Gigants—continued.

Thy gifts, magnificent Region, ever young . . . 367 *As indignation 5
In sacred converse gifts with Alfred shares. . . 425 Ecc. Sonn. 1. 26. 14
Were not some gifts withheld by jealous hands, . . . 455 Rydal Mere 18
A peaceful spot where Nature's gifts abound; . . . 470 *From early 12
What witchery, for pure gifts of inward seeing, . . . 480 Cordelia 12
Their gifts she hails (deemed precious, as they prove
Thy gifts, thy beauty scorn; . . . 503 Warning 28
And shall the Verse not tell of lighter gifts
Present the maddening gifts, and kindle heat
Achates, with the gifts to Carthage hied; . . . 540 *Lady! a 67
They look with wonder on the gifts—they gaze
She views the gifts; upon the child then turns
Those lofty hopes awhile, for present gifts
Its digity; with gifts he bubbles o'er
Where I was reared; in Nature's primitive gifts
Endowed by Nature with her fairest gifts
To me came rarely charged with natural gifts,
And all the earth was budding with these gifts
By Nature; men endowed with highest gifts,
Baronial court or royal; cheered with gifts
"For this fair Bride, most rich in gifts of mind,
On you have been conferred? what gifts, withheld
But is that bounty absolute?—His gifts, . . . 817
Powers not unjustly likened to those gifts
With personal gifts, and bright instinctive wit,
Fall to the ground; whose gifts of nature lie
Thy gifts were utterly withheld from him
Gifts nobler are vouchsafed alike to all;
From whom all gifts descend, all blessings flow!"
On objects unaccustomed to the gifts

Gigantic. Left by gigantic arms—at length surveys

Gigantic mountains rough with crags; beneath,
Science advances with gigantic strides;
Among the interior Alps, gigantic crew,
Fays, Genii of gigantic size!
Swell more gigantic on the steadfast sight;
From Heaven, gigantic force to beardless boys.
Of some gigantic warrior clad in mail,
And majesty with this gigantic stream,
Measuring the force of those gigantic powers
Gild. To gild the total tablet of his days;
Fair Prime of life! were it enough to gild
Shall gild their passage to eternal rest.
Nor failed to gild the spires of Bonn,
Leading such companion I that gilded dome,
Within her gilded cage confined
And the green, gilded snake, without troubling the
And the green lizard and the gilded newt
And gilded flocks appear.
Drawn forth by pressure of his gilded chains,

The gilded turf arrays in richer green . . . 340 Fort Fuentes 7
From gilded rafters many a blazing light . . . 433 Ecc. Sonn. 2. 21. 7
And gilded sympathies, the willow wreath, . . . 457 *Had this 32
And the horse under him—in gilded pomp . . . 528 *Those breathing 101
More solid than the gilded clouds of heaven? . . . 594 Ev. Wh. Quarto 161
The gilded summer flies to mix and weave . . . 625 Æneid 101
Gilding. Gilding that cottage with her fondest ray,
The very gilding, lamps and painted scrolls, . . . 683 Prelude 6. 552
Gilds. Sapped by the very beam that gilds, . . . 689 Prelude 7. 134
Giles. And from long banishment recall Saint Giles, Giltred. We've weathered out together. My poor Giltred!

Give—continued.

Give her wings that she may fly, 204
 —Give Sir Lancelot Threlkeld praise! 204
 Give on this well-known couch, one nuptial kiss 210
 The hoary peaks of Scotland that give birth 219
 Whose trembling fancy would to love give birth; 220
 Give ear, O Man! to their appeal, 228
 Or what a hand of flesh can give; 228
 Thy inspirations give— 232
 A greeting give of measured glee; 233
 To life, to life give back thine ear: 234
 But might I give advice to you, 245
 If Thou the spirit give by which I pray: 257
 Like Grecian Artists, give thee human cheeks, 268
 Disperse the tear, or to the sigh give vent, 273
 Of thought, that give the true poetic thrill; 277
 Pastime their idol, give their day of life 280
 If ye would give the better will 286
 To give new pleasure like the past, 288
 And seemed to give me spiritual right 289
 Of that great Water give God thanks, 297
 And give the phantom an array 301
 And give us manners, virtue, freedom, power, 307
 And to the attendant promise will give heed— 314
 Give, herds and flocks, your voices to the wind! 315
 And give the treasure to our British tongue! 325
 The eyes of good men thankfully give heed, 327
 Theu give free course to joy and love, 339
 And to his Father give its own unerring aim, 339
 How can I give thee license to depart? 350
 Not, therefore, shall my mind give way to sadness;— 352
 Ye Catacombs, give to mine eyes a glimpse 357
 Those louder cries give notice that the Bird, 361
 Give him a soul that cleaveth unto Thee 363

The most profound repose his cell can give, 363
 To the sad soul give hope of pardon free, 366
 My seat, while I give way to such intent; 376
 Superior? Help to virtue does she give? 388
 This way or that, or give it even a thought 389
 For joy its sunny hours were free to give 392
 And give the timid herbage leave to shoot, 395
 The comprehensive mandate which they give— 395
 Memorials chosen to give life 400
 To give thee comfort if I may," 401
 Help did she give at need, and joined 416
 A synod of his Councillors:—give ear, 422
 What feeble means had failed to give, one aim 430
 Give to devotion, whereso'er awake, 430
 As Po was heard to give where Venice rose 431
 The Creature, to the Creature glory give; 436
 Or is remembered only to give zest 441
 Father! to God himself we cannot give 445
 O Father!—to the Espoused thy blessing give, 446
 In vain who, for a rightful cause, give breath 448
 Our meditations, give we to a day 448
 Give to their Faith a fearless resting-place, 449
 Give all thou canst; high Heaven rejects the lore 451
 Might give to serious thought a moment's sway, 453
 His gracious help, or give what we abuse, 455
 And lofty springs give birth to lowly streams, 472
 Blessings to give, news ask, or suit prefer, 474
 We'll give to idleness, 483
 One moment now may give us more 483
 We'll give to idleness, 483
 Give me your tool," to him I said; 484
 Give unto me, made lowly wise, 493
 The confidence of reason give; 493
 For ever, and to noble deeds give birth, 494
 Which nothing less than Infinite Power could give, 501
 Conscious of half the pleasure which they give; 511
 To give, in their Descendants, freer vent 515
 Though to give timely warning and deter 519
 On best or worst which they and Nature give? 528
 The hed we give him, though of softest down; 528
 Give me the humblest note of those sad strains 528

While they give utterance to the prayer 530
 Will take away, may cease to give, 532
 No answer did the Matron give, 542
 As sovereign power could give, 545
 Give voice to what my hand shall trace, 550
 Whereof her hourly bearing proof doth give; 562
 Nor leisure unto thee more worth to give; 562
 She of her liking proof to me would give; 562
 My sighs breathed forth in silence,—comfort give! 562
 Though he to no one give the fortitude 568
 Give, when your thoughts are turned this way, 577
 While Friends beheld thee give with eye, voice, 583
 Give themselves up to jollity, 588
 To me the meanest flower that blows can give 590
 Oh give, great God, to Freedom's waves to ride 617
 —Give them, beneath their breast while Gladness 617 springs 632
 Content and not unwilling now to give 642
 Union that cannot be,—who would not give, 655
 Give seasonable rest, for 'tis a sound 656
 Crying, "An obolus, a penny give 656
 Give ready place to any random seed 657
 To give me timely notice, and straightway, 660

Give—continued.

To give and take a greeting that might save 660
 (To give it in the language of the dream) 667
 Oh! give us once again the wishing-cap 670
 And hospitably did they give us hail, 681
 They give it welcome, Long ere heat of noon, 690
 Among new objects serve or give command, 708
 In action, give it outwardly a shape, 715
 Did of itself in modesty give way, 722
 Yet everything was wanting that might give 727
 More animated I might here give way, 728
 Nor can my tongue give utterance to a name 733
 How without injury to take, to give 734
 Among those passages of life that give 737
 That from thyself it comes, that thou must give, 738
 May scarcely see at all; and I would give, 738
 While yet we may, as far as words can give, 742
 With overweening trust alone we give 745
 Which do both give it being and maintain 746
 To dwindle, and give up his majesty, 751
 Of mice can give it life, in firm belief 755
 I would give utterance in numerous verse, 766
 To give her comfort, and was glad to take 768
 Will give me patience to endure the things 768
 With the best hope and comfort I could give: 768
 Peeped forth, to give an earnest of the Spring, 769
 To give her needful help, That very time 778
 Hath summoned kings to scaffolds, do but give 793
 Give birth, full often, to unguarded words; 795
 Give back faint echoes from the historian's page; 800
 And either they have not to give, or I 827
 To which the lips give public utterance 828
 To give assurance of content within; 832
 Give us, for our abstractions, solid facts; 832
 Yet, on your first suggestion, will I give, 846
 The crook into a sceptre; give the pomp 851
 Should listen, and give back to him the voice 854
 Give way to words of pity or complaint, 875
 Their tardy steps give leisure to observe, 880
 The bread they eat, A sample should I give 880
 Within his mind, he seemed prepared to give 886
 If time, with free consent, be yours to give, S.3
 Would I give a moment's pain; K.8
 Doth practice give) that neither in the flocks K.8
 His tongue, and give it the wind's freedom; then, K.8
 Of pleasure which I know that I shall give K.8
 In an unusual way, and give to them K.8
 For they are blest already, None would give K.8
 Can give us inward help, can purify, K.8
 Beget strange themes; and to freaks give birth L.1
 To give a hint of whips and the cart's tail, L.1
 Given. Be given, not one memorial gleam, 1
 Sure, nature's God that spot to man had given 10
 Joys only given to uncorrupted hearts, 17
 Now coldly given, now utterly refused, 32
 Has given him power to teach: and then for 38 courage 41
 Had given her love to a wild Freebooter 49
 Men who are little given to sift and weigh— 53
 I would have given, not many minutes gone, 64
 At any time? and why given now? Because 66
 Had given me breath, and was I not to be 80
 God has given a kinder power 93
 So let us strive to live, and to our Spirits will be 94
 given 97
 Dear caresses given in pity, 97
 And, after greetings interchanged, and given 115
 Though little given to care and thought, 122
 Unknown to memory, was an earnest given 125
 Deep in a forest, with leave given, at the age 148
 Hath to this lonely Summit given my Name, 149
 As e'er by mariner was given to bay 165
 Or spite, if cause be given; 166
 They from morning to even take whatever is 173
 given;— 193
 A mournful labour, while to her is given 196
 For him, a Youth to whom was given 210
 A leading from above, a something given, 211
 Give back to dwell on earth in vernal bloom? 211
 "The wished-for wind was given:—I then revolved 211
 Seeking a higher object, Love was given, 224
 Which here was freely given? 238
 "These given, what more need I desire 244
 P. B. 147
 Though given to sadness and to gloom, 252
 Here, for the sight of mortal man, hast given 254
 To his loved pastime given by sedge Lee 255
 We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon! 265
 But, Cynthia! I should to thee the palm be given, 265
 Is given to triumph and all human pride! 282
 Given to the pausing traveller's rapturous glance: 287
 Let faith be given; 308
 And minds not stunted or untilled are given, 312
 A gift of that which is not to be given 313
 All power was given her in the dreadful trance; 316
 To which the triumph of all good is given, 320
 Brewhile, by seldom consecration, given 325

When they to future empires have given birth, 325
 The power of retribution once was given: 325
 —The shock is given—the Adversaries bleed— 327

Given—continued.

To Thee the exterminating sword is given. . . . 331 Ode: Thanks. 158

 Thus scarcely given, a noise was heard, 410 White Doe 1313
 They rose—embraces none were given—
 Was then reviewed, ad prompt word given, . . . 410 White Doe 1318
 Or have given way to slow mutation, 412 White Doe 1459
 Who, as the fields and woods have given them birth,
 Those had given earliest notice, as the lark
 Where dwells a Sister-child? And was power given. . . . 446 Ecc. Sonn. 3. 24. 11
 Is now by solemn consecration given 450 Ecc. Sonn. 3. 41. 2
 May silent thanks at least to God be given
 Receive whatever good 'tis given thee to dispense,
 But all availed not; by a mandate given
 Authentic words be given, or none!
 Given to no other flower I see
 Are given by God, in thee was most intense;
 As aptly, also, might be given
 Thanks given to God for daily bread, and here
 Eastern Islanders have given
 Seemingly given, debase the general mind;
 His mandates, given rash impulse to control
 While yet the solemn heed the State hath given
 Such name Italian fancy would have given, . . . 524 Epist. Beaumont

 Power hath been given to please for higher ends
 To me the charge hath given,
 Faint sanction given, the Cavalier
 Week after week pursued!—To him was given
 And peace was given,—nor peace alone,
 Assigned to them and given them for their own
 And judgment there be given; or that intent
 But still, when he has given his horse the rein,
 Long patience hath such mild composure given,
 Faith bore her up through pains in mercy given,

 Fled with the voice to which it had given birth;
 Redeemed, accord'g to example given 719 Prelude 10. 88
 Given to my moral nature had I known
 If new strength be not given nor old restored,
 As he approached, no salutation given 722 Prelude 10. 269
 As cause was given me afterwards to learn,
 Must needs have given—to the inexperienced mind,
 Was given to old opinions; all men's minds
 She welcomed what was given, and craved no more;
 Knowledge was given accord'g; my trust
 Nor was time given to ask or learn the cause,
 That vision, given to spirits of the night
 Of what was given me; and which now I range,
 Then given it greeting as it rose once more
 For having given the story of myself, 749 Prelude 14. 391

Givest—continued.

And Thou, wild Stream, that giv'st the honoured name
That giveth to forms and images a breath
Giveth Sir Galahad ! a treasure, that God giveth, GIVING. See Alms-giving.
Too quickly moved, too easily giving way,
By giving him, for both our sakes, an hour of holiday.
Giving to her sound for sound !
Nor giving heed to aught that passed the while,
Giving to Memory help when she would weave
That obvious emblem giving to the eye
Giving him always hope, that she the morrow
Marshal the banquet, giving with due grace
To more than infant softness, giving me
Accomplished, giving thus unto events
Was never much my habit—giving way
And, to the silent language giving voice,
Of giving welcome to the first of May
And giving back, and shedding each on each,
Joy giving voice to fervent gratitude.
And giving to the moments as they pass
Glacier. The glacier Pillars join in solemn guise Bear to the glacier hand—those Shaples aloft described.
Glad. And glad Dundee in "faint huzzas" expired?
In that glad moment will for you a sigh
In that glad moment when your hands are prest
Death's minister; then came his glad release,
How glad he was at length to find some trace
The gallows would one day of him be glad;—
"I will glad her heart to see her father's signature."
How glad I am to hear your voice ! I know not
With the glad tidings which this day hath brought;
—Her beauty made me glad.
Should come, 'twould needs be a glad day for him;
Of glad or willing service to thy share would fall;
And Skiddaw is glad with the cry of the hounds.
And Betty listens, glad to hear it.
The little Pooey glad may be,
And her face brightened. The old Man was glad,
But Isabel was glad when Sunday came
But nay, my heart is far too glad,
Sent forth such sallies of glad sound, that all
Fancy, who leads the pastimes of the glad,
First at sight of thee was glad;
Glad sight wherever new with old
The echoes make a glad reply.—
I am glad for him, blind as he is—all the while
"How glad is Skipton at this hour—
How glad Pendragon—though the sleep
Rejoiced in Brough, right glad, I deem,
Glad were the vales, and every cottage-hearth;
And their glad animal movements all gone by)
Glad Hope would almost cease to be Glad moment is it when the throng
Wherever strikes the sun's glad ray;
Aod the glad Muse at liberty to note
Glad thought for every season ! but the Spring
More prompt, more glad, to fall than drops of dew
Glad acclamation by which air was rent !
Cleaves its glad way, a cry of harvest home
Now that all hearts are glad, all faces bright,
His glad deliverance has begun :
Of my own Fairfield. The glad greeting given,
Verse to glad notes prophetic of the hour
To carry thy glad tidings over heights
The royal Guinever looked passing glad
Glad meetings, tender partings, that upstay
And glad acknowledgment, of lawful sway
Glad tidings to Iona's shore,
Fit offering of glad victory !
And all the hills were glad to hear
Glad HALLE-lujahs to the eternal King !
Their own creation. Such glad welcomes
Glad music ! yet there he that, worn with pain
Glad, through a perfect love, a faith sincere
Glad to expand; and, for a season, free
Spreading his little palms in his glad Mother's sight)
Seats of glad instinct and love's carolling,
As blest and as glad, in this desolate gloom,
Aod often, glad no more,
We have been glad of yore.
It came, and we were glad; yet tears were shed;
Glad Hearts ! without reproach or blot;
To these glad eyes from bondage freed, again
Glad proclamation make, and heights and dells
Can such a One, dear Babe ! though glad and proud
The inmost heart of man if glad
Resplendent Wauderer ! followed with glad eyes
Right glad was he when he beheld her :
And glad, in sooth, was I when he was gone.
I shall be glad if all the world he true.
Glad am I, glad that it is past;
Glad from their airy baskets hang and sing.
There turns for glad repose the weary eye;
When hums the mountain bee in May's glad ear,
Glad Day-light laughs upon his top of snow,

Glad—continued.

But salutation taking its glad way
Glad welcome had I, with some tears, perhaps,
Of those glad respites, though a soft west wind
That round us chaunted. Well might we be glad,
Of this glad throng, foot-travellers side by side,
A glad preamble to this Verse : I sang
And vein of water, glad to be rolled on
Had plucked up mercy by the roots, were glad
Of the glad times when first I traversed France
I see thee linger a glad votary
On the glad eve of its dear holidays,
A glad congratulation we exchanged
To give her comfort, and was glad to take
Was glad to find her conscience set at ease ;
And not less glad, for sake of her good name,
"So ends my dolorous tale, and glad I am
Ye that are capable of joy be glad !
Opened, and she re-entered with glad looks,
To intercept the sun's glad beams—may ne'er
That he was glad to lose) slunk from the world
And by desire; we see by the glad light
A like glad impulse; and so moves the man
But why he so glad on
Of glad emotion and deep quietness ;
But a glad function natural to man.
Gladden. Comes on to gladden April with the sight
Like thine, shall gladden, as in seasons past,
That all the Alps may gladden in thy might,
To gladden or to grieve, he hath like skill ;
Gladdened. And gladdened all things; but, as chanced, within that very hour,
And Heaven is now to gladdened eyes revealing,
Empress of Night ! are gladdened by thy beams ;
Thus gladdened from our own dear Vale we pass
Were gladdened by the Sage's voice, and hung
From gladdened Elbe to startled Tiber heard.
Gladdened me more than if I had been led
Clear images before your gladdened eyes
"Then let us rather fix our gladdened thoughts Gladdening. Gladdening the people's heart from shore to shore ;
Than pleasure only; gladdening to prepare
And meet the gladdening pilgrims on their way.
Gladdens. It gladdens me, O worthy, short-lived,
Youth !
The vast Pacific gladdens with the freight—
Gladder. Shouteth faint tidings of some gladder place.
Gladdest. The gladdest of the gladsome band,
Glade. See Forest-glade, Garden-glade.
Rest near your little plots of wheaten glade ;
Of lambs that bounded through the glade,
This glade of water and this one green field.
And Truth would skim the flowery glade,
In earth and heaven, in glade and hower,
A home in every glade !
What wouldst thou more ? In sunny glade,
Resounding from the woody glade ;
Softly resounded through this rocky glade ;
How sweet the prospect of yon watery glade,
While, o'er the flower-enamelled glade,
Jubilant outcry ! rock and glade
Whom in a sunny glade I chanced to see,
Lingering in a woody glade
And wild deer bounded through the forest glade,
Rest, near their little plots of wheaten glade ;
Winding it's dark-green wood and emerald glade,
Through upper air to an Idalian glade,
Of Satyrs in some viewless glade, with dance
Glades. Tend the small harvest of their garden glades ;
Among the forest glades, while jocund June
And penetrates the glades.
And wander forth, in forest glades
And labyrinthine walks, her sunny glades
Glades we behold, and into thickets peep,
Gladiator. The dying Gladiator. So, sad Flower !
Gladliest. Where what we gladliest would believe Glady. "That, Father ! will I gladly do :
Both gladly now deferred their task ;
Do thou look gladly on the sight ;
"Susan, I'd gladly stay with you.
Yon minarets, would gladly leave for his worst
home."
That you will gladly listen to discourse
Under my cottage-roof, had gladly come
The harmony thy notes most gladly make
And gladly Nature's love partake
Right gladly had the horses stirred,
But would you gladly view the spot,
Would gladly vanish from a Stranger's sight ;
Enlightened Teacher, gladly from thy hand
I gladly commune with the mind and heart
With mute obeisance gladly paid
But mark how gladly, through their own domains,
Approach, come gladly, ye prepared, in sight
Yet oh ! how gladly would the air be stirred
And I for five centuries right gladly would be

Glass—continued.

Faith may be given, we see as in a glass
Glassed. Glassed in a greenhouse, or a parlour shrub
 The other, glassed in thy unruined breast,
Glasses. Glasses he had, that little things display,
 Decanters, glasses, and the blood-red wine,
 Ate, drank, and with the fruit and glasses played,
Glassy. And insects clothe, like dust, the glassy deep:
 Vividly pictured in some glassy pool,
 And then—upon the glassy flood
 And showed the Bark upon the glassy flood
 Loitering in glassy pool:
 Yet might your glassy prison seem
 Removed in kindness from their glassy Cell
 Thy Form was sleeping on a glassy sea.
 Upon the glassy plain; and oftentimes,
 Through a whole month of calm and glassy days
 And, on its glassy surface, specks of foam,
 Along the level of the glassy flood,
 Yet not at rest, upon the glassy lake.
Glastonbury. Proud Glastonbury can no more refuse Glazed. See Tear-glazed.
 Wakes with glazed eye, and feebly sighing—
Glead. To guard the royal brood. The sailing glead,
Gleam. Be given, not one memorial gleam,
 Of fainter gold, a purple gleam betray.
 The rear through iron brown betrays a sullen gleam.
 Tipt with eve's latest gleam of burning red.
 And still, perhaps, with faithless gleam,
 The cloister startles at the gleam of arms.
 Where, 'mid dim towers and woods, her waters
 gleam.
 Once did the lightning's faint disastrous gleam
 Sight which, tho' lost at once, a gleam of pleasure shed.
 Which high and higher mounts with silver gleam:
 But who shall show, to waking sense, the gleam of light that broke
 And yet the soul-awakening gleam,
 And one green island, gleam between the stems
 And that bright gleam which thence will fall
 Untouched;—in spite of many a gleam
 At length a pleasant instantaneous gleam
 —Of flowers that with one scarlet gleam
 Delightful land of verdure, shower and gleam,
 Around the dell a gleam
 And rocks that spread a hoary gleam,
 No glimpse it is, no doubtful gleam;
 Which for the loss of that moist gleam atone
 Rise, then, ye votive Towers! and catch a gleam
 Enter through ears and eyesight, with such gleam
 O'er which her pinions shed a silver gleam.
 Thus did the waters gleam, the mountains lower,
 And prompt to welcome every gleam
 Now; while a farewell gleam of evening light
 In motion: rapid as the lightning's gleam;
 (Who loves the Cross, yet to the Crescent's gleam
 They, too, who send so far a holy gleam
 Yet thou thyself hast round thee shed a gleam
 Comes gliding in with lovely gleam,
 Dark moor, and gleam of pool and stream,
 And, ever and anon, how bright a gleam
 That slackens, and spreads wide a watery gleam,
 Pierces the ethereal vault; and ('mid the gleam
 Than doth this silent spectacle—the gleam—
 Of human life when first allowed to gleam
 I gaze upon a Portrait whose mild gleam
 Far as the last gleam of the filmy train
 With here and there a faint imperfect gleam

 Where golden flash and silver gleam
 That happy gleam of vernal eyes,
 To express what then I saw; and add the gleam,
 Whither is fled the visionary gleam?
 That tips with eve's last gleam his spiry head.
 Small circles of green radiance gleam around.
 Thence red from different heights with restless
 gleam
 While mid dim towers and woods her waters gleam:
 To guide his dangerous tread the taper's gleam.
 Gleam war's discordant habits thro' the trees,
 A smooth free course along the watery gleam,
 At the first gleam of dawn-light, when the Vale,
 In their true dwelling; now is crossed by gleam
 The spirit of pleasure, and youth's golden gleam.
 Too soon, while yet the very flash and gleam
 Is no where touched by one memorial gleam)
 A spirit of pleasure and youth's golden gleam;
 By a faint shining from the heart, a gleam
 The lingering gleam of their departed lives
 By his ingenuous beauty, by the gleam
 And scarcely could you fancy that a gleam
 With sight of now and then a straggling gleam.
Gleamed. Gleamed like a vision of delight.
 When first she gleamed upon my sight;
 But breezes played, and sunshine gleamed—
 Who then, if Dian's crescent gleamed,
 That fled, and, flying still before me, gleamed
Gleaming. See Dim-gleaming, Dimly-gleaming,

Gleaming—continued.

With pearl or gleaming agate vies
 And glancing, gleaming, dark or bright,
 Gleaming like a silver shield!
 Tempt the smooth water, or the gleaming ice,
 Waves high, embellished by a gleaming shower!
 Thy temples fringed with locks of gleaming white,
 And upright weapons innocently gleaming,
 Was seated in her gleaming shallop.
The tribulation—and the gleaming blades—
 Traversed by gleaming ships, looked up to thee
 With gleaming lights more gracefully adorn
 Queens gleaming through their splendor's last decay,
 Of colours, lurking, gleaming up and down
 Lake, islands, promontories, gleaming bays,
 Cased in the gleaming mail the monarch wore,
 Gleaming through colouring of other times,
 Dishevelled, gleaming eyes, and rueful cheek
 Large store of gleaming crimson-spotted trout;
 Abstract those gleaming relics, and uplift them,
Gleams. Gleams that upon the lake's still bosom fall:
 The hills, while gleams below the azure tide;
 'Mid smoking woods gleams hid from morning's ray
 In sleep I heard the northern gleams;
 End happily, as they began! These gleams
 Soft darkness o'er its latest gleams is stealing;
 What shifting pictures—clad in gleams
 It gleams on the face, there, of dusky-browed Jack,
 And now, with gleams of half-extinguished thought,
 Thy voice, nor catch from thy wild eyes these gleams
 And fields invested with purple gleams;
 So gleams the crescent moon, that loves
 With vital sounds and moontory gleams
 Yon eddying balls of foam, these arrowy gleams

 Gleams from a world in which the saints repose.
 Gleams on the grass-crowned top of yon tall Tower,
 The Eternal looks upon her sword that gleams,
 With gleams of fresher, purer, light;
 With gleams that owed not to the sun their birth,
 Seek other seas, their canvass gleams.
 By scattering gleams, through your distress,
 That fate, which cannot lose the gleams,
 Lose utterly the tender gleams,
 That tears burst forth again. Did gleams appear?
 Whose blaze is now subdued to tender gleams,
 For, if a vestige of those gleams
 If neither soothing to the worm that gleams
 Like moraing's dewy gleams;
 Gleams 'mid the peace of this deep dale
 Gleams by the richest jewel unsurpass;
 As touch'd with dawning moonlight's hoary gleams,
 Gleams, streak'd or dappled, hid from morning's ray
 Fall on his shifting hat that gleams mid smoking
 dew;
 Gleams like the flashing of a shield,—the earth
 Lighted by gleams of moonlight from the sea
 A grove, with gleams of water through the trees
 (Ah! surely not without attendant gleams
 And on these spots with many gleams I looked
 With distant prospect among gleams of sky
 The gleams of his low-svarying countenance,
 Scarce peeps the curious star, all solemn gleams
 Still gleams upon their polish'd plumes—the bright
 Swarms with sensation, as with gleams of sunshine, Gleamy. And antique castles seen through gleamy showers.
Glean. His simple truths did Andrew glean Gleaned. Nearer ourselves. Such often might be gleaned
Glea. Of feet still bustling round with busy glea,
 The eldest heard with steady glea;
 And echoes back his sister's glea;
 Contentment, hope, and mother's glea,
 His heart it was so full of glea
 And all those leaves, in festive glea,
 By social glea inspired;
 Yet mine is their glea!
 It is a fiddle in its glea
 Then, in the turbulence of glea,
 Of serious faith, and inward glea;
 That wild with glea across the lawn
 Out-did the sparkling waves in glea:
 Yet lacks not friends for simple glea,
 How vivid, yet how delicate, her glea!
 A greeting give of measured glea;
 In festive glea: why not? For fresh and clear,
 Does the hour's drowsy weight his glea restrain?
 Great is their glea while flake they add to flake
 Lives in the light of youthful glea,
 As the light breezes that with glea
 There came a Tyrant, and with holy glea
 Unfolds a willing breast) with infant glea
 Had often heard the sound of glea
 And many chained by vows, with eager glea
 To sight so shallow, with a bather's glea,
 And hill and valley rang with glea
 The grey-haired man of glea:

Glimpsee—continued.

Glimpses of retribution, terrible,
 I see by glimpses now; when age comes on,
Glinted. He sang, his genius "glinted" forth,
Glisten. Glisten with a livelier ray;
Glistened. The flattered structure glistened, blazed,
 By the broad hill, glistened upon our sight
 Glistened with tenderness; his mind, I knew,
Glistening. On the tall peaks the glistening unbeams play,
 Nor Sea-nymph glistening from her coral hower;
 With all their fragrance, all their glistening,
 Glistening with unparticipated ray,
 Its glistening dew; but hallowed is the clay.
 Her glistening tresses bound, yet light and free
 And glistening antlers are described;
 In frosty moonlight glistening;
 Whose eye reflects it, glistening through a tear
 Glistening along the low and woody dale;
Glistening. And the glistenings—heavenly fair!
 To industry, by glistenings flung on rocks,
Glistens. Loves, as it glistens on the silent rocks;
Glistered. The barrows glistered bright with drops of rain,
Glistening. Upstarts a glistening snake,
 Or rather thou appear'st a glistening snake,
Glitter. Toy with the sun and glitter from afar.
 Glitter the stars above, and all is black below.
 Vainly glitter hill and plain,
 The lake doth glitter,
 Glitter, with dark recesses interposed,
 Glitter—but undisturbing, undisturbed;
 The nobler badge shall glitter on his arm.
Glittered. The pendent grapes glittered above the door;—
 Its stony surface glittered like a shield;
 The frith that glittered like a warrior's shield,
 Glittered at evening like a starry sky.
 And That which glittered from afar;
 The Sonnet glittered a gay myrtle leaf
 And glittered on the Rhine.
 Of that sharp rising, glittered to the moon
 A liquid pool that glittered in the sun,
 And no vain mirror glittered upon the walls,
Glittering. See Thickly glittering.
 'Mid thy soft glooms the glittering steel unsheath;
 The dog, loud barking, 'mid the glittering rocks,
 Thy glittering steeples, whence the matin bell
 Eastward, in long perspective glittering, shine
 In the calm sunshine slept the glittering main;
 A piece of money glittering through the dust?
 Or through the glittering vapours dart
 Upon the house-top, glittering bright,
 While, from the twin cards toothed with glittering wire,
 Through a thin veil of glittering haze was seen
 Glittering and twinkling near yon rosy cloud;
 I see thee glittering from afar—
 Yet like a star, with glittering crest,
 At thy glittering countenance.
 Glittering before him bright and broad;
 Now lost amid a glittering steam:
 Raises a mist; that, glittering in the sun,
 'Tis Hesperus—there he stands with glittering crown,
 Stretched on the block the glittering axe recoils;
 (So might he seem) of all the glittering quire!
 If so he might, yon mountain's glittering head—
 All bright and glittering in the smokeless air.
 The crescent moon clove with its glittering prow.
 Or groom!—We must run glittering like a brook
 Of your fierce war, may ken the glittering lance,
 The glittering crowns and garlands which it brought—
 Then, glittering like a star, she joins the festal band.
 Glittering before the Thunderer's sight,
 A glittering ship, that hath the plain
 The glittering, floating Pageantry.
 With glittering finger points at nine.
 Her Spires, her Steeple-towers with glittering vanes
 (Unbashful dwarfs each glittering at his post)
 That these two words of glittering gold
 With hair of glittering grey;
 Your motions, glittering Elves!
 Buried beneath the glittering Lake,
 Of Moscow's glittering spires.
 And loved you glittering in your bowers,
 That, barking busy 'mid the glittering rocks,
 The glittering waves reflect the dazzling blaze;
 The glittering Bears,—the Pleiads fraught with rain;
 Small circles glittering idly in the moon,
 White Sirius glittering o'er the southern crags;
 And glancing forms, and tapers glittering,
 A bed of glittering light: I asked the cause?
 By glittering verse; but further, doth receive,
 Society became my glittering bride,
 To sight restored, and glittering in the sun.
 Fenced round with glittering laurel; or in that in glittering halls—was able to derive
 And, like a serpent, shows his glittering back.

A glittering spectacle; but every face
 Of vapour glittering in the morning sun.
 His spade and hoe, maddock and glittering scythe,
 The glittering rabble housed to . . . and swear
Glitters. To him the day-star glitters small and bright,
 A gem that glitters while it lives,
 The Crescent glitters on the towers of Spain;
 The star of noon that glitters small and bright,
Globo. (Above the convex of the watery globe)
Gloom. Far in the level forest's central gloom:
 The soft gloom deepening on the tranquil mind.
 Yet still the tender, vacant gloom remains;
 But, heedless of the following gloom,
 And now, emerging from the forest's gloom,
 The sylvan cabin's lute-enlivened gloom.
 From the bright wave, in solemn gloom, retire
 Hang o'er the abyss, whose else impervious gloom
 Then sets. In total gloom the Vagrant sighs,
 While ghostly faces through the gloom appear,
 Roaring with storms beneath night's starless gloom;
 Has held infernal orgies—with the gloom,
 "But is that gloom dissolved? how passing clear
 Yet frequent transports mitigate the gloom:
 And so, when night with grateful gloom had fallen,
 To show her taper in the gloom,
 And cheering oft-times their reluctant gloom.
 Hung round and overhung with gloom;
 Of massy gloom and radiance hold.
 Of vast circumference and gloom profound
 This is no common waste, no common gloom;
 The blind man's gloom, exalts the veteran's mirth;
 Though given to sadness and to gloom,
 Upon that roof, amid embowering gloom,
 Becoming thoughts, I trust, of solemn gloom.
 Whose universe was gloom immersed in gloom,
 Or thrird the shadowy gloom
 In gloom on wings with confidence outspread
 Drove from itself, we trust, all frightful gloom.
 What mighty forest in its gloom
 And, with this silent gloom agreeing,
 Not sunless gloom or unenlightened,
 Wide as the oak extends its dewy gloom,
 Thus often, when thick gloom the east o'ershrouds,
 When all the world with midnight gloom was dark.—
 Thou, chequering peaceably the minster's gloom,
 The Wanderer lost in more determined gloom.
 The gloom that did its loveliness enshroud)
 By which the clouds, arrayed in light or gloom,
 Her Temples rose, 'mid pagan gloom; but why,
 And bustle and sluggishness, pleasure and gloom.
 As blest and as glad, in this desolate gloom,
 Whose saintly radiance mitigates the gloom
 Frowns deepening visibly his native gloom,
 They wore away the night in starless gloom;
 If gloom fell on me, swift was my escape;
 His face was gloom, his heart was sorrow,
 Extinguished in a moment; total gloom,
 But if the pensive gloom
 —Ah me! all light is mute amid the gloom,
 In deep determin'd gloom his subject tides.
 With bordering lines of intervening gloom,
 Weeping beneath his chill of mountain gloom.
 The bosom'd cabin's lyre-enliven'd gloom;
 Bright'ning the gloom where thicken the forests stoop;
 Bend o'er th' abyss?—the else impervious gloom
 By the deep quiet gloom appall'd, she sighs,
 While in soft gloom the scattering bowers recede,
 Along the brighten'd gloom reposing deep.
 Dim dreadful faces thro' the gloom appear,
 The cottage windows blazed through twilight gloom,
 So sweetly 'mid the gloom the invisible bird
 'Mid gloom and tumult, but no less 'mid fair.
 Twilight was coming on, yet through the gloom
 A treasured and luxurious gloom of choice
 Nay brighter shone, by this portentous gloom
 The gloom, that, but a moment past, was deepened
 Thither I came, and there, amid the gloom
 And whose soft gloom, and boundless depth, might tempt
 Or in the gloom of twilight hum their joy?
 Lost in a gloom of uninspired research;
 Or pierce the gloom of her majestic woods;
 Of your experience to dispel this gloom:
 With more than wintry cheerfulness and gloom
 And night succeeded with unusual gloom,
 High in the gloom appeared, too high, methought,
 That round his mansion cast a sober gloom,
 Flows on in solitude. But, when the gloom
 Easy and bold, that penetrate the gloom
 From unaffected contrast with the gloom
 To gloom imperishable. So (if truths
 A brighter joy; and through such damp and gloom
 And found us faithful through the gloom, and heard
 These vales were saddened with no common gloom
 How little dost thou speak of earthly gloom!
Gloomier. Had bred in me; but gloomier far, a dim Gloomiest. Through gloomiest shade; put on (nor dread its weight)

Glory—continued.

Power, glory, empire, as the world itself,
Loves his own glory in their looks, and showers
Of Palestine, of glory past,
Glory to that eternal Peace is paid,
Great is the glory, for the strife is hard!
While health, power, glory, from their height decline,
Approached this glory of the firmament;
Let the Steed glory while his Master's hand
With heaven, our souls more fit for future glory,
Of glory lavished on our quiet days.
One life, one glory—I, with many a fear
They knew how genuine glory was put on;
In glory will they sleep and endless sanctity.
Glory, and triumph. Yet with politic skill
Fixed as a star: such glory is thy right.
Glory to arms! But, conscious that the nerve
O genuine glory, pure renewal!
And thus is missed the sole true glory
Of glory, and felicity, and love,
Her hope of lasting glory for the whole.
And, if the glory reached the Nun,
While glory seemed betrayed, while patriot-zeal
And, while in summer glory
Glory, and patriotic Love,
Glory, and wealth, which, perilous as they are,
Survive, uninjured—glory then to words,
The glory of Infant Rome must disappear,
Of rival glory; they—fallen Italy—
Or glory, not a vestige seems to endure,
That through the realms of glory shines for aye.
To bliss unbounded, glory without end.
That very mantle on a day of glory,
The pomp, the glory of that hour
Nor lose one ray of glory
Her heaven-offending trophies Glory rears:
Of the glory that she makes,
To chant, in strains of heavenly glory,
And learn to glory in a Stranger;
In glory for this Maiden's sake,
Stooped, of all glory disinherited,
Of worship, glory and grace, which you shall blame
The Creature, to the Creature glory give;
Her blessings cursed—her glory turned to shame!
Thy glory meets me with the earliest beam
But in His glory who for Sinners died.
What perfect glory ye in Heaven shall reap!
With mind intact upon the King of Glory,
Part of her lost One's glory back to trace.
Glory to God! and to the Power who came
This glimpse of glory, why renewed?
And welcome glory won in battles fought.
Glory of night, conspicuous yet serene,
God's glory; and acknowledging thy share
On mortal notice.—Glory of the vale,
Of glory by Uraia led!
Fallen though she be, this Glory of the west,
Will say, Ye disappeared with England's Glory!
And written words the glory of his hand;
For everlasting glory won by faith.
Where Death and Glory a joint sabbath keep,
What is glory?—in the socket
Will that His glory last, and be in mind;
Their glory disappear.
The glory and the freshness of a dream.
That there hath past away a glory from the earth.
Where is it now, the glory and the dream?
But trailing clouds of glory do we come
Of splendour in the grass, of glory in the flower;
The glory of evening was spread through the west;
Be changed for one whose glory cannot fade.
War is mercy, glory, fame,
Such is Albion's fame and glory,
Of glory there forthwith to be begun,
Not as our glory and our absolute boast,
Such glory was but little sought by me,
In glory immutable. But peace! enough
The glory of my youth. Of genius, power,
For its own sake, on glory and on praise
Defrauding the day's glory, desperate!
In flashes, and with glory not their own.
A march of glory, which doth put to shame
Glory and hope to new-born Liberty!
"I recognise thy glory:" in such strength
That kindles with such glory! All are charmed,
Of life and glory. In the midst stood Man,
Such is the strength and glory of our youth!
Left without glory on the field, or driven,
In one inseparable glory clad.
Of all this glory filled and satisfied.
This is her glory; these two attributes
To hear of, for the glory that redounds
Thy monument of glory will be raised;
"The glory of the times fading away—
Glory beyond all glory ever seen
Yielded to mortal reflex; her pure glory,
Glory—beyond all glory ever seen,
For thy own glory, in the wilderness!
With pomp, with glory, with magnificence!

Glory—continued.

That what the Soul perceives, if glory lost,
That he could brook, and glory in;—but when
That Westminster, for Britain's glory, holds
By faith in glory that shall far transcend
With spiritual graces, like a glory, crowned.
A veil of glory for the ascending moon;
The stars of human glory are cast down;
Learning, though late, that all true glory rests,
"Much as I glory in that child of yours,
Which from the unapparent fount of glory
All panting for glory."
Brimful of glory said within himself,
Of glory, fronted multitudes in arms.
Thy glory and thy happiness be there.
Glorying. Confirm the Spirit glorying to pursue
And glorying looks around, the silent tides:
Glorying, I found a counterpoise in her,
Glory's. Of virtue crowned with glory's deathless meed:
Upon thy heart, whence, through that glory's might,
Of clouds—his glory's natural retinue—
And let that heir of Glory's endless day
Gloss. Yet something of a girlish child-like gloss
As with the varnish, and the gloss of dreams;
Glossy. Spreading out thy glossy breast
Like beads of glossy jet her eyes;
Her tawny skin, dark eyes, and glossy locks,
Than as they were a badge glossy and fresh
Ground-flower, or glossy insect from its cell
Glosters. The Bedford's, Glosters, Salisbury's, of old Glove. The boxer's armour, the dishonoured Glove.
Glow. To where afar rich orange lustrous glow
Not like the rising sun's impatient glow
On as he floats, the silver'd waters glow,
Accordant to the cheek's unquiet glow;
Her infant's cheeks with fresher roses glow,
With cheeks o'erspread by smiles of baleful glow,
Renewing, when the rosy summits glow
When the first glow of pleasure was no more, Glowed. By light of lamp and precious stones, that glimmered here, there glowed,
Where bud and bloom, and fruitage, glowed,
Where tipped with gold the mountain-summits glow'd.
And glowed the sun-gilt groves in richer gold:
Glowing. By mountains, glowing till they seem to melt.
Fashioned by the glowing light:
But mark her glowing cheek, her vesture green!
And a true master of the glowing strain,
Yet did the glowing west with marvellous power.
Was fixed upon the glowing Sky,
Reflect, in glowing hues that shall not fade,
Whose skirts the glowing Mountain thirsted to detain.
Of orange-trees bedecked with glowing fruit
A shame-faced blush of glowing red!
Glowing in golden sunset tints of joy,
The mountains, glowing hot, like coals of fire.
From nature, an intense and glowing mid.
Of public worship, where, the glowing phrase
"Much, yesterday, was said in glowing phrase
Yet where is glowing Summer's long rich day,
The Dame returned. Or ere that glowing pile
Each had his glowing mountains, each his sky,
Glow. Isushed, and like a burnished mirror glows,
How richly glows the water's breast
"His morn: with gold the verdant mountain glows;
Glows at her feet, and all the gloomy rocks
Glow-worm. The shining glow-worm; or, in heedless play,
A glow-worm, through the covert of the furze,
A Glow-worm, in a dusky ook,
Unless the glow-worm to the skies
His visionary brow: a glow-worm lamp,
While rose and poppy, as the glow-worm fades,
A Glow-worm, never one, and this I knew.
A single Glow-worm did I chance to espy;
Upon a leaf the Glow-worm did I lay,
And left the Glow-worm, blessing it by name,
At night the Glow-worm shone beneath the Tree:
A glow-worm underneath a dusky plume
Glow-worm's. Delighted, with the glow-worm's harmless ray
Glow-worms. Two glow-worms in such nearness that they shared,
The Glow-worms of the earth!
Confiding Glow-worms, 'tis a night
Yet there the glow-worms hang their lamps,
Apart—like glow-worms on a summer night;
Glozings. For the smooth glozings of the indulgent world:
Gloed. Are glued to his sides by the frost.
Gluts. The lion roars and gluts his tawny brood
Glyn. GLYN CARRILLGROCH, in the Cambrian tongue, Gnarled. Gracefully up the gnarled trunk; nor left us unsurveyed
Gnaw. Where, so they fondly think, the worm shall gnaw no more.

Gnaw—continued.

- Where the charm'd worm of pain shall gnaw no more.
- Gnawed. It seemed the better part were gnawed away
- Gnawing. Much have ye suffered from Time's gnawing tooth :
- Gnaws. Whose very shadow gnaws us to the vitals.
- Gnome. And near him, darkling like a sullen Gnome,
- Gnomes. And sullen Gnomes will learn to sport
- Go. Silent the visionary warriors go,
Till peace go with him to the tomb.
The mind condemn'd, without reprieve, to go
High and more high in summer's heat they go,
A lanky woman I—go, you have done good service.
Your words are precious to my ears; go on.
Young as I am, I might go forth a teacher
We'll go together, and, such proof received cannot we go to the Convent?
That she should be prepared; I'll go before.
They had their choice: a wanderer must I go,
What way does the Wind come? What way does he go?
You shall go to the orchard, and then you will see
The lambs that in the meadow go.
You to the town must go;
My brother John was forced to go,
And they go rambling east and west
If ever you to Langdale go;
Sinking, rising, on they go,
- Of the world's business to go wild alone :
At home, go staggering through the slippery fords,
We go for One to whom ye will be dear;
And say'st, when we forsake thee, "Let them go!"
But go to-morrow, or belike to-day,
That come and go with endless play,
Before he shall go with an inch of the land!"
But now we are strangers, go early or late;
I look at the fields, but I cannot go in!
Go with the child.—You have been wretched; yet
Go!—'tis a town where both of us were born;
So through the moonlight lanes they go,
If she must go, or she must stay!
"Nay, Betty, go! good Betty, go!
Shall not go from us, and it shall be free;
Thriving in trade—and Luke to him shall go,
To go and overlook his merchandise
If he could go, the Boy should go to-night."
Were sitting at the door, "Thou must not go:
None to remember—do not go away,
Which, if at such short notice he should go,
That thou shouldst go." At this the old Man paused;
Will I without thee go again, and do
Hopes I cherish'd—let them go!
When o'er the sea-rock's edge we go;
And if from me thou wilt not go,
Up and down the heavens they go,
Thou hast now, go where I may,
Lets it go as fast, and then
To stand or go as at their pleasure;
Whether they should stand or go;
That to a dreary distance go—
"Go you your way, and mind not me;
Go, and I'll follow speedily!"
Nor has thought time to come and go,
But, altogether as we go,
Had seen him through the mountains go,
That doth not slackly go away, as if dissatisfied.
"Sweet Ruth! and could you go with me
Of joy in minds that can no further go,
Does this poor Woman go?
Can this unhappy Woman go
She to the mountain-top would go,
Through half the clear blue sky will go;
Some say if to the pond you go,
How he, long forced in humble walks to go,
The heaviest plummet of despair can go—
In never-slacking voyage go
A face o'er which a thousand shadows go!
And breathe as in a world where nothing can go wrong.
- Go with thee to the frozen zone;
Away we go, my Boat and I—
Away we go—and what care we
"Go—(but the world's a sleepy world,
Between the hedges as they go,
From men of pensive virtue go,
To kirk she had been used to go,
Where lies the Land to which yon Ship must go?
- Go, faithful Portrait! and where loath high knelt
Couldst thou go back into far-distant years,
But why go on?—
Go back to Yarrow, 'tis their own;
To go in search of Yarrow?
We will not see them; will not go,
The persons that before them go,
And thus from house to house would go;
And let him, let him go his way,

Go—continued.

- But that I know, where'er I go,
Or what is it that ye go forth to see?
Go back to antique ages, if thine eyes
Go back, and see the Tower of Babel rise;
While we go forth, a self-devoted crowd,
From Prussia's timid region, Go, and rest
Go forth with rival youthfulness of mind,
Go—and with foreheads meekly bowed
Present your prayers—go—and rejoice aloud—
Infants in arms, and ye, that as ye go
From the climate of myrtles contented I go.
- Rude Nature's Pilgrims did we go,
Go forth, my little Book! pursue thy way;
Go forth, and please the gentle and the good;
Farewell!—but go thy way, no need hast thou
Go, in thy enterprise rejoice!
From the Land of Nile did go;
And if, as toward the silent tomb we go,
On rock and ruin darkening as we go,—
As generations come and go,
And ne'er did Genius slight them, as they go,
Of the Great King; and others, as they go
If I with this bright Creature go:
To the grief of her soul that doth come and go,
Unarmed and naked will I go,
Of babbling winds as they go by,
Far back—far back my mind must go
Perturbed she issues. She will go!
In friendship—strive—for his sake go—
Placed there—that he might go before
Go high, no transport ever higher.
And he the Bearer?—Can he go
Dead are they, dead!—and I will go,
On favouring nights, she loved to go;
And glorified Ascension? Warriors, go;
Go forth, great King! claim what thy birth
bestows;
Their partly lustre—coming but to go;
The waters of the Rhine; but on they go
Go thou and hear the threatenings of the Lord;
Go, seek, when Christmas snows discomfort bring,
Who would go "parading"
And lives there one, of all that come and go
Go, carry to some fitter place
Yet never once doth go astray,
Wings have we,—and as far as we can go
Who, doomed to go in company with Pain,
He cannot halt nor go astray,
Above thy knowledge as they dared to go,
Go where at least meek Innocence dwells;
What could go wrong with such a Charitoer
- For very cold to go to bed;
And oft from his warm fire he'd go,
Go, single—yet aspiring to be joined
Go forth upon a mission best fulfilled
Each grasps an oar, and struggling on they go—
And I to her will go;
That such a Boy where'er he lists shall go
In Patmos wrote, who saith of them that go
I gladly would go somewhere to essay
Forth did I go, alone and fearlessly,
He may full soon go with an old man's hair.
Go look on the fresh daisy; then say I,
A cause he found into the Town to go,
And after this he to the gate did go
By longer way than he was wont to go;
Go, and demand of him, if there he here
Between them, and both go a-pilfering together.
But yet I know, where'er I go,
Lost gradual o'er the heights in pomp they go,
Those lips, whose tides of fragrance come, and go,
O'er azure pikes serene and still, they go,
On his pale horse shall fell Consumption go.
Go to the world, peruse the book of man,
Saw her go forth to church or other work
That maniac's fond anxiety, and go
Go forth and prosper; and, ye purging fires,
But seldom led, or wished to go; in truth
"Go to the Poets, they will speak to thee
And go to the grave, unthought of. Strongest miads
The bond of brotherhood, when he sees them go,
In past or future; far as she can go
Why need such man go desperately astray,
They came and go, appeared and disappear,
Enquire of ancient Wisdom; go, demand
Saddening the heart. Go forward, and look back
'Go to the hills,' said one, 'remit a while
Is beautiful—go wheresoe'er they may;
He can't go wrong go where he will:
Shall off, and go to the hammer:
When to Cyprus back I go
Far did they go that morning: with their search
I will go back and range a second time
Along the mazes of this song I go
That take it with them hence, where'er they go.
Thy mother to the fold must go
Go, modern Prince, at Henry's tomb proclaim

God. Their panniered train a group of potters good,
We need an inward tinge to goad us on.
Where guilt had urged them on with ceaseless goad,
To sinners whom their sins oppress and goad.
Goaded. The goaded land waxed mad; the crimes of few
Let loose and goaded. After what hath been Goading. But like the innocent bird, hath goadings on Goal. The goal is reached. My Master shall become Never nearer to the goal;
They shrunk, insane ambition's barren goal—
Still, as we nearer draw to life's dark goal,
Of our small market village, was the goal.
Goat. Which the goat cannot climb, takes his sounding flight;
Chase the wild goat; and if the bold red deer
To shaggy steeps on which the careless goat
Goatherd. Of rich Clitumnus; and the goat-herd lived
Because the goatherd, blessed man! had lips
Goatherd-child.—Oh might he tempt that Goatherd-
child
Goat's. Of the live deer, or goat's depending beard,— Goats. Served, tending a few sheep and goats, a ragged Norman Boy.
Apart, beside his silent goats,
Goat's-beard. That turns its goat's-beard flakes of pea-green moss
Goblet. (Tho' a mere goblet to the careless eye) Goblets. No goblets shall, for thee, be crowned with flowers,
Down the long street, rich goblets filled with wine
And goblets crown the proud festivity,
Huge goblets are brought forth; they crown the wine;
Goblin. It is no goblin, 'tis no ghost,
Goblins. To the dark cave, the goblin's hall;
God. See Archer-god, Demi-god, Infant-god.
Sure, nature's God that spot to man had given
Of angry Nature to avenge her God.
He, all superior but his God disdained,
He holds with God himself communion high,
Great God! by whom the strifes of men are weighed
—Bidding me trust in God, he stood and prayed—
Fervently cried the housewife—"God be praised,
The God in heaven my prayers for you will hear;
And oft he groaned aloud, "O God, that I were dead!"
'Twere wrong to trouble you. God speed you both.
That's all—God save you, Sir. Ha! as I live,
At which I half accused the God in Heaven.—
For love of God I must not pass their doors;
God bless and thank you both, my gentle Masters.
Father!—to God himself we cannot give
And it was you, dear Lady! God be praised,
Yes, yes, I will not murmur, merciful God!
And, by the living God, I could not do it.
By the good God, our common Father, doomed!
I bless her with sad spirit,—when of God,
Here will I leave him—here—All-seeing God!
God and that staff are now thy only guides.
That often, when the name of God is uttered,
To God above will make him feel for ours.
These stifling blasts—God help me! Better this bare rock,
Then God be thanked—
God knows what was in my heart,
We are betrayed! His Daughter!—God have mercy!
Passing before him, such as God will not
Which now thou tak'st upon thee. God forbid
All die in solitude. Mysterious God,
If e'er he enterth the house of God,
Such tales of your dead Father!—God is my judge,
But she, God love her! feared to brush
God has given a kinder power
Till God released her of her pain;
"Then offer up thy heart to God in thankfulness and praise,
Where thousands meet to worship God under a mighty Dome;
"God for His service needeth not proud work of human skill;
God only knows, but to the very last
That God who made the great book of the world,
Nay, God forbid!—You recollect I mentioned
Great God, who feel'st my distress,
God cursed me in my sore distress;
Assist me, God, thy boundaries to know,
And now, God help me for my little wit!
With, "God forbid it should be true!"
"Oh God forbid!" poor Susan cries.
That God poor Susan's life would spare,
I toiled and toiled; God blessed me in my work,
And God will strengthen thee: amid all fear
Do I dare to thank the God,
—And countless blessings which God sends:

Seems at the heart of all things. But, great God! . . . 231
—Of a just God for liberty and right. . . . 231
So did she daunt the Earth, and God defy! . . . 231
—And God and Nature say that it is just. . . . 231
—And piety towards God. Such men of old . . . 231
(Thanks to high God) forests of such remain: . . . 231
Their God, and placed their trust in human pride!
Ye slight not life—to God and Nature true; . . . 326
—HE CONQUERING THROUGH GOD, AND GOD BY HIM! . . . 326
Nor will the God of peace and love . . . 328
—And magnify Thy name, Almighty God! . . . 328
Tremendous God of battles, Lord of Hosts! . . . 328
—Just God of christianised Humanity, . . . 328
That hind thee to the path which God ordains . . . 328
—For that Almighty God to whom we owe, . . . 328
Which, spurning God, had flung away remorse— . . . 328
—Awake! the majesty of God reverse! . . . 328
Of God himself from dread pre-eminence— . . . 328
His God may be adored. . . . 328
They round his altar bore the horned God, . . . 328
To act the God among external things, . . . 328
His milder Genius (thanks to the good God . . . 328
—For converse with God, sought through study and . . . 328
prayer. . . . 328
—Light which to God is both the way and guide; . . . 328
—God reigns above, and Spirits strong . . . 328
Of God, and Heaven's pure Queen—the blissful . . . 328
Mary. . . . 328
Sir Galahad! a treasure, that God giveth, . . . 328
—To God proclaims defiance, . . . 328
"Change me, some God, into that breathing rose!" . . . 328
—To his high charge, and truly serving God, . . . 328
—With no one near save the omnipresent God. . . . 328
—Man placed him here, and God, he knows, can save . . . 328
Has ended, though no Clerk, with "God be . . . 328 praised!" . . . 328
—For what survives of house where God . . . 328
—Of God had in her heart found place— . . . 328
—To God or man; such innocence, . . . 328
—Of God, and fill thy destined place: . . . 328
—Trusting himself to the earth, and God. . . . 328
—To God descending in his power. . . . 328
The invisible God, and take for guide . . . 328
"Yes—God is rich in mercy," said . . . 328
Their sabbath music—"God us appe!" . . . 328
—With vocal music, "God us appe;" . . . 328
By sorrow lifted towards her God; . . . 328
Rise to the God from whom it came! . . . 328
Yet shall it claim our reverence, that to God, . . . 328
Drops, and the God himself is seen no more. . . . 328
—Servants of God! who not a thought will share . . . 328
"God WILLETH IT," the whole assembly cry; . . . 328
"God Willeth it," from hill to hill rebounds, . . . 328
—And nature God disdained not; Man—whose soul . . . 328
Yet will yourselves to God no service pay; . . . 328
Of God and man, place higher than to him . . . 328
—And to her God restored by evidence . . . 328
One (like those prophets whom God sent of old) . . . 328
(O God of mercy, may no earthly Seat . . . 328
The peace of God within his single breast! . . . 328
Despised by that stern God to whom they raise . . . 328
Lures not from what they deem the cause of God . . . 328
Father! to God himself we cannot give . . . 328
Under the holy fear of God turns pale; . . . 328

 Good honest souls !—if right my judgment lies
Good-day. And so my Friend, good-day to you."
Good-fellow. Some Robin Good-fellow were there,
Goodly. With goodly arts and usages refined ;
 Fashions his neck into a goodly curve ;
 A goodly Vessel did I then espy
 Oh, 'tis a goodly Ordinance,—the sight,
 A goodly Knight that hath no peer that liveth !"
 I bring with me a goodly train ;
 Was with this goodly Personage ;
 For pleasure made, a goodly spot,
 And goodly fruitage with the mother-spray ;
 Of ancient honour ; whence that goodly state
 Singing so well, so goodly, and so clear,
 That Ship, was goodly to be seen,
 It was a goodly prospect : for, in sooth,
 When wedded to this goodly universe 755

Govern. And breath and being; where he cannot govern,
And govern to my shame;
And reason govern that audacious fight
Appeared—to govern Christian paganeities:
The Saints must govern is their common cry;
What hand suffice to govern the state-helm?
To govern and to guide:
His steps to govern in the Wilderness;

Governed. See Ill-governed, Self-governed.

Seem governed by a strain
This Temple—Angels governed by a plan
Equality by Prudence governed,
By Conscience governed do their steps retrace.—
Yet governors and governed both are blind
Sustained and governed, still dost overflow

Government. See Self-government.

Murmuring submission, and bald government,
As best, the government of equal rights
Of civil government, and its wisest forms;
Have cleared a passage for just government,
From popular government and equality,
And measures of the Government, though both
Bounty and government, that filled their hearts
And rightful government subverted, found
For the mind's government, or temper's peace;

Governor. The Governor who must be wise and good, Governors. A license to destroy him: our good governors

Yet governors and governed both are blind
Govers. He who governs the creation,
That He who guides and governs all, approves
Of that Intelligence which governs all—
The law that governs each; and where begins
Gowan. Bright gowan, and marsh-marigold, fare-

Gown. See Dressing-gown.

And she put on her gown of green,
An eager Novice robed in fluttering gown!
The clasp that fixed the Roman Gown;
Than from her wily praise, her peaceful gown,
Behold a pupil of the monkish gown,
A student clothed in gown and tasselled cap,

Gowned. Romans for travel girt, for business gowned;
I grieve not; happy is the gowned youth,
Of gowned students, quitted hall and bower,

Gowns. Gowns grave, or gaudy, doctors, students, streets,
And Negro Ladies in white muslin gowns.

Grace. See Lion-grace.

—Did Sabine grace adorn my living lice,
His lips were moving; and his eyes, upraised to sue
for grace,
Prayer that Grace divine may raise

"Who never tasted grace, and goodness ne'er had felt."

That, wanting not wild grace, are from all mischief
free!

If things ensued that wanted grace,
Which, soothed and sweetened by the grace of
Heaven

And when by Heaven's good grace the boy grew up
If almighty grace through me thy chains unbind,
For a crowning recompense, the precious grace

And yet with something of a grace
Shall grace the fairest, sweetest, plant
His helmet has a vernal grace,
That to the Kind by special grace

Spreads with such a living grace
Where fancy hath small liberty to grace
A parting word—though not of grace,
And the morning light in grace

Or with a milder grace adorning
Grace that shall mould the Maiden's form
Then, Spirits of beauty and of grace,
Now, whether it were by peculiar grace,

How, by Heaven's grace, this Clifford's heart was framed:
That calms all fear; "Such grace hath crowned thy prayer,

Grace—continued.

Elysian beauty, melancholy grace,
Where'er he turned, a natural grace,
Where'er he turned, a swan-like grace
With grace of motion that might scarcely seem
Features to old ideal grace allied,
Sage Spirits! by your grace,
To testify of Love and Grace divine,
O bounty without measure! while the grace
Of power ethereal and celestial grace,
The grace of parting Infancy
Where men were monsters. A light grace he craves,
'Tis said, meek Beast! that, through Heaven's
grace,

A grace the sinuous vale and roaring stream
These humble nuptials to proclaim or grace?
For if of our affections one finds forget,
Nor will I then thy modest grace forget,
For grace and goodness lost, thy murmurs melt
So gently Grace the immortal wing may heal,
Unquiet Childhood here by special grace
And, if Time spare the colours for the grace
To keep, so high in air, its strength and grace:
And oh for Thee, by pitying grace
That gives thy gestures grace and life!
Now thanks to Heaven! that of its grace
The grace of forest charms decayed,
To his forlorn condition! let thy grace
A Pile that Grace approves, and Time can trust
Their utter stillness, and the silent grace
On this high Day of THANKS, before the Throne of Grace!

Mounts to the seat of grace within the mind:
My Song, encouraged by the grace
On their Descendants shedding grace—
Have marred this Work; the calm ethereal grace,
O Ye, who guard and grace my home
Blythe Paragon of Alpine grace,
That treasures, yet untouched, may grace some future Lay.

Thanks to our Lady's grace," I smiled to hear,
Do neither promise ask nor grace implore
—Shed over if Thy grace, and thus subdue

So well, that by its help and through His grace
To a sincere repentance promise grace,
In aught that ye would grace or hide—
The woodbine so, with spiral grace, and breathes
Supreme in loveliness and grace
To grace that Stranger's bridal hour,
Not so Sir Launcelot;—from Heaven's grace
Reached by the dew of heavenly grace;
A pledge of grace from purest heaven,
From which affliction—when the grace
Acknowledging a grace in this,
Be strong;—be worthy of the grace
If now I ask a grace not claimed
The like authority, with grace
And welcome, as a gift of grace,
Partakes, in her degree, Heaven's grace;
Of mountain-quiet and boon nature's grace;
Whence grace, through which the heart can understand,

Realms quake by turns: proud Arbitress of grace,
Of offices dispensing heavenly grace!
If worship, glory and grace, which who shall blame
is he who can, by help of grace, enthroned
Fathers! your Virtues, such the power of grace,
Looks on, and Grace descendeth from above
Fountain of Grace, whose Son for sinners died,
Of simple truth with grace divine imbued;
Breathe through my soul the blessing of thy grace,
But who is innocent? By grace divine,
When wisdom stands in need of nature's grace;
Oh, let Thy grace remind me of the light
So call thee for heaven's grace through thee made known

So shines that countenance with especial grace
And all those attributes of modest grace,
Hath here portrayed with Nature's happiest grace
In man's intelligence sublimed by grace?
Ocean has proved its strength, and of its grace
A grace by these unsought and unpossessed,
Then Arts, which still had drawn a softening grace
She heard, ere to the throne of grace
Thousands though rich in Fortune's grace
The Godhead's most benignant grace;
A constant influence, a peculiar grace;
Who would not lightly violate the grace
Ministers of grace divine
Oh may the Almighty scatter with His grace
Help with thy grace, through life's short day,
Though mute the song—to grace the rite
In humble grace, and quiet pensiveness
By fortitude and patience, and the grace

Grasped—continued.

Which he had grasped unknowingly,
Had blindly grasped in that strong trance,
Which he had grasped in that strong trance;
And near the golden sceptre grasped by Jove,
At this he grasped my hand, and said,
Of hopeful preparation, grasped his staff;
To such desires, and grasped at such delight,
Herewith he grasped the Solitary's hand.

Grasping. A slender volume grasping in thy hand—

Grasping a Hawthorn branch in hand,
Of freedom, with mind grasping the whole theme
To the stern embrace of that grasping hour.
Grasping his twofold treasure.—Lance in rest,
When they are grasping with their greatest strength,
Grasps. And grasps by fits her sword, and often eyes;
Each grasps an oar, and struggling on they go—
And often grasps her sword, and often eyes,
That finds and cannot fasten down; that grasps.
And is rejoiced, and loses while it grasps;

Grass. See Spear-grass.

The kine are couched upon the dewy grass;
Or playing wanton with the floating grass,
Long grass and willows form the woven wall,
And downward thence a knot of grass he throws,
Or whistling thro' thin grass along the unfurrowed
plain.

My hen's rich nest through long grass scarce espied;
Was soft and warm, no dew lay on the grass,
No food was there, no drink, no grass, no shade,
And, when the grass was dry,
Beneath a rock, upon the grass,
With one knee on the grass did the little Maiden kneel.

Thy plot of grass is soft, and green as grass can be;
This grass is tender grass; these flowers they have no peers;

Look at the common grass from hour to hour:
Long blades of grass, plucked round him as he lay,
I read the rustling of the grass;
Here's grass to play with, here are flowers;
The grass you almost hear it growing,
A frog leaps out from bordering grass,
When grass is chill with rain or dew,
Green is the grass for beast to graze,
Limping o'er the dewy grass,
While I am lying on the grass—
The grass is bright with rain-drops,—on the moors
The grass—it shook upon the ground!
"Here on the grass perhaps asleep he sank,
"Now, here is neither grass nor pleasant shade;
Light as the wind along the grass.
Where'er the tender grass was leading
Does not one live near this green grass?
Is Peter driving through the grass—
Leaving the body on the grass.
A bramble-leaf or blade of grass.
Well pleased, her foot should print earth's common grass.

For one hour's perfect bliss, to tread the grass
Knit the blithe dance upon the soft green grass;
From dew-sprinkled grass to heights guarded with snow,

That Life is but a tale of morning grass
Couched upon the dewy grass,
And earth's green grass beneath his feet;
Dim-gleaming among weeds and grass,
Man is as grass that springeth up at morn,
And grass in the green field.
As if green summer grass were the floor of my room,
And on that morning, through the grass,
Is in the grass beneath, that grows
Through dewy grass, nor small birds, hushed in
bowers,

Of firm dry ground, with healthful grass
Strung on slender blades of grass;
May one blade of grass spring up over thy head;
Of splendour in the grass, of glory in the flower;
Thence down the steep a pile of grass he throws
With silver clouds, and sunshine on the grass,
Above the raven's nest, by knots of grass
Ground where the grass had yielded to the steps
And lay till now neglected in the grass.
From touch of growing grass, that may not taste
Catching from tufts of grass and harebell flowers
To bend as doth a slender blade of grass.
The grass is cleared away, and to this hour
Tempestuous, dark, and wild, and on the grass
Couched in the dewy grass. With such a theme,
Among the dewy grass,—in early spring,
Was yellow; and the soft and bladed grass,
The hardened soil, and knots of withered grass:
Now faint,—the grass has crept o'er its grey line;
On the soft grass through half a summer's day,
The dewy grass; you cannot leave us now,
Herbage that never fails: no grass springs up
That sparkling decked the morning grass; or aught
For noontide solace on the summer grass;
Stretched on the grass, or seated in the shade,
He spied the sheep upon a plot of grass,
But now, when everywhere the summer grass

—Such grateful haunts foregoing, if I oft
Under a shade as grateful I should find
To every grateful sound of earth and air;
Such grateful promises his youth displayed—
I lived and breathed; most grateful—if to enjoy
Most grateful, if in such wise to enjoy
Of native feeling, grateful to our minds;
To meditative spleen a grateful feast.
A grateful recollection must supply
Up towards the crescent moon, with grateful heart
Roaming, or resting under grateful shade
A grateful couch was spread for our repose;
A grateful coolness fell, that seemed to strike
Grateful to sight, refreshing to the soul,
Would be most grateful. True indeed it is
Whose grateful owner can attest these truths,

Lines from the churchyard elegy of Gray.
Graze. Of scattered herds, that in the meadow graze,
Green is the grass for beast to graze,
Than this, to graze the herb in thoughtless peace,
Grazed. Saw mountains; saw the forms of sheep that grazed . . . 456 Rydal Mote 40

Greece. Temple of Greece, and minster with its tower
 If for Greece, Egypt, India, Africa,
THE LIBERTY OF GREECE—the words rebound
 Your feeble spirits! Greece her head hath bowed,
 To wait the heroic progeny of Greece;
 And all that Greece and Italy have sung
 Who sang in ancient Greece his loving lay,
 With those of Greece compared and popular Rome,
 To the unenlightened swains of pagan Greece.

Greedier. Each word greedier than the last;
Greedyly. The fact was caught at greedily, and there
Greedy. And higher still—a greedy flight!
 A greedy flame; the pompous mass proceeds;
 Greedy ambition, armed to treat with scorn
 Before the greedy visiting was closed,
 Of greedy foretaste, from the secret stand.

Greek. That the first Greek who touched the Trojan strand
 Nor characters of Greek or Roman fame,
Green. See Bowling-green, Dark-green, Grass-green, Leaf-green, Pea-Green, Sea-green, Village-
green.
 When school-boys stretched their length upon the
 green;
 Inverted shrubs, and moss of gloomy green,
 Feeding 'mid purple heath, "green rings," and broom;
 Shines in the light with more than earthly green:
 Theirs be these holms untrudden, still, and green,
 Green water-rushes overspread the floor;
 Green unmolested light upon their mossy bed.
 To the green corn of summer, autumn's hue
 From the green vale of Urseren smooth and wide.
 The green light sparkles;—the dim bowers recede.
 Appears a scanty plot of smiling green,
 Where the green apple shrivels on the spray,
 The native Genii walk the mountain green?
 Of green isles widening on each snow-clad height;
 Another high on that green ledge;—he gained
 No tree was there, no meadow's pleasant green,
 'Mid the green mountains many a thoughtless song
 Green fields before us, and our native shore,
 That babbled on through groves and meadows
 green;
 On this green bank. Idonea, you are silent,
 Of green leaves on the hawthorn spray,
 The gossings green, the ass's colt,
 The hare upon the green;
 "Their graves are green, they may be seen,"
 Those boys with their green coronal;
 The green earth echoed to the feet
 "On Kllive's smooth shore, by the green sea,
 For Kllive by the green sea."
 Thy plot of grass is soft, and green as grass can be;
 And that green corn all day is rustling in thy ears!
 "Alas, the mountain-tops that look so green and fair!
 Fairest rhyme of the green,
 You see it yonder! and those few green fields.
 The sky, the gay green field,
 And thine ton is the last green field
 But off the woods renewed their green,
 —Of coats and of jackets grey, scarlet, and green,
 Fresh sprigs of green box-wood, not six months
 before,
 He shakes the green bough in his hand.
 The green bough motionless and dead:
 In bush and brake, in black and green;
 You valley, now so trim and green,
 That the green valleys, and the streams and rocks,
 That could not cease to be. Green leaves were here;
 The yew, the holly, and the bright green thorn,
 Of weed and sapling, along soft green turf
 This glade of water and this one green field.
 And taken thy first leave of those green hills
 And one green island, gleam between the stems
 Of tallest hollies, tall and green;
 And all the year the bower is green.
 For you and your green twigs decay
 "The butterfly, all green and gold,
 And to her own green bower the breeze
 Near the green holly,
 Thou, Linnet! in thy green array,
 Seven little Islands, green and bare,
 This moss-lined shed, green, soft, and dry,
 In a green covert, where, from out
 That, as they touch the green,
 Green pasture and the soft warm air
 Green is the grass for beast to graze,
 Red, green, and blue; a moment's sight
 Through woods and on the green;
 And—with my cheek on one of those green stunes
 Of hazels, and the green and massy bower,
 Green pastures she views in the midst of the dale,
 The green field sleeps in the sun;
 To hunt their fluttering game o'er rock and level
 green.
 Had built a bower upon the green,
 By such a Youth, in the green shade,
 The Youth of green savannahs spake,

Green—continued.

How welcome wouldst thou be to this green Vale
And has restored to view its tender green,
Down to the green earth fetch thee from thy sphere,
To sue the God; but, haunting your green shade
Through my green courts; or climbing, a bold suitor,
And to green meadows changed the swampy shores?
(Still marked with green turf circles narrowing
Towards a low roof with green trees half concealed,
Green twigs would pluck, as rapidly
Through all the long green fields has spread,
Through primrose tufts, in that green hower,
And grass in the green field.
As if green summer grass were the floor of my room,
Of the green sheep-track did we glide;
Glancing through that covert green.
With this green isle my fortunes, come not where
At the green base of many an inland hill,
For Gods in council, whose green vales, retreats
On that green mountain's side.
On a green bank a creature stood forlorn . . .

And the smooth green of many a pendent field,
Mixed with the green, some shine not lacking power
His brow with laurel green;
Or a lamb on a green hill,"
Till to a lawn I came all white and green,
The ground was green, with daisy powdered over;
All green and white; and nothing else was seen.
Echoing thorough all the green wood wide.
At Woodstock, on the meadow green and gay,
That overhangs his head from the green wall,
With his grey hairs he went from the brook and the
green
He seems ten birthdays younger, is green and is stout
Or blasts the green field and the trees distrust,
The May had then made all things green;
Spangling a cushion green like moss;
Green ivy risen from out the cheerful earth
Its green untrodden turf, and blowing flowers;
Inverted shrubs, and moss of darkest green,
The gilded turf arrays in richer green,
These fairy holms untrodden, still, and green,
With the green bottom strewn o'er the wave;
Small circles of green radiance gleam around.
Her quiet streams, and hills of downy green,
Green dewy lights adorn the fresher'd mead,
Peeps out a little speck of smiling green,
Up the green mountain tracking Summer's feet,
No solemn songstress lull the fading green,
Its one green Island and its winding shores;
For George and Sarah Green;
From the green fields, and from you azure sky.
To a green shady place, where down I sate
Among the smooth green turf. Through half the night,
Of sea or sky, no colours of green fields;
All the green summer, to forlorn cascades . . .
Hence rustic dinners on the cool green ground,
A holy scene!—Along the smooth green turf
On her green hill, forgetful of this Boy
Make green peninsulas on Esthwaite's Lake:
The trunk and every master branch were green
Down on a green recess, the first I saw Spread round my steps like sunshine o'er green fields.
Of your green groves, and wilderness of lamps
Look out on waters, walks, and gardens green.
Covers, or sprinkles o'er, your village green?
They move about upon the soft green turf:
Evea then the common haunts of the green earth,
Strewing the turf's green slope. A diamond light
In the green dales beside our Rotha's stream,
When to a convent in a meadow green,
Green meadow-ground, and many-coloured woods,
And as the desert hath green spots, the sea
Of the green hills; ye breezes and soft airs,
Birds in the hower, and lambs in the green field,
Far as it carries thee. In some green hower
At every season green, sweet at all hours.
Hollow and green, he lay on the green turf
Green with the moss of years, and subject only
A quiet treeless nook, with two green fields,
Though not of want: the little fields, made green
Not melancholy—no, for it is green,
That opened from the enclosure of green fields
On the green turf following the vested Priest,
Mid a green hay-cock in a sunny field.
Where, haply, crowned with flowerets and green
herbs,
The shady forest of its green attire,—
Aerial, or in green secluded vale,
With the green myrtle, to endure the hours
On the green turf, a dial—to divide
In the green trees; and, kindling on all sides
To the green meadows of another vale.
Small space of that green churchyard with a light
All fresh and beautiful, and green and bright,

Green—continued.

To that green pasture; place before our sight
In the sweet spring that lurks 'mid your green fields;
So green, so fresh, so plentiful, as mine! . . .
Whom sight of this green hillock to my mind
And not a flower, that droops in the green shade,
Green is the Churchyard, beautiful and green,
But the green stalk of Ellen's life was snapped,
" In that green nook, close by the Churchyard wall,
Amid the quiet of the green recess, . . .
But, green in age and lusty as he is,
Full blest he was, 'Another Margaret Green,'
To me as precious as my own!—Green herbs
Expire; and nature's pleasant robe of green,
Of a green hill or bank of rugged stream.
Breathing fresh air, and treading the green earth;
From the green margin of the public way,
And thus the pathway, by perennial green
Blending their diverse foliage with the green
On the green turf, with his imperial front
Down the green field came tripping after us.
We clomb a green hill's side; and, as we clomb,
Gathered together on the green hill-side,
Shagged with wild pale green tufts of fragrant hay,
Through tall green silent woods and ruins grey.
At the green base of many an inland hill
Of this green plant had aptly recompensed
War's tincture, 'mid the forest green and still,
On the green margin of Loch Tay,
To the green plot of pasture in the brook.
The station whence he looked was soft and green,
Warm woods, and sunny hills, and fresh green fields,
And mountains not less green, and flocks, and herds,
That sport among green leaves, a blither train.
Fresh as the freshest field, scoop'd out, and green
Rocky or green, that do like islands rise
Greener. Nor have these eyes by greener hills
To humbler streams, and greener howers.
Greenest. With greenest ivy overgrown,
The greenest bowers, the most inviting ways,
As is the greenest billow of the sea.
Green-grown. A green-grown pond she just has past,
Share with their sculptured fellows, that, green-
grown,
Chequered the green-grown thatch. And so she lived.
Green-head. Up the tumultuous brook of Green-
head Ghyll,
Near the tumultuous brook of Green-head Ghyll,
Beside the boisterous brook of Green-head Ghyll.
Green-house. Green-house, shell-grot, and moss-
lined hermitage,
Glossed in a green-house, or a parlour shrub Greenland. His sheep like Greenland bears; or, as he stepped . . .
Green-leaved. Some to the green-leaved tree,
Greenness. The greenness tells, man must be there;
No winter greenness; of her herbs and flowers,
Greenside. And downward by the skirt of Greenside fell,
Green-sward. And dear the velvet green-sward to his tread;
Her steps the elastic green-sward meets
And dear the green-sward to his velvet tread;
A plot of green-sward, seemingly preserved
Traced faintly in the greensward; there, beneath Green-tinged. Its green-tinged margin in a blaze of gold;
Greenwood. And on the greenwood stone,
Under the greenwood tree,
She sleeps beneath the greenwood tree,
And first we sang of the greenwood shade
Or lur'd along where green-wood paths he trod.
Who pitch their tents under the green-wood tree?
Greet. I greet thee, Chartruse, while I mourn thy doom.
And some with tears of joy each other greet.
To greet the traveller needing food and rest;
Will be rejoiced to greet you. It seems but yesterday
Came forth to greet me; and, when he had asked,
To greet us—and we saw a Man worn down
And birds and flowers once more to greet,
His spirit greet;
And greet your sons! drums beat and trumpets blow!
High on the shore of silver Thames—to greet
Close at my side! She bids me fly to greet
Rise, and to-morrow greet magnificent Rome.
To greet with instant faith their loftiest claim.
Fair Land! Thee all men greet with joy; how few,
Gone forth to greet him on the plain—
And greet the old paternal shield,
To greet him with a voice, and say;—
Was happy that she lived to greet
The living landscapes greet him, and depart;
His Spirit Angels greet; and ours be hope
Of true compassion greet them. Creed and test . . .

Grey—continued.

With hair of glittering grey ;
Of sea and land, with you grey towers that still . . .
As well we knew, together had grown grey . . .

Ere on its banks the few grey cabins rose . . .

Good duffle grey, and flannel fine ;
Forbade the weeds to creep o'er its grey line . . .
Beat his grey locks against his withered face . . .
His staff is a sceptre—his grey hairs a crown ;
With his grey hairs he went from the brook and the
green ;
And, in my spleen, I smiled that it was grey . . .

You see to what end he has brought his grey hairs.
Mourn, Shepherd, near thy old grey stone ;
—Thy lake, mid smoking woods, that blue and grey
The old grey stones the plaided chief surveys,
Whence the scared Owl on pinions grey . . .
Was nothing but the stars and the grey sky . . .
Gone was the old grey stone, and in its place . . .
Of the old grey stone, from her scant board, supplied . . .

To thee and thy grey huts, thou one dear Vale !
On some grey rock—its birthplace—so had I . . .
A chaplet in contempt of his grey locks . . .
Shaggy and grey, had meanings which it brought
Now faint,—the grass has crept o'er its grey line ;
Upon a rising ground a grey church-tower,
Halts the individual, ere his hairs be grey, . . .
To mix the manly brown with silver grey, . . .
Exchange the shepherd's frock of native grey . . .
In the grey cottage by the murmuring stream
Grey locks profusely round his temples hung . . .
The shepherd's grey to martial scarlet changed,
The cornice, richly fretted, of grey stone —
Of those celestial splendours ; grey the vault—
Through tall green silent woods and ruins grey . . .
By the grey moss, but not a single stone . . .
Yon curling smoke from the grey cot below,
A linking for the small grey horse that bears . . .

Greybeard. A blind old Greybeard and accosted him,
For this old venerable Greybeard—faith—
For not misleaving us. That subtle Greybeard—Grey-clad. Tho' now, where erst the grey-clad peasant stray'd,
Grey-haired. And grey-haired men look up with livelier brow,—
And stern looks on the man her grey-haired Comrade cast . . .

Swiftly went that grey-haired Servant,
And grey-haired Wilfred of the glen . . .
Lift up that grey-haired forehead, and rejoice
And grey-haired sires, on staffs supported,
And with those grey-haired champions stood,
That grey-haired Man of green blood,
A grey-haired, pensive, thankful Refugee ;
The grey-haired man of glee :
This chieftain, did I note my grey-haired Dame ;
Deftly prolonged, though grey-haired lookers on
And pleased I looked upon my grey-haired Friend,
My grey-haired Friend said courteously—"Nay,
nay,
And, to remove those doubts, my grey-haired Friend
"Is this," the grey-haired Wanderer mildly said,
The grey-haired Wanderer steadfastly replied,
"Much was I pleased," the grey-haired Wanderer said,
Of rustic loneliness : that grey-haired Orphan—
More pleased than sad, the grey-haired Wanderer sate ;
The grey-haired Wanderer pensively exclaimed,
My grey-haired Friend was moved ; his vivid eye
Grey-headed. A seaman, a grey-headed Mariner . . .
"Grey-headed Shepherd, thou hast spoken well ;
For the grey-headed Sire has a daughter at home,
Like harshness,—that the old grey-headed Sire, Greyhound. Breaks—and the greyhound, DARR, is overhead !
And holds a greyhound in a leash,
But the greyhound in the leash hung back . . .
Greyhound. The greyhounds to their kennel creep ;
Gridding. At once the gridding iron passage found ;
Grief. That grief for which the senses still supply
Though grief and pain may come to-morrow ?
But in the milder grief of pity . . .
Yet, when oppress by sickness, grief, or care . . .
Awoke a fainter sense of moral grief . . .
What tears of bitter grief, till then unknown,
He well could love in grief ; his faith he kept ;
Yet Nature, with excess of grief o'erborne,
More with delight than grief—I heard a voice
Sob after sob, as if her grief . . .
Her very heart, her grief grew strong ;
Of Alice and her grief I told ; . . .
And Grief, uneasy lover ! never rest
Sympathy that soothed his grief, . . .

A habit which disquietude and grief . . .

Grief—continued.

Of universal grief bedewed his honoured hier . . .
My pride was tamed, and in our grief . . .
Think not of me with grief and pain : . . .
They pity me, and not my grief . . .
Now first acquainted with distress and grief, . . .
Of pious faith the vanities of grief ; . . .
Carried about her for a secret grief
The old Man's grief broke from him ; to his heart
Steeped in dire grief the voice of Philomel ;
What grief is mine you see, . . .
Spite of care, and spite of grief,
If solitude, or fear, or pain, or grief,
Each grief, through meekness, settling into rest . . .
And each day's shallow grief ; . . .
As if he were his grief renewing ; . . .
In agony of silent grief—
Of night his grief and sorrowful fear—
Grief, thou hast lost an ever-ready friend
With it Camoens snatched an exile's grief ;
Why should we bend in grief, to sorrow cling,
Nor one look more exchanging, grief to still
Can pomp and show ally one heart-born grief ?
In social grief—
And an unthinking grief ! The tenderest mood . . .
Oh grief that Earth's best hopes rest all with Thee !
But soon, through Christian faith, is grief subdued :
Whom grief hath spared—who sheds no tear . . .
As grief can be in grief's pursuit ?
And filled our hearts with grief for England's shame?
With all who want not skill to couple grief
The grief, the praise, are severed from their dust,
As indignation mastered grief, my tongue
Ill sight ! but grief may vanish ere the morrow,"
Not with a grief that, like a vapour, rises . . .
And melts ; but grief that, like a vapour, rises . . .
Her grief with, as she might !—But, where, oh !
where
Grief of her sting ; nor cheat, where he detains . . .
To the grief of her soul that doth come and go,
O'er PAIN AND GRIEF A TRIUMPH PURE . . .
Rushed in ; and—while, O grief, to tell !
Hath roamed in trouble and in grief, . . .
Rites that console the Spirit, under grief . . .
To poverty, and grief, and disrespect, . . .
A care more anxious, or a heavier grief ? . . .

Did pangs of grief for lenient time too keen, . . .
Grief that devouring waves had caused—or guilt
Pleasure, or Grief, and Toil that seldom looks
By fortune crushed, or tamed by grief ; . . .
And a patience to her grief . . .
The Master died, his drooping servant's grief . . .

Admiring, loving, and with grief and pride
Well hast thou wreaked on me by pain and grief ;
For very grief of which my heart shall cleave ;—
For her heart's grief, she will entreat Sebeto
Not without heavy grief of heart did He
Or if thy cherished grief have failed to thwart
Ill-worthy, Beaumont ! were the grief . . .
Yet have we found how slowly genuine grief
With sharper grief is Yarrow smitten,
To me alone there came a thought of grief :
No more shall grief of mine the season wrong ;
In broken sounds her elder grief demand,
Labour, and Pain, and Grief, and joyless Age,
Awoke a fainter pang of moral grief ;
But if grief, self-consumed, in oblivion would doze,
From fear and grief, and from all need
Your own grief and your friends'—your wandering course ;
Or grief—the inheritance of humankind . . .

There is no grief, no sorrow, no despair,
Such grief for thee would be the weakest thought
Feelings of pure commiseration, grief
Brave hearts ! to shameful flight. It was a grief,—
Grief call it not, 'twas anything but that,—
They had the deepest feeling of the grief . . .
Of ancient heroes. If I suffered grief . . .
To me the grief confined, that thou art gone
That doth not yield a solace to my grief : . . .
But, under pressure of a private grief,
No wild varieties of joy and grief . . .
With fervent love, and with a face of grief
Had from its mother caught the trick of grief,
More plainly still, that poverty and grief . . .
I blessed her in the impotence of grief . . .
From ruin and from change, and all the grief
Sickness, or accident, or grief, or pain,
In silent grief their unfulfilled heads . . .
Of grief, depart without occasion given . . .
Love with despair, or grief in agony ;—
Into a gulf obscure of silent grief . . .
If grief be something hallowed and ordained,
And grief spread wide, but Man escaped the doom
Awakening, chastening an intemperate grief,
Of pain and grief ? " the Solitary asked,
Of unexpected promise, where a grief . . .
Is sure, that through remorse and grief he died ; . . .

Dark is the ground; a slumber seems to steal
While with a hoary light she frosts the ground,
Were there, below, a spot of holy ground
And as his native hills encircle ground
The wet cold ground, he feared, must be his only bed,
And half upon the ground, with strange afright,
And, from the perilous ground dislodged, through storm
The ground I for my bed have often used:
Stretched on the ground, began a piteous tale;
As if he saw—there and upon that ground—
About this ground; 's she hath a tongue well skilled,
As I have done, my eyes upon the ground,
A few leagues hence we shall have open ground,
From the unpretending ground we mortals tread,—
Who are we, Friends? Do we not live on ground
But have they not a world of common ground
an old Man lying stretched upon the ground—
I let him sink again to the ground,
Withered on the ground must lie
Forthwith alighting on the ground,
And there upon the ground I sit,
"And when the ground was white with snow,
Said Walter, leaping from the ground,
And twice in the day, when the ground is wet with
dew,
Of his own voice confirmed, he leaps upon the ground,
In the cold north's unhallowed ground,
- But such a one, on English ground,

Ground—continued.

- Each with the other, on the dewy ground,
At such small elevation from the ground
Dewy night o'ershades the ground;
In some nook of chosen ground:
Hung—head pointing towards the ground—
That from out the rocky ground
Now he leaves the lower ground,
Gained ground upon the Waggon fast,
Chequering the ground—from rock, plant, tree, or tower,
To drag it to the ground;
A Woman seated on the ground.
The grass—it shook upon the ground!
To drag it to the ground;
Had left imprinted on the grassy ground.
Some ground not mine; and, strong her strength above,
Both with thy nest upon the dewy ground?
He looks on festal ground with fruits bestrown;
That British ground commands:—low dusky tracts,
The flowery ground is conscious. But no wind
The infection of the ground partakes,
Blest is that ground, where, o'er the springs
Up from their native ground they rise
And ground fresh-cloven by the plough
While Fauns and Satyrs beat the ground
A little field of meadow ground;
Some twenty fathoms under ground—
The Woman rises from the ground—
Within the Sonnet's scanty plot of ground;
Oo favoured ground, thy gift, where I might dwell
But all the steps and ground about were strown
Dust for oblivion! To the solid ground
Till she exchanged for heaven that happy ground.
Whirled us o'er sunless ground beneath a sky
When giants scooped from out the rocky ground,
Where holy ground begins, unhallowed ends,
Vouchsafed no sparrow falseth to the ground?
While poring Antiquarians search the ground
On ground yet strewn with their last battle's wreck;
Is then no nook of English ground secure
I Well have you Railway Labourers to this ground
The dewy ground was dark and cold;
But the ground lay within that ring
Even by the Living, under ground;
Of Terror, hear us to the ground, and tie
On British ground the Invaders are laid low;
A Roman Master stands on Grecian ground,
Advance—come forth from thy Tyrolean ground,
The ground beneath thee with volcanic force:
Which should extend thy branches on the ground,
As if the streets were consecrated ground,
And horror breathing from the silent ground!
Strains that call forth upon empyreal ground
Success and failure, could a ground
Sung from that heavenly ground in middle air,
The Helvetian Mountaineers, on ground
But heath-hells from thy native ground,
And murmur sweet songs on the ground of their birth!
We parted upon solemn ground
Such ground I from my very heart enjoy!
In heart as dull in brain—while pacing ground
Checked not its rage; unfelt the ground did rock,
Or warning serve, thus let them all, on ground
Embellishing the ground that gave them birth
Meet on the solid ground of waking life,
And, while she raised her from the ground,
Ere on firm ground the car alighted;
Of Christian rites, in Christian ground to lay her."
The ground where we were born and reared!
Peculiar ground for hope to build upon.
Free entrance to the churchyard ground—
Which two spears' length of level ground
Be parted from his ancient ground:
And so will keep the appointed ground
Of rising ground, yon heathy spot!
While ground was left for hope; unblamed
Her way into forbidden ground;
Far under ground is many a cave,
High on a point of rugged ground
A Spearman brought him to the ground,
Of kindred for him in that ground:
Upon the ground received the rest,—
That nook where, on paternal ground,
All now was trouble-haunted ground;
The enclosure of this churchyard ground;
As oft, 'mid some green plot of open ground,
Deplorable his lot who tills the ground,
Springs from the ground the morn to gratefully;
Rejoicing did they cast upon the ground
And hallowed ground in which their fathers lay;
The encircling ground, in native turf arrayed,
On ground which British shepherds tread!
Hath slept since noon-tide on the grassy ground,
At whose behest upon on British ground
And holier seems the ground
In plunged the Knight!—when on firm ground
To pace the ground, if path be there or none,

Guardianship. Committed to thy guardianship by Heaven;
Ground-flow'rs, beneath your guardianship, self-sown.
Your guardianship; I take it to my heart;
Less, as might seem, for general guardianship
In his own valley's rocky guardianship.
To ensure for it respectful guardianship.

Guarding. If, guarding grossest things from common claim.

Guards. Thine arm from peril guards the coasts
That guards the Temple night and day;
That guards the lowliest of the poor.
She guards thee, ruthless Power! who would not spare

Guards the sacred heart of youth,
Of courtiers, banners, and a length of guards;
With Guards and Uhlans run along the Rhine.

Guendolen. By Guendolen against her faithless lord;
Guerdon. Yet arich guerdon waits on minds that dare,
The guerdon of the steadiest aim.
For their high guerdon not in vain have panted!
For which I ask for guerdon but one boon.

Guerdons. Rich guerdons, and to them alone are due.
Guernica. Oak of Guernica! Tree of holier power
Gues. To pull the cord. I guess he must have heard it;

He knows it not, he cannot guess;
For what she ails they cannot guess.
But yet I guess that now and then
Joanna! and I guess, since you have been
Nor seldom, if I rightly guess, while Thou,
He was a lovely Youth! I guess
Nor can he guess how lightly leaps
The tear whose source I could not guess,
Advancing, you might guess an hour,
So that, I guess, the linnet add the thrush,
Men said, what may it be, can no one guess
You lift up your eyes!—but I guess that you frame
And you guess that the more then his body must stir.

Can guess the high resolve, the cherish'd pain
Have felt, and every man alive can guess?
I guess not what this tells of Being past,
I guess that, welcome to your lonely hearth,
Awhile they stood in conference, and I guess
Have been portrayed, I guess not; but it chanced
Nor could he guess the cause for which the boy
Their safe retreat. We knew them well, I guess.

Guessed. You have guessed right. The trees renew their murmur;

And thus, from what I heard and knew, or guessed,
And there's a riddle to be guessed,
I've guessed, when I've been sitting in the sun,
And no one could have guessed his aim—
But fond companions, so I guessed, in field,
Guesses. And guesses their intent.

Guessing. A stranger passed; and, guessing whom I sought,

Guest. See Fellow-guest.
Housed for the night, or but a half-hour's guest.
I thought of times when Pain might be thy guest,
But enters as a looked-for guest,
Oce have I marked, the happiest guest.
This Flower, that first appeared as summer's guest,
"Avaunt, inexplicable Guest!—avaunt!"
Like an unbidden guest. Though day by day
The peaceful guest advancing from afar.
The humid precipice, and seize the guest
Lonsdale I it were unworthy of a Guest,
And there was Sorrow's guest;
Then welcome, above all, the Guest
With a new visitant, an infant guest—
And every man sit down as Plenty's Guest!
Where Fear is but a transient guest,
And there, 'mid many a noble guest,
By stealthy entrance of a perilous guest,
"Bnt nay—the fatal wiles, O guest, recount,
I only, like an uninvited guest

Guests. That nod to welcome transient guests;
Were in this place the guests of Chance:
Like guests that meet, and some from far,
Where Fancy entertains becomig guests;
Guests welcome almost as the angels were
In condensation among rural guests.
His guests, and make them jocund. They are pleased,

Guidance. From the true guidance of humanity,
Meanwhile, for further guidance, look
Emboldened by thy guidance, holy Star,
Sure guidance, ere a ceremonial fence
Unto thy guidance from this hour;
And guidance have I sought in duteous love
For the State's guidance, or the Church's weal,
But for her guidance—one who was to act,
Thy guidance, or a greater Muse, if such
Following the guidance of these welcome feet.
Its guidance; but the infallible support
In furnishing clear guidance, a support
Of safest guidance or of firmest trust—
On what, for guidance in the way that leads

Guide. Descend we now, the maddened Reuss our guide;
Good morrow, Strangers! If you want a Guide,
I'll point him out;—a Maiden is his guide,
He had a Guide, a Shepherd's boy; but grieved
And said, with tears, that he would be our guide:
I had a better guide—that innocent Babe—
And was his guide; if once, why not again,
That Chapel-hell in mercy seemed to guide me,
I was too fearful—take me for your guide
The best and kindest!—but where he? guide me,
The Spectre of that innocent Man, his guide,
To serve them for a guide.
Mother's care no more her guide,

But neither Doctor nor his Guide
There's neither Doctor nor his Guide.
To guide your speech and your affections.
Our heavenward guide is holy love,
And I will always be thy guide,
Lift me, guide me, till I find
Lift me, guide me, high and high
He paces on, a trusty Guide,—
In part, the offences of their guide)
With murmuring Greta for her guide.
It lingered on;—guide after guide
With tools for ready wit to guide;
The guide, the guardian of my heart, and soul
"Protésilus, lo! thy guide is gone!
When thou shalt be my guide:
Who, with a sunbeam for her guide,
From these wild rocks thy footsteps I will guide
If like ambition he their guide.
He left a trusty guide for one
Is reached; but there the trusty guide
Yet Nature seems to them a heavenly guide.
By Thee to guide thy Pupils on the road
Small guide, his fancy cheer, your way;
Too false to guide us or control!
Without a better guide.
Guide our Bark among the waves;
Heavea prosper thee, be hope thy guide!
Hope be thy guide, adventurous Boy;
Hope be thy guide, adventurous Boy;
To her purfling guide Expediency; and so
Light which to God is both the way and guide;
The Bard who walks with Duddon for his guide,
I thought of Thee, my partner and my guide,
And guide the Bard, ambitious, to be One
The invisible God, and take for guide
May guide them in a prudent fight!
Their guide in flight—already she
Blest Pilgrims, surely, as they took for guide
Who cast not off the acknowledged guide,
But he finds neither guide-post nor guide.
Who art a light to guide, a rod
Yet being to myself a guide,
Let me, thy happy guide, now point thy way,
By that other Guide, whose light
Aid to your wrath cry out, "Be thou our guide;"
Guide, from thy love's abundant source,
Who promptly undertook the Wain to guide

Will guide me in my forward path;
To be our guide unto thy Son so dear.
Guide thou my song which I of thee shall say.
And up to yonder hill was I her guide;
With thy bright beams to guide me but one hour,
Could hear to guide them in their choice
Thou drooping sick Man, hless the Guide
To govern and to guide:
The Ettrick Shepherd was my guide.
To guide his dangerous tread the taper's gleam.
"Here Peury off from misery's mount will guide
Secure she walks, Philosophy her guide.
Nor less to guide the fluctuating youth
But Cupid, following cheerly his guide
Guide hither, O sweet Moon, the maid I love so well.
I look about; and should the chosen guide
Much I rejoiced, not doubting but a guide
Ships he can guide across the pathless sea,
Their noon-tide meal. Hastily rose our guide,
To rule and guide his captivated flock.
Those slender cords, to guide the unconscious Boy
For way and guide, a fluent receptacle
This faithful guide, speaking from his death-bed,
Wading beneath the conduct of their guide
Guide faithful as is needed—I began
One guide, the light of circumstances, flashed
Was with me, my encourager and guide:
Which, while I looked all round for my lost guide,
Boundless, or guide into eternity.
The adventurous stranger's steps, a trusty guide;
Guide, and support, and cheer me to the end!"
Looked on this guide with reverential love?
I could not choose but beckon to my Guide,
That fortune did not guide you to this house.
Following our Guide, we clomb the cottage-stairs
Said—"Shall we take this pathway for our guide?
Is still the sport! Here Nature was my guide,
Looked on the polar star, es on a guide

Guided—continued.

That meditation and research may guide . . . 823
 For due provision to control and guide . . . 826
 Or paced the ground—to guide her Husband home, . . . 834
 Guide of our way, mysterious comforter ! . . . 864
 Conscience to guide and check ; and death to be . . . 887
 With birch-trees fringed ; my hand shall guide the . . .
 helm, . . .
 The guide appointed, and the ransom paid . . .
 A stranger loag ; not will the blind man's guide, . . .
Guided. See Heaven-guided, Star-guided.
 So guided, distant a few steps, I found . . .
 Guided by signs which ne'er the sky forsook, . . .
 To Prowess guided by her insight keen . . .
 By a blest Husband guided, Mary came . . .
 Walked proudly at my side ; she guided me ;
 When thou wert thither guided, From the heart
 The plough he guided, and the scythe he swayed ;
Guide-post. He's at the guide-post—he turns right ;
 But he finds neither guide-post nor guide.
Guide-post's. Disclose a naked guide-post's double head, . . .
Guides. Lies on your way ; accept us as your Guides.
 Thou wilt have many guides if thou art innocent ;
 God and that staff are now thy only guides . . .
 We were his guides, I on that night resolved . . .
 ('Tis Fancy guides me willing to be led, . . .
 And, following guides whose craft holds no consent
 By higher, sometimes humbler, guides, . . .
 What strong allurements draws, what spirit guides,
 He guides the Pestilence—the cloud . . .
 That He who guides and governs all, approves
 Spirit in him pre-eminant, who guides, . . .
 That guides them through a stormy night . . .
 Hope guides the young ; but when the old must pass
 And he who guides the plough, or yields the crook,
 That guides the spirit to eternal day, . . .
 Detain me from the best of other guides . . .
 The guides and wardens of our faculties, . . .
 Beginning to mistrust their boastful guides,
 Guides to destruction ? Is it well to trust
 " You have known lights and guides better than these.
 Guides better than mine eyes—until a light
 Nor fall to note the Man who guides the team."
Guid'st. Guid'st the pale Mourner to the lost one's tomb ; . . .
Guiding. May in its progress see thy guiding hand,
 Soft as a guiding star that cheers, but cannot burn,"
 And guiding, like the Patmos Saint,
 A guiding ray ; or seen—like stars on high,
 Guiding the mariner through troubled seas,
 " A little onward lend thy guiding hand."
 Guiding, from cell to cell and room to room,
 Of sun or guiding star . . .
 The time (our guiding object from the first)
 That earthly Providence, whose guiding love
 In perfect wisdom, guiding mightiest power,
 I turn, and reach at last the guiding light ;
 In this blind world the guiding vein of hope ;
Guid-hall. Of Westminster ; the Giants of Guid-hall ;
Guile. Was the aim frustrated by force or guile,
 No guile seduced, no force could violate ;
 Utterly in himself devoid of guile ;
 To undermine with secret guile,
 Feuds, factions, flatteries, enmity, and guile
 Falsehood and guile, he left to sow their seed ;
Guileless. Of wind or wave—a meek and guileless Maiden . . .
 There, too, behold the lamb and guileless dove
Guilt. Alas ! that human guilt provoked the rod
 Flashes a look of terror upon guilt,
 His guilt a thousand-fold. " His most perplexing :
 The truth shall be laid open, his guilt proved
 Of this mock Father's guilt, The Baron Herbert
 This is a time, said he, when guilt may shudder ;
 Thou too art deep in guilt, We have indeed
 Been most presumptuous, There is guilt in this,
 Lost Man ! if thou have any close-pent guilt
 His guilt was marked—these things could never be
 The guilt—have touched it—felt it at your heart—
 Proof after proof was pressed upon me ; guilt
 Made evident, as seemed, by blacker guilt,
 Who, through the portal of one moment's guilt,
 O care ! O guilt !—O vales and plains . . .
 And when, impatient of her guilt and woes,
 And guilt and shame, from which is no defence,
 Nor—touched with due abhorrence of their guilt
 And Christendom respire ; from guilt and shame
 No more—the guilt is banished, . . .
 And, with the guilt, the shame is fled ;
 And, with the guilt and shame, the Woe hath vanished, . . .
 Or guilt, that humbly would express . . .
 In him who at the ghost of guilt doth start . . .
 Lives black with guilt, ferocity it calms, . . .
 For penitent guilt, and innocent distress, . . .
 Guilt unrepented, pardon unimplored, . . .
 The living Waters, less and less by guilt . . .
 Grief that devouring waves had caused—or guilt
 Fly where the culprit may, guilt meets a doom ;

Guilt—continued.

Where guilt had urged them on with ceaseless goad,
 And Truth, whose eye guilt only can make dim ;
 And, guilt escaping, passion then might lead
 Of yet more heinous guilt, with fierce pride,
 By spectral shapes of guilt, or to the ground, . . .
 To vice and guilt, forunning wretchedness, . . .
 Of human nature. Neither vice nor guilt,
 Far was I, far as angels are from guilt, . . .
 But a terrific reservoir of guilt . . .
 Long time have human ignorance and guilt
 Whether affliction be the foe, or guilt ! . . .
 A course of vain delights and thoughtless guilt,
 From error, disappointment—nay, from guilt ;
 Through manifold degrees of guilt and shame ;
 Perchance, the heavier woes of guilt ; feel not
 Or sorrow which his senseless guilt had caused ;
 Such triumph over sin and guilt achieve ? . . .
Guilt-burthened. And the guilt-burthened soul is no longer oppressed, . . .
Guiltiest. Heaven grants even to the guiltiest mind
Guiltless. I am content—I know that he is guiltless—
 That both are guiltless, without spot or stain,
 From the submissive necks of guiltless men . . .
Guiltily. Who has been guilty of some horrid crime,
 Who, casting as I thought a guilty Person
 O guilty Father—would that death
 What spell so strong as guilty Fear ! . . .
 And grandeur crouches like a guilty thing,
 And hang like dreams around his guilty bed . . .
 So, from the body of one guilty deed, . . .
 Did tremble like a guilty Thing surprised :
 (With shame I speak it) to her guilty bowers
 Of darkness, stretched o'er guilty Europe, makes Guinever. The royal Guinever looked passing glad Guise. With him there often walked in friendly guise,
 When this in modest guise was said, . . .
 Utterly dead ! yet in the guise . . .
 The glacier Pillars join in solemn guise
 Yet sometimes in more humble guise . . .
 Through peopled Vales ; yet something in the guise
 And pocketed the relic, in the guise
 Both while he trod the earth in humblest guise
 Where, in the guise of mountaineers, we lay,
 Of nave and aisle, in unpretending guise,
 To place those hillocks in that lonely guise,
 With which the parlour-floor, in simplest guise
 Fountains and spouts, yet somewhat in the guise
 Such sorrow is more lovely in its guise
Guiles. Marshal forth—with a pair of oars in guiles,

Guilt. See Gulph.
 Toil, small as pygmies in the gulf profound ;
 (For dark and broad the gulf of time between)
 Listens, or quakes while from the forest's gulf
 In some dense wood or gulf of snow profound,
 A single chasm, a gulf of gloomy blue,
 That dark mysterious gulf ascending, sound
 From gulf of parting clouds one friendly beam,
 " Some mighty gulf of separation passed,
 The gulf is deep below ; . . .
 Into the gulf profound,
 Toward the mighty gulf of things,
 Ridge, and gulf, and distant ocean . . .
 Down to that hidden gulf from which they rose
 These mighty barriers, and the gulf between ;
 Into a gulf which all distinction levels—
 Bishops and Priests, think what a gulf profound
 Or gulf of mystery, which thou alone,
 —Vex'd by the darkness, from the piny gulf
 A gulf of gloomy blue, that opens wide
 Loud thro' that midway gulf ascending, sound
 —Voiceless the stream descends into the gulf
 Into a gulf obscure of silent grief,
 The unfaithful gulf, where all is still !"

Gushing—continued.

—Behold I—as with a gushing impulse heaves
O'er blooming fields and gushing springs . . .
Fed in the Libyan waste by gushing wells,
Yet is there cause for gushing tears; . . .
And, by her gushing thoughts subdued,
When gushing, copious as a thunder-shower,
His thirst from rill or gushing fount, and thanked Gust. No sport of every random gust,
Which, ere they gain consistence, by a gust
Sprang like a gust of wind: [and with a heart
Gustavus. Withering the Oppressor: how Gustavus sought
Gusts. Dread swell of sound! loud as the gusts that lash
By gusts of vernal storm, attuned his song
Gusly. That twinkle to the gusty breeze,
Or, from the meadows sent on gusty days,
As seen not seldom on some gusty day,
Gypsy. See Gipsy.
The Grison gypsey here her tent has plac'd, . . .

H

Ha. That's all—God save you, Sir. Ha! as I live,
My hands are numb. Ha! ha! 'tis nipping cold.
This bitter night. Ha! Oswald! ten bright crosses
These fifteen years—Ha! I speak—what Thing art thou? . . .
Ha! ha! — As 'twill be but a moment's work,
Ha! what is here? and carved by her own hand!
Ha! my dear Captain. A later meeting, Oswald,
From such rough dealing. Ha! what sound is that?
A human groan. Ha! what is here? Poor Man—
Ha! is it so!—That vagrant Hag!—this comes.
Ha! why these sinkings of despair?
Ha! what a ghastly sight for man to see;
"Ha," quoth I, "pretty prisoner, are you there!"
Habilliments. The form and rich habilliments of One
These rude habilliments, and rest
But with more shame, for my habilliments,
Habit. A habit which disquietude and grief
A Mountaineer by habit, would resound
And habit of his vow. That ancient Man—
Through saintly habit than from effort due
But habit rules the unreflecting herd,
To acts of love; and habit does the work
And, whether from this habit rooted now
Nor did by habit of her thoughts mistrust
Simplicity in habit, truth in speech,
Custom and habit, novelty and change;
Power had reverted: habit, custom, law,
Was never much my habit—giving way
For this to last: I shook the habit off
That happiness; and use and habit gave
The glorious habit by which sense is made
Far nearer, in the habit of her soul,
And thirst for change; or habit hath subdued
Habitable. Her habitable shores, but now appears
Europe, through all her habitable bounds,
Even till the smallest habitable rock,
Habitation. No habitation can be seen; but they
A habitation in this peaceful Vale,
Though habitation none appear,
A habitation marvellously planned,
Their habitation shook;—it fell,
While, in their ancient habitation
A habitation she had found,
Or human habitation rose
A habitation sober and demure
A habitation, for consummate good,
For human habitation; but I longed
His habitation will be here: for him
"Close to his destined habitation, lies
Where not a habitation stood before,
Delightful Valley, habitation fair!
Habitations. Affect my native habitations;
Her pleasant habitations, and dry up
" How gay the habitations that bedeck
The habitations, and the ways of men,
The rudest habitations. Ye might think
The habitations empty! or perchance
And habitations seemingly preserved
Habits. And to her mournful habits fondly cleaves.
Gleam war's discordant habits thro' the trees,
His habits were first sown, even as a seed?
Of inconsiderate habits and sedate,
Imperfect, with these habits must be joined
My calmer habits, and more steady voice,
To rules and habits, whereby much was done,
By useful habits, to a fitter soil
Be rooted out, and virtuous habits take
Habitual. As o'er whose brain habitual frenzy fires
In that habitual restlessness of foot
By the habitual light of memory see
And the habitual murmur that atones
And an habitual disregard of self
Instead of common and habitual sight
To live beneath your more habitual sway.

Habitual—continued.

To my own passions and habitual thoughts; . . .
To lure my mind from firm habitual quest
In my habitual thoughts; the scale of love,
And an habitual piety, maintained
By his habitual wanderings out of doors,
Of his perfections; with habitual dread
Wrinkled and furrowed with habitual thought
For those cold humours of habitual spleen
Is the firm basis of habitual sense
Habitually. And to those graves looking habitually
Habitually dear, and all their forms
Of Whom they are, habitually infused
Admitted more habitually a mild
Dejected, and habitually disposed
Hack. For Lubbock vote—no legislative hack Hacknayed. But some (who brook those hacknayed themes full well,
(A theme for boys, too hacknayed for their sires,)
Had, omitted.
Hail. (Partial list.)
Oh! would that thou hadst perished in the flames!
Hadst been brought up upon thy Father's knees.
Not idly.—Hadst thou been of Ladian birth,
Hadst this to boast of, thou didst love
Thou hadst a voice whose sound was like the sea:
Hag. Ha! is it so!—That vagrant Hag!—this comes Haggard. Bright sparks his black and haggard eye-ball hurls
Haggis. A German Haggis from receipt
Hail. Hail Freedom! whether it was mine to stray,
Check his loud whip and hail us with mild voice,
I witness'd, and now hail your victory.
Hail, blest above all kinds!—Supremely skilled
Hail to Thee, far above the rest
Through "heaven's eternal year."—Yet hail to Thee,
—Or I would hail thee when some high-wrought page
When I step forth to hail the morning light;
Hail, Twilight, sovereign of one peaceful hour!
To that great King: shall hail the crown'd Youth
Hail, Zaragoza! If with unwet eye
Methinks that we shall hail thee, Champion brave,
The triumph hail, which from their peaceful clime
Hail: orient Conqueror of gloomy Night!
Once more, heart-cheering Sun, I bid thee hail!
Hail to the firm unmovable cross,
Honour to word-preserving Arts, and hail
To hail the exploratory Bird renewing
Hail, ancient Manners! sure defence,
Hail, Usages of pristine mould,
All hail, ye mountains! hail, thou morning light!
Hail to the fields—with Dwellings sprinkled o'er,
Hail countless Temples! that so well befit
The warrant hail, exulting to be free;
Hail, Virgin Queen! o'er many an envious bar
All hail, sage Lady, whom a grateful Isle
And lays as prompt would hail the dawn of Night:
Hail to the virtues which that perilous life
That bid me hail thee as the SAILOR'S FRIEND;
With grateful thoughts, doth now thy rising hail
Hail, Bards of mightier grasp! on you
Whence the blithe hail? behold a Peasant stand
Once I could hail (how'er serene the sky)
And hospitably did they give us hail,
Hail to the mighty projects of the time!
Of the Hercynian forest. Yet, hail to you
Gladly the highest promises, and hail,
—Hail Contemplation! from the stately towers,
Hail to the crown by Freedom shaped—to gird
—Hail to the State of England! And conjoin
His triumphs hail, and glorify his end;
Words cannot say, how beautiful. Then hail,
Hail to the visible Presence, hail to thee,
Hailed. Have hailed the morning sun. But cheerily,
Father,
Hailed us as if he had been sent from heaven,
With not unrequit rapture fondly hailed.
Those brilliant strangers, hailed with joy
Or were ye rightlier hailed, when first mine eyes
Whose light I hailed when first it shone,
Her love ye hailed—her wrath have felt!
Whom he had hailed with joy, and cried,
The sight was hailed with loud acclaim
From false assumption rose, and fondly hailed Hailed from aloft those Heirs of truth divine
Her landing hailed, how touchingly she bowed!
And Bards, who hailed thee, may forget
He hath hailed it re-appearing—
Was like a volume to me; some were hailed
And hailed him. Slowly from his resting-place
(The thrond Lady whom erewhile we hailed)
As if awaked from sleep, the Nations hailed
At length I hailed him, seeing that his bat
And let the light mechanic tool be hailed
He, with the foremost whose impatience hailed
Religion hailed her creeds by far restored, Hailing. As if a new-made heaven were hailing a new earth!

 From the roots of his hair there shall start . . . 621
 Graced with redundant hair, Iopas sings . . . 625
 In splendid garb, with hose of silk, and hair . . . 649
 Like one of those who walked with hair unsinged . . . 692
 A beauty exquisitely wrought, with hair . . . 710
 Hath yet his bracelet or his lock of hair . . . 778
 Thus would the Votary say—'this severed hair, . . . 812
 And, doubtless, sometimes, when the hair was shed . . . 812
 A ragged Offspring, with their upright hair . . . 879
Half-breadth. Through every hair-breadth in that field of light, . . . 640
Haired. See Bright-haired, Golden-haired, Grey-haired, Red-haired.
Hairs. Confirmed by hoary hairs, belief may claim; . . . 5
 In his grey hairs!—I love the Father in them; . . . 57
 That thinly decks his few grey hairs; . . . 157
 The oldest man he seemed that ever wore grey hairs . . . 196
 Nor leave thee, when grey hairs are nigh, . . . 218
 Have neither limbs, feet, feathers, joints, nor hairs: . . . 268
 The hairs are a scripture upon thy head; . . . 400
 His staff is a white sceptre—his grey hairs a crown; . . . 569
 With his grey hairs he went from the brook and the green; . . . 570
 You see to what end he has brought his grey hairs . . . 574
 Thin silver hairs, and ancient hamlet fame; . . . 595
 Bows his young hairs with sorrow to the grave, . . . 613
 With tufts and hairs of wool, as if the sheep, . . . 767
 With laurel planted upon hoary hairs, . . . 816
 Halts the individual, ere his hairs be grey, . . . 829
Halcyon. Thou leav'st the halcyon free her hopes to build . . . 153
Halcyon's. The fitting halcyon's vivid dyes; . . . 497
Hale. An urchin both vigorous and hale; . . . 86
 Engendering in the blood of hale fourscore . . . 98
 I still am strong and hale;—do thou thy part; . . . 137
 Sick, hale, old, young, who cried before that cloud, . . . 257
 But stout and hale, for travel unimpair'd, . . . 756
 Among them, with a body hale and stout, . . . K. 8.
Half. See Half-and-half.
 (Visible though they be to half the earth, . . . v
 Though half a sphere be conscious of their bright-ness) . . . v
 Half grey, half shagged with ivy to its ridge; . . . 3
 You chestnuts half the latticed boat-house hide, . . . 4
 Force half upon the wave their cumbrous flight . . . 6
 Aloft, here, half a village shines, arrayed . . . 12
 In golden light; half hides itself in shade: . . . 12
 A cowering shape half hid in curling smoke! . . . 13
 Remembered half the year and hoped the rest, . . . 19
 Pursued his vagrant way, with feet half bare; . . . 24
 And half upon the ground, with strange affright, . . . 26
 The man half raised the stone with pain and sweat, . . . 27
 Half raised, for well his arm might lose its force . . . 27
 And when that shape, with eyes in sleep half drowned, . . . 27
 From her bare straw the Woman half upraised . . . 27
 At which I half accused the God in Heaven— . . . 34
 Shall give me half. What's this?—I fear, good Woman, . . . 46
 That half a word should blow it to the winds! . . . 58
 Nor any half so sure. This Stripling's mind . . . 58

Half—continued.
 To travel half a mile alone.—Good Lady! . . . 76
 "To Durham," answered she, half wild— . . . 82
 You'll find a task for half a year . . . 85
 Just half a week after, the wind sallied forth, . . . 86
 That but half of it was hers, and one half of it was mine . . . 88
 "Nay," said I, "more than half to the damsel must belong, . . . 88
 While half an hour went by, the Priest had sent . . . 95
 Was half a shepherd on the stormy seas . . . 95
 Will bring down half a mountain; what a feast . . . 97
 Of half these graves? For eight-score winters past, . . . 98
 Now there's a grave—your foot is half upon it, . . . 98
 Was half a mother to them.—If you weep, Sir, . . . 99
 If I with her but half a noon . . . 109
 Half hidden from the eye! . . . 109
 Proud as a rainbow spanning half the vale, . . . 111
 Together here this one half day . . . 121
 With half the wonders that were wrought for him . . . 122
 And Betty, half an hour ago, . . . 127
 She preface half a hint of this . . . 128
 But half of what to him befell; . . . 129
 Than half his substance. This unlooked-for claim, . . . 134
 Than half of my inheritance was mine . . . 137
 In the mid heavens, is never half so fair . . . 148
 Thou wilt come with half a call, . . . 160
 Above Helm-crag—a streak half dead, . . . 175
 The Woman, as if half afraid: . . . 176
 We've had in half an hour or less . . . 176
 Said I, "not half an hour ago . . . 191
 When Ruth was left half desolate, . . . 192
 That she in half a year was mad, . . . 194
 Just half a foot in height . . . 198
 An infant's grave was half so fair . . . 198
 Through half the clear blue sky will go; . . . 199
 Half wasted the square mound of tawny green; . . . 202
 Hunt half a day for a forgotten dream . . . 202
 Not half a furlong from that self-same spring . . . 203
 Of eye, and ear,—both what they half create, . . . 207
 Features half lost amid their own pure light . . . 226
 A work, one half of which was done . . . 240
 And half, by knitting of his brows . . . 240
 A heart but half as good as thine! . . . 248
 That Pile of Turf is half a century old; . . . 276
 Those trees, a veil just half withdrawn; . . . 288
 From land to land through half the earth! . . . 291
 Was never half so blessed . . . 296
 But half their host is buried;—rock on rock . . . 314
 Whence half the breathing world received its doom; . . . 368
 The hoem half, and half concealed, . . . 371
 Half grot, half arbour—proffers to enclose . . . 382
 Of a black cloud diffused o'er half the sky: . . . 383
 Relinquished half his empire to the host . . . 392
 Half to himself, and half to them . . . 405
 Towards a low roof with green trees half concealed, . . . 475
 Thus for the length of half a day, . . . 481
 Already half his race hath run; . . . 506
 Conscious of half the pleasure which they give; . . . 511
 Meet them half way." Vain boast! for these, the more . . . 513
 Through half the summer, stands with top cut sheer, . . . 521
 Just half protruded to the light of morn, . . . 523
 Half hid in native trees. Alas 'tis not, . . . 524
 Hides half their beauty from the common gaze; . . . 539
 Half of a Vessel, half—no more; the rest . . . 540
 She goeth, as she were half out of her mind, . . . 559
 Approached within the length of half his staff, . . . 566
 This child but half knows it, and that not at all . . . 572
 And blessings half a century old, . . . 578
 Here half a village shines in gold array'd, . . . 604
 Bright as the moon, half hides itself in shade . . . 604
 Gives way, and half it's pines torment the flood; . . . 606
 Half wishes your delusion were it's own . . . 614
 Besiege the traveller whom they half affright . . . 615
 Among the smooth green turf. Through half the night, . . . 636
 There, while through half an afternoon we played . . . 644
 With half the length of a long field between . . . 659
 Saw, over half the wilderness diffused . . . 667
 A long half hour together I have stood . . . 671
 To times, when half the city shall break out . . . 697
 Among the crowd, half pleased with, half ashamed . . . 699
 Shone mutually indebted, or half lost . . . 706
 And half upbraids their silence. But that night . . . 719
 And is half pleased with things that are amiss, . . . 729
 Half conscious of the soothing melody, . . . 756
 His eyes as if in drowsiness half shut, . . . 762
 With half a harvest. It pleased Heaven to add . . . 769
 Alone, through half the vacant sabbath day; . . . 769
 On the soft grass through half a summer's day, . . . 814
 That God, who takes away, yet takes not half . . . 855
 Scattered through half the circle of the sky; . . . 893
 So welcome, no temptation half so dear . . . K. 8.
 A leprous stain! ere half his thread was spun . . . L. I.
Half-absence. There was a strange half-absence, as of one . . . 665

Half-a-crown. Quoth Andrew, "Under half-a-crown, Half-and-half. Half-and-half idlers, hardy recusants, Half-blown. The half-blown rose, the lily spare? . . . A half-blown rose had tempted thee to sip . . . By morning shed around a flower half-blown ; . . .
Half-breathless. And the half-breathless Lamp-lighter—he's in the net !
Half-concealed. Which a brown motion half-concealed.
Half-conscious. Doth seem half-conscious of the joy it brings
Half-covered. And was itself half-covered with a store
Half-dead. Is he not eyeless? He has been half-dead
Half-deterred. Or steal beneath the mountains, half-deterred,
 Or steal beneath loose mountains, half-deter'd, . . .
Half-experience. And that half-wisdom half-experience gives Half-extinguished. And now, with gleams of half-extinguished thought, . . .
Half-formed. My half-formed melodies, . . .
Half-frequented. Some half-frequented scene, where wider streets
Half-holidays. Our pastime was, on bright half-holidays,
Half-hour. Another grave,—near which a full half-hour I've watched you now a full half-hour, . . . A long half-hour together I have stood . . .
Half-hour's. Housed for the night, or but a half-hour's guest.
 When but a half-hour's roam through such a place
Half-human. "To all the unshaped half-human thoughts
Half-inch. And half-inch fissures in the slippery rock
Half-infant. To my half-infant thoughts ; that very week
Half-insensate. Or half-insensate impotence of mind,
Half-insight. Nor wanted such half-insight as grew wild
Half-learn't. And the indulgence that a half-learn't speech
Half-mad. That half-mad thing of witty rhymes
Half-made. And instruments of music, some half-made
Half-moon. With that beautiful soft half-moon,
Half-o'ergrown. Lie loose on the bare turf, some half-o'ergrown
Half-open. Of his half-open hand pure from blemish or speck ;
Half-opened. With my hand on the latch of the half-opened gate,
 For him, the sweet half-opened Flower !
Halfpennies. And halfpennies, wherewith the neighbours bought . . .
 The halfpennies together.
Half-raised. He heard a voice, and saw, with half-raised head,
Half-raises. But now he half-raises his deep-sunken eye,
Half-reverted. Sidelong, and half-reverted. She who tends Half-rural. Half-rural Sadler's Wells? Though at that time
Half-seen. The half-seen form of Twilight roams astray ;
 Half-seen or wholly, lost and found again,
Half-shaped. And, with the half-shaped road which we had missed
Half-sheltered. I sat half-sheltered by a naked wall ;
Half-slumber. If, while a half-slumber his memory bedims,
 (Said the good Vicar with a fond half-smile)
Half-spill'd. Of quaint apparel for a half-spill'd boy ;
Half-stifled. Books have we to read,—but that half-stifled knell,
Half-stripped. From half-stripped woods and pastures bare,
Half-suppressed. Their orisons with voices half-suppressed,
Half-thinking. That some there are, squeamish half-thinking cowards,
Half-titled. For Fancy's errands,—then, from fields half-titled Half-told. That left half-told the preternatural tale,
Half-veiled. Even now she shows, half-veiled, her lovely face :
 Half-veiled in vapoury cloud, the silver steam
Half-way. With a tiger-leap half-way
 Not less than half-way up on Mountain's side
Half-wisdom. And that half-wisdom half-experience gives,
Half-wise. Consider, Johnny's but half-wise ; . . .
Half-witted. And mourn thou poor half-witted Boy !
Half-yearly. From the half-yearly holidays returned,
Half-years. How sometimes, in the length of those half-years,
Hall. See Guild-hall, Ivor-hall, Rylstone-hall, Threlkeld-hall.

Hall—continued.
 To the dark cave, the goblin's hall ; . . .
 A rout this morning left Sir Walter's Hall, . . .
 Which soon composed a little sylvan hall, . . .
 High in the breathless Hall the Minstrel sate,
 From every corner of the hall ; . . .
 And soothed war-wearied knights in rafters hall.
 For dancers to the festive hall . . .
 In sylvan bower, or haunted hall ? . . .
 Of Easter winds, unscared, from hut or hall
 Fireside, the heroic wealth of hall and bower,
 For the blood-thirsty mead of Odin's riotous Hall.
 Or shed, within a vaulted hall, . . .
 Tumultuous noises filled the hall ; . . .
 But Francis, in the vacant hall,
 Walks, pools, and arbours, homestead, hall—
 Had sate together in Reby Hall !
 Where Rylstone's old sequestered Hall . . .
 But to remote Northumbria's royal Hall, . . .
 And his Retainers of the embattled hall . . .
 Dwells in the Hall of Ivor ;
 When feasts shall crowd the hall, and steeple bells
 To stately Hall and Cottage rude
 And, as the hall he entered, there, between
 A Nation's hopes lie crushed in Claremont's desolate Hall . . .
 In ancient times, and ere the Hall was built . . .
 Of gonew'd students, quitted hall and bower, . . .
 Leaving a thousand others, that, in hall,
 The Minstrel ! wandering on from hall to hall,
 And one a turreted manorial hall . . .
 Of a prized visitant, in the jolly hall . . .
 Upon the lips of men in hall or bower ; . . .
 Hung in his rustic hall. One ivied arch
 Of this recess, their legislative hall,
 To illumine Playford hall,
Hall-clock. The hall-clock in the clear moonshine Hallelujah. The rapture of the hallelujah sent . . .
Hallelujahs.
 Of hallelujahs tost from hill to hill—
 Glad HALLE-lujahs to the eternal King ! . . .
Halloo. Halloo ! halloo ! a long halloo ! . . .
 The halloo of Simon Lee.
Hallooed. The Knight hallooed, he cheered and chid them on . . .
Hallooing. Hallooing from an open throat, . . .
Halloos. And long halloos and screams, and echoes loud,
Hallow. Which genius did not hallow ; 'gainst the taint
 (Oh were it mine !) to hallow saddest tears, . . .
 And joyous loves, that hallow innocent days
Hallowed. See Newly-hallowed, Time-hallowed.
 Ill-fated Ruth, in hallowed mould . . .
 With awe, receives the hallowed veil,
 From morn to eve, with hallowed rest.
 Nor hallowed less with musical delight
 Its glistening dew ; but hallowed is the clay
 From many a hallowed stream and grove,
 Gracious to service hallowed by its aim ;—
 And in the hallowed grot.
 The circuit of this hallowed place.
 For ever hallowed be this morning fair,
 Of toil stupendous, in a hallowed seat
 And hallowed ground in which their fathers lay ;
 The Druid-priest the hallowed Oak adore ;
 Hallowed be it, where a holy shine ! . . .
 Each field is then a hallowed spot,
 All who, around the hallowed fane,
 Ye Lime-trees, ranged before this hallowed Urn,
 Of resignation find a hallowed place . . .
 This Tablet, hallowed by her name . . .
 Hallowed to meekness and to innocence ; . . .
 These reverend aisles, these hallowed towers,
 Those hallowed and pure motions of the sense
 For ever to be hallowed ; only less . . .
 Their spirit hallowed the sad spectacle
 Of Institutes and Laws, hallowed by time ;
 Be hallowed, love that breathes not without awe ;
 To self-importance, hallowed it, and veiled
 If grief be something hallowed and ordained, . . .
 Nor let the hallowed powers, that shed from heaven
 Hallowed to revelation ; and no less
 If these may make a hallowed spot of earth
 The hallowed theme) will rise and celebrate
 This hallowed grave demands, where rests in peace
 All cares forgotten, round its hallowed walls !
 Must needs themselves be hallowed, they require
Halloweth. May He, who halloweth the place
Hallowing. For twofold hallowing—Nature's care, and work of human hands? . . .
 Theo, when her child the hallowing touch received,
 All softening, humanising, hallowing powers,
 And Christian meekness hallowing faithful loves. . . .
Hallows. As hallows and makes pure all gentle hearts.
 Hallows once more the long-deserted Quire
Halls. Armour rusting in his halls
 Through shattered galleries, 'mid roofless halls, . . .

 When the soft hand of sleep had closed the latch
 Receive the triumph destined to thy hand !
 Whose overburthened hand could scarcely hold . . .
 The rustic Maidens, every hand . . .
 Of his half-open hand pure from blemish or speck ;
 And hand reposing on the board in ruth . . .
 A Sister serves with slacker hand ; . . .
 Crimes which the great Avenger's hand provoke,
 Of earthly hope put on with trembling hand ;
 Grasped in his hand ; and lo ! with upright sword
 For by her Son's blest hand the seed was sown .
 This spot—his shadowy death-cup in his hand .
 Ripe for the hand, or under a thick shade
 Thy Knights must touch the cold hand of the Virgin ;
 Step forth.—"To touch the pallid hand . . .
 He touched with hesitating hand—
 That scraped the chords with strenuous hand !
 His outstretched hand He tauntingly withdraws—
 By ghostly power :—but Time's unsparing hand
 Has yet a heart and hand for trees and flowers,
 Came those live herbs ? by what hand were they sown
 And busy with a hand of healing ? . . .
 And little children by the hand
 There, face by face, and hand by hand,
 Has touched these—and a Spirit's hand ;
 For on this Banner had her hand
 The Banner touch not, stay your hand,
 Thy place be on my better hand ;—
 Bare breast I take and an empty hand."—
 If hand in hand we have been led,
 Like hungry fowl to the feeder's hand .
 Was on his right, from that guardian hand
 With breast unmailed, unweaponed hand.
 When the Prior of Durham with holy hand
 He took it from the soldier's hand ;
 It was the Banner in his hand !
 To a palsied, and unconscious hand ;
 Clung to the hand to which it passed
 Who, when the Nortons from the hand
 They cried, "the Ensign in his hand !"
 He from a Soldier's hand had snatched
 Dropped from him ; but his other hand
 Thou Spirit, whose angelic hand
 Whose voice we heard, whose hand and wings
 A benediction from his voice or hand ;
 A bead-roll in his hand a clasped book,
 Or smooth his front, our world is in his hand !
 Ye, too, must fly before a chasing hand,
 Outstretching frameward his unbraided hand
 Caught from the hand of Moses as it passed
 He from the pulpit lifts his awful hand ;
 Belovéd Mother ! Thou whose happy hand
 An apostolic hand, and with prayer seals
 Prove that her hand has touched responsive chords ;
 Of woes and degradations hand in hand—
 "Cruel of heart were they, bloody of hand,"
 Her scales with even hand, and culture mould
 Scarcely the hand forbears to dip its palm
 Of those proportions where the almighty hand
 So patiently, and through one hand has spread
 The maddock tottered in his hand ;
 Of wilding in his hand.
 At this he grasped my hand, and said,
 And written words the glory of his hand ;
 Thee will he welcome to his hand and heart,
 From trace of human foot or hand.
 "A little onward lend thy guiding hand
 More awful, where, advancing hand in hand,
 A Pencil to her hand ;
 What hand suffice to govern the state-helm ?
 Will not be found. Her right hand, as it lies
 The appropriate Picture, fresh from Titian's hand,
 But whose rash hand (again I ask) could dare,
 Who thus deceived shall lend an eager hand
 Under the steel his hand had dared to draw.
 A voice—that world whose veil no hand can lift
 Strike not from Law's firm hand that awful rod,
 The final polish of the Plasterer's hand.
 On that proud pageant now at hand or past,
 A blooming Lass—who in her better hand
 On high, a kerchief waving in her hand ! . . .
 Though fed with dainties from the snow-white hand
 A natural meal—days, months, from Nature's hand ;
 How just, how hountful, the hand of Heaven.
 There by caresses from a tremulous hand.
 Are objects only for the hand
 Their work's foundation, gave with careful hand
 She prayed, her withered hand uprearing,
 That gave them birth—months passed, and still this hand,
 The noble-minded Mother's helping hand
 Of Power's far-stretching hand,

Hand—continued.

And from the builder's hand this Stone . . .
 A Poer's hand first shaped it ; and the steps . . .
 Give voice to what my hand shall trace . . .
 And ever, scattered from his palsied hand,
 And careless hand his aims upon the ground,
 What feats would I work with my magical hand !
 Old Daniel his hand to the treasure will slide !
 The pair sally forth hand in hand : ere the sun
 Yet modest hand of charity, . . .
 His hand :—it dropped like lead.
 Ah ! THEN, if mine had been the Painter's hand,
 They parted, sorrow was at hand . . .
 Or waves that own no curbing hand,
 See, where 'mid work of his own hand he lies,
 Sad tidings of joy from Melancholy's hand ;
 And skyward lift, like one that prays, his hand,
 Toss'd light from hand to hand ; while on the ground
 Led by Fear's cold wet hand, and dogg'd by Death ;
 Touch'd with his wether'd hand an aged lyre ;
 Spontaneous wanders, hand in hand with Fear.
 Three times a day the pall and welcome hand.
 No fond hand left to stannch th' unclosing vein,
 With pulseless hand, and fix'd unweariéd gaze,
 A bowl of state is offered go her hand :
 "Son of my buried Son, while thus thy hand .
 Shower with a bounteous hand on Thee and Thine
 Raised by many a hand august,
 To shepherd swains, or seated harp in hand,
 And mockery of the rustic painter's hand—
 Is there a flower, to which he points with hand
 Abode with me ; a forming hand, at times
 With hand however weak, but in the main
 Suffers for this. Even Science, too, at hand .
 My hand upon his back with stormy joy,
 The balace, and with firm hand weighed myself.
 A staff which must have dropt from his slack hand
 With his lean hand, and in a faltering voice,
 A stone, and in the opposite hand a shell
 By deluge, now at hand. No sooner ceased .
 Whee I have held a volume in my hand,
 A specimen pourtrayed with faithful hand.
 And, hand in hand, danced round and round the board ;
 And sometimes rustling motions nigh at hand,
 The begging scavenger, with hat in hand ;
 Ever at hand ; he only a delight
 Exposed to eye and hand where'er I turned . . .
 And the strong hand of outward violence
 Should see the people having a strong hand
 Of Maximilian Robespierre ;" the hand,
 And stuff at hand, plastic as they could wish,—
 Her hand upon her object—evidence . . .
 That once, while yet my inexperienced hand . . .
 Some unknow hand had carved the murderer's
 name . . .
 Upon my right hand couched a single sheep . . .
 No secondary hand can intervene . . .
 The strong hand of her purity ; and still . . .
 When, every day, the touch of human hand
 The threshold, lifted with light hand the latch ;
 Said Margaret, 'for I knew it was his hand
 Bespake a sleepy hand of oeglegiance ;
 Sank to decay ; for he was gone, whose hand,
 And he is gone !' The book, which in my hand .
 By this, the book was in the old Man's hand ;
 Must have sustained a loss."—"The hand of Death,"
 Without a hand to gather it." At this . . .
 So do I call it, though it be the hand . . .
 As if inserted by some human hand
 Reared by the industrious hand of human art
 This covert nook reports not of his hand)
 "O happy time ! still happier was at hand ;
 Into a 'feathery bunch,' feeds at your hand :
 For studious fancy, his quick hand bestowed
 The planets in the hollow of their hand ;
 Herewith he grasped the Solitary's hand,
 With sparing hand. Then trust yourself abraded
 Here did our peevish Host put forth his hand
 Of long companionship, the artist's hand,
 Cuts off that hand, with all its world of nerves,
 The tiller's hand, a hermit might have chosen,
 Bearing a lantern in her hand she stood,
 Of mountain turf required the builder's hand
 Who, with a dutiful and tender hand,
 And, if the desolating hand of war
 That, from his dying hand, she would accept
 By his own hand disposed with nicest care,
 Charming the air with skill of hand or voice,
 He fled ; and when the lenient hand of time
 If, spite of keenest eye and steadfast hand,
 The hand grew slack in alms-giving, the heart
 A Titian's hand, address to picture forth
 Committed by forsaken Ellen's hand
 Which, from her Father's honoured hand, herself,
 By nature yielded to his practised hand ;—
 Meanwhile the unsendetary Master's hand
 From cups replenished by his joyous hand
 By all the graces with which nature's hand . . .

Hand—continued.

To the wide-ruling eagle, and his hand
The Mother left alone,—no helping hand
Or lapse of liquid element—by hand,
Are leagued to strike dismay; but outstretched hand
—What kindly warmth from touch of fostering hand,
Was the commodious walk; a careful hand
And with a pretty restless hand of love.
And lifts his wifful hand on mischief bent,
Dropped the light oar his eager hand had seized.
With hirc-trees fringed; my hand shall guide the helm,
Lo! Smiling Nature's lavish hand
But, from thy hosom, should some venturesous hand
And dipped my hand in dancing wave
Of her own native element, the hand
Look where we will, some human hand has been .
Handed. See Two-handed.
Moves, handed on with never-ceasing care,
Enjoyment haply handed down from times
Sequestered, handed down among themselves
Handful. Takes one unsparring handful for the scrip
Handfuls. And gave, in handfuls gave, the treacherous store;
Handla. For He must never handle sail;
Great truths, than touch and handle little ones.
Handlike. Leonard had never handled rope or shroud;
Handling. To the soft handling of the elements;
Handmaid. —Queen, and handmaid lowly!
Thy handmaid Frost with spangled tissue quaint
Kind Hostess! Handmaid also of the feast, .

A handmaid to a nobler than herself,
Handmaid's. Handmaid's privilege would leave my purpose free,
Handmaids. Within are fifty handmaids, who prepare,
Hands. In that glad moment when your hands are prest
Kind pious hands did to the Virgin build
And chafe her temples, careful hands apply.
Let this old Man find at your hands; poor Leader,
Nor moves her hands to any needful work;
My hands are numb. Ha! ha! 'tis nipping cold.
This Boy—when he comes forth with bloody hands—
Of flowers were in their hands, as if designed .
But first, how wash our hands of this old Man?
Can scarcely be the work of human hands.
I tell you his hands and his body were cold—
I will assist you to lay hands upon him.
Rose from the spot;—the Daughter clapped her hands,
Laid hands upon your Father. Fit it were
The devils at such sights do clap their hands.
Who with bare hands would have plucked out thy heart
For covert from the keen north wind, his hands a hut had made.
For twofold hallowing—Nature's care, and work of human hands?
Clap your hands with joy my Hearers, .

Of busy hands and back-and-forward steps,
To lay his hands upon a star,
Their hands by the fire-side; perhaps to card
Received at others' hands; for, though now old
Here, lay it for me, Luke, with thine own hands.
Forest-fruit with social hands;
Nurtured by hospitable hands;
Have shells to fit their tiny hands
Secure from evil eyes and hauds
Clapping hands with shout and stare,
With faith, the Suppliant heavenward lifts her hands;
Over their mirthful triumph clapping hands.
And fondly licks his hands.
Now creeping on his hands and knees,
And wrings, and wrings her hands.
With his hands pressed against his brow,
Domestic hands the home-bred wool had shorn,
To female hands the treasures were resigned;
Upon his Father's memory, that his hands,
Serving no haughty Muse, my hands have here
Alas! and when he felt their hands—
His master's hands in sign of bliss,
Both hands with rival energy
Great men have been among us; hands that penned
Our hands behind our backs with felon cords?
Clap, infants, clap your hands! Divite must be
That by our own right hands it must be wrought;
With weapons grasped in fearless hands, to assert
And we can brook the thought that by his hands
With feet, hands, eyes, looks, lips, report your gain;
So often tie the thunder-welding hands
—Not work of hands; but trophies that may reach
The work of Fancy; for her willing hands;
Of hearts and hands alike "prepared
Of kindred human hands!
By hands of men, humble as brave, who fought

Hands—continued.

Hands clasped above the crucifix he wore
The crown of thorns, hands pierced upon the tree,
Not injured more by touch of meddling hands
Yet was she work of mortal hands,
Enough, if something from our hands have power
And, 'mid the works of skilful hands,
By ruder hands in homelier vest.
In set array; these bearing in their hands
And hands in resignation prest,
The wounds of hands and feet and side,
By hands of no ignoble birth,
Like Moses hold our hands erect, till ye
With hands stretched forth in mollified disdain,
Their suppliant hands; but holy is the feast
With outstretched hands and earnest speech—in vain!
With the symbolic ring, and willing hauds
The corner-stone from hands that build to God.
Were not some gifts withheld by jealous hands,
With joy like his who climbs, on hands and knees,
Flaming till thou from Paynim hands release
Accepts from your hold hands the proffered crown
Like that pale Queen whose hands are seen
Thou art a tool of honour in my hands;
Very hands as you would say!
Borne in their hands the lily and the palm
Than the hands are free to implore;
Else shall your blood-stained hands in frenzy reap
That our own hands have dearest,
Clapped hands, and shook with glee their matted locks;
Leaving the final issue in His hands
Had preserved from murderers' hands,
Planted by Beaumont's and by Wordsworth's hands.
With help from female hands, that proudly strove
Who have a broom still ready in your hands
And there, with small wealth but his legs and his hands,
Trusts his hands in a waggon, and smells at the hay;
And in his hands I saw a high reward
Your hands, dear Little-ones, do all
Dire clap of hands, distracted chase of feet,
With pale-blue bands, and eyes that fix'd implore,
Pelucid water for the hands is borne,
Journeyed with ponderous folios in their hands;
Long were his arms, pallid his hands; his mouth
And there, with fingers interwoven, both hands
—"Stay, stay your sacrilegious hands!"—The voice
Hands of angelic powers had fixed it there,
A work completed to our hauds, that lays,
Laughed as with rival eagerness their hands
Its sustenance, while the girl with pallid hands
Of kindred hands that opened out the springs
Which gave employment to her listless hands—
But the whole plainly wrought by children's hands!
Hands joined he with his Visitant,—a grasp,
Heart, soul, and hands,—in mending the defects
Save by the simplest toil of human hands
And roofs of temples built by human hands—
With lifted hands invoked, and songs of praise:
By rude hands built, with rocky knolls in front,
So hazardous that feet and hands became
Cemented; by the hands of Wisdom reared
And did, thereafter, hate their hands in fire,
And trusting only to his own weak hands,
Of many fancies, promptig many hands.
Hands apt for all ingenious arts and games;
Raised by his hands. And now no trace is left
Between his hands he holds a smooth blue stone,
And the sole guardian in whose hands we dare
Launched from our hands the smooth stone
skipped the lake;
By priestly hands, for sacrifice performed
They see the offering of my lifted hands,
With prompt yet careful hands. This done, we paced
And wild-flowers known as well as if our hands
The Norman curfew bell when human hands
Those small flat stones, which, ranged by traveller's hands
Of alterations human hands might make
Who in their prime of wedlock, with joint hands
Can make it so, and care of human hands.
The nails, the thorns, and thy two hands, thy face
Plebeian hands the . . . mace have wrenched
Hand-shaking. Profound entreaties, and hand-shaking!
Handsome. We make a kind of handsome show!
Handy-work. Seem not his handy-work to mock
For show; mean handy-work of craftsman, cook,
Hand. See O'erhang.
Humbly to hang, like twinkling winter lamps,
Hang o'er the abyss, whose else impervious gloom
Dilated hang the misty pines on high,
Or hang on tip-toe at the lifted latch.
Then will hang on every stalk,
Of tiresome indolence, would often hang

Hang—continued.

- Foes might hang upon their path, snakes rustle near,
Before you hang my wreaths to tell
A little pair that hang in air,
On thee too fondly did my memory hang,
Yet there the glow-worms hang their lamps,
Thus could I hang for ever!
- On "coigns of vantage" hang their nests of clay;
And shrubs—to hang upon the warm alcove,
And on the verge of Chaos hang in fear.
And hang like dreams around his guilty bed.
These crowded offerings as they hang Toward the mists that hang over the land of my
Sires,
- Yet ever hangs or seems to hang in air,
Of a bright Ship that seemed to hang in air,
The gadding bramble hang her purple fruit;
High will he hang thee up, well pleased to adorn
That never more shall hang upon her breath
The traveller would hang his wet clothes on a chair;
Doth hang around it, as a sickly child
Glad from their airy baskets hang and sing.
There hang in fear, when grows the frozen stream,
Hang from the rocks that tremble o'er the steep,
Hang like an interdict upon her hopes.
A weight must surely hang on days begun
And hang it round with garlands. Love survives;
Pipe solitary anguish; or must hang
From me, those dark impervious shades, that hang
But that some leaf of your regard should hang Dull and inanimate, no more shall hang
Yet cause was none, what'er regret might hang.
That in the steep hang, his pious gift."
That hang aloft in myriads—nay, far less,
There hang thy trophies; hid the jockey's vest,
Hanged. She hanged her baby on the tree;
Hangest. Thou hangest, stooping, as might seem,
to sink
- Hanging. See Loose-hanging.
In airy baskets hanging, work and sing,
Hanging in the open air—but, O good Sir!
With hanging islands of resplendent furze:
'Tis hanging to this day!
Thus leans, with hanging brow and body bent
Through hanging clouds, from craggy height to height,
But near, or hanging sea and sky between,
And woodhines were hanging above.
Or currents, hanging from their leafless stems,
He is who cultivates you hanging field;
- Hangs. Only the waning moon hangs dull and red
And, wildly pausing, off she hangs aghast,
Will see an ash from which a sigo-board hangs;
The barren Moor, hangs from a beetling rock Hangs a Thrush that sings loud, it has sung for three years:
While thy tired lute hangs on the hawthorn-tree,
Of the green meadow hangs his head
Hangs ready to be grasped in sympathy
Hangs that day's treasured sword, how firm a check
Hangs o'er its Parent walking to the cares
Fair hangs the apple frae the rock,
Jane hangs her head upon my breast,
Yet ever hangs or seems to hang in air,
Engendered, hangs o'er Eildon's triple height:
Hangs o'er the Arabian Prophet's native Waste,
Aloft the Raven hangs a visible nest,
- While, opposite, the waning moon hangs still,
And hangs his small wood-hut upon the steeps.
As one who hangs down-bending from the side
Where he was born; the grassy churchyard hangs
On whose soft leaves it hangs, and from whose cup
Hangs permanent, and plentiful as wreaths
Hangs on the old Man with a happy look,
That hangs o'er the moist plain. Again they view
And hangs her garland on the Holy Rood.
- Hanoverian. And sullen Hanoverian! You might think
- Hap. But, if no evil hap his wishes crossed,
Murmuring of him who, joyous hap, was found,
And there, by lucky hap, had been preserved.
Of evil hap and good as oft awaits
- Hapless. The hapless creature which did dwell
When will your hapless patrons learn
Untouched memento of her hapless doom!
Ye ne'er, like hapless human wanderers, throw
To whom this cottage, till those hapless years,
This sad memorial of their hapless friend!"
Was hapless Ellen—No one touched the ground
Which hapless Ellen now was doomed to feel:
- Haply. Haply some wretch has eyed, and called thee blessed;
His Victim—haply to this desolate house.
Through weariness, or, haply, to indulge
Where flowers and herbs unite, and haply some weeds be,
And haply some familiar name
And haply too the cradled Child,

Haply—continued.

- Sons haply of extinguished sires,
And, haply, there the spirits of the blest
With subtle speculations, haply vain,
- And, haply, far within the marble belt
Save haply for some feeble glimmering
When, haply under shade of that same wood,
Or haply there some pious hermit chose
And haply from this crystal pool,
And haply with a finer care
Where haply (kind service to Piety due!)
Such, haply, yon ITALIAN Maid,
Fetched from Mount Calvary, or haply delved
Ngr haply less the Brother whom I marked,
In secret revels—haply after theft
To wash the fleece, where haply hands of rock,
With doubt, with fear, and haply with remorse:
Heart-touched, and haply not without a tear.
Yea, many, haply wont to entertain
The Offspring, haply at the Parent's side;
Of genuine faith. Here, haply, 'mid this band
Haply the untaught Philosopher may speak
Such, haply, to the rugged chief
Which, haply, kindred souls may prize
- Haply for corporeal sight!
Banished, nor ever, haply, be restored
Or haply sprung from vaunting Cowardice
- Then haply, Beaumont! words in current clear
Though haply less than joy.
Of Nightshade haply yet may tell;
That haply flowed from me, by fits of silence.
Or from like wanderer, haply have received
Yet haply Arno shall be spared all cause
Shall stand a votive Tablet, haply free,
Yet, haply, on the printed page received,
Haply that child in fearful doubt may gaze,
May cling;—hard fate! which haply need not be
Vague longing, haply bred by want of power,
Nor profitless, if haply they impressed
And haply meet reproaches too, whose power
Supplied our want, we haply might employ
And for thyself, so haply shall thy days
Or, haply, some choice rural hannt,—the Falls
Enjoyment haply handed down from times
One night, or haply more than one, through pain
To die at home, was haply as I knew,
With some who perished; haply perished too,
Beat on my roof, or, haply, at noon-day,
Where it is due: thus haply shall I teach,
Or haply by a temper too severe,
Or haply shrouded in a hermit's cell.
Returned not, and now, haply, on the heights
Where, haply, crowned with flowerets and green
herbs,
His specimen, if but haply intervened
Urged on, or haply by intense delight
Or haply thinking of far-distant friends,
And haply sometimes with articulate voice,
Continuation haply of the notes
Of kindred mould.—Such haply here are laid?
I sometimes entertain, that haply bound
(As books and haply votive altars vouch)
And parted them; or haply both are gone
- Happen. With dread of what will happen next;
To me that morning did it happen so;
What change shall happen next to Nunery Dell?
Happen'd. It happen'd that, to sleep inclin'd
Happier. Transmits of happier lot in times of yore!
That happier days we never more must view.
But life of happier sort set forth to me.
Far happier lot, dear Boy, than brings full many to this shrine;
For happier soul no living creature has
Happier, far happier is thy lot and ours!
Scattering fresh flowers; though happier far, I wean,

Happier—continued.

Is still a happier man, who, for those heights . . .
The spots where such abide! But happier still . . .
Who happier for the moment—who more blithe . . .
For work of happier issue, to the side . . .
Resumed the manners of his happier days ; . . .
On me can Time no happier state bestow . . .

Happiest. Where breathed the gale that caught

Wolfe's happiest sigh, . . .
The happiest lovers Arcady might boast, . . .
He knew it not) and from his happiest looks, . . .
And, in their happiest moments, not content, . . .
The happiest bird that sprang out of the Ark! . . .
One have I marked, the happiest guest . . .
Though wrought in Vulcan's happiest mood, . . .
Our Travellers are the happiest pair ; . . .
Or note (translucent summer's happiest chance!) . . .
When happiest Fancy has inspired the strains, . . .

A landscape more august than happiest skill . . .
Or, at a touch, produced by happiest transformation.

Was happiest, proudest, of them all ! . . .
The wisest, happiest, of our kind are they . . .
Hath here portrayed with Nature's happiest grace
That civic strife can turn the happiest hearth . . .
The happiest for your home ; . . .
Within the happiest breast on earthly ground.

This sad belief, the happiest that is left . . .
The happiest of the band ! . . .
Portrayed with happiest pencil, not untrue
In happiness to the happiest upon earth. . . .
Their fairest, softest, happiest influence.
And waking thoughts more rich than happiest dreams.

For his delight—the happiest he of all ! " . . .
" Far happiest " answered the desponding Man,
Caught in their fairest, happiest, attitude!
And seemingly her happiest, look so fair
And new-born waters deemed the happiest source
Happiest of happy though I be, like them

Happiest-looking. Among the happiest-looking homes of men

Happily. Measures not crimes like his. We rank not,

happily,
End happily, as they began ! " These gleams
Dear Ruth ! more happily set free . . .
Was wanting ;—and most happily till now,
And by Heaven's favour happily fulfilled ;
Now happily apprenticed,—I perceive
Was from his Parents happily concealed ;
And small birds singing happily to mates
Happily spared, a little Gothic niche

Happiness. Alive to independent happiness,

With so much happiness to spare,
Such happiness as I have known to-day.

Their happiness, or to disturb their love.
Of future happiness. " You shall return,
Five years of happiness or more . . .
With sudden happiness beyond all hope.

All happiness her own.
For ought, but what thy happiness could spare.
The strife of happiness and pain,
Of inward happiness. We are selfish men ;
A great man's happiness ; thy zeal shall find
All pride ; by which all happiness is blighted.
A happy hour with holier happiness.

Of a redeeming happiness.
Sigh for the obscurities of happiness.
And She her happiness can build
Our pastime and our happiness will grow . . .
Thou monument of peaceful happiness ! . . .
Nor thought of tender happiness betray ; . . .
Of too familiar happiness.

Long-vanished happiness refines,
With garlands, cheats her into happiness ;
And happiness that never dies—
Will sometimes in the happiness of love
And happiness, which to the end of time
Of happiness and hope, a youthful Bride.
Such happiness, wherever it be known,
And settling into gentler happiness.

Nor saw a band in happiness and joy
By pleasure and repeated happiness,
Of happiness, my blood appeared to flow
In youth, but oh ! what happiness to live
If ever happiness hath lodged with man,
That day consummate happiness was mine,
Might love in individual happiness . . .
In happiness to the happiest upon earth.

Of present happiness, while future years
One happiness. Throughout this narrative,
Their happiness or misery, depends
To happiness unthought of ? The inert
We find our happiness, or not at all !
Maintained for me a secret happiness.

And through a perfect happiness of soul,
Nothing but happiness, in some lone nook,

Happiness—continued.

To thee, in memory of that happiness, . . .
Rich in true happiness if allowed to be . . .
Might live on earth a life of happiness. . . .
And walked along my road in happiness." . . .
That showed like happiness. But, in despite
For independent happiness ; craving peace,
The central feeling of all happinesses,
Enlivened happiness with joy o'erflowing,
Life's genuine inspiration, happiness
That happiness ; and use-and habit gave
Which I had trod in happiness and peace,
We have, or hope, of happiness and joy,
Embosomed happiness, and placid love ;
' Joy be their lot, and happiness,' he cried,
It was no momentary happiness
A happiness that ebbed not, but remained
Their virtue, service, happiness, and state . . .
All praise, all safety, and all happiness,
And pleasure sobered down to happiness !
Thy glory and thy happiness be there.

Happy. Fair scenes, erewhile, I taught, a happy

child,
Of happy wisdom, meditating good,
Where we, my Friend, to happy days shall rise,
Where hum on busier wing her happy bees ;
The happy husband flies, his arms to throw
And knew not why. My happy father died,
Thrice happy ! that for him the grave could hide.

Of such rough storm, this happy change to view."
Yet happy thou, poor boy ! compared with me,
When I had been most happy. Pardon me
He shall reveal himself. Happy are we,
And dreams that he is happy. We dissect
One happy thought has passed across my mind.
This is a happy day. My Father soon
Even so this happy Creature of herself
To-morrow is the happy day.
And thus, as happy as the day,
O blessed vision ! happy child !
Who would check the happy feeling
Nor leave untold our happy fight in that adventurous dream.
Time passed on ; the Child was happy,

In all his hardships, since that happy time
The happy man will creep about the fields,
He would himself, no doubt, be happy then
As any that should meet him— Happy ! Sir—
And many, many happy days were his.
You say that he saw many happy years ?
This vale, where he had been so happy, seemed
O, happy Britain ! region all too fair.
O happy Garden ! whose seclusion deep
Within our happy Castle there dwelt One
As happy spirits as were ever seen ;
What happy moments did I count !
Of happy millions lulled in sleep ;
With happy heart I then would die,
And my last thought would happy be,
There dwelt we, as happy as birds in their bowers ;
O happy time of youthful lovers (thus
A man too happy for mortality !
To nature for a happy end of all ;
Oh ! happy, happy, happy John,
That happy time all past and gone,
She's happy here, is happy there,
She knows not, happy Betty Foy !
Like happy people round a Christmas fire.
That is for him a happy school,
Even, as your happy presence to my mind
Thrice happy Creature ! in all lands
And I am happy when I sing
Then happy lie ; for blest am I ;
That they, with whom you once were happy, talk
The happy idleness of that sweet morn,
A second time, in Grasmere's happy Vale.
All summer-long the happy Eve
Once lived a happy life !
A happy Eglantine !"
My father maun a happy year
A happy, genial influence,
Happy, happy Liver,
Wouldst thou be happy in thy nest,
And happy in his flowery cove ;
They are happy, for that is their right !
And all the happy Souls that rode
Over happy to be proud,
For soon, of all the happy there,
Here envy not the happy lot,
Here in this happy dell,"
Here are twenty souls happy as souls in a dream :
And is as happy in his night, for the heavens are
blue and fair ;

Seem to meet with little gain, seem less happy than before :
That they, so happy and so fair
He told of girls—a happy rout !
That to sweet Ruth that happy day
A young and happy Child !

Happy—continued.

Or heard them not, as happy as a boy . . . 195
 Even such a happy Child of earth am I ; . . . 195
 The horse and horseman are a happy pair ; . . . 200
 And now, too happy for repose or rest, . . . 201
 They both are happy at this hour, . . . 204
 Our Clifford was a happy Youth, . . . 205
 Happy day, and mighty hour, . . . 205
 Brought from a pensive though a happy place. . . 211
 Apart from happy Ghosts, that gather flowers . . . 212
 Brush the too happy tear ? . . . 220
 Her happy spirit as a bird is free, . . . 221
 And one of the bright Three become thy happy . . . 222
 Bride. . . . 222
 It was in sooth a happy thought . . . 224
 O, nursed at happy distance from the cares . . . 227
 Will make thee happy, happy as a child ; . . . 229
 Happy milk-maids, one by one . . . 233
 Around those happy fields we span . . . 237
 The soul of happy sound was spread, . . . 239
 A happy respite ! but at length . . . 242
 Happy the feeling from the bosom thrown . . . 250
 Happy the thought best likened to a stone . . . 250
 Sit blithe and happy—bees that soar for bloom, . . . 250
 The immortal Spirit of one happy day . . . 251
 Happy Associates breathing air remote . . . 252
 'Till she exchanged for heaven that happy ground, . . . 267
 And the fair front of many a happy Home ; . . . 258
 Shall look more bright—the happy, happier still ; . . . 281
 Such happy fields, abodes so calm as thine ; . . . 284
 O happy pleasure ! here to dwell . . . 288
 Yet happy feelings of the dead : . . . 289
 Full sure they were a happy band, . . . 297
 She was too happy far. . . . 297
 The haunts of happy Lovers, . . . 302
 Banners, and happy faces, far and nigh ! . . . 304
 Happy is he, who, caring not for Pope, . . . 304
 At happy distance from earth's groaning field, . . . 313
 Happy occasions oft by self-mistru'd . . . 316
 With happy garlands of the pure white rose : . . . 318
 Thrice happy, burghers, peasants, warriors old, . . . 339
 Thy name, O Schwytz, in happy freedom keep ! . . . 339
 To Comò's steeps—his happy bourne ! . . . 342
 Of love in the heart made more happy by tears ? . . . 346
 These records take, and happy should I be . . . 352
 Is wheeling hitherward. Thanks, happy Creature, . . . 361
 Like sinless snakes in Eden's happy land ;— . . . 374
 Be happy and unenvied, thou who art . . . 374
 We made a day of happy hours, . . . 385
 Our happy days recalling. . . . 385
 Untouched, unbathed upon. Thrice happy quest, . . . 388
 Belike a happy—Stand no more aloof ! . . . 390
 A happy hour with holier happiness. . . . 395
 Most happy in the shy recess . . . 399
 And thou, (O happy thought this day !) . . . 402
 Happy as others of her kind, . . . 407
 How proud and happy they ! the crowd . . . 409
 Together died, a happy death !— . . . 410
 Upon the happy Creature's face . . . 414
 Was happy that she lived to greet . . . 416
 How happy in its turn to meet . . . 416
 Descended !—happy are the eyes that meet . . . 423
 Most happy, re-assembled in a land . . . 437
 Beloved Mother ! Thou whose happy hand . . . 445
 Happy the crew who this have felt, and pour . . . 448
 By them who blessed the soft and happy gale . . . 449
 When ye would shelter in a happy home, . . . 463

 Have passed away ; less happy than the One . . . 474
 Full happy season, when was known, . . . 475
 The work of Fancy, or some happy tone . . . 478
 Such an odd such a kind happy creature as he . . . 480
 Thou happy Soul ! and can it be . . . 482
 She seemed as happy as a wave . . . 486
 A happy youth, and their old age . . . 487
 Upon these happy plains ; . . . 487
 Sails with her happy destiny ; . . . 487
 And happy will our nature be, . . . 490
 Who is the happy Warrior ? Who is he . . . 492
 Is happy as a Lover ; and attired . . . 493
 This is the happy Warrior ; this is He . . . 494
 Let me, thy happy guide, now point thy way, . . . 496
 We two have known such happy hours together . . . 498
 Which ye feel not, happy pair ! . . . 503
 How happy at all seasons, could like aim . . . 512
 This People, once so happy, so renowned . . . 513
 Blithe hopes and happy musings soon took flight, . . . 523
 That happy gleam of vernal eyes, . . . 530
 Such happy privilege hath life's gay Prime, . . . 532
 Where happy generations lie, . . . 533
 And happy were I, if the Czar . . . 545
 Hast been so happy that thou know'st what . . . 551
 thoughts. . . . 571
 And is happy as if the rich freight were his owo. . . . 571
 Shining upon thy happy grave. . . . 578
 In more than happy mood . . . 579
 Yet for one happy issue—and I look . . . 582

Happy—continued.

Is happy in his vow, and fondly cleaves . . . 586
 Shout round me, let me hear thy shouts, thou happy . . . 588
 Shepherd-boy ! . . . 591
 Than when, erewhile, I taught, " a happy child," . . . 611
 And with rock-honey flow'd the happy land, . . . 614
 For ye have reach'd at last the happy shore, . . . 615
 While hum with busier joy her happy bees ; . . . 619
 Reared Hawkshead's happy roof, and call'd it mine. . . . 622
 Take pleasure in the midst of happy thoughts, . . . 627
 Doth make the happy happier. This have we . . . 629
 Welcomes the Consort of a happy Queen. . . . 642
 I heeded not their summons : happy time . . . 644
 And be ye happy ! Yet, my Friends ! I know . . . 644
 Or happy blunder triumphed, bursts of glee . . . 652
 Of pleasant wandering. Happy time ! more dear . . . 652
 So many happy youths, so wide and fair . . . 656
 Yet Nature, or a happy course of things . . . 659
 I grieve not ; happy is the gowned youth, . . . 674
 Of Fancy, happy pastures ranged at will, . . . 681
 Or conning more, as happy as the birds . . . 686
 With flowing cups elate and happy thoughts . . . 692
 A happy time that was ; triumphant looks . . . 704
 When storms are raging. Happy are they both— . . . 717
 Happy, and now most thankful that my walk . . . 725
 O, happy time of youthful lovers, (thus . . . 725
 With happy faces and with garlands hung, . . . 733
 Among whose happy fields I had grown up . . . 733
 —In temperament, withal a happy man, . . . 737
 Her seas yet smiling, her once happy vales ; . . . 740
 So was I favoured—such my happy lot— . . . 751
 Than those few nooks to which my happy feet . . . 751
 From her that happy stillness of the mind . . . 759
 Thou in bewitching words, with happy heart, . . . 761
 Or by the silent looks of happy things, . . . 764
 Happy, and quiet in his cheerfulness, . . . 766
 This happy Land was stricken to the heart ! . . . 770
 That seemed the very sound of happy thoughts . . . 772
 Most happy, if, from aught discovered there . . . 775
 To happy contemplation soothed his walk ; . . . 787
 A happy service ; for he was sincere . . . 792
 Broke from the happy old Man's reverend lip ; . . . 792
 A course of days composing happy months, . . . 792
 And they as happy years ; the present still . . . 794
 " O happy time ! still happier was at hand ; . . . 794
 The twain within our happy cottage born, . . . 806
 Our happy life's only remaining stay— . . . 806
 Shall then be yours among the happy few . . . 810
 " Happy is he who lives to understand, . . . 819
 Where peace and happy consciousness should dwell, . . . 823
 Where on the labours of the happy throng . . . 823
 For my own peaceful lot and happy choice ; . . . 823
 " As 'mid some happy valley of the Alps," . . . 828
 Said I, " once happy, ere tyrannic power, . . . 827
 —Not for a happy land do I enquire, . . . 835
 To proclaim—O happy ! yielding to the law . . . 843
 Of happy instinct which the woodland bird . . . 851
 In happy infancy. He could not pine . . . 855
 Happy as they. With spirit-saddening power . . . 855
 See daily in that happy family. . . . 856
 —Thrice happy, then, the Mother may be deemed, . . . 861
 A happy consummation ! an accord . . . 869
 Measuring the soil beneath their happy feet . . . 875
 " Happy," rejoined the Wauderer, " they who gain . . . 876
 " And yet, O happy Pastor of a flock . . . 884
 Hangs on the old Man with a happy look, . . . 888
 Their happy year spins round. The youth obeys . . . 890
 To breathe and to be happy, run and shout . . . 890
 The happy Island where ye think we saw . . . 895
 In a deep pool, by happy chance we saw . . . 895
 Be happy in himself ?—The law of faith . . . 895
 Was raised again ; and to a happy few, . . . 895
 Who leads a happy life . . . 895
 Than their too happy minstrelsy,—a voice . . . 895
 " What happy fortune were it here to live ! . . . 895
 Was that same young and happy being, became . . . 895
 Made for itself ; and happy in itself, . . . 895
 The sunbeam said, " Be happy." When this Vale . . . 895
 Happiest of happy thought I be, like them . . . 895
 Have felt it, not the happy Quires of Spring, . . . 895
 Which in this happy region they behold ! . . . 895
 He, happy man ! is master of the field, . . . 895
 Herein less happy than the Traveller . . . 895
 She being herself a Mother, happy Beast . . . 895
 And ye as happy under Nature's care, . . . 895
 And must be, with God's will, a happy band . . . 895
 O happy Thing ! among thy flowery creeks, . . . 895
 And happy, dancing down thy water-breaks : . . . 895
 Though very happy are not very wise . . . 895
 Yet happy they who to life's later scene . . . 895

Hare's. The hare's best couching-place for fearless sleep;

Hares. Hares couch, and rabbits burrow!

Mark. Let us away! Away! Hark! how the horns

Hark! over the roof he makes a pause,
Hark! the death-note of the year
The horse, and the horn, and the hark! hark away!
To melancholy service—hark! O hark!
And hark! the Leader of the hand
When hark a burst of doleful sound!
Hark! 'tis the Thrush, undaunted, undeprest,
But hark! a gratulating voice,
Hark, how thy Country triumphs!—Smilingly
But hark—the summons!—down the placid lake
Yet not to be mistaken. Hark again!
Made halt—but hark! a noise behind
Hark! 'tis the tolling Curfew!—the stars shine;
Hark! to that second larum!—far and wide
And hark! how lilthe the throstle sings!
Should that day come—but hark! the birds salute
Hot sunbeams fill the steaming vale; hut hark,
But hark the word!—the ship is gone;—
Hark to the peals on this bright May-morn!
His gestures note,—and hark! his tones of voice.

Harkee. Ay, what is it you mean? Harkee, my Friends;—
So saintly and so pure!—Harkee, my Friend,
Harlequin. Litest, gaudiest Harlequin!

Harlequins. Clowns, conjurers, posture-masters, harlequins,
Harlot. Hath become Clifford's harlot—is he living?
After the Babylonian harlot; . . . Do not harm me,
Harm. Your life is at my mercy. . . . Do not harm me,
Indeed we meant no harm; we lodge sometimes,
Her, who hath saved me, to this hour, from harm,
I have done him no harm,
You are safe; the whole world shall not harm you.
I prithe, to the harm thou'st done already.
I thought there was no harm; but that had Man,
To shield her from a moment's harm. To you,
—But let him range round; he does us no harm,
Me to save from chance of harm; . . .
The high crag cannot work me harm,
From him no harm my babe can take;
And your huge burthen, safe from harm,
Thy ship will travel without harm;
Sheds round the transient harm or vague mischance
To harm that might lurk here,
No public harm that Genius from her course
Intemperance with less harm, beware!
Might crush, nor know that it had suffered harm;
Or keep his friends from harm. . . .
This Child will take no harm.
She means no harm;—but still the Boy,
But, to outweigh all harm, the sacred Book,
Dost shield from harm the humblest of the sleeping;
Whispering harm where harm is not;
The Genius of plenty preserved him from harm:
Oft have I seen it muffled up from harm,
Unslightly marks of violence or harm.
With tutelary music, from all harm
Without the light of knowledge. Where the harm,
No harm, and uncomplaining as before
Idle,—but no delay, no harm, no loss;
Harmless. Harmless and harmless as a babe: a Man
Both for tiny harmless minnow

Peopling the harmless fields with signs of woe:
Yet all is harmless—as the Elysian shades
The Season's harmless pastime. Ruder sound
I saw them ply their harmless robberies,
Or staff more harmless than a shepherd's crook,
They not the trip of harmless milkmaid feel,
Delighted, with the glow-worm's harmless ray
And harmless epilectic colling in the sun,
Through wood or open field, the harmless Man
Daily, its bowling-green with harmless strife;
Of harmless Abel's death, by harmless Cain.
Harmlessly. Beguiling harmlessly the listless hours.
Harmodius. Lived in the shade; and to Harmodius know,
As Harmodius before,
Dear Harmodius, art thou fled?
As Harmodius before,
Let thy name, Harmodius dear,
Harmonies. Subdued by breathless harmonies
For all sweet sounds and harmonies; oh! then,
In mute aerial harmonies;
Is wafted in mute harmonies;
Built up by soft seducing harmonies;
Visibly leading on the thunder's harmonies,
Her inmost, softest, tenderest harmonies;
With punctual care, Lutheran harmonies.
Of gospel-truth enchain'd in harmonies
Harmonious. Harmonious thoughts, a soul by truth refined,
To an harmonious decency confined: . . .
What harmonious pensive changes
I hear their sabbath bells' harmonious chime . . .

Harmonious—continued.

Harmonious Powers with Nature work
Proportions more harmonious, and approached . . .
Matins and vespers of harmonious verse!
Wrongs to redress, harmonious tribute paid
To try her strength among harmonious words;
Harmonious as your own, that I might tell
Of three clear-sounding and harmonious bells,
More grateful, more harmonious than the breath,
Harmonious landscape; all along the shore
Harmoniously. On thy Abode harmoniously imprest,
Broad, clear, and toned harmoniously, with skill
On whose support harmoniously conjoined
Harmonise. And elevate, and harmonise, add soothe, Harmonising. Stript of their harmonising soul, the life
Harmonist. That Ocean is a mighty harmonist;
Harmony. Now, in this blank of things, a harmony,
The harmony thy notes most gladly make
Powerful almost as vocal harmony
Tumultuous harmony and fierce!
He sways them with harmony merry and loud;
Of harmony, and the deep power of joy,
Of harmony, with instinct more divine;
Revived, with finer harmony pursued;
And the dear voice of harmony,
With everlasting harmony;
Are delegates of harmony, and bear
Is Harmony, blest queen of smiles and tears,
O Friend! thy flute has breathed a harmony
Of harmony above all earthly care.
And perfect harmony of notes, achieved
Of harmony!—a shiver of terror, pain
A midnight harmony; and wholly lost
While the vault rang with choral harmony,
Of sweet and threatening harmony;
The midnight virtues of your harmony:—
As multitudinous a harmony . . .
In harmony united,
And prompt a harmony of genius powers;
Of harmony; and weeping Magdaleane,
As a fresh morning for new harmony;
And solemn harmony pervades
With liveliest peals of birth-day harmony:
Unchecked is that soft harmony
That voice of unpretending harmony
To their lost place, or meet in harmony
And blended, in peculiar harmony,
Accordant to the sweet Birds' harmony:
Of harmony dispersed in straggling sounds,
Like harmony in music; there is a dark
A loud prophetic blast of harmony;
Those trumpet-tones of harmony that shake
In harmony amid the Poet's world,
Composure, and ennobling Harmony.
Of harmony from Heaven's remotest spheres,
Music of finer tone; a harmony,
Sublime of instrumental harmony,
To harmony restored.—But you dark mould
Praised the coosmmate harmony serene
Is a perpetual harmony, and dance
With a strange sound of genial harmony;
Harms. Me and all worldly harms and wrongs however keen.
And, strenuous to protect from lawless harms
Harness. And horse and harness followed—see Harnessed. All horsed and harnessed with him to ride,
Harp. Fitting his low voice to the minstrel's harp,
A very Harp in all but size!
Nor think the Harp her lot deplores;
A harp is from his shoulder slung;
Resting the harp upon his knee,
“A recreant harp, that sings of fear
Rested a golden harp;—he touched the strings;
Where is the Orphean lyre, or Druid harp,
But lead sick Fancy to a harp
Sweeps his harp, the Master rides;
“Think, gentle Lady, of a Harp so far
That the poor Harp distempered music yields
From harp or lute, kind influence to compose
Across the harp, with soul-engrossing speed;
Head, harp, and body, split asunder,
The wind might force the deep-grooved harp
O that some Minstrel's harp were near,
A harp that tuneless prelude made
Next, disencumbered of his harp,
Did no responsive harp, no pen,
Harp! we have been full long beguiled
But, Harp! thy murmur may not cease—
The Harp in lowliness obeyed;
Was to the harp a strong command
Lord of the harp and liberating spear;
Harp! couldst thou venture, on thy holdest string,
Farewell! no Minstrels now with harp new-strung
May sometimes greet the strolling minstrel's harp,
While he struck his desolate harp without hopes or aims.
And if the harp pleased his gay youth, it rings
Confine not harp and voice,

Hate—continued.

How Juno's hate with unrelenting force
The sport of factious Hate or godless Zeal. . . .
And banded up and down by love and hate ; . . .
Of custom, language, country, love, or hate, . . .
Among the mysteries of love and hate, . . .
Too weak even for his envy or his hate ! . . .
Love, admiration, fear, desire, and hate, . . .
His gentler sentiments of love and hate, . . .
Winning no recompense but deadly hate . . .

Hated. (All hated him, and I was stung to madaess)
A shadow in a hated laod, while all
Murmur (for truth is hated, where not loved)
To hated worth no Tyrant ere design'd

Hateful. Exclaimed the King, "a mockery hateful ;
Hateful to Christ and to His company ;

Hater. Hater perverse of equity and truth. . . .

Hates. And that he hates you !—Pardon me, perhaps
The villain, Clifford. He hates you, and he knows
Hath. (Partial list.)
His absence, he hath sought, whate'er his aim . . .
And enterprise—what perils hath he shunned ? . . .
What obstacles hath he failed to overcome ? . . .
Hath need of rest ; the sight of Hut or Hostel . . .
About this ground ; she hath a tongue well skilled,
Who is it that hath wronged you ? Mark you me ;
Hath falsely trained—shall he fulfil his purpose ?
"Tis his own fault if he hath got a face . . .
Hath become Clifford's harlot—is he living ? . . .
Who day by day unto this school hath gone, . . .

To every place wherein she hath supposed . . .
Within a little time, as hath been found, . . .
To gladden or to grieve, he hath like skill ; . . .
And she hath been before thee with her song ; . . .
Evil light on her ! she hath done me wrong, . . .
For many a one hath virtues manifold, . . .
For Love no reason hath but his own will ;— . . .
For Love, and it hath doome me mighty woe, . . .
Yea, hath it ? use, quoth she, this medicine ; . . .
Why Troilus hath all this heaviness ? . . .
That his life hath received, to the last will remain.
He thinks of the fields he so often hath mown,
Long patience hath such mild composure given,
He hath no need. He is by nature led . . .
To Arno's side hath brought him, and he charmed
And blast of trumpets. He who hath been doomed
That an exceeding love hath dazzled me ; . . .

Hatred. More of contempt than hatred ; both are frown ;
That name through every age, her hatred to declare, . . .
With hatred and vexation, . . .
Of truths that soften hatred, temper strife, . . .
Hatred of absolute rule, where will of one . . .
No vengeance, and no hatred—needs must feel
And strong in hatred of idolatry." . . .

Hats. Their rusty hats they trim ;

Haughts. " There's Galla Water, Leader Haughts,
Haughtier. From all that haughtier kinds endure Haughtiest. As from the haughtiest palace. He, whose soul

Haughtily. Haughtily shake, a dreaming Conqueror!—
Aerial keystone haughtily secure ; . . .
The Sceptic somewhat haughtily exclaimed : . . .

Haughtiness. Of haughtiness without pretence,
Haughty. To haughty Geraldine . . .
With haughty indignation, spuroed the thought
But him the haughty Warden spurned ; . . .
Haughty, as if her eye had seen . . .
" Behold they tremble !—haughty their array,
"Mid those surrounding Worthies, haughty King,
Serving no haughty Muse, my hands have here . . .
Her haughty brow against the coast of France,
Beneath the brutal sword ?—Her haughty Schools
Beneath his haughty feet, like clouds, are laid, . . .
The haughty towers where monarchs dwell ; . . .
Why speak of Roman Poms ? the haughty claims
Where now the haughty Empire that was spread . . .
Upon the wave no haughty pendants cast . . .
Where haughty Force had striven in vain ; . . .
So thinks that Dame of haughty air, . . .
Haughty the Bard : can these meek doctrines blight
Safe from the feudal Castle's haughty frowns ; . . .
Mustering a face of haughty sovereignty, . . .
Can haughty Time be just ! . . .

Strip is the haughty one of pride, . . .
The Kremlin and its haughty towers . . .
Our haughty life is crowned with darkness, . . .
Feelingly watched, might teach Man's haughty race
Resolve, the haughty Moralist would say, . . .
Upon the haughty maiden's brow, 'tis but
And, like the haughty Spoilers of the world, . . .

Haunt. Why does their sad remembrance haunt the mind ? . . .

Haunt—continued.

That haunt some barren island of the north, . . .
Doth haunt your memory, Patience, hear me
further !— . . .
Hear me, ye Heavens !—may vengeance haunt the
fiend . . .
For thou dost haunt the air with sounds . . .

The meteors make of it a favourite haunt : . . .
What cause have I to haunt . . .
Mark, ere for his haunt he chooses . . .
To haunt, to startle, and way-lay . . .
"He knew the rocks which Angels haunt
Which they behold, whom vengeful Furies haunt ;
Loved haunt of many a summer hour,
In his still haunt on Bagdad's summit high ;
Of travellers in some shady haunt,
And with regret and useless pity haunt
Parthenope's Domain—Virgilian haunt, . . .
This thy last haunt beneath Italian skies . . .
Shine from her sylvan haunt withdrew,
Fit haunt of shapes whose glorious equipage
May haunt this horned bay ;
And served in depths where fishes haunt
Pursued by thoughts that haunt me still ; thou also— . . .

The bad man's restless walk, and haunt his bed—
The haunt of him who sang how spear and shield
My haunt the hollow cliff whose Pine . . .
For quiet things to wander in ; a haunt . . .
Or, haply, some choice rural haunt,—the Falls . . .
In sudden proclamation, burst from haunt . . .
Erewhile my tuneless haunt ? It pleased me more
Ye motions of delight, that haunt the sides
My haunt, and the main region of my song, . . .
Some shadowy intimations haunt me here, . . .
But, there, lay open to our daily haunt,
When present, to the bodily sense ; a haunt . . .
But most of all the Birds that haunt the food . . .

Haunted. See Bat-haunted, Nymph-haunted, Seraph-haunted, Trouble-haunted.
Pity me, I am haunted ;—thrice this day . . .
Haunted me like a passion : the tall rock, . . .
To mock the wandering Voice beside some haunted stream, . . .
In sylvan bower, or haunted hall ? . . .
That haunted us in spite of what we knew, . . .

Haunted his ear—he only listening— . . .

Haunting. See Self-haunting.
With a haunting and a panting,
A thousand ghostly fears, and haunting thoughts, proceed ! . . .
Haunting the spots with lonely cheer . . .
To sue the God ; but, haunting your green shade
Haunting me thus among my boyish sports, . . .
No longer haunting the dark winter night, . . .
Haunting with rod and lie the craggy brooks ? . . .

Hauntings. And hauntings from the infirmity of love,
To kiadred hauntings. Whereupon I told,
Haunts. Which haunts this Oswald. Power is life to him . . .
In his known haunts of joy where'er he might,
To clothe the fields with verdure. Other haunts
That haunts the Sailor, measuring o'er and o'er . . .
Or haunts me with familiar face,
Haunts the old trunk ; lamenting deeds of which
Haunts him belated on the silent plains ! . . .

Thou dost forsake thy subterranean haunts, . . .
Far from their noisy haunts retire, . . .
The haunts of happy Lovers,
Haunts, with sad echoes, musing Fancy's ear : . . .
The pagan haunts me as it met our eyes !
Wandering, he haunts, at fancy's strong command,
With a thought he would flee to these haunts of his prime, . . .
Utterly to desert, the haunts of men, . . .
Haunts of a strengthening amity . . .
Aliens, is God's good winter for their haunts, . . .
From thy most secret haunts ; and ye Parterres, . . .
No ruder sound your desert haunts invades,
The gentle Power that haunts the myrtle plain,
Attend thee ! seeking oft the haunts of meo, . . .
The stars of Heaven, now seen in their old haunts—
In haunts where they, till now, had been unknown.
Of those deep haunts, an aboriginal vale, . . .
The wild brooks prattling from invisible haunts ;
Even then the common haunts of the green earth,
Did I frequent the formal haunts of men, . . .
A solemn region. Oft amid those haunts, . . .

Havoc. Appalling havoc ! but serene his brow,
 Here, where, of havoc tired and rash undoing,
 And love of havoc, (for with such disease
 From further havoc, but repent in vain,—
 To social havoc. Is not Conscience ours,

 Too heavily upon the Lily's head,
 His head upon one breast, while from the other
 Both with his head and with his hand,
 For joy his head and heels are idle,
 The Moon that shines above his head
 A thought is come into her head :
 Perhaps, with head and heels on fire,
 And now is at the Pooy's head,—
 And gently turned the Pony's head
 He wears a jewel in his head !
 With languid limbs and patient head
 Her eyes are wild, her head is bare,
 And in my head a dull, dull pain ;
 And Kirkstone tossed it from his misty head.
 He stood aloof ; whereat he turned his head
 In some far region, here, while o'er my head,
 Not lifting yet the head that evening bowed ;
 Out of its head an Oak had grown,
 Look up ! and think, above your head
 And o'er your head, as you may see,
 Doth in thy crimson head delight
 Her head imperling, 158 In youth* 28
 Their snow-white blossoms on my head,
 Upon its head this coronet ?
 Hung—head pointing towards the ground—
 He shrugs his shoulders, shakes his head,
 But soon large rain-drops on his head
 A sending o'er his head begins the fray again.
 And so, flag flying at mast head,
 Hard passage forjog on, with head
 Salutes the Mastiff on the head ;
 Upon his head, whom, in despite
 A wound upon the Mastiff's head,
 Asunder,—and above his head he sees 184 Night-piece 12

 High as a cloud, high over head !
 His body was bent double, feet and head
 Cries coming from the mountain head :
 The trees were grey, with neither arms nor head ;
 She lifts her head for endless spring,
 First shall head the flock of war !
 Long-exiled Dion marching at their head,
 But neither veil thy head in shadows dim,
 Nile trembles at his fountain head :
 But the ringlets of that head
 New glory o'er the mountain's head,
 The foliaged head in cloud-like majesty,
 The glory of the sun's bright head—
 Was heart or head the better.
 By pleasure running in his head,
 When, turning round his head, he sees
 Of the green-meadow hangs his head
 His head is with a halter bound ;
 He turned the eye-ball in his head 241 P. B. 396
 He lifts his head, he sees his staff ;
 His head upon his elbow propped,
 So toward the stream his head he bent,
 Vengeance upon his head will fall,
 Nor once turns round his head to crop
 Where he had struck the Ass's head ;
 The Ass turned round his head and grinned.
 He turns aside his head, he pauses ;
 And on the pillow lays her burning head.
 He lifts his head—and sees the Ass
 Yet sacred is to me this Mountain's head,

 The ridges of grim war ; and at their head
 Shaking the dust and ashes from her head !

 To the bare head. The victory is complete ;

Heads—continued.

Nod the cloud-piercing pines their troubl'd heads,
 Those immaterial agents bowed their heads
 Of that great kingdom, rustled o'er our heads,
 With heads; the midway region, and above,
 Rocked high above their heads; anon, the din
 Head after head, and never heads enough
 At gravest heads, by enmity to France
 Bend the complying heads of lordly pines,
 Through want of better knowledge in the heads
 Carved uncouth figures on the heads of sticks—
 Declined their languid heads, wanting support.
 In silent grief their unuplifted heads,
 Each also crowned with winged heads—a pair
 Woods waving in the wind their lofty heads,
 The dark pines thrusting forth their spiky heads;
Headstrong. And like a torrent roars the headstrong gale;
 Man's headstrong violence and Time's fleetness,
 Too perfectly his headstrong will:
 The headstrong current of their fate:
 Of headstrong will! Can this be Piety?
 To stop your Leaders in their headstrong course!
 Who checked or turned thy headstrong youth,
Heady. Of heady schemes jostling each other, gawds,
Heal. Home-felt, and home-created, comes to heal.

 For health, and time in obvious duty spent.
 Ill health of body; and had pined
 Think that a State would live in sounder health
 But from within proceeds a Nation's health;
 May Health return to mellow Age,
 Spontaneous wisdom breathed by health,
 Of health, strength, friends, and kindred, see!
 Health, meekness, ardour, quietness secure,
 Of Nations," sacrifice a People's health,
 Have kindled into health!
 Which Horace needed for his spirit's health;
 Trained to health and artless beauty;
 Health and the quiet of a healthful mind
 Of health, and hope, and beauty, all at once
 Far art thou wandered now in search of health
 To seek the same delights, and have one health,
 These vain regrets; health suffers in thee, else
 To health and joy and pure contentedness;
 Restored to us in renovated health;
 —Vigorous in health, of hopeful spirits, undamped
 And they, if best with health and hearts at ease,
 "Oh! what a joy it were, in vigorous health,
 Fleeting as health or beauty, and unsound?
 Where health abides, and cheerfulness, and peace.
 He came, the ghost of beauty and of health,
 While she was yet in prime of health and strength,
 There blossoms, strong in health, and will be soon
 Of Nature's impress,—galeity and health,
 Health and good wishes to his new-born girl,
 We look for health from seeds that have been sown
 Possessed of health, and strength, and peace of mind;
 The tribute of enjoyment, knowledge, health,
 Diffusing health and sober cheerfulness,
 That keeps in health the insatiable mind;
Healthful. Hath cherished on a healthful soil;
 Of firm dry ground, with healthful grass 603 Desc. Sh. Quarto 62

Heap. Bring down a heap of rubbish, and it crush me,
 Save, in a corner, a heap of dry leaves,
 That he had seen this heap of turf before,—
 Appears a stragglng heap of unheewn stones !
 A heap of stones, which by the streamlet's edge
 A beautiful heap, a hill of moss,
 This heap of earth o'ergrown with moss,
 For oft there sits between the heap,
 Fallen, and diffused into a shapeless heap,
 Alone, beside that grassy heap !
 To heap disgust upon the worthier Cause :
 Wilt thou behold this shapeless heap of stones,
 A heap of garments, as if left by one
 A heap of ruin—almost without walls
 Lies guarded by its neighbour ; the small heap

Heaped. With me to aggravate his crimes, and heaped
 Each on the other heaped, along the line . . . 148 * A narrow 15
 Heaped over brave King Dunmáll's bones,
 Where rocks were rudely heaped, and rent
 Were the wide fields, the hamlets heaped with slain.
 He, whose heaped waves confounded the proud boast
 Meantime in canisters is heap'd the bread,
 The dead, upon the dying heaped, and gazed
Heaping. Fraternities and orders—heaping high
Heaps. The unburied dead that lay in festering heaps,
 Ere long, from heaps of turf, before their sight,
 Unburied, lay hid under heaps of slain :
 O'er heaps of slain ;—from Cambrian wood and moss
 "These grassy heaps lie amicably close,"
 That lie together, some in heaps, and some . . . 317 * The martial 8

 And you mistake the cause : you hear the woods
 This Marmaduke—O could you hear his voice :
 Nay, Father, stop not ; let me hear it all,

 it.

No ! this is not the place to hear the tale :
 But at the surfaces of things ; we hear
 But hear the proofs— Ay, prove that when two peas
 How glad I am to hear your voice ! I know not
 And hear his prayer that I would not forsake him
 Hear me, ye Men upon the cliffs, if such
 Of opening out my story ; you must hear it,
 Doth haunt your memory, Patience, hear me
 further !—
 Nay ; hear my tale, 'tis fit that you should hear it—
 Evil to any living thing ; but hear me,
 Hear me, ye Heavens !—may vengeance haunt the
 fiend
 Wild words for me to hear, for me, an orphan,
 "Be not surprised if you hear that some signal judgment
 —But hear me. For one question, I have a heart
 No more of that ; in silence hear my doom :
 No human ear shall ever hear me speak ;
 Your tender mother cannot hear."
 They never hear the cry,

 Such melody to hear !
 Of fable, though to truth subservient, hear
 To hear the earth's soft murmuring
 Must hear, first uttered from my orchard trees ;
 Or hear old Triton blow his wreathed horn.
 The wilderness shall hear the lion roar ;
 To breathe in rural peace, to hear the stream,
 Hear ye that Whistle ? As her long-linked Train
 Night fell I heard, or seemed to hear,
 What joy to hear thee, and to see !
 But chiefly let one Cottage hear the tale ;
 And all were pleased to hear and see,

Hear—continued.

Can hear the monitory clock 533
 Hear, then, and neglect me not ! 535
 Hear the challenge with delight 536
 The Alma Redemptoris did he hear ; 553
 For now when they may hear the smallbirds' song,
 That it was good to hear the Nightingale, 557
 If I perchance a Nightingale might hear, 557
 But hear you now a wondrous thing, I pray ; 558
 For every wight eschews thy song to hear, 558
 Quoth she, to hear this churlish bird thus speak 560
 And them besought to hear her doleful case, 561
 That in my soul methinks I yet do hear 563
 That absent was, 'gan sing as ye may hear, 564
 Men/who can hear the Decalogue and feel 568
 Will hear 'the wind sigh through the leaves of a tree.
 To hear the sanguinary trumpet sounded, 575
 Exalt thy spirit, hear the voice 577
 Could hear to guide them in their choice 577
 Could hear the wind and mark the showers 577
 Were earlier raised, remain to hear 586
 I hear the Echoes through the mountains throng,
 Shout round me, let me hear thy shouts, thou
 happy Shepherd-boy ! 588
 I hear, I hear, with joy I hear ! 588
 And hear the mighty waves rolling evermore, 590
 Staying his silent waves, to hear the roar 591
 Safe from your door ye hear at breezy morn, 596
 I hear, while in the forest depth he sees, 596
 Hear Britain's sons rehearse thy praise with joy,
 Hear, and assist !—the father's mandate calls
 And charm'd to hear his simulating tongue ; 624
 To hear such music. Through the walls we flew
 I heard it then, and seem to hear it now—
 Loth to believe what we so grieved to hear,
 Sit, see, and hear, unthankful, uninspired ?
 All summer, and at sunrise ye may hear
 Of some great trial, and we hear the voice
 Until I seemed to hear a voice that cried,
 That greeted me on entering, I could hear
 And never hear the sound of their own names.
 I hear thee tell how bees with honey fed 733
 To hear of, for the glory that redounds 743
 Over the dark abyss, intent to hear 747
 That men, least sensitive, see, hear, perceive,
 Where art thou ? Hear I not a voice from thee 751
 Which 'tis reproach to hear ? Anon I rose
 Must hear Humanity in fields and groves 755
 Might hear his busy spade, which he would ply,
 That any heart had ached to hear her, begged
 And his frail creature Man,—but ye shall hear.
 Depressed I hear, how faithless is the voice
 Did ye not hear that conquest is abjured ?
 Who neither hears, nor feebly a wish to hear,
 To this would rather bend than see and hear
 When his own breath was silent, chanced to hear
 He only knows by name ; and, if he hear,
 Or plant a tree. And did you hear his voice ?
 And that contents him ; bowers that hear no more
 Who, in their noiseless dwelling-place, can hear
 I love to hear of those, who, not contending
 O come and hear him ! Thou who hast to me
 Been faithless, hear him, though a lowly creature,
 A century shall hear his name pronounced,
 Oft as they hear of sorrow like their own,
 That many, sweet to hear of in soft verse,
 Of her own native vigour ; those can hear
 And hear the mighty stream of tendency 885
 Beaten by lonely billows, hear the songs 890
 " I love to hear that eloquent old Man 891
 In a low voice, yet careless who might hear,
 Throughout all lands ; let every nation hear
 They hear my lips present their sacrifice, 895
 I, whose pretty Voice you hear, S. 3.

Heard. See Far-heard.
 Was heard, or woodcocks roamed the moonlight
 hill. 2
 And restless stone-chat, all day long, is heard, 4
 And blasted quarry thunders, heard remote ! 4
 Heard by calm lakes, as peeps the folding star, 7
 Now hardly heard, beguiles my homeward way, 9
 And its last echo, can be heard no more. 15
 Now couch thyself where, heard with fear afar,
 Or heard, while other worlds their charms reveal,
 Or rumbling, heard remote, of falling snow.
 And heard with heart unmoved, with soul unraised :
 Through rustling aspens heard from side to side,
 For of that ruin she had heard a tale 27
 Had heard of one who, forced from storms to shroud, 27
 Ravage for which no knell was heard. We prayed
 I heard my neighbours in their beds complain 31
 They paused, and heard a hoarser voice blaspheme, 33

Hear—continued.

The Soldier's Widow heard and stood aghast ; 33
 They saw and heard, and, winding with the road 34
 Over our much-loved Captain, I have heard 37
 And I had heard the like before ; in sooth 38
 That instant rushed between us, and I heard 40
 I am perplexed. What hast thou heard or seen ?
 As the Lord Clifford's Castle ; I have heard 42
 Have heard my suit, and urged my plea at Court.
 Ten years ; and no one ever heard her voice ; 43
 I never shall be heard of more. Lord Clifford ?
 I scarcely can believe it. Myself, I heard 44
 To have heard your voice. Your couch, I fear, good Baron, 53
 And never heard a sound so terrible, 53
 You have not heard that Henry has at last 56
 Of which I heard them speak, but that I fancy 58
 Stood silent as we passed them ! I have heard 61
 More with delight than grief—I heard a voice 62
 He heard a voice—a shepherd-lad came to him 62
 For me, I have business, as you heard, with Oswald,
 Of every tongue—as you are now. You've heard,
 No more was heard of ? I had been betrayed 69
 I am sure I heard something breathing— 72
 Alive ! you heard him breathe ? quick, quick—
 As is waters often after stormy nights, 73
 I heard— You heard him, where ? when heard him ? As you know, 73
 Returning late, I heard a moaning sound ; 73
 You heard !—he called you to him ? Of all men 73
 To pull the cord. I guess he must have heard it ;
 And then I heard a shriek so terrible 74
 And words that tell these things be heard in vain ?
 The eldest heard with steady glee ; 81
 I heard the sound,—and more and more ; 82
 And still I heard it as before, 82
 Nor aught else like it, could be heard, 82
 Oft I had heard of Lucy Gray : 82
 I heard a voice ; it said, " Drink, pretty creature,
 drink ! " 87
 I've heard of fearful winds and darkness that come
 there ; 88
 " Hither the Afflicted come, as thou hast heard thy Mother say, 92
 What mournful sighs have here been heard, and,
 when the voice was stopt 92
 Oft in the piping shrouds had Leonard heard
 With what I've witnessed, and with what I've heard, 98
 If there were one among us who had heard
 Living or dead.—When last we heard of him, 100
 In sleep I heard the northern gleams ; 100
 I heard, I saw the flashes drive, 114
 Heard by his mother unawares ! 117
 She answered, soon as she the question heard,
 And thus, from what I heard and knew, or guessed,
 Who heard the heart-felt music of his suit 121
 And of the lark's note heard before its time, 123
 (The like was never heard of yet) 126
 And never will be heard of more, 128
 What you have heard, what you have seen :
 Now Johnny all night long had heard 131
 When others headed not, He heard the South
 Two evenings after he had heard the news, 132
 Heard him, how he was troubled in his sleep :
 To build a sheep-fold ; and, before he heard 136
 Than when I heard thee by our own fireside 136
 Years after he had heard this heavy news, 138
 You have heard " a Spanish Lady 139
 What have I seen, and heard, or dreamt ? where am I ? where ? " 140
 Commend him, when he's only heard, 143
 Which I till then had heard appeared the voice 146
 A noise of laughter ; southern Loughrigg heard,
 Meanwhile, a noise was heard, the busy mirth 149
 Is heard the spirit of a toll-worm slave, 153
 Last night I heard a crash—"tis true, 156
 Ambitious to be seen or heard, 165
 In clouds above, the lark is heard, 165
 Is all that can be heard 173
 He heard not, too intent of soul ; 175
 Gave the word—the horses heard
 As if it heard the fiddle's call, 177
 You might have heard a nibbling mouse ; 177
 He heard the monitory growl ; 178
 Heard—and in opposition quaffed
 When they the wished-for greeting heard, 178
 And little other sound was heard ; 182
 O blithe New-comer ! I have heard, 183
 I heard the murmur and the murmuring sound,
 I heard a Stock-dove sing or say 185
 Poor Susan has passed by the spot, and has heard
 Was aught ever heard like his fiddle and him ? 188
 I heard the woods and distant waters roar ;
 Or heard them not, as happy as a boy :
 I heard the sky-lark warbling in the sky ;
 Scarce heard ; nor word from word could I divide ;
 I never heard of such as dare 195
 For many a time and oft were heard 199
 And others, I've heard many swear,
 Ere I had heard of Martha's name, 199

Heard—continued.

I turned about and heard her cry, . . . 199 Thorn 190
 "I've heard, the moss is spotted red . . . 200 Thorn 210
 That I have heard her cry, . . . 200 Thorn 240
 "Another horse!"—That shout the vassal heard
 He heard the birds their morning carols sing ;
 Distinctly heard from far—a doleful note !
 And heard his viewless bands
 Repeated—heard, and heard no more !
 Thou too be heard, lone eagle ! freed ! . . . 235
 Had heard the Atlantic surges roar . . . 238
 And felt, as I have heard them say, . . . 239
 And whistling loud may yet be heard,
 I've heard of one, a gentle Soul, . . . 240
 He listens—not a sound is heard . . . 244
 The very word was plainly heard, . . . 247
 Heard plainly by the wretched Mother—
 Sad may I be who heard your sabbath chime
 I heard (alas ! 'twas only in a dream)
 Must be revealed :—she heard it now, or felt
 For I have heard the quire of Richmond hill
 Not the whole warbling grove in concert heard
 To old affections, had been heard to plead
 Trembling I gazed, but heard a voice—it said,
 Is heard ; to grave demeanour all are bound ;
 Night fell I heard, or seemed to hear,
 Now ye, who willingly have heard
 A voice so thrilling ne'er was heard
 Long after it was heard no more.
 Both when he heard the eagles scream,
 And when he heard the torrents roar,
 And heard the water beat the shore
 When from the water-side he heard
 And heard the billows leap and dance,
 Had heard, how in a shell like this
 You've often heard of magic wands,
 Beneath the change ; who heard a claim
 Two solitary greetings have I heard,
 Where not a torrent murmurs heard by thee.
 And neither awful Voice be heard by thee !
 Hast heard the constant Voice its charge repeat,
 Armies or kingdoms. We have heard a strain
 Heard from the depths of its aerial bowers—
 So these—and heard of once again are chased
 A thrilling voice was heard, that vivified
 There heard we, halting in the shade
 Which, heard in foreign lands, the Swiss affect
 The mountains (as ye heard) rejoice
 All that I heard comes back upon my ear,
 But sometimes heard, or fancied to be heard,
 They—who have heard some learned Patriot treat
 —Heard in that hour, or when, as now, the nerve
 Perched on an olive branch, and heard her cooing
 The clang of arms is heard, and phantoms glide,
 Heard I that voice ! and catch it now, though faint,
 Oft have I heard the Nightingale and Thrush
 Vallombrosa ! of thee I first heard in the page
 Warblers I heard their joy unbosoming
 Heard them, unchecked by aught of saddening hue,
 He heard a voice, and saw, with half-raised head,
 And Nina heard a sweeter voice
 And notes of minstrelsy were heard
 Ye heard, a rocking marvellous . . . 372
 Hadst heard this ever-falling rite ;
 For names once heard, and heard no more ;
 And, earlier still, was heard the hum of bees ;
 While Fingal heard what Ossian sung . . . 377
 Ere the prelusive hymn is heard :—
 And heard old tales by the convent-fire,
 He heard, and it disturbed him not.
 She heard, but looked not up, nor spake ;
 He ended,—or she heard no more ;
 But said ; "The prayer which ye have heard,
 They heard the summons ;—and, furthermore,
 A soft and lulling sound is heard
 Had often heard the sound of glee
 "This well that she hath heard the tale,
 Thus scarcely given, a noise was heard,
 He marked not, heard not, as he fled ;
 He heard, and with misgiving mind.
 She comes, and in the vale hath heard
 Whose voice we heard, whose hand and wings
 Are heard among the moorland dells,
 Heard, ever fresh streams ; and thousands, who rejoice
 As Po was heard to give where Venice rose
 Though seldom heard by busy human kind—
 A stream is heard—I see it not, but know
 Wheels and the tread of hoofs are heard no more ;
 Seen in her course, nor 'mid this quiet heard ;
 With a full heart ; "our thoughts are heard in
 heaven !"
 O Nightingale ! Who ever heard thy song
 The elements have heard, and rock and cave replied.
 With envy heard in many a distant clime ;
 Heard on his rueful margin) thence wert named
 Nought heard, of ocean troubled or serene ?
 Despond who will—I heard a voice exclaim,
 Yet best was Emma when she heard . . . 478
 Beneath the boughs that heard their vows,
 I heard, and so may He ! . . . 479

Heard—continued.

She heard, ere to the throne of grace . . . 479
 I heard a thousand blended notes, . . . 482
 —I've heard of hearts unkind, kind deeds . . . 484
 Which in those days I heard, . . . 487
 Here often hast Thou heard the Poet sing . . . 489
 And oft, when in my heart was heard . . . 492
 Such greeting heard, away with sighs . . . 497
 They heard, and, starting up, the Brood of Night
 That in wild Arden's brakes was ever heard, . . . 523
 Nor of him were tidings heard ; . . . 535
 No one's ear had heard the Horn, . . . 535
 Young Harry heard what she had said : . . . 537
 To his own genial instincts ; and was heard . . . 537
 Will not be heard in vain ? And in those days
 The pleasure was, and no one heard the praise,
 Light words, that were more lightly heard . . . 539
 The prayer is heard, the Saits have seen,
 Had heard her Father tell . . . 544
 She heard the ancestral stream ; . . . 544
 Was heard a startling sound ; . . . 544
 These groves have heard the Other's pensive strains ;
 Answered him thus :—This song, I have heard say,
 As ye have heard ; and soon as I had sung . . . 556
 For yet had I heard none, of all that year,
 Broke silence, or I heard him in my thought . . . 558
 I heard the lusty Nightingale so sing,
 Though thou the Cuckoo heard, ere thou heard'st
 me ;
 Heard my own Cresid's laugh ; and once at play
 Heard I my most beloved Lady dear,
 As ye have heard ; such life 'gan he to lead
 And have around him, whether heard or not,
 How oft have I heard in sweet Tilsbury Vale
 I heard the blessing which to you
 A breath, a sound, and scarcely heard,
 If thou hast heard me—if thy Spirit know
 Ye bless'd Creatures, I have heard the call . . . 588
 And desert stone-chat, all day long, is heard . . . 593
 Some, hardly heard their chissel's clinking sound,
 Scarce heard, their chattering lips her shoulder chill,
 Heard by the night-calm of the wat'ry plains
 Heard, by star-spotted bays, beneath the steep's ;
 Was never heard the plodding peasant's tread . . . 607
 There list at midnight till is heard no more,
 Hence shall we turn where, heard with fear afar,
 And heard, the pausing village hum between,
 He perish'd ; and a voice was heard—
 From gladdened Elbe to startled Tiber heard,
 Far better never to have heard the name . . . 629
 I heard among the solitary hills . . . 633
 Heard him, while birds were warbling, tell his tales
 That lowly bed whence I had heard the wind . . . 659
 This heard, I said, in pity, "Come with me."
 And heard that instant in an unknown tongue,
 I heard it thee, and seem to hear it now—
 Or heard, was fitted to our unripe state . . . 686
 I saw, or heard, or felt, was but a stream . . . 686
 As from a distance ; heard, and saw, and felt,
 And part through outward hindrance. But I heard,
 Sate on a stone, and heard the bells speak out
 Vauxhall and Ranelagh ! I then had heard
 I heard, and for the first time in my life,
 One, of whose name from childhood we had heard
 Were its admonishments, nor lightly heard
 Heard as we pass, when no one looks about,
 What sounds are those, Helvelly, that are heard
 That I had heard (what he perhaps had seen)
 Had also heard, from those who yet remembered,
 Of this I heard, and saw enough to make
 Of cool Lucretilla, where the pipe was heard
 Nor to be heard of more ; yet, they were powers,
 And heard their notions ; nor did they disdain
 In peace and silence. But if e'er was heard,—
 Heard, though unseen,—a devious traveller,
 Their place of convocation—there I heard,
 That voice, ill requiem ! seldom heard by me . . . 723
 Forgot that such a sound was ever heard . . . 723
 Is seen, heard, felt, and caught at every turn,
 When the great voice was heard from out the tombs
 To every angry passion. There I heard,
 Matter not lightly to be heard by those
 The voice of spears was heard, the rattling spear . . . 744
 Was nothing either seen or heard that checked
 Heard over earth and sea, and, in that hour,
 From the blood cavern whence is faintly heard
 Theme this but little heard of among men—
 Dappling his face. He had not heard the sound
 A sore heart-wasting ! I have heard, my Friend,
 At distance heard, peopled the milder air . . . 772
 Heard as the voice of an experienced friend . . . 772
 So grounded, so applied, that it was heard . . . 777
 Was heard ascending ; mournful, deep, and slow
 We heard the hymn they sang—a solemn sound
 Heard anywhere ; but in a place like this . . . 780
 And heard meanwhile the Psalmist's mournful
 plaint . . . 780
 Methinks that I have heard them echo back . . . 782
 Words of assurance can be heard ; if nowhere
 Her silver voice was heard upon the earth, . . . 793

Heard—continued.

There mingled, heard or not. The powers of song
 "Enough is told I Here am I—ye have heard"
 Else imperceptible. Meanwhile, is heard
 To mark their placid state, who never heard
 Low sunk beneath the horizon!—List!—I heard,
 Amid the deafening tumult, scarcely heard
 He heard, borne on the wind, the articulate voice
 Thy murmurs heard; and drunk the crystal lymph
 Heard while the dwelling vibrates to the din
 Lies open: we have heard from you a voice
 Brightened with joy; for from within were heard
 When issue forth the first pale stars, is heard,
 We met, and passed, like shadows. I have heard,
 For his ungrateful cause; no,—I have heard
 In envy or detraction is not heard;
 This was the death-doomed Woman heard to say
 What time the hunter's earliest horn is heard
 Under those shady elms, from him I heard
 Call to my mind dark hints which I have heard
 Are ended, and her ears have heard the cry
 For in that female infant's name he heard
 Heart-stirring music! hourly heard that name;
 And in remotest vales was heard—to arms!
 Of lamentation, never heard before!
 And at the appointed hour a bell is heard
 More had she said—but sportive shouts were heard
 Of the swollen cataracts (which now are heard
 The old man afterwards was heard to say—
 Without distress or fear the shepherd heard
 Heard now and then from morn till latest eve,
 And found us faithful through the gloom, and heard
 "This true, hath in my walks been often heard,
 Have I heard whooping, and he soon will be
 I heard her scatter some endearing words
 Surpassed in strength, I heard of danger, met
 When Calais heard (while Famine and Disease
Heard'st. Of learning, where thou heard'st the billous beat
 Though thou the Cuckoo heard, ere thou heard'st
 me;
Hearer. I am your hearer. This I caught, and more
Hearers. Clap your hands with joy my Hearers,
 O blest are the hearers, and proud be the hand
 The learned song from Tyrian hearers draws Heareth. That heareth not the loud winds when they call;
Hearing. When hearing a deep sigh, that seemed to come
 And in his hearing there my prayers I said:
 Should be forthwith restored. The hearing, Lady,
 To stay behind!—Hearing at first no answer,
 Worthy the hearing. Fool was I to dream
 Upon that dismal hearing—did you not?
 But, hearing soon upon the blast
 In his stern father's hearing, Vaudraour
 At the first hearing, for a moment took
 But hearing thee, or others of thy kind,
 Of thoughtless youth; but hearing oftentimes
 Informs the cell of Hearing, dark and blind;
 Roars in thy hearing; but thy hour of rest
 Within thy hearing, or thy head be now
 Wild notes she in his hearing sang,
 And hearing passed of Him who stood
 Warbled in hearing both of earth and sky;
 His eyesight and hearing are lost;
 "God! who art never out of hearing,
 The Nightingale thus in my hearing spake—
 And his hearing is touched with the sounds of a dream.
 To sentence in the hearing of the world
 Hearing, I be not downcast or forlorn!
 Obtain reluctant hearing. Plain his garb;
 Hath, in my hearing, often testified
 Into the hearing of assembled tribes,
 Thus, in her Mother's hearing Ellen spake,
 The precious gift of hearing. He grew up
Hearkened. The Maid to Jesu hearkened
 And hearkened to the words and to the note, Hears. Yet hears her song, "by distance made more sweet,"
 The thundering tube the aged angler hears,
 He hears the chiding of the baffled wind,
 Hears Winter calling all his terrors round,
 When list! he hears a piteous moan—
 He sees the bending multitude, He hears the choral rites,
 Perhaps some dungeon hears thee groan,
 Unwedded Julia, terror-smitten, hears
 And thence, full many a sound she hears,
 The roaring waterfall she hears,
 Where now she daily hears a strain
 He hears a sound and sees the light,
 She neither hears nor sees;
 The Quailcock woodman hears,
 Hears not also mortal life?
 He hears an uncouth sound—
 He sees a motion—hears a groan;
 And hears her crying as she cried,

Hears—continued.

And Peter hears the Mother sigh
 Which justly it can claim. The Nation hears
 He hears the word—he flies—
 Hears combats whistling o'er the ensanguined heath:
 A lovely One, who nothing hears
 Blest Rite for him who hears in faith, "I know
 That my Redeemer liveth,"—hears each word
 He dwells, and hears indignant tempests howl,
 Him alone she sees and hears,—
 A barking sound the Shepherd hears,
 Before she hears the sound
 —He hears a noise—he's all awake—
 She hears, upon the mountain forest's brow,
 There hears, protected by the woods behind,
 Hears least; else surely this Man had not left
 Hears, and forgets his purpose;—furnished thus,
 Who neither hears, nor feels a wish to hear,
 When the next village hears the show announced—
 With foresight; hears, too, every sabbath day.
Heart. For then the inexperienced heart would beat
 And faint the fire a dying heart can yield!
 —Now o'er the soothed accordant heart we feel
 The image of a poet's heart.
 Or sink with heart alive like Memnon's lyre;
 Around him plays at will the virgin heart,
 And heard with heart unmoved, with soul unraised:
 And thou, lost fragrance of the heart, return!
 With a light heart our course we may renew,
 Far lovelier, and his heart could not sustain
 If he to be one whose heart the holy forms
 In lowliness of heart,
 But not one dwelling-place his heart to cheer.
 'Gainst all that in his heart, or theirs perhaps, said
 nay,
 Even in the desert's heart; but he, returned,
 Who in his heart had groaned with deadlier pain
 Recovering heart, like answer did she make;
 It would unman the firmest heart to hear.
 And from her grateful heart a fresh one drew:
 At morn my sick heart hunger scarcely stung,
 Fretting the fever round the languid heart,
 Where my poor heart lost all its fortitude:
 Yet, to relieve her heart, in friendly style
 While from his heart the appropriate lesson flows,
 She rose and bade farewell! and, while her heart
 His anguish, with his heart he ceased to strive;
 I honour him. Strong feelings to his heart
 Be better fed. Ne'er may I own the heart
 That staff of yours, I could almost have heart
 I ne'er had heart to separate—my grave,
 Clasp your infant Daughter to your heart.
 But let this kiss speak what is in my heart.
 And in such wise to rack her gentle heart
 Like you; he knows your eye would search his heart,
 And torture thus the heart of his own Child—
 And One so fair, it goes against my heart
 It struck upon my heart I know not how.
 The heart of living creature.—My poor Babe
 This Little-one—it cuts me to the heart—
 He has the very hardest heart on earth;
 As if my heart would burst; and so I left him.
 Benevolence, that has not heart to use
 My heart, could penetrate its inmost core,
 *'Twill glad her heart to see her father's signature.
 This news! it made my heart leap up with joy.
 From Palestine, and brought with me a heart,
 Listening in vain. He has a tender heart!
 That well may put some fears into your heart.
 You will forgive me, but my heart runs over.
 And arms to fold her to my heart. Submissively
 How his old heart would leap to hear her steps,
 The world is poisoned at the heart. What mean
 you?
 Why, if his heart be tender, that offence
 When my heart does not ache to think of it!
 And in her ample heart loving even me—
 You know me, Friends; I have a heart to feel,
 And, in the storm and anguish of the heart,
 Like red-hot iron burnt into my heart,
 To let a creed, built in the heart of things,
 Pressing upon his solitary heart,
 Pressing upon thy heart, and this the hour
 And clasped her to my heart, my heart that ached
 To cold and hunger!—Pain is of the heart,
 No heart that loves them, none that they can love,
 My Friends, his heart shall have as many wounds
 The only quiet heart on earth. In terror,
 And the light dancing of the thoughtless heart;
 If e'er I open out this heart of mine
 As a blood-drop from my heart. 'Twas even so.
 It throbs, and you have a heart that does not feel it.
 Of thoughts that fall, and a decaying heart;
 And lays it to his heart— I pray you speak!
 It might have found its way into my heart,
 The guilt—have touched it—felt it at your heart—
 And I had heart for this, because thou lovedst
 This action? Innocent!—oh breaking heart!
 Returning from their Feast—my heart beats so—

 What hopes it sends to Betty's heart? . . . 127 Idiot Boy 93
 And Betty's drooping at the heart. . . 128 Idiot Boy 162
 A thought with which her heart is sore— . . . 128 Idiot Boy 213
 If she had heart to knock again; . . . 129 Idiot Boy 270
 On man, the heart of man, and human life. . . 131 Michael 33
 An old man, stout of heart, and strong of limb. . . 131 Michael 42
 Amid the heart of many thousand mists, . . . 132 Michael 59
 Whose heart was in her house: two wheels she had . . . 132 Michael 82
 Have loved his Helmpate; but to Michael's heart . . . 133 Michael 142
 His heart and his heart's joy! For oftentimes . . . 133 Michael 152
 Would Michael exercise his heart with looks . . . 133 Michael 172
 And that the old Man's heart seemed born again? . . . 134 Michael 203
 And his heart falied him. "Isabel," said he . . . 134 Michael 226
 With a light heart. The Housewife for five days . . . 135 Michael 284
 Recovered heart. That evening her best fare . . . 135 Michael 301
 A prouder heart than Luke's. When Isabel . . . 136 Michael 315
 To-morrow thou wilt leave me: with full heart . . . 136 Michael 332
 Luke had a manly heart; but at these words . . . 136 Michael 357

Heart—continued.

Thy heart these two weeks has been beating fast . . . 137 Michael 397
 The old Man's grief broke from him; to his heart . . . 137 Michael 421

 Light of heart and light of limb; . . . 171 Kitten 74
 Of the silent heart which Nature . . . 171 Kitten 97
 Of naked instinct, wound about the heart. . . 172 Infant Daughter 38
 To leave it with a jovial heart; . . . 174 Waggoner 1, 57
 And with proud cause my heart is light: . . . 174 Waggoner 1, 111
 Which now ye climb with heart and hope, . . . 175 Waggoner 1, 125
 His heart with sudden joy is filled,— . . . 177 Waggoner 2, 33
 What greater good can heart desire? . . . 177 Waggoner 2, 71
 His heart is up—he fears no evil . . . 179 Waggoner 3, 134
 As if his heart by notes were stung . . . 180 Waggoner 4, 77
 But a shy spirit in my heart, . . . 182 Waggoner 4, 210
 Breathing with such suppression of the heart . . . 185 Nutting 22
 The heart luxuriates with indifferent things, . . . 185 Nutting 41
 In gentleless of a heart; with gentle hand . . . 186 Nutting 55
 A creature of a "fiery heart":— . . . 186 O Nightingale* 2
 And then my heart with pleasure fills, . . . 187 I wandered* 23

 That he professed; attached to him in heart;
 Make the heart sink, then wilt thou reverence
 Upon thy heart, whence, through that glory's might,
 His heart, that her to praise, to her to pray,
 His wasp's nest in Jew's heart, upswelled—O woe,
 For every true heart, gentle heart and free,
 Whence oft great sickness grows of heart and home;
 That any living heart should sleep be
 How from her inmost heart a sigh she brought,
 Alas, alas! my very heart will break,
 Him though his sorrowful heart would break in two;
 Like frost he thought his heart was icy cold;
 And voader with joy-smitten heart have I
 That hers unto the death my heart I hold,
 Constrain her heart as quickly to return,
 For very grief of which my heart shall cleave;
 Somewhat his woeful heart to make more light;
 With a sore heart well ought I to bewail,
 To con, ort him, and make his heart more light;
 Upon his lips or anger at his heart,
 Of self-congratulation, to the heart,
 That we have all of us one human heart,
 Returning with exhilarated heart,
 Gives the last human interest to his heart,
 For this he did all in the ease of his heart,
 Full ten times a day takes his heart by surprise,

 And gratitude, and perfect joy of heart—
 It chance to wear, is sweetest if the heart
 A heart that had not been disconsolate:
 My heart was full; I made no vows, but vows
 Their sought with quiet heart my distant home.
 That they must perish. Tremblings of the heart
 Through every clime, the heart of human kind,
 Or whatsoever else the heart holds dear;
 Their sure foundations in the heart of man,
 Thanks with uplifted heart, that I was reared
 My honoured Mother, she who was the heart
 A heart that found benignity and hope,
 Into the dimpling cistern of his heart:
 Has carried far into his heart the voice
 And o'er the heart of man: invisibly . . . 659 Prelude 4. 31
 So carry meaning to the natural heart;
 To care to us, that meek confiding heart,
 When thou wert thither guided. From the heart
 Ah! surely not in singleness of heart . . . 659 Prelude 4. 63
 Among the nations, surely would my crew
 Touching the heart amid the boisterous heart
 Thus by conflicting passions pressed, my heart
 Well might a stranger look with bounding heart
 Of intellect and heart. With such a book
 Our destiny, our being's heart and home,
 How dost thou cleave to the poetic heart,
 Of this whole Song is written that my heart
 Since I had felt in heart and soul the shock
 In a Child's heart as fear itself conceived
 When, pressed by tragic sufferings, the heart
 Admired and envied. Oh! the beating heart,
 As the mind answers to them, or the heart
 Where to the sense of beauty first my heart
 As both may seem, are fastening on the heart
 That noticeable kindness of heart
 The heart with firmer grasp! Your snows and Hearth. See Cottage-hearth.

Beyond the cottage hearth, the cottage-door :
 The empty loom, cold hearth, and silent wheel,
 And, as a faggot sparkles on the hearth,
 Our hearth shall be thy bed, our house shall be thy fold.
 The kitten sleeps upon the hearth,
 Beside an unambitious hearth to sit
 The laughter of the Christmas hearth
 Iviolate, whate'er the cottage hearth
 While the warm hearth exalts the mantling ale,
 O'er Fingal's hearth; the grassy sod
 Mourns she for lordly chamber's hearth
 —This bring I from an ancient hearth,
 A genial hearth, a hospitable board,
 Of thy new hearth; and sooner shall its wreaths,
 That civic strife can turn the happiest hearth
 The private hearth; though keeping thy sole seat
 Beside that hearth what sighs may have been heaved
 And hearth was there, and maple dish,
 Has vanished from his lonely hearth.
 The chamber hearth with fresher boughs is spread,
 Fringing our cottage. Off beside the hearth
 The floor was neither dry nor neat, the hearth
 I guess that, welcome to your lonely hearth,
 A blazing fire—beside a cleanly hearth
 In whom, as by her lonely hearth she sat,
 Of his bright hearth, and from his open door,
 Engaged, near blazing hearth on clean swept floor,

Hearts—continued.

Of hearts at leisure.
 "Blithe souls and lightsome hearts have we"
 And then, what kindness in their hearts!
 He fills with his power all their hearts to the brim—
 To pipe a simple song for thinking hearts.
 In hearts no longer young;
 To hearts so oft by hope betrayed;
 Well may our hearts have faith that blessings come,
 On hearts like that of Peter Bell[.]
 Yet pure and powerful minds, hearts meek and still,
 As halows and makes pure all gentle hearts.
 But in chaste hearts, uninfluenced by the power
 We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon!
 While hearts and voices in the song unite,
 That makes our hearts more apt to sympathize
 How in thy pensive glooms our hearts found rest.
 Of nature; and, if human hearts be dead,
 Yes, freely let our hearts expad,
 Two Hearts, which in thy presence might be called
 Beggar'd and outraged!—Many hearts deplored.

 Enough if in our hearts we know
 Throned in the hearts of men. Should Heaven ardain
 Now that all hearts are glad, all faces bright,
 On the remorseless hearts of men grow old
 Than ever forced upstied hearts to bleed.
 On hearts howe'er insensible or rude;
 Preserve, O Lord! within our hearts
 Sank in our hearts, we felt as men should feel
 Of hearts and hands alike "prepared
 A yearning survives which few hearts shall withstand :
 And we were gay, our hearts at ease;
 And nothing in our hearts we found
 And filled our hearts with grief for England's shame?
 And liberate our hearts from low pursuits.
 Severe research, that in our hearts we know
 Do still survive, and, with those gentle hearts
 Of hearts with gladness brimming o'er;
 Is to my heart of hearts endeared
 Ah! if their fluttering hearts should stir too much,
 For simple hearts thy beauty :
 Lift up your hearts, ye Mourners! for the might
 Their hearts are with you : hill and dale
 They belt him round with hearts undaunted
 Bless, tender Hearts, their mutual lot,
 Through human hearts, and pleasure dead,—
 Him in their hearts the people canonize;
 The temples of their hearts who, with his word
 Who, with sad hearts, of friends and country took Deep in your hearts the sense of dnty lie;
 In Heaven, have lifted up their hearts to laud
 To all that Earth from pensive hearts is stealing,
 And only love keep in your hearts a place.
 And thou, in lovers' hearts forgiven,
 Our minds and hearts to bless—
 Some silent laws our hearts will make,
 —I've heard of hearts unkind, kind deeds
 The household hearts that were his own;
 Glad Hearts! without reproach or blot;
 Wharf shall be to pitying hearts
 Hearts also shall thy lessons reach
 By labours that have touched the hearts of kings,
 And golden summer days uniting cheerful hearts.
 Their own significance for hearts awake,
 Which from their own blind hearts they draw;
 And penetrate the hearts of all;
 Open their hearts before Thee, pouring out
 So high their hearts would beat;
 For he of low hearts can make high, of high
 And hard hearts he can make them kind and free.
 And proud hearts can make tremble in a trice.
 And thus in May their hearts are set on fire,
 The kindly mood in hearts which lapse of years,
 And when our hearts shall feel a stag
 Ye that through your hearts to-day
 Yet in my heart of hearts I feel your might;
 No longer steel their indurated hearts
 Some fond hearts to COMPLIANCE seem'd inclin'd;
 Within our hearts, the love whose flower hath blown
 Off to royal hearts deaied."
 And make them dwellers in the hearts of men
 Ironic diamonds,—clubs, hearts, diamonds, spades,
 Why should I speak of what a thousand hearts
 What is already written in the hearts
 Some monument behind me which pure hearts
 All hearts were open, every tongue was loud
 Predominant in good and evil hearts;
 He had sate lord in many tender hearts;
 Who have as ardent hearts as he had then.
 Tears from the hearts of others, when their own
 Brave hearts! to shameful flight. It was a grief,—
 While yet our hearts are young, while yet we breathe
 In gratitude to God, Who feeds our hearts
 Our hearts—if here the words of Holy Writ
 Thy kindred influence to my heart of hearts
 As studied first in our own hearts, and then

Hearts—continued.

A metropolitan temple in the hearts . . . 753
 Their farewell benediction, but with hearts . . . 761
 And they whose hearts are dry as summer dust . . . 763
 From natural wisdom turn our hearts away . . . 765
 Severe reproof, if we were men whose hearts . . . 765
 And they, if blest with health and hearts at ease, . . . 773
 A language not unwelcome to sick hearts . . . 782
 With hearts at ease, and knowledge in our hearts . . . 794
 Beyond the tenderness of human hearts : . . . 804
 Bounty and government, that filled their hearts . . . 815
 To hearts that own not him? Will showers of grace, . . . 817
 With answering brightness in the hearts of all . . . 828
 That true succession fall of English hearts, . . . 838
 Sincerely wretched hearts, or falsely gay . . . 843
 Upon our hearts, not wholly lost, I grant, . . . 846
 A sunbeam introducing among hearts . . . 848
 To keep two hearts together, that began . . . 851
 Yet shall not thy remembrance leave our hearts, . . . 868
 A sight that kindled pleasure in all hearts . . . 868
 Those blooming Boys, whose hearts are almost sick . . . 884
 They cannot lean, nor turn to their own hearts . . . 886
 Into all hearts. Throughout the world of sense, . . . 887
 Sent from the jocund hearts of those two Boys, . . . 891
 Into our hearts; and charmed the peaceful food, . . . 892
 Inspire the serious song, and gentle Hearts . . . 896
 Will seek us also, sisters of our hearts, . . . K.8. 254
 And one, like them, a brother of our hearts, . . . K.8. 254
 Though yet the star some hearts at court may charm . . . L.1. 96
 I grant that not in parents' hearts alone . . . L.1. 96
Hearts'. Did both find, helpers to their hearts' desire, . . . 729
Heart's-ease. A Heart's-ease will perhaps be there, . . . 164

Heaven—continued.

And solitude prepare the soul for heaven ;
 And from his nest amid the storms of heaven
 As if a new-made heaven were hailing a new earth !
 Here will I live, of all but heaven disowned,
 The God in heaven my prayers for you will hear ;
 " My life, Heaven knows, hath long been burthen-some ;
 " Be blest ; by sight of thee from heaven was sent
 I will not call on Heaven to vouch for me,
 Nay, you abuse my friendship ! Heaven forbid !—
 At which I half accused the God in Heaven—
 He turns his face to heaven. But why so violent
 Revealed by lustre brought with it from heaven ;
 But when you were an Outcast ?— Heaven is just ;
 These trepidations ? Plain it is that Heaven
 By heaven, his words are reason ! Yes, my Friends,
 Poor Victim ! not a virtue under heaven
 Restore him, Heaven ! The desperate Wretch !—
 A Flower,
 Of what I have been—yes, I thank thee, Heaven !
 And, as thou seest, under the arch of heaven
 From my own threshold I looked up to Heaven
 Hailed us as if he had been sent from heaven,
 " I hold of Spirits, and the Sun in heaven,"
 In his old age— Patience—Heaven grant me patience !—
 I hung this belt. Mercy of Heaven ! What ails
 you !
 Fell not the wrath of Heaven upon those traitors ?
 Heaven forbid that I should lift my hand
 Of interfering Heaven, I have no doubt,
 A cup of consolation, filled from Heaven
 Committed to thy guardianship by Heaven ;
 Confounded, I looked up to Heaven, and cast,
 In Heaven, and Mercy gives me leave to die,
 Heaven grant that he spare but that one upright twig
 " In heaven we all shall meet ;"
 " If they two are in heaven ?"
 Their spirits are in heaven !"
 Where earth and heaven do make one imagery ;
 Such wings as, when our Saviour calls, shall bear us up to heaven."
 Up to heaven, thro' peaceful ways.
 " These Tourists, heaven preserve us ! needs must live
 Heaven bless you when you are among your kindred !
 Sweet heaven forefend ! his was a lawful right ;
 Heaven grants even to the guiltiest mind
 The faith Heaven strengthens where he moulds the Creed.
 Bright boon of pitying Heaven !—alas,
 Alas ! the fowls of heaven have wings,
 And blasts of heaven will aid their flight ;
 By Heaven afforded to uphold her maimed
 Which, soothed and sweetened by the grace of
 Heaven
 Is fairer than the fairest star in heaven !
 Shady as night, and beautiful as heaven,
 " As sure as there's a moon in heaven,"
 As sure as there's a moon in heaven."
 —The Moon's in heaven, as Betty sees,
 Another Master. Heaven forgive me, Luke,
 Before I knew thy face.—Heaven bless thee, Boy !
 As that which comes, or seems to come, from
 heaven,
 Oh, gracious Heaven, in pity make her thine !
 Or hast thou put off wings which thou in heaven
 dost wear ?
 Chanter by heaven attracted, whom no bars
 Both you and he, Heaven knows how soon !
 In heaven above thee !
 As full of gladness and as free of heaven,
 From earth to heaven with motion fleet
 That shapes in heaven its murky shroud,
 Tranquil assurances that Heaven supports
 Heaven shield him from mishap and snare !
 But Heaven has blest a good endeavour ;
 I stagger onward—heaven knows how ;
 In earth and heaven, in glade and bower,
 She looks, and her heart is in heaven : but they fade,
 Of pitying Heaven, at least were free
 Yet, witness all that stirs in heaven or earth !
 So much of earth—so much of heaven,
 Beside a pool bare to the eye of heaven
 To the clouds of heaven she looks ;
 It is no Spirit who from heaven hath flown,
 True to the kindred points of Heaven and Home !
 Jove frowned in heaven : the conscious Parcae threw
 From heaven, upon her chosen Favourite !]
 High is her aim as heaven above,
 Derived from earth or heaven,
 From highest heaven let down !
 And makes each soul a separate heaven,
 And earth and stars composed a universal heaven !

Heaven—continued.

Heaven will not tax our thoughts with pride . . .
 Of Heaven doth in such wise, from humblest springs,
 That loads the middle heaven ; and clear and bright
 Transmits to Heaven ! As Deep to Deep . . .
 How earth and heaven are taught to feel . . .
 When earth is calm, and heaven is bright . . .
 And this good Man, whom Heaven requite . . .
 Like to a breeze from heaven. Shall I alone,
 Torn from the Poor ! yet shall kind Heaven protect
 In sight of Heaven, then, wherefore hath God made
 Even her below, but more in heaven above . . .
 With her face up to heaven ; that seemed to have
 The gentleness of heaven broods o'er the Sea :
 Like stars in heaven, and joyously it showed ;
 To gentle Natures, thanks not Heaven amiss . . .
 Hurryjog and sparkling through the clear blue
 heaven ; . . .
 Just Heaven, contract the compass of my mind
 Till she exchanged for heaven that happy ground.
 In Heaven ; for, 'mid the wreck of is and was,
 To live and die, the peace of heaven his aim ;
 Could scarcely make more placid, heaven more bright)
 In Heaven ; hence no one blushes for thy name,
 He can pour forth his spirit. In heaven above,
 With heaven, our souls more fit for future glory,
 For all that thou, as if from heaven, hast brought
 If the calm Heaven, now to its zenith decked
 Sweet Mercy ! to the gates of Heaven . . .
 Is light from Heaven . . .
 Now thanks to Heaven ! that of its grace . . .

 Uplifting toward high Heaven her fiery brand,
 In the soft heaven of a translucent pool ;
 From Heaven a general blessing ; timely rains
 By flames, look up to heaven and crave redress

Heaven—continued.

Through earth and heaven to bind and to unbind —
 Echoed in Heaven, cries out, "Ye Chiefs, abate"
 By voices never mute when Heaven unties . . .
 That ever looked to Heaven for final rest? . . .
 All promises vouchsafed by Heaven will shine . . .
 And Heaven will crown the right."—The mitred Sire
 To Heaven; for, either lost in vanities . . .
 Supremacy from Heaven transmitted pure, . . .
 Which Faith has suffered, Heaven could calmly brook. . . .
 If thou hast fallen, and righteous Heaven restore
 What came from heaven to heaven by nature clings,
 As if a Church, though sprung from heaven, must owe
 Of praise from Heaven. To Thee, O saintly WHITE,
 What perfect glory ye in Heaven shall reap! —
 With what man hopes from Heaven, yet fears from Earth. . . .
 The summer-leaf had faded, passed to Heaven.
 In Heaven, have lifted up their hearts to laud . . .
 To social interests; and to favouring Heaven;
 Give all thou canst; high Heaven rejects the lore
 Earth prompts—Heaven urges; let us seek the light. . . .
 With a full heart; "our thoughts are heard in
 heaven!"
 And Heaven is now to gladden eyes revealing,
 Warbled, for heaven above and earth below, . . .
 A happier, brighter, purer Heaven than theirs. . . .
 Forbid it, Heaven!—and MERRY ENGLAND still . . .
 Nor felt a wish that heaven would show . . .
 And, measuring heaven by earth, would overrule
 Of heaven contemplated by Spirits pure . . .
 (Kindled from Heaven between the light and dark
 Dear art thou to the light of heaven, . . .
 The Mind's internal heaven shall shed her dew
 If this belief from heaven be sent, . . .
 Yet wants heaven knows what to be worthy the
 name. . . .
 Led, Heaven knows how! to this poor sod:
 Nothing? Heaven keep us from a lower stage!
 Bright ship of heaven!
 Some awful moment to which Heaven has joined Whose everlasting laws, sea, earth, and heaven obey."
 Until they reach the bounds by Heaven assigned."
 Of heaven, when Venus held the reins!
 Or tax high Heaven with prodigality?
 Incease-like to Heaven, descending . . .
 Look up to Heaven! the industrious Suis . . .
 On earth, will be revived, we trust, in heaven.
 A holy name—the Bird of Heaven!
 Tears of salvation. Welcome death! while Heaven
 To Loughrigg-tarn, round clear and bright as
 heaven,
 Of heaven in pity visiting the place. . . .
 Are Ye to heaven allied, . . .
 Nor just, how bountiful, the hand of Heaven.
 From Heaven, and feel what they repeat, . . .
 One to whom Heaven assigns that mournful part
 Heaven prosper it! may peace, and love, . . .
 And by all the saints in heaven;
 And benedictions not unheard in heaven;
 Save in the rolls of heaven, where hers may live . . .
 A guardian Spirit sent from pitying Heaven, . . .
 Have unto Heaven and You been paid:
 And Heaven doth to her virtue grant . . .
 More mild doth Heaven ordain . . .
 The God in heaven;—attend, be just;
 High Heaven is my defence . . .
 Exclaimed he: "righteous Heaven,
 To heaven he knelt before the crucifix,
 Sits by her fire, and builds her hope in heaven.
 The good which the benignant law of Heaven
 And troubles that were each a step to Heaven:
 For peace on earth and bliss in heaven;
 Of peaceful years; a chronicle of heaven;—
 But Heaven is now, blest Child, thy Spirit's home:
 Which good men take with them from earth to
 heaven. . . .
 Till it exhales to Heaven. . . .
 To an unforgiving judgment from just Heaven.
 And feeding daily on the hope of heaven . . .
 From Skiddaw's top; but he to heaven was vowed Heaven lies about us in our infancy!
 As sent from heav'n the raven of the skies,
 From his bare nest amid the storms of heaven . . .
 Two hundred times around the ring of heaven,
 Moves through the vault of heaven, and dissipates
 the night;
 To roam from heaven to heaven, from pole to pole,
 Look up to heaven, and bless his darling boy, . . .
 Bright as if heaven were ever in its eye, . . .
 And Heaven still lacked its due, though pious . . .
 From Heaven, gigantic force to beardless boys . . .
 Queen, Wife and Mother! may All-judging Heaven
 For thirst of power that Heaven disowns . . .
 Up starts some tyrant, Earth and Heaven to dare,

Heaven—continued.

For I, methought, while the sweet breath of heaven
 We were a noisy crew; the sun in heaven . . .
 With scoffs and taunts, like Vulcan out of heaven:
 Communing in this sort through earth and heaven
 By the proud name she bears—the name of Heaven.
 Sweet Spenser, moving through his clouded heaven
 The stars of Heaven, now seen in their old haunts—
 He said, "My trust is in the God of Heaven, —
 Upon the speaking face of earth and heaven . . .
 Or heaven made manifest, that I could share . . .
 Its woods, and that uncertain heaven, received . . .
 Space like a heaven filled up with northern lights,
 Moving in heaven; or, of that pleasure tired,
 At their chief city, in the sight of Heaven. . . .
 Before us, fast as clouds are changed in heaven . . .
 Locarno! spreading out in width like Heaven, . . .
 Before us, while she still was high in heaven;—
 Duly to reach the point marked out by Heaven . . .
 Nor least, Heaven bless him! the renowned Lord
 Mayor:
 Here placed to be the inheritor of heaven, . . .
 Arguments sent from Heaven to prove the cause . . .
 Of single spirits that catch the flame from Heaven,
 One body, spreading wide as clouds in heaven . . .
 Is fairer than the fairest star in Heaven! . . .
 One nature, as there is one sun in heaven; . . .
 Forced by the gracious providence of Heaven,—
 From hell came sanctified like airs from heaven . . .
 To which the silver wands of saints in Heaven . . .
 But to be young was very Heaven! O times, . . .
 Or some secreted island, Heaven knows where!
 Openly in the eye of earth and heaven, . . .
 That once looked up in faith, as if to Heaven . . .
 The city of Timoleon! Righteous Heaven!
 Prevailed among the powers of heaven and earth,
 Or holdly seeking pleasure nearer heaven . . .
 From earth to heaven, from human to divine;
 By heaven inspired; that frees from chains the soul,
 Descend to earth or dwell in highest heaven!
 To which the heave of heavens is but a veil.
 His triangles—they were the stars of heaven, . . .
 Was their best hope, next to the God in heaven . . .
 With half a harvest. It pleased Heaven to add
 Calamity, the chastisement of Heaven, . . .
 From regions opposite as heaven and hell.
 Heaven bless them, and their inconsiderate work!
 His body is at rest, his soul in heaven."
 Beside our roads and pathways, though, thank Heaven!
 'His body is at rest, his soul in heaven.'
 Consistent in self-rule; and heaven revealed . . .
 More solid than the gilded clouds of heaven? . . .
 That walk the earth—Father of heaven and earth,
 Confusion infinite of heaven and earth,
 To heaven:—"How beautiful this dome of sky;
 Father of heaven and earth! and I am rich, . . .
 Earth to despise; but, to converse with heaven—
 Drawn towards her native firmament of heaven, . . .
 Nor let the hallowed powers, that shed from heaven
 Or cloud of darkness, localised in heaven;
 Of much exalted good by Heaven vouchsafed
 Glance rapidly along the clouded heaven, . . .
 Oh! there is laughter at their work in heaven!
 Even like an altar lit by fire from heaven,
 And Heaven is weary, of the hollow words,
 But true humility descends from heaven;
 And that best gift of heaven hath fallen on them;
 To heaven, I know, by my Redeemer taught."
 To the pure heaven, he cast them down again . . .
 Have rendered prone, can upward look to heaven;
 And spies whose "silent finger points to heaven;"
 Cause should recur, which righteous Heaven avert!
 A thing most sacred in the eye of Heaven; . . .
 Which waits that prayer to heaven, is due to all,
 (And Heaven was pleased to accomplish the desire)
 Loth to disturb what Heaven hath hushed in peace,
 Converse with heaven, nor yet deprecate towards earth. . . .
 As if he wished the firmament of heaven . . .
 As ever raised to heaven a streaming eye!
 This tale gives proof that Heaven most gently deals
 But Heaven was gracious; yet a little while, . . .
 The memory of the just survives in heaven:
 Whose sacred influence, spread through earth and
 heaven,
 His genius mounted to the plains of heaven . . .
 Nor will, I trust, the Majesty of Heaven . . .
 Advance, and in the firmament of heaven . . .
 Of azure heaven, the unending clouds, . . .
 Of every country under heaven. My thoughts . . .
 And the infinite magnificence of heaven . . .
 The Spirit capable of heaven, assured, . . .
 To heaven as lightly from the cottage-hearth . . .
 For every genial power of heaven and earth, . . .
 With what Heaven grants, and die—in peace of mind,
 That from the humblest floor ascends to heaven, . . .
 A grateful tribute to all-ruling Heaven. . . .
 Of those who fill thy courts in highest heaven, . . .
 To have a nearer view of thee, in heaven. . . .

Heaven—continued.

His beaming eye that had been raised to Heaven,
 Until they reach the bounds by Heaven assigned,
 To thee, dear Spring, and all-sustaining Heaven !
 I, not insensible, Heaven knows,
 Long as Heaven and Earth survive,
 Embowering mountains, and the dome of Heaven
 And waters in the midst, a Second Heaven.
 When, such the awful will of heaven, she died
Heaven-blest. Nor let one billow of our heaven-blest
 Isle
Heaven-horn. Then, to the measure of that heaven-
 born light,
 All heaven-born instincts shun the touch
 Heaven-born, the Soul a heavenward course must hold ;
 'Mid Heaven-born flowers that shall for aye endure,
 Through heaven-born hope, her end !
 The sentence rule by mercy's heaven-born lights,
 Of heaven-born freedom on thy being's height,
 But that the heaven-horn poet must stand forth,
 Mortal to body, and the heaven-born mind ;
Heaven-descended. Prove that thy heaven-descended sway
 Of heaven-descended Piety and Song.
 Of sex and age, and heaven-descended rights,
Heaven-deserted. That heaven-deserted man applauds ;
Heaven-directed. How bright that heaven-directed glance !
 Nought but the heaven-directed spire,
Heaven-eyed. The heaven-eyed creature sleeps in earth ;
Heaven-guided. Which her Heaven-guided feet refuse to tread.
Heaven-imperted. Upon the word of heaven-imparted truth
Heavenliest. Float on the breeze—the heavenliest of all sounds
Heaven-lit. Of that fraternal love, whose heaven lit lamp
Heavenly. Our heavenly Father granted each day's bread ;
 Though rich in heavenly, poor in earthly, comfort,
 "By heavenly Powers conducted, we have met ;
 What heavenly smiles ! O Lady mine,
 Glorified by heavenly light,
 Used to sing in heavenly tone,
 One of those heavenly days that cannot die ;
 And the glistenings—heavenly fair !
 His soul with but a glimpse of heavenly day ?
 Kind Nature keeps a heavenly door
 If aught on earth have heavenly might,
 Could to my sight that heavenly face restore.
 Ye heavenly Birds ! to your Progenitors.
 Yet Nature seems to them a heavenly guide.
 Of common day, so heavenly bright,
 A kind of heavenly destiny ;
 The awful light of heavenly innocence
 And to the heavenly saints in peace who dwell,
 Their heavenly Father will incline an ear
 Sung from that heavenly ground in middle air,
 The heavenly sanction needed to ensure
 Reached by the dews of heavenly grace ;
 To chant, in strains of heavenly glory,
 One star of aspect heavenly bright ;
 Yea, like a heavenly messenger
 Of offices dispensing heavenly grace !
 The amplest share of heavenly favour gives ;
 Holy and heavenly Spirits as they are,
 Shape, limbs, and heavenly features, keeping pace
 Around meek Walton's heavenly memory.
 With heavenly, each more prized for the other's sake ;
 A shade—but with some sparks of heavenly fire
 And " hopes, perhaps more heavenly bright than thine,
 And heavenly Una with her milk-white Lamb,
 Of truth and pure delight by heavenly lays !
 Heavenly Guardians, brooding near,
 Heavenly succour, not denied
 From Wisdom's heavenly Father. Hence hath flowed
 With heavenly inspiration ; such the aim
 From that humane and heavenly source
 And praiseth Christ that is our heavenly King,
 Luna by night, with heavenly influence
 Thy infancy with heavenly truth.
 Beneath yon roof began her heavenly reign ?
 In heavenly majesty she seem'd to move.
 When lo ! the heavenly goddess thus began,
 When Love was horn of heavenly line,
 More heavenly bright than when it leads the morn,
 Descending slow with something heavenly fraught,
 And what a marvellous and heavenly show
 Shines with some portion of that heavenly lustre
 Not by translation to the heavenly choir
 A heavenly comfort ; there she recognised

Heavenly—continued.

Felt to the centre of that heavenly calm
 Of heavenly bodies shining in their spheres.
 Thanks, and if favours of the heavenly Muse
 Tearless, yet full of grief.—How heavenly fair !
Heavenly-fair. To us, with our sad spirits, heavenlyfair—
Heaven-offending. Her heaven-offending trophies
 Glory rears :
Heaven-permitted. The Heaven-permitted vent
Heaven-prompted. Heaven-prompted Nature, measures and erects
Heaven-regarding. The heaven-regarding eye and front sublime
Heaven-revealing. Then may that heaven-revealing smile of thine,
Heaven's. And rest ; but now along heaven's darkening cope
 Upon Heaven's righteous judgment, did become
 Lord of heaven's unchanging year !
 Farewell !—we leave thee to Heaven's peaceful care,
 And when by Heaven's good grace the hoy grew up
 Through " heaven's eternal year."—Yet hail to Thee,
 The mountains against heaven's grave weight
 How, by Heaven's grace, this Clifford's heart was framed :
 (More fair than heaven's broad causeway paved with stars)
 'Tissaid, meek Beast ! that, through Heaven's grace,
 Heaven's sapphire pavement, yet breathed well content,
 Inly illumined by Heaven's pitying love ;
 Heaven's Instrument, for by his hand
 Our faith in Heaven's unfailing love
 Not so Sir Lancelot ;—from Heaven's grace
 Of God, and Heaven's pure Queen—the blissful
 Mary.
 Through ice-built arches radiant as heaven's bow !
 Lovelier—transplanted from heaven's purest clime !
 Heaven's breathing influence failed not to bestow
 Nor did he (such Heaven's will) in vain
 But that Heaven's purpose might be known
 Beloved of Heaven, Heaven's chosen care,
 Partakes, in her degree, Heaven's grace ;
 May not the less, through Heaven's mild countenance,
 For instant victory. But Heaven's high will
 She arrogates o'er heaven's eternal door,
 Before her wane begins on heaven's blue coast ;
 Claim Heaven's regard like waters that have wet (While we look round) that Heaven's decrees are just ;
 The spirit of Laud is pleased in heaven's pure clime,
 An intermingling of Heaven's pomp is spread
 So call thee for heaven's grace through thee made known
 And, from her vow well weighed in Heaven's decrees, While heaven's vast sea of voices chants their praise
 His breath in confidence of Heaven's applause :
 Heaven's bounteous love through me is spread
 517 May 53
 514 Portentous change*
 12
 And by Heaven's favour happily fulfilled ;
 When at heaven's gate she sings ;
 —Why luns in winter, shunning heaven's steep
 heights
 Heaven's blessing be upon thee where thou liest
 Mine, through heaven's grace and inborn aptitudes.
 That Heaven's best aid is wasted upon men
 Heaven's gift, a sense that fits him to perceive
 Of harmony from Heaven's remotest spheres.
 Is heaven's profoundest azure ; no domain
 Or heaven's blue vault, is suffered to put forth
 In Heaven's determinations, ever just
 Communicates with heaven's ethereal orbs
 Do speak, at Heaven's command, to eye and ear,
 Of wedlock richly crowned with Heaven's regard,
 And, through Heaven's blessing, thus we gain the bread
 Closed by degrees to charity ; heaven's blessing
 For 'tis Heaven's will—that, after a disease
 For its last flight to heaven's security
 That still unites them, praises, like heaven's dew,
 And Heaven's good providence, preserved from taint !
 Fanning his temples under heaven's blue arch
 To be inherent in him, by Heaven's will,
 Live through Heaven's eternal year ;
Heavens. And the near heavens impart their own delights
 So shall its waters, from the heavens supplied
 Heavens ! my good Friend ! Forgive me, gracious
 Sir !—
 Oh heavens ! you've been deceived. Thou art a Woman
 Hear me, ye Heavens !—may vengeance haunt the fiend
 This innocent Gentleman. Sweet heavens ! I told him

Heavens—continued.

The clouds pass on; they from the heavens depart :
 In the mid heavens, is never half so fair
 Up and down the heavens they go,
 New heavens succeeded, by the dream brought forth:
 The second glory of the Heavens?—Thou hast;
 Do for thee what the finger of the heavens
 The clear Moon, and the glory of the heavens.
 And is as happy in his night, for the heavens are
 blue and fair;
 Among the heavens his eye can see
 Nor Traveller gone from earth the heavens to espy!
 The heavens, whose aspect makes our minds as still
 And vanish, though the heavens dissolve, her stay
 The broad blue heavens appeared to glimmer,
 If the heavens smile, and leave us free to glide,
 As the beginning of the heavens and earth!
 To mock the Outcast—O ye Heavens, be kind!
 Pure as the naked heavens, majestic, free,
 How long shall vengeance sleep? Ye patient
 Heavens, how long?
 Till, with the heavens and earth, thou pass away!
 On Earth, who works in the heaven of heavens,
 alone.
 Told, also, how the voiceless heavens declare
 Hell opens, and the heavens in vengeance crack
 And the most ancient heavens, through Thee, are fresh and strong.
 The heavens have felt it too.
 Of every cloud which in the heavens might stir
 The Heavens are throaged with martyrs that have risen
 Look round her when the heavens are bare,
 The heavens laugh with you in your jubilee;
 And the near heav'ns their own delights impart.
 To the broad ocean and the azure heavens
 O Heavens! how awful is the might of souls,
 The unfettered clouds and region of the Heavens,
 The blended calmness of the heavens and earth,
 Triumphant, winning from the invaded heavens.
 Theirs is the language of the heavens, the power,
 Their knowledge of the heavens, and image forth
 For so it seemed, felt by the starry heavens.
 I have protracted, in the unwearied heavens
 To which the heaven of heavens is but a veil.
 Imploingly,—looked up, and asked the Heavens,
 The mid assemblage of the starry heavens;
 And the whole circle of the heavens, for him
 Aught by these perishable heavens disclosed
 Undaunted, toward the imperishable heavens,
 That which the heavens displayed, the liquid deep
 Heavens! who sees majesty in George's face?
Heaven-sanctioned. Now, from Heaven-sanctioned victory, Peace is sprung;
Heaven-taught. Impelled by thirst of all but Heaven-taught skill.
 Such as the heaven-taught skill of Herbert drew;
 That moral sweeten by a heaven-taught lay.
Heavenward. Our heavenward guide is holy love,
 With faith, the Suppliant heavenward lifts her hands;
 Of heaven-ward enterprise.
 Heaven-born, the Soul a heavenward course must
 hold;
 Which heavenward they direct.—Then droop not
 thou,
 Points heavenward, indicate the eod aod way.
 In the pines pointing heavenward her beauty austere;
 On those bright steps that heavenward raise
 Heavenward ascends with all her charities,
 Of luminous faith, heavenward hath raised that
 head
 Earthward or heavenward, radiant messengers,
 Heavenward; and chide the part of me that flags,
 Heavenward, so piercing deep the lake below.
Heaves. His bosom heaves, his Spirit towers amain,
 Her bosom heaves and spreads, her stature grows;
 —Behold!—as with a gushing impulse heaves
 That a brief while heaves with convulsive throes—
 Wide Europe heaves, impatient to be cast,
 But Ocean under magic heaves,
Heavier. Heavier than work, raised it: within that hut
 The heavier substance of a leaf-clad bough,
 And the blows felt with heavier weight
 On the crushed heart a heavier burthen lay.
 That every foot might fall with heavier tread,
 Reviving, heavier chastisement deserve
 A care more anxious, or a heavier grief?
 Mouth falls on mouth with heavier weight;
 Thou wilt provoke a heavier penalty.
 Against far heavier ill, the pestilence
 Or aright of heavier or more deadly weight,
 Hung down in heavier tufts; and that bright weed,
 Perchance, the heavier woes of guilt; feel not
 Heavier, as his offence was heavier far.
Heaviest. The heaviest storms not longest last;

Heaviest—continued.

Nor by the heaviest rain-drops more deprest,
 The heaviest plummet of despair can go—
 Wreaths that endure affliction's heaviest shower,
 —Woe to them all! but heaviest woe and shame
 Whose heaviest sin it is to look
 Or grass-grown spaces, where the heaviest foot
 Methinks that I could trip o'er heaviest soil,
 That, under heaviest sorrow earth can bring,
Heavily. Pressing as heavily as it doth on mine.
 Ye travel heavily and slow;
 Too heavily upon the lily's head
 The rain came heavily and fell in floods;
Heaviness. A moment's heaviness they feel,
 Nor could my heart by second thoughts from heaviness be cleared,
 Be turned to heaviness and fear,
 And heaviness in Clifford's ear!
 And the Lady prayed in heaviness
 From heaviness, off fly, dear Friend, to thee;
 And of that longing heaviness doth come,
 Why Troilus hath all this heaviness?
Heaving. Till you have marked his heaving chest,
 Only a heaving of the deep survives,
 So that the very heaving of his breath
 Or lily heaving with the wave
 Went heaving through the water like a swan;
 No heaving of the heart. While by the fire
 A heaving surface, almost wholly free
 Said I, "like surges heaving in the wind
Heavings. I too forgot the heavings of my breast.
Heavy. Dear Master! gratitude's a heavy burden
 Meanwhile the storm fell heavy on the woods;
 Heavy his low-hung lid did off appear,
 Years after he had heard this heavy news,
 Heavy and wan, all whitened by the Moon,
 And hung with heavy tufts of moss,
 With heavy tufts of moss that strive
 In which the heavy and the weary weight
 Heavy is woe;—and joy, for human-kind,
 That she had borne a heavy yoke,
 To him, a heavy, bitter loss,
 Of thy offences be a heavy weight:
 Through heavy swamp, or over snow-clad height—
 When snow lies heavy upon the land."
 Slowly the cormorant aims her heavy flight
 Ye heavy laden! "such the inviting voice
 Silently to consume the heavy clouds;
 And like a Star (that, from a heavy cloud
 But, oh the heavy change!—heret
 "But we are pressed by heavy laws;
 And all the heavy or light vassalage
 And pine-trees made a heavy shade
 Is of my Lady's sighs heavy and sore;
 Not without heavy grief of heart did He
 Impertunate and heavy load!
 Heavy as frost, and deep almost as life!
 —Heavy, and dull, and cloudy is the night,
 That heavy weight of many a weary day
 That thou endurest; heavy though that weight be,
 The assurance which then cheered some heavy
 thoughts
 A vagrant Merchant under a heavy load
 And partner of my loss.—O heavy change!
 And, as the heavy cloud of sleep dissolves,
 Was no access for wain, heavy or light.
 Thick storm, and heavy, which for three hours'
 space
 In times of heavy snow." She then began
 Rid of a vexing and a heavy load,
Heavy-headed. But still the heavy-headed Thing
Hebe. Now flush'd as Hebe, Emulation
Hebrew. From Hebrew fountains sprung;
 By Hebrew ordinance devoutly kept,
 O Hebrew people! said he in his wrath,
 Such as by Hebrew Prophets were beheld
 —With promises the Hebrew Scriptures teem:
Hebrews. The Hebrews thus, carrying in joyful state
Hebrides. Among the farthest Hebrides.
Hector. A self-devoted chief—by Hector slain."
 Of Priam ask'd, of Hector, "o'er and o'er—
 Of Hector asked if [of] Priam o'er and o'er,
 Where hast thou tarried, Hector? from what coast
He'd. He'd not have robbed the raven of its food.
 He'd wish to close them again.
 He'd drag as well what he is dragging;
Hedge. Silent the hedge or steamy rivulet's bed,
 Hedge in the life of every pest and plague
 And through the broken Hawthorn hedge,
 And, looking o'er the hedge, before me I espied
 When I walk by the hedge on a bright summer's day,
 Intent on gathering wool from hedge and brake
 Than an old hedge to Goody Blake?
 To seek the hedge of Harry Gill
 She's at the hedge of Harry Gill!
 Silent the hedge or steamy rivulet's bed,
 A long a hedge of hollies dark and tall,
Hedgehog. Or track the hedgehog to his hole.

Height—continued.

—Stoop from your height, ye proud, and copy these!

Drawn from her cottage, on that airy height,
The voice of Deity, on height and plain,
Ascending! For on that superior height
On height or bottom did they see, in flocks
Of vale below, a height of hills above.

Heighten. Methinks 'twould heighten joy, to over-leap
Will dwell with me—to heighten joy,
Heightened. With wonder heightened, or sublimed by awe—
Of speech as wild as ever heightened mirth.

Height's. When, through this Height's inverted arch,
Heights. See Mountain-heights, Rydal-heights,
Of pensive Underwalden's pastoral heights.
That came to him, and left him, on the heights,
Against the mountain blasts; and to the heights,
Up to the heights, and in among the storms,
Like stars, at various heights;
To pause at last on more aspiring heights
To Her from heights that Reason may not win.
Or where 'mid "lonely heights and haws,"
Lost on the aerial heights of the Crusades!
Alone upon Loch Veol's heights
The vapours linger round the Heights
Thou, who upon those snow-clad Heights hast poured
Is this the stream, whose cities, heights, and plains,
But, flying through the heights around,
From dew-sprinkled grass to heights guarded with
snow,
Of sounds as rang the heights of Latmos over,
Among these sterile heights of Apeninne,
To carry thy glad tidings over heights
I mingle with the blast on those pure heights
On cloud-sequestered heights, that see and hear (Foretaste of winter) on the moorland heights;
In Craven's dens, on Cumbrian heights;
Now seek upon the heights of Time the source
To giddy heights hath cold the Papal sway.
Ranging the heights of Scawfell or Black-comb,
To heights more glorious still, and into shades
Glad proclamation make, and heights and dells
Those heights (like Phebus when his golden locks
The massy Ways, carried across these heights
Lost grand o'er the heights in pomp they go,
Thence red from different heights with restless
gleam
And emerald isles to spot the heights appear,
Wensley's rich Vale and Sedburgh's naked heights
—Why suns in winter, shunning heaven's steep
heights
To range the open heights where woodcocks run
With those crystalline rivers, solomn heights,
And heights meanwhile were slowly overspread
Without repining from the coves and heights
Rests his substantial orb;—between those heights
Returned not, and now, haply, on the heights
As our enjoyments, boundless.—From those heights
Heights which the soul is competent to gain.
Is still a happier man, who, for those heights
Of mere humanity, you clomb those heights;
Sounds which the wandering shepherd from these heights
Tidings of joy and love.—From those pure heights
To loftiest heights ascending, from their tops,
—Stoop from those heights, and soberly declare
Sends inspiration from the shadowy heights,
From these imaginative heights, that yield
Earthly desires; and raise, to loftier heights
Who, mounting fearlessly the rocky heights,
Descended from Judean heights, to march
The red-deer driven along its native heights
'Mid Buxton's dreary heights. In earnest watch,
With pure cerulean gravel, from the heights
To Taranis erected on the heights
When from the heights our shepherds drive their flocks
Against the mountain blasts, and to the heights
Of this fair Vale, and o'er its spacious heights

Heinous. Thou seeest me what I am. It was most heinous,
Of yet more heinous guilt, with fiercer pride.
May with such heinous appetites be compared),

Heir. And taught that pair is pleasure's natural heir
Remains without an Heir, the bait
The infant Heir of Mowbray's blood—
From Childbirth's perilous throes. And should the Heir
And all the long year through the heir
Save He who came as rightful Heir
Fam'd Pygmalion's Son and Heir,
And let that heir of Glory's endless day

Heirloom. What poor abodes the heirloom hide,
An heir-loom in his cottage wilt Thou be:—

Heirs. Hailed from aloft those Heirs of truth divine
The Poets, who on earth have made us heirs
Heirs from times of earliest record

Heirs—continued.

And through ages, heirs of heirs,
Twin labourers and heirs of the same hopes;
Inmates, and heirs of our united love;
Such as theyby you painted, lineal heirs

Held. See Upheld, Withheld.
Imprisoned there, and held it to his ear,
Has held infernal orgies—with the gloom,
While in my lap I held my little Babe
The scrip that held his food, and I forgot
And held such intermitted talk
While still I held him by the arm,
That now I should restore what hath been held in trust!"
He whose domain is held in common
Held that the unborn infant wrought
He raised her up; and while he held
The house that held this prize; and led
Which Milton held.—In every thing we are sprung
Which hath been held aloft before men's sight
Nor wanted, when their fortitude had held
Ne'er saw a race who held, by right of birth,
Held with all kinds in Eden's blissful bowers.
Held; but in radiant progress toward the Deep

Helmet-like. Helmet-like themselves will fasten Helmet. And nod their helmets, smitten by the wing
Help. Help from the staff he bore; for mien and air
 "No help I sought; in sorrow turned adrift,
 Unought for was the help that did my life recall.
 Small help; and, after marriage such as mine,
 Of Time's sure help to calm and reconcile,
 These stifling blasts—God help me! Better this
 bare rock,
 Not one of which could help him while alive,
 let us return, I can help you.
 To do with others; help me to my Father—
 You, Sir, could help me to the history
 Help us to tell Her tales of years gone by,
 Said, "Pride shall help me in my wrong;
 And now, God help me for my little wit!
 "—I cannot help it; ill intent
 I think, to help me if they could.
 No hand to help them in distress;
 There's none to help poor Susan Gale;
 What speedy help her Boy will bring,
 Something between a hindrance and a help;
 And with his kinsman's help and his own thrift
 Look up—and help a hand that longs to set thee
 free.
 Ever beheld. Up-led with mutual help,
 Help, as if from fairy power;
 Through help of honest Benjamin;
 Comes to give what help he may;
 God help thee, Ruth!—Such pains she had,
 Housing, with God's good help, by choice or chance;
 "God," said I, "be my help and stay secure;
 Help, under every change of adverse fate,
 Is man, though loth such help to seek,
 And those that seek his help, and for his mercy sigh.
 Will help to bring the body home."
 Help by his labour to maintain
 So, coming his last help to crave,
 We'll show that we can help to frame
 Till not a wreck of help or hope remained,
 With every help that ye from earth and heaven
 may claim!
 O for the help of Angels to complete
 Knowledge no help; Imagination shaped
 That would yield him fit help while prefiguring that Place
 So well, that by its help aid through His grace
 Help, and forgiveness speedy and entire.
 "My Art shall help to tame her pride—"
 She sues for help with piteous utterance!
 Superior? Help to virtue does she give?
 Upon no help of outward friend;
 Or by his mantle's help to find
 My Father! I would help to find
 Help did she give at need, and joined
 Is he who can, by help of grace, enthroned
 Prevent omission, help deficiency,
 Giving to Memory help when she would weave
 His gracious help, or give what we abuse.
 Their way, with thy pure help, to heart and mind;
 And will maintain, if God his help afford.
 If office help the factious to conspire,
 Help with thy grace, through life's short day,
 Thy help is with the weed that creeps
 A bounteous help in days of yore,
 With help from female hands, that proudly strove
 Vitruvius of our village had no help
 Fall on thy knees and sue for help divine.
 Help me to tell it in thy reverence!
 To be our help upon our dying day!
 Now, God of Love! thou help me in some wise,
 It cannot help itself in its decay;
 Through good and evil, help might have,
 With mutual help, and sailing—to their league
 And could not stoop—no help was nigh.
 And help life onward in its noblest aim.
 Help at his need in Dalecarlia's mines;
 But ask for timely furtherance and help
 Such help; the ever-living universe,
 From blended colours also borrowing help,
 Full-formed, that take, with small internal help,
 For once, the Muse's help will we implore,
 Of myriads and hoon nature's lavish help;
 Inseparably, each with the other's help.
 First commuted with him by their help. And thus
 To help him to his grave? Meanwhile the man,
 To travel independent of her help,
 The experience of past ages, as, through help
 For France, what without help she could not do,
 By help of dreams—can breed such fear and awe
 In God's good love, and seek his help by prayer.
 To give her needful help. That very time
 Aply disposed, had lent its help to raise
 Was now a help to his late comforter
 All night the storm endured; and, soon as help
 And by her help ye are my prisoners still.
 The help desiring of the pure devout.
 Might, with small help from fancy, be transformed
 Your further help? The mine of real life

Help—continued.
 And by what help had gaided those distant fields.
 By the last lingering help of the open sky
 To help the small but certain comings-in
 Time, which had thus afforded willing help
 May cover him; and by his help, perchance,
 And, by some friendly finger's help upstayed
 Benevolence is mild; nor borrows help.
 Not, doubtless, without help of female taste
 To drudge through a weary life without the help
 And with that help the wonder shall be seen
 To help it and adorn.
 First offered help that the deficient rock
 Wins help from something greater than herself—
 Can give us inward help, can purify,
 Off help to make hold fancy's flight more hold;
Helped. Had helped thee to a Valentine;
 Earth helped him with the cry of blood;
 Yet, helped by Genius—untired comforter,
 Have helped us: Ure we crossed, and Swale,
 To entwine the crook of eloquence that helped
 Upon that meagre soil, helped out by talk
 Of strange or tragic accident, hath helped
 As Tom, but when he helped her to her horse
Helper. Lurks in it, Memory's Helper, Fancy's Lord,
 His helper and not theirs, laid stronger hold
 Of their own helper have been swept away;
 Power to thyself; no Helper hast thou here;
 And her blind helper Chance, do thou suffice Helpers. Where once his airy helpers schemed and planned
 Spare, too, the human helpers! Do they stir
 Subordinate helpers of the living mind;
 And dearest helpers, left unthanked, unpraised,
 Did both find, helpers to their hearts' desire,
 729 Prelude 11. 137
Helpful. And helpful to his utmost power: and there
Helping. "I'm helping this poor dying brute."
 The noble-minded Mother's helping hand
 The Mother left alone,—no helping hand
Helpless. Like fate; was hurried off, a helpless prey,
 That cannot feel for one, helpless as he is.
 Woman, thou hast a helpless infant—keep
 Were there a Man who, being weak and helpless
 Aod helpless innocence—do they protect
 Helpless and harmless as a babe: a Man
 Helpless, and loved me dearer than his life.
 And there the helpless lamb he found
 Oh mercy! like a helpless child,
 A dull helpless thing,
 Even now—to solemnise thy helpless state,
 And helpless almost as the blind,
 Ah! see her helpless Charge! enclosed
 These emblems suit the helpless and forlorn,
 Yet not alone, nor helpless to repel
 Yet, God is my witness, thou small helpless Thing!
 He is helpless and alone:
 So helpless in appearance, that for rocks,
 His father helpless as the babe he rocks,
 For this poor crawling helpless wretch
 Frail creature as he is, helpless as frail,
 Unutterably helpless, and a look
 And to this helpless infant. I have slept
 Of sickness, accident, and helpless age.
 Of many helpless Childreu. I begin Helplessness. Supplied my helplessness with food and raiment,
 In helplessness, when innocence is with them.
 Here do I stand, alone, to helplessness,
 But, to its helplessness, grew mild
 In worse than former helplessness—and lie
 Lies the Babe, in helplessness
Helpmate. His Helpmate was a comely matron, old—
 Have loved his Helpmate; but to Michael's heart
 My helpmate in the woods to be,
 Man and his help-mate in fast wedlock joined
 When her life's Helpmate on a sick-bed lay,
 Her Helpmate following. Hospitable fare,
Helpmate's. My helpmate's face by light of day.
 He quits
Helps. Eases her pain, and helps her prayers.
 While, borrowing helps where'er he may,
 Those helps rejected, they, whose minds perceive
 Helps to restore and spread a Pagan sway:
 'Tis well—but what are helps of time and place,
 She helps to make a Holy-land at home:
 Helps him to meet the last Tribunal's voice
 Those helps for his occasions ever near
 These helps solicit; and a steadfast seat
 Helps to internal ease. Of many such—
Helvellyn. Helvellyn far into the clear blue sky
 Under the brow of old Helvellyn—
 From the watch-towers of Helvellyn;
 Then, when old Helvellyn woe thee
 Far in the bosom of Helvellyn,
 By Sidney, where, in sight of our Helvellyn,
 What sounds are those, Helvellyn, that are heard
 Helvellyn, in the silence of his rest,
 And old Helvellyn, conscious of the stir

Herbert—continued.

The Baron Herbert. Mercy, the Baron Herbert !
'Tis Herbert and no other ! 'Tis a feast to see him,
With Herbert or his Daughter ? Daughter ! truly—
That doth concern this Herbert ? You are provoked,
Lord Clifford—did you see him talk with Herbert ?
Of this mock Father's guilt. The Baron Herbert
The Baron Herbert, who, as was supposed,
Herbert !—confusion ! Here it is, my Friend,
Herbert ! since you will have it, Baron Herbert ;
Herbert is innocent. You do but echo
Herbert is innocent. What fiend could prompt
" HERBERT.

Such as the heaven-taught skill of Herbert drew ;
Herbert's. Hovering round Herbert's door, a man whose figure

At Herbert's door. Ay ; and if truth were known
Yours, Woman ! are you Herbert's wife ?
At Herbert's door—and when he stood beside
The desolate ruins of St. Herbert's Cell.

Herbs. Where flowers and herbs unite, and haply some weeds be,

Green herbs, bright flowers, and herry-bearing plants,
Where herbs look up, and opening flowers are seen ;
Of herbs and lowly flowers,
Herbs moistened by Virginian dew,
Clinging to its steep sides a thousand herbs
Now that their snows must melt, their herbs and flowers
Came those five herbs ? by what hand were they sown
Far as it dares to follow. Herbs self-sown,
Will fringe the lettered stone ; and herbs spring
forth,
Of weedless herbs a healthier prospect sees,
Strewing in peace life's humblest ground with herbs,
No witer greenness ; of her herbs and flowers,
Where, haply, crowned with flowerets and green
herbs,
A Visitor—in quest of herbs and flowers ;
For her own flowers and favourite herbs, a space,
To me as precious as my own !—Green herbs
Communion without check of herbs and flowers
Imaged in downward show ; the flower, the herbs,
Herculean. The wreck of Herculean lore,

Herculean. The Herculean Commonwealth had put forth her arms,
Hercules. " Ah wherefore ?—Did not Hercules by force
Whom the Dog Hercules pursued—his part
Of Hercules, though by a dubious claim, Hercynian. Of the Hercynian forest. Yet, hail to you
Herd. See Goat-herd.
Where huge rocks tremble to the bellowing herd.
On which the herd is feeding ;
If not a straggler from the herd
But habit rules the unreflecting herd,
That sigh and shudder to the lowing herd,
Smooth life had herdsman, and his snow-white herd
Is for Society's unreasoning herd
How the calm pleasures of the pasturing herd
Herd-boy. Nor herd-boy of the wood,
Herd. In the rough fern-clad park, the herded deer
With whom I herded !—(easily, indeed,
Herds. Or distant herds that pasturing upward creep,
When shouts and lowing herds the valley fill,
Nor Hunger driven the herds from pastures bare,
And merry fledgeot ; the low of herds,
Of scattered herds, that in the meadow graze,
All round this pool both flocks and herds might drink
Give, herds and flocks, your voices to the wind !
We mark majestic herds of cattle, free
Herds range along the mountain side ;
When stood the short'd herds amid the tide,
Nought but the herds that pasturing upward creep,
Bless'd with his herds, as in the patriarch's age,
The fodder of his herds in winter snows
Nor Hunger forc'd the herds from pastures bare
Then the milk-thistle had those herds demand
And talking voices, and the low of herds,
The herds and flocks are yet abroad to crop
And mountains not less green, and flocks, and herds, Herdsmen. No traveller, peasant, herdsman ? Not a soul !
Of thoughtful Herdsman when he strays
Smooth life had herdsman, and his snow-white herd
A Herdsman on the lonely mountain-tops
—In that fair clime, the lonely herdsman, stretched Herdsman-like. Stretched, herdsman-like, as if to bask
Herdsman's. Or some stone-basin which the herds-man's hand
Through the green vales and through the herds-man's bower—

Herdsmen's—continued.

To weather-fend the Celtic herdsman's head—
The poor, the lonely, herdsman's joy and pride.
Herdsmen. Shepherds and herdsmen.—Like a whirlwind came
Among the herdsmen of the Alps, have wrought
Here, omitted.
Hereafter. You will not disappoint them ; and hereafter—
Hereafter you will thank me for this service.
As I requested ; and hereafter, Luke,
Than will hereafter move them, if they make
Feels, and hereafter shall the truth declare,
Of thy fond hopes hereafter walk inclined .
(Save only one, hereafter to be named)
Hereafter brought in charge against mankind.
And, lastly, as hereafter will be shown,
Hereafter, not escaping self-reproach .

Herby. Nor can I not believe but that herby
Hereditary. He from his old hereditary nook
She saw the hereditary howers .
Where, on a small hereditary farm .
Than the old hereditary wish fulfilled ;
Herein. A kind and a good Father ; and herein
Strange, should He deal herein with nice respects,
Herein less happy than the Traveller
Here's. Here's what will comfort you. The Saints reward you
Here's for your little boy, and when you christen
him
Here's a cozze warm house for Edward and me.
Here's neither head nor foot-stone, plate of brass,
Here's grass to play with, here are flowers ;
But here's a thought which well our mirth may cross Heresies. That heresies should strike (if truth be scanned)

Heretofore. Had heretofore, in humble trust,
But such he had been heretofore .
A strength unthought of heretofore !
Sink (if thou must) as heretofore,
Of ignorance thou might'st witness heretofore.
Of him who heretofore did bear,
To desecrate the Fane which heretofore
With prompt rebound seemed fresh as heretofore.
Support, as heretofore, my fainting steps .
Had come among these objects heretofore,
Has heretofore made known ; that bursting forth
And ranged, with ardour heretofore unmet,
Resistance strong as heretofore, I thought
Not with less interest than heretofore,
Convictions still more strong than heretofore,
Which, in the cottage-window, heretofore .
When, heretofore, I placed before your sight
This—if delightful hopes, as heretofore,
Herewith. Herewith he grasped the Solitary's hand Heritage. Sightless, and from my heritage was driven,
It is my pleasant heritage ;
Appointed by man's common heritage,
With no mean earnest of a heritage
Thy heritage, thou Bye among the blind,
Rights that transcend the loftiest heritage Hermes. Mild Hermes spake—and touched her with his waid
Aloud she shrieked ! for Hermes re-appears !
Hermit. —A Hermit with his family around !
The hermit has no finer eye
The Hermit sits alone. These beauteous forms,
No hermit with his beads and glass ?
Or haply there some pious hermit chose
The Hermit saw the Angel spread his wings
Though here the Hermit numbered his last day
The hermit, exercised in prayer and praise,
Long may ye roam these hermit waves that sleep,
—Before those hermit doors, that never know
With an appropriate human centre—hermit,
Some Hermit, from his cell forth-strayed, might pace
You have regaled us as a hermit ought ;
The hermit to his cell in forest wide ;
The tiller's hand, a hermit might have chosen,
That ever hermit dipped his maple dish
Transplanted ereto too late.—The hermit, lodged
Of hermit, dubious where to scroop [? scoop] his cell ;
Thao to the forest hermit are the leaves
Hermitage. A hermitage has furnished it relief
Methinks that to some vacant hermitage
Green-house, shell-grot, and moss-lined hermitage.
Continued, brought me to my hermitage.
My hermitage, my cabin, what you will—
Hermitless. Proof that the hermitless still lives,
Hermit's. Or of some Hermit's cave, where by his fire
Above the hermit's long-forsaken cell !
A convent, even a hermit's cell .
From its dear home the Hermit's corpse,
More precious than a hermit's dust ;
Clear-shining, like a hermit's taper seen
Or haply shrouded in a hermit's cell .
Hermits. And hermits are contented with their cells ;
Hermits'. In hermits' weeds repose he found

Stand yet, but, Stranger ! hiddeo from thy view,
Or hidden under ground, like sleeping worms.
Such is Joy—as quickly hidden,
That might from him be hidden ; not a track
Hidden was Grasmere Vale from sight,

When thou wert hidden in thy monthly grave ;

Hide. Shall hide me, wooing long thy wildwood strain ;

You chestnuts half the latticed boat-house hide,
—When low-hung clouds each star of summer hide,
Thrice happy ! that for him the grave could hide
Sometimes he'll hide in the cave of a rock,
Hide the knowledge of thy doom.
The innocent Boy, else shelterless, his lonely head
must hide.
As if he wished himself to hide :
And hide my head where wild beasts roam.
Of modest kindness, that would hide
For this they know (and let it hide,
Where close fogs hide their parent brook ;
Alas ! what boots it ?—who can hide,
The liquid veil that seeks not to hide them.
What could she seek ?—or wish to hide ?
Aspiring Road ! that lov'st to hide
Asks of the clouds what occupants they hide :—
Of skill, upon the sounding hide
And a huge mass, to bury or to hide,
But clouds and eavious darkness hide
Or hide, at will,—for freedom combating
Of future war. Advance not—spare to hide,
Did sullen mists hide lake and skies
In aught that ye would grace or hide—
Upon her yet, earth hide her beauty ;
The Muse exclaimed ; but Story now must hide
What poor abodes the heirloom hide,
To hide her poor afflicted head ?
Temple and Altar sink, to hide their shame
The war-worn Chieftain quits the world—to hide
To hide himself, but only magnifies ;
With gradual stealth the lateral windows hide

Hide-and-seek. Thou dost play at hide-and-seek ;

Hideoous. Of hideous sense, I sank, nor step could crawl :
The truth is hideous, but how stifle it ?
In some a hideous one—hem ! shall I stop ?
A hideous plot, against the soul of man :
And hideous aspect, stalking round and round !
What hideous warfare hath been waged,
A spectacle more hideous—yet
Shall worthily rehearse the hideous rout,
Scattered on all sides by the hideous jars
In hideous usages, and rights accursed,
Whom Obloquy pursues with hideous bark :
The cross with hideous laughter Demons mock,
Of a ship struggling with a hideous storm)
Hideoously. Then into Severn hideoously defiled, Hides. Scarce hides a shadow from her searching rays ;
In golden light ; half hides itself in shade :
This hides not from the moral Muse . . . 31 Guilt 386

Hides—continued.

By which the road is hidden, also hides
 Rivall'd by you, hides the diminish'd head . . .
Hiding. Among the stars, the stars now hiding,
 Hiding their fiery clouds, their rocks, and snows;
 Hiding the face of earth for leagues—and there,
Hiding-place. To seek a hiding-place beyond the seas.
 Follow each other to their hiding-place
 The promised hiding-place;
 But to return out of its hiding-place
 Or the least penetrable hiding-place
Hiding-places. From hiding-places ten years deep;
 Of life: the hiding-places of man's power
Hie. The Troop will be impatient; let us hie
 "Hie thee to the Countess, friend! return with speed,
 And thus in joyous mood they hie . . .
 Back therefore will they hie to seize
Hied. Then up the steep ascent they hied,
 Achatas, with the gifts to Carthage hied;
Hieroglyphic. Vanity's hieroglyphic; a choice trope
 That Sisterhood, in hieroglyphic round
Hies. Away she hies to Susan Gale . . .
 Then off she hies; but with a prayer,
 And to the Doctor's door she hies;
 Then up along the town she hies,
 And up the cottage stairs she hies,
 But down the irriguous valley hies,
 And Nature, while through the great city he hies,
 Smoke round him, as from hill to hill he hies,
High. See Roof-high, Star-high.
 Through bare grey dell, high wood, and pastoral cove;
 Or from high points of rock looked out for fanning
 gales;
 Beholds, of all from her high powers required,
 Blue pomp of lakes, high cliffs and falling floods,
 By pointing to the gliding moon on high.
 Her files of road-elm, high above my head
 Thy towns that cleave, like swallow's nests, on high;
 Dilated hang the misty pines on high,
 With Independence, child of high Disdain.
 What high resolves exalt the tenderest thought
 Nought but the châlets, flat and bare, on high
 High and more high in summer's heat they go,
 Another high on that green ledge;—he gained
 More high, the snowy peaks with hues of rose.
 He holds with God himself communion high,
 She knows that only from high aims ensue
 In streaks diverging wide and mounting high;
 He looked, and saw upon a gibbet high
 Ran mountains high before the howling blast,
 Which high and higher mounts with silver gleam:
 His voice with indignation rising high . . .
 Is a reflux from on high,
 High on a broad infertile tract of forest-skirted
 Down,
 And bore him high through yielding air my debt of love to pay,
 Or shake his high desert.
 Nor rate too high what must so quickly fade,
 Born all too high, by wedlock raised
 In high and low, above, below,
 Now is she high upon the down,
 And now she's high upon the down,
 The cliffs and peaks so high that are High into Easedale, up to Dunmull-Raise,
 Nurtured, as thy mien bespeaks, in high degree,
 "High bliss is only for a higher state,"
 The high crag cannot work me harm
 Along the public way, this Peak, so high
 Restless with fixed to balance, high with low,
 Where leafless oaks towered high above,
 And dancing high and dancing low,
 Of pleasure high and turbulent,
 Lift me, guide me, high and high
 I have seen thee, high and low,
 Pass high above those fragrant bells
 High on the trunk's projecting brow,
 —Yes, without me, up hills so high
 What bustling—jostling—high and low!
 While to the music, from on high,
 That floats on high o'er vales and hills,
 High as a cloud, high over head!
 The wind, the tempest roaring high,
 Pure hopes of high intent:
 "As high as we have mounted in delight
 "High on a mountain's highest ridge,
 When she was on the mountain high,
 High in the breathless Hall the Minsiret sat,
 High on that chalky cliff of Britain's Isle,
 Yet still the bosom beating high,
 High as the level of the mountain tops,
 High is her aim as heaven above,
 This presence from on high,
 Waves high, embellished by a gleaming shower!
 Mysteriously remote and high;
 High as the imperial front of man;
 Poising your splendours high above the heads
 That in high triumph drew the Lord of vines,

High—continued.

High o'er the red-haired race of Mars, . . .
 He lay beneath the branches high, . . .
 Hath left him high in preparation,—
 For such high argument, . . .
 High as the highest Peak of Furness-fells,
 Might work in our high Calling—a bright hope
 In his still haunt on Bagdad's summit high;
 Her tackling rich, and of apparel high,
 High is our calling, Friend!—Creative Art
 Or of high gladness you shall hither bring;
 Where art thou? Thou so often seen on high
 And upward, high as Malvern's cloudy crest;
 Of high astonishment and pleasing fear.
 The World, sole-standing high on the bare hill—
 Would hasten, that such pomp may float on high?
 'Tis He whose yester-evening's high disdain
 While beams of orient light shoot wide and high,
 To keep, so high in air, its strength and grace:
 High lodged the Warrior, like a bird of prey;
 (High Servant of paternal Love)
 Plain living and high thinking are no more:
 Is man as good as man, none low, none high?
 And birds, high flying in the element,
 High deeds, O Germans, are to come from you!
 For his field-pastime high and absolute,
 High sacrifice, and labour without pause,
 These desolate remains are trophies high
 Like his own lightning, over mountains high,
 Patience and temperance with this high reserve,
 (Thanks to high God) forests of such remain:
 Of such high course was felt and understood;
 Midway on some high hill, while father Time
 Of Providence, But now did the Most High
 Those high achievements; even as she arrayed
 By Works of spirit high and passion pure!
 High on the shore of silver Thames—to greet
 On this high Day of THANKS, before the Throne of Grace!
 And when that calm Spectatress from on high
 Majestic BERNIE, high on her guardian steep,
 Beats with a fancy running high,
 High poised—or as the wren that sings
 O'er high and low, and if requiring rest,
 And high above that length of cloistral roof,
 Of that high Convent-crested cliff I stood,
 Chosen by Rome's legendary Bards, high minds
 With something more propitious to high aims
 That bound it to its native earth—poised high
 From that depression raised, to mount on high
 And enter, with prompt aid from the Most High,
 High on the brink of that precipitous rock,
 From their high state darkened the Earth with fear, Near that Cell—yon sequestered Retreat high in air—
 Sweep to the charge; more high, the Dacian force,
 To hoof and finger mailed;—yet, high or low,
 Top-gallant high, rebounding and rebounding!
 Sailed" (hear me, Merlin!) "under high protection,
 For some high day of long-expected pleasure.
 Here must a high attest be given,
 A harvest of high hopes and noble enterprises."
 And high expectancy, no sign was granted.
 Deep was the awe, the rapture high,
 So high, a rival purpose to fulfil;
 The frolic Loves, who, from yon high rock, see
 Tossing her frantic thyrsus wide and high!
 Of April, smiling high in upper air?
 Of power usurped; with proclamation high,
 Or as a fruitful palm-tree towering high
 To his high charge, and truly serving God,
 And of old honours, too, and passions high:
 Flew high above Atlantic waves, to draw
 High was the trophy hung with pitiless pride;
 Too high, or idle agitations lull!
 High over hill and low down the dell
 To mass or some high festival;
 The spectacle, is mounting high
 Harsh thoughts with her high mood agree—
 Full soon to be uplifted high,
 A Soul, by force of sorrows high,
 The watchmen from their station high
 Who saw the Banner reared on high
 At need, he stood, advancing high
 For, with a high and valiant name,
 Beneath yon cypress spring high,
 High on a point of rugged ground
 On him and on his high endeavour
 I would myself have hung it high,
 —High transport did the Father shed
 Go high, no transport ever higher.
 Which was to team with high communion,
 White as whitest cloud on high
 Dishevelled overthrow, and yet how high
 Uplifting toward high Heaven her fiery brand,
 For instant victory. But Heaven's high will
 Of Ignorance, that ran so rough and high
 From Monks in Ely chanting service high,

High—continued.

Christ died for—cannot forfeit his high claim
 For their high guardon not in vain have panted!
 Pinions of high and higher sweep, and make
 Of victory mounts high, and blood is quaffed
 Pours out his choicest beverage high and higher
 Spreads high conceits to madd'ning Fancy dear,
 She whose high pomp displaced, as story tells,
 Of high with low, celestial with terrene!
 Of the Most High. Again do they invoke
 A guiding ray; or seen—like stars on high,
 Against her ancient virtue. High and Low,
 (As yours above all offices is high)
 As the high service pledges now, now pleads.
 Woman! the Power who left His throne on high,
 From low to high doth dissolution climb,
 And sink from high to low, along a scale
 Give all thou caust; high Heaven rejects the lore
 That, while the sun rode high, was lost beneath their dazzling sheen.
 Who but is pleased to watch the moon on high
 No,—let this Age, high as she may, instal
 His sides, or wreath with mist his forehead high:
 Aod Knights of high renown;
 And high her blushes mounted;
 Whose life combines the best of high and low,
 High will he hang thee up, well pleased to adorn
 Those high endeavours are an inward light
 'Tis, finally, the Man, who lifted high,
 Is ranging high and low;
 Up to the sovereign seat of the Most High;
 Or tax high Heaven with prodigality?
 Less fair is summer riding high
 From high Gibraltar to Siberian plains,
 High as the Sun, that he could take account
 With patient care. What tho' assaults run high,
 Bead, ye Perverse! to judgments from on High,
 This high repute, with bounteous Nature's aid,
 A theme for praise and admiration high.
 Each takes in this high matter, all may move
 On high, a kerchief waving in her hand!
 To our kind Friend high on the sunny hill—
 While, high and low, and all about,
 Aod antique towers nodded their foreheads high,
 How beautiful the Queen of Night, on high
 For Him upon whose high behests
 To the high altar its determined place;
 That symbol of the day-spring from on high,
 A single Act endears to high and low
 Whom such high beauty could not guard
 So high their hearts would beat;
 High as the pitch of their swift plumes
 High Heaven is my defence;
 Great was their bliss, the honour high
 Rugged and high, of Charnwood's forest ground,
 O Alma Redemptoris! high and low:
 Know, that the honour of high God may spread,
 For he of low hearts can make high, of high
 And tho' did she begin this song full high,
 Behold a high injunction suddenly
 And in his hands I saw a high reward
 But not on high, where madness is resented,
 We pay a high and holy debt;
 His spirit, but the recompense was high;
 Otherwise wrought the will of the Most High;
 High instincts before which our mortal Nature
 By pointing to a shooting star on high,
 If peep between the clouds a star on high,
 High lowering from the sullen dark-brown mere,
 Thy towns, like swallows' nests that cleave on high;
 On the high summits Darkness comes and goes,
 More high, to where creation seems to end,
 Can guess the high resolve, the cherish'd pain
 Or summer hamlet, flat and bare, on high
 Think not, suspended from the cliff on high
 Bid from on high his lonely cannon sound,
 With many a fond embrace, while joy runs high,
 Are high rewards; but bound they Nature's claim
 In that bold form and impress high
 Abstruse, nor wanting punctual service high,
 Had in high places built her lodge; though mean
 But with high objects, with enduring things—
 The paper kite high among fleecy clouds
 If high the transport, great the joy I felt
 Extended high above a dusky grove.
 Hast placed me high above my best deserts,
 Alas! such high emotion touched our me.
 To minister to works of high attempt—
 A hundred times when, roving high and low,
 Of high endeavours, daily spreads abroad.
 And their high privilege of lasting life,
 Upon a dromedary, mounted high,
 The eagle soars high in the element,
 With high and spacious rooms, deafened and stunned.
 From high, the sullen water far beneath,
 Before us, while she still was high in heaven;—

High—continued.

Floating in dance, or warbling high in air
 Advertisements, of giant-size, from high
 Of Tivoli; and, high upon that steep,
 Endeared by Custom; and with high disdain,
 And them the silent rocks, which now from high:
 Of a high eastern hill—thus flowed my thoughts
 My Soog! those high emotions which thy voice
 Beat high, and filled the fancy with fair forms,
 Rocked high above their heads; anon, the din
 High on the topmost pinnacle, a sign.
 Show what she was, a high and fearless soul,
 High was my room and lonely, near the roof
 Therefore to serve was high beatitude;
 The town of Arras, whence with promise high
 When high, more high, and lifts us up when fallen.
 How oft high service is performed within.
 Of high respect and gratitude sincere.
 Accomplish—this is our high argument.
 'Twas summer, and the sun had mounted high:
 The high and tender Muses shall accept
 In such access of mind, in such high hour
 Those weeds, and the high spear-grass on that wall,
 A lowly vale, and yet uplifted high
 Rides high; then all the upper air they fill
 And blazing terrace upon terrace, high
 Find entrance;—high or low appeared no trace
 To lift thee high above the misty air
 Or Syria's marble ruins towering high
 Ah! what avails imagination high
 The varied functions and high attributes
 Appeared, of high pretensions—unreproved
 Her thoughts, her images, her high desires,
 Carried so high, that every thought, which looked
 But still a high dependence, a divine
 Are all renounced; high as the thought of man
 Into high objects farther than they may,
 High on the breast of yon dark mountain, dark
 High on that mountain where they long have dwelt
 High in the gloom appeared, too high, methought,
 From high to low, ascent from low to high,
 (Though claiming high distinction upon earth
 Embodied and established these high truths
 O high example, constancy divine!
 High in these mountains, that allured a band
 From his youth up, and high as manhood's noon,
 "With these high comrades he had revelled long,
 Save through a gap high in the hills, an opening
 On those high peaks, the first autumnal snow,
 Not for reproof, but high and warm delight,
 But towering high the roof above, as if Fraternities and orders—heaping high
 Those arts, and high inventions, if unproved
 High peaks, that bound the vale where now we are.
 For high—yet not for low; for proudly graced—
 The high behest, and every heart obey;
 That puzzled high and low,
 Sprung from high Jove, of sage Mnemosyoe
 His light high up among the gloomy rocks,
 To that high spring which bears no human name,
 From high to low, from low to high, yet still
 Within the bound of this high concave; here
 That ranging o'er the high and houseless ground
 And the clear hills, as high as they ascend
 One household under God for high and low,
 High-arched. Though waves, to every breeze, its high-arched roof,
 High-born. The high-born Vaudracour was hrought, by years
 Of old grey stone, and high-born name
 High-born Augusta! Witness, Towers and Groves!
 Of long-past banquets with high-born friends:
 High-climbing. High-climbing rock, low sunless dale,
 Higher. Till higher mounted, strives in vain to cheer
 Which high and higher mounts with silver gleam
 Aod higher far than lies within earth's bounds:

Higher—continued.

Judgments and aims and acts whose higher source
 Far higher, else full surely shalt thou err. . . .
 Or loftier, pitch if higher rose the theme, . . .
 Power hath been given to please for higher ends
 In sorrow, but for higher trust, . . .
 I gazed with growing love, a higher power
 Came hopes still higher, that with outward life
 A higher language, say that now I felt
 By poets in old time, and higher up
 To higher things; more naturally matured,
 Professedly, to others titled higher,
 To achieve its higher triumph. Not unfelt
 Higher and higher, him his office leads Confusion-stricken by a higher power
 Seemed but conversion to a higher creed; . . .
 One victory with another, higher far,—
 Still higher, meo for contemplation framed,
 Yet higher power; had caught from them a tone,
 That higher minds bear with them as their own.
 Unless this love by a still higher love
 Up through an ample vale, with higher hills
 For different lot, or change to higher sphere,
 But by the obstreperous voice of higher still;
 Of higher reason and a purer will,
 "Nor higher place can be assigned to him
 From higher judgment-seats make no appeal
 And so, not searching higher, we may learn
 Among her higher creatures born and trained
 But to a higher mark than song can reach
 By yet a higher privilege once more
 And what to higher powers is justly due,
 No higher name; in whom our country shewed,
 —What though no higher recompense he sought
 Belike no higher destiny awaits
Highlest. To him who bid the highest in the market
 Three rosy-cheeked school-boys, the highest not more
 How changed from him who, born to highest place,
 "High on a mountain's highest ridge, . . .
 From highest heaven let down!
 High as the highest Peak of Furness-fells,
 Of Justice seat to earth from highest Heaven!
 To highest Heaven—the labour of the Soul;
 Then, when o'er highest hills the Deluge passed?
 To aught of highest, holiest, infuence—
 Which is our human nature's highest dower;
 To such community with highest truth—
 Shall raise them highest in their own esteem—
 Their highest promise. If the mariner,
 Is highest reason in a soul sublime;
 Oppression, under which even highest minds
 Gladly the highest promises, and hail,
 For they are Powers; and hence the highest hills
 Descend to earth or dwell in highest heaven!
 May sort with highest objects, then—dread Power!
 By Nature; meo endowed with highest gifts,
 If that be not indeed the highest love!" . . .
 Above the summits of the highest hills,
 To lofty raised; and to the highest, last;
 Shall find apt subjects for her highest art.
 The highest, holiest, raptures of the lyre;
 Whose highest beauty, beautiful as it is,
 Of those who fill thy courts in highest heaven,
 The highest descend to be set forth
 And Fairfield's highest summit on the right
 The highest fountain know on British land.
 In cyphers on Helvellyn's highest ridge
 Up to their highest measure, yea and more.
Highland. On Zütphen's plain, or on that highland dell,
 Of bagpipers oo distant Highlaoad hills,
 Had danced his roud with Highland lasses;
 A sweet and playful Highland girl,
 The Highland girl—it is no other;
 Sweet Highland Girl, a very shower
 Sweet Highland Girl! from thee to part;
 Yon solitary Highland Lass!
 A poor blind Highland Boy.
 A Highland Boy!—why call him so?
 Our Highland Boy oft visited
 And in the lonely Highland dell
 "Sweet HIGHLAND Girl! a very shower
 Still in the Highland Brooch is seen,
 Beneath a massier Highland Brooch.
 Will vanish the last Highlaoad Brooch.
 May render hack the Highlaoad Brooch"
 Cheered by the Highland bagpipe, as they marched Highlanders. The Highlanders, the slaughter spread like flame; . . .
High-minded. And, after their high-minded riot,
 From some high-minded Slave, impelled to spurn
High-perched. Lulling the leisure of that high-perched town,
High-pitched. Enough if notions seemed to be high-pitched,
High-prized. A high-prized plume which female
 Beauty wears
 His Daughter, and that late and high-prized gift,
High-raising. His staff high-raising, in the pride
High-ribbed. High-ribbed vault of stone, or cell,

High-seated. 'Twixt her high-seated residence and his High-souled. For philosophic Sage; or high-souled
 Bard
 For, high-souled Maid, what sorrow would it be Kiugs, warriors, high-souled poets, saint-like sages,
 Silent, but not to high-souled Passion's ear—
 The high-souled virtues which forgetful earth—
 How, in tyrannic times, some high-souled man,
High-sworn. Puts, when the high-sworn Flood runs fierce and wild,
High-titled. High-titled Powers, am I constrained to ask,
High-towering. Blue-breeched, pink-vested, with high-towering plumes,—
 In air high-towering with a boorish pomp,
Highway. Yet all in the broad highway of the world.
 And in the broad highway, I met;
 Along the broad highway he came,
 Not four yards from the broad highway:
 "Make straight a highway for the Lord—repent!"
 And he was seated, by the highway side,
 Of highway side, and with the little birds,
 Even the loose stones that cover the highway,
 Who, with a broad highway, have overbridged
Highways. Highways of dreaming passion, have too loog,
 That, from the meeting-point of two highways
High-wrought. —Or I would hail thee when some high-wrought page
 And in our high-wrought modern narratives
 Had scarcely closed this high-wrought strain of rapture
Hill. See Ant-hill, Eildon-hill, Pendle-hill.
 Was heard, or woodcocks roamed the moonlight
 hill,
 Breathed a pale steam around the glaring hill,
 Of bright obscurity, hill, lawn, and wood;
 Gives one bright glance, and drops behind the hill.
 Midway along the hill with desperate speed;
 Above yon eastern hill, where darkness broods
 Steal down the hill, and spread along the flood.
 To catch the spiritual music of the hill,
 And louder torrents stua the noon-tide bill,
 They cannot mount the hill, by us unseen.
 And maoy a hill did Lucy climb:
 At day-break on a hill they stood
 That plaintive cry! which up the hill
 Far and wide on hill and valley
 And, as we climbed the hill,
 How cheerful, at sunrise, the hill where I stood,
 In which the Babe was carried. To a hill,
 On the hill top. His eyes he scarcely took,
 That echoes far from hill to hill.
 The moon was setting on the hill,
 Away she goes up hill and down,
 With frequent showers of snow. Upon a hill,
 A whirl-blast from behind the hill
 'Tis already like a hill
 From hill to hill in discontent
 And over hill and hollow,
 Of flocks upon the neighbouring hill
 That I, a Bard of hill and dale,
 If you look to vale or hill,
 Vainly glitter hill and plain,
 Once up, once down the hill, one journey, Bahe,
 And up the craggy hill ascending
 And so have gained the top of the hill;
 Black is the sky—and every hill
 Sky, hill, and dale, one dismal room,
 Up against the hill they strain
 But each unmanageable hill
 Upon the side of a distant hill:
 From hill to hill it seems to pass
 The mist and the river, the hill and the shade:
 The stream will not flow, and the hill will not rise,
 On the top of the bare hill;
 Went wandering over dale and hill,
 A beauteous heap, a hill of moss,
 This pond, and heauteous hill of moss,
 And when the whirlwind's on the hill,
 Or when the whirlwind's on the hill,
 Her company to Stephen Hill;
 And what the hill of moss to her?
 Beneath that hill of moss so fair.
 But instantly the hill of moss
 Beneath that hill of moss so fair.
 His nostril touched a sprig beneath a hill,
 And climbing up the hill—(it was at least
 I looked upon the hill both far and near,
 And teads a flock from hill to hill:
 Vanish inverted hill, and shadowy wood,
 And they have panted up the hill
 To hill and vale proclaims aloud,
 An Army now, and now a living hill
 The chaster coverts of a British hill
 He trudged along o'er hill and dale;
 But, while he climbs the woody hill
 And that inspiring Hill, which "did divide
 Our British Hill is nobler far; he shrouds
 Notice or name!—It quivers down the hill,

Hill—continued.

Long as the thrush shall pipe on Grongar Hill !
 Oft as appears a grove, or obvious hill,
 In his first splendour, valley, rock, or hill;
 For I have heard the quire of Richmond hill.
 'Tis said that to the brow of yon fair hill
 The World, sole-standing high on the bare hill—
 And, like the Spire that from your classic Hill
 Slowly surmounting some invidious hill,
 Then, when some rock or hill is overpast,
 Ye now are panting up life's hill,
 And, as I mounted up the hill,
 And, far and near, through vale and hill,
 Doth yet frequent the hill of storms,
 Clarkson ! it was an obstinate hill to climb :
 Of Reason, seated on her sovereign hill ;
 Midway on some high hill, while father Time
 An intermingled pomp of vale and hill,
 Turn from the fortified and threatening hill,
 Around a wild and woody hill
 When first mine eyes beheld that famous Hill
 Wilt ramble over hill and dale,
 Mute as the snow upon the hill,
 Unquestionably kenned, that cone-shaped hill
 Transported over that cloud-wooding hill,
 Is this, ye Gods, the Capitolian Hill ?
 His way to Rome ? Ah, no,—round hill and plain
 From vale to hill, from hill to vale led on,
 Till Night, descending upon hill and vale,
 Did wait him to Sion, the glorified hill,
 And, as the Moon, o'er some dark hill ascendant,
 The main flood roughened into hill and valley.
 Through hill and valley every breeze
 And one small hamlet, under a green hill
 O'er hill and valley to this dim retreat !
 That swept from hill to hill, from flood to flood :
 Sate musing ; on that hill the Bard would rove,
 High over hill and low down the dell
 Their hearts are with you : hill and dale
 He went, and traversed plain and hill ;
 That hill and vale with sadness bear.
 That Hill, whose flowery platform seems to rise
 Of hallelujahs tost from hill to hill—
 " God willeth it," from hill to hill rebounds,
 The Young-ones gathered in from hill and dale,
 That in the morning whitened hill and plain
 That vale or hill prolongs or multiplies !
 Divine ! thou Lincoln, on thy sovereign hill !
 The leaves that rustled on thils oak-crowned hill,
 From hill or valley, could not move
 And hill and valley rang with glee
 Of hill and valley, he has viewed ;
 The lark above the hill,
 At the green base of many an inland hill,
 Why bears it then the name of " Weeping Hill " ?
 To our kind Friend high on the sunny hill—

Hill—continued.

Through the valley, up the hill ;
 At the green base of many an inland hill,
 They shot, and over that cloud-loving hill,
 So saying, homeward, down the hill the boy
 Hillary. And they are led by ooble Hillary.
 Hillock. The hillock like an infant's grave,
 That one sequestered hillock green,
 Stranger ! this hillock of mis-shapen stones
 Whom sight of this green hillock to my mind
 The sheltering hillock is the Mother's grave,
 And mark that daisied hillock, three spans long !
 Hillocks. By turning o'er these hillocks one by one,
 Level with earth, among the hillocks green :
 Of children's industry, in hillocks piled ;
 The monumental hillocks, and the pomp
 To place those hillocks in that lonely guise.
 Hill's. Then downwards from the steep hill's edge
 And over many a wide hill's craggy crown,
 On a hill's northern side she dwelt,
 We clomb a green hill's side ; and, as we clomb,
 Hills. On the dear hills where first he rose.
 When up the hills, as now, retired the light,
 The weary hills, impervious, blackening near ;
 The hills, while gleams below the azure tide ;
 As up the opposing hills they slowly creep
 Slow-travelling down the western hills, to enfold
 Say, who, by thinking on Canadian hills,
 Of Deep that calls to Deep across the hills,
 Shouts from the echoing hills with savage joy.
 Far stretched beneath the many-tinted hills,
 And as his native hills encircle ground
 The sky-roofed temple of the eternal hills ;
 That hut which on the hills so oft employs
 Ye flattering eastern lights, once more the hills
 illumine !
 Red on the hills her beacon's far-seen blaze ;
 1 told of hills, and far-off tows
 Among the hills the echoes play
 " For here are woods, hills smooth and warm :
 Many flocks were on the hills, but thou wert owned
 by none,
 On verdant hills—with dwellings among trees,
 Were brother-shepherds on their native hills.
 And everlasting hills themselves were changed.
 (It is the loneliest place of all these hills)
 And hills on which we all of us were born,
 Like roe-bucks they went bounding o'er the hills ;
 Upon the Quantock hills they fed ;
 The girls on the hills made a holiday show.
 For their own sakes, but for the fields and hills
 Of youthful Poets, who among these hills
 Of bagpipers on distant Highland hills.
 The common air ; hills, which with vigorous step
 Those fields, those hills—what could they less ? had laid
 But we were playmates, Luke : among these hills,
 When wandering among lakes and hills I note,
 Who look upon the hills with tenderness,
 That there was a loud uproar in the hills.
 There is an Eminence,—of these our hills
 And taken thy first leave of those green hills
 Among the woods and hills.
 Sacred to flowerets of the hills,
 On the heads of towering hills,
 Hills quaked, the rivers backward ran ;
 —Yes, without me, up hills so high
 Among these hills, from first to last,
 Among this multitude of hills,
 Old as the hills that feed it from afar,
 That floats on high o'er vales and hills,
 The silver moon with all her vales, and hills of mightiest fame,
 To set the hills on fire.
 I looked upon those hills and plains,
 I, too, have passed her on the hills.
 The sleep that is among the lonely hills.
 I came among these hills ; when like a roe
 Mourn, hills and groves of Attica ! and mourn
 Of these fraternal hills :
 For the power of hills is on thee,
 Where Treas is nursed, far southward ! Cambrian hills
 O lovely Wanderer of the trackless hills !
 Poured through the echoing hills around,
 On lofty Cheviot Hills :
 With green hills fenced, with ocean's murmur
 lulled ;
 Of silent hills, and more than silent sky.
 To the lone shepherd on the hills disclose
 Huge Cruchan, (a thing that meaner hills
 That glides the dark hills under ?
 293 Yarrow Unt. 26
 That, under hills which rise like towers,
 Far higher hills than these of ours !
 Through long, long windings of the hills,
 With which the very hills rejoice :
 With their perennial hills ;—but Crime,
 Nor have these eyes by greener hills
 For not a feature of those hills

Hills—continued.

The sober Hills thus deck their brows . . . 302 Yarrow V. 71
 Hills, torrents, woods, emboded to bemock
 Sleep, Warriors, sleep! among your hills repose!
 And of the ancient hills!
 Of visual sovereignty—hills multitudinous,
 (Not Apennine can boast of fairer), hills
 Soon witnessed, and the city of seven hills,
 Heaved less for thy bright plains and hills bestroven
 If with old love of you, dear Hills! I share
 That took thee from thy native hills;
 Then, when o'er highest hills the Deluge passed?
 Poured down the hills, a choral multitude!
 And blue-topped hills, behold him from afar;
 And streams unknown, hills yet unseen,
 Say, ye far-travelled clouds, far-seeing hills—
 To be looked down upon by ancient hills,
 That down the steep hills force their way,
 Over the hills this sabbath day;
 A voice to which the hills replied!
 Concealed among the forked hills—
 And all the hills were glad to bear
 And some indignant Hills old names preserve,
 Nor long (that crossed) would Grecian hills detain
 How did the cliffs and echoing hills rejoice
 Ye Dales and Hills! to you alone
 A day among the hills.
 Upon the exalted hills. He made report
 Surrounded by those wild unpeopled hills,
 And free for life, these hills to climb,
 Ye vales and hills whose beauty hither drew
 And O, ye Fountains, Meadows, Hills, and Groves,
 Or the first woodcocks roam'd the moonlight hills.
 When up the hills, as now, retreats the light,
 And roars between the hills the torrent gale,
 It's drowsy tinklings on th' attentive hills;
 Steal down the hills, and spread along the flood.
 Who plods o'er hills and vales his road forlorn.
 As up th' opposing hills, with tortoise foot, they creep.
 Slow-travelling down the western hills, to fold
 Her quiet streams, and hills of dowry green,
 The hut which from the hills his eyes employs
 Fair smiling lights the purpled hills illumine!
 Red on his hills his beacon's comet blaze;
 Rouse Hell's own aid, and wrap thy hills in fire.
 Embrace me then, ye Hills, and close me in,
 The multitude of little rocky hills,
 Now do those sternly-featured hills
 That Nature breathes among the hills and groves.
 I heard among the solitary hills
 Beneath the gloomy hills homeward I went
 Tinkled like iron; while far distant hills
 And on the earth! Ye Visions of the hills!
 On caves and trees, upon the woods and hills,
 Gave out to meadow-grounds and hills a loud
 And to the shepherd's hut on distant hills
 Along the sides of the steep hills, or when
 His beauty on the morning hills, had seen
 Midway between the hills, as if she knew
 That dwell among the hills where I was born.
 Migration strange for a stripling of the hills,
 That having 'mid my native hills given loose
 Came and returned me to my native hills.
 Our inmate, a rough terrier of the hills;
 The shepherd roam the hills. With new delight,
 To move along the edges of the hills,
 Of trees and hills and water, bolt upright
 Life's morning radiance hath not left the hills,
 Might waste their breath in chiding. Under hills—
 The vine-clad hills and slopes of Burgundy,
 The voiceless worm on the unfrequented hills,
 And wooed the artless daughter of the hills,
 Since, travelling southward from our pastoral hills,
 Perennial of the ancient hills; nor less
 Angling I went, or trod the trackless hills
 Birds, running streams, and hills so beautiful
 Bare hills and valleys, full of caverns, rocks,
 Of the green hills; ye breezes and soft airs,
 That marched and countermarched about the hills
 That flowers, and trees, and even the silent hills,
 From the retirement of my native hills,
 I mounted, and we journeyed towards the hills:
 A naked pool that lay beneath the hills,
 A hundred hills their dusky backs upheaved
 Old songs, the product of his native hills;
 Among the hills of Athol he was born;
 In summer, tended cattle on the hills;
 In solitude returning, saw the hills
 While at the stall he read. Among the hills
 Foreboding evil. From his native hills
 They call upon the hills and streams to mourn,
 We started—and he led me toward the hills,
 Up through an ample vale, with higher hills
 Among these rugged hills; where now he dwells,
 Was fallen, the rain abated, but the hills
 For some rare floweret of the hills, or plant
 Of these wild hills. For, lo! the dread Bastille,
 And the vast hills, in fluctuation fixed
 Empurpled hills, conspicuously renewing
 Or grassy bottom, all, with little hills—

Hills—continued.

The Solitary lifted toward the hills . . . 808 Excursion 4. 505
 "Compatriot, Friend, remote are Garry's hills,
 Crowing the glorious hills of paradise;
 "The lively Grecian, in a land of hills,
 The Naiad. Sunbeams, upon distant hills
 Among steep hills and woods embosomed, flowed
 Above the summits of the highest hills,
 It is no night-fire of the naked hills,
 In early youth, among my native hills,
 As if, amid these peaceful hills and groves,
 And O, ye swelling hills, and spacious plains!
 "Go to the hills," said one, 'remist a while
 "Yes," said the Priest, "the Genius of our hills—
 Amid the groves, under the shadowy hills,
 Startling the golden hills. A wide-spread elm
 Spary and bright, rough scatterings of the hills.
 Even from Northumbrian hills; yet theirs had been
 Save through a gap high in the hills, an opening
 Throughout the lofty range of these rough hills,
 A golden lustre slept upon the hills;
 Light as a sunbeam glides along the hills
 Above the darkened hills stood boldly forth
 Sky-piercing Hills! must bid farewell to you
 But should these hills be ranged by one whose soul
 To his own hills, the spots where when a lamb
 Of vale below, a height of hills above.
 Take up, the cloud-capped hills repeat, (the Name),
 Warm woods, and sunny hills, and fresh green fields,
 Among the silence of the woods and hills;
 Untainted manners; born among the hills,
 And the clear hills, as high as they ascend
 The multitude of little rocky hills,
 Hill-shadow. Beyond the boundary line of some hill-shadow,
 Hill-side. Before her cottage on the bright hill-side
 Gathered together on the green hill-side,
 Hill-sides. On the hill-sides, a cheerful quiet scene,
 Hill-top. When, from the last hill-top, my sire surveyed,
 The last stone-pillar on a dark hill-top.
 From bleak hill-top, and length of march by night
 Hill-top, and flood, and forest green,
 Though smiling on the last hill-top!
 From some hill-top on sunny afternoons,
 Hill. O'er hilly path, and open Strath,
 Himself. (Partial list.)
 At least, not owing to himself an aim
 He holds with God himself communion high,
 And, blest within himself, he shrinks not from the sound.
 With indignation turned himself away,
 Can still suspect, and still reverse himself,
 Did not the Soldier tell thee that himself,
 Father!—to God himself we cannot give
 He shall reveal himself. Happy are we,
 No law but what each man makes for himself;
 the man who calls himself your father;
 Ay, thought the Vicar, smiling to himself,
 The good man might have communed with himself,
 And, like a naked Indian, slept himself away.
 Because the wretched man himself had slain,
 Perhaps he's turned himself about,
 Brought him, and he to himself would say,
 Our lot is a hard lot; the sun himself
 Bound himself, and then unbound;
 Fears either for himself or freight;
 Can he keep himself still, if he would? oh, not he!
 The weary Sun betook himself to rest;
 Himself he propped, limbs, body, and pale face,
 He hath it to himself—'tis all his own.
 Is Peter of himself afraid?
 Who chose his epitaph?—Himself alone
 Great Pan himself low-whispering through the reeds,
 When he himself was tried in open light.
 Saint George himself this Visitant must be;
 Of God himself from dread pre-eminence—
 From mischief, caused by spells himself had muttered;
 Half to himself, and half to them
 Drops, and the God himself is seen no more.
 Of all, himself a Spirit, in the youth
 Father! to God himself we cannot give
 Utterly in himself devoid of guile;
 Himself his world, and his own God;
 "Now both himself and me he wrongs,
 And in himself possess his own desire;
 Finds comfort in himself and in his cause;
 In his own storms he hides himself from sight.
 But ever to himself he mutters,
 There let the vernal slow-worm sun himself,
 All which he of himself conceived wholly
 Himself above each lower thought uplifting,
 While each into himself descends,
 Shaped by himself with newly-learned art;
 But is not each a memory to himself?
 Whose tale is only of himself; even so,

Hitherward. And hitherward pursued its way ;
 Is wheeling hitherward. Thanks, happy Creature,
 When hitherward we journeyed, side by side,
Hive. How busy all the enormous hive within,
 As from the hive where bees in summer dwell,
 For his hive had so long been replenished with honey,
 And his fingers as busy as bees in a hive. . .
 How busy the enormous hive within, . . .
 From the thronged hive, and settle where they list
Hives. Bees fill their hives ;
 Of bees around their range of sheltered hives . . .
Hoar. Lost in the thickened darkness, glimmers hoar ;
 That glimmer hoar in eve's last light, descried
 —Far different life from what Tradition hoar . . .
 Hoar with the frost-like dews of dawn ;
 From caves of Indian mountains hoar ! . . .
 Want, through neglect of hoar Antiquity, . . .
 Luxuriant wreaths around thy forehead hoar ;
 As they from turf yet hoar with sleepy dew
 No sign of hoar Antiquity's esteem . . .
 Or there to pace, and mark the summits hoar
 The willows weeping trees, that twinkling hoar,
 Lost in the deepen'd darkness, glimmers hoar ;
 Far different life to what tradition hoar
 Bounds calm and clear the chaos still and hoar ;
Hoard. If dairy-produce, from his inner hoard,
 A hoard of grievances unsealed ;
 If dairy produce, from his inner hoard,
 Receives at supper hour her tempting hoard ;
 The moneys he possessed, and hoard up more.
 Of open projects, and his inward hoard
Hoarded. All treasures hoarded by the miser, Time,
 Which sternly hoarded all that could be spared,
Hoards. Hoards may come forth of Trajans,
 Maximus,
 With such vast hoards of hidden carnage near,
 These hoards of truth you can unlock at will :
Hoar-frost. Leaf-scattering winds ; and hoar-frost sprinklings fell
 Of snow and hoar-frost, spreads her fruits and her
 flowers,
 Of melted hoar-frost, every tiny knot . . .
Hoarse. Another voice, in tone as hoarse
 Doth Aira-force, that torrent hoarse,
Hoarser. They paused, and heard a hoarser voice blaspheme,
Hoary. Confirmed by hoary hairs, belief may claim ;
 White with a hoary light she frosts the ground,
 Under a hoary oak's thin canopy,
 Hoary and naked are its walls, and raise
 A hoary pathway traced between the trees,
 Green moss-grown tower, or hoary tent ;
 The hoary peaks of Scotland that give birth
 The hoary mountain-heights were cheered,
 —A slender sound I yet hear Time
 A little hoary line and faintly traced,
 And rocks that spread a hoary gleam,
 And all the hoary cliffs around
 Huge Crifel's hoary top ascends
 Behold a Ruin hoary !
 And sacred home—ah ! why should hoary Age be hold ?
 And the dire flapping of his hoary wing ! . . .
 And eye, methinks, this hoary Pile,
 Shall dissipate the seas and mountains hoary.
 With hoary Winter, and Life touch,
 Thel hoary Father in the Stranger's ear
 Of hoary Time to decorate ; . . .
 And hoary dews are slow to melt. . . .
 I would have planted thee, thou hoary Pile
 His wizard course where hoary Derwent takes
 As touch'd with dawning moonlight's hoary gleams,
 Frosting with hoary light the pearly ground,
 Or moonlight Upland lifts her hoary breast ;
 Ev'n now I sigh at hoary Chartreuse' doom
 The long lake lengthened out its hoary line,
 His hoary crown, since I had seen the surge
 Rested a silent sea of hoary mist.
 Whose hoary diadem of pendent rocks
 Stripped of their leaves and twigs by hoary age,
 With laurel planted upon hoary hairs,
 With undiminished glee, in hoary age. . . .
 Of fire, incensed beneath its hoary brow.
 The hoary grand sire felt himself enriched ;
 And the vault's hoary sides to which they cling,
 And seen the Simplon's forehead hoary,
Hoary-headed. There, by the door a hoary-headed sire
Hob. Fond lovers ! yet not quite hob nob, Hobbed. All loosely put together, hobbled in,
Hobbles. That hobbles up the steep rough road ?

 To hold fit converse with the spiritual world,
 Could hold vain dalliance with the misery . . .

 All that he holds in common with the stars,
 Man holds with week-day man in the hourly walk
 Thou from thy Alpine holds at length art driven,

 And lie cut off from all his heart holds dear ; . . .

Holy—continued.

What shall it be? a mirthful throng? or that holy place and calm
Holy as that which long hath crowned the Chapel of this Tree;
"Holy as that farseen which crowns the sumptuous
Church in Rome
Will holy Church disperse by beams of gospel-light."
Our heavenward guide is holy love,
Or holy festal pomps adorn,
In strains of raptures pure and holy
Salute those strangers as a holy train
She who inspires that strain of joyance holy
Listening to nun's faint throbb of holy fear,
A holy sense pervades his mind;
That man's heart is a holy thing;
That in thy holy footsteps I may tread;
The holy time is quiet as a Nun
To holy musing, it may enter here.
Where holy ground begins, unhallowed ends,
More beautiful, as being a thing more holy:
Hers is a holy Being, freed from Sin.
A softness still and holy;
There came a Tyrant, and with holy gloe
Fervid, yet conversant with holy fear,
Commemoration that unites
The Holy One will hear!
A holy Structure to the Almighty's praise.
So far from the holy enclosure was cast,
A holy sadness shared.
They, too, who send so far a holy gleam
Where, in her holy chapel, dwells
The beautiful, the brave, the holy, and the just!
Oft for a holy warning may it serve,
Of holy Angels round her hovered:
Truth's holy lamp, pure source of bright effect,
The holy and the tender.
Emboldened by thy guidance, holy Star,
Holy as princely, who that looks on thee . . .
Nor wants the holy Abbot's gliding Shade
In priestly vest, with holy offerings charged,
Trooping to that summons holy.
Recites the holy liturgy,
Ye living, tend your holy cares;
But say, among these holy places,
Is spotless, and holy, and gentle, and bright;
He glanced a look of holy pride,
Yea, trusting in God's holy aid,
For holy Church, and the People's right!"
For the old and holy Church we mourn,
While she the holy work pursued."
When the Prior of Durham with holy hand
In holy ground a grave would make;
And psalms they sing—a holy sound
To the subjection of a holy,
With a soft spring-day of holy,
May on these holy bells be seen,
Who, having filled a holy place,
Of a Holy River, on whose banks are found
Did holy Paul a while in Britain dwell,
Slackens his course—to mark those holy piles
Their holy rites with vocal gratitude:
Than they appear to holy Gregory;
Ye holy Men, so earnest in your care,
A gentler life spreads round the holy spires;
Form spirit and character from holy writ,
The freight of holy feeling which we meet,
Holy and heavenly Spirits as they are,
And so they labour, deeming Holy Writ
Their suppliant hands; but holy is the feast
Had not thy holy Church her champion bred,
Under the holy fear of God turns pale;
Once ye were holy, ye are holy still;
May garlands, then let the holy altar stand
Strains suitable to both.—Such holy rite,
Tempestuous winds her holy errand crossed:
If such be Nature's holy plan
Lie open; and the book of Holy Writ,
This, this is holy;—while I hear
Alternate; carrying holy thoughts and prayers
Affections pure and holy in their source
From holy offerings at noontide.
A holy name—the Bird of Heaven!
Betrayed by mockery of holy fear.
Of holy faith and Christian hope . . .
As when it guarded holy Cuthbert's cell.
The Holy Virgin gives to me
He loved, he hoped,—a holy flame
And things of holy use unhallowed lie;
Those holy Men both died in the same hour.
And, when they holy water on him cast,
"This Abbot, for he was a holy man,
In virtue of the holy Trinity
"Thou in thy dying sing this holy lay,"
"This holy Monk, this Abbot—him mean I,
Of Love, and of his holy services;
Holy, and ever dutiful—beloved
We pay a high and holy debt;
Mourn rather for that Holy Spirit
His children's children join'd the holy sound,

Holy—continued.

To be performed, and paid all holy fees.
Their badge, attests the holy fight they wage.
Waged in Freedom's holy cause,
Such hope was mine, for holy services.
A holy scene!—Along the smooth green turf
Oft in these moments such a holy calm
Bear witness Truth, endowed with holy powers
In meditations holy and sublime,
With zeal expanding in Truth's holy light,
And holy passion overcame me first,
That I have dared to tread this holy ground,
Our hearts—! here the words of Holy Writ
In love and holy passion, shall find these
An infidel contempt of holy writ
This scarcely spoken, and those holy strains
Their holy Gauges from a skyey fount,
The priest announces from his holy seat:
To the dishonour of his holy name.
Which reason promises, and holy writ
On the first motion of a holy thought;
A holy tenderness pervade his frame.
Or rather, as we stand on holy earth,
Administration of the holy rite . . .
The faith partaking of those holy times,
What in those holy structures ye possess
Before me stood that day; on holy ground
The visible quiet of this holy ground,
More holy in the sight of God or Man;
For holy Nature might not thus be crossed,
All that her holy customs recommend,
Science severe, or word of holy Writ
Holy and blest? and where the winning grace
The Priest in holy transport thus exclaimed:
As it is written in thy holy book,
Of holy freedom, by redeeming love
They who are dwellers in this holy place
And hangs her garland on the Holy Rood.
Let not "Willy's" holy shade . . .

Holy-thistle. A Holy-thistle here we meet
Homage. Act of soul-devoted homage,
And what pure homage then did wait . . .
But if such homage thou disdain
Its homage offered up in purity.
To pay thee homage; and with these are joined,
Due homage; nor shall fruitlessly have striven,
Instinctive homage pay;
A homage frankly offered up, like that
Upon your knees, and daily homage pay
Homager My Song, a fearless homager, would attend
Home. See Cottage-home, Palace-home.
Yon isle conceals their home, their hut-like bower;
Who at the call of summer quits his home,
By silent cottage-doors, the peasant's home
His home approaching, but in such a mood
Glimmered our dear-loved home, alas! no longer ours!
And in a quiet home once more my father slept.
The silent sea. From the sweet thoughts of home
Forgone the home delight of constant truth,
Near his own home!—! but he was mild and good;
To take thee to her home—and for myself,
But that was a vain hope. You have struck home,
I come home, and this is my comfort!
The home and sheltered bed,
Let him seek his own home wherever it be;
Our quiet home all full in view,
Our pleasant home when spring began,
"He took thee in his arms, and in pity brought thee
home . . .
From home and company remote and every playful joy . . .
To his paternal home he is returned.
When Leonard had approached his home, his heart
Nor emblem of our hopes; the dead man's home
At home, so staggering through the slippery fords,
That Leonard Ewham's was come home again,
Which at that time was James's home, there learned
Whence all the fixed delights of house and home,
Thus often would he leave our peaceful home,
They throve, and we at home did thrive:
And oft was moved to flee from home,
For sake of a young Child whose home was there.
And I have left a babe at home:
And, when once more my home I see,
Come home again, nor stop at all,—
Come home again, whate'er befall,
And in his pocket bring it home.
For, while they all were travelling home,
The Son and Father were come home, even then,
Yon minarets, would gladly leave for their worst
home."
Brisk Robin seeks a kindlier home:
—Soon did the spot become my other home,
Of nature and of love had made their home
In an unhappy home.
This spot is my paternal home,
Joys to spy thee near her home;

 In honour of that Hero brave!
 And honour which they do not understand.
 Say, what is Honour?—'Tis the finest sense
 Honour is hopeful elevation,—whence
 Honour that knows the path and will not swerve;
 For its own honour, on man's suffering heart.
 Clear-sighted Honour, and his staid Compers,
 Honour to word-preserving Arts, and hail
 In honour of each household name,
 Such looks of love and honour
 From honour misconceived, or fancied wrong,
 All ancient honour in the realm.
 Yet fetched from Paradise that honour came,
 Of ancient honour; whence that goodly state

Hope—continued.

Till not a wreck of help or hope remained,
 If vital hope be wanting to restore,
 Of virtuous hope, of liberty, and right,
 With deeds of hope and everlasting praise:—
 With new-born hope, Unbounded is the might
 What hope, what joy can sunshine bring to thee,
 And newly-kindled hope; but they are fled—
 Of his pure song, which did not shrink from hope
 From hope, the paramount duty that Heaven lays,
 The region that in hope was ploughed . . .
 Her hope of lasting glory for the whole.
 Can hope the general eye thereon would gaze,
 All our hope is placed in Thee;
 And pine, of human hope bereft,
 May hope to be forgiven.
 Heaven prosper thee, be hope thy guide!
 Hope be thy guide, adventurous Boy;
 Hope be thy guide, adventurous Boy;
 While Hope and Love around thee played,
 When youth had flown did hope still bless
 With a hope (and no more) for a season to come,
 Of England—who in hope her coast had won,
 "The Wizard of the North," with anxious hope
 To this bright land, Hope was for him no friend,
 Of earthly hope put on with trembling hand;
 Hope for the few, who, at the world's undoing,
 In faith and hope, and dutiful obedience,
 To the sad soul give hope of pardon free.
 With such fond hope? her very speech is dead;
 Of tortured hope and purpose shaken!
 From hope too distant, not to dread another.
 Of love emboldened, hope with dread entwining,
 Peculiar ground for hope to build upon.
 When hope presented some far-distant good,
Through love, through hope, and faith's transcendent dower.
 For hope and calm enjoyment;
 The pious Lady built with hope sublime.
 May pass in hope, and, though from mortal bonds
 Hope nothing, if I thus may speak
 Hope nothing, I repeat; for we
 A mutual hope, a common mind;
 On you we look, with dearest hope;
 And hope is awakened by the sight,
 This hope of all posterity.
 While ground was left for hope; unblamed
 Too free to one rejected moment's hope?
 "If hope be a rejected stay."
 With hope upon the Will divine."
 "Hope," said the old Man, "must abide Receive the faith, and in the hope abide.
 A waste of hope?—From this sad source have sprung . . .
 Hope guides the young; but when the old must pass
 Ere hope declines—their union is beset
 Source of their liveliest hope, and tenderest prayer!—
 The Romanist exults; fresh hope he draws
 On hope that conscious innocence supplied,
 And while he marches on with steadfast hope,
 Yes, if the intensities of hope and fear
 Trusting in hope that Others may advance
 His Spirit Angels greet; and ours be hope
 Its natural echo; but hope comes reborn
 A crown for Hope—I dread the boasted lights
 Good, which they dared not hope for, we have seen;
 But long as god-like wish, or hope divine,
 Than thy revival yields, for glad some hope!
 So may I hope, if truly I repent
 To thy first hope, and this good work pursue,
 The strong were merciless, without hope the weak;
 Hope of the dawn and solace of the night,
 In hope at length a competence to gain;
 From hope and promise, self-betrayed;
 By corresponding hope was met,
 Hope smiled when your nativity was cast,
 Her new-born Babe; dire ending of bright hope!
 And what of hope Elysium could allow
 Of hope, and smiles on you with cheer sublime.
 Hope wanes with her, while lustre fills
 A hope for times that are unkind
 To sit without emotion, hope, or aim,
 Her hope is near: no turn she makes;
 Her hope was a further-looking hope,
 Pleased with the harvest hope that runs
 Through heaven-born hope, her end!
 Ample for a winged hope,
 We, meanwhile, our hope will keep;
 To like hope our prayers will cling.
 Honouring the hope of noble ancestry,
 To hope, and makes truth willing to be seen!
 A quickening hope, a freshening glee,
 Of hope that grew by stealth,
 Season of fancy and of hope,
 Stretched forth with trembling hope?—In every realm,
 By us with hope encountered, be upset!—
 Or wan despair—the ghost of false hope fled
 Learn to make Time the father of wise Hope;
 Rest not in hope want's icy chain to thaw

Hope—continued.

With every hope that mutual cares provide;
 Imagination works with bolder hope
 Our hope confirming that the salt-sea tide,
 Such hope did either Parent entertain
 She hath advanced with hope to be descried.
 Saye hope that we, yet bound to Earth, may share
 Far happier they who, fixing hope and aim
 Or never hope to reach a second birth.
 Without an object, hope, or fear,
 And hope that kept with me her plighted troth.
 Nor deem the Poet's hope misplaced,
 Of holy faith and Christian hope;
 And hope, and consolation, fall,
 Has virtue in it, why should hope to me
 And hope and fear mix not in further strife.
 Hope to the hopeless, to the dying, life—
 The heaven of her hope she won,
 How venture then to hope that Time will spare
 Then, quoth she, let me never hope for bliss,
 From hence my hope and solace forth did pass.
 As one that standeth between hope and dread.
 Giving him always hope, that she the morrow
 Sits by her fire, and builds her hope in heaven.
 Reverence the hope whose vital anxiousness
 And I hope that thy grave, wheresoever it be,
 That keeps not faith, nor yet can point a hope
 By genuine virtue he inspired a hope
 Of happiness and hope, a youthful Bride.
 Planted with such fond hope the tree;
 Not without hope we suffer and we mourn.
 And full of hope day followed day
 Labouring for life, in hope and fear,
 Taught that the mutual hope was dust,
 On any earthly hope, however pure!
 Though but a doubting hope, that they might serve
 And feeding daily on the hope of heaven,
 With new-ledged hope still fluttering in his breast . . .
 With Hope Reflexion blends her social rays
 Me, lur'd by hope her sorrows to remove,
 Crad'd by the strength of hope at morn he eyes
 —Meanwhile his wife and child with cruel hope
 Comes on to whisper hope, the vernal breeze,
 While Hope that ceaseless leans on Pleasure's urn
 Those turrets tipp'd by hope with morning gold,
 —Without one hope her written griefs to blot,
 Enlivening Hope display'd her cheerful ray,
 "So shall thy sire, whilst hope his breast inspires,
 Pronounced the name of HOPE:—The conscious
 child . . .
 Jealous that Hope had been preferr'd
 And Hope (what has not Hope believ'd!)
 Deluded Hope for one short hour
 That he may neither know what hope is mine,
 And Hope gay Pilot of the bold desigo,
 Stifle her hope; for, if the State comply,
 Bring with them vernal promises, the hope
 Such hope was mine, for holy services.
 That hope hath been discouraged; welcome light
 Whom I, in perfect confidence, might hope
 A vulgar hope was yours when ye employed
 With triumph and delight, with hope and fear,
 Meanwhile, my hope has been, that I might fetch
 Hard task, vain hope, to analyse the mind,
 My spirit was up, my thoughts were full of hope;
 Wishing to hope without a hope, some fears
 Deep in the conscience, nor of Christian Hope,
 Of health, and hope, and beauty, all at once
 And here was Labour, his own bonds slave; Hope,
 Enthusiastic, to delight and hope.
 A heart that found benignity and hope,
 With livelier hope a region wider far.
 Glory and hope to new-born Liberty!
 To think, to hope, to worship, and to feel,
 With hope it is, hope that can never die,
 Of Gravedona with this hope; but soon
 Which we will now resume with lively hope,
 In no disturbance of excessive hope,
 A freeman, wedded to his life of hope
 With courage, and new hope risen on our toil.
 This was their rest and only hope; therewith
 And self-devotion, and terrestrial hope,
 On rational liberty, and hope in man,
 A hope it is, and a desire; a creed
 And love; for where hope is, there love will be Full speedily resounded, public hope,
 Cheered with this hope, to Paris I returned,
 And want of hope where evidence divine
 Proclaims to him that hope should be most sure;
 In hope, and trained to noble aspirations,
 Whether a hope had e'er been his or not;
 And momentary hope, and worn-out prayer,
 Of promise, nor belying the kind hope,
 O pleasant exercise of hope and joy!
 Of inward consciousness, and hope that laid
 Thus expectation rose again; thus hope,

Hopes—continued.

(Slow-moving ark of all his hopes!) that veiled
 What hopes it sends to Betty's heart!
 Nor cheerful, yet with objects and with hopes,
 That all his hopes were gone. That day at noon
 With many hopes; it should be so—yes—yes—
 Hopes I cherished—let them go!
 And hopes and wishes, from all living things
 Thou leav'st the halcyon free her hopes to build
 By his hopes and with his fears,
 Pure hopes of high intent:
 And mortal hopes defeated and o'erthrown
 Ill-fated Chief! there are whose hopes are built
 In hopes some tidings there to gather:
 Like others, with like temporal hopes to die;
 His shattered hopes and crosses,
 Fed his first hopes? what knowledge could he gain?
 Oh grief that Earth's best hopes rest all with Thee!
 I weigh the hopes and fears of suffering Spain;
 When for weak hopes received; whose mind ensued,
 To her desires, or to her hopes present—
 If on Thy love our Land her hopes shall rest,
 Opposed to hopes that battered upon scorn,
 For faith 'mid ruined hopes, serene?
 Of fainting hopes and backward wills,
 Nay—though the hopes that drew, the fears that drew,
 Of the world's hopes, dare to fulfil; awake,
 A harvest of high hopes and noble enterprises."
 What hopes came with him? what designs were spread
 For these, and hopes and recollections worn
 And there, by fresh hopes beautified,
 With hopes in tenderness concealed,
 Thy heart! what hopes inspired thy genius, skilled,
 Her peace destroyed! her hopes a wilderness!
 With what man hopes from Heaven, yet fears from Earth.
 Of thy fond hopes hereafter walk inclined
 Hopes, fears, in never-ending ebb and flow—
 Our virtuous hopes without relapse advance,
 How fancy sickens by vague hopes beset;
 While he struck his desolate harp without hopes or
 aims,
 And "hopes, perhaps more heavenly bright than
 thine,
 For airy promises and hopes suborned
 My hopes no more must change their name,
 Hopes that within the Father's heart prevail,
 Blithe hopes and happy musings soon took flight,
 The sweet and natural hopes that shall not die,
 Light was his step,—his hopes, more light,
 Hopes what are they?—Beads of morning
 Dust are our hopes;—I, weeping bitterly,
 And hopes as dear as could the heart employ
 Found—for all interests, hopes, and tender cares,
 Or Reason's? No—hopes spun in timid line
 A Nation's hopes lie crushed in Claremont's desolate Hall.
 Came hopes still higher, that with outward life
 Those lofty hopes awhile, for present gifts
 Hang like an interdict upon her hopes.
 To honourable toil. Yet should these hopes
 And certain hopes are with me, that to thee
 This melancholy waste of o'erthrown,
 As in a balance! of excessive o'erthrown,
 Forced labour, and more frequently forced hopes;
 Remembered less; but I had inward hopes
 Twin labourers and heirs of the same hopes;
 Was not puffed up by false unnatural hopes,
 And some remain, hopes for my future life.
 A world of pain, ripened a thousand hopes,
 Had given a charter to irregular hopes.
 For penitential tears and trembling hopes
 For still we had hopes that pointed to the clouds,
 Hopes takes, or Doubt or Fear is forced to wear,
 Were impotent to make my hopes put on
 With all my resolutions, all my hopes,
 And made of that their God, the hopes of men
 A woeful time for them whose hopes survived
 That promised to abstract the hopes of Man
 Could scarcely hold a bridle, with proud hopes
 To no impatient or fallacious hopes,
 And built thereon my hopes of good to come.
 (Which, 'mid all revolution in the hopes
 Filled with vague hopes, he undertook the charge
 Of craggy fountain; what he hopes for wins,
 And airy hopes my children.—From the depths
 Remote from Europe; from her blasted hopes;
 —Man is of dust; ethereal hopes are his,
 And they had hopes that overstepped the Grave.
 To hopes on knowledge and experience built;
 Of our sublime dependencies, and hopes
 Its fair adventures, its enlivening hopes,
 Hopes rashly, in disgust as rash recoils;
 To reason's mandates; and the hopes divine
 Or scantily rewarded; but all hopes,
 To bring, and bear away, delusive hopes,
 By hopes of coming patronage beguiled

Hopes—continued.

Of livelier interest to his hopes and fears,
 Yet, oh! how disproportioned to the hopes
 Of mutability; and airy hopes
 "But, if to such sublime ascent the hopes
 This—if delighted hopes, as heretofore,
 To regulate my hopes. Pleased with the good,
 Hopping. We toiled and struggled, hoping for a day
 Hoping the danger would be past;
 Hoping far less than I could wish to hope,
 The unhappy alien hoping to obtain
 And love 'all hoping and expecting all,
 Hopped. The redbreast near me hopped; nor was I loth
 The birds around me hopped and played,
 Hops. Watching the least small bird that round her hops,
 Horace. To meet the shade of Horace by the side
 What Horace gloried to behold,
 Which Horace needed for his spirit's health;
 Horde. To level with the dust a noble horde,
 Come Spoilers—horde impelling horde,
 A savage horde among the civilised,
 Herds. The arithmetic of babes, must foreign herds,
 Herbs. On Horeh's top, on Sinai, deigned
 Horizon. 'Mid evening hues, along the horizon line,
 'O'er the dark steeps or on the horizon line,
 'O'er the dark steeps, or on the horizon line
 Had almost touched the horizon; casting then
 And, as the horizon of my mind enlarged,
 Low sunk beneath the horizon!—List!—I heard,
 Horizon's. All, all was cheerless to the horizon's bound;
 But now the horizon's rocky parapet
 Star of my Country!—on the horizon's brink
 Strewn with grey rocks, and on the horizon's verge,
 The horizon's utmost boundary; far above
 The horizon's bound, a huge peak, black and huge,
 A whole horizon's circuit, do with power,
 Light birch, aloft upon the horizon's edge,
 Horizontal. The countenance of the horizontal sun,
 Horn. See Hart's-horn, Stag-horn.
 The hound, the horse's tread, and mellow horn;
 Thus Hope, first pouring from her blessed horn;
 If once they blew a horn this side the Tweed,
 That horn again—"Tis some one of our Troop;
 A startling outcry made by hound and horn,
 The horse, and the horn, and the hawk! hawk away!
 Hath blown his bugle horn.
 But thou, how leisurely thou fill'st thy horn
 He neither cracked his whip, nor blew his horn,
 And Images of voice—to hound and horn
 His shining horn tobacco-box;
 The voice, though clamorous as a horn
 Or hear old Triton blow his wreathed horn.
 Must blow to-night his bugle horn. Had I
 In this firm hour Salvation lifts her horn.
 And to desires whose ever-waxing horn
 And hear far-off the mellow horn proclaim
 No man like him the horn could sound,
 To the Horn Sir Eustace pointed
 Horn it was which none could sound,
 Claimed by proof upon the Horn:
 Tried the Horn,—it owned his power;
 "What I speak this Horn shall witness
 Return, and sound the Horn, that we
 No one's ear had heard the Horn.
 A blast was uttered from the Horn,
 Sounded the Horn which they alone could sound.
 Of the silver-rimmed horn whence he dealt his mild ale!
 Drops at his feet, and stills his droning horn.
 And woodland pleasures,—the resounding horn,
 He winds away his never-ending horn;
 Forced from the street-disturbing newsmen's horn,
 Fly to those harbours, driven by hound and horn
 What time the hunter's earliest horn is heard
 With cry of hound and horn; and, from that toil
 Horned. They round his altar bore the horned God,
 May haunt this horned bay;
 And said: I wis, when thou art horn'd anew, Horns. Let us away! Away! Hark! how the horns
 The pointed horns of my canoe;
 Into two ample horns his forehead wide,"
 In his mind's eye thy crescent horns ascend,
 Thy horns were old as now upon that morrow,
 For when thy horns begin once more to spring,
 Are sister horns that constitute her strength.
 And, sometimes, intermixed with stirring horns
 Shaggy and hold, and wreathed horns superb,
 Horoscope. Taught to mistrust her flattering horoscope
 Horrible. Of the mind's phantoms, horrible as vain.
 Both soul and body—"Tis too horrible;
 The hard dry see-saw of his horrible bray!
 Beholds the horrible catastrophe
 Lost wretch, a horrible device enthroned.
 Could represent the countenance horrible

Horrid. Who has been guilty of some horrid crime.
With all the chambers in its horrid towers, . . .

Horror. Cold stony horror all her senses bound . . .
With horror in this world! am unto thee . . .
And horror breathing from the silent ground! . . .
To vacancy, and horror strong: . . .
An awe and supernatural horror breeds; . . .
Take from the horror due to a foul deed, . . .
Great joy by horror tam'd dilates his heart, . . .
By horror of their impious rites, preserved; . . .

Horror-led. Where Horror-led his sea of ice assails, Horror-strikling. Of monstrous crime!—that horror-striking blade, . . .

Horse. See Mountain-horse, Sea-horse, War-horse.
The horse alone, seen dimly as I pass,
Starts, like a horse, beside the glaring road—
While his horse pawed the floor with furious heat;
Struck, and still struck again, the troubled horse:
A cart and horse beside the rivulet stood;
We kill a worn-out horse, and who but women
With quickening pace my horse drew night
My horse moved on; hoof after hoof
The horse, and the horn, and the hark! hark away!
But then he is a horse that thinks!
There's neither horse nor man abroad,
Johnny perhaps his horse forsook,
There's neither Johnny nor his Horse
The foot of horse, the voice of man;
What Johnny and his Horse are doing!
Sits upright on a feeding horse?
Unto his horse—there feeding free,
She almost has o'turned the Horse,
That was its wings, its chariot, and its horse,
No, not a horse of all the eight,
Last and foremost, every horse
"Bring forth another horse!" he cried aloud.
"Another horse!"—That shout the vassal heard
The horse and horseman are a happy pair;
But horse and man are vanished, one and all;
And, pulling now the rein my horse to stop,
"There's neither dog nor heifer, horse nor sheep,
A proud one doct as a managed horse;
There's something in a dying horse,
Ask him to lend his horse to-night,
Arrived a neighbour with his horse;
Unharnessed, naked, troops of Moorish horse,
Horse charging horse, 'mid these retired domains;
The young horse must forsake his manger,
And horse and harness followed—see
Ten times their number, man and horse;
The troop of horse have gained the height
Could leave both man and horse behind;
And the tongs and the poker, instead of that horse
Skilful and bold, the horse and burthened sled . . .

But still, when he has given his horse the rein,
Starts like a horse beside the flashing road;
On his pale horse shall fell Consumption go,
And from my Horse I leapt; great joy had I.
Proud and exulting like an untired horse
And the horse under him—in gelded pomp
The Horse of knowledge, and the learned Pig,
The horse is taught his manage, and no star
Of vehicles and travellers, horse and foot,
I led my horse, and, stumbling on, at length
A liking for the small grey horse that bears
As Tom, but when he helped her to her horse

Horseback. And why on horseback have you set
Horsed. Mailed and horsed, with lance and sword,
All horsed and harnessed with him to ride,— Horseman. I hope Idonea is well housed. That horseman, . . .
The horse and horseman are a happy pair;
The sauntering Horseman throws not with a slack
Some Horseman who was passing by,
And when a stranger horseman came, the latch
Horseman-ghost. All silent as a horseman-ghost,
Horsemanship. And all his skill in horsemanship;
Of senseless horsemanship, or on the breast
Horsemen. Horsemen and Foot of each degree,
Of horsemen at an eager pace!
Proudly the Horsemen hove away
Of horsemen shadows winding to and fro;
Horsemen-shadows. Of horsemen-shadows moving to and fro;
Horsemen-travellers. The horsemen-travellers ride.
Horse's. The hound, the horse's tread, and mellow
horn;
His face unto his horse's tail,
Horses. When horses in the suburb intake stood,
He stopped his horses at the word,
The horses scampered through the rain;
The Horses have worked with right good-will,
Here am I—with my horses yet!
The horses are dismayed, nor know
The horses cautiously pursue
Summons his horses to a stand,
Gave the word—the horses heard
Right gladly had the horses stirred,
The horses made a quiet stand;
But the horses stretch and pull . . .

With trampling horses and refulgent cars— . . .
Of pompous horses; whom vain titles please; . . .

Horse-track. The foot-path faintly marked, the horse-track wild,
Hosannas. Hosannas pealing down the long-drawn aisle,
When each pale brow to dread hosannas bowed
Hose. In splendid garb, with hose of silk, and hair
Hospitable. And under every hospitable tree
Nurtured by hospitable hands: . . .
And, in one hospitable cleft, . . .
A genial hearth, a hospitable board,
Nor do they need, our hospitable care,
And whiter is the hospitable bed.
To cheer the wand'ring wretch with hospitable
light.
Is hospitable dealing, grant my prayer!
He went about his hospitable task.
A hospitable chink, and stood upright,
Her Helpmate following. Hospitable fare,
Theirs was a hospitable board, and theirs
And pure good-will, and hospitable cheer;
Hospitably. And hospitably did they give us hail,
Hospital. "Borne to a hospital, I lay with brain
Humbly in a religious hospital;
Hospitalities. Junonian hospitalities prepare Hospitality. Lord of thy house and hospitality;
The hospitality—the aims (alas!
Upon a lordly dish; frank hospitality . . .

Of hospitality and peaceful rest.
Hospitals. Our hospitals, too, . . .

Host. Host of his welcome inn, the noon-tide bower,
The mine's dire earthquake, and the pallid host,
Good Host, such tendance as you would expect . . .
Sir Host! by all the love you bear to courtesy,
Will give me quiet lodging. You have a boy, good
Host,
And I gave money to the host, . . .
Unless our Landlord be your host to-night, . . .
For it was painted by the Host; . . .
A host, of golden daffodils; . . .
Army of Clouds! ye winged Host in troops
Against an equal host that wore the plaid,
But half their host is buried:—rock on rock
That host, when from the regions of the Pole . . .

That host, as huge and strong as e'er defied . . .

That Host, which rendered all your bounties vain!
Exalt his still small voice;—to quell that Host
And there alights 'mid that aerial host
Relinquished half his empire to the host
"They mustered their host at Wetherby,
Can such a mighty host be raised
While through the Host, from man to man,
Of mitred Thurston—what a Host . . .
Back through the melancholy Host . . .
The Host that followed Urian as he strode
The unarmed Host who by their prayers would turn
So huge a host!—to tear from the Unbeliever
And, while the Host is raised, its elevation
Meek eve shuts up the whole usurping host
To cheer the remnant of his host
Casting weak words amid a host of thoughts
To the end that he the Grecian host might see;
Among the leaders of the Grecian host
Was soon defrauded, and the handed host
There, darkness makes ahode, and all the host
Of those emancipated, a blithe host . . .
The King had fallen, and that invading host—
With roar of cannon by a furious host,
The host of insects gathering round my face,
Which was no sooner entered than our Host
A feast before us, and a courteous Host
"Those lusty twins" exclaimed our host, "if here
Now let us forth into the sun!"—Our Host
And cloudless sky,—Anon exclaimed our Host,
Here did our pensive Host put forth his hand
A morning salutation with my Host,
From my good Host, that being crazed in brain
Necessity, the stationary host
To breathe in solitude, above the host . . .
And full assemblage of a barbarous host; . . .
Or is the painted staffs [? staffs] avenging host . . .

Hostel. Hath need of rest; the sight of Hut or Hostel
Follow me to the Hostel. Marmaduke, . . .
Hostess. Kind Hostess! Handmaid also of the feast,

Hostile. The lordly eagle-race through hostile search
 A weight of hostile corpses ; drenched with gore
 The hostile purpose of wide-wasting Time—
 Upon that hostile castle made ;
 For the heart's sake, ere ship with hostile ship
 Age after age, the hostile elements,
 Hence, ere some hostile God can intervene,
 Dishanded—or in hostile ranks appeared ;
 Which hostile spirits silently allow ;
 With hostile din, and combat in sight
 Of hostile forces ; and she called—with voice
 With hostile purposes the blessed Isle
Hostility. For one hostility, in friendly league,
 Hostility—how dreadful when it comes Hosts. Tremendous God of battles, Lord of Hosts !
Hot. See Red-hot.
 "If the sun be shining hot, do but stretch thy woollen chain,
 Shine hot, or wind blows troublesome and strong ;
 Imprisoned by hot sunshine lie . . .
 Is close and hot ;—and now and then
 For Fancy hath her fits both hot and cold,
 Hot sunbeams fill the steaming vale ; but hark,
 Both hot and cold, and heart-aches every day,—
 The mountains, glowing hot, like coals of fire.
 Her Bible on hot Sunday afternoons,
 On the hot stones, and in the glaring sun . . .
 Too hot to tread upon. Oft said I then,
 Through hot and dusty ways, or pelting storm,
Hotel. Of a large mansion or hotel, a lodge Hound. The hound, the horse's tread, and mellow
 horn ;
 Or yell, in the deep woods, of lonely hound . . .
 A startling outcry made by hound and horn . . .
 And Images of voice—to hound and horn . . .
 The hawk forget his perch ; the hound . . .
 To each new Master, like a steer or hound,
 Then, keen and eager, as a fine-nosed hound
 Fly to those harbours, driven by hound and horn
 With cry of hound and horn ; and, from that toil
 In answering to itself ; or like a hound
Hounds. And Skiddaw is glad with the cry of the hounds."
 For overhead are sweeping GABRIEL'S HOUNDS
 For when the chiming hounds are out,
Hour. See Death-hour, Half-hour.
 If in that hour a single tie . . .
 He knows but from its shade the present hour . . .
 And eve's mild hour invites my steps abroad . . .
 In the roofed bridge ; the bridge, in that dread hour,
 Swola with incessant rains from hour to hour
 And as a swallow, at the hour of rest,
 Nearer and nearer comes the trying hour !
 Fixing his downcast eye, he many an hour,
 Who, in the silent hour of inward thought,
 A Sailor he, who many a wretched hour
 "It was indeed a miserable hour
 The very ocean hath its hour of rest.
 His hand had wrought ; and when, in the hour of
 death,
 The curse interred, not one hour he remained
 Who might have found a nothing-doing hour
 We will not waste an hour in such a cause . . .
 And need repose. Could you but wait an hour ?
 She paces out the hour 'twixt twelve and one—
 Another sits 't' th' sun, and by the hour
 Pressing upon thy heart, and this the hour
 Her, who hath saved me, to this hour, from harm,
 Bethink you of the hour when on your shoulder
 And from that hour the miserable man
 have kept me abroad to-night till this hour ?
 you waited the hour of his release ?
 he could not have survived an hour . . .
 Oh Sir, I would not see that hour again
 In his departing hour . . .
 And gladdened all things ; but, as chanced, within that very hour,
 By giving him, for both our sakes, an hour of holiday
 While half an hour went by, the Priest had sent
 Following his fancies by the hour, to bring
 Or tempt them to an hour of sabbath breach . . .
 And, but for that same uncle, to this hour
 And thoughts which had been his an hour before,
 And bloom unnoticed even to this late hour ?
 Look at the common grass from hour to hour :
 Not even an hour !
 Mix with the day, and cross the hour of rest ;
 One little hour a child to me !
 And you may see his hour is come . . .
 Walks to and fro—watchings at every hour ;
 And Betty, half an hour ago,
 Sometimes when he could find a leisure hour
 Much she rejoiced, trusting that from that hour
 Of me and of the storm. Full many an hour
 And took no note of the hour while thence they gazed,
 Will perish in one hour . . .
 Ere thus I have lain crouched an hour,
 Night has brought the welcome hour,

Hour—continued.

Slain here in a disastrous hour !
 We've had in half an hour or less
 As if the morning's pleasant hour
 In that delicious hour of balm,
 That long has leaned forward, leans hour after hour !—
 Said I, "not half an hour ago . . .
 They met me in a gentle hour,
 And now, ascending, after one dark hour . . .
 Weak as a lamb the hour that it is yeared ;
 "How glad is Skipton at this hour—
 They both are happy at this hour,
 Happy day, and mighty hour,
 To look on nature, not as in the hour . . .
 And beauty of his happier hour . . .
 Not seldom may the hour return
 The noon-tide hour : though truly some there are
 The hour that in a distant year
 Fresh as if Evening brought their natal hour,
 That, answering to thy touch, will sound the hour ;
 At the still hour to Mercy dear,
 Loved haunt of many a summer hour,
 In this serene and solemn hour,
 Will murmur by the hour in fangloze bells :
 Put on fresh raiment—till that hour unworn :
 With beauty, which is varying every hour ;
 Even for the least division of an hour,
 The wished-for point was reached—but at an hour
 Hail, Twilight, sovereign of one peaceful hour !
 Of the propitious hour, thou may'st perceive
 To saints accorded in their mortal hour . . .
 At God's appointed hour to them who tread
 Thanks to the place, blessings upon the hour ;
 The social hour—of tenfold care
 Roars in thy hearing ; but thy hour of rest
 O for a single hour of that Dundee,
 One hour is theirs, nor more is mine—
 What hardship had it been to wait an hour ?
 From hour to hour the antiquated Earth
 Milton ! thou shouldst be living at this hour :
 Here, there, and in all places at one hour,
 How canst thou flourish at this blighting hour ?
 The triumphs of this hour ; for they are THINE !
 Even to this hour,—yet, some shall now forsake
 In this firm hour Salvation lifts her horn . . .
 'Mid the deep quiet of this morning hour,
 Bless Thou the hour, ere the hour arrive,
 The splendour fled ; and now the sunless hour,
 It was a breezy hour of eve ;
 To win a happier hour.
 Dread hour ! when, upheaved by war's sulphurous blast,
 And, if there be a favoured hour
 This was the hour, and that the place.
 Stood Science waiting for the hour
 Have spared my Dwelling to this hour ;
 Even at this hour. And thou Mamertine prison,
 —Heard in that hour, or when, as now, the nerve
 Verse to glad notes prophetic of the hour
 Of Ilex, or, if better suited to the hour,
 To grace that Stranger's bridal hour,
 The pomp, the glory of that hour
 To live, and act, and serve the future hour ;
 Provided in a calmer hour,
 A happy hour with helter happiness . . .
 In many a calm propitious hour,
 And I with these one hour will stay,
 He there stands fixed from hour to hour :
 There wait a favourable hour . . .
 For all—allying in one hour !
 To the stern embrace of that grasping hour . . .
 The hour of moonlight solitude,
 At morn, and eve, and midnight's silent hour,
 Of a long life ; and, in the hour of death,
 Thus only, even in error's darkest hour,
 Gathers unblighted strength from hour to hour.
 From the Baptismal hour, thro' weal and woe,
 Propitious hour ! had we, like them, endured,
 'Tis the still hour of thinking, feeling, loving,
 Not in some hour when Pleasure with a sigh
 This hour of deepening darkness here would be —An emblem this of what the sober Hour
 Thine is the tranquil hour, purpled Eve !
 Bestowed on this transcendent hour !
 One, who has watched thee at some quiet hour
 Repine as if his hour were come too late ?
 The prayer for them whose hour is past away
 In many an hour when judgment goes astray
 Near the lark's nest, and in their natural hour
 —It is the hour of feeling,
 —Come hither in thy hour of strength ;
 That every hour thy heart runs wild,
 Unto thy guidance from this hour ;
 Brings on her parting hour . . .
 The respite of the mid-day hour
 That, drawn from this one hour of rest,
 And winter's dreariest hour . . .
 Permit not for one hour
 That might from nature have been learnt in the hour . . .

A virtuous household, though exceeding poor !
The fowl domestic, and the household dog—
That skill in this or other household work,
With store of household goods, in paniers slung
Though simply, from their little household farm ;
Among the mountain coves. Yon household fir,
The household lost their pride and soul's delight,
Of household occupation, no nice arts
Round which the Shepherd and his household sate
Of winter's household, they keep festival . . .
One household under God for high and low . . .
- Housekeeping. Smooth housekeeping within, and all without . . .
- Houseless. Besotted with mire, and let the houseless snail
Of hardship and distressful fear, amid the houseless waste
Of vagrant dwellers in the houseless woods,

And Grisdale's houseless vale, along the brink
That grinding o'er the high and houseless ground . . .
- Houses. See Baby-houses.

Kindly the housewife pressed, and they in comfort fed,
Fervently cried the housewife—" God be praised,
Of day grew dim the Housewife hung a lamp ;
The Housewife plied her own peculiar work,
With a light heart. The Housewife for five days
The Housewife answered, talking much of things
Which, as the Housewife phrased it, were through-out
At early morn the careful housewife, led . . .
The Housewife, tempted by such slender gains
Our housewife knew full well what she possessed !
Great show of joy the housewife made, and truly

Of holy Angels round her hovered ; . . .
When Inspiration hovered o'er this ground,
Hovered above our destiny on earth : . . .

 By human feeling, had ordained, . . . 383 Duddon 28. 10
 Appears a joyless human Being,
 Who with a power like human reason . . . 398 White Doe 175
 Through human hearts, and pleasure dead,—
 And stood apart from human cares : . . . 407 White Doe 996
 The human Soul ; not utterly unknown . . . 410 White Doe 1329
 For Power that travels with the human heart :
 Round the decaying trunk of human pride,
 Imposed on human kind, must first forget . . . 413 White Doe 1580
 Though seldom heard by busy human kind—
 To human kind ; though peace be on his tongue,
 A mystery potent human love to endow . . . 415 White Doe 1718
 That made His human tabernacle shine . . . 416 White Doe 1843
 To human life's unsettled atmosphere ; . . . 422 Ecc. Sonn. 1. 20. 9
 Which thou canst touch in every human heart,
 For human life when first allowed to gleam . . . 423 Ecc. Sonn. 1. 16. 10
 For Christ's dear sake, by human sympathies
 Spare, too, the human helpers ! Do they stir

Human—continued.

Will pass so soon from human memory ; . . . 627
 With any promises of human life) . . . 632
 The passions that build up our human soul ; . . . 638
 Poetic spirit of our human life, . . . 646
 From human dwelling, or the vernal thrush . . . 647
 And human knowledge, to the human eye . . . 648
 Those human sentiments that make this earth . . . 648
 Blots from the human countenance all trace . . . 648
 In human language) easily I passed . . . 652
 Towards human business, to a privileged world . . . 656
 Their human names, have into phantoms passed . . . 657
 In human Life, the daily life of those . . . 661
 With an appropriate human centre—hermit . . . 664
 Through every clime, the heart of human kind . . . 667
 Pity the tree,—Poor human vanity, . . . 670
 To earth and human life, the Song might dwell . . . 673
 Of human life. What wonder, then, if sounds . . . 674
 Of human forms with superhuman powers, . . . 676
 And human nature seeming born again . . . 680
 Moves the great spirit of human knowledge, spare . . . 681
 Through sad incompetence of human speech, . . . 684
 When the great tide of human life stands still ; . . . 697
 Love for the human creature's absolute self, . . . 701
 Of human nature ; hence the human form . . . 703
 Yet deem not, Friend ! that human kind with me . . . 704
 Among the simple shapes of human life . . . 704
 Instinctively to human passions, then . . . 705
 I trembled,—thought, at times, of human life . . . 706
 I did, by human sympathy impelled ; . . . 707
 The human nature unto which I felt . . . 708
 Of human nature. Neither vice nor guilt, . . . 708
 Of human life : Nature had led me on ; . . . 709
 Than human understanding, their discourse . . . 713
 A thought to human welfare,—that, henceforth . . . 717
 He fled, to shun the haunts of human kind ; . . . 718
 And, lastly, if the means on human will, . . . 720
 Frail human will, dependent should betray . . . 720
 And this most rotten branch of human shame, . . . 722
 Sorrow for human kind, and pain of heart . . . 723
 The human Understanding paramount . . . 723
 Were flattered, and had trust in human kind : . . . 723
 With them to take a troubled human heart, . . . 724
 Bright sprinklings of all human excellence, . . . 725
 And human nature faithful to herself . . . 725
 Of human nature from the golden side, . . . 728
 Oft, as my thoughts were turned to human kind, . . . 731
 Inherent, or from human will and power . . . 732
 By all varieties of human love . . . 732
 Long time have human ignorance and guilt . . . 734
 Of the whole human race one brotherhood, . . . 735
 Of human suffering, such as justifies . . . 736
 The field of human life, in heart and mind . . . 740
 Life, human life, with all its sacred claims . . . 741
 With human kindness and simple joys . . . 741
 There saw into the depth of human souls, . . . 742
 Of cities, where the human heart is sick, . . . 743
 To Nature, and the power of human minds, . . . 743
 Therefrom to human kind, and what we are . . . 743
 Of human life. I felt that the array . . . 744
 And three chance human wanderers, in calm thought . . . 747
 From earth to heaven, from human to divine ; . . . 747
 The works of man and face of human life ; . . . 749
 Of human Being, Eternity, and God . . . 749
 A human creature, howsoever endowed, . . . 750
 In human nature and her subtle ways, . . . 750
 " On Man, on Nature, and on Human Life, . . . 753
 The human Soul of universal earth, . . . 753
 And human reason dictated with awe, . . . 756
 Human, or such as lie beyond the grave . . . 762
 Of human passion. Sympathies there are . . . 763
 When, every day, the touch of human hand . . . 763
 To human comfort, . . . 763
 A human being destined to awake . . . 768
 To human life, or something very near . . . 768
 To human life, when he shall come again . . . 768
 Last human tenant of these ruined walls ! " . . . 770
 All joy in human nature ; was consumed, . . . 776
 " 'Tis more than human ! Many precious rites . . . 780
 Like human life from darkness."—A quick turn . . . 786
 As if inserted by some human hand . . . 787
 Reared by the industrious hand of human art . . . 787
 Even so deduce the stream of human life . . . 790
 To explore the destiny of human kind . . . 790
 Who, in this frame of human life, perceive . . . 790
 Save by the simplest toll of human hands . . . 792
 None ! 'tis the general plaint of human kind . . . 792
 But that pure archetype of human greatness, . . . 799
 Is human Life ; and so the Spirit fares . . . 800
 Human and rational, report of thee . . . 802
 Above our human region, or below, . . . 802
 On human nature from above imposed . . . 803
 Beyond the tenderness of human hearts : . . . 804
 The worst that human reasoning can achieve, . . . 804
 Not human nature only, but explores . . . 806
 And roofs of temples built by human hands— . . . 811
 Philosophers, who, though the human soul . . . 816
 Of human anthems,—choral song, or burst . . . 818
 Of human suffering, or of human joy . . . 820
 From human observation, as if yet . . . 822
 As the lost Angel by a human voice . . . 827

Human—continued.

We safely may affirm that human life . . . 830
 To prize the breath we share with human kind ; . . . 832
 For human habitation ; but I longed . . . 833
 Divine or human, exercised in pain, . . . 837
 And human charity, and social love, . . . 838
 Of blessed angels, pitying human cares . . . 839
 For the reproof of human vanity, . . . 842
 That, through all stations, human life abounds . . . 846
 Of earth, and human nature's mortal part . . . 847
 The native grandeur of the human soul— . . . 848
 Why do not these prevail for human life . . . 851
 Of human kind ! He was it who first broke . . . 854
 To the pure course of human life which there . . . 856
 Lying insensible to human praise, . . . 865
 Pan or Apollo, veiled in human form : . . . 868
 Deserve the least return of human thanks ; . . . 870
 The stars of human glory are cast down ; . . . 872
 Of human nature, in a spot like this, . . . 874
 Yet walked beneath the sun, in human shape, . . . 879
 And least respected in the human Mind, . . . 880
 The oppressor breathes, their human form divine, . . . 886
 Fixed, within reach of every human eye ; . . . 887
 On human life from infancy to age . . . 891
 The common course of human gratitude ! " . . . 892
 Power inaccessible to human thought, . . . 893
 The sting of human nature. Spread the law, . . . 893
 Of human victims, offered up to appease . . . 894
 The Norman curfew bell when human hands . . . 894
 From human converse to frequent alone . . . 894
 To that high spring which bears no human name, . . . 894
 Of alterations human hands might make . . . 894
 A human voice—a Spirit of coming night, . . . 894
 Some portion of its human history . . . 894
 Look where we will, some human hand has been . . . 894
 If the caresses of a human voice . . . 894
 Can make it so, and care of human hands, . . . 894
 Human and brute, possessors undisturbed . . . 894

Humblest—continued.

O'ercome by humblest prelude of that strain, . . .
 From heart-experience, and in humblest sense
 Lowest of these and humblest in attempt, . . .
 Do come within the reach of humblest eyes ;
 Such benefit the humblest intellects . . .
 Grandeur upon the very humblest face
 The humblest of this band who dares to hope Strewing in peace life's humblest ground with herbs,
 Both while he trod the earth in humblest guise
 Bears, on the humblest ground of social life,
 To dignify the humblest state.—Your voice
 A natural dignity on humblest rank ;
 That from the humblest floor ascends to heaven ;

Humbling. Humbling that lily-stem, thy sceptre meek,
 Humbling the body, to exalt the soul ;

Humbly. Humbly to haug, like twinkling winter lamps,
 When Jesus humbly deigned to ride,
 Before it humbly let us pause,
 That rises here, and humbly spread, the sail ;
 Cleaving humbly to his side,
 Or gulf, that humbly would express
 All seasons through, is humbly pleased to braid
 This tablet, that thus humbly rears
 Was reared and taught ; and humbly earned his bread,
 And savage Nature humbly joins the rite,
 Humbly in a religious hospital ;
 They looked ; were humbly thankful for the good
Humid. The humid precipice, and seize the guest Humiliation. Humiliation, when no longer free.
 Who, by humiliation undeterred,
Humilities. See Heart-humilities.

Humility. But her humility is well content . . .
 Touching, as now, in thy humility . . .
 And with untired humility forbore . . .
 This child of Nature's own humility, . . .
 Thy virtue, and thy great humility,
 Humility and modest awe themselves
 Her patience, and humility of mind . . .
 So, with devout humility he it said,
 That should preclude humility and love ?
 But true humility descends from heaven ;
 And general humility in death ?

Hummed. Where the bees hummed, and chair by winter fire ;

Humming. See Ever-humming.
 At which the desert trembles.—Humming Bee !
 And round the humming elm, a glimmering scene !
 A humming sound, less tuneable than bees,
 A humming bee—a little tinkling rill—
 Who entered, humming carelessly a tune,

Humorous. Filling from time to time his "humorous stage"

Humour. The humour of the moment, lagged behind.
 He never will be out of humour.
 As is the humour of the game,
 Was it the humour of a child ?
 Or does it suit our humour to commend
 Humour and wild instinctive wit, and all
 Spurn Reason's law and humour Passion's rage ;
 Such as a delicate work of humour breeds ;
 Each with his humour, could we fall to abound
 But this endured not ; his good humour soon
 The antiquarian humour, and am pleased
 His morbid humour, with delight supplied
 To their inventive humour, by stern looks,
 Of his peculiar humour, would let loose
 The moments' humour, rough Tars spend their wit.

Humourists. Old humourists, who have been long in their graves,
Humours. And humours change, are spurned like weeds :
 If kindred humours e'er would make
 No sullen Humours dwell
 For those cold humours of habitual spleen
Hums. And hums the balmy air to still
 When hums the mountain bee in May's glad ear,
Hundred. Those lofty cliffs a hundred streams un-
 fold,
 In grange or farm this Hundred scarcely owns
 Crossing our roads at every hundred steps,
 A hundred times, by rock or bower,
 Cover a hundred leagues, and seem
 The finest palace to a hundred realms !
 Went twice two hundred yards or more,
 For Thou, upon a hundred streams,
 Seven hundred Knights, Retainers all . . .
 Fear hath a hundred eyes that all agree
 Its history of two hundred years . . .
 When full five hundred boats in trim array,
 Wide o'er the Alps a hundred streams unfold,
 Mixed with auxiliary Rocks, three hundred Forms ;
 Two hundred times around the ring of heaven,
 Of odorous incense ; while a hundred more
 Of Liberty, which fifteen hundred years
 A hundred times when, roving high and low,
 A hundred other names, forgotten now,

Hundred—continued.

A hundred hills their dusky backs upheaved . . .
 To rouse me, and a hundred warblers more ;
 Patents of manhood for eight hundred years . . .
 Eight hundred years uncalled to other tasks

Hundreds. Hundreds of curves and circlets, to and fro,
Hundredth. Could I but teach the hundredth part
 That he, perhaps for the hundredth time, . . .

Hung. See Low-hung.
 Far o'er the water, hung with groves of beech ;
 To reach a small wood-hut hung boldly on the steep.
 Hung there, no bush proclaimed to old and poor . . .
 From the cross-timber of an outhouse hung :
 Thy hung not :—no one on his form or face . . .
 Into the torrent over which he hung,
 I hung this belt. Mercy of Heaven ! What all
 you !
 It hung, nor could at once be freed . . .
 At this my boy hung down his head,
 Shrine, Altar, Image, Offerings hung in sign of gratitude ;
 It hung ;—and mouldered there. The Priest here ended—
 Here on his hours he hung as on a book,
 From bodings, as might be, that hung upon his mind.
 To their full hearts the universe seemed hung
 Of day grew dim the Housewife hung a lamp ;
 Hung at my breast, and pulled at me ;
 Hung—head pointing towards the ground— . . .
 Once hung, a Poet harbours now,
 Hung round and overhung with gloom ; . . .
 Hung low, begin to rise and spread ;
 Tall and erect, with tempting clusters hung,
 I looked reproof—they saw—but neither hung his head.
 And hung with heavy tufts of moss, . . .
 Have hung upon the beatings of my heart—
 He hung,—then floated with angelic ease . . .
 For service hung behind thy chamber-door ;
 "A savage wildness round him hung . . .
 Turned towards a gate that hung in view . . .

Hung—continued.

With spade and mattock o'er his shoulder hung ;
Turned towards the planet Jupiter that hung ;
It hung its head in mortal languishment . . .
Of his compatriot villagers (that hung . . .
Two ruddy children hung, a well-poised freight,
Their snow-white curtains hung in decent folds ;
She was a soft attendant cloud, that hung . . .
Grey locks profusely round his temples hung . . .
Hung in his rustic hall. One ivied arch
Are hung with thousand thousand diamond drops Hungarian. Of wide Hungarian Danube, 'twas my lot
Hunger. And cold and hunger are his least of woes ;
Nor Hunger driven the herds from pastures bare,
At morn my sick heart hunger scarcely stung,
From cold, from hunger, penury, and death ; . . .
To cold and hunger !—Pain is of the heart,
but I think his malady was cold and hunger . . .
Hunger, and sultry heat, and nipping blast
Outstretched and listless, were by hunger roused :
And, for hunger and thirst and such troublesome calls,
Nor Hunger forc'd the herds from pastures bare . . .
Of vigorous hunger—hence corporeal strength
And miserable hunger. Much, too much,
Began to fail, this sheep by hunger pressed
Hunger-bitten. One day to meet a hunger-bitten girl, Hungerling. Me and his children hungering in his view ;
Hunger's. And cold and hunger's abject wretchedness,
Hungry. The lame, the hungry, will be welcome
there.
Save one wee, hungry, nibbling mouse,
The weary have life, and the hungry have bliss ;
Thy hungry barking to the hymn . . .
Like hungry fowl to the feeder's hand . . .
There are the naked clothed, the hungry fed ;
Dead muttering lips, and hair of hungry white,
Food for the hungry ears of little ones,
Hunt. A most strange faintness,—will you hunt me out
Yes, you are right, we need not hunt for motives :
To hunt the waterfalls . . .
To hunt the moon within the brook,
To hunt their fluttering game o'er rock and level
green . . .
Hunt half a day for a forgotten dream . . .
Hunt the Mother and the Child . . .
They hunt through the streets with deliberate tread,
To hunt the badger and near the fox . . .
I did not hunt after, nor greatly prize,
Hunted. Three several hoof-marks which the hunted Beast
The palmy antlers of a hunted Hart,
As doth the hunted fawn,
And on I hunted him from tree to tree,
The pack loud chiming, and the hunted hare . . .
The grounds which we have hunted through before."
Hunter. See Chamois-hunter.
A very hunter did I rush . . .
Behold the hunter train ! . . .
A fierce and dreadful hunter he ; . . .
A fisher or a hunter there,
And hart and hind and hunter with his spear . . .
See the first mighty Hunter leave the brute—
Like Echo, when the hunter train at dawn
Was pierced by whizzing shaft of hunter keen !
Sad were our lot : no hunter of the hare . . .
The Hunter followed fast,
And, like an ardent hunter, I forgot,
The nightly hunter, lifting a bright eye
Hunter-Indian. America, the Hunter-Indian ; Moors,
Hunter's. When hunter's arrow first defiled
Light as a hunter's of the field ;
His staff protending like a hunter's spear,
What time the hunter's earliest horn is heard
Hunters. In friendship ; rival hunters they,
Seized it, as hunters seize their prey ;
Keen hunters in a chase of fourteen weeks,
They—who had come elate as eastern hunters
Hunting. What kind of plunder he was hunting now ;
And now, perhaps, is hunting sheep,
Huntress. A sylvan huntress at my side,
Hunts. Hunts, where his master points, the intercepted flocks.
Hunts, where he points, the intercepted flocks ;
Huntsman. A running huntsman merry ;
Hurdy-gurdy. The hurdy-gurdy, at the fiddle weaves,
Hurl. I'll hurl thee headlong with the rock . . .
Hurled. And from all hope I was for ever hurled . . .
Transmute him to a wretch from quiet hurled—
When maddening Power her bolts had hurled,
Not hurled precipitous from steep to stage,
Hurled down a mountain-cove from stage to stage,
Than to allay . . .
Of France a boastful Bryant hurled his threats ;
Hurls. Bright sparks his black and rolling eyeball hurls
Rides forth, an armed man, and hurls a spear
Bright sparks his black and haggard eye-ball hurls

Hurtful. More hurtful here beset him, doomed through free . . .
From every hurtful blast,
Thus wiltful Fancy, in no hurtful mood . . .
Hurtle. Hurtle the clouds in deeper darkness piled,
Hurtless. That came with soft alarm, like hurtless
light . . .
637 Prelude 1. 353
Hurts. And knows not when he hurts and when he heals ;
Husband. The happy husband flies, his arms to throw
Husband and children ! one by one, by sword
And kindred of dead husband are at best . . .
My husband served in sad captivity
My husband lurked about the neighbourhood ;
Yet still, while over her the husband bent,
Wife, Sir ! his wife—not I ; my husband, Sir,
What can this mean ? Alas, for my poor husband !—
Hush ! They are gone. On such a night my husband,
Survive her Husband : at her death the estate
" It is my Husband," softly said
A husband and a wife."
Thy Husband walks the paths of upper air :
And that her Husband now lay dead,
His present blessings, and to husband up
By a best Husband guided, Mary came
Did wife and husband roam ;
The husband to the wife.
With the most common ; husband, father ; learned,
To the cold grave in which her husband slept,
If I had seen her husband. As she spake
From one who by my husband had been sent
No tidings of her husband ; if he lived,
Son, husband, brothers—brothers side by side,
Her husband enter—from a distant vale.
Or paced the ground—to guide her Husband home,
Were planted by her husband and herself,
To speak of her dead husband. Is there not 576
Husbanded. Which for that service had been husbanded,
But husbanded through many a long campaign . . .

Husband's—continued.

Of, working by her Husband's side,
 Was in her husband's grave!
 She prayed, she moaned;—her husband's sister watched
 Nor husband's love, nor father's hope or care.
Hush. Hush!—'tis the feeble and earth-loving wind
 No answer—hush—last wretch, he lifts his hand
 Hush! They are gone. On such a night my husband,
 Then hush again upon my breast;
 Hush, there is some one on the stir!
 "Hush, boys! you're telling me a lie;
 Of three short days—but hush—no more!
 But list! the avalanche—the hush profound
 And into silence hush the timorous flocks,
 Hush, not a voice is here! but why repine,
 Hush, hush, the busy Sleeper see!
 Hush, feeble lyre! weak words refuse.
 While strives a secret Power to hush the croud,
 Whom the fifth Harry talks of. Silence! hush!
 In silence, with a hush of decency;
 Then wake me not, I pray you. Hush; speak low.

Hushed. Is hushed, am I at rest. My Friends!
 restrain
 Is hushed, and like a burnished mirror glows,
 Creep hushed into the tranquil breast of death.
 Which pleased him so, that he was hushed at once:
 Are hushed to sleep, by your own act and deed,
 —Hushed was that House in peace, or seeming
 peace,
 Hushed the dark earth, fast closing weary eyes,
 (The vale now silent, hushed, I ween,
 Hushed was by this the fiddle's sound,
 And the hushed farewell of an eye
 —I sing in vain;—the pines have hushed their waving;
 Nor hushed be service from the lowing mead,
 Lay hushed; till—through a portal in the sky
 He springs the hushed Volcano's mine,
 Hushed to a depth of more than Sabbath peace:
 The turmoil hushed, celestial springs
 And all is hushed, without and within;
 —The courts are hushed,—for timely sleep
 Around her sees, while air is hushed, a clear
 And the green vales lie hushed in sober light!
 From the hushed vale's realities, transferred
 Oh may that Power who hushed the stormy seas,
 Through dewy grass, nor small birds hushed in
 bowers,
 Where every parting agony is hushed,
 But hushed be every thought that springs
 Then all is hushed; the bushes rustle near,
 Hush'd are the winds and silent are the tides;
 Grateful for that admonishment, I hushed
 Hushed in profound repose. We left the town
 The place, all hushed and silent as it was,
 Night hushed as night, and day serene as day!
 To which, in silence hushed, his very soul
 In open circle seated round, and hushed
 Loth to disturb what Heaven hath hushed in peace.
 We gazed, in silence hushed, with eyes intent
 Or hushed; the roaring waters, and the still—

Hut. See Wood-hut.

On cold blue nights, in hut or straw-built shed,
 When downward to his winter hut he goes,
 That hut which on the hills so oft employs
 Torn from our hut, that stood beside the sea
 Heavier than work, raised it: within that hut
 Hath need of rest; the sight of Hut or Hostel
 Bring to her hut; and so the Wretch has lived
 I will attend you to a Hut that stands
 And your support—my hut is not far off.
 For covert from the keen north wind, his hands a hut had made.
 The hut stood finished by his pains, nor seemingly lacked aught
 For bodied forth before my eyes the cross-crowned hut appeared;
 And in His sight the fragile Cross, on thy small hut, will be
 With a leisurely motion the door of his hut.
 The last stone of a lonely hut;
 And if you see her in her hut,
 No woodman's hut, no cottage light—
 Of Easter winds, unscarred, from hut or hall
 Each hut, perchance, might have its own;
 Within them, church, and town, and hut, and grange,
 Of fern-thatched hut on heathy moor:
 A hut, by tufted trees defended,
 That quench, from hut to palace, lamps and fires,
 Beside their moss-grown butt of clay,
 Might see how poor a hut she had,
 Her Foster-mother's hut.
 Fall on his shifting hut that gleams mid smoking
 dew;
 The hut which from the hills his eyes employs
 On Indian plains, and from my mother's hut
 And to the shepherd's hut on distant hills

Hut—continued.

More worthy of a poet's love, a hut,
 The shepherd strays, a rolling hut his home.
 Appeared a roofless Hut; four naked walls
 The light extinguished of her lonely hut,
 The hut itself abandoned to decay,
 The same sad question. Meanwhile her poor Hut
 We listened, looking down upon the hut,
 Of rustic persons, from behind the hut
 So, wearied to your hut shall you return,
 Of his poor hut, or on the mountain-top,
 —Alone within her solitary hut;
Hut-like. You isle conceals their home, their hut-like bower;
Huts. See Wood-huts.
 Love had he found in huts where poor men lie;
 Proud he this Land! whose poorest huts are halls
 And lowly huts, near beaten ways,
 Among the farms and solitary huts,
 Calm huts, and lawns between, and sylvan slopes.
 To thee and thy grey huts, thou one dear Vale!
 Of ragged villages and crazy huts,
 By naked huts, wood-built, and sown like tents
 I left Bethgelder's huts at couching-time,
 —Nor was he loth to enter ragged huts,
 Huts where his charity was blest; his voice
 Of Tell came trooping from a thousand huts,
 Who shall enumerate the crazy huts,
 Or where their ancestors erected huts,
 Then to be greeted by the scattered huts,

Hymn. The fragments of a Christmas hymn;
 A dream of that low-warbled hymn
 To thee would offer no presumptuous hymn!
 Thy hungry barkings to the hymn
 And from one voice a Hymn with tuneful sound
 A ritual hymn,
 A mortal hymn, or shaped the choir,
 Chanting her low-voiced hymn, take pride
 Ere the prelusive hymn is heard:—
 Their nests, or chant a gratulating hymn
 This hymn of thanks and praise,
 And he accepts the punctual hymn
 Tell me the cause why thou dost sing this hymn,
 A hymn of triumph: "as the morning comes
 We heard the hymn they sang—a solemn sound
 Sonorous squadrons sing their evening hymn.
Hymns. Yet, not the less, in children's hymns and lonely prayer delights.
 Hymns in praise of what I love!
 Shall hymns of praise resound at morn and even;
 Or like those hymns that soothe with graver sound
 To mix with hymns that Spirits make and hear;
 And chanted hymns and stiller voice of prayer,
 With hymns resounded, and the chanted rite:
 In your despite, and sing his hymns and saws,
 And from their fervent lips drew hymns of praise,

1. (Partial list.) See I'd, I'll, I'm, I've.

Dear native regions, I farewell,
 In thoughtless gait I coursed the plain,
 And hope itself was all I knew of pain;
 I greet thee, Chartrouse, while I mourn thy doom.
 Left vacant for the day, I loved to roam.
 But once I pierced the mazes of a wood
 But now with other mind I stand alone
 My heart leaps up when I behold
 So is it now I am a man;
 So be it when I shall grow old,
 And I could wish my days to be Much converse do I find in thee,
 My sister Emmeline and I
 A very hunter did I rush
 I followed on from brake to bush;
 I started—seeming to espy
 My sister Emmeline and I
 I heard the sound,—and more and more;
 And still I heard it as before.
 Of Alice and her grief I told;
 And I gave money to the host,
 Oft I had heard of Lucy Gray;
 I met a little cottage Girl:
 I have a boy of five years old;
 I thought of Kilve's delightful shore,
 I could not feel a pain.
 Kilve, thought I, was a favoured place,
 And, as we talked, I questioned him,

I—continued.

And three times to the child I said,
 Could I but teach the hundredth part
 That I almost received her heart into my own.
 I watched them with delight, they were a lovely pair.
 I unobserved could see the workings of her face:
 —As homeward through the lane I went with lazy
 feet,
 This song to myself did I oftentimes repeat;
 And it seemed, as I retraced the ballad line by line,
 Again, and once again, did I repeat the song;
 "Nay," said I, "more than half to the damsel must belong,
 I think of thee with many fears
 I would urge this moral pleading,
 Him never saw I, nor the spot; but from an English Dame,
 And for the Subject of my Verse I heaved a pensive sigh.
 Strong as an Eagle with my charge I glided round and round
 If I may dare to cherish hope that gentle eyes will read
 While I this flower transplant
 Of which I sang one song that will not die.
 Whom without blame I may not overlook;
 I met Louisa in the shade,
 Why should I fear to say
 Oh! might I kiss the mountain raios
 If I with her but half a noon
 Strange fits of passion have I known:
 I to her cottage bent my way,
 Upon the moon I fixed my eye,
 In one of those sweet dreams I slept,
 "O mercy!" to myself I cried,
 I travelled among unknown men,
 Nor, England I did I know till then
 What love I bore to thee.
 Nor will I quit thy shore
 I grieved, fond Youth! that thou shouldst sue;
 And there is one whom I five years have known;
 Such happiness as I have known to-day.
 Full oft our human foresight I deplore;
 Through Thee communion with that Love I seek:
 In distant countries have I been,
 And yet I have not often seen
 When from these lofty thoughts I woke,
 Once in a lonely hamlet I sojourned
 This Child, I chanted to myself a lay,
 I pass the raptures of the pair—such theme
 The Tale I follow to its last recess
 Oh could I put it into rhyme,
 I to the Muses have been bound
 Ye Muses! whom I love so well?
 (His very words I give to you.)
 Yet not unfit, I deem, for the frideside,
 Whom I already loved—not verily
 And hence this Tale, while I was yet a Boy
 Homely and rude, I will relate the same
 When wandering among lakes and hills I note,
 I roamed in the confusion of my heart,
 I gazed and gazed, and to myself I said,
 My Emma, I will dedicate to thee.
 To whom I sometimes in our idle talk
 I, like a Runic Priest, in characters,
 I was not loth to be so catechised,
 That eastward looks, I there stopped short—and stood.
 From base to summit; such delight I found
 —When I had gazed perhaps two minutes' space,
 To me alone imparted, sure I am
 I chiselled out in those rude characters
 And I, and all who dwell by my fireside,
 And She who dwells with me, whom I have loved
 That for my single self I looked at them,
 Preferring studious leisure, I had chosen
 A stately Fir-grove, whither I was wont
 I ceased the shelter to frequent,—and prized,
 Less than I wished to prize, that calm recess.
 Much wondering how I could have sought in vain
 Could I withhold thy honoured name,—and now
 I love the fir-grove with a perfect love.
 Thither do I withdraw when cloudless suns
 And there I sit at evening, when the steep
 And while I gaze upon the spectacle
 Muttering the verses which I muttered first
 Alone I tread this path;—for aught I know,
 I sat within an undergrove
 I listened, nor aught else could hear;
 In youth from rock to rock I went,
 But now my own delights I make,—
 Ere thus I have lain couched an hour,
 Have I derived from thy sweet power
 I drink out of an humbler urn
 Daisy! again I talk to thee,
 I sit, and play with similes,
 While I am gazing.
 I see thee glittering from afar—

I—continued.

One have I marked, the happiest guest
 Lift me, guide me, till I find
 I have walked through wildernesses dreary,
 Had I now the wings of a Faery,
 Up to thee would I fly.
 To be such a traveller as I.
 I, with my fate contented, will plod on,
 I'm as great as they, I trow,
 'Twas a face I did not know;
 I will sing, as doth behove,
 Hymns in praise of what I love!
 Praise of which I nothing know!
 Yet I long could overlook
 Fair Lady! can I sing of flowers
 I who ne'er sate within their howers,
 I saw a dazzling Belle
 As often as I murmur here
 Displeased that I from lays of love
 That I, a Bard of hill and dale,
 The treasure proudly did I show
 Nor, I deem, for me unmet;
 Other playmate can I see,
 That almost I could repine
 And I will have my careless season
 Now and then I may possess
 I would fare like that or this,
 Of whom I sing this rustic lay,
 Their inspiration I parfake;
 A record which I dared to frame,
 They checked me—and I left the theme
 For what I have and what I miss
 I sing of these;—it makes my bliss
 Nor is it I who play the part,
 Until the debt I owe be paid.
 I wish to have thee here again,
 Do I regret what I have lost;
 O blithe New-comer! I have heard,
 I hear thee and rejoice.
 O Cuckoo! shall I call thee Bird,
 While I am lying on the grass
 To seek thee did I often rove
 And I can listen to thee yet;
 (I speak of one from many singled out)
 I left our cottage-threshold, sallying forth
 Among the flowers, and with the flowers I played;
 Ere from the mutilated bower I turned
 I felt a sense of pain when I beheld
 I saw her upon nearer view
 And now I see with eye serene
 I heard a Stock-dove sing or say
 I had no human fears:
 I wandered lonely as a cloud
 When all at once I saw a crowd,
 Ten thousand saw I at a glance,
 I gazed—and gazed—but little thought
 For oft, when on my couch I lie
 I am glad for him, blind as he is!—all the while
 Such woes, I knew, could never be;
 And yet a hoon I gave her, for the creature
 I left her, and pursued my way;
 In their fraternal features I could trace
 I looked reproof—they saw—but neither hung his head.
 Since I their pastime witnessed here,
 I ask—but all is dark between!
 Yet as I left I find them here!
 In scorn I speak not;—they are what their birth
 He was a lovely Youth! I guess
 Even so they did; and I may say
 Yet, in his worst pursuits I ween
 I was a Traveller then upon the moor;
 I saw the hare that raced about with joy;
 I heard the woods and distant waters roar;
 Dim sadness—and blind thoughts, I knew not, nor could name.
 I heard the sky-lark warbling in the sky;
 And I bethought me of the playful hare:
 Even such a happy Child of earth am I.
 Even as these blissful creatures do I fare;
 Far from the world I walk, and from all care;
 My whole life I have lived in pleasant thought,
 I thought of Chatterton, the marvellous Boy,
 When I with these untoward thoughts had striven,
 I saw a Man before me unawares:
 And, still as I drew near with gentle pace,
 And now a stranger's privilege I took;
 And him with further words I thus bespake,
 Scarce heard; nor word from word could I divide;
 Like one whom I had met with in a dream;
 My question eagerly did I renew,
 In my mind's eye I seemed to see him pace
 While I these thoughts within myself pursued,
 I could have laughed myself to scorn to find
 "God," said I, "be my help and stay secure;
 Such race, I think, was never seen before.
 I will not stop to tell how far he fled,
 Nor will I mention by what death he died;
 And I to this world add another tale.
 To freeze the blood I have no ready arts;
 As I from Hawes to Richmond did repair,

I—continued.

It chanced that I saw standing in a dell . . . 202 Hart-leap 102
 What this imported I could ill divine : . . . 202 Hart-leap 105
 I saw three pillars standing in a line,— . . . 202 Hart-leap 107
 I looked upon the hill both far and near, . . . 202 Hart-leap 113
 I stood in various thoughts and fancies lost, . . . 202 Hart-leap 117
 And what this place might be I then enquired, . . . 202 Hart-leap 120
 Which in my former rhyme I have rehearsed, . . . 202 Hart-leap 122
 The words of ancient time I thus translate, . . . 203 Brougham 3
 Of five long winters ! and again I hear, . . . 205 Tintern 2
 Do I behold these steep and lofty cliffs, . . . 205 Tintern 5
 The day is come when I again repose . . . 205 Tintern 9
 'Mid groves and copses. Once again I see . . . 206 Tintern 14
 To them I may have owned another gift, . . . 206 Tintern 36
 How oft, in spirit, have I turned to thee, . . . 206 Tintern 55
 While here I stand, not only with the seuse . . . 206 Tintern 62
 For future years. And so I dare to hope, . . . 206 Tintern 65
 Though changed, no doubt, from what I was when . . .
 first . . . 206 Tintern 66
 I came among these hills ; when like a roe . . . 206 Tintern 67
 I bounded o'er the mountains, by the sides . . . 206 Tintern 68
 To me was all in all.—I cannot paint . . . 206 Tintern 75
 What then I was. The sounding cataract . . . 206 Tintern 76
 Faint I, nor mourn nor murmur ; other gifts . . . 206 Tintern 86
 Abundant recompense. For I have learned . . . 207 Tintern 88
 To chasten and subdue. And I have felt . . . 207 Tintern 93
 If I were not thus taught, should I the more . . . 207 Tintern 112
 My dear, dear Friend ; and in thy voice I catch . . . 207 Tintern 116
 May I behold in thee what I was once, . . . 207 Tintern 120
 My dear, dear Sister ! and this prayer I make, . . . 207 Tintern 121
 If I should be where I no more can hear . . . 207 Tintern 147
 Within me when I recognised thy light ; . . . 208 It is no* 10
 A moment I was startled at the sight : . . . 208 It is no* 11
 And, while I gazed, there came to me a thought . . . 208 It is no* 12
 That I might step beyond my natural race . . . 208 It is no* 13
 Off as I pass along the fork . . . 214 Kirkstone 3

 Ascending, they approach—I hear their wings . . . 218 Recluse 1. I. 219
 And I will mate and match him blissfully . . . 220 Triad 7
 I will not fetch a Nalad from a flood . . . 220 Triad 8
 —I sing in vain ;—the pines have hushed their . . .
 waving ; . . . 220 Triad 24
 While to these shades a sister Nymph I call . . . 221 Triad 88
 —I sang ; and lo ! from pastimes virginal . . . 221 Triad 94
 Since first I spied that Primrose-tuft . . . 224 Primrose 9
 I gave this after-lyad . . . 224 Primrose 30
 I sang—Let myriads of bright flowers, . . . 225 Primrose 31
 The tear whose source I could not guess, . . . 225 Present 7
 With fancy, I obey my heart, . . . 225 Present 11
 I speak with knowledge,—by that Voice beguiled, . . . 229 Cuckoo-clock 16
 I pace it unreprising, for my thoughts . . . 230 Clouds 58
 O sovereign Nature ! I appeal to thee, . . . 231 The gentlest Poet* 74
 I speak as if of sense beguiled, . . . 232 Jew. Fam. 21
 Yet am I with the Jewish Child, . . . 232 Jew. Fam. 23
 I see the dark-brown curls, the brow, . . . 232 Jew. Fam. 25
 And now I have a little Boat, . . . 236 P. B. 4
 Until now I have a little Boat, . . . 236 P. B. 6
 Meanwhile untroubled I admire . . . 236 P. B. 16
 Away we go, my Boat and I— . . . 236 P. B. 21
 Such company I like it not ! . . . 237 P. B. 40
 With joy I sail among them. . . . 237 P. B. 45
 Whole ages if I here should roam, . . . 237 P. B. 52
 And see the town where I was born ! . . . 237 P. B. 66
 In boyish gambols ;—I was lost . . . 237 P. B. 68
 Where I have been, but on this coast . . . 237 P. B. 69
 I feel I am a man. . . . 237 P. B. 70
 Thus could I hang for ever ! . . . 237 P. B. 75
 And 'tis, I fear, an age too late) . . . 237 P. B. 127
 For, restless Wanderer ! I, in truth, . . . 237 P. B. 129
 " Long have I loved what I behold, . . . 238 P. B. 131
 I shall not covet for my dower, . . . 238 P. B. 137

 They know not I have been so far ;— . . . 238 P. B. 162
 I see them there, in number nine, . . . 238 P. B. 163
 I see them—there they are ! . . . 238 P. B. 165
 To them I must relate the Tale . . . 238 P. B. 169
 And I, as well as I was able, . . . 238 P. B. 173
 I spake with faltering voice, like one . . . 238 P. B. 186
 Said I, becoming quite collected ; . . . 238 P. B. 202
 In simple truth I cannot tell ; . . . 239 P. B. 283
 I see a blooming Wood-boy there, . . . 243 P. B. 631
 And if I had the power to say . . . 243 P. B. 632
 Bending, as you or I might bend . . . 244 P. B. 741
 Yet, potent Spirits ! well I know, . . . 245 P. B. 766
 And this I speak in reverence ! . . . 245 P. B. 770
 But might I give advice to you, . . . 245 P. B. 771
 Whom in my fear I love so well ; . . . 245 P. B. 772
 Your presence often have I felt . . . 245 P. B. 776
 I feel that I am all unfit . . . 245 P. B. 789
 I loitered long ere I began : . . . 245 P. B. 792
 Appalling process ! I have marked . . . 245 P. B. 826
 I cannot well express the thoughts . . . 246 P. B. 871
 O chief of Friends ! such feelings I present . . . 250 Happy the* 10
 Should find brief solace there, as I have found . . . 250 Nuns fret* 14
 " Beloved Vale ! " I said, " when I shall con . . . 250 Beloved Vale* 1
 But, when into the Vale I came, no fears . . . 251 Beloved Vale* 6
 Deep thought, or dread remembrance, had I none . . . 251 Beloved Vale* 8
 I stood, of simple shame the blushing Thrall ; . . . 251 Beloved Vale* 10
 I looked, I stared, I smiled, I laughed ; and all . . . 251 Beloved Vale* 13
 Beaumont ! it was thy wish that I should rear . . . 251 Appleth. 1

I—continued.

On favoured ground, thy gift, where I might dwell . . . 251 Appleth. 3
 Why have I crowded this small bark with you . . . 252 Her only* 10
 Whence I have risen, uplifted on the breeze . . . 252 The fairest* 13
 When I step forth to hail the morning light ; . . . 253 Aerial Rock* 3
 Hence am I cross and peevish as a child : . . . 253 O gentle* 10
 I surely not a man ungently made, . . . 253 Fond words* 10
 I gazed—and, self-accused while gazing, sighed . . . 254 Wild Duck's Nest 13
 Sad may I be who heard your sabbath chime . . . 256 Easier 11
 Oft have I seen, ere Time had ploughed my cheek, . . . 256 Decay of Pity 1
 I turned to share the transport—Oh ! with whom . . . 257 Surprised* by 2
 But how could I forget thee ? Through what power, . . . 257 Surprised* by 6
 Save one, one only, when I stood forlorn, . . . 257 Surprised* by 11
 Methought I saw the footsteps of a throne . . . 257 Methought* I 1
 Those steps I clomb ; the mists before me gave . . . 257 Methought* I 9
 Smooth way ; and I beheld the face of one . . . 257 Methought* I 10
 Yet still I ask, what haven is her mark ? . . . 258 Where lies the* Land 9
 This Ship was nought to me, nor I to her, . . . 258 With Ships* 9
 Yet I pursued her with a Lover's look ; . . . 258 With Ships* 10
 This Ship to all the rest did I prefer : . . . 258 With Ships* 11
 So might I, standing on this pleasant lea, . . . 259 The world is* 11
 Who may respect my name that I to thee . . . 259 Calvert 2
 That I, if frugal and severe, might stray . . . 259 Calvert 6
 Where'er I liked ; and finally array . . . 259 Calvert 7
 Hence, if in freedom I have loved the truth ; . . . 259 Calvert 9
 Of higher mood, which now I meditate ;— . . . 259 Calvert 12
 Of all things, that at last in fear I shriek, . . . 260 How sweet* 13
 I watch, and long have watched, with calm regret . . . 261 I watch* 1
 I heard (alas ! 'twas only in a dream) . . . 261 I heard* (alas 1
 She soared—and I awoke, struggling in vain to . . .

 Cool air I breathe ; while the unincumbered Mind, . . . 262 Retirement 12
 But now upon this thought I cannot brood ; . . . 263 Those words* 5
 Nor will I praise a cloud, however bright, . . . 263 Those words* 7
 Nor will I then thy modest grace forget, . . . 264 Snowdrop 12
 Lady ! I rifled a Parnassian Cave . . . 264 Lady* ! I 1

 While I was planting green unfading bowers, . . . 264 Lady* ! the 3
 I gave this paradise for winter hours, . . . 264 Lady* ! the 7
 Ne'er saw I, never felt, a calm so deep ! . . . 269 Westm. Bridge 11
 Then I repent not. But my soul hath fears . . . 270 If these* 7
 I slight my own beloved Cam, to range . . . 270 Ye sacred* 10
 Sweet Fancy ! other gifts must I receive ; . . . 270 Shame* on 9
 Proofs of a higher sovereignty I claim ; . . . 270 Shame* on 10
 Are yet before me ; yet do I behold . . . 270 Henry: Portrait 2
 Such bold report I venture to gaitous : . . . 271 Fame tells* 5
 For I have heard the gure of Richmond hill . . . 271 Fame tells* 6
 Of Viamala ? There I seem to stand, . . . 272 Devil's Bridge 8
 Which the Muse warms ; and I, whose head is grey, . . . 273 With Redbreast* 5
 Nor could I let one thought—one motion—slip . . . 273 With Redbreast* 7
 When I behold thy blanched unwithered cheek, . . . 274 Such age* 6
 Thee with the welcome Snowdrop I compare ; . . . 274 Such age* 9
 When at the sacred font for thee I stood, . . . 274 Such age* 9
 And charm of colours ; I applaud those signs . . . 274 Rutha O. 2

I—continued.

Jones! as from Calais southward you and I
Two solitary greetings have I heard,
I grieved for Bucoaparté, with a vain
Festivals have I seen that were not names:
Island, within a hollow vale, I stood;
I shrank; for verily the barrier flood
O Friend! I know not which way I must look
For comfort, being, as I am, oppress'd
When I have borne in memory what has tamed
I had, my Country—am I to be blamed?
Now, when I think of thee, and what thou art,
Of those unfilial fears I am ashamed.
And I by my affection was beguil'd;
I see one man, of men the meekest too!
Seem vain and hollow; I find nothing great:
Nothing is left which I can venerate;
I measure back the steps which I have trod;
I tremble at the sorrow of the time.
I marked the breathings of her dragon crest:
I weigh the hopes and fears of suffering Spain;
I dropped my pen; and listened to the Wind
I saw, in wondrous perspective displayed,
I saw the banquet spread beneath a Dome of state,
That I, or some more favoured Bard, may hear
Not unrejoiced I see thee climb the sky
Once more, heart-cheering Sue, I bid thee hail!
All nature seems to hear me while I speak,
Brugsé I saw attired with golden light.
Then would I seek the Pyrenean Breach
I listen—but no faculty of mine
I ask in vain—and know far less
Vallombrosa I longed in thy shadiest wood
Could I leave thee unseen, and not yield to regret?

Twice-glorified fields! if in sadness I turned
From the climate of myrtles contended I go.

Trembling, I look upon the secret springs
Enough: my Country's cliffs I can behold,
Such ground I from my very heart enjoy!
Stirs not; enrapt I gaze with strange delight,
How can I give thee license to depart?
All that I saw returns upon my view,
All that I heard comes back upon my ear,
All that I felt this moment doth renew;
I move at ease; and meet contending themes
Where Mortal never breathed I dare to sit
The aspect I behold of every zone;
Treasures I gained with zeal that neither feared
But here am I fast bound; and let it pass,
That I—so near the term to human life
Of that high Convent-crested cliff I stood,
From Knowledge!—If the Muse, whom I have served
Reclined, shall I have yielded up my soul
I saw far off the dark top of a Pine
Near Anio's stream I spied a gentle Dove
Oft have I heard the Nightingale and Thrush
"Vallombrosa—I longed in thy shadiest wood
Vallombrosa I of thee I first heard in the page
I repose, nor am forced from sweet fancy to part,
I stood, and gazed upon a marble stone,
I gazed with earnestness, and dared no more.
Bold with the thought, in reverence I sat down,
I feign not; witness that unwelcome shock
Warblers I heard their joy unbosoming
I gladly commune with the mind and heart
O Brother! I revere the choice
A pleased attention I may win
I seek the birthplace of a native Stream,—
That told of days long past, when here I roved
Return, Content! for fondly I pursued,
Nor have I tracked their course for scanty gains;
I rose while yet the cattle, heat-oppress'd,
I thanked the Leader of my onward way.
I choose to saunter o'er the grassy plain,
I thought of Thee, my partner and my guide,
For, backward, Duddon! as I cast my eyes,
I see what was, and is, and will abide;
When first I looked on Yarrow;
I stood, looked, listened, and with Thee,
When first I gazed upon her;
Beheld what I had feared to see,
And dearer still, as now I feel,
Once on those steps I roamed at large, and have
Then why repine that now in vain I crave
If I with this bright Creature go:
I, who accompanied with faithful pace
I, who essayed the nobler Stream to trace
I mark thee, Richard! urgent to equip
I watch thee sailing o'er the midland brine;
I saw the figure of a lovely Maid
For she was one I loved exceedingly;
But while I gazed in tender reverie
Had bound the flowers I wore, with faithful tie
I saw a Mother's eye intensely bent
A crown for Hope!—I read the boasted lights
Untouched by due regret I marked your fall!
Even while I speak, the sacred roofs of Françoë

I—continued.

A stream is heard—I see it not, but know
Informs my spirit, ne'er can I believe
But, rooted here, I stand and gaze
From thee, if I would swerve;
I slight them all; and, on this sea-beat shore
In kindred quiet I repose my seat.
So may I hope, if truly I repeat
And meekly bear the ills which bear I must:
Oft have I caught, upon a fitful breeze,
I chiefly call, the chosen Few,
"Nor less I deem that there are Powers
Conversing as I may,
I sit upon this old grey stone,
I heard a thousand blended notes,
While in a grove I sat reclined,
Their thoughts I cannot measure:—
And I must think, do all I can,
Have I not reason to lament
I marvel how Nature could ever find space
And I for five centuries right gladly would be
Then come, my Sister! come, I pray,
My gentle Reader, I perceive
What more I have to say is short,
I struck, and with a single blow
The tangled root I severed,
Thy life I would gladly sustain
For Matthew a request I make
"Our work," said I, "was well begun,
Methinks, I see him stand,
A pair of friends, though I was young,
I am not One who much or oft delight
There find I personal themes, a plenteous store,
Matter wherein right voluble I am,
To which I listen with a ready ear;
Nor can I not believe but that hereby
Great gains are mine; for thus I live remote
Hence have I genial seasons, hence have I
Then gladly would I end my mortal days.
This lamentable tale I tell!
I, loving freedom, and untried;
Thy timely mandate, I deferred
But thee I now would serve more strictly, if I may.
I supplicate for thy control;
I feel the weight of chance-desires:
I long for a repose that ever is the same.
Denial and restraint I prize
I call thee; I myself commend
If I, a bard of ebbing time,
Loth should I be to use it: passing sweet.

Yet will I temperately rejoice;

I gaze upon a Portrait whose mild gleam
And I, grown old, but in a happier land,
On thee I look, not sorrowing; fare thee well,
From whose serene companionship I passed
And guidance have I sought in dutious love
I—of whose touch the fiddle would complain,
An eye of fancy only can I cast.
But these poetic mysteries I withhold;
A glimpse I caught of that Abode, by Thee

Nor ever was; I sighed, and left the spot.

I leave unsearched: enough that memory clings,
While musing here I sit in shadow cool,

I saw; and Fancy sped
I know an aged Man constrained to dwell
Once I could hail (how'er serene the sky)
Nought I perceived within it dull or dim;
I saw (ambition quickening at the view)
On her I looked whom jocund Fairies love,
And when I learned to mark the spectral Shape
Thy dark Associate ever I discern;
While I salute my joys, thoughts sad or stern;
Two poor old Dames, as I have known,
Or some deep chestnut grove, oft have I paused
Hence, on my patrimonial grounds, have I
I saw an aged Beggar in my walk;
Him from my childhood have I known; and then
Oft have I seen it muffed up from harm,
But lately, one rough day, this Flower I passed
I stopped, and said with inly-muttered voice,

And, in my spleen, I smiled that it was grey.

What feats would I work with my magical hand!
Old Man! whom so oft I with pity have eyed,
I love thee, and love the sweet Boy at thy side:
I come, ye little noisy Crew,
I heard the blessing which to you
I kissed his cheek before he died;
I raised, while kneeling by his side,
I was thy neighbour once, thou rugged Pile!
Four summer weeks I dwelt in sight of thee:
I saw thee every day; and all the while
Whene'er I looked, thy Image still was there;

I could have fancied that the mighty Deep
To express what then I saw; and add the gleam,
I would have planted thee, thou hoary Pile
Such Picture would I at that time have made:
I have submitted to a new control:
This, which I know, I speak with mind serene.
If he had lived, of Him whom I deplore,
This work of thine I blame not, but commend;
I love to see the look with which it braves,
I welcome thee once more:
For Him in vain I seek,
I spok' (but let that pang be still)
I saw the Bird depart.
Affecting type of him I mourn!
And grieve, and know that I must grieve,
Full soon in sorrow did I weep,
Glad am I, glad that it is past;
But they as well as I have gains;—
Even here I feel it, even this Plant.
Sad was I, even to pain depress,
Did I deliver this unfinished Song;
I saw the Stream of Yarrow glide
When last along its banks I wandered.
I gazed from Hampstead's breezy heath.
Turn wheresoe'er I may,
The things which I have seen I now can see no more.
But yet I know, wheres'er I go,
And I again am strong:
I hear the Echoes through the mountains throng,
Ye bless'd Creatures, I have heard the call
The fulness of your bliss, I feel—I feel it all.
Oh evil day! if I were sullen
I hear, I hear, with joy I hear!
A single Field which I have looked upon,
Not for these I raise
Yet in my heart of hearts I feel your might;
I only have relinquished one delight
I love the Brooks which down their channels fret,
Even more than when I tripped lightly as they;
Fair scenes! with other eyes, than once, I gaze,
Than when, erewhile, I taught, "a happy child"
When link'd with thoughtless Mirth I cours'd the
plain,
While, Memory at my side, I wander here,
I love beside the flowing lake to stray,
I hear, while in the forest depth he sees,
Ev'n now I sigh at hoary Chartreuse' doom
I lov'd, mid thy most desert woods astray,
Once did I pierce to where a cabin stood,
But now with other soul I stand alone.
—I see him, up the midway cliff he creeps
Yes I will see you when ye first behold
At such an hour I heav'd the human sigh,
615 Desc. Sk. Quarto 702
While thus I mused, methought, before mine eyes,
I gazed upon the visionary train,
"I look'd obedience: the celestial Fair
—On the slope of a mountain I stood,
In the pain of my spirit I said,
And with a deep sadness I turned, to repair
I pause; and at length, through the glimmering
grate,
I hate that Andrew Jones: he'll breed
I wish the press-gang or the drum
On Nature's invitation do I come,
But either She whom now I have, who now
Now in the clear and open day I feel
Your guardianship; I take it to my heart;
But I would call thee beautiful, for mild
A single Glow-worm did I chance to espy;
I gave a fervent welcome to the sight,
And from my Horse I leapt; great joy had I.
Upon a leaf the Glow-worm did I lay,
When to the Dwelling of my Love I came,
I went into the Orchard quietly:
The whole next day, I hoped, and hoped with fear;
I led my Lucy to the spot, "Look here!"
I find it written of Simonides
And now by duty urged, I lay this Book
From the vast city, where I long had pined
Free as a bird to settle where I will.
I cannot miss my way. I breathe again!
Thus far, O Friend! did I, not used to make Recorded; to the open fields I told
To both I listened, drawing from them both
A respite to this passion, I paced on
To a green shady place, where down I sat
Of the one cottage which methought I saw.
I gazed with growing love, a higher power
Perhaps too there performed. Thus long I mused,
Nor e'er lost sight of what I mused upon,
From that soft couch I rose not, till the sun
But as a Pilgrim resolute, I took
So, like a home-bound labourer, I pursued
I spare to tell of what ensued, the life
I might endure some airy phantasies
For such an arduous work, I through myself
Nor am I asked of external things.
Time, place, and manners do I seek, and these
Within the groves of Chivalry, I pipe
Sometimes, more sternly moved, I would relate

But from this awful burthen I full soon
That I recoil and droop, and seek repose
Where I was looking on, a babe in arms,
Oh, many a time have I, a five years' child,
Beneath the sky, as if I had been born
Fair seed-time had my soul, and I grew up
Scudding away from snare to snare, I plied
Were shining o'er my head. I was alone,
I heard among the solitary hills
While on the perilous ridge I hung alone,
The calm existence that is mine when I
Straight I unloosed her chain, and stepping in
With an unswerving line, I fixed my view
I dipped my oars into the silent lake,
And, as I rose upon the stroke, my boat
Upreared its head. I struck and struck again,
Strode after me. With trembling oars I turned,
There in her mooring-place I left my bark,—
Beneath the gloomy hills homeward I went
I heeded not their summons: happy time
The village clock tolled six,—I wheeled about,
Not seldom from the uproar I retired
Have I, reclining back upon my heels,
I could record with no reluctant voice
The heart is almost mine with which I felt,
Nor, sedulous as I have been to trace
Yes, I remember when the changeful earth,
I held unconscious intercourse with beauty
Where I might be discomfited and lost:
After long absence, thither I repaired,
And to my Friend who knows me I may add,
And I was taught to feel, perhaps too much,
Even in this joyous time, sometimes felt
Grew dear to me: already I began
To love the sun; a boy I loved the sun,
Not as I since have loved him, as a pledge
For its own pleasure, and I breathed with joy.
For I could dream away my purposes,
I held mute dialogues with my Mother's heart,
Sublimar joy; for I would walk alone,
Thence did I drink the visionary power;
I travelled round our little lake, five miles
Nor seldom did I lift our cottage latch
Faith in the marvellous things which then I felt?
In which I walked with Nature. But let this
I had received so much, that all my thoughts
Were steeped in feeling; I was only then
I felt the sentiment of Being spread.
If high the transport, great the joy I felt
If in my youth I have been pure in heart,
If, mingling with the world, I am content
I speak, unapprehensive of contempt,
Some friends I had, acquaintances who there
Of welcome faces up and down I roved;
I was the Dreamer, they the Dream; I roamed
My lordly dressing-gown, I pass it by,
I was disturbed at times by prudent thoughts,
A feeling that I was not for that hour,
And as I paced alone the level fields
I looked for universal things; perused
I called on both to teach me what they might;
I gave a moral life: I saw them feel,
That I heheld respired with inward meaning,
I was as sensitive as waters are.
Unknown, unthought of, yet I was most rich—
I had a world about me—'twas my own;
I made it, for it only lived to me,
And here, O Friend! have I retraced my life
This genuine prowess, which I wished to touch
I am not heartless, for there's not a man
We must descend. A Traveller I am,
Though I had learnt betimes to stand unpropred,
That spells seemed on me when I was alone,
Yet could I only cleave to solitude
That way I leaned by nature; for my heart
I laughed with Chaucer in the hawthorn shade;
I called him Brother, Englishman, and Friend!
An awful soul—I seemed to see him here
One of a festive circle, I poured out
My surprise, through the inferior throng I clove
I am ashamed of them; and that great Bard,
For I, bred up 'mid Nature's luxuries,
As I had done in daily intercourse
I was ill-tutored for captivity.
Not that I slighted books,—that were to lack
(If now I yield not to a flattering dream)
To a schoolboy's vision, I had raised a pile
In vain for such solemnity I looked;
I grieve not; happy is the gown'd youth,
Who only misses what I missed, who falls
No lower than I fell. I did not love,
From these I turned to travel with the shoal
In serious mood, but oftener, I confess,
Those shepherd swains whom I had lately left,
I cannot say what portion is in truth
I overlooked the bed of Windermere,
With exultation, at my feet I saw
I bounded down the hill shouting aim
I did not step into the well-known boat
Up the familiar hill I took my way

I—continued.

Towards that sweet Valley where I had been reared ;
 I saw the snow-white church upon her hill
 With eager footsteps I advance and reach . . .
 Glad welcome had I, with some tears, perhaps,
 Can beat never will I forget thy name.
 Why should I speak of what a thousand hearts
 I looked at him and smiled, and smiled again,
 "Ha," quoth I, "pretty prisoner, are you there!"
 I willing, nay—nay, wishing to be led . . .
 A Poet's history, may I leave untold . . .
 The thankfulness with which I laid me down
 Along my veins I kindled with the stir,
 Tired, and uneasy at the halts I made . . .
 I have been harassed with the toil of verse,
 Then have I darted forwards to let loose
 I sauntered, like a river murmuring . . .
 Little, in this abstraction, did I see ;
 Thus musing, in a wood I sat me down
 I turned my head to look if he were there ;
 Then into solemn thought I passed once more.
 A freshness also found I at this time
 Yes, I had something of a subtler sense,
 I read, without design, the opinions, thoughts,
 I saw the quiet woodman in the woods,
 With thoughts unfelt till now I saw her read
 Which I had loved, even as a blessed spirit
 There was an inner falling off—I loved,
 It seemed the very garments that I wore
 Of manners put to school I took small note,
 My heart was full ; I made no vows, but vows
 Was given, that I should be, else sinning greatly,
 A dedicated Spirit. On I walked . . .
 The worth I knew of powers that I possessed,
 I left the shady nook where I had stood
 This heard, I said, in pity, "Come with me."
 And so we parted. Back I cast a look,
 Even then I sometimes grieve for thee, O Man,
 A thought is with me sometimes, and I say,—
 While I was seated in a rocky cave
 While listlessly I sat, and, having closed
 I mused ; upon these chiefly : and at length,
 Sleep seized me, and I passed into a dream.
 I saw before me stretched a boundless plain
 And as I looked around, distress and fear
 Much I rejoiced, not doubting but a guide
 I looked and looked, self-questioned what this freight
 That I should hold it to my ear. I did so,
 Which yet I understood, articulate sounds,
 I wondered not, although I plainly saw
 Far stronger, now, grew the desire I felt
 To cleave unto this man ; but when I prayed
 Reckless of me : I followed, not unseem,
 He rode, I keeping pace with him ; and now
 He left me : I called after him aloud ;
 In chase of him ; whereto I waked in terror,
 This Arab phantom, which I thus beheld,
 This semi-Quixote, I to him have given
 Nor have I pitied him ; but rather felt
 When I have held a volume in my hand,
 How could I ever play an ingrate's part ?
 Once more should I have made those bowers
 resound,
 Rarely and with reluctance would I stoop
 To transitory themes ; yet I rejoice,
 Nor would I praise her but in perfect love.
 A long half hour together I have stood
 That self-same village church ; I see her sit
 While I was roving up and down alone,
 Seeking I knew not what, I chanced to cross
 Young as I was, a child not nine years old,
 A precious treasure had I long possessed,
 That golden store of books which I had left,
 For a whole day together, have I lain
 And there have read, devouring as I read,
 I to the sport betook myself again . . .
 I guess not what this tells of Being past,
 Almost to tears I sometimes could be sad
 But with no settled plan. I was detached
 Have I been now a sojourner on earth,
 Did I by night frequent the College groves
 Than I beheld loitering on calm clear nights
 And yet the books which then I valued most
 I was a better judge of thoughts than words,
 In these enquiries, with regret I speak,
 More frequently from the same source I drew
 This I repeat, was mine ; mine be the blame.
 Or scenes renowned for beauty, I explored
 I, too, have been a wanderer ; but, alas !
 I heard it then, and seem to hear it now—
 But to my conscious soul I now can say—
 "I recognise thy glory : " in such strength
 But here I must break off, and bid farewell
 I seemed to move along them, as a bird
 I wanted not that joy, I did not need
 Six changeful years have vanished since I first
 A glad preamble to this Verse : I sang
 Through the whole summer have I been at rest,
 Smote me, and, listening, in his whispers said,
 "Ye heartsome Choristers, ye and I will be

I—continued.

At full command, to London first I turned,
 Since I had felt in heart and soul the shock
 Recall what then I pictured to myself,
 And now I looked upon the living scene ;
 Enough ;—the mighty concourse I surveyed
 At leisure, then, I viewed, from day to day,
 I heard, and for the first time in my life,
 I shuddered, for a barrier seemed at once
 Of these, I feel the imaginative power . . .
 For though I was most passionately moved
 As at a glance, the things which I had shaped,
 I mused, and thought, and felt, in solitude,
 I glanced but at a few conspicuous marks . . .
 I did not hunt after, nor greatly prize,
 Have I gone forward with the crowd, and said
 Thus have I looked, nor ceased to look, oppressed
 Amid the moving pageant, I was smitten . . .
 This did I feel, in London's vast domain . . .
 With deep devotion, Nature, did I feel,
 Where I was reared ; in Nature's primitive gifts
 I felt his presence in his own domain . . .
 Angling I went, or trod the trackless hills . . .
 Of this I little saw, cared less for it,
 I had my face turned toward the truth, began
 Preserved, I moved about, year after year,
 Through quaint obliquities I might pursue
 Upon this restless lustre have I gazed,
 Nor could I have been bribed to disenchant
 I did not pine like one in cities bred,
 Loitering, I watched the golden beams of light
 I did, by human sympathy impelled ; . . .
 London, to thee I willingly return . . .
 But how could I in mood so light indulge,
 Power growing under weight : alas ! I feel
 That I am trifling : 'twas a moment's pause,—
 Even in such sort had I at first been moved,
 As I explored the vast metropolis,
 The human nature unto which I felt
 That I belonged, and revered with love,
 There I conversed with majesty and power
 I ranged at large, through London's wide domain,
 Mouth after month. Obscurely did I live,
 Ere I forsook the crowded solitude,
 Exposed to eye and hand where'er I turned,
 France lured me forth ; the realm that I had crossed
 With motion constant as his own, I went . . .
 I saw the Revolutionary Power . . .
 The Arcades I traversed, in the Palace huge
 I stared and listened, with a stranger's ears,
 Of the Bastille, I sat in the open sun,
 I looked for something that I could not find,
 Affecting more emotion than I felt ;
 I stood, 'mid those concussions, unconcerned,
 Which may seem strange : but I was unprepared
 Like others, I had skimmed, and sometimes read
 Did I frequent the formal haunts of men,
 Proved tedious, and I gradually withdrew
 Now do I feel how all men are deceived . . .
 If at the first great outbreak rejoiced
 Into mine eyes : I do not say I weep—
 I wept not then,—but tears have dimmed my sight,
 With him did I discourse about the end
 And I, who at that time was scarcely dipped
 Toil, say I, for it leads to thoughts abstruse—
 Of whom I speak. So BEAUPUV (let the name
 From earnest dialogues I slipped in thought,
 Sometimes methought I saw a pair of knights
 I could not but bewail a wrong so harsh,
 And on these spots with many gleams I looked
 That we are fighting," I with him believed . . .
 Dread nothing ? From this height I shall not stoop
 When by the gliding Loire I paused, and cast
 Cheered with this hope, to Paris I returned,
 I crossed the square (an empty area then !)
 I felt most deeply in what world I was,
 What ground I trod on, and what air I breathed.
 With unextinguished taper I kept watch,
 I thought of those September massacres,
 And in this way I wrought upon myself,
 Until I seemed to hear a voice that cried,
 Far was I, far as angels are from guilt.
 Yet did I grieve, nor only grieved, but thought
 Service however dangerous. I revolved,
 To England I returned, else (though assured
 Doubtless, I should have then made common cause
 A patriot of the world, how could I glide
 Now was I from that pleasant station torn
 And tossed about in whirlwind. I rejoiced,
 I only, like an uninvited guest
 Whom no one owned, sate silent, shall I add,
 Such ghastly visions had I of despair . . .
 In long orations, which I strove to plead
 Under worst trials, was I driven to think
 Of the glad times when first I traversed France
 I paced, a dear companion at my side,
 Then schemes I framed more calmly, when and how
 Of exultation, I pursued my way
 Along that very shore which I had skimmed
 But from these bitter truths I must return . . .

I—continued.

That I was led to take an eager part . . . 728 Prelude 11. 76
 Why should I not confess that Earth was then . . . 729 Prelude 11. 145
 An active partisan, I thus convoked . . . 729 Prelude 11. 153
 I had but lent a careless ear, assured . . . 730 Prelude 11. 191
 I scorned indifference; but, inflamed with thirst . . . 731 Prelude 11. 248
 I summoned my best skill, and toiled, intent . . . 731 Prelude 11. 279
 What then I learned, or think I learned, of truth, . . . 731 Prelude 11. 286
 And the errors into which I fell, betrayed . . . 731 Prelude 11. 287
 This the soul's last and lowest ebb; I drooped, . . . 731 Prelude 11. 307
 Depressed, bewildered thus, I did not walk . . . 732 Prelude 11. 321
 Of intellect; such sloth I could not brook, . . . 732 Prelude 11. 325
 (Too well I loved, in that my spring of life, . . . 732 Prelude 11. 326
 Much, as it seemed, I was no further changed . . . 732 Prelude 11. 343
 Descending, have I faithfully retraced . . . 732 Prelude 11. 372
 I feel for thee, must utter what I feel: . . . 733 Prelude 11. 405
 I learnt to dream of Sicily; and lo, . . . 733 Prelude 11. 426
 I hear thee tell how bees with honey fed . . . 733 Prelude 11. 443
 Oh! that I had a music and a voice . . . 734 Prelude 12. 29
 Harmonious as your own, that I might tell . . . 734 Prelude 12. 30
 I saw the Spring return, and could rejoice, . . . 735 Prelude 12. 33
 Glorifying, I found a counterpoise in her, . . . 735 Prelude 12. 41
 So was I favoured—such my happy lot— . . . 735 Prelude 12. 49
 In such strange passion, if I may once more . . . 735 Prelude 12. 75
 Review the past, I warred against myself— . . . 735 Prelude 12. 76
 Was scanned, as I had scanned the moral world? . . . 735 Prelude 12. 92
 I daily waited, now all eye and now . . . 735 Prelude 12. 99
 I roamed from hill to hill, from rock to rock, . . . 736 Prelude 12. 143
 I loved what'er I saw: nor lightly loved, . . . 737 Prelude 12. 176
 I felt, observed, and pondered; did not judge, . . . 737 Prelude 12. 188
 Roaming, I carried with me the same heart: . . . 737 Prelude 12. 192
 For this to last: I shook the habit off . . . 737 Prelude 12. 204
 In Nature's presence stood, as now I stand, . . . 737 Prelude 12. 206
 I led my horse, and, stumbling on, at length . . . 737 Prelude 12. 234
 I roamed, in daily presence of this scene, . . . 738 Prelude 12. 263
 I see by glimpses now; when age comes on, . . . 738 Prelude 12. 281
 Feverish, and tired, and restless, I went forth . . . 738 Prelude 12. 289
 I sat half-sheltered by a naked wall; . . . 738 Prelude 12. 299
 With those companions at my side, I watched, . . . 738 Prelude 12. 302
 And I and my three brothers, orphans then, . . . 738 Prelude 12. 308
 I looked in such anxiety of hope; . . . 739 Prelude 12. 313
 Yet in the deepest passion, I howed low . . . 739 Prelude 12. 315
 To speak, what I myself have known and felt; . . . 740 Prelude 13. 13
 Long time in search of knowledge did I range . . . 740 Prelude 13. 16
 I had been taught to reverence a Power . . . 740 Prelude 13. 20
 Thus moderated, thus composed, I found . . . 740 Prelude 13. 48
 Again I took the intellectual eye . . . 740 Prelude 13. 52
 Ambitious projects, pleased me less; I sought . . . 741 Prelude 13. 51
 Sought you enriched with everything I prized, . . . 741 Prelude 13. 118
 Where I could meditate in peace, and cull . . . 742 Prelude 13. 131
 Awe'd have I been by strolling Bedlamites; . . . 742 Prelude 13. 157
 To watch and question those I met, and speak . . . 742 Prelude 13. 161
 Were open schools in which I daily read . . . 742 Prelude 13. 163
 I prized such walks still more, for there I found . . . 742 Prelude 13. 179
 —Yes, in those wanderings deeply did I feel . . . 743 Prelude 13. 206
 Here might I pause, and bend in reverence . . . 743 Prelude 13. 224
 Of these, said I, shall be my song; of these, . . . 743 Prelude 13. 232
 Will I record the praises, making verse . . . 743 Prelude 13. 234
 Where it is due: to thus haply shall I teach, . . . 743 Prelude 13. 238
 That I have dared to tread this holy ground, . . . 743 Prelude 13. 252
 There, as I ranged at will the pastoral downs . . . 744 Prelude 13. 315
 I called on Darkness—but before the word . . . 744 Prelude 13. 327
 Three summer days I roamed) where'er the Plain . . . 745 Prelude 13. 337
 The constellations—gently was I charmed . . . 745 Prelude 13. 342
 That, with believing eyes, where'er I turned, . . . 745 Prelude 13. 344
 I seemed about this time to gain clear sight . . . 745 Prelude 13. 369
 I left Bethgler's huts at couching-time, . . . 746 Prelude 14. 4
 And I, as charmed, the foremost of the band; . . . 746 Prelude 14. 34
 There I beheld the emblem of a mind . . . 747 Prelude 14. 70
 Never did I, in quest of right and wrong, . . . 748 Prelude 14. 150
 Which I from the imbibed: and 'tis most true . . . 749 Prelude 14. 235
 Of all that unassisted I had marked . . . 749 Prelude 14. 240
 I too exclusively esteemed that love, . . . 749 Prelude 14. 244
 Shall I be silent? O capacious Soul! . . . 750 Prelude 14. 277
 Shall I be mute, ere thou be spoken of? . . . 750 Prelude 14. 280
 What'er was wanting, something had I gained, . . . 750 Prelude 14. 331
 Since I withdrew unwillingly from France, . . . 751 Prelude 14. 349
 I led an undomestic wanderer's life, . . . 751 Prelude 14. 350
 In London chiefly harboured, whence I roamed, . . . 751 Prelude 14. 351
 And I have other tasks. Recall to mind . . . 751 Prelude 14. 372
 I said unto the life which I had lived, . . . 751 Prelude 14. 377
 Where art thou! Hear I not a voice from thee . . . 751 Prelude 14. 378
 Which 'tis reproach to hear? Anon I rose . . . 751 Prelude 14. 379
 And I, associate with such labour, steeped . . . 752 Prelude 14. 402
 In youth I roamed, on youthful pleasures bent; . . . 753 Of, through 5
 —Now, by thy care befriended, I appear . . . 753 Of, through 5
 Gladly would I have waited till my task . . . 753 Of, through 9
 Therefore, for what is here produced, I ask . . . 753 Of, through 12
 Musing in solitude, I oft perceive . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 755
 And I am conscious of affecting thoughts . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 759
 I would give utterance in numerous verse . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 766
 I sing:—'fit audience let me find though few! . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 770
 In holiest mood. Urania, I shall need . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 778
 For I must tread on shadowy ground, must stork . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 781
 I pass them unalarmed. Not Chaos, not . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 788
 Would I arouse the sensual from their sleep . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 813
 Hearing, I he not downcast or forlorn! — . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 835
 I mix more lowly matter; with the thing . . . 755 Recluse 1. 1. 847
 Across a bare wide Common I was toiling . . . 756 Excursion 1. 21
 The Friend I sought; a Man of reverend age, . . . 756 Excursion 1. 33
 With slackened footsteps I advanced, and soon . . . 757 Excursion 1. 46

I—continued.

Unnoticed did I stand some minutes' space. . . 762 Excursion 1. 443
 The old Man ceased: he saw that I was moved; . . . 770 Excursion 1. 917
 I turned aside in weakness, nor had power . . . 770 Excursion 1. 919
 I blessed her in the impotence of grief. . . 770 Excursion 1. 924
 What wonder, then, if I, whose favourite school . . . 772 Excursion 2. 28
 And I at once forgot I was a Stranger. . . 772 Excursion 2. 61
 I, more impatient in my downward course, . . . 777 Excursion 2. 408
 And pleased I looked upon my grey-haired Friend, . . . 781 Excursion 2. 658
 I looked for counsel as unbending now; . . . 817 Excursion 4. 1104
 Again I halted with reverted eyes; . . . 822 Excursion 5. 17
 How vain, thought I, is it by change of place . . . 822 Excursion 5. 20
 I saw the Tenant of the lonely vale . . . 825 Excursion 5. 210
 I was abruptly summoned by the sound . . . 826 Excursion 5. 239
 —For me, I looked upon the pair, well pleased: . . . 829 Excursion 5. 452
 A wandering Youth, I listened with delight . . . 857 Excursion 7. 9
 Their place I took—and for a grateful office . . . 891 Excursion 9. 483
 A Youth, I practised this delightful art; . . . 891 Excursion 9. 486
 Was cleared, I dipped, with arms accordant, oars . . . 891 Excursion 9. 489
 "Turn where we may," said I, "we cannot err . . . 891 Excursion 9. 503

- Blithe Autumn's purple crown, and Winter's icy mail !
 Rest not in hope wain't icy chain to thaw
 And icy cold he turned away
 Like frost he thought his heart was icy cold ;
 While far and wide the icy summits blaze
 And tempt the icy valley yawning deep,
 Ev'n to the summer door his icy tide,
 The icy brooks, as on we passed, appeared
 The leafless trees and every icy crag
- I'd. (Partial list.) See 1.
 I'd wager on his life for twenty years
 'Tis a wild night, I'd give my cloak and honnet
 I'd rather see my father's ghost, My Captain,
 And said, " At Kilve I'd rather be
 " Susan, I'd gladly stay with you
 Till my ribs ached I'd laugh at you !
 It moves us not,—Great God ! I'd rather be
 For I'd take my last leave both of verse and of prose
- Idalian. With Idalian rose enwreathed ?

 By a sublime idea, whenceose'er ideal. Intent to trace the ideal path of right
 Features to old ideal grace allied,
 And others of your kind, ideal crew !
 Ideal Form, the universal mould,
 Destroy the ideal Power within, 'twere done
 Pleased rather with some soft ideal scene,
 While Cam's ideal current glided by
- To closer fellowship with ideal grace
 With decoration of ideal grace ;
 Of wild ideal pageantry, shaped out
 Rose to ideal grandeur, or, called forth
 In sense conducting to ideal form,
 Surpassing the most fair ideal Forms
 To vindicate the ideal rights
- Idealising. To Spirit ; for the idealising Soul
Identify. To one identity, by differences
- idiot. Him whom you love, your Idiot Boy ?
 Him whom she loves, her Idiot Boy
 On which her Idiot Boy must ride,
 Oh ! then for the poor Idiot Boy !
 The silence of her Idiot Boy,
 Oh carry back my Idiot Boy !
 And cannot find her Idiot Boy
 Him whom she loves, her Idiot Boy
 He whom you love, your Idiot Boy
 And fast she holds her Idiot Boy
 To hear again her Idiot Boy
 Him whom she loves, her Idiot Boy ;
idiot's. The mouldy vaults of the dull idiot's brain, idle. Alas ! the idle tale of man is found
 But why, ungrateful, dwell on idle pain ?
 An idle voice the sabbath region fills
 Whole hours, with idle arms in moping sorrow knit.
 All thoughts whose idle composition lives
 Those idle Shepherd-boys upraid,
 These tears—and my poor idle tongue,
 For joy his head and heels are idle,
 He's idle all for very joy
 " A little idle sauntering Thing !"
 " Worse than idle is compassion
 To whom I sometimes in our idle talk
 And many a fond and idle name
 Love them ; and every idle breeze of air
 Among the Ruins, but no idle talk
 Too high, or idle agitations lull !
 Conjecture vague, and idle fear,
 Whence idle fears, and needless pain,
 An idle form, the Word an empty sound !
 I live and sing my idle songs
 For had thy charge been idle flowers,
 And fear not lest an idle sound
 Of idle computation, in the sun,
 Alas ! what idle words ; but take
 For him lost flowers their idle sweets exhale ;
 " Poor victim ! no idle intruder has stood
 Their veteran foes mock as an idle noise ;
 And not a voice was idle ; with the din
 Not in a mystical and idle sense,
 Transient and idle, lacked not intervals
 'Twere idle to descant, My inner judgment
 An idle dreamer ! 'Tis a common tale,
 Are like an idle matter, Still she sighed,
 Of sorrow, Yet I saw the idle loom
 Appeared an idle dream, that could maintain,
 And idle spirits—there the sun himself,
 Than the loose pendant—to the idle wind
 Tell in their idle songs of wandering gods,
 Many and idle, visits not his ear ;
 Idle,—but no delay, no harm, no loss ;
 Now too, on melancholy's idle dream
 The idle breath of softest pipe attuned

- Idleness. In very idleness
 But, for that moping Son of Idleness,
 The happy Idlers of that sweet morn,
 Or Idleness in tatters mendicant
 We'll give to idleness
 We'll give to idleness,
 Of strenuous idleness ;
 Was social, and loved idleness and joy,
 Idleness halting with his weary clog,
 Thus in submissive idleness, my Friend !
 Spent in a round of strenuous idleness—
 With gaiety and dissolute idleness
 In pensive idleness, What could he do,
 The tedium of fantastic idleness :
- Idler. Hath been an Idler in the land ;
 Such as an idler deals with in his shame,
 An Idler's place ; an idler well content
 The military Idler, and the Dame,
 An Idler among academic bowers,
 Which he, a soldier, in his idler day
- Idler's. An idler's place ; an idler well content
Idlers. Could gaze, as on a show by idlers sought ;
 That those fond Idlers most are pleased
 Half-and-half idlers, hardy recusants,
 Idlers perchance they were,—but in his sight ;
Idless. Loose Idless to forego her wily mask
Idlest. (Nor idler that !) which holds communion idly. If this be idly spoken, See, they come,
 Not idly,—Hadst thou been of Indian birth,
 Nor pity idly born,
 My heart is idly stirred,
 More than the feeblest wind that idly blows
- Small circles glittering idly in the moon,
 Erewhile my verse played idly with the flowers
 And senseless rocks ; nor idly ; for they speak,
 Then, not less idly, sought, through every nook
 How idly, how perversely, life's whole course,
 Murmurs, not idly, o'er his peaceful grave
- Idol. See Master-idol.
 They bow to, calling the idol, Demonstration,
 A grisly idol hewn in stone ?
 Pastime their idol, give their day of life
 Their monstrous Idol if the dead e'er spake,
 An Idol at her prow
 That to an Idol, falsely called " the Wealth
 (The idol weak as the idolater),
 Is worshipped in that idol proudly named
- Idolater. Born of Conceit, Power's blind Idolater ;
 (The idol weak as the idolater),
Idolatress. Boastful Idolatress of formal skill
Idolatrously. Metal or stone, idolatrously served
Idolatory. Reviving obsolete idolatry,
 Which old idolatry abused
 This is idolatry ; and these we adore :
 Ah ! if the old idolatry he spurned,
 A bigot to a new idolatry
 This age fall back to old idolatry,
 Against idolatry with warlike mind,
 And strong in hatred of idolatry
 Of that idolatry, through monkish rites idolizing. An idolizing dreamer as of yore !—
Idols. Of those terrific Idols some received
Idonea. 'Twas my delight to sit and hear Idonea
 Two Travellers ! The woman is Idonea
 On this green bank Idonea, you are silent,
 Idonea, we must part, Be not alarmed—
 And are you going then ? Come, come, Idonea,
 When you are by my side, Idonea, wolves
 I do not see Idonea, Dutiful Girl,
 Idonea would have fears for me,—the Convent
 Idonea, as he calls her ; but the Girl
 I thought I saw the skeleton of Idonea,
 While feeding on their bodies, Would that Idonea
 I hope Idonea is well housed, That horseman,
 But after that ? The features of Idonea
 He who will gain his Seignory when Idonea
 But yet I trust, Idonea, thou art safe
 Idonea ! How ! what ? your Idonea ? Mine ;
 Of God's parental mercies—with Idonea
 I interrupt you ? Think not so, Idonea,
 But for Idonea !—I have cause to think
 By whom thy Parent was destroyed, Idonea !
 Idonea ! thy blind Father on the Ordeal
- Idonea's. Where is she—holla ! You are Idonea's Mother ?—
 You thought his voice the echo of Idonea's,
 Idonea's filial countenance was there
- Idris. On Cader Idris, or huge Penmanmaur)
If, omitted.
- Ignoble. Who from ignoble games and revelry

Ignominy. To evil courses ; ignominy and shame
 As the tide ebbs, to ignominy and shame
Ignorance. If the sad grave of human ignorance bear

Ignorance—continued.

Twin sisters both of Ignorance, I found
 By ignorance defaced, 70
 Of ignorance thou might'st witness heretofore,
 Aim'd at the White Man's ignorance the while,
 Of Ignorance, that ran so rough and high
 Blest in their pious ignorance, though weak
 Hence equal ignorance of both prevails,
 With Indian awe and wonder, ignorance pleas'd
 One spirit over ignorance and vice
 And ignorance in the labouring multitude.
 Through ignorance and false teaching, sadder proof
 And ignorance fill'd up from age to age,
 Long time have human ignorance and guilt
 With toil, he therefore yoked with ignorance;
 And by his nature's, ignorance, dismayed!
 Not doomed to ignorance, though forced to tread,
 From unreflecting ignorance preserved,
 Of a most rustic ignorance, and take
 Of ignorance or illusion) lives and breathes
 To breathe beneath a vault of ignorance?
 And mortal ignorance and frailty claim,
 The slave of ignorance, and oft of want,
 By indigence, their ignorance is not less,
 And, if that ignorance were removed, which breeds
 Let Ignorance o'er the monster swarms preside,
Ignorant. - Why am I ignorant of the same
 But worse, more ignorant in love and hate,
 And Victory sickens, ignorant where to rest!
 That I was ignorant, had been falsely taught,
 When Robespierre, not ignorant for what mark
 Faltering and faint, and ignorant of the road:
 Not ignorant was the Youth that still no few
 Was wholly ignorant that my ancient Friend—
 Wide, sluggish, blank, and ignorant, and strange—
Ilex. Albano's dripping Ilex avenue,
 Of Ilex, or, if better suited to the hour,
Hissus. Hissus, bending o'er thy classic urn!
Ilium. Hath come! we have been Trojans, Ilium was 3 Ilium's. That Ilium's walls were subject to their view 212
Ill. He hoped, to calm her mind; but ill he sped,
 "But ill they suited me—those journeys dark
 Were not for me, brought up in nothing ill:
 Suffering not doing ill—fate far more mild.
 (I wot not what ill tongue has wronged him with you)
 This charge of thine, then ill befall thee!—Look,
 I owe him no ill will, but in good sooth
 Ill names, can render no ill services,
 Ill can I bear that look—Plead for me, Oswald!
 'Tis that worst principle of ill which dooms
 that my ill stars have kept me abroad to-night
 Ill fitted to sustain unkindly shocks,
 No ill was feared; till one of them by chance
 What ill was on him, what he had to do,
 I thought he knew some ill of me:
 From that ill thought; and, being blind,
 "—I cannot help it; ill intent
 "If Susan had not been so ill,
 If I judge ill for thee, but it seems good
 —Ill suits the road with one in haste; but we ill befall the yellow flowers,
 Thy quiet with no ill intent,
 On working out an ill intent?
 And now doth fare ill
 But ill he lived, much evil saw,
 Nor ever taxed them with the ill
 What this imported I could ill divine:
 That privilege by virtue.—"Ill," said he,
 Sharpen the keenest edge of present ill—
 Through twilight shades of good and ill
 Ill health of body; and had pined
 Of moral prudence, sought through good and ill;
 If ill befits us to disdain
 That ill supports the objection fig;
 If with his vows this ill I agree;
 Spake bitter words; words that did ill agree
 Ill sight! but grief may vanish ere the morrow."
 Would ill suffice for persons and events:
 He serves the Muses erringly and ill,
 Ill tears she wept; I saw them fall,
 His parting charge—but ill obeyed—
 Which ill can brook more rational relief:
 And turn the instruments of good to ill,
 Into the pensive heart ill fortified,
 And ill requited by this heartfelt sigh!
 Perversely curious, then, for hidden ill
 Which I could ill confine;
 To evil for a guard against worse ill,
 Seek for the good and cherish it—the ill
 Against far heavier ill, the pestilence
 Of Prudence, disentangling good and ill
 Joy based on sorrow, good with ill combined,
 Might soothe in human breasts the sense of ill,
 Darkening the window, ill defends the door
 Stricken by this ill assurance
 Ill fed she was, and thinly clad;
 What may your ill intentions you avail?

Ill—continued.

And who was then ill satisfied but I?
 Fie, quoth she, on thy name, Bird ill heseen!
 He lets them perish through that grievous ill.
 Would ill suffice: for Plato's lore sublime,
 With learn'd ears may ill agree,
 From ill we meet or good we miss,
 And the worse fear of future ill (which oft
 But chiefly Dido, to the coming ill
 But ill sustained, and almost (so it seem'd)
 Judging not ill perhaps, the timid course
 Of good or ill report; or those with whom
 With an astonishment but ill suppressed,
 From things well-matched or ill, and words for things,
 To human-kind, and to the good and ill
 And ill could brook, beholding that the best
 The man who had an ill surmise of him
 That voice, ill requiem! seldom heard by me
 And fellowships of men, and see ill sights
 This, in itself not ill, would yet have been ill borne in earlier life; but his was now
 Where knowledge, ill begun in cold remark
 But ill accordi'ng. An heraldic shield,
 To see disclosed, by such dread proof, how ill
 With neither element of good or ill;
 As with her office would but ill accord)
 Ill purposes, and flatter foul desires.
 (Ill home for bird so gentle), they looked down
 Ill neighbourhood—pity that this should be—
Ill. (Partial list.) See I.
 But I'll be even with him—here again
 Against this venerable Man? I'll tell you:
 Well then, says I—I'll hit you with it; at which
 And long as I can stir ill dog him.—Yesterday,
 I'll answer for it that our four-legged friend
 Shall not disturb us; further I'll not engage;
 I'll lead you to the spot.
 And I'll build up a giant with you
 Then I'll yoke thee to my cart like a pony in the plough;
 I'll follow you across the snow;
 I'll look upon your tents again;
 I'll call thee by my darling's name;
 I'll tell him many tales of Thee."
 Good Susan tell me, and I'll stay;
 I'll to the wood.—The word scarce said,
 I'll build an Indian bower; I know
 "I'll teach my boy the sweetest things:
 I'll teach him how the owl sings
 I'll hurl thee headlong with the rock
 Little Flower—I'll make a stir,
 I'll think of the Leech-gatherer on the lonely moor!"
 "I'll build a pleasure-house upon this spot,
 But through the clouds I'll never float
 I'll fling your carcass like a log
 I'll be a son to thee!"
 By Jove I'll be in,
 By her side I'll take my place,
Ill-adjusted. An ill-adjusted turban, for defence
Ill-advised. Of ill-advised Ambition and of Pride
Ill-conditioned. The Mastiff, ill-conditioned car!
Ill-constructed. Is fashioned like an ill-constructed tale;
Ill-done. Impatiently, ill-done, or left undone,
Ill-fated. Ill-fated Ruth, in hallowed mould
 Ill-fated Chief! there are whose hopes are built
 When this ill-fated Traveller died,
 Ill-fated Vessel!—ghastly shock!
 The ill-fated pair) in that plain tale will draw Ill-gotten. He paid what he could with his ill-gotten pelf,
Ill-governed. Ill-governed passions, rankings of despite,
Ill-graced. Thus (where the intrusive Pile, ill-graced
Illimitable. Roaming the illimitable waters round;
 Went hurrying o'er the illimitable waste,
Ill-judging. Oh, ill-judging sire of an innocent son Ill-matched. With ill-matched aims the Architect who planned—
 There, 'mid a peal of ill-matched sounds and cries,
Illness. Shall feign a sudden illness, and the Girl,
 "A sudden illness seized her in the strength Ill-omening. The censures, and ill-omening of those Ill-required. Ill-required upon earth;
 For ill-required France, by many deemed
 From ill-required labour turned adrift
Ills. And tears which fowed for ill which patience might not heal,
 Cold, pain, and labour, and all fleshly ills;
 And meekly bear the ills which bear I must:
 But who (though neither reckoning ills assigned
 Be wanting that sometimes, where fancied ills
 Be the dead load of mortal ills forgot,
 Some tempting island, could but know the ills
 Hence, amid ills that vex and wrongs that crush Ill-sheltered. Ill-sheltered, and oft wanting fire and food;
Ill-sorted. (Like those ill-sorted unions, worksupposed Ill-sustained. These hardships ill-sustained, these dangers past,

Ill-timed. This humble tribute as ill-timed or vain.
Ill-tutored. I was ill-tutored for captivity;
Illume. Bright beams the lonely mountain-horse
 illumine
 Deep yellow beams the scattered stems illumine,
 Where sparkling eyes and breaking smiles illumine.
 His burning eyes with fearful light illumine!
 Ye flattering eastern lights, once more the hills
 illumine!
 Deep yellow beams the scatter'd holes illumine,
 Long streaks of fairy light the wave illumine
 Or where thick sails illumine Batavia's groves;
 Fair smiling lights the purpled hills illumine!
Illumed. An aspect tenderly illumed,

Illumes. Illumes with sparkling foam the twilight shade.
Illuminate. Gently illuminate a sober scene:—
 Will fail to illuminate the infant's bier;
 To illuminate the ahyss of ages past,
Illuminating. Or, through illuminating grace, received,
Illumination. See Soul-illumination.
 With soft illumination cheered the dimness of that place.
 Of all illumination,—may my Life
 Bore stars—illumination of all gems!
 Illumination into deep, dark holds,
Illumine. To illumine Playford hall,
Illuminated. See Moon-illumined, Self-illumined.
 Slow glides the sail along the illumined shore,
 Uplift in quiet their illumined forms,
 While thus illumined, tells of painful strife
 Inly illumined by Heaven's pitying love
 illumined! root of beauty and goodness,
 Palace illumined with the sun of bliss;
 Where solitary forms illum'd stray
 Lift, all serene, their still, illum'd forms,
 And filled the illumined groves with ravishment.
 And, as they issue from the illumined pile,
Illuminea. Illumines, from within, the leafy shade;
Illusion. Sustained by delicate illusion?
 Of a wild dream, or worse illusion;
 Mounts, in this fine illusion, toward the skies:
 The sweet illusion might have hung, for hours,
 Such, in the fond illusion of my heart,
 Who shared at first the illusion; but was soon
 Of ignorance or illusion) lives and breathes
 "Of such illusion do we here incur;
 The illusion strengthening as he gazed, he felt
Illusions. Of these illusions, or they please no more.
 Desire we past illusions to recall?
 And those illusions, which excite the score
Illusive. Not such the World's illusive shows;
 Illusive cataracts! of their terrors
 By impulse sent from such illusive power,—
 Who dictates and inspires illusive feats,
Illustrate. To illustrate Nature's book of rudiments—
Illustrated. Illustrated with never-dying verse,
 Illustrated, and mutually endeared,
 Illustrated with inborn courtesy,
Illustrations. Apt illustrations of the moral world, Illustrious. Nor cheer him; for the illustrious Swede hath done
 England's illustrious sons of long, long ages;
 Forgive, illustrious Country! these deep sighs,
 POZZOBONNELLI his illustrious house;
 Of generations of illustrious men,
 To a poor scholar!—when illustrious men,
 The illustrious wife of Roland, in the hour
 Oft, through thy fair domains, illustrious Peer!
 Its most illustrious province, must be found
 A race illustrious for heroic deeds,
 Gave to thy fame a more illustrious fight

Ill-worthy. Ill-worthy, Beaumont! were the grief
 I'm. (Partial list.) See I.
 I'm fatherless and motherless.
 Come to me—I'm no enemy:
 "I'm here, what is't you want with me?"
 "Oh Sir! you know I'm Betty Foy,
 I'm as great as they, I trow,
 "I'm helping this poor dying brute."
Image. Whose softened image penetrates the deep.
 The image of a poet's heart,
 By cells upon whose image, while he prays,
 The image of his glorious Sire displayed,
 On the mute Image and the troubled walls.
 An image of this old Man still was present,
 Do recognise some image of themselves,
 A solemn image to my heart,
 Image that, flying still before me, gleamed Shine, Altar, Image, Offerings hung in sign of gratitude;
 Its image would survive among his thoughts:
 Thou sink't, the image of thy rest
 The moving image to detain;
 A dancing Shape an Image gay
 And downward Image gaily vying
 To show them a fair image, 'tis themselves,
 An image, too, of that sweet Boy,

Image—continued.
 The ghost-like image of a cloud?
 The very image framing of a Tomb,
 Proud thoughts that Image overawes,
 There where you see his Image stand
 An Image that hath perished!
 Thy genuine image, Yarrow!
 New love of many a rival image brought
 A venerable image yields
 Yes, she is soothed: an Image faint,
 Might seem a saintly Image from his shrine
 Thy Image falls to earth. Yet some, I ween,
 Oft with his musings doth thy image blend,
 The image of its perfect bow,
 That not an image of the past
 Who rashly strove thy Image to portray?
 And ake, when he the image did behold
 Whene'er I looked, thy Image still was there;
 By cells whose image, trembling as he prays,
 An image of her soul is kept alive,
 Or image unprofaned; and I would stand,
 Some lovely Image in the song rose up
 Of his own image, by a sunbeam now,
 How potent a mere image of her sway;
 Who through that bodily image hath diffused,
 Some element to stamp her image on
 To have a soulless image on the eye
 On which a dull red image of the moon
 That we must tread—thy image rose again,
 Or waxed image which yourselves have made,
 Breathed up its smoke, an image of his ghost
 For lingering yet an image in my mind
 For me that image of pure gladness
 And image of right reason; that matures
 The thought, the image, and the silent joy:
 Their knowledge of the heavens, and image forth
 An image, and a character, by books
 Through every image and through every thought,
 Express the image of a better time,
 So still an image of tranquillity,
 We have an image of the pristine earth,
 Or, if a different image be recalled,
 Saw a seductive image of herself.
 And his most perfect image in the world.
 Yet is their form and image here expressed
 Altar and image, and the inclusive walls
 Shrine, altar, image, and the massy piles
 Show to his eye an image of the pangs
 Thy image disappear! The Mountain-ash
 An image fair, which, brightening in his soul
 Who, in the bodily image, in the mind,
 Crowned like the image of fantastic Fear;
 Like image of solemnity, conjoined,
 The sculptured image of some patron-saint,
 A twofold image; on a grassy bank
 Come, gentle Sleep, Death's image tho' thou art,
 That parts the image from reality;
Imaged. Of their own beauty, imaged in the heart.
 Of all that is most beautiful, imaged there
 Imaged, though faintly, in the hue
 There imaged; or when, having gained the top

Imagery. Where earth and heaven do make one imagery;
 His music, and to view his imagery:
 Of still or moving imagery—
 With those rich stores of Nature's imagery,
 Exulting in its imagery;
 Raised toward that Imagery once more:
 Of fret-work imagery laid low;
 Of unsubstantial imagery, the dream,
 From all its spirit-moving imagery,
 With all its intervenient imagery,
 With all its solemn imagery; its rocks,
 Fair trains of imagery before me rise,
 Behold the universal imagery

Images. For images of other worlds are there;
 The many-coloured images impress
 Flashed round him images and hues that wrought
 With images about her heart,
 With all its lovely images, was changed
 And Images of voice—to hound and horn
 Of Images in seemingly row;
 With images, and crowns, and empty cars;
 Those images of genial beauty, oft
 Her peace from images to pain allied.
 Who, 'mid a world of images impress
 These outward images of fate,
 Far-distant images draw him,
 Sweet images! which, wheresoe'er he be,
 More terrible images there.
 Forms, images, nor numerous other aids
 Remained, no pleasant images of trees,
 That givest to forms and images a breath
 Belfry, and images, and living trees;
 As aught by wooden images performed
 For, images, and sentiments, and words,
 With images, and haunted by herself,
 Debarred from Nature's living images,
 And Earth did change her images and forms

Imp. Or imp from witch's lap let fall?
Impair. To baffle all that may her strength impair;
 If aught impair thy beauty or destroy,
 A laxity that could not but impair
 Who most it useth, him 'twill most impair.
Impaired. Were thus impaired, and he became Albeit shattered (and impaired)
 Of indecisive judgments, that impaired
 When wanted most; a confidence impaired
 "The dignity of life is not impaired
 His sanity of reason not impaired,
 Are not to be extinguished, nor impaired.
 Though with her plumes impaired. If they, whose souls
Impart. His humble looks no shy restraint impart;
 And the near heavens impart their own delights.
 Here to impart the tale, of which, last night,
 Did to his mind impart
 Beloved Wife? such solace to impart
 Which yet do unto some impart
 "Hear then," said he, "while I impart,
 Some random truths he can impart,
 And smiles to Solitude and Want impart.
 And the near heav'ns their own delights impart.
 I doubt not, when to you it doth impart
 Impart new gladness to the morning air!
 She vanished—eager to impart the scheme
 To impart a joy, imperfect while unshared.
 Almighty Lord, thy further grace impart!
 Something which power and effort may impart,
 I would impart it, I would spread it wide,
Imparted. See Heaven-imparted.
 To me alone imparted, sure I am
 Imparted to their sabbath-day
 For feeling has to him imparted power
 He thus imparted:—"In a spot that lies
 Hath he imparted—but I speak of him
 Imparted—to brute matter. I rejoice,
Impartial. In an impartial balance, give thine aid
 Failing impartial measure to dispense
 Or thou, impartial Saa, with presence bright
 Learn to be just, just through impartial law;
 Should the sun strike her, and the impartial breeze
 That power, that influence, by impartial law.
Imparts. Still, Nature, ever just, to him imparts
 This sight to me the Muse imparts;—
 Who such divinity to thee imparts?
Impassable. By rocks impassable and mountains huge.
Impassioned. See Empassioned.
 Less impassioned words might tell
 Alas! the impassioned minstrel did not know Forth sprang the impassioned Queen her Lord to clasp;
 Keep for the Young the impassioned smile
 Impassioned dreams, that strove to span
 To timely sleep. Thought I, the impassioned strain,
 With an impassioned life, what feeble ones
 And their impassioned sounds, which well might make
 Impassioned, but delight how pitiable!
 Yet I will praise thee with impassioned voice:
 Around him, drinking in the impassioned notes
 And an impassioned majesty, exclaimed—
Impassive. Clothed with impassive majesty, and graced
Impatience. And wild Impatience, pointing upward, showed,
 On fire with thy impatience to become
 And wild Impatience, panting upward, show'd
 Nor with impatience from the season asked
 I sate with sad impatience. From within Impatience through inaptness to perceive
 With some impatience in his mien, he spake:
 "Impute it not to impatience, if," exclaimed
 He, with the foremost whose impatience halled
Impatient. The impatient mariner the sail unfurled,
 The Troop will be impatient; let us hie
 Of this same Clifford, he became impatient
 He took his way, impatient to accost
 When the impatient object of his love
 And still impatient of the shape she wears.
 Are impatient to be housed:

Impatient—continued.
 Calm, though impatient, is the crowd; each stands
 ready with the fee,
 Surprised by joy—impatient as the Wind
 Four fiery steeds impatient of the rein
 Impatient to put out the only light
 And when, impatient of her guilt and woes,
 Wide Europe heaves, impatient to be cast,
 That charge, impatient Norton sought
 Not like the rising sun's impatient glow
 Impatient to connect thee, not as erst
 Some region of impatient life:
 Long impatient of Thy rod,
 May then entangle our impatient steps;
 Into the fields, impatient for the sight
 To no impatient or fallacious hopes,
 I, more impatient in my downward course,
 Impatient to pass on, when I exclaimed,
 Darkening the sun. But less impatient thoughts,
Impatiently. Impatiently, ill-done, or left undone,
Impaved. There saw, impaved with rude fidelity Impeached. As could not be impeached, was sought elsewhere.
Impearing. Her head impearing,
Impeding. Can aught on earth impede delight,
Impedes. Post seaward,—what impedes the tardy nights.
Impediment. On opposition and impediment.
 Without impediment or let,
 Or (if need be) impediment to spurn,
 Without impediment? And why
 And through the impediment of rural cares,
 Alternate progress and impediment,
Impediments. Impediments from day to day renewed.
 Impediments that make his task more sweet;
Impel.—Blithe the spirits of her own impel
 Like their own steadfast clouds) did now impel
Impelled. How Brutus came, by oracles impelled, Impelled;—they parted from him there, and stood
 —They saw, adventurously impelled,
 By thy divinity impelled,
 Higher to lift their lofty heads, impelled
 Impelled by thirst of all but Heaven-taught skill.
 Thee hath some awful Spirit impelled to leave,
 As men believed, the waters were impelled,
 From some high-minded Slave, impelled to spurn
 Be Thou to love and praise alike impelled,
 Impelled to livelier pace. But now, my Book!
 I did, by human sympathy impelled;
 By pain of heart—now checked—and now impelled—
 Shall move unswerving, even as if impelled
Impelling. Come Spoilers—horde impelling horde,
Impels. A motion and a spirit, that impels
 Reckless of what impels or leads,
 Lead me, or outward circumstance impels.
Impendent. Prefiguring his own impendent doom,
Impending. Knit every thought the impending issue needs.
 Through tangled woods, impending rocks between;
 Of waters coloured by impending clouds.
 By power of that impending covert, thrown
 In woods, and dwell under impending rocks
 At the mine's mouth, under impending rocks:
 Impending evil, equally require,
 Amid impending rocks and gloomy woods—
Impends. Impends; the frost will gather round my heart;
Impenetrable. In the impenetrable cell
 The impenetrable heart of that exalted Mount!
 And awfully impenetrable.
 Lay shrouded in impenetrable mist;
 Like Niger, in impenetrable sands
 Where arbours of impenetrable shade,
 Impenetrable shade; once more farewell,
Imperceptible. Else imperceptible. Meanwhile, is heard
Imperceptibly. It draws its nourishment impercep-tibly—
Imperfect. His gifts imperfect:—Spectre though I he,
 That even imperfect faith to man affords?
 Dim-gleaming through imperfect lore,
 Entrusts the imperfect song;
 With here and there a faint imperfect gleam
 The imperfect record, there, may stand unblamed
 Internal echo of the imperfect sound;
 Imperfect, with these habits must be joined
 Perfect him, made imperfect in himself,
 The offering, though imperfect, premature.
 The imperfect offices of prayer and praise,
 So, in the imperfect sounds of this discourse,
 Imperfect substitutes, whose use and power
 Reason, best reason, is to imperfect man
 To impart a joy, imperfect while unshared.
Imperfection. Some imperfection in the chosen theme,
Imperfectly. (At random and imperfectly indeed)
Imperial. At intervals imperial banners stream,

Impracticable. —To wet the peak's impracticable . . .
sides . . .
69 Bord. 1749
803 Excursion 4. 136
885 Excursion 9. 54

Impregnable. The impregnable and awe-inspiring . . .
fort . . .
(Freedom's impregnable redoubt, . . .
Impregnable of Liberty and Peace. . . .
Impregnate. To impregnate and to elevate the mind. . . .
Impregnations. Was thronged with impregnations . . .
like the Wilds . . .
Impress. What mighty objects do impress their . . .
forms . . .
That on a wild secluded scene impress . . .
The mind that is within us, so impress . . .
For lasting impress, by the Lord . . .
Or a fierce impress issues with its foil . . .
Which of themselves our minds impress; . . .
Must needs impress a transitory thought . . .
In that bold form and impress high . . .
More than the heedless impress that belongs . . .
Of Nature's impress,—gaiety and health, . . .
To impress a vivid feeling on the mind . . .

Impressed. See Imprest.
He had so often climbed; which had impressed . . .
The old mythologists, more impressed than we . . .
Which tiny Elves impressed;—on that smooth . . .
stage . . .
Impressed on the white road,—in the same line. . . .
Impressed upon all forms the characters . . .
Nor profitless, if haply they impressed . . .
Most potent when impressed upon the mind . . .

Impressed—continued.

Of greatness; and deep feelings had impressed
 Impresses. Seemed trivial, and the impresses without Impression. In one impression, by connecting force Impressions. Be those impressions which incline the heart.
 By sensible impressions not enthralled,
 With these impressions would he still compare
 Impressive. Yet, at this impressive season,
 By the impressive discipline of fear,
 Imprest. Is now, by beams of dawning light impress,
 The many-coloured images impress.
 Who, 'mid a world of images impress
 On thy Abode harmoniously impress,
 Those brighter images by books impress
 Imprint. To imprint a kiss that lacked not power to spread
 That had not been too timid to imprint
 Imprinted. Had left imprinted on the grassy ground.
 Imprisoned. Imprisoned there, and held it to his ear,
 And every day the imprisoned lake
 Imprisoned by hot sunshine lie
 Imprisoned 'mid the formal props
 Within a chest imprisoned; how they came Imprisonment. Has a kind heart; but his imprisonment
 Improves. In framing models to improve the scheme Improvidence. And, through improvidence or want of love
 Improvident. "Improvident and reckless," we exclaimed,
 Impudence. Of cunning and of impudence.
 Impulse. By one soft impulse saved from vacancy.
 (For other impulse let it pass) was driven,
 To control the froward impulse
 At every impulse of the moving breeze,
 Both law and impulse; and with me
 Check with thy notes the impulse which, betrayed
 A kindred impulse, seemed allied
 —Behold!—as with a gushing impulse heaves
 'Tis thine the quickening impulse to control,
 Nor let thy genuine impulse fail to beat
 Thy impulse is the life of Fame;
 Of the wild impulse. From a fount of life
 Gave the first impulse to the Poet's song;
 And, taking impulse from the sword,
 Powers have they left, an impulse, and a claim
 More of ennobling impulse from the past,
 Its impulse took—that sorrow-stricken door,
 Some with ungovernable impulse rush;
 With quickening impulse answered their mute pleas,
 One impulse from a vernal wood
 A counter impulse let me take
 An impulse more profoundly dear
 Gain a fresh impulse, run a livelier course;
 His mandates, given rash impulse to control
 From paramount impulse not to be withstood,
 She rocked with every impulse of the breeze.
 Of that imaginative impulse sent
 With impulse, motive, right and wrong, the ground
 But by their quickening impulse made more prompt
 Or from the Soul—an impulse to herself—
 Of impulse or affurement, for the Soul
 What motive drew, what impulse, I would ask,
 And, from the impulse of a just disdain,
 Impulse and motive to that strong discourse,
 By impulse of her own ethereal zeal.
 Impulse and utterance. The whispering air
 By impulse sent from such illusive power,—
 Upon this impulse, to the theme—erewhile
 A like glad impulse; and so moves the man
 Mount with a thoughtless impulse, and wheel there,
 Impulses. With dreams and visionary impulses
 What'er they bring of impulses sublime,
 And impulses of deeper hirth
 Who can divine what impulses from God
 (Only except some impulses of pride
 With impulses that scarcely were by these Impure. Wild beasts, or uncouth savages impure!
 How dreadful the dominion of the impure!
 Erewhile, with rites impure.
 Impure conceits discharging from a heart
 A creature, squalid, vengeful, and impure;
 Concealed, nor through effect of some impure
 Impute. "Impute if not to impatience, if," exclaimed
 In, omitted.
 Ina. And Ina looked for her abode,
 This, Ina saw; and, pale with fear,
 Inaccessible. From us to inaccessible worlds, to regions
 And on whose forehead inaccessible
 Power inaccessible to human thought,
 Inaction. Self-deemed, to worse inaction, till his eye
 Inactive. So placid, so inactive, as content;
 Inanimate. Inanimate large as the body of man,
 That age, when not by laws inanimate,
 Where living things, and things inanimate,
 Dull and inanimate, no more shall bang
 Inapt. Inapt conjecture! Childhood here, a moon

Inaptitude. Remissness and inaptitude of mind,
 Inapty. Such life might not inapty be compared.
 And not inapty so, for love it is,
 Inaptness. Impatience through inaptness to perceive Inarticulate. Your inarticulate notes with the voice of words!
 With inarticulate language. For, the Man—
 Inasmuch. From their beginnings, inasmuch as drawn Inattentive. With an inattentive eye.
 For inattentive Fancy, like the lime
 To the inattentive children of the world:
 Inaudible. Of streams inaudible by day;
 Sweet flowers! at whose inaudible command
 Inaudible—was transient; I had known
 Inaudible by daylight, blend their notes
 A clear sonorous voice, inaudible
 Inaudibly. Sets down his hoofs inaudibly,
 Inborn. But most the Bard is true to inborn right,
 Illustrated with inborn courtesy;
 Mine, through heaven's grace and inborn aptitudes.
 Inbred. Softening their inbred dignity austere—Incalculable. Incalculably distant; so, I felt Incapable. Superior, and incapable of change,
 Incapable although they be of rest,
 Incapacity. Is of such incapacity, methinks,
 Incarnate. Against the Followers of the incarnate
 Lord
 But Thou art true, incarnate Lord, Incarnation. The incarnation of the spirits that move
 Incense. While incense from the altar breathes
 Where flower-breathed incense to the skies
 For this refreshing incense from the West I—
 The tapers burn; the odorous incense feeds
 While clouds of incense mouthing veiled the rood,
 Mounting while earth her morning incense breathes,
 Of odorous incense; while a hundred more
 With music, incense, festival, and flowers!
 Reject the incense offered up by him,
 Commingling with the incense that ascends,
 Incense-bearing. Did incense-bearing altars rise, Incense-breathing. And the fresh air of incense-breathing morn
 Incensed. Till, not incensed though put to proof,
 Of fire, incensed beneath its hoary brow.
 Incense-like. Incense-like to Heaven, descending Incessant. Sworn with incessant rains from hour to hour,
 Rock to incessant neighings shrill and loud,
 Driven by the bomb's incessant thunder-stroke
 Desperate as thine? Or come the incessant shocks
 And fought with rage incessant
 Where ruthless mortals wage incessant wars.
 The incessant Rovers of the northern main,
 Hast thou seen, with flash incessant,
 Incessant rain was falling, or the frost
 Incessantly. Renewed—renewed incessantly—
 Incessantly conflicting, thrills the frames
 Where Pleasure whirls about incessantly,
 Incessantly to turn his ear and eye.
 Inch. See Half-Inch.
 An inch, till I am answered. Know you aught
 Before he shall go with an inch of the land?
 Set every inch of sail upon her."
 Not an inch of his body is free from delight;
 From his poor inch or two of daisied sod?
 Inch-thick. Inch-thick the dust lay on the ground
 Incident. Would issue, let one incident make known.
 Shipwreck, or some domestic incident
 Incidental. Those incidental charms which first attached
 Incidents. So many incidents upon his mind
 To rural incidents, whose genial powers
 How casual incidents of real life,
 Of manners and familiar incidents,
 Inetle. Which showers of blood seem rather to incite
 Incited. And seems, as more incited, still more blest.
 (Too quick and keen) incited to disdain
 Incited it to motion, and controlled.
 And straight, incited by a curious mind
 Perhaps incited rather, by these shocks, Incitement. Is seized with strong incitement to push forth
 Upon a less incitement than the cause
 Incitements. Incitements of a battle-day,
 From new incitements friendly to our task,
 Inetles. She who incites the frolic lambs
 From the confusion, craftily incites
 Inclemency. Aught of the fading year's inclemency!
 Inclement. But, through the inclement and the perilous days
 Inclination. Partake its inclination towards earth
 And inclination mainly, and the mere
 And force of native inclination made
 The generous inclination, the just rule,
 Inclinations. Of evil inclinations are unknown;
 Inclined. With little kindness would to me incline.
 For not an eyelid could to sleep incline
 A studious forehead to incline
 And let no Slave his head incline,

Infants—continued.

Clap, infants, clap your hands! Divine must be
 Infants in arms, and ye, that as ye go . . .
 For goods and chattels, or those Infants dear, . . .

There with his infants man undaunted creeps . . .
 As tender infants are: and yet how great!
 This life of infants; some that never breathed
 Infect. Infect the thoughts; the languor of the frame
 Infect the air which he had freely breathed
 Infect. I, too, infection of their mood,
 Infection. The infection of the ground partakes,
 All caught the infection—as generous as he . . .
 Although a strong infection of the age,
 Infections. And like the soft infections of the heart,
 Infelicity. Of constant infelicity, 'out off
 Infer. The Wanderer, "I infer that he was healed Inference. On outward things, with formal inference ends;
 Inferior. Link her with the inferior creatures, . . .

Inferior to angelical, they prolong . . .
 And thirst for no inferior zeal, . . .
 Even to the inferior Kinds; whom forest-trees
 And prospects of the inferior Creature!
 My surplice, through the inferior through I clove
 The inferior creatures, beast or bird, attuned
 Was there, nor loss; only the inferior stars
 Among the inferior kinds; not merely those
 With no inferior power. You dwell alone;
 By the inferior Faculty that moulds,
 Was wanting; but inferior lights appeared
 Inferiour. Enough on these inferior things.
 Infernal. Has held infernal orgies—with the gloom,
 To those infernal fiends! Now, if the event
 And from the infernal Gods, 'mid shades forlorn
 Barbarian and infernal,—a phantasma,
 Infidel. An infidel contempt of holy writ
 Infinita. With love and longings infinite.
 A revelation infinite it seems;
 Dependence infinite, proportion just;
 And with an infinite pain the spirit aches,
 From your infinite marvels, the sadness was just.

Of houny infoite. Between Powers that aim . . .
 Yet through that darkness (infinite though it seem Merciless act of sorrow infinite!
 But infinite its grasp of weal and woe!
 Infinite Power. The pillared vestibule,
 From shadowy fountains of the Infoite, . . .

Forth-shadowing, some have deemed, the infinite
 Which nothing less than Infinite Power could give.
 Infinite Power, perfect Intelligence.
 And the pure vision closed in darkness infinite.
 From circumspection, infinite delay.
 Above the rest raised infinite ascents
 And greatness still revolving; infinite:
 Seemed infinite, and there his spirit shaped
 Confusion infinite of heaven and earth,
 Of infinite benevolence and power;
 Even to thy Being's infinite majesty!
 In mercy, carried infinite degrees!
 Of infinite Being, twinkling restlessly!
 And swallowed up 'mid deserts infinite!
 Of contradictions infoite the slave,
 And the infinite magnificence of heaven

Infinitely. From beauty infinitely growing
 The universe is infinitely wide;
 Infinitude. Is with infinitude, and only there;
 In faint reflection of infinitude
 Infinity. And shares the nature of infinity.
 That feeds upon infinity, that broods
 Infinity's. Infinity's embrace; whose guardian crest,
 Infirm. Thought infirm ne'er came between them,
 Mild Offspring of infirm humanity,
 —Infirm ejaculation! from the tongue
 Or our infirm affections Nature pleads,
 Infirm, dependent, and now desitute?
 Thus pitifully infirm; then, he who made,
 Is too infirm to reach. But, waiving this, Infirmities. Thy absence, till old age and fresh infirmities . . .

The infant lamb? and shall the infirmities,
 The infirmities of mortal love;
 We learn to tolerate the infirmities
 Infirmities of nature, time, and place,
 Infirmity. With tales of weakness and infirmity!
 And hauntings from the infirmity of love,
 Be one of much infirmity;
 A last infirmity betrays,
 And sure encroachments of infirmity,
 By an infirmity of love for days
 To our infirmity. No officious slave
 Which through the lapse of their infirmity
 In all the tatters of infirmity
 From this infirmity of mortal kind
 Of all infirmity, and tending all
 To the infirmity of mortal sense
 Infirmly. Infirmly grasped within a palsied hand, . . .

Inflame. Would I, by previous wiles, inflame the queen Imagination, potent to inflame . . .
 Inflamed. See Soul-inflamed.
 Inflamed by thee, the blooming Boy
 By just revenge inflamed? No foot may chase,
 Inflamed by sense of wrong; . . .

Inflamed by passion, blind with prejudice,
 I scorned indifference; but, inflamed with thirst
 Of maddening passions mutually inflamed;
 Confused, commingled, mutually inflamed,
 To overweening faith; and is inflamed . . .
 All that inflamed thy infant heart, the love,
 K. 8. 257 Recluse 1.1.741

Inflexible. With will inflexible, those fearful pangs Inflict. That he has power to inflict what we lack strength to bear. . . .
 And to inflict shame's salutary stings
 They must forbid the State to inflict a pain, Inflicted. He had himself inflicted. Through his brain . . .
 Inflicted;—blessed Men, for so to Heaven . . .
 For wounds inflicted, nor what toil relieved . . .

Inflicted upon confidence so pure. . . .
 Inflicts. Inflicts his tender wound.
 Pains which the World inflicts can she requite?
 That, in rough winter, oft inflicts a fear
 And then betrays; accuses and inflicts . . .

Influence. Compassion for me. His influence is great
 For him, by private influence with the Court,
 A happy, genial influence,
 Through your sweet influence, and the care
 As have no slight or trivial influence
 Shed kindly influence on the place,
 Sinks, hardly conscious of the influence—
 To a voluptuous influence
 From harp or lute, kind influence to compose
 For more than Fancy to the influence bends
 (Like influence never may my soul reject),
 Been felt, that influence is displayed,
 Yield to the Music's touching influence;
 Aid, with congenial influence, to uphold
 Influence, at least among a scattered few,
 Thro' Time and Nature's influence, purity
 Heaven's breathing influence failed not to bestow
 Of that beguiling influence;
 Feels, through the influence of her gentle reign,
 The time's and season's influence disown;
 A kindly influence whereof few will speak,
 To aught of highest, holiest, influence—
 Of their had influence, and their good receives:
 A constant influence, a peculiar grace;
 Wants not a healing influence that can creep . . .

Warmed by thy influence, creeping things
 Through its meek influence, from above,
 Luna by night, with heavenly influence
 Without whose blissful influence Paradise
 To the mild influence of the finer arts;
 Mild influence; nor left in me one wish
 To the sky's influence in a kindred mood
 Would with an influence benign have soothed,
 Their fairest, softest, happiest influence.
 No longer a mute influence of the soul,
 As even their passive influence drew from mine.
 To the remaining influence lost
 The wondrous influence of power gently used,
 The first diviner influence of this world,
 For, spite of thy sweet influence and the touch
 Thy kindred influence to my heart of hearts
 Shedding benignant influence, and secure,
 In all things that from her sweet influence
 With gladsome influence could re-animate
 At those, which thy soft influence sometimes drew
 More obviously the self-same influence rules
 For influence undefined a personal shape;
 Its kindly influence, o'er the yielding brow
 Shedding sweet influence from above; or pure
 If, then, their blended influence be not lost
 Whose sacred influence, spread through earth and
 heaven,
 Is salutary, or an influence sweet,
 That power, that influence, by impartial law.
 Vouchsafes sweet influence, while her Poet speaks

Influences. Ye kindred local influences that still,
 Influx. Drew from the influx of the main,
 By stealthy influx of the timid day . . .

The dead, by influx of a living love,
 To the still influx of the morning light
 And, with a sudden influx overpowered
 Influxes. Was dear, and hence to finer influxes
 Sought or unsought, and influxes of power
 Inform. From joy to joy: for she can so inform
 I raise my thoughts, inform my deeds and words,
 The rudiments of letters, and inform Informed. Informed, were resolute to do his will,
 Patriots informed with Apostolic light
 So sacred, so informed with light divine,
 Inform'd his pen, or wisdom of the heart,
 Informed with such a spirit as might be . . .

Informed—continued.

For that which moves with light and life informed,
 Expression ever varying! Thus informed,
Informer. Swindle and rob, is no informer there.
Informing. That truth informing mind and heart.
Informis. Informis the cell of Hearing, dark and blind;
 Informis my spirit, ne'er can I believe . . .
 —Informis the fountain in the human breast . . .
 —Informis, creates, and thaws the deepest sleep
Infringe. From us to infringe the laws of charity.
Infuse. See Re-Infuse.
 To taint the health which ye infuse ;
 Heroically fashioned— to infuse . . .
 'Mid these more awful feelings, to infuse . . .
Infused. And virtues through the mass infused,
 Of Whom they are, habitually infused . . .
Infuses. The vernal field infuses fresh delight
Ingenuous. Gay, volatile, ingenuous, quick to learn,
 Hands apt for all ingenious arts and games ;
Ingenuity. Of modern ingenuity ; no town . . .
 Of modern ingenuity, and made . . .
Ingenuous. Ingenuous, innocent, and bold :
 Ebenezer, though ingenuous, the stock,
 That beams from his ingenuous face . . .
 On those ingenuous moments of our youth . . .
 But in the minds of all ingenuous youth . . .
 The ingenuous mind, apt to be set aright ;
 By his ingenuous beauty, by the gleam . . .
Inglewood. Is but a name, no more is Inglewood,
Inglorious. And her Foes find a like inglorious grave.
 Our object and inglorious, yet the end . . .
 Inglorious, buried in the dusker wood . . .
 The inglorious issue of that craft, and how . . .
 —Inglorious implements of craft and toil . . .
 The inglorious football mounted to the pitch
Ingrate. Upon a fickle Ingrate. Thrice he rose,
Ingrate's. How could I ever play an ingrate's part?
Ingrates. Ingrates who wear a smileless face
Ingratitude. By keen reproach or blind ingratitude,
Ingress. For ingress to a world of wonder : . . .
Inhabit. That silence only should inhabit there,
 The world which we inhabit? Better plea
 Who must inhabit, under a black sky,
Inhabitant. With mortal creature. An Inhabitant
 Thou "poor Inhabitant below,"
 When hither came its last Inhabitant . . .
Inhabitants. By the first men, earth's first inhabitants,
 Cerulean ether's pure inhabitants . . .
 And wondering at its new inhabitants . . .
Inhale. The breath of the cows you may see him
 inhale,
Inherent. Distinguished only by inherent state
 More than inherent liveliness and power . . .
 Inherent, or from human will and power . . .
 That almost seems inherent in the creature,
 Cleaving with power inherent and intense,
 To be inherent in him, by Heaven's will . . .
Inherit. Maiden! now take flight;—inherit
 Let all who do this land inherit
 Be its depths quickened; what thou dost inherit
 Who shall inherit Thee when death has laid
 And feels not what an empire we inherit
 Which they inherit,—cannot step beyond,—
 By the inconstant nature we inherit Inheritance. Of their inheritance, that single cottage—
 To such inheritance of blessed fancy
 Than half of my inheritance was mine.
 And for the land, his small inheritance.
 Display august of man's inheritance,
 Or grief—the inheritance of humankind.
 To me, what an inheritance, new-fallen,
 So far, and of his old inheritance
 To that inheritance which millions rue . . .
 To whom the small inheritance had fallen.
 Like an inheritance, from age to age . . .
 These barren rocks, your stern inheritance ;
Inherited. Inherited!—presumptuous thought!—it fled
Inheritest. Inheritest the lion's den ;
Inheriting. Even such a Man (inheriting the zeal
Inheritor. Here placed to be the inheritor of heaven,
Inheritors. Inheritors of his abode ;
Inherits. Inherits an allegiance, no by choice
Inhospitable. Of such inhospitable penalty,
Inhuman. Maimed, mangled by inhuman men
 "Of meditation on the inhuman deeds . . .
 "Inhuman!"—said I "was an old Man's life
Inimitable. From the live rock with grace inimitable
Iniquity. Was darkened soon by foul iniquity, Initiate. Yet, for the Initiate, rocks and whispering trees
Initiation. Initiation in that mystery old . . .
Initiatory. Not such the initiatory strains . . .
Injunction. The injunction by her Brother laid ;
 Behold a high injunction suddenly . . .
Injunctions. Returning, and injunctions from within

Injure. Hath power to injure mine . . .
Injured. Who lives but to protect the weak or injured.
 What time his injured country is a stage
 Not injured more by touch of meddling hands
 Much injured Earls! by these preferred
 For injured Innocence.
Injuries. I brooded o'er my injuries, deserted
 Or the injuries of to-morrow?
 Against the injuries of time, the spite
 To gratitude, to injuries forgiven—
 Sickened by injuries, dreading worse designed,
 Afflict, or injuries assail,
 Or, from long stress of real injuries fly
 Meek though enthusiastic. Injuries
 Not proof against the injuries of the day ;
Injurious. To mitigate the injurious way of place
 To the injurious elements exposed . . .
 From all injurious servitude was free . . .
Injury. Some injury done to sickle, flail, or scythe,
 From touch of deadly injury?
 No injury to them or you . . .
 And Love protect it from all injury!
 From all internal injury exempt . . .
 And stung with injury, at this riper day,
 How without injury to take, to give
 Spread, from disease, whose subtle injury lurks
 Where injury cannot come :—and here is laid
 Uproused by recollected injury, railed . . .
 Made perfect, and from injury secure . . .
 With the least taint and injury to the air
 And sometimes injury, like a lamb enthralled
 Through actual injury! Rather in the law . . .
Injustice. Of that injustice which upon ourselves
 From the injustice of our brother men . . .
 And for the injustice grieving, that hath made
Inlaid. Of golden leaves inlaid with silver down,
 And shining effigies of brass inlaid . . .
 Of pastoral homesteads, had been long inlaid . . .
Inland. The tones of waterfalls, and inland sounds
 And Russia far inland?
 With a soft inland murmur.—Once again . . .
 Inland, within a hollow vale, I stood ;
 At the green base of many an inland hill,
 Loud is the Vale ;—this inland Depth . . .
 587 Low is* 5
 Though inland far we be,
 Our horses grazed. To more than inland peace,
 Of inland waters ; the great sea meanwhile
 Hovering above these inland solitudes . . .
 Of inland ground, applying to his ear . . .
 Eastward, the Danube toward this inland sea,
 That, through her inland regions, to and fro
 At the green base of many an inland hill,
Inlets. From the natural inlets of just sentiment,
Inly. Inly disturbed, to think that others felt Moody, or inly troubled, would he seem
 Inly illumined by Heaven's pitying love ;
 Inly distressed or overpowered with awe,
 Failed not to notice, inly pleased, and said :—
Inly-muttered. I stopped, and said with inly-muttered voice . . .
Inly-working. But now the inly-working North
Inmate. Inmate of lonesome Nature's endless year ;
 The Pair had but one inmate in their house,
 Inmate of a mountain-dwelling,
 —This Dwelling's Inmate more than three weeks'
 space
 An inmate of these mountains,—if, disturbed . . .
 To make her Foster-child, her Inmate Man,
 An inmate of this active universe :
 Our inmate, a rough terrier of the hills ;
 A moment, but an inmate of the heart,
 The welcome of an Inmate from afar,
 I found his rescued inmate safely lodged,
 An inmate of a second family ;
Inmate's. Respect to every Inmate's claim :
Inmates. Some, inmates lodged in shady nests,
 Are privileged inmates of deep solitude ;
 Those silent inmates now no longer share,
 The homeless inmates, and belike subvert
 Inmates, and heirs of our united love ;
 With the mild summons ; inmates though they be
 The inmates not unworthy of their home . . .
Inmost. And search the affections to their inmost
 cell ;
 My heart, could penetrate its inmost core,
 Her children from her inmost heart wept.
 Murmuring from Claramara's inmost caves,
 Even to the inmost seat of mortal pains,
 Her inmost, softest, tenderest harmonies ;
 And penetrates the forest's inmost shades ;
 Conscience, the timid being's inmost light,
 The inmost heart of man if glad . . .
 In the true filial bosom's inmost fold
 How from her inmost heart a sigh she brought,
 But nature to its inmost part . . .
 Of passion at the bosom's inmost seat . . .
 Through their impiety—my inmost soul
 Could be inspected to its inmost folds . . .
 That each had listened with his inmost heart . . .

Inn. See Village-Inn.

Host of his welcome inn, the noon-tide bower,
 He saw and passed a stately inn, full sure
 That inn he long had passed; the distant spire,
 It was a rustic inn—the board was spread,
 The tender infant; and at every inn,
 And now is passing by an inn
 Familiar with him, made an inn of his door:
 And at the Hoop alighted, famous Inn;
 Beheld her serving at the cottage inn;
Innate. If dairy-produce, from his inner hoard,
Inner. Is that I have my inner self abused,
 And worshipp'st at the Temple's inner shrine,
 The region of his inner spirit teems
 Hence lives He, to his inner self endeared;
 Upon his inner soul in mercy shine;
 Still was its inner world a place
 If dairy produce, from his inner hoard,
 Reposed in noontide rest, the inner pulse
 By chattering popinjays; the inner heart
 With our own inner being are forgot.
 There was an inner falling off—I loved,
 Possessed me, for my inner eye had seen
 'Twere idle to descant. My inner judgment
 Some inner meanings which might harbour there.
 Sad opposites out of the inner heart,
 To lay the inner faculties asleep.
 Not only that the inner frame is good,
 But, for disciples of the inner school,
 And speak to social reason's inner sense,
 And something also of his inner mind
 From visible nature, or the inner self
 Watched both the outward course and inner heart:
 Lay at the threshold and the inner doors;
 The inner spirit keeping holiday,
Inn-keeper. And with the courteous inn-keeper, whose stud

Innocence. In helplessness, when innocence is with them.

Avenger you of outraged innocence!
 And helpless innocence—do they protect
 And innocence, embodied in his looks,
 And Innocence hath privilege in her
 For innocence and youth, for weal and woe?
 Ensuring peace to innocence.
 Since parting Innocence bequeathed
 (Which even the placid innocence of death
 Love pitying innocence, not long to last,
 Ripening in perfect innocence.
 Is gone; our peace, our fearful innocence,
 Be won for feeble Innocence.
 Of innocence survive to mitigate distress?
 Silence, and holiness, and innocence,
 Of self-complacent innocence
 Who swerves from innocence, who makes divorce
 And faithful, loyal to her innocence,
 To God or man such innocence,
 To rise, and prove their innocence,—
 On hope that conscious innocence supplied,
 Bless work it is of love and innocence,
 And to fallen man their innocence is dear.
 For injured Innocence.
 Hallowed to meekness and to innocence;
 That innocence belongs not to our kind,
 Of INNOCENCE the garb she took,
 Is still with Innocence its own reward,
 Of innocence, and holiday repose;
 And can read lectures upon innocence;
 Unchecked by innocence too delicate,
 Blossoms of piety and innocence.
 The seat and bosom of pure innocence,
 How hopelessly; but innocence is strong,
 Nor is power given to lowliest innocence
 To shelter innocence, and cherish love;
 For the protection of his innocence;
Innocence's. To that false INNOCENCE's power.
Innocency. Go where at least meek Innocency dwells;

Innocent. Struck the poor innocent. Pallid with dismay

To guard the Innocent—he calls us "Outlaws;"
 A Maiden innocent till ensnared by Clifford,
 Defend the innocent. Lacy! we look
 Of this poor Babe, and taught its innocent tongue
 I had a better guide—that innocent Babe—
 Sit unmolested on his staff.—Innocent!
 If he were innocent—then he would tremble
 Who will have many guides if thou art innocent;
 She is innocent. Were I a Moralist,
 That thou wert innocent. How innocent I—
 That she is innocent. Leave that thought awhile
 The man was famished, and was innocent!
 Herbert is innocent. You do but echo
 Herbert is innocent? Innocent!—oh breaking heart!
 Be at peace; I am innocent.
 This innocent Gentleman. Sweet heavens! I told him
 The Spectre of that innocent Man, my guide.
 As if her innocent heart would break;

Innocent—continued.

The innocent Boy, else shelterless, his lonely head
 must hide;
 O keep them innocent!
 Oh, ill-judging sire of an innocent son
 Ingenious, innocent, and bold;
 Lodged in their innocent bosoms, and the spirit
 I've none, my pretty Innocent!
 The unruined Innocent,—I see thy face,
 His father's house, where to the innocent child
 Who, being innocent, did for that cause
 Innocent, and meek, and good,
 And likings fresh and innocent,
 Where life is wise and innocent
 Of his death-wound, when he from innocent air
 An innocent life, yet far astray!
 Of timid hope and innocent desire
 Of ruin shall not touch. Innocent scheme!
 Alone, and innocent, and gay!
 The awful light of heavenly innocence
 Of innocent delight, remote or recent,
 Humane, and virtue of his innocent life)
 Chant in full choir their innocent Te Deum.
 And what the little careless innocent
 Clamour of boys with innocent despites
 Anguish, and death: full oft where innocent blood
 From blossoms wild of fancies innocent.
 In the beautiful form of this innocent Doe:
 As at an innocent funeral.
 Thy fatal work, O Maiden, innocent as good!
 With what this innocent spring supplied:
 For penitent guilt, and innocent distress.
 The innocent eyes of youthful Monarchs driven
 For Justice hath absolved the innocent,
 The innocent Procession softly moves:
 Of all the truly great and all the innocent.
 But who is innocent? By grace divine,
 And all these innocent blisses?
 Death to the innocent is more than just,
 Then laugh, ye innocent Vales! ye Streams, sweep
 on,
 But she is innocent of blood,—
 Transparent as the soul of innocent youth,
 Less for his own than for thy innocent sake?
 Even by an innocent fancy's slightest freak
 Their wings to guard the unconscious Innocent—
 Can reach the innocent delight;
 Of Jesu's Mother? said this Innocent;
 Out of the world this Innocent to chase;
 "Upon his hier this Innocent doth lie
 The innocent brightness of a new-born Day
 But like the innocent bird, hath goadings on
 Within thy innocent lodge and oratory,
 After thy innocent and busy stir
 Who fills the mother's breast with innocent milk,
 As innocent instincts, and as innocent food,
 Yet innocent himself withal, though shrewd,
 And joyous loves, that hallow innocent days
 By noise of waters, making innocent sleep
 Hath rolled along, and this bright innocent,
 How could the innocent heart bear up and live!
 Resounding at all hours, and innocent yet.
 (If like desires of innocent little ones
 Her innocent authority was wrought,
 And innocent victims sinking under fear,
 Thus had he lived a long and innocent life,
 Of the poor innocent children. 'Every smile,
 Oh! no, the innocent Sufferer often sees
 Among more innocent rubbish.'"—Speaking thus,
 Reading, where'er we turn, of innocent lives,
 There, by her innocent Baby's precious grave,
 The innocent troubler of their quiet, sleeps
 Drink the pure water of its innocent stream
 By the destruction of her innocent sons
 The worshippers how innocent and blest!
 While yet an innocent little-one, with a heart Innocently. And upright weapons innocently gleaming,
 Thus innocently sported, breaking forth
 And the sea breeze as innocently breathes,
 By aught that innocently satisfies
Innocents. By mouths of Innocents, lo! here Thy might;
 Among ten thousand innocents, enrolled
Innocuous. Clothed with innocuous fire;
 Innocuous as a firstling of the flock,
 Lo! from th' innocuous flames, a lovely birth!
 Had burst innocuous. Say in bolder words,
Innocuously. Where the salt sea innocuously breaks, Innumerable. Innumerable streams with roar profound.
 With few in arms, innumerable foes,
 Is, by innumerable poets, touched
 Innumerable voices fill
 Innumerable gains; yet we, who now
 Innumerable, roaring with one voice!
 Bespotted—with innumerable isles:
 Innumerable multitude of forms
Inobtrusive. By silent inobtrusive sympathies,

- Insensibility. And proud insensibility to hope,
Insensible. Insensible to all relief
Insensible. He sits deprived of sight,
On hearts how'er insensible or rude;
Who, less insensible than sodden clay
Insensible. Nor only did the love
To virtue lost, insensible of peace,
Lying insensible to human praise,
I, not insensible, Heaven knows,
Insensibly. Dying insensibly away
That else insensibly departs,
The struggling Rill insensibly is grown
Doth find herself insensibly disposed
With thought.—He is insensibly subdued
Changed also slowly and insensibly.
Insensibly, each with the other's help.
Insensibly;—the immortal and divine
A slow disease insensibly consumed
Insensibly the foretaste of this parting
Insensibly, and round us gently fell
Inseparable. In one inseparable glory clad,
Inseparable, not for these alone,
Inseparably. With its twin notes inseparably paired.
Inseparably linked. Then be assured

 From honoured Instruments that round him wait ;
 And instruments of deadliest servitude !
 Of your own mighty instruments beware !
 And turn the instruments of good to ill,
 The penal instruments, the shows of crime,
 With books supplied and instruments of art,
 With din of instruments and shuffling feet
 And instruments of music, some half-made,
 On mere material instruments ;—how weak
Insufferably. Shorn of its beams, insufferably white,
 Shorn of his beams, insufferably white,
Insufficient. That will be deemed no insufficient plea

Insurmountable. Are these obstructious insurmountable ?
Insusceptible. Superior, insusceptible of pride,

Intake. When horses in the sunburnt intake stood,
 When horses in the wall-girt intake stand,
Intangible. Welcome, though silent and intangible !—
Integrity. Of courage, or integrity, or truth,
 With less alloy to its integrity,
Intellect. Upon an independent intellect.
 Peace settles where the intellect is meek,
 And proud discoveries of the intellect,
 Than all the pride of intellect and thought ?
 To the distempered intellect refuse
 Our meddling intellect
 They perish ;—but the intellect can raise,
 Of intellect and virtue's self-esteem ?
 His intellect by geometric rules,
 Established by the sovereign intellect,
 Of intellect and heart. With such a book
 Upon an independent intellect.
 Of intellect ; such sloth I could not brook,
 Employed, and man's unfolding intellect :
 Of self-applauding intellect ; but trains
 Of a majestic intellect, its acts
 Up to the height of feeling intellect
 For the discerning intellect of Man,
 That live in darkness. From his intellect
 The growth of intellect, yet gaining more,
 Of the pure intellect, that stands as laws
 To thought and to the climbing intellect,
Intellects. That garden of great intellects, undisturbed . . . 53 Bord. 880
 Than other intellects had mine been used
 Such benefit the humblest intellects
Intellectual. See Once-Intellectual.

 Man's intellectual empire. We subsist
 A blazing intellectual deity—
 Spirits that crowd the intellectual sphere
 An intellectual All-in-all !

Intricate. By naked rafters intricately crossed,
Intrigue. And all unfit for tumult or intrigue, Intrigues. What dire intrigues disturbed Cythera's
 joy!
Introduced. And thus my heart was early introduced
 Or introduced at this more quiet time.
Introducing. A sunbeam introducing among hearts
Inverted. His inverted spirit; and bestowed
Intrude. Where no disturbance comes to intrude
 Till we depart intrude not here;)
 This day we purposed to intrude,—"I did so,
 Of mortal separation, could intrude
Intruded. Intruded, for we failed to overtake Intruder. To take the intruder into favour;
 What dreams encompassed? Was the intruder nursed
 "Poor victim! no idle intruder has stood
 Like an intruder knocking at the door
 Intruder ne'er beheld, he thence surveys
 Each other's path; but, as the intruder seemed Intruders. Intruders—who would tear from Nature's book
Intrudes. Intrudes on peace, I pray the eternal Sire
 Intrudes, the peaceful concert to disturb Intruding. The silent trees, and saw the intruding sky—
Intrusion. From all intrusion free;
 Who, but for this intrusion, would have lived,
 From all intrusion of the restless world
Intrusive. Thus (where the intrusive File, ill-graced
 That with intrusive restlessness heats off
Intrusted. If aught intrusted to the pen
 When I was first intrusted to the care
 Intrusted safely each to his pursuit,
 This intuition led me to confound
Intuition. A passionate intuition; whence the Soul,
 A passionate intuition (and intuitions moral and divine)
Intuitions. Of contemplation, what intuitive truths,
 Whether discursive or intuitive;
Inundation. Triumphant.—Inundation wide and deep,
Inurned. Thou fortunate Region! whose Greatness inurned
Invaded.—Then Canute, rising from the invaded throne,
 Triumphant, winning from the invaded heavens.
Invaders. On British ground the Invaders are laid low;
 Meanwhile the Invaders fared as they deserved:
Invades. Invades a Realm, so pressed that in the scale
 No ruder sound your desert haunts invades,
Invading. For, when my prowess from invading Neighbours
 The King had fallen, and that invading host—
Invasive. Your patriot sons, to stem invasive war,
Invent. But Cythera, studious to invent
 Sometimes it suits me better to invent
Invented. Discovered or invented; or set forth,
Invention. Or stray invention.
Inventions. Thus to torment her with inventions!—
 death—
 And certes not in vain; he had inventions rare.
 When Art's abused inventions were unknown;
 Those arts, and high inventions, if unpropred
 To those inventions of corrupted man
Inventive. The old inventive Poets, had they seen,
 To their inventive humour, by stern looks,
 Is past for ever.—An inventive Age Inventress. So tripped the Muse, inventress of the dance;
Invents. By all that mind invents or hand prepares;
Invers. "And he had been at Invers;
Inversion. Inversion strange! that, unto One who lives
Inversneyd. Near the rough Falls of Inversneyd!
Inverted. Inverted shrubs, and moss of gloomy green,
 Vanish inverted hill, and shadowy wood,
 When, through this Height's inverted arch,
 Meets him, among the inverted trees.
 Seems, 'mid inverted mountains, not unheard.
 Inverted shrubs, and moss of darkest green,
 At peace inverted, and you like necks ye lave,
 Inverted trees, rocks, clouds, and azure sky;
 Inverted, all its sun-bright features touched
Invest. Aid with dread signs the nascent Stream invest?
 With which communities of men invest
Invested. And fields invested with purple gleams;
 Invested moorland waste, and naked pool,

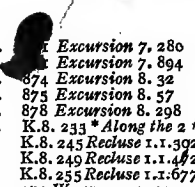

invests. That still invests the guardian Pass, . . . 300

Inveterately. Up-coiling, and inveterately con-
 volved;
 Widely—inveterately usurped upon,
Invincible. Slowly surmounting some invincible hill,
Invigorated. Of waters, with invigorated peal Invigorates. That, while it binds, invigorates and supports.
Invigorating. Whence oft invigorating transports flow
 Invigorating thoughts from former years;
Invincible. Armoury of the invincible Knights of old:
 Or like the invincible Rock itself that braves,
 A Champion steadfast and invincible, Inviolable. The inviolable God, that tames the proud!
 Devoted, on the inviolable stream
Inviolate. Maintains inviolate its slightest vow!
 Inviolate, whate'er the cottage hearth
 Is Roman dignity inviolate;
 By constancy inviolate,
 To privileged regions and inviolate,
 Retained its purity inviolate,
 Inviolate retirement, subject there
 On long may it remain inviolate,

Invites—continued.

Of faith invites. More welcome to no land
The Star of Bethlehem from its sphere invites
Nor hedge-row screen invites my steps abroad ;
Inviting. With aspect so inviting. Why forbid me
Inviting him with cheerful lure :
Is it not a brow inviting Inviting words—perchance already flung
The greenest bowers, the most inviting ways,
Ye heavy laden ! 't' such the inviting voice
The Sabbath hells renew the inviting peal ;
Inviting, at all seasons, ears and eyes
Inviting shades of opportune recess
Inviting ; with buffoons against buffoons
Inviting us in glee to sit and eat
Ere with inviting smile the Wanderer said :
And on that couch inviting us to rest,
Was most inviting to a troubled mind ;
Inviting penance, fruitlessly endured :
Inviting sleep and soft forgetfulness
We must not part at this inviting hour.
Invocations. In these their invocations, with a voice
Invoke. Invoke we those bright Beings one by one ;
Of his Bandusian fount ; or I invoke
Of the Most High. Again do they invoke
Invoked. Why do good thoughts, invoked or not, descend,
When from afar invoked by anxious love ?
With lifted hands invoked, and songs of praise :
Invokes. Aloft, the imperial Bird of Rome invokes
Invoking. Invoking Diou's tutelary care,
With scorn, invoking a vindictive ban
Involuntary. With gladness and involuntary songs.
He, doubt not, with involuntary dread,
When this involuntary strain had ceased,
Involve. Involve their serpent-necks in changeful rings,
Duty, or love—involve, I feel, my ruin.
The shades of night no more the soul involve,
Involved. See Self-Involved.
The shepherd, all involved in wreaths of fire,
Involved and restless all—a scene
So were the hopeless troubles, that involved
Involved a history of no doubtful sense
And their necks play, involved in rings,
Involved whate'er by love was brought
With an untoward fate was long involved
The purer elements of truth involved
Involving. See All-Involving.
Inward. Who, in the silent hour of inward thought,
Brought from without to inward misery,
Though inward anguish damped the Sailor's brow,
Then, with a voice which inward trouble broke
We need an inward sting to goad us on.
Of inward sadness had its charm ;
Are of inward peace secure ;
But nothing from their inward selves had they to fear.
Who, to his inward thoughts confined,
Of serious faith, and inward glee ;
They flash upon that inward eye
Such rebounds our inward ear
Call to the heart for inward listening
Or made with hope to please that inward eye
Was playing with some inward bait
Or share with me, some inward thought ! that inward eye,
Some inward trouble suddenly
So all his dreams—that inward light
Of inward happiness. We are selfish men ;
History that proves by inward evidence
How wide a space can part from inward peace
Our inward prospect over,
If she be doomed to inward care,
And carrying inward a serene
To the sole temple of the inward mind ;
As men the dictate of whose inward sense
What witchery for pure gifts of inward seeing,
Whose high endeavours are an inward light
That brings to the inward creature no disgrace ?
Mute offerings, tribute from an inward sense
So prized, and things inward and outward held
Of pity cast from inward tenderness
That I beheld respired with inward meaning
Remembered less ; but I had inward hopes
Should the whole frame of earth by inward throes
Who, looking inward, have observed the ties
Of inward consciousness, and hope that laid
Some inward agitations thence are brought,
Turned inward ; or at my request would sing
But, as the mind was filled with inward light,
Inward and outward ; humble, yet sublime :
Turned inward,—to examine of what stuff
And inward self-disparagement affords
Or, if the mind turn inward, she recoils
Of inward conscience? with whose service charged
These inward feelings, and the aspiring vows
The inward principle that gives effect
Stung by his inward thoughts, and by the smiles

Inward—continued.

Of open projects, and his inward hoard
Enrapt, as if his inward sense perceived
That inward motion to disguise, he said
By the division of her inward self
A native Briton to these inward chains,
As inward motions of the wandering thought
Can give us inward help, can purify
Already have I gained. The inward frame
Why does this inward lustre fondly seek,
Inwardly. Was growing inwardly more strong ;
Methought, was yielding inwardly,
Her sanction inwardly she bore,
And inwardly sustained by silent prayer,
Yet, being inwardly unstained,
To a meek spirit suffering inwardly.
Outwardly, inwardly contemplated,
Compelled to look, and inwardly oppressed
Of discontent, and inwardly oppress
He outwardly, and inwardly perhaps
From risk and hardship, inwardly retrace
Iona. On to Iona!—What can she afford
Iona's. Glad tidings to Iona's shore,
Which yet survive on bleak Iona's coast,
Iona's Saints, forgetting not past days,
Iopas. Graced with redundant hair, Iopas sies
Ire. Rejoice, brave Land, though pride's perverted ire
"Bard ! moderate your ire ;
And food cut off by sacerdotal ire,
DE-IRIANS—he would save them from God's ire ;
Dread Lord ! so fearful when provoked, thine ire
Yet, yet rejoice, tho' Pride's perverted ire
Ireful. Deafening the region in his ireful mood.
Irians. See De-Irians.
Iris. Not Iris, issuing from her cloudy shrine,
Irksome. To banish listlessness and irksome care ;
Ne'er can the way be irksome or forlorn
Of irksome change, or threats from saddening power.
—An irksome drudgery seems it to plod on,
Irksome sensations ; but by love of truth
No more to open on that irksome world
Than honest maintenance, by irksome toil
Iron. The rear through iron brown betrays a sullen
gleam.
At once the griding iron passage found ;
His fate was pitied. Him in iron case Should he, by tales which would draw tears from iron,
Like red-hot iron burnt into my heart.
The obstinate bolt of a small iron door
I lighted—opened with soft touch the chapel's iron
door,
Equipped from head to foot in iron mail.
47
With iron, making it throughout in all
Tugging at the iron chain,
Would have pulled up an iron ring ;
He will be turned to iron soon,
Through all his iron frame was felt
Of vain conceit, an iron scourge !
Her arts, her strength, her iron, and her gold.
'Twas through an iron grate.
When of an iron age they told,
The Monks relax or break these iron chains ;
Firm as the stake to which with iron band
Received, and fostered in her iron breast :
Nor does the village Church-clock's iron tone
And now on the brink of the iron.
And feudal rapine clothed with iron mail,
—There, did the iron Genius not disdain
Tinkled like iron ; while far distant hills
Wherein were fixed the iron pales that fenced
A murderer had been hung in iron chains.
And iron case were gone ; but on the turf,
"But all was quieted by iron bonds
An iron knell ! with echoes from afar
What would it bring ?—an iron age,
Iron-bound. The gulfy coast of Norway iron-bound ;
Ironic. Ironic diamonds,—clubs, hearts, diamonds, spades,
Iron-pointed. An iron-pointed staff lay at his side.
Irons. A human body that in irons swang,
Sounding with grapping irons and long poles.
Irradiate. By Poesy irradiate, and yet graded.
Irradiates. A virtue which irradiates and exalts
Irradiation. Of rapt irradiation, exquisite.
Irrational. Though yet irrational of soul, to grasp Irreconcilable. Meets foes irreconcilable, and at best Irregular. Irregular in sight or sound
Had given a charter to irregular hopes.
Traversed but by a few irregular paths,
Had been irregular, I might say, wild ;
Irregularly. Abodes of men irregularly massed
Irreligious. How still ! no irreligious sound or sight Irremovable. And irremovable gracious openings lie,
Irresistible. Of being, smites with irresistible pain,
With touches irresistible.
Aloud, with fervour irresistible
Great, universal, irresistible.

Issued. Then issued Vesper from the fulgent west,
 Issued, to sudden view, a glorious Form!
 Issuing or issued from a wintry fount;
 Issued into the salt-sea flood,
 Till doubtful combat issued in a trance
 Our thoughts have issued, and our feelings flowed,
 Issued forth with old and young,
 Issued low muttered sounds, as if of pain
 Issued, and with uplifted eyes beheld,
 Issued, on delegation to sustain
 Then, as we issued from that covert nook,
 Hath issued any portion of the joy
 Issued the blest Redeemer of our race—
Issues. Issues from his radiant shroud,
 Or a fierce impress issues with its foil
 Descend on all that issues from our blood,
 Issues, revealed in no presumptuous vision,
 Perturbed she issues. She will go!
 Issues the master Mind, at whose fell swoop
 Upon the dream-like issues—the romance
 Issues for that dominion overthrown:
 Great issues, good or bad for human kind,
 For kindly issues—as through every clime
 Kindlier issues, holier rest,
 Of all that issues from his glorious fount!

My Johnny, till my dying day." 128 Idiot Boy 236

Johnny—continued.

- "Oh Doctor! Doctor! where's my Johnny?"
 And carried Johnny to the wood.
 What Johnny and his Horse are doing!
 —'Tis Johnny! Johnny! as I live.
 And Johnny burrs, and laughs aloud;
 "Oh! Johnny, never mind the Doctor;
 Cried Betty, "Tell us, Johnny, do."
 And, Johnny, mind you tell us true."
 Now Johnny all night long had heard
 —Thus answered Johnny in his glory.
Johnny's. In Johnny's left hand you may see
 Burr, burr—now Johnny's lips they burr,
 And Johnny's lips they burr, burr, burr,
 Of Johnny's wit, and Johnny's glory.
 Consider, Johnny's but half-wise;
John's. And, while she roves through St. John's
 Vale,
Join. To join those miserable men he flew,
 Join twenty tapers of unequal height
 Join me in thanks for their blind services.
 Befriends the observance, readily they join
 Mount, tuneful Bird, and join the immortal quires!
 To join that gallant ship of war,
 The glacier Pillars join in solemn guise
 Ye screaming Sea-mews, in the concert join!
 We in thought will join your throng,
 Where murmuring rivers join the song of ev'n;
 Join to the rigours of the sires of Rome
 And their congenial powers, that, while they join
 Stealing with silent lapse to join the brook
 In purpose join to hasten or reprove
 Invite us; shall we quit our road, and join
 Who from their dwellings came not forth to join.
 And forced to join in less obnoxious shapes Joined. We joined our tales of wretchedness together,
 And light them joined, and you will see the less
 My voice was silent, but my heart had joined thee.
 I could have joined the wanton chase.
 And joined the wandering gipsy-folk.
 Is joined through some dear homeborn tie
 Joined in one solemn and capacious grove;
 And all have joined in one endeavour
 Had Peter joined whatever vice
 May even by contraries be joined
 To pay thee homage; and with these are joined,
 Joined with the lustre of her rich attire
 To win me at first sight: and he there joined
 Be Brother now to Brother joined!
 Joined are they, and the sylvan Doe
 Help did she give at need, and joined
 Solemnly joined. Now sanctify the hands
 Some awful moment to which Heaven has joined
 To man's joined a mournful voice,
 No firmer grasp—a little wild-flower, joined
 For each and all of us, together joined.
 Joined in the transport, echoed back their shout,
 Go, single—yet aspiring to be joined
 Man and his help-mate in fast wedlock joined
 His children's children join'd the holy sound,
 Then TENDERNESS with CANDOUR join'd,
 Imperfect, with these habits must be joined
 Her mandates, severing whom true love had joined,
 So moulded, joined, abstracted, so endowed
 Joined in a cold damp nook, espied a well
 With the sad news, that he had joined a troop
 Hands joined he with his Visitant,—a grasp,
 Yet left them joined by sympathy in age;
 My melancholy voice the chorus joined;
 The congregation joined with me in prayer

Journey. On as we journey, in clear view displayed,
 Of my sad journey, and within the wain
 So far into your journey! on my life,
 For a companion—here he comes; our journey
 Who on her journey must proceed alone,
 From such a journey!—there was a black tree,
 He would pursue his journey. So they parted.
 Throughout that journey from the vehicle
 Who journey thither find themselves alone
 Things needful for the journey of her son
 Began his journey, and, when he had reached
 Their journey had renewed;
 Alas! my journey, rugged and uneven,
 And, till life's journey closed, the spot
 Once up, once down the hill, one journey, Babe,
 The loitering journey to its end.
 Or is it that, when human Souls a journey long have had
 On went She, and due north her journey took.
 Self-shaken, as I closed my airy journey.
 Of chance-temptation, ere his journey end,
 O'er dew-damp'd dust our journey was begun,
 A needful journey, under favouring skies,
 When hence did journey my bright Lady dear,
 He plies his weary journey; seeing still,
 At morn, our various journey, sad and slow.
 A pleasant loitering journey, through three days
 The cottage threshold where my journey closed.
 By which our toilsome journey was abridged,
 Our journey, and ere twice the sun had set
 That variegated journey step by step.
 And with them did we journey several hours
 Uprisen betimes, our journey we renewed,
 On his accustomed journey. The delight,
 Of golden cities ten months' journey deep
 My journey, and beneath a genial sun,
 And journey far, revisiting the scenes
 Our journey, under favourable skies.
 Mount slowly, sun! that we may journey long,
 A length of journey yet remains untraced:
 To tax you with this journey;—mildly said
 And end their journey in the same repose!
 A merry journey, rich in pastime, cheered
 The journey of another night,
Journeyed. While thus he journeyed, step by step led on
 He journeyed, and forthwith his crime declared:
 We journeyed; all we knew of care—
 When hitherward we journeyed, side by side,
 Journeyed with ponderous folios in their hands;
 Nor could I, while we journeyed thus, forbear
 And sallying forth, we journeyed side by side,
 I mounted, and we journeyed towards the hills:
 And disappeared. I journeyed back this way, Journeying. By which the journeying pair are chased?
 Why should the Enthusiast, journeying through this Isle,
 So lately, journeying toward the snow-clad Alps.
 Thence, journeying on a second time, they passed
 A pensive stranger, journeying at his leisure Journeyings. From his long journeyings and eventual life
Journey's. Would fail you ere our journey's end be reached.
 The chaise drove on; our journey's end
 By this time near their journey's end;

 The giant-quelling bolts of Jove, I flee, . . . 624
 By Jove I'll be in . . . 634
 Sprung from high Jove, of sage Mnemosyne's . . . 634
 Jove's. Laodamia I that at Jove's command . . . 634
 Whom onest, fiercely urged at Jove's command, . . . 665
 Which, at Jove's will, descends on Pelion's top, . . . 632
 When Wisdom, like the Goddess from Jove's brain, . . . 695
 Jovial. To leave it with a jovial heart; . . . 174
 And many a snatch of jovial song . . . 180
 To him, a jovial soul, I ween, . . . 246

Joy. See After-joy.

Though every passing zephyr whispers joy; . . . 11
 Shouts from the echoing hills with savage joy. . . 17
 Alas! the little joy to man allowed . . . 20
 Abortive joy, and hope that works in fear; . . . 20
 And some with tears of joy each other greet. . . 20
 And her whom he had loved in joy, he said, . . . 29
 Until it seemed to bring a joy to my despair. . . 30
 A sudden joy surprised expiring thought, . . . 35
 A bee came darting, which the Child with joy . . . 44
 This news! it made my heart leap up with joy. . . 49
 I bless her in the fulness of my joy! . . . 62
 Eternal farewell to unmingled joy . . . 65
 The labours of my hand are still your joy; . . . 67
 In joy I met thee, but a few hours past; . . . 75
 And love, and thought, and joy. . . 79
 O blessed tidings! thought of joy! . . . 81
 Her joy is like an instinct, joy . . . 81
 The valley rings with mirth and joy; . . . 84
 From home and company remote and every playful . . . 91
 joy, . . . 91
 Thy hours as they flow on are spent, if not in joy . . . 92
 in peace. . . 92
 Clap your hands with joy my Hearers, . . . 93

And oh what joy this recollection now . . . 96
 Was two years taller: 'twas a joy to see, . . . 99
 What joy awaits you, whea the breeze . . . 106
 Joy will be flowa in its mortality; . . . 107
 The joy of my desire; . . . 109
 But they to me no joy can give, . . . 114
 My little joy! my little pride! . . . 114
 In his knowna haunts of joy where'er he might, . . . 118
 His lips with joy they burr at you; . . . 126
 Whether he be in joy or pain, . . . 126
 For joy he cannot hold the bridle, . . . 127
 For joy his head and heels are idle, . . . 127
 He's idle all for very joy. . . 127
 Stands fixed, her face with joy o'erflows, . . . 129
 "Oh dear, dear Foy! my sweet joy!" . . . 130
 She screams—she cannot move for joy; . . . 130
 Whether in cunning or in joy . . . 130
 Her limbs are all alive with joy. . . 130
 You hardly can perceive his joy. . . 130
 Of hardshp, skill or courage, joy or fear; . . . 132
 His heart and his heart's joy! For oftentimes . . . 133
 And all thy life has been my daily joy. . . 136
 While thou, a feeding babe, didst in thy joy . . . 136
 Fell down and clasped his knees for joy, not . . .
 uttering word.

Rock the cradle of joy, smooth the death-bed of . . .
 strife. . . 143
 But then there came a sight of joy; . . . 144
 Oh joy for me that sight to see! . . . 145
 Thou art thy mother's only joy; . . . 145
 That their pure joy in nature may survive . . . 152
 Can thou pervert the evidence of joy. . . 153
 And the sweet joy which they partake, . . . 156
 It is a joy to me. . . 156
 In joy of voice and pinion! . . . 159
 There is madness about thee, and joy divine . . . 159
 Joy and jollity be with us both! . . . 160
 He is the darling and the joy; . . . 166
 Those brilliant strangers, hailed with joy . . . 170
 Far beyond in joy of heart. . . 171
 Into open sign of joy . . . 171
 By a kitten's busy joy, . . . 171
 Joy, as her holiest language, shall adopt; . . . 173
 His heart with sudden joy is filled,— . . . 177
 As joy delights in; and with wise restraint . . . 185
 Trihute to ease; and, of its joy secure, . . . 185
 Of him who gazes, or has gazed? a grave and . . .
 steady joy, . . . 189

There's joy in the mountains, . . . 190
 Nor less the joy with many a glance . . . 190
 Had been his dearest joy. . . 192
 His board with lawful joy, and bear . . . 193
 I saw the hare that raced about with joy; . . . 195
 Of joy in minds that can no further go, . . . 195
 Of Him who walked in glory and in joy . . . 196
 Joy sparkled in the prancing courser's eyes; . . . 200
 But gazed upon the spoil with silent joy. . . 201
 And a small arbour, made for rural joy; . . . 201

Joy—continued.

The joy of them who till the fields of Swale, . . . 202
 Joy! joy to both! but most to her . . . 204
 But here is perfect joy and pride . . . 204
 "Now Who is he that bounds with joy . . . 204
 Of harmony, and the deep power of joy, . . . 206
 A presence that disturbs me with the joy . . . 207
 From joy to joy: for she can so inform . . . 207
 Of tender joy wilt thou remember me, . . . 207
 O terror! what hath she perceived?—O joy! . . . 209
 And who is she?—Can that be Joy! . . . 215
 And treading among flowers of joy . . . 218
 Source inexhaustible of life and joy, . . . 231
 For joy and rest, albeit to find them only . . . 231
 Of playfulness, and love, and joy, . . . 232
 For terror, joy, or pity, . . . 232
 Of joy, that from her utmost walls . . . 235
 With joy I sail among them. . . 237
 Seems like a note of joy to strike,— . . . 241
 Joy at the heart of Peter knocks; . . . 241
 His staring bones all shake with joy, . . . 242
 His sudden fit of joy is down,— . . . 243
 A glimpse of sudden joy he has, . . . 244
 The joy was more than he could bear!— . . . 247
 Her joy was like a deep affright: . . . 247
 Had ever such a fit of joy . . . 249
 That thou, if not with partial joy elate, . . . 250
 Even Joy could tell, Joy craving truce and rest . . . 255
 Surprised by joy—impatient as the Wind . . . 257
 Heavy is woe;—and joy, for human-kind, . . . 259
 And, if there be a joy that slights the claim . . . 261
 Of grateful memory, bid that joy depart. . . 261
 The deep, deep joy of a confiding thought; . . . 267
 Unwearied joy, and life without its cares. . . 268
 Nor ought of mutual joy or sorrow knew . . . 276
 Does joy approach? they meet the coming tide; . . . 278
 Whose cawing occupants with joy proclaim . . . 283
 Methinks 'twould heighten joy, to overleap . . . 284
 There, too, a Son, his joy and pride, . . . 285
 What joy to hear thee, and to see! . . . 288
 Joy have I had; and going hence . . . 288
 The English ballad-singer's joy! . . . 290
 As might have been, then, thought of joy! . . . 292
 And yet a higher joy partake . . . 294
 There let a mystery of joy prevail, . . . 294
 And from that Infant's face let joy appear; . . . 294
 Now we are tired of hoisterous joy, . . . 295
 And was his friend; and gave him joy . . . 295
 It is the triumph of his joy! . . . 296
 And in the general joy of heart . . . 297
 Will dwell with me—to heighten joy, . . . 302
 A homeless sound of joy was in the sky: . . . 304
 The senselessness of joy was then sublime! . . . 306
 With joy in Kent's green vales; but never found . . . 306
 My Country! and 'tis joy enough and pride . . . 306
 What joy to read the promise of her mien! . . . 311
 And of that joy which shook the Isthmian Field, . . . 312
 In thankful joy and gratulation pure. . . 312
 And joy returns, to brighten fortune, . . . 318
 What hope, what joy can sunshine bring to thee, . . . 319
 Of states and kingdoms, to their joy or woe, . . . 323
 So seemly as the radiant vest of joy? . . . 323
 Their solemn joy—praising the Eternal Lord . . . 324
 The banner of our joy we will erect. . . 324
 Her summer's faithful joy—'that still is mine, . . . 336
 Beauty, and life, and motions as of joy: . . . 337
 Then give free course to joy and love, . . . 339
 The wages of thy travel, joy! . . . 341
 The wages of thy travel, joy! . . . 341
 Of joy and sprightly thought. . . 343
 Was joy, in following joy, as keen . . . 344
 O joy when the girdle of England appears! . . . 346

Beak Radicofani! escaped with joy— . . . 352
 While all things present told of joy and love. . . 350
 Whose sedulous iteration thrilled with joy . . . 363
 Looks up in all places, for joy or for rest, . . . 365
 Fair Land! Thee all men greet with joy; how few, . . . 366
 Warblers I heard their joy unbosoming . . . 367
 Whom he had hailed with joy, and cried, . . . 369
 Of joy immortal and of pure affection. . . 370
 To mortals, joy is turned to sorrow; . . . 372
 But fill the hollow vale with joy! . . . 376
 Though joy attend Thee orient at the birth . . . 391
 For joy its sunny hours were free to give . . . 392
 How nearly joy and sorrow are allied! . . . 395
 Hung back, and smiled, and blushed for joy, . . . 398
 Her Father did with joy behold,— . . . 400
 Now joy for you who from the towers . . . 402
 And must in joy to her return. . . 403
 A voice of uttermost joy brake out: . . . 404
 Their joy till every pang was past. . . 406
 With heart brimful of pride and joy! . . . 419
 In meek and simple infancy, what joy . . . 436
 And sorrow bartered for exceeding joy. . . 440
 What joy to live, what blessedness to die! . . . 441
 Yield timely fruit of peace and love and joy. . . 447
 Of annual joy one tributary lay; . . . 448
 And if not so, whose perfect joy makes sleep . . . 453
 With joy like his who climbs, on hands and knees, . . . 466
 The poor, the lonely, herdsmen's joy and pride. . . 475

Joy—continued.

Ere where there's no envy, there's so much of joy ;
Which seems a sense of joy to yield
Of joy and sorrow ;
We wear a face of joy, because . . .
And joy its own security.
Shall now by such a gift with joy be moved,
Nor feel the fulness of that joy reproved ?
If this great world of joy and pain
Awake to silent joy :
Joy based on sorrow, good with ill combined,
Then shall a Veteran's heart be thrilled with joy,
The heart with joy and gratitude to God
Though haply less than joy.
A place where joy is known,
While not one joy of ours by them was shared.
O joy for her ! when'er in winter
All that they think and feel, with tears of joy ;
When joy had passed away,
The joy in that retreat
Fair sights, and visions of romantic joy !
Joy ?—a moon by fits reflected
Such is joy,—as quickly hidden,
To joy, or be it to some mourning ; never
Full little joy have I now of thy cry.
And full-assured trust, joy without measure,
And, when it likes him, joy enough them sendeth.
For to th' untrue he oft gives ease and joy ;
Send unto these as mickle joy this day,
And joy of love to send her evermore ;
Since I am wholly at Thy will ? what joy
O would the blisful God now for his joy,
And here I dwell an outcast from all joy,
That in my soul I feel the joy of it.
'Mid the dews, in the sunshine of morn,—'mid the
joy
In peace eternal ; where desire and joy
Thou one blind Sailor, rich in joy
From day to day with never-ceasing joy,
Unwee that to him the joy was given
His moiety in trust, till Joy shall lead
Thou Child of Joy
I hear, I hear, with joy I hear !
He sees it in his joy ;
And with new joy and pride
O joy ! that in our embers
Nor all that is in enmity with joy,
Sad tides of joy from Melancholy's hand ;
Glowing in golden sunset tints of joy,
Blows not a Zephyr but it whispers joy ;
Light up of tranquil joy a sober scene ;
—No vulgar joy is his, at even tide
Great joy by horror tam'd dilates his heart,
The little cottage of domestic joy
Soon flies the little joy to ma' allow'd,
The lily of domestic joy decay ;
While hum with busier joy her happy bees ;
Dead to the sense of every finer joy
Science with joy saw Superstition fly
Hear Britain's sons rehearse thy praise with joy,
What dire intrigues disturbed Cythera's joy !
On the wild Goddess of Voluptuous Joy . . .
While the joy that precedes the calm season of rest
And from my Horse I leapt ; great joy had I.
Oh ! joy it was for her, and joy for me !
With many a fond embrace, while joy runs high,
Productive day be this of lasting joy
Doth seem half-conscious of the joy it brings . . .
But for a gift that consecrates the joy ?
A present joy the matter of a song,
The last autumnal crocus, 'twas my joy
Nor saw a band in happiness and joy
The bond of union between life and joy.
Thus oft amid those fits of vulgar joy
—And if the vulgar joy by its own weight
The scenes which were a witness of that joy
Unfelt shone brightly round us in our joy.
For its own pleasure, and I breathed with joy.
Sublimar joy ; for I would walk alone,
If high the transport, great the joy I felt . . .
A never-failing principle of joy
If child-like fruitfulness in passing joy,
Was social, and loved idleness and joy.
That fell in ruins round me. Oh, what joy
What joy was mine to see thee once again,
My hand upon his back with stormy joy,
And gratitude, and perfect joy of heart—
May books and Nature be their early joy !
What joy was mine ! How often in the course
Knowledge and increase of enduring joy
Between these sundry wanderings with a joy
Receive it daily as a joy of ours ;
But Europe at that time was thrilled with joy,
How bright a face is worn when joy of one
Is joy for tens of millions. Southward thence
Some vapoured in the unruliness of joy,
When God, the giver of all joy, is thanked
I wanted not that joy, I did not need
For her own sake, became my joy, even then—
But fondness, and a kind of radiant joy
Their joy, in England ; this, too, at a time . . .

Joy—continued.

For those that bade them fall. They found their
joy,
Might point with rapturous joy. Yet not the less,
O pleasant exercise of hope and joy !
'Twill be such joy to see them disappear . . .
To health and joy and pure contentedness ;
The thought, the image, and the silent joy :
Had to his joy unearthed a hedgehog, teased
With the adverse principles of pain and joy—
Else is not thine at all. But joy to him.
Oh, joy to him who here hath sown, hath laid
And so the deep enthusiastic joy,
Of joy in widest commonality spread ;
Rest, and be welcomed there to livelier joy.
Nor any voice of joy ; his spirit drank
No wild varieties of joy and grief.
Not speaking much, pleased rather with the joy
He tossed them with a false unnatural joy :
As if she had been shedding tears of joy . . .
How full their joy ! Till, pitiable doom !
That promised everlasting joy to France !
All joy in human nature ; was consumed,
And that is joy to him. When change of times
This notice comes too late." With joy I saw
Great show of joy the housewife made, and truly
Of admiration, and all sense of joy ?"
Enlivened happiness with joy o'erflowing,
With joy, aod—oh ! that memory should survive
What joy more lasting than a vernal flower ?—
That the prosperities of love and joy
Blameless, so intimate with love and joy
Ye that are capable of joy be glad !
With joy exalted to beatitude ;
We have, or hope, of happiness and joy,
Or in the gloom of twilight hum their joy
"Oh ! what a joy it were, in vigorous health,
Their way before them—what a joy to roam
Tidings of joy and love.—From those pure heights
With joy, and gratitude, and fear, and love ;
Brightened with joy ; for from within were heard
The joy of that pure principle of love . . .
In fellow-natures and a kindred joy . . .
Of human suffering, or of human joy . . .
Was he received, and mutual joy prevailed . . .
Cold, sullen, blank, from hope and joy shut out ;
Floats on the tossing waves. With joy sincere
Joy to myself ! but to the heart of her
Through shades and silent rest, to endless joy."
'Joy be their lot, and happiness,' he cried,
And truly might be said to die of joy !
Or dread was all that had been thought of,—joy
He craved a substitute in troubled joy ;
Announcing immortality and joy
And so acknowledged with a tremulous joy . . .
We followed ; and my voice with joy exclaimed :
With patriotic confidence and joy . . .
When joy of war and pride of chivalry
Sublime from present purity and joy !
Dull, to the joy of her own motions dead ;
Even as she shares the pride and joy of both.
Rejoice !—and ye have special cause for joy . . .
The beautiful girl, whose cheek was flushed with
joy.
To impart a joy, imperfect while unshared.
Be sung with transport and unceasing joy.
Joy giving voice to fervent gratitude . . .
And with a shepherd's joy. Immediately
Through joy and sorrow ; if my lot be joy
My hope, my joy, my sister, and my friend,
Such power and joy ; but only for this end,
Of pure affections, shedding upon joy
A brighter joy ; and through such damp and gloom
To aid him, aod in Song resound his joy . . .
With cheerful heart, an unknown voice of joy,
Hath issued any portion of the joy
Joy spreads, and sorrow spreads ; and this whole
Vale
Associates in the joy of purest minds,
Active as lambs, and overcome with joy . . .
Enough to fill the present day with joy,
These mountains will rejoice with open joy,
His strength, and had his triumph and his joy,
The joy of fleshly life without its cares.
Joy be poured, and thou the giver,
Than joy itself—for underneath it lies
Joyance. She who inspires that strain of joyance holy Joyed. We act as if we joyed in the sad tune
O Moon ! if e'er I joyed when thy soft light
Joy-flushes. But her blushes are joy-flushes ;
Joyful. These joyful tidings from no lips but mine . . .
May fill your breast with joyful pride ;
(Never had living man such joyful lot !)
And they such joyful tidings were . . .
He conquering, as in joyful Heaven is sung,
Joyful annunciation !—It went forth—
The Hebrews thus, carrying in joyful state
My noble fire emits the joyful ray
This Banner raised with joyful pride,
That with their joyful shout should close
Who were so joyful at the light of day . . .

Joyful—continued.

But we will see it, joyful tide !
 And a joyful cry through the Island rang,
 —Be joyful all ye nations ; in all lands,
 Would o'er the bosom of a joyful land
 Of joyful greeting were on him bestowed,
 Stands in our valley, named THE JOYFUL TREE ;
 Among her equals, round THE JOYFUL TREE,
 The fleece-encumbered flock—the JOYFUL ELM,
 So joyful in its motions, is become
 More joyful if it be with sorrow sooth'd.
Joyfully. The bugles that so joyfully were blown ?
 Of speculation, joyfully outspread,
Joyless. And joyless sylvan sport,
 —Back to the joyless Ocean thou art gone ;
 That strong, is, in the main, a joyless tie
 That is from joyless regions brought !
 Of joyless daylight ; when the fretful stir
 As, through the abysses of a joyless heart,
 Yet, round the body of that joyless Thing
 O joyless power that stands by lawless force !
 Appears a joyless human Being,
 No joyless forms shall regulate Joyless and comfortless. Our days glide on Labour, and Pain, and Grief, and joyless Age,
 Be joyless as the blind ? Ambitious spirits—
Joyous. The sand-lark chants a joyous song ;
 The day would be a joyous festival ;
 Joyous as morning,
 Of a joyous train ensuing,
 Off to some other play the joyous Vagrants flew !
 Dear mother of fresh thoughts and joyous health !
 Is with me at thy farewell, joyous Bark !
 Or, like the nightingale, her joyous vein
 The joyous Woman is the Mate
 And thus in joyous mood they hie
 Smooth passions, smooth discourse, and joyous thought ;
 In flows the joyous year.
 Now, while the birds thus sing a joyous song,
 Thee sing, ye Birds, sing, sing a joyous song !
 Joyous, nor scared at its own liberty,
 Even in this joyous time I sometimes felt
 And joyous loves, that hallow innocent days
 In wantonness of heart, a joyous band
 And joyous creatures ; see that pair, the lamb
 Murmuring of him who, joyous hap, was found,
 That timely light, to share his joyous sport :
 From cups replenished by his joyous hand.
 Of joyous comrades. Soon as the reedy marge
 Them leaving to their joyous hours I pass,
Joyously. Like stars in heaven, and joyously it showed ;
Joyousness. With joyousness, and with a thoughtful cheer,
 By no untimely joyousness ;
Joy's. Joy's second spring and Hope's long-treasured smile,
 And joy's excess produced a fear
 —Now with joy's tearful kiss each other greet.
Joys. Fair Swan ! by all a mother's joys caressed,
 On joys that might disgrace the captive's cell,
 Joys only given to uncorrupted hearts.
 His thoughts, the central point of all his joys.
 When long familiar joys are all resigned,
 And other joys my fancy to allure—
 Joys to spy thee near her home ;
 Had for their joys a killing power.
 And all its aching joys are now no more,
 Nor should the change be mourned, even if the joys
 And on the joys we shared in mortal life,—
 Whose joys, from all but memory swept away,
 The language of those drunken joys
 'Mid frost and snow, the instinctive joys of song,
 The azure brooks, where Dian joys to lave
 So joys, remembered without wish or will,
 Ah ! that a boon could shed such rapturous joys !
 In loose fashion tell their joys ;
 And joys of distant home my heart enchain.
 Dead to the world and scorning earth-born joys.
 And smothered joys into new being start.
 Such young ; nor need we blame the licensed joys,
 They taught me random cares and transient joys,
 Even ere her joys begin to fade ;
 If loves and joys, while up they sprung,
 Of unexperienced joys that might have been ;
 The joys of the Departed—what so fair
 While I salute my joys, thoughts sad or stern ;
 Where joys are perfect—neither wax nor wane.
 Both his new sorrow and his joys of old,
 His joys, his griefs, have vanished like a cloud
 Thanks to its tenderness, its joys, and fears,
 To shew her yet some joys to me remain,
 So vanish those fair Shadows, human joys,
 Whence Danger leans, and pointing ghastly, joys
 So oft, the central point of all his joys
 When the poor heart has all its joys resign'd
 How other pleasures have been mine, and joys
 And close communion. Many are our joys

Joys—continued.

And of old men who have survived their joys—
 Above all joys, that seemed another morn'
 With human kindnesses and simple joys.
 (Save some remembrances of dream-like joys
 Of one day's pleasure, and all mortal joys !
Joy-smitten. And yonder with joy-smitten heart have I
Jubilant. Their jubilant activity evolves
 With thunderous voice ? Or are ye jubilant,
 Jubilant outcry I rock and glade
Jubilata. With jubilata from the choirs of spring !
Jubilee. Keep jubilee, and, more than all,
 O fancy—what a jubilee !
 The heavens laugh with you in your jubilee ;
Judea. While in Judea Fancy loves to roam,
Judean. Descended from Judean heights, to march Judge. Appeal was made to the great Judge : the Accused
 Delivered to the Judge of all things. Dead !
 Such tales of your dead Father !—God is my judge,
 If I judge ill for thee, but it seems good
 Through Death,—so judging we should judge amiss.
 Judge both Fugitives with knowledge ;
 Rough doings these ! as God's my judge,
 Now should you say I judge amiss,
 Presentments ! they judge not right
 Judge thou of law and fact !
 Who are to judge of danger which they fear,
 A Judge, who, as man claims by merit, gives ;
 Father and Judge of all, with fervent tongue,
 On Sarnen's Mount, there judge of fit and right,
 Things that we judge of by a light too faint :
 Who sees, foresees ; who cannot judge amiss,
 Issuing in pomp, shall come to judge mankind,
 To God that is the judge of all.
 Bear with Him—judge Him gently who makes known
 Thy virtues He must judge, and He alone
 I was a better judge of thoughts than words,
 Before the ermin'd judge, that great stage.
 Was prayed to as a judge, but these were past,
 Of a village steeple, as I do, can judge,
 I felt, observed, and pondered ; did not judge,
 Witness and judge ; and I remember well
 To him appeal was made as to a judge ;
 Father, and king, and judge, adored and feared !
 Whether to act, judge, suffer, or enjoy.
 You judge unthankfully : distempered nerves
 And who shall judge the creature, will forgive.
 Or to record ; we judge, but cannot be
 And fear of him who is a righteous judge ;
Judged. I judged you most unkindly. But this Youth,
 Some thought far worse of him, and judged him
 wrong ;
 Well judged the Friend who placed it there
 Shall ye, by Poets even, be judged amiss !
 From him who judged her lord, a like decree ;
 And by frail man most equitably judged.
 Self judging, can with such discipline dispense,
Judges. Or at a doubting Judge's stern command, Judges. I am not of the world's presumptuous judges,
 Haydon ! let worthier judges praise the skill
 He only judges right who weighs, compares,
 All accidents, and judges were of all.
 Indifferent judges. 'Spite of proudest boast,
Judging. See All-judging, Ill-judging.
 Through Death,—so judging we should judge amiss.
 Judging not ill perhaps, the timid course
 Gravely to ponder—judging between good
 Yea, never thought of judging ; with the gift
 On humble life, forbid the judging mind
Judgment. See Rash-judgment.
 And yet, in plumbing the abyss for judgment,
 And therefore leave thee to a righteous judgment.
 Upon Heaven's righteous judgment, did become some signal judgment has befallen the man
 Yours was a stranger's judgment : for historians,
 Was in his judgment tempted to decline
 Ere judgment prompted from within
 A juster judgment from a calmer view ;
 'Weak is the will of Man, his judgment blind ;
 May learn, if judgment strengthen with his growth,
 His judgment with benignant ray
 Of judgment such presumptuous doom repeat !
 In many an hour when judgment goes astray,
 Survive not judgment that requires his own ?
 The judgment, and divert the general heart
 And judgment there be given ; or that intent
 A judgment too harsh of the sin and the shame ;
 To an unforgiving judgment from just Heaven.
 'Twere idle to descant. My inner judgment
 Into the turmoil, bore a sounder judgment
 Would but have touched the judgment, struck more deep
 Confusion of the judgment, zeal decayed,
 Of sitting thus in judgment interrupt
 A partial judgment—and yet why ? for them
 Yet happier in my judgment, even than you
 For to my judgment such they then appeared,

Judgment—continued.

Of inexperienced judgment, ever prone
 Fearfully low; nor will your judgment scorn
 "And in your judgment, Sir! the mind's repose
 Let judgment here in mercy be pronounced;
 And such as my best judgment could select
 Good honest souls!—if right my judgment lies

Judgments. Rash judgments, nor the sneers of selfish men,

Where gentlest judgments may misdeem,
 And, if old judgments keep their sacred course,
 Yet trained to judgments righteously severe,
 All judgments that have been, or e'er shall be;
 And judgments unrepealed,
 Dispose to judgments temperate as we lay
 Whose sterner judgments deem that word a snare
 In bursts of outrage spread your judgments wide,
 At providential judgments, undismayed
 Bend, ye Perverse! to judgments from on High,

Judgments and aims and acts whose higher source
 To which her judgments reverently defer.
 Such wickedness his judgments cannot spare;
 Or judgments sanctioned in the Patriot's mind
 Harsh judgments, if the song be loth to quit
 Of indecisive judgments, that impaired
 One sense for moral judgments, as one eye
 To turn all judgments out of their right course;
 Dragging all precepts, judgments, maxims, creeds,
 With settling judgments now of what would last
 From judgments of the wealthy Few, who see
 In moral judgments which from this pure source
 His judgments, near that lonely house we paced
 Judgments, that filled the land from age to age

Judgment-seat. Must never come before a mortal judgment-seat,

Of his own voice, who from the judgment-seat

Judgment-seats. From higher judgment-seats make no appeal

Judicious. A more judicious knowledge of the worth
 To them, and to his own judicious pains,

Juggler's. A Juggler's balls old Time about him tossed;

Juice. The domination of the sprightly juice

Julia. That Julia, wanting yet the name of wife,
 "Julia," said he, "and to your father's house

Unwedded Julia, terror-smitten, hears
 A season after Julia had withdrawn

For Vaudracour and Julia (so were named
 Julian. It tinged the Julian steeps—it lay,
 All shall be fulfilled—the Julian spear

Julia's. Of Julia's travail. When the babe was born,
Juliet. Who told of Juliet and her Romeo,
Julius. Ere Julius landed on her white-cliffed shore,
July. It was a July evening; and he sat
 Of July suns; he feels it sweet;
 In March, December, and in July,

Jumbled. All jumbled up together, to compose
Jump. The leaves in myriads jump and spring,
June. Among the forest glades, while jound June
 Fresh as a rose in June,
 The steps of June; as if their various hues
 The thaw-wind, with the breath of June,
 'Tis spent—this burning day of June!
 Gay June would scorn us. But when bleak winds roar
 White she is as lily of June,
 On such a night of June
 That keeps, till June, December's snow;
 Or daisies swarming through the fields of June.
 Which told it was the pleasant month of June;
June's. The cowslip-gathering in June's dewy prime;
 In June's sunshining hours
Jump-frau's. Of secondary birth, the Jung-frau's cone;
Juniper. And juniper and thistle, sprinkled o'er,
Junio. Tempted the bird of Junio to unfold
 As Junio was unto the Theban hood,
 Be present; kindly Junio, be thou near!
Junonian. Junonian hospitalities prepare Junonia's. She burns, she frets—by Junio's rancour stung;
 How Junio's hate with unrelenting force
 Thro' wrathful Junio's far-famed enmity;
Jupiter. Silence ensued. "O Jupiter, whose care
 (And Jupiter, my own beloved star!
 Turned towards the planet Jupiter that hung
 To Argos. So wills angry Jupiter,

Just. Just where a cloud above the mountain rears
 Still, Nature, ever just, to him imparts
 To the just cause; and, oh! do thou preside
 Full long endured in hope of just reward,
 "These things just served to stir the slumbering sense,
 I hope you are refreshed.—I have just written
 Just as we left the glen a clap of thunder
 But when you were an Outcast?—Heaven is just;
 How they who would be just must seek the rule
 From what has just befallen me I have cause
 The minster-clock has just struck two,
 Just half a week after, the wind sallied forth,

Just—continued.

Just as those final words were penned, the sun
 broke out in power,

It looks just like the rest; and yet that man
 Leonard, the elder by just eighteen months,

I was their natural guardian; and 'tis just
 Rose,—and, to consummate this just intent,

The hare has just started from Hamilton's grounds,
 And now that Johnny is just going,

A green-grown pond she just has past,
 A just repentment, both for conscience-sake

"Generous Frank! the just in effort
 And sometimes, just as listening ends

And yet, just three years back—no more—
 Just three days after, passing by

Just as light and just as yellow;
 Just half a foot in height.

So that you just might say, as then I said,
 By the just Gods whom no weak pity moved,

That Destiny her course should change; too just Whose just reward is shame.

On wishes just and wise,
 The faith that elevates the just,

With her smooth tones and discords just,
 Stood just as he had stood before!

In the just tribute of thy Poet's pen!
 And, to a point of just relief, ahate

Mindless of its just honours; with this key
 Just Heaven, contract the compass of my mind

Life with you Lambs, like day, is just begun,
 To share the passion of a just disdain.

Just God, forgive!
 Those trees, a veil just half withdrawn;

Of a just God for liberty and right,
 And God and Nature say that it is just.

By just revenge inflamed? No foot may chase,
 To rob our Human-nature of just praise

Be just, be grateful; nor, the oppressor's creed
 Dependence infinite, proportion just;

Just God of christianised Humanity,
 From your infinite marvels, the sadness was just.

Just at the point of issue, where it fears
 The beautiful, the brave, the holy, and the just!

In just esteem, it rivals; though no style
 A just and gracious Queen have we,

Record we too, with just and faithful pen,
 (While we look round) that Heaven's decrees are

just:
 Will listen, and ye know that He is just.

For the perfected Spirits of the just!
 Through good and evil thine, in just degree

Death to the innocent is more than just,
 Just limits; but you Tower, whose smiles adorn

With just enough life's comforts to procure,
 "And just above you slope of corn

—This just reproof the prosperous Dame
 Can haughty Time be just!

—Merciful over all his creatures, just
 His social sense of just, and fair, and true;

Just serves to show how delicate a soil
 Learn to be just, just through impartial law;

Just half protruded to the light of morn,
 —How just, how bountiful, the hand of Heaven.

A just memorial; and thine eyes consent
 The God in heaven;—attend, he just;

Then the Muses might deal with me just as they chose,
 —To an unforgiving judgment from just Heaven.

But coldly rest not here—be more than just;
 Just at the time; and there he found

—With a benign indulgence more than just.
 The Memories of the Wise and Just.

Of zeal and just ambition, than to live
 Loses her just authority, falls beneath

By a more just gradation did lead on Conformity as just as that of old

Among the depths of time. Yet is it just
 'Tis just that in behalf of these, the works,

Her just opinions, delicate reserve,
 Just three parts blown—a cottage-child—if e'er,

Not violating any just restraint,
 From the natural inlets of just sentiment,

As just in regulation, and as pure
 Have cleared a passage for just government,

The sternness of the just, the faith of those
 Of our opinions had been just, we took

With real feeling and just sense; how vain
 His mind in a just equipoise of love.

Of scornful pity be the just reward
 In Heaven's determinations, ever just.

And, from the impulse of a just disdain,
 If, in proportion, it be just and meet,

By which mankind now suffers, is most just.
 And evil, to the just and the unjust;

Exalting tender themes; by just degrees
 The memory of the just survives in heaven:

To the assembled spirits of just men
 —Just as the Child could totter on the floor,

 Of Justice armed, and Pride to be laid low.
 For Justice hath absolved the innocent,

 To keep at bay the howling blast,
 And thus, to keep herself awake,
 Men that keep a mighty rout!
 Have dared to keep aloof;
 And among the Kinds that keep
 Keep the sprightly soul awake,
 Could keep alive when He was gone!
 Can he keep himself still, if he would? oh, not he!
 Playthings that keep the eyes awake
 Keep for the Young the impassioned smile
 Keep faith with Time on distant shores?
 Keep their most solemn vigils when the Clouds
 To keep the treasure unimpaired. Vain thought!
 All worlds, all natures, mood and measure keep
 Ye fairies, from all evil keep her!

Yes! hope may with my strong desire keep pace,
 And thou, grey Stone, the pensive likeness keep
 Should sally forth, to keep thee company,
 To keep, so high in air, its strength and grace:
 Too frail to keep the lofty vow
 Or keep his friends from harm.
 And they should keep who can.
 We'll keep them, winsome Marrow!
 And what he meant was "Keep away,
 Still do they keep the Turtle-shell;

 Or keep a remnant of the sod

 Would keep, perhaps with many a fruitless tear,
 Of awful prudence, keep the unvanquished soul:
 And, if old judgments keep their sacred course,
 Of thy own mountain, set to keep
 Thy name, O Schwartz, in happy freedom keep!

 Thus doth she keep, from year to year,
 What quiet watch she seems to keep,
 Keep thou this ensign till the day
 And so will keep the appointed ground
 To keep this new and questionable road?

 Such shaking doth the fever in me keep
 From thee and thy base throat, keep all that's good,

 To keep the secret of a poignant scorn,
 And the most difficult of tasks to keep
 And daily lose what I desire to keep:
 Is difficult to gain, and hard to keep—
 To keep and cherish? how shall man unite
 To keep his own, but also to exclude
 To keep two hearts together, that began
 'What titles will he keep? will he remain

Keepers. Who has a trick of straying from his keepers;
 Deals with a flower; the keepers of our time,
 Keest. And, spite of change, for me thou keep'st
 the same
 Here keepest thou in singleness thy state;
 Keepeth. And she that keepeth watch and ward
 He keepeth; like the firmament his ways:
 Keeping. For the pure keeping of those waxen cells;
 That in their keeping it might lie,
 And Fancy, keeping unreluctant watch,
 Tarpeian named of yore, and keeping still
 The secret thou art bent on keeping:
 Shape, limbs, and heavenly features, keeping pace
 The private hearth; though keeping thy sole seat
 Dim memory keeping of its old intent.

He rode, I keeping pace with him; and now
 Keeping such fresh remembrance of the day,
 Have still the keeping of their proper pace;
 Yet keeping her first mildness, was advanced
 The inner spirit keeping holiday.
 Keeps. The wolf keeps festival these stormy nights:
 Come forth at evening, keeps Thee still and mute;
 What keeps her thus reclined upon her lonesome
 bed?
 Mocking the Man that keeps the ferry;
 Her procreant vigils Nature keeps
 Kind Nature keeps a heavenly snow
 That keeps, till June, December's snow;
 Keeps faithful with a singleness of aim;
 And, through the heat of conflict, keeps the law
 A creature horn of time, that keeps one eye
 And lonesome watch that out of doors he keeps;

Else unremembered, and so keeps alive
 That keeps not faith, nor yet can point a hope
 It keeps them safe, and far
 That keeps them side by side
 Keeps to herself, confined as in a depth
 Of the individual Mind that keeps her own
 That keeps the raven quiet in her nest;
 That keeps in health the insatiable mind;
 Keeps pace, a harvest answering to the seed—
 Ken. Almost as though itself, of human ken.
 —There doth she ken the awful form
 Of your fierce war, may ken the glittering lance,
 Or is she swallowed up, remote from ken
 His sky-horn warblings—does aught meet your ken
 Counsellors for the world, of piercing ken
 Our mortal ken! Inspire a perfect trust
 So might he ken how by his sovereign aid
 Feel for the wrongs to universal ken
 A mile-stone propped him; I could also ken
 Set off, and to our ken appearing fair

Kenned. See Far-kenned.
 But indistinctly may be kenned
 He hath kenned them taking wing
 Unquestionably kenned, that cone-shaped hill
 Kenned on the point of a lofty spear;
 From roseate hues, far kenned at morn and even,
 By that unwearied signal, kenned afar;
 Of some bare hill, with wonder kenned from far.
 Kennel. The greyhounds to their kennel creep;
 Such as she had, the kennel of his rest!
 Kennelled. Kennelled and chained. Ye tame
 domestic fowl,
 Kennels. A surly mastiff kennels at the gate,
 Kent. Vanguard of Liberty, ye men of Kent,
 Ye men of Kent, 'tis victory or death!
 Kentish. Spreading his bosom under Kentish downs, Kent's. With joy in Kent's green vales; but never found

Kept. Of young imagination have kept pure,
 He well could love in grief; his faith he kept;
 have kept me abroad to-night till this hour?
 he kept them firmly sealed, as if he had been blind.
 Nor kept by Nature for herself, nor made by man
 his own,
 Clapped the Lamb and kept her hold.

Year after year the old man still kept up
 And all the while my eyes I kept
 He kept it: many voyages
 Paused not, and through the depth of night she kept
 Of echoes, to his march kept time;
 Nor did he change; but kept in lofty place
 But still the Ass his station kept.
 In youth, and 'mid the busy world kept pure
 Faithfully kept, is as a noble deed;
 By Hebrew ordinance devoutly kept,
 Sword dropped not, javelin kept its deadly aim—
 And kept to Him her faith,
 Kept watch, a viewless hand;
 Tokens, once kept as boasted wealth,
 From all rash censure be the mind kept free;
 Kept in perpetual verdure by the steam
 Sickened, or died) in pinus memory kept:
 A mild domestic pity kept its place,

 Dreadless, as in a kind of fresher breeze . . .
 By Nature's kind and ever-present aid . . .
 That parts the individual from his kind, . . .
 And shall we think that Nature is less kind . . .
Kindler. When Fortune might put on a kinder look ;
 But you, Sir, should be kinder. Come hither,
 Fathers,
 Upon the mountain-tops no kinder could have been.
 And in the kinder spirit ; placable, . . .
Kindest. I found in you the kindest of Protectors ;
 The best and kindest !—but where is he ? guide me,
 Blesses the Moon that comes with kindest ray . . .
Kindle. To kindle or restrain . . .
 And kindle sportive wit—
 Permit his heart to kindle, and to embrace
 Will live, and spread, and kindle : even such minds
 Present the maddening gifts, and kindle heat . . .
 Kindle before us.—Your discourse this day,
 For then her heart shall kindle ; her dull eye,
Kindled. See Newly-kindled.
 And soon with crimson fire kindled the firmament.
 A fire was kindled in her breast,
 That kindled recollections . . .
 And oft my soul hath kindled at the same,
 Had his sunk eye kindled at those dear words
 (Kindled from Heaven between the light and dark
 Have kindled into health !
 Kindled 'mid rapturous tears ;
 My fancy kindled as I gazed ;
 Ne'er kindled with a livelier streak . . .
 Along my veins I kindled with the stir,
 Kindled and burnt among the sapless twigs
 A sight that kindled pleasure in all hearts . . .
 A gipsy-fire we kindled on the shore
Kindles. When the East kindles with the full moon's
 light ;
 Kindles intense desire for powers withheld
 Or, shipwrecked, kindles on the coast
 That kindles with such glory ! All are charmed,
Kindlier. God has given a kindlier power
 Brisk Robin seeks a kindlier home . . .
 For me, who under kindlier laws belong
 Should e'er a kindlier time ensue . . .
 Kindlier issues, hollier rest, . . .
 Me did a kindlier fortune then invite
 A man of kindlier nature. The rough sports
 " A kindlier passion opened on her soul
Kindliest. And pines the unripened pear in summer's kindest ray ;
 Roused by this kindest of May-showers, . . .
 And kindest intercourse ensue . . .
 May Nature's kindest powers sustain the Tree,
 Have stopped, as some believe, the kindest growths . . .
 In fits of kindest apprehensiveness, Kindliness. Wasting its kindliness on stocks and stones,
 That noticeable kindliness of heart . . .
 From nature's kindliness received a frame
 Unprofitable kindliness, bestowed . . .
Kindling. Merciful protectress, kindling . . .
 Beware of kindling hopes for me unmeet !
 Oh, for a kindling touch from that pure flame
 And, kindling at their lustre, if I burn,
 Transfigured, from this kindling hath foretold
 One with its kindling edge declares that soon . . .
 'Tou be that, kindling with a poet's soul,
 If thou be lovelier than the kindling East,
 That cheek—a kindling of the morn,

Kindling—continued.

And quench the passions kindling into flame ;
 Was kindling, not unseem, from humble corpse . . .
 A kindling eye :—accordant feelings rushed . . .
 In the green trees ; and, kindling on all sides . . .
 —And, surely, he, that spake with kindling brow,
 " Yes," he continued, kindling as he spake,
Kindlings. And kindlings like the morning—presage sure
Kindly. Blesses the moon that comes with kindly ray,
 Kindly the housewife pressed, and they in comfort
 fed.
 We might have made a kindly bed of heath, . . .
 Kindly have you protected me to-night, . . .
 Kindly, unassuming Spirit ! . . .
 Which the kindly wool supplies, . . .
 Shed kindly influence on the place, . . .
 As kindly take what from my heart . . .
 And profit by those kindly rays . . .
 Came fraught with kindly sympathies, . . .
 A kindly influence whereof few will speak,
 And you must kindly take it :
 For kindly issues—as through every clime
 Sunk into a kindly sleep . . .
 While, as one kindly growth retires,
 Kindly emotion tending to console . . .
 What avails the kindly shelter . . .
 The kindly mood in hearts which lapse of years,
 His father views that good, that kindly star ;
 Be present ; kindly Juno be thou near !
 The stern yet kindly Spirit, who constrains
 See, rooted in the earth, her kindly bed,
 Its kindly influence, o'er the yielding brow
 But we are kindly welcomed—promptly served
 " Have kindly interposed. May I entreat
 Blest with a kindly faculty to blunt
 That yields such kindly product. He, whose bed
 How long, and by what kindly outward aids,
 To outlive the kindly use and fair esteem
 —What kindly warmth from touch of fostering hand,
 Howl from the north, what kindly warmth, me-
 thought,
 That, far as kindly Nature hath free scope . . .
 Then let both be kindly treated, . . .
Kindness. See Loving-kindness.
 Of looks where common kindness had no part,
 With little kindness would to me incline . . .
 My husband's loving kindness stood between . . .
 Making all kindness registered and known ;
 Of modest kindness, that would hide
 And then, what kindness in their hearts !
 Of kindness and of love. Nor less, I trust,
 Nor greetings where no kindness is, nor all
 Soft smiles, by human kindness bred !
 The kindness that would make him less forlorn ;
 Removed in kindness from their glassy Cell
 Set studied kindness flow with easy stream,
 As needed kindness, for this single cause,
 With stinted kindness. In November days, Kindnesses. For kindnesses that never ceased to flow,
 With human kindnesses and simple joys,
Kindred. Of kindred loveliness ; then he would sigh,
 And kindred of dead husband are at best
 No kindred sufferer, to his death-place brought Among its kindred cobwebs. I had been,
 Heaven bless you when you are among your
 kindred !
 You said his kindred all were in their graves,
 To store up kindred hours for me, thy face . . .
 As they did love. Ye kindred Pinnacles—
 With kindred gladness : . . .
 He turned, and watched with kindred look
 A kindred impulse, seemed allied . . .
 While friends and kindred all approved
 True to the kindred points of Heaven and Home !

 Hail, blest above all kinds!—Supremely skilled
 All kinds commingled without fear,

 "All kinds, and creatures, stand and fall
 In a sweet fellowship with kinds beloved,
 Held with all Kinds in Eden's blissful bowers.
 All kinds alike seemed favourites of Heaven.
 Even to the inferior Kinds; whom forest-trees
 From all that haughtier kiads endure
 A noble instinct; in all kinds the same,
 All kinds of pleasure mix'd with sorrowing

 The feathered kinds; the fieldfare's pensive flock,
Kine. The kine are couched upon the dewy grass;
 Nor sheep nor kine were near; the lamb was all
 alone,
 Looking down on the kine, and our treasure of sheep
 "Let leaves and home-bred kine partake
 (So fame reports) and die,—his sweet-breathed kine
 From byre or field the kine were brought; the sheep

Knelt—continued.

The time is come that rings the knell
 To Ambrose that I and then a knell
 For she returns not,—Awed by her own knell,
 Sorrow seems here excluded; and that knell,
 Pleased when the sullen winds round the knell
 Where torrents roar, or hear the tinkling knell
 An iron knell I with echoes from afar
 To hearths when first they darkened at the knell:
Knelt. Knelt and kissed the Stranger's hand;
 Go, faithful Portrait! and where loag hath knelt
 I to my Father knelt and prayed;
 Of pious Edward kneeling as he knelt;
 Upon a Maiden trembling as she knelt;
 Even to this Rite? For thus She knelt, and, ere
 She knelt in prayer,—the waves their wrath appease;
 They knelt in prayer, or sang to blissful Mary.
 To heaven he knelt before the crucifix,
 Yea, by the very mourners who had knelt
 The generations of mankind have knelt
 Hither she came; here stood, and sometimes knelt
Knelt. And hope itself was all I knew of pain;
 She knew not what dire pangs in him such tale
 could wake.
 And knew not why. My happy father died,
 For our departure; wished and wished—nor knew,
 "A sailor's wife I knew a widow's cares,
 The Sailor knew too well. That wickedness
 Upon the midland Sea. You knew his bearing
 Oh, Sir, you would not talk thus, if you knew
 Expecting still, I knew not how, to find
 You will forgive me— If I ever knew
 And do good service, though she knew it not.
 There's witchery in 't. I never knew a maid
 And his new Favorite. Misery!— I knew

Knelt—continued.

And their place knew them not. Meanwhile, abridged
 Said Margaret, for I knew it was his hand
 I knew not how, and hardly whence they came.
 She knew not that he lived; if he were dead,
 She knew not he was dead; She seemed the same
 Smiles of good-will from faces that he knew
 I knew from his department, mien, and dress,
 Our housewife knew full well what she possessed!
 I knew a Scottish Peasant who possessed
 Glistered with tenderness; his mind, I knew,
 Before the boy knew well what he had seen
 Their safe retreat. We knew them well, I guess
 That the whole Valley knew them; but to us
 A 'friendly covert.' "And they knew it well."
Knelt. That had no mirth in them; or with his knife
Knelt. See Father-knight.
 Where a cross-legged Knight lies sculptured
 But he, hold Knight as ever fought,
 The Knight had ridden down from Wensley Moor
 The Knight hallooed, he cheered and chid them on
 But now the Knight beholds him lying dead.
 —Soon did the Knight perform what he had said;
 The Knight, Sir Walter, died in course of time,
 Knight, squire, and yeoman, page and groom:
 This wretched Knight did vainly seek
 I once beheld, a Templar Knight;
 But a bold Knight, the selfish aim
 And his dear Daughter on a Knight bestow
 Though King or Knight the most renowned in story
 "Mine is she," cried the Knight;—again they clapped their pinions.
 A goodly Knight that hath no peer that liveth!
 To seek her Knight went wandering o'er the earth.
 Knight, burgher, yeoman, and esquire,
 That, like the Red-cross Knight, they urge their way,
 Down to the humbler altar, which the Knight
 A knight of proof in love's behoof,
 "Still is he my devoted Knight?"
 A wandering Ghost, so thinks the Knight,
 Soul-shattered was the Knight, nor knew
 In plunged the Knight!—when on firm ground
 At any hour he chose, the prudent Knight
 For old Sir William was a gentle Knight,
 In uncouth race, and left the cross-legged knight,
 The famous history of the errant knight
 He, to my fancy, had become the knight
 Whose tale Cervantes tells; yet not the knight,
 Practised to commune with her royal knight
 Now meeting on his road an armed knight,
 And praised the gallant bearing, of a Knight
 Near this brave Knight his Father lay entombed;
 That, in Eliza's golden days, a Knight
 The Knight arrived, with spear and shield, and borne
 The spear and shield are vanished, which the Knight
 "The courteous Knight, whose bones are here interred,
 "Even," said the Wanderer, "as that courteous
 Knight,
 A true knight of his kidney."
Knelt. First among youths of knightly breeding,
 One
 The feats of Arthur and his knightly peers;
 Of knightly race, nor wanting powerful friends.
Knelt's. Suspended over a knight's tomb, who lay
 "Yet, by the good Knight's leave, the two estates
Knights. And soothed war-wearied knights in raftered hall.
 From many knights and many squires
 Armoury of the invincible Knights of old:
 Soon will the Knights of Arthur's Table
 Awe-stricken stood both Knights and Dames
 Thy Knights must touch the cold hand of the Virgin;
 Knights each in order as ye stand
 That overcome some not ungenerous Knights
 Proud tomb is none; but rudely-sculptured knights,
 Seven hundred Knights, Retainers all
 And Knights of high renown
 Amid reposing knights by a river side
 Sometimes methought I saw a pair of knights
Knit. Whole hours, with idle arms in moping sorrow knit.
 "My stockings there I often knit,
 His soul was knit to this his native soil.
 Knit every thought the impending issue needs,
 Knit the blithe dance upon the soft green grass;
 That they may knit together, and therewith
Knits. Knits not o'er that discolouring and decay

Know—continued.

And grieve, and know that I must grieve,
When such divine communion, which we know,
If thou hast heard me—If thy Spirit know
But yet I know, where'er I go,
—Before those hermit doors, that never know
That he may neither know what hope is mine,
For know we not that from celestial spheres,

To understand myself, nor thou to know . . .
And be ye happy! Yet, my Friends! I know
On every side fall off, we know not how,
Let others that know more speak as they know.
Some tempting island, could but know the ill
Who care not, know not, think not what they do.
We know where we have friends. Ye dreamers, then,

This label seemed of the utmost we can know,
As, more than anything we know, instinct
The end of life, and everything we know.
That flesh can know is theirs—the consciousness
Who know not what they speak. By love subsists
Find solace—knowing what we have learnt to know,
But know we not that he, who intermits
—But why this tedious record?—Age, we know,
Adore, and worship, when you know it not;
To heaven, I know, by my Redeemer taught.
"And blest are they who sleep; and we that know,
Of what I know, and what we feel within.
One of God's simple children that yet know not Hope from that quarter would, I know, have brought
But you, Sir, know that in a neighbouring vale
And know we not that from the blind have flowed
The more we know; and yet is revered least,
To know what they must do; their wisdom is
They know if I be silent, morn or even:
What longing would ye know? . . .
You know where my poor bones shall be,

Of pleasure which I know that I shall give
"I know where I shall find him, though the storm
For ye must know that that though the storm
Rides to and fro: I know them and their ways.
We know, yet faith sustains the sorrowing heart;

Knowst.

Thou know'st me for a Man not easily moved,
And, as thou know'st, gave me that humble Cot.
"Thou know'st that twice a day I have brought thee in this can . . .
Thou know'st the pillow of my breast;
That passes over it. We have, thou know'st,
As well thou knowest, in us the old and young
Will say't, who know'st both land and sea,
"Thou knowest, the Delphic oracle foretold
Hast been so happy that thou know'st what thoughts . . .
Now mercy, Lord! thou know'st well I desire.

Knoweth. For His own service; knoweth, loveth us,
Knowing. A favoured Being, knowing no desire
To serve me so, and knowing that he owes
Knowing what otherwise we know too well,
"Trust, angry Bard! a knowing Sprite,
Not knowing that he had befriended
Knowing what cause there is for shame,
Knowing that Nature never did betray
Knowing my heart's best treasure was no more;
Knowing, things rashly sought are rarely found;
And had good knowing both of their intent,
And seldom knowing that he sees, some straw,
Seeking the visible world, nor knowing why.
Knowing too well the importance of his theme,
Knowing that he grows wiser every day.
Strangers, not knowing each the other's name.
Find solace—knowing what we have learnt to know,
About the fields I wander, knowing this . . .
"Knowing the heart of man is set to be
At this, not knowing why—as often-times
Knowingly. Did knowingly conform itself; there came . . .
Knowledg. See Self-knowledge.
Instructed that true knowledge leads to love;
Answer these questions, from our common knowledge,
Of living without knowledge that you live;
Hide the knowledge of thy dream,
—O Brother! to my knowledge lost so long,
Judge both Fugitives with knowledge:
This knowledge, from an Angel's voice
I speak with knowledge,—by that Voice beguiled,
Within my reach; of knowledge traced
Fed his first hopes? what knowledge could he gain?
Of knowledge; that whole myriads should unite
Or to solicit knowledge of events,
Knowledge no help; Imagination shaped
From Knowledge!—If the Muse, whom I have served . . .
So pure, so fraught with knowledge and delight,
And knowledge has a narrow range;
Is crossed by knowledge, or by dread, of change,
What knowledge can perform, is diligent to learn;

Knowledge—continued.

"Knowledge will save me from the threatened woe."
Above thy knowledge as they dared to go,
The light of Knowledge, and the warmth of Love.
By interchange of knowledge and delight.
"My knowledge is so weak, O blissful Queen!
After my knowledge I have loved away;
Have knowledge, I thee pray, what this may be?
Knowledge and wisdom, gained from converse sweet
With better knowledge how the heart was framed
Of knowledge, when all knowledge is delight,
And human knowledge, to the human eye
On knowledge, when sincerely sought and prized.
With clearer knowledge; with another eye
Of pleasure won, and knowledge not withheld,
"Is true, some casual knowledge might be gained
And knowledge, rightly honoured with that name—
Knowledge not purchased by the loss of power!
Of Nature, in that knowledge I possessed . . .
Moves the great spirit of human knowledge, spare
The Horse of knowledge, and the learned Pig,
Are led to knowledge, wheresoever led,
Receives no knowledge that can bring forth good;
Without the light of knowledge. Where the harm,
Have pleased me, seeking knowledge at that time
Far less than craving power; yet knowledge came,
With needful knowledge, had abruptly passed
Through knowledge spreading and imperishable,
Whence grew that genuine knowledge, fraught with
peace,

Profoundest knowledge to what point, and how,
Long time in search of knowledge did I range
Knowledge was given accordingly; my trust
A more judicious knowledge of the worth . . .
Knowledge that step by step might lead me on
Through want of better knowledge in the heads
Where knowledge leads me: it shall be my pride
Their knowledge of the heavens, and image forth
My knowledge, as to make me capable . . .
By knowledge gathered up from day to day;
To blend with knowledge of the years to come,
(Not to forestall such knowledge as may be
"For I have knowledge that you do not shrink
Some recompense of knowledge or delight?"
With hearts at ease, and knowledge in our hearts
For knowledge is delight; and such delight
May we behold; their knowledge register;
Where knowledge, ill begun in cold remark
This knowledge ample recompense affords
To hopes on knowledge and experience built;
—Knowledge, methinks, in these disordered times,
Knowledge, for us, is difficult to gain—
Be genuine knowledge, bear thee then in mind.
Her keen desire of knowledge, nor efface
His knowledge, wisdom, love of truth, and love
Enriched with knowledge his industrious mind;
That, in his presence, humbler knowledge stood
Without his own consent, or knowledge, fixed!
The tribute of enjoyment, knowledge, health,
When, prizing knowledge as her noblest wealth
With scantiest knowledge, master of all truth
Not thus can Knowledge elevate
All intercourse of knowledge or of love
That we shall have for knowledge and for love
Love, knowledge, all my manifold delights

Known. See Well-known.

In thy loved presence known, and only there;
The red-breast, known for years, which at my casement pecked.
He must have felt it then, known what it was,
At Herbert's door. Ay; and if truth were known
Be known unto you, you will love this Woman,
Ere can be known to you how much a Father
Else could so strong a mind have ever known
Hopes that she so long hath known.
"Was one well known to him in former days,
Through fields which once had been well known to
him:
Was known as well as to the flowers that grow there.
Making all kindness registered and known;
Strange fits of passion have I known:
And there is one whom I five years have known;

Such happiness as I have known to-day.
In his known haunts of joy where'er he might,
Than ever fortune hath been known to do)
None will reproach you, for our truth is known;
And looked, as mothers ne'er were known to look,
"Make it known that my Companion
To daylight known deter from that pursuit,
I know, and I have known it long;
Is known, and by as strong a spell
A temper known to those who, after long
Nor better life was known . . .
And she is known to every star,
"And, gallant Stag! to make thy praises known,
That what we are, and have been, may be known;
To thee, by varying titles known
To me was never known.

 Our blissful Lady, Jesu's Mother dear,
 Was fashioned for our blissful Lady free ;
 Our Lady I will praise with all my power . . . 554
 To appear before my Lady ? but a sense
 Lo, yonder saw I mine own Lady dance,
 My Lady dear, first bound me captive-wise . . . 563
 Heard I my most beloved Lady dear,
 My Lady first me took unto her grace . . . 563
 With a soft voice, he of his Lady dear,
 When hence did journey my bright Lady dear,
 Lo ! yonder is my own bright Lady free ;
 Lady ! devoutly honoured and beloved
 Once to our Lady dedicate, and served
 Sit like a throned Lady, sending out . . . 643
 (The throned Lady whom erewhile we hailed)
 From formal gardens of the lady Scorrow,
 From my remembrance, where a lady lodged,
 Didst utter of the Lady Christabel ;
 A blooming Lady—a conspicuous flower,
 A virtuous Lady to be proudly beloved . . . 774
 —We enter—by the Lady of the place
 Than, looking forth, the gentle Lady said,
 The Lady whisperer, while we stood and gazed
 Lady, (you will think it queer)
 Lady ! to your heart's content ;
 My Lord and Lady Darlington,
 Nor to you, good Lady Vane,
 Ah ! if I were a lady gay
 My Lady ne'er approached a thing so coarse . . . 102
Lady-fingers. By lady-fingers tended with nice care,
Lady-love. To paint this picture of his lady-love !
Lady-mother. Him, and his Lady-mother dear !
Lady's. In which a love-knot on a lady's brow
 Took up the Lady's voice, and laughed again ;
 Carried the Lady's voice,—old Skiddaw blew
 The Lady's words, when forced away . . . 204
 Our Lady's laggard Votreas,
 Thanks to our Lady's grace, I smiled to hear,
 The Lady's work ;—but now laid low ;
 She spake—and from the Lady's sight . . . 408
 And looked into the Lady's face,
 Rising from what may once have been a lady's bower ; . . . 456
 Rest, shielded by our Lady's grace,
 Is of my Lady's sighs heavy and sore ;
 In which a love-knot on a lady's brow,
 And with a lady's mien.—From far they came,
Lag. To lag behind the season, and had lost
Laggard. Our Lady's laggard Votreas,
 The laggard Rustic ; and repay with boons Laggards. Aimed at the laggards slumbering within doors ; . . . 701
 The humour of the moment, lagged behind.
Lagging. The lagging shower, and force cog Phoebus
 out . . . 221
 Yon pilgrims see—in lagging file . . . 233
Lago. Of Lago Morto, dreary sight and name,
 Reclined on Lago Maggiore,— . . . S. 3
Lahora. Erewhile went forth from Agra or Lahore, Laid. Round his wife's neck ; the prize of victory
 laid . . . 25
 Till then he hoped his boons might there be laid . . . 28
 The truth shall be laid open, his guilt proved . . . 48
 This monstrous crime to be laid open—here,
 This day's event has laid on me the duty . . . 68
 Gave me a hearty welcome ; they had laid
 Of a small pool of water he was laid,
 Laid hands upon your Father. Fit it were . . . 75

Laid—continued.

Thy curse is fixed; the truth must be laid bare. . .
 Those bright blue eggs together laid ! . . .
 If two are in the church-yard laid, . . .
 "So in the church-yard she was laid; . . .
 When his corse is laid in earth. . . .
 He laid his implements with gentle care, . . .
 His family were laid, he thence might learn . . .
 Three years had Barbara in her grave been laid . . .
 Laid him with timid care upon his knees, . . .
 Of the garden-gate his hand was laid, he shrank—
 Those fields, those hills—what could they less ?
 had laid . . .
 And, as his Father had requested, laid . . .
 So when the rain is over, the storm laid, . . .
 Where three thousand skulls are laid; . . .
 The Seven are laid, and in the shade . . .
 All have laid their mirth aside, . . .
 And all Seat-Sandal was laid bare . . .
 Laid down his whip—and served no more.—
 And, ages after he was laid in earth, . . .
 Almost suspended, we are laid asleep . . .
 Drawn in defiance of the Gods, hath laid . . .
 Blest times when mystery is laid bare, . . .
 "There is some plot against me laid," . . .
 He on his knees hath laid him down, . . .
 Here roving wild, he laid him down to rest Vain earth ! false world ! Foundations must be laid . . .
 Of Destiny, upon these wounds hath laid . . .
 And Love her towers of dread foundation laid . . .
 Where Burns is laid, . . .
 Where Maan is laid, . . .
 By Ellen's side the Bruce is laid; . . .
 When earthly cares are laid asleep ! . . .
 Have rightfully been laid at last . . .
 Lord of the vale ! to Heroes laid; . . .
 Whose vernal coverts winter hath laid bare . . .
 On British ground the Lovaders are laid low; . . .
 That we must stand unrodded, or be laid low . . .
 Beneath his haughty feet, like clouds, are laid, . . .
 And bloodshed, longed in quiet to be laid . . .
 Where their serene progenitors are laid; . . .
 By violence laid waste, . . .
 Upon a Sister's shoulder laid,—
 And as in slumber laid,—
 Virtues laid low, and moulder energies.
 From the bleak isle where she is laid, . . .
 For infant in the cradle laid . . .
 For dormitory's length laid here . . .
 The Lady's work;—but now laid low; . . .
 And would have laid his purpose by . . .
 In the cold grave hath long been laid :
 Beneath the cypress-spire is laid; . . .
 The injunction by her Brother laid; . . .
 Be left, is no restriction laid; . . .
 Where Norton and his sons are laid !
 "And so in Prison were they laid—
 There let at least the gift be laid,
 And life in death laid the heart bare ?—
 The grave where Francis must be laid.
 And laid its head upon her knee,
 Within some rocky cavern laid,
 Of fret-work imagery laid low; . . .
 Whose arts and honours in the dust are laid
 From fields laid waste, from house and home devoured . . .
 These sons of Amalek, or laid them low !"—
 Sceptre and mantle, sword and ring, laid down
 Of Justice armed, and Pride to be laid low.
 And soothe the heart confession hath laid bare—
 The mortal weight cast off to be laid low . . .
 A tell-tale motion ! soon will it be laid,
 Of Science laid them open to mankind—
 Forth from their cells, their ancient House laid low
 Bewailing his sad fate, when he was laid
 And, from invisible worlds at need laid bare,
 His kindred laid in earth, . . .
 Who shall inherit. Thee when death has laid
 And willingly have laid thee here at last : . . .
 Depressed the melancholy Cowley, laid . . .
 Laid one by one, or scattered on the ground, . . .
 When temples, columns, towers, are laid in dust; . . .
 In the last sacrifice of fame is laid . . .
 Methought she laid a grain upon my tongue, . . .
 "Young Hew of Lincoln ! in like sort laid low
 Now farewell, old Adam ! when low thou art laid,
 And, when beneath this stone the Corse was laid,
 Here laid in mortal darkness, wouldst prefer . . .
 Two Babes were laid in earth before she died;
 The bodily frame. That beauty is laid low
 That said, "Let praise be mute where I am laid;"
 The skulls with naked masts at anchor laid,
 Laid snares to make the babe her own . . .
 To the cell where the convict is laid . . .
 Laid safely by itself, beneath a Tree . . .
 Where he on soft amaracus is laid, . . .
 The thankfulness with which I laid me down . . .

Laid—continued.

Safe from an evil which these days have laid . . .
 His helper and not theirs, laid stronger hold . . .
 Was laid with tears. Then suddenly the scene . . .
 An honoured teacher of my youth was laid, . . .
 Of inward consciousness, and hope that laid . . .
 Oh, joy to him who here hath sown, hath laid
 Have been laid open, needs must make me feel . . .
 So the foundations of his mind were laid . . .
 His calling laid aside, he lived at ease : . . .
 By sorrow laid asleep; or borne away . . .
 That he broke faith with them whom he had laid
 That laid their country waste. No need to speak
 In whose dark vaults my own shall soon be laid,
 These that in trembling hope are laid apart; . . .
 That basis laid, those principles of faith . . .
 Wherever laid, who living fell below
 Him, farther off; the pair, who here are laid;
 Of kindred mould.—Such haply here are laid ?
 As now it shines, when we are laid in earth . . .
 Where injury cannot come :—and here is laid
 Where, Sir, I pray you, where are laid the bones . . .
 Laid open through the blazing window :—there
 His parents laid in earth, an loss ensued . . .
 To be laid open, and they prophesied . . .
 That object is laid open to the view . . .
 "With such foundations laid, avault the fear
 You saw me, friends, you laid me here, . . .
 To drink of the clear water, laid himself . . .
 Between ourselves ! The noble laid aside), . . .
 Christophe now is laid asleep . . .
 Laid. Three lovely babes had lain upon my breast;
 That, as the day was warm, he had lain down
 Compared with hers who long hath lain, . . .
 Ere thus I have lain couched an hour, . . .
 When Ruth three seasons thus had lain,
 And he had lain beside his asses
 And sickness, listen where they long have laid,
 True freedom where for ages they have lain . . .
 I might have lain concealed, . . .
 Had lain awake on summer nights to watch
 For a whole day together, have I lain . . .
 Of the Carrousel, where so late had lain
 With searching damp, and seemingly had lain
 Laid. To Gordale-chasm, terrific as the lair . . .
 Where stalked the huge deer to his shaggy lair
 Exults like him whose javelin from the lair . . .
 Your head in this dark lair !
 Quits, growling, the white honies that strew his lair;
 And thought that, in the blind and awful lair
 Laid. In which the Scottish Laird had long possessed . . .
 Lairds. Sheriffs, and lairds and their domains, . . .
 Laka. See Lac, Lago.
 A fence far stretched into the shallow lake, . . .
 And now the whole wide lake in deep repose . . .
 "His pleasant near the tranquil lake to stray
 Rich golden verdure on the lake below . . .
 —Thy lake that, streaked or dappled, blue or grey,
 Along the steaming lake, to early mass . . .
 To sterner pleasure, where, by Uri's lake, . . .
 Along the steaming lake, to early mass . . .
 Up from the lake a zigzag path will creep . . .
 The wood-crowned cliffs that o'er the lake recline;
 Upon the bosom of a placid lake . . .
 Only in the lake below . . .
 Some hastened; some ran to the lake; ere noon . . .
 Whom from the borders of the Lake we brought,
 And every day the imprisoned lake . . .
 And westward to the village near the lake;
 That skimmed the surface of the dead calm lake,
 Angling beside the margin of the lake . . .
 A pittance from the dead unfeeling lake
 Of silver-hew, and Grasmere's peaceful lake
 O'er lake and stream, mountain and flowery mead,
 A lake was near; the shore was steep;
 The stream that flows out of the lake, . . .
 And, while they coast the silent lake, . . .
 Earth, spangled sky, and lake serene, . . .
 Beside the lake, beneath the trees, . . .
 The lake doth glitter, . . .
 And many an endless, endless lake, . . .
 O'er breezeless water, on Loearn's lake, . . .
 A circuit ampler than the lake beneath,
 Upon the lake below, . . .
 The rocks, and quivering trees, and billowy lake,
 Wuffed adown the wind from lake or stream;
 The lake below reflects it not; the sky
 O'er Limbo lake with airy flight to steer,
 A murmur near the silent lake; . . .
 The lake, the bay, the waterfall; . . .
 Was walking by her native lake : . . .
 Whose mountains, torrents, lake, and woods, unite
 The swan on still St. Mary's Lake . . .
 Beside a lake their cottage stood, . . .
 For to this lake, by night and day, . . .
 And swiftly down the running lake . . .
 By Uri's lake, where Tell
 And, through her depths, Saint Mary's Lake . . .
 Was like a lake, or river bright and fair, . . .

Lake—continued.

But hark—the summons!—down the placid lake
 Did sullen mists hide lake and skies
 That work of kindred frame, which spans the lake
 Pride of two nations, wood and lake and plains,
 (Too aptly emblem'd by that torpid lake)
 Nina, the Lady of the Lake,
 Fast bound for Limbo Lake. And yet not choice
 To the still lake) the imaginative Bird
 One morning throb, by Esthwaite lake,
 Unruffled thus the blue lake lie,
 Far from our home by Grasmere's quiet Lake,
 An area level as a Lake and spread

On sky, earth, river, lake and sea ;
 Dissevered, float upon the Lake,
 Buried beneath the glittering Lake,
 Sound o'er the lake with gentle shock
 Helooks, through the open door-plac, toward the lake
 While o'er the lake the cataract of Lodore
 Long rails into the shallow lake extend ;
 I love beside the flowing lake to stray
 —Thy lake, mid smoking woods, that blue and grey
 Lo ! Fear looks silent down on Uri's lake,
 Pleased with thy crags, and woody steeps, thy Lake,
 I dipped my oars into the silent lake,
 When, by the margin of the trembling lake,
 Over the shadowy lake, and to the beach,
 I travelled round our little lake, five miles
 Lake, islands, promontories, gleaming bays,
 Once more the circuit of our little lake,
 The long lake lengthened out its hoary line,
 Beneath the trees or by the glimmering lake,
 Into the bosom of the steady lake,
 Make green peninsulas on Esthwaite's Lake :
 But no one owned them ; meanwhile the calm lake
 By the still borders of the misty lake,
 And thus proceeding to Locarno's Lake,
 For two days' space, in presence of the Lake,
 Along the winding margin of the lake,
 On Como's Lake, and all that round it lay,
 To brush the still breast of a crystal lake.
 "Calm as a frozen lake when rutilous winds
 Their labour, covered, as a lake with waves ;
 Within the bosom of yon crystal Lake,
 Or, on the waters of the unruffled lake,
 Or the pellucid lake." "Small risk," said I,
 Were working the broad bosom of the lake
 To the still lake, whose stillness is to sight
 The silvery lake is streaked with placid blue ;
 Launched from our hands the smooth stone
 skimmed the right ;
 Of the still evening. Right across the lake
 Of the smooth lake, in compass seen :—far off,
 In mute composure, o'er the shadowy lake,
 Conspicuous at the centre of the Lake,
 Yet not at rest, upon the glassy lake,
 Heavenward, so piercing deep the lake below.
 The Lake is thine,
 Lake's. A blue rim borders all the lake's still brink ;
 'Cross the calm lake's blue shades the cliffs aspire,
 By the lake's edge, she rose—to face the noontide
 heat ;
 Gleams that upon the lake's still bosom fall ;
 Where, from a deep lake's mighty urn,
 Slow lights upon the lake's still bosom fall,
 To the lake's margin, where a boat lies moored

Lakes. Blue pomp of lakes, high cliffs and falling floods,
 Heard by calm lakes, as peeps the folding star,
 The leafy wood, or sleeps in quiet lakes.
 When wandering among lakes and hills I note,
 Upon the Lakes of Asia 'tis bestowed—
 Rocks, rivers, and smooth lakes more clear than glass
 'Mid spectral lakes bemoeking thirsty men,
 With heart as calm as lakes that sleep,
 Thro' crags, and forest glooms, and opening lakes,
 In cataracts, or sleeps in quiet lakes.
 To speak of you, ye mountains, and ye lakes
 Of calmer lakes and louder streams ; and you,
 Shut up in lesser lakes or beds of lawn
 And audible seclusions, dashing lakes,

Lamb. See Mountain-lamb.
 The infant lamb ? and shall the infirmities,
 A lamb, that in the pool is pent
 The lamb had slipped into the stream,
 The lamb, still swimming round and round,
 And there the helpless lamb he found
 Into their arms the lamb they took,
 Nor sheep nor kine were near ; the lamb was all
 alone,
 The lamb, while from her band he thus his supper took,
 Right towards the lamb she looked ; and from a shady place
 Thus, thought I, to her lamb that little Maid might sing ;
 I shall tell you truth. A Lamb
 Clasped the Lamb and kept her hold.

Lamb—continued.

—And in his arms a Lamb he had
 —"Shame on me, Sir ! this lusty Lamb,
 —This lusty Lamb of all my store
 A little lamb, and then its mother !
 A lamb, a wether, and a ewe ;
 Meek as a lamb the Pony mores,
 "Oh ! smile on me, my little lamb !
 Of common pleasure : beast and bird, the lamb,
 Lies with her infant lamb ; I see
 Weak as a lamb the hour that it is yeaned ;
 The milk-white Lamb which in a line she led,—
 The lamb is couching by the lion's side,
 And heavenly Una with her milk-white Lamb.
 There, too, behold the lamb and guileless dove
 Or a lamb on a green hill."
 The new-dropped lamb finds shelter from the wind.
 Following the Lamb celestial," quoth she,
 Before the Lamb singing continually,
 And Lamb, the frolic and the gentle,
 Her new-born infant, fearless as a lamb
 And joyous creatures ; see that pair, the lamb
 Of a poor lamb—left somewhere to itself
 As the fierce eagle fastens on the lamb ?
 "As on a sunny bank, a tender lamb
 And sometimes injury, like a lamb enthralled
 To his own hills, the spots where when a lamb
 Lamb-deliv'rar. Thus the fearless Lamb-deliv'rar, Lambeth's. And Lambeth's venerable towers,
 Lambkin. I was your lambkin, and your bird,
 Lamb's. A young lamb's heart among the full-grown flocks,
 And the lamb's mother, and their tender ways
 Lambs. As lambs or fawns in April clustering lie
 The lambs that in the meadow go
 A thousand lambs are on the rocks,
 Of lambs that bounded through the glade,
 Hé had gone forth among the new-dropped lambs,
 Lambs, that through the mountains went
 The lambs from rock to rock were bounding ;
 Ye snow-white lambs that trip
 She who incites the frolic lambs
 Life with you! Lambs, like day, is just begun,
 But as of all those tripping lambs not one
 And while the young lambs bound
 And let the young Lambs bound
 Looks out, and all the pastures dance with lambs,
 Birds in the bower, and lambs in the green field,
 Active as lambs, and overcome with joy.

Lama. The lame, the hungry, will be welcome there.
 That he was lame) across the floor—
 The lame, the sickly, and the old ;
 To every suitor, Equity is lame ;
 Men known, and men unknown, sick, lame, and blind,
 A lame man or a blind, the one to beg,
 Lament. Mourn, and lament for him whose spirit dreads
 But now the passionate lament,
 Lament ! for Diocletian's fiery sword
 That would lament her ;—Memphis, Tyre, are gone
 Have I not reason to lament
 Into a passionate lament ?—O Soul !
 Lamentable. That lamentable cry to chase—
 We by a lamentable change were taught
 Of that most lamentable snare,
 This lamentable tale I tell !
 Of a Republic. Lamentable crimes,
 It was a lamentable time for man,
 What lamentable change, a year—a month—
 Lamentably. And lamentably wrapped in twofold night,
 But lamentably do they err who strain
 Lamentation. With sound like lamentation.
 A cry of lamentation send ;
 Deep is the lamentation ! Not alone
 "This Child with piteous lamentation then
 Of lamentation, never heard before !"
 Lamentations. Till nightly lamentations, like the sweep
 Lamented. Lamented youth ! to thy cold clay
 Is less to be lamented than rever'd ;
 Lamenting. Haunts the old trunk ; lamenting deeds of which
 Lamenting, do not hopelessly repine
 His perilous duty, and retire lamenting
 Lamenting the departed, call the groves,
 Lamenting ancient virtues overthrown,
 Laments. The pastoral Muse laments the Wheel—no
 more
 Lamp. From lamp of lonely toll-gate streamed athwart the night.
 By the moon's sullen lamp, she first discerned,
 By light of lamp and precious stones, that glim-
 mered here, there glowed,
 Of day grew dim the Housewife hung a lamp ;
 There by the light of this old lamp they sat,
 The lamp of faith, lost Friend ! too faintly burn ;
 His visionary brow ; a glow-worm lamp,
 Of a beddimming sleep, or as a lamp

Lamp—continued.

- But bright as Vesper shines her lamp :
Truth's holy lamp, pure source of bright effect,
As from a lonely lamp ;
Thou lamp of which extinguished is the light ;
Lit by that evening lamp which loved to shed
Of that fraternal love, whose heaven-lit lamp
And, the meek worm that feeds her lonely lamp
On the north star, or watch-tower's distant lamp,
Minutely spoken of that aged Lamp . . .
Were we not here : we do not tend a lamp
- Lampighter. And the half-breathless Lampighter
—he's in the net !
- Lamps. Humbly to hang, like twinkling winter lamps,
Lamps of faith, now burning dim
Yet there the glow-worms hang their lamps,
Obsolete lamps, whose light no time recalls ;
That quench, from hut to palace, lamps and fires,
—From viewless lamps a ghastly dimness falls,
For solace by dim light of monkish lamps ;
Of your green groves, and wilderness of lamps
The very glowing, lamps and painted scrolls,
603 Prelude 7, 408

- Lancaster. Who is the flower of Lancaster !
Lancastrian. Thousands, as toward you old Lancas-trian Towers, . . .
- Lance. Rusty lance, I ne'er shall grasp thee, . . .
"Quell the Scot," exclaims the Lance—
Mailed and horsed, with lance and sword,
Of your fierce war, may ken the glittering lance,
No record tells of lance opposed to lance, . . .
There stood he, leaning on a lance
Therewith he threw away the lance, . . .
—Not loth the sleepy lance to wield,
Each with a lance, erect and tall, . . .
The guardian lance, as Francis fell,
Lance, shield, and sword relinquished—at his side
"A conquering lance is beauty's test,"
With his lance Sir Eustace pointed,
To ride the ring, or toss the beamy lance ;
A lance he bore, and underneath one arm
Grasping his twofold treasure.—Lance in rest,
(While war, relinquishing the lance and shield,
By sword and lance the law of gentleness,
The fine vocation of the sword and lance . . .
- Lance-like. Through the stiff lance-like shoots of pollard ash, . . .
- Lancelot. Sir Lancelot gave a safe retreat
—Give Sir Lancelot Threlkeld praise !
- Land. See Corn-land, Faery-land, Fairy-land, Holy-land.
- Then the milk-thistle flourished through the land,
Rejoice, brave Land, though pride's perverted ire
The parting signal streamed—at last the land withdrew, . . .
- If there's a lawyer in the land, the knave
When from the Holy Land I had returned
Pray tell me what this land is worth by the acre.
I fancy when you left the Holy Land,
And in that dream had left my native land,
They left to him the family heart, and land
To live in peace upon his father's land,
And this too-long-pollinated land imbued
A shadow in a hated land, while all
Before he shall go with an inch of the land !"
We could do what we liked with the land, it was ours . . .
- That follows the thought—We've no land in the vale, . . .
- Chains tie us down by land and sea ;
A long, long way of land and sea !
Our Luke shall leave us, Isabel ; the land
Nor was there at that time on English land
And till these three weeks past the land was free,
And for the land, his small inheritance.
Women, in your land, may pity
Never see my native land, nor castle towers,
Before us, on a point of jutting land,
The warriors leap upon the land,
Bear for me to my native land . . .
Let this be land, and that be sea,
Will say't, who know'st both land and sea,
That ceased not ; on our English land
Wreathed round with yellow flowers the gayest of the land, . . .
- Loud voice the Land has uttered forth, . . .
The eagle, lord of land and sea,
Land sometimes by the roving shepherd-swain
Hope rules a land for ever green :
Not such the land of Wishes—there
Delightful land of verdure, shower and gleam,
"I know the secrets of a land . . .
Fair is that land as evening skies,
And Peter draws him to dry land ;
From land to land a reckless will
Where lies the Land to which you Ship must go ?
- How art thou named ? In search of what strange land, . . .
Into the land where ghosts and phantoms be ;
That, in our native isle, and every land,
In a strange Land, and far from home, . . .

Land—continued.

- From land to land through half the earth !
There's pleasant Tiviot-dale, a land . . .
A land of promise and of pride . . .
Leapt, from his storm-vest boat, to land, . . .
Had blasted France, and made of it a land . . .
A people, on their own beloved Land . . .
Or gave this honoured Land from every Lord
We shall exult, if they who rule the land . . .
The Land we from our fathers had in trust, . . .
I, the Guardian of this Land, . . .
And fame as largely spread as land and sea,
But if the valiant of this land . . .
If on Thy love our Land her hopes shall rest,
Let all who do this land inherit . . .
The likeness of what'er on land is seen ;
Its HEART ; and ever may the heroic Land
Toward the mists that hang over the land of my Sires, . . .
- To this bright land, Hope was for him no friend,
Already gathered in this favoured Land . . .
Fair Land ! Thee all men greet with joy ; how few, . . .
Done to the Princess, and her Laod . . .
Like sinless snakes in Eden's happy land ;—
From the Land of Nile did go ; . . .
Hath plucked such foes, like weeds, from out the
land ; . . .
- "This Land of Rainbows spanning glens whose walls, . . .
Proud be this Land ! whose poorest huts are halls
A land where gentle manners ruled . . .
But not for lordship or for land, . . .
When snow lies heavy upon the land,"
Change wide and deep the Land had seen,
For why ?—to save his Father's land ; . . .
The Pictish cloud darkens the enervate land . . .
O wretched Land ! whose tears have flowed like
fountains ; . . .
For Them, and for their Land. The earnest Sire,
Shall he thy recompense ! from land to land . . .
Let not your radiant Shapes desert the Land :
In the clear land of vision, but foreseen . . .
Most happy, re-assembled in a land
Back to the Land those Pilgrims left of yore,
Of faith invites. More welcome to no land
That shall protect from blasphemy the Land.
Fair Land ! by Time's parental love made free,
With love of God, throughout the Land were raised Mists rose to hide the Land—that search, though long . . .
- A tired Ship-soldier on paternal land, . . .
Into the land of mystery . . .
Motions and Means, on land and sea at war
A scrap of land they have, but they . . .
This scrap of land he from the health . . .
But what to them avails the land . . .
Hath been an idler in the land ;
The taste of this once-intellectual Land.
Pathway, or cultivated land ;
Whose smiles, diffused o'er land and sea,
To greet the flowers and fruitage of a land,
A land whose azure mountain-tops are seats
The truth that Britain was his native land ;
And I, grown old, but in a happier land,
Their native Land, for outrage provident ;
Grieve for the land on whose wild woods his name
Of sea and land, with you grey towers that still
Slow be the Statutes of the land to share . . .
Of a kind mistress, fairest of the land, . . .
Blest is this Isle—our native Land ;
Life to risk by sea and land, . . .
And crisp with frost the stubble land, . . .
Through the whole land—to Manhood, moved in spite . . .
- Her Father's native land, . . .
And, to far-travelled storms of sea and land, . . .
Established in the land where they abide Book-learning and books should be banished the land : . . .
The father sojourned in a distant land)
The light that never was, on sea or land, . . .
On tranquil land, beneath a sky of bliss, . . .
But He, who was on land, at sea, . . .
But, when a third time from the land
From sunshine to the sunless land !
Land and sea . . .
And with rock-honey flow'd the happy land,
Save in the land where all things are forgot,
Did Justice mould the Statutes of the Land.
The land as with a funeral pall ?
And how a Land may rule its fate
His bark to land upon the wished-for shore,
Upon the children of the land, a pest . . .
Of faery land, the forest of romance . . .
To land a single volume, saved by chance,
To land at Calais on the very eve
Hath left no corner of the land untouched :
On thy departure to a foreign land . . .

Land—continued.

Expressing, as in mirror, sea and land, . . . 690
 'Tis true, the history of our native land, . . . 708
 The land all swarmed with passion, like a plain
 Born in a land whose very name appeared . . . 712
 To the remotest corners of the land . . . 720
 The goaded land waxed mad; the crimes of few
 But burst and spread in deluge through the land.
 Thine eyes must see of sorrow in a land, . . . 723
 When spells forbade the voyager to land, . . . 725
 This happy Land was stricken to the heart!
 Of soldiers, going to a distant land, . . . 733
 Opening from land to land an easy way . . . 735
 His brightness o'er a tract of sea and land
 Strangely the exasperation of that Land,
 Judgments, that filled the land from age to age
 "The lively Grecian, in a land of hills, . . . 764
 At a safe distance from our native land, . . . 766
 Fall to refresh a parched and withered land?
 To the fair land of everlasting life, . . . 771
 —Not for a happy land do I enquire, . . . 794
 Far forth to send his wandering eye o'er land
 This favoured Land, or sunshine warms her soil.
 The Poet, fostering for his native land
 Would o'er the bosom of a joyful land
 Like blighted buds; or clouds that mimicked land
 That in a land where charity provides
 Whose oath had virtue to protect the land
 Who holds the land in fee, its careless lord!
 A nobler race, the Switzers, and their land,
 Sent by the ancient Soul of this wide land,
 From out the labours of a peaceful Land
 When in their land the Almighty's service ceased.
 The old domestic morals of the land,
 This Land shall witness; and as days roll on,
 From land and water; lilies of each hue—
 Of jutting rock invited us to land.
 And this dear land, our country, while on earth
 The highest fountain known on British land.
 By powers celestial tossed on land and sea
 From this erst Pharaoh-plague to rid the land?

Landed. Landed with a small troop, myself being one:

So we pursued our voyage: when we landed,
 Ere Julius landed on her white-cliffed shore,
 He landed; and by many dangers scared,
 No tales of Runagates fresh landed, whence
 Are safely borne, landed upon the beach,
 Whence he had landed scarcely three weeks past;
 We landed—took with them our evening meal,
 Had landed upon easy ground; and there
 And now am landed, and the motion gone,

Landing. Hath told; for, landing after labour hard,

Landing, she found not what she sought,
 Her landing hailed, how touchingly she bowed!
 That on his landing he had been dismissed,
 The Stuart, landing to resume, by force
 Landlord. Unless our Landlord be your host to-night, Land's. And the Land's humblest comforts. Now her mood

Lands. Brood o'er the long-parched lands with Nile-

like wings!
 The genuine owners of such Lands and Baronies
 In lands beyond the sea
 With marble, which he sent from foreign lands.
 Thrice happy Creature! in all lands
 Travelled into distant lands;
 So beautiful, through savage lands . . .
 Bring tales of distant lands . . .
 Lands deluged by unbridled floods;
 The Voice of song from distant lands shall call
 We can endure that He should waste our lands,
 —O prostrate Lands, consult your agonies!
 Which, heard in foreign lands, the Swiss affect
 While in far-distant lands we roam, . . .
 Fetch, ye that post o'er seas and lands, . . .
 Age after age to Pilgrims from all lands
 We have pursued, through various lands, a long
 To Her and to all Lands its warning sent,
 Lingering no more 'mid flower-enameled lands
 Nor covets lineal rights in lands and towers.
 By wanderers brought from foreign lands . . .
 Remotest lands' and unhorn times shall turn,
 Surely, from fairest spots of favoured lands,
 Spade! with which Wilkinson hath tilled his lands,
 Lived with honour on his lands.
 Sounding through Christian lands her trumpet, roused
 He knows the policies of foreign lands;
 Wuffed upon the wind from distant lands,
 —'Be joyful all ye nations; in all lands,
 By which, on Christian lands, from age to age
 Like a poor singing-bird from distant lands;
 Men of all lands shall exercise the same
 Throughout all lands: let every nation hear

Lands'. His Brother's life, for Lands' and Castle's sake?

Landscape. The spacious landscape change in form and hue!
 Time softly treads; throughout the landscape breathes

Landscape—continued.

While pastoral pipes and streams the landscape lull,
 Steal the landscape from the sight, . . .
 The landscape of a summer's morning;
 The landscape with the quiet of the sky . . .
 As is a landscape to a blind man's eye:
 And this green pastoral landscape, were to me
 And the bright landscape too must lie,
 That work a living landscape fair and bright;
 A landscape more august than happiest skill
 And all the varied landscape. Let us now
 In mind the landscape, as if still in sight;
 And with long rays and shades the landscape shines;
 —Red stream the cottage lights; the landscape
 fades,
 From the far-stretching landscape, by the light
 Throughout the landscape; tuft, stone, scratch minute—
 And all the landscape, endlessly enriched . . .
 A variegated landscape,—there the shape . . .
 Southward the landscape indistinctly glared
 Upon the landscape of the sun-bright vale,
 How temptingly the landscape shines! The air
 As is a landscape; and the shepherd oft . . .
 Harmonious landscape; all along the shore . . .

Landscape. The fairest landscapes and the brightest days—

 The living landscapes greet him, and depart;
 We saw the living Landscapes of the Rhine,
 Landsman. No better than a landsman on the deck
 Landward. That landward stretches from the sea,
 Soft was the wind, that landward blew;
 That landward urged the great Deliverer's sail,
 Land-warriors. Land-warriors, kings, or admirals of the sea,

Lane. See Lering-Lane.

—As homeward through the lane I went with lazy
 feet,
 And Betty from the lane has fetched
 Feeding at will along the lane,
 So, through the moonlight lane she goes,
 Pathway, and lane, and public road, were clogged
 Thou greet'st the traveller in the lane;
 In the lane;—there's not a place,
 By sheep-track or through cottage lane,
 Its earliest green along the lane.
 To a close lane they now are come,
 The white dust sleeps upon the lane;
 Are thridding a sequestered lane;
 Across a shady lane; his chest
 And up the stony lane he goes;
 Along the lane the trusty Ass
 The bat, lured forth where trees the lane o'er shade,
 Pacing behind along the silent lane.

Strawberries from lane or woodland, offering wild

Came not, but in a lane partook his bread.
 The aged Beggar in the woody lane, . . .
 Tied to her arm, and picking thus from the lane . . .
 And formidable length of plashy lane, . . .
 Sweet was the walk along the narrow lane

Lanes. The lanes I sought, and, as the sun retired,

So through the moonlight lanes they go, . . .
 Or in sequestered lanes they build, . . .
 Led through the lanes in forlorn servitude; . . .
 In all that neighbourhood, through narrow lanes
 Gloomy as coffins, and unsightly lanes
 Hath been the fields, the roads, and rural lanes

Langdale. If ever you to Langdale go;

Language. Nor to the beggar's language could I fit

my tongue.
 So used to suit his language to the time,
 Or with the language of the viewless air
 Joy, as her holiest language, shall adopt;
 In nature and the language of the sense
 The language of my former heart, and read
 The language of those drunken joys
 Apt language, ready as the tuneful notes
 Things that recoil from language; that, if shown
 Who with mild looks and language mild
 Language, and letters;—these, though fondly viewed
 Another language spreads from coast to coast;
 In language thou may'st yet be found,
 That lahoureth his language to express,
 The ghostly language of the ancient earth,
 And all that silent language which so oft . . .
 A higher language, say that now I felt
 In human language, easily I passed
 (To give it in the language of the dream)
 Were then the common language of all eyes;
 The changeful language of their countenances
 Of custom, language, country, love, or hate,
 In the familiar language of the day,
 The Senate's language, and the public acts
 Retirement, leisure, language purified
 Theirs is the language of the heavens, the power,
 And speak a plainer language. In the woods,
 A language not unwelcome to sick hearts . . .
 This was the bitter language of the heart: . . .

Language—continued.

With inarticulate language. For, the Man—
 From other mouths, the language which they speak,
 And, to the silent language giving voice,
 Accords with nature's language;—the soft voice.
 With gentle language; in remotest wilds,
 Of language shall a feeling heart express

Languages. A plague on your languages, German and Norse!
 From languages that want the living voice

Languid. Fretting the fever round the languid heart,
 With languid limbs and patient head
 For the tired slave, Song lifts the languid oar,
 A thought received with languid pleasure!
 And friends too rarely prop the languid head.
 Sends gladness, by no languid smile declared.
 Whose murmur soothed thy languid Mother's ear
 A weight of languid speech, or to the same
 And, when he waked, his languid eye
 The languid mind into activity.
 To wheel with languid motion round and round,
 Find a free entrance to their languid orbs,
 In languid streams through every thrilling vein;
 Who crept along fitting her languid gait
 With languid steps that by the slippery turf
 Declined their languid heads, wanting support.
 Restore their languid spirits, and recall
 Could break from out those languid eyes, or a blush
 Through the whole body, with a languid will Languidly. And languidly pursued. When summer came,

 The memory languidly revolved, the heart
 Nor can regain. How languidly I look

Languish. Decay and languish; or, as creeds
 Languish and droop together. Nor unfelt
 He must sink down to languish
 There are who cannot languish in this strife,

Languish the flowers; the waters seem to waste
 He suffered not to languish or decay.
 "And must my offspring languish in my sight?"
 Languish within me; even then it slept.

Languished. "Say that I, who might have languished, Alas! they pined, they languished while they shone;
 If, when the woodman languished with disease
 Languished beneath accumulated years,

Languishes. That virtue languishes and pleasure fails,
 "That frets, or languishes, be stilled and cheered."
 "So fails, so languishes, grows dim, and dies,"
 Her sole support, she languishes and dies.

Languishment. Barthward in uncomplaining lan-guishment,

It hung its head in mortal languishment.

Languor. The breezes their own languor lent;
 In languor; or by Nature, for repose
 No trace of pain or languor could abide
 Is shed, the languor of approaching noon;
 Of languor puts his rosy garland by;
 No languor, no dejection, no dismay,
 Infect the thoughts; the languor of the frame
 No languor, peevishness, nor vain complaint:
 For languor, or indifference, or despair.

Lank. Lank as a ghost and tall, his shoulders bent,
 His lank sides heaved, his limbs they stirred;
 Stiff, lank, and upright; a more meagre man
 The gooseberry trees that shot in long lank slips,

Lantern. The gloomy lantern, and the dim blue match,
 And take a lantern, Child, to light
 The lantern in her hand.
 Bearing a lantern in her hand she stood,

Lantern's. By a dim lantern's light I saw that wreaths

Lap. Off has she taught them on her lap to lay
 In her full lap, he sees such sweet tears flow
 While in my lap I held my little Babe
 Fill your lap and fill your bosom;
 What store of cakes in every lap!
 To sink upon your mother's lap—and rest?
 Or imp from witch's lap let fall?
 Was but an Infant in the lap
 Her head upon her lap, concealing
 Stretched on the dying Mother's lap, lies dead
 Upon her lap repose, holds—but mark
 Her bundle from her lap let fall;
 Earth fills her lap with pleasures of her own;
 Oft has she taught them on her lap to play
 The Goddess then her lap with sweetmeats fill'd
 Of puppetry, that from the lap declare
 The warm lap of his mother earth: and so,
 And lap in pleasing rest, and bear us on

Lapländ. And lovely as a Lapland night,

Lapp'd. Lapp'd by the panting tongue of thirsty skies,

Lapsa. Or by the silent lapse of fountain clear,
 Thridding with sinuous lapse the rushes, through
 The still repose, the liquid lapse serene
 That, in the lapse of ages, hath crept o'er
 By shock of circumstance, or lapse of years,

Lapsa—continued.

The kindly mood in hearts which lapse of years,
 Which through the lapse of their infirmity
 Stealing with silent lapse to join the brook
 And in the lapse of many years may come
 Down to that very moment; neither lapse
 After the lapse of full eight years, those words,
 And told of lapse and hesitating choice,
 With timid lapse;—and lo! while in this strait
 Numerous as stars; that, by their onward lapse,
 Upon whose lapse, or error, something more
 Or lapse of liquid element—by hand,

Into strange woods, where he at large may live
 In a large house of public charity
 "Thy name in this large world is spread abroad!"
 'Tis his with fearless step at large to roam
 Large draughts of love unhappy Dido drew;
 Of that large abbey, where within the Vale
 The shuddering ivy dripped large drops—yet still
 On the large island, had this dwelling been
 The threshold, and large golden characters,
 That there were four large volumes, laden all
 A dreary maon, large beyond all ood,
 And large dark eyes, beside her infant stood
 Sheltered within a shelter, where at large
 Such was my new condition, as at large
 I ranged at large, through London's wide domain,
 Of a large mansion or hotel, a lodge
 And great in large ones, I had oft revolved,
 Prospect so large into futurity;
 At large and unrestrained, nor damped too soon
 The turf of yon large pasture will be skimmed;
 Where youth's ambitious feet might move at large;
 Here may I roam at large;—my business is,
 Roaming at large, to observe, and not to feel
 Large measures shall be dealt. Three sabbath-days
 To roam at large among unpeopled glens
 But large and massy; for duration built;
 Declared at large; and by what exercise
 Possessed like outskirts of some large domain,
 Air unimprisoned, and had lived at large;
 Large store of gleaming crimson-spotted trouts;
 When, as our questions led, he told at large
 Whether in large communities ye keep

Largely. And fame as largely spread as land and sea,
 We from our funds drew largely;—proud to curb

Larger. Be larger than the peas—prove this—'twere matter

Largest. The largest of her upright leaves;

Lark. See Sand-lark, Sky-lark.

Gay lark of hope, thy silent song resume!
 Tempered fit words of hope; and the lark warbled near.
 Once only have you spoken, when the lark
 Constant as a soaring lark,

But ne'er could Fancy bend the buoyant Lark
 As lark or leveret,
 For thy song, Lark, is strong;
 Drunken Lark! thou wouldst be loth.
 In clouds above, the lark is heard,
 Fresh as a lark mounting at break of day,

Blithe as the lark on sun-gilt wings—
 And o'er wide plains cheered by the lark that trills
 Those had given earliest notice, as the lark
 Mute as a lark ere morning's birth.
 The lark above the hill,
 Or, like the warbling lark intent to shroud
 The soaring lark is blest as proud
 Reach the caged lark, within a town-abode,
 Lark of the dawn, and Philomel of night,

Last—continued.

Looks forward, persevering to the last, . . . 494 Hap. War. 75
 Her loveliest and her last, . . . 502 Seasons 4
 Not he, whose last faint memory will command
 Our Lord's Last Supper, beautiful as when first
 Far as the last gleam of the filmy train
 The sun's first greeting, his last farewell ray!
 The last of their humanity, and scoffed
 That long-lived servitude must last for ever, . . . 517
 The last alternative of Life or Death, . . . 518
 Helps him to meet the last Tribunal's voice, . . . 520
 Seeds the pale Convict to his last retreat, . . . 520
 The last year's cup whose Ram or Heifer gained,
 Which good Sir Bustace found, was the last, . . . 535
 As my last earnest prayer ere we depart, . . . 535
 And cried, "I've caught you then at last!" . . . 537
 In the last remainder of the crew are all . . . 541
 The last sanctity of fame is laid, . . . 546
 Let the last faint sigh discover . . . 550
 Though here the Hermit numbered his last day
 In the Jews' street, and there he last was seen,
 Before the altar while the Mass doth last:
 Will that His glory last, and be in mid; . . . 556
 Gives the last human interest to his heart,
 That his life hath received, to the last will remain.
 For I'd take my last leave both of verse and of prose.
 It was the last death-shriek, . . . 579
 Near what he loved, at last— . . . 580
 For that last thought of parting Friends
 From infancy, through manhood, to the last
 When last along its banks I wandered,
 That tips with eve's last gleam his spiry head.
 As the last bleating of the fold expires,
 Last night, while by his dying fire, as clos'd
 His last dread pleasure I watches to the plain—
 For ye have reach'd at last the happy shore,
 Last let us turn to where Chamouny shields,
 Last Industry appear'd with steady pace,
 That last ad dreary living one
 Her stormy foe at last
 Learned how social frames may last,
 My last and favourite aspiration, mounts
 The last autumnal crocus, 'twas my joy
 Queens gleaming through their splendour's last
 decay, . . . 640
 Continued and the loud uproar: at last, . . . 642
 'On the last skirts of their permitted ground,
 Yet to the memory something cleaves at last,
 At last, or glorious, by endurance won, . . . 653
 At last, the dead man, 'mid that beauteous scene
 And tributary walks; the last, and oft
 To bend at last to the same discipline, . . . 679
 Let this one temple last, be his one spot
 Of first, and last, and midst, and without end.
 Sweet as this last herself, for such it is,
 At last we stretched our weary limbs for sleep,
 Before last primrose-time. Belov'd Friend!
 The last night's genial feeling overflowed
 The King, and the King's Palace, and, not last,
 And stood of all dismayed, save the last
 With this last relic, soon itself to fall, . . . 705
 Doth with the fond remains of his last power
 Last look, to make the best amends he may:
 That nothing hath a natural right to last
 And gave it vent in her last words. O Friend!
 Through months, through years, long after the last beat . . . 724
 In the last place of refuge—my own soul, . . . 724
 This the soul's last and lowest ebb; I drooped,
 This last opprobrium, when we see a people, . . . 732
 From this last spot of earth, where Freedom now
 For this to last: I shook the habit off
 With settling judgments now of what would last . . . 741
 Good might be furthered—in his last decay . . . 751
 The last and later portions of this gift . . . 752
 Ere the last star had vanished.—They who passed
 Nor how to speak to her. Poor Wretch! at last
 Last human tenant of these ruined walls!" . . . 770
 And reverence for himself; and, last and best,
 First, last, and single, to the breathing world,
 "He is departed, and finds peace at last!" . . . 777
 Where passage could be won; and, as the last
 Even to the last, of genuine tenderness, . . . 778
 Will last for ever. Off on my way have I
 Regretted like the nightingale's last note, . . . 782
 Took their last farewell of the sun and stars, . . . 791
 I tremble yet to think of—our last prop,
 Mortality's last exercise and proof . . . 832
 I turn, and reach at last the guiding light;
 The hopeful and the hopeless, first and last,
 With their last breath, from out the smouldering
 flame, . . . 839
 To lofty raised; and to the highest, last;
 His last, repentant breath; and closed his eyes,
 The last hath ceased its solitary knoll, . . . 843
 Such fate was hers.—The last time Ellen danced,
 By the last lingering help of the open sky
 She reached the house, last of the funeral train;
 Upon the last sweet slumber of her Child,
 For its last flight to heaven's security, . . . 853
 Much to the last remained unknown: but this . . . 855

Last—continued.

When hither came its last Inhabitant, . . . 858
 The oldest, he was taken last, survived . . . 861
 Even to the last!—Such was he, unsubdued, . . . 861
 From those to whom our last regards were paid, . . . 865
 And charity; nor last nor least for this, . . . 865
 His own appointed hour will come at last;
 Over thy last abode, and we may pass . . . 868
 The Pastor, even as if by these last words
 And, at the last of those memorial words,
 Myself have seen, a gateway, last remains
 To linger 'mid the last of those bright clouds . . . 872
 To this, and this, as wrothier than the last,
 Till perfect mastery crown the pains at last, . . . 880
 After long struggle, had escaped at last—
 And put forth Blue at last, . . . 882

Lasted.

Long as the summer lasted: some, as wise,
 Lasting. He bore the lasting name of "pious Eli-dure!"

But pangs more lasting far than Lover knew
 A lasting link in Nature's chain
 For lasting impress, by the Lord
 Her hope of lasting glory for the whole.
 To recognise, the lasting virtue lodged
 And lasting terror through that ancient Hold.
 Won for herself a lasting resting-place;
 A lasting monument of words
 While Ye, in lasting duration pent,
 A Picture had it been of lasting ease,
 Productive day be this of lasting joy
 And their high privilege of lasting life,
 May flow in lasting current. Like a breeze
 All lasting grandeur, by pervading love;
 A lasting inspiration, sanctified . . .
 What joy more lasting than a vernal flower?—
 Here to lie down in lasting quiet, he,
 A mind intolerant of lasting peace,
 Cannot be lasting in a world like ours,

Lastly.

And lastly utter silence! "Be it so;
 And, lastly, the withdrawing moon, that set
 And, lastly, if the means on human will,
 And, lastly, as hereafter will be shown,
 And, lastly, utter loss of hope itself . . .
 Or lastly, aggravated by the times . . .
 And lastly, from its progress have we drawn
 And burlesome; and lastly, that poor few
 Lastly I mourned for those whom I had seen

Lasts.

Nor while sin lasts must effort cease;
 That friendship lasts though fellowship is broken!
 Small service is true service while it lasts:
 No otherwise than as it lasts too long.

Latch.

Or hang on tip-toe at the lifted latch,
 As the Priest lifted up the latch, turned round,—
 With my hand on the latch of the half-opened gate,
 But seeing some one near, as on the latch
 When the soft hand of sleep had closed the latch
 Shut close the door; press down the latch;
 And lifts the latch for him that he may pass.
 Nor seldom did I lift our cottage latch
 The threshold, lifted with light hand the latch;
 And when a stranger horseman came, the latch

 And bloom unnoticed even to this late hour?
 But now we are strangers, go early or late;
 "How can it be he is so late?" . . . 103
 Early at evening did it buró—and late,
 Sought by a wise though late exchange, and here
 That Star, so proud of late, looked wan;
 And empty thy late home,
 Of this late day by character in tree
 The triumph of your late devotion!
 Whence doubts that came too late, and wishes vain,
 And 'tis, I fear, an age too late)
 Convinced that he, or soon or late,
 A Book came forth of late, called PETER BELL;
 The world is too much with us; late and soon,
 So beautiful of late, with sunshine warmed,
 Reflected in my bosom all too late!—
 At this late day, its sanctifying name . . . 267
 Too late, I feel, sweet Orphan! was the day
 He came an age too late;
 And while, repentant all too late, . . . 272

My simplest Lay that to their memory
Deign, Sovereign Mistress! to accept a lay,
And now by duty urged, I lay this Book
Reading or thinking; either to lay up
With all its foolish pomp. The garden lay

But for this cause, that I had seen bim lay
The mind lay open, to a more exact
Yet slumbering, lay in utter solitude.
Lay bedded in a quickening soul, and all

That time can lay upon her; how on earth
And all my deeper passions lay elsewhere.

And lay till now neglected in the grass.

Or, not less pleased, lay on some turret's head,
Of naked pools, and common crags that lay
Abroad, bow cheeringly the sunshine lay
Lay a few steps, and then along its banks;

Lay intermixed with seraps of paper, some
Lay at the mercy of this raging storm.
Lay shrouded in impenetrable mist;
Lay low beneath my feet; 'twas visible—
A mass of rock, resembling, as it lay
Or lay its beauty flat before a breeze,
But, there, lay open to our daily baunt,

Though even to their last syllable the Lays
And this poor verse, and wortier lays,
Was the beginning; yet the several Lays
In quietness she lays her down;
Nor Taliesin's unforgetten lays,
And One there is who builds immortal lays,
While on each head his lawn-robed servant lays Soft in its temper as those vesper lays
And lays as prompt would hail the dawn of Night:

Leaf-crowned. Nor leaf-crowned Dryad from a path-
 less wood,
Leaf-green. Like foresters in leaf-green vest,
Leafless. Among the branches of the leafless trees;
 Yet leafless, showed as if the countenance
 Where leafless oaks towered high above,
 'Mid its own bush of leafless eglantine—
 When the broad oak drops, a leafless skeleton,
 A self-surviving leafless oak . . .
 The leafless trees and every icy crag
 Or currents, hanging from their leafless stems,
 Like leafless underboughs, in some thick wood,
Leaf-scattering. Leaf-scattering winds; and hoar-frost sprinklings fell . . .
Leafy. Illumines from within, the leafy shade;
 Where leafy shades fence off the blustering gale,
 The leafy wood, or sleeps in quiet lakes,
 Behold, within the leafy shade,
 Each within its leafy bower;
 Let us quit the leafy arbour,
 And wild notes warbled among leafy bowers;
 All independent of the leafy spring.
 The leafy antlers sprout;
 And rudely canopied by leafy boughs,
 And sung as birds in leafy arbour,
 Ruffles the bosom of this leafy gleen.
 A leafy shelter from the sun and wind
 Their own far-stretching arms and leafy heads
 Of Britain's realm, whose leafy crest
 Where birds and brooks from leafy dells
 Or the bare rock, or through a leafy bower
 To this small spot, his leafy shade;
 The leafy grove that covers:
 Of birds, in leafy bower,
 They lodged in leafy tents and cabins low;
 The warbling wren shall find a leafy cage;
 To sit in leafy woods by fountains clear!
 "The blackbird amid leafy trees,
 That calls from yonder leafy shade . . .
 How delicate the leafy veil
 (Among reflected boughs of leafy trees)
 Its brightest splendour round a leafy wood;
 Want store of leafy arbours where the light
 There small birds warble from the leafy trees,
 Out of its leafy brow, the more to awe
 Of dew fast melting on their leafy boughs
 On Devon's leafy shores;—a sheltered hold,
 Their leafy umbrage, turos the dusky veil
 A broad oak, stretching forth its leafy arms
 To the fair body of a leafy grove
 Of leafy spray, concealed the stems and roots
League. We must not part,—I have measured many

 Dissolved the Barons' League, and sent abroad
 That rose a brief league distant from the town,
 His banner in accursed league with France,
 With mutual help, and sailing—to their league
 Even while mine eye hath moved o'er many a league . . .
 With what, and how great might ye are in league,
 Where elms for many and many a league in files
 League after league, and cloistral avenues,
 With spiteful gratitude the baffled League,
 Britain put forth her freehorn strength in league,

League—continued.

Companion never lost through many a league—
For one hostility, in friendly league,
The tiny creatures strong by social league;
Leagued. The nobles leagued their strength
Two Earls fast leagued in discontent,
And if Time leagued with adverse Change,
Where science, leagued with holier truth,
Upon the borders of the Rhine, and leagued
Hypocrisy, not leagued with fear, but pride.
Are leagued to strike dismay; but outstretched
hand

Leagues. A few leagues hence we shall have open ground,
A farm or dwelling-house within five leagues,
Cover a hundred leagues, and seem
To the first leagues of tutored passion climb,
Hiding the face of earth for leagues—and there,
Leaky. Left in the fabric of a leaky dam

Lean. Bed under her lean body there was none,
We'll stroll into the wood; lean on my arm.
By sickness, gaunt and lean, with sunken cheeks
And wasted limbs, his legs so long and lean
To her; and she shall lean her ear
At Nature's call, nor blush to lean
How gaunt the Creature is,—how lean
Dare they confront the lean austerities
And he is lean and he is sick;
And lean upon a peasant's staff.
Though not unmenaced, among those who lean
Hard task! I exclaim the undisciplined, to lean
Where from sea-blasts the hawthorns lean,
He rose, and with a lean and wasted arm,
With his lean hand, and in a faltering voice,
To lean upon extrinsic circumstance
They cannot lean, nor turn to their own hearts

Lean-ankled. Sharp-kneed, sharp-elbowed, and lean-ankled too,

Leaned. We propped his steps, he leaned upon us both.
He leaned upon the bridge that spans the glen,
You have then seen my Father? He has leaned
That long has leaned forward, leans hour after hour—

Dismounting, then, he leaned against a thorn;
Close to the thorn on which Sir Walter leaned
But her Faith leaned another way
That way I leaned by nature; for my heart
Leaning. Think, if thou on beauty leapest, Leaning. That like to leaning masts of straddled ships appear.

Thou wouldst be leaning on a broken reed—
There stood he, leaning on a lance
Like leaning masts of stranded ships appear
Prostrate, or leaning towards their common rest
In hopeful reason, leaning on the stay
I stood, and leaning o'er the garden wall
Such leaning towards each other, that their days
Leaning-tower. (Or pause) the summit of the Leaning-tower.

Leans. No peasant leans upon his pole, to tell
Leans smilingly, and sinks into a perfect rest.
Thus leans, with hanging brow and body bent
Mark that Cripple who leans on his crutch; like a tower
That long has leaned forward, leans hour after hour—
And strike with reverence. The Monarch leans
Is yet a Soul whose master-bias leans
Whence Danger leans, and pointing ghastly, joys
While Hope that ceaseless leans on Pleasure's urn
That leans upon a monumental urn

Leap. See Hart-leap, Tiger-leap.
Why, if a wolf should leap from out a thicket,
This news! it made my heart leap up with joy.
How his old heart would leap to hear her steps,
And down the rocks can leap along
The warriors leap upon the land,
They ran, and with a desperate leap
That comes and goes—will sometimes leap
O Master! it has been a cruel leap.
This leap is for us all too bold;
And leap at once from the delicious stream.
And heard the billows leap and dance,
Why leap the fountains from their cells
Leap down into the court;—"This won"—
Might leap, the weakest nerve of superstition start;
And checked him in his leap.
And terror shall leap at his heart.
Unless it leap upon him in a dream,
The courage that was needful to leap back
Towards him, bade him leap, which word scarce said

Leaped. See Leap.
And, when the ship was moored, I leaped ashore
Leaping. See Up-leaping.
Said Walter, leaping from the ground,
Nor leaping torrents when they howl;
Quoth Peter, leaping from his seat,
There sometimes doth a leaping fish
Dancing and leaping light upon the spray;
The sandy fields, leaping through flowery groves

Leaping—continued.

Or by its aid leaping from crag to crag,
Leaps. Dashed o'er the rough rock, lightly leaps aloug;
Leaps with a bound of graceful hardihood;
My heart leaps up when I behold
Upon the prey;—with leaps and springs
Of his own voice confirmed, he leaps upon the ground.

A frog leaps out from bordering grass,
In flashing leaps and stealthy creeps
Three leaps have borne him from this lofty brow
Nor can he guess how lightly leaps
But one that leaps to meet the fanning breeze.
Plotting new mischief—out again he leaps
And the Babe leaps up on his Mother's arm:—
Dash'd down the rough rock, lightly leaps along;
Nought but the char that for the may-fly leaps,
O'er all that leaps and runs, and shouts and sings,

Leapt. See Leaped.
And down from off her seat she leapt.
They leapt—they ran—and when they came
Leapt from this steep bank to follow

And forth I leapt upon the sandy plain;
The halter seizing, Peter leapt
He leapt about, and oft did kiss
Leapt, from his storm-vest boat, to land,
Leapt from this rock, and but for timely aid
And from my Horse I leapt; great joy had I.
Bounced, leapt, and pawed the air; or mumbling sire,
Leapt out together from a rocky cave;
He leapt upon the island, with proud heart,
Bounds to be leapt, darkness to be explored,
Leap. So speaks the Chronicle, and tells of Leap
As Leap reproached the winds—I could almost Learn. And learn what nature is from this poor Wretch!

And whither were you going? Learn, young Man,—
Cast round you your mind's eye, and you will learn
No, not by stroke of arm. But learn the process:
Of what from thee I learn.
Learn how she can feel alike

His family were laid, he thence might learn
And sullen Gnomes will learn to sport
We gaze, we also learn to love
"Learn, by a mortal yearning, to ascend—
Might learn to picture, for the eye of faith,
May learn, if judgment strengthen with his growth,
Becoming that mankind should learn
But this we from the mountains learn,
When will your hapless patrons learn
And slaves are pleased to learn that mighty feats are done;

Yet not unrequited are they who learn,
To learn thy course; farewell! be prompt and steady."
Teach what they learn? Up, hardy Mountaineer!
And learn to glory in a Stranger;
He thence may learn, ere fall of night,
We learn to tolerate the infirmities.
Learn from thy course, where'er their own he taken,
—First learn to love one living man;
Goes to learn how all things fare;
Looks round, to learn the history.
What knowledge can perform, is diligent to learn;
Not from his fellows only man may learn
And learn how sanguine expectations fade
Learn thou the beauty of omniscient care!
Learn to make Time the father of wise Hope;
Learn to be just, just through impartial law;
Song do I learn,—small grammar I have got.

Now, Reader, learn from this my fate, how false,
And learn from thence thy own defects to scan;
The passing day; should learn to put aside
Like engines; when will their presumption learn,
The time of trial, ere we learn to live
And understanding, I should learn to love
As cause was given me afterwards to learn,
And ought to be; and strove to learn how far
Nor was time given to ask or learn the cause,
But let us hence, that we may learn the truth:
Substantial service. Mark me now, and learn
Affronts the eye of Solitude, shall learn
So shall they learn, while all things speak of man,
And so, not searching higher, we may learn
Gay, volatile, ingenious, quick to learn,
Of the surrounding district, they might learn

Learned. See Learn'd, Newly-learned.
Such tale of this lone mansion she had learned,
The Soldier's Widow learned with honest pain
And set him free. What follows? I have learned
I learn'd this when I was a Confessor.
Which at that time was James's home, there learned
Hence had he learned the meaning of all winds,
The time of early youth; and there you learned,
The jolly bird hath learned his cheer
—The tricks he learned at Windermere

Leave—continued.

And leave his body here, it were all one . . .
 Here will I leave him—here—All-seeing God ! . . .
 Makes up one damning falsehood. Leave him here
 And therefore leave thee to a righteous judgment.
 That she is innocent. Leave that thought awhile
 That we should leave him there, alive !—we did so.
 We must be gentle. Leave him to my care. . . .
 Of provocation. Leave me, with the weight . . .
 In Heaven, and Mercy gives me leave to die. . . .
 Daisies leave no fruit behind
 Nor leave untold our happy flight in that adventurous dream.
 Leave that thought ; and here he uttered . . .
 'Tis one of those who needs must leave the path
 Farewell !—we leave thee to Heaven's peaceful care, . . .
 We leave you here in solitude to dwell . . .
 Thus often would he leave our peaceful home,
 And yet they leave it short, and fears . . .
 Deep in a forest, with leave given, at the age . . .
 What do, add what to leave undone, . . .
 And can ye thus unfriended leave me ;
 Our Luke shall leave us, Isabel ; the land . . .
 For if thou leave thy Father he will die."
 To-morrow thou wilt leave me : with full heart
 To leave me, Luke ; thou hast been bound to me
 Yon minarets, would gladly leave for his worst
 home."
 Handmaid's privilege would leave my purpose free,
 And taken thy first leave of those green hills . . .
 Love him, or leave him alone ! . . .
 To leave it with a jovial heart ; . . .
 And leave Blencathara's rugged coves,
 Leave to the nightgale her shady wood ;
 " Great Jove, Laodamia ! doth not leave
 Nor leave thee, when grey hairs are nigh,
 That every day should leave some part
 They leave, and speed on nightly embassy
 Leave for one chant ;—the dulcet sound
 Leave of our fate thy wishes to fulfil.
 If the heavens smile, and leave us free to glide,
 Where the young lions couch ; for so, by leave
 Dissolve—and leave to him who gazed a sigh.
 But we will leave it growing.
 Whate'er you do, leave this undone ; . . .
 May human creature leave the shore !
 And leave me to myself !"
 And leave the figurative Man—
 See the first mighty Hunter leave the Brute—
 Could I leave them unseen, and not yield to regret ?
 Foretelling and proclaiming, ere thou leave
 And, if thou canst, leave them without regret !
 These hath some awful Spirit impelled to leave,
 And leave thy Tweed and Tiviot
 And give the timid herbage leave to shoot,
 And where no flower hath leave to dwell. . . .
 Thea let us leave this dreary place."
 To leave.—Unwooded, yet unforbidden,
 Would that our scrupulous Stires had dared to leave
 Could leave both man and horse behind ; . . .
 And leave a dead unprofitable name—
 But leave it thence to drop for lack of use :
 I leave unsearched : enough that memory clings ;
 " Leave open to my wish the course,
 By old Sir William and his quarry, leave . . .
 And take my leave of all such company . . .
 Thus takes the Nightingale her leave of me ;
 She thanked them ; and then her leave she took,
 Alas, and there I took of her my leave ;
 For I'd take my last leave both of verse and of prose.
 As with a chosen friend ; nor did he leave
 My comrades, leave the crowd, buildings and groves,
 A Poet's history, may I leave untold . . .
 That portion of my story I shall leave . . .
 Leave let me take to place before her sight
 That cannot take long leave of pleasant thoughts.
 By such a daring thought, that I might leave
 And not to leave the story of that time . . .
 By whom we were encompassed. Talking leave
 That did not leave us free from personal fear ;
 Would leave behind a dance of images,
 But leave we this : enough that my delights . . .
 The freeborn Swiss to leave his narrow vales, . . .
 Invited, often would he leave his home . . .
 And he would leave his work—and to the town
 That passing shows of Being leave behind,
 This wanting, he would leave the sight of men,
 We signified a wish to leave that place . . .
 Leave this unknit Republic to the scourge
 But leave me unabated trust in thee—
 Depart ; and leave no vestige where they trod.
 The dewy grass ; you cannot leave us now,
 Sate down, and to her office, with leave asked,
 I feel, good reasons why we should not leave
 Full off his doings leave me to deplore . . .

Leave—continued.

Yet shall not thy remembrance leave our hearts, . . .
 " Yet, by the good Knight's leave, the two estates
 Nor must I leave untouched (the picture else . . .
 Wishful to leave an opening for my choice, . . .
 My future labours may not leave untold. . . .
 Said, " Father, 'tis lost labour ; with your leave . . .
 Are opened. Churlish Winter hath given leave . . .
Leaven. See Green-leaved.
Leaven. And memory of Earth's bitter leaven, . . .
Leaves. Its darkening boughs and leaves in stronger lines ; . . .
 Drops deadened from a roof so thick with leaves.
 With rotten boughs and leaves, such as the winds
 And send ye dancing to the clouds, like leaves . . .
 Feed on her leaves. You knew her well—ay, there,
 A plain confession, such as leaves no doubt, . . .
 Save, in a corner, a heap of dry leaves, . . .
 Of green leaves on the hawthorn spray, . . .
 " O ! what a weight is in these shades ! Ye leaves,
 Oft leaves a saving moisture at its root. . . .
 The leaves that make the softest bed : . . .
 That could not cease to be. Green leaves were here ;
 Of copse and thicket, leaves the eastern shore
 With withered leaves is covered o'er, . . .
 The withered leaves all skip and hop ; . . .
 The leaves in myriads jump and spring, . . .
 And all those leaves, in festive glee, . . .
 My leaves you freshened and bedewed ; . . .
 I sheltered you with leaves and flowers ; . . .
 And in my leaves—now shed and gone, . . .
 A Brother of the dancing leaves ; . . .
 Covered with leaves the little children,
 The largest of her upright leaves ; . . .
 Preserves her beauty 'mid autumnal leaves,
 Proved last year's leaves, pushed from the spray
 Sporting with the leaves that fall, . . .
 Withered leaves—one—two—and three—
 Couched on a casual bed of moss and leaves, . . .
 Now he leaves the lower ground,
 Drooped with its withered leaves, ungracious sign
 Perhaps it was a bower beneath whose leaves
 With leaves of laurel stuck about ; . . .
 The vernal leaves—she loved them still ;
 No leaves it has, no prickly points ;
 While yet the summer leaves were green,
 That is in the green leaves among the groves,
 " He leaves these objects to a slow decay,
 He leaves behind a moon-illumined wake :
 And withered leaves, from earth's cold breast
 Or under leaves of thickest shade,
 The buds, and freshens the young leaves, . . .
 Darkling, among the boughs and leaves . . .
 The very leaves they follow me . . .
 " Blood drops—leaves rustle—yet," quoth he,
 Of golden leaves inlaid with silver down, . . .
 Of cold neglect she leaves thy head ungraced,
 Through leaves yet green, and yon crystalline sky,
 Thy green leaves rustle or thy torments roar . . .
 The desolate Slumberer with moss and with leaves.
 That through the jealous leaves escapes
 While your leaves I behold and the brooks they will strew,
 Bent by a load of Mulberry leaves !—most hard
 The storm has stripped her of her leaves . . .
 With backward curve, the leaves revealed . . .
 The encircling laurels, thick with leaves, . . .
 In gentle bosoms, while serene leaves . . .
 Crisp, yellow leaves my bed ; the hooting owl
 Nor leaves her speech one word to aid the sigh
 Green leaves with yellow mixed are torn away,
 And leaves the disencumbered spirit free . . .
 The leaves that rustled on this oak-crowned hill,
 And sky that danced among those leaves, are still ;
 Swept by a favouring wind that leaves thought free,
 Close up those barren leaves ; . . .
 That what it leaves behind, . . .
 With shadows flung from leaves—so strive
 Nor unto silent leaves and drowsy flowers,—
 And ripening fruits and forest leaves . . .
 His Mother leaves him free to taste
 Leaves him at ease among grand thoughts : whose eye
 Whence these opprobrious leaves of dire portent ?
 As leaves are to the tree whereon they grow . . .
 And, as his tufts of leaves he spreads, content
 Trilled by the redbreast, when autumnal leaves
 Of summer, in the season of serene leaves ; . . .
 The leaves of any pleasant tree . . .
 From the great City ; never, upon leaves
 And see the huddling leaves the branches throng,
 Him even the slow-paced waggon leaves behind . . .
 Will wear the wind sigh through the leaves of a tree.
 That shook the leaves in myriads as it passed,—
 Their golden leaves upon the pathways, . . .
 Their moveless boughs and leaves like threads of
 gold ;
 The dry leaves stir as with the serpent's walk, . . .

Leaves—continued.

Tearing their bleeding ties leaves Age to groan . . . 613
 Leaves of myrtle in her Crown . . . 629
 Dislodged, through sero leaves rustled, or at once
 Or shady fountains, while among the leaves . . . 643
 The moon in splendour couched among the leaves
 Around me from among the hazel leaves . . . 659
 Mad at their sports like withered leaves in winds ;
 The leaves were fading when to Esthwaite's banks
 Leaves far behind life's treacherous vanities, . . . 672
 And rustling leaves . . . Enchanting age and sweet !
 That spreads its leaves in unmolested peace, . . . 693
 So that he questions the mute leaves with pain,
 Their leaves, as often Winter had put on . . . 711
 In seemly order, now, with straggling leaves . . . 741
 And pure as dew bathing their crimson leaves . . . 773
 And he continued, glancing on the leaves . . . 778
 On whose soft leaves it hangs, and from whose cup
 This shaded valley leaves ; and leaves the dark
 Stripped of their leaves and twigs by hoary age,
 And, with this change, sharp air and falling leaves,
 A book, upon whose leaves, some chosen plants,
 It was the season of unfolding leaves . . . 851
 While all the undergrove is thick with leaves,
 While the dark shadows of the summer leaves,
 That suits not them . . . The murmur of the leaves
 And court the wind ; and leaves of that shy plant,
 And oaken leaves that, driven by whirling blasts,
 That sport among green leaves, a blither train . . .
 Than to the forest hermit are the leaves . . .

Leav'st. Thou leav'st the halcyon free her hopes to build . . . 153

Leav'st to the wandering bird of paradise . . . 153
Leave-taking. Forth with small leave-taking ; . . . 153
Leaving. Leaving to silence the deserted vale . . . 172
 With brightness ! leaving her to post along,
 Leaving this Daughter of the mountains free,
 Leaving ten thousand stars beneath her : . . . 222
 Leaving the body on the grass . . . 236
 Calm expectations, leaving to the gay . . . 243
 But, leaving each unquiet theme . . . 278
 Leaving an ancient dome, and towers like these, . . . 292

She vanished ; leaving prospect blank and cold . . . 334
 With tenderest passion ; leaving him to pine . . . 340
 Leaving the focal issue in His hands . . . 319
 To silence leaving the deserted vale . . . 610
 Leaving behind her still, on either side,
 Glanced sideway, leaving the tumultuous throng,
 Thus far, O Friend ! have we, though leaving much
 With undisordeed sight . . . But leaving this,
 Leaving us at the board ; awhile we lingered,
 Had vanished, leaving others in their stead : . . .
 In twain, yet leaving the same outward form . . .
 Leaving a thousand others, that, in hall . . .
 Raa in new channels, leaving old ones dry . . .
 Leaving this nook unvisited : but, in sooth,
 Leaving behind of yellow radiance spread . . .
 And pleasant interests—for the sequel leaving
 And, leaving it to others to foretell,
 From common understanding ; leaving truth
 Leaving, in quest of other scenes, the shore
 Leaving the intermeddler to upbraid . . .
 Leaving St. Sunday's Crag, to Grisdale tarn
 Then leaving to their joyous house I pass . . .

Lebanon. Or from the top of Lebanon surveyed
 That shook on Lebanon the cedar's top,
 And his Permessus found on Lebanon . . .
 Like cedars on the top of Lebanon . . .

Led. See Horror-led, Up-led.

O'er Gallia's wastes of corn my footsteps led ;
 Or, led where Via Mala's chasms confine
 When to those famous fields his steps are led,
 And led by nature into a wild scene
 While thus he journeyed, step by step led on,
 Nor any friendly sound his footsteps led ;
 I had led him 'cross the torrent, his voice blessed
 me : . . .
 Is brave . . . To Clifford's arms he would have led
 He shall be led, and there, the Country round
 Led by its murmur, to the ancient oak
 Why else have I been led to this bleak Waste ?
 Led by my hand to save thee from perdition ;
 And it had led him towards the precipice,
 Upon this arm . . . You led him towards the Convent ?
 And followed as he led . . .
 That from his cottage to the church-yard led,
 Of occupation led from height to height
 At this blest moment led me, if I speak
 But thou—I know not how inspired, how led—
 Of natural objects, led me on to feel . . .
 Our pathway led us on to Rotha's banks ;
 ('Tis Fancy guides me willing to be led,
 Back to her place the ship he led ;
 Sir Walter led his wondering Paramour ;
 Wherever nature led : more like a man
 And, if no worthier led the way, resolved . . .

Led—continued.

Whether to buy or sell, or led . . . 240
 Of occupation, not by, fashion led . . . 255
 Rejo the proud-steed, or through the dance arc led ;
 Hath led me to this lonely place . . . 288
 Which would have led him, if bereft . . . 295
 The house that held this prize ; and, led . . . 297
 She led him home, and left me again,
 By whom the undamited Tyrolse are led ?
 They seek, are sought ; to daily battle led,
 Trophies that led the good and wise to mourn . . .
 Or by another's sympathy was led,
 Of Genoa the superb—should there be led
 From vale to hill, from hill to vale led on,
 Led on till an Alpine strait confined our view . . .
 King Arthur led the Egyptian Maid,
 The milk-white Lamb which in a line she led,
 If hand in hand have been led,
 He led her from the yew-tree shade . . .
 And, in seven days' space, wiled to York be led !—
 Upon his Son—and they were led . . .
 Led on, and yielded up their breath ; . . .
 Bore it, or led, to Rylstone-hall . . .
 To an unquestionable Source have led ;
 The pictured Saviour !—By Augustin led,
 Then he, who to the altar had been led,
 For Rite and Ordinance, Piety is led . . .
 Led by her own free choice . . . So Truth and Love
 This day, when, forth by rustic music led,
 Wanderer by spring with gradual progress led,
 And they are led by noble HILLARY . . .
 Of glory by Urania led ! . . .
 We who were led to-day down a grim dell,
 Led, Heaven knows how ! to this poor sod :
 In thy footsteps, and be led . . .
 The star that led the dawn . . .
 When, yet a slender Girl, she often led, . . .
 The way, mild Lady ! that hath led . . .
 She led the Lady to a seat . . .
 And soon shall you be led . . .
 Led on in bridal state, . . .
 And each, in his turn, becomes leader or led ;
 He hath no need . . . He is by nature led . . .
 That every gentle Spirit hither led . . .
 My steps the Border-minstrel led . . .
 —Then Quiet led me up the huddling rill,
 Led by Fear's cold wet band, and dogg'd by Death ;
 O'er Gallia's wastes of corn dejected led,
 Or, led by distant warbling notes, surveys,
 At early morn the careful housewife, led . . .
 To his chamber the monarch is led,
 I led my Lucy to the spot, " Look here !"
 One summer evening (led by her) I found . . .
 And unproved enchantment led us on
 And to the combat, Loo or Whist, led on
 Those chiefly that first led me to the love
 Led in abstemiousness a studious life ;
 The child that might have led him ; Emptiness
 I williogi, nay—nay, wishing to be led . . .
 And homeward led my steps . . . Magnificent
 My homeward course led up a long ascent,
 Led through the lanes in forlorn servitude ;
 And through that churchyard when my way has led
 To Nature's laws, and by what process led,
 Then paced the beaten downward way that led
 Led by the stream, ere noon-day magnified
 Led, as before, we should behold the sceoe,
 Led me to these by paths that, in the main,
 But seldom led, or wished to go ; in truth
 Or captive led in abject weeds, and jingling
 Gladdened me more than if I had been led
 Cheerfully led to individual ends . . .
 For me, when my affections first were led . . .
 Are led to knowledge, wheresoever led,
 Common to all ? that, seeing, I was led
 Of human life : Nature had led me on ;
 Led by Philosophers . . . With harder fate,
 This intuition led me to confound
 That I was led to take an eager part
 Assisted, led me back through opening day
 I led my horse, and, stumbling on, at length
 Of those led palfreys that should bear us home ;
 I led an undomestic wanderer's life,
 Nor having e'er, as life advanced, been led
 Of his adventurous countrymen were led . . .
 We started—and he led me toward the hills,
 Where Fortune led . . . and Fortune, who oft proves
 Led toward the Cottage . . . Homely was the spot ;
 Whether to such wild objects he were led . . .
 Young, modest, meek, and beautiful, I led . . .
 Led on, those shepherds made report of stars
 —Adown the path that from the glen had led
 By nature only ; but, if thither led,
 Led towards an easy outlet of the vale . . .
 Lodged in her bosom ; and, by science led,
 And yet a modest comrade, led them forth
 No longer led or followed by the Sons ;
 —We followed, taking as he led, a path
 Passing, as accident or fancy led,
 When, as our questions led, he told at large . . .

Led—continued.

Alert to follow as the Pastor led,
 And led us to our threshold. Daylight failed

Leeza's. From the Great Gavel, down by Leeza's banks,
Left. Left vacant for the day, I loved to roam.
 Fixed on the anchor left by Him who saves
 Left his mind still as a deep evening stream.
 Left by gigantic arms—at length surveys
 She left him there; for, clustering round his knees,
 The friends whom she had left but a few minutes past.
 We left the willow shade by the brookside,
 As if my heart would burst; and so I left him.
 Has left a power of riches; and I say it,
 They think it is to feed them. I have left him
 Before her face. The rest be left to me.
 Just as we left the glen a clap of thunder
 Since that Man left me.—No, I am not lost.
 Thou hast left me ears to hear my Daughter's voice,
 Within the Vault, a spear's length to the left.
 As I have told you: He left us yesterday
 You know we left him sitting—see him yonder.
 I did not think that aught was left in me
 I fancy when you left the Holy Land,
 I would be left alone. I know your motives!
 And in that miserable place we left him,
 Left without burial! nay, not dead nor dying,
 We marched to Syria: oft I left the Camp,
 And in that dream had left my native land,
 You are no richer than when you left me?
 And you left him alive?
 The bell is left, which no one dares remove;
 I left him. I believe that there are phantoms,
 Is left me still in thee. Nay, shake not so.
 Left to the mercy of that savage Man!
 Of the bleak Waste—left him—and so he died!
 Of having left a thing like her alive!
 That he's left, for a bed, to beggars or thieves!
 Have left the mother and the nest;
 Gracefully up the garbled trunk; nor left we unsurveyed
 As visions still more bright have done, and left no trace behind.
 Left among her native mountains
 Had left that calling, tempted to entrust
 But that the Stranger, who had left the grave,
 The other, left behind, is flowing still.
 Left in the church-yard wall. That's Walter Ewbank.
 They left to him the family still, and land
 But Leonard— Then James still is left among you!
 Was gone to sea, and he was left alone,
 The power of speech. Both left the spot in silence;
 No vestige then was left that such had ever been.
 For ever left alone am I;
 Till thirty were not left alive
 All that is left to comfort thee.
 Death in a moment parted them, and left
 When last he sailed, he left the bird behind;
 Had left it, to be watched and fed,
 And I have left a babe at home:
 Alas! before I left the spot,
 A portion of the tale may well be left
 Of that same town, in which the pair had left
 How turn to left, and how to right.
 In Johnny's left hand you may see
 That came to him, and left him, on the heights.
 And left, the couple neither gay perhaps
 Though nought was left undone which staff, or voice,
 And left estates and monies to the poor,
 Far more than we have lost is left us yet.
 What will be left to us!—But I forget
 And left the work unfinished when he died.
 In all the neighbourhood!—yet the oak is left
 Of One, a Widow, left beneath a weight
 On which it grew, or to be left alone
 She left that farewell offering,
 Some ornaments to me are left—
 The little careless Broom was left
 Away they fly to left, to right—
 The evil One is left behind.
 They checked me—and I left the theme

Left—continued.

Is left to muse upon the solemn scene.
 I left our cottage-threshold, sallying forth
 She died, and left to me
 I left her, and pursued my way;
 Yet as I left I find them here!
 When Ruth was left half desolate,
 This Thorn you on your left espay;
 And to the left, three yards beyond,
 A rout this morning left Sir Walter's Hall,
 Sir Walter and the Hart are left alone.
 Had left imprinted on the grassy ground,
 Then home he went, and left the Hart stone-dead,
 He left this moral grafted on his Fate;
 And left as if by earthquake strewn,
 That, as we left the plain, before our sight
 O'er timid waters that have scarcely left
 If here a warrior left a spell,
 Companions, fear ye to be left behind,
 With faithful memory left of things
 I've left my heart at home.
 He left a trusty guide for one
 Turns round his long left ear.
 Turned round his long left ear.
 We left our Hero in a trauce,
 Hath left him high in preparation,—
 —The light had left the lonely taper,
 And left her mother at sixteen,
 The moment it has left the virgin's eye,
 Be left more desolate, more dreary cold
 Man left this Structure to become Time's prey,
 Of company or friends, and left
 That region left, the vale unfolds
 Live, and take comfort. Thou hast left behind
 Then cleave, O cleave to that which still is left;
 Nothing is left which I can venerate;
 Left single, in bold parley, ye, of yore,
 And left them lying in the silent sun,
 And We are left, or shall be left, alone;
 Powers have they left, an impulse, and a claim
 That curbed the baser passions, and left free
 And sober graces, left her for defence
 And to the enormous labour left his name,
 He left his Transatlantic home:
 Which hath not left the spot unknown
 Nor further outlet left to mind or heart?
 Who having left the Cemetery stands
 But restless Fancy left that olive grove
 Nor grieve the less that skill to him was left
 Or aught in Syrian deserts left to save
 Which she in duty left, sad but not cheerless.
 So cheered, she left that Island bleak,
 Of some sweet Babe—Flower stolen, and coarse
 Weed left
 And each tumultuous working left behind
 Long left without a warden,
 The hidden silver Broach was left.
 In the grey sky hath left his lingering Ghost,
 And she is left alone in heaven;
 Nor left him at his later day.
 "For thee, for thee, is left the sense
 Whom I have left, Love's mildest birth,
 While ground was left for hope; unblamed
 Be left, is no restriction laid;
 And left—but by the rest unsaid
 "No choice is left, the deed is mine—
 A glimmering sense still left, with eyes
 There was he left alone, unwept,
 —What now is left for pain or fear?
 Hath yet this faithful Partner left;
 When, left in solitude, erewhile
 Back to the Land those Pilgrims left of yore,
 Woman! the Power who left His throne on high,
 Throughout the Country they have left, our shores
 Be left as silent as the mountain-tops,
 To her I left, shall prove
 Old Simon to the world is left
 Hath oftener left me mourning,
 A day like this which I have left
 And left thee but a glimmering of the day;
 Or left unthought-of in obscurity,—
 The umbrageous woods are left—how far beneath!
 Across the slender wrist of the left arm
 Thinking of past and gone, with what is left
 Nor ever was; I sighed, and left the spot
 With door left open makes a gloomy spot,
 Rich prospect left behind of stream and vale,
 What recompense is kept in store or left
 One living Stay was left, and on that one
 This sad belief, the happiest that is left
 Still shall be left some corner of the heart
 May have a living House still left in thee!"
 She left her fire, or left her bed,
 Left, 'mid the Records of this Book inscribed,
 That no one breathing should be left to perish,
 For I have left my Father's roof,

 In utter solitude,—But he had left
 The nails of cart or chariot-wheel have left
 That she can cover, left not his exposed
 Her seat scarce left, she strives, alas! in vain,
 No fond hand left to staunch th' unclosing vein,
 "When Superstition left the golden light
 Life left my loaded heart, and closing eye;
 How fast that length of way was left behind,
 And left the Glow-worm, blessing it by name,
 Six little ones at home had left,
 Not many steps, and she was left
 Thy Children left unfit, through vain demand
 Mild influence; nor left in me one wish
 Romantic tale by Milton left unsung;
 And left their usages, their arts and laws,
 How Wallace fought for Scotland; left the name
 All over his dear Country; left the deeds
 When he had left the mountains and received
 There in her mooring-place I left my bark,—
 Of native rock, left midway in the square
 Left by the west wind sweeping overhead
 In uncouth race, and left the cross-legged knight,
 The Minstrel of the Troop, and left him there,
 From unknown causes. I was left alone
 Had been neglected; left a register
 Till he was left an arrow's flight behind.
 Of more distinct humanity, that left
 Had also left less space within my mind
 Those shepherd swains whom I had lately left,
 Left to herself unheard of and unknown.
 The rooms, the court, the garden were not left
 Stripped of his voice and left to dimple down
 The sun was set, or setting, when I left
 Now vacant; pale-faced babes whom I had left
 That—after I had left a flower-decked room
 I left the shady nook where I had stood
 Old Ocean, in his bed left saged and bare,
 He left me: I called after him aloud;
 And dearest helpers, left unthanked, unpraised,
 She left us destitute, and, as we might,
 Or draws for minds that are left free to trust
 Wert thou extinguished, little would be left
 A heap of garments, as if left by one
 That golden store of books which I had left,
 Life's morning radiance hath not left the hills,
 Ceased, had I left those academic bowers
 Flowers left to wither on triumphal arcs,
 Hath left no corner of the land untouched:
 Enticing valleys, greeted them and left
 In motion without pause; but we have left
 Hushed in profound repose. We left the town
 We left the Swiss exulting in the fate
 That the rough lord had left the surly North
 Dissolved, have left him an unshrugged head.
 Left, even to us toiling in this late day,
 Left at the tapering ladder's top, that seemed Ere long, the lonely mountains left, I moved,
 The region left behind him; and, if aught
 Loose and disjointed, and the affections left
 Was left without a follower to discharge
 And left a solid birthright to the State,
 Left without glory on the field, or driven,
 After strict question, left within my mind
 Had left an interregnum's open space
 Or left (by mere timidity betrayed)
 They had left behind? So feeling comes in aid
 Upon my left a blasted hawthorn stood;
 I left Bethgert's huts at couching-time,
 Honour and shame, looking to right and left,
 Hears least; else surely this Man had not left
 Triumphant displayed in records left
 That left half-told the preternatural tale,
 Even of the good is no memorial left.
 Two blighting seasons, when the fields were left
 I rose; and, having left the breezy shade,
 He left his house: two wretched days had past,
 —He left me thus—he could not gather heart
 I left her busy with her garden tools;
 The tears stood in her eyes. I left her then
 And she was left alone. She now, released
 Upon those silent walls, we left the shade;
 Left and forgotten in his careless way,
 Must that Man have been left, who, hither driven,
 Upon myself.—The other left these words
 As left by the departed company,
 Left one day mistress of her mother's stores,
 Left them ungifted with a power to yield
 Had gathered,—"Ye have left my cell,—but see
 By scars which his activity has left
 Left in the fabric of a leaky dam
 And those wild paths were left to me alone.
 Yet left them joined by sympathy in age;
 And left me, on this earth, disconsolate!
 I left not uninvoked; and, in still groves,
 Be left him, trust the freight of his distress
 With only such degree of sadness left
 With their united force, have left undone?
 Of a poor lamb—left somewhere to itself, 807

The rational creature, left, to feel the weight 811
 His round of pastoral duties, is not left 813
 And trivial ostentation—is left free 813
 In stillness left when slaughter is no more, 836
 So their departure only left behind
 With mysteries;—for, if Faith were left natried,
 Is silent; nor is any vestige left
 Was left to tremble for a breaking vow,—
 Trusting her child, she left their common home,
 And where yet dwells her faithful Partner, left
 A consciousness remained that it had left,
 And the long-privileged house left empty—swept
 Like vernal ground to sabbath sunshine left.
 Nor left unstigmatized those fatal fields
 'Tis left untold if here he first drew breath,
 Raised by his hands. And now no trace is left
 The Mother left alone,—no helping hand
 With which she left her haven—not for this,
 However destitute, be left to droop
 Falsehood and guile, be left to sow their seed;
 Were left, the other gained.—O ye, who come
 Than to be left unconscious of the woe.

 And when the precious hours of leisure came,
 Think calmly on the past, and mark at leisure
 Days of sweet leisure, taxed with patient thought
 When in our pinnacle we returned at leisure
 At leisure, thence, through tracts of thin resort, 689

Liberty—continued.

—Tho' Liberty shall soon, indignant, raise
Joyous, nor scared at its own liberty, . . . 616 Desc. Sh. Quarto 774
Dear Liberty! Yet what would it avail
Of Liberty, which fifteen hundred years
Of independence and stern liberty,
That gave thee liberty, full long desired,
In magisterial liberty to rove,
Dances of liberty, and, in late hours
Glory and hope to new-born Liberty!
For battle in the cause of Liberty.
And mountain liberty. It could not be
Bondage, the other to build liberty
On rational liberty, and hope in man,
For liberty, against deluded men,
That bore it—on the plains of Liberty
That Liberty, and Life, and Death would soon
Worthy of liberty, all spirits filled
As Liberty upon earth: yet all beneath
Triumphal pomp for liberty confirmed,
Justice, and make an end of Liberty.
As well of License as of Liberty;
The scale of liberty. I read her doom,
Build social upon personal Liberty,
And spread abroad the wings of Liberty,
To the great ends of Liberty and Power.
For this alone is genuine liberty:
—But, from past liberty, and tried restraints,
And liberty of nature; there he kept
The cause of Christ and civil liberty,
The unshackled layman's natural liberty;
Wherefore, when humbled Liberty grew weak,
The tree of Liberty.—My heart rebounded;
As Brutus did to Virtue. Liberty,
And propagate, by liberty of life,
Where now that boasted liberty? No welcome
Of man, offended, liberty is here,
The liberty, for frail, for mortal, man
With an unsettled liberty of thought,
Impregnable of Liberty and Peace.
The limbs increase; but liberty of mind
In brief, what liberty of mind is here?
The wish for liberty to live—content
That such unfettered liberty was his,
Of Liberty endangered, and farewell
Liberty's. In Liberty's behalf. Fears, true or feigned,
Libyan. Whither, by care of Libyan Jove,
Fed in the Libyan waste by gushing wells,
To reap the whirlwind on a Libyan rock.
Libya's. You tawny slip is Libya's sands;
Licence. Licence and slashiver order, dares be free.
Licence to hide at intervals her head
Their legislative licence to withdraw
License. A license to destroy him: our good governors
How can I give thee license to depart?
To license some unruliness of mind;
As well of License as of Liberty;
Licensed. Sussed wrong; nor need we blame the Licensed joys
Were only History licensed to take note
To the broad follies of the licensed world,
Licensed to take the meaning that we love!
Licentious. Of that licentious craving in the mind
Licentiously. Of private life licentiously displayed Licentiousness. So shall licentiousness and black resolve
Lichens. By lichens grey, and scanty moss, o'er-grown;
With lichens is it overgrown.
With lichens to the very top.
Licked. And, fondling, licked his face, then on a sudden
Licks. And fondly licks his hands.
Lid. See Coffin-lid.
Lords of the visionary eye whose lid,
Upon the lid he knocks.
Beside the coffin, resting on its lid
Liddesdale. Repair to Liddesdale, and tell the Band
Good Dame, repair to Liddesdale and wait
Lids. Yet I, whose lids from infant slumber
Lie. As lambs or fawns in April clustering lie
That on the noon-day bank of leisure lie
Whose body near our cottage chanced to lie;
But when thy Father must lie down and die,
And lie down by his side—what say you to it?
Weak! I am weak—there does my torment lie,
Lye snugly in a pod, the pod must then
They have snapped her from the stem—Poh! let her lie
My own wild words? Young Man, the seed must lie
And let him, when he would lie down at night,
When seas and continents shall lie between us—
Withered on the ground must lie;
Asleep upon their beds they lie;
"Two of us in the church-yard lie,
Two of us in the church-yard lie,
Where the frosts of winter lie.
That unto him, where'er shall lie his life's appointed
way,
Lay buried side by side as now they lie, . . .

All stiff with ice the ashes lie;
Then here contented will I lie!
Save six feet of earth where our forefathers lie!
Beyond participation lie
"Here, little Darling, dost thou lie;
That I could not lie quiet in my grave.
What wonders in that circle lie!
Then happy lie; for blest am I;
Let them all in quiet lie,
Imprisoned by hot sunshine lie
When they lie about our feet:
They lie like fawns reposing.
There is a spot that seems to lie
Can lie upon the plain
To lie, and listen to the mountain flood
For oft, when on my couch I lie
Yet, Showman, where can lie the cause? Shall thy Implement have blame,
Have souls which never yet have risen, and therefore prostrate lie?
"Hush, hoys! you're telling me a lie;
Of islands, that together lie
As a huge stone is sometimes seen to lie
And his bones lie in his paternal vale—
Love had he found in huts where poor men lie;
A dwindled object, and submits to lie
And the bright landscape too must lie,
To lie and listen—till o'er-drowsed sense
Like bands of ministering Spirits, or when they lie,
Where deep and low the hamlets lie
And by the river's brink did lie;
As he beheld the Woman lie
I have thought of all by turns, and yet do lie
When haughty expectations prostrate lie
Ships, towers, domes, theatres, and temples lie
Ere we lie down in our last dormitory?
Of thoughts that lie beyond the reach
Young Bacchus was conveyed—to lie
That in their keeping it might lie,
In worse than former helplessness—and lie
If sapient Germany must lie deprest,
And lie cut off from all his heart holds dear;
The rude Biscayans, when their children lie
Where all the brave lie dead. But, when of bands
And long procession—there to lie,
She seems to work, at pleasure to lie still;—
None bleed, and none lie prostrate but the foe;
Yet, to the loyal and the brave, who lie
And irremovable) gracious openings lie
Lie silent in your graves, ye dead!
Lie quiet in your churchyard bed!
Or service, it must lie elsewhere.
Lie down in peace, and lovingly.
In that thy very strength must lie.
In open moonlight doth she lie;
Where they might lie as in the grave,
There doth the gentle Creature lie
Scooped from the sacred earth where his dear relics
lie.
Their labours end; or they return to lie,
And the green vales lie hushed in sober light!
Mountain, and moor, and crowded street, where lie
Deep in your hearts the sense of duty lie,
The boundless plain of waters seems to lie—
In common things that round us lie
Comes to me not; malignant truth, or lie.
Lie here, without a record of thy worth,
And therefore does not stoop, nor lie in wait
Lie open; and the book of Holy Writ,
From out the pensive shadows where they lie)
Unruffled doth the blue lake lie,
Good aims lie down, and perish in the road
Lie in the means required, or ways ordained,
Lie in forbearance, strength in standing still?
Be strong in faith, bid anxious thoughts lie still;
While all lie prostrate, save the tyrant few
Crime might lie better hid. And, should the change
Cakes for the nonce, and butter fit to lie
Life's book for Thee may lie unclosed, till age
Where happy generations lie,
And things of holy use unhallowed lie;
Lie round him, even as if they were a part
Thy goodness is set forth; they when they lie
"Upon his bier this Innocent doth lie
All that she said is an outrageous lie.
That could not lie concealed where Thou wert
known;
A place of thought where we in waiting lie;]
And custom lie upon thee with a weight,
Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears.
Beneath an old-grey oak as violets lie,
On couches lie, with purple overspread;
A Nation's hopes lie crushed in Claremont's desolate Hall.
As they lie hid in all external forms, . . .

 Through his industrious life, and Christian faith . . . 587
 Some fragment from his dream of human life, . . . 589
 That Life brings with her in her equipage ; . . . 589
 Heavy as frost, and deep almost as life ! . . . 589
 Wheo Life rear'd laughing up her morning sun ; . . . 592
 Nought else of man or life remains behind . . . 592
 Deny'd the bread of life the foodful ear . . . 598
 Thro' worlds where Life and Sound, and Motion . . . 608 sleep.
 Far different life to what tradition hoar . . . 609
 To pant slow up the endless Alp of life . . . 610
 Shall love, 'till Life has broke her golden bowl, . . . 613
 If e'er they smooth'd the rugged walks of life, . . . 615
 Life left my loaded heart, and closing eye ; . . . 619
 Dear was the pause of life, and dear the sigh . . . 619
 A body without life— . . . 623
 And help life onward in its noblest aim. . . . 628
 But with a Delphic life, in sight . . . 629
 Who threw the Saxon shield o'er Luther's life . . . 629
 With any promises of human life), . . . 632
 I spare to tell of what ensued, the life . . . 633
 Came hopes still higher, that with outward life . . . 634
 Of Truth that cherishes our daily life ; . . . 635
 With life and nature—purifying thus . . . 638
 The bond of union between life and joy . . . 640
 And sweet sensations that throw back our life, . . . 641
 Through later years the story of my life. . . . 641
 And surety of our earthly life, a light . . . 645
 Poetic spirit of our human life, . . . 646
 Hence life, and change, and beauty, solitude . . . 646
 And intellectual life ; but that the soul, . . . 646
 In the great social principle of life . . . 647
 The blessing of my life ; the gift is yours, . . . 648
 I gave a moral life ! I saw them feel . . . 651
 And here, O Friend ! have I retraced my life . . . 651
 In this new life. Imagination slept . . . 652
 With the accustomed garb of daily life) . . . 653
 Such life might not inaptly be compared . . . 654
 Led in abstemiousness a studious life ; . . . 655
 In my own mind remote from social life, . . . 656

Life—continued.

Among the conflicts of substantial life ; . . . 656
 The surfaces of artificial life . . . 657
 Of texture midway between life and books. . . . 657
 And what may rather have been called to life . . . 658
 And more than eighty, of untroubled life, . . . 659
 " An emblem here behold of thy own life ; . . . 659
 How life pervades the undecaying mind ; . . . 660
 In human Life, the daily life of those . . . 661
 Wore in old time. Her smooth domestic life, . . . 661
 Of character or life ; but at that time, . . . 663
 Things that aspire to unconquerable life ; . . . 666
 Of day returning and of life revived, . . . 666
 And their high privilege of lasting life, . . . 666
 In the simplicities of opening life . . . 669
 Nor what it augurs of the life to come ; . . . 673
 To earth and human life, the Song might dwell . . . 673
 Of human life. What wonder, then, if sounds . . . 674
 And the simplicities of cottage life . . . 675
 And some remain, hopes for my future life. . . . 675
 Supreme Existence, the surpassing life . . . 677
 Of my collegiate life—far less intense . . . 677
 Of my collegiate life I still have had . . . 679
 Compelled to be a life unto herself, . . . 679
 Murmured the sister streams of Life and Death, . . . 681
 Sweet coverts did we cross of pastoral life, . . . 682
 Of social life, I looked upon these things . . . 686
 Yet, undetermined to what course of life . . . 688
 And life and labour seem but one, I filled . . . 688
 Or life or death upon the battle-field. . . . 689
 Of life, and life-like mockery beneath, . . . 690
 And recent things yet warm with life ; a sea-fight, . . . 691
 I heard, and for the first time in my life, . . . 693
 How casual incidents of real life, . . . 693
 That bind the perishable hours of life . . . 694
 When the great tide of human life stands still ; . . . 697
 Its currents ; magnifies its shoals of life . . . 698
 The soul of Beauty and enduring Life . . . 698
 The days departed start again to life, . . . 699
 Were the unluxuriant produce of a life . . . 701
 Smooth life had flock and shepherd in old time, . . . 701
 Smooth life had herdsman, and his snow-white herd . . . 701
 His devious course. A glimpse of such sweet life . . . 702
 A freeman, wedded to his life of hope . . . 703
 Alone, that something of a better life . . . 703
 With the deformities of crowded life, . . . 704
 Among the simple shapes of human life . . . 704
 Of life and glory. In the midst stood Man, . . . 706
 Of present, actual, superficial life, . . . 706
 I trembled,—thought, at times, of human life . . . 706
 The end of life, and everything we know . . . 707
 Strip of their harmonising soul, the life . . . 708
 Of human life : Nature had led me on ; . . . 709
 And all the attire of ordinary life, . . . 711
 The soil of common life, was, at that time, . . . 712
 Of books and common life, it makes sure way . . . 714
 Of royal courts, and that voluptuous life . . . 714
 On firm foundations, making social life, . . . 715
 Fashioned his life ; and many a long discourse, . . . 715
 That Liberty, and Life, and Death would soon . . . 720
 Of life and death, in majesty severe . . . 721
 And all the accidents of life were pressed . . . 723
 The veins that branch through every frame of life, . . . 724
 Life from the young Republic ; that new foes . . . 727
 As books and common intercourse with life . . . 728
 They clung, as if they were its life, any more, . . . 730
 To anatomise the frame of social life ; . . . 731
 (Too well I loved, in that my spring of life, . . . 732
 With an impassioned life, what feeble ones . . . 735
 When the bodily eye, in every stage of life . . . 736
 By her benign simplicity of life, . . . 736
 Are prey, her life is gratitude. . . . 737
 Too forcibly, too early in my life, . . . 737
 Among those passages of life that give . . . 737
 Of life : the hiding-places of man's power . . . 738
 Substance and life to what I feel, enshrining, . . . 740
 The field of human life, in heart and mind . . . 740
 In man, and in the frame of social life, . . . 740
 Of life and death, revolving. Above all . . . 740
 Life, human life, with all its sacred claims . . . 741
 There are among the walks of homely life . . . 743
 Of human life. I felt that the array . . . 744
 To rouse them ; in a world of life they live, . . . 747
 Hence cheerfulness for acts of daily life, . . . 747
 Oh ! who is he that hath his whole life long . . . 748
 Revolving with the accidents of life, . . . 748
 For that which moves with light and life informed, . . . 748
 The works of man and face of human life ; . . . 749
 Faith in life endless, the sustaining thought . . . 749
 Of female softness shall his life be full, . . . 749
 In life or nature of those charms minute . . . 749
 Of life and death, time and eternity, . . . 750
 In life among the passions of mankind, . . . 750
 I led an undomestic wanderer's life, . . . 751
 Of mine can give it life.) in firm belief . . . 751
 I said unto the life which I had lived, . . . 751
 Whether to me shall be allotted life, . . . 751
 And, with life, power to accomplish aught of worth, . . . 751
 Oh ! yet a few short years of useful life, . . . 752
 Had reached its close ; but Life is insecure, . . . 753
 " On Man, on Nature, and on Human Life, . . . 755

Life—continued.

Of all illumination,—may my Life
 Nor having e'er, as life advanced, been led
 The life and death of martyrs, who sustained,
 And by them did he live; they were his life.
 The mystery, the life which cannot die;
 Breathed immortality, revolving life,
 The annual savings of a blissful life,
 Thus daily thirsting, in that lonesome life,
 And drinking from the well of homely life.
 By perseverance in this track of life,
 That, 'mid the simpler forms of rural life,
 Of ordinary life; unweaved, unwarp'd
 And in the wisdom of our daily life.
 Thus had he lived a long and innocent life.
 So was He framed; and such his course of life
 Might live on earth a life of happiness.
 An ordinary sorrow of man's life,
 Beneath the misery of that wandering life.
 To human life, or something very near
 To human life, when he shall come again
 From his long journeyings and eventful life,
 Lonesome and lost; of whom, and whose past life,
 Bears on the humbler ground of social life,
 Life, like that Roman Janus, double-faced;
 Of private life licentiousness displayed
 Were wanting; and simplicity of life;
 By witness of life—the fixed his home,
 With the few needful things that life requires.
 The common penalties of mortal life,
 An amicable smile retained the life
 So much I felt the awfulness of life,
 And advocate of humble life, I now
 Ill borne in earlier life; but his was now
 'Inhuman'—said I, was an old Man's life
 That the poor Sufferer had escaped with life,
 Like human life from darkness. A quick turn
 To quit the beaten track of life, and soar
 Even so deduce the stream of human life
 Who in this frame of human life, perceive
 But for its absolute self; a life of peace.
 Such the reward he sought; and wore out life,
 The life where hope and memory are as one;
 By courage, to demand from real life
 Of this same life, compelling us to grieve
 Her share in the pure freedom of that life,
 And precious interests? Smoothly did our life
 Much less, retraced in words. If she, of life
 Time's fetters are composed; and life was put
 And propagate, by liberty of life,
 Pleased to perceive his own unshackled life,
 Which my life holds, he readily may conceive
 Is human life; and so the Spirit fares
 For the calamities of mortal life
 And let thy favour, to the end of life,
 "The dignity of life is not impaired
 Nor is it a mean praise of rural life
 Stood empty of all shape of life, and silent
 Built up of life, and food, and means of life!
 In spite of all the weakness that life brings,
 Of Life continuous, Being unimpaired;
 Mad Fancy's favourite vassals? Does not life
 Rests his desires; and hence, in after life,
 An impious warfare with the very life
 He, who by willful disesteem of life
 From the encumbrances of mortal life,
 Has not the soul, the being of your life,
 Her rivers populous with gliding life;
 On fruitage gathered from the tree of life;
 His unobtrusive merit; but his life,
 And man's substantial life. If this mute earth
 To the fair land of everlasting life,
 Of truth and justice. Turn to private life
 The Solitary, "in the life of man,
 On humble life, forbid the judging mind
 Yet life, as with the multitude, with them
 And penalties of miserable life,
 We safely may affirm that human life
 Of life, of love, and gladness doth dispense
 —This contrast, not unsuitable to life,
 Your further help? The mine of real life
 Epitomise the life; pronounce, you can,
 In life, in death, what solitude can breed
 This place is consecrate; to Death and Life,
 Smitten while all the promises of life
 That life is love and immortality,
 Life, I repeat, is energy of love
 Immortal life, in never-fading worlds,
 On the distempered flood of public life,
 That, through all stations, human life abounds
 And a coarse outside of repulsive life
 Rule over her, and vexed her daily life;
 Dread life of conflict I which I off compared
 The spotless ether of a maiden life;
 Why do not these prevail for human life,
 But the green stalk of Ellen's life was snapped,
 Capacious and serene; his blameless life,
 To the pure course of human life which there
 (The hour of life to which he then was brought)
 How will he face the remnant of his life?
 Least in those passages of life were some

Life—continued.

A Priest abides before whose life such doubts
 Upon his life an outward dignity
 Short was his life, and a brief tale remains.
 Had also witnessed, in his morn of life,
 These narratives of calm and humble life,
 —Life, death, eternity | momentous themes
 Raising, through just gradation, savage life
 The tender age of life, ye would exclaim,
 And so we live, or else we have no life.
 That tires not, nor betrays. Our life is turned
 Of life, and hope, and action. And 'tis known
 At least, whatever fate the noon of life
 To drudge through a weary life without the help
 On human life from infancy to age.
 Who leads a happy life
 Pleased to detect the dimpling stir of life,
 Boldly and bear away to softer life;
 That from Venus took her life.
 Grateful is Sleep; my life in stone hound fast

Light—continued.

Received the light hers losses.
 Her eyes grew bright with blissful light,
 Dear art thou to the light of heaven,
 Mix strangely; trifles light, and partly vain,
 "Where are your books?—that light bequeathed
 Come forth into the light of things,
 Were tears of light, the dew of gladness.
 Who art a light to guide, a rod
 When love is an unerring light,
 And in the light of truth thy Bondman let me live!
 Whose high endeavours are an inward light
 In the still summer noon, while beams of light,
 Along a scale of light and life, with cares
 And all the heavy or light vassalage
 Breathing, in the light of day,
 By that other Guide, whose light
 Man's feverish passions, His pure light of love,
 Sung as the light of day grows dim;
 What though our burthen be not light
 The common light; whose stillness charms the air,
 The shade and light, both there and everywhere,
 Though but a simple object, into light
 And how he rules the pomp of light and shade;
 All Powers and Places that abhor the light
 The light of Knowledge, and the warmth of Love.
 Came forth—a light, though but as of daybreak,
 So sacred, so informed with light divine,
 What on the Plain we have of warmth and light,
 Bore a light switch, her sceptre of command

Just half protruded to the light of morn, . . .

Instinct with light whose sweetest promise lies,

The light from past endeavours purely willed
 When, like essential Forms of light,
 Attuned to verse that, crowning light Distress
 A life declining with the golden light
 Light words, that were more lightly heard
 On which the noonday sun shed light
 And will not hold in light esteem
 Light was his step,—his hopes, more light,
 To resume its native light.
 The light to us vouchsafing of thy prayer,
 For which, by earliest glimpse of morning light,
 Who were so joyful at the light of day,
 Dancing and leaping light upon the spray;
 Evil light on her! she hath done me wrong:
 Thou lamp of which extinguished is the light;
 Somewhat his woeful heart to make more light;
 O star, of which I lost have all the light,
 To comfort him, and make his heart more light;
 Rising or setting, let the light at least
 Ye Striplings, light of heart and gay,
 Light pleasures, every day renewed
 The light that never was, on sea or land,
 For on the past hath fallen a light
 That shunned so modestly the light of praise,
 Time's vanities, light fragments of earth's dream—
 Of memory, or see the light of love.
 Burnt on with ever-strengthening light, enshrined
 Apparelled in celestial light.
 But He beholds the light, and whence it flows,
 And fade into the light of common day.
 With light upon him from his father's eyes!
 Of day or the warm light,
 Sole light admitted here, a small cascade,
 To mark the birches' stems all golden light,
 Feeds on in light, nor thinks of winter's shock;
 When up the hills, as now, retreats the light,
 —Ah me! all light is mute amid the gloom,
 Toss'd light from hand to hand; while on the ground

Long streaks of fairy light the wave illumine
 Breaks on the shade, the shade upon the light
 The bird, with fading light who ceas'd to tread
 Frosting with hoary light the pearly ground,
 Above the gloomy valley flings her light,
 To light him shaken by his viewless way,
 Those shadowy breasts in love's soft light array'd,
 No star supplies the comfort of its light,
 And one sole light shifts in the vale profound;
 Light up of tranquil joy a sober scene;
 —To mark a planet's pomp and steady light
 "When Superstition left the golden light
 The God of day, in all the pomp of light,
 In all the majesty of light array'd,
 To cheer the wand'ring wretch with hospitable light.
 The thought of her was like a flash of light,
 Albeit putting forth a fainter light.
 From gilded rafters many a blazing light
 She visiteth, or, shedding light benign
 And his willows whispered in its light.
 O Moon! if e'er I joyed when thy soft light
 That hope hath been discouraged; welcome light
 That came with soft alarm, like hurtless light
 Of sparkling light. Now, like one who rows,
 Through every hair-breadth in that field of light,
 And surety of our earthly life, a light
 With which it communed. An auxiliary light . . .

Light—continued.

And from my pillow, looking forth by light
 Want store of leafy arbours where the light
 Their light composure, far less to instil
 By moonshine through mere lack of taper light.
 Man, if he do but live within the light
 Grain-tinctured, drenched in empyrean light;
 Solid and light, short-sighted and profound;
 Cloud-like if mounts, or touched with light divine
 A bed of glittering light: I asked the cause:
 For solace by dim light of monkish lamps;
 Yet unrequited, while the morning light
 By that transparent veil with light divine
 From the far-stretching landscape, by the light
 To shut thine eyes, and by internal light
 Should I have seen the light of evening fade
 Of usurpation, when the light of sense
 Tumult and peace, the darkness and the light—
 And their own size, than any outward light;
 Sitting within doors between light and dark,
 Set forth, too serious theme for that light place—
 Of public notice—an offensive light
 For all things serve them; them the morning light
 The light of beauty did not fall in vain,
 Strewing the turf's green slope. A diamond light
 Without the light of knowledge. Where the harm,
 Loitering, I watched the golden beams of light
 Has been set forth; yet here the vulgar light
 But how could I in mood so light indulge,
 Substance and shadow, light and darkness, all
 Darkness ere day's mid course, and morning light
 For the sun's light. The soul when smitten thus Though filling daily, still was light, compared
 Of symmetry and light and bloom, expressed,
 A light, a cruel, and vain world cut off
 With zeal expanding in Truth's holy light,
 Into another region. As a light
 Of insolent tempers, the light vanity
 Courage to them who looked for good by light
 And losing, in no other way than light
 Is lost in light, the weak in the more strong.
 One guide, the light of circumstances, flashed
 With scoffers, seeking light and gay revenge
 Must live within the very light and air
 In the great City, broke like light from far.
 For instantly a light upon the turf
 Had disappeared, or shed a fainter light
 Its voices issuing forth to silent light
 For that which moves with light and life informed,
 Its natal murmur; followed it to light
 Even as one essence of pervading light
 And from thy presence shed the light of love,
 But, as the mind was filled with inward light,
 Rise up, and bathe the world in light! He looked—
 The peace required, he scanned the laws of light
 The light extinguished of her lonely hut,
 After his daily work, until the light
 The threshold, lifted with light hand the latch;
 Like one in trouble, for returning light
 Turn wheresoe'er we would, he was a light
 That, in the light of false philosophy
 Into the presence of the cheerful light—
 And cordial greeting.—Vivid was the light
 And, with light steps still quicker than his words,
 The mist, the shadows, light of golden suns,
 Above the sandy desert, in the light
 With mind that sheds a light on what he sees;
 And touch as gentle as the morning light,
 And holiest love; as earth, sea, air, with light,
 Seeks, yet can nowhere find, the light of truth.
 By vocal utterance, or haze of reason's
 Imagination's light when reason's fails,
 That timely light, to share his joyous sport:
 Burns, like an unconsuming fire of light,
 Of true philanthropy. The light of love
 To the still influx with the cheerful light
 Varying its tincture with the changeful light,
 Small space of that green churchyard with a light
 A light of duty shines on every day
 Our inquest turns.—Accord, good Sir! the light
 Look, from the quarter whence the lord of light,
 And let the light mechanic tool be hailed
 Guides better than mine eyes—until a light
 And saw the light—now fixed—and shifting now—
 I turn, and reach at last the guiding light;
 My helpmate's face by light of day. He quits
 And sink, through utter want of cheering light;
 Whose light of reason is with age extinct;
 Of overpowering light.—While yet a child,
 Who, at her heart's light bidding, once had moved
 His darkness doth transcend our fickle light!
 Was no access for wain, heavy or light.
 With an inconstant and unmellowed light;
 "Soul-cheering Light, most bountiful of things!
 Within his cheek, as light within a cloud;
 Light birch, aloft upon the horizon's edge,
 And pensive quiet, an unnatural light
 Light as the silver fawn, a radiant Girl;
 And by desire; we see by the glad light
 Light as a sunbeam glides along the hills
 Dropped the light oar his eager hand had seized.

Light—continued.

—Ah! I that such beauty, varying in the light
 Attained his western bound; but rays of light—
 With a light soul to cover him;
 His light high up among the gloomy rocks,
 Light to the sun and music to the wind;
 —The light was famous in the neighbourhood
 The glorious sun, and while the light of day
 Mistakes for sorrow darting beams of light
 Shows like a mountain built of silver light.
 Let not thy justice veiled, O Light Divine,
 Bless it then with constant light,
 When envious clouds shut out her silver light.

Lighted. I lighted—opened with soft touch the chapel's iron door,
 The Druid stones their lighted fane unfold,
 Like lighted tempests troubled transports roll;
 Lighted by gleams of moonlight from the sea
 (Whose in-door pastime, lighted up, survived)

Lightened. But they will soon be lightened. Ay, look up—
 Is lightened—that serene and blessed mood,
 And lightened o'er the pallid countenance.

Lighens. Unscorned the peasant's whistling breath, that lighens

Lighter. By this his heart is lighter far;
 Each lighter function slumbering in the brain,

And shall the Verse not tell of lighter gifts
 These lighter graces; and the rural ways
 And now, when free to move with lighter pace.
 That futters on the bough, lighter than he;
 Of all the lighter ornaments attached.

Lightest. He had the lightest foot in Ennerdale;
 Their smoothest paths, to wear their lightest chains?

And, with cloud-streaks lightest and loftiest, share
 Their peace, perhaps, our lightest footfall marred;

Light-footed. Now, risen ere the light-footed
 Chamois retires

Light-hearted. Then, light-hearted Boys, to the top of the crag;

And this light-hearted Maiden constant is as he.

Lighthouse. Near Portland lighthouse in a lonesome creek,
 Firm and unflinching, as the Lighthouse reared
 Within the sheltering Lighthouse.—Shout, ye
 Waves!
 Of lighthouse, beaten by Atlantic waves;

Lightless. All blind she wilders o'er the lightless beach

Lightly. Dashed o'er the rough rock, lightly leaps along;
 That lightly draws its breath,
 Nor can he guess how lightly leaps
 With nodding plumes, and lightly drest
 As lightly, though of altered hue,
 "Lightly for both the bosom's lord did sit
 A holier name! then lightly do not bear
 Who would not lightly violate the grace
 Light words, that were more lightly heard
 Ever more than when I tripped lightly as they;
 Dash'd down the rough rock, lightly leaps along;
 Unmoved, I could not always lightly pass
 The day pass lightly on, when foresight sleeps,
 A passing word erewhile did lightly touch
 Lightly equipped, and but a few brief looks
 Were its admonishments, nor lightly heard
 Misery not lightly passed, but sometimes scanned
 I loved what'er I saw: nor lightly loved,
 Matter not lightly to be heard by those
 One while he would speak lightly of his babes,
 To flow, when purposes are lightly changed?
 Have fallen more lightly, if it had not fallen
 I treat the matter lightly, but, alas!
 Perchance too lightly occupied, or lulled
 To some, too lightly minded, might appear
 Softly and lightly from a passing cloud,
 To heaven as lightly from the cottage-heapth

Lightness. To awe the lightness of humanity.

Lightning. When lightning among clouds and mountain-snows
 Was rent with lightning—one hath disappeared;
 Faithful, though swift as lightning, the meek dove;
 A corner-stone by lightning cut,
 And through his brain like lightning pass.
 Shot lightning through this lonely Isle!
 Like his own lightning, over mountains high,
 As on Parnassus rules, when lightning flies,
 Works busy as the lightning; but instinct
 Draws lightning down upon the head
 The lightning, the fierce wind, and trampling
 waves.
 And as round mountain-tops the lightning plays,
 Soon shall the Lightning hold before thy head
 Engender lightning, whence are falling showers.
 But will the Lightning glance aside to spare
 Of lightning started in a gloomy cave

Lightning's. Once did the lightning's faint disastrous gleam

Lightning's—continued.

In motion rapid as the lightning's gleam;
Lightnings. Ye lightnings, hear his voice!—they cannot hear,
 And all degrees of beauty. O ye Lightnings!
 Of the fierce-wind, while mid-day lightnings prowl
 Like Lightnings eager for th' almighty word.

Lights. See Taper-lights.
 Spotting the northern cliffs with lights between;
 Slant watery lights, from parting clouds, apace
 —The lights are vanished from the watery plains:
 And track the yellow lights from steep to steep,
 Ye flattering eastero lights, once more the hills
 illumine!
 Of purple lights and ever-vernal plains;
 My former pleasures in the shooting lights
 When lights of reason fail.
 But of the lights that cherish household cares
 Yet came prepared as glorious lights to shine,
 With evening lights, advance in long array
 A crown for Hope!—I dread the boasted lights
 With some internal lights to memory dear,
 With gleaming lights more gracefully adorn
 The medley less when boreal Lights
 The sentence rule by mercy's heaven-born lights.
 Slow lights upon the lake's still bosom fall,
 Small cottage lights across the water stream,
 Green dewy lights adorn the fresher'd mead.
 Fair smiling lights the purpled hills illumine!
 Of purple lights and even vernal plains.
 —Red streams the cottage lights; the landscape
 fades,
 Space like a heaven filled up with northern lights,
 Of colours, lights, and forms; the deafening din;
 And roaring waters, and in lights and shades
 By artificial lights; how they debase
 "You have known lights and guides better than these.
 Than those resplendent lights, his rich bequest;
 Was waiting; but interior lights appeared

Lightsome. "Blithe souls and lightsome hearts have we
 The lightsome Olive's twinkling canopy—
 For lightsome Fanoy had thus early throw,

The long, warm, lightsome summer-day,
 In lightsome mood—such privilege has youth
 With clustering ivy, and the lightsome twigs
 To wisdom; or, as lightsome as a bird
 Shadowy, yet gay and lightsome as it stood

 Like Una shining on her gloomy way,
 Like a black wall, the mountain-steeps appear.
 Air listens, like the sleeping town, still,
 Or sink, with heart alive like Memnon's lyre;
 Restlessly flashing, seems to mount like fire:
 Thy towns that cleave, like swallows' nests, on high;
 Starts, like a horse, beside the glaring road—
 The west, that burns like one dilated sun,
 And, like the Patriarchs in their simple age,
 That like to leaching masts of stranded ships appear.
 Like sun-lit tempests, troubled transports roll:
 Tinged like an angel's smile all rosy red—
 Or like the beauty in a flower installed,
 Like fate; was hurried off, a helpless prey,
 Recovering heart, like answer did she make;
 We two had sung, like gladsome birds in May;
 And I in truth did love him like a brother,
 Like one revived, upon his neck I wept;
 Over her brow like dawn of gladness threw;
 The breathing pestilence that rose like smoke,
 That fear is like a cloak which old men huddle
 And I had heard the like before: in sooth
 How would you like to travel on whole hours
 Well—he has often spurned me like a toad,
 Stand like an isthmus 'twixt two stormy seas
 Which looks like a transition in my soul,
 You said you did not like his looks—that he
 You'd better like we should descend together,
 I look at him and tremble like a child.
 And send ye dancing to the clouds, like leaves,
 Like mountain oaks rocked by the stormy wind.
 Like red-hot iron burnt into my heart.

Like—continued.

Were undisputed! Like a mendicant,
 For a like trial, but more merciful.
 We wonder at ourselves like men betrayed;
 And that—what is it? never was sound so like
 Its stony surface glittered like a shield;
 Subsided in a moment, like a wind
 And seems the like for you; if 'tis your wish,
 That thou shouldst ever meet a like occasion
 Gleaned like a vision of delight.
 Her joy is like an instinct, joy
 That rises up like smoke.
 For rain and mountain-storms! the like thou
 need'st not fear,
 Then I'll yoke thee to my cart like a pony in the
 plough;
 When they are angry, roar like lions for their prey.
 Duty, like a strict preceptor,
 Like a Spirit of air she moved

Nor will fail the like to render

Like roe-bucks they went bounding o'er the hills;
 They played like two young ravens on the crags:
 That rises like a column from the vale,
 Gone like a morning dream, or like a pile
 The frith that glittered like a warrior's shield,
 Thou, like the morning, in thy saffron coat,
 Glittered at evening like a starry sky;
 Or like a sinful creature, pale and wan,
 And, like a naked Indian, slept himself away.
 And his own mind did like a tempest strong.
 Like branches when strong winds the trees annoy.
 Like rivulets in May?
 Pine not like them with arms across,
 Oh mercy! like a helpless child.
 To see it melt like snow away—
 Like blood-drops from my heart they dropped.
 And often, like one overburthened with sin,
 That besprinkled the field; 'twas like youth in my blood!

Was ever darkness like to this?
 I've wet my path with tears like dew,
 Ere, pouncing like a ravenous bird of prey,
 Like a scared Bird encouraged to renew
 And like a Roman matron's was her mien and gait.
 And countenance like a summer's day,
 "'Tis gone—like dreams that we forget;
 Chafed like a wild beast in the toils; but soon
 Her fires, that like mysterious pulses beat
 And, like a shadow, glided out of view.
 (The like was never heard of yet)
 And like the very soul of evil,
 Made answer, like a traveller bold,
 Make subterraneous music, like the noise
 Which, like a book, preserved the memory
 These thoughts, and many others of like sort,
 Like happy people round a Christmas fire.
 Else these words would come like mockery,
 Or whispering like two reeds that in the cold moon-
 beam

And makes a meeting seem most like a dear farewell.

Like a tutelary spirit
 Reverenced, like a sister loved,
 But like it, enjoy it, and thankfully eat.
 Not like a beggar is he come,
 If seen, and with like pleasure stirred
 Her forehead, like a breeze of Spring;
 Went circling, like a multitude of sounds.
 Which, while I listened, seemed like the wild growth
 Or like some natural produce of the air,
 I, like a Runic Priest, in characters
 The Rock, like something starting from a sleep,
 And an eye practised like a blind man's touch.
 With like command of beauty—grant your aid
 The Swallow, twittered subject to like spell;
 Prevailed a like indulgent law
 Devoured like pleasure ere it spreads
 Of manners, like its viewless fence,
 'Tis already like a hill
 We meet thee, like a pleasant thought,
 Yet like a star, with glittering crest,
 A Life, a Presence like the Air,
 Like a sage astronomer.
 Like a careless Prodigal;
 Like a beggar in the cold,
 They lie like fawns reposing.
 Like clouds in stormy weather;
 But true love is like the thread
 Like you TUFT OF FERN;
 No like remembrances can give,
 Like beads of glossy jet her eyes;
 In colour like a raven's wing;
 That seem like songs of love,
 Like a dead Boy he is serene.
 Gamboled like a dancing skiff,
 Till, like thyself, I disappear
 In the blue depth, like Lucifer
 Like relics in an urn.
 Like an Indian conjurer;

Like—continued.

I would fare like that or this,
 Changed countenance, like an object sullied o'er
 Like the stifling of disease;
 A word from me was like a charm;
 Moved like a vessel in the wind!
 Burned like a fire among his men;
 Then, like a hero crowned with laurel,
 I like" said Benjamin, "her shape and stature:
 Like travellers shouting for a boat.
 Cured the foreboder like a charm;
 Like fleecy clouds self-multiplied)
 Rising like an exhalation,
 Like pleasant sunbeams shifting still
 Returning, like a ghost unaid,
 Lay round me, scattered like a flock of sheep—
 Like Twilight's, too, her dusky hair;
 And a single small cottage, a nest like a dove's,
 The music stirs in him like wind through a tree.
 Mark that Cripple who leans on his crutch; like a tower
 Now, coaches and chariots! roar on like a stream;
 There are forty feeding like one!
 Like an army defeated
 Outshining like a visible God
 Like sounds of winds and floods;
 Like the whole sky when to the east
 Like a sea-beast crawled forth, that on a shelf
 But now his voice to me was like a stream
 Like one whom I had met with in a dream;
 Or like a man from some far region sent,
 It stands erect, and like a stone
 "Like rock or stone, it is o'ergrown,
 Cuts like a scythe, while through the clouds
 Is like an infant's grave in size,
 As like as like can be:
 The hillock like an infant's grave,
 But, though Sir Walter like a falcon flies,
 —This chase it looks not like an earthly chase;
 In secret, like a smothered flame?
 Like a re-appearing Star,
 Like a glory from afar,
 I came among these hills; when like a roe
 Haunted me like a passion; the tall rock,
 Like her ordinary cry
 Like—but oh, how different!
 While, like the sun emerging from a cloud,
 Of whitest garniture, like fir-tree boughs
 Like Auster whirling to and fro,
 Carols like a shepherd-boy;
 Gleaming like a silver shield!
 Stood like a lofty mount, uplifting slowly
 (Like the bright confines of another world)
 Come, like the Graces, hand in hand!
 That Figure, like a ship with snow-white sail!
 And, like the lowly reed, her love
 Reveal thyself, like pensive Morn
 Shall mothers breathe a like sweet air
 Like stars, at various heights;
 Like Thee, in field and grove
 Like morning mist; and, where it lay,
 Poised like a weary cloud, in middle air
 Like clouds before the wind,
 If like ambition be their guide.
 And humours change, are spurned like weeds;
 Like bands of ministering Spirits, or when they lie,
 Mounts with a tune, that travels like a blast.
 Shaped like the crescent-moon.
 Rocking and roaring like a sea;
 Such company I like it not!
 Like waters in commotion!
 Sits blooming like a flower.
 I spake with faltering voice, like one
 Sure never man like him did roam!
 Though often buried like a bird
 And, while he lay like one that mourned,
 I'll fing your carcass like a log
 Seems like a note of joy to strike,—
 Was something Peter did not like.
 More like themselves the rocks appear
 Like some one reading in a book.
 Now—like a tempest-shattered bark,
 Uprises like a ghost!
 The like came never to his ears,
 Like a poor bird—her plundered nest
 Temples like those among the Hindoos,
 Where, shining like the smoothest sea
 And through his brain like lightning pass.
 On hearts like that of Peter Bell[']
 And with like force, if need there be,
 Does like an empty bucket mount.
 The like on heath, in lonely wood;
 Like planet-stricken men of yore,
 She drooped and pined like one forlorn;
 Her joy was like a deep fright;
 Sobs loud, he sobs even like a child,
 Though a breath made it) like a bubble blown
 To sit in meekness, like the brooding Dove,
 Like to a breeze from heaven. Shall I alone,

Like—continued.

Like stars in heaven, and joyously it showed ;
Come like a giant from a haven broad ;
And are up-gathered now like sleeping flowers ;
Like a bold Girl, who plays her agile pranks
Such place to me is sometimes like a dream
Thy genius forward like a winged steed
Shines like another sun—on mortal sight
Like an unbidden guest. Though day by day
And grandeur crouches like a guilty thing,
Like these frail snowdrops that together cling,
At like unlovely process in the May

And, like mine eyes that stream with sorrow,
blind !

Like a Sierra of cerulean Spain,
Like Grecian Artists, give thee human cheeks,
This City now doth, like a garment, wear
Their several features, mingled like the sound
Like a Form sculptured on a monument
Like the first summons, Cuckoo ! of thy bill,
Forgets her nature, opening like a flower
Set, like his fortunes ; but not set for aye
Life with yon Lambs, like day, is just begun,
Like thine, shall gladden, as in seasons past,
Or, like the nightingale, her joyous vein
Like Children, She is privileged to hold
And, like the Spire that from your classic Hill
(Like influence never may my soul reject),
In my mind's eye a Temple, like a cloud
Not like an outcast with himself at strife ;
Rose like a star that touching earth,
Like him can speed
Like something fashioned in a dream ;
Here scattered, like a random seed,
More like a grave reality ;
Kingdoms shall shift about, like clouds,
Shepherds and herdsmen.—Like a whirlwind came
The Highlanders, the slaughter spread like flame ;
Like conquest would the Men of England see ;
And her Foes find a like inglorious grave.
The kitten frolic, like a gamesome sprite,
That, under hills which rise like towers,
Had heard, how in a shell like this
With sound like lamentation.
High lodged the Warrior, like a bird of prey ;
And guiding, like the Patmos Saint,
A thousand like it, white as snow—
Not prostrate, not like those that rest
Thus, like the men of earliest days,
Fixed, like the Templar of the steep,
Post forward all, like creatures of one kind,
Beat like the heart of Man : songs, garlands, mirth,
Was like a lake, or river bright and fair,
Or groom !—We must run glittering like a brook
Thy soul was like a Star, and dwelt apart ;
Thou hadst a voice whose sound was like the sea :
Risen, like one man, to combat in the sight
Like gallant Falkland, by the Monarch's side,
And, like Montrose, make Loyalty your pride—
And, like the Pyms and Miltons of that day,
The breath of Heaven has drifted them like snow,
Astrucius !—all the people drifed like dew
These new-born Kings he withered like a flame.
Like acceptance from the World will find.
The prophecy,—like that of this wild blast,
He comes like Phoebus through the gates of morn
And o'er the eternal snows, like Echo, bound ;
Like Echo, when the hunter train at dawn
A Godhead, like the universal Pan ;
Murdered, like one ashore by shipwreck cast,
Beneath his haughty feet, like clouds, are laid.
Like his own lightning, o'er mountains high,
And, in like sign of cloudless triumph bright,
I better like a blunt indifference,
Charged, and dispersed like foam : but as a flight
And hang like dreams around his guilty bed.
Like the strong wind, or sleeping like the wind
Rising like water from the soil, to find
Hath painted Winter like a traveller old,

With breath suspended, like a listening scout.
Like a Champion, armed I come ;
Ability like splendour to endure ;
Like some Nymph-haunted grout beneath the nearing sea.
Like dreams themselves ; and sweetest sound—
And to the like aspiring,
Like mountain-tops whose mists have rolled away—
Of mortals, hurrying like a sudden shower
On that offensive soil, like waves upon a thousand shores.
That, shaped like old monastic turrets, rise
Hither, like yon ancient Tower . . .
Not, like his great Compensers, indignantly
But face like that sweet Boy their mortal doom,
He quakes not like the timid forest game,
Some bird (like our own honoured redbreast) may strew
Like foresters in leaf-green vest . . .
Like moonshine—but the hue was green ;

Like—continued.

Darkening like water in the breeze,
Like vision, pensive though not cold,
Then, glittering like a star, she joins the festal band.
My thoughts become bright like yon edging of Pines

Forth slips, like an enfranchised slave,
Like portraiture, from loftier source, endears
Life slips from underneath us, like that arch
Like vapour, like a towering cloud, dissolved.
From sorrow, like the sky above our heads.
Life's cup when almost filled with years, like mine.
And others like in frame, created Powers
Look like a cloud—a slender stem the tie
Not in like sort the Runic Scald was moved ;

Than for like scenes in moral vision shown,
Implanted like a Fortress, as in truth
Ah ! not like me who walk in the world's ways,
Shun, like a shattered bark, the storm, and flee
Like spiteful Fiends that vanish, crossed
Like something out of Ocean sprung
So like, yet so unlike, a living Creature !
Or like a steed, without a rein,
(Like clouds of sunset) into lucid amber.
Not with a grief that, like a vapour, rises
From Heaven or earth ;—Sir Kaye had like denial.
Whereon diffused like snow the Damsel lay,
Like sinless snakes in Eden's happy land ;—
The thyme her purple, like the blush of Even ;
And, for like use, lo ! what might seem a zone
Of tillage-ground, that seemeth like a spot
That seemed from heaven descending, like the flood
And countenanced like a soft cerulean sky,
Dance, like a Bacchanal, from rock to rock,
Till nightly lamentations, like the sweep
Hath plucked such foes, like weeds, from out the
land ;
At seemly distance—to advance like Thee ;
Like guests that meet, and some from far,
The target mouldering like ungathered fruit ;
Like a lone criminal whose life is spared.
Like wreaths of vapour without stain or blot.
Soon, like a lingering star forlorn
Like vapours, years have rolled and spread ;
Memory, like sleep, hath powers which dreams obey,
Like this unheard-of, and their channels wear
Like this contented, though unknown to Fame :
Never for like distinction may the good
Like this old helmet, or the eyeless skull
Though unapparent—like those Shapes distinct
Like the brave Lion slain in her defence.
Like cattle through the budded brooms ;
A Chapel, like a wild-bird's nest,
Or like a ship some gentle day
Falls upon her like a breath
Like the crystal stream o'er flowing
And glides o'er the earth like an angel of light.
That whistled like the wind, and rang
A phantasm like a dream of night !
Like hungry fowl to the feeder's hand
While, like a tutelary Power,
Of cruel men do like the wind
And Castle like a stately crown
Like a patch of April snow—
Like odours, sweet as if the same)
Like stars when clouds are rolled away ;
They stood like trees when earth and heaven
Yea, like a heavenly messenger . . .
He looked about like one betrayed ;
Then, like a spectre sweeping by,
And darting like a wounded bird
Behold her, like a virgin Queen,
The like authority, with grace . . .
Driven forward like a withered leaf,
Yea, like a ship at random blown
Herself most like a stately flower . . .
When, with a noise like distant thunder,
Who with a power like human reason
They, like a nested pair, reposed !
Communication, like the ray
Swept like a breeze the conscious strings,
Here wanders like a gliding ghost,
Past things, revealed like future, they can tell
O wretched Land ! whose tears have flowed like
fountains ;
From their known course, or vanish like a dream ;
His prominent feature like an eagle's beak ;
" Man's life is like a Sparrow, mighty King !
Like ivy, round some ancient elm, they twine
The people work like congregated bees ;
Whence they, like richly-laden merchants, come
That, like the Red-cross Knight, they urge their way,
Equal to his deserts, who, like the year,
Pours forth his bounty, like the day doth cheer,
And awes like night with mercy-tempered frown.
Of future vanishing like empty dreams . . .
Like Moses hold our hands erect, till ye
With like perverseness did the Church abjure
And, to like shelter, from the world have fled

 Yet still we plant, like men of elder days . . . 506 While from 12*

Like—continued.

His voice was like the voice of three . . . 507 While from 55*
 Like a loose casement in the wind . . . 508 F. Stone 9
 Charged with those lays, and others of like mood,
 Like those self-solacing, those under, notes . . . 510 F. Stone 119
 Or like the invincible Rock itself that braves,
 Like harebells bathed in dew, . . . 510 Among a 24
 Was like the crowding of the year . . . 512 Who rashly 36
 Forgotten like a dream ! . . . 514 Who ponders 8
 To end life here like this poor deer,
 Or hidden under ground, like sleeping worms . . . 516 As leaves 13
 Like marble, white, like ether, pure ; . . . 521 Epist. Beaumont 18
 Yet, like to eddying balls of foam . . . 521 Epist. Beaumont 20
 His salt tears trickled down like showers of rain ;
 " Young Hew of Lincoln ! in like sort laid low
 To gladden or to grieve, he hath like skill ;
 At other time, methinks, in like degree . . . 521 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Although for pain thou may'st be like to die,
 Like frost he thought his heart was icy cold ;
 Feel I a wind, that soundeth so like pain ;
 Like the dry remnant of a garden-flower . . . 522 Epist. Beaumont 44
 Or from like wanderer, haply have received
 Who sits at his own door,—and, like the pear
 He strayed through the fields like an indolent
 wight . . . 522 Epist. Beaumont 44
 Turned his back on the country—and off like a bird.
 For he's not like an Old Man that leisurely goes . . . 522 Epist. Beaumont 44
 In the throng of the town like a stranger is he,
 Like one whose own country's far over the sea ;
 Like a maiden of twenty he trembles and sighs,
 Like a magnet, the heart of old Adam can draw ;
 That shrieks, like many more, from cold and rain ;
 In close self-shelter, like a Thing at rest . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 His hand,—it dropped like lead . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Fond healing,—like a mother's kiss . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 So like, so very like, was day to day ! . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Spangling a cushion, green like moss ; . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 In peace is roaring like the Sea ;
 Are conscious ;—may the like return no more !
 Whose life was, like the violet, sweet, . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Oh, fled for ever ! vanished like a blast . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Too long abashed thy Name is like a rose . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Still they were faithful ; like two vessels launched
 Like clouds that rake the mountain-summits,
 Like London with its own black wreath . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 His joys, his griefs, have vanished like a cloud . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Broods like the Day, a Master o'er a Slave, . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Did tremble like a guilty thing surprised : . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Their moveless boughs and leaves like threads of gold ; . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Whose state, like pine-trees, waving to and fro,
 Ye ne'er, like hapless human wanderers, throw
 And skyward lift, like one that prays his hand,
 Inconstant glancing, mounts like springing fire,
 Thy towns, like swallows' nests that cleave on high ;
 Starts like a horse beside the flashing road ;
 Tower like a wall the naked rocks, or reach
 The mountains, glowing hot, like coals of fire . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Like leaning masts of stranded ships appear
 Like lighted tempests troubled transports roll ;
 And tears before him travel like a cloud . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 In waves, like two enormous serpents, wind
 Like Lightnings eager for th' almighty word,
 Smiled like the morn, and vanish'd into air . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Her Voice was like a hidden Bird that sang,
 The thought of her was like a flash of light,
 'Tis like the solemn shelter of the night,
 Clustered like stars some few, but single most,
 Like separated stars with clouds between . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Or like two birds, companions in mid air,
 Like young Iulus ; but the gentlest dews
 Match'd with an equal number of like age,
 Spread like a spacious Mere, we there could measure
 Features which else had vanished like a dream . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Like that Wise ancestor of thine
 So, like a home-bound labourer, I pursued
 Hath, like the Lover, his unruly times ;
 But like the innocent bird, hath goadings on
 Did, like a pestilence, maintain its hold
 But, like a thirsty wind, to roam about
 Of Wallace to be found, like a wild flower,
 Of Wallace, like a family of Ghosts,
 Hang like an interdict upon her hopes . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Like a false steward who hath much received
 Like harmony in music ; there is a dark
 That came with soft alarm, like hurtless light
 Of sparkling light . But now, like one who rows,
 Went heaving through the water like a swan ;
 And measured motion like a living thing . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Like living men, moved slowly through the mind
 Proud and exulting like an untired horse . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Tinkled like iron ; while far distant hills
 Work like a sea ? Not uselessly employed,
 Full at her rein like an impetuous courser ;
 With scoffs and taunts, like Vulcan out of heaven ;
 Protracted yelling, like the noise of wolves . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 New pleasure like a bee among the flowers . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40
 Which, like a tempest, works along the blood
 Cleans, like the flashing of a shield ;—the earth
 (Like those ill-sorted unions, work supposed
 With lilies of the valley like a field ; . . . 523 Epist. Beaumont 40

Primeval like its neighbouring cottages, . . . 644 Prelude 2. 141
 Into my heart, and held me like a dream ! . . . 644 Prelude 2. 174
 And, from like feelings, humble though intense, . . . 645 Prelude 2. 189
 Split like a province into round and square ? . . . 645 Prelude 2. 205
 Doth like an agent of the one great Mind . . . 646 Prelude 2. 257
 Appeared like something in myself, a dream, . . . 647 Prelude 2. 351
 A like dominion, and the midnight storm . . . 647 Prelude 2. 373
 Saw blessings spread around me like a sea, . . . 648 Prelude 2. 395
 Powdered like rimy trees, when frost is keen, . . . 649 Prelude 3. 39
 (Even like their persons in their portraits clothed
 Was a spoiled child, and, rambling like the wind,
 And mountains, ranging like a fowl of the air,
 A homage frankly offered up, like that
 Like caterpillars eating out their way
 When Learning, like a stranger come from far,
 Like a lone shepherd on a promontory
 In character, tricked out like aged trees
 Like a vast river, stretching in the sun.
 Sit like a throned Lady, sending out
 The thoughts of gratitude shall fall like dew
 Was like a volume to me; some were hailed
 Like recognitions, but with some constraint
 Like a sick Lover, then this dog was used
 Full-formed, like Venus rising from the sea;
 I sauntered, like a river murmuring
 Like a returning Spring. When first I made
 Like an intruder knocking at the door
 Changed like a garden in the heat of spring,
 Short velvet cloak, (her bonnet of the like),
 With like success, nor often have appeared
 When Contemplation, like the night-calm felt
 And kindlings like the morning—presage sure
 One day, when from my lips a like complaint
 Upon like errand. Oftentimes at least
 Strung like a poor man's heifer at its feed,
 Or rather like a stalled ox debarred
 To drive him back, and pound him, like a stray,
 Like engines; when will their presumption learn,
 Behold a race of young ones like to those
 Mad at their sports like withered leaves in winds;
 And brooks were like a dream of novelty
 One of those open fields, which, shaped like ears,
 A dignity, a smoothness, like the works
 These spread like day, and something in the shape
 Space like a heaven filled up with northern lights,
 As in a mansion like their proper home,
 Forget his feeling: so (if like effect
 Spread like a fragrance everywhere, when spring
 Like bees they swarmed, gaudy and gay as bees;
 By naked huts, wood-built, and sown like tents
 Like an unfathered vapour that enwraps
 That hides her, like the mighty flood of Nile
 Were all like workings of one mind, the features
 Locarno I spreading out in width like Heaven,
 May flow in lasting current. Like a breeze
 Like an uneasy snake. From hour to hour
 Of insects, which with noise like that of noon
 Spread round my steps like sunshine o'er green fields. . . . 686 Prelude 6. 778
 Of short-lived transport, like a torrent bursting,
 Wakes in me agitations like its own,
 Here, fronts of houses, like a title-page,
 Stationed above the door, like guardian saints;
 Like that of angels or commissioned spirits,
 Like one of those who walked with hair unsinged
 Of thick entangled forest, like the moon . . . 693
 The Hours, like young Aurora, to his car . . . 694
 Astonished; like a hero in romance, . . . 694
 Stand like an oak whose stag-horn branches start
 When Wisdom, like the Goddess from Jove's brain,
 To majesty. Like virtue have the forms . . . 695
 Faint, but more tranquil, like the changing sun . . . 699
 His staff pretending like a hunter's spear,
 His sheep like Greenland bears; or, as he stepped
 Above all height! like an aerial cross . . . 703
 I did not pine like one in cities bred, . . . 705
 And all the several frames of things, like stars,
 Like spectres,—ferment silent and sublime! . . . 706
 Like independent natures. Hence the place . . . 707
 Was thronged with imprecations like the Wilds
 Toss like a ship at anchor, rocked by storms;
 Like others, I had skimmed, and sometimes read
 Continually, like an uneasy place
 The land all swarmed with passion, like a plain
 Like earthquakes, shocks repeated day by day,
 Forth like a Polar summer: every word . . . 713
 Though like ambition, such was he, O Friend!
 With like persuasion honoured, we maintained:
 Pressed on me almost like a fear to come.
 I only, like an uninvited guest . . . 722
 Like the Precursor when the Deity
 From hell came sanctified like airs from heaven.
 (If like desires of innocent little ones . . . 723
 In consistory, like a diadem . . . 725
 (Itself like a sea rock) the low remains
 Like credit to ourselves where less was due,
 Acted, or seemed at least to act, like men
 Like culprits to the bar; calling the mind
 Of sudden admonition—like a brook
 Sets like an Opera phantom. Thus, O Friend!

Like—continued.

Like a cowed monk who hath forsworn the world,
 Even like this maid, before I was called forth
 Was like an invitation into space
 Not like a temple rich with pomp and gold,
 A power like one of Nature's. To a hope
 In the great City, broke like light from far.
 Fell like a flash, and lo! as I looked up,
 A like existence; and, where'er it dawned
 Like angels stopped upon the wing by sound
 And was; and hence this Song, which like a lark
 Upon his mind like substances, whose presence
 Like their own steadfast clouds) did now impel
 From years of youth; which, like a Being made
 Passed from my mind like a forgotten sound.
 Like one in trouble, for returning light,
 Then, like a blast that dies away self-stilled,
 Are like an idle matter. Still she sighed,
 By the strong sunbeams smitten. Like a mast
 Life, like that Roman Janus, double-faced;
 Spread like a halo round a misty moon,
 Unhallowed actions—planted like a crown
 That showed like happiness. But, in despite
 Among the mountains; never one like this;
 Not rustic—dull and faded like himself!
 Like a ripe date which in the desert falls
 Then, speaking in like careless sort, he said
 And, in like sort, chair, window-seat, and shelf,
 Like smoke, along the level of the blast,
 Regretted like the nightingale's last note,
 So moved he like a shadow that performed
 Of open court, an object like a throne
 Like one who would be merry. Seeing this,
 Like human life from darkness."—A quick turn
 A fragment, like an altar, flat and smooth:
 And softly creeping, like a breath of air,
 And, like an ardent hunter, I forgot,
 Had sprung, like those bright creatures, from the soil . . . 790
 Beneath the sun, like Ganges, to make part
 Like Niger, in impenetrable sands
 Without vicissitude; which, if the like
 So like the past, and both so firm a pledge
 And, like a weary voyager escaped . . . 794
 For, like a plague, will memory break out;
 So, like a fugitive, whose feet have cleared
 That respite o'er, like traverses and tolls
 Want due consistence; like a pillar of smoke,
 In this deep Hollow, like a sullen star . . . 803
 Yet doth remembrance, like a sovereign prince,
 Or through the groves bounding like morning mist
 Spread like a sea, in boundless solitude,
 Like those celestial messengers beheld . . . 812
 Like one whose untired ear a murmuring stream
 Burns, like an unconsuming fire of light,
 Capacious and serene. Like power abides . . . 817
 Even like an altar lit by fire from heaven,
 That, like the fabled Lethe, wished to flow
 Dispersed, like music that the wind takes up . . . 820
 Like the fixed centre of a troubled world . . . 822
 Her anchorites, like piety of old;
 Like leafless underboughs, in some thick wood,
 Who throve, like planis, uninjured by the storm
 Is fashioned like an ill-constructed tale; . . . 829
 The other—like a stately scyamore,
 And, like the water-lily, lives and thrives,
 Not like a dancing meteor, but in line . . . 833
 Like pillars fixed more firmly, as might seem,
 Not deviating,—a priest, the like of whom, . . . 839
 Not, as before, like one oppressed with awe, . . . 839
 We met, and passed, like shadows. I have heard,
 Who trembled, trunk and limbs, like some huge oak
 That, like this Labourer, such may dig their way,
 Like blighted buds; or clouds that mimicked land
 From peace like exiles on some barren rock, . . . 846
 Was her broad forehead; like the brow of one
 Towered like the imperial histle, not unfurnished
 Permit, like honours, dance and song, are paid
 Like a poor singing-bird from distant lands;
 For, like a shadow, he was passed away . . . 853
 Said I, "like surges heaving in the wind . . . 858
 That, with like burthen of effects most prized
 Like Indian mats, that with appropriate grace
 That still unites them, praises, like heaven's dew,
 In one blest moment. Like a shadow thrown
 With spiritual graces, like a glory, crowned."
 That virtue, like the fumes and vapour clouds
 And like the soft infections of the heart,
 Oft stretches toward me, like a long straight path
 In clustering curls, like ivy, which the bite
 Possessed like outskirts of some large domain,
 And, like the haughty Spoilers of the world,
 Yet, like the sweet-breathed violet of the shade,
 And valiant; but young Oswald, like a chief . . . 869
 Like Youths released from labour, and yet bound
 Like vernal ground to sabbath sunshine left,
 And, like a serpent, shows his glittering back
 Like cedars on the top of Lebanon
 Like a bright star, amid the lowly hand
 Like wild beasts without home! Their hour was come; . . . 873

 Their busy limbs in perfect rest,
 Your limbs they are alive ;
 Whose life and limbs the flood had spared ;
 His limbs are cast in beauty's mould,
 Thy limbs, are they not strong ? And beautiful thou art :
 " Thy limbs will shortly be twice as stout as they are now,
 Dead, and with mangled limbs. The third day after

 With languid limbs and patient head
 And wasted limbs, his legs so long and leao
 Himself he propped, limbs, body, and pale face,
 On silken tissue, might diffuse his limbs
 His lank sides heaved, his limbs they stirred ;
 Such life is in his limbs and ears ;
 Her spotless limbs ; and ventured to explore
 Have neither limbs, feet, feathers, joints, nor hairs :
 Of valley flowers. Nor, while the limbs repose,
 Magnific limbs of withered state ;
 Shape, limbs, and heavenly features, keeping pace
 Day-thoughts while limbs repose ;
 Feeling from limbs with travel spent,
 Spreads out his limbs, while, yet unshorn, the limbs,

 The limbs of the great world ; its eager strifes
 And sun-burnt travellers resting their tired limbs,
 At last we stretched our weary limbs for sleep,
 Extends his careless limbs along the front
 Active and nervous was his gait ; his limbs
 Upon that cottage-bench reposed his limbs,
 Instantly throwing down my limbs at ease
 And, to tired limbs and over-busy thoughts,
 To stretch his limbs, bemocking, as might seem,

Limitless. Along the line of limitless desires.
Limits. Out of our Valley's limits did he roam :
 Who dwelt within the limits of the vale,
 But who the limits of that power shall trace
 While narrow cares their limits overflow.
 Shall draw, the limits of the power define,
 Just limits; but yon Tower, whose smiles adorn
 The sacred limits of humanity.
 Of Cumbria's rocky limits, they can tell
 Beyond the limits that my feet had trod,
 —Beyond the limits of the shadow cast
 That finds no limits but her own pure will.
Limped. Limped on with sore vexation.
Limpid. Or cauterized in depth of limpid floods;
 Of limpid water, humbler far than aught
 Let us beside the limpid Stream
 Sully the limpid stream of thankfulness.
 The limpid mountain-rill avoids it not,
 Has mixed its current with the limpid flood,
 Was in the limpid age of this stained world
Limping. Limping o'er the dewy grass,
 In hooded mantle, limping o'er the plain,
Limps. Limps (for I might have told before
Lincoln. And he had been where Lincoln bell
 Divine ! thou Lincoln, on thy sovereign hill
 "Young Hew of Lincoln ! in like sort laid low
Linend. Expectant stands beneath the linden tree :
Line. —Did Sabine grace adorn my living line,
 Along the waste no line of mournful light
 Were that man, who could draw the line that parts
 And it seemed, as I retraced the ballad line by line,
 Lengthening invisibly its weary line
 Each on the other heaped along the line
 Close to the spot where with his rod and line
 And winding on with such an easy line
 Gathering up a trustier line
 They stretched in never-ending line
 I saw three pillars standing in a line,
 Sweep their length of snowy line ;
 And, in a line of eye-sight linked with these,
 Do we behold the line of Eriq's coast ?
 A little hoary line and faintly traced,
 Whose pen, the mysteries of the rod and line
 Is marked by no distinguishable line ;
 'Mid evening hues, along the horizon line,
 'Shame ! should a Child of royal line
 Its line of Warriors fled ; — they shrunk when tried
 The milk-white Lamb which in a line she led,
 The Soul to purer worlds : and who the line
 Flowed in thy line through undegenerate veins.
 The evanescence of the Saxon line.
 At a proud Legate's feet ! The spears that line
 By Angels guarded, deviate from the line
 O'er the dark steeps, or on the horizon line
 'With rod and line I sued the sport
 A silver line, that runs from brow to crown
 O Lady ! from a noble line
 Were a line for valour famed)
 Of Lowther to this ancient Line, bear witness
 Forbade the weeds to creep o'er its grey line.
 Impressed on the white road, — in the same line,
 To common recognitions while the line
 When Love was born of heavenly line,
 Then she, as Belus woot, and all the line
 O'er the dark steeps, or on the horizon line
 Or Reason's ? No — hopes spun in timid line
 While England's sceptred line
 With an unswerving line, I fixed my view
 The rapid line of motion, then at once
 With milk-white clusters hung ; the rod and line,
 The long lake lengthened out its hoary line,
 Beyond the boundary line of some hill-shadow,
 Along the line of low-roofed water, moves
 Of Orleans ; coasted round and round the line
 That on the line of each of those two roads
 Of childhood, when a disappearing line,
 Lengthening in solitude their dreary line,
 Now faint — the grass has crept o'er its grey line ;
 To draw the line of comfort that divides
 Its line had first been fashioned by the flock
 Winding away its never-ending line
 Will sweep the remnant of his line away ;
 Along the line of limitless desires.
 To this conclusion, deviates from the line.
 Who shall be named — in the resplendent line
 Not like a dancing meteor, but in line
 And with such soft material line, her nest
 The new succession, as a line of kings
 And the dark sorrows of the line of Thebes ?
 Through bare enclosures stretches, 'till its line
 Haunting with rod and line the craggy brooks ?
 Departing ; and soon is spent the line of those
 Or puzzling through a primer, line by line,
 Had marked the line, and strewn its surface o'er
 The quacking spindle drew a trustier line.
 The bounding lost, the line invisible
 Else had Morality beheld her line
Lineage. Though of a lineage once abhorred,

Lineal. "What ! lengthened privilege, a lineal tie,
 Nor covets lineal rights in lands and towers.
 Seated on her lineal throne ;
 Such as the boy you painted, lineal heirs
Lineament. With carcasses, in lineament and shape
 Of imitable lineament,
Lineaments. His lineaments by day, yet there presides
 Whose mortal lineaments seem all refined
 Ascend, with lineaments in air not lost :
 Her lineaments, thought he, surpass
 Remained in their substantial lineaments.
 In lineaments, and red with over-toil
 He sate, and even in their fixed lineaments,
 Even in their fixed and steady lineaments
 Love, or regret — whose lineaments would next
 The finer lineaments of form and face ;
 Reflected all in perfect lineaments —
Lined. See Moss-lined, Straight-lined.
 And delicately lined :
 Of sculptured oak stood here, with drapery lined ;
Lines. See Border-lines.
 Its darkening boughs and leaves in stronger lines ;
 Where'er the dreary roads their bare white lines extend.
 Or on the earth strange lines, in former days . . .
 Unquestionable lines of that wild Suppliant's face.
 These hedge-rows, hardly hedge-rows, little lines . . .
 Here by thy pencil shown in truth of lines
 Widened the fatal web, its lines extend,
 And, fastening on those lines an eye tear-glazed,
 Long lines of mighty Kings — look forth, my Soul !
 Read o'er these lines ; and then review
 That smoothes foregone distress, the lines
 Inspired the pencil, lines to trace,
 Then let the Book receive in these prompt lines
 Within that canvass Dwelling, colours, lines,
 The block on which these lines are traced, perhaps,
 Think not, O Passenger ! who read'st the lines
 Penned these sad lines, nor can forbear to pray
 Those simple lines flowed with an earnest wish,
 And, fronting the bright west in stronger lines,
 With bordering lines of intervening gloom,
 Would he peruse these lines ! For many years
 Was searching out the lines of difference . . .
 Through meagre lines and colours, and the press
 Lines from the churchyard elegy of Gray.
 Was figured o'er with circles, lines, or mounds,
 Upon his brain ; and on their pictured lines
 In lines and numbers, and, by charm severe,
 In modest panegyric. "These dim lines,
 In lines, that seem to keep themselves alive . . .
Linger. Nor let it linger long, the murderer's fate."
 The vapours linger round the Heights,
 Among men who do not love her, linger here.
 Amid the grove to linger ;
 He would not linger in the public ways,
 Still linger, and a farewell lustre sheds
 I see thee linger a glad votary,
 There linger, listening, gazing, with delight
 The story linger in my heart ; I fear
 To linger I would here with you partake
 Here would not linger, willingly detained ?
 As there to linger, there to eat his bread,
 To linger 'mid the last of those bright clouds
 The sacred truth to acknowledge, linger still ;
 To linger, bending over thee : for now,
Lingered. Then Summer lingered long ; and honey
 flowed
 The Soldier's Widow lingered in the cot ;
 It lingered on ; — guide after guide
 Rob Roy had never lingered here,
 But Norton lingered in the rear,
 Ye lingered among human kind,
 And lingered near the door a little space,
 Leaving us at the board ; awhile we lingered,
 So have we lingered. Now we start aghast
 While yet he lingered in the rudiments
 He lingered long ; and, when his strength returned,
 She lingered in unquiet widowhood ;
 Soon showed itself : he lingered three short weeks ;
 And heeded not : you lingered, you perceived
 Still linger'd, after a brief pause, resumed ;
Lingerer. The latest lingerer of the forest train,
 Called the dejected Lingerer Love lies Bleeding.
 Endears that Lingerer. And how best her sway
 The viewless Hoger hence, at evening, sees
 A later lingerer ; yet the revelry
Lingering. See Fondly-lingering.
 A lingering light he fondly throws
 Seemed to return, dried the last lingering tear,
 Some amid lingering shade, some touched by the sun's rays.
 Others saved from lingering pain.
 The Stranger, whom he saw still lingering there.
 To bind a lingering life in chains . . .
 By trees and lingering twilight made !
 Or cast, for lingering death, on unknown strands ;
 Of a closed volume lingering in thy hand . . .

Lingering—continued.

- The lingering world, when time hath ceased to be.
Or quit the stars with a lingering farewell—how . . .
The lingering remnant of their yellow hair, . . .
Or rain-drop lingering on the pointed thorn. . . .
- The lingering dew—there steals along, or stops
Pale twilight's lingering glooms,—and in the sun
—Then why these lingering steps?—A bright adieu,
Our minds when, lingering all too long,
Is fondly lingering on thy shattered front,
Which lingering Nto is proud to show
Clouds, lingering yet, extend in solid bars
Last lingering look of clay, that tames
Lingering no more 'mid flower-enamelled lands
Albeit sickness, lingering yet, . . .
Soon, like a lingering star forlorn
In the grey sky hath left his lingering Ghost,
To a lingering motion bound,
Lingering in a woody glade . . .
Each with the other in a lingering race
We, nothing loth a lingering course to measure,
Lingering—and wandering on as loth to die;
(Earth's lingering love to parting reconciled,
Of lingering care subdued,
For lingering durance or quick death with shame,
Protects the lingering dew-drop from the Sun.
The only one, who had been lingering there
Of Summer, lingering, shining, by herself,
In the wild turf: the lingering dews of morn
For lingering yet an image in my mind
Faintly reflected in a lingering stream.
Lingering behind my comrades, thus I breathed
The lingering gleam of their departed lives
By the last lingering help of the open sky
- Lingerings.—No more—these lingerings of distress
Nor be unthanked their final lingerings—
- Lingers. Lingers behind his disappearing wain.
Where daylight lingers on perpetual snow;
Lingers beside that Rill, in vision clear,
Lingers, but Fancy is well satisfied;
Care not for me, he lingers round my door,
- Link. Link her with the inferior creatures, . . .
Without another link to my felicity."
A lasting link in Nature's chain . . .
Or map of the whole world: thoughts, link by link,
Into his coverts, and each fearless link
Can link with dissolution. Smooth and green,
Into the dust. Erewhile a sterner link
To her fair works did Nature link
"People! your chains are severing link by link;
A shadowy link 'tween wakefulness and sleep, . . .
- On the fetters that link him to death. . . .
Sole link that binds them to each other; walks, . . .
A step, or link, for intercourse with thee. . . .
No chasm, no solitude; from link to link . . .
- Linked. See Long-Linked.
With blindness-linked, did on my vitals fall; . . .
For passions linked to forms so fair
And, in a line of eye-sight linked with these,
Minutely linked with diligence uninspired,
With malice ne'er to deadliest weapon linked,
Each linked to each for kindred services;
With will, and to their work by passion linked.
Are linked in endless chace;
Inseparably linked. Then be assured . . .
When link'd with thoughtless Mirth I cours'd the
plain,
Or linked them to some feeling; the great mass
And all the promptest of her spirits, linked
And shattered telescope, together linked
Linked in entire complacence with her choice;
The path remains that linked his cottage-door
Treading their path in sympathy and linked
- Linking. Had fed or sheltered, linking to such acts
May classic Fancy, linking . . .
A stranger, linking with the spectacle
- Links. In such a course fit links of sympathy,
Only by links of love: when thou art gone,
The thousand links of that ethereal chain;
Links in the chain of Thy tranquillity!
Come links for social order's awful chain.
And changeful colours by invisible links
Or easier links connecting place with place)
- Linnet. The shepherd's dog, the linnet and the thrush,
The linnet lodged, and for us two
Thou, Linnet! in thy green array,
Not mute, where now the linnet only sings:
In which the linnet or the thrush might sing,
Come, hear the woodland linnet,
Would sit, as any linnet, gay.
So that, I guess, the linnet and the thrush,
A linnet warbled from those lofty elms,
- Linnets. That inspires the linnets' song?
The linnets' warble, sinking towards a close,
The linnets' warble, sinking towards a close,
The linnets' warble, sinking towards a close,
- Lintwhites. The lintwhites sing in chorus;
Lion. The lion roars and gluts his tawny brood

Lion—continued.

- Bold as a lion will I be;
The wilderness shall hear the lion roar;
As springs the lion from his den,
To naturalise this tawny Lion brood;
Like the brave Lion slain in her defence.
Has roused the lion; no one plucks the rose,
The old Lion and usurped his place, in slight
While Winter like a well-tamed lion walks,
Lion-grace. The eye sublime, and surly lion-grace:
Lion's. Would crush the lion's paw with mortal anguish,
Inherited the lion's den;
The air, as in a lion's den,
Upon the couchant lion's mane!
Old as the tiger's paw, the lion's mane
That roar, the prowling lion's Hero I am,
The lion's sinews, or the eagle's wing;
Yon rampant cloud mimics a lion's shape;
The lamb is couching by the lion's side,
- Lions. When they are angry, roar like lions for their prey.
Where the young lions couch; for so, by leave
—Where snakes and lions breed,
- Lip. No brook to wet his lip or soothe his ear;
Heavy his low-hung lip did oft appear,
And stilled his tremulous lip. Thus they were calmed
The sentence, by her mother's lip pronounced,
For beauty, to your lip is raised,
O Thou, against whose lip, without its smile
Wid Redbreast! hadst thou at Jemima's lip
In every nook a lip that it may cheer.
With lip and heart to tell their gratitude
Made to the Twelve, survives: lip, forehead, cheek,
Her blushing cheek, love-vows upon her lip,
Over the bowl, whose silver lip hath won
To words the Church prescribes aiding the lip
Or drink, with no fastidious lip.
That lip—a rose-bud from the thorn,
Broke from the happy old Man's reverend lip;
With which thou dost refresh the thirsty lip;
With lip almost as pure,—Domestic bliss,
Ceasing his gait and cowering, his lip pale,
Or foot, or lip, in summer's warmth—perceived.
The words escaped his lip, with a tender sigh
- Lip-dewling. Lip-dewling song, and ringlet-tossing
dance;
Lipped. See Smooth-lipped.
Lips. A woman stnod with quivering lips and pale,
Ere to his lips it came, the Sailor them bespoke.
The carman wet her lips as well beloved;
He saw his Wife's lips move his name to bless
These ten years she has moved her lips all day
Her lips for ever moving. At her door
These joyful tidings from no lips but mine.
His lips were moving; and his eyes, upraised to sue for grace,
Limbs stout as thine, and lips as gay, . . .
- His lips with joy they hurr at you;
Burr, burr—now Johnny's lips they hurr, . . .
And Johnny's lips they hurr, burr, burr, . . .
Thy lips I feel them, baby! they
My little babe! thy lips are still, . . .
Reproaches from their lips are sent,
Will wet his lips within that cup of stone;
Redundant are thy locks, thy lips as fair
Upon those roseate lips a Stygian hue.
The ghostly colour from his lips had fled;
And moisten the parched lips of thirsty flowers—
To archangelic lips applied,
And Peter's lips with fury quiver; . . .
Did never from his lips depart;
And gladsome notes my lips can breathe,
With feet, hands, eyes, looks, lips, report your gain;
Alas! that from the lips of abject Want
The uplifted palms, the silent marble lips . . .
Fervent but humble as the lips can breathe
Appended to his bosom, and lips closed
And her lips, quickening with uncertain red,
Upon their conscious selves; their own lips speak
Or need, of counsel breathed through lips divine.
- Breathes out from floor or couch, through pallid lips
Enough of rose-bud lips, and eyes . . .
Upon his lips or anger at his heart.
Scarce heard, their chattering lips her shoulder chill,
Those lips, whose tides of fragrance come, and go,
Dead muttering lips, and hair of hungry white,
Make a strange back-ground. From his lips, exelong,
One day, when from my lips a like complaint
But every word that from the peasant's lips
Because the goatherd, blessed man! had lips
My lips are parched with thirst, but you, it seems,
My lips, that may forget thee in the crowd,
"Yes," said the Wanderer, taking from my lips
And from their fervent lips drew hymns of praise,
To which the lips give public utterance
You turned; and yet more pleased have from your lips

Lips—continued.

Upon the lips of men in hall or bower ;
When from the Wanderer's lips these words had fallen,
By savage Nature ? Shrivelled are their lips ;
They hear my lips present their sacrifice,
For baffled lips and disappointed arms
No benediction from the stranger's lips,
As gathered from the Matron's lips, and tell
Liquid. And all the babbling brooks are liquid gold ;
While Grasmere smoothed her liquid plain
The liquid veil that seeks not to hide them.
A liquid concert matchless by nice Art,
Their voices into liquid music swell,
Nor turns, nor winds, as doth the liquid flood ;
Bright liquid mansions, fashioned to endure
The still repose, the liquid lapse serene,
Their liquid world, for hold discovery,
Disturb the liquid music's euphoise.
Temptation centres in the liquid Calm ;
And smooths her liquid breast—to show
His fageolet to liquid notes of love
And ocean's liquid mass, in gladness lay
A liquid pool that glittered in the sun,
Or lapse of liquid element—by hand,
That which the heavens displayed, the liquid deep
Lisp. To lisp, he made me kneel beside my bed,
To lisp the name of Father—could he look
Lisping. Even in the time of lisping infancy ;
This sacred right, the lisping babe proclaims
Lisps. Who tripping lisps a merry song
To Infancy, that lisps her praise—to Age
List. See Death-list.
When list ! he hears a piteous moan—
Into the list of things that cannot be
List to those shriller notes !—that march
List, Cuckoo—Cuckoo !—off tho' tempests howl,
Comes from that tabernacle—List !
Her own calm fires ?—But list ! a voice is near ;
But list ! the avalanche—the hush profound
List—twas the Cuckoo,—O with what delight
But, from the arms of silence—list ! O list !
List, ye who pass by Lylph's Tower
But list !—though winter storms be nigh,
List, the winds of March are blowing ;
And through this street who list might ride and wend ;
There list at midnight till is heard no more,
Low sunk beneath the horizon !—List !—I heard,
From the thronged hive, and settle where they list
Listed. Her sons no more in listed fields advance Listen. What do they here ? Listen ! What ;
dogged like thieves !
But listen, for my peace— Why, I believe you.
I used to sing it.—Listen !—what foot is there ?
Listen yet awhile ;—with patience
Why did ye listen to my prayer ?
Yet listen, Child !—I would not preach ;
That you will gladly listen to discourse
Delighted much to listen to those sounds,
If you listen, all is still,
Listen ! you can scarcely hear !
And I can listen to these yet ;
And listen, till I do beget
To lie, and listen to the mountain flood
Listen, ponder, hold them dear ;
Listen to their songs !—or halt,
To lie and listen—fill o'er-drowsed sense
Did listen with a faith sincere
Listen ! the mighty Being is awake,
O listen ! for the Vale profound
That you can listen quietly
And look and listen—gathering, whence I may,
My ears did listen, 'twas enough to gaze ;
I listen—but no faculty of mine
To listen to ANIO's precipitous flood,
That lulled me asleep, bids me listen once more.
Upon her records, listen to her song,
And sickness, listen where they long have lain,
In sadness listen. With maternal zeal
Will listen, and ye know that He is just.
And listen to the flapping of the flame,
To which I listen with a ready ear ;
Now listen to my fears !
His ears he closed to listen to the songs
Or fountain, listen to the grave reports
Listen who would, be wrought upon who might,
Should listen, and give back to him the voice
To listen, is prevented or deterred.
Listened. His children's children listened to the sound ;
He listened too ; did you not say he listened ?
And listened to the wind ; and, as before,
Which, while I listened, seemed like the wild growth
I listened, nor aught else could hear ;
I listened to ; that Cry
To rapture ! Mabel listened at the side
I listened, motionless and still ;
I dropped my pen ; and listened to the Wind

Listened—continued.

And who but listened?—till was paid . . .
And seldom hath ear listened to a tune
I stood, looked, listened, and with Thee,
To both I listened, drawing from them both Pored, watched, expected, listened, spread my thoughts
Nothing is listened to. But these, I fear,
I stared and listened, with a stranger's ears,
So that worst tempests might be listened to.
The perturbation ; listened to the plea ;
We listened, looking down upon the hut,
Listened intensely ; and his countenance soon
That each had listened with his inmost heart.
A wandering Youth, I listened with delight
Listened with reader patience than to strain
Listener. Puzzles the listener with a doubt
Sole listener, Duddon ! to the breeze that played
Indulgent listener was he to the tongue
Listener's. Sweet poison spreads along the listener's veins.
Listeners. Kind Listeners, that around me sit,
From all the listeners that stood round,
On fireside listeners, doubting what they hear !
In death ; though Listeners shudder all around.
Listeners who not unwillingly admit
And, heedless even of listeners, warbled out Listening. Listening in vain. He has a tender heart !
Not loth, and listening Little-ones, heart-touched,
their fancies feed.
And sometimes, just as listening ends
And, while we both were listening, to my side
Call to the heart for inward listening—
Listening to nun's faint throbb of holy fear,
And listening dolphins gather round.
The listening Ass conjectures well ;
Listening, and listening long, in rapturous mood,
With breath suspended, like a listening scout.
While she sate listening in the shade,
Listening within his Temple see his sword
That listening sense is pardonably cheated
Greta, what fearful listening ! when huge stones
Lore listening while the Lesbian Maid
To their own far-off murmurs listening.
For needful listening, pledge is here,
And tired of listening to the boisterous sea—
Haunted his ear—he only listening—
Is listening quietly.
Below Eye's listening Star the sheep walk stills
List'ning th' aëreal music of the hill,
Beneath some rock, listening to notes that are
Upon the cheek of listening Infancy
Listening, a gentle shock of mild surprise
And listening only to the gladsome sounds
Smote me, and, listening, I in whispers said,
And mocks the prompter's listening. Marvellous things
There linger, listening, gazing, with delight
And listening Time reward with sacred praise.
That we behold ; and lend the listening sense
While we sate listening with compassion due.
While, listening, he had paced the noiseless turf,
And patient listening, thanks accept from me.
Listens. Where Derwent rests, and listens to the roar
Air listens, like the sleeping water, still,
Listens, or quakes while from the forest's gulf
At midnight listens till his parting oar,
He listens, puzzled, sore perplexed,
And Betty listens, glad to hear it.
She listens, but she cannot hear
He listens—not a sound is heard
Stern GEMMI listens to as full a cry,
He listens (all past conquests and all schemes
Or listens to its play among the boughs
Listless. There, bending o'er the stream, the listless swain
In listless quiet o'er the ethereal deep
And nobler cares than listless summer knew.
Outstretched and listless, were by hunger roused :
To shun the memory of a listless life
The listless hours, while in the hollow vale,
Which gave employment to her listless hands—
Beguiling harmlessly the listless hours.
Listlessly. While listlessly I sate, and, having closed
Listlessness. To banish listlessness and irksome care ;
Which neither listlessness, nor mad endeavor,
In listlessness from vain perplexity.
Lists. That such a Boy where'er he lists shall go
Into the lists of giddy enterprise—
Liswyn. And so is Liswyn farm.
Or here at Liswyn farm ?
Than here at Liswyn farm.
Why you would change sweet Liswyn farm
Lit. See Dim-lit, Foam-lit, Heaven-lit, Moonlit,
Sun-lit.
(But where no fire was ever lit,
Lit by that evening lamp which loved to shed
That lit the dark slant woods with silvery white !
