INTRODUCTION

The plant lists compiled in this booklet are intended to serve as an example of classification of plant material according to special purposes. These lists are not complete—that is, they do not describe each species in full, nor do they include all native or imported plants of value for ornamental purposes. The author has sought to list in general only the species that are reasonably common in cultivation, and may be reasonably expected to grow under average ordinary conditions.

The plants thus listed are to be found in use for ornamental planting in that part of the United States north of the Ohio River and east of the Missouri River. The degree of success with many of these plants varies in different localities. The Ericaceae, including many of the broad-leaved evergreen plants in common use in eastern states, are without exception unsuccessful in the limestone soil region of the Middle West. The extreme climatic variations in the same section reduce the number of dependable coniferous evergreens to a dissatisfying minimum.

The author has, therefore, distinguished those plants that have proved to be reasonably successful and are under cultivation by several nurserymen throughout that portion of the United States included in this list. Plants that are considered thus generally in use are marked with an asterisk (*).

Plants that are not so marked may be very successful in a number of localities that are widely separated. It is left to the reader to determine whether any particular species that is not designated as generally hardy, but which he desires, is successful in his particular locality. This may be determined by personal observation or by inquiry of a nurseryman or landscape architect.

Complete description of the plants listed is impossible in the limited space available. It is necessary for anyone who is unfamiliar with the plants named to supplement this list by personal observation the year round, and by reference to Bailey's Encyclopedia of Horticulture, various nursery descriptive catalogues and books on trees, shrubs and flowers.

I. EVERGREENS FOR FORMAL PLANTING

Note—All plants marked (*) are those which have proved to be reasonably successful and are in general use. (See introduction).
