

DISCOURSES

on 57, a 15.711

A SOBER AND TEMPERATE LIFE.

BY LEWIS CORNARO,
A NOBLE VENETIAN.

Wherein is demonstrated, by his own Example,

THE METHOD OF PRESERVING HEALTH TO EXTREME OLD AGE.

Translated from the Italian Original.

A NEW EDITION, CORRECTED;

To which is added,

PHYSIC OF THE GOLDEN AGE, A FRAGMENT.

LONDON:

Printed for CADELL and DAVIES, J. SCATCHARD, and Vernor and Hoop.

HISTORICAL MEDICAL

1. O. Hally

(iii)

PREFACE.

THE author of the following discourses, Lewis Cornaro, was descended from one of the most illustrious families in Venice, but by the ill conduct of some of his relations, had the misfortune to be deprived of the dignity of a nobleman, and excluded from all honours and public employments in the state. Chagrined at this unmerited difgrace, he retired to Padua, and married a lady of the family of Spiltemberg, A 2 whofe whose name was Veronica. Being in possession of a good estate, he was very defirous of having children; and, after a long expectation of this happiness, his wife was delivered of a daughter, to whom he gave the name of Clara. This was his only child, who afterwards was married to John, the son of Fantini Cornaro, of a rich family in Cyprus, while that island belonged to the republic of Venice. Though he was far advanced in life when his daughter Clara came into the world, yet he lived to fee her very old, and the mother of eight fons

and

and three daughters. He was a man of found understanding, determined courage and resolution. In his younger days he had contracted infirmities by intemperance, and by indulging his too great propenfity to anger; but when he perceived the ill consequence of his irregularities, he had command enough of himself to subdue his passion and inordinate appetites. By means of great sobriety, and a strict regimen in his diet, h. recovered his health and vigour, which he preserved to an extreme old age. At a very advanced stage of life he wrote the A 3 following following discourses, wherein he acquaints us with the irregularity of his youth, his reformation of manners, and the hopes he entertained of living a long time. Nor was he mistaken in his expectation, for he refigned his last breath without any agony, fitting in an elbow chair, being above an hundred years old. This happened at Padua, the 26th of April, 1566. His lady, almost as old as himself, survived him but a short time, and died an easy death. They were both interred in St. Antony's church, without any pomp, pursuant pursuant to their testamentary directions.

These discourses, though written in Cornaro's old age, were penned at different times, and published separately: The first, which he wrote at the age of eighty-three, is entitled, A Treatise on a Sober Life, in which he declares war against every kind of intemperance; and his vigorous old age speaks in favour of his precepts. The fecond treatise he composed at the age of eightfix: it contains farther encomiums on fobriety, and points out the means of mending a bad constitution.

tion. He fays, that he came into the world with a choleric disposition, but that his temperate way of life had enabled him to subdue it. The third, which he wrote at the age of ninety-one, is entitled, An Earnest Exhortation to a Sober Life; here he uses the strongest arguments to perfuade mankind to embrace a temperate life, as the means of attaining a healthy and vigorous old age. The fourth and last, is a Letter to Barbaro, Patriarch of Aquileia, written at the age of ninety-five; it contains a lively description of the health, health, vigour, and perfect use of all his faculties, which he had the happiness of enjoying at that advanced period of life.

This useful work was translated some years ago into English, under the title of, Sure and certain methods of attaining a long and healthy life. The translator feems rather to have made use of a French version than of the Italian original; he has likewife omitted feveral passages of the Italian, and the whole is rather a paraphrase than a translation. This has induced us to give the public an exact exact and faithful version of that excellent performance, from the Venice edition in 8vo, in the year 1620*: and as a proof of the merit and authenticity of the work, we beg leave to quote Mr. Addison's recommendation of it, Spectator, Vol. iii. No 195.

"The most remarkable instance of the efficacy of temperance, towards the procuring long life, is what we meet with in a little book published by Lewis Cornaro, the Venetian; which I the rather

^{*} The first edition was published by the author at Padua, in 4to, A. D. 1558.

[&]quot; mention,

" mention, because it is of undoubted credit, as the late Venetian ambassa-"dor, who was of the fame family, c attested more than once in conver-" fation, when he resided in England. " Cornaro, who was the author of the "little treatife I am mentioning, " was of an infirm constitution, till " about forty, when, by obstinately " perfifting in an exact course of tem-" perance, he recovered a perfect " state of health; infomuch that at " fourscore he published his book, " which has been translated into " English under the title of, Sure

ec and

" and certain methods of attaining a " long and healthy life. He lived to " give a third or fourth edition of " it, and after having 'passed his " hundredth year, died without pain " or agony, and like one who falls " afleep. The treatife I mention " has been taken notice of by feve-" ral eminent authors, and is written " with such a spirit of cheerfulness, " religion, and good fense, as are the " natural concomitants of temperance " and fobriety. The mixture of the " old man in it, is rather a recomer mendation than a discredit to it."

A TREATISE

TREATISE

ON

A SOBER LIFE.

It is a thing past all doubt, that custom, by time, becomes a fecond nature, forcing men to use that, whether good or bad, to which they have been habituated: nay, we fee habit, in many things, get the better of reason. This is so undeniably true, that virtuous men, by converfing with the wicked, very often fall into the fame vicious course of life. The contrary, likewise, we fee fometimes happen; viz. that, as good morals eafily change to bad, fo bad morals

B

change

change again to good. For instance: let a wicked man, who was once virtuous, keep company with a virtuous man, and he will again become virtuous; and this alteration can be attributed to nothing but the force of habit, which is, indeed, very great. Seeing many examples of this; and befides, confidering that, in confequence of this great force of habit, three bad customs have got footing in Italy within a few years, even within my own memory; the first flattery and ceremoniousness; the second Lutheranism*, which some have most

^{*} The author writes with the prejudice of a zealous Roman Catholic against the dectrine of the Reformation, which he here distinguishes by the name of Lutheranism. This was owing to the artifices of the Romish clergy in those days, by whom the reformed religion was misrepresented, as introductive of licenticusness and debauchery.

prepofteroufly embraced; the third intemperance; and that these three vices, like so many cruel montters, leagued, as indeed they are, against mankind, have gradually prevailed fo far, as to rob civil life of its fincerity, the foul of its piety, and the body of its health; I have refolved to treat of the last of these vices, and prove that it is an abuse, in order to extirpate it, if possible. As to the second, Lutheranism, and the first, flattery, I am certain, that some great genius or another will foon undertake the task of exposing their deformity, and effectually suppressing them. Therefore, I firmly hope, that, before I die, I shall see these three abuses conquered and driven out of Italy; and this country of course restored to its former laudable and virtuous cuf-

To come then to that abuse, of which I have proposed to speak, namely, intemperance; I fay, that it is a great pity it should have prevailed fo much, as entirely to banish sobriety. Though all are agreed, that intemperance is the offspring of gluttony, and fober living of abstemiousness; the former, nevertheless, is considered as a virtue and a mark of distinction, and the latter, as dishonourable and the badge of avarice. Such mistaken notions are entirely owing to the power of custom, established by our fenses and irregular appetites; these have blinded and befotted men to fuch a degree, that, leaving the paths of virtue, they have followed those of vice, which lead them before their time to an old age, burthened with strange and mortal infirmities, so as to render them quite decrepid before forty, contrary to the effects of sobriety, which, before it was banished by this destructive intemperance, used to keep men found and hearty to the age of eighty and upwards. O wretched and unhappy Italy! do not you fee, that intemperance murders every year more of your subjects, than you could lose by the most cruel plague, or by fire and fword in many battles? Those truly shameful featls, now fo much in fashion, and so intolerably profuse, that no tables are large enough to hold the dishes, which renders it necessary to heap them one upon another; those feasts, I say, are so many battles; and how is it possible to support nature by fuch a variety of contrary and unwholesome foods? Put a stop to this abuse, for God's fake, for there is not, I am certain of it, a vice more abominable than this in the eyes of the divine Majesty. Drive away this new kind of death, as you have banished the plague, which, though it formerly used to make fuch havock, now does little or no mischief, owing to the laudable practice of atttending more to the goodness of the provisions brought to our markets. There are means still left to banish intemperance, and fuch means too, that every man may have recourse to them without any affistance. Nothing more is requifite for this purpose, than to live up to the simplicity dictated by nature, which teaches us to be content with little, to purfue the medium of holy abitemiousness and divine reason, and to accustom ourselves to eat no more than is absolutely necessary to support life; confidering, that what exceeds this, is difeafe and death, and merely gives the palate a fatisfaction, which, though but momentary, brings on the body a long and lasting train of disagreeable sensations and diseases, and at length destroys it along with the foul. How many friends of mine, men of the finest understanding and most amiable disposition, have I seen carried off by this plague in the flower of their youth; who, were they now living, would be an ornament to the public, and whose company I should enjoy with as much pleasure, as I now feel concern at their loss.

that,

In order, therefore, to put a stop to so great an evil, I have resolved by this short discourse to demonstrate, that intemperance is an abuse which may be easily removed, and that the good old fober living may be substituted in its stead; and this I undertake the more readily, as many young men of the best understanding, knowing that it is a vice, have requelted it of me, moved thereto by feeing their fathers drop off in the flower of their youth, and me fo found and hearty at the age of eighty-one. They expressed a desire to reach the same term, nature not forbidding us to wish for longevity; and old-age being, in fact, that time of life in which prudence can be best exercifed, and the fruits of all the other virtues enjoyed with less opposition, the passions being then fo fubdued, that man gives himfelf up entirely to reason. They befeeched me to let them know the method purfued by me to attain it; and then finding them intent on so laudable a pursuit, I have refolved to treat of that method, in order to be of service not only to them, but to all those who may be willing to peruse this discourse. I shall, therefore, give my reasons for renouncing intemperance, and betaking myfelf to a fober course of life; declare freely the method purfued by me for that purpose; and and then fet forth the effects of so good an habit upon me; whence it may be clearly gathered, how easy it is to remove the abuse of intemperance. I shall conclude, by shewing how many conveniencies and blessings are the consequences of a sober life.

nature

I fay then, that the heavy train of infirmities, which had not only invaded, but even made great inroads in my constitution, were my motives for renouncing intemperance, to which I had been greatly addicted; so that, in consequence of it, and the badness of my constitution, my stomach being exceedingly cold and moift, I was fallen into different kinds of disorders, such as pains in my stomach, and often stitches, and spices of the gout; attended by, what was still worse, an almost continual flow fever, a stomach generally out of order, and a perpetual thirst. From these natural and acquired disorders the best delivery I had to hope for, was death, to put an end to the pains and miseries of life; a period very remote in the regular course of nature, though I had haftened it by my irregular manner of living. Finding myfelf, therefore, in fuch unhappy circumstances between my thirty-fifth and fortieth year, every thing that could be thought of having been tried to no purpose to relieve me, the physicians gave me to understand, that there was but one method left to get the better of my complaints, provided I would resolve to use it, and patiently persevere in

it. This was a fober and regular life, which they affured me would be still of the greatest service to me, and would be as powerful in its effects, as the intemperate and irregular one had been, in reducing me to the prefent low condition: and that I might be fully fatisfied of its falutary effects, for though by my irregularities I was become infirm, I was not reduced fo low, but that a temperate life, the opposite in every respect to an intemperate one, might still entirely recover me. And besides, it in fact appears, fuch a regular life, whilst obferved, preferves men of a bad constitution. and far gone in years, just as a contrary course has the power to destroy those of the best constitution, and in their prime; for this plain reason, that different modes of life are attended by different effects; art following, even herein, the steps of nature, with equal power to correct natural vices and imperfections. This is obvious in husbandry and the like. They added, that if I did not immediately have recourse to such a regimen, I could receive no benefit from it in a few months, and that in a few more I must resign myself to death.

These solid and convincing arguments made such an impression on me, that, mortified as I was besides, by the thoughts of dying in the prime of life, and at the same time perpetually tormented by various diseases, I immediately concluded, that the foregoing contrary effects could not be produced but by contrary modes of living: and therefore, full of hopes, refolved, in order to avoid at once both death and difeafe, to betake myself to a regular course of life. Having, upon this, inquired of them what rules I should follow, they told me, that I must not use any food, solid or liquid, but fuch as, being generally prefcribed to fick perfons, is, for that reason, called diet, and both very sparingly. These directions, to fay the truth, they had before given me; but it was at a time of life when, impatient of fuch restraint, and finding myself satiated, as it were, with such food, I could not put up with it, and therefore eat freely of every thing I liked best; and likewise, feeling myself in a manner parched up by the heat of my difease, made no scruple of drinking, and in large quantities, the wines that best pleased my palate. This indeed, like all other patients, I kept a fecret from my physicians. But, when I had once resolved to live sparingly, and according to the dictates of reason, seeing that it was my duty as a man fo to do, I entered with fo much refolution upon this new course of life, that nothing has been fince able to divert me from it. The consequence was, that in a few days I began to perceive, that fuch a course agreed with me very well; and by pursuing it, in less than a year, I found myself (some persons, perhaps, will not believe it) entirely freed from all my complaints.

C duced

Having thus recovered my health, I began feriously to consider the power of temperance, and fay to myself, that if this virtue had efficacy enough to subdue such grievous disorders as mine, it must have still greater to preserve me in health, to help my bad constitution, and comfort my very weak stomach. I therefore applied myself diligently to discover what kinds of food fuited me best. But, first, I resolved to try, whether those, which pleased my palate, agreed or difagreed with my stomach, in order to judge for myself of the truth of that proverb, which I once held for true, and is univerfally held as such in the highest degree, infomuch that epicures, who give a loofe to their appetites, lay it down as a fundamental maxim. This proverb is, that whatever pleafes the palate, must agree with the stomach, and nourish the body; or whatever is palatable must be equally wholesome and nourishing. The issue was, that I found it to be false: for, though rough and very cold wines, as likewife melons and other fruits, fallad, fish and pork, tarts, garden-stuff, pastry, and the like, were very pleasing to my palate, they disagreed with me notwithstanding. Having thus convinced myself, that the proverb in question was false, I looked upon it as fuch; and, taught by experience, I gave over the use of such meats and wines, and likewise of ice; chose wine suited to my stomach, drinking of it but the quantity I knew I could digeft. I did the same by my meat, as well in regard to quantity as to quality, accustoming myself never to cloy my ftomach with eating or drinking; but constantly rise from table with a dispofition to eat and drink still more. In this I conformed to the proverb, which fays, that a man, to confult his health, must check his appetite. Having in this manner, and for these reasons, conquered intemperance and irregularity, I betook myself entirely to a temperate and regular life; which effected in me the alteration already mentioned, that is, in less than a year it rid me of all those disorders, which had taken so deep a root in me; nay, as I have already observed, had made such a progress, as to be in a manner incurable. It had likewife this other good effect, that I no longer experienced those annual fits of fickness, with which I used to be afflicted, while I followed a different, that is a fenfual, course of life: for then I used to be attacked every year with a strange kind of fever, which fometimes brought me to death's door. From this disease, then, I also freed myself, and became exceeding healthy, as I have continued from that time forward to this very day; and for no other reason than that I never trespassed against regularity, which by its infinite efficacy has been the cause, that the meat I constantly eat, and the wine I constantly drank, being such as agreed with my constitution, and taken in proper quantities, imparted all their virtue to my body, and then lest it without difficulty, and without engendering in it any bad humours.

In consequence therefore of my taking such methods, I have always enjoyed, and (God be praised) actually enjoy, the best of healths. It is true, indeed, that, besides the two foregoing most important rules relative to eating and drinking, which I have ever been very scrupulous to observe; that is, not to take of any thing, but as much as my stomach can easily digest, and to use those things only, which agree with me;

I have carefully avoided heat, cold, and extraordinary fatigue, interruption of my usual hours of rest, excessive venery, máking any stay in bad air, and exposing myfelf to the wind and fun; for these, too, are great disorders. But then, fortunately, there is no great difficulty in avoiding them, the love of life and health having more fway over men of understanding, than any satisfaction they could find in doing what must be extremely hurtful to their constitution. I have likewise done all that lay in my power to avoid those evils, which we do not find so easy to remove; these are melancholy, hatred, and other violent passions, which appear to have the greatest influence over our bodies. However, I have not been been able to guard fo well against either one or the other kind of those disorders, as not to suffer myself now and then to be hurried away by many, not to fay, all of them; but I have reaped the benefit of knowing by experience that these passions have, in the main, no great influence over bodies governed by the two foregoing rules of eating and drinking, and therefore can do them but very little harm; fo that it may with great truth be affirmed, that whoever observes these two capital rules, is liable to very little inconveniency from any other excesses. This, Galen, who was an eminent physician, observed before me. He affirms, that so long as he followed these rules relative to eating and drinking, he fuffered but little from other disorders, so little,

did

little, that they never gave him above a day's uneafinefs. That what he fays is true, I am a living witness, and so are many others, who know me, and have feen, how often I have been exposed to heats and colds, and fuch other difagreeable changes of weather; and have, likewife, feen me (owing to various misfortunes, which have more than once befallen me) greatly diffurbed in my mind. For they cannot only fay of me, that fuch disturbance of mind has done me very little harm, but they can aver of many others, who did not lead a fober and regular life, that it proved very prejudicial to then, amongst whom was a brother of my own, and others of my family, who trusting to the goodness of their constitution, did not follow my way of living. The consequence hereof was a great missortune to them, the perturbations of the mind having thereby acquired an extraordinary influence over their bodies. Such, in a word, was their grief and dejection at feeing me involved in expensive law-fuits, commenced against me by great and powerful men, that, fearing I should be cast, they were feized with that melancholy humour, with which intemperate bodies always abound; and these humours had such an influence over them, and increased to such a degree, as to carry them off before their time; whereas I suffered nothing on the occasion, as I had in me no superfluous humours of that kind. Nay, in order to keep up my spirits, I brought myself to think, that God had raifed up these suits against me, in order to make me more senfible of my strength of body and mind; and that I should get the better of them with honour and advantage, as it, in fact, came to pass: for, at last, I obtained a decree exceeding favourable to my fortune and my character, which, though it gave me the highest pleasure, had not the power to do me any harm in other respects. Thus it is plain, that neither melancholy nor any other affection of the mind can hurt bodies governed with temperance and regularity.

keep

But I must go a step farther, and say, that even misfortunes themselves can do but very little mischief, or cause but very little pain, to fuch bodies; and that this is true, I have myfelf experienced at the age of seventy. I happened, as is often the case, to be in a coach, which going at a pretty fmart rate, was overfet, and in that condition drawn a confiderable way by the horses, before means could be found to stop them; whence I received fo many shocks and bruises, that I was taken out with my head and all the rest of my body terribly battered, and a diflocated leg and arm. When I was brought home, the family immediately fent for the physicians, who, on their arrival, feeing me in fo bad a plight, concluded, that within three days I should die; nevertheless, they would try what good two things would do me; one was to bleed me, the other to purge me; and thereby prevent my humours altering, as they every moment expected, to fuch a degree, as to ferment greatly, and bring on a high fever. But I, on the contrary, who knew, that the fober life I had led for many years past, had so well united, harmonized, and disposed my humours, as not to leave it in their power to ferment to fuch a degree, refused to be either bled, or purged. I just caused my leg and arm to be fet, and suffered myself to be rubbed with fome oils, which they faid were proper on the occasion. Thus, without using any other kind of remedy, I recovered, as I thought I should, without feeling the least alteration in myself, or any other bad effects from the accident; a thing, which appeared miraculous even in the eyes of the physicians. Hence we are to infer, that whoever leads a fober and regular life, and commits no excess in his diet, can suffer but very little from diforders of any other kind, or external accidents. On the contrary, I conclude, especially from the late trial I have had, that excesses in eating and drinking are fatal. Of this I convinced myself four years ago, when by the advice of my physicians, the instigation of my friends, and the importunity of my own family, I confented to fuch an excess, which, as it will appear hereafter, was attended with far worse consequences than could naturally be expected. This excess confisted in increasing the quantity of food I generally made use of; which increase alone brought on me a most cruel sit of sickness. And as it is a case so much in point to the subject in hand, and the knowledge of it may be useful to some of my readers, I shall take the trouble to relate it.

D 2 appeared

alone

I fay, then, that my dearest friends and relations, actuated by the warm and laudable affection and regard they have for me, feeing how little I eat, represented to me, in conjunction with my physicians, that the fustenance I took could not be sufficient to support one fo far advanced in years, when it was become necessary not only to preferve nature, but to increase its vigour. That, as this could not be done without food, it was absolutely incumbent upon me to eat a little more plentifully.

D₃ I, on

I, on the other hand, produced my reasons for not complying with their defires. These were, that nature is content with little, and that with this little I had preferved myself so many years; and that, to me, the habit of it was become a fecond nature; and that it was more agreeable to reason, that, as I advanced in years and lost my strength, I should rather lessen than increase the quantity of my food: farther, that it was but natural to think, that the powers of the stomach grew weaker from day to day; on which account I could fee no reason to make such an addition. To corroborate my arguments, I alledged those two natural and very true proverbs; one, that he, who has a mind to eat a great deal, must must eat but little; which is said for no other reason than this, that eating little makes a man live very long; and living very long he must eat a great deal. The other proverb was, that what we leave after making a hearty meal, does us more good than what we have eat. But neither these proverbs, nor any other arguments I could think of, were able to prevent their teafing me more than ever. Wherefore, not to appear obstinate, or affect to know more than the physicians themselves; but, above all, to please my family, who very carnestly defired it, from a persuasion that fuch an addition to my usual allowance would preferve my thrength, I confented to increase the quantity of food, but with two ounces only. So that, as before, what with bread, meat, the yolk of an egg, and foup, I eat as much as weighed in all twelve ounces, neither more nor less, I now increased it to fourteen; and as before I drank but fourteen ounces of wine, I now increased it to fixteen. This increase and irregularity, had, in eight days time, fuch an effect upon me, that, from being cheerful and brifk, I began to be peevish and melancholy, fo that nothing could please me; and was constantly so strangely difposed, that I neitiler knew what to say to others, nor what to do with myself. On the twelfth day, I was attacked with a most violent pain in my fide, which held me twenty-two hours, and was fucceeded by a terrible

terrible fever, which continued thirty-five days and as many nights, without giving me a moment's respite; though, to say the truth, it began to abate gradually on the fifteenth. But, notwithstanding such abatement, I could not, during the whole time, fleep half a quarter of an hour together, infomuch that every one looked upon me as a dead man. But, God be praised, I recovered merely by my former regular course of life, though then in my feventy-eighth year, and in the coldest season of a very cold year, and reduced to a mere skeleton; and I am positive that it was the great regularity I had observed for fo many years, and that only, which refgued me from the jaws of death. that time I never knew what fickness was. unless unless I may call by that name some slight and spositions of a day or two's continuance; the regular life I had led, as I have already taken notice, for fo many years, not having permitted any fuperfluous or bad humours to breed in me; or if they did, to acquire fuch strength and malignity, as they generally acquire in the superannuated bodies of those who live without rule. And as there was not any old malignity in my humours (which is the thing that kills people), but only that which my new irregularity had occasioned, this fit of sickness, though exceeding violent, had not strength enough to destroy me. This it was, and nothing elfe, that faved my life: whence may be gathered, how great is the power and efficacy

efficacy of regularity; and how great, likewife, is that of irregularity, which in a few days could bring on me fo terrible a fit of fickness, just as regularity had preserved me in health for so many years.

And it appears to me a no weak argument, that, fince the world, confisting of the four elements, is upheld by order; and our life, as to the body, is no other than an harmonious combination of the fame four elements, fo it should be preserved and maintained by the very fame order; and, on the other hand, it must be worn out by fickness, or destroyed by death, which are produced by the contrary effects. By order the arts are more eafily learned; by order armies are rendered victorious; by order, in a word, families, cities, and even states are maintained. Hence I conclude, that orderly living is no other than a most certain cause and foundation of health and long life; nay I cannot help faying, that it is the only true medicine; and whoever weighs the matter well, must also conclude, that this is really the case. Hence it is, that when a physician comes to visit a patient, the first thing he prescribes is to live regularly. In like manner, when a phyfician takes leave of a patient, on his being recovered, he advifes him, as he tenders his health, to lead a regular life. And it is not to be doubted that, were a patient to recovered to live in that manner, he could never be fick again, as it removes every cause of illness:

illness; and so, for the future, would never want either physician or physic. Nay, by attending duly to what I have faid, he would become his own physician, and, indeed, the best he could have; since, in fact, no man can be a perfect physician to any one but himfelf. The reason of which is, that any man may, by repeated trials, acquire a perfect knowledge of his own constitution, and the most hidden qualities of his body; and what wine and food agree with his stomach. Now, it is fo far from being an easy matter to know these things perfectly of another, that we cannot without much trouble difcover them in ourselves, since a great deal of time and repeated trials are requifite for that purpose.

These trials are, indeed, (if I may say it) more than necessary, as there is a greater variety in the natures and constitutions of different men, than in their perfons. Who could believe, that old wine, wine that had passed its first year, should disagree with my ftomach, and new wine agree with it? and that pepper, which is looked upon as a warm spice, should not have a warm effect upon me, infomuch that I find myself more warmed and comforted by cinnamon? Where is the physician that could have informed me of these two latent qualities, since I myself, even by a long course of observation, could scarce discover them? From all these reasons it follows, that it is impossible to be a perfect physician to another. Since, therefore, a man cannot have a better physician than himself, nor any physic better than a regular life, a regular life he ought to embrace.

I do not, however, mean, that, for the knowledge and cure of fuch diforders as often befall those who do not live regularly, there is no occasion for a physician, and that his affishance ought to be slighted. For, if we are apt to receive such great comfort from friends, who come to visit us in our illness, though they do no more than testify their concern for us, and bid us be of good cheer; how much more regard ought we to have for the physician, who is a friend that comes to see us in order to relieve us, and promifes us a cure? But for the bare purpose of keeping ourselves in good health, I am of opinion, that we should consider as a physician this regular life, which, as we have feen, is our natural and proper physic, fince it preserves men, even those of a bad constitution, in health; makes them live found and hearty to the age of one hundred and upwards; and prevents their dying of fickness, or through a corruption of their humours, but merely by a dissolution of their radical moisture, when quite exhausted; all which effects several wise men have attributed to potable gold, and the elixir, fought for by many, but discovered by few. However, to confess the truth, men, for the most part, are very sensual and intemperate, and love to fatisfy their appetites, and to commit every excess; therefore, seeing that they cannot avoid being greatly injured by fuch excess, as often as they are guilty of it, they, by way of apologizing for their conduct, fay, that it is better to live ten years less, and enjoy themselves; not confidering, of what importance are ten years more of life, especially a healthy life, and at a maturer age; when men become fensible of their progress in knowledge and virtue, which cannot attain to any degree of perfection before this period of life.

Not to speak, at present, of many other advantages, I shall barely mention that in regard to letters and the sciences; far the greatest number of the best and most celebrated books extant, were written during that period of life, and those ten years, which some make it their business to undervalue, dervalue, in order to give a loose to their appetites. Be that as it will, I would not act like them. I rather coveted to live these ten years, and, had I not done so, I should never have finished those tracts, which I have composed in consequence of my having been found and hearty these ten years past; and which I have the pleafure to think will be of service to others. These sensualists add, that a regular life is fuch as no man can lead. To this I anfwer, Galen, who was so great a physician, led fuch a life, and chose it as the best phyfic. The same did Plato, Cicero, Isocrates, and many other great men of former times; whom, not to tire the reader, I shall forbear naming: and, in our own days, pope Paul Farnese led it, and cardinal Bembo; and it was for that reason they lived so long; likewife our two doges, Lando and Donato; besides many others of meaner condition, and those who live not only in cities, but also in different parts of the country, who all found great benefit by comforming to this regularity. Therefore, fince many have led this life, and many actually lead it, it is not fuch a life but that every one may conform to it; and the more so, as no great difficulty attends it; nothing, indeed, being requisite but to begin in good earnest, as the above-mentioned Cicero affirms, and all those who now live in this manner. Plato, you will say, though he himself lived very regularly, affirms, notwithstanding, that, in republics, men cannot do so, being often obliged to expose themselves to heat, cold, cold, and feveral other kinds of hardship, and other things, which are all fo many diforders, and incompatible with a regular life. I answer, as I have already observed, that these are not disorders attended with any bad consequence, or which affect either health or life, when the man, who undergoes them, observes the rules of sobriety, and commits no excess in the two points concerning diet, which a republican may very well avoid, nay it is requifite he should avoid; because, by fo doing, he may be fure either to escape those disorders, which, otherwise, it would be no easy matter for him to escape while exposed to these hardships; or, in case he could not escape them, he may more easily and speedily prevent their bad effects.

Here it may be objected, and fome actually object, that he, who leads a regular life, having constantly, when well, made use of food fit for the sick, and in small quantities, has no resource left in case of illness. To this I might, in the first place, answer, that nature, desirous to preserve man in good health as long as possible, informs him, herfelf, how he is to act in time of illness: for she immediately deprives him, when fick, of his appetite, in order that he may eat but little; because nature (as I have faid already) is fatisfied with little; wherefore, it is requisite, that a man, when sick, whether he has been a regular or irregular liver, should use no meats, but such as are suited to his disorder; and of these even in a much smaller quantity than he was wont to do when in health. For were he to eat. as much as he used to do, he would die by it: because it would be only adding to the burden, with which nature was already oppressed, by giving her a greater quantity of food than she can in such circumstances support; and this, I imagine, would be a fufficient caution to any fick person. But, independent of all this, I might answer fome others, and still better, that whoever leads a regular life, cannot be fick; or, at least, but seldom, and for a short time; because, by living regularly, he extirpates every feed of fickness; and thus, by removing the cause, prevents the effect; so that he, who pursues a regular course of life, need not be apprehensive of illness, as he

he need not be afraid of the effect, who has guarded against the cause.

Since it therefore appears that a regular life is so profitable and virtuous, so lovely and fo holy, it ought to be univerfally followed and embraced; and the more fo, as it does not clash with the means or duties of any flation, but is easy to all; because, to lead it, a man need not tie himself down to eat so little as I do, or not to eat fruit, fish, and other things of that kind, from which I abstain, who eat little, because it is fufficient for my puny and weak stomach; and fruit, fish, and other things of that kind, difagree with me, which is my reason for not touching them. Those, however, with whom fuch things agree, may and ought to eat of them; fince they are not by any means forbid the use of such sustenance. But, then, both they, and all others, are forbid to eat a greater quantity of any kind of food, even of that which agrees with them, than what their stomachs can easily digest; the same is to be understood of drink. Hence it is that those, with whom nothing difagrees, are not bound to observe any rule but that relating to the quantity, and not to the quality, of their food; a rule which they may, without the least difficulty in the world, comply with.

Let nobody tell me, that there are numbers who, though they live most irregularly, live in health and spirits to those remote periods of life, attained by the most sober; for, this argument being grounded on a casefull of uncertainty and hazard, and which, besides, so seldom occurs, as to look more like a miracle than the work of nature, men should not suffer themselves to be thereby perfuaded to live irregularly, nature having been too liberal to those who did so without fuffering by it; a favour which very few have any right to expect. Whoever, trusting to his youth, or the strength of his constitution, or the goodness of his stomach, flights these observations, must expect to fuffer greatly by fo doing, and live in constant danger of disease and death. I therefore affirm, that an old man, even of a bad constitution, who leads a regular and fober life, is furer of a long one, than a young man of the best constitution, who leads a disorderly life. It is not to be doubted, F g.

doubted, however, that a man bleffed with a good constitution may, by living temperately, expect to live longer than one whose constitution is not so good; and that God and nature can dispose matters so, that a man shall bring into the world with him fo found a constitution, as to live long and healthy, without observing such strict rules; and then die in a very advanced age through a mere diffolution of his elementary parts; as was the case, in Venice, of the procurator Thomas Contarini; and, in Padua, of the cavalier Antonio Capo di Vacca. But it is not one man in a hundred thoufand that so much can be said of. If others have a mind to live long and healthy, and die without fickness of body or mind, but by mere diffolution, they must submit to live regularly, fince they cannot otherwise expect to enjoy the fruits of fuch a life, which are almost infinite in number, and each of them, in particular, of infinite value. For, as fuch regularity keeps the humours of the body cleanfed and purified; it fuffers no vapours to afcend from the stomach to the head; hence the brain of him, who lives in that manner, enjoys such a constant serenity, that he is always perfectly master of himfelf. He, therefore, eafily foars above the low and groveling concerns of this life, to the exalted and beautiful contemplation of heavenly things, to his exceeding great comfort and fatisfaction; because he, by this means, comes to confider, know, and understand, that which otherwise he would never have confidered, known, or understood; that is, how great is the power, wisdom, and goodness of the Deity. He then descends to nature, and acknowledges her for the daughter of God; and fees, and even feels with his hands, that which, in any other age, or with a perception less clear, he could never have seen or felt. He then truly discerns the brutality of that vice into which they fall, who know not how to subdue their passions, and those three importunate lusts which, one would imagine, came all together into the world with us, in order to keep us in perpetual anxiety and disturbance. These are, the lust of the flesh, the lust of honours, and the lust of riches; which are apt to increase with years in fuch old perfons as do not lead a regular life; because, in their passage through the stage of manhood, they did not, as they ought, renounce fenfuality and their passions, and take up with sobriety and reason; virtues which men of a regular life did not neglect when they paffed through the above-mentioned stage. For, knowing fuch paffions and fuch lufts to be inconfistent with reason, by which they are entirely governed, they, at once, broke loose from all temptations to vice; and, instead of being flaves to their inordinate appetites, they applied themselves to virtue and good works; and by these means they altered their conduct, and became men of good and fober lives. When, therefore, in process of time, they see themselves brought by a long feries of years to their disfolution, conscious that, through the singular mercy of God, they had so sincerely relinquished the paths of vice, as never afterwards to enter them; and moreover hoping, through the merits of our Saviour Jesus Christ, to die in his favour, they do not fuffer themselves to be cast down at the thoughts of death, knowing that they must die. This is particularly the cafe, when, loaded with honour, and fated with life, they fee themfelves arrived at that age, which not one in many thousands of those, who live otherwise, ever attains. They have still the greater reason not to be dejected at the thoughts of death, as it does not attack them violently and by furprise, furprife, with a bitter and painful turn of their humours, with feverish sensations, and sharp pains, but steals upon them insensibly and with the greatest ease and gentleness; such an end, proceeding entirely from an exhaustion of the radical moisture, which decays by degrees like the oil of a lamp; so that they pass gently, without any sickness, from this terrestrial and mortal to a celestial and eternal life.

process

O holy and truly happy regularity! How holy and happy should men, in fact, deem thee, since the opposite habit is the cause of such guilt and misery, as evidently appears to those who consider the opposite effects of both! so that men should know thee by thy voice alone, and thy lovely name; for what a glorious name, what a noble thing, is an orderly and fober life! as, on the contrary, the bare mention of diforder and intemperance is offensive to our ears. Nay, there is the same difference between the mentioning these two things, as between the uttering of the words angel and devil.

Thus I have affigned my reasons for abandoning intemperance, and betaking myself entirely to a sober life; with the method I pursued in doing so, and what was the consequence of it; and, finally, the advantages and bleffings, which a sober life confers upon those who embrace it. Some sensual, inconsiderate persons affirm, that a long life is no bleffing; and that the state of a man, who has passed his seventy-sisth year, cannot really be called life, but death: but this is a great mistake, as I shall fully prove; and it is my sincere wish, that all men would endeavour to attain my age, in order that they too may enjoy that period of life, which of all others is the most desirable.

I will therefore give an account of my recreations, and the relish which I find at this stage of life, in order to convince the public (which may likewise be done by all those who know me) that the state I have now attained to is by no means death, but real life; such a life, as by many is deemed happy, since it abounds with all the selicity that can be enjoyed in this world. And this testimony they will give, in the first place, because they see, and not without the greatest amazement, the good state of health and spirits I enjoy; how I mount my horse without any affistance, or advantage of situation; and how I not only ascend a fingle flight of stairs, but climb up an hill from bottom to top, afoot, and with the greatest ease and unconcern; then how gay, pleafant, and good-humoured I am; how free from every perturbation of mind, and every disagreeable thought; in lieu of which, joy and peace have fo firmly fixed their residence in my bosom, as never to depart from it. Moreover, they know in what manner I pass my time, so as not to find life a burden; feeing I can contrive to fpend fpend every hour of it with the greatest delight and pleasure, having frequent opportunities of conversing with many honourable gentlemen, men valuable for their good fense and manners, their acquaintance with letters, and every other good quality. Then, when I cannot enjoy their conversation, I betake myfelf to the reading of some good book. When I have read as much as I like, I write; endeavouring, in this as in every thing else, to be of service to others, to the utmost of my power. And all these things I do with the greatest ease to myself, at their proper feafons, and in my own house; which, besides being situated in the most beautiful quarter of this noble and learned city of Padua, is, in itself, really convenient convenient and handsome, such, in a word, as it is no longer the fashion to build; for, in one part of it, I can shelter myself from extreme heat; and, in the other, from extreme cold, having contrived the apartments according to the rules of architecture, which teach us what is to be observed in practice.

Besides this house, I have my several gardens, supplied with running waters; and in which I always find something to do, that amuses me. I have another way of diverting myself, which is going every April and May; and, likewise, every September and October, for some days, to enjoy an eminence belonging to me in the Euganean mountains, and in the most beautiful part of them, adorned with fountains and gardens; and, above all, a convenient and handsome lodge; in which place I likewise now and then make one in some hunting party fuitable to my taste and age. Then I enjoy for as many days my villa in the plain, which is laid out in regular streets, all terminating in a large square, in the middle of which stands the church, suited to the condition of the place. This villa is divided by a wide and rapid branch of the river Brenta, on both sides of which there is a considerable extent of country, confisting entirely of fertile and well-cultivated fields. Besides, this district is now, God be praised, exceedingly well inhabited, which it was not at first, but rather the reverse; for it was marshy; and the air so unwholesome, as to make it a refidence

on my draining off the waters, the air mended, and people reforted to it so fast, and increased to such a degree, that it soon acquired the perfection in which it now appears: hence I may say, with truth, that I have offered in this place, an altar and a temple to God, with souls to adore him: these are things which afford me infinite pleasure, comfort, and satisfaction, as often as I go to see and enjoy them.

At the same seasons every year, I revisit some of the neighbouring cities, and enjoy such of my friends as live there, taking the greatest pleasure in their company and conversation; and by their means I also enjoy the conversation of other men of parts, who live in the same places; such as architects, painters, painters, sculptors, musicians, and husbandmen, with whom this age most certainly abounds. I visit their new works; I revifit their former ones; and I always learn fomething, which gives me fatisfaction. I fee the palaces, gardens, antiquities; and with these, the squares and other public places, the churches, the fortifications, leaving nothing unobserved, from whence I may reap either entertainment or instruction. But what delights me most, is, in my journies backwards and forwards, to contemplate the fituation and other beauties of the places I pass through; some in the plain, others on hills, adjoining to rivers or fountains; with a great many fine houses and gardens. Nor are my recreations rendered less agreeable and entertaining by my not feeing well, or not hearing readily every thing that is faid to me; or by any other of my faculties not being perfect; for they are all, thank God, in the highest perfection; particularly my palate, which now relishes better the simple fare I eat, wherever I happen to be, than it formerly did the most delicate dishes, when I led an irregular life. Nor does the change of beds give me any uneafiness, so that I sleep every where foundly and quietly, without experiencing the least disturbance; and all my dreams are pleafant and delightful.

G 2

dered

It is likewise with the greatest pleasure and satisfaction I behold the success of an undertaking so important to this state, I mean that of draining and improving fo many uncultivated pieces of ground; an undertaking begun within my memory, and which I never thought I should live to see completed, knowing how flow republics are apt to proceed in enterprizes of great importance. Nevertheless, I have lived to fee it; and was even in person, in these marshy places, along with those appointed to superintend the draining of them, for two months together, during the greatest heats of fummer, without ever finding myfelf the worse for the fatigues or inconveniences I fuffered; of fo much efficacy is that orderly life, which I every where constantly lead.

mean

What is more, I am in the greatest G₃ hopes, hopes, or rather fure, to fee the beginning and completion of another undertaking of no less importance, which is that of preferving our estuary or port, that last and wonderful bulwark of my dear country, the preservation of which (it is not to flatter my vanity I fay it, but merely to do justice to truth) has been more than once recommended by me to this republic, by word of mouth, and in writings which cost me many nights study. And to this dear country of mine, as I am bound by the laws of nature to do every thing, from which it may reap any benefit, so I most ardently wish perpetual duration, and a long fuccession of every kind of prosperity. Such are my genuine and no trifling fatisfactions; fuch are the recreations recreations and diversions of my old age, which is so much the more to be valued than the old age, or even youth, of other men, because being freed, by God's grace, from the perturbations of the mind, and the infirmities of the body, it no longer experiences any of those contrary emotions, which torment a number of young men, and many old ones destitute of strength and health, and every other blessing.

And if it be lawful to compare little matters, and fuch as are esteemed trisling, to affairs of importance, I will further venture to say, that such are the essects of this sober life, that at my present age of eighty-three, I have been able to write a very entertaining comedy, abounding with innocent mirth and pleasant jests. This species of compofition is generally the child and offspring of youth, as tragedy is that of old age; the former being by its facetious and sprightly turn fuited to the bloom of life, and the latter by its gravity adapted to riper years. Now, if that good old man *, a Grecian by birth, and a poet, was fo much extolled for having written a tragedy at the age offeventythree, and, on that account alone, reputed of found memory and understanding, though tragedy be a grave and melancholy poem; why should I be deemed less happy, and to have a fmaller share of memory and underitanding, who have, at an age, ten years more advanced than his, written a comedy, * Sophicles.

which,

which, as every one knows, is a merry and pleafant kind of composition? And, indeed, if I may be allowed to be an impartial judge in my own cause, I cannot help thinking, that I am now of sounder memory and understanding, and heartier, than he was when ten years younger.

And, that no comfort might be wanting to the fulness of my years, whereby my great age may be rendered less irksome, or rather the number of my enjoyments increased, I have the additional comfort of seeing a kind of immortality in a succession of descendants. For, as often as I return home, I find there, before me, not one or two, but eleven grandchildren, the oldest of them eighteen, and the youngest two;

all the offspring of one father and one mother; all bleffed with the best health; and, by what as yet appears, fond of learning, and of good parts and morals. Some of the youngest I always play with; and, indeed, children from three to five are only fit for play. Those above that age I make companions of; and, as nature has beflowed very fine voices upon them, I amuse myfelf, befides, with feeing and hearing them fing, and play on various instruments. Nay, I fing myfelf, as I have a better voice now, and a clearer and louder pipe, than at any other period of life. Such are the recreations of my old age.

Whence it appears, that the life I lead is cheerful, and not gloomy, as fome perfons pretend, pretend, who know no better; to whom, in order that it may appear what value I fet on every other kind of life, I must declare, that I would not exchange my manner of living or my grey hairs with any of those young men, even of the best constitution, who give way to their appetites; knowing, as I do, that fuch are daily, nay hourly, fubject, as I have already observed, to a thoufand kinds of ailments and deaths. is, in fact, so obvious, as to require no proof. Nay, I remember perfectly well, how I used to behave at that time of life. I know how inconsiderately that age is apt to act, and how foolhardy young men, hurried on by the heat of their blood, are wont to be; how apt they are to prefume too much on their own strength in all their actions; and how fanguine they are in their expectations; as well on account of the little experience they have had for the time past, as by reason of the power they enjoy in their own imaginations over the time to come. Hence they expose themselves rashly to every kind of danger; and, banishing reafon, and bowing their necks to the yoke of concupiscence, endeavour to gratify all their appetites, not minding, fools as they are, that they thereby hasten, as I have several times observed, the approach of what they would most willingly avoid, I mean sickness, and death. Of these two evils, one is troublesome and painful, the other, above all things, dreadful and insupportable; infupportable to every man, who has given himself up to his sensual appetites, and to young men in particular, to whom it appears a hardship to die an early death; dreadful to those, who reflect on the errors to which this mortal life is subject, and on the vengeance which the justice of God is wont to take on finners, by condemning them to everlasting punishment. On the other hand, I, in my old age, (praise to the Almighty) am exempt from both these apprehensions; from the one, because I am fure and certain, that I cannot fall fick, having removed all the causes of illness by my divine medicine; from the other, that of death, because from so many years experience I have learned to obey reason;

H

whence

whence I not only think it a great piece of folly to fear that, which cannot be avoided, but likewife firmly expect some consolation, from the grace of Jesus Christ, when I shall arrive at that period.

Besides, though I am sensible that I must, like others, reach that term, it is yet at fo great a distance, that I cannot discern it, because I know I shall not die except by mere diffolution, having already, by my regular course of life, shut up all the other avenues of death, and thereby prevented the humours of my body from making any other war upon me, than that which I must expect from the elements employed in the composition of this mortal frame. I am not so fimple as not to know, that, as I was born.

born, so I must die. But that is a desirable death, which nature brings on us by way. of dissolution. For nature, having herself formed the union between our body and foul, knows best in what manner it may be most easily dissolved, and grants us a longer day to do it, than we could expect from fickness, which is violent. This is the death, which, without speaking like a poet, I may call, not death, but life. Nor can it be otherwise. Such a death does not overtake one till after a very long course of years, and in confequence of an extreme weakness; it being only by slow degrees, that men grow too feeble to walk, and unable to reason, becoming blind, and deaf, decrepid, and full of every other kind of infirmity.

H 2

firmity. Now I (by God's bleffing) may be quite fure that I am at a very great diftance from fuch a period. Nay, I have reason to think, that my soul, having so agreeable a dwelling in my body, as not to meet with any thing in it but peace, love, and harmony, not only between its humours, but between my reason and the fenses, is exceedingly content and well pleased with her present situation: and of course, that a great length of time and many years must be requisite to dislodge her. Whence it must be concluded for certain, that I have still a feries of years to live in health and spirits, and enjoy this beautiful world, which is, indeed, beautiful to those, who know how to make it fo, as I have done, and likewise expect to be able to do, with God's assistance, in the next; and all by the means of virtue, and that divine regularity of life, which I have adopted, concluding an alliance with my reason, and declaring war against my sensual appetites; a thing which every man may do, who desires to live as he ought.

have

Now, if this fober life be so happy; if its name be so desirable and delightful; if the possession of the blessings which attend it be so stable and permanent, all I have still left to do, is to beseech (since I cannot compass my desires by the powers of oratory) every man of a liberal disposition, and sound understanding, to embrace with open arms this most valuable treasure of a long and H 3 healthy healthy life; a treasure which, as it exceeds all the other riches and bleffings of this world, fo it deferves above all things to be cherished, sought after, and carefully preferved. This is that divine fobriety, agreeable to the Deity, the friend of nature, the daughter of reason, the sister of all the virtues, the companion of temperate living, modest, courteous, content with little, 1egular, and perfect mistress of all her operations. From her, as from their proper root, spring life, health, cheerfulness, industry, learning, and all those actions and employments worthy of noble and generous minds. The laws of God and man are all in her favour. Repletion, excess, intemperance, superfluous humours, diseases, fevers, pains, and the dangers of death, vanish, in her presence, like clouds before the sun. Her comeliness ravishes every well-disposed mind. Her influence is so sure, as to promise to all a very long and agreeable existence; the facility of acquiring her is fuch, as ought to induce every one to look for her, and share in her victories. And, lastly, she promifes to be a mild and agreeable guardian of life; as well of the rich as of the poor; of the male as of the female fex; the old as of the young; being that which teaches the rich modesty; the poor frugality; men, continence; women, chaftity; the old, how to ward off the attacks of death; and bestows on youth firmer and securer hopes of life. Sobriety renders the fenfes fenses clear, the body light, the understanding lively, the foul brisk, the memory tenacious, our motions free, and all our actions regular and easy. By means of sobriety, the foul delivered, as it were, of her earthly burthen, experiences a great deal of her natural liberty: the spirits circulate gently through the arteries; the blood runs freely through the veins; the heat of the body, kept mild and temperate, has mild and temperate effects: and, lastly, our faculties, being under a perfect regulation, preserve a pleasing and agreeable harmony.

O most innocent and holy sobriety, the sole refreshment of nature, the nursing mother of human life, the true physic of soul as well as of body! How ought men to praise thee, and thank thee for thy princely gifts! fince thou bestowest on them the means of preferving this bleffing, I mean life and health, than which it has not pleafed God we should enjoy a greater on this fide of the grave, life and existence being a thing fo naturally coveted, and willingly preserved, by every living creature. But, as I do not intend to write a panegyric on this rare and excellent virtue, I shall put an end to this discourse, lest I should be guilty of excess, in dwelling so long on so pleasing a subject. Yet as numberless things may still be said of it, I leave off, with an intention of fetting forth the rest of its praises at. a more convenient opportunity.

A

COMPENDIUM

OF

A SOBER LIFE.

My treatife on a fober life has begun to answer my desire, in being of service to many persons born with a weak constitution, who every time they committed the least excess, found themselves greatly indisposed, a thing which it must be allowed does not happen to robust people: several of these persons of weak constitutions, on seeing the foregoing treatise, have betaken themselves themselves to a regular course of life, convinced by experience of its utility. In like manner, I should be glad to be of service to those, who are born with a good constitution, and prefuming upon it, lead a diforderly life; whence it comes to pass, that on their attaining the age of fixty or thereabouts, they are attacked with various pains and diseases; some with the gout, some with pains in the fide, and others with pains in the stomach, and the like, to which they would not be subject, were they to embrace a fober life; and as most of them die before they attain their eightieth year, they would live to a hundred, the time allowed to man by God and nature. And, it is but reasonable to believe, that the intention of this our mother mother is, that we should all attain that term, in order that we might all tafte the fweets of every state of life. But, as our birth is subject to the revolutions of the heavens, these have great influence over it, especially in rendering our constitutions robust or infirm; a thing which nature cannot ward against; for, if she could, we should all bring a good constitution with us into the world. But then she hopes, that man, being endowed with reason and understanding, may of himself compensate, by dint of art, the want of that, which the heavens have denied him; and, by means of a fober life, contrive to mend his infirm constitution, live to a great age, and always enjoy good health.

For

For man, it is not to be doubted, may by art exempt himself in part from the influence of the heavens; it being the common opinion, that the heavens give an inclination, but do not impel us; for which reason the learned fay, that a wife man rules the stars. I was born with a very choleric difposition, infomuch that there was no living with me; but I took notice of it, and confidered, that a person swayed by his passion must at certain times be no better than a madman; I mean at those times, when he fuffers his paffions to predominate, because he then renounces his reason and underflanding. I, therefore, resolved to make my choleric disposition give way to reason; so that now, though born choleric, I never

fuffer

fuffer anger entirely to overcome me. The man, who is naturally of a bad constitution, may, in like manner, by dint of reason, and a fober life, live to a great age and in good health, as I have done, who had naturally the worst, so that it was impossible I should live above forty years, whereas I now find myfelf found and hearty at the age of eightyfix; and were it not for the long and violent fits of illness which I experienced in my youth, to fuch a degree that the physicians gave me over, and which robbed me of my radical moisture, a loss absolutely irreparable, I might expect to attain the above-mentioned term of one hundred. But I know for good reasons that it is impossible; and, therefore, do not think of it. It is enough enough for me, that I have lived forty-fix years beyond the term I had a right to expect; and that, during this fo long a respite, all my senses have continued perfect; and even my teeth, my voice, my memory, and my strength. But what is still more, my brain is more itself now than ever it was; nor do any of these powers abate as I advance in years; and this because, as I grow older, I lessen the quantity of my solid food.

This retrenchment is necessary, nor can it be avoided, since, it is impossible for a man to live for ever; and, as he draws near his end, he is reduced so low as to be no longer able to take any nourishment, unless it be to swallow, and that too with difficulty, the yolk of an egg in the four and twenty hours, and thus end by mere diffolution, without any pain or fickness, as I expect will be my case. This is a bleffing of great importance; yet may be expected by all those, who shall lead a sober life, of whatever degree or condition, whether high, or middling, or low; for we are all of the fame species, and composed of the same four elements. And, fince a long and healthy life ought to be greatly coveted by every man, as I shall presently shew, I conclude, that every man is bound in duty to exert himself to obtain longevity, and that he cannot promise himself such a blessing without temperance and fobriety.

Some alledge, that many, without leading fuch a life, have lived to an hundred, and that in constant health, though they eat a great deal, and used indiscriminately every kind of viands and wine; and, therefore, flatter themselves, that they shall be equally fortunate. But in this they are guilty of two mistakes; the first is, that it is not one in an hundred thousand that ever attains that happiness; the other mistake is, that such, in the end, most assuredly contract some illness, which carries them off: nor can they ever be fure of ending their days otherwise: so that the fafest way to obtain a long and healthy life is, at least after forty, to embrace fobriety. This is no fuch difficult affair, fince history informs us of so many who in former times lived with the greatest temperance; and I know that the present age furnishes us with many fuch instances, reckoning myself one of the number: we are all human beings, and endowed with reason, consequently we are masters of all our actions.

This fobriety is reduced to two things, quality and quantity. The first, namely quality, confifts in nothing but not eating food, or drinking wines, prejudicial to the stomach. The second, which is quantity, confists in not eating or drinking more than the stomach can easily digest; which quantity and quality every man should be a perfect judge of by the time he is forty, or fifty, or fixty; and, whoever observes these two rules, may be said to live a regular and fober life. This is of fo much virtue and efficacy, that the humours of fuch a man's

a man's body become most homogeneous, harmonious, and perfect; and, when thus improved, are no longer liable to be corrupted or disturbed by any other disorders whatfoever, fuch as fuffering excessive heat or cold, too much fatigue, want of natural rest, and the like, unless in the last degree of excess. Wherefore, fince the humours of persons, who observe these two rules relative to eating and drinking, cannot poffibly be corrupted, and engender acute difeases, the sources of an untimely death, every man is bound to comply with them: for whoever acts otherwise, living a disorderly instead of a regular life, is constantly exposed to disease and mortality, as well in consequence of such disorders, as of others without without number, each of which is capable of producing the same destructive effect.

It is, indeed, true, that even those, who observe the two rules relating to diet, the observance of which constitutes a sober life, may, by committing any one of the other irregularities, find himfelf the worse for it a day or two; but not fo as to breed a fever. He may, likewise, be affected by the revolutions of the heavens; but neither the heavens, nor those irregularities, are capable of corrupting the humours of a temperate perfon; and it is but reasonable and natural it should be so, as the two irregularities of diet are interior, and the others exterior.

But as there are some persons, stricken in years, who are, notwithstanding, very gluttonous,

tonous, and alledge that neither the quantity nor quality of their diet makes any impresfion upon them, and therefore eat a great deal, and of every thing without distinction, and indulge themselves equally in point of drinking, because they do not know in what part of their bodies their stomachs are fituated; fuch, no doubt, are beyond all meafure fenfual, and flaves to gluttony. To thefe I answer, that what they say is impossible in the nature of things, because it is impossible that every man, who comes into the world, should not bring with him a hot, a cold, or a temperate constitution; and that hot foods should agree with hot constitutions, cold with cold ones, and things that are not of a temperate nature with temperate ones, is likewife likewise impossible in nature. After all, these epicures must allow, that they are now and then out of order; and that they cure themselves by taking evacuating medicines and observing a strict diet. Whence it appears, that their being out of order is owing to their eating too much, and of things difagreeing with their stomach.

There are other old gluttons, who fay, that it is necessary they should eat and drink a great deal, to keep up their natural heat, which is constantly diminishing, as they advance in years; and that it is, therefore, necessary to eat heartily, and of such things as please their palate, be they hot, cold, or temperate; and that, were they to lead a sober life, it would be a short one.

To these I answer, that our kind mother, Nature, in order that old men may live still to a greater age, has contrived matters fo, that they should be able to subfift on little, as I do; for, large quantities of food cannot be digested by old and feeble stomachs. Nor should such persons be afraid of shortening their days by eating too little, fince when they happen to be indisposed, they recover by lessening the quantity of their food; for it is a trifle they eat, when confined to a regimen, by observing which they get rid of their disorder. Now, if by reducing themfelves to a very small quantity of food, they recover from the jaws of death, how can they doubt but that with an increase of diet, still confistent however with sobriety, they will be able to support nature when in perfect health?

Others fay, that it is better for a man to fuffer every year three or four returns of his usual disorders, such as the gout, pain in the fide, and the like, than be tormented the whole year by not indulging his appetite, and eating every thing his palate likes best; fince, by a good regimen alone, he is fure to get the better of fuch attacks. To this I answer, that our natural heat growing less and less, as we advance in years, no regimen can retain virtue sufficient to conquer the malignity, with which diforders of repletion are ever attended; fo that he must die, at last, of these periodical disorders, because they abridge life, as health prolongs it.

Others pretend, that it is much better to live ten years less, than not indulge one's appetite. To this I answer, that longevity ought to be highly valued by men of parts; as to others, it is no great matter if it is not duly prized by them, fince they are a difgrace to mankind, fo that their death is rather of fervice to the public. But it is a great misfortune, that men of bright parts should be cut off in that manner, since he, who is already a cardinal, might, perhaps, by living to eighty, attain the papal crown; and in the state, many, by living some years extraordinary, may acquire the ducal dignity; and foin regard to letters, by which a man may rife fo as to be confidered as a god upon earth; and the like in every other profession.

There are others, who, though their stomachs become weaker and weaker with respect to digestion, as they advance in years, cannot, however, be brought to retrench the quantity of their food, nay they rather increase it. And, because they find themfelves unable to digest the great quantity of food, with which they must load their stomachs, by eating twice in the four and twenty hours, they make a resolution to eat but once, that the long interval between one meal and the other may enable them to eat at one fitting as much as they used to do in two; thus they eat till their stomachs, overburthened with much food, pall, and ficken, and change the superfluous food into bad humours, which kill a man before his time. I never knew any person, who led that kind of life, live to be very old. All these old men I have been speaking of would live long, if, as they advanced in years, they lessened the quantity of their food, and eat oftener, but little at a time; for old stomachs cannot digest large quantities of food; old men changing, in that respect, to children, who eat several times in the four and twenty hours.

Others fay, that temperance may, indeed, keep a man in health, but that it cannot prolong his life. To this I answer, that experience proves the contrary; and that I myself am a living instance of it. It cannot be faid, that sobriety is apt to shorten one's days, as sickness does; and that the latter abbreviates life, is most certain. Moreover, a constant succession of good health is preferable to frequent sickness, as the radical moisture is thereby preserved. Hence it may be fairly concluded, that holy sobriety is the true parent of health and longevity.

K 2

a constant

O thrice holy fobriety, fo useful to man, by the fervices thou renderest him! thou prolongest his days, by which means he greatly improves his understanding, and by fuch improvement he avoids the bitter fruits of fenfuality, which are an enemy to reason, man's peculiar privilege: those bitter fruits are the passions and perturbations of the mind. Thou, moreover, freest him from the dreadful thoughts of death. How greatly is thy faithful disciple indebted to thee, fince by thy affistance he enjoys this beautiful beautiful expanse of the visible world, which is really beautiful to fuch as know how to view it with a philosophic eye, as thou hast enabled me to do. Nor could I, at any other time of life, even when I was young, but altogether debauched by an irregular life, perceive its beauties, though I spared no pains or expence to enjoy every feafon of life. But I found that all the pleasures of that age had their alloy; fo that I never knew, till I grew old, that the world was beautiful. O truly happy life, which, over and above all these favours conferred on thine old man, hast so improved and perfected his stomach, that he has now a better relish for his dry bread, than he had formerly and in his youth, for the most exquisite dainties: and all this he has compaffed by acting rationally, knowing, that bread is, above all things, man's proper food, when feafoned by a good appetite; and, whilft a man leads a sober life, he may be sure of never wanting that natural fauce; because, by always eating little, the stomach, not being much burthened, need not wait long to have an appetite. It is for this reason, that dry bread relishes so well with me; and I know it from experience, and can with truth affirm, I find fuch fweetness in it, that I should be afraid of finning against temperance, were it not for my being convinced of the absolute necessity of eating it, and that we cannot make use of a more natural food. And thou, kind parent Nature, who actest fo lovingly by thy aged offspring, in order to prolong his days, hast contrived matters fo in his favour, that he can live upon very little; and, in order to add to the favour, and do him still greater service, hast made him fensible, that, as in his youth he used to eat twice a day, when he arrived at old age, he ought to divide that food, of which he was accustomed before to make but two meals, into four; because, thus divided, it will be more easily digested; and, as in his youth he made but two meals in the day, he should, in his old age, make four, provided however he lessens the quantity, as his years increase. And this is what I do, agreeably to my own experience; and, therefore, my spirits, not oppressed by much food, but barely kept up, are always brisk; especially after eating, so that I am accustomed then to sing a song, and afterwards to write.

K 3 dainties:

Nor do I ever find myfelf the worfe for writing immediately after meals; nor is my understanding ever clearer; nor am I apt to be drowfy; the food I take being in too fmall a quantity to fend up any fumes to the brain. O, how advantageous it is to an old man to eat but little! Accordingly, I, who know it, eat but just enough to keep body and foul together; and the things I eat are as follow. First, bread, panado, some broth with an egg in it, or fuch other good kinds of foup or spoon-meat. Of flesh meat, I eat veal, kid, and mutton. I eat poultry of every kind. I cat partridges, and other birds, fuch as thrushes. I likewife eat fish; for instance, the goldney and the like, amongst sea fish; and the pike, and fuch like, amongst fresh-water fish. All these things are fit for an old man; and, therefore, he ought to be content with them, and, confidering their number and variety, not hanker after others. Such old men, as are too poor to allow themselves provisions of this kind, may do very well with bread, panado, and eggs; things, which no poor man can want, unless it be common beggars, and, as we call them, vagabonds, about whom we are not bound to make ourselves uneafy, fince they have brought themselves to that pass by their indolence, and had better be dead than alive, for they are a difgrace to human nature. But, though a poor poor man should eat nothing but bread, panado, and eggs, there is no necessity for his eating more than his stomach can digest. And, whoever does not trespass in point of either quantity or quality, cannot die but by mere dissolution. O, what a difference there is between a regular and an irregular life! One gives longevity and health, the other produces diseases and untimely deaths.

wife

O unhappy, wretched life, my fworn enemy, who art good for nothing but to murder those, who follow thee! How many of my dearest relations and friends hast thou robbed me of, in consequence of their not giving credit to me; relations and friends, whom I should now enjoy. But thou hast not been able to destroy me according to thy wicked intent and purpose. I am still alive in spite of thee, and have attained to such an age, as to fee around me eleven grandchildren, all of fine understanding, and amiable disposition; all given to learning and virtue; all beautiful in their persons and lovely in their manners; whom, had I obeyed thy dictates, I should never have beheld. Nor should I enjoy those beautiful and convenient apartments which I have built from the ground, with fuch a variety of gardens, as required no small time to attain their present degree of persection. No! thy nature is to destroy those who follow thee, before they can fee their houses or gardens fo much as finished; whereas I, to thy no fmall confusion, have already enjoyed mine for a great number of years. But, fince thou art so pestilential a vice, as to poison and destroy the whole world; and I am determined to use my utmost endeavours to extirpate thee, at least in part; I have resolved to counteract thee so, that my eleven grandchildren shall take pattern after me; and thereby expose thee, for what thou really art, a most wicked, desperate, and mortal enemy of the children of men.

wicked

I, really, cannot help admitting, that men of fine parts, and fuch there are, who have attained a fuperior rank in letters or any other profession, should not betake themselves to a regular life, when they are arrived at the age of fifty or fixty; or as soon as they find themselves attacked by any of the foregoing diforders, of which they might eafily recover; whereas, by being permitted to get a head, they become incurable. As to young men, I am no way furprifed at them, fince, the passions being strong at tha age, they are of course the more easily overpowered by their baleful influence. But after fifty, our lives should, in every thing, be governed by reason, which teaches us, that the consequences of gratifying our palate and appetite are disease and death. Were this pleasure of the palate lasting, it would be fome excuse; but it is f momentary, that there is fcarce any diffinguithing between the beginning and the end of it; whereas the discases it producer are very durable. But it must be a great contentment to a man of fober life, to be able to reflect that, in the manner he lives, he is fure, that what he eats, will keep him in good health, and be productive of no difease or infirmity.

L

Now I was willing to make this short addition to my treatise, sounded on new reasons; sew persons caring to peruse long-winded discourses; whereas short tracts have a chance of being read by many; and I wish that many may see this addition, to the end that its utility may be more extensive.

AN

EARNEST EXHORTATION;

WHEREIN

The author uses the strongest arguments to persuade all men to embrace a regular and sober life, in order to attain old age, in which they may enjoy all the savours and blessings that God, in his goodness, vouchsafes to bestow upon mortals.

Not to be wanting to my duty, that duty incumbent upon every man; and not to lose at the same time the satisfaction I feel in being useful to others, I have resolved to take up my pen, and inform those who,

for want of converfing with me, are strangers to what those know and see, with whom I have the pleasure of being acquainted. But, as certain things may appear, to fome persons, scarce credible, nay impossible, though actually fact, I shall not fail to relate them for the benefit of the public. Wherefore, I fay, being (God be praifed) arrived at my ninety-fifth year, and still finding myfelf found and hearty, content and cheerful, I never cease thanking the Divine Majesty for so great a bleffing; confidering the usual fate of other old men. These scarce attain the age of seventy, without losing their health and spirits; growing melancholy and peevish; and continually haunted by the thoughts of death; appre-

hending

hending their last hour from one day to another, so that it is impossible to drive such thoughts out of their mind; whereas fuch things give me not the least uneasiness; for, indeed, I cannot, at all, make them the object of my attention, as I shall hereafter more plainly relate. I shall, besides, demonstrate the certainty I have of living to an hundred. But to render this differtation more methodical, I shall begin by considering man at his birth; and from thence accompany him through every stage of life to his grave.

I, therefore, fay, that some come into the world with the stamina of life so weak, that they live but a few days, or months, or years; and it cannot be clearly known, to what

L 3

what such shortness of life is owing; whether to some desect in the father or the mother, in begetting them; or to the revolutions of the heavens; or to the desect of nature, subject, as she is, to the celestial influence. For, I could never bring myself to believe, that nature, the common parent of all, should be partial to any of her children. Therefore, as we cannot assign the causes, we must be content with reasoning from the effects, such as they daily appear to our view.

Others are born found, indeed, and full of spirits; but, notwithstanding, with a poor weakly constitution; and of these some live to the age of ten; others to twenty; others to thirty and forty; yet they do not live to extreme old age. Others, again, bring into the world a perfect constitution, and live to old age; but it is generally, as I have already faid, an old age full of fickness and forrow; for which they are to thank themselves; because they most unreasonably presume on the goodness of their constitution; and cannot by any means be brought to depart, when grown old, from the mode of life they purfued in their younger days; as if they still retained all their primitive vigour. Nay, they intend to live as irregularly when past the meridian of life, as they did all the time of their youth; thinking they shall never grow old, nor their constitution be ever impaired. Neither do they consider, that their stomach has lost its natural heat; and that they should, on that account, pay a greater regard to the quality of what they eat, and what wines they drrink; and like-wife to the quantity of each, which they ought to lessen: whereas, on the contrary, they are for increasing it; saying, that, as we lose our health and vigour by growing old, we should endeavour to repair the loss by increasing the quantity of our food, since it is by sustenance that man is preserved.

the

In this, nevertheless, they are greatly mistaken, since, as the natural heat lessens as a man grows in years, he should diminish the quantity of his meat and drink; nature, especially at that period, being content with little. Nay, though they have all the reason to believe this to be the case, they are so obstinate as to think otherwise, and still follow their usual disorderly life. But were they to relinquish it in due time, and betake themselves to a regular and sober course, they would not grow infirm in their old age, but would continue, as I am, strong and hearty, confidering how good and perfect a constitution it has pleased the Almighty to bestow upon them; and would live to the age of one hundred and twenty. This has been the case of others, who, as we read in many authors, have lived a fober life, and, of course, were born with this perfect constitution; and had it been my lot to enjoy fuch a constitution, I should make no doubt of attaining the same age. But, as I was born with feeble stamina, I am afraid I shall not outlive an hundred.

Were

Were others, too, who are also born with an infirm constitution, to betake themselves to a regulur life, as I have done, they would attain the age of one hundred and upwards, as will be my case.

And this certainty of being able to live a great age is, in my opinion, a great advantage, and highly to be valued; none being fure to live even a fingle hour, except fuch as adhere to the rules of temperance. This fecurity of life is built on good and true natural reasons, which can never fail; it being impossible in the nature of things, that he, who leads a fober and regular life, should breed any sickness, or die of an unnatural death, before the time, at which it is absolutely impossible he should live. But

fooner

fooner he cannot die, as a fober life has the virtue to remove all the usual causes of sickness, and sickness cannot happen without a cause; which cause being removed, sickness is, likewise, removed; and sickness being removed, an untimely and violent death must be prevented.

And there is no doubt, that temperance has the virtue and efficacy to remove such causes; for since health and sickness, life and death, depend on the good or bad quality of the humours, temperance corrects their vicious tendencies, and renders them perfect, being possessed of the natural power of making them unite and hold together, so as to render them inseparable, and incapable of alteration or fermenting; circumstances.

flances, which engender cruel fevers, and end in death. It is true, indeed, and it would be a folly to deny it, that, let our humours be originally ever fo good, time, which confumes every thing, cannot fail to confume and exhaust them; and that man, as foon as that happens, must die of a natural death; but yet without fickness, as will be my case, who shall die at my appointed time, when these humours shall be confumed, which they are not at prefent. Nay, they are still perfect; nor is it possible they should be otherwise in my present condition, when I find myself hearty and content, eating with a good appetite, and fleeping foundly. Moreover, all my faculties are as good as ever, and in the highest perfection;

which

perfection; my understanding clearer and brighter than ever; my judgment sound; my memory tenacious; my spirits good; and my voice, the first thing which is apt to fail others, grown so strong and sonorous, that I cannot help chanting out loud my prayers morning and night, instead of whispering and muttering them to myself, as was formerly my custom.

And these are all so many true and sure signs and tokens, that my humours are good, and cannot waste but with time, as all those, who converse with me, conclude. O, how glorious this life of mine is like to be, replete with all the selicities which man can enjoy on this side of the grave; and even exempt from that sensual brutality which age has enabled my better reason to banish! because where reason resides, there is no room for fenfuality, nor for its bitter fruits, the passions, and perturbations of the mind, with a train of difagreeable apprehenfions. Nor yet can the thoughts of death find room in my mind, as I have no fenfuality to nourish such thoughts. Neither can the death of grandchildren and other relations and friends make any impression on me, but for a moment or two; and then it is over. Still less am I liable to be cast down by losses in point of fortune Yas many have feen to their no fmall furprise). And this is a happiness not to be expected by any but fuch as attain old age by fobriety, and not in consequence of a stong conflitution:

M

flitution; and fuch may moreover expect to spend their days happily, as I do mine, in a perpetual round of amusement and pleafure. And how is it possible a man should not enjoy himself, who meets with no crosses or disappointments in his old age, such as youth is constantly plagued with, and from which, as I shall presently shew, I have the happiness of being exempt?

The first of these is to do service to my country. O what a glorious amusement! in which I find infinite delight, as I thereby shew her the means of improving her important estuary or harbour beyond the possibility of its filling for thousands of years to come; so as to secure to Venice her surprising and miraculous title of a maiden city, as she really is; and the only one in the whole world: she will, moreover, thereby, add to the lustre of her great and excellent surname of queen of the sea: such is my amusement; and nothing is wanting to make it complete. Another amusement of mine, is that of shewing this maid and queen, in what manner she may abound with provisions, by improving large tracts of land, as well marshes, as barren fands, to great profit. A third amusement, and an amusement too, without any alloy, is the fhewing how Venice, though already fo strong as to be in a manner impregnable, may be rendered still stronger; and, though extremely beautiful, may still increase in beauty; though rich, may acquire more wealth.

wealth, and may be made to enjoy better air, though her air is excellent. These three amusements, all arising from the idea of public utility, I enjoy in the highest degree. And who can fay, that they admit of any alloy, as in fact they do not? Another comfort I enjoy, is, that, having lost a confiderable part of my income, of which my grandchildren had been unfortunately robbed, I by mere dint of thought, which never fleeps, and without any fatigue of body, and very little of mind, have found a true and infallible method of repairing fuch loss more than double, by the means of that most commendable of arts, agriculture. Another comfort I still enjoy is to think, that my treatife on temperance; which I wrote in order to be useful to others, is really fo, as many affure me by word of mouth, mentioning that it has proved extremely useful to them, as it in fact appears to have been, whilst others inform me by letter, that, under God, they are indebted to me for life. Still another comfort I enjoy, is that of being able to write with my own hand; for, I write enough to be of service to others, both on architecture, and agriculture. I, likewife, enjoy another fatisfaction, which is that of conversation with men of bright parts and fuperior understanding, from whom, even at this advanced period of life, I learn fomething. What a comfort is this, that, old as I am, I should be able, without the least fatigue,

M₃ wrote

fatigue, to study the most important, sublime, and difficult subjects!

I must farther add, though it may appear impossible to some, and may be so in some measure, that at this age I enjoy, at once, two lives; one terrestrial, which I possess in fact; the other celestial, which I possess in thought; and this thought is equal to actual enjoyment, when founded upon things we are fure to attain, as I am fure to attain that celestial life, through the infinite goodness and mercy of God. Thus, I enjoy this terrestrial life, in consequence of my fobriety and temperance, virtues fo agreeable to the Deity; and I enjoy, by the grace of the same Divine Majesty, the celestial,

fial, which he makes me anticipate thought; a thought fo lively, as to fix me entirely on this object, the enjoyment of which I hold and affirm to be of the utmost certainty. And I hold that dying, in the manner I expect, is not really death, but a passage of the soul from this earthly life to a celestial, immortal, and infinitely perfect existence. Neither can it be otherwise: and this thought is fo fuperlatively fublime, that it can no longer stoop to low and worldly objects, fuch as the death of this body, being entirely taken up with the happiness of living a celestial and divine life; whence it is, that I enjoy two lives. Nor can the terminating of fo high a gratification, which I enjoy in this life, give me any concern; it rather rather affords me infinite pleasure, as it will be only to make room for another, glorious and immortal life.

Now, is it possible, that any one should grow tired of so great a comfort and blessing, as this which I really enjoy; and which every one else might enjoy by leading the life I have led? an example which every one has it in his power to follow; for I am but a mere man, and no faint; a servant of God, to whom so regular a life is extremely agreeable.

And, whereas many embrace a spiritual and contemplative life, which is holy and commendable, the chief employment of those who lead it being to celebrate the praises of God; O, that they would, likewise, betake themselves themselves entirely to a regular and sober life! How much more agreeable would they render themselves in the fight of God! What a much greater honour and ornament would they be to the world! They would then be confidered as faints, indeed, upon earth, as those primitive Christians were held, who joined fobriety to fo recluse a life. By living, like them, to the age of one hundred and twenty, they might, like them, expect, by the power of God, to work numberless miracles; and they would, befides, enjoy constant health and spirits, and be always happy within themselves; whereas they are now, for the most part, infirm, melancholy, and diffatisfied. Now, as fome of these people think, that these are trials

fent

fent them by God Almighty, with a view of promoting their falvation, that they may do penance, in this life, for their past errors, I cannot help faying, that, in my opinion, they are greatly mistaken. For 'I can by no means believe, that it is agreeable to the Deity, that man, his favourite creature, should live infirm, melancholy, and diffatisfied; but rather enjoy good health and fpirits, and be always content within himfelf. In this manner did the holy fathers live, and by fuch conduct did they daily render themfelves more acceptable to the Divine Majesty, so as to work the great and surprising miracles we read in history. How beautiful, how glorious a scene should we then behold! far more beautiful than in those ancient ancient times, because we now abound with fo many religious orders and monasteries, which did not then exist; and were the members of these communities to lead 2 temperate life, we should then behold such a number of venerable old men, as would create surprise. Nor would they trespass against their rules; they would rather improve upon them; fince every religious community allows its subjects bread, wine, and fometimes eggs (fome of them allow meat). besides soups made with vegetables, salads, fruit, and cakes, things which often difagree with them, and even shorten their lives. But, as they are allowed fuch things by their rules, they freely make use of them; thinking, perhaps, that it would be wrong to abstain from them, whereas it would not. It would rather be commendable, if, after the age of thirty, they abstained from such food, and confined themselves to bread, wine, broths, and eggs: for this is the true method of preserving men of a bad constitution; and it is a life of more indulgence than that led by the holy fathers of the defart, who subsisted entirely on wild fruits and roots, and drank nothing but pure water; and, nevertheless, lived, as I have already mentioned, in good health and spirits, and always happy within themselves. Were those of our days to do the same, they would, like them, find the road to heaven snuch easier; for it is always open to every faithful Christian, as our Saviour Jesus Christ N

Christ left it, when he came down upon earth to shed his precious blood, in order to deliver us from the tyrannical servitude of the devil; and all through his immense goodness.

So that, to make an end of this discourse, I fay, that fince length of days abounds with fo many favours and bleffings, and I happen to be one of those who are arrived at that state, I cannot (as I would not willingly want charity) but give testimony in favour of it, and folemnly affure all mankind, that I really enjoy a great deal more than what I now mention; and that I have no other reason for writing, but that of demonstrating the great advantages which arife from longevity, to the end that their own conviction may induce them to observe those excellent rules of temperance and sobriety. And therefore I never cease to raise my voice, crying out to you, my friends: May your days be long, that you may be the better servants to the Almighty!

LETTER

FROM

SIGNOR LEWIS CORNARO

TO THE

RIGHT REVEREND BARBARO,

PATRIARCH ELECT OF AQUILEIA.

MY LORD,

The human understanding must certainly have something divine in its constitution and frame. How divine the invention of conversing with an absent friend by the help of writing! How divinely is it contrived by nature,

that

that men, though at a great distance, should fee one another with the intellectual eye, as I now see your lordship! By means of this contrivance, I shall endeavour to entertain you with matters of the greatest moment. It is true, that I shall speak of nothing but what I have already mentioned; but it was not at the age of ninety-one, to which I have now attained, a thing I cannot help taking notice of, because as I advance in years, the founder and heartier I grow, to the amazement of all the world. I, who can account for it, am bound to shew, that a man may enjoy a terrestrial paradife after eighty; which I enjoy; but it is not to be obtained except by temperancé and fobriety, virtues fo acceptable to the Almighty, N 3

Almighty, because they are enemies to sensuality, and friends to reason.

Now, my lord, to begin, I must tell you, that, within these few days past, I have been visited by many of the learned doctors of this university, as well physicians as philosophers, who were well acquainted with my age, my life, and manners; knowing how flout, hearty, and gay I was; and in what persection all my faculties still continued; likewise my memory, spirits, and understanding; and even my voice and teeth. They knew, besides, that I constantly employed eight hours every day in writing treatifes, with my own hand, on fubjects useful to mankind, and spent many hours in walking and finging. O, my lord, how melodious my voice is grown! were you to hear me chant my prayers; and that to my lyre, after the example of David, I am certain it would give you great pleasure, my voice is fo musical. Now, when they told me that they had been already acquainted with all these particulars, they added, that it was indeed, next to a miracle, how I could write fo much, and upon subjects that required both judgment and spirit. And, indeed, my lord, it is incredible, what fatisfaction and pleafure I have in these compofitions. But, as I write to be useful, your lordship may easily conceive what pleasure I enjoy. They concluded by telling me, that I ought not to be looked upon as a person advanced in years, since all my occupations pations were those of a young man; and, by no means, like those of other aged perfons, who, when they have reached eighty, are reckoned decrepid. Such, moreover, are fubject, some to the gout, some to the feiatica, and some to other complaints, to be relieved from which they must undergo fuel a number of painful operations, as eannot but render life extremely disagreeable. And if, by chance, one of them happens to escape a long illness, his faculties are impaired, and he cannot fee or hear fo well; or else fails in some one or other of the corporeal faculties, he cannot walk, or his hands shake; and, supposing him exempt from these bodily infirmities, his memory, his spirits, or his understanding fail him; he is not cheerful, pleasant, and happy within himself, as I am.

melodious

Besides all these blessings, I mentioned another, which I enjoyed; and so great a bleffing, that they were all amazed at it, fince it is altogether beside the usual course of nature. This bleffing is, that I had already lived fifty years, in spite of a most powerful and mortal enemy, which I can by no means conquer, because it is natural, or an occult quality implanted in my body by nature; and this is, that every year, from the beginning of July till the end of August, I cannot drink any wine of whatever kind or country; for, befides being during thefe two months quite difgustful to my palate, it disagrees with my stomach. Thus losing my milk, for wine is, indeed, the milk of old age; and having nothing to drink, for no change or preparation of waters can have the virtue of wine, nor of course do me any good; having nothing, I fay, to drink, and my stomach being thereby disordered, I can eat but very little; and this spare diet, with the want of wine, reduces me, by the middle of August, extremely low; nor is the firongest capon broth, or any other remedy, of fervice to me; fo that I am ready, through mere weakness, to fink into the grave. Hence they inferred, that were not the new wine, for I always take care to have some ready by the beginning of September, to come in so soon, I should be a dead man. But what furprifed them still more was, that this new wine should have power sufficient to restore me, in two or three days, to that degree of health and strength, of which the old wine had robbed me; a fact they themselves have been eye-witnesses of, within these sew days; and which a man must see to believe it; insomuch that they could not help crying out, "Many of us, who are physicians, have visited him annually for feveral years past; and ten years ago, judged it impossible for him to live a year or two longer, confidering what a mortal enemy he carried about him, and his advanced age; yet we do not find him so weak at present as he used to be." This singularity, and the many other bleffings they fee me enjoy, obliged them to confess, that the joining joining of fuch a number of favours was, with regard to me, a special grace conferred on me, at my birth, by nature, or by the stars; and to prove this to be a good conclusion, which it really is not (because not grounded on strong and sufficient reasons, but merely on their own opinions), they found themselves under a necessity to display their eloquence, and to fay a great many very fine things. Certain it is, my lord, that eloquence, in men of bright parts, has great power; fo great, as to induce people to believe things which have neither actual nor possible existence. I had, however, great pleasure and satisfaction in hearing them; for, it must, no doubt, be a high entertainment to hear fuch men talk in that manner.

·Another

Another satisfaction, without the least mixture of alloy, I at the same time enjoyed, was to think, that age and experience are fufficient to make a man learned, who without them would know nothing; nor is it furprising they should, since length of days is the foundation of true knowledge. Accordingly, it was by means of it alone I discovered their conclusion to be false. Thus, you fee, my lord, how apt men are to deceive the nselves in their judgment of things, when fuch judgment is not built upon a folid foundation. And, therefore, to undeceive them, and fet them right, I made answer, that their conclusion was faife, as I should actually convince them by proving, that the happiness I enjoyed was not confined to me, but common to all mankind, and that every man might equally enjoy it; fince I was but a mere mortal, composed, like all others, of the four elements; and endued, besides existence and life, with rational and intellectual faculties, which are common to all men. For it has pleased the Almighty to bestow on his favourite creature man these extraordinary bleffings and favours above other animals, which enjoy only the fenfible perceptions; in order that fuch bleffings and favours may be the means of keeping him long in good health; fo that length of days is an univerfal favour granted by the Deity, and not by nature and the stars.

O

But man being in his youthful days more of the fenfual, than of the rational animal, is apt to yield to fenfual impressions; and, when he afterwards arrives at the age of forty or fifty, he ought to confider, that he has attained the noon of life, by the vigour of youth, and a good tone of stomach; natural bleffings, which favoured him in afcending the hill; but that he must now think of going down, and approaching the grave, with a heavy weight of years on his back; and that old age is the reverse of youth as much as order is the reverse of disorder. Hence it is requisite he should alter his mode of life in regard to the articles of eating and drinking, on which health and longevity depend. And as the first part of his life was sensual and irregular,

the

the fecond fliould be the reverse; fince nothing can subfift without order, especially the life of man, irregularity being without all doubt prejudicial, and regularity advantageous to the human species.

Befides, it is impossible in the nature of things, that the man, who is bent on indulging his palate and his appetite, should not be guilty of irregularity. Hence it was that to avoid this vice, as foon as I found myself arrived at maturer years, I embraced a regular and fober life. It is, no doubt, true, that I found some difficulty in compaffing it; but, in order to conquer this difficulty, I befeeched the Almighty to grant me the virtue of fobriety; well knowing, that he would graciously hear my prayer.

Then,

Then, confidering, that when a man is about to undertake any thing of importance, which he knows he can compass, though not without difficulty, he may make it much easier to himself by being steady in his purpose; I pursued the same course. I endeavoured gradually to relinquish a disorderly life, and to accustom myself insensibly to the rules of temperance: and thus it came to pass that a sober and regular life no longer proved uneafy or disagreeable; though, on account of the weakness of my constitution, I tied myself down to such strict rules in regard to the quantity and quality of what I eat and drink.

But others, who happen to be bleffed with a stronger temperament, may eat many other other kinds of food, and in greater quantities; and fo of wines; whereas, though their lives may still be sober, they will not be so confined as mine, but much more free. Now, on hearing these arguments, and examining the reasons on which they were founded, they all agreed that I had advanced nothing but what was true. Indeed the youngest of them said, that though he could not but allow the favour or advantages, I had been speaking of, to be common to all mankind, yet I enjoyed the special grace of being able to relinquish with ease one kind of life, and embrace another; a thing which he knew by experience to be feasible, but as difficult to him as it had proved easy to me.

To this I replied, that, being a mortal like himself, I likewise found it a difficult task; but it did not become a person to shrink from a glorious but practicable undertaking, on account of the difficulties attending it, because in proportion to these difficulties, is the honour he acquires by it in the eye of man, and the merit in the fight of God. Our beneficent Creator is defirous, that, as he originally favoured human nature with longevity, we should all enjoy the full advantage of his intentions; knowing that, when a man has passed eighty, he is entirely exempt from the bitter fruits of fenfual enjoyments, and is entirely governed by the dictates of reason. Vice and immorality must then leave him; hence

God is willing he should live to a full maturity of years; and has ordained that whoever reaches his natural term, should end his days without fickness by mere dissolution, the natural way of quitting this mortal life to enter upon immortality, as will be my case. For I am sure to die chanting my prayers; nor do the dreadful thoughts of death give me the least uncasiness, though, confidering my great age, it cannot be far distant, knowing, as I do, that I was born to die, and reflecting that fuch numbers have departed this life without reaching my age.

Nor does that other thought, inseparable from the former, namely the sear of those torments, to which wicked men are hereafter

after liable, give me any uneafiness; because I am a good Christian, and bound to believe, that I shall be faved by the virtue of the most facred blood of Christ, which he has vouchfafed to shed, in order to free us from those torments. How beautiful the life I lead! how happy my end! To this, the young gentleman, my antagonist, had nothing to reply, but that he was resolved to embrace a sober life, in order to follow. my example; and that he had taken another, more important, resolution, which was, that, as he had been always very defirous to live to be old, so he was now equally impatient to reach that period, the sooner to enjoy the felicity of old age.

The great defire I had, my lord, to converse verse with you at this distance, has forced me to be prolix, and still obliges me to proceed; though not much farther. There are many fenfualists, my lord, who sav, that I have thrown away my time and trouble in writing a treatise on Temperance, and other discourses on the same subject, to induce men to lead a regular life; alledging, that it is impossible to conform to it, so that my treatise must answer as little purpose as that of Plato on government, who took a great deal of pains to recommend a thing impracticable; whence they inferred, that as his treatife was of no use, mine will fhare the same fate. Now this surprises me the more, as they may fee by my treatife, that I had led a fober life for many years before

before I had composed it; and that I should never have composed it, had I not previously been convinced, that it was fuch a life as a man might lead; and being a virtuous life, would be of great service to him; so that I thought myself under an obligation to represent it in a true light. I have the satisfaction now to hear, that numbers, on feeing my treatife, have embraced fuch a life; and I have read, that many, in times past, have actually led it; so that the objection, to which Plato's treatife on government is liable, can be of no force against mine. But such sensualists, enemies to reason, and slaves to their passions, ought to think themselves well off, if, whilst they study to indulge their palate and and their appetite, they do not contract long and painful diseases, and are not, many of them, overtaken by an untimely death.

PHYSIC OF THE GOLDEN AGE,

A FRAGMENT.

Hassar Imma, distinguished as much for sublime morality as the superiour cast to which he belonged, after living, in the inviolable practice of his own philosophy, many years beyond the natural bounds of human life, is said to have left the following advice on record for the use of the species.

"Children of the Sun, listen to the dying "advice of your faithful and affectionate "instructor, who hastens to the bosom of P "the

"the great Allah to give an account and enjoy the expected reward of his fervices.

"Open your hearts to the lineaments of "Divinity legibly stamped on the face of "nature. His works are the organs by " which he communicates with mortals, and " repairs their daily walte of the life he ori-"ginally inspired. It is by an habitual con-" verse with these, and an humble imitation " of the qualities they display, that men " arrive at any degree of human excellence, " that their fouls acquire the faculty of im-"mortality, and that their bodies are pre-" ferved from the contamination of licen-"tious enjoyment, in purity, health, and " beauty.

"Debilitate not the finews of youth by "debauchery,

"debauchery, nor deprive yourselves of

" those divine pleasures which attend propa"gation by premature fruition. The use " of reason is to restrain the irregular im" pulses of nature. Puberty will itself

" prevent an excess of indulgence, which is " the great origin of diseases and death.

"Forget not to mingle moderation and

" abstinence, even with the holiest rites of "wedlock. A proper and habitual restraint

" in conjugal pleafure is like incense to the " flames of the altar. So far from quench-

" ing, it cherishes and improves the heaven" ly fire. Healthy, happy, vigorous, and " beautiful, are the offspring of chafte and " rational love.

" Avoid all kinds of indolence and floth.

"Keep your body and mind in perpetual harmony and motion. Local utility and pleasures are soon exhausted. Man is in his passage to eternity. His life on earth is an emblem of that immortality to which he is destined, and which consists only in that fruition which results from activity.

"Never ride on horseback. It is unnatural for one animal to bestride another.
It impedes the generous circulation of those various liquids which cherish, invigorate, and embellish the human frame.
Spasms of the heart, ashmas, coughs, pectoral debilities, and stomach complaints without number, are the constant effects of this preposterous exercise.

" Walking,

"Walking, leaping, and running, are "the only means of improving corporeal " strength and agility. All those exquisite 66 tubes, veffels, and ligaments, which con-" stitute the viscera, are in this manner kept " in proper motion and repair. Whatever vio-" lence you thus exert will not only be with-" out danger, but of infinite benefit to the " fystem. It will secure health, which is the " fweetener of everybleffing human or divine. "Guard against an excess of sleep. Na-"ture is a glutton in nothing. Moderation " is the only medium in which she is happy "and contented. Set apart only a few "hours for rest. These will bring the "inclination along with them, as times of " eating do the cravings of appetite. But " never anticipate or enlarge them. Drow-

" fy and lethargic habits are the dissolution

" of both foul and body.

"Lie not down on couches of down or

" beds of feathers, which absorb and immure

" the body in luxury, fupineness, and sloth;

" but stretch yourselves at full length on " the bare boards and in the open air. You " will then be braced by the position nature

" intended, and fuck in the breath of heaven

" at every draught. Your flumbers will " be light and refreshing, and your dreams

"falutary and pleafing. An European,

" loaded and fweltering under heaps of

" woollen, exhibits a strong and shocking

" picture of filthiness and putrefaction!

"Start from your couch betimes. The " moments

" moments of the morning are facred and " falubrious. Then the genii of health " descend and communicate with those who " visit the herbage of the field while rich " with the dews of heaven. How pure " and sweet the smell of the air in this un-" polluted state, before it is contaminated by " corporeal effluvia! The fragrance of the " groves will regale your fenses, and the " melody of birds allure your hearts to gra-"titude and praise!

"Cleanliness is one of our greatest concerns. All animals are subject to its hand. The means of it are always at hand. The limpid stream and the briny wave were for this purpose ordained and given to the inhabitants, of the earth.

"They purify the furface, but they brace and strengthen, at the same time, all the nerves and sibres of the human frame. In this manner have the destinies proferibed nastiness. It is the source of innumerable diseases. It is loathsome and detestable; and the man or the woman who is averse to bathe or to wash

"man who is averse to bathe or to wash ought not to live.

"Imitate not the dress of the Europeans, which is invariably connected with stiffness, awkwardness, and deformity. Your first concern is the use, and your next the beauty of all your members. Whatever conceals and confines is unnatural; and all shapes, attitudes, or motions, not na"tural,

"tural, must be inconvenient, ungraceful, and preposterous.

"Be as much as possible in the open air.

"Man was not intended, like a mole, to "burrow under ground. And what are "the palaces of the great, and all the various

"effects of human architecture, but pro
"tuberances on the surface of the globe,

"just as unnatural, and infinitely more

"pernicious than any other species of

"mole-hill.

"Your regimen ought to be simple and inartificial. Drink only the simple water. It is the beverage of nature, and not by any means, or in any way, to be improved by art. No spirits whatever are half so salutary. It is stronger than the strongest

" strongest wine, purer than the virgin ho" ney, and sweeter than the sweetest nectar.

"Eat only fruit and vegetables. Let

"the predaceous animals prey on carnage

"and blood. Stain not the divine gentle-

" ness of your natures by one spark of " cruelty to the creatures beneath you.

" Heaven, to protect them, hath placed you

" at their head. Be not treacherous to the "important trust you hold, by murdering

"those you ought to preserve; nor defile

" your bodies by filling them with putre-

" faction. There is enough of vegetable " and fruit to supply your appetites, with-

" out oppressing them by carrion, or drench-

"ing them in blood."

BOOKS

PRINTED FOR AND SOLD BY

VERNOR AND HOOD,

POULTRY.

A New Edition, greatly enlarged, and very carefully revifed throughout, with upwards of 20 characteritic Tail-

Pieces, by Bewick, Price 3s. sewed, of

r. The Beauties of History; or Pictures of Virtue and Vice, drawn from Examples of Men eminent for their Virtues, or infamous for their Vices. First selected for the Instruction and Entertainment of Youth, by the late Wm. Dodd, LL. D.

2. Characters of all the Kings of England, from Hume, &e. with their Heads beautifully cut in Wood, by Bewick.

Price 28.

3. The History of England, abridged by Oliver Goldfmith, brought down to the present Time, ornamented with 32 Heads and other Plates, by T. Bewiek. Price 3s. 6d.

4. Dodsley's Chronicles of the Kings of England, written in a Style adapted to impress upon the Memories of Youth the Elements of the English History, with 32 sine Heads. Price 1s. 6d. Vellum Back.

5. Moral Amusements, or a Collection of Tales, Histories, and Anecdotes, with a Frontispiece. Price 2s. 6d.

6. Scripture Historics; or interesting Passages extracted from the Holy Bible, for the Instruction and Amusement of Children, with a beautiful Frontispiece. Price 2s. 6d. bound.

7. Obedience Rewarded; or the History of Mortimer

Lascells, with a beautiful Frontispiece. Price 3s.

8. The New Children's Friend; or pleafing Incitements to Wifdom and Virtue, conveyed by Anecdote, Tale, and Adventure, with a beautiful Frontispiece. Price 1s. 6d.

9. The New Friend of Youth, or Blossoms of Virtue; being Aneedotes of young Persons, amiable and exemplary in their Manners and Behaviour, with a beautiful Frontispiece. Price 2s. 6d.

10. The Intellectual Mirror for Young Ladies; or Beauties of History, applied to Character, Conduct, and Behaviour, with elegant Plates. Price 3s.

BOOKS PRINTED FOR VERNOR AND HOOD.

- 11. David, or the Reprobate Reformed. Plate. Price Is. 6d. bound. Vellum Back.
- 12. Cornaro on Health and Long Life, New Edition. Price 2s. 6d.
- 13. Cotton's Visions in Verse, with 6 elegant Plates, 18mo. Price 2s. 6d. fewed.
- 14. Zimmerman on Solitude, with a Life of the Author and an Index, not in any former Edition, with 7 beautiful Plates, defigned by Kirk, and engraved by Ridley. In Soo. on finest Vellum Paper, 8s. 6d. Boards. Ditto with Places worked in Colours, 10s. 6d.

15. The Life of Petrarch, translated by Mrs. Dobson, a New Edition in 2 vol. 820. printed on fine Vellum Paper, with 8 capital Plates, engraved by Ridley, from Defigns by Kirk, 16s. Boards. Ditto, on Royal Vellum Paper, 11. 15.

Boards.

16. The Travels of Anacharfis the Younger in Greece, abridged from the French of Barthelemy, with beautiful Plates, &c. by Richter, 9s. Boards, or on fine Vellum Paper. 10s. 6d.

17. Extraordinary Adventures of Donald Campbell, Efq. of Barbreck, in an overland Journey to the East Indics. 38. 6d.

- 18. Plutarch's Lives, somewhat abridged, by Oliver Goldsmith, 7 vols. 18mo. with 63 Plates, Price 14s. bound in Red.
- 19. Paul and Virginia, translated from St. Pierre, by Helen Maria Williams, with 6 beautiful Plates, 6s. Boards.

20. Ditto in French, with Plates, 4s. 6d. Boards.

21. Poems, viz. Pope's Essay on Man, Jerningham's Funeral, Blair's Grave, Gray's Elegy, Percy's Hermit of Warkworth, and Sonnets by Mifs Helen Maria Williams, with 6 beautiful Plates, 6s. Boards.

22. The Death of Abel, translated from Gesner, with 3 beautiful Plates, by Richter, 4s. Boards.

23. Sheridan's Dictionary Improved, or a General Pronouncing Dictionary of the English Language, greatly enlarged by Stephen Jones, 3s. Boards.

24. The New Bath Guide, a New Edition, with 5 fine Plates, defigned by Baynes, engraved by Taylor, &c. 4s. 6d.

Boards.

25. Tales of the Cottage, or Moral and Entertaining Lesions for Youth, by Mrs. Pilkington. Frontispiece. Price 25. Vellum Back.

Chi His Wenehester

Winchester Wet West Oct Och Mincheste Hants Winchester erston

