TODAY'S GAME

This is the big one. This is the one that will be vividly recalled when the Louisiana State and Tulane won-lost records for 1952 are dead, gray lines in small type.

This is the 50th, the golden anniversary renewal of one of the greatest of all college football rivalries.

It all started back in November, 1893, when T. L. (Nervy) Bayne, a Tulane law student, had an historic idea. He arranged the first game, helped coach both teams and even served as umpire. While the impartiality of this pioneer was unimpeachable, Tulane won that day, 34-0.

Since then there have been 48 other meetings, bringing the series tally to 24 victories for L.S.U., 19 for Tulane and six ties.

For each collision, however, the Tigers and the Green Wave start from scratch. That is why nobody has felt secure about predicting the outcome even in the years when the apparent margin is wide. That is why, despite the rather modest records of the current rivals, Tulane Stadium is crowded.

The job of preparing their squads for the conflict has required no special psychology of Coaches Gus Tinsley of L.S.U. and Bear Wolf of Tulane. All the natural incentive is there and the players require precious few reminders.

L.S.U., battered but not bent by an overpowering schedule, could make it all seem worthwhile today. The Tigers have beaten only Rice and Kentucky, still one victory over the Greenies would loom as large as a dozen.

Tulane needs the decision to finish in the black at 6-4 for the season, a feat deserving of great credit considering the adversities handled. The Wave also wants its first triumph over the Bayou Bengals

One of the first practice schools for chemical engineering students in the South is now underway at the Destrehan refinery of the Pan-Am Southern Corporation. Under a program arranged by the oil company and Tulane, outstanding students study technical problems of the oil industry in a real, on-the-spot laboratory. Here two Tulane students gauge a tank.

Three students consult a map of the refinery with M. M. Gilkeson, Jr., assistant professor of chemical engineering at Tulane and school supervisor (above). Two young engineers get a close-up view of the refinery's vast expanse (below).

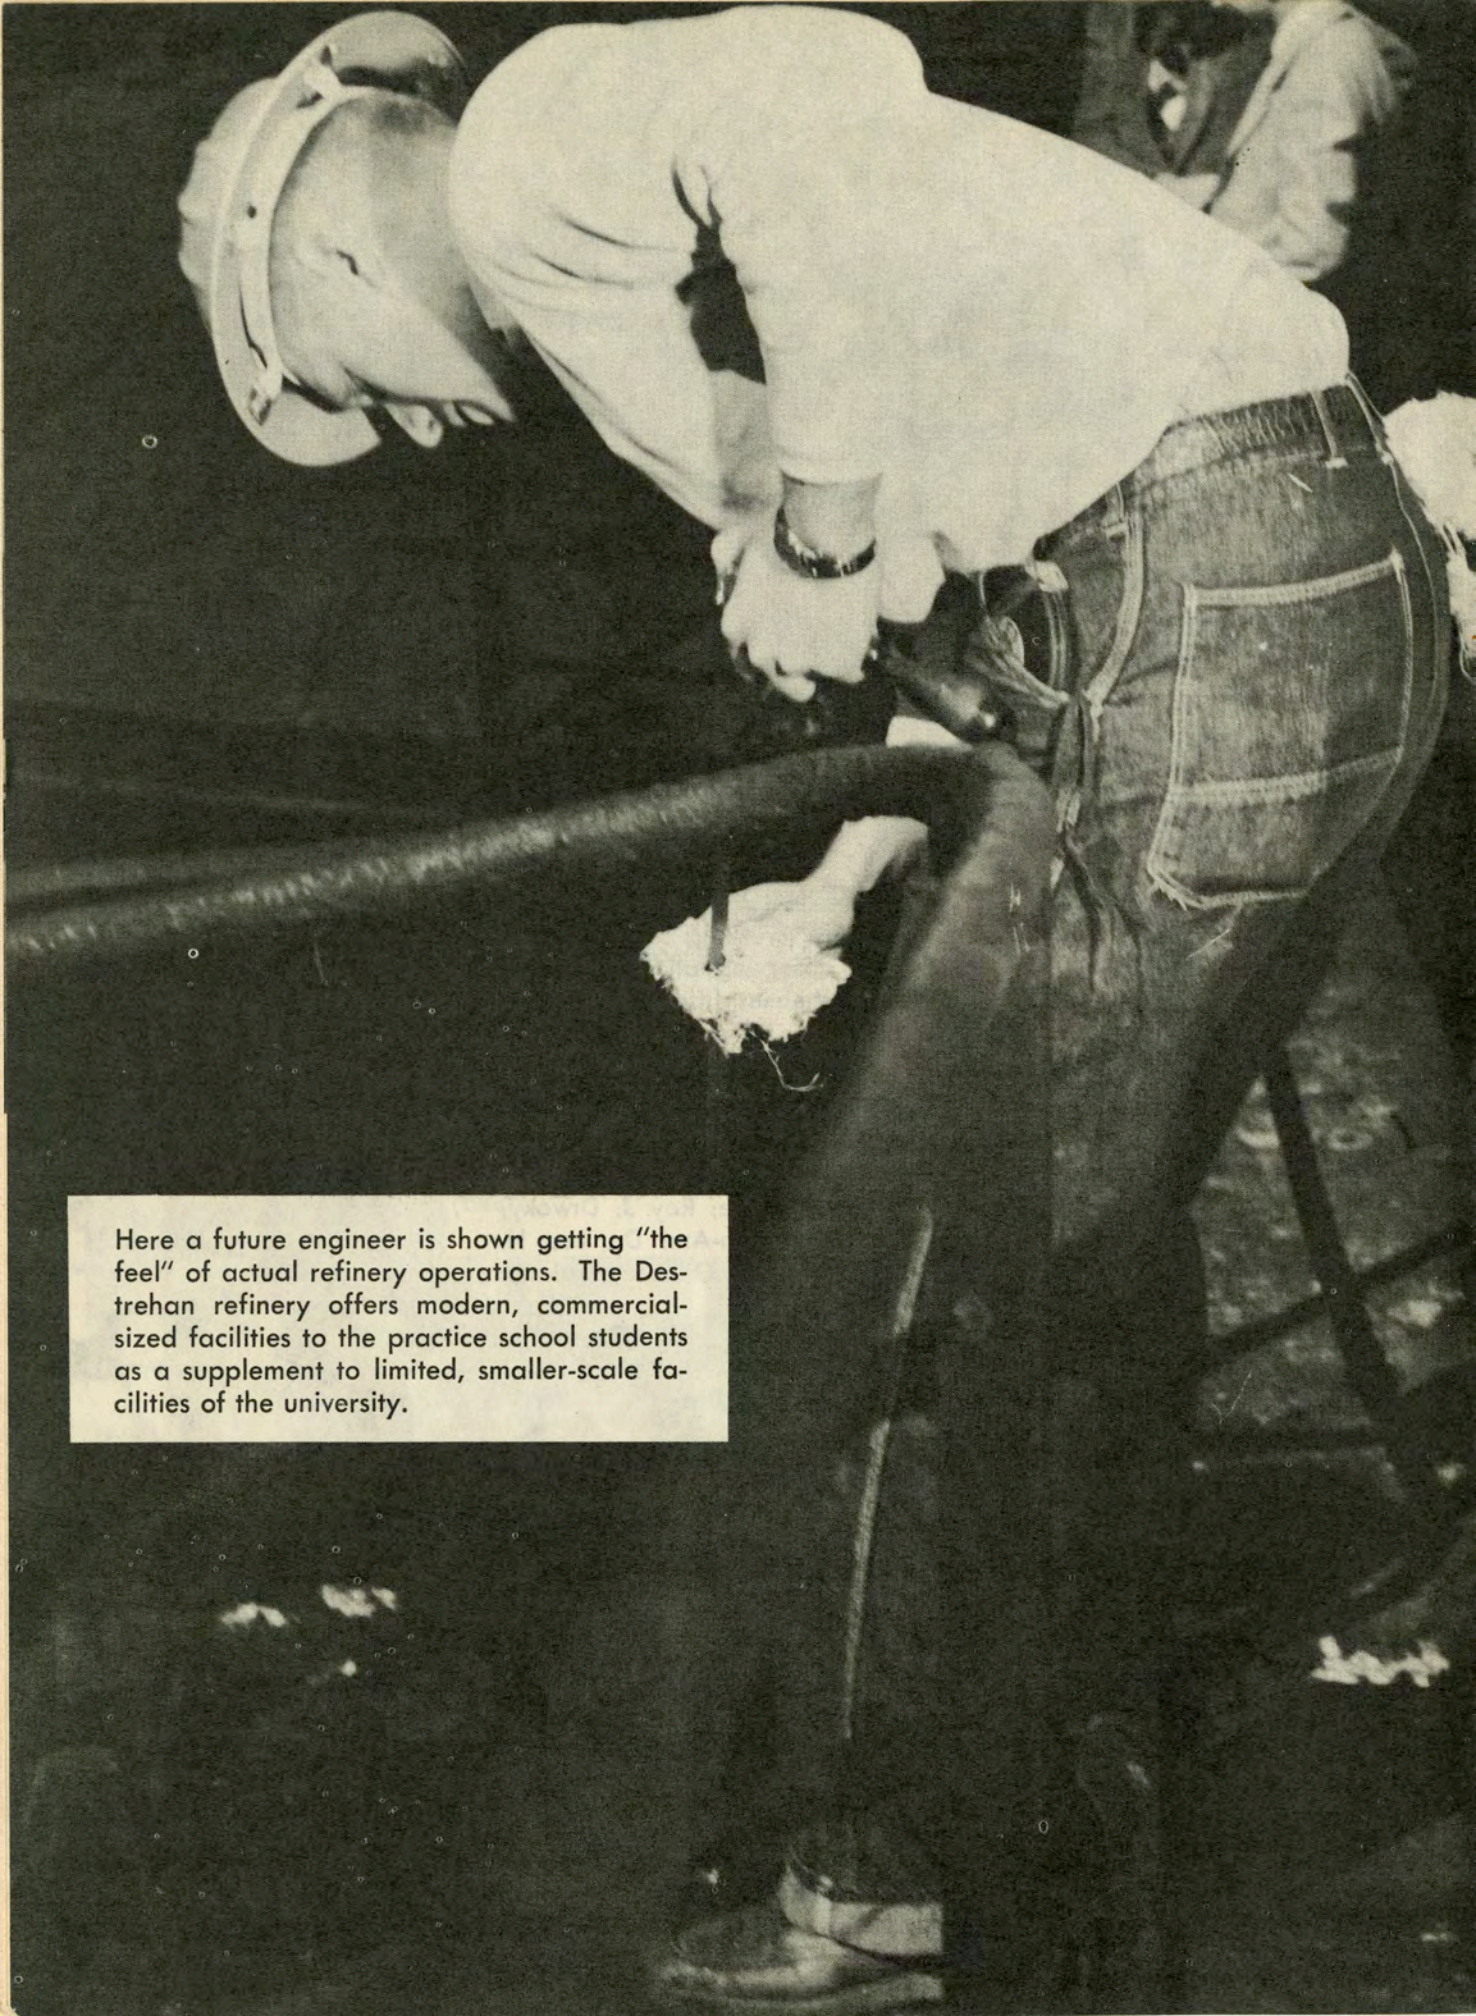

Students spend the last half of their senior year at the refinery, working regular hours of the plant and observing all safety rules. A student has his helmet fitted by a plant secretary (above).

Shown below are the men responsible for the practice school. From left they are Dr. Francis M. Taylor, Tulane; Howard A. Parker, Pan-Am; Richard T. Colquette, Pan-Am; Dr. Raymond V. Bailey, Tulane; Roy J. Diwoy, Pan-Am; Henry Heiss, Pan-Am; Dr. Lee H. Johnson, Tulane; and M. M. Gilkeson, Tulane.

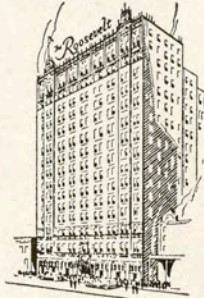

Here a future engineer is shown getting "the feel" of actual refinery operations. The Destrehan refinery offers modern, commercial-sized facilities to the practice school students as a supplement to limited, smaller-scale facilities of the university.

This is a model of the company's new catalytic cracking unit now under construction at its refinery site. When completed it will be capable of producing 300,000 gallons of high octane gasoline daily.

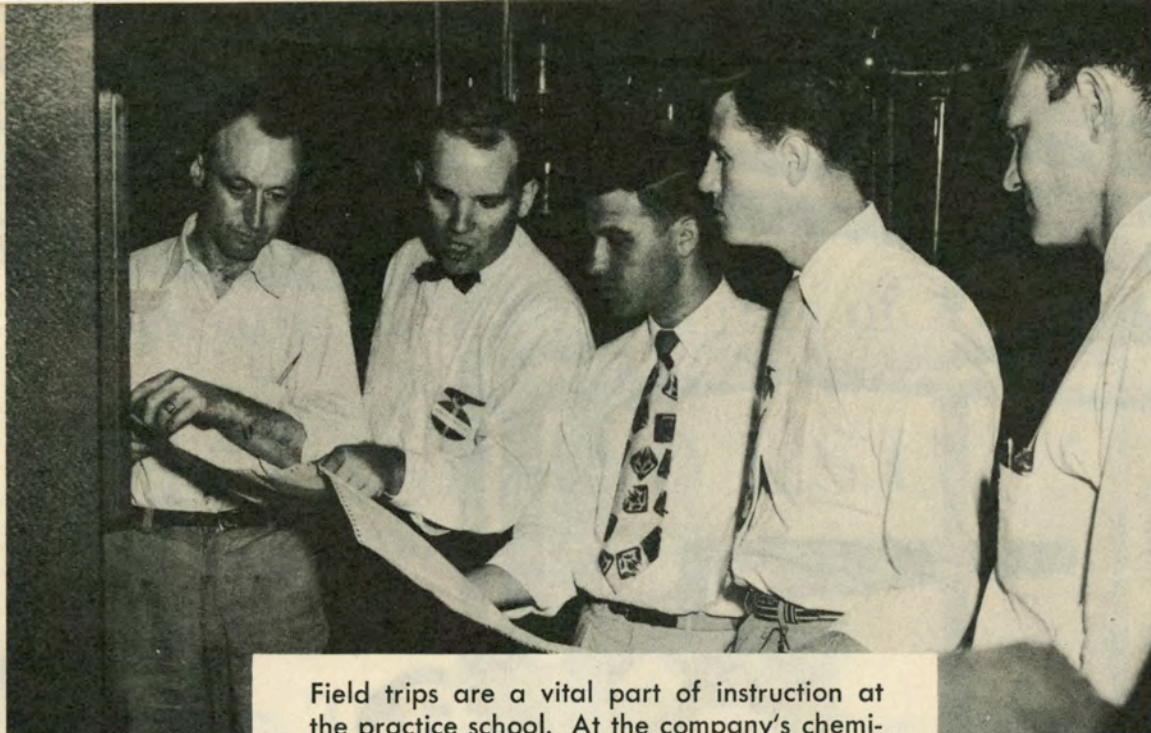

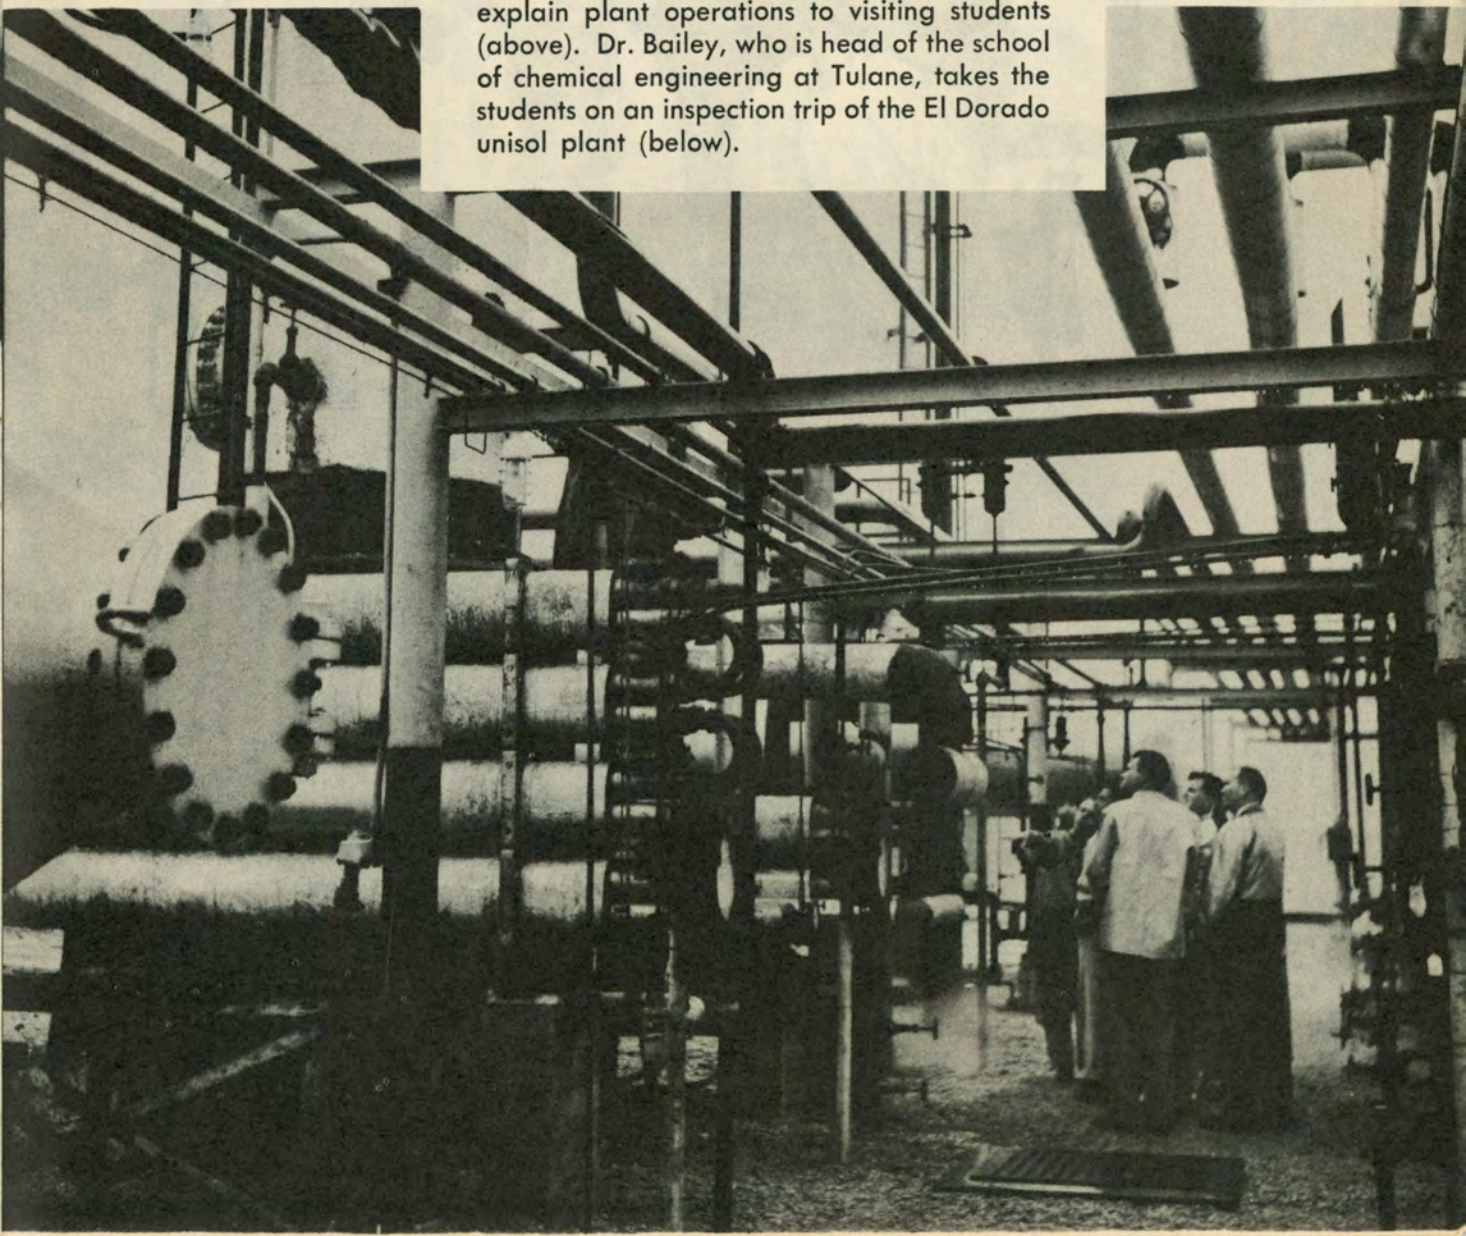

Tulane chemical engineering students conduct a problem in the new laboratories of the college of engineering (above) and receive instruction in the new engineering classrooms (below).

Here is a close-up of the inspection tour. The unisol unit removes mercaptan sulphur from gasoline as part of the process of improving octane.

Today's Game

since 1948, when the score was an all-time high of 46-0. It would add L.S.U. to Auburn, Mississippi State and Vanderbilt on its roll call of Southeastern Conference victims.

Each coaching staff knows the other's personnel almost as well as it does its own. L.S.U. realizes it must do something about the all-directions attack led by Pete Clement, Max McGee, Roy Bailey and close friends. Tulane knows that if Tiger quarterback Norman Stevens is back in working order, such people as he, Jerry Marchand, Al Doggett, Russ Gautreaux and Leroy Labat will be difficult, indeed.

Neither squad is blessed with notable depth. Nevertheless, this could be an afternoon of some unheralded hero. Remember last fall when Lester Kennedy, who had spent the entire season on defense, threw the Greenies to the gates of glory before L.S.U. won, 14-13? Kennedy will miss today's game with a broken wrist. So a close lookout must be kept for other Merriwells.

Moreover, don't be surprised at anything either team pulls in the way of strategy not seen before. Sunday punches carefully saved since September 1 will be brought into the open. For by twilight the last grand push and the season will be over.

It probably is not in Tulane's favor that comparative scores given the Greenies a thin edge on paper. Favorites have been known to fall just as often as the underdogs in this one.

But can there be a favorite? Probably only in the sentimental sense of the word. Choose your team, your colors and don't be embarrassed to shout yourself hoarse.

Next: Basketball!

This may be Tulane's year in basketball.

Coach Cliff Wells isn't admitting it — yet. But with seven lettermen bolstered by a fine freshman class, the Greenies figure as a large factor in the Southeastern Conference race.

Tipoff time for the new season comes Thursday night in Tulane Gymnasium with Birmingham-Southern the opposition. This will be the first of an attractive 11-game home schedule which speaks loudly for itself below.

One thing is certain — the Greenie cagers will run just as much as the football team and rival the gridders in color. In veterans Fritz Schulz, Dickie Brennan, Hal Cervini, Pat Browne, Dick McGowan, Bob Kriebel and Harry Hobbs there is a solid nucleus for success.

Tickets are available now and there is plenty of space for the public in Tulane Gymnasium. But the best seats will go to those who act quickly.
