Crest—continued.

I marked the breathings of her dragon crest : . . .
 Jove, Venus, and the ruddy crest of Mars . . .
 That simple crest, a heron's plume, is worn . . .
 On my helm the dragon crest, . . .
 That, while it wore for melancholy crest
 As faith thus sanctified the warrior's crest
 Infinity's embrace; whose guardian crest,
 Sit loosely, like the thistle's crest of down;
 In all her brightness, from the dancing crest
 Float with its crest of trees adorned . . .
 A pearly crest, like Dian's when it threw
 A crest of purple tops his warrior head.
 Her crest a bough of Winter's bleakest pine,
 Worse than the Dragon that bowed low his crest,
 In clamorous agitation, round the crest
 Backed also by a ledge of rock, whose crest . . .

Crested. See Convent-crested, Single-crested.

Crests. Of Mountains varying momentarily their crests—
 Striding with shattered crests his eye athwart.
 Striding, with shattered crests, the eye athwart?
 Would have abashed those impious crests—have Crevice. Upwards I cast my eyes, and, through a crevice,

Crevice. But thou didst plant its crevices with flowers,

Crew. We reached the western world, a poor devoted crew.

Was hatched among the crew a foul Conspiracy
 And he found no deliverance! The Crew . . .
 The Crew deceived you? Nay, command yourself.
 A mighty wonder bred among our quiet crew.
 Brim-full of a carousing crew,
 And others of your kind, ideal crew!
 And quickly with a silent crew
 Hence hath your prowess quelled that impious
 crew . . .

Among the interior Alps, gigantic crew,
 Happy the crew who this have felt, and pour
 But to each gallant Captain and his crew
 From this dull Monster and her snout crew;
 Woe to the purblind crew who fill . . .
 This last remainder of the crew are all . . .
 I come, ye little noisy Crew . . .
 For Him and for his crew . . .
 We were a noisy crew; the sun in heaven
 Touching the heart amid the boisterous crew . . .
 Welded the sceptre of the Atheist crew . . .
 The ship went gliding with her thoughtless crew;
 Tossed on the waves alone, or 'mid a crew . . .

Cricket. Is silent as a silent cricket . . .
 The cricket chirped, the house-dog dozed, . . .

Crickets. The crickets long have ceased their mirth;
Cried. "O come," he cried, "come, after weary night . . .

She cried aloud; and forth ran out in haste . . .
 Fervently cried the housewife—"God be praised,
 He cried—"Do pity me! That thou shouldst live
 They wept—and, turning homeward, cried,
 Then to his people cried, "Receive your lord,
 "O mercy!" to myself I cried,
 They cried, 'what to the poor is due?'
 Cried Betty, rising from the bed . . .
 Cried Betty, "Tell us, Johnny, do . . .
 Cried they, "Your Father loves to roam :
 Cried out, "Good brother, why so fast?
 "Come! come!" cried one, and without more ado
 "Bring forth another horse!" he cried aloud.
 Sir Walter wiped his face, and cried, "Till now
 "Shame on you!" cried my little Boat,
 "O, here he is!" cried little Bess—
 They cried, and all around me throng,
 "Hold!" cried the Squire, "against the rules
 And hears her crying as she cried,
 Sick, hale, old, young, who cried before that cloud,
 "Lei-gha—Lei-gha"—he then cried out,
 "Tis known," cried they, "that he, who would adorn . . .

City and field and flood;—aloud it cried—
 Whom he had hailed with joy, and cried,
 "Mine is she," cried the Knight;—again they clapped their pinions . . .

"Uplift it!" cried once more the Band,
 "A rescue for the Standard!" cried
 "Lo, Francis comes, there were who cried,
 They cried, "the Ensign in his hand!
 To aid a covert purpose, cried—"O ye
 And cried, "I've caught you then at last!"
 "Are you the Maid," the Stranger cried,
 She cried, till to the Jewry she was brought,
 O blissful God of Love! then thus he cried,
 "Silence!" the brave Commander cried :
 "Here," cried a swain, whose venerable head
 Till VENUS cried, "A mother's heart is mite;

Cried—continued.

Until I seemed to hear a voice that cried, . . .
 Cried, "Robespierre is dead!"—nor was a doubt,
 Her solitary infant cried aloud;
 Swelled in my breast,—"I have been dead," I cried,
 I cried, "more worthy of regard, the Power,
 'Joy be their lot, and happiness,' he cried . . .

Cries. Who cries presumptuous, "Here the flood shall stay," . . .

And female cries. Their course they thither bent,
 The moral shapes of things. His tender cries
 The cries he uttered might have stopped the boat
 "Stop!" to his comrade Walter cries—
 Cries Betty, "he'll be back again;
 "Oh God forbid!" poor Susan cries.
 A feathered task-master cries, "WORK AWAY!"
 For, cries the Sailor, "Glorious chance
 Come, come," cries he to Benjamin!
 "This," cries the Sailor, "a Third-rate is—Cries out—"Tis there, the quarter-deck
 Cries Benjamin, "a draught of length!
 Cries Benjamin, "We must be gone."
 And to herself she cries, . . .
 And to herself she cries, . . .
 Cries coming from the mountain head:
 And blood cries out for blood: but, for my part,
 "A prize!" cries Peter—but he first
 "Repent! repent!" he cries aloud,
 The cries which broke from old and young
 Those louder cries give notice that the Bird,
 By Rome abandoned; vain are suppliant cries,
 Echoed in Heaven, cries out, "Ye Chiefs, abate
 The blood cries out on your accursed deed.
 Cries out, and leads her Spectres to their prey,
 Who cries, presumptuous, "here their tides shall stay . . .
 The very shrillest of all London cries, . . .
 There, 'mid a peal of ill-matched sounds and cries,
Criffel's. Huge Criffel's hoary top ascends . . .
Crime. He journeyed, and forthwith his crime declared : . . .
 This monstrous crime to be laid open—here,
 His crime shall be proclaimed; and for the rest
 Than that most strange incontinence in crime
 There is no crime from which this man would shrink; . . .
 Quick—to the point—if any untold crime . . .
 But his own crime had brought on him this doom,
 Who has been guilty of some horrid crime . . .
 From crime to crime he mounted, till at length
 And blanch, without the owner's crime, . . .
 She perished; and, as for a wilful crime,
 Of monstrous crime!—that horror-striking blade,
 Wages of folly—baits of crime,
 With their perennal hills;—but Crime, . . .
 Doth deaden, shocks of tumult, shrieks of crime . . .
 The penal instruments, the shows of crime,
 Which they can hear who meddle not with crime,
 For discontent, and poverty, and crime;
 Nought equals when the hours are winged with crime)

Your power to punish crime, and so prevent . . .
 Crime might lie better hid. And, should the change
 Not to be jeopardised through foulest crime : . . .
 The crime confessed, a kneeling Penitent . . .
 And his crime, through the pains that o'erwhelm
 him, descried,
 By public power abused, to fatal crime,
 The dupe of folly, or the slave of crime."
 As rich in crime as the past in crime . . .

Crimes. Measures not crimes like his. We rank not, happily, . . .
 Of this Man's crimes beyond the reach of thought?
 Can feel his crimes. I have resigned a privilege;
 Has marked out this foul Wretch as one whose crimes . . .
 To perpetrate his crimes, serve as a Sanctuary
 In which a man may come to his end, whose crimes
 At my worst need, my crimes have in a net
 A wicked Man should answer for his crimes.
 With me to aggravate his crimes, and heaped
 Forsook his crimes, renounced his folly,
 Crimes which the great Avenger's hand provoke . . .

What crimes from hate, or desperate love, have sprung; . . .
 Crimes that might stop the motion of the sun)
 Ere we have learnt by use to slight the crimes
 Of a Republic. Lamentable crimes,
 Bawling, "Denunciation of the Crimes
 The goaded land waxed mad; the crimes of few
 Beyond these humble graves, of grievous crimes . . .

Criminal. A criminal in no one's eyes but theirs—
 And apprehensions dark and criminal . . .
 And wore the fetters of a criminal . . .
 Like a lone criminal whose life is spared . . .

Crimson. While, facing thus the crimson west,
 And soon with crimson fire kindled the firmament,
 Doth in thy crimson head delight
 His beautiful wings in crimson are drest,
 A crimson as bright as thine own : . . .

But the poor Cripple was alone . . .

Crippled. Is crippled sore in his narration.

Crisp. The hour of accident or crippling age,
Crisp. This was the crisis of that strong disease.

Crisp. That creeps along the bells of the crisp heather.

There to alight upon crisp moss and range,
Crisp, yellow leaves my bed ; the hooting owl
And crisp with frost the stubble land . . .

Critic. Scorn not the Sonnet ; Critic, you have frowned.

And the small critic wielding his delicate pen,
Criticised. Probed, vexed, and criticised ?—Accuse me not

Croak. Blihe ravens croak of death ; and when the owl

Two ravens now began to croak
The crags repeat the raven's croak,

Croaka. Perched on whose top the Danish Raven croaks ;

The raven croaks, and fills the upper air
Crocodile. There combats a huge crocodile—agape

The heifer in yon little croft belongs

Crofts. A few small crofts of stone-encumbered ground ;

Croglin. CROGLIN, the stately Eden's tributary !
Cromlech. A Druid cromlech !—thus I entertain

Crook. See Nutting-crook.

Enough of garlands, of the Arcadian crook,

Crook. See Nutting-crook.

Or staff more harmless than a shepherd's crook,
And he who guides the plough, or wields the crook,

Crooked. Companionship with One of crooked ways,

Have ye withdrawn from passion's crooked ways,

Crop. See Stone-crop.

With other burthens than the crop it bore,
A melancholy crop :

Cropped. And without wrong are cropped the marble tomb to strew.

Cropping. Is cropping audibly his later meal :
Cropping the shrubs of Leming-Lane,

'Cross. See Across.

'Cross the calm lake's blue shades the cliffs aspire,
One I beheld who, 'cross the foaming flood,
I had led him 'cross the torrent, his voice blessed me :

'Cross the brook its thoughtless dam.

He 'cross the ocean came.
'Cross the tempestuous torrent ; so he stood

Cross. See Death-cross, Red-cross.

The Cross, by angels planted on the aerial rock.
That in the shape of man do cross our path
And he is dead !—that Moor—how shall I cross it ?

'Cross, if you dare, where I shall cross—

Some limber twigs into a Cross, well-shaped with fingers nice,

That Cross he now was fastening there, as the surest power and best

That Cross belike he also raised as a standard for the true

The Cross, fixed in his soul, may prove an all-sufficing stay.

And in His sight the fragile Cross, on thy small hut, will be Cross—continued.

Mix with the day, and cross the hour of rest ;
Nought but the world-redeeming Cross
A thousand, if they cross our way . . .
The mountain when to cross,
'Mid trivial care and petty cross
The Cross upon thy shoulder scored,
Hence am I cross and peevish as a child :
Swept onwards, did the vision cross your view ?
All vanished ;—twas a heartfelt cross
In choral song ; and, while the uplifted cross . . .
And the red cross on my breast ;
The Cross shall spread, the Crescent hath waxed dim ;

While the Sun rules, and cross the shades of night—
(Who loves the Cross, yet to the Crescent's gleam
Hail to the firm unmoving cross,
The Cross, in calm procession, borne aloft
For safety, they of yore enclasped the Cross
Of purposes which no false thought shall cross,
Ours eouch on naked rocks,—will cross a brook
Or altar, whence the cross was rent,
The sacred Cross ; and figured there
And the sacred Cross on which Jesus died.
In that other day of Neville's Cross ?
This Cross in tears : by her, and Oae
Or let them cross the River Tweed,
Druids descend, auxiliars of the Cross ;
And hest the silver Cross, which ye, instead
The Cross preceding Him who floats in air,
Yet will we not conceal the precious Cross,
Melts, if it cross the threshold ; where the wreath
The silent Cross, among the stars shall spread (Too busy fear !) shall cross its range,
There lived, and on the cross His life resigned,
In Malta the white symbol of the Cross :
Comes in the promise from the Cross,
The mountain will we cross."

Beside their sheltering cross of wall, the flock
The cross with hideous laughter Demon mock,
And watch, while on your brows the cross ye make,
A silver cross enchased with Flowers of France
Seeking I knew not what, I chanced to cross
Of the same isthmus, which our spirits cross
The cross of Jesus stand erect, as if
Sweet covert did we cross of pastoral life,
Above all height ! like an aerial cross
Grieved and the twilight taper, and the cross
That did but cross a lonely road, and now
Fixed on the Cross, that consolation springs,
Some boundary, which his followers may not cross
The cross itself, at whose unconscious feet
In him who bled for man upon the cross ;
Altar, and cross, and church of solemn roof,
Upon the cross, this marvellous advance
Thou good and faithful servant of the Cross."

But here's a thought which well our thought may cross
Cross-bones. Cross-bones nor skull,—type of our earthly state
Cross-crowned. For bodied forth before my eyes the cross-crowned hut appeared ;
Crossed. See Crost.
Even so the dire phantasma which had crossed
Then pity crossed the path of my resolve :
And, when I crossed the wild,
And then an open field they crossed :
Was sadly crossed.—Poor Leonard ! when we parted,
And wicked fancies crossed my mind ;
She with her mother crossed the sea ;
Uncharitable crossed his mind, no sense
And while she crossed the bridge, there came
To Scotland's heaths ; or those that crossed the sea
Had crossed the Atlantic main . . .
Had crossed her purpose with some quaint vagary,
The mead is crossed—the quarry's mouth
By love, long crossed with adverse circumstance.
And crossed by many a shattered scheme,
Laid spiteful Fiends that vanish, crossed
Full thrice had crossed himself in meek composure.
Crossed ever and anon by plank or arch ;
Have helped us : Ure we crossed, and Swale,
Out of his heart, or crossed his thought,
Fair Vision ! when it crossed the Maid
Nor long (that crossed) would Grecian hills detain
Is crossed by knowledge, or by dread, of change,
Or crossed by vapour streaks and clouds that move

Tempestuous winds her holy errand crossed :
Crossed by misfortune, or of doubted faith ?
But, if no evil hap his wishes crossed,
The billows lengthening, mutually crossed
Till they have crossed the quaking marsh,
That crossed her way. Now stoops she to entreat
Mine eyes were crossed by butterflies, ears vexed
Was crossed, a hare ridge clomb, upon whose top
In their true dwelling ; now is crossed by gleam
Ended in this,—that we had crossed the Alps.
We crossed the Brabant armies on the fret

Crossed—continued.

Seeking the very regions which he crossed France lured me forth; the realm that I had crossed
 I crossed the square (an empty area then!)
 Who crossed the sands with ebb of morning tide.
 One daily present to my eyes, that crossing
 If two auspicious magpies crossed my way;—
 By naked rafters intricately crossed,
 Of the eighth Henry, when he crossed the seas
 Full well I recollect. We often crossed
 Had crossed her only to be shunned with scorn.
 Thoughts, which the rich are free from, came and crossed
 For holy Nature might not thus be crossed,
 By which our northern wilds could then be crossed;
 Though apprehensions crossed me that my zeal

Crosses. This bitter night. Ha! Oswald! tea bright crosses
 His shattered hopes and crosses,
 The tolls nor felt the crosses of the way,
 Her spirit, while he crosses lonely moors,
 And crosses rear'd to Death on every side,
 With crosses and with cyphers scribbled o'er,
Cross-fell. Or stormy Cross-fell, snatches he might pen
Crossing. Crossing our roads at every hundred steps, Crossing the waters) doubt, and something dark,
 A meteor wert thou crossing a dark night:
 That press upon me, crossing the career
 While crossing Magdalene Bridge, a glimpse of Cam;
 Crossing the unbridged stream, that road we took,
Cross-legged. Where a cross-legged Knight lies sculptured
 The vow performed, in cross-legged effigy,
 In uncouth race, and left the cross-legged knight,
Cross-row. See Christ-cross-row.
Cross-timber. From the cross-timber of an outhouse hung;

Cross-winds. When cross-winds on her quarter beat;
Crost. See Crossed.
 Our comfort was near if we ever were crost;
 The sight is free as air—or crost
 By doubts and thousand petty fancies crost
 Call thee worst Tyrant by which Flesh is crost?
 Thus blame the present, that our wish hath crost.
 Of Time and shadows of Tradition crost;
 To the ice, and safely crost;
 She hath crost, and without heed
 In second-sight appearances, or crost

Crouch. Then crouch no more on suppliant knee,
 When but a single Mind resolves to crouch no more.
 Her trophies, Fancy crouch; the course of pride
 Resist—the thunder quails thee!—crouch—rebuff Crouched. Awed sober Reason till she crouched in fear?
 Tam'd "sober Reason" till she crouch'd in fear?
Crouches. Crouches, stretches, paws, and darts!
 And grandeur crouches like a guilty thing,
 Earth crouches, the elements are potter's clay,
Crouching. The other crouching undisturbed,
 A crouching purpose—a distracted will—
 Crouching and terrified,
 And crouching fearful at the feet of Pow'r,
Croud. While strives a secret Power to hush the croud,
Crowded. Crowded behind the swain, in mute distress,
Crow. See Scarecrow.
 Or to the drowsy croud of midnight cock
 As we approached, a solitary crow
 "The cocks did crow to-who, to-who,
 But, long as cock shall croud from household perch
 As lonely he stood as a crow on the sands.
 Followed by drowsy croud of midnight cock.
 Soon as the cock begins to crow

Crowd. See Stand.
 While silent stands the admiring crowd below,
 Which, with a generous shout, the crowd did ratify.
 For the plaudits of the crowd?
 When all at once I saw a crowd,
 His station is there; and he works on the crowd,
 What crowd is this? what have we here! we must not pass it by;
 Calm, though impatient, is the crowd; each stands
 ready with the fee,
 Not wasted on the attendant crowd,
 Thrilling the unweaponed crowd with plumelless heads?
 Whether alone or in a crowd,
 Ever put on; a miserable crowd,
 The crowd beneath her. Verily I think,
 Which from the crowd on shore was sent,
 'Tis from the crowd, who tremblingly
 With first-fruit offerings crowd to head the knee.
 While we go forth, a self-devoted crowd,
 While from the crowd bursts forth a rapturous noise
 (As the crowd press devoutly down the aisle
 To crowd the world with metamorphosis,
 Belief sank deep into the crowd
 How proud and happy they! the crowd

Crowd—continued.

Nor wanted 'mid the pressing crowd
 Amaze strikes the crowd: while many turn
 Spirits that crowd the intellectual sphere
 Sharing the strong emotion of the crowd,
 The crowd of daisies from the shaven lawn,
 We saw, but surely, in the motley crowd,
 When feasts shall crowd the hall, and steeple bells
 To welcome thee, repel the fears that crowd
 No queen before a shouting crowd
 My comrades, leave the crowd, buildings and groves,
 For entertainment of the gaping crowd
 Thee and thy dwelling, and a crowd of things
 Drew to the spot an anxious crowd; some looked Clustered together with a merry crowd
 Among the crowd all specimens of man,
 Have I gone forward with the crowd, and said
 Above the press and danger of the crowd,
 And crack the voice in rivalry, the crowd
 To make the sounds more audible? What crowd
 Crowd seems it, solitary hill! to thee,
 Among the crowd, half pleased with, half ashamed
 By struggling with the crowd for present ends.
 Lay spotted with a variegated crowd
 Of those that crowd the giant wicker thrills
 The admiration winning of the crowd;
 Yet, in the very centre of the crowd,
 My lips, that may forget thee in the crowd,
 'Mid the transactions of the bustling crowd;
 —Thoughts crowd upon me—and 'twere seemlier now
 Reluctantly amid the bustling crowd?
 There is a shapeless crowd of unheun stones

Amid the undistinguishable crowd
 How throngs the crowd to yon theatric school
Crowded. See Crowded.
 Pleasure on pleasure crowded in, each livelier than the last.
 Fresh from the crowded city, to behold
 Why have I crowded this small hark with you
 Trusting to crowded factory and mart
 'Mid crowded obelisks and urns
 These crowded offerings as they hang Crowded together under rustling trees
 Mountain, and moor, and crowded street, where lie
 Varying her crowded peaks and ridges blue;
 These crowded streets resound no plaintive ditty:
 And crowded street resound with ballad strains,
 Crowded with thoughts that need a settled home,
 With books, or while he ranged the crowded streets
 And crowded, o'er the ponderous books they hung
 Till 'mid this crowded neighbourhood of things
 Crowded with Genii busy among works
 With the deformities of crowded life,
 Ere I forsook the crowded solitude,
 Were crowded with the bravest youth of France,
 Once more parading through her crowded streets
 With pillars crowded, and the roof upheld
 Of keels that rest within her crowded ports,
 A fresh band meets them, at the crowded door—
 Nor crowded city can be taxed with aught
 Of numbers crowded on their native soil,
 In crowded cities, without fear shall live
 His lullaby. From crowded streets remote,

Crowding. See Close-crowding.
 When crowding cattle, checked by rails that make Crowding the quarter whence the sun comes forth
 The cattle crowded round this beverage clear
 Was like the crowding of the year
 The honeysuckle, crowding round the porch,
Crowd's. Was come, I tried in vain the crowd's resort.
Crowds. My apprehensions come in crowds;
 With all its fairy crowds
 Yet round our sea-girl shore they rise in crowds:
 And ask, surrounded even by kneeling crowds,
 Till summer come up from the south, and with crowds
 Nor indigent of songs warbled from crowds
 Each in his separate cell, or penned in crowds
 And acclamation, crowds in open air Crowded. Crowded with ear-piercing power till then unheard;
 The cock had crowded, and now the eastern sky
Crowling. So struts yon cock that now is crowling;
 The Cock is crowling,
 Save that the Cock is crowling, a shrill note,
 "Roused by the crowling cock at dawn of day,

Crown. See Half-a-crown.
 While youth's roses are thy crown,
 (Such it may seem) if I thy crown have borne,
 "Who, when a crown is fixed upon his head,
 Did place upon his brother's head the crown,
 With whom a crown (temptation that hath set
 She smiles as if a martyr's crown were won:
 A queen in crown of rubies drest;
 The other wore a rimless crown,
 'Tis Hesperus—there he stands with glittering crown,
 Approach;—and, thus invited, crown with rest
 That to the sparkling crown Urania wears,
 And dimly-gleaming Nest,—a hollow crown

Crown—continued.

These might thy Minions crown, and chant thy power,
 And mineral crown, beside his jagged urn,
 And claim, among the dead, this awful crown;
 To crown thy abbey's sanctity.
 His envied temples with the Isthmian crown,
 Beneath her vine-leaf crown the green Earth reels:
 The beatic crown—
 Under the white cliff's battlemented crown,
 Blithe Autumn's purple crown, and Winter's icy mail
 Beyond these transient spheres, doth wear a crown
 And fittest serve to crown with fragrant wreaths
 We covet as supreme. O grant the crown
 Faith crushed, yet proud of weeds, her gaudy crown;
 The crown of thorns, hands pierced upon the tree,
 Nor yet the restless crown had been
 No loyal rest while England's Crown
 And Castle like a stately crown
 The crown of thorns: whose life-blood flowed, the price
 Might range the starry ether for a crown
 Woe to the Crown that doth the Cowl obey!
 Lo! John self-stripped of his insignia—crown,
 A brighter crown."—On you Cistercian wall
 And airy harvests crown the fertile lea.
 And Heaven will crown the right."—The mitred Sire
 Unto itself, the Crown assumes a voice
 A brilliant crown of everlasting snow,
 A crown for Hope!—I dread the boasted lights
 His crown of weeds, but could not even sustain
 One who ne'er ventured for a Delphic crown
 Such thy meek outset, with a crown, though frail,
 The crown of thorns around his bleeding brow
 Accepts from your bold hands the proffered crown
 The ostentatious symbol of a crown;
 With rapture thrilled; whose Youth revered the crown
 Then, will the sceptre be a straw, the crown
 A blossom from thy crown to drop,
 A silver line, that runs from brow to crown
 A prison's crown, along this way they past
 But upon Honour's head disturb the crown,
 And over many a wide bill's craggy crown,
 His staff is a sceptre—his grey hairs crown;
 And goblets crown the proud festivity,
 Huge goblets are brought forth; they crown the wine;
 So shall that earthly crown thy brows have worn
 Leaves of myrtle in her Crown,
 As, of all visible natures, crown, though born
 With these defenders of the Crown, and talked,
 And finally, as sum and crown of all,
 His hoary crown, since I had seen the surge
 Or crown of burning seraphs as they sit
 Is summoned in to crown an Emperor—
 Unhallowed actions—planted like a crown
 The crown of wisdom—to yield up their souls
 A crown, an attribute of sovereign power,
 Hail to the crown by Freedom shaped—to gird
 The natural crown that sage Experience wears.
 Of arms, the crown which bigotry had lost,
 Till perfect mastery crown the pains at last.
 By the dense air—shot upwards to the crown
 An amaranthine crown of flowers forlorn—

Crowned. See Cross-crowned, Flower-crowned, Grass-crowned, Leaf-crowned, Myrtle-crowned, Oak-crowned, Star-crowned, Wood-crowned.

No goblets shall, for thee, be crowned with flowers,
 And weakness crowned with the impotence of
 death!
 Holy as that which long hath crowned the Chapel
 of this Tree;
 Upon its airy summit crowned with heath,
 Then, like a hero crowned with laurel,
 Of blessed Angels crowned the right,
 That calms all fear; "Such crag hath crowned thy prayer,
 Each crowned with flowers, and armed with spear
 and shield.
 He also crowned with flowers of Sicily,
 This way and that, with wild-flowers crowned.
 The towering headlands, crowned with mist,
 Amid the cypress with which Dante crowned.
 To that great King: shall hail the crowned Youth Sing ye, with blossoms crowned, and fruits, and
 flowers,
 Of virtue crowned with glory's deathless meed:
 Bright Spirit, not with amaranth crowned
 His project crowned, his pleasant travel o'er?
 Crowned with St. Peter's everlasting Dome.
 And tender Goldsmith crowned with deathless
 praise!
 Sweet pastoral flowers, and laurels that have crowned
 The laws to promulgate, enrobed and crowned;
 With laurel chaplets crowned.
 O, of all houses once the crowned boast!
 There pleasure crowned his days; and all his thoughts
 Our haughty life is crowned with darkness,

Crush. They crush with broad black feet their flowery walk ;
 Banish the thought, crush it, and be at peace . . .
 Would crush the lion's paw with mortal anguish,
 Bring down a heap of rubbish, and it crush me,
 Her tread that would scarcely crush a worm,
 To crush the mountain dew-drops—soon to melt
 Might crush, nor know that it had suffered harm ;
 And some break forth when others' sorrows crush ;
 Ye crush with broad black feet your flow'ry walk ;
 Crush out a livelier fragrance from the flowers . . .
 Hence, amid ills that vex and wrongs that crush . . .
Crushed. On the crushed heart a heavier burthen lay.
 Faith crushed, yet proud of weeds, her gaudy crown ;
 Where towers are crushed, and unforbidden weeds
 Crushed as if by wrath divine ? . . .
 By fortune crushed, or tamed by grief ; . . .
 A Nation's hopes lie crushed in Claremont's desolate Hall . . .
 When foot hath crushed them. He through the events
 To a new transition, when the King was crushed,
 When he had crushed a plentiful estate
 Nor bodies crushed by unremitting toil ;
Crusoe's. The various turns of Crusoe's fate)—
Crustl. Sleep in thy intellectual crust ;
 Shall e'er dissolve the crust wherein his soul . . .
Crusted. Deep the river was, and crusted
 In weather-stains or crusted o'er by Nature . . .
Crutch. Brandished his crutch against the mountain tops ;
 Mark that Cripple who leans on his crutch ; like a tower . . .
Cry. See Hue-and-cry.
 Turn to a silent smile their sleepy cry . . .
 And what if ospreys, cormorants, herons cry . . .
 Sole sound, the Sourd prolongs his mournful cry ;
 But neither cry, nor voice, nor shout,
 The cry, I bade him halt again . . .
 They never hear the cry
 That plaintive cry ! which up the hill
 Sent forth a cry forlorn,
 That sent this rueful cry, I ween
 And Skiddaw is glad with the cry of the hounds . . .
 Beneath her sway, a simple forest cry
 They run, and cry, " Nay, let us die,
 I listened to ; that Cry
 And wherefore does she cry ?— . . .
 Does she repeat that doleful cry ? . . .
 I turned about and heard her cry . . .
 She shudders, and you hear her cry,
 That I have heard her cry . . .
 Earth helped him with the cry of blood : . . .
 Like her ordinary cry . . .
 " But should suspense permit the Foe to cry . . .
 From the babe's first cry to voice of regal city,
 This cry—that rings along the wond,
 This cry—that floats adown the flood,
 Of that intense and piercing cry . . .
 That lamentable cry to chase— . . .
 The cry grows weak—and weaker still ; . . .
 That unintelligible cry . . .
 Makes in the house a piteous cry . . .
 And the first cuckoo's melancholy cry . . .
 That cry can reach ; and to the sick man's room . . .
 Thus did he cry, and thus did pray,
 Cleaves its glad way, a cry of harvest home . . .
 Stern GEMMI listens to as full a cry . . .
 The Baptist might have been ordained to cry . . .
 A cry of lamentation send ; . . .
 " Uplift the Standard ! " was the cry . . .
 " GOD WILLETH IT," the whole assembly cry ; . . .
 The Saints must govern is their common cry ; . . .
 When Alpine Vales threw forth a suppliant cry,
 The tombs—which hear and answer that brief cry,
 And the cuckoo's sovereign cry . . .
 A cry as of a dog or fox ; . . .
 Unusual in its cry : . . .
 Repeating the same timid cry . . .
 Voice but serves for one brief cry ; . . .
 And to your wrath cry out, " Be thou our guide ;"
 Mistrust thyself, vain Country ! cease to cry . . .
 For once I burst my bands, and cry, applaud ! . . .
 Full merrily then would he sing and cry,
 She for her Son in that same spot did cry . . .
 Full little joy have I now of thy cry . . .
 For thou hast many a foolish and quaint cry :—
 And for that cause OSEE I cry ; take heed ! . . .
 For trust me well, in spite of thy quaint cry . . .
 For love of thee, as loud as I may cry ; . . .
 Her babe's small cry, that leads him to his prey . . .
 Where ospreys, cormorants, and herons cry . . .
 While loud and dull ascends the weeping cry . . .
 Sole sound, the sourd renews his mournful cry : . . .
 St. Mary's Church, the preacher then would cry :—
 And a joyful cry through the Island rang,
 Filled all the woods : the cry of unknown birds ;
 Repeated o'er and o'er his plaintive cry . . .
 As if the visible mountain made the cry . . .
 Save for that single cry, the unanswer'd bleat
 Faint—and still fainter—as the cry, with which . . .

 Through crystal water, smoothly as a hawk,
 Aghast we might behold this crystal Mere . . .

Cuckoo. O Cuckoo ! shall I call thee Bird,
 List, Cuckoo—Cuckoo—oft the tempests howl,
 Answering to the shouting Cuckoo, . . .
 Shout, cuckoo !—let the vernal soul,
 Like the first summons, Cuckoo ! n' thy bill,
 List—'twas the Cuckoo—O with what delight
 That awful name to Thee, thee, simple Cuckoo,
 There's a cuckoo, and one or two thrushes,
 And as I lay, the Cuckoo, bird unholy,
 And, as I with the Cuckoo thus 'gan chide,
 For we have had the sorry Cuckoo here,
 Good Cuckoo, seek some other bush or brake,
 Ay, quoth the Cuckoo, that is a quaint law,
 And Cuckoo, do thou so, by my advice,
 Thou Nightingale ! the Cuckoo said, be still,
 That vengeance on this Cuckoo I may wreak . . .
 Which at the Cuckoo hardly I cast,
 And as he flew, the Cuckoo, ever and aye,
 Though thou the Cuckoo heard, ere thou heard'st
 me ;
 The Cuckoo trust not thou, nor his Love's saw ;
 And shield us from the Cuckoo and her lore . . .
 The Cuckoo—'tis not well that I should hide
 And, in good sooth, the Cuckoo here is not ;
 A summons to the Cuckoo shall be sent,
 The cuckoo, straggling up to the hill tops,
 The vernal cuckoo shouted ; not for him . . .
Cuckoo-bird. In spring-time from the Cuckoo-bird, Cuckoo-clock. Better provide thee with a Cuckoo-clock,
Cuckoo-flower. Pansies, and the cuckoo-flower ;

 And the cuckoo's sovereign cry . . .
 Ere the vile Cuckoo's note be uttered . . .
Cull. To cull contentment upon wildest shores,
 What haud but would a garlad cull
 Shall wander, chiefly let me cull with care
 How profligate the relics that we cull,
 To cull her dinner from it's garden bed,
 Where I could meditate in peace, and cull
Culled. Preferr'd a garlad culled from purple heath,
 Though hasty Fame hath many a chaplet culled
 And she who spaq it culled the daintiest fleece,
 And culled, from sundry beds, a lucid store
 And nearer interests culled from the opening stage
 Culled the best fruits of Time's uncounted hours,
Culling. And the Children are culling
 Culling such flowers of learning as might tempt
 The dangerous craft of culling term and phrase . . .

Daily. And death's dire aspect daily he surveyed,
 With daily bread, by constant toil supplied.
 Hope cheered my dreams, and to my daily prayers
 And begged our daily bread from door to door.
 Shelter and daily bread,—the sum of his desires.
 To them who look not daily on thy face;
 For daily with my growing store
 Daily before the Mother's watchful eye,
 Where she was childless, daily would repair
 He with his Father daily went, and they
 He was his comfort and his daily hope.
 And all thy life hast been my daily joy.
 The Shepherd went about his daily work
 One, who daily on the pier
 Where now she daily hears a strain
 And blend its waters with his daily meal,
 Opening daily at thy side,
 For human nature's daily food;
 His daily teachers had been woods and rills,
 The dreary intercourse of daily life,
 Where Toil pursues his daily round;
 And daily, in the conscious breast,
 May in life's daily prospect find,
 From this low threshold daily meets my sight;
 And life's unspiritual pleasures daily wooed!
 Lived thankful for day's light, for daily bread,
 They seek, are sought; to daily battle led,
 Into the torpid breast of daily life;—
 The HELVETIAN Girl—who daily braves,
 His soul her daily tasks renewed,
 That for oblivion take their daily birth
 And rob the people of his daily care,
 Fields which they love, and paths they daily trod,
 Who daily piles up wealth in Mammon's cave—
 Daily to think on old familiar doors,
 Tired with its daily share of earth's unrest,—
 Our daily raiment seems no obstacle
 Shrink from the daily sight of earth and sky!
 Or neighbours, daily, weekly, in my sight:
 Our daily world's true Worldings, rank not me!
 From well to better, daily self-surpass:
 Breathed out these words—"Here daily do we sit,
 Thanks given to God for daily bread, and here
 Daily exposed, woe that unshrugged lies;
 Of natural beauty and life's daily rounds,
 Mona from our Abode is daily seen,
 Life's daily tasks with them to share
 That asks for daily bread,
 Of labourer plodding for his daily gains,
 And feeding daily on the hope of heaven,
 The Youth, who daily farther from the east
 Of Truth that cherishes our daily life;
 Were visible, a daily sight; and thus
 Daily with charmed rites. In such a race
 Our daily meals were frugal, Sabiae fare!
 Daily the common range of visible things
 Or Beauty, Nature's daily face put on
 With the accustomed garb of daily life)
 As I had done in daily intercourse
 In daily sight of this irreverence
 Here sat in state, and fed with daily alms
 In narrow cares, thy little daily growth
 Of high endeavours, daily spreads abroad
 In human life, the daily life of those
 Drops daily from the tongue of every child,
 Be these the daily strengtheners of their minds;
 Than is the common aspect, daily garb,
 A daily wanderer among woods and fields
 Receive it daily as a joy of ours;
 Pleased with his daily task, or, if not pleased,
 My daily walk along that wide champaign,
 Though filling daily, still was light, compared
 Daily upon me, mixed with pity too
 I daily waited, now all eye and now
 I roamed, in daily presence of this scene,
 Our animal appetites and daily wants,
 The bliss of walking daily in life's prime
 One daily present to my eyes, that crossed
 Were open schools in which I daily read
 A youthful traveller, and see daily now
 Hence cheerfulness for acts of daily life,
 That were our daily portion when we first
 Thus daily thirsting, in that lonesome life,
 And in the wisdom of our daily life.
 After his daily work, until the light
 Of daily comforts, gladly reconciled
 Sought daily bread from public charity,
 And, from the dazzling conquests daily gained
 But, there, lay open to our daily haunt,
 Companions daily, often all day long;
 Restor't us, daily, to the powers of sense
 And daily lose what I desire to keep:
 With winged Messengers; who daily brought
 The wisdom of the prayer that daily asks
 For daily bread. A consciousness is yours
 Experience daily fixing his regards
 My heart a daily sacrifice to Truth,
 The narrow avenue of daily toil
 For daily bread." "Yes," buoyantly exclaimed
 Worn by his daily visits to and from
 And daily longing that the same were reached,

Daily—continued.

Daily, its bowling-green with harmless strife;
 Rule over her, and vexed her daily life;
 See daily in that happy family.
 Upon their knees, and daily homage pay
 —Seven lusty Sons sate daily round the board
 By ties of daily interest, to maintain
 He with his Father daily went, and they
 He was his comfort and his daily hope.
 To every day's demand for daily bread,
Dainties. Caressed, applauded, upon dainties fed,
 Though fed with dainties from the snow-white hand
 Of dainties,—oaten bread, curd, cheese, and cream;
Daintlest. And she who span it culled the daintiest fleece,
Daintly. For this occasion daintily adorned,
 But tintured daintily with florid hues,
Dainty. Most dainty, most admired,
 As they in order stood, the dainty fare;
 Furnish'd too with dainty thread,
Dairy. If dairy produce, from his inner hoard, Dairy-produce. If dairy-produce, from his inner hoard,
Daisied. From his poor inch or two of daisied sod?
 And mark that daisied hillock, three spans long!
Daisies. —Here are daisies, take your fill;
 Daisies leave no fruit behind
 Pansies, lilies, kingcups, daisies,
 Of daisies, shepherds sate of yore and wove
 The crowd of daisies from the shaven lawn,
 Myriads of daisies have shone forth in flower
 Or daisies swarming through the fields of June.
Daisy. The daisy sleeps upon the dewy lawn,
 Of Thee, sweet Daisy!
 Daisy! again I talk to thee,
 Where Burns ploughed up the Daisy.' Far and wide
 The Daisy, by the shadow that it casts,
 The ground was green, with daisy powdered over;
 Go look on the fresh daisy; then say I,
 To your ahodes, bright daisy Flowers!
 A drooping daisy's pride into a cup
Daisy-flowers. Its change of neatness. Daisy-flowers and thrift
Daisy's. See Mountain-daisy's.
Dale. See Deep-dale-head, Grasmere-dale, Teviotdale.
 Ere long they reach'd that cottage in the dale:
 Or with that plant which in our dale
 The Magog of Legherthwaite dale,
 For Alloaville, o'er down and dale, away then did
 we fly;
 For the whole dale, and one for each fire-side—
 He was the child of all the dale—he lived
 Across the bridge and through the dale,
 And far into the moonlight dale,
 And far into the moonlight dale;
 Wind slowly through the woody dale;
 That I, a Bard of hill and dale,
 Sky, hill, and dale, one dismal room
 Green pastures she views in the midst of the dale,
 Went wandering o'er dale and hill,
 —There is a nest in a green dale,
 He trudged along o'er hill and dale;
 Into the dale of Yarrow.
 Wilt ramble over hill and dale,
 Spread over Grasmere's lovely dale,
 Their hearts are with you: hill and dale
 High-climbing rock, low sunless dale,
 The Young-ones gathered in from hill and dale,
 Glimps 'mid the peace of this deep dale
 Trips down the pathways of some winding dale:
 To all the Birds that lodged within that dale,
 Of fields with rural works, of hill and dale,
 "I roved o'er many a hill and many a dale,
 Of this one cottage and this lonely dale,
 Who, with their burthen, traverse hill and dale,
 Glistening along the low and woody dale;
 Forest and field, and hill and dale appear,
Dalecarlia's. Help at his need in Dalecarlia's mines:
Dales. You live, Sir, in these dales, a quiet life:
 "And he had frudged through Yorkshire dales,
 These humble props disdained not! O green dales!
 To pastoral dales, thin-set with modest farms!
 And is it among rude untutored Dales,
 Ye Dales and Hills! to you alone
 Pried into Yorkshire dales, or hidden tracts
 In the green dales beside our Rother's stream,
Dalesman. A plain blue stone, a gentle Dalesmao lies, Dalesmen. Your Dalesmen, then, do in each other's thoughts
 And everlasting flowers. These Dalesmen trust
 By those untravell'd Dalesmen. With less pride,
 The Dalesmen may have aimed the deadly tube,
Dalliance. Could hold vain dalliance with the misery
Dallies. While Echo dallies with its various din!
 While Echo dallies with the various din!
 That dallies with the Sun the summer night.
Dam. His dam had seen him when he fell,
 A faithful nurse thou hast: the dam that did thee

Danger—continued.

Hoping the danger would be past ; . . . 155
 Or for some other danger nigh ? . . . 174
Here is no danger,—none at all ! . . . 174
 The danger is so great ! . . . 296
 Who are to judge of danger which they fear,
 And darkness and danger had compassed him
 round, . . . 364
 And the waves rose, and sky portended danger.
 His own life into danger brought . . . 369
 Death, darkness, danger, are our natural lot ;
 And some, too heedless of past danger, court
 Through crags, and smoothing paths beset with danger, . . . 411
 Whom neither shape of danger can dismay,
 Ye weave—no danger from without,
 Though danger, as the Wreck is neared, becomes
 Where danger roots the narrow walks of death ;
 Unmov'd with each rude form of Danger nigh,
 Whence Danger leans, and pointing ghastly, joys
 Of danger or desire ; and thus did make
 With danger, varying as the seasons change),
 Above the press and danger of the crowd,
 But images of danger and distress, . . . 639
 Disquiet, danger, and obscurity, . . . 682
 Sanctioned, of danger, difficulty, or death,
 Safe from temptation, and from danger far ?
 Surpassed in strength, I heard of danger, met Dangerous. And, not untended, climb the dangerous steep.
 No matter—he's a dangerous Man.—That noise !—
 Here broke off the dangerous converse :
 Might well be dangerous food
 Regent of sound, have dangerous Passions trod !
 Driving some vessel toward a dangerous beach—
 And unshin to a dangerous strife ;
 " To put your love to dangerous proof . . .
 A dangerous neighbourhood ;
 To guide his dangerous tread the taper's gleam.
 Hung dim-discover'd from the dangerous steep,
 The dangerous craft of culling term and phrase
 From dangerous passions free. Three years had flown
 Service however dangerous. I revolved,
 Withal a season dangerous and wild,
 In kind more dangerous. What had been a pride,
Danger's. The noise of danger's in your ears,
 Darkness before and danger's voice behind ;
 At Danger's bidding, may confront the seas,
 Darkness before, and danger's voice behind,
Dangers. He landed ; and by many dangers scared,
 Thou to his dangers dost enchain
 These hardships ill-sustained, these dangers past,
 When dangers threaten, dangers ever new !
Dangle. Here files of ballads dangle from dead walls ;
Dangled. From any garden scare-crow dangled.
Dangling. With chattering monkeys dangling from their poles
 The faded garlands dangling from its sides,
 Some in disgrace, hung dangling from the walls.
Daniel. Old Daniel his hand to the treasure will slide !
 Old Daniel begins ; he stops short—and his eye,
 'Twas a path trod by thousands ; but Daniel is one
 And now with old Daniel you see how it fares ;
Danish. The shadow of a Danish Boy . . . 165
 The Danish Boy walks here alone : . . . 165
 —They hear the Danish Boy, . . . 166

Danube. She of the Danube and the Northern Sea,
 Of triumph, how the labouring Danube bore
 Doth DANUBE spring to life ! The wandering
 Stream . . . 371
 Of wide Hungarian Danube, 'twas my lot
 Eastward, the Danube toward this inland sea,
Daphne. Till Daphne, desperate with pursuit
Dappled. —Thy lake that, streaked or dappled, blue or grey, . . . 12
 Off on the dappled turf at ease . . . 158
 Gleams, streak'd or dappled, hid from morning's ray
 A surface dappled o'er with shadows flung . . . 604
Dappling. Nor stopped, till in the dappling east
 Dappling his face. He had not heard the sound.
Dardan. Th' inevitable close of Dardan power . . . 2

Dare—continued.

And I will dare to tell, . . . 109
 What have I ? shall I dare to tell ? . . . 111
 Do I dare to thank the God, . . . 140
 " Nor dare to thrust thy foolish self . . . 155
 I never heard of such as dare . . . 198
 For future years. And so I dare to hope,
 " What'er the weak may dread, the wicked dare,
 If to provoke such doom the Impious dare,
 By casting on a moment all we dare ? . . . 220
 Yet a rich guerdon waits on minds that dare,
 Might some aspiring artist dare . . . 301
 The last that dare to struggle with the Foe,
 Where Mortal never breathed I dare to sit
 Dare they confront the lean austerities . . . 350
 Of the world's hopes, dare to fulfil ; awake,
 Desperate alternative ! what fiend could dare
 Look down among them, if you dare ; . . . 364
 If—when they shrink, nor dare oppose . . . 381
 Dare to usurp ;—thou hast a sword to wield,
 Of infant passion, scarcely dare to show . . . 399
 We only dare to cast a transient glance,
 The soul of Genius, if he dare to take . . . 445
 Effigy of the Vanished—(shall I dare
 But whose rash hand (again I ask) could dare,
 With such fell mastery that a man may dare . . . 511
 God, whom their passions dare defy, . . . 518
 Few words they speak, nor dare to slack . . . 553
 Against him dare not any night say nay ; . . . 559
 Is only fit to die, I dare well say . . . 569
 Thy cold doors ; but I dare not for this rout ;
 Attend, or dare with minute-steps their way ;
 For scanty food the treacherous cliffs to dare . . . 610
 And all that Virtue dictates, dare to do ;
 Up starts some tyrant, Earth and Heaven to dare,
 Her native instincts : let me dare to speak
 And gracious, almost might I dare to say,
 Dare I avow that wish was mine to see,
 Of tender feeling, she might dare repeat
 And the sole guardian in whose hands we dare
Dared. Beloved ! if I dared, so would I call thee—
 He had not dared to tell him who he was . . . 102
 Have dared to keep aloof ; . . . 168
 A record which I dared to frame,
 Could thus have dared the grave to agitate,
 To which he only dared to cling ; . . . 182
 A lofty Dome, that dared to emulate
 Ne'er could the boldest Eulogist have dared . . . 298
 I gazed with earnestness, and dared no more . . . 365
 And smiles, that dared to take their place,
 To take his life they have not dared ; . . . 401
 Would that our scrupulous Sires had dared to leave
 God, which they dared not hope for, we have seen ;
 Above thy knowledge as they dared to go,
 Under the steel his hand had dared to draw . . . 419
 Before her flight she had not dared . . . 544
 Intended, rose in hardihood, and dared . . . 579
 Which no one dared to oppose or mitigate,
 That I have dared to tread this holy ground, . . . 723
 Loved fondly, truly, fervently ; and dared
 Foresee, had dared to couple, even in thought,
Dares. The kneeling peasant scarcely dares to gaze ;
 The bell is left, which no one dares remove ; . . . 73
 Who dares report, the tidings to the Lord ? . . . 125
 Yet of their number no one dares to die ? . . . 211
 Nor dares to move unpropried upon the staff,
 Which he will break for us he dares to speak,
 Of virtuous action ; all that courage dares, . . . 277
 And laughing dares the Adventurer, who hath clomb
 But now she dares to seek a haven . . . 377
 Lo ! Discord at the altar dares to stand . . . 414
 The recreant soul, that dares to shun the debt
 And festive gladness, burns not one that dares . . . 420
 Who dares be wedded ! Fancies thickly come . . . 426
 Far as it dares to follow. Herbs self-sown, . . . 431
 Licence and slavish order, dares be free . . . 450
 Their puniest flower-pot-nursling dares . . . 451 (What, save thyself, none dares through earth and skies) . . . 506
 The humblest of this band who dares to hope . . . 624
Daring. The work of Freedom daring to oppose,
 With all the daring fictions I have taught her,
 Mount, daring warbler !—that love-prompted strain
 But in man was ne'er such daring . . . 744
 Their daring wiles, their sportive cheer ? . . . 191
 Thy daring in a vapoury bourn,
 The daring thought, forget the name ; . . . 215
 Art, daring because souls could feel,
 More daring far than Hippogriff, . . . 231
 An outlaw of as daring mood ; . . . 298
 And daring not to feel the majesty of right !
 Argo—exalted for that daring feat . . . 316
 Some lofty elm-tree, mounts the daring vine ;
 Ungraciously receives. Too daring choice !
 That soul of conscientious daring . . . 367
 Hath typified by reach of daring art . . . 377
 By their own daring. But the People prayed
 A little daring would-be waterfall, . . . 402

Darkened—continued.

Darkened beneath the shadow of her thoughts
To hearths when first they darkened at the knell :
Darkening. Its darkening boughs and leaves in stronger lines ;
The dull-red steep, and, darkening still, aspire
And rest ; but now along heaven's darkening cope
To sailor's prayer breathed from a darkening sea,
Went floating from her, darkening as it went ;
That darkening of his radiant face . . .
Darkening like water in the breeze . . .
On rock and ruin darkening as we go,—
Now, faintly darkening with the sun's eclipse,
In marshalled thousands, darkening street and moor
Darkening the window, ill defends the door . . .

With hollow ringing ears and darkening gaze,
Darkening the sun . . . But less impatient thoughts,
Darkens. Darkens the sun, hath bade the forest sink,

Darker. A grove of darker and more lofty shade
We set us down, The sky grew dark and darker :
Yet fiercer, in a darker age ; . . .
Permits a second and a darker shade
Grew darker in the presence of my eye ;

With you I grieve, when on the darker side
Of sober cypress, and the darker foil Darkest. Through paths and alleys roofed with darkest green ; . . .
Thus only, even in error's darkest hour . . .
Into the castle-dungeon's darkest mew . . .
And seek the Sufferer in his darkest den,
In pleasure, is the darkest shade
Inverted shrubs, and moss of darkest green,
The darkest pit of lowest Erebus,
Dark-eyed. Or marks, 'mid opening cliffs, fair dark-eyed maids . . .
Shall tend, with his own dark-eyed Maid, . . .
Of Indian corn tended by dark-eyed maids ; . . .
Dark-green. Winding it's dark-green wood and emerald
glade, . . .
Darkling. Or Nature's DARKLING of this mossy shed ?
Darkling, among the boughs and leaves . . .
Fearless of plough and scythe ; or darkling wren . . .
From subterraneous Treason's darkling power : . . .
And near him, darkling like a sullen Gnome, Darkly. But peace to vain regrets ! We see but darkly
Darkness. Lost in the thickened darkness, glimmers white ;
Above yon eastern hill, where darkness broods . . .
—The evening darkness gathers round . . .
Predominates, and darkness comes and goes, . . .
And Pikes, of darkness named and fear and storms,
Hurtle the clouds in deeper darkness piled,
The darkness overtook me—wind and rain
In darkness and in tempest that we seek Betrayed, in darkness ! Here to strike the blow—
'Tis Nature's law. What I have done in darkness
'Twas nothing more than darkness deepening darkness,
I've heard of fearful winds and darkness that come
there ; . . .
By veil of noontide darkness overcast ? . . .
Was ever darkness like to this ? . . .
Or the night's darkness, or its cheerful face
Soft darkness o'er its latest gleams is stealing ;
But total darkness came anon,
Amid the darkness and the thunder,
Of its own darkness, as it stood of yore : . . .
My soul from darkness is released,
In darkness and amid the many shapes
Her darkness splendour gave, her silence power,
In darkness and the stormy night ; . . .
While—as a swimming darkness came
And shivering wolves, surprised with darkness, howl
Darkness as thick as life o'er life could fling,
Rose out of darkness : the bright Work stood still
Into the tracts of darkness and of cold :
But in his darkness he can hear,
But clouds and envious darkness hide
When dreary darkness is discomfited,
Internal darkness and unquiet breath ;
O gentle Power of darkness ! these mild hues ;
And darkness and danger had compassed him round,
Yet through that darkness (infinite though it seem Darkness surrounds us ; seeking, we are lost
Death, darkness, danger, are our natural lot ;
Piercing the Papal darkness from afar ! . . .
Darkness before and danger's voice behind ; . . .
This hour of deepening darkness here would be
When darkness creeping o'er thy silver brow
Combat, while darkness aggravates the groans :
To soul-appalling darkness. Not a blink
Long, long in darkness did she sit,
But lo ! where darkness seems to guard the mouth
Triumphant o'er the darkness of the grave . . .
At length, in darkness travelling on,
Had darkness fallen—unthreatened, unproclaimed—

Darkness—continued.

Here laid in mortal darkness, wouldst prefer . . .
And the pure vision closed in darkness infinite . . .
Our haughty life is crowned with darkness, . . .
In darkness lost, the darkness of the grave ; . . .
Lost in the deepen'd darkness, glimmers hoar ; . . .
Now o'er the eastern hill, where Darkness broods . . .
On the high summits Darkness comes and goes,
—Vex'd by the darkness, from the piny gulf
Huge Pikes of Darkness named, of Fear and Storms,
That only wait the darkness of the night . . .
O darkness of the grave ! how deep, . . .
There hung a darkness, call it solitude . . .
So through the darkness and the cold we flew,
Came sweeping through the darkness, spinning still
Darkness before, and danger's voice behind,
With darkness, and before a rippling breeze . . .
There, darkness makes abode, and all the host
Of darkness, dances in the open air
Entered, we fed the soul with darkness ; thence Turned and peace, the darkness and the light—
He dons his coat of darkness : on the stage
Substance and shadow, light and darkness, all
Darkness ere day's mild course, and morning light
Through storm and darkness, early in my mind
I called on Darkness—but before the word
Was uttered, midnight darkness seemed to take
Grow larger in the darkness ; all alone
That live in darkness, From his intellect . . .
We shouted—but no answer ! Darkness fell . . .
Like human life from darkness.—A quick turn—
And utter darkness : thought which may be faced,
Darkness to chase, and sleep ; and bring the day
When a Tartarean darkness overspreads
Or cloud of darkness, localised in heaven ; . . .
Thus darkness and delusion round our path
His door in darkness, nor till dusk returns . . .
His darkness doth transcend our fickle light !
No quiet in the darkness of the night, . . .
Beneath his ample brow, in darkness paired,—
Darkness is banished from the realms of death,
For England's bane.—When soothing darkness spreads
Of darkness, stretched o'er guilty Europe, makes Preferring bonds and darkness to a state
And as a cavern is with darkness fill'd,
Composing darkness, with a quiet loud
Bounds to be leapt, darkness to be explored,
Darksome. Tending to the darksome hollows
Into a shade of darksome trees, . . .
Prying into the darksome rent ; . . .
Their darksome boughs on either side,
The darksome altars would have blazed
Seated alone beneath a darksome tree,
Low in the darksome cell thine own dear lord ?
In youth we love the darksome lawn
Till they have learned to frame a darksome aisle ;—
The darksome windings of a broken stair,
The mole contented with her darksome walk . . .
Across the lawn and through the darksome grove,
'Called me ; and, looking down the darksome aisle,
The darksome centre of a constant hope,
Such on the breast of darksome heaths are found ;
Darling. On darling spots remote her tempting smile . . .
Nought round its darling precincts can he find
I was the pleasure of all hearts, the darling
Of many darling pleasures, and the love
Then little Darling ! sleep again,
" Here, little Darling, dost thou lie ;
Cold fashion ; chiefly by that darling hard
The Poet's darling,
The darling of children and men ? . . .
He is the darling and the joy ;
Thrice welcome, darling of the Spring !
" Myself will to my darling be
And gazed and gazed upon that darling spot . . .
The whole world's Darling—free to rove at will Instructed here her darling Child,
Darling of England ! many a bitter shower
It is his darling passion to approve ;
Her darling Alfred, might have spoken ;
We may be taught, O Darling of my care !
A six years' Darling of a pigmy size !
Look up to heaven, and bless his darling boy . . .
All that a darling countenance can look
Yes, to celestial Choirs, GRACE, DARLING'S name !
Darling's, to celestial Choirs, GRACE, DARLING'S name !
Darlings. They were such darlings of each other.
Yes,
And cups, the darlings of the eye, . . .
Because, my Darlings, ye must know
To what odd purpose have the darlings turned Darlington. My Lord and Lady Darlington,
And they that from the zenith dart their beams,
Or through the glittering vapours dart . . .
Full off is pleased a wayward dart to throw ; . . .
They dart across my path—but lo ! . . .
Breathed from eternity ; for, as a dart . . .
Sine suddenly the dart of death went forth . . .
For Her, who, pierced by sorrow's thrilling dart, . . .

Dart—continued.

Breaks—and the greyhound, DART, is overhead !
 And whither could they dart, if seized with fear ?
 Diamonds dart their brightest lustre
 In which Love's dart its fiery point doth steep .
 " Now ruthless'st launch thy deadliest dart !
 Peeps often ere she dart into her nest,
 Thy uttered was a dart, by counter-winds . . .

Darted. A second darted by—and lo !
 Then have I darted forwards to let loose
 And round our path darted oppressive beams .

Darting. See Far-darting.
 Shoots upward, darting his long neck before . . .
 A bee came darting, which the Child with joy
 And darting like a wounded bird
 The wheeling swallow, and the darting snipe,
 Mistakes for sorrow darting beams of light

Darts. Shot, down the headlong path darts with his sledge ;
 Peeps often ere she darts into her nest,
 She darts, as with a torrent's force,
 In and out, he darts about ;
 Crouches, stretches, paws, and darts !
 The darts of song from out its wiry cage ;
 Of pine-tree foliage poised in air, forth darts,
 And as a cresset true that darts its length
 Shot, down the headlong pathway darts his sledge ;
 —The darts of anguish fit not where the seat
 Nor unskill'd his darts to ply ;

Dash. See Slap-dash.

Dashed. Dashed o'er the rough rock, lightly leaps along . . .
 The torrent would have dashed an oak to splinters.
 Dashed their white foam against the palace walls
 Dash'd down the rough rock, lightly leaps along ;
 Dashed headlong, and rejected by the storm .

Dashing. The boat's first motion—made with dashing oar ;
 For him suspend the dashing oar ;
 And scarcely conscious of the dashing oars
 Than waters dashing wild, or rocking shades . . .
 And audible seclusions, dashing lakes,
 From rocks, woods, caverns, heaths, and dashing shores ;
 Browsed by the side of dashing waterfalls ;

Dastard. I cannot leave this paper. Dastard !
 Come . . .
 O dastard whom such foretaste doth not cheer !
 Else let the dastard backward wend, and roam . . .

Date. And, grieved for their brief date, confess that ours . . .
 " Miserimus!" and neither name nor date,
 The longest date do melt like frosty rime . . .
 We from to-day, my Friend, will date . . .
 Are scattered everywhere, taking their date . . .
 Like a ripe date which in the desert falls . . .
 And, since their date, my soul hath undergone . . .

Dateless. From dateless usage which our peasants hold . . .

Dates. And hence, so far from wanting facts or dates
Dati. Was I, Roberto Dati, and I took . . .

Daughter. Clasp your infant Daughter to your heart . . .
 Dear Daughter ! precious relic of that time—
 With Herbert or his Daughter ? Daughter !
 truly . . .
 I love her, though I dare not call her daughter . . .
 A notice for your Daughter, that she may know
 When she is told of it. This Daughter of yours
 May you in age be blest with such a daughter !—
 Would I could find the old Man and his Daughter . . .
 By penury, to yield him up her Daughter,
 You have a Daughter ! Oh that she were here !—
 About your Daughter ! Troops of armed men,
 My Daughter does not know how weak I am ;
 The name of daughter in his mouth, he prays !
 Pride and her daughter, Cruelty, from Madness,
 His daughter, once his daughter ? could I withstand muttering something about his Child—his Daughter—

We are betrayed ! His Daughter !—God have mercy ! . . .
 This Lady is his Daughter . . .
 He only spake to me of a dear Daughter,
 " Tis needless ; spare your violence. His Daughter—
 This old man had a Daughter. To the spot
 Rose from the spot ;—the Daughter clapped her hands . . .
 I'll lead you to his Daughter ; but 'twere best
 I said, sweet Lady, you were not his Daughter—
 A daughter sent to service, a wench spurn,
 " Dear Babe, thou daughter of another,
 Daughter of the proud Soudan ; . . .
 Simon's sickly daughter lies . . .
 Daughter of Hope ! her favourite Child,
 Leaving this Daughter of the mountains free,
 The Squire is come : his daughter Bess
 Austria a Daughter of her Throne hath sold !

In youth I keen eye the livelong day was bright,
 And restless stone-chat, all day long, is heard.
 The song of mountain-streams, unheard by day,
 Left vacant for the day, I loved to roam . . . 13 Desc. Sh. 144
 By rocks that, shutting out the blessed day, . . . 14 Desc. Sh. 198
 At times, and tales unought beguile the day,
 All day the floods a deepening murmur pour :
 And, ere his eyes can close upon the day, . . . 15 Desc. Sh. 247
 Thrice every day, the pail and welcome hand,
 For as the pleasures of his simple day, . . . 16 Desc. Sh. 271
 Now meet we other pilgrims ere the day . . . 17 Desc. Sh. 334
 In timely sleep ; and when, at break of day, . . . 18 Desc. Sh. 398
 From that day forth no place to him could be
 The stones, as if to cover him from day, . . . 20 Desc. Sh. 555
 We toiled and struggled, hoping for a day . . . 22 Desc. Sh. 667
 That on his marriage day sweet music made !
 We talked of marriage and our marriage day ;
 Nor morsel to my mouth that day did lift . . . 25 Guilt 73

 And thou, (O happy thought this day!)
 These Eight, and this is a day of pride!
 So graced the sunshine of that day, . . . 398 White Doe 187
 In that other day of Neville's Cross?
 A Cause, which on a needful day,
 (And fast, from this decisive day,
 Of streams inaudible by day;

 Pursued;—and, at the dawn of day,
 But, on the third day, passing by
 That day, the first of a re-union
 That day of balmy April weather,
 Words which she slighted at that day;
 From fair to fairer; day by day
 Survives—the twilight of this day—
 Lies open on the sabbath day;
 Pours forth his bounty, like the day doth cheer,

 He vanished; but conspicuous to this day

Day—continued.

Truth every day exemplified, no less
Till the stars sicken at the day of doom.
In the broad day, a weeping Magdalene!
In the broad day, a rueful Magdalene!
—The bodily frame wasted from day to day:
No pleasure in the beauty of the day.
To cheat the sadness of a rainy day;
To rise from timely sleep, and meet the day
As seen not seldom on some gusty day,
And constant as the motion of the day;
The stormy day, each had its own resource;
With foresight; hears, too, every sabbath day,
Day after day the gladness is diffused
Once every day he dutenously repaired
"On a bright day—so calm and bright, it seemed
"One day—a summer's day of annual pomp
As that of war, which rests not night or day,
Disregarded are now the ministers of day;
Their vigils kept; where tapers day and night
With conscientious reverence, as a day
Nothing to speed the day, or cheer the mind;
As a subject, as degraded? At this day,
Who, in some placid day of summer, looks
They sweep distemper from the busy day,
That tens of thousands at this day exist
A few short hours of each returning day
That, as the day thus far had been enriched
And ne'er to fail? Shall that blest day arrive
Exultingly, in view of open day
Of yet another summer's day, not loth
Day by day he finds his way
Millions of kneeling Hindoos at this day
Yet, having spent a summer's day
I could have lived another day.

Old Michael and his son one day went forth
The straggler during all the previous day
That now he might be proud, for he that day
The glorious sun, and while the light of day
Since that day forth the place to him—to me
In childhood, here as it abides by day
That she should entertain for this one day,
This day, who drooped, or seemed to droop, so long;
This day is a thanksgiving, 'tis a day
Of the whole world. We saw them day by day,
Which I have felt this day. An awful voice,
Though slowly opening, opens every day
To hold a vacant commerce day by day
Enough to fill the present day with joy,
To those, who all day long, through a busy life,
And let that heir of Glory's endless day
Thou that mak'st'st [? mak'st] a day of night

Day-break. At day-break on a bill they stood
Which blow at daybreak, droop ere even-song;
His day-break note, a sad vicissitude!
Union not sad, when sunny daybreak smites
Brighter than eastern skies at daybreak strewn
Till this bright Stranger came, fair as day-break,
Came forth—a light, though but as of day-break.

Day-deserted. The far-off peasant's day-deserted home;

Day-dreams. Dwell fruitless day-dreams, lawless prayer,
For day-dreams soft as e'er beguiled

Daylight. Where daylight lingers on perpetual snow;
For twenty lives. The daylight dawned, and now—
As soon as 'tis daylight to-morrow, with me
With daylight Isabel resumed her work;
In the world's eye. Her work when daylight fallen
To daylight known deter from that pursuit,
At the corner of Wood Street, when daylight appears,
When daylight is gone down.
Of joyless daylight; when the fretful stir
For yet it is broad day-light: clouds pass by;
But in plain daylight—She, too, at my side,
To watch thy course when Daylight, fled from
earth,
Walked round, affronting the daylight;
Sunward to seek the daylight in its fount,
And without ceasing, since it was daylight;
Glad Day-light laughs upon his top of snow,
Prolonged in summer till the day-light failed:
Of daylight, the bare thought of where I was
Inaudible by daylight, blend their notes
Wishes and endless schemes; by daylight walked
And led us to our threshold. Daylight failed

Daylight's. When the blue daylight's in the skies,
When the blue daylight's in the sky

Day's. See Mid-day's.

Our heavenly Father granted each day's bread;
This day's event has laid on me the duty
Thy pleasant course,—when day's begun
And one day's narrow circuit is to Him
And each day's shallow grief;
While the stars shine, or while day's purple eye
Day's mutable distinctions.—Ancient Power!
Hangs that day's treasured sword, how firm a check
Lived thankful for day's light, for daily bread,

Day's—continued.

Say that we come, and come by this day's light;
By one day's feat, one mighty victory.
The quickening spark of this day's sacrifice;
Now all is sun-bright peace. Of that day's shame,
Day's grateful warmth, tho' moist with falling dews.
The heart with each day's care;
What yet remains if this day's course:
Due to the day's unfinished task; of pen
With this day's work, in thought and word.
Loose-hanging rocks the Day's bless'd eye that hide,
What radiant fires were drown'd by day's malignant
pow'r,
Defrauding the day's glory, desperate!
Or sees in his day's march; himself he feels,
Darkness ere day's mid course, and morning light
Good recompense, I hope, for this day's toil,
That, for the day's consumption, books may yield
Open, and day's pure cheerfulness, but veiled
For one day's little compass, has preserved
Of his day's work. Three dark mid-winter months
From each day's need, out of each day's least gain.
Or in dispatch of each day's little growth
Of that day's prowess! Him might I compare,
Of one day's pleasure, and all mortal joys!
Partaking this day's pleasure? From afar
To every day's demand for daily bread.

Days. See Birthdays, Feast-days, Sabbath-days.

To gild the total tablet of his days;
On lovelier spectacle in faery days;
Where we, my Friend, to happy days shall rise,
And who, that walks where men of ancient days
Or on the earth strange lines, in former days
That happier days we never more must view.
I shall be with them upon the peaceful flood.
I'll be with them in two days at farthest.
'Tis but for a few days—a thought has struck me.
What is your meaning? Two days gone I saw,
No more, I pray of this. Three days at farthest,
Whom, but some few days past, I saw in Eskdale,
And I, no coward in my better days,
Did my pride tame my pride;—for many days,
The same dead calm, continued many days.
Have I lived many days—my sleep was bound
And I could wish my days to be
Oh! pleasant, pleasant were the days,
For length of days so much revered, so famous where it stands

Give to Him prayers, and many thoughts, in thy most busy days;
'Twas one well known to him in former days,
And blew with the same breath through days and weeks,
On windy days, in one of those stray brooks,
And many, many happy days were his.
And summer days, when we were young;
Sweet childish days, that were as long
As twenty days are now.
In two days more I must have died.
The days are cold, the nights are long,
That occupied his days in solitude
His days he wasted, an imbecile mind!
His days had not been passed in singleness.
These two days has been meat and drink to me.
With a light heart. The Housewife for five days
Two days, and blessings from thy Father's tongue
In those old romantic days
Nor did aught of future days that kiss belie,
While I was seated, now some ten days past,
And that fleet messenger of summer days,
That gentle days were nigh!
If on windy days the Raven
Just three days after, passing by
In bloody battle since the days of Mars!
Gave to the days a mark and name
The same whom in my schoolboy days
One of those heavenly days that cannot die;
"What days and what bright years! Ah me!
And summer days is gone,
Farewell! and when thy days are told,
"And in the summer-time, when days are long,
And thither, when the summer days were long,
Hear it, good man, old in days!
(The coarser pleasures of my boyish days,
That wretched boon, days lengthened by mistrust.
On busy days, with thankful nights, be mine.
Thy own heart-stirring days, and be
Were mine in early days;
To vanish—fleet as days and months and years,
The man who had been four days dead,
The Beast four days and nights had past;
And there the Ass four days had been,
Thus might he paint our lot of mortal days
Of glory lavished on our quiet days.
But many days, and many months,
Thus, like the men of earliest days,
Shine on his soul, reflected from the days
In the worst moment of these evil days;
Whence bright days of festive beauty;

Days—continued.

—Hours, Days, and Months, have borne them in the sight

The fairest landscapes and the brightest days—
And in fit measure cheers autumnal days
Of three short days—'but hush—no more!
The Muses, as they loved them in the days
Death-parted friends, and days too swift in flight,
Into this world in days when story lacked
Days passed—and Monte Calvo would not clear
Short leisure even in busiest days;
That seeks to stife it!—as in those days
That told of days long past, when here I roved
Our happy days recalling,
Dreams treasured up from early days,
To days of dim antiquity;
And for two days unnoticed slept.
Ancient of days! that to the eternal Sire,
In days when Fancy wrought unchecked by fear,
And spread as if ye knew that days might come
Bold words affirmed, in days when faith was strong
Iona's Saints, forgetting not past days,
As story says, in antique days
In those proud days, he little cared
Which in those days I heard.
"My days, my Friend, are almost gone,
Then gladly would I end my mortal days.
Serene will be our days and bright,
Now hear what one of elder days,
And earth's precarious days.
Since thy return, through days and weeks
Days undefiled by luxury or sloth,
In days of old romance at Archimago's gate.

The whole day long, and all days of the year.

And golden summer days uniting cheerful hearts.

A natural meal—days, months, from Nature's hand;
The remnant of his days at least was true;

A bounteous help in days of yore,
Yet still we want, like men of elder days
Enough to warm her for three days
Will not be heard in vain? And in those days
Seven days she lurked in brake and field,
Here may some Painter sit in future days,
But tells a plain tale of the days that are flown.
There pleasure crowned his days; and all his thoughts

A blessed Man! who of protracted days
Yet here at least, though few have numbered days
Joyless and comfortless. Our days glide on;
Where we, my friend, to golden days shall rise,
Who walks, where honour'd men of ancient days
Passing his father's bones in future days,
Transmits of days more bless'd in times of yore.
Of active days urged on by flying hours,
Days of sweet leisure, taxed with patient thought
A pleasant loitering journey, through three days
And clearer insight. Thus my days are past
That spectacle, for many days, my brain
With stinted kindness. In November days,
Or, from the meadows sent on gusty days,
By an infirmity of love for days
The vacancy between me and those days
Fearless of blame, that hence for future days
Pre-eminent till death. From early days,
Thus while the days flew by, and years passed on,
The truth in solitude, and, since the days
And for thyself, so haply shall thy days
And honest dunces—of important days,
And little won. Yet from the first crude days
May in these tutored days no more be seen
A weight must surely hang on days begun
Far different service in those homely days
In its late course of even days with all
That ran on Sabbath days a fresher course;
While I was travelling back among those days,
Safe from an evil which these days have laid
You and your not unwelcome days of mirth
Her dew is on the flowers. Those were the days
A pensive sky, sad days, and piping winds,
And joyous loves, that hallow innocent days
And, once, three days successively, through paths
Followed that pair of golden days that shed
To days, each offering some new sight, or fraught
And sorrows of the world. Those simple days
The days departed start again to life,
When up the lonely brooks on rainy days
Sojourning a few days, I visited
Than later days allowed; carried about me,
In framing their own laws; whence better days
His days he wasted,—an imbecile mind.
Through a whole month of calm and glassy days,
In former days, when—spurring from the Vale
What in those days through Britain was performed
Those days were passed, now speaking in a voice
Else never canst receive. The days gone by
That dreary time,—ere we had been ten days
Three summer days I roamed) where'er the Plain.

Days—continued.

The actual world of our familiar days,
How precious when in riper days I learned
But, through the inclement and the perilous days
To pass the remnant of his days, untasked
In the dark hedges. So their days were spent
He left his house: two wretched days had past,
I have been travelling far; and many days
In days of yore how fortunately fared
Of these our unimaginative days;
To aim and purpose, he consumed his days,
And he continued, when worse days were come,
Or nowhere; days unruffled by the gale
A few days earlier; then would you have seen
Release from fear; and cherished peaceful days
A course of days composing happy months,
Which those most blissful days reverberate.
Some rare advantages. Your early days
Beats to the heroic song of ancient days;
O, calm contented days, and peaceful nights!
Cheering my days, and with industrious thought;
Such leaning towards each other, that their days
—Her wedded days had opened with mishap,
Of wedded advancing toward their utmost length,
How thankful for the warmth of summer days,
A charitable door. So days and years
For seamliness and warmth, on festal days,
To end my days; well pleased was I to see
Of that young peasantry, who, in our days,
Of twelve ensuing days his frame was wrenched,
That, in Eliza's golden days, a Knight
Resumed the manners of his happier days;
This Land shall witness; and as days roll on,
Days will pass on, the year, if years be given,
Perhaps for many genial days to come,
They should not have departed; many days
Admonished of the days of love to come
I and the modest partners of my days
Unheard-of days, though loving peaceful thoughts.
Shall he who gives his days to low pursuits
Brook, that hast been my solace days and weeks,
Days'. See Eight-days', Six-days'.
And, in seven days' space, will to York he led!—
For two days' space, in presence of the Lake,
Begin and ended within three days' space,
Day-spring. That symbol of the day-spring from on high,
At day-spring, and no sooner doth the sun
Of day-spring, in the gloomy east, revealed,
Day-star. Sunken to a curve, the day-star lessens still,
To him the day-star glitters small and bright,
Day-thoughts. Day-thoughts while limbs repose;
Were my day-thoughts,—my nights were miserable;
Dazzle. Of truth, enough to dazzle and to blind,
What pains to dazzle and confound!
Had ceased to dazzle, ofttimes did I quit
Dazzled. My dazzled sight he oft deceives,
On prosperous tyrants with a dazzled eye;
Not more attractive to the dazzled sight
That an exceeding love hath dazzled me;
Upon Iulus, dazzled with the rays
That dazzled me, but rather what I mourned
Not pressed upon, nor dazzled or misled
When, strengthened, yet not dazzled, by the might Dazzles. Her beauty dazzles the thick wood,
Dazzling. His very feet bright as the dazzling snow
I saw a dazzling Belle,
Air sparkles round her with a dazzling sheen;
Uncovered; dazzling the Beholder's sight
In robes of dazzling white;
Thou cloth'st the wicked in their dazzling mail,
Dazzling the vision that presumes to gaze,
Firmly rejects those dazzling flatteries,
Gave back a rich and dazzling sheen,
You, on whose progress dazzling trains await Dazzling the mountains, but an overflow
That, while the sun rode high, was lost beneath their dazzling sheen.
Now, dazzling Stranger! when thou meet'st my glance,
The glittering waves reflect the dazzling blaze;
Oft when the dazzling show no longer new
Face after face; the string of dazzling wares,
Into a dazzling cavern of romance,
And, from the dazzling conquests daily gained
Dazzling the soul. Meanwhile, prophetic harps
De. And, kneeling, supplication make to our Lady de la Paix;
Is John de Clapham, that fierce Esquire,
Of Ean de Zurich, Lac Genève,
Dead. See Half-dead, Stone-dead.
An unknown power connects him with the dead;
And now the walls are named the "Dead House"
of the plain.
The moon a wan dead light around her shed,
The unburied dead that lay in festering heaps,
And groans which, as they said, might make a dead man start.
And kindred of dead husband are at best
Till one was found by stroke of violence dead,

And to such beings temperately deal forth
Or round the naked table, snow-white deal,

And wanderers of the street, to whom is dealt
Alms on this stone to be dealt out, for ever !
A State whose generous will through earth is dealt ;
Dealt in like sort with feeble human kind
Of the silver-rimmed horn whence he dealt his mid ale !

Ye dealt out your plain comforts ? Yet had ye
A tournament of blows, some hardly dealt
In measure only dealt out to himself,
And dealt with whatsoever they found there
Had dealt with—I will here record in verse ;
Large measures shall be dealt. Three sabbath-days
Her annual bounty, sparingly dealt forth
Unjustly dealt with ; but the Maid was gone !
Both have been fairly dealt with ; looking back
Hath dealt with me as with a turbulent stream,

Dear—continued.

Ha ! my dear Captain. A later meeting, Oswald,
He only spake to me of a dear Daughter,
Since your dear Mother went away,—
Things that I know not of belike to thee are dear,
With this dear holy shepherd-boy breathe a prayer
of earnest heart,
I whispered, " Yet a little while, dear Child I thou art my own,
Far happier lot, dear Boy, than brings full many
to this shrine ;
Dear caresses given in pity,

We go for One to whom ye will be dear ;
Dear Spot ! which we have watched with tender heed,
And, sooth, these two were each to the other dear :
Those paths so dear to me,
That murmur once so dear, when will it cease ?

Dear Maid, this truth believe,
O dearer far than light and life are dear,
Dear friends, when ye were gone away,
But thou, dear Babe, art far away,
As dear as my own children be ;
Of the survivor's sweetest voice (dear child,
Dear consolation, kneeling on the turf
" Dear Babe, thou daughter of another,
Thy own dear mother's far away,
" My own dear Little-one will sigh,
Dear Baby ! I must lay thee down ;
Never was any child more dear !
And the dear heaven where he wished to be
And I have lost my poor dear Boy,
" Oh dear, dear Pony ! my sweet joy !
This son of his old age was yet more dear—
And makes a meeting seem most like a dear farewell.
With hope that we, dear Friends ! shall meet again.
And who but this dear Bird beguiled
—Where art thou gone, my own dear child ?
For I thy own dear mother am :
Then, pretty dear, be not afraid !
And make dear friendships with the streams and groves.

—Now, by those dear immunities of heart
Thus then, each to other dear,
Nor be less dear to future men
" Whence strains to love-sick maiden dear,
Is joined through some dear homeborn tie ;
Forcing my way, I came to one dear nook
" The stars of midnight shall be dear
Or gives a thing but small delight that never can be dear ?

Enough by her dear side to breathe the air
Dear Ruth ! more happily set free
Him, and his Lady-mother dear !
That those dear words should be fulfilled,
My dear, dear Friend ; and in thy voice I catch
My dear, dear Sister ! and this prayer I make,
More dear, both for themselves and for thy sake !
Listen, ponder, hold them dear ;
Round the dear Shade she would have clung—'tis vain :

Or blest procession (to the Immortals dear).
Dear Child of Nature, let them rail !
And the dear voice of harmony,
Ye did not forfeit one dear right,
For modest meanings dear,
Could from sad regions send him to a dear
To pencil dear and pen,
At the still hour to Mercy dear,
Then back to Earth, the dear green Earth—
Were a vain notion ; but the hope is dear,
Hath stirred thee deeply ; with its own dear brook,
In neighbourhood with One to me most dear,
Dear Bosom-child we call thee, that dost steep
Dear mother of fresh thoughts and joyous health !
Might smile on work, O Lady, once so dear
To her indulgent Lord become more dear

When thou, dear Sister ! wert become Death's
Bride :

Dear Child ! dear Girl ! that walkest with me here,
Dear God ! the very houses seem asleep ;
After her throes, this Stream of name more dear
As in a dear and chosen banishment,
To life thou art, and, in thy truth, how dear !
Pleased to renounce, does this dear Thrush attune
From every object dear to mortal sight,
Well might such thoughts, dear Sister, throng
With intimations manifold and dear,
But most of all, his Mother dear,
In dust, that voice is dear !
From its dear home the Hermit's corse,
For my dear Country, many heartfelt sighs,
With such a dear Companion at my side,
Be men who hold its many blessings dear,
Ah ! that a Conqueror's words should be so dear :
Dear Liberty ! stern Nymph of soul untamed ;
And lie cut off from all his heart holds dear :
Dear native regions where ye wont to rove

Dear—continued.

Dear Reliques! from a pit of vilest mould
 O Britain! dearer far than life is dear,
 Dear Fellow-travellers! think not that the Muse,
 The strain seemed doubly dear,
 Though the toll of the way with dear Friends we divide,
 Had his sunk eye kindled at those dear words
 To whose dear memories his sepulchral verse
 They follow their dear Lord! Time flows—nor winds,
 This flowering broom's dear neighbourhood, the light
 Those old credulities, to nature dear,
 Dear as they are to unsuspecting Youth,
 If with old love of you, dear Hills! I share
 And his dear Daughter on a Knight bestow
 Sir Tristram, dear to thousands as a brother,
 To dream-light dear while yet unseen,
 Dear to the common sunshine,
 Better to thank a dear and long-past day
 All that she suffered for her dear Lord's sake.
 Of Bolton's dear fraternity,
 The five dear wounds our Lord did bear;
 Dear Father, hear me when I say
 The name of his only Daughter dear,
 With a dear Father at their head!
 Thou, chiefly thou, my Sister dear,
 "My all save one, a Daughter dear!
 Dear daughter of affliction, say
 But for lost Faith and Christ's dear name,
 Should bear him to his Sister dear
 And now her sainted Mistress dear?
 That Presence, dearer and more dear,
 For reasons dear and manifold—
 A dear look to her lowly Friend—
 Which her dear Mistress once held dear!
 The last dear service of thy passing breath!
 The pious ALFRED, King to Justice dear!
 Scooped from the sacred earth where his dear relics
 lie.
 Then chiefly dear, when foes are planted round,
 Dear to the saints, strives earnestly to eject
 Spreads high conceits to madding Fancy dear,
 However hardly won or justly dear:
 Dear be the Church that, watching o'er the needs
 Isis and Cam, to patient Science dear!
 To king, to peasant, to rough sailor, dear,
 Which with the dear Betrothed was to come;
 With some internal lights to memory dear,
 Dear to the Loves, and to the Graces vowed,
 For Christ's dear sake, by human sympathies
 Dear art thou to the light of heaven,
 And thus the dear old Man replied,
 Two shall be named, pre-eminently dear—
 Low in the darksome cell thine own dear lord?
 Yet they to whom thy virtues made thee dear
 An impulse more profoundly dear
 And to fallen man their innocence is dear.
 Alfred, dear Babe, thy great Progenitor!
 Can such a One, dear Babe! though glad and proud
 My Country! if such warning he held dear,
 Of dear Old England? Think they she is dead,
 Dear Mother! if thou must thy steps retrace,
 From heaviness, nft fly, dear Friend, to thee;
 For goods and chattels, or those Infants dear,

Dear—continued.

To those dear intervals, nor rare nor brief,
 And dear the green-sward to his velvet tread;
 And my full heart was swell'd to dear delicious
 pain.
 Dear was the pause of life, and dear the sigh
 But for the poor dear sake of one smile
 Dear Valley, having in thy face a smile
 He comes, my dear delight,—and costliest things
 A day to future generations dear!
 Dear Liberty! Yet what would it avail
 Of humbler industry. But, oh, dear Friend!
 All over his dear Country; left the deeds
 Habitually dear, and all their forms
 Yet, to this hour, the spot to me is dear
 Grew dear to me: already I began
 Analogous, the moon to me was dear;
 To thee and thy grey butts, thou one dear Vale!
 For him, in one dear Presence, there exists
 Was dear, and hence to finer influxes
 Of pleasant wandering. Happy times! more dear
 So dear, if I should fail with grateful voice
 At our domestic table; and, dear Friend!
 Ah! need I say, dear Friend! that to the brim
 Or whatsoever else the heart holds dear;
 When first I learnt, that this dear prize of mine
 With a dear friend, and for the better part
 Dear to thee also, thy true friend and mine,
 To whom my worldly interests were dear.
 Yet was the theatre my dear delight;
 Though most at home in this their dear domain,
 Through utter weakness pitifully dear,
 With that majestic indolence so dear,
 As was thy melancholy lot, dear Friend!
 Dear native Regions, wheresoe'er shall close
 On the dear mountain-tops their first be rose.
 From the best youth in England their dear pride,
 I paced, a dear companion at my side,
 Pains-taking thoughts, and truth, their dear reward)
 On the glad eve of its dear holidays,
 Oh! next to one dear state of bliss, vouchsafed
 In my esteem, next to such dear delight,
 Or dear voice utter, to complete the man,
 This over-sternness; but for thee, dear Friend!
 Dear Sister! was a kind of gentler spring
 And dear remembrances, whose presence soothes
 His dear companion wheresoe'er he went
 Four dear supporters of one senseless weight,
 If the dear faculty of sight should fail,
 Lodged, in a dear appropriated spot,
 For their dear countrymen, and all mankind.
 My Infant! and for that good Mother dear,
 Dear Youth, by young and old alike beloved,
 The dear memorial footsteps unimpair'd
 And this dear land, our country, while on earth
 Gracious to all the dear dependencies
 Moved (shall I say?) like a dear friend who meets
 To thee, dear Spring, and all-sustaining Heaven!
 Dear Harmodius, art thou fled?
 Let thy name, Harmodius dear
 Dear Aristogiton, live;
 This spot to me must needs be dear,
 Of my dear friends I see the trace.
 The dear companion of my lonely walk
 And now 'tis mine, perchance for life, dear Vale,
 And dear Imaginations realized.
 They were more dear than may be well believed,
 To one who holds it dear; with duteous care
 Not even the nearest to me and most dear,
 So welcome, no temptation half so dear
 And oh! dear soother of the pensive breast,

Dearest

Dearest. Far from my dearest Friend, 'tis mine to rove
 And, balancing the hopes that are the dearest
 O dearest, dearest boy! my heart
 Then, dearest Maiden, move along these shades
 Had been his dearest joy.
 Of this fair river; thou my dearest Friend,
 On you we look, with dearest hope;
 And no one can tell whither. Dearest Friend!
 And dearest helpers, left unthanked, unpraised,
 Are dearest to me now; for, having scanned,
 At dearest separation, patriot love

Dearest—continued.

With vice at home. We added dearest themes—
And so shall stand for ever. Dearest Friend!

Dear-loved. Glimmered our dear-loved home, alas!

no longer ours!
Dear-ly. And dearly he loves me.
Tidings of one so long and dearly loved,

That Gordon loves as dearly.
For dearly must we prize thee; we who find
He dearly loves thy voices!

Dear-ly united, might be swept away
That God will chasten whom he dearly loves.
A tempting playmate whom we dearly loved.

Death. From dread of emptiness or dearth.
How piteous then that there should be such dearth
Her last companion in a dearth.

Scorned, or neglected, fear not such a dearth.
That they dreamt not of death;—He continued his rounds,

Scattered about us, nor through dearth of aught.
Death. Never shall ruthless minister of death.
Creep hushed into the tranquil breast of death.

Along the mystic streams of Life and Death.
Death would be else the favourite friend of woe.
On shipboard, bound till peace or death should set him free.

His hand had wrought; and when, in the hour of
death,
Borne gently to a bed, in death she lay;

After his death. I have been much deceived.
Thus to torment her with inventions!—death—
Be worse than death) to that confiding Creature.

His death will be a monument for ages.
From cold, from hunger, penury, and death;
Alive!—the damps of death were upon him—

Alas, the thought of such a cruel death
And weakness crowned with the impotence of
death!

What should it know of death?
By some untoward death among the rocks:
The thought of death sits easy on the man

Before it ended in his death, the Youth
And that then is his grave!—Before his death
That friends, by death disjoined, may meet no
more!

Absence and death how differ they! and how
Death, life, and sleep, reality and thought,
Death in a moment parted them, and left.

Death—continued.

Of death had drunk their punishment,
Death, darkness, danger, are our natural lot;
Is chilled by death, does mutual service fail?

Of a long life; and, in the hour of death,
For wounds that death alone has power to heal,
Hourly exposed to death, with famine worn,

By unrelenting Death. O People keen
O Death! the ensanguined yet triumphant wheels,
Encounters, armed for work of pain and death.

At Jesu's hiding. We rejoice, "O Death,
Nations, and Death has gathered to his fold
As on a bed of death? Some lodge in peace,

In mysteries of birth and life and death
Death to the innocent is more than just,
Between life and death his blood freezes and thaws;

Who shall inherit Thee when death has laid
And ready for the gentlest stroke of death.
From death, and from the passion of death:—

That has power to baffle death—
Of Death and Time, the marvels it hath wrought.
For lingering durance or quick death with shame,

Broken with all mankind, solicit death.
Is Death, when evil against good has fought
Is Death, for one to that condition brought,—

The last alternative of Life or Death.
Tears of salvation. Welcome death! while Heaven
In death; though Listeners shudder all around,

Seemed stopt, though by some other power than
death.
Is ruffled o'er with cells of death;

Where Death and Glory a joint sabbath keep,
Such is life; and death a shadow
"Torment and shameful death to every one

And in the hour when I my death did meet
He can make low, and unto death bring nigh;
That hers unto the death my heart I hold.

Toward my death with wind I steer and sail;
Fraancesco Ceni willed that, after death,
Stretched out for my acceptance,—but Death came.

Death is the quiet haven of us all.
Lelius! has death cut short thy brilliant day
Who saw thee, on his margin, yield to death,

In aught to earth pertaining? Death has proved
Death conscious that he only could destroy
Thou takest not away, O Death!

And death upon the braes of Yarrow,
Calmed in his soul the fear of change and death.
In the faith that looks through death,

On the fetters that link him to death.
O sacred marriage-bed of death.
A flame within them that despises death.

To disappear by a slow gradual death,
And wasted down by glorious death that race
Pre-emptive till death. From early days,

And simple Pleasure foraging for Death;
Whatever imports from the world of death
Murmured the sister streams of Life and Death,

These forests unapproachable by death,
Or life or death upon the battle-field.
The garb he wears is black as death, the word

The Death of Abel, Shakspeare, and the Bard
Sanctioned, of danger, difficulty, or death.
That Liberty, and Life, and Death would soon

Of life and death, in majesty severe
And tyranny, and implements of death;
That he, who would sow death, reaps death, or worse,

And would have fought, even to the death, to attest
Of life and death, revolving. Above all

Mortal, or those beyond the reach of death;
True is it, where oppression worse than death
And substitute a universe of death.

Of life and death, time and eternity.
Of Death, and wio the vacant and the vain
The life and death of martyrs, who sustained,

Death blasted all. Death suddenly o'erthrew
In death thy faithfulness?—"God rest his soul!"
Must have sustained a loss.—"The hand of Death,"

A better state than waking; death than sleep:
Caught in the gripe of death, with such brief time
And nurse 'the dreadful appetite of death?'

Of death and night, has caught at every turn
Another tablet registered the death,
Death and its two-fold aspect! wintry—one,

That they whom death has hidden from our sight
In life, in death, what solitude can breed
This place is consecrate; to Death and Life,

And general humility in death?
How on her bed of death the Matron lay,
So, through the cloud of death, her Spirit passed

Death—continued.

And to his unmolested mansion, death
Had been among them; all was gentle death,
Death fell upon him, while reclined he lay . . .
Till gentlest death released him . . . Far from us
Darkness is banished from the realms of death,
The waste of death; and lo! the giant oak . . .
Till nature rested from her work in death . . .
—Life, death, eternity! momentous themes . . .
Dead—but not sullied or deformed by death, . . .
And oft-times Death, avenger of the past, . . .
How with most quiet and most silent death, . . .
Conscience to guide and check; and death to be . . .
Of harmless Abel's death, by murdering Cain. . .
Of him who cooked the death of Abel, . . .
Thus without death how sweet it is to die . . .
More than one thought of death, and his last hour . . .
One death, and that were mercy given to both . . .
Making a silent company in death; . . .
And fighting to the death, but I am pleased . . .

Death-bed. Thy breast their death-bed, confined in thine arms!
Rock the cradle of joy, smooth the death-bed of strife.
And come and make his death-bed near the well.
This faithful guide, speaking from his death-bed,
Death-cross. By many a votive death-cross planted near,
Death-cup. This spot—his shadowy death-cup in his hand.
Death-dog. The death-dog, howling loud and long,
below;
Death-doomed. This was the death-doomed Woman heard to say
Deathful. Whose slippery face derides his deathful tread!
Death-hour. He would so love it, that in his death-hour
Deathless. Of outward change, there blooms a deathless flower,
Of virtue crowned with glory's deathless meed:
And tender Goldsmith crowned with deathless
praise!
For deathless powers to verse belong, . . .
Oh for a deathless song to meet
A deathless spirit. Thou also, man! hast wrought,
Thy bounty caused to flourish deathless flowers,
Death-like. That Silence, once in deathlike fetters bound,
Where silent Hours their death-like sway extend,
Mother of Heroes, from thy death-like sleep!
That breath'd a death-like peace these woods around,
Where Silence still her death-like reign extends,
Death-like, of treacherous desertion, felt
Or from its death-like void, with punctual care,
Death-list. How fast the Marian death-list is unrolled!
Death-note. Hark! the death-note of the year
Death-parted. Death-parted friends, and days too swift in flight,
Death-place. No kindred sufferer, to his death-place brought
Death-proclaiming. A death-proclaiming blast;
Death's. And death's dire aspect, daily he surveyed,
Death's minister; then came his glad release,
Now are they parted, far as Death's cold hand
When thou, dear Sister! wert become Death's
Bride:
And in Death's arms has long reposed the Friend
Till Death's cold touch her cistern-wheel assail, Death's hireling, who scoops out his neighbour's grave,
Come, gentle Sleep, Death's image tho' thou art, Death-shriek. Her last death-shriek, distinct among a thousand,
It was the last death-shriek.
Death-sounds. The death-sounds of the Minster-bell:
Death-watch. Or death-watch; and as readily rejoice,
Death-wound. Of his death-wound, when he from innocent air . . .
Debarred. See Selt-debarred.
And sage Mnemosyne,—full long debarred
Thus Virtue lives debarred from Virtue's meed;
Or rather like a stalled ox debarred
Debarred from Nature's living images,
Preclude forgiveness, from the praise debarred,
Debase. The simple dignity no forms debase;
Seemingly given, debase the general mind;
The native dignity no forms debase,
By artificial lights; how they debase . . .
Doth most debase the mind; the genuine seats
Debased. Debased and under profanation, made Debasement. Debasement undergone by body or mind,
And from debasement rescued.—By thy grace
Debasings. See Soul-debasings.
And their hard service, deemed debasing now,
Debate. Farewell all wishes, all debate, . . .

Debate—continued.

That interdicted all debate, . . .
Mistrust and jealousy, despite, debate, . . .
Debauchee. Seasoning his wickedness. The De-bauchee . . .
Debonair. Luminous, blithe, and debonair? . . .
Debt. And bore him high through yielding air my debt of love to pay . . .
Of blameless debt. On evil Fortune's spite . . .
Their union brought, will they repay the debt, . . .
All seasons through, another debt, . . .
Or finch from what he deemed his debt: . . .
Until the debt I owe be paid. . .
The well-remembered debt." . . .
Then pays submissively the appointed debt . . .
Is there no debt to pay, no boon to grant? . . .
The mighty debt which nothing can repay!" . . .
Which ne'er may discharge the magnificent debt?
The recreant soul, that dares to shun the debt . . .
As a debt to that frail Creature, . . .
We pay a high and holy debt . . .
To pay the filial debt, for food to roam, . . .
For, not unconscious of the mighty debt . . .
Debtor. Have been fast bound, a begging debtor;—
Debtors. All that breathe are thankful debtors . . .
Debts. Of reason, honourably effaced by debts . . .
Decalogue. Men who can hear the Decalogue and feel Decanters. Decanters, glasses, and the blood-red wine. . .
Decay. My father's substance fell into decay: . . .
Charms superior to decay. . .
That fosters growth or checks or cheers decay,
That, when time brings on decay, . . .
Already hast survived that great decay, . . .
Produced too slowly ever to decay; . . .
But they have dwindled long by slow decay;
And Nature here were willing to decay. . .
"She leaves these objects to a slow decay,
Suffer my genial spirits to decay:
Shall ne'er submit to cold decay.
Shine subject to decay,
Decay and languish; or, as creeds . . .
And in the soul admit of no decay. . .
Knits not o'er that discolouring and decay . . .
Fall to prevent or beautify decay; . . .
Impersonated in thy calm decay!
Those titles vanish, and that strength decay;
A fond reflection of her own decay, . . .
Decay submits not. But where'er my steps . . .
And feeble, of themselves, decay; . . .
One desolation, one decay!
Subdued by outrage and decay, . . .
"Thus fares it still in our decay: . . .
Inspire us in our own decay; . . .
And dissolution and decay, the warm . . .
Strip of its frightful powers by slow decay, . . .
This little Niche, unconscious of decay, . . .
It cannot help itself in its decay; . . .
He suffered not to languish or decay. . . .
The lily of domestic joy decay; . . .
New stores, or rescue from decay the old
Queens gleaming through their splendour's last decay, . . .
Through every change of growth and of decay,
Good might be furthered—in his last decay . . .
He had observed the progress and decay . . .
The hut itself abandoned to decay, . . .
Sank to decay; for he was gone, whose hand,
Of instability, revolt, decay, . . .
And sad exclusion through decay of sense;
Doomed to decay, and then expire in dust!
With snares; tried, tempted, subject to decay.
The fluctuation and decay of things, . . .
Was disappearing by a swift decay, . . .
The ghastly face of cold decay put on . . .
From vice and premature decay preserved . . .
Her organs and her members, with decay . . .
Is the sure consequence of slow decay. . . .
Its very spring a season of decay!
Though strength decay, to breathe in such estate
Decayed. Felt the loose walls of this decayed Retreat
There was he, where of branches rent and withered and decayed, . . .
The towns in Saturn are decayed, . . .
Than noblest objects utterly decayed. . . .
The grace of forest charms decayed, . . .
With monuments decayed or overthrow, . . .
Of woods decaying, never to be decayed, . . .
Confusion of the judgment, zeal decayed, . . .
That, for support, rests on them; the decayed
Decaying. Of thoughts that fail, and a decaying heart; . . .
'Mid those decaying sanctities. . . .
Round the decaying trunk of human pride, . . .
Of woods decaying, never to be decayed, . . .
Decays. From airy words alone, a Pile that ne'er decays. . . .
While man grows old, and dwindles, and decays;

Decree—continued.
 The Gods revolving the decrees of Fate,
 And, from her vow well weighed in Heaven's decrees,
 But fixing by immutable decrees
 Are ye prepared to urge, that my decrees
 Decrees and resolutions of the Gods ;
Decrepid. In that decrepit Man so firm a mind.
 That old decrepit Winter—He hath slain Decried. You have decried the wealth which is your own.
Dedicate. My EMMA, I will dedicate to thee.
 The city one vast temple, dedicate
 On Tiber's banks my youth was dedicate
 Once to Our Lady dedicate, and served
 This verse is dedicate to Nature's self.
Dedicated. Solemnly dedicated—to decoy him I—
 A dedicated Spirit. On I walked
Dedication. A dedication made, a promise given
Deduce. Even so deduce the stream of human life
Deduced. Deduced by reason, or to faith revealed.
Dee. A Stream, to mingle with your favourite Dee,
Deed. Such further deed in manhood's name forhade,
 And he had done the deed in the dark wood—
 Out of that deed. My trust, Saviour ! is in thy name !
 Of some dark deed to which in early life
 For this good deed !—Well, Sirs, this passed away ;
 The deed is done—if you will have it so—
 To look upon the deed. Before we enter
 Sigh at the deed ? Hêw down a withered tree,
 Begone ! There is some wicked deed in hand :
 Are hushed to sleep, by your own act and deed,
 Shall blessings wait upon a deed of mine.
 A deed that I would shrink from ;—but to endure,
 'Tis done ! The ruthless traitor ! A rash deed !—
 Yet more ;—heart-smitten by the heroic deed,
 And Love is dutiful in thought and deed :
 By word, look, deed, with hope that he might love again.
 And prompt to many a gentle deed :
 Due to that good and pious deed
 " Bnt thou, though capable of sternest deed,
 Mounting from glorious deed to deed
 In his calm presence ! Him the mighty deed
 As wise in thought as bold in deed :
 Faithfully kept, is as a noble deed ;
 Checked in the very act and deed of blood,
 With second life the deed of Marathon
 Achieved, this closing deed magnificent,
 To mutual respect in thought and deed ;
 Ah, what avails heroic deed ?
 So, from the body of one guilty deed,
 More than on written testament or deed,
 The triumph of a desperate deed
 Confirmed the deed in peace profound.
 " No choice is left, the deed is mine—
 Of time, and place, and thought, and deed—
 Into main Ocean they, this deed accrue
 The Church extends her care to thought and deed ;
 What—how ! shall she submit in will and deed
 Take from the horror due to a foul deed,
 Deed and intent, should turn the Being adrift
 The blood cries out on your accursed deed.
 To whom a foul deed he had done,
 Became my prey ; and when the deed was done
 Who make our wish, our power, our thought a deed,
 Or the remembrance of a generous deed,
 Hard by, soon after that fell deed was wrought,
 Forbearance, charity in deed and thought,
Deeds. Have wrought with godlike arm the deeds of praise.
 Your justice stamp upon his evil deeds
 And we too chant the praise of his good deeds.
 The prey or masters of our own past deeds.
 To fit all deeds. Carry him to the Camp !—
 Whose good deeds will not stand by their own light ;
 " To wicked deeds I was inclined,
 Bestir them in good deeds. Now, fare thee well—
 From bloody deeds his thoughts are far ;
 Haunts the old trunk ; lamenting deeds of which High deeds, O Germans, are to come from you !
 " Be thankful, thou ; for, if unholy deeds
 With deeds of hope and everlasting praise—
 For their great deeds, perpetual memory,
 Unheard by them, their deeds shall celebrate !
 In execution of heroic deeds
 Bestowed by Nature, or from man's great deeds
 In those bold fictions that, by deeds assigned.
 Such deeds to paint, such characters to frame,
 So may all trace and sign of deeds aloof
 I raise my thoughts, inform my deeds and words,
 And everlasting deeds to burning words !
 And perished utterly ; but her good deeds
 Who taught, and showed by deeds, that gentler chains
 To call thee so ? or symbol of fierce deeds
 Of conscience souls are placed by deeds that lack Requires for nobler deeds ;
 —I've heard of hearts unkind, kind deeds

Deeds—continued.
 For ever, and to noble deeds give birth,
 By deeds the blackest purpose to lay bare—
 Awaits her now ; but, verily, good deeds
 The Czár full off in words and deeds
 Past deeds and offices of charity
 In this cold abstinence from evil deeds,
 Of meditation on the inhuman deeds
 All over his dear Country ; left the deeds
 Old heroes and their sufferings and their deeds ;
 We summoned up the honourable deeds
 Of Kings, their vices and their better deeds,
 I might have been entangled among deeds,
 A race illustrious for heroic deeds,
 The good man's purposes and deeds ; retrace
 Father and founder of exalted deeds ;
 To Gods delighting in remorseless deeds ;
 Who pushed by thoughtless youth to deeds of shame
Deem. Not used to rash conjectures— If you deem it
 As well indeed it might. And this you deem Deem rather than the fervent Youth, who saw
 Deem that by such fond hope the Youth was wayed,
 Yet not unfit, I deem, for the fireside,
 To deem that he was old,—in shepherd's phrase,
 Nor, I deem, for me unmeet ;
 From Indian blood you deem him sprung :
 Rejoiced is Brough, right glad, I deem,
 Who deem that ye from open light
 Nor deem that " light which leads astray
 Forbear to deem the Chronoler unwise,
 Nor deem it strange ; the Youth had worn
 Nor deem that localised Romance
 No ; will not all men deem the change
 Yet do not deem the Autocracy prevailed
 Lures not from what they deem the cause of God.
 Whose sterner judgments deem that word a snare
 " Nor less I deem that there are Powers
 Nor deem the Poet's hope misplaced,
 " From your department, Sir ! I deem
 But deem not this Man useless,—Statesmen ! ye
 Your talents, power, or wisdom, deem him not Deem that our puny boundaries are things
 And deem not profitless those fleeting moods
 More pleasing, and whose character I deem
 Yet deem not, Friend ! that human kind with me
 Wouldst thou not chide ? Yet deem not my pains lost :
 Thy favour ; trusting that thou wilt not deem
 Nor is that fellow-wanderer, so deem I,
 I deem not arduous ; but must needs confess
 Deem not that proof is here of hope withheld
 Subject, you deem, to vital accidents ;
 —Nor deem that his mild presence was a weight
 Shadows or breezes, scents or sounds. Nor deem
 From self-respecting interests, deem them not Deemed. Of our weak nature deem not, must he deemed
 Or finch from what he deemed his debt :
 As if (so Grecian shepherds would have deemed)
 (So faith too fondly deemed) a voice divine
 Thoughts sadder still, they deemed it best
 (As might be deemed) to disciplined intent
 So deemed the man who fashioned for the sense
 Forth-shadowing, some have deemed, the infinite
 Discourse was deemed Man's noblest attribute,
 Their gifts she hails (deemed precious, as they prove
 And deem'd all merit centred in the sword ;
 Or deemed it worth a moment's thought to stir,
 For ill-regulated France, by many deemed
 Known by whatever name, is falsely deemed
 He deemed that my pursuits and labours lay
 That will he deemed no insufficient plea
 And their hard service, deemed debasing now,
 Which did not please me, " must be deemed, I fear,
 And their arrangement, doubtless must be deemed
 With your bright transports fairly may be deemed,
 (Not to be deemed a stranger, as you come
 But present to the dead ; who, so they deemed,
 And such it might be deemed—a sleeping unbeam ;
 " She loved, and fondly deemed herself beloved.
 —Thrice happy, then, the Mother may be deemed,
 That might be deemed forbidding, did not there
 Strange, then, nor less than monstrous, might be deemed
 And new-born waters deemed the happiest source
Deem'st. Nor, as perchance thou rashly deem'st, the Cairn
Deeming. Deeming " the evil of the day
 And so they labour, deeming Hnly Writ
 Deeming our hesséd reason of least use
Deems. He deems their colours shall endure
 And therefore now she deems it good
 Above a world that deems itself most wise
Deep. See Ear-deep, Knee-deep.
 And insects clothe, like dust, the glassy deep :
 And now the whole wide lake in deep repose
 Whose softened image penetrates the deep.
 Deep yellow beams the scattered stems illumine,
 Broke only by the slow clock tolling deep,
 Or yell, in the deep woods, of lonely found.

Degrees. Which by degrees a confidence of mind
 Loose types of things through all degrees,
 Spirits of all degrees rejoice
 (Softening that bright effulgence by degrees)
 And all degrees of beauty. O ye Lightnings!
 Of the mind's business: these are the degrees
 It charms a feast-day throng of all degrees,
 Degrees and Orders stood, each under each:
 His Acidalian mother, by degrees
 A creek in the vast sea; for, all degrees
 Following the tide that slackens by degrees,
 Withering by slow degrees, 'mid gentle airs,
 Of orders and degrees, I nothing found
 Stole by degrees upon his mind; and hence
 Measuring through all degrees, until the scale
 In mercy, carried infinite degrees
 Through manifold degrees of guilt and shame;
 Accordingly he by degrees perceives
 Exalting tender themes, by just degrees
 By slow degrees, were gradually regained;
 Closed by degrees to charity; heaven's blessing
 Of what lies here confines us to degrees
 Did most resemble him. Degrees and ranks,
 Ranged side by side, and lessening by degrees
 Save by degrees and steps which thou hast deigned
Deified. Flattered and feared, despised yet deified,
 By our own spirits are we deified:
 Of shouting people deified!
 To more than Man, by virtue deified.
 What'er they sought, shunned, loved, or deified!
 Hence deified as sisters they were bound Deign. Yet more;—compelled by Powers which only deign
 That never will they deign to hold
 Of outward symbol, nor will deign to rest
 Fair parks spread wide where Adam Bell might
 deign
 And she would deign this day to smile on me
 The father for'd by Powers that only deign
 Deign, Sovereign Mistress! to accept a lay,
 Might deign to follow him through what he does Deigned. When Music deigned within this grosser sphere
 When Jesus humbly deigned to ride,
 On Horse's top, on Sinai, deigned
 Of Christian aspiration, deigned to fill
 And deigned to wear the robe of flesh we wear,
 For Fortune on me never deigned to smile;
 Has deigned to work as if with human Art!
 Thanks to the means which Nature deigned to employ;
 Save by degrees and steps which thou hast deigned
Deigns. Who deigns to grace our festal rite,
De-irians. De-IRIANS—he would save them from
 Dr-IRIANS;
Deities. Your kindred Deities, Ye live and move,
 And fume the household deities with store
 Of present sunshine.—Deities that float
 Of gamesome Deities; or Pao himself,
Deity. As if a very Deity he were!
 A court for Deity,
 A blazing intellectual deity—
 The local Deity, with ozy hair
 Strength to the brave, and Power, and Deity;
 Old Cham, the solar Deity, who dwells
 Seem to recall the Deity
 The Deity, with undistracted mind,
 That down didst ravish from the Deity,
 O son, a suppliant to thy deity!
 Like the Precursor when the Deity
 Such minds are truly from the Deity,
 Not then was Deity engulfed; nor Man,
 The voice of Deity, on height and plain,
 Its rights and virtues—by that Deity
Dejected. Called the dejected Lingerer Love lies Bleeding.
 O'er Gallia's wastes of corn dejected led,
 All unconcerned by her dejected plight,
 "Much," he continued, with dejected look,
 The soul deprest, dejected—even to love
 Dejected, and habitually disposed Dejection. His own dejection, downcast Flower! could share
 Although before in no dejection,
 In our dejection do we sink as low;
 From the dark chambers of dejection freed,
 All profitless dejection;
 Hence, if dejection has too oft encroached
 And with steadfast dejection his eyes are intent
 Yet, blessed Art, we yield not to dejection;
 No languor, no dejection, no dismay,
 Dejection taken up for pleasure's sake,
 Of sorrow and dejection; but I feel
Dejections. For fanciful dejections:
Delay. And he must pass without delay
 From circumspection, infinite delay
 A lofty mountain. After brief delay
 Turned and returned with intricate delay.
 Idle,—but no delay, no harm, no loss:
 This vesper service closed, without delay
Delayed. What tender vows our last sad kiss delayed!

Delayed—continued.
 'Mid that long sickness and those hopes delayed,
 Not long the Nuptials were delayed;
 Reluctant call it was; the rite delayed;
Delegate. And where's the triumph if the delegate
 Toward the pure truths this Delegate propounds,
Delegated. But delegated Spirits comforts fetch Delegates. Are delegates of harmony, and hear
 To what dread Powers He delegates his part
 The delegates of Heaven we rise,
 Of travellers, chiefly delegates returning
Delegation. Issued, on delegation to sustain Deliberate. Yet, with deliberate action slow,
 Whereon deliberate Valour and the rage
 If for deliberate shedder of man's blood
 Deliberate traces, registers of thought
 They hunt through the streets with deliberate tread,
 Deliberate and slow:
 Of all things, and deliberate holiday.
 Hath Reason sanctioned. Her deliberate voice
Deliberately. Deliberately, and undeceived,
 With gracious smile, deliberately pleased,
Delicacy. Nor even DELICACY stayed behind:
Delicate. Performs these delicate services, and therefore
 Few must they be, and delicate in their touch
 And humble cares, and delicate fears;
 James, though not sickly, yet was delicate;
 Say not you love the delicate treat,
 Sustained by delicate illusion?
 This delicate Enclosure shows
 "Some, still more delicate of ear,
 Of feathered Thing most delicate
 How vivid, yet how delicate, her glee!
 Her delicate creation:
 But delicate of yore its mould,
 Now doth a delicate shadow fall,
 Fair houses, baths, and banquets delicate,
 Who knows not that!—yet would this delicate age
 Then, for the pastimes of this delicate age,
 How delicate the leafy veil
 Just serves to show how delicate a soil
 These delicate companionships are made;

 And the small critic wielding his delicate pen,
 From courtesy and delicate reserve;
 Unsnapp'd by delicate viands; for, exclude
 And manners finely wrought, the delicate race
 Such as a delicate work of humour breeds;
 Her just opinions, delicate reserve,
 Most delicate, a lurking eyelet, small,
 Of delicate Galesus; and no less
 Of humble cares and delicate desires,
 Unchecked by innocence too delicate,
 Which craft of delicate Spirits hath composed
 A golden hue, delicate as their own
 Too delicate employ, as would appear,
 Unmatched in delicate beneficence;
 Such delicate caress as in the shape
Delicately. And delicately lined:
Delicious. How blest, delicious scene! the eye that greets
 Fresh gales and dews of life's delicious morn,
 That intermixture of delicious hues,
 In that delicious hour of balm,
 And leap at once from the delicious stream.
 Delicious is the Lay that sings
 Nor asking more, on that delicious Bay,
 Delicious odours! music sweet,
 Soft gales and dews of life's delicious morn,
 That not for thee, delicious vale! unfold
 And my full heart was swell'd to dear delicious pain.
 In that delicious world of poesy,
 Delicious, seeing that the sun and sky,
 In this delicious region."—Cultured slopes,
 Delicious as the gentlest breeze that sounds
Delight. Or, starting up with noise and rude delight,
 Though seeking only holiday delight;
 Opens—a little world of calm delight;
 Rouses the soul from her severe delight.
 Forgone the home delight of constant truth,
 "I was my delight to sit and hear Idonea
 Could find delight to nurse itself so strangely,
 More with delight than grief—I heard a voice
 Gleamed like a vision of delight.
 And take delight in its activity;
 The magpie chatters with delight;
 I watched them with delight, they were a lovely pair.
 Or, lengthening out thy season of delight,
 Seek who will delight in fable,
 And find elsewhere his business or delight;
 His limbs would toss about him with delight,
 Those beautiful fields, the delight of the day,
 The wanderers back to their delight!
 I bear it with me, Sir;—he took so much delight in it."

 For pastime and delight, as is the use

Delight—continued.

From base to summit; such delight I found . . .
 And frequent sharer of their calm delight . . .
 Doth in thy crimson head delight
 Some steady love; some brief delight;
 Prophet of delight and mirth,
 If the wind do but stir for his proper delight,
 Amid their own delight and fun,
 Can aught on earth impede delight,
 Thus they, with freaks of proud delight,
 Takes delight to play upon.
 Not undisturbed by the delight it feels,
 She was a Phantom of delight
 "And vital feelings of delight
 Not an inch of his body is free from delight;
 Or gives a thing but small delight that never can be dear?
 Herself her own delight;
 And yet he with no feigned delight
 As high as we have mounted in delight
 'Tis my delight, alone in summer shade,
 In love and sisterly delight
 Moved to and fro, for his delight.
 Could draw, when we had parted, vain delight,
 Which Dion learned to measure with sublime delight;—
 A deep delight the bosom thrills,
 My Soul was grateful for delight
 With views of undefined delight,
 On thy reclining form with more delight
 Which the myrtle would delight in
 With all fine functions that afford delight—
 We are as calm in our delight
 And be thy own delight!
 Nor hallowed less with musical delight
 A soaring spirit is their prime delight.
 A contrast and reproach to gross delight,
 Tears of delight, that testified how true
 Of pure delight, come whensoever it may,
 Studious regard with opportune delight,
 Some sad delight.
 For honest men delight will take
 Take to thy heart a new delight;
 An animal delight though dim!
 Gifts which, for wonder or delight,
 And in this region flowers delight,
 To look on these—delight to rove
 For his delight, a solemn wilderness
 Bear through the world these tidings of delight!
 Of them who in Thy laws delight:
 Though sprung from bleeding war, is one of pure
 delight;
 Stirs not; except I gaze with strange delight,
 Of innocent delight, remote or recent,
 List—'twas the Cuckoo.—O with what delight
 So pure, so fraught with knowledge and delight,
 In strains of rapture, or subdued delight!
 In the delight of moral prudence schooled,
 My frame hath often trembled with delight
 Needless renewal of an old delight?
 Are occupied with one delight!
 He asks with insecure delight,
 But not in wars did he delight,
 Bound on some errand of delight,
 Of gentleness and meek delight,
 And, for delight of him who tracks its course,
 Making your hardest task your best delight,
 With holiday delight on every brow:
 It was a pure delight!
 I am not One who much or oft delight
 Of truth and pure delight by heavenly lays!
 But from this peaceful centre of delight
 The balance of delight.
 So privileged, what a countenance of delight
 Filled with delight three summer morning hours.
 Delight resembling love,
 Can reach the innocent delight;
 Hear the challenge with delight.
 Flowers are there many that delight to strive
 By interchange of knowledge and delight.
 And for delight, but how I never wot,
 And meditative, authors of delight
 The quiet of nature was Adam's delight.
 Has from Savona torn her best delight?
 His pride and his delight!
 Our home and his, his heart's delight,
 The Moon doth with delight.
 Delight and liberty, the simple creed
 I only have relinquished one delight.
 While flash her upward eyes severe delight.
 Think all, he is the God of young delight.
 He comes, my dear delight,—and costliest things
 Puts off his wings, and walks, with proud delight,
 The Flower has drooped, the Isle's delight;
 Gaz'd on thy lovely Nymphs with fond delight,
 Long months of ease and undisturbed delight
 With triumph and delight, with hope and fear,
 An intellectual charm; that calm delight
 To every scheme of holiday delight.
 Of knowledge, when all knowledge is delight,

Delight—continued.

Is moved with feelings of delight, to me . . .
 It hath been told, that when the first delight . . .
 Even with myself divided such delight,
 In which the hero should delight to feed . . .
 Of teaching comprehension with delight,
 By after-meditation. But delight
 The shepherd roam the hills. With new delight,
 Enthusiastic, to delight and hope.
 It comes, to works of unreproved delight,
 And phrases pleased me chosen for delight,
 Both elevation and composed delight:
 How sweet at such a time, with such delight
 On his accustomed journey. The delight,
 Less strong of wonder and obscure delight.
 With less delight upon that other class
 Perform their feats. Nor was it mean delight
 Yet was the theatre my dear delight;
 Of education, nor with least delight
 Or Gehol's matchless gardens, for delight
 There, for her own delight had Nature framed
 To me became an index of delight,
 Ever at hand; he, only a delight
 And evil, not as for the mind's delight.
 Of them who strove against us, more delight
 Of chivalrous delight. Yet not the less,
 The object of its fervour. What delight!
 Lord of himself, in undisturbed delight—
 Kept sacred to restorative delight,
 Yet motions of delight, that haunt the sides
 Whom they delight in, blinded as he is
 Sisters, that they were each some new delight.
 Once more in Mau an object of delight,
 In my esteem, next to such dear delight,
 With most delight the passions of mankind,
 Sorrow, that is not sorrow, but delight;
 There linger, listening, gazing, with delight
 Impassioned, but delight how pitiable!
 Interposition—a serene delight.
 Accompanied by feelings of delight,
 As I grew up, it was my best delight.
 Was wanting yet the pure delight of love
 The silent stars! Oft did he take delight
 Yet do such travellers find their own delight;
 This anguish; and, indifferent to delight,
 Nor lacked, for more delight on that warm day,
 Some recompense of knowledge or delight?
 Fraught rather with depression than delight,
 For his delight—the happiest he of all!
 Urged on, or haply by intense delight . . .
 How rich in animation and delight,
 For knowledge is delight; and such delight
 Than by participation of delight
 To such desires, and grasped at such delight,
 His morbid humour, with delight supplied
 Men, whose delight is where their duty leads Delight exhaling from the ground they tread."
 A time-beguiling ditty, for delight . . .
 All that a boy could do, but with delight . . .
 A wandering Youth, I listened with delight
 To rear for food, for shelter, and delight;
 Then, from those lulling fits of vain delight
 Not for reproof, but high and warm delight,
 With startling summons; not for his delight
 The household lost their pride and soul's delight.
 The huge round chimneys, harbour of delight
 Appeared, confusion checking their delight.
 Of music, lute or harp, a long delight . . .
 To run the giddy round of vain delight,
 Which it sustained. But no ooe takes delight
 The vernal field infuses fresh delight . . .
 Gathered together, all in still delight,
 By acquisition of sincere delight,
 E'er took such delight in . . .
 Through him the Antipodes in thy name delight.
 That sail on winds, of breezes that delight
 In manner of a bird that takes delight . . .
 The more I see the more delight my mind
 In my affections. Witness the delight
 I must not walk in unreproved delight
 Motions of savage instinct, my delight . . .
 Shioe for Clarkson's pure delight
 Delighted. Delighted much to listen to those sounds, Delighted all the while to think . . .
 Awed, delighted, and amazed!
 Delighted am I for thy sake;
 Is visibly delighted;
 Looks on delighted—meet in festal ring,
 Delighted, with the glow-worm's harmless ray
 On the low brown wood-hut's delighted sleep
 Delighted through the motley spectacle;
 Not less delighted did I take my place . . .
 Had never much delighted me. And less Delightful. Rocked the charmed thought in more delightful dreams;
 I thought of Kilve's delightful shore,
 To show thee some delightful thing, in country or in town.
 In more delightful verse than skill of mine
 A most delightful tale pursuing!

Delightful—continued.

With which it looked on this delightful day
—'Twas that delightful season when the broom,
That on the banks of this delightful stream
Delightful land of verdure, shower and gleam,
In his delightful shell.
To ruminat on that delightful home
Delightful blossoms for the May
'And here, on this delightful day,
And the root of this delightful tree
Of that delightful fragrance which was once
Did summon us in his delightful round.
On that delightful time of growing youth
Of two delightful hours we strolled along
And specially delightful unto me
With those delightful pathways we advanced,
Delightful day it is for all who dwell
That was delightful. Off in solitude
In that delightful island which protects
When I began in youth's delightful prime
Of admiration and delightful awe,
Of what there is delightful in the breeze,
A Youth, I practised this delightful art;
This—if delightful hopes, as heretofore,
Delightful Valley, habitation fair!

Delighting. See Self-delighting.

The Rivulet, delighting in its strength,
Humanity, delighting to behold
To Gods delighting in remorseless deeds;
Delights. Or rather stay to taste the mild delights
And the near heavens impart their own delights.
Yet, not the less, in children's hymns and lonely prayer delights.

Whence all the fixed delights of house and home,
But now my own delights I make,—
As joy delights in; and with wise restraint
(For what delights the sense is false and weak)
Delights us. Rapine, avarice, expense,
With thoughts which no delights can chase,
Turned to humbler delights, in which youth might confer,
Hers in whose sway alone my heart delights,
While young delights on old encroach,
Long past, delights and sorrows;
Lives there a man whose sole delights
Oh! severed, too abruptly, from delights
Return Delights! with whom my road began,
And the near heav'ns their own delights impart.
Delights and exultations of your own.
That this first transit from the smooth delights
To seek the same delights, and have one health,
Called forth, at every season, new delights
My own delights do scarcely seem to me
My own delights; the lordly Alps themselves,
But leave we this: enough that my delights
Towards them and to all creatures. God delights
In what the Historian's pen so much delights
A course of vain delights and thoughtless guilt,
As he is known to all. The calm delights
From the delights of charity cut off.
Love, knowledge, all my manifold delights

Delirium. A wild delirium first the infant thrill'd;

Deliver. Through air, to thee my Charge will I deliver.
'Behold to thee my Charge I now deliver!
Did I deliver this unfinished Song;
Her by menace to deliver.

Deliverance. And he found no deliverance! The

Crew
Sad deliverance would it be, and yoked with shame,
In act embodied, my deliverance wrought.
Of a deliverance absolute and pure.
His glad deliverance has begun:
For its deliverance—a capacious field
To celebrate their great deliverance;
Come not to speed the Soul's deliverance;
And painful struggle and deliverance—prayed
And proud deliverance issuing out of pain
Foretaste deliverance; but the least perturbed
Exit in this deliverance wrought through faith
Preparing your deliverance,
Of their deliverance, surely yet to come.
Till his deliverance, when Mercy made him

Delivered. Delivered to the Judge of all things.

Dead!
Delivered heart and head! Let us to Palestine;
They sank, delivered o'er
Brave Schill! by death delivered, take thy flight
Perchance had flown, delivered by the storm;
Came and delivered him, alone he sped
Delivered and Deliverer move
—At length delivered from the yoke,
Delivered. No! the Orator hath yoked
The awful truths delivered thence by tongues
May he delivered to distress and shame.
Hath here delivered; words of heartfelt truth,

Deliverer. See Lamb-deliverer.

My Deliverer would present
Looked the beautiful Deliverer
And, as the great Deliverer marches by,

Deliverer—continued.

Deliverer of the steadfast rocks
Delivered and Deliverer move
Deliverer's. —Chant the Deliverer's praise in every tongue!
That landward urged the great Deliverer's sail,
For a deliverer's glorious task,—and such Delivering. Delivering her decisions from the seat
Delivery. Thou offerest up for safe Delivery
Dell. Through bare grey dell, high wood, and pastoral cove;
On Zutphen's plain, or on that highland dell,
You will look down into a dell, and there
Now fast up the dell came the noise and the fray,
Perhaps he's gone along the dell,
Nor should I have made mention of this Dell
And to that hollow dell from time to time
By any who should look beyond the dell
May call it by the name of EMMA'S DELL.
The Torrent down the rocky dell
And in this smooth and open dell
And in this dell you see
The lovely dell is all his own.
While in the dell he sings alone,
And wander down yon hawthorn dell,
—Fly also, Muse! and from the dell
Here in this happy dell."
A basin for that fountain in the dell!
And built a house of pleasure in the dell.
It chanced that I saw standing in a dell
Or from cottage-sprinkled dell,
Around the dell a gleam
In the green wood and hollow dell;
And there, along the narrow dell,
Along this solitary dell,
A cottage in a heathy dell;
A seemly Cottage in this sunny Dell,
Or Roy, renowned through many a Scottish dell;
In the low dell 'mid Roslin's faded grove:
Skyward ascending from a woody dell.
Beside thee in some heathy dell;
Would break the silence of this Dell:
And in the lonely Highland dell
And what the Dell unwillingly reveals
First of his tribe, to this dark dell—who first
High over hill and low adown the dell
O'er path and road, and plain and dell,
We who were led to-day down a grim dell,
What change shall happen next to Nunnery Dell?
Beyond her native dell.
And the Stream whirled her down the dell
Within the dell he built a cell,
(As records moulder in the Dell
The deepest dell the mountain's breast displays,
To us who stood low in that hollow dell,
Of the small Cottage in the lonely Dell
This, in the lonely dell discoursing, you
Brought yesterday from our sequestered dell
To the one cottage in the lonely dell:
Through some Helvetian dell, when low-hung mists Dells. O'er all its vanished dells, and lawns, and woods;
To other flowers;—to other dells
Where birds and brooks from leafy dells
Broke forth in concert fung adown the dells,
Are heard among the moorland dells,
Glad proclamation make, and heights and dells
Tune in the mountain dells their water lyes.
Unfathom'd dells and undiscover'd woods;
Of pleasure sprinkled over, shady dells

Then, when o'er highest hills the Deluge passed?

But burst and spread in deluge through the land.

Thus darkness and delusion round our path
Delusion which a moment may destroy!

Depth—continued.

From whose calm centre thou, through height or depth,
Where height, or depth, admits not the approach
From depth of shaggy covert peeping forth
All withered by the depth of shade above.
Even by his studied depth of privacy,
Not giddy yet aerial, with a depth
Depths. Those fast-receding depths of sable blue
Who knew not to what quiet depths a weight
Love from her depths, and Duty in her might,
To sound the depths of every Art
And, through her depths, Saint Mary's Lake
Heard from the depths of its aerial bower—
Fixed in the depths of this courageous soil;
Within its depths, and to the shore we came
Be its depths quickened; what thou dost inherit
Came to this hidden pool, whose depths surpass
Feels through her lowest depths thy sovereignty;
Eyeing the sea's blue depths. Poor Bird! even so
But from our loved Helvellyn's depths was brought,
Though, in the depths of sunless groves, no more
And served in depths where fishes haunt
He rested not; its depths his mind explored;
Descend and reach, in Yewdale's depths, a plain

From the pure depths of her humanity!
And quiet now are the depths of air,
Among the depths of time. Yet is it just
Who, yet a liveried schoolboy, in the depths
And 'mid the hollow depths of naked crags
And airy hopes my children.—From the depths
Within the depths of its capacious breast,
That, lodged within thy crystal depths, seem bright,
Derange. Old laws, and ancient customs to derange
Deranged. Through town and country both deranged
Dereliction. Of dereliction and dismay, I yet
Deride. The altar, to deride the fane,
Derided. How oft from you, derided Powers!
No recompense, derided; and at length,
Derides. Whose slippery face derides his deathful
tread!
Derive. If thou indeed derive thy light from Heaven,
In glittering halls—was able to derive Fade,—and the moralising mind derive Derived. Have I derived from thy sweet power
Derived from clouds and storms!) the amplest range
Derived from earth or heaven,
With attributes from History derived,
Thy confidant! say, whence derived that air
—Not from a source less sacred is derived
Envy and heart-inquietude, derived
Had been derived the name he bore—a name
Came, of themselves, or at her call derived
Diffused through time and space, with aid derived
Derived from academic institutes
Derived—find no admission. Then it was—
And from the faith derived through Him who bled
Derives. Derives its name, reflected as the chime
Deriving. Deriving cheerful confidence, shall blend Dernbrook's. By lurking Dernbrook's pathless side
Derogate. He feels how far the act would derogate Derwent. Where Derwent rests, and listens to the roar
Born to be lost in Derwent flowing near;
His wizard course where hoary Derwent takes
O Derwent! winding among grassy holms
Down by thy side, O Derwent! murmuring stream,
Greta, or Derwent, or some nameless rill,
Derwent's. "By Derwent's side my father dwelt—a man
Desart. See Desert.
Whence fragrance scents the water's desert gale,
No ruder sound your desert haunts invades,
Descant. Recalling now, with descant soft
With thankful spirit. The descant, and the wind
"I were idle to descant. My inner judgment
Pour forth his meditations, and descant
Descend. Descend we now the maddened Reuss our guides;
Five streams of ice amid her cots descend,
On he must pace, perchance till night descend,
Through tears have seen him towards that world descend
You'd better like we should descend together,
Thus rise and thus descend,—

Or descend where the ark alighted,
Painted more soft and fair as they descend,
Their course, or genial showers descend!
Might tempt an angel to descend,
Descend from this ethereal height;
The rising sun, and on the plains descend;
Forced to descend into his destined tomb—
Descend on all that issues from our blood.
Descend, and, on the brow of ancient Rome
Ere they descend to nourish root and stalk
Descend on Francis; nor forbear
A few tears down her cheek descend
Druids descend, auxiliars of the Cross;
Why do good thoughts, invoked or not, descend,

Descend—continued.

Descend and reach, in Yewdale's depths, a plain
Which, though unsued for, fails not to descend
So graciously?—that could descend,
That soften'd from the water head descend.
We must descend. A Traveller I am,
We must descend, and there should find the road,
A weight of ages did at once descend
Descend to earth or dwell in highest heaven!
Descend, prophetic Spirit! that inspir'st
That consolation may descend from far
Permitted to descend, and bless mankind.
—So we descend: and winding round a rock
Ere we descend into these silent vaults,
Their place; and genuine piety descend,
From whom all gifts descend, all blessings flow!"
Descendants. On their Descendants shedding grace—
That to descendants of the dead it holds
To give, in their Descendants, freer vent
But by our best descendants be unknown,
The true descendants of those golly men
Descended. See Heaven-descended.
Descended:—happy are the eyes that meet
And I descended. Having reached the house,
Of motion, save the water that descended,
Whence the bare road descended rapidly
May have descended, though I see them here.
He had descended from the proud saloon,
Descended from Judean heights, to march Descendeth. Looks on, and Grace descendeth from above
Descending. Descending, shuts for aye his prison door.
On the descending moon.
The Mother hails in her descending Son
To this lower world descending,
Descending with a graceful flow,
And is descending on his embassy;
Descending slowly, till the two
From what huge height, descending? Can such force
Now (for, though Truth descending from above
Not swans descending with the stealthy tide,
Till Night, descending upon hill and vale,
Which Angels make, on works of love descending,
That seemed from heaven descending, like the flood
Aloft ascending, and descending deep,
To God descending in his power.
Of right affections climbing or descending
Descending to the worm in charity;
Incense-like to Heaven, descending
When first, descending from the moorlands,
Throned in the Sun's descending car
Descending from the mountain to make sport
Descending slow with something heavenly fraught.
Descending, have I faithfully retraced
Descending, disembodied, and diffused
Descending from the region of the clouds,
Descending, there might rest, upon that height
And yet again recovered! But descending
Were seen descending,—forth to greet them ran
Without reserve descending upon both.
Descending, and supporting his pure heart
Descending, we pursued our homeward course,
Of vision less and less distinct, descending
The cloud of rooks descending through mid air
Descends. A little prattling child, he oft descends,
Descends along the sloping road;
To humbleness of heart descends
Which, at Jove's will, descends on Peilon's top."
Descends:—beneath this godlike Warrior, see!
The Spirit of Caracatus descends
While each into himself descends,
Off he descends to nurse the brother pair,
—Voiceless the stream descends into the gulf
Of speculation not unfit, descends;
But true humility descends from heaven;
Crowned by its antique summer-house—descends,
That Man descends into the VALE of years;
Descend. Appear; a calm descent of sky conducting
(So seemed it) down a strange descent:
Earthward it glided with a swift descent:
And down the smooth descent
So, to a steep and difficult descent
Whose sharp descent confounded their array,
Describe. An aged Man, and such as you describe.
And with a living pleasure we describe;
Contemplated, describe the Mind and Man
Described. The Thorn which I described to you,
To many living now, have I described
Descried. See Descri'd, Far-descried.
Some, dim between the lofty cliffs descried,
That glimmer hoar in eve's last light, descried
To be descried through shady groves.
A Form not doubtfully descried:—
And that intrepid Nymph, on Uri's steep descried!
Bear to the glacier band—those Shapes aloft descried.
And glistening antlers are descried;
A plain below stretched seaward, while, descried.

Dost thou despise the earth where cares abound?
Threats, which the unthinking only can despise,
Earth to despise, and flesh to mortify ;
Impotent wish! which reason would despise
"O son, my strength, my power! who dost despise
I might have even been tempted to despise.
Despise, as senseless: for my spirit relished
Earth to despise; but, to converse with heaven—
Too easily, despise or overlook
Despised. In Palestine? Where he despised alike
False Shame discarded, spurious Fame despised,
Flattered and feared, despised yet defied,
Of sense despised, a world forgot,
Is life despised; ah no, the spacious earth
But seemingly a thing despised;
But chastisement shall follow peace despised . . .
Despised by that stern God to whom they raise
Yet more, we wish that men by men despised,
The unconquerable pang of despised love . . .
Pitied, and, where they are not known, despised.

Destinies. Aspire to more than earthly destinies ;
Destiny. That is my destiny. May it be thine :
Can destiny be turned aside?
That Destiny her course should change; too just
And my Soul felt her destiny divine,
Of Destiny, upon these wounds hath laid
—"Would be a wildish destiny, . . .
A kind of heavenly destiny : . . .
The destiny of Man, and live in hope . . .
The State,—the Country's destiny to mould ; . . .
Struggling against the stream of destiny, . . .
On the third stage of thy great destiny, . . .
Lo! I by a destiny well known . . .
In one sad sweep of destiny— . . .
Their wrongs, since they fulfilled their destiny?
Heart-stricken by stern destiny of yore . . .
Sails with her happy destiny ; . . .
Pursued by destiny! . . .
Her happier destiny foretold :— . . .
Our destiny, our being's heart and home, . . .
Fount of my country's destiny and the world's ; . . .
How much the destiny of Man had still . . .
A humbler destiny have we retraced, . . .
To explore the destiny of human kind . . .
Beyond the temporal destiny of the Kind,
Hovered above our destiny on earth : . . .
Struggling in vain with ruthless destiny."
Belike no higher destiny awaits . . .
Her glorious destiny. Begin even now, Destitute. Bare is it, without house or track, and destitute . . .
Well—all was gone, and they were destitute,
And stripped of power! me, feeble, destitute,
Meek, destitute, as seemed, of hope or aim
On a wild coast; how destitute! did they
And of all visible motion destitute, . . .
Though poor and destitute of friends thou art,
To good, whereof itself is destitute,
Yet were I grossly destitute of all . . .
She left us destitute, and, as we might,
Although of food and clothing destitute,
Would have loved me, as one not destitute
Beyond all poverty how destitute,
Infirm, dependant, and now destitute?
What place so destitute and void—but there
To reach it, destitute of other hope . . .
However destitute, be left to droop
Destitution. Of destitution—solitude was not.
Destroy. Strong to destroy, is also strong to heal—
The Villain rose in mutiny to destroy me ; . . .
He will destroy. To have been trapped like moles!—
A license to destroy him: our good governors
This liberation came, you would destroy : . . .
A thing no storm can e'er destroy,
They suck—from breath that, threatening to destroy, . . .
Destroy the ideal Power within, 'twere done . . .
Destroy in pity, or with care remove . . .
It aught impair thy beauty or destroy, . . .

Destroy—continued.

Not scourge, to save the People—not destroy.
 A charm, that thought can not destroy,
 Hast thou thy own liege subjects to destroy?
 Death conscious that he only could destroy
 Can utterly abolish or destroy!
 And here the avalanche of Death destroy
 Industrious to destroy! With fruitless pains
 Delusion which a moment may destroy!

 The excess, by which the balance is destroyed.
 Destroyed their unoffending commonwealth,
 And slaves who will consent to be destroyed—
 Hope after hope, encouraged and destroyed,
 That shall not die, and cannot be destroyed.
 Of the same breath are shattered and destroyed.

 Now, when destruction is a prime pursuit,
 Of destructive tempests coming,
Destructive. Of destructive flight on earthly crowns,
 Than her destructive energies, attend
 From disregard of time's destructive power,
Desultory. That checked the desultory range
 Of raving tired or desultory war— . . .
 537 In desultory* 1
 In desultory walk through orchard grounds,
 The mid-day hours with desultory talk;
Detached. But with no settled plan, I was detached
 To blazon—power and energy detached

Detained. Detained them near the gateway of the Castle . . . 59 Bord. 1201
 Chieftains and kings in council were detained;
 Some fled; and some their fears detained:
 Should in his childhood be detained for ever!
 To humbler matter that detained us oft
 Detained us, on what spectacles of woe
 Detained for contemplation or repose,
 Here would not linger, willingly detained?
 Or what detained him, till his closing eyes
 And mossy seats, detained us side by side,
 A thought of refuge, for a mind detained
 Proffered to all, while yet on earth detained.

Detains. Detains me, doubtful of the event;
 Or rather felt, the enticement that detains
 Grief of her sting; nor cheat, where he detains
 Of bland entreaty at her court detains;
 The matter that detains us now may seem,
 Detains; but tempted now to interpose,
 Detains him after his accustomed hour . . .

 In deep determin'd gloom his subject lies.
 To brace myself to some determined aim,
 Single and of determined bounds; and hence
 Determined and unmoved, with steady beams
 With no determined object, though upheld
 And qualities determined.—Among men

 I did not think that, during that long absence, . . . 41 Bord. 205
 Pity the Maiden did not wait a while, . . . 43 Bord. 326
 That will be soon despatched. Did Marmaduke,
 Lord Clifford—did you see him talk with Herbert? . . . 43 Bord. 340
 Long did I watch, and saw her pacing round, . . . 47 Bord. 537
 You said you did not like his looks—that he . . . 51 Bord. 757
 Did not admit of stronger evidence; . . . 53 Bord. 881
 Twice did I spring to grasp his withered throat, . . . 53 Bord. 890
 And spake to you, why did you give no answer? . . . 55 Bord. 959
 'Twas dark—dark as the grave; yet did I see,
 I did believe all things were shadows—yea, . . . 59 Bord. 1214
 Which did Thee bear, and is a Maid for aye, . . . 552 Prioresse 10
 Through humbleness, the Spirit that did alight
 And eke, when he the image did behold . . . 553 Prioresse 53
 For he so young to Christ did reverence, . . . 553 Prioresse 64
 The Alma Redemptoris did he hear; . . . 553 Prioresse 68
 This child did him beseech on his bare knees, . . . 553 Prioresse 78
 That never fleshly woman they did know, . . . 554 Prioresse 134
 She for her Son in that same spot did cry . . . 555 Prioresse 154
 So loud, that with his voice the place did ring,
 Them therefore with wild horses did he draw,
 And in the hour when I my death did meet . . . 555 Prioresse 182
 To me she came, and thus to me did say,
 Forth did I go, alone and fearlessly, . . . 556 Prioresse 207
 Well did they know that service all by rote,
 And some did sing all out with the full throat, . . . 557 Cuck. and Night. 59
 Then of the Nightingale did I take note, . . . 558 Cuck. and Night. 71
 And he for dread did fly away full fast; . . . 558 Cuck. and Night. 75
 And then did she begin this song full high,
 As ever he to Lover yet did send, . . . 560 Cuck. and Night. 206
 How she and I did each the other chide,
 Who did on thee the hardness bestow . . . 561 Cuck. and Night. 219
 For love of God, full piteously did say,
 And there so graciously did me behold,
 And after this he to the gate did go,
 From hence my hope and solace forth did pass, . . . 561 Cuck. and Night. 249
 And of himself did he imagine oft,
 When hence did journey my bright Lady dear,
 And that the sun did take his course not right,
 Thus thirty smooth years did he thrive on his farm:
 For this he did all in the ease of his heart, . . . 561 Cuck. and Night. 255
 All trades, as need was, did old Adam assume,—
 Yet did at length his loyalty of heart . . . 561 Cuck. and Night. 267
 Well did I watch, much laboured, nor had power
 But did not fall; for Virtue braves all shocks,
 Me did a kindlier fortune then invite . . . 562 Cuck. and Night. 293
 Over the well-steered galleys did I rule—
 Nor in life's vigorous season did I shun
 Not without heavy grief of heart did He
 All else is nothing—Did occasion suit . . . 562 Troilus 4
 As with a chosen friend; nor did he leave
 Which Sioo's Kings did consecrate of old;
 But truly did He live his life, Urbino, . . . 563 Troilus 55

Diffused—continued.

- Diffused adown that barrier of steep rock,
My soul diffused herself to wide embrace
Pure and serene, diffused—to overlook
Of our Companion, gradually diffused;
Of pious sentiment diffused afar,
Day after day the gladness is diffused
Of gravity and elegance, diffused
I spake of mischief by the wise diffused
On the refugent spectacle, diffused.
- Diffuses. What Power unseen diffuses far
- Diffusing. Open it out, diffusing thence a smile
Diffusing only those affections wider
Where reason yet might hesitate, diffusing
Diffusing health and sober cheerfulness.
- Dig. To dig for water on the spot, the Captain
Dig for us; and present us, in the shape
That, like this Labourer, such may dig their way,
- Dight. When all the fields with freshest green were dight,
Maids and Matrons, dight
And soon again was dight
O house of houses, once so richly dight!
- Dignified. Amid their smiles and dimples dignified—
For "precepts over dignified,"
Had dignified, and called to represent
To many, neither dignified enough
More dignified, and stronger in himself;
An air and mien of dignified pursuit;
And dignified by battlements and towers
That dignified and cheered a low estate?
- Dignity. Of thrice two summers dignity the board.
To dignity arch looks and laughing eyes;
To dignity the spot that gives thee birth
To dignity the humblest state.—Your voice
- Dignities. The dignities of plain occurrence then
- Dignity. The simple dignity no forms debase;
True dignity abides with him alone
Such strength, a dignity so fair:
Softening their inbred dignity austere—
And no pride blended with their dignity.
How they with dignity may stand; or fall,
To dignity—in thee, O Schwyz! are seen
For dignity not placed beyond her reach,
Is Roman dignity inviolate;
Their dignity installing
And even the common dignity of man
Subsist thy dignity to guard,
For not alone by men of dignity
The native dignity no forms debase,
A corresponding dignity within.
Honour misplaced, and Digoity astray;
Its dignity; with gifts he bubbles o'er
A dignity, a smoothness, like the works
To patriarchal dignity of mind,
The meanest thrives the most; where dignity,
True personal dignity, abideth not;
And dignity of individual man,
Whence spiritual dignity originates,
In the plain presence of his dignity!
For moral dignity, and strength of mind,
What dignity, what beauty, in this change
"The dignity of life is not impaired
In dignity of being we ascend.
And learni'g's solid dignity; though born
An earth-despising dignity of soul?
A natural dignity on humblest rank;
Upon his life an outward dignity
With dignity befitting his proud hope;
With motions of true dignity and grace?"
- Diapitated. Of a diapitated structure, once
Dilate. Those Spectres to dilate
- Dilated. Dilated hang the misty pines on high,
The west, that burns like one dilated sun,
Glimmer the dim-lit Alps, dilated, round,
- Dilates. Great joy by horror tam'd dilates his heart,
- Dilating. Where Discord stalks dilating, every hour,
- Dilatatory. Though oft of such dilatatory walk
- Diligence. Minutely linked with diligence uninspired,
Thy diligence, thy unrelaxing use
Now, certes, I will use my diligence
The faith which they by diligence had earned,
This baneful diligence:—at early morn
- Diligent. Has scarcely been more diligent than I;
What knowledge can perform, is diligent to learn;
Such measured rest the diligent and good
- Diluvian. Who triumphed o'er diluvian power
—and yet
Diluvian truths, and patriarchal lore,
Diluvian records; or the sighs of Earth
- Dim. Some, dim between the lofty cliffs descried,
Dim from the twilight water's shaggy side,
Where, 'mid dim towers and woods, her waters gleam.
The green light sparkles;—the dim bowers recede,
Nor taper glimmered dim from sick man's room;
The gloomy lantern, and the dim blue match,
With a dim eye, distracted and amazed;
Filled my dim eyes with tears.—When I returned
To stretch her arms, and dim the gladsome light

Dim—continued.

- By a dim lantern's light I saw that wreaths . . . 59
In dim relation to imagied Beings, . . . 64
Through words and things, a dim and perilous way;
Of day grew dim the Housewife huog a lamp; . . . 133
Lamps of faith, now burning dim, . . . 144
Through a strait passage intricate and dim? . . . 173
Of you dim cave, in seeming silence makes . . . 184
Dim sadness—and blind thoughts, I knew not, nor could name. . . . 195
With many recognitions dim and faint, . . . 206
But neither veil thy head in shadows dim, . . . 215
A Voice shall finish doubt and dim foreseings,
The path grows dim, and dimmer still;
Dim shades—for relics, upon Lethe's shore,
In some complaining, dim retreat, . . . 240
An animal delight though dim!
The Cross shall spread, the Crescent hath waxed dim; . . . 326
Till all is dim, save this bright Stone . . . 337
All suffering dim eclipse!
To the dim cavern, whence the river
O'er hill and valley to this dim retreat!
To days of dim antiquity;
Enough! for see, with dim association
At the dim centre of a churchyard yew;
Though brain would swim, and eyes grow dim,
"My eyes are dim with childish tears,
Long as the heat shall rage, let that dim cave . . . 498
Sung as the light of day grows dim: . . . 506
And Truth, whose eye guilt only can make dim;
Dim memory keeping of its old intent. . . . 514
And now, in twilight dim, . . . 526
Nought I perceived within it dull or dim;
Of this fair garden, and its alleys dim, . . . 532
Some, dim between th' aerial cliffs descri'd,
The cots, those dim religious groves embow'r,
While mid dim towers and woods her waters gleam:
Dim dreadful faces thro' the gloom appear,
Dim were my swimming eyes—my pulse beat slow,
A forestate, a dim earnest, of the calm
Worked with a dim and undetermined sense
Or make their dim abode in distant winds.
The floors of those dim cloister lamps;
Had bred in me; but gloomier far, a dim
Remembrances and dim admonishments. . . . 719
Our dim ancestral Past in vision clear;
Went sounding on, a dim and perilous way!
Though inconceivably endowed, too dim
Of dim futurity, to Man revealed,
In modest paeneyric. "These dim lines,
—The road is dim, the current unperceived,
"So falls, so laugishes, grows dim, and dies,"
On the dim altar burned continually
Two eyes—not dim, but of a healthy stare—
- Dim-discovered. Hung dim-discover'd from the dangerous steep, . . . 610
Dimension. And in dimension, such that thou might'st seem . . . 290
Dimensions. A temple framing of dimensions vast,
Dim-eyed. Does the dim-eyed curious Bee, . . . 818 Dim-gleaming. Dim-gleaming among weeds and grass, . . . 161
Dim-gleaming through imperfect lore, . . . 417
Diminished. Of ether, shining with diminished round,
Wheel pale and silent her diminish'd round,
Old things repeated with diminished grace;
Faint, and diminished to the gazing eye,
Rivall'd by you, hides the diminish'd head.
- Diminishing. Diminishing by distance till it seemed Diminution. And one night's diminution of her power, . . . 192
From diminution safe and weakening age: . . . 812 Diminutive. Not there diminutive, but through a scale . . . 182
- Dim-lit. Nor wants the dim-lit cave a wreath
Glimmer the dim-lit Alps, dilated, round, . . . 506
Dimly. The horse alone, seen dimly as I pass,
That glimmered like a pine-tree dimly viewed
Or dimly seen,
And lurking dimly in their shy retreats,
Dimly reflected in a lonely pool.
On earth we dimly see, and but in part
- Dimly-gleaming. And dimly-gleaming Nest,—a hollow crown . . . 254
Dimmed. I wept not then,—but tears have dimmed my sight, . . . 713
Dimmer. The path grows dim, and dimmer still;
The moon uneasy looked and dimmer, . . . 240
Of dimmer character, he thee attained . . . 351
Dimmest. Forth from the grotto's dimmest chamber
Dimming. Dimming the stars, and fireworks magical, Dimness. With soft illumination cheered the dimness of that place, . . . 92
That dimness of heart-agony; . . . 401
—From viewless lamps a ghastly dimness falls,
Dimness o'er this clear luminary crept . . . 614
Dimple. Stripped of his voice and left to dimple down 569

Dimpled. Every face in the village is dimpled with smiles.
Dimples. Amid their smiles and dimples dignified—
 Breaks into dimples small and bright;
 Is smooth as clear, save where with dimples small Dimpling. And run in transport to the dimpling deeps;
 Into the dimpling cistern of his heart :
 Dimpling along in silent majesty,
 Pleased to detect the dimpling stir of life,
Dim-seen. While trees, dim-seen, in frenzied numbers, tear
 But now are silent as the dim-seen flowers :
 She clasps them at that dim-seen roofless stone.—
Dim-tinkling. The stars dim-tinkling through their forms !
Din. While Echo dallies with its various din !
 May drive at the windows,—we'll laugh at his din ;
 He stands, backed by the wall ;—he abates not his din ;
 But off, in lonely rooms, and 'mid the din
 Convulsed as by a jarring din ;
 —Such din shall trouble them no more.
 An uproar and a drunken din
 Thy sense from pressure of life's common din ;
 And folly, if they with united din
 Hence, while the imperial City's din
 A moment ends the fervent din,
 And din of arms and minstrelsy,
 The time is ripe. With festive din
 Clear, loud, and lively is the din,
 Make him a captive—for that pent-up din,
 While Echo dallies with the various din !
 Black drizzling crags, that beaten by the din,
 And not a voice was idle ; with the din
 With din of instruments and shuffling feet,
 Of jocund din ; and, when a lengthened pause
 Of colours, lights, and forms ; the deafening din ;
 For eyes and ears ! whaf anarchy and din,
 Rocked high above their heads ; anon, the din
 Heard while the dwelling vibrates to the din
 With hostile din, and combating in sight
 To multiply and aggravate the din ?
Dinas. Abashed, Sir Dinas turned away.
Dine. This May-time, every day before thou dine,
Dinner. To culf her dinner from it's garden bed,
 Where once the dinner was prepared with pride ;
Dinners. Hence rustic dinners on the cool green ground,
Dinning. The bag-pipe dinning on the midnight moor
 Dinning from the CHERRY TREE !
Dint. Ah no, by dint of Magnanimity ;
Diocletian's. Lament ! for Diocletian's fiery sword
Diomed. What steeds the car of Diomed dip boast ;
Diomedes. What horses there of Diomed, had great Dion. Was princely Dion, in the power
 Long-exiled Dion marching at their head,
 Which Dion learned to measure with sublime delight ;—
 The soul of Dion, instantly dissolved,
 Did Dion hold with Plato ; ripened thus Dion's. On Dion's virtues, while the lunar beam
 Invoking Dion's tutelary care,
Dip. Scarcely the hand forbears to dip its palm
 Peace to the sober matron who shall dip
Dipped. Where'er was dipped the toiling oar,
 Till dipp'd his pathway in the river shade ;
 I dipped my oars into the silent lake,
 And I, who at that time was scarcely dipped
 That ever hermit dipped his maple dish
 Was cleared, I dipped, with arms accordant, oars
 And dipped my hand in dancing wave
Dipping. With the next dipping of its slackened oar ;
Dire. And death's dire aspect daily be surveyed,
 Even so the dire phantasma which had crossed
 She knew not what dire pangs in him such tale could wake
 The mine's dire earthquake, and the pallid host
 A dire suspicion drove us from our shed ;
 How you would be disturbed by this dire news,
 Dire poverty assailed ;
 Steeped in dire grief the voice of Philomel ;
 As if some dire constraint of pain, or rage,
 Small cause of dire effect ! for, surely,
 How tailsome—nay, how dire—it was, by thee
 Curses are his dire portion, scorn, and hate,
 For whose dire ends tears flow, and blood is spilt,
 No courage can repel the dire assault ;
 And the dire flapping of his hoary wing !
 And discipline was passion's dire excess.
 In semblance fresh, as if, with dire affray,
 And chaser bursting here with one dire smart.
 The end of that dire Tragedy,
 Dire overthrow, and yet how high
 Her new-born Babe ; dire ending of bright hope !
 Broke threateningly, in sparkles dire
 Whence these opprobrious leaves of dire portent ?

Dire—continued.
 Who reach this dire extremity !
 In its sweet opening ? and what dire mishap
 Dire clap of hands, distracted chase of feet,
 What dire intrigues disturbed Cythera's joy !
 Of dire enchantments faced and overcome
 Of an event so dire, by signs in earth
 'Tis true, had gone before this hour, dire work
 And having thus discerned how dire a thing
 Strange and uncouth ; dire faces, figuras dire,
 Of dire rapacity. There, Man abides,
 Their own dire agents, and constrain the good
 Against the dire assaults of papacy
 Whence dire dependence. What could she perform
 Of sweetness where dire anguish had been known,
 Itself had been unlooked-for ; oh ! dire stroke
 Into the chilling flood. Convulsions dire
 This dire perverseness, cannot choose but ask,
Direct. Which heavenward they direct.—Then droop not thou,
 Would now direct thy notice. Yet in spite
 We held our way, direct through hamlets, towns,
 In part by fear to shape a way direct,
 Communion more direct and intimate
 Do thou direct it ! To the virtuous grant
 No doubt if you in terms direct had asked Directed. See Heaven-directed.
 Now as his choice directed, now as mine ;
 Such converse, if directed by a meek,
 Again directed to his downcast Friend,
 Had been directed ; and we saw him now
Directing. And tendency benign, directing those Directing notice, merely from a wish
Directions. But only give some plain directions
 In opposite directions urged their way
 Questions, directions, warnings and advice,
Directly. Directly, but to tender thoughts by means Directress. How much the mild Directress of the plough
Directs. Directs his winding dog the cliffs to scale,— Direful. And direful throes ; as if the All-ruling
 Mind,
Direst. 'Mid direst shocks of mortal accident—
 Direst of savage beasts, would roam in fear,
Dirge. A dirge devoutly breathed o'er snarrows past ;
 Of exultation hung a dirge
 The funeral dirge—she sees the knot
 The Dirge which for our Master's sake
 O for a dirge ! But why complain ?
 The cadence, as of psalms—a funeral dirge !
 Some steps when they had thus advanced, the dirge
Dirge-like. Stern Winter loves a dirge-like sound.
Dirges. Hence, prayers are shaped amiss, and dirges sung
Disappear. Till, like thyself, I disappear
 They will not, cannot disappear ;
 Clouds at her bidding disappear ;
 That, while ten thousand pleasures disappear,
 And monuments that soon must disappear :
 The glory of Infant Rome must disappear,
 That shape themselves and disappear
 Shall disappear, and grateful earth receive
 Through which the waters creep, then disappear,
 Shall disappear from both the sister Isles,
 Their glory disappear.
 " Who next will drop and disappear ? "
 Dawns from the east, but dawns to disappear
 To disappear by a slow gradual death,
 To rush and disappear. But soon broke forth
 'Twill be such joy to see them disappear.
 And what would disappear ; prepared to find
 Of time and conscious nature disappear,
 They came and go, appeared and disappear,
 Thy image disappear ! The Mountain-ash
Disappeared. Has disappeared, and every trace is fled
 Was reat with lightning—one hath disappeared ;
 Watching below till he had disappeared
 And prematurely disappeared,
 How disappeared He ?—ask the newt and toad,
 " How disappeared he ? " Ask the newt and toad ;
 And scarcely have they disappeared
 As his own charge, had disappeared,
 Had this effulgence disappeared
 Will say, Ye disappeared with England's Glory !
 Had disappeared, or shed a fainter light
 That he had disappeared—not two months gone.
 And disappeared. I journeyed back this way,
 Of that off-sloping outlet, disappeared,
 Have scarcely disappeared." " This blooming
 Child,"
 Suddenly then they disappeared : not twice
Disappearing. Lingers behind his disappearing wain.
 Whole hamlets disappearing as he moves,
 Of childhood, when a disappearing line,
 Was disappearing by a swift decay,
 Or disappearing ; triumph that proclaims
Disappears. Silently disappears, or quickly fades :
 That falls and disappears, the house is gone ;
 At once their tender brightness disappears,
Disappoint. You will not disappoint them ; and hereafter—

Disappointed. Where good men, disappointed in the quest

I called the pangs of disappointed love, 458 Sea-shore 30
 For baffled lips and disappointed arms 705 Prelude 8. 441

Disappointment. So ended, disappointment could be none,
 From disappointment, not to find some change 643 Prelude 2. 66
 In spite of strongest disappointment, pleased 688 Prelude 7. 96
 In terror. Disappointment and dismay 689 Prelude 7. 146
 718 Prelude 10. 27
 With aoger vexed, with disappointment sore,
 With sorrow, disappointment, vexing thoughts,
 From error, disappointment—nay, from guilt;
 Alarm and disappointment! The alarm 734 Prelude 12. 4

Disapprove. Such martial service disapprove.
Disapproves. In that excess which conscience disapproves.

Disapproving. Stillness and rest, with disapproving eye
 803 Excursion 4. 152

Disarm. And, as if wishful to disarm 808 Excursion 4. 484

Disarmed. Of all its sparkling rays disarmed,
 Disarmed of power to unsettle present good
 Disarmed his voice and fanned his yellow cheek 343 Eclipse 23

 712 Prelude 9. 157

Disaster. And, in fear of some disaster,
Disasters. "Disasters, do the best we can,
 Her van disasters could disperse,
 And strange disasters; but I pass them by,
 234 Power of Sound 128
 847 Excursion 6. 571

Disastrous. Once did the lightning's faint disastrous gleam
 With the disastrous issue of last night,
 Slain here in a disastrous hour!
 Disastrous issue!—he had said
 Beating on one of those disastrous isles—
 So that disastrous period did not want
 And their disastrous issues. What availed,
 From that disastrous rout, to foreign shores

Disavowed. To secret 'spouals meanly disavowed.
Disband. This multitude of men disband
Disbanded. Disbanded—in hostile ranks appeared;
Disbelieving. Now disbelieving; endlessly perplexed
Disburthened. From one disburthened so, so comforted,
Disc. An azure disc—shield of Tranquillity;
Discarded. False Shame discarded, spurious Fame
 despised,
Discern. Which aloft thou dost discern;
 A fair smooth pathway you discern,
 To watch and ponder,—to discern
 With stronger wing, more clearly to discern
 And now at distance can discern
 Who, with a natural instinct to discern
 Rights to compare and duties to discern!
 Thy dark Associate ever I discern
 Daughter and Sire through optic-glass discern
 He shall discern, how, through the various means
 Are capable to notice or discern
 A cottage from our view; though I discern
 Hard'to believe, yet could they well discern

Discerned. By the moon's sullen lamp she first discerned,
 "The end of man's existence I discerned,
 Shapes fairer or less doubtfully discerned
 And who, if those could be discerned, would yet
 And having thus discerned how dire a thing
Discerning. Discerning Monitor, my faithful Wilfred,
 O'er features looked at by discerning eyes,
 Discerning sword that Justice wields, do thou
 For the discerning intellect of Man,
 Discerning Moral! do thou serve the will Discernment. Both in perception and discernment, first
 And her discernment; not alone in rights,
Discerns. Discerns the favourable season,
 Of childhood—but that there the soul discerns
Discharge. Was summoned to discharge the forfeiture,
 Which ne'er may discharge the magnificent debt?
 Was left without a follower to discharge
Discharged. The sympathies erewhile in part discharged, Discharges. An Indian Chief discharges from his breast
Discharging. Impure conceits discharging from a heart
Disciples. True disciples, good as great,
 But, for disciples of the inner school,
Discipline. Vowed to severer discipline;
 Meek, nobly versed in simple discipline—
 Yields every thing to discipline of swords?
 Nor discipline nor valour can withstand
 And discipline was passion's dire excess.
 Of mind, that dread heart-freezing discipline,
 Or would have taught, by discipline of pain
 For as, by discipline of Time made wise,
 Whatever discipline thy Will ordain
 By discipline endeavour to grow meek
 While polity and discipline were weak,
 And sanctifying, by such discipline,
 By the impressive discipline of fear,
 A fervent love of rigorous discipline.—
 Whatever formal gait of discipline
 By frame of Academic discipline

Discipline—continued.

To bend at last to the same discipline,
 In wood or echoing cave, for discipline
 To its appointed close: the discipline
 By philosophic discipline prepared

 The discipline of virtue; or else

Disciplined. When gratitude, though disciplined to Discourse—continued.

Discourse was deemed Man's noblest attribute,
But feeling it no longer. Our discourse . . .
Whence, and from deeper causes, all discourse
Thou human understanding, their discourse
With him did I discourse about the end
Fashioned his life; and many a long discourse,
Still deeper welcome found his pure discourse:
A while on trivial things we held discourse,
Accompanied those strains of apt discourse,
A task it was, I own, to hold discourse,
So, in the imperfect sounds of this discourse,
Impulse and motive to that strong discourse,
"Yes," said the Sage, resuming the discourse
Kindle before us.—Your discourse this day,
While in this serious mood we held discourse,
A welcome interruption to discourse,
But, in the quicker turns of the discourse,
Could I discourse; but as their stay was brief,
In power of mind, and eloquent discourse.
If mild discourse, and manners that conferred
From which the gallant teacher would discourse,
Discourse both wise and pleasant, shrewd remarks
Old Michael's manners and discourse, and thus Discoursed. Discoursed of natural or moral truth
Discoursed with him . . .
Creations often), then when he discoursed . . .
Discoursing. This, in the lonely dell discoursing, you
Discoursing on remote imaginations, strong . . .
Discover. No screen, no fence could I discover:
Let the last faint sigh discover . . .
Ye would discover, then, a studious work . . .
Discovered. See Chance-discovered, Dim-discovered,
New-discovered.
Thou art discovered in a roofless tower,
May he discovered what in soul ye are.
A form discover'd at the well-known seat,
Most happy, if, from aught discovered there
The hidden book discovered to our view
Discovered or invented; or set forth,
Discovered in their own despite to sense . . .
Discoverer. Let the bold Discoverer thrice
The appalled Discoverer with a sigh
Discoverers. "Now, shall our great Discoverers," he exclaimed,
Discoveries. Is going from under me; these strange discoveries—
And proud discoveries of the intellect,
With such discoveries as his eye can make
His own discoveries; or to favorite points
Discovering. Discovering traces of the fugitives, Discoverers. Vests it discovers exquisite and rare,
Discovery. Their liquid world, for hold discovery,
A world, his rich discovery! But our Swain,
Discreditable. Ye too—whom no discreditable fear
From painful and discreditable shocks
Discreet. "No: Let the most discreet of all my train
Discreetly. Discreetly parted to preserve the peace, Discretion. Have seen her,—her discretion have Discursive. Whether discursive or intuitive;

Discuss. Point after point did she discuss;

Disdain. With independence, child of high Disdain.
Oh! give not me that eye of hard disdain
Into anger or disdain;
He mocked and treated with disdain . . .
To some whose minds without disdain . . .
But if such homage thou disdain . . .
Ere shaken by that mood of stern disdain . . .
Might scan the narrow province with disdain . . .
'Tis He whose yester-evening's high disdain . . .
To share the passion of a just disdain:
(Too quick and keen) loic'd to disdain . . .
Stodious that He might not disdain the seat
It ill befits us to disdain . . .
The Spirit of humanity, disdain . . .
Of ease, the narrow Bosphorus will disdain;
With hands stretched forth in mollified disdain,
And straightway cease to aspire, than God disdain
—There, did the iron Geoius not disdain
Endeared by Custom; and with high disdain
And heard their notions; nor did they disdain
From the unqualified disdain, that once
And, from the impulse of a just disdain,
Disdained. He, all superior but his God disdained,
These humble props disdained not! O green dales!
And nature God disdained not; Man—whose soul
Or, shall I say?—disdained, the game that lurks Disdainful. The Vicar answered,—"No disdainful pride
Disdainfully. At their false ways disdainfully,—and Disdaining. Can oft with justice claim. And not disdaining . . .

Of time and change disdaining, takes its course . . .
Disdainful. Those raptures duly—Erebus disdains:
Find solace which a busy world disdains . . .
That Fortitude, whose blood disdains to freeze
Of Beauty, that disdains to climb . . .
Disease. Disease and famine, agony and fear,
A pale-faced Woman, in disease far gone . . .
Like the stifling of disease . . .
That love which changed—for wane disease,
And love of havoc, (for with such disease . . .
Who from disease and suffering . . .
Disease consumed thy vitals; War upheaved . . .
Brought to this genial climate, when disease . . .
Could pierce through a temper that's soft to disease,
Lived I—then yielded to a slow disease . . .
In the comfortless vault of disease . . .
If, when the woodman languished with disease
Lives only by variety of disease . . .
This was the crisis of that strong disease . . .
Smittee with perilous fever. In disease . . .
Perpetual sabbath; come, disease and want;
Spread, from disease, whose subtle injury lurks
And doth commend their weakness and disease
For 'tis Heaven's will—that, after a disease
A slow disease insensibly consumed . . .
In spite of vice, and misery, and disease,
When Calais heard (while Famine and Disease
Diseases. For come Diseases on, and Penury's rage,
Disembodied. Descending, disembodied, and diffused
Disenchant. Was it to disenchant, and to undo,
Nor could I have been bribed to disenchant . . .
Disenchanter. When disenchanting from the mood
Disenumbered. Next, disenumbered of his harp,
And leaves the disenumbered spirit free . . .
Ere disnumbered of her mortal chains, . . .
Who sits, is disenumbered from the press
Disenumbering. Of disenumbering thus her fretful wings.
Disentangled. That, disentangled from the shady boughs
Disentangling. Of Prudence, disentangling good and ill
Disesteem. He, who by wilful disesteem of life
Disgorged. Disgorged are now the moistens of day;
Disgrace. On joys that might disgrace the captive's cell,
Clouds of disgrace and envious fortune past!
That mimicry should thus disgrace . . .
—Let Empires fall; but ne'er shall Ye disgrace
That brings to the inward creature no disgrace?
And your officious doings bring disgrace . . .
To bring disgrace upon their very names . . .
Disgrace, of which, custom and written law,
Some in disgrace, hung dangling from the walls.
So would I plead for York; but long disgrace
These gashes whence? This undeserved disgrace!
Disgraced. Disgraced by aught that seems content to sit
Rather than be disgraced, would chuse to die.
Disguise. The black disguise, the warning whistle shrill,
How say you? in disguise?— But what's your business
Tricked out in proud disguise of cast-off weeds
The mutual nod—the grave disguise . . .
And, to disguise, a Milkmaid with her pail
Speech, manners, morals, all without disguise.
Soft, as may seem, but, under that disguise,
So, through a simple rustic garb's disguise,
That inward motion to disguise, he said
Disguised. How'er disguised in its own majesty,
Though at a distance and he was disguised,
Or fear disguised in simulated scorn,
Though much disguised by long adversity!
There Venus sits disguised like a Nun,—
To selfishness, disguised in gentle names
Of luckless rock or prominent stone, disguised
Disgust. To heap disgust upon the worthier Cause:
He, in disgust, turned from the neighbouring sea
Hopes rashly, in disgust as rash recoils;
Haunted him with sensations of disgust . . .
I shrink not from the evil with disgust,
A City where, if indifference to disgust
Disgusted. Disgusted therefore, or appalled, by aims
Dish. A maple dish, my furniture should be;
Upon a lordly dish; frank hospitality . . .
And hearth was there, and maple dish . . .
That ever hermit dipped his maple dish
Disheartening. In them disheartening doubts and dread;
Against disheartening custom, that by Thee
Dishevelled. Dishevelled, gleaming eyes, and rueful cheek
Dishonour. See State-dishonour.
Worse is he far, far worse (if foul dishonour
I die without dishonour. Famished, starved, . . .

" Thus strives a grateful Country to display
 May this bright flower of Charity display . . .
 The "trumpety" that ascends in bare display—
 "I come to open out, for fresh display,
 As despot courts their blaze of gems display,
 I have endeavoured to display the means . . .
 Occasion given him to display his skill,
Displayed. On as we journey, in clear view displayed,
 The image of his glorious Sire displayed,
 Moved not; meanwhile the galaxy displayed
 I saw, in wondrous perspective displayed,
 Been felt, that influence is displayed.
 The sky an azure field displayed;
 Displayed her richest blossoms among files
 Triumphs in sun-brilliant gratitude displayed,
 Be with them openly displayed.
 The testimony there displayed
 In all her quarters temptingly displayed!
 In Nature's prodigality displayed
 Right gladly answering signals we displayed, . . .

Of red Morocco folio saw displayed,
 Enlivening Hope display'd her cheerful ray,
 Fair to the view is sacred Truth display'd,
 To see displayed among an eager few,
 Rough, bold, as Grecian comedy displayed
 Triumphantly displayed in records left
 Such grateful promises his truth displayed:
 Of private life licentiousness displayed
 And marble monuments were here displayed
 The mansion's self displayed—'a reverend pile
 That which the heavens displayed, the liquid deep Displays. The deepest cleft the mountain's front displays . . .
 Pleased while the sylvan world displays
 The ever-varying charm your round displays,
 The deepest dell the mountain's breast displays,
 To reverence the volume that displays . . .

Displeas'd. Displeas'd that I from lays of love
 Than when we soar!"—The Other, not displeas'd, Displeasure. Divine displeasure, broke the marriage-vow . . .

Disport. In love's disport employ;
Disporting. By glimpses caught—disporting at their ease . . .
 Disporting round your knees?
 Disporting. Nor unmindful was the Boy . . .

Dispose. Dispose to judgments temperate as we lay
 Ah! let not aught amiss within dispose . . .

Disposed. Disposed some cultured Flowerets (drawn from spots
 Can do for minds disposed to feel its power!
 Doth find herself insensibly disposed
 Aptly disposed, had lent its help to raise
 In avenues disposed; there, towers begirt
 Instinctively disposed him to retire
 By his own hand disposed with nicest care,
 Dejected, and habitually disposed . . .

Disposer. But Thou, supreme Disposer! may'st not

Disposes. Disposes her, when over-fondly set Disposing. See All-disposing.
Disposition. And constant disposition of his thoughts Dispositions. Such dispositions then were mine unearned Dispossessed. All, all were dispossessed, save him whose smile . . .

Dispraise. See Self-dispraise.
 That, fondly seeking in dispraise of man
Disproportion. No disproportion in her soul, no
 strife;
Disproportioned. Yet, oh! how disproportioned to the hopes
Disproves. This one Associate that disproves Disputation. Of disputation, shrunk not, though assailed
Dispute. There, too, ere wiles and politic dispute
 No sacrifice avert, no power dispute;
 And, sometimes—where the poor man held dispute
 The field of selfish difference and dispute,
Disputed. Who live in these disputed tracts, that own Disputes. Disputes would then relax, like stormy winds
 For our disputes, plain pictures. Say what man
Disquiet. Unmatchable on earth is their disquiet!
 The most disquiet have and least do thrive;
 Disquiet, danger, and obscurity . . .
 And, feeding on disquiet, thus disturb
Disquieted. Toss it from hand to hand, disquieted;
 And range about, disquieted in change,
 And all is now disquieted—
 And is again disquieted . . .

Disquietude. A habit which disquietude and grief
 And thou from all disquietude be free.
 Stranger, if such disquietude be thine,
 Affectionate without disquietude,
 'Twas going far to seek disquietude;
 No morbid passions, no disquietude,
Disregard. Disregard Thy Suppliants now!
 And an habitual disregard of self . . .

Disregard—continued.

From disregard of time's destructive power,
Disregarding. The barriers disregarding that surround
Disrepute. Now prose and verse sunk into disrepute
Disrespect. To poverty, and grief, and disrespect,
 In luxury of disrespect
Dissatisfaction. See Self-dissatisfaction.
Dissatisfied. Still more and more dissatisfied
 That doth not slackly go away, as if dissatisfied . . .
Dissect. And dreams that he is happy. We dissect
 We murder to dissect.
Dissemble. Dissemble; he that boy in form and face!
Dissension. Dissension, checking arms that would restrain
Dissevered. Wholly dissevered from our present theme;
 And, if dissevered thence, its course is short.
 Dissevered both from all the mysteries
 Dissevered, float upon the Lake,
 For my excuse. Dissevered from mankind,
Dissipate. Shall dissipate the seas and mountains hoary . . .
Dissipates. Moves through the vault of heaven, and dissipates the night;
Dissocialion. And blank dissociation from a world
Dissolute. Might sometimes covet dissolute chains; Dissolute. Of dissolute tongues, and jealousy, and hate,
 He in the dissolute city gave himself
 Of chance spectators, chiefly dissolute men
 With gait and dissolute likeness . . .
 The Nature of the dissolute; but thee,
 To a poor dissolute Son, her only child.
Dissolution. To fatal dissolution; and, I ween,
 Thy dissolution brings, that in my soul
 Of dissolution, melted into air . . .
 From low to high doth dissolution climb,
 And dissolution and decay, the warm
Dissolve. Dissolve before a twinkling atom!—Oswald,
 And vanish, though the heavens dissolve, her stay
 Dissolve that beauty, destined to endure,
 Dissolve—and leave to him who gazed a sigh.
 —But, as soft gales dissolve the dreary snow,
 She sheds her beam, and, lo! the shades dissolve;
 Shall e'er dissolve the crust wherein his soul . . .

Dissolved. And every mortal pang dissolved away . . .
 Dissolved the Barons' League, and sent abroad
 "But is that gloom dissolved? how passing clear
 Of some unguarded moment that dissolved
 The snows dissolved, and genial Spring returned
 The soul of Dion, instantly dissolved.
 Like vapour, like a towering cloud, dissolved.
 Upon frail ties dissolving or dissolved
 Dissolved, have left him an unshrouded head.
 When into air had partially dissolved
Dissolves. And long privation, now dissolves amain,
 The wizard instantaneously dissolves
 Melts, and dissolves, and is no longer seen.
 And, as the heavy cloud of sleep dissolves,
 To speak of him, and instant y dissolves."
Dissolving. See Snow-dissolving.
 Upon frail ties dissolving or dissolved
 Mist into air dissolving! Then a wish, Distained. Shed when the clouds had gathered and distained
Distance. Yet hears her song, "by distance made more sweet,"
 Though at a distance and he was disguised,
 Of time and distance, night and day;
 At a short distance from my cottage, stands
 That to a dreary distance go—
 Its own light to a distance thrown,
 O, nursed at happy distance from the cares
 Frozen by distance; so, majestic Pile,
 At happy distance from earth's groaning field,
 At seemingly distance—to advance like Thee;
 Poured forth, while summer suns at distance shine,
 And seeming, at a little distance, slow,
 Are those that are by distance made more sweet;
 And now at distance can discern

Divide. Flow from the dark-blue faint silvery threads divide

He flew to her from whom they would divide him—
 Along—and scatter and divide,
 Scarce heard; nor word from world could I divide;
 "One lesson, Shepherd, let us two divide,
 And that inspiring Hill, which "did divide
 Though the toil of the way with dear Friends we divide,
 Did from all other graves divide:
 'Tis meet that thou with me divide
 Their purpose—then did he divide,
 Ye mingle, or divide,
 Who love as we do. Speed thee well! divide
 No other can divide with thee this work:
 On the green turf, a dial—to divide
 As shall divide them wholly from the stir
 And neighbourhood serves rather to divide.
Divided. If more divided than a sportive pair
 Either to be divided from the place
 Even with myself divided such delight,
 Divided from me by one little month,
 Of such excitement and divided thought
 Appropriate, and divided from the world
Divides. A long blue bar its ægis orb divides,
 Stately, and burning in his pride, divides
 And bottomless, divides the midway tide.
 Divides with me this loved abode, was there,
 To draw the line of comfort that divides
 That now divides the pair, or rather say,
 And thus divides and thus relieves the time;
Dividing. And still dividing, and dividing still,
Dividual. In his dividual being, self-reviewed,
Dividually. Dividually.—Here must thou be, O
 Man!
Divine. And I divine the cause. Do not reproach
 me:
 Prayer that Grace divine may raise
 Divine, of swearing everlasting truth,
 There stood the urchin, as you will divine,
 There is madness about thee, and joy divine
 Because not of this noisy world, but silent and divine!
 What this imported I could ill divine:
 His death was mourned by sympathy divine.
 Of harmony, with instinct more divine;
 On tables set, as if for rites divine;—
 Shalt show us how divine a thing
 Met by the rainbow's form divine,
 Your origin divine.
 To testify of Love and Grace divine.
 Divine monition Nature yields,
 Of divine Love, where Wisdom, Beauty, Truth
 Divine of words quickening insensate things.
 And my Soul felt her destiny divine,
 And let my spirit in that power divine
 Thy nature is not therefore less divine:
 Her functions are they therefore less divine,
 But from its own divine vitality.
 Divine communion; both do live and move,
 The Church, when trusting in divine command
 Spirit divine through forms of human art:
 Less than divine command they spurn;
 Clap, infants, clap your hands! Divine must be
 (So faith too fondly deemed) a voice divine
 Dread King of Kings, vouchsafe a ray divine
 And competent to shed a spark divine
 Of Figures human and divine,
 Rest where thy course was stayed by Power divine!
 Albeit lifting human to divine,
 Divine affections; and with beast and bird
 With justice mark not Thou, O Light divine,
 And divine Art, that fast to memory clung—
 So fair, of such divine report
 From pastoral graves extracting thoughts divine;
 And her divine employment!
 At the sun's outbreak, as with light divine,
 Even to the fountain-head of peace divine,
 Crushed as if by wrath divine?
 With love divine and gentle light?
 With hope upon the Will divine.
 A more divine and loftier way!
 That the firm soul is clothed with fruit divine!
 He made by wilful breach of law divine.
 Hailed from aloft those Heirs of truth divine
 In their afflictions a divine retreat;
 For re-subjecting to divine command
 Armour divine, and conquer in your cause!
 Of simple truth with grace divine imbued;
 Divine! thou Lincoln, on thy sovereign hill!
 In filial duty, clothed with love divine,
 But who is innocent? By grace divine,
 But long as god-like wish, or hope divine,
 Of a young maiden, only not divine.
 Mechanic laws to agency divine;
 A faith more fixed, a rapture more divine
 Or need, of counsel breathed through lips divine.

Doing. See Nothing-doing, Well-doing.

Suffering not doing ill—fate far more mild.
 Do as Charles and I are doing!
 What Johnny and his Horse are doing!
 What they've been doing all this time,
 What on the earth is doing.
 What would he now? what is he doing?
 This old Man doing all he could
 What is the creature doing here?
 His fields seemed to know what their Master was doing;
 Not doing in their stead the needful work.
 Though doing wrong and suffering, and full oft
 And suffered, and was doing, suffering, still,
 The beauty of his person, doing wrong
 As we pronounce them, doing them much wrong,
Doings. Rough doings these! as God's my judge,
 You think, those doings must have bred
 Till of his doings is no trace,
 Thoughts, chances, sights, or doings, which we tell
 And your officious doings bring disgrace
 How little they, they and their doings, seem,
 Full oft his doings leave me to deplore,
Dole. All white with flour, the dole of village dames,

 Ships, towers, domes, theatres, and temples lie
 Yet, O ye spires of Oxford! domes and towers!
 Monastic Domes! following my downward way,
 And gorgeous ladies, under splendid domes,
 A sumptuous dream of flowery lawns, with domes
 With alabaster domes, and silver spires,
Domestic. While tender cares and mild domestic loves
 Of true domestic loyalty, did'er
 And one domestic for their common needs,
 Of those domestic tales that spake to me
 Yield him no domestic cave,
 Domestic queen, where grandeur is unknown;
 Domestic hands the home-bred wool had shorn,
 Perhaps are seated in domestic ring,
 Seek in domestic oratory small,
 Kennelled and chained. Ye tame domestic fowl,
 Our own domestic mountain. Thing and thought
 Domestic virtue vitally depends,
 Domestic Portrait! have to verse consigned
 A mild domestic pity kept its place,
 A zig-zag path from the domestic skiff . . . 607 Desc. Sk. Quarto 297

And with the blessings of domestic love. . . .
Of each domestic charity fulfilled,
Is by domestic service unimpair'd;
Of keen domestic anguish; and beguile
Of that foundation in domestic care
The old domestic morals of the laud,
With lip almost as pure.—Domestic bliss

Domination. The domination of his glorious themes,
By magic domination,
A ghostly Domination, unconfined
Yes, to thy domination, Roman See,
The domination of the sprightly Juice
Thy domination; as the whole vast Sea
For domination at some riper day;
That mutual domination which she loves

Domine. Misereere Domine!

Domineer. Amid the burning town the Grecians domineer.

Domineering. Yet ostentation, domineering, oft
A domineering instinct, serves at once
And domineering faculties of sense

Dominion. Attends on goodness with dominion deck'd,

And this is thy dominion. . . .
How dreadful the dominion of the impure!
Were under her dominion plac'd. . . .
Issues for that dominion overthrown:
For thought—dominion vast and absolute
A like dominion, and the midnight storm
Entered thy vast dominion? On the roof
Fell under the dominion of a taste
In absolute dominion. Gladly here,
Nowhere, dominion o'er the enlightened spirit
Claimed absolute dominion for the day.
Where are your triumphs? your dominion where?
And conquests over her dominion gained,
Of this dominion over nature gained,
A peaceable dominion, wide as earth,

Done. (Partial list.) See Ill-done.

Much done, and much designed, and more desired,—
And when the miserable work was done
Of service done with cold formality,
Their breakfast done, the pair, though loth, must part;
And he had done the deed in the dark wood—
Holla! No, no, the business must be done.—
As I have done, my eyes upon the ground,
A lucky woman!—go, you have done good service.
What must be done? We will conduct her hither;
The deed is done—if you will have it so—
I would preserve thee. How may this be done?
Touch not a finger.—What then must be done?
Away! away!—Nay, I have done with you:
It shall be done as Wisdom shall decide:
And something shall be done which Memory
I will stroll on; you follow when 'tis done.
You have done your duty. I had hopes, which now
'Tis done, and in the after-vacancy
What has befallen you? A stranger has done this,
As I have done. A fresh tide of Crusaders
'Tis Nature's law. What I have done in darkness
I have done him no harm,
If she had never lived I had not done it!—
'Tis done! The ruthless traitor! A rash deed!—
Is out of mind—or done,
As visions still more bright have done, and left no
trace behind,
Had done so many offices about him,
This done, he went on shipboard, and is now
When that which has been done no wishes can undo.
Think of evening's repose when our labour was done,
What must be done? what will betide?
Had done him female service, not alone
As all their Forefathers had done; and, when
And hope for higher raptures, when life's day is done,
They have done as worldlings do,
They hear—when every dance is done,
So said, so done; and masts, sails, yards,
Thus Nature spake—The work was done—
Which had been done to her,
"Some say that here a murder has been done,
Their indefatigable fight. 'Tis done—
And what was boldly promised, truly shall be done.
A work, one half of which was done
As many a wiser man hath done,
What may be done with Peter Bell!
"Oh, mercy! something must be done,
O, my Belov'd! I have done thee wrong,
Nor cheer him; for the illustrious Swede hath done
Never to rise again!—the work is done.
Suffered or done. When lawless violence
The Ark, her melancholy voyage done!

Done—continued.

Must, when my part is done, be ready;
Thy part is done—thy painful part;
—"Twas done: his Sons were with him—all;
For, with God's will, it shall be done!—
Had closed his door before the day was done,
Now that our morning meal is done,
And often, ere the chase was done,
"The will of God be done!"
Hence, if we wept, it was not done in shame;
Laughs at my pains, and seems to say, "Be done."

Which done, he had that they the Jews should bid,
And all this shall be done, without a nay,
Vain service! yet not vainly done
Whose glorious work is done,
To whom a foul deed he had done,
Became my prey; and when the deed was done
As I had done in daily intercourse
Fulfilling (could enchantment have done more?)
Of what in the Great City had been done
Were bent upon undoing what was done:
Of ancient Institutions said and done
Apart from benefits received or done
Had done to her humanity no wrong:
That which is done accords with what is known
And, when it is done, away he is gone;
Shall speak of what is done among the fields,
Done truly there, or felt, of solid good
For that end only; something must be done.
Till, at the last, thou hear the voice—"Well done,

Donnerdale. At all the merry pranks of Donnerdale!
Donor. Bending low before the Donor,
Let Bacchus, donor of soul-quick'ning cheer,
The liberal donor of capacities
Donor's. The Donor's farewell blessing, can he dread
Dons. He dons his coat of darkness: on the stage
Don't. "I only touch—not take—don't fear, Doom. I greet thee, Chaireuse, while I mourn thy doom,

By choice or doom a gipsy wanders here,
"And from your doom," he added, "now I wait,
Tut! let them gabble fill the day of doom,
But his own crime had brought on him this doom,
No more of that; in silence hear my doom:
Hide the knowledge of thy doom,
'He pieces, they'll say, 'it is his doom,
Since reason failed woe is her threatened doom,
'Tempt me not, I pray; my doom is
If such their harsh untimely doom,
One after one submitting to their doom,
Destined, whate'er their earthly doom,
Fitter hope, and nobler doom;
'This visage tells thee that my doom is past:
If to provoke such doom the Impious dare,
In truth the prison, unto which we doom
Of Faith and Hope—if thou, by nature's doom,
Her doom it is to press a weary head—
Measuring the periods of his lonely doom,
Deaf, drooping, that is now his doom:
For death will be his doom,
Had fixed, for ever fixed, their doom!
Such doom awaits us. Nay, forbid it Heaven!
The captive chieftain, by a tyrant's doom,
Sad is thy doom, self-solaced dove,
But face like that sweet Boy their mortal doom,
Preneging his own impending doom,
Whence half the breathing world received its doom;
Ooze more: but, if unchangeable her doom,
Untouched memento of her hapless doom!
A choice that wears the aspect of a doom;
To have no seat for thought were better doom,
Esponse thy doom at once, and cleave
Here hath a milder doom prevailed;
For Souls whose doom is fixed! The way is smooth
Of judgment such presumptuous doom repeat!
(By transit not unlike man's frequent doom)
A pitiable doom; for respite brief

The cloud is; but brings that a day of doom
When thousands, by severer doom,
And when, subjected to a common doom,
Fly where the culprit may, guilt meets a doom;
Omeo of man's grievous doom!
And, should a less unnatural doom confide
Since the primeval doom. Such is the grace
And trust in God—to whose eternal doom
Sad doom, at Sorrow's shrieve to kneel,
If sculptured emblems of our mortal doom
Ev'n now I sigh at hoary Chaireuse' doom
The scale of liberty. I read her doom,
If man's estate, by doom of Nature yoked,
How full their joy! Till, pitiable doom!
Sharp contradictions may arise, by doom
And grief spread wide; but Man escaped the doom
—And, as on earth it is the doom of truth
Such doom was hers; yet nothing could subdue
Till the stars sicken at the day of doom,
Of one who died within this vale, by doom

Doomed. See Death-doomed, Self-doomed.
 That thou, the slave of slaves, art doomed to pine
 For creatures doomed to breathe terrestrial air;
 By the good God, our common Father, doomed!—
 Doomed to a third and last captivity, . . .
 Was doomed to wear out her appointed time,
 Nor grieves—tho' doomed thro' silent night to bear
 Here is my body doomed to tread, this path, . . .
 Or stubborn spirit doomed to yell
 Doomed, with their impious Lord, the flying Hart
 Doomed as we are our native dust
 Doomed as we are our native dust
 By godlike insight. To this fate is doomed . . .
 And temples, doomed to milder change, unfold
 Too harshly hath been doomed to taste
 If she be doomed to inward care,
 Which, though seemingly doomed in its breast to sustain . . .

Are doomed to perish utterly:
 —But thou, my Sister, doomed to be
 Which way the tide is doomed to flow,
 When such good work is doomed to be undone,
 Though doomed to tread in solitary ways,
 More hurtful here heset him, doomed though free,
 Who, doomed to go in company with Pain,
 Are doomed to flounder on, like wounded whales
 The Roman Consul doomed his sons to die
 And, the main fear once doomed to banishment,
 If doomed to breathe against his lawful will
 Been doomed so long to settle upon earth . . .
 And doomed him to contend in faithless courts,
 And blast of trumpets. He who hath been doomed
 Albeit lifeless then, and doomed to sleep
 An eye of scorn:—"The lover," said he, "doomed
 Not doomed to ignorance, though forced to tread,
 Doomed to decay, and then expire in dust!
 Is aught so certain as that man is doomed
 Which hapless Ellen now was doomed to feel:
 Low things with lofty) I too shall be doomed
 Is doom'd a Pincushion to be,
 He of the multitude whose eyes are doomed

 The pendant grapes glittered above the door;—
 Nor raised my hand at any door to knock.
 With panniered asses driven from door to door;
 While to the door with eager speed they ran,
 I was compelled to seek my father's door,
 For I shall never see my father's door again.
 Thy Mother too!—scarce had I gained the door,
 Hovering round Herbert's door, a man whose figure
 Would stoop to skulk about a Cottage door—
 At Herbert's door. Ay; and if truth were known
 At Herbert's door—and when he stood beside
 Her lips for ever moving. At her door
 And begged our daily bread from door to door.
 The obstinate bolt of a small iron door
 He may knock at the door,—we'll not let him in;
 Beside a human door!
 A furlong from their door.
 "Twelve steps or more from my mother's door,
 The wide-spread boughs, for view of door, window,
 and stair that wound
 I lighted—opened with soft touch the chapel's iron
 door,
 The flowering shrubs that deck our humble door.
 A fountain at my fond heart's door,
 —Such change, and at the very door,
 Oh! I do not dread thy mother's door;
 Filled the funeral basin at Timothy's door;
 With a leisurely motion the door of his hut.
 Could, by the simple opening of a door,
 —Why hustle thus about your door,
 And while the Mother, at the door,
 And to the Doctor's door she hies;
 And now she's at the Doctor's door,
 Under the large old oak, that near his door
 Were sitting at the door, "Thou must not go:
 That grew beside their door; and the remains
 And feeling sinks as deep! See there the door
 Of sorrow in her heart while through her father's door,
 And casement closed and door made fast,
 No door the tenement requires,
 If he resist that tempting door,
 Of open door and shining light,
 Had almost reached the festive door,
 He draws him to the door—"Come in,
 The whip's loud notice from the door,
 Pass by her door—"tis seldom shut—
 And now, as he approached a vassal's door,
 Kind Nature keeps a heavenly door
 Even as he passed the door, these words

 Even thine, though few thy wants!—Roof, window,
 door,
 And found the door unbarred,
 Where gazed the peasant from his door,
 Or they were offered at the door,
 Undressed the pathway leading to the door;
 On road or path, or at the door,
 Its impulse took—that sorrow-stricken door,
 Pass, pass who will, yon chantry door;
 And at the mansion's silent door,
 They met, when they had reached the door,
 She arrogates o'er heaven's eternal door,
 Had closed his door before the day was done,
 That stands beside our door,
 Not twenty paces from the door,
 Shut close the door, press down the latch;
 Darkening the window, ill defends the door
 Pace between door and window muttering rhyme,
 With door left open makes a gloomy spot,
 A Redbreast, one that to his cottage door . . .
 And any man, who passed her door . . .
 Then at her door the zany Dame
 The toll-gate, when in summer at her door
 Ere he had passed the door, will turn away,
 Worn out and worthless. While from door to door,
 Who sit at his own door,—and, like the pear
 Of this old Mendicant, and, from her door
 Familiar with him, made an inn of his door:
 Is a cart-load of turf at an old woman's door?
 Found by the verdant door of mountain farms.
 Safe from your door ye hear at breezy morn,
 Each with his household boat beside the door,
 There, by the door a hoary-headed sire
 All night the door at every moment open;
 Ev'n to the summer door his icy tide,
 For thy poor babes that, hurrying from the door,
 And to the door a neater pathway winds,
 Nor rest till they had reached the very door . . .
 But 'twas a splendid place, the door beset
 Ran, ostrich-like, to reach our chapel door,
 Our cottage door, and evening soon brought on
 Like an intruder knocking at the door . . .
 We reached a cottage. At the door I knocked,
 The cottage door was speedily unbarred,
 And lingered near the door a little space,
 Of Winter that had warbled at my door,
 Stationed above the door, like guardian saints;
 Seated, with open door, often and long
 Lodged only at the sanctuary's door,
 Rise, from the top of Snowdon. To the door . . .
 Approach this door but she who dwelt within
 This lonely Cottage. At the door he stood,
 Its tender verdure. At the door arrived,
 Was changed. As she unlocked the door, she said,
 Stood undisturbed behind the door. And when,
 And, to my feeling, ere we reached the door,
 At my own door. The shapes before our eyes
 Of fury; or, while snow is at the door,
 Its wasted splendour to repair, the door
 His door in darkness, nor till dusk returns.
 Care not for me, he lingers round my door,
 To the parental door; and with his sighs
 I well remember, while I passed her door
 A charitable door. So days and years
 Of his bright hearth, and from his open door,
 A fresh band meets them, at the crowded door—
 Breathed over them; but suddenly the door
 The dewy fields; but ere the Vicar's door . . .
 Right before the Farmer's door
 From my own door I shall be free to claim
Door-place. He looks, through the open door-place, toward the lake

Doors. See Cottage-doors, Out-of-doors.
 Well! they might turn a beggar from their doors,
 For love of God I must not pass their doors;
 Shall sun himself before his native doors;
 No ease, within doors or without;
 And from their occupations out of doors
 And all the neighbours, as he passed their doors,
 Comes from within doors or without!
 Who stirs little out of doors,
 The bird that comes about our doors
 And all is dismal out of doors;
 All things that love the sun are out of doors;
 As of a dweller out of doors;
 Or, He, whose bonds dropped off, whose prison doors
 Daily to think on old familiar doors,
 To fishers mending nets beside their doors;
 And lonesome watch that out of doors he keeps;
 When lowly doors were shut,
 For when he saw her doors fast bolted all,
 Thy cold doors; but I dare not for this rout;
 —Before those hermit doors, that never know
 No chair remained before the doors; the bench
 Before the doors or windows of their cells
 Sitting within doors between light and dark,
 And all my young affections out of doors.

 But when thy Father must lie down and die,
 You will look down into a dell, and there
 I will not play the sluggard. Nay, sit down.
 What is become of you.—You'll sit down and sigh it; . . . 49
 We sate us down. The sky grew dark and darker:
 And lie down by his side—what say you to it?
 Sigh at the deed? Hew down a withered tree,
 Make quiet as he is. Why came you down?
 Oswald, what say you to it? Hew him down,

Down-looking. And, from that arch, down-looking on the Vale . . . 350
Downright. In downright fury and in wrath—
Downs. The downs were visible—and now revealed
 And, here and there, between the pastoral downs,
 Spreading his bosom under Kentish downs,
 There, as I ranged at will the pastoral downs . . . 25
 Through a pale stream; but all the northern downs,
 —Wild were the walks upon those lonely Downs,
Downward. Downward the ponderous timber-wain resounds;
 And downward thence a knot of grass he throws,
 When downward to his winter hut he goes,
 So constant with thy downward eye of love,
 There he wheels in downward mazes;
 And downward Image gaily vying
 And downward thrust his staff, intent
 But we will downward with the Tweed,
 Or on!—a tempting downward way,
 And downward by the skirt of Greenside fell,
 Or the Indian tree whose branches, downward bent,
 A downward course, perverse and strange?
 Monastic Domes! following my downward way,
 The downward pathway taking,
 That, as we downward tend,
 Our upward and our downward way;
 Of wrongful acts. Downward it is and broad,
 Then paced the beaten downward way that led
 Her eyelids drooped, her eyes downward were cast;
 I, more impatient in my downward course,
 Imaged in downward show; the flower, the herbs,
Downwards. Then downwards from the steep hill's edge . . . 83
 Upwards and downwards, progress intricate
 From ancient Rome, downwards through that bright dream . . . 218
 Was downwards, with the current of that stream,
 Was soon dislodged. Downwards we hurried fast,
Downy. That downy prow, and softly cleaves
 Her quiet streams, and hills of downy green,
 Atween his downy wings, and hills of downy green,
Doze. His glimmering eyes that peep and doze!
 The Broom began to doze,
 But if grief, self-consumed, in oblivion would doze,
Dozed. The cricket chirped, the house-dog dozed,
Dozen. He had a dozen wedded wives . . . 239
Drag. Who drag, beneath our native skies, . . . 109
 He'd drag as well what he is dragging;
 To drag it to the ground;
 To drag it to the ground;
 And drag their length of deluge train behind.
Dragged. Dragged from his bed, was cast into a dungeon, . . . 71
 Alas! ye might have dragged me on . . . 114
 And dragged to earth both branch and bough, with crash . . . 185
 Enormous, dragged, while side by side they sate,
 Who dragged Earl Pembroke from Banbury church
 Hath dragg'd her babes along in this weary way;
 Dragged by a chain of harsh necessity,
 And dragged them to the earth. Ere this an hour
 Tells from what pool the noblest had been dragged;
Drapping. He'd drag as well what he is dragging;
 Dragging all precepts, judgments, maxims, creeds,
Dragon. Where he lay, watchful as a dragon,
 I marked the breathings of her dragon crest:
 On my helm the dragon crest, . . . 323
 The Dragon quelled; and vallant Margaret
 Worse than the Dragon that bowed low his crest, Dragon's. "The dragon's wing, the magic ring,

Dragon's—continued.

Even as a dragon's eye that feels the stress
Drained. Among the mountains, fens which might be drained,
What slopes are plucked, or what mosses drained:
Dramas. When Art was young; dramas of living men,
Dramatic. That some dramatic tale, endowed with shapes
Drank. No Gothic conqueror ever drank! revealed
This water was perhaps the first he drank
On pictures to gaze where they drank in their hues;
Most fair, most welcome, when they drank the dew
Tells that their turf drank purple from the veins
It seemed as if he drank it up—
Libations, to thy memory drank, till pride
Ate, drank, and with the fruit and glasses played,
Nor any voice of joy; his spirit drank.
Drapery. Though of gorgeous drapery proud,
Of sculptured oak stood here, with drapery lined;
Draught. A draught of water? Nay, to see you thus
A minute past, he went to fetch a draught
Cries Benjamin, "a draught of length!
A deep, determined, desperate draught!
—And though to every draught of vital breath,
For deep as hell itself, the avenging draught
And, with that draught, the life-blood: misery,
shame,
He rais'd the bowl, and took a long deep draught;
Draughts. I bring thee draughts of milk, warm milk
it is and new.
Large draughts of love unhappy Dido drew;
Draw. Much need have ye that time more closely draw
Should he, by tales which would draw tears from iron,
Were that man, who could draw the line that parts
"To draw, out of the object of his eyes,"
Draw from my heart the pain away.
And music from that pipe could draw
Could draw, when we had parted, vain delight,
O the charm that manners draw,
Can draw, and sing his griefs to rest.
More cautious as they draw more near;
Flew high above Atlantic waves, to draw
"Look, there she is, my Child! draw near;
Shall draw, the limits of the power define,
"My Oarsmen," quoth the mighty King, "draw
near,
Slain by Compatricot protestants that draw
Calm as an undercurrent, strong to draw
Far-distant images draw nigh,
Can draw warmth from the cheek of my Love;
A Lawyer art thou?—draw not nigh!
Still, as we nearer draw to life's dark goal,
And, what ye cannot reach by statute, draw
Under the steel his hand had dared to draw.
Which from their own blind hearts they draw;
Them therefore with wild horses did he draw,
Nor ever while I live Love's yoke to draw
Like a magnet, the heart of old Adam can draw;
To spots remote, and draw his diagrams
To single forms and objects, whence they draw,
The ill-fated pair) in that plain tale will draw
Eurapt; but brightest things are wont to draw
'Mong other consolations, we may draw
Even of the dead; contented thence to draw
To draw the line of comfort that divides
On serious minds: then, as the Hindoos draw
Had power to draw him from the world, resolved
Would draw out of his heart the mysteries
Drawing. While they are drawing toward the sacred floor
The Babe was drawing in its quiet food.
And, drawing to his side, to him did say,
With weary pace is drawing nigh;
Drawing an ebon car, their hue
While drawing toward the car Sir Gawaine, mailed
And, drawing nigh, with his living eye,
To both I listened, drawing from them both
Who, drawing near their final home, and much
In order, drawing toward their wished-for home.
Drawn. See Deep-Drawn, First-drawn, Long-drawn.
When round my wrist I felt a cord drawn tight,
Drawn by what peculiar spell,
But all things else about her drawn
Drawn in defiance of the Gods, hath laid Disposed some cultured Flowerets (drawn from spots
Drawn almost into frightful neighbourhood,
The solemnising veil was drawn
That might have drawn down Clio from the skies
Drawn to his side by look or act of love
Of things not seen, drawn forth from their recess,
Drawn from the wisdom that begins with fear,
Truths whose thick veil Science has drawn aside?
For beverage drawn as from a mountain-well.
Their Arts, which still had drawn a softening grace
Drawn toward the centre whence those sighs creep forth

Drawn—continued.

That, drawn from this one hour of rest,
Drawn forth by pressure of his gilded chains,
Drawn from the Sacrifice fulfilled,
Drawn from love's purest earthly fount for him
Whence profit may be drawn in times to come.
I mean, O distant Friend! a story drawn
Of vanished nations, or more clearly drawn
My thoughts by slow gradations had been drawn
From their beginnings, inasmuch as drawn
And lastly, from its progress have we drawn
When she upheld the cool refreshment drawn
Draw towards her native firmament of heaven,
—Our cogitations this way have been drawn,
Drawn from her cottage, on that airy height,
Drawn from his vitals? Say what meant the woes
Drawn from the chords of the ancient British harp
Drawn by the sunshine—at that hopeful season
Suffers like loss when drawn out of the soul,
Dreads. That lightly draws its breath,
He draws him to the door—"Come in,
Nearer she draws; a breeze uplifts her veil;
Points she to aught?—the bliss draws near,
And Peter draws him to dry land;
What strong allurements draws, what spirit guides,
The Romanist exults; fresh hope he draws
Less humble, draws her lessons, aims, and rules.
Of all her peaks and ridges. What he draws
And, while the mortal mist is gathering, draws
Enraptured Art draws from those sacred springs
Draws lightning down upon the head
And as on glorious ground he draws his breath,
The learned song from Tyrian hearers draws
Or draws for minds that are left free to trust
Which, in his tuneful course, the wind draws forth
From which she draws her meagre sustenance.
It draws its nourishment imperceptibly—
I freely gather; and my leisure draws
A cabinet stored with gems and pictures—draws Dread. In the roofed bridge; the bridge, in that dread hour,
And oft, when that dread vision hath past by,
"Here thou need'st not dread the raven in the sky;
Oh! do not dread thy mother's door;
I dread the rustling of the grass;
The bane of all that dread the devil!
"Lady! dread the wish, nor venture
And do not dread the waves below.
"Dread not their taunts, my little Life;
His whip they do not dread—his voice
Dread pair that, spite of wind and weather,
In them disheartening doubts and dread;
With dread of what will happen next;
"Whate'er the weak may dread, the wicked dare,
Dread Minister of wrath!
For from the summit of BLACK COMB (dread name
Nor dread the depth of meditative eye;
Of dread eternity.
With dread precision, ye made clear
From dread of emptiness or dearth.
Intricate labyrinth, more dread for thought
Suspicion ripened into dread;
And straight in sorrow, not in dread,
Dread Spirits! to confound the meek
Dread Beings! and your empire show
Had past a sudden shock of dread,
Deep thought, or dread remembrance, had I none.
Ward of the Law!—dread Shadow of a King!
From the dread chasm, woods climbing above
woods,
Lay couched; on him or his dread bow uddent
Yet—though dread Powers, that work in mystery, spin
And Love her towers of dread foundation laid
At this dread moment—even so—
And babble of her pastime!—On, dread Power!
Ah no! though Nature's dread protection fails,
Dread trials! yet encountered and sustained.
For he it was—dread Winter! who beset,
Dread King of Kings, vouchsafe a ray divine
Dread mark of approbation, justly gained!
Yet a dread local recompense we found;
Of God himself from dread pre-eminence—

blast,
For Tell's dread archery renowned,
Smiting with fury; and a deeper dread
From the dread summit of the Queen

Dread arbitress of mutable respect,

Dread—continued.

And with dread signs the nascent Stream invest ?
 They come—and onward travel without dread,
 The Donor's farewell blessing, can he dread . . .
 Of dread Jehovah ; then should wood and waste Through gloomiest shade ; put on (nor dread its weight)
 A crown for Hope !—I dread the boasted lights
 When each pale hour to dread hosannas bowed
 Dread Power ! whom peace and calmness serve
 Is crossed by knowledge, or by dread, of change,
 Dread cliff of Baruth ! that wild wish may sleep,
 That Tomb, dread centre of all sanctities
 No ; their dread service nerves the heart it warms,
 Why keep we else the instincts whose dread law
 From the dread bosom of the unknown past,
 He will not dread with Thee a toilsome day—
 They fail, thy saving arms, dread Power ! around them cast.
 His arms, as swimmers use, and plunge—dread
 thought,
 Presignified by that dread strife
 They know the dread requital's source profound ;
 He, doubt not, with involuntary dread,
 Nothing has he now to dread . . .
 With earnest pains unchecked by dread
 With face all pale with dread and busy thought,
 And dread of shame that will not do amiss ;
 And he for dread did fly away full fast ;
 Dread Lord ! so fearful when provoked, thine ire
 As one that standeth betwixt hope and dread,
 And said, I am in constant dread I trow,
 O dread reverse ! if aught be so, which proves
 By whose upathway'd margin still and dread
 When the dread peal of swelling torrents fills
 His last dread pleasure ! watches to the plain—
 Such apt occasion that I dread a snare,
 How looked Achilles—their dread paramount—
 Of him thou lovest ; need I dread from thee
 Of awe or tremulous dread, that had given way
 To melt away ; and further, the dread awe
 Dread nothing ? From this height I shall not stoop
 Their dread vibration to this hour prolonged ?
 May sort with highest objects, then—dread Power !
 Whereon a full-grown man might rest, nor dread
 Dread of the persecuting sword, remorse,
 Of these wild hills. For, lo ! the dread Bastille,
 —In Britain, ruled a panic dread of change ;
 Of its perfections ; with habitual dread
 What more that may not perish ?—Thou, dread source
 Through sinful choice ; or dread necessity
 And the dread soul within it—should exist
 To see disclosed, by such dread proof, how ill
 The internal pages, are ready ; the dread strife
 Dread life of conflict ! which I oft compared
 Or dread was all that had been thought of,—joy
 For (blinded by an over-anxious dread
 That the dread storm is weathered by them both.
 To dread his perseverance in the chase.
 Hence a dream arm of floating power, a voice
 At the pretty Maiden's dread . . .
Dreaded. The word, by others dreaded, he can hear
 And breathless calms no longer dreaded,
 Soon to become more dreaded enemies . . .
 To be most dreaded ? Lawgivers, beware,
 Such offering BEAUMONT dreaded and forbade,
 Sweet honey out of spurned or dreaded weeds,
 So dreaded, so abhorred. The day deserves
 Of their most dreaded foe, the strong South-west
 By others dreaded as the luckless thrall
Dreadful. He bore within a breast where dreadful quiet reigned.
 Found dreadful provocation : for at night,
 And Susan has a dreadful night,
 I fear you're in a dreadful way,
 A fierce and dreadful hunter he ;
 And many dreadful fears beset her,
 Large space (mid dreadful clouds) of purest sky,
 All power was given her in the dreadful trance ;
 Of dreadful sacrifice ; by Russian blood
 How dreadful the dominion of the impure !
 The annunciation of the dreadful truth
 And dreadful respite. Thus was Alban tried,
 For all things are less dreadful than they seem.
 Breaks off the dreadful kiss with angry shriek.
 Implores the dreadful untried sleep of death.
 Dim dreadful faces thro' the gloom appear,
 Hostility—how dreadful when it comes,
 And nurse 'the dreadful appetite of death ?'
Dreading. Dreading, tho' wishing, to be near it
 This will I here avow, not dreading thy despite.
 That Rome provides, less dreading from her frown
 Sickened by injuries, dreading worse designed,
 Deploring changes past, or dreading change
Dreadless. Dreadless, as in a kind of fresher breeze
Dreads. He dreads the presence of a virtuous man
 That dreads not age, nor suffers from the worm,
 Flying from something that he dreads than one
 Mourn, and lameat for him whose spirit dreads

Dreads—continued.

So loses this lonely Plant, nor dreads . . .
 She dreads the treacherous house, the double
 tongue ;
Dream. To break my dream the vessel reached its bound ;
 I've had the saddest dream that ever troubled
 But here he is, it must have been a dream.
 Do never dream of. I have been what he—
 Worthy the hearing. Fool was I to dream
 To purposes of reason—not a dream
 And in that dream had left my native land,
 Almost as vivid as a dream, produced a dream at night ?
 Me had the dream equipped with wings, so I took him in my arms,
 Sleep fled, and with it fled the dream—recorded in
 this book,
 Nor leave untold our happy fight in that adventurous dream.
 Alas the dream, to thee, poor Boy ! to thee from whom it flowed,
 Gone like a morning dream, or like a pile . . .
 'Tis past, that melancholy dream !
 Ah ! little doth the young-one dream,
 A dream of that low-warbled hymn . . .
 Induced a soft and slumberous dream,
 A pregnant dream, within whose shadowy bounds
 New heavens succeeded, by the dream brought forth :
 Where by that dream he had been cheered
 Here are twenty souls happy as souls in a dream :
 Through dream and vision did she sink,
 Like one whom I had met with in a dream ;
 Hunt half a day for a forgotten dream.
 As in a dream her own renewing.
 The fetters of a dream opposed to love.—
 'Tis gone—with old belief and dream . . .
 An echo, or a dream . . .
 In sleep, and intermingling with his dream,
 Was for belief no dream !—thy skill, Artio !
 Powers that survive but in the faintest dream
 Of a wild dream, or worse illusion ;
 Such place to me is sometimes like a dream . . .
 I heard (alas ! 'twas only in a dream) . . .
 It is unstable as a dream of night ;
 The dream, to time and nature's blended powers
 Warred in a dream, the Wanderer long had sought
 Like something fashioned in a dream ;
 No soul to dream of. What art Thou, from care
 Yet he had many a restless dream ;
 Devised out of a sick man's dream !
 So faithfully, a waking dream ?
 To rouse the wicked from their giddy dream—
 Though robbed of many a cherished dream,
 Still in the vivid freshness of a dream,
 From ancient Rome downwards through that bright dream
 Thoughts that would stray from Heaven ? The dream must cease . . .
 And, at her call, a waking dream . . .
 Than toil in needless sleep from dream to dream :
 Soft and silent as a dream, . . .
 A phantasm like a dream of night !
 From their known course, or vanish like a dream ;
 (So might they dream) till victory was achieved,
 Thou, too, dost visit oft my midnight dream ;
 Of unsubstantial imagery, the dream, . . .
 Or in a dream recalled, whose smoothest range
 And dream your time away ?
 And dream my time away . . .
 Like those good Angels whom a dream of night
 Woke from the dream, the dreamer to upbraid,
 By Flatterers carried, mount into a dream . . .
 Melting away within him like a dream . . .
 Making of social order a mere dream . . .
 Who never caught a noon-tide dream . . .
 Forgotten like a dream !
 And his hearing is touched with the sounds of a dream.
 For the Prodigal Son, Joseph's Dream and his sheaves . . .
 The consecration, and the Poet's dream ;
 Housed in a dream, at distance from the Kind !
 Time's vanities, light fragments of earth's dream—
 The glory and the freshness of a dream.
 Where is it now, the glory and the dream ?
 Some fragment from his dream of human life,
 "Rocking as in a dream the tedious year ;"
 Features which else had vanished like a dream,
 Into my heart, and held me like a dream !
 For I could dream away my purposes, . . .
 Appeared like something in myself, a dream,
 I was the Dreamer, they the Dream ; I roamed
 (If now I yield not to a flattering dream)
 Sleep seized me, and I passed into a dream.
 (To give it in the language of the dream)
 Unless it leap upon him in a dream,
 And brooks were like a dream of novelty
 A sumptuous dream of flowery lawns, with domes
 Of Fairy, or some dream of actions wrought
 Changed, and the utbroken dream entangled me . . .

And, truly, at all times, the storm, that drives
 Drive as she drives: how fast they wheel away,
 And on he drives with cheeks that burn
 Drives from thy Cures, a voluntary prey
 Drives, eagle-like, his sons as he was driven,
 Sagacious, into sheltering coves he drives
 And if the hustering wind that drives the clouds
Driving. Amid tempestuous vapours driving by,
 Till storm and driving ice blockade him there,
 In which, from burning heat, or tempest driving
 far and wide,
 Off could we see him driving full in view
 Wedge driving after wedge
 Head-foremost, through the driving rain,
 Is Peter driving through the grass—
 Driving some vessel toward a dangerous beach—
 "Mid stormy vapours ever driving by,
 And from the driving current should we turn
 My best companions now the driving winds,
 Shadeless and shelterless, by driving showers
 Rocking the trees, or driving cloud on cloud Drizzling. Black drizzling crags, that heaten by the din,
 And antique castles seen thro' drizzling show'rs.
 Black drizzling crags that spake by the way-side
Dromedary. Upon a dromedary, mounted high,
 Or dromedary, with an antic pair
Droning. Drops at his feet, and stills his droning horn.
Drop. The officious touch that makes me drop again,
 And droop, while no Italian arts are thine,
 Which blow at daybreak, droop ere even-song;
 So drooped Adonis, hatched in sanguine dew
 Nor will return—but droop not, favoured Youth;
 How cattle pine, and droop the shivering fowl,
 Which heavenward they direct.—Then droop not thou,
 Languish and droop together. Nor unfehl
 Instead of gathering strength, must droop and pine;
 Else more and more the general mind will droop,
 My spirit droop for drooping's sake,
 Thou wilt be eased, and less wilt droop and pine.
 Whose flaccid sails in forms fantastic droop,
 That I recoil and droop, and seek repose
 Been parted by the hurrying world, and droop,
 How can you droop, if willing to be upraised?
 However destitute, be left to droop
 This day, who drooped, or seemed to droop, so long;
 What need of more? that we shall neither droop, Drooped. Stolen from his cheek; he drooped, and pined, and pined—
 Drooped and pined till life was spent,
 Drooped with its withered leaves, ungracious sign
 She drooped and pined like one forlorn;
 And yet he neither drooped nor pined,
 He drooped, 'mid else unclouded victories,
 The Flower has drooped, the Isle's delight;
 Drooped not; but there into herself returning,
 Their trivial pleasures; and when these had drooped
 This the son's last and lowest ebb; I drooped,
 And a sore temper: day by day he drooped,
 Her eyelids drooped, her eyes downward were cast;
 —And, if there he whose tender frames have drooped
 And the flower drooped; as every eye could see,
 This day, who drooped, or seemed to droop, so long;
Drooping. From her whom drooping captives love;
 And Betty's drooping at the heart,
 Whose presence cheers the drooping frame
 Drooping is he, his step is dull,
 Deaf, drooping, that is now his doom:
 The drooping mind of absence, by hows sworn
 On drooping eyelid and the closing flower;
 Come forth, ye drooping old men, look abroad,
 The drooping Emma to his breast,
 But for the shadow by the drooping chin
 The Master died, his drooping servant's grief
 133
 Age?—a drooping, tottering willow
 Thro' drooping sick Man, bless the Guide
 A drooping daisy changed into a cup
 When he, a friendless and a drooping boy,
 Drooping or blithe of heart, as might befall;
 I found her sad and drooping: she had learned
 For one, who, though of drooping mien, had yet
Drooping's. My spirit droop for drooping's sake, Droops. Though the red Flower, not prostrate, only droops,
 And head that droops because the soul is meek,
 Of awe-struck wisdom droops: or let my path
 Droops, and o'er canopies his regal brow,
 (Especially perceived where nature droops
 And not a flower, that droops to the green shade,
Drop. See Blood-drop, Dew-drop, Rain-drop.
 And drop, as he once dropped, in miserable trance.
 But see! where'er the hailstones drop
 But drop the rest:—this aggravation,
 Thy nest which thou canst drop into at will,
 And drop thy pointing finger bright

Drop—continued.

A stain—as of a drop of blood
 And is no more; drop like the tower sublime
 A blossom from thy crown to drop,
 To drop his pencil! Flowers of every clime
 But leave it thence to drop for lack of use:
 "Who next will drop and disappear?"
 Each little drop of wisdom as it falls
Dropped. See Dropt, New-dropped.
 Her hand in his, and raised it, but both dropped,
 And drop, as he once dropped, in miserable trance.
 I could have dropped asleep upon his breast.
 His staff had drooped, and close upon the brink
 At once, the bright moon dropped.
 Like blood-drops from my heart they dropped.
 If ever an obtrusive word were dropped
 Were only blossoms dropped from twigs
 Dropped gently down upon his knees;
 From Peter's hand the sapling dropped!
 Dropped to the earth, astonished at the sound!
 I dropped my pen; and listened to the Wind—
 I sword dropped not, javelin kept its deadly aim—
 Dropped from him; but his other hand
 Open, whose bonds dropped off, whose prison doors
 Dropped from an Angel's wing, with moistened eye
 Dropped from the lenient cloud of years.
 And on his face he dropped upon the ground,
 His hand —it dropped like lead.
 Dropp'd loud at once, Oppression shriek'd, and flew,
 To the bare earth dropped with a startling sound.
 And loved the hook, when she had dropped asleep
 From hill to vale we dropped, from vale to hill
 The times, too sage, perhaps too proud, have dropped
 Hath dropped all functions by the gods bestowed,
 Down whose steep sides we dropped into the vale,
 Which the neglected veteran had dropped,
 Too much of frailty hath already dropped;
 We dropped, at pleasure, into sylvan combs;
 And freak put on, and arch word dropped—to swell
 Few likings had he dropped, few pleasures lost;
 Dropped the light oar his eager hand had seized.
 I might have dropp'd, and died alone
Drooping. His hat gives him vigour, with boons drooping in,
 Drooping from every mind, the Solitary
Drops. See Dew-drop's.
Drops. See Bead-drops, Blood-drops, Dew-drops,
 Rain-drops, Snow-drops, Water-drops.
 Gives one bright glance, and drops behind the hill.
 The harrows glistered bright with drops of rain,
 Drops deadened from a roof so thick with leaves.
 That drops down dead out of a sky it vexed.
 With a few drops of blood cut short the business;
 But drops not here to earth for rest
 Spangled with drops of that celestial shower.
 Fell with the weight of drops of lead—
 With drops of that poor infant's blood;
 "Blood drops—leaves rustle—yet," quoth he,
 Rejoicing, from her loftiest height she drops
 More prompt, more glad, to fall than drops of dew
 And Hope was maddened by the drops that fell
 The drops that tip the melting icicles.
 Yon snow-white torrent-fall, plumb down it drops
 The dew whose moisture fell in gentle drops
 When the broad oak drops, a leafless skeleton,
 Drops, and the God himself is seen no more.
 The noblest drops to admiration known,
 His minutes, by reiterated drops,
 Drops on the mouldering turret's head,
 Drops at his feet, and stills his droning horn.
 Or drops his anchor down with plunge profound:
 The shuddering ivy dripped large drops—yet still
 Drops daily from the tongue of every child,
 Wretched ambition drops astonished, fell
 Before the sailor's eye; or diamond drops
 From Age, that often unlamented drops,
 Are hung with thousand thousand diamond drops
Dropt. Down a thick wood, they dropt into the vale;
 By sudden pangs; what bitter tears have on this pavement dropt!
 Snatches of music taken up and dropt
 A staff which must have dropt from his slack hand
Dross. And purge from Vice's dross my tender charge.
 The Pharasac [?] sneer that treats as dross

Drought. 'Tis never drought with us—St. Cuthbert and his Pilgrims,
 His drought consumes, his mildew taints with death;
 Through a parched meadow-ground, in time of drought.
 To swell thee into voice; nor longest drought
DroUGHTy. For it had long been droughty weather;
 And damps, through all the droughty summer day
Drove. On as we drove, the equinoctial deep
 A dire suspicion drove us from our shed;
 His passion drove him—then a Voyager
 Her whom the Monster, Clifford, drove to madness.
 When the tempestuous wind first drove us hither,
 Drove by the place of my retreat: three nights

Drove—continued.

The post-boy drove with fierce career, 82 Alice Fell 1
 The chaise drove on; our journey's end
 Come to him thus, and drove the weary Wight along, 82 Alice Fell 49
 And drove Astraea from the earth, 108 Indolence 36
 Nay—though the hopes that drew, the fears that drove, 342 Ital. Itin. 78
 Drove from itself, we trust, all frightful gloom.
 Where now the ships that drove before the blast,
 And thus a day or two drove wearily 362 List—'twas* 36
 Drove far away the savage thoughts that roll
 And drove us onward like two ships at sea,
 Onward we drove beneath the Castle; caught,
 And fears for our own safety drove us home, 391 Brownie 14
 Through a long course of later ages, drove,
 Young Harry was a lusty drover, 454 Sea-side 11
 Lest she should drown herself therein. 564 Troilus 110
 To drown herself therein. 618 School Ex. 33
 Drown the music of a song 622 Recluse 1. 1. 160
 Drown not at once mandate and prophecy? 791 Excursion 2. 800
 Drowned. Its way with uproar, till the ruin, drowned
 And when that shape, with eyes in sleep half drowned, 536 Goody Blake 17
 For threatening clouds the moon had drowned;
 That Johnny may perhaps be drowned;
 Some say she drowned it in the pond,
 In pity to this poor drowned man. 129 Idiot Boy 296
 In which he had been drowned. 129 Idiot Boy 311
 Until all voices in one voice are drowned;
 Her Son in Wharf's abysses drowned,
 Sea—Ship—drowned—Shipwreck—so it came,
 Or prayer-bell by the dull cicada drown'd,
 In the deep sound the mighty ruin drown'd,
 What radiant fires were drown'd by day's malignant
 power, 336 Jesus!* 4
 Of indignation; and with shouts that drowned
 From those two Brothers who were drowned
 therein; 365 The Baptist* 8
 Drowning. With the fleet waters of a drowning world, 16 Desc. Sk. 313
 Drowsed. See O'er-drowsed.
 Drowsily. Each in his basket nodding drowsily;
 Drowsiness. His eyes as if in drowsiness half shut,
 Drowsy. Or to the drowsy crow of midnight cock
 Of drowsy bells, for ever tinkling round;
 I lay where, with his drowsy mates, the cock
 Drowsy and weak, and shattered memory;
 Come, come, for manhood's sake! These drowsy shiverings, 27 Guilt 182
 That far-off tinkling's drowsy cheer, 82 Alice Fell 2
 Of drowsy, dotard Time;— 128 Idiot Boy 179
 By a fair Swan on drowsy billows heaved,
 Does the hour's drowsy weight his glee restrain?
 His drowsy rings. Look forth!—that Stream behold, 200 Thorn 205
 In drowsy sequence—how unlike the sound
 Nor unto silent leaves and drowsy flowers,—
 It's drowsy tinklings on th' attentive hills;
 Followed by drowsy crow of midnight cock.
 The bark of dogs, the drowsy tinkling bell, 243 P. B. 595

 Druid. Altars for Druid service fit;
 Where is the Orphean lyre, or Druid harp,
 Or near that mystic Round of Druid frame
 Those forest oaks of Druid memory, 398 White Doe 229

 A Druid cromlech!—thus I entertain
 Druid-priest. The Druid-priest the hallowed Oak

 But soon, with proud parade, the noisy drum
 I wish the press-gang or the drum
 And wish'd the press-gang, or the drum
 Drum's. Scared by the fife and rumbling drum's alarms, 620 She wept* 12
 Drums. And greet your sons! drums beat and trumpets blow!
 Drunk. Aod, drunk or sober, he may steer them.
 Of death had drunk their punishment,
 Thy murmurs heard; and drunk the crystal lymph
 His man had drunk, the old man said to him
 Drunken. Betty a drunken pleasure quaffs.
 Drunken Lark! thou wouldst be both
 An uproar and a drunken din.
 The language of those drunken joys
 Should come in frenzy and in drunken mirth,
 Dry. In a dry nook where fero the floor bestrows
 Did constant meditation dry my blood;
 My Father's house, in wet or dry
 Save, in a corner, a heap of dry leaves,
 And, when the grass was dry, 796 Excursion 3. 712

Dry—continued.

One morn we strolled on our dry walk, 85 Anecdote 5
 Their two books lying both on a dry stone, 99 Brothers 262
 I trust it is,—and never dry: 111 A Complaint 14
 Of the dry wreck. And, in our vacant mood,
 Dry and withered, light and yallow;—
 This moss-lined shed, green, soft, and dry,
 Of water—never dry, 148 A narrow* 16
 The hard dry see-saw of his horrible bray!
 And Peter draws him to dry land; 163 Hint 29
 To Nature's tuneful quire, this rustling dry
 'Mid a dry desert? What is it we hear?
 My feet would rather turn—to some dry nook
 Yea, his dry bones to ashes are consumed
 His legs are thin and dry. 165 Parrot 29
 And, ere the flowing fount be dry, 198 Thorn 31
 Of firm dry ground, with healthful grass
 Like the dry remnant of a garden-flower
 What's a tempest to him, or the dry parching heats?
 The dry leaves stir as with the serpent's walk,
 With what strange utterance did the loud dry wind
 Her pleasant habitations, and dry up
 Ran in oew channels, leaving old ones dry,
 And they whose hearts are dry as summer dust
 The floor was neither dry nor neat, the hearth
 Which anger and resentment could not dry.
 In the dry crannies of the pendent rocks;
 Palpable to sight as the dry ground, 241 P. B. 480

 Hurrying, with lordly Duddon to unite;

Due—continued.

Untouched by due regret I marked your fall !
 Forbear to shape due channels which the Flood
 A less imperious sympathy is due,
 Who repays in season due
 Due to the day's unfinished task ; of pen
 Take from the horror due to a foul deed,
 Sets sail—in season due,
 For which, with pain, he caused due obsequies
 Marshal the banquet, giving with due grace
 And Heaven still lacked its due, though piety
 Reverence was due to a being thus employed ;
 Due to this timely notice, unawares
 Those hold imaginations in due time
 With a due reverence on earth's rightful lord,
 Like credit to ourselves where less was due,
 Their due proportion, under all the weight
 Where it is due : thus haply shall I teach,
 With due regret how much is overlooked
 For more would she have craved as due to One
 Than did to her due honour, and to me
 While we sate listening with compassion due.
 Want due consistence ; like a pillar of smoke,
 Their soft indulgence ; and in due time
 That they were ever born to ! In due time
 Nor due provision to control and guide,
 Which wafts that prayer to heaven, is due to all,
 In due observance of her pious wish,
 And what to higher powers is justly due.
 " This qualified respect, the old Man's due,
 Due resignation. Therefore, though some tears
 In due proportion to their country's need ;
 Declares his due, while he makes known his need.
 Of grateful recollections, tribute due
 Are to the pillory due."
 And 'tis their due devotion has been paid
Dues. Religious men, who give to God and man their dues.
 To my life's neighbour dues of neighbourhood ;
Duffil. " And let it be of duffil grey,
Duffie. Good duffie grey, and flannel fine ;
Duke. Of duke or earl, from scenes of courtly pomp
 The cry is six to one upon the Duke.
Dulcet. Leave for one chaunt—the dulcet sound
Dull. Swelling the outcry dull, that long resounds
 Only the waning moon hangs dull and red
 And bells of passing mules that tinkle dull,
 Mocks the dull ear of Time with deaf abortive
 sound.
 'Twas a dull spark—a most unnatural fire
 And all particulars that dull brains require
 For years to me are sad and dull ;
 Now I cleave to the house, and am dull as a snail ;
 To its dull round of ordinary cares ;
 For a light heart in a dull season.
 And in my head a dull, dull pain ;
 A dull, helpless thing,
 Drooping is he, his step is dull ;
 A dull, contracted circle, yielding light
 The mouldy vaults of the dull idiot's brain,
 Only the Ass, with motion dull,
 —Once more the Ass, with motion dull,
 Over that dull and dreary sound.
 Dull, flagging notes that with each other jar ?"
 Of the dull earth partakes not, nor desires ?
 Not dull art Thou as undiscerning Night ;
 Dull would he be of soul who could pass by
 Should life be dull, and spirits low,
 From its dull sheath—stem sentinel
 In heart as dull to brain—while pacing ground
 My dull foreheadings in a Peasant's ear.
 To twinkle after that dull stroke of thine,
 From this dull Monster and her sooty crew ;
 Books ! 'tis a dull and endless strife ;
 On this dreary dull plate of black metal.
 And, sorrow for him ! the dull treacherous heat
 No dull oblivious nook shall hide thy fate,
 Though these dull hours (mine is it, or their shame ?)
 For something more than dull content,
 Nought I perceived within it dull or dim ;
 Her evenings then were dull and dead :
 Or prayer-bell by the dull cicada drown'd,
 —Heavy, and dull, and cloudy is the night,
 While loud and dull ascends the weeping cry,
 Swing on th' astounded ear it's dull undying roar :
 While the jail-mastiff howls at the dull clanking
 chain,
 On which a dull red image of the moon
 Wan, dull, and glaring, with a dripping fog
 With dull red stains discoloured, and stuck o'er
 Than this dull product of a scoffer's pen,
 Not rustic—dull and faded like himself !
 Which appetite required—a blind dull nook,
 Through the dull mist, I following—when a step,
 I did not rank with those (too dull or nice,
 A dreamer yet more spiritless and dull ?
 For then her heart shall kindle ; her dull eye,
 Dull and inanimate, no more shall hang
 Who to your dull society are born,
 Dull, to the joy of her own motions dead ;

Dundee. And glad Dundee in " faint huzzas " expired ?
 O for a single hour of that Dundee,
Dungeo. The old Man in that dungeo is alive.
 Than a tight case of dungeo walls for shelter
 A slavery compared to which the dungeo
 Dragged from his bed, was cast into a dungeo
 when I was in the dungeo ?
 Perhaps some dungeo hears thee groan,
 A dungeo dark ! where he must waste the year,
 Entering my dungeo, didst become a prey
 Locked in a dungeo needs must eat the heart
 Thou hast a dungeo, speak the word !
Dungeo-floor. A jerk that from a dungeo-floor
Dungeo-Ghyll. Comes from the depth of Dungeo-Ghyll.
 Right opposite to Dungeo-Ghyll . . .

 The long ascent of Dunmall-raise ;
 Though Rydal-heights and Dunmail-raise,
 Around the stones of Dunmail-raise !

Dusk—continued.

Traceably gliding through the dusk, recall
Pleas'd thro' the dusk their breaking smiles to view,
His door in darkness, nor till dusk returns.

Dusky—browed.

It gleams on the face, there, of duskybrowed Jack,
And insects clothe, like dust, the glassy deep :

Dust.

A piece of money glittering through the dust ?
The dust from off its wings . . .
Woman's birthright into dust . . .

Turning, for them who pass,

the grief, the praise, are severed from their dust,
Palace and tower, are crumbled into dust !—
The sleeping dust, stern Death. How reconcile
And ye arts must raise her from the dust.

Dusty—continued.

Through hot and dusty ways, or pelting storm,
By cobwebs, stood within a dusty nook ;
Duteous. His duteous toil of furrowing the green
earth.
And guidance have I sought in duteous love . . .
All in one duteous task agree.
While she as duteous as the mother dove . . .
To one who holds it dear ; with duteous care . . .
Duteously. Bathed duteously her wayworn feet,
Upheld, he duteously pursued the round . . .
Once every day he duteously repaired . . .
Duties. The lowliest duties on herself did lay . . .
All martial duties to fulfil ;
And of more arduous duties thence imposed
Than thine hath been, my duties ask ;
Rights to compare and duties to discern !
By charities and duties that proceed . . .
Its duties,—prompt to move, but firm to wait,—
Who bends to happier duties, who more wise . . .
(Now that their earthly duties were fulfilled) . . .
For sabbath duties ; yet he was a man
The appointed task and duties of the day,
His round of pastoral duties, is not left
Their duties from all forms ; and general laws,
To steal from active duties, and embrace
Sheltered, but not to social duties lost,
The primal duties shine aloft—like stars ;
Thus, duties rising out of good posset . . .
Dutiful. I do not see Idonea. Dutiful Girl,
And Love is dutiful in thought and deed ;
Of dutiful affection.
In faith and hope, and dutiful obedience,
Dutiful Child, her lot how hard !
Holy, and ever dutiful—beloved . . .
Who, with a dutiful and tender hand, . . .
Aod undertook with dutiful content . . .
Duty. Unhappy Woman ! Nay, it was my duty . . .
Duty, or love—involve, I feel, my ruin.
It now becomes my duty to resume it.
Whom he to more than filial love and duty . . .
Or duty sanctions. We will have ample justice.
You have done your duty. I had hopes, which now
And if good Angels fail, slack in their duty, . . .
To womankind with duty to my Father, . . .
This day's event has laid on me the duty . . .
Duty, like a strict preceptor,
'Gainst duty weighed, and faithful love, did seem
To slacken in his duty ; and, at length, . . .
When duty of that day was o'er, . . .
Of duty with reluctant will) . . .
Nor Duty struggling with afflictions strange—
For health, and time in obvious duty spent.
Love from her depths, and Duty in her might,
From hope, the paramount duty that Heaven lays,
Speak not now of toilsome duty ;
When duty bids you bleed in open war :
Your thrones, ye Powers, from duty fear to swerve !
Where gladness seems a duty—let me guard
Which she in duty left, sad but not cheerless . . .
To check this pious haste of erring duty . . .
Fulfil thy pensive duty,
Her duty is to stand and wait ;
Of duty, seeing with clear sight ;
Of war, but duty summons her away
Prescribed to duty :—woful forfeiture
Move Princes to their duty, peace or war ;
Deep in your hearts the sense of duty lie ;
One duty more, last stage of this ascent,
In filial duty, clothed with love divine,
O Duty ! if that name thou love
Anxious duty hindering,
Was Duty,—Duty calmed his agony.
Duty?—an unwelcome clog ;
On whom the duty fell (for at that time
Though resolute when duty called . . .
(All claims of duty satisfied) . . .
By duty chained. Not seldom rid those tasks
And now by duty urged, I lay this Book
From the lore of lofty duty ;
If so he might, to duty and to truth . . .
Of a low pitch—duty and zeal dismissed,
Than duty called for, or, without regard
To duty, might have sprung up of itself
His perilous duty, and retire lamenting
Of Providence, and in reverence for duty,
Duty exists ;—immutably survive . . .
The law of duty ; and can therefore move
A light of duty shines on every day
An anxious duty ! which the lofty site . . .
Men, whose delight is where their duty leads
No duty that looks further, and no care . . .
Duty's. Duty's intrepid liegeman, see, the palm
A Maiden gentle, yet, at duty's call,
Dwarf. Dwarf panniered steeds, and men, and numerous wains :
Dwarf Genii, moonlight-loving Fays,
Dwarf willows gliding, and by ferny brake.

Up to the dwarf that tops the pinnacle.

Dwell. But why, ungrateful, dwell on idle pain?
While Slavery, forcing the sunk mind to dwell
"Here will I dwell," said I, "my whole life long,
Where now we dwell.—For many years I bore
"My child, in Durham do you dwell?"
And two of us at Conway dwell . . . 83
Dwell near them with my mother, . . . 83
"You say that two at Conway dwell, . . . 84
And you, who dwell here, even among these rocks,
We leave you here in solitude to dwell . . . 106

Delightful day it is for all who dwell

Eagle—continued.

The Eagle lives in Solitude! Even so,
Strong as an Eagle with my charge I glided round and round
Watchful as a wheeling eagle,
Far as in power the eagle doth the worm:
It may soar with the eagle and brood with the dove,
The eagle, lord of land and sea,
The flame-eyed eagle oft wouldst scare
Where the eagle builds her airy
Thou too be heard, looe eagle! freed
The Eagle, he was lord above,
The eagle worthy of her ancestry?
An Eagle with stretched wings, but beamless eye—
An Eagle that could neither wall nor soar.
If unreproved the ambitious eagle mount
And thereat shall the Eagle-be our Lord,
The eagle of the Alps o'erhades his prey,
To see the Eagle ruffled by the Dove
The eagle soars high in the element,
When the fresh eagle, in the month of May,
As the fierce eagle fastens on the lamb?
To the wide-ruling eagle, and his hand
Eagle-like. Drives, eagle-like, those sons as he was driven;
And never, eagle-like, beholds again!
Drives, eagle-like, his sons as he was driven.
Eagle-race. The lordly eagle-race through hostile search
Eagle's. Glances the wheeling eagle's glorious form!
The soaring eagle's curv'd beak;
The lion's sinews, or the eagle's wing;
His prominent feature like an eagle's beak;
His Eagle's favourite perch, while round him sate
Thou near the eagle's nest—within brief sail,
Glances the fire-clad eagle's wheeling form;
The chamois' sinews, and the eagle's wing!
That is the eagle's birthplace, or some peak
Eagles. Both when he heard the eagles scream,
And turned his eagles back with deep-drawn sighs:
And if those eagles to their ancient hold
Return, Helvellyn's eagles! with the pair.
Ear. Say, will my Friend, with unreluctant ear,
Shook the still-tinkling tail and glancing ear,
How sweet its streamlet murmurs in mine ear!
That common growth of earth, the foodful ear;
Mocks the dull ear of Time with deaf abortive
sound.
No brook to wet his lip or soothe his ear;
And ear still busy on its nightly watch,
Have reached his ear—you have had enemies,
With which he taunts her ear;—for a plain reason;
Imprisoned there, and held it to his ear,
That may not be retold to any ear.
I have much to say, but for whose ear?—not thine.
A human voice distinct, struck on my ear.
No man ear shall ever hear me speak;
When, as we hurried on, my ear
In verse, which to thy ear might come would treat
this simple theme,
Made, to his ear attentively applied,
But in the Lover's ear alone,
That sigh of thine, not meant for human ear,
From day to day, to Michael's ear there came
Never to living ear came sweeter sounds
Of ancient mountains, or my ear was touched
Still couchant, an inevitable ear.
Urania's self might welcome with pleased ear.
"Some, still more delicate of ear,
Plunge, and fling back a spiteful ear,
To her; and she shall lean her ear
And heaviness in Clifford's ear!
Of eye, and ear,—both what they half create,
Such rebounds our toward ear
"Come, if the notes thine ear may pierce,
And was it granted to the simple ear
Give ear, O Man! to their appeal,
The mimic notes, striking upon his ear
To life, to life give back thine ear:
Into the ear of God, their Lord!
Turns round his long left ear.
Turned round his long left ear.
A voice to Peter's ear ascends,
Hath sought, proclaiming to the ear
Soft as the Dorkhawk's to a distant ear,
An ample sovereignty of eye and ear.
Whose murmur soothed thy languid Mother's ear
Of one deep bliss thine ear hath been bereft:
Haunts, with sad echoes, musing Fancy's ear:
Yet some with apprehensive ear shall drink
Of Britain's acts,—may catch it with rapt ear,
Their heavenly Father will incline an ear
Had fallen upon the ear.
All that I heard comes back upon my ear,
My dull forebodings in a Peasant's ear
If they received into a conscious ear,
My fault, nor hear it with Thy sacred ear;
Beats frequent on thy satiate ear,
And seldom hath ear listened to a tune
Satiare are these; and stilled to eye and ear;

Ear—continued.

A sycod of his Councillors:—give ear,
Silent, but not to high-souled Passion's ear—
Come secrets, whispered nightly to his ear;
Mine ear has rung, my spirit sunk subdued,
And to the soldier's trumpet-wearied ear;
Name that first struck by chance my startled ear)
With ear not coveting the whole,
We cannot bid the ear be still;
To which I listen with a ready ear;
Must eyes be all in all, the tongue and ear
Nor shout, nor whistle strikes his ear;
May well afford to mortal ear
And can earthward bend an ear
Whose boyish ear the voice of her renown
Nor will he turn his ear aside
Whose silence, for the pleasure of the ear,
The hoary Father in the Stranger's ear
May not avail, nor prayer have for God's ear
Haunted his ear—he only listening—
The Promise, with uplifted ear;
No one's ear had heard the Horn.
And friend in the ear of friend, where speech is free
For simple infat hath a ready ear
Which ever to mad's ear a passage won.
Say, will my friend, with soft affection's ear,
And with strange tinnings sings her fainting ear.
Deny'd the bread of life the foodful ear,
When hums the mountain bee in May's glad ear,
Swing on th' astounded ear it's dull undying ear:
Blow through my ear! the sky seemed not a sky
Most audible, then, when the fleshy ear,
That I should hold it to my ear, I did so,
Grows tedious even in a young man's ear.
Lies to the ear, and lies to every sense—
Beat against Albion's shore, since ear of mine
I had but lent a careless ear, assured
A story destined for thy ear, who now,
All ear; but never long without the heart
Incessantly to turo his ear and eye
We sat together, sighs came on my ear,
On the thrilled ear, and flags uprising, yield
That on mine ear ticked with a mournful sound—
By each and all of these the pensive ear
Like one whose uted ear a murmuring stream
Of inland ground, applying to his ear
Is to the ear of Faith; and there are times,
Through which the ear converses with the heart.
Through the calm region, fades upon the ear,
Do speak, at Heaven's comma'd, to eye and ear,
Of yielding its contents to eye and ear,
All day the house-clock ticking in mine ear,
With her two faculties of eye and ear,
Continued yet to vibrate on his ear,
Was wasted on the good Man's living ear,
Protected, say enlightened, by his ear;
The Christian promise with attentive ear;
With willingness, to whom the general ear
Many and idle, visits not his ear:
It mounts to reach the State's parental ear;
Instructing simple childhood's ready ear:
In like low voice to my particular ear,
She pondered murmurs that attuned her ear
The Ball whizz'd by,—it grazed his ear,
That Shepherd's voice, it may have reached mine ear
Had soothed his ear while they were hidden: how pleased
My fault, and keep it from thy sacred ear.
The box resound on Viscount Buffo's ear.
Ear-deep. No promise. Still, in more than ear-deep seats,
Eared. See Quick-eared.
Earl. Who dragged Earl Pembroke from Banbury church
Earl Pembroke, slain so impiously!
Of duke or earl, from scenes of courtly pomp
Earldom. Such strength that Earldom held of yore; Earless. Pillowed in some deep dungeon's earless den;
Earlier. Perhaps at earlier Crecy, or Poitiers.
Then, or far earlier, let us rove
Or, at an earlier call, to mark,
And, earlier still, was heard the hum of bees;
Earlier from cleansing fires, and gains withal
Were earlier raised, remain to hear
Each twilight earlier call'd the Sun to meet,
With earlier smile the ray of morn to view
Far earlier, ere one smoke-wreath had risen
Than to his earlier season did he love
A few days earlier; then would you have seen
Ill borne in earlier life; but his was now
I read,—how in his manhood's earlier day Earliest. Plucked while the church bells rang their earliest chime
Rome's earliest legion passed
Touched by the skylark's earliest note,
Its earliest green along the lane.
As when their earliest flowers of hope were blown,
Thus, like the men of earliest days,
These had given earliest notice, as the lark

Earth. See Mother-earth.

(Visible though they be to half the earth,
 On tawny earth, wild weeds, and twisted roots;
 On the dark earth the wearied vision fails;
 That common growth of earth, the foodful ear;
 As if a new-made heaven were hailing a new earth!
 In copious showers, from earth by wholesome springs,
 Or on the earth strange lines, in former days
 With face to earth; and, as the boy turned round
 And banks of ragged earth; beneath the shade
 Never on earth was gentler creature seen;
 As if he were the only Saint on earth,
 He has the very hardest heart on earth;
 And nowhere upon earth is place so fit
 Who, on such provocation as this earth
 I have, or wish for, upon earth—and more
 Yea, from the utmost corners of the earth,
 The only quiet heart on earth. In terror,
 On earth could else have wrested from me;—if erring,
 The earth for sure redemption of lost peace.
 And felt, if ought on earth deserves a curse,
 Hid in the earth, or there can be no harvest;
 That the earth owns shall never choose to die,
 In search of nothing that this earth can give,
 All newly born! both earth and sky
 The green earth echoed to the feet
 Where earth and heaven do make one imagery;
 Or to be trailed along the soiling earth;
 And while around it storm as fierce seemed troubling earth and air,
 When his corpse is laid in earth.
 Rapid and gay, as if the earth were air,
 From human care, or grows upon the breast of

 With such communion that no place on earth

 And, baffled thus, though earth from day to day

 Ill-requited upon earth;
 From earth to heaven with motion fleet
 From heaven to earth our thoughts will pass,
 But drops not here to earth for rest;
 Thus pleasure is spread through the earth
 Hushed the dark earth, fast closing weary eyes,
 The Glow-worms of the earth!
 That transformation through the wide earth felt,
 That thinks her the luckiest soul on earth,
 Can aught on earth impede delight,
 Earth, spangled sky, and lake serene,
 O blessed Bird! the earth we pace
 And dragged to earth both branch and bough, with crash,
 On earth was never sown;
 In earth and heaven, in glade and bower,
 The one only dwelling on earth that she loves,
 For finest tasks of earth or air;
 For whose free range the dædal earth
 Mortality to Earth!
 Yet, witness all that stirs in heaven or earth!
 On such an earth as this!"
 So much of earth—so much of heaven,
 And with her feet she from the plashy earth

 When the green earth re-appeared;
 In earth, and air, and earth-embracing sea,
 Returned, to seek a Consort upon earth;
 In endless union, earth and sea above."
 Looks to the earth, and to the vacant air;
 Since earth grew calm while angels mused?
 Yet earth is wide, and many a nook
 Derived from earth or heaven,
 Close clings to earth the living rock,
 The earth is constant to her sphere;
 Renewed throughout the bounds of earth or ocean,
 And saves the peopled fields of earth
 And earth and stars composed, a universal heaven!
 Mount from the earth; aspire! aspire!
 That in the living Creature find on earth a place.
 Or found on earth a name;
 His duteous toil of furrowing the green earth.
 The little sprinkling of cold earth that fall
 Ye wandering Utterances, ha! earth no scheme, Thy destined bond-slave? No! though earth be dust
 That little Earth of ours?
 Then back to Earth, the dear green Earth—
 See! there she is, the matchless Earth!
 How earth and heaven are taught to feel
 What on the earth is doing,
 If aught on earth have heavenly might,
 "In vain, through water, earth, and air,
 Made the warm earth his lazy bed,
 Call it of earth a small green plot,
 Whereat from the earth on which he lay
 When earth is calm, and heaven is bright
 A murmur, pent within the earth,
 In the dead earth beneath the road,
 Believed that earth was charged to quake
 And instantly upon the earth,
 That breathes on earth the air of paradise.
 A volant Tribe of Bards on earth are found,
 Of the dull earth partakes not, nor desires?
 As the beginning of the heavens and earth!
 Of central earth, where tortured Spirits pine Vain earth! false world! Foundations must be laid
 Earth has not anything to show more fair:
 Even on this earth, above the reach of Time!
 'Gainst him who raised it,—his last work on earth:
 And earth below, they best can serve true gladness
 When earth shall vanish from our closing eyes,
 Bountiful Son of Earth! when we are gone
 And thrills the old sepulchral earth, around,
 Of things, has fenced this fairest spot on earth.
 Rose like a star that touching earth,
 From land to land through half the earth!
 That earth hath something yet to show,
 This did it when the earth was new;
 As long as earth shall last,
 From hour to hour the antiquated Earth
 Powers that will work for thee; air, earth, and skies;
 And feel, thou Earth, for this afflicted Race!
 Of Liberty that yet remains on earth!
 And earth with all her pleasant fruits and flowers
 Stalks round—abhorred by Heaven, a terror to the Earth!
 So did she daunt the Earth, and God defy!
 Dropped to the earth, astonished at the sound!
 By all the blended powers of Earth and Heaven.
 O'er the wide earth, on mountain and on plain,
 And, in the desert places of the earth,
 Of Justice sent to earth from highest Heaven!
 Is life despised; ah no, the spacious earth
 With every help that ye from earth and heaven
 may claim!
 Lo, Justice triumphs! Earth is freed!
 Till, with the heavens and earth, thou pass away!
 Yet will not heaven disown nor earth gainsay
 Beneath her vine-leaf crown the green Earth reels:
 Which men call Earth," have yearned to seek,
 And drove Astræa from the earth.
 In Pompeii preserved by her burial in earth;
 Dows to the earth the walls of Jericho,
 Too much from this frail earth we claim,
 But all our thoughts were then of Earth,
 From all the tuming vanities of Earth!
 Earth stretched below, heaven in our neighbourhood.

Earth—continued.

We stood rejoicing, as if earth were free
 O'er the blank Area of sacred earth
 The breath of air can he where earth had else
 From mortal change, aught that is born on earth
 But never to be extinct while Earth endures.
 That found it to its native earth—poised high
 For earth through heaven, for heaven, by changeful
 earth,
 From their high state darkened the Earth with fear,
 Rapt above earth by power of one fair face,
 Stretched far as earth might own a single lord;
 Of fragrance, undervived from earth,
 Air, earth, sea, sky, and heaven, success betoken.
 Upon her yet, earth hide her beauty;
 From Heaven or earth;—Sir Kaye had like denial.
 Who from frail earth can call you
 Prompt offering to thy Foster-mother, Earth!
 No voice replies;—both air and earth are mute;
 Deep into patient Earth, from whose smooth breast
 it came!
 In the blank earth, neglected and forlorn,
 The sweets of earth contentedly resigned,
 Level with earth, among the hillocks green:
 Oa Earth, who works in the heaven of heavens,
 alone,
 To watch thy course when Daylight, fled from
 earth,
 To seek her Knight went wandering o'er the earth.
 From the bowers of earth below;
 And glides o'er the earth like an angel of light.
 Of love, upon a hopeless earth.
 The meekest Child on this blessed earth.
 Trusting himself to the earth, and God.
 They stood like trees when earth and heaven
 Single on the gladsome earth.
 Dead—but to live again on earth.
 To earth, she was set free, and died.
 Calm spectacle, by earth and sky
 For other monuments than those of Earth;
 O suffering Earth! be thankful; sternest clime
 Scooped from the sacred earth where his dear relics
 lie.
 Levelled with earth this foot of mine may tread.
 Through earth and heaven to bind and to unbind!—
 Requiem which Earth takes up with voice undaunted.

Earth—continued.

Wanting accustomed food, must pass from earth,
 On sky, earth, river, lake and sea;
 Once did I see a slip of earth
 If such do on this earth abide,
 To cast their shadows on our mother Earth
 Modest and sweet, a progeny of earth,
 The high-souled virtues which forgetful earth
 Earth wants not beauty that may scorn
 From earth, perhaps by Shakespeare's self approved,
 And seemed the proudest thing on earth.
 And the hue sky, one little span of earth
 A hurthen of the earth! 'Tis Nature's law
 Been doomed so long to settle upon earth
 Must hend the sceptred Potentates of earth.
 Two Babes were laid in earth before she died;
 Upon this sinful earth, by sin unstained:
 For peace on earth and bliss in heaven.
 Once more on English earth they stand:
 In aught to earth pertaining? Death has proved
 A Power is passing from the earth
 "Rest, rest, perturbed Earth!
 And thou, O rescued Earth, by peace and love,
 Which good men take with them from earth to heave.
 Gone from this world of earth, air, sea, and sky,
 Green ivy risen from out the cheerful earth
 Had been no Paradise; and earth were now
 The heaven-eyed creature sleeps in earth:
 The earth, and every common sight,
 That there hath past away a glory from the earth.
 And all the earth is gay;
 While Earth herself is adorning,
 Earth fills her lap with pleasures of her own;
 On the dark earth the baff'd vision fails,
 With it's own Virtues springs another earth:
 That made the calmest, fairest spot of earth,
 (What, save thyself, none dares through earth and skies)
 The sea, or trod the earth, to peace estrang'd.
 On earth to goodness blest by grace divine,
 Up starts some tyrant, Earth and Heaven to dare,
 Earth awakes from wintry sleep:
 The earth is all before me. With a heart
 To the bare earth dropped with a startling sound.
 Of earth—and with what motion moved the clouds!
 Wheeled by me—even as if the earth had rolled
 And on the earth! Ye Visions of the hills!
 The surface of the universal earth
 Yes, I remember when the changeful earth,
 Gleams like the flashing of a shield;—the earth
 The earth was comfortless, and, touched by faint
 The ghostly language of the ancient earth,
 Communing in this sort through earth and heaven
 Those human sentiments that make this earth
 The common countenance of earth and sky:
 Earth, nowhere unembellished by some trace
 The yoke of earth is new to them, the world
 Soul awful—if the earth has ever lodged
 That time can lay upon her; how on earth
 Or Angel, if he were to dwell on earth,
 No living thing appeared in earth or air,
 Through earth and sky, spreads widely, and sends deep
 Upon the speaking face of earth and heaven
 As long as he shall be the child of earth,
 Should the whole frame of earth by inward throes
 Destruction to the children of the earth
 Enow there are on earth to take in charge
 Of an event so dire, by signs in earth
 She scratches, ransacks up the earth for food,
 The inside of the earth, and spell the stars;
 Meanwhile old grandame earth is grieved to find
 In happiness to the happiest upon earth.
 A gracious spirit o'er this earth presides,
 This dawning earth, to recognise, expect,
 Earth crouches, the elements are potter's clay,
 To earth and human life, the Song might dwell
 Have I been now a sojourner on earth,
 Alone, henceforth this fairy work of earth.
 Of earth devoted to eternity!"
 And Earth did change her images and forms
 And Come! thou, a treasure whom the earth
 And what earth is, and what she has to show.
 Beside the mountain-chapel, sleeps in earth
 The bleaded calmness of the heavens and earth,
 If any spectacle on earth can do,
 Even then the common haunts of the green earth,
 In earth, the widely scattered wreck sublime
 Be found no more, that we should see the earth
 That overspread the countenance of earth,
 Earth free from them for ever, as was thought,
 Have prayed that throughout earth upon all men,
 As Liberty upon earth: yet all henceath
 That, under heaviest sorrow earth can bring,
 Elsewhere will safety now he sought, and earth
 Not favoured spots alone, but the whole Earth
 Why should I not confess that Earth was then
 Openly in the eye of earth and heaven,
 And that alone, my office upon earth:

Earth—continued.

One great society alone on earth : . . . 733 Prelude 11. 394
 From this last spot of earth, where Freedom now
 Prevalled among the powers of heaven and earth,
 On Ethna's summit, above earth and sea . . .
 Walk on this earth ! how feeble have I been . . .
 Surrounded, too, the wanderers of the earth ; . . .
 Heard over earth and sea, and, in that hour, . . .
 From earth to heaven, from human to divine ; . . .
 And all the earth was budding with these gifts
 Placed on this earth to love and understand . . .
 To earth attempted and her deep-drawn sighs, . . .
 A thousand times more beautiful than the earth . . .
 Descend to earth or dwell in highest heaven !
 —Beauty—a living Presence of the earth, . . .
 The human Soul of universal earth, . . .
 Of earth and sky. But he had felt the power
 Ocean and earth, the solid frame of earth . . .
 Among the unthinking masters of the earth
 —And surely never did there live on earth
 And prized in his peculiar nook of earth
 Might live on earth a life of happiness. . . .
 And dragged them to the earth. Ere this an hour
 Or trampled into earth ; a chain of straw, . . .
 She sleeps in the calm earth, and peace is here.
 Both while he trod the earth in humble guise
 From earth the dust of morning, slow to rise ;
 To every grateful sound of earth and air ; . . .
 We have an image of the pristine earth,
 Its final home on earth. What traveller—who—
 Into his mother earth without such pomp . . .
 Or question deep ? what profits all that earth,
 Where earth is quiet and her face unchanged
 " A child of earth, I rested, in that stage . . .
 Her silver voice was heard upon the earth,
 See, rooted in the earth, her kindly bed, . . .
 A range of unappropriated earth,
 That walk the earth—Father of heaven and earth,
 Blow fiercely, agitating earth and sky,
 And left me, on this earth, disconsolate ! . . .
 Confusion infinite of heaven and earth,
 Expanse of unappropriated earth . . .
 Father of heaven and earth ! and I am rich,
 Might'st hold, on earth, communion undisturbed,
 And holiest love ; as earth, sea, air, with light,
 Earth to despise ; but, to converse with heaven—
 That with majestic energy from earth . . .
 Who dwell on earth, yet breathe empyreal air,
 The vassalage that binds her to the earth,
 And phantoms from the crags and solid earth
 And starting from the hollows of the earth
 Food not unwholesome ; earth and air correct
 " Upon the breast of new-created earth
 On earth, enshrined within the wandering ark ;
 With answering constellations, under earth,
 Which the warm sun solicited, and earth . . .
 Whom earth, at this late season, hath produced
 The earth we tread, the sky that we behold . . .
 Though bound to earth by ties of pity and love,
 Hovered above our destiny on earth : . . .
 And man's substantial life. If this mute earth
 Profession mocks performance. Earth is sick,
 Whose root is fixed in stable earth, whose head
 By slow sollicitation, earth to yield . . .
 Or rather, as we stand on holy earth,
 Upon the earth beneath his feet ; and spake :—
 (Though claiming high distinction upon earth
 —And, as on earth it is the doom of truth . . .
 Then, Pity could have scarcely found on earth
 The fruits of earth through space of twice ten years,
 Earth and the kingdoms of the earth, create—
 Of earth, and human nature's mortal part . . .
 Converse with heaven, nor yet deprecate towards
 earth . . .
 As now it shines, when we are laid in earth . . .
 If these may make a hallowed spot of earth . . .
 Could field or grove, could any spot of earth, . . .
 Meek Saint ! through patience glorified on earth !
 Ranged through the mountains, slept upon the earth, . . .
 That it had sprung self-raised from earth, or grown
 And how, her Spirit yet survives on earth ! . . .
 The warm lap of his mother earth : and so, . . .
 His parents laid in earth, no loss ensued
 Whose sacred influence, spread through earth and heaven, . . .
 Upon his touch. The bowels of the earth . . .
 Upon the earth that faculties, which seem
 And promising to keep his hold on earth . . .
 Ye rains of April, duly wet this earth ! . . .
 Of earth, the great abyss, and be no more ; . . .
 Of a poor brotherhood who walk the earth
 Of Britala's farthest glens. The Earth has lent
 Hiding the face of earth for leagues—and there,
 Breathing fresh air, and treading the green earth ;
 From earth, the common mother of us all . . .
 To them whose holiness on earth shall make . . .
 The fields of earth with gratitude and hope ; . . .
 For every genial power of heaven and earth, . . .
 Through earth, sky, water, and all visible space,
 Of the frail earth, permitted to behold . . .

Earth—continued.

Earthly—continued.

Some vain distinctions, marks of earthly state
Whose course of earthly honour was begun
Compare! thy earthly had a moment past
These not of earthly texture, and the vault
And this deep vale its earthly counterpart,
How little dost thou speak of earthly gloom!

Earth-nuts. I know the earth-nuts fit for food:

Earthquake. The mine's dire earthquake, and the pallid host
And left as if by earthquake strewn,
He puts the Earthquake on her still design,
An earthquake, mingling with the battle's shock,
Volcanic burst, earthquake, and hurricane,
The earthquake is not satisfied at once;

Earthquakes. Like earthquakes, shocks repeated day
by day,

Earth's. And higher far than lies within earth's bounds:

Earth's noblest penitent; from bondage freed
Rolled round in earth's diurnal course
And withered leaves, from earth's cold breast
The wide earth's storehouse fenced about
"O Lady, worthy of earth's proudest throne!
To hear the earth's soft murmuring
Or with the Moon conquering earth's misty air,
Embraced those Brothers upon earth's wide plain;
Well pleased, her foot should print earth's common
grass.

And memory of Earth's bitter leaven,
Of Earth's first blood, have titles manifold.
Oh grief that Earth's best hopes rest all with Thee!
At happy distance from earth's groaning field,

Into whose bosom earth's best treasures flow,
Thou who dost warm Earth's universal mould,
For they Earth's fairest daughters do excel;
Heaven upon earth's an empty boast;
Once more beneath the kind Earth's tranquil light;
Or quietly self-buried in earth's mould,
And earth's green grass beneath his feet;
Tired with its daily share of earth's unrest,—
(Earth's lingering love to parting reconciled,
And earth's precarious days.
Or, bound by oaths, comeforth to tread earth's floor
Earth's sweetness in thy breath.
Time's vanities, light fragments of earth's dream—
By the first men, earth's first inhabitants,
Earth's paramount Creature! not so much for woes
With a due reverence on earth's rightful lord,
From earth's materials—waits upon my steps;
To earth's dark chambers, with a Christian's hope!
Upon earth's native energies; forgetting
Small creature as she is, from earth's bright flowers,
And the great sun, earth's universal lord!
Earth's melancholy vision through the space
But, above all, that mixture of earth's mould
Of all-beholding Man, earth's thoughtful lord;
Earth's universal frame shall feel the effect;
Earth's petty grievances—its toil and care:—

Earth-sullyng. Of sad mortality's earth-sullyng wing,

Earth-voica. No; 'tis the earth-voice of the mighty
sea,

Earthward. Earthward in uncomplaining languish-ment,
Earthward it glided with a swift descent;
Earthward or heavenward, radiant messengers,
And can earthward bend an ear
Shall tottering Age, bent earthward, hear
Earthward, as if in opposition set

Earthwards. Bent earthwards; he looks up—the clouds are split

Earthy. Should start out of his earthy, worm-like state,
Feebly it tinkles with an earthy sound,

Ease. See Heart's-ease.
How graceful, pride can be, and how majestic, ease.
Brisk toil, alternating with ready ease,
Nor is she more at ease on some still night,
Struggled with tears nor could its sorrow ease,
I strove to ease my mind, when our two Comrades,
Finds ease because another feels it too,
nothing which might have set you at ease?
Lay stretched at ease; but, passing by the place
No ease, within doors or without;
But Betty is not quite at ease;
"What can I do to ease your pain?"
There's nothing that can ease my pain."
Poor Betty! it would ease her pain
She gave consent, and Michael was at ease.
Drying their feathers in the sun, at ease;
For an allotted interval of ease,
Oft on the dappled turf at ease
Proceeding with a mind at ease;
Tribute to ease; and, of its joy secure,
If a thief could be here he might pilfer at ease;
In gaily and ease floated with angelic ease
He hung,—thee floated with angelic ease
And then, as if to take his ease,
To ease his conscience of its pain.

Ease—continued.

Oh! God be praised—my heart's at ease—
Of this small lute gave ease to Petrarch's wouud;
It is not quiet, is not ease;
Her sons were bursting forth, to dwell at ease.
Hence Forms that glide with swan-like ease along,
And we were gay, our hearts at ease;
I move at ease; and meet contending themes
(As if her labour and her ease were twms)
Group winding after group with dream-like ease;
For her companionship; here dwells soft ease:
Win rest, and ease, and peace, with bliss that Angels share.
And live at home in blameless ease;
Now couched at ease, though oft this day
Ease from this noble miser of his time
Of ease, the narrow Bosphorus will disdain;
"Woe to you, Prelates! rioting in ease"
Floating at ease while nations have effaced
Utterance of thanks that we have past with ease,
It is not then when, swept with sportive ease,
Nor dost thou fall, thro' abject love of ease,
Would be rational peace—a philosopher's ease.
When ravens spread their plummy vans, at ease!
If Power could live at ease with self-restraint!
Mother! blest be thy calm ease;
Leaves him at ease among grand thoughts: whose eye
Be plighted, not to ease but sullen sloth,
By glimpses caught—disporting at their ease,
A buoyant Spirit, and a heart at ease.
This oftentimes, that he might be at ease,
For to th' untrue he oft gives ease and joy;
May thence remount at ease. The aged Man
For this he did all in the ease of his heart.
A Picture had it been of lasting ease,
To ease a father's cheated love he hung
Then, stretch at ease in some sequestered cave,
Long months of ease and undisturbed delight
A winding passage with majestic ease
Or animate an hour of vacant ease.
Love cannot be; nor does it thrive with ease
To competence and ease (—to him it offered
His calling laid aside, he lived at ease:
And they, if blest with health and hearts at ease,
We scaled, without a track to ease our steps,
Instantly throwing down my limbs at ease
Was glad to find her conscience set at ease;
With hearts at ease, and knowledge in our hearts
—Truth has her pleasure-grounds, her haunts of ease
By ease and leisure; by the very wealth
Helps to internal ease. Of many such
For their heart's ease or pleasure. Strains of power
A simple curiosity to ease:
A festival of unencumbered ease;
And to beguile the lassitude of ease;

Eased. And eased his mind with this reply:
Hath often eased my pensive breast
Exulting Warbler! eased a fretted brain,
Eternal Lord! eased of a cumbrous load,
Then eased his soul at length by praise
Thou wilt be eased, and less wilt droop and pine.

Easedale. High into Easedale, up to Dunmail-Raise,
Eases. Eases her pain, and helps her prayers.
Easier. Sad thoughts, and breathes with easier breath;
Here crave an easier lot;
A further, though far easier, task
Find easier access to the pious mind,
Was easier, the transition more secure,
A safer, easier, more determined, course.
(Or easier links connecting place with place)

Easiest. Now, like to things within fate's easiest reach,
Or easiest carried, closed the motley train.

Easily. Thou know'st me for a Man not easily moved,
Too quickly moved, too easily giving way,
Easily a pious tracing

What one short sigh so easily removed?—
Easily may the sequel be divined—
Though the most easily beguiled
Not easily eluded.
Shun the broad way too easily explored,
In human language, easily I passed
With whom I herded!—(easily, indeed,
In which worst losses easily might wear
More subtle and less easily explained,
The strongest did not easily escape;
So easily deprived?) but, for that cause,
Too easily, despise or overlook
Not easily deciphered, told of one
The ungentle mind can easily find means

East. See North-east.
And saw the dawn opening the silvery east
And they go rambling east and west
In the unrelenting east.—Through all her courts
Watched for tidings from the East, beheld his Lord,
From east to west, in ample vest

That echoes far from hill to hill.
 The echoes make a glad reply.—
 Of echoes, to his march kept time;
 That as they galloped made the echoes roar;
 Echoes from beyond the grave,
 And milder echoes from their cells
 To all the echoes, south and north,
 Haunts, with sad echoes, musing Fancy's ear:
 Provokes no echoes, but must softly tread;
 And echoes from old verse speak true,
 Of its grave echoes, swells a choral strain
 With modulated echoes rang,
 In phrase that now with echoes soft
 I hear the Echoes through the mountains throng,
 Oh, with what echoes on the board they fell!
 And long halloos and screams, and echoes loud,
 Echoes and waterfalls, and pointed crags
 With speed and echoes loud of trampling hoofs
 Give back faint echoes from the historian's page;
 An iron knell! with echoes from afar
 And lend the echoes of his sacred shell,
 With shouts we raised the echoes;—stiller sounds

 So spake Sir Eglamore, and pressed
 By thee, Sir Eglamore!
 Thought Eglamore, by which I swore Eglantine. "Thou Eglantine, so bright with sunny
 showers,
 A happy Eglantine!
 'Mid its own bush of leafless eglantine—
 Of eglantine, and through the shady woods,
Egremont. And down the Enna, far as Egremont,
 He travelled back to Egremont; and thence,
Egremont's. To Egremont's Domains and Castle fair,
Egremound. The noble Boy of Egremound.
Egypt. If for Greece, Egypt, India, Africa,
 Of Egypt, from a rock conveyed
 Of Egypt, unsubverted, undissolved—
 Till Egypt sees her antient fame outvied.
Egyptian. Her skin was of Egyptian brown:
 Wreckled Egyptian monument:
 Egyptian tombs unlock their dead,
 Fetched by our art, the Egyptian Maid
 Prefigured to his sense the Egyptian Lady.
 King Arthur led the Egyptian Maid,
 O'er the wide realm, as o'er the Egyptian plain
 To fertilise the whole Egyptian plain
 Upon the moral law. Egyptian Thebes,
 Now, when oppression, like the Egyptian plague,
Egyptian's. The old Egyptian's emblematic mark.
Eh. And came to—what's your title—eh? your Eight. Alas! 'tis the sound of the eight o'clock bell.

 She was eight years old, she said;
 'Tis eight o'clock—a clear March night,
 From eight o'clock till five.
 "Eight weary weeks, through rock and clay,
 In this platform, eight feet square,
 No, not a horse of all the eight,
 Eight sorry carts, no less a train!
 He spake, and eight brave sons straightway
 —Stand forth, my Sons!—these eight are mine,
 These Eight, and this is a day of pride!
 Like those eight Sons—who, in a ring,

Eldred. There again! 'Tis my husband's foot.
 Good Eldred
 Oh, Eldred, I shall never be able
 Eldred, you are a father.
 Oh, Eldred, you will die alone.

Elegy. Lines from the churchyard elegy of Gray.

Element. Whose natural element was freedom—

Stop—
Through the wide element ? or have you marked
With aught that breathes the ethereal element,

Elemental. Extracts from Nature's elemental strife;

Elements. On whom the elements their rage might wreak ;

And move in terror of the elements ;
Surpasses aught these elements can show.

Elevate. To elevate our intellectual being ;

To stir, to soothe, or elevate ?
To elevate the more-than-reasoning Mind,

Elevated. Of elevated thoughts ; a sense sublime

Sweeps now along this elevated ridge ;
Into elevated gladness ;
To breathe an elevated mood, by form

Elevates. The faith that elevates the just,

Concord that elevates the mind, and stills.
Or elevates the Mind, intent to weigh
It touches, it confirms, and elevates,

Elevation. At such small elevation from the ground

Elevation—continued.

An elevation, and a sanctity,
Trust the elevation which had made me one
Who, from her sovereign elevation, gazed
Beyond its natural elevation raised
Uttering, for elevation of our thought,

Elevation. Both will be here before eleven.
The clock gives warning for eleven ;
Elf. Betray the Elf that loves to dwell.

Elfin. Begone, thou fond presumptuous Elf,
Modest, yet withal an Elf
Or if the Fancy, too industrious Elf,

Effin. An elfin pool so sheltered that its rest
When all the world acknowledged elfin sway ?
She was an elfin pinnace ; lustily

Eldure. The royal Eldure, who leads the chase
Thus Eldure, by words, relieved his chagging
heart.

" I do not blame thee," Eldure replied ;
" Believe it not," said Eldure ; " respect
Until king Eldure, with full consent

Eljah. Such as by Cherith on Elijah called ;
Eliza's. In great Eliza's golden time.
That, in Eliza's golden days, a Knight

Ellen. " The key I must take, for my Ellen is dead."
Fair Ellen Irwin, when she sate
By Ellen was rejected.

Fair Ellen saw it as it came,
Thus died the beauteous Ellen,
The grave of lovely Ellen ;
Was hapless Ellen.—No one touched the ground

Such fate was hers.—The last time Ellen danced,
—Beside the cottage in which Ellen dwelt
—' Ah why,' said Ellen, sighing to herself,

Thus, in her Mother's hearing Ellen spake,
The Child whom Ellen and her Mother loved
Which hapless Ellen now was doomed to feel :

Her child should die ; as Ellen now exclaimed,
Ellen's. Heart-broken, upon Ellen's grave
By Ellen's side the Bruce is laid ;

Of the fresh sower, but of poor Ellen's tears
Committed by forsaken Ellen's hand
But the green stalk of Ellen's life was snapped,

From Ellen's thoughts ; had perished to her mind
With such, in their affliction.—Ellen's fate,
Elm. No swinging sign-board creaked from cottage

elm
Of scarcely seven years' growth, beneath the Elm
Like ivy, round some ancient elm, they twine

That he hath been an Elm without his Vine,
And round the humming elm, a glimmering scene !
Startling the golden hills. A wide-spread elm

The fleece-encumbered flock—the JOVPUL ELM,
Elms. See Road-elms.
Some say that they are beeches, others elms—

Her road elms rustling thin above my head,
Inexorable summons ! Lofty elms,
Where elms for many and many a league in files

Spread by a brotherhood of lofty elms,
Under the covert of these clustering elms.
The shadows of the breezy elms above

And, looking up to those enormous elms,
And when these lofty elms once more appeared
From these tall elms ; the cottage-clock struck

His old employments, goes to field or wood, . . . 878
Employments. That but which on the hills so oft employs . . .
The hut which from the hills his eyes employs . . . 612
Which Nature studiously employs to thwart . . . 736
Emporium. That great emporium, chronicle at once . . .
To the great City, an emporium then . . . 708
Empowers. The other that empowers him to perceive . . .
Empress. Empress of Night! are gladdened by thy . . .
beams; . . . 459

Emptied. Fresh emptied of spectators. Twice five . . .
years . . . 674
Emptiness. From dread of emptiness or dearth, . . . 227
Perpetual emptiness! unceasing change! . . . 307
Of Providence, such emptiness at length . . . 309
The child that might have led him; Emptiness . . . 657
Faith given to vanity and emptiness; . . . 712
And change, and emptiness, these freaks of Nature . . . 788

Empty. See Never-empty.

The empty loom, cold hearth, and silent wheel, . . . 29
Within those empty walls. I too have seen her; . . . 47
Or the empty thing that they would wish to be . . . 70
Nothing but silence and empty space; . . . 80
Now with her empty can the Maiden turned away: . . . 87
I look—the sky is empty space; . . . 110

The empty house when he comes home; . . . 162
And empty thy late home, . . . 169
Does like an empty bucket mount. . . . 245
An empty noise of death the battle's roar, . . . 316
Heaven upon earth's an empty boast; . . . 337
With images, and crowns, and empty cars; . . . 346
And, for a moment, filled that empty Throne. . . . 365
Bare breast I take and an empty head.— . . . 401
Of future vanishing like empty dreams) . . . 426
An idle form, the Word an empty sound! . . . 445
Is empty of repose. . . . 479
When empty terrors overawe, . . . 492
On empty air! That name will keep its hold . . . 516
On Palace empty and disconsolate! . . . 563
And threshold steps were empty; fast asleep . . . 642
Of loneliness gave way to empty noise . . . 652
Under the pealing organ. Empty thoughts! . . . 653
Moonlight and stars, and empty streets, and sounds . . . 697
That legalised exclusion, empty pomp . . . 717
Spared not the empty throne, and in proud haste . . . 718
I crossed the square (an empty area then!) . . . 719
Stood empty of all shape of life, and silent . . . 807
With empty actions and vain passions stuffed, . . . 835
And the long-privileged house left empty—swept . . . 861
The habitations empty! or perchance . . . 878
Then execration is an empty sound. . . . 878

Empurpled. How, with empurpled cheeks and . . .
pained eyes, . . . 364
Empurpled hills, conspicuously renewing . . . 807
Empyrean. Share their empyreal spirits—yea, . . . 178
Forth towards empyreal Heaven, . . . 332
Strains that call forth upon empyreal ground . . . 335
Of shouting Angels, and the empyreal thrones— . . . 575
Who dwell on earth, yet breathe empyreal air, . . . 735
From thy empyreal throne, the elect of earth . . . 804
Grain-finctured, drenched in empyreal light; . . . 893
In the empyrean. Underneath that pomp . . . 317
Empurpled. A lofty Dome, that dared to emulate . . .
That would emulate a star. . . . 324

Emulates. Whose azure depth their colour emulates, . . .
Emulates. Whose azure depth their colour emulates, . . . 508

Emulation. Now flush'd as Hebe, Emulation rose ;
By generous Emulation taught to rise,
Emulative. Fell on thy tomb ; but emulative power
Emulous. Stones of all hues, gem emulous of gem,
So emulous of Macedonian fame,
Stone lift its forehead emulous of stone
En. Round fire-side treason-parties en famille ?
Enable. 'Moré deeply, yet enable me to bear
Enabled. Which have enabled this enormous Culprit
Swayed, and thereby enabled to contend . . .
Enabled me to pause for choice, and walk . . .
Some trace am I enabled to retain . . .
Is it enabled to maintain its hold . . .
Are each and all enabled to perceive . . .
Enables. When reason that enables him to be
That penetrates, enables us to mount, . . .
Enables them to be and to perform, . . .
Enabling. And as it shook, enabling the hind roots
Raised for enabling this penurious stream . . .
Enact. "Do Thou my sovereign will enact . . .
Or Strollers are they, furnished to enact . . .
Of all who suffer wrong, and to enact . . .
To see an English lord enact a fool . . .
Enamelled. See Flower-enamelled.
Enamoured. And hence the father of the enamoured
Youth,
Else will the enamoured Monk too surely find
Turn from the sight, enamoured Muse—we must ;
Where the enamoured sunny light
She fastens on the boy enamour'd eyes,
At leisure, how the enamoured youth was driven,
Enamoured, so the fable runs ; but they . . .
Encasing. With honour ; which, encasing by the power
Enchain. Thou to his dangers dost enchain . . .
And joys of distant home my heart enchain . . .
Enchained. What time the feet at Aulis lay en-chained.
Of gospel-truth enchained in harmonies
O'er which enchained by science he had loved
By his malicious wit ; then, all enchained . . .
Enchanted. Charmed the tall circle of the enchanted steeps.
Whence lutes and voices down the enchanted woods
A hook that is enchanted.
Charms the tall circle of th' enchanted steeps.
When fragrant scents beneath th' enchanted tread
In that divine embrace enchanted lay ;
Enchanter. The sage enchanter. Merlin's subtle schemes ;
The pleased Enchanter was aware . . .
Of the Enchanter indolence hath called Enchanter's. Suddenly raised by some enchanter's
power,
Enchanting. Between thy lofty rocks. Enchanting show
And rustling leaves. Enchanting age and sweet !
Enchantment. As by enchantment, an obscure retreat
Swarmed with enchantment, till his spirit sank,
'Tis a note of enchantment ; what ails her ? She sees
And unreprieved enchantment led us on
Fulfilling (could enchantment have done more ?) Enchantments. Of dire enchantments faced and overcome
Enchantress. Nina, the good Enchantress, shed . . .
A prime enchantress—to assist the work,
What witchcraft, mild enchantress, may with thee Enchants. Yea, all, that now enchants thee, from the day
Enchased. A silver cross enchased with Flowers of France
Encincture. Hath reached the encincture of that gloomy sea
Shall wound the tender sod. Encincture small, Encincture's. Though with the Encincture's special sanctity
Encircle. And as his native hills encircle ground . . .
Lift, and encircle with a cloudy chair, . . .
Encircled. See Rock-encircled.
Encircled by familiar faces.
Encircling. The encircling laurels, thick with leaves,
The encircling ground, in native turf arrayed,
The encircling turf into a barren clod ; . . .
The encircling region vividly express . . .
And from encroachment of encircling heath : . . .
Enclasp. Whose infant arms enclasp the shrine
Enclasp'd. For safety, they of yore enclasp'd the Cross
Enclose. A structure stands, which two bare slopes enclose
Mark the concentrated hazels that enclose . . .
These venerable mountains now enclose . . .
Half grot, half harbour—proffers to enclose . . .
Where ancient trees this convent-ple enclose,
Enclosed. Ah ! see her helpless Charge ! enclosed
Into my spirit, when I paced, enclosed
How soothed, when in thick bower enclosed,
Enclosed when he was stronger ; . . .

Enclosed—continued.
"With Mother's pity in her breast enclosed . . .
Enclosed his uncrusted body sweet.— . . .
To drive their prey enclosed within a ring . . .
Pieces of money carefully enclosed, . . .
Enclosed between an upright mass of rock . . .
Each, in its ornamental scroll, enclosed ; . . .
By which, and under which, we are enclosed . . .
Enclosure. See Inclosure.
This delicate Enclosure shows . . .
So far from the holy enclosure was cast, . . .
The enclosure of this churchyard ground ; . . .
That opened from the enclosure of green fields . . .
To have one Enclosure where the voice that speaks
Busy in that enclosure ; while the rill, . . .
Enclosures. Through bare enclosures stretches, 'till its line . . .
Encormiums. Of the encormiums by my Friend pronounced . . .
Encompassed. By those huge rocks encompassed
round.
Encompassed me on every side . . .
With rocks encompassed round . . .
What dreams encompassed ? Was the intruder nursed
What pleasure 'nce encompassed those sweet names
By whom we were encompassed. Taking leave
With rocks encompassed, save that to the south . . .
Encounter. The starts and sallies of our last encounter
Ay, what shall we encounter next ? This issue—
Encounter, and to narrow seas
Must be again encounter.—Such a stream . . .
Encountered. Hardships for the brave encountered
Dread trials ! yet encountered and sustained . . .
By us with hope encountered, be upset ;—
Where spear encountered spear, and sword with sword
And everything encountered or pursued . . .
'Tis one encountered here and everywhere ; . . .
On every side encountered ; in despite Encountering. And feuds, where, clan encountering clan,
Of that small town encountering thus, they filled,
Encounters. Encounters, armed for work of pain and
death.
Encouraged. Like a scared Bird encouraged to renew
Encouraged, sanctioned, chiefly for that end ;
My Song, encouraged by the grace . . .
Encouraged of celestial power ; . . .
Encouraged and endeared the strain of words
Encouraged by the imperial eye,
Encouraged and dismissed, till choice was made
Of freedom which encouraged me to turn . . .
Encouraged with a martyr's confidence ; . . .
Hope after hope, encouraged and destroyed.
Encouragement. Encouragement to sport or play ;
Brought less encouragement, and unto these . . .
Encouragement, and energy, and will, . . .
He never felt encouragement nor hope . . .
And grave encouragement, by song inspired ?
Encouragement, hath ceased to look that way.
Encourager. Was with me, my encourager and guide
Encouraging. A bright, encouraging, example shows ;
In a soft clime encouraging the soul
Encroach. While young delights on old encroach, Encroached. Hence, if dejection has too oft encroached
Encroaching. Whose shades have never felt the encroaching axe . . .
Unsociably sequestered, and encroaching
Encroachment. Not so the ethereal vault ; encroachment none . . .
And from encroachment of encircling heath ; . . .
Encroachments. And sure encroachments of infirmity,
Encrust. Till thou with crystal head-drops didst encrust
Encrusted. (With shells encrusted, dark with briny weeds)
Encumbered. See Fleece-encumbered, Stone-encumbered.
And floors encumbered with rich show . . .
Through a strait passage of encumbered ground, Encumbrance. Assailed from all encumbrance of our time,
Encumbrances. From the encumbrances of mortal life,
End. And whensoever my course shall end, . . .
Nor stop but where creation seems to end, . . .
And end my days upon the peaceful flood.—
As if because her tale was at an end,
Till now I did not think my end had been so near.
They placed me—there to end life's pilgrimage,
May my end be ! Soon will this voice be dumb :
"O welcome sentence which will end though late,"
To end her wrongs. But if the blind Man's tale
Would fail you ere our journey's end be reached,
Were present, to the end that we might hear . . .
This last device must end my work.—Methinks
In which a man may come to his end, whose crimes

Ending—continued.

- And there his sorrow ended 287 Ellen Irwin 48
 The mournful passion ended 324 Ode 1814 88
 Has ended, though no Clerk, with "God be praised!" 394 Countess' Pillar 14
 He ended,—or she heard no more; 402 White Doe 588
 Or the mute rapture ended in a sigh—
 The Spirit ended his mysterious rite,
 So ended, disappointment could be none,
 And ended with such mockery. Be wise,
 Soon ended, and together on we passed
 Else sooner ended, I have borne in mind
 Ended in this,—that we had crossed the Alps.
 But, when he ended, there was in his face
 Was ended, that long anxious day, I learned,
 And, when she ended, I had little power
 Ended; and, from the stillness that ensued
 That it is ended." At these words be turned—
 In pain commenced, and ended without peace:
 The Matron ended—nor could I forbear
 Begun and ended within three days' space.
 Are ended, and her ears have heard the cry
 And, when that ending was ended, stood
- Ending. See Never-ending.
 A never never ending song,
 Slow to begin, and never ending;
 As if her song could have no ending;
 Her new-born Babe; dire ending of bright hope!
 Ending in dust; of upright magistrates.
- Endless. Even here, amid the sweep of endless
 woods,
 Thy cliffs; the endless waters of thy vales;
 Inmate of lonesome Nature's endless year;
 A pledge of endless bliss in acts of early piety,
 That come and go with endless play,
 For endless constancy, and placid truth;
 With other names, an endless string;
 For endless industry. When day was gone,
 And many an endless, endless lake,
 She lifts her head for endless spring,
 In endless union, earth and sea above."
 Your squadrons to an endless flight of birds
 With Order dwell, in endless youth?
 And hope of endless peace in me grew bold:
 Before me in my endless way
 In glory will they sleep and endless sanctity.
 And folly cursed with endless memory:
 To bowers of endless love!
 Thy pleased associates—light as endless May Whence good works formed an endless retinue:
 Endless history that lies
 "The which would endless matrimony make;"
 Books! 'tis a dull and endless strife:
 And she made answer "ENDLESS SORROW!"
 Are linked in endless chase;
 Were endless imitation.
 To pant slow up the endless Alp of life.
 In common things—the endless store of things,
 Protracted among endless solitudes;
 By youthful squires; adventures endless, spun
 Of shadowy things work endless changes,—there,
 Her endless streets, a transient visitant:
 Thou endless stream of men and moving things!
 Endless, here opening widely out, and there
 Great Spirit as thou art, in endless dreams
 Hence endless occupation for the Soul,
 Faith in life endless, the sustaining thought
 Whereon their endless generations dwell.
 From sleep, and dwell with God in endless love.
 Of endless agitation. Here you stand,
 Through shades and silent rest, to endless joy."
 Wishes and endless schemes; by daylight walked
 To play on water, or in endless chase
 And prove with endless puns a monarch's power,
 And let that heir of Glory's endless day
- Endlessly. Their myriads?—endlessly renewed,
 And all the landscape, endlessly enriched
 Now disbelieving; endlessly perplexed
- Endow. A mystery potent human love to endow
- Endowed. So speaking, and by fervent love endowed
 The gentlest Paet, with free thoughts endowed,
 Further to force their way, endowed its trunk
 Bear witness Truth, endowed with holy powers
 Of forms and colours, passive, yet endowed
 Endowed with various power to search the soul;
 Endowed by Nature with her fairest gifts
 So moulded, joined, abstracted, so endowed
 A human creature, howsoever endowed,
 By Nature; men endowed with highest gifts,
 Nor sparingly endowed with worldly wealth,
 In spot so parsimoniously endowed,
 Though inconceivably endowed, too dim
 But by the great Artificer endowed
 Hence, for this Favourite—lavishly endowed
 With which the Cure not long had been endowed:
 Yet is the creature rational, endowed
 For see the universal Race endowed
 And in good works; and him, who is endowed
- Endowment. Alas! the endowment of immortal
 power
- Endowments. By their endowments, good or great,

- Ends. Which you've collected for the noblest ends,
 That things will work to ends the slaves of the world
 Of love in all its shapes, beginnings, ends;
 And there it ends;—if this be not enough.
 Were there not eyes that see, and for good ends,
 Maintained, for peaceful ends beyond our view.
 And sometimes, just as listening ends
 Whose means are fair and spotless as his ends."
 Desires whose course in folly ends,
 And there the pathway ends.
 Of goodness, for most gracious ends—
 —Here ends my Tale: for in a trice
 Where holy ground begins, unhallowed ends,
 To have my ends, maintain my rights,
 For whose dire ends tears flow, and blood is spilt,
 Sounder and therefore holier than the ends
 A moment ends the fervent din,
 Proofs thickening round her that on public ends
 Power hath been given to please for higher ends
 By means refined attaining purest ends,
 Cheerfully led to individual ends
 (If with unworldly ends and aims compared)
 By struggling with the crowd for present ends.
 In France, the men, who, for their desperate ends,
 To suit my ends; I moved among mankind
 To the great ends of Liberty and Power.
 To love as prime and chief, for there fear ends,
 "So ends my dolorous tale, and glad I am
 The ends of being would secure, and win
 Beginning, ends in servitude—still painful,
 On outward things, with formal inference ends;
 For less important ends those phantoms move,
 Swayed by such motives, to such ends employed;
 Whose ends are gained? Behold an emblem here
 That satisfies and ends in perfect rest.
- Endue. And thought endue thee with all truth—
 I might endue some airy phantasies
- Endued. So that it seems a thing endued with sense:
 But with majestic lowliness endued,
 As noble as the best endued,
 And with a deeper peace endued
 Through all her nerves with finer sense endued,
 But 'tis endued with power to stay,
 Of Powers endued with visible form, instinct
 —He who, though thus endued as with a sense
 With a congenial function art endued
 That some dramatic tale, endued with shapes
 With shrinking sensibility endued,
- Endues. Endues her conscience with external life
- Endurable. 'Twill make a thing endurable, which

- Endurance. Suffering what no endurance could assuage,
 Endurance, foresight, strength, and skill; 186
 That vision of endurance and repose 226
 At last, or glorious, by endurance won 661
 And pleasure in endurance. Much she thought,
 He deems their colours shall endure
- Endure. He deems their colours shall endure
 A deed that I would shrink from:—but to endure,
 For self-delighting fancy to endure
 —It looks as if it never could endure
 Even the feeblest may endure
 In time's abyss, are privileged to endure
 A fate that has endured and will endure,
 And he had many hardships to endure:
 My mansion with its arbour shall endure;—
 "Oh! God, I can endure no more!"
 Wreaths that endure affliction's heaviest shower,
 The immortal Mind craves objects that endure:
 Dissolve that beauty, destined to endure,
 Must perish;—how can they this slight endure?
 Must still have sad or vexing thoughts to endure,
 If this endure, farewell, for us, all good!
 We can endure that He should waste our lands,
 Ability like splendour to endure:
 As boundless patience only could endure?
 When Soul was destined to endure
 Or glory, not a vestige seems to endure,
 And melts; but grief devout that shall endure,
 Bright liquid mansions, fashioned to endure
 "Tis meet that I endure your scorn;
 *Mid Heaven-born flowers that shall for aye endure,
 Not utterly unworthy to endure
 And hardships manifold did I endure,
 Through every part in symmetry, to endure,
 As tempted more; more able to endure,
 From all that haughtier kinds endure
 And ancient ordinance, shall endure.
 Endure that silence, and broke out in song,
 Fate harder still! had he to endure assaults
 Long as these mighty rocks endure,—
 If but by labour won, and fit to endure
 To endure this state of meagre vassalage,
 That shall endure as long as man endures,
 How far they travel, and how long endure;
 Of objects that endure; and by this course
 Of building up a Work that shall endure.
 Of various tempers; to endure and note 751

Endure—continued.

Will give me patience to endure the things
Should be permitted, oftentimes, to endure . . .
For adoration thou endur'st; endure . . .
There shall endure,—existence unexposed . . .
They may endure long as the sea surrounds
And, when I fall, and can endure no more,
Nor could endure the weight of his own shame.
To endure for aye.—The Vicar, taking note
Shall it endure?—Shall enmity, and strife,
Endured. Full long endured in hope of just reward,
These fears can never be endured; . . .
A fate that has endured and will endure . . .
Propitious hour! had we, like them, endured
And all that was endured; for, in himself
But this endured not; his good humour soon
All night the storm endured; and, soon as help
Inviting penance, fruitlessly endured;
Or soul endured a transfer in the mart . . .
Of aught unworthily conceived, endured . . .
The sad privation was by him endured.
Much too from war endured till new abodes
Endures. But never to be extinct while Earth endures. . . .
That shall endure as long as man endures,
Endures! That thou endurest; heavy though that weight be, . . .
For adoration thou endur'st; endure . . .
Enduring. See Long-enduring.
Where, as before, the enduring Ass . . .
Hence, while we gaze, a more enduring fear!
Can thy enduring quiet gently raise . . .
Now, when the frost was past enduring,
But with high objects, with enduring things—
Knowledge and increase of enduring joy . . .
The soul of Beauty and enduring Life . . .
Creative and enduring, may become . . .
Them the enduring and the transient both . . .
Keen and enduring, which the mind and heart,
Than with the forest's more enduring growth,
Endymion. The fair Endymion couched on Latmoshill; . . .
On the closed eyes of young Endymion fell,
Enemies. And scorn,—against all enemies prepared,
Have reached his ear—you have had enemies.
Enemies!—of his own coinage. That may be,
Are not the enemies that move my fears.
Thy enemies are neither weak nor few;
Him and his enemies between! . . .
For perfect triumph o'er your Enemies.
For Thou art angry with Thine enemies!
Soon to become more dreaded enemies
An emblem yields to friends and enemies
Friends, enemies, of all parties, ages, ranks,
Enemy. Oswald my special enemy, if you
Come to me—I'm no enemy:
Or overtake some unknown enemy?—
Far—far more abject, is thine Enemy:
"Thou Enemy, my bane and blight!
Escaped as from an enemy, we turn
Of this new enemy. Tyrants, strong before
Against an enemy, I panted up . . .
Enemy's. And thus they foil their enemy's despite.
Energies. Union with those primeval energies
Virtues laid low, and mouldering energies.
Her bane, her vital energies recruit . . .
Upon earth's native energies; forgetting
Than her destructive energies, attend . . .
For by superior energies; more strict
An equal among mightiest energies;
Energy. A salient spring of energy; I mounted
Both hands with rival energy
The purest stream of patient Energy.
Of those who, in that dauntless energy,
A tempest, a redundant energy,
Of fortitude and energy and love,
That energy by which he seeks the truth,
To blazon—power and energy detached
Encouragement, and energy, and will,
Nor energy, nor fortitude—a calm
That with majestic energy from earth . . .
Meek to admit; the active energy, . . .
Life, I repeat, is energy of love . . .
And energy to conquer and repel—
Enervate. The Pictish cloud darkens the enervate land
To enervate and defile. . . .
Enfeebled. And season favours." To enfeebled
Power,
Enfold. Slow-travelling down the western hills, to enfold
The mysteries that cups of flowers enfold, . . .
Which soon the morning shall enfold, . . .
Her subtle essence to enfold,
Through the beloved retreats your arms enfold!
With prompt embrace all beauty to enfold,
'Tis said, fantastic ocean doth enfold . . .
What Maro loved, shall we enfold? . . .
Enfolds. Enfolds within its core. The faith he mine,
Enfolds her?—is a rifted tomb . . .

Engage. Shall not disturb us; further I'll not engage;
In such peril to engage . . .
Enraptured,—could he for himself engage . . .
Let more substantial themes the pen engage,
Engaged. You might have noticed, busily engaged,
Engaged, o'er blazing hearth on clean swept floor,
Engagement. With no engagement, in his thoughts,
In such proud . . .
Engelberg. The sacred ENGELBERG, celestial Bands, Engender. Engender lightning, whence are falling showers. . . .
Engendered. Engendered between malice and true love, . . .
Engendered, hangs o'er Eildon's triple height; . . .
Engendering. Engendering in the blood of hale fourscore. . . .
Again engendering anguish, . . .
Engine. But what was made an engine to ensnare thee; . . .
I know no cheaper engine to degrade a man, . . .
While the tubed engine feels the inspiring blast, . . .
And the vast engine labouring in the mine, . . .
Enginery. Wielding her potent enginery to frame . . .
Engines. The engines of her pain, the tools . . .
Like engines; when will their presumption learn,
Are various engines working, not the same . . .
Engird. While they the Church engird with motion slow, . . .
Engirding. And visibly engirding Mona's Isle . . .
England. There's never a scholar in England knows
Nor, England! did I know till then . . .
From France to sheltering England came; . . .
Fame tells of groves—from England far away—
Like conquest would the Men of England see;
Beneath thee, that is England; there she lies,
Of England once again, and hear and see, . . .
England hath need of thee: she is a fen
England! the time is come when thou shouldst wean . . .
England! all nations in this charge agree!
Victorious England! bid the silent Art
O joy when the girdle of England appears!
Of England—who in hope her coast had won,
Darling of England! many a bitter shower
And scourges England struggling to be free:
But for what gain? if England soon must sink
The majesty of England interposed
Lavished on Him—that England may rebel
They called Thee MERRY ENGLAND, in old time;
Forbid it, Heaven!—and MERRY ENGLAND still "Slaves cannot breathe in England"—yet that boast . . .
Long-favoured England! be not thou misled
Young ENGLAND—what is then become of Old,
Of Dear Old England? Think they she is dead,
Back again to England steered . . .
Feeling what England lost when Reynolds died,
St. George of England! keep a watchful eye
The Rose of England suffers height,
Our shores in England,—from those loftiest notes
To England I returned, else (though assured
From the best youth in England their dear pride,
Their joy, in England; this, too, at a time
—Hail to the State of England! And conjoin
England, the ancient and the free, appeared
870 Excursion 7. 856
All England through, where nooks and slips of ground . . .
Of merry England, are obstructed less . . .
The unquestionable good—which, England, safe
England's. To Nelson, England's pride and treasure,
In whose collegiate shelter England's Flowers
On England's bosom; yet well pleased to rest,
Were England's native growth; and throughout Spain
And utter England's name with sadly-plausible voice.
England's illustrious sons of long, long ages; . . .
And filled our hearts with grief for England's shame?
It was the time when England's Queen . . .
No loyal rest while England's Crown . . .
For concord's sake and England's good, . . .
England's first Martyr, whom no threats could shake;
For England's shame, O Sister Realm! from wood,
Fixed on the frame of England's Church their sight,
Of England's Church; stupendous mysteries!
Is conscious of her want; through England's bounds, . . .
Of grateful England's overflowing Dead . . .
Will say, Ye disappeared with England's Glory!
Rich theme of England's fondest praise, . . .
"The frost of England's pride will soon be thawed;
While England's sceptered Sit
Where England's sovereigns sit in long array,

England's—continued.

Of rural England's cultivated vales
Of England's realm, this vale he might have seen
For England's bane.—When soothing darkness spreads
English. Him never saw I, nor the spot; but from an English Dame,
If every English church-yard were like ours;
Never did worthier lads break English bread;
Beside an English fire.
But such a one, on English ground,
Endeavouring, in our English tongue, to trace
Nor was there at that time on English land
How she wooed an English man;
And it was in the English tongue.
Our little English Robin;
Of English Emigrant.
That ceased not; on our English land
But no! he spake the English tongue,
While not an English Mountain we behold
Is then no nook of English ground secure
Of thy few words of the English speech:
The English ballad-singer's joy!
An English Boy, O thought of bliss!
In Gaelic, or the English tongue,
All, all are English. Oft have I looked round
Have forfeited their ancient English dower
Striking through English breasts the anarchy.
Yet sad as sweet,—for English words
Of English liberty?
From the clear spring of a plain English heart,
Blending as in a common English grove
Into his English breast, and spare to quake
Once more on English earth they stand:
On the plain steeples of our English Church,
An English ballad-singer. Private courts,
Than any other nook of English ground,
With strictness scarcely known on English ground.
An English Sovereign's brow I and to the throne
That true successor's fall of English hearts,
Retreat, within this nook of English ground.
To see an English lord enact a fool
Englishman. I called him Brother, Englishman, and Friend!
The moment to depart. An Englishman,
Englishmen. Honoured in France, the name of Englishmen.
When Englishmen by thousands were o'erthrown, Engraffed. To be engraffed on the top of his small edifice.
Engraffed far-fetched shapes on feelings bred.
Of wild belief engraffed on their names
Engrossed. Nor, if accosted now, in thought engrossed,
Attention was engrossed; and, thus amused,
By sixty-seven seditious-shops engrossed,
Engrossing. See Soul-engrossing.
Engulfed. Than for their fellow-sufferers engulfed.
Of a living ocean; or, to sink engulfed,
Not then was Deity engulfed; nor Man,
Engulph. That would engulph him soon in the ravenous sea—
Engulphed. Lost sight of it bewildered and engulphed;
Enhance. Touches him not. To enhance the wonder, see
Enhanced. A virtue, by which pleasure is enhanced, Enjoined. Which his own nature hath enjoined,— and why?
A passive stillness is enjoined.
To reason, and by conscience is enjoined;
Enjoining. Enjoining, as may best promote the aims Enjoins. Enjoins, while firm resolves await Wisdom enjoins; but if the thing we seek Enjoy. But like it, enjoy it, and thankfully eat.
But enjoy their own the more!
For manhood to enjoy his strength;
The treasures they enjoy to guard!
Such ground I from my very heart enjoy!
Contented if he might enjoy
Though I, alas! may ne'er enjoy
Do thou enjoy the calm empyreal air;
Content to observe, to achieve, and to enjoy.
Exclude a power to enjoy the vital beams
I lived and breathed; most grateful—if to enjoy.
Most grateful, if in such wise to enjoy
Whether to act, judge, suffer, or enjoy.
Have been permitted to enjoy the dawa;
Yet 'tis not to enjoy that we exist,
Enjoyed. To all that was enjoyed where'er he went,
And every day and every place enjoyed
Enjoyed by us in common.—To my hope
Enjoying. Expand, enjoying through their vernal hours
Enjoyment. But brings some past enjoyment to his mind;
Who more devout enjoyment with us took:
The spirit of enjoyment and desire,
Thyself thy own enjoyment,
He's at the top of his enjoyment!
In that enjoyment which with You abides,

Enjoyment—continued.

Her banners for festal enjoyment did wave
For my enjoyment meet in vision strange;
Rest from enjoyment only. Thanks poured forth
For hope and calm enjoyment;
'Tis said ENJOYMENT who averr'd
For my enjoyment. Would that I could now
Enjoyment haply handed down from times
And all enjoyment which the summer sun
Oh! next to such enjoyment of our youth,
Thought was not; in enjoyment it expired.
Shall lack not their enjoyment;—but how faint
Of unproved enjoyment; and is pleased
No less enjoyment from an abject choice.
The tribute of enjoyment, knowledge, health,
Enjoyments. Yet, whate'er enjoyments dwell
And elegant enjoyments, that are pure
My own enjoyments; or the power of truth
Of calm enjoyments, after eighty years,
Their manners, their enjoyments, and pursuits,
As our enjoyments, boundless.—From those heights Enjoys. With this "the blessings he enjoys to guard."
Hath something in it which the heart enjoys:—
Enjoys the walks his predecessors trod,
Enjoys the air it breathes.
What every natural heart enjoys?
Enkindled. Enkindled by the sun. He sate—and talked
Enlarge. Let us be fellow-labourers, then, to enlarge
The glimmering fires of Virtue to enlarge,
The forms of Nature, and enlarge her powers?
Enlarge. With bounty more and more enlarged,
Then followed Printing with enlarged command
Thus were my sympathies enlarged, and thus
And, as the horizon of my mind enlarged,
Preserved, enlarged, this freedom in himself?
Enlightened. Enlightened Teacher, gladly from thy hand
When our enlightened minds shall bless his sway;
Nowhere, dominion o'er the enlightened spirit
Protected, say enlightened, by his ear;
Not dark, nor yet enlightened, but by snow.
Enliven. And to enliven in the mind's regard Enlivened. See Lute-enlivened, Lyre-enliven'd.
A peace enlivened, not disturbed, by wreaths
Never enlivened with the liveliest ray
Enlivened, braced, by hardy luxuries,
Belivened happiness with joy o'erflowing,
Enlivening. A resolution, or enlivening thought?
Enlivening Hope display'd her cheerful ray,
Its fair adventures, its enlivening hopes,
Enmities. From little enmities and low desires,
Enmity. Banners at enmity with regal sway,
Enm' all that is at enmity with joy,
Feuds, factions, flatteries, enmity, and guile
At gravest heads, by enmity to France
Shall it endure?—Shall enmity and strife,
'Thro' wrathful Juno's far-famed enemy,
Enna. And down the Enna, far as Egremont,
Of Enna! is there not some nook of thine,
Ennerdale. Thus spake the homely Priest of Enner-
dale.
He had the lightest foot in Ennerdale:
Ennobled. Ennobled outwardly before my sight,
Ennobling. Great Nations, how ennobling thoughts depart
More of ennobling impulse from the past,
With these ennobling attributes conjoined
Composure, and ennobling Harmony.
Ennobling, venerable; sleep secure,
A balance, an ennobling interchange
Enormities. Enormities, which they at home reject!
Of those enormities, even thinking miads
Enormous. How busy all the enormous hive within,
Which have enabled this enormous Culprit
Built round by those white clouds, enormous clouds,
And to the enormous labour left his name,
Enormous, dragged, while side by side they sate,
But that enormous barrier holds it fast.
How busy the enormous hive within,
In waves, like two enormous serpents, wind
Between the pine's enormous boughs descry'd
In that enormous City's turbulent world
And, looking up to those enormous elms,
And yet not too enormous for the sound
Or forest, fettered the enormous axle-tree
Enough. Mohammedan and Christian. But enough;
He has been two years in his grave. Enough.
To think of it. Enough! you may depart.
Of truth, enough to dazzle and to blind,
And there it ends!—if this be not enough
Is it not enough that my ill stars
Were natural enough; but that I, trust,
We have enough—I wish indeed that I
'Tis fair enough for thee, my dove!
But 'tis good enough for thee.
Praise it is enough for me,
Enough for him to find
Enough by her dear side to breathe the air
Her face!—it was enough for me;

Enough—continued.
 Enough that all around is fair 223
 Fair Prime of life ! were it enough to gild 261
 Is deep enough to exclude the light of love, 273
When Philoctetes*
 1
 Enough of sorrow, wreek, and blight ;
 Of good things none are good enough !—
 Enough if in our hearts we know
 Have romped enough, my little Boy !
 My Country ! and 'tis joy enough and pride
 My ears did listen, 'twas enough to gaze ;
 Enough : my Country's cliffs I can behold,
Enough, if something from our hands have power
 Enough of garlands, of the Arcadian crook,
 More than enough ; a fault so natural
 Enough—if eyes, that sought the fountain-head
 Enough ! for see, with dim association
 With just enough life's comforts to procure,
 Enough of Science and of Art ;
 Am I enough beloved.
 —Enough for one soft vernal day,
 Enough of climbing toil !—Ambition treads
 Enough ;—before us lay a painful road,
 I leave unsearched : enough that memory clings,
 And coats enough to smother nine.
 'Twas well enough, when summer came,
 Enough to warm her for three days.
 Was yet not bold enough to write of Thee.
 Enough of rose-bud lips, and eyes
 And, when it likes him, joy enough them sendeth.
 'Tis sorrow enough on that visage to gaze,
 In glory immutable. But peace ! enough
 I play the loiterer : 'tis enough to note
 Till our joint savings had amassed enough
 Enough ;—the mighty concourse I surveyed
 Our argument. Enough is said to shew
 To many, neither dignified enough
 Of this I heard, and saw enough to make Enough of humble arguments ; recall,
 Was not this single confidence enough
 Head after head, and never heads enough
 To imitate, not wise enough to avoid ;
 Enough, 'tis true—could such a plea excuse
 But leave we this : enough that my delights
 Lived long enough, nor in the least survived
 " My Friend ! enough to sorrow you have given,
 Of privacy is deep enough to hide,
 Enough if notions seemed to be high-pitched,
 " Enough is told ! Here am I—ye have heard
 Who saw enough for blame and pitying love.
 Enough ;—I fear, too much.—One vernal evening,
 Be here retraced ;—enough that, by mishap
 That which he had been weak enough to do
 " Noise is there not enough in doleful war,
 Pangs are there not enough in hopeless love—
 With no unworthy prospect. But enough ;
 Enough to fill the present day with joy,
 Enough on these inferior things.
Enow. Enow there are on earth to take in charge
 Enow to stir for these ; yea, will I say,
Enquire. Failed in him ; and, not venturing to Enquire not if the fæery race
 With our own eyes—I could not but enquire—
 " Enquire," said I, " how much of mental power
 Take note of this ? When I began to enquire,
 Enquire of ancient Wisdom ; go, demand
 —Not for a happy land do I enquire,
 More winningly reserved ! If ye enquire Enquired. See Inquired.
 And what this place might be I then enquired.
 That seemed to cling upon me, she enquired
 We had returned together, she enquired
Enquiries. In these enquiries, with regret I speak, Enquiring. The maidens eye him with enquiring
 glance,
 Of man's enquiring gaze, but to his hope
 Nor to the Child's enquiring mind
Enquiry. What boots the enquiry ?—Neither friend nor foe
 Made many a fond enquiry ; and when they,
Enrapt. Nor is his spirit less enrapt, nor less
 Here let me gaze enrapt upon that eye,
 That one enrapt with gazing on her face
 Stirs not ; enrapt I gaze with strange delight,
 The enrapt, the beautiful, the young,
 Enrapt ; but brightest things are wont to draw
 Enrapt, as if his inward sense perceived Enraptured. See All-enraptured.
 With their enraptured vision see—
 He with enraptured voice will tell
 Enraptured,—could he for himself engage
 Shout which the enraptured multitude astounds !
 Enraptured Art draws from those sacred springs
 And when enraptured Dido shall receive Enrich. Of beauty never ceases to enrich
 Of what this stock hath long produced to enrich Enriched. Enriched the earth, or Faery of the woods

Enriched—continued.
 As when their breath enriched Thessalian air 210
 Enriched—too transient, were they not renewed 231
 But are we aught enriched in love and meekness ?
 Enriched and beautified his studious mind 281
 Not so enriched, not so adorned, to thee 576
 And all the landscape, endlessly enriched 585
 Sought you enriched with everything I prized,
 May fairly claim, by niggard age enriched 700
 Lurk in its cells—and thinks himself enriched, 741
 Enriched by mutual and reflected wealth, 781
 And gradually enriched with things of price,
 Enriched with knowledge his industrious mind ;
 The hoary grandsire felt himself enriched ;
 That, as the day thus far had been enriched
 But confident, enriched at every glance 789
 Our beautiful and quiet home, enriched 796
Enriching. Enriching and adorning. Unto thee, Enrolled. The laws to promulgate, enrolled and crowned ;
 Enrolled. Together in immortal books enrolled :
 For why—unless for liberty enrolled 860
 Shall live enrolled above the starry spheres 888
 Why sleeps the future, as a snake enrolled,
 To run before him, hath enrolled me yet 888
 Among ten thousand innocents, enrolled 888
 The sinless age, by conscience is enrolled, 888 Ensanguined. Hears combats whistling o'er the ensanguined heath :
 O Death ! the ensanguined yet triumphant wheels,
 Stilled by the ensanguined block of Fotheringay !
Ensculptured. That yet survive ensculptured on the walls 394
Enshrine. Than that which in Dodona did enshrine
 By love of heauty moved, to enshrine in verse 319
Enshrined. The Spirit of Antiquity—enshrined
 Enshrined for ages. Is not then the Art 334
 Burnt on with ever-strengthening light, enshrined
 And yet a spirit, there for me enshrined
 On earth, enshrined within the wandering ark ;
Enshrining. Substance and life to what I feel, enshrining, 758
Enshroud. The gloom that did its loveliness enshroud Enshrouds. Travelling where she from time to time enshrouds 461
Ensign. Ensign of civil power, weapon of war,
 Keep thou this ensign till the day 394
 They cried, " the Ensign in his hand ! 407
 And under one blest ensign serve the Lord 412 Ensigns. Spreading her peaceful ensigns, calls the swains 335
 Under the saintly ensigns three,
 Ensigns of mimic outrage are unfurled.
Enslave. Whose natural affection doubts enslave,
 And the one Man that laboured to enslave
 Let no mean hope your souls enslave ;
 Of cold mechanic battle do enslave.
 Not 'mid the World's vain objects that enslave
 To enslave whole nations on their native soil ;
Enslaved. By gross Utilities enslaved we need
 When most enslaved by gross realities !
Enslavers. Upon the proud enslavers of mankind !
Ensnare. But what was made an engine to ensnare
 thee 57
Ensnared. A Maiden innocent till ensnared by Clifford
 Had been ensnared by witchcraft. On the rock 64 Ensnarers. Of force that daunts, and cunning that ensnares !
Ensue. She knows that only from high aims ensue
 Untaught that soon such anguish must ensue,
 And faithful service of his heart in the worst that might ensue 91
 Or from my purpose ruin may ensue 105
 Her voice would utter, aught ensue 222
 Should e'er a kindlier time ensue 406
 And kindest intercourse ensue 475
 Whether of truth or virtue, to ensue 656
 Victorious, and composure would ensue 666
Ensued. In converse that ensued she nothing spake ;
 Meanwhile discourse ensued of various kind,
 Unknown to him, this dialogue ensued.
 If things ensued that wanted grace,
 The perturbation that ensued ;—ah, no !
 Whom no weak hopes deceived ; whose mind
 ensued,
 Came to the proof, nor grieved that there ensued
 And then a thoughtful pause ensued :
 Silence ensued. " O Jupiter, whose care
 I spare to tell of what ensued, the life 625
 Ensued a diffidence and modesty, 643
 The melancholy slackening that ensued 684
 Distress of mind ensued upon the sight,
 When a dead pause ensued, and no one stirred,
 Ended ; and, from the stillness that ensued
 Was greeted, in the silence that ensued,
 A pause ensued ; and with minuter care
 And closer industry. Of what ensued 788
 His parents laid in earth, no less ensued
 And pure, from further intercourse ensued ;

 By whom in that lone place espied ?
 Espied him on his legs sustained, blank, mute,
 And soon as I a glimpse of day espied,
 That no wright his continuance espied.
 Advancing, we espied upon the road
 And to my wish and to my hope espied
 Joined in a cold damp nook, espied a well
 Upon the slimy foot-stone I espied
 Within her chamber-casement she espied
 We there espied the object of our search,

 And, having once espoused, would never quit ;
Espy. I started—seeming to espy
 About the pendent nest, did thus espy
 And on or in, or near, the brook, espy
 And soon before me did espy
 Wonder to all who do the same espy,
 This Thorn you on your left espy ;
 Not Traveller gone from earth the heavens to espy !
 But, chancing to espy a path
 A goodly Vessel did I then espy
 Flowers we espy beside the torrent growing ;
 No faculty yet given me to espy
 And when he might his time aright espy,
 A single Glow-worm did I chance to espy ;
 Of hidden beauty have I chanced to espy
Esquire. See 'Squire.

 Knight, buegher, yeoman, and esquire,
Essay. Nature by sign or sound made no essay ;
 And with his coat did then essay
 I gladly would go somewhere in essay

 I, who essayed the nobler Stream to trace
 Urged by his Mother, he essayed to teach
Essays. And now the conqueror essays

 Establish sounder titles of esteem
 To establish something of a leader's sway :
 And to establish thankfulness of heart

Established. See 'Established, Re-established.
 And his is henceforth an established sway—
 Of periods fixed, and laws established, less
 Established in the land where they abide
 The love established between man and man,
 Established by the sovereign Intellect,
 Established seemingly a right to hold
 By will or by established ordinance,
 The outward ritual and established forms
 Embodied and established these high truths
 In rest established ; and the jarring thoughts

 Grave Gentry of estate and name,
 And cumbrous wealth—the shame of your estate ;
 Flourishing in fair estate,
 (Such the immunities of low estate,
 Lifting the boy to man's estate, had called
 On the lone mountain top, their chang'd estate.
 If man's estate, by doom of Nature yoked
 The estate of man would be indeed forlorn
 When he had crushed a plentiful estate
 Whether in soul, in body, or estate !
 That dignified and cheered a low estate ?

Eternal—continued.

It seems the Eternal Soul is clothed in thee
 Thanks to thy virtues, to the eternal youth
 And o'er the eternal snows, like Echo, bound;
 We know the arduous strife, the eternal laws
 The Eternal looks upon her sword that gleams,
 Their solemn joy—praising the Eternal Lord
 A labour worthy of eternal youth!
 Of God's eternal Word, the Voice of Time
 Eternal things; and, if need be, defy
 Eternal Lord! eased of a cumbersome load,
 Eternal blessings on the Muse,
 For Souls familiar with the eternal Voice;
 But Daughter of the Eternal Prime!
 Ancient of days! that to the eternal Sire,
 Glad HALLELUJAHs to the eternal King!
 The Soul's eternal interests to promote:
 From God's eternal justice. Pitiless
 She arrogates o'er heaven's eternal door,
 Protect them; and the eternal snow that daunts
 Till they have reached the eternal City—huilt
 She in her own would merge the eternal will:
 Intrudes on peace, I pray the eternal Sire
 Shall gild their passage to eternal rest.
 Blessings be with them—and eternal praise,
 Let Fancy trifle with eternal laws,
 One who would gather from eternal truth,
 In peace eternal; where desire and joy
 And trust in God—to whose eternal doom
 That, deaf and silent, read'th the eternal deep,
 Haunted for ever by the eternal mind,
 Of the eternal Silence: truths that wake,
 That guides the spirit to eternal day,
 The living Rock of God's eternal Word.
 Essential and eternal in the heart,
 Repose and hope among eternal things—
 "And what are things eternal?—powers depart,"
 To glorify the Eternal! What if these
 Of Time's eternal Master, and that peace,
 "Eternal Spirit! universal God,
 Vocal thanksgivings to the eternal King;
 Live through Heaven's eternal year;
 Of cities, 'mid the same eternal flow
 Eternal Lord! and from the world set free,
Eternally. Look thou to Eternity!
 Of dread eternity.
 The appropriate calm of blest eternity.
 Breathed from eternity; for, as a dart
 Bright as the glimpses of eternity,
 That to itself takes all, Eternity.
 To the Fountain whence Time and Eternity flow.
 And soul, to mingle with Eternity!
 And pain, hath powers to Eternity endeared.
 Fixed on the statutes of Eternity,
 For earthly sight. "Eternity and Time,"
 Here tutored for eternity.
 From the rock eternity!
 Into the deserts of Eternity.
 Thou Soul that art the eternity of thought,
 And, from the centre of Eternity
 Of earth devoted to eternity!"
 The types and symbols of Eternity,
 Boundless, or guide into eternity.
 Of human Being, Eternity, and God.
 Of life and death, time and eternity,
 With pain the regions of eternity.
 Lost in unsearchable eternity!"
 Eternity, as men constrain a ghost
 For time and for eternity; by faith,
 Far-stretching views into eternity.
 —Life, death, eternity! momentous themes
 Time wears the features of Eternity;
Etesian. Of gales Etesian or of tender thoughts.
Ether. Of ether, shining with diminished round,
 Of clouds that in cerulean ether blazed!
 Of ancient ether was no more,
 An ampler ether, a diviner air,
 And wide as ether her good-will;
 Through seas of ether, where the ruffling sway
 Through many a long blue field of ether,
 The fairest, brightest, hues of ether fade;
 Blue ether still surrounds him—yet—and yet;
 Forthwith that little cloud, in ether spread
 The Moon from cloudless ether sees
 To the blue ether and bespangled plain;
 Might range the starry ether for a crown
 Balanced in ether he will never tarry,
 Bright, as if through ether steering,
 Like marble, white, like ether, pure;
 Carrying through ether, in perpetual round,
 The spotless ether of a maiden life;
 "Pure, cloudless, ether; and the star of eve
Ethereal. Of the ethereal Orb there came Ethereal minstrel! pilgrim of the sky!
 With aught that breathes the ethereal element,
 Profound of night's ethereal blue:
 Or racing o'er your blue ethereal field
 In hushed quiet o'er the ethereal-deep
 Of power ethereal and celestial grace,
 Thy functions are ethereal

Ethereal—continued.

Descend from this ethereal height;
 Or pencil pregnant with ethereal hues,
 The thousand links of that ethereal chain;
 Nor wants her eyeball an ethereal glance;
 Of yon ethereal summits white with snow,
 Have marred this Work; the calm ethereal grace,

 Which God's ethereal storehouses afford;
 And widening circuit of ethereal sky.
 Upwhirled, and flying o'er the ethereal plain
 Pierces the ethereal vault; and ('mid the gleam

Even—continued.

At morn, and eve, and midnight's silent hour,
Moistened from age to age by dewy eve,
Now when the star of eve comes forth to shine
Meek eve shuts up the whole usurping host
Thine is the tranquil hour, purple Eve!
At eve; how softly then
But most his might he sheds on the eve of May.
And hither home I came when it was eve;
Woofing her varying charms from eve to morn.
There watch at eve her lover's sun-gilt sail
Or lost at eve in sudden mist the day
That eve, the Star of Brunswick shone
Of morning beautified, or purple eve;
To land at Calais on the very eve
To him who slept at noon and wakes at eve.
On the glad eve of its dear holidays,
"At morn or eve, in your retired domain,
And slender stem, while here I sit at eve,
Lo I in such neighbourhood, from morn to eve,
In course of nature to a sober eve.
Pure, cloudless, ether; and the star of eve
Heard now and then from morn till latest eve,
Even. (Partial list.) See Yester-even.
Upon the coast of Cyprus? Yes, even so,
But I'll be even with him—here again
Even as I do; but I should loathe the light,
Even to the shedding of some natural tears
Even while he printed kisses on the cheek
And in her ample heart loving even me—
Whose impious folds unwrapped even thee; and truth.
"Even such as his may be my lot.
Take not even a finger-joint:
They from morning to even take whatever is given;
Not undiversified though smooth and even;
Soul-soothing Art! whom Morning, Noontide,
Even,
Its even teur, and the foe was quelled,
Are weighed by Providence, in balance even;
The thyme her purple, like the blush of Even;
Shall hymns of praise resound at morn and even;
From roseate hues, far kenne'd at morn and even,
Her scales with even hand, and culture mould
Sweet is thy voice at pensive even;
—Night or day, at even or morn;
Even so fare I; and therefore, I thee pray
Him even the slow-paced waggon leaves behind.
Will live, and spread, and kindle: even such minds
In such an even balance, that the heart
—No vulgar joy is his, at even tide
Ev'n so, by vernal Nature guarded, here
Of purple lights and even vernal plains.
In its late course of even days with all
Even files of strangers merely seen but once,
In the deep stillness of a summer even
They know if I be silent, morn or even:
Evening. See Winter-evening.
The history of a poet's evening hear?
Now, while the solemn evening shadows sail,
Last evening sight, the cottage smoke, no more,
Before us, tinged with evening hues,
—The evening darkness gathers round
And peeps the far-off spire, his evening bourn!
The loitering traveller hence, at evening, sees
And beams of evening, slipping in between,
Fades like the lustre of an evening cloud;
Those holy turrets tipped with evening gold,
Left his mind still as a deep evening stream.
When into storm the evening sky is wrought,
To-morrow evening. When, upon the plank,
While sweetly shone the evening sun
—But see, the evening star comes forth!
While to that mountain-lamb she gave its evening
meal.
Evening now unbinds the fetters
It was a July evening; and he sate
Entering, when evening was far spent, the house.
But added, that, the evening being calm,
Glittered at evening like a starry sky;
Early at evening did it burn—and late,
Both old and young, was named THE EVENING STAR.
Recovered heart. That evening her best fare
With Luke that evening thitherward he walked:
The Cottage which was named the EVENING STAR
When evening dews begin to fall.
And, when at evening we pursue our walk
And there I sit at evening, when the steep
Not lifting yet the head that evening bowed;
Come forth at evening, keeps Thee still and mute;
From morn to evening dews.
Among the evening clouds.
At evening in his homeward walk
From One who, in the evening of his day,
Evening spreads throughout the west!
When it reveals, in evening majesty,
Fresh as if Evening brought their natal hour,
Fair is that land as evening skies,
And, ere the light of evening fall,
Ll, in the vale, the mists of evening spread!

Evening—continued.

It is a beauteous evening, calm and free,
Dark and more dark the shades of evening fell;
Of many waters, or as evening blends
As pensive Evening deepens into night.
Now, while a farewell gleam of evening light
Fair Star of evening, Splendour of the west,
When the stillness of evening bath deepened its
roar;
Meek Nature's evening comment on the shows
'Mid evening hues, along the horizon line,
And when, ere fall of evening dew,
The owl of evening and the woodland fox
With evening lights, advance in long array
Gloiges of evening, as ye there are seen
When a soft summer gale at evening parts
His first sweet evening yellow.
At evening, when the ground beneath
Not seldom Evening in the west
Lit by that evening lamp which loved to shed
The viewless lingerer hence, at evening, sees
Or charms that smile on Tusa's evening stream,
The beams of evening, slipping soft between,
And laugh with merrier haze her evening fires;
As the soft star of dewy evening tells
The glory of evening was spread through the west;
It was a splendid evening, and my soul
One summer evening (led by her) I found
The orange sky of evening died away.
At evening, when with pencil, and smooth slate
How, when the Sea threw off his evening shade
And that still spirit shed from evening air!
Evening and morning, sleep and waking, thought
And when at evening on the public way
Our cottage door, and evening soon brought on
It fared that evening. Gently did my soul
At evening, when the earliest stars began
Should I have seen the light of evening fade
Unhoused beneath the evening star we saw
We landed—took with them our evening meal,
Whose evening shadows lead him to repose.
Caught, on a summer evening through a chink
Each evening, pacing by the still sea-shore,
Nor day nor night, evening or morn, was free
He, many an evening, to his distant home
At evening, from behind the garden fence
While on the board she spread our evening meal,
A village-inn,—our evening resting-place.
One evening sumptuously lodged; the next,
Uphorne, at evening, on replenished wing,
And sink at evening into sound repose.
A dispensation of his evening power.
For morn and evening service, with her pail,
With evening cheerfulness. In powers of mind,
Dark on my road the autumnal evening fell,
For you each evening hath its shining star,
Enough;—I fear, too much.—One vernal evening,
At morn and evening from that naked perch,
As if preparing for the peace of evening,
Of the still evening. Right across the lake
Softens its evening uproar towards a close
Of evening he went forth to meet his son,
Sonorous squadrons sing their evening hymn.
Evening-moon. Beneath an evening-moon.
Evening's. See Yester-evening's.
Think of evening's repose when our labour was done,
Evening's angelic clouds. Yet ne'er a note
As evening's fondly-lingering rays,
And now the van is gilt with evening's beam,
While Evening's solemn bird melodious weeps,
Not one hour merely, but till evening's close,
Frank conversation, made the evening's treat:
Evenings. See Summer-evenings.
Two evenings after he had heard the news,
Her evenings then were dull and dead:
'On summer evenings, I believe that there
Of winter evenings, when unwholesome rains
On golden evenings, while the charcoal pile
Even-song. Which blow at daybreak, droop ere even-song;
Nor failed at even-song.
Event. To those infernal fiends! Now, if the event
This day's event has laid on me the duty
Detains me, doubtful of the event;
Have watched the event, and now can see
To guard the fallen, and consummate the event,
Far oftener then, bad ushering worse event,
Of an event so dire, by signs in earth
Followed his body to the grave. The event,
And it is named, in memory of the event.
Eventful. From his long journeyings and eventful life.
Eventide. Then, when he lies, out-stretched, at even-tide
That eventide, when under windows bright
Pace to and fro, from morn till eventide,
At breathless eventide at rest
Events. A story—unenriched with strange events,
The great events with which old story rings
Of past events; to whom, in vision clear,
Or to solicit knowledge of events

Events—continued.

Would ill suffice for persons and events :
 Upon the events of home as life proceeds,
 Who ponders National events shall find
 Outweighed, or put to flight, the set events
 Accomplished, giving thus unto events
 In part lay here, that unto me the events
 When foot hath crushed them. He through the events
 Told by my Patriot friend, of sad events,
 Into the midst of turbulent events ;
 Would he oppress no more. But when events
 Could be entrusted, while the events themselves,
 Under a long-lived storm of great events—
 With dark events, Desirous to divert . . .

 Dear Father, you sigh deeply ; ever since . . .
 Ten years ; and no one ever heard her voice ;
 I've had the saddest dream that ever troubled
 And he is mine for ever—here he comes . . .
 Her lips for ever moving. At her door
 You will forgive me— If I ever knew
 Sent after him. I have loved you ever since.
 Yes. More than ever Parent loved a Child ?
 Else could so strong a mind have ever known
 Or we're stuck fast for ever ;—passion, then,
 If ever could he otherwise ! Last night,
 The genial spot had ever shone . . .
 To be for ever fresh and young . . .
 Flow on for ever, Yarrow Stream !
 And ever on Christ's Mother meek and kind
 And longing of sweet thoughts that ever long.
 And ever two and two together were . . .
 Which ever to man's ear a passage won . . .
 Nor ever while I live Love's yoke to draw.
 And said, Alas ! that ever I was born,
 And as he flew, the Cuckoo, ever and aye,
 As ever he to Lover yet did send . . .
 That ever dark in torment, night by night,
 And ever thus he to himself would talk—
 And ever at his side stood Pandarus,
 And ever, scattered from his palsied hand,
 Bow-bent, his eyes for ever on the ground,
 That least of all can aught—that ever owned
 Bright as if heaven were ever in its eye,
 "Those fervent raptures are for ever flow ;"
Ever-changing. By ever-changing shape and want of

 The ever-changing Moon had traced
 Through ever-changing scenes of votive quest
Ever-constant. And cherishing with ever-constant

Ever-during. Yet, by the Almighty's ever-during care,
 Of ebb and flow, and ever-during power ;
Ever-dwindling. Thy ever-dwindling soul, away !
Everflowing. Immutably, and everflowing streams,
 Pale and bedropped with everflowing tears.
Ever-graceful. This ever-graceful change,
Ever-humming. Of ever-humming insects, 'mid thin

Ever-kind. The self-restraining, and the ever-kind ; Everlasting. And everlasting hills themselves were changed . . .
 Divine, of swearing everlasting truth . . .
 For everlasting blossoming : . . .
 With everlasting harmony ; . . .
 In pomp that fades not ; everlasting snows ;
 An everlasting watch to keep ; . . .
 The freshness, the everlasting youth,
 She must espouse the everlasting Sea.
 With deeds of hope and everlasting praise :—
 In realms where everlasting freshness breathes !
 Where everlasting Bounty dwells ?—
 Poured from his vaults of everlasting snow ;
 Crowned with St. Peter's everlasting Dome.
 And everlasting deeds to burning words !
 A brilliant crown of everlasting snow,
 For everlasting bloom. Beaign and pure
 Open your gates, ye everlasting Piles !
 Whose everlasting laws, sea, earth, and heaven obey."
 From his everlasting throne,
 Of everlasting Spring.
 For everlasting glory won by faith.
 And meditate on everlasting things,
 An everlasting spring ! in memory
 And everlasting motion, not in vain
 Think, how the everlasting streams and woods,
 To everlasting Justice, by this fiat
 That promised everlasting joy to France !
 In which the everlasting stars abide ;
 Whose everlasting purposes embrace
 Art everlasting, and the blessed Spirits,
 To the fair land of everlasting life.
 Of Jesus, and his everlasting care.
 And everlasting flowers. These Dalesmen trust
 And mountains white with everlasting snow !
 The wooden stools for everlasting use,
Everlastingly. And sound thy praises everlastingly.
 A sound like thunder—everlastingly.

Ever-living—continued.

Such help ; the ever-living universe,
Evermore. And long beard white with age—yet evermore,
 To make mankind merry for evermore,
 And yet I had within me evermore . . .
 And thy mother from thy side for evermore was gone . . .
 And been for evermore beguiled ;
 And from her narrow world, she passed for ever-
 more . . .
 Yet evermore, through years renewed
 With pride, the Muses love it evermore.
 And this for evermore will do,
 Brought to the ark are coming evermore,
 Wandering in solitude, and evermore . . .
 But evermore throughout thy reign
 Or like a Centinel that, evermore . . .
 That evermore his teeth they chatter,
 For evermore his servants Love amendeth,
 And joy of love to send her evermore ;
 They move along the ground ; and, evermore,
 And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.
 Amid my strongest workings evermore
 And something evermore about to be . . .
 And shall continue evermore to make,
 Of sorrow, barricaded evermore
 Your very soul to see her : evermore
 For hours she sate ; and evermore her eye
 That hath been, is, and shall be evermore !—
 Not without aspirations, evermore . . .
 Was silent as a picture : evermore . . .
 Of social nature changes evermore . . .
 In token that the House was evermore . . .
 In billow after billow, evermore
 Sometimes in act, and evermore in thought.
Ever-present. By Nature's kind and ever-present aid
Ever-ready. Grief, thou hast lost an ever-ready
 friend . . .
Ever-shifting. With the ever-shifting figures of the scene,
Ever-strengthening. Burnt on with ever-strengthening light, enshrined . . .
Ever-varying. Tremble in ever-varying tints of air.
 With ever-varying wiles . . .
 Elsewhere unmatched, her ever-varying lay ;
 The ever-varying charm your round displays,
 Within the breast, as ever-varying winds
Ever-vernal. Of purple lights and ever-vernal plains ;
Ever-waxing. And to desires whose ever-waxing horn Ever-welcome. With the ever-welcome company of books ; . . .
Every. (Partial list.)
 She eats her food which every day the peasants . . .
 But every night at the first stroke of twelve . . .
 Looked at from every point of fear or hope . . .
 And will be so through every change of fortune . . .
 And every sacrifice his peace requires,—
 Of every country might be present. There
 I overheard the Villains—every word . . .
 My thirst at every ill can slake,
 Frowns are on every Muse's face,
 In every Roman, through all turns of fate,
 Which thou canst touch in every human heart,
 To every place wherein she hath supposed
 To every Jew that dwelleth in that place
 "Torment and shameful death to every one
 For every true heart, gentle heart and free,
 Both hot and cold, and heart-aches every day,—
 For every wight eschews thy song to hear,
 To every wight that gentle is of kind.
 And he from every blemish them defendeth ;
 This May-time, every day before thou dine,
 How shut was every window of the place,
 That every wight might on his sorrow rue.
 How thou hast wearied me on every side,
 That every wight, who in the way passed by,
 And every night, as was his wont to do,
 The day is more, and longer every night
 A life and soul, to every mode of being Every ale-house should then have a feast on its walls.
 Every face in the village is dimpled with smiles.
 His gait, is one expression : every limb
 Of every cloud which in the heavens might stir
 That every gentle Spirit hither led
 To every angry passion. There I heard,
Every-day. Thy every-day appearance, as it strikes—
 That in life's every-day appearances
Every-youthful. Thy ever-youthful waters keep Everything. For this, for everything, we are out of tune ;
 And everything unreconciled ;
 And everything to his remembrance
 And everything encountered or pursued
 The end of life, and everything we know.
 Lo ! everything that was indeed divine
 Yet everything was wanting that might give
 And seeking it in everything, I lost
 And everything she looked on, should have had

External—continued.

—Of that external scene which round me lay,
That aught external to the living mind
I knew that would external could not take
When all the external man is rude in show,—
Of the whole species) to the external World
The external World is fitted to the Mind;
There, where on few external things his heart
From interference of external force,

Extinct. But never to be extinct while Earth endures.
Extinct that echoed to the votive strains;
The music, and extinct the lay?
A younger orphan of a home extinct,
Whose light of reason is with age extinct;

Extinction. That works but by extinction? On themselves

Extinguish. And they who should extinguish, fan the fire—

Extinguished. See Half-extinguished.
Sons haply of extinguished sires,
Depressed; and then extinguished: and our state,
Extinguished in a moment; total gloom,
Thou lamp of which extinguished is the light;
Nor be himself extinguished, but survive,
Wert thou extinguished, little would be left
The light extinguished of her lonely hut,
Are not to be extinguished, nor impaired.
Extinguished, do not, therefore, cease to be.

Extrapolating. Reclaiming and extirpating, perform
Extirpation. But to protect themselves from extirpation?—

Extol. Reckless audacity extol, and jeer

Her frenzy only active to extol
With wise reluctance; you would I extol,
Extolled. See Self-extolled.

Extolled, behind Vacuna's crumbling fane.
Extorting. While arrowy fire extorting feverish groans,

Extract. Did she extract the food of self-reproach,
And luxuries extract from bleakest moors

Extracting. From pastoral graves extracting thoughts divine;
Extracting from clear skies and air serene.

Extracts. Extracts from Nature's elemental strife;
Extraordinary. They need not extraordinary calls;
Extravagance. Extravagance in gesture, mien, and dress,

Extravagate. In which his youth did first extravagate;
Extrema. And, weeping loud in this extreme distress,
To save thee from the extreme of penury;

Nor all asleep—in his extreme old age;
That persecution, blind with rage extreme,
Extreme old age had wasted thee away,
If to the opposite extreme they sank.
Of good from evil; as if one extreme
That extreme penury is here unknown,

Extremes. So meet extremes in this mysterious world,
The extremes of suffering meet in absolute peace.
The extremes of favoured life, may honour both.
Shows not a sight incongruous as the extremes.
In what they see of virtues pushed to extremes,
Firmly between the two extremes to steer;
To opposites and fierce extremes her life,—
If the mind knew no union of extremes,
Temper the year's extremes;
Flattered the young, pleased with extremes, nor least

The two extremes are equally disowned
Extremities. Privation's worst extremities, and die
Extremity. When in some great extremity breaks out
And justice labours in extremity—
Who reach this dire extremity!

Extrinsic. How Nature by extrinsic passion first
To lean upon extrinsic circumstance

Extrinsic differences, the outward marks
Exult. We shall exult, if they who rule the land
Tyrants exult to hear of kingdoms won,
Exult in this deliverance wrought through faith
His proud complacency!—yet do I exult,
Casting reserve away, exult to see

Exultation. Of exultation hung a dirge
Of shadowy exultation: not for this,
And wicked exultation when good men
With exultation, at my feet I saw
Of exultation echoed through the groves!
In hollow exultation, dealing out
To outrun the rest in exultation, groaned
Of exultation, I pursued my way
In exultation with a living pomp

Exultations. Thy friends are exultations, agonies,
The exultations, pomps, and cares of Rome,
Delights and exultations of your own.

Exulted. Exulted, in the triumph of my soul,
Exulting. Exulting 'mid the winter of the skies,
Said Walter then, exulting; "Here
As if by that exulting strain
Exulting, rich beyond the wealth of kings,
Ah, spare the exulting smile,

Exulting—continued.

Fame sheds the exulting tear;
To an exulting Nation's hope
Exulting Warbler! eased a fretted brain,
Exulting in its imagery;
The warrant hail, exulting to be free;
To you exulting thrush the Muse
Proud and exulting like an untired horse
By her exulting outside look of youth
We left the Swiss exulting in the fate
Exulting in defiance, or heart-stung

Exultingly. Exultingly, in view of open day
Exults. The Romanist exults; fresh hope he draws
Exults like him whose javelin from the lair
Exults in freedom, can with rapture vouch

Eye. In youth's keen eye the livelong day was bright,

The eye reposes on a secret bridge,
The eye that marks the gliding creature sees
No favoured eye was e'er allowed to gaze
Moves there a cloud o'er mid-day's flaming eye?
The maidens eye him with enquiring glance,
How blest, delicious scene! the eye that greets
Stretched at his feet, with steadfast upward eye,
That faded silent from the upward eye
In solemn shapes before the admiring eye
And the last sunbeam fell on Bayard's eye;
The eye sublime, and surly lion-grace
Oh! give not me that eye of hard disdain
Heart-blessings—outward treasures too which the eye

Fixing his downcast eye, he many an hour
Till his eye streamed with tears. In this deep vale
Is in its infancy. The man whose eye
Which oft as he looked back had fixed his eye,
The weary eye—which, whereso'er it strays,
With a dim eye, distracted and amazed;
Upon his swiveling corse an eye can glance,
May He whose eye is over all protect you!
Like you, he knows your eye would search his heart.

Where Reason has an eye that she can use,
She hath an eye that sinks into all hearts,
Cast round you your mind's eye, and you will learn
And down into the bottom cast his eye,
And closed the sparkling eye,
It caught his eye, he saw it plain—
But oh! that Country-maid of thine, whose eye, loved Child, can see

Even with the organs of his bodily eye,
Upon the moon I fixed my eye,
Half hidden from the eye!
Daily before the Mother's watchful eye,
In the world's eye. Her work when daylight failed
Oh! mark the beauty of his eye:
Tracing the lofty harrier with my eye
He had surveyed it with a finer eye,
And an eye practised like a blind man's touch,
So constant with thy downward eye of love,
A little Cyclops with one eye
Unless, while with admiring eye
In the broad open eye of the solitary sky,
Fixed on a Star his upward eye;
The hermit has no finer eye
In her upward eye of fire!
Were her antics played in the eye
Or an infant's laughing eye
One eye he had, which, bright as ten,
Her unsuspecting eye, perchance,
His lonesome path, with unobserving eye
And fade, unseen by any human eye;
And now I see with eye serene
They flash upon that inward eye
Here let me gaze enrapt upon that eye,
As soft almost and deep as her cerulean eye.
Haughty, as if her eye had seen
And, in the twinkling of an eye,
Beside a pool bare to the eye of heaven
In my mind's eye I seemed to see him pace
And cups, the darlings of the eye,
Her state to any eye was plain;
More doleful place did never eye survey;
The pair were servants of his eye
Among the heavens his eye can see
As is a landscape to a blind man's eye:
While with an eye made quiet by the power
Unborrowed from the eye.—That time is past,
Of eye, and ear,—both what they half create,
Or, while the wings aspire, are heart and eye
Her countenance brightens—and her eye expands;
Lords of the visionary eye whose lid,
And the hushed farewell of an eye
As was witnessed through thine eye
And, with a wandering eye that seems to chide,
Of an eye where feeling plays
Nor dread the depth of meditative eye;
While trickles from his downcast eye
By this blank wall, from every eye,
Appeared, in presence of the spiritual eye
But wandering star and fixed, to mortal eye,
Sweet flowers;—what living eye hath viewed.

In youth's wild eye the livelong day was bright,
There turns for glad repose the weary eye;
Loose-hanging rocks the Day's bless'd eye that hide,
Soon fading "silent" from her upward eye,
The pilgrim's wistful eye hath never stay'd.
He looks below with undelighted eye,
Shame follow'd after with reverted eye,
Before the lustre of Religion's eye;
Life left my loaded heart, and closing eye;
But now he half-raises his deep-sunken eye,
Striding, with shattered crests, the eye athwart?
St. George of England! keep a watchful eye
Bright as if heaven were ever in its eye,
Now dupes me, trusting to an anxious eye
Even while mine eye hath moved o'er many a league
Depicted on the brain, and to the eye
Drinks in the feelings of his Mother's eye!
Perceived in things, where, to the unwatchful eye,
Grew darker in the presence of my eye:
And human knowledge, to the human eye
Of adoration, with an eye of love.
It was no madness, for the bodily eye
Near or remote, minute or vast; an eye
Angelial, keen eye, courageous look,
Objects embossed to catch the general eye,
With clearer knowledge; with another eye
With such discoveries as his eye can make
And in the eye of him who passes me!
As might appear to the eye of fleeting time,
A better eye than theirs, most prodigal
Even now appears before the mind's clear eye
Possessed me, for my inner eye had seen
To have a soulless image on the eye
Walks, and achieves his wonders, from the eye
Of reading them with quick and curious eye;
But though the picture weary out the eye,
Of beauty, meets the sun-burnt Arab's eye;
Of these vagaries, with an eye so rich
Bustles the eye with images and forms
One sense for moral judgments, as one eye
Or been regarded with too careless eye,
Exposed to eye and hand where'er I turned,
Openly in the eye of earth and heaven,
The open eye of Reason. Then I said,
I daily waited, now all eye and now
When the bodily eye, in every stage of life
Her eye was not the mistress of her heart;
Again I took the intellectual eye
Who doth not love to follow with his eye
And the eye feeds it not, and cannot feed.
Both of the object seen, and eye that sees.

 lead; . . . 36
 To lifted eyefolds, and a doubtful shining, . . . 374
 Her eyefolds drooped, her eyes downward were cast; . . . 768
Eye-music. A soft eye-music of slow-waving houghs, . . . 184
Eyes. And start the astonished shades at female eyes, . . . 11
 Where sparkling eyes and hreaking smiles illumine . . . 13
 His burning eyes with fearful light illumine . . . 13
 Stoops her sick head, and shuts her weary eyes; . . . 14
 And grasps by fits her sword, and often eyes; . . . 15
 While his eyes sparkle with heroic tears, . . . 15
 And, ere his eyes can close upon the day, . . . 16
 All nature smiles, and owns beneath her eyes . . . 21

Eyes—continued.

He lays his stiffened limbs,—his eyes begin to close; . . . 27
 And when that shape, with eyes in sleep half . . . 27
 drowned, . . . 27
 From her full eyes their watery load released, . . . 30
 Nor could his sunken eyes the starting tear restrain, . . . 30
 As I have done, my eyes upon the ground, . . . 45
 Filled my dim eyes with tears.—When I returned . . . 49
 Lurked in his face—Pshaw! Never to these . . . 55
 eyes . . . 55
 Upwards I cast my eyes, and, through a crevice, . . . 55
 Then plain it is as day that eyes were made . . . 60
 "I am eyes to the blind, saith the Lord, . . . 63
 Were there not eyes that see, and for good ends, . . . 69
 A criminal in no one's eyes but theirs— . . . 71
 You will have nobody to close your eyes— . . . 72
 we may restore him, and his eyes may yet open . . . 72
 If his own eyes play false with him, these freaks . . . 73
 And here is yours,—or do my eyes deceive me? . . . 76
 Many there he whose eyes will not wait cause . . . 78
 She gave me eyes, she gave me ears; . . . 79
 To dignify arch looks and laughing eyes; . . . 80
 Her eyes were fair, and very fair; . . . 83
 And now, all eyes and feet, hath gained . . . 85
 Fix thine eyes upon the sea . . . 90
 For bodied forth before my eyes the cross-crowned . . . 91
 hut appeared; * . . . 91
 His lips were moving; and his eyes, upraised to . . . 92
 sue for grace, . . . 92
 Forth from his eyes, when first the Boy looked . . . 92
 down on that hound oak, . . . 92
 From floor to roof, all round his eyes the Child with . . . 92
 wonder cast, . . . 92
 If I may dare to cherish hope that gentle eyes will . . . 93
 read . . . 93
 Sent to his heart! he lifted up his eyes, . . . 96
 A noticeable Man with large grey eyes, . . . 108
 Are hidden in her eyes.] . . . 108
 And all the while my eyes I kept . . . 109
 That Lucy's eyes surveyed, . . . 109
 "To draw, out of the object of his eyes," . . . 110
 Through the pure light of female eyes, . . . 112
 Would that mine eyes had never gazed . . . 113
 From her sunk eyes a stagnant tear . . . 113
 And yet they are upon my eyes, . . . 114
 I now can see with better eyes; . . . 117
 Seen by mine eyes, or clasped in my embrace, . . . 118
 A broken intercourse; and, while his eyes . . . 118
 Thine eyes are on me—they would speak, . . . 122
 Before his eyes, to price above all gold; . . . 125
 On the hill top. His eyes he scarcely took, . . . 125
 That, should he lose his eyes and ears, . . . 127
 His glimmering eyes that peep and doze! . . . 128
 Before her eyes, last child of many gone— . . . 139
 Our faith hath been,—O would that eyes could see . . . 140
 the heart!" . . . 144
 Her eyes are wild, her head is hare, . . . 144
 Joanna, looking in my eyes, heheld . . . 147
 Unfolding prospects fair as human eyes . . . 151
 So subtly are our eyes beguiled, . . . 154
 Here, alone, before thine eyes, . . . 157
 Eyes of some men travel far . . . 160
 Could Father Adam open his eyes . . . 162
 By a glance from fickle eyes; . . . 163
 These eyes have never seen . . . 164
 Like beads of glossy jet her eyes; . . . 165
 Hushed the dark earth, fast closing weary eyes, . . . 169
 Secure from evil eyes and hands . . . 169
 The road is black before his eyes . . . 175
 His eyes take pleasure in the road . . . 177
 To Benjamin, who rubs his eyes, . . . 177
 With eager eyes the Master pries; . . . 181
 Her eyes as stars of Twilight fair; . . . 186
 And the colours have all passed away from her eyes! . . . 188
 Or is it good as others are, and he their eyes in fault? . . . 189
 Their eyes, or minds? or, finally, is yon resplen- . . . 189
 dent vault? . . . 189
 That our own children to our eyes . . . 193
 Broke from the sable orbs of his yet-vivid eyes, . . . 195
 Before their eyes began to stir! . . . 200
 Joy sparkled in the prancing courser's eyes; . . . 200
 Such sight was never seen by human eyes: . . . 201
 She is speechless, but her eyes . . . 204
 Of thy wild eyes. Oh! yet a little while . . . 207
 Thy voice, nor catch from thy wild eyes these gleams . . . 207
 "And while my youthful peers before my eyes . . . 211
 Anon his lifted eyes . . . 213
 Playthings that keep the eyes awake . . . 214
 And older eyes than theirs heheld, . . . 215
 Emhodied to poetic eyes, . . . 219
 Or were ye rightlier hailed, when first mine eyes . . . 220
 How beautiful his eyes, . . . 232
 And ventures now to uplift his eyes; . . . 242
 His eyes will burst—his heart will break— . . . 242
 Such life is in the Ass's eyes, . . . 242
 Distressed me; from mine eyes escaped no tears; . . . 251
 No mortal object did these eyes behold . . . 251
 Which mists and vapours from mine eyes did . . . 257
 shroud— . . . 257
 The sway of Death; long ere mine eyes had seen . . . 258
 Looked ere his eyes were closed. By him was seen . . . 265

Eyes—continued.

And, like mine eyes that stream with sorrow, blind!
 Nor veil, with restless film, his staring eyes.
 Eyes unbedimmed, see bloom that cannot fade,
 I see its truth with unreluctant eyes;
 When earth shall vanish from our closing eyes,
 Others look up, and with fixed eyes admire
 And yet my eyes are filled with tears.
 Our Memory, feel that she hath eyes:
 The proud heart flashing through the eyes,
 Of little infants, when their eyes
 The Child; when she can trust her eyes,
 Tears flowed in torrents from her eyes;
 Nor have these eyes by greener hills
 Yet still her eyes retained their tropic fire,
 Go back to antique ages, if thine eyes
 With feet, hands, eyes, looks, lips, report your gain;
 Records on which, for pleasure of all eyes,
 The eyes of good men thankfully give heed,
 The ripening corn beneath it. As mine eyes
 When first mine eyes beheld that famous Hill
 While we look round with favoured eyes,
 When thou didst flit before mine eyes
 That moved in long array before admiring eyes.
 The pageant haunts me as it met our eyes!
 Lessons for every heart, a Bible for all eyes.
 To feed his mind with watchful eyes could share
 Ye Catacombs, give to mine eyes a glimpse
 That bloom—those eyes—can they assist to bind
 How, with empurpled cheeks and pampered eyes,
 Thus, if from two fair eyes mine cannot turn,
 But with closed eyes,—of breath and bloom forsaken.
 Make to the eyes of men thy features known.
 Whose ruddy children, by the mother's eyes
 Blushing she eyes the dizzy flood askance;
 Upon its loftest crags, mine eyes behold
 For, backward, Duddon! as I cast my eyes,
 Which moonlit elves, far seen by credulous eyes,
 That thought away, turn, and with watchful eyes
 —But hers are eyes serenely bright,
 Pensively with downcast eyes.
 And his moist eyes were glorified;
 Eyes dark and strong; and on his head
 Again he lifts his eyes; and lo!
 Then look at them with open eyes!
 That stood't before my eyes, more clear
 Salvation to all eyes that gazed,
 Attained a summit whence his eyes
 A glimmering sense still left, with eyes
 In her silent Follower's eyes;
 Enough—if eyes, that sought the fountain-head
 Descended:—happy are the eyes that meet
 Their eyes away in sorrow, others burn
 The innocent eyes of youthful Monarchs driven
 Fear hath a hundred eyes that all agree
 Stands at the Bar, absolved by female eyes
 Seem fixed, to eyes that watch them from afar;
 Which who travels in her bosom eyes,
 And Heaven is now to gladdened eyes revealing,
 Yon hazy ridges to their eyes
 Looked down with pity upon eyes beguiled
 If eyes be still sworn vassals of belief,
 Though brain would swim, and eyes grow dim,
 Her eyes grew bright with hissing light,
 Most sweet it is with unlifted eyes
 The tears into his eyes were brought,
 Physician art thou?—one, all eyes,
 And he has neither eyes nor ears;
 The tears which came to Matthew's eyes
 "My eyes are dim with childish tears,
 Whose mind is but the mind of his own eyes,
 Must eyes be all in all, the tongue and ear
 Sheep and cattle eyes with care;
 He halts—and searches with his eyes
 To these glad eyes from bondage freed, again
 Inviting, at all seasons, ears and eyes
 Can its eyes beseech?—no more
 And eyes that cannot but be sad
 The treasure,—what mine eyes behold see thou,
 The golden harvest grows in; and those eyes,
 Stood with eyes fixed upon that masterpiece,
 Resplendent Wanderer! followed with glad eyes
 Taught him concealment! hidden from all eyes
 Softens his heart, till from his eyes outwell
 We started, looked again with anxious eyes,
 Never retiring, in thy large dark eyes,
 By those bright eyes, what weary vigils kept,
 Thanks to the moth that spared it for our eyes;
 Clustering like constellated eyes
 Of hue and altering shape that charmed all eyes.
 That happy gleam of vernal eyes,
 Thither your eyes may turn—the Isle is passed
 away;
 O'er features looked at by discerning eyes,
 A just memorial; and thine eyes consent
 Can scarcely trust his eyes, when he perceives
 Enough of rose-bud lips, and eyes

Eyes—continued.

Sleep sealed her eyes, and stole
 Or gentle Nature close her eyes,
 In which he sat alone, with unclosed eyes,
 His eyes from sleep, at the first break of day,
 And in that Temple she with her bright eyes,
 His eyes are turned, and, as he moves along,
 Bow-bent, his eyes for ever on the ground,
 Few are his pleasures: if his eyes have now
 And his bright eyes look brighter, set off by the streak
 You lift up your eyes!—but I guess that you frame
 And tears of fifteen will come into his eyes.
 Rises no mountain to mine eyes unknown;
 And, should the out-pourings of her eyes suffice not
 The eyes of all Savona streamed with tears.
 With multitude of purple eyes,
 And open thy sad eyes upon a milder day.
 Has closed the Shepherd-poet's eyes:
 His eyes have closed! And ye, lov'd books, no more
 With light upon him from his father's eyes!
 Fair scenes! with other eyes, than once, I gaze,
 And eyes through tears the mountain's shadeless height;
 Those steadfast eyes, that beating breasts inspire,
 Her tawny skin, dark eyes, and glossy locks,
 And his red eyes the slinking water hides;
 And often grasps her sword, and often eyes,
 While burn in his full eyes the glorious tears.
 Weak and more weak the issuing current eyes
 Craz'd by the strength of hope at more her eyes
 While ere his eyes can close upon the day,
 While flash her upward eyes severe delight,
 The hut which from the hills his eyes employs
 Round your pale eyes a wintry lustre wake.
 With pale-blue hands, and eyes that fix'd implore,
 While thus I mused, methought, before mine eyes,
 Threw back my eyes, return'd, and gazed again.
 Dim were my swimming eyes—my pulse beat
 slow.
 And with steadfast dejection his eyes are intent
 Shall gratitude find rest? Mine eyes did ne'er
 She fastens on the boy enamour'd eyes,
 On the closed eyes of young Eudymion fell,
 Would overspread my soul, that bodily eyes
 He passed—nor was I master of my eyes
 Mine eyes were crossed by butterflies, ears vexed
 Had watched her with fixed eyes while to and fro
 The book, had turned my eyes toward the wide sea.
 And, looking backwards when he looked, mine eyes
 Dead in my eyes, dead as a theatre
 To shut mine eyes, and by internal light
 Present before my eyes, have played with times
 That far-famed region, though our eyes had seen,
 To look with bodily eyes, and be consoled."
 Issued, and with uplifted eyes beheld,
 Before our eyes, we could not choose but read
 Were then the common language of all eyes;
 And large dark eyes, beside her infant stood
 Until the shapes before my eyes became
 His steadfast face and sightless eyes, I gazed,
 For eyes and ears! what anarchy and din,
 With those that stretch the neck and strain the
 eyes,
 The Bust that speaks and moves its goggling eyes,
 By mists bewildered, suddenly mine eyes
 That men before my inexperienced eyes
 From the restraint of over-watchful eyes
 Eyes that perceive through minds that can inspire.
 And hissing Factionists with ardent eyes,
 Dishevelled, gleaming eyes, and rueful cheek
 Into mine eyes: I do not say I weep—
 (How welcome to the weary traveller's eyes!)
 In some sort seeing with my proper eyes
 Do come within the reach of humblest eyes;
 Or saw, like other men, with bodily eyes,
 And in the virtues which mine eyes had seen.
 Though with such awful proof before their eyes
 Who either had not eyes wherewith to see,
 Thine eyes must see of sorrow in a land,
 As it appears to unaccustomed eyes.
 Straining my eyes intensely, as the mist
 With our own eyes—I could not but enquire—
 One daily present to my eyes, that crossed
 To careless eyes. And—now convinced at heart
 To consecrate, if we have eyes to see,
 That, with believing eyes, where'er I turned,
 To be transmitted, and to other eyes
 His eyes as if in drowsiness half shut,
 To natural comfort shut our eyes and ears;
 To meet her waking eyes. This tremblingly
 Her eyelids drooped, her eyes downward were cast;
 The tears stood in her eyes. I left her then
 That flashed and sparkled from the other's eyes;
 My eyes were busy, and my thoughts no less,
 As to your eyes and thoughts we must have seemed
 But he was a cheap pleasure to my eyes;
 At my own door. The shapes before our eyes
 Or what detained him, till his closing eyes
 "You never saw, your eyes did never look
 He thus continued, lifting up his eyes

Eyes—continued.

With hoddy eyes, they are borne down by love
 Again I halted with reverted eyes;
 Guides better than mine eyes—until a light
 Eyes beaming courtesy and mild regard
 He paused—and having lifted up his eyes
 The Pastor cast his eyes upon the ground;
 His last, repentant breath; and closed his eyes,
 Clear images before you gladdened eyes
 For ever musing, Sunken were her eyes;
 As timid eyes might shrink from fathoming,
 To fix her eyes—alas! 'twas hard to bear!
 No sadness, when I think of what mine eyes
 Before our eyes, awakened in my mind
 Of his fair eyes, by his capacious brow,
 With admiration would he lift his eyes
 Before their eyes lay carefully outspread,
 In him to stand before my swimming eyes,
 In fertile pastures—was beheld with eyes
 Prepared for never-resting Labour's eyes
 Could break from out those languid eyes, or a blush
 Two eyes—not dim, but of a healthy stare
 That charm all eyes. So bright, so fair, appeared
 To look into the eyes of others, thence
 To eyes and ears of parents who themselves
 Where conch the spotted deer; or raised our eyes
 We gazed, in silence hushed, with eyes intent
 Or in propliate. And, if living eyes
 How my eyes watched the foe, . . .

Why open thus mine eyes? To die . . .

Of all that is before mine eyes, the voice . . .
 He of the multitude whose eyes are doomed
 And will be stirring when our eyes are fixed
 A sad and lovely face, with upturn'd eyes, . . .

Eyesight. But breath and eyesight fail; and, one by one,
 And, in a line of eye-sight linked with these,
 Enter through ears and eyesight, with such gleam
 His eyesight and hearing are lost;
 The ethereal eyesight, cramp the winged mind!

Spin in his eyesight, that contents him not, . . .

Eying. See Eying.
 Unshaded, eying far below, the flood, . . .

F

Fabian. To the Valerian, Fabian, Curian Race,
Fable. Seek who will delight in fable, . . .

Of fable, though to truth subservient, hear
 That ancient Fable did to thee assign,
 Enamoured, so the fable runs; but they
Fabled. Than fabled Cytherea's zone
 Than ghosts are fabled to appear
 Nor such as Spenser fabled. True it is,
 That, like the fabled Lethe, wished to flow
Fable's. Avoid these sights; nor brood o'er Fable's dark abyss!

Fables. Of mortals (if such fables without blame
Fabbling. Into the mists of fabling Time
Fabric. Within that fabric of mysterious form
 Fair as a gorgeous Fabric of the east
 Bright be the Fabric, as a star
 Fell the whole Fabric to the ground;
 Of less elaborate fabric. At this day
 Of quality and fabric more divine.
 Fabric it seemed of diamond and of gold,
 Left in the fabric of a leaky dam
 Upon this visible fabric of the world,
 Within the circuit of this fabric huge,
 Made to the spiritual fabric of her Church;
 Breaks from a many-winded fabric huge;
Fabric's. And in the shattered fabric's heart
Fabrics. Immortal Fabrics, rising to the sound
 Of those terrestrial fabrics, where they serve,
Fabulous. Than those of fabulous stock?
 The tale as fabulous—Here while I recline,
 (Beyond that mighty wall, not fabulous,
Face. Shed from their sides, that face the sun's slant beam,
 By the lake's edge, she rose—to face the noontide
 heat;
 Brushing with lucid wand the water's face;
 Even now she shrouds, half-veiled, her lovely face:
 The face of traveller passing to and fro.)
 Before thy face did ever wretch appear,
 Of man, or covert sight of mortal face,
 With face to earth; and, as the boy turned round
 In vain to find a friendly face we try,
 A look was in her face which seemed to say,
 Breathless he gazed upon her face,—then took
 They hung not!—no one on his form or face
 Though I have never seen his face, methinks,
 When I beheld the ruins of that face, . . .
 And look upon the pleasant face of Nature . . .

Face—continued.

All gentleness and love. His face bespeaks
 She saw my blasted face—a tide of soldiers
 And, fondling, licked his face, then on a sudden
 This they can do, and look upon my face—
 He turns his face to heaven. But why so violent
 Before her face. The rest be left to me,
 A face (no cherub's face more beautiful)
 'Tis his own fault if he hath got a face
 Lurked in his face— Pshaw! Never to these eyes
 Saw him—his face turned toward me; and I tell
 thee
 A sudden blankness overspreads his face.
 His pleading face, and feel his clasping arms,
 I will avow before the face of day.
 Shame! Eldred, shame! The dead have but one face.
 Start not!—Here is another face hard by;
 But the sweet face of Lucy Gray
 His face is fair and fresh to see;
 I unobserved could see the workings of her face:
 Into his face, until the setting sun . . .
 To me it does not seem to wear the face
 The old house-clock is decked with a new face;
 Methinks that I should recognise that face,
 To them who look not daily on thy face;
 And a pale face that seemed undoubtedly
 As if a blooming face it ought to be;
 To store up kindred hours for me, thy face . . .

A stern face it puts on, as if ready to say,
 And never blush was on my face.
 An infant's face and looks are thine . . .
 Be shed upon an infant's face, . . .
 I should behold his face again!
 Blessings upon that soft, warm face,
 The unruined Innocent,—I see thy face,
 Propping a pale and melancholy face,
 Stands fixed, her face with joy o'erflows,
 You plainly in her face may read it,
 His face unto his horse's tail,
 The pastoral mountains front you, face to face.
 To look his trouble in the face, it seemed
 And her face brightened. The old Man was glad,
 Before I knew thy face,—Heaven bless thee, Boy!
 The public way, he put on a bold face;
 Smiled in my face) this were in simple truth
 Of Nature, with that homely face, . . .
 'Twas a face I did not know;
 Thou dost show thy pleasant face,
 Frowns are on every Muse's face,
 Fresh as the bloom upon his face.
 There sits he; in his face you spy
 Maternal Flora! show thy face,
 O'er my little Dora's face;
 Or the night's darkness, or its cheerful face
 —That smile forbids the thought; for on thy face
 Strikes upon his lifted face,
 Or haunts me with familiar face,
 Shall pass into her face.
 It gleams on the face, there, of dusky-browed Jack,
 Her face from summer's noontide heat
 Unquestionable lines of that wild Suppliant's face.
 Himself he propped, limbs, body, and pale face,
 "I did not speak—I saw her face;
 Her face!—it was enough for me;
 A baby and a baby's face,
 Sir Walter wiped his face, and cried, "Till now
 The face of thing that is to be;
 Accept the gift, behold him face to face!"
 Nor turn thy face away
 A face o'er which a thousand shadows go!
 So taught, so trained, we boldly face
 Truth shows a glorious face,
 "His face was keen as is the wind
 239 P. B. 309
 As if the man had fixed his face,
 Is it the moon's distorted face?
 Thought he, that is the face of one
 The sweat pours down from Peter's face,
 He kisses, kisses face and limb,
 Even for such promise—serious is her face,
 Could to my sight that heavenly face restore.
 Smooth way; and I beheld the face of one
 With her face up to heaven; that seemed to have
 "How silently, and with how way a face!"

Face—continued.

Woe, woe to all that face her in the field ! . . . 330
 But face like that sweet Boy their mortal doom, . . . 339
 That beams from his ingenious face, . . . 342
 The love deep-seated in the Saviour's face, . . . 342
 That darkening of his radiant face . . . 343
 The face of summer-hours, . . . 348
 Know them no more. If Truth, who veiled her face
 Rapt above earth by power of one fair face, . . . 359
 The meek, benign, and lacerated face, . . . 365
 For in that face they saw the last . . . 372
 He paused, and stood entranced by that still face
 Did meet us with unaltered face, . . . 386
 The characters of every face, . . . 398
 There, face by face, and hand by hand,
 And meet their pity face to face ; . . . 399
 Meek filial smiles, upon thy face, . . . 401
 A face to fear and venerate ; . . . 404
 Shrunk as he recognised the face,
 Of awfulness, is in her face,— . . . 412
 That face, which cannot lose the gleams,
 And looked into the Lady's face, . . . 413
 Upon the happy Creature's face, . . . 414
 The promise in that speaking face ; . . . 414
 Nor is a face allowed to meet a face
 The bright corporeal presence—form and face—
 Through cloudy umbrage, well might that fair face,
 Faint types of suffering in thy beamless face . . . 460
 And Dian gazing on the Shepherd's face
 A face of love which he in love would greet,
 Of sky should be in truth the steadfast face
 This face of rural beauty be a mask . . . 463
 Communed with that Idea face to face : . . . 476
 He recognised the face ; . . . 479
 His voice—beheld his speaking face ; . . . 479
 For so many strange contrasts in one human face :
 The hardness of that sallow face, . . . 482
 We wear a face of joy, because . . . 485
 Ingrates who wear a smileless face . . . 487
 As is the smile upon thy face : . . . 490
 In face of these doth exercise a power . . . 492
 But who, if he be called upon to face . . . 493
 Mustering a face of haughty sovereignty,
 Of calm abstraction through the face diffused
 Long as we gazed upon the form and face, . . . 509
 And lilies face the March-winds in full blow,
 What mortal form, what earthly face . . . 529
 The utmost solitude of age to face, . . . 530
 His face was gloom, his heart was sorrow,
 A bright and cheerful face ; . . . 537
 Diffused through form and face, . . . 543
 And in her face and mien . . . 543
 With face all pale with dread and busy thought,
 And on his face he dropped upon the ground, . . . 554
 For which, with changed, pale, and deadly face,
 With changed face, and piteous to behold ;
 By moments thus increaseth in my face, . . . 563
 Beat his grey locks against his withered face . . . 563
 More of soul in his face than of words on his tongue ;
 Every face in the village is dimpled with smiles.
 He travels on, and in his face, his step, . . . 570
 She lifts in silence up her lovely face ; . . . 572
 Whose slippery face derides his deathful tread !
 A smile sat beaming on her pensive face, . . . 572
 So when on Ocean's face the storm subsides, . . . 599
 Dear Valley, having in thy face a smile,
 Stern was the face of Nature. We rejoiced
 Resolves that Cupid, chang'd in form and face
 Dissemble ; be that boy in form and face ! . . . 622
 And common face of Nature spake to me . . . 624
 Of Newton with his prism and silent face, . . . 641
 Or Beauty, Nature's daily face put on . . . 650
 Not wanting a fair face of water-weeds . . . 651
 —The face of every neighbour whom I met
 But as a face we love is sweetest then . . . 654
 Is treading, where no other face is seen) . . . 659
 Upon the speaking face of earth and heaven . . . 660
 Rose, with his ghastly face, a spectra shape
 A few short months before. I turned my face
 How bright a face is worn when joy of one
 Of the same face, blossoms upon one tree ; . . . 664
 The comers and the goers face to face, . . . 666
 Face after face ; the string of dazzling wares,
 Behold, turned upwards, a face hard and strong
 And every character of form and face : . . . 689
 Such as at least do wear a prouder face, . . . 690
 Unto myself, " The face of every one
 Of a blind Beggar, who, with upright face,
 His steadfast face and sightless eyes, I gazed,
 I had my face turned toward the truth, began
 All side by side, and struggling face to face,
 Was stooping and contracted, and a face, . . . 704
 To future times the face of what now is !"
 The face of one, who, whether boy or man,
 Entering the city, here and there a face,
 Put on a milder face ; Terror had ceased,
 For present good in life's familiar face, . . . 711
 Converse with men, where if we meet a face
 Grandeur upon the very humblest face . . . 712

Face—continued.

To exert upon the face of outward things, . . . 747
 The works of man and face of human life ; . . . 749
 The host of insects gathering round my face, . . . 756
 And stationed in the public way, with face . . . 756
 Or flowing from the universal face . . . 759
 Dappling his face. He had not heard the sound . . . 762
 But, when he ended, there was in his face . . . 765
 With fervent love, and with a face of grief . . . 766
 Her face was pale and thin—her figure, too, . . . 767
 Would lift, and in his face look wistfully : . . . 769
 And in the silence of his face I read . . . 772
 To hold communion with the grave, and face . . . 774
 And mortal sickness on her face appeared, . . . 775
 That it could be no other ; a pale face, . . . 779
 Remained, nor sign of sickness on his face, . . . 779
 Of comfort, spread over his pallid face, . . . 785
 Where earth is quiet and her face unchanged . . . 792
 Were turned on me—the face of her I loved ; . . . 798
 The face which rural solitude might wear . . . 814
 On the baptismal font ; his pallid face . . . 825
 By the bright fire, the good Man's form, and face
 My helpmate's face by light of day. He quits . . . 834
 For, in such portraits, though a vulgar face
 That for a face not beautiful did more . . . 847
 Than beauty for the fairest face can do ; . . . 850
 When that poor Child was born. Upon its face
 The rash betrayer could not face the shame . . . 852
 The ghastly face of cold decay put on . . . 854
 And more than once their steadiness of face
 How will he face the remnant of his life ? . . . 859
 And confident to-morrows ; with a face . . . 861
 From their shy solitude, to face the world,
 A glittering spectacle ; but every face . . . 866
 Hiding the face of earth for leagues—and there,
 Or houny tines—and every face, that smiled . . . 871
 The finer lineaments of form and face ; . . . 883
 The faint reflections only of thy face—
 Fainted with fear. Thrice did he turn his face
 His rosy face, a servant only here . . . K. 8. 225
 The nails, the thorns, and thy two hands, thy face
 Heavens ! who sees majesty in George's face ?
 But whence this gall, this lengthened face of woe ?
 And Moore and Partridge stare me in the face . . . K. 8. 226
 Who first defiled that calm majestic face ? . . . L. 1. 88
 A sad and lovely face, with upturn'd eyes,
 Faced. See Double-faced, Fair-faced, Pale-faced,
 Shame-faced.
 Armed to repel them ? Every hazard faced . . . 541
 Of dire enchantments faced and overcome . . . 634
 Boldest of plants that ever faced the wind,
 And utter darkness : thought which may be faced,
 That faced us with a passionate welcoming,
 Faces. See Baby-faces, Gipsy-faces.
 While ghastly faces through the gloom appear,
 Substitutes, turn our faces where we may,
 Oh how I long to see their faces again ! . . . 65
 And fiendish faces, one, two, three, . . . 66
 Encircled by familiar faces, . . . 144
 A gay society with faces bright, . . . 222
 So the bright faces of the young and gay . . . 266
 Are faces that attest the same ; . . . 281
 Banners, and happy faces, far and nigh ! . . . 292
 Now that all hearts are glad, all faces bright,

Did never fail to entrance me, and are now
Each with his humour, could we fail to abound
Nor did the Pulpit's oratory fail
If willing audience fail not, Nature's self,
The liveliness of dreams. Nor did he fail,
If the dear faculty of sight should fail,
That true succession fail of English hearts,
Than fondest epithet: for, if those fail,
And, when I fail, and can endure no more,
And they, who were about him, did not fail
Nor fail to note the Man who guides the team."
Fail not to spring from either Parent's eye
And ne'er to fall? Shall that blest day arrive
Began to fail, this sheep by hunger pressed
Your friend the country-Justice scarce would fail
- Failed. And mutual interest failed not to create.
What obstacles hath he failed to overcome?
She could not, Sir, have failed of company.
But he had failed through weakness. From his hand
Failed in him; and, not venturing to enquire
Him, in whose wretched heart ambition failed,
And his heart failed him. "Isabel," said he,
In the world's eye. Her work when daylight failed
Since reason failed woe is her threatened doom,
Yet failed to seek the sure relief of prayer,
Had failed) would furnish an array . . . 299
Of One that 'mid the falling eaves failed—
Hath failed; and now, ye Powers! whose gorgeous wings
The mercy, goodness, have not failed to awe
Failed to reanimate and but feebly cheered
When his touch failed.—Next came Sir Galahad;
Heaven's breathing influence failed not to bestow
They are my all!—voice failed him here—
But here her Brother's words have failed;
What feebler means had failed to give, one aim
Nor failed at even-song . . . 430
Months passed in love that failed not to fulfil,
So taught their creed;—nor failed the eastern sky,
Or if thy cherished grief have failed to thwart
Nor failed to gild the spires of Bonn, . . . 629
Prolonged in summer till the day-light failed:
Had failed, the mind returned into herself;
Of contemplation almost failed to beat.
Religiously that vow; but firmness failed,
Intruded, for we failed to overtake.
Has failed; too slowly moves the promised work.
A monitory sound that e'er failed,—
Had failed, and every leaf and flower were lost
To love when hope hath failed him—whom no depth
Failed not to greet the merry Mocking-bird;
One spirit seldom failed to extend its sway
I failed not to remind them that they erred;
If his undaunted enterprise had failed.
Failed not to notice, inly pleased, and said:—
And led us to our threshold. Daylight failed
- Faith. "Charity never faileth:" on that creed,
Failing. See Never-failing.
A cloudy substitute for failing gladness.
Breathes o'er the failing soul voluptuous dreams,
Failing impartial measure to dispense . . . 280
Of One that 'mid the falling eaves failed—
Failing, we finally shall make accord.
Breathe o'er the failing soul voluptuous dreams;
He asked repose; and, failing off to win
Not failing, perseverance from their steps . . . 820
- Fallings. Of all his fallings, they love best;
To spare your fallings for his sake,
Falls. On the dark earth the wearied vision fails;
That virtue languishes and pleasure fails,
A boaster that, when he is tried, fails, and is put to shame?
Ah no! though Nature's dread protection fails,
For promise fails of Howard's aid;
Truth fails not; but her outward forms that bear
There's indifference, alike when he fails or succeeds,
Which, though unstud for, fails not to descend
On the dark earth the baff'd vision fails, . . . 598
That fails not, in all sorrow my support,
Of stream and headlong flood that seldom fails;
That soonest fails to please, and quickest turns
Imagination's light when reason's fails,
Her vespers,—Nature fails not to provide
Thus comprehension fails, and truth is missed;
Herbage that never fails: no grass springs up
"So falls, so languishes, grows dim, and dies,"
Play on her streamers, falls she to assume
- Failure. Success and failure, could a ground
The failure, if the Almighty, to this point . . . 887
Fain. Now she is gone, I fain would call her back.
I would fain hope that we deceive ourselves: . . . 44

Fain—continued.

- Then mean I, that I should be wonderous fain . . . 559
Faint. And faint the fire a dying heart can yield!
From the dark-blue faint silvery threads divide
And glad Duodee in "faint huzzas" expired?
Faint wail of eagle melting into blue
Once did the lightning's faint disastrous gleam
Yet when faint beams of light that ruin showed,
My Child—my Child—dark—dark—I faint—this wind—
Aud lifted from the grassy floor, stilling his faint
alarms, . . . 206
Faint colour over both their pallid cheeks,
She says, in faint words by sighs broken, . . . 119
Mixed with a faint yet grating sound . . . 173
Faint and somewhat pensively; . . . 206
With many recognitions dim and faint,
Faint I, nor mourn nor murmur; other gifts
Be thankful, even though tired and faint,
Faint, faint at first; and then an eager sound
Passed in a moment—and as faint again!
With that faint utterance, which tells . . . 218
But to recall the truth by some faint trace
Listening to nun's faint thro' of holy fear,
Fluttered so faint a heart before;—
Faint recollection seems to tell . . . 237
By moonlight made more faint and wan;
Faint—far-off—near—deep—solemn and sublime!—
To sadness not their own, when, with faint smile . . . 346
Heard I that voice! and catch it now, though faint,
Far off and faint, and melting into air, . . . 361
The notes whose first faint greeting startled me,
Seemed from each other a faint warmth to borrow.
Not seldom, when with heat the valleys faint,
Faint—but it reached that sheltered spot;
Yes, she is soothed—a Image faint, . . . 407
And yet not faint—a presence bright . . . 445
Things that we judge of by a light too faint:
Warbled a while with faint and fainter powers,
Faint sound, that, for the gayer of the gay, . . . 432
Faint types of suffering in thy beamless face,
Where thy deep voice could lull me! Faint the beam
Though faint, compared with spear and shield,
Or kettle whispering its faint undersong . . . 488
No faint and hesitating trill, . . . 498
- Not He, whose last faint memory will command
Only faint news her mountain-sunbeams yield,
With here and there a faint imperfect gleam . . . 524
- How faint their portion of his vital beams!
Faint sanction given, the Cavalier . . . 545
Let the last faint sigh discover . . . 596
Who faint, and beat by summer's breathless ray, 597
Of boys that bathe remote the faint uproar, . . . 644
The earth was comfortless, and, touched by faint
Faint, but more tranquil, like the changing sun
Faltering and faint, and ignorant of the road:
Now faint,—the grass has crept o'er its grey line,
Shall lack not their enjoyment!—but how faint
Shouteth faint tidings of some gladder place . . . 776
Faint not, but advance towards the open grave
The Solitary, with a faint sarcastic smile . . . 780
By a faint shining from the heart, a gleam
Give back faint echoes from the historian's page;
Faint—and still fainter—as the cry, with which
In faint reflection of infinitude . . . 827
Weary and faint, and longs to be released,
Faint, and diminished to the gazing eye,
The faint reflections only of thy face—
Faintly, too faint almost for sight; and some
In mutual stillness; or, if some faint breeze
When British floods were worshipped, some faint
trace . . . 874
- Fainted. She who had fainted with her fear,
Fainted with fear. Thrice did he turn his face
Fainter. Of fainter gold, a purple gleam betray.
Awoke a fainter sense of moral grief;
In fainter howlings told its rage was spent:
Warbled a while with faint and fainter powers,
Awoke a fainter pang of moral grief;
Albeit putting forth a fainter light . . . 612
Had disappeared, or shed a fainter light
Faint—and still fainter—as the cry, with which Faintest. The faintest breath that breathes can move a world;
Powers that survive but in the faintest dream
The faintest note to echo which the blast
Sound is there none at which the faintest heart
Something like the faintest breath . . . 502
Their faintest whisper to the passing breeze,
678
Fainting. Of fainting hopes and backward wills,
The fainting creature took the marsh,
And with strange tingsling sings her fainting ear.
Support, as heretofore, my fainting steps . . . 544
Faintly. Glimmering faintly where it lies;
Benjamin can faintly hear . . . 176
Imaged, though faintly, in the hue . . . 226
A little hoary line and faintly traced . . . 230
The lamp of faith, lost Friend! too faintly burn;

Faintly-continued.

But faintly picture, 'twere an office meet . . .
Of distant moon-lit mountains faintly shine;
"Ah tempt me not!" she faintly sighed;
At length, thus faintly, faintly tied
Now, faintly darkening with the sun's eclipse,
From the blind cavern whence is faintly heard
Faintly reflected in a lingering stream.
Traced faintly in the greensward; there, beneath
The foot-path faintly marked, the horse-track wild,
Faintly, too faint almost for sight; and some

Faintly-answering. Threatened by faintly-answering farms remote:
Faintly-rusling. But whence this faintly-rusling
sound
Faintness. To stay his steps with faintness overcome;
Few minutes gone a faintness overspread
A most strange faintness,—will you hunt me out.
Faints. The unguarded taper where the guarded faints?

Fair. See Heavenly-fair.

Fair scenes, erewhile, I taught, a happy child,
Fair Swan! by all a mother's joys caressed,
How fair its lawns and sheltering woods appear!
As now, fair river! come to me,
O glide, fair stream! for ever so,
But let us hence; for fair Locarno smiles
A scene more fair than what the Grecian feigns
And oh, fair France! though now the traveller sees
—All cannot be: the promise is too fair
Fair spectacle,—but instantly a scream
And One so fair, it goes against my heart to look up at this roof in storm or fair.
Small and low, though fair as any:
Where two fair swans together glide.
Her eyes were fair, and very fair;
When it is light and fair,
His face is fair and fresh to see
"Alas, the mountain-tops that look so green and fair!

When, whether it blew foul or fair, they two
O, happy Britain! region all too fair
Fair blew the wished-for wind—the voyage sped;
Sweet garden-orchard, eminently fair,
Fair in thyself and beautiful alone,
—Fair as a star, when only one
Thou one fair shrub, oh! shed thy flowers,
Heed not tho' none should call thee fair;
Yes! thou art fair, yet be not moved
In the world's voice, was passing fair;
Such strength, a dignity so fair:
And the fair Captive, who, when'er she may,
Beneath the moon, yet shining fair,
Hear now of a fair Armenian,
"Princess fair, I till the ground, but may not take
"Feeling tunes your voice, fair Princess!"
Constant to the fair Armenian,
Be changed, that was so fair to view,
'Tis fair enough for thee, my dove!
The fair Joanna drew, as if she wished
In the mid-heavens, is never half so fair
To pluck, some flower or water-weed, too fair
Fair ferns and flowers, and chiefly that tall fern,
Unfolding prospects fair as human eyes
Of this fair Spot her flowers may bind,
Not quite so fair as many are
Of your fair household, Father-knight,
Away the seven fair Campbells fly,
For us be fair and kind!"
The fishers say, those sisters fair
Fair Lady! can I sing of flowers
So steady or so fair.

Of this morning bright and fair,
Fair are ye both, and both are free from stain:
Through foul and fair our task fulfilling;
"Ay," said the Tar, "through fair and foul—
Her eyes as stars of Twilight fair;
And is as happy in his night, for the heavens are blue and fair;
Where all things are so fair,
That they, so happy and so fair
Was not so fair as he;
Fair trees and gorgeous flowers;
For passions linked to forms so fair
As if by hand of lady fair.
An infant's grave was half so fair.
Beneath that hill of moss so fair.
Beneath that hill of moss so fair.
Fair greeting doth she send to all
For one fair House by Emont's side.
Of this fair river; thou my dearest Friend,
Redundant are thy looks, thy lips as fair.
[Fair is the Swan, whose majesty, prevailing
(More fair than heaven's broad causeway paved with stars)
Whose means are fair and spotless as his eods."
Thy lot, O Man, is good, thy portion fair!"
And the glistening—heavenly fair!
To show them a fair image; 'tis themselves,
Their own fair forms, upon the glimmering plain,

Fair-continued.

Painted more soft and fair as they descend,
In you, which that fair progeny of Jove
That its fair flowers may from his cheek
Of Dawn—or Eve, fair vision of the west,
Enough that all around is fair,
That grafted, on so fair a spot,
Fair as a gorgeous Fabric of the east
How'er magnificent or fair,
Is so unearthly, and what shape so fair?
Fair is that land as evening skies,
And streams, and bowers, and ladies fair,
And all along the Lowlands fair,
"On a fair prospect some have looked
A fair smooth pathway you discern,
Ceilinged and roofed; that is so fair a thing
That work a living landscape fair and bright;
Fair Prime of life! were it enough to gild
Fair Prime of life! arouse the deeper heart;
By a Fair Swan on drowsy billows heaved,
With ripening harvest prodigally fair,
Mature release, in fair society
And the fair front of many a happy Home;
Earth has not anything to show more fair:
'Tis said that to the brow of you fair hill
Of absence withers what was once so fair?
Into some other region, though less fair,
Of good and fair,
Fair Ellen Irwin, when she sate
Fair Ellen saw it as it came,
But, O fair Creature! in the light
As fair before me shall behold,
Fair hangs the apple frae the rock,
For when we're there, although 'tis fair,
And yet how fair the rural scene!
But thou, that didst appear so fair
Fair scenes for childhood's opening bloom,
Fair Star of evening, Splendour of the west,
Was like a lake, or river bright and fair,
Fair seed-time, better harvest might have been
And stands on tiptoe, conscious she is fair,
Fair prospect, such as Britain only shows!
Of a fair female train—
Own—that the progeny of this fair Isle
While the fair gardens of civility,
But, to Thy sovereign penetration, fair,
Through regions fair as Paradise
From a long train—in hooded vestments fair
Than the fair Forms, that in long order glide,
He said, "When I am there, although 'tis fair,
And for itself, the assemblage, grand and fair,
Savona, Queen of territory fair.
Most fair, most welcome, when they drank the dew
So fair, to which with peril he must cling,
Rapt above earth by power of one fair face,
Thus, if from two fair eyes mine cannot turn,
Fair Trees, your bounty run to waste!
Fair Land! Thee all men greet with joy; how few,
Thy present birth-morn with thy last, so fair,
Upon this winged Shape so fair.
Ah! what avails that she was fair,
Sad relitue, but how fair the while!
"Thou hast achieved, fair Dame! what none
If this be sleep, how soft! if death, how fair!
Said Merlin: "Mighty King, fair Lords,
So fair, of such divine report
No change;—the fair Izonda he had wooed
Invited, forth they peeped so fair to view,
As might besem the fairest Fair,
Fair parks spread wide where Adam Bell might deign
Fair fruit of pleasure and serene content
Of the sharp winds;—fair Creatures!—to whom
Heaven
Fair Pilgrim! harbours she a sense
Where the wild rose blossoms fair;
Her sabbath morning, foul or fair."
A pious structure, fair to see,
In semblance of a lady fair;
Fair creature, and more white than snow!
"Thy meeting, noble Lords! looks fair,
Full sixteen thousand fair to see;"
The same fair Creature, who hath found
This fair unrivalled Brotherhod,
O'er Kyrilstone's fair domain have blown;
Fair Vision! when it crossed the Maid
From fair to fairer; day by day
In that fair Creature whom the fields
Fair houses, baths, and banquets delicate,
For ever hallowed be this morning fair,
Yet, while they strangle, a fair growth they bring,
Fair Court of Edward! wonder of the world!
In constancy, in fellowship more fair!
So fair as these. The feather, whence the pen
To the deep fair ships which though they move
Who, looking round the fair assemblage, feels
And see to what fair countries ye are bound!
Through cloudy umbrage, well might that fair face,
The fair Eudymon couched on Latmos-hill;
On this fair Mount, a Fret of your own,
Fair Land! by Time's parental love made free,
Till this bright Stranger came, fair as day-break,

Fair—continued.

Measuring thy course, fair Stream! at length I pay
Not far from that fair site whereon
While a fair region round the traveller lies
To her fair works did Nature link
To see a child so very fair,
Nor know we anything so fair
Like a fair sister of the sky,
What a fair world were ours for verse to paint,
Less fair is summer riding high
Less fair than when a lenient sky
His social sense of just, and fair, and true;
However bright and fair.
Or book regardless, and of that fair scene
From this fair Portrait's fleshy Archetype,
So fair, so sweet, withal so sensitive,
This Spot—at once unfolding sight so fair
Luminous region, fair as if the prime . . .

The joys of the Departed—what so fair
Fair Damsel! o'er my captive mind,
Before me?—nothing blemished the fair sight;
To make a fair recess more fair;
Shall sojourn in this fair domain;
To Egremont's Domains and Castle fair.
Flourishing in fair estate.
To this fair Votress a fate
Of this fair garden, and its alleys dim,
Fair sights, and visions of romantic joy!
In these fair vales hath many a Tree
Uphold a Monument as fair . . .

There are ninety good seasons of fair and foul weather . . .
Of the fair Muses. Not a covert path . . .
To fair Aglaia; by what envy moved,
By night or day, how foul or fair,
Are beautiful and fair;
Fair scenes! with other eyes, than once, I gaze,
Fair Spirits are abroad; in sportive chase
So vanish those fair Shadows, human joys,
How fair it's lawn and silvery woods appear!
Hence shall we seek where fair Locamo smiles
Fair smiling lights the purpled hills illumine!
—And thou! fair favoured region! which my soul
In the bright paths of fair majestic Truth:
Fair to the view is sacred Truth display'd,
"I look'd obedience: the celestial fair"
But none of those fair Graces brought
"And must we then part from a dwelling so fair?"
And that Presence fair and bright,
So fair; and while upon the fancied scene
Fair seed-time had my soul, and I grew up
Peopled the mind with forms sublime or fair,
Mid gloom and tumult, but no less 'mid fair,
So many happy youths, so wide and fair
Not wanting a fair face of water-weeds
At wake or fair. And oftentimes do flit
Orion with his belt, and those fair Seven,
Fair is the spot, most beautiful the vale
Upon the stretch, when winds are blowing fair:
Have been preferred, that this fair creature, checked
Take one,—that ancient festival, the Fair,
They held a rustic fair—a festival,
Was opened; tract more exquisitely fair
A pleasure-ground, diffused a fair expanse
At man through objects that were great or fair;
Fair greetings to this shapeless eagerness,
Beat high, and filled the fancy with fair forms,
Erminia, fugitive as fair as she.
O Soul of Nature! excellent and fair!
More grand, more fair, more exquisitely framed
With loftiest promises of good and fair.
Oft, through thy fair domains, illustrious Peer!
Fair trains of imagery before me rise,
Surpassing the most fair ideal Forms
In sunshine and in shade, in wet and fair,
The spot, though fair, was very desolate—
Set off, and to our ken appearing fair . . .

"For this fair Bride, most rich in gifts of mind,
Less fair, I grant, even painfully less fair,
With aught, as more desirable and fair,
With hope, and all with pleasure. This fair Bride—
At aught, however fair, that bore the mien
—In that fair clime, the lonely herdsman, stretched
Lacked not, for love, fair objects whom they wooed
To good Saint Fillan and to fair Saint Anne;
Fair dwellings, single, or in social knots;
To the fair land of everlasting life . . .

To trust the smiling aspect of this fair
Its fair adventures, its enlivening hopes,
Is either fair and tempting, a soft scene
Gathered this fair report of them who dwell
Their fair proportions; nor the blinder rage
In the fair body of a leafy grove
Fair expectations; nor, when to the world's . . .

Fair—continued.

By the nice finger of fair ladies touched
Among those fair recitals also range,
How fair amid her brood of cottages!
Those six fair Daughters, budding yet—not one,
Fair Rosamond, and the Children of the Wood,
And three fair Children, plentifully fed
And a fair carpet, woven of homespun wool
—Those seven fair brothers variously were moved
Of his fair eyes, by his capacious brow,
An image fair, which, brightening in his soul
To outlive the kindly use and fair esteem
With feminine allurements soft and fair,
That charm all eyes. So bright, so fair, appeared
To that fair girl who from the garden-mount
Even as an object is sublime or fair,
Meantime the sovereignty of these fair Isles
And each seemed centre of his own fair world:
Or to disturb, so fair a spectacle . . .

Of the fair Isle with hirt-trees fringed—and there,
Fair prospect, intercepted less and less,
The fair Narcissus, by some pitying God
And seemingly her happiest, look so fair
That made their conversation fresh and fair
Delightful Valley, habitation fair!
Of this fair Vale, and o'er its spacious heights
Fair proof of this, newcomer though I be,
How goodly, how exceeding fair, how pure
Queen and negress chaste and fair!
Fearless, yet full of grief. —How heavenly fair!

Fairer. Is fairer than the fairest star to heaven!
A fairer bower was never seen . . .
Are fairer than the rest;
O Lady! fairer to thy Poet's sight
Fairer than life itself, in this sweet Book,
(Not Apennine can boast of fairer), hills
A fairer than herself she bore,
From fair to fairer; day by day
Fairer than Tempe! Yet, sweet Nightingale!
Shapes fairer or less doubtfully discerned
Is fairer than the fairest star in Heaven!
Fairest. Usurping where the fairest herbage smiled:
Fairest of all flowers, was she once, but now
Fairest damsel of the green,
Is fairer 'than the fairest star in heaven!
Shall grace the fairest, sweetest, plant . . .
And, among fairest objects, some
Than fairest spiritual creature of the groves,
That beautifies the fairest shore,
The fairest, brightest, hues of ether fade;
Of things, has fenced this fairest spot on earth.
And Gordon, fairest of them all,
The fairest landscapes and the brightest days—
For thy Earth's fairest daughters do excel:
Than fairest Star, upon the height . . .
The fairest, softest, liveliest of them all!
As might beseem the fairest Fair,
The fairest, while with fire and sword . . .
Of man, our youngest, fairest flower!
There are no colours in the fairest sky
Surely, from fairest spots of favoured lands,
The softest breeze to fairest flowers gives birth:
Of a kind mistress, fairest of the land,
That made the calmest, fairest spot of earth,
That one, the fairest of all rivers, loved
A universe of Nature's fairest forms
Their fairest, softest, happiest influence.
Endowed by Nature with her fairest gifts
Is fairer than the fairest star in Heaven!
Than beauty for the fairest face can do;
To beautify with nature's fairest growths
Caught in their fairest, happiest, attitude!

Fair-faced. Without offence, that fair-faced cottage-boy?
Fairfield. And Fairfield answered with a mountain tone;
And mighty Fairfield, with a chime
Of my own Fairfield. The glad greeting given,
Fairfield's. Down Rydal-cove from Fairfield's side,
And Fairfield's highest summit, on the right
Fair-flowering. Fair-flowering in a thinly-peopled house,
Fairies. See Faeries.
The Fairies are to blame, and you should chide
And all the gorgeous sights which fairies do behold.
Ye fairies, from all evil keep her!
Perhaps a ring of shining fairies?
On her I looked whom jocund Fairies love,
Of evil-minded fairies, yet not vain
Or palace built by fairies of the rock;
The Fountain of the Fairies. What to her
Fairly. But now she's fairly in the town,
Now am I fairly safe to-night—
Look fairly like a lawful earning.
Seen fairly, is not much amiss!
And, fairly lifted from my feet,
So kind is simple Nature, fairly tried!
How fairly to his mind!
When to myself it fairly might be said,
May fairly claim, by niggard age enriched
With your bright transports fairly may be deemed,

Fairy—continued.

Have fairly earned a victory o'er the weak, . . . Both have been fairly dealt with ; looking back . . . Fairs. At Wakes and Fairs with wandering Mountebanks,—

Fairy. See Fairy.

There too we read of Spenser's fairy themes, . . . Where fairy water-breaks do murmur on . . . With all its fairy crowds . . . It is, thinks he, the gracious Fairy, . . . These fairy holms untrodden, still, and green, . . . Long streaks of fairy light the wave illumine . . . Alone, beneath this fairy work of earth. . . Of Fairy, or some dream of actions wrought

Fairy-king. The imperial Consort of the Fairy-king Fairy-land. See Fairy-land.

As if from Fairy-land. Much I questioned him ; . . . Fairy's. Had waited on some Fairy's wand, at once

Faith. He well could love in grief, his faith be kept ;

Thee I adore, and find my rest in faith. . . For this old venerable Grey-beard—faith . . . But, faith, to see him in his silken tunic, . . . Most tunable. In faith, a pleasant scheme ; . . . My calmest faith escapes not pain ; . . . The faith Heaven strengthens where he moulds the Creed.

Of pious faith the vanities of grief ; . . . Our faith hath been,—O would that eyes could see the heart !"

Lamps of faith, now burning dim, . . . Of serious faith, and inward glee ; . . . An Orpheus ! an Orpheus ! yes, Faith may grow bold,

The faith which saw that gladsome pair . . . Or, if such faith must needs deceive— . . . We in the church our faith will plight,

To genial faith, still rich in genial good ; . . . Had saved him from that breach of faith !

Our cheerful faith, that all which we behold . . . With faith, the Suppliant heavenward lifts her hands ;

Of Hallelspout (such faith was extorted) . . . While Faith, from yonder opening cloud,

Keep faith with Time on distant shores ? . . . The ancient faith disclaim ?

From faith which here was entertained, . . . The faith that elevates the just, . . . Comes Faith that in auspicious hours

Will may our hearts have faith that blessings come, . . . As sages taught, where faith was found to merit . . . But if perchance your faith should fail,

Did listen with a faith sincere . . . A faith, that for the dead man's sake,

The lamp of faith, lost Friend ! too faintly burn ; . . . Of Faith, and round the sufferer's temples bled

Faith in the whispers of the lonely Muse, . . . Of Faith and Hope—if thou, by nature's doom,

Might learn to picture, for the eye of faith, . . . What e'er to shallow Faith their ways unfold,

And Faith—these only yield secure relief. . . Faith had her arch—her arch, when winds blow loud,

Let faith be given ; . . . When faith was pledged to new-born Liberty :

That Shakespeare spake ; the faith and morals hold . . . What do we gather hence but firmer faith . . . Faith buried deeper in her own deep breast

Not soon, through Christian faith, is grief subdued : . . . (So faith too fondly deemed) a voice divine

She gave, if Faith might tread the heaten ways . . . And what, 'mid silence deep, with faith sincere,

That faith which no devotion may renew ! . . . For faith, 'mid ruined hopes, serene ? . . . And Faith—so oft of sense the thrall,

Our faith in Heaven's unfaithful love . . . And marvel not that antique Faith inclined

Eofolds within its core. The faith be mine, . . . If Hope's familiar whispers merit faith, . . . Suffers religious faith. Elate with view

To greet with instant faith their loftiest claim. . . But not in scorn :—the Matron's Faith may lack Faith crushed, yet proud of weeds, her gaudy . . . crown ; . . . In faith and hope, and dutiful obedience, . . . Consorted, Others, in the power, the faith, . . . To be ; by Faith, not sight, his soul must live ;

Best of the good—in pagan faith allied . . . And kept to Him her faith . . . Your faith in Him approve . . . So may the Soul, through powers that Faith bestows, . . . If to Tradition faith be due, . . . Of a pure faith the vernal prime— . . . Together of a purer faith . . . Where faith was proved ?—while to battle moved

But her Faith leaned another way . . . The faith reformed and purified, . . . To attest my Faith, if not restore, . . . But for lost Faith and Christ's dear name,

Of Christian Faith, this savage Island blessed . . . Receive the faith, and in the hope abide . . . And for the faith ; nor shall his name forsake

That even imperfect faith to man affords ? . . . 306 Excursion 4. 308 . . . 888 Excursion 9. 287

Faith—continued.

Justice and peace !—bold faith ! yet also rise . . . As faith thus sanctified the warrior's crest . . . Can they, in faith and worship, train the mind . . . Which Faith has suffered, Heaven could calmly brook.

For Faith, which to the Partiaresch did dispense . . . For Faith, more perfect still, with which the Lord

Of Faith staid coupled for a common fight ! . . . Emblem of faith untouched, miraculous attestation !

Partners in faith, and brothers in distress, . . . We read of faith and purst charity . . . And Faith preserved her ancient purity, . . . Blest Rite for him who hears in faith, "I know

Of faith invites. More welcome to no land . . . Give to their Faith a fearless resting-place . . . Of genuine Faith. Where, haply, 'mid this band

Yields, if with unpresumptuous faith explored, . . . Glad, through a perfect love, a faith sincere . . . Let me a compensating faith maintain ; . . . When teeming Matrons—yielding to rude faith

From sense, faith, reason, fancy, of the cause, . . . Bold words affirmed, in days when faith was strong

Imaginative Faith ! canst overleap, . . . A faith more fixed, a rapture more divine . . . Of luminous faith, heavenward hath raised that head . . . And 'tis my faith that every flower . . . Of the great Vision,—faith in Providence ;

In the cleansed faith for which her martyrs died ; . . . Be strong in faith, bid anxious thoughts lie still ;

Crossed by misfortune, or of doubted faith ? . . . Our schemes ; the faith and honour, never yet

And thy grieved Spirit brighten strong in faith . . . Kneel at the feet of Justice, and, for faith

In faith, which fresh offences, were he cast . . . For Christian Faith. But hopeful signs abound ;

While Faith aspires to seats in that domain . . . Of holy faith and Christian hope ; . . . For benefits that still survive, by faith

For everlasting glory won by faith, . . . Her earnest tone, and look beaming with faith

Exult in this deliverance wrought through faith . . . Of Faith, which doth all passions tame . . . But faith sublimed to ecstasy ! . . . That keeps not faith, nor yet can point a hope

Faith bore her up through pains in mercy given, . . . Faith had refined ; and to her heart

Through his industrious life, and Christian faith . . . In the faith that looks through death, . . . In these lone vales, if aught of faith may claim,

But unto Faith and Loyalty comes aid . . . Faith in the marvellous things which thou I felt ?

If this be error, and another faith . . . A more than Roman confidence, a faith

Bowing her head before her sister Faith . . . Having a perfect faith in all that passed.

Our nature, but had virtual faith that He . . . Through faith and meditative reason, resting

O, would'st power of words, by simple faith . . . Reading of nations and their works, in faith,

Faith given to vanity and emptiness ; . . . Of that great change wandered in perfect faith,

Hath neither gratitude, nor faith, nor love . . . My sorrow ; for I brought with me the faith

In which apostasy from ancient faith . . . The sternness of the just, the faith of those

Not only acquiescences of faith . . . Honour which could not else have been, a faith,

No longer keep their ground, by faith maintained . . . That once looked up in faith, as if to Heaven

Prophetic sympathies of genial faith : . . . To meekness, and exalts by humble faith ; . . . Not unexalted by religious faith, . . . If thou partake the animating faith . . . Faith in life endless, the sustaining thought

By reason, blest by faith : what we have loved, . . . And melancholy Fear subdued by Faith ; . . . But in the mountains did he feel his faith, . . . Upon the breast of Faith. I turned away, . . . Deduced by reason, or to faith revealed, . . . That he broke faith with them whom he had laid

To overweening faith ; and is inflamed, . . . Of faith was wanting. Tell me, why refused

For time and for eternity ; by faith, . . . Faith absolute in God, including hope, . . . Zeal, and the virtue to exist by faith . . . For him, who, seeking faith by virtue, strives

Affiance in each other ; faith more firm . . . Who penned, to ridicule confiding faith, . . . Is to the ear of Faith ; and there are times, . . . Had ripened into faith, and faith become Faith, Hope, and Charity—from the visible world . . . Whom the best might of faith wherever fixed, . . . Faith may be given, we see as in a glass . . . " Yet for the general purposes of faith . . . Experienced faith, the revered Pastor said,

Faith—continued.

That basis laid, those principles of faith
With mysteries;—for, if Faith were left untried, . . .
By faith in glory that shall far transcend . . .
Be happy in himself?—The law of faith . . .
And from the deth derived through Him who bled
With sober Reason Faith unites . . .

We know, yet faith sustains the sorrowing heart;
From men who winnow charity from Faith . . .

The works by faith ordained. Pursue thy path, . . .

Faithful. Even so, by faithful Nature guarded, here
To charm the surly house-dog's faithful bark, . . .
My faithful true and only Comforter. . . .
Discerning Monitor, my faithful Wilfred, . . .
A faithful nurse thou hast; the dam that did thee
year . . .

And faithful service of his heart in the worst that might ensue . . .

'Gainst duty weighed, and faithful love, did seem
Sitting alone, or with his faithful Dog, . . .
Faithful, though swift as lightning, the meek dove;
With faithful Benjamin attending, . . .
We loudest in the faithful north: . . .

'Be taught, O faithful Consort, to control
The flowers, still faithful to the stems, . . .
The stems are faithful to the root, . . .
With faithful memory left of things
Age faithful to the mother's knee, . . .
Intent upon his faithful watch, . . .

He thought,—of thee, O faithful Ass! . . .
But, faithful Emma! thou with me canst say
Love, faithful love, recalled thee to my mind—
Observe the faithful flowers! If small to great
Be named; where, faithful to a low-roofed Cot,
And thy erratic voice be faithful to the Spring!

Go, faithful Portrait! and where long hath knelt
Their sovereign empire in a faithful heart, . . .
Her summer's faithful joy—that still is mine,
And taught her faithful servants how the lyre
From chosen comrade turns, or faithful friend—
Of faithful love, undaunted truth, . . .

Of the good Priest: who, faithful through all hours
And faithful, loyal in her innocence, . . .
For faithful we must call them, hearing
These will be faithful to the end; . . .
The White Doe tracked with faithful pace
Hath yet this faithful Partner left; . . .

I, who accompanied with faithful pace
Record we too, with just and faithful pen,
Had bound the flowers I wore, with faithful tie:
To keep with faithful step the appointed way
Her faithful Spirit flew, . . .

Into this flexible yet faithful Chain;
Keeps faithful with a singleness of aim;
'My faithful followers, lo! the tide is spent
Comfort for a faithful mind; . . .

In faithful scales, things and their opposites,
Our Christian altar faithful to the east,
The dwelling of this faithful pair
Off is the medal faithful to its trust . . .

And seemliness, and faithful company,
And pray that in his faithful breast the grace
Still they were faithful; like two vessels launched
Who, faithful to a pious trust, . . .

And Christian meekness hallowing faithful loves.
With loyal students faithful to their hooks,
Quick as the pantings of the faithful dog,
A specimen portrayed with faithful hand.
The record; and, in faithful verse, was given
A spirit thoroughly faithful to itself, . . .

And human nature faithful to herself
This faithful guide, speaking from his death-bed,
Guide faithful as is needed—I began
Faithful alike in forwarding a day . . .

The faithful servant, who must hide his head
Maintained with faithful care. And you divine
And the more faithful were compelled to exclaim,
Is run, some faithful eulogist may say,
To her, a monument of faithful love, . . .

Depositories faithful and more kind
And where yet dwells her faithful Partner, left
Ascended, with his staff and faithful dog;
His sole companion, and his faithful friend,
And faithful care of unambitious schools
And found us faithful through the gloom, and heard
Faithful companions, yet another year
Of memory faithful to the call of love; . . .

Thou good and faithful servant of the Cross." . . .

Through thy champion's faithful heart
Faithfully. So faithfully, a waking dream? . . .
Faithfully kept, is as a noble deed;
Have faithfully prepared each other's way—
For he that faithfully Love's servant is,
Descending, have I faithfully retraced
Have faithfully been pictured; we have reached
More faithfully collected from himself)
That ought to follow faithfully expressed? . . .

Faithfully—continued.

Upon her memory, faithfully as stars
Faithfully watched, and, by that loving care . . .
Faithfulness. And now their faithfulness is proved:
In death thy faithfulness?—"God rest his soul!"

Faithless. And still, perhaps, with faithless gleam,
By Guendolen against her faithless lord;
Shame on this faithless heart! that could allow
" This night you faithless Towers must yield, . . .
Your practice prove, faithless though but in thought,
And doomed him to contend in faithless courts, . . .
Depressed I hear, how faithless is the voice
Been faithless, hear him, though a lowly creature,
Faithless memorial! and his family name . . .

Faith's. Through love, through hope, and faith's transcendent dower, . . .
As one who drew from out Faith's holiest urn
Or the bare wreck of faith's solemnities, . . .
Falcon. A falchion, and a buckler small, . . .
Falcon. But, though Sir Walter like a falcon flies,
Falconer. The Falconer to the Lady said;
Falconer's. She knew it by the Falconer's words, . . .
And from the look of the Falconer's eye; . . .
Falcon. When falcons were abroad for prey.
A pair of falcons wheeling on the wing,
Falkland. Like gallant Falkland, by the Monarch's side, . . .

Fall. See Torrant-fall.
Attend, at every stretch, his headlong fall. . . .
Gleams that upon the lake's still bosom fall; . . .
With blindness linked, did on my vitals fall; . . .
Must fall in the execution of his office?
Of last night's snow, beneath a sky threatening the fall of more, . . .

Of glad or willing service to thy share would fall."
When evening dews begin to fall, . . .
Sporting with the leaves that fall, . . .
And that bright gleam which thence will fall . . .
As if they'd fall asleep embracing! . . .
Once raised, remains aghast, and will not fall!
Ye trees, that may to-morrow fall, . . .
Though threatening still to fall; . . .
And bids it aptly fall, with chime . . .
Or imp from witch's lap let fall? . . .
Vengeance upon his head will fall, . . .
Murmuring; the fall of rivers, winds and seas,
Fade and are shed, that from their timely fall . . .

That every foot might fall with heavier tread,
More prompt, more glad, to fall than drops of dew
Fall to prevent or beautify decay; . . .
This fall of water that doth make . . .
All kinds, and creatures, stand and fall . . .
Of Venice did not fall below her birth, . . .
How they with dignity may stand; or fall, . . .
If fall they must. Now, whether doth it tend?
—Let Empires fall; but ne'er shall Ye disgrace
In the Tower's shadow, of decline and fall . . .
To that which our first Parents, ere the fall . . .
Towers, temples, fall by stroke of thunder; . . .
Dewy and fresh, till showers again shall fall. . . .
As golden locks of birch, that rise and fall . . .
Now doth a delicate shadow fall, . . .
That name—pronounced with a dying fall—
This said, our tears to-day may fall . . .
For we must fall, both we and ours—
He hence may learn, ere fall of night, . . .
Ill tears she wept; I saw them fall, . . .
And when, ere fall of evening dew, . . .
If tears are shed, they do not fall . . .
" Here Man more purely lives, less oft doth fall,
Their warrant. Bodies fall by wild sword-law;
Untouched by due regret I marked your fall!
In her esteem the thirst that wrought man's fall,
Should fall; that She, whose virtue put to shame,
Fall if ye must, ye Towers and Pinnacles,
Whom they must follow; on whose head must fall,
Or he must fall, to sleep without his fame,
Fall, rosy garlands, from my head! . . .

And quick words round him fall like flakes of snow.
Let fall a brightened tear.
A fly may settle, or a blossom fall. . . .
And hope, and consolation, fall, . . .
Her bundle from her lap let fall;
Fall on thy knees and sue for help divine.
Well nigh for sorrow down he 'gan to fall.
Thou ought'st to fall and I to die; since she
And yet, into whatever sin they may fall,
But did not fall; for Virtue braves all shocks,
That can be done, will never fall . . .

When towers and temples fall, to speak of Thee!
Fall fires—but let us perish heart to heart."
Slow lights upon the lake's still bosom fall,
And the bridge vibrates, tottering to its fall,
Fall on his shifting but that gleams mid smoking dew; . . .

Flower and bud together fall;
Do fall around him upon aught that bears.
On every side fall off, we know not how,
The thoughts of gratitude shall fall like dew . . .

Fall—continued.

The light of beauty did not fall in vain, . . . 704
 With this last relic, soon itself to fall, . . . 705
 The gift of tongues might fall, and power arrive . . . 720
 To thee unknown! Twice had the trees let fall . . . 721
 Would fall together with its parent tree, . . . 722
 For those that bade them fall. They found their joy, . . . 723
 So, did a portion of that spirit fall . . . 724
 This age fall back to old idolatry, . . . 752
 As fall upon us often when we look . . . 753
 As they had chanced to fall. Her infant Babe . . . 768
 To fall upon us, while, beneath the trees, . . . 771
 Some secret of the mountains, cavern, fall . . . 776
 Here do I sit and watch—" A fall of voice, . . . 782
 Rashly, to fall once more; and that false fruit, . . . 805
 And cannot fall beneath; that do assign . . . 806
 Fall to refresh a parched and withered land? . . . 817
 And as we fall by various ways, and sink . . . 818
 By snatches, and lets fall, to be forgotten; . . . 820
 With tiny finger—to let fall a tear; . . . 826
 His beams; which, unexcluded in their fall, . . . 830
 By sundry recollections of such fall . . . 834
 Fall to the ground; whose gifts of nature lie . . . 862
 How many scrupulous worshippers fall down . . . 866
 This keen Destroyer, in his turn, must fall, . . . 867
 That task would foil; " then, letting fall his voice
 His feats or his fall? " . . . 871
 Began to fall upon the mountain tops, . . . K.8. 228
 Then to our Bishop's? Bishops? reverent let us fall, . . . L.1. 88
Fallacious. As winter trees, yield no fallacious sign . . . 423
 To no impatient or fallacious hopes, . . . 740
 And Hope full oft fallacious as a dream: . . . 753
 Fallacious, or shall righteousness obtain . . . 894
Fallen. See New-fallen.
 Of charcoal-smoke, that, o'er the fallen wood, . . . 9
 And midway on the waste ere night had fallen . . . 39
 Fallen am I, and worn out, a useless Man; . . . 52
 Hath falsely trained—shall he fulfil his purpose?
 But you are fallen. . . 53
 Fallen should I be indeed— . . . 54
 A leaf had fallen, the thing had never been . . . 65
 He must have fallen, I fancy . . . 72
 Less patient in their wretchedness, have fallen, . . . 78
 Hath fallen, and made a bridge of rock: . . . 85
 Rain had fallen, unceasing rain, . . . 93
 He there had fallen asleep; that in his sleep . . . 101
 Had walked, and from the summit had fallen headlong: . . . 101
 With outspread arms and fallen upon her knees . . . 139
 And so, when night with grateful gloom had fallen, . . . 147
 The storm had fallen upon the Oak, . . . 153
 As he had fallen in magnanimity; . . . 214
 Though fallen thyself, never to rise again, . . . 305
 To guard the fallen, and consummate the event, . . . 326
 Best suits with fallen grandeur, to my sight . . . 333
 Had fallen upon the ear. . . 334
 Thus after Man had fallen (if aught . . . 343
 Of rival glory; they—fallen Italy— . . . 359
 Yet why prolong this mournful strain?—Fallen
 Power, . . . 360
 Fallen, and diffused into a shapeless heap, . . . 382
 Of heroes, fallen, or struggling to advance, . . . 385
 If thou hast fallen, and righteous Heaven restore . . . 440
 But these had fallen for profitless regret . . . 442
 Fallen though she be, this Glory of the west, . . . 474
 The Man had fallen, that place of fear! . . . 491
 And to fallen man their innocence is dear, . . . 500
 Had darkness fallen—unthreatened, unpro-
 claimed— . . . 548
 For on the past hath fallen a light . . . 583
 That, o'er the ruins of the fallen wood, . . . 599
 That must have fallen upon him had he brought . . . 656
 Had fallen in presence of a studious friend, . . . 666
 Though fallen from bliss, when in the East he saw . . . 709
 The King had fallen, and that invading host— . . . 718
 That he and his supporters all were fallen, . . . 726
 Among the fallen of nations, dost abide . . . 732
 When high, more high, and lifts us up when fallen, . . . 737
 Foremost in my affections, had fallen back . . . 749
 Have fallen more lightly, if it had not fallen . . . 779
 Had fallen in torrents; all the mountain-tops . . . 783
 Was fallen, the rain abated, but the hills . . . 784
 From out the crumbling ruins of fallen pride . . . 817
 On which, now fallen, erewhile in majesty . . . 827
 And that best gift of heaven hath fallen on them; . . . 833
 Than this fallen Spirit? in those dreary holds . . . 843
 Had summer scorched the fields; not twice had fallen, . . . 861
 To whom the small inheritance had fallen. . . 864
 When from the Wanderer's lips these words had fallen, . . . 877
 " Behold the shades of afternoon have fallen . . . 890
 As if they from a silver tree had fallen— . . . S.3. 433
 Our Nature from her fallen state, . . . S.3. 439

Falling. Blue pomp of lakes, high cliffs and falling floods, . . . 5

Falling—continued.

Vallombre, 'mid her falling fanes, depleores, . . . 12
 Or rumbling, heard remote, of falling snow, . . . 17
 Chasing those pleasant dreams, the falling leaf . . . 22
 Outspread, as if to save himself from falling!— . . . 73
 The dew was falling fast, the stars began to blink; . . . 87
 To gambol with Life's falling leaf. . . 170
 Have gained a sanction from thy falling tears; . . . 270
 And, falling into Bruce's arms, . . . 287
 Were on the bough, or falling; . . . 385
 Day's grateful warmth, tho' moist with falling dews, . . . 453
 When hailstones have been falling, swarm on swarm, . . . 571
 Chasing those long long dreams the falling leaf . . . 616
 Engender lightning, whence are falling showers, . . . 625
 Incessant rain was falling, or the frost . . . 640
 There was an inner falling off—I loved, . . . 662
 Are falling hard, with people yet astir, . . . 697
 With waters running, falling, or asleep, . . . 700
 The crash it made in falling! From the wreck . . . 796
 And, with this change, sharp air and falling leaves, . . . 828
 Of white torrent falling down the rocks . . . 846
 Of night is falling round my steps, then most . . . 856
 At the first falling of the autumnal snows, . . . K.8. 224
Fallings. Fallings from us, vanishings; . . . 589
Fallow-deer. To his side the fallow-deer . . . 205
Falls. See Waterfalls.
 Where falls the purple morning far and wide . . . 10
 Falls on the valleys as the sun goes down; . . . 19
 By an uncertain light revealed, that falls . . . 20
 That cease not till night falls, when far and nigh, . . . 21
 Each rises as the other falls: and first, . . . 58
 Blest, though every tear that falls . . . 141
 It falls not here on bud or bloom, . . . 154
 So feebly spread that not a shadow falls, . . . 182
 That on their Gipsy-faces falls, . . . 194
 And back he falls, as if his life were flown! . . . 242
 His lenient touches, soft as light that falls, . . . 272
 Nor falls that intermingling shade . . . 338
 While on the warlike groups the mellowing lustre falls, . . . 339
 'Mid recent coolness, such as falls . . . 343
 Near the rough Falls of Inversneyd! . . . 344
 Its murmur how soft! as it falls down the steep,
 Where dew falls not, where rain-drops seem unknown? . . . 354
 Falls upon her like a breath, . . . 397
 But, see, the sacred Standard falls!— . . . 408
 He served in folly. Wooden falls, and Thor . . . 423
 Thy Image falls to earth. Yet some, I ween, . . . 434
 Whose fruit around the sun-burnt Native falls . . . 444
 Month falls on month with heavier weight; . . . 479
 —From viewless lamps a ghastly dimness falls, . . . 614
 And, from his alder shades and rocky falls, . . . 636
 Loses her just authority, falls beneath . . . 655
 Who only misses what I missed, who falls . . . 660
 Each little drop of wisdom as it falls . . . 665
 Or, haply, some choice rural haunt,—the Falls . . . 670
 Falls rarely in entire discomfiture . . . 692
 That, whatsoever falls my better mind . . . 720
 Like a ripe date which in the desert falls . . . 748
 The shadow falls to note the stealthy hours, . . . 780
 That falls and disappears, the house is gone; . . . 846
False. False Shame discarded, spurious Fame
 despised, . . . 70
 His senses play him false; and see, his arms . . . 73
 If his own eyes play false with him, these freaks . . . 73
 That does not play you false,—On that tall pike . . . 97
 Were false to us; and, if he were not false, . . . 134
 False thoughts, thoughts bold and vain, . . . 194
 (For what delights the sense is false and weak) . . . 257
 As false to expectation. Nor fret thou . . . 267
 Vain earth! false world! Foundations must be laid . . . 269
 Law but a servile dupe of false pretence, . . . 280
 Who scorns a false utilitarian lure . . . 282
 Too false to guide us or control! . . . 291
 Objects of false pretence, or meanly true! . . . 335
 Of purposes which no false thought shall cross, . . . 373
 Though false to Nature's quiet equipoise: . . . 382
 Plays false with our affections; . . . 386
 From false assumption rose, and foodly hailed . . . 429
 Vain is the pleasure, a false calm the peace, . . . 455
 False in the issue, that you seeming space . . . 461
 False praise from true, or, greater from the less, . . . 489
 The Future made to play so false a part, . . . 505
 Or wan despair—the ghost of false hope fed . . . 514
 False fires, that others may be lost, . . . 534
 For there is not so false a bird as she, . . . 561
 Of that false Bird whom Love can not abide, . . . 561
 Now, Reader, learn from this my fate, how false, . . . 574
 " False Parent of Mankind! . . . 582
 To that false INNOCENCE's power . . . 620
 Like a false steward who hath much received . . . 636
 Art thou of that false secondary power . . . 645
 Was not puffed up by false unnatural hopes, . . . 670
 Were false, and in their splendour overwrought, . . . 674
 False tints too well accorded with the glare . . . 692
 Ere Phœbe sighed for the false Ganymede; . . . 701
 Who to themselves are false. But these are things . . . 720

That to an Idol, falsely called "the Wealth"
'Tis not for the unfeeling, the falsely refined,
Of matters which not falsely may be called
Unheard by her, that she, not falsely taught,
Among the wretched and the falsely gay,
Are falsely catalogued; things that are, are not,
That I was ignorant, had been falsely taught,
Known by whatever name, is falsely deemed

Falsify. No change can falsify!
Falter. For he, with tongue not used to falter,
Press the point home, or falter and demur,
That did not falter though the heart was moved,
While tens of thousands falter in their path,
Faltered. He faltered, drifted to and fro,
Who faltered not, nor turned aside;
If we have faltered or transgressed,
Faltering. Yet hear me up—else faltering in the rear
I spoke with faltering voice, like one
Whose tender love, here faltering on the way
Had from a faltering pen been asked in vain;
With his lean hand, and in a faltering voice,
Faltering and faint, and ignorant of the road:
Ceased from his task; and she with faltering voice
Fame. In these secluded vales, if village fame,
False Shame discarded, spurious Fame despised,
Shall lift his country's fame above the polar star!

And others like in fame, created Powers
Whose souls take pride in freedom, virtue, fame,
So emulous of Macedonian fame,
Like this contented, though unknown to Fame:
Nor characters of Greek or Roman fame,
And thy bold rocks are worthy of their fame.
The thirst of fame his warrant:
His fame may spread, but in the past

In the last sanctity of fame is laid,
Thin silver hairs, and ancient hamlet fame;

Such is Albion's fame and glory,
Whereon Britannia rests her peaceful fame.
And shapes of spurious fame and short-lived praise
A mansion visited (as fame reports)
Divulged by Truth and magnified by Fame;

Before his sight in power or fame, and won,
In their own arts outdone, their fame eclipsed,

Family. —A Hermit with his family around!
My father's family!
His family were laid, he thence might learn
Your years make up one peaceful family;
They left to him the family heart, and land
To my own family. An evil man
To give their bodies to the family mould.
The family had come that way,
O'er this poor family.
The Widow and her family.
Such power possess the family of floods
Hath long been of thy family.
Maid of the blasted family,
Patriarch of a wide-spreading family,
When first I saw that family forlorn,
By Paic and her sad family unbound,
Of Wallace, like a family of Ghosts,
Though but a little family of men,
With the great family that still survives
The family who dwell within your house
Far from the family vault,—A Chieftain one
See daily in that happy family.
That family (whose graves you there behold)
An inmate of a second family;

Yet, like a tool of Fancy, works
 The reasoning mind, or with the fancy play,
 Lest Fancy trifle with eternal laws,
 And FANCY greets them with a fond embrace ;
 Season of fancy and of hope,

 This gives him the fancy of one that is young,
 Of that arch fancy which would round him play,
 Or Fancy, disciplined by studious art,
 Yet my fancy has pierced to his heart, and

If e'er, on wings which active fancy gave,
 Than Fancy gave assurance of some work
 In this recess, by thoughtful Fancy built,
 With playful zest of fancy, did we note
 Well might sarcastic Fancy then have whispered,
 He, to my fancy, had become the knight
 Of Fancy, happy pastures ranged at will,
 As impotent fancy prompts, by his fireside,
 And mighty forms, seizing a youthful fancy,
 With unchecked fancy ever on the stir,
 Whether the bolt of childhood's Fancy shot
 The songs of spirits ! Nor had Fancy fed
 Like one of these, where Fancy might run wild,
 A wilfulness of fancy and conceit : . . . 702
 Tipped with a rain-drop, Fancy loved to seat,
 That made my fancy restless as itself,
 Thus wilful Fancy, in no hurtful mood,
 How Fancy, in a season when she wove
 Beat high, and filled the fancy with fair forms,
 Master my fancy while I wandered on . . . 716
 The play-fellows of fancy, who had made
 Comes o'er my heart : in fancy I behold
 From Fancy, willing to set off her stores
 That Fancy, dreaming o'er the map of things,
 Devised by fancy for the golden age ;
 Above what rules can teach, or fancy feign ;
 Wherever fancy leads ; by day, by night,
 Of a quick fancy and an active heart,
 For studious fancy, his quick hand bestowed
 Which his poor skill could make, his fancy fetched,
 Might, with small help from fancy, be transformed
 This pleasing fancy (cherished and upheld
 And skill in letters—every fancy shaped
 Thus did a waking fancy sometimes lose
 The cloud of fancy and uncouth surmise
 A fancy pregnant with resource and scheme
 Fancy, and understanding ; while the voice
 To which his peaceful fancy oft had turned,
 And in the lover's fancy ; and to feed . . . 875
 And scarcely could you fancy that a gleam
 And uncouth fancy. From behind the roof
 Passing, as accident or fancy led,
 There too did Fancy prize the murmuring wheel ;
 The fancy pleased by spectacles unlooked for, . . . S.3. 433

 Though starting but as Fancy's Shade,
 For Fancy's errands,—then, from fields half-filled
 Haunts, with sad echoes, musing Fancy's ear :
 Wandering, he haunts, at fancy's strong command,
 Lurks in it, Memory's Helper, Fancy's Lord,
 Even by an innocent fancy's slightest freak
 Philosophy, methinks, at Fancy's call,
 Her works, as they present to Fancy's choice
 Mad Fancy's favourite vassals ? Does not life

 And Blasphemy the shuddering fane alarms ;
 Round a lone fane the human Genii mourn
 Of Nightshade, and St. Mary's mouldering fane,

 'Mid lawns and shades by breezy rivulets fanned,
 Pinions that fanned the teeming mould
 Fanned by the plausive wings of Love . . .
 Though by the same zephyr our temples be fanned
 To sit and muse, fanned by its dewy air . . .
 Fanned by the breath of foes,
 As the sun mounts, by sea-born-breezes fanned ;
 Where cities fanned by thy brisk air,
 Here lawns and shades by breezy rivulets fann'd,
 Fanned by the breath of angry Providence,
 Disarmed his voice and fanned his yellow cheek
 Fanning. Or from high points of rock looked out for Soft breezes fanning your rough brows—the might

 But one that leaps to meet the fanning breeze.
 Toss in the fanning wind a humbler plume."
 And cool my temples in the fanning air,
 The Zephyrs fanning, as they passed, their wings,
 On all sides open to the fanning breeze,
 Fanning his temples under heaven's blue arch
 Dying, or dead ! Nor shall the fanning breeze

 tastic shape ! —
 Build up a wild fantastic scene ;
 Strange scene, fantastic and uneasy
 'Tis said, fantastic ocean doth unfold
 Than aught the sky's fantastic element,
 When most fantastic, offers to the view,
 Whose floccid sails in forms fantastic droop,
 Fantastic pomp of structure without name,
 From its fantastic birthplace ! And I own,
 The tedium of fantastic idleness :
 Than in fantastic conqueror's roving camp,
 Crowned like the image of fantastic Fear ;
 Far. Far in the regions of the west,
 Far from my dearest Friend, 'his mine to rove
 A fence far stretched into the shallow lake,
 Far in the level forest's central gloom : . . .
 And dressless are the valleys far and wide,
 Far to the western slopes with hamlets white,
 Her dawn, far lovelier than the moon's own morn,
 Where falls the purple morning far and wide . . .
 —There he whose lot far otherwise is cast ;
 Far o'er the water, hung with groves of beech ;
 And far and wide the icy summits blaze,
 All motions, sounds, and voices, far and nigh,
 And hear the rattling thunder far below ;
 —Far different life from what Tradition hoar
 Far stretched beneath the many-tinted hills,
 That cease not till night falls, when far and nigh,
 Far from all human dwelling : what if here
 Far lovelier, and his heart could not sustain
 That rang down a bare slope not far remote :
 The cock far off sounded his clarion throat ;
 Well met from far with revelry secure . . .
 Suffering not doing ill—fate far more mild.
 A pale-faced Woman, in disease far gone, . . .
 Far as the cottage. "A sad sight is here,"
 As come, dear Child ! from a far deeper source . . .

Far—continued.

We have thus far adventured, will suffice . . .
 So far on your journey I on my life,
 That noise I—would I had gone with her as far
 Worse is he far, far worse (if foul dishonour
 And higher far than lies within earth's bounds;
 And your support—my hut is not far off.
 Far as the willow-skirted pool,
 Went shouting far and wide;
 Far better than the sages' books,
 When my father found thee first in places far away;
 While his light returns from far.
 In which, from burning heat, or tempest driving
 far and wide,
 Far happier lot, dear Boy, than brings full many
 to this shrine;
 "Holy as that far seen which crowns the sumptuous
 Church in Rome
 Far and wide on hill and valley
 And hence, so far from wanting facts or dates
 Have far to travel,—and on these rough paths
 And down the Enna, far as Egremont,
 Entering, when evening was far spent, the house
 And grateful Britala prospered far above
 Far as in power the eagle doth the worm:
 Seems the wide world, far brighter than before!
 Some thought far worse of him, and judged him wrong;
 O dearer far than light and life are dear,
 But thou, dear Babe, art far away,
 Thy own dear mother's far away,
 Far more than I can be to thee.
 And far into the moonlight dale,
 And far into the moonlight dale;
 But he is neither far nor near,
 That echoes far from hill to hill.
 But he is milder far than she,
 Father and Son, while far into the night
 And so far seen, the House itself, by all
 Far more than we have lost is left us yet.
 Which they are touching; yea far brighter, even
 And she came far from over the main.
 But say, my heart is far too glad;
 For him that's gone and far away
 I've sought thy father far and wide.
 Helvellyo far into the clear blue sky
 Our walk was far among the ancient trees:
 In some far region, here, while o'er my head,
 Now are they parted, far as Death's cold hand
 And whirled, and whirled him far away;
 Of a far superior garden.
 Hail to Thee, far above the rest
 Eyes of some men travel far
 And Russia far inland?
 From bloody deeds his thoughts are far;
 But pangs more lasting far than Lover knew 19
 Far beyond in joy of heart,
 Far from human neighbourhood;
 Happier, far happier is thy lot and ours!
 In silence deeper far than that of deepest noon!
 Then most of all, then far the most,
 At once far off, and near.
 Scattering fresh flowers; though happier far, I
 ween,
 An innocent life, yet far astray!
 Far from the world I walk, and from all care;
 Or like a maa from some far region sent,
 And said that, gathering leeches, far and wide
 Far less could this with profit be said;
 I will not stop to tell how far he fled,
 And far and wide the fame thereof did ring.
 I looked upon the hill both far and near,
 Of something far more deeply interested,
 With warmer love—oh! with far deeper zeal
 Yet further may relent: for mightier far
 And, far beyond thy native East,
 When fields are naked far and wide,
 Where Trent is nursed, far southward! Cambrian hills
 Far into silent regions blue and pale—
 Distinctly heard from far—a doleful note!
 When she is, far from these wild places,
 Revive unenvied,—mightier far,
 Pervade the lonely ocean far,
 Buried in glory, far beyond the scope
 How far off yet a glimpse of morning light,
 Downcast, or shooting glances far,
 Then, on far earlier, let us rove
 Far as the woodlands—with the trill to blend
 More darling far than Hippogriff,
 They know not I have been so far;
 And far as Aberdeen,
 He was the wildest far of all—
 Must spy about him far and near:
 All still and silent—far and near!
 Among the mountains far away;
 Why wander from your course so far,
 By this his heart is lighter far;
 Our British Hill is nobler far; he shrouds
 Of limpid water, humbler far than aught

Far—continued.

"Think gentle Lady, of a Harp so far
 To its sad Lord, far from his native fields?
 With Ships the sea was sprinkled far and nigh,
 Save only far as thought and feeling blend
 But harder far, once more I see thee bend
 Which sends so far its melancholy light,
 And, haply, far within the marble belt
 Fame tells of groves—from England far away—
 Elates not, brought far nearer the grave's rest,
 O'er the chilled heart—reflect; far, far within
 With rival earnestness; far other strife
 What need of fields in some far clime
 Far from their noisy haunts retire,
 For thee when I am far away:
 But something deeper far than these:
 In a strange Land, and far from home,
 And, far and near, through vale and hill,
 Whom mere despite of heart could so far please,
 Far higher hills than these of ours!
 Are brought in ships from far.
 His father's ship, and had sailed far—
 She was too happy far.
 Far distant, when, as legends say,
 Banners, and happy faces, far and nigh!
 His business as he likes. Far other show
 There is a bondage worse, far worse, to bear
 1
 Far—far more abject, is thine Enemy:
 When, far and wide, swift as the beams of mora
 Shrink not, though far outnumbered by their Foes,
 Springs this indigenous produce far and near;
 But fletcher far the pious of the Wind,
 But death becoming death, is dearer far,
 That deeper far it lies
 O Britain! dearer far than life is dear,
 Thus far contented, that for You her verse
 Thus far pursued (how gloriously!) by Man,
 And to the chapel far withdrawn,
 So far from the holy enclosure was cast,
 Cast far or near a murky shroud;
 I ask in vain—and know far less
 They, too, who send so far a holy gleam
 Far as ST. MAURICE, from yon eastern FORKS,
 Far more than any heart but mine can know.
 The simple rapture;—who that travels far
 For what thus far hath blessed my wanderings, thanks
 More touching far than aught which on the walls
 Seemed churlish. And behold, both far and near,
 I saw far off the dark-top of a Pine
 Far off and faint, and melting into air,
 St. Francis, far from Man's resort, to abide
 Looking far forth from his aerial cell,
 From far, forgive the wanderings of my thought:
 Stretched far as earth might own a single lord;
 Like guests that meet, and some from far,
 Which moonlit elves, far seen by credulous eyes,
 In sunshine sailing far away,
 A further, though far easier, task
 He spake bare truth; for far and near Saint Cuthbert's Relic—far and near Unworthier far we are nodone—
 Far back—far back my mind must go
 And southward far, with moor between,
 Not distant far, the milk-white Doe—
 That, far from human neighbourhood,
 Far under ground is many a cave,
 Thus far the Opposer, and repelled
 Possessed the country, far and near;
 And she hath wandered, long and far,
 And thence look round her far and wide,
 Raised far above the law of kind;
 And far above the mine's most precious ore
 Have chased far off by righteous victory
 And, in awe-stricken Countries far and nigh
 Far as it dares to follow. Herbs self-sown,
 Or lonely tapers when from far they fling
 Down a swift Stream, thus far, a bold design
 'Tis past away; far other thoughts prevail;
 From roseate hues, far kenne'd at morn and even,
 Such is the prospect far as sight can range,
 Hark to that second larum!—far and wide
 Far as she may, primeval Nature's style.
 With thy stern aspect better far agrees
 But look we now to them whose minds from far
 Strewn far and wide. Think, proud Philosopher!
 Where Burns ploughed up the Daisy." Far and wide
 For things far off we toil, while many a good
 Not far from that fair site whereoo
 Not far from pleasant Ivor-hall,
 Far from the chimney's merry roar,
 And part far from them—sweetest melodies
 Wings have we,—and as far as we can go.
 Far different we—a forward race,
 Far in the bosom of Helvellyn,
 Nor far had gone before he found
 The umbrageous woods are left—how far beneath!

Far—continued.

May He pour round you, from worlds far above
 Be with some lover far away, or one
 Far as the last gleam of the filmy train
 Yet on presumptuous wing as far would fly
 Against far heavier ill, the pestilence
 Far as ye may, erect and equalize;
 He feels how far the act would derogate
 So far that, if consistent in their scheme,
 Far oftener then, bad ushering worse event,
 Pursuit and evidence so far must fail,
 Far higher, else full surely shalt thou err.
 Far from our home by Grasmere's quiet Lake,
 Not far we travelled ere a shout of glee,
 Far happier they who, fixing hope and aim
 When unforeseen distress spreads far and wide
 Espies far off a Wreck, amid the surf,
 I come," said she, "from far,
 So far runs back the praise
 Far from St. Cuthbert his beloved Friend,
 Until thus far she learned, that he had been
 If long time from thy mate thou be, or far,
 Till he was far, all out of sight, away,
 Though I be far from her I reverence,
 (A thing more precious far than all that books
 A Farmer he was; and his house far and near
 Yet Adam was far as the farthest from ruin,
 Like one whose own country's far over the sea;
 Here, brought from far, his course found rest,
 To life-long singleness; but happier far
 In a thousand valleys far and wide,
 Though inland far we be,
 Unshaded, eying far below the flood,
 And echo'd hoofs approaching the far shore;
 And far beneath, Banditti voices talk,
 Far o'er the secret water dark with beach,
 While'er far and wide the jey summits blaze.
 Far different life to what tradition hoar
 Ev'n by the secret cottage far away
 And hue far deeper than the Tyrian dye;
 Drove far away the savage thoughts that roll
 Or not far off. Where'er my footsteps turned,
 It keeps them safe, and far,
 What Power unseen diffuses far
 Thus far, O Friend! did I not used to make
 My own voice cheered me, and, far more, the mind's
 Ah! better far than this, to stray about
 Far hetter never to have heard the name
 The horizon's utmost boundary; far above
 Tinkled like iron; while far distant hills
 Thus far, O Friend! have we, though leaving much
 Far earlier, ere one smoke-wreath had risen
 In the great city, 'mid far other scenes;
 As one far mightier, hither I had come,
 Far from those lovely sights and sounds sublime
 Or circumstance, how far soever changed
 It lies far hidden from the reach of words.
 Their light composure, far less to instil
 As far as doth concern my single self,
 Far different service to those homely days
 When Learning, like a stranger come from far,
 And freer pace; but more, far more, I grieved
 Who lacking occupation looks far forth
 Far better, than to have been bolted forth,
 Far otherwise amid this rural solitude,
 A pensive feeling! I spread far and wide;
 Far hetter had it been to exalt the mind
 Be wretched, or fire come down from far to scorch
 'Twas going far to seek disquietude;
 Far stronger, now, grew the desire I felt
 To mix in quarrels; that were far beneath
 Has carried far into his heart the voice
 Of my collegiate life—far less intense
 Far art thou wandered now in search of health
 Far distant, thus beheld from year to year
 With livelier hope a region wider far.
 Leaves far behind life's treacherous vanities,
 Of Chamouny stretched far below, and soon
 That, stretching far among the Alps, assumed
 From high, the sullen water far beneath,
 Our pilgrimage, nor distant far from home,
 Among Tartarian wilds—fell short, far short,
 Above, behind, far stretching and before;
 How willingly we travel, and how far!
 Stretched and still stretching far and wide, exalt
 From far, with basket, slung upon her arm,
 But lovelier far than this, the paradise
 Of maids at sunrise bringing in from far
 Attuned, or sprightly nite resounding far.
 As those of books, but more exalted far;
 Far more of an imaginative form
 His hour being not yet come. Far less had then
 Had bred in me; but gloomier far, a dim
 Far less than craving power; yet knowledge came,
 Turns, and will measure hack his course, far back,
 And busy with an action far advanced.
 Of a Republic, where all stood thus far
 And for a moment, men from far with sound
 How far they travel, and how long endure;

Far—continued.

Justice and peace. But far more sweet such toil—
 Far off at Chamford on the plain beneath;
 Far was I, far as angels are from guilt.
 When the calamity spread far and wide—
 Not far from that still ruin all the plain
 Heaved at safe distance, far retired. I paused,
 Thus far our trust is verified; behold!
 Ooe victory with another, higher far,—
 By reason: nay, far from it; they were yet,
 And ought to be; and strove to learn how far
 Promised, now is; a far more sober cause
 And, O Theocritus, so far have some
 What wonder, then, if, to a mind so far
 Far less did rules prescribed by passive taste,
 While yet we may, as far as words can give,
 Ascending, overlooked them both, far stretched;
 The test of such a trial; clearer far
 By bodily toil, labour exceeding far
 How far so'er transported and possessed,
 Grandeur as much, and loveliness far more.
 In the great City, broke like light from far.
 Far, far beyond, the solid vapours stretched,
 Usurped upon far as the sight could reach.
 Far as it carries thee. In some green bower
 In the recesses of thy nature, far
 Suppose my powers so far confirmed, and such
 Far more: for Nature's secondary grace
 Far less a common follower of the world,
 In clearest air ascending, showed far soon
 Far other lot, yet with good hope that soon
 Beloved and honoured—far as he was known.
 Beneath him—Far and wide the clouds were touched,
 When they were silent: far more fondly now
 He wandered far; much did he see of men,
 And journey far, revisiting the scenes
 They, and their wives and children—happier far
 To travel in a country far remote;
 He said that she was used to ramble far—
 I have been travelling far; and many days
 Headless how far; and, in such piteous sort
 From sources deeper far than deepest pain,
 Renowned for splendid prospect far and wide)
 How tenderly protected! Far and near
 With one poor shepherd, far from all the world!
 (How far so'er a stranger) does not own
 A wilderness of building, sinking far
 Far sinking into splendour—without end!
 "Far happiest," answered the desponding Man,
 Far as she finds a yielding element
 In past or future; far as she can go
 From far to ye come; and surely with a hope
 Safe from temptation, and from danger far?
 That consolation may descend from far
 So far, and of his old inheritance
 But contentments, worthier, nobler far
 I bent my way; and, roaming far and wide,
 No natural branch; despondency far less;
 You have been driven far as its opposite,
 But others, far beyond this narrow sphere,
 The streams far distant of your native glen;
 Have acted, suffered, travelled far, observed
 Preserved from age to age; more precious far
 A distant strain, far sweeter than the sounds
 Far as it might be urged, to sow afresh
 Far less, than these, yet such, in their degree,
 Though far misled? Shall men for whom our age
 That we should pry far off yet be unraised;
 And offered, far as frailty would allow,
 Opprest, far less becoming ornaments
 Had yet to travel far, but unto us,
 In length before us; and, not distant far,
 Winds far in reaches hidden from our sight,
 Far better not to move at all than move
 The inevitable circle: hetter far
 Are that which we would contemplate from far.
 This is the wise man's sigh; how far we err—
 Far forth to send his wandering eye o'er land
 Hoping far less than I could wish to hope,
 Far less than once I trusted and believed—
 Far from the family vault.—A Chieftain one
 —Still less, far less, am I inclined to treat
 "True," said the Solitary, "be it far
 By faith in glory that shall far transcend
 The proclamation that he makes, how far
 Far livelier than bewildered traveller feels,
 But worse affliction must be borne—far worse;
 Heavier, as his offence was heavier far.
 Not to our prayer, but far beyond our prayer;
 And with a lady's mien.—From far they came,
 And far remote the chapel stood,—remote,
 She, far behind him in the race of years.
 Far nearer, in the habit of her soul
 Till gentlest death released him. Far from us
 And propagate its kind, far as he may?
 And milder worth: nor need we travel far
 Vales deeper far than these of ours, huge woods,
 Of some bare hill, with wonder kenne'd from far.
 Oh, banish far such wisdom as condemns
 That, far as kindly Nature hath free scope

Far-distant. Tinkled like iron; while far-distant hills . . .
 Tow'rd some far-distant wood, a Figure quaint,
 Couldst thou go back into far-distant years,
 While in far-distant lands we roam,
 When hope presented some far-distant good,
 A love-lorn Maid, at some far-distant time,
 Far-distant images draw nigh,
 Or haply thinking of far-distant friends,
 From the far-distant quarry's vault returns;

Fare. To climb the treacherous cliffs for scanty fare.
 You are a lusty Traveller. But how fare you?
 That Leonard would partake his homely fare
 Recovered heart. That evening her best fare
 Bestir them in good deeds. Now, fare thee well—
 And wearily at length should fare;
 That I do not wholly fare
 I would fare like that or this,
 Of open house and ready fare.
 While thus our jocund Travellers fare,
 So forth in dauntless mood they fare,
 And now doth fare ill
 Even as these blissful creatures do I fare;
 So fare they—the Man serving as her Slave,
 Would mirth run round, with generous fare;
 Into the secret of to-morrow's fare;
 And fare thee well, to Fancy visible,
 Goes to learn how all things fare;
 On thee I look, not sorrowing; fare thee well,
 See how dying tapers fare!
 Even so fare I; and therefore, I thee pray,
 As they in order stand, the dainty fare;
 Our daily meals were frugal, Sabine fare!
 In this our deep devotion. Fare thee well!
 The portion gave of coarse but wholesome fare
 Her Helpmate following. Hospitable fare,
 "So fare the many; and the thoughtful few,
 A warning not unwelcome. Fare thee well!"

 Is human Life; and so the Spirit fares
 Thus, with the fibres of these thoughts it fares;

 Some farewell words—with one, but one, request;
 A farewell salutation; and, the like

Farm. But town, or farm, or hamlet, none they viewed,
 In grange or farm this Hundred scarcely owns . . .
 A farm or dwelling-house within five leagues, . . .
 And so is Liswyn farm. . .
 Or here at Liswyn farm? . . .
 Than here at Liswyn farm. . .
 Why would you change sweet Liswyn farm
 "Is Mosgiel Farm; and that's the very field . . .
 Upon the Sabine farm he loved so well; . . .
 Thus thirty smooth years did he thrive on his farm :
 Where, on a small hereditary farm, . . .
 To a kind master on a distant farm . . .
 Though simply, from their little household farm ;
 Which to his father's little farm belonged, . . .
Farmer. A Farmer he was; and his house far and near . . .
Farmer's. Right before the Farmer's door . . .
 Blush Pride to see a farmer's wife produce . . .
Farmers. Now think, ye farmers all, I pray,
 Farms. See Mountain-farms . . .
 Threatened by faintly-answering farms remote :
 By lonely farms and secret villages, . . .
 Of sportive wood run wild; these pastoral farms,
 To pastoral dales, thin-set with modest farms, . . .
 And scattered rural farms of aspect bright; . . .
 Among the farms and solitary huts, . . .
 Found by the verdant door of mountain farms. . .
 By secret villages and lonely farms, . . .
 Those woods and farms and orchards did present,
 Beautiful region ! o'er thy towns and farms, . . .
Far-o-bank. From his wife's Far-o-bank a decent rent, Far-off. And peeps the far-off spire, his evening bourn !
 I told of hills and far-off towns, . . .
 Fields, goods, and far-off chattels we have none :
 That far-off tinkling's drowsy cheer, . . .
 Anxious for far-off children, where . . .
 Clear tops of far-off mountains we descry, . . .
 For old, unhappy, far-off things, . . .
 Faint — far-off — near — deep — solemn and sublime!—
 And hear far-off the mellow horn proclaim
 And all the far-off past reveal . . .
 He takes alone his far-off stand, . . .
 Proud Tiber grieves, and far-off Ganges, blind
 Fresh gales to waft them to the far-off port ;
 And a far-off wind that rushes, . . .
 Fragments of far-off melodies, . . .
 To their own far-off murmurs listening.
 To moulder in a far-off field of Rome ;
 Where, tho' her far-off twilight ditty steal,
 The far-off minstrels of the haunted hill,
 The far-off peasant's day-deserted home ;
 The naked summit of a far-off hill
 Of far-off torrents charming the still night,
 Gone forth already to the far-off sea !
Far-renowned. A far-renowned altar !
Far-seeing. Say, ye far-travelled clouds, far-seeing hills—
Far-seen. Red on the hills her beacon's far-seen blaze ;
 Down from the far-seen mount. No blast might kill
 Steadying, far-seen, a frame of images . . .
Far-sequestered. Or on Cythera's far-sequestered
 steep,
Far-shot. Spares thy mild splendour; still those far-shot beams . . .
Far-stretched. Of far-stretched Meres whose salt flood never rests—
 Of his devoted worshippers, far-stretched, . . .
Far-stretching. Their own far-stretching arms and leafy heads . . .
 These pathways, yon far-stretching road !
 And in far-stretching vales, whose streams . . .
 Of Power's far-stretching hand, . . .
 From the far-stretching landscape, by the light
 Far-stretching views into eternity, . . .
Far-surveying. Sublime upon this far-surveying cone, . . .
Farther. No farther than her story needs; . . .
 And be no farther wrought upon :
 No farther than they breed a second Will more wise,]
 Down at the farther end, in which there were
 Who went something farther than others have gone,
 The Youth, who daily farther from the east . . .
 No farther than the threshold, there I found . . .
 Of her soul's beauty; farther I was then . . .
 Would push this censure farther;—for, if smiles
 Into high objects farther than they may, . . .
 Him, farther off; the pair, who here are laid;
 Yet farther recommended by the charm . . .
Farthest. For me—farthest from earthly port to roam
 I shall be with them in two days at farthest, . . .
 No more, I pray, of this. Three days at farthest
 That struck perchance the farthest cone . . .
 As might from India's farthest plain . . .
 On farthest Cornwall's rocky shore, . . .

 And he for dread did fly away full fast ;
 For when he saw her doors fast bolted all . . .
 And on his purpose bent so fast to ride . . .
 For love of God, run fast above thy sphere ;
 Upon the walls fast also would he walk,
 Twice as fast as before does his blood run about ;
 Man and his help-mate in fast wedlock joined.

 Angels and gods ! We struggle with our fate,
 From all, and cast a cloud around the fate
 What'er thy fate, those features have not grown
 But through untowardness of fate ;
 The fate of those old Trees ; and oft with pain . . .
 Have " perished by his choice, and not his fate !"
 By godlike insight. To this fate is doomed
 In every Roman, through all turns of fate,
 A Father's sorrow for her fate ?
 Fate, fortune, sweep strong powers away,
 Our fate is theirs, will reach them all ;
 Which way so'er our fate incline,
 Whatever fate remain behind,
 The headstrong current of their fate :
 To lead the prisoners to their fate . . .

 Her fate there measuring ;—all is stilled,—
 The Gods revolving the decrees of Fate,
 Bewailing his sad fate, when he was laid
 No dull oblivious nook shall hide thy fate . . .
 Better fate have PRINCE and SWALLOW—
 Ye little-ones ! Earth shudders at your fate,
 Servant of Providence, not slave of Fate—

 Fate harder still ! had he to endure assaults
 So lived I, and repined not at such fate :
 Wept for that pair's unhappy fate,
 May cling ;—hard fate ! which haply need not be
 And how a Land may rule its fate . . .

Father—continued.

And said, 'My Father he will have it so,'
 By the good God, our common Father, doomed!—
 And Oswald, too! On will we to my Father.
 Twice had he been to me a father, twice
 To womankind with duty to my Father,
 This is a happy day. My Father soon
 Eldred, you are a father.
 It is, it is, my Father—
 A single tree; she thought it was her Father—
 Your Father, Lady, from a wilful hand
 Tn fear the very worst. My Father is dead;
 Laid hands upon your Father. Fit it were
 To do with others; help me to my Father—
 I have the proofs!— O miserable Father!
 Thy Father perished. Perished—by what mis-chance?
 the man who calls himself your father;
 You have then seen my Father? He has leaned
 Such tales of your dead Father!—God is my judge,
 Was it my Father?—no, no, no, for he Idonea! thy blind Father on the Ordeal
 The Child is father of the Man;
 "That Father! will I gladly do:
 At this the Father raised his hook,
 When my father found thee first in places far
 away;
 The old man was a father to the boys,
 Two fathers in one father: and if tears,
 And hence the father of the enamoured Youth,
 Muttered the Father.—From these words the Youth
 My father from the window sees him too;
 But of his father begged, a last request,
 Or indiscretion of the Father, died.—
 The Sun and Father were come home, even then,
 And his old Father both took themselves
 Father and Son, while far into the night
 Receiving from his Father hire of praise;
 He with his Father daily went, and they
 For if thou leave thy Father he will die."
 A kind and a good Father: and herein
 And, as his Father had requested, laid
 My father for slave's work may seek a slave in mid.
 You love your father and your mother,
 "Thy father cares not for my breast,
 I've sought thy father far and wide.
 We'll find thy father in the wood.
 My father many a happy year
 Father, sister, friend, and brother.
 Their Father, took of them no thought,
 Cried they, "Your Father loves to roam:
 Could Father Adam open his eyes
 Her Father took another Mate,
 O guilty Father—would that death
 His father!—Him doth he require—
 "My father! here's my father!"
 His Father through the lonesome woods,
 No man can find it: Father! Thou must lead.
 Desponding Father! mark this altered bough,
 Your Father such example gave,
 Thy Father—anything to thee!
 Becomes not one whose father is a slave:
 Midway on some high hill, while father Time,
 Father and Judge of all, with fervent tongue,
 Their heavenly Father will incline an ear
 And to his Father give its own uerering aim.
 Father of all! though wilful Manhood read
 Father of Mercy! rectify his view,
 His Father served Jehovah; but how win
 Her Father did with joy behold,—
 "O Father! rise not in this fray—
 Dear Father, hear me when I say
 My Father, do I clasp your knees;
 And scarcely could the Father hear
 With a dear Father at their head!
 The Father had given solemn word
 I to my Father knelt and prayed;
 On foot they girt their Father round;
 Without their father in their sight,
 Before his Father, Francis stood,
 My Father! I would help to find
 You with my Father have grown old
 The Father from within the walls;
 Who with her Father had grown old
 With tears, and of his Father prayed—
 "Your Father gave me cordial greeting;
 —High transports did the Father shed;
 Once owned her Father for his Lord;
 Father! to God himself we cannot give
 O Father!—to the Espoused thy blessing give,
 That in the Almighty Father looks through all,
 (Her Father told her so) in youth's gay dawn
 The hoary Father in the Stranger's ear
 Learn to make Time the father of wise Hope;
 From Wisdom's heavenly Father. Hence hath flowed
 "But courage, Father! let us own to sea—
 Together they put forth, Father and Child!

Father's—continued.

Of their undrooping Father's widowhood, . . . 855
 Her Father's prompt attendant, does for him . . . 856
 Which, from her Father's honoured hand, herself,
 Nor husband's love, nor father's hope or care, . . . 856
 To wash the fleeces of his Father's flock—
 Thus in his Father's sight the Boy grew up ; . . . 870
 Which to his father's little farm belonged,
 Deeply, a stranger of our father's house, . . . K.8. 228 * I will 131

Fathers. But you, Sir, should be kinder. Come hither, Fathers, . . . 45
 I turned me from the dwellings of my Fathers, . . . 52
 Two fathers in one father : and if tears, . . . 99
 Of fathers, but with patient mind enforced
 May'st bear in mind the life thy Fathers lived,
 So clear, so bright, our fathers said
 The Land we from our fathers had in trust, . . . 315
 As fathers persecute rebellious sons, . . . 321

Om' which his Fathers urged, to ridge and steep
 The Fathers urge the People to be still,
 And hallowed ground in which their fathers lay ;
 Fathers ! your Virtues, such the power of grace,
 Charged with these offerings which their fathers bore
 Our fathers glimpses caught of your thin Frames,
 Themselves, the fathers and the dealers-out
 Whereon our fathers sate. And mark his brow !
 And treads the mountains which his fathers trod.

Fathom. But who can fathom your intents,
 And strive to fathom the mysterious laws
 * Angels may weigh and fathom : they perceive,

Fathoming. As timid eyes might shrink from fathoming.

Fathomless. Your independence in the fathomless
 Deep !

Fathoms. As he were twenty fathoms underground.
 Some twenty fathoms under ground.
 All weakness fathoms, can supply all needs ;

Father. We might have fed upon a father soil

Fault. That you are thus the fault is mine ; for the air . . . 39
 'Tis his own fault if he hath got a face
 Are terrible, yet ours is not the fault, . . . 54
 Their way, without mishap or fault ; . . . 69
 Or is it good as others are, and be their eyes in fault ? . . . 175
 And the fault (if fault it be) . . . 189
 That 'tis a fault in Us to have lived and loved
 My fault, nor hear it with Thy sacred ear ;
 More than enough ; a fault so natural
 If e'er, through fault of mine, in mutual pain
 Yet why take refuge in that plea ?—the fault,
 But no fault of mine, . . . 394

My fault, and keep it from thy sacred ear.
Faultless. Will thank you. Faultless does the Maid appear ; . . . 256

Faults. For youthful faults ripe virtues shall atone ;
 And faults of others—gently as he may, . . . 105

And his new Favourite. Misery !— I knew
 The bastard gave some favorite stocks of peers
Favour. That Oswald finds small favour in our sight,
 To take the intruder into favour ; . . . 142
 Yet he, not loth, in favour of thy claims . . . 290
 The memory of Thy favour, . . . 331
 The amplest share of heavenly favour gives ; . . . 433
 And by Heaven's favour happily fulfilled ; . . . 526
 Shrinking from each new favour to be shed, . . . 528

 Favour divine, exalting human love ; . . . 540
 Thy favour ; trusting that thou wilt not deem
 Whose gracious favour is the primal source
 And let thy favour, to the end of life,
 And solitude, that they do favour most,
 But for some favour, suited to our need ? . . . 885
 Conscious of that abundant favour showered

Favourable. There wait a favourable hour,
 Discerns the favourable season,
 Our journey, under favourable skies.

Favoured. See Lang-favoured, Tongue-favoured.
 No favoured eye was e'er allowed to gaze
 A favoured Being, knowing no desire
 To the favoured strawberry-flower, . . . 80
 Kive, thought I, was a favoured place,
 " Poor Shepherd of the naked Down, a favoured lot is thine . . . 92
 In truth a favoured plant ! . . . 156
 If called to choose between the favoured pair,
 With the rude shepherd's favoured glance,
 Into those favoured bowers, . . . 165
 Nor will return—but droop not, favoured Youth ;
 Might stop before this favoured scene,
 On favoured ground, thy gift, where I might dwell
 The extremes of favoured life, may honour both
 Wansfell ! this Household has a favoured lot,
 More worthy of this favoured Spot ; . . . 300

 Along the bosom of this favoured Nation, . . . 331
 And, if there be a favoured hour . . . 342
 While we look round with favoured eyes, . . . 343
 Already gathered in this favoured Land . . . 354
 Here also, on some favoured height, he would choose
 So, for the favoured One, the Flower may bloom . . . 372
 Surely, from fairest spots of favoured lands, . . . 455
 In a snug Cove on this our favoured Isle,
 Should spread on Britain's favoured ground ! . . . 534
 Among the Favoured, favoured not the least)
 Out of a farewell yearning—favoured more
 —And thou ! fair favoured region ! which my soul
 Much favoured in my birthplace, and no less . . . 636
 By Nature's gift so favoured. Upon a board
 Favoured no less, and more to every sense
 Not favoured spots alone, but the whole Earth,
 So was I favoured—such my happy lot—
 When genial circumstance hath favoured them,
 Where is the favoured being who hath held
 The measure of themselves, these favoured Beings,
 That through the desert raag. Though favoured less, . . . 815
 Where is she imaged ? in what favoured clime
 Who walk this favoured ground. But chance-regards, . . . 828
 This favoured Land, or sunshine warms her soil,
 Corrupted and cast down, on favoured ground,
 Thrive favoured Region, the conjecture harsh
 Favoured by noble privilege like this, . . . K.8. 244

Favouring. By favouring Nature and a saintly Mind
 And, billow favouring billow,
 On favouring nights, she loved to go ;
 To social interests, and to favouring Heaven ;
 Swept by a favouring wind that leaves thought free,
 A needful journey, under favouring skies,
 Of moon or favouring stars, I could behold

 Mad Fancy's favourite vassals ? Does not life
 Hence, for this Favourite—lavishly endowed
 " A favourite boundary to their lengthened walks

 I do repent me, Sir; I fear the curse
 I care not: fear I have none, and cannot fear—
 To fear the virtuous, and reverence misery,
 Or fear disguised in simulated scorn, . . . 29 Guilt 299
 To fear the very worst. My Father is dead;
 She looked at it and seemed to fear it;
 For rain and mountain-storms! the like thou

 Of hardship and distressful fear, amid the houseless waste
 Bowed meekly in submissive fear, before the Lord
 of All;
 From which the tusk wild boar flies in fear;
 Come often to us, fear no wrong;
 And oftentimes, how long I fear to say,
 Why should I fear to say
 Trembling, through my unworthiness, with fear
 Of hopelessness and fear.
 Can I be proud that jealous fear
 Aloose, I cannot fear to die.
 Then therefore should I fear to die?
 Shrunk from his Mother's presence, shunned with fear
 Were yet with peevish fear and gentle awe
 Through dark and shapeless fear of things to come,
 And Susan now begins to fear . . . 38 Bord. 26

 Fear that soon vanishes before the sight
 With morals, trusting, in contempt or fear
 Of flowers the Virgin without fear may own,
 From their high state darkened the Earth with fear,
 Sacred Religion! "mother of form and fear,"
 Of barking dogs, and bleatings from strange fear.
 With doubt, with fear, and haply with remorse:

 On Love and Fear, their several powers he blends,
 And, the main fear once doomed to banishment,
 Then, moved by needless fear of past abuse,
 Where Fear is but a transient guest,
 And whither could they dart, if seized with fear?
 Scorned, or neglected, fear not such a dearth.

Fear—continued.

There hang in fear, when grows the frozen stream,
Hence shall we turn where, heard with fear afar,
Huge Pikes of Darkness named, of Fear and Storms,
The whole next day, I hoped, and hoped with fear;
From fear and grief, and from all need
Fostered alike by beauty and by fear:
Both pain and fear, until we recognise
With triumph and delight, with hope and fear,
By the impressive discipline of fear,
More difficult before me; and I fear
The gift is yours; if in these times of fear
And poor misguided Shame, and witless Fear,
And as I looked around, distress and fear
From anxious fear of error or mishap,
Being itself benign. My drift I fear
And natural or supernatural fear,
Of pain, and doubt, and fear, yet yielding not
Of terror; yet no soul-debasing fear,
By aught, I fear, of genuine desert—
That did not leave us free from personal fear;
In a Child's heart as fear itself conceived
Diversified the allurements. Need I fear
Nothing is listened to. But these, I fear,
Full of one passion, vengeance, rage, or fear?
From vice and folly, wretchedness and fear;
In part by fear to shape a way direct,
Hope takes, or Doubt or Fear is forced to wear,
Locked up in quiet. For myself, I fear
No fear had they of bad becoming worse,
Reading at intervals; the fear gone by
Pressed on me almost like a fear to come.
And innocent victims sinking under fear,
Tumult was therefore gladness, and the fear
Of good and evil; knows not what to fear
Disjoined me from my comrade; and, through fear
In fear) have walked with quicker step; but why
Emotions which best foresight need not fear,
Actual, divine, and true. To fear and love,
To love as prime and chief, for there fear ends,
Did also find its way. Thus fear relaxed
And melancholy Fear subdued by Faith;
By help of dreams—can breed such fear and awe
Where Fear sate thus, a cherished visitant,
He had imbibed of fear, or darker thought
A strange surprise and fear came to my heart,
The story linger in my heart; I fear
She said, "I fear it will be dead and gone
An overweening trust was raised; and fear
Hypocrisy, not leagued with fear, but pride,
Confiding thoughts, through love and fear of Him
With malady—in part, I fear, provoked
Hardened by impious pride!—I did not fear
Which did not please me, "must be deemed, I fear,
Release from fear; and cherished peaceful days
Stability without regret or fear;
But in her stead—fear—doubt—and agony!"
But superstitious fear, and abject sloth,
With hope, and love, and gratitude, and fear;
Fearful; but resignation tempers fear,
With joy, and gratitude, and fear, and love;
To some un sanctioned fear?" "If this be so,
Love, admiration, fear, desire, and hate,
Enough;—I fear, too much.—One vernal evening,
And fear of him who is a righteous judge;
For all concerns of fear, or hope, or love,
That Father was, and filled with anxious fear,
Until the Wanderer (whether moved by fear
Of turbulence, anxiety, and fear—
A pride in having, or a fear to lose;
Pity away, soon shall ye quake with fear!
Would be disturbed, I fear, with wrathful scorn,
Crowned like the image of fantastic Fear;
"With such foundations laid, avaunt the fear
In crowded cities, without fear shall live
"I only touch—not take—don't fear,
Then wherefore should I fear to die?"
Then wherefore should I fear to die?"

Feared—continued.

Nor feared she in the still moonshine
Should'er have felt or feared a wound
Too much the heroic Daughter feared
That ever feared the tempting sun,
To take a farewell of me; for he feared
Father, and king, and judge, adored and feared!
Of passion: whatsoever he felt or feared,
That feared, or wholly overlooked the truth,
Fearful. The peasant, from yon cliff of fearful edge
His burning eyes with fearful light illumed.
You are too fearful; yet must I confess,
I was too fearful—take me for your guide
Has made him fearful, and he'll never be
I've heard of fearful winds and darkness that come
there;
But whence that sudden check? that fearful start!
How fearful to the desert wide!
Thy forehead as if fearful to offend,
Is gone; our peace, our fearful innocence,
Whom hardy Rome was fearful to oppose;
How fearful were it down through opening waves
You petty Steep in truth the fearful Rock,
And speak the word—"Alas! of fearful things
'Tis the most fearful when the people's eye
Turned to a fearful Thing whose nostrils breathe
So shall the fearful words of Conmination
Greta, what fearful listening! when huge stones
The pair have reached that fearful chasm,
Dread Lurd! so fearful when provoked, thine ire
Fearful, beneath, the Water-spirits call,
Haply that child in fearful doubt may gaze,
And crouching fearful at the feet of Pow'r,
With will inflexible, those fearful pangs
A fearful apprehension from the owl
Fearful; but resignation tempers fear,
Hath harassed him tolling through fearful storm,
Fearfully. She fearfully caroused,
Our vital frame, so fearfully devised,
Fearfully low; nor will your judgment scorn
Feared. Not fearing toll, nor length of weary ways,
Yet downcast as a woman fearing blame;
Not mute, and then retire, fearing no storm;
And fearing God, the very children taught
"Here then we rest; not fearing for our creed
Not fearing toll, nor length of weary ways,
Fearless. And watch the fearless chamois-hunter chase,
And clear and open soul, so prized in fearless youth.
Thus the fearless Lamb-deliverer,
To a continuance of their fearless sport,
Voluptuous, fearless of a rival, eyed
For fearless virtue bringeth boundless gain.
—Within our fearless reach are placed
And gaily lift its fearless brim
Proud Remnant was he of a fearless Race,
With weapons grasped in fearless hands, to assert
Fearless of plough and scythe; or darkling wren
Intn his coverts, and each fearless link
The hare's best crouching-place for fearless sleep
And Marmaduke in fearless mail,
Said fearless Norton to the pair
My Song, a fearless homager, would attend
Give to their Faith a fearless resting-place.
Her temples, fearless for the stately work,
Fearless of all assaults that would her brood molest.
Take those dear young Ones to a fearless nest;
Fearless (but how obscured!) the golden Power,
'Tis his with fearless step at large to roam
And while the fearless infant smiled,
Whether her fearless visitings, or those
Fearless of blame, that hence for future days
Her new-born infant, fearless as a lamb
Snow what she was, a high and fearless soul,
Of blissful gratitude and fearless love?
Fearless of winds and waves. Three several stones
Fearlessly. Confirmed of purpose, fearlessly prepared
Then Poets fearlessly rehearsed
Could fearlessly approach the shade?
And then he sang it well and fearlessly,
Forth did I go, alone and fearlessly,
Whn, mounting fearlessly the rocky heights,
Fearlessness. In virgin fearlessness, with step that seemed Fear's. Led by Fear's cold wet hand, and dogg'd by Death;
Fears. Press the sad kiss, fond mother! vainly fears.
Not to leave heart to laugh at little fears.
Are not the enemies that move my fears.
Idonea would have fears for me,—the Convent
That well may put some fears into your heart.
It is all over then;—your foolish fears
I feel that you will justify. I had fears,
And humble cares, and delicate fears;
I think of thee with many fears
And yet they leave it short, and fears
Of fears the prey, of hopes the spurt;
Mine wilt thou be, thou hast no fears;

Feel—continued.

From that soft class of devotees who feel . . .
Can feel his crimes. I have resigned a privilege ;
I feel my error ; shedding human blood . . .
You know me, Friends ; I have a heart to feel . . .
I feel that you will justify. I had fears . . .
Wherefore press this on me ? Because I feel . . .
Who damn where they can neither see nor feel . . .
Truth—and I feel it. What ! if you had bid . . .
What ! feel remorse, where, if a cat had sneezed . . .
To God above will make him feel for ours . . .
His pleading face, and feel his clasping arms . . .
It throbs, and you have a heart that does not feel it . . .
A moment's heaviness they feel . . .
I could not feel a pain . . .
Learn how she can feel alike . . .

Among thy mountains did I feel . . .
I feel I must have died with thee . . .
I should not feel the pain of dying . . .
Of natural objects, led me on to feel . . .
Thy lips I feel them, baby ! they . . .
I feel thy little fingers prest . . .
When the weary fingers feel . . .
Night and day, I feel the trouble . . .
I feel, but to inspire . . .
Whoso'er we feel and know . . .
Shall feel an overseeing power . . .
She seemed a thing that could not feel . . .
He spake of love, such love as Spirits feel . . .
The gazers feel ; and, rushing to the plain . . .
Thou, who canst think, as well as feel . . .
And, if the virtuous feel a pang too sharp . . .
Art, daring because souls could feel . . .
I feel I am a man . . .
How earth and heaven are taught to feel . . .
—Let good men feel the soul of nature . . .
I feel that I am all unfit . . .
And now is Peter taught to feel . . .
If the whole weight of what we think and feel . . .
Though man for brother man has ceased to feel . . .

Too late, I feel, sweet Orphan ! was the day . . .
And think and feel as once the Poet felt . . .
All seem to feel the spirit of the place . . .
Our Memory, feel that she hath eyes . . .
I feel this place was made for her ; . . .
And feel, thou Earth, for this afflicted Race ! . . .
And daring not to feel the majesty of right ! . . .
Shall simply feel and purely meditate— . . .
Sank in our hearts, we felt as men should feel . . .
And feel, if we would know . . .
I feel how in their presence doth abide . . .
Though pitied, feel her own distress ; . . .
Both feel, when he renews the wished-for aid : . . .
We feel that we are greater than we know . . .
And dearer still, as now I feel . . .
They sing a service which they feel : . . .
Though man be, there are angels that can feel . . .
Baronial halls the opprobrious insult feel ; . . .
Feel not that Conscience never can betray . . .
Can do for minds disposed to feel its power ! . . .
How could we feel it ? each the other's blight . . .
Feel with the Mother, think the severed Wife . . .
Our bodies feel, where'er they be, . . .
Come forth and feel the sun . . .
Of my own wish ; and feel past doubt . . .
I feel the weight of chance-desires : . . .
To righteous Gods when man has ceased to feel . . .
Which ye feel not, happy pair ! . . .
Nor feel the fulness of that joy reproved ? . . .
Earth, sea, thy presence feel—nor less . . .
Feel for the wrongs to universal ken . . .
Of sorrow ;—feel for all, as brother Men ! . . .
Tenderly do we feel by Nature's law . . .
Nor is, they feel, its wisdom obsolete— . . .
From Heaven, and feel what they repeat . . .
All that they think and feel, with tears of joy ; . . .
That in my soul I feel the joy of it . . .
Feel I a wind, that soundeth so like pain ; . . .
Make slow to feel, and by sure steps resign . . .
Men who can hear the Decalogue and feel . . .
When they can know and feel that they have been . . .
And when our hearts shall feel a sting . . .
Even here I feel it, even this Plant . . .
For ever covetous to feel . . .
The fulness of your bliss, I feel—I feel it all . . .
Feel the gladness of the May ! . . .
Yet in my heart of hearts I feel your might ; . . .
They not the trip of harmless milkmaid feel . . .
But o'er the south'd accordant heart we feel . . .
Now in the clear and open day I feel . . .
Of culture, even to feel or understand . . .
And I was taught to feel, perhaps too much . . .
Which we behold and feel we are alive ; . . .
And faculties, whether to work or feel . . .
I gave a moral life : I saw them feel . . .
Where all stand single ; this I feel, and make . . .
And yet we feel—we cannot choose but feel— . . .
And humbled down ;—oh ! then we feel, we feel . . .
Philosophy will call you : then we feel . . .

Feel—continued.

To think, to hope, to worship, and to feel . . .
Of these, I feel the imaginative power . . .
Is prompt, or slow, to feel. What say you, then, . . .
This did I feel, in London's vast domain . . .
With deep devotion, Nature, did I feel . . .
Power growing under weight : alas ! I feel . . .
Now do I feel how all men are deceived . . .
A noble aspiration ! yet I feel . . .
To feel it ;—but return we to our course . . .
I feel for thee, must utter what I feel : . . .
On which thy greatness stands ; but this I feel . . .
Substance and life to what I feel, enshrining . . .
—Yes, in those wanderings deeply did I feel . . .
And cannot choose but feel. The power, which all . . .
Have been laid open, needs must make me feel . . .
To feel intensely, cannot but receive . . .
But in the mountains did he feel his faith . . .
And eyed its waters till we seemed to feel . . .
Your very soul to see her. Sir, I feel . . .
And presence ; and so deeply do I feel . . .
That what we feel of sorrow and despair . . .
" To the dark pit ; but he will feel no pain ; . . .
But, in the process, I began to feel . . .
Roaming at large, to observe, and not to feel . . .
They act, or they recede, observe, and feel ; . . .
And felt, deeply as living man could feel . . .
Shall feel congenial stirrings late and long . . .
The rational creature, left, to feel the weight . . .
—Yes, you have felt, and may not cease to feel . . .
No vengeance, and no hatred—needs must feel . . .
Or feel, shall tend to quicken and refine ; . . .
Perchance, the heavier woes of guilt ; feel not . . .
" We see, then, as we feel," the Wanderer thus . . .
" That which we feel we utter ; as we think . . .
Yet much, I feel, is wanting—else the task . . .
To feel for those among our fellow-men . . .
Who rather would not envy, men that feel . . .
I feel, good reasons why we should not leave . . .
Of what I know, and what we feel within . . .
Which hapless Ellen now was doomed to feel : . . .
Of sorrow and dejection ; but I feel . . .
" I feel at times a motion of despite . . .
While solitude permits the mind to feel ; . . .
For me, consulting what I feel within . . .
Earth's universal frame shall feel the effect ; . . .
Installed a confidence—how sweet to feel ! . . .

His folly. Thus (I feel it while I speak),
So shall our bosoms feel a covert going
And feel no wish to be alive,

And not feel motions there ? He thought of clouds
I would stand clear, but yet to me I feel
Shall he feel yearning to those lifeless forms, . . .
Feelers. Feelers of love, put forth as if to explore
His feelers, methinks, I can see him put forth
Feel'st. Great God, who feel'st for my distress,

Feeling. See Fellow-feeling.
Father, I would not change that sacred feeling . . .
—These fools of feeling are mere birds of winter . . .
If I could think one weak or partial feeling— . . .
He is a puny soul who, feeling pain, . . .
Who would check the happy feeling . . .
And, feeling that the hope is vain, . . .
Of meditative feeling ; . . .
And, with yet fonder feeling, for the sake . . .
A pleasurable feeling of blind love, . . .
And feeling sinks as deep ! See there the door
" Feeling tunes your voice, fair Princess ! . . .
A love for things that have no feeling : . . .
He's at your elbow—to your feeling . . .
The very bacon shows its feeling, . . .
Was softened into feeling, soothed, and tamed . . .
An appetite ; a feeling and a love, . . .
Of an eye where feeling plays . . .
Happy the feeling from the hosom thrown
Save only far as thought and feeling blend
With earnest feeling I shall pray
Recalled some feeling—to set free
Such feeling pressed upon my soul, . . .
A feeling sanctified
Here only serve a feeling to invite Sustain the heart in feeling . . .
In solitude her bitter feeling : . . .
Deep feeling, that found utterance loud,
By human feeling, had ordained.
The freight of holy feeling which we meet,
'Tis the still hour of thinking, feeling, loving.
Wracks though they be, announce with feeling
With old poetic feeling, not for this,
—It is the hour of feeling.
Nor form, nor feeling, great or small ;
A chain of heart, a feeling of the mind,
And gave that strength of feeling, great
Her feeling, reendered more compassionate ;
The fount of feeling, if unsought elsewhere,
In character, and depth of feeling, shown
Dark but to every gentle feeling true, . . .

And feeling, suited to the place and time . . .

Feeling—continued.

Feeling from limbs with travel spent,
 Feeling what England lost when Reynolds died.
 In sooth, I speak from feeling, what though now
 Most feeling have of sorrow, woe and care,
 The feeling of my loss will ne'er be old;
 And he hath feeling of a day
 A feeling of their strength. The naked trees,
 The elements of feeling and of thought,
 For feeling has to him imparted power . . .
 With faculties still growing, feeling still
 Were steeped in feeling; I was only then
 A feeling that I was not for that hour,
 Or linked them to some feeling: the great mass
 Of noble feeling, that those spiritual men . . .
 A positive feeling! It spread far and wide;
 But feeling it no longer. Our discourse
 By love and feeling, and internal thought . . .
 Forget his feeling; so (if like effect
 The last night's genial feeling overflowed . . .
 For feeling and contemplative regard,
 As parts, but with a feeling of the whole.
 Ruled not, and feeling that they ought to rule.
 Of virtuous feeling. For myself I own
 They had the deepest feeling of the grief . . .
 All feeling of conviction, and, in fine,
 They had left behind? So feeling comes in aid
 Of feeling, and diversity of strength
 With real feeling and just sense; how vain
 Up to the height of feeling intellect
 The feeling pleasanter of his loneliness . . .
 Or by creative feeling overborne,
 And feeling is suppressed) preserve the mind
 And every moral feeling of his soul.
 Of tender feeling, she might dare repeat
 And, to my feeling, ere we reached the door,
 The central feeling of all happiness,
 There feeling no contentment, I resolved
 Of native feeling, grateful to our minds;
 Where soul is dead, and feeling hath no place;
 To sight and feeling, or that in this sort
 No feeling, which can overcome his love.
 Of feeling to produce them, without aid
 Who, with ancestral feeling, can perceive
 The natural feeling of equality . . .
 To impress a vivid feeling on the mind
 Of language shall a feeling heart express
 For men who in such places, feeling there
 Of feeling, which were cheerless and forlorn
 Abundance; and that, feeling as we do
Feelingly. Ye feelingly reprove;
 Who meet most feelingly the calls of sadness.
 Is known; by none, perhaps, so feelingly:
 Feelingly told by living monuments—
 How feelingly at home the Sovereign ruled;
 Most feelingly instructed 'mid their fear—
 Feelingly their brows incline
 Thou against Time so feelingly dost strive.
 Most feelingly, could overthrow my trust
 Feelingly watched, might teach Man's haughty race
 Feelingly sweet is stillness after storm,
 How feelingly religion may be learned
 No parent was—feelingly could have told,
 And much she read; and brooded feelingly
 And feelingly the Sage shall make report
Feeling's. And, for this feeling's sake, let no one chide
Feelings. I honour him. Strong feelings to his heart
 No.—Thoughts and feelings will sink deep, but then
 Have human feelings!—Now, for a little more
 Feelings and emanations—things which were
 Than common feelings of fraternal love.
 Confound my present feelings with the past,
 "And vital feelings of delight
 The stars had feelings, which they sent
 With tranquil restoration:—feelings too
 Thy thoughts and feelings shall not die,
 O chief of Friends! such feelings I present
 With chastened feelings would I pay . . .
 Yet happy feelings of the dead:
 And know that noble feelings, manly powers,
 By feelings urged that do not vainly seek . . .
 One tribute more: unbidden feelings start
 Our thoughts have issued, and our feelings flowed,
 Unacceptable feelings of contempt, . . .
 While thoughts press on, and feelings overflow,
 'Mid these more awful feelings, to infuse . . .
 Alas, how feelingly! but our feelings rise
 Could private feelings meet for holier rest.
 The many feelings that oppressed my heart.
 Of obscure feelings representative
 And, from like feelings, humble though intense,
 Drinks in the feelings of his Mother's eye!
 Is moved with feelings of delight, to me
 Did hind my feelings even as in a chain.
 Came in reply, translated by our feelings,
 Mother and child!—These feelings, in themselves
 Feelings of pure commiseration, grief
 Engrafted far-fetched shapes on feelings bred . . .
 In which my early feelings had been nursed—

Feelings—continued.

With genial feelings still predominant;
 Out of his feelings, to be fixed henceforth
 My deeper feelings, but another cause,
 Whose variegated feelings were in this . . .
 To look with feelings of fraternal love . . .
 Became more firm in feelings that had stood
 Accompanied by feelings of delight . . .
 Of greatness, and deep feelings had impressed
 Accumulated feelings pressed his heart
 Their passions and their feelings; chiefly those
 A kindling eye:—accordant feelings rushed
 His feelings of aversion softened down . . .
 Of simple manners, feelings unsuppress'd
 These inward feelings, and the aspiring vows . . .
 Feelings with these accordant; love, esteem,
 All generous feelings flourish and rejoice . . .
 Feelings and emanations, things which were
 These feelings, though subservient more than ours
Feels. You is, which feels not even the milkmaid's feet,
 Feels not the spirit of the place control . . .
 Is littleness; that he who feels contempt
 Ay, Sir, there's nobody that feels for us . . .
 Finds ease because another feels it too . . .
 And feels its life in every limb,
 Gazing she feels its power beguile . . .
 Not undisturbed by the delight it feels,
 With sorrow of the meanest thing that feels."
 The Sage, who feels how blind, how weak . . .
 He feels the gimmering of the moon;
 He feels what he for human-kind
 Even as a dragon's eye that feels the stress . . .
 Of July suns; he feels it sweet;
 Feels, and hereafter shall the truth declare,
 While the tubed engine feels the inspiring blast,
 Imagination feels what Reason fears not
 —She feels it, and her pangs are checked . . .
 Shun will she not, she feels, will bear;—
 His questions urging, feels, in slender ties . . .
 Feels, through the influence of her gentle reign,
 And soft Italia feels renewed alarms;
 Who, looking round the fair assemblage, feels
 Feels through her lowest depths thy sovereignty;
 If he one that feels, with skill to part
 The Power least prized is that which thinks and feels.
 He feels how far the act would derogate
 With envy, what the Old Man hardly feels.
 Acknowledges God's grace, his mercy feels,
 And who but feels a power of strong controul,
 Then feels immediately some hollow thought . . .
 And feels not what an empire we inherit
 Or sees in his day's march; himself he feels,
 That who feels such passion in its strength
 The one that feels, the other that observes.
 Too clearly; feels too vividly; and longs
 Who feels that to exhort is to reproach . . .
 Who neither hears, nor feels a wish to hear,
 And guard her fortresses. Who thinks, and feels,
 At least he feels 'tis given him to descry;
 Far livelier than bewildered traveller feels,
Feet. Who, to that service bound by venial fees,
 To be performed, and paid all holy fees.
Feet. Opened at once, and stayed my devinest feet.
 From lonesome chapel at the mountain's feet . . .
 Spur-clad his nervous feet, and firm his tread;
 Yon Isle, which feels not even the milkmaid's feet,
 They crush, with broad black feet their flowery
 . . . walk . . .
 Stretched at his feet, with steadfast upward eye
 Their thirst they slake:—they wash their toil-worn
 feet,
 Pursued his vagrant way, with feet half bare;
 Till on a stone, that sparkled to his feet,
 Of feet still bustling round with busy glee,
 Her garments, and, to warm her icy feet . . .
 And in the Churchyard sod her feet have worn
 Whirled from among the fern beneath our feet,
 With naked feet walked over burning ploughshares.
 Crawl from beneath our feet we do not ask
 Her feet disperse the powdery snow,
 The print of Lucy's feet . . .
 And now, all eyes and feet, hath gained
 The green earth echoed to the feet . . .
 —As homeward through the lane I went with lazy
 feet,
 Save six feet of earth where our forefathers lie!
 Your feet must struggle; in such bold ascent
 Then old, beside him, lying at his feet,
 His very feet bright as the dazzling snow
 My feet might move without concern or care;
 A Broom out of its feet.
 From this platform, eight feet square,
 When they lie about our feet:
 Apparent at his feet . . .
 That with stir of feet and wings
 And, fairly lifted from my feet,
 There, at Blencathara's rugged feet,
 Soft and cool to way-worn feet;
 A mantle, to her very feet
 And with her feet she from the plashy earth . . .

Feet—continued.

His body was bent double, feet and head . . . 196
 He travelled ; stirring thus about his feet . . . 197
 Of the spectator's feet.—Yon azure ridge,
 Their feet among the billows, know . . . 235
 Close to the Ass's feet she fell ; . . . 247
 A labyrinth, Lady ! which your feet shall rove . . . 264
 Have neither limbs, feet, feathers, joints, nor hairs :
 Then, pensive Votary ! let thy feet repair . . . 269
 Where silver Isis leads my stripling feet ; . . . 270
 A while he stood upon his feet ; . . . 296
 And, at our feet, amid the silent dust . . . 315
 Beneath his haughty feet, like clouds, are laid . . . 317
 With feet, hands, eyes, looks, lips, report your gain ;
 Where, without hurry, noiseless feet . . . 322
 Pale, ragged, with bare feet and head ; . . . 334
 With golden blossoms opening at the feet . . . 342
 (As hurry on in eagerness the feet, . . . 355
 From all her Sanctuaries—Open for my feet . . . 357
 By feet of purse-proud strangers ; they—who have read
 Their love-songs ; but, where'er my feet might roam,
 Which her Heaven-guided feet refuse to tread . . .
 And earth's green grass beneath his feet ; . . .
 The wounds of hands and feet and side,
 And trod the bible beneath their feet . . .
 What, Lady, if their feet were tied ;
 So to her feet the Creature came,
 In love and pity at her feet ;
 My feet would rather turn—to some dry nook
 Indulging thus at will the creeping feet
 At a proud Legate's feet ! The spears that lie
 Beneath their feet, detested and defiled . . .
 His frame is tied ; firm from the naked feet
 What'er the path these mortal feet may trace,
 'Turo to mianter changes at our feet ;
 "Six feet in earth my Emma lay ;
 And gurgled at our feet . . .
 More justly balanced ; partly at their feet,
 With weary feet by all of woman born)—
 Kneel at the feet of Justice, and, for faith
 Found at the Widow's feet some sad relief ;

Bathed duteously her wayworn feet,
 His staff trails with him ; scarcely do his feet
 No thorns can pierce her tender feet,
 The Pansy at my feet . . .
 See, at his feet, some little plan or chart,
 A spot, that angles at the riv'let's feet,
 Aternajly relieves their weary feet ;
 Ye crush with broad black feet your flow'ry walk ;
 Drops at his feet, and stills his droning horn . . .
 He opens of his feet the sanguine tides,
 Up the green mountain tracking Summer's feet,
 Dire clap of hands, distracted chase of feet,
 Nor longer naked he your way-worn feet,
 Still have my pilgrim feet unfailling found,
 And crouching fearful at the feet of Pow'r,
 Standing alone, and at his feet . . .
 Threatening to lay all Orders at her feet
 Of a knowo Vale, whither my feet should turn,
 With exultation, at my feet I saw . . .
 In arms, now rosy prattlers at the feet . . .
 With din of instruments and shuffling feet,
 Kept the same awful steadiness—at his feet
 Who slumbers at her feet,—forgetful, too,
 Then from his couch he starts ; and now his feet
 Than those few nooks to which my happy feet
 Beyond the limits that my feet had trod,
 When at my feet the ground appeared to brighten,
 Of azure without cloud, and at my feet . . .
 Beneath our feet, a little lowly vale,
 Conducted hither your most welcome feet,
 Lay low beneath my feet ; 'twas visible—
 Following the guidance of these welcome feet
 Where youth's ambitious feet might move at large ;
 So, like a fugitive, whose feet have cleared
 Ah ! if the time must come, in which my feet
 At the Redeemer's feet ? " In rueful tone,
 The cross itself, at whose unconscious feet
 Stretched overhead, and at my pensive feet
 Beneath this turf lie mouldering at our feet :
 So-hazardous that feet and hands became . . .
 Upon the earth beneath his feet ; and spake :—
 With wrecks, and trod by feet of young and old
 Among the humbler Worthies, at our feet . . .
 Glows at her feet, and all the gloomy rocks
 Measuring the soil beneath their happy feet
 Naked, and coloured like the soil, the feet
 Are scattered at the feet of Man—like flowers.
 That our feet are not slow ; . . .

Where Achilles swift of feet . . .
 Sparkle about the feet of wanton boys . . .
 Feign. Shall feign a sudden illness, and the Girl,
 The voiceless Form he chose to feign,
 I feign not ; witness that an welcome shock
 Above what rules can teach, or fancy feign ;
 Feigned. And yet he with no feigned delight
 In Liberty's behalf. Fears, true or feigned,

Feigned—continued.

"Nay, nay, I come with semblance feigned . . .
 Some with their notes another manner feigned ; . . .
 There was a time when whatso'er is feigned . . .
 Feignings. And transient feignings with plain truth Feigns. A scene more fair than what the Grecian feigns
 Felicities. Quench those felicities whose light I find
 Feed it 'mid Nature's old felicities, . . .
 Felicity. Without another link to my felicity . . .
 Of Britain's calm felicity and power ! . . .
 Of glory, and felicity, and love, . . .
 Through marvellous felicity of skill, . . .
 Felicity that only can be given . . .
 Felicity, in Grecian song renowned ; . . .
 And only reasonable felicity . . .
 Fell. See Cross-fell.
 And the last sunbeam fell on Bayard's eye ; . . .
 Fell where the blue flood rippled into white ; . . .
 Down fell in straggling locks his thin grey hair ;
 He fell, and without sense or motion lay ;
 My father's substance fell into decay :
 I could not pray :—through tears that fell in showers . . .
 Meanwhile the storm fell heavy on the woods ;
 With deafening noise,—the benediction fell
 When such a sudden weakness fell upon me,
 Each word of that unhappy letter fell . . .
 Was, I believed, prime Agent. The wind fell ;
 Fell not the wrath of Heaven upon those traitors ?
 And said, " My name is Alice Fell ;
 The little orphan, Alice Fell !
 His dam had seen him when he fell,
 Fell, in his hand he must have grasped, we think,
 Then fell upon thee. Day by day passed on,
 Ere the night fell !—with morrow's dawn the Boy
 Fell on him, so that he was driven at last Fell down and clasped his knees for joy, not uttering word . . .
 Fell with the weight of drops of lead ;—
 The voice of tears that fell unseen ;
 Mount to the ridge of Nathalee Fell ;
 The rain came heavily and fell in floods ;
 This Beast not unobserved by Nature fell ;
 Fell round him in the grove of Academe,
 Pating for glory as he fell . . .
 The little sprinkling of cold earth that fell
 And the blows fell with heavier weight
 As gently on his side he fell ;
 Fell at the sight from Peter's tongue ; . . .
 And fast they fell, a pleteous shower ! . . .
 Close to the Ass's feet she fell ; . . .
 On Bard and Hero clamorously fell . . .
 Fell round the path of Milton, in his hand
 In wrath) fell headlong from the fields of air . . .
 Dark and more dark the shades of evening fell ;
 Night fell I heard, or seemed to hear, . . .
 Their habitation shook !—it fell, . . .
 That day the Tyrant fell :
 To work against themselves such fell despite :
 And Hope was maddened by the drops that fell
 To you who fell, and you whom slaughter spared
 Though from the same grim turret fell . . .
 And downward by the skirt of Greenside fell, . . .
 The dew whose moisture fell in gentle drops . . .
 Sleep fell upon the air, and stilled the ocean :
 Leaf-scattering winds ; and hoar-frost sprinklings
 fell . . .
 Fell on him, with the sudden thought . . .
 Among the wastes of Rylstone Fell,
 The guardian lance, as Francis fell,
 Fell on thy tomb ; but emulative power
 Issues the master Mind, at whose fell swoop
 Fell suddenly upon my Spirit—cast
 Of slumber—shrieking back she fell,
 Their first look—blinded as tears fell in showers
 With such fell mastery that a man may dare
 As a chance sunbeam from his memory fell . . .
 If gloom fell on me, swift was my escape ;
 And Harry's flesh it fell away ; . . .
 The tangled covert fell . . .
 Fell the whole Fabric to the ground ; . . .
 He fell again into his sorrows old ; . . .
 Fell on the ground ; and the small mountain birds,
 On whom the duty fell (for at that time
 On his pale horse shall fell Consumption go . . .
 Where Machination her fell soul resigns,
 On the closed eyes of young Endymion fell,
 Oh, with what echoes on the board they fell !
 That fell in ruins round me. Oh, what joy
 No lower than I fell. I did not love,
 Exposed on the bare fell, were scattered love,
 Among Tartarian wilds—fell short, far short,
 Fell flatter than a caged parrot's note . . .
 Fell from me in my own despite. But now
 And the errors into which I fell, betrayed
 Fell under the dominion of a taste . . .
 Hard by, soon after that fell deed was wrought,
 And on the melancholy beacon, fell
 Fell like a flash, and lo ! as I looked up,

Fell—continued.

Even at her threshold. Deeper shadows fell . . .
 We shouted—but no answer! Darkness fell . . .
 Wretched ambition drops astounded, fell . . .
 Fell to the ground!—by violence overthrown . . .
 Fell Human-kind—to banishment condemned . . .
 A grateful coolness fell, that seemed to strike . . .
 Dark on my road the autumnal evening fell . . .
 Wherever laid, who living fell below . . .
 Or fell, those only shall be singled out . . .
 Death fell upon him, while reclined he lay . . .
 And the ripe corn before his sickle fell . . .
 Palmyra, central in the desert, fell ; . . .
 Then fell below zero, . . .

Insensibly, and round us gently fell . . .
Felled. A wood is felled!—and then for our own homes ! . . .
 When grove was felled, and altar was cast down, . . .
Fellow. See Good-fellow, Yoke-fellow.
 Is that a fellow to that pasture-field . . .
 That to be the tempest's fellow ! . . .
 First at one, and then its fellow . . .
 And all their fellow banks and braes, . . .
 And fellow warriors in their day ; . . .
 Until her fellow sinks to re-appear no more . . .
 His fellow country-men ; and yet most blessed . . .
 Howe'er attractive, Fellow voyager ! . . .
Fellow-beings. What from my fellow-beings I require, . . .
Fellow-brutes. Yea, for thy fellow-brutes in thee we saw . . .
Fellow-countrymen. In plaided vest,—his fellow-countrymen . . .
Fellow-feeling. Which fellow-feeling doth not mitigate ! " . . .
Fellow-guest. " My own, my own, thy Fellow-guest . . .
Fellow-labourer. A Fellow-labourer, whom the good Man loved . . .
 Do find a worthy fellow-labourer there— . . .
 The fellow-labourer and friend of him . . .
Fellow-labourers. Let us be fellow-labourers, theo, to enlarge . . .
Fellow-lodger's. " He to a fellow-lodger's care . . .
Fellow-mariner. A fellow-mariner ; and so had fared . . .
Fellow-men. Such Miads as find amid their fellow-men . . .
 Ask of his fellow-men, and they will tell . . .
 How few who mingle with their fellow-men . . .
 To feel for those among our fellow-men . . .
 Are ofttimes to their fellow-men no more . . .
Fellow-natures. In fellow-natures and a kindred joy . . .
Fellows. See Play-fellows, Yoke-fellows.
 Amid his fellows beautifully revealed . . .
 Outruns his fellows, so hath Nature leat . . .
 Share with their sculptured fellows, that, green-grow, . . .
 Not from his fellows only man may learn . . .
 Equals in pleasure, fellows in pursuit . . .
 Among his fellows, while an ample map . . .
 Fellows to those that lustily upheld . . .
 Had left his fellows, made his way alone . . .
Fellowship. Fellowship we must have, willing or no ; . . .
 In fellowship, the loftiest of the pair . . .
 With us closer fellowship, . . .
 Their fellowship renew ; . . .
 Nor they from it : their fellowship is secure . . .
 Am not unworthy of thy fellowship ; . . .
 Say rather, one in native fellowship . . .
 In a sweet fellowship with kinds beloved, . . .
 In constancy, in fellowship more fair ! . . .
 Portentous fellowship. Her silver ear, . . .
 And formal fellowship of petty things ! . . .

Then Genius, shunning fellowship with Pride, . . .
 That friendship lasts though fellowship is broken ! . . .
 To closer fellowship with ideal grace . . .
 Together move in fellowship without end.— . . .
 Nor was this fellowship vouchsafed to me . . .
 Approachable, admitting fellowship . . .
 And fellowship with venerable books, . . .
 From any reach of outward fellowship, . . .
 Aod, with blithe air of open fellowship, . . .
 An undissolving fellowship ?—What but this, . . .
 And a strict love of fellowship, combined . . .
 Would rather shun than seek the fellowship . . .
 By choice were spent in constant fellowship ; . . .
 And gladly blend with outward fellowship ? . . .
Fellowships. And fellowships of men, and see ill sights . . .
Fellow-sufferers. Than for their fellow-sufferers engulfed . . .
 With fellow-sufferers by the shipwreck spared, . . .
Fellow-suffering. Breathe in the air of fellow-suffering . . .
Fellow-tale. A fellow-tale of sorrow. From his youth . . .
Fellow-traveller. My Fellow-traveller, with earnest voice, . . .
 That served my Fellow-traveller to beguile . . .
Fellow-travellers. Dear Fellow-travellers ! think not that the Muse, . . .

Fellow-travellers—continued.

Were fellow-travellers in this gloomy strait, . . .
Fellow-wanderer. Nor is that Fellow-wanderer, so deem I, . . .
Fells. See Furness-fells.
 By night, upon these stormy fells, . . .
Felon's. Our hands behind our backs with felon cords ? . . .
Felon's. till I am brought to a felon's end . . .
 As ever ran a felon's race . . .
Felt. See Heartfelt, Home-felt, Soul-felt.
 A crumble of mighty compass, felt . . .
 Lolly disturbed, to think that others felt . . .
 Felt the loose walls of this decayed Retreat . . .
 I felt thy infant brother in her arms ; . . .
 He must have felt it then, known what it was, . . .
 I cast a look upon the Girl, and felt . . .
 As you must needs have deeply felt, it is . . .
 Felt warm as a wren's nest. You'd better turn . . .
 And when I felt your hand upon my arm . . .
 When round my wrist I felt a cord drawn tight, . . .
 And I have felt, more than perhaps becomes me . . .
 I game, and when I felt its cooling shade, . . .
 I felt a double fever in my veins, . . .
 The guilt—have touched it—felt it at your heart— . . .
 And felt, if ought on earth deserves a curse, . . .
 I felt that merit has no surer test . . .
 The Stranger would have thanked him, but he felt . . .
 " Who never tasted grace, and goodness ne'er had felt." . . .
 Careless of books, yet having felt the power . . .
 And felt that all was well . . .
 That transformation through the wide earth felt, . . .
 I felt a sense of pain when I beheld . . .
 Of sickness felt by him in times long past, . . .
 Felt in the blood, and felt along the heart ; . . .
 To chasten and subdue. And I have felt . . .
 By none more deeply felt than Thee ! " . . .
 On the flower's breast ; as if she felt . . .
 Into his heart ; he never felt . . .
 And felt, as I have heard them say, . . .
 Your presence often have I felt . . .
 Through all his iron frame was felt . . .
 As if with felt his hoofs were shod . . .
 Has never felt before . . .
 Who have felt the weight of too much liberty, . . .
 And my Soul felt her destiny divine, . . .
 Of silent rapture ; but we felt the while . . .
 Must be revealed ;—she heard it now, or felt . . .
 Ne'er saw I, never felt, a calm so deep ! . . .
 And think and feel as once the Poet felt . . .
 Are felt the flashes of his pen ; . . .
 Its power was felt ; and while my eye . . .
 He felt the motion—took his seat ; . . .
 Alas ! and when he felt their hands— . . .
 Felt for thee as a lover or a child ! . . .
 Her love ye hailed—her wrath have felt ! . . .
 Of fiercely-breathing war. The truth was felt . . .
 Of such high course was felt and understood ; . . .

As if all Germany had felt the shock ! . . .
 Sank in our hearts, we felt as men should feel . . .
 Been felt, that influence is displayed, . . .
 All that I felt this moment doth renew ; . . .
 The tolls nor felt the crosses of the way, . . .
 Her splendours, seen, not felt, the while he stood . . .
 Or rather felt, the entrenchment that detains . . .
 Her Son, and felt in her despair . . .
 He felt—and made a sudden stand . . .
 " Sweet is the holiness of Youth "—so felt . . .
 In ad for whom the pious Mother felt . . .
 Happy the crew who this have felt, and pour . . .
 How had we then rejoiced ! But we have felt, . . .
 A sea-born service through the mountains felt . . .
 Is Nature felt, or can he ; nor do words, . . .
 For sway profoundly felt as widely spread ; . . .
 Nor sometimes felt a fitness in thy sway . . .
 Nor felt a wish that heaven would show . . .
 Not One of us has felt the far-famed sight ; . . .
 Ruled here of yore, till what men felt they saw, . . .
 She felt that he was true . . .
 He felt with spirit so profound, . . .
 Was felt near murmuring brooks in earliest time ; . . .
 The heavens have felt it too . . .
 He felt ; but his parental bosom's lord . . .
 Should e'er have felt or feared a wound . . .
 Yet have I felt of sickness through the May, . . .
 Where he had felt such perfect pleasure once . . .
 And 'tis no vulgar service, makes them felt . . .
 Is felt, thy Roman burial-place will be . . .
 When ought that breathes had felt a wound ; . . .
 And if too often, self-reproached, he felt . . .
 Felt only there, oppress his labouring soul, . . .
 Was blowing on my body, felt within . . .
 The heart is almost mine with which I felt, . . .
 Of subtler nrgin ; how I have felt, . . .
 And is forgotten ; even then I felt . . .
 Even in this joyous time I sometimes felt . . .
 Have felt whate'er there is of power in sound . . .
 Remembering how she felt, but what she felt . . .
 Faith in the marvellous things which then I felt ? . . .
 I felt the sentiment of Being spread . . .

Felt—continued.

- If high the transport, great the joy I felt
A higher language, say that now I felt
And spread them with a wider creeping; felt
Have felt, and every man alive can guess?
At least not felt; and restoration came
Nor less do I remember to have felt,
On what he might himself have seen or felt.
When Contemplation, like the night-calm felt
Far stronger, now, grew the desire I felt
Nor have I pitied him; but rather felt
I saw, or heard, or felt, was but a stream
As from a distance; heard, and saw, and felt,
Since I had felt in heart and soul the shock
I mused, and thought, and felt, in solitude.
Yet rich in beauty, beauty that was felt.
I felt his presence in his own domain,
But something must have felt. Call ye these appearances—
When everywhere a vital pulse was felt,
The human nature unto which I felt
Affecting more emotion than I felt;
And felt through every nook of town and field.
I felt most deeply in what world I was,
Him who too boldly trusted them, I felt
Of her composure, felt that agony,
Death-like, of treacherous desertion, felt
As I advanced, all that I saw or felt
Felt deeply, but not thoroughly understood
Had felt its power, and mine was both left loose,
Is seen, heard, felt, and caught at every turn,
I felt, observed, and pondered; did not judge,
To speak, what I myself have known and felt;
Of human life. I felt that the array
For so it seemed, felt by the starry heavens,
Felt, that the history of a Poet's mind
Of earth and sky. But he had felt the power
Nature was at his heart as if he felt,
No piteous revolutions had he felt.
Who, in her worst distress, had oft-times felt
We sat on that low bench; and now we felt,
Their rights acknowledging he felt for all.
He neither felt encouragement nor hope:
So much I felt the awfulness of life,
I saw not, but I felt that it was there.
Incalculably distant; so, I felt
I felt: the transformation I perceived,
I felt their invitation; and resumed
Will conscience prey.—Feebly must they have felt
Whose shades have never felt the encroaching axe,
And felt, deeply as living man could feel.
Exemplified by mysteries, that were felt
Why?—for this very reason that they felt.
Of passion: what's ne'er he felt or feared,
—Yes, you have felt, and may not cease to feel.
With such memorials, I have sometimes felt,
To shake the burthen off? Ah! there was felt,
Or less benign than that which I had felt.
Felt to the centre of that heavenly calm
The hoary grandsire felt himself enriched;
A not unnatural longing felt,
Which the poor broom no sooner felt
The tyrant felt their arm sublime.
The illusion strengthening as he gazed, he felt
Have felt it, not the happy Quires of Spring,
Which I have felt this day. An awful voice,
Done truly there, or felt, of solid good
That sweeten labour, make it seen and felt
Be privileged to speak as I have felt
- Female. The female with a meeker charm succeeds,
Strong terror checks the female peasant's sighs,
And start the astonished shades at female eyes.
And female cries. Their course they thither bent,
Through the pure light of female eyes
Had done him female service, not alone
A female voice:—"Who'er you be,
To female hands the treasures were resigned;
We had a female Passenger who came
Of a fair female train—
Yet still the female bosom lent,
Of female patience winning firm repose;
Stands at the Bar, absolved by female eyes
Of lofty station, female goodness walks,
With help from female hands, that proudly strove
Twice over with a male and female voice.
There, allegoric shapes, female or male,
Thrilled by some female vendor's scream, belike
Domestic severings, female frtitude
Rejoicing o'er a female in the midst,
The female and her garments vexed and tossed
Of female softness shall his life be full,
A high-prized plume which female Beauty wears
For in that female infant's name he heard
Not, doubtless, without help of female taste
And female care.—"A blessed lot is yours!"
Or to Andates, female Power I who gave
As Fancy's snare for female vanity,
- Females. Of nun-like females, with soft motion, glide!
- Feminine. Suffused with something of a feminine hue;

Feminine—continued.

- With feminine allurements soft and fair,
And grace of feminine humanity.
- Fen. Flings o'er the fen that ponderous knell—
'Tis not a bitterer of the fen;
To barren heath, bleak moor, and quaking fen,
England hath need of thee: she is a fen
- Fence. See Hawthorn-fence.
A fence far stretched into the shallow lake,
Where leafy shades fence off the blustering gale,
Yet, where the guardian fence is wound,
Of manners, like its viewless fence,
No screen, no fence could I discover;
From mind and spirit, grudge a short-lived fence.
"Her birth was heathen; but a fence—
Sure guidance, ere a ceremonial fence
Your birthright is a fence
The fence where that aspiring shrub looked out
At evening, from behind the garden fence
And well remember, o'er that fence she looked,
A guardian planted to fence off the blast,
The stately fence accompanied our steps;
- Fenced. By reason fenced from winds that sigh
The wide earth's storehouse fenced about
With green hills fenced, with ocean's murmur lulled;"
Of things, has fenced this fairest spot on earth.
Part fenced by man, part by a rugged steep
Wherein were fixed the iron pales that fenced
Fenced round with glittering laurel; or in that

Among the mountains, fens which might be drained,
- Ferment. Like spectres,—ferment silent and sublime!
Of universal ferment; mildest men
For strife and ferment in the minds of men;
- Fermentation. The fermentation, and the vernal heat
- Fermenting. That huge fermenting mass of humankind
- Ferments. And alien storms with home-bred ferments

- Fermor. Did Fermor live and die.
- Fermor's. When FERMOR's race is run;
FERN. And on these barren rocks, with fern and heath,
In a dry nook where fern the floor bestrows
Whirled from among the fern beneath our feet,
Forth-started from the fern where she lay couched;
Among the fern or in the gorse;
Fair ferns and flowers, and chiefly that tall fern,
Like you TUFT OF FERN;
Through beds of matted fern, and tangled thickets,
The dogs are stretched among the mountain fern.
Winding away between the fern.
A stirring in a brake of fern;
With plenteous store of heath and withered fern,
Clothed in the sunshine of the withering fern;
Or canopy of yet unwithered fern,
Shrouded with willow-flowers and plummy fern.
Into bright verdure, between fern and gorse,
How often I have marked a plummy fern.
Thy living chaplet of fresh flowers and fern,
- Fern-brake. While 'mid the fern-brake sleeps the doe, Fern-clad. In the rough fern-clad park, the herded deer
- Ferns. Fair ferns and flowers, and chiefly that tall
fern,
Fern-thatched. Of fern-thatched hut on heathy moor:
Ferny. Dwarf willows gliding, and by ferny brake.
Ferocious. Sweetly ferocious, round his native walks,
No trace of a ferocious air,
Revenge, and all ferocious thoughts were dead:
- Ferocity. Nay, you have had the worst. Ferocity
Lives black with guilt, ferocity it calms.
- Ferry. Mncing the Man that keeps the ferry; Ferryman. Or shout that wakes the ferry-man from sleep,
For the old Ferryman; to the shout the rocks
- Fertile. With rocks and gloomy woods her fertile fields:
All that the fertile valley shields;
Upon this soft and fertile nook?
Ye Apennines! with all your fertile vales
Amid a fertile region green with wood
And airy harvests crown the fertile lea.
And bright, and fertile, furnished in itself
Rivers and fertile plains, and sounding shores,—
This fertile valley! Not a house but seems
In fertile pastures—was beheld with eyes
These fertile fields, that recompense your pains;
To wander with us through the fertile vales,
To fertilise some other ground.
To fertilise the whole Egyptian plain.
- Fertillise. A fertilising moisture," said the Swain, Fervent. Deem rather that the fervent Youth, who saw
So speaking, and by fervent love endowed
A fervent, not ungovernable, love.
Within, a fervent Methodist

Fervent—continued.

But thou, who, starting in thy fervent prime,
Father and Judge of all, with fervent tongue,
Fervent but humble as the lips can breathe
A moment ends the fervent din,
And fervent words a passage found.
Are intercessions of the fervent tongue
Whose fervent exhortations from afar
With genuine rapture and with fervent love
While choirs of fervent Angels sang
I gave a fervent welcome to the sight,
A fervent love of rigorous discipline.—
Passions more fervent, making me less prompt
Least understood. Yet, 'mid the fervent swarm
With fervent love, and with a face of grief
"Those fervent raptures are for ever flown;
And from their fervent lips drew hymns of praise,
Accompanied these musings; fervent thanks.
Some weighty matter; then, with fervent voice
Joy giving voice to fervent gratitude.

Fervently. Fervently cried the housewife—"God be praised,

Here interposing fervently I said,
Loved fondly, truly, fervently; and dared

Fervid. Fervid, yet conversant with holy fear,

At such transition from the fervid air,

Fervour. But with one fervour of devotion meek.

All fervour to the sightless eye;
Aloud, with fervour irresistible
In spite of real fervour, and of that
The object of its fervour. What delight!

Fest. Or holy festal pomps adorn,

Of boughs, as if for festal purpose decked
A festal strain that hath been silent long:—
He looks on festal ground with fruits bestrow'd;
Or float with music in the festal barge;
In festal glee: why not? For fresh and clear,
Might need for comfort, or for festal mirth;
Then do a festal company unite
To gather round the hier these festal shows.
Looks on delighted—meet in festal ring,
But garlands wither; festal shows depart,
Her banners for festal enjoyment did wave
Then, glittering like a star, she joins the festal band.
To meet the coming hours of festal mirth,
Was sung by Virgin-choirs in festal lays;
Reclin'd in festal pomp the Lyrian queen.
Who deigos to grace our festal rite,
Along that very Loire, with festal mirth
The splendour, which had given a festal air
For seemliness and warmth, on festal days
When in Athens' festal time
Of play-thing fire-works, that on festal nights

Festering. The unburi'd dead that lay in festering heaps,

Festival. Are flocking in—a wedding festival—

(You saw them gathering for the festival)
The wolf keeps festival these stormy nights:
The day would be a joyous festival;
Of their loved Church, on fast or festival
To mass or some high festival;
My heart is at your festival,
A wedding or a festival,
With music, incense, festival, and flowers!
Gaudy with reliques of that festival,
Take one,—that ancient festival, the Fair,
They hold a rustic fair—a festival,
A festival of unnumbered ease;
Of winter's household, they keep festival

Festivals. Festivals have I seen that were not names:

Festive. For festive decoration; and they said,
Through these wide realms a festive peal;
And all those leaves, in festive glee,
Had almost reached the festive door,
For dancers in the festive hall
Whence bright days of festive beauty;
We met, while festive mirth ran wild,
The time is ripe. White festive din,
And festive gladness, burns not one that dares
One of a festive circle, I poured out
Friendly to studious or in festive hours;
These festive matins?"—He replied, "Nnt loth
The retrospective virtues. Festive songs
Festively. Festively she puts forth in trim array;

Festivity. And goblets crown the proud festivity,

Of some abused Festivity—so be it.

Fetch. A minute past, he went to fetch a draught.

I could fetch lessons out of wiser schools
I will not fetch a Naiad from a fnood
But delegated Spirits comforts fetch
Fetch, sympathising Powers of air,
Fetch, ye that post o'er seas and lands,
A dark plume fetch me from yon blasted yew,
Down to the green earth fetch thee from thy sphere,
Meanwhile, my hope has been, that I might fetch

Fetch'd. See Far-fetch'd.

His battered head, a groan the Sailor fetch'd.
To-day, I fetched him from the rock;
To-day I fetched it from the rock;

Fetch'd—continued.

And Betty from the lane has fetch'd
And with the last deep groan his breath had fetch'd
Fetch'd from the shadowy world.
And all that fetch'd the flowing rhyme
Fetch'd from Mount Calvary, or haply delved
Fetch'd by our art, the Egyptian Maid
What force had severed. Thence they fetch'd the seed
Yet fetch'd from Paradise that honour came,
That, were power granted to replace them (fetch'd

Fetch'd with cupidity from heartless schools,
Or in the diver's grasp fetch'd up from caves
Her garden, from the pasture fetch'd her kine;
Which his poor skill could make, his fancy fetch'd,
Or forest, fetch'd the enormous axle-tree
Fetch'd by a neighbouring brook.—Across the vale
Fetch'd. Fetching her goodness rather from times past,
Fetch'd. But when the ice our streams did fetter,
Fetch'd. That fettered your nobility of mind—
Sate with a fettered sheep before him stretched
Was fettered, and the air by storm disturbed,
To fettered wretchedness that no Bastille
Though fettered slave he none, her floors and soil
Fetch'd. That Silence, once in deathlike fetters bound,
Evening now unbinds the fetters
And wore the fetters of a criminal.
That Mother, whose spirit in fetters is bound,
The fetters of a dream opposed to love."—
The fetters of my tongue do Thou unbind,
Their fetters in their souls. For who could he,

And silent fetters? Yes, if visions bright
The fetters which the Matron wears;
Thy cherished fetters to unbind,
Spurn the soft fetters of lethargic rest.
On the fetters that link him to death.
When his fetters at night have so press'd on his limbs,
Time's fetters are composed; and life was put
And answer flow'd, the fetters of reserve

Fetid. Lost people, trained to theoretic feud!

Fetid. The feudal Warrior-chief, a Ghost unlaid,
Of feudal sway her own appropriate seat;
Safe from the feudal Castle's haughty frowns;
The feudal Keep, the bastions of Cohorn,
And feudal rapine clothed with iron mail,
Of feudal sway, the bright blue river passed
A rural lord might dwell."—"No feudal pomp, Fetch'd. What feuds, not quenched but fed by mutual woe.
And feuds, where, clan encountering clan,
Summoned the Chiefs to lay their feuds aside,
Feuds, factions, flatteries, enmity, and guile
Fever. Fretting the fever round the languid heart,
I felt a double fever in my veins,
The fever of that pale-faced Child;
Unprofitable, and the fever of the world,
Long-baffled hope's slow fever in his veins,
Such shakings doth the fever in me keep
Its freight of public news, the fever came,
To mitigate the fever of his heart.
Smitten with perilous fever. In disease
Feverish. He, thus by feverish passion overcome,
The Man who makes this feverish complaint

Few—continued.

Thy enemies are neither weak nor few ; . . . 105
 And very few to love : . . . 109
 She lived unknown, and few could know . . . 109
 And then ! his words were not a few, . . . 126
 Of sad mischances not a few, . . . 128
 A few sad tears does Betty shed, . . . 130
 With a few sheep, with rocks and stones, and kites . . . 131
 For the delight of a few natural heaves ; . . . 131
 A few sheep, stragglers from some mountain-flock, . . . 150
 That thinly decks his few grey hairs ; . . . 157
 Calls to the few tired dogs that yet remain : . . . 200
 A few are near him still—and now the sky, . . . 208
 Still may a veteran Few have pride . . . 217
 That make, with curses not a few, . . . 246
 But a few hours ago, had been . . . 246
 Even thine, though few thy wants !—Roof, window,
 Door, . . . 250
 A grateful few, shall love thy modest Lay, . . . 254
 Soul-animating strains—alas, too few ! . . . 260
 Of thy few words of English speech : . . . 289
 Distinctions that are plain and few ; . . . 291
 To these few meagre Vales confined ; . . . 291
 The craven few who bowed the head . . . 298
 A few strong instincts and a few plain rules, . . . 315
 For to a few collected in His name, . . . 332
 A yearning survives which few hearts shall withstand : . . . 345
 A few short steps (painful they were) apart . . . 353
 Influence, at least among a scattered few . . . 358
 Hope for the few, who, at the world's undoing, . . . 360
 By a few Monks, a stern society, . . . 362
 Fair Land ! These all men greet with joy ; how few, . . . 366
 Shall a few partial breezes only creep ?— . . . 366
 Though simple thy companions were and few ; . . . 379
 A few steps distant, feeding, straying ; . . . 402
 To few triumphantly been given ! . . . 405
 And overpowered that gallant few . . . 408
 A few tears down her cheek descend . . . 415
 These good men humble by a few bare words, . . . 422
 Which few can hold committed to a fight . . . 437
 Where a few villagers on bended knees . . . 444
 A kindly influence whereof few will speak, . . . 460
 I chiefly call, the chosen Few, . . . 473
 Few months of life has he in store . . . 483
 The labouring many and the resting few ; . . . 489
 By few but shepherds trod ! . . . 508
 As in a posy, with a few pale ears . . . 509
 While all lie prostrate, save the tyrant few . . . 513
 Here, there, a banded few who loathe the chain . . . 515
 Perish the grovelling few, who, prest between . . . 516
 Ere on its banks the few grey cabins rose . . . 524
 Known unto few but prized as far as known, . . . 540
 A few may yet be saved." The Daughter's words, . . . 540

 And made a fitting song, of words but few, . . . 564
 Few are his pleasures : if his eyes have now . . . 569
 —A few (my soul oft sees that sight) . . . 579
 And to the few who pass this way, . . . 581
 Yet here at least, though few have numbered days . . . 583
 Clustered like stars some few, but single most, . . . 622
 A few short steps were the chain that bound . . . 623
 Call these, though known hut for a few fleet years, . . . 627
 Unacouth assemblage was it, where no few . . . 640
 To see displayed among an eager few, . . . 656
 With few wise longings and but little love, . . . 658
 He told in few plain words a soldier's tale— . . . 664
 Why call upon a few weak words to say . . . 668
 A few short months before. I turned my face . . . 675
 No few of which have since been realised ; . . . 675
 Lightly equipped, and but a few brief looks . . . 680
 In a mean city, and among a few, . . . 680
 Lay a few steps, and then along its banks ; . . . 683
 I glance but at a few conspicuous marks, . . . 695
 Have glanced upon him distant a few steps, . . . 703
 Sojourning a few days, I visited . . . 710
 Of self-respect, and virtue in the few . . . 714
 Whether by wicket of the one or few ; . . . 717
 The goaded land waxed mad ; the crimes of few . . . 723
 The shock ; most woeful for those few who still . . . 723
 O Friend ! few happier moments have been mine . . . 725
 Came back upon me, so that some few tears . . . 726
 And thus, experience proving that no few . . . 728
 Than those few nooks to which my happy feet . . . 737
 Alas ! to few in this untoward world, . . . 741
 From judgments of the wealthy Few, who see . . . 743
 The Many for the pleasure of those Few ; . . . 743
 Nor uninformed by books, good books, though few— . . . 743
 Oh ! yet a few short years of useful life, . . . 752
 I sing !—'t fit audience let me find though few ! . . . 755
 All but a scattered few, live out their time, . . . 757
 Not ignorant was the Youth that still no few . . . 761
 I turned, and saw her distant a few steps, . . . 767
 With the few needful things that life requires, . . . 777
 A sober company and few, the men . . . 777
 He saw us not, though distant but few steps ; . . . 779
 A few days earlier ; then would you have seen . . . 781
 Honour my little cell with some few tears . . . 783
 And a few steps may bring us to the spot . . . 786
 There, where on few external things his heart . . . 792

Few—continued.

Shall then be yours among the happy few . . . 804
 On nature's wants, he knows how few they are, . . . 813
 Uncensured, and subsist, a scattered few . . . 823
 Island or grove, that hides a blessed few . . . 827
 For all ; and yet how few are warmed or cheered ! . . . 828
 How few who mingle with their fellow-men . . . 828
 In scale of culture, few among my flock . . . 833
 Traversed but by a few irregular paths, . . . 834
 A few small crofts of stone-encumbered ground ; . . . 835
 Were of one species with the sheltered few, . . . 836
 And burthensome ; and lastly, that poor few . . . 837
 " A woman rests in peace ; surpassed by few . . . 848
 Few likings had he dropped, few pleasures lost ; . . . 860
 The powers of nature ; and a few short steps . . . 864
 With tears, that wept not then ; nor were the few, . . . 871
 In a few fortunate retreats like this ; . . . 878
 Hard to be won, and only by a few ; . . . 887
 A few short hours of each returning day . . . 888
 And yet a breath can do it ! " These few words . . . 891
 " So fare the many ; and the thoughtful few . . . 894
 —A few rude monuments of mountain-stone . . . 894
 Was raised again ; and to a happy few, . . . 895
 Or but few weeks past, and would be so again . . . 895
 By a resolute few who for the sake . . . K. 8.

 Thus, with the fibres of these thoughts it fares ; . . . 5.
 Fibula. The Fibula, whose shape, I ween, . . . 390
 Fibulae. Mere Fibulae without a robe to clasp ; . . . 394

 Fiction. Arabian fiction never filled the world . . . 122
 No fiction was it of the antique age : . . . 378
 For us the stream of fiction ceased to flow, . . . 395
 And fiction animate his sportive lyre, . . . 328
 Of magic fiction, verse of mine perchance . . . 676
 Or a mere fiction of what ever was ? . . . 725
 Fictions. With all the daring fictions I have taught . . . 44

 In dreams and fictions, pensively composed : . . . 683
 These fictions, as in some sort, in their turn, . . . 704
 From tragic fictions or true history, . . . 719
 Of the gross fictions chanted in the streets . . . 812
 Fictions in form, but in their substance truths, . . . 846
 Fiddle. It is a fiddle in its glee . . . 176
 Was aught ever heard like his fiddle and him ? . . . 188

 That had been ours. There let the fiddle scream, . . . 642
 The hurdy-gurdy, at the fiddle's weaves, . . . 697
 Fiddle's. As if he heard the fiddle's call, . . . 177
 The fiddle's squeak—that call to bliss, . . . 177

 Here justice has indeed a field of triumph, . . . 48
 Henceforth, then, will I never in camp or field . . . 53
 This is a paltry field for enterprize . . . 77

Field—continued.

And thine too is the last green field
That besprinkled the field; 'twas like youth in my blood!

At labour in the harvest field : 116
Or other implement of house or field 120
Wrought in the field, or on his shepherd's stool 132
Charged with a blazon on the field, 133
Too weak to labour in the harvest field, 143
This glade of water and this one green field, 149
In a field of battle made, 157
The heauty vain of field and grove, 164
To seek such covert as the field 167
In field or forest with nice care, 168
The green field sleeps in the sun ; 190
Tell thy name, thou trembling Field ; 205
Field of death, where'er thou be, 205
The Stripling seeks the tented field ; 216
Swift as a Thracian Nymph o'er field and height !
But let thy love, upon that azure field 221
Like Thee, in field and grove 222
Or racing o'er your blue ethereal field 229
Through many a breathless field of light,
Through many a long blue field of ether,
A little field of meadow ground ; 236
But field or meadow name it not ; 240
And green vales open out, with grove and field,
Behold her, single in the field, 268
"The creatures see of flood and field, 289
Fly upon swiftest wing round field and height,
And of that joy which shook the Isthmian Field,
At happy distance from earth's groaning field,
Showered equally on city and on field,
Abruptly paused the strife,—the field throughout
City and field and flood ;—aloud it cried—
Have perished in the field ; 323
Stooped to the Victory on that Belgic field
Upon the battle field, or under ocean's waves ;
Woe, woe to all that face her in the field !
But Thou art foremost in the field :—there stand !
The sky an azure field displayed ; 343
For its deliverance—a capacious field 355
Garden and field all decked with orange bloom,
And from their own pursuits in field or grove 362
A field or two of brighter green, or plot 379
Proud was the field of Sons and Sire ; 404
Light as a hunter's of the field ; 404
(And can it be ?) an unfought field !—
In open field their gathering foes,
Unarmed he followed to the field ; 408
Or we for ever quit the field.
Through park and field, a perishing
At morning to the dewy field,
It rages ;—some are smitten in the field—
Of Arthur, bearing through the stormy field
"What heast in wilderness or cultured field
No perfect cure grows on that bounded field.
Rest smooths the way for sleep ; in field and bowyer
Time was when field and watery cove
"Is Mosgiel Farm ; and that's the very field
And grass in the green field 482
A child of the field or the grove ;
Or in some silent field, while timid spring
In Bolton, on the field of Whart,
Gave, in the field of Luz, to Jacob's sight
There are to whom the garden, grove, and field,
Each field is then a hallowed spot,
No tidings reach us thence from town or field,
And the smooth green of many a pendent field,
Till the world perishes, a field for thee !
To cheerful intercourse with wood and field,
Fleet as the shadows, over down or field,
Seven days she lurked in brake and field,
Or blasts the green field and the trees distrest,
Of wounds, and bright swords flashing in the field,
That neighbourhood of grove and field
To moulder in a far-off field of Rome ; 581
A single Field which I have looked upon, 588
"Till the Sun walking on his western field
Britain, who thought to stain the field was fame,
When from the dark synod, or blood-reeking field,
By road or pathway, or through trackless field,
Through every hair-breath in that field of light,
With lilies of the valley like a field ; 643
Nothing but a wild field where they were sown 651
Who in the field of contest persevered, 656
With half the length of a long field between 659
And open field, through which the pathway wound,
Up turning, then, along an open field, 663
From hyre or field the kine were brought ; the sheep
The latter chiefly ; from the field of Mars 699
And felt through every nook of town and field 710
Left without glory on the field, or driven, 712
The warrior from the field—all perished, all—
Pleased in some open field to exercise 723
On Etna's side; and thou, O flowery field 733
Laden from blooming grove or flowery field,
Birds in the bower, and lambs in the green field,
The field of human life, in heart and mind 740

Through wood or open field, the harmless Man

Or in the cultured field, a Man so bred

Aleit, in prospect of the shouting field !
His old employments, goes to field or wood,
To earn, by wholesome labour in the field, 868
But fond companions, so I guessed, in the field,
A field before them freshened with the dew
Forest and field, and hill and dale appear, 878
The vernal field infuses fresh delight 880
Down the green field came tripping after us 882
Of every clime, to till the lonely field, 884

Of towns in flames, fields ravaged, young and old
That make the fields their dwelling. If a snake

Fields, goods, and far-off chattels we have none :
Whose pleasures are in wild fields gathered,
Than the sweet flowerets of the fields !
The fields which with covetous spirit we sold,
Those beautiful fields, the delight of the day,
I look at the fields, but I cannot go in !
In open fields ; and when the glare of day
For their own sakes, but for the fields and hills
Fields, where with cheerful spirits he had breathed
Those fields, those hills—what could they less ?

To clothe the fields with verdure. Other haunts

Fiercely—continued.

Down from the Pennine Alps how fiercely sweeps
 And fiercely by the arm he took her
 And fiercely by the arm he shook her,
 Blow fiercely, agitating earth and sky,
 Where wide-spread conflict thea most fiercely
 raged,

Fiercely-breathing. Of fiercely-breathing war. The truth was felt

Fierceness. All creatures met in peace, from fierce-ness free,
 Fierceness and rage; and soon the cruel Dane
 That through the time's exceeding fierceness saw
 Or fierceness, wreathed around their sunburnt brows,

Fiercer. And the winds roused the Deep with fiercer scourges,
 Yet fiercer, in a darker age;
 To fiercer mood the frenzy-stricken brain,
 Of yet more heinous guilt, with fiercer pride,
 Of fiercer zealots—so confusion reigned,

Fiercest. Yet is it to the fiercest sun
 Of Ocean roused into his fiercest mood,
 Uppermoed in the midst of fiercest strife,

Fiery. A creature of a "fiery heart":—
 Four fiery steeds impatient of the rein
 Across the setting sun and all the fiery west.
 Reddened the fiery hues, and shot
 Lament! for Diocletian's fiery sword
 Uplifting toward high Heaven her fiery brand,
 And stalking pillars built of fiery sand.
 That all too often are but fiery blights,
 In whom the fiery Muse reversed
 In which Love's dart its fiery point doth steep.
 Hiding their fiery clouds, their rocks, and snows;
 Amid the fiery furnace. Charms and spells

Fife. Or thrill of Spartan fife is caught between the blast.
 Scared by the fife and rumbling drum's alarms,
 Thought Peter, in the shire of Fife
 While thrills the "Spartan fife" between the blast.
 Their great expectancy: the fife of war
 Attuned, or sprightly fife resounding far.

Fifes. While the thrill of her fifes thro' the mountains was blown:

Fifteen. These fifteen years— Ha! speak—what Thing art thou?
 And tears of fifteen will come into his eyes.
 Of Liberty, which fifteen hundred years

Fifth. And the fifth morning gave him sight
 Whom the fifth Harry talks of. Silence! hush!

Fifty. Full fifty comely sheep I raised,
 And, of my fifty, yesterday
 That, till full fifty yards were gone,
 If Betty fifty ponds should see,
 Fifty greetings in a day,
 My Ass and fifty things beside,
 And, for full fifty yards around,
 Never did fifty things at once
 Yes, Traveller! fifty winters have been told
 For fifty kingdoms by my sword recovered.
 What would they there?—full fifty years
 Of Auster and Bóotes. Fifty years
 Within are fifty handmaids, who prepare,

Fig. That ill supports the luscious fig;

Fight. See Sea-fight.
 In fight to cover!
 And armed with living spear for mortal fight;
 And for the law itself we fight
 Lavished in fight with desperate hardihood;
 Thy presence turns the scale of doubtful fight,
 Firm as a rock in stationary fight;
 A potent vassalage, to fight
 Without the Cause for which they fight;
 Oh! bold to fight the Coward's fight
 Rush on the fight, to harps preferring swords,
 Which few can hold committed to a fight
 Their hedge, attests the holy fight they wage,
 Collaterally pourtrayed, as in mock fight,
 And with their swords flourished as if to fight
 Of two brave vessels matched in deadly fight,

Fighting. And, while her mind was fighting thus,
 He perished fighting, in supreme command,
 That we are fighting," I with him believed
 Aroused his clan; and, fighting at their head,
 Sound flogging and fighting

And fighting to the death, but I am pleased
Fights. See Sea-fights.
 Of heart, the sailor fights with roaring seas.

Figurative. And leave the figurative Man—

Figure. Hovering round Herbert's door, a man whose figure
 His staff—his figure—Murder!—what, of whom?
 The tall and upright figure of a Man
 In figure and in voice,
 His own conceit the figure planned,
 That unhappy Figure near him
 Tow'd some far-distant wood, a Figure quaint,
 That Figure, like a ship with snow-white sail!
 In his whole figure and his misie

Figure—continued.

Nay! start not at that Figure—there!
 I saw the figure of a lovely Maid
 The Figure called to mind a beast of prey

His look and bending figure, all bespeak
 His ghostly figure moving at my side;
 Afforded, to the figure of the man
 And his whole figure breathed intelligence,
 Her face was pale and thin—her figure, too,
 Its birthplace; none whose figure did not live
 Figure and mioe, complexion and attire,

Figured. The sacred Cross; and figured there
 Was figured o'er with circles, lines, or mounds,
 440 White Doe 356
 745 Prelude 13, 338

Figures. Figures with armorial sigos of race and birth,
 Of Figures human and divine,
 Historic figures round the shaft embost
 Old Roman boats and figures thro' the shade,
 With the ever-shifting of the scene,
 Strange and uncouth; dire faces, figures dire,
 Carved uncouth figures on the heads of sticks—
 Their courtly figures, seated on the stump

Filament. On that brief meeting's slender filament!
Flched. And growing girls whose beauty, flched
 away

File. If still his Brother lived, or to the file
 Yon pilgrims see—in lagging file
 This file of infants; some that never breathed

Files. Her files of road-elms, high above my head
 Long files of corn-stacks here and there were seen,
 When files of stateliest plants have ceased to bloom,
 To lead those ancient Amazonian files;

Filial. Whom he to more than filial love and duty
 Idonea's filial countenance was there
 And make the spotless spirit of filial love
 Checked her with filial meekness; for no thought
 To filial sleep upon the breast
 Has with that Parting mixed a filial sigh,
 Meek filial smiles, upon thy face,
 From Norton and his filial hand;
 With filial love the sad vicissitude
 And strove in filial love to reunite
 In filial duty, clothed with love divine,
 To the filial chain let down
 That posture, and the look of filial love
 In the true filial bosom's inmost fold
 To the Maiden's filial heart,
 Of a protector, the first filial tie
 To pay the filial debt, for food to roam,
 The gravitation and the filial bond
 Honoured with little less than filial love,
 But resolv'd with filial care

Fill. When shouts and lowing herds the valley fill, Thirsting for some of those exploits that fill
 —Here are daisies, take your fill;
 Fill your lap and fill your bosom;
 May fill your breast with joyful pride;
 And thou hast almost sucked thy fill,
 Shall with Mount Ida's triple lustre fill
 Of Persian mornings would ye fill, and stand
 Innumerable voices fill
 Bees fill their hives;
 And hollow vale which foaming torrents fill
 Not all the light of earthly power could fill;
 But fill the hollow vale with joy!
 Of God, and fill thy destined place:
 Of Christian aspiration, deigned to fill
 Of cloistered Architects, free their souls to fill
 That rose, and steadily advanced to fill
 Woe to the purblind crew who fill
 Or charm it out of memory; yea, might fill
 Hot sunbeams fill the streaming vale; but hark,

Or in warm valley, seeks his part to fill;
 Their fill of promised lustre, wait in vain.
 While fill each pause the ringing woods of morn.
 Devoted, strives in vain her vast desires to fill;
 Would fill it with his spirit. He, to please
 Who from the Fountain of Thy grace doest fill
 Rides high; then all the upper air they fill
 That in the scale of being fill their place;
 (Depraved, and ever prone to fill the mind
 To fill the total measure of his soul!
 And shall the venerable halls ye fill
 Of those who fill thy courts in highest heaven,
 That rose, and steadily advanced to fill
 Enough to fill the present day with joy,
 That other hope, long mine, the hope to fill

Fillan. To good Saint Fillan and to fair Saint Anne; Filled. Filled my dim eyes with tears.—When I returned

When, after a broad flash that filled the cave,
 We all are of one blood, our veins are filled
 A cup of consolation, filled from Heaven
 Oh, had you seen him living!— I so filled

Filled—continued.

St. Denis, filled with royal tombs, or the Church of Notre Dame ?
 Between the tropics filled the steady sail, . . .
 Filled the funeral basin at Timothy's door ;
 Arabian fiction never filled the world
 A basket, which they filled with pedlar's wares ;
 And the ancient church was filled with light,
 His heart with sudden joy is filled,—
 Was filled with animated toys,
 And all the air is filled with pleasant noise of waters.
 Down the long street, rich goblets filled with wine
 Has filled the laughing vales with welcome flowers.
 Than a forsaken bird's-nest filled with snow
 And yet my eyes are filled with tears. . . .
 Yet filled with ardour and on triumph bent
 Had filled the astonished world with such abuse
 And filled our hearts with grief for England's shame ?
 Life's cup when almost filled with years, like mine
 And, for a moment, filled that empty Throne.
 My heart, and filled that heart with conflict strong,
 Tumultuous noises filled the hall ;
 Who, having filled a holy place,
 So vaunt a throng of Followers, filled with pride
 Filled with mementos, satiate with his part
 Filled with delight three summer morning hours.
 Till she had filled her apron full.
 The Goddess thee her lap with sweetmeats fill'd
 From Belus, filled it to the brim with wine ;
 Where, though the shades with cheerfulness were filled,
 The peaceful scene oft filled me with surprise
 Space like a heaven filled up with northern lights,
 Filled all the woods : the cry of unknown birds ;
 And life and labour seem but one, I filled
 Filled with its fray or brawl, how eagerly
 Into a theatre, whose stage was filled,
 Of passions and opinions, filled the walls
 Beat high, and filled the fancy with fair forms,
 Worthy of liberty, all spirits filled
 Domestic carnage now filled the whole year
 And ignorance filled up from age to age,
 Of all this glory filled and satisfied.
 But, as the mind was filled with inward light,
 Had filled with plenty, and possessed in peace,
 Amid the uneasy thoughts which filled my mind,
 Filled with vague hopes, he undertook the charge
 The measure of my soul was filled with bliss,
 Judgments, that filled the land from age to age
 And filled the illumined groves with ravishment.
 Bounty and government, that filled their hearts
 She with a numerous issue filled his house,
 Hath gained his noontide height, this churchyard,
 filled
 Of that small town encountering thus, they filled,
 That Father was, and filled with anxious fear,
 And the whole house seems filled with gaiety.
 That filled her plains, that reached her utmost shores,
 And as a cavern is with darkness fill'd,
Fill'st. But thou, how leisurely thou fill'st thy horn
Fill'ing. And filling more and more with crystal light Filling from morn to night the heroic scene
 Filling the soul with sentiments august—
 Filling the church with a lofty voice !
 Which, filling, consecrates the human breast.
 Filling from time to time his "humorous stage"
 Though filling daily, still was light, compared
 With tuneful hum is filling all the air ;
 This office filling, yet by native power
 Filling a space, else vacant, to exalt
Fillip. And send it with a fillip to its grave.
Fills. An idle voice the sabbath region fills
 A mighty waste of mist the valley fills,
 There where the peal of swelling torrents fills
 Is blithe society, who fills the air
 And then my heart with pleasure fills,
 He fills with his power all their hearts to the brim—
 That fills my heart with sadness !
 Aught that more surely by its aspect fills
 East the churchyard fills ;—anon
 Fills many a damp obscure recess
 That fills the Soul with unavailing ruth.
 Fills all the hollow of the sky.
 Hope wanes with her, while lustre fills
 Earth fills her lap with pleasures of her own ;
 Alike, when first the vales the bitter fills
 When the dread peal of swelling torrents fills
 Who fills the mother's breast with innocent milk,
 And streams, whose murmur fills this hollow vale,
 The raven croaks, and fills the upper air
Film. Nor veil with restless gleam, his staring eyes.
Filmy. Far as the last gleam of the filmy train Final. Must part ; the summons came ;—our final leave we took.
 I will commit him to this final Ordeal !—
 Just as those final words were penned, the sun broke out in power,
 A final portion from his father's hand ;

Final—continued.

Some nook where they had made their final stand,
 When her long life hath reached its final day :
 That Justice seemed to hear her final knell ?
 And final retribution,—
 Is then the final page before me spread,
 His acts, his wrongs, his final sacrifice ;
 And sorrow of this final truth !
 That ever looked to heaven for final rest ?
 Nor be unthanked their final lingerings—
 When we shall sink to final rest.
 Leaving the final issue in His hands
 The final polish of the Plasterer's hand.
 The State, as if to stamp the final seal
 Our final parting ; for from that time forth
 Its final home on earth. What traveller—who—
 Yet, ere that final resting-place be gained,
 Who, drawing near their final home, and much
 As of a final EMINENCE ; though bare
 'Tis come, the final hour,
Finally. Their eyes, or minds ? or, finally, is you resplendent vault ?
 Where'er I liked ; and finally array
 The shock, AND FINALLY SECURE
 'Tis, finally, the Man, who, lifted high,
 Failing, we finally shall make accord.
 Share his chance-gathered mead ; and, finally,
 Twine near their loved Permessus.—Finally,
 A different worship. Finally, what'er
 Did we appeal ; and, finally, behold
 And finally, as sum and crown of all,
 And nothing less, when, finally to close
 Finally, and above all, O Friend ! (I speak
 Perpetual, multitudinous ! Finally,
Find. And ever, as we fondly muse, we find
 Could find no refuge from distress
 Nought round its darling precincts can be find
 And desolate, "Here you will find a friend
 How glad he was at length to find some trace
 In vain to find a friendly face we try,
 Could find delight to nurse itself so strangely,
 Let this old Man find at your hands ; poor Leader,
 Expecting still, I knew not how, to find
 Thee I adore, and find my rest in faith,
 Would I could find the old Man and his Daughter.
 Lady, you'll find your Father at the Convent.
 Might in such neighbourhood find seemly use.—
 Such Minds as find amid their fellow-men
 Alive or dead, I'll find him. Alive—perdition !
 The wider space the better—we may find
 Much converse do I find in thee,
 —Yet seek him,—and what shall you find in the place ?
 You'll find a task for half a year.
 An orphan could not find his mother's grave :
 And find elsewhere his business or delight ;
 The peace which others seek they find ;
 Find little to perceive.
 No peace, no comfort could I find,
 Oh find me, prosperous or undone !
 I question things and do not find
 Her sad approach, and stole away to find,
 I seem to find them all in thee :
 Find place within his bosom.—Once again
 I thought to find my lost one here,
 And cannot find her Idiot Boy.
 Who journey thither find themselves alone
 Sometimes when he could find a leisure hour
 Learning from him to find a reason
 We'll find thy father in the wood.
 From the next glance she casts, to find
 Lift me, guide me, till I find
 Enough for him to find
 And find his way to me,
 Another Star-of-Bethlehem find,
 Yet they find among the mountains
 In stray gifts to be claimed by whoever shall find ;
 These find, "mid ivied abbey-walls,
 Find my wisdom in my bliss ;
 And, to my soul's content, I find
 You'll find you've much in little here !
 Find, within, a blessed harbour !
 Your favourite seat of empire find—
 Yet as I left I find them here !
 And build a household fire, and find
 Could never find him more.
 Yet still I persevere, and find them where I may."
 I could have laughed myself to scorn to find
 In truth, you'd find it hard to say
 Where, save the rugged road, we find
 And I (as all men may find cause,
 Up-caught in whirlwinds, nowhere can find rest.
 Where'er the streams a passage find ;
 For joy and rest, albeit to find them only
 That in the living Creature find on earth a place.
 May in life's daily prospect find,
 May find or there create ?
 But nature ne'er could find the way
 "While yet ye may find mercy ;—strive
 From love that cannot find relief.

Fingal. While Fingal heard what Ossian sung,
 The Son of Fingal; such was blind
 The Ghost of Fingal to his tuneful Cava
Fingal's. O'er Fingal's hearth; the grassy sod
 In every cell of Fingal's mystic Grot,
Finger. By a miraculous finger stilled at once.
 Touch not a finger— What then must be done?
 Can trace the finger of mortality,
 Do for thee what the finger of the heavens
 And drop thy pointing finger bright
 Touched by his golden finger.
 To hoof and finger malled;—yet, high or low,
 With glittering finger points at nine,
 With tiny finger—to let fall a tear;
 And spires whose "silent finger points to heaven;"
 By the nice finger of fair ladies touched
 His finger moved, distinguishing the spots
Fingering. Philosopher!—a fingering slave,
Finger-joint. Take not even a finger-joint:
Finger's. And, by some friendly finger's help up-stayed . . . 867 Excursion 7, 678
Fingers. See Lady-fingers.
 No more her breath can thaw their fingers cold,
 Or on her fingers counts the distant clock,
 Some lumber twigs into a Cross, well-shaped with fingers nice,
 Wrought on with her best fingers to prepare
 I feel thy little fingers prest,
 When the weary fingers feel
 Her eye was busy, while her fingers flew
 Nice aid maternal fingers lend;
 Perplexed her fingers seem,
 In scarcely conscious fingers, was, she knows,
 And his fingers as busy as bees in a hive.
 On viewless fingers counts the valley-clock,
 And there, with fingers interwoven, both hands
Finish. A Voice shall finish doubt and dim foreseeing,
 "Finish the strife by deadliest victory!"
Finished. Of Nature, finished with most curious skill!
 The hut stood finished by his pains, nor seemingly lacked aught . . . 91 Norman Boy 17
 With finished sweep into a perfect round,
 The sunset splendours of a finished war
 What need, then, of these finished Strains?
Finite. From finite cares, to rest absorbed in Thee!
 Even so; but measuring not by finite sense
 All finite motions overruling, lives
 A type, for finite natures, of the one
 That one, poor, finite object, in the abyss
Finland. Their Thomas in Finland,
Fire. The lone black fir, forsakes the faded plain;
 Among the mountain coves. Yon household fir,
Fire. See Convent-fire, Cottage-fire, Gipsy-fire, Nightfire, Peat-fire, Watch-fire.
 The shepherd, all involved in wreaths of fire,
 With towers and wounds, a "prospect all on fire;"
 And faint the fire a dying heart can yield!
 He views the sun uplift his golden fire,
 Restlessly flashing, seems to mount like fire:
 Flings o'er the wilderness a stream of fire:
 Rouse hell's own aid, and wrap thy fields in fire:
 The gathering clouds grew red with stormy fire,
 No gipsy cower'd o'er fire of furze or broom;
 Where the bees hummed, and chair by winter fire;
 And soon with crimson fire kindled the firmament.
 'Twas a dull spark—a most unnatural fire
 I struck my flint, and built up a small fire
 Our little fire sent forth a cheering warmth
 For sight of a warm fire. The wind blows keen;
 I saw a distant fire in the north-east;
 We build up the fire, we're sung and warm;
 Air blackened, thunder growled, fire flashed from clouds that hid the sky, . . . 91 Poet's Dream 3

 Perhaps, with head and heels on fire,
 Like happy people round a Christmas fire.
 And her soothing song by the winter fire,
 "A fire was once within my brain;
 Were seated round their blazing fire,
 It thundered down, with fire and smoke,
 Catches fire, as seems, and blazes
 To match the spark of local fire,
 Fire raged: and, wher the spangled floor
 In her upward eye of fire!
 A steaming bowl, a blazing fire,
 Burned like a fire among his men;
 And, sitting by my fire, I see
 Walk through the fire with unsinged hair.
 Only their fire seems bolder, yielding light,
 To set the hills on fire.
 And build a household fire, and find
 A fire was kindled in her breast,
 Or of some Hermit's cave, where by his fire
 (But where no fire was ever lit,
 Of fire his desperate self is tethering?
 He burns—transmuted to a dusky fire—
 Takes fire:—The men that have been reappear;
 That sanctify the cottage fire
 Yet still her eyes retained their tropic fire,
 When desolated countries, towns on fire,
 Clothed with innocuous fire;
 But Fancy with the speed of fire
 A Patriot's heart, warm with undying fire.
 My noble fire emits the joyful ray
 A votive Column, spared by fire and flood:
 By blazing fire, the still suspense
 Into rude shape by fire, with roaring blast
 The fairest, while with fire and sword
 And, MARV! oft beside our blazing fire,
 Urged to close toil with chemic fire;
 Thou wretched Outcast, from the gift of fire
 Housed near a blazing fire—is seen to flit
 But they desist not—and the sacred fire,
 Of youthful heroes, is no sullen fire,
 Yet more,—round many a Convent's blazing fire
 Pass, some through fire—and by the scaffold some—
 Then, 'mid the ghastly ruins of the fire,
 Up, down, the busy Thames—rapid as fire
 Flung back from distant climes a streaming fire,
 Her charity blazed with sacrilegious fire,
 Or by his fire, a child upon his knee,
 A shade—but with some sparks of heavenly fire
 Best throve the fire of chaste desire,
 And they who should extinguish, fan the fire—
 When fire or taper ceased to cheer the room,
 Enter betimes with more than martial fire . . . 529 Those breathing*

 On fire with thy impatience to become
 And thus in May their hearts are set on fire,
 And maketh them to burn, as in a fire,
 Sits by her fire, and builds her hope in heaven.
 While arrowy fire extorting feverish groans,
 He views the Sun upheer his golden fire,
 Inconstant glancing, mounts like springing fire,
 The mountains, glowing hot, like coals of fire.
 Last night, while by his dying fire, as clo'd
 Flings o'er the desert blood-red streams of fire.
 Rouze Hell's own aid, and wrap thy hills in fire.
 Look up for sign of havoc, Fire and Sword,
 Preserv'd from fire and flood for presents brings.
 At every touch, an unsuspected fire,
 Proud of its own bright fire and sycamore shade.
 Be wrenched, or fire come down from far to scorch
 To executions, to a street on fire,
 The Stone-eater, the man that swallows fire,
 Or obscure records of the path of fire,
 No heaving of the heart. While by the fire
 Even at the side of her own fire. Yet still
 He was all fire: no shadow on his brow
 Beside a fire whose genial warmth seemed met
 Ill-sheltered, and oft wanting fire and food;
 Burns, like an unconsuming fire of light,
 A calm, a beautiful, and silent fire,
 Even like an altar lit by fire from heaven,
 A blazing fire—beside a cleanly hearth
 By the bright fire, the good Man's furm, and face
 Dependants, comforters—my wheel, my fire,
 And did, thereafter, bathe their hands in fire,
 The fire of ancient Caledonia burned:
 Of fire, incensed beneath its huary brow.
 Of needle-work; no bustle at the fire,
 "The fire, that burned so brightly to our wish,
 Vivid as fire; clouds separately poised,—

Fire—continued.

For, as reports the dame, whose fire sends up
Fire-clad. Glances the fire-clad eagle's wheeling form;
Fireless. And fireless are the valleys far and wide,
Fire-like. Begin to strike him with a fire-like heat,
Fires. As one whose brain habitual frenzy fires
 Her fires, that like mysterious pulses beat
 All alive with the fires
 "What if those bright fires
 Her own calm fires?—But list! a voice is near;
 That quench, from hut to palace, lamps and fires,
Earlier from cleansing fires, and gains withal
 False fires, that others may be lost.
 Fall fires—but let us perish heart to heart!"
 Refract in rainbow hues the restless fires!
 And laugh with merrier blaze her evening fires;
 The glimmering fires of Virtue to enlarge,
 And wakes anew life's glimmering trembling fires,
 What radiant fires were drown'd by day's malignant
 power,
 Go forth and prosper; and, ye purging fires,
 O'er which the smoke of unremitting fires . . .
 Flung from the body of devouring fires,
Fire-side. For the whole side, and one for each fire-
 side—
 Yet not unfit, I deem, for the fireside, . . .
 Their hands by the fire-side; perhaps to card
 Than when I heard thee by our own fire-side
 The living Beings by your own fire-side,
 And I, and all who dwell by my fireside,
 Andrew's whole fire-side is there.
 'Mid grove, and by the calm fireside,
 Thanks; thou hast snapped a fireside Prisoner's chain.
Fireside, the heroic wealth of hall and bower,
 On fire-side listeners, doubting what they hear!
 To reason my fireside with personal talk—
 As impotent fancy prompts, by his fireside,
 The pensive moments by this calm fireside,
 Beyond the allowance of our own fireside,
 Of the fire-side, or of the open field,
 That calm fire-side, it is not even in them,
 By flames breathed on her from her own fireside.
 Round fire-side treason-parties en famille?
Fire-slides. We talk about the dead by our fire-sides.
Fireworks. Dimming the stars, and fireworks magical,
 Of play-thing fire-works, that on festal nights
Fir-grove. A stately Fir-grove, whither I was wont
 I love the fir-grove with a perfect love.
 The fir-grove murmurs with a sea-like sound,
 Through that aerial fir-grove, could preserve
Firm. Spur-clad his nervous teard, and firm his tread;
 Oswald, the firm foundation of my life
 You will be firm: but though we well may trust
 On its firm margin, even as from a well,
 The firm protection she bestows;
 Erect his port, and firm his going;
 The reason firm, the temperate will,
 In that decrepit Man so firm a mind.
 Enjoins, while firm resolves await
 Where nothing was; and firm as some old Tower
 And let some mood of thine in firm array
 Yet firm his step, and stont his heart;
 Hangs that day's treasured sword, how firm a check
 Repose at length, firm friends of human kind!
 In this firm hour Salvation lifts her horn.
 Firm as a rock in stationary fight;
 Mail to the firm unmoving cross,
 Firm in its pristine majesty hath stood
 Ere on firm ground the car alighted;
 Of female patience winning firm repose;
 And spake in firm and earnest mood.
 Watch, and be firm! for soul-subduing vice,
 That the firm soul is clothed with fruit divine!
 Firm as the stake to which with iron band
 His frame is tied; firm from the naked feet
 Seems firm as solid crystal, breathless, clear,
 Perplex the Church; and be thou firm,—be true
 Firm as the towering Headlands of St. Bees.
 In plumed the Knight!—when on firm ground
 Yet seek thy firm support, according to their need,
 Its duties;—prompt to move, but firm to wait,—
 Firm self-denial, manners grave and staid,
 And all who from the law firm safety crave,
 Strike not from Law's firm hand that awful rod,
 Firm and unflinching, as the Lighthouse reared
 Of firm dry ground, with healthful grass
 Firm Independence, Bunrty's rightful sire;
 Firm in the sacred paths of moral truth,
 With woman's gentleness, yet firm and staid;
 To firm devotion, zeal unquenchable,
 The balance, and with firm hand weighed myself,
 To lure my mind from firm habitual quest
 On firm foundations, making social life,
 Became more firm in feelings that had stood
 Of mine can give it life,) in firm belief . . .
 Step after step—together, with their firm . . .
 So like the past, and both so firm a pledge
 Affiance in each other; faith more firm . . .

Firm—continued.

Strong and unbounded to embrace, and firm . . .
 His own firm spirit in degree deprest . . .
 Is the firm basis of habitual sense . . .
Firmament. And soon with crimson fire kindled the firmament.
 And in the bosom of the firmament . . .
 Approached this glory of the firmament;
 Stand in the spacious firmament of time,
 He keepeth; like the firmament his ways:
 And the firmament benign
 O'er the blue firmament a radiant white,
 The Moon hung naked in a firmament
 Drawn towards her native firmament of heaven,
 As if he wished the firmament of heaven . . .
 Advance, and in the firmament of heaven . . .
 Of the blue firmament—aloft, and wide:
Firmer. A firmer step than mine. That dismal
 Moor—
 With firmer, holier knot. . . .
 What do we gather hence but firmer faith . . .
 With firmer soul, yet labour to regain
 Hence he will gain a firmer mind, to cope
 No firmer grasp—a little wild-flower, joined
 Take firmer hold of us, and words themselves
 The heart with firmer grasp! Your snows and streams
 Of firmer trust, joint labourers in the work
Firmest. It would unman the firmest heart to hear.
 Life to consume in Manhood's firmest hold;

Firmly. he kept them firmly sealed, as if he had been blind.
 Firmly rejects those dazzling flatteries, . . .
 Firmly between the two extremes to steer;
 A calm resolve of mind, firmly addressed
 March firmly towards righteousness and peace."
 More firmly to old tenets, and, to prove
 More firmly; and a comfort now hath risen
 Like pillars fixed more firmly, as might seem Firmness. Religiously that vow; but firmness failed,
 With firmness, hitherto but slightly touched . . .
 Grant to the wise his firmness of resolve!"
Firs. Beneath those lofty firs, that overtop . . .
 Within this grove of firs! and, on the fork
 Of the dark firs, a visionary scene!
 Where the bare columns of those lofty firs,
 Behold a dusky spot, a grove of Firs,
First. On the dear hills where first he rose . . .
 Alike, when first the bitter's hollow bill
 Thus Hope, first pouring from her blessed horn
 The boat's first motion—made with dashing oar
 Yes, I must see you when ye first behold . . .
 The first whose footsteps print the mountain dew.
 First covered, and here taught this aged Tree
 By the moon's sullen lamp she first discerned,
 When first I saw him sitting there, alone,
 But every night at the first stroke of twelve
 Lovely as Spring's first rose; a little dog,
 These walls shall witness it—from first to last
 Would there perhaps have gathered the first fruits.
 To stay behind!—Hearing at first no answer,
 When the tempestuous wind first drove us hither,
 And craft of age, seducing reason, first
 Each rises as the other falls; and first,
 But first, how wash our hands of this old Man?
 From the first moment that I loved the Maid;
 Time, since Man first drew breath, has never moved
 First among youths of knightly breeding, One
 The first hours of last night were rough with storm:
 "The first that died was sister Jane;
 When my father found thee first in places far away;
 Forth from his eyes, when first the Boy looked down on that huge oak,
 Now first acquainted with distress and grief,
 Yea, his first word of greeting was,— "All right
 At the first word that Susan said
 Or for the summer shade. It was the first
 At the first hearing, for a moment look
 Such was his first resolve; he thought again,
 First can't sto into the world—as oft befalls
 First uttering, without words, a natural tune,
 The first stone of the Sheep-fold. At the sight
 The spring's first rose by you espied,
 And taken thy first leave of those green hills
 Muttering the verses which I muttered first
 Your kind's first seed did bear . . .
 Since we needs must first have met
 First at sight of thee was glad;
 Who the first with pointed ray,
 Who first, weighed down by scorn, in some loce bower
 This Flower, that first appeared as summer's guest,
 First at one, and then its fellow,
 And first—thy sinless progress, through a world
 Among these hills, from first to last,
 When first she gleamed upon my sight; . . .

 The first division of the splendid feast,
 When first, above the yells of bigot strife,
 To lack that first great gift, the vital soul,
 Of those who conquered first the Indian Isles,
 By day or star-light thus from my first dawn 586 Hogg 1
 How Nature by extrinsic passion first 589 Immortality 152
 Those chiefly that first led me to the love 592 Ev. Wh. Quarto 25
 Those incidental charms which first attached 592 Ev. Wh. Quarto 26
 His habits were first sown, even as a seed ? 614 Desc. Sh. Quarto 672
 Which it beholds.—Such, verily, is the first
 Beginning not long after that first time
 At the first gleam of daw-light, when the Vale,
 My first creative sensibility ; 618 School Ex. 3
 And nothing cheered our way till first we saw
 Three Gothic courts are his, and in the first
 And little won. Yet from the first crude days
 Of that first Paradise whence man was driven ;
 By the first men, earth's first inhabitants,
 If hath been told, that when the first delight
 Be it content that, for the first time, seated
 From their first childhood : in that glorious time
 That this first transit from the smooth delights
 Into a gentler service. And when first
 Like a returning Spring, when first I made 620 Birth of Love 44
 When I was first intrusted to the care 621 Convict 47
 When first I learnt, that this dear prize of mine
 In which his youth did first extravagate ; 625 Æneid 96
 That twilight when we first begin to see 629 Installation 101
 Or less I might have seen, when first my mind
 Which also first emboldened me to trust 634 Prelude 1. 150
 (Then first a self-taught pupil in its truths) 635 Prelude 1. 208
 A gift then first bestowed. The varied banks
 And placid under-countenance, first endeared ;
 Down on a green recess, the first I saw
 From a bare ridge we also first beheld 638 Prelude 1. 405
 That to the spot which had perplexed us first
 Of first, and last, and midst, and without end.
 Six changeful years have vanished since I first
 At full command, to London first I turned,
 Of the huge town's first presence, and had paced
 Must needs bring back the moment when we first,
 I heard, and for the first time in my life, 640 Prelude 1. 545
 This, of all acquisitions, first awaits 642 Prelude 2. 4
 Where to the sense of beauty first my heart
 For me, when my affections first were led 645 Prelude 2. 198
 And Shepherds were the men that pleased me first ;
 Did first present themselves thus purified,
 In our first years, or think that it is found,
 Of most to move in, but that first I looked
 First communed with him by their help. And thus
 With my first blessings. Nevertheless, on these
 But when that first poetic faculty 646 Prelude 2. 266
 On the dear mountain-tops where first he rose 647 Prelude 2. 260
 Both in perception and discernment, first 649 Prelude 3. 47
 Of the suburban villages, I first 651 Prelude 3. 75
 And a new quickening shall succeed, at first
 Even in such sort had I at first been moved,
 In his first outset ; so have we, my Friend !
 However potent their first shock, with me
 Moreover, the first storm was overblown,
 Add unto this, subservience from the first
 If at the first great outbreak I rejoiced
 By the first Francis wooed, and bound to him
 Of that first memorable onset made 651 Prelude 3. 152
 And holy passion overcame me first,
 The first was service paid to things which lie
 Of the glad times when first I traversed France
 The heart that first had roused him. Youth maintains, 652 Prelude 3. 201
 Seems, when the first time visited, to one 652 Prelude 3. 206
 In brief, a child of Nature, as at first, 653 Prelude 3. 296
 This threw me first out of the pale of love ;
 As from the first, wild theories were afloat,
 From her first ground expelled, grew proud once more 656 Prelude 3. 517
 How are the mighty prostrated ! They first,
 They first of all that breathe should have awaked
 From the first playtime of the infant world
 The first diviner influence of this world,
 From our first childhood. I remember well,
 The time (our guiding object from the first)
 As studied first in our own hearts, and then
 That were our daily portion when we first
 When, after the first mingling of our tears
 And the first virgin passion of a soul 657 Prelude 4. 137
 As my own child. Oh, Sir ! the good die first,
 And, looking round me, now I first observed
 From their first separation, nine long years,
 At the first nipping of October frost 660 Excursion 1. 285
 First, last, and single, in the breathing world,
 When the first glow of pleasure was no more, 663 Excursion 1. 500
 667 Excursion 1. 742
 669 Excursion 1. 872
 670 Excursion 1. 902

First—continued.

That mood, or undermine my first resolve." . . . 781
 But, though he seemed at first to have received
 Its line had first been fashioned by the flock . . . 785
 The first that entered. But no breeze did now
 With her first growths, detaching by the stroke
 And these were the first parents of mankind :
 On the first motion of a holy thought ;
 Who shared at first the illusion ; but was soon
 (As at a first creation and in haste
 When issue forth the first pale stars, is heard,
 Yet, on your first suggestion, will I give,
 " When to those shining fields our notice first
 Who shall be first selected from my flock,
 Of infancy first blooms upon his cheek ;
 The hopeful and the hopeless, first and last,
 Among the first of Powers and Virtues—proved ?
 Of giving welcome to the first of May . . . 851
 When he beholds the first pale speck serene
 Of human kind ! He was it who first broke . . . 852
 Yet keeping her first mildness, was advanced . . . 854
 " Our very first in eminence of years . . . 861
 On those high peaks, the first autumnal snow,
 —Then, for the first time, here you might have seen
 'Tis left untold if here he first drew breath,
 First offered help that the deficient took . . . 871
 At the first falling of the autumnal snows,
 To hearths when first they darkened at the knell :
 The famous sheep-dog, first in all the Vale,
 First one and then another silver spout,
 Arms and the Man I sing, the first who bore . . . 871
 The first of genuine kings, a king for use,
 Who first dealt that calm majestic face ? . . . 9

First-born. Gorbonian's first-born son, your rightful king restored !" . . . 105
 As if you were her first-born birth . . . 481
 This thy First-born, and with tears . . . 503
 To those first-born affinities that fit . . . 640
 The trees (her first-born child being then a babe) . . . K.8. 247

First-drawn. Whose first-drawn breath from bush and tree . . . 506

First-fruit. With first-fruit offerings crowd to bend
 the knee . . . 303

Firstling. Innocuous as a firstling of the flock, . . . 381
Fir-tree. Of whitest garniture, like fir-tree boughs . . . 212
Fir-trees. Amid the fir-trees, all the summer long . . . 150
Fish. And both the undying fish that swim . . . 205
 Or fish in stream, or bird in bower . . . 295
 There sometimes doth a leaping fish . . . 491
 And, now and then, a fish up-leaping snapped
 Moves through the air, or as a fish pursues
 And the mute fish that glances in the stream,
 Nor wanted timely treat of fish or fowl . . . 686

Fisher. There's George Fisher, Charles Fleming, and Reginald Shore, . . . 86
 A fisher or a hunter there, . . . 193
 Like saintly Fisher, and unbending More . . . 435
Fisher's. In sailor's ship, or fisher's boat, . . . 295
Fishers. The fishers say, those sisters fair
 To fishers mending nets beside their doors ;
Fishes. And fishes front, unmoved, the torrent's sweep,— . . . 390
 And served in depths where fishes haunt . . . 506
 Sees many beautiful sights—weeds, fishes, flowers,
Fissures. And through the yawning fissures old,
 And half-inch fissures in the slippery rock . . . 662

Fit. See Barking-fit, Breathing-fit, Swooning-fit.
 Much wondering by what fit of crazing care,
 Owes to the fit in which his soul hath tossed
 Profounder quiet, when the fit retires,
 Tempered fit words of hope ; and the lark warbled
 near . . . 11
 Nor to the beggar's language could I fit my tongue . . . 30
 Nor was I then for toll or service fit . . . 31
 And nowhere upon earth is place so fit . . . 32
 And tell me if 'tis fit for such a work . . . 49
 To its most fit conclusion, do you think
 His Sheriffs with fit force to reinstate . . . 52
 It is the toy of fools, and little fit
 To fit all deeds. Carry him to the Camp !—
 Their veil, but not for me—'twas in fit place . . . 65
 Nay ; hear my tale, 'tis fit that you should hear it—
 Laid hands upon your Father. Fit it were
 In such a course fit links of sympathy,
 A hermitage has furnished fit relief . . . 68
 'Tis gone—and in a merry fit . . . 81
 Be pleased that nature made thee fit
 And it was fit that thence I took
 Fit pattern for a human creature,
 I know the earth-nuts fit for food ;
 Have shells to fit their tiny hands . . . 114
 That is fit home for Thee !
 She towered, fit person for a Queen
 Yet they, so blithe of heart, seemed fit . . . 191
 Altars for Druid service fit ; . . . 214
 Nor less, by excellence of nature, fit
 Fit equitance for the soul of primal truth ;
 Fit aims, with courage to begin,
 Wrapped in a fit of pleasing indolence,
 O for a balance fit the truth to tell . . . 227

Fit—continued.

His sudden fit of joy is flown,— . . . 243
 Had ever such a fit of joy . . . 249
 To fit proportion with my altered state ! . . . 267
 With heaven, our souls more fit for future glory,
 " 'Tis fit that we should do our part,
 Yet, in some fit of anger sharp, . . . 291
 Fit garlands for the brave, . . . 323
 Was fit for some gay throng ; . . . 334
 As in a fit of Thespian jollity,
 And in fit measure cheers autumnal days . . . 335
 Fit obscures the Stranger paid ;
 On Sarnen's Mount, there judge of fit and right,
 With magnitude and strength fit to uphold
 Fit to be placed in that pure diadem ; . . . 354
 That would yield him fit help while prefiguring that Place . . . 364
 More fit to animate the Poet's pen,
 Fit offering of glad victory ! . . . 387
 Fit haunt of shapes whose glorious equipage
 With morbid restlessness !—the ecstatic fit . . . 424
 To course fit to make a mother rue . . . 438
 Thanks for the lessons of this Spot—fit school . . . 447
 Fit music for a solemn vale ! . . . 473
 Fit for the shades of heroes, mingling there . . . 508
 Ah why deceive ourselves ! by no mere fit . . . 515
 Fit retribution, by the moral code . . . 519
 And should the colder fit with You be on . . . 522
 Cakes for the nonce, and butter fit to lie . . . 525

He proud to please, above all rivals, fit . . . 528

Fit for the glimmering brow of Proserpine.
 Nor lacking, for fit company, alcove, . . . 532
 Is only fit to die, I dare well say, . . . 547
 These she accepts as for her service fit ! . . . 550
 Then will he fit his tongue . . . 562
 To those first-born affinities that fit . . . 580
 Fit reverence for the glorious Dead, the sight,
 If but by labour won, and fit to endure . . . 654
 Fit resting-place for such a visitant . . . 654
 Removed, and to a distance that was fit : . . . 685
 Of a new world—a world, too, that was fit
 To hold fit converse with the spiritual world,
 May with fit reverence be applied—that peace
 I sing !—' fit audience let me find though few ! . . . 703
 Of all unsocial courses, is least fit
 Fit recompense of new desert ? what claim
 And, in some fit of weariness, if he,
 As one or other takes the fit of glee,
 (Fit token of thy reverence and love) . . . 745
Fitful. Tracking the motions of the fitful gale,
 But now it mocks my steps ; its fitful stroke
 All fitful cares, all transitory zeal !
 With thy clear voice, I caught the fitful sound
 Oft have I caught, upon a fitful breeze,
Fitfully. Fitfully, and in flashes, through his soul,
 The crash of ruin fitfully resounds ;
Fitliest. And fitliest serve to crown with fragrant wreaths . . . 18
 Fitliest beneath the sacred roof proceeds
 Fitliest allied to anger and revenge . . . 21
Fitly. As fitly spring from turf the mourner weeps on— . . . 222
 The emotion—nay, more fitly were it said—
 Fitly attuned to all that gratitude
 Fitly to guard the precious dust of him
 And thus it is that fitly they become . . . 355
Fitness. In perfect fitness for its aim,
 Nor sometimes felt a fitness in thy sway
 And fitness in the latent qualities . . . 377
Fits. And grasps by fits her sword, and often eyes ;
 Strange fits of passion have I known ;
 Their starts of motion and their fits of rest,
 Warbles by fits his low clear song ; . . . 379
 Am pleased by fits to have thee for my foe,
 By fits and starts, yet fits contents thee not . . . 488
 And fits of sprightly malice do but bribe
 For Fancy hath her fits both hot and cold,
 That haply flowed from me, by fits of silence
 Joy !—a moon by fits reflected . . . 528
 His fits when he is neither sick nor well,
 Thus oft amid those fits of vulgar joy
 Moods melancholy, fits of spleen, that loved
 In fits of kindest apprehensiveness,
 Which fits him to receive it when unsought,
 Heaven's gift, a sense that fits him to perceive
 Within how deep a shelter ! He had fits, . . . 549
 The poet fits it to his pensive lyre . . . 640
 Its best attainment fits of such repose . . . 677
 Then, from those lulling fits of vain delight
 840
Fitted. Ill fitted to sustain unkindly shocks,
 A wisdom fitted to the needs . . . 88
 [So pure, so bright, so fitted to embrace
 Serene, and fitted to embrace,
 Thoughtfully fitted to the Orphean lyre ;
 Or heard, was fitted to our unripe state
 Had fitted their own thoughts, schemers more mild,
 Is fitted !—and how exquisitely, too—
 The external World is fitted to the Mind ; . . . 205

Fitter. Fitter hope, and nobler doom ; . . . 205

Fitter—continued.

Go, carry to some fitter place 485
 By useful habits, to a fitter soil 862
Fittest. The fittest place? He is growing pitiful 51
 And fittest to unalterable thought 88
Fitting. Fitting his low voice to the minstrel's harp, 59
 "And now, as fitting is and right 193
 And made a fitting song of words but few, 594
 Who crept along fitting her languid gait 717
Five. Five streams of ice amid her cots descend, 20
 A farm or dwelling-house within five leagues, 51
 Five minutes past—and, O the change! 82
 Then ye are only five." 84
 I have a boy of five years old; 85
 Through five long generations had the heart 98
 And there is one whom I five years have known; 110
 From ten to five, from five to three, 115
 Five years of happiness or more 127
 In five months' time, should he be seen, 129
 From eight o'clock till five 131
 Two steady roses that were five years old; 134
 With a light heart. The Housewife for five days 135
 The violets of five seasons re-appear 185
 Not five yards from the mountain path, 198
 Five years have past; five summers, with the length 205
 Of five long winters! and again I hear 205
 Five thousand warriors—O the rapturous day! 212
 The five dear wounds our Lord did bear; 400
 And I for five centuries right gladly would be 482
 When full five hundred boats in trim array, 522
 Oh, many a time have I, a five years' child, 636
 And twice five summers on my mind had stamped 640
 I travelled round our little lake, five miles 647
 Fresh emptied of spectators. Twice five years 674
 Five rivers broad and vast, made rich amends, 683
 His steadfast eye. The planetary Five 811
 Five graves, and only five, that rise together 858
 "At length, when sixty years and five were told, 864
Five-and-thirty. Full five-and-thirty years he lived 483
Fix. And grows as if he would fix his claws 81
 Fix thine eyes upon the sea 90
 And fix on it a steady view, 200
 Yon cloud, and fix it in that glorious shape; 252
 Would fix itself as smoothly as a cloud, 312
 To fix in heaven her shape distinct with stars, 336
 Relax, to fix and satisfy the mind 353
 To fix a wiser sorrow in the heart? 467
 He labours good on good to fix, and owes 493
 Why fix upon his wealth or want a thought? 529
 Fix on a lovely object, nor my mind 622
 Might fix the wavering balance of my mind, 641
 Reflective acts to fix the moral law 650
 Fix us upon some lofty pinnacle, 690
 Thither, uncertain on which road to fix 738
 —The darts of anguish fix not where the seat 801
 From this unstable world, if he could fix 803
 Shall fix, in calmer seats of moral strength, 820
 To fix her eyes—alas! 'twas hard to bear! 853
 Upon his sprightly vigour cannot fix 866
 "Then let us rather fix our gladdened thoughts 888
Fixed. Fixed on the anchor left by Him who saves 14
 Which oft as he looked back had fixed his eye, 24
 Thy curse is fixed; the truth must be laid bare 76
 The Cross, fixed in his soul, may prove an all- 91
 sufficing stay.
 Whence all the fixed delights of house and home, 102
 "Who, when a crown is fixed upon his head, 105
 Upon the moon I fixed my eye, 109
 Fixed in the spirit; for even here 113
 Stands fixed, her face with joy o'erflows, 127
 Restless with fixed to balance, high with low, 133
 Fixed on a Star his upward eye; 153
 And fixed an infant's gaze above 167
 Fixed on a smoothly-sliding car 177
 "And they had fixed the wedding day, 199
 In fixed resolves by Reason justified; 217
 Whose wisdom fixed the scale 226
 Some fixed, some wandering with no timid curb; 226
 But wandering star and fixed, to mortal eye, 226
 As if the man had fixed his face, 240
 His wandering eye is fixed, 242
 Lies fixed for ages on his conscious neck; 278
 Lo! where she stands fixed in a saint-like trance, 278
 Others look up; and with fixed eyes admire 283
 Was fixed upon the glowing Sky, 289
 Had fixed, for ever fixed, their doom! 298
 Fixed on him an unhallowed name; 299
 Fixed, like the Templar of the steep, 301
 Fixed as a star: such glory is thy right, 317
 Fixed in the depths of this courageous soil; 324
 But He who fixed immoveably the frame 329
 Fixed on the front of Eastern diadems, 331
 Conjoined in prospect mutable or fixed 355
 Of Brethren who, here fixed, on Jesu wait 364
 Merlin, as fixed in thought he stood, 371
 The clasp that fixed the Roman Gown; 390
 A world of fixed remembrances 398
 The Norton fixed, at this demand, 403
 He there stands fixed from hour to hour 404
 There hath she fixed it; yet it seems 413

Fixed—continued.

Hath stopped, and fixed her large full eye 414
 For Souls whose doom is fixed! The way is smooth 423
 Weeds on whose front the world had fixed her sign 423
 Where long and deeply hath been fixed the root 431
 Fixed on the frame of England's Church their sight, 444
 Seem fixed, to eyes that watch them from afar; 444
 Fixed, by her smile, upon some rocky seat; 461
 A fixed Abode—keep down presageful sighs, 465
 Like the fixed Light that crowns yon Headland of 466
 St. Bees, 469
 Of periods fixed, and laws established, less 471
 For her mute Powers, fixed Forms, or transient 471
 Shows, 471
 A faith more fixed, a rapture more divine' 474
 Stood with eyes fixed upon that masterpiece, 509
 To circumscribe this Shape in fixed repose; 511
 Be one fixed mind for all; thy rights approve 515
 Fixed on the statutes of Eternity, 519
 I ask what warrant fixed them (like a spell 527
 Of witchcraft fixed them) in the crystal cell; 527
 On Jesu's Mother fixed was his intent, 554
 And scanned them with a fixed and serious look 566
 Floating or fixed of polar ice, allow, 587
 The poet's steps, and fixed him here, on you 596
 The Moon's fix'd gaze between the opening trees, 608
 Ev'n here Content has fix'd her smiling reign 615
 With pale-blue hands, and eyes that fix'd implore, 616
 With pulseless hand, and fix'd unwearied gaze, 626
 Fixed on the Sutor; frustrate her request— 637
 With an unswerving lip, I fixed my view 659
 Had watched her with fixed eyes while to and fro 682
 Hands of angelic powers had fixed it there, 688
 Now, fixed amid that concourse of mankind 696
 Wherein were fixed the iron pales that fenced 698
 Shape for mankind, by principles as fixed, 730
 Out of his feelings, to be fixed thenceforth 745
 Made visible; as ruled by those fixed laws— 747
 A fixed, abysmal, gloomy, breathing-place— 758
 He sat, and even in their fixed lineaments, 758
 Even in their fixed and steady lineaments 770
 Fixed on the Cross, that consolation springs, 776
 By weariness of life—he fixed his home, 784
 Stood fixed; and fixed resemblances were seen 794
 As the mute insect fixed upon the plant 796
 If fixed or wandering star could tidings yield 802
 And the vast hills, in fluctuation fixed 805
 That he, whose fixed depondancy had given 805
 Exist; so, none is now for fixed despair: 812
 On fluent operations a fixed shape; 812
 And, even as these are well and widely fixed, 817
 For fixed annoyance; and full oft beset 822
 Like the fixed centre of a troubled world, 823
 Withdrew, and fixed me in a still retreat; 825
 Imbued the altar-window; fixed aloft 828
 Whom the best might of faith, wherever fixed, 831
 Whose root is fixed in stable earth, whose head 833
 And saw the light—now fixed—and shifting now— 835
 My comfort!—would that they were oftener fixed 835
 Fixed in the centre of a prickly brake, 837
 Like pillars fixed more firmly, as might seem, 844
 Had fixed his milder loyalty, and placed 850
 A long stone-seat, fixed in the Churchyard wall; 859
 Or the necessity that fixed him here; 869
 Fixed at their seat, the centre of the Mere, 871
 And fixed his home in this sequestered vale, 878
 Fixed in his soul, so early and so deep; 878
 Without his own consent, or knowledge, fixed! 887
 Fixed, with the same upright form! The sun is fixed, 887
 Fixed, with the reach of every human eye; S. 3
 With heverage pure as ever fixed the choice K. 8
 And will be stirring when our eyes are fixed K. 8
 He planted, and in Latinum fixed his Gods, 281
Fixedly. Stirred with his staff, and fixedly did look 196
Fixes. That both creates and fixes, in despite 309
 Or fixes them; whose least distinguished day 339
Fixing. Fixing his downcast eye, he many an hour 23
 And fixing still his eye, 486
 But fixing by immutable decrees 500
 Far happier they who, fixing hope and aim 529
 The Wife and Mother pitifully fixing 798
 Experience daily fixing his regards 813
 Fixing a steady eye, maintain their speed; 880
Fixtures. Mute fixture on a stuccoed wall, 300
Flaccid. With flaccid threads of ivy, in the still 497
 Whose flaccid sails in forms fantastic droop, 604
Flag. At remembrance whereof my blood sometimes 86 will flag; Rival Arch. 22
 The wings they did not flag; the Child, though 92
 grave, was not deprest, 178
 And so, flag flying at mast head, 722
 When the proud fleet that bears the red-cross flag 835
 For you the hours of labour do not flag; S. 3
 A flag of yellow dye, 431
Flageolet. And merry flageolet; the low of herds, 18
 His flageolet to liquid notes of love 702
Flagged. The boyish spirit flagged, and day by day 660 Flagging. Dull, flagging notes that with each other 252 jar?" Why, Minstrel 2

Flags. Tartarean flags are caught at, and unfurled—
 Shall hoist their topmast flags in sign of glee, . . .
 On the thrilled ear, and flags uprising, yield
 Heavenward; and chide the part of me that flags,
Flag-ship. This was the Flag-ship at the Nile, . . .
Flail. The measured echo of the distant flail . . .
 Some injury done to sickle, flail, or scythe,
Flake. The torch that flames with many a lurid flake,
 Great is their glee while flake they add to flake . . .
Flakes. See Cotton-flakes.
 Strong flakes of radiance on the tremulous stream :
 In flakes of light upon the mountain-side ;
 That turns its goat's-beard flakes of pea-green moss
 And quick words round him fall like flakes of snow.
Flaky. A flaky weight of winter's purest snows !
Flame. An edge all flame, the broadening sun
 appears ;
 At once to pillars turned that flame with gold :
 Old Man ! my wrath is as a flame burnt out, . . .
 In secret, like a smothered flame ?
 The Highlanders, the slaughter spread like flame ;
 Those new-born Kings she withered like a flame,
 Despoil our temples, and by sword and flame . . .
 Oh, for a kindling touch from that pure flame
 —There is a radiant though a short-lived flame,
 —Wide-wasted regions—cities wrapt in flame—
 How, for exciting youth's heroic flame,
 A greedy flame ; the pompous mass proceeds ;
 Of the new Flame, not suffered to expire . . .
 Like Ocean burning with purple flame ;
 And listen to the flapping of the flame, . . .
 He loved, he hoped,—a holy flame . . .
 It's edge all flame, the broad'ning sun appears ;
 And quench the passions kindling into flame ;
 A flame within them that despises death . . .
 Of single spirits that catch the flame from Heaven,
 Who swept from Scotland, in a flame of zeal, . . .
 With their last breath, from out the smouldering flame . . .
 Mortal though bright, a dying, dying flame . . .
Flame-eyed. The flame-eyed eagle oft wouldst scare
 And near the flame-eyed eagle sits the dove.
Flames. Lo, from the flames a great and glorious birth ;
 You rushed into the murderous flames, returned
 Of tows in flames, fields ravaged, young and old
 Oh! would that thou hadst perished in the flames!
 The torch that flames with many a lurid flake,
 By flames, look up to heaven and crave redress
 Lo ! from th' innocuous flames, a lovely birth !
 "Invisible" flames forth upon his chest, . . .
 The Desert visible by dismal flames ;
 By flames breathed on her from her own fireside.
Flameward. Outstretching flameward his upbraided
 hand . . .
Flaming. Moves there a cloud o'er mid-day's flaming eye ?
 The six-days' Work by flaming Seraphim . . .
 Michael, and thou, St. George, whose flaming brand
 Flaming till thou from Paimon hands release . . .
 "And has the Sun his flaming chariot driven . . .
 Sink, with a retinue of flaming clouds . . .
 Two doughty champions ; flaming Jacobite
Flannel. Good duffe grey, and flannel fine ;
Flap. When windows flap and chimney roars, Flapped. While, flapped with conscious pride, resound his wings !
Flapping. With flapping wing for entrance. What a shriek
 And the dire flapping of his hoary wing !
 And listen to the flapping of the flame, . . .
Flaring. Children of the flaring hours !
Flash. And the short thunder, and the flash of arms ;
 For a few swelling phrases, and a flash
 When, after a broad flash that filled the cave,
 A gentle flash of light that came . . .
 There came a flash—a startling glare,
 They flash upon that inward eye . . .
 Ere he replied, a flash of mild surprise . . .
 As the first flash of beacon light ;
 Up with a sally, and a flash of speed,
 Welter and flash, a synod might detain . . .
 A flash of something over-bright !
 Where golden flash and silver gleam . . .
 Hast thou seen, with flash incessant,
 While flash her upward eyes severe delight.
 The thought of her was like a flash of light,
 Too soon, while yet the very flash and gleam
 Goes out, but with a flash that has revealed
 Fell like a flash, and lo ! as I looked up, . . .
 Even as a thoughtful shepherd by a flash . . .
Flashed. From the clear light of circumstances, flashed
 Air blackened, thunder growled, fire flashed from clouds that hid the sky
 Flashed round him images and hues that wrought
 Pleasant conviction flashed upon my mind . . .
 That story flashed upon his mind,—
 The barrier Rhine hath flashed, through battle-smoke, . . .

Flashed—continued.
 That flashed upon me from this novel show . . .
 His form hath flashed upon me, glorified . . .
 One guide, the light of circumstances, flashed
 That flashed and sparkled from the other's eyes ;
 That flashed uncouthly through the woods and fields . . .
Flashes. See Sea-flashes.
 And the fierce torrent at the flashes broad . . .
 Fittingly, and in flashes, through his soul, . . .
 Flashes a look of terror upon guilt, . . .
 I heard, I saw the flashes drive, . . .
 Close-treading on the silent flashes— . . .
 Are felt the flashes of his pen ;
 The vivid flashes of his spoken words . . .
 In flashes, and with glory not their own . . .
 And with what flashes, as it were, the mind
 Of Thirlmere flashes like a warrior's shield . . .
Flashing. Restlessly flashing, seems to mount like fire :
 In flashing leaps and stealthy creeps
 The proud heart flashing through the eyes,
 Forth flashing out of its own gloomy chasm . . .
 And temples flashing, bright as polar ice,
 And flashing to that Structure's topmost height,
 Of wounds, and bright swords flashing in the field,
 Starts like a horse beside the flashing road ;
 Shakes from behind the clouds his flashing shield,
 Gleams like the flashing of a shield ;—the earth
 Arms flashing, and a military glare . . .
 Retained a flashing eye, a burning palm,
Flat. Nought but the chales, flat and bare, on high
 Lo ! where through fat Batavia's willowy groves,
 Majestic Duddon, over smooth fat sands
 Of a cloud flat and dense, through which must move
 This straight-lined progress, furrowing a flat lea,
 On a flat and lazy shore . . .
 Or summer hamlet, flat and bare, on high . . .
 Upon the smooth flat stones : the Nurse is here,
 O'er the flat Common —With quick step I reached
 A fragment, like an altar, flat and smooth : . . .
 Or lay its beauty flat before a breeze, . . .
 To the flat margin of the Baltic sea, . . .
 O'er the flat meadows and indented coast . . .
 Flat on the ground, even as a boy might do,
 Those small flat stones, which, ranged by traveller's
 hands . . .
 From the flat meadow lonely there . . .
Flat-roofed. To flat-roofed tows, that touch the water's bound . . .
Flatter. Will flatter you,—and fool and rake . . .
 Fell flatter than a caged parrot's note, . . .
 Ill purposes, and flatter fool desires . . .
Flattered. Nay, but speak out ! He flattered me, and said . . .
 Flattered and feared, despised yet deified, . . .
 Flattered with promise of escape . . .
 The flattered structure glistened, blazed, . . .
 Were flattered, and had trust in human kind :
 Flattered the young, pleased with extremes, nor least
Flatterers. By flatterers carried, mount into a dream
Flatteries. Firmly rejects those dazzling flatteries, . . .
 Of the world's flatteries if the brain be full,
 Mingling their glances with grave flatteries . . .
 "The habbling flatteries . . .
 Feuds, factions, flatteries, enmity, and guile
Flattering. See Self-flattering.
 Ye flattering eastern lights, once more the hills
 illumine ; . . .
 Not unassisted by the flattering stars, . . .
 Who, while the flattering Zephyrs round them play,
 Taught to mistrust her flattering horoscope . . .
 Turn a broad front full on his flattering beams :
 He promised comfort ; and the flattering thoughts
 (If now I yield not to a flattering dream)
 That framed them ; flattering self-conceit with words,
 That flattering breezes blowing thence . . .
Flatters. That flatters us, because it asks not thought :
 An element that flatters him—to kill, . . .
Flattery. Flattery in Ancient Rome's pure-minded style :
 Of fond sepulchral flattery can beguile . . .
 At oriental flattery ;
 Flattery and double-dealing, strife and wrong . . .
Flaunting. Nor flaunting Summer—when he throws
Flaw. Tho' searching damps and many an envious flaw
Flax. That small, for flax ; and, if one wheel had rest,
Fled. Has disappeared, and every trace is fled . . .
 Whether is fled that Power whose frown severe
 Both of the time to come, and time long fled :
 He fled, a vagrant since, the murderer's fate to shun,
 Now he had fled, and whither none could say,
 Hither soon as spring is fled
 O'er town and tower we fled, and fields in May's fresh verdure dress'd . . .
 Sleep fled, and with it fled the dream—recorded in this book, . . .

Fled—continued.

Seek for him,—he is fled; and whither none can say.
That now, when day was fled, and night
When her coevals each and all are fled,
She from her prison fled;
I will not stop to tell how far he fled,
The ghastly colour from his lips had fled;
Of coming good;—the charm is fled;
Speak, silent creatures.—They are gone, are fled,
But then it quickly fled;
And newly-kindled hope; but they are fled—
Whose desperate shock the Carthaginian fled.
And, with the guilt, the shame is fled;
The splendour fled; and now the sunless hour,
Whence busy life hath fled;
(While all the ruffling winds are fled—
Inherited:—presumptuous thought—it fled
Into a cave had Merlin fled
Cold as she is, ere life be fled for ever.
What aspect bore the Man who roved or fled,
Its line of Warriors fled;—they shrank when tried
To watch thy course when Daylight, fled from earth,
But they and their good works are fled,
Some fled, and some their fears detained:
He fled,—and, in his flight, could hear
He marked not, heard not, as he fled;
That to what place soever fled
Say, Spirit! whither hath she fled
And, to like shelter from the world have fled
From Rite and Ordinance abused they fled
Brief parting, for the spirit is all but fled)—
Or wan despair—the ghost of false hope fled
By stealth she passed, and fled as fast
And toward the Island fled,
And when his breath was fled,
Oh, fled for ever vanished like a blast
Whither is fled the visionary gleam?
Till, but the lonely beacon all is fled,
—The pomp is fled, and mute the wondrous strains,
Where now is fled that Power whose frown severe
Fled panting to the centre of her mines;
And fled indignant to the shades of night;
That fled, and, flying still before me, gleamed
He fled, to shun the haunts of human kind;
Into avengers, from whose wrath they fled
Fled with the voice to which it had given birth;
A casual glance had shown them, and I fled,
Time with his retinue of ages fled
He fled; but, compassed round by pleasure, sighed
Who fled to woods, caverns, and jutting rocks,
He fled; and when the lenient hand of time
Home to her mother's house. The Youth was fled;
"Fled!" was the Wanderer's passionate response,
"Fled utterly! or only to be traced
Is fled; we must depart, willing or not;
Dear Harmodius, art thou fled?"

Fledged. See New-fledged.
Though fledged and feathered, and well pleased to part

Flea. All that could quit my grasp, or flee,
And off was moved to flee from home,
Which granted, Bride and Bridegroom then would flee
Who, while they struggle from the scourge to flee,
And smiles that from their birthplace ne'er shall flee
O say to what blind region flee
From van to rear—and with one mind would flee,
With a thought he would flee to these haunts of his prime,
Shun, like a shattered bark, the storm, and flee
The Relics of the sword flee to the mountains:
O! that our lives, which flee so fast,
"But whither would you, could you, flee?
The giant-quelling bolts of Jove, I flee,
"A piteous lot it were to flee from Man—"

Fleece. Even for the man who wears the warmest fleece;
Bard of the Fleece, whose skillful genius made
And she who span it culled the daintiest fleece,
When the first Ship sailed for the Golden Fleece—
Moistened each fleece, beneath the twinkling stars
To wash the fleece, where haply hands of rock,
Wrapt closely in thy sensual fleece,

Fleeced. That, fleeced with moss, under the shady trees,

Fleece-encumbered. The fleece-encumbered flock—
the JOYFUL ELM,
Fleeces. To wash the fleeces of his Father's flock—
Fleecy. Like fleecy clouds self-multiplied
Alas! even then they seemed like fleecy clouds
Even to the fleecy straggler's bleat;
The paper kite high among fleecy clouds
In fleecy folds voluminous, unwrapped,

Fleecy-white. In robes of azure, fleecy-white, and gold.
Flees. Off flew the Boat—away she flees,
Fleet. He to an armed fleet was forced away
Much sorrow ere the fleet its anchor weighed;
From shade to sunshine, and as fleet
That, nymph-like, she is fleet and strong,
And that fleet messenger of summer days,

Fleet—continued.

From earth to heaven with motion fleet . . .
The fleet Ostrich, till day closes,
What time the fleet at Aulis lay enchained,
To vanish—fleet as days and months and years,
Fleet as the generations of mankind,
"As well might Peter in the Fleet . . .
Fleet the Tartar's reinless steed, . . .
Fleet was their course, and when they came . . .
With the fleet motion of a dove;
Thus spake—and lo! a Fleet, for Gaul address,
Till in the sunny bay his fleet was moored!
Fleet as the west wind, is for him no quarry;
Fleet as the shadows, over down or field,
And flying fleet behind his orb to view
Call thee, though known but for a few fleet years,
With the fleet waters of a drowning world
When the proud fleet that bears the red-cross flag
Of the fleet couriers they bestride, to raise
By the fleet Racers, ere the sun be set,
Into fleet Oreads sporting visibly.
His steps had followed, fleetest of the fleet,
Fleeter. But fleeter far the pinions of the Wind,
Fleetest. His steps had followed, fleetest of the fleet,
Fleeting. No fleeting Spirit, but my own true Love?
To one brief moment caught from fleeting time
And pensive monitor of fleeting years!
So changes mortal Life with fleeting years;
How fleeting and how frail is human life!
And deem not profitless those fleeting moods
When Folly from the frown of fleeting Time
As might appear to the eye of fleeting time?
Fleeting as health or beauty, and unsound?
Seems but a fleeting sunbeam's gift, whose peace
Fleetness. Man's headstrong violence and Time's fleetness,
Fleets. On fleets and armies, and external wealth:
Fleming. There's George Fisher, Charles Fleming, and Reginald Shore,
Flesh. I am of flesh and blood, and may I perish
My little boy of flesh and blood;
Yet seems a form of flesh and blood;
Or what a hand of flesh can give;
Of shivering flesh; and warbled air,
To flesh and blood; no Goddess from above,
Call thee worst Tyrant by which Flesh is crost?
With sights the rarest that flesh and bone
With purer robes than those of flesh and blood,
Than flesh and blood; whence'er thou meet'st my sight,
Of soul-sick flesh and weary bones:
Stringent as flesh can tolerate and live;
Through all that humbles flesh and mortifies?
And deigned to wear the robe of flesh we wear,
Earth to despise, and flesh to mortify;
Flesh to exalt than prove its nothingness.
Earth, till the flesh lay on him like a load,
Round these, with tendrils strong as flesh and blood,
And breathing life of flesh, as if already . . .
And Harry's flesh it fell away;
That flesh can know is theirs—the consciousness.
Too, too contracted are these walls of flesh,
And all the nice regards of flesh and blood)
We love, but that the residues of flesh,
Fleshly. Cold, paio, and labour, and all fleshly ills;
From this fair Portrait's fleshly Archetype,
That never fleshly woman they did know,
Most audible, then, when the fleshly ear,
The joy of fleshly life without its cares.
Fletcher's. Fletcher's Associate, Jonson's Friend beloved.
Flew. To join those miserable meo he flew,
—Away the shepherds flew;
He flew to her from whom they would divide him—
Off to some other play the joyous Vagrants flew!
Off flew the Boat—away she flees,
Her eye was busy, while her fingers flew
In keen pursuit,—and gave, where'er she flew,
Departed ages, shedding where he flew
Flew high above Atlantic waves, to draw
Flew open, by an Angel's voice unbarred?
Not to the clouds, not to the cliff, he flew;
Her faithful spirit flew,
And as he flew, the Cuckoo, ever and aye,
Forth then she flew, the gentle Nightingale,
And flew into a Hawthorn by that brook;
Dropp'd loud at once, Oppression shriek'd, and flew.
So through the darkness and the cold we flew,
With whip and spur we through the chantry flew
To hear such music. Through the walls we flew
Thus while the days flew by, and years passed on,
Flew open, and a pair of lusty Boys
And whispered as it flew,
Flexible. Into this flexible yet faithful Chain; Flexile. Whose flexile houghs low hanging with a weight
Flies. Shy as the jealous chamois, Freedom flies,
The happy husband flies, his arms to throw

Flight. In many a whistling circle wheels her flight ;
 Unhurt pursues his leoparded flight, while all
 Force halt upon the wave their cumbrous flight.
 A viewless flight of laughing Demon's mock Forced hard against the wind a thick unwieldy flight.
 Stay near me—do not take thy flight !
 Which the goat cannot climb, takes his sounding
 flight ;
 Nor leave untold our happy flight in that adventurous dream.
 And blasts of heaven will aid their flight ;
 Perpetual flight, uncheck'd by earthly ties,
 Some memory that had taken flight ;
 Hither his flight he would bend ;
 Sunward now his flight he raises ;
 And higher still—a greedy free to roam,
 And higher still—a greedy free to roam,
 Is touch'd—and all the band take flight.
 His fears, his doubts, may now take flight—
 His flight, 'mid eddying pine-tree tops !

 O'er Limbo lake with airy flight to steer,
 With such invisible motion speed thy flight,
 Brave Schill ! by death delivered, take thy flight
 Charged, and dispersed like foam : but as a flight
 The unwearied arrow hath pursued its flight !
 Mounts on rapt wing, and with a moment's flight
 Death-parted friends, and days too swift in flight,
 And stirring interests shunned with desperate flight,
 Then Merlin ! for a rapid flight . . .
 Startling the flight of timid Yesterday !

 Or loquely tapers when from far they fling . . .
 To this plain truth, or fling it to the wind ;
 How, from his lofty throne, the sun can fling . . .
Flinging. Flinging round van and rear his ghastly
 net,
 Livelier, and flinging out less guarded words . . .
Flings. The swan uplifts his chest, and backward flings . . .
 Across the gloomy valley flings her light,
 Flings o'er the wilderness a stream of fire :
 Upon his back and body flings . . .
 Flings o'er the fen that ponderous knell—
 Thy very name, O Lady ! flings,
 That Time, unwrinkled grandsire, flings . . .
 That flings itself on wild relief . . .
 He swells his lifted chest, and backward flings . . .
 Above the gloomy valley flings her light,
 Flings o'er the desert blood-red stream of fire . . .
Fling't. To fling't away from you, you make no use.
Flint. I struck my flint, and built up a small fire
Flinty. As with one voice ; their flinty heart grew soft

 Now, where those harvest-Damsels float
 And float in useful company !
 Of elevation ; let their odours float
 Float on the breeze—the heavenliest of all sounds
 But all might see it float, obedient to the wind ;
 Dissevered, float upon the Lake,
 Float with its crest of trees adorned . . .
 Of present sunshine.—Deities that float

Floating—continued.

With floating dreams, black and disconsolate,
Hence a dread arm of floating power, a voice
And multitudes of little floating clouds.

Flock. See Mountain-flock.

Raised by you travelling flock, a dusty cloud
Till to his flock the early shepherd goes,
His flock, along the woodland's edge with relics sprinkled o'er

Flocks—continued.

On height or bottom did they see, in flocks
Doth practice give) that neither in the flocks
And mountains not less green, and flocks, and herds,
Flooden-field. Rode full of years to Flooden-field,
Flogging. Sound flogging and fighting

Flood—continued.

And now, its task performed, the flood stands still
Of number name, whose souls do like the flood
Through him her course along the Austral flood . . .
And was borne headlong by the roaring flood . . .
But most of all the Birds that haunt the flood Flooded. Thy flooded cheek to wet them with its tears ;
Flood-gate. Fierce as a flood-gate hursting at midnight
Floods. Blue pomp of lakes, high cliffs and falling floods,
Steal, and compose the oar-forgotten floods ;
All day the floods a deepening murmur pour :
Like sounds of winds and floods ;
That on those lonesome floods,
The rain came heavily and fell in floods ;
Or calented in depth of limpid floods ;
He comes, escaped from fields and floods ;—
Such power possess the family of floods
Mountains, and Vales, and Floods, I call on you
Lands deluged by unbridled floods ;
That Mountain floods should thunder as before,
Return, and to her murmuring floods,
Through courts, through camps, o'er liminary floods ;
The floods are roused, and will not soon be weary ;
—Breaking th' ascending roar of desert floods,
By floods, that, thundering from their dizzy height,
All day the floods a deeper murmur pour,
From these majestic floods, you shining cliffs,
When British floods were worshipped, some faint
trace
Floor. See Dungeon-floor, Palace-floor, Parlour-floor.
Green water-rushes overspread the floor ;
While they are drawing toward the sacred floor
In a dry nook where fern the floor bestrows
While his horse pawed the floor with furious heat ;
The floor as he lay shuddering on his bed ;
And lifted from the grassy floor, stilling his faint
alarms,
Past softly, leading in the Boy ; and while from roof to floor,
From floor to roof, all round his eyes the Child with
wonder cast,
The notes are from the floor or ceiling ;
Of refuge, with an unincumbered floor.
From year to year the spacious floor
Along the floor, beneath the shade
Fire raged : and, when the spangled floor
That he was lame) across the floor—
Upon whose grassless floor of red-brown hue,
Speak, and the floor thou tread'st on will rejoice.
And fiercely swept the marble floor,
Than his who breathes, by turf, and floor, and wall,
To the paternal floor ; or turn aside,
To slumber, reclined on the moss-covered floor,
In Pisa's Campo Santo, the smooth floor
Mural or level with the trodden floor,
To slumber, reclined on the moss-covered floor !
And through the chink in the fractured floor
To kneeling Worshipers no earthly floor
Of art mosaic, in a roofless floor,
As if green summer grass were the floor of my room,
Or, bound by oaths, come forth to tread earth's floor
Behold with wonder ; whether floor or path
Breathes out from floor or couch, through pallid lips
The household floor to tread.
With chips is the carpenter strewing his floor ?
Fresh water rushes strew the verdant floor ;
So to th' untrodden floor, where round him looks
From the hard floor reverberated, then
The floor was neither dry nor neat, the hearth
Whose skill had thronged the floor with a proud show
Had we about us ! scattered was the floor,
With ostentatious zeal.—Along the floor
Of rudely-painted Cherubim. The floor
Thronging the walls ; and on the floor beneath
That from the floor of his paternal home
—Just as the Child could totter on the floor,
That from the humblest floor ascends to heaven,
Engaged, near blazing hearth on clean swept floor,
Floored. And, at his birth-place, built a chapel floored
In the slope-channel floored with pebbles bright,
With emerald floored, and with purple shell
Floors. To night, the deserted floors are worn
Grew on the floors his sons had trod :
And floors encumbered with rich show
Or quit with zealous step their knee-worn floors
Devoutly stretched upon their chancel floors.
Hearths loved in childhood, and ancestral floors ;
Painted on rich men's floors, for ooe feast-night.
Though fettered slave be none, her floors and soil
The floors of those dim cloisters, till that hour,
If Angels traversed their cerulean floors,
Flora. Maternal Flora ! show thy face,
Blithe Flora from her couch upstarts,
Florence. The beauty of Florence, the grandeur of Rome

Florence—continued.

The dome of Florence, pensive and alone, . . .
Floird. But tintured daintly with florid hues, . . .
Floirzel. Or there where Perdita and Florizel . . .
Flounder. Are doomed to flounder on, like wounded whales . . .
Flour. All white with flour, the dole of village dames,
Flourish. Both roses flourish, red and white :
Pelion and Ossa flourish side by side,
How might he flourish in his pride,
How canst thou flourish at this blighting hour ?
Sheltered, and flourish in a little grove
Thy hourly caused to flourish deathless flowers,
All generous feelings flourish and rejoice ;
No longer flourish, he entirely gone,
Flourished. Then the milk-thistle flourished through the land,
Who stood and flourished face to face . . .
And with their swords flourished as if to fight
Flourishing. Flourishing in fair estate.
With flourishing trumpet, came in full-blown state
One might be likened : flourishing appeared,
Of ivy, flourishing and thick, that clasped
Did plant the grove, now flourishing, while they Flout. Towers where red streamers flout the breezy sky
Flow. Till all our minds for ever flow
In her full lap, he sees such sweet tears flow
Thy hours as they flow on are spent, if not in joy in peace.
Whose only business was to flow ;
And flow it did ; not taking heed
He makes my tears to flow.
The Mother mourned, nor ceased her tears to flow,
The stream will not flow, and the hill will not rise,
Descending with a graceful flow,
Whence oft invigorating transports flow
Flow from your visionary skill,
Or, where tears flow not, sigh succeeding sigh,
The tear will start, and let it flow ;
Perhaps the plaintive numbers flow
For whose dire ends tears flow, and blood is spilt,
Our aged Sovereign sits, to the ebb and flow
Into whose hosom earth's best treasures flow,
The strain should flow—free Fancy to enthral,
Or whence could virtue flow ?
Where life and rapture flow in plenitude sublime.
For kindnesses that never ceased to flow,
To the Fountain whence Time and Eternity flow.
Pure flow the verse, pure, vigorous, free, and bright,
Flow on for ever, Yarrow Stream !
Their arts, their customs, ebb and flow ;
Of Streams to Nature's love, where'er they flow ;
For us the stream of fiction ceased to flow,
And how the current was to flow ;
Which way the tide is doomed to flow.
The precious Current they had taught to flow ?
Flow to the poor, and freedom to the slave ;
" And shall," the Pontiff asks, " profaneness flow
Not to the golden mean, and quiet flow
Deep in the thankful heart ;—yet tears will flow.
Hopes, fears, in never-ending ebb and flow ;—
By its soft music whence the waters flow :
Such as will promptly flow from every breast,
And flow as now it flows.
Love ebb and flow untroubled by caprice ;
Will flow, and on a welcome page appear . . .
See studied kindness flow with easy stream,
Good, only good, can flow."
And live as long as its pure stream shall flow.
Such ebb and flow must ever be,
And murder causes some sad tears to flow,
Aught of these bowers and whence their pleasures flow ;
Teach from the heart the tender tear to flow ;
She wept.—Life's purple tide begau to flow
Of happiness, my blood appeared to flow . . .
To see the river flow with ampler range
May flow in lasting current. Like a breeze
Of a too busy world ! Before me flow,
And comprehensiveness and memory flow,
To flow, when purposes are lightly changed ?
With roaring sound, that ceases not to flow,
That, like the fabled Lethæ, wished to flow
Of ebb and flow, and ever-during power ;
By calculations sage, the ebb and flow
The practice flows,—if thence, or from a deep
From whom all gifts descend, all blessings flow !"
Is flowing, and will never cease to flow,
Of cities, mid the same eternal flow
Flowed. Then Summer lingered long ; and honey
flowed
And tears which flowed for ills which patience might not heal.
Alas the dream, to thee, poor Boy ! to thee from
whom it flowed,
The Swale flowed under the grey rocks,
But he flowed quiet and unseen :—
As if from a fountain flowed—
And the fresh meads—where flowed, from every nook . . .

Flowed—continued.

Tears flowed in torrents from her eyes ;
 Hath flowed, " with pomp of waters, unwithstood,"
 Blood flowed before thy sight without remorse ;
 Paid simple tribute, such as might have flowed ;
 For busy thoughts the Stream flowed on
 Our thoughts have issued, and our feelings flowed,
 Had tinged more deeply, as it flowed,
 A flood of tears that flowed apace . . .
 As to the one sole fount whence wisdom flowed,
 The crown of thorns ; whose life-blood flowed, the
 price
 O wretched Land ! whose tears have flowed like fountains ;
 Flowed in thy line through undegenerate veins .
 From Wisdom's heavenly Father. Hence hath flowed
 As if their lustre flowed from ether's purest blue.

That haply flowed from me, by fits of silence .
 Flowed from his life what still they hold . . .
 Flowed in a course of sympathy divine ;—
 Those simple lines flowed with an earnest wish,
 And with rock-honey flow'd the happy land.
 That flowed along my dreams ? For this, didst
 thou,
 Have since flowed in between us, and, our minds
 Flowed in upon me, from all sides ; fresh day
 That flowed into a kindred stream ; a gale,
 That flowed awhile with unabating strength,
 Of a high eastern hill—thus flowed my thoughts
 Flowed in the bent of Nature. Having now
 And whence they flowed ; and from them he acquired .

Have flowed as if my body were not such . . .
 There flowed no Gallic blood, nor had I breathed
 Among steep hills and woods embosomed, flowed
 And know we not that from the blind have flowed
 And answer flower, the fetters of reserve .

Flower. See Cuckoo-flower, Garden-flower, Ground-flower, Lily-flower, Meadow-flower, Sea-flower, Strawberry-flower, Wild-flower.

Or like the beauty in a flower installed,
 One flower of hope—oh, pass and leave it there !
 Restore him, Heaven ! The desperate Wretch !—
 A Flower,
 Look at it—the flower is small, . . .
 And for that promise spare the flower !
 In their stead each opening flower . . .

Of old tradition, one particular flower . . .
 While I this flower transplant
 Self-poised upon that yellow flower ;
 Among the distant mountains, flower and weed,
 When he came back to us, a withered flower,—
 Perishing yet more swiftly than the flower,
 From twig or bud an humbler flower, even for your sake !"

Flower of an uchristian sod ! . . .
 To note in shrub and tree, in stone and flower,
 To pluck, some flower or water-weed, too fair
 Though of both leaf and flower bereft . . .
 Then, cheerful Flower ! my spirit's play . . .
 Bright Flower ! for by that name at last,
 There's a flower that shall be mine,
 Little Flower—I'll make a stir,
 Thou, a flower of wiser wits,
 Who will love my little Flower . . .
 From flower to flower let him fly ;
 This precious Flower, true love's last token .
 A simple flower deceives . . .
 When withered is the guardian Flower,
 Though the red Flower, nor prostrate, only droops,
 A flower how rich in sadness ! Even thus stoops,
 The dying Gladiator. So, sad Flower !
 His own dejection, downcast Flower ! could share

This Flower, that first appeared as summer's guest,
 This unparting Flower in crimson dyed,
 Then Nature said, " A lovelier flower . . .
 As with the breath of one sweet flower,—
 The red rose is a glad some flower . . .
 Who is the flower of Lancaster !
 FLOWER OF THE WINGS, beneath her bosom worn—
 Of vision ?—o'er this tempting flower . . .
 Sits blooming like a flower . . .
 Of outward change, there blooms a deathless flower,
 'Tis hers to pluck the amarantine flower . . .
 Gathering green weeds to mix with poppy flower,
 The flower of sweetest smell is shy and lowly .
 Lone Flower, hemmed in with snows, and white as they
 Of bud, leaf, blade, and flower—was fashioning
 With shady night. Soft airs, from shrub and flower,
 Forgets her nature, opening like a flower
 By morning shed around a flower half-blown ;
 Because the lovely little flower is free
 Fresh as the flower, whose modest worth
 Or tree, or butterfly, or flower,
 Where was it that the famous Flower . . .
 Perish without reprieve for flower or tree !

Flower—continued.

Passive yet pleased. What ! with this Broom in flower
 And pleasant course ; flower after flower has blown,
 Was carved—a Goddess with a Lily flower,
 By the fierce waves, a flower in marble graven.
 Than if the Goddess of the flower had spoken :
 So, for the favoured One, the Flower may bloom
 The Flower, the Form within it,
 The envied flower beholding, as it lies . . .
 Of some sweet Babe—Flower stolen, and coarse
 Weed left

Tree, flower, and green herb, feeding without blame.
 May this bright flower of Charity display
 Flower than the loveliest of the vernal prime . . .
 And where no flower hath leave to dwell . . .
 Of man, our youngest, fairest flower ! . . .
 For him, the sweet half-opened Flower ! . . .
 Herself most like a stately flower,
 What flower in meadow-ground or garden grows
 Whose virtue changes to a christian Flower
 On drooping eyelid and the closing flower ;
 Myriads of daisies have shone forth in flower . . .
 And 'tis my faith that every flower
 Bright Flower ! whose home is everywhere,
 Given to no other flower I see
 From flower to flower supported ; but to curb
 The lowliest flower possesses in its place ; . . .
 Nor add to it a flower ! . . .
 Till they were plucked together ; a blue flower
 With thy memorial flower, meek Portraiture !
 To rival summer's brightest scarlet flower ;
 Your star, your gem, your flower ; . . .
 There is a Flower, the lesser Celandine,
 But lately, one rough day, this Flower I passed
 O flower of all that springs from gentle blood,
 Sweet Flower ! belike one day to have
 And Thou, sweet Flower, shalt sleep and wake
 That meets me in this unknown Flower,
 Meek Flower ! To Him I would have said,
 Of splendour in the grass, of glory in the flower ;
 To me the meanest flower that blows can give
 Within our hearts, the love whose flower hath blown
 Whose flower with us will vanish, must survive .
 The Flower has drooped, the Isle's delight ;
 Flower and bud together fall ;
 Of Wallace to be found, like a wild flower,
 Is there a flower, to which he points with hand
 Hath beautified that flower ; already shades
 To every natural form, rock, fruit, or flower,
 A flower till it have yielded up its sweets . . .
 Deals with a flower ; the keepers of our time,
 Tranquil almost, and careless as a flower
 Had failed, and every leaf and flower were lost
 When on its sunny bank the primrose flower . . .
 A blooming Lady—a conspicuous flower,
 What joy more lasting than a vernal flower ?—
 The little flower her vanity shall check ;
 And not a flower, that droops in the green shade,
 And the flower drooped ; as every eye could see,
 Not one of all the band, a full-blown flower . . .
 Of fruit or flower, permission asked or not,
 Where, in assemblage with the flower and choice
 Profusion bright ! and every flower assuming
 In flower and tree, in every pebbly stone . . .
 Changed to a crimson flower ; when he, whose pride
 Imaged in downward show ; the flower, the herbs,
 Edward, the flower of chivalry, survey

Flower-besprent. In the flower-besprent meadows

Flower-enamelled. While, o'er the flower-enamelled
 glade,

Lingering no more 'mid flower-enamelled lands
Floweret. The floweret as it springs,
 With one wild floweret (call it not foxtorn)
 To be an uncultured floweret of the fen,
 That ornaet, unblamed. The floweret, held
 For some rare floweret of the hills, or plant
 Beholds the gulf beneath.—No floweret blooms

Flowerets. When the pretty flowerets die ; . . .

Thaa the sweet flowerets of the fields !
 Sacred to flowerets of the hills,
 Disposed some cultured Flowerets (drawn from spots
 There berries ripen, flowerets bloom ;
 Where, haply, crowned with flowerets and green herbs,
 She, 'mid the humble flowerets of the vale,
Flowering. See Fair-flowering, Late-flowering,

The flowering shrubs that deck our humble door . . .
 " In April here beneath the flowering thorn
 Close by a brake of flowering furze . . .

Flowering—continued.

While, in the flowering myrtle's neighbourhood,
And flowering shrubs, protected and adorned:
Flowerless. Poor Robin is yet flowerless; but how gay

Flower-like. Allowed a soft and flower-like breath, Flower-pot-nursling. Their puniest flower-pot-nurs-ling dars

Flower's. On the flower's breast; as if she felt Flowers. See Daisy-flowers, Ground-flowers, Meadow-flowers, Wild-flowers, Willow-flowers.

No goblets shall, for thee, be crowned with flowers,
And with wild flowers and blooming orchards blend;—

And flowers for posies, oft on Sunday morn
Garlands and flowers, and cakes and merry thoughts,
Of flowers were in their hands, as if designed
Fairest of all flowers, was she once, but now
This grass is tender grass; these flowers they have no peers;

Fresh flowers blow as flowers have blown,
Let not flowers, or boughs fruit-laden,
Was known as well as to the flowers that grow there.
Where flowers and herbs unite, and haply some weeds be,

My trees they are, my Sister's flowers;
Of weeds and flowers, till we return he slow,
Our spirits, carrying with them dreams of flowers,
The mysteries that cups of flowers unfold,
Look at the fate of summer flowers.
Thou one fair shrub, oh! shed thy flowers,

Which he with flowers hath planted, finding there
Her's grass to play with, here are flowers;
Fair ferns and flowers, and chiefly that tall fern,
There close the peaceful lives of flowers?
Of this fair Spot her flowers may bind,
I sheltered you with leaves and flowers;
That I am covered o'er with flowers;
The flowers the wanton Zephyrs choose;
And birds and flowers once more to greet,
While birds, and butterflies, and flowers,
Ill befell the yellow flowers,
All about with full-blown flowers,
Fair Lady! can I sing of flowers;
To other flowers!—to other dells
The budding flowers, peeped forth the nest
Thy hand here sprinkling tiny flowers,
Of sunshine and of flowers,
Among the flowers, and with the flowers I played;
Wreathed round with yellow flowers the gayest of
the land.

Scattering fresh flowers; though happier far, I
ween,
With budding, fading, faded flowers
—Of flowers that with one scarlet gleam
Fair trees and gorgeous flowers;
And, near the fountain, flowers of stature tall
And quit the flowers that summer brings
The paths which we had trod—these fountains,
flowers;

Apart from happy Ghosts, that gather flowers
Each crowned with flowers, and armed with spear
and shield,

He also crowned with flowers of Sicily,
And flowers are on his person thrown
And treading among flowers of joy
That eastern Sultan, amid flowers enrought
That its fair flowers may from his cheek
Choicest flowers that ever breathed,
That flowers themselves, what'er their hue,
The flowers, still faithful to the stems,
I sang—Let myriads of bright flowers,
Sweet flowers—what living eye hath viewed
The Spirits of the new-born flowers?
The spirit-quickener of the flowers,
Of sunshine wilt thou think, and flowers, and song,
And moisten the parched lips of thirsty flowers—
As flowers, stand side by side.
They'll perchance ten thousand thousand flowers.
The very flowers are sacred to the Poor.
And are up-gathered now like sleeping flowers;
Is gently closing with the flowers of spring;
Of bitter change, and bids the flowers beware;
Has filled the laughing vales with welcome flowers.
While I was shaping beds for winter flowers;
Observe the faithful flowers! if small to great
Green herbs, bright flowers, and berry-bearing plants,

Well pleased to skim the plain with wild flowers
deckt,

In whose collegiate shelter England's Flowers
Take from her brow the withering flowers of eve,
Where herbs look up, and opening flowers are seen;
As when their earliest flowers of hope were blown,
The flowers in pearly dew their bloom renewing!
Reclined on flowers and mosses?
Age! twine thy brows with fresh spring flowers,
And in this region flowers delight,
The little trembling flowers that peep
On motley bands of alien flowers

Flowers—continued.

And earth with all her pleasant fruits and flowers
Of herbs and lowly flowers,
Sing ye, with blossoms crowned, and fruits, and
flowers,
Haste, Virgins, haste!—the flowers which summer
gave
Flowers we espy beside the torrent growing;
Flowers that peep forth from many a cleft and chink,
Though plenteous flowers around thee blow,
With vernal flowers. Yet may we not reject
From flowers 'mid GOLDAU's ruins bread;
Of flowers the Virgin without fear may own,
Now that their snows must melt, their herbs and
flowers

Ye, too, wild Flowers! that no one heeds,
Careless of flowers that in perennial flow,
And caught the fragrance which the sundry flowers,
Languish the flowers; the waters seem to waste
Has yet a heart and hand for trees and flowers,
Of valley flowers. Nor, while the limbs repose,
See what gay wild flowers deck this earth-built Cot,
Sheds on the flowers that round her blow
The dewy turf with flowers bestrown;
With lawns and beds of flowers, and shades
The fragrance of the breathing flowers
Sweet pastoral flowers, and laurels that have crowned

'Mid Heaven-born flowers that shall for awe endure,
Those flowers of chivalry, to bind the brow
Had bound the flowers I wore, with faithful tie:
Sweet flowers! at whose inaudible command
But now are silent as the dim-seen flowers:
When Flowers rejoice and Larks with rival speed

Up to the flowers whose golden progeny
Children of Summer! Ye fresh flowers that brave
But ye, bright Flowers, on frieze and architrave
Rightfully borne; for Nature gives thee flowers
And needlework and flowers.
Flowers laugh before thee on their beds
Of sweetly-breathing flowers.
To greet the flowers and fruitage of a land,
Nor unto silent leaves and drowsy flowers,—
Have smiled upon thy flowers.
Would that the little Flowers were born to live,
To drop his pencil! Flowers of every clime
The softest breeze to fairest flowers gives birth:
And flowers they well might seem to passers-by Flowers—or a richer produce (did it suit
Cheerful alike if bare of flowers as now,
For had thy charge been idle flowers,
Flowers are there many that delight to strive
A likening to frail flowers;
What birds she tamed, what flowers the ground
Flowers strewed the ground; the nuptial feast
Choice flowers are gathered! But, if Power may spring

Tall were the flowers, the grove a lofty cover,
There sate I down among the fair fresh flowers,
Of snow and hoar-frost, spreads her fruits and her
flowers,
To your abodes, bright daisy Flowers!
Its green untrodden turf, and blowing flowers;
Fresh flowers; while the sun shines warm,
For him lost flowers their idle sweets exhale;
Had noted well the stars, all flowers that grew
With breathing flowers embraced, and fragrant shade.

Round which the yellow flowers and wandering
foliage twine.

A silver cross enchased with Flowers of France
New pleasure like a bee among the flowers.
That miscellaneous garland of wild flowers
And pleasant flowers. The thirst of living praise,
Culling such flowers of learning as might tempt
See many beautiful sights—wreaths, fishes, flowers,
Unthought of: in their woodland beds the flowers
With music, incense, festival, and flowers!
Her dew is on the flowers. Those were the days
Catching from tufts of grass and harebell flowers
Flowers left to wither on triumphal arcs,

Flowers—continued.

The unendangered myrtle, decked with flowers,
 Bring garlands, bring forth choicest flowers, to deck
 Thy bounty caused to flourish deathless flowers,
 If the flowers wither, I am worse than dead!
 Small creature as she is, from earth's bright flowers,
 His stooping body tottered with wreaths of flowers
 Hopeful and promising with buds and flowers;
 A Visitor—in quest of herbs and flowers;
 A calendar of flowers, plucked as they blow
 And everlasting flowers. These Dalesmen trust
 And flowers that prosper in the shade. And when
 And with the flowers are intermingled stones
 For her own flowers and favourite herbs, a space,
 Their bonnets, I remember, wreathed with flowers,
 Perish the roses and the flowers of kings,
 By beds and banks Arcadian of gay flowers
 Are scattered at the feet of Man—like flowers.
 (Her flowers were shed) the lily of the vale,
 Whom Morn awakens, among dews and flowers
 Is clad with yellow flowers.

Communion without check of herbs and flowers
 Thy living chaplet of fresh flowers and fern,
 And hear the voices of the winds and flowers.
 That is to come, the throng of woodland flowers,
 An amarantine crown of flowers forlorn—

Flowerly. They crush with broad black feet their flowery walk;

O'er lake and stream, mountain and flowery mead,
 And Truth would skim the flowery glade,
 And huppy in his flowery cove:
 The flowery ground is conscious. But no wind
 Through rocky passes, among flowery creeks,
 For not a tinge or flowery streak
 Wide-spread odours from her flowery wreaths.
 Thy waters, Duddon! 'mid these flowery plains;
 The walls are cracked, sunk is the flowery roof,
 That Hill, whose flowery platform seems to rise
 But what if One, through grove or flowery mead,
 That life—the flowery path that winds by stealth—
 Hence, when you mansion and the flowery trim
 Ye crush with broad black feet your flow'ry walk;
 The sandy fields, leaping through flowery groves
 Adorning flowery gardens, 'mid vast squares;
 A sumptuous dream of flowery lawns, with domes
 On Etna's side; and thou, O flowery field,
 Laden from blooming grove or flowery field,
 Placed, among flowery gardens curtained round,
 And, all day long, moisten these flowery fields!
 And, up the flowery lawn as we advance,
 Upon this flowery slope; and see—beyond—
 Rapaciously we gathered flowery spoils
 O happy Thing! among thy flowery creeks,

Flowing. See Fresh-flowing, Swift-flowing.

As thy deep waters now are flowing,
 Follow thou the flowing river
 The other, left behind, is flowing still.
 Is flowing in the breeze.
 The streams with softest sound are flowing,
 The stream is flowing,
 Pure modulations flowing from the heart
 While flowing rivers yield a blameless sport,
 And all that fetched the flowing rhyme
 And sweet is Yarrow flowing!
 Time cannot thin thy flowing hair,
 Flowing of time and place, and paid to both
 Like the crystal stream now flowing
 Born to be lost in Derwent flowing near;
 And, ere the flowing fount be dry,
 Fail to wash out, tears flowing ere thy thro
 To the great current flowing underoath;
 I love beside the flowing lake to stray,
 The softly flowing Leine,
 And, save the flowing water's peaceful voice,
 We glided forward with the flowing stream.
 With flowing cups elate and happy thoughts
 The rapid river flowing without noise,
 He traced an ebbing and a flowing mind,
 Or flowing from the universal face
 By flowing stream, through wood, or craggy wild
 That flowing years repeated not: and distress
 Upon the flowing stream, a thought arose.
 Say rather, all his thoughts now flowing clear,
 From a clear fountain flowing, he looks round
 Is flowing, and will never cease to flow,
 Pure and unsoftened, flowing from the heart

Flown. More of contempt than hatred; both are flown;

Joy will be flown in its mortality;
 My beauty, little child, is flown,
 To me hath often flown,
 It is no Spirit who from heaven hath flown,
 And back he falls, as if his life were flown!
 His sudden fit of joy is flown—
 Is ancient Piety for ever flown?
 When truth, when sense, when liberty were flown,
 Angels she sees—that might from heaven have
 flown,
 When youth had flown did hope still bless

Flown—continued.

Had flown with mine to old Helvellyn's brow,
 The mind, depressed by thought of greatness flown.
 By apter pencil, from the light had flown.
 Without restraint. How swiftly have they flown,
 'Tis flown—the Vision, and the sense
 Perchance had flown, delivered by the storm;
 And virtue, flown, come back;
 But time, irrevocable time, is flown,
 But tells a plain tale of the days that are flown.
 Were flown, and autumn brought its annual show
 At thought of raptures now for ever flown;
 From dangerous passions free. Three years had flown.
 "Those fervent raptures are for ever flown;
 Let grandeur tell thee whither now is flown

Flows. While from his heart the appropriate lesson flows,

The stream that flows out of the lake,
 And a river flows on through the vale of Cheapside.
 Back flows the willing current of my Song:
 More efficaciously than aught that flows
 Along the VALE OF MEDITATION flows;
 Yet why?—a silvery current flows,
 They follow their dear Lord! Time flows—our
 winds,
 Conspicuous yet where Oronoko flows;
 The tear in answer flows;
 In flows the joyous year.
 But He beholds the light, and whence it flows,
 Issuing, however feebly, nowhere flows
 As merciless proscription ebbs and flows.
 Flows on in solitude. But, when the gloom
 Now pointing this way, and now that.—Here flows,
 Whence flows the Latin people, whence have come

Fluctuate. Thy three-striped banner fluctuate on the breeze;

Fluctuating. Nor less to guide the fluctuating youth
 And passions hold a fluctuating seat
 Fluctuation. And the vast hills, in fluctuation fixed
 The fluctuation and decay of things.

Fluctuations. And various fluctuations in the breast;
 Fluent. For way and guide, a fluent receptacle

On fluent operations a fixed shape;
 Flung. Caution must not be flung aside; remember,
 And flung it to the dogs: but I am raised
 She flung her blameless child,
 From out the lowly hedge-rows flung;
 For what one moment flung aside,
 For blue Ether's arms, flung round thee,
 Flung from off the purple pinions
 Or, flung from swinging censers, shrouds
 Flung back, and, in the sky's blue caves, reborn—
 Broke forth in concert flung adown the dells,
 Which, spurning God, had flung away remorse—
 Inviting words—perchance already flung
 Flung from a Convent-tower,
 Fancy hath flung for me an airy bridge
 Their foliage; ashes flung their arms around;
 Flung from yon cliff a shadow large and cold.
 And flung into the brook that travels near;
 Flung back from distant climes a streaming fire,
 Flung from her to the stream.
 With shadows flung from leaves—to strive
 Flung by labouring Nature forth
 In recklessness flung out to overturn
 That from his ardent countenance are flung,
 To industry, by glisteniogs flung on rocks,
 Flung from the setting sun, as they reposed
 A surface dappled o'er with shadows flung
 Flung from the body of devouring fires.

Flurried. By this time is not quite so flurried:
 Flurry. Though Betty's in a mighty flurry.

Flush. —Would I had ne'er renounced it! A slight flush

Flushed. Now flush'd as Hebe, Emulation rose;
 The beautiful girl, whose cheek was flushed with joy.

Flushes. See Joy-flushes.

Flute. Or thrown away; but with a flute
 This flute, made of a hemlock stalk,
 O Friend! thy flute has breathed a harmony
 Whose breath would labour at the flute in vain,
 He marches with his flute, his book, and sword,
 And rowed off gently, while he blew his flute

Flutter. There! where the flutter of his wings
 They try all frolic motions; flutter, pluge,

Fluttered. Fluttered, perched, into a round.
 Fluttered so faint a heart before;
 How fluttered then thy anxious heart for me,
 A Guardian Angel fluttered.

Flutterer. Then peck or perch, fond Flutterer! nor forbear

Fluttering. Fluttering its pinions, almost within reach,
 While fluttering o'er this gay recess,
 While fluttering in the bushes,
 Fluttering and dancing in the breeze.
 To hunt their fluttering game o'er rock and level
 green.

Fluttering—continued.

An eager Novice robed in fluttering gown !
Of trouble—but the fluttering breeze ;
Ah ! if their fluttering hearts should stir too much,
Safe from the wintry tempest. Fluttering,
By fluttering pinions here and busy bill ;
With new-fledged hope still fluttering in his breast :—
The fluttering breezes, fountains that run on
The fluttering nerves composed ; the beating heart
Of fluttering Sylphs, and softly-gliding Fays,
Flutterings. Her wingless flutterings,
Flutters. Whose heart still flutters, though his wings
forbear
That flutters on the bough, lighter than he ;
Fly. See May-fly.
And, hovering, round it often did a raven fly.
Of kitten, bird, or summer fly ;
For Allonville, o'er down and dale, away then did
we fly ;
As doth a fly upon a summer brook ;
If to a rock from rains he fly,
Up to these would I fly, to right—
Away they fly to left, to right—
From flower to flower let him fly,
And fly about in the air together !
—Fly also, Muse ! and from the dell
Give her wings that she may fly,
Open, ye thicket ! let her fly
A Fly, that up and down himself doth shove
Yes, there was One,—for One, asunder fly
Fly, some kind Harbinger, to Grasmere-dale !
Fly upon swiftest wing round field and height,
—Fly, wretched Gauls ! ere they the charge renew
—Fly, ministers of Fame,
Close at my side ! She bids me fly to greet
Ye, too, must fly before a chasing hand,
There, should vain thoughts outspread their wings
and fly
That he might fly, where no one could pursue,
Fly where the culprit may, guilt meets a doom ;
See that Fly,—a disconsolate creature ! perhaps
But when the clouds asunder fly
—Off they fly in earnest chase ;
Or, from long stress of real injuries fly
Yet on presumptuous wing as far would fly
From heaviness, off fly, dear Friend, to thee ;
A fly may settle, or a blossom fall.
And he for dread did fly away full fast ;
Small as a bird the chamois-chaser fly
Science with joy saw Superstition fly
Soon fades her cheek, her blushing beauties fly,
The minutes fly—till, at the queen's command,
To fly, for safeguard, to some foreign shore,
Fly to those harbours, driven by hound and horn
Alas ! such wisdom bids a creature fly
To fly—but whither ! And this gracious Church, Flying. Flying till vision can no more pursue !
—Alas ! in every clime a flying ray
O wind, that o'er my head art flying
And so, flag flying at mast head,
Nor what ye are flying, nor what ye pursue !
And drive the flying deer !
And drive the flying deer.
Flying from something that he dreads than one
There's something in a flying horse,
To the flying moments, and is seen no more.
Doomed, with their impious Lord, the flying Hart
And birds, high flying in the element,
But, flying through the heights around,
Or, free as air, with flying inquest viewed
(And flying shall behold again)
Upwhirled, and flying o'er the ethereal plain
Friends strike at friends—the flying shall pursue—
And by a train of flying clouds bemocked ;
With flying haste, I might have sent,
Before a flying season's rash pretence
And mists that spread the flying shroud ;
And flying fleet behind his orb to view
Through bursts of sunshine and through flying
showers,
Of active days urged on by flying hours,—
Flying, found shelter in the Fortunate Isles,
That fled, and, flying still before me, gleamed
And unaimed prattle flying up and down ;
Flying or seeking, could yet bring with him
Of flying sunbeams, or to the outward form
Flying, and rainy vapours, call out shapes
One voice—the solitary raven, flying
Could have transferred him to the flying clouds,
Foam. See Torrent-foam.
Save where, with sparkling foam, a small cascade
You could not hear, for the foam beat the rocks
Which with their foam could cover it at will.
And, while the broad blue wave and sparkling
foam
That, all bespattered with his foam,
For ever ; and I saw the sparkling foam,
And white with foam as if with cleaving sleet,*
His force on Caspian foam to try ;

Foam—continued.

Bespattered with the salt sea foam ;
Yon eddying balls of foam, these arrowy gleams
Charged, and dispersed like foam : hut as a flight
Dashed their white foam against the palace walls
Robed instantly in garb of snow-white foam ;
(A spotless Youngling white as foam)
As Menai's foam ; and toward the mystic ring
Purer than foam on central ocean lost ;
Where bubbles burst, and folly's dancing foam
Or, tossed about along a waste of foam,
Yet, like to eddying balls of foam
Illumes with sparkling foam the twilight shade.
A napkin, white as foam of that rough brook
And, on its glassy surface, specks of foam,
Foam-balls. To mark its eddying foam-balls prettily distress.
Foamed. And met a man who foamed with anger vehement.
Foaming. One I beheld who, 'cross the foaming
foam,
Hath checked his foaming courser :—can it be !
Within the vortex of a foaming flood,
What tankards foaming from the tap !
Is lifted of a foaming surge—
Yon foaming flood seems motionless as ice ;
And hollow vale which foaming torrents fill
That curbs a foaming brook, a Graveyard lies ;
Along its foaming bed.
Of foaming torrents.—From thy orisons
Foam-llt. O'er-walk the chasmy torrent's foam-lit
foam.
Foamy. In foamy breaks the rill, with merry song,
In foamy agitation ;
Gurgling in foamy water-break,
Fodder. The fodder of his herds in winter snows, Foed. Deadly foe both of mouse and rat ;
" But should suspense permit the Foe to cry,
Am pleased by fits to have thee for my foe.
What boots the enquiry ?—Neither friend nor foe
Against the threatening foe your trustiest shields."
Of battle and the routed foe
The last that dare to struggle with the Foe.
Its even tenor, and the foe was quelled,
None bleed, and none lie prostrate but the foe ;
The friend shrinks back—the foe recoils
The foe from numbers courage drew,
As bravely as the foe was keenly sought.
" The Serpent, Satan, our first foe, that hath
Her stormy foe at last
Whether affliction be the foe, or guilt !
Of their most dreaded foe, the strong South-west
How my eyes watched the foe,
Foeman's. Where now ?—Their sword is at the Foe-man's heart !
Foes. With few in arms, innumerable foes,
—But foes are gathering—Liberty must raise
Else can ye hope but with such numerous foes
Nor shall thy foes deny
By friends deceived, by foes betrayed,
Foes might hang upon their path, snakes rustle
near,
What though some busy foes to good,
Nor craved he more to quell his foes,
And her Foes find a like inglorious grave.
Threatened her foes,—or, pompously at rest,
A Foe's most favourite purpose to fulfil :
Yet, yet, Biscayans ! we must meet our Foes
Shrink not, though far outnumbered by their Foes,
Hath plucked such foes, like weeds, from out the land ;
In open field their gathering foes,
Which struck with terror friends and foes !
How they have scourged old foes, perfidious
friends :
Then chiefly dear, when foes are planted round,
Conquer the Gallic lily which thy foes
Prejudged by foes determined not to spare,
Fanned by the breath of foes.
Their veteran foes mock as an idle noisier ;
With foreign foes mustered for instant war.
Meets foes irreconcilable, and at best
And thus, on every side beset with foes,
Life from the young Republic ; that new foes
In all ; in most with superadded foes,
To be perpetually attacked by foes
Of aspirations that have been, of foes
Fog. In size a giant, stalking through thick fog,
Wan, dull, and glaring, with a dripping fog
Foggy. A foggy day in winter time)
Fogs. Where close fogs hide their parent brook ;
Foll. Or a fierce impress issues with its foll
A foil to his ostial cheek !
And thus they foil their enemy's despitte.
With a bad word, and foil the Tempter's arts.
Foil to a Jewel rich in light
Or tenderness, which there, set off by foil
That task would foil ; " then, letting fall his voice

Foll—continued.

Of sober cypress, and the darker foil
Folled. Let us begone—the Band may else be folled.
 Who folled an Emperor's eager quest?
 In search of precious ore; they tried, were folled—
Folks. A treachery that foils it or defeats;
Fold. See Sheep-fold, Thousand-fold, Two-fold.
 Their frozen arms her neck no more can fold;
 Pleas'd, as she moves, her pomp of clouds to fold
 And arms to fold her to my heart. Submissively
 Our hearth shall be thy bed, our house shall be thy fold.
 Did he repair, to build the Fold of which
 Thick as sheep in shepherd's fold!
 Who quit their fold with dance and shout,
 Nations, and Death has gathered to his fold
 That thickens, spreads, and, mingling fold with fold,
 In the true filial bosom's inmost fold.
 For thou art worse than mad a thousand fold;
 Low bending o'er the colour'd water, fold
 As the last beating of the fold expires,
 Rejoic'd her solemn pomp of clouds to fold
 Slow-travelling down the western hills, to fold
 Time, in his mantle's sunniest fold
 The fold protecting, I myself, mature
 Gathered together in their peaceful fold?
 Thy mother to the fold must go
Folded. Back turned, arms folded, the unapparent
 face
 Had sunk to rest with folded wings:
 A folded paper, lying as if placed Folding. Heard by calm lakes, as peeps the folding star,
Folds. Whose impious folds enwrapped even thee;
 and tritious
 Folds up his wings?
 And folds thy pinions up in blest repose.
 The precious folds—"behold," said he,
 In grisly folds and strictures serpentine;
 Within the folds of no ungentle breast.
 In fleecy folds voluminous, enwrapped,
 Could be inspected to its inmost folds.
 Their snow-white curtains hung in decent folds;
Foliage. There doth the twinkling aspen's foliage
 sleep,
 And ripening foliage shone with richer gold.
 The deepest grove whose foliage hid
 But 'twas the foliage of the rocks—the birch,
 A sea of foliage, tossing with the gale,
 Their foliage; ashes flung their arms around;
 Of close-clipt foliage green and tall,
 Of pine-tree foliage poised in air, forth darts,
 The oak its dark'ning boughs and foliage twines,
 Round which the yellow flowers and wandering
 foliage twine.
 Rocks, dens, and groves of foliage taught to melt
 Laden with summer's thickest foliage, rock
 Blending their diverse foliage with the green
 Of sombre foliage, seem to imitate
Foliated. The foliated head in cloud-like majesty,
Folio. Of red Morocco folio saw displayed, Folios. Journeyed with ponderous folios in their hands;
Folk. See Gipsy-folk.
 Which old folk, fondly pleased to trim
 And, for the honest folk within,
 "Let Yarrow folk, yras Selkirik town,
 The cluster round the porch, and the folk
 'Mong Christian folk, a street where Jews might be,
 O cursed folk! away, ye Herods new!
 "The Christian folk that through the Jewry went Weak sinful folk, that God, with pitying eye,
 He can make sick folk whole and fresh and sound;
 For lovers, of all folk that be alive,
 For Love in young folk is but rage, I wis;
 And Love in old folk a great dotage is."
Folks. A dog that does not know me.—These good Folks,
 Holla! to bed, good Folks, within! O save us!
 For folks that wander up and down like you,
 He's not so wise as some folks be."
Follies. And after youthful follies ran,
 To the broad follies of the licensed world,
 There could I meditate on follies past;
Follow. I will stroll on; you follow when 'tis done.
 Off as they dare to follow on your steps.
 Follow me to the Hostel. Marmaduke,
 I may not, cannot follow thee. You must.
 Has overwhelped him,—I must follow. Lady!
 It seemed to follow with the chaise,
 Follow thou the flowing river
 Leapt from this steep bank to follow
 My friends, I did not follow you!
 I'll follow you across the snow;
 The Tale I follow to its last recess
 Both what to follow, what to shun,
 Follow each other to their hiding-place
 The youthful Rovers follow.
 Go, and I'll follow speedily!
 Pleas'd some favourite chief to follow

Follow—continued.

Follow, and up the weary mountain strain.
 "But if thou goest, I follow—" "Peace!" he said,—
 That strenuous action follow both,
 The very leaves they follow me—
 She soared—and I awoke, struggling in vain to follow,
 Begin to follow to and fro
 They follow the blind Boy,
 They follow, more and more afraid,
 No eye can follow, to a fatal place
 A loyal band to follow their liege Lord
 To follow in his track of silver light,
 They follow their dear Lord! Time flows—nor
 winds,
 Follow this wondrous Potentate. Be true,
 Herself will follow to the war,
 And others follow;—Sire and Son
 But chastisement shall follow peace despised.
 Far as it dares to follow. Herbs self-sown
 Follow the fortunes which they may not share.
 Music has no heart to follow.
 Whom they must follow; on whose head must fall,
 To follow truth, is eloquent as they.
 And he was strong to follow in the steps
 And follow Nature to her secret springs
 To follow, and if thou, my honoured friend!
 Words follow words, sense seems to follow sense:
 Might yield to follow him through what he does
 Would only follow, in the path of shame,
 Who doth not love to follow with his eye
 Be mine to follow with no timid step
 That I should follow with my babes, and sink
 That ought to follow faithfully expressed?
 To follow reason's least ambitious course;
 —Once more look forth, and follow with your sight
 Say, what can follow for a rational soul
 Alert to follow as the Pastor led,
 I did not strive to follow you.
 Ah, if I wished to follow where the sight
 With Hope, who would not follow where she leads?
 The almanack he'll follow must be new.
Followed. The milk-maid followed with her brimming pail,
 And followed on, through woods of gloomy cedar,
 I followed on from brake to bush;
 They followed from the snowy bank
 And followed as he led.
 "Poorly provided, poorly followed,"
 I followed him, and said, "My friend,
 Their steps he followed to the Maid's retreat.
 Sing at thy Mother's breast. Month followed month,
 That followed him till he was out of sight.
 Breathless questions followed fast,
 Sharp season followed of continual storm
 Year followed year, my Brother! and we two,
 Ever followed by a kiss;
 Followed by multitudes of stars, that, small
 The taller followed with his hat in hand,
 And while both followed up and down,
 But each in solemn order followed each,
 Have followed; for such loss, I would believe,
 And followed Peter Bell.
 And, when she followed Peter Bell,
 That must have followed when his brow
 Shame followed shame, and woe supplanted woe—
 Hath followed whereso'er a way was made
 A sunbeam followed by a shade!
 Years followed years, and when, upon the eve
 That followed the first sound of German speech,
 All followed him, a gallant band!
 And horse and harness followed—see
 Unarm'd and followed to the field;
 Received and followed by a prayer,
 The White Doe followed up the vale,
 The Host that followed Urien as he strode
 Then followed the Waldensian bands, whom Hate
 He touched; what followed who shall tell?
 Then followed Printing with enlarged command
 Resplendent Wanderer! followed with glad eyes
 The Hunter followed fast
 Though question followed question, dear
 And full of hope day followed day
 How fast has brother followed brother,
 Soon follow'd by his hollow-parting oar,
 Followed by drowsy crow of midnight cock.
 Shame follow'd after with reverted eye,
 Followed as of good omen, and meek 'Worth
 Followed each other till a dreary moor
 Reckless of me: I followed, not unseem,
 We had been followed, hourly watched, and noosed,
 Then followed. Oh! it is a pang that calls
 Followed that pair of golden days that shed
 Or social, and still followed by a train
 Followed his body to the grave. The event,
 Its natal murmur; followed it to light
 He followed till provision for his wants
 The Mother followed!—miserably bare

Food. Fresh food; for only then, when memory
 Food for his beasts in time of winter snows.
 To greet the traveller needing food and rest;
 And with the food of pride sustained his soul.
 Bears not to those he loves their needful food.
 And near a thousand tables pinned and wanted food.
 And gave me food—and rest, more welcome, more
 desired.
 He'd not have robbed the raven of its food.
 Supplied my helplessness with food and raiment,
 She eats her food which every day the peasants
 And brought me food. Have I not cause to love her?
 The scrip that held his food, and I forgot
 No food was there, no drink, no grass, no shade,
 I had been nourished by the sickly food
 No human dwelling ever give me food,
 In search of their own food;
 And wanted neither food, nor clothes, nor love:
 And such chance food as outlaws can obtain,
 For clothes, for warmth, for food, and fire;
 And he has stolen away my food.
 And they were healthy with their food;
 Did she extract the food of self-reproach,
 The Babe was drawing in his quiet food.
 I know the earth-nuts fit for food:
 For human nature's daily food;
 Might well be dangerous food
 If she is prest by want of food,
 That in this moment there is life and food
 And Thou, thy favourite food to win,
 Disparaging Man's gifts, and proper food.
 Of that Man's mind—what can it be? what food
 Thy heart from its emasculating food;
 Such food a Tyrant's appetite demands;
 The wind with terror while they roar for food.
 And food cut off by sacerdotal ire,
 Brings to thy food, mysterious Sacrament!
 Wanting accustomed food, must pass from earth,
 Food, shelter, safety, there they find;
 He sat, and ate his food in solitude:
 For scanty food the treacherous cliffs to dare.
 To pay the filial debt, for food to roam,
 Food for the hungry ears of little ones,
 She scratches, ransacks up the earth for food,
 As innocent instincts, and as innocent food;
 And they must have their food. Our childhood sits,

Food—continued.

Although of food and clothing destitute, . . . 677 Prelude 6. 147
 These were our food; and such a summer's night
 And, when she at her table gave me food,
 Built up of life, and food, and means of life!
 Food not unwholesome; earth and air correct
 Ill-sheltered, and oft wanting fire and food;
 "Through four months' space the Infant drew its food
 To rear for food, for shelter, and delight;
 Its most apparent home. The food of hope
 Their summons, and are gathering round for food,
 We to the patient creatures carried food
 Food for sick passion in a minion's cheek, Foodful. That common growth of earth, the foodful ear;
 Dena'd the bread of life the foodful ear,
 Their town, and foodful region for support
Fool. The little fool is loth to stay behind.
 Three good round years, for playing the fool here
 Worthy the hearing, Fool was I to dream
 Now I could laugh till my ribs ached. Oh, Fool!
 And say no name was mine—and so, poor fool,
 A Fool and Coward bleated to my wish!
 Write fool upon his forehead.—Planted thus
 And I have lived to be a fool at last
 Will flatter you,—and fool and rake
 Has seduced the poor fool from his winter retreat,
 Ah, fool I quoth she, wist thou not what it is?
 What fool, besotted as we are by names,
 To see an English lord enact a fool
Foofled. Deny me your support. We have been foofled—
Foolish. The cold blast struck me. 'Twas a foolish question.
 It is all over then;—your foolish fears
 "Nor dare to thrust thy foolish self
 Wise, foolish, weak, or strong.
 Which foolish birds are caught with. Can, I ask,
 A foolish strife; they see
 Foolish men he can make them out of wise;—
 For thou hast many a foolish and quaint cry:—
 With all its foolish pomp. The gardea lay
 That foolish men opposed them. To a strain
 There let it lie—how foolish are such thoughts!
Foolishly. He tamed, who foolishly aspires;
Foolishness. True symbol of hope's foolishness, whose strong
 But foolishness and madness in parade,
Fools.—These fools of feeling are mere herds of winter
 To occupy—both fools, or wise alike,
 It is the toy of fools, and little fit
 Nor aught that troubles us, the fools of Nature.
Foot. More pleased, my foot the hidden margin roves
 Winds neither road nor path for foot to tread:
 I used to sing it.—Listen!—what foot is there?
 There again! 'Tis my husband's foot. Good
 Eldred
 Now there's a grave—your foot is half upon it.—
 He had the lightest foot in Ennerdale:
 That venturesome foot could reach, to one or both
 They found him at the foot of that same rock
 Equipped from head to foot in iron mail.

- Forbade the weeds to creep o'er its grey line
 Such offering BEAUMONT dreaded and forbade,
 And sad experience forbade a thought
 When spells forbade the voyager to land,
Forbear. Did wanton fawn and kid forbear
 If such thy meaning, O forbear,
 Forbear to covet a Repeater's stroke,
 But covet not the Abode;—forbear to sigh,
 Then peck or perch, fond Flutterer! nor forbear

 Forbear to deem the Chronicler unwise,
 Descend on Francis; nor forbear
 Whose heart still flutters, though his wings forbear
 Forbear to shape due channels which the Flood

 My brother John was forced to go . . . 27
 While I am forced to watch and weep . . . 113
 And forced unworthy stripes to bear . . . 175
 The Lady's words, when forced away . . . 204
 How he, long forced in humble walks to go,
 Forced from that voice so lately tuned to a strain
 That, having forced its way from birth to birth,
 Forced to descend into his destined tomb—
 Than ever forced unpitied hearts to bid . . .
 Forced by intent to take from speech its edge,
 I repose, nor am forced from sweet fancy to part,
 And prayers that would undo her forced farewell;
 Like a gaunt shaggy Porter forced to wait . . .
 You, Lady, forced to wear . . . 531
 Nor Hunger forc'd the herds from pastures bare . . .

 Forc'd from my native mountains bleak and bare;
 Forced labour, and more frequently forced hopes;
 Nor all the misery forced upon my sight,
 Hope takes, or Doubt or Fear is forced to wear . . .
 Forced by the gracious providence of Heaven . . .
 Forced from the street-disturbing newsmen's horn,
 How the poor brute's condition, forced to run
 Not doomed to ignorance, though forced to tread,
 Your cherished sullenness is forced to head
 And notice forced upon incurious ears;
 Was forced to read away its only hope;
 Before his temples, prematurely forced . . .
 Was forced to vent his wisdom with a sigh
 Into a wild disorder; or be forced . . .
 And forced to join in less obnoxious shapes
 Such pleasure now is mine, albeit forced . . .

Forebode. See Forbode.
 Forebode not any severing of our loves!
 As from these intimations I forebode . . .
Foreboder. Cured the foreboder like a charm;
Forebodes. Forebodes mishap or seems but to complain;
Foreboding. Meekly, with foreboding thought,
 Foreboding not how soon he must depart;
 Foreboding evil. From his native hills
Forebodings. My dull forebodings in a Peasant's ear Forefathers. Of Walter's forefathers o'erflowed the bounds . . .
 Save six feet of earth where our forefathers lie!
 As all their Forefathers had done; aod, when
 Their forefathers; lo! sects are formed, and split
 Hath overpowered his forefathers, and soon
 Forefathers, who, to guard against the shocks, Forefend. Sweet heaven forefend! his was a lawful right;
Forego. Thou wouldst forego the neighbouring Rhine,
 Loose idless to forego her wily mask . . .
 Can she depart? can she forego
 Their altars they forego, their homes they quit,
 Warned thee these upper regions to forego,
 Thought that should teach the zealot to forego
 Unwilling to forego, confess, submit,
Foregoing.—Such grateful haunts foregoing, if I oft

 Write fool upon his forehead.—Planted thus
 Profound his forehead was, though not severe;
 Her forehead, like a breeze of Spring;
 The forehead of a pollard oak,
 A studious forehead to incline
 "His forehead wrinkled was and furred;
 Into two ample horns his forehead wide,"
 Lift up that grey-haired forehead, and rejoice
 Thy forehead as if fearful to offend,
 Luxuriant wreaths around thy forehead hoar;
 Thou wear'st upon thy forehead clear . . .
 And on my True-love's forehead plant
 Made to the Twelve, survives: lip, forehead, cheek,

Forehead—continued.

Seated alone, with forehead sky-ward raised . . . 362
 Its shiv'ring forehead through the peaceful rent
 Your love of Him upon whose forehead sate . . . 383
 His sides, or wreath with mist his forehead high:
 To bow his forehead in the courts of kings . . . 420
 The rapt One, of the godlike forehead . . . 471
 Stern was her forehead, but a smile serene
 In silence as before. With forehead bent . . . 574
 The stu-hurt forehead of the weeping child—
 Stone lift its forehead emulous of stone . . . 586
 Was her broad forehead; like the brow of one
 And on whose forehead inaccessible . . . 618
 And seen the Simplon's forehead hoary . . . 688
Forehead's. How rich that forehead's calm expanse!
Foreheads. Go—and with foreheads meekly bowed
 And antique towers nodded their foreheads high . . .
 And such as lift their foreheads over-prized . . .
Foreign. If justice ruled the breast of foreign kings,
 With marble, which he sent from foreign lands . . .
 The arithmetic of babes, must foreign hordes . . .
 Which, heard in foreign lands, the Swiss affect . . .
 By wanderers brought from foreign lands . . .
 Some seek with timely flight a foreign strand;
 O sad it is, in sight of foreign shores . . .
 Bold settlers on some foreign shore . . .
 He knows the policies of foreign lands;
 On thy departure to a foreign land . . .
 With foreign foes mustered for istaact war . . .
 To fly, for safeguard, to some foreign shore,
 From that disastrous rout, to foreign shores . . .
 Whose country groan'd under a foreign scourge?
Foreknowledge. Thou hast foreknowledge that such task is thine . . .
Foreland. Or foreland, on a new-discovered coast;
Foremost. See Head-foremost.
 Last and foremost, every horse . . .
 The foremost prow in pressing to the strand,—
 But Thou art foremost in the field—there stand:
 Not seldom foremost in the way;
 Foremost in freedom, noblest of mankind?
 Are now my theme; and, foremost of the scenes,
 And cheerful, but the foremost of the band . . .
 And I, as chanced, the foremost of the band;
 Foremost in my affections, had fallen back
 He, with the foremost whose impatience hailed
 Slap-dash, tail foremost, as his arms shall drive . . .
Forenoon.—How lovingly robed in forenoon light and shade . . .
Foreran. Foreran the expected Power . . .
Forerunner. Last forerunner of "Good night!"
Forerunners. With thy Forerunners that through many a year . . .
 As their forerunners in a glorious course;
Forerunning. To vice and guilt, forerunning wretchedness . . .
Foresaw. In calmness made, and sees what he fore-
 saw;
Foresee. Measured by all that, trembling, we foresee,
 Which, they foresee, must soon alight . . .
Foreseeing. A Voice shall finish doubt and dim fore-
 seeing . . .
Foreseen. In the clear land of vision, but foreseen
 In pomp foreseen by her creative eye . . .
 Foreseen, had dared to couple, even in thought,
Foreses. Whosees, foreses; who cannot judge amiss, Foresown. But not to them had Providence foreshown . . .
Foresight. Full oft our human foresight I deplore;
 In foresight, or in love . . .
 Silence and Foresight; Death the Skeleton
 Endurance, foresight, strength, and skill . . .
 If foresight could have rent the veil
 The day pass lightly on, when foresight sleeps,
 Emotions which best foresight need not fear,
 Her foresight, and intelligence that makes
 By foresight, or remembrance, undisturbed!
 With foresight; hears, too, every sabbath day . . .
Forest. The latest lingerer of the forest train,
 Dear is the forest frowning o'er his head,
 From Bruno's forest screams the affrighted jay,
 Among the forest glades, while jocund June
 To Calaterium's forest he repaired . . .
 Thy couch the dewy earth, thy roof the forest thorn!
 Deep in a forest, with leave given, at the age
 Of his retirement, to the forest lodge
 Beneath her sway, a simple forest cry
 No more than in some forest wild;
 In field or forest with nice care,
 Nor mute the forest hum of noon;
 And, if thy bounty fail, the forest pants;
 Or into trackless forest set
 The grace of forest charms decayed,
 And stately forest where the wild deer rove;
 Darkens the sun, hath hadd the forest sink,
 He quakes not like the timid forest game,
 Sate watching in a forest shed,
 The forest to embolden;
 On airy upland, and by forest rills . . .

The forest huge of ancient Caledon . . . 392 Inglewood 1

 Those forest oaks of Druid memory,
 And wild deer bounded through the forest glade,
 Deep in a forest, thy secure abode, . . . 413 White Doe 1557
 The forest thorough! . . . 416 White Doe 1874

 But wide around lay forest ground . . . 450 Ecc. Sonn. 3. 41. 5
 Creep forth, and through the forest wind . . . 456 The Leaves 2*
 Rugged and high, of Charnwood's forest ground,
 Thro' crags, and forest glooms, and opening lakes,
 I hear, while in the forest depth he sees,
 From Bruno's forest screams the frightened jay,
 A giant moan along the forest swells
 And Sabra in the forest with St. George!
 Of faery land, the forest of romance.
 Through a thick forest. Silence touched me here
 Of thick entangled forest, like the moon
 Of the Hercynian forest. Yet, hail to you
 Through field or forest with the maid we love,
 The shady forest of its green attire,—
 The hermit to his cell in forest wide;
 Or forest, fetched the enormous axle-tree
 In forest purlieu; and the like are bred,
 Forest and field, and hill and dale appear,
 War's tincture, 'mid the forest green and still,
 Than to the forest hermit are the leaves

Forestall. (Not to forestall such knowledge as may be Forest-brake. As from a forest-brake
Foresters. Like foresters in leaf-green vest, . . .
 Where foresters or shepherds dwell,
Forest-fruit. Forest-fruit with social hands;
Forest-glade. Or let their wishes loose, in forest-
 glade.
Forest-glooms. Yet, when above the forest-glooms Forest-ground. Wild tracts of forest-ground, and scattered groves,
Forest-lawn. Have roused her from her sleep: and forest-lawn,
Forest's. Far in the level forest's central gloom:
 And now, emerging from the forest's gloom,
 Listens, or quakes while from the forest's gulf
 "At noon, when, by the forest's edge
 And penetrates the forest's inmost shades;
 Leads to the dear Parnassian forest's shade,
 She hears, upon the mountain forest's brow,
 Than with the forest's more enduring growth,
Forests. There, all unshaded, blazing forests throw
 How tunelessly the forests ring!
 (Thanks to high God) forests of such remain:
 Of midnight,—cities, plains, forests, and mighty
 streams. . . .
 Those mighty forests, once the bison's screen,
 The matted forests of Ontario's shore . . .
 And back to the forests again! . . .
 Through woods and spacious forests,—to behold
 Brightning the gloom where thick the forests
 stoop;
 These forests unapproachable by death,
 Or in wide forests of continuous shade,
 The width of those huge forests, unto me
 Primeval forests wrapped thee round with dark
 Like trees in forests,—spread through spacious tracts,
 Mines opened, forests planted, and rocks split,
Forest-side. Upon the forest-side in Grasmere Vale
 Above the Rotha, by the forest-side.
Forest-skirted. High on a broad unfertile tract of forest-skirted Down,
Forest-tree. And so the grandeur of the Forest-tree Forest-trees. Even to the inferior Kinds; whom forest-trees
Foreswore. Her wished-for yellow she foreswore,
Foretaste. The simply-meek foretaste the springs
 His icy scimitar, a foretaste yields
 O dastard whom such foretaste doth not cheer!
 (Foretaste of winter) on the moorland heights;
 Foretaste deliverance; but the least perturbed
 a foretaste, a dim earnest, of the calm
 Of greedy foretaste, from the secret stand
 Insensibly the foretaste of this parting
Foretasted. Foretasted, immortality conceived
Foretell. Dear native regions, I foretell,
 And, leaving it to others to foretell,
Foretelling. Foretelling and proclaiming, ere thou leave
 Foretelling aged Winter's desolate sway,
Foretells. Protracted, and the twilight storm foretells,
Forethought. Without uneasy forethought of the pain,
Foretold. Should be as Lennox has foretold, then swear,
 "Thou knowest, the Delphic oracle foretold . . .

Foretold—continued.

Transfigured, from this kindling hath foretold . . . 437 Ecc. Sonn. 2. 34. 5
 Her happier destiny foretold:—
 An Ode, in passion uttered, which foretold
 Foretold, and added prayer to prophecy; . . . 629 Installation 44

 trace!
Forewarning. And no forewarning gives; . . . 667 Prelude 5. 96
 He knew not one forewarning pain;
 Had given forewarning, and that he himself
Forewarns. While he forewarns, denounces, launches forth,
Forefeit. That wretched life of thine shall be the forfeit.
 Ye did not forfeit one dear right,
 Christ died for—cannot forfeit his high claim
 That woman ne'er should forfeit, keep thy vow;
 To works that ne'er shall forfeit their renown,
Forfeited. Have forfeited their ancient English dower
 Are forfeited; but infamy doth kill.
 From his own sight—this gose, he forfeited Forfeiting. Is reached, where, forfeiting his bright attire,
Forfeiture. Was summoned to, discharge the forfeiture,
 Prescribed to duty:—woeful forfeiture
 Sanctions the forfeiture that Law demands,
 Too oft by willful forfeiture, have lost
 Thrives by the forfeiture—unfeeling thought,
Forgat. To worship aye, and he forgot it not;
Forgave. He had been sore misused; but he forgave
Forge. Still tempering, from the unguilty forge
Forged. Of dancing insects forged upon his breast;
Forgers. Forgers of daring tales! we bless you then, Forge's. The distant forge's swinging thump profound;
Forget. Would he forget those Beings to whose minds
 Can I forget our freaks at shearing time!
 Thus much to speak; but think not I forget—
 Dear Father! how could I forget and live?
 Departed Child! I could forget thee once,
 "Tis gone—like dreams that we forget;
 What will be left to us!—But I forget
 —Therefore, unwilling to forget that day,
 Nor did the hattered Tar forget,
 Of past existence—wilt thou then forget
 Of holier love. Nor wilt thou then forget
 Or, to forget their madness and their woes,
 The daring thought, forget the name;
 No wonder if you quite forget
 But how could I forget thee? Through what
 power,
 We should forget them; they are of the sky,
 Nor will I then thy modest grace forget,
 Behold, already they forget to suture,
 That will forget thee; thou hast great allies;
 Forget thy weakness, upon which is built,
 Who can forget thy prowess, never more
 Nor shall forget the Maiden cue
 Sink, and forget their nature—now expands
 Will we forget that, as the fowl can keep
 The hawk forget his perch; and the hound
 Imposed on human kind, must first forget
 By dauntless Luther freed, could they forget
 Ungrateful Country, if thou e'er forget
 Teaching us to forget them or forgive.
 Of prayer and praise forget their rosaries,
 And Bards, who hailed thee, may forget
 Forget the glories he hath known,
 Can I forget you, being as you were
 In which ye stood? or can I here forget
 Can beat never will I forget thy name.
 Forget his feeling: so (if like effect
 Of a long exile. Nor could I forget,
 —But I forget our Charge, as utterly
 My lips, that may forget thee in the crowd,
 Cannot forget thee here; where thou hast built,
 Shall it forget that its most noble use,
 On a kind parent willing to forget
 Nor so the Valley shall forget her loss.
 Think not, that, pitying him, I could forget
 That rapturous moment never shall I forget
Forget'st. Meek lustre, nor forget'st the humble
 Vale;
Forgetful. In open air forgetful would I sit
 My Child, forgetful of the name of Herbert,
 Forgetful of the body they sustained.—
 The high-souled virtues which forgetful earth
 On her green hill, forgetful of this Boy
 Who slumbers at her feet,—forgetful, too,
Forgetfully. Forgetfully; uncalled upon to pay Forgetfulness. See Self-forgetfulness.
 In the entire forgetfulness of pain. . . . 65 Bord. 1551
 Beguiled into forgetfulness of care . . . 508 F. Stone 1
 Not in entire forgetfulness, . . . 588 Immortality 62

Forgetfulness—continued.

Promised soft peace and sweet forgetfulness. . .
 In soft forgetfulness the livelong hours,
 Inviting sleep and soft forgetfulness. . .
 Doth, by a rapture of forgetfulness,
 To save themselves from blank forgetfulness!
 By such forgetfulness the soul becomes,
Forget-me-not. A new Forget-me-not,
Forgets. That rose, and now forgets to rise,
 Forgets her nature, opening like a flower
 Above her head and so forgets her vows—
 Forgets, unwear'd watching every side,
 One precious gain, that he forgets himself.
 Hears, and forgets his purpose;—furnished thus,
 Who here forgets her errand, nothing loth

Forgetting. See Self-forgetting.
 Forgetting, calls the wearied to her side;
 Forgetting in thy care . . .
 Alive to all things and forgetting all.
 Iona's Saints, forgetting not past days,
 Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
 Upon earth's native energies; forgetting

Forgive. I neither ask nor wish—forgive me, but forgive
 (Reader, forgive the intolerable thought)
 I never can forgive it: but how steadfastly
 You must forgive me. Ay, and if you think
 You will forgive me— If I ever knew
 You will forgive me, but my heart runs over.
 Heavens! my good Friend! Forgive me, gracious
 Sir!

I could forgive him. And should he make the Child
 Forgive me.—Oswald knows it all—he knows,
 Oh let me be forgiven! I do forgive thee.
 I pity, can forgive, you; but those wretches—
 Forgive me!—Saints forgive me. Had I thought
 Forgive me, Sir: before I spoke to you,
 Nor to my wishes lost;—forgive the wrong,
 Had been no sorrow. I forgive him;—but Another Master. Heaven forgive me, Luke,
 Forgive me then; for I had been
 Thou found'st—and I forgive thee—here thou art—
 From its own country, and forgive the strings."
 Just God, forgive!
 Forgive me if the phrase be strong;—
 Forgive, illustrious Country! these deep sighs,
 From far, forgive the wanderings of my thought:
 Thickets, the pastoral River will forgive
 Teaching us to forget them or forgive.
 Ye will forgive the weakness of that hour,
 Genius of Burke! forgive the pen seduced
 Forgive them;—never—never did my steps
 Of sun or moon.—Forgive me, if I say
 And who shall judge the creature, will forgive.
 Forgive me if I venture to suspect
 Recall my song the ungenerous thought; forgive,
 Forgive me if I add another claim,

Forgiveness. Yes, be it so;—repent and be forgiven—
 Oh let me be forgiven! I do forgive thee.
 no harm, but—it will be forgiven me;
 And, if thou hast forgiven me, let me hope,
 And adding, with a hope to be forgiven,
 This Minstrel lead, his sins forgiven;
 May hope to be forgiven.
 "Then be we, each and all, forgiven!
 Breathed to a Son forgiven, and blest
 To gratitude, to injuries forgiven—
 And thou, in lovers' hearts forgiven,
 And be forgiven.
 And of Eustace was forgiven:
 Of a diviner love, will be forgiven—
 Of righteousness, of sins forgiven,
 Of arts and letters—but he that forgiven—
 And harsh unkindness are all forgiven,

Forgiveness. Of that old Man's forgiveness on thy heart,
 All past forgiveness it repeated;
 Forgiveness from God's mercy-seat;
 Help, and forgiveness speedy and entire.
 For prompt forgiveness will not sue in vain.
 Made confession, asked forgiveness,
 Entire forgiveness!—But if thou art one
 Forgiveness, patience, hope, and charity!
 Preclude forgiveness, from the praise debarred,
 Than brotherly forgiveness may attend;
 Constrained forgiveness, and relenting vows,
 Of mutual pity and forgiveness, sweet
 He could not find forgiveness in himself;
 Prompt aid, forgiveness speedy and entire.

Forgives. Forgives their interference—Art divine, Forgoes. Their watch-dog ne'er his angry bark forgoes,
Forgone. Forgone the home delight of constant truth,
Forgot. Be scorn and fear and hope alike forgot
 I do forget the heavings of my breast.
 The scrip that held his food, and I forgot
 Have you forgot your own troubles
 "Rest, little young One, rest; thou hast forgot the day

Forget—continued.

He quite forgot his holly whip,
 She quite forgot to send the Doctor,
 And he hath now forgot his Wife,
 Of sense despised, a world forgot,
 We forgot Thee, do not Thou
 In conflict; whose rough winds forgot their jars
 (So beautiful is Clyde) forgot to mourn
 "Have you forgot"—and here she smiled—
 The distant clock forgot, and chilling dew,
 Save in the land where all things are forgot,
 Be the dead load of mortal ills forgot,
 Forgot the leverage—and plied away.
 Forgot her functions, and slept undisturbed.
 With our own inner being are forgot.
 Forgot, at seasons, whence they had their being;
 Forgot that such a sound was ever heard
 And I at once forgot I was a Stranger.
 I then forgot him!—here I stood and gazed:
 And, like an ardent hunter, I forgot,
 Its humble destination were forgot—
 At sight of this seclusion, he forgot

Forgotten. See Over-forgotten.
 Forgotten? have my warnings passed so quickly
 Has been forgotten. Farewell! Gentle pilgrims,
 Plague on my memory, him I had forgotten.
 He had forgotten. He had lost his path,
 The marvellous current of forgotten things;
 Where in forgotten quiet he might dwell,
 Would surely he forget. But at length
 His flock had need. 'Tis not forgotten yet
 To words of a forgotten tongue
 Hath quite forgotten her—or may he
 Hunt half a day for a forgotten dream.
 Relic of Kings! Wreck of forgotten wars,
 And this forgotten Taper to the last
 Scorned or forgotten, Thou canst testify,
 God's bounty, soon forgotten; or indeed,

For thy worst rage, forgotten. Off as Spring
 Nor be it e'er forgotten how by skill
 Forgotten like a dream!
 All effort seems forgotten; one to whom
 That would not be forgotten, and are here
 And is forgotten; even then I felt
 Of things forgotten, these same scenes so bright,
 Were utterly forgotten, and what I saw
 Be not forgotten, that I still retained
 As if I had forgotten her; but no,
 A hundred other names, forgotten now,
 To notice old forgotten principles,
 Or, seeing, had forgotten! A strong shock
 Being over and forgotten, on we wound
 Could never be forgotten! In his heart,
 Familiar with forgotten years, that shows
 And she forgotten in the quiet grave.
 Passed from my mind like a forgotten sound.
 Forgotten,—at safe distance from 'a world
 Left and forgotten in his careless way,
 By snatches, and lets fall, to be forgotten;
 All cares forgotten, round its hallowed walls!
 Lie down and be forgotten in the dust,
ForK. Within this grove of firs! and, on the fork
 Oft as I pass along the fork
 In the deep fork of Amerdale;
ForKed. Concealed among the forked hills—
 The forked weapon of the skies can send

Forks. Far as St. MAURICE, from yon eastern FORKS, Forlorn. But sought in vain; for now, all wild, forlorn,
 Here paused she, of all present thought forlorn,
 Of his forlorn appearance, could not fail
 And most forlorn, should hribe a Mother, pressed
 Sent forth a cry forlorn,
 While thou art roving, wret^d and forlorn,
 The most forlorn—one life of that bright star,
 So kind and so forlorn!
 A wretched thing forlorn.
 "Oh! it was a time forlorn
 And from the infernal Gods, 'mid shades forlorn
 With one wild floweret (call it not forlorn)
 Yet how forlorn, should ye depart,
 Upon them not forlorn.
 She drooped and pined like one forlorn;
 Save one, one only, when I stood forlorn,
 Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn;
 To mimic Time's forlorn humanities.
 She is not what she seems, a forlorn wretch,
 Ne'er can the way be irksome or forlorn
 And its forlorn fit jatt!
 Of him in that forlorn estate!
 On the forlorn unfortunate,
 Returned to animate an age forlorn?
 These emblems suit the helpless and forlorn,

 With its dark arms to form a circling bower,
 Within that fabric of mysterious form
 They hung not—no one on his form or face
 No tree, nor jutting eminence, nor form
 Hues more exalted, " a refined Form"
 Of antique form ; this large, for spinning wool ;
 (then think of her beautiful gliding form,
 The voiceless Form he chose to feign,
 Yet seems a form of flesh and blood ;
 There doth she ken the awful form
 To form, an undissolving cloud ;
 Of form and aspect too magnificent
 Grace that shall mould the Maiden's form
 Shall rear her form to stately height,
 But unsubstantial Form eludes her grasp
 On thy reclining form with more delight
 Met by the rainbow's form divine,
 The form and rich habiliments of One
 " My little vagrant Form of light,
 Disorder colour, form, and stature !
 It's very self in form and feature,
 Ideal Form, the universal mould,
 Like a Form sculptured on a monument
 But what a Gordon's form and face,
 A Form not doubtfully described—
 But she through many a change of form hath gone,
 Issued, to sudden view, a glorious Form !
 The graceful form of milk-white Steed,
 The form and motion of a stream to take ;
 Of battle meets him in authentic form !
 The Flower, the Form within it,
 The sun in heaven !—but now, to form a shade
 Sacred Religion ! " mother of form and fear,"
 The Form remains, the Function never dies ;
 In the beautiful form of this innocent Doe :
 That Form beneath the spreading tree,
 Climbers through many a superstitious form
 Form spirit and character from holy writ,
 The bright corporeal presence—form and face—
 An idle form, the Word an empty sound !
 A Form as bright, as beautiful a moon,
 Of Powers endowed with visible form, instinct
 Nor form, nor feeling, great or small ;

Forms—continued.

Uplift in quiet their illumined forms,
 If Thou be one whose heart the holy forms
 What mighty objects do impress their forms
 Whem from these forms I turned to contemplate
 Saw mountains; saw the forms of sheep that grazed
 By laws to which all Forms submit
 Over material forms that mastered reason.
 The beautiful forms of nature wrought,
 For passions linked to forms so fair
 The Hermit sits alone. These beautiful forms,
 Their colours and their forms, were then to me
 Shall be a mansion for all lovely forms,
 Their own fair forms, upon the glimmering plain,
 Around angelic Forms, the still
 And solemn rites and awful forms
 The shadowy forms of mountains bare,
 By lovely forms, and silent weather,
 Owe to a troubled element their forms,
 With glorious forms in numberless array,
 Spirit divine through forms of human art:
 Such Forms as from their covert peep
 The stars dim-twinkling through their forms!
 Of steepest architecture, where the Forms
 Hence Forms that glide with swan-like ease along,
 Than the fair Forms, that in long order glide,
 From that which is and actuates, by forms,
 In Forms that must perish, frail objects of sense;
 And sculptured Forms of Warriors brave;
 Root there, and not in forms, her holiness—
 Their forms are broken staves; their passions,
 Truth fails not; but her outward forms that bear
 For her mute Powers, fixed Forms, or transient
 Shows.
 Mis-shapes the beautiful forms of things—
 No joyless forms shall regulate
 These all wear out of me, like Forms with chalk
 Whatever your forms express,
 When, like essential Forms of light,
 Of forms created the most vile and brute,
 Where flaccid sails in forms fantastic droop,
 Farewell! those forms that, in thy noon-tide shade,
 Where solitary forms illumined stray
 The native dignity no forms debase,
 Mixed with auxiliary Rocks, three hundred Forms;
 Lift, all serene, their still, illumined forms,
 No shadowy forms entice the soul aside,
 Forms, images, nor numerous other aids
 But huge and mighty forms, that do not live
 That give to forms and images a breath
 Impressed upon all forms the characters
 Bepeopled the mind with forms sublime or fair,
 Habitually dear, and all their forms
 Of visionary things, those lovely forms
 For calmer pleasures, when the winning forms
 As they lie hid in all external forms
 Of sedentary peace. Those lovely forms
 A universe of Nature's fairest forms
 And glancing forms, and tapers glittering,
 Even forms and substances are circumsufed
 Of human forms with superhuman powers,
 Not heedlessly, the laws, and watched the forms
 Among the schoolmen, and Platonic forms
 And mighty forms, seizing a youthful fancy,
 And Earth did change her images and forms
 Of forms and colours, passive, yet endowed
 On outward forms—did we in presence stand
 Of colours, lights, and forms; the deafening din;
 Here, too, were "forms and pressures of the time";
 I was returning, when, with sundry forms
 To single forms and objects, whence they draw,
 To majesty. Like virtue have the forms
 Man suffering among awful Powers and Forms;
 Subordinate to her, her visible forms
 And lovely region, I had forms distinct
 With vulgar men about me, trivial forms
 Of shapes and forms and tendencies to shape
 Buries the eye with images and forms
 Beat high, and filled the fancy with fair forms,
 Of civil government, and its wisest forms;
 Still craving combinations of new forms,
 What passion makes them; that meanwhile the forms
 Upon the vulgar forms of present things,
 In presence of sublime or beautiful forms,
 Surpassing the most fair ideal Forms
 All his remembrances, thoughts, shapes, and forms;
 With long and ghostly shades—forms which once seen
 Her forms, and with the spirit of her forms,
 That, amid the simpler forms of rural life,
 The forms of things with an unworthy eye?
 In vision—forms uncouth of mightiest power
 Upon these uncouth Forms a slight regard
 Of your bright forms and glorious faculties,
 Of institutions, and the forms of things
 For our support, the measures and the forms,
 The forms of Nature, and enlarge her powers?
 Who, in this spirit, communes with the Forms
 "And further; by contemplating these Forms

 Their duties from all forms; and general laws,
 The outward ritual and established forms
 And by her beautiful array of forms
 Whence alteration in the forms of things,
 Could do them wrong. The universal forms
 Blocks out the forms of nature, precesumes
 His mind gives back the various forms of things,
 Innumerable multitude of forms
 Lively and beautiful, in rural forms,
 Shall he feel yearning to those lifeless forms,
Forsake. And hear his prayer that I would not forsake him
 And say'st, when we forsake thee, "Let them go!"
 If his sweet hey he could forsake,
 Nor those bright sunbeams to forsake the day;
 Thou dost forsake thy subterranean haunts,
 Even to this hour,—yet, some shall now forsake
 The young horse must forsake his manger,
 And for the faith; nor shall his name forsake
 Her seat upon Olympus, doth forsake
 Be not dismayed, I will not thee forsake!
 Loth to forsake the spot, and still more loth
 For these, who, yet untempted to forsake
Forsaken. See Long-forsaken.
 In that forsaken building where they sat
 He was forsaken? There is a power in sounds:
 My poor forsaken Child, if I
 To this forsaken covert, there I found
 Than a forsaken bird's-nest filled with snow
 Places forsaken now, though loving still
 The world forsaken, all its busy cares
 But with closed eyes,—of breath and bloom forsaken.
 Or musing sits forsaken halls among,
 Forsaken "in the shade!"
 Thou 't be as others that forsaken are;
 Never forsaken, that, by acting well,
 From that forsaken spring; and no one came
 Committed by forsaken Ellen's hand
Forsakes. The lone black birch, forsakes the faded plain;
Forsaking. Erelong, forsaking all her natural haunts, Forsook. At times, while young Content forsook her seat,
 His ears were never silent; sleep forsook
 Johnny perhaps his horse forsook,
 Forsook his crims, renounced his folly
 Guided by signs which ne'er the sky forsook,
 A last farewell, their loved abodes forsook,
 Think ye your British Ancestors forsook
 Forsook their homes, and, errant in the quest
 Ere I forsook the crowded solitude,
Forsooth. A tiny tenement, forsooth, and frail, as needs must be
 And said, Forsooth, my friend, do I thank thee,
Forswear. Their aims I utterly forswear;
Forsworn. Sinks smilingly forsworn.
 Like a cowed monk who hath forsworn the world,
Fort. Near the sea-side I reached a ruined fort;
 The impregnable and awe-inspiring fort
 Smooth space of turf which from the guardian fort
Forth. (Partial list.)
 Come forth, and here retire in purple shade;
 Calls forth the woodman from his desert cell,
 From that day forth no place to him could be
 Our little fire sent forth a cheering warmth
 This Boy—when he comes forth with bloody hands—
 Young as I am, I might go forth a teacher,
 Even such a Man my fancy bodied forth
 Send forth such noises—and that weary bell!
 But standing, walking, stretching forth his arms,
 Might lead to good—I saw it and burst forth,
 Sent forth a cry forlorn,
 And brought it forth into the light:
 Just half a week after, the wind sallied forth,
 Thou art a dew-drop, which the morn brings forth,
 For bodied forth before my eyes the cross-crowned
 but appeared;
 The pointed steeple peering forth from the centre of the shade.
 He had gone forth among the new-dropped lambs,
 And calls you forth again!
 Stole forth, unsettled by the shock;
 Well born, well bred; I sent him forth
 From this time forth he never shared a smile
 Did she bring forth, and all together sat
 And the tall Steep of Silver-ho, sent forth
 Forth from a jutting ridge, around whose base
 At break of day I ventured forth,
 Pours forth his song in gushes;
 No hold bird gone forth to forage
 New heavens succeeded, by the dream brought forth:
 The budding flowers, peeped forth the nest
 Feelers of love, put forth as if to explore
 So forth in dauntless mood they fare,
 Each peering forth to meet the other—
 Who from Keswick has pricked forth,
 I left our cottage-threshold, sallying forth
 Advancing, forth she stretched her hand

 At once the griding iron passage found; . . . 60 Bord. 1281
 Till one was found by stroke of violence dead, . . . 68 Bord. 1701
 Who might have found a nothing-doung hour . . . 69 Bord. 1756
 I found how my domains had been usurped, . . . 70 Bord. 1835
 You are found at last, thanks to the vagrant Troop . . . 73 Bord. 2049
 Tell where you found us. At some future time . . . 76 Bord. 2192
 I found in you the kindest of Protectors; . . . 82 Alice Fell 19
 It might have found its way into my heart, . . . 85 Shepherd-boys 87
 And he found no deliverance! The Crew . . . 87 Pe-lamb 34
 Twin sisters both of Ignorance, I found . . . 100 Brothers 349
 So guided, distant a few steps, I found . . . 101 Brothers 372
 Hast thou pursued the monster? I have found . . . 101 Brothers 380
 him.— . . . 106 * I've watched 8
 And there a little Girl I found, . . . 106 Forewell 6
 And there the helpless lamb he found . . . 110 * 'Tis said that some 2
 When my father found thee first in places far away; . . . 119 Sailor's Mother 34
 Another grave was added.—He had found . . . 120 Emigrant Mother 7
 And, when he dwelt beneath our roof, we found . . . 122 V. and J. 70
 On their return, they found that he was gone, . . .
 They found him at the foot of that same rock . . .
 Yes, long before he died, he found that time . . .
 Hath found you out among the trees, . . .
 The loveliest spot that man hath ever found, . . .
 And here and there a church-yard grave is found . . .
- I found it when my Son was dead; . . .
 To a poor neighbouring cottage; as I found, . . .
 Found means to hurry her away by night, . . .

Found—continued.

Found dreadful provocation : for at night, . . . 123 V. and J. 125
 Repaired, but only found the matron there, . . . 125 V. and J. 290
 Or lost, perhaps, and never found ; . . . 128 Idiot Boy 180
 Which, going by from year to year, had found,
 Went up to London, found a master there . . . 133 Michael 119
 From base to summit ; such delight I found . . . 135 Michael 264
 To hasten, for I found, beneath the roof . . . 147 Joanna 45
 To this forsaken covert, there I found . . . 150 When, to 10*
 To the day I found thee out, . . . 150 When, to 47*
 Since the day I found thee out, . . . 160 Pansies, lines 14*
 Pleasures newly found are sweet . . . 160 Pleasures newly 1*
 In a moment lost and found, . . . 173 Waggoner 1. 28
 Whatever in those climes he found . . . 193 Ruth 127
 Instead of jutting crag I found . . . 199 Thorn 186
 Four rods of sheer ascent! Sir Walter found . . . 201 Hart-leap 50
 Love had he found in huts where poor men lie ;
 Will now so readily he found . . . 205 Brougham 161
 Or found on earth a name ; . . . 224 'Tis gone* 32
 As sages taught, where faith was found to merit . . . 235 Power of Sound 179
 These silent raptures found no place ; . . . 239 P. B. 272
 Which Peter in those noises found ;— . . . 246 P. B. 872
 Some willing neighbour must be found,
 Should find brief solace there, as I have found.
 He found the longest summer day too short, . . . 250 Nupts Angler* 8
 A volant Tribe of Bards on earth are found,
 How in thy pensive glooms our hearts found rest . . . 259 A volant 1*
 Hath early found among the dead, . . . 282 Wansfell 1 this 14*
 And found the door unbarred, . . . 285 Grave of Burns 68
 To such apartments as they found ; . . . 296 Highland Boy 140
 Had found, in ravage widely dealt, . . . 298 Brownie's Cell 8
 Still hint that quiet best is found, . . . 298 Brownie's Cell 39
 With joy in Kent's green vales ; but never found
 Thus in your books the record shall be found,
 It found no barrier on the ridge . . . 301 Bran 66
 With medicable wounds, or found their graves
 A deeper peace than that in deserts found ! . . . 306 Here, on our 7*
 Yet a dread local recompense we found ; . . . 313 Prophecy 2
 For magnanimity be found ; . . . 327 Ode 1815 21
 And nothing in our hearts we found . . . 328 Ode 1815 81
 Found casual vent. She said, " Be of good cheer ;
 And here once again a kind shelter be found . . . 334 The Spirit* 14
 Landing, she found not what she sought,
 How he was found, cold as an icicle,
 And through yon gateway, where is found,
 From Rylstone she hath found her way
 Why thus the milk-white Doe is found
 Of God had in her heart found place—
 He found his way to a postern-gate ;
 And fervent words a passage found . . . 334 A winged 10*
 The same fair Creature, who hath found
 Where she had found a grateful seat
 Deep feeling, that found utterance loud,
 Of that same Temple have found rest :
 A habitation she had found,
 In which the Creature first was found,
 And every sabbath here is found ; . . . 337 Oh Life* 4
 Of a HOLY RIVER, on whose banks are found
 Shame if on the consecrated Vow be found . . . 348 Lulled by 41*
 The counter Spirit found in some gay church
 And the wild storm hath somewhere found a nest ;
 Oh may this work have found its last retreat
 Yet I at last a resting-place have found,
 The power is merged, the pomp a grave has found,
 Him found we not ; but, climbing a tall tower,
 In language thou may'st yet be found,
 In hermits' weeds repose he found,
 For precious tremblings in your bosom found !
 Found scarcely anywhere in like degree !
 Nor far had gone before he found . . . 360 Albano 5
 Thy favours may be found ; . . . 364 Vallomb. 20
 Will not be found. Her right hand, as it lies
 Knowing, things rashly sought are rarely found ;
 Found at the Widow's feet some sad relief ; . . . 371 Eg. Maid 123

 Its place no longer to be found ; . . . 532 Flood. Isl.* 26
 Might tell what intercourse she found, . . . 544 Russ. Fug. 205
 Within a little time, as hath been found,
 Yet far all that, the truth is found elsewhere ;
 A cause he found into the Town to go,
 In which they found their kindred with a world
 And his Permissus found on Lebanon.
 Here, brought from far, his course found rest,—
 And there they found him at her side ;
 That is not to be found . . . 552 Truilus 9

Found—continued.

One-summer evening (led by her) I found . . . 637 Prelude 1. 357
 Which, wrought upon instinctively, had found . . . 654 Prelude 3. 361
 Found everywhere, but chiefly in the ring . . . 657 Prelude 3. 541
 Were wanting here, I took what might be found . . . 657 Prelude 3. 566
 Within our garden, found himself at once, . . . 659 Prelude 4. 52
 A freshest also found I at this time . . . 661 Prelude 4. 191
 Wherever man is found ? The trickling tear . . . 668 Prelude 5. 188
 A heart that found benignity and hope, . . . 670 Prelude 5. 292
 Of words in tuneful order, found them sweet . . . 674 Prelude 5. 555
 No farther than the threshold, there I found . . . 676 Prelude 6. 119
 And found benevolence and blessedness . . . 680 Prelude 6. 357
 Although well pleased to be where they were found,
 And we found evil fast as we find good . . . 696 Prelude 7. 584
 In our first years, or think that it is found, . . . 703 Prelude 8. 310
 Where no sufficient pleasure could be found . . . 704 Prelude 8. 383
 Capacious found, or seemed to find, in me . . . 708 Prelude 8. 605
 Here then my young imagination found . . . 708 Prelude 8. 639
 Of orders and degrees, I nothing found . . . 712 Prelude 9. 210
 That would be found in all recorded time, . . . 715 Prelude 9. 366
 Be found no more, that we should see the earth . . . 717 Prelude 9. 522
 To abide in the great City, where I found . . . 721 Prelude 10. 245
 Not in my single self alone I found,
 For those that bade them fall. They found their joy, . . . 723 Prelude 10. 266
 Distempered, till they found, in every blast . . . 727 Prelude 11. 41
 And dealt with whatsoever they found there . . . 729 Prelude 11. 130
 Now was it that both found, the meek and lofty . . . 729 Prelude 11. 136
 Found ready welcome. Tempting region that Glorifying, I found a counterpoise in her, . . . 735 Prelude 12. 41
 Thus moderated, thus composed, I found . . . 740 Prelude 13. 48
 Why is this glorious creature to be found . . . 741 Prelude 13. 87
 I prized such walks still more, for there I found . . . 742 Prelude 13. 179
 As found among the best of those who live— . . . 743 Prelude 13. 242
 Men may be found of other mould than these, . . . 743 Prelude 13. 261
 Murmuring of him who, joyous hap, was found,
 And found a kind of home or harbour there, . . . 752 Excursion 1. 56
 Still deeper welcome found his pure discourse :
 Have somewhere found relief." He, at the word, . . . 757 Excursion 1. 73
 He found the little he had stored, to meet . . . 764 Excursion 1. 450
 But we have known that there is often found,
 In mournful thoughts, and always might be found,
 She opened—found no writing, but beheld . . . 765 Excursion 1. 554
 I found that she was absent. In the shade, . . . 766 Excursion 1. 632
 Familiarly, and found a couching-place . . . 767 Excursion 1. 633
 I found her sad and drooping : she had learned
 From week to week, I found to be a work . . . 778 Excursion 1. 669
 Must by the cottage-children have been found :
 " That I came hither ; neither have I found . . . 781 Excursion 1. 711

France—continued.

The air of France, not less than Gallic zeal . . . 797 Excursion 3, 743
 And his compeers—the laughing Sage of France—
 In tournament, upon the fields of France, . . . 816 Excursion 4, 996
 Of France a boastful Tyrant hurled his threats ; . . . 825 Excursion 5, 184
Francesco. Francesco Ceci willed that, after death,
 Francesco was the name the Youth had borne, . . . 869 Excursion 7, 758

Franchises. Shalt thou thumblor franchises support, . . . 442 Ecc. Sonn. 3, 10, 11
Francis. St. Francis, far from Man's resort, to abide
 It came ; and Francis Norton said,
 But Francis, in the vacant hall, . . . 362 * List—'twas 37
 400 White Doe 380
 400 White Doe 420
 Before his Father, Francis stood, . . . 406 White Doe 895
 When Francis, uttering to the Maid . . . 406 White Doe 975
 Descend on Francis ; nor forbear . . . 407 White Doe 1051
 —The noble Francis—wise as brave, . . . 408 White Doe 1111
 'Lo, Francis lives, he is not dead ?' . . . 409 White Doe 1211
 'Lo, Francis comes,' there were who cried,
 And so to Francis he renewed . . . 409 White Doe 1229
 'Then Francis answered—'Trust thy Son,
 The unhappy Banner Francis saw, . . . 410 White Doe 1259
 But Francis, soon as he had braved . . . 410 White Doe 1310
 Why comes not Francis ?—From the doleful City . . . 410 White Doe 1330
 —Why comes not Francis ? Thoughts of love . . . 410 White Doe 1340

Free—continued.

And now, when free to move with lighter pace.
 And she was in youth's prime. How free their love,
 The mind is full—and free from pain their pastime.
 That in more genial times, when I was free
 Gay as our spirits, free as our desires;
 Free as the sun, and lonely as the sun,
 I, speaking now from such disorder free,
 Observe their ways; and, free from envy, find
 And trivial ostentation—is left free
 "But how begin?—and whence?—The Mind is free—
 While, free as air, o'er printless sands we march,
 By choice, and conscious that the Will is free,
 From all injurious servitude was free.
 The very multitude are free to range,
 Nor shall the elements be free to hurt
 Humiliation, when no longer free,
 In place from onward molestation free,
 Their life's appointed prison; not more free
 A heaving surface, almost wholly free
 Thoughts, which the rich are free from, came and crossed
 From trepidation and repining free.
 England, the ancient and the free, appeared
 Yet free from touch of envious discontent,
 That, far as kindly Nature hath free scope
 A servile hand among the lordly free!
 Free from obstruction; and the boat advanced
 If time, with free consent, be yours to give,
 And more than once been free at Luss
 From my own door I shall be free to claim
 Eternal Lord! and from the world set free,
 Were Kings a free bora work, a people's choice.
Freebooter. Had given her love to a wild Freebooter, Freebooter. Buzz, buzz, ye black and winged freebooters!
Free-born. Resolving (this a free-born Nation can)
 The free-born Soul—that World whose vaunted skill
 The freeborn mind enravelling,
 His rank 'mong freeborn creatures that live free,
 Britain put forth her freeborn strength in league,
 The freeborn Swiss to leave his narrow vales, Freel. From which I have freed myself—but 'tis my wish
 It hung, nor could at once be freed;
 Earth's noblest penitent; from bondage freed
 And of this Stranger speak by whom her lord was freed.
 The Worldling, pining to be freed
 Aud, with a spirit freed from discontent,
 Thou too be heard, lone eagle! freed
 From the dark chambers of dejection freed,
 But from that bondage when her thoughts were freed
 Hers is a holy Being, freed from Sin,
 Which from Siberian caves the Monarch freed,
 Of popular reason, long mistrusted, freed
 Lo, Justice triumphs! Earth is freed!
 To social cares from jarring passions freed;
 Had freed his Realm, he plighted word
 Nor from mishap be freed.
 Body and mind, from molestation freed,
 And be at once from peril freed!"
 The saint, the scholar, from a circle freed
 When thy great soul was freed from mortal chains.
More safely rests, dies happier, is freed
 Than that the Soul, freed from the bonds of Sense,
 By dauntless Luther freed, could they forget
 Were they who, when their Country had been freed,
 Nor quits the Body when the Soul is freed,
 To these glad eyes from bondage freed, again
 The bashful freed from fear,
 When the third summer freed us from restraint,
 A single step, that freed me from the skirts
 And who among them but an Exile, freed
 This he is freed from, and from thousand notes
Freedom. Shy as the jealous chamois, Freedom flies,
 The work of Freedom daring to oppose,
 Hail Freedom! whether it was mine to stray,
 —Yet hast thou found that Freedom spreads her
 power
 Whose natural element was freedom—Stop—
 Seems, if such freedom may be used with you,
 His freedom he recovered on the eve
 Nor could the voice of Freedom, which through
 France
 In thoughtless freedom, bold?
 That voice of Freedom, in its power
 Hence, if in freedom I have loved the truth;
 Of Patriots scoop their freedom out, with hand
 In freedom, mountain-turf and river's marge;
 Down to its root, and, in that freedom, bold;
 Yet still with Nature's freedom at the heart;—
 The freedom of a Mountaineer:
 Books, leisure, perfect freedom, and the talk
 And give us manners, virtue, freedom, power.
 Of British freedom, which, to the open sea
 Our ancient freedom: else 'twere worse than vain

Freedom—continued.

Or hide, at will,—for freedom combating
 Thy name, O SCHWYTZ, in happy freedom keep!
 Peace, leisure, freedom, moderate desires;
 Of freedom, with mind grasping the whole theme
 Whose souls take pride in freedom, virtue, fame,
 Flow to the poor, and freedom to the slave;
 Shouting to Freedom, "Plant thy banners here!"
 In freedom. Men they were who could not bend;
 There's freedom, and sometimes a diffident stare
 I, loving freedom, and untried;
 Me this unchartered freedom tires;
 Foremost in freedom, noblest of mankind?
 If freedom, set, will rise again.
 True freedom where for ages they have lain
 For the least boon that freedom can bestow?
 Exults in freedom, can with rapture vouch
 Of heaven-born freedom on thy being's height,
 Where Freedom oft, with Victory and Death,
 Freedom, such as man may claim
 Of manliness and freedom all conspired
 Of freedom which encouraged me to turn
 As hitherto, in freedom I may speak,
 On works of love or freedom, or revolved
 Nor could the voice of Freedom, which through
 France
 From this last spot of earth, where Freedom now
 Preserved, enlarged, this freedom in himself?
 My Heart in genuine freedom!—all pure thoughts
 "That righteous cause (such power hath freedom)
 bound,
 Old freedom was old servitude, and they
 Her share in the pure freedom of that life,
 And stand in freedom loosened from this world,
 Hall to the crown by Freedom shaped—to gird
 Freedom and hope; but keen, withal, and shrewd.
 This is the freedom of the universe;
 Imagination, freedom in the will;
 On Albion's noble Race in freedom born,
 Of holy freedom, by redeeming love
 His tongue, and give it the wind's freedom; then,
Freedom's. (Freedom's impregnable redoubt,
 While Freedom's farthest hamlets blessings share,
 Oh give, great God, to Freedom's waves to ride
 Waged in Freedom's holy cause,
 Gave to triumph Freedom's cause,
 Gave to triumph Freedom's cause,
Freely. Which here was freely given?
 Yes, freely let our hearts expand,
 Freely as in youth's season bland,
 Your spirit freely let me drink, and live.
 Shunned and not tolerated, freely lived
 We took, and let this freely be confessed,
 I yet was standing, freely to respire,
 Infect the air which he had freely breathed
 I freely gather; and my leisure draws
Freeman. And make himself a freeman of this spot
 A freeman, wedded to his life of hope
 A freeman, therefore, sound and unimpaired;
Freer. To give, in their Descendants, freer vent
 And freer pace; but more, far more, I grieved
Freest. By heaven inspired; that frees from chains
 the soul,
Freeze. To freeze the blood I have no ready arts:
 Keen was the air, but could not freeze,
 That Fortitude, whose blood disdains to freeze
Freezes. Between life and death his blood freezes and thaws;
Freezing. See Heart-freezing.
 Which now with freezing thoughts did all her powers assail;
 "If Care with freezing years should come,
 Of the world's freezing cares—to generous Youth—
Freight. Fears either for himself or freight;
 The summit of a cumbrous freight,
 Spurning her freight with indignation!
 So with his freight the Creature turns
 Therefore the wise pray for thee, though the freight
 The vast Pacific gladdens with the freight—
 And Shakspeare at his side—a freight,
 Her freight, it was a Damsel peerless;
 "Though this unhappy freight I bear,
 The freight of holy feeling which we meet,
 Each for her haven; with her freight of Care,
 In calm is conscious, finding for his freight
 And is happy as if the rich freight were his own.
 Full soon thy Soul shall have her earthly freight,
 I looked and looked, self-questioned what this freight
 With freight of slippers piled beneath his arm!
 But with its universal freight the tide
 Its freight of public news, the fever came,
 When those two vessels with their daring freight,
 I, with my freight of winter raiment, saw
 And with their freight homeward the shepherds moved
 Be left him, trust the freight of his distress
 Two ruddy children hung, a well-poised freight,
 A team of horses, with a ponderous freight
 A lone pedestrian with a scanty freight,
 And, on the freight of merry passengers

Freight—continued.

With its rich freight; their number he proclaims;
Freighted. With commerce freighted, or triumphant war.
 Thoughtfully freighted with a various store;
 Freighted from every climate of the world
Freights. Freights every day from a new world of hope.
French. Here lay the French—and thus came we!"
 In the French tongue, a Novel of Voltaire,
Frenchman. How that one Frenchman, through continued force
 The Frenchman and the Spaniard; from remote
Frenchmen. Frenchmen had changed a war of self-defence
Frenzied. While trees, dim-seen, in frenzied numbers, tear
Frenzy. As one whose brain habitual frenzy fires
 The chains of frenzy, or entice a smile
 Should come in frenzy and in drunken mirth,
Else shall your blood-stained hands in frenzy reap
 Least alien frenzy seize thee, waxing wroth,
 Her frenzy only active to extol
Frenzy-stricken. To fiercer mood the frenzy-stricken brain
Frequent. Yet frequent transports mitigate the gloom
 With frequent showers of snow. Upon a hill,
 I ceased the shelter to frequent,—and prized,
 And frequent sharer of their calm delight
 Do both yet frequent the hill of storms,
 Beats frequent on thy satiate ear
 O lost too early for the frequent tear,
 (By transit not unlike man's frequent doom)
 Ye brood of Conscience—Specters! that frequent
 Shall he frequent these precincts; locked no more
 What noble pomp and frequent have not I
 And frequent sights of what is to be borne!
 Did I by night frequent the College groves
 That were a frequent comfort to my youth,
 Myself from frequent perils; nor were tales
 Not seeking frequent intercourse with men,
 Did I frequent the formal haunts of men,
 Of civil slaughter, was our frequent walk;
 Religious, 'mid those frequent monuments
 Bent as he moves, and needing frequent rest;
 Such is the summer pilgrim's frequent wish;
 —Such the too frequent tenour of his boast
 From human converse to frequent alone
 From tasks too frequent, or beyond its power Frequented. See Half-frequented.
 Be your frequented watch-tower; roll the stoe
 Frequented, and beset with howling winds.
Frequently. So frequently repeated, and by force
 Forced labour, and more frequently forced hopes;
 More frequently from the same source I drew
 Most frequently call forth, and best sustain,
Fresh. Fresh food; for only then, when memory
 Fresh gales and dews of life's delicious morn,
 And from her grateful heart a fresh one drew;
 Besides, on griefs so fresh my thoughts were brooding still.
 Thy absence, till old age and fresh infirmities
 As I have done. A fresh tide of Crusaders
 His face is fair and fresh to see;
 Fresh water from the brook, as clear as ever ran;
 Fresh flowers blow as flowers have blown
 O'er town and tower we fed, and fields in May's
 fresh verdure drest;
 He had as white a head and fresh a cheek
 Fresh as a rose in June,
 And cheered; and now together breathe the fresh air
 Fresh sprigs of green box-wood, not six months before,
 And likings fresh and innocent,
 Fresh from the crowded city, to behold
 It was an April morning; fresh and clear
 A small Cascade fresh swollen with snows
 My branches are so fresh and gay
 Fresh blows the wind, a western wind,
 But in the storm 'tis fresh and blue
 Fresh as the bloom upon his face.
 Transfigured through that fresh abode
 Scattering fresh flowers; though haply far, I ween,
 More fresh, more bright, than princes wear;
 Fresh as a banner bright, unfurled
 There is a fresh and lovely sight,
 So fresh in all its beautiful eyes,
 Fresh beauty through the vale.
 Fresh as if Evening brought their natal hour,
 Through fresh green fields, and budding groves
 among,
 Dear mother of fresh thoughts and joyous health!
 And the fresh meads—where flowed, from every nook
 Put on fresh raiment—till that hour unworn:

Fresh—continued.

Fresh as the flower, whose modest worth
 Age! twine thy brows with fresh spring flowers,
 In thy fresh beauty. There! that dusky spot
 Fresh risen, and beautiful within!—there meet
 Fresh from the beauty and the bliss
 Hues ever fresh, in rocky fortress blowing;
 Bright sunbeams—the fresh verdure of this lawn
 Mild—as the verdure, fresh—the sunshine, bright—
 To be for ever fresh and young,
 In semblance fresh, as if, with dire affray,
 Dewy and fresh, till showers again shall fall.
 With native Fancy her fresh aid,
 And fresh with rivers, well did it become Receiving, willingly or not, fresh strength
 And there, by fresh hopes beautified,
 Heard near fresh streams; and thousands, who rejoice
 The Romanist exults; fresh hope he draws
 Green with fresh holly, every pew a perch
 And the fresh air of incense-breathing morn
 Fresh gales to wait them to the far-off port
 As a fresh morning for new harmony;
 "I come to open out, for fresh display,
 Children of Summer! Ye fresh Flowers that brave
 Brings fresh into my mind
 And the most ancient heavens, through Thee, are fresh and strong.
 Gain a fresh impulse, run a livelier course;
 In thy fresh wreaths, than they for praise
 The appropriate Picture, fresh from Titian's hand,
 In faith, which fresh offences, were he cast
 No tales of Runagates fresh landed, whence Rich cream, and snow-white eggs fresh from the nest.
 To the fresh waters of a living Well—
 The vocal raptures of fresh poetry,
 He can make sick folk whole and fresh and sound;
 There sat I down among the fair fresh flowers,
 And jollity, fresh cheerfulness, and mirth;
 Go look on the fresh daisy; then say I,
 Fresh flowers; while the sun shines warm,
 Fresh water rushes strew the verdant floor;
 Fresh with lustre all their own.
 Flowed in upon me, from all sides; fresh day
 With prompt rebound seemed fresh as heretofore.
 Than as they were a badge glossy and fresh
 Too learned, or too good; but wanton, fresh,
 Fresh emptied of spectators. Twice five years
 Share with us thy fresh spirits, whether gift
 Or Indian cabins over the fresh lawns
 Fresh from a toilette of two hours, ascend
 In a pure stream of words fresh from the heart:
 Keeping such fresh remembrance of the day,
 Fresh as the morning star. 'Elate we looked
 Of itself blow fresh, and make the vanes
 Piping on boughs, or sporting on fresh fields,
 The characters are fresh and visible;
 Closed up each chink, and with fresh bands of straw
 "Fresh blew the wind, when o'er the Atlantic Main Fresh, youthful, and aspiring! What are these
 When the fresh eagle, in the month of May,
 Fresh in the strength and majesty of age,
 All fresh and beautiful, and green and bright,
 So green, so fresh, so plentiful, as mine!"
 Court the fresh air, explore the heaths and woods;
 Of the fresh shower, but of poor Ellen's tears
 Of winter cannot thin; the fresh air lodged
 A fresh band meets them, at the crowded door—
 Breathing fresh air, and treading the green earth;
 Fresh power to commune with the invisible world,
 The vernal field infuses fresh delight
 In fresh abodes—their labour to renew;
 Thy living chaplet of fresh flowers and fern,
 That made their conversation fresh and fair
 Warn woods, and sunny hills, and fresh green fields,
 Fresh as the freshest field, scoop'd out, and green
Fresh-cloven. And ground fresh-cloven by the plough Freshen. Would their lost strength restore and freshen the pale cheek?
Freshened. Of low-hung vapour: on the freshened mead
 My leaves you freshened and bedewed;
 Green dew lights adorn the freshen'd mead,
 A field before them freshened with the dew
Freshening. Freshening the wilderness with shades and springs.
 A freshening lustre mellow
 A quickening hope, a freshening gleam,
 Dive, at thy choice, or brave the freshening gale!
 Freshening the waste of sand with shades and springs.
Freshens. The buds, and freshens the young leaves,
Fresher. On infant cheeks there fresher roses blow;
 With gleams of fresher, purer, light;
 Her infant's cheeks with fresher roses glow,
 The chamber hearth with fresher boughs is spread,
 That ran on Sabbath days a fresher course,
 For sunshine, and to breathe the fresher air;
 Dreadless, as in a kind of fresher breeze
Freshest. When all the fields with freshest green were dight,

Freshest—continued.

Fresh as the freshest field, scoop'd out, and green
Fresh-flowing. When thankfulness were best?—
 Fresh-flowing tears,
Freshness. The freshness, the everlasting youth,
 In realms where everlasting freshness breathes! "Still
 In the vivid freshness of a dream,
 Of brilliant moss, instinct with freshness rare;
 The freshness of the valleys; let his blood
 The glory and the freshness of a dream.
 A freshness in those objects of her love,
 Those walks in all their freshness now came back
 A freshness also found I at this time
 Time had compressed the freshness of his cheek
Fresh-smitten. Fresh-smitten by the morning ray, Fret. And who would grieve and fret, if, welcome
 come
 Why are you in this mighty fret?
 Yes, let my master fume and fret,
 The Newsmen is stopped, though he stops on the fret;
 Nuns fret not at their convent's narrow room;
 As false to expectation. Nor fret thou
 That—whatever griefs may fret,
 I love the Brooks which down their channels fret,
 We crossed the Brabant armies on the fret
 As the winds fret within the Æolian cave,
 Or fret and labour on the Plain below.
 Fret, burn, and struggle, and in soul am there;
 Upon a fretful rivulet, now above,
Fretful. Of joyless daylight; when the fretful stir
 Of fretful temper sullies her pure cheek;
 On Vaga's breast the fretful waves,
 And, though the passions of man's fretful race
 Pure as the morning, fretful, boisterous, keen,
 Amid the fretful dwellings of mankind
 Of disencumbering thus her fretful wings.
Frets. Now but in wantonness she frets,
 Where the whirlpool frets and raves
 She burrs, she frets—by Juno's rancour stung;
 That frets, or languishes, he stilled and cheered."
Fretted. Exulting Warbler! eased a fretted brain,
 As if the fretted rove were ziven.
 To sink, and meet them in their fretted caves,
 "Rich robes are fretted by the moth;
 Fretted by sallies of his mother's kisses,
 And if, at times, they fretted with the yoke,
 But fretted, vexed, and wrought upon, almost
 The cornice, richly fretted, of grey stone;
Fretting. Fretting the fever round the languid heart,
 Fretting and whitening, keener and more keen;
Fret-work. And through each window's open fret-work looked
 Of fret-work imagery laid low;
Friar. While Bacchus, clothed in semblance of a Friar,
Friar's. I had as lief turn to the Friar's school
Friers. Or given upon report by pilgrim friars,
Friday. Duly as Friday comes, though pressed herself
Friend. See Sallor-friend.
 Far from my dearest Friend, 'tis mine to rove
 Say, will my Friend, with unreluctant ear,
 Where we, my Friend, to happy days shalt rise,
 In every babbling brook he finds a friend;
 Death would he else the favourite friend of woe.
 To-night, my Friend, within this humble cot
 And desolate, "Here you will find a friend!"
 My father! gone was every friend of thine:
 Oh! tell me whither—for so earthly friend
 Into the court, my Friend, and perch yourself
 To be the friend and father of the oppressed
 And see your Friend again. The good old Man
 I'll answer for it that our four-legged friend
 I do not hear the voice of my friend Oswald.
 Herbert!—confusion! Here it is, my Friend,
 Heavens! my good Friend! Forgive me, gracious Sir!—
 His most familiar Friend. There was a letter
 So saintly and so pure!—Hark, my Friend,
 Where is our common Friend? A ghost, methinks—
 I am your friend. What need of this assurance
 I still will be your friend, will cleave to you
 Now would you? and for ever?— My young
 Friend
 You are my Father's Friend. Alas, you know not,
 Murdered! alas! speak—speak, I am your friend:
 So dealt with him. I have a noble Friend
 I have no friend;
 No, no, my Friend, you may pursue your business—
 How could he call upon his Child!—O Friend!
 As if she had lost her only friend
 Stranger to me and yet my friend, a simple notice came.
 Ay, there, indeed, your memory is a friend
 Is a true friend to sorrow; and, unless
 Me, unapproached by any friend,
 I followed him, and said, "My friend,
 I have no other earthly friend!"
 Another kinsman—he will be our friend

Friend—continued.

"Hie thee to the Countess, friend! return with speed,
 Most soothing was it for a welcome Friend,
 —Now whether (said I to our cordial Friend,
 My Friend, Myself, and She who then received
 Father, sister, friend, and brother.
 Thou art!—a friend at hand, to scare
 —If the Butterfly knew but his friend,
 He is the friend of our summer gladness:
 Said cordially, "My Friend, what cheer?
 We want your streamers, friend, you know;
 Accept, O Friend, for praise or blame,
 Of this fair river; thou my dearest Friend,
 My dear, dear Friend; and in thy voice I catch
 Where thou, a Wife and Friend, shalt see
 And there my good friend, Stephen Otter;
 O Friend! thy flute has breathed a harmony
 Grief, thou hast lost an ever-ready friend
 The lamp of faith, lost Friend! too faintly burn;
 What boots the enquiry?—Neither friend nor foe
 High is our calling, Friend!—Creative Art
 With action, were as nothing, patriot Friend!
 Yet art thou welcome, welcome as a friend
 To Him who is our lord and friend!
 And was his friend; and gave him joy
 O Friend! I know not which way I must look
 Young Vane, and others who called Milton friend.
 Repose at length, arm friend of human kind!
 Well justify the Friend who placed it there
 Nor wish for earthly friend.
 This tribute from a casual Friend
 To this bright land, Hope was for him no friend,
 From whose comrade turns, or faithful friend—
 With some loved friend, or by the unseen hawk
 With her, and with her sylvan Friend;
 The Friend, who stood before her sight,
 Upon no help of outward friend;
 Who, 'moe those thousands, friend hath none,
 The friend shrinks back—the foe recoils
 For this her last and living Friend.
 A dear look to her lowly Friend;
 Self-offered victim, for his friend he died,
 Of those Bathusiasts a subservient friend,
 That bid me hail thee as the SAILOR'S FRIEND;
 And thou art still, O Moon, that SAILOR'S FRIEND!
 To me my good friend Matthew spake,
 Up! up! my Friend, and quit your books;
 Up! up! my Friend, and clear your looks;
 We from to-day, my Friend, will date
 "My days, my Friend, are almost gone,
 And fondly strives her struggling friend to save.
 Of Him to be our friend!
 And no one can tell whither. Dearest Friend!
 From heaviness, oft fly, dear Friend, to thee;
 The Curate's Dog—his long-tried friend, for they,
 To our kind Friend high on the sunny hill—
 And in Death's arms has long reposed the Friend
 Thus, gifted Friend, but with the placid brow
 Poor Robin as a sure and crafty friend,
 Witness how oft upon my noble Friend
 And friend in the ear of friend, where speech is free
 Fletcher's Associate, Jonson's Friend belov'd.
 If thou in the dear love of some one Friend
 Far from St. Cuthbert his beloved Friend,
 And said, Pursuoth, my friend, do I thank thee,
 Youth amiable; O friend so true of soul
 As with a chosen friend; nor did he leave
 Our common Friend and Father sent.
 Thea, Beaumont, Friend! who would have been the Friend,
 —Brother and friend, if verse of mine
 Thou wert a scorn of the fields, my Friend,
 With thine, O silent and invisible Friend!
 Say, will my friend, with soft affection's ear,
 Where we, my friend, to golden days shall rise,
 And that the precious love day to you."
 Thus far, O Friend! did I, not used to make
 Of humbler industry. But, oh dear Friend!
 Nor will it seem to thee, O Friend! so prompt
 This labour will be welcome, honoured Friend!
 Thus far, O Friend! I have we, though leaving much
 And to my Friend who knows me I may add, Came from you fountain?" Thou, my Friend!
 art one
 For this, that one was by my side, a Friend,
 And purest passion. Thou, my Friend! wert reared
 And here, O Friend! have I retraced my life
 To follow, and if thou, my honoured Friend!
 I called him Brother, Englishman, and Friend!
 Call back, O Friend! a moment to thy mind,
 And thou, O Friend! who in thy ample mind
 Thus in submissive idleness, my Friend!
 At our domestic table: and, dear Friend!

Friend—continued.

To watch me, an attendant and a friend, . . .
 Than these to which the Tale, indulgent Friend!
 Ah! I need I say, dear Friend! that to the brim
 Had fallen in presence of a studious friend,
 O'Friend! O Poet! brother of my soul,
 Where had we been, we two, beloved Friend!
 With a dear friend, and for the better part
 Risen on mid noon; blest with the presence,
 Friend!
 Dear to thee also, thy true friend and mine,
 O Friend! we had not seen thee at that time,
 And groves I speak to thee, my Friend! to thee,
 A youthful friend, he too a mountaineer,
 That thou, O Friend! the trouble or the calm
 Oh, most beloved Friend! a glorious time,
 Before last primrose-time. Beloved Friend!
 I mean, O distant Friend! a story drawn
 Yet deem not, Friend! that human kind with me
 As was thy melancholy lot, dear Friend!
 Thus from a very early age, O Friend!
 In his first outset; so have we, my Friend!
 And individual worth. And hence, O Friend!
 Or such retirement, Friend! as we have known
 Though like ambition, such was he, O Friend!
 Of solitude, and at the sight my friend
 Told by my Patriot friend, of sad events,
 Useless, and even, beloved Friend! a soul
 And gave it vent in her last words. O Friend!
 Most melancholy at that time, O Friend!
 O Friend! few happier moments have been mine Searched to its heart. Share with me, Friend! the wish
 Sets like an Opera phantom. Thus, O Friend!
 And thou, O Friend! wilt be refreshed. There is
 When thinking on my own beloved friend,
 This narrative, my Friend! hath chiefly told
 His best and purest friend; from her receives
 We almost meet a friend, on naked heaths
 And so shall stand for ever. Dearest Friend!
 From monumental hints; and thou, O Friend!
 Of Cambria ranging with a youthful friend,
 This over-sternness; but for thee, dear Friend!
 And now, O Friend! this history is brought
 Finally, and above all, O Friend! I speak
 O Friend! The termination of my course
 Is all uncertain; but, beloved Friend!
 It will be known, by thee at least, my Friend!
 The Friend I sought; a Man of reverend age,
 Things which you cannot see; we die, my Friend,
 A sore heart-wasting! I have heard, my Friend,
 Fast rooted at her heart; and here, my Friend,—
 "My Friend! enough to sorrow you have given,
 Heard as the voice of an experienced friend.
 The careless wanderer's friend, to him made known
 Recovering, to my Friend I said, "You spake,
 Exclaimed my Friend: "here then has been to him
 This sad memorial of their hapless friend!"
 My venerable Friend, as forth we stepped
 More might have followed—but my honoured
 Friend
 Of past discussions with this zealous friend
 And pleased I looked upon my grey-haired Friend,
 Was wholly ignorant that my ancient Friend—
 My grey-haired Friend said courteously—"Nay,
 nay,
 And, to remove those doubts, my grey-haired Friend
 A sound unknown to you; else, honoured Friend!
 Again directed to his downcast Friend,
 "Compatriot, Friend, remote are Garry's hills,
 Restored it to its owner. "Gentle Friend,"
 With whisper soft my venerable Friend
 My ancient Friend and I together took
 Like this our honoured Friend; and thence acquire
 Of the encomiums by my Friend pronounced
 Of native cordiality, our Friend
 As to a spiritual comforter and friend,
 —Much did she suffer: but, if any friend,
 When seated near my venerable Friend,
 That might have touched the sick heart of his Friend
 The fellow-labourer and friend of him
 The Pastor ceased.—My venerable Friend
 His sole companion, and his faithful friend,
 For she hath recognised her honoured friend,
 My grey-haired Friend was moved; his vivid eye
 Why, friend, to deck her supple twigs
 Moved (shall I say?) like a dear friend who meets
 My hope, my joy, my sister, and my friend,
 For some one, serves as a familiar friend.
 Your friend the country—Justice scarce would fail

Friendly—continued.

In vain to find a friendly face we try,
 A friendly shelter, and we entered in,
 Hath been so friendly to industrious hours;
 With him there often walked in friendly guise,
 Accomplished under friendly shade of night.
 On a friendly deck reposing
 "From me this friendly warning take"—
 Which with such friendly voice will call;
 Our treat shall be a friendly bow!
 On friendly terms with this Machine:
 So shall he touch at length a friendly strand,
 Well have you played your friendly part;
 Friendly; as here to my repose hath been
 From new incitements friendly to our task,
 Yet in the Temple they a friendly niche
 And to Religion's self no friendly will,
 Of Patron, famous school or friendly nook,
 Friendly to studious or to festive hours;
 A spirit friendly to the Poet's task,
 A power to virtue friendly; were't not so,
 For one hostility, in friendly league,
 How Nature hems you in with friendly arms!
 Thought I—some friendly covert must be near.
 Or, in the garden, under friendly veil
 And, by some friendly finger's help upstayed
 As if some friendly Genius had ordained
 Friendly the weight of leisure to remove,
 A friendly covert. "And they knew it well,"
 Friends. Is hushed, am I at rest. My Friends!
 restrain
 The friends whom she had left but a few minutes past.
 Give me your hand; where are you, Friends? and tell me
 Ay, what is it you mean? Harkee, my Friends;
 By heaven, his words are reason! Yes, my Friends,
 You know me, Friends; I have a heart to feel,
 Who are we, Friends? Do we not live on ground
 My Friends, his heart shall have as many wounds
 Unto the few whom he esteems his friends
 That friends, by death disjoined, may meet no
 more!
 By friends deceived, by foes betrayed,
 My friends, I did not follow you!
 Dear friends, when ye were gone away,
 The way my friends their course did bend,
 Too soon, my friends, ye went away;
 She spies her Friends, she shouts a greeting;
 You love your sister and your friends,
 With hope that we, dear Friends! shall meet again.
 Good friends he has to take his part;
 And there myself and two beloved Friends,
 My last year's friends together.
 Concealed from friends who might disturb
 I'll set, my friends, to do you honour,
 While friends and kindred all approved
 Yet lacks not friends for simple glee,
 The woods, my Friends, are round you roaring,
 Resume, my Friends! within the shade
 Are not unused to trouble friends.
 O chief of Friends! such feelings I present
 Garden, and that Domain where kindred, friends,
 And friends too rarely prop the languid head.
 Neighbours were we, and loving friends
 True friends though diversely inclined;
 Or keep his friends from harm.
 Of company or friends, and left
 Thy friends are exultations, agonies,
 Though the toil of the way with dear Friends we
 divide,
 Death-parted friends, and days too swift in flight,
 With friends and kindred tenderly beloved;
 With friends and kindred dealing.
 And choice of studious friends had he
 Which struck with terror friends and foes!
 How they have scourged old foes, perfidious friends:
 An emblem yields to friends and enemies
 Of saintly Friends the "murderer's chain partake,
 Friends strike at friends—the flying shall pursue—
 Who, with sad hearts, of friends and country took
 Of God and chosen friends, your troth to plight
 Of health, strength, friends, and kindred, see!
 With friends to greet thee, or without,
 A pair of friends, though I was young,
 Of friends, who live within an easy walk,
 Upon that law as on the best of friends;
 Are friends and patrons of humanity.
 She snchts the tidings forth to distant friends;
 Though poor and destitute of friends thou art,
 Of humblest Friends, bright Creature! scorn not one
 In earnest converse with beloved Friends,
 Weep not, beloved Friends! nor let the air
 From intricate cabals of treacherous friends.
 His friends had in their fondness entertained,
 For that last thought of parting Friends
 While Friends beheld thee give with eye, voice, mien,

 Frost, and the breath of frosty wind, had snapped
 Incessant rain was falling, or the frost
 Powdered like rimy trees, when frost is keen.
 At the first nipping of October frost,
 Until her house by frost, ad thaw, and rain,
 Impends; the frost will gather round my heart;

 Of rock that frowns, and stream that roars,
 O still beloved, once worshiped Time, that frowns
 Safe from the feudal Castle's hasty frowns;
 Frowns deepening visibly his native gloom,
Frozen. At matins froze, and couched at curfew-time,
Frozen. See Long-frozen.
 Their frozen arms her neck no more can fold;
 Nor Winter yet his frozen stores had piled,
 Conflict must cease, and, in thy frozen heart,
 How motionless I, not frozen seas 106
 What if through the frozen centre 166
 Go with thee to the frozen zone;
 Frozen by distance; so, majestic Pile,
 Of Andes—frozen gulfs became its bridge—
 Was frozen at its marvellous source;
 There hang in fear, when grows the frozen stream,
 Strown on the frozen snow. And when the spring
 "Calm as a frozen lake when rutiland winds
 To the bare rock, on frozen Caucasus;
Frugal. Intense, and frugal, apt for all affairs,
 By exhortation of my frugal Dame—
 That I, if frugal and severe, might stray 259

Frugal—continued.

Our daily meals were frugal, Sabine fare!
 Frugal as there was need, and, though self-willed,
 Frugal, affectionate, sober, and withal
 And on a frugal plan without more words.
Fruit. See First-fruit, Forest-fruit.
 Daisies leave no fruit behind 643
 But when the fruit, so often praised 688
 Its blossoms shrivelled, and its fruit, if formed, 704
 Has sown as yields, we trust, the fruit of fame
 Or strip the bough whose mellow fruit bestrewn
 No breach of promise in the fruit?
 Those seeds of expectation which the fruit
 Of orange-trees bedecked with glowing fruit
 Than a soft record, that, whatever fruit
 The target mouldering like ungathered fruit;
 A timely promise of unlooked-for fruit,
 Fair fruit of pleasure and serene content
 That the firm soul is clothed with fruit divine!
 Can never cease to hear celestial fruit.
 The gadding bramble hang her purple fruit;
 Whose fruit around the suo-burat Native falls
 Yield timely fruit of peace and love and joy.
 The season's sprinklings of ripe strawberry fruit.
 Is come to bitter fruit;
 O'er ripe fruit, seasonably gathered,
 With invitations, suppers, wine and fruit,
 To every natural form, rock, fruit, or flower,
 Ate, drank, and with the fruit and glasses played,
 Stripped as I am of all the golden fruit,
 Rashly, to fall once more; and that false fruit,
 When wisdom shows her seasonable fruit,
 And mellow Autumn, charged with bounteous fruit,
 Of fruit or flower, permission asked or not.
Fruitage. Where bud, and bloom, and fruitage, glowed,
 And fruitage gathered from the chestnut-wood,
 And goodly fruitage with the mother-spray;
 To greet the flowers and fruitage of a land,
 Oo fruitage gathered from the tree of life;
Fruitful. Or as a fruitful palm-tree towering high
 And may it prove a fruitful meeting!
 'Mid fruitful fields that ring with found toil,
 The theme is fruitful; nor can sorrow find
Fruitfulness. If child-like fruitfulness in passing joy, Fruititions. Vernal fruititions and desires
Fruit-laden. Let not flowers, or boughs fruit-laden,
Fruitless. "Yet you make all courage fruitless,
 Vows have I made by fruitless hope inspired;
 Dwell fruitless day-dreams, lawless prayer,
 Him hath he sought with fruitless pains,
 But 'tis a fruitless task to paint for me,
 Would keep, perhaps with many a fruitless tear,
 And sorrow that to fruitless sorrow clung!
 Such fruitless questions may not long beguile
 And sorrow of his fruitless prayer.
 With fruitless effort to allay
 And fruitless wishes eat the heart away,
 'Twill be no fruitless moment. I was born
 Pay fruitless worship to humanity,
 And fruitless indignation; galled by pride;
 Fruitless as those of aery alchemists,
 In Britain's senate. Fruitless was the attempt:
 Industrious to destroy! With fruitless pains
Fruitlessly. Unfolding, did not fruitlessly exhort
 Due homage; nor shall fruitlessly have striven,
 Full early lost, and fruitlessly deplored;
 Inviting penance, fruitlessly endured:
 —This sacred right is fruitlessly announced,
Fruits. Would there perhaps have gathered the first fruits 49
 Yet we mark it not;—fruits redden, 90
 Which at this season, with their unripe fruits,
 He looks on festal ground with fruits bestrown;
 The wild-wood fruits to gather,
 And earth with all her pleasant fruits and flowers
 Sing ye, with blossoms crowned, and fruits, and
 flowers,
 Wherever fruits are gathered, and where'er
 And ripening fruits and forest leaves
 Of snow and hoar-frost, spreads her fruits and her
 flowers,
 For permanent possession, better fruits,
 May try this modern system by its fruits,
 Fruits of her father's orchard are her wares,
 Culled the best fruits of Time's uncounted hours,
 Our table, small parade of garden fruits,
 Spread true religion and her genuine fruits)
 The fruits of earth though space of two ten years,
Fruit-trea. Beneath these fruit-tree boughs that shed Frustrate. Fixed on the Sutor; frustrate her request—
 And frustrate all the rest! Believe it not:
Frustrated. Was the aim frustrated by force or guile,
Frustrates. It frustrates its own purpose, and recalls
Fuel. That sadness finds its fuel. Hitherto,
 For winter fuel—to his nocturnal meal
Fuentes. Fuentes once harboured the good and the brave, 643

Fugitive. But small and fugitive our gain . . . 143
 The lovely Fugitive : . . . 190
 In coolest climes too fugitive, might even here . . . 356
 Frank are the sports, the stains are fugitive. . . 382
 Dreams, vivid dreams, that are not fugitive ; . . . 392
 Whose aim is pleasure light and fugitive : . . . 395
 Their fugitive Progenitors explored . . . 431
 Nor shorten the sweet life, too fugitive, . . . 501
 And wherefore fugitive or on what pretence ; . . . 522
 But hung upon the Fugitive, . . . 542
 To the loon Fugitive . . . 545
 What was so fugitive ! . . . 589
 Keen as a Triant or a Fugitive, . . . 589
 Erminia, fugitive as fair as she. . . 716
 So, like a fugitive, whose feet have cleared . . . 798
 A fugitive of fate. Long time was he . . . K.8.
Fugitives. Discovering traces of the fugitives, . . . 122
 Judge both Fugitives with knowledge : . . . 141
 The fugitives than to the British strand, . . . 449
Fulfill. Hath falsely trained—shall he fulfil his purpose ? . . . 53
 Her wishes to fulfil. . . 168
 Leave of our fate thy wishes to fulfil ; . . . 251
 For steadfast hope the contract to fulfil ; . . . 275
 A chosen Tree ; then, eager to fulfil . . . 276
 A Foe's most favourite purpose to fulfil : . . . 316
 And all the Nations labour to fulfil . . . 329
 All martial duties to fulfil ; . . . 330
 Of the world's hopes, dare to fulfil ; awake, . . . 366
 So high, a rival purpose to fulfil ; . . . 377
 Fulfil thy pensive duty, . . . 386
 O, that my mind were equal to fulfil . . . 395
 A Banner, fashioned to fulfil . . . 400
 The chaste affections tremble to fulfil . . . 425
 Resolute, at all hazards, to fulfil . . . 514
 Months passed in love that failed not to fulfil, . . . 531
 While truth and love their purposes fulfil, . . . 584
Fulfilled. It was a spot where, ancient vows fulfilled, . . . S.3.
 My Office is fulfilled—the Man is now . . . 66
 That those dear words should be fulfilled, . . . 204
 And, if the word had been fulfilled, . . . 292
 More than fulfilled, as gay Campanian's shores . . . 353
 Behold the prophecy fulfilled, . . . 415
 Fulfilled, and she sustains her part ! . . . 415
 But all shall be fulfilled ;—the Julian spear . . . 419

 Go forth upon a mission best fulfilled . . . 538
 (Now that their earthly duties were fulfilled) . . . 551
 The wrath consummate and the threat fulfilled ; . . . 724
 But speedily the promise was fulfilled ; . . . 781
 Of each domestic charity fulfilled . . . 847
 Than the old hereditary wish fulfilled ; . . . 888
 Fulfilled, the hope accomplished ; and thy praise . . . 894
 Which had been sighed for, ancient thought fulfilled . . . K.8.
 And common, yet all worthy if fulfilled . . . K.8.
Fulfilling. She, fulfilling her sire's office, . . . 94
 Through foul and fair our task fulfilling ; . . . 179
 In peace fulfilling. . . 486
 Fulfilling (could enchantment have done more ?) . . . 700
 My vow fulfilling, do I here present, . . . 812
Fulfillment. Fulfilment ; but, we trust, her upward track . . . 360
 Fulfilment of a Father's prayer . . . 411
 And, in fulfilment of God's mercy, lodged . . . 541
 Fulfilment of his own request ;— . . . 577
 Wait the fulfilment of their fear ; . . . 581
Fulgent. Then issued Vesper from the fulgent west, . . . 192
 She cast away, and showed her fulgent head . . . 265
 With the keen threatenings of that fulgent eye, . . . 271
 From childhood. On the fulgent spectacle, . . . 725
Full. See Brim-full.
 Full of the father, when his sons have grown . . . 19
 He saw and passed a stately inn, full sure . . . 24
 Full long endured in hope of just reward, . . . 25
 In her full lap, he sees such sweet tears flow . . . 25
 From her full eyes their watery load released. . . 30
 Who at full speed swept by us where the wood . . . 50
 Rushing along in the full tide of play, . . . 61
 Our quiet home all full in view, . . . 85
 Far happier lot, dear Boy, than brings full many . . . 92
 to this shrine ; . . . 96
 Another grave,—near which a full half-hour . . . 104
 Full soon this generous purpose thou may'st rue, . . . 105
 Until king Eldrude, with full consent . . . 106
 I've watched you now a full half-hour, . . . 107
 Full many a time, upon a stormy night, . . . 107
 Oft could we see him driving full in view . . . 112
 Full oft our human foresight I deplore ; . . . 113
 My very moments are too full . . . 114
 A healthy man, a man full grown, . . . 115
 Of sheep I numbered a full score, . . . 115
 Full fifty comely sheep I raised, . . . 115
 When full of play and childish cares, . . . 117

Full—continued.
 And tottering spirit. And full oft the Boy, . . . 118
 To their full hearts the universe seemed hung . . . 123
 Stirred nowhere without weapons, that full soon . . . 123
 Full speedily resounded, public hope, . . . 126
 His heart it was so full of glee . . . 127
 That, till full fifty yards were gone, . . . 127
 And thence full many a sound she hears, . . . 127
 And now all full in view she sees . . . 130
 Though younger than himself full twenty years . . . 132
 But soon as Luke, full ten years old, could stand . . . 134
 To-morrow thou wilt leave me : with full heart . . . 136
 Wrote loving letters, full of wondrous news, . . . 138
 The length of full seven years, from time to time, . . . 138
 Life, which to every one that breathes is full of . . . 140
 care." . . . 143
 They lead you on to full content, . . . 144
 Full many a sad and doleful thing : . . . 150
 Of me and of the storm. Full many an hour . . . 153
 Full oft is pleased a wayward dart to throw ; . . . 160
 As full of gladness and as free of heaven, . . . 173
 In such a heedless peace. Alas ! full soon . . . 175
 Full proof of this the Country gained ; . . . 175
 Full often make you stretch and strain, . . . 175
 And near that lurid light, full well . . . 178
 And you shall see her in full trim : . . . 178
 Wheeled her back in full apparel ; . . . 178
 Following after in full sail ! . . . 181
 Full soon that better mind was gone : . . . 198
 " Full twenty years are past and gone . . . 199
 " They say, full six months after this, . . . 199
 A wind full ten times over. . . 200
 And, for full fifty yards around, . . . 200
 And this I know, full many a time, . . . 207
 Is full of blessings. Therefore let the moon . . . 221
 Of warblers in full concert strong . . . 231
 Full surely, when with such proud gifts of life . . . 233
 A stream as if from one full heart. . . 237
 Great Jove is full of stately bowers ; . . . 238
 Full nine of them or more ! . . . 238
 Full twenty times was Peter feared . . . 240
 When the full moon was shining bright . . . 242
 Full suddenly the Ass doth rise ! . . . 243
 Though he has been, full thirty years, . . . 243
 It brought full many a sin to light . . . 245
 Beneath the full moon shining bright, . . . 247
 Of his full bosom, gladsome Piety ! . . . 254
 But some (who brook those hackneyed themes full . . . 255
 well, . . . 260
 An old place, full of many a lovely brood, . . . 270
 The broad full visage, chest of amplest mould, . . . 285
 Full soon the Aspirant of the plough, . . . 295
 That, rough or smooth, is full of change, . . . 297
 Full sure they were a happy band, . . . 307
 Roused though it be full often to a mood . . . 320
 O'erweening Statesmen have full long relied . . . 325
 And sage Mnemosyne,—full long debarred . . . 346
 Stern Gemmi listens to as full a cry, . . . 357
 Walk in the light of day, certain full surely . . . 358
 Full oft, our wish obtained, deeply we sigh ; . . . 366
 And ye—full often spurned as weeds— . . . 367
 Chant in full choir their innocent Te Deum. . . 369
 To a full orb, this Pinnacle bright . . . 373
 Full thrice had crossed himself in meek composure . . . 375
 Though public care full often tills . . . 392
 Anguish, and death : full oft where innocent blood . . . 394
 Of the world's flatteries if the brain be full, . . . 396
 What would they there ?—full fifty years . . . 398
 Turn towards the spot where, full in view, . . . 398
 Full cheerily on convent-bread . . . 399
 Rode full of years to Flodden-field, . . . 399
 Harp ! we have been full long beguiled . . . 400
 Full soon to be uplifted high, . . . 404
 Full sixteen thousand fair to see ; " . . . 413
 And where full many a brave tree stood, . . . 414
 Hath stopped, and fixed her large full eye . . . 418
 Full oft the unworthy brow of lawless force ; . . . 422
 The Council closed, the Priest in full career . . . 424
 And if full oft the Sanctuary save . . . 429
 Doubtless shall cheat full oft the heart's desires ; . . . 434
 Like ships before whose keels, full long embayed . . . 440
 Which thou prepar'st, full often, to convey . . . 450
 And soon, full soon, the lonely Sexton's spade . . . 454
 With a full heart ; " our thoughts are heard in . . . 455
 heaven ! " . . . 458
 When the East kindles with the full moon's light ; . . . 473
 Full early lost, and fruitlessly deplored ; . . . 478
 Full early to the silent tomb . . . 478
 Full happy season, when was known, . . . 478
 She warbled from full heart ; . . . 482
 And attention full ten times as much as there needs ; . . . 483
 Full five-and-thirty years he lived . . . 485
 Here stretch thy body at full length ; . . . 486
 Full thirty years behind. . . 490
 All are following at full speed, . . . 518
 In the full might they hitherto have shown, . . . 519
 Far higher, else full surely shalt thou err. . . 522
 When full five hundred boats in trim array, . . . 529
 And lilies face the March-winds in full blow, . . . 537
 The moon was full and shining clearly, . . . 537

Full—continued.

Till she had filled her apron full.
 Turn a broad front full on his flattering beams :
 The Czar full off in words and deeds
 And of that famous Youth, full soon removed Full many a glimpse (but sparingly bestowed
 Full off, when storms the welkin rend,
 Full merrily then would he sing and cry,
 Then sped themselves to bury him full fast ;
 And he gave up the ghost full peacefully ;
 And some did sing all out with the full throat.
 Full little joy have I now of thy cry.
 He may full soon go with an old man's hair.
 Within this court full seldom Truth avails,
 And he for dread did fly away full fast ;
 And then did she begin this song full high,
 Then spake one Bird, and full assent all gave ;
 For love of God, full piteously did say,
 I yonder saw her eke full blissfully ;
 And to himself full off he said, alas !
 Full ten times a day takes his heart by surprise.
 A Tuscan audience : but full soon was called .
 In odious litigation ; and full long,
 And full of hope day followed day
 Full soon in sorrow did I weep,
 Full soon thy Soul shall have her earthly freight,
 While burn in his full eyes the glorious tears.
 And my full heart was swell'd to dear delicious pain.
 Though peaceful, full of gladness. Thou art pleased,
 But from this awful burthen I full soon
 Then passionately loved ; with heart how full
 That gave thee liberty, full long desired,
 My spirit was up, my thoughts were full of hope ;
 Full off the quiet and exalted thoughts
 Their smooth enthrallment ;" but the heart was full.
 Too full for that reproach. My aged Dame
 My heart was full : I made no vows, but vows
 Still in his grasp, before me full in view,
 Full often, talking from the world of sleep .
 That drinks as if it never could be full.
 Full early trained to worship seamliness,
 In childhood, ere he was full twelve years old.
 Though doing wrong and suffering, and full off
 And, though full off the objects of our love
 At full command, to London first I turned,
 Was more than full ; amid my sobs and tears
 Full of one passion, vengeance, rage, or fear ?
 Or spirit that full soon must take her flight.
 Bare hills and valleys, full of caverns, rocks,
 Full speedily resounded, public hope,
 After the lapse of full eight years, those words,
 The budding rose above the rose full blown.
 Full measure of content ; but still I craved
 In balmy spring-time full of rising flowers
 Of female softness shall his life be full,
 And Hope full off fallacious as a dream ;
 Full often wished he that the winds might rage
 Untunes full off the pleasures of the day ;
 How full their joy ! Till, pitiable doom !
 Upon a bed of heath ;—full many a spot
 For full in view, approaching through a gate
 Full seventy winters hath he lived, and mark !
 Our housewife knew full well what she possessed !
 Lying full three parts buried among tufts
 The mind is full—and free from pain their pastime."
 Full on that tender-hearted Man he turned
 Give birth, full often, to unguarded words ;
 Use them, full off, as pioneers to ruin,
 For fixed annoyance ; and full off beset
 Full well I recollect. We often crossed
 She bore a secret burthen ; and full soon
 That wears a look so full of peace and hope
 (Full eight years past) the solitary prop
 Full off his doings leave me to deplore
 Full blest he was, ' Another Margaret Green,'
 These, and the name and title at full length,—
 Full off procured, yet may they claim respect,
 Then, in full many a region, once like this
 And that full trim of inexperienced hope
 Was full ; and had, I doubted not, returned,
 From the full river in the vale below,
 And full assemblage of a barbarous host ;
 For though in whispers speaking, the full heart
 With yellow in full blow.
 But soon as Luke, full ten years old, could stand
 And thickets full of songsters, and the voice
 Of full contentment, in a little shed
 Without desire full complacency
 Tearless, yet full of grief. —How heavenly fair Full-assurèd. And full-assurèd trust, joy without measure.
Full-blown. All about with full-blown flowers,
 With flourishing trumpet, came in full-blown state
 Not one of all the band, a full-blown flower.
Full-flowered. Full-flowered, and visible on every steep.
Full-formed. Full-formed, like Venus rising from the sea ;
 Full-formed, that take, with small internal help,

Full-grown. A young lamb's heart among the full-grown flocks.
 But these are all the graves of full-grown men !
 " Ne'er in the breast of full-grown Poet
 That from the shore a full-grown man might wade,
 Whereon a full-grown man might rest, nor dread
Full-orbed. The full-orbed Moon, slow-climbing, doth appear
 In the clear presence of the full-orbed Moon,
Full-swain. And forced the full-swain udder to demand,
Fully. Till fully passed and gone was the ninth
 night ;
Fulminations. (Of truth) are met by fulminations new—Fulness. Peace to my parting soul, the fulness of content."
 I bless her in the fulness of my joy
 In the whole fulness of its bloom, affords
 Chastening the fulness of a present bliss,
 Nor feel the fulness of that joy reproved ?
 The fulness of your bliss, I feel—I feel it all.
 Have fulness in herself ; even so with me .
 By Siddons trod in the fulness of her power.
 Though somewhat past the fulness of his prime,
 Will cover him, in the fulness of his strength,
Fumbles. Alas ! how he fumbles about the domains
Fume. Yes, let my master fume and fret,
 And fume the household deities with store
Fumes. Never excited by the fumes of wine
 That virtue, like the fumes and vapoury clouds
Fuming. From all the fuming vanities of Earth !
 Amid their own delight and fun,
 Of one tired out with fun and madness ;
 The Tinker lives in fun
Function. Each lighter function slumbering in the brain
 Thy function was to heal and to restore,
 The Form remains, the Function never dies .
 Thy function apostolical
 But some their function have disclaimed,
 With a congenial function art endued
 Locks every function up in blank reserve,
 And function, or, through strict vicissitude
 The excellence, pure function, and best power
 One function, above all, of such a mind
 " His sacred function was at length renounced ;
 His rank and sacred function. This deep vale
 " A Priest he was by function ; but his course
 But a glad function natural to man.
Functions. With all fine functions that afford delight—
 Thy functions are ethereal,
 Her functions are they therefore less divine,
 Where all his unambitious functions fail.
 Who comes with functions apostolical ?
 To humbler functions, awful Power !
 And functions dwell in beast and bird that sway
 That, for the functions of an ancient State—
 From even the humblest functions of the State ;
 Had changed their functions ; some, plebeian cards
 Forgot her functions, and slept undisturbed.
 Instinct with vital functions, but a block
 Hath dropped all functions by the gods bestowed,
 The varied functions and high attributes
 And the weak functions of one busy day,
 The outward functions of intelligent man ;
 And functions dying and produced at need,—
 Performs its functions ; rarely competent .
 The god-like functions of the Soul.
Funds. We from our funds drew largely ;—proud to curb,
Funeral. For whom at morning tolled the funeral bell ;
 They cannot be remembered ? Scarce a funeral
 Filled the funeral basin at Timothy's door ;
 " It were than any funeral bell ;
 For thee a funeral bell shall ring,
 Her annual funeral.
 As at an innocent funeral.
 The funeral dirge ;—she sees the knot
 For us who here in funeral strain
 A mourning or a funeral ;
 The land as with a funeral pall ?
 The cadence, as of psalms—a funeral dirge !
 Ye could not miss the funeral train—they yet
 The funeral train, the Shepherd and his Mate
 She reached the house, last of the funeral train ;
 —Nor was his funeral denied the grace
 A soldier's honours. At his funeral hour
Funeral. Ditches are graves—funeral rites denied ;
 And sober posies of funeral flowers,
Fur. A regal vest of fur he wears,
 Dogmatic Teachers, of the snow-white fur !

 Which genius did not hallow ; 'gainst the taint
 'Gainst all that in his heart, or theirs perhaps, said
 nay.
 'Gainst him who raised it,—his last work on earth :
 Gait. Stopping his gait, but not as if to gain
 And like a Roman matron's was her mien and gait.
 His richest splendour—when his veering gait . . .
 And long and slouching was his gait ;
 His gait, is one expression : every limb,
 Whatever formal gait of discipline . . .
 My voice, composed my gait, and, with the air
 Who crept along fitting her languid gait
 Active and nervous was his gait ; his limbs
 Creeping his gait and cowering, his lip pale,
 Galahad. When his touch failed.—Next came Sir
 Galahad : a treasure, that God giveth,
 Galaxy. Moved not ; meanwhile the galaxy displayed
 Along a Galaxy that knows no end,
 Alas for thee, bright Galaxy of Isles,
 Each in the other's blaze, a galaxy
 Gala. Where leafy shades fence off the blustering gale,
 And like a torrent roars the headstrong gale ;
 Tracking the motions of the fitful gale.
 Where mists, suspended on the expiring gale,
 Approaching, and upbraids the tardy gale ;
 Where breathed the gale that caught Wolfe's happiest sigh,
 Waves the ripe harvest in the autumnal gale ;
 And orange gale that o'er Lugano blows ;
 And stir not in the gale.
 For her good neighbour Susan Gale,
 There's none to help poor Susan Gale ;
 Or she will die, old Susan Gale.
 Away she hies to Susan Gale :
 To comfort poor old Susan Gale.
 To comfort poor old Susan Gale.
 Who is it, but old Susan Gale ?
 Where oft the stormy winter gale
 As pure as sunshine, and as soft a gale
 What seek ye, or what shun ye ? of the gale
 You need a strong and stormy gale
 Thou Victim of the stormy gale ;
 A sea of foliage, tossing with the gale,
 Turn into port ; and, reckless of the gale,
 But here no cannon thunders to the gale ;
 What heart-felt fragrance mingles with the gale
 By whom who blessed the soft and happy gale
 1. of his hold wing floating on the gale,
 When a soft summer gale at evening parts
 This new indifference to breeze or gale,
 To him who catches on the gale
 Dive, at thy choice, or have the freshening gale !
 Whence fragrance scents the water's desert gale,
 And roars between the hills the torrent gale,
 Tracking with silvery path the changeful gale ;
 He tastes the meanest note that swells the gale ;
 While mists, suspended on th' expiring gale,
 That flowed into a kindred stream ; a gale,
 Or nowhere ; days untrifled by the gale . . .
 Galas. Or from high points of rock looked out for fanning gales ;
 The churlish gales of penury, that blow
 Fresh gales and dews of life's delicious morn,
 With breakers roaring to the gales . . .
 And the wind loves them ; and the gentle gales—
 Rise, GULLIES, rise : the gales of youth shall bear
 To rouse the dawn, soft gales shall speed thy wing,
 With warmer suns and softer gales,
 In Zaragoza, smacked to the gales
 On gales that breathe too gently to recall
 —But, as soft gales dissolve the dreary snow,
 Gales sweet as those that over Eden blew !
 In thoughtful moments, wafted by the gales . . .
 Fresh gales to waft them to the far-off port ;
 —Thy fragrant gales and lute-resounding streams,
 The churlish gales, that unremitting blow
 Soft gales and dews of life's delicious morn,
 Of gales Etesian or of tender thoughts.

 To join that gallant ship of war,
 Did from the Norman win a gallant wratch ;
 Like gallant Falkland, by the Monarch's side,

 All followed him, a gallant band ! . . .
 And overpowered that gallant few.
 But to each gallant Captain and his crew . . .
 Or art thou one of gallant pride,

 And praised the gallant bearing, of a Knight . . .

 Gallery's. Saw, at a long-drawn gallery's dusky bound,
 Galley. Was this Sea-flower, this buoyant Galley ;
 So richly was this Galley laden,
 Gallia's. O'er Gallia's wastes of corn my footsteps led ;
 O'er Gallia's wastes of corn dejected led,
 Gallic. Why cast ye back upon the Gallic shore,
 In Gallic ears the unadulterate Word,
 Conquer the Gallic lily which thy foes . . .
 The servum pecus of a Gallic breed ?
 " From Gallic parents sprung,
 There flowed no Gallic blood, nor had I breathed
 The air of France, not less than Gallic zeal
 Gallop. And so will gallop on for aye,
 Urged o'er the wilderness in sportive gallop.
 To gallop through the country in blind zeal . . .
 Galloped. That as they galloped made the echoes
 roar ;
 Galloping. He's galloping away, away,
 And eager to spur on, the galloping steed ;
 Gallops. That gallops away with such fury and force Gallows. The gallows would one day of him be glad ;—
 Is it a gallows there portrayed ?
 Gambol. Gambol like a dancing skiff,
 To gambol with Life's falling Leaf.
 Or gambol—each with his shadow at his side,
 They cannot rest, they gambol like young whelps ;
 Gambols. In boyish gambols,—I was lost
 And where the rugged colts their gambols played,
 Game. The game is up !— If it he needful, Sir,
 As is the humour of the game,
 To hunt their fluttering game o'er rock and level
 green.
 Of life's uneasy game the stake,
 Six thousand veterans practised in war's game,
 While, to dislodge his game cities are sacked !
 He quakes not like the timid forest game,
 Where be the noisy followers of the game . . .
 And a last game of many hoverings
 Of song and dance and game ;
 Across the marsh, the game in view,
 War is passion's basest game
 And, interrupting oft that eager game,
 Or, shall I say ?—disdained, the game that lurks
 (Not as an intellectual game pursued . . .

 We hissed along the polished ice in games
 A round of tumult. Duly were our games
 And sports and games (too grateful in themselves,
 Hands apt for all ingenious arts and games ;

 There are to whom the garden, grove, and field,
 Of this fair garden, and its alleys dim,
 As from the beds and borders of a garden
 To cull her dinner from it's garden bed,
 With all its foolish pomp. The garden lay
 That garden of great intellects, undisturbed.
 The rooms, the court, the garden were not left
 Within our garden, found himself at once,
 Changed like a garden in the heat of spring,
 Of thee, thy chestnut woods, and garden plots
 Of garden ground run wild, its matted weeds . . . 763 Excursion 1. 454

Gates—continued.

He comes like Phœbus through the gates of morn
 Closes the gates of every sacred place . . .
 Open your gates, ye everlasting Piles!
 Open your gates, ye Monuments of love
 Has but approached the gates of womanhood,
 Through Moscow's gates, with gold unbarred,
 Bedlam, and those carved maniacs at the gates,
 That, reaching to her gates, spreads east and west,
 Within his Father's gates.—Whence came he?
 clothed
 With all their Shepherds. But the gates of Spring Gateway. Detained them near the gateway of the Castle.
 And through yon gateway, where is found,
 Ere the Brothers through the gateway . . .
 Myself have seen, a gateway, last remains Gateways. Courts, cloisters, flocks of churches, gateways, towers;
 Through the same gateways, sleep where they had slept,
Gather. To gather strawberries all day long;
 To gather leeches, being old and poor:
 Apart from happy Ghosts, that gather flowers
 And listening dolphins gather round.
 In hopes some tidings there to gather:
 That tempted first to gather it. That here,
 The wild-wood fruits to gather.
 What do we gather hence but firmer faith
 To gather round the hier these festal shows.
 And gather what ye find
 So shall the people gather and believe
 May gather to avenge this wrong
 While the Poor gather round, till the end of time
 His weary spirits gather rest.
 May gather up our thoughts, and mark at leisure
 One who would gather from eternal truth,
 And some we gather from the misty air,
 Here will he gather stores of ready bliss,
 The Clouds that gather round the setting sun
 Too weak to gather it, already love
 Gather afresh, and will have vent again:
 —He left me thus—he could not gather heart
 To gather, ranging through the tamer ground
 Without a band to gather it." At this
 Impends; the frost will gather round my heart;
 And the wild birds that gather round my perch.
 I freely gather; and my leisure draws
 To gather all their mountain family
Gathered. See Chance-gathered, Up-gathered.
 Would there perhaps have gathered the first fruits
 All-gathered to the spot, in open day
 Than when both young and old sit gathered round
 They built him of stones gathered up as they lay:
 Whose pleasures are in wild fields gathered,
 For this same purpose he had gathered up
 Apt likeness bears to hers, through gathered clouds
 The dancers all were gathered round,
 Lies gathered to his Father's side,
 Gathered his power, a manifest ally;
 Wherever fruits are gathered, and where'er
 Already gathered in this favoured Land
 Who gathered in betimes the unborn flock
 And fruitage gathered from the chestnut-wood,
 The Young-ones gathered in from hill and dale,
 Nations, and Death has gathered to his fold
 Yet more; around those Churches, gathered Towns
 Choice flowers are gathered! But, if Power may spring
 And gathered each and all into one place;
 O'er ripe fruit; seasonably gathered,
 Wouldst thou be gathered to Christ's chosen flock,
 The pleasure gathered from the rudiments
 And gathered with one mind a rich reward
 Gathered among those solitudes sublime
 A choir of redreasts gathered somewhere near
 With children gathered round; another street
 Gathered the purple cups that round them lay,
 And from the rubbish gathered up a stone,
 By knowledge gathered up from day to day;
 Had gathered,—"Ye have left my cell,—hut see
 On fruitage gathered from the tree of life;
 Gathered this fair report of them who dwell
 Gathered together in their peaceful fold?
 Thither we turned; and gathered, as we read
 Sped when the clouds had gathered and distained
 That gathered round the slowly-moving train.
 Were gathered to each other. Calm of mind
 Or kindred, gathered round him. As a tree
 Gathered together, all in still delight,
 Rapaciously we gathered flowery spoils
 Gathered together on the green hill-side,
 As gathered from the Matron's lips, and tell Gatherers. See Leech-gatherer.
Gathering. See Cowslip-gathering, Re-gathering,
Slowly-gathering.
 And when a gathering, light of shadows brown
 —But foes are gathering—Liberty must raise
 The gathering clouds grew red with stormy fire,
 (You saw them gathering for the festival)
 They made a gathering for him, shillings, pence,

Gathering—continued.

With accordant steps, or gathering . . .
 Gathering up a trustier line . . .
 And said that, gathering leeches, far and wide
 Gathering green weeds to mix with poppy flower,
 Intent on gathering wool from hedge and brake
 Which, gathering round, did on the banks
 Instead of gathering strength, must droop and pine;
 And look and listen—gathering, whence I may,
 By gathering with a wide embrace,
 Who, gathering up all that Time's envious tooth
 Who, gathering true pleasures wherever they grow,
 Where he, unpropped, and by the gathering food
 His Followers gathering in from Tees, . . .
 In open field their gathering foes, . . .
 And, while the mortal mist is gathering, draws
 From social warblers gathering in . . .
 Of shining water, gathering as it seemed, . . .
 Gathering upon us;" quickening then the pace
 In closer gathering cares, such as become
 The host of insects gathering round my face,
 With one so slow in gathering up his thoughts,
 Of the contiguous torrent, gathering strength
 And gathering all within their tender shade,
 While all things else are gathering to their homes,
 Their summons, and are gathering round for food,
Gatherers. —The evening darkness gathers round
 The Sailor gathers up his bed,
 Gatherers unlighted strength from hour to hour.
 That gathers up each petty straggling rill
 Gatherers, and is preserved; and feeding dew
Gaudiest. Lithest, gaudiest Harlequin!
Gauds. And all the perishable gauds
Gaudy. Springs forth in presence of this gaudy show, Faith crushed, yet proud of weeds, her gaudy
 crown,
 Or all the gaudy pomp of splendid Vice,
 Gowns grave, or gaudy, doctors, students, streets,
 Of a too gaudy region. Different sight
 To which the trappings of a gaudy world
 Gaudy with reliques of that festival, . . .
 Like bees they swarmed, gaudy and gay as bees;
Gaul. Thus spake—and lo! a Fleet, for Gaul address,
Gauls. —Fly, wretched Gauls! ere they the charge renew
Gaunt. Her bony visage—gaunt and deadly wan;
 By sickness, gaunt and lean, with sunken cheeks
 How gaunt the Creature is,—how lean
 Like a gaunt shaggy Porter forced to wait . . .
Gauze. And his two pretty pinions of blue dusky gauze
Gave. Through vacant worlds where Nature never gave
 A man there wandering, gave a mournful shriek,
 And gave me food—and rest, more welcome, more
 desired.
 When I gave way to your request; and now,
 And, as thou know'st, gave me that humble Côt
 With which he gave the boon—I see it now!
 Gave me a hearty welcome; they had laid
 All vanished. I gave way—do you attend?
 She gave me eyes, she gave me ears;
 And I gave money to the host,
 While to that mountain-lamb she gave its evening
 meal.
 To their echoes gave the sound, . . .
 Long, strict, and tender was the embrace he gave,
 That gave it birth: in service meek
 My Child! they gave thee to another,
 Immortal as the love that gave it being,
 Slew, and as quickly to a second gave
 And gave it to the Boy; witherewith equip
 She gave consent, and Michael was at ease.
 He in the dissolute city gave himself
 When clouds gave way at dead of night
 As gave sure sign that they, who in that house
 Gave the baptismal name each Sister here.
 With thine, and gave the mournful name which thou wilt ever bear.
 Gave the word—the horses heard
 Sir Lancelot gave a safe retreat
 Gave to the days a mark and name
 Deformed and sullied, patiently gave up
 And yet a boon I gave her, for the creature
 And gave them back his own.
 Gave with a maiden's true good-will
 Alas! for him who gave the word;
 I gave this after-lay,
 Her darkness splendour gave, her silence power,
 Gave the first impulse to the Poet's song;
 A Voice to Light gave Being;
 Then Peter gave a sudden jerk,
 He gave a groan, and then another,
 And then he gave a third,
 He gave three miserable groans;
 To which our fancies, mingling, gave free scope

Gave—continued.

Those steps I clomb; the mistis before me gave
Of this small lute gave ease to Petrarch's wound;
I gave this paradise for winter hours,
Gave it while cares were weighing on my heart,
Yet He whose heart in childhood gave her troth
Your Father such example gave,
Heaven gave Rob Roy a dauntless heart
Who on that day the word of onset gave!
And was his friend; and gave him joy
And gave his doleful warning.
Gave specious colouring to aim and act,
She gave, if Faith might tread the beaten ways
Haste, Virgins, haste!—the flowers which summer
gave
Which to unequal laws gave birth,
In keen pursuit—and gave, where'er she flew,
That gave the Roman his triumphal shells;
And shrubs, whose pleasant looks gave proof how kind
And very names of those who gave them birth
That gave them being, vanish to a sound.
Embellishing the ground that gave them birth
Gave back a rich and dazzling sheen,
As thy own Yarrow gave to me
Who gave their wishes open vent;
Raised, as the Vision gave command,
That passion, prudently gave way;
"Your Father gave me cordial greeting;
Where mine the trusty staff that Jewel gave
Which that sweet season gave,
Who gave us nobler loves, and nobler cares—
He knows, who gave that love sublime;
And gave that strength of feeling, great
Gave, in the field of Luz, to Jacob's sight
Gave him first the wished-for part
The spear, yet gave to works divine
Their work's foundation, gave with careful hand
Of meek devotion, which erewhile it gave,
That gave them birth:—months passed, and still
this hand,
And the fifth morning gave him sight
Soon gratitude gave way to love
And when those rites had ceased, the Spot gave birth
Gave to her thought, that in a little space
And he gave up the ghost full peacefully;
Then spake one Bird, and full assent all gave;
He gave them the best that he had; or, to say
Gave to my charge Urbino's numerous flock.
And if in him meekness at times gave way,
A timely utterance gave that thought relief,
And gave, in handfuls gave, the treacherous store:
I gave a fervent welcome to the sight,
And gave to Bitias, urging the prompt lord;
If e'er, on wings which active fancy gave,
Than Fancy gave assurance of some work
Gave out to meadow-grounds and hills a loud
That gave thee liberty, full long desired,
I gave a moral life: I saw them feel,
Of loneliness gave way to empty noise
Gave treacherous sanction to that over-love
And gave it vent in her last words. O Friend!
Blow kept upon an eminence that gave
Gave way to overpressure from the times
Gave intermitting prospect of the corpse
And gave the Mind that apprehensive power
A daughter's welcome gave me, and I loved her
Which gave employment to her listless hands—
And, when she at her table gave me food,
"Ere my departure, to her care I gave,
Whose presence gave no comfort, were gone by,
Resolved the dubious point; and sentence gave
The portion gave of coarse but wholesome fare
His countenance gave notice that my zeal
Gave modest intimation to the mind
That happiness; and use and habit gave
Which Nature gently gave, in woods and fields;
"Such timely warnings," said the Wanderer, "gave Gave obvious instances of the sad effect
True to their choice; and gave their bones in trust
To no perverse suspicion he gave way,
That gave them nourishment. When frosty winds
The Valley, opening out her bosom, gave
Or to Andates, female Power! who gave Entering the cell gave restlessness to one,
Gave to thy fame a more illustrious flight
Gave to triumph Freedom's cause,
Gave to Athens equal laws,
Gave to triumph Freedom's cause,
Gave to Athens equal laws.

Gay—continued.

Rapid and gay, as if the earth were air,
Perused him with a gay complacency.
The sky, the gay green field,
Limbs stout as thine, and lips as gay,
And left, the couple neither gay perhaps
Now laugh and be gay, to the woods away!
While fluttering o'er this gay Recess,
My branches are so fresh and gay
When thou art up, alert and gay
"Gay Sylphs this miniature will court,
Transient deception! a gay freak
The Sailor, Man by nature gay,
Whose party-coloured garments gay
A dancing Shape, an Image gay,
A poet could not but be gay,
Pleased with herself, nor sad, nor gay;
No dolphin ever was so gay
This Stripling, sportive, gay, and hold,
And she was blithe and gay,
Are confident and gay;
The sunny vale looked gay,
My gay and beautiful Canoe,
What need of clamorous bells, or ribands gay,
The Sonnet glittered a gay myrtle leaf
A gay society with faces bright.
Calm expectations, leaving to the gay
So the bright faces of the young and gay
And, on the mouldered walls, how bright, how gay,
Its second twilight, and looks gay,
And bonnet with a feather gay,
Alone, and innocent, and gay!
A gay saloon, with waters dancing!
Heaven grant that other Cities may be gay!
A white-robed Negro, like a lady gay,
Was fit for some gay throng;
From the smooth breast of gay Winandernefe?
Gay vision under sullen skies
And we were gay, our hearts at ease;
More than fulfilled, as gay Campania's shores
Gay June would scorn us. But when bleak winds
roar
There dwelt the gay, the bountiful, the bold;
See what gay wild flowers deck this earth-built Cot,
(Even with the young, the hopeful, or the gay)
In trellised shed with clustering roses gay,
The sun shines bright; the fields are gay
Converging walks, and fountains gay,
Of pity or fear; and More's gay genius played
Through the still churchyard, each with garland
gay
The counter Spirit found in some gay church
Faint sound, that, for the gayest of the gay,
And make the serious happier than the gay?
It neither damps the gay, nor checks the witty,
And if the harp pleased his gay youth, it rings
Queen art thou still for each gay plant
(Her Father told her so) in youth's gay dawn
In her own dawn—a dawn less gay and bright,
How could he think of the live creature—gay
With nets and sails outspread and streamers gay,
Mid the gay prattle of those infant tongues,
More could my pen report of grave or gay
Poor Robin is yet flowerless; but how gay
Such happy privilege hath life's gay Prime,
Would it, as, any linnet, gay,
They pruned themselves, and made themselves
right gay,
At Woodstock, on the meadow green and gay.
Ye Striplings, light of heart and gay,
Oh true of heart, of spirit gay,
And all the earth is gay;
And soft, and gay, and beautiful thou art,
And Hope gay Pilot of the hold design,
Of gay confusion still be uppermost,
Magnificent, and beautiful, and gay.
The transformation wrought by gay attire.
A part-coloured show of grave and gay,
Or eager, though as gay and undepressed.
Like bees they swarmed, gaudy and gay as bees;
Among the wretched and the falsely gay,
Solems or gay; whether some heautecous dame
Than the gay Corin of the groves, who lives
With scoffers, seeking light and gay revenge
That gay assemblage. Round them and above,
Gay, and affecting graceful gaiety;
Vilest hypocrisy—the laughing, gay
Choose, with the gay Athenian, a conceit
From mild to angry, and from sad to gay,
Of gay companions, to the natal roof
Gay as our spirits, free as our desires;
Of gay or tragic pictures. You have seen,
And easy contemplation; gay parterres,
A gay or pensive tenderness prevailed,
"How gay the habitations that bedeck
That on the outset wastes its gay desires,
Gay, volatile, ingenious, quick to learn,
Sincerely wretched hearts, or falsely gay,
Or the clear moon. The queen of these gay sports,

Gay—continued.

Mild Man! he is not gay, but they are gay; . . .
 With a gay confidence and seemly pride; . . .
 Plunged—mid a gay and busy throng convened
 Shadowy, yet gay and lightsome as it stood
 By beds and banks Arcadian of gay flowers
 Of the gay mind, as ofttimes splenetic youth
 Ah! if I were a lady gay
Gayest. Wreathed round with yellow flowers the gayest of the land. . . .
 Faint sound, that, for the gayest of the gay,
Gaze. No favoured eye was e'er allowed to gaze
 The kneeling peasant scarcely dares to gaze;
 And, lifting up his head, he then would gaze
 Thou seest,—and he would gaze till it became
 Could gaze, as on a show by idlers sought;
 Over the vessel's side, and gaze and gaze;
 The while on thee they gaze in simple truth,
 And while I gaze upon the spectacle
 We gaze, we also learn to love.
 Here let me gaze enrapt upon that eye,
 Where no procrastinating gaze
 Of man's enquiring gaze, but to his hope
 From age to age, and did not, while we gaze
 Well may'st thou halt—and gaze with brightening
 eye!
 She loves to gaze upon a crystal river—
 Gaze on the moon by parting clouds revealed.
 Living with liberty on thee to gaze,
 The traveller, at this day, will stop and gaze . . .
 That an accursed thing it is to gaze . . .
 On men who gaze heart-smitten by the view,
 Dazzling the vision that presumes to gaze.
 Can hope the general eye thereon would gaze,
 To muse, to creep, to halt at will, to gaze—
 Upon some keene-worn cell to gaze:
 My ears did listen, 'twas enough to gaze;
 On pictures to gaze where they drank in their hues;
 Stirs not; enrap I gaze with strange delight,
 Nor cease to gaze upon the hold Relief
 In silence did Klog Arthur gaze
 Hence, while we gaze, a more enduring fear!
 With unparticipated gaze;
 In vain, upon the growing Rill may gaze.
 But, rooted here, I stand and gaze
 Its ripeness to the feeding gaze;
 As in a map, before the adventurer's gaze—
 I gaze upon a Portrait whose mild gleam
 Or changed and changing, I not seldom gaze . . .
 Ere he had ceased to gaze, perhaps to speak:
 Hides half their beauty from the common gaze;
 Fair scenes! with other eyes, than once, I gaze,
 And long, with wistful gaze, his walk survey'd
 —With backward gaze, lock'd joints, and step of pain.
 The Moon's fix'd gaze between the opening trees;
 With hollow ringing ears and darkening gaze;
 On Zutphen's plain; or where with soften'd gaze
 Haply that child in fearful doubt may gaze,
 With pulseless hand, and fix'd unwearied gaze,
 'Tis sorrow enough on that visage to gaze,
 They look with wonder on the gifts—they gaze
 We gaze—nor grieve to think that we must die,
 Standing to gaze upon her while she hung
 Wert used to lie and gaze upon the clouds
 Sit in the shade together, while they gaze,
 But stirring to the spirit. Who could gaze
Gazed. Think not the peasant from aloft has gazed
 Perplexed and comfortless he gazed around,
 We gazed with terror on their gloomy sleep,
 Dismissed, again on open day I gazed,
 No pity asking, on the group she gazed
 Breathless he gazed upon her face,—then took
 He had remained; but, as he gazed, there grew
 He gazed rejoicing, and again he gazed,
 Would that mine eyes had never gazed . . .
 I gazed and gazed, and to myself I said,
 —When I had gazed perhaps two minutes' space,
 And took no note of the hour while thence they gazed,
 The blooming heath their couch, gazed side by side,
 I gazed—and gazed—but little thought
 Of him who gazes, or has gazed? a grave and steady joy,
 But gazed upon the spoil with silent joy.
 And gazed and gazed upon that darling spot.
 And, while I gazed, there came to me a thought
 On which four thousand years have gazed!
 Thou hast clomb aloft, and gazed
 On which they gazed themselves away.
 I gazed—and, self-accused while gazing, sighed
 Dissolve—and leave to him who gazed a sigh.
 This Work, I now have gazed on it so long
 Trembling I gazed, but heard a voice—it said,
 Where gazed the peasant from his door,
 I stood, and gazed upon a marble stone,
 I gazed with earnestness, and dared no more.
 Sage Merlin gazed with admiration:
 When first I gazed upon her;

Gazed—continued.

The Earls upon each other gazed, . . .
 Salvation to all eyes that gazed, . . .
 But while I gazed in tender reverie
 Churches, on whose symbolic beauty gazed
 Long as we gazed upon the form and face,
 A mighty One upon me gazed; . . .
 My fancy kindled as I gazed;
 And, while I gazed, with sudden shock
 I gazed from Hampstead's breezy heath.
 Gaz'd by his sister-wives, the monarch stalks;
 I gazed upon the visionary train,
 Threw back my eyes, return'd, and gazed again.
 Gaz'd on thy lovely Nymphs with food deluged,
 I gazed with growing love, a higher power
 Or father fondly gazed upon with pride.
 His steadfast face and sightless eyes, I gazed,
 Upon this restless lustre have I gazed,
 The dead, upon the dying heaped, and gazed.
 That neither passed away nor changed, I gazed
 Who, from her sovereign elevation, gazed
 He gazed upon that mighty orb of song,
 I then forgot him:—there I stood and gazed:
 To One on whose mild radiance many gazed
 She gazed as on a pure and spotless gift
 He gazed, with admiration unexpressed,
 The Lady whispered, while we stood and gazed
 We gazed, in silence hushed, with eyes intent
 The illusion strengthening as he gazed, he felt

General—continued.

Yet, through this weakness of the general heart,
 Less, as might seem, for general guardianship
 Their duties from all forms; and general laws,
 —Yet, in its general tenor, your complaint
 Do tend their flocks) partake man's general lot
 A general greeting was exchanged; and soon
 " Yet for the general purposes of faith
 With little change of general sentiment,
 And general humility in death?
 From trivial themes to general argument
 With willingness, to whom the general ear
 Trust not to partial care a general good;
 The general aspect of the scene; but each
 Would More or Henry boast the general voice?

Generate. To generate, to preserve, and to restore; Generation. Has to our generation brought and hriings

And wither, every human generation
 'Tis vain-glorious Generation! what new powers
 Restless, and restless generation, powers
 Which we, a generation self-extolled,

Generations. Through five long generations had the heart

That, while the generations of mankind
 Fleet as the generations of mankind,
 The living generations with the dead;
 As generations come and go,
 Where happy generations lie,
 A day to future generations dear!
 Of generations of illustrious men,
 And with the generations of mankind
 Whereon their endless generations dwelt.
 Supports the generations, multiples
 And countless generations of mankind
 The generations of mankind have knelt
 A child of hope? Do generations press
 On generations, without progress made?
 The generations are prepared; the pangs,
 And lays the generations low in dust.

Generous. Your generous qualities have won due
 praise,

But, intermingled with the generous seed,
 Full soon this generous purpose thou may'st rue,
 Immoveable by generous sighs,
 They parted; and the generous Vaudracour
 "Generous Frank! the just in effort
 Which, with a generous shout, the crowd did ratify.
 By generous pride within the breast;
 A generous cause a victim did demand;
 The mind's least generous wish a mendicant
 Be independent, generous, brave;
 Said generous Rob. "What need of books?
 Laugh with the generous household heartily
 Say, rather, with that generous sympathy
 Would mirth run round, with generous fare;
 A State whose generous will through earth is dealt;
 —It is the generous Spirit, who, when brought
 If generous Loyalty must stand in awe
 The generous course, aspire, and still aspire;

Of the world's freezing cares—to generous Youth—
 All caught the infection—as generous as he.
 And all that generous nurture breeds to make
 But she who trains the generous British youth
 By generous Emulation taught to rise,
 Him now the generous Dido by soft chains
 Passions unworthy of youth's generous heart
 As generous as a fountain; selfishness
 Or the remembrance of a generous deed,
 Are generous as the young; and, if content
 Though under skies less generous, less serene:
 Self-sacrifice the firmest; generous love,
 A generous spirit, and a body strong
 Generous and charitable, prompt to serve;
 All generous feelings flourish and rejoice;
 This generous Youth, too negligent of self,
 A paegyric from your generous tongue!
 The generous inclination, the just rule,

Genève. Of Eau de Zurich, Lac Genève,
Genève. Of Genève. In both her clamorous
 Halls

Genial. Rolled fast along the sky his warm and genial moon.

The snows dissolved, and genial Spring returned
 A happy, genial influence,
 They met me in a genial hour,
 To genial faith, still rich in genial good;
 Suffer my genial spirits to decay:
 Their course, or genial showers descend!
 Through all vicissitudes, till genial Spring
 Invisible? yet Spring her genial brow

From desolation toward the genial prime;
 The genial spot had ever shown
 Brought to this genial climate, when disease
 Those images of genial beauty, oft
 A genial hearth, a hospitable board,
 Strains offered only to the genial Spring.
 Hence have I genial seasons, hence have I
 Upon the genial sense of youth

Genial—continued.

Should praise thee, genial Power!
 To rural incidents, whose genial powers

To his own genial instincts; and was heard
 Old am I, and to genial pleasure slow;
 Hath been revived, and if this genial mood
 The last night's genial feeling overflowed
 The Swede, the Russian; from the genial south,
 My journey, and beneath a genial sun,
 With genial feelings still predominant;
 Prophetic sympathies of genial faith:
 When genetic circumstance hath favoured them,
 Of genial thought in childhood, and in spite
 Ministering to our need. In genial mood,
 Beside a fire whose genial warmth seemed met
 That in more genial times, when I was free
 For every genial power of heaven and earth,
 With a strange sound of genial harmony;
 The native Genii walk the mountain green?
 Dwarf Genii, moonlight-loving Fays,
 Ye Genii! to his covert speed;
 Fays, Genii of gigantic size!
 Aw'd, while below the Genii hold their state.
 Round a lone fane the human Genii mourn,
 By Genii of romance; or bath'd in grave
 Crowded with Genii busy among works
 Genii, and winged Angels that are Lords

Genii. The "parting Genii" sighs with hollow breath

Which genius did not hallow; 'gainst the taint
 When the wings of genius rise,
 With hues of genius on his cheek
 His genius and his moral fame
 Of Plato's genius, from its lofty sphere,
 A Genius dwells, that can subdue
 The local Genius ne'er befriends
 Genius of Raphael! if thy wings
 Such strains of rapture as the Genius played
 Bard of the Fleece, whose skillful genius made
 Thy genius forward like a winged steed.
 Might cool;—and, as the Genius of the flood

Yet, helped by Genius—untired comforter,
 No public harm that Genius from her course
 He sang, his genius "glinted" forth,
 There seek the genius of your Sire,
 The local Genius hurries me aloft,
 His milder Genius (thanks to the good God
 In the flower-besprent meadows his genius we trace
 And ne'er did Genius slight them, as they go,
 Of pity or fear; and More's gay genius played
 Thy heart! what hopes inspired thy genius, skilled,
 The soul of Genius, if he dare to take
 Alas! the Genius of our age, from Schools
 Whose lofty genius could survive
 Of genius from the dust:

Then Genius, shunning fellowship with Pride,
 Sighed for, in heart and genius, overcome
 With which his genius shook the buskined stage.
 The Genius of plenty preserved him from harm:
 O now that the genius of Bewick were mine,
 And his pure native genius, lead him back
 Commemorating genius, talent, skill,
 So genius triumphed over seeming wrong,
 —There, did the iron Genius not disdain
 Yet more; the tyrant Genius, still at strife
 What Genius smiles on yonder food?
 The glory of my youth. Of genius, power,
 Genius of Burke! forgive the pen seduced
 Whose genius spanned o'er a gloomy theme
 Entered, with Shakespeare's genius, the wild woods
 Or genius, under Nature, under God,
 Hence Genius, born to thrive by interchange
 And that the Genius of the Poet hence
 "Yes" said the Priest, "the Genius of our hills—
 His genius mounted to the plains of heaven.
 In him revealed a scholar's genius shone;
 As if some friendly Genius had ordained

 As beautiful, and gentle and benign,
 Has been forgotten. Farewell! Gentle pilgrims,
 Soon would her gentle voice make peace between us.
 We must be gentle. Leave him to my care.

Gentle—continued.

Ah gentle Love! if ever thought was thine . . . 111 *Tis said that some Turn from me, gentle Love! nor let me walk . . . 111 *Tis said that some
 A gentle flash of light that came
 Were yet with pensive fear and gentle awe
 O gentle Muses! let me tell
 O gentle Muses! is this kind?
 Of Nature, by the gentle agency
 His cradle, as with a woman's gentle hand.
 "Pluck it for me, gentle gardener,
 Gentle pleasures round her moved,
 And prompt to many a gentle deed:
 Ye, gentle breezes from the west,
 That gentle days were nigh!
 Soon as gentle breezes bring
 Or rather of some gentle maid,
 That is gentle by nature?
 And there for gentle pleasure live;
 For calm and gentle is his mien;
 I rather think the gentle Dove
 But gentle Nature plays her part
 And with his team is gentle here
 But to its gentle touch how sensitive
 In gentleness of heart; with gentle hand
 And, still as I drew near with gentle pace,
 A gentle answer did the old Man make,
 —Yielding to this gentle spell,
 By woman's gentle fortitude,
 And the wind loves them; and the gentle gales—
 Peaceful striving, gentle play
 To see his gentle panniered train
 I've heard of one, a gentle Soul,
 Perplexed the good man's gentle soul,
 But he hath said, poor gentle wight!
 A gentle, a relaxing, power!
 And gentle as an infant child,
 Forth to the gentle Ass he springs,
 "Think, gentle Lady, of a Harp so far
 O gentle Sleep! do they belong to thee,
 O gentle Creature! do not use me so,
 As hallows and makes pure all gentle hearts.
 To gentle Natures, thanks not Heaven amiss.
 With love and gentle speeches,
 And the pure mountains, and the gentle Tweed,
 Shed gentle favours: rural works are there,
 O gentle Power of darkness! these mild hues;
 What lovelier home could gentle Fancy choose?
 —A gentle Boy (perchance with blood
 Beloved by every gentle Muse
 Go forth, and please the gentle and the good;
 The dew whose moisture fell in gentle drops
 Thy gentle Chiabrera!—not a stone,
 Near Anio's stream I spied a gentle Dove
 Do still survive, and, with those gentle hearts
 These gentle breezes waft—or airs that meet
 A gentle Sorceress, and benign,
 Soon did the gentle Nina reach
 Once more did gentle Nina lift
 In silence watched the gentle strife
 Soothed by the unseen River's gentle roar.
 In gentle bosoms, while serene leaves
 Search, for their worth, some gentle heart wroog-
 proof,
 A land where gentle manners ruled
 The gentle Una, of celestial birth,
 Or like a ship some gentle day
 Gentle as a weary wave
 Which do the gentle Creature wrong,
 Is spotless, and holy, and gentle, and bright;
 With love divine and gentle light?
 Approaching in her gentle way,
 That grey-haired Man of gentle blood,
 Oh hear me, hear me, gentle Maid,
 She yielded, and with gentle pace,
 That he was born of gentle blood;
 —Oh! surely 'twas a gentle rousing
 These both the gentle Creature lie
 Of their protection, gentle virtues thrive;
 Feels, through the influence of her gentle reign,
 Brute rapine, or with gentle lure she tames,
 Whose rage the gentle skies in vain reprove,
 Whispering how meek and gentle he can be!
 Nor has her gentle beauty power to move
 And wake him with such gentle heed
 Gentle awakenings, visitations meek;
 Queen of the stars!—so gentle, so benign,
 Where once came monk and nun with gentle stir,
 My gentle Reader, I perceive
 O gentle Reader! you would find
 The gentle Lady married to the Moor;
 To homefelt pleasures and to gentle scenes;
 A gentle, pensive, white-robed sisterhood,
 In thy gentle virgin heart;
 Such gentle mists as glide,
 Dark hut to every gentle feeling true,
 That gentle admirations raise
 Sound o'er the lake with gentle shock . . .

Returning, like a ghost unaid,
By ruder fancy, that a troubled ghost
Uprises like a ghost!
No ghost more softly ever trod;
But this wild Ruin is no ghost
A ghost, by glimpses, may present
In the grey sky hath left his lingering Ghost,
The feudal Warrior-chief, a Ghost unaid,
Here wanders like a gliding ghost,
Along the plain of Sarum, by the ghost
In him who at the ghost of guilt doth start.
By sound, or ghost of sound, in mazy strife;
The Ghost of Flogat to his tuneful Cave
A wandering Ghost, so thinks the Knight,
If Emma's Ghost it were,
Or wan despair—the ghost of false hope fled
Which some have named her Predecessor's ghost.
And he gave up the ghost full peacefully;
Soon after, this man's Ghost unto him came
Simonides, admonished by the ghost,
A dismal look; the yew-tree had its ghost,
Breathed up its smoke, an image of his ghost
Eternity, as men constrain a ghost
He came, the ghost of beauty and of health,
Is haunted—by what ghost? a gentle spirit
Ghost-like. The ghost-like image of a cloud?
Spots where a word, ghost-like, survives to show Ghostliness. Had bodied forth the ghostliness of things
Ghostly. With unrejoicing berries—ghostly Shapes
Pray in ghostly agonies.
The ghostly word, thus plainly seen,
A thousand ghostly fears, and haunting thoughts, proceed!
By ghostly power—but Time's unsparing hand
A ghostly Domination, unconfined
But from the ghostly tenants of the wind,
And they could hear his ghostly song who trod
The ghostly language of the ancient earth,
His ghostly figure moving at my side,
The ghostly semblance of a hooded monk,
With long and ghostly shanks—forms which once

Giddiness. Which, in the giddiness of self-applause, Giddy. No meadows thrown between, the giddy
steeps
Where is he that giddy Sprite,
To rouse the wicked from their giddy dream—
Of giddy Bacchanals belong?
Or, to the giddy top of self-esteem
Are prompt attendants, 'mid that giddy bliss
With giddy motion. But the time approached
And giddy prospect of the raving stream,
Giddy and restless; ever and anon
Into the lists of giddy enterprise—
To run the giddy round of vain delight,
Not giddy yet aerial, with a depth
Gideon. And Gideon blew the trumpet, soul-inflamed,
Gift. The same that tempted me to loathe the gift—
Softened till it becomes a gift of mercy.
Grew, by strength the gift of love,
Nor can the winds restore his simple gift.
I but repay a gift which I myself
As sure as I've the gift of sight,
The gift of this adventurous song;
To them I may have owed another gift,
Accept the gift, behold him face to face!
The bosom-weight, your stubborn gift,
The Gift to king Amphion
Will smile upon this gift with more than mild coutent!
On favoured ground, thy gift, where I might dwell
A soothing recompense, his gift, is thine!
That every gift of noble origin
A gift of that which is not to be given
The gift of immortality;
Were but the Gift a meet Return to thee
Or gift to be presented at the throne
There let at least the gift be laid,
And welcome, as a gift of grace,
Thou wretched Outcast, from the gift of fire
Maintains the else endangered gift of life;
The gift of exalting, and with playful smile:
A portion of a gift is won.
Shall now by such a gift with joy be moved,
Of an immortal spirit, is a gift
Your gift, ere shutters close—
"Such bounty is no gift of chance."
But benefits, his gift, we trace—
O gift divine of quiet sequestration!
From such Pandorion gift may come a Pest
But for a gift that consecrates the joy?
To lack that first great gift, the vital soul,
The gift is yours; if in these times of fear
The blessing of my life; the gift is yours,
A gift then first bestowed. The varied banks
Share with us thy fresh spirits, whether gift
By Nature's gift so favoured. Upon a board
A gift that was come rather late than soon.
The gift which God has placed within his power,
The gift of tongues might fall, and power arrive
Yea, never thought of judging; with the gift
Of calmness equally are Nature's gift:
A gift, to use a term which they would use,
Heaven's gift, a sense that fits him to perceive
The last and later portions of this gift
A gift of genuine insight; that my Song
A precious gift; for, as he grew in years,
Of red ripe currants; gift by which he strove,
His bounteous gift! or saw him toward the deep
No—thy sank into me, the hounteous gift
To those who need the gift. But, after all,
And that best gift of heaven hath fallen on them;
She gazed as on a pure and spotless gift
His Daughter, and that late and high-prized gift,
The precious gift of hearing. He grew up
"The Father—him at this unlooked-for gift
That in the steeple hang, his pious gift."
Seems but a fleeting sunbeam's gift, whose peace
The gift of winds, and whom the winds again
With zeal, acknowledgment that with the gift
Gifted. See Soul-gifted.
Gifted to purge the vapour atmosphere
Thus, gifted Friend, but with the placid brow
Why, gifted with such powers to send abroad
Gifts. With these our latest gifts of tender thought;
Elast taken gifts which thou dost little need.
And fortune with her gifts and lies.
Two separate Creatures in their several gifts
Its natural gifts for purposes of rest,
Than that a child, more than all other gifts
In stray gifts to be claimed by whoever shall find;
Faint I, nor mourn nor murmur; other gifts
His gifts imperfect—Spectre though I be
Full surely, when with such proud gifts of life
Disparaging Man's gifts, and proper food.
Sweet Fancy! other gifts must I receive;
And so, His gifts and promises between,
Gifts which, for wonder or delight,
Such gifts had those seafaring men
Such simple gifts prepare,
