To the Right Reverend

Father, Richard by the Providence of God, Bishop of Peterborough, F. S. wisheth increase of temporall and spirituall blessings.

Renowned Patron, hater of abuses:

Who sitting in Religious golden Chaire,
Thou her, she thee adornes with vertues rare.

As Phobe from her Phobus borrowes light,
Wherwith againe she decketh him by night.
So likewise thou: She thee with swanity,
Thou gracest her with moderne granitie.
Both I my selfe, and Muse will now assay,
Our tributorie debt to thee to pay.
By dutie bound, unbound I can be never,
Vow'd to your Lordsups service now and ever.

Your Lordships at commandment.

Small of the last

Complaint.

Ew formed Adam of the reddish earth,
Existe from Eden, Paradice of pleasure:
By Gods decree cast down to woes from mirth,
From lasting joyes to sorrowes out of measure:
Fetch'd many a sigh, comparing his estate
With happie bliss, which he forewent of late.

Rowse vp thy selfe (my Muse) a tale to tell,
A dolefull tale in sad and plaintiue verse.
How man in blisse from happinesse once fell,
Although not woont such horrors to rehearse.
Oh great Iehonah, heavens great Architect,
In this sad worke my sainting Muse dire &.

With pensiue hearthe trac'd the earth new sounded, Wringing his hands in lamentable wise: (ded, Earth neuer with ground-cleauing ploughshare woun. Now to the starry globe he cast his eyes, And now to Eden where he erst remained, From which with stery sword he was detained.

O haplesse Adam (quoth he) vokind father,
Vonnaturall Parent, childrens fatall soe:
From whence all mankind doe such curses gather:
Authour of death, first bringer in of woe.
No sooner fram'd of thine al-making God,
Then purchasing his sur-correcting rod.

Did

50.3.

Did not lehonah lend to thee his grace, More plentifull then other living things: Who having fram'd thee, did provide a place, Euen Paradice, the shadow of his winges. Amongst a thousand fundry kinds of meat, Forbidding thee one only fruit to eat.

Consider birds, beasts, fish, and other Creature, Behold, they all looke groueling on the ground: He ynto heaven erected hath thy feature, That thou maist see his woonders, which abound. Yet thou on whom most louingly he looked, Hast first of all to anger him prouoked.

For thee he made heavens Azur-painted cou'ring, Adorning it with starres, with Sunne, with Moone: The bluftring windes within the aire be hou'ring, That thou his maruels mightif behold alone. Yet thou his greatest fabricke, with thy sinne To anger him didft first of all beginne.

For thee he fram'd earths even-povsed globe, Hanging it in the aire to humaine woonder: And decked it with fruites, as with a robe, Making the seas devide the same in sunder. The seas he dight with fish, the earth with beasts For thee, yet thou hast broken his behests.

What didst thou want amidthat pleasant plot, Prepar'd for thee, by his all-working skill: Thou canst not thinke, the thing thou haddest not, Without all griefe thou lued'st, not knowing yll, Pride, and desire of knowledge made thee taste The fruite, which did indeed thy knowledge waste. Had COMPTAINT.

Had not thy God layd, taste not of the free,
The fruit perhaps had still remain'd vntouched:
Hencefoorth shall this enormity by thee
In minds of thy posterity be couched,
Burning desire of secrets which are hidden,
And siery zeal of things which are forbidden.

What made thy wife the fruit so to desire,
The goodly hue and beautie of the same.
What did allure and set thy mind on fire?
The glozing words of thy seducing Dame.
Henceforth therfore will womens words & beautie
Seducers be of mankind from their dutie.

Blind Enab, faw'st thou not as in a glasse,
How Sathan with his guiles did circumuent thee:
Beheldit thou not the brittle world alas,
How it with vading vanity did tempt thee, and did ??
Then how the sless did combate with the Spirite,
And all of heauenly blisse thee to disherite.

O certaine type, true figure, perfect map
Offuture euilles t'all mankind to fall:
These still with sleights, as in a subtill trap,
Will seeke to make all humaine of spring thrall.
Whilst Sun remaines, & whilst Moon doth, endure,
These archoes will their treason put in vre,

Wouldst thou in blisse not keep one little law?
How wilt thou now a multitude obserue,
When many thousand deuils thy mind withdraw,
To which thou canst not choose but needs must swerue?
And having sweru'd, thy conscience plainly saith,
That every fin deserues a severall death.

B 2

Then viewed he the cerule-colored Pole,

With pitchy clouds which gan to be obscured,

Blacke foggie mists rose from earths lumpish mole,

Earths mole by plow-swaine neuer yet manured.

Ay me (quoth he) this may a token be, That for my finne my maker frownes on me.

Day-guiding Sol with his bright-burning lampe,
Obscures his beames, in clowdes his glorie hiding:
Night-ruling Lima waxeth pale and dampe,
Asham'd of me, my glory not abiding.
Star-beating skies, with your earth-cou'ring valt,
For me it is you from a for my default.

For me it is, you frowne for my default.

Rain-sending clowdes, poure out your watry showers

On earth; vast Orbe, which from the seas you borrow:
Cold-causing frosts deface the fragrant flowers
With hoarie rymes; true types of future for row:

Adminow made, his maker hath offended,

To whom so many blessings he extended.

Ah how Dame Ver the ground with flowers spread, Vauting her selfcamid that pleasant pallace:
Four chrystalt lakes distilled from one head:
Resreshing hearbs with humor, thee with sollace,
Thou didst not sow, no labour didst thou take,
The earth bore all things neuertoucht with rake,

See now how Sommers beauty-spoyling drought Earth of her party-colloured vestments robs: Transporting all the buds which Ver had brought, To fruidesse hay, dry straw, and withered surubs.

Then mystic Autumne with his raigne; bereatics The earth of hearbes, the trees of parched leaues.

By Aeffaes heat, and Autumns raine not spoyled:

The same by chil-cold Winter is bereft

Of vigor: and with hoary frosts desoyled.

Frost making earth a Chaos to resemble,

For mine offence, wheron to thinke I tremble.

The blewish skyes did only me protect,
I sought not for a stately brick-built Castle:
I needed not a sheltring roose erect,
Against tempestuous windes and raine to wrassle.
The sturdie Oake in mountain tops did stand,
The stones lay still, I tooke them not in hand.

Now Adam stir thee like the nimble pricket,
Pursu'd with houndes, tansacke thy Grandams bones,
Cut downethe massic Oke from grouie thicket,
To forge a tyled roose for playned stones.
Forge thee a shelter, edific an holde,
To shield thee from the rage of winde and colde.

As I was made, so liu'd I with my spouse,
Both naked were, yet knew it not (O rarenesse)
We felt no colde, yet liued in no house,
We blushed not one at anothers barenesse.
But (out alas) what shamefastnes we suffred.
When vgly sinne our nakednesse vncou'red.

Learne heer (O all posterities) the shrewdnesse Of Sathan, and his treacherous assaultes: VVho having once seduced man to lewdnesse, Exaggerates the greatnesse of his faults, Making him blush like Adam in the garden. Only to bring him in dispaire of pardon.

 \mathbf{B}_3

Ye winged birds, send out your wofull quips
In leauelesse trees, once glutting you with berries:
Cold winter now your tender bodies nips.
Depriving earth of hearbs, and trees of Cheries:
Your everlasting Spring abridged is,
And all for Adam who hath done amisse.

Four-footed beafts inhabitants of field,
Poure out your plaints among the rurall brambles,
Now must your hides mans corps from weather shield,
Your carkasses hang vp on bloody shambles.

Diue in the deep, ye water-hanting Fishes, Now must ye serve to nourish man in dishes.

Help to lament, ye water-flowing Fountaines, Congealing Frosts your passages will hinder: Keep in your buds, ye Gote-frequented mountaines. Receivers of the hoarie frosts of winter.

Woods, hearbs, and trees, all terrene things bewayle, Teares ease the mind, though little doe prevaile,

Proud Adam not content with thy condition, Blessed estate, and ten times happie calling: Sought'st to atchieue more glory, whose ambition Hath wrought thy satall ouethrow in falling.

Aspiring to the knowledge of thy maker, hast lost that blisse where thou wert partaker.

This roote of pride (this neuer-withering weed)
Prouoker first of mankind vnto follic:
Will still attaint and cleaue vnto thy seed,
As twinding Yuic on the tender Hollie.
Imbracing it, till it hath suck'd it drie,
And wanting sap, they both together die.

This

This noyfome root in every ground will spring,
The meanest man in thought will still aspire:
The Potentate will seeke to be a King,
The King to be an Emperour will desire,
And he to be more higher in degree,
Will also striue, if higher he may bee.

I fought moe dainties having over manie,
From hence shall come desire of varieties
Contentment seldome will be found in anie,
Lothsome contempt will wait vpon satietie.
All men from me will this insection plucke,
As Spyders doe from flowers poyson sucke.

Fond wretches, who in finfull follie blinde,
Did thinke to hide you from Iehonahs face:
As doth the purblind Hare, or fearfull Hind,
V hom yelping hounds doe still pursue in chace.
Ah no, ye cannot, his all-seeing cie
V Vill find you out, where euer you doe sie.

Take I to me the fouth-windes ayrie winges,
And in the vtmost coast of earth conuay mee:
Take I to me the Dolphins watery finnes,
And in the seas vnsounded-bottom lay mee:
Let earth into her secret wombe me swallow,
Yet will his glotious cie-beams still me follow.

My guilty conscience sayd, I had offended,
V Vhat sting on earth trore hellish can we find,
A fore it is which cannot be amended,
A worme which alwayes gnawes vpon themind.
Run where I will, into all lands betake me,
Yet will a wounded conscience ne'r forsake me,

O thundring fayings: terrifying wordes,
Heart-taming speaches, cleauing rockes in sunder:
Proceeding from the supreame Lord of Lords:
V hich in mine eares resounded like a thunder,
Words causing earth an Aspen lease resemble,
Which at the breath of euerie wind doth tremble.

V Vhere art thou Adam? shamest thou my Deitie, Ay me, needs must I my sinne display:
Supposing earst my vicious impietie,
That every shaking bramble would bewray.
Thus shall it also fare with all my seede,
Committing any detestable deed.

How faine would I my guiltie mind haue cleared,
Alleadging Ene was causer of mine euill:
She to excuse her selfe, as then appeared.
Laid all the fault ypon the subtill Deuill.
Like clowds which pour their rain ypon hie-waies,

Like clowds which pour their rain ypon hie-waies, They into rivers, rivers into leas,

This saydishe turn'd him to the vntill'd field,
VV here vncoth weeds, and fruitlesse breed,
The earth which earst most fragrant hearbs did yeeld,
VV ith thornes and thistles now was ouer-spread.
Oh see (quoth he) the earth for mine yll deeds,
Rob'd of braue robes, and clad in baser weedes.

Deare Grandam earth, thy fountaine heads set open,
Like Chrystall teares, my sorrowes to discouer.
Now must thy mole with deluing share be broken:
A crooked rake thy tilled field passe ouer.
For me these shrubs and prickling thorns thou bearest
For me these yl-beseeming weeds thou rearest.
The

The heifar now in fields must not be idle,

The seruile Asse must be are an heavy packe:

The Courser brave restrained with a bridle,

The silly sheep his woolly sleece must lacke.

Horse, sheepe, Asse, heifar help me all to mone,

I causer am of all your woes alone.

Still thought he on this string to tune his woes,
And forward went, but loe, three-horned Cattle
Neer vnto him amid proud bearing Does,
Vith frowning gesture menaced a battle.
At length not able to forbeare him longer,
Two weaker ones ran both against the stronger

Th'encountred beast receiving others stroke,
With like assault the one of them requighted,
Assault resounding like a falling Oke,
Which threw th'one backe, the other sted affrighted.
And lest his friend distress, his soe inulted,
The victorer triumphantly insulted.

Ah see (he sayth) see heer a world of woe, han heap of euils vnto thy seed ensuing:

VV hat maladies from lewd desires doe growe, As beasts, so men with sauagenesse induing.

Ay me, what dolors, euils, and deeds vnjust.

Shall not arise to man through sinfull lust.

Heer maist thou have a president of warres,
Tumultuous discord, horrible dissention,
Blood-shedding horror, disagreeing jarres,
Inhumaine murthers, pitifull contention:
The mightiest shall be viewed on of all,
The poore dispiss, the weaker thrust to wall.

Whilst things go well friends wil be alwayes neer thee Prosperity will loued be of many:
But falling downe, thy dearest friends will feare thee,
Aduersity not holpen vp of any.
The fawning beast doth this presignifie.

The fawning beast doth this presignisse, Who quite for sookehis friend in misery.

The small shall subject be ento the greater, Nobility through strength shall make his entrie: The welthyer will thinke himselse the better, For conetousnesse will spring, the root of Gentry.

Though all sprong from one father and one mother, Yet every one will strive t'excell his brother,

Doth massacre the house-frequenting Sparrow:
The lordly Lyon with his murthering jawes,
Doth rend the Hind as earth is rent of harrow.
The searfull Whale, that monster in the deep
The lesser fish doth in his bellie keepe.

Whale, Eagle, Lyon, fitly ye prefage
Blood-sucking tyrants and inhumaine murtherers,
Which will the weaker fort oppresse with rage,
Arch-foes to vertue, and to vices furtherers.
Blush Adam, blush to name these dreadful terrors,
First causer of all maladies and errors.

The pleasant Larke delights to mount on hie,
The little wren neer to the earth below:
The greedy Gleyd betwixt them both doth flie,
The Doue in course is swift, the Lapwing slowe.
The shew mens sundry callings and conditions,
These note mens divers minds and dispositions.

The

The ayerie-winged blafts as euer mutable,
And neuer in one certaine place abide:
So mans condition shall be euer changeable,
No ground so firme in which he shall not slide.

What seat so strong or what so sure estate
which shall not subject be to frowning sate.

Ohappie wight, ten times shall he be blest,
V Vho with the wren dare not presume to mount:
V Vith meane estate contented who doth rest,
And blisse in sole tranquility doth count,
Cousidering that great things are view dofall.
And highest things are soonest like to fall:

That highest things are soonest like to fall,'
The reaching Pine on mountaines doth betoken, which sooner then the shrub or bramble small,
with raging blastes of hoysting windes are broken.

VV hat mortall things hencefoorth on earth enfuing

Shall not be subject to times fatall ruin.

Times ruin shall so dyre obliuion breed In men, that noting their so frayle variety, Forgetting me, the cause thereof, my seed Shall saine to Fate an euer-changing deity.

Proportraying her vpon a round wheele dancing, Euerting some, and other some aduancing.

Alas, no sooner night-expelling morning,
Alas, no sooner night-expelling morning,
Alas, hyding heaven from her blacke rug exempteth:
But'viewing me, and mine offences scorning,
Her snowie cheekes with rednes she belprenteth,
Disdaining Sels bright beams should long behold me
In Sable night bright Hesperus doth fold me.

 \mathbb{C}^{3}

Vilc

Vile Couetousnes in me first tooke his roote,
For moe things thirsting, when no thing I wanted:
Still shall it hold my children by the soote,
And in the hearts of all my seed be planted.
Now shall rush in the greedy zeale of mony,
which men will labour for, as Bees for hony.

Now shall rush in the fiery thirst of gaine,
And golde in bowels of the earth inclosed:
Which men by toyle and labour will obtaine,
And coffer vp from his darke dungeon losed.
By mortall wightes rare mettals will be knocked,
Which carth in her close treasure-house had locked.

Now shall be found the hurtfull mine of Iron,
For which men'wil into earths bellie enter:
The glittering steele besieged foes t'enuiron,
They now will into swords and Lances temper,
What mortall thing so hardfor what so geason,
Wil not be done and sound by humaine reason?

The lofty Pine which mountaine top affoords,
Cut downe, shall now into a Mast be squared:
The yellow brasse nayled to Firre-tree boords,
Shall cut the seas, as earth with plough is ared.
Sea-Porposses and Dolphins huge shall woonder,
To see their Cerule waters cleft in sunder,

The ruddie Diamond and the Saphir faire, In th'vimost coast of earth shall now be sought, The bright Smaragd, the Pearl, and Onix rare, Fetch'd from the East, sull dearly shall be bought, O into what so deepe and huge an hell,

Will not the thirst of riches men compell?

This

This sayd, on earth his glowring eyes he fastned,
There saw an Ant, a little creeping else,
Who dragg'd with her a Barley graine, and hastned
Home to her caue, graine bigger then her selse:
Olearne he cries, learne Adam of this Ant,
To worke in youth, least afterward thou want.

Behold the Bee, a filly painfull creature,

How wittily shee laboreth in Sommer:
Reposing food, she only taught by nature,

Least barraine winters penuric should numb her,

Her industrie gives to thee an example,
how thou shouldst live, & in what waies to trample.

Now Adam must thou labour, ditch and delue,
Grast, plant, walke, run, hedge, sence, plow, harrow, sowe
Pluck downe, reare vp, set munisie, build shelue,
V Veep, laugh, striue, wrastle, bind vp, gather, mowe,
Thresh, cary out. grind, bake, brue, spin and card,
Knock, beat, wash, dry, buy, sell, sleep, watch and ward

In fweat of browes and horrible vexation,
To get my living shall I be constrained:
V hat shall man see but dolefull tribulation,
Vnto his death from time that he is wained.
Nought shall his race be but a vale of sinning,
Fond, sinfull, sraile, in end, midst and beginning.

How vaine is wordly pompe how fraile and brittle?

How foon is man of earthlie things bereft:

His pleasures passe as swiftly as a shittle

Cast from the weavers right hand to the lest:

His orient hue as vading as a flower,

V Which floorisheth and dyeth in an hower.

C 3

Owretched man 1 O life most transitorie i Deceiptfull world, foule sinke of filthy errors: Eye-pleasing shades of vaine delightfull glorie Deepe gulfe of sinne, vast dungeon of terrors, Receptacle of woful tribulations Grand treasure-house of all abhominations.

Olea offorrowes, laborinth of woes,

Vale full of cares: abyste of imbecilitie:

Thief-harbouring house, field full of armed foes,

Stil-turning orb, true map of mutahility.

Affoording man as many false yl-willers

As woods have trees, as trees have Caterpillers.

Of lumpish earth Ishoush me created,
To th'end I should not glorie in my feature:
And I agains to earth must be translated
By Gods inst doome, the end of every creature.
Then wherto should I trust on earth abiding,
Sith for my fault all earthly things are sliding,

When first of all man draweth virall breath
And spirite, he to die beginneth then:
No worldly thing more certaine then is death,
Nor more vicertaine then the hower when.
Olend me then a font of springing teares,
To weep my fill for mans ynconstant yeares.

Ah weladay, me thinks for mine offences,
My God fayth still I must to earth againe:
O how the thought of death appales my sences,
Though end it be of all mans woe and paine.
So likewise shall all my posteritie
Feare it, though end of all calamity.

O great Iehonah, woonderfull in might,
How wisely hast thou wrought all things, concealing
The certaine houre of death from mortal wight,
Yet certaintie thereof to him reuealing.
Done surely by thy skilfull prouidence,
That man should seare and learne obedience.

Me thinks I see (O let me yet divine)

How many of my sonnes will goe astray,

Erecting houses, raysing buildings fine,

As though they were inthronized here for ay.

O let them know that for my soule offence,
by Gods just doome all stells must wander hence.

Not he that shall on earth the longest dwel, where the Not he that shall in prowesse be the rarest.

Not he that shall in wisedome most excel,

Not he that shall in visage be the sairest.

With wisedome, beautie, age or couragesfell.

Shall able be impartial death t'expellance and

Accursed Grandame, mankinds deadlie Foe; meioride Accursed Grandame, most yngentle mother; and the Sin-causing woman, bringer of mans wod, and the Woeto thy selfe, and woe ento all other! any such as Thy mighty maker in his just displeasure. I Hath multipli'd thy sorrowes out of measure.

In paine shalt thou thy sced conceive and beare, In peril shalt thou of it be discharged:
Thou shalt it softer up with tender care,
A thousand wayes thy griefs shal be enlarged:
Thou shalt be guided by thy mans direction,
He as a Lord shall have thee in subjection.

Ocursed worme, O exerable serpent:
Blisse-hating Dragon: most abhorred creature:
Insectious Adder: venom-breathing verment,
The sood of enuie, sdeignfull scorneof Nature:
Fals-hearted traitor, harbourer of euill:
Darke den of spight, soule cabbin of the Deuill.

Most lothsome be thou of Iebonahs worke,
Enuyed both of man and feeding cattell:
In vnsrequented valleyes shalt thou lurke,
And with thy stinging tongue still menace battell.

Man seeing thee, shall feare and seeke thy bane,
As instrumentall author of his paine.

For want offeet: through woods and deferts thicke Vpon thy griefilie belly shalt thou slide:
And for thy food dust of the earth shalt licke,
Such plagues shall thee (O lothsome worme) betide,
Such woes on thee Iehonah hath disbursed,
Pronouncing thee of all his workes most cursed.

The husband-man among the rurall bushes,'
V Vill start, and thinke each moouing twig a foes
Still searing least among the marshy rushes
Thou lying hid, shouldst worke his second woe.
Thy deadly sting, and golden speckled hew,
In false presence thy glosing words doe show

But thou(O Sathan) proud infernal deuill,
Chiefe actor in this dolefull tragedic:
Lord of ambition, maister of all euill,
Thy fatall fall behold I prophecie:
From out the woman shall an issue spring,
VV hich will preuayle against thy deadly sting.

Between

Between her seed and thee (O fearfull fiend)
Shall be continual enmity and fight:
Thou shalt but pricke her heele, she in the end
Shall conquer thee, and ouerthrow thy might.
Then man reioyce, O Adam cease to waile,
Thy conqueror shall now no whit prevaile.

O woondrous pittie, vndeserued kindnesse,
Of earths-sole sounder to the worke he made:
Who seeing man cast downe in sinne and blindnesse,
So speedily him promised help and ayd,
Ayd, certaine ayd, his arch-soe to repell,
To conquer death, and conquer conquering hel.

Rejoyce then earth, cease frowning heavens to glower, Now broken are hels ever-lasting barres, From whence man tooke by Gods almighty power, Shall mount alost above the twinkling starres:

There with the womans feed which promifed is, For euermore to raigne in heauenly bliffe.

Ye chirping birds, whose partie colloured plumes
VV ith gentle sound the whistling aire doe trouble:
In shady dales send soorth your dolefull tunes,
Let Ecchoes shrill your dulcid notes redouble.

Adam your Lord exil'd from Eden gardenBy faith and mercy hath obtayned pardon.

Harmonious Larke, let neue blushing morning
See dankish earth, but mount thou from the ground?
And blewish skies with pleasant notes adorning.
For mans redemption signes of mirth resound:

Sweet Philomene, let neuer Haster shipe

Sweet Philomene, let neuer Hesper shine Ere thou haue tun'd a thousand ditties fine.

D

Mild Enrice raigne in blustering Boreau place,
Leap sportiue sish about the Chrystall river:
Man reconciled to his God by grace,
Shall now in heavenly blisse abide for ever.
For these glad tydings, stolike tender lambes,
In pastures pleasant with your merie dammes.

And lastly, Adam, sith it is decreed,
That thou must fight ere thou canst win the fort:
Fight mansfully, trust in the promised seed,
And be most sure thou shalt arrive the port,
Port sull of joy and heavenly blessednes.
Free from all cares, and worldly wretchednes.

Theold Worlds

Tragedie.

Sing of horrors fad and dreadfull rage, Of stratagems wrought in the former age, Contagious vice, and in conclusion, Ofmassacres, death and confusion: Vouchsafe my muse, my dolefulst muse to tell What made the King of heaven to be so fell: Sole Architect of earth and earthly landes, So furiously the fabricke of his handes To bring to ruine: can Iehonah then Poure out such fearfull threats on mortall men, Full fixteen hundred years from worlds creation, And fifty fixe by facred computation: When living things replenished the ground. And earth with mortall wights did first abound: A dolefull Tragedie was brought to passe, Earth was the stage whereon it acted was. Vpon the stage first came impietie, Vaunting her selse against the Deity. She in short time began to growe to hed, And all the earth at length the captine led. Then came in foule desire and lothsome lust, She in short time seduced even the just: Who gazing on the beautic of the wicked, Began with lewd concupiscence be pricked. In matrimony to their daughters linking Their sonnes, and at sinnes detestable winking.

The

The olde Worlds.

The Host was oftimes slaine by lodged stranger, Guest of his hoste stood many times in danger. Vile Auarice all mortall hearts possessed, The weaker lay in enery street oppressed: Men fought by cruell bloodshedgaine to gather, The some for riches sought to flay his father: The brother mixed poylon for his brother, she for her daughter:daughter for her mother. Pale enuie left her Adder haunted den. And rul'd on earth as supreame Queene of men, Aspiring pride with weapons in her hand, To warre against humility did stand, Wherewith in fight the killed her at last, And from the stage all massacred her cast. Then dreadfull wrath met patience at the field, And shortly she compelled her to yeeld. Fals-hearted treason like a faithfull louer, His woluish backe with sheepish skindid couer: And meeting with true friendship secretely, Gaue her the stab (Omonstrous villanie) Fidelity lay flaine by treacherie, Pure chastitie by lothsome letcherie. Here lay the servant by the master killed, There masters blood lay by the servant spilled. Then might you see man-murthring falshood flight With verity, and ouercome her quite: Religion by Atheilme proud was banisht, And the forthwith to heavenly kingdomes vanisht: As soone as ere good Conscience shew'dher head, By disobedience she was stroken dead. Then Gluttony upon the stage made entrance Prodigiously who slew dame Temperance.

Excelle

Tragedie.

Excesse appear'd with strange varietie. And fiercelie put to flight Sobriery. Enuious Anger vehementlie affailed Dame Patience, and in the end preuzyled. Then mounted on the earth oblinious Sloth, She Industrie and labor conquer'd both. Insuffice lattlie with an hideous rout Othellish furies trac'd the stage about Her visage sterne, her hands in blood imbrued Her breast of Iron, vgly Toads she spued: Her standerd-bearer was ambitious pride, And next vnto her went Don Homicide, Next vnto them a ranke of Enuies brood. Begirt with Adders, serpents were their food; Straight after them excesse and gluttonie, Deformed Sloth, and impious Simphonie A thousand other stygian hagges and moe, Then with their Queen impietie did grow. Whom just Astrea locing in this fort, A sudden teare amaz'd her mean report, And leaving earth with all that hideous crew, Vinto the skies without delay the flew. And now huge Gyants upon earth remained. with whole vile of spring al the earth was stained Of them to Damiels faire committing feed, A deuillish kind of people there did breed: A People fierce and of exceeding stature Pestifferous, and prone to sin by nature. These tyranniz'd and lived at their pleasure? Oppressing weaker people without measure. With dreadfull rigor keeping them in awe, Despising instice, breaking Natures law. Thefe

These heaped sinne on sinne, and fault on fault, As high as Pelion or Olympus vault: As high as Pindus or Steep Offa either, Were Pindus or steep Offa clapt rogether. When suddenly from his most glorious throne. Whereon he sitting guides all things alone. Iebonah founder-of the starrie pole, Of waterie scas, and of the earthly mole, Daign'd vpon earth his facred eles to cak. Eies seeing all things in the world so vast. He saw how vice had growne vnto a head, Injustice all the earth had overspread: He law how sinne and vile impietie Vanted themselves against his Deitie. The Adder-pawed gyants, mounts of cuill Touching the skies, base children of the deuill. His facted head heerat he gan to shake, Wherat the skies, the earth, and all did quake: He sighed, and most forcowfull he was, which is That ever mortall man was brought to passe: 5-He gricu'd in heart that euer he created. Man, who with finne was so contaminated. Allthings (quoth he) wherin remaineth breath, I purpose to destroy with sudden death: This hand which framed all mortall things alive All earthlie things of life thill now deprive, From man to beafts, from birds to things which creep. All flesh shalltaste of my displeasure deep. The birds (wift winges thall not his body faue; The Lyons force, nor Giants courage braue. "... Thusam I minded, thus doe I intend, " 1 11 All living creatures now shall have an end.

But

Trapedie.

But yet on earth one only man there dwelled All other men in justice who excelled: The third from Enoch was he in discent. Enoch who all his life vprightly spenr: Enoch of life who never was bereauen, Enoch who living was rapt into heaven. Methushelah who all men did surpasse In length of life, his Grandfire cleped was. It was just Noah, Lameebs sonne vpright: Three sonnes he had, Shom, Ham & Japhet hight He loued vertue, vice he did eschew, Ichonah therfore fauour did him shew. Againe Earths founder his all-seeing eyes Cast on the world from top of Cerule skies. Againe he faw all wickednes abound. In all the earth no justice could be found. The children bathed in their fathers blood, All nought he faw, and nothing that was good Vast fields of sin, Abysses fraught with lewdnes Realmes full of errors, mountaines huge of farewdnes. The height whereof vnto his throne ascended, And with their stench his nostrils fore offended Then vnto Noah, Lamechs sonne he spake, An end of all things now I meane to make: All flesh wherin remaineth living spirit, Of vitall breath I purpose to disherit. Ah how it grieues me now that I have framed Man, who with fin the earth hath so defamed. Make thee an Arke of Pine trees verie firong, Three hundred cubits shalt thou make it long. Threescore in breadth, and thirty cubits hie, Make rooms in it where leveral things may lie.

The oldo vvorldes

Three sundrie stories shalt thou in it frame. And round about with pitch close vp the same: For I vpon the earth a flood will bring, Wherwith I will subuert ech liuing thing, But vnto thee my couenant will I make, My couenant which I never meane to breake: Thou with thy wife, thy lons, & thy lons wives Shal in the arke be shut and saue your lives. Of every lining creature also twaine, A male and female shall with thee remaine, And lay vp food for thee and euery creature, Euen seuerall food according to their nature. The ark was made, & al things brought to passe As God commanded, so it framed was. Then spake Iehonah ynto him, goe thou Into the arke with all thy houshold now: For seu'n dayes hence shall mighty rain abound Wherwith I mean to couer al the ground. Then Noah with his family also Just eight persons into the arke did goe, And now the hower was neer, the fatal hower Wherin Iehonah meant to shew his power: Sixetimes & wrorn with her blushing hew Had seene the earth all darke with hoary dew. Now pitchie night fix times gan dim the skies, Last night of sollace vnto mortall eyes: O Luna still detainethy blacks sh horse, Let neuer dismall Tytan run his course, Bright Vefer still continue thou thy race. Let neuer fatall day-star thee deface. Who can alas, expresse the dolefull ruin, And pitcous horror of the day ensuin. Now Tragedie.

Now fro her chamber comes the scowling morning? Her felfe still in a night-gowne blacke adorning: Tream arose, but yet his glorious head With pitch-resembling cloudes was overspread, Blacke foggie mystes rose from the earthly mole, Ascending vp vnto the acry pole. Windes thronged foorth, and stroue in skies aloft, As civill warres among them had been wrought, As craggie hils had broken been by charmes, As all Eolia had beene up in armes. Windes, ayre and cloudes, all meant the ayre to facke, O now or neuer goes the world to wracke, Then thou (O woe) heavens Architect began To poure thy feareful threats on mortall man: The glowring skies resounded like a thunder, As though heavens sacred vault had cleft in sunder, As though ten thousand Cannons huge discharged Their roaring founds with fall of forts enlarged. His right hand shoke the earth, his left hand crushed The clouds, then raine in great aboundance rushed. Raine poured foorth, yet not content, his anger Enforced swelling tydes on earth to wander. Then broken were the heads of watrie fountaines. They gushed from the sect of craggie mountaines. Seas lent them waves their courses to maintaine, Earth made them passage to his ytter bane, Now had the morne still clad in mourning weeds, Thrife open'd gates to Phabus fiery steeds. Steeds smoking wet, yet from his flaming carre. No light did come, blacke mystes his light did scarre: And now the three dayes raine and flowing flouds Had spoyled quite green hearbs and pleasant buds:

The olde Worlds.

And shortly did the husband man complaine. That all his whole years travell and his paine Were brought to ruin, corne and goodly flowers Were prostrate laid with ouer-flowing showers. The fillie birds with violence of weather In bushes thicke did shroud themselves together: Beafts fhrinking vnder grouie hedges stood Halfe drown'd with wet, halfe dead for want of food, By this time waters all the earth did couer. The falling raine and rifing flouds ran over All champion countries, where men lately plowed Now waters stood, and Scullers might have rowed. Othen on earth was heard a piteous crie, Men crying out, beafts roaring plaintiuely. Then first of all began the Gyants sterne To shake for feare, and flinty hearts to yerne. Raine falling, and seas rising without pittie. Made entrance into everle house and cittie: As when a Fort or facked citties walles. With violence of campir'd engines falles, The furious foe runnes raging through the streets. With bloody weapons killing whom he meetes. An hideous ery and found arrileth then Of mayined women and distressed men. Men leeing weapons come to worke their bane? Yet could not shun them: O what greater paine? So far'd it with the people of this time, Some vpon roofes and turrers high did clime, One takes the highest mountaine he can see, Another fits a fishing in a tree. One thrusts himselfe into a wherry boat, And de perately vpou the waves dorh floate.

Tragedie.

And cuery one did seeke to clyme alost. For eurie one to flun the waters fought, They saw the waters come to stop their breath, Yet could not shun't, O greater griefe then death. Their dollours might have been compared well. To one that dying heares the passing bell. Some were already drown'd thus stood the case, He liu'd the longest who had highest place: And now were turrets high and mountaines couered, And leavietrees which in the aire erst houered: O lend me words the dollours to display; The Farall horrors of this dismall day. There might you see how louingly the mother With her sweet daughter kissed one the other One piteously requesting others help, Yet neither of them knew to and himselfe. The dying sonne no what the latest gaspe, they alies-About his clasping fathers neck did claspe with the And ready now to bid their last farewell, ball it is 20 Were inatched both with leas and billows fel: The Lord & servant both at one time snatched, One furiously hold on the other catched: And still in surging wanes together cleft, Till both of breath together were bereft. The tyrannizing Giants bodies grim Now with the criples liuelesse corps didswim. The subject with the scepter-bearing king, The murthring billows spar'd no liuing thing: Some might you see half dead and halfe aline, Like water-fowles now rise, & now to dive: Some turning round, and violently borne Al headlong downe, their lims in funder torn.

The olde Warlds.

The brifle-bearing bore, and gentle sheepe Swam both together in the furging deep. The filly Lambe was with the ranening Wolfe Drown'd in the vast no-pitie taking gulse. The livelesse Lyon in the deep did swim, Nought did the Tygers courage profit him, Nought booted it the Beare to roar and grind, No profit by his swiftnesse got the Hind. And bauing long time with exceeding paine Flowne through the aire, disturbed still with raine, The wearie bird not finding any ground, Fals downe in seas, and at the last is drown'd. And now the Arke where Neah did abide. Was hoisted vp. with ouer-swelling tide. One while all hidden to the earth it fell, As though it would have gone to visit hell. One while againe it seemed to artise, And suddenly would mount up to the skies: No sterne it had, no mast, no sayle, no guide, But caried was appleasure of the tide. Twile twenty dayes as blacke as any cole The murthering raine distilled from the Pole. The tallest mountaines in the world so wide, Now couered were with ouer-fwelling tide. The ayrie Alpes and eke Pernassian faire Now hidden were with waves, a woonder rare, Snow-bearing Pindu and Olympus fleep, Both at this time lay hidden in the deep. Now first of all igniferous Actnas caues, .. And Ciclops flames were quench'd with falt-sea waves, Sweet-Imelling Ide and facered Ismariu, Aspiring Pelion and hard Cancasus, In Tragedie.

In Serthian mounts, where murthering Tygres hanted: Now vgly shapes of monstrous sea-fish vanted: The Dolphins woonders under watrie floods, To see faire turrets and thicke grouie woods. In steed of sacrifice on Altars faire Sit feemly Marmaydes combing of their haire. In Churches eke their Organists now wanting. Melodious Odes and ditties now recanting. The vglie dog-fish and deuouring Whales Gainst pinacles did dash their shining skales: And where the Goat was woont her food to swallow. Foule Porposses and seaith monsters wallow. Now from his glorious pallace heavens creator Look'd downe, and saw the world a sea of water: All was a fea yet wanted it a coaft. Then thought he on the Aike and Noah toft: Through all the world and earth, which manie a night Hid vnder seas, had seen no cheerfull light. Foorthwith he charg'd the foggie mysts to vanish. Then all the windes tempestuous did he banish: And then retreyt vnto the water foundes. Commanding it to keepe within his bounds: Commanding it his fountaines to restraine, And them to stop their springing heads againe. Clouds foorthwith fled, and tempestes were appealed The seas return'd, and running fountaines ceased. The scowling morne now left his mourning robe, And smilinglie blush'd on the watery globe. And shortly might you see meane turrets peepe, And tops of Pine-trees from the flouds to creepe: Thefleeting arke which long had cleft in funder the vast deluge, both caried vp and under,

Now vnto East, and now vnto the west, Atlength in mounts of Armeny did reft. Twise twentie times had Phoebus drencht his beames. And Car in grave Oceanns his streames. When as the framer of the subtill Barke, A window did set open in th Arke. And foorth he fent a Rauen thence, to know If waters still the land did ouer flow. Foorth flew she, but returned presently So went and came untill the earth was drie. Againe, he sends a siluer-winged Doue, To see if still the waters were aboue. Out flies the Doue, & through the aire doth go As swift as any arrow from a bowe. Much aire she cuts, and in the earth not seeing One living creature any where have being. Nor any ground wheron the might remaine, With weary wings returnes to him againe. Then rested he vntill the day-star bright Scuentimes remoon'd the canopie of night: Then once againe the Doue he sendeth out, She mounts aloft and flieth round about. And finding much dry ground on earth, prelumes To fall theron, and rouse her ruffled plumes, Now shakes her selfe, and with her bill them peckes. Now layes them downe and orderly them deckes. And having long time frolik'd at her will, Returned with a green leafe in her bill. By this knew Noah that the Flood decreased, Yet other seuendayes in the arke he rested: And when bright Vesper in the Welkin pale' Had thrife and foure times drawne the clowdy vale. The Tragedie.

The third time forth againe he sends the Doue! She swiftly in the aire her wings doth mooue: And finding food her body to sustaine. And ground to rest on never came againe-Yet rested Lamechs offpring in the Arke. Till seuen times againe in Welkin darke Bootes guider of the greater Beare, Had showne himself, and then expelling feare Sets ope the doore, and plainely did espie Floods quite decreal'd, and face of earthall dry. And then the lord commandment to him gaue That he with all things els the Arke should leaue. No stay they made, all things, man, bird and beaftes, VVhom Titan law from either of his reftes Alive on earth, came foorthwith from the arke, There streight their limmes, vinweldy yet and starke. There Enochs ofspring to his God erected Analtar, who from Floods had him prote &cd: And theron for his preservation Did offer vp a just oblation: The smell wherof vnto his throne arose. And cast a pleasant odour to his nose. Expelling quite that detestable stinke VVhich erft alcended from worldes filthy finke. Delighted therfore in this pleasant sauour, He blest all mankind with his gracious fauour: Hencefoorth (quoth he) no moremy wrathfull curfe V pon the world or man I will disburfe. In his due course hot Sommer will I send And winter, till the earth shall have an end; Increase aboundantly, bring foorth and breed, And earth againe replenish with your feed. Beholde, your feare all creatures shall appall, Rule thou as Lord and maister ouer all. Wholo shall man bereaue of vitall breath, His life shall be abridg'd with cruell death. Blood will have blood, whoso shall cut mans life, His also shall be cut with blooudy knife. Encrease aboundantly, bring foorth and breed, The earth againe replenish with your feed, Behold, with thee I make a couenant fure, A couenant which for euer shall endure, With earth, and all thinges which thereon remaine, That I will neuer drowne the world againe, And to confirme my promised decree, A certaine scale therof I giue to thee. This is the scale: a Bowe I meane to shrowde Of divers collours in a pitchie clowd. This is the scale, and this shall be a token, That this my league at no time shall be broken. And when I shall all-hiding heaven cloake With clouds, foorth-pouring mystic raine like smoke. Then I in cloudes will place my certaine seale, Mine euer-during promise to reueale. With furging billowes and impartiall raine That earth shall neuer be destroy'd againe. And this a figne infallible shall be, Ofmine eternall-durable decree.

David and Beersheba.

Such time as Tytan with his fiery beames
In highest degree, made duskish Lee sweat:
Field-tilling Swains drive home their toiling teams
Out-wearied with ardencie of heat:
And country heards to seeke a shadie seate:
All mortall things from servency of weather,
In shelting shades doe shroud themselves together.

A Captaine vnder load of renowne:

V hom princely Danid with a warring rout

Had sent to beat the pride of Ammon downe.

And to besiege and ransacke Rabbah towne,

Betooke her selfe into a garden faire,

Inricht with flowers, which sent a pleasant ayre.

On every fide this garden was befet,

VV ith choise of rare delights and Arbors geason:

The Lentisk, sig-tree, and Pomgranet great,

Grew there in order, far surpassing reason.

The ground was deckt with Gylsslowers sine,

Carnations sweet, and speckled sops in wine.

There might you heare vpon the pleasant trees,
The little birds melodiously to sing:
Vpon the blossoms wrought the painfull Bees,
Neere was it to the pallace of the King,
Within it also was a pleasant spring.
Whose liquid humour moystened the same,
A garden worthy of so worthy dame.

Now gathereth the she sweetest of the sweet, And pretilie from flower to flower trippeth, Soone after to the fountaine turnes her feet, Then daintily her hands of glories the strippeth. And in the Chrystall waves her fingers dippeth. She likes it well, and calles it passing coole, And minds to bath her bodie in the poole.

Then nimbly castes the offher Damaske frocke, Her Satten stole most curiously made: Her Partlet needle-wrought, her Cambricke mocke, And on a seatthereby them nicely laid, And fo to wash her in the well assayd. O shut thine eies Narcissus come not neere,

Surnaying

Danid and Beersheba.

Survaying thus his towne, at length he cast
His eye-lids downe, and saw Beersheba naked:
His princely heart, which never yet did tast
Of euill, stroke with burning sever quaked:
A fire he caught, by no waves to be slaked.

And as he strives to quench this staming fire,
Still kindles it with bellowes of desire.

Much better hadst thou kept within thy pallace, There on thy harpet are fed thy mind with joy: Or entertain'd some pretie pleasing sollace. But are the godly subject to annoy? Must they be ruled by a wanton boy?

His eie approou'd, his heart it gaue consent, And both were spurres vnto his bad intent.

With washing waves her breast he saw her decke,

He cals it Nector, wherof Angels drinke:

With Iuory armes she rubs her milky necke,

White Doues which fall on snow he doth them thin!

He wisheth he himselse were at the brinke.

But with the candle whilst he thus doth play,

At last his wings were burned quite away,

And now begins the combatant affault,

Betweene the willing flesh and nilling spirit.

The flesh alluring him vnto the fault,

The spirit tels him of a dreadfull merit.

And in the end flesh conquered the spirit.

He sends, she came, he wooes, she gaue consent,

And did the deed, not fearing to be shent;

What

David and Berrsheba.

What hast thou done, O Psalmist blush for shame, Thinkst thou thy sinne will never come to light. No, no, Ichonah will reveale the same, Though thou hadst don't in silence of the night. Yet would he bring it into open sight:

T'was he would put thy piety in triall,
To see if thou wouldst yeeld or make denyals.

Now three times Cynthia in the Welkin bright.
Her circle full vnto the earth did-lend.
Thrife had she lost againe her borrowed light.
Since Danid with Beersheba did offend,
And now began she feele her wombe extend.
What should she doesher fault she could not couer,
Of many dayes she had not seen her louer.

And now shee moanes her to the King, and sayes
In mournfull fort, shee seeles her selfe with child:
His guilty mind disturbed many wayes;
(Wit waites on seare) finds out a pretie wild,
Wherwith he hopes his maker to beguild.
But what can Prophets then so grossly slide,
And from their God suppose their singles to hide?

He sendeth word to loab presently,
His true estate in letters to expresse:
And therewith send Vrias speedilie,
Vrias comes, he readeth their successe,
And bids him goe vnto his wife in peace:
But see, the more he labour'd to concease ir,
So much the more God labour'd to reueale ir,

Vrias

Danid and Beerfbeba.

Vrias would not goe vnto his house,
But gathered strawe, and layd it in the yard,
And caring not to frolike with his spouse,
He laid him down to sleep amid the Gard.
As soone as Danid had these tydings hard,
He askes him why he rested not at home,
From toyling warres art thou not lately come?

No (quoth Vrim) tis for me vnfit
To fleep within, whilft Isab is without:
Vnfeemly tis to fee the feruant fit,
And let his maister toyle and run about:
What, lyeth not the Arke of God without?
I sweare by Danids crowne and princelle head,
VV hilft things goe thus, I will not come in bed.

And now is Danid vexed worse and worse,
And enery way is forc'd his wits to sife:
By this he hath deuised a second course,
And means to put in vre a pretic shift,
To make Vria drunken was his drift.
So thinkes he, hee'll forget his dutic quite,
And mooned be therewith to some delight.

He charg'd his ferdantes entertaine him well,
To give him store of wine, and comfits daintie:
Before the King to banquetting they fell,
Sweet syrrops there they had, and wine great plentie:
He dranke to twentie, and he pledged twenty.

They quatt off flagons full, and spared not, The third fell alwayes to Vrias lot.

F3

Danid and Beersbeba.

Heere, heer (faith one) I drinke vnto my brother, Ile pledge him (quoth Vrim) hees my friend; I drinke to such a Captaine (quoth another)

And he to all a good carrouse would send;
Surcharg'd with wine, he staggerd in the end.

He walketh yp and downe the stately hall,
But alwaies leanes, and cleaues vnto the wall.

Full glad was Danid now, and hop'd his plot
Would take effect, he almost was secure:
He heard the souldiour talke he knew not what,
He with Beershebas name did him allure,
He thought that night would breed contentment sure
But whatso ere he built, it could not stand,
For all his worke was built ypon the sand.

Now night was come, all creatures went to rest,
Downe lay the Hitthite where he slept before:
King Danid with a sea of cares opprest,
Was driven welnigh to dispaire his doore,
Yet still against the streame he labours more,
Thus evermore sinne leadethy nto sinne,
'Alesser ends, and greater doth begin.

Stay sinfull King, looke backe, and askethy pardon, It boots thee not alas thy selfe to hide:
So guiltie Adam hid him in the garden,
So Ionah fled vponthe surging tide.
Yet quickly had Iehonah them espide.
Looke backe (I say) consesse it is much better,

To hide a lesser sinne doe not a greater.

'And

Danid and Beerfheba.

And now agains hee's driven to invent,

And vp and downe for pollicies to roue.

Yet finds he nothing vnto his content,

At length the devill a deadly plot doth move,

And he thereof doth presently approve.

In errour blind still walkes the Letcher further,

And thinks to hide adultery with murther.

Oblivious Prophet, call to minde thine oth,
Thou wowdst to keep the covenant of thy Lord:
More sweet thou saydst then combe or honey both,
More deare then Gems which Tague doth afford,
Thou brag'dst thou joyedst only in his word,
Chose he not thee his tender lambes to keepe?
And like a Wosse wilt thou devoure his sheep?

And now begins this deuilishnesse to bud,
He vnto soab letters doth indite.
O fearfull letters, messengers of bloud,
He with him place him foremost in the fight,
And let him die, whilst they escape by slight.

And by Vrias sends he him away,
he guiltesse beares a sword himselse to slay.

He guiltlesse beares a sword himselfe to flay,
And harmlesse feares no treason to be wrought:
So doth the Cony sall into the hay,
So is the bred vnto the Lyme-bush brought,
So on the hookethe nibling Fish is caught.
he to his Captaine doth his letters bring,
Who readeth them, and minds to doe the thing.

Danid and Beerfieba.

Next to the walks V rias preased a maine.

The Rabbanits came out, look fled backe,

And many of his fouldiours there were slaine,

Among the which V rias caught his bane,

O joyfull tydings to th'offenders eares,

Now frolickes he, and no suspicion searcs.

As he were blemisht with no sinful spot,

As all his sinnes were drowned in the deepe,

Or Letbes waves, where all thinges be forgot,

As though Iebonah wink'd and saw him not.

Till at the last vnto his vile disgrace,

Thus Nathan sent, reproou'd him to his face,

Ah Churle (quoth he, and fadly tels the tale,)

Within a little cittie dwelling was:

Much cattell had he feeding in his pale,

And pastures faire, which yeelded hay and grasse,

None could be seene in riches him to passe.

Great store of golde he had, of Gems and treasure,

He selt no want, but lived at his pleasure.

Avery poore man neete vinto him dwelled, I deline it.
One little sheep, who fostered at his manger,
To which in loue he mightily excelled
And in his bosome shrouded her from danger locities of the lowest the shoule there came a stranger.

And sparing all his owne, vnto the feast the butchted vp, and eat the poore mans beast.

Heerae

Danid and Beerfbeba.

Hereat was Danid verie fore incenst, and the chast dand rag de thereat exceedinglies with thout revenge his wrath could not be quench'd, He swore the man that did the sinne should die, Himselse would seehim tortur'd by and by.

Thou, thou (quoth Nathan) art the man indeed.
That hath committed this detelted deed.

Thus fayth thy God, thou wert a shepheards boy,
A seruile arte, and seddest sheep in sield:
Then wert thou subject vnto much annoy,
A russet cloake did thee from weather shield.

And siedst of the fruite thy slocke did yeeld.
A shepheards hooke vponthy back thou borest,
A lether scrip about thy necke thou worest.

Then loyest thou to gather Filberds ripe,
To play at Barly-breake amongst the Syvaines:
To tune rude Odes upon an Oaten pipe,
Thy feeding heards to follow on the plaines,
And drive them backe agains, no little paines
From greedy VV object to shield thy tender Lambes,
And meat to fetch unto their blating Dams.

And now thy title low I have suborned,
Made thee my Prophet of a shepheard base:
And with a Regall Crowne thine head adorned,
I chaung'd thy sheep-hook to a princelie Mace:
What earthly man is now in higher place?
Thou hadst seven brethren goodlier in blee.
Yet I refusing them, made choise of thee-

I make my mone.
Some pittie father on me send.

Remember Lord, that it is more then need, to send redresse,

G² ,

My.

David and Beerfbeba.

My fore will grow (vnlesse thou help with speed) remedilesse.

Therfore in mercie looke down from aboue, and visit me with thy heart-joying loue.

Alas, I see
No cause in me

Which vnto pitie may thee moue.

With finne I only have offended thee, O Lord my God,

And therwithall I purchased haue to me thine heavie rod:

The waight of it doth presse me verie sore, And brings me wel nigh to dispairehis doore.

Alas I shame
To tell the same:

It is before thee euermore.

And this is not first time I sinn'd alas, by many moe:

Within the wombe in fin conceiu'd I was, Borne was I so.

And fince that day I neveryet did ceale,

From time to time thy highnesse to displease.

My life hath bin A race of fin:

Me with thy comfort fomewhat case.

O why did I offend thy glorious Grace !

fo hainoufly?

Why fear'd I nor the presence of thy face who shoodest by?

Because I should acknowledge thee most just,

Danid and Beerfheba.

And in mine owne vprightnes shuld not trust:
Fraile is my fleshs
I must confesse,
And nought is it but sinne and dust.

If thou shalt me asperge with sprinkling grasse, or Hysope greene:

As Chrystall pure, or as the shining glasse, I shall be cleane,

And if thou wilt me wash with water cleare,
More white then Scythan snow I shall appeare
Then whitest snow

Then whitest snow which wind doth blow

From place to place both farreand necre.

My mind O Lord, infectious and foule,
make cleane and pure:
Into thy hands I humbly give my foule
to heale and cure.
Out of thy booke all mine offences blot,
And with thy blood quite take away my spot.

So shall my hare
Be free from smart,
And mine offences quite forgot.

Turn back thy face which al things doth behold from heavens vault:

Least thou espic my trespasse manifold, and hainous fault.

My faults, which are in number many more Then little fands which are vpon the shore, refraine thine ire,

G,

Danid and Beersheba:

I thee defire, And also heale my deadly fore.

Within my breast (O Lord) an humble spirit, do thou create:

And of thy comfort doe not me disherit,'
I thee intreat.

Let me enjoy the fun-shine of thy face, Take not from me the solace of thy grace,

The holy Ghost:
My comfort most.

Let me retaine in any case?

My tongue vntie, my lips (O Lord) resolue, thou art the key:

So will my tongue thy mercie great revolue, from day to day-

Then shall the wicked learne by mine example,
To keep thy statutes which be sweet and ample
And seeing me,
shall turne to thee.

And in the right way learne to trample.

Wouldst thou have bin with sacrifice content, much fat of Rammes,

Much incense sweet on thee wold I have spent and blood of Lambes:

But thou (O God) therto halt no respect,

A broken heart thou neuer wilt reject:

That facrifice Is of most price,

That onlie with thee takes effect.

Danid and Beersteba.

Be gentle Lord to thy Sionian towne, bow downe thy face,
And on thy Shalem fend thy mercie downe, and louing grace:
Reedific her bulwarkes like to fall,
And vp againe build her decaying wall.
Then will I praise
Thy name alwayes.
And give burnt offrings therewithall.

Thus did the Pfalmist warble out his plaints, And ceaseth not from day to day to mone, His heart with anguish othis sorrowe faints.

And still he kneels before his makers throne.

At midnight sends he manie a grieuous grone. So did his God in mercie on him looke.

And all his sinnes did race out of his booke.
