THE ROYAL ACADEMY, 1896.

INTRODUCTION.

PURSUING the plan hitherto adopted in our reproductions of the Academy pictures of the year, we have secured such of the works as were available for the purpose of both fairly and fully representing the collection in its various branches. Some of the pictures, it is perhaps almost unnecessary to add, were, from one reason or another, not obtainable; but apart from that, our illustrations are quite sufficient to give a good general idea of the contents of the galleries.

With regard to the present Academy, the writer of these lines, with an unbroken experience of fifty years of the periodical exhibitions, ventures to assert that it is distinctly of more than average merit. We should not look to the failures inevitable in all large collections of works of art in order to judge of the value of the exhibition, but rather what the bulk of the work represents. Regarded in this light, we shall find more than sufficient to discredit the pessimistic views of those never tired of asserting that our art is in its decadence.

To refer first to imaginative and classical designs, one naturally turns in the first place to Lord Leighton's last and unfinished picture of "Clytie," which, as a fervid and fascinating conception of the nymph adoring the god of day, is as fine as anything the late President ever produced. Sir John Millais, the state of whose health it is unnecessary to refer to except with an expression of warm sympathy, is best seen in his study of "A Forerunner"—a figure in which the motive is not without its pathos, and the outlines those of the great master who for half a century has witched us with ever-recurring evidence of his genius. Mr. Alma-Tadema, in two comparatively unimportant compositions, "The Coliseum" and "Whispering Noon," still exhibits the archaeological research in which he has no peer, together with the technical skill which represents marbles and draperies, statues, and other details with such marvellous skill. Mr. Frank Dicksee would almost have seemed determined to compensate in rich colouring with his superbly-painted subject, "The Mirror," for the not wholly pleasant, if sympathetic, greenish-grey tone of colour in "The Confession," a picture in which there is a kind of sad fascination. Mr. G. F. Watts replaces his highly dramatic "Jonah" of last season with a wholly classical scene in his "Infancy of Jupiter." Mr. P. H. Calderon's graceful maiden, symbolising "Spring-time," is sweet in line and pure in expression, and both the "Pandora" of Mr. J. W. Waterhouse and "Aggravation" of Mr. Briton Riviere exhibit respectively the particular train of thought in which those painters indulge. Mr. V. C. Prinsep, in "La Révolution," sends as his Diploma work no unfitting specimen of his refined powers, and Sir John Gilbert, with his characteristic figure of "An Outpost," also helps the exhibition. Quite in the front rank of those contributing the class of design we are now alluding to stands Mr. E. A. Abbey, who signalises his recent election as an Associate with his "Richard Duke of Gloucester and the Lady Anne," a work arousing both comment and admiration; whilst Mr. Arthur Hacker's "The Cloister or the World" and Mr. S. J. Solomon's "The Birth of Love" furnish something more than fair promise of a great future for those young artists.

In the landscapes, where we are always accustomed to look for excellence, we shall not be disappointed. Mr. E. A. Waterlow's lovely interpretations of Nature in her more poetical aspects were never more beautiful than in his "In the Mellow Autumn Light" and "The Glow of Evening;" Mr. David Murray charms us with his broadly-treated, masterly transcripts of scenery in his favourite sketching-ground, the Kennet and the Avon, and Messrs. J. MacWhirter, B. W. Leader, J. Aumonier, J. W. North, Alfred Parsons, and, on this occasion at least, Mr. G. D. Leslie, contribute their quota to a branch of art in which the British school has always been pre-eminent. Mr. H. W. B. Davis sends only one small canvas, but that a gem, "An Orchard in Wales," which may rank as either a landscape or animal picture; and in the somewhat kindred art of sea-painting Messrs. J. C. Hook, Peter Graham, and John Brett play a conspicuous part.

The genre subjects, both historical and social, are as usual numerous, and well illustrate a popular branch in our school. There has of late years been some strong examples of battle scenes in the Academy, and this year we have a most powerful example in "The Capture of a French Battery by the 52nd Regiment at Waterloo," by Mr. Ernest Crofts. The animal subjects are not very numerous, but Mr. J. M. Swan has rather a strikingly treated design, "The Lion-hunter," and another depicting "East African Leopards."

With examples of portraiture of all kinds and classes the galleries abound. The President, Sir John Millais, sends several, among them "The Marchioness of Tweeddale." Mr. Seymour Lucas also figures very successfully in this art with his presentment of "Mrs. Seymour Lucas," Mr. James Sant with his "Miss Dorothea Baird as 'Trilby,'" Mr. G. F. Watts in a broadly-painted, vigorous head of Alfred Gilbert, Esq., R.A., and Messrs. W. W. Oules, Herkomer, Luke Fildes, and W. Q. Orchardson also contribute at least their share to the portraiture of the year. Mr. John S. Sargent's three-quarter length of "The Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain" is one of the most striking pictures in Gallery I., and the same artist's "Mrs. Hamilton," in white satin, is a freely executed and singularly characteristic head.

The Sculpture owes not a little of its leading attraction this year to the fine statue in marble of "Henry Philpott, Bishop of Worcester," by Mr. Thomas Brock; the monumental effigy of "Richard Walmesley," by Mr. H. H. Arnstead; an aluminium and ivory statuette of "St. George," by Mr. Alfred Gilbert; a statuette repetition of his work of last year, "The Joy of Life," by Mr. Hamo Thornycroft; a small bronze group, "The Last Arrow," a wounded lion making his last effort to reach the hunter, an Assyrian king, who, sword in hand, stands ready to receive him, by Mr. Briton Riviere; and by younger men, "The Flight of Fancy," by Mr. Andrea C. Lucchese, and a design in silver for a "Centrepiece for Dining-table," by Mr. Bertram Maekennal.

Still the unequal fight went on till at last the "Swiftsure," bursting through the mêlée, passed close under the stern of the battered wreck, giving three hearty cheers when a Union Jack was waved from a pike to show that, though crippled, the "Bellisle" was still unconquered.—An Incident of Trafalgar.)
