serve the cause
 Discerning Mortal! do thou serve the will
 Generous and charitable, prompt to serve;
 To serve the will of feeble-bodied Man . . .
 Them who are born to serve her and obey;

 Seven little Islands, green and bare,
 And Ruth, not seven years old,
 "Seven are they, and all fatherless!"
 He the seven birds hath seen, that never part,
 Seen the SEVEN WHISTLERS in their nightly rounds,
 Twice seven consenting years have shed
 Soon witnessed, and the city of seven hills,
 And seven as true as thou, I see,
 Seven hundred Knights, Retainers all . . . 161 Binnorie 1

Shade—continued.

Men are we, and must grieve when even the Shade
 And Mina, nourished in the studious shade,
 Of pencil ever clothed with light and shade;
 There heard we, halting in the shade
 With its grey rocks clustering in pensive shade—
 Nor falls that intermingling shade
 Halting beneath the chestnut shade
 A sunbeam followed by a shade!
 —How lovely robed in forenoon light and shade,
 To meet the shade of Horace by the side
 Ripe for the haud, or under a thick shade
 Or softly stealing into modest shade.
 The sun in heaven—but now, to form a shade
 Nor wants the holy Abbot's gliding Shade
 Who sate in the shade of the Prior's Oak!
 And first we sang of the greenwood shade
 He led her from the yew-tree shade,
 His last words in the yew-tree shade,
 Emerging from a cedar shade
 To Emily in the yew-tree shade:
 While she sate listening in the shade,
 Permits a second and a darker shade
 Thy hovering Shade, O venerable Bede!
 Yet many a Novice of the cloistral shade,
 With the least shade of thought to sin allied;
 Set off her brightness with a pleasing shade
 Through gloomiest shade; put on (nor dread its weight)
 Where light and shade repose, where music dwells
 Of light with shade in beauty reconciled—
 To sne the God; but, haunting your green shade
 A tender Spirit broods—the peevish Shade
 To cast a soul-subduing shade on me,
 A shade—but with some sparks of heavenly fire
 Yon light shapes forth a Bard, that shade a Chief.
 Within whose shade they parted
 Or boding Shade, or if the Maid
 Where clouds that spread in solemn shade,
 Sing here beneath the shade,
 Could fearlessly approach the shade?
 That calls from yonder leafy shade . . .
 Forsaken " in the shade!
 Cast into that recess—the tender shade,
 The shade and light, both there and everywhere,
 And how he rules the pomp of light and shade;
 Moving along a tract of morning shade,
 Under a fancied yew-tree's luckless shade;
 In pleasure, is the darkest shade
 A shade upon the future cast,
 Loving the dewy shade,—a humble band,
 And pine-trees made a heavy shade
 They shrank not into shade;
 Leads to the dear Parnassian forest's shade,
 Urged less for this Yew's shade, though he
 Tired dipp'd his pathway in the river shade;
 Illumes with sparkling foam the twilight shade.
 Before the boat-house peeping thro' the shade;
 Breaks on the shade, the shade upon the light,
 Bright as the moon, half hides itself in shade.
 Old Roman boats and figures thro' the shade,
 Farewell! those forms that, in thy noon-tide shade,
 The still vales lengthens underneath the shade;
 Shade above shade the desert pines ascend,
 The grassy seat beneath their casement shade
 The casement shade more luscious woodbine binds,
 To break the quiet of the village shade
 With breathing flowers embraced, and fragrant shade.
 Shade of Caractacus, if spirits love
 That he might wake to clasp thee in the shade:
 How, when the Sea threw off his evening shade
 We rested in the shade, all pleased alike,
 Proud of its own bright fire and sycamore shade.
 And what the summer shade, what day and night,
 I laughed with Chaucer in the hawthorn shade;
 So near that, slipping back into the shade
 Sit in the shade together, while they gaze,
 Of Arden—amid sunshine or in shade
 With length of shade so thick, that whose glides
 As in a cloister. Once—while, in that shade
 Or in wide forests of continuous shade
 Lived in the shade; and to Harmodius know
 A twilight of its own, an ample shade,
 Under a shade as grateful I should find
 Recumbent in the shade, as if asleep;
 Of my approaching steps, and in the shade
 Withdrawing, straightway to the shade returned
 I rose; and, having left the breezy shade,
 In sunshine and in shade, in wet and fair,
 I found that she was absent. In the shade,
 The shade, and look abroad. On this old hench
 Upon those silent walls, we left the shade
 The shade of discontent which on his brow
 Where arbours of impenetrable shade,
 I worshipped thee, and find thee but a Shade!
 Roaming, or resting under grateful shade . . .
 Impenetrable shade; once more farewell,

Shade—continued.

All withered by the depth of shade above.
 Where sun and shade were intermixed; for there
 That spreads, in gentle pomp, its honied shade.
 And gathering all within their tender shade,
 And not a flower, that droops in the green shade,
 To the deep shade of those untravelled Wilds;
 And flowers that prosper in the shade. And when
 Beneath the shade we all sate down; and there
 Oread or Dryad glancing through the shade
 Stern self-denial round him spread, with shade
 But that the minstrel of the rural shade
 Within its shade, as in a stately tent
 Yet, like the sweet-breathed violet of the shade,
 Stretched on the grass, or seated in the shade,
 Raised from his seat within the chosen shade,
 Cherished in shade though peeped at by the sun;
 Let not " Willy's " holy shade . . .
Shaded. See Laurel-shaded.
 I saw, espied its shaded mouth;
 No honnet shaded, but she wore
 With palm-groves shaded at wide intervals,
 This shaded valley leaves; and leaves the dark
 Part shaded by cool sycamore, and part
 (Yon cottage shaded by the woody crags)
Shadeless. And eyes through tears the mountain's shadeless height;
 Shadeless and shelterless, by driving showers
Shades. See Mountain-shades.
 And shades of deep-embattled clouds were seen,
 'Cross the calm lake's blue shades the cliffs aspire,
 Where leafy shades fence off the blustering gale,
 And start the astonished shades at female eyes.
 —To towns, whose shades of no rude noise complain,
 Freshening the wilderness with shades and springs.
 'Mid lawns and shades by breezy rivulets fanned,
 And, while shades to shades succeeding
 " O! what a weight is in these shades! Ye leaves, some 21
 Rouse him: hut in those solitary shades . . .
 Then, dearest Maiden, move along these shades
 Of shades, and dews, and silent night;
 And from the infernal Gods, 'mid shades forlorn
 Our blest re-union in the shades below.
 Your once sweet memory, studious walks and shades!
 While to these shades a sister Nymph I call . . .
 Among the lovely shades of things;
 The shades of palaces and kings!
 When twilight shades darken the mountain's head,
 Dark and more dark the shades of evening fell;
 Dim shades—for reliques, upon Lethe's shore,
 Or muse in solemn grove whose shades protect
 Through twilight shades of good and ill—
 From shades, her chosen place of short-lived rest.
 While the Sun rules, and cross the shades of night—
 Yet all is harmless—as the Elysian shades
 For them who in the shades of sorrow dwell . . .
 And now, ye Miltonian shades! under you
 Not envying Latian shades—if yet they throw
 With lawns and beds of flowers, and shades
 Soft shades and dews have shed their blended power
 And night approaches with her shades.
 And penetrates the forest's inmost shades;
 Alternate empire in the shades below—
 While she dispels the cumbrous shades of Night;
 To heights more glorious still, and into shades
 And moss-grown alleys, circumscribing shades,
 Fit for the shades of heroes, mingling there
 Shades of past bliss, or phantoms that, to gain
 Shades of the Past, oft noticed with a sigh,
 Shades of the prison-house begin to close
 Gazing the tempting shades to them deny'd,
 And with long rays and shades the landscape shines;
 Whose shades protect the hidden wave serene
 Than waters dashing wild, or rocking shades,
 Checker with paler red the thicket shades.
 And bidding paler shades her form conceal,
 To towns, whose shades of no rude sound complain, Freshening the waste of sand with shades and
 springs.
 Here lawns and shades by breezy rivulets fann'd,
 Erroneous wavering mid the twilight shades . . .
 And fled indignant to the shades of night;
 The shades of night no more the soul involve,
 She sheds her beam, and, lo! the shades dissolve;
 Thy shades, thy silence, now be mine,
 Through shades that solemnize Life's calm decline,
 And, from his alder shades and rocky falls,
 Hath beautified that flower; already shades
 Where, though the shades with cheerfulness were filled,
 Of poesy, affecting private shades
 Inviting shades of opportune recess,
 Will chant together." Thereafter, as the shades
 Such conversation, under Attic shades,
 Rouse him; hut, hidden in those gloomy shades,
 Into communion with her sylvan shades,
 Oh! wrap him in your shades, ye giant woods,
 To interpose the covert of your shades,

 "Vallombrosa—I longed in thy shadiest wood
 364 Prelude 4. 248
Shadings. Whatever shadings of mortality, . . .
Shadow. See Hill-shadow.
 Scarce hides a shadow from her searching rays ;
 Whose very shadow gnaws us to the vitals.
 A shadow of myself—made by myself . . .
 A shadow in a hated land, while all
 A shadow, never, never to be displaced
 And, like a shadow, glided out of view.
 The shadow of a Danish Boy.
 So feebly spread that not a shadow falls,
 And Time the Shadow ;—there to celebrate,
 The shadow of a babe you trace,
 "No Spectre greets me,—no vain Shadow this ;
 Beneath the shadow of his purple wings
 We were not mocked with glimpse and shadow then,
 Couched in the shadow of Mænalian pines,
 The meagre shadow that looks on—
 Ward of the Law!—dread Shadow of a King!
 Or gambol—each with his shadow at his side,
 Float double, swan and shadow!
 Without a shadow of mischance,
 The shadow and the song,
 Filing the shadow of thy power,
 Still moonshine, without shadow, spread
 In the Tower's shadow, of decline and fall
 Under the shadow of a stately Pile,
 No zephyr breathes, no cloud its shadow throws:
 Flung from yon cliff a shadow large and cold.
 Now doth a delicate shadow fall,
 "A shadow of such thought remains . . .
 The shadow—and the peace supreme!
 By its shadow round him thrown ;
 But for the shadow by the drooping chin
 The beauty of its star-shaped shadow, thrown
 While musing here I sit in shadow cool,
 The Daisy, by the shadow that it casts,
 There, under shadow of the neighbouring rocks,
 Such is life : and death a shadow
 That flings his shadow on the pictur'd deep.
 On his smooth breast the shadow of those towers
 A random choice, could shadow forth a place . . .
 The shadow from the substance, rocks and sky,
 His shadow lay, and moved not. From self-blame
 A shadow, a delusion, ye who pore
 Substance and shadow, light and darkness, all
 His shadow stretching towards Syracuse, . . .
 —Beyond the limits of the shadow cast . . .
 He was all fire : no shadow on his brow
 So moved he like a shadow that performed
 Glorious! because the shadow of thy might,
 The shadow falls to note the stealthy hours,
 For, like a shadow, he was passed away
 And her obsequious shadow, peace of mind,
 In one best moment. Like a shadow thrown
 Of that tall pine, the shadow of whose bare
 A type and shadow of an awful truth ;
 Shadow and substance kissing point to point
 Darkened beneath the shadow of her thoughts
Shadow-casting. The shadow-casting race of trees survive : . . .
Shadowed. Boldly assembled,—here is shadowed forth
 Had Nature shadowed there, by putting forth,
 Have condescendingly been shadowed forth . . .
Shadowing. See Forth-shadowing.
 The Church, by mandate shadowing forth the power . . .
Shadows. See Horsemen-shadows.
 Now, while the solemn evening shadows sail,
 And round the west's proud lodge their shadows
 throw . . .
 And o'er the whitened wave their shadows fling—
 And when a gathering weight of shadows brown
 I did believe all things were shadows—yea,
 The very shadows of the clouds
 Sending sad shadows after things not sad,
 Shadows and sunny glimmerings,
 But neither veil thy head in shadows dim,
 Lo! the clouds, the solemn shadows,
 A face o'er which a thousand shadows go!
 Ye Voices, and ye Shadows
 He paused—for shadows of strange shape,
 Entanglings of the brain ; though shadows stretch
 What could they gain but shadows of redress?
 A way with shadows overspread ;
 If, then, some natural shadows spread
 Of Time and shadows of Tradition crost ;
 Union that shadows forth and doth partake
 From out the pensive shadows where they lie)
 With shadows flung from leaves—to strive
 They are in truth the Substance, we the Shadows."

 The mist, the shadows, light of golden suns,
 Gliding apace, with shadows in their train,
 With ample shadows, seemingly, no less
 Among so many shadows, are the pains
 We met, and passed, like shadows. I have heard,
 While the dark shadows of the summer leaves
 Of sunbeams, shadows, butterflies and birds,
 Shadows or breezes, scents or sounds. Nor deem Shadowy. Now shows a shadowy speck, and now is lost entire.
 A pregnant dream, within whose shadowy bounds
 For shadowy quietness.
 Vanish inverted hill, and shadowy wood,
 Fetched from the shadowy world.
 Green, sable, shining yellow, shadowy brown,
 The shadowy forms of mountains bare,
 At thy meek hiding, shadowy Power! brought forth;
 Glimmers with fading light, and shadowy Eve
 Yon trophied Mound shrinks to a shadowy speck
 Or thrid the shadowy gloom,
 A tender sease of shadowy fear,
 This spot—his shadowy death-cup in his hand.
 Amid the sunny, shadowy, Colosseum ;
 To memory's shadowy moonshine!
 And when thy beauty in the shadowy cave
 From the close confines of a shadowy vale.
 Ye shadowy Beings, that have rights and claims
 From shadowy fountains of the infinite, . . .
 A shadowy link 'tween wakefulness and sleep, . . .
 Those shadowy recollections,
 —Mid the dark steps repose the shadowy streams,
 Those shadowy breasts in love's soft light array'd,
 No shadowy forms entice the soul aside,
 And all the shadowy banks on either side . . .
 Over the shadowy lake, and to the beach . . .
 Of shadowy exultation : not for this
 Of shadowy thoughts work endless changes,—there,
 Between the portals of the shadowy rocks
 For I must tread on shadowy ground, must sink
 Some shadowy intimations hant me here,
 Sends inspiration from the shadowy heights,
 Amid the groves, under the shadowy hills,
 When, in the hollow of some shadowy vale,
 Shadowy, yet gay and lightsome as it stood
 Beneath him, showed his shadowy counterpart.
 The shadowy vale, the sunny mountain-top ;
 In mute composure, o'er the shadowy lake,
 The bright array of shadowy thoughts from times
Shady. Save where, along the shady western marge,
 When with her infants, from some shady seat
 The shady porch ne'er offered a cool seat . . .
 Right towards the lamb she looked ; and from a shady place . . .
 Shady as night, and beautiful as heaven,
 Begun and ended, in the shady grove, . . .
 Some, inmates lodged in shady nests, . . .
 Halting beneath a shady tree,
 Beneath the shady tree,
 That, fleeced with moss, under the shady trees,
 And merciless ravage : and the shady nook
 Leave to the nightingale her shady wood ; . . .
 Pours forth in shady groves, shall plead for me ;
 To be described through shady groves.
 Across a shady lane ; his chest . . .
 Ere they were lost within the shady wood ;
 The cowslip-bank and shady willow-tree ;
 The clouds, or night-bird sang from shady bough ;
 With shady night. Soft airs, from shrub and flower
 Beneath some shady palm of Galilee.
 Of travellers in some shady haunt,
 If never more within their shady round
 In shady places, to proclaim
 To shady rest withdrawing or withdrawn
 He rested 'mid an arbour green and shady,
 To live and die in a shady bower,
 Where shady hamlet, town that breathes
 Adorned, and shady boughs,
 To a green shady place, where down I sate
 Or shady fountain's, while among the leaves
 I left the shady nook where I had stood
 Of eglantine, and through the shady woods,
 Of pleasure sprinkled over, shady dells
 The shady forest of its green attire,—
 And shady groves in studied contrast—each,
 By these obstructions, 'round the shady stones
 Under those shady elms, from him I heard . . .

 shakes
 Her shameless timbrel shakes on Como's marge,
 There is a palsy in his limbs—he shakes.
 He shakes the green bough in his hand.
 He shrugs his shoulders, shakes his head,
 But the foundation of our nature shakes,
 Shakes off that pearly shower.
 Shakes her numb arm that slumbers with its
 weight,
 Where rocks and groves the power of waters shakes
 Her shameless timbrel shakes along thy marge,
 Shakes from behind the clouds his flashing shield.
 The Tinker shakes his head,

 And Shakspeare at his side—a freight,

- Shama. That either e'er existed is my shame: . . .
 To cover him from punishment? Shame!
 Justice,
 False Shame discarded, spurious Fame despised,
 Shame! Eldred, shame! The dead have but one face.
 He blushed with shame, nor made reply;
 And anvern to my shame;
 —"Shame on me, Sir! this lusty Lamb,
 The threatened shame, the parents of the Maid
 To evil courses: ignominy and shame . . .
 Sad deliverance would it be, and yoked with shame,
 Knowing what cause there is for shame,
 A boaster that, when he is tried, fails, and is put to shame?
 Whose just reward is shame.
 Retire in fear of shame;
 "Shame on you!" cried my little Boat,
 I stood, of simple shame the blushing Thrall;
 Shame on this faithless heart! that could allow
 For natural rights, a mockery and a shame;
 Hath sounded (shame upon the Bard!) thy praise
 Now, for your shame, a Power, the Thirst of Gold,
 Of the dead bodies.—'Twas a day of shame . . .
 How loud! yet lived in peace with shame.
 Defeating, put the Monks to shame,
 Shame on you, feeble Heads, to slavery prone!
 Shame followed shame, and we supplanted woe—
 —Woe to them all! but heaviest woe and shame
 Else how, when mighty Thrones were put to shame,
 And guilt and shame, from which is no defence,
 And Christendom respire; from guilt and shame
 And, with the guilt, the shame is fled;
 And, with the guilt and shame, the Woe hath vanished,
 And filled our hearts with grief for England's
 shame?
 Now all is sun-bright peace. Of that day's shame,
 Part from thee without pity dyed in shame:
 "Shame! should a Child of royal line . . .
 Recovers not his loss; but walks with shame,
 Must Westmoreland be asked with shame.
 A spot of shame to the sun's bright eye,
 But marks of infamy and shame—
 Temple and Altar sink, to hide their shame
 And cumbersome wealth—the shame of your estate;
 Her blessings cursed—her glory turned to shame!
 And, with that draught, the life-blood: misery,
 shame,
 For England's shame, O Sister Realm! from wood,
 Shame if the consecrated Vow be found . . . 80† Address: Child 16

Shame—continued.

Should fall; that She, whose virtue put to shame,
By glimpses only, and confess with shame
Of shame scarcely seeming to know that she's there,
Hence, if we wept, it was not done in shame;
Shame that our laws at distance still protect
For lingering dullness or quick death with shame,
Though these dull hours (mine is it, or their shame?)
Might any common friendship shame,
And dread of shame that will not do amiss;
Dis honour, shame, envy impudent,
A judgment too harsh of the sin and the shame;
And, in spite of the shame that may lurk in his mind,
Shame follow'd after with reverted eye,
Oh! in the past if cause there was for shame,
Look was there none within these walls to shame
And poor misguided Shame, and wretched Fear,
But with more shame, for my habiliments,
Such as an idler deals with in his shame,
A march of glory, which doth put to shame
Saw woman as she is, to open shame
And this most rotten branch of human shame,
Oh, pity and shame! with those confederate
Powers!
Would only follow, in the path of shame,
Was now a shame; my likings and my loves
But not dismayed, nor taking to the shame
Through times of honour and through times of shame
Honour and shame, looking to right and left,
As the tide ebbs, to ignominy and shame
Or a nice backwardness afraid of shame)
And, sometimes—to my shame I speak—have need
Though shame it were, could I not look around,
And self-indulgence—without shame pursued.
Misery and shame. But Wisdom of her sons
Through manifold degrees of guilt and shame;
We should recoil, stricken with sorrow and shame,
(With shame I speak it) to her guilty bowers
A man like this should choose to bring his shame
And tears, in pride suppressed, in shame concealed—
May be delivered to distress and shame.
The rash betrayer could not face the shame
Save only those which to their common shame,
Nor could endure the weight of his own shame.
To his worn cheek; or with uneasy shame
Ah! to sleep not there in shame! Shall Wisdom's voice
More grateful still: while wrong and shame shall last,
Issuing when shame hath ceased to check the brawls
What has this blessed earth to do with shame
Oh! shame! is this thy service boastful plume?
Who pushed by thoughtless youth to deeds of
shame
Shame of such dye, but worse remains behind.
Shame-faced. A shame-faced blush of glowing red!
Shamefacedness. And maidenly shamefacedness:
Shameful. Into a shameful grave. Among thy youth,
"Torment and shameful death to every one
Of shameful imbecility uprisen,
Brave hearts! to shameful flight. It was a grief—Shamefully. That shamefully they ope and all were slain,
Shameless. Her shameless timbrel shakes on Como's marge,
Her shameless timbrel shakes along thy marge,
And shameless women, treated and caressed;
Of marble; for while shameless wrong and woe
Shame's. And to inflict shame's salutary stings
Shames. That shames the Schools.
Shames the degenerate grasp of modern science,
Shame-stricken. Hers is not a cheek shame-stricken Shanks. With loag and ghostly shanks—forms which once seen
Shape. A covering shape half hid in curling smoke!
And when that shape, with eyes in sleep half drownd,
Mocked me with many a strange fantastic shape!—
To constitute the spiritless shape of Fact,
With carcasses, in lineament and shape
That bears the shape of man; and for what purpose,
I saw that every possible shape of action
That in the shape of man do cross our path
You see yon precipice—it wears the shape
To deck your slender shape;
The shape will vanish—and behold
And still impatient of the shape she wears.
"I like," said Benjamin, "her shape and stature:
A dancing Shape, an Image gay,
By ever-changing shape and want of rest;
The old Man's shape, and speech—all troubled me:
In his department, shape, and mien, appeared
A Shape of more than mortal size
Is so unearthly, and what shape so fair?
To shape a very crescent-moon:

Shape—continued.

He paused—for shadows of strange shape,
In perfect shape (whose beauty Time shall spare)
Yon cloud, and fix it in that glorious shape;
Grove, isle, with every shape of sky-built dome,
Varying its shape wherever he may roo.
What strife of colour, shape and sound
To fix in heaven her shape distinct with stars.
Yon rampart cloud mimics a lion's shape;
And every shape of creature they sustain,
Upon this winged Shape so fair
Into rude shape by fire, with roaring blast
The Fibula, whose shape, I ween,
No shape of man in all the array
That shape themselves and disappear
Shape, limbs, and heavenly features, keeping pace
Forebar to shape due channels which the Flood
A St. Helena next—in shape and hue,
Whom neither shape of danger can dismay,
Spring takes, O sprightly May! thy shape,
Nor turn aside, unless to shape a way
With the worst shape mock-patience ever wore;
To circumscribe this Shape in fixed repose;
Of hue and altering shape that charmed all eyes.
The dusky Shape within her arms imboud,
And when I learned to mark the spectral Shape
In woman's shape. But why prolong the tale,
And growing still in stature the grim shape
Sound there was none—but, lo! an uncouth shape,
Close at my side, an uncouth shape appeared.
Stretched forth the shell, so beautiful in shape,
Rose, with his ghastly face, a spectre shape
These spread like day, and something in the shape
Their steeds bestriding,—every mimic shape
And, on the shape of that unmoving mao,
Monstrous in colour, motion, shape, sight, sound!
Shape for mankind, by principles as fixed,
Whose truth is not a motion or a shape
Of shapes and forms and tendencies to shape
A variegated landscape,—there the shape
In part by fear to shape a way direct,
The shape of theirs, my understanding bend
In action, give it outwardly a shape,
Past outrages, and shape the way for new,
That wisdom could, in any shape, come near
That is the visible quality and shape
Urn-like it was in shape, deep as an urn;
And have an answer—thither come, and shape
Stood empty of all shape of life, and silent
For influence undefined a personal shape;
On fluent operations a fixed shape;
One that hath barely learned to shape a smile,
And Man," said I, "be in his noblest shape
And which, once built, retains a steadfast shape
Both ye that shape and build, and ye that force,
Dig for us; and present us, in the shape
A rough abode—in colour, shape, and size,
Masses of every shape and size, that lay
Yet walked beneath the sun, in human shape,
A bondage lurking under shape of good,
While thitherward we shape our course;
Such delicate caress as in the shape
And borrowing more their spirit, and their shape
Shaped. See Cono-shaped, Half-shaped, Star-shaped, Well-shaped.
Had shaped for their refreshment; nor did son,
That shaped her sorrow, rocks and pools,
By something cognizably shaped;
Shaped like the crescent-moon.
That, shaped like old monastic turrets, rise
A moral hymn, or shaped the choir,
For victory shaped an open space,
And prospect right below of deep coves shaped
Knowledge no help; Imagination shaped
That intimation when the stars were shaped;
Hence, prayers are shaped amiss, and dirges sung
Was shaped that traced the lives of these good men,
And shaped these pleasant walks by Emont's side,
Were shaped to cheer dark winter's lonely hours.
A Poet's hand first shaped it; and the steps
Shaped by himself with newly-learned art;
Have shaped him wandering upon this quest!
One of those open fields, which, shaped like ears,
Of wild ideal pageantry, shaped out
As at a glance, the things which I had shaped,
And yet not shaped, had seen and scarcely seen,
Shaped by the Druids, so to represent
Seemed infinite; and there his spirit shaped
Shaped his belief, as grace divioe inspired,
They shaped their course along the sloping side
Hail to the crown by Freedom shaped—to gird
And skill in letters—every fancy shaped
Of the lark's flight,—or shaped a rainbow curve, (Prized avenues ere others had been shaped
—Not shaped by simple wearing of the foot Shapeless. Through dark and shapeless fear of things to come,
Falleo, and diffused into a shapeless heap,
With shapeless ruin spread around!
Wilt thou behold this shapeless heap of stones,

Sheep—continued.

And in one night send twenty score of sheep
The estate and house were sold; and all their sheep,
And other sheep from her I raised,
As healthy sheep as you might see;
Of sheep I numbered a full score,
Full fifty comely sheep I raised,
My sheep upon the uplands fed,
"I sold a sheep, as they had said,
Looking down on the kine, and our treasure of sheep
And now, perhaps, is hanting sheep,
With a few sheep, with ricks and stones, and kites
Sate with a fettered sheep before him stretched
Upon the Child, if he disturbed the sheep,
Performed all kinds of labour for his sheep,
A few sheep, stragglers from some mountain-flock,
Thick as sheep in shepherd's fold!
Couch the widely-scattered sheep—
Lay round me, scattered like a flock of sheep—
"There's neither dog nor heifer, horse nor sheep,
A flock of sheep that leisurely pass by,
From wolves your portion of His chosen sheep:
Sheep and cattle eyes with care;
Spreads out his limbs, while, yet unshorn, the Sheep,
Below Eve's listening Star the sheep walk stills
From byre or field the kine were brought; the sheep
His sheep like Greenland bears; or, as he stepped
Upon my right hand couched a single sheep,
The single sheep, and the one blasted tree,
With tufts and hairs of wool, as if the sheep,
The bark was nibbled round by truant sheep.
That ever in the night-calm, when the Sheep
In search of a stray sheep. It was the time
A single sheep was wanting. They had sought and many a sheep
Nor in the single sheep was what they sought.
He spied the sheep upon a plot of grass,
Began to fall, this sheep by hunger pressed
The sheep sprang forward to the further shore,
And bleatings manifold of mountain sheep,
Their sheep might neither want (from perilous

She's. (Partial list.)

—She's in a sad quandary.
 But now she's fairly in the town,
 And now she's high upon the down,
 She's coming from among the trees,
 She's happy here, is happy there,
 Of shame scarcely seeming to know that she's there.
 Till the Term, for which she's fated Shew. See Shew.
 To shew her yet some joys to me remain,
 His torch, and shew them slumbering in their bed,
 They shew their pleasure, and shall I do less?
 The nations hope shall shew the present time Shield. Weak roof a cowering form two babes to shield,
 Or hovel from the storm to shield his head,
 From the night terrors of that waste to shield:
 Its stony surface glittered like a shield;
 To shield her from a moment's harm. To you,
 Urge her powers their rights to shield.
 The frith that glittered like a warrior's shield,
 Ne'er assail my cobwebbed shield!
 As if it were a natural shield
 A silver shield with boss of gold,
 Heaven shield him from mishap and snare!
 Cannot shield thee from thy Master,
 "They came with banner, spear, and shield;
 Is the longing of the Shield—
 Each crowned with flowers, and armed with spear and shield,
 Him, only him, the shield of Jove defends,
 Gleaming like a silver shield!
 An azure disc—shield of Tranquillity;
 God shield thee to thy latest years!
 Seemed to bisect her orb'd shield,
 Shield us in our jeopardy!
 That shield from mischief and preserve from stains
 A warrior, with his shield of pride
 And hence when he, with spear and shield,
 And greet the old paternal shield,
 Some pierced to the heart through the ineffectual
 shield
 The virgin sculptured on his Christian shield —
 Lance, shield, and sword relinquished—at his side
 Let both meet only on thy royal shield!
 Doest shield from harm the humblest of the sleeping;
 Though faint, compared with spear and shield,
 The haunt of him who sang how spear and shield
 And shield us from the Cuckoo and her lore,
 Shakes from behind the clouds his flashing shield.
 Who threw the Saxon shield o'er Luther's life
 What shield more sublime
 That the shield bore, so glorious was the strife;
 Gleams like the flashing of a shield;—the earth
 'Twas now for me a hurnished silver shield
 I had approached, like other youths, the shield
 With shield and stone-axe, stride across the wold;
 But ill according. An heraldic shield,
 The Knight arrived, with spear and shield, and borne
 The spear and shield are vanished, which the Knight
 (While war, relinquishing the lance and shield,
 Of Thirlmere flashes like a warrior's shield
Shielded. Rest, shielded by our Lady's grace,
Shields. Last, let us turn to Chamouny that shields
 All that the fertile valleys shields;
 Against the threatening foe your trustiest shields."
 The dancing Sali!—on the shields of Mars
 Where shields of mighty heroes hung,
 Support, and whom the forest shields;
 Are hung, as if with golden shields,
 Last let us turn to where Chamouny shields,
Shift. Kingdoms shall shift about, like clouds,
 That shift and vanish, change and interchange
 And, with a touch, shift the stupendous clouds
Shifting. See Ever-shifting.
 What shifting pictures—glad in gleams
 Like pleasant sunbeams shifting still
 Watch also, shifting peaceably their place
 Like beds of moonlight shifting on the brine
 With life itself. Thus 'mid a shifting world,
 Fall on his shifting hut that gleams mid smoking
 dew
 Music, and shifting pantomimic scenes,
 Of military sway. The shifting aims
 And saw the light—now fixed—and shifting now—
Shifts. And one sole light shifts in the vale profound Shillings. They made a gathering for him, shillings, pence,
Shine. Shine, Poet! in thy place, and be content —
 Shine, Poet! in thy place, and be content.
 Save where aloft the subtle sunbeams shine
 Eastward, in long perspective glittering, shine
 'Mid savage rocks, and seas of snow that shine,
 Shine calmly as if nothing ailed the sky:
 Of things earth makes, and sun doth shine upon;
 Through my very heart they shine;

Shine—continued.

The Moon that shines above his head . . .
 And the sun did shine so cold!
 Shine hot, or wind blows troublesome and strong;
 Wert thou among them, singing as they shine!
 Though 'mid the stars the Lyre shine bright,
 Or with a less uneasy lustre shine;
 Continuous as the stars that shine . . .
 Shine on thee in thy solitary walk;
 And cheerful songs, and suns that shine
 Shine subject to decay,
 And he, with his preserver, shine star-bright
 While the stars shine, or while day's purple eye
 Swift insects shine, thy hovering pursuivants:
 Behold, already they forget to shine,
 To see the sun how brightly it will shine,
 Shine on his soul, reflected from the days . . .
 Upon his inner soul in mercy shine;
 The morning sun may shine
 So shine our thankfulness for ever bright!
 And seen on other faces shine
 Of distant moon-lit mountains faintly shine,
 With unimagined beauty shine,
 Whistling to clouds and sky-horn streams, that shine
 Now was the North in arms!—they shine . . .
 The Moon may shine, but cannot he . . .
 The light of praise shall shine for ever!
 Hark! 'tis the tolling Curfew!—the stars shine;
 All promises vouchsafed by Heaven will shine
 Yet came prepared as glorious lights to shine,
 Poured forth, while summer suns at distance shine,
 Methinks their very names shine still and bright;
 Shine on, until ye fade with coming Night!—
 That made His human tabernacle shine
 Now when the star of eve comes forth to shine
 Appears to shine, by miracle restored:
 "Shine so, my aged brow, at all hours of the day!"
 Still on her sons the beams of mercy shine;
 Hallowed be it, where they shine!
 Soon as the herring-shoals at distance shine
 Mixed with the green, some shine not lacking
 power
 Whether he shine on them or not; and some,
 And, the first moment that the sun may shine,
 Of all the sunbeams that did ever shine . . .
 Save that, atop, the subtle sunbeams shine,
 To teach the skirt of thy dark cloud to shine;
 And bright will shine in misery's midnight hour;
 The star which comes at close of day to shine
 With star-like virtue in its place may shine,
 In its untroubled element will shine
 The primal duties shine aloft—like stars;
 Said he, "shall shine upon us, ere we part;
 The stars shine brightly between clouds at rest,
 In campaigning I shine,
 As they shine out; and see the streams whose murmur
 Why do they shine around me whom I love?
 Shine for Clarkson's pure delight
Shines. Shines in the light with more than earthly
 green:
 Aloft, here, half a village shines, arrayed
 Untouched by his breath see the candle shines
 bright,
 'Tis but the moon that shines so bright
 As when he shines above it. 'Tis in truth
 Shines with poetic radiance as of old;
 Shines like another sun—on mortal sight
 Yes! when the sun of life more feebly shines,
 But bright as Vesper shines her lamp:
 Bright shines the Sun, as if his beams would wake
 Bright shines the Sun—and not a breeze to shake
 Clear shines the glorious sun above;
 But, touched from behind by the Sun, it now shines
 That through the realms of glory shines for aye.
 Shines in the greeting of the sun's first ray
 The sun shines bright; the fields are gay
 "Grant that the Moon which shines this night
 "Get, Lady! shines, through this black night,
 Shines through his soul—" that he may see and tell
 As star that shines dependent upon star
 Grave Creature!—whether, while the moon shines
 bright
 So shines that countenance with especial grace
 That shines aloft, while through the wood
 And were the Sister-power that shines by night
 Fresh flowers; while the sun shines warm,
 And with long rays and shades the landscape shines;
 Here half a village shines, in gold array'd,
 What ye have done for me. The morning shines,
 Shines, in the brightest of ten thousand stars,
 Of gold, the Maypole shines, as if the rays
 The shines for him, and shines for all mankind.
 A light of duty shines on every day
 Shines with some portion of that heavenly lustre

Shines—continued:

As now it shines, when we are laid in earth
How temptingly the landscape shines! The air
Which shines dependent upon us alone,

Shining. See Clear-shining.

The shining glow-worm; or, in heedless play,
Like Una shining on her gloomy way,
Of ether, shining with diminished round,
" If the sun be shining hot, do but stretch thy woollen chain,

When the full moon was shining bright
His shining hazel eye,
Perhaps a ring of shining fairies?
Where, shining like the smoothest sea,
His shining hura tobacco-box;

The moon was full and shining clearly,
O Man, that from thy fair and shining youth

Shining upon thy happy grave.
Were shining o'er my head. I was alone,
Of shining water, gathering as it seemed,
A visible scene, on which the sun is shining?
Such sights before, among the shining streams
From these majestic floods, you shining cliffs,
Of Summer, lingering, shining, by herself,

Ship. See Flag-ship.

A British ship I waked, as from a trance restored."
How quiet 'round me ship and ocean were!
The gallant ship is borne;
With what?—a Ship of lusty size;
A nobler ship did never swim,
Back to her place the ship he led;
Thy ship will travel without harm;
And the ship, in all her pride,
That Figure, like a ship with snow-white sail!

This Ship was nought to me, nor I to her,
This Ship to all the rest did I prefer:
In sailor's ship, or fisher's boat,
His father's ship, and had sailed far—
To join that gallant ship of war,
When the first Ship sailed for the Golden Fleece—
While, in a ship begirt with silver bells,
And grasp of purpose, long ere sailed his ship
Of a bright Ship that seemed to hang in air,
A Ship to Christ devoted
Alas! the bright Ship floated,
Or like a ship some gentle day
A glittering ship, that bath the plain.
Yea, like a ship at random blown
And see love-emblems streaming from thy ship,
For the love's sake, ere ship with hostile ship
Bright ship of heaven!
Clinging about the remnant of this Ship,
My ship and me Charybdis will devour.
When to that Ship he bent his way,
While that stout Ship at anchor lay
That Ship was goodly to be seen,
But hark the word!—the ship is gone;—
To quit the Ship for which he died,
Sea—Ship—drowned—Shipwreck—so it came,
On board a ship then ready for the seas,
Remained behind; the ship the following day
Eager as birds of prey, or as a ship
Or in a ship on waters, with a world
Toss like a ship at anchor, rocked by storms;
Of a ship struggling with a hideous storm)
A stranded ship, with keel upturned, that rests
The ship went gliding with her thoughtless crew;

Ship—continued.

And, when the ship was moored, I leaped ashore
While the ship glides before a steady breeze.
The raven lodged in safety.—Many a ship
And wisdom loves.—But when a stately ship

Shipboard. On shipboard, bound till peace or death should set him free.
This done, he went on shipboard, and is now
I, who on shipboard lived from earliest youth,

Shipless. Of obvious shelter, as a shipless sea.
Ship's. And nothing save the moving ship's own light

Ships. That like to leaning masts of stranded ships appear.
Of ships to ships and guos to guos;
And, almost as it was when ships were rare,
With Ships the sea was sprinkled far and nigh,
Ships, towers, domes, theatres, and temples lie
Come hoats and ships that safely ride
Are brought in ships from far.
Lo! ships, from seas by nature barred,
Like ships before whose keels, full long embayed
As to the deep fair ships which though they move
Where now the ships that drove before the blast,
Traversed by gleaming ships, looked up to thee
Towering above the sea and little ships;
And in the sluggish pools where ships are pent:
And harboured ships, whose pride is on the sea,
Like leaning masts of stranded ships appear
And drove us onward like two ships at sea,
Ships he can guide across the pathless sea,
City, and town, and tower,—and sea with ships
Of Britain are resorted to by ships
And in the sluggish Ports where ships were pent.

Ship-soldier. A tired Ship-soldier on paternal land, Shipwreck. Murdered, like one ashore by shipwreck cast,
Where she by shipwreck had been thrown;
Sea—Ship—drowned—Shipwreck—so it came,
With fellow-sufferers by the shipwreck spared,
Shipwreck, or some domestic incident

Shipwrecked. Like a shipwrecked Sailor tost
Or, shipwrecked, kindles on the coast
Shire. All through the bonny shire of Ayr;
Thought Peter, in the shire of Fife
In the sweet shire of Cardigan,
Shirt. Mortification with the shirt of hair,
The shirt on my back
Though I sell shirt and skin,

Shirts. In white-sleeved shirts are playing; and the roar
Shiver. Alas! 'tis cold—I shiver in the sunshine—
I shiver, Spirit fierce and bold,
Shivering. How cattle pine, and droop the shivering fowl,
Of shivering flesh; and warbled air,
(Above it shivering aspens play)
And shivering wolves, surprised with darkness, howl

Shiverings. Come, come, for manhood's sake!
These drowsy shiverings,

Shoal. From these I turned to travel with the shoal Shoals. See Herring-shoals.

In shoals and bands, a morrice train,
Its currents; magnifies its shoals of life
With care and sorrow: shoals of artisans
Shock. Stole forth, unsettled by the shock;
And in due time the soft spontaneous shock,
The poor Ass staggered with the shock;
Had past a sudden shock of dread,
The shock, nor quell the inevitable rout,
O Liberty! they stagger at the shock
Whose desperate shock the Carthaginian fled.
As if all Germany had felt the shock!

—The shock is given—the Adversaries bleed—
An earthquake, mingling with the battle's shock,
I feign not; witness that unwelcome shock
Shalt change thy temper; and, with many a shock
Hath suffered from the shock of zeal,
A shock of intimations vain,
The shock, AND FINALLY SECURE
She shrunk:—with one frail shock of pain
Or, whirling with reiterated shock,
"Mid your fierce shock like men afraid to die?
By shock of circumstance, or lapse of years,
Sound o'er the lake with gentle shock
And, while I gazed, with sudden shock
Ill-fated Vessel!—ghastly shock!
That instant, startled by the shock
Feeds on light, nor thinks of winter's shock;
Too long insulted by the Spoiler's shock,
Listening, a gentle shock of mild surprise
Since I had felt in heart and soul the shock
Upon some showman's platform. What a shock
However potent their first shock, with me
Change and subversion from that hour. No shock
The shock; most woeeful for those few who still Or, seeing, had forgotten! A strong shock
Amid conflicting interests, and the shock
Security from shock of accident,

Shock—continued.

And mild paternal sway. The potent shock
Received a shock of awful consciousness, Shocked. Shocked at his savage aspect, from the place
This piteous news so much it shocked her,
Shocks. Ill fitted to sustain unkindly shocks,
Those shocks of passion can prepare
Desperate as time? Or come the incessant shocks
Mid direst shocks of mortal accident—
Thither, in time of adverse shocks,
Doth deaden, shocks of tumult, shrieks of crime,
Is by these shocks exhausted, spiritual truth
To stoop her head before these desperate shocks—
Through life's worst trials, whether shocks or snares,
But did not fall; for Virtue braves all shocks,
Slight shocks of young love-like interspersed,
Like earthquakes, shocks repeated day by day,
Cast from the pedestal of pride by shocks
From painful and discreditable shocks
Perhaps incited rather, by these shocks,
Forefathers, who, to guard against the shocks,
Shod. As if with felt his hoofs were shod.
That cares not for his home. All shod with steel,
Shone. And ripening foliage shone with richer gold.
Chequering the cauvus roof the sunbeams shone.
The moon shone clear, the air was still, so still
While sweetly shone the evening sun
For never sun on living creature shone
Shone meekly 'mid their native dust,
" Before me shone a glorious world,
When all the stars shone clear and bright,
The sun on drearier hollow never shone;
The apparition that before thee shone
The Virgin, as she shone with kindred light;
How oft, to elevate our spirits, shone
Whose light I hailed when first it shone,
With which his soul had shone so bright—
Taught us how rightfully a nation shone
On her last thorn the nightly moon has shone;
Blackas the clouds its beams dispersed, while shone,
That orb whose beams roused Saxon Alfred shone:
Of time) shone like the morning-star, farewell!
Myriads of daisies have shone forth in flower
Alas! they pined, they languished while they shone;
Young, like the Crescent that above me shone,
To the Traveller's eye it shone:
And, ever as the sun shone forth,
And, as before, it shone without dismay;
At night the Glow-worm shone beneath the Tree:
That eve, the Star of Brunswick shone
Unfelt shone brightly round us in our joy.
The solid mountains shone, bright as the clouds,
Shone mutually indebted, or half lost
Nay brighter shone, by this portentous gloom
In him revealed a scholar's genius shone;
Shook. Shook the still-twinkling tail and glancing ear;
All night from time to time under him shook
Seemed to feast with head and ears; and his tail
with pleasure shook.
And proudly shook the bridle too;
The grass—it shook upon the ground!
Their habitation shook;—it fell,
And of that joy which shook the Isthmian Field,
Green houghs were horne, while, for the blast that shook
That shook on Lebanon the cedar's top,
And as it shook, enabling the blind roots
Shook, tottered, swam before his sight;
Clapped hands, and shook with glee their matted locks;
From uosubmissive necks the bridle shook
And fiercely by the arm he shook her,
With which his genius shook the buskined stage.
That shook the leaves in myriads as it passed;—
And shook the mind's simplicity.—And yet
For this to last: I shook the habit off
And shook their tenants out into the fields,
Shoon. But a thing " beneath our shoon "
Which staff and cockle hat and sandal shoon
Shoot. To shoot and circulate; smiles have there
To be seen;
Shoot to and fro through heart and reins,
While beams of orient light shoot wide and high,
Shoot but a little way—tis all they can—
And give the timid herbage leave to shoot,
Put forth to wither, many a hopeful shoot)
Shoot forth with lively power at Sprig's return;
Shooting. Thy torrents shooting from the clear-blue sky;
While needle peaks of granite shooting bare
My former pleasures in the shooting lights
Downcast, or shooting glances far,
By pointing to a shooting star on high:
Where needle peaks of granite shooting bare,
The torrents shooting from the clear blue sky,
Shoots. Where oaks o'erhang the road the radiance shoots

Shoots—continued.

Shoots upward, darting his long neck before,
Through the stiff lance-like shoots of pollard ash,
She shoots the tidings forth to distant friends;
Of rational Experience, for the shoots
Shop. From shop to shop about my own affairs,
Shop after shop, with symbols, blazoned names,
Court, theatre, conventicle, or shop,
Of Tavern, Brothel, Gaming-house, and Shop,
Shops. See Settlement-shops.

Shore. See Sea-shore.
Where twilight glens eudear my Esthwaite's shore,
And heron, as resounds the trodden shore,
The echoed hoof nearing the distant shore,
Slow glides the sail along the illumined shore,
Thy lowly cots that sprinkle all the shore,
Or, swept in anger from the insulted shore,
That break against the shore, shall lull thy mind
Green fields before us, and our native shore,
I thought of Kilve's delightful shore,
" Oo Kilve's smooth shore, by the green sea,
There's George Fisher, Charles Fleming, and Reginald Shore,
Ere Julius landed on her white-cliffed shore,
Gladdening the people's heart from shore to shore;
Our boat is safely anchored by the shore,
Nor will I quit thy shore
Of copse and thicket, leaves the eastern shore
Along the indented shore; when suddenly,
When thou hadst quitted Esthwaite's pleasant shore,
A lake was near; the shore was steep;
From the shore come the notes
There came a Youth from Georgia's shore—
By doubt, propelled thee to the fatal shore;
On broad Euphrates' palmy shore,
That beautifies the fairest shore,
" The vain distress-gun," from a leeward shore,
Oo farthest Cornwall's rocky shore,
Yet round our sea-girl shore they rise in crowds:
Dim shades—for, for reliques, upon Lethe's shore,
And heard the water beat the shore
May human creature leave the shore!
Had stoutly launched from shore;
The tide retreated from the shore,
Which from the crowd on shore was sent,
And from the shore their course they take,
To live in peace on shore.
To what untrodden shore?
Of the waves breaking on the chalky shore;—
And Ocean bellow from his rocky shore,
We all are with you now from shore to shore;—
High on the shore of silver Thames—to greet
On jutting rock, and curv'd shore,
Asleep on ZURICH's shore!
Why cast ye back upon the Gallic shore,
Expanding; and, along the smooth shore curv'd
This sea of life without a visible shore,
Within its depths, and to the shore we came O winds without remorse! O shore ungrateful!
The matted forests of Ontario's shore
Glad tidings to Iona's shore,
Blest be the unconscious shore on which ye tread,
Save by Self-will. Lo! from that distant shore,
One boat there was, but it will touch the shore
The grass-crowned headland that conceals the shore?
I slight them all; and, on this sea-beat shore
And to the throng, that on the Cumbrrian shore
Appears, on Morven's lonely shore,
Of wave-worn pebbles, pleading on the shore
Here on the heakest point of Cumbrria's shore
Might see it, from the mossy shore
That from the shore a full-grown man might wade,
Oo a flat and lazy shore.
Bold settlers on some foreign shore,
This sea in anger, and that dismal shore,
Sleeps by his native shore.
To reach a safer shore—how near,
And see the Children sport upon the shore,
Glanc'd oft upturn'd along the heazy shore,
Along the " wild meand'ring " shore to view,
And restless piper wearying out the shore;
And echoed hoof approaching the far shore;
Insulted, sprinkling all the shore
Of cabins, woods, and lawns a pleasant shore
For ye have reach'd at last the happy shore,
Swept in their anger from th' affrighted shore,
Pushed from the shore. It was an act of stealth
Midway on long Winander's eastern shore,
His hark to land upon the wished-for shore,
Appeared distinctly on the opposite shore.
In passive expectation from the shore
Cast on the white cliffs of our native shore
Beat against Albion's shore, since ear of mine
Along that very shore which I had skimmed
In a calm hour to kiss the pebbly shore,
That fragrant notice of a pleasant shore
Not distant from the shore whereon we stood,

Shore—continued.

- To fly, for safeguard, to some foreign shore, . . . 798 Excursion 3. 832
 And waves have waited to this distant shore, . . . 799 Excursion 3. 888
 A dismal prospect yields the wild shore strewn
 Besprent from shore to shore with steeple-towers,
 Deposited upon the silent shore
 On every shore whose aspect favours hope
 We seek that other, on the western shore ;
 A gipsy-fire we kindled on the shore
 Leaving, in quest of other scenes, the shore
 And thus the bark, meandering with the shore,
 The sheep sprang forward to the further shore,
 From shore to island, and from isle to shore,
 Harmonious landscape ; all along the shore
 His course to Latium from the Trojan shore, Shores. Or where dank sea-weed lashes Scotland's
 shores ;
 Sole-sitting by the shores of old romance,
 And from the shores of Erin,
 Keep faith with Time on distant shores ?
 Her habitable shores, but now appears
 Plied steadily between those willowy shores,
 To tull contentment upon wildest shores,
 On that offensive soil, like waves upon a thousand
 shores.
 Deeply embosomed, and your winding shores
 More than fulfilled, as gay Campania's shores
 There greets an Embassy from Indian shores ;
 Or some of humbler name, to these wild shores
 To scatter seeds of life on barbarous shores ;
 Round the Crusaders, till on distant shores
 Near spicy shores of Araby the blest,
 Throughout the Country they have left, our shores
 Urge the slow bark along Calabrian shores ;
 O sad it is, in sight of foreign shores,
 And to green meadows changed the swampy
 shores ?
 These shores if he approached them bent on wrong ;
 The shores and channels, working Nature's will
 Or, like a Mermaid, warbles on the shores . . .
 Beside the shores of Wight ;
 Its one green Island and its winding shores ;
 Our shores in England,—from those loftiest notes
 Of that sweet Valley ; when its paths, its shores,
 Those scattered along Adria's myrtle shores . . .
 A pleasant promise, wafted from her shores,
 From rocks, woods, caverns, heaths, and dashing
 shores ;
 On Devon's leafy shores ;—a sheltered hold,
 From my unguarded heart.—The tranquil shores
 Rivers and fertile plains, and sounding shores,—
 From that disastrous rout, to foreign shores
 That filled her plains, that reached her utmost
 shores,
 —Hence is the wide sea peopled,—hence the
 shores
 Within the compass of their several shores
 The shores and channels, working Nature's will Shorn. See Self-shorn.
 Shorn of its beams, insufferably white,
 Then thus exclaimed : " To me, of titles shorn,
 Domestic hands the home-bred wool had shorn,
 Which whose'er approached of strength was shorn,
 And 'mid his bright locks never shorn . . .
 Shorn of his beams, insufferably white,
 And napkins of smooth texture, finely shorn . . .
 Whose every sorrow is, that time hath shorn . . .
Short. A few short steps to totter with their load . . .
 And the short thunder, and the flash of arms ;
 And, after many interruptions short
 With a few drops of blood cut short the business ;
 Stopped short,—and thence, at leisure, limb by limb
 Is distant three short miles, and in the time
 That overhurling the road : he there stopped short,
 And yet they leave it short, and fears . . .
 They mount—how short a voyage brings
 What one short sigh so easily removed ?
 Which, after a short time, by some mistake
 Which, if at such short notice he should go,
 Thus, after a short silence, he resumed :
 And on a summit, distant a short space,
 And, after short exchange of village news,
 That eastward looks, I there stopped short—and stood
 At a short distance from my cottage, stands . . .
 His short domain upon the vessel's deck,
 You could not say in one short day
 That promised to cut short the way ;
 The Ass is startled—and stops short
 He found the longest summer day too short,
 A startling thunder quick and short !
 Of three short days—but hush—no more !
 A few short steps (painful they were) apart
 Where Solitude with Silence paired stops short
 Short leisure even in busiest days ;
 And thus, with short oblivion blest,
 And, if dissevered thence, its course is short.
 What more I have to say is short, . . .

Short—continued.

- And, to the churchyard come, stopped short . . .
 Little Music, she stops short.
 Help with thy grace, through life's short day,
 Caught at the point where it stops short of sadness.
 Old Daniel begins ; he stops short—and his eye,
 Lelius ! has death cut short thy brilliant day
 Short while a Pilgrim in our nether world,
 Deluded Hope for one short hour . . .
 A few short steps were the chain that bound
 Stopped short ; yet still the solitary cliffs . . .
 Though short of mortal combat ; and what'er
 'Twas but a short hour's walk, ere voicing round
 Short velvet cloak, (her bonnet of the like),
 A few short months before. I turned my face
 Among Tartarian wilds—fell short, far short,
 After short absence, curiously I scanned
 A travelling cripple, by the trunk cut short,
 That after a short space works less and less,
 He who thereafter, and in how short time !
 Then, cheered by short refreshment, sallied forth.
 Oh ! yet a few short years of useful life . . .
 In the short course of one undaunted year,
 This simple Child will mourn his one short hour,
 Soon showed itself : he lingered three short weeks ;
 With what short interval of time between,
 Or of the end stops short, proposed to all . . .
 In social converse, or by some short space
 This Dwelling charms me ; often I stop short,
 The powers of nature : and a few short steps . . .
 Short was his life, and a brief tale remains,
 Till that short holiday of childhood ceased,
 A few short hours of each returning day . . .
 Or should you even stop short of Woolwich docks
Shorten. Nor shorten the sweet life, too fugitive, Shorten'd. When stood the shorten'd herds amid the tide,
Shortening. Of their near neighbours ; and, when shortening fast . . .
Shortest. Take thy bliss, while longest, shortest,
 'I'll take the shortest way."
Short-fighited. This is no trifer, no short-fighited wit,
Short-lived. Short-lived likings may be bred . . .
 It gladdens me, O worthy, short-lived, Youth !
 From mind and spirit, grudge a short-lived fence.
 From shades, her chosen place of short-lived rest.
 For some Aspirant of our short-lived race,
 —There is a radiant though a short-lived flame,
 The wretch, the short-lived vision of an hour ;
 And shapes of spurious fame and short-lived praise
 Of short-lived transport, like a torrent bursting,
 Who were content to harter short-lived pangs
 With many a short-lived thought that passed between,
 For fickle, short-lived clouds to occupy,
Shortly. " Thy limbs will shortly be twice as stout as they are now,
Short-sighted. Solid and light, short-sighted and profound ; . . .
Shot. See Far-shot.
 Shot, down the headlong path darts with his sledge ;
 Shot from the dancing Graces, as they move . . .
 We pry among them all ; have shot
 Shot lightning through this lonely Isle !
 Reddened the fiery hues, and shot . . .
 Till the fatal bolt is shot !
 Shot, down the headlong pathway darts his sledge ;
 Shot stinging through her stark o'erlabour'd bones.
 Whether the bolt of childhood's Faucy shot
 The gooseberry trees that shot in long lank slips,
 He ceased. Ere long the sun declining shot
 By the dense air—shot upwards to the crown
 They shot, and over that cloud-loving hill,
Should. (Partial list.)
 Nay, but I grieve that we should part. This Stranger,
 Should hold a place, as if 'twere robbery,
 Should yet he true ? Would it were possible !
 I comprehend thee—I should be as cheerful
 That I should leave you at this house, and thence Anxiety lest mischief should befall her . . .
 I should in his love admit no rivalship . . .
 I never should have thought of it again . . .
 That you should travel unattended, Lady !—
 Why, if a wolf should leap from out a thicket,
 He should have used me better !—Charity !
 He is a man, if it should come to his ears . . .
 That you too should subscribe your name . . .
 The wind should pipe a little, while we stand . . .
 We should deserve to wear a cap and bells,
 You'd better like we should descend together . . .
 Three of us—we should keep each other warm : . . .
 Fallen should I be indeed—
 It should be told you pinioned in your bed,
 When he should give her up, a Woman grown,
 Should he resolve to taint her Soul by means . . .
 Should he, by tales which would draw tears from iron,
 That half a word should blow it to the winds !
 That they should share the banquet with their Lord . . .

Should—continued.

And you should see how deeply I could reason
Why should the Enthusiast, journeying through this Isle.
Which done, he bade that they the Jews should bind.
I should have died, yea many hours ago;
That any living heart should sleepey be
Then mean I, that I should be wonderous fain Book-learning and books should be banished the land:
Every ale-house should then have a feast on its walls.
And, should the out-pourings of her eyes suffice not Shoulder. You from my shoulder took my scrip and threw it
Bethink you of the hour when on your shoulder
A harp is from his shoulder stung;
The cross upon thy shoulder scored,
Upon a Sister's shoulder laid,— Spice heard, their chattering lips her shoulder chill,
Snatch'd from her shoulder with despairing moan,
His black matted hair on his shoulder is bent,
With store of springes o'er his shoulder hung
With spade and maddock o'er his shoulder hung;
The carter's whip that on his shoulder rests Shouldering. Shouldering the naked crag, oh, at that time
With careless ostentation shouldering up
Shoulders. Lank as a ghost and tall, his shoulders bent,
He shrugs his shoulders, shakes his head,
With a huge wallet o'er my shoulders slung,
Mark him, of shoulders curved, and stature tall,
—Wings at my shoulders seem to play;
Upon the shoulders of the next in love,
That with united shoulders bore aloft
The patron, on the shoulders of his priests,
Shouldst. (Partial list.)
I grieved, fond Youth! that thou shouldst sue
Thou shouldst elude the malice of the grave:
Shouldst be my Country's emblem; and shouldst wink,
Milton! thou shouldst be living at this hour:
Shout. Or shout that wakes the ferry-man from sleep,
And so he sent a feeble shout—in vain;
And shout, and, with the echo of my voice,
Louder and louder did he shout,
But neither cry, nor voice, nor shout,
Shout in triumph, both are saved;
He lengthens out his lonely shout,
Which, with a generous shout, the crowd did ratify,
Clapping hands with shout and stare,
Thy twofold shout I hear;
Each whooping with a merry shout,
Who quit their fold with dance and shout,
"Another horse!"—That shout the vassal heard
With infant shout; and often sweep,
Shout, cuckoo—let the vernal soul
More ruefully a deep-drawn shout,
Though he can neither stir a plume, nor shout;
"Lei-gha—Lei-gha"—with eager shout;
Shout, for a mighty Victory is won!
O Silence! thou wert mother of a shout
Angels might welcome with a choral shout!
—Say whence that modulated shout!
And the towers of Saint Cathbert were stirred by the shout!
They shout aloud—but Heaven decreed
That with their joyful shout should close
Shout which the enraptured multitude astounds!
Some casual shout that broke the silent air,
Thou giv'st, for pastime's sake, by shriek or shout,
Nor shout, nor whistle strikes his ear;
Joined in the transport, echoed back their shout,
Not far we travelled ere a shout of glee,
Such shout as many a sportive echo meeting
He started forward, with a shout,
Within the sheltering Lighthouse.—Shout, ye
Waves!
A shout thrice sent from one who chased
Shout round me, let me hear thy shouts, thou happy Shepherd-boy!
And on ten thousand hearts his shout rebound;
For the old Ferryman; to the shout the rocks
That they might answer him; and they would shout
Across the watery vale, and shout again;
To breathe and to be happy, run and shout
Shout after shout—reiterated whoop
To shout with transport o'er a knock-down blow
Shouted. And shouted, "Mother, come to me!"
We shouted—but no answer! Darkness fell
The vernal cuckoo shouted; not for him
Shouteth. Shouteth faint tidings of some gladder place.

Shouting. Went shouting far and wide;
Are shouting to each other still:
Like travelers shouting for a boat.
Answering to the shouting Cuckoo,
Shouting through one valley calls,
Of shouting people deafed
The shouting, and the jolly cheers;
And hear you shouting forth your brave intent.
Shouting to Freedom. "Plant thy banners here!"
No queen before a shouting crowd
I bounded down the hill shouting amain
Of shouting Angels, and the empyreal thrones—
Aloft, in prospect of the shouting field!
Shouts. Shouts from the echoing hills with savage joy
When shouts and lowing herds the valley fill,
Shouts from nobody knows where;
She spies her Friends, she shouts a greeting;
By catching at their legs, or with his shouts
Shouts rise, and storms of sound from lifted
trumpets blow!
The shouts of folly, and the groans of sin."
Shouts to him from behind; and, if thus warned
Shout round me, let me hear thy shouts, thou happy
Shepherd-boy!
Loud shouts,—the Trojans echo the applause.
O'er all that leaps and runs, and shouts and sings,
Of indignation; and with shouts that drowned
More had she said—but sportive shouts were heard
With shouts we raised the echoes;—stiller sounds
With shouts the assembled people rend the skies
Shove. A Fly, that up and down himself doth shove
Show. See Baby-show, Rare-show, Show.
To show what pleasures yet to me remain,
Anon, appears a brave, a gorgeous show
Could gaze, as on a show by idlers sought;
Will retribution show itself again
It were a quaint experiment to show
The world in substance, not deceive by show,
now with me, as his signature will show:
Studded with apples, a beautiful show!
To our her new-born tribes will show,
To show thee some delightful thing, in country or in town.
The Chapel Oak of Allonville; good Angel, show it
me!"
But who shall show, to waking sense, the gleam of light that broke
That hast thy wayward moods, as thou dost show
On ought of more ambitious show
The girls on the hills made a holiday show.
Went forth to show it to the neighbours round;
Surpasses aught these elements can show.
On such forbearance as the deep may show;
Thou dost show thy pleasant face
To show her taper in the gloom,
Yet, thus upbraided, I may show
The treasure proudly did I show
Maternal Flora! show thy face,
Too sodate for outward show,
We make a kind of handsome show!
What wealth the show to me had brought:
That doth reject all show of pride, admits no out-
ward sign,
Shalt show us how divine a thing
To show them a fair image; 'tis themselves,
To the south-west, a multitudinous show;
Show me the nohest Youth of present time,
Alas! how little can a moment show
Refined, as with intent to show
Dread Beings! and your empire show
Unless Thou show to us thine own true way
Ah! show that worthier honours are thy due;
Earth has not anything to show more fair:
Can pomp and show allay one heart-horn grief?
We'll show that we can help to frame
That earth hath something yet to show,
A palace of the proudest show,
These types mysterious (if the show
And this the valleys show;
For show that must not yet be seen;
Which lingering Nio is proud to show
His business as he likes. Far other show
For show; mean handy-work of craftsman, cook,
Come forth, ye old men, now in peaceful show
Is this the only change that time can show?
Shall show her clothed with strength and skill
Springs forth in presence of this gaudy show,
Or on thy head to pose a show
A livelier sisterly resemblance show
Spots where a word, ghost-like, survives to show
With lustre of a saintly show;
And floors encumbered with rich show
Of infant passion, scarcely dare to show
Add every charm the Universe can show
Nor felt a wish that heaven would show
And smooths her liquid breast—to show
Just eyes to show how delicate a soil
Uncaught by processes in show humane,
But would rejoice to barter outward show
Now when the primrose makes a splendid show,

Whose practice teaches, spite of names to show . . . 530
 That he the meaning of this song would show . . . 553
 To show to her some pleasant meanings writ . . . 562
 For which it pleased him in his songs to show . . . 564
 But more in show than truth; and from the fields,
 Anon, in order mounts a gorgeous show . . . 585
 There have I loved to show the tender age . . . 589
 Oft when the dazzling show no longer new . . . 650
 That flashed upon me from this novel show . . . 652
 A more substantial name, no mimic show, . . . 657
 A parti-coloured show of grave and gay, . . . 663
 Were flow, and autumn brought its annual show
 Kept holiday, a never-ending show, . . . 664
 Between thy lofty rocks. Enchanting show . . . 674
 And what earth is, and what she has to show . . . 680
 Our argument. Enough is said to show . . . 690
 Between the show, and maoy-headed mass . . . 693
 What grandeur not unfelt, what pregnant show . . . 698
 Leads, though by sinuous ways, if here I show . . . 706
 A chronicle that might suffice to show . . . 711
 Show what she was, a high and fearless soul, . . . 718
 Things that could only show themselves and die . . . 719
 Without offence; ye who, as if to show . . . 734
 Of things that pass away, a temperate show, . . . 740
 When all the external man is rude in show, — . . . 743
 Whose skill had thronged the floor with a proud
 show . . . 778
 Great show of joy the housewife made, and truly
 And what a marvellous and heavenly show . . . 785
 And yet—triumphant o'er this pompous show . . . 808
 His royal state to show, and prove his strength . . . 812
 Show to his eye an image of the pangs . . . 825
 When the next village hears the show announced
 Show to the wretched nations for what end . . . 850
 Imaged in downward show; the flower, the herbs,
 Wedged in with blacklegs at a boxer's show . . . S.3.
Showered. And wild Impatience, pointing upward,
 showed, . . . 2
 Yet when faint beams of light that ruin showed,
 It came with sleep and showed the Boy, no cherub,
 not transformed, . . . 27
 For, deftly framed within the trunk, the sanctuary
 showed, . . . 92
 Thy mornings showed, thy nights concealed, . . . 109
 Yet leafless, showed as if the countenance . . . 146
 He in jocosé defiance showed— . . . 245
 And showed the Bark upon the glassy flood . . . 252
 Like stars in heaven, and joyously it showed; . . . 258
 She cast away, and showed her fulgent head . . . 265
 And showed my youth . . . 285
 Showed little of his state; . . . 334
 And more than all, that Eminence which showed
 The trembling eyebrow showed her sapphire blue,
 And taught him signs, and showed him sights,
 That like a place of vantage showed; . . . 399
 The wounds the broidered Banner showed, . . . 412
 Nor on the lonely turf that showed . . . 412
 One to whom, yet a School-boy, Cynthia showed Who taught, and showed by deeds, that gentler chafas . . . 461
 Stopped me at once by charm of what it showed,
 . . . 468
 The sun above the pine-trees showed . . . 543
 And wild Impatience, patting upward, show'd
 In clearest air ascending, showed far off . . . 592
 A man whose garments showed the soldier's red,
 That showed like happiness. But, in despite
 Soon showed itself: he lingered three short weeks;
 Attain a point that showed the valley—stretched
 In seemly rows; the chancel only showed . . . 756
 No higher name; in whom our country showed,
 Beneath him, showed his shadowy counterpart, . . . 824
Showar. See Thunder-shower.
 She seeks a covert from the battering shower . . . 14
 And be it so—for to the chill night shower . . . 25
 Sunshine and shower be with you, bud and bell!
 The silver shower, whose reckless burthen weighs
 Spangled with drops of that celestial shower. . . 106
 Three years she grew in sun and shower, . . . 187
 The lagging shower, and force coy Phebus out,
 Waves high, embellished by a gleaming shower!
 Delightful laud of verdure, shower and gleam,
 And fast they fell, a pleteous shower!
 Wreaths that endure affliction's heaviest shower,
 With ready sunbeams every straggling shower;
 When sunshine follows shower, the breast can thrill . . . 273
 Sweet Highland Girl, a very shower . . . 287
 In haste, nor springing with a transient shower:
 The dew of morn, or April's tender shower?
 Of mortals, hurrying like a sudden shower
 Warbling a farewell to a vernal shower. . . 327
 To wet with many a bitter shower, . . . 329
 "Sweet HIGHLAND GIRL! a very shower . . . 344
 Darling of England! many a bitter shower
 Of infancy, provides a timely shower . . . 445
 Shakes off that pearly shower. . . 506
 —There swims, of blazing sun and heating shower
 With the sharp wind, and seem to court the shower,
 . . . 527

Shower—continued.

"It doth not love the shower, nor seek the cold:
 . . . 571
 But doubly pitying Nature loves to show'r . . . 602
 She seeks a shelter from the battering show'r . . . 606
 Shower with a bounteous hand on Thee and Thine
 A naked savage, in the thunder shower. . . 636
 Its simple worshippers from sun and shower. . . 743
 The burning sunshine, or a transient shower;
 Without remission of the blast or shower, . . . 777
 Bright as a sunbeam sleeping till a shower . . . 832
 Of the fresh shower, but of poor Ellen's tears . . . 850
 They seemed to say; "What would ye," said the shower, . . . K.8.
 For they protect his walk from sun and shower, . . . K.8.
Showared. Unblest distinction! showered on me . . . 113
 Showered equally on city and on field, . . . 316
 Showered miracles, and ceased not to dispense . . . 811
 As if the moon had showered them down in spite . . . 835
 Conscious of that abundant favour showered . . . 895
Showering. Showering down a silver light, . . . 212
Showar-proof. Or lofty wood, shower-proof. . . 167
Showers. See May-showers.
 Oh! when the sleety showers her path assail, . . . 17
 And antique castles seen through gleamy showers,
 In copious showers, from earth by wholesome
 springs, . . . 22
 I could not pray:—through tears that fell in showers . . . 28
 "Thou Eglantine, so bright with sunny showers,
 . . . 111
 With frequent showers of snow. Upon a hill, . . . 150
 And showers of hailstones pattered round. . . 154
 The showers of the spring . . . 167
 Their course, or genial showers descend! . . . 227
 Loves his own glory in their looks, and showers . . . 231
 O'erlooks the torrent breathing showers, . . . 301
 Of Winter's breath surcharged with sleety showers,
 Fed by the stream with soft perpetual showers, . . . 322
 Dewy and fresh, till showers again shall fall. . . 377
 From showers, or when the prize was won, . . . 381
 Which showers of blood seem rather to incite . . . 409
 Like showers of manna, if they come at all: . . . 437
 Their first look—blinded as tears fell in showers . . . 493
 To utter, above showers of blossom swept
 His salt tears trickled down like showers of rain;
 Was baffled still, the crumbs in little showers . . . 517
 Could hear the wind and mark the showers . . . 537
 Oh! when the bitter showers her path assail,
 And antique castles seen thro' drizzling show'rs . . . 597
 Through bursts of sunshine and through flying
 showers, . . . 602
 Engender lightning, whence are falling showers . . . 625
 Of the old church, that—though from recent showers . . . 644
 Contending after showers. The mother now . . . 692
 To hearts that own not him? Will showers of grace, . . . 817
 Shadeless and shelterless, by driving showers . . . 859
Showery. And when, upon some showery day, . . . 142 Showing. By showing that you look beyond the instant. . . 49
 Her ground-flowers shrink, afraid of showing . . . 503
Showman. The Showman chooses well his place, 'tis Leicester's busy Square; . . . 189
 Yet, Showman, where can lie the cause? Shall thy implement have blame, . . . 189
Showman's. Accomplished in the showman's part;
 Upon some showman's platform. What a shock
Show. That you have shown, and by a signal instance, . . . 64
 As variously thy power was shown, . . . 216
 Hath shown that nothing human can be clear . . . 256
 Here by thy pencil shown in truth of lines . . . 277
 The genial spot had ever shown . . . 348
 That for like scenes in moral vision shown, . . . 360
 Things that recoil from language; that, if shown
 Aught that was ever shown in magic glass;
 Its will unquestionably shown . . . 369
 On her departure waits, no tongue hath shown;
 By confidence supplied and mercy shown, . . . 422
 In character, and depth of feeling, shown. . . 459
 In the full might they hitherto have shown, . . . 509
 "Thus, Christian people, God his might hath shown . . . 518
 Shown by a sudden turning of the road, . . . 664
 And, lastly, as hereafter will be shown, . . . 732
 A casual glance had shown them, and I fled, . . . 738
 And, having shown in study forward zeal,
 Be shown? her glorious excellence—that ranks . . . 774
 Are ofttimes not unprofitably shown . . . 846
 In this one Man is shown a temperance—proof . . . 848
 Been shown, alike to body and to mind." . . . 862
Shows. See Puppet-shows.
 Now shows a shadowy speck, and now is lost entire,
 Even now she shows, half-veiled, her lovely face:
 The Doctor at the casement shows . . . 128
 This delicate Enclosure shows . . . 154
 Not such the World's illusive shows; . . . 170
 The very bacon shows its feeling, . . . 177
 The CHERRY TREE shows proof of this; . . . 177

Shows—continued.

Taught both by what she shows, and what conceals ;
 Truth shows a glorious face,
 Must mount, he shows well as he can ;
 Euge Ocean shows, within his yellow strand,
 As shows that time-worn face, for he such seed
 To gather round the bier these festal shows !
 Fair prospect, such as Britain only shows !
 But garlands wither ; festal shows depart,
 Meek Nature's evening comment on the shows
 Shows not a sight incongruous as the extremes
 Or plague the fancy 'mid the sculptured shows
 A bright, encouraging, example shows ;
 The lively beauty of the leopard shows ?
 The penal instruments, the shows of crime,
 That shows, ev'n on its better side, the might
 For her mute Powers, fixed Forms, or transient Shows.
 With truth, "THE MAGISTRACY SHOWS THE MAN ;"
 The outward shows of sky and earth,
 What pensive beauty autumn shows,
 'Mid casual tokens and promiscuous shows,
 And shows in the untrembling frame
 And all the nicely-guarded shows of art . . .
 Familiar with forgotten years, that shows
 That passing shows of Being leave behind,
 That in these shows a chronicle survives
 When wisdom shows her seasonable fruit,
 Is undergone ; the transit made that shows
 And, like a serpent, shows his glittering back
 To all the charms this Station shows,
 Shows like a mountain built of silver light.
Showy. Abandoning and all his showy friends,
Shrank. They shrank not into shade ;
 Than she shrank up so fast ;
Shred. But faded, and stuck o'er with many a patch and shred.
Shrewd. Of a shrewd Counsellor, eager to protect .
 Yet innocent himself withal, though shrewd,
 On creatures less intelligent and shrewd.
 Freedom and hope ; but keen, withal, and shrewd.
 Discourse both wise and pleasant, shrewd remarks
Shriek. See Death-shriek.
 A man there wandering, gave a mournful shriek,
 The shriek that from the distant battle broke,
 And then I heard a shriek so terrible . . .
 He gives a loud and frightful shriek,
 With flapping wing for entrance. What a shriek
 Of harmony !—a shriek of terror, pain,
 Thou giv'st, for pastime's sake, by shriek or shout,
 To that calm word a shriek replied,
 Breaks off the dreadful kiss with angry shriek.
 The widow's lonely shriek.
Shrieked. Aloud she shrieked ! for Hermes reappears !
 Dropp'd loud at once, Oppression shriek'd, and flew.
Shrieking. What shrieking and what misery !
 Of slumber—shrieking back she fell,
Shrieke. And shrieks, that revel in abuse
 What groans ! what shrieks ! what quietness in death !
 Doth deaden, shocks of tumult, shrieks of crime
 Though aided by wild winds, the groans and shrieks
Shrill. Again with his shrill voice the mountain rings,
 With shrill winds whistling round my lonely way,
 Rock to incessant neighings shrill and loud,
 The black disguise, the warning whistle shrill,
 These hursting shrill did all remark prevent ;
 Then whistle as shrill as the buzzard cock ;
 Of promises, shrill, wild, and sweet !
 And shrill and fierce in accent !—Fear it not :
 Notes shrill and wild with art more musical :
 Provoked responses with shrill canticles ;
 Save that the Cock is crowing, a shrill note,
 Startling and shrill as that which roused the dawn.
 On the shrill wind of midnight ? or where floats
 Her shrill winds roaring round my lonely way ;
 The shrill defiance of the young crusade
 But hardly less industrious ; with shrill notes
 Shrill voices from the hawkers in the throng . . .
 ' Is this the whistling plough-boy whose shrill notes
Shriller. List to those shriller notes !—that march Shrillest. The very shrillest of all London cries, Shrill-voiced. The shrill-voiced thrush is heedless, and again
 Confines the shrill-voiced whirlwind, round and round
Shrine. Within a temple stands an awful shrine,
 "St. Ouen's golden Shrine ? Or choose what else would please thee most.
 Shrine, Altar, Image, Offerings hung in sign of gratitude ;
 Far happier lot, dear Boy, than brings full many to this shrine ;
 The house she dwelt in was a sainted shrine ;
 Issuing from her cloudy shrine —
 And to their hope the distant shrine
 That Nature utters from her rural shrine . . .

Shrine—continued.

And worshipp't at the Temple's inner shrine,
 One offering, kneel before her modest shrine,
 Or kneel, before the votive shrine . . .
 What eye can look upon thy shrine . . .
 Whose infant arms enclasp the shrine . . .
 Can she be grieved for quire or shrine,
 And lay it on Saint Mary's shrine ;
 Will lay the Relic on the shrine."
 To look upon Saint Mary's shrine ;
 Might seem a saintly Image from its shrine
 Saw we not Henry scourged at Becket's Shrine ?
 Not Iris, issuing from her cloudy shrine,
 Our bodily life, some plead, that life the shrine
 Farewell, thou shrine of which the Saint is out !
 Stand—sacred as a Shrine ;
 Sad doom, at Sorrow's shrine to kneel,
 In solitude the ruins of a shrine
 Shrine, altar, image, and the massy piles . . .
Shrines. Of prostrate altars, shrines defaced,
 For their abode the shrines of Waltham choose ;
 Her spirit, must it lodge in shrines so frail ?
Shrink. There is no crime from which this man would shrink ;
 A deed that I would shrink from ;—but to endure,
 Grasp it,—if thou shrink and tremble,
 My nerves from 'no such murmur shrink,—tho'
 near,
 And do not shrink from sorrow's keenest wind.
 Of all things, that at last in fear I shrink,
 I shrink with pain ;
 Which, while it makes the heart with sadness
 shrink,
 Shrink not, though far outnumbered by their Foes,
 Of his pure song, which did not shrink from hope
 Back in astonishment and fear we shrink :
 Shrink from thy name, pure Rill, with unpleas'd ears.
 If—when they shrink, nor dare oppose
 By Poets loathed ; from which Historians shrink !
 Shrink from the daily sight of earth and sky !
 Her ground-flowers shrink, afraid of showing . . .
 Others do rather from their notice shrink,
 "For I have knowledge that you do not shrink
 From which they do not shrink, and under which
 As timid eyes might shrink from fathoming . . .
 I shrink not from the evil with disgust.
Shrink'st. Thou shrink'st as momentarily thy rays Shrinking. Past, future, shrinking up beneath the incumbent Now ;
 Shrinking from each new favour to be shed,
 Shrinking from admonition, like a man
 With shrinking sensibility ended, Shrinks. Behind his sail the peasant shrinks, to shun
 And, hest within himself, he shrinks not from the sound.
 Yon trophied Mound shrinks to a shadowy speck
 Shrinks from the note as from a mis-timed thing,
 Who shrinks not from alliance
 The friend shrinks back—the foe recoils
 Shrinks from the verdict of his steadfast eye . . .
 That shrinks, like many more, from cold and rain ;
 Whose visual nerve shrinks from a painful glare
 Scorning love-whispers shrinks from love itself
 Where pity shrinks from unremitting calls, Shrivelled. Its blossoms shrivelled, and its fruit, if formed,
 By savage Nature ? Shrivelled are their lips ;
Shrivels. Where the green apple shrivels on the spray,
Shroud. Mounts from the road, and spreads its moving shroud ;
 Had heard of one who, forced from storms to
 shroud,
 Leonard had never handled rope or shroud :
 That shapes in heaven its murky shroud,
 Blend with the mist—a moving shroud
 Issues from his radiant shroud,
 Is it a coffin,—or a shroud ?
 Which mists and vapours from mine eyes did shroud—
 Cast far or near a murky shroud ;
 And mists that spread the flying shroud ;
 Or, like the warbling lark intent to shroud
 To shroud them ; only from the neighbouring vales . . .
 Humanity's appointed shroud, enwraps
Shrouded. She might remain shrouded in privacy,
 Here ruminate, nor shrouded bird,

 Or haply shrouded in a hermit's cell,

 heard
 Makes of the whistling shrouds a toy,
 Or, flung from swinging censer, shrouds
 Our British Hill is nobler far ; he shrouds

Shrugs. He shrugs his shoulders, shakes his head, Shrunk. Shrunk from me; plans and schemes, and lofty hopes—
 Shrunk from his Mother's presence, shunned with fear
 Of the garden-gate his hand was laid, he shrunk—
 Urged her steps; she shrunk from trust
 Shrunk into coins with all their warlike toil:
 I shrunk; for verily the harrier food
 They shrunk, insane ambition's barren goal—
 Its line of Warriors fled;—they shrunk when tried
 Shrunk as he recognised the face,
 She shrunk:—with one frail shock of pain
 Of thought, she neither shrunk nor mourned;
 Shrunk to her citadel;
 Shrunk, and the mind experienced in herself
 But shrunk with apprehensive jealousy
 And shrunk from vain observances, to lurk
 Of disputation, shrunk not, though assailed
 And there—” At this the Solitary shrunk
Shudder. This is a time, said he, when guilt may shudder;
 In death; though Listeners shudder all around,
 That sigh and shudder to the lowing herd.
Shuddered. A perilous wound—he shuddered to behold
 Shuddered the walls—the marble city wept—
 Blameless—with them that shuddered o'er his grave
 I shuddered, for a barrier seemed at once
 Silver and gold. "I shuddered at the sight," Shuddering. Still the cold cheek its shuddering tear retains.
 In spot so savage, but with shuddering pain;
 The floor as he lay shuddering on his bed;
 Amid the shuddering throng doth Cramer stand;
 Weeping captivity, and shuddering fear
 And Blasphemy the shuddering fane alarms;
 The shuddering ivy dripped large drops—yet still Shudders. She shudders, and you hear her cry,
 Ye little-ones! Earth shudders at your fate,
Shuffling. With din of instruments and shuffling feet,
Shun. Behind his sail the peasant shrinks, to shun
 He fled, a vagrant since, the murderer's fate to shun.
 Was best, could I but shun the spot where man might come.

 Shun, like a shattered bark, the storm, and flee
 Shun will she not, she feels, will bear;—
 Of your redemption. Shun the insidious arts
 The recreant soul, that dares to shun the debt
 Shun not this Rite, neglected, yea abhorred,
 To call up thoughts that shun the glare of day,
 To shun the memory of a listless life
 Nor in life's vigorous season did I shun
 Behind his sail the peasant strives to shun
 Shun the broad way too easily explored,
 He fled, to shun the haunts of human kind;
 Or hope for, what to covet or to shun;
 Seems hard to shun. And yet I knew a maid,
 Would rather shun than seek the fellowship
Shunned. And enterprise—what perils hath he shunned?
 Shrunk from his Mother's presence, shunned with fear
 And stirring interests shunned with desperate fight,
 Whate'er they sought, shunned, loved, or defied!
 And cottage comfort shunned not seemly pride. 38 Bord. 37

 And Betty's still at Susan's side . . . 127
 'Tis silence all on every side ; . . . 128
 On that side now, and now on this ;
 By Michael's side, she through the last two nights
 Upon a rocky islet, side by side, . . . 130
 And, while we both were listening, to my side
 On Grasmere's beach, than Naiad by the side
 The blooming heath their couch, gazed side by side,
 Roses, lilies, side by side, . . . 143
 Opening daily at thy side . . . 148
 Some close behind, some side by side,
 The Wain announces—by whose side
 That side by side we still are going !
 The Creature, by the Mastiff's side,
 With the meek comrade at his side !
 To quit the slow-paced wagon's side,
 By his noble Mastiff's side, . . . 151
 Upon the side of a distant hill : . . . 151
 On this side with a sober shade ;
 Enough by her dear side to breathe the air
 A sylvan huntress at my side, . . . 152
 Encompassed me on every side . . . 193
 And, drawing to his side, to him did say,
 The old Man still stood talking by my side ;
 " Once I could meet with them on every side ;
 Upon his side the Hart was lying stretched :
 When he had wandered from his mother's side . . . 197
 For one fair House by Emout's side,
 On Carrock's side, a Shepherd-boy ?
 To his side the fallow-deer
 Come, blooming Hero, place thee by my side !
 As fondly he believes.—Upon the side . . . 210
 Whitering a pine tree's northern side,
 A peerless Youth expectant at my side,
 —She stops—is fastened to that rivulet's side ;
 Him rather suits it, side by side with thee,
 As flowers, stand side by side ;
 Calling a straggler to her side . . . 212
 With ready heels his shaggy side ; . . . 212
 As gently on his side he fell ; . . . 241
 All by the moonlight river side . . . 241
 And close by Peter's side he stands :
 The rocks that tower on either side . . . 242
 The poor Ass standing by her side, . . . 248
 Pelion and Ossa flourish side by side,
 With keen-eyed Hope, with Memory, at her side,
 To rapture ! Mabel listened at the side . . . 251
 But in plain daylight :—She, too, at my side,
 And lo ! a poniard, at the Monarch's side,
 But by the Chief's look, though at his side
 Or gambol—each with his shadow at his side,
 Lies gathered to his Father's side . . . 257
 When side by side, his Book in hand,
 By Ellen's side the Bruce is laid ;
 Thus lived he by Loch Leven's side
 Of spirit, from Loch Leven's side,
 Went pacing side by side, this public Way
 With such a dear Companion at my side . . . 285
 Like gallant Falkland, by the Monarch's side,
 Of righteous Vengeance side by side appear,
 From the Maiden at my side ; . . . 310
 What'er we look on, at our side . . . 334
 And Shakspeare at his side—a freight,
 The Votress by Lugano's side ; . . . 341
 As we rest in the cool orange-blower side by side,
 Close at my side ! She bids me fly to greet . . . 345
 To meet the shade of Horace by the side . . . 353
 What wonder if at midnight, by the side . . . 361
 Drawn to his side by look or act of love . . . 362
 Enormous, dragged, while side by side they sate,
 Sage Merlin, at the Slumberer's side, . . . 372
 And carved, on mural cliff's undreaded side,
 By Duddon's side ; once more do we unite, . . . 380

Side—continued.

That binds them, pleasant River! to thy side —
Cleaving humbly to his side,
Against an anchored vessel's side;
And those bright Twines were side by side;
Be at their side, come weal or woe:
The thought while I am by thy side,
I had—but these are by my side,
From every side come noisy swarms
The wounds of hands and feet and side,
Their darksome boughs on either side,
He parted from them; but at their side
By lurking Dernbrook's pathless side,
While they, side by side, were straying,
But with the White Doe at her side
Was buried by her Mother's side.
Lance, shield, and sword relinquished—at his side
The lamb is couching by the lion's side,
That shows, ev'n on its better side, the might
The Offspring, haply at the Parent's side;
Thou, too, wert present at Minerva's side —
Herds range along the mountain side;
That leads her to the torrent's side
Off, working by her Husband's side,
And shaped these pleasant walks by Emont's side,
Or by his master's side:
With rocks on either side.
Would braid his golden locks at Wisdom's side;
On that green mountain's side.
A Pair who smilingly sat side by side,

Down Rydal-cove from Fairfield's side,
Side by side they fought (the Lucies
On a hill's northern side she dwelt,
When side by side with lunar gentleness,
This humble Walk? Yet on the mountain's side
How thou hast wearied me on every side,
And ever at his side stood Pandarus,
And he was seated, by the highway side,
Of highway side, and with the little birds.
And his Grandson's as busy at work by his side.
I love thee, and love the sweet Boy at thy side:
To Arno's side hath brought him, and he charmed
A third now slumbers at the Mother's side;
I raised, while kneeling by his side,
And there they found him at her side;
On every side,
While Memory at my side, I wander here,
Or walk the viewless plank from side to side;
Forgets, unwear'd watching every side,
And crosses rear'd to Death on every side,
Stretch'd on the scented mountain's purple side,
Close at her side were all the powers, design'd
When hitherward we journeyed, side by side,
That keeps them side by side.
Amid reposing knights by a river side
Leaving behind her still, on either side,
And all the shadowy banks on either side
Or in the woods, or by a river's side
For this, that one was by my side, a Friend,
On every side fall off, we know not how,
Who in these thoughts art ever at my side,
Place also by the side of this dark sense
Walked proudly at my side: she guided me;
As one who hangs down-bending from the side
His ghostly figure moving at my side;
Came creeping over me, when at my side,
Close at my side, an uncouth shape appeared
In which I had been reading, at my side.
Down by thy side, O Derwent! murmuring
stream,

Have seen us side by side, when, having clomb
And sallying forth, we journeyed side by side,
On every side, in prime of youthful strength,
Of this glad throng, foot-travellers side by side,
And by the river side. That very day
The truths of young and old. Nor, side by side
From a black thunder-cloud, down Scalfell's side
Such as, on this side now, and now on that,
And gorgeous as the colours side by side
Mean shapes on every side: but, at the instant,
All side by side, and struggling face to face,
Error without excuse upon the side
On the other side, I called to mind those truths
And thus, on every side beset with foes,
I paced, a dear companion at my side,
Of human nature from the golden side,
Upon our side, us who were strong in love!
On Etna's side; and thou, O flowery field
Of early love, the loved one at my side,
With those companions at my side, I watched,
By Nature's side among the men of old,
An iron-pointed staff lay at his side.
Her wedded Partner lacked not on his side
The corner stones, on either side the porch,
Even at the side of her own fire. Yet still
Now resting with a pilgrim by the side,
His harp, suspended at the traveller's side;
Compared with ours! who, pacing side by side,
'Twas chased away; for, toward the western side,
In silence musing by my Comrade's side,

Side—continued.

They shaped their course along the sloping side
Son, husband, brothers—brothers side by side,
And son and father also side by side,
And whortle-berries from the mountain side.
And mossy seats, detained us side by side,
His independence, when along the side
On every side encountered; in despite Acknowledge, then, that whether by the side
For quietness profound! Upon the side
Sate by my side, had vanished, if a wish
With mounds transversely lying side by side
Upon the southern side of every grave
Upon the rugged mountain's stony side,
Ridge rising gently by the side of ridge,
The mortal Body by her Infant's side.
That, stretching boldly from the mountain side,
Of Gold-rill side; and, when the hope had ceased
A bolder transport seizes. From the side
Oft did he say, 'was come to Gold-rill side.'
For work of happier issue, to the side
Or rather seemed to have grown into the side
Or, in its progress, on the lofty side
With you I grieve, when on the darker side
Ranged side by side, and lessening by degrees
Browsed by the side of dashing waterfalls;
We clomb a green hill's side; and, as we clomb,
While from the grassy mountain's open side
Hath ruled my steps, and seals me to thy side,
By her side I'll take my place,
So to Helvellyn's eastern side they went.
He learned to pasture at his mother's side.
And lived so long in quiet, side by side.
Not less than half-way up yon Mountain's side
Something on every side concealed from view,
Sidelong. He had a dark and sidelong walk,
Sidelong, and half-reverted. She who tends
With side-long eye looks out upon the scene,
His little rake with cunning sidelong look.

Sides. See Fire-sides, Hill-sides, Mountain-sides.
Shed from their sides, that face the sun's slant beam,
On the bleak sides of Cumbria's heath-clad moors,
On all sides doubts and terrors met her;
On both sides, Benjamin the good,
I bounded o'er the mountains, by the sides
His lank sides heaved, his limbs they stirred;
Scattered on all sides by the hideous jars
Clinging to its steep sides a thousand herbs
Her sides, the Wizard's craft confounding;
From both sides; veteran thunder (the brute test
Sheds ruin from her sides; and men below
Have struck thy sides, too many ghastly decks
His sides, or wreath with mist his forehead high:
Are grieved to his sides by the frost.
—To wet the peak's impracticable sides
Along the sides of the steep hills, or when
Flowed in upon me, from all sides; fresh day
Weep, and the river sides are all forlorn.
Are vomiting, receiving on all sides,
On all sides from the ordinary world
Widening on all sides; sees, or thinks he sees,
From all sides, when water'er was in itself
Ye motions of delight, that haunt the sides
Inscribed upon its visionary sides.
The faded garlands dangling from its sides,
Down whose steep sides we dropped into the vale,
Were hidden, and black vapours coursed their sides;
In the green trees; and, kindling on all sides
On all sides open to the fanning breeze,
Whose shelving sides are red with naked mould.
And the vault's hoary sides to which they cling, Sideway. Glanced sideway, leaving the tumultuous throng,

Sidney. Where bleeding Sidney from the cup retired,
The later Sidney, Marvel, Harrington,
How, like a Roman, Sidney bowed his head,
By Sidney, where, in sight of our Helvellyn,
For, like brave Philip Sidney,

Sidrophel. The ASTROLOGER, sage Sidrophel,
Sierra. Like a Sierra of cerulean Spain,
Sift. With caution, sift the matter artfully.
Men who are little given to sift and weigh—
And sift her laws—much wondering that the wrong,

That no tribunal, though most wise to sift
Sifts. Upon a gossamer thread; he sifts, he weighs;
Sigh. Where breathed the gale that caught Wolfe's happiest sigh,

In that glad moment will for you a sigh
What marvel then if many a Wanderer sigh,
Of kindred loveliness: then he would sigh,
When hearing a deep sigh, that seemed to come
Nature reviving, with a deep-drawn sigh
Dear Father, you sigh deeply; ever since
Sigh at the deed? Hew down a withered tree,
And for the Subject of my Verse I heaved a pensive sigh.
That sigh of thine, not meant for human ear,
And, oftentimes, hear the church-bell with a sigh,

Sigh—continued.

- If any chance to heave a sigh,
What one short sigh so easily removed?—
"My own dear Little-one will sigh,
Nor did he utter groan or sigh,
By reason fenced from winds that sigh
And sylvan places heaved a pensive sigh;
Sigh forth their ancient melodies!
May for a worthier future sigh,
The deep sigh that seemed fatherless,
And those that seek his help, and for his mercy sigh.
And Peter hears the Mother sigh,
But covet not the Ahode;—forbear to sigh,
Unhappy Nuns, whose common breath's a sigh
Or, where tears flow not, sigh succeeding sigh,
Disperse the tear, or to the sigh give vent,
Dissolve—and leave to him who gazed a sigh.
Bear witness many a pensive sigh
A sigh to make a stranger sigh!
Such spectacle demands not tear or sigh.
To Heaven;—who never saw, may heave a sigh;
On mortal succour—all who sigh
That prompted even a sigh.
Full oft, our wish obtained, deeply we sigh;
Precursor to a timid sigh,
Has with that Parting mixed a filial sigh,
The stifled sigh, the hidden tear,
Is offered to the Saints, the sigh
Nor leaves her Speech one word to aid the sigh
And ill requited by this heartfelt sigh!
Ere nightfall—truth that will may claim a sigh,
Not in some hour when Pleasure with a sigh
Sigh for the obscurities of happiness.
Or the mute rapture ended in a sigh—
But o'er the contrast wherefore heave a sigh?
- To us save matter for a thoughtful sigh,
So sad a sigh has brought?
"There came from me a sigh of pain
The appalled Discoverer with a sigh
Had breathed a sigh of thanks to God,
May heave a gentle sigh for him,
Let the last faint sigh discover
How from her inmost heart a sigh she brought,
Will hear the wind sigh through the leaves of a tree.
Shades of the Past, oft noticed with a sigh,
Should frail survivors heave a sigh?
E'v'n now I sigh at hoary Charteuse's doom
That sigh and shudder to the lowing herd
At such an hour I hea'd the human sigh,
A sigh recall'd the wanderer to my breast;
Dear was the pause of life, and dear the sigh
And deep is the sigh of his breath,
Unthought of—this may surely claim a sigh.
Not wished for; sometimes noticed with a sigh,
This is the wise man's sigh: how far we err—
Ambitiously collected. Yet the sigh,
Their virtue's humbler mark; a sigh of pain
Was forced to vent his wisdom with a sigh
And safe from all our sorrows.' With a sigh
The words escaped his lip, with a tender sigh.
Then, with a sigh, sometimes I feel, as now,
- Sighed. And often, viewing their sweet smiles, I
sighed,
Often have I sighed to measure . . .
Sighed to think I read a book . . .
I gazed—and, self-accused while gazing, sighed
My True-love sighed for sorrow;
Her stores, and sighed to find them insecure!
From kindred sources; while around us sighed
"Ah tempt me not!" she faintly sighed;
He sighed, submitting will and power . . .
Sighed on the wing as her foot pressed the strand,
Nor ever was; I sighed, and left the spot . . .
- Sighed for, in heart and genius, overcome . . .
Or sighed for thy sweet presence some dark night,
Ere Phœbe sighed for the false Gaymede;
Are like an idle matter. Still she sighed,
And sighed among its playthings. I withdrew,
He fled; but, compassed round by pleasure, sighed
Which had been sighed for, ancient thought fulfilled
- Sighing. Wakes with glazed eye, and feebly sighing—
Sighing I turned away; but ere
—"Ah why," said Ellen, sighing to herself,
By virtue.—He, sighing with pensive grief,
As boyish his pursuits; and, sighing, said,
- Sighs. Till our small share of hardly-paining sighs
(For sighs will ever trouble human breath)
Strong terror checks the female peasant's sighs,
The "parting Genius" sighs with hollow breath
Soft bosoms breathe around contagious sighs,
Then sets. In total gloom the Vagrant sighs,
My deep-drawn sighs no effort could confine;
What mournful sighs have here been heard, and when the voice was stopt
Immovable by generous sighs,
Those willing tears, and unforbidden sighs,
If it end in tears and sighs;
She says, in faint words by sighs broken,

Sighs—continued.

- With sighs of self-exhausted mirth . . .
Strict passage, through which sighs are brought,
The Stranger sighs, nor scruples to upbraid
For my dear Country, many heartfelt sighs,
If even a passing Stranger sighs
Forgive, illustrious Country! these deep sighs,
How subtly works man's weakness, sighs may heave
- And turned his eagles back with deep-drawn sighs:
The love-sick Stripling fancifully sighs,
A fixed Ahode—keep down presageful sighs.
Had perished. Then might Sea-nymphs (and with sighs . . .
Deep sighs with quick words blending,
The sighs which Matthew heaved were sighs
Diluvian records; or the sighs of Earth . . .
- Drawn toward the centre whence those sighs creep
forth . . .
Such greeting heard, away with sighs . . .
Whether conducted to the spot by sighs . . .
Beside that hearth what sighs may have been heaved . . .
My sighs breathed forth in silence,—comfort give!
Is of my Lady's sighs heavy and sore;
Like a maiden of twenty he trembles and sighs,
For me with sighs he's troubled. Not from life
By the deep quiet gloom appall'd, she sighs,
Whether by words, looks, sighs, or tears, revealed;
To earth attempered and her deep-drawn sighs,
We sat together, sighs came on my ear,
Sighs of regret, for the familiar good
To the parental door; and with his sighs
Than to unite. What sighs more deep than his,
- Sight. See Eyesight, Second-sight, Site.
Strange apparitions mocked the shepherd's sight,
Last evening sight, the cottage smoke, no more,
Where but a mass of shade the sight can trace,
Back from his sight no bashful children steal;
But soon a peopled region on the sight
The sky is veiled, and every cheerful sight:
How still! no irreligious sound or sight
Comes on to gladden April with the sight
That from his sight his children might have rue,
Sight which, tho' lost at once, a gleam of pleasure shed . . .
Of man, or covet sight of mortal face,
So forth she came, and eastward looked; the sight
Ere long, from heaps of turf, before their sight,
Far as the cottage. "A sad sight is here."
"Be blest: by sight of thee from heaven was sent
That Oswald finds small favour in our sight,
Not yet in sight!—We'll saunter here awhile;
Hath need of rest; the sight of Hut or Hostel
For sight of a warm fire. The wind blows keen;
I swear the sight of him would quail me more
For mercy's sake, is nobody in sight?
A little longer stay in sight!
On me the chance-discovered sight . . .
But there was neither sound nor sight . . .
The sight which he had seen . . .
An unexpected sight!
His head he raised—there was in sight,
Steal the landscape from the sight . . .
How beautiful is holiness!—what wonder if the sight,
Sight that inspired accordant thoughts; and speech I thus renewed:
And in His sight the fragile Cross, on thy small hut,
will be
Wouldst change the course of things in all men's sight!
Here are they in our sight—we have no more.
Ah! piteous sight it was to see this Man . . .
Disturbs me till the sight is more than I can bear."

Sight—continued.

Yes, the sight so stirs and charms
 And by all nations. In that Being's sight
 A sight that would have roused your blood !
 This sight to me the Muse imparts ;—
 As sure as I've the gift of sight,
 Red, green, and blue 's a moment's sight !
 The wished-for object is in sight ;
 When first she gleamed upon my sight ;
 So vivid that they take from keenest sight
 Irregular in sight or sound ;
 There is a fresh and lovely sight,
 Such sight was never seen by human eyes :
 —Yonder is a man in sight—
 A wonder I was startled at the sight :
 Restore him to my sight—great Jove, restore !
 And re-assume his place before her sight.
 The trees' tall summits withered at the sight ;
 That, as we left the plain, before our sight
 O Lady ! fairer in thy Poet's sight
 But why solicit more than sight could bear,
 Would gladiet vanish from a Stranger's sight ;
 That aids or supersedes our grosser sight,
 Or intershooting, and to sight
 Chains, such precious chains of sight
 There's not a single house in sight,
 Fell at the sight from Peter's tongue ;
 For in the pool a startling sight
 Never before to human sight betrayed.
 Here, for the sight of mortal man, hast given
 In this low threshold daily meets my sight ;
 From sight of Heaven, then, wherefore hath God made
 Could to my sight that heavenly face restore.
 Have sight of Proteus rising from the sea ;
 We turned, departing from that solemn sight :
 Shines like another sun—on mortal sight
 Uncovered ; dazzling the Beholder's sight
 But studious only to remove from sight
 A sight so touching in its majesty :
 She could not rescue, perished in her sight !
 Than flesh and blood ; when'er thou meet'st my sight,
 Which hold, whate'er to common sight appears,
 From every object dear to mortal sight,
 Soul-moving sight !
 When Wisdom prospered in his sight
 A sight to make a stranger sight !
 And Rover whine, as at a second sight
 He ne'er had seen one earthly sight ;
 And all is lovely to the sight.
 Upon the sight wherever glancing ;
 I see—but not by sight alone,
 Risen, like one man, to combat in the sight
 Which hath been held aloft before men's sight
 Blood fowed before thy sight without remorse ;
 In whose pure sight all virtue doth succeed.
 To win me at first sight : and be there joined Inseparable. He sits deprived of sight,
 The azure sea upswelled upon the sight.
 Anon before my sight a palace rose
 —Hours, Days, and Months, have borne them in the sight
 Ha ! what a ghastly sight for man to see ;
 Oh, 'tis a goodly Ordinance,—the sight,
 Best suits with fallen grandeur, to my sight
 Untroubled at the sight ?
 Down the main avenue my sight can range :
 And purity of nature spread before your sight !
 With fractured summit, no indifferent sight
 Fear that soon vanishes before the sight
 Those vernal charms of sight and sound, appeared
 For human-kind sinks out of sight, is gone,
 With aspects novel to my sight ; but still
 To be ; by Faith, not sight, his soul must live ;
 Shows not a sight incongruous as the extremes
 Appear to sight still more forlorn.
 Of Lago Morto, dreary sight and name,
 In the sun's eye, and in his sister's sight
 Ill sight ! but grief may vanish ere the morrow."
 Glittering before the Thunderer's sight,
 Turn from the sight, enamoured Muse—we must ;
 For kindred Power departing from their sight ;
 In mind the landscape, as if still in sight ;
 When out of sight the clouds are driven
 And blame not me if my heart and sight
 As little she regards the sight
 Look down, and see a griesly sight ;
 The Friend, who stood before her sight,
 The sight was hailed with loud acclaim
 Shook, tottered, swam before his sight ;
 Rare sight to embolden and inspire !
 And hope is awakened by the sight,
 Without their father in their sight,
 She spake—and from the Lady's sight
 Of duty, seeing with clear sight ;
 And took a place in all men's sight ;
 These things, which thus had in the sight
 With conscious sight, as he swept along—
 To excuse him in his Country's sight ?
 Where Francis stood in open sight.
 Went forth, the Doe stood there in sight.

Sight—continued.

Here hath she, here before her sight,
 Yet tempering, for my sight, its bustling rage
 And, not in vain embodied to the sight,
 Not more attractive to the dazzled sight
 Of things invisible to mortal sight.
 Fixed on the frame of England's Church their sight,
 Labouring as ever in your Master's sight,
 Approach, come gladly, ye prepared, in sight
 What awful perspective I write from our sight
 And wonder how they could elude the sight !
 Such is the prospect far as sight can range,
 Which, at this moment, on my waking sight
 O sad it is, in sight of foreign shores,
 Paces the deck—no star perhaps in sight,
 Spreading his little palms in his glad Mother's sight
 Of the strange sight, nor hide his theory
 To sight so shallow, with a bather's glee,
 Shrink from the daily sight of earth and sky !
 While a dark storm before my sight
 Not One of us has felt the far-famed sight ;
 Clear sight She has of what he was,
 Or neighbours, daily, weakly, in my sight :
 Nor is there any one in sight
 Upon a living staff, with borrowed sight
 Gave, in the field of Luz, to Jacob's sight
 Haply for corporeal sight !
 Have perished in thy sight ;
 Would through the clouds break forth on human sight !
 On wings that fear no glance of God's pure sight,
 This Spot—at once unfolding sight so fair
 For earthly sight. "Eternity and Time,"
 In his own storms he hides himself from sight.
 Duly before thy sight, unless they perish here.
 For lo ! an uncouth melancholy sight—

Before me ?—nothing blemished the fair sight ;
 Lodged within compass of the humblest sight !
 Creatures—how precious in the Maiden's sight !
 And there, sequestered from the sight,
 And the fifth morning gave him sight
 Or mis-shapen to the sight,
 O bush unburnt ! burning in Moses' sight !
 Till he was far, all out of sight, away.
 And when he was removed from all men's sight,
 Instead of common and habitual sight
 Four summer weeks I dwell in sight of thee :
 —A few (my soul oft sees that sight)
 Hidden was Grasmere Vale from sight,
 For such thou wert ere from our sight removed,
 The future brightens on our sight ;
 Was undissolved ; and, in or out of sight,
 The earth, and every common sight,
 Is but a lonely bed without the sense or sight
 Our Souls have sight of that immortal sea
 Be now for ever taken from my sight,
 Starts at the simplest sight th' unbidden tear,
 Strange apparitions mock the village sight.
 Swell more gigantic on the steadfast sight ;
 "And must my offspring languish in my sight ?"
 I gave a fervent welcome to the sight,
 Love, at the word, before his mother's sight
 Glimmers before my sight through thankful tears,
 But with a Delphic life, in sight
 Nor e'er lost sight of what I mused upon,
 No conscious memory of a kiodred sight,
 Were visible, a daily sight ; and thus
 With undisturbed sight. But leaving this,
 Fit reverence for the glorious Dead, the sight
 In daily sight of this reverence,
 Of a too gaudy region. Different sight
 Of a surpassing brightness. At the sight
 Leave let me take to place before her sight
 By Sidney, where, in sight of our Helvellyn,
 At their chief city, in the sight of Heaven,
 Exchanged—to equalise in God's pure sight
 And, that our future course, all plain to sight,
 As if a voice were in them, the sick sight,
 To days, each offering some new sight, or fraught
 To speed my voyage ; every sound or sight,
 Press forward, in all colours, on the sight ;
 Distress of mind ensued upon the sight,
 Abruptly, with the view (a sight not rare)
 Monstrous in colour, motion, shape, sight, sound !
 By nature an unmanageable sight,
 Enabled outwardly before my sight,
 Nor all the misery forced upon my sight,
 I wept not then,—but tears have dimmed my sight,
 Of solitude, and at the sight my friend
 Of which he only, who may love the sight
 For one of conquest, losing sight of all
 That the beloved Sister in whose sight
 New pleasure, wider empire for the sight,
 An ordinary sight ; but I should need
 Into the fields, impatient for the sight
 The windings of a public way ? the sight,
 All objects from my sight ; and lo ! again
 I seemed about this time to gain clear sight
 Usurped upon far as the sight could reach.

 By sight undazzled with the glare of praise,
 Within the very faculty of sight.
 Grateful to sight, refreshing to the soul,

 Idlers perchance they were,—but in his sight ;
 A splendid sight, together thus exposed ;
 To the still lake, whose stillness is to sight
 When heretofore, I placed before your sight
 Blended in perfect stillness, to our sight !

Silence—continued.

Let all that passed should melt away in silence
from my mind,
The power of speech. Both left the spot in silence;
That silence only should inhabit there,
In silence and obscurity.
In silence, though my memory could add
The silence of her Idiot Boy,
"Tis silence all on every side;
Thus, after a short silence, he resumed:
Doth in its silence of past sorrow tell,
In silence deeper far than that of deepest noon!
And the silence makes it sweet.
Of yon dim cave, in seeming silence makes
Silence and Foresight; Death the Skeleton
And hers the silence and the calm
In the silence of morning the song of the Bird.
There is a doleful silence in the air.
The silence that is in the starry sky,
Sent up, in silence, from among the trees!
Which there in ghastly silence sleep?
Is mute; and, in his silence, would look down,
And in its silence even, no heart is proof;
Her darkness splendour gave, her silence power,
O Silence! are Man's noisy years
Would break the silence of this Dell:
Breaking the silence of the seas
And chase this silence from the air,
O Silence! thou wert mother of a shout
And what, 'mid silence deep, with faith sincere,
For silence and protection;
O Silence of Nature, how deep is thy sway,
From social noise—silence elsewhere unknown?—
Where Solitude with Silence paired steps short
Grants to thy mission a brief term of silence,
Silence, and holiness and innocence,
In silence did King Arthur gaze
In silence watched the gentle strife
And into silence hush the timorous flocks,
Gliding in silence with unfettered sweep!
Of silence, how it thrilled thy sumptuous roof,
Her silence; then his thoughts turned round,
"Tis night: in silence looking down,
And vows, that bind the will, in silence made.
But, from the arms of silence—list! O list!
Who lov'st with Night and Silence to partake,
In silence Matthew lay, and eyed
Better than such discourse doth silence long,
Long, barren silence, square with my desire;
And, for silence or for talk,
Whose silence, for the pleasure of the ear,
In silence and the awful modesties
And thought in silence, with regret too keen,

That haply flowed from me, by fits of silence
Endure that silence, and broke out in song,
Her silence to endure;
Where silence yields reluctantly
Broke silence, or I heard him in my thought,
My sighs breathed forth in silence,—comfort give!
Be his the natural silence of old age!
To the perpetual silence of the grave.
"Silence!" the brave Commander cried;
Of the eternal Silence: truths that wake,
She lifts in silence up her lovely face;
Where Silence, on her night of wing, o'er-broods
Where Silence still her death-like reign extends,
To silence leaving the deserted vale,
The silence of sorrow it seems to supply,
—Oh if such silence be not thanks to God
Silence ensued. "O Jupiter, whose care
Thy shades, thy silence, now be mine,
And lastly utter silence!" "Be it so;
Suffered in silence for Truth's sake; or tell,
In silence, or with keen devouring noise
In silence through a wond' gloomy and still.
Of silence came and baffled his best skill,
Then sometimes, in that silence while he hung
Through hours of silence, till the porter's bell,
And silence did await upon these thoughts
In silence visible and perpetual calm
Where Silence dwells if music be not there:
Through a thick forest. Silence touched me here
Whom the fifth Harry talks of. Silence! hush!
A spacious grass-plot; there, in silence, sate
Helvellyn, in the silence of his rest.
In peace and silence. But if e'er was heard,—
And half upbraids their silence. But that night
In silence of all present, from his seat
In silence as before. With forehead bent
And in the silence of his face I read
In silence mingling by my Comrade's side,
Said the old man, abruptly breaking silence,—
In silence, with a hush of decency?
Of silence, though there be no voice,—the clouds,
Was greeted in the silence that ensued,
A pause of silence followed; then, with voice
Through consciousness that silence in such place
That neither she nor Silence lack the power
To which, in silence hushed, his very soul . . .

Silence—continued.

Fondly to prize the silence which he kept,
Though with the silence pleased that here prevails,
The pensive silence, saying:—"Blest are they
And silence waited on these closing words;
Thus silence broke:—"Behold a thoughtless Man
We gazed, in silence hushed, with eyes intent
Of solitude, and silence in the sky?
Among the silence of the woods and hills;
Silenced. While prayer contends with silenced agony,
Silent. While silent stands the admiring crowd below,
Silent the visionary warriors go,
Turn to a silent smile their sleepy cry,
Silent the hedge or steamy rivulet's bed,
The hoar her silent course pursues!
By silent cottage-doors, the peasant's home
That faded silent from the upward eye
Where silent Hours their death-like sway extend,
Or, when upon the mountain's silent brow
Gay lark of hope, thy silent song resume!
Who, in the silent hour of inward thought,
The empty loom, cold hearth, and silent wheel,
And looked, and fed upon the silent air.
The silent sea. From the sweet thoughts of home
His ears were never silent; sleep forsook
On this green bank. Idonea, you are silent,
The blind Man—at the silent Girl he looked.
The trees were silent as the graves beneath them.
Stood silent as we passed them! I have heard
My voice was silent, but my heart hath joined thee.
Silent he stood; then laughed amain,—
O weary struggle! silent years
That silent greeting from above;
Composed and silent, without visible sign
Is silent as the skies.
All silent as a horseman-ghost,
Making the cottage through the silent hours
And Isabel sat silent, for her mind
And silent morning, I sat down, and there,
A silent Poet; from the solitude
For MARY'S humble, SARAH'S silent claim,
Sweet silent creature!
Though silent as a leaf before,
Or by the silent lapse of fountain clear,
Of the silent heart which Nature
Close-treading on the silent flashes—
(The vale now silent, hushed, I ween,
And, while they coast the silent lake,
The silent company betray:
But they are silent;—still they roll along
The silent trees, and saw the intruding sky.—
Of shades, and dews, and silent night;
By silent sympathy.
Because not of this noisy world, but silent and divine!
As on their silent tasks they move!
By day, and in the silent night,
But gazed upon the spoil with silent joy.
A festal strain that hath been silent long:—
The oracle, upon the silent sea;
He through the portal takes his silent way,
Nor grieves—tho' doomed thro' silent night to bear
Far into silent regions blue and pale;—
Speak, silent creatures.—They are gone, are fled,
In silent rapture, credulous desire
In memory, through silent night.
'Tis lodged within her silent tear.
These silent raptures found no place;
By lovely forms, and silent weather,
Over the silent stream.
All, all is silent—rocks and woods,
All still and silent—far and near!
Is silent as a silent cricket.
Whom seeks he—whom?—the silent dead:
In agony of silent grief—
But Thee, deep buried in the silent tomb,
Of silent hills, and more than silent sky.
Of silent rapture; but we felt the while
And whispers to the silent birds, "Prepare
Haunts him belated on the silent plains!

Of mountains, silent, dreary, motionless:
The beauty of the morning; silent, bare,
In this deep knell, silent for threescore years,
Waft fragrant greetings to each silent grave;
Why art thou silent! Is thy love a plant
The silent thoughts that search for steadfast light,
And silent grave.
A murmur near the silent lake;
Is come, and thou art silent in thy age;
And the green silent pastures, yet remain.

And quickly with a silent crew . . .
And left them lying in the silent sun,
And, at our feet, amid the silent dust
And silent fetters? Yes, if visions bright
Victorious England! bid the silent Art
Their utter stillness, and the silent grace
Obscure not yet these silent avenues
When silent were both voice and chords,
And horror breathing from the silent ground!

Silent—continued.

To tend their silent boats and ringing wains,
 Apart, beside his silent goats,
 A silent and unlooked-for change,
 The uplifted palms, the silent marble lips
 Of number, pure and silent Votaries
 On Right's silent brow,
 Till Rome, to silent marble unconfined,
 Thousands of years before the silent air
 Silent, and to the gazer's eye untrue,
 Of winds—though winds were silent—struck a deep
And if, as toward the silent tomb we go,
 Who through the silent portal arch
 Soft and silent as a dream,
 Lie silent in your graves, ye dead!
 Stood silent under dreary weight,—
 Was on the calm and silent sky;
 And at the mansion's silent door,
 The old Man to the silent Maid,
 And, with this silent gloom agreeing,
 In her silent Follower's eyes;
 At morn, and eve, and midnight's silent hour,
 Silent, but not to high-souled Passion's ear—
 Some casual shout that broke the silent air,
 The silent Cross, among the stars shall spread
 But now are silent as the dim-seen flowers:
 Silent, and steadfast as the vaulted sky,
 May silent thanks at least to God be given
 Be left as silent as the mountain-tops,
 Than doth this silent spectacle—the gleam—
 Welcome, though silent and intangible!—
 Then, silent Mistress! let us—not blind.
 The silent stars, among the angelic quire,
 He will take with him to the silent tomb.
 I thank the silent Monitor, and say
 Full early to the silent tomb
 Some silent laws our hearts will make,
 Such stores as silent thought can bring,
 Is silent as a standing pool;
 Or in some silent field, while timid spring
 This Oak points out thy grave; the silent tree
 A silent tara below!
 Committed to the silent plains

Nor unto silent leaves and drowsy flowers,—
 By the silent thanks, now tending
 Awake to silent joy:
 Explore the countless sprigs of silent good;
 Pacing behind along the silent lane.

Your silent lives employ
 Those silent inmates now no longer share,
 But silent and by stealth he came,
 Among the dwellers in the silent fields
 And inwardly sustained by silent prayer,
 "My thanks with silent tears
 One wooed the silent Art with studious pains:
 Upon the blinded mountain's silent top!
 A silent monitor, which on their minds
 Admonished, from his silent grave,
 Thou Angler, by the silent flood;
 Or merely silent Nature's breathing life.
 From silent admiration wins relief.
 With thine, O silent and invisible Friend!
 That, deaf and silent, read'st the eternal deep,
 Staying his silent waves, to hear the roar
 While silent stands th' admiring vale below;
 And glorying looks around the silent tides:
 Silent the hedge or steaming rivulet's bed,
 By lonely, silent cottage-doors to roam
 Soon fading "silent" from her upward eye,
 Lo! I Fear looks silent down on Uri's lake,
 Wheel pale and silent her dimmish'd roud,
 Or gazing from the mountain's silent brow,
 Hush'd are the winds and silent are the tides;
 Almost as silent as the turf they trod.
 I dipped my oars into the silent lake,
 And through the silent water stole my way
 Into a silent bay, or sportively
 Raged bitterly, with keen and silent tooth;
 Both silent and both motionless alike;
 By silent inobtrusive sympathies,
 Both silent to each other, at this time
 And all that silent language which so oft
 Of Newton with his prism and silent face,
 Stealing with silent lapse to join the brook
 Blew mimic hootings to the silent owls,
 Of all her silent neighbourhood of graves,
 From smooth Cam's silent waters: had we met,
 Waved their dark tops, not silent as they waved,
 Dimpling along in silent majesty,
 Religiously, in silent blessedness;
 Loves, as it glistens on the silent rocks;
 And them the silent rocks, which now from high
 In silent beauty on the naked ridge
 Like spectres,—ferment silent and sublime!
 Where silent zephyrs sported with the dust
 It was a beautiful and silent day
 The place, all hushed and silent as it was,
 Whom no one owned, sate silent, shall I add,
 By day, a quiet sound in silent night;

Silent—continued.

That flowers, and trees, and even the silent hills,
 A silent station in this beautiful world,
 The thought, the image, and the silent joy:
 Rested a silent sea of hoary mist,
 All meek and silent, save that through a rift—
 Its voices issuing forth to silent light—
 Shall I be silent? O spacious Soul!
 Or by their silent looks of happy things,
 And in their silent faces could he read
 The silent stars! Off did he take delight
 When they were silent: far more fondly now
 A tale of silent suffering, hardly clothed
 The voice was silent. From the bench I rose;
 And silent overgrowings, still survived,
 By mist and silent rain-drops silvered o'er,
 Upon those silent walls, we left the shade;
 He also silent; when from out the heart
 In silent grief their unuplifted heads,
 Was silent; save the solitary clock
 Went through his usual tasks, a silent change
 Into a gulf obscure of silent grief,
 To a long voyage on the silent deep!
 Stood empty of all shape of life, and silent
 In silent congress; or together roused
 Within whose silent chambers treasure lies
 The silent hours; and who to that report
 When his own breath was silent, chanced to hear
 A calm, a beautiful, and silent fire,
 And, to the silent language giving voice,
 Which then were silent; but crave utterance now.
 Ere we descended into these silent vaults,
 And by his converse crowns a silent day
 Through shades and silent rest, to endless joy,"
 And spires whose "silent finger points to heaven,"
 To oral record, and the silent heart;
 In silent pools, now in stroog eddies chained;
 Is silent; nor is any vestige left
 Of his fond partner, silent in the nest.
 Deposited upon the silent shore
 Was silent as a picture: evermore
 Were all things silent, whereso'er he moved.
 With silent increase: summers, winters—past,
 The silent name of his departed wife;
 As if their silent company were charged
 And, verily, the silent creatures made
 How with most quiet and most silent death,
 By words, nor by the pencil's silent skill;
 They know if I be silent, morn or even:
 Through tall green silent woods and ruins grey.
 Its silent laboratory! Words should say
 The silent inquest of a western sun,
 Might wait on thee, a silent monitor,
 Silent to any gladness of sound
 A task above my skill; the silent mind
 And silent majesty; the birch-tree woods
 Making a silent company in death;
 Silently. Wandering about alone and silently,
 "How silently, and with how wan a face!"
 Silently disappears, or quickly fades:
 But now, as silently she paced
 Silently to consume the heavy clouds;
 Although he loved more silently,
 Which silently they yield, are multiplied
 Which hostile spirits silently allow,
 "Change wide, and deep, and silently performed,
 Silenus. In cadence,—and Silenus swang
 Silk. And softer than if it were covered with silk.
 In splendid garb, with hose of silk, and hair
 Through that state arras woven with silk and gold;
 Silken. But, faith, to see him in his silken tunic,
 On silken tussage, might diffuse his limbs
 Sill. See Cottage-sill.
 Silly. Silly Maid as ever was!
 Silo's. Early awake, by Silo's brook, to sing
 Silver. And yew-tree o'er the silver rocks recline,
 Which high and higher mounts with silver gleam:
 In Troynovant, his seat by silver Thames's side!
 The silver shower, whose reckless burthen weighs
 A silver shield with boss of gold,
 Moving untouched in silver purity,
 Are smitten by a silver ray;
 The silver moon with all her vales, and hills of mightiest fame,
 'Mid silver clouds, and openings of blue sky
 Showering down a silver light,
 Gleaming like a silver shield!
 Those silver clouds collected round the sun
 That silver thread the river Dnieper;
 Of golden leaves inlaid with silver down,
 O'er which her pinions shed a silver gleam.
 Where silver Isis leads my striding feet;
 High on the shore of silver Thames—to greet
 The Mora, that now, along the silver Meuse,
 To follow in his track of silver light,
 With threads that seem part of his own silver hair.

Silver—continued.

And heauteous as the silver moon
Bright locks of silver hair, thick spread,
The smoke, and mounts in silver wreaths,
And blest the silver Cross, which ye, instead
Over the bowl, whose silver lip hath won
Portentous fellowship. Her silver car,
When darkness creeping o'er thy silver brow
Nor is it silver of romantic Spain ;
Planting his favourite silver diadem,
Till the first silver star appear,
A silver line, that runs from brow to crown
Had from the east her silver star withdrawn,
Where golden flash and silver gleam
The silver Tenant of the crystal dome ;
A silver boat launched on a boundless flood ;
Where silver rocks the savage prospect clear
And yew-trees o'er the silver rocks recline,
Thin silver hairs, and ancient hamlet fame ;
A silver cross enchased with Flowers of France
With silver clouds, and sunshine on the grass,
Organic pleasure from the silver wreaths
"Twas now for me a burnished silver shield
To which the silver wands of saints in Heaven
Silver and gold. "I shuddered at the sight,"
Half-veiled in vapoury cloud, the silver steem
With alabaster domes, and silver spires,
Darken the silver bosom of the crag,
Her silver voice was heard upon the earth,
To mix the manly brown with silver grey,
Light as the silver fawn, a radiant Girl ;
As if they from a silver tree had fallen—
First one and then another silver spout,
Shows like a mountain built of silver light.
When envious clouds shut out her silver light.

Silver-bright. A radiant creature, silver-bright Silver-collared. The silver-collared Negro with his timberl.

Silvered. While, near the midway cliff, the silvered kite
On as he floats, the silver'd waters glow,
By silver'd wreaths of quiet charcoal smoke,
By mist and silent rain-drops silver'd o'er,
Silver-how. "And the tall Steep of Silver-how, sent forth
Of Silver-how, and Grasmere's peaceful lake
Silvering. Tracking with silvering path the change-ful gale.

Silver-rimmed. Of the silver-rimmed horn whence he dealt his mild ale !

Silvery. From the dark-blue faint silvery threads divide
And saw the dawn opening the silvery east
Yet why ?—a silvery current flows
You mark them twinkling out with silvery light,
That lit the dark slant woods with silvery white !
How fair it's lawn and silvery woods appear !
The silvery lake is streaked with placid blue ;

Similar. Have been possessed by similar desire ;
Similes. I sit, and play with similes,
Simon. The halloo of Simon Lee.
To blither tasks did Simon rouse
Old Simon to the world is left
Ruth does what Simon cannot do ;
"You're overtasked, good Simon Lee,
Simonides. Of pure Simonides
I find it written of Simonides
Simonides, admonished by the ghost,
Simon's. Simon's sickly daughter lies,
Simple. "And, like the Patriarchs in their simple age,
For as the pleasures of his simple day
The simple dignity no forms debase ;
Well pleased upon some simple annual feast,
How in a simple freak of thoughtless play
A deep and simple meekness ; and that Soul,
One of Love's simple bondsmen—the soft chain
—A simple Child,
Stragger to me and yet my friend, a simple notice came,
In verse, which to thy ear might come, would treat
this simple theme,
Nor can the winds restore his simple gift.
"While white on thee they gaze in simple truth,
"A simple burthen, Sir, a little Singing-bird,"
Could, by the simple opening of a door,
And to that simple object appertain
While in this sort the simple household lived
Smiled in my face) this were in simple truth
Beneath her sway, a simple forest cry
His simple truths did Andrew glean
A simple flower deceives
A simple water-drinking Bard ;
For transient sorrows, simple wiles,
To pipe a simple song for thinking hearts.
Yet in my simple mind we cannot tell
And lacks not friends for simple glee,
And was it granted to the simple ear
In simple truth I cannot tell ;
I stood, of simple shame the blushing Thrall ;
A simple answer ! but even so forth springs,

Simple—continued.

Meek, nobly versed in simple discipline—
So kind is simple Nature, fairly tried !
If simple Nature trained by careful Art
Sufficeth them, the simple plan,
That simple crest, a heron's plume, is worn.
Such simple gifts prepare,
The measure, simple truth to tell,
Where simple Sufferers bend, in trust
A simple, but a touching, song ;
Mindful how others by this simple Strain
Thy mountain notes with simple skill ;
Her simple cares to magnify ;
In simple democratic majesty ;
These simple efforts of Helvetian skill,
The simple rapture ;—who that travels far
Paid simple tribute, such as might have flowed
That awful name to Thee, thee, simple Cuckoo,
In simple childhood, spread through ours !
Though simple thy companions were and few ;
For simple hearts thy beauty ;
This brief this simple wayside Call can slight,
With heart by simple nature moved ;
In meek and simple infancy, what joy
Of simple truth with grace divine imbued ;
May sage and simple, catching with one eye
Thanks to the austere and simple Devotees,
That satisfies the simple and the meek,
And, by that simple notice, the repose
Crescent in simple loveliness serene,
And are endeared to simple cottagers—
Though but a simple object, into light,
And simple honesty a common growth—
Where simple art with bounteous nature vied,
For whom this simple Register was penned.
Think of their common peace, their simple play,
Aod on that simple bed.
For simple infant hath a ready ear.
But, Lord, this simple Troilus was woe,
For Adam was simple in thought ; and the poor,
Only by gold. And now a simple stone
Those simple lines flowed with an earnest wish,
Delight and liberty, the simple creed
Content upon some simple annual feast,
The simple ways in which my childhood walked ;
Seemed friends, poor simple schoolboys, now hung
round
And wild outlandish walks of simple youth
And simple Pleasure foraging for Death ;
Our simple childhood, sits upon a throne
O, wondrous power of words, by simple faith
And sorrows of the world. Those simple days
Among the simple shapes of human life
With that amusement, and a simple look
And, 'mid the simple worshippers, perchance
And as, by simple waving of a wand,
In simple childhood something of the base
With human kindnesses and simple joys.
Its simple worshippers from sun and shower.
A simple produce of the common day.
Exist more simple in their elements,
All recollection ; and that simple tale
The simple pastimes of the day and place.
Smooth words he had to wheedle simple souls ;
Pleasing and pleased, he shared their simple sports,
This simple Child will mourn his one short hour,
The simple shepherd's awe-inspiring God !"
Of simple manners, feelings unsuppress
And noiseless commonwealth. The simple race
And patient spade ; praise to the simple crook,
" Yet—in less simple districts, where we see
Over her comrades ; else their simple sports,
One of God's simple children that yet know not
Repeated without loss of simple phrase,
Unknown to you that in these simple vales
A simple curiosity to ease ;
Frolicked industriously, a simple Clerk
Our simple shepherds, speaking from the heart,
That lowly, great, good Mac. A simple stone
So, through a simple rustic garb's disguise,
Carrying relief for nature's simple wants.
Her simple manners, and the stable worth
The simple occupations of their sires,
—Not shaped by simple weaving of the foot
A simple blessing, or with evil mixed ;
Instructing simple childhood's ready ear :
The lovely Girl supplied—a simple song,
So long unthanked) had cheered a simple board
Six simple burghers—To the rope that tied Simple-hearted. While thus these simple-hearted men are moved ?
Simple-mindedness. Of modest meekness, simple-mindedness,
Simpler. More wise desires, and simpler manners ;— nurse
Gained merited respect in simpler times ;
Thy, 'mid the simpler forms of rural life,
Simples. This wood is rich in plants and curious simples.
Simplest. Not undelightful are the simplest charms,

 A healthy sound simplicity should reign,
 A desolation, a simplicity,
 Simplicity in habit, truth in speech,
 What reason, what simplicity and sense.
 Of gentleness, simplicity, and truth.
 And pure simplicity of wish and will,
 Of what my fond simplicity believed
 Most obviously simplicity and power.
 Unwooded, unthought-of even—simplicity,
 In circumspection and simplicity,
 By her benign simplicity of life,
 Were wanting; and simplicity of life ;
 Therein, with our simplicity awhile
 And an entire simplicity of mind
 Out of the bosom of simplicity

Simply. Shall simply feel and purely meditate—
 Associate with the simply meek,
 Nay, we would simply praise the free good-will
 In this endeavour simply to relate
 Some simply fashioned tale, to tell again,
 Why then conceal, that, when the simply good
 Now simply guarded by the sober powers
 Though simply, from their little household farm ;
 Butlers have simply broached their Lordships casks,
Simply-meek. The simply-meek foretaste the springs
Simulated. Or fear disguised in simulated scorn.
Simulating. And charm'd to hear his simulating tongue,
Sin. And often, like one overburthened with sin,
 Her thoughts are bent on deadly sin,
 She thinks no more of deadly sin ;
 Am grieved for that unhappy sin
 It grieves full many a sin to light
 An infant that has known no sin.
 Hers is a holy Being, freed from Sin.
 What sin would be upon her head
 Nor while sin lasts must effort cease ;
 Whose heaviest sin it is to look
 The shouts of folly, and the groans of sin."
 Where, if Sin had not entered, Love never had died.
 Of the Jerusalem below, her sin
 To expiate thy sin endeavour :
 With the least shade of thought to sin allied ;
 Thy own, if sorrow for thy sin be dead,
 Lead, through dark ways by sin and sorrow trod,
 So low as to be scorned without a sin ;
 A judgment too harsh of the sin and the shame ;
 And yet, into whatever sin they may fall,
 Upon this sinful earth, by sin unstained :
 Grieving for sin, and penitential tears
 Such triumph over sin and guilt achieve ?

Singularity. And all the strife of singularity,

Sink. Into a gradual calm the breezes sink,
Or sink, with heart alive like Mennon's lyre ;
Soon with despair's whole weight his spirits sink ;
Sink with his servile bands, to rise no more !
No.—Thoughts and feelings will sink deep, but then I let him sink again to the ground.

Through dream and vision did she sink,
In our dejection do we sink as low ;
And oft his cogitations sink as low
Or, tired with sport, wouldst sink asleep
Sink, to attain a loftier flight ;
To sink upon your mother's lap—and rest ?
To sink, perhaps, where he is lying,

He must sink down to languish . . .
Whole legions sink—and, in one instant, find . . .

Darkens the sun, hath bade the forest sink,
To sink, and meet them in their fretted caves,
Sink (if thou must) as heretofore
To hear—and sink again to sleep !
Sink, and forget their nature—now expands
Exhaust itself and sink to rest ;
Temple and Altar sink, to bide their shame
But for what gain ? if England soon must sink
And sink from high to low, along a scale . . .

Sisters. Twin sisters both of Ignorance, I found
" Sisters and brothers, little maid,
Were two adventurous Sisters wont to climb,
Seven Sisters that together dwell ;
The fishers say, those sisters fair
Are Sisters in the bond of love ;
Two lovely Sisters, still ad sweet
Sisters in love, a love allowed to climb,
And ye, Pierian Sisters, sprung from Jove
But if the Nereid Sisters and their Queen,
Her sisters, soon like her to be attired
Sisters, that they were each some new delight.
And Matrons and unwedded Sisters old ;
Hence deified as sisters they were bound
Will seek us also, sisters of our hearts,
Sister-twin. Its Sister-twin survives, whose smiles

Sister-wives. Pride of his sister-wives, the monarch stalks ;
Gaz'd by his sister-wives, the monarch stalks ;
Sift. Had charms for him ; and here he loved to sit,
In open air forgetful would I sit
'Twas my delight to sit and hear Idonea
Than bodily weariness. While here we sit
I will not play the staggard. Nay, sit down.
What is become of you.—You'll sit down and sign
it ;
Sit unmolested on his staff.—Innocent !
Than when both young and old sit gathered round
And there upon the ground I sit,
Sit near us on the bough !
Down would he sit ; and without strength or power
May sit beneath the walls
Upon that alder sit ; 46
Or sit in the shade of my grandfather's tree,
And there I sit at evening, when the steep
I sit, and play with similes,
To sit upon my orchard-seat !
Still sit upon Helm-crag together !
Beside an unambitious hearth to sit
Amid your pleasant bowers to sit,
Within a living Boat to sit,
Kind listeners, that around me sit,
There, self-involved, does Peter sit
To sit blithe and happy ; bees that soar for bloom,
Sit in meekness, like the brooding Dove,
Nor view of who might sit thereon allowed ;
Withdrawn for noontide rest. They sit, they walk
The tomb, and on the clouds to sit
Where Mortal never breathed I dare to sit
To sit and muse, fanned by its dewy air
That—while at banquet with your Chiefs you sit
" Lightly for both the bosom's lord did sit

Stage above stage) would sit this Island's King,
Why, William, sit you thus alone,
I sit upon this old grey stone,
To sit without emotion, hope, or aim,
Loag, long in darkness did she sit,
Sit loosely, like the thistle's crest of down ;
And every man sit down as Plenty's Guest !
Breathed out these words :—" Here daily do we sit,
So down we sit, though not till each had cast

Might sit and sun himself.—Alas ! alas !
Where, pensioned, they in shelter might sit down,
Sit like a throned Lady, sending out
Where an old man had used to sit alone,
That self-same village church ; I see her sit
And didst sit down in temperance and peace,
Where England's sovereigns sit in long array,
Sit, see, and hear, unthankful, ununsipred ?

Sits. He sits a brother at the cottage-meal ;
Lo, where she sits beneath your shaggy rock,
Another sits i' th' sun, and by the hour
The thought of death sits easy on the man
She sits, as if in Susan's fate
And now she sits her down and weeps ;
Sits upright on a feeding horse ?
Where sits the Dame, and wears away
While the patient primrose sits
There sits he ; in his face you spy
Where at his desk and book he sits,
The Porter sits down on the weight which he bore ;
For oft there sits between the heap,
And there, beside the Thorn, she sits
And why sits she beside the Thorn
And there sits in a scarlet cloak,
And there she sits, until the moon
Where sits in state our rightful Lord,
The Hermit sits alone. These heauteous forms,
Sits blooming like a flower.
" There sits the Vicar and his Dame ;
And so he sits in expectation !
Upon a stone the Woman sits
Where he sits down, he knows not how,
While here sits One whose brightness owes its hues
He sits, and with a vacant eye
He sits a more exalted Potentate,
Our aged Sovereign sits, to the ebb and flow
Insensible. He sits deprived of sight,
Of quietness, she sits alone ;
Sits there in sober truth—to raise the low,
And near the flame-eyed eagle sits the dove.

Six—continued.

- The village clock tolled six,—I wheeled about,
Six changeful years have vanished since I first
A sportive infant, who, for six months' space,
Those six fair Daughters, budding yet—not one.
Six which themselves must single from a train.
Six simple burghers—To the rope that tied
The cry is six to one upon the Duke.
Six-days'. The six-days' Work by flaming Seraphim Sires. Were at sixes and sevens ;
- Sixpenny. By sixpenny seditious-shops engrossed,
Sixteen. And left her mother at sixteen,
Full sixteen thousand fair to see ;"
Sixteenth. A Shepherd-lad ; who ere his sixteenth year
- Sixth. I married my sixth wife !
From his sixth year, the Boy of whom I speak,
Sixty. Assiduous, through the length of sixty years.
"At length, when sixty years and five were told,
Size. See Giant-size.
Of formidable size had chiselled out
A very Harp in all but size !
With what ?—a Ship of lullaby size ;
Is like an infant's grave in size,
So like an infant's grave in size,
A Shape of more than mortal size
But one of mighty size, and strange ;
A shell of ample size, and light
What aim had they, the Pair of Monks, in size
A stature undepressed in size,
Fays, Gem of gigantic size !
A peopled world it is ; in size a tiny room.
A six years' Darling of a pigmy size !
And their own size, than any outward light ;
In size a giant, stalling through thick fog,
But vast in size, in substance glorified ;
Stood near, of smaller size, and not unlike
A rough abode—in colour, shape, and size,
Masses of every shape and size, that lay
- Skeleton. I thought I saw the skeleton of Idonea.
Silence and Foresight ; Death the Skeleton
Skeleton of unfished humanity,
By skeleton arms, that, from the mountain's trunk
When the broad oak drops, a leafless skeleton,
Fath still his castle, though a skeleton,
A human skeleton on the ground ;
- Skeletons. Their skeletons, turned to brilliant ornaments.
Huge skeletons of crags which from the coast
Sketched. This portraiture is sketched. The great,
the good,
Skiddaw. And Skiddaw is glad with the cry of the heads."
Carried the Lady's voice,—old Skiddaw blew
Old Skiddaw will look down upon the Spot
Mount Skiddaw ? In his natural sovereignty

Skies. Exulting 'mid the winter of the skies,
Her fields peculiar, and peculiar skies.
Who drag, beneath our native skies,
Mute strains from worlds beyond the skies,
In rustling conflict through the skies,

And see this sight beneath the skies,
The stormy skies !
Erected in the skies . . .
But, till the warmth of summer skies
When the blue daylight's in the skies,
Whatever star is in the skies,
Unless the glow-worm to the skies
From supplants panting for the skies !
Where flower-breathed incense to the skies
With that of summer skies !
Fair is that land as evening skies,
And touch more quiet skies.
And skies that ne'er relinquish their repose ;
To ivied castles and to moonlight skies,
Powers that will work for thee ; air, earth, and skies ;
Of gratitude, beneath Italian skies,
Than aught dependent on the fickle skies.

- Those locks from summer's golden skies,
At morn, at noon, and under moonlight skies
Lapp'd by the panting tongue of thirsty skies.
As sent from heav'n the raven of the skies,
The seats of learning brave the distant skies.

In Arcady, beneath unaltered skies
Beneath the concave of unclouded skies
The forked weapon of the skies can send
His fame touched the skies, . . .
- With shouts the assembled people rend the skies
A spirit that can look through clouded skies, . . .
- Skiff. See Pleasure-skiff.
Gambol like a dancing skiff, . . .
Then take thy way, adventurous Skiff,
In her light skiff, the tossing waves,
Who but must covet a cloud-seat, or skiff . . .
A zig-zag path from the domestic skiff
- Skiffs. The skiffs, at anchor where with umbrage wide
The skiffs with naked masts at anchor laid, . . .
- Skiffful. —O, would that some more skiffful voice
Bard of the Fleece, whose skiffful genius made
And 'mid the works of skiffful hands,
More skiffful in self-knowledge, even more pure,
Skiffful and bold, the horse and burthened sled
- A skiffful distribution of sweet sounds,
And music waits upon your skiffful touch, . . .
- Skill. Of Nature, finished with most curious skill !
That skill or means of his could add, but the architect had wrought . . .
"God for His service needeth not proud work of
human skill ;
In more delightful verse than skill of mine
And all his skill in horsemanship :
Of hardship, skill or courage, joy or fear :
The Man was using his best skill to gain
Myriads of notes attest her subtle skill ;
Beholding what your skill has wrought,
And smoothed by Nature's skill,
Mistrusting her evasive skill,
Called for his patience and his skill ;—
Endurance, foresight, strength, and skill . . .
Whose skill can speed the day with lively cares,
Flow from your visionary skill
Creation of the painter's skill,
That to the Painter's skill is here allowed.
Was for belief no dream—thy skill, Arion !
Of skill, upon the sounding hide
And modulate, with subtle reach of skill
Which to the work surpassing skill hath dealt,
Haydon ! let worthier judges praise the skill
All praise the Likeness by thy skill portrayed ;
Through Nature's skill, . . .
And more than common strength and skill
The free-born Soul—that World whose wanted skill
What is it but a vain and curious skill,
Glory, and triumph. Yet with politic skill
A landscape more august than happiest skill
Shall show her clothed with strength and skill
Opposed to dark, deep plots of patient skill,
Her skill she tried with less ambitious views.
Nor such fine skill as did the meed bestow
Thy mountain notes with simple skill ;
These simple efforts of Helvetian skill,
With all who want not skill to couple grief
Through marvellous felicity of skill,
Impelled by thirst of all but Heaven-taught skill.
Nor grieve the less that skill to him was left
Nor, though a Mechanist, whose skill . . .
Esteem me, Liege ! if I, whose skill . . .
Such as the heaven-taught skill of Herbert drew ;
If, un deceived, my skill can trace
Thought he, may want not skill to save.
Urged by Ambition, who with subtlest skill
Ye have no skill to teach, or if ye know
Giordano, verily thy Pencil's skill . . .
Nor be it e'er forgotten how by skill
Boastful Idolatress of formal skill
Which a fine skill, of Indian growth, has wrought
And, though you with your utmost skill
The best of his skill he has tried ;
If he be one that feels, with skill to part
A skill—to balance and supply ;
Whom, then, shall meekness guard ? What saving skill . . .
Nor gain, from past or future, skill . . .
Broad, clear, and toned harmoniously, with skill
Triumphs, in that great work, the Painter's skill,
Wisdom exists not ; nor the humbler skill
In music all unversed, nor blessed with skill
Is it that ye with conscious skill
Some quaint odd plaything of elaborate skill,

Skill—continued.

To gladden or to grieve, he hath like skill;
 And the skill which he learned on the banks of the Tyne
 Commemorating genius, talent, skill,
 With skill and power that might not be withheld,
 In contradiction; with no skill to part
 Proud of his skill, to reach a chosen point
 And the vain-glory of superior skill.
 On the smooth platform, whether skill prevailed
 Some skill, and longer time than may be spared,
 Was present, one who with unerring skill
 Tamed to their bidding; they who have the skill
 Of silence came and baffled his best skill,
 Whether the Painter, whose ambitious skill
 Of lowly thyme, by Nature's skill enwrought
 Longing for skill to paint a scene so bright
 Were called upon to exercise their skill,
 I summoned my best skill, and toiled; intent
 Of many Beings, he had wondrous skill
 Than this obscure Itinerant had skill
 Ambition to attempt, and skill to win.
 Whose skill had thronged the floor with a proud
 show
 As skill and graceful nature might suggest
 Of all adventurers. With unrivalled skill,
 Which his poor skill could make, his fancy fetched,
 And skill in letters—every fancy shaped
 Charming the air with skill of hand or voice,
 That skill in this or other household work,
 "Those-pleasing works the Housewife's skill produced":
 For their sweet purposes, with perfect skill,
 Towards one, whose bold contrivances and skill,
 Occasion given him to display his skill,
 Or bold adventure; promising to skill,
 By words, nor by the pencil's silent skill;
 Shall pause, the skill admiring that can work
 A task above my skill; the silent mind
 The sage has read the stars with skill so true,
Skilled. About this ground; she hath a tongue well skilled,
 Hail, best above all kinds!—Supremely skilled
 Skilled to approach or to retire,—
 Thy heart! what hopes inspired thy genius, skilled,
 And thou wilt doubt, with me less aptly skilled
 By poets skilled in nature's secret ways
Skim. And Truth would skim the flowery glade,
 Well pleased to skim the plain with wild flowers
 deckt,
 Whose fancy had a thousand fields to skim;
 To skim along the surfaces of things,
Skimmed. Each with a mess of pottage and skimmed milk,
 That skimmed the surface of the dead calm lake,
 Up-starting, Cynthia skimmed the mountain-dew
 Were skimmed, devoured, or studiously perused,
 Like others, I had skimmed, and sometimes read
 Along that very shore which I had skimmed
 The turf of yon large pasture will be skimmed;
 Launched from our hands the smooth stone
 skimmed the lake;
Skims. Smoothly skims the meadows wide;
 While his free Barge skims the smooth flood along,
Skin. See Wolf-skin.
 Between my breast-plate and my skin than make
 Her skin was of Egyptian brown:
 She wrapped thee in a panther's skin;
 The smooth transparent skin,
 Her tawny skin, dark eyes, and glossy locks,
 Though I sell shirt and skin,
Skinned. The Place unfolds, from pavement skinned with moss,
Skins. That skins the plains of Thessaly,
Skip. The withered leaves all skip and hop
Skipton. "How glad is Skipton at this hour—
 And A Traveller on the skirt of Sarum's Plain
 And downward by the skirt of Greenside fell,
 To teach the skirt of thy dark cloud to shine;
Skirted. See Forest-skirted, Willow-skirted.
Skirting. And now has reached the skirting trees;
Skirts. And to the wagon's skirts was tied
 Even while I speak, their skirts of grey Whose skirts the glowing Mountain thirsted to detain.
 On the last skirts of their permitted ground,
 A single step, that freed me from the skirts
 And with their parents occupy the skirts
Skulk. Would stoop to skulk about a Cottage door—
Skulking. I spied him skulking in his peasant's dress.
 Or rather skulking for the common weal
Skull. Cross-bones nor skull,—type of our earthly state.
 Upon the pivot of his skull
 Upon the pivot of his skull
 Like this old helmet, or the eyeless skull
Skulls. Where three thousand skulls are laid;
Sky. O'er vale, and mountain, and the starless sky,
 Thy torrents shooting from the clear-blue sky;
 The sky is veiled, and every cheerful sight:
 Suspended 'mid the quiet of the sky;

Sky—continued.

Was lost, though still he looked, in the blank sky.
 Rolled fast along the sky his warm and genial moon.
 When into storm the evening sky is wrought,
 Shine calmly as if nothing ailed the sky:
 We sat us down. The sky grew dark and darker:
 On a dead sea under a hunking sky,
 That drops down dead out of a sky it vexed.
 A rainbow in the sky
 That looked up at the sky so proud and big
 All newly home! both earth and sky
 "Here thou need'st not dread the raven in the sky;
 Suspended in a stream as clear as sky,
 Weary of the open sky,
 Of last night's snow, beneath a sky threatening the fall of more,
 Air blackened, thunder growled, fire flashed from clouds that hid the sky,
 The sky, the gay green field,
 Glittered at evening like a starry sky;
 Is shining in the sky.
 May mount into the sky!
 I look—the sky is empty space;
 In sky, air, earth, and ocean.
 The moon is up,—the sky is blue,
 That overhead are sailing in the sky.
 Helvellyn far into the clear blue sky
 And when the Frost is in the sky,
 Or, some bright day of April sky,
 With clouds and sky about thee ringing,
 To thy hanqueting place in the sky.
 Beneath the summer sky
 Now, beneath the starry sky,
 Vain is the glory of the sky,
 And sacred to the sky.
 Nor ever was a cloudless sky
 In the broad open eye of the solitary sky,
 Then from the tenant of the sky
 Of a sky serene and pure;
 Thee and thy mate and sister of the sky.
 Is it for threatenings in the sky?
 Black is the sky—and every hill,
 Up to the sky, is blacker still—
 Sky, hill, and dale, one dismal room,
 The sky owes somebody a grudge!
 The utmost anger of the sky:
 Earth, spangled sky, and lake serene,
 In bush, and tree, and sky.
 —The sky is overcast
 The silent trees, and saw the intruding sky.—
 A Telescope upon its frame, and pointed to the sky:
 Blue sky prevailing;
 'Mid silver clouds, and openings of blue sky
 Sailed through the sky—the brooks ran clear;
 Have been a traveller under open sky,
 As quietly as spots of sky
 The tumult of a tropic sky,
 Like the whole sky when to the east
 The sky rejoices in the morning's birth;
 I heard the sky-lark warbling in the sky:
 When the blue daylight's in the sky
 Through half the clear blue sky will go;
 The silence that is in the starry sky,
 The landscape with the quiet of the sky.
 And the hue sky, and in the mind of man:
 A few are near him still—and now the sky,
 Ethereal minstrel! pilgrim of the sky!
 Most potent when mists veil the sky,
 By soft reflection—grateful to the sky,
 Beneath the concave of an April sky,
 Thus, in their stations, lifting toward the sky
 As if no space below the sky
 Streaming from founts above the starry sky,
 Appear; a calm descent of sky conducting
 Beneath their little patch of sky
 The soft blue sky did never melt
 The witchery of the soft blue sky!
 Against the wind and open sky!
 Beneath the clear blue sky he saw
 To-night, beneath the moonlight sky,
 Its own small pasture, almost its own sky!
 Smooth fields, white streets of water, and pure sky;
 That, struggling through the western sky, have won
 Of silent hills, and more than silent sky,
 We should forget them; they are of the sky,
 Through leaves yet green, and yon crystalline sky,
 Which, strewn with snow smooth as the sky can
 shed,
 Large space ('mid dreadful clouds) of purest sky.
 With how sad steps, O Moon, thou climb'st the sky,
 The lake below reflects it not; the sky
 Whirled us o'er unless ground beneath a sky
 Open unto the fields, and to the sky;
 Their tops, between them comes and goes a sky
 Sky without cloud—ocean without a wave;
 The most alluring clouds that mount the sky
 That mounts not toward the radiant morning sky,
 With such a sky to lead him on?
 Was fixed upon the glowing Sky,

 Dread cliff of Baruth ! that wild wish may sleep, . . . 466
 In sleep She sometimes walked abroad, . . . 479
 Sleep in thy intellectual crust ; . . . 485
 Or he must fall, to sleep without his fame, . . . 494
 With heart as calm as lakes that sleep, . . . 499
 Into the human breast, and mix with sleep . . . 501
 Sunk into a kindly sleep, . . . 503
 A shadowy link 'tween wakefulness and sleep, . . . 524
 And then for cold not sleep a wink, . . . 536
 Sleep sealed her eyes, and stole . . . 542
 —There, though by right the excellent Painter sleep . . . 547
 Creations lovely as the work of sleep— . . . 547
 Through all this May that I have little sleep ; . . . 557
 His eyes from sleep, at the first break of day, . . . 562
 Made not, as thousands do, a vulgar sleep ; . . . 576
 How perfect was the calm ! it seemed no sleep ; . . . 578
 And Thou, sweet Flower, shalt sleep and wake . . . 580
 Has sunk into a breathless sleep, . . . 586
 The Winds come to me from the fields of sleep, . . . 588
 Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting : . . . 588
 Long may ye roam these hermit waves that sleep, . . . 595
 On the low brown wood-huts delighted sleep . . . 607
 Thro' worlds where Life and Sound, and Motion . . . 609
 sleep, . . . 613
 Implores the dreadful untried sleep of Death, . . . 613
 It happen'd that, to sleep inclin'd, . . . 620
 'Mid groves Idalian, lull'd to gentle sleep, . . . 624
 Earth awakes from wintry sleep : . . . 628
 Till all was tranquil as a dreamless sleep, . . . 639
 Albeit lifeless then, and doomed to sleep . . . 641
 Nursed in his Mother's arms, who sinks to sleep, . . . 645
 Evening and morning, sleep and waking, thought . . . 647
 Could find no surface where its power might sleep ; . . . 651
 Through the same gateways, sleep where they had . . . 652
 slept, . . . 661
 Informs, creates, and thaws the deepest sleep . . . 666
 Sleep seized me, and I passed into a dream, . . . 667
 Full often, taking from the world of sleep, . . . 684
 By noise of waters, making innocent sleep . . . 685
 From sleep awakened, and misled by sound . . . 685
 At last we stretched our weary limbs for sleep, . . . 685
 But could not sleep, tormented by the stings . . . 685
 As if awaked from sleep, the Nations halted . . . 686
 That shall break in upon his sleep for weeks ; . . . 700
 To the whole city, "sleep no more." The trace . . . 719
 Of those atrocities, the hour of sleep . . . 724
 Ennobling, venerable ; sleep secure, . . . 724
 Even as a sleep, between the heart of man . . . 734
 Would I arouse the sensual from their sleep . . . 735
 Dislodged the natural sleep that binds them up . . . 763
 We shall not sleep, but we shall all be changed ! . . . 780
 A better state than waking ; death than sleep : . . . 790
 Who from the anarchy of dreamy sleep, . . . 802
 Darkness to chase, and sleep ; and bring the day . . . 803
 Are glorified ; or, if they sleep, shall wake . . . 804
 From sleep, and dwell with God in endless love, . . . 804
 Inviting sleep and soft forgetfulness, . . . 821
 And, as the heavy cloud of sleep dissolves, . . . 826
 "And hest are they who sleep ; and we that know, . . . 836
 One with himself, and one with them that sleep." . . . 844
 To rise from timely sleep, and meet the day . . . 859
 Was overcome by unexpected sleep, . . . 861
 Did never rouse this Cottager from sleep . . . 863
 Ah ! sleep not there in shame ! Shall Wisdom's . . . 890
 voice, . . . 895
 Of sabbath bells ; and ye, who sleep in earth, . . . 895
 Upon their grassy beds lay couch'd in sleep, . . . S.3.
 Grateful is Sleep ; my life in stone bound fast . . . S.3.
 Grateful is Sleep, more grateful still to be . . . S.3.
 Come, gentle Sleep, Death's image tho' thou art, . . . S.3.
 In quiet hopelessness I sleep, . . . K.8.
 Year after year, with many a sleep between, . . . K.8.
 And entertained as in a placid sleep, . . . K.8.
 Sleeper. Hush, hush, the busy Sleeper see ! . . . 479

Sleepers. The sleepers of the village, . . . 483
Sleep's st. Thou travellest so contentedly, and sleep'st . . . 173
Sleeping. Air listens, like the sleeping water, still, . . . 9
 A sleeping man uneasy in his bed, . . . 50
 He in his sleep would walk about, and sleeping . . . 101
 Sleeping on the mountain's breast, . . . 163
 Some are sleeping ; some in hands . . . 171
 Sleeping by her sleeping Baby, . . . 177
 The tender insects sleeping in their cells ; . . . 186
 Now sleeping in these peaceful groves, . . . 257
 Sleeping alone within a mossy cave, . . . 257
 And are up-gathered now like sleeping flowers ; . . . 321
 Like the strong wind, or sleeping like the wind . . . 321
 The tender insects sleeping in their cells ; . . . 346
 When, from the soft couch of their sleeping Lover, . . . 389
 The sleeping dust, stern Death, How reconcile . . . 459
 Dost shield from harm the humblest of the sleeping ; . . . 469
 A sleeping infant's brow, or wakeful eye . . . 486
 And if a sleeping tear should wake, . . . 486
 But turn, my Soul, and from the sleeping pair . . . 549
 Or hidden under ground, like sleeping worms, . . . 549
 Thy Form was sleeping on a glassy sea, . . . 600
 All air is, as the sleeping water, still, . . . 668
 Or sleeping nameless in their scattered graves, . . . 705
 Induced by sleeping nightly on the ground . . . 771
 Him, sleeping or awake, the robber spared ; . . . 811
 Watched, from the centre of their sleeping flocks, . . . 832
 Bright as a sunbeam sleeping till a shower . . . 832
 And such it might be deemed—a sleeping sunbeam ; . . . 832
Sleepless. Three sleepless nights I passed in sounding . . . 69 on, . . . 195
 The sleepless Soul that perished in his pride ; . . . 253
 Sleepless ! and soon the small birds' melodies . . . 438
 By sleepless prudence ruled, glides slowly on ; . . . 501
 Of sleepless Labour, 'mid whose dizzy wheels . . . 557
 But tossing lately on a sleepless bed, . . . 887
 The sleepless ocean murmurs for all ears . . . 2
Sleeps. Where, undisturbed by winds, Winander . . . 2 sleeps ; . . . 10
 The leafy wood, or sleeps in quiet lakes, . . . 30
 " Ah ! how unlike those late terrific sleeps, . . . 75
 But enter there and see him how he sleeps, . . . 118
 The kitten sleeps upon the hearth, . . . 153
 The daisy sleeps upon the dewy lawn, . . . 190
 The green field sleeps in the sun ; . . . 194
 She sleeps beneath the greenwood tree, . . . 222
 Which the careless shepherd sleeps on, . . . 244
 The white dust sleeps upon the lane ; . . . 288
 Sleeps Ossian, in the NARROW GLEN ; . . . 328
 The fierce Tornado sleeps within Thy courts— . . . 368
 And softly sleeps within the thread she spins, . . . 452
 Why sleeps the future, as a snake enrolled, . . . 485
 While 'mid the fern-brake sleeps the doe, . . . 523
 That broods and sleeps on his own heart, . . . 137
 Hence whole day wanderings, broken nightly sleeps . . . 579
 Sleeps by his native shore, . . . 586
 The heaven-eyed creature sleeps in earth : . . . 586
 In cataracts, or sleeps in quiet lakes, . . . 662
 The day pass lightly on, when foresight sleeps, . . . 692
 Beside the mountain-chapel, sleeps in earth . . . 692
 With envy on thy nameless babe that sleeps, . . . 770
 She sleeps in the calm earth, and peace is here, . . . 868
 The innocent troubler of their quiet, sleeps . . . 880
 Sleeps, like a caterpillar sheathed in ice ? . . . 7
Sleepy. Turn to a silent smile their sleepy cry, . . . 237
 "Go—(but the world's a sleepy world, . . . 278
 As they from turf yet hoar with sleepy dew . . . 403
 —Not loth the sleepy lance to wield, . . . 451
 In the soft chequerings of a sleepy light, . . . 527
 That any living heart should sleepy be . . . 768
 Bespake a sleepy hand of negligence ; . . . 217
Sleel. And white with foam as if with cleaving sleet, . . . 7
 That to their object cleave like sleet . . . 322
Sleety. Oh ! when the sleety showers her path assail, . . . 7
 Of Winter's breath surcharged with sleety showers, . . . 7
 And afterwards, the wind and sleety rain, . . . 7
Sleewad. See White-sleewad.
Slender. O'erwalk the slender plank from side to . . . 5 side ; . . . 8
 And by a slender cord was tethered to a stone ; . . . 123
 On that brief meeting's slender filament ! . . . 156
 To deck your slender shape ; . . . 164
 And suit their slender lays, . . . 165
 A slender unexpected strain ; . . . 169
 Though by a slender thread, . . . 215
 A slender volume grasping in thy hand— . . . 227
 —A slender sound ! yet hoary Time . . . 336
 Jesu ! bless our slender Boat, . . . 354
 In a frail bark urged by two slender oars . . . 358
 Look like a cloud—a slender stem the tie . . . 366
 Ye Trees ! whose slender roots entwine . . . 377
 That tunes on Duddoo's banks her slender voice, . . . 399
 That slender Youth, a scholar pale, . . . 422
 His questions urging, feels, in slender ties . . . 509
 Across the slender wrist of the left arm . . . 523
 When, yet a slender Girl, she often led, . . . 109
 Strug on slender blades of grass ; . . . 549
 In slender accents of sweet verse, some tale . . . 668
 A slender abstract of the Arabian tales ; . . . 672
 His slender manacles ; or romping girl . . . 693

Slender—continued.

To bend as doth a slender blade of grass
Those slender cords, to guide the unconscious Boy
Which had been twined about the slender stem
The Housewife, tempted by such slender gains
How gracefully that slender shrub looks forth
To turn a slender mill (that new-made playing)
Their slender means; so, to that parent's care
For a life's stay (slender it was, but sure)
And slender stem, while here I sit at eve,
That not the slender privilege is theirs
Their slender ditties when the trees are bare.
Receiving, took the slender path that leads Slept. And in a quiet home once more my father slept.
In the calm sunshine slept the glittering main;
She slept in peace,—his pulses throbbed and stopped.
Came to my child as by my side he slept,
And, like a naked Indian, slept himself away.
In one of those sweet dreams I slept,
The vacant city slept; the busy winds,
With some, the noble Creature never slept;
Of Him who slept upon the open sea:
But in calm peace the appointed Victim slept,
Thou turn'st the Wheel that slept with dust o'er-
spread;
Slept, with the obscurest, in the low
To seize (while on the Deep it slept)
Slept amid that lone Camp on Hardknot's height,
And slept in many a crystal pool
The heroic Age expired—it slept
And for two days unnoticed slept.
Where Francis slept in his last abode.
Hath slept since noon-tide on the grassy ground,
Among the good (when love might else have slept,
All, while he slept, treading the radiant stairs
Forgot her functions, and slept undisturbed.
In this new life. Imagination slept,
Through the same gateways, sleep where they had slept.
Languish within me; even then it slept,
It slept, even in the pregnant season of youth.
To him who slept at noon and wakes at eve,
To the cold grave in which her husband slept,
And to this helpless infant. I have slept
Was sapped; and while she slept, the nightly damps
Ranged through the mountains, slept upon the earth,
A golden lustre slept upon the hills;
Slew. Slew, and as quickly to a second gave Whose rival sword a like Opponent slew;
Where her thousands Fate slew,

Slightly. With firmness, hitherto but slightly touched Slights. And, tired with slights his pride no more could brook,
The passing traveller slights;
And, if there be a joy that slights the claim
That slights this passion, or condemns;
Hardening a heart that loathes or slights
Slim. My boy beside me tripped, so slim
Where the slim wild deer roves;
Rose the slim ash and massy sycamore,
Slimy. Upon the slimy foot-stone I espied
Slink. For all the startled scaly tribes that slink Slinking. And his red eyes the slinking water hides;
Slip. Each slip of lawn the broken rocks between
I put a slip of foxglove in his hand,
A track, that brought us to a slip of lawn,
Yon tawny slip is Libya's sands;
Nor could I let one thought—one motion—slip
To let slip upon buck or doe.
Once did I see a slip of earth
Slip by him unproclaimed, and told the hours
An unproductive slip of rugged ground,
When she could slip into the cottage-barn,
Slip'st. Slip'st into thy sheltering hold;
Slipped. When my old Leader slipped into the flood
The lamb had slipped into the stream,
And slipped into the ordinary works
From earnest dialogues I slipped in thought,
Or to that rural castle, name now slipped Slippers. With freight of slippers piled beneath his arm!
Slippery. Rolled wantonly between their slippery wings,
At home, go staggering through the slippery fords,
Along the loose rocks, or the slippery verge
Or slippery even to peril! and each step,
Whose slippery face derides his deathful tread!
And half-inch fissures in the slippery rock
With languid steps that by the slippery turf
Slipping. And heams of evening, slipping in between,
Of meditation, slipping in between
The beams of evening, slipping soft between,
So near that, slipping back into the shade
Slips. Slips in a moment out of life,
Slips from his prison walls: and Fancy, free
Forth slips, like an enfranchised slave,
Life slips from underneath us, like that arch
Tumbles, the widering Thunder slips abroad;
Of the suspicious, slips of the indiscreet,
The gooseberry trees that shot in long lank slips,
All England through, where nooks and slips of ground
Slope. While the sharp slope the slackened team confounds,
Long had he fancied each successive slope
That rang down a bare slope not far remote:
Between the water and a winding slope
Are tempted to this sunny slope!
Here was it—on this rugged slope,
That mossy slope, o'er which the woodbine throws
But now, while down that slope he weends,
Or shining slope where he must never stray;
Ambition—following down this far-famed slope
“And just above yon slope of corn
—On the slope of a mountain I stood,
Upon a slope surmounted by a plain
Upon a slope above the village school,
Strewing the turf's green slope. A diamond light
He yielded not; but, pointing to a slope
Pressing behind, adown a rugged slope,
And that smooth slope from which the dwelling rose,
Upon this flowery slope; and see—beyond—
Slope-channel. In the slope-channel floored with pebbles bright,
Sloped. Sloped seaward, turf whose tender April
green,
Slopes. See Mountain-slopes.
Far to the western slopes with hamlets white;
Embowered in walnut slopes and citron isles:
A structure stands, which two bare slopes enclose,
On the slopes of the pastures all colours were seen;
Ye ploughshares sparkling on the slopes!
For warm Vesuvius's vine-clad slopes:
The sylvan slopes with corn-clad fields
What slopes are planted, or what mosses drained:
Calm huts, and lawns between, and sylvan slopes.
Alone, continuing there to muse: the slopes
The vine-clad hills and slopes of Burgundy,
In this delicious region.”—Cultured slopes,
Sloping. See Off-sloping.
There, over rock or sloping pasture creep.
Descends along the sloping road;
They shaped their course along the sloping side
Sloth. And, though little troubled with sloth,
With burring note, which Industry and Sloth
Be plighted, not to ease but sullen sloth,
Days undefiled by luxury or sloth,
Of intellect; such sloth I could not brook,

Sloth—continued.

But superstitious fear, and abject sloth.
Slothful. Quicken the slothful, and exalt the vile!
Slouching. And long and slouching was his gait;
Slow. Broke only by the slow clock tolling deep,
 And slow the insulted eagle wheels away.
 Slow glides the sail along the illumined shore,
 And circumspect must be our course, and slow,
 Of weeds and flowers, till we return be slow,
 Ye travel heavily and slow;
 Is slow to meet the sympathies of them
 Thought of a wound which death is slow to cure,
 And sullen motions long and slow,
 Majestically huge and slow:
 Slow to begin, and never ending;
 But they have dwindled long by slow decay;
 With the slow motion of a summer's cloud,
 "She leaves these objects to a slow decay,
 In reason, in self-government too slow;
 Yet, with deliberate action slow,
 In all men, sinful is it to be slow

And wish the Lord of day his slow decline
 He tracks her motions, quick or slow,
 And watch the slow departure of the train,
 While they the Church engird with motion slow,
 Henceforth a humbler course perplexed and slow;
 Of slow endeavour! or abruptly cast
 The soul's deep valley was not slow
 Comes gliding in serene and slow,
 Or have given way to slow mutation,
 And seeming, at a little distance, slow,
 Or down the nave to pace in motion slow;
 (Nor in this vision be thou slow to trust)
 Urge the slow bark along Calabrian shores;
 Of solemn splendour, in mutation slow.
 Long-baffled hope's slow fever in his veins,
 Are in the experienced Grand sire's slow to fail;
 On Patience coupled with such slow endeavour,
 Slow be the Statutes of the laud to spare
 Stript of its frightful powers by slow decay,

And hoary dews are slow to melt.
 And be not slow a stately growth to rear
 Old am I, and to genial pleasure slow
 Make slow to feel, and by sure steps resign
 Lived I—then yielded to a slow disease.
 Deliberate and slow:
 Where the slow waggon winds along the bay;
 Slow lights upon the lake's still bosom fall,
 Slow swells the service o'er the water born,
 With pensive step to measure my slow way,
 To pant slow up the endless Alf of life.
 At morn, our various journey, sad and slow.
 Emerging slow from Academus' grove.
 Dim were my swimming eye.—my pulse beat slow,
 Slow sink the Spires,—and up again they start!
 To disappear by a slow gradual death.
 Was neither slow nor eager; but, unmoved,
 Not slow to share my wishes, took his staff,
 At a slow pace. The immeasurable height
 By specious wonders, and too slow to tell.
 And, in a tone elaborately low
 Is prompt, or slow, to feel. What say you, then,
 Withering by slow degrees, 'mid gentle airs,
 Strange congregation! yet not slow to meet.
 Descending slow with something heavenly fraught.
 My thoughts by slow gradations had been drawn
 From earth the dust of morning, slow to rise;
 Was heard ascending; mournful, deep, and slow
 Than slow and torpid; paying in this wise
 With one so slow in gathering up his thoughts,
 By slow solicitation, earth to yield.
 Though loth and slow to come! A battle-field,
 Add, in its movements, circumspect and slow.
 With slow mutation unconcealable;
 By slow degrees, were gradually regained;
 The story that retraced the slow decline
 A slow disease insensibly consumed
 That whirls (how slow itself!) ten thousand spindles:
 Of Desolation, aimed: to slow decline
 Is the sure consequence of slow decay.
 Which Age, with many a slow stoop, strove to gain;
 That our feet are not slow;

Slow-climbing. The full-orbed Moon, slow-climbing, doth appear.
Slowly. Into blue spots, and slowly lengthening streaks;
 A sympathetic twilight slowly steal,
 As up the opposing hills they slowly creep.
 Alas! I creep so slowly. Never fear;
 He travels slowly down the vale.
 Wind slowly through the woody dale;
 Softly, slowly: one might think,
 And oft, as they pass slowly on,
 Which slowly settles into peaceful calm,
 Produced too slowly ever to decay;
 In courteous speech which forth he slowly drew:
 Stood like a lofty mount, uplifting slowly

Slowly—continued.

Descending slowly, till the two
 The unheeding Ass moves slowly on,
 Diaphanous because it travels slowly;
 Slowly surmounting some invidious hill,
 That, slowly making way for peaceful night,
 And splendour slowly mustering. Since the Sun,
 Walked quick or slowly, every mood
 Slowly the cormorant aims her heavy flight,
 By sleepless prudence ruled, glides slowly on;
 But slowly did her succour come,
 Yet have we found how slowly genuine grief
 Like living men, moved slowly through the mid
 Changed also slowly and insensibly.
 And heights meanwhile were slowly overspread
 And hailed him. Slowly from his resting-place
 Has failed; too slowly moves the promised work.
 Mount slowly, sun! that we may journey long,
 If you imagine changes slowly wrought.
 Expression slowly varying, that evinced
 Though slowly opening, opens every day.
Slowly-gathering. Then, shall the slowly-gathering twilight close
Slowly-moving. What all the slowly-moving years of time,
 That gathered round the slowly-moving train.
Slowly-sinking. Yon slowly-sinking star—immortal
 Sire
Slowly-waving. On slowly-waving pinions, down the vale;
Slow-moving. (Slow-moving ark of all his hopes!) that veiled
 Of a slow-moving boat, upon the breast.
 The Jew; the stately and slow-moving Turk.
Slowness. And self-respecting slowness, disinclined
Slow-paced. To quit the slow-paced waggon's side,
 Him even the slow-paced waggon leaves behind.
Slow-travelling. Slow-travelling down the western hills, to enfold
 Slow-travelling down the western hills, to fold Slow-varying. The gleams of his slow-varying countenance,
Slow-waving. A soft eye-music of slow-waving
 sighs,
 On red slow-waving pinions down the vale,
Slow-worm. There let the vernal slow-worm sun
 himself,
 I will not play the sluggard. Nay, sit down.
 Then starts the sluggard, pleased to meet.
 Power at whose touch the sluggard shall unfold
Sluggish. It pierced the caverns of the sluggish
 North—
 And in the sluggish pools where ships are pent:
 Not by the sluggish and ungrateful pains.
 Wide, sluggish, blank, and ignorant, and strange—
 And in the sluggish Ports where ships were pent.
Sluggishness. And bustle and sluggishness, pleasure and gloom.
Slumber. See Half-slumber.
 Dark is the ground; a slumber seems to steal
 Now, even now, ere wrapped in slumber,
 In slumber, with the cadence blends
 To come and slumber in your bowser;
 A slumber did my spirit seal;
 And as in slumber laid,—
 To slumber, reclined on the moss-covered floor,
 To slumber, reclined on the moss-covered floor!
 If Life were slumber on a bed of down,
 Of slumber—shrieking back she fell,
 I in a slumber and a swoon was caught,
 He lay in slumber quietly;
 Yet I, whose lids from infant slumber
 Of slumber Venus sheds, to circumsfuse
 Upon the last sweet slumber of her Child,
Slumbered. Had slumbered, now in opposition burst Slumberer. The desolate Slumberer with moss and with leaves.
Slumberer's. Shed, on the Slumberer's cold wan cheek
 Sage Merlin, at the Slumberer's side, Slumbering. "These things just served to stir the slumbering sense,
 Each lighter function slumbering in the brain,
 Each slumbering on some mountain's head)
 His torch, and shew them slumbering in their bed,
 Awake, awake! and snatch the slumbering lyre,
 Yet slumbering, lay in utter solitude.
 Quickens the slumbering mind, and aids the
 thoughts,
 Aimed at the laggards slumbering within doors;
 To rock the cradle of the slumbering babe:
Slumbers. And to soft slumbers, that did gently steep
 Slumbers without sense of motion,
 Air slumbers—wave with wave no longer strives,
 Praise be to such, and to their slumbers peace!
 A third now slumbers at the Mother's side;
 Shakes her numb arm that slumbers with its
 weight,
 Who slumbers at her feet,—forgetful, too,

Slumbrous. Induced a soft and slumbrous dream,
Slung. A harp is from his shoulder slung;
 With a huge wallet o'er my shoulders slung,
 From far, with basket, slung upon her arm,
 With store of household goods, in panniers slung.
Slunk. Others slunk to moor and wood,
 And by a postern-gate he slunk away.
 That he was glad to lose) slunk from the world
Sly. Declining Manhood learns to note the sly
 Through the lost look of dotage, is cunning and sly:
 Sly subterfuge, if the adventure's bound
 A prayer both bold and sly

Of the sly boatmen of Killarney
Smacked. The boy then smacked his whip, and fast Small. Save where, with sparkling foam, a small cascade
 Toil, small as pygmies in the gulf profound;
 Shedding, through paly loop-holes mild and small,
 Till our small share of hardly-paining sighs
 Tend the small harvest of their garden glades;
 To reach a small wood-hut hung boldly on the steep.
 To him the day-star glitters small and bright,
 Small help; and, after marriage such as mice,
 That Oswald finds small favour in our sight,
 I struck my flint, and built up a small fire
 The obstinate bolt of a small iron door
 Landed with a small troop, myself being one:
 Of a small pool of water he was laid,
 Look at it—the flower is small,
 Small and low, though fair as any:
 They tracked the footmarks small;
 And, in a basin black and small,
 To be engrafed on the top of his small edifice.
 And in His sight the fragile Cross, on thy small hut,
 will be
 From perils manifold, with some small wealth
 His strippling prime. A town of small repute,
 In great and small, in round and square,
 That small, for flax; and, if one wheel had rest,
 And for the land, his small inheritance.
 But small and fugitive our gain
 And a small hed of water in the woods.
 At such small elevation from the ground
 At small Cascade fresh swoln with snows
 Will reach both great and small;
 Methinks you take small heed!
 The platform is small, but gives room for them all;
 To the small wooden isle where, their work to hegule,
 This, one of those small builders proved
 Where fancy hath small liberty to grace
 And see, beyond that hamlet small
 Followed by multitudes of stars, that, small
 And a single small cottage, a nest like a dove's,
 Or gives a thing but small delight that never can be dear?
 The small birds twitter,
 Small clouds are sailing,
 Such small machinery as she turned
 Though but of compass small, and bare
 And a small labour, made for rural joy;
 Small difference lies between thy creed and mine:
 "Small change it made in Peter's heart
 In city or in village small,
 Call it of earth a small green plot,
 Small cause of dire effect! for, surely,
 The Ass in that small meadow-ground;
 Its own small pasture, almost its own sky!
 So narrow seemed the brooks, the fields so small!
 Why have I crowded this small bark with you
 Sleepless! and soon the small birds' melodies
 Of this small lute gave ease to Petrarch's wound;
 Observe the faithful flowers! if small to great
 Watching the least small bird that round her hops,
 As I do now, the cabin small,
 Not small like ours, a peaceful flood;
 To this small spot, his leafy shade;
 Exalt his still small voice;—to quell that Host
 Or the small hyssop destined to become,
 Appears his lot, to the small Worm's compared,
 Where small birds warbled to their paramours;
 And one small hamlet, under a green hill
 One small possession lacked not power,
 A falchion, and a buckler small,
 The bright Moon sees that valley small
 Breaks into dimples small and bright;
 Though small his kingdom as a spark or gem,
 The least small pittance of hare mould they prize
 Seek in domestic oratory small,
 Small reverence for the mitre's offices,
 Shall wound the tender sod. Encincture small,
 And whispers caught, and speeches small,
 Yet, God is my witness, thou small helpless Thing!
 Nor form, nor feeling, great or small;
 Through dewy grass, nor small birds hushed in bowers,
 A household small and sensitive,—whose love,
 And quieted and soothed, a torrent small,

Small—continued.

Like a small Hamlet, with its bashful head
 Is smooth as clear, save where with dimples small
 Will often live in one small cottage;
 Small service is true service while it lasts:
 That things obscure and small outlive the great:
 His pinnace, a small vagrant barge, up-piled
 Along the beach of this small isle and thought
 Song do I learn,—small grammar I have got.
 For now when they may hear the small birds' song,
 Upon the second step of that small pile,
 Fell on the ground; and the small mountain birds,
 Of some small blessings; have been kind to such
 And the small critic wielding his delicate pen,
 And there, with small wealth but his legs and his haods,
 Small cause there is for that fond wish of ours
 Sole light admitted here, a small cascade,
 Small circles of green radiance gleam around.
 While in sweet cadence rising small and still Thence, from three paly loopholes mild and small,
 Small cottage lights across the water stream,
 Her babe's small cry, that leads him to his prey.
 And hangs his small wood-hut upon the steeps.
 Small as a hird the chamois-chaser fly.
 The star of noon that glitters small and bright,
 In a small mill-race severed from his stream,
 Small circles glittering idly in the moon,
 Of our small market village, was the goal
 And now a third small Island, where survived
 Of a small howling-green; beneath us stood
 Of some small island steered our course with one,
 Small jealousies, and triumphs good or bad—
 Of maners put to school I took small note,
 There small birds warble from the leafy trees,
 How small, of intervening years! For then,
 Most delicate, a lurking eyelet, small,
 Full-form'd, that take, with small internal help,
 That I both was and must be of small weight,
 Small islands scattered amid stormy waves,
 Was gentleness and peace. Upon a small
 Benevolent in small societies,
 This small adventure, for even such it seemed
 And some small portion of his eloquent speech,
 Where, on a small hereditary farm,
 He had small need of hooks; for many a tale
 He duly went with what small surplus
 Had twined about her two small rows of peas,
 Was comfortless, and her small lot of books,
 Of that small opening, where a heath-clad ridge
 The small birds and in spring no thicket there
 Of that small valley, singing as they moved;
 "Can it be thus among so small a band
 And reached a small apartment dark and low,
 Our table, small parade of garden fruits,
 Of a small chapel, where, in ancient time,
 Small space! but, for reiterated steps,
 For the small wren to build in,—not in vain,
 Small creature as she is, from earth's bright flowers,
 To his small island in the ethereal deep
 Might, with small help from fancy, be transformed
 Of the small Cottage in the lonely Dell
 And its small lot of life-supporting fields,
 And foot-worn epitaphs, and some with small
 Small space of that green churchyard with a light
 A few small crofts of stone-encumbered ground;
 Of that small town encountering thus, they filled,
 Or the pellucid lake." "Small risk," said I,
 Lies guarded by its neighbour; the small heap
 And small birds singio happily to mates
 To a small Chapel in the vale beyond)
 To help the small but certain comings-in
 To whom the small inheritance had fallen.
 Forth with small leave-taking:
 Unheard of, save in one small hamlet, here
 Those small flat stones, which, ranged by traveller's hands,
 Whole hours with but small interchange of speech,
 This small abiding-place of many men,
 Could see them, nor in that small open space
 A liking for the small grey horse that bears
Smaller. Stood near, of smaller size, and not unlike
 That seems still smaller than it is. This grove
Smallest. Even till the smallest habitable rock,
Smart. Did press this semblance of unptied smart
 21
 And chaser bursting here with one dire smart.
 Ah, then, Belovèd! pleasing was the smart,
 A smart Assembly-room usurped the ground
 Till with a sudden bound of smart reproach,
Small. By what charm of sight or smell,
 A subtle smell that Spring unbinds,
 The flower of sweetest smell is shy and lowly.
Smells. Thrusts his hands in a wagon, and smells at the hay;
Smile. See Half-smile.
 Turn to a silent smile their sleepy cry,
 On darling spots remote her tempting smile.
 Tinged like an angel's smile all rosy red—

Smile—continued.

Joy's second spring and Hope's long-treasured smile,
Might tempt me to a smile; but what of him?
That smile hath life in it! This road is perilous;
Smile of the Moon!—for so I name
There was a smile or two—yet—yet
That last, that sweetest smile of his?
From this time forth he never shared a smile
Heart-pleased we smile upon the Bird
"Oh! smile on me, my little lamb!"
Alas! that meek that tender smile
For the undeceived, smile as they may,
—That smile forbids the thought; for on thy face
The VANGUARD—you may smirk and smile,
Moley accoutrement, of power to smile
If they speak 'tis to praise, and they praise with a smile.
He with a smile did then his words repeat;
Keep for the Young the impassioned smile
Ah, spare the exulting smile,
O Thou, against whose lip, without its smile
Smile if thou wilt, but not in scorn,
The chains of frenzy, or entice a smile
Wilt smile upon this gift with more than mild content!
If the heavens smile, and leave us free to glide,
Might smile on work, O Lady, once so dear
Then may that heaven-revealing smile of thine,
No mightier work had gained the plausive smile
The rigid features of a transient smile,
Sends gladness, by no languid smile declared.
Even as I speak the rising Sun's first smile
Smile on his Mother now with bolder cheer.
All, all were dispossessed, save him whose smile
In the wife's smile; and in the placid sky;
To sadness not their own, when, with faint smile
In one meek smile, beneath a peasant's shed,
Of a Divinity, that seemed to smile
There would the Indian answer with a smile
Looks down upon her with a smile,
A gracious smile, that seems to say—
The gift exalting, and with playful smile:
Like men ashand; the Sun with his first smile
Fixed, by her smile, upon some rocky seat;
Antiquity salutes him with a smile,
Knew not the double-dealing of a smile;
For Fortune on me never deigned to smile;
As is the smile upon thy face:
On whom the Muses smile;

With its soft smile the truth express,
Depicted on these pages smile at time;
And she would deign this day to smile on me
Thy smile is sure, Thy plighted word
Old Adam will smile at the pains that have made
Beside a sea that could not cease to smile;
Or charms that smile on Tusa's evening stream,
With earlier smile the ray of morn to view
Found still beneath her smile, and only there.
Stern was her forehead, but a smile serene
A smile sat beaming on her pensive face
With rapture she beheld Britannia smile,
Dear Valley, having in thy face a smile
I smile, in many a mountain solitude
He with a smile made answer, that in truth
Open it out, diffusing thence a smile
"A cheerful smile unbends the wrinkled brow,
With gracious smile, deliberately pleased,
Of the poor innocent children. 'Every smile,'
An amicable smile retained the life
The Solitary, with a faint sarcastic smile
Ere with inviting smile the Wanderer said:
And infant's smile awaited my return.
Let him build systems of his own, and smile
He with a smile exclaimed:—" 'Tis well you speak.
One that hath barely learned to shape a smile,
"Yes," with a smile of triumph thus exclaimed
"Yet!" said the Solitary with a smile
Till he begins to smile upon the breast
A woman of soft speech and gracious smile,
And with soft smile, his consort would reprove.
And he returned our greeting with a smile.
Of his employment, with a courteous smile
And re-confirmed—are scoffed at with a smile
Insatiate Charlotte's tears, and Charlotte's smile.
Smiled. Usurping where the fairest herbage smiled:
Fields smiled, and temples rose, and towns and cities grew.
Smiled (in my face) this were in simple truth
Were off among the first that smiled
I looked, I stared, I smiled, I laughed; and all
The rough Astolians smiled with bitter scorn.
So touchingly he smiled—
A countenance that as sweetly smiled—
Thanks to our Lady's grace." I smiled to hear,
Hung back, and smiled, and blushed for joy,
She smiled; but Time, the old Saturnian seer,
Hope smiled when your nativity was cast,
Have smiled upon thy flowers.

Smiled—continued.

"Have you forgot"—and here she smiled—
She sought in vain, the Woodman smiled;
And, in my spleen, I smiled that it was grey.

Smiled like the moro, and vanish'd into air."
Stretched forth his little arms and smil'd
And while the fearless infant smiled,
I looked at him and smiled, and smiled again,
O fostering Nature! I rejected—smiled
To cure his malady!" The Vicar smiled,
His suit to Fortune; and she smiled again
Or bounty tircs—and every face, that smiled
Smileless. Ingrates who wear a smileless face Smiles. Where sparkling eyes and breaking smiles illumine
But let us hence; for fair Locarno smiles
All nature smiles, and owns beneath her eyes
And often, viewing their sweet smiles, I sighed,
Tears down his cheek, or solitary smiles
[And she hath smiles to earth unknown;
Smiles, that with motion of their own
What heavenly smiles! O Lady mine,
Oh! had he but thy cheerful smiles,
The smiles, worth all the world to me.
Smiles hast thou, bright oaks of thy own;
She smiles as if a martyr's crown were won:
Smiles are beginning, like the beams of dawn.
To shoot and circulate; smiles have there been seen;
Thy loneliness; or shall those smiles be called
Praise, blame, love, kisses, tears, and smiles.
Behold her how She smiles to-day
Amid their smiles and dimples dignified—
Is Harmony, blest queen of smiles and tears,
And smiles that from their birthplace ne'er shall flee
Soft smiles, by human kindness bred!
But smiles—the hesitating shaft to free;
And smiles, that deared to take their place,
Aeek filial smiles, upon thy face,
With natural smiles of greeting. Bells are dumb;
Just limits; but yon Tower, whose smiles adorn
Of hope, and smiles on you with cheer sublime.
Whose smiles, diffused o'er land and sea,
Whose day departs in pomp, returns with smiles—
And jound smiles, and toward the lowly Grange

And smiles, fond efforts of distress
Every face in the village is dimpled with smiles.
Its Sister-twin survives, whose smiles afford
By playful smiles, (alas! too oft
Inspired—works potent over smiles and tears.
Pleas'd thro' the dusk their breaking smiles to view,
And smiles to Solitude and Want impart.
Hence shall we seek where fair Locarno smiles
With cheeks o'erspread by smiles of baleful glow,
Where Persecution decks with ghastly smiles
What Genius smiles on yonder food?
And often looking round was moved to smiles
Smiles of good-will from faces that he knew
Would push this censure farther;—for, if smiles
She smiles, including in her wide embrace
Stung by his toward thoughts, and by the smiles
His gentle manners: and his peaceful smiles,
Reason, and, with that reason, smiles and tears;
Smiling. A little moment past so smiling!
Appears a scanty plot of smiling green,
Smiling in sleep— A pretty feat of Fancy!
Ay, thought the Vicar, smiling to himself,
Look round, and by their smiling seem to say,
Of April, smiling high in upper air?
Though smiling on the last hill-top!
A smiling sea, and he what I have been:
Peeps out a little speck of smiling green,
Ev'n here Content has fix'd her smiling reign.
Fair smiling lights the purpled bills illumine!
Her seas yet smiling, her oceans happy vales;
The rainbow smiling on the faded storm;
To trust the smiling aspect of this fair
His little smiling Grandchild, were no more.
To his Compatriot, smiling as he spake;
Lo! Smiling Nature's lavish hand

Smilingly. Leans smilingly, and sinks into a perfect rest.
Hark, how thy Country triumphs!—Smilingly
A Pair who smilingly sat side by side,

Months and years went smilingly;
Sinks smilingly forsworn.
Smirk. The VANGUARD—you may smirk and smile,
Smit. With wonder smit by its transparency,
Smite. Whether thy punctual visitations smite.
Smites. Of being, smites with irresistible pain,
From that young Stream, that smites the throbbing
rocks,
Union not sad, when sunny daybreak smites
That smites this tiny sea,
Stumping upon a cane with which he smites,
He who with pocket-hammer smites the edge

Smithfield. But chiefly to Smithfield he loves to repair.

That Smithfield should sustain so vast a loss, . . .
Smiting. Smiting with fury; and a deeper dread
Smiting, as if each moment were their last.

The winds of March, smiting insidiously,
Smitten. See Fresh-smitten, Heart-smitten, Joy-smitten, Self-smitten, Soul-smitten, Terror-smitten.

Was smitten with a startling sound.
Are smitten by a silver ray;
He trembles, smitten to the core
And nod their helmets, smitten by the wing
While, smitten by a lofty moon,
It rages;—some are smitten in the field—
Smitten to the heart, and sad.

Was smitten by the great ones of the world,
With sharper grief is Yarrow smitten,
Smitten, the precipices rang aloud;
Is smitten thence with an unnatural taint,
Amid the moving pageant, I was smitten
For the sun's light. The soul when smitten thus
A cloud of mist, that smitten by the sun
Smitten with perilous fever. In disease
By the strong sunbeams smitten. Like a mast
Smitten while all the promises of life
Hastily smitten by a fever's force;

Was smitten, and poured forth a quenching stream,
Smoke. See Battle-smoke, Charcoal-smoke.
Last evening sight, the cottage smoke, no more,
A cowering shape half hid in curling smoke!
The breathing pestilence that rose like smoke,
That rises up like smoke.
That in some other way you smoke

Amid the smoke of cities did you pass
It thundered down, with fire and smoke,
And the smoke and respiration,
Green to the very door; and wreaths of smoke
Nor would permit the thin smoke to escape,
Watching the twilight smoke of cot or grange,
The cock that crows, the smoke that curls, that sound
Whose smoke, forth-issuing whence and how it may,
The smoke, and mounts in silver wreaths.
Again with frankincense the altars smoke
Blasts of tempestuous smoke—wherewith he tries
Dost Thou prepare, whose sign will be the smoke
Its busy smoke in social wreaths,
Let them smoke, let them burn, not a straw would he care!
And curling from the trees the cottage smoke.
By silver'd wreaths of quiet charcoal smoke,
Bead o'er the smoke that curls beneath the rocks.
Of city smoke, by distance ruralised;
Yon azure smoke betrays the lurking town;
Smoke round him, as from hill to hill he hies,
Breathed up its smoke, an image of his ghost
Like smoke, along the level of the blast,
Want due consistence; like a pillar of smoke,
Below, from which the curling smoke ascends.
O'er which the smoke of unremitting fires
Yet not for meek of heart. The smoke ascends
Bedimmed with smoke, in wreaths voluminous,
Yon curling smoke from the grey cot below,

Smokeless. All bright and glittering in the smokeless air.
Behold a smokeless sky,
The smokeless chimney-top.— All unembowered
Smoke-wreath. Far earlier, ere one smoke-wreath had risen

Smoking. 'Mid smoking woods gleams hid from morning's ray
He turned, while rain poured down smoking on every side,
Together smoking in the sun's slant beam,
The smoking steam-boat eager in pursuit,
One chimney smoking and its azure wreath,

—Thy lake, mid smoking woods, that blue and grey
Fall on his shifting hut that gleams mid smoking
dew;

Smoky. Swinging from the smoky ceiling
In smoky cabins, from a mother's tongue—
Smooth. Tip their smooth ridges with a softer ray;
From the green vale of Urseren smooth and wide
And laughed so loud it seemed that the smooth sea
Life stretched before me smooth as some broad way
O'er rough and smooth she trips along,
" On Kilve's smooth shore, by the green sea,
" For here are woods, hills smooth and warm
Rock the cradle of joy, smooth the death-bed of strife.

Runs with speed more smooth and fine,
And in this smooth and open dell
Grinding through rough and smooth our way;
Along the smooth unpathwayed plain,
Not undiversified though smooth and even;
But your smooth motions suit a peaceful aim;
The smooth transparent skin,
With her smooth tones and discords just,

Smooth—continued.

Towards the smooth river deep and clear. . .
A fair smooth pathway you discern,
Smooth fields, white sheets of water, and pure sky;
Smooth way; and I beheld the face of one
Which, strewn with snow smooth as the sky can
shed,
That, rough or smooth, is full of change,
Smooth, graceful, tender, or sublime—
His hed perchance was yon smooth mound
In men of low degree, all smooth pretence!
From the smooth meadow-ground, serene and still!
Through the rocks our passage smooth;
From the smooth breast of gay Winandermere?
In Pisa's Campo Santo, the smooth floor
Expanding; and, along the smooth shore curved
Smooth space of turf which from the guardian fort
Murmuring but one smooth story for all years,
And, as they traversed the smooth hrime,
The Birds with progress smooth and swift
Which tiny Elves impressed;—on that smooth stage
Deep into patient Earth, from whose smooth breast it came!

Checking the stream, make a pool smooth and clear
Majestic Duddon, over smooth flat sands
Rocks, rivers, and smooth lakes more clear than glass
Thence marching southward smooth and free
For Souls whose doom is fixed! The way is smooth
While his free Barge skims the smooth flood along,
Or smooth his front, our world is in his hand!
If good can smooth the way to evil choice,
And in our caverns smooth thy ruffled wings!"
Can link with desolation. Smooth and green,
On the smooth bottom of this clear bright sea,
Her brow was smooth and white:
And down the smooth descent
Smooth passions, smooth discourse, and joyous
thoughts!
Of some smooth ridge, whose brink precipitous
Along a channal smooth and deep,
On the smooth surface of this naked stone!
And the smooth green of many a pendent field,

Is smooth as clear, save where with dimples small
So smooth was all within, air-proof,
Had placed his staff across the broad smooth stone
Thus thirty smooth years did he thrive on his farm:
And nappins of smooth texture, finely shorn.
A smooth free course along the watery gleam,
On his smooth breast the shadow of those towers
Among the smooth green turf. Through half the night,

At evening, when with pencil, and smooth slate
A holy scene!—Along the smooth green turf
In wantonness of heart, through rough and smooth
On the smooth platform, whether skill prevailed
Smooth housekeeping within, and all without
That this first transit from the smooth delights
Their smooth enthrallment; " but the heart was full,
Wore in old time. Her smooth domestic life,
From smooth Cam's silent waters: had we met,
Upon the smooth flat stones: the Nurse is here,
Smooth life had flock and shepherd in old time,
Smooth-lie had herdsman, and his snow-white herd
A smooth rock wet with constant springs) was seen
And smooth as marble or a waveless sea,
A separate record. Over the smooth sands
Smooth task! for words find easy way, inspired
Trackless and smooth, or paced the bare white roads
In one perpetual progress smooth and bright?—
Upon smooth Quantock's airy ridge we roved
Smooth words he had to whittle simple souls;
O'er the smooth surface of an ample crag,
A fragment, like an altar, flat and smooth:
On their smooth surface, evidence was none
Smooth and commodious; as a stately deck
Of smooth and solemnized complacencies,
Even at the worst, a smooth stream of content,
Whether their course be turbulent or smooth,
Was graceful, when it pleased him, smooth and still
" Smooth verse, inspired by no unlettered Muse,"
For the smooth glazings of the indulgent world;
On the smooth playground of the village-school?
Covered the smooth hue slabs of mountain-stone
Smooth task, with his compared, whose mind could string,

Conciliatory manners and smooth speech;
And that smooth slope from which the dwelling rose,
Sails in smooth weather by the placid coast
Between his hands he holds a smooth blue stone,
Fraught with their burthens; and a way as smooth
Launched from our hands the smooth stone skinned the lake;
Of the smooth lake, in compass seen!—far off,
Smooth summer dreams, old favours of the place,
Tempt the smooth water, or the gleaming ice,
Smoothed. Christian meekness smoothed for all the path of life,
And, smoothed by Nature's skill,
While Grasmere smoothed her liquid plain
A canopy, is smoothed for thy repose!"

Snow—continued.

When snow lies heavy upon the land."
Like a patch of April snow—
Protect them; and the eternal snow that daunts
A brilliant crown of everlasting snow,
That keeps, till June, December's snow;
These swan-like specks of mountain snow,
And quick words round him fall like flakes of snow.
And there, at night, in frost and snow,
Of snow and hoar-frost, spreads her fruits and her flowers,
Proud of the varying arch and moveless form of snow.
Your young on winter's winding sheet of snow.
In the deep snow the mighty ruin drown'd,
No bread to feed him, and the snow his drink,
Bright stars of ice and azure worlds of snow,
Cold from necessity's continual snow,
Glad Day-light laughs upon his top of snow,
Prolonged till sprinklings of autumnal snow
Strewn on the frozen snow. And when the spring
Of fury; or, while snow is at the door,
With new-fallen snow, if from the sullen north
On those high peaks, the first autumnal snow,
And mountains white with everlasting snow!
Their epitaph, which rain and snow
Not dark, nor yet enlightened, but by snow
In times of heavy snow." She then began
Snow-clad. Of green isles widening on each snow-clad height;
Through heavy swamp, or over snow-clad height—
Thou, who upon those snow-clad Heights hast poured
So lately, journeying toward the snow-clad Alps.
Snow-dissolving. Her Pioneer, the snow-dissolving Sun.
Snowdon. Rise, from the top of Snowdon. To the door
Snowdon's. O'er naked Snowdon's wide aerial waste;
On Snowdon's wilds, amid Brigantian coves,
Lay beautiful on Snowdon's sovereign brow.
Snowdrop. Chaste Snowdrop, voturious harbinger of Spring,
Thee with the welcome Snowdrop I compare;
As snowdrop on an infant's grave.
Snow-drops. With living snow-drops? circlet bright!
Like these frail snowdrops that together cling,
Bloom'd with the snow-drops of Man's narrow bed,
Planting my snowdrops among winter snows:
Snow-fad. And snow-fad torrents, which the blaze of noon
Snow-muffled. Snow-muffled winds, and all is dark, Snows. See Mountain-snows.
Alike in whelming snows and roaring waves.
Food for his beasts in time of winter snows.
Through hollow snows and rivers wide.
The snows dissolved, and genial Spring returned.
A small Cascade fresh swolv'n with snows
Poor pilot I, by snows confounded,
A flaky weight of winter's purest snows!
Wrap in a winding-sheet of spotless snows!
"Haste I and above Siberian snows
By Christmas snows, by visitation bleak
Lone Flower, hemmed in with snows, and white as they
In pomp that fades not; everlasting snows;
He rules 'mid winter snows, and when
And o'er the eternal snows, like Echo, bound;
White as the snows of Appennine
Snows, torrents;—to the region's utmost bound,
Now that their snows must melt, their herbs and flowers
Go, seek, when Christmas snows discomfort bring,
Struggle with frosty air and winter snows;
Hiding their fiery clouds, their rocks, and snows;
The fodder of his herds in winter snows.
With panting breast, now pale as winter snows,
Planting my snowdrops among winter snows:
What spring and autumn, what the winter snows,
The heart with firmer grasp! Your snows and streams
On unknown snows, a spot unknown.
At the first falling of the autumnal snows,
Snow-storm. The heifer comes in the snow-storm, and here
Snow-tracks. The snow-tracks of my friends I see,
Snow-white. A snow-white mountain-lamb with a Maiden at its side.

Snow-white—continued.

Though fed with dainties from the snow-white hand
In snow-white splendour,—think again; and,
taught
Or round the naked table, snow-white deal,
I saw the snow-white church upon her hill
Smooth life had herdsman, and his snow-white herd
Their snow-white curtains hung in decent folds;
A snow-white ram, and in the crystal flood
Snowy. More high, the snowy peaks with hues of rose.
Was of Kirkoswald—many a snowy winter
They followed from the snowy hank
—My fire is dead, and snowy white
Sweep their length of snowy line;
From snowy peak and cloud, attune
Of distant mountains and their snowy tops,
Snug. We build up the fire, we're snug and warm;
By this time she was snug within,
"Thy wife and child are snug and warm,
And snug as birds in leafy arbour,
In a snug Cove on this our favoured Isle,
Snug as a child that hides itself in sport
Snugly. Lie snugly in a pod, the pod must then
So snugly for that crimson stain,
Snuggness. In snuggness may compare.
So. (Partial list.)
Upon the coast of Cyprus? Yes, even so,
Forgotten? have my warnings passed so quickly
I thank you; but, a resting-place so near,
Could find delight to nurse itself so strangely,
Who has so practised on the world's cold sense,
And One so fair, it goes against my heart
Alas! I creep so slowly. Never fear;
Which pleased him so, that he was hushed at once:
As if my heart would burst; and so I left him.
The moon shone clear, the air was still, so still
The deed is done—if you will have it so—
And nowhere upon earth is place so fit
Drops deadened from a roof so thick with leaves.
And will he so through every change of fortune
Why so? a roofless rock had been a comfort,
And never heard a sound so terrible.
Perchance you think so now? I cannot do it:
Work on her nature, and so turn compassion,
It is so meek, his countenance so venerable.
And said, 'My Father he will have it so.'
A noise at midnight does so frighten me
Wanderer! that stoop'so low, and com'st so near
Yes, lovely Moon! if thou so mildly bright
Queen of the stars!—so gentle, so benign,
To be our guide unto thy Son so dear.
" My knowledge is so weak, O blissful Queen!
Even so fare I; and therefore, I thee pray,
For he so young to Christ did reverence.
And unto him declare why men sing so;
The sweetness of Christ's Mother pierc'd so
That with him is, or thinketh so to be,
So that they burn forth in great martyrdom.
I heard the lusty Nightingale so sing,
And Cuckoo, do thou so, by my advice.
So diverse in his wilfulness is he.
Not one word have I now, I am so forlorn,—
And so methought I started up anon,
For there is not so false a bird as she.
So loudly, that I with that song awoke.
So piteously, and with so dead a hne,
Singing so well, so goodly, and so clear,
Dread Lord! so fearful when provoked, thine ire
And thence does come this air which is so sweet,
Who are so restless in your wisdom, ye
So low as to be scorned without a sin;
—So in the eye of Nature let him die!
So lived I, and repined not at such fate:
Soar. It may soar with the eagle and brood with the dove,
Type of the wise who soar, but never roam;
Sit hiltie and happy; bees that soar for bloom,
Shall soar, and as a hypocrite can stoop,
Like those aspirants let us soar—our aim,
An Eagle that could neither wail nor soar.
To quit the beaten track of life, and soar
Than when we soar."—The Other, not displeas'd,
And who rather dive than soar, whose pains
In spiral circles mount aloft, and soar
Soared. She soared—and I awoke, struggling in vain to follow.
Or Bird that soared with Ganymede;
Soaring. Constant as a soaring lark,
Soaring on undaunted wing,
How soaring Mortals glide between
The soaring eagle's curv'd beak;
A soaring spirit is their prime delight.
The soaring lark is blest as proud
Soarings. Reproved his soarings of the night,
Soars. Love stoops as fondly as he soars.
And sometimes with ambitious wing that soars
Beyond the visible world she soars to seek

Soft as a guiding star that cheers, but cannot burn."
Soft as the dying throbb of the lyre
As seemed, their soft self-satisfying light
If the soft voice he throws about
Recalling now, with descendant soft
Of weed and sapling, along soft green turf
This moss-lined shed, green, soft, and dry,
Induced a soft and slumbrous dream,
Is it to teach her own soft lore,
Soft darkness o'er its latest gleams is stealing;
Green pasture and the soft warm air
Soft and cool to way-worn feet;
A soft eye-music of slow-waving boughs,
As soft almost and deep as her cerulean eye.
Soft clouds, the whitest of the year,
With a soft inland murmur.—Once again
A soft and tender Heroine
Painted more soft and fair as they descend,
By soft reflection—grateful to the sky,
As pure a sunshine and as soft a gale
But air breathed soft that day,
To the soft murmur of the vagrant Bee.
And in due time the soft spontaneous shock,
To hear the earth's soft murmuring
The soft blue sky did never melt
The witchery of the soft blue sky!
A scene of soft and lovely hue!
Upon this soft and fertile nook?
Her only pilot the soft breeze, the boat
Than those soft scenes through which thy childhood
strayed,
Soft as the Dorchawk's to a distant ear,
Soft is the music that would charm for ever;
On the soft west-wind and his frolic peers;
With shady night. Soft airs, from shrub and
flower,
His lenient touches, soft as light that falls,
To rouse the dawn, soft gales shall speed thy wing,
Speak—though this soft warm heart, once free to hold
Soft smiles, by human kindness bred!
The voice was soft, and she who spake
Nor by soft Peace adopted; though, in place
Built up by soft seducing harmonies;
Or the soft breezes from the Atlantic sea,
Knit the blithe dance upon the soft green grass;
When the soft hand of sleep had closed the latch
Breathed from a soft and lonely instrument,
Soft notes, awful as the omen
Floats the soft cadence of the church-tower bells;
Of nun-like females, with soft motion, glide!
By one soft trickling tear that stole
With intermingling motions soft and still,
Roused into fury, murmur a soft tune
Nor to her was the dance of soft pleasure unknown:
Saw ye the soft yet awful veil
When, from the soft couch of her sleeping Lover,
At length a Spirit more subdued and soft
Soft breezes fanning your rough brows—the might
'Mid new-born blossoms that soft airs were wooing,
Its murmur how soft! as it falls down the steep,
Mingling with thy soft breath! That morning too,
Soft was the wind, that landward blew;
And that soft rustling of invisible wings
If this be sleep, how soft! if death, how fair!
Allowed a soft and flower-like breath,
Fed by the stream with soft perpetual showers,
Than a soft record, that, whatever fruit
And countenanced like a soft cerulean sky,
For her companionship; here dwells soft ease:
Wafing your Charge to soft Parthenope!
Love wound his way by soft approach,
—But, as soft gales dissolve the dreary snow,
—When soft!—the dusky trees between,
Soft and silent as a dream,
In soft and breeze-like visitings,
A soft and lulling sound is heard
With a soft spring-day of holy,
Moved gently in her soul's soft sleep;
In soft repose he comes. Within his cell,
In the soft heaven of a translucent pool;
And soft Italia feels renewed alarms;
To a soft breeze, in lowly adoration.
With low soft murmur, like a distant bee,
By тнѣм who blessed the soft and happy gale

Softened—continued.

Softened till it becomes a gift of mercy.
Softened her pangs, and reconciled the child
So that it shall be softened, and our loves
Was softened down into a vernal tone.
Was softened into feeling, soothed, and tamed.
Thy fierce beginnings, softened and subdued.
A softened remembrance of sorrow and pain,
That soft'en'd from the water-head descend.
On Zutphen's plain; or where with soft'en'd gaze
'Soft'en'd the terrors of her awful mien.'
Of mighty names was softened down and seem'd
Was welcome, softened, if not solemnised.
With softened spirit, even when it condemn'd.
A softened roar; or murmur; and the sound
At every moment softened in its course
His feelings of aversion softened down;
Was into meekness softened and subdued;
Hath softened that obduracy, and made
In softened perspective; and more than once
Softening. Softening their inbred dignity austere—
(Softening that bright effulgence by degrees)
By Nature, softening and concealing,
Then Arts, which still had drawn a softening grace
That, softening objects, sometimes even
Softening the toils and pains that have not ceased
That, while it only spreads a softening charm
All softening, humanising, hallowing powers,
But why no softening thought of gratitude,
Softens. And its own twilight softens the whole scene,
Softens his heart, till from his eyes outwell
Softens its evening uproar towards a close
Softer. Tip their smooth ridges with a softer ray;
Yet are thy softer arts with power indued
And softer than if it were covered with silk.
Softer than Nature's self could mould.
With warmer suns and softer gales,
But soon they move with softer pace;
On as we move, a softer prospect opens,
Boldly and bear away to softer life;
Softest. The streams with softest sound are flowing,
The leaves that make the softest bed;
Spring parts the clouds with softest airs,
The softest Nursling of a gorgeous palace
Fine as the mother's softest plumes allow:
To stillet mood of softest skies,
The fairest, softest, liveliest of them all!
With its softest summer sound:
Her inmost, softest, tenderest harmonies;
In admonitions of thy softest voice!
Of softest music some responsive place.
With their softest whispers vouch,
The softest breeze to fairest flowers gives birth:
The bed we give him, though of softest down;
Their fairest, softest, happiest influence.
The idle breath of softest pipe attuned
Softliest. Her froward mood, and softliest reprehend; Softly. Time softly treads; throughout the landscape breathes
Softly he stroked the child, who lay outstretched
Have I been waiting for him. Well, but softly,
It must be ended!—Softly; do not rouse him;
But softly! we must look a little nearer.
Past softly, leading in the Boy; and while from
roof to floor,
Softly, slowly: one might think,
"It is my Husband," softly said
That downy prowl, and softly cleaves
Softly she treads, as if her foot were loth
That with moist virtue softly cleaves
Tints softly with each other blended,
No ghost more softly ever trod;
Softly rounded through this rocky glade;
The Shepherd, looking eastward, softly said,
Softly!—To save the contrite, Jesus bled.
From rapture, lying softly on her breast!
Provokes no echoes, but must softly tread;
Softly responsive; and, attuned to all.
Thy course and sport around thee softly fan—
And softly sleeps within the thread she spins.
Or softly stealing into modest shade.
And softly touched; but, to his princely cheer
To whom the words were softly said,
Drew softly near her, and more near—
Faces softly, or makes halt,
Softly she glides, another home to seek.
The innocent Procession softly moves:—
And, through the cottage-lattice softly peeping,
Softly emhosing the timid light!
At eve; how softly then
Softly as morning vapours glide.
He softly creeps—his Goody Blake;
Blew softly o'er the russet heath,
One word he softly uttered,
The softly flowing Leine,
—In rugged arms how softly does it lie,
And softly creeping, like a breath of air,
Softly accompanied the tuneful harp,
Softly and lightly from a passing cloud,
May creep (I wish that they would softly creep)

Softly-gliding. Of fluttering Sylphs, and softly-gliding

Fays,
Softly-moulded. Bright, speckless, as a softlymoulded tear.
Softly-stealing. Did only softly-stealing hours Softness. A softness still and holy
To more than infant softness, giving me
Of female softness shall his life be full,
Of aspect, with aerial softness clad.
Soft-paced. Attended by the soft-paced Doe;
Soil. His soul was knit to this his native soil,
Move where the blasted soil is not unworn.
The casual treasure from the furrowed soil.
Upturned the soil;
Here, on our native soil, we breathe once more.
But 'tis a chosen soil, where sun and breeze
Ye children of a Soil that doth advance
Rising like water from the soil, to fiod
Fixed in the depths of this courageous soil:
The upturned soil receives the hopeful seed—
On that offensive soil, like waves upon a thousand
shores.
Hath cherished on a healthful soil;
To enslave whole nations on their native soil;
A barren and ungrateful soil.
Of villain-service, passing with the soil
In the best soil of gospel truth, the Tree,
Methinks that I could trip o'er heaviest soil,
I press thee, through the yielding soil, with pride.
Though fattered slave be none, her floors and soil
And saw, thereafter, on the soil of France
Just serves to show how delicate a soil
Before this rugged soil was tilled,
We might have fed upon a fatter soil
Upon that meagre soil, helped out by talk
The soil of common life, was, at that time,
The hardened soil, and knots of withered grass:
Had sprung, like those bright creatures, from the soil
In a soft clime encouraging the soil
Or soil endured a transfer in the mart
And, 'mid the wild weeds of a rugged soil,
Who does not love his native soil?—he prized
The mutual aptitude of seed and soil
This favoured Laod, or sunshine warms her soil.
And, in the centre of a world whose soil
He gives it—the boon produce of a soil
By useful habits, to a fitter soil.
Measuring the soil beneath their happy feet
Naked, and coloured like the soil, the feet
That when we stand upon our native soil,
Of those who once were vassals of her soil,
For all the children whom her soil maintains.
Of numbers crowded on their native soil,
Soiling. Or to be trailed along the soiling earth;
Sojourn. See After-sojourn.
When I depart, for brief is my sojourn—
We sojourn stunned by Ocean's ceaseless roar;
Shall sojourn in this fair domain;
Then know I well that she would not sojourn.
Prepared to sojourn in a pleasant town,
We sojourn, have I lifted up my soul,
They came, to sojourn here in solitude,
Sojourned. Once in a lonely hamlet I sojourned
Pass from their Master, sojourned here to guard
The father sojourned in a distant land)
Sojourner. A discontented sojourner: now free,
Have I been now a sojourner on earth,
I saw them in their rest, a sojourner
Sojourners. Sojourners in my father's house, he died, Sojourning. Sojourning a few days, I visited
"Though now sojourning there, he, like myself,
Sol. When Sol was destined to endure Solace. Fond Youth! that mournful solace now must pass
Loving and liking are the solace of life,
He finds no solace in his course;
Should find brief solace there, as I have found.
One solace yet remains for us who came
Farewell the solace of the vagrant reed!
Beloved Wife? such solace to impart
Find solace which a busy world disdains.
Hope of the dawn and solace of the night,
The solace heads and masses yield,
A solace she might borrow
From hence my hope and solace forth did pass.
A trembling solace to her widowed Lord.
Such solace find we for our loss;
Some solace under weight of royal care,
For solace by dim light of monkish lamps;
That doth not yield a solace to my grief:
Find solace—knowing what we have learnt to know,
Or solace, varying as the seasons change.
One only solace—that he had espoused
In Providence, for solace and support,
For noontide solace on the summer grass,
Yet, by the solace of his own pure thoughts
Solace and self-excuse, had sometimes urged
Excuse and solace for her own defects;

Sollett. But why solicit more than sight could bear,
Solicit a Memnonian strain ;
Or to solicit knowledge of events,
Broken with all mankind, solicit death.
Solicit our regard ; but when I think
These helps solicit ; and a steadfast seat
Solicitation. By slow solicitation, earth to yield
Solicited. Which the warm sun solicited, and earth
Soliciting. His treasures forth, soliciting regard Solitudes. Or the solitudes of love can do !
Solid. Peace ye deserve ; and may the solid good,
Dust for oblivion ! To the solid ground
As stretches a blue har of solid cloud
Clouds, lingering yet, extend in solid bars
A solid refuge for distress—
Meet on the solid ground of waking life.
Seems firm as solid crystal, breathless, clear,
Retainers won away from solid good ;
The solid mountains shone, bright as the clouds,
Solid and light, short-sighted and profound ;
From time to time, the solid boards, and makes them
And left a solid hirthright to the State,
Far, far beyond, the solid vapours stretched,
Ocean and earth, the solid frame of earth
More solid than the gilded clouds of heaven ?
And phantoms from the crags and solid earth
And learning's solid dignity ; though born
Give us, for our abstractions, solid facts ;
Done truly there, or felt, of solid good
Solidities. And the solidities of mortal pride,
Solitary. The solitary heifer's deepened low ;
That solitary man disturb their reign,
To solitary meditation ;—now
Or on some vast and solitary plain
And therefore chose this solitary Moor,
Pressing upon his solitary heart.
As we approached, a solitary crow
The solitary child.
And sings a solitary song
He to the solitary church-yard turned ;
Tears down his cheek, or solitary smiles
To some remote and solitary place,
Rouse him : but in those solitary shades
In the broad open eye of the solitary sky,
Strikes a solitary sound.
That solitary bird
By solitary Benjamin !
This solitary Tree ! a living thing
A solitary tear
Shine on thee in thy solitary walk ;
Solitary, clear, profound,
And to the solitary fawn
Come to regions solitary,
Which solitary Nature feeds
In many a solitary place,
A solitary Ass
In solitary ward or cell,
Along this solitary dell,
Upon that solitary waste.
Aerial Rock—whose solitary brow
When solitary Nature condescends
That solitary word—to separate
Yon solitary Highland Lass !
Two solitary greetings have I heard,
Pent in, a Tyrant's solitary Thrall :
Looks down—the bright and solitary Moon,
A solitary Wolf-dog, ranging on Lost Youth ! a solitary Mother ;
A solitary Doe !
It was a solitary mound ;
In his wanderings solitary :
And a solitary Maid ;
And treads in solitary ways.
His solitary course maintain ;
Where is the solitary One ?
Or where the solitary shepherd roves
By striking out a solitary spark,
Our tainted nature's solitary boast ;
Though doomed to tread in solitary ways,
Loves it, while there in solitary peace
Was formed between the solitary pair,
Their solitary way ;
He travels on, a solitary Man,
He travels on, a solitary Man ;
Among the farms and solitary huts,
In childhood, from this solitary Being,
—She solitary through the desert drear
Where solitary forms illum'd stray
I heard among the solitary hills
Stopped short ; yet still the solitary cliffs
By solitary study, to uphold
Crowd seems it, solitary hill ! to thee,
A solitary object and sublime,
A solitary, who with vain conceits
Thy solitary steps ; and on the brink
Pipe solitary anguish ; or must hang
In solitude and solitary thought
Her solitary infant cried aloud ;
The Solitary, with a faint sarcastic smile

Solitary—continued.

Was silent ; save the solitary clock
Who to the Solitary turned, and said,
The Solitary lifted toward the hills
The Solitary by these words was touched
One voice—the solitary raven, flying
Our seats ; and thus the Solitary spake,
The Solitary, "in the life of man,
—Alone within her solitary hut ;
"Yes !" said the Solitary with a smile
Then to the Solitary turned, and spake.
The Solitary answered : "Such a Form
Of pain and grief?" the Solitary asked,
"Tis strange," observed the Solitary, "strange
"True," said the Solitary, "be it far
The last hath ceased its solitary knoll.
(Full eight years past) the solitary prop
When he had passed, the Solitary spake ;
By a brook-side or solitary tarn,
The pining Solitary turned aside ;
And there—" At this the Solitary shrunk
Dropping from every mind, the Solitary
"Then," said the Solitary, "by what force
Of that wild spot, the Solitary said
Was reached, the Solitary checked his steps ;
The fancies of a solitary man.
And we a solitary pair like them.
Solitary's. Herewith he grasped the Solitary's hand,
—I noted that the Solitary's cheek
Solitude. And solitude prepare the soul for heaven ;
To soothe and cheer the poor man's solitude.
And there are those fond thoughts which Solitude,
In solitude.—Stranger ! these gloomy boughs
About you still ; you talk of solitude—
And you will walk in solitude among them.
Shall prey upon the tallest. Solitude !—
The Eagle lives in Solitude ! Even so,
The wounded deer retires to solitude,
And dies in solitude : all things but man,
All die in solitude. Mysterious God,
Is all-sufficient ; solitude to her
We leave you here in solitude to dwell
That occupied his days in solitude
It is in truth an utter solitude ;
Can ever be a solitude to me,
A silent Poet ; from the solitude
The solitude of Binnoorie !
The solitude of Binnoorie.
The solitude of Binnoorie.
The solitude of Binnoorie.
The solitude of Binnoorie.
The solitude of Binnoorie.
Upon the pensive solitude,
Stillness, solitude, and calm,
Which is the hills of solitude ;
Solitude, pain of heart, distress, and poverty.
If solitude, or fear, or pain, or grief,
With self-sufficing solitude.
That hath her six wetas' solitude beguiled
But, nursed in mountain solitude
Where Solitude with Silence paired stops short
Wandering in solitude, and evermore
Are privileged Innates of deep solitude ;
In solitude, and utter peace ;
In solitude her bitter feeling ;
Had, in her solitude, been cheered.
The hour of moonlight solitude.
When, left in solitude, erewhile . . .
Of solitude, with love of science strong,
Have come to him in solitude.
The utmost solitude of age to face,
In solitude, with every want
Disturb its solitude profound.
In utter solitude.—But he had left
He sat, and ate his food in solitude ;
And while in that vast solitude to which
And smiles to Solitude and Want impart.
O ever pleasing Solitude,
There hung a darkness, call it solitude
In solitude, such intercourse was mice ;
In solitude the ruins of a shrine
The self-sufficing power of Solitude.
Hence life, and change, and beauty, solitude
Society made sweet as solitude
Yet slumbering, lay in utter solitude.
The truth in solitude, and, since the days
Yet could I only cleave to solitude
I smile, in many a mountain solitude
Far otherwise amid this rural solitude,
How gracious, how benign, is Solitude ;
Rested within an awful solitude ;
Of soul-affecting solitude appeared
I mused, and thought, and felt, in solitude.
Presiding ; and severest solitude
Ere I forsook the crowded solitude
That was delightful. Oft in solitude
Of solitude, and at the sight my friend
Lengthening in solitude their dreary line,
Musing in solitude, I oft perceive
In solitude returning, saw the hills
Busy in solitude and poverty.

Solitude—continued.

In solitude and solitary thought
Some other tenant of the solitude."
What stuff the Dwellers in a solitude,
Is garrulous; and solitude is apt
In solitude: and mutually addressed
Our solitude. It soothes me to perceive,
And, in the blank and solitude of things,
And solitude, that they do favour most,
The plaintive spirit of the solitude!
Alone or mated, solitude was not.
Of destitution;—solitude was not.
Spread like a sea, in boundless solitude,
The face which rural solitude might wear
Affronts the eye of Solitude, shall learn
A wedded pair in childless solitude.
In life, in death, what solitude can breed
Flows on in solitude. But, when the gloom
A solitude, unchosen, unexpressed;
From their shy solitude, to face the world,
While solitude permits the mind to feel;
No chasm, no solitude; from link to link
To breathe in solitude, above the host.
Of solitude, and silence in the sky?
They came, to sojourn here in solitude,
Say boldly then that solitude is not

Solitudes. Unfruitful solitudes, that seemed to upbraid
Let him be free of mountain solitudes;
Protracted among endless solitudes;
Gathered among those solitudes sublime
Companionless your awful solitudes!
Yet—compassed round by mountain solitudes,
Or Cambrian solitudes. A youth—(he bore
Hovering above these island solitudes,
Dispensed indeed to other solitudes,
Solstitial. In fierce solstitial power,
Solve. To solve the mystery, not in Nature's laws
Of forward youth—that scruples not to solve Solved. We've solved the riddle—Miscreant! Do
you,
Of all this world is solved, well may we envy
Have solved the elements, or analysed
So, by your records, may our doubts be solved;
Solway's. 'Mid the deep holds of Solway's mossy waste,
Sombre. The cypress waves her sombre plume
Of sombre foliage, seem to imitate
Sombrous. Where, mixed with graceful birch, the sombrous pine
Bright'ning with water-breaks the sombrous gill;
Bright'ning the cliffs between where sombrous pine,
Some. (Partial list.)
Of some dark deed to which in early life
A miniature; belike some Shepherd-boy,
Whom, but some few days past, I saw in Eskdale,
That haunt some barren island of the north,
Chancing to pass this way some six months gone,
Even to the shedding of some natural tears
Oswald, Oswald! This is some sudden seizure!
That will may put some fears into your heart.
Or on some vast and solitary plain
That horn again—'Tis some one of our Troop;
In some a hideous one—hem! shall I stop?
Shall on some lovely Alien set
Midway on some high hill, while father Time
Now against May shall have some stirring—whether
To joy, or be it to some mourning; never
Some, singing loud, as if they had complained;
Some with their notes another manner feigned;
And some did sing all out with the full throat.
Good Cuckoo, seek some other bush or brake,
Now, God of Love! thou help me in some wise,
Some scattered leaf, or marks which, in one track,
Long for some moments in a weary life
That not without some effort they behold
Perhaps some needful service of the State
May read them not without some bitter tears.
Than Fancy gave assurance of some work
An insight that to some sort he possesses,
That yet survive, a work, as some divine,
Pleased with some unpremeditated strains
Some pleasure from this offering of my love.
Each being has his office, lowly some Somebody. The sky owes somebody a grudge!
Something. 'Tis but a word and then—
Something is here
But vigorous Spirits look for something more
A comforter of sorrow;—there is something
Something I strike upon which turns my mind
And something shall be done which Memory
But there was something which most plainly said while he was muttering something about his Child—
I am sure I heard something breathing—
Something must stay to tell us of the rest.
Through his whole body something ran,
Not old, though something past its prime:
Something between a hindrance and a help;
It loosens something at my chest;
The Rock, like something starting from a sleep,

Something—continued.

And yet with something of a grace
Nor doubt that something of their spirit swayed
With something of angelic light.
A leading from above, a something given,
With something of a lofty utterance dress—
But something ails it now: the spot is curst.
Flying from something that he dreads than one
Of something far more deeply interfused,
And something also did my worth obtain;
By something cognizably shaped;
There's something in a flying horse,
There's something in a huge balloon;
Was something Peter did not like.
"Oh, mercy! something must be done,
Crossing the waters) doubt, and something dark,
To something purer and more exquisite
Star-high, and pointing still to something higher;
Like something fashioned in a dream;
But something deeper far than these:
Of something without place or bound;
That earth hath something yet to show,
This do I see; and something more;
A flash of something over-bright!
Hath something in it which the heart enjoys:—
Or something night and day between,
With something more propitious to high aims
Like something out of Ocean sprung
Enough, if something from our hands have power
Spurned it, like something that would stand
That Courage may find something to perform;
Have ever in them something of benign;
And still there's something in the world
With something, as the Shepherd thinks,
But something whispers to my heart
Something like the faintest breath
And the whole person. Words have something told
Through peopled Vales; yet something in the guise
For something more than dull content,
Of something void and vain;
And something, it might be, reserved for himself:
Who went something farther than others have gone,
Both of them speak of something that is gone!
And, even with something of a Mother's mind,
Is something that doth live,
Have something to pursue. And not alone,
Appeared like something in myself, a dream,
To something that resembles an approach
Yet to the memory something cleaves at last,
Yes, I had something of a subtler sense,
"Is something of more worth;" and at the word
These spread like day, and something in the shape
That wish for something loftier, more adorned,
Mixed something of stern mood, an under-thirst
And something evermore about to be.
Yet something of a girlish child-like gloss.
But something must have felt. Call ye these appearances—
Alone, that something of a better life
Descending slow with something heavenly fraught.
I looked for something that I could not find,
And rules, that they held something up to view
And intermixed with something, in my mind,
Of something false and weak, that could not stand
In simple childhood something of the base
Yes, something of the gradeur which invests
Whate'er was wanting, something had I gained,
And something that may serve to set in view
To human life, or something very near
To establish something of a leader's sway;
If grief be something hallowed and ordained,
And something also of his inner mind
Snuffed with something of a feminine hue;
Upon whose lapse, or error, something more
Was something which to mortal sense might sound
Wins help from something greater than herself—
Or something dearer still, if reason knows
Something that makes this individual Spot,
Yet is it something gained, it is in truth
Something on every side concealed from view,
In every quarter something visible,
For that end only; something must be done.
Something within which yet is shared by none,
Something which power and effort may impart, Sometimes. And sometimes, as from rock to rock she bounds,
Contentedly, yet sometimes self-accused,
For sometimes, in despite of my conviction,
Indeed we meant no harm; we lodge sometimes
Sometimes he'll hide in the cave of a rock,
At remembrance whereof my blood sometimes will flap;
Sometimes frowns, or seems to frown;
That sometimes I in these have loved
Sometimes with thoughts of very bliss!
Sometimes when he could find a leisure hour
There, by the Sheep-fold, sometimes was he seen
And sometimes, just as listening ends
To whom I sometimes in our idle talk

- And sometimes on a speck of visible earth, . . . 150 *When, to 14
 To the bleak winds she sometimes gives . . . 165 Parrot 37
 She suffered, as Immortals sometimes do; . . . 169 Lovelies Bleeding 18
 That comes and goes—will sometimes leap . . . 182 Waggoner 4, 211
 And then he sometimes interwove . . . 193 Ruth 85
 That sometimes there did intervene . . . 193 Ruth 140
 Sometimes, most earnestly, he said, . . . 194 Ruth 163
 Yet sometimes milder hours she knew, . . . 194 Ruth 199
 But, as it sometimes chanceth, from the night . . . 195 Resolution 22
 As a huge stone is sometimes seen to lie . . . 196 Resolution 57
 Catches sometimes from afar— . . . 209 *Yes, it 18
 And sometimes with ambitious wing that soars . . . 218 Recluse 1, 1, 207
 Land sometimes by the roving shepherd-swain . . . 219 This Height* 26
 By higher, sometimes humbler, guides, . . . 226 Present, 77
 Such place to me is sometimes like a dream . . . 260 *How sweet 10
 By waking ears have sometimes been received . . . 261 *I heard (alas 3

 May sometimes greet the strolling minstrel's harp, . . . 467 St. Bees 96
 With pleasure sometimes by this thought restrained—
 In sleep She sometimes walked abroad, . . . 476 Eden 12
 There's freedom, and sometimes a diffident stare . . . 479 Sonnamb. 82
 Yet sometimes, when the secret cup . . . 482 Character 13
 There sometimes doth a leaping fish . . . 486 Matthew 25
 That, softening objects, sometimes even . . . 491 Fidelity 25

 The smoothest seas will sometimes prove, . . . 550 Hermit's Cell 5, 5
 Will sometimes in the happiness of love . . . 551 If thou* in 3
 For sometimes, Lady! ere men pray to thee . . . 552 Prioresse 25
 Sometimes the ambitious Power of choice, mistaking
 Sometimes, more sternly moved, I would relate . . . 634 Prelude 1, 166
 Sometimes it suits me better to invent . . . 635 Prelude 1, 186
 That dwelt among them. Sometimes it hefell . . . 635 Prelude 1, 221
 Rememberable things; sometimes, 'tis true, . . . 641 Prelude 1, 317
 How sometimes, in the length of those half-years, . . . 643 Prelude 1, 388
 Even in this joyous time I sometimes felt . . . 644 Prelude 2, 95
 Sometimes embodied on a public road, . . . 664 Prelude 2, 133
 Even then I sometimes grieve for thee, O Man, . . . 664 Prelude 4, 367
 A thought is with me sometimes, and I say,—
 Then sometimes, in that silence while he hung . . . 665 Prelude 5, 4
 Almost to tears I sometimes could be sad . . . 666 Prelude 5, 29
 And sometimes rustling motions nigh at hand, . . . 671 Prelude 5, 381
 As sometimes to the best of feeble means . . . 674 Prelude 5, 547
 Misery not lightly passed, but sometimes scanned . . . 686 Prelude 6, 719
 Like others, I had skimmed, and sometimes read . . . 707 Prelude 8, 523
 Sometimes methought I saw a pair of knights . . . 708 Prelude 8, 648
 With that revered companion. And sometimes—
 That sometimes his religion seemed to me . . . 711 Prelude 9, 96
 And, sometimes—to my shame I speak—have need . . . 716 Prelude 9, 454
 And, sometimes—where the poor man held dispute . . . 716 Prelude 9, 465
 Leading sometimes an inexperienced child . . . 767 Excursion 1, 409
 Such as is sometimes seen, and hardly seen, . . . 772 Excursion 2, 755
 Not wished for; sometimes noticed with a sigh, . . . 783 Excursion 2, 770
 At those, which thy soft influence sometimes drew . . . 787 Excursion 3, 72
 And haply sometimes with articulate voice, . . . 795 Excursion 3, 811
 Wake sometimes to a noble restlessness— . . . 809 Excursion 4, 533
 And, doubtless, sometimes when the hair was shed . . . 812 Excursion 4, 548
 And sometimes, so relenting justice wills, . . . 814 Excursion 4, 753
 Shares with her species, nature's grace sometimes . . . 817 Excursion 4, 883
 'Twas Nature's will; who sometimes undertakes, . . . 835 Excursion 4, 1076
 All other progeny—doth sometimes lure, . . . 842 Excursion 5, 816
 With such memorials, I have sometimes felt, . . . 844 Excursion 6, 301
 Thus did a waking fancy sometimes lose . . . 848 Excursion 6, 396
 Hither she came; here stood, and sometimes knelt . . . 852 Excursion 6, 626
 Solace and self-excuse, had sometimes urged . . . 853 Excursion 6, 904
 I sometimes entertain, that haply bound . . . 871 Excursion 6, 986
 And sometimes injury, like a lamb enthralled . . . 871 Excursion 7, 909
 Then, with a sigh, sometimes I feel, as now, . . . 871 Excursion 7, 930
 Sometimes in act, and evermore in thought, . . . 886 Excursion 9, 170

 For now when they may hear the small birds' song,
 And she hath been before thee with her song ;
 For every wight eschews thy song to hear,
 For mine's a song that is both true and plain,—
 And I will sing one song, of many new,
 And then did she begin this song full high,
 So loudly, that I with that song awoke,
 And made a fitting soog, of words but few,
 As soon as he this song had thus sung through,
 Did I deliver this unfinished song ;
 Now, while the birds thus sing a joyous song,

I live and sing my idle songs
 Some notes prelusive, from the round of songs
 For which it pleased him in his songs to show
 His ears he closed to listen to the songs . . .
 Though not unused to mutter lonesome songs,
 Nor indigent of songs warbled from crowds
 The songs of spirits ! Nor had Fancy fed
 Were rife about him as the songs of birds . . .

Soon—continued.

And soon as I a glimpse of day espied,
 He may full soon go with an old man's hair.
 And soon as she had sung it to the end,
 That Cresida again thus send me soon.
 And shall, unless I see her soon in Troy.
 As soon as he his song had thus sung through,
 A Tuscan audience : but full soon was called.
 Full soon in sorrow did I weep,
 Foreholding not how soon he must depart ;
 Full soon thy Soul shall have her earthly freight,
 Soon shall the Light'n'ng hold before thy head.
 Soon follow'd by his hollow-parting oar,
 Soon fading " silent " from her upward eye,
 Soon flies the little joy to man allow'd,
 —Tho' Liberty shall soon, indignant, raise
 —Soon fades her cheek, her blushing beauties fly,
 But soon upon her breast he sunk—to wake no
 more.

Soon after, this man's Ghost unto him came
 Will pass so soon from human memory ;
 Was soon detranded, and the banded host
 But from this awful hurthen I full soon
 The famous brook, who, soon as he was boxed
 Our cottage door, and evening soon brought on
 Soon ended, and together on we passed
 Too soon, while yet the very flash and gleam
 Of Chamouny stretched far below, and soon
 Was soon dislodged. Downwards we hurried fast,
 Of Gravedona with this hope ; but soon
 To rush and disappear. But soon broke forth
 Returned from that excursion, soon I bade
 With this last relic, soon itself to fall,
 Or spirit that full soon must take her flight.
 That would engulf him soon in the ravenous sea—
 With scrupulous care ; but these restrictions soon
 A gift that was come rather late than soon.
 That Liberty, and Life, and Death would soon
 But said to me, " My head will soon lie low ; "
 Hard by, soon after that fell deed was wrought,
 The mountain-side. The mist soon girt us round,
 At large and unrestrained, nor damped too soon
 From hope that thou art near, and wilt be soon
 Far other lot, yet with good hope that soon
 With slackened footsteps I advanced, and soon
 Dies with him, or is changed ; and very soon
 But this endured not ; his good humour soon
 To me soon tasteless. In my own despite,
 Then, when the body, soon to be consigned
 It were your lot to dwell, would soon become
 All night the storm endured : and, soon as help
 Soon showed itself : he lingered three short weeks ;
 And soon the Tenaot of that lonely vale
 —With even as brief a warning— and how soon,
 Hath overpowered his forefathers, and soon
 That my particular current soon will reach
 Who shared at first the illusion ; but was soon
 But soon his thoughts returned upon themselves,
 Listened intensely ; and his countenance soon
 In whose dark vaults my own shall soon be laid,
 A general greeting was exchanged ; and soon
 That privilege, did yet expire too soon,
 By a fierce tempest shaken, soon resumed
 The wreck of gaety ! But soon revived
 The stream, that bears thee forward, prove not, soon

She bore a secret burthen ; and full soon
 They were soon proud of ; tended it and nursed ;
 There blossoms, strong in health, and will be soon
 Pity away, soon shall ye quake with fear !
 Departs ; and soon is spent the line of those
 To which (and who can tell where or how soon ?)
 Of unexpected pleasure.—Soon the board
 Of joyous comrades. Soon as the ready marge
 But soon as Luke, full ten years old, could stand
 Soon will peep forth the primrose ; ere it fades
 Have I heard whooping, and he soon will be Soon as the cock begins to crow
Sooner. —No sooner ceased that pal, than on the verge
 Of thy new heart ; and sooner shall its wreaths,
 No sooner stand attired
 By deluge, now at hand. No sooner ceased
 Else sooner ended, I have borne in mind
 At day-spring, and no sooner doth the sun
 Which was no sooner entered than our Host
 The Sage broke off. No sooner had he ceased
 Which the poor broom no sooner felt

Soonest. That soonest fails to please, and quickest turos
Sooth. And I had heard the like before : in sooth
 I owe him no ill will, but in good sooth
 And, sooth, these two were each to the other dear :
 And, sooth to say, an apter Mate
 Yet, sooth, those little starry specks,
 And sooth for Benjamin a vein
 And then the wind ! in sooth, it was
 It was in sooth a happy thought
 The soberness of reason ; till, in sooth,
 As welcome, and as beautiful—in sooth

Sooth—continued.

Of him the most ; and, sooth to say,
 For, sooth to say, ambition, in the breast
 Are not, in sooth, their Requiem's sacred ties
 And, sooth to say, yon vocal grove,
 And why that scrupulous reserve ? In sooth
 In sooth, I speak from feeling, what though now
 For he, in sooth, is hind, and may not see,
 And glad, in sooth, was I when he was gone.
 And, in good sooth, the Cuckoo here is not ;
 It was a goodly prospect : for, in sooth,
 His mien and person, nor was free, in sooth,
 Unlifted ; why deceive ourselves ? in sooth,
 " In sooth, with love's familiar privilege,
 Leaving this book unvisited : hut, in sooth,
 And mostly profitless. And, sooth to say,
Sooths. To soothe and cheer the poor man's solitude.

To soothe or cheer, to soften or refine.
 No brook to wet his lip or soothe his ear ;
 To stay the wanderer's steps and soothe his thoughts.
 Soothe it into patience—stay
 To stir, to soothe, or elevate ?
 Assiduously—to soothe her aching breast ;
 'Twill soothe us in our sorrow,
 Spot rich in all things that can soothe and please !
 Let Thy love its anger soothe :
 To soothe and cleanse, not madden and pollute !
 Confession ministers the pang to soothe
 And soothe the heart confession hath laid bare—
 Or like those hymns that soothe with graver sound
 Or fancies stealing forth to soothe the breast .
 Words that can soothe, more than they agitate ;
 Might soothe in human breasts the sense of ill,
 Or soothe it with a healing power
 May soothe thy memory of the chains of Rome.
 To exhilarate the spirit, and to soothe,
 To soothe the regret, though deepening what it soothed,
 Wet with the Muses' nectar. Thus I soothe
 But neither could divert nor soothe my thoughts.
 To soothe a Child, who walked beside him, weeping
 The charities that soothe, and heal, and bless,
 Thus do we soothe ourselves, and when the thought
 And elevate, and harmonise, and soothe.

Soothed. See Heart-soothed.
 —Now o'er the soothed accordant heart we feel
 Sympathy that soothed his grief,

Which, soothed and sweetened by the grace of Heaven
 Was softened into feeling, soothed, and tamed.
 And soothed war-wearied knights in rafterd hall.
 With it Camdeus soothed an exile's grief :
 Whose murmur soothed thy languid Mother's ear
 Been soothed, in all my wanderings.
 Or let me loiter, soothed with what is given,
 Soothed by the unseen River's gentle roar.
 It soothed us—it beguiled us—then, to hear
 Yet Emily is soothed ;—the breeze
 Yes, she is soothed : an Image faint,
 How soothed, when in thick bower enclosed,
 That voice which soothed the Nuns while on the steeps
 And, quieted and soothed, a torrent small,

Her soothed affections clung,
 Transported, my soothed spirit hovers o'er
 But o'er the sooth'd accordant heart we feel
 And swellings of the spirit, was rapt and soothed,
 Would with an influence benign have soothed.
 To soothe regret, though deepening what it soothed,
 To happy contemplation soothed his walk ;
 In me, a meekly-bending spirit soothed
 These with a soothed or elevated heart,
 Soothed by the natural spirit which they breathe.
 —Thus soothed at home, thus busy in the field,
 More joyful if it be with sorrow sooth'd.
 Had soothed his ear while they were hidden : how pleased

Soother. And oh ! dear soother of the pensive
 breast,
Soothers. All soothers of sense their soft virtue shall yield.
Sooths. That did bewitch me then, and soothes me
 now.
 And dear remembrances, whose presence soothes
 Our solitude. It soothes me to perceive,

Soothing. See Soul-soothing.
 And with that voice accords the soothing sound
 And her soothing song by the winter fire,
 Most soothing was it for a welcome Friend,
 A soothing recompense, his gift, is thine !
 A soothing spirit follows in the way
 Prelude of night's approach with soothing dreams.
 The soothing recompense, the welcome change.
 Upon a soothing scene,
 If neither soothing to the worm that gleams
 In the soothing thoughts that spring
 If Pleasure's soothing song thy soul entice,
 Half conscious of the soothing melody,
 Though soothing, and the little floating isles

Soul—continued.

While all the future, for thy purer soul,
Thy dissolution brings, that in my soul
Not a soul in the village this morning will stay;
Scarcely a soul is out of bed;
Her life and soul were hurried.
There's not a single soul abroad!
And like the very soul of evil,
Body, heart, and soul in union,
He saves for me my precious soul;
Its playmate, rather say, its moving soul.
With a soul as strong as a mountain river
Of the Wanderer in my soul.
Was to the Pilgrim's soul endeared,
Keep the sprightly soul awake,
He heard not, too intent of soul;
Who can or will!—my honest soul,
Thinks her the luckiest soul on earth,
For Benjamin, triumphant soul!
And the guilt-hurthened soul is no longer oppress.
Would seek what the degraded soul
My soul from darkness is released,
The sleepless Soul that perished in his pride;
Into her soul was sent;
In body, and become a living soul:
The guide, the guardian of my heart, and soul
My Soul, an Apparition in the place,
The depth, and not the tumult, of the soul;
Yet there the Soul shall enter which hath earned
In soul I swept the indignity away:
The spots that to my soul adhere;
The soul of Dion, instantly dissolved.
My Soul was grateful for delight
If there be movements in the Patriotic's soul,
His soul with but a glimpse of heavenly day?
Fit countenance for the soul of primal truth;
And makes each soul a separate heaven,
Doth to the Soul exalt it with the chime
That sees them, to my soul that owns in them,
Shout, cuckoo!—let the vernal soul
Terrible for sense and soul!
And with a soul of power.
The soul of happy sound was spread,
I've heard of one, a gentle Soul,
Perplexed the good man's gentle soul.
—Let good men feel the soul of nature,
How ye, that play with soul and sense,
To him, a jovial soul, I ween,
No disproportion in her soul, no strife:
And my Soul felt her destiny divine,
Heaven-horn, the Soul a heavenward course must hold;
That kills the soul: love betters what is best,
And in the soul admit of no decay.
One who was suffering tumult in his soul
It seems the Eternal Soul is clothed in thee
In man's perturbed soul thy sway benign;
Dull would be of soul who could pass by
Then I repent not. But my soul hath fears
And head that droops because the soul is meek,
(Like influence never may my soul reject),
Let no mean hope your souls enslave;
No soul to dream of. What art Thou, from care
In hitherness of soul.
With which his soul had shone so bright—
His soul into the briar-rose;
The man of abject soul in vain
Spake laws to them, and said that by the soul
Thy soul was like a Star, and dwelt apart;
To have one Soul, and perish to a man,
My Soul, a sorrowful interpreter,
The free-horn Soul—that World whose vaunted
skill
Dear Liberty! stern Nymph of soul untamed;
There is a hulwark in the soul. This knew
Dwells in the affections and the soul of man
Of awful prudence, keep the unvanquished soul:
Shine on his soul, reflected from the days
With firmer soul, yet labour to regain
A Soul by contemplation sanctified.
Upon his inner soul in mercy shine;
The Bard—whose soul is meek as dawning day,
And oft my soul hath kindled at the same,
That soul of Evil—which, from Hell let loose,
To highest Heaven—the labour of the Soul;
Shall lack not power the "meeting soul to pierce!"
Such feeling pressed upon my soul,
Let all remind the soul of heaven;
The Soul transported sees, from hint of thine,
His soul her daily tasks renewed,
Filling the soul with sentiments august—
To move in sunshine?—Utter thanks, my Soul!
No faculty within us which the Soul
Reclined, shall I have yielded up my soul
Assent is power, belief the soul of fact.
To be; by Faith, not sight, his soul must live;
Give him a soul that cleaveth unto Thee.

Soul—continued.

Unblamed—if the Soul be intent on the day . . . 364
To the sad soul give hope of pardon free. . . 366
And to her name my soul shall cleave in sorrow; . . . 374
Then eased his soul at length by praise . . . 374
And soul, to mingle with Eternity!
So may the Soul, through powers that Faith
bestows, . . . 384
How Una, sad of soul—in sad attire, . . . 390
By which the soul—with patient steps of thought
To the grief of her soul that doth come and go . . . 396
That soul of conscientious daring, . . . 398
Of love on which his soul was bent. . . 401
And he in heart and soul the same . . . 402
A Soul, by force of sorrows high, . . . 402
Her soul doth in itself stand fast, . . . 414
Into a soul which now was blest . . . 415
Thy soul, exalted Emily, . . . 416
That fills the Soul with unavailing ruth.
The human Soul; not utterly unknown
The Soul to purer worlds: and who the line . . . 422
That the firm soul is clothed with fruit divine! . . . 423
The recreant soul, that dares to shun the debt . . . 424
When thy great soul was freed from mortal chains,
And comfortless despairs the soul benumb. . . 425
And nature God disdained not; Man—whose soul
The unconverted soul with awe submit. . . 430
From rites that trample upon soul and sense. . . 431
Than that the Soul, freed from the bonds of Sense,
Fear to my Soul, and sadness which might seem . . . 440
Shines through his soul—"that he may see and tell
But who would force the Soul tilts with a straw . . . 442
Recall the wandering Soul to sympathy
By chain yet stronger must the Soul he tied:
Nor quits the Body when the Soul is freed,
Long lines of mighty Kips—look forth, my Soul!
Breathe through my soul the blessing of thy grace,
The soul of Genius, if he dare to take
In classic ages men perceived a soul
As may attune his soul to meet the dower
My soul, though yet confined to earth,
A part so charmed the pensive soul:
Brothers in soul! though distant times
May be discovered what in soul ye are.
The human soul that through me ran;
Thy ever-windling soul, away!
One to whose smooth-rubbed soul can cling —Thou soul of God's best earthly mould!
Thou happy Soul! and can it be
A soul of love, love's intellectual law:—
Through no disturbance of my soul,
By objects, which might force the soul to abate
Is yet a Soul whose master-bias leans
And from the love which was in her soul
Transparent as the soul of innocent youth,
To calm the affections, elevate the soul,
Be hopeful Spring the favourite of the Soul!
Or, if the soul to bondage be subdued,
Body and mind and soul; a thirst so keen
Whose infant soul was tutored to confide
But turn, my Soul, and from the sleeping pair
The soul to love the more;
Thou be that, kindling with a poet's soul,
Humbling the body, to exalt the soul;
And to atone for it, with soul unshaken
And keep vindictive thirstings from the soul,
And waits at will the contrite soul to bliss.
A soul so pitifully forlorn,
Do my sinful soul demand,
And trouble from the soul.
A statue of the soul.
As his own soul. And, when with eye upraised
That in my soul methinks I yet do hear . . . 563
That in my soul I feel the joy of it. . . 564
A life and soul, to every mode of being . . . 567
Which reason cherishes. And thus the soul, . . . 567
Wherewith to satisfy the human soul?
The fields better suited the ease of his soul:
More of soul in his face than of words on his tongue;
Youth amiable; O friend so true of soul . . . 570
Into a passionate lament?—O Soul!
She came, though meek of soul, in seemly pride . . . 576
And seen the soul of truth in every part, . . . 578
A deep distress hath humanised my Soul. . . 578
—A few (my soul oft sees that sight) . . . 580
For such a gentle Soul and sweet, . . . 580
A soul by resignation sanctified . . . 584
Through God, is raised a spirit and soul of love
Calmed in his soul the fear of change and death.
The Soul that rises with us, our life's Star, . . . 588
Full soon thy Soul shall have her earthly freight,
Binding the charmed soul in powerless trance,
Breathe o'er the failing soul voluptuous dreams;
Felt only there, oppress his labouring soul,
But now with other soul I stand alone . . . 605
Uncertain thro' his fierce uncultured soul . . . 609
—And thou! fair favoured region! which my soul
Whose Machination her fell soul resigns, . . . 617
In the dark mansions of the bigot's soul,
The shades of night no more the soul involve,
No shadowy forms entice the soul aside, . . . 619

Soul—continued.

To teach, on rapid wings, the curious soul
 If Pleasure's soothing song thy soul entice,
 An image of her soul is kept alive,
 Pour forth that day my soul in measured strains
 It was a splendid evening, and my soul
 To lack that first great gift, the vital soul
 Starved in those narrow bounds; but not the soul
 Her natural sanctuaries, with a local soul
 Fair seed-time had my soul, and I grew up
 Thou Soul that art the eternity of thought,
 The passions that build up our human soul
 Rocked on his Mother's breast; who with his soul
 And intellectual life; but that the soul,
 Came strengthened with a superadded soul,
 Would overspread my soul, that bodily eyes
 My soul was unsubdued. A plastic power
 From Nature and her overflowing soul
 Of the Upholder of the tranquil soul,
 Lay hedged in a quickening soul, and all
 Which spake perpetual logic to my soul,
 Soul awful—if the earth has ever lodged
 An awful soul—I seemed to see him here
 It feared that evening. Gently did my soul
 How the immortal soul with God-like power
 Or as the soul of that great Power is met
 Into the soul its tranquillising power,
 Is highest reason in a soul sublime;
 And wedded soul to soul in purest bond
 O Friend! O Poet! brother of my soul,
 That might have dried me up, body and soul.
 The Poet's soul was with me at that time;
 Entering, we fed the soul with darkness; thence
 But to my conscious soul I now can say—
 Under such banners militant, the soul
 Confederate with the current of the soul,
 Since I had felt in heart and soul the shock
 Endowed with various power to search the soul;
 The views and aspirations of the soul
 The soul of Beauty and enduring Life
 Of prepossession, without which the soul
 No longer a mute influence of the soul,
 Strip of their harmonising soul, the life
 For the sun's light. The soul when smitten thus
 To sanction the proud workings of the soul,
 Unfeeling, where the man who is of soul,
 Show what she was, a high and fearless soul,
 Through their impiety—my inmost soul
 A sovereign voice subsists within the soul,
 Useless, and even, beloved Friend! a soul
 Exulted, in the triumph of my soul,
 In the last place of refuge—my own soul.
 The very being of the immortal soul.
 Thou tak'st thy way, carrying the heart and soul
 Or Archimedes, pure abstracted soul!
 O Soul of Nature! excellent and fair!
 O Soul of Nature! that, by laws divine
 And through a perfect happiness of soul,
 A sensitive being, a creative soul.
 Do read the invisible soul; by men adroit
 In soul of more than mortal privilege.
 Hence endless occupation for the Soul,
 Of use and custom to bow down the soul
 By heaven inspired; that frees from chains the soul,
 All shall be his; and he whose soul hath risen
 Child of my parents! Sister of my soul!
 My soul, too reckless of mild grace, had stood
 Shall I be silent? O capacious Soul!
 The incumbent mystery of sense and soul,
 Or from the Soul—an impulse to herself—
 The human Soul of universal earth,
 Feeding the soul, and eagerly imbibed
 What soul was his, when, from the naked top
 The spectacle: sensation, soul, and form,
 And the first virgin passion of a soul
 And every moral feeling of his soul
 Your very soul to see her. Sir, I feel
 Your very soul to see her: evermore
 The unbounded might of prayer; and learned, with soul
 Struggling against it; with a soul perplexed,
In death thy faithfulness?—"God rest his soul!"
 His body is at rest, his soul in heaven."
 And that respect and deference which a soul
 By waking sense or by the dreaming soul!
 Heart, soul, and hands,—in mending the defects
 Of impulse or allurements, for the Soul
'His body is at rest, his soul in heaven.'
 Or season's difference; the immortal Soul
 Who, to the lowest region of the soul,
 And all the tender motions of the soul,
 Of former loves and interests. Then my soul
 Dazzling the soul. Meanwhile, prophetic harps
 My soul diffused herself in wide embrace
 Of soul and sense mysteriously allied,
 That volume—as a compass for the soul—
 And his innate capacities of soul,
 Soul of our Souls, and safeguard of the world!
 At thy command, how awful! Shall the Soul,
 Of other converse which mind, soul, and heart,

Soul—continued.

What visionary powers of eye and soul
 The measure of my soul was filled with bliss,
 And, since their date, my soul hath undergone
 Heights which the soul is competent to gain.
 For any passion of the soul that leads
 As God's most intimate presence in the soul,
 That spake was capable to lift the soul
 "If, with the froward will and grovelling soul
 In the waste wilderness: the Soul ascends
 Again!"—The effect upon the soul was such
 Has, through ambition of his soul, given way
 As those with which your soul in youth was moved,
 The breeze of nature stirring in his soul,
 Where soul is dead, and feeling hath no place;
 Yielding his soul, the Babylonian framed
 His eye distinguishes, his soul creates.
 And the dread soul within it—should exist
 Philosophers, who, though the human soul
 This soul, and the transcendent universe,
 To lower: can you question that the soul
 "Within the soul a faculty abides,
 To which, in silence hushed, his very soul
 Has not the soul, the being of your life,
 Thus deeply drinking-in the soul of things,
 Of divine love, our intellectual soul."
 A passionate intuition? whence the Soul,
 But stoop, and place the prospect of the soul
 Though yet irrational of soul, to grasp
 That what the Soul perceives, it glory lost,
 Grateful to sight, refreshing to the soul,
 An earth-despising dignity of soul?
 His soul is peat! How little can be known—
 The very Soul, revealed as she departs.
 Of soul impetuous, and the bashful maid
 From the pure soul, the soul sublime and pure;
 Within the soul, fountains of grace divine;
 The native grandeur of the human soul—
 Whether in soul, in body, or estate!
 "A kiodler passion opened on her soul
 Until at length her soul was satisfied.
 Of a retreating soul, have now availed;
 Thanks to his pure imaginative soul
 Deprest, and desolate of soul, as once
 Which overflowed the soul was passed away,
 Far nearer, in the habit of her soul,
 Which in his soul he lovingly embraced,
 From year to year in loneliness of soul;
 In grove or pasture; cheerfulness of soul,
 With which by nature every mother's soul
 To fill the total measure of his soul!
 Sent by the ancient Soul of this wide land,
 An image fair, which, brightening in his soul
 In heart or soul, in station or pursuit,
 Those meditations of the soul that feed
 A perseverance fed; almost a soul
 The soul deprest, dejected—even to love
 Fixed in his soul, so early and so deep;
 Shall er'e dissolve the crust whereon his soul
 It circulates, the Soul of all the worlds.
 Of childhood—but that there the Soul discerns
 Are occupied; and the Soul, that would incline
 Say, what can follow for a rational soul
 And their immortal soul, may waste away."
 As from the haughtiest palace. He, whose soul
 He paused, as if revolving in his soul
 Are yet exalted, and in soul adore!
 Which the salvation of his soul requires.
 We sojourn, have I lifted up my soul,
 Musing, the lone spot with my soul agrees
 With a light soul to cover him;
 Suffers like loss when drawn out of the soul,
 To Spirit; for the idealising Soul
 But should these hills be ranged by one whose soul
 The god-like functions of the Soul.
 By such forgetfulness the soul becomes,
 Fret, burn, and struggle, and in soul am there;
 The forwardness of soul which looks that way
 What wonder? on my soul 'twould split a tub
 Soul-affecting. Of soul-affecting souls appeared.
 Soul-animating. Soul-animating strains—alas, too few!
 Soul-apalling. To soul-apalling darkness. Not a blink
 Soul-awakening. And yet the soul-awakening gleam, Soul-bewitching. Offspring of soul-bewitching Art, make me
 Soul-cheering. Where Christian piety's soul-cheering spark
 "Soul-cheering Light, most bountiful of things!
 Soul-debasing. Of terror; yet no soul-debasing fear,
 Soul-devoted. Act of soul-devoted homage,
 Soul-distress. His punishment in soul-distress,
 Souled. See High-souled, Sweet-souled.
 Soul-engrossing. Across the harp, with soul-engrossing speed;
 By soul-engrossing instinct driven along
 Soul-felt. From soul-felt music, and the treasured page
 Soul-gifted. O he thou wise as they, soul-gifted Maid!

- Soul-illumination. Of soul-illumination) calls him forth . . .
- Soul-inflamed. And Gideon blew the trumpet, soul-inflamed, . . .
- Soulless. To have a soulless image on the eye . . .
- Soul-moving. Soul-moving sight !
By the deep soul-moving sense . . .
- Soul-quick'ning. Let Bacchus, donor of soul-quick'ning cheer, . . .
- Soul's. Mighty were the soul's commandments
And, for a soul's content, I find
And for a moment meet the soul's desires !
Clasping her beauty in my soul's embrace,
The soul's deep valley was not slow
Moved gently in her soul's soft sleep ;
The Soul's eternal interests to promote ;
The shrouded Body to the Soul's command
Come not to speed the Soul's deliverance ;
Her intercessions made for the soul's rest . . .
The soul's desire—a lay
The soul's pure brightness he beheld
I resign my soul's emotions
Of goodness, next her Son, our soul's best boot.
Thy Soul's immensity ;
Of her soul's beauty ; farther I was then
This the soul's last and lowest ebb ; I drooped,
Conceptions equal to the soul's desires ;
Depresses the soul's vigour. Quit your couch—
For her soul's good ? Nor was that office vain.
The household lost their pride and soul's delight.
- Souls. Where Souls are self-defended, free to grow
Of our emasculated souls, the tyranny . . .
And all the happy Souls that rode "Blithe souls and lightsome hearts have we
Here are twenty souls happy as souls in a dream :
Or is it that, when human Souls a journey long have had Have souls which never yet have risen, and therefore prostrate lie ?
The birds pour forth their souls in notes
Yea, both for souls who God's forbearance try,
Art, daring because souls could feel,
And save your souls alive !
Pleased if some Souls (for such there needs must be)
Take away, and into souls dost creep,
With heaven, our souls more fit for future glory,
Hath brought forth no such souls as we had then,
Their fetters in their souls. For who could be,
Never may from our souls one truth depart—
And strength of love our souls shall elevate :
How blest the souls who when their trials come
Whose souls take pride in freedom, virtue, fame,
For Souls familiar with the eternal Voice ;
For Souls whose doom is fixed ! The way is smooth
Their feeble Souls ; and bear with his regrets,
Of cloistered Architects, free their souls to fill
Of conscience souls are placed by deeds that lack We'll frame the measure of our souls :
Of humbler name ; whose souls do, like the flood
To which our souls must bend ;
Which, haply, kindred souls may prize . . .
- Yes, for them whose souls have scope
Was to your souls, and, to the thoughts of others,
Our Souls have sight of that immortal sea
In that stern countenance, for our souls thence drew
And Souls of lonely places I can think
O Heavens ! how awful is the might of souls,
Points have we all of us within our souls
That in the name of all inspired souls—
Whose souls were sick with pain of what would be
With their whole souls went culling from the day
There saw into the depth of human souls,
Souls that appear to have no depth at all
Meek men, whose very souls perhaps would sink
Words are but under-agents in their souls ;
Smooth words he had to wheedle simple souls ;
An object whereunto their souls are tied
The crown of wisdom—to yield up their souls
Soul of our Souls, and safeguard of the world !
That harboured them—the souls retaining yet
Of our own souls ! And if indeed there be
Do, in the constitution of their souls,
But whom, I ask, of individual souls,
Two several souls alternately had lodged,
Though with her prunes impaired. If they, whose souls
Whn in the anguish of their souls bewail
Of humbler name, whose souls do like the flood
Good honest souls !—if right my judgment lies Soul-shattered. Soul-shattered was the Knight, nor knew
Soul-sick. Of soul-sick flesh and weary bones ; . . .
Soul-smitten. Soul-smitten ; for, that instant did appear
Soul-soothing. Soul-soothing Art ! whom Morning,
Noon-tide, Even,
Soul-strengthening. Soul-strengthening patience, and sublime content.

- Soul-subduing. Their soul-subduing looks might cheat
Watch, and be firm ! for soul-subduing vice, . . .
To cast a soul-subduing shade on me . . .
- Soul-sustaining. With virtuous friendship's soul-sustaining aid, . . .
- Sound. Some (hear you not their chisels' clinking
sound ?)
Sound of closed gate, across the water borne, . . .
How calm ! how still ! the only sound,
Chains that were loosened only by the sound . . .
And quickens the blithe sound of oars that pass . . .
His children's children listened to the sound ;
Mocks the dull ear of Time with deaf abortive
sound.
How still ! no irreligious sound or sight . . .
And with that voice accords the soothing sound . . .
That dark mysterious golf ascending, sound . . .
And, blest within himself, he shrinks not from the sound.
Sole sound, the Sound prolongs his mournful cry ;
A sound of chains along the desert rang, . . .
Nor any friendly sound his footsteps led ; . . .
Her he addressed in words of cheering sound ;
Nor voice, nor sound, that moment's pain expressed,
Nature by sign or sound made no essay ; . . .
And never heard a sound so terrible. . . .
A sound of laughter, too !—'tis well !—feared . . .
From such rough dealing. Ha ! what sound is that ?
And that—what is it ? never was sound so like
Returning late, I heard a moaning sound ;
To climb up to the spot whence the sound came ;
Alas ! 'tis the sound of the eight o'clock bell.
Was smitten with a startling sound.
I heard the sound,—and more and more ; . . .
But there was neither sound nor sight . . .
Made answer to that plaintive sound. . . .
To their echoes gave the sound, . . .
- "This is sad talk—they'll never sound for him—
"It is the king, my brother !" and, by sound
Your sound my heart of rest bereaves, . . .
- Within the sound of Emma's voice, nor know . . .
- No sound here sweeps away the will
Than desolate ; for oft-times from the sound . . .
And thence full many a sound she hears, . . .
The streams with softest sound are flowing,
Murmur as with the sound of summer flies.
Sent forth such sallies of glad sound, that all
The fir-grove murmurs with a sea-like sound,
Rushed o'er the wood with startling sound,
A bodding sound—for aught but sleep unfit !
Strikes a solitary sound . . .
Mixed with a faint yet grating sound . . .
Thence the sound—the light is there—
He hears a sound and sees the light,
Hushed was by this the fiddle's sound,
And little other sound was heard ;
I heard the murmur and the murmuring sound,
And beauty born of murmuring sound . . .
While she dandles the Babe in her arms to the sound,
Irregular in sight or sound . . .
Giving to her sound for sound ! . . .
He hears an uncouth sound—
Faint, faint at first ; and then an eager sound
Blows keenly, it sends forth a creaking sound
And, after prelude of unearthly sound . . .
—A slender sound ! yet hoary Time
That, answering to thy touch, will sound the hour ;
Regent of sound, have dangerous Passions trod !
Leave for one chant—the dulcet sound
Stern Winter keeps a dirge-like sound . . .
The soul of happy sound was spread,
Or whence the might of this strange sound ?
The river's depth to sound.
When hark a burst of doleful sound ! . . .
But whence this faintly-rustling sound ! . . .
A muffled noise—a rumbling sound !—
Over that dull and dreary sound, . . .
For well did Peter know the sound ; . . .
He listens—not a sound is heard . . .
One after one ; the sound of rain, and bees
And sound thy praises everlastingly,
A sound like thunder—everlastingly . . .
A thousand times this pipe did Tasso sound ;
A home that by such miracle of sound
Their several features, mingled like the sound
And from one voice a Hymn with tuneful sound . . .
I liked the greeting ; 'twas a sound
The very sound of courtesy ;
Is overflowing with the sound . . .
At founding of Rob Roy's name . . .
With sound the least that can be made, . . .
With sound like lamentation.
What strife of colour, shape and sound
To sound the depths of every Art
A homeless sound of joy was in the sky ;
Consul, or King, can sound himself to know . . .

Sound—continued.

The cock that crows, the smoke that curls, that sound
 Thou hadst a voice whose sound was like the sea :
 Sound, healthy, children of the God of heaven,
 Dropped to the earth, astonished at the sound !
 "A watchword was pronounced, a potent sound—
 Like dreams themselves ; and sweetest sound—
 And has begun—its clouds of sound to cast .
 Immortal Fabrics, rising to the sound . . .
 Echo prolonged a tell-tale sound
 Shouts rise, and storms of sound from lifted
 trumpets blow !
 Lulled by the sound of pastoral bells, . . .
 The Season's harmless pastime. Ruder sound .
 That follows—yet more awful than that awful
 sound !
 Volumes of sound, from the Cathedral rolled, . . .
 Those vernal charms of sight and sound, appeared
 Has spared of sound and grave realities, . . .
 That gave them being, vanish to a sound.
 That followed the first sound of German speech,
 With thy clear voice, I caught the fitful sound
 Dread swell of sound ! loud as the gusts that lash
 Of echo doth reverberate some sweet sound : . . .
 With its softest summer sound : . . .
 A sound of military cheer,
 The Norton ceased not for that sound,
 A soft and lulling sound is heard
 Had often heard the sound of glee
 And psalms they sing—a holy sound
 That was the sound they seemed to speak ;
 Of chiming sound, commanding sympathies ;
 From thorp or vill his matins sound for me,
 While Mercy, uttering, through their voice, a sound
 Their Gods of wood and stone ; and, at the sound
 An idle form, the Word an empty sound !
 By sound, or ghost of sound, in mazy strife ; . . .
 In drowsy sequence—how unlike the sound
 Faint sound, that, for the gayest of the gay,
 Comes that low sound from breezes rustling o'er
 Or like those hymns that soothe with graver sound
 Sound is there none at which the faintest heart
 And a sound of water that gushes, . . .
 No sound is uttered,—but a deep
 How savage bosoms melted at the sound
 To sound the crystal depth of maiden rights ;
 For rules of life, sound as the Time could bear.
 And sound in principle, I seek repose
 Repeats but once the sound of thy sweet name :
 Embodied in the sound.
 By one deep heart-controlling sound,
 No man like him the horn could sound,
 Of thy brethren a march thou shouldst sound through the clouds,
 For the same sound is in my ears
 Sound sense, and love itself, and mirth and glee .
 A barking sound the Shepherd hears,
 Before she hears the sound
 Yes, though He well may tremble at the sound .
 Sound o'er the lake with gentle shock
 Horn it was which none could sound,
 Return, and sound the Horn, that we
 Sounded the Horn which they alone could sound.
 Was heard a startling sound . . .
 And fear not lest an idle sound . . .
 He can make sick folk whole and fresh and sound ;
 The blissful sound ; and in that very place
 A breath, a sound, and scarcely heard . . .
 As to the tabor's sound . . .
 As to the tabor's sound !
 Some, hardy heard their chissel's clinking sound,
 No ruder sound your desert haunts invades,
 The talking boat that moves with pensive sound,
 Broke only by th' unvaried torrent's sound,
 To towns, whose shades of no ruder sound complain,
 A summons to the sound of oars, that pass,
 His children's children join'd the holy sound,
 Thro' worlds where Life and Sound, and Motion
 sleep,
 Broke only by the melancholy sound
 Loud thro' that midway gulf ascending, sound
 Rush down the living rocks with whirlwind sound.
 Sole sound, the sound renews his mournful cry :
 Bid from on high his lonely cannon sound,
 Assumed a voice of deep portentous sound,
 Internal echo of the imperfect sound ;
 To the bare earth dropped with a startling sound.
 Into the tumult sent an alien sound
 Have felt whate'er there is of power in sound
 A humming sound, less tuneable than bees,
 A healthy sound simplicity should reign,
 Give seasonable rest, for 'tis a sound
 Came ever and anon a breath-like sound,
 Sound there was none—but, lo ! an uncouth shape,
 And fond conceit of sadness, with the sound
 From sleep awakened, and misled by sound
 To speed my voyage ; every sound or sight,
 Was then a spirit-stirring sound indeed,
 No less than sound had done before ; the child
 Monstrous in colour, motion, shape, sight, sound !

Sound—continued.

Of sound humanity to which our Tale . . .
 And for a moment, men from far with sound . . .
 And for the Matin-bell to sound no more . . .
 A monitory sound that never failed,—
 Forgot that such a sound was ever heard . . .
 With sound of voice and countenance of the Man,
 And thought that other notions were as sound,
 And never heard the sound of their own names . . .
 By day, a quiet sound in silent night ; . . .
 Like angels stopped upon the wing by sound . . .
 Remote from view of city spire, or sound . . .
 By sound diffused, or by the breathing air, . . .
 Unutterable love. Sound needed none, . . .
 Dapping his face. He had not heard the sound . . .
 Passed from my mind like a forgotten sound . . .
 That seemed the very sound of happy thoughts . . .
 To every grateful sound of earth and air ; . . .
 Or several voices in one solemn sound . . .
 We heard the hymn they sang—a solemn sound . . .
 That on mine ear ticked with a mournful sound.—
 With roaring sound, that ceases not to flow, . . .
 Feebly it tinkles with an earthy sound,
 As sound—blithe race ! whose mantles were bedecked
 A sound unknown to you ; else, honoured Friend !
 I sympathised at leisure with the sound ;
 A softened roar, or murmur ; and the sound . . .
 Sound expectations. So doth he advise
 And sink at evening into sound repose."
 And yet not too enormous for the sound
 Stretched upon fragrant heath, and lulled by sound
 I was abruptly summoned by the sound . . .
 By various mockery of sight and sound ; . . .
 (For the mere sound and echo of his own . . .
 And yet the very sound of that kind foot . . .
 The sound of titled names, and talked in glee
 Was something which to mortal sense might sound
 With images attendant on the sound ;
 —And you tall pine-tree, whose composing sound
 These mountains echoed to an unknown sound ;
 And distant mountains echoed with a sound . . .
 "Once, while the Name, Jehovah, was a sound
 Called to such office by the peaceful sound
 The Vale is by a mighty sound possess'd.
 Sound flogging and fighting . . .
 Of lordly birds, an unexpected sound . . .
 Silent to any gladness of sound
 A freeman, therefore, sound and unimpaired ;
 With a strange sound of genial harmony ;
 (If sound, and what we ought to be ourselves,
 Then execration is an empty sound . . .
Sounded. The cock far off sounded his clarion
 throat ;
 Sounded by the castle-clock !
 Hath sounded (shame upon the Bard !) thy praise
 But word was given, and the trumpet sounded :
 Which good Sir Eustace sounded, was the last . . .
 Sounded the Horn which they alone could sound.
 To hear the sanguinary trumpet sounded . . .
 The one bold man, whose voice the attack had sounded,
Sounder. Think that a State would live in sounder health
 Sounder and therefore holier than the ends . . .
 Into the turmoil, bore a sounder judgment . . .
 Establish sounder titles of esteem
Soundeth. Feel I a wind, that soundeth so like pain ;
Sounding. See Clear-sounding.
 Three sleepless nights I passed in sounding on,
 Which the goat cannot climb, takes his sounding flight ;
 (That would have rocked the sounding trees, . . .
 And drew their sounding bows at Azincour,
 What then I was. The sounding cataract
 Of skill, upon the sounding hide
 Still sounding with the sounding tide . . .
 She thrids her way, the sounding Flood
 And sunbeams ; and the sounding blast,
 And sounding cataracts, ye mists and winds
 Ye winds and sounding cataracts ! 'tis yours,
 Sounding through Christian lands her trumpet, roused
 Sounding with grappling irons and long poles . . .
 By sounding titles, hath acquired the name
 Went sounding on, a dim and perilous way !
 Rivers and fertile plains, and sounding shores,—
 Tyre, by the margin of the sounding waves,
 It bears no sounding name, nor ever bore ;
 For those ordained to take their sounding flight . . .
Soundless. A soundless waste, a trackless vacancy !
 Soundless, with all its streams. The bird of dawn
Sounds. See Death-sounds.
 Sounds from the water-side the hammered boat ;
 Sweet are the sounds that mingle from afar,
 The Patriot nymph starts at imagined sounds,
 All motions, sounds, and voices, far and nigh,
 He was forsaken ? There is a power in sounds :
 The tones of waterfalls, and inland sounds . . .

Source—continued.

The reach of sight; from whom, as from their source,
 What more that may not perish?—Thou, dread
 source,
 This mutual confidence; if, from such source, . . .
 Not seeking from that source, she placed her trust
 And new-born waters deemed the happiest source
 Sources. From kindred sources; while around us sighed
 From various sources; gently overflow . . .
 From sources inexhaustible, poured forth . . .
 From all the sources of her former strength; . . .
 From sources deeper far than deepest pain,
 Sourd. Sole sound, the Sourd prolongs his mournful cry;
 Sole sound, the sourd renews his mournful cry:
 Sourd. Soured and corrupted, upwards to the source,
 South. When, in the south, the wan noon, brooding still
 When others heeded not, He heard the South
 Stood single, with large prospect, north and south,
 Sir Walter walked all round, north, south, and west,
 To all the echoes, south and north,
 And deftly ambles towards the south.
 To the east and the west, to the south and the north,
 Till summer come up from the south, and with crowds
 Nay, said a voice, soft as the south wind's breath,
 The Swede, the Russian; from the genial south,
 With rocks encompassed, save that to the south
 Beginning towards the south, where from Dove
 Crag
 Southern. And bays with myrtle fringed, the southern breeze
 A noise of laughter; southern Loughrigg heard,
 Those southern tracts of Cambria, "deep embayed,
 White Sirius glittering o'er the southern crags,
 Upon the southern side of every grave
 "The other, born in Britain's southern tract,
 Southy. Shall Southey feed upon your precious lore, Southward. With rays of promise, north and southward sent;
 Of Glamara southward came the voice;
 Where Trent is cursed, far southward! Cambrian hills
 Jones! as from Calais southward you and I
 Thence marching southward smooth and free
 And southward far, with moor between,
 The white swans southward passed,
 Is joy for tens of millions. Southward thence Since, travelling southward from our pastoral hills,
 And from Mount Martre southward to the Dome
 Southward the landscape indistinctly glared
 South-west. Breathed gently from the warm southwest:
 To the south-west, a multitudinous show;
 Of their most dreaded foe, the strong South-west Sovereign. He reign, thou still must be his king, and sovereign lord:
 Trust in that sovereign law can spread
 O sovereign Nature! I appeal to thee,
 Peace in these feverish times is sovereign bliss:
 Hail, Twilight, sovereign of one peaceful hour!
 Their sovereign empire in a faithful heart.
 But a mere footstool to you sovereign Lord,
 "Do thou my sovereign will enact
 Of Reason, seated on her sovereign hill;
 Our aged Sovereign sits, to the ebb and flow
 But, to Thy sovereign penetration, fair,
 The starry zone of sovereign height—
 Plead with the sovereign Sun for longer stay
 How feelingly at home the Sovereign ruled;
 Not froward to thy sovereign will . . .
 In stately mien to sovereign Thames allied
 Twelve years had reigned, a Sovereign dread;
 Such is her sovereign mien—her dress
 A will by sovereign Conscience sanctified; . . .
 Divine! thou Lincoln, on thy sovereign hill!
 And the cuckoo's sovereign cry . . .
 Or, crowning, star-like, each some sovereign height,
 That made the worlds, the sovereign Architect,
 Tranquillity! the sovereign aim wert thou
 Up to the sovereign seat of the Most High;
 So might he ken how by his sovereign aid
 All ranks! What Sovereign, worthy of the name,
 For exaltation of her sovereign state. . .
 As sovereign power could give. . .
 Deign, Sovereign Mistress! to accept a lay,
 Established by the sovereign Intellect, . . .
 But Nature then was sovereign in my mind,
 Opening the clouds; or sovereign king, announced
 Where sovereign Nature dictated the tasks
 Between the sovereign and the people stand,
 A sovereign voice subsists within the soul,
 Who, from her sovereign elevatum, gazed,
 Up from the creeping plant to sovereign Man.
 Yet doth remembrance, like a sovereign prince,
 A crown, an attribute of sovereign power,
 Even at that age she ruled, a sovereign queen,
 Lay beautiful on Snowdon's sovereign brow, . . .

Sovereign's. An English Sovereign's brow! and to the throne
Sovereigns. Where England's sovereigns sit in long array,
 From sovereigns deep in pedigree intrenched.
Sovereignty. If it confined the robe of sovereignty.
Mount Skiddaw? In his natural sovereignty
 An ample sovereignty of eye and ear.
 Proofs of a higher sovereignty I claim;
 And, wheresoe'er she spread her sovereignty,
 From Love's uneasy sovereignty—
 Of visual sovereignty—hills multitudinous,
 But manly sovereignty its hold retains;
 Hence, with the spiritual sovereignty transferred
 Feels through her lowest depths thy sovereignty;
 Like Mona's miniature of sovereignty.
 Mustering a face of haughty sovereignty,
 The sovereignty of May.
 Is gone who held us both in sovereignty.
 As thou art wont, thy sovereignty adorn . . .
 Made manifest in Nature's sovereignty,
 His scorned, or unacknowledged, sovereignty.
 In awful sovereignty; a place of power.
 Meantime the sovereignty of these fair Isles
Sow. Build for him, sow for him, and at his call
 Whether men sow or reap the fields,
 With prayers and blessings we your path will sow;
 That he, who would sow death, reaps death, or worse.
 Far as it might be urged, to sow afresh
 Falsehood and guile, be left to sow their seed; Sower. But where the sower dwelt was nowhere to be found.
Sown. See Self-sown.
 On earth was never sown;
 The seeds of malice were not sown;
 Has sown as yields, we trust, the fruit of fame
 From rash assault? Schemes of retirement sown
 In stiff confusion set or sown.
 But that's a loyal virtue, never sown
 For by her Son's blest hand the seed was sown.
 Came those live herbs? by what hand were they sown
 Pools, terraces, and walks are sown
 With speculative notions rashly sown,
 Had sown the spot, that witnessed them, with seeds
 Fields gaily sown when promises were cheap.—
 And let us utter thanks for blessings sown
 Are sown in every human breast, to beauty
 But that the precious love this friend hath sown
 Beneath the oaks' umbrageous covert, sown
 His habits were first sown, even as a seed?
 Nothing but a wild field where they were sown.
 Or pleasure sown, or fostered thus, may be
 By naked huts, wood-built, and sown like tents
 Oh, joy to him who here hath sown, hath laid
 Oh! many are the Poets that are sown
 Even here, where her amenities are sown
 But thinly sown these natures; rare, at least,
 Tall ash-tree, sown by winds, by vapours nursed,
 We look for health from seeds that have been sown
Space. His prey, through tracts abrupt of desolate
 space,
 The wider space the better—we may find
 Nothing but silence and empty space;
 That absorbs time, space, and number;
 What space hath Virgin's beauty to disclose
 I look—the sky is empty space;
 Much how the Youth, in scanty space of time,
 Large space beneath, as duly as the light
 And on a summit, distant a short space,
 —When I had gazed perhaps two minutes' space,
 A length of open space, where to and fro
 Made this orchard's narrow space,
 Our roads, through many a long year's space,
 He comes to tarry with thee three hours' space;
 That, for a brief space, checks the hurrying stream!
 Through space, though calm, not raised above
 As if no space below the sky
 Large space (mid dreadful clouds) of purest sky,
 Such transport, though hut for a moment's space;
 Formal, and circumscribed in time and space;
 (Though it were only for a moment's space)
 For victory shaped an open space,
 Smooth space of turf which from the guardian fort
 How wide a space can part from inward peace
 Leads through space of open day,
 And, in seven days' space, will to York be led!—
 There Francis for a moment's space
 Apart, some little space, was made
 False in the issue, that you seeming space
 We breathed together for a moment's space,
 Pleas'd with your triumphs o'er his brother Space,
 He comes not back; an ampler space,
 I marvel how Nature could ever find space
 This Dog, had been through three months' space
 Yet cool the space within, and not uncheered

Space—continued.
 What, is there then no space for golden mean
 —This Dwelling's Inmate more than three weeks'
 space
 And thus through many seasons' space
 Gave to her thought, that in a little space
 I prove it thus; for in no other space
 For one poor moment's space to Thee,
 Do thou, but for a single night's brief space,
 Had also left less space within my mind,
 And lingered near the door a little space,
 Of reason, undisturbed by space or time;
 Space like a heaven filled up with northern lights,
 Which—to the boundaries of space and time,
 Of melancholy space and doleful time,
 Forth, through some Gothic widow's open space,
 For two days' space, in presence of the Lake,
 A little space of intermediate time
 A sportive infant, who, for six months' space,
 Romantic almost, looked at through a space,
 Below, the open space, through every nook
 Nook is there none, nor tract of that vast space
 That after a short space works less and less,
 Diffused through time and space, with aid derived
 Lofty and over-arched, with open space
 Had left an interregnum's open space
 Where the disturbances of space and time—
 Was like an invitation into space
 Unnoticed did I stand some minutes' space.
 An eager grasp; and many moments' space—
 Some little space disjoined, a pair were seen,
 Through time or space—if neither in the one,
 The space that severed us! But, as the sight
 Whose kingdom is, where time and space are not.
 Small space! but, for reiterated steps,
 Filling a space, else vacant, to exalt
 Small space of that green churchyard with a light
 Earth's melancholy vision through the space
 The fruits of earth through space of twice ten years,
 In social converse, or by some short space
 "Through four months' space the Infant drew its food
 Begun and ended within three days' space,
 For her own flowers and favourite herbs, a space,
 Had never come, through space of forty years;
 Ten summers and ten winters of a space
 Seized him, that self-same night; and through the
 space
 Through earth, sky, water, and all visible space,
 Thick storm, and heavy, which for three hours'
 space
 Could see them, nor in that small open space
 Legions of devils through a key-hole's space.
Spaces. And be the guardian spaces
 Or grass-grown spaces, where the heaviest foot Spacious. The spacious landscape change in form and hue!
 From year to year the spacious floor
 Stand in the spacious firmament of time,
 Along the surface of a spacious plain
 Is life despaired; ah no, the spacious earth
 Where now—within this spacious plot—
 Through woods and spacious forests,—to behold
 Spread like a spacious Mere, we there could measure
 Upon Winander's spacious breast, it chanced
 With high and spacious rooms, deafened and stunoned
 A spacious grass-plot; there, in silence, sate
 The spacious city, and in progress passed
 Their tribes, till we beheld a spacious plain
 To range her blooming bowers, and spacious fields,
 And O, ye swelling hills, and spacious plains!
 Like trees in forests,—spread through spacious tracts,
 When, on thy bosom, spacious Windermere!
 Of this fair Vale, and o'er its spacious heights
Spade. Then, by the spade, or cleaving plough,
 And soon, full soon, the lonely Sexton's spade
 Spade! with which Wilkinson hath tilled his lands,
 That man will have a trophy, humble Spade!
 Might hear his busy spade, which he would ply,
 With spade and mattock o'er his shoulder hung;
 And patient spade; praise to the simple crook,
 His spade and hoe, mattock and glittering scythe,
Spades. With spades they would have sought,
 Ironic diamonds,—clubs, hearts, diamonds, spades,
Spain. Like a Sierra of cerulean Spain,
 The Gordon, sailed away to Spain;
 I weigh the hopes and fears of suffering Spao;
 Spain may be overpowered, and he possess,
 Were England's native growth; and throughout Spain
 The Crescent glitters on the towers of Spain;
 Nor is it silver of romantic Spain;
 And followers of Sertorius, out of Spain
 My legions in Spain

Spake. He waked her—spake in tone that would not fail.
 In converse that ensued she nothing spake;
 And spake to you, why did you give no answer?

Spake—continued.

He only spake to me of a dear Daughter, . . . 74 Bord. 2067
 "My cloak!" no other word she spake,
 For she looked with such a look, and she spake with such a tone, . . . 82 Alice Fell 21
 The Child, as if the thunder's voice spake with articulate call, . . . 88 Pet-lamb 67
 Thus spake the homely Priest of Ennerdale. . . 92 Poet's Dream 9
 Then Artega! thus spake: "I only sought admittance was denied. The young man spake
 Of those domestic tales that spake to me
 And thus the old Man spake to him—"My son,
 Thus spake the moral Muse—her wing
 I spake, when whispered a low voice . . . 154
 Thus Nature spake—"The work was done—
 But no! he spake the English tongue, . . . 187
 He spake of plants that hourly change . . . 192
 The Youth of green savannahs spake, . . . 193
 Mild Hermes spake—and touched her with his wand . . . 193
 He spake of love, such love as Spirits feel . . . 209
 Spake of heroic arts in graver mood . . . 211
 I spake with faltering voice, like one . . . 211
 The voice was soft, and she who spake
 As if a dead man spake it! Yet despair
 Spake laws to them, and said that by the soul
 That Shakspeare spake; the faith and morals hold
 Their monstrous Idol if the dead e'er spake,
 That spake of bards and minstrels; and his spirit
 Therefore the Voice spake from the Desert, thence Spake bitter words; words that did ill agree
 Thus to the Necromancer spake
 He spake; and gliding into view
 He spake, and eight brave sons straightway
 She heard, but looked not up, nor spake;
 He spake here truth; for far and near
 And thus abruptly spake—"We yield
 He spake—"would stem, or quell, a force
 I overheard her as she spake
 And spake in firm and earnest mood.
 Approached, and, greeting her, thus spake;
 She spake—and from the Lady's sight
 Coldly we spake. The Saxons, overpowered
 To Caesar's Successor the Pontiff spake; . . . 428
 Thus spake—and lo! a Fleet, for Gaul address,
 Last night, without a voice, that Vision spake
 Some spake, by thought-perplexing fears betrayed;
 So spake Sir Eglamore, and pressed
 To me my good friend Matthew spake,
 So spake the mild Jeronymite, his griefs
 Yet spake this Child when sprinkled was the water;
 The Nightingale thus in my hearing spake:—
 Then spake one Bird, and full assent all gave;
 She spake and shed an offering on the board;
 And common face of Nature spake to me
 Which spake perpetual logic to my soul,
 Spake with a sense of peace, at intervals
 Black drizzling crags that spake by the way-side
 Of Abyssinian privacy. I spake
 He spake with some what of a solemn tone:
 So busy, that the things of which he spake
 If I had seen her husband. As she spake
 Recovering, to my Friend I said, "You spake,
 This had I seen, and saw; but, till she spake,
 We spake—he made reply, but would not stir
 With courteous voice thus spake—"I should have grieved . . . 788
 But, while he spake, look, gesture, tone of voice,
 To appear and answer; to the grave I spake
 I spake with vehemence; and promptly seized
 That spake was capable to lift the soul
 With some-impatience in his mien, he spake:
 Our seats; and thus the Solitary spake,
 With a complacent animation spake,
 You," to the Pastor turning thus he spake,
 Upon the earth beneath his feet; and spake:—
 Theo to the Solitary turned, and spake.
 "There," said the Vicar, pointing as he spake,
 She spake, yet, I believe, not unstained
 Thus, in her Mother's hearing Ellen spake,
 She spake, nor was the assurance unfulfilled;
 When he had passed, the Solitary spake;
 —And, surely, he, that spake with kindling brow,
 While he advanced, thus spake: "Tradition tells
 To his Compatriot, smiling as he spake;
 That spake the Norman Conqueror's stern behest—
 Thus calmly spake the venerable Sage,
 I spake of mischief by the wise diffused
 "Yes," he continued, kindling as he spake,
 "Once," and with wild demeanour, as he spake,
 Span. And fixed an infant's span above
 Around these happy fields we span
 And she who span it culled the daintiest fleece,
 Impassioned dreams, that strove to span
 A span of waters, yet what power is there!
 And all the thoughts that lengthened out a span
 With but a span of sky between—
 Soon as the meadow of life's little span
 And the blue sky, one little span of earth
 We ran a boisterous course; the year span round
 A span above man's common measure, tall, . . . 642

Spangled. Fire raged: and, when the spangled floor
 Spangled with drops of that celestial shower. . . 168
 Earth, spangled sky, and lake serene, . . . 178
 Thy handmaid Frost with spangled tissue quaint
 The spangled turf, and neighbouring thickets ring
 Spread o'er the spangled sign-board, had dislodged
 Spangled with kindred multitudes of stars, . . . 376
 Whose genius spangled o'er a gloomy theme . . . 387
 Spangling. Spangling a cushion green like moss; . . . 644 Spaniard. The Frenchman and the Spaniard; from remote . . . 651
 Spaniards. Spaniards of every rank, by whom the good
 . . . 655
 Spanish. You have heard "a Spanish Lady . . . 580
 The roving Spanish Bands are reached at last, . . . 690
 A mantle such as Spanish Cavaliers . . . 320
 Bishops, of milder Spanish breed, shall boast . . . 0
 Spanned. See Wide-spanned.
 And through a rainbow-arch that spanned the street, . . . 139
 Spanning. Proud as a rainbow spanning half the vale,
 . . . 111
 "This Land of Rainbows spanning glens whose walls, . . . 388
 Spans. He leaned upon the bridge that spans the glen, . . . 73
 That work of kindred frame, which spans the lake
 And mark that daisied hillock, three spans long!
 Spare. To his spare he'll call the passing poor;
 She is gone before, to spare my weariness. . . 351
 Reverence for life so deeply, that they spare . . . 867
 The verminous brood, and cherish what they spare
 Spare me awhile that greeting. It may be . . . 11
 'Tis needless; spare your violence. His Daughter— . . . 43
 We must spare them—here are many . . . 48
 Only spare the strawberry-blossom! . . . 48
 And for that promise spare the flower!
 Heaven grant that he spare but that one upright twig . . . 64
 With so much happiness to spare, . . . 74
 Spare your blame,—remembrance makes him . . . 85
 They, notwithstanding, had much love to spare, . . . 99
 To me a kingdom! spare the bitter scorn: . . . 104
 That God poor Susano's life would spare, . . . 128
 The Doctor's self could hardly spare: . . . 128
 The half-blown rose, the lily spare? . . . 128
 The one-penned Boy has his penny to spare. . . 154
 Ah, spare the exulting smile, . . . 188
 In perfect shape (whose beauty Time shall spare . . . 215
 And, if Time spare the colours for the grace . . . 250
 For ought but what thy happiness could spare. . . 276
 Oh! spare to sweep, thou mournful blast,
 To spare your failings for his sake, . . . 277
 Of future war. Advance not—spare to hide,
 Can spare, and humblest earthly Weal demands,
 And cannot spare the Thing he cherished:
 She guards thee, ruthless Power! who would not spare . . . 285
 Prejudged by foes determined not to spare,
 Spare it, ye waves, and lift the mariner,
 Spare, too, the human helpers! Do they stir
 Into his English breast, and spare to quake
 Lest, capital pains remitting till ye spare
 How venture then to hope that Time will spare
 Such wickedness his judgments cannot spare;
 But will the Lightning glance aside to spare
 I spare to tell of what ensued, the life . . . 518
 But spare the House of God. Was ever known
 Spare diet, patient labour, and plain weeds.
 Moves the great spirit of human knowledge, spare
 Slight, if you will, the means; but spare to slight
 But spare your pity, if there be in me . . . 549
 Spare them, they shall continue to bestow,
 Of that spare benefice. Yet not the less
 Spare, burning sun of midsummer, these sods,
 That seemed to pity what he could not spare. . . 555
 Spared. Whose life and limbs the flood had spared;
 Nor spared the reverend blood that feebly runs;
 . . . 681
 Spared for obedience from perpetual love, . . . 325
 To you who fell, and you whom slaughter spared
 Have spared my Dwelling to this hour;
 Whom grief hath spared—who sheds no tear . . . 344
 Has spared of sound and grave realities, . . . 344
 On the great flood were spared to live and move.
 Aotive Colum, spared by fire and flood:—
 Like a lone criminal whose life is spared, . . . 359
 "Your noble brother hath been spared;
 Thanks to the moth that spared it for our eyes;
 Is not a Ruin spared or made by time, . . . 360
 At Wordsworth's suit been spared; . . . 367
 Yet haply Arno shall be spared all cause . . . 388
 Some skill, and longer time than may be spared,
 Sprinkling this talk with questions, better spared,
 With fellow-sufferers by the shipwreck spared,
 Of circumstances might to thee have spared
 Spared not the empty throne, and in proud haste
 Him, sleeping or awake, the robber spared; . . . 409

Spared—continued.

The earliest summoned and the longest spared—
Which sternly hoarded all that could be spared,
Her heart she opened; and no pains were spared
Happily spared, a little Gothic niche
Whose visitation had not wholly spared
The Sage rejoined, "I thank you—you have spared
Ripe for the block that might have spared his son."

Sparras. Spares not the worm. The giant and the worm—
Nor spares to stoop her head, and taste
Spares thy mild splendour; still those far-shot
beams

Time is not blind;—yet He, who spares
To be blown off at will, by Power that spares it Sparring. And in sickness, if night had been sparring of sleep

With sparring hand. Then trust yourself abroad
Sparring both old and young in that abode.
Sparkingly. Full many a glimpse (but sparingly bestowed

Nor sparingly endowed with worldly wealth,
Her annual bounty, sparingly dealt forth . . .
Spark. "Twas a dull spark—a most unnatural fire
Bright gem instinct with music, vocal spark;
To match the spark of local fire,
And competent to shed a spark divine
The quickening spark of this day's sacrifice;
Though small his kingdom as a spark or gem,
By striking out a solitary spark,
Where Christian piety's soul-cheering spark

Sparkle. While his eyes sparkle with heroic tears.
That sparkle on her cheek.
How did they sparkle to the cymbal's clang!
Sparkle the stars, as of their station proud.
Sparkle about the feet of wanton boys.

Sparklad. Till on a stone, that sparkled to his feet,
Joy sparkled in the prancing courser's eyes;
That flashed and sparkled from the other's eyes;
Sparkles. The green light sparkles;—the dim bowers recede.

And, as a faggot sparkles on the hearth,
Air sparkles round her with a dazzling sheen;
Broke threateningly, in sparkles dire

Sparkling. Save where, with sparkling foam, a small cascade
Here, plots of sparkling water tremble bright
Where sparkling eyes and breaking smiles illumine
No sparkling rivulet spread the verdant herb?
And closed the sparkling eye.
And, while the broad blue wave and sparkling foam

Of murmuring, sparkling, living love,
Nay! start not at that sparkling light;
And sending upward sparkling light
For ever; and I saw the sparkling foam,
Out-did the sparkling waves in glee:
Ye ploughshares sparkling on the slopes!
That wakes the breeze, the sparkling lymph
That to the sparkling crown Urania wears,
Hurrying and sparkling through the clear blue
heaven;

And in its sparkling progress read
Of all its sparkling rays disarmed,
Her sparkling fountains, and her mouldering tombs

Sparkling, until it cannot choose but run
Why stand we gazing on the sparkling Brine,
Or Cupid's sparkling arrow streamed
Illumes with sparkling foam the twilight shade.
Of sparkling light. But now, like one who rows,
Eastward were sparkling clear, and in the west
Sparkling from out a corpse-clad bank that rose
To deal about his sparkling eloquence,
With sparkling mineral, or should crystal cube
That sparkling decked the morning grass; or aught
As by the rivulet sparkling where it runs,
That sparkling thrids the rocks, attunes his voice
Into a thousand thousand sparkling waves,
Those little fountains, sparkling in the sun,

Sparklings. Their vocal charm; their sparklings cease to please.
Sparks. Bright sparks his black and rolling eye-ball hurls
A shade—but with some sparks of heavenly fire
Bright sparks his black and baggard eye-ball hurls

Sparrow. The Sparrow so on the house-top, and I,
And in this bush our sparrow built her nest,
Vouchsafed no sparrow fallet to the ground?
"Man's life is like a Sparrow, mighty King!

Sparrow's. The Sparrow's dwelling, which, hard by Sparry. Warbling in each sparry vault
Thrilling each pearly cleft and sparry grot,
Sparry and bright, rough scatterings of the hills.

Spartan. Or thrill of Spartan life is caught between the blast.
While thrills the "Spartan life" between the blast.
Speak. "Twas not for him to speak—a man so tried,
Should child of mine e'er wander hither, speak
Thus much to speak; but think not I forget—

Speak—continued.

But let this kiss speak what is in my heart. . . .
Speak. Speak! He is a most hard-hearted Man.
Speak out. Oh, Sir, I've been a wicked Woman.
Nay, but speak out! He flattered me, and said . . .
You saw, who was it? Nay, I dare not speak;
These fifteen years—Ha! speak—what Thing art thou?

Wisdom, if Justice speak the word, beats down
Of which I heard them speak, but that I fancy
And speak with milder voice to his poor beasts.
Murdered! alas! speak—speak, I am your friend:
And lays it to his heart—, I pray you speak!
Have you betrayed me? Speak to that. The mask,
It would have come to this!—What brings you hither? speak!

Why may we speak these things, and do no more;
No human ear shall ever hear me speak;
Words which tenderness can speak . . .
With suit that I would speak in verse of that sequestered child

Let me speak of this Brave Child
Then they could write, ay, and speak too, as well
At this blest moment led me, if I speak
But of this in my ears not a word did he speak;
These eyes are on me—they would speak,
Virtuous restraint—ah, speak it, think it, not!
Of which I speak, the Shepherd had been bound
When I began, my purpose was to speak
That these are things of which I need not speak
And of this Stranger speak by whom her lord was freed.

When they have cause to speak of this wild place,
Even while I speak, their skirts of grey
Not to speak of babe and mother;
(I speak of one from many singled out
If they speak 'tis to praise, and they praise with a smile.

In scorn I speak not;—they are what their birth
In finest tones the Youth could speak:
"I did not speak—I saw her face;
Speak, and the flour thou tread'st on will rejoice.
I speak with knowledge,—by that Voice beguiled,
Speak, silent creatures.—They are gone, are fled,
I speak as if of sense beguiled;
And hlaekening clouds in thunder speak of God,
And this I speak in reverence!
Speak—though this soft warm heart, once free to hold

Speak, that my torturing doubts their end may know!
Speak, passing winds; ye torrents, with your strong
Even as I speak the rising Sun's first smile
I thus could speak of Yarrow!
We must be free or die, who speak the tongue
Which he will break for us he dares to speak,
Speak not now of toilsome duty;
All nature seems to hear me while I speak,
Lo! while I speak, the labouring Sun
Why speak of Roman Poms? the haughty claims
Is pictured, or their epitaphs can speak,
All speak of manners withering to the root,
And echoes from old verse speak true,
Hope nothing, if I thus may speak
That was the sound they seemed to speak;
And speak the word— "Alas! of fearful things

Upon their conscious selves; their own lips speak
Even while I speak, the sacred roofs of France
Nay, rather speak with gratitude;
Speak one of you, my doubts remove,
A kindly influence whereof few will speak,
Haply the untaught Philosopher may speak
Speak Thou, whose massy strength and stature
scorn

Speak, Giant-mother! tell it to the Morn
If he should speak, by fancy touched, of signs
Speak from the woody glee!
Brief words may speak the rest;
Ere he had ceased to gaze, perhaps to speak:
And by conjecture only can we speak
Words by thy presence unrestrained may speak

"What I speak this Horn shall witness
Thou hast a dungeon, speak the word!
Speak!—astounded Hubert cannot;
And, if power to speak he had,
Has witnessed. Oh! that winds and waves could speak

Few words they speak, nor dare to slack
"I speak not of the winter's cold
In sooth, I speak from feeling, what though now
To speak of Love's true Servants in this mood;
Quoth she, to hear this churlish bird thus speak
His tombstone thus should speak for him. And surely

This, which I know, I speak with mind serene.
When towers and temples fall, to speak of Thee!
And taking up a voice shall speak (tho' still
Both of them speak of something that is gone:

Speak—continued.

Peeps out a little speck of smiling green,
 With stony barrenness, a shining speck
 When he beholds the first pale speck serene

Speckless. Bright, speckless, as a softly-moulded tear

Specks. Yet, sooth, those little starry specks,
 These swan-like specks of mountain snow,
 And, on its glassy surface, specks of foam,

Spectacle. On lovelier spectacle in fairy days;
 It was a spectacle which none might view,
 Fair spectacle,—but instantly a scream
 Is in all natures a strange spectacle;
 Lying stretched upon the ground—a sad spectacle;
 And while I gaze upon the spectacle
 Of the whole spectacle the same!

The spectacle, how pure!—Of Nature's works,
 Was such bright Spectacle vouchsafed to me?
 A spectacle more hideous—yet
 The flood, the stars,—a spectacle as old
 Such spectacle demands not tear or sigh.
 —Oh what a spectacle at every turn
 The spectacle, is mounting high
 Calm spectacle, by earth and sky
 And Hooker's voice the spectacle approves!
 Tho' doth this silent spectacle—the gleam—
 Bedim, the grand terraqueous spectacle,
 That spectacle, for many days, my brain
 A stranger, linking with the spectacle
 Delighted through the motley spectacle;
 And yet the spectacle may well demand
 Their spirit hallowed the sad spectacle
 Brought to such spectacle a milder sadness,
 Caught by the spectacle my mind turned round
 If any spectacle on earth can do,
 The spectacle, by visiting the spot.
 Have quarrelled with that blameless spectacle
 From childhood. On the fulgent spectacle
 The spectacle: sensation, soul, and form,
 At any grave or solemn spectacle,
 On nearer view, a motley spectacle
 With this compared, makes a strange spectacle!
 A marvellous spectacle," the Wanderer said,
 A glittering spectacle; but every face
 That animating spectacle of sails
 Or to disturb, so fair a spectacle,
 On the refulgent spectacle, diffused

Spectacles. The spectacles within doors,—birds and beasts
 Even by these passing spectacles my heart
 Detained us, on what spectacles of woe
 All these were kindred spectacles and sounds
 From moving spectacles;—but let us on!"
 The fancy pleased by spectacles unlooked for.

Spectator. Still as he turns, the charmed spectator sees
 Which a detached spectator may regard
 Till the spectator, who awhile was pleased

Spectator's. At the spectator's feet.—Yon azure ridge,

Spectators. Or must he be constrained to think that these Spectators rude,
 Of the spectators occupied
 Fresh emptied of spectators. Twice five years
 Of chance spectators, chiefly dissolute men
 Of the spectators, and each several nook

Spectatress. And when that calm Spectatress from on high

Spectral. 'Mid spectral lakes hemocking thirsty men,
 By spectral shapes of gull, or to the ground,
 And when I learned to mark the spectral Shape
 Chased spectral fears away.

Spectre. The Spectre of that innocent Man, my guide
 His gifts imperfect.—Spectre though I be,
 "No Spectre greets me,—no vain Shadow this;
 The sullen Spectre to her purpose bowed,
 Then, like a spectre sweeping by,
 What means the Spectre? Why intent
 Rose, with his ghastly face, a spectre shape

Spectres. And melancholy Spectres throng them—
 Those Spectres to dilate
 Ye brood of Conscience—Spectres! that frequent
 Cries out, and leads her Spectres to their prey,
 Like spectres,—ferment silent and sublime!

Spectular. Calm as the Universe, from specular towers
Speculate. You walk, you live, you speculate alone;
Speculation. Of speculation not unfit, descends;
 Of speculation, joyfully outspread,
Speculations. With subtle speculations, haply vain,
 My lofty speculations; and in thee,
 Thy subtle speculations, toils abstruse

Speculative. High on her speculative tower
 With speculative notions rashly sown,
 To depravation, speculative schemes—
 With her minute and speculative pains,
 That speculative height we may not reach.

Sped. He hoped, to calm her mind; but ill he sped,
 Fair blew the wished-for wind—the voyage sped;

Sped—continued.

With howl that sped from hand to hand,
 Of rapt imagination sped her march
 "Might this our enterprise have sped,
 Came and delivered him, alone he sped
 I saw; and Fancy sped
 To his; Castle Hubert sped;
 The bold good Man his labour sped
 Then sped themselves to bury him full fast;

Speech. Sight that inspired accordant thoughts;
 and speech I thus renewed:
 The power of speech. Both left the spot in silence;
 To guide your speech and your affections,
 What need there is to be reserved in speech,
 Her speech, until the stars of night
 His speech with uncouth terms of art,
 In courteous speech which forth he slowly drew:
 Of ordinary men; a stately speech;
 The old Man's shape, and speech—all troubled me:
 Oh what a Wreck! how changed in mien and speech!

Of thy few words of English speech:
 A weight of languid speech, or to the same
 'Mid fields familiarised to human speech?—
 Forced by intent to take from speech its edge,
 That followed the first sound of German speech,
 With such fond hope? her very speech is dead;
 Nor leaves her Speech one word to aid the sigh
 With outstretched hands and earnest speech—in vain!

And friend in the ear of friend, where speech is free
 And of their speech, and all that they would say.
 Simplicity in habit, truth in speech,
 Through sad incompetence of human speech,
 While oaths and laughter and indecent speech
 I hasten; there, by novelties in speech,
 And the indulgence that a half-learn't speech
 Prompt as the voice, held forth a printed speech,
 Of eloquence even in my native speech,
 Had caught the accents of my native speech
 In speech, and for communion with the world
 And some small portion of his eloquent speech,
 Speech, manners, morals, all without disguise,
 Among associates who have power of speech,
 A serious eye, and his speech thus renewed.
 And, in soft tone of speech, thus he resumed.
 If to the poetry of common speech
 Abundant exercise for thought and speech,
 A woman of soft speech and gracious smile,
 Conciliatory manners and smooth speech;
 And honest dealing, and untainted speech,
 Or turns the godlike faculty of speech
 Whole hours with but small interchange of speech.

Of speech as wild as ever heightened mirth.
Speeches. With love and gentle speeches,
 And whispers caught, and speeches small.

Speechify. Can talk and speechify)

Speechless. In speechless admiration. I, a witness
 She is speechless, but her eyes
 Among the speechless clouds, a look
 Speechless,—and, sitting down upon a chair,
 While, overcome with speechless gratitude,

Speech-maker. There also stands a speech-maker by rote,

Speed. Midway along the hill with desperate speed;
 While to the door with eager speed they ran,
 'Twere wrong to trouble you. God speed you both.
 But I'll be back with my best speed: for you—
 Let us begone with speed, that he may hear
 Who at full speed swept by us where the wood
 With proper speed your quarters may be gained
 St. Cuthbert speed you on your holy errand.
 "Hie thee to the Countess, friend! return with speed,
 Ran with a young man's speed; and yet the voice
 Runs with speed more smooth and fine,
 Up with a sally, and a flash of speed,
 Whose skill can speed the day with lively cares,
 From turmoil, who would turo or speed
 They leave, and speed on nightly embassy
 Oh whither with such eagerness of speed?
 Whence, whence, ye Clouds! this eagerness of speed?
 Who gives his Angels wings to speed through air,
 To rouse the dawn, soft gales shall speed thy wing,
 Across the harp, with soul-engrossing speed;
 Like him can speed
 But Thou, supreme Disposer! may'st not speed
 With such invisible motion speed thy flight,
 But Fancy with the speed of five
 Vain thoughts, and speed ye, with observance due
 Come not to speed the Soul's deliverance;
 Ye Genii! to his covert speed;
 When Flowers rejoice and Lariks with rival speed

Put on with speed your woodland dress;
 With speed put on your woodland dress;
 Distinguished two for scent, and two for speed.

 While, from amid the darkened roofs, the spire, . . . 12 Desc. Sk. 99
 The tall suo, pausing on an Alpine spire, . . . 20 Desc. Sk. 553

Spire—continued.

That inn he long had passed ; the distant spire,
The cypress and her spire ;
And well he knew the spire of Sarum ;
And, like the Spire that from your classic Hill
Under the grave of things ; Hope had her spire
And pinnacle and spire
Hath past to Milan's loftiest spire,
Shatters the air, and troubles tower and spire ;
Nought but the heaven-directed spire,
From the dark sylvan roofs the restless spire,
—The Fall Sun, tip-toe on an Alpine spire,
Upon the cypress spire in lonely thought
And each uprising or receding spire
Remote from view of city spire, or sound

Spires. Spires, rocks, and lawns a browner night o'erspreads ;
In sight of the spires,
And mosques, and spires, and abbey-windows,
The mosques and spires change countenance,
Yet, O ye spires of Oxford ! domes and towers !
A gentler life spreads round the holy spires ;
Sees spires fast sinking—up again to start !
Her Spires, her Steeple-towers with glittering vanes
Of Moscow's glittering spires.
From thickly-glittering spires the matin-bell
—Of cloudless suns no more ye frost-built spires !
Slow sink the Spires,—and up again they start !
Nor failed to gild the spires of Bonn,
With alabaster domes, and silver spires,
And spires whose "sileent finger points to heaven ;"
Spiring. Beneath yon cypress spiring high,
Spirit. See Patrol-spirit.
The spirit sought not then, in cherished sadness,
Feels not the spirit of the place control,
Nor is his spirit less enapt, nor less
His bosom heaves, his Spirit towers amain,
Of that perpetual weight which on her spirit lay.
To lead a Spirit, spotless as the blessed,
With those who take the spirit of their rule
The spirit of vengeance seemed to ride the air.
And make the spotless spirit of filial love
The Spirit of a murdered man, for instance—
But I had once a spirit and an arm—
I bless her with sad spirit,—when of God,
Surely some evil Spirit abroad to-night
Like a Spirit of air she moved,

• When his spirit was departed,
• Her humane courageous spirit

That would bring down his spirit ; and no doubt,
Yet still the spirit of a mountain-boy
Our father's spirit seemed in thee to breathe again.
Fixed in the spirit ; for even here
The fields which with covetous spirit we sold,
Lodged in their innocent bosoms, and the spirit
And tottering spirit. And full off the Boy,
The ancient spirit is not dead ;
Swarmed with enchantment, till his spirit sank,
Fond spirit that blindly works in the blood of all—
• Him who thus exalts thy spirit,
Like a tutelary spirit
And send a thankful spirit back to you,
The spirit of enjoyment and desire,
Is heard the spirit of a toil-worn slave,
Presiding Spirit here to-day,
Kindly, unassuming spirit !
It is the Spirit of Paradise
That prompts such work, a Spirit strong,
His brave spirit with the war in Arachne's rival spirit,
A Spirit of noon-day is he ;
The spirit of my song :
Nor doubt that something of their spirit swayed
But a shy spirit in my heart,
Touch—for there is a spirit in the woods.
A Spirit, yet a Woman too !
And yet a Spirit still, and bright
A slumber did my spirit seal ;
That Mother, whose spirit in fetters is bound,
How oft, in spirit, have I turned to thee,
How often has my spirit turned to thee !
A motion and a spirit, that impels
It is no Spirit who from heaven hath flown,
Behold ! the mantling spirit of reserve
Mourn, and lament for him whose spirit dreads
Of spirit too capacious to require
Bold Spirit ! who art free to rove
With the morning's roseate Spirit
Yet unperplexed, as if one spirit swayed
Her happy spirit as a bird is free,
Has raised thy spirit to a peaceful stand
And, with a spirit freed from discontent,

In spirit, ere she came Organ of vision ! And a Spirit aerial
Serve Thee, invisible Spirit, with untired powers ;
By one pervading spirit
You might perceive, his spirit cold

Spirit—continued.

Or stubborn spirit doomed to yell
His evil spirit up again
The immortal Spirit of one happy day
No fleeting spirit, but my own true Love ?
If Thou the spirit give by which I pray :
And let my spirit in that power divine
A soaring spirit in their prime delight.
Confirm the Spirit glorying to pursue
Or, if thy deeper spirit be inclined
O be my spirit, like my thralldom, strait ;
The region of his inner spirit teems
Not while—to aid the spirit of the place—
He can pour forth his spirit. In heaven above,
From mind and spirit, grudge a short-lived fence.
What strong allurements draws, what spirit guides,
Spirit divine through forms of human art :
A soothing spirit follows in the way
All seem to feel the spirit of the place,
I shiver, Spirit fierce and bold,
Receive thy Spirit in the embrace
His spirit greet ;
And Thee, the Spirit of them all !
As by a spirit turbulent ;
Her buoyant spirit can prevail
Of spirit, from Loch Leven's side,
No master spirit, no determined road ;
Of the rash spirit that still holds her place,
Or is it Tell's great Spirit, from the dead
Yet may a sympathising spirit pause
That power, that spirit, whether on the wing
In peace of spirit, and sublime content !
By Works of spirit high and passion pure ;
Of One whose spirit no reverse could quell ;
And with an infinite pain the spirit aches,
Be conscious of Thy moving spirit !
The Spirit of Antiquity—enshrined
Where lurks a Spirit that replies
Bright Spirit, not with amaranth crowned
At length a Spirit more subdued and soft
That lifts the spirit to a calmer height,
A Spirit whispered, "Let all wonder cease ;
My spirit is the scene of such wild art
Companion ! by whose buoyant Spirit cheered,
That spake of hardy and minstrels ; and his spirit
Into my spirit, when I paced enclosed
A pure poetic Spirit—as the breeze,
Their spirit ; or, unless they for reproof
Some true Partakers of his loving spirit
And its truth who shall doubt? for his Spirit is here ;
His volant Spirit will, he trusts, ascend
Italia ! on the surface of thy spirit,
Spirit in him pre-eminent, who guides,
Less pure in spirit could have done ;
Then, for a moment, he, in spirit, resumes
Of dawn, it cheers the lofty spirit most
The Spirit of humanity, disdain
The pangs that tempt the Spirit to rebel :
Or a Spirit for one day given,
A Spirit, with his angelic wings,
Over that tender Spirit—assailed
Mute Spirit of maternal love,
Nor do a suffering Spirit wrong,
Thou Spirit, whose angelic hand
Say, Spirit ! whither hath she fled
Power which the viewless Spirit shed
And loved with spirit ruled by his to sing
The Spirit of Caractacus descends
Such is the impetuous spirit that pervades
Rites that console the Spirit, under grief
Form spirit and character from holy writ,
With understanding spirit now may look
Of all, himself a Spirit, in the youth
And worship him in spirit and in truth.
Hadst thou, loved Bard ! whose spirit often dwelt
No Spirit was she ; that my heart betrayed,
And the pure spirit of celestial light
And ploughing storm, the spirit of Nassau
Their spirit, in your Children, thus approve.
The stubborn spirit of rebellious man ?
His Spirit Angels greet ; and ours be hope
The spirit of Laud is pleased in heaven's pure clime,
The counter Spirit found in some gay church
Your spirit freely let me drink, and live.
Mine ear has rung, my spirit sunk subdued,
Teach me with quick-eared spirit to rejoice
And leaves the disencumbered spirit free
Informs my spirit, ne'er can I believe
How baffled projects on the spirit prey,
Her spirit, while he crosses lonely moors,

A tender Spirit broods—the pensive Shade
Depress the hours. Up, Spirit of the storm !
The inextinguishable Spirit strives,
Matter and Spirit are as one Machine ;
Spirit of Ossian ! if imboud
Brief parting, for the spirit is all but fled)—
Fell suddenly upon my Spirit—cast
The spirit of a mournful tale,

 And in the kinder spirit ; placable, . . . 724 Prelude 10, 448
 A ladder for thy spirit to ascend . . . 729 Prelude 11, 158
 Which, when the spirit of evil reached its height,
 The affections and the spirit of the place, . . . 733 Prelude 11, 397
 This efficacious spirit chiefly lurks . . . 735 Prelude 12, 42
 A spirit of pleasure and youth's golden gleam ; . . . 736 Prelude 12, 120
 Such is my hope, the spirit of the Past . . . 737 Prelude 12, 219
 In a strong wind, some working of the spirit, . . . 738 Prelude 12, 266
 But greater, though in spirit more subdued—
 Of Sarum's Plain, my youthful spirit was raised ; . . . 743 Prelude 12, 285
 This is the very spirit in which they deal . . . 744 Prelude 12, 331
 And yet a spirit, there for me enshrined . . . 744 Prelude 13, 86

 Upon his spirit, with a fever's strength, . . . 795 Excursion 3, 625
 For the gross spirit of mankind,—the one . . . 795 Excursion 3, 659
 Is human Life ; and so the Spirit fares . . . 796 Excursion 3, 693
 Attended ; then, my spirit was entranced . . . 798 Excursion 3, 816
 Was less upraised in spirit than abashed ; . . . 798 Excursion 3, 849
 That spirit only can redeem mankind ; . . . 799 Excursion 3, 911
 And when that sacred spirit shall appear, . . . 800 Excursion 3, 987
 Sincere, and humble spirit, teaches love : . . . 803 Excursion 4, 118
 The plaintive spirit of the solitude ! . . . 805 Excursion 4, 256
 What other spirit can it be that prompts . . . 806 Excursion 4, 317
 As if it were a spirit !—How divine, . . . 806 Excursion 4, 318
 Amid the wrangling schools—a spirit hung,
 An all-pervading Spirit, upon whom . . . 806 Excursion 4, 345
 No shelter, for a spirit in distress. . . 807 Excursion 4, 412
 In sober plenty ; when the spirit stoops . . . 807 Excursion 4, 445
 In man's celestial spirit ; virtue thus . . . 809 Excursion 4, 513

 To the confiding spirit of his own . . . 817 Excursion 4, 1043
 Of reverence done to the spirit of the place, . . . 817 Excursion 4, 1071
 Than this fallen Spirit ? in those dreary holds . . . 817 Excursion 4, 1099
 One spirit seldom failed to extend its sway . . . 819 Excursion 4, 1208
 And breathed its soothing air,—the spirit of hope . . . 820 Excursion 4, 1250
 Your own pure spirit. Not a step we look for Soothed by the natural spirit which they breathe, . . . 830 Excursion 5, 487

Spirits. See Water-spirits.
When gentle Spirits urged a sportive chase,
Soon with despair's whole weight his spirits sink;
But vigorous Spirits look for something more
Or own we baby Spirits? Genuine courage
" I hold of Spirits, and the Sun in heaven."
Their spirits are in heaven! "
Spirits busy to do and undo:
Which selected spirits wear
So let us strive to live, and to our Spirits will be given
Our spirits, carrying with them dreams of flowers,
As happy spirits as were ever seen;
For such, by pitying Angels and by Spirits
Fields, where with cheerful spirits he had breathed
Hath power to part the Spirits of those who love
Then, cheerful Flower! my spirits play
Spirits of all degrees rejoice
Share their empyreal spirits—yea,
—Blithe spirits of her own impel
Then, Spirits of beauty and of grace,
Kind Spirits! may we not believe
By our own spirits are we defied:
Suffer my genial spirits to decay:
He spake of love, such love as Spirits feel
Then why should conscious Spirits fear
The spirits at your bidding play
Sage Spirits! by your grace
The Spirits of the new-born flowers?
Thy spirits will seem to feed on balmy air:
Like hands of ministering Spirits, or when they lie
Dread Spirits! to confound the meek
Yet, potent Spirits! well I know
Come, Spirits of the Mind! and try,
And now the Spirits of the Mind
And, haply, there the spirits of the blest
Intent his wasted spirits to renew;
Of central earth, where tortured Spirits pine
Until their spirits mingled in the sea
But delegated Spirits comforts fetch
How oft, to elevate our spirits, shone
Should life be dull, and spirits low,
For them whose timid Spirits clung
Of Spirits, and the undying Lay,
Weak Spirits are there—who would ask,
Your feeble spirits! Greece her head hath bowed,
Where Spirits dwell in undisturbed repose—
Peace to their Spirits! why should Poesy
God reigns above, and Spirits strong
Not so that Pair whose youthful spirits dance
Spirits of Power, assembled there, complain
His weary spirits gather rest.
If there be prophets on whose spirits rest
And evil Spirits may our walk attend
Then be good Spirits free to breathe a note
Spirits that crowd the intellectual sphere
Blest Prisoners They, whose spirits were at large!
Demons and Spirits, many a dolorous groan
Holy and heavenly Spirits as they are
Blest while their Spirits from the woods ascend
For the perfected Spirits of the just!
And with immortal Spirits blend!
Of heaven contemplated by Spirits pure
To mix with hymns that Spirits make and hear;
But our immortal Spirits may
Uphold our Spirits urged to kindred flight
In angry spirits for her old free range,
Devoted thus, their spirits did unite.
Fair Spirits are abroad; in sportive chase
Thro' wastes, of Spirits wing'd the solemn home,
Then with despair's whole weight his spirits sink,
Shade of Caractacus, if spirits love
My easy spirits, and discontinuance
Spirits upon the stretch, and here and there
To a late hour), and spirits overwrought
Of the same Isthmus, which our spirits cross
Share with us thy fresh spirits, whether gift
The songs of spirits! Nor had Fancy fed
Like that of angels or commissioned spirits,
The incarnation of the spirits that move
And all the promptest of her spirits, linked
Of single spirits that catch the flame from Heaven,
Worthy of liberty, all spirits filled
Of the two spirits then at strife remained
That vision, given to spirits of the night
Have been prepared, not with the buoyant spirits

Spirits—continued.

Which craft of delicate Spirits hath composed —Vigorous in health, of hopeful spirits, undamped
Pausing at will—our spirits braced, our thoughts
Checking the finer spirits that refuse
And idle spirits:—there the sun himself,
Of Spirits in beatitude: my heart
My spirits, that they were bent on enterprise;
On wings, angelic Spirits! I could muse
Gay as our spirits, free as our desires;
Restore their languid spirits, and recall
Art everlasting, and the blessed Spirits
Which, to your overweening spirits, yields
Be joyless as the blind? Ambitious spirits—
Which hostile spirits silently allow;
Of subterranean Spirits feeding hope
If gladsome spirits, and benignant looks,
Of cordial spirits and vital temperament,
To the assembled spirits of just men
To us, with our sad spirits, heavenly-fair—
Thy lively spirits to partake,
Thy changes, which to wiser Spirits seem Spirit-saddening. Happy as they. With spiritsaddening power
Spirit-stirring. What spirit-stirring power it gained
Nor such the spirit-stirring note
Was then a spirit-stirring sound indeed
Spiritual. To catch the spiritual music of the hill,
Appeared, and spiritual presence gained a power
Than fairest spiritual creature of the groves,
Appeared, in presence of the spiritual eye
And trust that spiritual Creatures round us move,
Rotha, my Spiritual Child! this head was grey
And seemed to give me spiritual right
To bind his spiritual Progeny, with rules
The Might of spiritual sway! his thoughts, his dreams
She daunts, forth-thundering from her spiritual tower
Is by these shocks exhausted, spiritual truth
Hence, with the spiritual sovereignty transferred (Grave this within thy heart!) if spiritual things
Both names conjoined, but of thy spiritual care
Types of the spiritual Church which God hath
reared;
Of noble feeling, that those spiritual men,
Meanwhile this creature—spiritual almost
Less spiritual, with microscopic view
Whence spiritual dignity originates,
To hold it converse with the spiritual world,
This spiritual Love acts not nor can exist
The strain continued, spiritual as before;
A spiritual presence, oft-times misconceived,
The spiritual presences of absent things.
Under his spiritual sway. He hath vouchsafed
Made to the spiritual fabric of her Church;
To meet such trial from their spiritual sires
As to a spiritual comforter and friend,
With spiritual graces, like a glory, crowned."
Spiritually. Communications spiritually maintained,
Spiry. Of splendour—save the beacon's spiry head
A knot of spiry trees for ages grown
Spiry and dark, around their House of prayer,
That tips with eve's last gleam his spiry head.
Between romantic Dove-dale's spiry rocks;
Stationed alone upon a spiry rock
Spital. A lonely Spital, the belated swain
Spite. In spite of all the larks that cheered our path,
In spite of all my weary pain
Mine art thou—spite of these my tears.
Of blameless debt. On evil Fortune's spite
Or spite, if cause be given;
Spite of melancholy reason,
Spite of care, and spite of grief,
Dread pair that, spite of wind and weather,
For, spite of rumbling of the wheels,
Untouched;—in spite of many a gleam
Mysterious safeguard, that, in spite
Against the injuries of time, the spite
For, spite of sober Truth that sees
Yea, many overcome in spite
And, spite of change, for me thou keep'st the same
In spite of all that beauty may disown
Yet, spite of all this eager strife,
That haunted us in spite of what we knew.
147
Those practice teaches, spite of names to show
In spite of season's change, its own demand,
Through the whole land—to Manhood, moved in spite
For trust me well, in spite of thy quaint cry,
That countenance there fashioned, which, spite of a stain
And, in spite of the shame that may lurk in his mind,
Would now direct thy notice. Yet in spite
In spite of all temptation, we preserved
In spite of strongest disappointment, pleased.
In spite of those heart-bracing colloquies,
In spite of real fervour, and of that

Spite—continued.

For, spite of thy sweet influence and the touch
Of gentle thought in childhood, and in spite
In spite of all the weakness that life brings,
In spite of many a rough untoward blast,
Indifferent judges. 'Spite of proudest boast,
As if the moon had showered them down in spite.
If, spite of keenest eye and steadiest hand,
In spite of vice, and misery, and disease,
That spite of the defrauded Kitchen's prayers
Spited. I am spited by the world—
Spitful. Plunge, and fling back a spiteful ear,
Whither spiteful Satan steered;
When, to upset his spiteful mirth,
Like spiteful Fiends that vanish, crossed
Muttered on black and spiteful instigation
With spiteful graitude the huffed League,
Spleen. Provoked to envious spleen, he cast
And, in my spleen, I smiled that it was grey.

Moods melancholy, fits of spleen, that loved
Steeped in a self-indulging spleen, that wants not
To meditative spleen a grateful feast.
Battes on spleen, or moulders in despair?
For those cold humours of habitual spleen
Splendid. With splendid feathers dress;
Aod splendid aspect yon emblazonings
Now when the primrose makes a splendid show,
And by the vision splendid
Or all the gaudy pomp of splendid Vice,
The first division of the splendid feast,
It was a splendid evening, and my soul
But 'twas a splendid place, the door hest
To splendid garb, with hose of silk, and hair
And gorgeous ladies, under splendid domes,
Renowned for splendid prospect far and wide)
That Belus, nightly to his splendid couch
Or splendid than his garden could afford,
A splendid sight, together thus exposed;

Splendour. Of splendour—save the beacon's spiry
head
Of clouded splendour, on this dream-like sight
Outshine the splendour that imbues
And oft in splendour dost appear
His richest splendour—when his veering gait
Her darkness splendour gave, her silence power,
In his first splendour, valley, rock, or hill;
We watch their splendour, shall we covet storms,
Fair Star of evening, Splendour of the west,
In splendour: what strength was, that would not bend

Ability like splendour to endure:
In naked splendour, clear from mist or haze,
The splendour fled, and now the sunless hour
Of splendour unextinguished, pomp unscathed,
A crimson splendour: lowly is the mast
Perplexed as if between a splendour lost
Aod splendour slowly mustering. Since the Sun,
Of solemn splendour, in mutation slow,
—'Tis past, the visionary splendour fades;
Spares thy mild splendour; still those far-shot
beams
Its brightest splendour round a leafy wood;
In snow-white splendour,—think again; and taught

Of splendour in the grass, of glory in the flower;
Bestowed new splendour; the melodious birds,
The moon in splendour couched among the leaves
Were false, and in their splendour overwrought,
That rose in splendour, was alive, and moved
The splendour, which had given a festal air
Far sinking into splendour—without end!
Its wasted splendour to repair, the door
(What time the splendour of the setting sun
Shall stick new splendour on his gartered Grace.)
Splendour's. Queens gleaming through their splen-dour's last decay,
Splendours. Poising your splendours high above the heads
The morning's splendours to devour;
Her splendours, seen, not felt, the while he stood
Her morning splendours vanish, and their place
Thou, stately York! and Ye, whose splendours cheer

Or, having known the splendours of success,
The sunset splendours of a finished war
Aod the vain splendours of Imperial Rome?—
Of thy paternal splendours, and the pomp
Of those celestial splendours; grey the vail—
Splenetic. Of the gay mind, as ofttimes splenetic
youth
Splinter. Aod scattered many a lusty splinter
A chip or splinter—to resolve his doubts;
Splinters: The torrent would have dashed an oak to splinters.
The splinters took another road—
Split. Bent earthwards; he looks up—the clouds are split
Head, harp, and body, split asunder,
His brain will burn, his stout heart split asunder.
Their forefathers; lo! sects are formed, and split

Split—continued.

For thee, O great Italian nation, split
Split like a province into round and square?
Laws overturned; and territory split,
Mines opened, forests planted, and rocks split,
What wonder? on my soul 'twould split a tub
Split into parties by the fickle mind.

Spills. To a bold brook that splits for better speed, Spitting. From under Esthwaite's splitting fields of ice
Humanity, splitting the race of man
Spill. Of their rich Spoil, ere they recross the Border.
Made such wanton spoil and rout,
But gazed upon the spoil with silent joy.
Keen anglers with unusual spoil elated.

Spilled. See Spollt.
But she had surely spoil'd the boy:
Was a spoiled child, and, rambling like the wind,
Spiller. Deserted and deceived, the Spiller came Spiller's. 'Tis gone—a ruthless spoiler's prey,
Too long insulped by the Spiller's shock,
Spillers. Come Spillers—horde impelling horde,
And, like the haughty Spoilers of the world,
Spills. He spoils thy sport, and hinders mine:
Seeks for no trophies, struggles for no spoils
And thirst for bloody spoils abroad is paired
Who have put off their mortal spoils—ah no!
Rapaciously we gathered flowery spoils

Spillt. See Halt-spillt, Spollt.
Spoke. And groans that rage of racking famine
spoke;
This morning, when I spoke of weariness, even when he spoke to me, he kept them firmly sealed.
There, twisted between nave and spoke,
Forgive me, Sir: before I spoke to you,
And that same pond of which I spoke,
Is but a glimmering spoke in the swift wheel
I spoke (but let that pang be still)

Spoken. If this he idly spoken. See, they come,
My words were rashly spoken; I recall them:
Once only have you spoken, when the lark
"Grey-headed Shepherd, thou hast spoken well;
Fond words have oft been spoken to thee, Sleep!
This scarcely spoken, she again
Thao if the Goddess of the flower had spoken:
Her darling Alfred, might have spoken;
The vivid flashes of his spoken words.
Shall I be mute, ere thou be spoken of?
This scarcely spoken, and those holy strains
Without refreshment!" Quickly had he spoken,
Minutely spoken of that aged Lamp

Spongy. Unsounded, of spongy texture, yet vital Spontaneous. Thao Youth's spontaneous products; and to-day
And in due time the soft spontaneous shock,
In prompt obedience to spontaneous measures
Spontaneous wisdom breathed by health
Spontaneous wanders, hand in hand with Fear.
Spontaneously. Spontaneously to clothe in priestly robe
Spontaneously had his affections thrive
Spopt. Yet still, the sport of some malignant power,
They sport beneath that mountain's matchless
height

On evil instigation, to make sport
Dora! sport, as now thou sportest,
And joyless sylvan sport,
Of fears the prey, of hopes the sport;
To a contumacious of their fearless sport,
Nor dislike for her cruel sport the cat
In thy simplicity the sport
And sullen Goomes will learn to sport
He spoils thy sport, aod hinders mine:
Aod, when he chose to sport and play,
Aod he was free to sport and play.
Or, tired with sport, wouldst sink asleep
They tempt the sun to sport among their plumes;
We'll sport amid the boreal morning;
While flowing rivers yield a blameless sport,
Thy course and sport around thee softly fau—
Carelessly watched, sport through the summer day,
Unsatisfies our tears—made sport
Encouragement to sport or play;
"With rod and line I sued the sport
See them cleaving to the sport!
No sport of every random gust,
But Fortune, who had long been used to sport

120
Did Francis Beaumont sport, an eager child;
And see the Children sport upon the shore,
And wilder graces sport around their brow;
The sport of factious Hate or godless Zeal.
Had run abroad in wantonness, to sport,
And every hoyish sport, less grateful else
To the sport betook myself again.
Descending from the mountain to make sport
Its sport, or feeds in its proper element;
Objects of sport, and ridicule, and scorn,
Singed out me, as he in sport would say,

Spot—continued.

Snug as a child that hides itself in sport
The sport of Nature, aided by blind Chance
Is still the sport! Here Nature was my guide,
That timely light, to share his joyous sport:
That sport among green leaves, a blither train.

Spotted. Thus innocently sported, breaking forth
Where silent zephyrs sported with the dust

Sportiest. Dora! sport, as now thou sportest,

Sporting. I see him sporting on the sunny lawn;
Sporting with the leaves that fall,
Piping on boughs, or sporting on fresh fields,
Into fleet Oreads sporting visibly.

Sportive. When gentle Spirits urged a sportive chase,
The sportive outcry of the mocking owl;
If more divided than a sportive pair
In all its sportive wanderings, all the while,
Arch, volatile, a sportive bird
"She shall be sportive as the fawn
Their darling wiles, their sportive cheer?
This Stripling, sportive, gay, and bold
Of sportive wood run wild: these pastoral farms,
And kinde sportive wit—
Wherever sportive breezes bend
Light plaything for the sportive wind
That sportive dolphins drew.
For sportive youth to stray in;
Urged o'er the wilderness in sportive gallop.
It is not then when, swept with sportive ease,
Too weak to stand against its sportive breath,
Such shout as many a sportive echo meeting . . .

And fiction animate his sportive lyre,
Fair Spirits are abroad; in sportive chase
A sportive infant, who, for six months' space,
Turned this way—that way! sportive and alert
(The sportive bird's companion in the grove)
The sportive sea-gull dancing with the waves,
More had she said—but sportive shouts were heard

Sportively. Into a silent bay, or sportively

Sports. (Fancy that sports more desperately with minds
By martial sports,—or, seated in the tent,
Frank are the sports, the stans are fugitive.
For sports of wider range. Ere I had told
Haunting me thus among my boyish sports,
Or centre of these sports; and when, returned
And sports and games (too grateful in themselves,
Mad at their sports like withered leaves in winds;
A man of kindlier nature. The rough sports
Pleasing and pleased, he shared their simple sports,
Their sports together in the solar beam,
Loving the sports which once he gloried in,
Over her comrades; else their simple sports,
Or the clear moon. The queen of these gay sports,

Spot. Were there, below, a spot of holy ground
Sure, nature's God that spot to man had given
Of him whom passion rivets to the spot,
Here, where no trace of man the spot profanes,
The tempting spot with every sinew strained;
In spot so savage, but with shuddering pain;
It was a spot where, ancient woods fulfilled,
Was best, could I but shun the spot where man
might come.

And soon she reached a spot o'erhung with trees
Upon the self-same spot, in rain or storm,
I met a peasant near the spot; he told me,
Upon the self-same spot, still round and round,
Scarcely, by groping, had I reached the Spot,
All gathered to the spot, in open day
To dig for water on the spot, the Captain
And he was famished? Naked was the spot;
That both are guiltless, without spot or stain,
let us return to the spot;
I'll lead you to the spot;
To climb up to the spot whence the sound came;
This old man had a Daughter. To the spot
Rose from the spot;—the Daughter clapped her hands,
It was a spot which you may see
Him never saw I, nor the spot; but from an English Dame,
That, as he knew in what particular spot
The power of speech. Both left the spot in silence;
The loveliest spot that man hath ever found,
Dear Spot! which we have watched with tender heed,
Bright suns without a spot;
Alas! before I left the spot,
And unforewarned, that in some distant spot
—Soon did the spot become my other home,
Close to the spot where with his rod and line
The spot was made by Nature for herself;
Dwelt in a tranquil spot. And oftentimes
Of this fair Spot her flowers may bind,
We who in this sequestered spot
This spot is my paternal home,
Mark the spot to which I point!
That spot which seems so to thy mind!
There is a spot that seems to lie
And, till life's journey closed, the spot . . .

Spot—continued.

Seems changed into a pallid spot.
With such a charge in such a spot;
Poor Susan has passed by the spot, and has heard
Of human Beings, in the self-same spot!
But would you gladly view the spot,
The spot to which she goes;
Then to the spot away!
Approach the spot when she is there."
And gazed and gazed upon that darling spot.
"I'll build a pleasure-house upon this spot,
But something ails it now: the spot is curst.
That grafted, on so fair a spot,
To that green spot, so calm and green!
Across the deep and quiet spot . . .
Upon the spot where he had stood,
A spot where, in a sheltering cove,
Old Skiddaw will look down upon the Spot
That spot which no vicissitude can find?
In ours, the VALE OF FARRINGTON, let this spot
Thou com'st to man's abode the spot grew dearer
Of things, has fenced this fairest spot on earth.
Whose Fancy in this lonely Spot
To this small spot, his leafy shade;
Wild Relique! heauteous as the chosen spot . . .
More various in this favoured Spot;
In thy fresh beauty. "There! that dusky spot
Spot rich in all things that can soothe and please!
Hovered in air above the far-famed Spot. . .
Made known the spot where piety should raise
And all the Pomps of this frail "spot . . .
The genial spot had ever shown . . .
Which hath not left the spot unknown . . .
His presence to point out the spot where oace
This spot—his shadowy death-cup in his hand.
To dignify the spot that gives thee birth . . .
Of tillage-ground, that seemeth like a spot
Humanity is humble, finds no spot . . .
Turn towards the spot where, full in view,
Faint—but it reached that sheltered spot;
Of rising ground, you heathy spot!
A spot of shame to the sun's bright eye,
But calmly from the spot withdrew;
For pleasure made, a goodly spot,
Of people, sees them in one spot—
And less for both this savage spot;
Had sown the spot, that witnessed them, with seeds
A peaceful spot where Nature's gifts abound;
Thanks for the lessons of this Spot—fit school
Where are ye? Driven or venturing to the spot,
So from the spot whereon he stood,
The Dog had watched about the spot, . . .
Each field is then a hallowed spot,
Whether conducted to the spot by sighs
This Spot—at once unfolding sight so fair
Turn from a spot where neither sheltered road
Nor ever was; I sighed, and left the spot . . .

With door left open makes a gloomy spot,
Thus in the chosen spot a tie so strong
At this time, and on this spot,
A sanctuary seemed the spot
And when those rites had ceased, the Spot gave birth
A favourite spot of tournoament and war!
And make himself a freeman of this spot
This quiet spot; and, Stranger! not unmoved
She for her Son in that same spot did cry . . .
Come to the spot in wonder at the thing;
Forth from the spot he rideth up and down,
A spot, that angles at the riv'let's feet,
And emerald isles to spot the heights appear,
That made the calmest, fairest spot of earth,
I led my Lucy to the spot, "Look here!"
Yet, to this hour, the spot to me is dear . . .
As near and nearer to the spot we drew,
To a floating island, an amphibious spot . . .
And spot in which she lived, and through a grace
Fair is the spot, most beautiful the vale
Drew to the spot an anxious crowd; some looked
Let this one temple last, be this one spot
That to the spot which had perplexed us first
Upon the spot where she was born and reared;
The spectacle, by visiting the spot. . .
In haste, each spot of old or recent fame,
Of ancient Story, thought of each bright spot,
He walks about and looks upon the spot
From this last spot of earth, where Freedom now
Tarrying at will in many a pleasant spot . . .
My thirst I slaked, and, from the cheerless spot
The spot, though fair, was very desolate—
She loved this wretched spot, nor would for worlds
He thus imparted:—"In a spot that lies . . .
Among the mountains; even as if the spot
Upon a bed of heath;—full many a spot
Led toward the Cottage. Homely was the spot;
In spot so parsimoniously endowed,
And a few steps may bring us to the spot . . .
Lath to forsake the spot, and still more loth
A parting tribute to a spot that seemed

- For rest of body, perfect was the spot.
Something that makes this individual Spot,
Behold a dusky spot, a grove of Firs,
Spotless. To lead a Spirit, spotless as the blessed,
And make the spotless spirit of filial love
Whose means are fair and spotless as his ends,
Wrap in a winding-sheet of spotless snows!
White, radiant, spotless, exquisitely pure,
Her spotless limbs; and ventured to explore
From Calais with us, spotless in array.—
Now, on the margin of some spotless fountain,
(Whose tranquil pomp and spotless purity
Whose memory, spotless as the crystal beads
And what if Duddon's spotless flood receive
Is spotless, and holy, and gentle, and bright;

She gazed as on a pure and spotless gift

Haunting the spots with lonely cheer
Surely, from fairest spots of favoured lands,
Which fancied spots contending;
In lonely spots, become a slighted thing;
To spots remote, and draw his diagrams
Some miniature of famous spots or things,—
And on these spots with many gleams I looked
On this and other spots, as doth a man
And as the desert hath green spots, the sea
Not favoured spots alone, but the whole Earth,
There are in our existence spots of time,
From brooding clouds; shadows that lay in spots
The spots where such abide! But happier still

Where nature works in wild and craggy spots,
To his own hills, the spots where when a lamb

Spread—continued.

Through all the long green fields has spread,
The hudding twigs spread out their fan,
When, lo! the ice, so thinly spread,
And mists that spread the flying shroud;
Where ravens spread their plumy vans, at ease!
In bursts of outrage spread your judgments wide,
Spread for thyself the snares of tribulation,
Heaven's bounteous love through me is spread
When the lone shepherd sees the morning spread
In act, as hovering Angels when they spread
An area level as a Lake and spread

Spread, tiny nautilus, the living sail;
Should spread on Britain's favoured ground!
With plenty was his table spread;
Was spread a treacherous swamp,
With shapeless ruin spread around!
Here stood his threshold; here was spread the roof
"Thy name in this large world is spread abroad!
Know, that the honour of high God may spread,
Will live, and spread, and kindle: even such minds
No—he was One whose memory ought to spread
The choirs of Angels spread, triumphantly augmented.

Steal down the hills, and spread along the flood.
Spring up, his little all around him spread,
Oft as those sainted Rocks before him spread,
The chamber hearth with fresher boughs is spread,
The glory of evening was spread through the west;
Spread like a spacious Mere, we there could measure
Spread o'er the spangled sign-board, had dislodged
Saw blessings spread around me like a sea.
I felt the sentiment of Being spread Pored, watched, expected, listened, spread my thoughts
And spread them with a wider creeping; felt
Should spread from heart to heart; and stately groves,
A pensive feeling! It spread far and wide;
These spread like day, and something in the shape
Spread like a fragrance everywhere, when spring
The maiden spread the haycock in the sun,
Spread round my steps like sunshine o'er green fields.

Of music, martial tunes, and banners spread,
How widely spread the boughs, of that old tree
And through the nation spread a novel heat
Spread into madness of the many; blasts
But burst and spread in deluge through the land.
When the calamity spread far and wide—
And spread abroad the wings of Liberty,
Spread over time, past, present, and to come,
Of joy in widest commonality spread;
Spread by a brotherhood of lofty elms,
Springing afresh, had o'er the hay-field spread
While on the board she spread our evening meal,
Plague from this union spread, whose subtle hane
Spread like a halo round a misty moon,
Of comfort, spread over his pallid face,
And grief spread wide; but Man escaped the doom
Spread like a sea, in boundless solitude,
The ability to spread the blessings wide
Leaving behind of yellow radiance spread
A grateful couch was spread for our repose;
Spread, from disease, whose subtle injury lurks
Spread true religion and her genuine fruits)
Stern self-denial round him spread, with shade
By charm of measured words may spread o'er field, Whose sacred influence, spread through earth and
heaven,

Spread on the never-empty board, and drink
Spread with the spreading of her wealthy arts,
Like trees in forests,—spread through spacious tracts,
Was spread, and we partook a plain repast.
Whate'er exists hath properties that spread
With all the shapes over their surface spread:
The sting of human nature. Spread the law,
Of old Helvellyn spread their arms abroad
I would impart it, I would spread it wide,

Spreading. See Wide-spreading.

Spreading—continued.

We lay beneath a spreading oak,
For spreading truth, and making love expand.
To expectations spreading with wild growth,
Locarno! spreading out in width like Heaven,
Spreading from young to old, from old to young,
Through knowledge spreading and imperishable,
One body, spreading wide as clouds in heaven,
Spread with the spreading of her wealthy arts,
Tender emotions spreading from the heart
To watch the spreading lawns with cattle grazed, Mounts from the road, and spreads its moving shroud;
Sweet poison spreads along the listener's veins,
—Yet hast thou found that Freedom spreads her power
Devoured like pleasure ere it spreads
That spreads itself, some faery bold
Vainly Morning spreads the lure
Spreads with such a living grace
Of the pleasure it spreads through so thankful a
hand;
Her bosom heaves and spreads, her stature grows;
Evening spreads throughout the west!
Spreads o'er this tuft of heath, which now, attired
That spreads no waste; a social builder; one
Who, from a martial pageant, spreads
There spreads the famed Pacific Ocean!
And spreads in steadfast peace her brooding wing.
Spreads her arms, as if the general air
I love, where spreads the village lawn,
Another language spreads from coast to coast;
A gentler life spreads round the holy spires;
Spreads high conceits to maddening Fancy dear,
Spreads wide; though special mysteries multiply,
That slackens, and spreads wide a watery gleam,
That thickens, spreads, and, mingling fold with fold,
A church in every grove that spreads
And, as his tufts of leaves he spreads, content
When unforeseen distress spreads far and wide
That, while it only spreads a softening charm
Spreads out his limbs, while, yet unshorn, the Sheep,
Of snow and hoar-frost, spreads her fruits and her flowers,
Of high endeavours, daily spreads abroad
Through earth and sky, spreads widely, and sends deep.
Beyond all compass; spreads, and sends aloft
That, reaching to her gates, spreads east and west,
That spreads its leaves in unmoled peace,
That spreads into successive seas, he walks;
That spreads, in gentle pomp, its honied shade.
For England's hane.—When soothing darkness spreads
With gladness, thinking that the more it spreads
Joy spreads, and sorrow spreads; and this whole
Vale,
Sprig. To snatch a sprig from Chaucer's reverend hrow)—
Sprightly. Or sprightly maiden, of Love's court,
How they in sprightly dance are won
Tossing their heads in sprightly dance.
Of joy and sprightly thought.
The domination of the sprightly juice
And fits of sprightly malice do but bribe
Spring takes, O sprightly May! thy shape,
While mellow warble, sprightly trail,
Attuned, or sprightly, life resounding far.
The old Man rose, and with a sprightly mien
Said I, "The music and the sprightly scene
If not in beauty yet in sprightly air,
Upon his sprightly vigour cannot fix
Sprigs. Fresh sprigs of green box-wood, not six months before,
Spring. See Day-spring, Well-spring.
Joy's second spring and Hope's long-treasured
smile
* Twice did I spring to grasp his withered throat,
—A salient spring of energy; I mounted
Primroses, the Spring may love them—
Hither soon as spring is fled
Our pleasant home when spring began,
(It will be twelve years since when Spring returns)
—Supporting life by water from the spring,
Have we not seen the glories of the spring
And this sweet spring, the best beloved and best;
And character of gladness, as if Spring
Earth breathed in one great presence of the spring;
As cheerful as a grove in Spring: at length
Her forehead, like a breeze of Spring;
As merry as the birds in spring.
The snows dissolved, and genial Spring returned
All independent of the leafy spring.
* The leaves in myriads jump and spring,
"When spring came on with bud and bell,
Spring parts the clouds with softest airs,
Spring is coming, Thou art come!
In which this Child of Spring was reared
As hudding pines in spring;

Spring—continued.

The showers of the spring
Thrice welcome, darling of the Spring !
His nostril touched a spring beneath a hill,
The waters of the spring were trembling still.

How Providence educeth, from the spring
And thy erratic voice be faithful to the Spring !
Youthful as Spring.—Shade of departed Power,
Age ! twine thy brows with fresh spring flowers.

For victories there won by flower-crowned Spring,
A grateful coolness round that crystal Spring,
With jubilate from the choirs of Spring !
La ! busy towns spring up, on coasts !

For thy worst rage, forgotten. Off as Spring
Of the pure spring (they call it the "Nun's Well,"
On a spring holiday.
The spring beneath the tree ;

Spring takes, O sprightly May ! thy shape,
Such be our Spring, our Summer such ;
Or when the prattle of Bandusia's spring

Put on, to welcome spring, their best attire,
And this our parting spring.
Of everlasting Spring.
With a new burst of spring.

For when thy horns begin once more to spring,
May one blade of grass spring up over thy head ;
An everlasting spring ! in memory
Will fringe the lettered stone, and herbs spring forth,

From that forsaken spring ; and no one came
Among the dewy grass,—in early spring,
Of summer, autumn, winter, and of spring.
We parted.—'Twas the time of early spring ;
Peeped forth, to give an earnest of the Spring.

Spring—continued.

Replete with vivid promise, bright as spring."
In the sweet spring that lurks 'mid yon green fields ;
As the sole spring and fountain-head of tears,
Nor should I much condemn it, if it spring
Was watching at some novelty of spring,
Fall not to spring from either Parent's eye
Its very spring a season of decay !
Had tended them : and O pellucid Spring !
Nor yet, perchance, translucent Spring, had tolled
Thus while my fancy wanders, thou, clear Spring,
On thee, bright Spring, a bashful little one,
To thee, dear Spring, and all-sustaining Heaven !
To that high spring which bears no human name,
With all their Shepherds. But the gates of Spring
Have felt it, not the happy Quires of Spring,
Refine the selfishness from which they spring,
Spring-day. With a soft spring-day of holy,
Springs. With store of springs o'er my shoulder hung

Springeth. Man is as grass that springeth up at morn,
Springing. In haste, nor springing with a transient shower :
Inconstant glancing, mounts like springing fire,
Springing a fresh, had o'er the hay-field spread
And unthought pleasures springing up by chance ;
Spring's. Lovely as Spring's first rose ; a little dog,
The spring's first rose by you espied,
Of Spring's unclouded weather,
And peach and citron, in Spring's mildest breeze
Shoot forth with lively power at Spring's return ;
Spring's richest blossoms ; and ye may have marked,

Springs. See Mountain-springs.
Freshening the wilderness with shades and springs.
In copious showers, from earth by wholesome springs,
Upon the prey,—with leaps and springs
There were two springs which bubbled side by side,
In old America, whose secret springs . . .
Beside the springs of Dove,
Then up she springs as if on wings ;
The floweret as it springs,
Up springs the Sailor from his chair—
Or up the mountain springs ;
To Glendaramakin's lofty springs ;
Blest is that ground, where, o'er the springs
The simply-meek foretaste the springs . . .
Of Heaven doth in such wise, from humblest springs,

Forth to the gentle Ass he springs,
A simple answer ! but even so forth springs,
From genuine springs,
With no restraint, but such as springs
So that a doubt almost within me springs
Springs this indigenous produce far and near ;
He springs the hushed Volcano's mine,
As springs the lion from his den,
O'er blooming fields and gushing springs
Springs forth in presence of this gaudy show,
Trembling, I look upon the secret springs . . .
The turmoil hushed, celestial springs . . .
Their last embrace ; beside those crystal springs
Praised be the Rivers, from their mountain springs
Springs from the ground the morn to gratulate ;
And lofty springs give birth to lowly streams.
Enraptured Art draws from those sacred springs
That for human-kind springs out
Explore the countless springs of silent good ;
Not unadvisedly those secret springs . . .

O flower of all that springs from gentle blood,
Of which the rivers in their secret springs,
But hushed be every thought that springs
Freshening the waste of sand with shades and springs.
With it's own Virtues springs another earth :
Give them, beneath their breast while Gladness springs,
And follow Nature to her secret springs ;
On that through which I passed. Attention springs,
Long springs and tepid winters, on the banks
A smooth rock wet with constant springs) was seen
Of kindred hands that opened out the springs
Fixed on the Cross, that consolation springs,
By flowers embellished, and by springs refreshed.
Herbage that never fails : no grass springs up
Spring-tide. A spring-tide of immortal green :
Proud spring-tide swellings for a regular sea,

Spring-time. In the same nest, my spring-time one with thine.
It seemed as if the spring-time came not here,
In spring-time from the Cuckoo-bird,
The prostrate, then my spring-time is renewed,
Thither he comes with spring-time, there abides
In balmy spring-time full of rising flowers
Their spring-time with one love, and that have need
Sprinkles. Thy lowly cots that sprinkle all the shore,
I sprinkle thee with soft celestial dews,
I better love to sprinkle on the sod . . .

Sprinkled. See Cottage-sprinkled, Daw-sprinkled, Holly-sprinkled.
 And juniper and thistle, sprinkled o'er,
 His flock, along the woodland's edge with relics
 sprinkled o'er 23 Yew-tree 29
 With Ships the sea was sprinkled far and nigh,
 Hail to the fields—with Dwelling's sprinkled o'er,
 Yet spake this Child when sprinkled was the water;
 Of pleasure sprinkled over, shady dells
 A kerchief sprinkled with his master's blood,
 Sprinkled,—be our Companion while we track
Sprinkles. Covers, or sprinkles o'er, yon village
 green?
 Sprinkles these little pastures but the same
Sprinkling. Thy hand here sprinkling tiny flowers,
 The little sprinkling of cold earth that fell
 Insinuated, sprinkling all the shore,
 Sprinkling this talk with questions, better spared,
Sprinklings. Leaf-scattering winds; and hoar-frost sprinklings fell
 What sprinklings of blithe company!
 The season's sprinklings of ripe strawberry fruit.
 Prolonged till sprinklings of autumnal snow
 Bright sprinklings of all human excellence,
Sprite. "Trust, angry Bard! a knowing Sprite,
 Where is he that giddy Sprite,
 Repentance is a tender Sprite;
 The kitten frolic, like a gamesome sprite,
 And Care waylays their steps—a Sprite
Sprites. Glance to and fro, like airy Sprites
Sprout. The leafy antlers sprout;
Sprouting. See Thicketly-sprouting.
Sprung. From which her graces and her honours sprung:
 From Indian blood you deem him sprung:
 From Hebrew fountains sprung;
 Conscious of blessedness, but, whence it sprung,
 Of admiration sprung from truth;
 Which Milton held.—In every thing we are sprung
 And ye, Pierian Sisters, sprung from Jove
 Now, from Heaven-sanctioned victory, Peace is sprung;
 Though sprung from bleeding war, is one of pure delight;
 Like something out of Ocean sprung
 What crimes from hate, or desperate love, have sprung;
 A waste of hope?—From this sad source have sprung
 As if a Church, though spruog from heaven, must owe
 If loves and joys, while up they sprung,
 Or haply sprung from vaunting Cowardice
 Of chieftains sprung, who stoutly bore
 "From Gallic parents sprung,
 With two collateral stems sprung from one root;
 Forth rushed from Envy sprung and Self-conceit,
 From its Hero is sprung.
 To duty, might have sprung up of itself
 Had sprung, their transmigrations, when and how
 Of mortal power unquestionably sprung)
 Had sprung, like those bright creatures, from the soil
 Sprung from the desert? And behold a city
 Though from another sprung, different in kind:
 That it had sprung self-raised from earth, or grown,
 Sprung from high Jove, of sage Mnemosyne
 Already hath sprung up within my heart
Spun. A daughter sent to service, a web spun,
 "For there," said he, "are spun
 Indulgent centuries spun a thread,
 Unhallowed threads of revelry are spun;
 All day she spun in her poor dwelling;
 Or Reason's? No—hopes spun in timid line
 By youthful squires; adventures endless, spun
 A leprous stain I ere half his thread was spun
Spur. There is no need of boot or spur,
 Steeps willingly to animate and spur
 May spur me on, in manhood now mature,
 And eager to spur on, the galloping steed;
 With whip and spur we through the chantry flew Spur-clad. Spur-clad his nervous feet, and firm his tread;
Spurious. False Shame discarded, spurious Fame despised,
 And shapes of spurious fame and short-lived praise
 This spurious virtue, rather let it bear
 Of spurious notions—worn as open signs
Spurn. Or (if need be) impediment to spurn,
 Less than divine command they spurn;
 From some high-minded Slave, impelled to spurn
 Spurn Reason's law and humour Passion's rage;
 Spurn the soft fetters of lethargic rest.
Spurned. Well!—he has often spurned me like a toad,
 With haughty indignation, spurned the thought
 But him the haughty Warder spurned;
 And humours change, are spurned like weeds:

Spurned—continued.

 Spurning the unprofitable yoke of care 238 P. B. 172

 A desperate form appears, that spurs his steed,
 The whip, the cap, and spurs, thy praise attest;
Spy. Of the sun peeping through the clouds can spy,
 You yet may spy the lawn at play,
 Joys to spy thee near her home;
 There sits he; in his face you spy
 Must spy about him far and near:
 That looks for evil like a treacherous spy;
 Should sometimes think, where'er they chance to spy
 The veil, or where it parts at once, to spy
Squadrons. Your squadrons to an endless flight of

 And sent him forth, with squadrons of his kind, 321 Humanity, delighting* 29
 Sonorous squadrons sing their evening hymn.
Squallid. A creature, squalid, vengeful, and impure;
Square. In great and small, in round and square,
 From this platform, eight feet square, 128 Idiot Boy 208
 Mantling in the tiny square.
 The Showman chooses well his place, 'tis Leicester's busy Square;
 Three aspens at three corners of a square;
 Half wasted the square mound of tawny green;
 Loog, barren silence, square with my desire;
 In square divisions parcelled out and all
 Of native rock, left midway in the square
 Split like a province into round and square?
 Him saw I, sitting in an open square,
 I crossed the square (an empty area then!)
Squares. Adorning flowery gardens, 'mid vast squares;
Squeak. A grand domain to squeak and gibber in.

Squeamish. That some there are, squeamish half-thinking cowards,
 The squeamish in taste, and the narrow of mind,
Squire. See Esquire.

 Knight, squire, and yeoman, page and groom:
 The Squire is come: is his daughter Bess
 "Hold!" cried the Squire, "against the rules
 When squire, and priest, and they who round them

 Of country 'squire; or at the stater board
Squires. From many knights and many squares

Stability. Heaved over ruin with stability
 Stability without regret or fear;
Stable. Undaunted, lofty, calm, and stable,
 Could cleanse the Augean stable, by the night
 Whose root is fixed in stable earth, whose head

 "The staff I well remember which upbore
 That staff of yours, I could almost have heart
 His staff—his figure—Murder!—Innocent!
 Sit unmolested on his staff.—Innocent!
 God and that staff are now thy only guides.
 His staff had dropped, and close upon the brink
 With staff in hand across the cleft
 His shepherd's staff; fur on that Pillar of rock
 "Up, Timothy, up with your staff and away!
 Old Timothy took up his staff, and he shut
 Due requisites a perfect shepherd's staff,
 Though nought was left undone which staff, or

 Stirred with his staff, and fixedly did look
 The staff was raised to loftier height, 238 P. B. 193

Staff—continued.

His staff high-raising, in the pride
 He lifts his head, he sees his staff ;
 And downward thrust his staff, intent
 Nor dares to move unpropred upon the staff
 Propped on a staff, and, through the sullen day,
 That Wisdom wears, or take his treacherous staff
 Then did he seize the staff, and say :
 Or staff more harmless than a shepherd's crook,
 Thy warlike person with the staff and scrip ;
 Were mine the trusty staff that Jewels gave
 Which staff and cockle hat and sandal shoon
 And lean upon a peasant's staff.
 Upon a living staff, with borrowed sight.
 What is truth ?—a staff rejected ;
 Had placed his staff across the broad smooth stone
 Approached within the length of half his staff.
 His staff trails with him ; scarcely do his feet
 His staff is a sceptre—his grey hairs a crown ;
 So with his staff the Cripple wrought
 And blind Authority heating with his staff
 No dog attending, by no staff sustained,
 An oaken staff by me yet unobserved—
 A staff which must have dropt from his slack hand
 With a long staff upon the sand, and thus
 Not slow to share my wishes, took his staff,
 His staff pretending like a hunter's spear,
 Veiled now, or pilgrim resting on his staff ;
 But now, relinquishing the scrip and staff,
 An iron-pointed staff lay at his side.
 Turned toward the sun then setting, while that staff
 Who now, with no appendage but a staff,
 I took my staff, and, when I kissed her bahe,
 Upon the self-same nail ; his very staff
 Of hopeful preparation, grasped his staff ;
 Accoutred with his burthen and his staff ;
 Let us proceed." Then, pointing with his staff
 Ascended, with his staff and faithful dog ;
 The outcry of his son : he stretched his staff
Staffs. And grey-haired sires, on staffs supported,
 Or is the painted staffs [? staff's] avenging host
Staff-supported. That hearded, staff-supported Sire—Stag. "And, gallant Stag! to make thy praises
 known,
 Nor paused, till o'er the stag he blew
Stag. Move, as the verdure leads, from stage to stage ;
 But sickness stopped me in an early stage
 What time his injured country is a stage
 From yon steep mountain's loftiest stage,
 On the third stage of thy great destiny,
 Which troy Elves impressed ;—on that smooth stage
 Hurl'd down a mountain-cove from stage to stage,
 One duty more, last stage of this ascent,
 Stage above stage) would sit this Island's King,
 Nothing ? Heaven keeps us from a lower stage !
 And nearer interests culled from the opening stage
 Though sure of plaudits on his costly stage,
 With which his genius shook the buskined stage.
 Filling from time to time his "humorous stage"
 The summer loog to feed from stage to stage ;
 He dons his coat of darkness : on the stage
 His little stage in the vast theatre,
 And measured passions of the stage, albeit
 Before the ermined judge, or that great stage
 Upwards through every stage of the tall stem,
 Into a theatre, whose stage was filled
 When the bodily eye, in every stage of life
 "A child of earth, I rested, in that stage
 Big passions strutting on a petty stage ;
 Of the ostentatious world—a swelling stage
 Heels over head, like tumblers on a stage.
Stagger. I stagger onward—heaven knows how ;
 O Liberty ! they stagger at the shock
 I saw thee stagger in the summer breeze
Staggered. The poor Ass staggered with the shock ;
 And the rocks staggered all around—
Staggering. At home, go staggering through the slippery fords,
 Then, if a widow, staggering with the blow
Stag-horn. We call stag-horn, or fox's tail,
 Stand like an oak whose stag-horn branches start
Stagnant. From her sunk eyes a stagnant tear
 And let the grollver slip his stagnant pool,
 Of stagnant waters : altar, sword, and pen,
Stagnates. Nor stagnates, nor precipitates his course,
Stagyrite. And all the wisdom of the Stagyrite,
Staid. See Stayed.
 Clear-sighted Honour, and his staid Compeers,
 To reassume a staid simplicity.
 Firm self-denial, manners grave and staid,
 With woman's gentleness, yet firm and staid ;
 Had staid his oars, and touched the jutting pier,
 Of maids and youths, old men, and matrons staid,
 From some staid guardian of the public peace,
 —Those transports, with staid looks of pure good-
 will,
Stain. That both are guiltless, without spot or stain,
 Her eyebrows have a rusty stain,

Stain—continued.

Fair are ye both, and both are free from stain :
 Or in the dust, a crimson stain.
 A stain—as of a drop of blood
 So snugly for that crimson stain,
 From stain or taint ; in which thy blameless mind
 Like wreaths of vapour without stain or blot.
 Stain her cheek in future years—
 Plumes that might catch, but cannot keep, a stain ;
 That countenance there fashioned, which, spite of a stain
 Shall stain this votive lay ;
 Britain, who thought to stain the field was fame,
 Though in virtue's proud mouth thy report be a
 stain,
 The original stain, the child is there received.
 Of all dishonour, cleansed from mortal stain.
 A leprous stain ! ere half his thread was spun Stained. See Blood-stained.
 Desperate the Maid—the Youth is stained with blood ;
 Hath stained the robes of civil power with blood,
 The grove, and stained the turf with gore ;
 Stained and polluted, brighten as they roll,
 The rivers stained so oft with human gore,
 Was in the limpid age of this stained world
Stainless. With stainless touch, as chaste as when thy praise
Stains. See Weather-stains.
 There are stains in that frock
 I saw the stains of blood upon my clothes—
 But, for the stains of blood—
 Is gone—, but not the subtle stains
 War's favourite playground, are with crimson stains
 Frank are the sports, the stains are fugitive,
 That shield from mischief and preserve from stains
 I come—thy stains to wash away,
 With dull red stains discoloured, and stuck o'er
Stair. The wide-spread boughs, for view of door, window, and stair that wound
 Thou rocky corner in the lowest stair
 And climb the winding stair that once
 The darksome windings of a broken stair,
Stairs. See Cottage-stairs.
 They run up stairs in gamesome race ;
 And up the cottage stairs she hies,
 All, while he slept, treading the pendent stairs
 Scrub lives a genuine Marquess above stairs,
Stake. Of life's uneasy game the stake,
 Is it a fiend that to a stake
 Corded, and burning at the social stake :
 Firm as the stake to which with iron hand
Stale. In which the meagre, stale, forbidding ways
Stalk. Thence issuing often with unwieldy stalk,
 Then will hang on every stalk,
 That, from the dandelion's naked stalk,
 This flute, made of a hemlock stalk,
 By which true Sway doth mount ; this is the stalk
 Ere they descend to nourish root and stalk
 Sons, mothers, maidens withering on the stalk,
 Thence issuing oft, unwieldy as ye stalk,
 But the green stalk of Ellen's life was snapped, Stalked. Where stalked the huge deer to his shaggy lair
Stalking. And hideous aspect, stalking round and round !
 And stalking pillars built of fiery sand.
 In size a giant, stalking through thick fog,
Stalks. Pride of his sister-wives, the monarch stalks ;
 Stalks round—abhorred by Heaven, a terror to the Earth !
 With his red stalks upon this sunny day !
 Gaz'd by his sister-wives, the monarch stalks ;
 Bare steeps, where Desolation stalks, afraid,
 Where Discord stalks dilating, every hour,
Stall. They came to lowly bench or sculptured stall,
 From her unworthy seat, the cloudy stall
 Booths are there none ; a stall or two is here ;
 While at the stall he read. Among the hills
Stalled. Or rather like a stalled ox debarr'd
Stalls. See Book-stalls.
Stammerer. No stammerer of a minute, painfully
Stamp. Your justice stamp upon his evil deeds
 To mould and stamp the ore of thought
 Of the whole place should bear a stamp of awe ;
 Some'ement to stamp her image on
 The State, as if to stamp the final seal
 Nor Miss Taylor, Captain Stamp,
Stamped. Round strath and mountain, stamped by the ancient tongue
 And twice five summers on my mind had stamped
Stend. But now with other mind I stand alone
 Stand motionless, to awful silence bound :
 Thy secrets, thou that lov'st to stand and hear
 How wilt thou stand alone ? Is he not strong ?
 Stand like an isthmus 'twixt two stormy seas
 Here where we stand—that tribe of vulgar wretches
 The wind should pipe a little, while we stand
 To stand upon our guard, and with our swords
 But that they cannot stand up of themselves ;

Stand—continued.

Here do I stand, alone, to helplessness,
That she revealed the truth. Stand by me now;
The weakest of God's creatures, stand resolved
Whose good deeds will not stand by their own
light;
Why stand you thus, good Betty Foy?
But soon as Luke, full ten years old, could stand
And that herself and hers should stand upright
Suddenly halting now—a lifeless stand!
Some nook where they had made their final stand,
To stand or go is at their pleasure;
Whether they should stand or go;
Summons his horses to a stand,
Stand back, and you shall see her gratis!
The horses made a quiet stand;
They stand the wonder of the bowers
While here I stand, not only with the sense
In seemingly order stand,
Shed from thy countenance, as I see thee stand
Has raised thy spirit to a peaceful stand
Of Persian mornings would ye fill, and stand
As flowers, stand side by side;
Will stand though to the centre hewn;
Yet he repines not, if his thought stand clear,

May lead the thoughts, thus struggling used to stand
Of Viama! ? There I seem to stand,
By Art's hold privilege Warrior and War-horse stand
Profane Despoilers, stand ye not reproved,
"All kinds, and creatures, stand and fall
There where you see his Image stand
How they with dignity may stand; or fall,
Were with herself at strife, would take your stand,
That we must stand unpropped, or be laid low!
To think that such assurance can stand fast!
Stand in the spacious firmament of time,
But Thou art foremost in the field:—there stand:
Pupils of Heaven, in order stand
Knights each in order as ye stand
And mausoleum pomp? Yet here they stand
Belike less happy.—Stand no more aloof!
The Claphams and Mauleverers stand;
While stand the people in a ring,
And now before this Pile we stand
Spurned it, like something that would stand
—Stand forth, my Sons!—these eight are mice,
Behold!—and from his Son whose stand
He takes alone his far-off stand,
Her duty is to stand and wait!
Against a thousand cannot stand;
To spread its arms, and stand for aye.
He felt—and made a sudden stand.
Her soul doth in itself stand fast,
Where Angus stand, the Future questioning,
Lo! Discord at the altar dares to stand
Beautiful strangers, stand within the pale
Of Faith stand coupled for a common flight!
Amid the shuddering throng doth Cranmer stand;
May-garlands, there let the holy altar stand
But, rooted here, I stand and gaze
Why stand we gazing on the sparkling Brine,
And by one Votary who at will might stand
Methinks, I see him stand,
Will gladly stand a monument of thee.
Too weak to stand against its sportive breath,
Rises by open means; and there will stand
Who, not content that former worth stand fast,
Before the STONE OF POWER no longer stand—
Where Christian Martyrs stand in hues portrayed,
If generous Loyalty must stand in awe
No sooner stand attired
Whence the blithe hail? behold a Peasant stand

Thus looking out did Harry stand:
Stand yet, but, Stranger! hidden from thy view,
With a look of such earnestness often will stand,
Or stand between his knees again.
Once more on English earth they stand:
Stand—sacred as a Shrine;
Shall stand a votive Tablet, haply free,
The imperfect record, there, may stand unblamed
But now with other soul I stand alone
As they in order stand, the dainty fare;
Or image unprofaned; and I would stand,
All studded round, as thick as chairs could stand,
Where all stand single; this I feel, and make
Though I had learnt betimes to stand unpropped,
Rising or setting, would he stand alone
The cross of Jesus stand erect, as if
On outward forms—did we in presence stand
Stand like an oak whose stag-horn branches start
Good, pure, which no one could stand up against,
Stand near the wealthiest of Antiquity)
Between the sovereign and the people stand,
Our prayers have been accepted; thou wilt stand
Of something false and weak, that could not stand
In Nature's presence stood, as now I stand,
And so shall stand for ever. Dearest Friend!

Stand—continued.

For they are each in each, and cannot stand
In hardy independence, to stand up
Unnoticed did I stand some minutes' space.
I followed, till he made a sudden stand:
Should the tale tire you, let this challenge stand
I stand—the chasm of sky above my head
The place where now we stand) that certain men
Do, in my present censure, stand redeemed
Had been supplanted, could I hope to stand—
Of the pure intellect, that stand as laws
And stand in freedom loosened from this world,
"Life's autumn past, I stand on winter's verge;
Of endless agitation. Here you stand,
Or rather, as we stand on holy earth,
And hidrances with which they stand beset.
Cast down while confident in strength they stand,
Upon its site, a dial, that might stand
The Mother oft was seen to stand, or kneel
But that the heaven-born poet must stand forth,
In him to stand before my swimming eyes,
Of greedy forestate, from the secret stand
On which they stand; as if thereby they drew
Till the swift vehicle approach, they stand;
That when we stand upon our native soil,
Such as they are who in thy presence stand
But soon as Luke, full ten years old, could stand
No, we are not alone, we do not stand,
I would stand clear, but yet to me I feel
And tottering towers; I loved to stand and read Standard. That Cross belike he also raised as a standard for the true
"Uplift the Standard!" was the cry
To guard the Standard which he bore.
The Standard trusting to the care
The Standard, on the Sacred Wain
"A rescue for the Standard!" cried
But, see, the sacred Standard falls!
The Standard; and where Francis lay
A standard, often useful applied,
His notions to this standard; on this rock
Standards. Tempt the vague will tried standards to disown;
Standers-by. Of a thousand standers-by,
Though he, and all the standers-by,
By all the standers-by reversed.
Standeth. Saint Nicholas in my presence standeth aye
As one that standeth betwixt hope and dread.
Standing. See Low-standing, Sole-standing.
But standing, walking, stretching forth his arms,
This heech is standing by, its covert thou canst gain;
It chanced that I saw standing in a dell
I saw three pillars standing in a line,—
The poor Ass standing by her side,
Yet standing in the clear moonshine;
So might I, standing on this pleasant lea,
Here standing by thy grave.
And standing upright and alone,
Is standing with a voice of power,
Who, standing on this old church tower,
An unblest work; which, standing by,
Is silent as a standing pool;
Lie in forbearance, strength in standing still?
Now standing forth an offering to the blast,
And this huge Castle, standing here sublime,
Standing alone, and at his feet.
Standing to gaze upon her while she hung
Standing alone, as from a rampart's edge,
France standing on the top of golden hours,
Too fine to be pursued; or stoading forth.
If nature then be standing on the brink
I yet was standing, freely to respire,
I talk—and ye are standing in the sun
Standing before the multitude, beset
Standing apart; with curv'd arm reclined
Standing before us:—"Did you note the mien
Here standing, with the unvoyageable sky
Who there was standing on the open hill,
A standing grievance, an indigenous vice Stands. While silent stands the admiring crowd below,
Within a temple stands an awful sbrice,
Nay, Traveller! rest. This lonely Yew-tree stands
A structure stands, which two bare slopes enclose.
No—no—the thing stands clear of mystery;
I will attend you to a Hut that stands
A lonesome Chapel stands, deserted now:
For length of days so much revered, so famous where it stands.
Which stands the universal empire's boast;
Stands fixed, her face with joy o'erflows,
She stops, she stands, she looks about;
At a short distance from my cottage, stands
Which to this day stands single, in the midst
So He, where he stands, is a centre of light;
He stands, backed by the wall;—he abates not his din;
Calm, though impatient, is the crowd; each stands
ready with the fee,

Star-likes. Of Commonwealths, each city a starlike seat
 Or, crowning, star-like, each some sovereign height,
 With star-like virtue in its place may shine,
Star-of-Bethlehem. Another Star-of-Bethlehem find,
Starry. Glittered at evening like a starry sky ;
 Now, beneath the starry sky,
 Yet, sooth, those little starry specks,
 The silence that is in the starry sky,
 Among the starry courts of Jove,
 And every motion of his starry train
 Time pressing on with starry crest
 Streaming from founts above the starry sky,
 Lodged above the starry pole ;
 With starry lustre ; yet had power to throw
 Shall live enrolled above the starry spheres.
 The starry zone of sovereign height—
 The starry treasure from the blue profound
 Perused, with him, the starry sky ;
 Might range the starry ether for a crown
 With orb and cycle girds the starry throng.
 Sad thoughts ; for from above the starry sphere
 Blest the starry promises—
 On earth, air, ocean, or the starry sky,
 A starry multitude.
 Waters on a starry night
 Of those soft starry nights, and that old Dame
 Uplifted, pointing to the starry sky
 For so it seemed, felt by the starry heavens.
 The mild assemblage of the starry heavens ;
Stars. The stars pre-eminent in magnitude,
 The sun at morning, and the stars at night,
 Bright stars of ice and azure fields of snow ;
 Glitter the stars above, and all is black below.
 And count the stars. That dog of his, you are sure,
 that my ill stars have kept me abroad to-night ;
 The dew was falling fast, the stars began to blink ;
 Of this rude church-yard, till the stars appeared
 The stars, they were among my dreams ;
 Of moon or stars he takes no heed ;
 By this the stars were almost gone,
 'Tis well that some sage instinct, when the stars
 Her speech, until the stars of night
 Though 'mid the stars the Lyre shine bright,
 But where the scattered stars are seen
 Benjamin, among the stars,
 Followed by multitudes of stars, that, small
 Her eyes as stars of Twilight fair ;
 "The stars of midnight shall be dear
 Continuous as the stars that shine—
 Life which the very stars reprove
 The stars had feelings, which they sent
 In spikes, in branches, and in stars,
 When all the stars shone clear and bright,
 (More fair than heaven's broad causeway paved with stars)
 Not unassisted by the flattering stars,
 Like stars, at various heights ;
 And earth and stars composed a universal heaven!
 Bends to the favourite burthen. Moon and stars
 The grave shall open, quench the stars.
 Among the scattered stars.
 Up goes my Boat among the stars
 Leaving ten thousand stars beneath her :
 Among the stars, the stars now hiding,
 And now the stars adorning.
 And little lot of stars :
 And for the stars he cared as little,
 Sun, moon, and stars, all struggle in the toils
 Or quit the stars with a lingering farewell—how
 Like stars in heaven, and joyously it showed ;
 While the stars shine, or while day's purple eye
 And all her twinkling stars. Who now would tread,
 The flood, the stars—a spectacle as old
 And all the stars, fast as the clouds were riven,
 The stars are mansions built by Nature's hand,
 To winds abandoned and the prying stars,
 Beyond the stars, celestial Paradise.
 All that he holds in common with the stars,
 The sun, the day ; the stars, the night ;
 And stars that in their courses fought ;
 The stars dim-twinkling through their forms !
 A vivid repetition of the stars ;
 Where towns and cities thick as stars appear,
 To fix in heaven her shape distinct with stars.
 Impetuous motion to the Stars above her.
 On sun, moon, stars, the ether elements,
 And, if that fail, consult the Stars
 Sun, moon, and stars, and beast of chase or prey ;
 Moistened each fleece, beneath the twinkling stars
 That doth the living stars repel,
 Like stars when clouds are rolled away ;
 That intimation when the stars were shaped ;
 The midnight stars outshining, or the blaze
 Hark ! 'tis the tolling Curfew—the stars shine ;
 A guiding ray ; or seen—like stars on high,
 The silent Cross, among the stars shall spread
 Look for the stars, you'll say that there are none ;
 The stars are out by twos and threes,
 Queen of the stars—so gentle, so benign,

Stars—continued.

The silent stars, among the angelic quire,
 The air controlled, the stars their courses held ;
 Pyramid pointing to the stars,
 Thou dost preserve the stars from wrong ;
 Trembled the groves, the stars grew pale,
 Cynthia, who puts the little stars to flight,
 Might carry to the clouds and to the stars,
 Yea, to the stars, if they were born
 And, if she trust the stars above
 The sun at morning, and the stars of night,
 Bright stars of ice and azure worlds of snow,
 Clustered like stars some few, but single most,
 Like separated stars with clouds between.
 Had noted well the stars, all flowers that grew
 That anxious visitation ; —moon and stars
 Was nothing but the stars and the grey sky.
 Towered up between me and the stars, and still,
 Of melancholy not unnoticed, while the stars
 When all the ground was dark, and twinkling stars
 Under the quiet stars, and at that time
 Of moon or favouring stars, I could behold
 Spangled with kindred multitudes of stars,
 Of Camp sailed boisterously, and let the stars
 The stars of Heaven, now seen in their old haunts—
 The one that held acquaintance with the stars,
 The inside of the earth, and spell the stars ;
 At evening, when the earliest stars began,
 Dimming the stars, and fireworks magical,
 With fancies thick as his inspiring stars,
 Moonlight and stars, and empty streets, and sounds
 And all the several frames of things, like stars,
 Was there nor loss ; only the inferior stars
 Familiar, and a favourite of the stars ;
 Shines, in the brightest of ten thousand stars,
 Beheld the stars come out above his head,
 His triangles—they were the stars of heaven,
 The silent stars ! Off did he take delight
 And, ere the stars were visible, had reached
 Sparkle the stars, as of their station proud.
 Bore stars—illumination of all gems !
 In which the everlasting stars abide ;
 Took their last farewell of the sun and stars,
 Numerous as stars ; that, by their onward lapse,
 *Rage on, ye elements ! let moon and stars
 Presented sacrifice to moon and stars,
 Led on, those shepherds made report of stars
 Swept in the storm of chase ; as moon and stars
 When issue forth the first pale stars, is heard,
 Upon her memory, faithfully as stars
 Till the stars, sick at the day of doom.
 To the Twelfth Night, beneath the frosty stars
 The stars of human glory are cast down ;
 His recollections, "and the punctual stars,
 In all things, in all natures ; in the stars
 The primal duties shine aloft—like stars ;
 The stars shine brightly between clouds at rest,
 And whisper while the stars twinkle among them
 Some little feeble stars, but all is thine,
 A moon among her stars, a mighty vale,
 The sage has read the stars with skill so true,
Star-shaped. The beauty of its star-shaped shadow, thrown
Star-spotted. Heard, by star-spotted bays, beneath
 the steep ;
Start. And start the astonished shades at female eyes.
 And groans which, as they said, might make a dead man start.
 You start—where are we ? Oh, there is no danger ;
 Start not !—Here is another face hard by ;
 Nay ! start not at that sparkling light ;
 And he belike will flinch or start,
 But whence that sudden check ? that fearful start !
 And start from the beginning."
 "Nay, start not !—wedded wives—and twelve !"
 From his own thoughts did Peter start ;
 And counted them : and oftentimes will start—
 The tear will start, and let it flow ;
 Nay ! start not at that Figure—there !
 One tribute more : unbidden feelings start
 And smothered joys into new being start...
 In him who at the ghost of guilt doth start.
 Sees spires fast sinking—up again to start !
 Might leap, the weakest nerve of superstition start ;
 Start at the reliques of that very thill,
 From the roots of his hair there shall start
 Slow sink the Spires,—and up again they start !
 Such as start forth, not seldom, to approve
 Stand like an oak whose stag-horn branches start
 The days departed start again to life,
 So have we lingered. Now we start afresh
 Yet at this very moment do tears start
 Trying their strength, enforced him to start up,
 Should start out of his earthy, worm-like state,
Starled. started—seeming to spy
 The hare has just started from Hamilton's grounds,
 See a hare before him started !
 We started, looked again with anxious eyes,

Stalitest—continued.

Of stalist architecture, where the Forms
Stately. He saw and passed a stately inn, full sure
 So stately, of the Queen Osmunda named;
 A stately Fir-grove, whither I was wont
 Some, perched on stems of stately port
 If stately passions in me burn,
 A gallant stately Man-of-war,
 The stately waggon is ascending,
 And of his stately Charge, which none
 Shall rear her form to stately height,
 Near the stately Pantheon you'll meet with the same
 And stately needs must have their share
 Of ordinary men; a stately speech;
 But stately in the main; and, when he ended,
 Great Jove is full of stately howers
 Whose realm had dwindled to one stately room;
 Chatsworth! thy stately mansion, and the pride
 And stately forest where the wild deer rove;
 Under the shadow of a stately Pile,
 Into a Brook of loud and stately march,
 In stately mien to sovereign Thames allied
 As might besem a stately embassy,
 Rose up, this stately Priory!
 And Castle like a stately crown
 Herself most like a stately flower,
 Thou, stately York! and Ye, whose splendours cheer
 CROGLIN, the stately Eden's tributary!
 A stately Priory!"
 The stately Priory was reared;
 Her temples, fearless for the stately work,
 And all its stately trees, are passed away,
 And be not slow a stately growth to rear
 To stately Hall and Cottage rude
 Stately, and burning in his pride, divides
 Save when, amid the stately grove of oaks,
 Should spread from heart to heart; and stately
 groves,
 A stately air of mild indifference,
 With their thin umbrage, on the stately roads
 Of deep and stately vales! A lonely pair
 The Jew; the stately and slow-moving Turk,
 Washed by the current of the stately Loire.
 —Hail Contemplation! from the stately towers,
 That our existence winds her stately course
 Smooth and commodious; as a stately deck
 For you a stately gallery maintain
 O'er stately Edinborough throned on crags?
 Save for yon stately House beneath whose roof
 The other—like a stately sycamore,
 Beneath the battlements and stately trees
 Within its shade, as in a stately tent
 From out the ruins of his stately lodge;
 Have vanished—swallowed up by stately roads
 The stately fence accompanied our steps;
 And wisdom loaves.—But when a stately ship
 On stately terraces of Como,
State's. Determined, lies beyond the State's embrace,
 For the State's guidance, or the Church's weal,
 It mounts to reach the State's parental ear;
States. And states be torn up by the roots, will seem Endangered States may yield to terms unjust;
 Of states and kingdoms, to their joy or woe,
 All States have glorified themselves,—their claims
 For future states of being; and the wings
 Which States and Kingdoms utter when they talk
Statesman. In Statesman, Priest, and humble Citizen:
 Blest Statesman He, whose Mind's unselfish will Statesmen. Lords, lawyers, statesmen, squires of low degree,
 O'erweening Statesmen have full long relied
 But deem not this Man useless.—Statesmen! ye
State-whirlwind. And rage of one State-whirlwind, insecure.
Station. With that reproff I do resign a station
 An Angel from his station;
 Each, in his station twinkling not,
 I know that Wanton's noisy station,
 His station is there; and he works on the crowd,
 But still the Ass his station kept.
 Holding a central station of command,
 The watchmen from their station high
 Upheave, so seems it, from her natural station
 —Who, if he rise to station of command,
 Of lofty station, female goodness walks,
 Thus, dishonouring not her station,
 Take up a station calmly on the perch
 His station as before; and when I asked
 That took his station there for ornament:
 And took his station in the Tribune, saying,
 Now was I from that pleasant station torn
 A silent station in this beautiful world.
 To take a station among men, the step
 Sparkle the stars, as of their station proud.
 Their station under a cerulean sky.
 To every class its station and its office,
 How she her station doth adorn: the pool
 In heart or soul, in station or pursuit,

Station—continued.

From that exalted station to the plain
 To all that charms this Station shows,
 The station whence he looked was soft and green,
Stationary. Firm as a rock in stationary fight;
 Of stationary blains:—thou hast viewed
 The stationary hlasts of waterfalls,
 Necessity, the stationary host
 That paves the brooks, the stationary rocks,
Stationed. See Self-stationed.
 Musæus, stationed with his lyre
 Whom chance had stationed in the very room
 Stationed above the door, like guardian saints;
 Stationed alone upon a spiry rock
 Then stationed in the city, were the chief
 And stationed in the public way, with face
 In youth were mine; when, stationed on the top
 In station's. Right at the imperial station's western base,
Stations. Lift men from their native stations,
 Thus, in their stations, lifting tow'rd the sky
 If multiplied, and in their stations set,
 That, through all stations, human life abounds
Statist. Where She—a statist prudent to confer
 Art thou a Statist in the van
Statists. Of modern statists to their proper test,
Statue. Meet Statue for the court of Fear!
 Some Statue, placed amid these regions old
 A statue of the soul,
 The antechapel where the statue stood
 Have a Mother, once a Statue;
Statues. Perpetually recumbent; Statues—man,
 Statues and temples, and memorial tombs;
Stature. Is one of giant stature, who could dance
 I like," said Benjamin, "her shape and stature:
 And, near the fountain, flowers of stature tall
 Her bosom heaves and spreads, her stature grows;
 And ever, when such stature they had gained
 Disordering colour, form, and stature!
 The imperial Stature, the colossal stride,
 Rich groves of lofty stature,
 A stature undepressed in size,
 Mark him, of shoulders curved, and stature tall,
 Speak Thou, whose massy strength and stature
 scorn
 Attained a stature twice a tall man's height,
 And growing still in stature the grim shape,
 Myself unseen. He was of stature tall,
 There, too, conspicuous for stature tall,
 Tall was her stature; her complexion dark
 A lofty stature undepressed by time,
Statute. And, what ye cannot reach by statute, draw
 Of custom, law, and statute, took at once.
 Binding herself by statute to secure
Statutes. Burn all the statutes and their selves:
 His statutes like the chambers of the deep.
 Slow be the Statutes of the land to share
 Fixed on the statutes of Eternity,
 Did Justice mould the Statutes of the Land.
Staunch. No fond hand left to staunch th' unclosing vein,
Stave. And let us chant a passing stave, Staves. Their forms are broken staves; their passions, steeds
 By thrusting two rude staves into the wall
Stay. See Up-stay.
 Stay! pensive, sadly-pleasing visions, stay!
 Or rather stay to taste the mild delights
 Who cries presumptuous, "Here the flood shall stay,"
 To stay his steps with faintness overcome;
 The little fool is loth to stay behind.
 The cloud will soon disperse—farewell—but stay,
 To stay behind!—Hearing at first no answer,
 Stay you behind; and, when the sun is down,
 And thus we meet again; one human stay
 Stay near me—do not take thy flight!
 A little longer stay in sight!
 But ere ten yards were gone her footsteps did she
 stay,
 Think how pitiful that stay,
 The Cross, fixed in his soul, may prove an all-
 sufficing stay.
 Something must stay to tell us of the rest.
 As one that lived ungrateful for the stay
 Not a soul in the village this morning will stay;
 "Oh! how I love thee!—we will stay
 Each other's advocate, each other's stay;
 If she must go, or she must stay!
 "Susan, I'd gladly stay with you.
 Good Susan tell me, and I'll stay;
 Where he will stay till he is dead;
 He may return to us. If here he stay,
 Many a stop and stay he makes,
 Thus, after two hours' hearty stay,
 To stay the wanderer's steps and soothe his thoughts.
 "God," said I, "be my help and stay secure;
 Hovering until the petals stay

Stay—continued.

Sonthe it into patience—stay . . . 233 Power of Sound 92
 And vanish, though the heavens dissolve, her stay . . . 235 Power of Sound 223
 And then, without a moment's stay, . . . 243 P. B. 598
 Praised be the Art whose subtle power could stay
 And shalt become thy own sufficient stay :
 Dark thoughts—they came, but not to stay ;
 For thou wert still the poor man's stay,
 Plead with the sovereign Sun for longer stay
 The Banner touch not, stay your hand, . . . 400
 And I with thee one hour will stay,
 "Against so many may not stay," . . . 404
 "If hope be a rejected stay, . . . 407
 To stay the precious waste. Through every brain
 Why carries then thy chariot? Wherefore stay,
 At will, and stay thy migratory flight ; . . . 440
 But 'tis ended with power to stay,
 Of absence ! but they will not stay,
 "No check, no stay, this Streamlet fears ;
 Stay, little cheerful Robin I stay,
 One living Stay was left, and on that one
 Stay, bold Adventurer ; rest awhile thy limbs
 Unless it always stay with him, I wis
 From memory, prolong their stay . . . 578
 For he must die who is their stay,
 Who cries, presumptuous, "here their tides shall stay"
 —"Stay, stay your sacrilegious hands !"—The voice . . . 617
 In hopeful reason, leaning on the stay . . . 681
 No dearer relique, and no better stay,
 Our happy life's only remaining stay—
 That seek you pool, and there prolong their stay
 Could I discourse ; but as their stay was brief,
 For a life's stay (slender it was, but sure)
Stayed. See Staid.
 Opened at once, and stayed my devout feet.
 With me he never would have stayed :
 Rest where thy course was stayed by Power divine !
 Thus checked, a little while it stayed ;
 The Apparition ; evil thoughts are stayed
 Then be it neither checked nor stayed :
 Hence hast thou stayed a little while too long ;
 The pilgrim's wistful eye hath never stay'd.
 Nor even DELICACY stayed behind :
 They stayed not long.—The blameless Infant grew ;
 But, timely warned, He would have stayed his steps,
 Had stayed so long. The shepherd took his way
Staying. Staying his silent waves, to hear the roar
Stays. Staysit's low murmur in th' unbreathing vale ;
Stead. In their stead each opening flower . . . 3
 But, in its stead, a medley air . . . 145
 And, seeing this, own nothing in its stead.
 Or jealous Nature ruling in her stead ;
 Not doing in their stead the needful work.
 Had vanished, leaving others in their stead ;
 I but in her stead—fear—doubt—and agony !
 I found him not. There, in his stead, appeared Steadfast. Stretched at his feet, with steadfast upward eye,
 On wings from broad and steadfast poise let loose
 by this reply,
 And a steadfast outward power . . . 13
 Are steadfast as the rocks ; the brook itself,
 A thing as steadfast as the scene
 And spreads in steadfast peace her brooding wing.
 'Mid seas how steadfast I objects all for the eye
 For steadfast hope the contract to fulfil ;
 Peace let us seek,—to steadfast things attune
 The silent thoughts that search for steadfast light,
 And neither hope nor steadfast promise yield
 Deliverer of the steadfast rocks . . . 316
 And while he marches on with steadfast hope,
 Shrinks from the verdict of his steadfast eye . . . 341
 Silent, and steadfast as the vaulted sky
 Meek, patient, steadfast, and with loftier scope,
 Of sky should be in truth the steadfast face
 That serves the steadfast hours . . . 409
 A Champion steadfast and invincible,
 A steadfast peace that might not be betrayed.
 From sign to sign, its steadfast course,
 Those steadfast eyes, that beating breasts inspire
 Swell more gigantic on the steadfast sight ;
 And with steadfast dejection his eyes are intent
 With steadfast ray benign
 Before antiquity and steadfast truth
 His steadfast face and sightless eyes, I gazed,
 Her processes by steadfast laws ; gives birth
 Like their own steadfast clouds) did now impel
 Subsisting under nature's steadfast law . . . 701
 And reason's steadfast rite—thou, thou alone
 These helps solicit ; and a steadfast seat
 His steadfast eye. The planetary Five
 And which, once built, retains a steadfast shape
 The steadfast quiet natural to a mind . . . 840
 Upon the steadfast 'vantage-ground of truth.

Steadfastness. To think upon my truth and stead-fastness, . . . 562
Steadier. Travelling at steadier pace than ours, had risen . . . 824
Steadist. The guerdon of the steadiest aim . . . 842
 If, spite of keenest eye and steadiest hand, . . . 844
Steadily. I never can forgive it : but how steadily
 Plied steadily between those willow shores, . . . 39
 That rose, and steadily advanced to fill . . . 271
 That rose, and steadily advanced to fill . . . 495
Steadiness. Kept the same awful steadiness—at his feet . . . 5.3. 427
 In steadiness, who hath among least things . . . 664
 And steadiness, and healing and repose . . . 698
 I looked with steadiness as sailors look . . . 742
 And more than once their steadiness of face . . . 833
Steady. To see a planet's pomp and steady light . . . 859
 Beneath the cliffs, and pine-wood's steady sigh ;
 With nerves so steady, that the very flies . . . 16
 And burns with a clear and steady light ; . . . 17
 The eldest heard with steady glee ; . . . 62
 Between the tropics filled the steady sail, . . . 81
 With seeming unconcern and steady countenance . . . 81
 Two steady roses that were five years old ;
 Some steady love ; some brief delight ;
 So steady or so fair . . . 86
 Self-collected, poised, and steady :
 And steady bliss, and all the loves . . . 189
 Of him who gazes, or has gazed? a grave and steady joy, . . . 200
 And fix on it a steady view,
 More steady looks the moon, and clear,
 To learn thy course ; farewell ! be prompt and steady." . . . 242
 So forward with a steady will (After a steady flight on home-bound wings,
 Cheers these Recluses with a steady ray
 —To mark a planet's pomp and steady light
 Last Industry appear'd with steady pace,
 Into a steady morning ; if my mind,
 As may be singled out with steady choice ;
 If steady moods of thoughtfulness matured
 Wide-spreading, steady, calm, contemplative.
 Into the bosom of the steady lake . . . 370
 When sober truth and steady sympathies,
 My calmer habits, and more steady voice,
 To steady me : each airy thought revolved
 His blind desires and steady faculties
 Of intermeddlers, steady purposes . . . 412
 Determined and unmoved, with steady beams
 Even in their fixed and steady lineaments
 By partial bondage. In his steady course,
 She was a Woman of a steady mind,
 And finding in herself no steady power
 While the ship glides before a steady breeze.
 Were subject to young Oswald's steady aim,
 That, on the steady breeze of honour, sailed
 Fixing a steady eye, maintain their speed ;
 Mildly, and with a clear and steady tone.
Steadingy. Steadingy, far-seen, a frame of images
Steal. Dark is the ground ; a slumber seems to steal
 A sympathetic twilight slowly steal,
 Steal down the hill, and spread along the flood,
 Back from his sight no bashful children steal ;
 Steal, and compose the ear-forgotten floods ;
 Soft music o'er the aerial summit steal ?
 Or steal beneath the mountains, half-deterred,
 Steal the landscape from the sight,
 They steal upon their prey,
 That through the clouds do sometimes steal,
 Yet are allowed to steal my path athwart . . . 381
 Age steal to his allotted nook . . . 499
 He then would steal at leisure hours,
 Where, tho' her far-off twilight ditty steal,
 Steal down the hills, and spread along the flood,
 With bashful fear no cottage children steal
 Soft music from th' aerial summit steal ?
 Or steal beneath loose mountains, half-deterr'd,
 That issuing hence may steal into thy mind . . . 628
 And let remembrance steal to other times,
 Ye waves, that out of the great deep steal forth . . . 716
 That steal upon the meditative mind, . . . 734
 To steal from active duties, and embrace . . . 763
 And steal away, and for a while deceive . . . 822
Stealing. See Softly-stealing.
 While music, stealing round the glimmering deeps,
 Nor blush if o'er your heart be stealing
 Soft darkness o'er its latest gleams is stealing ;
 An Ass like this was worth the stealing !"
 And, wheresoe'er the stealing footstep tends,
 Or softly stealing into modest shade,
 To all that Earth from pensive hearts is stealing,
 Or fancies stealing forth to soothe the breast . . . 7
 From heart to heart is stealing,
 —But why this stealing tear? Companion mute,
 See cheerfulness undamped by stealing Time ;
 Stealing with silent lapse to join the brook
 Are gone, or stealing from us ; this, I hope,
 Stealing alternately at them and us . . . 17
Steals. And steals into the shade the lazy oar ;

Steals—continued.

Steals from the deck o'er willing waves,
The lingering dew—there steals along, or stops
Amid this dance of objects sadness steals
No moment steals; pain narrows not his cares.
Stealth. Wandering by stealth abroad, he chanced to hear
And could not win thee, Sleep! by any stealth:
If saved at all, are saved by stealth.
With gradual stealth the lateral windows hide
Of hope that grew by stealth,
That life—the flowery path that winds by stealth—
But silent and by stealth he came,
By stealth she passed, and fled as fast
Pushed from the shore. It was an act of stealth.
That win their way into the heart by stealth,
(Who could refrain?) and feed by stealth my sight
The consummation that will come by stealth.
That which in stealth by Nature was performed.

Stealth-like. And then advanced with stealth-like pace,
Stealthy. In flashing leaps and stealthy creeps
Not swans descending with the stealthy tide,
Here wants not stealthy prospect, that may tempt
Stealthy withdrawals, interminglings mild
He moved with stealthy pace;
By stealthy influx of the timid day

By stealthy entrance of a perilous guest,
The shadow falls to note the stealthy hours,
Steamy. Breathed a pale steam around the glaring hill,
Rich steam of sweetest perfume comes and goes,
Now lost amid a glittering steam:
Kept in perpetual verdure by the steam
Of water-lilies veiled in misty steam—

Through a pale steam; but all the northern downs,
Half-veiled in vapoury cloud, the silver steam Steam-boat. The smoking steam-boat eager in pursuit,
Steaming. Along the steaming lake, to early mass.

A steaming bowl, a blazing fire,
And by the steaming rills,
Hot sunbeams fill the steaming vale; but hark,
Silent the hedge or steaming rivulet's bed,
Spotting the steaming deeps, to early mass;
Steamy. Silent the hedge or steamy rivulet's bed,
Steed. The form appears of one that spurs his steed
His steed and he right well agree;
At noise of man and steed,
And saddled his best Steed, a comely grey;
Thy genius forward like a winged steed,
Rein the proud steed, or through the dance are led;
Let the Steed glory while his Master's hand
Fleet the Tartar's reinless steed,

The graceful form of milk-white Steed,
Or like a steed, without a rein,
Where'er their march: no steed will he Thou tread; or sweep—borne on the managed steed—
A desperate form appears, that spurs his steed,
And eager to spur on, the galloping steed;
Checking the sober steed on which he rode,
With brodered hangings. And the lofty Steed—
The chosen rustic urged a warlike steed

Steeds. Dwarf panniered steeds, and men, and numerous wains:
Four fiery steeds impatient of the rein.
Their forms are broken staves; their passions, steeds
What steeds the car of Diomed could boast;
Our steeds remounted and the summons given,
Their steeds hestridding,—every mimic shape

Steel. "Mid thy soft glooms the glittering steel un-sheath;
Poison, which not a frame of steel can brave,
Last night, when moved to lift the avenging steel,
By wasteful steel unsmit—then would I
Under the steel his hand had dared to draw.
Strong poison not a form of steel can brave
No longer steel their indurated hearts
That cares not for his home. All shod with steel, Steeled. Through the grey west; and lo! these waters, steeled

Steep. Winding from side to side up the steep road;
And now that orb has touched the purple steep,
And track the yellow lights from steep to steep,
To reach a small wood-hut hung boldly on the steep.
And, not intended, climb the dangerous steep.
Most cruelly. As up the steep we clomb,
Then downwards from the steep hill's edge
Then up the steep ascent they hied,
Leapt from this steep bank to follow
Here, thronged with primroses, the steep rock's
breast
And to soft slumbers, that did gently steep
Of a steep march: support me to the end.
That hobbles up the steep rough road?
Full-flowered, and visible on every steep,

Steep—continued.

And the tall Steep of Silver-how, sent forth
And there I sit at evening, when the steep
"If breeze or bird to this rough steep
A lake was near; the shore was steep;
Roar down many a craggy steep,
Steep the way and wearisome,
The road we travel, steep, and rough;
And, lo!—up Castrig's naked steep
And there she begs at one steep place
Even from the topmost stone, upon the steep,
Do I behold these steep and lofty cliffs,
Of absence, these steep woods and lofty cliffs,
From rocky steep and rock-bestudded meadows
Dear Bosom-child we call thee, that dost steep
Some path of steep ascent and lofty aim;
Never did sun more beautifully steep
Pleased in refreshing dew to steep
Fixed, like the Templar of the steep,
Down their steep beds, that never shall be still:
His giant body o'er the steep rock's brink,
Majestic BERNZ, high on her guardian steep,
From yon steep mountain's loftiest stage,
Only to climb the rugged steep!
And that intrepid Nymph, on Uri's steep desecr'd!
Clinging to its steep sides a thousand herbs
Yon petty Steep in truth the fearful Rock,
Its murmur how soft! as it falls down the steep,
Starts from a dizzy steep the undaunted Kill
O'er which his Fathers urged, to ride and steep
To prompt the thought?—Upon the steep rock's
breast
Not hurled precipitous from steep to steep;
Part fenced by man, part by a rugged steep
That down the steep hills force their way,
On the steep rocks of winding Tees;—
The hollow vale from steep to steep,
That the river was strong, and the rocks were steep?—
Here, as 'mid busier scenes, ground steep and rough,
Under a rock too steep for man to tread,

In which Love's dart its fiery point doth steep,
Who lead their horses down the steep rough road
The cataracts blow their trumpets from the steep;
Hung o'er a cloud, above the steep that rears
And now it touches on the purple steep
Tracking the yellow sun from steep to steep,
Hung dim-discover'd from the dangerous steep,
Haag from the rocks that tremble o'er the steep,
Thence down the steep a pile of grass he throws
Or on Cythera's far-sequestered steep,
—Why suns in winter, shunning heaven's steep heights

To people the steep rocks and river banks,
When, from behind that craggy steep till then
Along the sides of the steep hills, or when
Along the Simplon's steep and rugged road,
Of Ti voli; and, high upon that steep,
A steep ascent; and reached a dreary plain,
So, to a steep and difficult descent
Down whose steep sides we dropped into the vale,
Lofty, and steep, and naked as a tower,
Diffused adown that barrier of steep rock,
In the low vale, or on steep mountain-side;
Among steep hills and woods embosomed, flowed
Of rural labours; the steep mountain-side
Or founts that gurgle from yon craggy steep,
Along the steep that overhung the brook,
Once to the verge of yon steep barrier came
That rises to the summit of the steep

Steeped. Steeped in dire grief the voice of Philomel;
All steeped in this portentous light!
She steeped, but not for Jesu's sake,
The true Ascanius steep'd in placid rest;
Were steeped to feeling; I was only then
And I, associate with such labour, steeped
Steeped in a self-indulging spleen, that wants not Steeping. Regions in destruction steeping, steeping. See Church-steeping.

Peering above the trees, the steeple tower
The pointed steeple peering forth from the centre of the shade.
When feasts shall crowd the hall, and steeple bells
And steeple tower (with pealing bells
Of a village steeple, as I do, can judge,
That in the steeple hang, his pious gift,"

Steeple's. The convict's summons in the steeple's knell;
Steeple's. Thy glittering steeples, whence the matin bell
On the plain steeples of our English Church, Steeple-tower. Their ancient neighbour, the old steep-tower.
Steeple-towers. Her Spire, her Steeple-towers with glittering vases
Besprent from shore to shore with steeple-towers,
Steep's. On the steep's lofty verge: how it blackened the air!

Steeps. See Mountain-steeps.

'Mid clustering isles, and holly-sprinkled steeps ;
 Charmed the tall circle of the enchanted steeps—
 No meadows throw between, the giddy steeps
 The pathway leads, as round the steeps it twines ;
 The dull-red steeps, and, darkening still, aspire
 Aerial pines from loftier steeps ascend,
 The brook adown the rocky steeps.
 To Como's steeps—his happy bourne !
 It tinged the Julian steeps—it lay,
 Once on those steeps I roamed at large, and have
 O'er the dark steeps, or on the horizon line
 That voice which soothed the Nuns while on the steeps
 No cliff so bare but on its steeps
 By rills that tumble down the woody steeps,
 —'Mid the dark steeps repose the shadowy streams,
 Charms the tall circle of th' enchanted steeps.
 Wound round the steeps the little pathway twines,
 Heard, by star-spotted bays, beneath the steeps ;
 Bare steeps, where Desolation stalks, afraid,
 And hangs his small wood-hut upon the steeps.
 Pleased with thy crags, and woody steeps, thy Lake,
 O'er the dark steeps, or on the horizon line
 Thy lofty steeps, and pathways roofed with vines,
 To shaggy steeps on which the careless goat
Steer. They at length for Venice steer ;
 And, drunk or sober, he may steer them . . .
 O'er Limbo lake with airy flight to steer,
 Uncertain what to choose and how to steer—
 With those bright beams yet hid it not, must steer
 To each new Master, like a steer or hound,
 Firmly between the two extremes to steer ;
 Toward my death with wind I steer and sail ;
 And through the stormy night they steer ;
Steered. See Well-steered.
 Exe thrice the Moon into her port had steered,
 Whither spiteful Satan steered ;
 And off her steps had hither steered,
 Back again to England steered . . .
 Of some small island steered our course with one,
Steering. To Binnorie is steering :
 Of which I have the steering—this,
 Bright, as if through ether steering,
Stears. By panting steeps up to this convent gate ?
Stem. See Lily-stem.
 They have soaped her from the stem—Poh ! let her lie
 At gate or gap, to stem or turn the flock ;
 Thy youth to hopeless wasting, root and stem—
 Your patriot sons, to stem invasive war,
 Look like a cloud—a slender stem the tie
 —'Eve these poor eight of mine would stem—
 He spake—" would stem, or quell, a force
 They stem the current of that perilous gorge,
 Upwards through every stage of the tall stem,
 Which had been twined about the slender stem
 Or stem the current of the speaker's thoughts,
 And slender stem, while here I sit at eye,
Stemmed. From all that breathes and is, was chastened, stemmed
Stems. Even the white stems of birch, the cottage white
 Deep yellow beams the scattered stems illumine,
 That vainly did I seek beneath their stems
 And-one green island, gleam between the stems
 Some, perched on stems of stately port
 The unluckiest hulk that stems the brine
 The flowers, still faithful to the stems,
 The stems are faithful to the root,
 With two collateral stems sprung from one root ;
 To mark the birches' stems all golden light,
 Or currants, hanging from their leafless stems,
 Casement, and cottage-roof, and stems of trees
 Of leafy spray, concealed the stems and roots
Step. While thus he jurneyed, step by step led on,
 Of hideous sense, I sank, nor step could crawl :
 A firmer step than mine. That dismal Moor—
 Must needs step in, and save my life. The look
 Action is transitory—a step, a blow,
 With but a step between their several homes,
 The common air ; hills, which with vigorous step
 Drooping is he, his step is dull ;
 At a slow step. The immeasurable height
 Which is a little step beyond :
 That I might step beyond my natural race
 No more by step of Demi-god
 To Time's first step across the bound
 Yet firm his step, and stout his heart ;
 When I step forth to hail the morning light ;
 Aught good were destined, than wouldst step between.
 Each step hath its value while homeward we move ;—
 Obtaining ampler boon, at every step,
 Step forth."—To touch the pallid hand
 Now a step or two her way
 Or quit with zealous step their knee-worn floors
 And mount, at every step, with living wiles
 To keep with faithful step the appointed way
 With step prelusive to a long array

Step—continued.

His coming step has thwarted,
 Thy nymph-like step swift-bounding o'er the lawn,
 Or slippery even to peril ! and each step, . . .
 Each weary step, dwarfing the world below, . . .
 Light was his step,—his hopes, more light,
 Upon the second step of that small pile, . . .
 He travels on, and in his face, his step,
 And troubles that were each a step to Heaven :
 —With backward gaze, lock'd joints, and step of pain,
 With pensive step to measure my slow way,
 'Tis his with fearless step at large to roam
 Your presence, when with slackened step we breathed
 And conscious step of purity and pride, . . .
 I did not step into the well-known boat
 Though weak his step and cautious, he appeared
 These courts of mystery, where a step advanced
 That variegated journey step by step.
 Knowledge that step by step might lead me on
 (In fear) have walked with quicker step ; but why
 Be mine to follow with no timid step
 And with a step or two seemed brighter still ;
 To take a station among men, the step
 O'er the fiat Common !—With quick step I reached
 Step after step—together, with their firm
 Through the dull mist, I following—when a step,
 A single step, that freed me from the skirts
 A step, or link, for intercourse with thee . . .
 Which they inherit,—cannot step beyond,—
 Your own pure spirit. Not a step we look for Alone, with loitering step, and upward eye
 In virgin fearlessness, with step that seemed
 With a step quickened by November's cold,
Step-dame. Safe from his step-dame Rhea's eye ;
Stephen. Her company to Stephen Hill ;
 But Stephen to another Maid
 Unthinking Stephen went—
 And there my good friend, Stephen Otter ;
Stephen's. If Stephen's distanced, onward see him strive
Stepped. Stepped into it—his thoughts all free
 And forth from Rylstone-hall stepped she,— Stepped One at dead of night,
 His sheep like Greenland bears ; or, as he stepped
 My venerable Friend, as forth we stepped Stepping. But, stepping o'er the cottage-sill,
 "What, you are stepping westward ?"—"Yea."
 And stepping westward seemed to be
 Straight I unloosed her chain, and stepping in Steps. See Minute-steps,
 That, whoso'er my steps may tend, . . .

Sterile—continued.

By which the soul—with patient steps of thought
A few steps distant, feeding, straying;
And off her steps had hither steered,
Heart-killing luxury, on your steps await.
With equal wrath the steps of strong and weak)
By Conscience governed do their steps retrace.—
On those bright steps that heavenward raise
To these dark steps, a little further on!
Dear Mother! if thou must thy steps retrace,
Nor hedge-row screen invites my steps abroad;
A Poet's hand first shaped it; and the steps
Make slow to feel, and by sure steps resign
And he was strong to follow in the steps
My steps the Border-minstrel led.
The poet's steps, and fixed him here, on you
For its keen breath, was aiding to our steps,
Not many steps, and she was left
A few short steps were the chain that bound
With brisk and eager steps; and came, at length,
Of undistinguishable motion, steps
And threshold steps were empty; fast asleep
Support, as heretofore, my fainting steps.
Ground where the grass had yielded to the steps
Bright was the summer's noon when quickening steps
Obscurely to my steps early and late,
And homeward led my steps. Magnificent
Measuring our steps in quiet, we pursued
Lay a few steps, and then along its banks;
Checked our unwearied steps. Let this alone
Spread round my steps like sunshine o'er green fields.
May then entangle our impatient steps;
That field-ward takes her walk with decent steps.
Have glanced upon him distant a few steps,
Of her distress, was known to have turned her steps
Sheds round the steps of those who meet the day
Of wildest course but treads back his own steps;
Thy solitary steps; and on the brink
And seemed with difficult steps to force her way
The adventurous stranger's steps, a trusty guide;
That went before my steps. Thereafter came
From earth's materials—waits upon my steps;
With languid steps that by the slippery turf
Of my approaching steps, and in the shade
Marked with the steps of those, whom, as they passed,
Forgive them;—never—never did my steps
Would turn without an errand his slack steps;
And now the music of my own sad steps,
Was wasted.—Back I turned my restless steps;
I turned, and saw her distant a few steps.
With backward steps. Yet ever as there passed
We scaled, without a track to ease our steps.
Some steps when they had thus advanced, the dirge
An object that enticed my steps aside!
He saw us not, though distant but few steps;
And, with light steps still quicker than his words,
And a few steps may bring us to the spot.
To a luxuriant bounty!—As our steps
Small space! but, for reiterated steps,
With brotherly resemblance. Turn your steps
Of restoration, fashioned to the steps
Not falling, perseverance from their steps
With this persuasion thitherward my steps
Whose steps are equity, whose seat is law.
Yon structure, framing, with the ascent of steps
Of the sad steps by which it hath been trod!
On whatsoever errand, urged her steps;
Of night is falling round my steps, then most
The powers of nature; and a few short steps
But, timely warned, He would have stayed his steps,
Moved towards the grave;—instinctively his steps
His steps had followed, fleetest of the fleet,
—Right toward the sacred Edifice his steps
Their tardy steps give leisure to observe,
And, whereso'er the traveller turns his steps,
The stately fence accompanied our steps;
Save by degrees and steps which thou hast deigned
Was reached, the Solitary checked his steps;
Hath ruled my steps, and seals me to thy side,
His steps to govern in the Wilderness;
Sterile. Among these sterile heights of Apennine,
Stern. However stern, is powerless to exclude.
With stern composure watches to the plain—
And stern looks on the man her grey-haired Comrade cast.
From the stern breathing of the rough sea-wind;
A stern face it puts on, as if ready to say,
In his stern father's hearing, Vaudracour
Albeit of a stern unbending mind,
"Mid the tempest stern;
With suppliant gestures and upbraidings stern;
Ere shaken by that mood of stern disdain
Stern Winter loves a dirge-like sound,
Hastening the stern degrees of Time,
From its dull sheath—stern sentine,
Dear Liberty! stern Nymph of soul untamed;
We know that ye, beneath the stern control

Stern—continued.

To deck your stern Defenders' modest brows!
Stern Gemmi listens to as full a cry,
The Patriot's heart with pictures rude and stern,
Change, with a brow not insolent, though stern.
By a few Monks, a stern society,
The sleeping dust, stern Death. How reconcile
By the stern justice of the sword!
And the stern old Lord of Rylstone-hall
To the stern embrace of that grasping hour.
Though stern and rigorous, melancholy!
Religion finds even in the stern retreat
Despised by that stern God to whom they raise
With thy stern aspect better far agrees
Beneath stern mountains many a soft vale lies,
Let Truth, stern arbitress of all,
Heart-stricken by stern destiny of yore
Stern Daughter of the Voice of God!
Stern Lawgiver! yet thou dost wear
Or at a doubting Judge's stern command,
Who had betrayed their country. The stern word
While I salute my joys, thoughts sad or stern;
No rampart's stern defence require,
Stern was her forehead, but a smile serene
Stern was the face of Nature. We rejoiced
In that stern countenance, for our souls thence drew
Of independence and stern liberty.
Mixed something of stern mood, an under-thirst
A character more stern. The second night,
Grave Teacher, stern Preceptress! for at times
Earnest and blind, against the stern decree.
Suffice it here to add, that, somewhat stern
Stern self-respect, a reverence for God's word,
That stern yet kindly Spirit, who constrains
Before us, mountains stern and desolate;
To their inventive humour, by stern looks,
Stern self-denial round him spread, with shade
Of some stern castle, mouldering on the brow
That spake the Norman Conqueror's stern behest—
These barren rocks, yon stern inheritance;
To stern Plantageet (signed her keys)
Stern-browed. A stern-browed house appeared;
Sternar. To sterner pleasure, where, by Uri's lake,
Whose sterner judgments deem that word a snare
Into the dust. Erewhile a sterner link
With the baronial castle's sterner mien;
Who, for the sake of sterner quiet, closed
Sternest. "But thou, though capable of sternest deed,
O suffering Earth! be thankful; sternest clime
And, in the sternest sentence which his voice
Sternly. Sometimes, more sternly moved, I would relate
Which sternly hoarded all that could be spared, Sternly-broken. Then, to bewail a sternly-broken vow,
Sternly-featured. Now do those sternly-featured hills
Sternness. See Over-sternness.
In thoughts whose sternness makes them sweet;
And temper with the sternness of the brain
The sternness of the just, the faith of those Steward. Like a false steward who hath much received
Stick. A pile beforehand, turf or stick,
Stick after stick did Goody pull:
Shall stick new splendour on his gartered Grace.
Sticking. Sticking 'kerchief-plots of mould
Sticks. And, kneeling on the sticks, she prayed
Carved uncouth figures on the heads of sticks—
Stiff. His burning eyelids stretched and stiff as lead;
We'll not complain of that. My limbs are stiff
All stiff with ice the ashes lie;
With legs stretched out and stiff he lay:
In stiff confusion set or sown,
Through the stiff lance-like shoots of pollard ash,
Stiff in its members, withered, changed of hue."
Stiff, lank, and upright; a more meagre man
Are of no-finer frame. Stiff are his joints; Stiffened. He lays his stiffened limbs,—his eyes begin to close;
Have stiffened them, maintain their post;
Stifle. The truth is hideous, but how stifle it?
Which they would stifle, move at such a pace!
That seeks to stifle it!—as in those days
Stifle the contradictions of their fate,
Stifle her hope; for, if the State comply,
Stified. See Half-stified.
And, almost stified with her bliss,
Are stified—all is still
Nor be a whisper stified, if it say
The stified sigh, the hidden tear,
Her wisdom stified, and her justice scared,
Stifies. Which he stifles, moody man!
Stifling. These stifling blasts—God help me! Better this bare rock,
Like the stifling of disease,
A stifling power compressed his frame,
Stigmatize. Minerva's self would stigmatize
Stiles. Through the meadows, over stiles,

 Sunk to a curve, the day-star lessens still, . . . 5 Ev. Wk. 190
 There be these holms untrudged, still, and green, . . . 6 Ev. Wk. 233
 Wetting, that drip upon the water still; . . . 7 Ev. Wk. 284
 Gleams that cold cheek its shuddering tear retains; . . . 7 Ev. Wk. 294
 Still the cold cheek its shuddering tear retains. . . . 8 Ev. Wk. 322
 Air listens, like the sleeping water, still, . . . 9 Ev. Wk. 367
 And still, perhaps, with faithless gleam, . . . 9 Lines ' Boat 7
 How calm! how still! the only sound . . . 9 Collins 21

Thy gentle Chiabrera !—not a stone,
I stood, and gazed upon a marble stone,
How shall I paint thee ?—Be this naked stone
Chosen for ornament—stone matched with stone
A sky-blue stone, within this sunless cleft,
Alms on this stone to be dealt out, for ever!
High-ribbed vault of stone, or cell,
Of stone, and ivy, and the spread
—She sees a warrior carved in stone,
Or like a rooted tree, or stone earth-bound ;
Their Gods of wood and stone ; and, at the sound
The notes luxuriate, every stone is kissed
Of old grey stone, and high-born name
Beneath "the random field of clod or stone"
"Why, William, on that old grey stone,
I sit upon this old grey stone,
Or want of love, that here no Stone we raise ;
Before the Stone of Power no longer stand—
On the smooth surface of this naked stone !
No sheltering stone, no tangled root was near.
Darken the brow of this memorial Stone
That it was scooped within the living stone,—
And let the redbreast hop from stone to stone.
And from the builder's hand this Stone,
And to the brook I ran and got a stone,
Had placed his staff across the broad smooth stone
Only by gold. And now a simple stone
And, when beneath this stone the Corse was laid,
His bitter loss by this memorial Stone ;
Mourn, Shepherd, near thy old grey stone ;
Here let a monumental Stone
Will fringe the lettered stone ; and herbs spring
 forth,
This Stone is sacred. Here he lies apart
She clasps them at that dim-sen roofless stone.—
Thy Church and cottages of mountain stone
Haste, and rebuild the pile."—But not a stone
Gone was the old grey stone, and in its place
From whom the stone was named, who there had sat,
Of the old grey stone, from her scant hoard,
 supplied,
Which, from a tree, a stone, a withered leaf,
Round the stone table under the dark pine,
A stone, and in the opposite hand a shell
Could mean, the Arab told me that the stone
The one to be a stone, the other a shell ;
A frame locked up in wood and stone, doth still,
Sate on a stone, and heard the bells speak out
Throughout the landscape ; tuft, stone, scratch minute—
And from the rubbish gathered up a stone,
And on the stone were graven by his desire
And the stone abbot, after circuit made
And the bleak music from that old stone wall,
And hence, this upright shaft of unhewn stone,
Of luckless rock or prominent stone, disguised
Be your frequented watch-tower ; roll the stone
Metal or stone, idolatrously served,
Stone lift its forehead emulous of stone
That lowly, great, good Man. A simple stone
A plain blue stone, a gentle Daalesman lies,
And now that monumental stone preserves
Intent upon a monumental stone,
Of the mild-hearted Champion, save this stone,
The cornice, richly fretted, of grey stone ;
Between his hands he holds a smooth blue stone,
Upon the board he lays the sky-blue stone
In flower and tree, in every pebbly stone
Launched from our hands the smooth stone
 skimmed the lake ;
Grateful is Sleep ; my life in stone bound fast

The stones, as if to cover him from day,
Give me your sword—nay, here are stones and fragments,
They built him of stones gathered up as they lay :
By light of lamp and precious stones, that glim-
 mered here, there glowed,
With a few sheep, with rocks and-stones, and kites
Appears a straggling heap of unhewn stones !
A heap of stones, which by the streamlet's edge
Then, pointing to the stones near which they stood,
A narrow girdle of rough stones and crags,
And now have reached that pile of stones,
Around the stones of Dunmail-raise !
And—with my cheek on one of those green stones
Wasting its kindness on stocks and stones,
With rocks, and stones, and trees . . .
Stones of all hues, gem fountal, and of gem,
You see the stones, the fountain, and the stream
Till trees, and stones, and fountain, all are gone."
Among the stones and pebbles he
And smote off his head on the stones of the porch !
Greta, what fearful listening ! when huge stones
Here on their knees men swore : the stones were black
Whose nursing current brows o'er mossy stones,
O'er rocks and stones, following the Dog
Stranger ! this hillock of mis-shapen stones . . .
Wilt thou behold this shapeless heap of stones,
The Druid stones their lighted fane unfold,
The old grey stones the plaided chief surveys,
Even the loose stones that cover the highway,
On the hot stones, and in the glaring sun,
Upon the smooth flat stones : the Nurse is here,
Muttering along the stones, a busy noise
The corner stones, on either side the porch,
A book, that, in the midst of stones and moss
Fearless of winds and waves. Three several stones
Among these rocks and stones, methinks, I see
By nature's care from wreck of scattered stones,
Sepulchral stones appeared, with emblems graven
Amid a wilderness of rocks and stones . . .
A house of stones collected on the spot,
By these obstructions, "round the shady stones
From interruption of sepulchral stones,
And with the flowers are intermingled stones
And choice of moss-clad stones, whereon we couched

Stood. When horses in the sunburnt intake stood,
In which a cabin undeserted stood ;
Bidding me trust in God, he stood and prayed ;—
Only were told there stood a lonely cot
And homeless near a thousand homes I stood,
A woman stood with quivering lips and pale,
The Soldier's Widow heard and stood aghast ;
A cart and horse beside the rivulet stood ;
Torn from our hut, that stood beside the sea
My husband's loving kindness stood between . . .
At Herbert's door—and when he stood beside Rooted I stood ; for, looking at the woman,
Stood silent as we passed them ! I have heard
Whom no one comes to meet, I stood alone—
In some degree. Between us stood, I thought,
Silent he stood ; then laughed again,
At day-break on a hill they stood . . .
The hut stood finished by his pains, nor seemingly lacked aught
In which the Parish Chapel stood alone,

How cheerful, at sunrise, the hill where I stood, . . . Impelled;—they parted from him there, and stood For wishes he had none. To a lodge that stood . . . Stood single, with large prospect, north and south, Stood single, and, from matchless depth of shade, There stood the urchin, as you will divine, Then, pointing to the stones near which they stood, On which it stood; great changes have been wrought . . . Were only hindrances that stood between . . . That eastward looks, I there stopped short—and stood . . . Attired in peasant's garb, who stood alone . . . He stood alone; whereat he turned his head . . . Along a natural opening, that I stood . . . Who, while each stood companionless and eyed On which brave Admiral Nelson stood— Of its own darkness, as it stood of yore : A virgin scene !—A little while I stood, Motionless as a cloud the old Man stood, The old Man still stood talking by my side ; Stood his dumb partner in this glorious feat ; I stood in various thoughts and fancies lost, These were the bower; and here a mansion stood, We stood together; and that I, so long And Eson stood a youth 'mid youthful peers. Stood like a lofty mound, uplifting slowly Alighted, there the Stranger stood alone ; Stood just as he had stood before ! Upon the spot where he had stood, He stood beside the cottage-door ; I stood, of simple shame the blushing Thrall ; He who stood visible to Mirza's eye, Save one, one only, when I stood forlorn, Salute us; there stood Indian citadel, The sweet-souled Poet of the Seasons stood— When at the sacred font for thee I stood ; Rose out of darkness: the bright Work stood still ; Near which their cottage stood, Beside a lake their cottage stood, A while he stood upon his feet ; There stood a consecrated Pile ; Who stood and flourished face to face Where stood, sublime, Leonidas . . . Inland, within a hollow vale, I stood ; Resting upon his arms each warrior stood, For them who bravely stood unhurt, or bled . . . But, where we stood, the setting sun Before the target stood—to claim . . . Stood Science waiting for the hour Of airy workmanship whereon we stood, We stood rejoicing, as if earth were free, Her splendours, seen, not felt, while he stood Of that high Convent-crested cliff I stood, I stood, and gazed upon a marble stone, Firm in its pristine majesty bath stood, Merlin, as fixed in thought he stood, Awe-stricken stood both Knights and Dames . . . He paused, and stood entranced by that still face And stood, far-kenned by mantle furred with ermine, . . . I stood, looked, listened, and with Thee, . . . Here stood an Oak, that long had borne affixed And oftentimes before him stood, The Friend, who stood before her sight, Stood quietly in Rylstone-hall . . . As on the banner which stood near . . . Stood silent under dreary weight,— There stood he, leaning on a lance . . . There stood he, cleansed from the despair . . . Stood Richard, Ambrose, Christopher, . . . Stood He, whose arm yet lacks the power . . . From all the listeners that stood round, Stood by their Sire, on Clifford-moor, . . . At need, he stood, advancing high . . . And with those grey-haired champions stood, Before his Father, Francis stood, Beside the lonely watch-tower stood They stood like trees when earth and heaven . . . And all the people that stood round . . . And hearing passed of Him who stood . . . Where Francis stood in open sight, . . . And there stood bravely, though forlorn, . . . He stood,—nor weaponless was now ; . . . And where full many a brave tree stood, . . . Went forth, the Doe stood there in sight, . . . We stood before this ruined Pile, . . . And stood apart from human cares : . . . We stood, a trembling, earnest Company ! . . . Cut off from home and country, may have stood— Prepared, when each has stood his time, to sink Degrees and Orders stood, each under each : . . . That searching test thy public course has stood ; . . . So from the spot whereon he stood, . . . Her very self stood there . . . The Shepherd stood; then makes his way . . . He was a tree that stood alone . . . Stood with eyes fixed upon that masterpiece, . . . In after-thought, for Him who stood in awe The Wain stood ready, at our Cottage-door, . . .

Stood fixed; and fixed resemblances were seen
I then forgot him:—there I stood and gazed :

And, by what compromise it stood, not nice?
Against my peace. Within the cabin stood
Who'er hath stood to watch a mountain brook
Stood empty of all shape of life, and silent
To us who stood low in that hollow dell,
Stood open; and we entered. On my frame,
Of sculptured oak stood there, with drapery lined;
In some abstraction;—gracefully he stood,
He stood; or if not so, whose top serene
While they stood in conference, and I guess
Bearing a lantern in her hand she stood,
Before me stood that day; on holy ground
While both, embellishing each other, stood
So, where the mouldered tree had stood, was raised
Hither she came; here stood, and sometimes knelt
And naked stood that lowly Parsonage
And far remote the chapel stood,—remote,
This old Man stood, the patriarch of the Vale!
That, in his presence, humbler knowledge stood
Survive, as pagan temples stood of yore . . . 824 Excursion 4. 1390

Stood—continued.

The Lady whispered, while we stood and gazed
 And yet conspicuous, stood the old Church-tower,
 Above the darkened hills stood boldly forth
 Of the benignant fountain, while she stood
 'Cross the tempestuous torrent; so he stood
 Of mountain sights, this untaught shepherd stood
Stood'st. That stood'st before my eyes, more clear Stool. Wrought in the field, or on his shepherd's stool.
 And you shall bring your stool and rest;
Stools. The wooden stools for everlasting use,
Stoop. Would stoop to skulk about a Cottage door—
 Stoop for a moment; 'tis an act of justice;
 Turned upon her who bore him, she would stoop
 Of memory?—O that ye might stoop to hear—
 Stoop their proud heads, but not unto the dust—
 To virtue consecrate, stoop ye from your height—
 Nor spare to stoop her head, and taste
 Shall sear, and as a hypocrite can stoop,
 "Ere I absolve thee, stoop I that on thy neck"
 To stoop her head before these desperate shocks—
 And therefore does not stoop, nor lie in wait
 A tottering infant, with compliant stoop
 Bright'ning the gloom where thick the forests
 stoop;
 And could not stoop—no help was nigh.
 Rarely and with reluctance would I stoop
 Dread nothing? From this height I shall not stoop
 Wisdom is ofttimes nearer when we stoop.
 —Stoop from those heights, and soberly declare
 But stoop, and place the prospect of the soul
 —Stoop from your height, ye proud, and copy
 these!
 Which Age, with many a slow stoop, strove to gain;
Stooped. Which for a season I have stooped to wear,
 As if he had stooped to drink, and so remained
 The Shepherd ended here; and Luke stooped down,
 Stooped down to pay him fealty;
 Stooped to the Victory on that Belgic field
 Stooped, of all glory disinterested,
 Where Fact with Fancy stooped to play;
 Nor chide the Muse that stooped to break a spell
 He stooped and took the penny up
 He stooped, and straightway from the ground took up
 The wisest whose opinions stooped the least
 Stooped to this apt reply:—"As men from men
 The fountain of the mists. The father stooped Stoop'st. Wanderer! that stoop'st so low, and comander'st so near
Stooping. Stooping his gait, but not as if to gain
 Thou hangest, stooping, as might seem, to sink
 Then Nina, stooping down, embraced,
 Was on the wing; stooping, he struck with awe
 Or the stooping labourer,
 Was stooping and contracted, and a face,
 To human comfort. Stooping down to drink,
 "Lo I what is here?" and, stooping down, drew forth
 His stooping body tottered with wreaths of flowers
Stoops. Stoops her sick head, and shuts her weary eyes;
 Love stoops as fondly as he soars.
 A flower how rich in sadness! Even thus stoops,
 He stoops the Ass's neck to seize
 Stoops willingly to animate and spur
 That crossed her way. Now stoops she to entreat
 In sober privacy; when the spirit stoops
Stop. Nor stop but where creation seems to end.
 Nay, Father, stop not; let me hear it all.
 This instant will we stop him— Be not hasty,
 In such a night as this. Stop, stop. Perhaps,
 In some a hideous one—hem! shall I stop?
 Is ringing it—'twould stop a Saint in prayer,
 Whose natural element was freedom— Stop—
 He will suddenly stop in a cunning nook,
 "Stop!" to his comrade Walter cries—
 Who would stop the swallow, wheeling
 Come home again, nor stop at all—
 To stop her in her work: for, when she lay
 Not seldom did we stop to watch some tuft
 Now they stop and there arc none:
 Many a stop and stay he makes,
 Stop," it exclaimed, "and pity me!"
 There he is—resolved to stop,
 But stop he cannot—must advance:
 I will not stop to tell how far he fled,
 And, pulling now the rein my horse to stop,
 Might stop before this favoured scene,
 Where will they stop, those breathing Powers,
 Not only stop but turn, and change
 Moves on without a moment's stop,
 Let them whose voice can stop the clouds,
 Yet who would stop, or fear to advance,
 Stop here, or gently pass!
 The traveller, at this day, will stop and gaze

Stop—continued.

Perchance, in future ages, here may stop;
 To stop ashamed—too timid to advance;
 And said—"We need not stop, my Son!
 Crimes that might stop the motion of the sun)
 To stop—no record hath told where!
 Departing sunbeams, loth to stop,
 A second time did Matthew stop;
 To stop your Leaders in their headstrong course!
 He cannot stop his singing by the way.
 Here did we stop; and here looked round
 But stop! these theoretic fancies jar
 This Dwelling charms me; often I stop short,
 To stop, and yield our gracious Teacher thanks
 Or should you even stop short of Woolwich docks
Stopped. See Stopt.
 But sickness stopped me in an early stage
 She slept in peace,—his pulses throbb'd and
 stopped,
 The cries he uttered might have stopped the heat
 He stopped his horses at the word.
 James stopped with no good will:
 His pulse is stopped, his breath is lost,
 Stopped short,—and thence, at leisure, limb by limb
 That overhung the road: he there stopped short,
 He raised, and never stopped:
 It was a vein that never stopped—
 And soon as they had reached the place he stopped,
 That eastward looks, I there stopped short—and stood
 The Newsmen is stopped, though he stops on the fret;
 The Shepherd stopped, and that same story told
 And stopped beside the door.
 Which stopped that band of travellers on their way,
 Was stopped, and could not breathe beneath the load
 Hath stopped, and fixed her large full eye
 There stopped; her thirst was satisfied
 And the sword stopped, the bleeding wounds were closed;
 And Matthew stopped, he looked, and said,
 And, to the churchyard come, stopped short
 Stopped me at once by charm of what it showed,
 Nor stopped, till in the dappling east
 I stopped, and said with ioly-muttered voice,
 Stopped short; yet still the solitary cliffs
 Had stopped, with wearisome Cassandra voice
 Preyed on my strength, and stopped the quiet
 stream
 Then stopped for years; not audible again
 Have stopped, as some believe, the kindest growths.
 The sorrow of the passion stopped me there.
 Like angels stopped upon the wing by sound
Stops. Or stops the solemn mountain-shades to view
 She stops, she stands, she looks about;
 He wheels—and, making many stops,
 The Newsmen is stopped, though he stops on the fret;
 Or when aloft on Mænalus he stops
 —She stops—is fastened to that rivulet's side;
 The Ass is startled—and stops short
 The lingering dew—there steals along, or stops
 Even for the Man who stops not here,
 Where Solitude with Silence paired stops short
 Stops not at this low point, nor wants the lure
 Little Music, she stops short.
 Abides by this resolve, and stops not there,
 Caught at the point where it stops short of sadness.
 But stops,—that he may safely lodge the coin
 Old Daniel begins; he stops short—and his eye,
 The milkmaid stops her ballad, and her pail
 Or of the end stops short, proposed to all Stopt. See Stopped.
 What mournful sighs have here been heard, and
 when the voice was stopt
 Seemed stopt, though by some other power than death.
Store. We want not store of them;—a water-spout
 These narrow bounds contain our private store
 To store up kindred hours for me, thy face

Storms—continued.

The sword from Bangor's walls, and guard the store
 Yet, while each useful Art augments her store,
 Some ragged child holds up for sale a store
 Came Barons bold, with store of gold,
 Few months of life has he in store
 There find I personal themes, a pteous store,
 Thoughtfully freighted with a various store;
 What recompense is kept in store or left
 With pteous store of heath and withered fern,
 By her own wants, she from her store of meal
 And gave, in handruls gave, the treacherous store:
 And fume the household deities with store
 In common things—the endless store of things,
 Arc found in pteous store, but nowhere such
 With store of springes o'er my shoulder hung
 Want store of leafy arbores where the light
 That golden store of books which I had left,
 For he was busy, dealing, from a store
 And was itself half-covered with a store
 Than that accumulated store of gold
 With store of household goods, in panniers slung
 Year after year is added to his store
 Large store of gleaming crimson-spotted trouts; Stored. A garden stored with peas, and mint, and thyme,
 Into a garden stored with Poesy;
 Is ample, and some little might be stored
 He found the little he had stored, to meet
 A cabinet stored with gems and pictures—draws Storehouse. The wide earth's storehouse fenced about Storehouses. Which God's ethereal storehouses afford:
Stores. Nor Winter yet his frozen stores had piled,
 Her stores, and sighed to find them insecure!
 What stores for years to come!
 With those rich stores of Nature's imagery,
 Such stores as silent thought can bring,
 Here will he gather stores of ready bliss,
 New stores, or rescue from decay the old
 As through a wide museum from whose stores
 Left one day mistress of her mother's stores,
 From Fancy, willing to set off her stores
 The ocean paid him tribute from the stores
Storms. Quaint stories of the bird's attraction!
Storm. See May-storm, Snow-storm.
 Triumphant on the bosom of the storm,
 Till storm and driving ice blockade him there.
 Or hovel from the storm to shield his head,
 And, from the perilous ground dislodged, through storm
 Of such rough storm, this happy change to view."
 When into storm the evening sky is wrought,
 Upon the self-same spot, in rain or storm,
 That a fierce storm o'ertook us, worn with travel,
 Meanwhile the storm fell heavy on the woods;
 Or till the storm abate. He has restored you,
 And, in the storm and anguish of the heart,
 The storm beats hard—Mercy for poor or rich,
 to look up at this roof in storm or fair
 The first hours of last night were rough with storm:
 The storm came on before its time:
 The rain and storm are things that scarcely can come here.
 And while around it storm as fierce seemed troubling earth and air,
 Of storm and thaw, when every water-course
 And, truly, at all times, the storm, that drives
 With two brave sheep-dogs tried in many a storm,
 So when the rain is over, the storm laid,
 Sharp season followed of continual storm
 Of me and of the storm. Full many an hour
 Was fettered, and the air by storm disturbed,
 The storm had fallen upon the Oak,
 A thing no storm can e'er destroy,
 But in the storm 'tis fresh and blue
 Ere the storm its fury stills,
 A storm, which had been smothered long,
 As if a storm had never been)
 Against the storm, and canvas spread.
 Of Raven-crag—black as a storm—
 Even in the motions of the Storm
 A storm came on, and I could see
 " 'Twas mist and rain, and storm and rain:
 Safe through the winter storm in quiet dwells!
 Beat back the roaring storm—but how subdued
 In stillness or in storm.
 Brighter than brightest loop-hole, in a storm,
 Bend that way her desires. The dew, the storm—
 A purifying instrument—the storm
 Shun, like a shattered bark, the storm, and flee
 Lo! he harangues his cohorts—there the storm
 The storm has stripped her of her leaves;
 The sea-blast ruffles as the storm comes on,
 Until this storm hath ceased to rave:
 As if with prescience of the coming storm,
 As, when a storm hath ceased, the birds regain
 Have the survivors of this Storm renewed
 Thus is the storm abated by the craft
 And ploughing storm, the spirit of Nassau

Storm—continued.

In hours of peace, or when the storm is driven
 And the wild storm hath somewhere found a nest;
 Depress the hours. Up, Spirit of the storm!
 Perchance had flown, delivered by the storm;
 But when a storm, on sea or mountain bred,
 While a dark storm before my sight
 And faculty for storm and turbulence,
 By gusts of vernal storm, attuned his song
 All night the storm had raged, nor ceased, nor paused,
 And buffeted at will by rain and storm.
 Protracted, and the twilight storm foretells,
 'Tis when; and hid in mist from hour to hour
 So when on Ocean's face the storm subsides,
 And through the astonished Island swept in storm,
 Dashed headlong, and rejected by the storm.
 If the night blackened with a coming storm,
 A like dominion, and the midnight storm
 With an obsequious promptness, yet the storm
 As the black storm upon the mountain-top
 Moreover, the first storm was overblown,
 Joust underneath the trees, that as in storm
 Of which I speak, only as they were storm
 Of a ship struggling with a hideous storm)
 Under a long-lived storm of great events—
 Not mute, and then retire, fearing no storm;
 Down to this very time, when storm and rain
 Through storm and darkness, early in my mind
 Brooding above the fierce confederate storm
 The history of many a winter storm,
 Through hot and dusty ways, or pelting storm,
 In the wild concert—chiefly when the storm
 Lay at the mercy of this raging storm.
