A GLANCE AT PARTIES

In whatever expression, there has been visible any period within the present century during which as much excitement was discernible in the public mind as there is at present. There are no bodily demonstrations connected with the theory of the social and institutional competency of the party which parties may divide upon, and indexible opposition to it. The present administration has not an adversary. The questions of the golden times, provoked no hostility, no exacerbation, and organization from hurt and radically changed. Parties have either ceased to exist and as dead and useless matter, or insensibly crept into the ranks of those who were before hostile to them. The two great sects constitutes a total abstention between the two parties, has ceased to exist, is buried in the grave of Bedlam. The tariff at one time a formidable topic of irritation, is settled in effect, by the adjustment of duties to the point at which incidental protection will hereafter result from discriminating rates of duties, and the revenue. The once vexed question of improvements is no longer a source of difference while Democrats and Whigs alike emphatically denies the doctrine of the constitutional power to construct, every session attests the fact. Kansas is the dominant party question and support to the Democratic issues have grown from the fact. The policy of the Administration, those furious assaults which formerly excited so much opposition, is now the point of view, and made that the party of the administration as invisible as air, and the existence of an opposition party is a matter of history. The Democratic party is, in fact, the only party that perished in its own success. The candidature of the American party which [illegible] but an ephemeral existence, its mind out of sympathy with the disposition of the Administration to [illegible] Democratic party, and [illegible] Democratic party, and [illegible] Democratic party, and
