

3 2044 106 251 317

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

THE IRISH LAW TIMES

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

may 14

10
8

94
THE

IRISH LAW TIMES

AND

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL:

A WEEKLY GAZETTE OF LEGAL POSTINGS

AND

Miscellaneous Legal News and Information;

TO WHICH ARE ADDED

THE IRISH LAW TIMES REPORTS,

WITH A

DIGESTED INDEX

OF ALL DECISIONS REPORTED IN THE IRISH LAW TIMES REPORTS, AND IN CONTEMPORANEOUS
LEGAL REPORTS OF IRISH CASES, DURING THE YEAR 1882;

AND AN APPENDIX OF

THE PUBLIC GENERAL STATUTES RELATING TO IRELAND

(45° AND 46° VICTORIA).

---

Pro Rege, Grege, Lege.

---

VOLUME XVI.—1882.

DUBLIN:

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY THE PROPRIETOR,
JOHN FALCONER, 53 UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET.

1882.

KDK
63
1882
F12
I74
v.16

Rec. Sept. 30, 1889.

GENERAL INDEX,

A	PAGE
Abolition of judicial oaths	596
Accident to Mr. C. H. James	176
Acknowledgment of wills, the	263
Acting for mortgagor and mortgagee	46
Act, Adulteration	404
Ancient Monuments, the	489
Arrears of Rent (Ireland), 1889	418, 461, 493, 548, 582
investigators under	574
Ballot, the	102
Betting Houses, places within the	81
Bills of Exchange	462
Cairns' Conveyancing, remaining provisions of the	2
Contagious Diseases (Animals), 1878, railway carriers and the	275, 289, 317
Conveyancing and Law of Property, 1881, where it should be adopted and where excluded	31, 56, 63, 73, 83, 116, 127, 139, 149, 164, 178, 190, 205, 215, 230, 261, 265, 282, 293, 312
Conveyancing, 1882, the	492
practice under the	204
Debtors, offences against the	260
Employers' Liability, 1880, contracts in oyster of the	203
notice under the	247
the	160
Extradition, 1870, the	375
Land Law, at Petty Sessions (Ireland), 1881	175
reports of decisions under	68, 203
Licensing, the	29
Lodgers' Goods Protection, 1871, the	403
Married Women's Property, 1882	9
Prevention of Crimes, audience of solicitors under the	458, 503, 683
Public Libraries, the	522, 537
Public Offices Fees, 1879, notices under the	336
Settled Land, the	163
further considered	510, 563, 580
Addresses to Hon. F. A. Fitzgerald	591
Lord Fitzgerald	568, 575
Administration of justice in Ireland, the	968
Admiralty appeals	232
in the olden time	86
Admission of solicitors	607
Adulteration Act, the	79, 84, 106, 145, 314, 328, 341, 377, 411, 596, 607, 632
Affidavit of attestation, the	404
Agents, liability of, in actions based on fraud	76
lying, liability for	267
Agricultural commissions, the	6
holdings (law of distress)	391
improvements, Government loans to occupying tenants for	213
labourers in Ireland	13
Alleged protection of Irish judges	284
Ancient executors	232
Animals, cruelty to, in captivity	448
Appeal, a Court of Criminal	172
the Court of	163, 211
Appeals, Admiralty	320
civil bill	86
from discretionary orders	242
Application of the rule against perpetuities to restraint on anti-cipation	382
	593

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS:—

Atkinson, H., 555.
Beauchamp, R. A., 555—Bell, A., 99—Bell, E. T., 584—Bourke, Richard, 381—Brady, A. N., 384—Browning, J., 121.
Chamberlain, Mr., 584—Conolly, J. J., 26—Crawford, A., 584—Crockett, John, 322—Crotty, R. D., B.A., 384—Curtis, S. P., 474.
Donaldson, J. R., 99.
Eagle, G., 369—Egan, Mr. Francis, 285—Ellard, J., 328—Elmes, Edward D., 106.
Ferguson, R., LL.D., 584—Ferguson, Sir Samuel, 121—Fitzgerald, Charles, 108—Fitzgerald D., 51—Fitzgerald, G., 596.
Galbraith, D., 58—Gartlan, G. H., 540—Gilbert, W., 596—Givan, John, M.P., 28, 272—Glenny, Mr. W. W., 256—Greer, Edwd., 65—Greer, G., A.B., 584.
Hancock, W. N., 344—Harris, M. H., 584—Harvey, James, 106—Hemphill, Q.C., Sergeant, 23—Hennessy, Pope, K.C.M.G., 596—Houston, R. B., 464—Hickson, Mr. R., 298—Higgins, Joseph Charles, 106—Huggard, J. T., 555.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS—con.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS—con.	PAGE
Keatley, W. J., 437—Keys, George, 79—Kilmartin, Mr., 584.
Leahy, M., 26—Lefroy, E. T., J.P., 484—Lentaigne, J. N., 51—Leslie, W., 632—Lover, H. W., 474—Lowry, J. M., 525—Lowry, John, 106—Lynch, D., 474—Lyster, P. T., 369.
Macivor, J., 36—MacNeill, J. G. S., 588—M'Dermot, G., 540—M'Inerney, T., 632—M'Laughlin, James W., 232—Meldon, A., 384—Mitchell, William, 106—Monahan, J. H., Q.C., 596—Moriarty, J. F., 328.
Nolan, A. B., 484.
O'Brien, Peter, Q.C., 314—O'Brien, Wm., Q.C., 298—O'Dempsey, T. J., 540.
Power, V., 23—Purcell, M. F., 596.
Reed, Mr. A., 494—Rhodes, Mr., 584—Roper, William, 464.
Sheehan, P. J., 106—Simms, F. B., 584—Small, J. F., 439—Smith, Thomas, 484—St. Leger, W. F., 106—Story, H., 525—Sullivan, Edward, 328—Sullivan, William, 314.
Taylor, N., 525—Toomey, J. R., 106—Tyrrell, W., 596.
Vernon, Mr. James, 272.
Wallace, A. C., 525—Wilson, Mr. J., 494.
Arabi's judges	539
Assassins, State, and the defence of insanity	4
Assistant Under Secretary, the	232
Associated Law Clerks of Ireland, the	369
Attestation, the affidavit of	76
Attorneys, liability of	228
Audience of solicitors under the Prevention of Crimes Act	522, 537

B

Ballot Acts, the	102
Bankruptcy, on	519
Barristers and solicitors	364
Barristers' fees	204
Benefit building societies and banks	184
Betting Houses Act, "places" within the	81
Bill, Conveyancing	126, 226, 288, 249
County Court Amendment	243
the Bills of Exchange	361
Labourers Cottages	391
Local Bankruptcy Courts	154
Married Woman's Property	187, 200, 292, 417
Partnerships	277, 295
Prevention of Crime	240
Settled Land	186, 199, 212, 391, 431
Stolen Goods	445
Bills of Sale	393
Blake, Judge, death of	641
Blasphemous publications	362
Block in the Irish Land Courts, the	62
Books received	10, 23, 38, 51, 58, 66, 79, 90, 99, 108, 121, 133, 145, 164, 168, 184, 207, 245, 255, 285, 314, 328, 341, 369, 425, 439, 452, 462, 474, 493, 525, 540, 554, 568, 584, 596, 608, 621, 642
Bourke, Mr. W. M., obituary of	298
Boycotting, Medlaval	267
Bradlaugh's, taking of the oath, Mr.	96
Building owners, liability of	376
Burglars, the law relating to	499

C

Calls to the inner bar	86
outer bar	35, 190, 270, 553
Carriage, contract of—limitation of time for presenting claim for damage	306
Carriers, loss of goods by	55
Certificates for town and country	241
Cetwayo	406
Chancery cases, practice in	588
Channel tunnel, the	479
Chattels, defrauded vendors of	366
implied contracts as to	63
Cheques, indorsement of	583
overdue	202
Civil bill appeals	243
Clients, frauds on	159
Cliffe Leslie, T. E., obituary of	65
Clubs and the outside world	128
expulsion from	119
Coffee, imitations of	429
Cohabitation as evidence of marriage	450
Commission, land, report	81
valuators	82
work of the	104

	PAGE		PAGE
Commission, the land	10, 390, 425	E
the railway	448	Egypt, investing in	508
Commissions to take evidence	620	Employers' Liability Act, the	190
Commital of Mr. Gray, the	459, 479	notices of injury under	247
Committee on Mr. Gray's case, the	565	of	153
Communication between solicitor and client in presence of a	511	England, indexing and digesting in	240
third person	4	land tenure in	388
Compensation for improvements	4	English, Scotch, and Irish judgments	524
Conditional sales—sales upon instalments—title retained	638	Equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds.—The American and	419
Conditions of sale	525	English rule	352
Conspiracy	104	European concert, the	369
Constructive self-defence	217	Evidence by experimental tests	394
Contract of carriage—limitation of time for presenting claim for	306	by prisoners	620 damage	18	commissions to take	620
sale by a baker, the	636	curiosities of	280
Contracts in letters	219	of foreign laws	436
misrepresentations leading to	511, 536, 564	of reputation in libel	407
Contempt of court	423	Excentric wills	308
Conveyance of rights of entry, the	2	Excessive charges by railway companies	612
Conveyancing Act, Cairns', remaining provisions of the— cons.	31, 56, 62, 73, 83, 116, 127, 139,	Excluding counter claims	448
and Law of Property	149, 164, 173, 190, 205, 215, 230,	Executioners, ancient	119
Act, 1881, the, where it should be	251, 265, 292, 298, 312	Expulsion from clubs	284 adopted, and where excluded	204	of foreigners, the	410
practice under the	430, 492	Extradition Act, 1870, the	375
1882, the	188, 225, 238, 249
Bill	14	F
the decline of	448	"Fair rent" cases, practice in	292
Convict Francis Hynes, the	363	rents, fixing	295
Copyright, the law of	121	False pretences	89
Coroners, the salaries of	195	Fees, solicitors	35
CORRESPONDENCE:—		Felo-de-se	389
Civil bill court practice	285	Finland, women's property in	188
County court equity jurisdiction and practice	504	Fitzgerald, Hon. F. A., addresses to	533
Effect of arrangements in bankruptcy, the	196	valedictory addresses to	575
Equitable mortgages and registered assurances	632	Mr. Charles, obituary of	271
Judgments without address, &c., of parties	341	Fitzgibbon, Master, obituary of	494
Law of taxes, the	504, 514, 526	the death of	479
Preliminary examination, the	474	Foreign checks on crime	262, 263
Prevention of Crime Act	271	laws, evidence of	280
Re Burke's estate	384	Foreigners, the expulsion of	264
Sessional examinations, the	341	Forms of swearing	153
Solicitors' fees	632	Fractions of a day	229
Stamping receipts for grand jury cases	36	France, the legal profession in	336
Valuation of lands	412	undefended prisoners in	620
Witness to agreements fixing fair rents	165	Franchise, the lodger	488
Corroboration of promise of marriage	333	Fraud, the liability of agents in actions based on	267
Corroborative evidence	96	Frauds on clients	189
Cost of the land court, the	387, 401,	statute of, contracts between vendors and purchasers	41
Costs, right to, out of particular estate or fund in litigation	415	within the	532
Counter claim on counter claim	120	Fraudulent agents	264
County cases, liability to	50	Freaks of juries	351
court administration of the Land Law Act, 1881	243	French assize, a	335
Amendment Bill	388, 360	criminal lawyer, a famous	563
courts, land valuers in the	188	houses of correction	513
Country lawyers	511, 536, 564	law, nice points in Court, contempt of	320
of appeal, the	163, 211	G
criminal appeal, a	74	Gerrard, Mr. B., obituary o	194
Courts, music in	141	Gibson, Mr., M.P.	503
Cremation, legality of	252, 263	Gifts causa mortis	309
Crime, foreign checks on	533	Goods, loss of, by carriers	55
Criminal appeal	163, 211	sold, latent defects in	87
a court of	78	Government, the, and the Land Act	62
cases, intent in	201	Gray, Mr., the committal of	459, 479
liability of avowturers	449	Gray's case, Mr., the committee on	565
statistics	408	imprisonment, Mr.	432
Criticism, the limits to literary and artistic	379, 395, 408	Guiteau trial, the	4, 19
Cruelty to animals	355
in captivity	172	H
Curiosities of evidence	620	Head-note oddities	117 statute law	144	Holdings, agricultural (law of distress)	213
the law of treason	342	Homicide	279
		House of Commons select committee on privilege, the	576
D		Humphreys, Mr. H., presentation to	523
Day, fractions of a	229
Dead game, larceny of, and the doctrine of "possession"	33	I
man coming to life again	205	Illegal lotteries	20
Death of a Dublin solicitor	632	Imitations of coffee	439 of Judge Blake	641	Implied contract that goods sold by a manufacturer are of his	44
of Mr. A. J. Phipps	561	own make	63
of Mr. T. F. Porter	589	contracts as to chattels	13 sentences and executions	104	Improvements, agricultural, Government loans to occupying	4
Decisions, reports of, under Land Law Act, 1881	29	tenants for	603
Decline and fall of a great humbug	446	Incorporated Law Society, the	35, 216, 332, 592, of conveyancing, the	14	Indemnity of trustees for wrongs	609
Decoys	161	Indexing and digesting in England	240
Defrauded vendors of chattels	366	Indictment, discharge of jury before verdict on	129
Devolution of trust and mortgage estates after death	320	Indorsement of cheques	583
Discharge of jury before verdict on indictment	129	Innkeepers, liability of, for loss of guests' p. operty	61
Discretionary orders, appeals from	382	À re the Suez Canal	435
Distress amendment	212	Insanity, State assasins and the defence of	4 for rent	374	Insurance on Dr. Lamson's life, the	513
the law of	363, 392, 404	Intent in criminal cases	78
Dock briefs	619
Dogs, liability for	15
Donnell, R., death of	627
Duties of police constables, the	534

	PAGE
Interested justices	180, 537
Investigators under the Arrears of Rent Act	574
Investing in Egypt	508
Ireland, agricultural labourers in	284
judicial rents in	632
resident magistrates in	494
the associated law clerks of	369
Irish Bench, the	250
judges, alleged protection of	232
and trial by jury	284
supposed plot against the	596
Land Commissioners, the	188
Courts, block in the	63
magistracy, the	153
salmon fishery case, an	327

J

James, Mr. C. H., accident to	176
Judge O'Hagan and "live and thrive"	502
Judge, the saheb, and the old woman, the	513
Judges' ages	140
Judges, alleged protection of Irish	232
Judgeship, the vacant	374
Judgment debts, retention of, by town agent for debts due from country solicitors	29
Judgments, English, Scotch, and Irish	524
Judicial character and habits	374
rents in Ireland	632
vacancies	284
Jurisdiction, service out of the	102
Juries, freaks of	264
misconduct of	480, 470, 482, 491, 501
Jurors, misconduct of, in the use of intoxicating liquors	588
Jury, discharge of, before verdict on indictment	129
trial—Charging the jury	124
Justice, administration of, libels on the	416
Justice in Ireland, the administration of	332
Justices interested	180, 537
justice	376

K

Keogh, the late Judge	398
-----------------------	-----

L

Labourers Cottages Bill, the	391
Labour laws, the	297
Lady lawyers	241
Lake Leman in a law court	435
Lamson case, the	186
Land Act, the Settled	510, 563
Bill, the Settled	533, 546, 562, 573, 589, 606, 618, 627, 637
commission, the	186, 199, 213, 451
valuators	10, 390, 425, 473
work of the	92
commissioner, the new	104
court, the cost of the	346
Law Act, 1881, at petty sessions, the	96
county court administration of the	175
reports of decisions under	60
working of the	29
(Ireland) Act, 1881	303
restrictive covenants as to	83, 208, 461
sub-commissions, the	349
tenure in England	175
valuers in the county courts	338
Landlord's action for nuisance to premises	360
Larceny of dead game and the doctrine of "possession"	423
Late Mr. J. N. Darby, the	33
Judge Keogh, the	328
Mr. Justice O'Brien, the	328
latent defects in goods sold	14
Law and literature	87
"Law Journal" Reports for April, 148; May, 225; June, 262; July, 318; Aug., 388; Sept., 444; Oct., 498; Nov., 561	421
Law, labing, prize essays on	421
lord, the new	248
of copyright, the	248
distress, the	353
strikes, the	363, 392, 404
trade marks, the	405
treason, the	532
reform	217
relating to burglars, the	231
Lawson, Mr. Justice	499
Lawyers on liberty and property	490
Lawyer's lien for costs on "property recovered or preserved"	337

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL:—

King's Inns, Henrietta-street—
Debating Society, Law Students	526
Examination, Michaelmas, result of	569
Honor examination, papers for	323, 540, 555, 568, 597
Law students, admissions of	36, 207
Lectures, Hilary	10
Michaelmas	526
Easter	164
"The John Brooke Scholarship," rules and papers for	234

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL—Con.

	PAGE
Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts—
Solicitors' Apprentices' Debating Society	526
Examination (Preliminary), Hilary, result of	52
Easter	195
Trinity	285
Michaelmas	555
(Final), Hilary, result of	52
Easter	195
Trinity	285
Michaelmas	555
Papers (Preliminary), Hilary	23
Easter	166
Trinity	266
Michaelmas	540
(Final), Hilary	52, 58, 66
Easter	179, 195, 207
Trinity	273, 286
Michaelmas	555, 569, 584
Findlater Scholarship	52
Law Professor, result of examination by	425, 570
Lectures by Professor of Law, notice of	155, 167, 180, 299, 314, 494, 505, 515, 526
Notice to candidates for examination	99, 108, 121, 133, 187, 180, 196, 203, 221, 233, 464, 474, 484, 597, 608, 622, 633, 643
Queen's College, Galway—Scholarships and Exhibitions awarded	58

LEADING ARTICLES:—

Alleged attempt to assassinate Judge Lawson	560
Andrews, the Hon. Mr Justice	532
Contracts between vendors and purchasers within the Statute of Frauds	41 impossible of performance	625, 635
in ouster of the Employers Liability Act, 1880	308 of carriers of goods	223, 237
Contempt of court	531
Criminal attempts	573, 587, 601, 611
Current decisions	33
Death of Mr. George Perry	430
Mr. Robert Donnell	627
Effect of the death of an acceptor of a bill of exchange, blank as to drawer's name	261
Equitable mortgages by deposit of title deeds	185, 197, 209
Government loans to occupying tenants, for agricultural improvements	13
Householder's franchise, the	30
King's Inns librarianship, the	31
Land commission reports	81
Law lord, the new	248
Legal education	318
Liability of innkeepers for loss of guests' property	61
Loss of goods by carriers	55
Notices of injury under the Employers Liability Act	247
Our wives	487, 507, 545, 559
"Places," within the Betting Houses Act	82
Poisons, the sale of	67
Presumptions of life and death	359, 373
death, and survivorship	101, 111, 123, 137, 147, 157, 171
Privilege of witnesses as to criminalizing questions	429, 443, 457, 467, 477, 497, 517
Proof of "means" to pay	94
Railway carriers and the Contagious Diseases Animals Act, 1878	275, 289, 317
Reports of decisions under Land Law Act, 1881	29
Retention of judgment debts by town agent for debts due from country solicitors	29
Right to costs out of particular estate or fund in litigation	387, 401, 415
Service of writs and notices	1
Solicitor's lien for costs on "property recovered or preserved"	331, 345
The late Right Hon. Sir Joseph Napier, Bart.	626
Legal age of women in Switzerland	79 expense	406
menu, a	434
position of the Suez Canal	360
procedure, reform of	70, 112
profession in France, the	336
Legality of cremation	141
Legislature, provincial, powers of	95
Lex non cogit ad impossibilia	118
Liability for dogs	15
lying agents	6
of agents in actions based on fraud, the	267
attorneys	228
employers	163
members of dispensary committees	120
solicitors for partners	176
to county cess	120
Libel, evidence of reputation in	436
the law of	525
Libels on the administration of justice	416
License duties	163
mortgaging a	322
Licensing Acts, the	408
Life and death, presumptions of	359, 373
Limitation, legal and equitable	296
of penal actions	142
Statute of, mortgages and the	304

	PAGE		PAGE
Limits to literary and artistic criticism, the	379, 395, 406	Partnerships' Bill, the	277, 295
Liquor laws, the	256	Payment under protest	5
List of sheriffs for 1882	107	Penal actions, limitation of	142
Local and stipendiary magistrates	402	Perpetuities arising out of contracts	629
Local Bankruptcy Courts Bill, the	154	to restraint on anticipation, application of the rule
Lodger franchise, the	488	against	595
Lodgers	175, 422	Person, slander of a, in his calling, the	7, 29, 43, 44, 77, 85
Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871, the	9	Phipps, Mr. A. J., death of	561
Lord Derby and the magistracy	266	Phoenix Park assassinations, the	819, 823
Fitzgerald	263	Poisoning, murder by	472
addresses to	268	Poisons, the sale of	112
O'Hagan	35	Police constables, the duties of	524
Salisbury on police interrogatories	523	interrogatories, Lord Salisbury on	523
Lotteries, illegal	20	Porter, T. F., death of	589
Lying agents, liability for	6	"Possession," larceny of dead game and the doctrine of	33
M
M'Blaine, Mr. F. W., obituary of	79	Powers of provincial legislatures	95
Macdonogh, Mr., obituary of	177	Practice in "fair rent" cases	292
Magistracy, the Irish	153	Practice under the Conveyancing Act	204
Lord Derby and the	262	Prerogative of mercy, the	118
Magistrates, local and stipendiary	405	Presentation of parish registers	206
Queen's counsel sworn in as	266	Presentation to Mr. H. Humphrey's	523
Malicious injuries	581	Presumptions of survivorship	584
to property	189	Prevention of Crime Bill, the	240
prosecution	352	Prisoners and counsel	43
Market overt, title obtained in	214	Prisoners and their counsel	52
Marriage, cohabitation as evidence of	450	Prisoners, evidence by	394
contract, a novel	295	Prize essays on Fishing law	421
corroboration of promise of	165	Probate Duty	43
Married Women's Property Act, the	458	Processions in the streets	451
Bill, the	187, 200, 292, 417	Procrustated legislation	244
Maunsell, Mr., obituary of	179	Practice-cases in Chancery	538
"Means" to pay, proof of	94	Professional amalgamation	144
Medieval Boycotting	267	Property held in mortmain	411
Mercy the prerogative of	118	Property, malicious injuries to	189
Misconduct of juries	460, 470, 482, 491, 501	Protest, payment under	6
of jurors, in the use of intoxicating liquors	588	Publicans' certificates	473
Misrepresentations leading to contract	219	Public Libraries Acts, the	236
Mortgages and the Statute of Limitation	304	"Public Offices Fees Act, 1879," notice under the	163
Mortgaging a license	322	Q
Mortgagor and mortgagee, acting for	46	Quarterly index to cases	151, 226, 640
Mortmain, property held in	411	indices to cases	518
Mr. Gibson, M. P.	503	Quarter Sessions amenities	165
Mr. Gray's imprisonment	482	Queen's Counsel sworn in as magistrates	265
Murder by poisoning	472	Queensland, Supreme Court of	603
Music in courts	74	Quotations in court	337
N
New barristers	22, 539	R
Conveyancing Bill, the	138	Railway Commission, the	448
Treasury Remembrancer, the	210	Companies, excessive charges by	208
Notes of cases	97, 104, 132, 192, 339	Reasonable doubt, a	251
of English cases	120, 168, 340, 354, 397, 411	Recent Bills of Sale cases	124
Notice of action	614	decisions, on attachment of the person	619
under the "Public Offices Fees Act, 1879"	181	Rectifying mistakes in wills	348
of intention to analyse	404	Reform of legal procedure	70, 112
Notices and writs, service of	1	of contempt of court both civil and ecclesiastical	568
Nuisance to premises, landlord's action for	423	Registers, parish, preservation of	906
O
Oath, Mr. Bradlaugh's taking of the	96	Registration of societies making gain	487
Oaths, judicial, abolition of	536	Release of Mr. Gray, M. P.	490, 499
O'Brien, late Mr. Justice, the	14	Remaining provisions of Cairns' Conveyancing Act, the— con.	2
OBITUARY:—
Billing, R. A.	453	Rent, distress for	374
Bourke, Mr. W. M.	208	Reports and reporters	250
Cliffe Leslie, T. E.	65	Land Commission	61
Fitzgerald, Mr. Charles	271	"Law Journal" for April, 148; May, 225; June, 292; July, 316; Aug., 338; Sept., 444; Oct., 498; Nov., 561; Dec., 602	240
Fitzgibbon, Mr. Gerald	494	Residence and occupation	615
Gerrard, Mr. S.	194	Resident magistrates in Ireland	484
M'Blaine, F. W.	79	Restrictive covenants as to land	849
Macdonogh, Mr.	177	Retirement of Mr. B. Galloway, Seasonal Crown Solicitor	547
Maunsell, Mr.	179	Revised statute, a	219
O'Hea, Mr. James	266	Right of private defence, the	511
O'Meagher, Joshua	271	to counsel in a criminal case, the	616
Tandy, Charles H.	453	REVIEWS:—
Trench, Hon. Charles J.	453	Bond, H. S.— The Solicitors' Diary, Almanac, and Legal Directory, 1883, &amp;c. London: Waterlow & Sons	608
Occupying tenants, Government loans to, for agricultural improvements	13	Eason's Almanac for Ireland for 1882. Dublin: W. H. Smith & Son	51
Offences against the Debtors' Act	355	Eason, Charles, jun.— A List of Judicial Rents, with Summary, Tables, and Index. Dublin: W. H. Smith & Son	106
"Official" reports	240	Emden, Alfred.— The Law relating to Building Leases and Building Contracts, the Improvement of Land by, and the Construction of Buildings, &amp;c., &amp;c. London: Stevens & Haynes	554
O'Hagan, Judge, and "live and thrive"	502	Ford, Charles.— The Solicitors' Diary, Almanac, and Legal Directory, 1882, &amp;c. London: Waterlow & Sons	51
Lord	85	Fottrell, George, jun.— A-B-O Guide to the Arrears Act, 1882, with the Act, Rules, and principal Forms annexed &amp;c. Dublin: M. H. Gill & Son	463, 607
Mr. Justice	418	George, Henry.— The Irish Land Question; what it involves, and how alone it can be settled. An Appeal to the Land Leagues. Manchester: J. Heywood & Sons. Glasgow: Cameron & Ferguson	463
O'Hea, Mr. James, obituary of	256	Harr's, Richard.— Hints on Advocacy, Conduct of Cases, Oaths and Criminal; Classes of Witnesses, and Suggestions for Cross-examining them, &amp;c., &amp;c. London: Stevens & Sons	35
O'Kane v. Sellheim	603	Healy, T. M., M. P.— The Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, with the Statutes incorporated therewith, and the Rules and Forms issued thereunder; being a Practical Exposition of the Act, &amp;c. Dublin: M. H. Gill & Son	270
O'Meagher, Mr. Joseph, obituary of	271
Old Inns of Court customs	278
On bankruptcy	519
Overdue cheques	202
P
Pardoned convicts	44
Parental rights	513
Parisian law-student life	117
Particulars and conditions of Sale	305, 324, 348, 363, 377, 406

	PAGE
REVIEWS—con.
Humphrey, Henry.— The Prevention of Crimes (Ireland) Act, 1883, with a Review of the Policy, Bearing, and Scope of the Act; Notes on the several Sections, chiefly those on the Subject of Summary Procedure for Offences against the Act. Dublin: Hodges, Figgis, & Co.	459
Incorporated Law Society Calendar for the year 1882. London: Published by authority of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society	51
Jennings, J. A.— Readings from the Works of Charles Dickens. Dublin: Carson, Brothers.	540
Kisbey, W. H.— The Arraers of Rent (Ireland) Act, 1882, together with the Rules, Forms, and a General Index, and the additional Rules and Forms under the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881. Dublin: Hodges, Figgis, and Co.	463
Official Guide (David MacBrynes).—Summer Tours in Scotland, 1882	344
Platt, James.—1. Business. 2. Money. 3. Morality. 4. Life &amp; Economy. 5. Progress. London: Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.	298
Suffere, William.— The Law relating to the Compulsory Purchase and Sale of Lands in Ireland, under the Provisions of the Irish Railways and Lands Clauses Acts; being the full text of the various Acts, with an Introduction, &amp;c. Dublin: E. Ponsonby	621
Thompson, John.— The Lawyer's Companion and Diary, and London and Provincial Law Directory for 1882, &amp;c. London: Stevens & Sons	51
Thompson, John.— The Lawyer's Companion and Diary and London Provincial Law Directory for 1883, with Tables of Costs, &amp;c. London: Stevens & Sons	621
Tidy, Charles M.— Legal Medicine, Part I. London: Smith, Elder, & Co.	389
S
Salaries of coroners, the	121
—small judges, the	539
Sale, bills of	393
—conditions of	525
—of prisoners, the	112
—particulars and conditions of	305, 324, 348, 363, 377, 406
SALES IN THE LAND COURT:—
In the Matters of the Estates of
Blake, Anthony Maurice, 134—Booth, Robert Bell, 355.
Carolin, Anne, 301.
Elliott, James, and others, 134.
Fenton, James, and others, 599—Fitzgerald, Hugh, and others, 345.
Hanly, Patrick, jun., and others, 355.
Leader, Henry, 571—Lennon, John, and others, 571.
Mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Limerick, 370.
Nowlan, Thos. J., 134.
O Kelly, Michael, 599—Oldfield Sarah, 570.
Ramsey, Joseph, 355—Roper, Geraldine S., 301.
Watson, Robert Leckey, 599—West, Very Rev. Aug. W., 233.
Salvation Army, the	290
Savagery and civilisation	224
Service of writs and notices	1
—in disturbed districts	553
—out of the jurisdiction	109
Settled Land Act, the { 510, 533, 546, 562, 563, 579, 580, 589, 606, 613, 627, 637
—further considered	591
—Bill, the	186, 199, 213, 304
Sheriffs, list of, for 1882	107
Sir F. S. Reilly, K.C.M.G.	188
Slander of a person in his calling, the	7, 20, 48, 64, 77, 85
Societies, registration of, making gain	437
Solicitor, a patriarchal	264
Solicitor-General in the House, the	96
Solicitor and client in presence of a third person, communication between	511
Solicitors and law stationers—
—their clients' money	158
—apprentices in Ireland	159
—evidence of, under the Prevention of Crimes Act	143
—Benevolent Association	522, 537
—debt, retention of judgment debts by town agent for debts due from	47
	29

	PAGE
Solicitors' fees	35, 391
—liability of, for partners	176
—lien	180
—relations with the sheriff	492
—testamentary instructions to employ certain	84
Some important will cases	338
Specific performance of contracts for the sale of shares in corporations, the	566
Spectators at a prize fight	392
Staffordshire case, the—the rule was not making	42
State assassins and the defence of insanity	4
Statute law, curiosities of	144
—of Limitation, mortgages and the	304
Stolen Goods Bill, the	445
Strikes, the law of	405
Sub-commissioners, legal and lay	402
Suez Canal, legal position of the	360
Sunday laws—works of necessity	323
Supposed plot against the Irish judges	596
Supreme Court of Queensland	603
Swearing, forms of	153
Switzerland, the legal age of women in	79
T
Temporary Laws	346
Testamentary directions to employ certain solicitors	84
Text-book addenda { 10, 22, 35, 51, 58, 79, 90, 121, 133, 145, 154, 166, 177, 194, 207, 220, 232, 244, 256, 269, 314, 326, 342, 355, 369, 382, 398, 412, 425, 439, 452, 463, 494, 498, 504, 614, 625, 654, 683, 697, 607, 631, 632, 643
The case of Francis Hynes	433
"The Court" on horseback	295
Title Deeds, Equitable Mortgage by Deposit of—The American and English Rule	419
Title obtained in market overt	214
Tombs, violation of	5
Torts, extent of the duty in	410
Trade parks	102
Trade marks, the law of	582
Treason, curiosities of the law of	242
—the law of	217
Treasure trove in France	450
Trial by Jury on its trial	76
—the Irish Judges and	284
Trust and mortgage estates, the devolution of, after death	320
Trustees, indemnity of, for wrongs	509
Tyrrill, Mr. Justice	596
U
Umbrella, in the matter of an	437
Undefended prisoners in France	620
Under Secretary, The Assistant	332
V
Vacant judgeship, the	374
Valedictory addresses to the Hon. F. A. Fitzgerald	575
Valuators, Land Commission	22
Value of children, the	560
Valuers in the Co. Courts	323
Vendors and purchasers, contracts between, within the Statute of Frauds	41
Venue in criminal cases	468
Violation of tombs	5
W
Western jurist, the	165
Westminster Hall as a law court	628
Wigs and gowns	611
Wills, eccentric	407
—the acknowledgment of	258
Woman beaters	319
Women as lawyers	407
—the legal age of, in Switzerland	79
Women's property in Finland	188
Working of the Land Law Act	203
Work of the Land Commission, the	104
Work of the Session, the	424
Writs and notices, service of	1

INDEX

TO

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY,

FILED OR HEARD,

IN

1882.

The name printed in Italics is that of the place in which the business or trading was carried on.

	PAGE
A
Allman, Daniel, 8 Upper Sackville-street, Dublin	315
Anoketill, F. M., Kellyfaddy, Clogher, Co. Tyrone	648
Angel, Catherine, 73 Manor-street, Dublin	815
Armstrong, William S., Ballybofey and Stranorlar, Donegal	428
Atkinson, John, 192 Great Britain-street, Dublin	36
B
Baldwin, Thomas, Michael-street, Waterford	398
Bell, George, Armagh, Co. Armagh	287
Bigger, Thomas, Mallusk, near Belfast, Antrim	585
Bourke, Nicholas, 88 Lower Buckingham-street, Dublin	278
Bourke, William, Main-street, Roscrea, Tipperary , trading as "William Bourke & Co."	455
Boyd, John, Lismacloskey, Antrim	108
Brennan, Peter, Burlington-quay, Bandon, Cork	80
Bruce, Jonathan, Sunville, Fallagreen, Limerick	829
Butler, Thomas, and Francis Butler, Castleisland, Kerry , trading as "Thomas & Francis Butler"	570
Byrnes, Roderick, and John J. Byrnes, Island Bann Mills, Nenagh, Tip. , trading as "Roderick Byrnes & Son"	515
C
Cairns, Alex., 11 and 15 Great Edward-street, Belfast	221
Cairns, J. Davidson, and Samuel Freckleton, 22 Queen's Arcade, Belfast, Antrim , trading as "J. Davidson, Cairns & Freckleton"	570
Callaghan, John Francis, Rose Hill, Sunday's Well, Cork	92
Canning, Randell John, and Henry Robert Canning, Belfast, Antrim , trading in co-partnership under the style and firm of "Canning Brothers"	898
Carland, Hugh 22 Bridge-street, Cavan	633
Casey, James, Moustrussel, Limerick	67
Caverly, James H., Skibbereen, Cork	155
Charleston, Thomas James, Magherafelt, Londonderry	196
Christian, James R., 12 Donagall-square, south, Belfast, Antrim , trading as "J. R. Christian & Co."	36
Clarke, John, 7 Denzille-street, Dublin	494
Coffey, John, Blackrench, Naas, Kildare	542
Colter, James, Patrick-street, Fermoy, Cork	371
Connor, James, Maghera, Londonderry	25
Cooper, Elizabeth, 40 and 41 Kildare-street, Dublin	25
Cooper, George William, 13 Brighton Vale, Monkstown, Dublin	59
Corbett, Andrew Joseph, Devonshire-street, Cork , trading under the style and firm of "Andrew Callaghan & Co."	182
Corry, Philip, 22 Bridge-street, Cavan	683
Crawford, Henry, Warrenpoint, Down	570
Crawford, William, jun., and James Kennedy, 5 Rosemary-street, Belfast, Antrim , trading as "W. Crawford, jun., & Co."	196
Crosby, John E., Sir John Rogerson's-quay, Dublin , trading as "John E. Crosby & Son," and of Eden-quay, Dublin , trading as "Lanigan & Co."	439
Crow, Wm. Thomas, Dundrum, Cashel, Tipperary	92
Cullhane, Maurice, Ballencolly, Limerick	314
Cullinane, James, Loughrea, Galway	301
Curran, Thomas, Millerstown, Stradbally, Waterford	287
D
Daly, John, 29, 30 and 31 Fleet-street, and 6 College-street, Dublin	570
Daly, Joseph, Tullamore, King's County	155
Deacon, John G., Barrack-street, Armagh	608
Delany, Felix, Ballahane, Temple-derry, Tipperary	599
Dempsey, John, Templepatrick, Antrim	557
Dempsey, Michael, 15 Redmond's-Hill, Dublin	134
Dennedy, Michael, Main-street, Mallos, Cork	412
Devitt, James, and Peter Devitt, Sligo , trading as "J. & P. Devitt"	99
Dixon, Wm., Clones, Monaghan	439
Doherty, Patrick, 63 William-street, Londonderry	398
Donovan, James, Tarbert, Kerry	92
Doyle, John, 58 Charlemont-street, Dublin	633
Duffy, James Joseph, Corrickmacross, Monaghan	599
Duffy, Peter, Ballybay, Monaghan	395
Dunne, Catherine, Cloyne, Cork	53
E
Eakin, Andrew, 21 English-street, Armagh	371
Egan, Patrick, Woodford, Galway	155
English, Laurence, 13 Vincent-street, Dublin	608
Evans, Henry F., Esplanade-terrace, Bray, Wicklow	528

	PAGE		PAGE
F
Fahany, John, Tubbercurry, Sligo	506	Lowry, Michael, Ballaghaderreen, Mayo	585
Fenton J. Cunliffe, Fermoy, Cork	245	Lunham, William, Russell-street, Tralee, Kerry	412
Ferris, Arthur, Lisburn, Antrim	384	Lyons, William H., 1 O'Connell-street, Dublin	278
Feury, Patrick, 12 Cook-street, and 16 Mary's-abbey, Dublin	329	M
Fitzpatrick, Denis, 58 Francis-street, Dublin	245	M'Ardle, James, Kilkerly, Louth	542
Flaherty, Simon, Shenane, Cork	155	M'Bride, William, North-street, Belfast, Antrim	67
Flanagan, John, Tullamore, King's County	287	M'Carthy, Thomas, Tallow, Waterford	80
Flanagan, Thomas, Ennistymon, Clare	474	M'Dermott, Edward, Dungarvan, Waterford	196
Fleming, John, Millmount, Dolphin's Barn, Dublin	301	M'Eney, Bridget, Kingscourt, Cavan	398
Flynn, Patrick, Coolmoyné, Fekard, Tipperary	67	M'Kee, Eliza, Lismacollum, Armagh	315
Flynn, Thomas, Coolmoyné, Fekard, Tipperary	67	M'Loughlin, Peter, Market-street, Olifden, Galway	542
Foley, Mathew, 19 Charlotte-street, Dublin	221	M'Namara, Benjamin, 211 Great Britain-street, Dublin	398
Fox, Edward, Dungannon, Tyrone	53	M'Wade, J., Green-street, Dublin	108
Freeman, Richard Deane, Beachfield, Clontarf, Dublin	287	M'Williams, R., English-street, Armagh	108
Frewen, Thos., Roseborough, Tipperary	315	Madden, Joseph W., Ballycastle, Mayo	278
G
Galvan, Mathew, Harcourt-street, Dublin	494	Maguire, Patrick, 92 and 149 Great Britain-street, Dublin	398
Garman, Hugh, Portadown, Armagh	570	Martin, John, Ballymena, Antrim	155
Gilmore, John, sen., 2 Hay-park-avenue, Ballinacugh, Belfast, Antrim	80	Meany, John, Ballinacree, Limerick	99
Goodman, John, Warrenpoint, Down	25	Molony, J., Gurthamona, near Loughrea, Galway	134
Gorman, Patrick, 28 North William-street, Dublin	464	Moore, Hugh, 8 Melrose-avenue, Philipsburgh-avenue, Dublin	182
Gracey, James, Belfast, Antrim	978	Moore, James, Ballylinn, Donegal	474
Grier, James E., Heytesbury-street, Dublin	315	Moore, James F., Carrick-on-Shannon, Leitrim	221
Guiler, James, 72 Great Victoria-street, Belfast, Antrim, trading as "J. &amp; J. Guiler"	67	Murphy, John, Joy-street, Belfast, Antrim	329
H
Hamilton, Hugh, Tummery, Tyrone	108	Murphy, William, Parliament-street, Kilkenny	92
Hardie, David, Laraghbeg, Ballyglunnin, Galway	25	Murray, Eleanor, Ballybay, Monaghan	108
Harper, Robert, Strabane, Co. Tyrone	494	Murray, John, Grenantown, Tipperary	196
Hawkins, Robert J., Newbridge, Kildare	567	Murray, William Thomas, Proby-square, Blackrock, Dublin	80
Hayes, Peter, Ardcavan, Wexford	59	N
Henehan, James, Claremorris, Mayo	542	Navagh, James, Navan, Meath	155
Hernon, Patrick, 2 Upper Dominick-street, Galway	99	Neill, James, Priory-street, New Ross, and Arklow-town, Wexford	570
Hogan, Cornelius, Glen, Waterford	80	Newell, Pierce, Barron, Johnhill, Waterford	208
Hopper, James, 51 Lr. George's-st., Kingstown, Dublin	59	O
Houston, Robert, Armagh	134	O'Brien, John, 8 Winetavern-street, Dublin	638
Hurst, Nathaniel, 4 Barrack-street, Richmond, Golden Bridge, Co. Dublin	642	O'Brien, Michael, 3 Essex-bridge, Dublin	287
Hyland, Patrick Joseph, Castlecoomer, Kilkenny	208	O'Brien, Patrick, 6 City-quay, Dublin	315
J
Johnston, James, Market-street, Armagh	86	O'Brien, Peter, 29 Essex-street, Dublin	329
Johnston, John, Redhills, Cavan, and Newtownbutler, Fermanagh	622	O'Carroll, Mary, 22 Broad-street, Limerick	155
Jordan, Martin, Williams-gate-street, Galway	66	O'Donnell, James, Ballaghaderreen, Mayo	25
K
Keenan, John H., Ballyvange, Down	67	O'Neill, Andrew, Barronstrand-street, Waterford	329
Kelly, Andrew, Cappoquin, Waterford	155	O'Shaughnessy, Margaret J., Dangan House, Galway	245
Kelly, John, Ballycressane, Galway	208	O'Shea, Nicholas, Cloran, Fekard, Tipperary	53
Kenny, Plunket, Rockswage, Inniskeen, Monaghan	92	O'Sullivan, William, Mondellehy, Limerick	557
Kerr, James, Brooms Lodge, Cabra, Dublin	278	P
Kidd, George, Rahena, Straharath, Wexford	474	Palmer, Maurice Staddert, Tralee, Kerry	439
Killingley, Wm. Hackett, Belloviso, Bray, Wicklow	426	R
Kinch, James, Strabane, Tyrone	484	Redmond, Edward, Main-street, Gorey	515
Knox, William, Drumneath, Down	59	Regan, Honora, Ballinacree, Cork	439
L
Leech, Bernard B., 7 London-bridge-road, Bath-avenue, Dublin	155	Reid, Arthur, Newtownards-road, Ballymacarrett, Down	278
Lennon, Thos., Strokestown, Roscommon	557	Reid, Robert Corry, Tobergill, Antrim	11
Lilley, James, Ballymena, Antrim, trading as "James Lilley &amp; Co."	273	Reynolds, Bernard, 3 Bolton-street, Dublin	474
Little, John, 2 Elizabeth-place, off Oriel street, Dublin, trading in co-partnership with James Little, under the style and firm of "Lytle Brothers"	412	Rice, Edward Joseph, Victoria-street, Belfast	11
Loftus, John Henry, Tenerana, Killaloe, Clare	494	Robinson, Joseph, 1 Foster-place, Dublin	371
Loughran, James, 7 Lower Bridge-street, Dublin	315	Robinson, Thomas, 6A Great Victoria-street, Belfast	155
S
		Rorke, Michael, Elphin, Roscommon	168
		Ross, David, 172 & 174 Falls-road, Belfast	622
		Rutledge, John, Twillick, Tyrone	643
		Ryan, Honoria, Doon, Limerick	221
		S
		Sawey, Edward, Ballybrick, Down	155
		Scanlan, Denis, Whitechurch, Cappoquin, Waterford	67
		Scott, William, Dromore, Tyrone	542
		Shannon, Patrick, Bridge-street, Boyle, Roscommon	53
		Slattery, Harriett, Thomas-street, Limerick	329

	PAGE
Sloan, George, Oool Island, Tyrone , . . .	426
Smith, Edward, Fecagh, Moynalty, Meath . . .	464
Smith, John, Kilrea, Londonderry . . .	643
Steell, Thomas, and David Steell, Vulcan Foundry, Cork , trading as "John Steell & Sons" . . .	245
Stewart, George, Ballymena, Antrim . . .	221
Stewart, Samuel, the Elder, 150 Ashley-place, Mount-pottinger, Down . . .	484
Stitt, Thomas, Strandtown, Down . . .	505

T

Taylor, Andrew, Craigadoes and Tyroneil, St. Jordans-town, Donegal . . .	25
Taylor, Richard, Clontough, Kenmare, Kerry . . .	342
Teston, Cornelius, Winthorp-street, Cork . . .	455
Theobald, John Seymour, North Main-street, Bandon, Cork . . .	528
Townshend, Rev. Horace, Grove, Tuam, Galway . . .	371
Tweedie, David Henry, Canal-street, Newry, Armagh . . .	287

W

	PAGE
Walsh, David, 8 &amp; 9 Orr's Cottages, Church-road, Dublin . . .	221
Walsh, Sarah L., Baltracy House, Kilcock, Kildare . . .	622
Weir, Nathaniel, Water-street, Newry . . .	155
West, George, South Anne-street, Dublin . . .	608
West, Georgianna Grove, Ardenode, Brannockstown, Carlow . . .	196
Whelan, Michael, otherwise Michael Phelan, Olapook, Queen's County . . .	398
Whittle, James, Longford . . .	474
Wiseheart, Bernard, 1 Duke-street, Dublin . . .	245
Woodlock, Thomas, 42 Dame-street, Dublin . . .	196
Woods, John, Golree, Monaghan . . .	570
Wynne, John, Scotstown, Monaghan . . .	108
Wynne, Phillip, Scotstown, Monaghan . . .	184

Y

Yourell, William, Blackbull, Dunboyne, Meath . . .	196
---	-----

INDEX

TO

LEGAL POSTINGS.

---

COURT NOTICES.

---

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE IN IRELAND.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

LAND JUDGES.

NOTICES OF SALES.

In the Matters of the Estates of—

	PAGE
Connolly, Owen	226
Fenton, James	428, 466, 530, 644
Fitzgerald, Hugh	280
Lambert, Francis Rea	442
Mayne, Nathaniel	442, 530

NOTICES OF SALES—con.

In the Matters of the Estates of—

	PAGE
M'Gowan, Catherine	109
Sullivan, Raphael John	622
West, Very Rev. Augustus Wm.	124, 168, 182

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTICES.

In the Matter of the Estate of—

Woodlock, Thomas	302
------------------	-----

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1882.

No. 780

THE SERVICE OF WRITS AND NOTICES.

THE new Judicature Rules, published in our last issue (15 Ir. L. T. 655), which came into operation "from and after" Jan. 2, enable personal service of a writ of summons to be dispensed with in all actions commenced in the common law divisions of the Irish High Court of Justice, wherever the usual residence of the defendant in question is situated in a proclaimed district, unless that residence be within a county of a city or county of a town. The rule in question is not limited to cases between landlord and tenant, or to any particular class of actions, and does not—as do the County Court Rules of September last—require, as a condition of its operation, proof of any special circumstances calculated to prevent the service from being effected in the ordinary way, beyond the fact of the defendant being resident in that large portion of Ireland at present proclaimed. Though probably intended chiefly to meet the same class of cases as the new County Court Rules, it will, accordingly, be seen that it has a much wider operation; and, as it embraces all classes of suitors and all classes of actions, it must, so as to prevent abuse, be uniformly and strictly construed. The courts of law of this kingdom have at all times been most vigilant as regards matters relating to the service of originating processes—(where what they call "natural justice" is concerned)—in seeing that every precaution is taken to ensure that a defendant shall have an opportunity of being heard: see the authorities cited in the well-known case of Maubourquet v. Wyse, 1 R. I. C. L. 471, where a French judgment, entered up behind the back, and without the knowledge of an Irish subject, was sued upon in this country. We refer to these matters here in order to impress upon our readers the necessity for attending most carefully to all that the new rule requires.

The new rule in effect provides that where a defendant usually resides within any one of the proclaimed districts above referred to, good service upon him of any writ of summons issuing out of the Queen's Bench Division, the Common Pleas Division, or the Exchequer Division, may be effected by posting a copy of the writ at the police barrack nearest to the defendant's said residence, and by sending to him through the post-office by letter both a copy of the writ and a copy of this judicature order—the letter so sent to be addressed to the defendant at his usual residence, "provided that the plaintiff, or plaintiffs, named in such writ of summons, or one of them, or his or their attorney" (sic) "shall make and cause to be filed in the division out of which such writ shall have issued, an affidavit stating the parish and barony in which the defendant resides, and that such place of residence is within a district which has been, and is, prescribed as aforesaid, and that the above particulars as to service have been duly observed and performed." We may observe in passing that there is no time limited within which this affidavit is to be made; and that from the peculiar way in which the clause is framed, specifying, as it does, the making and filing of what will no doubt be familiarly called the "affidavit of service," as a necessary condition of "good and sufficient" service under this rule, it is even left a moot point whether or not the twelve days limited for appearance begin to run until after the affidavit has been filed. In the absence of authority, we would, however, caution those interested on behalf of a defendant against acting upon the assumption that the twelve days for appearance limited by the concluding clause of this rule do not begin to run until this later date. We apprehend that the phrase "usual residence" used in this rule, which is one well known to our courts, will be construed similarly to the same phrase occurring in the Common Law Procedure Act, 1856, section 97, and the 40th section of the Civil Bill Act. Thus in Dawson v. Coleman, 15 Ir. C. L. Rep. 508, the question arose whether a house in the county Cork where a gentleman connected with the Irish Court of Chancery resided from July to October in each year and kept shut up for the rest of the year, during which he lived at Pembroke-place, Dublin—whether this county Cork residence could be regarded as his "usual residence" within the meaning of the said 97th section, so as to deprive him of his right to the costs of a judgment recovered by him against a county Cork defendant resident within the same civil bill jurisdiction as that within which his country house was situated. The matter stood for judgment, and the Court of Common Pleas eventually decided, in effect, that a man cannot have more than one "usual" residence, and that his Dublin house was, accordingly, his only usual residence. This case places the law upon this point upon a clear and intelligible footing, and shows that the new mode of service can rarely be taken advantage of to snap a judgment against an absent person who happens to have more than one residence.

The affidavit mentioned in the section is to be made by a plaintiff or by his "attorney." Whether this latter term is, or is not, intended to include (as may be contended) all persons formally authorised by a plaintiff for this purpose, and, if so, whether the affidavit must state his authority, it is, in the absence of decision, impossible to say; but, as regards the contents of the affidavit, it is clear that it must, at least, state for the guidance of the Court, what is the defendant's usual residence; in what parish and barony it is situated; that it is situated in one of the proclaimed (or "prescribed") districts; what the nearest police barrack to that residence is; that a copy of the writ of summons has been posted on that police barrack; and that a letter, properly addressed to defendant at his said usual residence, containing a copy of the writ of summons and of the new order which makes this new mode of service "good and sufficient," has been sent through the Post Office. The rule does not require that the letter sent to defendant should be registered, and there is not—as some imagine there should be—in it, any provision requiring publication in the Dublin Gazette and in a local paper, of the issuing of the writ of summons, as is required in the case of service on Railway Companies, Corporations, &c., &c.

Though the Judicature Rules already provide summary means for proceeding to judgment and for the service of any notices on a non-appearing defendant incidental thereto, in all actions where the requirements of the law as regards the service of the originating writ of summons have been complied with, it may not be out of place to point out here that, as regards the procedure from judgment to execution, an important step tending to facilitate the service in proclaimed districts of the notices requisite under the new law. preliminary to sales of tenancies under writs of fiery ficus, &c., has been made by the Land Commission within the past few days—viz., 2nd January, 1882. It will be recollected that by section 1, sub-section 14, of the Land Act of 1881 it is provided that "where a sale of a tenancy is made under a judgment or other process of law against the tenant, or for the payment of the debts of the deceased tenant, the sale shall be made in the prescribed manner, subject to the conditions of this section, so far as the same are applicable;" and that sub-section 16 provides for the case of a landlord who has received notice of an intended sale, and who "is not desirous of purchasing the tenancy otherwise than as a means of securing the payment of any sums due to him for arrears of rent or other breaches of the contract or conditions of tenancy." The rules of the Land Commission, dated October 1, 1881, prescribe the precise course to be followed in carrying out any such sale. Number 82 of these rules provides that "where a sale of a tenancy is about to take place under a writ of execution by any execution-creditor other than the landlord, such execution-creditor shall, at least one fortnight before the day of sale, give notice both to the landlord and to the tenant of his intention to sell, and when the landlord is himself the execution-creditor he shall within the same period give like notice to the tenant." [Our readers will recollect that this is the rule the validity of which as regards the requirement of notice to the tenant is called in question by Mr. (now Sub-Commissioner) MacDevitt in the passage from his valuable manual of the Irish Land Acts, recently quoted by us. See 15 Ir. L. T. 597-8.] Rule 85 provides for the case where a landlord who is himself the execution-creditor desires to purchase the tenancy otherwise than at the sheriff's sale, and requires service upon the tenant, as well as upon the sheriff, of notice of his application to the Court. Rules 86 and 87 relate to sales by the personal representatives of a deceased tenant, by the assignees in bankruptcy of a tenant, or by a person having the carriage of sale of the tenancy under the order of any court. Now, it is obvious that the same difficulties which were presumed to exist as regards the service of all writs of summons in proclaimed districts prior to the new Judicature Rule above referred to, existed also as regards the service of all notices required by the Rules of the Land Commission to be served upon a tenant—including those we have pointed out; because, by their 27th rule, service of any notice shall be effected either by personal service, or by leaving a copy thereof at the house or place of residence of the person to be served, at his office, warehouse, &c., with the wife, child, father, &c. Hence the necessity for the new rule issued by the Land Commission on Monday last, which, read in the light of the observations we have made as to the previous state of the law and as regards the somewhat similar wording of the corresponding Judicature Rule, will best and most briefly speak for itself, as follows:—"It is this day ordered that, from and after this date, where the holding in respect of which notice of intention to sell the tenancy is by the Rules 82, 85, 86, and 87, required to be given, is situate within any district for the time being prescribed under the Act for the Better Protection of Person and Property in Ireland, service on the tenant of Notices Nos. 13, 14, 15, and 17, or any of them, may be effected on such tenant by sending to him a copy of such notice and a copy of this order by letter through the Post Office addressed to him at his usual residence, and by posting a copy of such notice on the Petty Sessions Court-house of the district in which the holding is situate; and such service shall be deemed good service of such notice, provided the party on whose behalf such notice is served, or his solicitor, shall make and file in the office of the Irish Land Commission an affidavit stating that the address to which the notice has been posted is the correct address of the party required to be served, and stating the county, barony, poor law union, and electoral division in which such holding is situate, and that such place of residence is within a district which has been and is at the time of such service prescribed as aforesaid, and that the posting of such notice through the post, and posting a copy thereof on such Petty Sessions Court-house as aforesaid have been duly effected on the respective dates mentioned in such affidavit."

We trust that the operation of these useful but somewhat dangerous rules may soon be restricted by the withdrawal of many districts from the long category of those which have been proclaimed; and that in the meantime, they may, without being abused, tend to relieve honest suitors—defendants as well as plaintiffs—from unnecessary expense and loss.

THE REMAINING PROVISIONS OF CAIRNS'S CONVEYANCING ACT.

(Continued from 15 Ir. L. T. p. 658.)

Division X. deals with "rent-charges and other annual sums:"—

"Section 44, which is permissive and prospective, sub-sections (5) (6), empowers a person 'entitled to receive out of any "land," or out of the income of any land, any annual sum, payable half-yearly or otherwise, whether charged on the land or on the income of the land and whether by way of rent-charge or otherwise, not being rent incident to a reversion. To have . . . so far as the remedies might have been conferred by the instrument under which the annual sum arises, but not further,' if the annual sum, or any part thereof, is in an arrear, (1) for twenty-one days a remedy by distress, sub-section (2); (2) for forty days a remedy by entry, sub-section (3); and (it would seem in the latter case) 'power to demise, sub-section (4), to a trustee for a term of years, for raising arrears,' thus adopting the suggestion in 3 Davidson 819. The last power seems, notwithstanding the large meaning given to 'land' by section 2 (ii.), inapplicable to copyholds. We presume that in many cases section 42 (management during minority) and section 44 may be useful for settlements; but perhaps it might be convenient that when the framer of a settlement proposes to rely on these provisions he should expressly refer to them.

"Section 45 provides, sub-section (1), that 'where there is a quit-rent, chief-rent, rent-charge, or other annual sum issuing out of land' (in this section referred to as 'the rent'), the copyhold commissioners shall at any time on the requisition [in writing, sub-section (4)] 'of the owner of the land, or of any person interested therein, certify' [in writing and under their seal, sub-section 4], the amount of money in consideration, whereof 'the rent' may be redeemed; [but it does appear that these commissioners are obliged to communicate with the person entitled to the rent]. By sub-section (2), that where the person entitled to 'the rent' is (1) absolutely entitled thereto in fee simple, in possession, or (2) is empowered to dispose thereof absolutely, or (3) to give an absolute discharge for the capital value thereof, the owners of the land, or any person interested therein, may, after serving one month's notice [see section 67] on the person entitled to 'the rent,' pay, or tender, to that person the amount certified by the commissioners, and by sub-section (3), that 'on proof to the commissioners that payment, or tender, has been so made, they shall certify that the rent is redeemed under this Act, and that certificate shall be final and conclusive, and the land shall be thereby absolutely freed and discharged from the rent.' The section applies, sub-section 6, 'to rents payable at or created after (1) the commencement of this Act; but, [sub-section (5)] does not apply (1) to tithe rent-charge, or (2) to a rent reserved on a sale or lease, or (3) to a rent made payable under a grant or license for 'building purposes,' section 2 (X), or (4) to any sum or payment issuing out of land not being perpetual, nor, sub-section (7), does it extend to Ireland. Chief rents appear to be (x) words more appropriate to such quit-rents as are payable by freeholders; but the term 'quit-rent' seems also to include rents payable by copyholders, Shelford, R. C. S. 136. Is it intended that a copyholder should be able to discharge his tenement from a quit rent without enfranchising? As to tithes, it will be remembered that in certain cases power of redemption already exists. See 9 & 10 Vict., c. 73, ss. 1, 2; 23 & 24 Vict., c. 93, ss. 31, 32; 41 & 42 Vict., c. 42.

"It may be thought that, if one of the chief objects of the Act is to facilitate dealings with property, power might have been given (the rent owner or reversioner being properly represented before the commissioners) to commute perpetual rents reserved on grants for building purposes and to convert perpetually renewable leaseholds, into estates in fee; but such a power is wanting. See as to conversion in Ireland of perpetually renewable leaseholds, 12 & 13 Vict., c. 105; 31 & 32 Vict., c. 62."

Division XI. of the Act relates to "powers of attorney:—"

"Section 46 empowers the donee of a power of attorney to 'execute or do any assurance, instrument, or thing, in and with his own name, and signature, and his own seal, where sealing is required instead, in the name and with the seal of the donor.' Section 47, sub-section (1), is an extension of section 26 of 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, and enacts that 'any person' [section 26 was confined to a trustee, executor, or administrator] 'making or doing any payment or act in good faith in pursuance of a power of attorney is not to be liable in respect of the payment or act, by reason that, before the payment or act, the donor of the power had died, or become lunatic, or of unsound mind, or bankrupt, or had revoked the power; if the fact of death, &c., was not at the time of the payment or act known to the person making or doing the same.' Section 26 of the former Act had the expression, 'was dead at the time of such payment or act, or had done some act to avoid the power.'

"Section 48 provides, sub-section (1), that an instrument creating a power of attorney, its execution being verified by affidavit, statutory declaration, or other sufficient evidence [what will be such other evidence and who is to determine its sufficiency remains to be seen], may, with the affidavit or declaration, if any, be deposited in the central office of the Supreme Court of Judicature. A separate file of such instruments is to be kept, sub-section (2); a copy of instruments so deposited may be presented at the office and stamped or marked as an office copy, sub-section (3); office copies are to be received as evidence, sub-section 41, and general rules may be made regulating the practice of the central office for the purposes of this section.

"Sections 46 and 48 extend to powers of attorney made before or after the commencement of the Act. Section 47 is prospective. Sections 47 and 48 will undoubtedly prove very useful."

Division XII. of the Act relates to "the construction and effect of deeds and other instruments:—"

"We have already adverted to most of the sections in this division, and will shortly refer to the others. Section 52 provides, sub-section (1), that a 'person to whom any power, whether coupled with an interest or not, is given, may by deed release or contract not to exercise the power;' and applies, sub-section (2), to powers created by instruments coming into operation either before or after the commencement of the Act, Davis v. Huquenin, 1 H. & M. 730, 32 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 417, and that class of cases are instances of agreements not to exercise a power appendant; and this section will now enable powers simply collateral (as to which see Farwell, p. 10) to be released.

"Section 53 deals with supplemental or annexed deeds. Section 57 provides that 'deeds in the form of and using the expressions in the forms given' in schedule 4 to the Act, 'or in the like form or using expressions to the like effect, shall, as regards form and expression in relation to the provisions of this Act, be sufficient.' This section, coupled with such expressions as 'expressed to convey as beneficial' owner, &c., section 7, sub-section (1); 'by the direction of' as beneficial owner hereby conveys,' section 7, sub-section (2); and form 3 in Schedule IV., shows that when it is intended to employ the machinery of the Act for the purpose of conveyance, careful attention in adopting the language suggested by the Act will be desirable, though possibly not absolutely necessary.

"Section 62, which is prospective, provides that 'a conveyance of freehold land to the use that any person may have for an estate or interest not exceeding in duration the estate conveyed in the land any easement, right, liberty, or privilege in or over or with respect to that land, or any part thereof, shall operate to vest in possession in that person that easement, right, liberty or privilege for the estate or interest expressed to be limited to him, and he and the persons deriving title [query to the easement, &c., or to what?] under him shall have use, and enjoy the same accordingly.

"The form given in 2 Davidson, part 1, p. 265, note, is an illustration of a right of way being created under a power, i.e., by the limitation of a use. The object and effect of the section is not very clear; see as to meaning of right, Co. Litt. 266 (a), 345 (a). Generally the Courts incline to favour such a construction of a grant of way-leave, for instance, as will annex it to land (2 Davidson, part 1, p. 551, note, and see Thorpe v. Brumfit, L. R. 8 Chanc. 650. The section seems rather to point to a personal right (see Gale, p. 14, note).

"Division XIII., relating to long terms, introduces a striking innovation in real property law, and enacts, section 65, sub-section (1), 'where a residue unexpired of not less than 200 years of a term which, as originally created, was for not less than 300 years, is subsisting in "land," whether being the whole land originally comprised in the term, or part only thereof, without any trust or right of redemption affecting the term in favour of the freeholder or other person entitled in reversion expectant on the term, and without any rent, or with merely a peppercorn rent, or other rent having no money value incident to the reversion, or having had a rent not being merely a peppercorn rent, or other rent having no money value originally so incident, which subsequently has been released or has become barred by lapse of time' [but see on this point Archbold v. Scully, 9 H. L. at pages 381, 385], 'or has in any other way ceased to be payable; then the term may be enlarged into a fee simple in the manner and subject to the restrictions in this section provided.' Sub-section (2) shows what persons may so enlarge it by declaration in a deed; by sub-section (4) 'the estate in fee simple so acquired by enlargement is to be subject to all the same trusts, powers, executory limitations over rights and equities, and to all the same covenants and provisions relating to user and enjoyment and to all the same obligations of every kind as the term would have been subject to if it had not been so enlarged;' and see sub-section (5). By sub-section (6), 'the estate in fee simple so acquired shall, whether the term was originally created without impeachment of waste or not, include the fee simple in all mines and minerals which at the time of enlargement have not been severed in right or in fact, or have not been severed or reserved by an inclosure Act or award; and by sub-section (7) the section applies to every such term as aforesaid subsisting at or after the commencement of the Act. Notwithstanding sub-section (4), the change of tenure, consequent upon such an enlargement, may obviously bring certain consequences—e.g., rights of descent, dower, curtesy; while, on the other hand, the term will no longer be included in a valuation for probate.

"It has been suggested that the section would apply to an underlease, granted at a peppercorn, in consideration of a fine out of a lease which had reserved a rent; compare the late case of Ex parte Walton, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 657; L. R. 17 Chanc. Div. 746, where the rent reserved by the underlease was less than that reserved by the lease, and a fine had been paid. No doubt the expression 'other person entitled in reversion' involves difficulty; but this phrase might apply to a person having a partial interest under a settlement of the reversion. Certainly there is not here any such expression as 'leasehold reversion,' section (3), sub-section (1), section 13, sub-section (1); and note the expressions, section 3, sub-section (5), 'where land sold is held by underlease;' section 11, sub-section (1), 'reversionary estate immediately expectant on the term granted;' section 14, sub-section (3); derivative underlease; but see Division III., and section 26, sub-section (1). If section 65 can apply to an underlease, Ex parte Walton seems to show that the Court would find a mode of preventing injustice to a freehold reversioner being caused by the creation of an underlease at a peppercorn out of a lease reserving a substantial rent."

We have already referred to Division XIV., relating to 'The adoption of the Act;' Division XV., section 67, 'Notices'—but which [sub-section (5)] does not apply to notices served in proceedings in the Courts—and section 68, Statutory declarations; Division XVI., section 69, relating to Court Procedure, and which, of course, requires careful attention; to the important section 70, as to conclusiveness of orders of the Court in favour of purchasers; and to Division XVII., as to repeals. The last Division of the Act, XVIII., slightly modifies its application respecting Ireland.

The new year will soon give its experiences of the working of many parts of the Act. Our readers must have already heard of instances in which the immediate adoption of some of its provisions is proposed, and even of cases where it had been suggested that matters should stand over from the recent sittings to those commencing in January, in order that its provisions (e.g. section 41) may be applied.—Law Journal.

COMPENSATION FOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Compensation for improvements is a phrase which has been very much in people's mouths since the Irish Land Act of 1870; but there are cases to which the phrase is applicable, but which have no connexion with politics. Such a case was brought before Mr. Justice Fry on the 10th December, and the case then presented was one in which, if in any, such compensation was rightly allowed. The action of Watson v. Gass was one for partition of certain freehold and leasehold properties which had belonged to two ladies as tenants in common, and had been settled on their respective marriages, of each of which issue had been born. Shortly after the marriages, which took place at the same time, an arrangement was come to between the ladies and their husbands, by which the properties were to be partitioned and held in severalty, a sum being paid for equality of partition. Time went on, fifteen years passed away, and the action was brought for partition on the footing of the arrangement; but, since the date at which that had been come to, the value of the property which was originally the more valuable had greatly increased, while that of the less valuable had also increased, but to a much smaller extent. In each case the increased value was attributable to expenditure, in unequal amounts, on buildings and improvements by the parties for whom the partition arrangement had destined the property. The neat question was thus raised, whether the sum to be paid for equality of partition was to be calculated after deducting for the sums respectively expended in permanent improvements, or whether no such deduction could be made. It is obvious that, if the former course were pursued, the parties would reap the benefit of their own expenditure, whereas, if that course were not adopted, the effect would be that the parties who had expended a small sum, and wrought a small improvement, would share the benefits attributable to the greater enterprise of the other parties. Much to their credit, the parties who had done but little to improve their property supported the contention in favour of making the deduction, and the learned judge thought himself at liberty to sanction the deduction, notwithstanding the infancy of some of the parties interested, following an unreported decision of Vice-Chancellor Bacon in a case of Parker v. Trigg, in 1874. It must always be sound policy, as is now generally admitted, to encourage occupiers to lay out money on the land which they hold; and the general principle applies to the case of tenants in common just as much as to any other.—Law Times.

THE GUILTEAU TRIAL.

The becoming mode of trying a case like that of Guiteau is a question raising difficulties, some of which are peculiar to the practice of American Courts of law, and others would be shared by English Courts in similar circumstances. In the United States a prisoner may have several counsel, each of whom will sometimes take an independent line of defence, if he think it to the common client's interest; and this laxity of practice is, it seems, extended to the case where the prisoner is partly defended by counsel and partly by himself. In England, if a prisoner defends himself, he can only have counsel to advise him, or perhaps by a survival from the time when prisoners could have no counsel to argue points of law. Although, however, an English Court would be free from the difficulty caused by the prisoner being also his own advocate, there would still be much embarrassment in dealing with a prisoner who is defended by counsel but who is alleged to be insane, and constantly interrupts the proceedings. A prisoner charged with felony cannot be tried in his absence, and physical coercion can only be used to prevent an escape. If the judge fail to impress the prisoner with the necessity of proper behaviour, the only resource would be to commit him for contempt, and adjourn the trial or discharge the jury. The jurisprudence of neither country ought to necessitate so circuitous and perhaps ineffective procedure, but the judge ought to have the power to remove the prisoner and proceed with the trial if he is of opinion that justice cannot be decorously administered in the prisoner's presence. The possession of this power would go far to check extravagances.—Law Journal.

STATE ASSASSINS AND THE DEFENCE OF INSANITY.

The tragedy of July 2 last suddenly revived public interest in the old topic—the defence of insanity in capital cases. It is a well-worn theme, much discussed, and always with an unsatisfactory result. What is moral insanity? What is legal insanity? Conclusive answers to both these questions have often been attempted, but never given with such definiteness and decisiveness as to shut off debate. Every day the controversy is resumed in our courts, and apparently will go on to the end of time. It is settled one day, and the day after we find it is not settled at all. "What," said the late Dr. Forbes Winslow, "is my test of insanity? I have none. I know of no unerring, infallible, and safe rule or standard applicable to all cases." So, too, the British judges, whose effort to define the undefinable we shall presently examine at length, after all their elaboration of statement touching what does and what does not constitute legal insanity, finally confessed that "the facts of each particular case must of necessity present themselves with endless diversity, and with every shade of difference in each case." But if it be difficult to define what is legal insanity, which is a mere matter of human law, how much more difficult is it to determine and define what is moral insanity? Dr. Sam Johnson declares that "all power of fancy over reason is a degree of insanity," and Montaigne asserts that between genius and madness there is but "a half turn of the toe." M. Taine concurs in this dictum, and philosophically avers that "insanity is not a distinct and separate empire; our ordinary life borders upon it, and we cross the frontier in some part of our nature." It has been the periodic mission of the assassin to revive this moot question. One day the world stands and shudders with an unanimous horror, and the next divides upon the old issue—Was he insane? It is oppressively monotonous, in looking back over these historical tragedies, to find how invariably the modern imitator of Brutus comes down to the footlights with a pistol in one hand and a plea of insanity in the other. In American history, so far, we have had only two creatures corresponding to what, in the vocabulary of Europe, would be called regicides. In the first case there was no opportunity offered to the assassin to plead insanity. A vast amount of legal lore and medical metaphysics was forestalled by the summary shooting of Wilkes Booth in the barn where he was brought to bay. The mother country has had a far greater familiarity with such criminals within the current century, and a glance at her records in this regard would seem to have a timely interest. It is, perhaps, worthy of note that not one of the men who have of late murdered, or attempted to murder, czars or emperors, have offered the plea of insanity. In Great Britain and the United States it seems to be the assassin's invariable defence. And in both countries counsel for the accused start with the advantage of being able to ask the jury, as Mr. Cockburn did in the cases both of Pate and McNaughten—Could they believe that any sane man could have committed such an act? And that is the question which the tragic event that has recently shocked and saddened both hemispheres once more invests with melancholy importance, and presents for decision to an American jury.—Atlantic Monthly.

VIOLATION OF TOMBS.

The recent discovery at Duncricht has called public attention to a species of crime which it was hoped had become extinct. Old people can call to mind a dismal period, the horrors of which may be said to have culminated in the tragedy of Burke and Hare. In so far as the science of anatomy is concerned, the occupation of the "body-anatcher" is certainly for ever gone. But apparently it has only passed into the hands of more skilled and more exalted criminals, who hoped to trade upon the outraged feelings of mourning relatives.

Men naturally ask what is the law upon the subject? We noticed an article the other day, in the Pall Mall Gazette, in which the writer calmly ignores the fact that the Duncricht criminals must be tried under the law of Scotland. His readers are gravely told that there can be no trial for larceny. He might have added that there could be no grand jury. But practically the law of the two countries is the same upon the point in question. The crime with which we are dealing is not an act of theft, which is the Scottish for larceny. Upon both sides of the Border it is a minor offence involving an arbitrary punishment. There is very little law upon the subject. Hume says, "The raising of a dead body from the grave cannot in any proper sense be regarded as a theft, but may be prosecuted as a great indecency, and a crime of its own sort, the crimen violati sepulchri." The cases referred to in the notes upon this passage in the text certainly indicate how arbitrary has been the punishment. Thus in 1808 Archibald Begg was banished from Scotland for fourteen years on his own petition; in 1815 four Aberdeen medical students were fined and imprisoned for fourteen days, although the charge against them was thought of sufficient importance to be tried at circuit. Six months' imprisonment, with or without security for future good conduct, seems to have been the usual sentence for some time after this, but in 1823 a man who had been previously convicted was transported for seven years.

The only authority for holding that the act of taking an unburied corpse is one of theft is the old case of Mackenzie. The relevancy of the charge appears to have been sustained by a single judge upon circuit at Inverness. It is difficult to see what is the distinction which the fact of burial thus appears to make. Alison says, "The crimen violati sepulchri is not considered as a branch of theft, for our practice acknowledges no property in the remains of deceased relations after they have been committed to the grave." But is the body while unburied private property? It is in the lawful custody of others certainly, but does it not continue to be in such custody after it has been deposited in the vault or grave. It lies in ground which is private property at all events, and may it not be said to become part of that property?—Journal of Jurisprudence.

PAYMENT UNDER PROTEST.

It is always welcome news to the general public when some new method of evading extortion is discovered and enforced in the courts of law. The late decision, therefore, in Lugard v. Biggs, by Justices Grove and Lopes, will be hailed with satisfaction, though whether in the future it will be considered as a binding authority must be doubtful. The plaintiff, who was an officer in the army, had been staying at the defendant's hotel for some days at the time of the late Windsor review. When his bill was presented to him for payment prior to his departure he complained of the charges, but the defendant refused to alter them. The plaintiff then paid the bill under protest, and subsequently brought an action to recover the amount of the overcharges. At the trial the County Court judge found as a fact that the charges were excessive; and he also held, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff must be considered to have known that the defendant could, if he wished, have detained his luggage supposing he had refused to pay the bill. No evidence, however, was offered to show that the plaintiff, at the time of the dispute about the amount of the charges in the bill, had any luggage on the defendant's premises, or that the defendant either detained or made any threat to detain the plaintiff's luggage if he refused to pay those charges. On these facts the case came before Justices Grove and Lopes, who held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of the overcharges sued for by him. This decision we venture to think goes very much further than any decided case has yet gone. As a general rule money paid with a full knowledge of the facts cannot be recovered back. To this rule, however, as might have been expected, numerous exceptions are to be found, and it seems possible to group these exceptions under two heads, namely, where money has been obtained (1) by fraud, (2) by duress, either actual or constructive. A familiar instance of the first class of exceptions is afforded by the case of Duke of Cadaval v. Collins (4 A. & E. 858), where it was held that the plaintiff could recover back from the defendant a sum of money paid to him in order to avoid a fraudulent arrest with which the defendant threatened the plaintiff. The cases also with regard to actual duress are clear; Mr. Justice Coleridge in his judgment in Ashmole v. Wainwright (2 Q. B. 837) remarking, "I never doubted that an action for money had and received might be maintained to recover money paid on the wrongful detainer of goods." With regard, however, to what constitutes what may be called constructive duress the law is not quite so plain. One class of cases establishes the rule beyond doubt that, where a man is entitled to the exercise of a legal right on payment of a certain sum, if he is obliged to pay a larger sum for the exercise of that right he is entitled to recover the overcharge in an action for money had and received.

The cases of Barker v. The Great Western Railway (7 M. & G. 253) and Steele v. Williams (8 Ex. 625) are good illustrations of this rule. In the former case the railway company charged the plaintiff more than they were entitled to do for carrying his goods, and in the latter the defendant, colore officii as the parish clerk, extorted a larger fee than he was by law entitled to charge for extracts from the parish register. In both cases the plaintiffs were held to be entitled to recover the amount of the overcharge. Instances of another kind of constructive duress are afforded by the cases of Fraser v. Pendlebury (31 L. J. 1, C. P.), Smith v. Bromley (2 Dong. 695), and Smith v. Cuff (6 M. & Sel. 160). The principle of these cases is, that a person who has paid money in order to induce another not to withhold something which he is not entitled to withhold may recover the money back. Lord Mansfield in one of those cases remarks, "If a man makes use of what is in his own power to extort money from one in distress it is certainly illegal and oppressive;" and Mr. Justice Williams says: "Where a demand is made by a mortgagee who refuses to transfer unless his demand is satisfied, this, though not duress in the strict legal sense of the term, constitutes a state of circumstances under which the money so paid may be recovered back." It must be noticed that in all these cases there was either an actual threat or an actual refusal which the court interpreted as amounting to constructive duress. In the present case under discussion, however, there was nothing of the kind. It was not proved that the defendant either refused to allow the plaintiff to remove his luggage, or that he threatened to do so. In fact it was not actually found, though apparently it was assumed by the learned judges, that the plaintiff had any luggage in the hotel at the time of the dispute about the amount of the charges in the bill, which the defendant could have detained had he wished to do so. The decision, however, at any rate goes the length of saying that it is sufficient to enable any one who pays money under protest to recover it back if the recipient had at the time of payment a power of duress which he might have exercised, even though as a fact he did neither exercise nor threaten to exercise it. This decision we venture to think goes further than any case yet decided; and it will most undoubtedly reduce to an appreciable degree the protection which the power of duress was intended to afford.—Law Times.

LIABILITY FOR LYING AGENTS.

For a great many years there has been a moot point in the law of principal and agent as to how far the liability of a principal extends when his agent has, with or without authority, told some lie or made some innocent misrepresentation whereby the principal has benefited. Is the principal or the master to be treated as himself making the misrepresentation, or if not, then what is the remedy, if any, against him? It is a case of great nicety, closely bordering on the province of morals, and casuistry may well exercise itself on the situation. The leading case on the subject occurred some 40 years ago, and ever since the courts have been hesitating, doubting and dividing upon the principle which that case was supposed to decide.

That case of Cornfoot v. Fouke, 6 M. & W. 358, was one in which the plaintiff sued for non-performance of a contract which the defendant had entered into for the lease of a house, and the defendant set up a defence that he had been induced by the fraud, covin, and misrepresentation of the plaintiff, to enter into the contract. A house was to let and it was next door to a brothel; and the plaintiff, who was the owner, employed an agent to let it. The house was one which no respectable family could inhabit. The defendant had a family growing up of both sons and daughters, and it would have been utterly impossible for him to live in it under the circumstances. The owner was perfectly aware of the brothel, and he employed an agent who was not aware of that circumstance. The defendant, on looking at the house, was struck with the cheapness of it, upon which he was induced to ask the agent whether there was anything objectionable about the house, and that was admitted to amount to asking whether there was any nuisance next door. The agent, who was utterly ignorant of the nature of the occupation of the adjoining house, said that there was not; and when the gentleman retired from the contract the owner brought an action against him for non-performance. Upon the trial the jury, under the direction of Lord Abinger, C.B., found for the defendant. That was set aside by the Court of Exchequer, and upon this ground, that the allegation was of fraud and covin. There was no evidence of any fraud on the part of the owner of the house, who had made no false representation, but who had not mentioned this fact to his agent. There was no fraud on the part of the agent because he was not aware of the circumstances. One had not got the mutton and the other had not stolen it; and consequently the defendant was fixed with the contract.

That decision has been commented on rather severely by subsequent judges. In the National Exchange Company v. Drew, 1 Pat. App. 494, Lord St. Leonards, when dealing with that case, observed that supposing there had been no allegation of fraud, but it had been put simply on the ground of misrepresentation, then it was not denied by the judges that, if a principal, with knowledge of a fact which was material to the value of the property, employed an agent whom he knew to be ignorant of the fact, for the purpose of concealing it, he could not avail himself of that concealment and he would be responsible. But Lord St. Leonards said that he himself would be disposed to go much further. He said that if in that case fraud had not been alleged, but it had been put upon misrepresentation, and the facts were that a man knowing that there is so serious a nuisance affecting a house so as to diminish its value in such a way that no respectable man could live in it, and he takes care himself not to make the contract, but leaves it to an agent who he has no reason to suppose is aware of the fact, and if, in the course of the treaty for the contract, the agent being asked if such a fact existed states positively, no, and the contract is executed in silence upon the point, because the purchaser or the tenant's vigilance has been lulled to sleep upon it, and he believes the representation made to him by the agent, then Lord St. Leonards said, he would be very much shocked if in a case like that the law of England would not reach the case of a person so availing himself of a misrepresentation of his own agent, who might be ignorant of the fact although the principal himself knew it and employed the agent in order to avoid making a direct representation to the contrary. Lord St. Leonards said that he should feel no hesitation in saying that though the representation was not fraudulent, the agent not knowing that it was false, yet that, as in fact it was false, and false to the knowledge of the principal, although the agent did not know it, it ought to bind the principal when, upon a matter so material to the value of the property, he left it to the agent to make the representation without informing himself of so important a fact within his own knowledge; the agent making a false representation of that fact it would bind the principal, and thus impeach the validity of the contract.

The same view as that of Lord St. Leonards was laid down by Willes, J., in a case of Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank, L. R. 2 Ex. 258. There the plaintiff was induced to continue to supply oats to a customer of the bank, a contractor with the Government, on a guarantee from its manager to the effect that the customer's cheque in the plaintiff's favour in payment for the oats supplied should be paid on receipt of the Government money in priority to any other payment "except to this bank." The manager fraudulently concealed from the plaintiff that the customer was indebted to the bank in £12,000; the result was, that the plaintiff was induced to advance money to the customer on a guarantee which turned out to be worthless, and which the manager must have known to have been worthless when he gave it. The declaration contained, amongst other counts, one for deceit, in which the fraud of the manager was laid as the fraud of the bank. Willes, J., said that with respect to the question whether a principal is answerable for the act of his agent in the course of his master's business, and for his master's benefit, no sensible distinction could be drawn between the case of fraud and the case of any other wrong. The general rule was, that the master is answerable for every such wrong of the servant or agent, as is committed in the course of the service, and for the master's benefit, though no express command or privity of the master could be proved. The principle was acted on every day in running down cases. It had been applied also to direct trespass to goods. In all such cases it might be said that the master had not authorised the act. It was true he had not authorised the particular act, but he had put the agent in his place to do that class of acts, and he must be answerable for the manner in which that agent had conducted himself in doing the business which it was the act of his master to place him in. And if a man is answerable for the wrong of another, whether it be fraud or other wrong, it might be properly described in pleading as the fraud of the person who was sought to be made answerable in the action.

These views of Willes, J., were acted on in the case of Mackay v. Commercial Bank of New Brunswick, L. R. 5 Priv. C. 894, where an action for deceit was brought against a bank for a fraud committed by their agent the cashier and manager. The manager had sent a fraudulent answer to a telegram, and thereby induced Mackay to accept certain bills drawn upon him by one Lingley, and indorsed to the bank. The Court held that it was within the scope of the manager's authority to send such a telegram, and that the bank having obtained the benefit of the bills were liable in an action for the false representation.

In the case of Houldsworth v. City of Glasgow Bank, L. R. 5 App. C. 517, the nature of the remedy in case of a fraudulent sale was discussed. Lord Cairns, L.C., said there could be no doubt that according to the law of England a person purchasing a chattel or goods concerning which the vendor made a fraudulent misrepresentation, may, on finding out the fraud, retain the chattel or the goods, and have his action to recover any damages he had sustained by reason of the fraud. And Lord Selborne said he agreed with what Willes, J., had said in the case above quoted, that if an agent in the exercise of his authority as agent, defrauded third parties, and the principal received the benefit, such principal was liable to refund to the extent of the benefit, and it made no difference whether the principal was privy to the fraud or not so far as the amount to be refunded was concerned. But it was a totally different thing to say that the principal could in such a case be sued as a wrongdoer in an action of deceit. The only remedy of that kind in such circumstances was an action against the agent personally.

Up to this point there seems some vagueness as to what is the precise remedy against a principal whose agent tells what is either consciously or unconsciously a lie, and thereby effects a sale to the injury of the purchaser. Considerable advance towards a solution seems to be made in the very recent case of Ludgater v. Lore, 45 J. P. 600. That was an action by the purchaser of sheep against the vendor, who, through his agent, made a fraudulent misrepresentation that the sheep had not the rot. The purchaser claimed damages. His statement of claim averred, that upon the sale to the plaintiff, the defendant's son acting for the defendant, and with the defendant's authority, represented that the sheep were all right; that the sheep were not all right but were diseased, and affected with rot; that the said statement was fraudulent on the part of the defendant; and that the defendant had purposely concealed and withheld from his son the fact that the sheep had the rot, with intent that the son might sell them in ignorance of the said fact, and make, if necessary, such statement as he did make. The defendant denied the allegation of fraud. The judge, at the trial, put several specific questions to the jury who answered as follows. The defendant's son did represent in fact that the sheep were all right. He had the defendant's authority to say so. It was not clear that the son knew that the sheep had the rot; but the defendant fraudulently authorised the son to make the false representation. He fraudulently concealed from the son that the sheep had the rot, and fraudulently gave the son authority to sell for the best price and to represent that the sheep were sound. And the plaintiff was materially influenced towards buying the sheep by a representation that the sheep were all right.

On these facts it was contended by the defendant's counsel that there was no evidence of authority from the father to the son to make the false representation; and that where a purchaser has been induced to buy by the fraud of the vendor's agent, he may rescind the contract or he may sue the agent personally, but he could not sue the principal. The Court of Appeal took time to consider the questions involved in this case, and at last gave judgment for the plaintiff. The Court held that some of the propositions raised questions of considerable difficulty, but it was not necessary to determine them. The facts proved were sufficient to justify the leaving to the jury the question whether the father fraudulently concealed from the son the fact of the rot, intending the son to represent that the sheep had not the rot. Brett, L.J., thus reasoned on that point: "The sheep were affected with rot; the symptoms of that disease were such as would not improbably induce questions from an intending buyer as to the condition of the sheep: the defendant knew that the sheep had the disease. It was eminently probable that he would at least suspect that the inquiry as to the condition of the sheep would be made. His answer on cross-examination to the question 'why he did not tell his son?' that 'he was not such a fool,' was an impudent admission. The defendant directed in effect the son to make the false representation. All the judges in prior cases seemed to hold that it was for the jury to say whether the principal authorised the agent to make the false representation, and if so, then the principal might be sued as if he himself made the false representation.

These cases seem at last to have solved the long pending difficulty, and whenever it is proved that an agent makes a false representation knowingly or unknowingly, and the principal himself authorised it then the contract may be treated by the purchaser as void. There is still a doubt as to what class of circumstances amount to an authority to the agent to misrepresent, but probably in practice juries will always be asked to find this specific point, and thus a solution will be easy as to the rest.—Justice of the Peace.

THE SLANDER OF A PERSON IN HIS CALLING.

[From the American Law Review.]

Ordinarily words of reproach spoken by one person of another are not actionable, unless the complainant can show that they actually caused him some specific damage. The law recognises that abusive epithets are more frequently indicative of the temper of the speaker, than of the actual character of him against whom they are aimed. Unwilling to punish an individual for utterances which passion may have prompted at one moment only to be regretted the next, it finds a substantial reason on which to rest its refusal to interfere, in the fact that the community is not likely to alter its conduct towards an individual, on account of the careless or ridiculous waggings of a loose or abusive tongue. To this general principle there are, of course, exceptions, the most important of which are that the words shall not import an indictable offence, or affect the person against whom they are directed in his trade, profession, or occupation. It was long ago observed by Comyns that there was no branch of the law in which the decisions were so contradictory to each other, and the cases so frequently irreconcilable with the principles on which they are founded, as the action on the case for words; and he concluded that "what words are actionable or not will be more satisfactorily determined by an accurate application of the principles on which such actions depend, than by a reference to adjudged cases, especially those in the more ancient authors.<sup>1</sup> The purpose of this paper is to reduce to a series of rules the decisions which have been made by the courts upon the slander of a person in his profession or occupation. In doing this, no attempt has been made to cite all the cases, or to reconcile many, to be found in the books which are now of no authority, and had better not be disturbed. Only those that, in the opinion of the writer, state the correct rule or follow the true principle have been noticed. It should be observed that the cases are all of oral defamation, i.e., slander, as distinguished from written or printed defamation, i.e., libel, and that in every instance given in the illustrations it is assumed that the charge was false.

RULE I.—Words are actionable when spoken of persons touching their respective professions, trades, or business, and do or may probably tend to their damage.

This is about the language used by De Grey, C.J., in stating the rule in Onslow v. Horne.<sup>2</sup> It was criticised by Bayley, J., in Lumby v. Allday,<sup>3</sup> who considered the word "probably" too indefinite and loose, and suggested the phrase "having a natural tendency to" in its stead, adopting the latter words himself two years later in Sibley v. Tomlens.<sup>4</sup> But in James v. Brook,<sup>5</sup> Williams, J., pertinently asked, "How is a 'natural' tendency stronger than 'probable'?" and it would seem that the rule, as stated above, is as precise as language can make a general rule. Yet it must be taken subject to the qualifications of the succeeding rules, for, as it stands, it would include many cases that are not actionable at all. For example: A. is an attorney. B. has employed him in certain transactions for him, but over-hearing C. say, "D. is a much better lawyer than A.," he takes away his business from A. and gives it to D. Again, E. is a physician, and F. says of him, "He is nowhere as a doctor compared to G.," whereby H. employs G. instead of E. as he had intended to do. In both cases we have words spoken of persons in their respective professions, which not only tend to their injury, but actually do them damage. But comparisons made between professional men, and opinions publicly expressed of their relative merits, are not per se actionable.

The reasons for this rule are two: first, that from the nature of the case damage must necessarily ensue;<sup>6</sup> and, second, that a person might be effectually ruined in his business by the publication of the slander before his proof of special damage could be completed.<sup>7</sup>

RULE II.—If he act in the (a) employment and derive emolument therefrom, his calling may be (b) exalted or humble, (c) his only means of livelihood or one of several, provided only that it is (d) a legal one, and this (e) it is presumed to be.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) I. A. was a schoolmistress who taught children to read and write for a livelihood. B. said of her: "She was a whore, and J. S. kept her as his whore." It was held that such a profession was not one within the rule.<sup>8</sup> II. C. was a lessee and renter of turnpike tolls at Tewksbury. D. said of him: "He was wanted at Tewksbury; he was a defaulter there." Parke, B., though deciding the case on another ground, thought that the renting of tolls was not a profession or trade within the rule.<sup>9</sup> III. M. was a stock-jobber, and L. said of him: "M. is a lame duck," meaning that he did not carry out his contracts. Lord Eldon held that a jobber or dealer in the public funds or stocks could not be considered as a trader, and as having a character as such.<sup>1</sup> IV. W. was an innkeeper, and B. having said of him: "He is a bankrupt; he will be in the Gazette in twelve months; he is a pauper," it was objected that, as W. was not liable to the bankrupt laws, the words were not actionable. But it was held in the King's Bench that a man might be as much prejudiced by such words as if he were actually subject to the bankrupt laws, if his credit were affected by such an imputation on his solvency.<sup>2</sup>

It is doubtful if cases I., II., and III. are of any authority in this country. As to case I., it is clear that it would not be followed here. In the two hundred years which have elapsed since it was decided, the profession of teaching even the children of the poorer class has become one of the most honourable of employments; and it has been distinctly laid down in Ohio that a schoolmistress is of an occupation within the rule we are considering.<sup>3</sup> So, wherever it exists, the renting of tolls would, in the United States, be recognised as an occupation, as that of stock brokerage certainly is. It is to be noted that all the cases illustrating this part of the rule are English, showing that the distinction has, in this country, been neither recognised, nor even attempted.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(b) I. B. was a letter-carrier employed by a deputy-postmaster to carry letters. T. said of him: "He has broken up letters and taken out bills of exchange." Lord Hale denied a recovery, "principally from the quality of the employment; for he said, a man should not speak disparagingly of a man's cook or groom, but an action would be brought if such actions as these should be maintained."<sup>4</sup> II. S. was a farm-servant and bailiff of J. S. B. said of him: "Thou art a cozening knave, and hast cozened thy master of a bushel of barley." The court held that "true it is generally an action will not lie for calling one 'cozening knave;' yet where the words are spoken of one who is a servant and accountant, and whose credit and maintenance depends upon his faithful dealing," it will.<sup>5</sup> III. T. was a lime-burner, and H. said of him: "He is a cheating knave of a lime-burner." A divided court held that T. could recover, for "an action lies for speak-

(1) Morris v. Langdale, 2 Bos. & Pul. 297 (1800). "The objection was taken," said Lord Eldon, C.J., "that the plaintiff had not stated a sufficient cause of action. We are all of the opinion that the innuendo, 'meaning that the said plaintiff was incapable of fulfilling his contracts in respect of the said stock or funds,' does not necessarily import that he was incapable of fulfilling his legal contracts, notwithstanding the argument that the word contract ex terminis imports legality. The declaration states that the plaintiff, as a jobber or dealer in the public funds or stocks, had been accustomed lawfully to contract, but it is not averred what kind of a jobber or dealer he was. We do not consider a jobber or dealer in the funds as a known trader, and having a character as such. My brother Heath has indeed removed from my mind the impression which it had at first received—viz., that a jobber or dealer in the funds was always to be considered as a culpable person, by showing the necessity of such persons for the accommodation of the market; yet that circumstance will not obviate the objection that all the Acts of Parliament consider stock-jobbers as of two species—viz., that which is called the infamous practice of stock-jobbing, and that which is honest. The infamous practice is that in which a man enters into those engagements respecting the public funds which are prohibited by the Act of Parliament. The honest practice is that in which a man engages for the purchase or sale of stock whereof the vendor is possessed at the time. In this case no averment has been introduced distinguishing of what species the plaintiff was. It is true that he has averred that, as such jobber or dealer, he was accustomed lawfully to contract; but this amounts to no more than saying that he had entered into some lawful contracts, and non constat that he may not, as such jobber and dealer, have entered into some which were unlawful. It was contended that engagements contrary to law are not contracts. I answer, that in the language of the Act of Parliament they are treated as contracts, and the Act points out the distinction between contracts which are lawful and contracts which are unlawful. The innuendo, therefore, which explains the words 'lame duck' to mean that the plaintiff has not fulfilled his contracts, may apply equally to lawful or unlawful contracts; and, consequently, no special damage can be said to have arisen from words which may import an accusation that the plaintiff has not done that which the law prohibits."

(2) Whittaker v. Bradley, 7 D. & R. 649 (1836); Gates v. Bowker, 18 Vt. 23 (1843).

(3) Wilson v. Bunyon, Wright, 65 (1834).

(4) Bell v. Thatcher, 1 Vent. 275 (1676).

(5) Seaman v. Bigg, Cro. Car. 260 (13 Car. L.).

(1) Comyns Digest, vol. 1. 273.

(2) 3 Wils. 177; 2 W. Bl. 753 (1771).

(3) 1 C. & J. 301 (1831).

(4) 4 Tyrw. 90 (1839).

(5) 9 Q. B. 7.

(6) Tighman, J., in McMillan v. Birch, 1 Binney, 178 (1806).

(7) Starkie on Slander, p. 110.

(8) Wharton v. Brook, 1 Vent. 21 (1689).

(9) Bellamy v. Burch, 16 M. & W. 26; Bellars v. Killew, 7 D. & R. 121 (1826).

ing scandalous words of a lime-burner, or of any man of any trade or profession, be it ever so base, if they are spoken with reference to his profession."<sup>1</sup> IV. C. was "engaged in the wooden-ware business," and D. said of him: "You are a cheat." It was contended that the general rule was not applicable to such dealers as C. But the court thought otherwise.<sup>2</sup> V. D. was a husbandman. T. said of him: "He owes more money than he is worth; he is run away, and is broke;" and the action was sustained.<sup>3</sup> VI. C. was a carpenter, and words similar to those in case V. were spoken of him, and the action was sustained.<sup>4</sup> VII. B. was a blacksmith, and N. said of him: "He keeps false books." Held, actionable.<sup>5</sup>

Lord Hale's opinion (case I.) has not been followed in any English case that we have seen, and would hardly be cited to an American court. Our courts have not one rule for the rich and another for the poor; and the humility of the employment is no objection to the action, either in law or in reason.<sup>6</sup>

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(c) I. B. was an auctioneer, and had been employed by M. to sell his goods. L. retained B. to appraise the same goods for him, and subsequently said of B.: "He is a damned rascal; he has cheated me out of £100 on the valuation."<sup>7</sup> Held, actionable. II. D. was a husbandman, and T. said of him: "He owes more money than he is worth; he is run away, and is broke." It was objected that it must appear not only that D. had a trade, but that he got his living by it. But the court held the words actionable.<sup>8</sup>

(To be continued.)

THE LODGERS' GOODS PROTECTION ACT, 1871.

The principal point at issue in the case of Morton v. Palmer, which appeared in our Reports last week (p. 426), is one of considerable interest and importance, affecting as it does a large portion of the community, and necessitating some demarcation of the class for whose benefit the somewhat exceptional provisions of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict., c. 79), were made law.

It is unnecessary for our present purpose to set out the provisions of the statute in detail: it will be sufficient to remind our readers that its object, as stated in the preamble, was to prevent the "great loss and injustice" to which lodgers were subjected by the power possessed by the superior landlord to levy a distress on their goods for rent due to him by his immediate lessee. This being so, no question could have been predicted more certainly than that raised in the case we have mentioned—viz.: Who is a lodger within the Act? No definition of the term, it is to be observed, is supplied by the Act itself; its meaning therefore has to be gathered on ordinary principles of construction from the general scope and purpose of the Act. But, although the words "lodger" and "lodgings" have, as is well known, in consequence of the same want of definition, formed the subject of plentiful discussion under other enactments—as for example the Rating Acts and Parliamentary Registration Acts—yet somewhat curiously considering the time it has been in force, the Act of 1871 has hitherto, so far as we are aware, given rise to but one decision of any importance: Phillips v. Henson, 37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 432; L. Rep. 3 C. P. Div. 26. From that decision therefore, and the judgments in Morton v. Palmer, we have to collect what crumbs of information we at present can concerning the meaning of the term "lodger" in the Act under consideration.

In Phillips v. Henson the plaintiff in the action, which was brought for illegal distress, had, by a written agreement, hired from one F. certain rooms in a house held by her of the defendant. Inasmuch as these rooms constituted in substance nearly the whole house, it was contended that the agreement amounted to a demise or underlease, and negatived the relation of landlady and lodger between the parties. The Court, however, composed of Justices Grove and Lindley, holding the precise relation of the parties to be immaterial, decided that, even supposing the plaintiff were an under-tenant and not a lodger, he was not the less entitled to protection, the object of the Act, according to Mr. Justice Grove, being undoubtedly "to protect the goods of persons between whom and the landlord there is no direct privity."

The arguments urged in Morton v. Palmer were based on slightly different facts. Here the plaintiff had, in 1874, hired from B. three floors of a house, and for some years B. had himself resided and slept in the ground floor and basement of the premises. In 1878, however, he left the house, and let to one J. the rooms formerly reserved to himself, the plaintiff nevertheless continuing to pay rent to B. The superior landlord having in 1880 distrained for rent due from B., the question arose whether the plaintiff throughout the period continued to stand in the position of lodger to B., or whether the fact that the latter having left the house had altered the relation of the parties. In these circumstances the case came before the Court of Appeal on an application for a new trial, and the Lords Justices expressed a decided opinion that, to constitute a lodger under the Act, it is necessary that the person under whom the occupant holds should retain some control and dominion over the house. This in fact was described by Lord Justice Brett as "the fundamental proposition" in the definition of a lodger. "The person who is supposed to take another person in as lodger must," he said, "retain such power in or dominion over the house as a master reserves to himself in his family." "It does not follow," added the Lord Justice, "that a person who takes in a lodger must sleep and live in the house . . . but if he has gone away and given up all power to deal with the house, you cannot say that he has taken in a lodger." To the like effect Lord Justice Cotton remarked that, "in order to constitute a lodger, he must be lodging in the house of another, and he must be lodging with that other person." Or, as Lord Justice Lindley put it, in other words, "There is a personal relation; a lodger lodges with somebody who has control over the place where the party lodges."

Such being briefly the judicial observations upon which the interpretation of the Act has to be founded, what are the conclusions they suggest? The view expressed by Mr. Justice Grove in the earlier of the two cases clearly implies that mere absence of privity will of itself constitute a universal qualification for relief. This proposition we hesitate to accept, for, apart from the wide operation such a construction would confer upon the Act, the obvious and apparently unanswerable objection occurs: Why, if this was the intention of the Legislature, was not the more comprehensive and definite term "under-tenant" employed by it? It seems to us more probable that the law was made in order to protect persons who, on account of the temporary nature of their tenancy, are unable to make sufficient inquiries of their landlord's pecuniary circumstances.

On the main difficulty—viz., how far the occupation of a lodger can be exclusive, the judgments in Morton v. Palmer will henceforth throw considerable light. It is there, as we have seen, distinctly laid down that the tenancy must not be entirely exclusive, for the landlord must retain some power of controlling the domestic arrangements; he must, in the words of Lord Justice Cotton, possess "a present right of interference as master." He need not actually sleep, or even live, in the house, but he must not, as we apprehend, place himself in such a position that he could not enter it

(1) Terry v. Hooper, 1 Lev. 115 (1663).
 (2) Carpenter v. Dennis, 3 Sandf. 305 (1849).
 (3) Dobson v. Thornstone, 3 Mod. 119 (1686).
 (4) Chapman v. Lamphire, 3 Mod. 165.
 (5) Burich v. Nickerson, 17 Johns. 317 (1810).
 (6) See Starr v. Gardner, 6 U. C. Q. B. 515 (1839).
 (7) Bryant v. Laxton, 11 Moore, 344.
 (8) Dobson v. Thornstone, 3 Mod. 112 (1686).

without committing a trespass. If he does so his tenant will be no "lodger," and therefore not entitled to the protection which the Act affords.

But while these dicta, so far as they go, are perfectly lucid and intelligible, it can hardly be expected that they will suffice for the determination of all cases to which the Act may give rise; in some, for example, the actual terms of the hiring agreement must form the most important consideration. On the whole, seeing the infinite variety of circumstances and distinctions which are possible, and the perplexities which must inevitably ensue, it is to be regretted that the Act itself supplies no definition or description of the class it is intended to protect. Had it done so, we cannot help thinking that the question in each case would have been reduced within comparatively narrow limits, there being then some definite lines upon which to base a correct judgment.—Law Times.

THE LAND COMMISSION.

NOTICES OF SALE OF FARMS.

SERVICE IN PRESCRIBED DISTRICTS.

It is this day ordered that, from and after this date, where the holding in respect of which notice of intention to sell the tenancy is by the rules 82, 85, 86, and 87 required to be given is situate within any district for the time being prescribed under the Act for the Better Protection of Person and Property in Ireland, service on the tenant of Notices Nos. 13, 14, 15, and 17, or any of them, may be effected on such tenant by sending to him a copy of such notice and a copy of this order by letter through the Post Office, addressed to him at his usual residence, and by posting a copy of such notice on the Petty Sessions Court-house of the district in which the holding is situate, and such service shall be deemed good service of such notice, provided the party on whose behalf such notice is served, or his solicitor, shall make and file, in the office of the Irish Land Commission, an affidavit stating that the address to which the notice has been posted is the correct address of the party required to be served, and stating the county, barony, poor-law union, and electoral division in which such holding is situate, and that such place of residence is within a district which has been and is at the time of such service prescribed as aforesaid, and that the posting of such notice through the post, and posting of a copy thereof on such Petty Sessions Court-house, as aforesaid, have been duly effected on the respective dates mentioned in such affidavit.

Dated this 2nd day of January, 1882.

[Seal of the Irish Land Commission.]

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

20 & 21 Vict., c. 77, s. 26.

Commission to examine witness in a probate suit issued under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 26 (Banfield v. Pickard, 50 Law J. Rep. P. D. & A. 72).

Pitt-Lewis on County Courts, 657.

The bailiff of a County Court is entitled to sell goods taken in execution, but claimed by a third party, without interpleading or notice, unless possession money or the value of the goods is deposited with him (Davies v. Wise, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 651).

Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 56.

Williams on Bankruptcy (2nd Edition), 212.

An ex-trustee in bankruptcy, who has neglected to file an account, cannot be committed for contempt by the Court on merely failing to attend in answer to a summons (In re Royle, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 656).

Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868, s. 41.

The master, in taxing the costs of a parliamentary election petition, is not bound to allow the costs of witnesses allowed by the registrar (M Laren v. Horne, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 659).

Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 64.

The shipowner whose ship was to blame in a collision and sunk, and who has paid into Court up to the limit of his liability, is not entitled to recover from a cargo owner a proportion of the cost of raising the ship and cargo (The Ettrick, 50 Law J. Rep. P. D. & A. 65).

(To be continued.)

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Nineteenth Century. A Monthly Review, Edited by JAMES KNOWLES. No. 59. Jan., 1882. London: C. Kegan Paul & Co.

Contemporary Review. Jan., 1882. London: Strahan and Co., Limited, Paternoster-row.

Milton's Paradise Lost. Illustrated by Gustave Doré. Edited, with Notes and a Life of Milton, by the late ROBERT VAUGHAN, D.D. London: Cassell, Petter, Galpin, & Co.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

KING'S INNS.

HILARY SESSION, 1882.

LEGAL EDUCATION.

CHARLES HENRY TANDY, Esq., Q.C., King's Inns Professor of Constitutional and Criminal Law, and the Law of Torts, will deliver his Course of Lectures in the Lecture Room, at the King's Inns, on Mondays and Thursdays, during the Hilary Session.

Professor TANDY will lecture during the Session on Criminal Law. The books referred to will be "Russell and Roae on Criminal Law" and "Broom's Common Law."

The first Lecture will be delivered on Thursday, the 12th January, at half-past Four o'clock.

GEORGE V. HART, Esq., King's Inns Professor of the Law of Personal Property, Pleading, Practice, and Evidence, will deliver his course of Lectures in the Lecture Room, at the King's Inns, on Tuesdays and Fridays, during the Hilary Session.

Professor HART will lecture during the Session on the Law of Contracts, and the text Book to be read in connexion with the Lectures will be "Sir William Anson's Principles of the English Law of Contract."

The First Lecture will be delivered on Friday, the 13th January, at half-past Four o'clock.

The Lectures of the Professors will be delivered at Five o'clock, P.M., but all Students are to be in attendance in the Lecture Room at half-past Four o'clock, P.M.

Each Course will contain Twelve Lectures, all open to the Public.

The attention of Students is directed to Rule XIII. of the Rules published in Trinity Term, 1879, providing that "Each Student must attend three Terms of the Lectures of each of the two Professors at the King's Inns, and of two of the three Professors in the Law School of Trinity College, Dublin, including at least one complete Course, commencing with Michaelmas Term, with each of two Professors. Attendance at Lectures may be commenced with any Term, but must extend over two years at the least. The Courses to be completed commencing with Michaelmas Term may be selected by the Student, and may be attended "in the same year."

By Order,

JOHN D. O'HANLON,
Under Treasurer.

King's Inns, 2nd Jan., 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

WEDNESDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—J. T. O'Reilly, payment.

IN COURT.—T. E. Hearne, as to sale under Partition Act.—W. Butler, as to title.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

D. M. Ross, vouch.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—M. Quane, to confirm sale.—N. Lindsay, as to building leases.—M. Donnelly, allocation.

IN COURT.—P. Daly, injunction.—T. H. Crofts, to set aside absolute order.—H. Bell, to sell discharged of jointure.—R. L. Watson, from 12th Dec.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. A. Ennis, rental.—W. J. Totten, vouch.—Trustees R. D. King, ditto.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

- C. A. ARMSTRONG, . . . . . 1 lot.
- C. C. BOWEN, . . . . . 1 „
- L. H. NUTTALL, . . . . . 2 lots.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

Assignees W. H. Phelan, rental.—C. Taylor, for deeds.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—M. Bourke, to confirm sale.—J. Callaghan, ditto.

IN COURT.—Trustee W. Scanlan, final schedule.—J. O'Donnell, do.—S. Henderson, to make order absolute.—Do Montmorency, adjourned motion.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

S. A. Kelly, rental.—J. Russell, ditto.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Reid, Robert Corry, of Tobergill, in the county of Antrim, farmer. December 24, 1881; Tuesday, January 24, and Friday, February 3. Hyndman and Dickson and Jehu Mathews, solrs.

Rice, Edward Joseph, of Victoria-street, Belfast, in the county of Antrim, hotel proprietor. December 20, 1881; Friday, January 20, and Friday, February 3. Coates & Henry, solrs.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	Dec. JANUARY
	Sat. 31	Mon. 2	Tues. 3	Wed. 4	Thur. 5	Fri. 6
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	—	—	99½	99½	99½	100
— 3 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— New 3 p c Stock ..	—	—	99½	99½	99½	99½
INDIA STOCK.
— 4 p c Oct. '88 } Trfble. at	—	—	104½	104	104½	104
} Bk. of Irel.	—	—	—	—	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	—	311	311	311	311½
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and County ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and Westminster ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
3½ Munster Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	7½	7½	7½	7½
30 National Bank ..	—	—	23½	23½	—	—
15 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 Do. do. New 1867 ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	—	—	29½	29½
25 Standard of B. S. A., W'd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15½ Union of London ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish ..	—	—	50	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	—	—	114	—	—	114
50 Dublin &amp; Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	—	5	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons.' Gas ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. do. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Hudson's Bay ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 M'Kenzie &amp; Sons (lit'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
7½ M'Sweeney &amp; Co., limited ..	—	—	5	—	—	—
25 National Assurance ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	—	—	10½	—
10 Leeds Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 L'pl Un'd Tram &amp; Bus lit'd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
10 Athenry and Tuam ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and Northern Cos. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	116½	116½
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	—	107	—	107	106½
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	—	79½	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Gt. N'th'n (Irind) gt'd 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 3½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Mid. Great Western, 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Leased at Fixed Rentals
100 Dublin and Kingstown ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Northern and Western ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Londonderry &amp; Enniskillen ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	105
— Cork and Bandon, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— L'derry &amp; Enniskillen 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debit.
Ballast Office Deb., £92 6s 2d, 4 p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
Dub. Port & Docks, 4½ p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
(1888) Rathm. & Fem. M. Drain, 4 p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
Do. Defd. of £92 6s 2d 4 p c	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—¾ per cent., 6th November, 1879.
Of Deposit—1 per cent., 10th April, 1879.

Name Days—January 11th and 26th, 1882.
Account Days—January 12th and 27th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Glad Tidings.—Some constitutions have a tendency to rheumatism, and are, throughout the year, borne down by its protracted tortures. Let such sufferers bathe the affected parts with warm brine, and afterwards rub in this soothing Ointment. They will find it the best means of lessening their agony, and, assisted by Holloway's Pills, the surest way of overcoming their disease. More need not be said than to request a few days' trial of this safe and soothing treatment, by which the disease will ultimately be completely swept away. Pains that would make a giant shudder are assuaged without difficulty by Holloway's easy and inexpensive remedies, which comfort by moderating the throbbing vessels and calming the excited nerves.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

ORR—January 2, at North Great George's-street, the wife of James Orr, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a daughter.
 WHELAN—December 31, at Charleville-parade, Tullamore, the wife of William Devereill Whelan, Esq., solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

SEEDS and LE MOTTEE—December 20, at the Parish Church, St. Peter Port, Guernsey, Robert Seeds, Esq., LL.D., Q.C., Rutland-square, West, Dublin, to Ada Charlotte, eldest daughter of John Le Motte, Esq., of Le Vanquédor, Guernsey.

DEATHS.

ARMSTRONG—January 2, at Erskine-terrace, Cavan, Sophie, the eldest daughter of John Armstrong, Esq., solicitor.
 BEAMISH—December 31, at his residence, Waterloo-place, George Beamish, Esq., solicitor, of Mount Beamish, County Cork.
 BLAND—January 4, at Charleston-terrace, Charleston-road, Mary, the dearly-beloved wife of Arthur Herbert Bland, Esq., solicitor, aged 23 years.
 BOURNE—January 2, aged 82 years, Louisa Arabella, widow of Walter Bourne, Esq., formerly Clerk of the Crown for the County Antrim.
 CARAHER—January 4, at Lower Gardiner-street, Ida Mary, only daughter of Edward Caraher, Esq., solicitor.
 ORPIN—January 4, Basil Orpin, Esq., solicitor, of Marston Hall, Ballyduff, Lismore, and Wilton-place, Dublin, in his 82nd year.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
 DENZILLE-STREET.

3-7

LEGAL POSTINGS:

In the HIGH COURT of JUSTICE in IRELAND.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

COUNTY OF MEATH.

SALE

On FRIDAY, the 10th day of FEBRUARY, 1882,

In the Matter of the Estate of

D A V I D C A R L E T O N, Owner;

Ex parte—

JOHN FOX GOODMAN and WALTER JAMES GOODMAN, Petitioners.

TO BE SOLD,

On FRIDAY, the 10th day of FEBRUARY, 1882,

At the hour of Twelve o'clock,

Before the Right Honourable Judge Flanagan,

At his Court,

Inns-quay, in the City of Dublin.

The Town and Lands of MONKSTOWN, otherwise MOUNTAINS-TOWN, called on the Ordnance Survey MONKTOWN, containing 241a 0r 38p, statute measure; situate in the Barony of Moyferagh, and County of Meath; held under fee-farm grant dated 16th of May, 1854, under the Renewable Leasehold Conversion Act: subject to the perpetual yearly rent of £92 6s 1½d sterling, and now yielding a profit rent of £45 6s.

Dated this 3rd day of December, 1881.

J. M. KENNEDY, Examiner.

N.B.—Proposals for the purchase of this Estate will be received by the Solicitors having carriage of Sale up to the 1st day of February, 1882, and will, if approved of, be submitted to the Court.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The entire Lands are in possession of two joint tenants, who hold under a lease dated 2nd of October, 1788, which will expire on the 1st November, 1882, when the letting value will become considerably increased. The present estimated yearly letting value of the Estate is £242 2s 6d, being at the rate of 92s 6d per Irish acre.

The Lands are of good quality, nearly all in tillage, and well watered. They are situate within three miles of Trim, a station on the Dublin and Meath Railway. There is a dwelling-house, with the usual out-offices, and shed accommodation for about 30 head of cattle.

For Rentals and further particulars apply at the Registrar's Office, Land Judges, Four Courts, Inns-quay, Dublin; or to

BARLOW & ORR, Solicitors having carriage of Sale, 14, North Great George's-street, Dublin.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL:

NOTICE.—MR. VALENTINE DUNN, Solicitor, has removed his Offices to No. 68, MIDDLE ABBEY-STREET.

3

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO. LIMITED.

SECURITY, &c.
 RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—
 39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 959

THE GUARANTEE SOCIETY OF LONDON,

Empowered by Special Act of Parliament—Session of 1842.

For providing Security for Parties in Situations of Trust.

WM. G. DU BEDAT & SONS (Agents for Ireland.

Also Agents to the Liverpool, London, and Globe Fire and Life Insurance Company).

Government Stock and Sharebrokers.

1 and 2, FOSTER-PLACE, DUBLIN. 812

PUBLIC NOTICES:

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES and INVESTIGATIONS

CONDUCTED BY

MR. THOMAS DEANE,

17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange).

Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.

Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.

References.

ESTABLISHED 1878.

167

"THREE STAR"

LIQUEUR MALT WHISKEY.
 SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS, 20/- per Gallon.

KELLY BROTHERS,

Wholesale Wine Merchants,

39, UPPER SACKVILLE STREET. 205

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK for STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens: it is a most brilliant and permanent colour: it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and is, consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each. 581

STOKES BROTHERS,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,

LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,

22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,

DUBLIN. 293

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES &amp; CO.,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,

73, DAME-STREET, late of 11, Essex BRIDGE,

Are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,

Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

N. PETERSON &amp; SON,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

LIVERPOOL AND LONDON CHAMBERS,

1, FOSTER-PLACE, COLLEGE-GREEN,

DUBLIN. 813

PATENT OFFICE, DUBLIN.

J. K. FAHIE & SON, Consulting Engineers and Patent Agents, 2, Nassau-street, Dublin, and 323, High Holborn, London, transact every description of business relating to Patents for Inventions, Registration of Designs, Copyrights, and Trade Marks. Authors of "Hand-book on British and Foreign Patent Law." A paper on the Law of Copyright &c., to be had on application, price 3s. 6d. 31

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANKAITTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1882.

No. 781

GOVERNMENT LOANS TO OCCUPYING TENANTS, FOR AGRICULTURAL IMPROVEMENTS.

To create a peasant proprietary only one degree above pauperism was never the deliberate intention of any Government. But, while rents are reduced, it remains to be seen what will be the ultimate effect on the value of produce, and if the occupiers of the land, being under less actual necessity for exertion, were now to lapse into greater indolence, while the landlords have less direct interest in the improvement of their property, and the capitalists shrink from approach, the country would soon be in a worse state than ever before. Rightly, then, has the legislature consociated in the Land Law Act, 1881, those provisions for enabling the Treasury to authorise the Board of Works to make advances to occupiers of land for the purpose of the reclamation or improvement of waste or uncultivated land or forehores, drainage of land, or for building of labourers' dwellings, or any other works of agricultural improvement; so that not alone may the occupier enjoy the advantage of having his rent reduced, but a new impetus to exertion is afforded, and a new means of acquiring the necessary capital for improvements is supplied. But, what if the very operation of reducing rents were to have the effect of depriving the tenant of the benefit of this provision? What if the benign and salutary intention of the legislature were to be impeded by the administrative regulations of "My Lords" of the Treasury?

Under section 31 (2), "My Lords" may authorise the Board of Works to make the advances to an occupier, "when satisfied that the tenancy or other security which he may have to offer is such as to insure repayment of principal and interest within such number of years as the Treasury may fix, or when the landlord joins the occupier in giving such security." One of the very purposes for which the advances are to be made is for building of labourers' dwellings; and by section 19 it is expressly enacted that "any such loan may be made for a less sum than the sum of one hundred pounds." But, "My Lords" are of opinion that £100 should be the minimum amount of any loan made under their Minute of December 21, 1881, "so that the experiment, at least in the first instance, may be tried with the more substantial members of the class." Why? Because, forsooth, under the old Landed Property Improvement Acts no loan was to be made for a less sum. But, those statutes, applicable to owners, are only to become applicable to occupiers, under the Act of 1881, so far as the Treasury itself, in its discretion might determine, while the Act itself expressly repudiates such a narrow limitation in reference to the building of labourers' dwellings. "My Lords," however, are pleased to interpret the Act as an "experiment," nor are they ignorant how experiments may be frustrated. In vain was the legislature enlightened by its own experiences of this kind; and if hereafter the Treasury pursues the same course in reference to the other provisions of the fifth part of the Act, for enabling tenants to purchase their holdings, in vain too will the legislature have thought to profit by their experience of the failure of the "Bright Clauses" of the Act of 1870. As it is, the consequence of the limitation now imposed, taken together with the other provisions of the Treasury Minute of December 21, 1881, will be to exclude from the benefit of this portion of the Act of 1881 any occupier whose present rent falls below an average of £25 or thereabouts—the average excess of present rents above the Poor Law Valuation; while a tenant who is desirous of improving a labourer's dwelling will not be able to borrow less than £100 for the purpose, nor to borrow at all unless his holding is valued at £20 at least, and therefore probably rented a good deal higher, whereas, if he had applied to have a judicial rent fixed, and had been directed to improve a labourer's dwelling, he will be enabled to borrow less than £100 for the purpose by the Act itself, though not by the present Minute which expressly excludes the 19th section from its operation, while "the erection or improvement of labourers' cottages" is expressly mentioned among the purposes for which loans may be advanced under the present Minute. The other purposes are, thorough drainage; subsoiling and trenching, or otherwise deepening and improving the soil; irrigation or warping; embanking from rivers or tidal waters; formation or improvement of fences, drains, streams, or watercourses; making farm-roads; clearing of rocks and stones; reclamation from waste; planting for shelter; erecting or enlarging farm-houses or offices; and the erection of mill buildings for the scutching of flax, and for the formation of water-courses and dam-weirs for providing water for same.

Taking the scope of sub-section 2, s. 13, to be, to extend, under certain conditions, to occupying tenants the privilege of borrowing from Government, on the same favourable terms as owners are enabled to borrow under the Landed Property Improvement Acts, "My Lords" have retained from 10 & 11 Vict., c. 32, the same rule as to the proportion (one-fifth) of the whole loan which may be advanced at any one time, the same conditions as to proof that the preceding advances have been duly expended, the same rate of interest (3½ per cent.), and the same period of re-payment (22 years) by equal half-yearly instalments, as are prescribed for owners under that statute. But, they have read the direction of the sub-section in reference to making advances only when satisfied with the security, as amounting to more than a caution to look narrowly into the credit of each individual applicant, for, obviously, the central Government could never protect itself in this manner with the same efficacy as a local lender. They came to the conclusion, after long and anxious consideration, that it would not be feasible to give effect to the intention of the legislature by arrangements with the local banks, as the loans must run for longer periods than brought them within the range of banking business. In consideration of the difference in the value of the security offered by a charge on the fee-simple and a charge confined to the tenant's interest in his holding, they have decided that, while in the case of owners under the Landed Property Improvement Acts the maximum loan is limited to seven times the Poor Law Valuation, the maximum to an occupying tenant shall not exceed five times such valuation. The Minute declares what provisions of the Landed Improvement Acts are to be applicable, mutatis mutandis, to advances to occupiers under the Act of 1881, and is accompanied by a schedule giving instructions as to the purposes for which such advances may be made, the conditions to which they will be subject, and the mode of application and course of proceeding to be adopted. But these are details which, while not calling for criticism, will best be understood by reference to the document itself. Suffice it to say that they are so careful, guarded, and effective as to render it only the more to be regretted that the advantages offered have not been placed, at least experimentally, within the power of the poorer tenantry.

THE DECLINE OF CONVEYANCING.

From the preface to Messrs. Wolstenholme and Turner's Book on the Conveyancing Acts it would seem that the conveyancing Bar deem themselves doomed to extinction by the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, and need some Deus ex machina to step into the gap to save them. We are rather inclined to disagree with the authors as to the danger of extinction, and also to be a little sceptical as to the desirability of stopping the process of extinction if it really is begun.

The argument is, that under the Remuneration Act, ad valorem payments for solicitors will probably be established; that in consequence any payments out of pocket, such as counsel's fees, will be borne by the solicitor and not by the client, and therefore the solicitor will no longer resort to counsel. If it is the fact, as stated, that solicitors will no longer resort to counsel in conveyancing matters when the charge falls on themselves, what is the inference? One of two alternatives: either that they ought never to have resorted to counsel at all, and have therefore wronged their client by putting him to unnecessary expense in the past; or that they ought to resort to counsel, and, if they do not, will wrong their client by not taking the necessary care in the future. We can hardly admit either that conveyancing counsel are so useless, or that solicitors are so careless of their duty as this argument would represent them.

The practice which now prevails of counsel drawing the drafts themselves arose probably from counsel finding it on the whole more satisfactory to frame as well as merely mould and alter the deeds they settled. This practice was a distinct gain to the solicitor who was saved trouble and risk, and probably to the client who gained the benefit of a better drawn deed.

This gain will still remain to the solicitor, though not as heretofore directly at the expense of his client. Indirectly, however, the client will still pay for counsel's fees. Everyone who has any acquaintance with the Incorporated Law Society's scale knows that in simple cases the remuneration is much larger than in the ordinary way of making out bills of costs. We may be pretty confident that, with the contingency of having to pay counsel's fees before their eyes, the Law Society and individual solicitors in bargaining for their remuneration will not omit to get an addition amply sufficient to provide for the contingency. Still no doubt it will be present to the mind of a solicitor that every draft sent to counsel will represent a deduction from his profit. The question will then present itself as a choice between three courses: will it pay best to do conveyancing himself, taking the time spent and risk incurred into account; or to keep a highly skilled and highly paid conveyancing clerk, saving his own time thus, but not the profit or risk; or to send it to counsel and save time and risk, though losing part of the profit? In the great majority of cases we take it that the last alternative will be preferred. To all but solicitors with very little practice time is money; to all but solicitors with very first-rate practice indeed, a conveyancing clerk on whom they could implicitly rely would be a very expensive, because comparatively useless, luxury. The great majority of solicitors lie between the two extremes. The first class do not send conveyancing to counsel now, the second will probably always do so. Any way a large number of cases would still remain in which solicitors would not feel comfortable nor clients safe without counsel's opinion, and opinions, though often staying, often leading to litigation are the most satisfactory part of conveyancing practice at the Bar.

It is not, therefore, from the Solicitors' Remuneration Act that, in our view, any danger to the conveyancing Bar is to be feared. But we think that the Conveyancing Act does strike at the very root of the profession, and will diminish the conveyancing profits not only of the Bar but of solicitors. The immediate effect of the Act may be small; its indirect and ultimate effect must be great. The clauses relating to mortgages, and especially the statutory forms given in the Act, will be largely and increasingly made use of. The "expanding clauses" will shorten mortgage deeds, and with them abstracts of title and recitals in conveyance. The statutory form will probably be used, not only, as Mr. Wolstenholme suggests, on small properties, but on large properties and in large transactions where there is no complication of title. The result in the long run must tend not only to prevent mortgages coming to conveyancing counsel, but also to prevent clients, such of them at least as are in business, from going to lawyers at all. Wills and settlements and conveyances, however, will still remain. But they also to a great extent are doomed. If registration is carried out, as it soon will be; if titles are simplified and shortened, as they will inevitably be by the abolition of entails and restriction of power of settlement; then there will no longer be any need of a large, learned, and laborious body of men devoted solely to the acquirement and practice of a branch of law which ought never to have existed. The conveyancing Bar is doomed to a glorious extinction by suffocation under a mountain of abstracts of title for compulsory registration. Its last expiring effort will probably be a brilliant attempt to evade the abolition of power of entail in a series of last wills. The result may be delayed one year, or five years, or ten years, but it must come, and settlements and conveyances will follow mortgages into the limbo of an archæological chamber of horrors. The mass of intellect, the energy of labour, the tracts of time now devoted to conveying a piece of land or preventing it from being conveyed at all, will then be more usefully employed in the true work of the Bar—counsel and advocacy in disputed cases of right.

Both to solicitors and barristers we cannot help thinking that every simplification of the law, every diminution of the mass of papers to be read, everything that tends to make law less repulsive, less doubtful, and cheaper to the clients, is a distinct advantage, and will lead to an increase of profits. Smaller but quicker returns are the golden rule in the sale of legal skill and forensic ability as of other commodities. We hail the Conveyancing Act as a slight and halting step nearer to that desirable result.—Law Times.

THE LATE MR. JUSTICE O'BRIEN.

On Wednesday (Jan. 11th), the Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Barry having taken their seats in the Queen's Bench Division,

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE said—Before we proceed with the business of the day it is only due to the late Judge O'Brien that we should say a few words expressive of our opinion of the mode in which he discharged his duties as a judge. Judge O'Brien took his seat here, I think, in the year 1858, and therefore he acted as judge for some three and twenty years; and I think it must be admitted by all who had opportunities of witnessing the mode in which he discharged the important functions committed to him that he earned the confidence of the public and the regard of the Crown. Judge O'Brien was possessed of very considerable intellectual endowments, and not only were his mental powers remarkable, but he had moral qualities which conciliated the affections of every person who came into close contact with him. He devoted his natural talents to the acquisition of the learning of his profession, and his memory, which was a very tenacious one, was amply stored with learning and information derived from experience. In the death of this very eminent judge the public have sustained a very serious loss. For myself, having come into this court much more recently, I found the greatest assistance and comfort from having him beside me, and I must be allowed to say that my intercourse with him was such that I always revered him as a judge and loved him as a man. He reached a very considerable age, and down to the very last retained his intellectual faculties I may say almost entirely unimpaired. It was only during the last term that I thought I did see some slight indication that physical weakness was beginning to extend itself to his mental faculties; but these symptoms were extremely slight, and we had no reason at all to suppose that he was so soon to be removed from amongst us. However, he is gone; and I can say that I feel with all sincerity that he has left behind him a memory to be cherished and an example to be followed. He exercised his functions as a judge with great ability, and he always appeared to have present in his mind the feeling that justice was best tempered with mercy. On every occasion on which he acted there emanated from him indications of the benevolence of feeling and the kindness of heart by which he was so eminently characterized. He has left behind him a memory which we shall cherish, and cherish with regret; and all I can say is that personally I feel his loss very sincerely and very deeply. However, it is not what I feel but what the public feel that is of importance, and I am quite sure that every member of the public feels that in him has been lost an eminent public servant.

Mr. JUSTICE BARRY.—I am sure I shall not be understood as intending, or thinking it necessary, to supplement in any way the apt and eloquent language in which my Lord Chief Justice has referred to the death of our late lamented colleague, Mr. Justice O'Brien. My lord has, however, necessarily dealt rather with those considerations of public and general character which the occasion suggests, and I only desire for myself—and if I am out of order, I am certain, under the circumstances, I shall be excused—to add, in this court where I have sat with Judge O'Brien for ten years, a word or two expressive of my profound sorrow at the loss which I have personally sustained by the death of so old and so valued a friend. For very many years I enjoyed the friendship of Judge O'Brien. At a very early and critical period of my career at the Bar I was advised by his wisdom, I was sustained by his approval, and I was cheered by his friendship; and when the vicissitudes of professional life placed me, though many years his junior, on the same bench on which he occupied a seat, our junction as colleagues only served to draw closer the ties of friendship which had previously subsisted between us, and, by giving me the opportunity of a closer and more continuous observation of his qualities, to increase the respect and reverence which I entertained for him. I shall say no more than repeat the remark which I made on the late occasion of our attending his mortal remains to their resting place—he has not left behind him on this earth a kinder man, a truer friend, or a purer Christian.

Mr. LANE, Q.C.—I do not know, my lords, whether it will be considered out of place for me, as the senior member of the Bar present, and as one of Judge O'Brien's oldest friends, to express, on the part of the Bar, what I knew they feel, and on behalf of myself, the deep feeling of regret I have at the departure of Judge O'Brien from amongst us. Since he was called to the Bar he was my companion on circuit, and I had an opportunity of knowing his great legal talents and his great general ability. I had an opportunity also of knowing his kindly feelings, and the way in which he supported those who were juniors to him. And I can say with the utmost sincerity as a very old friend of his, that I deeply feel the loss that I have sustained, and that the Bar have sustained by his death, both as a lawyer on the bench and in society as a friend. It may be wrong of me to make these observations, but I could scarcely help it, knowing him so long as I did.

LIABILITY FOR DOGS.

(Continued from 15 Ir. L. T. page 564.)

In the preceding portion of this article we have supported the view of Lord Cookburn in Fleeming v. Orr, that the owner of a dog ought to be liable for injuries inflicted by the animal, even although he was not aware of its vicious propensities. It is, however, settled law in England, at least, that in order to fix liability on the owner there must be evidence that he had previous knowledge of the animal's propensities. There are a number of cases on the question when the owner is to be assumed to have this knowledge—when there is evidence of scienter.

The first question to be considered under this head is, What is evidence of the dangerous disposition of the animal? "The nature of the evidence to be adduced in proof of an animal's vicious inclinations, and of the owner's notice, must of course vary greatly according to circumstances" (Shearman on Negligence, sec. 191). It is not necessary to prove that the animal had actually bitten any person before, it is sufficient that it had attacked with the intention of doing injury (Worth v. Gilling, L. R. 2 C. P. 1). Mere playful attacks—"a mere habit of bounding upon and seizing persons, not so as to hurt or injure them, although causing some annoyance and trivial accidental damage to the clothes"—it has been held, would not sustain an action for injuries caused by a bite (Line v. Foster, 3 F. & F. 781). In this case it was held that the dog might be produced in Court and shown to the jury to assist them in judging of his temper and disposition.

There are different kinds of ferocity, and in considering whether a dog is ferocious, attention must be given to the kind of attack which has caused the injury, redress for which is sought in the action. A dog which has a trick of worrying sheep is not necessarily an animal dangerous to human beings. But it is not necessary that the acts of aggression brought to the notice of the owner should be precisely similar to that upon which the action against him is founded. It is sufficient if, and it is necessary that, the facts brought to the owner's knowledge should indicate a disposition to commit injuries substantially like those which form the basis of the claim. See American cases cited in Shearman, sec. 190.

The next question is, What is evidence of the owner's knowledge? It is not necessary that the owner of an animal should have any formal notice or positive knowledge of its vicious habits or disposition in order to make him liable for its acts. It is sufficient that he has seen or heard of things which would suffice to convince a man of ordinary prudence that the animal was so disposed (Shearman, sec. 189).

In Judge v. Cox (1 Stark, 285) Chief Justice Abbott held that proof that the defendant had warned a person to beware of the dog lest he should be bitten was evidence to go to the jury that the dog was accustomed to bite mankind. This evidence of scienter was surely of the most shadowy kind. It is reasonable to think that the warning was inspired by the knowledge, not that the animal was accustomed to bite mankind, but that a dog was an animal which was apt to do injury. If an owner were to be made liable whenever he had given warning to beware of the dog, a cautious and well-intentioned owner would suffer and a reckless owner who did not care whether people were injured or not would escape.

It has been said that the fact of the dog's being kept on the chain in the daytime was strong evidence that the owner knew him to be dangerous (Shearman, sec. 191). In Jones v. Perry (2 Esp. 48) Lord Kenyon attached much weight to similar evidence. (In this case a report that the dog had before been bitten by a mad dog was admitted as evidence that the defendant knew him to be mischievous, which was surely spreading the net of evidence very wide indeed). But in Beck v. Dyson (4 Camp. 198) Lord Ellenborough held such evidence insufficient. In the latter case, it has been remarked, the allegation was that the dog had previously attempted to bite, and this allegation would not be supported by the above evidence (Shearman, supra). Why not? If the above evidence were evidence of the dog's ferocious disposition, it would be evidence in support of an allegation that it had attempted to bite. Anything that is evidence of a ferocious disposition is good evidence in support of an allegation that the animal had attempted to bite. A dog that is ferocious is very likely to bite, and that is the way in which it shows its ferocity. The truth is Lord Ellenborough rejected the evidence of the dog's being kept on the chain as evidence of the owner's knowledge that the dog was ferocious simply because it is not evidence of that.

Knowledge of the servant is sometimes knowledge of the master. If, for example, the owner of a dog appoints a servant to keep it, the servant's knowledge of the dog's ferocious disposition is the knowledge of the master, and fixes liability upon him (Baldwin v. Casella, 1872, L. R. 7 Ex. 325). In this case the animal was kept in the defendant's stable, and the defendant's coachman was appointed to keep it. The coachman knew that the dog was mischievous. It was held immaterial whether the coachman communicated the fact to his master or not; his knowledge was the knowledge of his master. "It appears to be the rule of law," said Baron Bramwell, "that the possibility of loss or injury arising to others from things which are likely to be dangerous, raises on the part of those who have them under their control a duty to inform themselves about them. . . . So all dogs may be mischievous; and therefore a man who keeps a dog is bound either to have it under his own observation and inspection, or, if not, to appoint some one under whose observation and inspection it may be. The defendant has appointed his coachman to that duty; the coachman knew of the mischievous propensities of the dog; and his knowledge is the knowledge of his master." It will be remarked that these observations extend the liability far beyond what is embraced in the ordinary doctrine on the subject. They imply not merely that the owner is liable et cetera he knows that the dog is dangerous, but that he is bound to know whether it is dangerous or not.

It is not sufficient, however, that the ferocious disposition of the animal should be known to any servant of the owner; it must be a servant having some charge or control over the dog or of the place where the dog is kept, or of the master's business or affairs; and either whose duty it is to inform the master, or whose authority is such as to empower him to put the dog away. In Stiles v. Cardiff Steam Navigation Company (83 L. J. R. (Q. B.), 310) the plaintiff was bitten by a dog belonging to the defendants, a corporation, which was chained in the defendants' yard, in a place in which he could not be seen by the plaintiff, a passer-by. The dog had previously bitten a person, and this was known to some of the servants of the defendants; but those servants had no control over the affairs of the corporation, or control over the dog. It was contended that the defendants being a corporation, it was impossible that they could have knowledge in such a matter. Of course this contention failed. But the defendants succeeded on the ground that there was no evidence that they had knowledge of the dog's previous attack. "It would have been sufficient to show knowledge of the manager or of some person having control of the yard. I had some doubt whether the knowledge must not be brought home to some person who kept and had control of the dog, and had power to put an end to his keeping, but perhaps it would be enough if he had the care of the dog. Here the persons rather had care of the horses" (per Gompston, J.). "The real difficulty still remains," the difficulty about the defendants being a corporation having been disposed of, "whether these were persons who had the control of the yard, or of the dog, or of the business, so as to be proper persons to receive notice for the company" (per Blackburn, J.). Notice of the mischievous propensity of the dog given to the wife of the owner, who occasionally attended to his business, which was carried on upon the premises where the dog was kept, was held to be some evidence of scienter, although the wife had not communicated the notice to the husband (Gladman v. Johnson, 36 L. J. (C. P.), 153). "I am not prepared to assent to the proposition that notice to an ordinary servant, or even to a wife, would in all cases be sufficient to fix the husband in such an action as this with knowledge of the mischievous propensity of the dog; but here it appears that the wife attended to the business, which was carried on upon the premises where the dog was kept, and that a formal complaint as to that dog was made to the wife when on the premises for the purpose of being communicated to her husband. It may be that this is but slight evidence of scienter, but the only question is whether it is evidence of it. I think it is" (per Bovill, C.J.). We do not think the evidence here was some evidence or slight evidence of scienter. It was complete and conclusive evidence or it was nothing. The circumstance that notice was given to the wife might have been some slight evidence of actual knowledge of the husband, seeing that the wife would be likely to communicate such a notice to her husband. But it was proved that she did not. Consequently if knowledge was to be fixed on the husband at all, it was by holding that, considering the position the wife held in regard to the management of the business, the knowledge of the wife was the knowledge of the husband; and the knowledge of the wife was admitted. Where a dog in a public-house had bitten persons to the knowledge of two persons behind the bar serving customers, to whom complaints had been made, but who had not communicated the complaints to the publican, and who were not shown to have the general management of the business, it was held by the Court of Common Pleas (Coleridge, C.J.; Keating, J.; dis. Brett, J.) that there was evidence of scienter to go to the jury. Mr. Justice Brett in stating his reasons for dissenting said: "A barman or barmaid has no more to do with the general management of the business than a shopman selling goods in any other shop. A manager whose knowledge is to fix the proprietor with knowledge must be one who stands in the place of the master, and to whom the general control of the business is delegated in the master's absence." The circumstances of this case, and cases of this kind are cases of circumstances, are not well brought out. One would like to have known whether there was any person who had the general management, or whether the owner of the establishment took an active part in the business himself; but all we are told is that it was not proved that the barman to whom the complaints had been made had the general management of the business. Surely Mr. Justice Brett's notion is not a reasonable one, that the servant whose knowledge is to fix liability on the master must be one who has the general management of the business. It is the person behind the counter in charge of what is the only part of the business of any importance to the outside public, viz.—the selling of liquor, whom the public naturally take as representing the publican, and to whom they naturally apply if they have any complaint to make. It may be that he has nothing to do with the general management of the concern, buying liquor, paying taxes, and so on, but he has to do with the only part of the business which brings the establishment into relation with the general public. The men whom you find in charge behind the counter, whether they have the general management of the business or not, are the people in charge of the shop, and the men in charge of the shop are the men in charge of the dog in the shop. Of course if a manager over the men engaged in drawing beer were present, the complaint would necessarily require to be made to him. But if not, a complaint is made to the proper person if it is made to the person, whoever he is, who at the time is in charge. A man selling beer behind the counter of a public-house is in a different position from a servant, as in Stiles' case, in a large establishment, who has a special duty to attend to and to that alone, and which duty happens to be one which does not hold him out to the public as representing the master, or one which gives him any charge over or control of the animal.

As regards the ownership of a dog, possession of the dog is presumptive proof of ownership and consequent liability. But a person may be liable for the acts of a dog who is in no sense the legal owner. One who harbours a dangerous animal on his premises is liable for injuries inflicted by it while on or near these premises just as much as if he were its owner. Questions of some intricacy may occur as to liability when the animal at the time of the injury is not in the personal custody of the owner but has been committed by him to the care of another. (Of course we are not speaking of the case where the animal is in the custody and under the control of a servant who has been intrusted with the custody and control. In such a case, as we have seen, it is just the same as if the animal were under the owner's immediate inspection and control. The acts of the servant, the representative of the master, are the acts of the master, and the knowledge of the servant is the knowledge of the master.) In Cowan v. Dalziel and More (Nov. 22, 1877, 5 Rottie, 241) a dog while in the custody of two persons, not the owners, attacked and injured a man. Both the owners and the custodiers were aware that the dog had previously injured another man. The custodiers having knowledge of the dog's propensities were clearly liable. It was urged that the owner having like knowledge was liable as well. The court held that he was not. The decision by no means bears out the idea that as soon as an owner gives the custody of the animal to another, the custodian is liable and the owner is free, and this will appear very plain when the circumstances of the case, which as regards the custody were special, are explained. More, who is styled the owner, was foreman to the other defenders, the Dalziels. He bargained for a retriever to act as watch-dog. The price had not been paid, but More admitted that if it were demanded he was bound to pay it. The dog was chained in the woodyard. At the time of the accident the dog had been away from the woodyard for six weeks, and More had left his employers' service. In these circumstances it is clear that the foreman was not liable. The animal had been procured for the purposes of the other defenders and had passed entirely out of his custody. In this case the Lord Justice-Clark (Moncreiff) observed: "I am not prepared to lay down as a general proposition that the owner of a dog is not to be held liable unless the dog is in his personal custody. On the contrary, I think that as long as the owner retains the substantial control over its custody, it is of no consequence whether he exercises that control by himself or by another. He is responsible for its safe keeping to the public. . . . I am therefore not prepared to hold that if a man keeps a dog which he knows ought not to go at large, he may not be responsible. But this must not be stretched to an unreasonable extent. If one commits the care of such an animal to another for a length of time, and for his own behoof, and the custodian is trustworthy and fully aware of the precautions necessary, I think that the owner is not liable." It seems to us that the liability of the original owner depends upon whether the animal has passed beyond his control or not, and that is a question of fact. If it has passed beyond his control, it does not matter whether the custodian is trustworthy or not; and if it has not, the trustworthiness of the custodian, on the principle of Burton v. Moorhead, is not a defence. The owner must take the responsibility of the custody and precautions being effectual. "It is a nice question," says Mr. Shearman (sec. 197), "to determine how far the notice which the legal owner of an animal has of its habits is to be imputed to other persons having it in charge and standing in the position of the owner in respect to third persons. Against one who unlawfully takes an animal the case is clear. Having unlawfully assumed the position of an owner under circumstances which by his own fault prevented him from knowing the nature of the animal, he should bear all the burdens and be charged with the knowledge or notice chargeable to the real owner." This last case is clear enough; but as regards the case of a borrower, it is only his own actual knowledge that should make him liable. On the principle that knowledge is required to make one liable for the acts of the animal, how can it be contended that he is liable when in point of fact he had not such knowledge? But if the owner transfers the custody of an animal which he knows to be dangerous without communicating his knowledge, and mischief ensues, it is he who, being in fault, ought to be responsible. Mr. Shearman draws a distinction between a gratuitous borrower and a borrower for hire. The latter has a right to have information of the quality of the article let on hire, and a claim against the owner if any damage results from that information not being communicated. The borrower for hire, says Mr. Shearman, has a claim over the lender, "which affords some ground for holding him responsible for the possession of the information to which he has thus a right." But if the borrower has not the knowledge, he is not responsible to third persons. If he suffered damage himself, he would have a claim against the lender. And surely the borrower's claim against the lender affords no ground of liability in a question with third persons. The claim possibly might not be effectual. The lender may be a man of straw from whom nothing could be obtained. In a question with third persons, the relations between the lender and the borrower do not seem of any importance.

We presume, just because the propensity of dogs to worry sheep was so often displayed, and the common law, choosing to recognise a dog as an animal of an entirely peaceful species, was powerless to give redress to the owner of sheep injured by a dog unless he was able to prove that the owner of the dog was aware of vicious propensities of the particular animal, it was found necessary, so far, to regulate the matter by statute. By 25 & 26 Vict., c. 69, sec. 1, in Ireland the owner or harbourer of a dog is made liable in damages for injury done to sheep by his dog, and it is not necessary for the person claiming damages to show a previous mischievous propensity in the animal or the owner's knowledge of it, or to prove any neglect on the part of the owner. The Act 23 & 29 Vict., c. 80, makes a similar regulation for England, extending the liability, however, to injuries to sheep and cattle. A similar Act, the 26 & 27 Vict., c. 100, was passed for Scotland. It provides that in an action of damages against the owner of a dog for injury done by it to sheep or cattle, it shall not be necessary to prove a previous propensity in such dog to injure sheep or cattle. (The occupier of any premises where the dog was usually kept or permitted to live or remain at the time of such injury, is made liable as the owner, unless he proves he was not the owner, and that the dog was kept in his premises without his knowledge or assent.) It will be observed that the terms of this Scottish Act are different from those of the other Acts. It does not say it shall not be necessary to prove any neglect on the owner's part. In M'Intyre v. Scott (February 18, 1870, 8 Macph. 570) the question was raised whether the statute changed the rule that fault must be proved against the owner of the dog in order to infer his liability for damages. It was not necessary to decide the question, it being proved that intimation had been made to the effect that the dog had previously worried sheep, after which intimation the dog had been allowed to go about loose. But the Lord President made the following observations on the meaning and intent of the statute: "The next question is whether the Act 26 & 27 Vict., cap. 100, introduced any change in the common law with regard to the liability of the owner of a dog in a case of this kind. I must say that I do not think the statute deals very intelligibly with the matter. I have no doubt that the intention of the Legislature was to abrogate the law laid down by the House of Lords in Fleming v. Orr (2 Macq. 14), and to make the owner of the dog liable on proof of its being the cause of the mischief, whether there be proof of fault on his part or not, but certainly that is not very satisfactorily declared by the statute." We should say now, taking the statute and the case of Burton v. Moorhead together, the owner of a dog would be liable for injury caused by its worrying sheep simply upon proof that it was the cause of the mischief. Burton's case is to the effect that if the owner has knowledge of the vicious propensity of the animal he is liable for any damage it may afterwards cause. The statute makes it unnecessary to prove any previous vicious propensity, and of course any knowledge of vicious propensity. It is not necessary to prove knowledge of a propensity which may be non-existent, and yet its non-existence would not free the owner from liability.

"The Dogs Act, 1871," makes for the protection of the public certain regulations as to stray and dangerous dogs. Any police officer or constable may take possession of any dog he has reason to suppose to be savage or dangerous straying on any highway, and not under the control of any person and may detain it until the owner has claimed it and paid all expenses incurred by reason of such detention. When any such dog has been detained for three days where the owner is not known, or five where he is known, without claiming it, and paying all expenses incurred by its detention, the chief officer of police of the district where the dog was found may cause the dog to be sold or destroyed (sec. 1). Any court of summary jurisdiction may take cognizance of a complaint that a dog is dangerous and not kept under proper control, and if it appears to the Court that such dog is dangerous, the Court may make a summary order directing the dog to be kept by the owner under proper control or destroyed. Any person failing to comply with such order is liable in a penalty of £1 for every day during which he fails to comply with such order (sec. 2).

The General Turnpike Act (1 & 2 Will. IV., c. 45) provides (sec. 97) a penalty not exceeding £5 if the driver of any cart, waggon, or other such carriage on a turnpike road allows to go at large any dog that may be attending him or his waggon, cart, or other such carriage, or shall not chain or fasten the same to such waggon, cart, or carriage.—Journal of Jurisprudence.

THE CONTRACT OF SALE BY A MAKER.

It is seldom that a question of general application in mercantile law, but little involved in special facts, and remarkable for a divergence of judicial opinion in England and Scotland, awaits the decision of the House of Lords, as in the case of Johnson v. Raylton, reported in the December number of the Law Journal Reports. The general question is, whether a manufacturer of goods, not, on the one hand, of well-known reputation in their manufacture, but, on the other, not being a dealer in the goods, who enters into a contract for the sale of such goods, is bound to supply goods of his own manufacture. On this question Courts are divided against Courts, and judges against their fellows. The decision of the Court of Appeal in England is that there is an implied contract by the manufacturer to supply his own goods; the decision of the Court of Session in Scotland is recorded to the contrary. Among the judges of the English Court, Lord Justice Bramwell agrees with the decision of the Scotch Court, but is overruled by his colleagues. Among the judges of the Court of Session, Lord Young agrees with the decision of the English Court; but his view is in its turn overruled by that of the majority. So that we have the English Court and the Scotch Court opposed to one another, but each with a dissentient judge upholding the view respectively held across the Border. Add to this, we have Mr. Justice Manisty, from whom the appeal came, of the same opinion as the dissentient minority of the Court that overrules him.

It is necessary, for the full understanding of the case, that the special facts in Johnson v. Raylton should be given, although but little, in the opinion of the judges holding opposite views, turns on the facts. The plaintiffs, as must be carefully borne in mind all through, were the vendors of the goods suing for damages for non-acceptance, and the defendants were the purchasers who declined to accept. Messrs. Johnson, the plaintiffs, were a firm of iron manufacturers of Stockton-on-Tees, who were not dealers except that they sold their own manufactures; and Messrs. Raylton, the defendants, were ship-builders at Middlesborough. The contract, which was on a printed form furnished by the plaintiffs and signed by both parties, provided that the plaintiffs should supply the defendants, and the defendants take 2,000 tons of iron ship-plates of "Crown" quality to pass Lloyd's survey at so much a ton to be delivered by instalments within a certain time. The contract was headed the "Moor Iron Works," and had the plaintiffs' trade-mark on the margin, and there was a clause providing that "in case of strikes or combination of workmen, or accidents causing a stoppage of the works, the supplies of iron now contracted for may be suspended during their continuance; this clause applies to buyers and sellers." Premising that the plaintiffs, after supplying certain of the plates, closed their works and proposed to complete the contract by supplying plates of other manufacturers equal to contract, but that the defendants declined to accept them, we propose to deal first with the special terms in the contract. None of the three judges in the Court of Appeal lay very great stress on any of these terms. Lord Justice Bramwell claims the strike clause as "strongly showing that it was not necessary that the articles to be supplied should be of the plaintiffs' make." "If," he argues, "the manufacturer is stopped by strikes, the delivery by the plaintiffs may be suspended; this seems to contemplate that it will not necessarily be so, which can only be if the articles might be made by some other maker." Lord Justice Cotton makes the clause harmonise with his view that the plates were to be of the plaintiffs' make by pointing out "that, notwithstanding the stoppage of the works, the manufacturers might have plates of their own make which they could supply." Lord Justice Brett, again, who, in taking the same view of the case made with Lord Justice Cotton, the majority of the Court says, that "upon a strike at the plaintiffs' works they might exercise their discretion whether they would procure other workmen and continue the work under the contract, or stop." No doubt a manufacturer, whose workmen strike, is not invariably obliged to suspend his works; and, because a contract contemplates the supply of plates notwithstanding strikes, it does not necessarily follow that plates made by some one else are contemplated. But that is not this contract. The strike clause in this case only applies to combinations or accidents causing a stoppage of the works; and it is very remarkable that, even when the works are closed, the contract still reserves an option to the seller to continue the supply. With regard to the other special matters in the contract the view taken by the learned judges seems to be that they tell neither one way nor the other. Lords Justices Bramwell and Cotton consider it unnecessary to refer to any other special matter in the contract; and Lord Justice Brett only does so to show that they have no material bearing. He is of opinion that "the heading of the order is a part of the contract, and imports an obligation on the plaintiffs that the iron plates should bear their mark or brand." This declaration is, of course, merely arguendo; but it will strike the reader as a somewhat extreme inference from the mere appearance of a trade-mark on the paper containing a contract that the goods bought must be so stamped. But Lord Justice Brett, no doubt, saw the original, and drew the inference on the view that the trade-mark was not there as a mere ornament or advertisement, but for a distinct purpose. The trade-mark evidently made considerable impression on his mind, because he explains away its bearing on the case elaborately, and, in order to do so, departs from the main issue to almost a risky extent. He says that he knows no law which prohibits a manufacturer from effacing another manufacturer's mark and substituting his own or adding his own. This question would seem to depend largely upon the character of the mark. The Lord Justice's observation cannot have been meant to apply to a mark well known as showing that the goods were made by a certain firm. For instance, if Bass & Co., agreed to sell beer, they would hardly be justified in taking Ind & Coope's beer and putting their label on it. If the mark is a trade-mark in the strictest sense, meaning merely that the goods have passed through the hands of a particular dealer, probably the law would be as stated. The appearance of the trade-mark cannot, however, have borne a very deep significance, or Lord Justice Bramwell would have referred to it, and it may be dismissed notwithstanding some doubtful points in Lord Justice Brett's reasoning upon it. The learned Lord Justice dismisses the clause as to satisfying Lloyd's survey as equally neutral in its bearing on the question, and proceeds to develop his own view on the main question.

Before considering the opinions of the judges on the points of difference between them, it will be as well to state the points on which they agree both as being valuable for instruction on these points, and as tending to make the others intelligible. Lord Justice Bramwell admits that the manufacturer whose goods have a special repute in the market, and who sells goods of that class, is bound to supply goods of his own make. He instances Erard's or Collard's pianos, and adds, "so, perhaps of clothes from a renowned tailor." If a man orders a suit of clothes at Poole's, he expects to have them of Poole's cut and make, and Poole knows that such is his expectation—an aggregatio mentium probably sufficient to constitute an agreement. The "probably" might with a good conscience, be omitted if the illustration passed from tailors to hatters; as a man who orders a hat from Lincoln & Bennett would clearly be entitled to the workmanship of the firm with its name inside. Lord Justice Colton traces the same principle in the rule that a picture ordered of an artist must be the artist's own work; and no doubt the principles are analogous. Lord Justice Brett, with some impatience of distinctions, uses the admission of Lord Justice Bramwell as a lever for his own argument. He says: "If the manufacturer does not propose different prices for goods manufactured by himself, as distinguished from goods not so manufactured, I can see no reason why, unless the implication is to be made in all cases, it is to be made in the given cases." But the strong argument put forward by Lord Justice Brett is ad inconvenientiam. He says, in effect, that the buyer relies on the reputation of the manufacturer for the quality of the goods; and, unless there is implied a stipulation that the goods are manufactured or to be manufactured by the seller, the buyer has no protection but that the goods shall be merchantable, and that they shall be reasonably fit for the required purpose. "If," continues the Lord Justice, pursuing the same argument, "there is no such contract as is suggested, a manufacturer, under the stated circumstances, may supply goods not manufactured by himself—inferior to his own usual manufacture, inferior to the usual manufacture of the person from whom he has purchased, inferior to the usual standard of manufacture by other manufacturers of similar goods." To this Lord Justice Bramwell would reply in the words of his judgment, "We must look at what the parties have said, add nothing to and take nothing from it, without necessity." The answer of all who disagree with Lord Justice Brett will be that he is arranging the matter very conveniently for all parties; but still he is doing it for them, and not interpreting them. The learned Lord Justice further relies, as the basis of the implication which he suggests, on the fact that the plaintiff holds himself out as a selling manufacturer of goods, and not otherwise a dealer in the goods. "Such a holding out and such a reliance," he sums up, "make a contract, or a term in a contract that the goods supplied shall be of the manufacture of the manufacturer." The only holding out of which there appears to have been evidence was contained within the four corners of the contract.

The argument of Lord Justice Bramwell may be very briefly stated. He asks, is the proposition with reference to goods of a peculiar make applicable to goods of which one maker's make is as good as another's? and he declines to introduce so large an implication into the law of contracts. The proposition certainly seems a very extensive one. Because the seller is known to the buyer only as a manufacturer, he is entitled to reject goods made by any other manufacturer. The proposition would be true of all producers as well as manufacturers. The farmer in the country finds his cows run dry; and although he buys of his neighbour, and sends forward milk equal to the quality stipulated for, the milkman in London may reject it. Terms in contracts may well be implied when there is an absolute necessity for them, such as that goods shall be merchantable, and fit for the purpose in question. But to imply them without absolute necessity seems bad legal policy, and tends to an artificial state of law. The question which the House of Lords will have to decide is, whether a plain man, reading through the contract in question, and knowing as much as the purchasers did, would assume that both vendors and purchasers intended that the plates should be made by the vendors. We are inclined to think, on the whole, that the implication is not so natural or inevitable but that the House of Lords will be disinclined to draw it.—Law Journal.

THE GUTEAU TRIAL.

Some of the papers that have commented upon Mr. Scoville and his conduct in the Guiteau case, have altogether misrepresented him as a man and the motives which induced him to appear in the case. Mr. Scoville has been a member of the Chicago Bar for nearly thirty years, and although not an eloquent advocate or criminal lawyer, he has been regarded as a lawyer of marked ability, excellent judgment, sound integrity, and untiring industry. The members of the Bar have always considered him an able associate and a dangerous opponent in a case. He has had a long and varied experience at our Bar. Heavy and important interests have been submitted to his care. Mr. Scoville has been wealthy, but, like many others in our city, became involved in real estate transactions and lost his property at the time of the panic, and but a few years ago had to pass through the Bankruptcy Court. He has now, outside of his practice, but very limited means. Word came to Mr. Scoville that our lamented President Garfield, without cause or provocation, had been shot down by Guiteau, the brother of his own wife. He tells a few confidential friends that from the conduct of Guiteau for years he is sure that he was insane, and that he feels it to be his duty, if no one else will undertake the task, to see that the defence of insanity is interposed, and to assist any eminent criminal lawyer that may be obtained to defend Guiteau. With this end in view he hastens to Washington, and after repeated appeals he fails to obtain the aid of a single member of the American Bar. In a strange city, with no fortune at his command, single handed and alone, he undertakes the defence, laying aside technicalities, and placing it on the ground of insanity. The members of the Bar who have watched the course of Mr. Scoville cannot but admire the ability he has displayed in conducting the defence thus far, under the most trying circumstances. He has controlled himself, avoided any exhibition of temper, or doing anything that should injure the prisoner or his cause. His candour has impressed the jury that he himself is honest in urging the plea of insanity. Whatever may be the result of this trial—whether Guiteau shall be hung or found insane—the members of the Bar will commend the self-sacrifice of Mr. Scoville, and his manly independence in standing up and insisting, against the united cry of an injured nation, that the slayer of its beloved President shall have a fair trial.—Chicago Legal News.

We have watched with interest the course of Mr.

Spoville. He has exhibited such fearlessness in the discharge of a disagreeable duty, a duty devolved upon him, both as a lawyer and a man, that we are glad to have the opportunity of encouraging him in his thankless labours, and of tendering to him the acknowledgment due him from the profession to which he belongs. The enormity of Guiteau's crime does not excuse the members of the Bar for their cowardice in refusing the assistance Spoville requested.—Pacific Coast Law Journal.

ILLEGAL LOTTERIES.

The case of Christison v. M'Brice (Oct. 25, 19 S. L. R. 19) has raised the question, if question it can now be called, of the legality of lotteries. It is one of considerable public interest in connexion with the ever-increasing number of bazaar and charity fairs which are held. Lord Young referred to the instructions which Crown authorities receive to put a stop to lotteries. They feel no little difficulty in doing this, and at the same time countenancing, or at all events tolerating, bazaars. A legal official is sometimes invited to open such a bazaar by a speech in which he must express every wish for the success of the proceedings to follow, while his wife or sister is perhaps busily engaged in scouring tickets for a raffle, and he himself in all probability will proceed to afford active assistance. And yet upon the following day the fiscal may report that a serious breach of the law has been committed by means of some lottery.

It seems on all hands agreed that the holders of lotteries and raffles shall not in the ordinary case be punished for their offence. They are, in fact, winked at, except in some glaring case which it is feared may lead to a corruption of the public morals. Raffles for religious and charitable purposes are certainly looked upon very favourably by officers of the law. Indeed, except where there is some outbreak of sectarian spite, no objection is ever raised against them. Such outbreaks, however, occasionally take place. The Roman Catholics are peculiarly fond of lotteries. They are for ever attracting Protestants with the chance of winning a pony carriage and pair of ponies, offered in the interests of some "Little Sisters," or some other order of devotees. Then the keen scent of the Scottish Reformation Society is roused, and a letter from their secretary reaches the Lord Advocate, who politely answers to the effect that lotteries are distinctly illegal. But the ponies continue to be raffled for all the same. The machinery of the law seems to get out of working order when it is used for the suppression of lotteries.

The lottery in M'Brice's case was one of a kind well-known amongst the lower orders. A trotting pony was to be sold in the interests apparently not of any saintly community, but of Charles M'Brice, residing in Edinburgh. The mode adopted was by a subscription sale on the Art Union principle, or in other words, by a lottery. William Christison purchased a ticket, which proved to be the winning one, but upon application M'Brice refused to deliver up the pony. Hence an action in the Sheriff Court of Edinburgh, when the defender took the plea that as lotteries were illegal, the petition ought to be dismissed. After a proof (why evidence should have been led does not appear) the Sheriff-Substitute sustained this plea. In his interlocutor he found "(1) that lotteries are illegal and pacta illicita, except when expressly declared legal by statute; (2) that the transaction on which the pursuer's claim is founded is not within any such statutory exception." Upon appeal this judgment was affirmed, although Lord Young remarked, "I do not entertain any opinion on the question whether a lottery for pictures or a pony is illegal in the sense of punishable, or that it is competent to put a stop to such by interdict as contra bonos mores. I know that there are various opinions on this question, and therefore in giving my opinion here against this lottery I merely give it to this extent, that an action founded on it as medium concludendi cannot be sustained here or in the Sheriff Court."

Lord Young does not say that such a contract is illegal under any statute, he seems to have rather gone upon the principle that the Courts of law are not intended for the disposal of disputes of such a character, but at the same time he expresses his approval of the Sheriff-Substitute's judgment. The latter founded upon 42 Geo. III., c. 119. It seems doubtful, however, whether this statute applies to Scotland. But the later Acts (6 & 7 Will. IV., c. 66, 8 & 9 Vict., c. 74) do, and would appear to render all such lotteries illegal.

The pursuer founded upon the cases of Graham (Feb. 5, 1848, 10 D. 646) and Caldar (July 20, 1871, 9 Macph. 1074). The first of these cases related to a coursing match, the second to a horse race, and they raise a nice distinction between deciding which dog or horse has won, and settling disputes concerning the prizes after the events have come off. Thus in Graham's case the learned judges seem clearly of opinion that they could not have decided upon Violet's claims as the winner, but she having admittedly won, they were warranted in determining who was to benefit by her success. But, as is pointed out by the Sheriff-Substitute, Christison could not set up these cases as authorities in his favour, because of the element of illegality which distinguishes a lottery from a coursing match or race. Even if the fact of his being the holder of the winning number had been admitted, the pactum illicitum out of which his claim arose acted as a bar to the success of his petition.

The law upon this subject of lotteries is evidently in a most unsatisfactory condition. It is doubtful whether all the benevolent ladies and gentlemen who take part in raffles are not liable to be dealt with as vagabonds. A special Act of Parliament has exempted those who take part in Art Unions from the pains and penalties to which they may have rendered themselves liable as persons "concerned in lotteries, little goes, and unlawful games." Why not exempt the promoters of charity fairs, who at present violate the law right and left, with impunity to themselves, doubtless, in so far as penalties go, but at the risk of a serious injury to their morals?—Journal of Jurisprudence.

THE SLANDER OF A PERSON IN HIS CALLING.

(Continued from page 9, ante.)

Any other rule would be likely to work hardship in individual cases, as it would take away a person's remedy for a false accusation as his branches of business multiplied.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(2) I. H. was the proprietor of a building in which pugilistic exhibitions were conducted—such exhibitions being illegal. He brought an action against B. for libelling him in his vocation. Held, that he could not recover.<sup>1</sup> II. D. was a "canasser doctor," but was neither a regular physician or surgeon, nor licensed to practise as required by the laws of the State. M. charged him with having killed a woman, and with malpractice. Held, that D. could not maintain an action unless the words charged him with having committed an offence involving moral turpitude or subjecting him to an infamous punishment.<sup>2</sup> III. In an action by M., a manufacturer of bitters, against C., for charging that his bitters were made to adulterate porter, C. offered to prove that M.'s trade was illegal, and that his bitters had been condemned in the Court of Exchequer. Held, admissible.<sup>3</sup> C. said of D. that he was a quack, an impostor, and an unqualified person. D. was at the time unlawfully carrying on the practice of medicine. Held, not actionable.<sup>4</sup>

This branch of the rule rests upon the ground of other actions which are barred on account of the illegality, sometimes of the object, sometimes of the transactions out of which they grow—viz., that of

(1) Hunt v. Bell, 1 Bing. 1 (1822).

(2) March v. Davidson, 9 Palg. 581 (1842).

(3) Maanning v. Clement, 7 Bing. 362.

(4) Collins v. Cornwallis, 1 A. & E. 695 (1834).

discouraging illegal occupations by refusing the aid of the courts when invoked, even remotely, in their behalf.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(e) I. H. said of C.: "He is a runagate rogue, and worse than a rogue." H. alleged that he used the art of buying and selling, and gained great profit thereby. The words were adjudged not actionable, for "the plaintiff does not show what was the trade he used. It might be a tinker or a pedlar, who travel up and down the country, and are rogues by the statute of Elizabeth."<sup>1</sup> II. M. was a stock-jobber, and L. said of him: "M. is a lame duck." Lord Eldon sustained a demurrer to the declaration, because it did not show to which of the two species of stock-jobbers M. belonged—that prohibited by the statutes or that allowed by law.<sup>2</sup> III. F. was the manager of an Italian opera company which gave performances at the Astor Opera House in New York during the season of 1858. He sued B., the proprietor of the New York Herald, for a criticism on the performances which amounted to a libel. It was held not necessary that F. should aver and prove that he was duly licensed to give operatic representations as required by statute.<sup>3</sup>

This is but a branch of the more general axiom that fraud or crime will not be presumed in the absence of any facts or circumstances to support such a presumption. Cases I. and II. are irreconcilable with this principle, and are overruled by the later American adjudications of which case III. is an example.

RULE III.—Though a party engaged in an illegal occupation cannot maintain any action for slanderous words directed against him in that occupation, yet if the words concern him as an individual, or in another and legal occupation, an action will lie.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

I. Y. was appointed by the members of a revolutionary government in Chili to negotiate a loan for it. C. charged him with saddling the government of Chili with a large debt for his own benefit. An action by Y. against C. was sustained.<sup>4</sup> II. A. was the owner of race-horses which he ran on the turf. He had entered a horse for the Derby stakes, but before the race, on account of his lameness, he was withdrawn. B. charged A. with entering the horse, and afterwards withdrawing him for the purpose of getting an unfair advantage over parties with whom he had heavy wagers on the result of the race. Held, that A. could recover.<sup>5</sup> III. C. was a merchant, and having entered a cargo of rum at the custom-house, delivered it to the storekeeper the next day for warehousing; paid the duties on it the following day, taking it on an order two days later. By mistake, a wrong receipt was given to him, which, on his subsequently applying to withdraw the goods, called for double duties. He thereupon presented the true facts to the storekeeper, who corrected the receipt, when he paid the ordinary duties on the goods, and was given a permit to withdraw them. This was subsequently revoked by the collector, and C. paid double duties under protest. G., referring to the transaction, charged that C. had fraudulently induced the storekeeper to alter the receipt, and that he was devoid of commercial honour. Held, that an action would lie.<sup>6</sup>

RULE IV.—The complainant must have carried on the occupation concerning which the slanderous words were spoken (a) at the time they were spoken; but (b) a person once shown to have followed a certain calling is presumed to continue therein until the contrary is shown, (c) provided it be a trade or calling within the meaning of Rule II.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) I. A. had been treasurer of a Masonic lodge. H. said of him, that he had robbed the lodge; but at the time of the slander the lodge had ceased to exist. Held, not actionable.<sup>7</sup> II. W. and J. were partners in a mercantile business. In August, 1837, they sold out to O., intending thereafter to go into business again, but did not do so. In January, 1868, O. said of them: "They have sold out; they are not worth fifty cents no the dollar." Held, not actionable.<sup>8</sup> III. H. was a co-partner in trade of C. After the partnership had come to an end, and H. had gone out of business, B. said of him: "He has got money out of C." Held, not actionable.<sup>9</sup>

(b) I. T. was a linen-draper, and M. said of him: "You are bankrupt, and not worth a groat." T. alleged in his declaration that he had exercised the art of a

(1) "If the conduct of the plaintiff," said Bigelow, C.J., "in connection with the transaction to which the publication relates was open to comment and criticism, for the reason that he participated in acts which were contrary to law, and in consequence thereof no action can be maintained for a libellous publication which relates solely to the plaintiff's connexion with such unlawful acts; nevertheless, there is a limit beyond which such immunity from liability for defamatory words cannot be carried. Unless the matters set forth in a declaration are of a nature which indicates that the plaintiff's acts and conduct in connexion therewith necessarily involved moral turpitude, or might fairly be held to affect his general character in any particular, a publication which held a party up to contempt and reproach as wanting in integrity, or as otherwise culpable in his general conduct or character, would be actionable, although it might also relate to the plaintiff's participation in an illegal transaction. A person does not necessarily forfeit all legal claim to protection against defamatory matter affecting his character, because he has been guilty of a single illegal act. Now, although the plaintiff acting on certain facts, and in conformity to what he supposed to be the law and usage in similar cases, may have committed a violation of law, or participated in the illegal act of another, it by no means follows that his general character for commercial integrity and fair dealing was thereby forfeited, or so far affected, that he could not maintain an action for a publication which held him up to the public as wanting in the qualities and characteristics of a merchant of integrity and honour. Such, we think, was the fair import of a portion of the written words which are set forth in the declaration. For the publication of these, this action can be maintained, although it may be also true that it appears from the declaration that the publication referred to the Plaintiff's conduct in a transaction which was unlawful." Chesney v. Goodrich, 98 Mass. 224 (1867).

(2) Allen v. Hoffman, 12 Pick. 100 (1837).

(3) Windsor v. Osner, 41 Gr. 565 (1873). There must therefore be an allegation that the plaintiff was, at the time of the slander, exercising such calling: Dicken v. Shepherd, 399 (1864); or something from which this presumption will arise. See post.

The old case of Gardner v. Rapwood, Yelv. 159 (1608), is cited by Mr. Townshend to sustain the proposition that a person who has once been a merchant, and goes out of business, still remains a merchant; and as he may at any time resume his business at his pleasure, to slander him in that business, even during that interim, is actionable per se Townshend on Slander and Libel, 291. But this plainly conflicts with all the cases under this rule, and is not the law. See especially Harris v. Burley, 3 N. H. 216 (1856).

(4) "In this case," said Richardson, C.J., "the words laid in the declaration are not actionable in themselves, unless the plaintiff was a trader at the time of speaking the words. In order to maintain the action, then it was necessary to prove that the plaintiff was a trader. And the question is, whether it was sufficient to prove that trading had been the business of the plaintiff previously, although he was not actually in trade at the time. In the case of Walden v. Mitchell, 2 Ventril, 265, the Chief Justice said that where a man had been in an office of trust, to say that he had behaved himself corruptly in it, as it imported great scandal, so it might prevent his coming into that or the like office again, and therefore was actionable. But this is denied to be law by Lord Chief Justice De Gray in Onslow v. Horns, 3 Wils. 188, who says that he knows of no case, wherever an action for words was grounded upon eventual damages, which may possibly happen to a man in a future situation. . . . And from the very nature of the case, what possible damage could the words laid in this action do the plaintiff as a trader, when at the time they were spoken he was not in trade? The reason why words imputing fraud in his dealings to a trader are actionable in themselves is because, from the nature of the case, the imputation must have a tendency to affect his business as a trader. But here the plaintiff had no business as a trader to be affected." Harris v. Burley, 3 N. H. 216 (1856).

(1) Cochran v. Hopkins, 2 Lev. 214 (1677).

(2) Morris v. Langdale, 2 Bea. & Pal. 287 (1800).

(3) Fry v. Bennett, 38 N. Y. 394.

(4) "I have no hesitation," said Best, C.J., "in acceding to the proposition that the transaction was illegal. No foreigner has a right to do as this plaintiff has acted without the permission of our Government, because such a transaction might have involved us in a war with Spain. . . . If that which is charged as being a libel had consisted merely of observations as to the extreme absurdity and illegality of such transactions, though such observations had been couched in the strongest terms, yet if they were expressed honestly, I should have no hesitation in saying that the action could not be maintained; but it goes beyond that, and imputes to the plaintiff the commission of a moral fraud; and for such an imputation I am of opinion that he is entitled to recover." Yvesani v. Clement, 9 C. & P. 223 (1828).

(5) "The objection to his right of suing from being engaged in horse-racing," said Lord Denman, C.J., "appears on the record; but in truth it is wholly groundless. For even if running a race without fraud were altogether prohibited by the law, still the party infringing its provisions would not thereby be deprived of all protection to his character in other matters connected with the transaction; but, moreover, the fact of engaging in a horse-race is not in itself an illegal act." Groville v. Chapman, 1 D. & M. 338 (1844).

linen-draper in the city for five years past. Held, sufficient.<sup>1</sup> II. M. was an attorney. S. said of him: "He took corruptly five marks of B. T., being against his own client, for putting off and delaying an assize against him;" and after a verdict "exception was taken against the declaration, for that the plaintiff did not expressly allege that at the time of speaking the words he was an attorney, but laid it that he had been an attorney. The Court held that the words would bear action."<sup>2</sup> III. C. alleged that he had used "per magnum tempus" the trade of buying and selling cattle, and that M. said of him: "Thou art a bankrupt." But "because he did not say that he used the trade at the time of speaking the words, but per magnum tempus usus fuit, which may be divers years before, and the action lies not, unless at the time of speaking the words he used the trade of buying and selling of cattle, and, therefore, it was adjudged for the defendant."<sup>3</sup> IV. J. brought an action for false charges made against him in his occupation of an attorney. A statute required that a certificate should be annually taken out by every attorney, without which they were unable to recover fees, and rendered themselves liable to a penalty if they attempted to practice. J. had not taken out his annual certificate. Held, that this did not affect his right to sue for a libel.<sup>4</sup>

(c) B. spoke of C. certain words imputing that on a former occasion, while the lessee of certain tolls, he had been a defaulter. At the time of the speaking he was not a lessee of tolls, but was about to again become so. Held, that the action would not lie.<sup>5</sup>

(To be continued.)

LAND COMMISSION VALUATORS.

The following letter has been published in the Times:—

"SIR,—Your readers are already aware of the appointment of Mr. Grey as Chief Valuator to the Court of the Land Commission, with a salary of £1,000 per annum and one guinea per diem for expenses, his appointment being made for a certain number of years—I believe seven certain. But people in England are not acquainted with a fact which is notorious, though not officially published in this country, that during the last few days overtures have been made on the part of the Government to some of the best known and most efficient valuers in Ireland for the purpose of securing their services as assistants to Mr. Grey. These gentlemen were willing, I understand, to accept those appoint-

(1) "The second error on which they insisted was that the declaration is not good, because it is not laid precisely that at the time of speaking the words the plaintiff was a linen-draper, but only for the space of five years past. To which Velvinton answered, that there is a difference between slanders of one in respect of an office and in respect of a trade or profession. For if a man says of a justice of the peace that he is a briber, &c., he must show, in an action for these words, expressly in his declaration, that he was a justice of the peace at the time of the words spoke, because they sound in slander of his person in respect of his office only, which office continues during the king's pleasure only, being by commission. But where a man is slandered in his profession or trade, there it need not precisely be alleged that at the time of the words spoken he was a lawyer, physician, merchant, or linen-draper; but it is sufficient to show that he is of such a trade, and has exercised it for several years past, without saying ultimo or jam elapsi; for a man shall not be intended to alter his trade or profession, but by presumption he continues it during his life. Quod nulli etiam concessum per curiam. Quod nota and the judgment was affirmed." Tutill v. Milton, Yelv. 159 (1610); Garryner v. Hopwood, id. 159 (1596); Jordan v. Lyster, Cro. Eliz. 275 (1592). In Dotter v. Ford, Cro. Eliz. 794 (1610), the question was whether, by alleging that he used the trade of a merchant per multos annos jam retroactos, it could be presumed that the plaintiff was a merchant at the time the words were spoken. "And the court seemed to doubt thereof, because it is not precisely alleged; for it may be he used that trade for a long time, and left it afterwards. Wherefore they would advise thereof."

(2) Smayles v. Smith, Brownl. 1 (1817).

(3) Collis v. Main, Cro. Car. 282 (1632).

(4) Jones v. Stevens, 11 Price, 236 (1822).

(5) Parke, B. "How does it appear that the plaintiff was going to become a renter of other tolls. Tutill v. Milton, Yelv. 159, goes on the presumption of the plaintiff's continuing in trade as a linen-draper. A presumption is a continuing thing but contracting to become a lessee of tolls is not a profession, and the habit of taking tolls is nothing. Nor is a taking of tolls as lessee an office." Alderson, B. "The effect of slanderous words spoken of a man in his trade is to render him less able to carry on that trade; but words spoken of a man's conduct as to a past contract do not affect or injure his future conduct of another." Bellamy v. Burch, 16 M. & W. 590 (1847).

ments, and their employment would have been some guarantee of a desire on the part of the Government to amend the effects of that unforeseen administration of the Land Act, which must have taken even its promoters by surprise.

"It is perfectly clear that if fair and equal justice is to be done, the highest talents in the several branches of knowledge required and the most irreproachable reputations for probity and impartiality must be secured. But talent in a valuator or lawyer means experience; experience, a practice; and no man who enjoys the last can, in his own interest, desert it unless an adequate inducement is held out to him to do so. It is because this axiom has been or is likely, according to rumour, to be disregarded that the Irish public is to be deprived of the services of these gentlemen. The terms stated to have been offered them were absolutely inadequate—the salary paltry enough, the tenure for nothing more than one year. It is absurd to imagine that any competent man will give up a position in which he is earning a steady and substantial income to serve the Government at a loss, and that for just so long a time as it will take for his practice to leave him and be permanently secured by others in his profession. The consequence will be, if Her Majesty's Government still persists in attempting to deal with the enormous interests at stake "on the cheap," that these appointments will be deliberately allowed to fall into the hands of second or third rate men, and the senior Commissioners will be deprived of that highly qualified assistance which they appear to have sought, and which the litigants in their courts have a clear right to expect.

"I therefore venture to address you, before it is too late, so as to impress upon yourself and the English public, in the name of that fair and impartial justice which has been so often invoked by the Prime Minister, the absolute necessity, too long overlooked, of endowing those appointments with no niggardly hand. The securing of the most competent experts, in the case of valuers and any other appointments under the Act, may ultimately lead in some measure to the realization of the expectations of its promoters, and so tend to the benefit of all parties concerned. Surely, if money is the sole difficulty, the present absurdly low scale of stamps on suitors in the Land Court could be readily increased.

"I am, sir, your obedient servant,

"DONOUGHMORE.

"Lincoln-place, Dublin."

NEW BARRISTERS.

The following gentlemen will be called to the Bar on Wednesday next:—

Michael Feely M'Grenahan, Esq., youngest son of William M'Grenahan, of Barr, Omagh, in the county of Tyrone, Esq.

Edward O'Farrell, Esq., B.A., University of Dublin, third son of Michael Richard O'Farrell, of Pembroke-road, in the County of Dublin, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

William Charles Hennessy, Esq., only son of William M. Hennessy, of Pembroke-road, in the County of Dublin, Esq. Certificate signed by Henry Brougham Leach, Esq.

Henry Evans Austin, Esq., B.A., LL.B., University of Dublin, eldest son of Thomas Kingston Austin, of Talbot Lodge, Stillorgan, in the County of Dublin, Esq., J.P.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

(Continued from page 10, ante.)

The Friendly Societies Act, 1875, s. 16, sub-s. e.

Where the trustees of a friendly society advanced money to non-members on personal security, contrary to section 16, sub-section e of the Act, held that no claim could be enforced against the borrower in respect thereof (In re Colman, Colman v. Colman, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 721).

Robson on Bankruptcy (4th Edition), 555.

Sections 6 and 11 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, are distinct: and an adjudication, founded on an act of bankruptcy committed within six months of the presentation of the petition, will be upheld, though the act of bankruptcy was committed more than twelve months before the adjudication (In re Grepe, ex parte Grepe, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 723).

(To be continued.)

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Bergeant Hemphill, Q.C., has been elected a Bencher of the Hon. Society of the King's Inns.

Mr. John Given, M.P., solicitor, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the county Tyrone.

Mr. Virgil Power, Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed Crown Prosecutor, Northern Supreme Court, Queensland.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Hints on Advocacy. Conduct of Cases, Civil and Criminal; Classes of Witnesses, and Suggestions for Cross-Examining them, &c., &c. By RICHARD HARRIS, Barrister-at-Law, of the Middle Temple and Midland Circuit. Sixth Edition (further revised and enlarged). London: Stevens & Sons, 119, Chancery-lane, Law Publishers and Booksellers. 1882.

A Concise Exposition of the New Conveyancing Act: with Practical Hints. By ARTHUR UNDERHILL, LL.D., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, author of "A Concise Treatise on the Law of Trusts and Trustees," &c. London: Richard Amer, Law Publisher, Bookseller and Binder, Lincoln's Inn-gate, Carey-street, W.C. 1882.

LAW STUDENT'S JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION FOR APPRENTICES TO SOLICITORS,

Pursuant to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (Ireland), 1866.

DUBLIN, HILARY SITTINGS, 1882.

[Every answer is to be accompanied by reasons concisely stated.]

ENGLISH HISTORY.

1. What was the occasion and what the history of the impost called "Danegelt"?
2. From what does Bury St. Edmund's derive its name?
3. Who was heir to the throne on the death of William II., and how did William's successor seek to establish his authority?
4. Give some account of the English Conquest of Wales.
5. The House of Stuart is said to have been peculiarly unfortunate. Mention some of the circumstances which justify this statement.
6. Name some of the great men who flourished in the reign of Queen Anne.
7. Give some account of the struggle in which the battle of Sherriemuir took place.
8. State what you know respecting the Drapiers letters.
9. Give some account of the campaign which resulted in the conquest of Canada.
10. What were the principal provisions of the treaty which ended the seven years war?

11. Mention some of the battles, with their results, which took place in the American war of independence.
12. For what events in the history of Ireland was the year 1782 remarkable.

GEOGRAPHY.

1. In what direction and in what proportion do the degrees of longitude become shorter? How is longitude found at sea?
2. What are the the "trade winds"? Explain how they are caused, and where and in what direction they blow.
3. Give a description of the most remarkable desert in the world. Where is the great Salt Desert? Why so called?
4. Describe the great Equatorial Current. Why do the Polar Currents, as they approach the Equatorial parts of the earth, take a westerly direction?
5. What are the chief towns of the following counties—Warwickshire, Suffolk, Hampshire, Essex, Devonshire?
6. Name in order the principal headlands between Belfast Lough and Waterford Harbour.
7. Over what countries and islands does the equator pass?
8. What are the great rivers of Asia and North America which discharge their waters into the Arctic Ocean?
9. What are the boundaries and the principal lakes of Switzerland?
10. Where are Cape Finisterre, Grahamstown, Canton, the Nahe, Gulf of Lepante, Harleur, Medina, Quito?

ARITHMETIC.

1. What is the price of 277 cwt. 2 qrs. 25 lbs. at £3 8s. 3d. per cwt.?
2. Reduce 7s. 9d. to the decimal of a pound.
3. If 3½ shares in a mine cost £11 5s. what will 26½ shares cost?
4. If the price of stock be 90 per cent. how much can be purchased for £3,112 10s.
5. A bankrupt owes £1,078—his assets are £370 18s. 5½d., what will be the dividend on £78 10s.
6. What is the interest of £1,928 15s. for two years and eight months at 3½ per cent. per annum?

BOOKKEEPING.

1. What are the general rules for balancing the ledger? Illustrate by an example how a ledger is posted and how balanced?
2. What are "real" accounts?
3. What is a "trial balance"?
4. What entry is made in the journal in the following cases:—
  - a. When cash is received in payment of a personal account?
  - b. When a bill of exchange is paid?
5. Open a cash account, enter the following transactions, and balance the account:

	£	s.	d.
Jan. 2nd, Cash in hand, . . .	254	8	7
" 3rd, Paid H. Brown's account, . . .	27	6	5
" " Paid for goods, . . .	45	4	8
" " Received of John Brown, . . .	18	6	5
" 4th, Paid my acceptance of H. Smith's draft, . . .	78	9	2
" " R. Jones paid to my account at bank, . . .	59	18	11
" " Paid Thomas Smith, . . .	48	8	9
" " John White paid me, . . .	35	4	8

The Council of Legal Education of the Inns of Court, London, have awarded a studentship of 200 guineas to Mr. W. Baxter, of the Inner Temple, and of King's Inns, Dublin, in Jurisprudence, Roman Law, and International Law.

COURT PAPERS.
HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.
CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

List of Petitions presented to the Land Judges in the month of December, 1881.

DATE	TITLE OF MATTER	OBJECT OF PETITION	COUNTY	PROFIT RENT	SOLICITOR
Dec. 1	Henry George Henderson, owner; National Assurance Company of Ireland, petitioners	Sale	Co. Dublin	£ s. d. In owner's possession	H. S. Watson
" "	William Thompson and others, owners and petitioners	Sale	Town of Belfast	592 10 0	Charles Higginson
" "	Charles B. Jennings, owner; John E. Chapman, petitioner	Sale	Mayo	Not stated	Meade and Colles
" "	James Neylan, owner; Sylvester Neylan and another, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Co. Clare	Not stated	O'Callaghan Mullins
" 5	James Martin, owner; Bank of Ireland, petitioners	Sale	City and Co. Dublin	Not stated	E. H. DeMoleyns
" "	James W. B. Murray and others, owners; Thomas Carey, petitioner	Sale	Longford and Donegal	92 11 7 58 14 6	Thomas McClelland
" "	Frederick R. M. Reade, owner and peti- tioner	Receiver and sale	Co. Kilkenny	1,250 16 0	James and P. Roe
" 6	Assignees Rev. Joseph Bradshaw, owners; Isaac Andrews, petitioner	Sale and receiver	Down	Not stated	O. C. Nelson
" "	John A. Browne, owner; Ellen Watson, petitioner	Sale and receiver	Galway	807 15 0	G. D. Fottrell and Son
" 7	Margaret H. H. Bride, owner; Annie P. Carr, petitioner	Sale	King's Co.	758 15 8	Meade and Colles
" "	James O'Donnell, owner; Andrew Jameson, petitioner	Sale	Mayo	5 5 0 Valuation	Hamilton and Craig
" 8	Robert L. Hunt, owner; Edward J. Hawker and another, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Co. Tipperary	458 18 8	Whitney and Armstrong
" "	Administratrix of Edward Wyles, owner; Royal Bank of Ireland, petitioners	Sale	City Dublin	282 8 0	Orpen, Sons, and Sweeney
" 13	George C. Deane, owner; Thomas Curtis and others, petitioners	Receiver and sale	City Dublin	49 0 0 Griffith's Valuation	William Neilson and Son
" 16	Nathaniel Maguire, owner; Eldred T. Pottinger and another, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Co. Cavan	232 10 7	William Roche and Sons
" "	James Lancaster Bell, owner and petitioner	Sale	Armagh	150 10 8	Robert Macredy
" 19	Ellen Mary Daroy, owner; Patriotic Assurance Company of Ireland, petitioners	Receiver and sale	County Roscommon	65 15 0 Griffith's Valuation	Cathcart and Hemphill
" "	Alfred Beamiah and others, owners and petitioners	Sale	Cork	Not stated	Babington and Babington
" "	John C. Graham and others, owners; Robert M'Mullin, petitioner	Sale	Town of Belfast	Not stated	Alexander M'Mullen
" "	Alfred Beamiah and others, owners and petitioners	Sale	Co. Cork	1,496 1 9	Babington and Babington
" "	Trustee of Anne Levinge, owner and peti- tioner	Sale	Meath	865 12 6	Arthur Ellis
" "	William Crosbie Harvey, owner and peti- tioner	Sale	Wexford	777 0 0	Samuel Boswell
" 20	Trustee of Robert M'Quiston, owner and petitioner	Sale	Belfast	187 10 0	Henry Milford
" "	J. W. Rexworthy Brooks, owner; Frederick Twining, petitioner	Sale	Mayo	8,000 0 0 Estimated value	Thomas Crozier and Son
" "	John Toole, owner; Frederick A. Barlow and another, petitioners	Sale	Dublin	Not stated	Barlow and Orr
" 22	Henry Arthur Bell, owner; Maria Bell, petitioner	Sale	Antrim	Not stated	H. and W. Seeds
" "	Assignees of Charles Hodson, owners; Edward Roper and others, petitioners	Receiver and sale	County Roscommon & City Dublin	460 5 6	Alexander D. Kennedy
" 28	Robert Alison Tennent and another, owners; John M'Canoe, petitioner	Sale	County Tyrone	316 15 8	Henry Milford
" "	Henry James MacFarlane, owner; George H. Lyster, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Co. Monaghan	Not stated	George H. Lyster
" 24	Richard Hart, owner; John Mulholland and others, petitioners	Sale and receiver	Limerick	1,087 5 5	S. S. and E. Reeves

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.
Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—W. J. Totten, allocata.—Trustees R. D. King, do.—M. Donnelly, ditto.
IN COURT.—M. Horgan, objection.—C. H. Morton, receiver.—G. A. Nicolla, do.—T. H. Crofts, as to absolute order.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

C. Mc'Gowan, vouch.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—J. Robinson, final schedule.—W. O'Brien, do.—M. J. Weld, do.—W. Mathers, do.—P. Callan, do.—D. Craig, do.—A. H. Goff, do.—R. L. Watson, discharge receiver.

WEDNESDAY.

IN COURT.—W. Butler, as to title.—E. G. Holt, payment.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

R. KAMES, . . . . 1 lot.
Trustees J. M. WILLIAMS, . . . . 8 lots.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. Elliott, rental.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—W. Hackett, explain delay.
IN COURT.—J. Murphy, carriage.—L. O. Weir, receiver.—W. Petrie, to amend order.—F. O'Neill, final schedule.—J. Morgan, adjourned motion.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

M. R. Dalway, rental.

TUESDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

T. R. . . . . 1 lot.
Trustees Reilly, judgment.—E. Davis, ditto.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

A. Carolin, rental.—A. Mulholland, vouch.—M. Hall, rental.—J. O'Donnell, vouch.—C. Taylor, for deeds.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—Rev. W. Delany, judgment.—De Montmorency, adjourned motion.—T. J. Nolan, ditto.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

D. P. M'Carthy, rental.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.
Cooper, Elizabeth, of Nos. 40 and 41, Kildare-street, in the city Dublin, manufacturer of and dealer in bog oak ornaments, widow. December 28, 1881; Friday, January 27, and Tuesday, February 14. John L. and W. Scallan, solrs.
Connor, James, of Maghera, in the county of Londonderry, flax dealer. January 8; Friday, January 27, and Tuesday, February 14. John L. and W. Scallan, solrs.
Goodman, John, of Warrenpoint, in the county of Down, draper. December 23, 1881; Friday, January 27, and Tuesday, February 14. Armstrong & Johnston, solrs.
Hardie, David, of Laraghbeg, Ballyglunin, in the county of Galway, farmer. January 8; Friday, January 27, and Tuesday, February 14. Richard Davoren, solr.
O'Donnell, James, of Ballaghaderen, in the county of Mayo, shopkeeper. January 8; Friday, January 2., and Tuesday, February 14. John Mathews, solr.
Taylor, Andrew, of Craigaodes and Tyroneil, St. Johnstown, in the county of Donegal, farmer. December 24, 1881; Friday, January 27, and Tuesday, February 14. John L. and W. Scallan, solrs.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	JANUARY
	Sat. 7	Mon. 9	Tues. 10	Wed. 11	Thur. 12	Fri. 13
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	100½	—	—	99½	100½	—
— 3 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— New 3 p c Stock ..	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½
INDIA STOCK.
— 4 p c Oct. '88 } Trouble at } Bk. of Irel	—	104	104½	—	103½	—
BANKS.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	311½	311½	—	311½	311½	—
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	41½	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and County ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and Westminster ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
31 Munster Bank (Limited) ..	7½	7½	—	7½	—	7½
30 National Bank ..	—	—	23½	23½	23½	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	—	56	—
20 Do. do. New 1867 ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Standard of B. & A., Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15½ Union of London ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British & Irish ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Dublin & Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co.	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance & Dub. Cons.' Gas Do.	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott & Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	6½	—	—
6 Dub. (8th) City Market Co.	—	—	—	5½	—	—
8 Goulding & Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	8½
4 National Discount, Ire., Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	1½	4½
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	—	11½	11	11
10 Leeds Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 L'pl Un'd'd Tram & Bus Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	11½	—
Railways.
10 Athlery and Tuam ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and Northern Cos.	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	—	—	—	107½	—
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	—	81½	81
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast & Nth'n Cos., 4 p c Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	109½	—	—	—
100 Gt. Nth'n (Ireland) g'd 4 p c Do., 3½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	102½	—
100 Do., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Watfd. & Limerick, 4 p c Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	102	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast & Co. Down, 4 p c ..	—	—	102½	—	—	—
— Belfast & Nth'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Cork and Bandon, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin & Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c Do., 4½ p c ..	—	109	109	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n & West'n 4½ p c — Gt. South'n & West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	109	—
— L'derry & Enniskillen 5 p c — Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	106½	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	108½	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
Belfast Office Deb., £97 6s 2d, 4 p c 94	—	—	—	—	—	—
City Deb. of £97 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	92½	—
Dub. Port & Docks, 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
(1888) Rathm. & Pem.M. Drain, 4 p c Do. Defd. of £97 6s 2d 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	100½

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d
Bank Rate—Of Discount—3½ per cent., 6th November, 1879.
Of Deposit—1 per cent., 10th April, 1878.
Name Days—January 26th, and February 14th, 1882.
Account Days—January 27th, and February 15th, 1882.
Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—During every break of wintry weather exertions should be made by the afflicted to recover health before unremitting cold and trying storms set in. Throat ailments, coughs, wheezings, asthmatical affections, shortness of breath, morning nausea, and accumulations of phlegm can readily be removed by rubbing this fine derivative Ointment twice a day upon the chest and neck. Holloway's treatment is strongly recommended with the view of giving immediate ease, preventing prospective danger, and effecting permanent relief. These all-important ends his Ointment and Pills can accomplish, and will surely prevent insidious diseases from fastening on the constitution to display themselves afterwards in those disastrous forms that will probably embitter life: till death itself is almost prayed for.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES. AND DEATHS.

MARRIAGES.

O'MEARA and PURCELL—December 8, 1881, at the Jesuits' Church, Calcutta, Thomas Francis O'Meara, Esq., C.E., Resident Engineer, Oude and Bohilcond Railway, Chandoud, North West Provinces, to Katie, youngest daughter of the late Bryan Purcell, Esq., solicitor, Kilrush, County Clara.

PARKER and HARRICKS—January 5, at Trinity Church, Rathmines, by the Rev. J. G. Darleton, Alexander Montgomery, fifth son of the late John Parker, Esq., solicitor, of Fitzwilliam-street, to Henrietta, fifth daughter of the late William Brabazon Harricks, Esq., of Onagh, Powerscourt, County Wicklow.

DEATHS.

BEATTY—January 10, at Herbert-place, after a long illness, Edward Frederick son of the late Frederick Beatty, Esq., barrister-at-law, formerly of Lake Park, County Wicklow, aged 37 years.

BRADSHAW—January 6, at Morehampton-road, Donnybrook, John Bradshaw, Esq., solicitor, aged 85 years.

TOBIAS—January 8, at Strand-road, Sandymount, after a very brief illness, James eldest son of Matthew Tobias, Esq., solicitor, and grandson of Rev. James Tobias, aged 74 years.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET. 8:7

NOTICE OF REMOVAL:

NOTICE—MR. VALENTINE DUNN, Solicitor, has removed his Offices to No. 88, MIDDLE ABBEY-STREET. 3

WANTS:

PARTNERSHIP WANTED.

A JUNIOR SOLICITOR having a good connexion wishes to treat with a Dublin Solicitor of standing with a view to purchasing a Partnership. Address—X. Y., Office of this Paper. 8

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO., LIMITED.

SECURITY, &c.
RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 959

THE GUARANTEE SOCIETY OF LONDON,

Empowered by Special Act of Parliament—Session of 1842.

For providing Security for Parties in Situations of Trust. WM. G. DU BEDAT & SONS (Agents for Ireland.

Also Agents to the Liverpool, London, and Globe Fire and Life Insurance Company).

Government Stock and Sharebrokers,
1 and 2, FOSTER-PLACE, DUBLIN. 812

PUBLIC NOTICES:

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES and INVESTIGATIONS

CONDUCTED BY

MR. THOMAS DEANE,

17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange).

Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.
Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.
References.

ESTABLISHED 1878. 167

STOKES BROTHERS,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN. 293

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES &amp; CO.,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

73, DAME-STREET, late of 11, ESSEX BRIDGE,
Are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK—

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts. The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

31st March, 1880. 523

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FARMHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane. 523

THE SIMPLEX PRINTER

Will take 50 or more Copies of any Writing or Drawing in Violet, Green, Blue-Black, or Red, in 7-8 minutes, and, unlike the great number of "Gravure" now before the Public, it does not require washing or remelting, but when the desired number of copies have been taken the remaining ink will sink into the plate, leaving the surface clear and ready for another. It is clean in use, and, having a raised level surface, presents a great advantage for using roller and raising a copy to be taken in the copying book.

Prices—8vo, 5s.; 4to, 9s.; cap. 11s.; folio, 16s.

GERRARD BROTHERS,
AGENTS FOR THE SIMPLEX PRINTER,
37, STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 188

HOUSES TO BE LET OR SOLD.

Lists on application free of charge.

No charge for placing Houses on our Books.

Inventories taken on behalf of Tenant and Landlord.

Auction conducted.

Rents collected on reasonable terms.

Mortgages promptly negotiated.

GRAHAM AND CO.,

HOUSE AND LAND AGENTS,

202, GREAT BRUNSWICK-STREET, DUBLIN. 189

D. W. CARROLL,

44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,

Wishes to call attention to his large

STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,

Direct in every instance from the Makers

They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of

LEATHER GOODS,

Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-

randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,

With every article connected with Stationery,

Are Sold much under usual charges. 193

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW

WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK FOR STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens; it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and is, consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 5s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each. 581

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old

Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

BOOKBINDING } of every description executed by

JOHN FALCONER,

63, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

SPECIAL FORMS UNDER THE LAND ACT.

BOOKS FOR ENTERING ORIGINATING NOTICES WITH INDEXES.

Made up as follows :—

1	Quire Book for entering 1,600 Names, with Index, price	6s.
2	" " " 3,000 " " "	9s.
3	" " " 5,000 " " "	12s.
5	" " " 8,000 " " "	17s. 6d.

- a. Questions to be answered by Tenant to sustain Claim, 4 Pages . 2d. each.
  - b. Affidavit of Service of Originating Notice, with Schedule (No. 27) 1d. "
  - c. Form of Valuation to be used by Landlords . . . . . 1d. "
  - d. Instructions to Tenants how to prepare for the Land Court . 1d. "
  - e. Affidavit by Land Agent for verification by Witness to the signatures of the submission to Arbitration (No. 57) . . . 1d. "
  - f. Form of Affidavit by Solicitor . . . . . 1d. "
  - g. Original Notice requiring Particulars of Tenant's Claim . . 1d. "
  - i. Appointment of Solicitor . . . . . 1d. "
  - { k. Valuator's Report . . . . . 2d. "
  - { l. Statement on behalf of Landlord . . . . . 2d. "
  - m. Land Case Form, for Landlord's, Tenant's, and General Statements . . . . . 3d. "
  - n. Form of Agreement fixing Fair Rent, and providing, pursuant to sec. 5, sub-sec. 5, for the reservation of Landlord's exclusive right of Shooting, &c. (No. 33) . . . . . 1d. "
- N.B.—The additional provision has been approved by the Commissioners on application of a Landlord's Solicitor,
- o. Notice to be served by Landlord's Solicitor requiring Particulars, in pursuance of Rule 99 . . . . . 1d. "
  - p. Notice Form requiring Particulars . . . . . 1d. "
  - q. Form of Order, giving Landlord liberty to effect Service on Tenant of Notice, pursuant to Rule 82 . . . . . 1d. "
  - r. Notices of Sale of Farms—Service in Prescribed Districts . 1d. "
  - s. Form of Rental . . . . . 1d. "
  - t. Explanatory Schedule of Acreages in Notices, Agreements, and on Survey and Valuation ; also Rental and Tenement Valuation 3d. "
  - u. Advances to enable Tenants to purchase from Landlord—Second Schedule to be annexed to Applications 50, 51, or 53 . . . 3d. "
- Other Forms in preparation.

M'Dermot's Land Acts, 1881, 1870, and 1860, Second Edition, price 10s.

"His Introduction is a most careful and correct résumé of the law, and his INDEX IS ONE OF THE MOST COPIOUS AND LUCID WE HAVE EVER SEEN TO ANY TEXT-BOOK."—Freeman.

JOHN FALCONER, 53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

TO INVESTORS.

Rarely now-a-days have the general public an opportunity of investing in a "bond fide" British Metallic Mineral undertaking, except through the auspices of "Stock Exchanges," or through some one or two of its many members. When we name the general public, we mean such of the public as are unacquainted with the chicanery and legalised gambling practised at the above-named institutions, and not the monetary speculators who are the very bane of private investment. Occasionally, however, such an opportunity is given "through the medium of the Press," the genuineness of which cannot be questioned, especially as intending investors can for a few shillings see for themselves, and obtain such information as will satisfy the most sceptical. This must surely be far preferable to those golden undertakings that are now almost daily placed before the public, the situation of which is in some almost inaccessible region of the globe.

That British Mining of every description is the very acme of rapid fortunes, has been proved beyond the possibility of doubt; of course, we allude only to those genuine undertakings proved to be such by the actual discoveries of the mineral sought for, "and not to those merely speculative properties that often take years to develop, such are only fit for the speculators above named." We need scarcely remark that our assertions can at once be proved by hundreds of cases, many of which border on the verge of incredibility or romance, but which, nevertheless, are sterling facts. Cornwall and our Principality (both North and South Wales) abound with such true tales that make them ideal "fairy lands." We say true tales, and will just give two to illustrate our assertions.

"A few years ago a party of gentlemen formed themselves into a Company, purchased the mineral interests of a plot of ground situated in Tavistock, Devonshire, and called themselves 'The Devon Great Consolidated Mining Company,' divided into one thousand and twenty-four shares of ten pounds each, paying only one instalment of £1 per share.

"With the capital thus raised they commenced exploring, with the following results 'taken from statistics now before us,' that up to the close of the year 1870 each share (upon which only £1 had been paid) had reached the almost fabulous sum of £1,149—the shares having been sold during the time at over £1,000 each. Here is an instance of, shall we say good luck? But is it a solitary instance? No, far from it, therefore luck is quite out of the question, as will be seen further on."

"The 'South Caradon,' whose mines are situated on the Caradon Hill, in Cornwall, were set in operation by a small uninfluential proprietary, and before twelve months had elapsed vast discoveries had been made by which this Company became at once a splendid prize, and has ever since been yielding enormous profits, amounting in all up to the year 1876 to £734 per share, the first cost of which was only twenty-five shillings per share."

The Registered Offices of the Company are situated at Manchester, Messrs. YELVERTON, AITCHESON, & CO., 7, Queen-street, Westminster, S.W., are the Agents to whom application for Prospectuses, Shares, &c., should be made.

These undertakings can only be equalled by Mr. Ma-kay's Silver Mine in America, whose income, according to a paragraph in the daily papers of a few days ago, is some three million pounds sterling derived solely from his mines.

Our Principality is, according to the "Geological Survey," almost one entire mass of mineral, either lead, coal, iron or copper, besides many of the other inferior metals.

Halken Mountain and Holway Mountain are extraordinarily prolific in these metals, and the immense fortunes that have been and are now derived therefrom cannot be questioned. Witness the Duke of Westminster, Sir Piers Mostyn, and other noblemen and gentlemen. We will name a few of the mines that are now in active operation whose shares have made numerous handsome fortunes for those who had the confidence to take an interest therein, such as the Van, Minera, Hendra, North Hendra, Prince Patrick, Holway, West Holway, and Gorsedd and Merilyn. It is by taking a first interest when the Company is promoted that fortunes are made, and not when twenty or thirty pounds have to be paid for "one pound shares."

With the foregoing remarks we now draw the attention of our readers to a venture in North Wales that has all the characteristics of a sterling undertaking, and one that, "reports in the neighbourhood of the mines state," will be the nucleus of future great riches to those who invest therein.

From the prospectus issued, the Company is composed of 20,000 shares of £1 each, fully paid up. Without going further into the matter, we strongly advise those of our readers desiring a good sound investment to at once take an interest in the Mostyn Consols Silver Lead Mining Company, Limited, the shares of which offer such an inducement to the investor as very rarely occurs.

The extent of the Mines are considerably over one hundred acres, upon which some three or four shafts have been sunk, all of which at the shallow depth of about twenty-five or thirty yards are proved to be in ore-bearing ground. Here then is a certainty, and speculation ceases.

These Mines are fully reported upon by that well-known Mining Engineer, Mr. Goodman Ellis, of the North Hendra Mines, Mold, whose statements are corroborated by the "Duke of Westminster's" Mineral Agent, John Lloyd, Esq.

The Company have put down the most improved Machinery for washing and dressing the ores, and have already erected a splendid Engine (made by the eminent firm of Marshall, Sons, & Co., Limited, of Gainsborough) for winding and Pumping. Here is a property of undoubted value and rich discoveries already made, with high-class machinery employed, showing that the energy of the Directors is tending to make a lasting Mine, and the interest of the Shareholders will undoubtedly prosper; as the Shares are now officially quoted at 35s. to 40s. each, we see no reason why the Shares of the Company may not at any moment quadruple in value.

THE MOSTYN CONSOLS SILVER LEAD MINING COMPANY, LIMITED.

Shares £1 each, Payable on Application.

Messrs. Yelverton & Co. beg respectfully to inform their Clients and the Public in general that they have a few Shares for disposal of the above Company, and to state that they have personally inspected the Mines, and from their position, both geologically and physically, they find that the same well-known lodes traverse this property as the adjoining Gorsedd and Merilyn Mines. So productive are these lodes that the latter Company were enabled to dispose of 450 tons of ore in a few months, and there cannot be the slightest doubt but that the Mostyn Consols pr. perty will yield as much, if not more, than its sister mines.

Messrs. Y. & Co. also consider the Mostyn Consols second to none in the neighbourhood, and they fully expect the Shares to advance 100 per cent. from the present quotation.

They strongly advise their Clients and Friends to take at once a good stake therein.

Application for Shares to be addressed to Messrs. YELVERTON, AITCHESON, & CO., Consulting and Mining Engineers, Mineral Assayers, Stock Brokers, &c., 7, Queen-street, Westminster, London, S.W.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1882.

No. 782

REPORTS OF DECISIONS UNDER LAND LAW ACT, 1881.

WHILE there are no "official" reports of the decisions of the Land Commission, it must be acknowledged that no detriment has been suffered in consequence. The public have been exceptionally well catered for by the press, and the legal profession has found the IRISH LAW TIMES, as usual, adequate to the emergency. In the last two months of the old year alone, no less than half a hundred decisions under the Land Law Act, 1881, appeared in our pages; and the IRISH LAW TIMES REPORTS for the present year, of which the first issue appears to-day, will be found to supply additional exemplification of the abundant energy devoted by private enterprise to the undertaking of placing permanent and authentic records of those decisions within the command of all.

In the preface to his able work on the Irish Land Acts, Mr. Assistant Commissioner MacDevitt observes: "As he proceeded with his task, the author felt how much the profession and the people of Ireland generally owe the IRISH LAW TIMES for the reports of the decisions on the Land Act of 1870." And writing to us in 1876, Mr. Assistant Commissioner MacCarthy remarked: "Your Journal is the best thing we support, and its learning, spirit, and refinement are creditable to us all." How many such generous and spontaneous testimonies, including that of Mr. Justice O'Hagan, in Spaight v. Ir. Ch. Temp. Com., might we not accumulate if needs were (see note to page 1 of the Reports in present issue).

But, it is more to our present purpose to state that, while thus encouraged by such high approbation, new and yet more strenuous efforts shall be made to merit it still more in the current year, and in particular the decisions under the recent Land Law Act shall command our unceasing vigilance. For the privilege of having our reports of such cases judicially authenticated and revised, we can, indeed, render no better return than a grateful and diligent attention to the exigencies of the Bench and the profession. By issuing a larger number of reports when necessary from week to week, and producing them with the greatest possible promptitude, combined with fulness and accuracy, those exigencies can alone be supplied; and we trust that our efforts in this direction will meet with encouragement from those who were present to Miss Fanny Parnell's poetic imagination, when she described the Act of 1881 as passed "To gorge the suckers of the lawyer swarm."

With respect to the land cases in our present issue, it is hardly necessary to point out the grave practical importance of Adams v. Dunseath. Smith v. Colley decides a question on which the Sub-Commissions are already at variance—a question affecting the rights of many thousand tenants to avail themselves of the beneficial operation of the Act, without first evicting many thousands of sub-tenants; while the decision on another question would go to show that in a large number of cases, where the Sub-Commissioners have themselves made independent valuations, they have acted ultra vires. And we should think that the cases on town-parks will be studied with interest, in connexion with the three papers we recently published on the subject; while, in seeking to reconcile McGowan v. Clements especially with Dunne v. Clarke (15 Ir. L. T. Rep. 123), some difficulty will doubtless be experienced, which will hardly be much alleviated by construing the very words of the judgments delivered as if they were statutes of the realm—a process to which the learned and acute Assistant-Commissioners seem to have been driven in applying or differentiating the previous adjudications.

RETENTION OF JUDGMENT-DEBTS BY TOWN AGENT FOR DEBTS DUE FROM COUNTRY SOLICITORS.

WE had recently occasion (15 Ir. L. T. 465, 474) to discuss the nature and effect of the solicitor's right to a charging lien on moneys of his client, and it was not without a feeling of satisfaction, very far removed from mere idle vanity, that we subsequently found our commentary reproduced in several legal serials, even in Australia and America. A different question now presents itself as to the nature of the lien of a country solicitor's town agent, and his powers as to retaining judgment-debts and costs, recovered and coming into their hands—a question which has just been the subject of appeal in England, in the case of Ex parte Edwards, reported in the Law Times of the 14th inst.

The facts were as follows:—A country solicitor having instructed his town agent to sue for a debt, a writ was issued by the town agent, and judgment was recovered; the country solicitor then instructed his agent to issue a writ of fi. fa. for the amount of the judgment-debt and costs, which he did, and subsequently received same, from the sheriff, as being the solicitor on the record. At the time of his receiving the money, the country solicitor was indebted to him for costs incurred as his town agent (including the sum of £8.10s. 9d., the amount of agency charges in the action), in a sum equal to or exceeding the amount so received. The country solicitor had no lien on the money recovered as against his client, who owed him nothing. But the town agent claimed to retain the whole amount received, as against the debt due to him from the country solicitor. The plaintiff, accordingly, applied to the Queen's Bench Division for an order directing him to pay over the money to her.

On the question coming before Field and Manisty, J.J. (7 Q. B. D. 155, 45 L. T. N. S. 211, 50 L. J. Q. B. 541) the matter was referred to the Master, who reported, inter alia, as follows:—"I find the general practice between country solicitors and their town agents to be that when the writ of execution is issued by the town agent the town agent receives the proceeds of such execution on behalf of the country solicitor; that the town agent is not entitled to retain any debt or any part of a debt so recovered; that he has a lien upon and is entitled to retain the costs so recovered for any costs that may be owing to him by the country solicitor on his general agency account; that the London agent is entitled to the same lien as and no greater lien than the country solicitor, and therefore if the country solicitor could not retain the debt recovered as aforesaid against his client, so neither can the London agent retain it." But, even supposing this to be indisputably the practice, there remained the further question, whether or not the Court, in the exercise of its summary jurisdiction over its own officers, could make an order to compel the town agent of the country solicitor to pay over the money to the plaintiff, with whom, it was contended, he was in no privity. There being no privity of contract between them, an action would not lie: Robbins v. Fennell, 11 Q. B. 248, 17 L. J. Q. B. 17; Robbins v. Heath, 11 Q. B. 257; and neither, it was contended, should summary jurisdiction be exercised in the absence of fraud: see Re Lord, 2 Scott, 131. But, if this were the state of the law, certainly it is not too much to say that the most disastrous consequences to suitors might result, as, for instance, where a country solicitor was hopelessly insolvent, and a debt of large amount due to his client had been reserved by his town agent. But, fortunately, in Robbins v. Heath (ubi supra) the application, which had been made to the summary jurisdiction of the Court, was granted, on the ground that the retention of the money by the town agents, for the purpose of paying a debt due to themselves by the country solicitor, was an improper application of it; and a like application was found to have been granted in Hanley v. Cassam, 10 L. T. Rep. O. S. 189, 11 Jur. 1088, where there was no suggestion of fraud. Both in reason and according to precedent, therefore, there was abundant ground for declining to be hampered by the rule as to privity that would have been fatal to an action at law; and, as Lord Tenterden said in Ex parte Bayley, Re Harper, 9 B. & C. 691, the jurisdiction of the Court over solicitors "ought to be exercised according to law and conscience, and not by any technical rules." "Of course," said Manisty, J., "if the country solicitor had any claim upon the debt, by way of lien or otherwise, it would be protected; but, in the absence of any such claim, it seems to us that it would be contrary to equity and conscience to permit the London agent to pay himself out of the client's money any amount of debt which may be due to him by the country solicitor."

The application having been granted, accordingly, might well have been treated as finally disposed of; but, especially considering that Re Lord (ubi supra), which had not been cited, might still have been cited hereafter as against the authority of the present case, it is satisfactory that it was taken to the Court of Appeal (45 L. T. N. S. 578). "The town agent cannot keep the money which belongs to the plaintiff, unless the country solicitor has a lien as against the plaintiff to a greater amount than the sum which the town agent has received, but when there is no such claim the town agent is bound to hand over the money he has received," said Jessel, M.R.; and he added, "where the jurisdiction is to be exercised it must be a case in which the solicitor has acted as such, and must raise a question with regard to his professional conduct, but there need not be any fraud or misconduct." "The case of Re Lord," said Brett, L.J., "was relied upon in support of the appellant's contention. There the Court said, 'Unless a case of gross fraud be made out, and it is made to appear that some precise and beneficial object is attainable by a motion like the present, it will not be entertained.' The whole meaning of that is that where the jurisdiction is prayed on the ground of alleged fraud, the Court will not act unless the fraud is clearly made out"—an ingenious gloss. "But in a case like this," he added, "where the solicitor clearly has notice because he brings the action for Miss Edwards, I think it is clear that he ought to be ordered to pay it over." Cotton, L.J., said, "I agree with Brett, L.J., that there is no imputation of fraud, but I think we have jurisdiction to interfere though no fraud is shown. Here the writ in the action was issued by Mr. Johnson (the town agent), as appears from the endorsement, so he must have known that the money when recovered belonged to Miss Edwards, and under such circumstances it is the duty of the Court to interfere against its own officer. If the country solicitor had a lien as against the client, that would make a difference, but this is not the case here."

The passages we have italicised appear to qualify the decision as to the power of applying to the summary jurisdiction of the court in an important respect, and we have thought it right to give them the greater emphasis as no allusion, whether as to the special facts in point or their consequence, appears in the headnote; while, as to the question with respect to the town agent's right of lien and its extent, the practice found to have existed must more or less specialise the case, and should be taken into consideration when collating the ordinary statements made in the books: see Marshall on Costs, 460; Stokes on Liens of Attorneys, 179, et seq.; and as to a town agent's lien as against his principal, see the recent Canadian case of Re A. B. & C., 14 Can. L. J. N. S. 142, and cases there cited.

THE HOUSEHOLDER'S FRANCHISE—I.

BARON FITZGERALD has long enjoyed the reputation amongst the élite of the Irish Bar of being the most logical of our Judges. In those degenerate and shallow times, if a cynic were asked what was the mental quality most conspicuous for its absence, we think he would unhesitatingly reply, the vis logica. Indeed to the lazy or ignorant close reasoning would sometimes appear, forsooth, mere pedantry. To entertain such an opinion, however, is merely to confound casuistry with logic in its high and true sense. Logic, in its high and true sense, is not only in accordance with common sense—the sensus communis of mankind—but is at one with those immutable principles and unerring lines which have guided and led the human mind to truth. Not for the first time has Baron Fitzgerald been the sole dissident from many judicial voices, and not for the first time has that single voice pronounced what has been subsequently proved by the highest tribunals to be the absolute law of the land.

It is, therefore, with extreme pleasure that we now place on record our belief that the arguments and the reasoning on which Baron Fitzgerald's judgment was based as to the meaning of the term "lodger," as used in the Representation of the People (Ireland) Act, 1868, arising in the well-known Irish case of Edwards v. Lang, 3 Ir. L. T. 740, 1 R. & L. A. Ap. 34, although differing from the opinions of the other four Judges sitting, was entirely correct, and in harmony with the unanimous judgment of the Court of Appeal in England, presided over by Sir George Jessel, in the three important cases of Bradly v. Baylis, Morfee v. Norris, and Kirby v. Biffen, decided on appeal on the 21st of December last, and fully reported in the Times of the 22nd of the same month.

For the sake of clearness, we think it advisable to place before our readers forthwith the principal questions of fact and of law involved in the decisions, and also to point out the difference existing at present in the language of the English and Irish Statutes

And, first, as to the questions of fact and of law: Take the case of a house, the apartments in which are not structurally severed—that is, are not separated by any outer doors, such as in the Inns of Court, the Commercial Buildings, Trinity College, and the like, but are merely entered by ordinary doors, such as exist in any ordinary house.

Taking such an ordinary house, let us deal with it under the following conditions:—

Firstly, view a case where the landlord of such a house resides in part of it, and lets the rest of it to various persons—letting each person a separate room, but not letting the passages or staircases, through and over which he merely gives them the right of ingress and egress. Is the person living in a separate room in such a house, under such conditions, a lodger or the occupier of a house? It may now be considered as law that he is a lodger. Nor would it seem that the possession of a latch-key would make any difference; nor the absence of the landlord, if his servants remained in the house; nor the execution of repairs by the landlord.

Secondly, view a case where the landlord does not reside, nor do any of his servants reside in such a house, but where the landlord has let all the rooms in the house to different persons, not, however, expressly demising the staircases and passages, but merely leaving to the tenants the right of ingress and egress by implication. In such a case what would be the legal status of each separate occupier of a room? The law is now finally settled that such a person, living under such conditions, is the occupier of a house and not a lodger, and, as such occupier, would be entitled to be separately rated (in Ireland) and thus acquire the franchise as a householder. We shall see that, by force of recent statutes in England, a separate rating would be unnecessary, and also that by virtue of section 5 of Dilke's Act—41 & 42 Vict., c. 26—"Dwelling-house" is specially defined to "include any part of a house, where that part is separately occupied as a dwelling."

In our next article, in continuation of this subject, we shall attempt to show that by implication "dwelling-house" in Ireland may mean part of a house, although of course the occupier of such part must get rated in order to acquire the franchise.

THE KING'S INNS LIBRARIANSHIP.

THE office of Librarian to the Hon. Society of the King's Inns having become vacant, it is stated that no less than 114 candidates presented themselves for the post. For our own part, we do not know the name of a single one of the applicants except the gentleman who has been appointed, but we presume it may be taken as correct that there was such a considerable competition. Notwithstanding such an amount of rivalry, Mr. James MacIvor has succeeded in outstripping all his opponents; and, in our opinion, no better selection could possibly be made. Unquestionably, he was a highly distinguished student of the University of Dublin. On entering, from Portora Royal School, in 1862, he took the second place, the first having been taken by Mr. Thomas H. Carson, of the English Bar, the learned editor of the last edition of Shelford's Real Property Statutes. And during his course, we find that he obtained quite a profusion of collegiate honours—amongst others, First Royal Scholarship (1862); Classical Scholarship (1864);

First Rank Honors in Classics; a Senior Moderatorship and Gold Medal in Logics and Ethics (1866); besides prizes in Arabic (1865), and Civil Law (1866), &c. He possesses a knowledge of six languages besides his own; and though not pretending to be a second Magliabechi, his qualifications for the position of Librarian, even in a repository of such extensive resources as the King's Inns, seem to be exceptionally excellent, while his refined literary tastes will make his task a "labour of love." Mr. MacIvor was called to the bar in Hilary Term, 1871, and joined the North-West Circuit. And we need hardly say that it gives us extreme satisfaction to find that the Benchers have not found it necessary to advance any but a member of the profession to the post of Librarian. It is no sinecure, but doubtless some leisure hours its present able occupant will enjoy, and we trust that he may be yet induced to occupy them by some literary undertaking; for as Isaac D'Israeli has it, "To pass much of our time amid such vast resources, that man must indeed be not more animated than a leaden Mercury, who does not aspire to make some small addition to his library, were it only by a critical catalogue."

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—I.

(From the Law Times.)

In one sense there is no risk in adopting this Act in its entirety, and in excluding none of its provisions, for, by sect. 68 of this Act, a solicitor is expressly freed from any responsibility for taking this course. But although the Act may remove the pecuniary risk, it will not absolve him from the moral responsibility to the client which every upright lawyer will feel. We propose to offer some suggestions as to where the Act may already safely be adopted. In a few years, or even months, when the Act has been tried, and experience has shown the extent of its operations, practitioners will be justified in relying on its provisions more fully. Our remarks, therefore, are limited to the present time and present circumstances. Before using the Act, sect. 2 must be carefully read, as a large number of words are employed in an extended sense. The next section (sect. 3) relates to the first subject with which we propose to deal.

Conditions of Sale.

This section applies in part to all kinds of property (sect. 2, i.), but we propose to discuss now its effect on sales of land (sect. 2, ii.). As conditions of sale are generally drawn by vendors, and as this section is strongly in their favour, they will of course not exclude the Act, but, at the same time, they cannot safely rely on it so as to offer land for sale by open contract without any previous investigation or preparation; though often the investigation may show that special conditions as to title and evidence of title will not now be required, and in most cases the Act will materially reduce their length. In many instances it will be found that conditions which are necessary are not provided by the Act. It should be noticed also that, in many cases, the conditions implied by the Act only take effect "unless the contrary appears," so that, if it is desired absolutely to exclude evidence conflicting with the presumption in favour of the vendor, a special condition must be framed. Thus, the production of the receipt for the last rent due is, by sect. 8 (4), prima facie evidence, on sale of a leasehold, that the covenants of the lease have been performed. If it is intended that the receipt should be "conclusive" evidence, a suitable condition must be inserted.

A number of important matters are not fully provided by the Act or the general law:—(1.) In auction sales, as to highest bidder, reserve price, and advance on, and retraction of, biddings. For form, see Davidson, vol. i. 4th edit. 607; Wolstenholme & Turner, 110. (2.) As to payment of deposit: (David. i. 607; Wolst. & T. 110.)

(3.) Time for delivery of abstract, and for completion. (4.) As to possession, apportionment of rents, and outgoing, payment of interest until completion, and protecting vendor from payment of compensation during delay: (David. i. 613; Wolst. & T. 111.) (5.) As to time for delivery of requisitions, and waiver if not duly delivered: (David. i. 614; Wolst. & T. 111.) (6.) Power to vendor to retire from sale if objection is insisted upon: (David. i. 614; Wolst. & T. 111.) (7.) In case of default on part of purchaser, forfeiture of deposit, power to vendor to resell, and charge defaulting purchaser with loss: (David. i. 615; Wolst. & T. 115.) (8.) Preparation of conveyance at purchaser's expense: (David. i. 612; Wolst. & T. 112.) (9.) In case of sale by trustees, or mortgages, that they will only covenant that they respectively have not incumbered, and as to non-concurrence of beneficiaries: (David. i. 612, 650; Wolst. & T. 123; see Dart, 545.) (10.) As to payment for timber. (David. i. 612; Wolst. & T. 113.) (11.) As to identity of parcels to be sold with those comprised in the deeds, and as to statutory declaration at purchaser's expense being conclusive evidence: (David. i. 610, 625, 678-683; Wolst. & T. 120.) (12.) As to errors not vacating sale, and as to compensation or (as the case may be) non-compensation for errors: (David. i. 611; Wolst. & T. 121.) (13.) In leaseholds, where necessary, making sale subject to landlord's consent, and as to payment of consent fee: (David. i. 626; Wolst. & T. 119.) (14.) That sale is subject to all easements and chief rents affecting the property: (David. i. 611; 646; Wolst. & T. 118.) (15.) As to delivery, or retention, of title deeds, and as to production: (David. i. 618, 621, 718; Wolst. & T. 122.) See, however, Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, and compare remarks in David, vol. i. 589.

It will be found also that not unfrequently conditions, more expressly referring to title and evidence of title, should be made. And (1) as to the commencement of title. In most cases forty years' title will be sufficient (V. & P. Act, 1874, s. 1), though not always—e.g., in the case of an advowson (Dart, 293). When the title commences with a will, a condition may be required to relieve the vendor from proving the seisin of the testator. See Dart, 89 n. 296; Wolst. & T. 2; and for forms, see David. i. 667; Wolst. & T. 115. (2) As to dower and free bench: (David. i. 609; Wolst. & T. 118.) (3) Throwing expense of stamping unstamped or insufficiently stamped documents more than twenty years old on the purchaser: (Wolst. & T. 118.) (4) So also, in Middlesex and Yorkshire, as to unregistered documents twenty years old; and providing that non-registration shall not be an objection to the title: (Wolst. & T. 118; see also V. & P. Act, 1874.) (5) As to property allotted under Inclosure Acts: (David. i. 675, 676; Wolst. & T. 117.) (6) As to getting in outstanding terms: (David. i. 717; Wolst. & T. 116.)

Of course, in this article, we have not attempted to give a complete list of all the conditions which it may be necessary to make, but we give the above as suggesting the more obvious points where the Act may need supplementing. Our view is, that law societies and firms should not throw away their "common form" conditions, and depend solely on the Act; but on the other hand, they should shorten their conditions by omitting those portions for which legislation provides satisfactorily, and that, until this reformation is effected, they should, as vendors, use their old conditions, just as usual, without attempting to exclude the Act.

Conveyances.

By sect. 53 of the Act a considerable saving in length may often be obtained by describing a deed as supplemental to a previous one, instead of reciting the previous one. But it must be remembered that the later deed will give the reader "notice" of the earlier one, without necessarily affording any information as to its contents, which circumstances may, when the earlier one cannot be found or produced, lead to great inconvenience. It may, however, be conveniently adopted in such cases as a further charge to the same mortgagee, and then the supplemental deed may be annexed to the previous mortgage: (Wolst. & T. 76; see for form Ib. 168). It may also be conveniently used for appointments of new trustees: (for form see Wolst. & T. 199). There is evidently a difficulty in using it where the deeds cannot be kept together.

There seems no object in avoiding the use of the word "grant," which is declared unnecessary by sect. 49, but it is not impossible that this section may revive the old prejudices of mortgagees and incumbrancers against that word: (Davidson, i. 74). It is of no consequence except where it implies covenants as in bargains and sales of hereditaments in Yorkshire enrolled, and conveyances under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, by the promoters of the undertaking: (Dart, 568).

By sect. 51 the words "in fee simple," "in tail," &c., may be used instead of the usual words of limitation. These new technical words will sometimes be found more convenient in lengthy settlements than the old. When they are used they should be used in the grant as well as in the habendum. The example of omission from the grant, set by the forms in the schedule, should not be followed. Probably in all ordinary cases, except in the statutory forms, the old technical words will continue in use.

As a rule the "general words" may now safely be omitted (sect. 6). It should be noticed that "mines and minerals" are not mentioned in the general words implied by sect. 6. They should therefore be inserted in those cases where they would have been mentioned before this Act. And any other easement which would have had special mention before the Act, and not have been left to the general words, should still be especially mentioned. This section applies to leases and all kinds of conveyances (sect. 2 v.). It will sometimes be needful expressly to exclude it. See s. 6 (5).

The "all estate" clause (sect. 63) may also safely be omitted. In cases where formerly there would have been express mention of all other the part, share, or estate of a conveying party, such express mention should still be made.

With regard to covenants (sect. 7), it should be carefully noticed that the Act will not imply covenants unless the phraseology required by the Act is used. The party must not only convey as beneficial owner, &c., but he must be expressed to convey as such. In drawing an ordinary conveyance on sale of freeholds, from one person to another person, there is no reason why the purchaser should not use the short expressions required by the statute, and then the covenants for title can be safely omitted. In voluntary conveyances, and in settlements, whatever covenants are desired should be inserted, except in the case of settlements where the limited covenant of Form (E.) meets the objects of the parties. A voluntary settlor, desiring to give vendor's covenants, should not convey as beneficial owner, and thus attempt to incorporate Form (A.), though probably a settlor with a marriage consideration might do so (sect. 2, v.). From (sect. 2, v.) it seems that these covenants will be implied in conveyances under powers, if the appointor is expressed to appoint as beneficial owner (Wolst. & T. 23); but, as doubts have been raised as to this (Clerke & Brett, 46), it will be well at present to insert usual covenants. In the case of conveyances by joint tenants, either the usual covenants should be inserted (for form, see David., vol. ii. part. 1, 4th edit., 359; Dart, 552), or some adaptation will be required (for form, see Wolst. & T. 157). So also, in conveyance by tenant for life and remainderman (see Wolst. & T. 157, and compare David. ii., 317), Messrs. Clerke and Brett think that the implied covenants cannot, in the case of conveyance in fee simple by tenant for life and remainderman in tail, extend to the fee simple (page 46). See David. ii. 253.

In case of conveyance of wife's estate, the usual covenants should be expressed, as the Act does not seem clear: (see Clerke & Brett, 47, and compare Dart, 548, and David. ii. 243, 459). For forms employing the Act, see Wolst. & T. 156. In conveyance by trustees under power of sale, with consent or by direction of tenant for life, either usual covenants should be expressed, or if the Act is relied on, and the trustees are expressed to convey by direction of tenant for life, the latter's covenant should be limited. For forms see Wolst. & T. 156, and compare Dart, 548, and David ii. 262. In a conveyance by tenants in common the statutory covenants may safely be used, if the operative part is properly framed, so that each only conveys his own share: (see David, ii. 260). So, in conveyances to joint tenants, and tenants in common, the statutory covenants may be used: (see David, vol. 1, 117, 118; vol. ii. 421, note).

So far we have considered rather whether a purchaser should employ the covenants of sect. 7. It is a different question whether the vendor should accept them. They slightly enlarge his liability, by precluding all question as to what covenants run with the land, and as to his direct liability to all persons in whom the estate or interest of the implied covenantee is, for the whole or any part thereof, from time to time vested: (sect. 7 (6), and see Wolst. & T. 81). The implied covenant creates a liability in respect of "omissions" of the vendor, his ancestors, and testators, a form which, though not unusual, is not universally adopted. Still, the risk of accepting the covenants is very small, and if the vendor refuses them it is not unlikely he will, if the matter is pressed, be made to pay costs (see sect. 66), so that, in an ordinary case, a refusal cannot be advised. In the above remarks on covenants, we have dealt chiefly with conveyances on sale of freeholds. We propose to discuss mortgages, and settlements, and assurances of leaseholds and copyholds, subsequently.

(To be continued.)

LARCENY OF DEAD GAME AND THE DOCTRINE OF "POSSESSION."

If a man standing on his own land shoots a pheasant which falls dead upon such land, and some other person thereupon picks it up, and dishonestly appropriates it, has that other person committed larceny? One would imagine that the question might be answered without much difficulty, having regard to all the discussion which has been devoted to the subject of property in animals feræ naturæ. On consideration, however, it would appear that the point is not altogether free from doubt. In Reg. v. Roe, 11 Cox C. C. 554, the facts were as follows:—A party was shooting on the lands of A. One of the party wounded a partridge, which, after flying some distance, tumbled and fell in a field also belonging to A. This field adjoined a canal, and a boatman who was standing on the canal bank went on to the field, picked up the bird and appropriated it to his own use. He was tried on a charge of stealing a dead partridge of the goods and chattels of A., but acquitted upon the finding of the jury that the bird was not dead, though in a dying state, when it was picked up. The importance of the case, however, arises from a dictum by Willes, J., who, in the course of the argument, asked of the counsel for the prosecution, "Suppose the bird had been shot by a third person, and the keeper picked it up and appropriated it to his own use, would that have been larceny or embezzlement?" and intimated that he thought the right view was that it would be embezzlement, and "if so, the bird had not been reduced into possession by the master." In his judgment the same learned judge said, "I wish to state for myself that I am not satisfied that if the partridge had been dead when picked up by the prisoner it would have been sufficiently reduced into possession so as to sustain the charge of larceny." It seems, therefore, that if we are to rely upon this dictum we must answer our question in the negative, on the ground that the pheasant though falling dead upon the sportsman's own land would not be ipso facto "reduced into possession."

Now we venture to think, in spite of the renowned learning of the late Willes, J., that he was here, for once, at fault, and that if such a case should ever come before the court for argument, it will be so decided, and we have come to that opinion with the less diffidence because it is a mere dictum, which we dispute, and one upon which the decision of the judges in Reg. v. Roe, was in no wise founded.

Now let us examine the position. According to Willes, J., if the keeper had picked up the bird and appropriated it to his own use, he would have been guilty of embezzlement. The meaning of this is clear, viz., that the partridge when it fell dead would have been in nobody's possession, but that the keeper on picking it up, would have taken possession of it for and on account of his master, and thus by converting it to his own use would have been guilty of embezzlement. Had the bird been already in the possession of the master then it is plain that the keeper would only have had the custody of it, and would by appropriating it have been guilty of common larceny.

It appears then that the keeper would, under the circumstances of the case, have been guilty of that species of larceny called embezzlement. But why should not a stranger who picked up and dishonestly appropriated the bird be held guilty of simple larceny? The answer is that the bird, although ex hypothesi dead, and upon the shooter's own land, has not been reduced (we may surely omit the superfluous adverb "sufficiently"! ) into the possession of the landowner. But "theft may be committed by taking and carrying away without the consent of the owner, anything which is not in the possession of the thief at the time when the offence is committed, whether it is in the possession of any other person or not." Stephen's Digest of the Criminal Law, Article 296. It is true that (as the same learned author remarks) "property in no one's possession is said to be constructively in the possession of its owner," the object of this fiction being "to satisfy a supposed necessity for showing that the taking in theft must be a taking out of some one's possession (Digest C. L. note (1) p. 208), but as he goes on to show in his admirable note on the confused and highly technical doctrine of "possession in relation to law of larceny" (Digest C. L. note xvii. to article 281), "this way of stating the matter makes the assertion that the taking in larceny must be a taking out of the owner's possession insignificant;" for, "if from the nature of the case, every taking must be a taking out of the possession of the owner, it is impossible to see how the takings which do, differ from those which do not, constitute larceny. All men being mortal, it is useless to define an Englishman as a mortal man living in England." Now here is the case of a partridge which, being dead, is capable of being stolen, and how can it be maintained that it is not in the possession, if not "actual" at any rate "constructive," (to make use of the old legal jargon) of the owner of the land upon which it lies? The example given by Stephen, J., in illustration of his proposition is as follows:—"A trespasser, finds a dead rabbit lying in a wood, of which he is not the owner, and converts it. This is theft," the reference being to the celebrated case of Blades v. Higgs, 11 H. L. C. 621; 34 L. J. C. L. 286, of which we shall have more to say presently. Further, in the note to article xvii., which we have already quoted, allusion is made to the fact that in order not to violate the supposed rule that the taking in larceny must be a taking out of the possession of the owner, a man is said to be "in possession of a watch which he has dropped into the Thames, of sheep which have been stolen from his field and driven to a distance by the thief, of a dead grouse which, having been wounded at a distance from his moor, has managed to reach it and die there without his knowledge or that of any other person." Digest C. L. p. 879.

Now in what way does the dead partridge in the case supposed differ from the dead rabbit and the dead grouse cited in the above examples? If these are in the possession of the owner and capable of being stolen, although he may have no knowledge that they lie dead upon his land, then à fortiori should we say that a partridge killed by the landowner or one of his friends shooting on his land, and lying upon that land, is in his possession, and capable of being stolen by anyone who should pick it up and dishonestly appropriate it. It is true of course that game is subject to the exception which says that "if the thing taken and carried away is for the first time rendered capable of being stolen by the act of taking and carrying away, and if the taking and carrying away is one continuous act, such taking and carrying away is not theft," so that the poacher or other wrongdoer who kills game and carries it away, or who returns after an interval to carry it away, never having abandoned the intention of so doing, is not guilty of larceny (see especially R v. Townley, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 315, on this doctrine), but it is quite obvious that this exception does not apply to the case under consideration, where the landowner himself, or his friend acting by his authority, kills the game, which somebody else thereupon picks up and misappropriates. In this latter case, according to the dictum in Reg. v. Roe, the game is not in the possession of the owner so as to support a charge of larceny. What more then is necessary? Must it first be picked up by the owner, or his friend, or his servant; or peradventure, would it be held "sufficiently" reduced into possession if kicked by one of them in passing?

Let us examine the matter in the light of Blades v. Higgs. In that case it was decided that game found, killed, and taken upon the land of A. by a trespasser becomes the property of A. as much as if it had been killed and taken by A. himself, or by his servant acting by his authority, so that A. would be entitled to bring an action against the trespasser for the conversion of his property. In his judgment the then Lord Chancellor thus laid down the law:—"When it is said by writers on the common law of England that there is a qualified or special right of property in game, that is in animals feræ naturæ which are fit for the food of man, whilst they continue in their wild state, I apprehend that the word "property" can mean no more than the exclusive right to catch, kill, and appropriate such animals, which is sometimes called by the law a reduction into possession. . . . Property ratione soli is the common law right which every owner of land has to kill and take all such animals feræ naturæ as may from time to time be found on his land, and as soon as this right is exercised, the animal so killed or caught becomes the absolute property of the owner of the soil."

Adverting to the case of Londale v. Rigg, 26 L. J. Ex. 196, his lordship remarked "the case when condensed amounts to this, that grouse were shot and taken away by a trespasser upon and from the land of the plaintiff, who brought trover for the dead grouse; and it was clearly held by the judges of the Court of Exchequer, and afterwards by all the judges in the Court of Error, that the grouse, as soon as they were killed and fell upon the land of the plaintiff, became and were his absolute property, in respect of his ownership of the soil. This conclusion would not be affected, even though it be true that an indictment at common law will not lie against the trespasser for killing and carrying away of game, if it be one continuous act, inasmuch as the ownership of the game is considered as incident to the property in the land. But this consequence is the result of the peculiarity in the law of larceny, which holds that the act of severing and taking away things attached to the freehold is not a felonious taking—a result which does not affect the existence of the rights of the property."

On the authority of this case, therefore, and of the view taken by Stephen, J., in his Digest (a work for which those students of the criminal law who are attached to clear a logical statement cannot be too grateful), we venture to lay down the following propositions:—(1) When game is killed and falls upon the land of A. it becomes at once his absolute property. (2) This is so, whether A. has himself killed the game, or whether it has been killed by others, trespassers or otherwise. (3) This is so, whether the fact that the game is dead and lying upon his land is or is not within A.'s knowledge. (4) Under such circumstances the game is at "once reduced into the possession" of A., and he may bring an action against anyone who converts it. (5) Under such circumstances any person who picks up and dishonestly appropriates the game is guilty of larceny, except in cases where the killing and carrying away are one continuous act, as defined in Reg. v. Townley. We may add that this exception applies, of course, not only to trespassers in pursuit of game, but to other wrongdoers, as, for instance, a gamekeeper having authority to be on the land, and possibly to kill game, but not for his own use, who dishonestly converts game so killed by him (Reg. v. Read, L. R. 3 Q. B. D. 131; Reg. v. Petoh, 14 Cox C. C. 116), or (a stronger case) the servant of the receiver, a dealer in game, who, with knowledge of the circumstances, comes and takes away game killed by poachers and designedly left for him upon the land (per Blackburn, J., in Reg. v. Townley). In the case of the gamekeeper it is clear (since the taking and carrying away are ex hypothesi one continuous act), that he has neither been guilty of larceny, nor of embezzlement, which is only a species of larceny (Reg. v. Read). If, however, the game had been killed by his master or any other person not acting in concert with the keeper, then, since the game becomes the absolute property of the landowner, and "in his possession" so soon as it falls dead upon his land, the keeper, if he dishonestly appropriated it, would, we apprehend, be guilty of larceny.

We submit, therefore, that the dictum in Reg. v. Roe does not correctly state the law on the subject, but we must mention that it appears to have been acted upon by Lord Coleridge upon the trial of two prisoners at the Leicester assizes in January, 1879. The newspaper report, however, of that case which we noticed at the time, see Justice of the Peace, February 22nd, 1879, is not altogether satisfactory, neither does the law appear to have been argued in the light of the cases so admirably expounded by Stephen, J. Moreover, the dictum of Willes, J., seems to have been cited as though it had been a judgment, which we have shown it was not, and in any case we venture to think, for the reasons above stated, that it ought no longer to be quoted with approval.—Justice of the Peace.

TESTAMENTARY DIRECTIONS TO EMPLOY CERTAIN SOLICITORS.

It sometimes happens that a clause directing the employment of a certain solicitor, usually the one who drew the will, by the trustees in their management of the trust property, is inserted in a will, and attempts have from time to time been made to interpret such a direction as establishing a valid trust in the solicitor's favour. The most recent case of this sort was Foster v. Ealey, before Mr. Justice Chitty, where the plaintiff, a solicitor, had been named by a testator in his will as the person who should have the management and carrying out of the provisions of the will. The trustees, however, had become dissatisfied with him, and demanded that he should deliver up all documents in his possession relating to the estate, and he thereupon moved for an injunction to restrain them from employing any other solicitor than himself, on the ground that this would be directly opposed to the testator's intention. A clause of a similar nature had been discussed in the previous cases of Shaw v. Lawless (5 Cl. & F. 129), where the House of Lords reversed the decision of Sir Edward Sugden, who had held that a valid trust was constituted by such a direction, and Finden v. Stephens (2 Ph. 142), where the language employed was very similar to that in the present case. In Finden v. Stephens Lord Chancellor Cottenham points out that, "if the nomination of the plaintiff amounted to a trust, it gave to him the character of a cestui que trust to the amount of the percentage on the receipts in respect of which he would be entitled to those rights of interference and control which belong to all cestui que trust," and in such a case he would, of course, have a right even to commence an action for administration as a beneficiary under the will. Besides this, one of the essential characteristics of a trust is that its subject must be certain, and it would be difficult to show that the employment of a solicitor could be of this nature. On these grounds Mr. Justice Chitty had no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that no trust had been constituted, and that therefore no ground of action had been shown.—Law Times.

LORD O'HAGAN.

On the 17th inst. the Right Hon. Lord O'Hagan was installed a Knight Companion of the most illustrious Order of St. Patrick, and was invested with the insignia of the Order.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

At the first meeting of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society of Solicitors after the death of the late George Beamish, held at the Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, on the 11th instant, the following resolution was passed unanimously:—"That this Council desire to place upon their minutes an expression of the deep regret which they feel at the death of the late George Beamish, for many years a member of the Council, and held so highly in esteem and regard by every member of it."

SOLICITORS' FEES.

A meeting of a committee of judges was held on Saturday last for the purpose of considering the scale of solicitors' fees under the Judicature Act, as to which representations had been made by the Incorporated Law Society. Their lordships were engaged for a considerable time deliberating on the subject, and it is understood that some alterations have been made in favour of the solicitors, while effecting what is considered a fair and reasonable arrangement. The recommendations will be submitted for the approval of the judges of the several divisions at an early date.

CALLS TO THE OUTER BAR.

On the 18th inst. the following gentlemen were called to the Bar:—

Michael Feely M'Grenehan, Esq., youngest son of William M'Grenehan, of Barr, Omagh, in the county of Tyrone, Esq.

Edward O'Farrell, Esq., B.A., University of Dublin, third son of Michael Richard O'Farrell, of Pembroke-road, in the County of Dublin, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

William Charles Hennessy, Esq., only son of William M. Hennessy, of Pembroke-road, in the County of Dublin, Esq.

Henry Evans Austin, Esq., B.A., LL.B., University of Dublin, eldest son of Thomas Kingston Austin, of Talbot Lodge, Stillorgan, in the County of Dublin, Esq., J.P.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

(Continued from page 23, ante.)

Jarman on Wills, 11.

In re Brown's Settlement affirmed (ante p. 385); In re Brown's Settlement; In re Brown's Will (50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 725)—C. A.

Seton on Decrees (4th Edition), 1,578.

Order made on Summons in an administration action, directing payment to sequestrators, appointed by the Probate and Divorce Division, of income of a beneficiary under the trust being administered (In re Slade, Slade v. Hulme, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 729).

Davidsons' Precedents in Conveyancing, vol. v. part ii. 20.

General words in a deed of partition carry a right of way over one part of the property which is necessary to the enjoyment of another (Barkshire v. Grubb, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 731).

Seton on Decrees (4th Edition), 490.

The testator directed £15,000 to be raised out of his estate, and held for the benefit of A. for life with remainder over, and, until investment, interest at 4½ per cent. was to be paid to her. The trustees placed the money on deposit, and at the end of three months purchased debenture stocks, on which five months' interest had already accrued. Held, that A. was entitled to the entire half-yearly dividend, and that the Apportionment Act, 1870, had no application (In re Clarke, Barker v. Perowne, 50 Law J. Rep. 733).

Order XIX., Rule 23.

Wilson on the Judicature Acts (2nd Edition), 201.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 170.

The defence of the Statute of Frauds cannot be raised by demurrer (Fletcher v. Fletcher, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 735).

Buckley on the Companies Acts (3rd Edition), 185.

An application in a winding-up under supervision by mortgagees for leave to distrain, under a power in their mortgage, for interest due before the winding-up was refused (In re Brown, Bailey & Dixon (Limited), ex parte Roberts & Wright, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 738; Eames v. Hacon, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 740).

Williams on Bankruptcy, 340.

Robson on Bankruptcy (4th Edition), 779.

A registrar, upon an application to register resolutions, is not bound, even in the absence of all opposition to register them, when he sees that they must have been passed in the interest of the debtor (In re Williams, ex parte Williams, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 741).

(To be continued.)

REVIEWS.

Hints on Advocacy. Conduct of Cases, Civil and Criminal; Classes of Witnesses, and Suggestions for Cross-Examining them, &c., &c. By RICHARD HARRIS, Barrister-at-Law, of the Middle Temple and Midland Circuit. Sixth Edition (further revised and enlarged). London: Stevens & Sons, 119, Chancery-lane, Law Publishers and Booksellers. 1882.

"The following observations, which I think well worthy the student's perusal, are from the IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, of Saturday, January 10th, 1880, in its review of the second edition of this work." So writes Mr. Richard Harris in the 6th edition of his work, now before us; and thereupon he proceeds to publish, as a "Postscript," the review in question, which occupies nearly seven pages of close print in his volume. We cannot but appreciate such a compliment; nor is it for us to question the discernment of Mr. Harris, but certainly it seems to be corroborated by the circumstance that in Quillets of the Law (Boston, Mass., March, 1881) we also find the entire review extracted, in order "to show how interesting a book notice may be made." Though so flattered, we are at the same time somewhat intimidated by honors so exceptional; and on the present occasion we shall endeavour to make our remarks as brief and uninteresting as possible, lest Mr. Harris in some subsequent edition should, like the author of Sartor Resartus, be tempted to include the testimonies of his critics in an appendix.

Indeed, for all practical purposes, after having already on former occasions so fully explained the nature of this book, and so carefully estimated its merits, it ought to suffice to say that in little over two years it has run to a sixth edition. We notice, however, various alterations of a decidedly advantageous character, and in particular a considerable addition made to the important part of the work in which cross-examination is treated. The work really deserves a still larger measure of success, nor do we think that any reader will be disappointed in it.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Letters and communications intended for publication, and addresses to THE EDITOR, 53, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin, must be authenticated by the name of the writer, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We throw open the columns of this Journal most willingly for the discussion of subjects of interest to the Profession; but it must be understood that we do not necessarily agree with all the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

VALUATION OF LANDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—It occurs to me to suggest that in most of the cases before the Sub-Commissioners it would be highly useful and expedient to take the evidence of the Valuers on the locus in quo itself, "weather permitting." It seems to me that the advantages of such a course are too obvious to need particularising. But I should be glad to elicit the opinions of others on the subject, and also as to whether it could be legally done in the absence of consent.

Yours truly,

LEX.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Incorporated Law Society Calendar for the year 1882.
London: Published by Authority of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society. 1882.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTA BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. James MacIvor, A.B., Barrister-at-law, has been appointed Librarian to the Hon. Society of King's Inns.

Mr. Michael Leahy, Solicitor, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the County Limerick.

Mr. James J. Connolly of Dunshaughlin has been elected Clerk of Petty Sessions for Dunshaughlin and Dunboyne.

LAW STUDENT'S JOURNAL.

KING'S INNS.

HILARY TERM, 1882.

On the 19th inst. the Benchers of the Honourable Society of King's Inns admitted the following Gentlemen as Students of Law:—

Walter Joseph Synnott, Student, T.C.D., fourth son of Thomas Synnott, of Inismore, Glenageary, in the County of Dublin, Esq., J.P.

Fred Henry Houston, Student, T.C.D., second son of Thomas Houston, of Belfast in the County of Antrim, Esq.

Joseph M'Grath, B.A., University of London, eldest son of Pierce M'Grath, of Bagnalstown, in the County of Carlow, Merchant.

Richard Donovan, LL.B., University of Cambridge, eldest son of Richard Donovan, of Ballymore, in the County of Wexford, Esq., J.P., D.L.

George Reade MacMullen, B.A., LL.B., University of Dublin, third son of John Franklin MacMullen, of Melbourne, Australia, Esq.

Arthur Southwell Fitzgerald, Student, T.C.D., fourth son of the Right Hon. John David Fitzgerald, of Merrion Square, in the City of Dublin.

Goodwin Young, LL.B., University of Cambridge, eldest son of Henry L. Young, of Lee Mount, in the County of Cork, Esq., J.P.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.
Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—W. J. Totten, payment.
IN COURT.—E. Walsh, examine witness.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—A. G. Bagot, final schedule.
Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).
M. Horgan, rental.

WEDNESDAY.

IN COURT.—E. M. Darcy, receiver.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—T. Murphy, as to title.
Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).
H. W. Faussett, reference.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

TRUSTEES COBBETT, - - - 6 lots.
County Court Appeals.—Christie v. Farr—Harty v. Corridan—Mangan v. Joy.—Murdock v. Murdock.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN COURT.—R. T. Lahey, to transfer funds.—R. J. O'Sullivan, objection.—W. Petrie, adjourned motion.—L. O. Weir, do.—J. Murphy, do.—De Montmorency, do.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).
A. Mulholland, vouch.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—E. Dease, to explain delay.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.
Atkinson, John, of 192, Great Britain-street, in the city of Dublin, house painter and decorator. January 10; Tuesday, January 31, and Friday, February 17. C. J. Fay and Co., solrs.
Christian, James R., of 12, Donegall-square, South, Belfast, in the county of Antrim, linen merchant, trading as "J. R. Christian and Company." January 10; Tuesday, January 31, and Friday, February 17. M'Lean, Boyle, and M'Lean, and Bennett Thompson, solrs.
Johnston, James, of Market-street, in the city of Armagh, grocer and spirit merchant. January 11; Friday, February 3, and Friday, February 17. J. E. Peel and H. F. Leachman, solrs.

Du-VAL, that atrociously amusing delineator of Sergeant Bazza, is again among us. He has been to the wars, like the Minstrel Roy, but has returned unscathed by the perils of the Transvaal, though he was for five months beleaguered in Pretoria. Whether he made its inhabitants merry with his "Odds and Ends" we know not, but well might he succeed in doing so even if the bullets were whistling—at a little distance. From the Cape Times we learn that he "turned the occasion to material advantage as editor of The News of the Camp, a tri-weekly little journal, published under canvas in the military lines defending Pretoria. Mr. Du-Val appears also to have seen some active service in the fighting around the town, and has been several times honourably mentioned in official despatches of Lieut.-Col. Gildea, the Commandant of the garrison, for special services in these various actions, having his horse shot under him on the 12th February at the Red House Kraal."

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	JANUARY
	Sat. 14	Mon. 16	Tues. 17	Wed. 18	Thur. 19	Fri. 20
Government.
3 p c Consols ..	100½	100	—	—	—	100½
— 3 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— New 3 p c Stock ..	—	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1888 } Trs'ble. at ..	104	103½	—	103½	104	104
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	—	—	101½	101½	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	311	311½	311½	311½	311½
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	—	—	41½	—	—	—
20 London and County ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and Westminster ..	—	72½	—	72½	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
3½ Manchester Bank (Limited) ..	—	7½	7½	7½	—	7½
30 National Bank ..	—	—	—	23½	—	—
— Nat. Prov. of England, lim. ..	—	40½	—	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	56	55½	—	—	—	—
20 Do. do. New 1867 ..	—	—	—	24	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	30
25 Standard of B. S. A., W'd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15½ Union of London ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	114	—	—	—	—	—
50 Dublin &amp; Liverpool Steam ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Ship Buiding Co. ..	59	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons.' Gas ..	—	15½	—	—	—	—
— Do. do. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
6 Dub. (8th) City Market Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
8 Goulding &amp; Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 National Discount, Irc., Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance ..	—	—	—	10½	10½	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	11	—	—	—	11
10 Leeds Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 L'pl Un'rd Tram &amp; Bus l'pl ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Nth Metr. Tramway, Lond. ..	—	—	16½	16½	—	—
Railways.
10 Athens and Tunis ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	—	39	—	—
50 Belfast and Northern Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	108½	—	—	—	109½
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	80	80½	—	—	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Nth'n (Ireland) g't'd 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 3½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; Co. Down, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	102½	—
— Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	105	—	—	—
— Cork and Bandon, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	109
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— L'derry &amp; Enniskillen 5 p c ..	—	—	109	—	—	—
— Midland &amp; West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterfd &amp; Limerick 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
Belfast Office Deb., £92 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
City Deb. of £92 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	92½	92½	—	—	—
Dub. Port &amp; Docks, 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
(1938) Rathm. &amp; Fem. M. Drain, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Do. Dehd. of £92 6s 2d 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—(Of Discount—3½ per cent., 6th November, 1879.
Of Deposit—1 per cent., 10th April, 1879.

Name Days—January 26th, and February 14th, 1882.
Account Days—January 27th, and February 15th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Few persons are so favoured by circumstances, or so fortified by nature, as to enable them to pass unscathed the sore trials of an inclement season. With catarrhs, coughs, and influenza everywhere abounding, it should be universally known that Holloway's Ointment, diligently rubbed upon the chest, checks the worst assaults of these maladies, and securely wards off more grave and dangerous diseases of the throat and lungs. The truth of this assertion must remain unquestioned in the face of thousands of unimpeachable living witnesses, who have personally derived the utmost possible benefits from this treatment when their present sufferings were appalling, and their future prospects most disheartening. Both remedies set admirably together.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

MARRIAGES.

ACTON and MAY—January 19, at St. Stephen's Church, by the Provost of Trinity College, assisted by the Dean of Kilmacodagh and the Rev. L. B. Weldon, T. H. E. Acton (Royal Artillery), eldest son of William Acton, of Brookville, County Dublin, to Olivia C. J., eldest daughter of the Right Hon. G. A. C. May, Chief Justice of Ireland.

HANRAHAN and QUIN—January 17, at the Cathedral, Marlborough-street, by the Most Rev. Dr. Donnelly, Bishop of Clogher, James William Hanrahan, Esq., Clerk of the Crown and Peace, County Fermanagh, to Agnes, daughter of John Quin, Esq., D.L., Limerick.

DEATHS.

FITZGERALD—January 17, at her residence, Eccles-street, of acute bronchitis, Anne Elizabeth, relict of the late John Fitzgerald, Esq., barrister-at-law, of Castleblayney, County Monaghan, and Desmond Villa, Kilkree, County Clare.

M'GOVERN—January 8, at the Adelaide Hospital, Fanny, daughter of Thomas M'Govern, Esq., solicitor, College Green, and Ivy Lodge, Ballybrack, granddaughter of the late George Vernon, Esq., solicitor, of this city, in her 39th year.

O'GRADY—January 18, at his residence, Whitworth-place, Drumcondra, Thomas F. O'Grady, Esq., late Captain 61st Regiment, son of the late John O'Grady, Esq., barrister-at-law, Tippetstown House, County Cork.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET. 3-7

PUBLIC NOTICES:

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES AND INVESTIGATIONS
CONDUCTED BY
MR. THOMAS DEANE,
17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange),
Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.
Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.
Reference.

ESTABLISHED 1878. 167

STOKES BROTHERS,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN. 293

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
78, DAME-STREET, late of 11, Essex BRIDGE,
Are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts &c., &c. 160

N. PETERSON & SON,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LIVERPOOL AND LONDON CHAMBERS,
1, FOSTER-PLACE, COLLEGE-GREEN,
DUBLIN. 512

HOUSES TO BE LET OR SOLD.

Lists on application free of charge.
No charge for placing Houses on our Books.
Inventories taken on behalf of Tenant and Landlord.
Auctions conducted.
Rents collected on reasonable terms.
Mortgages promptly negotiated.

GRAHAM AND CO.,
HOUSE AND LAND AGENTS,
202, GREAT BRUNSWICK-STREET, DUBLIN. 198

D. W. CARROLL,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
Comprising Bags, Purses, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Biotiers, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges. 193

LAW BOOKS PUBLISHED BY W. MAXWELL & SON,

8, BELL YARD, TEMPLE BAR, LONDON, W.C.

5th Edition, post 8vo, price 14s., cloth.

HAYNES' OUTLINES of EQUITY; being a Series of Elementary Lectures on Equity Jurisdiction delivered at the request of the Incorporated Law Society, with Supplementary Lectures on certain Doctrines of Equity, and Observations on the Defence of Purchase for Valuable Consideration without Notice. By FREEMAN OLIVER HAYNES, of Lincoln's-Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and late Fellow of Caius College, Cambridge.

2th Edition, price £1 11s. 6d., cloth.

BROOM'S COMMENTARIES on the COMMON LAW. Designed as introductory to its study. By HERBERT BROOM, LL.D., Barrister-at-Law, late Professor of Common Law to the Inns of Court.

5th Edition, 8vo, price £1 11s. 6d., cloth.

BROOM'S SELECTION of LEGAL MAXIMS.

In 1 vol. 8vo, price £1 11s. 6d., cloth.

BROOM'S LEADING CASES of CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. Viewed in Relation to Common Law, and Exemplified by Cases. By HERBERT BROOM, LL.D., Barrister-at-Law, late Professor of Common Law to the Inns of Court.

2nd Edition, crown 8vo, price 6s., cloth.

BROOM'S PHILOSOPHY of LAW; being Notes of Lectures delivered at the Inner Temple Hall during 23 years (1852-1875). Adapted for Students and the Public. By HERBERT BROOM, LL.D., late Professor of Common Law to the Inns of Court.

Royal 8vo, price 15s., cloth.

WESTLAKE on PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW. A Treatise on Private International Law, with principal Reference to its Practice in England; being in lieu of a 2nd Edition of the Work published in 1858. By JOHN WESTLAKE, Q.C., late Fellow of Trin. Coll., Cambridge; Hon. LL.D., Edin.; Member of the Institute of International Law.

7th Edition, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price £3 15s., cloth.

TAYLOR'S LAW of EVIDENCE. A Treatise on the Law of Evidence, as administered in England and Ireland, with Illustrations from the American and other Foreign Laws. By JOHN PITT-TAYLOR, Esq., Judge of the County Courts for Lambeth, Greenwich, and Woolwich.

Lately published, crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d., cloth

CABABE on INTERPLEADER and ATTACHMENT of DEBTS. The Law and Practice of Interpleader, and the Law and Practice of the Attachment of Debts in the High Court of Justice and the County Courts, together with Forus of the Summonses, Orders, Affidavits, &c., used therein. By M. CABABE, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Crown 8vo, price 14s., cloth.

FLOOD on LIBEL and SLANDER. A Concise and Practical Treatise on the Law concerning Libel and Slander, chiefly in regard to the Defamation of Individuals. By JOHN C. H. FLOOD, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

"Few of his statements are not supported by authority, and Chapters XI. and XII. give a very useful digest of the practice in both civil and criminal cases. The index is very full. On the whole, we can say that the author has produced a useful summary of the law relating to libel and slander."—Law Times.

5th Edition, in 2 vols., royal 8vo, price £3 18s., cloth.

WHITE and TUDOR'S LEADING CASES in EQUITY. A Selection of Leading Cases in Equity, with Notes. In 2 vols. Vol. I.—By FREDERICK THOMAS WHITE and OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esqrs., of the Middle Temple, Barristers-at-Law. Vol. II.—By OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Now complete, in 5 vols., royal 8vo, £12 4s. 6d., cloth.

DAVIDSON'S PRECEDENTS in CONVEYANCING. Precedents and Forms in Conveyancing, with an Introduction and Practical Notes. By CHARLES DAVIDSON, Esq., THOMAS COOKE WRIGHT, Esq., the late J. WALEY, Esq., T. KEY, Esq., M. G. DAVIDSON, Esq., J. KIELAT DARLEY, Esq.—all of Lincoln's-Inn, Barristers-at-Law.

Synopsis of the Contents.

Vol. I.—4th Edition, 1874, price £1 12s. General and Particular Receipts—Operative and Miscellaneous Forms and Conditions of Sale.

II. Part 1.—4th Edition, 1877, price £1 12s. Agreements and Conveyances on Sales.

Part 2.—4th Edition, 1881, price £1 16s. Mortgages.

III.—3rd Edition, 1873, price £2 12s. 6d. Parts 1 and 2.—Settlements.

IV.—3rd Edition, 1880, price £1 12s. Wills and Appointments of New Trustees.

V. Part 1.—3rd Edition, 1876, price £1 8s. Agreements for Leases, Precedents of Leases.

Part 2.—3rd Edition, 1878, price £1 12s. Precedents of Partitions, Exchanges, Annuity Deeds, Releases, Indemnity Deeds, Bonds, Partnership Deeds, Composition Deeds, and Miscellaneous Deeds.

8th Edition, in 2 vols., royal 8vo, price £3 15s., cloth.

SMITH'S LEADING CASES. A Selection of Leading Cases in various Branches of the Law, with Notes. 3rd and 4th Editions. By SIR JAMES SHAW WILLES, of the Inner Temple, late one of the Judges of Her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas; and SIR HENRY SINGER KEATING, of the Inner Temple, late one of the Judges of Her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas. 8th Edition. By R. HENRY COLLINS and R. G. ARBUTHNOT, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

4th Edition, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price £3 15s., cloth.

LINDLEY'S (SIR N.) LAW of PARTNERSHIP. A Treatise on the Law of Partnership, including its applications to Joint Stock and other Companies. By the Right Hon. SIR NATHANIEL LINDLEY, one of the Judges of Her Majesty's High Court of Appeal.

7th Edition, royal 8vo, price £1 18s., cloth.

LEWIN'S (THOS.) LAW of TRUSTS. A Practical Treatise on the Law of Trusts. 7th Edition. By F. A. LEWIN Esq., of Lincoln's-Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and late Fellow of Caius College, Cambridge.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. Will be published early in February, 1882, the 12th Edition.

DAVIDSON'S CONCISE PRECEDENTS in CONVEYANCING. Adapted to the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, with Practical Notes and Observations on the Act. By M. G. DAVIDSON, Esq., of Lincoln's-Inn, Barrister-at-Law.

In the Press, and will be published shortly.

KEY and ELPHINSTONE'S COMPENDIUM of PRECEDENTS and FORMS in CONVEYANCING. Comprising the Forms required in Ordinary Practice, with Practical Notes. Second Edition. Revised throughout and adapted to the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, with considerable additions. By THOMAS KEY and H. W. ELPHINSTONE, both of Lincoln's-Inn, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

Shortly will be Published, in 1 vol., 8vo, of nearly 800 pages, price 15s. For Cash, remitted with Order, 12s., cloth.

THE ANNUAL CHANCERY PRACTICE; being a Collection of the Statutes, Orders, and Rules relating to the General Practice, Procedure, and Jurisdiction of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, and on Appeal therefrom to the Court of Appeal. With Copious Notes, Forms, &c. By THOMAS SNOW, M.A., of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister-at-Law; and HERBERT WINSTANLEY, of Lincoln's-Inn, Esq., Barrister-at-Law; Authors of the "Lancaster Chancery Practice."

W. MAXWELL & SON, Law Publishers and Booksellers,
8, BELL YARD, TEMPLE BAR, LONDON, W.C.

Facing the Gateway on the Eastern Side of the ROYAL COURTS OF JUSTICE.

* * * A Catalogue of Standard Works and Reports Post Free on application.

NOW READY, cr. 8vo, 108 pp., price 2s. 6d.; Interleaved, 3s. 6d.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881;

TO WHICH IS ADDED

THE SOLICITORS' REMUNERATION ACT, 1881.

WITH COMPLETE INDEX.

DUBLIN: JOHN FALCONER, 53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET,
And all Booksellers.

PUBLICATIONS:

Now ready, Part I., Fourth Edition, royal 12mo, price 24s., cloth.
BULLEN and LEAKE'S PRECEDENTS of PLEADINGS, with Notes and Rules relating to Pleading. Fourth Edition. Revised and adapted to the present Practice in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. By THOMAS J. BULLEN, Esq., Special Pleader, and CRAIG DODD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.
Contains—(1) Introductory Notes on Pleading; (2) Forms of Statements of Claim in Actions on Contracts and Torts, with Notes relating thereto.

This day, Sixth Edition, further revised and enlarged, royal 12mo, price 7s. 6d., cloth.
HARRIS' HINTS ON ADVOCACY. Conduct of Cases, Civil and Criminal, Classes of Witnesses, and Suggestions for Cross-Examining them. By RICHARD HARRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.
"Full of good sense and just observation. A very complete Manual of the Advocate's Art in Trial by Jury."—Solicitors' Journal.

Ready next week, in demy 8vo, price 20s., cloth.
SMITH'S PRINCIPLES OF EQUITY. A Practical Exposition of the Principles of Equity. Illustrated by the Leading Decisions thereon. For Students and Practitioners. By H. ARTHUR SMITH, M.A., LL.B., Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Just published, demy 8vo, price 6s., cloth.
SHEARWOOD'S PERSONAL PROPERTY. A Concise Abridgment of the Law of Personal Property. Showing Analytically its Branches and the Titles by which it is Held. By JOSEPH A. SHEARWOOD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Author of a "Concise Abridgment of the Law of Real Property," &c.

Catalogues gratis on application.
STEVENS & SONS, 119, CHANCERY-LANE, LONDON. 715

Ready This Day, price 1s., post free.
A CONCISE EXPOSITION of the NEW CONVEYANCING ACT: with Practical Hints. By A. UNDERHILL, LL.D., Barrister-at-Law.

London: RICHARD AMES, Law Bookseller,
Lincoln's-inn-gate, Carey-street, W.C. 11

Fifth year. Now ready.
FASON'S ALMANAC for IRELAND for 1882. It contains the following additional features:—A Table of Judicially fixed Rents, with summary of results—The Census of 1881—National Finance, 1861 to 1881—Summary of Irish Land Act—Thirty Years' Prices of Agricultural Produce in Ireland, &c., &c.
Price 1s.; half-bound, 1s. 6d.

DUBLIN: W. H. SMITH & SON.
LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & CO.

NEXT-OF-KIN.—£77,000,000 UNCLAIMED. A REGISTER (1881 Edition) containing the names of 41,000 persons who have been advertised for to claim property and money since 1700, post free 2s. 1d.—F. H. DOUGAL & Co., 67, Strand, London. 176

PUBLIC NOTICES:

HIGH CLASS TAILORING.

MODERATE PRICES.

SUCHE & RUDD,
6, LOWER ABBEY-ST.,
DUBLIN.

Winter Stock Complete.

249

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED FOR INSERTION in the "GAZETTE," "TIMES," and all other London and Provincial newspapers, at the official rates. Prompt insertion guaranteed. Printed Gazette Card, showing days of publication, and late fees payable, also a scale of charges for legal advertisements in the principal London newspapers free on application. Legal documents stamped. Bills of Sale registered. The Solicitors' Advertisements Office and Agency, Portugal Chambers, 164, Fleet-street, London, Proprietor, CHARLES TAYLER. 236

THE LAWYER'S PATENT
"STOUT BUFF" COPYING PAPER.
WATERMARK—THE ROYAL ARMS
REAMS, 6s.; BOOKS, 9s.
COPIES ANY INK LONG AFTER WRITING.
Very strong and substantial—suitable for Copying Deeds, &c.
SOLD BY ALL STATIONERS.

WHITEHEAD, MORRIS, & LOWE, 167, FENCHURCH-ST., LONDON.

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S. F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c., for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111, GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's).
Late of WATERHOUSE & Co.'s 247

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts. The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.
A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.
31st March, 1880. 823

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane. 823

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

PUBLIC NOTICES:

CATALOGUE OF JUDICATURE AND COUNTY COURTS FORMS.

FORMS UNDER THE JUDICATURE ACT.

Writ of Summons .. .. .	1d.
Writ of Summons on Bill of Exchange .. .. .	1d.
Writ of Summons—Rent .. .. .	1d.
Writ of Service out of Jurisdiction .. .. .	1d.
Memorandum of Appearance .. .. .	1d.
Notice to Limit Defence as required by Order XI., 9 .. .. .	1d.
Notice of Trial .. .. .	1d.
Statement of Claim .. .. .	1d.
Statement of Defence .. .. .	1d.
Affidavit as to Document .. .. .	1d.
Affidavit of Debt .. .. .	1d.
Affidavit of Service of Writ of Summons .. .. .	1d.
Affidavit Service, Rent or Overholding .. .. .	1d.
Affidavits of Transmission of Writ of Summons and of Order to Substitute .. .. .	1d.
Affidavit in conformity with General Order of 27th December, 1881 .. .. .	1d.
Order .. .. .	1d.

JUDICATURE PAPER—Per Quire, 1s. 0d.; per Ream, 15s.
BRIEFING PAPER—Per Quire, 9d.; per Ream, 12s. 6d.

FORMS UNDER COUNTY OFFICERS AND COURTS ACT.

3. Civil Bill Ejectment .. 1d.	47. Certificate of the Clerk of the Peace as to the Lodgment of Money by a Defendant or Rent and Costs in a Civil Bill Ejectment Case .. 1d.
4. Civil Bill Ejectment for the recovery of the possession of Lands under a claim of title under 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, sec. 78, as amended by the 40 & 41 Vic., cap. 56, sec. 53 .. .. . 1d.	55. Order of Replevin .. 1d.
5. Title Jurisdiction—Civil Bill Ejectment on the Title .. .. . 1d.	59. Committal under the Debtors Act (Ireland), 1872 .. .. . 1d.
6. Civil Bill Ejectment for Overholding .. .. . 1d.	80. Summons in Chamber .. 1d.
13. Civil Bill Process in Replevin .. .. . 1d.	81. Notice to Creditor to prove his Claim .. .. . 1d.
14. Ordinary Decree .. .. . 1d.	82. Notice to Creditor of Allowance of Claim .. 1d.
15. Decree by Instalments .. 1d.	84. Notice that the Clerk of the Peace's Certificate may be inspected .. 1d.
16. Decree for Recovery of Lands .. .. . 1d.	99. Summons for Witness .. 1d.
18. Decree in Ejectment for Non-payment of Rent .. 1d.	110. Certificate of Clerk of the Peace in case of Money 1d.
30. Ordinary Dismiss .. 1d.	111. Certificate in case of Transfer of Stock .. 1d.
31. Ejectment Dismiss .. 1d.	112. Notice of Payment into P. Office Savings Bank, or Transfer of Stock or Deposit of Security .. 1d.
32. Affidavit or Affirmation of Default by Instalments 1d.	— Affidavit to obtain a Decree by Default .. 1d.
33. Affidavit or Affirmation of Renewal .. .. . 1d.	— Form of Notice to be served upon the Defendant with the Civil Bill Process where the Plaintiff seeks a Decree by Default .. .. . 1d.
35. Notice to Renew a Decree, or Dismiss, Affirmance, or Reversal .. .. . 1d.
36. Renewal on Notice .. 1d.
43. Recognition on the Defendant's Appealing from a Decree; or on the Plaintiff's Appealing from a Decree or Dismiss .. 1d.

J. FALCONER, 53, UPPER SACKVILLE-ST., DUBLIN.

PATENT OFFICE, DUBLIN.

J. K. FAHIE & SON, Consulting Engineers and Patent Agents, 2, Nassau-street, Dublin, and 323, High Holborn, London, transact every description of business relating to Patents for Inventions, Registration of Designs, Copyrights, and Trade Marks. Authors of "Hand-book on British and Foreign Patent Law." A paper on the Law of Copyright &c., to be had on application, price Sixpence. 31

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—S. HISSER, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

PUBLIC NOTICES:

THE SIMPLEX PRINTER

Will take 50 or more Copies of any Writing or Drawing in Violet, Green, Blue-Black, or Red, in ten minutes, and, unlike the great number of "Graphs" now before the Public, it does not require washing or remelting, but when the desired number of copies have been taken the remaining ink will sink into the plate, leaving the surface clear and ready for another. It is clean in use, and, having a raised level surface, presents a great advantage for using roller and allowing a copy to be taken in the copying book.

Prices—8vo, 5s.; 4to, 8s.; cap. 11s.; folio, 10s.

GERRARD BROTHERS,
AGENTS FOR THE SIMPLEX PRINTER,
37, STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 188

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO., LIMITED.

SECURITY, &c.

RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—
39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 959

THE GUARANTEE SOCIETY OF LONDON,

Empowered by Special Act of Parliament—Session of 1842,

For providing Security for Parties in Situations of Trust.

WM. G. DU BEDAT & SONS (Agents for Ireland.

Also Agents to the Liverpool, London, and Globe Fire and Life Insurance Company).

Government Stock and Sharebrokers.

1 and 2, FOSTER-PLACE, DUBLIN. 812

THE EDINBURGH LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY,

ESTABLISHED 1823

(Being the oldest Life Office but one in Scotland).

Assurances in force at 31st March, 1881, .. .. .	£6,000,000
Incomes at that date, .. .. .	£248,146
Accumulated Funds over, .. .. .	£1,729,811

Proposals completed before 31st March next will rank for Four Years' Bonus at the next division.

The New Terminable Premium Plan at whole Life Rates is explained in a Special Prospectus, which can be had on application to—

WILLIAM B. MARTIN, Res. Secretary,
55, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin.

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY,

52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, - DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Eight Hundred and Fifty Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgages.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 3 per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.

Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached. The rates of interest will be 3½ per cent. when taken for one year, and 4 per cent. for two or more years.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:—

The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.

954

52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10

TO

£1,000

IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days. TWO UNERRING RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free.

Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1882.

No. 783

CONTRACTS BETWEEN VENDORS AND PURCHASERS WITHIN THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

"I REGARD this case as one of considerable importance, and I think that it has properly been considered with great care, because many former decisions both on the 4th and the 17th section (of the Statute of Frauds) betray great confusion of thought on the part of learned judges." So remarked the late Lord Justice Lush in Shardlow v. Cotterill, on appeal, which we find reported in the Law Times of the 14th inst.; and in the same reports we find another recent decision on the statute (Donnison v. The People's Café Co.), to which it will be useful to refer on the same general subject, at the same time noting some previous English and Irish decisions in point other than those cited in the cases mentioned.

In Shardlow's case (45 L. T. N. S. 572) it appeared that the plaintiff was declared the purchaser at a sale by auction, and the following memorandum was added to the conditions of sale, and handed to him:—"The property duly sold to Mr. S., butcher, Pinxton, and deposit paid at the close of sale.—H. M., auctioneer." At the same time, the auctioneer gave the plaintiff the following receipt:—"Received of Mr. S., the sum of £21 as deposit on property purchased at £420, at Sun Inn, Pinxton, on the above date. Mr. C., Pinxton, owner. Received by H. M., 29th March, 1880.—H. M." What was the subject matter of this contract—was there a sufficient description of what was sold, within the statute? Could the two documents be read together as connected? Was parol evidence admissible to explain exactly what it was that was sold; and for this purpose could the conditions of sale be looked to, and if so what was their effect? Such were the questions presented; and it only needs to be added that the conditions of sale not merely spoke of the "property," but referred to the expenses of a "transfer," and mentioned that "possession" was to be delivered at a future day. Now, in the court below, Kay, J., held that the two documents might be taken together, as having regard to the word "purchased" there was sufficient connexion between them; and this ruling was affirmed by the Court of Appeal. So, cf. Haughton v. Morton, 5 Ir. C. L. R. 329; Ruxton v. Rust, L. R. 7 Ex. 179; M'Mullen v. Helberg, 13 Ir. L. T. Dig. 27, 14 ib. 26; Peirce v. Corff, L. R. 9 Q. B. 210; Leather Cloth Co. v. Hieronimus, ib. 10 Q. B. 140. "But still," said Kay, J., "I have no description, I do not know, on the face of the contract, or from anything I am entitled to look at, whether it was real or personal property;" "on these two documents taken together there is not a sufficient description of the property sold and purchased to enable me to receive parol evidence of what the objects of that sale and purchase were." But, see Waldron v. Jacob (Ir. R. 5 Eq. 131), where a letter, written by the vendor of leasehold premises to her solicitor, stating, "I have closed with Mr. W. for this place," was held a sufficient memorandum within the statute, and it was further held that parol evidence was admissible to show what "this place" was: et cf. Jeffcott v. North Brit. Oil Co., 8 Ir. L. T. 565, Ir. R. 8 C. L. 17; Baumann v. James, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 508. In the present case the Court of Appeal were of opinion that parol evidence was admissible, and that the terms used in the conditions of sale were sufficient to admit of the inference that the subject matter was real property. "The error made," said Jessel, M.R., was in "taking the word 'property' alone. In this case it is 'property duly sold to Mr. Arthur Shardlow,' and 'property purchased at £420 at Sun Inn,' on a certain date, belonging to a person named." "There is a maxim, Id certum est quod certum reddi potest," added Lush, L.J.: "The nature of the property sold was here sufficiently shown. To point out the property, you must have recourse to parol evidence." And this, as pointed out by Baggallay, L.J., is in conformity with the rule recognised by the text-writers (see Dart, V. & P., 5th ed., 219, Sugden, V. & P., 14th ed., 134), and fully supported by Ogilvie v. Foljambe, 3 Mer. 53, and Bleakley v. Smith, 11 Sim. 150. Nay, in his opinion, the receipt alone, without anything else, would have sufficed to satisfy the statute; and the Master of the Rolls seems to have shared that opinion. "What is a sufficient description?" said the latter learned judge: "I consider that any two specific terms will be enough to make a description sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds;" and he laid it down that the description need not be an inseparable incident of the subject matter contracted to be sold, but may be a temporary incident only, and that what would be sufficient, under section 5, in the case of a devise, is equally sufficient, under section 4, in the case of a contract for sale of land.

While the decision of Kay, J., was reversed in Shardlow's case, that of the late Vice-Chancellor Malins was reversed in Donnison's case (45 L. T. N. S. 187). Before entering on this case, we may premise (1) that a memorandum, in order to come within the statute, must contain in substance the complete agreement between the parties in terms sufficiently plain to be understood, and it will not suffice if the offer contemplate a subsequent arrangement of terms: Horsey v. Graham, L. R. 5 C. P. 9; Sale v. Lambert, ib. 18 Eq. 1; Potter v. Duffield, ib. 18 Eq. 4; Commins v. Scott, ib. 20 Eq. 11; Ogilvie v. Foljambe, 3 Mer. 53; Manley v. Dowdeswell, L. R. 10 C. P. 102; Mahallen v. Dublin, &c., Distillery Co., 11 Ir. L. T. Dig. 21; M'Mullen v. Helberg, 14 ib. 26; and see American cases collected in Bishop on Cont. s. 513; and as to specific performance, see Howe v. Hall, 4 Ir. L. T. 382, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 242 (affirmed on app.), and Harvey v. Principal of Bernard's Inn, 50 L. J. Ch. 750. And (2) it may be predicated that the names of the contracting parties must be contained in the agreement, or there must be such a description of them that there cannot be any fair dispute as to their identity: Sale v. Lambert, L. R. 18 Eq. 1; Potter v. Duffield, ib. 4; Commins v. Scott, ib. 20 Eq. 11; Callin v. King, 1 Ch. Div. 660; Vanderberg v. Spooner, L. R. 1 Ex. 316; Newell v. Radford, ib. 3 C. P. 52; and see Fry, Specific Perf., 2nd ed., ss. 330-334. Now, in Donnison's case it appeared that the plaintiff was the lessee of vaults in the City of London under a lease granted by the Mayor and Corporation of London and the Mercers' Company. The defendant company entered into a negotiation for the purchase of the lease. The secretary of the company wrote to the house agents acting for the plaintiff a letter, in which he said that the directors thereby offered to purchase the vaults for £2,500 cash, and to take over a mortgage for £3,500 on the lease, these terms to include the lease, goodwill, fixtures, &c. The house agents answered as follows: "In reply to your letter of the 7th instant, we are now instructed to accept the offer therein contained, and will forward contract as soon as we can obtain it from the solicitors." Differences subsequently arose respecting the time when possession should be given, and eventually the plaintiff brought an action against the defendants claiming damages for breach of contract. Malins, V.C., held that the letters contained a binding contract between the parties. But, on appeal it was held (reversing this decision) that no binding contract had been entered into—first, because the name of the vendor had not been disclosed or a sufficient description given, so as to satisfy the statute; and, second, because the letters mentioned only what was the property to be purchased and the price to be given for it, but left the other necessary terms of the agreement, such as the time when possession was to be given, to be settled by a formal contract to be prepared by a solicitor in the ordinary way. "The cases have laid down this distinction," said Jessel, M.R., in reference to the first point, "that, where all the terms of the contract are defined and settled, then the merely saying there shall be a formal contract does not prevent specific performance. It is mere form. But where it is intended that all the terms of the contract shall not be treated as settled, but other terms are intended to be inserted in what is called the formal contract, then of course there is no contract until what is called the formal contract is signed." As regards the other point, he observed that what the house agent stated did not show that the person who was selling was the owner, or proprietor which is the same thing; "the mere word 'vendor' will not do, because that is somebody who sells; when you come to 'proprietor' there is something to show it, and I do not know why 'proprietor,' in many cases, is not as good and better than the name of the person." "The Vice-Chancellor," said Baggallay, L.J., "seemed to consider a contract entered into, whether on behalf of a proprietor or on behalf of a vendor, was the same thing. The decided cases show it is not the same thing. Although a contract entered into on behalf of a proprietor of an estate may be a sufficient description to enable the contract to be enforced, such is not the case as regards the description of the vendor."

PRISONERS AND COUNSEL.

In the course of the trial of a man named John Jones for a highway robbery accompanied with violence, at the Worcestershire Assizes last week, before Mr. Justice Lopes, Mr. Radcliffe Cooke, addressing the jury for the defence, said he approached the defence of the case with more embarrassment than he had ever felt since he had been called to the Bar. An accused person, they knew, was by statute entitled to employ counsel to speak for him, and by long established usage counsel had come to be regarded as the mouthpiece of the prisoner, at liberty to offer, from the instructions with which he might be furnished, such an explanation of any doubtful point as the prisoner himself might give if his mouth were not closed. The liberty of the Bar in this respect had been enlarged rather than diminished, not merely with the sanction, but even with the approbation, of the brightest ornaments of the judicial Bench. Of late, however, it had been hinted that some restriction of the ancient liberties of the Bar was contemplated, in consequence, he could only suppose, of some abuse of privilege whereby liberty had been turned into licence. If this were so he could but wish that before the freedom and franchise of the Bar of England had been impaired or diminished there had been some public investigation of the causes of error, and some public and authoritative proclamation of the remedies by means of which it was proposed to correct such error.

Mr. Justice Lopes said the observations of the learned counsel merited at once a reply from him. It was true that some Judges, or, perhaps, he should say one Judge of great eminence, had been inclined to favour the laxity which the learned counsel had spoken of, but his views were not generally shared by the Bench. In former days, when he himself practised at the Bar, no Judge—and Judges were much severer then than he hoped they ever would be now—would have allowed counsel to act as the mouthpiece of a prisoner in the way suggested by Mr. Cooke. He could assure the learned counsel that there was no intention of infringing the rights of the Bar, but a short time ago all the Judges had met and had agreed that counsel when defending prisoners could no longer be permitted to make statements from instructions they had received which were not supported by facts adduced in evidence. The proper course for them to pursue was that which up to recent times had been invariably adopted—namely, to give an explanation that might be suggested to them by way of hypothesis.

Mr. Radcliffe Cooke said he could not regret that his remarks had drawn an authoritative statement on this important subject from the Bench. That statement had in a measure allayed his apprehensions, and it was some satisfaction to find that they could still resort by way of explanation to what, nevertheless, he could not help considering to be the childishly, transparent subterfuge of a hypothetical case. It was, indeed, a relief to learn that there was no intention to infringe the ancient rights they had so long enjoyed, for if the shadow of the gag were to enshroud the forum, as it threatened to obscure the Senate, he should tremble for the liberties of his country.

THE STAFFORDSHIRE CASE—THE RULE UNUS NULLUS.

Sir George Bowyer writes as follows to the Times:—
"This case, if it does not point to an alteration of the law of evidence, gives a most serious lesson in criminal law to judges and juries.

"The Civil law, the Canon law, and the Scotch law hold the rule unus nullus, rejecting the evidence of a single witness unless materially corroborated.

"The principles obtain in the law of England only in three cases—perjury, affiliation, and the evidence of accomplices.

"There is much to be said in favour of the adoption of the rule in all cases.

"Error, delusion, and wickedness are to be feared in a single witness. I remember a case in which a woman had a mania of making false charges against priests, and another where an hysterical girl made a most clear and specific charge, but utterly false, against a dignified clergyman. And we have the present case, which probably arose from insanity. But it is remarkable that not only there was no corroboration, but there was contrary evidence—that of Sherratt and his son, who swore that they were with the prisoners all that evening, and that nothing occurred of a criminal nature. Thus there was the assertion or accusation by Brooks, and the fact of his mutilation, which was only the corpus delicti, and a charge of that nature was improbable. Let us observe that if Brooks had died the men would have been hanged. There are so many cases which may induce or cause a single witness who knows that he cannot be contradicted to swear falsely, that it seems that the judge or jury were not as prudent as they would have been if they had possessed a better knowledge of criminal jurisprudence.

"There is something analogous where an accusation rests on one single piece of circumstantial evidence. For it may be caused by error, or delusion, or fabricated by wickedness. And especially where it rests on a single witness a prudent judge will reject it. There are many instances of this nature, and some very sad ones.

"On the whole, the rule unus nullus ought to be generally followed, though there may be exceptional cases. As the law now stands, it is dangerous to be alone with anyone who happens not to be trustworthy—as, for instance, in a railway carriage.

"The treatises of Menochius and Mascardus de Presumptionibus et Probationibus, and the Commentaries on the Pandects, as well as the works of Farinacius, Carpegovius, and the other criminalists show to what an excess the scientific rules of evidence have been carried by the civilians.

"And Bentham and Dupin have said that trial by jury caused a progress in jurisprudence, by introducing the principle which refers proof to the conscience of impartial and common-sense men. But rules as to the reception of evidence are still necessary, and the more so because juries are more liable to be misled than judges, who are presumed to be learned and scientific."

PROBATE DUTY.

A discussion has been going on in the Times as to the merits or demerits of the new method of paying probate duties adopted by Mr. Gladstone in the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881. Under the old Act of 1815 the duty was paid as a stamp duty, and no grant of probate or letters of administration was made except after payment of duty. The duty was assessed according to a fixed scale, at irregular intervals, upon the value of the estate as stated in an affidavit made by the executor or administrator that the gross value of the estate was, in the belief of the applicant, under so many hundreds or thousands of pounds. The intervals were so large that plenty of scope was left in them for discovering more assets, or for discovering that the assets were less than was supposed at the time of applying for probate, without the necessity of altering the affidavit and making up a deficiency, or getting back an excess, of duty. This was a great benefit, as the payment of higher duty, and still more, the getting a return on too high a duty, was, like most communications with the Inland Revenue, especially when it is a question of their disgorging their prey, a matter of great trouble, delay, expense, and vexation. The most vexatious part of the old system, however, was the requirement that the duty should be paid in the first instance on the gross and not on the net value of the estate, no deduction being allowed for debts due from the deceased. The consequence was that very often, in dealing with the estates of those engaged in business, large sums were paid for duty and then after all it was discovered that the liabilities swallowed up the estate or nearly so; in other words that, though the estate was nearly or quite insolvent and could spare nothing, a considerable percentage averaging about three per cent. had been alienated to the Revenue, and could only be recovered by a long and tedious process, and even when recovered no interest on the amount paid was allowed. It thus often happened that an executor might be considerably out of pocket by having to pay interest on money borrowed to pay the duty, and finding after he had parted with the assets that he could not recover his advances. At the same time the rate of the duty was greater on letters of administration than on probates, and on small than on large estates, thus pressing very hardly on the poor, and leading to evasion of the duty altogether by dividing the property without going to the Probate Court at all.

In 1880 Sir Stafford Northcote proposed to assimilate the duties on wills and letters of administration by raising the rates of duty on the former to those charged on the latter. Eventually however, under pressure from Mr. Gladstone, he assimilated them by the opposite process, and also lowered slightly the duties on estates under £1,000, while raising them slightly on estates over £2,000. Sir Stafford Northcote's bill also directed that with the affidavit of value a detailed account of the estate should be sent in to the commissioner. Mr. Gladstone's budget of 1881 adopted this latter provision and provided that the stamp duty was to be paid, not on the probate or letters of administration, but on the affidavit of value, and the stamp should be affixed to it, and a mere certificate of payment of duty written on the probate or letters of administration. He also altered the rates of duty. He gave a great boon to small estates between £100 and £300 by imposing on them a fixed duty of 30s., which was to be taken in satisfaction of legacy as well as probate duty. He substituted a fixed percentage of £1 for every £50, or 2 per cent. on estates under £500, 25s. for every £50, or 2½ per cent. on estates between £500 and £1,000, and 3 per cent. on estates above £1,000. The new Act (Customs and Inland Revenue Act 1881) also contained beneficial provisions for compounding for legacy duty, and abolished both legacy and succession duty on personality on which probate duty had been paid, where it was at the rate of 1 per cent.; that is in the cases of bequest or succession in the direct line, from parent to children, or vice versa.

It is evident that these provisions are extremely beneficial particularly to small estates. They have, however, been attacked by Mr. Arnold, in the Times, who says that the cardinal objects of speed in granting probate and final discharge of the executors have been sacrificed to revenue considerations. He brings forward two charges in support of the statement: first, that, under the old law, the exact reckoning of the estate was postponed to the rendering of the residuary account, whereas now the new law requires an exact statement upon oath of every penny of property for which probate is asked, necessitating precise and detailed knowledge by the executor which is not to be acquired in a hurry; secondly, that, while after presentation of a residuary account under the old law, the executor was discharged, now he remains liable, and therefore cannot part with the assets for three years. These objections were refuted by Mr. Hamilton, in the Times of the 6th Jan., who pointed out that, under the new as under the old law, the executor only swears to his own knowledge and belief, and therefore is in no different position as to exactness of account, while the executor was no more free of liability for after-discovered assets under the old law than under the new, and that the liability after presenting the account for any mistakes therein is no greater than before.

But though Mr. Arnold's objections as he stated them are thus effectually disposed of, we think there is something in his allegation as to the delay in getting probate. The executor's account must be more detailed now than formerly, not because it is sworn to, but because the duty is assessed on smaller amounts. As we have pointed out, the unit on which duty is now assessed is, in estates over £1,000 in value, a hundred pounds instead of a thousand or two or ten thousand as formerly. Hence, an error of £50 or £100 in the account now will render it necessary to go through the laborious process of paying more duty or recovering overpaid duty. A far more accurate account is therefore required, and that no doubt causes delay in obtaining probate; a delay which in many cases, as for instance stocks and shares which require immediate sale, may cause risk or loss. The remedy, however, is to advance in the path of the new law, not to return to the old—to free the probate from Inland Revenue clutches altogether, and let the executor prove the will without any statement of value and obtain immediate command over the assets. The probate officer can forward a notification to the Inland Revenue of the grant of administration, and the Inland Revenue can then demand an account to be delivered within a specified, and not too short a time, and then get payment in one lump, of legacy and probate duty on the ascertained net value of the estate. Some such scheme would be a great convenience to the public, without sacrificing, but rather saving, the revenue.—Law Times.

VERY LIKELY!—The Irish Land Act will probably be known as the 44th and 45th of Evictoria, cap. 49.

PARDONED CONVICTS.

The following is quoted in the Times:—"The promptitude of the Home Office in releasing Johnson and Clowes is much to be commended, but it is plain that the question of granting them some pecuniary compensation will also have to be considered. The cases of Barber, Habron, and Galley show that there is sufficient precedent for such a grant, which will have to appear on the votes as a special item. But even if compensation is granted, the results of the sentence will not be wholly removed. A pardon is a mere act of grace, which leaves the judgment unreversed. There should be some proceeding whereby this record of guilt is done away with. It is stated (see "Wharton's Lexicon," tit. Pardon) that Sir Frederick Pollock, when Attorney-General, proposed that when the Crown pardons anyone adjudged guilty, on the ground that the evidence, rightly viewed, does not warrant the judgment, the convict should assign, and the Attorney-General should confess, error on the record, whereby the judgment would be reversed, and there would remain no record of guilt. Some formal evidence of the pardon seems necessary, for the purpose of reinstating the pardoned convict in the enjoyment of the franchises of which his conviction deprives him; for by 33 & 34 Vict., cap. 23, sec. 2, the convicted felon "shall become, and until he shall have suffered the punishment to which he had been sentenced, or shall receive a free pardon from Her Majesty, shall continue thenceforth incapable of holding any military or naval office, or any civil office under the Crown, or other public employment, or any ecclesiastical benefice, or of being elected or sitting or voting as a member of either House of Parliament, or of exercising any right of suffrage, or other Parliamentary or municipal franchise whatever within England, Wales, or Ireland." The same statute provides for the complete determination, unless the convict shall receive a free pardon within two months after conviction, or before the filling up of the office, of all emoluments whether derived from any public office; but not a word is said as to compensation in case of pardon after the filling up of the office; for such compensation is entirely outside the law, which refuses to admit the possibility of a mistaken conviction. Even the case of an innocent convict being condemned to pay the costs of the prosecution is left unprovided for. As the law now stands such costs are wholly irrecoverable, unless there be a private prosecutor, and the prosecution be malicious."

IMPLIED CONTRACT THAT GOODS SOLD BY A MANUFACTURER ARE OF HIS OWN MAKE.

In the recent case of the West Stockton Iron Co. v. Nielson & Maxwell (July 8, 1880, 7 Ret. 1055) a point of considerable importance was decided by the Second Division of the Court of Session. It was there held that when a manufacturer tenders goods of equal value with those manufactured by himself, in implement of a contract for the sale of such goods, the purchaser is not entitled to refuse them. In other words, that there is no implied stipulation on the part of the manufacturer that the goods shall be of his own manufacture. In little more than six months the same question, under almost exactly the same circumstances, again came before the Court in Johnson & Reay v. Nichol & Son (Jan. 25, 1881, 8 Ret. 487), and the Second Division confirmed the principle previously laid down. This adjustment of the rights of manufacturers, however, did not apparently prove acceptable to the parties interested in England, and accordingly the English Courts were called upon to give a decision upon the question in Johnson & Reay v. Raylton, Dixon & Co. (June 26, 1881, 7 Law Rep. Q. B. D. 438). The facts were precisely the same as in the second case decided by the Court of Session, but the English Court of Appeal, by a majority (Bramwell, L.J., dissenting), arrived at an opposite result, holding that on the sale of goods by a manufacturer of such goods there is an implied contract that they shall be of his own manufacture. The law can hardly be considered as settled, for the House of Lords will soon be called upon to decide the question. As it stands at present, however, we have this curious and somewhat inconvenient result, that north of the Tweed manufacturers have rights and advantages which are denied them the moment they cross the Border. This in itself makes these decisions interesting, apart from the importance of the legal principle involved to the manufacturing community, and the fact that the question is entirely new, there being absolutely no previous authority either in England or Scotland for it.

The facts were in every case almost precisely the same. In the West Stockton case, the defendants, who were iron and metal merchants in Glasgow, entered into a contract with the pursuers through their brokers for the purchase and sale of 200 tons of Iron ship-plates, to be delivered during the first six months of the year 1878. The contract was contained in a bought and sold note, signed by both parties, and which specified the amount, quality, and price of the article sold, and regulated the mode and terms of delivery. The only stipulation as to quality was that it should be such as "to pass Lloyd's surveyor;" nothing was said about its being of the pursuers' own manufacture. Iron ship-plates are not kept in stock by manufacturers, but are only supplied according to specifications; and as the defenders failed to furnish specifications, as they were bound to do, delivery was not completed at the expiry of the time agreed on. It was then, of course, open to the pursuers to have cancelled the contract and sued the defenders for damages for its breach. They, however, did not see fit to do this, for the obvious reason, apparently, that with a falling market their contract was becoming more valuable; but instead they granted an extension of time with this result, that owing to things in Glasgow being "about at a standstill," specifications were still not forthcoming, and in consequence they had at length to close their works and arrange with other manufacturers to supply the plates still undelivered under the contract. They intimated this to the defenders, who, after sending specifications for a small quantity of iron, finally took up the position that they were not bound to receive any plates except those of the pursuers' own manufacture, thus raising the question which has caused such a difference of opinion. The pursuers, on receiving this intimation, raised an action for damages for breach of contract in respect that Nielson and Maxwell were bound to take delivery of the ship-plates undelivered under the contract, although not manufactured by the pursuers, and that they had failed and refused to do so. It was admitted that the iron offered was equally good, and of equal marketable value, with that of the West Stockton Co.'s own manufacture, and a proof was allowed of an alleged custom in the iron trade, whereby a manufacturer who is from any cause unable to deliver iron of his own manufacture, may deliver iron of equal value manufactured by another. The evidence, however, was unsatisfactory and conflicting, and the Lord Ordinary (Young), holding that no such custom had been established, and that the contract was for plates of the West Stockton Co.'s own manufacture, "from the very fact of its being made with them," assailed the defenders. The West Stockton Co. reclaimed, and the Second Division, by a majority, reversed this judgment. Lord Young, who in the interval had taken his seat in the Inner House, dissented, and defended his decision in the Outer House; and the late Lord Ormisdale, having been present at the hearing, declined to give an opinion; so that only three judges heard the case during its whole passage through the Court of Session, instead of the usual number of five. This circumstance is mentioned because Lord Justice Brett seems to derive comfort from the reflection that his opinion is shared by two of the judges in Scotland. He says, "I notice, however, that the Lord Ordinary and Lord Young agree with the view which I, in the end, think right." Such an oversight is no doubt highly excusable, but surely it is worth the while of those who are responsible for the correctness of the English Law Reports to have them accurate even in so trifling a manner as the names of the judges of the "Court of Sessions."

The question was not allowed to rest here, for a short time afterwards the case of Johnson & Reay v. Nicholl & Son came up before the same Division and the doctrine laid down in the West Stockton case received what may be called its finishing touches. The facts were indeed slightly different, and relying on this difference, the defenders endeavoured to show that the rule formerly laid down should not be applied here. They were unsuccessful, however, the Court again holding that they must accept the iron offered. Though expressly recognising the case to be governed by the previous decision, Lord Craighill, who had taken the place of Lord Gifford, delivered an opinion in support of the judgment, which must be held to express his independent view. Its reasoning is characterised by Lord Justice Bramwell as "unanswerable."

So stood the law in Scotland. The "Court of Sessions" had trampled on the rights of the unhappy purchasers when they bethought themselves of appealing for justice to the Courts across the Border. Accordingly Messrs. Rayton, Dixon, & Co., a firm of ship-builders in Middlesborough, who had a contract with Johnson & Reay, mutatis mutandis, in precisely the same terms as that of Nicholl & Son, invited the manufacturers to make good their claim according to the law of England. Johnson & Reay accepted the invitation and the case was tried at the last Spring York Assizes before Mr. Justice Manisty. The defendants admitted that the plates would be substantially as good as if manufactured by the plaintiffs, but they insisted that they had a right to plates of the plaintiffs' own manufacture, and offered to prove that in the iron trade there is a custom, that under a contract between a manufacturer of iron plates and a customer for the supply of plates, the seller must, in the absence of stipulation to the contrary, supply plates of his own make. This was refused, as contradicting the terms of the written contract, and the learned judge being of opinion that the contract did not import that the iron plates should be of the plaintiffs' own manufacture, gave judgment in their favour. The defendants appealed, and the Court of Appeal reversed this judgment, holding unanimously that the evidence as to a custom of the iron trade had been improperly rejected, and that the defendants were at least entitled to a new trial. It was farther held, by a majority (Bramwell, L.J., dissenting), that even without such evidence the defendants were entitled to succeed, as the contract implied that the plates to be supplied should be of the manufacture of the plaintiffs.

The facts being practically the same so far as the general principle of law is concerned, the three cases may be discussed together. It will be convenient at the outset to dismiss the question as to the existence of any custom in the iron trade, whether in favour of one side or the other. In the West Stockton case it can hardly be said to have been established that it is customary for one manufacturer to supply the plates of another, while in Johnson v. Rayton, although the evidence of a custom of an opposite kind was refused, the idea of leading it at all was clearly an afterthought; and Lord Justice Bramwell probably gauged its effect correctly, had it being allowed, when he said, "I have a strong opinion that any evidence that may be given in support of this alleged custom would be evidence to show that whenever anyone orders goods of a maker he expects that maker's make. That of course would not be enough." Taking it then, that no custom exists the only other questions which arose were these—viz., first, the question of fact, whether or not the terms of the contract contained the stipulation that the goods sold should be of the seller's own manufacture; and secondly, the question of law, whether, assuming the contract to be absolutely silent on the point, such a stipulation should be implied from the nature of the contract. In regard to the first question, the judges in both Courts may be said to have held unanimously that the purchasers were not entitled to refuse the plates tendered from any construction to be put on the terms of the contract, and it was only as to the second and more important question that any difference of opinion arose. It seems extraordinary that so important, and one would imagine so elementary, a question in mercantile law had never been decided before, yet, as Lord Justice Cotton observed, there was no authority either in the decided cases or the text-books on the subject. The question was therefore discussed on principle, and we have seen that the result was a serious conflict of judicial opinion, the decision of the Court of Session being directly opposed to that of the English Court of Appeal, though neither Court was unanimous. Up to a certain point, however, notwithstanding the great difference in the result, not only both Courts but all the judges agreed. They all agree that where the manufacturer has a peculiar make, a brand known in the market, even if he has a known name, or if it can be supposed that there is any pretium affectionis, he is bound to supply goods of his own make, even if there be no stipulation to that effect in the contract. Where the conflict of opinion commences is when none of these elements are present, where the article sold has no special repute, or name, or other distinction, but is such that one maker's make is as good as another's. The majority of the English judges, and Lord Young, held that the rule is absolute, and subject to no exception, that every manufacturer, dealing as such, is, in the absence of stipulation or custom to the contrary, bound to supply goods of his own manufacture. The majority of the Scottish judges, and Lord Justice Bramwell, held that in certain circumstances an exception should be recognised, and that if there is no peculiarity in the make or quality of the goods the manufacturer may tender those of another maker.

The difference of opinion on the Bench is the best proof that much may be said on both sides, and that it is hazardous to express any preference. On the whole, however, we venture to think that the view taken by the majority of the Scottish judges, and Bramwell, L.J., is the correct one. When parties have reduced a contract to writing, thus showing that it was entered into with a certain amount of deliberation, the law has always been slow to insert a term which the parties might have put in for themselves, and, as Lord Justice Bramwell remarks, this "ought never to be done without some most cogent consideration." Now, is there any such "cogent consideration" in this case? One can easily understand why an order for a piano-forte from Erard or Collard implies, though the condition be not expressed, that the article is to be of the manufacturer's own make. The make is different from that of other manufacturers, and the maker's name gives the article a certain value in the market. That is the reason, and apparently the sole reason, for importing any unexpressed stipulation into the contract. But in the present case this reason is entirely absent. The goods sold were admitted to be in no way peculiar either in make or as to the manufacturer's name. On the contrary, the contract stipulated for a certain standard quality, and the purchasers admitted that though they get iron of another manufacturer, they would get, so far as quality and value was concerned, exactly what was contracted for. The addition of an implied term to the contract, that the goods shall be of the manufacturer's own manufacture, can only be justified on the ground that the purchaser cannot reasonably be supposed to have gone to the manufacturer on any other footing. But is it not rather unreasonable to hold that without any rational or definite motive the purchaser should invariably select a manufacturer because he relies on getting the manufacturer's own goods? Ex hypothesi there is no peculiarity either in the make or quality, and the purchaser must be assumed to know this when he enters into the contract. What reason, then, has he for relying on getting the manufacturer's goods only?

The meaning of the decision of the English Court of Appeal is simply this, that whether rationally or irrationally, he always has such a reliance. We think this is going too far, and that a purchaser is not always impelled to buy from a manufacturer because he relies on getting his make only. If a number of business men were asked the question, they would say that they go to a particular manufacturer in many cases without a thought as to whose goods they were to be supplied with, and without any reliance whatever upon getting the manufacturer's own make. Lord Justice Brett seems to have been conscious of this difficulty, for he says, "if there be no such contract as is suggested, a manufacturer under the stated circumstances may supply goods not manufactured by himself, inferior to his own usual manufacture." He then attempts to justify the reasonableness of assuming that the purchaser always has this reliance by holding out this alternative consequence. With all respect, we think his Lordship's observations on this matter are somewhat unfounded, for it is difficult to see how a purchaser could be prejudiced in the way suggested. His interests seem sufficiently guarded by this condition, that the goods tendered, by whomsoever manufactured, must be of the quality stipulated for by the contract; and if he can show that there is any peculiarity about the goods which gives him a real interest in refusing them when not of the seller's own manufacture, the Court will not oblige him to accept them. Moreover, if he does not rely on getting the manufacturer's own goods, whether with or without reason, he can always insert a stipulation to that effect by the use of a single word, and it seems more equitable and also more convenient to lay this burden on him than to compel the seller to introduce a contract reserving the right to tender the goods of other manufacturers. There are undoubtedly very many manufacturers who turn out articles which from their nature do not and cannot possess any peculiarity or any superiority over similar articles manufactured by other makers, and it does seem a somewhat arbitrary proposition to hold that the Court will not inquire into the nature or quality of the articles at all, but will in all cases compel the manufacturer to supply those of his own make. The nature and quality, we think, are in some respects the most important feature of the contract. Anyone who contracts with a manufacturer as such knows or ought to know, what sort of goods he manufactures, and if he knows that they differ in no respect from the goods of other manufacturers, there is no hardship in making him accept another manufacturer's goods, provided they satisfy the contract as to quality. To hold otherwise would be to lay down a hard and fast rule, which undoubtedly would work unjustly in many cases, and which would be in practice very inconvenient.—Journal of Jurisprudence.

ACTING FOR MORTGAGOR AND MORTGAGEE.

The case of Cockburn v. Edwards, reported in the January number of the Law Journal Reports, is of interest primarily as showing the duties of solicitors in lending money on mortgage security to their clients. Secondly, it is of general interest as dealing with the usual form of the power of sale in a second mortgage; the question whether the difference between solicitor and client costs and party costs incurred in the very action under consideration can be allowed as a head of damage; and, finally, the treatment by the Court of Appeal of points of fact decided by the judge below. With regard to the question whether costs as between solicitor and client can be indirectly given in the nature of damages in the action, the opinions of the learned judges are very clear. The Master of the Rolls says: "All that the law gives a successful litigant is the costs between party and party. Those are all which he is entitled to receive." Lord Justice Brett relies partly on the fact that the plaintiff framed his action in tori, and lays down that "when you ask for damages, they must have been incurred and ascertained at the time of the action being brought, except in some cases when they include everything up to the time of trial; and they cannot include anything incurred in the action itself. The law disregards, and will not look at, the extra costs as between solicitor and client, because they are a mere matter of luxury and whim between a particular client and his own solicitor." Without accepting, even on so high an authority, the luxurious and whimsical character of costs as between solicitor and client, the exclusion of these costs from the damages given in the same action, endorsed also by Lord Justice Cotton must be accepted. If costs as between solicitor and client are given at all, they should be given ex nomine, and not as damages. At the same time, the eyes cannot be closed to the fact that juries constantly, in assessing damages in actions of tort, and sometimes in actions of contract, take into consideration the additional expense to which the party, in whose favour they are, will be put by having to pay a portion of his own costs. The Master of the Rolls, we think, would look with forbearance even on a judge who transgressed technicalities to this extent, as he complains of Mr. Justice Fry having embarrassed the Court of Appeal by being too conscientious in separating the items of damage which he had allowed. When judges and juries are at large in assessing general damages, the fact that extra costs will have been incurred need not be absent from their minds, although such costs cannot be specifically included among the legal heads of damage.

In the result, the damage assessed by Mr. Justice Fry at £80 were cut down to £10, and the costs as between solicitor and client given to the plaintiff by Mr. Justice Fry were disallowed. As to the costs of the action, the costs of one of the issues were given to the defendant, and the general costs to the plaintiff. No costs of the appeal were given. Probably neither party cared to disturb this position of things; but it is odd that no one seemed to remember the existence of the County Court sections as to costs. These sections, although unfamiliar in the Chancery Division, apply without distinction of Divisions, and require a certificate that the action was fit to be tried in a Superior Court when no more than £10 is recovered. No such certificate was given; although, if asked for, it would probably not have been refused considering the nature of the action. The plaintiff was a client of the defendant, who was a solicitor, and had undertaken to raise £500 for him on a mortgage of the plaintiff's house. Of this sum £450 was found by another client of Mr. Edwards, which client took a first mortgage on the house; and the remaining £50 by Mr. Edwards himself, who took a second mortgage. Next year, a further sum of £300 was advanced by the defendant, who took a third mortgage as well as a bill of sale of furniture. Both the first and the second mortgages contained an unqualified power of sale, not subject to interest being in arrear for three months, or six months' notice being given to the mortgagor. Mr. Justice Fry found, as a fact, that Mr. Edwards did not explain to Mr. Cockburn that this form of power of sale was exceptional. The Court of Appeal did not overrule this finding, but they cannot be said to have endorsed it. The Master of the Rolls went so far as to say that "if he had heard the case, sitting as a judge of first instance, he should have found that the defendant was under no liability whatever;" but "he did not think it proper to interfere with the opinion of the judge below, who had all the witnesses before him, unless he found that there had been some gross miscarriage." Lord Justice Brett says little on this head, except that the onus lay on the defendant; and Lord Justice Cotton says that "they cannot overrule the conclusion of the judge on this matter of fact." Mr. Justice Fry also came to the conclusion that an unqualified power of sale in a second mortgage was unusual. The Court of Appeal take very much the same view of this finding as of the other. The Master of the Rolls even says that "there is reason to believe that it is a common practice to insert a more stringent power of sale in subsequent mortgages than in the first mortgage; but, in the absence of any evidence that it was a settled practice, they could not hold it was right in this case without an explanation to the client." From the views thus expressed, it would seem that the Court of Appeal treated the decision of Mr. Justice Fry very much as they would treat the decision of a jury—a result to which the assimilation of practice and the use of oral evidence in Courts of first instance almost necessarily lead. The Court of Appeal, therefore, had to deal with the case on the footing that the unqualified power was unusual, and that it had not been explained to the client; and they all agreed that under these circumstances the solicitor who lends money to a client without an independent adviser being employed, is guilty of breach of duty. Lord Justice Brett is uncompromising on this as on other points of the case. He says that, "in his opinion, a solicitor would not more wisely if he did not lend money at all to his clients, it not being any part of a solicitor's business to lend money; but if he does, then, as a matter of fairness, he should not conduct the conveyancing connected with the mortgage in his own office." This is sound theory, but not to be lived up to in practice. It is difficult to know how solicitors could conduct their business unless they found investments for one set of clients and capital for another, nor how they could arrange matters between these two interests unless they sometimes made up a difference by advancing money of their own. If a second solicitor is always to be employed, not only are the costs increased, but clients are lost. A mortgage is not so very complicated a transaction but that a solicitor can be trusted to arrange its terms so as to be fair to all parties, even though he himself is one. For the future, he must consider that an absolute power of sale, even in a second mortgage, cannot be inserted without special explanation to his client the mortgagor.

Much of the time of the Court of Appeal was occupied in considering whether the plaintiff would have been better off if the power of sale had been subject to the usual qualification. The defendant contended that three months' interest was, in fact, in arrear at the date of the sale. The plaintiff replied to this that the defendant entered into possession, and that the rent received by him must be taken to be applied to the interest, relying on an opinion of Vice-Chancellor Shadwell, in Brocklehurst v. Jessopp, 7 Sim. 438. In that case the Vice-Chancellor considered that the receipt of rents by a mortgagee in possession was a payment by the mortgagor so as to revive the Statute of Limitations in respect of the debt. The opinion expressed in this case must now be considered overruled by the present, as well as by Chimney v. Evans, 9 H. L. Cas. 115, where a payment by a receiver to a mortgagee was held insufficient to take the case out of the statute. As the Master of the Rolls points out, the mortgagee in possession takes for himself what he can get, and there is no payment to him. Mr. Edwards so far succeeded on this point; but, unluckily, he had sent in an account to Mr. Cockburn, in which he set off the rent as against the interest. The consequence was that at the time of sale there was not three months' interest in arrear, and, as no notice was given before the sale, the plaintiff would have been better off under a qualified power of sale. When the heads of damage come to be examined by the Court of Appeal, they one by one dwindled away. The only one which stood the test of the criticism of the Master of the Rolls had nothing to do with the defendant's breach of duty. He had charged £10 for the cost of preparing abstract and conveyance, which was the sum agreed on with the purchaser; and the plaintiff was, of course, only bound to pay a portion of this sum. The Court, however, assessed general damages to the extent of £10—mainly, it would seem, on the ground given by Lord Justice Brett, that they ought to set their face against transactions in which a solicitor acts for both parties. The learned Lord Justice seemed also to be of opinion that there was some evidence that the value of property had risen in Ranngate. Lord Justice Cotton said that if he had tried the case "he should have thought that a very small coin was enough for the plaintiff to recover." This will probably be the prevailing opinion. The case is a hard one for Mr. Edwards; and both parties are now, no doubt, sincerely of opinion that the action ought never to have been brought.—Law Journal.

SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the Solicitors' Benevolent Association was held on the 25th inst.,

Mr. ROBERT C. LAM, Vice-President, occupied the chair.

A letter of apology, expressing regret at his inability to be present, was read from Mr. Roche, President of the Association.

Mr. ARTHUR LEW BARLES, hon. secretary, read the report of the committee, in which it was stated:—There are no new life, and only six new annual members, who joined the society last year, and during the same period an unusually large number—viz, two life and ten annual members—have died, in addition to twelve annual members who have ceased to subscribe. The society now consists of 847, as against 865 members last year, of which 55 are life and 292 annual subscribers. The sum of £400 was expended in relieving 46 cases, some of which were of a very distressing character, and necessarily, from the small means at their disposal, the committee could, in all cases, only afford temporary relief, the total amount given not averaging £10 for each recipient. The capital of the Association now consists of £3,000 Great Northern Railway Company of Ireland Four per Cent. Debenture Stock, and £442 12s. 9d. Government New Three per Cent. Stock. Efforts have for some years past been made by members of your committee to obtain the Chancery Box Fund for the society; and a sum of £85 7s. 5d., being the residue of the above-mentioned fund, was handed over to the Association. The total funds received during the past year, including the sum of £85 7s. 5d., Chancery Box money, and dividends on capital, amounted to £552 9s. 4d.

The CHAIRMAN, in moving the adoption of the report, said they must all regret very much the absence of their esteemed friend and president, Mr. William Roche. The report referred to the loss they had sustained by the death of Mr. George Beamish. A more kindly and attentive member of the committee, and a more anxious man to forward the interests of the profession and the objects of the Association never joined them. The society was now falling off in numbers, and he was sorry to say, also in subscriptions; but he hoped the hard times they had been experiencing in the country would shortly pass away, and that they would go on more prosperously than before. They had inquired into every case that came before them, and they had at all times relieved to the utmost that their funds permitted them to do. There were, however, many cases continually coming before them where the trifling sum they could contribute afforded very small relief indeed. He hoped, therefore, that gentlemen who felt an interest in their profession would come forward, and, by enrolling themselves members of this Association, enable it to meet in a hearty substantial way the claims of those who stood so much in need of its assistance.

Mr. WILLIAM J. COOPER, in seconding the resolution, observed that out of the 46 cases in which relief had been afforded during the year, only four of the applicants were the widows or families of deceased members of this Association. He thought much evil had arisen from the course that had been adopted of giving a very large amount of their funds to the families of those who were not members of the Association. It was quite right that this should be done where gentlemen had not an opportunity of becoming members of the Association, which was formed in 1863 or 1864, but it was a different thing where gentlemen had had an ample opportunity of subscribing to it and had not done so. A great deal of their money had gone to the relief of the families of such men, and he thought it operated badly. As a matter of fact, only £65, out of the £400 given during the year, was appropriated strictly, according to the rules of the trust confided to them, in the relief of the families of members of the Association. They had paid away £935 to those who in reality had no claim on the fund, except under a clause in their rules. If gentlemen did not come forward and become members they could not expect this assistance to last, and he hoped sincerely they would not be under the necessity of curtailing the relief they had afforded in order to meet the more legitimate claims made on the Association.

Mr. HENRY T. DIX, as a member of the committee, dissented from the principle laid down by Mr. Cooper. He really did not see where the benevolence lay in a number of people subscribing to a society in order that they might derive benefit themselves from it. They must be very thankful that there were not very many families of members applying. Of course the families of members had the preference, but when these had been served he thought the children of those who were not members were entitled, under the principles of the Association, to the residue. He approved of the action of the committee in giving preference to the families of members.

Mr. COOPER explained that what he meant to convey was that where gentlemen had no opportunity of becoming members of the Association their families should be freely relieved, but that at the same time they would be doing a good act in letting some of the profession know that in holding aloof they were not acting rightly, and that it would be better to subscribe to the funds of this society.

The report was then adopted.

Mr. CHARLES G. STANWELL moved the re-election of the committee for the ensuing year. They were, he said, gentlemen of high standing in their profession; they devoted much of their time and attention to the work of the Association, and he thought they were entitled to their thanks for it.

Mr. ALEXANDER D. KENNEDY seconded the motion. As auditor of the society he had had means of knowing how the affairs of the Association were managed by the committee, and he had the greatest pleasure in testifying to the admirable way in which they had been conducted. Although there was a good deal of truth in Mr. Cooper's observations, he thought the committee, so far as he could judge, had exercised very great wisdom in the way they had administered the funds. Mr. Cooper had mentioned that there were only four cases of members' families being relieved, but it should be borne in mind that that was because only four had applied, and he scarcely thought that Mr. Cooper would wish the whole £400 to be divided amongst these four. He was aware the committee had given preference to the families of members, and he thought the fact that so few of the families of members had had occasion to apply for the relief was an additional reason for their joining the society.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HENRY S. MCREEDY moved that only one general meeting of the association be held in future in each year—namely, in the month of January, and that the necessary alterations be made in Rules 8 and 16 to carry out this resolution. At the meeting in July he said, when men were out of town there was practically no business done, and he did not see the benefit of holding a meeting in July for purely formal matters at an expense of five guineas to the society.

Mr. ARTHUR L. BARLEE seconded the motion, and hoped that when they did meet in January next they would have a more favourable report to present.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. H. J. P. WEST, President of the Incorporated Law Society, having been called to the second chair, a vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Lee, and the proceedings terminated.

THE SLANDER OF A PERSON IN HIS CALLING.

(Continued from page 37, ante.)

RULE V.—The language, to be actionable, must (a) affect him in his particular calling; it is not enough that (b) his general reputation is affected thereby.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) I. R. was an auctioneer. G. said of him: "You are a deceitful rascal, a villain, and a liar. I would not trust you with an auctioneer's license. You robbed a man you called your friend; and not satisfied with £10, you robbed him of £20 a fortnight ago." Held, actionable.<sup>1</sup> II. R. was a laceman. H. said of him: "You are a rascal; you are a pitiful, sorry rascal; you are next door to breaking." Held, actionable.<sup>2</sup> III. R. was a husbandman, and T. said of him: "He owes more money than he is worth; he is run away, and broke." Held, actionable.<sup>3</sup> IV. R. was a banker, and M. said of him: "R. has had his cheques returned back unpaid." Held, actionable.<sup>4</sup> V. C. was a carpenter, and L. said of him: "He is broken and run away, and will never return again." Held, actionable.<sup>5</sup> VI. B. was a tradesman, and W. said: "He has nothing but rotten goods in his shop." Held, actionable.<sup>6</sup> VII. C. charged an attorney who collected claims against the government that he "did a good thing in his sober moments in the way of collecting soldiers' claims against the government for a fearful percentage." Held, actionable.<sup>7</sup>

In case I. the words italicised were clearly a charge of unfitness in his occupation. Cases II., III., and IV. illustrate the principle that, in occupations in which credit is essential to their prosecution, an imputation of insolvency is actionable per se.<sup>8</sup> In case V. it was argued on behalf of L. that the words were not actionable, because they did not tend to his disparagement; for he might be broken, and yet be as good a carpenter as before; that a carpenter builds upon the credit of other men; and so long as the words did not touch him in his skill and knowledge of his profession, they could not injure him. Sed per curiam. "The credit which the defendant hath in the world may be a means to support his skill; for he may not have an opportunity to show his workmanship without those materials for which he is intrusted."<sup>9</sup> As to the charge in case VI., the injury is obvious, but it is curious to note the very different result which the general rule would have brought about had the words been simply, "He has rotten goods in his shop." There are probably few storekeepers who have not among their stock some damaged or rotten goods which they either do not offer at all, or offer only at a sacrifice; but a tradesman whose whole stock was alleged to be rotten, would certainly be avoided by the public. The charge in case VII. was a direct imputation upon the attorney's honesty in his calling.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(b) I. A. was a physician, and C. said of him: "Have you heard that it is out who are the parties in the crim. con. affair that has been so long talked about, Dr. A.?" Held, not actionable.<sup>10</sup> II. D. was an attorney who had become involved in transactions on the turf, and R. said of him: "He has defrauded his creditors, and has been horsewhipped off the course at Doncaster." Held, not

(1) Ramsdale v. Greenacre, 1 F. & F. 61 (1856).

(2) Read v. Hudson, Ld. Ray. 610 (1701).

(3) Dobson v. Thornistone, 3 Mod. 113 (1696).

(4) Robinson v. Marchant, 7 Q. B. 918 (1846).

(5) Chapman v. Lamphere, 3 Mod. 155 (1687).

(6) Burnet v. Wells, 12 Mod. 420 (1700).

(7) Sanderson v. Caldwell, 45 N. Y. 398 (1871). The case was for a printed libel, but the court said that the result would not have been different if the slander had been verbal.

(8) The cases in which language imputing to persons in trades or professions, where credit is essential to their prosecution, a want of credit, responsibility or solvency, past or present, are very numerous. Most of them are collected in the third edition of Mr. Townshend's work, Slander and Libel, s. 191 and notes.

(9) Chapman v. Lamphere, 3 Mod. 155 (1687).

(10) Ayre v. Craven, 3 A. & E. 2 (1834).

actionable.<sup>1</sup> III. S. was a pork-butcher. T. said of him: "You are a bloody thief. Who stole Fraser's pigs? You did, you bloody thief, and I can prove it; you poisoned them with mustard and brimstone." Held, not actionable.<sup>2</sup> IV. B. was a stay-maker, having in his employ a female assistant. O. said of him: "The business of a stay-maker does not keep him, but the prostitution of the person in the shop; after it is shut it as bad as any bawdy-house in the town." Held, not actionable.<sup>3</sup> V. L. was a clerk of a gas company, and A. said of him: "You are a fellow, a disgrace to the town, unfit to hold your situation for your conduct with whores." Held, not actionable.<sup>4</sup> VI. F. was a dealer and speculator in land, and H. said of him: "He cheated me out of a hundred acres of land." Held, not actionable.<sup>5</sup> VII. I. was the proprietor of a public-house and garden, and M. said of him: "He is a dangerous man; he is a desperate man. I am afraid to go to his house alone. I am afraid of my life." Held, not actionable.<sup>6</sup> VIII. W. was a dancing-mistress for girls. A. said of her: "She is as much a man as I am; she got J. S. with child. She is a hermaphrodite." Held, not actionable.<sup>7</sup> IX. A. was a livery-stable keeper, and B. said of him: "You are a regular prover under bankruptcy; you are a regular bankrupt-maker." Held, not actionable.<sup>8</sup> X. F. was a physician, and S. said of him: "He is a twopenny bleeder." Held, not actionable.<sup>9</sup> XI. P. was an attorney, and J. said of him: "I have taken out a summons to tax his bill; I shall bring him to book, and have him struck off the roll." Held, not actionable.<sup>10</sup> XII. P. was an innkeeper; C. said of him: "You have stolen goods in your house, and you know it." Held, not actionable.<sup>11</sup> XIII. C. was a cooper, and K. said of him: "He is a very varlet, and a knave." Held, not actionable.<sup>12</sup>

As to case I., abstaining from acts of incontinence is no part of the profession of a physician, and the committing or not committing adultery has nothing to do with the exercise of his profession; the latter is no more his duty than the duty of every other man. If his professional skill was great, his practice would hardly suffer from such a charge. "A merchant might be under the necessity of frequenting a house in the exercise of his trade; but it would not be sufficient, without special damage, to aver that, in doing so, he had obtained access to a female living in the house, and had been criminally connected with her."<sup>13</sup> Had the words in this case been shown to have referred to the physician's taking advantage of his professional relation to commit adultery with a female patient, the result, under Rule V. would have been different.<sup>1</sup> In case II., the creditors the attorney was charged with having defrauded were those he had made in his transactions on the turf, not in his profession of an attorney. If his clients were satisfied with his skill and attention to his affairs, it would not follow that they would withdraw their business, simply because he did not pay his gambling debts. If R., instead of saying "He has defrauded his creditors," had said: "He has defrauded his clients," he might have been held. In a case in the time of Charles I., it was ruled that a man was not liable for saying of a lawyer: "Thou hast no more wit than a jackanapes." But he would substitute "law" for "wit" at his peril.<sup>2</sup> In case III. the words did not show that S. was any more an improper person to carry on the business of a pork-butcher than any other business. No improper act in his trade was charged, as would have been had the words been, "You poisoned Fraser's pigs and sold them," or "You sell tainted meat." In case IV. the words were clearly only a general imputation on his moral conduct. "After the shop was shut" was the time when his immorality was charged to be practised. Most people trouble themselves little about the morality of tradesmen, provided they are punctual, skillful, and honest in their dealings. So, in case V., the words spoken of L. did not impute to him the want of any qualification which a clerk should have, or any misconduct which would make him unfit to discharge faithfully and correctly all the duties of a clerk. In case VI., the transaction to which H. referred might have been a private dealing between the parties, and the evidence in the case showed that it was so. Case VII. presents an excellent illustration of the rule that imputations on a man's morality, temper, or general conduct, which would be injurious to him, whatever was his occupation, are not actionable. That I. was a dangerous and a desperate man might injure him; but it would no more effect his business as keeper of a house of entertainment than it would had he been a merchant, a baker, or a blacksmith. In case VIII., it was obvious to the court that the scandal was not peculiarly injurious to her profession. If, to teach dancing to girls, females were always required, and none other would be employed, the language would have been actionable; but the court took notice of the fact that men were, even more frequently than women, engaged in teaching dancing to both sexes.<sup>3</sup> The words in case IX. would not necessarily affect the plaintiff in his particular business. The words in case X. were words of mere contempt, implying, not professional ignorance, but a want of professional dignity, manifested by a petty attention to small and simple cases. In case XI., Lord Kenyon remarked that, if the words had been, "He deserves to be struck off the roll," they would have been actionable. As it was, they were spoken only with reference to an overcharge in a single bill—something not likely to seriously injure the reputation of a professional man. In case XII. it was no more dischargeable to the innkeeper than to any other person to have stolen goods in his house and to know it. On the same principle rests case XIII.

RULE VI.—Where the words have such a relation to the party's occupation that they directly tend to injure him in respect to it, they are actionable, (a) although not applied by the speaker to that occupation; but when they convey only a general imputation upon his character, equally injurious to anyone, (b) they are not actionable unless such application be made.

(1) Doyley v. Roberts, 3 Bing. N. C. 685 (1837). "These words," said Tindal, C.J., "though spoken of an attorney, do not touch him in his profession any more than they would touch a person in any other trade or profession. It is found, indeed, that the words have a tendency to injure him morally and professionally, and that is true; but it applies equally to all other professions, for a person cannot say anything disparaging of another that has not that tendency." "When the jury," said Vaughan, J., "found that these words were not spoken of the plaintiff in his character of attorney, they took the sting out of the imputation." And see Van Epps v. Jones, 50 Ga. 238 (1873).

(2) Bibley v. Twinnis, 4 Tyrw. 90 (1838).
 (3) Brayne v. Cooper, 5 M. & W. 249 (1829).
 (4) Lumby v. Allday, 1 Cr. & J. 301 (1831).
 (5) Follows v. Hunter, 20 U. C. Q. B. 322 (1861).
 (6) Ireland v. McGarrah, 1 Sandl. 155 (1847).
 (7) Weatherhead v. Armitage, 2 Lev. 233 (1879).
 (8) Alexander v. Angle, 1 Cr. & J. 143 (1830); s. c. Angle v. Alexander, 7 Bing. 122 (1830). "This does not seem to me," said Tindal, C.J., "to fall within that class of cases which relates to imputations upon a person with reference to his trade. To say of a carpenter that he is a bungler is actionable, for it imputes to him a want of skill; to say of a vendor that his goods are rotten, or that he keeps false books, which is an imputation of dishonesty in his trade, is also actionable; so likewise it is actionable to impute insolvency in a trader, which affects his credit; but the words in this case are applicable as well to a man not in trade as to a trader, and are not, therefore, actionable as referable to the plaintiff's trade."

(9) Paster v. Small, 3 Whart. 139 (1837). "He is so steady drunk he cannot get business any more." Not actionable. Anonymous, 1 Ham. 53. "He gave my child too much mercury;" "He made up the medicines wrong through jealousy, because I would not allow him to use his own judgment." Not actionable. Edsall v. Russell, 4 M. & G. 1090 (1842).

(10) Phillips v. Janson, 2 Esp. 624 (1798).
 (11) Paterson v. Collins, 11 U. C. Q. B. 63 (1853).
 (12) Oliver v. Kettle, Cro. Jac. 204 (1608).
 (13) See argument for defendant in Ayre v. Craven, supra.

(1) See Martin v. Strong, 5 A. & E. 535 (1836).
 (2) Palmer's Case, Godb. 441 (1633).
 (3) In Malone v. Stewart 15 Ohio, 319 (1846), the Supreme Court of Ohio held that to call any woman a hermaphrodite was actionable per se, replying, in answer to the objection that such a conclusion was in the teeth of all the precedents, "It is sufficient that this court will not permit so gross a wrong to pass without a remedy." In New York, on the other hand, it was held by the Court of Appeals, in 1870, that to charge a young woman with self-pollution was not actionable without proof of damage. Anonymous, 36 N. Y. 221. So far as the grossness of the charge was concerned, the cases were nearly alike; but the New York Court was content to apply the law, while the Ohio court, in an excess of chivalric indignation, was determined to vindicate the fair sufferer at any cost.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) I. A. was a brewer. B. said of him: "He is a sorry, pitiful fellow, and a rogue; he compounded his debts at five shillings in the pound." It was not shown that the words were spoken of him in his business. Held, actionable.<sup>1</sup> II. J. was a brewer, and L. said: "I will bet £5 to £1 that J. was in a sponging-house for debt within the last fortnight, and I can produce the man who locked him up; the man told me so himself." Admitting that the words were spoken of him in his private character, they were held actionable.<sup>2</sup> III. D. was a merchant, and R. said of him: "He was broke." The declaration charged that the words were spoken of and concerning him, without adding "as a merchant." Held, sufficient.<sup>3</sup> IV. F. had been employed as clerk by the firm of B. & M. On leaving them, he was employed by O. Subsequently B. said to O. that F. had become such a notorious liar that he could place no confidence in him; that he had strong cause to doubt his honesty. Held, actionable.<sup>4</sup>

(To be continued.)

COUNTY COURT ADMINISTRATION OF THE LAND LAW ACT, 1881.

In charging the Grand Jury, at the opening of the Kerry Quarter Sessions, on the 23rd inst., the County Court Judge (Mr. W. O'C. Morris), after observing that the County Court was one of concurrent jurisdiction with the Land Commissioners, proceeded to say that the County Court was an independent court of long established reputation, and therefore he thought it right to say a few words upon what he believed to be the jurisdiction of his court with regard to the Administration of the Land Act. He referred first to the jurisdiction of the court under the 21st section, which gave the power to break leases made since 1870. In order to break a lease under the section it should be established before the judge that the tenancy was one from year to year, and to this rule there was no exception. So that if a tenant were a lessee and took a new lease he was not within the section. Again, a lease made since 1870 should contain terms which in the opinion of the court were at the time of the making of the lease unreasonable or unfair, having regard to the Act of 1870. There was an idea among the profession that although the rents were unreasonable and unfair within the meaning of the Act of 1870 that that question could not be considered under this section. But the Court of Appeal have decided—and in fact the law now is—that if either the rent or conditions in the lease were unreasonable or unfair, having regard to the Act of 1870, the lease may be broken. But observe that the rent must be unreasonable or unfair at the time of the making of the lease. So though it might be unreasonable or unfair in these bad times, the court had no jurisdiction. Again, even supposing the tenant was a yearly tenant when the lease was made, and even supposing the lease was a most exorbitant document there must be a third element in the case, because the Legislature said wisely that a lease was a solemn document that was not easily to be set aside. There must be either a threat of eviction or undue influence used at the time of making the lease, and this must be proved to be connected with, as lawyers say, the factum of the lease. Referring to the question of a fair rent he would tell them, at some length, what his views were. Under the 8th section of the Act, the Court, in fixing a fair rent, must have regard to the "interests" of landlord and tenant respectively. The interest of the landlord was what lawyers called the reversion, and the rent and other incidents belonging to it, and the interest of the tenant, was popularly speaking the Tenant Right. That right was made up of the right of occupancy, the value of which in Ulster was to be measured by the custom of the Province, and in other parts of Ireland by the compensation for disturbance clauses in the Acts of 1870 and 1871, with the addition, in both cases of the tenant's improvements; and the tenant was to have that right assured to him. With reference then to the rent, if, in any given case, it had been proved, or if it could be proved, that the tenant had, or could have, the full measure of his right, then the rent would be a fair rent; but if it had been proved, or could be proved, that the defendant could not get the full interest in his right—the market price being the standard in both cases—then the rent would be an unfair or excessive rent. In other words, if the rent did not encroach on the Tenant Right, as defined, and valued as stated, it would be a fair rent; but if it did encroach on it, then it would be an illegitimate rent, and should be reduced. This seemed to him the true criterion to adopt; and he confessed he entertained a strong opinion that this was the proper construction of the statute. He would now refer, in connexion with this subject, to a clause which had been much debated, the clause known by the name of Mr. Healy. That clause enacted that no rent should "be paid or allowed" in any proceedings under this "Act, in respect of improvements made by the tenant or his predecessors in title;" and it should receive a fair, nay a liberal, interpretation. As we had seen, however, "improvements" formed a part of the Tenant Right, and no rent was to be charged on the Tenant Right, for no rent was to be charged on the improvements; and the clause, therefore, in his opinion, was merely an explanation or amplification of the cardinal idea of the Act, that the tenant's "interest" was to be kept intact and secure. Moreover, this exemption of improvements from a surcharge of rent, are subjected by the clause to three important qualifications. In the first place, the improvements must be improvements, within the meaning of the Act—that is, they must be suitable to the holding, and must add to its letting value, and furthermore they must be distinct and specific works, capable of ascertainment. From this, therefore, it followed that improvements, arising from the mere ordinary progress of good husbandry, were not within the clause, and rent, in his opinion, might very properly be surcharged in respect of these. In the second place, the improvements must have been made by the tenant "or his predecessors in title;" and, therefore, if a break in a tenancy took place, by the interposition of the landlord's estate, as upon a surrender of a lease, then the tenant could not ascend beyond that, in claiming improvements or an exemption in respect of them. This had been decided with respect to the Act of 1870, and the Act of 1881 confirmed the conclusion for the single exception it made to this doctrine—that in the 7th section—did not apply to cases within Healy's Clause. Lastly, the improvements might be "paid or compensated for otherwise;" that is, an equivalent in money or in money's worth might be given for them; and, in his opinion, the concession of a lease, or of a yearly tenancy, at a rent under the letting value, would be compensation. Finally, before leaving this question of rent, he would wish to make these general remarks. It was, he thought, a mistake that the Act did not give the Court a power to make temporary reductions of rent, for these were greatly needed in almost all cases. But there is no provision of this kind; and the Court should now measure rent with reference to the standard of ordinary years, not those of extreme adversity, nor those of extreme prosperity. Again, rent, in his judgment, should be considered with reference to the circumstances of the holding, not to those of the tenant, and whether a man has many children or not, or could live in abundance or not, seemed to him beside the question. Lastly, the rent must be measured on the assumption that the

(1) Per curiam.—"But we were all of opinion that such words, spoken of a tradesman, must greatly lessen the credit of a tradesman, and be very prejudicial to him, and therefore that they were actionable." Stanton v. Smith, 3 Ld. Ray. 1480 (1773).

(2) Jones v. Little, 7 M. & W. 428 (1841);

(3) Davis v. Buff, Cheves 17 (1859).

(4) Fowles v. Bowen, 30 N. Y. 20 (1864).

farmer was a man of average skill and intelligence, and above all if a farm had been run out by the sloth, the incapacity, or the neglect of the tenant, the landlord was not to be mulcted for this deterioration. Such were his views on the whole subject; they had not been formed without some thought and some knowledge; and they were the views of one who, as a judge, had the inestimable advantage of independence—who had nothing to fear and very little to hope—and who stood indifferent between the Crown and the people.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

(Continued from page 35, ante.)

Wilson on the Judicature Acts (2nd Edition).

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 9.

An order may now be made on summons in the Chancery Division, under 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, s. 40, requiring the attendance of a witness before an arbitrator (Clarborough v. Toothill, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 743).

Order XLVII.

Wilson on the Judicature Acts (2nd Edition), 296.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 236.

Where plaintiff had been ordered to pay costs, a four-day order was made, and leave given to the defendant, at the same time, to issue sequestration in case of non-payment on the day named (Snow v. Bolton, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 743).

Judicature Act, 1873, s. 56.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition) 46.

Wilson on the Judicature Acts (2nd Edition), 57.

Objection to part of a referee's report may be taken on the report coming before the Court for adoption. But notice of objection should be given (In re Brook, Sykes v. Brook, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 744).

Coots on Mortgage (4th Edition), 912.

A foreclosure action is not within 37 & 38 Vict., c. 57, s. 3, but is within section 1 of that Act (Harlock v. Ashberry, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 745).

Coots on Mortgage (4th Edition), 919.

Payment of rent by a tenant of a mortgagor to the mortgagor on his demand, but without the authority of the mortgagor, is sufficient to keep alive the rights of the mortgagor to foreclose (Harlock v. Ashberry, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 745).

Williams on Executors, 1,327.

A trustee, who had neglected to get in trust property, was held liable to replace shares in a company allotted in respect of other shares subject to the trust, and which had been taken up (Briggs v. Massey, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 747).

(To be continued.)

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. Joseph N. Lentaigue, Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed Secretary to the Right Hon. the Lord High Chancellor of Ireland.

Mr. David Fitzgerald, Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed Standing Counsel to the Loan Fund Board of Ireland.

CANDID.—Counsel: Why are you so very precise in your statement? Are you afraid of telling an untruth?—Witness (promptly): No, sir!—Punch.

REVIEWS.

Eason's Almanac for Ireland for 1882. Ninth Year. Dublin: W. H. Smith and Son.

The Incorporated Law Society Calendar for the year 1882. London: Published by Authority of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society. 1882.

The Lawyer's Companion and Diary, and London and Provincial Law Directory for 1882, &c. Edited by JOHN THOMPSON, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Thirty-sixth Annual Issue. London: Stevens and Sons, 119, Chancery-lane; Shaw & Sons, Fetter-lane.

The Solicitors' Diary, Almanac and Legal Directory, 1882, &c. Edited by CHARLES FORD, Esq., F.R.S.L., of the "Law Times," &c. Thirty-eighth Year of Publication. London: Published by the Proprietors, Waterlow & Sons, Limited, 95 & 96, London-wall.

ANNUAL works of reference more useful and necessary than those now before us, it would be impossible to name. They are perfectly replete with valuable information of various kinds, and in them the practical man will find facts enough and nothing but facts. First in order, we have Eason's Almanac for Ireland, which, in addition to its ordinary annual budget of topics, has this year included a Table of Judicial Fixed Rents; Thirty Year's Prices of Agricultural Produce in Ireland; a Short Account of the Census of 1881; National Revenue and Expenditure, 1861-1881, with notes on each year's Budget; the Explanatory Statement of the Land Law Act, 1881, issued by the Land Commission; and a Directory of the principal officials in Government Offices, the Law Courts, Railways, Banks, Learned Societies, Universities, &c., in Ireland. The Table of Judicial Rents, in particular, presents a most laudable attempt to supply statistics that ought long since to have been officially furnished to the public. It cannot fail to prove both useful and interesting in the highest degree; but in the absence of official information it would be impossible to prevent some errors. In details of this kind we have found the newspapers, also, not altogether reliable, and in the preparation of our own Reports we have had a good deal of trouble in correcting statements of such facts that had been previously published. We may mention, for instance, the items given by Mr. Eason at Nos. 188, 189, which will be found at variance with our Report of those cases (15 Ir. L. T. Rep. 123), but we can only say that we took special care to have our version authenticated and revised in reference to those very facts. Nowhere else than in Eason's Almanac, however, is it possible to obtain information of the kind so abundant and accurate; and, indeed, the same observation might be added in reference to most of the other matters included in the work.

The publication of the Incorporated Law Society Calendar is an enterprise which we would gladly see imitated in this country. In all things relating to solicitors, it constitutes a complete and valuable work of reference; nor, indeed, would it be easy to point out anything that could be added with advantage, either, to the Lawyer's Companion and Diary, and the Solicitor's Diary, Almanac and Directory. Those admirable works, one and all, are already well known to the profession, who will appreciate the labour devoted to improvements in this year's issue.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Report of the Fourth Annual Meeting of the American Bar Association, held at Saratoga Springs, New York, August 17th, 18th, and 19th, 1881. Philadelphia: E. C. Markley & Son, Printers, No. 422, Library-street. 1881.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

FINAL EXAMINATION FOR APPRENTICES TO SOLICITORS,
Pursuant to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (Ireland), 1866.

HILARY SITTINGS EXAMINATION, 1882.

[Every answer is to be accompanied by reasons concisely stated.]

CHANCERY DIVISION.

Mr. DIX, Examiner.

1. State some of the causes and matters which are by the Judicature Act assigned to the Chancery Division?
2. State in their order, the proceedings in an Action in the Chancery Division for the administration of personal estate, up to Final Judgment?
3. What are the chief statements in a Petition to make a Minor a Ward of Court, and what is the course of proceeding upon such Petition?
4. How do you apply to appoint a Receiver, and in your answer distinguish between the different kind of Cause or matter in which such application is made?
5. When an Administrator desires to be fully discharged from all liability in respect to such Administration, what course would you advise him to take?
6. What step can be taken by a person interested in a Sum of Government Stock to prevent its being dealt with without their knowledge?

CHANCERY DIVISION, LAND JUDGES.

Mr. FRANKS, Examiner.

1. At what stage should Draft Rental be lodged, and what should it contain?
2. State shortly the mode of procedure as to settlement of the Rental, and documents required to be produced?
3. When and on whom should the Consolidated notice to Tenants and Occupiers be served, and what should it contain?
4. In case any person interested objects to making a Conditional Order for Sale Absolute, what must be done?
5. If amount of Tithe Rent-charge to which Lands are liable be mis-stated or omitted altogether from Rental what is the result?
6. Can any one lot be sold subject to the whole of a jointure, and how could the Habendum run in such a Case?

PROBATE AND MATRIMONIAL DIVISION PRACTICE.

Mr. MAXWELL, Examiner.

1. State the practice for obtaining a Grant of Administration by a Creditor?
2. State the practice for obtaining a Grant of Administration during minority—at what age is a Minor capable of electing a Guardian to obtain such Grant?
3. When does the Grant terminate if there are several minors?
4. If a Legatee seeking Administration with the Will annexed be described in the Will as insane, what will the Court require before making a Grant to him or her.
5. If one of several Administrators become insane what is the course to be pursued in that Case?
6. Under what circumstances is an Administration "pendente lite" required, and what is the practice for obtaining such Grant?

COMMON LAW DIVISIONS PRACTICE.

Mr. BARLEN, Examiner.

1. What is the procedure necessary to compel a Plaintiff residing out of the jurisdiction to give Security for costs?

2. When a Plaintiff is directed to give Security for Costs, how does he proceed to perfect it?

3. What time has a Defendant to appear after Service of a Writ of Summons upon him—

(a.) In Actions for Debt.

(b.) In Ejectments for non-payment of Rent.

(c.) In Actions under the Summary Bills of Exchange Act.

4. Within what time must a Plaintiff deliver his Statement of Claim after he receives notice of Appearance?

5. Can a Defendant obtain an Order to remit an Action to the Quarter Sessions? and what steps (if any) taken by him in the Action preclude him from obtaining such Order?

6. What length of Notice of Trial must be given by Plaintiff to Defendant; and within what period must a Plaintiff proceed to Trial after issue joined?

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

HILARY SITTINGS, 1882.

At the Examination of Applicants seeking to become Apprentices to Solicitors, held on Thursday and Friday, the 5th and 6th of January, 1882, the undernamed candidates were adjudged by the Court of Examiners to have passed said Examination. The first five were classed, and their names were arranged in order of merit, viz. :—

- |                        |                      |
|------------------------|----------------------|
| 1. William A. Lamphier | 4. Samuel M'Cartney  |
| 2. James Duff          | 5. William H. Hudson |
| 3. Gerald S. Fayle     |                      |

The following "unclassed" candidates were allowed the Examination, and their names were arranged in alphabetical order, as follows :—

- |                      |                     |
|----------------------|---------------------|
| Philip Dunlea        | William T. Molloy   |
| John P. Flynn        | Eugene V. Mulvihill |
| Patrick J. Leahy     | William J. Roberts  |
| Francis M'Breen      | Samuel R. Roe       |
| Patrick M'Ivor       | James W. P. White   |
| Michael D. Maonamara |                     |

John J. Knowles was also allowed the Special Examination for which he had liberty to present himself.

The other candidates on the list were postponed.

HILARY SITTINGS, 1882.

At the Examination of Applicants seeking admission as Solicitors, held on Monday, the 9th, and Tuesday, the 10th of January, 1882, the Court of Examiners decided that the under named candidates should be allowed the Examination, and their names were arranged in the following order, viz. :—

- |                           |                           |
|---------------------------|---------------------------|
| 1. Edwd. H. Macardle, Jr. | 9. James R. Barklie       |
| 2. William Ford, Junr.    | 10. John Torrens          |
| 3. Thomas M'Minn          | 11. Montgomery Archdall   |
| 4. James Mulcair          | 12. David Adams           |
| 5. Charles Rouleston      | 13. Francis J. M'Cormack  |
| 6. Chris. O'C. Fitzsimon  | 14. William J. Marshall   |
| 7. George Tiernan         | 15. Charles H. Monsarratt |
| 8. John M. Whelan         | 16. Thomas J. Dunne       |

The Court of Examiners awarded a silver medal to Mr. Edward H. Macardle, Junr.; and special certificates to Messrs. William Ford, Junr., Thomas M'Minn, and James Mulcair.

FINDLATER SCHOLARSHIP.

The President and Council have awarded this Scholarship to Mr. Henry Mahaffy, Solicitor.

HENRY J. P. WEST, Esq. (President), then distributed the following prizes awarded to candidates at last Michaelmas Sittings (1881) Final and Competitive Examinations, viz. :—A silver medal to Mr. David F. Moore; and special certificates to Messrs. Michael Buggy, John S. MacNeece, Alfred F. M. Bernard, John W. F. Garvey, and Robert Scholefield; and a silver medal and £5 to Mr. Frederick George Kean.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—E. C. P. Pigott, allocate.

IN COURT.—W. C. Joseph, as to partition.—R. Bradshaw, as to receiver.—Trustee Webb, objection.—E. Le Hunte, to dismiss petition.—W. B. Armstrong, receiver.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

E. S. Graves, rental.—Assignees J. Hazelton, vouch.

TUESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. Power, rental.—W. Mathers, vouch.—M. Murphy, ditto.

WEDNESDAY.

IN COURT.—M. Horgan, objection.—T. Dowling, receiver.—H. T. Rathborne, from 25th January.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—Rev. J. Bradshaw, receiver.—R. Eanes, final schedule.—J. Morgan, receiver.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. O'Shea, rental.—E. P. Armstrong, do.—A. G. Bagot, vouch.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN COURT.—L. O. Weir, receiver.—E. Hogan, adjourned motion.—P. Kenny, do.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

P. H. Hare, rental.—W. Coleman, do.—Assignees M. M'Grath, vouch.—H. Geale, rental.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—R. Kellett, examine witness.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

L. E. Goodwin, rental.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Dunne, Catherine, of Cloyne, in the county of Cork, widow, hotel keeper, and publican. January 18; Friday, February 8, and Friday, February 17. Wm. J. and A. L. Ryan, solrs.

Fox, Edward, of Dungannon, in the county of Tyrone, baker. January 18; Friday, February 8, and Friday, February 17. Edwin Best and H. F. Leachman, solrs.

O'Shea, Nicholas, of Cloran, Fethard, in the county of Tipperary, farmer. January 18; Tuesday, February 7, and Tuesday, February 21. Frederick Croskerry and Kenny and Fitzgerald, solrs.

Shannon, Patrick, of Bridge-street, Boyle, in the county of Roscommon, grocer and provision dealer. January 10; Tuesday, January 31, and Friday, February 17. Casey and Clay, solrs.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	JANUARY
	Sat. 21	Mon. 22	Tues. 23	Wed. 24	Thur. 25	Fri. 26	Fri. 27
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Onnols ..	100-4	—	—	99-4	99-4	—	—
— 3 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— New 3 p c Stock ..	99-4	99-4	99-4	99-4	99-4	99-4	99-4
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1858 ) Traffic at ..	—	104	104	104	103-4	103-4	—
3-4 p c Jan. 1831 ) Bk. of Irel. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
BANKS.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	—	—	—	31-4	31-4	—
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	40-4	—
20 London and County ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and Westminster ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
34 Minster Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	7-4	7-4	x d	6-4	—
30 National Bank ..	—	—	—	43-4	x d	22-4	—
10 National of Ivey's (Ltd) ..	—	—	—	—	13-4	13-4	—
— Nat. Prov. of England, Lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	54	—	—	—
20 Do. do. New 1867 ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	—	30	—	—	—
25 Standard of B. &amp; A., N'd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
15-4 Union of London ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
MINES.
2-4 Wicklow Copper ..	—	—	—	—	14-4	—	—
MISCELLANEOUS.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons. Gas ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. do. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	6	—	—
6 Dub. (St) City Market Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
7 Dub. &amp; Wick. Man. Co., Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	5-4	5-4	—
TRAMWAYS.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	11	—	—	—	11	—	—
10 Leeds Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 L'pl Un'd Tram &amp; Bus Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 N'th Metr. Tramway, Lond. ..	16-4	—	—	—	—	—	—
RAILWAYS.
10 Athenry and Tuam ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and Northern Cos. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Dublin, Wicklow, &amp; W'ford ..	—	—	—	—	—	77	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	112-4	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	—	—	—	—	100-4	—
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
RAILWAY PREFERENCE.
100 Belfast &amp; N'th'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 4-1/2 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 D., W., &amp; W., 5 per cent ..	—	—	—	—	—	143	—
100 Gt. N'th'n (Ireland) gt'd 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 3-1/2 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	—	—	102	—	—	—	—
DEBENTURE STOCKS.
— Belfast &amp; Co. Down, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	104-4	104-4
— Belfast &amp; N'th'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	105	105	—
— Cork and Bandon, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4-1/2 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	—	106	—	—	—
— Do., 4-1/2 p c ..	—	—	108	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	129
— Do., 4-1/2 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	109	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4-1/2 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c ..	109	—	—	—	—	—	—
— L'derry &amp; Enniskillen 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	106	—	—
— Do., 4-1/2 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterf'd &amp; Limerick 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	103-4	—	—
MISCELLANEOUS DEBENT.
— Alliance &amp; Cons. Gas, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Belfast Office Deb., £22 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— City Deb. of £22 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dub. Port &amp; Docks, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— (1938) Rathm. &amp; Pem. M. Drain, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	101-4	—
— Do. Defd. of £22 6s 2d 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—2-1/2 per cent., 6th November, 1879.

Of Deposit—1 per cent., 10th April, 1879.

Name Days—February 14th and 28th, 1882.

Account Days—February 15th, and March 1st, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Coughs, Influenza.—The soothing properties of these medicaments render them well worthy of trial in all diseases of the lungs. In common colds and influenza the Pills taken internally and the Ointment rubbed externally are exceedingly efficacious. When influenza is epidemic this treatment is easiest, safest, and surest. Holloway's Pills and Ointment purify the blood, remove all obstructions to its free circulation through the lungs, relieve the over-gorged air-tubes, and render respiration free without reducing the strength, irritating the nerves, or depressing the spirits. Such are the ready means of saving suffering when afflicted with colds, coughs, bronchitis, and other complaints by which so many are seriously and permanently afflicted in most countries.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

KENNY—January 24, at Fitzwilliam-place, the wife of William Kenny, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a son.
M'MASTER—January 26, at Northumberland-road, the wife of J. Boyle M'Master, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a daughter.
PICKERING—At Summer-hill, Dublin, the wife of A. C. Pickering, Esq., late 9th Regiment, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.

DEATHS.

COCHRANE—January 21, at his residence, Charlemont-place, Armagh, George C. Cochrane, Esq., solicitor.
MURPHY—January 24, at his brother's residence, Marcus-square, Newry, James Murphy, Esq., solicitor.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET.

37

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO., LIMITED.

SECURITY, &c.
RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—
39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 959

THE GUARANTEE SOCIETY OF LONDON,

Empowered by Special Act of Parliament—Session of 1842,
 For providing Security for Parties in Situations of Trust.
WM. G. DU BEDAT & SONS (Agents for Ireland,
 Also Agents to the Liverpool, London, and Globe Fire and Life Insurance Company).

Government Stock and Sharebrokers.
1 and 2, FOSTER-PLACE, DUBLIN. 812

THE EDINBURGH LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY,

ESTABLISHED 1823

(Being the oldest Life Office but one in Scotland).

Assurances in force at 31st March, 1881, .. .. £6,000,000
 Income at that date, .. .. £248,148
 Accumulated Funds over, .. .. £1,729,841

Proposals completed before 31st March next will rank for Four Years' Bonus at the next division.

The New Terminable Premium Plan at whole Life Rates is explained in a Special Prospectus, which can be had on application to—
WILLIAM B. MARTIN, Res. Secretary,
66, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin.

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY,

52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off Incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Eight Hundred and Fifty thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 3 per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.

Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached. The rates of interest will be 3½ per cent. when taken for one year, and 4 per cent. for two or more years.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz. :—

The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgages of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.

52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin. 954

£10 TO £1,000 IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days. Two UNERRING RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free.
 Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

WANTED a Loan of £2,000 on Landed Property, producing a Net Rental of over £1,000 per annum. For full particulars apply to L. P., IRISH LAW TIMES Office. 30

NOTICE OF REMOVAL:

E. MULVIHILL, Solicitor, having removed to Listowel, has changed his Registered Office from 6, North Great George's-street to 44, LOWER ORMOND-QUAY. 26

WANTS:

SHORTHAND CLERK.

WANTED by a Solicitor in the North of Ireland a Shorthand Clerk capable of keeping Cost Books and assisting in the General Business of the Office. None need apply save those whose character and competency will bear the strictest investigation. Replies enclosing copies of Testimonials and stating Salary expected to be addressed to "Solicitor," care of W. H. SMITH & SON, Advertising Agents, 80, Abbey-street, Dublin. 28

A SHORTHAND WRITER is desirous of meeting with a person requiring his services in the evenings. Address—B. A., 26, Longwood-avenue. 25

PUBLIC NOTICES:

THE SIMPLEX PRINTER

Will take 50 or more Copies of any Writing or Drawing in Violet, Green, Blue-Black, or Red, in ten minutes, and, unlike the great number of "Graphs" now before the Public, it does not require washing or remelting, but when the desired number of copies have been taken the remaining ink will sink into the plate, leaving the surface clear and ready for another. It is clean in use, and, having a raised level surface, presents a great advantage for using roller and allowing a copy to be taken in the copying book.

Prices—8vo, 5s.; 4to, 9s.; cap. 11s.; folio, 16s.

GERRARD BROTHERS,
 AGENTS FOR THE SIMPLEX PRINTER,
37, STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 188

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES AND INVESTIGATIONS

CONDUCTED BY

MR. THOMAS DEANE,

17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange),
 Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.
 Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.
 References.

ESTABLISHED 1878.

167

STOKES BROTHERS,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
 LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET, DUBLIN. 293

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
78, DAME-STREET, late of 11, Essex Buildings,
 Are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
 Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

HOUSES TO BE LET OR SOLD.

Lists on application free of charge.
 No charge for placing Houses on our Books.
 Inventories taken on behalf of Tenant and Landlord.
 Auctions conducted.
 Rents collected on reasonable terms.
 Mortgages promptly negotiated.

GRAHAM AND CO.,

HOUSE AND LAND AGENTS,
209, GREAT BRUNSWICK-STREET, DUBLIN. 198

D. W. CARROLL,

44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
 Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTEPAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
 Direct in every instance from the Makers
 They are sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of

LEATHER GOODS,

Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Bioterra, Writing Cases,
 With every article connected with Stationery,
 Are sold much under usual charges. 193

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—S. HISSY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1882.

No. 784

LOSS OF GOODS BY CARRIERS.

In the case of Eyre v. Midland Great Western (of Ir.) Ry. Co., recently decided by Harrison, J., on appeal, it appeared that a railway passenger, in consequence of the non-arrival of his luggage, had been obliged to purchase various personal necessaries in substitution for those which were detained; but, in the award of damages nothing was included for this consequential loss. This rather surprised us at the time, but, on inquiry we ascertained that no claim in respect of those articles had been pressed for. We made some researches for authorities on the subject, but could find none directly in point—the nearest, which, however, are distinguishable, being British Columbia Saw Mill Co. v. Nettleship, L. R. 3 C. P. 499, 37 L. J. C. P. 235, and Walton v. Fothergill, 7 C. & P. 394; and to those cases we referred accordingly: see 15 Ir. L. T. 291. It is satisfactory that at last a decision rather more in point has been reported, which we find in last Saturday's Law Times: Millen v. Brash & Co., 45 L. T. N. S. 653. And not only may that case be collated with those already collected in our papers on remoteness of consequential damage, but on several special points in the law of carriers, to which we have previously adverted, it will be found of importance, as, indeed, Lopes, J., indicated.

The defendants were carriers from London to Rome; and on Nov. 13th, 1879, the plaintiff's agent delivered to them a trunk to be sent by rail from London to Liverpool, and then shipped in one of Bibbey's steamers for Italy. It happened that the defendants had in their possession a case of paper goods (Christmas cards) consigned to Mr. Hamburger, of New York; and by the carelessness of the defendants' servants, the trunk belonging to the plaintiff was taken to the Victoria Docks, and shipped as and for Hamburger's case to New York. The defendants did not become aware of this mistake till about the 15th of December following, on which day they wrote to Hamburger, and on the 19th the trunk arrived in New York. On the 11th of March, 1880, the miscarried trunk arrived at the defendants' offices, and, at the plaintiff's request, was retained there till June, and then delivered to the plaintiff. The plaintiff afterwards brought an action for £210 damages for the loss of the trunk and injury to its contents. The miscarriage and loss for the time were admitted, as also that some of its contents had been injured in New York, owing to the Custom House officer unpacking the trunk, and negligently and unskilfully re-packing it. It was further admitted that certain silk dresses and a sealskin jacket which it contained were articles within the Carriers Act, that their value exceeded £10, and that no declaration had been made. The jury were discharged by consent, and all questions of law and fact were left to the decision of Lopes, J., who presided at the trial, the amount of damages, in case the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict, being agreed upon, including a sum of £10 for the repurchase by the plaintiff of certain other articles of clothing in Rome at enhanced prices, to replace those contained in the trunk.

The defence resting on the Carriers Act, it was, in the first place, contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the Act did not apply, because the loss was temporary and not permanent. Lopes, J., however, observed that there was nothing in the Act or in the authorities to justify the placing of so narrow a construction on the word "loss," and, in his opinion, it was immaterial whether the loss was temporary or absolute, and, not being delivered within a reasonable time, the trunk and its contents were lost to the owner within the meaning of the Act. He cited no decisions on the subject, but the reader will do well to refer to Hearn v. London & South Western Ry. Co. (10 Ex. 793, 24 L. J. Ex. 180), holding that "loss" within the Act means total loss, and does not apply to protect the company from liability for consequential loss by reason of delay in delivery; while in Wallace v. Dublin and Belfast Junct. Ry. Co. (8 Ir. L. T. Rep. 163), a plea excusing delay in delivery upon the ground of a temporary loss of the goods, while in charge of the defendants, was held a good answer to an action for not delivering within a reasonable time. In the next place, the plaintiff contended that the Act did not apply because the defendants were not carriers of the trunk by land, the trunk having been accepted to be carried partly by land and partly by sea. But, Lopes, J., rightly held that the contract was divisible, and that the trunk was lost, within the meaning of the Act, directly it was on the road to the Victoria Docks instead of to Liverpool. As an authority for this position he referred to Le Conteur v. The London and South Western Ry. Co. (L. R. 1 Q. B. 54); to which we may add references to Pianciani v. L. & N. W. Ry. Co., 18 C. B. 225; Baxendale v. Great Eastern Ry. Co., L. R. 4 Q. B. 244; Moore v. Midland Ry. Co., 8 Ir. L. T. Rep. 165; Doolan v. Midland Ry. Co., L. R. 2 H. L. 792; London & South Western Ry. Co. v. James, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 241. Again, it was contended by the plaintiff that the defendants were not entitled to the protection of the Act because they were wrongdoers—wrongdoers in that they sent the trunk on the wrong road and not on the journey contracted for. But, Morritt v. North Eastern Ry. Co. (1 Q. B. D. 302) affords an answer to that objection; Blackburn, J., saying, "Unless it is proved the misdelivery was intentional the case is within the Act;" and Mellish, L.J., saying, "If goods by the negligence of the carrier are carried beyond the point of destination and injured, this is within the Carriers Act."

But, lastly, remained the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover the £10 for repurchase of other articles in Rome at enhanced prices, irrespective of the Carriers Act—the plaintiff contending that the Act did not apply to that part of his claim. "I think the plaintiff is right," said Lopes, J., "for this is not a loss by the carrier of the trunk, nor an injury to its contents, but damages sustained by the owner in consequence of the non-delivery within due time; it is something consequential to its loss. I do not think this £10 is within the protection of the Carriers Act. But the defendants say, if it is not within the protection of the Carriers Act, this portion of the claim is too remote. Much depends on whether it was a reasonable and necessary act of the plaintiff to buy these articles in Rome. This is a question of fact which I have to decide, and I think it was both the reasonable and necessary consequence of defendants' failure to deliver that the plaintiff should purchase what he did in Rome—a necessity arising from the non-delivery of a trunk which the defendants might fairly assume contained wearing apparel. The observations of Mellish, L.J., in the case of Le Blanch v. London and North-Western Ry. Co. (1 C. P. D. 286) are not inapplicable here. That was a case where a passenger, delayed in his journey by the want of punctuality in the arrival of the defendants' train, sought to recover the costs of a special train which he had engaged. Mellish, L.J., said: 'Now one mode of determining what, under the circumstances, was reasonable is to consider whether the expenditure was one which any person in the position of the plaintiff would have been likely to incur if he had missed the train through his own fault, and not through the fault of the railway company.' I think the plaintiff would have gone to the same expense and bought the same articles for the use of his wife if there had been no railway company to look to, and if the trunk had been lost by his own fault. There was nothing extravagant or unreasonable in his so doing. I do not think these damages too remote." This conclusion seems to us to be fortified by the cases of Walton v. Fothergill and British Columbia Saw Mill Co. v. Nettleship, to which we referred at the outset; the former case seeming to hold that, if the plaintiff, in order to perform a contract, was forced to buy other goods at an increased price, in consequence of the non-arrival of those which the defendant had contracted to carry, this would be such a natural result of the defendants' neglect as to entitle him to recover his loss; while in the latter case the court considered the plaintiffs entitled to recover the sum necessarily expended in replacing the lost box of machinery there in question. Nor can we any longer deem it doubtful that in Eyre v. Midland Great Western Ry. Co. (15 Ir. L. T. 291) the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover for the loss incurred by having to replace the personal necessaries contained in his trunk.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—II.

(Continued from page 33, ante.)

Receipt for Consideration.

In our last article we dealt with conditions of sale, and some points relating to conveyances in general, and finally with regard to covenants for title in conveyances on sale. Next in order comes the receipt: this should be indorsed on the deed, as usual, notwithstanding sects. 54, 55; and when it is absent the deed should be inspected, to see whether any form of receipt has been indorsed, and inquiry should be made as to why it has not been signed.

These remarks do not apply to the statutory mortgages and transfers, given in the third schedule to the Act, nor to conveyances which previously to the Act, had often no indorsed receipt; such as those by railway companies, and registered building societies. Probably the statement, in the body of the deed, that no receipt was intended to be indorsed, which was sometimes inserted in conveyances by companies (Davidson, vol. ii. Part I., 4th edit. 595), will now be omitted in such cases, while it is not unlikely that it will be inserted in ordinary conveyances where it is desired to take advantage of the new enactment, and yet avoid all cause for suspicion.

Completion of Purchase.

By sect. 56 it will not, in future, be necessary on completion of a purchase, whether the contract was made before or after the 1st Jan., 1882, for the purchaser's solicitor to produce any authority to receive the purchase money, if he produces the purchase deed executed, and the indorsed receipt signed, by the person entitled to give a receipt for the purchase money.

The Act seems to make execution of the deed, if it contains a receipt, sufficient without signature of indorsed receipt, but whether this is accepted will depend on circumstances.

It should be observed that this section will not protect payments to an accountant or other agent not being a solicitor, nor apparently to a solicitor's clerk; so caution will be necessary in dealing with strangers. Also the money should not be paid until the deed is executed by all necessary parties.

A purchaser can protect himself in some cases against paying on a forged receipt by appointing at his own expense a person to attest the execution (sect. 8).

Mortgages.

The provisions of the Act, obliging a mortgagee to transfer his mortgage if required by his mortgagor (sect. 15), and to produce his deeds at the mortgagor's cost (sect. 16), take effect notwithstanding stipulation to the contrary; so they are beyond the range of practical conveyancing.

Mortgages—Consolidation.

But by sect. 17 (2) a stipulation will prevent the Act from abolishing the right to consolidate, if it is inserted in one of the deeds. Probably in a first mortgage no stipulation will be inserted, but in the next mortgage between the same parties on another property, a provision in favour of consolidation or a further charge on the property previously mortgaged will be introduced.

Mortgages—Leasing Powers.

The next section (s. 18) of the Act contains provisions relating to mortgages of land (see s. 2, ii.), which ought in most cases to be carefully excluded; and this must be done by express words, sect. 18, sub-sects. (13) (14). We hope the Legislature will soon see fit to materially alter this section.

It empowers a mortgagor in possession to lease for twenty-one years; and, if the lessee agrees to erect, improve, or repair buildings within five years, the lease may be for ninety-nine years. The evident object of the Act is to facilitate leases, and to secure that, as far as possible, no land should be without some person who can freely lease as owner. Compare sect. 41 as to infants, and the Settled Estates Act, 1877.

The Act, it is true, requires that the lease shall take effect in possession within twelve months, that the best rent shall be reserved, that there shall be a condition for re-entry on nonpayment of rent, and that a counterpart shall be executed by the lessee and delivered to the mortgagor, who is bound within a month to hand it to the first mortgagee. In a building lease a peppercorn rent may be reserved for five years, sect. 18, sub-sect. (5) to (11).

But in most mortgages, and especially in small ones, it would be dangerous to mortgagees to leave such wide powers in the hands of mortgagors. It would open a door to fraud and collusion, and endanger both principal and interest. The provision of sub-sect. (17) applying this section "as far as circumstances admit" to any letting, and to an agreement, whether in writing or not, for leasing or letting, seems dangerous as well as vague. It makes it difficult for any mortgagee attempting to foreclose, or to use his power of sale, to tell what difficulties he might meet with from persons declaring that they were entitled to some kind of tenancy under the mortgagor. The omission by the mortgagor to deliver the counterpart of the lease to the mortgagee does not affect the validity of the lease (11).

The Act gives the leasing powers both to the mortgagor in possession, and to all mortgagees while respectively in possession; so that in the mortgage deed not only the leasing powers of the mortgagor, but of all subsequent mortgagees should be excluded. In wording the clause the draftsmen must bear in mind the extended meaning of the word mortgage by sect. 2 (vi.). The mortgagee need not exclude the power of leasing which the Act gives to himself, but it will sometimes need supplementing.

The powers given by sect. 18 apparently apply to charges, whether made by deed or otherwise. At least the word "mortgage" has this extended meaning by sect. 2 (vi.), and the express mention of the "mortgage deed" in sect. 19 (i) assists this view, but the use of the word "deed" in sub-sects. (13) (14) of sect. 18 throw some doubt upon it. On the whole, it will clearly be prudent for persons taking equitable charges to exclude the leasing powers of the mortgagor and his subsequent mortgagees.

It would certainly not meet the views of many firms or houses, giving temporary accommodation to a client or customer, to find that, shortly after the deposit of deeds, the land was leased at a peppercorn rent for five years for building. Where there is no deed the power can be excluded by any writing signed by the mortgagor and mortgagee, sect. 18 (13). This should be drawn up even in the case of deposits formerly made without any writing. But it must be remembered that, in register counties, the question of registration will have to be considered: see Dart, 179; Credland v. Potter, L. Rep. 10 Ch. App. 8; 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 522. Where there is a mortgage or charge by deed it will be best to exclude the leasing powers by a clause inserted in the deed itself. By sect. 18 (13) they may be excluded by a provision "in the mortgage deed or otherwise in writing" but doubts may be raised as to whether the deed can be legally varied otherwise than by deed.

It will be seen that the mortgagor has these powers of leasing against every "incumbrancer," so that every incumbrancer should exclude them: see sect. 2 (vii.).

In those mortgages where it is desired to give the mortgagor leasing powers the statutory power will be often insufficient. The term of ninety-nine years is too short for some districts, and there is no power to grant mining leases, or leases at fee-farm rents. Such additional powers may be conferred in the mortgage deed by way of supplement, sect. 18 (14). Compare Supplementary Form in Wolst. & T. 181, and Davidson, vol. ii., 3rd edit. 900.

In case of mortgages made before the Act, where it is desired to give all, or some, of the leasing powers of this section, sub-sect. (16) affords a convenient mode of so doing. For form see Wolst. & T. 181, which, it should be observed, is by deed.

The Act will not enable a tenant for life, or any mortgagee of his life estate, of his or their own authority, to make a lease binding on the reversioner, s. 18, sub-sect. (15), except apparently leases not exceeding twenty-one years under sect. 46 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877. Where the settlement was made after the 1st Nov. 1856 (Settled Estates Act, sect. 57), such a lease must be in conformity with the Settled Estates Act, as well as with the Act we are discussing.

Where partial alienation without consent of some person would work a forfeiture, as is often the case in leaseholds, the power of leasing under this section should be altogether excluded. This should be done in the interest both of mortgagor and mortgagee. Or if preferred, a clause can be inserted making the obtaining of the previous consent a condition precedent to the granting of any lease.

Mortgages—Sale, Insurance, Timber, Receiver.

By sects. 19-24 a mortgagee, where the mortgage is made by deed, will have powers of sale, insurance, of appointing receiver, and of cutting timber. Considering how widely the word mortgage is defined (s. 2, vi.), and that these provisions apply to every kind of property capable of mortgage, there will doubtless be many cases where it will be necessary for mortgagors to exclude or vary the Act, and this must be done in the mortgage deed: sect. 19 (2) (3). Also mortgagors, even in ordinary mortgages of land, may object to the power of sale being exercisable at three months notice after default, instead of six months (David, ii. 862), or after interest has been in arrear two months instead of three months (Ibid. 863), and to the new clause that the power shall become immediately exercisable on breach of any provision in the deed other than the covenants for payment of mortgage money and interest. In some cases this seems likely to cause hardship: Clerke & Brett, 77.

Where a lessor is also mortgagee by deed of the tenant's interest, it may be convenient to insert some of the provisions of the lease in the mortgage, as though the condition of re-entry in the lease may be relieved against under sect. 14 the power of sale can be used under sects. 19, 20. This plan will be useful in a lease by a brewer of a public-house, where the brewer also lends money to the tenant. The lease will usually contain stringent covenants as to the management of the house, and a condition of re-entry on breach of them. But under sect. 14 the tenant may seek relief, and, if relief should not be granted, he can put the lessor to expense and cause much delay. If now these covenants are inserted into a mortgage to the lessor, of the leasehold interest, the power of sale will at once arise on the breach (s. 20, iii.), if the mortgage money has become due previous to the breach: s. 19 (1), (i.).

Mortgagees should not exclude the powers given by sects. 19-24, and in ordinary mortgages from one person to another they may be safely relied upon, except that it will be best for all parties, where the provisions relating to insurance are not excluded, to fix a maximum sum in the deed (sect. 23); and that, where it is intended that the mortgagor shall insure, the usual provision to that effect be inserted in the deed: David, ii. 598-608; for form, Ibid. 608. The statutory provision only enables the mortgagee to insure and charge the premiums.

In the case of mortgages by way of charge, mortgages of freeholds for a term, or of leaseholds by demise, it will be seen that the power of sale is not altogether satisfactory, for it only enables the mortgagee to sell the estate or interest which is the subject of the mortgage to him, and does not, like Lord Cranworth's Act, enable him to convey or assign all the mortgagor's interest: 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 15; Hiatt v. Hillman, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 55; 19 W. R. 694; see David, ii. 637 669.

Messrs. Wolstenholme and Turner (p. 49) consider this an improvement on Lord Cranworth's Act, but we doubt whether this will be the general opinion. Hence, in mortgages by way of charge, it will be convenient to secure either that the mortgagee shall have power to convey the legal estate, or else to insert a covenant by the mortgagor to convey it upon a sale. So in mortgages of freeholds for a term, and leaseholds by demise it will be needful to insert covenants that the mortgagor will stand possessed of the reversion in trust for the purchaser of the mortgage: see David, ii. 669; and for form, Ibid. 974; see also Blythwood, vol. v. 254.

It will be well sometimes, where leasehold property is liable to forfeiture on alienation without consent, to insert a proviso against exercise of the power of sale without such consent: David, ii. 1017, 1027.

In mortgages for long terms for raising portions it will be sometimes prudent to negative the power of sale, which could hardly be exercised without considerable sacrifice in point of value: David, ii. 633, 1009.

It should be noticed that sect. 30 provides for the devolution of the legal estate in mortgaged freeholds, and of powers on death of mortgagee; and that sect. 67 supplies sufficient provisions as to notices previous to the exercise of the power of sale.

If it is intended that the receiver should have either more or less than 5 per cent. commission, a provision to that effect should be inserted: sect. 24 (6). As the receiver has powers to the extent of the mortgagor's interest, s. 24 (3), the difficulty which arises, in charges, and mortgages by demise, with regard to the power of sale will not occur here. It has been suggested that a mortgagee may be unable to put in his own receiver if a subsequent mortgagee puts in a receiver first: see Clerke & Brett, 89; but contra Wolst. & T. 53, 54. We think, however, that the receiver of the subsequent mortgage must give way to that of the prior. However, if desired a covenant by the mortgagor may be inserted that in any subsequent mortgage (see sect. 2, vi.) there shall be an agreement that the powers of the Act with reference to a receiver shall be excluded, sect. 19 (3). Notice of this should be given to any person who makes inquiries of the mortgagee with a view of making a loan on the property. It would seem that in case of leaseholds subject to forfeiture on alienation, appointment of receiver, if any of the property was underlet with consent, could not work a forfeiture: see s. 24 (2), and David. ii. 1018.

We postpone the consideration of these sections 19-24 with respect to bills of sale, and mortgages of debts.

(To be continued.)

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

(Continued from page 51, ante.)

Buckley on the Companies Acts (3rd Edition), 481.

Where a creditor claimed, and was allowed to prove, in a winding-up for certain sums, a claim against him by the liquidator being disallowed, the costs of the creditor resulting from his own claim were added to his debt, while those resulting from the liquidator's claim were paid out of the assets of the company (In re Lombard Deposit Bank, ex parte Lombard Building Society, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 749).

Theobald on Wills (2nd Edition), 607.

Where there was a gift of residue among such of the children of A. as are now alive, and fourteen named persons, and there were no children of A., held that there was no lapse, the residue being divisible amongst the fourteen persons named (In re Spiller, Spiller v. Madges, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 750).

Rogers on Mines (2nd Edition), 620.

A lessee of mines covenanting to work them "in the usual and approved manner," is not absolved from liability if he lets down the surface (Davis v. Treharne, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 665)—H. L.

Order LV., Rule 1.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 252.

Where a plaintiff recovers on one out of three items, and the defendant succeeds as to the rest, and an order is made giving the plaintiff the costs of the item recovered, and the defendant of the rest of the claim, the plaintiff is entitled to the general costs of the cause (Sparrow v. Hill, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 675)—C. A.

(To be continued.)

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Institutes of Justinian. Edited as a Recension of the Institutes of Gaius. By THOMAS ERSKINE HOLLAND, D.C.L., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law; Chichele Professor of International Law and Diplomacy, and Fellow of All Soul's College, Oxford. Second Edition. Oxford: At the Clarendon Press. 1881.

Cassell's History of England from the earliest period to the present time. With about 2,000 Illustrations. Part 77. London, Paris, and New York: Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.

The Nineteenth Century. A Monthly Review, Edited by JAMES KNOWLES. No. 60. Feb., 1882. London: C. Kegan Paul & Co.

Contemporary Review. Feb., 1882. London: Strahan and Co., Limited, Paternoster-row.

Milton's Paradise Lost. Illustrated by Gustave Doré. Edited, with Notes and a Life of Milton, by the late ROBERT VAUGHAN, D.D. London: Cassell, Petter, Galpin, & Co.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. David Galbraith, of 53, Harcourt-street, solicitor, has been appointed a Commissioner in Ireland for taking Affidavits in and for the Courts in the Province of Ontario.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

FINAL EXAMINATION FOR APPRENTICES TO SOLICITORS, Pursuant to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (Ireland), 1866.

HILARY SITTINGS EXAMINATION, 1882.

PRACTICE OF THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. NEILSON, Examiner.

1. State what must be set forth in an Affidavit to support a Petition by a Debtor to have himself adjudicated a Bankrupt?

2. Supposing a Bankrupt to be possessed of an income not derived from property how can the Court of Bankruptcy make it available for his Creditors?

3. State the Sittings to be held and the business to be done at them—

1st. In an ordinary Bankruptcy?

2nd. In a Composition after Bankruptcy?

3rd. In a Petition for arrangement?

4. If a Client stated to you that his Debtor was making away with his property and when sold he was about to go abroad, with a view to avoiding payment of the Debt, and of which you had reasonable evidence, what course would you advise the Creditor to adopt if the debt due to him amounted to £40?

5. Define who is deemed to be a secured Creditor, and what he must do to vote in a Sitting in Bankruptcy, or to present a Petition for Adjudication?

6. As to a Debtor Summons state—

1st. How it is procured?

2nd. How does it differ in its terms as to Traders and Non-traders?

3rd. What proceedings are to be taken by the person on whom the Summons is served to show cause so as to avoid an act of Bankruptcy?

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, GALWAY.

SESSION 1881-82.

The following Scholarships and Exhibitions have been awarded by the Council:—

FACULTY OF LAW.—Senior Scholarship—Mr. Michael J. Farrelly, M.A.; Junior Scholarship—First Year—Mr. Thomas E. Nelson, M.A. Exhibitions—First Year—Mr. Mark Molloy, B.A.; Mr. Timothy F. Kirwan.—By order of the President, EDWARD TOWNSEND, M.A., Registrar.

27th January, 1882.

Professor Edward Cliffe Leslie, LL.D., who for nearly thirty years filled the chair of Jurisprudence in the Queen's College, Belfast, died in that city on the 27th ult.

From the 1st of June, 1880, to the 31st of May, 1881, the number of companies registered in England, Ireland, and Scotland, was 1,427; capital, £165,208,344.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.
Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—A. G. Bagot, allocate.—Trustees R. D. King, ditto.

IN COURT.—P. Kenny, receiver.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

A. M. Miller, rental.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—F. W. Crofts, final schedule.—J. P. Kearney, receiver.—J. Power, ditto.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

E. S. Graves, rental.

WEDNESDAY.

IN COURT.—T. Dowling, from 1st.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

W. Mathers, vouch.—M. Murphy, ditto.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—R. Eames, receiver.—Administratrix J. J. Burke, final schedule.—J. A. Shields, receiver.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

D. CARLETON, . . . . . 1 lot.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. M. Hugo, rental.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—M. J. M'Kee, confirm sale.—E. Dease, delay.—Assignee M. M'Grath, allocate.

IN COURT.—T. Hignell, as to costs.—R. T. Rye, payment.—S. A. Kelly, objection.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—Assignees Cruise, final schedule.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

C. M'Gowan, rental.—R. Mullins, do.—W. Coleman, room 1st.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—H. Kellett, as to partition.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

W. T. S. Lauder, rental.—Trustees Scully, do.—De Montmorency, do.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The date of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Cooper, George William, of 13, Brighton-vale, Monkstown, in the county of Dublin, gentleman. January 17; Friday, February 17, and Tuesday, March 7. John Mathers, solr.

Hayes, Peter, of Ardavan, in the county of Wexford, farmer and cattle dealer. January 25; Friday, February 17, and Tuesday, March 7. Jas. Goff, solr.

Hopper, James, of 51, Lower George's-street, Kings'own, in the county of Dublin, boot and shoe manufacturer. January 17; Tuesday, February 7, and Tuesday, February 21. Casey and Clay, solrs.

Knox, William, of Drumneath, in the county of Down, farmer. January 3; Friday, February 17, and Tuesday, March 7. T. D. Card and Wm. Carey and Son, solrs.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	JANUARY				FEBRUARY
	Sat. 28	Mon. 30	Tues. 31	Wed. 1	Thur. 2	Fri. 3
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	99½	98½
— 3 p c Reduced ..
— New 3 p c Stock ..	99½	99½	98½	99½	98½	98½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1883 Tr 6½s. at
3½ p c Jan. 1881 Bk. of Irel.
BANKS.
100 Bank of Ireland ..		313	314
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..
20 London and County ..
20 London and Westminster ..	70		69			68½
10 Do. New ..			67
31 Monster Bank (Limited) ..		64½	64	7½	64	7
30 National Bank ..	23½		23½		23½
10 National of Liverpool (Ltd) ..		13½	23½
— Nat. Prov. of England, ltm. ..
25 Provincial Bank ..						54
20 Do. do. New 1867 ..			23
10 Royal Bank ..		29½	29½
25 Standard of B. S. A., ltd ..				56½		55½
15½ Union of London ..
STEAM.
100 City of Dublin ..						110
50 Dublin &amp; Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co. ..	58
MINES.
2½ Wicklow Copper ..
MISCELLANEOUS.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons. Gas ..
— Do. do. ..
4 Arnott &amp; Co., lited ..
— Dublin Artisan Dwellings ..			9½
6 Dub. (St'h) City Market Co. ..
7 Dub. &amp; Wick. Man. Co., ltd ..
8 Goulding &amp; Co., lited ..				8½
4 National Discount, lrs., Ntd ..		4½	4	4½
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance ..
TRAMWAYS.
10 Belfast Trams ..
10 Dublin United Tramways ..				11
10 Leeds Trams ..
10 L'pl Un'ld Tram &amp; Bus l'ld ..					11½	11½
10 N'th Metr. Tramway, Lond. ..						10½
10 Provincial Trams, ltm. ..
RAILWAYS.
10 Athenry and Tuam ..
50 Belfast and County Down ..
50 Belfast and Northern Cos. ..
100 Dubla. W'klow, &amp; W'ford ..
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	118½				117	117
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	110		100½		109½	109½
100 Midland Gt. Western ..		82	82½
50 Waterford and Limerick ..			81
RAILWAY PREFERENCE.
100 Belfast &amp; N'th'n Cos, 4 p c ..
100 Do., 4½ p c ..
100 D., W., &amp; W., 6 per cent ..				144		145
100 Gt. N'th'n (Irlnd) g't'd 4 p c ..
100 Do., 3½ p c ..
100 Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..				102½
DEBENTURE STOCKS.
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..		106			106
— Do., 4½ p c ..
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c ..		109				108½
— L'derry &amp; Enniskillen 5 p c ..
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..				106
— Navan &amp; Kingscrt 4 5 p c ..
— Do., B, 5 p c ..				65
— Waterford &amp; Central 5 p c ..				108
MISCELLANEOUS DEBENT.
Alliance &amp; Cons. Gas, 4 p c ..
Ballast Office Deb., £92 6s 2d, 4 p c ..				94
City Deb. of £92 6s 2d, 4 p c ..				92½	92
Dub. Port &amp; Dock, 4½ p c ..

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate.—Of Discount—3½ per cent., 6th November, 1879.
Of Deposit—1 per cent., 10th April, 1879.

Name Days—February 14th and 28th, 1882.
Account Days—February 15th, and March 1st, 1882.
Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Pills.—Enfeebled Existence.—This medicine embraces every attribute required in a general and domestic remedy; it overturns the foundations of disease laid by defective food and impure air. In obstructions or congestions of the liver, lungs, bowels, or any other organs, these Pills are especially serviceable and eminently successful. They should be kept in readiness in every family, as they are a medicine without a fault for young persons and those of feeble constitutions. They never cause pain, or irritate the most sensitive nerves, or most tender bowels. Holloway's Pills are the best known purifiers of the blood, and the best promoters of absorption and secretion, and remove all poisonous and abnoxious particles from both solids and fluids.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

DALY—January 27, at Ballinrobe, the wife of P. J. B. Daly, Esq., solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

HENCHY and HOIT—January 31, at St Peter's Church, by the Rev. Morgan W. Jellett, LL.D., John R. Henchy, Esq., of Dublin, to Mary Elizabeth (Lillie), eldest daughter of H. Hoit, Esq., barrister-at-law.

MALLEY and PARKER—January 31, at St. George's Church, by the Rev. Latham C. Warren, Rector, George Alexander Malley, Esq., Straide Hill, County Mayo, second son of George Orme Malley, Esq., Q.C., to Frances Thomazine Parker, second daughter of the late John Parker, Esq., solicitor, Mountmellick.

RATTON and TIERNEY—January 25, at the Pro-Cathedral, Marlborough-street, by the Rev. John Byrne, C.C., St. Joseph's, Berkeley-street, assisted by the Rev. Robert F. Conlan, C.C., and the Rev. Alfred Murphy, S.J., John de Verde Ratton, Colonial Medical Service, younger son of the late Surgeon-Major James Alban Ratton, 3rd Madras Light Cavalry, to Susan, eldest daughter of Francis Tierney, Esq., solicitor, Upper Gloucester-street.

DEATHS.

BROWNRIGG—January 27, at Mount-street Crescent, William Henry Browarigg, Esq., solicitor, of Elsinore, Bray.

KERNAN—January 31, at Upper Prince Edward-terrace, Blackrock, Emily, the beloved wife of Charles Kernan, Esq., solicitor.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET.

37

PUBLIC NOTICES:

THE ## SIMPLEX

PRINTER

Will take 50 or more Copies of any Writing or Drawing in Violet, Green, Blue-Black, or Red, in ten minutes, and, unlike the great number of "Graphs" now before the Public, it does not require washing or remelting, but when the desired number of copies have been taken the remaining ink will sink into the plate, leaving the surface clear and ready for another. It is clean in use, and, having a raised level surface, presents a great advantage for using roller and allowing a copy to be taken in the copying book.

Prices—8vo, 5s.; 4to, 9s.; cap. 11s.; folio, 15s.

GERRARD BROTHERS,
AGENTS FOR THE SIMPLEX PRINTER,
37, STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 188

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES AND INVESTIGATIONS

CONDUCTED BY

MR. THOMAS DEANE,

17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange).

Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.
Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.
References.

ESTABLISHED 1878. 167

STOKES BROTHERS,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.
LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS.
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN. 293

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES &amp; CO.,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
73, DAME-STREET, late of 11, ESSEX BRIDGE,
Are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

N. PETERSON &amp; SON,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.
LIVERPOOL AND LONDON CHAMBERS,
1, FOSTER-PLACE, COLLEGE-GREEN,
DUBLIN. 813

HOUSES TO BE LET OR SOLD.

Lists on application free of charge.
No charge for placing Houses on our Books.
Inventories taken on behalf of Tenant and Landlord.
Auction conducted.
Rents collected on reasonable terms.
Mortgages promptly negotiated.

GRAHAM AND CO.,
HOUSE AND LAND AGENTS,
202, GREAT BRUNSWICK-STREET, DUBLIN. 198

PUBLIC NOTICES:

D. W. CARROLL,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.
His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
Comprising Bags, Purses, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-
randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges. 193

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—S.
HUXEY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT
CO. LIMITED.

SECURITY, & C.
RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—
39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 959

THE GUARANTEE SOCIETY OF LONDON,

Empowered by Special Act of Parliament—Session of 1842.
For providing Security for Parties in Situations of Trust.
WM. G. DU BEDAT & SONS (Agents for Ireland,
Also Agents to the Liverpool, London, and Globe Fire and Life Insurance Company),
Government Stock and Sharebrokers,
1 and 2, FOSTER-PLACE, DUBLIN. 812

THE EDINBURGH LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY,

ESTABLISHED 1823

(Being the oldest Life Office but one in Scotland).

Assurances in force at 31st March, 1881,	.. ..	£6,000,000
Income at that date,	.. ..	£248,146
Accumulated Funds over,	.. ..	£1,729,841

Proposals completed before 31st March next will rank for Four Years' Bonus at the next division.

The New Terminable Premium Plan at whole Life Rates is explained in a Special Prospectus, which can be had on application to—
WILLIAM B. MARTIN, Res. Secretary,
55, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin. 31

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE
PERMANENT

BUILDING SOCIETY,

32, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off Incumbrances,
&c.

The Society has already advanced over Eight Hundred and Fifty Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 3 per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.

Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached. The rates of interest will be 3½ per cent. when taken for one year, and 4 per cent.
for two or more years.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz. :—

The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.
The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

954 ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.
52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10
TO £1,000

{ IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five
to ten times the amount invested in as many days.
Two UNERRING RULES for success, in Explanatory
Book, sent free.
Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham
House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1882.

No. 785

LIABILITY OF INNKEEPER FOR LOSS OF GUEST'S PROPERTY.

WHAT great events from little causes spring. The original and ostensible cause of the Crimean war was, in the words of her Majesty, "the key of the back door of a mosque." Leaving a bedroom door unbolted was the origin of the conflict in Herbert v. Markwell. But, like the heroes of the chill heights of the Tauric Ocheronese, the litigant innkeeper and his guest, who figure in the Law Times Reports of the 28th ult., are now at peace—concluded, let us trust, not on the principle of "leaving the door open," against which Mr. Disraeli inveighed, when he called upon her Majesty's Government, in 1855, to "shut the door, and let those who want to come in knock at the door, and then we shall have a safe and honourable peace."

Is a guest at an inn negligent in not locking his door? Such was the question presented in the case referred to (45 L. T. N. S. 649), on which three learned judges delivered elaborate judgments. The plaintiff, who was a solicitor, and his wife were staying at the defendant's hotel, and it is recorded that, on the eventful night of Sunday, the 8th of May, the plaintiff went to bed about a quarter to twelve, while his good lady had retired about an hour and a half before. Under such circumstances, we are clearly of opinion that it was, at all events, not the wife's duty to bolt the bedroom door. But, was that duty imposed on the husband? There was no necessity for having recourse to the feeble protection of "a wooden or iron pin, used to keep meat in form," as Dr. Johnson defines the instrument which was applied by the "little maid" whom Wilks has immortalised; for the door—though it had no handle on the outside, but a key that acted as a handle, and might have been prudently removed—was properly provided with a bolt. The plaintiff deposed on the virtue of his oath that he bolted the door when he went into the room, but opened it again to put out his boots. Did he then re-bolt it? He swore he did, but he exhibited some uncertainty in his evidence, and admitted that, shortly after the occurrence which gave rise to the action as next to be narrated, he said, in reply to an observation that it was impossible to unbolt the door from the inside, "If that is so, I must have made a mistake;" and he certainly showed an absence of caution in other respects, by not removing the key from the outside, and by not depositing any valuables under lock and key in the wardrobe or elsewhere in the room. Be this as it may, it was discovered next morning that his watch, which he had left on a table near the bed, and his wife's watch and some jewellery, which she had left on the dressing-table, had been abstracted. The action was brought to recover the value of the stolen property; and the jury found that the loss would not have happened if the plaintiff had used the ordinary care that might be expected from a prudent man under the circumstances, and did not happen through any wilful act or default on the part of the defendant or any servant in his employ. They assessed the value of the property at £19 10s.; and a verdict was entered for the defendant, which the plaintiff sought to have set aside, on the grounds that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the plaintiff to go to the jury, and that his negligence (if any) was not the proximate cause of the loss, which might have been avoided if the defendant had himself used proper care and diligence.

Now in Calye's case (8 Coke 32, 1 Sm. L. C. 122), it was said, "It is no excuse for the innkeeper to say that he delivered to the guest the key of the chamber in which he is lodged, and that he left the chamber door open; but he ought to keep the goods and chattels of his guest there in safety." Again, in Morgan v. Ravey (6 H. & N. 267), the defendant was held liable, though the plaintiff had forgotten to lock his door, notwithstanding notices posted up cautioning travellers to lock their doors. And in Oppenheim v. White Lion Hotel Co. (L. R. 6 C. P. 515) we find one of the judges saying, "I agree that there is no obligation on a guest at an inn to lock his bedroom door. Though it is a precaution which a prudent man would take, I am far from saying that the omission to do so alone would relieve the innkeeper from his ordinary responsibility." Those cases were cited; but there are others that might be mentioned. For instance, in Mitchell v. Woods (16 L. T. N. S. 676), we find Kelly, C.B., holding that there was no obligation on a guest to lock his door, and that, consequently, his omission so to do was not negligence. And in the American case of Classen v. Leopold (2 Sweeney, 705), we find the court saying: "Calye's case has not thus far been overruled or questioned in this State. Nor do I perceive any reason why it should be. The doctrine of the case was that the sole object of the giving to and acceptance by the guest of the key of his chamber (there being no attendant circumstances to show a different one), was to enable him to secure privacy at his pleasure; that the entrance of thieves or suspicious characters into the inn without the knowledge or consent of the innkeeper, was to be provided against by the outer door, which was under the care and control of the innkeeper, and which it was his duty so to keep as to prevent such entrance; while as to those guests who obtained entrance with the knowledge and consent of the innkeeper, as well as to the servants, it was his duty to see that they were not thieves or suspicious characters, and if he entertained doubts as to their character, to take proper precautionary measures to preserve his other guests from loss; and that guests had a right to rely on the faithful performance of these duties by the innkeeper, and to believe that they might repose in security in their chambers, with unlocked doors, and that no necessity existed for locking the doors except for the purpose of securing privacy when they might desire it. There is no reason to be derived from the present state of society, civilisation, and commerce, why the doctrine should not still hold good. The only reason why a guest should be held guilty of negligence in not locking his door is that it is easier to rob a room the door whereof is unlocked, than one the door of which is locked. This reason existed at the time of Calye's case, and it is no more apparent to courts and guests at this present day than it was then."

But, truly, the common law liability of innkeepers; on which Calye's case is the leading case, originated at a time when your Boniface was ordinarily the accomplice of cut-throats and highwaymen, while even locking your door was no protection against "a rat" in the arras, or the entry of some grim cut-purse through a secret panel in the wainscot. And as Willes, J., observed in

Oppenheim's case, Coke, in the passage already quoted from Calve's case, "evidently means that the fact that the guest having the means of securing his door, and neglecting to avail himself of them, affords the innkeeper no excuse by way of plea as matter of law." "I thought," said Bowen, J., in Herbert's case, "that, if it was any authority, it had long been killed by the judgment of Willes, J., in Oppenheim's case." And certainly, Oppenheim's case and the still later case of Spice v. Bacon (36 L. T. N. S. 896) are distinct authorities establishing that, while there is no absolute duty or obligation on a guest to lock or bolt his door, and his omission so to do is not per se negligence, it is an element to be considered by the jury with other facts which might be proved, and which taken together might amount to negligence. In accordance with this is, also, the American case of Bohler v. Owens (60 Ga. 185); and why such questions should be treated as questions of fact is well shown in Burgess v. Clements (4 M. & S. 811), where we find Lord Ellenborough saying: "I agree that if an innkeeper gives the key of his chamber to his guest, this will not dispense with his own care, or discharge him from his general responsibility as innkeeper. But if there be evidence that the guest accepted the key, and took on himself the care of the goods, surely it is for the jury to determine whether this evidence of his receiving the key proves that he did it animo custodiendi, and with a purpose of exempting the innkeeper, or whether he took it merely because the landlord forced it on him, or for the sake of securing greater privacy, in order to prevent persons from intruding themselves into his room." And see Cashill v. Wright, 2 E. & B. 891; Armistead v. Wilde, 17 Ad. & E. 261; Jones v. Jackson, 29 L. T. N. S. 399. But, as Montague Smith, J., said in Oppenheim's case: "The law in Calve's case may remain untouched. But the fact of the guest having the means of securing himself, and choosing not to use them, is one which, with the other circumstances of the case, should be left to the jury. The weight of it must, of course, depend upon the state of society at the time and place. What would be prudent in a small hotel, in a small town, might be the extreme of imprudence in a large city like Bristol, where probably three hundred bedrooms are occupied by people of all sorts." For those reasons, we ourselves are quite of the opinion arrived at in Herbert v. Markwell—that it cannot be laid down as a proposition of law that leaving the door unbolted is not evidence of negligence, but each case must depend on its own circumstances, and not bolting the door is one of those circumstances; and that here, even if leaving the door unbolted was not in itself sufficient evidence of negligence to be left to the jury, there were other circumstances which, coupled with it, would be sufficient. Nor is it to be regretted if, apart from 26 & 27 Vic., c. 41, this case should give a lesson to any future guest "who forgot to bar the door, O."

THE BLOCK IN THE IRISH LAND COURTS.

Mr. O. Raleigh Chichester writes as follows to The Times :—

"Sir,—The avenues of the Land Courts in Ireland are blocked, and danger and general inconvenience are resulting to the country at large, and to those who, whether they approve or disapprove the Act, are or will be affected by its operation. This blocking arises out of a simple cause, which is capable of easy and immediate remedy. That cause is the absence of fixed principles of assessment made known to and approved by the public.

"The fixing of 'fair rent' is a problem the solution of which is merely impossible, and happily our business can be carried on without solving it.

"Thus let the courts record in the case of each farm submitted to their jurisdiction (1) What is the gross value which can be extracted from it by the system of tillage or management approved in the district; (2) What should be the cost of production; (3) How much of the net results they adjudge to be paid as interest on improvements; (4) What proportion of the balance they adjudge to the landlord as rent.

"By such a system there would result the following advantages:—(a) Landlord and tenant would know precisely what evidence to bring forward; (b) They would have data to go upon enabling them to settle their cases out of court; (c) Principles would be laid down and applied, and their soundness and the method of their application could, if necessary, be appealed against to the final court of appeal, which is Parliament; (d) The capacity or the incapacity of the administrators of the law would become manifest.

"There is not, and probably never will be, a consensus of opinion as to the merits, justice, or policy of the Land Acts of 1870 and 1881, but confidence will in some measure return if these Acts are administered equably, according to principles which, whether approved or not by those concerned, are understood by them.

"Now, to attempt to settle matters out of court is, in my opinion, a most imprudent act, for the simple reason that we do not know on what principles the rents, &c., are being dealt with. I have some experience in land matters as landlord and tenant, and also as agent in a small way both in England and in Ireland."

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE LAND ACT.

An official return is being prepared for Parliament showing the results of the working of the Land Act in relation to rent cases from the first sittings of the Sub-Commissions up to the 20th of January. The return will supply statistics of the number of rent cases decided in each province and county, with details of the dates of the decisions, the Sub-Commissioners who adjudicated, the area, the valuation, the old rent and the new rent of each holding. A convenient summary is also a feature of the document, which will be one of much interest and value.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—III.

(Continued from page 58, ante.)

Mortgages.

In our article last week we advised that, in an ordinary mortgage of land between two persons (a) section 18 should be excluded so far as it gives leasing powers to the mortgagor and his subsequent mortgagees, (b) power of sale might be omitted; but that where the entire estate and interest of the mortgagor does not pass by the mortgage, as in charges, and in mortgages of leaseholds by demise, some supplementary provision is needful to enable the purchaser, when the power of sale is put into force, to obtain the entire estate and interest, (c) insurance provisions might be omitted, except a statement of the sum in which it is intended the mortgagee should have power to insure, unless it is desired that the mortgagor should insure, when the usual covenant must be inserted, (d) provisions as to receiver should be omitted. We may add that (e) the mortgagor may convey as "beneficial owner," and then the covenants for title may be omitted in reliance on the covenants (c) which will be implied by sect. 7. But the exact phrase "beneficial owner" must be used. But though we advise this reliance on sect. 7 in an ordinary case of mortgage of freehold land between two persons, there are several exceptions which we must discuss in detail. Also (f) the "general words" and "all estate clause" may, in general, be omitted in reliance on sects. 6, 68. For remarks on those sections, in connection with conveyances on sale, see Article I., Law Times, Jan. 7, page 167.

If desired, the words "in fee simple" may be substituted under sect. 51 for the usual words of limitation in mortgages of the fee simple, but except in statutory mortgages, where it is desirable to follow the forms in Schedule III., there can be little advantage in altering the old forms. See Article I., ubi sup.

The practical result of the above suggestions, if carried out, will be a very considerable reduction in the length of most mortgages without any loss of efficiency.

Mortgage of Leaseholds by Assignments.

Here the Act may in general be relied upon in the same way as in mortgages of freeholds. The covenants implied by use of the phrase "beneficial owner" will include covenant (D.) in sect. 7 as well as covenant (C.) Where, however, there is a restraint on alienation without consent it will sometimes be well to exclude or further modify sect. 18, and to modify power of sale. See Article II., Law Times, page 185.

Mortgage of Leaseholds by Demise.

We have already spoken in this article of the need of a supplement to the power of sale. The remarks as to cases of restraint on alienation in the preceding paragraph apply here also. For form of mortgage of leaseholds by demise, see Wolst. & T. 163.

Mortgage of Chattels.

The leasing section (sect. 18) does not apply to bills of sale, but sect. 19 does, so far as it relates to power of sale, insurance, and apparently to appointment of receiver. However, as a general rule, it will be necessary either to include in bills of sale the usual provisions, or at least largely to supplement the statute.

There must generally be added power to mortgagee to take possession on default, covenants by the mortgagor not to remove the property, to keep up its value, to permit mortgagee to enter to view; and often other provisions will be necessary.

The power of sale cannot, according to this Act, be exercised unless some one of the events mentioned in sect. 20 has happened. And it would seem in addition that the mortgage money must have become due. For sect. 19 (1, i.) only gives the power "when the mortgage money has become due," and sect. 20 limits, but does not extend, this power.

In a precedent of a bill of sale now before us (Wilson, 2nd edit., p. 91), we find the money is made payable on demand. And, instead of the three months' notice after default, required by the statute before the power of sale can be put in force, we find forty-eight hours; and instead of two months' arrears of interest, as required by the Act, we find fourteen days; while in Mr. Wilson's form a breach of covenant by the mortgagor gives an immediate power of sale in cases where, under the Act, it would seem no power of sale would arise unless there was also default in payment of the mortgage money: see sects. 19 (1), 20. Hence, either the common power of sale should be inserted, or the power of sale in sects. 19, 20, greatly modified. If the latter course is adopted it will often be found convenient to rely on sect. 67, which contains provisions as to the sufficiency of notices; but care must be taken lest, in the process of modification, that section should become inapplicable. But the addition of a few words will easily prevent this. For forms of bills of sale, see Wilson; Redman and Lyon; Wilkinson, 838; Greenwood, 180; also David, 3rd edit., vol. ii., 1183.

It will be necessary to insert covenant for insurance by the mortgagor, if it is desired that he shall insure; if, however, this is not wished, a sum should be stated in which the mortgagee may insure. See above in this article.

The power to appoint a receiver will not be of much use to the mortgagee, but it should not be excluded. A receiver appointed under this section will not take the goods out of the "order and disposition" of the mortgagor, sect. 24 (2), but this is of no consequence if the bill of sale is properly registered (41 & 42 Vict., c. 31, s. 20). As to effect of possession of receiver appointed by the court in case of unregistered bill of sale, see Taylor v. Eckersley (36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 442, L. Rep. 5 Ch. Div. 740), and Wilson, 39, 58.

A general description of the property comprised in the bill of sale will be inserted as usual. Of course, sect. 6 does not apply. The estate clause may be omitted (s. 63).

The usual covenants for title should be inserted. The covenants of sect. 7 do not include a covenant to enable the mortgagee to obtain possession (Wilson, 95; David, ii. 1136); and questions may arise as to their application to chattels.

(To be continued.)

IMPLIED CONTRACTS AS TO CHATTELS.

It so happened that towards the end of his career on the bench, Lord Justice Bramwell was called upon to differ more than once from the opinion of the majority of his colleagues. In the case of Johnson v. Raylton, recently commented upon, the learned Lord Justice was unable to agree with the opinion of the majority, that the maker of goods who sells them agrees by implication to supply goods of his own making—a disagreement with which we ventured to express sympathy. Only a day or two after that case was decided, another knotty point of implied contract came before the Lords Justices in the case of Robertson v. The Amazon Tug and Lighterage Company, reported in the January number of the Law Journal Reports. On this occasion the Lords Justices were divided into the same two camps, but under banners precisely reversed. Lords Justices Brett and Cotton were for "no implied contract," while Lord Justice Bramwell on this occasion was for implying a contract.

The question arose upon a maritime agreement of very unusual form. The defendants, a tug and lighter company, whose scene of operations seems to have been the river Amazon, wanted to send out a flotilla, composed of a steam-tug and barges, to South America; and, instead of manning it for themselves, entered into an agreement with the plaintiff for the purpose. By this agreement the plaintiff contracted "to take steam-tug, towing six sailing barges, from Hull, and one small steamer from the Downs, the latter named to assist when required, to Para, Brazil," for £1,020. The plaintiff was to find officers, men, stores, and charts, and to provide for the men coming home again. Neither the steam-tug nor the small steamer were named in the contract; but it was admitted that the steam-tug intended was the Villa Bella, and the small steamer, the Galopin. The plaintiff does not appear to have provided the masters for the tugs, as, on reaching the Bay of Biscoy, the captain of the Galopin, who was employed by the company, took independent action, and deserted the expedition during rough weather. Lord Coleridge, who tried the case, and all the Lords Justices, were of opinion that this conduct was unjustifiable; and that, as the contract provided for the Galopin to assist, the plaintiff was entitled to damages if he could prove any. The real difficulty arose out of the legal effect of the behaviour of the Villa Bella. It seems that she turned out a veritable "slug" by reason of having been kept during the winter sunk in the water, and her engines and boilers being out of repair. The facts, however, tending to give her this unexpeditions character, were unknown to the company, who seem to have bought her recently. The consequence of the want of condition of the tug was said to be that the voyage took sixty days longer than it should; and the plaintiff asked for damages, to the extent of £1,200, for loss of profit. Lord Coleridge gave judgment for the plaintiff, leaving the damages to be settled by arbitration. This judgment has now been overruled; but, as one of the inconveniences of the system of judges of appeal sitting also as judges of first instance, it has been overruled by two judges, as against two other judges, themselves personally of equal authority. All the judges agree that the contract must be taken to have been made with reference to a specific ship. Little difficulty presents itself on this head. The writing was perfectly consistent with a specific ship being intended, and evidence is admissible to supplement a written agreement to the extent of showing the subject-matter of the contract. Had the contract not related to a specific ship, an even more important question would have arisen—viz, whether the term implied in bailments and contracts of sale, the subject-matter of which is unascertained, that the thing supplied shall be reasonably fit for the purpose, is implied also in the case not of a buyer or hirer of the thing in question, but of a person who undertakes to do something for the owner with it. Lord Justice Brett appears to think that the analogy between the present case and that of a hirer is perfect, while Lord Justice Cotton denies the application of the analogy. Lord Justice Bramwell admits the analogy; but is of opinion that the law, both in the present case and in the case to which it is analogous, raises an implied contract of reasonable fitness for the required purpose, whether the chattel is ascertained or not.

Lord Justice Bramwell, in fact, believes that the same reasoning, requiring the contractor to supply the chattel in a state as fit for the purpose as care and skill can make it, applies equally to the case where the chattel is specific and where it is not. As for authority, he says he is forced to rely mainly on the dictum of Lord Abinger in Smith v. Murrable, 12 Law J. Rep. Exch. 223: "No authorities are wanted; the case is one which common sense alone enables us to decide." He also claims Story as disbelieving in the distinction. The learned Lord Justice, in fact, does not argue out the matter in his usual searching way. He relies mainly on his instincts and a reductio ad absurdum. He puts the case of the ship being without a rudder, and suggests that a ship is not a ship without a rudder—a suggestion which it is difficult to accept. He puts the case of a coppered ship some of the copper of which was off, or of a ship which had a large hole in the deck, or no covering in the hatchway. The inference intended to be drawn from these illustrations is doubtless that, if we are to imply or not to imply terms in the contract according to the deduction to be made from the facts as they present themselves to the parties, it makes no difference whether the thing in question is specific or unascertained. The person who is to be put in possession of the chattel expects it to be reasonably fit for the intended possessor, and the owner knows that this is his expectation. If both parties have seen the chattel, they may be expected to contract in reference to it as it is, and must be held disentitled afterwards to complain of defects which they knew. But does not this reasoning leave out of consideration a very important principle of English law expressed in the maxim Caveat emptor? This principle belongs, to a large extent, to the class of positive laws. It is not only that the buyer or the hirer usually does have a sharp eye to the defects of what he is buying or hiring, and therefore it is reasonable to suppose that the seller assumed that his eyes were open; but that, as a matter of policy, the buyer ought to be forced to look after his own interests at the time, or suffer for it afterwards. Questions of the kind raised in Robertson v. The Amazon Tug Company depend not merely on the result to be logically collected from what the parties have done, but must also be decided with reference to what the law thinks that they ought to have done. Mr. Robertson ought to have tried the speed of the tug, and seen to the engines and boilers. When he quoted a price for taking the ship and its convoy across the Atlantic without doing so, did he not take his chance? This is one of the many conceivable suggestions of common sense, which Lord Justice Bramwell admits takes a very different shape in different persons. When the chattel in question is unascertained, the intended buyer or hirer has, of course, no opportunity of testing what he is to have, and therefore an implied obligation arises. We are inclined to think that it will be with this sort of reflection in their minds that most lawyers will rise from the perusal of the differing judgments in this case.—Law Journal.

THE SLANDER OF A PERSON IN HIS CALLING.

(Continued from page 60, ante.)

As to cases I., II., and III., it is obvious that insolvency is necessarily connected with trade. If a man cannot pay his private debts, he cannot pay his mercantile debts. The damage is the same in either case, for if a merchant be incapable of paying all his debts, whether in or out of the trade, his mercantile credit, which depends on his general solvency, must be injured. And so of case IV. The words addressed to an employer, in regard to his clerk, could properly be understood as relating to him in the capacity of clerk alone. "The idea," as said in the opinion, "that a man may speak to a merchant about the dishonesty of one employed by him, and be able to separate the charge of dishonesty from his acts as clerk, and place them upon the individual only in his private relations, is delusive."

ILLUSTRATION.

(b) J. was a superintendent of police. B. said of him: "He has been guilty of conduct unfit for publication," but not that it was in the course of his office. Held, not actionable.<sup>1</sup>

RULE VII.—It is actionable to impute (a) ignorance where learning and skill are requisite, or (b) dishonesty where integrity is indispensable, or (c) immorality where morality is absolutely required, or (d) the absence of any other qualifications which are necessary to the prosecution of a particular profession or calling.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) I. T. was an apothecary, and A. said of him: "It is a world of blood he has to answer for in this town; through his ignorance he did kill a woman and two children at S.; he has killed his patients with physic." Held, actionable.<sup>2</sup> II. C. was a physician, and H. said of him: "Thou art a drunken fool, and an ass; thou wert never a scholar, and art not worthy to speak to a scholar, and that I will prove and justify." Held, actionable.<sup>3</sup> III. B. was a midwife. W. said of her: "She is an ignorant woman, and of small practice, and very unfortunate in her way. There are few that she goes to but lie desperately ill, or die under her hands." Held, actionable.<sup>4</sup> IV. S. was a surgeon, and D. said of him: "I wonder you had him to attend you. Do you know him? There have been many inquests had upon the persons who have died because he attended them." Held, actionable.<sup>5</sup> V. J. was a physician, and R. said of him: "He killed the child by giving it too much calomel." Held, actionable.<sup>6</sup> VI. D. was an attorney. B. said of him: "What! does he pretend to be a lawyer? He is no more a lawyer than the devil." Held, actionable.<sup>7</sup> VII. P. was a barrister, and J. said of him: "He is a dunce, and will get little by the law." Held, actionable.<sup>8</sup> VIII. A. was a schoolmaster, and B. said of him: "Put not your son to him; for he will come away as very a dunce as he went." Held, actionable.<sup>9</sup> IX. R. said of F., who was a mason: "He is no mechanic; he cannot make a good wall, or do a good job of plastering; he is no workman; he is a botch." Held, actionable.<sup>10</sup>

Cases I., III., and V. impute professional incapacity to a most alarming degree. Of case II. it was said by Chief Justice Gibson, of Pennsylvania, in 1837, that

(1) James v. Brook, 9 Q. B. 7 (1846).
 (2) Tutty v. Alverts, 11 Mod. 221 (1710).
 (3) Coady v. Hignley, Cro. Car. 212 (1633); s. o. sub nom. Coady & Talley's Case, Godb. 441.
 (4) Wharton v. Brook, 1 Vent. 21 (1689).
 (5) Southee v. Denny, 1 Ex. 196 (1847).
 (6) Johnson v. Robertson, 9 Port. 436 (1839).
 (7) Doy v. Butler, 3 Wils. 59 (1770).
 (8) Peard v. Jones, Cro. Car. 282 (1625).
 (9) Watson v. Vanderlash, Het. 67 (1809).
 (10) Fitzgerald v. Redfield, 11 Barb. 464 (1868).

rules that are the growth of a country in which collegiate testimonials are the only passports to professional fame are unsuitable to the habits of a people among whom professional instruction in colleges and universities was not originally attainable; and the learned judge was not disposed to follow it as a precedent suitable to the place and time in which he spoke. The words in case IV. obviously imported that S. was so deficient of skill and care—skill and care being certainly required of a surgeon—as that he had either caused the death of his patients, or that coroner's inquests had been held in which the inquiry had been whether he had not been the cause of the death of many persons. In case VI. the imputation of a lack of qualification for his profession seems sufficiently clear. As quaintly said in the opinion of the court: "To say of an attorney he is no lawyer is a great reflection upon him, and means that he does not understand his business; besides, an attorney must have a competent knowledge of the law, or he cannot draw a common writ or declaration. And, per Yates, Justice, the words are as great a slander upon the plaintiff, and as injurious to him, as any words possibly can be." It was argued, in Case VII., that "duce" was commonly spoken of one who was dull and heavy of wit; that one so described might not be as quick and ready as others, yet might have a more deliberate and solid judgment; but all the court thought that a "duce" was a person of dull capacity and apprehension, not fit to be a lawyer. Case VIII. is clear, and Case IX. shows that the law recognizes no distinction between a learned profession and a mechanical trade in which skill is required, except in the nature of the words necessary to render the slander actionable.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(b) I. G. was a butcher. L. said of him: He uses false weights." Held, actionable.<sup>1</sup> II. B. was a merchant, and R. said of him: "He keeps false books, and I can prove it." Held, actionable.<sup>2</sup> III. T. was a corn-vendor. J. said of him: "You are a rogue and a swindling rascal; you delivered me 100 bushels of oats worse by 6d. a bushel than I bargained for." Held, actionable.<sup>3</sup> IV. F. was R.'s gamekeeper. N. said of him: "It is no wonder that we did not find any foxes in R.'s wood, because F. trapped them." Held, actionable.<sup>4</sup> V. R. was an attorney. C. said of him: "He is a cheat." Held, actionable.<sup>5</sup> VI. G. was an attorney. D. said of him: "C is a man not to be trusted in his business as an attorney. He will take fees on both sides." Held, actionable.<sup>6</sup> VII. G. was an attorney, and S. said of him: "He discloses his clients' secrets." Held, actionable.<sup>7</sup>

(To be continued.)

THE SONG OF ROLAND.—Miss Agnes Lambert contributes to the current number of The Nineteenth Century an article on the translation of the "Song of Roland," recently made by Mr. Justice O'Hagan, which gave the English-speaking world an opportunity of making acquaintance with the romantic French lay to which Miss Lambert emphatically gives the title of "the oldest Christian epic." She complains that while any schoolboy can stand a fair examination in the Homeric epics, the knowledge of even the well-read as to the deeds of arms of Roncevalles is generally in the vaguest possible condition. And yet it is to be noted that two phrases, "the blast of Roland," and "a Roland for an Oliver," have become proverbs in English. Miss Lambert traces the history of the poem, describes its scope, collates the old French with Mr. Justice O'Hagan's version, betraying analytical and critical power in her task, besides a variety of learning, which must put many a masculine reader to shame.

(1) Griffiths v. Lewis, 15 L. J. Q. B. 249 (1846).
 (2) Bachus v. Richards, 5 Johns. 477 (1809).
 (3) Thomas v. Jackson, 3 Bing. 104 (1823).
 (4) Foulger v. Newcomb, L. R. 2 Ex. 327 (1867).
 (5) Rush v. Casanrough, 2 Barr (Pa.), 187 (1846).
 (6) Chipman v. Cool, 2 Tyler, 458 (1803).
 (7) Garr v. Selden, 6 Barb. 416 (1848).

ADMISSION OF SOLICITORS.

The following gentlemen have been admitted Solicitors of the Court of Judicature:—

Mr. Charles H. Monsarrat, of 34, Westland-row, Dublin, son of Rev. H. Monsarrat, M.A.; of St. Thomas's Parsonage, Kendal, Westmoreland, England; and Mr. Montgomery Archdale, of Wiltou Bank, Kingstown, in the county of Dublin, son of Rev. H. M. Archdale, M.A., of same place.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

(Continued from page 58, ante.)

41 Vict. c. 15, s. 13.

Tenements occupied solely for trading in one house cannot be excluded from the computation of inhabited houses duty under 41 Vict. c. 15, s. 13, unless they are structurally divided from the rest (Chapman v. Royal Bank of Scotland, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 670).

Order XI., Rule 1.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 140.

Where a slander published abroad produces special damage in England, a writ for service abroad cannot issue (Bree v. Marecaux, 678)—C. A.

Order II., Rule 8.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 125.

Where the cause of action arose on the same day as, but before, the issuing of the writ, the action is well brought (Clarke v. Bradlaugh, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 678).

Elementary Education Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), s. 74.

Attendance without fees at a board school is not a "causing to attend school" within the meaning of the penal clauses of the Education Acts and bye-laws made thereunder (Saunders v. Richardson, 50 Law J. Rep. M. C. 137).

(To be continued.)

OBITUARY.

T. E. CLIFFE LESLIE, ESQ., LL.D.

The late Thomas Edward Cliffe Leslie, Esq., LL.D., Professor of Jurisprudence in the Queen's University in Ireland, who died on the 27th ult., at his residence in the Botanic Avenue, Belfast, in the fifty-sixth year of his age, was the second son of the late Rev. Edward Leslie, B.D., Rector of Annahilt, county Down, formerly prebendary and treasurer of the diocese of Dromore, by his marriage with Margaret, daughter of the Rev. Thomas E. Higginson, of Lisburn, county Antrim, and a cousin of Sir John Leslie, Bart., of Glaslough, county Monaghan, late M.P. for that county. Mr. Leslie was born in the year 1826, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he became a scholar in 1845, and took his Bachelor's degree in 1847. He was called to the Irish Bar in Easter Term 1850, and was shortly afterwards appointed Professor of Jurisprudence and Political Economy in Queen's College, Belfast. Since 1871 he had also been Examiner and Professor of Jurisprudence and Political Economy in the Queen's University in Ireland, from which University he received the causd honoris degree of Doctor of Laws. Mr. Leslie was an honorary member of the Société d'Economie Politique de Paris, and the author of "Essays in Political and Moral Philosophy."

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NORA BERR.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. Edward Greer, solicitor, of Moygannon, Warrenpoint, Assistant Land Commissioner, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the County Down.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Philosophy of Advertising: Matters worth reading and vitally concerning every present and future Advertiser.
By HENRY SELL. London: Sell's Advertising Offices, 10, Bolt-court, Fleet-street, E.O. 1882.

We have much pleasure in acknowledging the receipt of this excellent work, which is evidently compiled with great care. It contains an excellent introduction on the art of advertising, pointing out the necessity for advertising, how to prevent the useless waste of time and money in doing so, the advantages of employing an experienced agent, and much other practical and common-sense advice. As many of our readers have occasion from time to time to advertise on behalf of their clients, not only in Ireland but in Great Britain and the Colonies, we can thoroughly recommend to their notice this useful handbook of Mr. Sell—himself an eminent Advertising Agent in large practice in London. In the Appendix there is a selection of 400 of the most important newspapers published in the world.

The Life and Work of St. Paul. By F. W. FARRAR, D.D., Canon of Westminster. Illustrated. Part I. London: Cassell, Petter, & Galpin.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

FINAL EXAMINATION FOR APPRENTICES TO SOLICITORS,
Pursuant to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (Ireland), 1866.

DUBLIN HILARY SITTINGS, 1882.

[Every answer is to be accompanied by reasons concisely stated.]

COMMON LAW.

1. Explain the rule "Modus et conventio vincunt legem," and mention some of the principal restrictions and limitations to which it is subject.

2. Contracts under seal are attended with some peculiar incidents and doctrines relating to the consideration of the contract—the remedies against the real estate, and in the administration of assets—and the limitation of actions. Explain and illustrate this proposition.

3. A Contract in writing cannot be varied by extrinsic evidence. Give some examples of the application of this rule, and state for what purposes connected with a written contract extrinsic evidence is admissible.

4. Rights arising ex contractu are called primary rights—those arising ex delicto are called secondary or remedial. Explain and illustrate.

5. Where goods were sold to be paid for by a certain bill of exchange, without recourse to the buyer, in case of the bill not being paid, and the buyer knew at the time of the sale that the bill would not be paid—could the seller charge the buyer for the price of the goods in an action of debt or what other remedy would he have?

6. "The only difference between an express and an implied contract is in the mode of proof." Explain and illustrate this statement.

7. What is the limitation of the rule that money paid under a mistake of fact may be recovered back? A person having a second charge upon property paid off a prior charge in the belief that the security was valid, but it afterwards appeared, by the discovery of a will, that there was no title to the property charged. Could he recover back the money so paid?

8. Common money bonds are subject to the statute 4th & 5th Anne. Bonds with special conditions are subject to the statute 8th & 9th William III. How do these statutes respectively control them?

9. What is the meaning and effect of a memorandum of association of a company under the Companies Acts? What is a company limited by shares? What is a company limited by guarantee? What must be contained in the memorandum of association of each?

10. The power of taking in execution the body of a debtor can now be exercised in very few cases. State the provisions of the Act which now regulates this power, and when was it passed.

11. What are the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1860, respecting the assignment of a lease containing an agreement against alienation? Illustrate the effect of the section by mentioning some decisions upon it.

12. A laid an illegal wager with B, in which C agreed to take a share; B lost the wager, and A, in expectation that B would pay the amount on a certain day, advanced to C his share of the winnings. B died insolvent before the day, and the bet was never paid. Can A recover from C the amount thus advanced?

Where B entered into a composition deed together with the other creditors of A, under an agreement that A should give B his promissory note for the remainder of the debt, which was accordingly given, and the amount paid by A; can A recover such amount from B? Explain fully the reasons of your answer.

REAL PROPERTY, CONVEYANCING, AND EQUITY.

1. What are the principal provisions and what has been the effect of the statute of uses? To what extent do conveyances and settlements depend at the present time on the statute of uses?

2. Explain the state of the law which rendered the passing of the Act for the abolition of fines and recoveries, &c., desirable. Give its date and principal provisions.

3. Explain how the intention of a Testator was defeated in giving lands to one person, "and in case he shall die without issue" then to another. What statutable enactment now regulates the point?

4. The rules which are required to be observed in the creation of a contingent remainder may be reduced to two. What are they? Explain and illustrate.

5. To what maxims of Equity is the defence of purchase for valuable consideration without notice of the adverse title to be referred? Discuss the various cases in which this defence may or may not be made available.

6. Explain accurately the meaning of the following terms in the operative part of a conveyance, and the cases in which they should severally be used:—"Grant," "Release," "Surrender," "Appoint," "Bargain and Sell," "Confirm," "Assign."

7. Explain the doctrine of equity to a settlement, and state how far it is, and how far it is not, in the power of the wife to control the action of the court in reference to the property subject to this equity.

8. Give an example of an implied resulting trust and a constructive trust, and explain the principle on which each is founded.

9. The subject of equity jurisprudence has been treated under the several heads of remedial, executive, adjustive, protective, and auxiliary. Give instances of the general objects sought to be effected by the relief afforded under each head respectively.

10. What was the general rule as to the obligation of a purchaser to see to the application of the purchase-money? What enactments have affected this rule?

11. Explain the nature of satisfaction. In what three classes of cases do questions of satisfaction usually arise? Explain the distinction in the application of the doctrine to each class.

12. Draft an Assignment of Leaseholds by Trustees in Bankruptcy—the Bankrupt being a party.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN COURT.—J. Morgan, receiver.—J. A. Shiels, ditto.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

Administratrix T. Keller, rental.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—F. W. Crofts, final schedule.—J. O'Flaherty, transfer of carriage.

WEDNESDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—A. Noble, to confirm sale.

IN COURT.—M. Horgan, from 1st.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—J. M. Cochrane, receiver.—M. A. Coates, objection.—J. Doaks, receiver.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

G. S. Graves, rental.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

W. ROWLAND, . . . . . 1 lot.
H. COWLTER, . . . . . 1 "
M. DOWDES, . . . . . 8 lots.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE OMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—T. Hardy, payment.

IN COURT.—W. Goggin, from 2nd.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

S. W. Hardy, rental.—J. Callaghan, vouch.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—M. Hall, adjourned motion.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

O. Wynne, vouch.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

- Casey, James, of Mountrussell, in the county of Limerick, dairyman. January 25; Friday, February 24, and Tuesday, March 14. John L. and W. Scallan, solrs.
- Flynn, Patrick, of Coolmoynce, Fethard, in the county of Tipperary, farmer. January 20; Friday, February 17, and Tuesday March 7. John L. and W. Scallan, solrs.
- Flynn, Thomas, of Coolmoynce, Fethard, in the county of Tipperary, farmer. January 20; Friday, February 17, and Tuesday, March 7. John L. and W. Scallan, solrs.
- Guller, James, of 72, Great Victoria-street, Belfast, in the county of Antrim, builder and contractor, trading as "J. and J. Guller." January 27; Friday, February 17, and Tuesday, March 7. H. and W. Seeds and B. Thompson, solrs.
- Jordan, Martin, of Williamsgate-street, Galway, in the county of Galway, boot and shoe dealer. January 20; Friday, February 24, and Tuesday, March 14. Bouchier Eaton, solr.
- Keenan, John H., of Ballyvange, in the county of Down, farmer. January 27; Friday, February 24, and Tuesday, March 14. Henry C. Neilson, solr.
- M'Bride, William, of North-street, Belfast, in the county of Antrim, grocer. January 19; Friday, February 24, and Tuesday, March 14. Robert Kelly and Henry T. Stewart, solrs.
- Scanlan, Denis, of Whitechurch, Cappoquin, in the county of Waterford, farmer and publican. January 27; Tuesday, February, 21, and Friday, March 10. Richard Dawson, solr.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	FEBRUARY
	Sat. 4	Mon. 6	Tues. 7	Wed. 8	Thur. 9	Fri. 10
GOVERNMENT.
3 p c Consols ..	—	—	99½	99½	99½	—
2 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
New 3 p c Stock ..	98½	98½	99½	99½	98½	98½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1898 } Trfble. at ..	102½	102½	103½	103½	103½	103½
3½ p c Jan. 1821 } Bk. of Irel. ..	—	100	—	100½	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	315	—	315	315	315	—
25 Hibernian Banking Co ..	27	28	—	28½	28½	—
20 London and County (Ld'g) ..	—	75½	—	75½	—	—
20 London and W'minster, W'd ..	68½	—	68½	68½	—	68½
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	59½	—
3½ Munster Bank (Limited) ..	7	—	—	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	23½	—	—	—	—	23
10 National of Liverpool (Ld'g) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Nat. Prov. of England, Lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	51	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	—	22½	—	—
25 Standard of B. S. A., W'd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15½ Union of London ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Steam.
100 City of Dublin ..	111	111½	—	112½	112½	—
50 Dublin and Glasgow ..	—	14	—	—	—	—
50 Dublin & Liverpool Steam ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Ship Building Co. ..	—	58	—	—	—	—
20 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	5
MINEs.
2½ Wicklow Copper ..	—	—	12½	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance & Dub. Cons. Gas ..	—	—	15½	15½	—	—
8 Do. do. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott & Co. Limited ..	—	—	—	6	—	—
10 Dublin Artisan Dwellings ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dub. (S'th) City Market Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	6	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	10½	—	—	—	—
10 Leeds Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Lpl Un'ed Tram & Bus F'd ..	—	11½	11½	—	—	—
10 N'th Metr. Tramway, Lond. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Provincial Trams, Lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
10 Athlery and Tuam ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	—	39	—	—
50 Belfast and Northern Cos. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Dublin, Wicklow, & W'ford ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	117	117	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	109½	109½	109½	—	—
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	82½	—	—	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast & N'th'n Cos, 4 p c ..	—	—	101	—	101	—
100 Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 D., W., & W., 6 per cent ..	—	—	—	—	—	144
100 Gt. N'th'n (Ireland) g'd 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 3½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
200 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	—	—	102	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast & N'th'n Cos, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	104½
— Dublin & Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n & West'n 4½ p c ..	109½	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n & West'n, 4 p c ..	108½	—	—	—	—	—
— L'derry & Enniskillen 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	111½	—	—	—	—	—
— Water'd & Limerick 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	111½	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
Alliance & Cons. Gas, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Belfast Office Deb., £2 8s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
City Deb. of £2 8s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Dub. Port & Docks, 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—6 per cent., 30th January, 1882.
Of Deposit—3 per cent., 30th January, 1882.

Name Days—February 14th and 28th, 1882.

Account Days—February 16th, and March 1st, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Ointment.—Sores, wounds, ulcerations, and other diseases affecting the skin, are amenable by this soothing and healing ointment. It has called forth the loudest praise from persons who have suffered for years from bad legs, abscesses, and chronic ulcers, after every hope of cure has long passed away. None but those who have experienced the soothing effect of this Ointment can form an idea of the comfort it bestows, by restraining inflammation and allaying pain. Whenever this Ointment has been once used, it has established its own worth, and has again been eagerly sought for, as the easiest and safest remedy for all ulcerous complaints. In neuralgia, rheumatism, and gout, the same application, properly used, gives wonderful relief.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

SAYERS—January 25, at John-street, Chapel, the wife of H. T. Sayers, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

KELLY and CARNEGIE—January 23, at Tramore, County Waterford, William T. Kelly, of this city, to Emily Ellep, eldest daughter of the late James J. Carnegie, Esq., barrister-at-law, Cork.

DEATHS.

DUDGEON—February 9, at Palmerston-road, Rathmines, Charlotte, aged 7 months, infant daughter of Athol Johnson Dudgeon, Esq., solicitor.

M'BLAINE—February 7, at Moygannon, Rostrevor, of acute inflammation. Frederick William M'Blaine, Esq., LL.D., Divisional Police Magistrate, Dublin.

SMART—February 9, at his residence, Amiens-street, William Smart, Esq., Deputy Clerk of the Crown for the County and City of Dublin.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET. 3:7

PUBLIC NOTICES:

THE SIMPLEX PRINTER

Will take 50 or more Copies of any Writing or Drawing in Violet, Green, Blue-Black, or Red, in ten minutes, and, unlike the great number of "Graphs" now before the Public, it does not require washing or remaking, but when the desired number of copies have been taken the remaining ink will sink into the plate, leaving the surface clear and ready for another. It is clean to use, and, having a raised level surface, presents a great advantage for using roller and allowing a copy to be taken in the copying book.

Prices—8vo, 5s.; 4to, 9s.; cap. 11s.; folio, 16s.

GERRARD BROTHERS,
AGENTS FOR THE SIMPLEX PRINTER,
37, STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 183

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES and INVESTIGATIONS

CONDUCTED BY
MR. THOMAS DEANE,
17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange).
Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.
Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.
References.

ESTABLISHED 1878. 167

STOKES BROTHERS,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN. 293

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
73, DAME-STREET, late of 11, Essex Bridge,
Are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

HOUSES TO BE LET OR SOLD.

Lists on application free of charge.
No charge for placing Houses on our Books.
Inventories taken on behalf of Tenant and Landlord.
Auction conducted.
Rents collected on reasonable terms.
Mortgages promptly negotiated.

GRAHAM AND CO.,
HOUSE AND LAND AGENTS,
202, GREAT BRUNSWICK-STREET, DUBLIN. 198

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS' SCARLET INK FOR STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens; it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and is, consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.
Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each. 581

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

PUBLIC NOTICES:

D. W. OARROLL,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.
His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
Comprising Bags, Purses, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges. 198

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—S. HISSBY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO., LIMITED.
SECURITY, &c.
RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—
89, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 959

THE GUARANTEE SOCIETY OF LONDON,
Empowered by Special Act of Parliament—Session of 1842.
For providing Security for Parties in Situations of Trust.
WM. G. DU BEDAT & SONS (Agents for Ireland,
Also Agents to the Liverpool, London, and Globe Fire and Life Insurance Company).
Government Stock and Sharebrokers.
1 and 2, FOSTER-PLACE, DUBLIN. 812

THE EDINBURGH LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

ESTABLISHED 1828
(Being the oldest Life Office but one in Scotland).
Assurances in force at 31st March, 1881, .. .. £6,000,000
Income at that date, .. .. £248,146
Accumulated Funds over, .. .. £1,729,841

Proposals completed before 31st March next will rank for Four Years' Bonus at the next division.

The New Terminable Premium Plan at whole Life Rates is explained in a Special Prospectus, which can be had on application to—

WILLIAM B. MARTIN, Res. Secretary,
31, 55, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin.

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.
The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off Incumbrances, &c.
The Society has already advanced over Eight Hundred and Fifty Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgages.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 3 per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.
Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached. The rates of interest will be  $\frac{3}{4}$  per cent. when taken for one year, and 4 per cent. for two or more years.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:—
The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgages of freehold or leasehold property.
The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary,
954, 52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10 to £1,000
{ IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days.
Two UNERRING RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free.
Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1882.

No. 786

THE SALE OF POISONS.

A VERY suggestive correspondence now being carried on in the Irish Times, coupled with the rather important case of Templeman (app.) v. Trafford (resp.), reported in the Law Times of the 4th inst., may well afford sufficient reason for the present paper, while the "Sheffield Poisoning Case," concluded on the 7th inst., adds another prominent illustration of the dangers arising from the sale of poisons, against which the Legislature has sought to guard by several statutes of the present reign. In the Sheffield case, arsenic (as to which see 14 & 15 Vic., c. 13) was the medium employed; there was no difficulty in procuring it from a chemist, on the pretext that it was required to colour artificial flowers; the precautionary requirements of the Legislature were duly observed—and Mr. Skinner was effectually done to death. "Arsenic, it is true," writes the Times, "is a rude and vulgar poison—violent, acrid, unmistakable in its symptoms, and leaving traces behind that the merest tyro can detect. It is the poison of the simple-minded, who wish to get rid of their enemy without much thought of the consequences. It is proportionately less dangerous, for there are but few house-keepers of elderly widowers, few nephews of wealthy maiden aunts, so ignorant of the rudiments of toxicology, so careless of their own prospects, that they would trust their necks to an agency so familiar. It is rather from the subtler vegetable poisons which modern science has revealed to the student that the danger lies, if danger there is. Aconitine, of which a tenth of a grain will kill, or those rare extracts whose properties remind us of the poisoned gloves and poisoned bouquets of the Italian Renaissance, are the means by which the artist in poisoning will do his work. They are to arsenic as the stiletto is to the bludgeon. Are such cases numerous? Many of our readers will remember the letter which was addressed to us a few weeks ago by a doctor, à propos of a case now awaiting trial, suggesting alarming possibilities of undiscovered crime. The fears then expressed cannot be absolutely proved to be groundless; but it may at least be hoped that they were excessive. Still, poisoning is certainly not extinct, and it never will be while the passions of jealousy, avarice, and revenge continue to move mankind. The hope of lessening the number of such crimes lies partly in the wider moral influences which are equally powerful against all wrong-doing, but chiefly in the development of scientific skill, which may make it more impossible to escape detection. The analyst is the best policeman against the poisoner." But, it is one thing to detect the crime, and another to trace it to the criminal. To impede the promiscuous sale of poison, without detriment as regards the various useful and necessary purposes for which it is required, to prevent its sale to those who would make an improper use of it, and by stringent safeguards against secret sales to render the purchaser easily traceable, are indeed the objects of the Legislature. But, of how little avail are all existing enactments. We boldly pronounce that no legislation for the purpose can be thoroughly effective so long as the responsibility for the legitimate sale of poisons is distributed among countless chemists and druggists; some one medical man for each district alone should be licensed to authorise sales, and in him the responsibility should be centralised; through him perhaps even the delivery of the poison, purchased elsewhere, should be carried out; and the penal provisions of the law should be extended with stringency, not merely to vendors, but to those who improperly obtain the poison, or in whose possession it is found without reasonable cause. As it is, the deadliest poison is vended by the most ignorant, and is possessed by the most dangerous; it is sold with little scruple so that the law be formally complied with, and it is kept by the purchasers with carelessness the most flagrant. We have ourselves been present at a public auction in the house of a barrister, when in an open wardrobe there was found a considerable quantity of what was proved—fortunately not by a fatal mishap—to be strychnine, which had belonged to a solicitor who died insane in a lunatic asylum. "All over the country," writes a well-known Dublin pharmaceutical chemist, "the most deadly poisons are sold by grocers, ironmongers, and other small traders, many or most of whom are not only ignorant of the dangerous nature of the commodities in which they deal, but are even ignorant of the existence of such a chapter in the legislation of the country as a Poisons Act. I have myself seen a package of potassium cyanide, containing half a pound, sold across the counter in the city of Dublin to a messenger boy, without any reference, or a single question asked as to who the purchaser was. So far from complying with the necessary formalities prescribed by the Act in the way of entry in book, introduction, &c., the parcel had not even the word 'Poison' marked upon it." Mr. Brunker adds that the Council of the Pharmaceutical Society are powerless in reference to cases of this kind, in consequence of the reservation in favour of vested rights contained in section 31 of 38 & 39 Vict., c. 57; but to this statement exception, founded on section 30, has been taken by other correspondents. Yet, be this as it may, there can be little doubt that the Act has so far afforded in practice little or no protection against the sources of real alarm that now unquestionably prevail; nor do we believe that any existing enactment is in itself sufficient to cope with the perils arising from the sale of poisons.

Templeman (app.) v. Trafford (resp.), 45 L. T. N. S. 684, however, may be gladly welcomed as a most salutary decision on the Pharmacy Act of 1868 (31 & 32 Vic., c. 121), placing, as it does, such a construction on the word "seller," within the meaning of section 17, as is calculated to affix liability on the real delinquent under its provisions. That section (like s. 2 of 33 & 34 Vic., c. 26) makes it unlawful to sell any poisons by wholesale or retail, unless the box, bottle, wrapper, or cover in which such poison is contained be distinctly labelled "with the name and address of the seller of the poison." It appeared that P., a duly qualified chemist and druggist carrying on business at his own shop in one quarter of a town, rented a window in the shop of T. (the respondent) in another quarter of the same town, and supplied him, who was not a chemist and druggist, with poisons for sale on commission, such poisons being contained in wrappers labelled with P.'s name and address, but not with T.'s name and address. Beyond receiving from T. the amount realised by the sale of those poisons, less the commission, P. had nothing to do with nor any control over the sale of them in T.'s shop. An information was preferred against T. for an infringement of the Act, by selling red oxide (or precipitate) of mercury without having been duly labelled with his name and address, upon which a question arose, on a case reserved, as to whether or not T. was the "seller," within the meaning of the enactment, which is not elucidated by an interpretation clause. The Pharmaceutical Society v. The London and Provincial Supply Association (L. R. 5 App. Cas. 857, 43 L. T. N. S. 389, 49 L. J. Q. B. 736) was referred to, in which the House of Lords (confirming the Court of Appeal in their reversal of the Court of Queen's Bench, who had overruled the decision of the County Court judge) held that the defendant corporation was not a "person" within and was not prohibited by the same Act from carrying on the business of chemist and druggist, but that the actual seller must be a duly qualified person; Lord Selborne, C., expressly holding it clear that it was the act of selling and the person who sold, whether he were the principal to whom the business belonged or anyone whom he employed to carry it on, that was struck at by the sections of the Act. And indeed, as was well urged, were any other construction to prevail, a qualified chemist at Aberdeen might send poisons to an unqualified shopkeeper in London for sale on commission, or a London chemist and druggist might have fifty business branches in various towns in the provinces, without having a properly qualified person to sell at any one of them; and so the provisions of an Act, passed expressly for the protection and security of the community in this respect, would be utterly useless, and the Act itself be entirely defeated. In this view Grove and Lopes, J.J., concurred. "In my opinion," said the former, "in every instance in which the word 'seller' is used in the Act, it means the person who actually conducts the sale, not necessarily the individual by whose hand it is delivered over the counter to the customer—in the present case it was a woman who actually delivered the poison to the appellant, and clearly she was not the 'seller' within the meaning of that word in the section—but the person who actually conducts or controls the business of the sale and of the shop where the sale takes place." That person was T. (the respondent), and, he added, "his name and address it is that the Act requires to be distinctly labelled on the packet containing the poison sold, the object and intention being to protect the public by insuring that the person who controls the business of the sale of poisons should be a duly qualified and duly registered chemist and druggist, whose name and address should appear on the packet." And certainly, we cordially concur with Lopes, J., that, in so construing the section, the court carried out the general scope and policy of the statute, which was passed for the protection and safety of the public. Legislation of this description, indeed, is peremptorily necessary in every community to regulate the sale of poisons; and only last year we find such Acts passed in Arkansas, West Virginia, Missouri, and Kentucky. But, in all legislation of the kind it is right to make some distinction between wholesale dealings and retail sales of small quantities, to which latter the practical danger attaches, and to guard against anything tending to create an unjust monopoly; and almost the main thing is to ensure that, whatever be the law, it shall be the duty, and distinctly and practically within the power of some person or persons in particular to take care to have it duly and effectively enforced. If so enforced even the existing law would be found, on the whole, not quite inadequate, while still imperfect, and though we hardly imagine that its enforcement would suffice to drive the assassin to resort, for want of something simpler and safer, to such operose lethal contrivances as the marvellous apparatus described by the author of "Armadae."

THE REFORM OF LEGAL PROCEDURE.—I.

The Judicature Acts have now been in operation six years. Designed under a Liberal Ministry and carried into effect, after reconsideration and some alteration, by a Conservative one, they represent the best that could be devised by the combined wisdom of a Liberal and a Conservative Chancellor. As regards the department of Justice with which Lord Selborne and Lord Cairns have been specially familiar throughout their professional life, there is no reason to be dissatisfied with the result. The business of what was the Court of Chancery has been sensibly relieved of needless verbiage and formalism while its principles and methods remain in substance unchanged. Whatever saving has been effected is pure gain to the suitor. Practitioners have not been bewildered with novelties, nor has the benevolent legislator sown the seed of a new crop of costs with his left hand while he was grubbing up the old roots with his right. It cannot be said that the administrative work of the Court is done quickly; but it is done well and completely, and with much more approach to expedition than it used to be in the old days. And when we consider the huge bulk of this work, the complexity of its details, the weight of the responsibility undertaken by the Court in adjusting all the claims that come before it, and by its officers in working out the effects of its decisions, and finally the punctilious caution imposed on the financial department of the Court by its relations with the Bank of England and the Treasury, we may not be surprised that the mills of the Chancery Division still grind slowly. The delays incident to the nature of its business could hardly be abolished or materially lessened except at a greater expense than either the nation or the suitors would be willing to bear. And, in fact, we are not aware that there is anything like widespread or active discontent among those whose profession or affairs take them to the Courts at Lincoln's-Inn. Their strongest desire is to see the day when the full opening of the new Law Courts shall deliver them from the mean, inconvenient, and unwholesome buildings in which the Chancery Judges for the present hold their sittings.

A widely different tale has to be told of the Common Law Divisions, now merged in the Queen's Bench Division. There the working of the Judicature Acts has brought a series of bitter disappointments. We have heard of nothing but confusion, delay, vexatious contention, and increased expense. The reforms of Lord Selborne and Lord Cairns promised fairly on the face of them, but in practice they have not satisfied either the lawyers or the public. More than one reason may be assigned for this. Among others we cannot help contrasting the failure of the Judicature Acts with the success of the Common Law Procedure Act. That measure of reform introduced extensive changes with the least possible friction, and worked well for more than twenty years. The secret of this, or a great part of it, was that the Act was framed and settled down to the minutest details by men who thoroughly understood the old practice which they were reforming, and that every officer of the Courts whose duties would be affected was consulted. Thus there were no disappointments, no leaps in the dark, and no falls in stony places. It is notorious that precautions of this kind were not taken in the case of the Judicature Acts. Both Lord Selborne and Lord Cairns were accomplished advocates and lawyers, but neither of them possessed any personal experience of common law proceedings, much less of the comparatively unseen, but really important part of them which does not take place in open court. Nor was anything done to collect information or opinions from practical men as to the working of the proposed scheme in the Common Law Divisions. The Judges were consulted, no doubt. But circumstances were especially unfavourable to the proper representation of the highest judicial experience. The Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, a man of brilliant gifts in other ways, had not the gift of patient industry, and still less the power or disposition to bring sincere and effectual aid to the working out of other men's ideas. The Chief Baron of the Exchequer was disqualified by his age from taking any serious interest in a plan of such scope and novelty as had been started by Lord Selborne. The present Chief Justice of England, then Chief of the Common Pleas, was on the other hand too new to his work to bear the burden of the other courts in addition to his own. Practically the Judicature Act of 1873 sprang fullgrown from Lord Selborne's unassisted invention; and the changes induced upon it by Lord Cairns in 1875 had more of a political than a legal character and left its main lines as they were. The same spirit of magnificent and confident theory which presided at the framing of the Judicature Acts and the attendant Rules of Court has prevailed, with few if any exceptions in their administration. Rules have been made, abrogated, and altered, without consulting in any manner those who had to apply them, and duties have been recast and redistributed without even the pretence of regard for those who had to perform them. This way of going to work must inevitably have led to friction and confusion. But there was a deeper cause of failure in the nature of the reforms themselves. Lord Selborne and Lord Cairns were naturally imbued with the ideas of Chancery procedure, and the novelties of the Judicature Act were the fruit of those ideas almost exclusively. So far as the Chancery Division was concerned, the new leaven was added, so to speak, to a congenial element. On the common law side the reformers threw it in wholesale, and left the incongruous mixture to work as best it might. And a sufficiently strange fermentation has ensued, of which the first symptom was a violent outbreak of litigation on points of practice. The purses of many suitors have been bled to cool the mixture, but it is yet far from being "slab and good," though in a certain sense it has been good for the legal profession, and more especially for that branch of it who have cast off the name of attorneys and become solicitors of the Supreme Court. And now the report of the Chancellor's Committee on Procedure, which will shortly become the starting point of yet fuller consideration, reopens the whole matter.

For the better apprehension of the problem to be dealt with, it seems desirable to explain the fundamental difference between the Chancery and the Common Law procedure. The two sides of Westminster Hall were distinct, not only in their jurisdiction, in the form of their judgments, and in the manner of enforcing them, but in their system of pleading. Those systems had each its own origin and history and embodied opposite theories of litigation. Being brought so near one another in England, they were not without mutual influence; but the opposition of principle remained. One may say in general terms that Chancery practice aims at the modern ideal of doing complete justice between the parties, and common law practice stood on the ancient way of settling particular matters in dispute according to strict formal rules and only within the limits fixed by them. This narrowness of the common law, as it is often called, is simply the narrowness of all archaic justice and law. The notion that it is the State's business to make full inquiry into facts and work out all their legal consequences is of comparatively recent origin. All modern research into early forms of legal procedure goes to show that the Judge's office was only that of a sort of moderator. He was called in by the parties at strife, not to take the whole matter into his hands, but rather, as Sir Henry Maine has expressed it, to keep order and see fair play. But in the process of seeing fair play the singular formalism of early ways of thought and action comes in. The two parties have to play out the game for themselves, and the Court has to see that they play fair. Now this means in a subordinate degree, if at all, fairness in the sense of good conscience and equity; what it chiefly means is playing according to the rules. Each party is bound at his own risk to know the rules and observe them in all points. If he fails in this, he loses his cause. The Court has nothing to do with helping his ignorance or relieving any hardship he may incur by failure. The rules are found, as matter of history, to be of the most rigid and artificial kind, and this comes out the more strongly the further we go back. They might conceivably be so framed as to bring out the merits of the case, but for the most part their connexion with the merits is remote or invisible. In fact, their object is a different one—namely, to put some question between the parties in a form capable of peremptory decision. Herein the founders of archaic procedure were probably wise in their generation. For the important thing, when judicial proceedings were still competing with the more ancient method of a free fight, was to provide a machinery that should effectively secure a decision of some kind. The refinements of our modern notions of law and evidence did not exist, and, if they had existed, could not have been understood. In the same way the early methods of proof were solemn, ceremonial, and incapable of discussion. Testimony was numbered, not weighed. Parties or witnesses made oath to one particular fact or assertion only, and there was no cross-examination. In the wager of law, which survived in England into the present century, though for many generations means had been found of evading its application, the defendant swore that he owed nothing of the sum demanded, and brought a certain number of other men, eleven or more, to swear that they believed him; and this once duly performed was conclusive. He had "made his law," and must go quit. Claims and defences, and the manner of establishing them, were alike restrained to a certain number of set forms. It was the business of the party to bring his case within the precise terms of one or other of those forms; and when that condition was satisfied, the Court had no discretion and no power to look further.

The actual working of our Common Law Courts in modern times was a long way from this state of things; but the system of common law pleading grew out of something like it, and preserved much of the ancient formalism to the last. It preserved altogether the theory that a lawsuit is a combat between the parties, in which they do everything for themselves and at their own risk, and the Court is concerned only to see things done in order. Whatever exceptions to this were introduced by the Common Law Procedure Act or otherwise were deliberate innovations suggested by the Chancery practice. Common law pleadings, accordingly, were quite unintelligible to a layman, and often gave no information whatever as to the nature of the facts. The plaintiff's declaration stated in the appropriate technical form the character of the right he asserted. The defendant showed in like manner, by demurrer or plea, as the case might be, whether he objected to the plaintiff's declaration as bad in form, or intended to dispute the case generally on the facts, or to prove on his own part facts establishing any special ground of defence. A defect in form at any stage was fatal, if taken advantage of in time by the other side. The ultimate object was to lead to a definite issue or matter in dispute between the parties, to be decided by a jury if it were a question of fact, by the Court if it were a question of law. We may note in passing that the clear separation of the functions of the Judge and the jury had a great effect in sharpening the definition of the rules of pleading, and led incidentally to some of the most extraordinary features of the system in its developed shape. By ingenious fictions, not to be explained here, it was made possible to obtain the verdict of the jury, under the legal direction of the Judge and subject to the correction of his law by a Court of Appeal, on mixed questions of fact and legal inferences from fact, such as whether a particular parcel of land was the freehold of J. S. Questions of this kind might involve the widest range of evidence and the most various topics of legal argument; so that in the modern period of common law procedure the simplicity of the final issue was often only apparent. In other ways, too, the system was stretched, without any formal breach of its traditions, to meet the increasing needs of mankind. The so-called "common counts," which were of relatively modern introduction, enabled justice to be done in a great variety of cases not covered by the ancient forms of action. If they had been invented a century or two earlier, they might have enabled the Common Law Courts to compete successfully with the Chancellor for a good deal of the business that was abandoned to the exclusive jurisdiction of Equity.

Now all these inventions, however useful they were in substance, made the language of the pleadings less and less connected with the real nature of the case. The system was overloaded with endless subtleties, and had lost its original merit of forcing on the parties a single and conclusive decision, though perhaps a rude one. Meanwhile the suit was still conducted in the fashion of a judicial combat in which the Court interfered as little as possible. The parties might take any advantage not forbidden by the rules, and make the most of it. They were not bound to give one another any information, and, indeed, it was the pleader's aim to disclose as little of his case as he could before it came on for trial. Everything not contradicted by the adversary was taken to be admitted, but there were no means of compelling an admission. Even a party's own assertions in his pleadings could not be used as evidence against himself, though he was not allowed to prove anything inconsistent with them. Again, the Courts could not deal with matters involving the interests of more than two parties. The Judge was the arbiter of a single combat only; he could not provide for more complex controversies. Again, a Common Law Court had no power over the conduct of the cause by the parties, nor had it any personal jurisdiction over them even in its final judgment. It could not command them to repair any injury done or abstain from any injury threatened. Damages were the only compensation it could give, and distress its only original weapon. The personal jurisdiction of the Common Law Courts, except in cases involving danger to the peace, and so not being of a purely civil nature, depended on various early statutes. "The common law procedure," an American writer has said, "is founded upon the theory that the parties to an action owe no obedience to the Court." They took every step at their own judgment and at their own peril (in the older practice often the peril of total discomfiture) if they were wrong.

Such a system could obviously not hold its ground among the affairs of a modern society. Men's dealings have become more various, their sense of duty more refined, and their sense of justice more exacting. We now expect legal decisions to be not only certain and formally correct, but to be something like a full and fair settlement of the matter in dispute. Perhaps the ancient theory of litigation cannot be said to have been really carried out in England in its pure and primitive formalism at any time since the Norman Conquest. In any case it was modified by the ingenuity of pleaders in the ways above mentioned; it was largely set aside by the Common Law Procedure Act; and now it is abolished, in intention at least, by the Judicature Acts. The opposite system, nevertheless, has not completely replaced it.

That system is to be found in the procedure introduced by the modern civil law and adopted by the Ecclesiastical Courts. It was likewise adopted to a sensible extent, though not fully or consistently, by the English Court of Chancery, which was long in the hands of officials trained in the civil and canon law. The functions of the Court in this system is not to preside at a combat and be content with seeing fair play, but to conduct an active process of inquiry on the suggestion of the parties. The suitors are under supervision and control at every step, and may be commanded by the Court to do what it thinks just at any stage of the cause. Having them thus in its power, the Court can examine them upon oath, and make the defendant a witness against himself by interrogating him at the request of the plaintiff.

Shakespeare shows his singular justness in points of detail when at the end of the Merchant of Venice he makes Portia and Nerissa, who have been playing the parts of a civilian lawyer and his clerk, offer to be charged upon interrogatories. In the mouth of an English common lawyer the speech would be repugnant and impossible. For the Venetian it is perfectly appropriate. In like manner the examination of witnesses was in theory the act not of the parties, but of the Court. To this day there are official examiners attached to the Chancery Division, though their functions have become little more than ministerial. The pleadings likewise were under official control. Instead of being delivered without leave, as in the common law system, and liable to be defeated afterwards if the other party could pick a hole in it, every pleading had to be expressly allowed by the Court. No admission could be implied from the adversary's silence. The party was bound to state everything he meant to prove and to offer actual proof at every point. In one word, the procedure and jurisdiction were inquisitorial; whereas the common law procedure may be described as purely contentious. The adoption, so far as it went, of inquisitorial methods and powers by the English Court of Chancery is closely connected with the nearness of the Chancellor to the King's person. As keeper of the Great Seal he represented the dignity of the Crown in a peculiar and eminent manner, and disobedience to his judicial orders was treated as an act of direct disobedience to the Sovereign. One part of the process for compelling a contumacious defendant's appearance in the old Chancery practice was dignified by the formidable name of a Commission of Rebellion. As regards the authority of the Court and the manner of its exercise, the Chancellors adhered pretty closely to their civilian and ecclesiastical models. As to procedure, the theory of the constant active control of the Court had very much broken down in the canonical courts themselves, and the influence of the common law contributed to reduce its importance yet more in the Chancery. What had originally been subject to the discretion of the Court settled into fixed routine. The plaintiff had thus almost unlimited power to interrogate the defendant, and had also power within sufficiently wide limits to compel the production of documents. Almost the only vestige of the old function of the Court was that the defendant had to swear to his answer before one of its officers authorised for that purpose. The pleadings gave the party's version of the facts in considerable detail, and often set out at length deeds, letters, or other documents which formed part of his case. The plaintiff's bill of complaint, as his pleading was called, ended by praying of the Court the specific relief to which he thought himself entitled; for example, that the defendant might be ordered to convey to him certain lands, or to render an account, or restrained by injunction from continuing a nuisance. This was made needful by the variety and extent of the Chancellor's judicial and administrative powers. Nothing of the kind was needed, or indeed possible, in a Court of common law, where the only judgment a plaintiff could get was (with a few exceptions not affecting the general character of the system) for the recovery of a sum either claimed by him as a debt and found to be due or assessed by the jury as damages.

It must not be supposed that equity pleading was wholly simple or rational. It used to have plenty of cumbersome and formality of its own, though defects of form had never the same fatal consequences as at common law. But it was taken in hand and largely reformed at the same time that the Common Law Procedure Act simplified the records of the superior Courts at Westminster; and bills and answers in Chancery between 1852 and 1875 presented an intelligible and even fairly readable account of the whole case. Nor, considering the nature of the story that often had to be told, was there much to complain of in the way of prolixity in a well-drawn bill. Even well-drawn answers, however, were often both cramped and prolix through the necessity the pleader was under of answering with absurd minuteness a string of interrogatories which generally repeated every single allegation in the bill.

The two systems in their revised forms were as good, or nearly as good, as they could in either case be made without radical change. Taking them in those forms, as they stood for the last 30 years before the passing of the Judicature Acts, we may sum up the contrast thus:—In the common law system pleadings were concise and formal. Defects of form, however, had been reduced to minor importance by modern legislation. Further disclosure of the facts relied on could be obtained before trial only by order of the Court (represented for this purpose by a Judge or Master sitting at Chambers), whether in the form of particulars, discovery, or answers to interrogatories. In practice the powers of compelling discovery and administering interrogatories, which the Common Law Procedure Act had borrowed from Chancery, were but sparingly used. As a rule the record still showed, as it had always done, not the matters of fact asserted by the parties, but the legal conclusions they sought to establish by facts which appeared only at the trial, and were recorded only in the Judge's notes of the evidence. In equity the pleadings gave a complete history of the case as each party desired to make it out, and their formality had been reduced to a minimum. The plaintiff could interrogate the defendant as a matter of course, and in a hostile suit always did so. The defendant's answer was on oath, and was evidence against himself. The evidence of the witnesses was taken as a rule by written depositions. As the affidavits were settled by solicitors or counsel, who naturally made the assertions as strong as they thought the deponent would swear up to, there can be no doubt that this feature of Chancery practice led to a great deal of hard swearing, not to use a harsher term. The decree given by the Court, after hearing the cause generally, stated, except in the simplest cases, the view taken by the Judge of the rights of the parties, and then worked out its consequences by way of direction in so much detail as the nature of the case required. It also showed what evidence had been produced to the Court; this being a relic of the old civilian principle that the depositions were taken by the Court itself, or under its immediate authority. Thus the papers filed in a Chancery suit, together with the decree, would show with considerable fulness the facts of the case, the course of the proceedings, the decision of the Court, and to a certain extent the reasons for it. We need hardly add that trial by jury was a distinguishing feature of the common law system, and to laymen the most conspicuous one. At common law many cases were tried without a jury by way of reference, which sometimes was compulsory, and a few by consent in court before a Judge sitting alone. In Chancery jury trial was made possible in some cases by an Act of Parliament of recent date. But in the main the distinction kept its strength; and it was deeply implanted not only in the practice of the several Courts, but in the professional training, traditions, and habits of mind of the practitioners who frequented them.

We have now seen what sort of ground was prepared for the Judicature Acts. Bearing in mind the conditions of the problem disclosed by our review, we shall go on to consider the failures of this latest reform and the remedies proposed for them.—Times.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—IV.

(Continued from page 63, ante.)

Mortgage of Policy of Assurance.

The estate clause may be omitted (s. 63); and also the power of attorney. Messrs. Wolstenholme and Turner (p. 168) advise that the declaration by the mortgagee, of trusts of the money received by him under the policy, and the clause making the mortgagee's receipt sufficient, may be omitted in reliance upon sect. 22. And this appears to be the case. Covenants by the mortgagor to keep up life assurance, and restore the same if voidable, effect a new one if void, &c., and power for the mortgagee to insure, if the mortgagor fails to do so, must be inserted as usual. A power of sale will be given by sects. 19-22, but it will hardly be considered satisfactory. It gives no power to sell by way of surrender to the insurance office. This may be remedied by a short supplementary clause. The usual covenants for title should be inserted, as they should include a covenant by the mortgagor to enable the mortgagee to recover and receive the money payable under the policy. For forms of mortgage of policy of insurance see David. Mortgages, 2nd edit. 888; Wolst. & T. 167.

Mortgage to Joint Tenants.

So far we have been considering varieties of mortgages where the variation consisted in the subject-matter of the conveyance. We now propose to discuss cases where the deviation from the standard form of a mortgage of fee simple between two persons depends on the number or legal status of the parties by whom, or to whom, the mortgage is made. As mortgages by one person to trustees, as joint tenants, are of every-day occurrence, we shall state shortly the modifications on the old form of such a mortgage which we shall now in general advise. The leasing powers of the mortgagor and his subsequent mortgagees should be excluded. See Article II., Law Times, Jan. 14, p. 184. The general words and "all estate clause" may usually be omitted. See Article I., Law Times, Jan. 7, p. 167.

We have next to consider how far it is prudent to rely upon the statutory power of sale given by sects. 19-22. These sections give the power to "the mortgagee;" but sect. 21 (4) declares that the power of sale may be exercised by any person for the time being entitled to receive and give a discharge for the mortgage money. Of course "person" will include "persons." See also sect. 64. Also by sect. 2 (vi.) "mortgagee" includes any person from time to time deriving title under the original mortgagee. If, then, there is a joint account clause, or if the mortgage money is expressed to be advanced as money belonging to the mortgagees on a joint account (sect. 61), the implied power of sale will in the first instance belong to the mortgagees, and then will pass in the ordinary way to the survivors and survivor of them, and to the executors or administrators of the last survivor. There is no occasion for any declaration that the heir of the last surviving mortgagee shall concur in a sale by such mortgagee's personal representatives, because by sect. 30 the legal estate in the mortgaged property will pass, notwithstanding any attempted devise, to the personal representatives.

Satisfactory provisions as to sufficiency of notices to mortgagor previous to sale are made by sect. 67. Thus it will be seen that the power of sale may usually be omitted. But, in some cases where the interest mortgaged is not the entire interest of the mortgagor, as in charges, or in mortgages of leaseholds by demise, a clause supplementing the statute, so as to pass the entire estate and interest of the mortgagor, will be useful; and, in some few cases, it may be well to exclude a power of sale altogether. See Article II., Law Times, Jan. 14, page 185.

The powers given by sect. 19-24 with regard to insurance and appointment of a receiver are given to "the mortgagee;" but here, again, we think they may be safely relied on in a mortgage to joint tenants, in the same way, and subject to the same limitations, as in a mortgage to one person. See Article II. (ubi sup).

The word "mortgagee" bears an extended meaning by sect. 2 (vi.), as stated above. See also sect. 64. Probably, however, as joint tenants are usually trustees, they will insert the usual clause compelling the mortgagor to insure.

Covenants for title may be omitted if the mortgagor conveys as beneficial owner, as then covenant (C.) of sect. 7 will be implied. By sect. 64, the covenants of sect. 7 are made applicable to conveyances in joint tenancy. Sect. 14 is as follows:—"In the construction of a covenant or proviso, or other provision, implied in a deed by virtue of this Act, words importing the singular or plural number, or the masculine gender, shall be read as also importing the plural or singular number, or as extending to females, as the case may require."

If it is stated in the mortgage that the money is advanced by the mortgagees out of money, or as money, belonging to them on a joint account, the usual joint account clause may safely be omitted by virtue of sect. 61. Messrs. Wolstenholme and Turner think it not even necessary to state that the money belongs to the mortgagees on a joint account, but that it is convenient to do so (p. 82), and they insert such a statement in their form (p. 163).

We strongly advise its insertion. In case of a mortgage for a past debt, the money can be expressed to be owing to them out of money, or as money, belonging to them on a joint account (sect. 61). The statement can be inserted in the recital of the agreement for the advance; or, where there is no recital, it can either be placed in the consideration clause, or made a separate clause at the end of the deed.

(To be continued.)

MUSIC IN THE COURTS.

(Continued from 15 Ir. L. T., p. 67.)

Church music has been considered by several of the Courts. In the States of New York, apparently, they do not think very much of the kind furnished by rural choirs to country congregations. There it has been held that the mere fact that one sings in a country choir, or plays on an instrument as an accompaniment, raises no implied liability as against the church authorities to pay a quantum meruit for the services rendered. It will be presumed that the services were performed gratuitously. So, if an organist of a country church sues for his or her salary, he or she must clearly prove that there was an actual employment by the church, and a promise to pay binding upon the corporate body.<sup>1</sup>

Everyone who has been in the habit of going to church knows that in well nigh every congregation there is some one or other whose vocal organs and style of singing is not quite in accord with orthodoxy. Lately in England, the Hampstead magistrates had to consider a lady's musical performances. A complaint was made by the minister, the Rev. Mr. Burnaby, against a lady who had not a proper estimate of her own vocal ability, which was not at all commensurate with her pious sincerity. In other respects the offender was an excellent gentlewoman of culture and education. She was decidedly in error as to the quality of her voice, which was very shrill, very high, and very thin, and she exercised it with a complete independence of the other worshippers. The result was that the lady inflicted untold tortures upon the people of the church, "through every pulse her music stole," and the nerves of the clergyman were so completely unstrung that he could not proceed with the service. The choir, also, was dissatisfied, as the lady's irrepressible vocal piety frequently rendered nugatory its best-intentioned artistic efforts. Remonstrance only evoked an expression of regret that her voice was not pleasing to the congregation, accompanied, however, by a strongly-expressed determination to continue performing the religious duty which she believed to be incumbent upon her. On the clergyman complaining to the justices that she was "troubling, vexing, and disquieting the congregation," they decided to give her a month in which to ease off and stop, and if she was not quiet in that time, to fine her £5.<sup>2</sup>

A very similar case came before the Court in North Carolina some years ago,<sup>1</sup> and there it was held that the defendant was a "proper subject for the discipline of the church, but not for the discipline of the courts." In Mr. Irving Browne's interesting little work, "Humorous Phases of the Law," we are told, "The defendant was indicted for disturbing a religious congregation. He was a strict member of the Methodist Church, and a man of exemplary deportment, but he sung in such a way as to disturb the congregation. The disturbance consisted partly in his holding on the notes after the other singers had let go. He was evidently trying to realize Milton's idea of 'linked sweetness long drawn out.' This disturbance was decided and serious; the effect of it was to make one part of the congregation laugh and the other part mad; the irreligious and frivolous enjoyed it as fun, while the serious and devout were indignant." Once the preacher had shut up the book and declined to sing the hymn. The presiding elder had refused to preach in the church on account of the disturbance. On one occasion, "a leading member of the congregation, appreciating that there was a feeling of solemnity pervading the congregation in consequence of the sermon just delivered, and fearing that it would be turned into ridicule, went to the defendant and asked him not to sing," and he then refrained. On many occasions the church members and authorities expostulated with him on account of his singing and its disturbing effects, but he invariably replied, that "he would worship his God, and that as a part of his worship it was his duty to sing." One of the witnesses, being asked to describe his singing, sang a verse in his voice and manner, which "produced a burst of long and irresistible laughter, convulsing alike the spectators, the bar, the jury and the court." The jury found Linkhaw guilty; but this was reversed because there was no proof, or pretence, of any intention or purpose to disturb the worship, but on the contrary it was admitted that he was conscientiously taking part in the religious services, and doing his "level best." Now, this was a serious case. The offender was a member of the church in good standing, and there was no fault in him save the eccentric character of his vocalization. But it must have been a harrowing reflection to his fellow church members that he was to be saved, and that they were bound to listen to that singing through all eternity."

As Mr. Browne says, the Courts in North Carolina seem singularly insensible to the charms of music. In State v. Baldwin,<sup>2</sup> it was held no nuisance to curse and swear so loud at a tavern as to break up a singing school near by. The Judge said, the school's "interruption cannot legally be pronounced an inconvenience to the whole community. The loss of instruction in the accomplishment, to those who would fain acquire it, does not very gravely influence the good order or enjoyment or convenience of the citizens in general, so as to call for redress on the complaint of the State."

Some judges really appear to have known something about the higher kinds of music, and to have trod the loftier walks of the science of sweet sounds, and to have been able to talk of airs and melodies, accompaniments and scores, operas and dramatical performances. In Wood v. Boosey,<sup>3</sup> N. had composed and published in Berlin an opera in full score. After his death, Bressler arranged the score of the whole opera for the pianoforte, and in registering the arrangement in England, N.'s name was inserted as that of the original composer. The question was, Was the pianoforte arrangement an independent musical composition of which B. and not N. was the composer? Kelly, C.B., thus spoke of accompaniments: "The accompaniment is a work of greater or less skill. In some cases, perhaps in many cases, it may be in this for aught I know, the operation of adaptation is little more than mechanical, and what anyone acquainted with the science of music, any composer of experience might

(1) Van Buren v. Reformed Church, 62 Barb. 493.
(2) 21 Alb. L. J. 42.

(1) State v. Linkhaw, 69 N. C. 214.
(2) 1 Dev. & Bat. 195.
(3) L. R. 8 Q. B. Ex. Ch. 233.

have been able to do without difficulty; but it may be and often is, as in the case of the six operas of Mozart by Mazzinghi, a work—I would hardly use the term of great genius—but a work of great merit and skill."

Baron Bramwell showed his knowledge of music by the following remarks:—"The truth is, an opera is originally written for the voice, and for different instruments. In this pianoforte score, as it is called, the parts written for the voice are identically preserved, and there can be no doubt that if a man had a copyright in the original opera, such a score would be an infringement of his copyright. But when we come to the parts, not for the voice, but for the pianoforte, which is not an identical repetition of what the author wrote, it is the business of the adapter, the person who arranges it for the pianoforte, to preserve the harmony and, as far as he can, the notes and all the effects of the original composition, but he cannot produce upon the pianoforte everything that the author wrote, as he wrote it. Anybody who knows anything of the orchestral score and of the pianoforte arrangement, would know that. It is a physical impossibility that fingers could play upon the pianoforte every note as it is written in the orchestral score. For example, when there is a tremolando in the music, that is where the violins play the same notes backwards and forwards continually, of course that cannot be done on the piano; and sometimes for a substitute an octave is played with the thumb and finger. To arrange this to the best advantage great judgment and considerable power of choice is required on the part of the arranger. Frequently there are other differences; there are prolonged notes in the one and not in the other; as the score of the opera is written for different instruments which cannot all be represented on the piano, the arranger puts in an octave below on the piano to give as far as possible the same effect. Many other changes must of necessity be made. It is quite clear, therefore, that what the person who arranges for the pianoforte does is something different from what the original composer has done. Anybody who plays any musical instrument knows it is a very common expression to say, such a piece is very well arranged, such a piece is very ill-arranged; this is a very difficult arrangement; that is an easy arrangement. Those who play the German arrangements know they are more difficult than the English, because the German, with great conscientiousness, endeavours to put into the arrangement every note that the composer has put into the score as far as he can; whereas the English composer endeavours in all arrangements to make them clear for the player, and an English arrangement is by no means so laborious as the German. It is manifest, therefore, that there is some judgment and taste required on the part of the arranger for the pianoforte; and it is also certain that if it should happen that a man should compose an opera without being able to play on the pianoforte, which is, I believe, a perfectly possible thing, he could not arrange it himself for the pianoforte. The person who arranges for the pianoforte must have a knowledge of the instrument; it would be a bad arrangement if he put in passages that do not lie well for the hands, as it is called, so as to give a facility of playing."

Piracy is not only robbery on the sea, but also, any literary theft or infringement of the law of copyright; and copyright is the exclusive right which an author or composer possesses of multiplying copies of his own work. In speaking of stealing an air, "It appears to me," said Lyndhurst, J., "that if you take from the composition of an author all those bars consecutively which form the entire air or melody, without any natural alteration, it is a piracy; though, on the other hand, you might take them, in a different order, or broken by the interposition of others, like words, in such a manner as would not be a piracy. It must depend on whether the air taken is substantially the same with the original. Now, the most unlettered in music can distinguish one song from another, and the mere adaptation of the air, either by changing it to a dance, or by transferring it from one instrument to another, does not, even to common apprehensions, alter the original subject. The ear tells you that it is the same. The original air requires the aid of genius for its construction, but a mere mechanic in music can make the adaptation or accompaniment. Substantially, the piracy is where the appropriated music, though adapted to a different purpose from that of the original, may still be recognised by the ear. The adding of variations makes no difference in the principle".<sup>1</sup>

"The composition of a new air or melody," says Nelson, J., in Jollie v. Jacques,<sup>2</sup> "is entitled to protection; and the appropriation of the whole or of any substantial part of it, without the licence of the proprietor, is a piracy."

One who adapts words of his own to an old air, adding thereto a prelude and accompaniment also his own, acquires a copyright in the combination, and may, in declaring for an infringement against one who has pirated the whole, properly describe himself as the proprietor of the entire composition.<sup>3</sup> This was decided in an action brought by Samuel Lover against the defendant for pirating the words and music of "The Low Back'd Oar," of which Lover claimed to be entitled to the copyright, as author of the words, prelude, and accompaniment, the air being an old one known by the name of "The Jolly Ploughboy."

Chappel & Co., published a song under the title of "Minnie, sung by Madame Anna Thillon, and Miss Dolly at Monsieur Jullien's concerts," with a portrait of Madame Thillon; defendants published a song to the same air called "Minnie Dale, sung at Jullien's concerts (and always encoored) by Madame Anna Thillon;" the title-page contained a similar portrait to the plaintiffs'. Vice-Chancellor Wood granted an injunction to restrain the defendants from publishing their song, "Minnie Dale," or any copy or copies thereof, or any other publication containing a colourable imitation of the name, title, or title-page of the plaintiffs' song. "The defendants," said the Vice-Chancellor, "do not profess that their song is by the same composer or the same publisher. But the first thing anybody proposing to purchase the song would say would probably be, 'I want "Minnie," sung by Madame Thillon'; and that name and description, it seems to me, the defendants have no right to whatever. The plaintiffs' publication is the identical song which that lady did sing; it was composed for the plaintiffs, it is called by the name of 'Minnie,' and they had a perfect right to entitle it 'Minnie,' as a song sung by that lady; and then the name, having acquired a celebrity as the name of a song sung by her, the defendants advertise another song by the same name as sung by this lady, which cannot be meant merely to refer to the melody as sung by her. No person who heard 'Scots wha hae,' sung by Braham, would ask for 'Hey Tuitte Taitte,' the name of the old melody. Therefore, it seems to me that there was a plain and palpable purpose in the assumption of the name. The original song, as sung in America, was 'Lillie Dale,' and the defendants have changed it into 'Minnie Dale,' sung by Madame Thillon, and a description can be for no other purpose than to appropriate the property of the plaintiffs."<sup>4</sup>

An injunction was also granted to restrain another defendant from publishing a song consisting of different words to the same air, with a title-page on which was a different portrait of Madame Anna Thillon, copied from an American publication, and the words, "Minnie, dear Minnie. Madame Anna Thillon."<sup>5</sup>

A Mr. Ruesell had been in the habit of singing a song, called "The Ship on Fire," at public concerts; a Mr. Smith advertised a vocal entertainment, and gave this and other sensational songs as part of the programme. Mr. R. sued for the penalties given by the Act for the infringement of his sole right to represent this dramatic

(1) D'Almaine v. Boosey, 1 Y. & C. 288.

(2) 1 Blatchf. 618.

(3) Lover v. Davidson, 1 C. B. N. S. 182.

(4) Chappel v. Davidson, 2 K. & J. 123.

(5) Shortt, p. 197.

piece. Denman, C.J., thus speaks of the defendant's performance: "The song in question is stated in the bill to be founded on the loss of the Kent by fire in the Bay of Biscay. It represents a storm at sea, the burning of the ship, and an escape by boat to another ship, and so a safe return to land. It moves terror and pity and sympathy, by presenting danger and despair, and joy, and maternal and conjugal affection. It is a dramatic piece." The readers of the Canadian Law Times, anxious to rival Mr. Russell or Mr. Henry Smith, will find thirty-five lines of this descriptive and dramatic song in 12 Ad. & El. N. S., p. 218, and with it we will leave them, giving them, however, the following as a warning.

Last winter, the vicar of a country parish in England got up an amateur concert to provide funds to repair the church clock and to buy coal for the poor. The net proceeds were four pounds. But alas, the law of copyright had been infringed by some performer singing "The Muletter," a song by the late Michael William Balfe; legal proceedings were threatened to recover the penalty of £10, but matters were compromised by the vicar handing over his four pounds.—R. VASHON ROOKERS.

THE AFFIDAVIT OF ATTESTATION.

Questions arising out of bills of sale occur so frequently, and have often to be decided so much on the spur of the moment, that few reported cases on the subject can be allowed to pass without discussion. No less than nine cases, each dealing with an important point in this branch of the law, were reported last year; and the new year begins with a tenth in the case of Sharp v. Birch, reported in the January number of the Law Journal Reports. In the volume for last year, we had Conolly v. Steer—in which the Court of Appeal overruled Lyons v. Tucker, and held that a registered bill, given after an unregistered bill, takes priority, although there is no question of execution of bankruptcy. Horne v. Hughes decides that a bill of sale, partly paid off, can be transferred in consideration of the payment of the balance to the lender and a fresh advance to the borrower, not exceeding, in all, the sum for which the bill was originally given, without a fresh registration. Marsden v. Meadows decides that goods sold under an execution, and left with the execution debtor, may be claimed by the purchaser from a new execution creditor without a bill of sale. Payne v. Fern emphasised the law that the grantor of goods cannot give a good title as against the grantee. The Oredit Company v. Pott, Carrard v. Meek, and Hamilton v. Chaine, all turned on the vexed question of the true statement of the consideration. Seal v. Claridge decides that the grantee cannot also be the solicitor who attested the bill. The present case belongs to the same class as Seal v. Claridge, and throws light on the meaning of the word "attestation" in the Bills of Sale Act, and the proper form of the affidavit required by the statute.

The point arose, as usually is the case, in an interpleader issue; and the judgment creditor attacked the bill of sale, on the ground of the insufficiency of the affidavit required by section 10, sub-section 2, to be filed with the bill. That sub-section requires an affidavit of, amongst other things, the "due execution and attestation" of the bill. The affidavit in question stated that the filed copy was a true copy of the bill and of the attestation and execution. It also stated the date, and that the deponent was present and saw the grantor execute the bill, which was explained to him. The name and description of the grantor were also given; and it was added, "the name 'Wm. F. Law,' set and subscribed as the witness attesting the due execution thereof, is the proper handwriting of Wm. Farmery Law, who resides, &c, and is a solicitor." Mr. Law's signature appeared under an attestation clause in regular form, stating that the bill had been executed in his presence. Was this an affidavit of the "due attestation of the bill?" The claimant's counsel said it was, because "attesting" meant merely subscribing the name. The counsel for the execution creditor, on the other hand, contended that "attestation" meant the fact that the deed was executed in the presence of the subscribing witness. There was an affidavit, in short, of the signature, but not of the fact that the execution took place in the presence of the person signing. Mr. Justice Denman, in giving judgment, pointed out that the affidavit was perfectly consistent with the fact that Mr. Law was not present at the execution. Mr. Law, no doubt, signed the statement that he was present, and there was an affidavit that he had signed; but there was no affidavit that he had been present. The mistake probably arose from the draftsman of the affidavit thinking that an affidavit that a statement was signed by the person who purported to sign it, was an affidavit of the statement. Mr. Justice Denman further proceeded to point out that it was not enough if the signature of an attesting witness was made in the absence of the person executing, especially in view of the requirements of the Act with regard to the explanation to be given by the solicitor to the grantor. Mr. Baron Huddleston and Mr. Justice Hawkins agreed in this opinion, and judgment went for the execution creditor.

There could hardly have been a different result, however clear it was, from the attestation clause itself, that the bill had been duly attested. There was little in the rest of the affidavit to eke it out, except the statement that the deponent saw the bill executed by the grantor, "the effect having been first explained to him." This explanation could only be by the solicitor attesting it, and he could not explain without being present. Is there not, therefore, an affidavit by implication that Mr. Law was present? We suppose that the counsel for the execution creditor might extricate himself from this difficulty by saying that the argument is in a circle, because it depends entirely on the bill being attested, which is not shown on the affidavit. As to the meaning of the word "attestation," there can be no doubt that the judges' interpretation is correct. A witness cannot attest unless he is present at the execution. The Lord Chancellor went much further in Seal v. Claridge, and decided that a witness who attests cannot also be a party to the deed, and vice versa. We ventured at the time to express a difficulty in taking that etymological leap; but, if Seal v. Claridge is good law, a fortiori the present case is sound. Grantees of bills of sale for the future will take care that the deponent who makes the affidavit can and does swear that the grantor signed in the presence of the attesting solicitor.—Law Journal.

TRIAL BY JURY ON ITS TRIAL.

A few days ago we reported the proceedings of a meeting held for the purpose of arranging the business of the recently formed Chamber of Commerce for London. It is proposed to invest that body with a great many miscellaneous functions. One of its duties was stated to be the creation of machinery for the settlement of mercantile disputes in a more satisfactory manner than is now practicable. The Council of the new Chamber expressed a hope that they would be able greatly to extend and facilitate arbitration in regard to commercial claims. We do not stop to criticise the feasibility of this or any other of the numerous articles of the programme; we refer to it merely as a sign—one of many visible—of the distrust of the normal and constitutional mode of settling differences. Few things, in fact, are more characteristic of our time than the partial discredit into which trial by jury has fallen. The old eulogies upon it seem in these days curiously strained and even ridiculous. It is barely possible to read with complete gravity the terms of laudation in which it was wont to be vaunted as the great instrument of popular education, the bulwark against the inroads of despotism and arbitrary power, the real security of the freedom of the Press, and the most precious of our institutions. It is hard enough to keep alive the old faith in regard to the use of juries in criminal trials when we see them disregarding their oaths and acquitting prisoners in the face of clear evidence. We have not to look far to mark how impotent justice, if worked by juries, may be when popular sympathy is at all enlisted on the side of crime. No one would think of making trial by jury the basis of criminal procedure in uncivilised communities; and it seems not very successful in some societies which would resent being called at all unenlightened. For the present, however, this distrust takes distinct shape only in regard to civil disputes, and, indeed, chiefly in regard to one form of them—mercantile disputes. Though the law does not recognise the existence of tribunals of commerce in this country, and all attempts to create them have hitherto failed, a sort of substitute for them has grown up. More and more are men of business reluctant to suffer purely business disputes to take the regular course of litigation. They are often settled in some domestic forum. In almost every trade of consequence this movement has been either carried out or has at least been begun. If a man buys wool or cotton or corn, and is dissatisfied with the quantity or quality of the article which he receives and does not get redress, he does not, as a rule, go to law. The question is in certain towns pretty sure to be remitted in ordinary course to two members of his trade, and the public at large never hear of it. The result of this tendency is distinctly visible in our law courts, and is likely to be more marked hereafter. The number of "heavy mercantile cases"—questions respecting the construction of ambiguous phrases in charter parties, bills of lading, or policies of marine insurance—has very much diminished; and the successors at the Bar of Mr. Justice Willes, Lord Blackburn, Sir George Honyman, and other great commercial lawyers do not find an unending succession of knotty points demanding elaborate arguments and large fees. Nowadays, in almost all commercial agreements a provision is inserted for reference to arbitration in the event of differences arising. Even at the Sittings in the City of London—pre-eminently the place for deciding commercial disputes—it is rarer than it was to see questions as to freight, or short delivery, or defective quality, or disregard of trade usages brought before a jury. Merchants are not, it may be presumed, less ready to assert their rights than they were, and trade has not been purged of the common causes of disagreement. Where, then, are the questions which never come into court settled? They are for the most part determined in a rough-and-ready fashion, perfectly well recognised in the businesses in connexion with which a dispute has arisen. The matter, as a rule, goes before two members of the trade, who receive no legal assistance, but who hear evidence, if necessary, or examine samples, or take such other step as they deem advisable in the circumstances, and who can call in some umpire should they disagree. The Stock Exchange furnishes the most complete example of a domestic tribunal of this sort—a tribunal so powerful that the courts of Law have lately had occasion to rebuke its pretensions and to remind the Committee that the Queen's writ runs even in the sacred precincts of Copel-court. In many trades and markets a similar private jurisdiction has been established; and there seems every probability that this informal species of arbitration will extend. It has, no doubt, its serious disadvantages. When really weighty interests are at stake most men would not care to be bound by the decree of a hole-and-corner Court. It is not satisfactory that evidence should be given without the sanction of an oath, and with complete impunity from punishment for false testimony. The system may snit honest disputants, but it is not exactly made for hardened rogues. There is, too, a danger that with the multiplication of the number of disputes settled in this way the character of these tribunals may deteriorate, and that the arbitrators may be not the picked men of a trade, but fussy persons with plenty of time on their hands. Though the method in use works admirably in certain circles and businesses which are concentrated in a few places and in which there is a strong public opinion, it has yet to be proved that it would be satisfactory on a very large scale. The question presents itself whether recognition should not be given to this distinctive feature of our time, and whether the elements of economy and expedition cannot be preserved while the defects in the system are eliminated. The demand for the formation of tribunals of commerce—often rather unintelligently made and with a total ignorance of their constitution in Germany and France—comes from men who have daily occasion to see the inappropriateness of the remedies provided by Courts of Law for the kind of disputes with which they have to do, and who are not entirely satisfied with the rough and uncertain modes of settlement which take the place of ordinary litigation. Do not these demands indicate a real want in our social economy, and cannot something be done to satisfy them?

(1) Illus London News, 16th July, 1881.

It will not do to despise these irregular tribunals as of little consequence merely because they are almost ignored by the law. Their importance lies in the fact that they have sprung up spontaneously. Trial by jury itself did not originate in the speculations of clever jurists who were struck by the merits of a tribunal of twelve. It was of slow growth. It took several shapes. As we know it, this institution is the product of successive adaptations to the wants of society; and it has survived just because its origin was so natural. Great things may be also in store for these rudimentary trade tribunals which are springing up without any unnatural forcing. Hitherto very little has been done by the Legislature to satisfy the want of the mercantile class for cheap and expeditious justice. Certainly, arbitration as understood by lawyers does not meet the requirements of the case. The matter was laid before the Judicature Commission. That body, however, did not see its way to recommend the establishment of tribunals in which commercial men should be the judges. But in its final report that Commission—which comprised many of the most eminent lawyers of the day—suggested "that there might be for every place of sufficient importance a rota or panel, to be formed from time to time, composed of merchants, shipowners, or others conversant with the trade and business of the district, or other competent persons, from which rota the Judge might, at the request of the parties, or, if he thought the circumstances of the case required it, at his discretion, select two persons who should sit with him and advise him during the progress of the case on any point upon which their special knowledge would be of use." Nothing has been done to give real effect to this suggestion, and, indeed, it does not quite run in the lines of popular demand. Something much simpler and shorter than a jury trial or an arbitration conducted with all the pomp and circumstance and delay of an ordinary reference, something more authoritative than the unrecognised tribunals of our great trades, seems needed; and doubtless in due time it will be found.—Times.

THE SLANDER OF A PERSON IN HIS CALLING.

(Continued from page 65, ante.)

Honesty, to this extent at least, is expected of a dealer, that he will not use false weights; of a merchant, that he will not keep false books; of a dealer in grain, that he will not deliver short quantities or inferior goods (Cases I., II., and III.). It would certainly be dishonesty in a gamekeeper to trap the foxes which he was employed to preserve (Case IV.); and for an attorney to cheat his clients (Case V.), or to take fees on both sides (Case VI.), or to betray their secrets (Case VII.), would be conduct grossly reprehensible and scandalous. The principle and the extent of this part of the rule are plain.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(c) I. C. was a minister of the gospel. B. said of him, among other things: "Old C. stayed at our house last night, and was pretty devilish drunk." In the declaration there was no colloquium referring the words to C. in his ministerial character. Held, sufficient.<sup>1</sup> II. S., a minister of the gospel, was charged by G. with a crime of incest. Held, actionable.<sup>2</sup>

With regard to case I., it is sufficient to remember that ministers of the gospel, being teachers and exemplars of moral and Christian duty, a pure and unspotted moral character is absolutely necessary to their usefulness. A merchant or a doctor or a lawyer might, by a reputation for drunkenness, lose a portion of his trade or his practice. This, however, would generally depend upon the extent to which his excesses interfered with the discharge of his duties; and a merchant who was always to be found in his store during business hours, or a lawyer whose indulgences were never known to prevent his properly managing his cases, would probably suffer little in his calling by being charged with employing his leisure in dissipation. But with a minister of the gospel it is different. His whole life, and not the hours he is engaged in the pulpit, is watched and closely scrutinized. As said in Chaddock v. Briggs: "He is separated from the world by his public ordination, and carries with him constantly, whether in or out of the pulpit, superior obligations to exhibit, in his whole deportment, the purity of that religion which he professes to teach. He is as much in office when retired to the bosom of his family as when employed in public duties, and his example, in the practice of all the moral virtues, and particularly of temperance, is not the least of the duties incurred by his profession." Case II. is even stronger. As said in the opinion: "In this country, or in any Christian country, no congregation would abide under his ministry for a day after he had been, in fact, detected in a crime of that peculiar nature; he could not show his face in society, but would be as certainly and effectually excluded, more especially from an office which required him to inculcate religion and morality, as if he had committed an unnatural crime; and much more certainly than if he had committed many other offences which the law makes felony." Therefore, we conclude that, though a charge of immorality not amounting to an indictable crime is not actionable in the case of men generally, see Rule V., (b), yet it is in the case of clergymen, and for the reasons above stated.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(d) I. S. was a physician, and D. said of him: "He is a bad character. None of the medical men here will meet him." Held, actionable.<sup>3</sup> W. was a school-mistress, and R. said of her: "She is a nasty dirty slut." Held, actionable.<sup>4</sup> III. A. was captain of a vessel. B. said of him that he was drunk while in command of it at sea. Held, actionable.<sup>5</sup> IV. S. was the chief engineer of a fire department, and H. charged him with being drunk at a fire. Held, actionable.<sup>6</sup>

Case I. A surgeon must frequently require the assistance and advice of his professional brethren, and to impute to him that on account of his character he is not able to obtain this, for his patients, however necessary it may be, is to charge him with lacking a very important qualification for the discharge of his duties. The decision in Case II. is sustainable only on the ground that it is particularly required of a woman engaged in instructing youth that she shall not be what there she was charged with. As to Case III., it is obvious that sobriety is imperatively demanded of a captain while in command of his vessel; and the result in Case IV. depended on the same reasons.

(To be continued).

(1) Chaddock v. Briggs, 13 Mass. 248 (1816); McMillan v. Bush, 1 Blaney, 178 (1806).

(2) Starr v. Gardner, 6 U. C. Q. B. o. s. 512 (1839). In England an action will not lie for a verbal imputation of incontinence unless the plaintiff is benefited, or holds a clerical office of profit. Gallway v. Marshall, 9 Ex. 394 (1858). This doctrine is not, however, applicable to this country, where no such distinction has been drawn.

(3) Southey v. Denny, 1 Ex. 196 (1847).

(4) Wilson v. Runyon, Wright, 651 (1834).

(5) Irwin v. Brandwood, 3 H. & C. 961 (1864).

(6) Gottschalk v. Hubbschak, 36 Wis. 515 (1876).

INTENT IN CRIMINAL CASES.

The law relating to offences against the person where the intent of the party accused becomes the important element for the consideration of the jury is by no means free from doubt and ambiguity. In Reg. v. Holt (7 C. & P. 518), where the prisoner was indicted under the repealed statute, 9 Geo. IV., c. 13, the allegation was shooting at A. with intent to murder A., and Mr. Justice Littledale directed the jury that the prisoner should be acquitted if they found that the prisoner shot at A., intending to shoot at B., and with no intent whatever in his mind to do A. any harm. But in Reg. v. Jarvis (2 M. & Rob. 40), Baron Gurney, in a case in which the facts were similar, told the jury that it was perfectly immaterial for whom the shot was intended, and that just as if a man laid poison for one person and another took it and died it would be murder; so a blow aimed at one person and killing another would make the party equally answerable. So, too, in Reg. v. Lynch (1 Cox. C. C. 861), where the indictment was for wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm, it appeared that the accused had had a quarrel in a public-house, and subsequently waited outside for the purpose of attacking his antagonist, but by mistake attacked the prosecutor, inflicting the wound in question upon him. Here it was argued by counsel, upon the authority of Reg. v. Holt, that the intent was not proved. Baron Alderson said, "If Reg. v. Holt lays down the position you contend for I shall certainly overrule it. I do not think it either good law or good sense. I shall direct the jury, that if they think the prisoner did to the prosecutor what he intended to do to another man, they must find him guilty." The view of the law taken by Baron Alderson was confirmed and made authoritative in Reg. v. Smith (Deans. C. O. 559), where a case was reserved, and it was held that the conviction was right; for, though he did not intend to kill the particular person, the prisoner meant to murder the person at whom he shot. The facts were briefly as follows:—Indictment charging a wounding of one Taylor with intent to murder him, and the evidence showing an intent to murder one Maloney, and that the prisoner, supposing Taylor to be Maloney, shot at and wounded Taylor. In Reg. v. Hewlett (1 F. & F. 91), where the charge was wounding the prosecutor with intent to do him grievous bodily harm, it appeared that the prisoner struck at another man with a knife, and the prosecutor interfered and caught the blow on his arm, and the learned judge (Mr. Justice Crowther) held that this would not sustain the charge; obviously because there was no intent to injure the person wounded, and the case is therefore clearly distinguishable from those above quoted, where, although there was a mistake as to the person, the injury was intended for the person on whom it falls.

Under the present statute (24 & 25 Vict., c. 100, s. 18), it is sufficient if it is proved that the defendant wounded, &c., any person with intent to maim, &c., any person; so that in Reg. v. Hewlett the prisoner could have been convicted on a count charging him with wounding B. with intent to do grievous bodily harm to A. So, too, in Reg. v. Pretwell (L. & C. 443) it was held that a person who fires a loaded pistol into a group of persons, not aiming at any one in particular, but intending generally to do grievous bodily harm, and who hits one of them, may be convicted of shooting at the person he has hit with intent to do grievous bodily harm to that person.

The case of poisoning one person by mistake for another seems different, if the poison be taken in the absence of the prisoner, for in such a case he can have no actual intent to injure such person. By 1 Vic. c. 85, the words were altered, and instead of "with intent to murder such person" the words "with intent to commit murder" were substituted. The late Mr. Greaves, in his note to this part of the subject in Russell on Crimes, vol. 1, says: "In all cases of doubt as to the intention, it would be prudent to insert one count for shooting at A. with intent to murder him, and another 'with intent to commit murder,' and a count for shooting at A. with intent to murder a person to the jurors unknown."

It is provided expressly by 14 & 15 Vict., c. 19, s. 5, "If upon the trial of any indictment for any felony, except murder or manslaughter, where the indictment shall allege that the defendant did cut, stab, or wound any person, the jury shall be satisfied that the defendant is guilty of the cutting, stabbing, or wounding charged in such indictment, but are not satisfied that the defendant is guilty of the felony charged in such indictment, then and in every such case the jury may acquit the defendant of such felony, and find him guilty of unlawfully cutting, stabbing, or wounding; and thereupon such defendant shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as if he had been convicted upon an indictment for the misdemeanour of cutting, stabbing, or wounding."—Law Times.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

(Continued from page 65, ante.)

Order XIX., Rule 3.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 165.

Where a plaintiff sued for a debt not transferable by statute, and the defendant set up an ordinary debt, the plaintiff was held entitled to judgment for the whole of the debt; and the defendant's counter-claim was dismissed (Gathercole v. Smith, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 681)—C. A.

7 & 8 Geo. IV., c. 31, s. 2.

A felonious partial demolition of a building, so as to give a right of action against the hundred, must be a demolition of part with intent to demolish the whole (Drake v. Footit, 50 Law J. Rep. M. C. 141).

Lewin on Trusts, 595.

Tudor's Leading Cases (3rd Edition), 55.

Leaseholds for lives were devised to A. and his heirs; and, in case A. died without issue, to B. Held, in analogy to a fee-simple, that A. could not, by dealing with the property, defeat the executory interest of B. (In re Barber's Settled Estates, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 769).

Theobald on Wills (2nd Edition), 525.

Where there was a gift of residue in shares, and in case of the death of any legatee before the "final division," a gift over of his share, held that the words "final division" related to the period allowed by law for distribution, viz., a year after the testator's death (In re Wilkins, Spencer v. Duckworth, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 774).

Theobald on Wills (2nd Edition), 637.

Gift of real and personal estate, on trust, out of rents and profits, in the first place to pay to testator's widow, during her life, the clear annual sum of £300, and to pay the remainder of such rents and profits to his sister during her life. Held, the rents and profits being insufficient to pay in full the annuity to the widow, that she was not entitled to a continuing charge upon such rents and profits (Wormald v. Mussen—reversing decision of Fry, J., 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 482—50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 776)—C. A.

Seton on Decrees (4th Edition), 464.

Contribution in respect of costs between defendants to an action cannot be enforced in a separate action (Middleweek v. Dearley, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 777).

(To be continued).

THE ship of the tongue perpetrated on Wednesday night in the House of Lords by Lord Carlingford is bracketed with the famous lapsus of the Registrar to the Land Commission, who will henceforth have to share his pedestal with a member of the nobility. Lord Carlingford spoke of "the Secretary of the Land League" (instead of Land Commission) as the person who had been deceived into sanctioning the publication of the famous pamphlet, "How to become the Owner of your Farm." Even the Peers laughed at the blunder.

ADMISSION OF A SOLICITOR.

Mr. James Richard Barklie, B.A., T.O.D., of Weston, Rathgar, in the County of Dublin, eldest son of the late John Robert Barklie, Esq., of Rathgar, and formerly of the County Armagh, has been admitted a Solicitor of the Court of Judicature.

OBITUARY.

F. W. M'BLAINE, LL.D.

FREDERICK WILLIAM M'BLAINE, a native of Newry, who died at Rosstrevor on the 7th instant, was educated in the Dublin University, where he obtained a Scholarship in 1840, graduated B.A. in 1842, taking a Senior Moderatorship with gold medals in classics and ethics and logics, and in 1847 obtained the degree of LL.D. He was called to the Bar in Easter Term, 1845, and joined the North-east Circuit. He succeeded in obtaining a fair amount of practice, and was appointed Crown Prosecutor for the county of Armagh. In 1850 he unsuccessfully contested the parliamentary representation of the borough of Newry in the Liberal interest, and in 1874 was alike defeated as a candidate for the county of Armagh. In the spring of last year he acted as locus tenens for the County Court Judge of Down, and afterwards (Feb.) was appointed a Divisional Police Magistrate for the metropolis, in succession to Mr. Charles J. O'Donel, promoted to the office of Chief Magistrate, on the resignation of Mr. J. W. O'Donnell. As a magistrate, during his lamentably short tenure of office, he proved himself a sound, zealous, and firm administrator of the law. Personally Dr. M'Blaine (who died unmarried) was extremely popular, a fluent speaker, a genial raconteur, and kindly and courteous in the extreme; and deeply, indeed, is his untimely death deplored by the large circle of his friends and by his many admirers.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BARR.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. George Keys, Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed a Police Magistrate for the Metropolis.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Law relating to Building Leases and Building Contracts, the Improvement of Land by, and the Construction of, Buildings. With a full Collection of Precedents of Agreements for Building Leases, Building Leases, Contracts for Building, Building Grants, Mortgages, and other Forms with respect to matters connected with Building. Together with the Statutes relating to Building, with Notes and the latest Cases under the various Sections. And a Glossary of Architectural and Building Terms. By ALFRED EMDEN, of the Inner Temple, Esquire, Barrister-at-Law. London: Stevens & Haynes, Law Publishers, Bell Yard, Temple Bar. 1882.

THE LEGAL AGE OF WOMEN IN SWITZERLAND.—An important instalment of "women's rights" has been conceded in Switzerland, where the law making both sexes of full legal age at twenty-one came into force with the new year. In many cantons the age of majority for men has hitherto been as high as twenty-six; and, as women were altogether denied majority, no matter how old they were, the number of "wards" was very great. The duty of guardianship in most cases devolved on the communes, which have been relieved of much thankless labour; and for the future Swiss women, at home or abroad, whether unmarried, married, or widows, will be civilly emancipated on their twenty-first birthdays. In the town of St. Gall alone fortunes to the amount of upwards of ten millions of francs were transferred to women, formerly in wardship, under the new law, on New Year's Day.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—W. Cooke, payment.—M. M'C. Gage, allocate.

IN COURT.—S. M'Clave, as to letting.—D. B. Leonard, do.—E. Atthill, receiver.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).
Trustee H. Power, rental.—P. J. Boylan, vouch.

TUESDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—C. Lewis, to confirm sale.

IN COURT.—Trustees Corbett, final schedule.—M. Handley, do.—A. E. Acheson, payment.—J. O'Flaherty, from 14th.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).
S. Davis, rental.

WEDNESDAY.

IN COURT.—J. Horgan, from 15th.—E. J. Brady, objection.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—M. Coates, from 16th.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).
A Gara, vouch.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE OMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—T. Barnes, to confirm sale.

IN COURT.—Trustee J. R. Dickson, receiver.—R. W. Fearon, from 16th.

TUESDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

J. HARSHAW, . . . . . 1 lot.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

T. L. Eshaw, vouch.—J. Callaghan, do. from 15th.—
J. Butler, vouch.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

W. Coleman, rental from 8th.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Brennan, Peter John, of Burlington-quay, Bandon, in the county of Cork, corn and manure merchant. January 27; Tuesday, February, 28, and Friday, March 17. Dealy and White and G. K. Sherlock, solrs.

Gilmora, John, senior, of 2, Hay Park-avenue, Ballinacraig, Belfast, in the county of Antrim, ironmonger. January 31; Tuesday, February 28, and Friday, March 17. Richard Davoren, solr.

Hogan, Cornelius, of the Glen, in the city of Waterford, cattle dealer. February 8; Friday, March 3, and Tuesday, March 21. Richard Davoren, solr.

M'Carthy, Thomas, of Tallow, in the county of Waterford, hardware dealer. February 8; Friday, March 3, and Tuesday, March 21. John L. and W. Scallan, solrs.

Murray, William Thomas, of 2, Proby-square, Blackrock, in the county of Dublin, gentleman. February 10; Tuesday, March 7, and Friday, March 24. Jehu Mathews, solr.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	FEBRUARY
	Sat. 11	Mon. 13	Tue. 14	Wed. 15	Thur. 16	Fri. 17
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	99½	99½	—	—	99½	—
— 3 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— New 3 p c Stock ..	98½	98½	99½	99½	99½	99½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1888 } Trsfble. at ..	103½	103½	103½	—	103½	103½
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	—	—	—	99½	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	—	—	—	318	318
25 Hibernian Banking Co ..	—	—	—	35½	85	35
20 London and County (Lit'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and W'minate. &amp; Hd ..	—	68½	68½	68½	68½	68½
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
34 Munster Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	7
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	23	—	23	23
10 National of Liverpool (Lit'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Nat. Prov. of England, Lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish ..	—	—	x d	—	—	50
100 City of Dublin ..	—	—	—	—	—	114
50 Dublin and Glasgow ..	—	—	18	—	—	—
50 Dublin &amp; Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	5	—	5½	—	—
Mines.
45 Berehaven (Limited) ..	—	5/-	—	—	5/6	—
24 Wicklow Copper ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons.' Gas ..	—	—	15½	15½	—	—
8 Do. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co. Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	6½
10 Dublin Artisan Dwellings ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dub. (S'th) City Market Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
17 Hudson's Bay ..	—	—	30	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	x d	—	—	10½
Railways.
10 Athenry and Tuam ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and Northern Cos. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Dublin, W'klow, &amp; W'ford ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	118	—	—	118	77	118½
100 Gr. Southern and Western ..	—	—	109½	—	111	111½
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	82½	—	—	83
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	99
100 Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 D. W. &amp; W., 6 per cent ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gr. N'th'n (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 3½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gr. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 5 p c ..	—	120½	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	101½
— C'fergus and Larne 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Cork and Bandon, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gr. North'n &amp; West'n 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	109½	—	109½
— Gr. South'n &amp; West'n. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	109	—	—
— L'derry &amp; Enniskillen 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Water'd &amp; Limerick 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
— Alliance &amp; Cons.' Gas, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Ballast Office Deb., 292 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— City Deb. of 292 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dub. &amp; Kingstown 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	103½	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—6 per cent.. 30th January, 1882.

Of Deposit—3 per cent.. 30th January, 1882.

Name Days—February 28th, and March 15th, 1882.

Account Days—March 1st and 16th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills are the best, the cheapest, and the most popular remedies. At all seasons and under all circumstances they may be used with safety and with the certainty of doing good. Eruptions, rashes, and all descriptions of skin diseases, sores, ulcers, and burns are presently benefited and ultimately cured by these healing, soothing, and purifying medicaments. The Ointment rubbed upon the abdomen, checks all tendency to irritation of the bowels, and adverts dysentery and other disorders of the intestines. Pimples, blotches, inflammations of the skin, muscular pains, neuralgic affections, and enlarged glands can be effectively overcome by using Holloway's remedies according to the "instructions" accompanying each packet.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1882.

No. 787

"PLACES," WITHIN THE BETTING HOUSES ACT.

THE Betting Houses Act (16 & 17 Vic., c. 119), after reciting in the preamble that a kind of gaming had of late sprung up tending to injure and demoralise improvident persons, by the opening of places called betting houses or offices, and the receiving of money in advance by the owners or occupiers of such houses or offices on their promises to pay money on events of horse races, &c., proceeds to enact, by section 1, that "no house, office, room, or other place shall be opened, kept, or used for the purpose of the owner, occupier, or keeper, or person using the same, or of any person having the care or management, or in manner conducting the business thereof, betting with persons resorting thereto, or for the purpose of any money . . . being received by or on behalf of such owner or occupier . . . on or for the consideration of any . . . promise or agreement, express or implied, to pay or give thereafter any money . . . on any event or contingency relating to any horse race," &c. And by section 3, in which similar words are used, a penalty is imposed upon the owner or occupier of any "house, office, room, or other place," who shall open, keep, or use the same for such purposes.

What constitutes a "place" within the meaning of this Act? There have been several decisions on the subject, the latest being Galloway (app.) v. Maries (resp.), which we find reported in last Saturday's Law Times; and they certainly present a most singular illustration of the extended operation which judicial interpretation can assign to a legislative enactment of which the real object was apparently so limited.

In Doggett v. Catterns (19 C. B. N. S. 765, 12 L. T. N. S. 355, 34 L. J. C. P. 159) the Court of Exchequer Chamber held (reversing the Common Pleas) that the ground underneath a tree in Hyde Park was not a "place" within the meaning of section 1, and that, therefore, section 5 did not entitle the plaintiff to recover back the deposit paid by him to the defendant upon a bet made by the plaintiff with the defendant, a betting agent and book-maker, who was in the habit of standing under a tree in the park, and there making bets on horse races, and receiving deposits. But, Pollock, C.B., in giving judgment, said he so far agreed with the Court below as to think that an open place without any "house, office, or room" might be a "place" within the statute, but he thought it must be a place capable of having an owner or occupier, which was not there the case. Bramwell, B., agreed that the decision should be reversed, but was unwilling to reverse it on the ground put by Pollock, C.B., that, to come within section 4 or 5, a person must necessarily be an owner or occupier of the place. Channell, B., and Blackburn, J., concurred for the reasons given by Pollock, C.B.; and Mellor, J., and Pigott, B., concurred for the reasons given by Bramwell, B. The next case in which the question arose is Shaw v. Morley (L. R. 3 Ex. 137). There it appeared that on a strip of land, part of a race-course, and adjoining and immediately outside the grand stand inclosure, a temporary wooden structure five feet high, without a roof, and having two frontages, was erected, in which, during the races, the business of betting was carried on as follows:—Outside was a board, with the name and address of the proprietor of the structure, and betting lists, and the names of the horses, and the odds which the proprietor was willing to bet, and inside were desks facing to each frontage, at which the defendants or their clerks sat and made bets, which they then and there recorded in books open before them. Kelly, C.B., Martin and Pigott, BB., held that this structure, though it had no roof, was an "office or place" within the Act, and therefore that the proprietor was properly convicted under section 3. "It makes no matter whatever, in my opinion," said Kelly, C.B., "whether the structure had or had not got a roof upon it, or whether or not it was fastened to the ground by any means, or was movable." Again, in Eastwood v. Miller (L. R. 9 Q. B. 440) a "pigeon-shooting ground" was held to constitute a "place" within the Act, as was a "cricket ground" in Hugh v. The Town Council of Sheffield (L. R. 10 Q. B. 102); but Bowes v. Fenwick (L. R. 9 C. P. 339) was a yet stronger decision, holding that a stool and umbrella constituted a "place" within the meaning of this statute, passed with the object of putting down betting houses. But (pace Mr. Biggar) Stephen's-green Club is safe: Oldham v. Ramsden, 44 L. J. C. P. 309.

Now, in Galloway v. Maries (45 L. T. N. S. 762) it appeared that, at a race meeting in a private park, to which the public were admitted on payment of a small sum as entrance money, the respondent and one S. were together during the races within a railed inclosure called "the Ring," adjoining the grand stand, and whilst there, S. stood upon a small wooden box placed on, but not attached to the ground within the ring, and there he and the respondent, standing and acting in company together, were calling out and offering to make, and did make ready-money bets with other persons on some of the races, S. receiving the money for bets made and respondent booking the sums, and both of them remaining together at the same spot within the ring during the races. An information against the respondent was dismissed by the justices, on the ground that neither the inclosure nor the "box" was or constituted a "place" within the meaning of the Act; and the question came before Grove and Lopes, JJ., on appeal. "Not one, I think, of the previous cases goes quite so far as the contention on the part of the appellant in the present case seeks to carry it," said Grove, J.; and well might he ask, as he did, "do you say that the Legislature contemplated a thing like this loose box being a place? The object of the statute was to put down betting houses." Even Bowes v. Fenwick did not go so far, for in the present case the "umbrella" was gone, and only the stool or box remained. In that case, said Grove, J., "the alleged offender took up a position on a racecourse, standing upon a low stool, having a large umbrella, capable of covering several persons, fixed over his head by means of a large jointed stick, with a spike at the end which was inserted into the ground. This umbrella was kept open irrespective of the weather, and on the outside of it was painted the appellant Bowes' name and address in large letters, and an announcement to the effect that 'we pay all bets first past the posts.' There was in that case a temporary covering, and the appellant there advertised himself partly by written or printed advertisement, as before mentioned, and partly by oral advertisement, or calling out to the surrounding crowd. The particular method of advertisement has not, however, I think, much to do with the question of 'place.' But in Bowes v. Fenwick there was besides the stool the large umbrella fixed with the spiked handle into the ground. The judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in that case seems to rest both upon the umbrella and the stool in this way: not that the umbrella spiked into the ground constituted fixity of place in the sense of its being attached to the soil, but that the umbrella and the stool also on which the man stood and offered bets being there they constituted fixity of place in the sense of its being a fixed spot, indicated and ascertainable by means of the stool and umbrella, to which people could and did resort for purposes of betting. Lord Coleridge, C.J., in his judgment there, says with reference to this umbrella and stool: 'It was not a house or room. It might perhaps be said that it was an office; I do not give an opinion on that point, because I am certainly of opinion that it was a "place." It was an ascertained place, for the umbrella was fixed . . . it was kept up wet or dry, and I am therefore of opinion that he was using a "place" within the meaning of the Act.' The question is, would the learned judges who decided that case have come to the same decision if there had been no umbrella in the case? I cannot doubt that they would have done so, because the ground of their decision in the case as it stands is the fixity of the place; that is to say, its being a denoted and ascertained place, where the respondent carried on for the time the business of betting, and where people might resort for betting purposes." "I must say that, in the absence of any authority on the point, I should not have thought that this 'box' could be a 'place' within the statute," said Lopes, J.; "but the case of Bowes v. Fenwick, which goes further than any of the other cases, is a very cogent authority to show that it was." It was held, accordingly, that the respondent was liable to conviction, and the decision of the justices was reversed.

The principle of this case, as indeed of the previous authorities, seems to be that, in order to constitute a "place" within the statute, it must be some fixed and ascertained spot occupied so far permanently, by a person indicating what the business is that he intends to carry on there, that the public may see and know that there is a definite and recognised spot to which anyone desirous of so doing may resort for the purpose of betting. "Races never alters, as is things I don't 'old with, tho' no doubt they've been from the beginnin' of the world," says Arthur Sketchley's amusing "Mrs. Brown;" nor do we 'old with betting at races among gentry who superimpose themselves on boxes, like Maries, and maintain umbrellas, like Bowes, contrary to the Act of 16 & 17 Vic., c. 119—yet, two words of advice we would give them: "Move on." It will not do to indulge in fixed and ascertained spots, and even a cart, like that of a "cheap Jack" at a fair, may bring its owner to grief, just as much as what in Galloway v. Maries, served to convict the respondent of being in the wrong "box."

LAND COMMISSION REPORTS.

It appears that there are some people still ignorant that there are no "official" reports of cases decided by the Land Commission. The IRISH LAW TIMES reports of those cases, however, present the double advantage arising from judicial revision, and from printing what is said by the judges in extenso. From the beginning we adopted this course, and accordingly the opening address of Mr. Justice O'Hagan, to which so much attention has been attracted, will be found recorded in our columns unmutated (15 Ir. L. T. 549). We prefer to publish the ipsissima verba of the Bench rather than what may be "considered requisite" by anyone else. And accordingly, it need hardly be said that it was not with reference to the IRISH LAW TIMES Mr. MacFarlane, M.P., for Mr. Gray, M.P., asked in the House of Commons, on the 23rd inst., "why in the official (sic) report of cases decided by the Land Commission, and which contained Mr. Justice O'Hagan's opening address, the following passage had been omitted, viz.:—"That the rent should be a rent which might be fairly paid, and yet permit tenants not deficient in those qualities of industry and prudence which are expected in any walk of life to live and thrive?" The Attorney-General said that the Chief Secretary was not aware until recently of the existence of the reports which were referred to in the question—reports which recently came under our own notice in connexion with a rather peculiar incident in reference to the alleged revision of Ruledge v. Ruledge: see 15 L. T. 638. "In the first part of those reports," he added, "the reporters published so much of the observations of Mr. Justice O'Hagan in opening the court as they considered requisite. The learned judge informs me that the introduction was not submitted to him for revision nor revised by him, nor until this question was mooted did he ever read that production."

PRISONERS AND THEIR COUNSEL.

"X" writes as follows to the Law Journal:—"It seems that, for the present at all events, we must regard counsel for the prisoner as being only in a limited sense the prisoner's mouthpiece, and not as being 'entitled to say whatever the prisoner might say,' as laid down by the late Lord Chief Justice some two years since. With your permission, I would point out, by means of an illustration which has just presented itself, how very hardly this new rule may bear upon innocent prisoners, while completely failing to lessen the chances of escape of prisoners who, though guilty, are astute and self-possessed.

"At the last Cornwall assizes Mrs. Georgina Parkyn was tried before the Lord Chief Justice for forging and uttering a certain bill of exchange, which purported to be accepted by Lord Archibald Douglas. There was practically no evidence to prove that the prisoner had forged the document in question, and the case hinged upon the uttering—whether, when she offered the bill in payment, she knew that it was a forgery. The facts deposed to were—that Mrs. Parkyn had made certain purchases at a draper's shop, and that in payment she had tendered the forged acceptance; that the shopkeeper, on looking at the bill, said, 'Who is Lord Archibald Douglas?' and that the prisoner replied 'He is my father; he has taken a cottage for me at Roche, and this is how he sends me my money.' Lord Archibald Douglas, a comparatively young man, not much older than the prisoner, was next called, and appeared attired in the garb of a Roman Catholic priest, and proved that the acceptance upon the bill was a forgery of his signature.

"This was the case against the prisoner. It should, however, be added that in the course of the trial it came out that the husband of the prisoner was a man connected with mining adventures, and that between him and the prisoner there had been quarrels. The prisoner was very pretty, was most becomingly dressed, possessed an extremely sweet voice, with quite the intonation of a lady, and was undefended by counsel. At the end of the case for the prosecution the prisoner read a written defence, delivered with much skill, and relieved from time to time by the exhibition of becoming emotion. The defence was well arranged, and capably written. A large share of the credit of its composition has been generally attributed to a local solicitor, who advised the prisoner as to the line of defence she should adopt.

"The three main points made by the prisoner in her defence, were the following:—

"1. The prisoner said that it was absolutely untrue that she had said that Lord Archibald Douglas was her father. What she had really said was: 'Oh, that is Father Douglas!' referring to him in his capacity as a priest of the Church of Rome, of which Church the prisoner also stated that she was a member.

"2. The prisoner next said that the forged bill was given to her by her husband; that she knew nothing of Lord Archibald Douglas, save through her husband, who had told her that he had had transactions with his lordship in reference to mines, and had received money from him in respect of such transactions to the amount of £300. She further said that she was wholly ignorant of the fact that the bill was a forgery, and that the whole thing was a plot on the part of her husband (who was tired of her) to enable him to get rid of her.

"3. The prisoner further stated that her husband had treated her with great cruelty, and had told her, on more than one occasion, to get her living by her beauty. This gave her a great opportunity for enlarging upon the abominable nature of this suggestion; though there was no evidence to show that the husband had ever made use of the expression.

"The jury, after a summing-up which favoured an acquittal, returned a verdict of 'not guilty,' and the prisoner was discharged, to adjourn, it is said, with her husband to a hotel in the town, where they took up their abode.

"Now suppose that the late, instead of the present, Lord Chief Justice had tried the case, and that the prisoner had been defended by counsel; counsel for the prisoner would then have been able to lay the whole of paragraphs No. 1 and No. 2 before the jury, and, if done with any skill, a verdict of acquittal would probably have been obtained. Under the present system, however, counsel would be debarred from putting forward either No. 1 or No. 2. Let us see how this affects (1) guilty, and (2) innocent prisoners.

"Suppose that the prisoner is guilty, then, if possessed of sufficient pluck to conduct his or her own case, and lay it skilfully—and this may easily be done by means of a written speech—before the jury, an acquittal may fairly be anticipated if the defence is a plausible one. But if the prisoner is too nervous and timid to undertake this, and it is necessary to obtain the services of counsel, then, as counsel would have to abandon such defenses as No. 1 and No. 2, except as mere hypothetical solutions, his client would, in a case such as above, very probably be convicted. Suppose, again, that the prisoner is innocent, then in such a case as the one we have put, coolness and pluck would be rewarded by acquittal, and nervousness and timidity by conviction. But, as innocent prisoners are naturally the least likely to have any previous acquaintance with Courts of justice, they are those most likely to suffer from a nervous dread of the ordeal of trial. In the case above, the prisoner was before a Court of justice not for the first nor even the second time. The present system seems, then, to come to this, that a prisoner who is not embarrassed by his or her position has, with a plausible defence, a very good chance of acquittal; while an innocent prisoner with a good defence, but unable to put it, except as a mere hypothesis by the mouth of counsel, will run every risk of conviction. Further than this, a prisoner may yet deliver, by means of a speech written by counsel or by a solicitor, much that, even under the former procedure (e.g., No. 3, as above), counsel would be debarred from laying before the jury.

"Under these circumstances it would seem to be good policy for counsel to defend prisoners by means of written speeches, which prisoners should read. But does not this show plainly that it would be wise to return to the principle that counsel is the mouthpiece of the unsworn prisoner for all purposes, and that the jury must take the statements of the prisoner so made, for what they may consider them to be worth."

THE LAND LAW ACT, 1881.

A Parliamentary paper published on Saturday gives returns of the judicial rents fixed by the Sub-Commissioners, under the Act of 1881, in all the cases notified by them to the Irish Land Commission up to and including January 28th, 1882. The following is a summary, showing, according to counties and provinces, the number of cases in which judicial rents have been fixed by Sub-Commissioners; and also the acreage, tenement valuation, former rents, and judicial rents of the holdings:—

	No. of Cases in which Judicial Rents have been fixed.	Acreage: Statute Acres.	Tenement Valua- tion.	Former Rent.	Judicial Rent.
ULSTER:—
Antrim ..	50	1,321	£ 1,784	£ 1,789	£ 1,820
Armagh ..	18	111	99	151	90
Cavan ..	108	2,853	1,513	2,179	1,711
Donegal ..	70	2,803	1,348	1,755	1,287
Down ..	122	2,404	2,486	3,044	2,355
Fermanagh ..	29	1,260	1,085	1,343	1,018
Londonderry ..	3	250	240	304	237
Monaghan ..	15	200	100	126	105
Tyrone ..	110	2,865	1,645	2,317	1,773
Total ..	530	14,232	9,800	12,958	9,796
LEINSTER:—
Carlow ..	15	917	729	1,088	933
Kildare ..	40	1,629	1,002	1,508	1,170
Kilkenny ..	91	3,823	2,279	3,066	2,528
King's ..	18	628	370	369	308
Meath ..	14	448	374	498	420
Queen's ..	37	1,537	903	1,445	1,013
Wexford ..	53	2,712	1,068	1,448	1,174
Total ..	253	11,595	6,618	9,670	7,541
CONNAUGHT:—
Leitrim ..	28	904	409	563	440
Mayo ..	113*	2,485	631	1,084	743
Roscommon ..	71	1,329	605	930	680
Sligo ..	9	395	132	239	182
Total ..	221	5,033	1,877	2,866	2,060
MUNSTER:—
Clare ..	62	2,134	1,184	1,838	1,337
Cork ..	11	429	248	364	275
Kerry ..	66	2,678	1,841	3,312	2,608
Limerick ..	67	2,379	2,013	3,273	2,493
Tipperary ..	98	3,374	2,365	3,189	2,491
Total ..	304	11,992	£7,554	£11,997	£9,199

From another return just presented to Parliament it appears that there have been, down to January 28, 31 cases of sales to tenants under section 26 of the Act, in which the advances made by the Commission amounted to £1,579. Under sections 24 and 25 advances amounting to £7,817 have been made to five tenants; advances amounting in all to £18,814 have also been sanctioned but not completed.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—V.

(Continued from page 74, ante)

Mortgage by Joint Tenants.

The special question raised here is upon the covenants for title. If the mortgagors simply convey "jointly as beneficial owners" it would seem that a joint covenant would be implied by sect. 7. Messrs. Wolstenholme and Turner (pp. 92, 157) suggest an adaptation, which they consider will also raise by implication several covenants. But it partly depends on sect. 64, and partly on sect. 7 (2), and we should certainly prefer, where joint and several covenants are desired, to use the ordinary forms in full. Another plan would be to make the mortgagors convey jointly as beneficial owners, and then add a declaration that it was intended that joint and several covenants by them should be implied.

* Exclusive of decisions made by the Civil Bill Court.

Sect. 7 (7) permits variations and extensions of the implied covenants. But we should prefer to use the old forms in the present case. We shall conclude our remarks on this part of our subject by considering rather more fully the following important security.

Mortgage by Tenants in Common, being Partners, of their Works.

Here obviously the leasing power of the mortgagors and their subsequent mortgagees must be excluded. General words and "all estate clause" may, as usual, be omitted. But the covenants not to remove the movable portions of the works, to keep the premises in good repair, to insure against fire, and a declaration that all machinery, set up after the mortgage, shall become subject to the security, will still be inserted. (For form compare David. Mortgages, 3rd ed. 913.) The power of sale, given by the statute, will require some modification, especially when the security comprises machinery, which makes it liable to registration under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and it is not intended to register it. The notices required before exercise of the power (s. 20, i., ii.) will be found too long for the mortgagee, while the mortgagors may also reasonably desire to prevent a power of sale arising immediately on any breach by them of any covenant relating to the property (sect. 20, iii.). If it is intended that joint and several covenants for title should be given, the best way will be to use the ordinary forms. As to joint and several covenants see David. i. 115; ii. 935.

Further Charge.

Where it can be so arranged, a further charge, made between the same parties as the original mortgage, or their representatives, is usually made by indorsement. Where, however, this cannot be done, the new deed should be described as supplemental (sect. 58) to the old one, and so the recital of the old deed can be omitted. Of course the two deeds should always be kept together. The form of the further charge will depend much on the frame of the original mortgage. Thus, if in the mortgage there is an express power of sale, a declaration should be inserted in the further charge that the power shall also apply to the further advance: see David. Mortgages, 1282. If, on the contrary, the mortgage was executed after the 31st Dec., 1881, and the power of sale was omitted in reliance on sects. 19, 22, then no reference should be made to any power of sale. The statutory power will be implied, for the word "mortgage" in sect. 19 includes a charge (sect. 2, vi.). It will be noticed that in the "short form" of transfer of mortgage given in Schedule IV. there is no reference to any power of sale. It should be observed that these short forms are merely intended to be models, and are useful as showing what expressions will be sufficient in relation to the provisions of the Act (sect. 57); they must not be confused with the statutory mortgage, and other statutory conveyances in Schedule III., which, by virtue of sect. 26-29, raise by implication various covenants. If there are any special covenants or provisions in the mortgage which are intended to apply to the fresh advance, mention should be made of them in the further charge. So also if the new advance is on a joint account, it should be so stated. The form in Schedule IV., of which we have previously spoken, suggests a reduction in the length of that part of the deed which charges the property. It declares "that all the property comprised in the before-mentioned indenture of mortgage shall stand charged with the payment to B. and C. of the sum of £ , and the interest thereon hereinbefore covenanted to be paid, as well as the sum of £ and interest secured by the same indenture."

From this it would seem that a simple declaration that the property shall "stand charged" is sufficient, without any further clause that it shall not be redeemable except by payment of the fresh advance also. We find, however, that Messrs. Wolstenholme and Turner, who are generally inclined to be satisfied with the Act, add words to the effect of the latter clause (Wolst. & T.

169), and we shall advise our readers to follow their example.

Second Mortgage.

The effect of the Act will be to encourage the making of second, and inferior, securities. By sect. 15 the mortgagor can compel the first mortgagee to allow him to inspect the deed, and to take copies. This was formerly usually obtainable only as a matter of favour. Also the right to consolidate against a second mortgagee will be found somewhat diminished both by the Act (sect. 17), and the recent decision in Jennings v. Jordan (45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 598; L. Rep. 6 App. Cas. 698). Another cause of the increase of these securities will be the conciseness, and consequent cheapness, which will be attainable by reliance on the Act. There are two classes of persons who take second mortgages—the one who desire good security for their money, but a higher rate of interest than can be obtained on a first mortgage; and another class who have money already due to them from the mortgagor, and must simply take what security they can get. It is with the interests of the first class we are now concerned. The Act makes no difference as to the inquiries of the first mortgagee before the security is effected, or to the notice given afterwards. The leasing powers of sect. 18, if they have not been excluded by the previous mortgage, will undoubtedly improve the position of a second mortgagee when in possession, while the provisions of the Act relating to the discharge of incumbrances and actions respecting mortgages will often be found useful: see sects. 5, 25. It will not be necessary for us to go into any details with respect to the frame of the second mortgage. But we may add that leasing powers of mortgagor and subsequent mortgagees should be excluded.

Transfer of Mortgages.

Where the transfer cannot be made by indorsement, it will be convenient to state that the transfer is supplemental to the mortgage, and so save the recital (sect. 57). The estate clause in the assignment of the debt should be omitted (sect. 63). General words and estate clause in the conveyance of the estate should also be omitted (sects. 6, 63); and, if it is stated that the mortgagor conveys "as mortgagor" both in the assignment of the debt and the conveyance of the estate, his covenants for title may be omitted as being implied by sect. 7 (F).

If the transfer is made to parties who advance the sum on a joint account, this should be so stated, and then, by sect. 61, no joint account clause will be needed.

If the mortgagor joins, and if he has made incumbrances since the mortgage which is to be transferred, he will not covenant as to title, and must therefore take care not "to direct as beneficial owner" the conveyance by the old mortgage, as otherwise covenants would be implied, sect. 7 (3). Compare David. ii. 1299.

If the mortgagor joins, and if he has made no fresh incumbrances, the form will be very much like a new mortgage. There will be an assignment of the debt, omitting the estate clause. The mortgagor will convey "as beneficial owner," and covenants and powers added as may be desired. Compare David. ii. 1302.

Reconveyance.

Here, again, if the deed cannot be indorsed, it will usually be convenient to make it "supplemental" (sect. 57). Also the "estate clause" will be omitted; and, if the mortgagor conveys "as mortgagor," his covenant against incumbrances may be omitted as implied by sect. 7 (F).

In our next article we intend to discuss the statutory forms which derive their authority from Part V. of the Act (sects. 26-29).

(To be continued).

ADMISSION OF A SOLICITOR.

Mr. William J. Marshall, second son of John Marshall, of Glendalough, in the county of Wicklow, Esquire, has been admitted a Solicitor of the Court of Judicature.

THE SLANDER OF A PERSON IN HIS CALLING.

(Continued from page 78, ante.)

Rule VIII.—The language, to be actionable, must refer to some act or transaction which is a part of or incident to the person's occupation.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

I. A. was a merchant. B. said of him: "He keeps false books." Held, actionable.<sup>1</sup> II. C. was a blacksmith. N. said of him: "He keeps false books, and I can prove it." Held, actionable.<sup>2</sup> III. R. was a farmer. E. said of him: "He keeps false books." Held, not actionable.<sup>3</sup>

As to Case I., it requires no argument to show that a merchant must keep books, and that to say of him that he keeps false books must necessarily injure him in the estimation of the public with which he deals. So, as said in Case II., the keeping of a book of accounts is incident to the business of a blacksmith, and necessary in this country, where credit is usually given as well by the mechanic as by the merchant and professional man. But Case III. presents a different calling, with different modes of dealing. A merchant sells to the public generally; a blacksmith works for the public generally. But a farmer sells his produce in large quantities; he carries it abroad to market; and he delivers it for cash, and not on credit. Books of account are not necessarily incident to his business.

Other illustrations of this rule readily occur. Thus, to say of a painter that he is a poor hand at making a coat, or of a tailor that he never made a boot that fitted, or of a lawyer that he is an execrable musician, would obviously in each case afford no ground of action.<sup>4</sup>

Rule IX.—As the charge must be of something that affects generally the character of the party in his occupation, words imputing want of skill or ignorance in a particular transaction are not actionable per se; but aliter if that act is of so grave a nature as to necessarily injure his general reputation in that occupation.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

I. P. was a physician, and M., another physician, said of him: "P. hath killed Mr. A. with physic, which physic was a pill, and the vomit was found in his mouth; and Dr. B. and Dr. C. were there, and found it so, and it is true." Held, not actionable.<sup>5</sup> II. F. was an attorney. B. said of him: "F. knows nothing about the suit." Held, not actionable.<sup>6</sup> III. C. was a physician who had treated a female patient, one S. M. said of him: "If Dr. C. had continued to treat her, she would have been in her grave before this time; his treatment of her was rascally." Held, not actionable.<sup>7</sup> IV. S. was a physician, and U. said of him, in reference to the case of a woman whom he had attended at her confinement, when she was delivered of twins, both she and the offspring dying shortly afterwards: "He has killed three, and ought to be hung,—damn him. They all died through his mismanagement. I have understood he left the after-birth, and a man that would do that ought to be hung." Subsequently one Mrs. H. having employed S., U. said to her: "He was the means of your sickness, by cutting an artery in your head. Damn him, you ought not to pay him a cent. If Mr. H. had took him up for it, it would have cost him four hundred dollars. It ought to be put in the newspapers." Held, actionable.<sup>8</sup> V. S. was a physician, and H. said of him: "Dr. S. killed my children; he gave them teaspoonful doses of calomel, and they died. Dr. S. gave them teaspoonful doses of calomel, and it killed them. They did not live long after they took it; they died right off, the same day." Held, actionable.<sup>1</sup>

Case I. was decided in Queen Elizabeth's time. Coke for the defendant argued that the action would not lie because a physician might involuntarily kill a patient, not knowing the disease, and yet no discredit would attach to him. And all the judges agreed that the action lay not; "for it cannot be any discredit to a physician to say that he killed one with physic: it is a usual and common expression, and it may be without any default in him; for they may mistake the diseases in their own bodies, much more in others, and apply wrong medicines which may be the cause of the patient's death, and yet no discredit unto them," following Coke's argument. Case II. arose in New York in 1811; and Poe v. Dr. Mendford (case I.) was approved, the court saying: "There is not an instance in the books which we have met with of a suit sustained for words charging a professional man with ignorance in a particular case. To carry the right of action so far would be unnecessary for the protection of any profession, and would be an unreasonable check upon the freedom of discussion. There is no physician, however eminent, who is not liable to mistake the symptoms of a particular disease, nor any attorney who may not misunderstand the complicated nature and legal consequences of a particular litigation." The charge in case III. implied nothing more than unskillfulness or ignorance in the treatment of one case, and could hardly affect the physician's reputation as to his general competency to practise his profession.

Cases IV. and V. illustrate the latter part of the rule. The opinion of the Chief Justice in Sumner v. Utley (case IV.) is able and exhaustive, and so far as it relates to the rule we are considering cannot be abridged without losing some part at least of the argument. "I readily admit," said Hosmer, C.J., "that falsehood may be spoken of a physician's practice in a particular case, ascribing to him only such a want of information and good management as is compatible with great general knowledge and skill in his profession; and that when such a case arises, unless some special damage exists, his character will be considered as unhurt, and no damages will be presumed. But, on the other hand, it is indisputably clear that a calumnious report concerning a physician in a particular case may imply gross ignorance and unskillfulness and do him irreparable damage. A physician may mistake the symptoms of a patient; or may misjudge as to the nature of his disease, and even as to the powers of a medicine; and yet his error may be of that pardonable kind that will do him no essential prejudice, because it is rather a proof of human imperfection than of culpable ignorance or unskillfulness. On the contrary, a single act or omission of his may evince gross ignorance, and such a deficiency of skill as will not fail to injure his reputation and deprive him of general confidence. If he were called on to administer to one manifestly intoxicated, and treat his disease as if it were an apoplexy, no person of good sense after knowledge of this would employ him in his profession. These remarks have a more striking application to the business of a surgeon or man-midwife. While a physician exercises a profession often beset with great difficulties, the employment of a man-midwife and surgeon, for the most part, is merely mechanical. If a surgeon were requested to take blood from a person, and should proceed to this operation by opening an artery instead of a vein, by reason of which he should bleed to death; or if he should amputate a limb without having applied a tourniquet or some other compression of the main arteries, and the person practised on should die in his hands from loss of blood—who would afterward employ him? So if a man-midwife should deliver a woman and leave the afterbirth, whatever may have been the ancient practice, would it not in the present state of the art exhibit such powerful proof of ignorance and want of

(1) Backus v. Richardson, 5 Johns. 478.
 (2) Burich v. Makerson, 7 Johns. 315 (1819).
 (3) Rathbun v. English, 6 Wend. 407 (1831).
 (4) Sol. Jour., Nov., 1880.
 (5) Poe v. Dr. Mendford, Cro. Eliz. (1898).
 (6) Foot v. Brown, 5 Johns. 68 (1811).
 (7) Camp v. Martin, 28 Conn. 88 (1854).
 (8) Sumner v. Utley, 7 Conn. 257 (1828).

(1) Secor v. Harris, 18 Barb. 425 (1854).

skill as greatly to injure his general character? On this subject I cannot doubt, and shall not be surprised at the harsh declaration of the defendant, if applied to such a one, that 'he ought to be hung.' If a surgeon should be such an arrant bungler in his profession as not to know an artery in the head from a vein, and should puncture the former instead of the latter, would not his reputation as a man of knowledge and skill receive essential damage? Undoubtedly, in all the cases put the stigma of gross ignorance and unskillfulness would justly be applied to him; and his character would sink under the reproach. As a general principle, it can never be admitted that the practice of a physician or surgeon in a particular case may be calumniated with impunity, unless special damage is shown. By confining the slander to particulars, a man may thus be ruined in detail. A calumniator might follow the track of the defendant, and begin by falsely ascribing to a physician the killing of three persons by mismanagement; and then the mistaking of an artery for a vein; and thus might proceed to misrepresent every single case of his practice until his reputation would be blasted beyond remedy. Instead of murdering character by one stroke, the victim would be cut successively in pieces; and the only difference would consist in the manner of effecting the same result. The redress proposed on the proof of special damage is inadequate to the case. Much time may elapse before the fact of damage admits of any evidence; and then the proof will always fall short of the mischief. In the meantime the reputation of the calumniated person languishes and dies. . . . I think that prejudice to the plaintiff in his profession, as the natural and probable consequence of the words, must inevitably result. That the defendant intended to impute to the plaintiff, by the words spoken, the most monstrous and culpable ignorance and mismanagement, it is impossible for me to doubt. Surely he would not have execrated him, and declared that he ought to die an ignominious death, and that his practice ought to be published in a newspaper, if he meant nothing more than what the defendant would have the court suppose; that is, to impute to the plaintiff the common imperfections of humanity. On the contrary, every person of sense or reflection who should believe the imputations cast upon him would consider him as a man of ignorance and unskillfulness and unworthy of confidence. And this impression would be deepened by the expression that the plaintiff was liable to heavy damages; for it has often been decided that nothing short of gross ignorance and want of skill will authorise a suit against a practising physician.<sup>1</sup> What woman would trust herself in such hands, with full information that three persons had perished under his culpable mismanagement? Or what person would employ as a surgeon the man who ought to be hung for cutting an artery? I would frown on every action of slander brought to gratify a petulant and quarrelsome disposition; but, when the reputation of a skillful man is assailed by a wanting calumny, I shall ever be disposed to go the full length of principle to afford him adequate redress." Peters and Lauman, JJ., concurred in the judgment of the Chief Justice. Daggett, J., dissented, being of opinion that the words did not impute to the physician ignorance or malpractice in his profession generally. "I cannot," said he, "so understand them. They are employed only about his treatment of a pregnant woman and her twin children—one dead at the birth, and the other dying with its mother soon after its birth. As this idea seems to be embraced by my brethren and to influence their opinions, I have looked with attention into that part of the declaration brought into view by this motion; and it strikes me as entirely silent, except as to the plaintiff's management in the case stated, and not to impute any ignorance except in the management of this particular case."

(1) Slater v. Baker, 2 Will. 369; Leam v. Prentice, 8 East, 342.

Secor v. Harris (case IV.), while no doubt correctly applying the rule laid down in the former case, that where a physician is charged with gross ignorance and a total want of skill in his profession, in a single instance, the words are actionable per se, to the facts there established, is remarkable for the evident misapprehension entertained by the judge who delivered the opinion of the court concerning the scope of the ruling in Sumner v. Utley (case III.). Mason, J., evidently entertaining the idea that both Poe v. Dr. Mendford and Foot v. Brown had been overruled in that case, together with the general principle which they established.<sup>1</sup> But in Poe v. Dr. Mendford and Foot v. Brown it was decided that the language in each case respectively imputed simply a want of skill in a particular transaction. The question in Sumner v. Utley was whether the words charged the physician with mere ignorance in a particular case, or with a want of general professional knowledge and skill. On this, as we have seen, the judges differed; but they did not differ as to the principles of the law of slander. The Chief Justice and the majority of the court thought that the words did impute to the plaintiff general incompetence in his profession; the dissenting judge, that they did not. It was the application of a legal rule, and not its existence or propriety, that was determined in Sumner v. Utley.

In Van Epps v. Jones,<sup>2</sup> it was said by McCay, J.:—"Can it be contended that it is actionable to say of a lawyer that he will not pay his debts, much less a particular debt?" I am not sure it would be actionable to say of a lawyer, falsely, that he would not pay some particular money collected by him as a lawyer, or that it would be actionable to say of a blacksmith, untruly, that he had lamed a certain horse in shoeing him."

Words imputing a want of integrity, whether used in reference to a man's general conduct or to his behaviour in a particular case, are equally actionable, for obvious reasons.—JOHN D. LAWSON, St. Louis, Mo.

ADMIRALTY APPEALS.

In delivering judgment, on the 14th inst., on the appeal from the Court of Admiralty, in re the "Universal," Deasy, L.J., said it would be well if professional gentlemen engaged in these cases recollected that although the technical evidence given was quite intelligible to the judge before whom it came, and to whose court such cases were specially attached, there was one judge, at all events, of the Court of Appeal who did not understand these terms, and it would be advisable to put a gloss upon them when bringing cases to Appeal. His experience was that when these technical terms were translated into plain English they were a good deal more intelligible and quite as useful. One thing in the evidence, "the combing of the hatchway," he did not understand at all, and had not taken into consideration at all. However, the learned judge before whom the matter came at first had treated it as of no importance, and therefore, in all probability no harm was done. His observations had reference more to the future, and he hoped the hint he had thrown out would be acted upon.

CALLS TO THE INNER BAR.

On the 18th inst. the following gentlemen were called within the Bar:—William Harris Faloon, Constantine Molloy, John Adye Curran, David Ross, Arthur Houston, Edmund T. Bewley, Francis Nolan, George Keys, and Isaac Weir.

(1) Notwithstanding this, we find this judge saying, in the course of his judgment: "I do not go the length to say that falsehood may not be spoken of a physician's practice, in a particular case, without subjecting the party to this action. A physician may mistake the symptoms of a patient, or may misjudge as to the nature of his disease, and even as to the powers of medicine, and yet his error may be of that pardonable kind that will do him no essential prejudice, because it is rather a proof of human imperfection than of culpable ignorance or unskillfulness; and where charges are made against a physician that fall within this class of cases, they are not actionable, without proof of special damages." Mason, J., in Secor v. Harris, supra.

(2) 50 Ga. 238 (1873).

LATENT DEFECTS IN GOODS SOLD.

Where, after a sale of goods, a defect appears of which neither party were aware at the time of the sale, and which they could not then have discovered without damaging the goods, a somewhat difficult question as to their respective rights arises. But, when we desire to examine any such sale, we must, in the first place, before considering whether any defect was latent or patent, see what was the exact contract entered into by the parties, and decide whether it has been fulfilled; for if the seller has not fulfilled his contract, the case is at an end, and no further inquiry will be needed.

Our next step will be to inquire whether the seller gave any express warranty, or there is anything in the transaction from which the law will imply a warranty, or whether, on the other hand, the goods were sold "with all faults." And, although, in many cases, it is by no means easy to determine these points, we shall generally find, where difficulties arise, that their solution depends on the amount of reliance placed by the buyer in the skill and judgment of the seller.

If we can discover anything said or done before the completion of the contract, which amounts to an express warranty, the seller will be responsible for any defects which prevent the article answering to the terms of the warranty, but his liability will not extend beyond those terms; for "we cannot by inference insert in a contract implied provisions with respect to a subject which the contract has expressly provided for."<sup>1</sup>

In an action arising out of the sale of a note made by O., it was found by the referee that the plaintiff, upon the sale, agreed that the note was the genuine note of O., and not further or otherwise. O. was an infant, and hence the note may be said to have had a latent defect; but the fact was not known to either party. On this finding it was held that no warranty could be implied that O. was an adult, even if the words "not further or otherwise," were struck out.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, an express agreement that provisions shall pass an inspecting officer, does not prevent the additional implied condition that they are fit for the purpose for which they are required.<sup>3</sup>

If there is no express warranty, we return to the preliminary inquiry, whether the contract has been fulfilled; whether the article delivered answers the description in such a contract? Where a man said, "send me your patent furnace to fit up my brewing copper," and the furnace was sent, but did not suit the copper; it was held that the seller had performed the contract; for the buyer had ordered a definite article, and, though he had stated the purpose for which it was wanted, the form of his order showed that he relied on his own judgment as to whether it would suit him.<sup>4</sup> But where on a sale by sample the article sold was described as rape oil, but was in reality rape oil adulterated with hemp oil, the seller was held responsible, even though the bulk agreed with the sample, and in the opinion of the jury, the purchaser well knew what he was buying.<sup>5</sup> And in Josling v. Kingsford,<sup>6</sup> the decision was the same on its being shown that an article sold as oxalic acid was not oxalic acid, though the seller had disclaimed all responsibility as to quality, and at his suggestion the buyer had inspected the article. Where, however, a man bought pigs which he subsequently found had typhoid fever, and it was argued that the contract was for pigs, but that what was delivered was not pigs, but masses of typhoid fever, the House of Lords solemnly decided that a pig with typhoid fever is a pig.<sup>7</sup> But, beyond this general rule that the goods sold must be of the kind bargained for, the law will imply that where a man sells an article generally, he thereby warrants that it is merchantable, that it is fit for some purpose;<sup>1</sup> and where he sells it for a particular purpose, he thereby warrants it fit for that purpose.<sup>2</sup> In Jones v. Bright, the defendants were manufacturers of copper. They were introduced to the plaintiffs by a mutual acquaintance, Fisher, with the remark, "Mr. Jones is in want of copper sheathing for a vessel;" upon which the defendant said, "we will supply him well." Under this contract copper was supplied which proved defective through some intrinsic latent defect in the quality of the copper, and it was held that the defendants were liable on an express warranty that the copper which was sold for a particular purpose was fit for that purpose. Brown v. Edgington,<sup>3</sup> was a similar case, though perhaps the facts were somewhat stronger against the seller. In Randall v. Newson,<sup>4</sup> the defendant, a carriage maker, put a pole in the plaintiff's carriage which broke and caused damage, owing to a latent defect in the wood, for which he was held liable. The principle underlying this and the other cases to which we are about to refer, appears to be that where the buyer trusted in the judgment of the seller, the latter is liable for all defects whether latent, patent, or discoverable. "It" says Tindal, C.J., "a party purchases an article upon his own judgment, he cannot afterwards hold the vendor responsible, on the ground that the article turns out to be unfit for the purpose for which it was required; but if he relies upon the judgment of the seller, and informs him of the use to which the article is to be applied, it seems to me the transaction carries with it an implied warranty that the thing furnished shall be fit and proper for the purpose for which it was designed."<sup>5</sup> "When a person desirous to obtain an article for a particular purpose, but, not being himself skilled in respect to such articles, applies to one professing to be acquainted with the subject, or who, by his occupation, holds himself out to the world as understanding it, and the latter furnishes what he alleges to be suitable, it is plainly to be inferred that both parties understand the purchase to be made upon the judgment and responsibility of the seller."<sup>6</sup> In Jones v. Bright, the rule is carefully limited to products of art, though Best, C.J., points out that the decisions in the case of horses turn on the same principle. And in Hoe v. Sanborn, the rule is laid down, "that the vendor is liable for a latent defect arising from the manner in which the article was manufactured, but not for any latent defect in the material which he is not shown, and cannot be presumed to have known." In both cases the court seems to have feared encroaching on the decision in Parkinson v. Lee;<sup>7</sup> but all that is there decided is, that where goods are sold by sample, there will not be, in addition to an express warranty that the bulk is like the sample, an implied warranty against a latent defect in both the sample and the bulk of which both parties were equally able to judge; and it has since been said of that case that either it does not determine the extent of the seller's liability on the contract, or it has been overruled.<sup>8</sup> Hence the above rule in Hoe v. Sanborn must, we think, be considered too restricted; indeed, it is by no means easy to fix any definite limit to the liability of a vendor for latent defects, since it depends to so great a degree on the varied facts of each case.

We have seen that the rule of Jones v. Bright is not confined to defects in products of art, but may become applicable, as in Randall v. Newson, to a pole of wood; and, though Jones v. Bright applies to a sale of manufactured goods by the manufacturer himself, the courts would, probably, not hesitate to extend the rules laid

(1) Dickson v. Jicinia, 10 C. B. 602, 610; Budd v. Fairmanor, 8 Bing. 48, 61; Baldwin v. Van Deusen, 37 N. Y. 487.

(2) Baldwin v. Van Deusen, 37 N. Y. 487.

(3) Biggs v. Parkinson, 7 H. & N. 965.

(4) Chantor v. Hopkins, 4 M. & W. 402; Downes v. Dow, 84 N. Y. 411; Oberine v. Hart, 23 L. T. 851; O'Brien v. Bayley, 5 Q. B. 298; Archdale v. Moore, 19 Ill. 568; Whitmore v. South Boston Iron Co., 3 Allen 58.

(5) Nichol v. Goddard, 10 C. B. 191.

(6) 13 C. B. (N. S.) 447.

(7) Ward v. Hobbs, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 24.

(1) Loring v. Fishoon, 6 Taunton, 106; 4 Camp. 168. The rule applies, however low the price.

(2) Jones v. Bright, 5 Bing. 644.

(3) 2 Man. & Gr. 379.

(4) 2 Q. B. D. 102.

(5) Brown v. Edgington, 2 Man. & Gr. 379.

(6) Hoe v. Sanborn, 21 N. Y. 552, and see also Bartlett v. Hopport, 24 N. Y. 118.

(7) 2 East, 314.

(8) Randall v. Newson, 2 Q. B. D. 106.

down there to sales by other persons, if it appeared that confidence had been placed by the buyer in the seller, and the latter had accepted the responsibility.<sup>1</sup> In Gray v. Case,<sup>2</sup> the facts were very like those in Jones v. Bright; the article was described as "copper sheathing," but the sellers were not the manufacturers. It was held that the law would not imply a general and unqualified promise that the goods should be good, sound, substantial and serviceable; but Lord Tenterden was inclined to think "that in point of law, if a person sold a commodity for a specific purpose, and with knowledge at the time of the sale that it was to be applied to that purpose, he must be understood to warrant that the commodity so sold should be reasonably fit and proper for the purpose for which it was sold." And, though the other judges did not concur in this opinion, it was apparently approved by the Court of Appeal in Randall v. Newson, where Brett, L.S., remarks, "it is obvious that Lord Tenterden did not consider the seller relieved by reason of the defect being latent." The case of Bhuett v. Osborne<sup>3</sup> arose out of the sale of a bowsprit for a ship, which turned out to be useless through a latent defect in the wood; and Lord Ellenborough decided in favour of the seller, but on what ground is not very clear, unless, as Maule, J., suggested, he treated it as a sale of a specific bowsprit, and therefore under the rules applying to a sale of a given article.<sup>4</sup> However that may be, Lord Ellenborough lays down the general rule that he who sells, impliedly warrants that a thing sold should answer the purpose for which it is sold. In Burnaby v. Bollett,<sup>5</sup> the defendant bought a dead pig which was exposed for sale at a butcher's shop, and re-sold it to the plaintiff, without taking it away. Neither the plaintiff nor defendant were butchers by trade, or had any knowledge that the pig was unsound, though it afterwards turned out to be unfit for human food. Under these circumstances, it was held that the defendant was not liable. He was not dealing in the way of a common trade, or the question, as we shall see, might have been somewhat different. In Emmerson v. Matthews,<sup>6</sup> it was held that where a meat salesman, who is not a dealer in meat, but merely sells on commission, offers for sale a carcass with a defect of which he is not only ignorant, but has not any means of knowledge, the defect being latent, he is not liable to any penalty, and does not, as a matter of law, impliedly warrant that the carcass is fit for human food, and is not bound to refund the price, should it not turn out to be so. And in Smith v. Baker,<sup>7</sup> the court remarked that the law would be the same where the seller has no means of knowing of the defect on an ordinary outward inspection, though he might have discerned it by cutting into the meat. In all these cases the judgment seems to have turned on the fact that the buyer had quite as much opportunity of investigating the meat as the seller, the latter not being actually a dealer. One of the most recent cases on this part of the subject is Bragg v. Morrill.<sup>8</sup> There the plaintiff bought an iron shaft from the defendant, and employed him to turn it so that the plaintiff could attach pulleys at any point he chose. It turned out that there was a latent defect in the shaft, by which the plaintiff was damaged; but the court decided in the defendant's favour. There was no complaint that the defendant did not properly perform what work he did upon the shaft; therefore we may put part of the transaction, which was paid for separately, out of the question, and we then see at once that it comes within the decision in Burnaby v. Bollett; for all the defendant did was to sell a shaft for the purpose of holding pulleys, without knowing their weight, or size, or the amount of work they were to do. The only point in which this case goes further than Burnaby v. Bollett is, that here the defendant was by trade a founder; but, on the other hand, the seller in that case knew the exact object for which the article was bought, whilst here he did not; and this fact also distinguishes the case from Randall v. Newson, where the seller not only knew the exact purpose for which the pole was wanted, but fitted it to the carriage himself.

It has been stated that an implied warranty is raised in the sale of provisions where they are sold for immediate use by dealers and common traders in provisions; but the statement is combatted by Benjamin in his work on the sales of Personal Property;<sup>9</sup> and in Burnaby v. Bollett, decided by the Court of Exchequer in 1847, the conclusion deduced from the old cases and text-books is, "that there is no other difference between the sale of victuals for food, and other articles, than this—that victuallers, butchers and other common dealers in victuals, are not merely in the same situation that common dealers in other commodities are, and liable under the same circumstances as they are, so that, if an order be sent to them to be executed, they are presumed to undertake to supply a good and merchantable article; but they are also liable to punishment for selling corrupt victuals, by virtue of an ancient statute, certainly if they do so knowingly, and probably if they do not, and are therefore responsible civilly to those customers to whom they sell such victuals, for any special or particular injury by the breach of the law which they thereby commit." Where an article is sold "with all faults," the question of latent defects scarcely arises; for such a stipulation throws upon the buyer the burden of examining all faults, both secret and apparent; and the seller will not be liable for any such defect, unless he was guilty of any fraud, either in making a false representation, or in using means to conceal some defect.<sup>10</sup> The celebrated case of Ward v. Hobbs<sup>11</sup> arose out of a sale of pigs, which turned out to have typhoid fever, and it was argued that, since it is a criminal offence knowingly to send animals affected with a contagious disease to a public market,<sup>12</sup> the mere sending was a representation that the pigs were not so affected. But the House of Lords decided that there was no such implied warranty, there being a perfectly clear written statement that the vendor will not warrant the goods, and that the goods must be taken with all faults, together with the fact that the goods were open to inspection. And Lord Chancellor Cairns, further observed that in order to qualify this, there must be something as clear in statement in an opposite direction; thus a verbal statement that the vendor believed the animals to be free from disease, might be foundation for an action of deceit, in which case we conclude that a scienter would have to be proved; but the question did not arise, for the statement of claim relied upon a warranty, but made no case of deceit or fraud or failure of consideration. The law as to latent defects relating to carriers<sup>13</sup> is somewhat different from that which applies to goods sold.<sup>14</sup>—Central Law Journal.

Mr. John Holmes has been elected Member of Parliament for Christchurch, south capital of the Middle Islands, New Zealand. Mr. Holmes was a student of Trinity College, where he greatly distinguished himself. He was called to the Bar in 1865, and then proceeded to New Zealand, where he has filled several important offices.

(1) See the remarks of Tindal, C.J., in Brown v. Edgington, 2 Man. & Gr. 278.

(2) 6 D. & Ry. 900.

(3) 1 Stark. N. P. 384.

(4) 2 Man. & Gr. 286.

(5) 16 M. & W. 644.

(6) 7 H. & N. 586.

(7) 40 L. T. 281.

(8) 49 Vt. 45; 24 Am. Rep. 102.

(9) 16 M. & W. 644.

(1) Story, Sales of Per. Prop., s. 373; Chitty on Cont., 10th ed., p. 414n; Addison on Contracts, 7th ed., p. 495; Parsons on Contracts, 6th ed., p. 588.

(2) 2nd ed., p. 549.

(3) Baylehole v. Walters, 3 Camp 154; Schneider v. Heath, 3 Camp. 506; Melish v. Moteaux, Peake, N. P. C. 115.

(4) L. R. 4 App. Cas. 12.

(5) 32 & 33 Vict., Cap. 70.

(6) As explained in Redhead v. Midland Ry., L. R. 4 Q. B. 379.

(7) Randall v. Newson, 2 Q. B. D. at p. 110; and see the remark there as to Francis v. Cockrell, L. R. 5 Q. B. 501.

FALSE PRETENCES.

The case of Martin v. Newton, which appears in the columns of this week's Justice of the Peace, illustrates very forcibly the difficulties which attend the distinction as it now exists between larceny and obtaining goods by false pretences. It will be seen from the report that the appellant in the case referred to had been convicted under section 12 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, of stealing 80s. His counsel contended that if any offence had been committed at all, it amounted to an obtaining by false pretences and not to larceny. If this contention had been allowed by the court, the conviction would necessarily have had to be quashed, for the magistrate's power of convicting summarily does not extend to cases of obtaining by false pretences.

Larceny differs from the offence of obtaining property by false pretences in that in the former the property must be taken in vitio domino against the wish and intention of the owner. In the latter, on the other hand, the owner consents to the property being taken out of his possession, though such consent has been induced by fraud. Reg. v. Prince, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 160; 88 L. J. M. C. 8, is a leading case on the point under discussion. In that case the defendant had been indicted and tried at the Central Criminal Court for stealing money amounting to £100. At the trial it was proved that the prosecutor had paid moneys amounting to £900 into the London and Westminster Bank on a deposit account in his own name. On the 27th April, 1868, that sum was standing to his credit at the bank. On the same day a forged order, purporting to be the order of the prosecutor, for payment of the deposit was presented at the bank by the prosecutor's wife. The order was considered genuine by the cashier. The amount of the deposit and interest was therefore paid her in eight £100 and other notes. Among them was a £100 note numbered 72,799, dated 19th November, 1867. On the following 1st July the prosecutor's wife eloped with the prisoner, and both were soon afterwards discovered on board a steamer at Queenstown, bound from Liverpool to New York. They were passing as married people under the name of Mr. and Mrs. Prince. All the notes were found in the possession of the wife of the prosecutor, with the exception of the £100 note specified above. That note the prisoner was shown to have paid away for some sheep he purchased. He stated he had received it from the prosecutor's wife. On these facts being proved, the prisoner's counsel at the trial contended that the evidence did not establish any larceny by the wife of the note from the bank, but rather an obtaining it by forgery or false pretences, and consequently that the receipt of the note by the prisoner from her was not a receiving of stolen property. The common sergeant, who tried the case, overruled the objection, and held that the forged order presented by the wife was a mere mode of committing a larceny against the bank, and that the prisoner could be convicted on the fourth count of the indictment, which laid the ownership of the money in the London and Westminster bank. The prisoner was then found guilty by the jury on that count, but a question was reserved for the consideration of the Court of Crown Cases Reserved whether the obtaining the note under the circumstances detailed amounted to a larceny.

The conviction was quashed by the court, which laid down the two following important propositions as containing the law on the subject:—Where a servant is entrusted with his master's property with a general authority to act for his master in his business, and he is induced by fraud to part with his master's property, the person who is guilty of the fraud and so obtains the property is guilty of obtaining it by false pretences, and not of larceny, because to constitute a larceny there must be a taking against the will of the owner, or of the owner's servant duly authorised to act for the owner. The second proposition laid down by the judges was that where a servant has no such general authority from his master, but is merely entrusted with the possession of his goods for a special purpose, and the servant is cheated out of that possession the person who thus by fraud obtains the goods commits larceny, for the servant has no authority to part with the property in the goods, except to fulfil the special purpose for which they were entrusted to him. The court then proceeded to apply the principles thus laid down to the case before them, and decided that the defendant should have been indicted for obtaining the bank note by false pretences and not for larceny; for a cashier of a bank is a servant having a general authority to conduct the business of the bank, and to part with its property on a genuine order of a customer being presented. If he be deceived by a forged order and part with the bank's money, he parts, intending to do so, with the property in the money. Such a case, therefore, will fall within the former of the two propositions, and amount to an obtaining the money by false pretences and not to larceny.

An earlier case on the subject than that of Reg. v. Prince is the case of Rez v. Jackson, 1 Moo. C. C. 119. There a pawnbroker's servant, having a general authority from his master to act in his business, delivered up a pledge to the prisoner under the following circumstances:—On the 7th of March the defendant visited the prosecutor's shop and produced duplicates of property previously pledged, amounting to £34. He asked for the property to be produced, and also for a light, as he had some diamonds to sell. He then produced a small packet of diamonds and induced the prosecutor's assistant to agree to advance £180 on them. The latter then handed him back the packet of diamonds to seal up, which he did, and then returned a packet, which the assistant believed to contain the diamonds, as the two packets resembled each other in all respects. The property previously pledged for £34 was then returned to the prisoner, and he received £124 in cash and notes, that being the amount less the £34 and interest thereon, which the assistant had agreed to advance on the diamonds. The packet of supposed diamonds when opened in the following June was found to contain £4 worth of coloured stones. It was proved at the trial that the assistant had no authority from his master to lend money except on pledges of an equivalent value, and that when he delivered the £124 and the goods, he imagined he had the diamonds in his pocket. When he delivered the goods he parted with them entirely, having previously received the parcel of supposed diamonds. The jury convicted the prisoner of larceny. The conviction was, however, subsequently quashed by the 12 judges on the ground that the assistant, who had a general authority from his master to act in his business, having delivered up absolutely and entirely the goods pawned to the pawnor, though he had been induced to do so by fraud, the pawnor could not be found guilty of larceny.

A case almost on all fours with Jackson's case is that of Reg. v. Barnes, 2 Den. C. C. 59. There the prisoner, who was a servant to the prosecutors, who carried on business in Canterbury as grocers, had authority, in the absence of the chief clerk, to purchase a commodity called "kitchen stuff" for his masters, and to pay for it. The chief clerk was authorised by the prosecutor to repay the prisoner for such purchases upon his producing a ticket containing a statement of the purchase having been made. One evening the prisoner went to the chief clerk in the counting house and demanded 2s. 3d., representing that he had paid that sum for 18 lbs. weight of "kitchen stuff." He then produced a ticket containing the name of Scott as that of the seller, and 2s. 3d. as the price. The ticket being in the usual form, the clerk paid him the 2s. 3d., which the prisoner received and applied to his own use. It was proved at the trial that the prosecutors had no customer of the name of Scott, and that the dealing alleged by the prisoner to have taken place, had in fact never taken place. On these facts, the Court for Crown Cases Reserved decided that the prisoner had been wrongly indicted for larceny, for as the clerk had delivered the money to the prisoner with the intention of parting with it wholly to him, he was only liable for the misdemeanour of obtaining money by false pretences.

The cases cited illustrate the distinction between theft and obtaining goods, &c., by false pretences. However, there is such a thing as theft by a false pretence (a phrase used by Stephen, J., in his work on Criminal Law). For theft may be committed by fraudulently obtaining from the owner a transfer of the possession of a thing, the owner intending to reserve to himself the property in the thing transferred, and the offender intending at the time when he obtains the possession, to convert the thing to his own use without the owner's consent. Thus, if a person fraudulently bargains with another for the purchase of goods for cash, and fraudulently induces the latter to let him have the goods, pretending that he is then about to pay for them, and he then carries off the goods but without paying the agreed price, it will be a case of larceny by a false pretence. The reason for this is, that the vendor did not intend to transfer the property till the payment of the price fixed. On the same principle it has been decided in Reg. v. Longstreeth, 1 Moody, 187, that if a person by pretending to be the owner fraudulently obtains goods from the carrier, to whom they have been entrusted, he will commit a theft, for the carrier, not being the owner of the goods, cannot transfer the property in them, but only the possession. Another case illustrating this branch of the subject is Reg. v. Bunce, 1 F. & F. 528. There a woman fraudulently induced B. to give her 10 sovereigns to conjure with. She at the same time promised to bring back the 10 sovereigns, and also £170 to which the said B. was entitled. The woman having thus obtained possession of the 10 sovereigns, made off with them. Whether she was under the circumstances guilty of theft, or of obtaining money by false pretences, was held to depend on whether or not B. intended to part absolutely with the 10 sovereigns; for if B. intended them to be returned, it was a case of theft; but if B. did not so intend, it was merely a case of obtaining money by false pretences.—Justice of the Peace.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

(Continued from page 79, ante.)

Tudor's Leading Cases (3rd Edition), 92.

Leaseholds for lives in settlement, subject to a trust for renewal, were, after refusal of the lessor to renew, sold under the Settled Estates Act. Held, that the first taker was entitled only to the income of the purchase-money (In re Barber's Settled Estates, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 769).

Public Health Act, 1875 (s. 275).

Chambers on Public Health (8th Edition), 484.

Where the drainage works of a corporation became vested in a new district drainage board, constituted under the Public Health Act, 1875, held that an injunction obtained against the corporation restraining them from polluting a river, was not binding on the new body under section 275 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (Attorney-General v. Birmingham District Drainage Board, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 786)—C. A.

Robson on Bankruptcy (4th Edition), 455.

Pitt-Taylor on Bankruptcy, 43.

On an application by a trustee for leave to disclaim onerous property of the bankrupt, the Court will not consider the effect of the disclaimer on the interests of third parties (In re Clarke, ex parte East and West India Dock Co. 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 789)—C. A.

Williams on Executors (8th Edition) 1,416.

Where lands were devised to trustees upon trust to accumulate the rents for 21 years, and to lay out the same in the purchase of lands, and at the end of the 21 years the real estate, subject to the trusts of the will, was to be held upon trust for H. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, upon the application of the infant sons of H., an allowance was made to their father for their maintenance (In re Allan, Havelock v. Havelock, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 778).

Robson on Bankruptcy (4th Edition), 539.

Pitt-Taylor on Bankruptcy, 117.

A mortgagee of a policy of assurance alleged to be the separate property of a wife, was held bound to produce his title deeds on the application of the trustee of the bankrupt husband (In re Thorpe, ex parte Tutton, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 792)—C. A.

Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant (12th Edition), 671.

Where a yearly tenant, in defiance of an agreement made with his landlord to the contrary, made use of a watercourse for a period of 44 years, the rule that a tenant cannot prescribe for an easement against his landlord was held to apply (Outram v. Maude, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 783).

(To be continued.)

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Students' Pocket Law-Lexicon, or Dictionary of Jurisprudence: explaining Technical Words and Phrases used in English Law; together with a Literal Translation of Latin Maxims. London: Stevens & Sons, 119, Chancery-lane, Law Publishers and Booksellers. 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

CIRCUIT LIST.—SPRING ASSIZES, 1882.

HOME CIRCUIT.

Trim—March 6, at 11 30 o'clock.	Maryborough—March 13, at 11.
Mullingar—March 8, at 11 30.	Carlow—March 16, at 11.
Tullamore—March 10, at 11 30.	Naas—March 17, at 11.

Judges—MORRIS, C.J., and FITZGERALD, J.

Registrars { Arthur H. Courtenay, Esq., 14, Fitzwilliam-sq., East.
                  { Arthur S. Fitzgerald, Esq., 41, Merrion-square, East.

NORTH-EAST CIRCUIT.

Drogheda—March 6, at 11 o'clock.	Downpatrick—March 17, at 11.
Dundalk—March 7, at 11.	Belfast and Carrickfergus—
Monaghan—March 9, at 2.	March 30, at 2.
Armagh—March 12, at 11.

Judges—PALLES, C.B., and LAWSON, J.

Registrars { Andrew Palles, Esq., 21, Northumberland-road.
                  { Arthur Lawson, Esq., 27, Upper Fitzwilliam-street.

NORTH-WEST CIRCUIT.

Longford—March 6, at 2 o'clock.	Lifford—March 20, at 12.
Cavan—March 10, at 11.	Londonderry (city and co.)—
Enniskillen—March 14, at 11.	March 22, at 12.
Omagh—March 16, at 10.

Judges—DEASY, L.J., and FITZGERALD, B.

Registrars { J. W. Clerke, Esq., 37, Upper Mount-street.
                  { John Allen Shone, Esq., 61, Upper Sackville-street.

CONNAUGHT CIRCUIT.

Carrick-on-Shannon—March 7, at 11 o'clock.	Castlebar—March 18, at 4.
Sligo—March 10, at 4.	Galway (town and co.)—March
Roscommon—March 15, at 4.	25, at 4.

Judges—MAY, C.J., and OMSBY, J.

Registrars { George C. May, Esq., 13, Fitzwilliam-square.
                  { Alfred Hamilton Ormsby, 16, Fitzwilliam-sq., East.

MUNSTER CIRCUIT.

Ennis—March 7, at 11 o'clock.	Tralee—March 15, at 11.
Limerick (city and co.)—March 9, at 11.	Cork (co.)—March 20, at 11.
	Cork (city)—March 23, at 11.

Judges—BARRY, J., and DOWSE, B.

Registrars { James Barry, Esq., St. Helen's, Rathgar.
                  { B. Dowse, jun., Esq., 33, Mountjoy-square.

LEINSTER CIRCUIT.

Nenagh—March 7, at 11 o'clock.	Waterford (city and co.)—March
Kilkenny (city and co.)—March 10, at 11.	17, at 11.
Clonmel—March 14, at 11.	Wexford—March 21, at 11.
	Wicklow—March 24, at 11.

Judges—FITZGIBBON, L.J., and HARRISON, J.

Registrars { Pelham J. Mayo, Esq., 33, Merrion-square, North.
                  { Robert F. Harrison, Esq., 3, Mountjoy-square, North.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

List of Petitions presented to the Land Judges in the month of January, 1882.

DATE	TITLE OF MATTER	OBJECT OF PETITION	COUNTY	PROFIT RENT	SOLICITOR
Jan. 3	Georgina G. West, owner and petitioner	Sale	Dublin, Kildare, Queen's Co. Co. Cork	£ s. d. 2,798 17 8	Thomas Gerrard
" "	Agnes Ramsay Wood and others, owners; Anna Massey, petitioner	Sale	Co. Tipperary	120 0 0 Estimated	Webb, Scott, and Seymour
" "	Rodolph F. Scully, owner; George M. Arnold, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Co. Tipperary	1,830 0 8	John Cavanagh
" "	The Earl of Huntingdon, owner; Robert Bradshaw, petitioner	Sale	Galway, Waterford, and Cork	8,658 10 0 Griffith's Valuation	Archibald Robinson and Son
" 4	William Gorges Molloy, owner; The Representative Church Body, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Roscommon	957 17 5	John Mounsell
" 6	Robert Craven Wade, owner; Henry M. Wade and another, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Meath	Not stated	A. M'Dermott
" "	Patrick Lacy and others, owners; Matthew H. Chamberlaine and another, petitioners	Sale	City Dublin	In owner's possession	William P. M'Evoy
" 11	Francis W. Martin and another, owners; Henry Wm. Geoghegan and another, petitioners	Sale	Roscommon	701 8 0	Thomas Geoghegan and Sons
" 12	Hon. H. B. Bernard, owner; Jeremiah O'Donovan, petitioner	Sale	Co. Cork	645 11 5	William G. Murphy
" 13	Francis M. L. C. Murphy, owner; Sir Wm. S. M'Mahon, petitioner	Sale	Kilkenny	1,642 1 9	John A. French
" "	Henry Butterfield, owner; Nenry Loan Co. (Limited), petitioners	Sale	Co. Armagh	61 10 9	Alexander Gartlan
" 16	Elizabeth Sampey, owner; William J. Biens, petitioner	Sale	Roscommon	85 9 6	Thompson and Tallow
" "	Trustee of William Russell, owner; Marcus Goodbody, petitioner	Sale and receiver	Westmeath	40 11 11	John Julian
" 18	Martin F. O'Flaherty, owner; The Scottish Amicable Life Assurance Society, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Co. Galway	1,028 4 8	Phelham J. Mayne
" "	Henry Leader, owner; Thomas Tronton and another, petitioners	Sale	Co. Cork	784 14 5	Arthur Oldham
" 19	Thomas Potterton, owner and petitioner	Sale	Co. Meath	586 14 7	J. M. Ross Todd
" "	Henry Edmond Anderson, owner; Royal Land Building and Investment Co., petitioners	Sale	City Dublin	564 9 0	Bennett Thompson
" "	Mary Anne Craike, owner; William Perrin, petitioner	Sale	Galway	208 16 5	Bennett Thompson
" "	William Armstrong, owner; Philip J. Dogra and another, petitioners	Sale and partition	Tipperary	In owner's possession	G. O'B. Kennedy
" 23	William Dundas, owner and petitioner	Sale and partition	Longford	157 8 8	Thomas Kiernan
" "	Elizabeth Eugenia Hayes and others, owners and petitioners	Sale	Dublin	180 9 10	William Hayes
" "	The Clare Slob Lands Reclamation Co. and another, owners; John A. Walker, petitioner	Sale	Co. Clare	Not stated	John D. Rosenthal
" "	W. R. Fitzwilliam Barry & others, owners; Richard C. Hendy, petitioner	Sale	Cork	519 1 9	H. J. P. West
" 24	Walter Thom, owner; Juliette Harris, petitioner	Sale	Meath	855 0 0 Valuation	Thomas O'Meara
" 25	Philip Brady, owner; Henry Watson and another, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Co. Leitrim	Not stated	Trevor Overend
" "	James Blake, owner; Henry Blake, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Co. Galway	In owner's possession	E. and G. Stapleton
" "	Edward Bor Reade, owner; Archibald Robinson, petitioner	Sale	King's Co.	48 15 0 Griffith's Valuation	Archibald Robinson and Son
" 27	Joseph W. Madden, owner and petitioner	Sale	Mayo	1,011 6 0	S. C. M'Cormick
" "	John Law Hackett, owner; Governor and Co. of Bank of Ireland, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Roscommon	Not stated	E. H. DeMolegns
" 28	As-ignees W. Stewart and another, owners; John C. Estriean, petitioner	Sale	Tyrone	51 17 6	William J. Glass
" 30	George A. Waller, owner; James Sinclair and another, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Co. Tipperary	71 1 0 Griffith's Valuation	John A. French

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN COURT.—J. Horgan, judgment.—W. Rowland, receiver.—J. M. Cochrane, from 16th.—Executor J. Murphy, from 22nd.—R. F. Rynd, to make order absolute.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

C. Burke, vouch.

TUESDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—A. Rotten, allocate.

WEDNESDAY.

IN COURT.—P. Callan, as to schedule.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—Trustees Corbett, from 23rd.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

H. BELL, - - - 1 lot.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN COURT.—H. Lester, from 16th.—A. Raymond, payment.—Stein v. Cooke, action.—S. Radcliff, as to receiver.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. McDonnell).

M. C. French, rental.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—R. Jellett, as to partition.

IN COURT.—M. Hall, from 16th.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.
 Callaghan, John Francis, of Rose Hill, Sunday's Well, Cork, in the city of Cork, Esquire. February 7; Friday, March 10, and Tuesday, March 28. Henry C. Neilson, solr.
 Crow, William Thomas, of Dundrum, Cashel, county Tipperary, manure and corn agent. January 20; Friday, March 10, and Tuesday, March 28. Casey & Clay, solrs.
 Donovan, James, of Tarbert, in the county of Kerry, hotel keeper. February 14; Friday, March 3, and Tuesday, March 21. Samuel Benner, solr.
 Kenny, Plunkett, of Rocksvage, Inniskeen; in the county of Monaghan, Esq., J.P. and D.L. February 17; Friday, March 10, and Tuesday, March 28. Richard Davoren, solr.
 Murphy, William, of Parliament-street, in the city of Kilkenny, shopkeeper. February 14; Friday, March 10, and Tuesday, March 28. George C. Lett, solr.

A FRESH batch of Queen's Counsel has been created. One of the number, Mr. Faloan, was called to the Bar so long ago as 1838—just forty-four years ago—more than half a lifetime! While we congratulate Mr. Faloan on at last "spoiling silk," we cannot help reflecting on the awful antiquity which a barrister must sometimes attain before he can change the texture of his toga. We are glad to notice among the new Queen's Counsel Mr. John Adye Curran and Mr. Keys, the two new Divisional Magistrates.—Evening Telegraph.

INJURIES TO PROPERTY IN IRELAND.—A House of Commons return of the amount of money levied off the baronies of the several counties in Ireland for malicious injuries in 1880 and 1881, shows that in 1880 the amount levied from Leinster was £2,014 13s. 10d., from Munster £5,729 5s. 10d., from Ulster £2,958 8s. 11d., and from Connaught £2,091 4s. 7d.—total, £12,788 10s. 2d.; while in 1881 the total rose to £21,553 1s. 4d., Leinster contributing £4,714 2s. 2d., Munster £10,262 10s. 10d., Ulster £2,885 14s. 10d., and Connaught £3,740 13s. 6d.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	FEBRUARY
	Sat. 18	Mon. 20	Tues. 21	Wed. 22	Thur. 23	Fri. 24
Government.
3 p c Consols ..	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½
3 p c Reduced ..	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½
New 3 p c Stock ..	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1889 } Trstble. at ..	103½	103½	103½	103½	103½	103½
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	318	316½	316	316	316	315½
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	35½	35½	36	36	36	36
20 London and County (Ltd) ..	68½	68½	68½	68½	68½	68½
20 London and Westminster, Ltd ..	68½	68½	68½	68½	68½	68½
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
31 Munster Bank (Limited) ..	7	7	7	7	7	7
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	22½	22½	22½	22½	22½	22½
10 National of Liverpool (Ltd) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Nat. Prov. of England, lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	54½	54½	54½	54½	54½	54½
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	20½	20½	20½	20½	20½	20½
Steam.
50 British and Irish ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	114	114	114	114	114	114
50 Dublin and Glasgow ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Dublin &amp; Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Mines.
4½ Berehaven (Limited) ..	—	—	5/-	—	—	—
2½ Wicklow Copper ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons.' Gas ..	15½	15½	15½	15½	15½	15½
8 Do. do. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 C. Dub. Brewery Co. (Lim.) ..	5	5	5	5	5	5
10 Dublin Artisan Dwellings ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
17 Hudson's Bay ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..	42	42	42	42	42	42
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	10½	10½	10½	10½	10½	10½
10 L'pl Un'd Tram &amp; Bus Ltd ..	11½	11½	11½	11½	11½	11½
Railways.
100 Dublin, Wicklow, &amp; W'ford ..	—	—	—	—	—	118½
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	118½	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	—	—	—	111	—
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	83	83	82½	82½	82½	82½
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 O., W., &amp; W., 5 p c (1880) ..	—	—	—	118	—	—
100 Do. do. (1864) ..	118½	118½	118½	118½	118½	118½
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	104½
— C'fergus and Larne 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Cork and Bandon, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	105½	105½	105½	105½
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4 p c ..	109½	109½	109½	109½	109½	109½
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	109½	—	—
— L'derry &amp; Enniskillen 5 p c ..	—	—	—	125	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterford &amp; Central 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	106	—
— Waterford &amp; Limerick 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
— Alliance &amp; Cons.' Gas, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Ballast Office Deb., 292 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	94	—
— City Deb. of 292 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dub. &amp; Kingstown 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dub. Port &amp; Docks, 4½ p c ..	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—6 per cent. 30th January, 1882.
 Of Deposit—3 per cent. 30th January, 1882.

Name Days—February 28th, and March 15th, 1882.

Account Days—March 1st and 16th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Pills.—The Great Need.—The blood is the life, and on its purity depends our health, if not our existence. These Pills thoroughly cleanse this vital fluid from all contaminations, and by that power strengthen and invigorate the whole system, healthily stimulate sluggish organs, repress over-excited action, and establish order of circulation and secretion throughout every part of the body. The balsamic nature of Holloway's Pills commends them to the favour of debilitated and nervous constitutions, which they soon resuscitate. They dislodge all obstructions, both in the bowels and elsewhere, and are, on that account, much sought after for promoting regularity of action in young females and delicate persons who are naturally weak, or who from some cause have become so.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1882.

No. 788

CURRENT DECISIONS.

It will be remembered that in the recent case of M'Morrow v. Monson (15 Ir. L. T. Rep. 15) the Court of Appeal were called on to reverse a decision of the Common Pleas Division, pronounced under the impression that the question involved had been concluded by Nagle v. Sullivan (6 L. R. Ir. 149), which would have been found otherwise, and the delay and expense of the appeal would not have been occasioned had the report of that case in the IRISH LAW TIMES (vol. 14, p. 43) been cited, which recorded what had really been there decided: see per Lord O'Hagan, ibid. Hardly less illustrative of the utility of our series of reports is the important decision in Ferguson v. The Guardians of Ballina Union, presented in our current issue. On the case coming, upon a civil bill appeal, before Lord Justice Fitzgibbon at the Mayo Assizes, he was of opinion that the guardians were liable for damages caused by the inferior quality of potatoes, supplied under the Seed Supply Act, 1880, and would have affirmed the decree eo instanti, had not the previous case of M'Kenna v. The Guardians of Monaghan Union, deciding the contrary, been reported, as it was, in the IRISH LAW TIMES (vol. 15, p. 42); but, fortunately it was brought under his notice, and in consequence he consented to state a case for the Exchequer Division, who have now decided that the guardians were not liable.

Circumstances like this speak trumpet-tongued themselves, and remove any necessity for blowing our own trumpet. But, it is not for our own sakes that we draw attention to such matters: it is for the gratification that the knowledge of them confers on our readers. For that reason their attention may be directed, also, to the decision in Eiffe (app.) v. M'Kenna (resp.), recorded too in our current issue, where it will be noticed that Lord Justice Fitzgibbon brought forward and relied on the case of Montgomery v. Montgomery, decided by the House of Lords, and reported solely in the IRISH LAW TIMES (vol. 14, p. 9). For strange to say, while it is in this Journal alone that the decisions of the inferior courts, and in circuit cases (the utility of which is so strongly demonstrated by Ferguson v. Guardians of Ballina Union) are recorded, so it is the only legal publication in Ireland that has undertaken to supply full reports, specially taken, of the important decisions of the highest tribunal of all, in Irish cases. From the House of Lords down to the Land Sub-Commissions, no court that decides Irish cases is unrepresented in the IRISH LAW TIMES—and of no other legal publication whatever can this be proclaimed.

As regards land cases, indeed, our position is especially unique. While there are no "official" reports of such cases, decided by the Land Commission, our reports present the double advantage arising from judicial revision, and from printing what is said by the judges in extenso; and alone in our pages, can it be said, are the decisions both of the Sub-Commissions and County Courts to be found permanently recorded. In our columns all such cases will be found uncurtailed and unmutated; and we shall be surprised if Eiffe v. M'Kenna, for instance, should ever hereafter—no matter after what amount of delay, of which we, at all events, cannot be accused—should be recorded elsewhere with such completeness. Even in the short interval pending the publication of full Reports, we endeavour to satisfy all immediate exigencies by NOTES or CASES, such as will be found in the current issue; and this is a department which it is our intention to carry on with increasing vigour and vigilance. But, we need hardly say that in mere notes of cases the completeness of a more pretentious report is not to be expected; and in them appears only what is "considered requisite"—to use the words of the reporters whose version of Mr. Justice O'Hagan's address (omitting an important passage accurately recorded in our version) was observed upon the other day in Parliament. Indeed, one never knows where now-a-days law reports, especially land cases, may not come under notice; and we observe that in an able and thoughtful paper by Professor Brougham Leech on "Compensation to Irish Landlords," in the current number of the Contemporary Review, the case of Speer v. Smyly, decided by Sub-Commissioner Fitzgerald, as reported in the IRISH LAW TIMES of December 24, is made the subject of ingenious commentary.

For this reason also, as not merely the profession but the public are now being made so much acquainted with legal reports—and the public might be misled where there would be no such danger to the profession—it behoves the reporter and the commentator to use the utmost caution. Accordingly, for our own part, we have no hesitation in deferring any note or notice of the latest and most important of the Irish judicial contributions to "the law of the land." Adams v. Dunseath has been specially reported for this serial—a case, certainly, of a magnitude that well warranted the lengthened and elaborate judgments delivered (and which were but partially given by the daily press)—but, while we expect to have it "immediately if not sooner" in the hands of our readers, we shall take care to wait till we can present a full and thoroughly authentic report of it; and meantime, we shall conclude with the words with which (as we read in Garasse, p. 731) St. Augustine used commonly to end his sermons: "Parcite mihi, fratres mei; nolo discere quod sequitur."

PROOF OF "MEANS" TO PAY.

"MEANS," does not mean, in the sense we are here to discuss, what the wisacre had in contemplation who, because he had heard of a vagabond having been committed as he had no "visible means of subsistence," went about with a roll of sausages under his arm. He would so perhaps escape the power of that bluff Norfolk J.P., who growled out, "Dr. Tanner, sir—if he were in this country I'd commit him for getting his livelihood without ostensible means of subsistence." And certes, your justice of the quorum is capable of strange adjudications. "Look'e, gentlemen, this fellow has a trade," said Scruple, J.P., in Farquhar's comedy of the Recruiting Officer, when the collier's case was called on, "and the Act of Parliament here expresses that we are to impress no man that has any visible means of a livelihood." "May it please your worship," interposed Kite, sergeant (in the army), "this man has no visible means of a livelihood, for he works underground:" and the collier was delivered up as a recruit accordingly—besides the army wants miners, as Captain Plume remarked. But rather, the "means" within our purview are those whereof, in reply to the Chief Justice's reproof, "your means are very slender and your waste great," Falstaff said, "I would it were otherwise; I would my means were greater, and my waist slenderer." By "means" we mean revenue, tangible assets, realised money, or realisable capital such as Shylock had in view when he said of Antonio, "His means are in supposition." A man may even be insolvent within the technical meaning of the bankruptcy law, and yet possessed of "visible means;" and on the other hand, as Baron Dowse once wittily put it, "a man may say he is not in embarrassed circumstances, but that is not at all inconsistent with his having no money to pay costs, for the less money a man has the less embarrassment he will have in knowing how to deal with it." A man may be as poor as a modern Irish landlord, and yet have "means to pay," because he may otherwise have the ability to earn or acquire the means by his personal exertions, for such means embrace, in the words of Leonato,

"Both strength of limb and policy of mind, Ability in means and choice of friends."

Such "means" it is that are contemplated, at all events, by the Debtors Act (and see the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, s. 9); but, whether a stricter interpretation should be assigned to the C. L. P. A. Act, 1870, is a more or less debatable question, on which it is unnecessary to say anything as the subject is so amply treated in Kav. & Quill, Remit. of Actions (2nd ed., 64 et seq.), where reference is approvingly made to our own views as stated in the note to Torkington v. Connor, 8 Ir. L. T. Rep. 89; so that it may here suffice merely to cite some additional authorities on what constitutes visible means within the Act: Duff v. Apothecaries Hall, 7 Ir. L. T. 556; Scott v. Comerford, 10 ib. 200; Lunny v. McCaffrey, 11 Ir. L. T. Rep. 103; and as to what averments in reference to such will be sufficient in the affidavits, see Stamp v. Hickey, 8 Ir. L. T. 485; Greyson v. Quinn, 13 ib. 89; Ryan v. Broughall, 14 Ir. L. T. Rep. 119; M'Manus v. Maguire, 15 ib. 31. But, though a practising solicitor, who has taken out his licence, may be considered as having visible means within the C. L. P. A. Act, 1870 (Hennegan v. Jackman, 19 W. R. 208; Hunter v. D'Arcy, 8 Ir. L. T. Rep. 95), it appears that a barrister who has chambers and has gone circuit is not necessarily to be deemed in possession of means, under the Debtors Act, for he "might have received no fees although in practice," and the law does not enable him to enforce payment: Anon. 13 Ir. L. T. 119. But semble, it might be otherwise if the learned gentleman's mother made him an allowance: ib. So that Falstaff, too, might be taken to have "means to pay" the sums in respect of which he had made default to Mrs. Quickly, when Henry IV. declared,

"For competence of life, I will allow you.
That lack of means enforce you not to evil."

Yet, on the other hand, according to Foster v. Stackpoole (13 Ir. L. T. 35), it would seem not to be enough to show that a gentleman lives at Pall Mall Place, Westminster, is a member of the Civil and United Service Club and of the Raleigh Club, and appears to live expensively and spend large sums on his personal pleasures, where after all it appears that he is altogether dependent on his mother for his maintenance. And the recent case of Chard v. Jervis goes to the same effect, where Sir George Jessel, M.R., remarked, "It might be a very immoral act to incur debts without the means of paying them, but it by no means followed that because a man was living in good style he had a pound in his pocket; a father or some other relation might be paying everything for him, and a wife might do the same thing."

We find the last-mentioned case reported in the Times of the 16th ult., and it will certainly serve as a warning to tradesmen who supply goods on credit to gentlemen apparently of good position and ample means, but who are really living on the separate incomes of their wives, and have no means of their own. The plaintiffs were corn merchants, and had obtained judgment against Captain Scott Jervis, the defendant, for £29, for hay and oats supplied to the defendant at his residence. Failing to get paid, the plaintiffs moved for an order for committal, on an affidavit in which one of them deposed: "Most of the goods, the subject of the action, were supplied to the defendant for horses kept at his residence. The defendant resides at Cherrington-park, and keeps up a large establishment there, and to all appearances he is a man of means. I am informed and believe that the defendant is continually in the hunting field, and that he keeps several horses, some of them hunters, at his residence, but that they are, together with the furniture, carriages, and effects at Cherrington-park, claimed by the defendant's wife, or her trustees. From the defendant's mode and style of living, I believe he is in a position to pay the amount due in this action." The defendant, on the other hand, deposed: "In the year 1874, I was duly adjudicated a bankrupt, and have not obtained my discharge. Since the date of my bankruptcy I have not earned or otherwise acquired, and I am not now possessed of any money or property of any description whatever, and I am quite unable to pay the plaintiffs' claim in this action or any part thereof. My wife has an income settled to her separate use, but I have no interest whatever either in the capital or income of the funds from which she derives such income. It is not true that I am continually in the hunting field. In fact, I have never ridden to hounds while I have resided in the County of Gloucester." On those affidavits Stephen, J., granted an order for committal; and the defendant having appealed to the Divisional Court, Field, J., and Huddleston, B., affirmed the order, being satisfied that the defendant had failed to make out that he was unable to pay. The defendant then took the case to the Court of Appeal; and thereupon made the following further affidavit: "The house in which I live is an old farm-house, converted into a residence, which is rented, furnished, with a garden, at a rental of £100 per annum. The rates and taxes amount to between £8 and £10 per annum. My wife has two maid-servants, whose wages amount to £15 per annum and no more, and a boy, who works outside, at wages amounting to £12 per annum and no more, and these are all the servants that are kept, and the rent, rates, taxes, and wages are all paid by my wife. I have no horse at all. My wife has one horse and no more, the value of which does not exceed £10. The premises are situated four miles from a railway station, and the same distance from the nearest town, Tetbury, and there are no shops in the neighbourhood of Cherrington-park, and it is necessary to keep a horse in order to supply the house with provisions and necessaries. I did not make any gift, settlement, or other disposition of any money or property whatsoever, before or at the time of our marriage, nor have I since made any gift, settlement, or other disposition of any money or other property whatsoever. My wife's property comes entirely from her own family, and is settled on her and our children, and I have no estate or interest whatsoever under such settlement, nor has my wife any power to give me any estate or interest whatsoever, except in the event of there being no children of our marriage, of whom there are already three. I have not ridden to hounds or hunted anywhere for the last eight years. My bankruptcy has never been closed." Notwithstanding this disillusionising deposition, the plaintiffs still contended that the evidence of means was sufficient, citing Harper v. Scrimgeour, 5 Ch. Div. 366; but submitted that, at all events, the evidence the other way should be overwhelming in order to induce the Court of Appeal to interfere, citing Esdale v. Visser, 13 Ch. Div. 421. In Harper's case a husband, who had bought but not paid for a horse, deposed that, though his wife had horses and carriages, he had none of his own, nor had he any money at his command to attend court to answer the application, and his wife declined to supply him with any. Notwithstanding which he was committed. But, in Chard's case Sir George Jessel observed that Harper's case decided a mere question of fact, and therefore was not binding, while even in the conclusion of fact he saw nothing in the case as reported to induce him to concur. So, in effect, Harper's case stands overruled. Esdale's case, again, was relied on mainly for the dictum of the late Lord Justice James that, "When all the materials for coming to a decision on the point have been before the Judge and he has applied his mind to them, it would require an overwhelming case to induce the Court of Appeal to differ from the Judge if he says he is satisfied of the debtor's ability to pay." But in Bruce v. Pemberton (March, 1880), which was not mentioned in Chard's case, on appeal from a decision by Denman, J., the Court reversed his order notwithstanding a like argument against interfering in a matter of discretion (see 14 Ir. L. T. 175), the order there having been made against a divorced wife, who swore she had no income but what a gay life supplied. In the present case, referring to the dictum of James, L.J., the Master of the Rolls said he distrusted adjectives. The word "overwhelming" was a strong one, and he was not satisfied it was the right word to use. Of course, it would require a strong case to induce the Court of Appeal to overrule the decision of the Court below on a question of fact. The evidence must clearly be sufficient to convince the Court of Appeal that the Judge below was wrong, and he thought James, L.J., only meant that the Court of Appeal must be satisfied of that, and that he did not intend to go beyond that. But even then James, L.J., said, "When all the materials for coming to a decision have been before the Judge," and in the present case there was now before this Court material and important evidence which was not before the Divisional Court. Lord Justice Holker added that he thought the dictum in question ought not to be admitted without considerable hesitation. Of course, the evidence must be such as clearly to convince the Court of Appeal that the Court below was wrong; but if it was meant that there must be a mathematical demonstration, an appeal from such an order would never be allowed at all.

The previous cases having been thus disposed of, the Court proceeded to consider the facts of the one in hand. The defendant appeared to have been living on his wife's means, and to have ordered goods in his own name; but, the plaintiffs' own evidence showed that they knew that the furniture and other effects of the defendant's residence were claimed by his wife's trustees. There was no evidence that she allowed him anything, or "that he had settled anything on his wife." The defendant's first affidavit did not answer the plaintiffs' in sufficient detail, but the second was such that there was not evidence left to show that the defendant had any means at all. And accordingly, the appeal was allowed. In connexion with the statement we have above quoted, in reference to its not appearing that the defendant had settled anything on his wife, we may note the recent case of Sweeny v. Goulding (15 Ir. L. T. Rep. 47), where, on a motion for an order for payment under the Act, the question whether the defendant was possessed of means depended on whether or not a bill of sale which he had given to his brother, and which had been set up as against an execution sought to be first levied, was fraudulent and void; and the Court held that the plaintiff should be left to his remedy by an interpleader issue. And with that case may be collated another (not there cited) of M'Laughlin v. Brown, 12 Ir. L. T. 89, where under similar circumstances Palles, C.B., refused to grant the order, as if the defendant's assignment there in question was fraudulent it was open to the plaintiff to prosecute him. And as regards the effect of bankruptcy, see Re A. B., 11 Ir. L. T. Rep. 90; Re Deere, L. R. 10 Ch. 658.

It would seem, however, that, but for the additional affidavit in Chard's case, the decision would not have been reversed. It was reversed with regret; and in future cases not quite so strong, husbands may not improbably be still presumed to have means, when their wives, having separate property, allow them to live in ostensible opulence and luxury. Two things we regret,—that the existing rule throws the onus probandi of means on creditors, and that appeals of this kind have now received such an encouragement. But one thing we rejoice in,—that in this case the appeal succeeded, although it is needless to say we disapprove of the defendant's conduct; for truly, in the words of the Master of the Rolls, "If the Court were to commit him to prison it would not be exercising the jurisdiction given to it by the Act, but would be inventing a new jurisdiction, which might be summed up thus:—Whenever a wife has money you may send her husband to prison in order to compel her to pay his debts."

POWERS OF PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES.

The case of The Citizens' Insurance Co. of Canada v. Parsons (45 L. T. N. S. 721) raises again a question which has been several times discussed by the Judicial Committee—namely, the distribution of legislative power between the Parliament of Canada and the legislatures of the various provinces comprised in the Dominion; and at the present time the practical working of such a constitution as that of Canada is not without interest and instruction both for lawyers and politicians, in reference to possible proposals for the extension of the principle of local self-government in the United Kingdom.

The matter is provided for by sects. 91 to 95 of the British North American Act of 1867 (30 Vict., c. 8), by which the Dominion of Canada was created. The scheme of this legislation is to give to the Dominion Parliament authority to make laws for the good government of Canada in all matters not coming within such classes of subjects as are assigned exclusively to the provincial Legislatures; but "for greater certainty but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms of this section," sect. 91 assigns to the Dominion Parliament exclusive authority in twenty-nine enumerated classes of subjects; and concludes as follows:—"Any matter coming within any of the classes of subjects enumerated in this section shall not be deemed to come within the class of matters of a local or private nature comprised in the enumeration of the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the provinces." Similarly sect. 92 gives to the provincial Legislatures exclusive power to make laws in relation to sixteen enumerated classes of subjects.

It must, however, have been foreseen that no sharp and definite line had been or could be drawn, and the words of sect. 91 seem to endeavour to provide for the case of an apparent conflict. The fact, however, that the question has been raised in as many as six different appeals before the Judicial Committee, and that in two of them the decisions of the courts below were reversed, shows the matter is not left free from doubt. In the first case (L' Union St. Jacques de Montreal v. Belisle, L. Rep. 6 P. C. 81; 81 L. T. Rep. N. S. 111) it was held that an Act of a provincial Legislature, passed to relieve a benefit society which was in a state of financial embarrassment, related to "a matter merely of a local or private nature in the province," within sect. 92 of the Act, and not to "bankruptcy and insolvency," within sect. 91, and was therefore not ultra vires. Similarly in Dow v. Black (L. Rep. 6 P. C. 272; 82 L. T. Rep. N. S. 274) an Act empowering the majority of the inhabitants of a parish to raise, by local taxation, a subsidy for the promotion of the construction of a railway already authorised by statute, was held to relate to a local matter within the province, though the railway was intended to extend beyond the province, and "railways extending beyond the limits of the province" are expressly excepted from the control of the provincial Legislatures. In both these cases the courts below had taken the opposite view.

The case of The Attorney-General for Quebec v. The Queen Insurance Company (3 App. Cas. 1090; 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 897) decided that the imposition of a stamp duty on policies of assurance, renewals, and receipts, was not "direct taxation within the province," and was ultra vires.

In Vulfin v. Langlois (5 App. Cas. 115; 41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 662) leave to appeal was refused on petition, on the ground that, "The administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance, and organisation of provincial courts, both of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts," which was reserved to the provincial Legislature, did not relate to election petitions.

In Oushing v. Dupuy (5 App. Cas. 409; 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 445) it was decided that sect. 91, by reserving to the Dominion Parliament questions of "bankruptcy and insolvency," gave power to interfere to that extent with "property and civil rights in the province," though sect. 92 assigned them to the provincial Legislature. But in the last case (The Citizens' Insurance Company v. Parsons) referred to above, the Judicial Committee held that those words covered a provincial statute "to secure uniform conditions in policies of fire insurance," notwithstanding that the Dominion Parliament has exclusive powers for "the regulation of trade and commerce," and that such a power did not include the regulation of the contracts of a particular business in a single province.

The above series of decisions are sufficient to show the many difficulties and pitfalls which must in practice attend the working out of any such scheme of divided legislation.—Law Times.

THE SOLICITOR-GENERAL IN THE HOUSE.

The World says:—Mr. Porter having, in spite of nervousness, made a favourable impression by his maiden speech, contrived within the next few days to establish himself as one of the most impressive figures in the House. It was not the exhibition of golden chains and sparkling personal adornments upon a portly form, or the wearing of such habiliments as, in combination with a hat tilted rakishly on the side of the head, conveyed a vague suggestion of sporting proclivities, that did it, but the effect produced upon all beholders when the Solicitor-General for Ireland, uncovering, presented to the view a bald and polished pate, towering aloft in a domelike form, and evidently so tightly packed with legal lore as to afford no space for the smallest wrinkle. By silently bringing this magnificent cranium to bear upon the Legislature from the end of the treasury bench, Mr. Porter has created a general feeling of awe and uneasiness, particularly amongst the occupants of the front Opposition bench; and when, at an early hour on Saturday morning, he betook himself to the Peers' Gallery, and from that elevation regarded the House below, he unconsciously led admiring plebeians to believe that a shining light of unexampled splendour had been imparted to our old nobility.

MR. BRADLAUGH'S TAKING OF THE OATH.

The expulsion of Mr. Bradlaugh from the House of Commons destroys much of the importance of the legal question whether his proceeding at the table of the House on Tuesday amounted to a compliance with the statute requiring him to take the oath, but still the question is of considerable interest. If Mr. Bradlaugh did, in the words of the Act, "solemnly and publicly make and subscribe the oath at the table in the middle of the House, and while a full House is duly sitting, with the Speaker in the chair, at such hours and according to such regulations as the House may by its Standing Orders direct," we imagine that no Court of law would inquire into the question whether he was competent by belief to take the oath. So far as the Standing Orders are concerned, Mr. Bradlaugh's act does not seem impeachable. But was it done "solemnly and publicly?" In one sense it was public, but in another it was by stealth. In no sense was it "solemnly" done. Whatever that word may mean; it cannot describe the act of a member who rushes up to the table of the House, hurries through a form of words, signs a paper, and throws it on the table, while the Speaker all the while is loudly and continually calling "Order!" The Act did not intend to allow a member of the House of Commons to snatch the oath in spite of its teeth; but meant him to take the oath with the sanction and recognition of the House.—Law Journal.

THE COST OF THE LAND COURT.

The Morning Post points out that the charge for the Irish Land Commission amounts to £84,919, and as this charge appears now for the first time on the Estimate, Mr. Forster will be properly pressed for explanation upon every vote. When it is remembered that for this sum 18 courts are in active operation, it will not be said that the sum is extravagant. On the other hand, it will be pointed out that the rental dealt with and fixed by the Commissioners amounts only to £38,000, a sum considerably less than that expended on the machinery elaborated to attain so small a result. It appears that the maximum salary payable to an Assistant Commissioner of the non-legal class is £750. Mr. Forster will either have to prove that gentlemen of fine tact, large experience, proved impartiality, and of some legal acumen—fit, in short, to exercise judicial functions of the most delicate and anxious character—are plentiful in Ireland at a rate of pay which in this country would be regarded as inadequate, or he will have to admit that the persons selected do not inspire that general confidence without which the administration of justice is in danger of failure and contempt.

NOTES OF CASES.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

(Before FLANAGAN, J.)

MURDOCK v. MURDOCK.

Feb. 18, 1882.—County Court jurisdiction—Administration suit—Institution of, within year from death of intestate—County Courts Act, 1877, s. 41.

Appeal in a suit by the plaintiff, as one of the next of kin, against the defendant, the administrator of Joseph Murdock, farmer, county Armagh, deceased, for administration of the estate. At the hearing before Mr. R. W. Gamble, Q.C., County Court judge of Armagh, the point was raised on the part of the defendant that the suit having been brought before twelve months had elapsed from the date of the death of the deceased; there was no jurisdiction to entertain it. The County Court judge, acting on the practice which prevailed in the county courts, dismissed the suit upon that ground.

T. L. O'Shaughnessy, for the appellants.
Cuming, contra.

Judgment reserved.

FLANAGAN, J., in delivering judgment, said that, by the 41st section of the County Courts Act of 1877 it was perfectly plain that a suit could be brought before the expiration of the twelve months. He felt certain that the section of the Act had not been brought under the notice of the County Court judge. He had no alternative, however, but to reverse the decision of the court below, and to refer the case back to the County Court judge, with a declaration that the suit was properly brought, defendant to pay the costs of the appeal.

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION.

(Before FITZGERALD, J., and a Jury.)

LORD CLONCURRY v. DEWANE and OTHERS.

Feb. 14, 20, 1882.—Costs—Action to recover land on title—Land Law Act, 1881, s. 51—Jud. Act, s. 53—County Courts Act, 1877, ss. 53, 54.

In the case above entitled, and in 26 others, the plaintiff proceeded by way of action to recover land on the title, in respect of holdings in the county of Limerick, the plaintiff claiming in each case under assignment from the sheriff. Mesne rates were, also, claimed, but that demand was abandoned.

In each of the cases defence had been entered by Messrs. M'Gough and Fowler, solicitors; but they only appeared at the trial of one of them. They then intimated that, as Lord Cloncurry did not seek to recover mesne rents, they would not further contest his right to recover possession. Formal evidence was given, a jury was sworn in each case, and verdicts returned against the defendants.

Holmes, Q.C., and Rynd, for the plaintiff, asked for judgment.

[FITZGERALD, J.—You are entitled to judgment, but I must consider the question of costs.]

When these proceedings were commenced there was no machinery by which services could be substituted in the Civil Bill Court, and in each and every one of the cases it was necessary for the plaintiff to obtain an order to substitute service in consequence of the impossibility of serving the tenants except by registered letter or posting the writs on some public place in the neighbourhood. It is only right to say that some time ago Lord Cloncurry selected three or four cases from among the 80 or 81 he had to proceed with, and got judgment in these, thinking that then the remaining tenants would surrender their farms, and thus open the way for negotiation. In the test cases the defendants appeared; a point of law was raised, and argued before the Divisional Court, as to the necessity for a demand of possession, which was overruled; in fact; Lord Cloncurry was put to every inconvenience and expense that was possible. Even after judgment was finally obtained in these cases, the solicitor acting for Lord Cloncurry wrote to the defendants in the present cases, communicating the result arrived at, and stating that they must yield up possession of their farms, but that, which would have opened the door possibly for amicable arrangement, was refused, and there was no course open but to proceed by ejectment.

[FITZGERALD, J.—I will consider all the cases, and as the question raised is of an unusual character I may consult the Lord Chief Justice or some of my colleagues as to what rule should be made concerning costs—whether, having regard to the 51st section of the Land Law Act, 1881; and other circumstances, any limit should be put upon the liability of the defendants, and as to whether all these ejectments were necessary. It is not the ordinary case of a purchase under a sheriff's deed, but the purchase by Lord Cloncurry, as landlord, of tenants' interests, which immediately merged into the reversion].

Decision deferred.

FITZGERALD, J.—I have very carefully considered these cases, and have found them to be of the same character from beginning to end. I shall deal, therefore, with one case as governing the rest. Lord Cloncurry brought actions for the recovery of rents from his tenants; and in July last he recovered judgment. These were not actions of ejectment, but actions to recover rent simply. There was no appearance in the cases for the defendants; and judgment went for Lord Cloncurry for the arrears due for and costs. Their subsequent course of action shows that the tenants were acting on advice that was being given to them; for Lord Cloncurry having issued the writs of f. fs. the sales took place in August, and in each case the tenant allowed his farm to be sold, and sold, too, for nominal sums, ranging as low in some instances as 21. The interest in each of the several farms was purchased by Lord Cloncurry. The tenants were advised to let their farms go, to let them be sacrificed as things they had no interest in, and to allow them to pass into Lord Cloncurry's hands. Accordingly, in the month of September Lord Cloncurry instituted actions of ejectment. In every one of the actions a defence had been filed, and filed in the names of M'Gough and Fowler, who appeared to be solicitors not connected with Limerick, but somehow or other interested in all these defendants. They entered, first of all, an appearance in each case, and required a statement of claim to be delivered in each, and then pleaded the statutable defence of possession, putting the landlord upon the proof of his title. There were thirty of those cases in all, and, as I understood from Mr. Holmes, three were selected as test cases, and one of the three as a trial test came before the Lord Chief Baron, and, upon the occasion of the trial in November, his lordship reserved the point as to whether a formal demand was necessary before, under such circumstances, the landlord could eject. That point was discussed and disposed of by the Common Pleas Division, and one would have thought that after that, there being no other point or question in the case, Messrs. M'Gough and Fowler would have considered it consistent with their duty to their clients, or at least would have advised their clients under such circumstances that it would be unnecessary to proceed to trial in the remaining 27 cases. However, no such thing took place; and accordingly they had the form of 27 trials gone through. Twenty-seven juries were sworn, the issue papers were sent to them, and verdicts were recorded, a vast deal of expense being incurred, and I shall say inquired for no object whatever. I assume Messrs. M'Gough and Fowler had authority to defend these actions of ejectment, but I would shut my eyes to the surrounding circumstances if I did not see that the defence to these ejectments and the whole course of the procedure here were in accordance with what is known now as the "no rent" policy—the non-payment of rent in toto, and with the object of making the farms when they came into the landlord's hands, if he ever got them into his hands, mere deserts. As I have said, great expense was incurred by these unnecessary trials, and I reserved the question as to whether the defendants' liability as to costs should be curtailed until I looked into the case, which I have done since with great care. I had a second object in view, however, in delaying. As I stated at the time of the trial, about this day week, I saw the ruin and desolation these parties had brought upon themselves by reason of this litigation, and I thought that whoever the parties or the organisation were or was that advised them to adopt this course, they would, out of their funds, come forward and enable the parties to come to terms by paying the rent and the costs, thus recouping Lord Clonourry for the loss he had been at, and enabling him to reinstate the tenants in possession of their farms. No such course, as I understand, has been adopted. Therefore, I am now to determine the question of costs. What struck me, in the first instance, was that the question arose under the 51st section of the Land Law Act, 1881, but I have considered that section since, and the scope of the Act—that it deals with cases between landlord and tenant, and that it is to settle the relations between landlord and tenant—and I have come to the conclusion that that section only applies where the landlord as such is seeking to recover for non-payment of rent, or where the landlord as such seeks to recover from the tenant for overholding, but not to cases where ejection is brought on the mere title. My opinion, therefore, is that these cases do not come within the 51st section of the Land Law Act. If they came within that section, and if the Civil Bill Court had jurisdiction, I would have no discretion but to refuse the landlord his costs. Another question arose of the same formidable character, and that was whether, in the exercise of the discretion given me here, sitting at Nisi Prius under the 53rd section of the Judicature Act—in which it is provided that upon the trial by jury, where an issue in fact is found by the jury, the costs follow the result, unless the judge presiding for special reasons, makes an order to the contrary—there are special reasons why I should deprive Lord Clonourry of the costs of these actions in which he has succeeded, and an element in that would be whether any of the cases would come within the jurisdiction of the Civil Bill Court. I have looked at the abstracts carefully in each case, and I find that the majority of the cases come within that jurisdiction. Quite irrespective of the Land Law Act, there is jurisdiction given to the Civil Bill Court to try all cases of ejection on the title where the valuation—that is the general valuation—does not exceed £30. I find that the rents sued for here were in most cases under £30, and, therefore, it may be taken that the valuation was under £30. These cases come within the Civil Bill jurisdiction, and might have been tried there. There is, however, a question left to my discretion—whether I should interfere to deprive Lord Clonourry of the ordinary results of a successful verdict. I have come to the conclusion that I ought not to interfere, and for this reason—first of all, Mr. Holmes has told me that there would have been considerable difficulty in serving processes for the Civil Bill Court; for at the time the actions were brought there was not the same facility given for serving processes as now exists, and I know enough from my late experience to teach me that the lives of process-servers who attempted to effect personal service in this very county encountered very great danger. From this very county (Limerick) I had recently to try a remarkable case in which a process-server was stripped and beaten almost to death, and where the sub-agent was also stripped and beaten, and but for the interference of the priest of the neighbourhood life would have been sacrificed. That alone would be sufficient ground for coming to this court and applying for leave to substitute service by posting, according to the rules. In addition to that, I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that in this litigation the defendants have brought desolation and misery upon themselves. I assume now that the solicitors had ample authority and power to defend the cases, but I cannot shut my eyes to the surrounding circumstances. I believe that these parties were advised to defend all these cases in pursuance of what is known as the No Rent policy or No Rent Manifesto. They brought all this litigation upon themselves. The litigation was purely and wholly unnecessary. Even to gain a little time it was unnecessary, and, on the whole, I find no reason in these cases for depriving Lord Clonourry of the costs he has been put to. Nay more, I have come to the conclusion that he ought to have his costs, and I'll give you, Mr. Holmes, judgment with costs in each of these cases.

Holmes, Q.C., read to his lordship a letter from Messrs. White and White, Lord Clonourry's solicitors, dated 30th December, 1881, and addressed to Messrs M'Gough and Fowler, offering to take from them consents for judgment in the twenty-seven cases if tendered on or before the 22nd of that month, and consent or consents same as had been given in the two cases selected for trial with Edward Ryan's case, which would have reserved to the defendants in all the twenty-seven cases whatever right would have accrued from the argument of the law point reserved in Edward Ryan's case.

FITZGERALD, J.—They would have gained some time by that, and the costs would have been about £2 in place of all that have accrued. I was not aware of that at the time I gave my judgment, but that is an additional reason fortifying the judgment I have given.

[Cf. Tooker v. Clements, 12 Ir. L. T. 243.—E. N. B., Ed.]

EXCHEQUER DIVISION.

(Before FITZGERALD and DOWSE, BB.)

GRIFFIN v. GRIFFITH and PURCELL.

Feb. 25, 1882.—Remittal of action to county court—Defendants resident in different civil bill jurisdictions—Action of tort—C. L. P. A. Act, 1870, s. 6.

Motion, on behalf of the defendants, that the name of one of them (Griffith) be struck out, inasmuch as the question at issue could be decided without his being a party; and that the action be remitted to the county court, unless security for costs given, under C. L. P. A. Act, 1870, s. 6.

The action, in tort, was brought to recover £200 damages for the breaking and entering of the dwelling-house of the plaintiff, and expelling him therefrom and carrying away the furniture of the dwelling-house. In reference to the remittal (the purpose of the present note), it was alleged that the plaintiff was not possessed of visible means, but it appeared that the defendants resided in different civil bill jurisdictions.

MacNeill, in support of the motion, cited Fes v. Hall and Thacker, 11 Ir. L. T. 577; and stated (ex rel. P. White) that in Macdonogh v. Wells, Chatterton, V.C., sitting as a vacation judge, 1881, remitted the action (in tort) to the civil bill court, within the jurisdiction of which one of the defendants resided, though the other resided in England.

J. Roche, contra, was not called on.

The Court refused to strike out the name of the defendant Griffith; and refused to remit on the ground that the defendants resided in different civil bill jurisdictions.

[See Robinson v. Davidson, 18 Ir. L. T. Rep. 49, but note that was an action in contract. Cf. Reagan and wife v. Flood, 12 Ir. L. T. Rep. 122.—E. N. B., Ed.]

LAND SUB-COMMISSION.

(Before F. HODDER, Barrister-at-Law, J. F. BOMFORD and J. M. WEIR, Esqrs.)

M'MERROW v. IRVINE.

Feb. 7, 1882.—Town-park—Town, what constitutes—Land Law Act, 1881, s. 58 (2).

Application to fix judicial rent. The tenant was a shopkeeper, residing in Ederney, Co. Fermanagh, within half a mile of which the holdings (8a., and 9a. 2r. respectively) were situate. For the laudlord, it was contended that the holdings were town parks.

It was held that the lands were not town-parks—Ederney having been shown to be merely a village of three hundred inhabitants.

[It was held by Assistant Commissioner Roche, Feb. 4, 1882, that Athleague, Co. Roscommon, containing some 200 inhabitants, did not come within the Act. It was held by Assistant Commissioner M'Carthy (Killeen v. Lambert, Feb. 27, 1882) that "Claremorris (Co. Mayo), being a considerable market town, must be considered to be a town within the meaning of the section." But, it has a population of over 1,300.—H. N. B., Ed.]

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

Mr. J. Randal Donaldson, Solicitor, Dundalk, has been appointed a Commissioner for taking the Acknowledgment of Deeds by Married Women in the County of Louth.

Mr. Alexander Bell, Solicitor, of No. 13 Parliament-street, Dublin, has been appointed a Commissioner for Taking Affidavits in and for the Courts in Ontario.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

A List of Judicial Rents, with Summary, Tables, and Index. Compiled by CHARLES EASON, Junr. Dublin: W. H. Smith & Son.

The Nineteenth Century. A Monthly Review, Edited by JAMES KNOWLES. No. 61. March, 1882. London: C. Kegan Paul & Co.

Contemporary Review. March, 1882. London: Strahan and Co., Limited, Paternoster-row.

Cassell's History of England from the earliest period to the present time. With about 2,000 Illustrations. Part 78. London, Paris, and New York: Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.

Milton's Paradise Lost. Illustrated by Gustave Doré. Edited, with Notes and a Life of Milton, by the late ROBERT VAUGHAN, D.D. London: Cassell, Petter, Galpin, & Co.

LAW STUDENT'S JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

EASTER SITTINGS, 1882.

NOTICE.

The PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION of Candidates for Apprenticeship will be held at the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin, on Monday and Tuesday, the 3rd and 4th days of April, 1882, at Eleven o'clock.

N.B.—All Papers to be lodged on or before Friday, 17th March, 1882.

The FINAL EXAMINATION of Candidates seeking admission as Solicitors will be held at the same place, on Wednesday and Thursday, the 5th and 6th days of April, 1882, at the same hour.

By Order of the Council,

JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin.

N.B.—The decision of the Court of Examiners will be announced on Wednesday, the 26th of April, 1882, at Three o'clock, p.m.

Candidates residing in the country need not remain in town to hear decision, but can learn same from the Dublin Morning Papers of the day following the announcement.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed. Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN COURT.—H. G. Smith, final schedule.—Assignees C. Hodson, receiver.—J. T. M'Donough, do.—Devises R. C. Hurly, payment.—J. Blake, from 2nd.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

C. G. Martin, rental.—P. Roe, to take account.—S. Davis, rental.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—Assignees Miller, from 1st.—Trustees Corbet, from 2nd.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

G. S. Roper, rental.—M. Linane, do.

SALES IN COURT.

T. J. NOLAN, . . . . . 1 lot.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

Assignees T. Daly, vouch.

THURSDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

A. Elliott and others, rental.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

TRUSTEE A. M. BLAKE, . . . . . 1 lot.
J. ELLIOTT AND OTHERS, . . . . . 1 "

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE OMSBY.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

F. A. Echlin, rental.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

S. Hamilton, rental.—H. Leader, do.—Assignees W. Bolton, do.—Executors J. Henderson, from 24th Feb.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Devitt, James, and Peter Devitt, both of Sligo, in the county of Sligo, saddlers, trading as "J. and P. Devitt." February 17; Tuesday, March 14, and Friday, March 31. William Montgomery and Bennett Thompson, solrs.

Hernon, Patrick, of No. 2, Upper Dominick-street, Galway, in the county of Galway, grocer, spirit and provision dealer, and pensioner Royal Irish Constabulary. February 18; Friday, March 10, and Tuesday, March 28. Henry M. Rynd, solr.

Meany, John, of Ballinvreena, in the county of Limerick, farmer. February 13; Tuesday, March 14, and Friday, March 31. John L. and W. Scallan, solrs.

The important and influential committee appointed by the Incorporated Law Society to consider the report of Lord Coleridge's committee have reported. They would retain pleadings and abolish divisional courts in banco, sending all appeals, whether from chambers, or for new trials, to the Court of Appeal. They disapprove of the omnibus summons, and would make costs to be paid by a beaten suitor costs as between solicitor and client. There is much good sense in this report. We hope the committee will use their efforts to carry out their views, and also to abolish trial by jury.—Law Times.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	FEBRUARY			MARCH
	Sat. 25	Mon. 27	Tues. 28	Wed. 1	Thur. 2	Fri. 3
*Paid Government.
3 p c Consols ..	99½	—	99½	99½	99½	99½
3 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
New 3 p c Stock ..	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1882 } Tryflic. at ..	—	103½	103½	103½	—	104½
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	315	315½	—	315	315	315½
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	—	—	35½	—	—	—
20 London and County (Lit'd.) ..	—	73½	73½	—	—	—
20 London and W'minster, Ltd ..	68½	68½	—	68½	—	68½
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
3½ Munster Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	61	7	7	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	22½	22½	22½	22½	—	—
10 National of Liverpool (Lit'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	13½
— Nat. Prov. of England, Lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	53½	—	54	—
10 Do. New ..	23	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	29½	—	29½	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	—	—	112½	—	—	—
50 Dublin and Glasgow ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Dublin &amp; Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Mines.
4½ Borahaven (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
2½ Wicklow Copper ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons. Gas ..	15½	15½	—	15½	15½	—
8 Do. do. New ..	—	—	9½	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co. Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	6½
20 C. Dub. Brewery Co. (Lim.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin Artisan Dwellings ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
17 Hudson's Bay ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
7½ Mitchell's Whousing Co., Ltd ..	—	—	5 xd	—	—	—
4 National Discount, Bro., Ltd ..	—	—	3½ xd	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	10½	10½	10½	10½	10½	—
10 L'pi Un'ed Tram &amp; Bus Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
100 Dublin, Wicklow, &amp; W'ford ..	—	—	76½	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	x d	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	112	—	x d	110	—	—
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	83	—	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 D., W., &amp; W., 5 p c (1860) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do. do. (1864) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
400 Gt. Nth'n (Irid) gt'd 4 p c ..	—	—	x d	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..	—	108½	—	—	—	106½
100 Watf'd. &amp; C'tl Irel., 6 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	100
Debtenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— C'fergus and Larne 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Cork and Bandon, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	110	—	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	105½	—	105½	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	100½
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n. 4 p c ..	109½	—	—	—	—	109½
Miscellaneous Debit.
— Alliance &amp; Cons. Gas, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Ballast Office Deb., 292 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— City Deb. of 292 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	92	—	—
— Dub. &amp; Glas. S.P.Co. (1887) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	98½	—	99
— Dub. &amp; Kingstown 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dub. Port &amp; Docks, 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—8 per cent., 30th January, 1882.
Of Deposit—3 per cent., 30th January, 1882.

Name Days—March 15th and 29th, 1882.
Account Days—March 16th and 30th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Pills.—Though good health is preferable to high honour, how regardless people often are of the former—how covetous of the latter! Many suffer their strength to drain away ere maturity is reached, through ignorance of the facility afforded by these incomparable Pills of checking the first untoward symptoms of derangement, and reinstating order without interfering in the least with their pleasure or pursuits. To the young especially it is important to maintain the highest digestive efficiency, without which the growth is stunted, the muscles become lax, the frame feeble, and the mind slothful. The removal of indigestion by these Pills is so easy that none save the most thoughtless would permit it to sap the springs of life.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

JOYCE—February 23, at Great Charles-street, the wife of John Joyce, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a son.
LE POER TRENCH—February 28, at Hatch-street, Dublin, the wife of P. N. Le Poer Trench, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a son.
MARTIN—February 21, at The Mall, Ramelton, the wife of William Martin, Esq., Sessional Crown Solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

PURVIS and TRIMBLE—December 8, at St. Mary's Church, Farnell, Auckland, Frederick Arthur Purvis, Esq., barrister-at-law, of Tairanga and Kaitiaki, New Zealand, to Elizabeth, third daughter of William Trimble, Esq., late of Belfast, Ireland.

DEATHS.

WAUCHOB—January 14, at Buenos Ayres, South America, Daniel, son of the late Samuel Wauchob, and grandson of the late William Hamilton Roe, Esq., both solicitors of this city.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET. 327

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO. LIMITED.

SECURITY, & CO. RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.
The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 959

THE EDINBURGH LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

ESTABLISHED 1823.
(Being the oldest Life Office but one in Scotland).
Assurances in force at 31st March, 1881, .. .. £6,000,000
Income at that date, .. .. .. 2348,146
Accumulated Funds over, .. .. .. £1,729,841

Proposals completed before 31st March next will rank for Four Years' Bonus at the next division.
The New Determinable Premium Plan at whole Life Rates is explained in a Special Prospectus, which can be had on application to—WILLIAM B. MARTIN, Res. Secretary, 31, 55, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

STOKES BROTHERS,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN. 298

N. PETERSON & SON,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LIVERPOOL AND LONDON CHAMBERS,
1, FOSTER-PLACE, COLLEGE-GREEN,
DUBLIN. 813

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

LITERARY and General Sale Rooms, No. 8, D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.

J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),
Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees, Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realizing the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.
Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1882.

No. 789

PRESUMPTIONS OF LIFE, DEATH, AND SURVIVORSHIP.—I

THE subject on which we propose here to touch (in reference to which the latest decision is that of the Land Commission in Gill v. Manly, reported in our current issue), is one that has given rise to problems of the greatest intricacy, and cases of peculiar and even romantic interest, while the divergencies of the law of different countries cannot fail to attract the earnest attention of the comparative jurist. Something, too, may be found to say upon it that has not been already stated in the elaborate note to Nepean v. Doe in Smith's Leading Cases; and at all events, we do not propose to travel over the ground there occupied, but by reference to what is there said (to which we do not intend to advert) the reader may supply any deficiencies in our own treatment, which in some respects we advertently confine within a more limited scope, dealing chiefly with the most recent cases or with matters not elsewhere accessibly noted.

As regards presumptions in favour of the continuance of life, it was said of old by Stair, treating of the Scottish law, "Life is presumed. This some do extend to an hundred years of age, but others only to fourscore, which is confirmed by that of the Psalmist, that the age of man is threescore ten unless by strength of nature he come to fourscore. Hence it is that heirs cannot be served upon presumption of the death of their predecessor unless witnesses or fame concur, and hence also women may not marry in their husband's absence till that age." But, in 1871, we find Lord Deas thus referring to this theory: "The law undoubtedly holds that there is a presumption in favour of life, even although it is proved that a party has gone to a distant region and has not been heard of for a considerable period of years. This presumption admittedly ceases entirely at the end of a hundred years from the date of his birth. But there is no rule requiring that the hundred years shall actually have elapsed before it shall be inferred from facts and circumstances that the party is dead. The presumption of life is stronger or weaker during that century as more or less of the period has elapsed, and according as more or less time has elapsed since the party was heard of." Subsequent decisions introduced perhaps somewhat more relaxation, though still the Scottish judges were especially cautious in this matter: see Stewart's Trustees v. Stewart, 2 R. 488; M'Lay v. Borland, 3 R. 1124; but, now it is regulated by a special Act of Parliament: 44 & 45 Vict., c. 47. In England, too, it was once considered that there was a presumption that a person continues alive until the contrary be shown: Wilson v. Hodge, 2 East, 313. But in Re Phene's Trusts (L. R. 5 Ch. 150) the question whether there was any presumption of law that a person continued to live, arising upon proof of prior existence, was very fully discussed, and it was held that, whether in civil or criminal cases, the law makes no such presumption; and so, in R. v. Lumley (L. R. 1 C. C. R. 196) it was held that there was no presumption either way. This question was discussed in the American case of Montgomery v. Bevens (1 Sawyer, C. C. R. 666), where Field, J., after examining the English cases, said: "But the law as thus declared in England is different from the law which obtains in this country, so far as it relates to the presumption of the continuance of life. Here, as in England, the law presumes that a person who has not been heard of for seven years is dead; but here the law, differing in this respect from the law of England, presumes that a party once shown to be alive continues alive until his death is proved, or the rule of law applies by which death is presumed to have occurred—that is, at the end of seven years. And the presumption of life is received in the absence of any countervailing testimony as conclusive of the fact, establishing it for the purpose of determining the rights of parties as fully as the most positive proof. The only exception to the operation of this presumption is when it conflicts with the presumption of innocence, in which case the latter prevails." The principle last mentioned was approved in another American case decided last August: People v. Feilen, 8 Pacific Coast L. J. 163, and is sustained by the English case of R. v. Twynning, 2 B. & Ald. 385; and see R. v. Lumley, ubi supra. The recent case of R. v. Willshire (6 Q. B. D. 366, 44 L. T. N. S. 222) is, also, an authority that those conflicting presumptions neutralise each other, and that in such case the question should be left to the jury as a naked matter of fact (and so, see Bishop on Stat. Crimes, s. 611); but, there we find some expressions of Coleridge, C.J., in favour of holding that from proof of the existence of life its continuance may be presumed. In that case it appeared that in 1864 W. married A. In 1868 he was convicted of bigamy for marrying B., A. being then alive. In 1879 he married C., and in 1880, C. being then alive, he married D. On a charge of bigamy against this much-married man, for marrying D., C. being then alive, whereupon he set up the defence that A. was alive when he married C., it was held that the question should have been left to the jury whether A. was not alive when he married C., as, if so, the marriage with C. would be invalid. The prisoner had set up a life in 1868, which, said the learned judge, "must be presumed to be continuing in 1879, no evidence of any kind being given, but it being shown simply that the woman was alive in 1868. . . . The prisoner was not bound to do more than set up the life in 1868, which would be presumed to continue, and it was then for the prosecution to show by evidence that that presumption was rebutted." And see Re Corbishley's Trusts (14 Ch. D. 846, 49 L. J. Ch. 266), holding that, where a cestui que trust, who takes a vested interest under a settlement, has not been heard of since a period prior to the date of the settlement, the presumption is that he was alive at that date. Nor can we quarrel with Mr. Litton's judgment in Gill v. Manly (16 Ir. L. T. Rep. 57), when in reference to the alleged death of a cestui que vie who, if alive, would be only about sixty years of age, he considered it quite within the probabilities of human existence that the person in question might still be alive and well, and that there should be stronger evidence of his death than the mere fact of his absence from the country without being heard of: cf. In re Webb's Estate, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 235. In the Scottish case of Master and Seamen of Dundee v. Cockerill (8 M. 278) a seaman turned up after an absence of sixteen years, and had the pleasure of being ordered to refund considerable payments which had been made by a charitable society to his wife qua widow; and it is not long since our pages were occupied with a romantic case in which administration on the estate of a living person had been granted: 15 Ir. L. T. 20; the law on which subject has been ably treated in a recent number of the American Law Review (Vol. I., N. S. 337); and not without reason is it held that a grant of administration is not sufficient proof of death: Re Beamish, 9 W. R. 475; Wms. Ex'rs. In Ommaney v. Stilwell, 23 Beav. 328, it was held to have been shown that a person who sailed with Sir John Franklin in 1845 was alive in 1850; and in 1858 the Franklin expedition gave rise to another curious case, in Scotland, on the subject of the presumption of life, Fairholme v. Fairholme's Trustees (20 D. 813), where the Lord Justice-Clerk observed: "There have been at different times cases of very great interest as to the fate of persons who have gone on foreign expeditions, and great difficulties have arisen in regard to the evidence of death; but this case possesses a most peculiar interest. It is impossible for us not to feel that it has this character to an extent which no other case on record possesses, and it is curious that the best and most authentic, and indeed the only connected evidence as to the fate of the Franklin expedition is that which is afforded by the proof in this case, which would form, if published, a most deeply interesting pamphlet." It was there held that the survivors of that expedition had perished in or about the spring of 1850; while in Ommaney's case it had been held that one of them was still alive then. But, as we have no ambition to write a deeply interesting pamphlet, we shall pass on to the next branch of our subject.

THE BALLOT ACTS.

The modifications which the Government proposes to make in the Ballot Acts in rendering them permanent are set forth in Sir Charles Dilke's Bill, which was issued on Wednesday. This measure is for the most part the same as last year's, the alterations being but few. One of the matters dealt with is the extension of the hours of polling. The local authority, which can divide a borough into polling districts, is empowered to direct that at Parliamentary elections there the poll shall be kept open until 8 in the evening. And if after some experience the prolongation of the hours appears to be inexpedient, authority is similarly given to revoke the direction. An appeal, however, is allowed from the local authority to the Privy Council. Votes are often lost through the "directions" given in the Ballot Act of 1872 for the guidance of voters not being explicitly followed. Accordingly, the Bill provides that a ballot paper shall not be invalidated by a departure from the directions, where the returning officer is satisfied that it does not enable the vote to be identified, and was not intended to have that effect, and that the paper shown for whom the vote was intended. After a ballot paper has been marked, any display of it, so as to make known the candidate voted for, is to invalidate it in case of a petition, and to render the elector liable to a fine of £5. Trifling informalities in a nomination paper are made curable by amending it under certain restrictions. Some change, also, is made in the mode of procedure at the counting of the votes. One of the new provisions of this year's Bill is that the ballot papers shall be of such material and colour and so printed as to secure both secrecy and the observance of the Ballot Acts with respect to the ascertaining by an election Court of the votes given by any person. Moreover, the returning officer is required to send to the Secretary of State a tabular form showing the numbers of (1) the ballot papers rejected for various reasons; (2) the voters on the register; (3) the ballot papers delivered; (4) the papers taken out of the boxes; (5) the counterfeit papers taken out; (6) the votes counted; and (7) the votes marked by the presiding officers. A provision with regard to polling stations is that in every county or borough there must be at least one polling station for every 500 electors. An Act of 1847 requires all soldiers, within two miles of the place, where a nomination or election of a member of Parliament is being taken or a poll declared, to be confined throughout the day to their barracks or quarters. It is proposed to repeal so much of this Act as relates to the day of nomination. Sir Charles Dilke's measure contains several special provisions with regard to its application to Scotland and Ireland.

TOWN-PARKS.

In the House of Commons, on the 3rd instant,

Mr. O'CONNOR POWELL asked the Attorney-General for Ireland whether he would inform the House on what principle certain lands were held to be town-parks under the Land Law Act, thereby excluding the tenants of those lands from the benefits of that measure; whether it was possible in defining a town-park to determine what was a town; whether lands adjacent to villages or small places having no town Board or other local public authority, and with a population of less than 3,000 persons ought to be included in the category of town-parks; and whether the Government intended to propose any amendment of the Land Law Act for the purpose of removing the uncertainty in which the law in respect of this matter was involved.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL for Ireland.—In reply to the first inquiry in this question, four conditions must be fulfilled in order that a holding should be a town-park within the second sub-section of the 58th section of the Land Act of 1881:—(1) It must be what is ordinarily termed a town-park. (2) It must adjoin or be near a city or town. (3) It must bear an increased value as accommodation land above its ordinary letting value if occupied as a farm. (4) It must be occupied by a person residing in the city or town or its suburbs for the accommodation of his residence there. In reply to the second inquiry, what constitutes a town within the Act is a circumstance to be determined by the facts of each case, and I doubt whether a hard-and-fast definition would not be open to considerable difficulty. In reply to the third inquiry, if the town is under commissioners or other municipal body, there is no difficulty in concluding that it is a town within the Act, but calling a place a town will not make it a town; and, as a general rule, I should say that holdings adjoining or near villages or small places are not town-parks within the Act. As a matter of opinion merely, I should doubt the prudence of a statutory definition that no place is a town if its population does not exceed 2,999, which is, I take it, the gist of this inquiry. As to the last inquiry, it is a matter of policy, and should be addressed to the Prime Minister, but so far as I have seen, the Act is working smoothly in this respect. The small holdings adjoining the City of Limerick, some of which are within the borough boundary, were held not to be town-parks, because they did not answer the whole four conditions I have mentioned; and in another place the attempt to turn a village into a town by getting up a market or fair, so as to call the adjoining holdings town-parks and exclude them from the Act, was rejected by the Sub-Commissioners, who held that by such contrivance the place did not become a town or the holdings town-parks.

SERVICE OUT OF THE JURISDICTION.

The practice in obtaining leave for the service of writs out of the jurisdiction has been the subject of difference of opinion on the bench; the Chancery practice differed from that at common law; the Judicature Rules applying both to Chancery and common law cannot be said to be very clearly drafted; and considerable dissatisfaction has recently been expressed in Scotland at the working of the rules in reference to persons residing in that country. The case of Forster v.

Barrow, decided by the Court of Appeal, and reported in the February number of the Law Journal Reports, throws much light on the subject, and demands attentive reading. The writ in the action claimed £3,000 damages for misrepresentation, in respect of a Welsh coal mine, by the defendant, jointly with two others who were sued in a separate action. Leave to serve the writ in Scotland was given on the strength of an affidavit of the plaintiff to the effect that he was induced to buy a share in the mine by the misrepresentation of the defendant and the two others, and that all the negotiations in respect of the mine took place in London. The defendant entered what is described as "a conditional appearance," and applied to have the order for service rescinded, making an affidavit that he received none of the plaintiff's money, that he had no negotiations with him, and that he did not see him in London at the time of the sale. The plaintiff filed an affidavit in reply not denying the defendant's allegations but suggesting that the other two persons were the defendant's agents. It was not contended that, if the defendant's affidavit was admissible, the order for service could stand; on the other hand, it was not clear that, if standing alone, the plaintiff's affidavit would not be sufficient. Lord Justice Baggallay, notwithstanding the very great vagueness and circuitry of its terms, expressed the opinion that it would be sufficient. Upon the motion to rescind the order made before Mr. Justice Chitty, it was not contended that the affidavit of the defendant could be read, the case of The Great Australian Gold Mining Company v. Martin, 46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 289, being considered—very insufficiently, as we think—conclusive on that point. The defendant's affidavit was, however, tendered in the Court of Appeal, and the point was taken that under Order XI, Rule 3, it was necessary that the plaintiff's affidavit should state whether the defendant was a British subject, and pledge itself to the existence of a cause of action within the jurisdiction. The Court of Appeal overruled these minor points; but on the main question held that the defendant's affidavit could be read, and, therefore, rescinded the order.

The difficulties under Order XI, Rule 3, arise from the defective drafting of that rule. The Master of the Rolls, although admitting his personal responsibility in the matter, is constrained to confess that "Rule 3 is not so carefully framed as it might be." It says: "Every application for an order for leave to serve such writ or notice on a defendant out of the jurisdiction shall be supported by evidence by affidavit or otherwise, showing in what place or country such defendant is or probably may be found, and whether such defendant is a British subject or not, and the grounds upon which the application is made." The country in which the defendant is expected to be found is material to every application for service out of the jurisdiction, because the time allowed for appearance must be regulated according to the defendant's distance from England. But whether the defendant is, or is not, a British subject, is only material where service is proposed out of the Queen's dominions. Within the Queen's dominions the Queen's writ runs whether to a subject or a foreigner; but, outside the Queen's dominions, although a subject would be served with a writ, a foreigner would only be served with a notice of a writ, in order to avoid an affront to the country in which he is. The bad drafting of the rule might give rise to the question whether a foreigner in Scotland ought not to be served with a notice, instead of a writ; but the present case allays any doubts on that subject. A foreigner in Scotland will be served with the writ in the same way as a Scotchman. With regard to the form of the affidavit, it is now held by the Court of Appeal that matters immaterial to the application need not be inserted, although Rule 3 requires their insertion. In fact, the terms of Rule 3 requiring a statement of the nationality of the defendant are not imperative in the case of a foreigner within the Queen's dominions or a subject abroad. With regard to the more general question whether the defendant on appearing may move on affidavits to rescind the order allowing service abroad, the defendant seems to have been too diffident. The Great Australian Mining Company v. Martin, on examination, will be found not to decide that an affidavit by the defendant is not admissible. Lord Justice Baggallay, indeed, seems to have been of opinion that the plaintiff in his affidavit was not bound by the words of the rule—"the grounds upon which the application is made"—to depose to facts showing a cause of action within the jurisdiction; but he was overruled by Lords Justices James and Bramwell. The defendant's affidavit was, in fact, admitted and considered, although the plaintiff's affidavit in reply was eventually held to show sufficient ground for the service of the writ. Moreover, in Foley v. Maillardet, 33 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 335, Lord Westbury decided that, according to the old Chancery practice, such an affidavit was admissible. The course open to the defendant who is served with a writ out of the jurisdiction, and who contends that no cause of action arose within the jurisdiction, is to appear and apply to rescind the order for service. The case refers to a conditional appearance; but no such modified appearance is, we believe, to be found in the rules. Whether, in case of conflict between the affidavits of the plaintiff and the defendant, the judge will decide as best he can, is a question of some difficulty. At the time when The Great Australian Gold Mining Company v. Martin was decided, the judges seemed inclined to allow the action to proceed when the affidavits were conflicting. Already, however, a change in the view taken is apparent. The Master of the Rolls, in the case before us, says that "it is not the proper time to try the merits of the action; it is the proper time to try whether the action shall be heard in England." But Lord Justice Baggallay says that "the affidavit of the defendant distinctly shows that there was no jurisdiction to make the original order;" and Lord Justice Lush says that "the defendant has clearly shown that a cause of action, so far as he is concerned, did not occur within the jurisdiction." When a defendant is not so fortunate, and can only deny the plaintiff's allegations, it is not at all clear that the judges will try the preliminary question on affidavits, or how they can satisfactorily do so. Even if the plaintiff does not show a cause of action within the jurisdiction on his statement of claim, the defendant cannot demur, as was held in Preston v. Lamont, 45 Law J. Rep. Exch. 797. If, therefore, he cannot show, beyond contradiction, that no cause of action arose in England, he seems bound to wait until the trial, when even if it turns out that there was no such cause of action, and that he ought not to have been sued in England at all, he will find judgment go against him.

With regard to the question between the Courts on this side the Tweed and on the other, the Master of the Rolls has another confession to make. Rule 1a of Order XI was passed on the complaints made across the border that Scotchmen were unjustly sued in English Courts. But it only applies to actions of contract. The Master of the Rolls explains that the complaint was only made in reference to such actions; but there is no reason whatever in principle why the rule should be so confined. The general question whether Scotchmen ought to be liable to be served in Scotland with English writs is a question of reciprocity. At present, an Englishman having property in Scotland, however small, by a sort of process of foreign attachment is liable to be sued in the Scotch Courts. No writ need be served, and the Englishman perhaps hears nothing of the proceeding until he finds the judgment registered in England, and execution issued upon it. The Scotch law on the subject is based on the accident of the Englishman having property across the border, while the English law is based on a principle which is perfectly fair for both. The place where the cause of action arises is the only just test. If an Englishman goes to reside in Edinburgh and runs into debt, it is hard on his Scotch creditors if they are bound to sue in England, whither their debtor may have removed himself. Englishmen would not object to an Act of Parliament passed for England and Scotland, and applying the test of the place where the cause of action arose to the jurisdiction of the Courts of both countries. Provision might be made, at the same time, for trying the question, if disputed, by means of an issue, before further expense is incurred.—Law Journal.

CONSPIRACY.

The law of conspiracy has received its most recent definition in the judgment of Lord Justice Brett, in Reg. v. Aspinall (L. Rep. 2 Q. B. Div. 59)—viz., "An agreement to accomplish an end forbidden by law, though by means which would be harmless if used to accomplish an unforbidden end, is a criminal conspiracy. An agreement to accomplish, by means which are if done by themselves forbidden by law, an end which is harmless if accomplished by unforbidden means, is a criminal conspiracy. An agreement made with a fraudulent or wicked mind to do that which, if done, would give to the prosecutor a right of suit founded on fraud, or on violence exercised on or towards him, is a criminal conspiracy." Now it is not an offence to obtain by false pretences any chattel which is not the subject of larceny at common law; thus: A dog not being the subject of larceny at common law it was decided in Reg. v. Robinson (Bell C. C. 34) that an indictment charging the prisoner with obtaining two pointers, worth £5 each, by false pretences, could not be sustained, as a dog was not a chattel within the meaning of the Act.

A conspiracy to obtain a dog by false pretences is, however, undoubtedly an indictable offence, but a question arose at the Middlesex Sessions on Wednesday, the 15th ult., before Mr. Prentice, Q.C., whether it was a conspiracy which a court of quarter sessions had jurisdiction to try. By 5 & 6 Vict., c. 38, it is enacted that, after the passing of that Act, neither the justices of the peace acting in and for any county, riding, division, or liberty, nor the recorder of any borough, shall at any session of the peace or any adjournment thereof, try any person or persons for any treason, murder, or capital felony, &c., or any unlawful combinations or conspiracies, except conspiracies and combinations to commit any offence which such justices or recorder respectively have or has jurisdiction to try when committed by one person. It was argued that the jurisdiction of quarter sessions was limited to indictable offences, and that it would be their duty to quash any indictment presented by a grand jury which disclosed upon the face of it no offence, or an offence punishable only on summary conviction, and that, as it was conceded that to obtain a dog by false pretences was not an indictable offence, the court would have no jurisdiction to try such an offence, and that it followed by the expressed words of the statute that they were precluded from trying a conspiracy to commit that offence. On the other hand, it was contended that, though it was quite true the court would quash a count in an indictment alleging an obtaining of a dog by false pretences, they would do so not by reason of any want of jurisdiction, but because it disclosed no offence in law, and that it was therefore an apparent fallacy to argue they had no jurisdiction to try the conspiracy. Mr. Prentice said he entertained great doubt on the point, and that he should avail himself of the provisions of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 36, s. 16, and remit the case to the Central Criminal Court.

In the same case counsel moved to quash two other counts on the ground that they were too general, simply alleging a conspiracy "to cheat and defraud" the prosecutor, and to "injure and prejudice" him, without going on to allege the object of the conspiracy. Now counts such as these, though good after verdict, are, in our opinion, clearly bad, if the objection be taken before plea pleaded. The rule with regard to the effect to be given to pleadings after verdict is thus stated in Heyman v. Reg. (L. Rep. 8 Q. B. 102): "Where an averment is imperfectly stated, and the verdict on an issue involving that averment is found, if it appears to the court after verdict that the verdict could not have been found on this issue without proof of this averment, then, after verdict, the defective averment, which might have been had on demurrer, is cured by the verdict." The rule is not applicable to the case of the total omission of an essential averment, and if there be such a total omission the verdict is no cure.

Now a count in an indictment for conspiracy which merely avers that the defendants conspired to "cheat" the prosecutor of his goods or moneys, or "by divers false pretences conspired to cheat and defraud" him of his goods or moneys is certainly good, but the object of the conspiracy must be generally stated. The leading case is Reg. v. Gill (2 B. & Ald. 204), in which an indictment was sustained which merely charged the defendants with conspiracy "by divers false pretences and subtle means and devices to obtain and to acquire to themselves of and from A. B. and C. D. divers large sums of money, of the respective moneys of the said A. B. and C. D., and to cheat and defraud them respectively thereof." It seemed at first as if the court desired to distinguish between cases where the object of the conspiracy was an offence per se indictable, and a conspiracy to commit an Act not indictable, and to lay down the rule that in the former case the means need not be set out, but in the latter class of cases they must be: (see Reg. v. Biers, 1 Ad. & El. 327). In Reg. v. King (7 Ad. & El. 721) the principle that it is unnecessary to set out the means by which the conspiracy was to be carried out was broadly affirmed to be good by several judges. Mr. Justice Holroyd said, "The conspiracy is the offence, and it is quite sufficient to state only the act of conspiring and the object of the conspiracy in the indictment."

In the year 1848 an indictment was sustained in the Exchequer Chamber (Reg. v. Sydsorf, 11 Q. B. 245) which merely averred that the defendants "unlawfully, fraudulently, and deceitfully did conspire, combine, confederate, and agree together to cheat and defraud A. B. of his goods and chattels." Chief Justice Wilde said: "The case of Reg. v. Biers has been relied upon as supporting the objection, and as overruling Reg. v. Gill, from which we think the present case is not distinguishable. But upon referring to the judgment in Reg. v. Biers, there appears strong reason to doubt whether it did not go wholly on the one objection to the special counts. Neither Reg. v. Gill, nor any other authority at all bearing on the point was referred to in the judgment; and it appears distinctly from the recent case of Reg. v. Gompertz (9 Ad. & El. 824) that Reg. v. Biers has never been considered by the Court of Queen's Bench as overruling Reg. v. Gill. We are therefore of opinion that this count is good."

In Reg. v. Aspinall the principle of criminal pleading which we have endeavoured to explain was again formally decided to be the true principle, and the decision in Reg. v. Gill affirmed, the case coming before the Queen's Bench on a writ of error.—Law Times.

THE WORK OF THE LAND COMMISSION.

A Parliamentary return of one page shows that up to the 24th of February 72,408 applications had been made to the Land Court to fix fair rent, and 2,180 agreements to fix fair rents. The total number of judicial rents fixed and agreed upon was 5,336. The applications to have leases declared void amounted to 1,424, but only 33 have been declared void, while 188 applications have been dismissed, and 219 withdrawn or compromised. 704 appeals with respect to fair rent have been lodged, and 56 appeals disposed of, the rest having been reserved to await the decision of the Appeal Court in the case of Adams v. Dunseath, 16 Ir. L. T. Rep. 16.

DEATH SENTENCES AND EXECUTIONS.

A Parliamentary return, issued on 25th ult., shows that in the 20 years previous to and including 1880, 512 persons were sentenced to death in England and Wales, of whom 279 were executed, and 194 sent into penal servitude for life.

NOTES OF CASES.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

(Before FLANAGAN, J.)

CHRISTIE v. FARR and CORKIN.

Feb. 13, 1882.—Vendor and Purchaser—Notice of prior charge—Letter stating prior charge “useless”—Registration—Priority.

In this case it appeared that, in Oct., 1867, Hiram Farr, became tenant of the premises in question, consisting of a mill at Cramlin, in the county Antrim, under Mr. Pakenham, by agreement for a lease for twenty years. On the 8th of March, 1876, he deposited that agreement with the plaintiff to secure him against loss on a guarantee of £500, on which £250 remains still due. At the time of this deposit a memorandum was given, but was never registered. On 13th April, 1881, Mr. Farr agreed to sell the mill to Mr. Corkin for £165, and that agreement was registered on 23rd June, 1881. The County Court judge had made a decree declaring the mill liable on Christie's equitable mortgage. From this decree Corkin appealed, alleging that he was a purchaser for value without notice.

*Campion, Q.C., and W. F. Kane, for the appellant.
Jackson, Q.C., and W. Long, contra.*

Judgment reserved.

FLANAGAN, J., in delivering judgment, said that the law on the question was that, where there was express notice to a purchaser, he was not entitled to priority by registration. The notice, no doubt must be clear and precise, and brought home to the party by indisputable evidence. The question in the present case was whether the evidence sustained the conclusion of the County Court judge, and he (Judge Flanagan) had no hesitation in affirming the decree. Mr. Corkin's own evidence was that “he was told there was a letter, but that it was useless.” The case had been ably argued by Mr. Kane, who argued that the qualifying words, namely, “that the letter was useless” took away the effect of the notice, but his lordship held that the notice was sufficient, and affirmed the decree.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

(Before MAY, C.J., FITZGERALD and BARRY, J.J.)

EARL OF RANFURLY v. DICKSON.

Feb. 21, 1882.—Practice—Transfer of action—Action to recover land on title—Counter-claim for specific performance of lease—Jud. Act, ss. 35, 36, 37, 38—O. L., r. 3.

Motion, on behalf of the defendant, to transfer the action to the Chancery Division. The action was one of ejectment, to recover possession of a plot of ground and houses in Dunganon, and was founded on a notice to quit, which had been served previous to the 1st May last, the tenancy having expired on the 1st November, 1881, as the plaintiff alleged. The defendant alleged that he held the lands and premises under an agreement for a lease for twenty-one years from November, 1867, which would only expire on the 1st November, 1888; and he had delivered a statement of defence, and counter-claim, accordingly, by the latter claiming specific performance of the agreement.

Cuming, in support of the motion, submitted that the questions involved were more suitable for decision in the Chancery Division—where the terms of the lease could be settled—than at common law.

Holmes, Q.C., contra.—It is alleged that the agreement for the lease was made by Mr. Dickson with the agent of Lord Ranfurly, but the agent could not make an agreement for a lease on his behalf, as the present Lord Ranfurly was at the time a minor.

[MAY, C.J.—The issue is whether the agent had power to enter into an agreement for a lease on behalf of Lord Ranfurly, who was at the time a minor.] That is substantially the question.

[FITZGERALD, J.—I think we could try that here. MAY, C.J.—At the time the agreement was alleged to have been made in 1867 the brother of the present earl held the title?]

Yes, and the present earl was then a boy at Eton, at the time the alleged agreement was made. The effect of granting the application, and probably the object in making it, would be to deprive Lord Ranfurly of a trial within a reasonable time; for if the case were sent into the Court of Chancery, it would probably not be decided for twelve months. The judges of this Division are in the habit of having infinitely more complex questions decided before juries every day in the week. If Mr. Dickson was anxious to go into the Court of Chancery, he had six months' notice that it was the intention of Lord Ranfurly to eject him. However, he took no step, and, accordingly, on the 18th November, after the notice to quit expired, the ejectment was served. There was no promise on the part of the present Earl of Ranfurly to grant a lease, for he was then only sixteen years of age, and Mr. Bowen was not acting as agent at the time for Lord Ranfurly at all, but simply for the testamentary guardians.

[MAY, C.J.—Who were the parties to this alleged agreement?]

Colonel the Hon. William S. Knox and Mr. Henry Alexander, the testamentary guardians; but the agreement they were parties to was that the defendant should hold these premises in Dunganon up to the 1st day of November following the date at which the present earl should attain age. There was no absolute agreement for a lease for 21 years, and it was not proved that any other agreement was made. The question involved is simply a question of fact to be decided by a jury, and the plaintiff, if it be not sent into the Court of Chancery, would have a speedy trial.

[MAY, C.J.—The testamentary guardians would have no power to grant a lease beyond the expiration of the minority of the present earl.]

And that is substantially the question to be tried. No doubt the document contained a paragraph to the effect that the grantors (the guardians) would then advise Lord Ranfurly to give a lease for a term of 20 years, but that had not been done; and Mr. Dickson, treated like a tenant from year to year, had been served with the necessary legal process to determine his tenancy. The question in the case is thus a very simple one and would most fitly be tried by jury.

Cuming, in reply.—The question is not raised directly whether Colonel the Hon. W. S. Knox and Henry Alexander, the testamentary guardians of Lord Ranfurly, had power to enter into the agreement or not; but the question is, whether it was not the Earl of Ranfurly himself who entered into the agreement. Mr. Dickson had expended large sums in improving and repairing the property on the faith of the agreement for a lease, and had paid the rent at the amount fixed on the faith of an agreement for a lease, and he alleged that agreement was recognised by the then Earl of Ranfurly and the present earl. It is a question for a court of equity whether there was power on the part of the testamentary guardians of Lord Ranfurly to make an agreement for a lease, and whether that power had been ratified and confirmed from 1867 up to the present date by the then Earl of Ranfurly and the present earl. The landlord had in his possession the original agreement and the duplicates until the other day; and it was not until the present year, after recent events, that notice to quit was served on the defendant.

MAY, C.J.—We are unanimously of opinion that we should not make any order transferring the case to the Chancery Division, as it is simply a matter of fact that is to be tried. The agreement entered into by the testamentary guardians with the defendant was an agreement that he should remain in possession until the present Earl of Ranfurly attained his majority, and a promise that they would recommend Lord Ranfurly to give a lease; but it did not appear that Lord Ranfurly ever did anything of the kind. The defendant repaired the premises, and expended money on them; but he did so under an agreement which gave him no absolute interest after the termination of the minority of Lord Ranfurly. There is nothing in the case necessitating its being sent to a court of equity. We must, therefore, refuse the motion—costs of both parties to be costs in the cause.

[Cf. Diver v. Black, 12 Ir. L. T. 183, 309.—E. N. B., Ed.]

EXCHEQUER DIVISION.
(Before PALLER, C.B.)
QUALLEY v. DWYER.

Jan. 9, 1882.—Practice—Summary Procedure in Bills of Exchange Act—Action not brought within six months—Amendment of writ of summons—Promissory Note, what constitutes.

Motion, on behalf of the defendant, to set aside the writ of summons in this action as irregular and void, on the ground that it was brought under the Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act, and that the document on which the action was brought was not a bill of exchange, nor had the action been brought within the period of six months required by the Act. The document, dated Ennistymon, 23rd April, 1881, was as follows: "On demand I promise to pay Mary Gallagher or her order the sum of £75 sterling on her giving up possession of the room which she now occupies."

J. Roche, in support of the motion, submitted that the document did not constitute a promissory note at all within the meaning of the Act of Parliament; and also objected that the document being payable on demand, the six months' time allowed by the Act must be taken to commence from its date, 23rd April, 1881, and that therefore the action was late.

O'Hea, contra, conceded that the second point was fatal, but asked for leave to amend the writ.

PALLER, C.B., made an order giving liberty to the plaintiffs to amend the writ by striking out the notice under 24 & 25 Vic., cap. 43, or otherwise as they might be advised—service of the amended writ upon the defendant's attorney to be good service upon the defendant, and plaintiffs to pay the costs of the motion.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.
(Before MILLER, J.)

In re MARTIN.

Jan. 10, 1882.—Land Law Act, 1881, s. 1 (14)—Rule 87—Sale of bankrupt's interest in tenancy—Leave to apply to Land Commission—Practice.

The bankrupt had held a farm near the town of Kilkeel, county Down; and after he had been examined in reference to his assets,

Carton, Q.C., on behalf of the assignees, asked for liberty to apply to the Land Commission Court to sell the tenant-right interest, as that was now necessary under the Land Law Act, 1881, s. 1 (14), and Rule 87, which provided that, where the sale of the tenant's interest was to take place under the assignees in bankruptcy, notice should be given to the landlord of the intended sale, and that then application should be made to the Land Commission Court for liberty to sell according to the provisions of the Land Law Act, in order to have the value ascertained.

[MILLER, J.—Then the Land Commission Court is the court to ascertain the value of the farm?]

That is so, and the landlord is entitled, in the first instance, under the Act to get the option of buying or selling.

Mr. Scallan, solicitor, on behalf of the bankrupt.

MILLER, J., gave the necessary permission.

ADMISSION OF A SOLICITOR.

Mr. Charles Roulston, B.A., T.C.D., eldest son of Mr. Daniel Roulston, of Derry, has been admitted a solicitor of the Court of Judicature. Mr. Roulston, who took a high place at the recent examination of Solicitors' Apprentices, and whose career as a student in Trinity College, Dublin, was most creditable, was apprenticed to Mr. Forrest Reid, Sessional Crown Solicitor for Londonderry.

REVIEWS.

A List of Judicial Rents, with Summary, Tables, and Index. Compiled by CHARLES EASON, Junr. Dublin: W. H. Smith & Son.

In the absence of any defined general principles expressed by the Land Sub-Commissions, on the subject of what exact criterions should be taken into consideration in fixing judicial rents, it has been rendered rather more difficult than it might have been for the parties to effect settlements out of court on any common and recognised basis. Something more assured than a mere rough guess, however, as to what would probably be the result of insisting on a judicial determination in particular cases, may be arrived at by computing general averages, and seeing what as a rule has been the ratio of the rents already fixed by the Commissioners. In this point of view it seems to us that the tabulated returns now compiled by Mr. Charles Eason, jun., ought to prove essentially serviceable, and may tend to lead to a larger number of arrangements out of court; while, apart from this practical object, those returns undoubtedly possess extreme interest as showing the actual effect of the administration of the Land Law Act. If at all inaccurate, it need hardly be said they would be worse than useless. And in noticing the Table of Judicial Rents published in Eason's Almanac (see ante, p. 51), it happens that we detected some errors therein in reference to the three holdings which were the subject of decision in Dunne v. Clarke and Birmingham v. Clarke (15 Ir. L. T. Rep. 123), as to which Mr. Eason's statement, as well as the newspapers, differed from our report. Mr. Eason has now, however, revised his figures by the Official Return, and it is gratifying to observe that the result in this instance is to establish the entire accuracy of our report. As now published, Mr. Eason's tabulated List of the Judicial Rents fixed by the Sub-Commissions, having been corrected by comparison with the Official Return, is entirely reliable; and it only remains to say that the manner in which he has arranged and summarised his figures not only bespeaks the most intelligent supervision on his part, but cannot fail to conduce to their general utility. Mr. Eason has exhibited a creditable spirit of enterprise, and his classified records—under date and place, with name of landlord and tenant, area, valuation, former rent, and judicial rent—constitute a work of substantial and permanent value.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

The following gentlemen have been appointed Commissioners for taking Oaths:—Messrs. Chas. Fitzgerald, solicitor, Clonmel; Wm. F. St. Leger, solicitor, Fermoy; James Harvey, solicitor and barrister, Invercargill, New Zealand; William Mitchell, petty sessions clerk, Castle Dawson, near Derry; John Lowry, petty sessions clerk, Moville, Donegal; Patrick J. Sheehan, Mallow, County Cork; Joseph Charles Higgins, seed merchant, Clonmel; John R. Toomey, Arklow; Edward D. Elmes, chemist, Carrickmacross.

LIST OF SHERIFFS FOR 1882.

Counties	High Sheriffs	Sub-sheriffs	Returning Officers
ANTRIM	Anthony Trall, LL.D., Ballylough, Bushmills	Henry Haigh Bottomley, Belfast	William M. Moore, 8 Angelsea-street
ARMAGH	James Malcolm, Lurgan	William H. D. Moore, 1 College-st., Dublin, and Lurgan	William Hardy, 42 Mountjoy-square, South
CARLOW	Robert French Brewster, 26 Merrion-square, S., Dublin	Edward Leonard Jameson, Hermitage, Carlow	Charles N. Jameson, 182 Great Brunswick-street
CARRICKFERGUS TOWN	James J. Reid, The Barn, Carrickfergus	Robert Kelly, Junior, Donegal-street, Belfast	Henry T. Stewart, 33 Lower Ormond-quay
CAVAN	Captain W. M. Leslie, Corroneary House, Ballisboro'	John M. J. Townley, Clonerry, Cavan	Burton Booth, 38 Gardiner's-place
CLARE	H. H. Wilson Fitzgerald, Adelphi, Corofin	Charles Gabbett Mahon, Ennis	John Cullinan, 61 Blessington-street
CORK	Sir James L. Cotter, Bart., Sunny Hill, Mallow	John Gale, Panorama-terrace, Cork	Richard H. M. Orpen, 33 Angelsea-street
— City	Daniel Vincent O'Sullivan, 1 Adelaide-place, Cork	William Bryan Galloway, South Mall, Cork	Henry A. Coffey, 28 Westland-row
DONEGAL	William Hart, Kilberry	John Smyth M'Cay, Letterkeany	George C. Leil, 43 Dame-street
DOWS	Colonel Andrew Nugent, D.L., Portaferry	Hugh Cunningham Kelly, Ballymacarrett, Belfast	Henry T. Stewart, 33 Lower Ormond-quay
DROGHEDA TOWN	Alderman Thomas Connolly, Bull Ring, Drogheda	Frederick M'Cay, No. 6 Laurence-st., Drogheda	John T. Simpson, 25 Westmoreland-street
DUBLIN	Joseph Wilson, Westbury, Stillorgan	William Ormsby, 2 Morgan-place	William Ormsby, 2 Morgan-place
— City	E. D. Gray, M.P., Pembroke House, Up. Mount-st.	James Campbell, 8 Inns-quay	James Campbell, 8 Inns-quay
FERRMAGH	Thomas Teevan, Race View, Enniskillen	Luke Patrick Knight, Abbey Lodge, Maguire's Bridge	George Knight, 14 North Great George's-street
GALWAY	James Blake, Cregg Castle, Drumgriffin	John Redington, Prospect Hill, Galway	Samuel P. Redington, 32 Rutland-square
— Town	Algarnon H. Perese, Boxborough Loughrea	John Redington, Prospect Hill, Galway	Samuel P. Redington, 32 Rutland-square
KERRY	Falkner Colles Sandes, Tiernacree, Tarbert	William Harnett, Tralee	William Sterne, 19 Parliament-street
KILDARE	Thomas F. Cooke-Trench, Millecote, Naas	Henry A. Lee, 2 Inns-quay, Dublin	Henry A. Lee, 2 Inns-quay
KILKENNY	Chambre E. Ponsonby, Kilcooley Abbey, Thurles	Peter M'Dermott, Kilkenny	Purgoy Poe, 2 Clare-street
— City
KING'S COUNTY	Henry Vincent Jackson, Inane House, Roscrea	Robert Whelan, Tullamore	Andrew E. Johnston, 3 Palace-street
LEITRIM	Thomas Robert Palmer, Glasdrummon, Drunkkeerin	Arthur Harrison, Drumlummon, Carrick-on-Shannon	Arthur Ellis, 7 Great Denmark-street
LIMERICK	Robert De Ross Rose, Ardhuc House, Limerick	Frederick St. Clair Hobson, Limerick	William D'Alton, 11 Stephen's-green, North
— City	William Boyd, Westfield, Limerick	Charles Henry Fitt, George-street, Limerick	John Barry, 13 Lower Ormond-quay
LONDONDERRY	A. J. S. C. Chichester, Moyola Park, Castledawson	Thomas Chambers, Londonderry	William M. Lane, 31 College-green
LONGFORD	Edward More O'Ferrall, Lisard, Edgeworthstown	Charles Webb, Creavaghmore, Ballymahon	James Wilson, 2 Upper Gloucester-street
LOUTH	Arthur Macan, Drumcassel, Castleblinham,	John Cornwall Balfie, Dundalk	Burton Booth, 33 Gardiner's-place
MAYO	R. Rutledge-Fair, Cornfield, Hollymount, Co. Down	Thomas Fair Rutledge, Hollymount	Messrs. Whitney and Armstrong, 36 Dawson-street
MEATH	R. G. Dunville, Redburn, Hollywood, Co. Down	Joseph Lowry, Kells	John Thomas Hinds, 37 Westmoreland-street
MONAGHAN	Andrew M'Math, Thornford, Castleblaney	W. A. Swan, Monaghan	Messrs. Baskin and Brooks, 3 Upper Sackville-street
QUEEN'S COUNTY	Robert R. Reeves, Caperd, Rosenallis	William Davis Pattison, Urley, Portarlington	John Malcolmson, 30 Lower Baggot-street
ROSCOMMON	James Glancy, Enfield, Ballintubber, Castleroa	George James, Roscommon	W. J. M'Coy, 38 Lower Gardiner-street
SLIGO	Alexander Perceval, Temple House, Ballymote	William Alexander, Somerton, Ballymote	St. George C. W. Robinson, 16 Nassau-street
TIPPERARY	Sir John Craven Carden, Bart., Abbey, Templemore	Gerald Fitzgerald, Chommel	Thomas F. O'Connell, 28 Bachelor's-walk
TYRONE	George C. Lendrum, Magheracrossa, Ballinamallard	George A. Rogers, Omagh	Thomas C. Dickie, 13 Parliament-street
WATERFORD	Henry P. Charnley, Satterbridge, Cappelquin	John Thomas Hudson, Glenbeg	Shapland M. Tandy, 2 Beresford-place
— City	Abraham Stephens, Waterford	Patrick Francis Hanrahan, Waterford	Shapland M. Tandy, 2 Beresford-place
WESTMEREATH	Francis T. James Longworth, 21 Herbert-street, Dublin	John Irwin, Mullingar	Edmond Mooney, 16 Fleet-street
WEXFORD	George Frederick Brooke, Somerton, Castleknock	Thomas Wilkinson, Enniscorthy	Richard W. Elgee, 34 Dawson-street
WICKLOW	Charles W. Barton, Glendalough House, Annamoe	Frank W. Browne, 33 Upper Fitzwilliam-st., Dublin	Messrs. Lyle and Browne, 33 Upper Fitzwilliam-street

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Law of Compensation under the Lands Clauses, Railways Clauses Consolidation Acts, the Public Health Act, 1875, the Artisans and Labourers Dwellings Improvement Act, 1875, and other Acts; the Metropolis Local Management Act, &c. With a full collection of Forms and Precedents. By EYB LLOYD, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Fifth Edition. With additional Forms and Precedents. London: Stevens & Haynes, Law Publishers, Bell Yard, Temple Bar, 1882.

Self-Preparation for the Intermediate Examination as it at present exists on Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England, containing a complete Course of Study, with Statutes, Questions, and advice as to portions of the work which may be omitted, and of portions to which special attention should be given; also the whole of the Questions and Answers at the Nine Intermediate Examinations which have at present been held on Stephen's Commentaries. Intended for the use of all Articled Clerks who have not yet passed the Intermediate Examination. By JOHN INDERMAUR, Solicitor (First Prize-man, Michaelmas Term, 1872), &c. Second Edition. London: Stevens & Haynes, Law Publishers, Bell Yard, Temple Bar. 1882.

LAW STUDENT'S JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

EASTER SITTINGS, 1882.

NOTICE.

The PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION of Candidates for Apprenticeship will be held at the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin, on Monday and Tuesday, the 3rd and 4th days of April, 1882, at Eleven o'clock.

N.B.—All Papers to be lodged on or before Friday, 17th March, 1882.

The FINAL EXAMINATION of Candidates seeking admission as Solicitors will be held at the same place, on Wednesday and Thursday, the 5th and 6th days of April, 1882, at the same hour.

By Order of the Council,

JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin.

N.B.—The decision of the Court of Examiners will be announced on Wednesday, the 26th of April, 1882, at Three o'clock, p.m.

Candidates residing in the country need not remain in town to hear decision, but can learn same from the Dublin Morning Papers of the day following the announcement.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

TRINITY SITTINGS, 1882.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

NOTICE.

Candidates wishing to present themselves at the above Examination must lodge their papers, &c., on or before the first day of Easter Sittings, 1882.

By Order,

JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin,
3rd February, 1882.

THE CRIMINAL CODE BILL.—The Times understands that only the first part of this bill will be proceeded with during the present session.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—A. Gara, allocat.—W. M'Kinley, do.—C. Burke, do.

IN COURT.—M. A. Bredin, make order absolute.—Assignees Millar, from 7th.—D. Bingham, from 8th.—T. T. M'Donogh, do.—County Court Appeal, Vint v. Miscamble.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. Trueman, rental.—C. G. Martin, do.—P. Roe, to take account.

TUESDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—J. Russell, to confirm sale.
IN COURT.—M. Quane, final schedule.—H. Bell, do.—J. E. O'Sullivan, do.—R. F. Rynd, from 27th Feb.—H. J. Blake, from 7th March.—Trustees Corbet, do.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

H. Leader, rental.—A. J. Philips, directions.—G. S. Roper, rental.

WEDNESDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—J. S. D. Shanks, to confirm sale.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).
S. S. Hamilton, rental.—J. Young, do.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).
J. Eyre, rental.—Executor J. Henderson, for deeds.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Boyd, John, of Lisnacloskey, in the county of Antrim, farmer. February 21; Tuesday, March 21, and Tuesday, April 4. Henry C. Neilson, solr.

Hamilton, Hugh, of Tummery, in the county of Tyrone, farmer. February 21; Tuesday, March 21, and Tuesday, April 4. John L. and W. Scallan, solrs.

Murray, Eleanor, of Ballybay, in the county of Monaghan, spinster. February 17; Tuesday, March 21, and Tuesday, April 4. E. H. De Moleyns, solr.

M'Wade, John, of Green-street, in the city of Dublin, merchant, trading as "M'Wade and Co." February 17; Friday, March 17, and Friday, March 31. Richard Davoren, solr.

M'Williams, Robert, of English-street, Armagh, in the county of Armagh, baker. February 21; Friday, March 17, and Friday, March 31. Thomas Gerrard, solr.

Wynne, John, of Scotstown, in the county of Monaghan, draper, grocer, and leather merchant. February 21; Friday, March 17, and Friday, March 31. Henry C. Neilson, solr.

THE RAILWAY COMMISSION.—The Law Journal observes that the appointment of Mr. Walter Macnamara as Registrar of the Railway Commission is satisfactory. As reporter of the cases decided by the commissioners, and as their deputy-registrar, he has had ample experience of the work which he will have to do; and, in the son of Mr. Henry Macnamara, the first lawyer-commissioner, the traditions of the tribunal are maintained.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	MARCH
	Sat. 4	Mon. 6	Tues. 7	Wed. 8	Thur. 9	Fri. 10
Government.
3 p c Consols ..	—	99½	—	100½	100½	—
3 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
New 3 p c Stock ..	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1898 } Trustee at	—	104½	—	—	104½	104½
3½ p c Jan. 1891 } Bk. of Irel.	101	—	—	—	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	315½	314½	—	315	315½	315½
25 Eibernian Banking Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and County (Ld.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and W'minster, Ltd. 68½-9	—	—	—	69	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	59½	—	—
3½ Munster Bank (Limited) ..	—	7	—	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	32½	32½	32½	32½	32½	32½
25 Provincial Bank ..	53½	—	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	23	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Standard of B. S. A., Ltd. 57½	—	—	—	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	—	107	—	—	—	—
Mines.
4½ Berahaen (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
24 Wicklow Copper ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Com. Gas 15½	15½	—	—	—	—	—
8 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	6	—	—
C. Dub. Brewery Co. (Lim.) ..	—	—	5	—	—	—
10 Dublin Artisan Dwellings ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
17 Hudson's Bay ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
7½ Mircht's W'housing Co., Ltd. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	—	10½	10½	—
10 L'pl Un'ld Tram &amp; Bus'ld ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	—	—	40½	—
100 Dublin, Wicklow, &amp; W'ford ..	—	—	77	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	117½	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	—	110	—	110	—
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	—	85	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast &amp; N'hn Cos. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do. 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 D., W., &amp; W., 5 p c (1880) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do. do. (1884) ..	—	112	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. N'hn (Ireland) 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..	106	—	106	106	—	105½
100 Wat'rd. &amp; Cf'l Irel. 6 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Wat'rd. &amp; Limerick 4 p c ..	96	—	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; N'hn Cos. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	104	—	—
— Cork and Bandon, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. 4½ p c ..	—	110½	—	—	110½	—
— Dublin &amp; Meath 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. 4½ p c ..	—	—	105	—	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	105½	—	—	105½
— Do. 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. 4 p c ..	—	108½	108½	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n. 4 p c ..	—	106	—	—	—	106
— Do. 4½ p c ..	—	110½	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
— Alliance &amp; Coma' Gas, 4 p c ..	—	98	—	—	—	—
— Balinst Office Deb. 292 6s 3d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Cly Deb. of 292 6s 3d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	93	—	—
— Dub. &amp; Glas. S. P. Co. (1887) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dub. &amp; Kingstown 4 p c ..	—	—	103	—	—	—
— Dub. Port &amp; Docks, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	100	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—6 per cent., 30th January, 1882

Of Deposit—3 per cent., 30th January, 1882.

Name Days—March 18th and 29th, 1882.

Account Days—March 16th and 30th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—In all outward complaints a desperate effort should be made to at once remove these annoying infirmities, and of establishing a cure. The remarkable remedies discovered by Professor Holloway will satisfactorily accomplish this desirable result, without any of those dangers or drawbacks which attend the old method of treating ulcerative inflammations, scrofulous affections, and scorbatic annoyances. The most timid invalids may use both the Ointment and Pills with the utmost safety with certain success, provided a moderate attention be bestowed on their accompanying "Directions." Both the preparations soothe, heal, and purify. The one assists the other most materially in effecting cures and renewing strength by helping exhausted nature just when she needs such succour.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

BAYLY—March 6, at Marine Hotel, Bray, the wife of Lieutenant-Colonel E. Bayly, of a daughter.
 ORR—March 3, at Roslin, Terenure-road, the wife of John Mathews Orr, Esq., solicitor, of a son.
 PIGGOTT—February 27, the wife of F. T. Piggott, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a son, who only survived his birth for a short time.

MARRIAGES.

SCHOLEFIELD and BOLSTER—March 9, at St. Michael's, Limerick, by the Ven. Archdeacon Jacob, assisted by the Rev. L. Griffiths, Robert Scholefield, Esq., solicitor, of Belgrave-square, Dublin, to Margaret, daughter of Richard G. Bolster, Esq., The Mall, Tralee.

DEATHS.

GARRATT—March 5, at Wellington-road, after a long illness, Maud, the beloved wife of William Alexander Garratt, and daughter of the late James H. Fitzgerald, Esq., solicitor.
 JORDAN—March 8, at his residence, Mountjoy-square, Dublin, Edmund Jordan, Esq., barrister-at-law.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
 DENZILLE-STREET. 3-7

LEGAL POSTINGS:

In the HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE in IRELAND.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

SALE

Of well-secured FEE-FARM RENT issuing out of PREMISES in DAME-STREET, in the CITY OF DUBLIN.

On TUESDAY, the 18th day of APRIL, 1882.

In the Matter of the Estate of

CATHERINE M'GOWAN
 and MARY KELLY, otherwise M'GOWAN, and OWEN KELLY, the Husband of the said MARY KELLY, otherwise M'GOWAN, Owners and Petitioners.

TO BE SOLD BY PUBLIC AUCTION,

Before the Right Honourable Judge Ormsby,

At his Court,

Land Judges' Court, Inns-quay, Dublin,

On TUESDAY, the 18th day of APRIL, 1882,

At the hour of Twelve o'clock noon,

A Perpetual Yearly Fee-farm Rent of £180 issuing and payable out of the Premises known as Nos. 46 and 47 Dame-street, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and County of the City of Dublin, held in Fee-simple, free of rent. The Government Valuation of the Premises is £225 per annum.

Dated this 6th day of March, 1882.

IGNATIUS O'KEEFFE, for Examiner.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The Fee-farm Rent offered for Sale is issuing and payable out of the Premises known as Nos. 46 and 47 Dame-street, in the City of Dublin, in which the Crown Life Assurance Company carry on their Dublin business. It is well secured, and is one of the most desirable securities which can be brought under the notice of persons seeking a safe investment for capital, inasmuch as the punctual payment of the rent, which is due half-yearly, every 26th March and 29th September, may be calculated on with equal certainty to the dividends on the very best class of investments.

Private proposals will be received by the Solicitor having carriage of the proceedings up to the 6th day of April, 1882, and, if approved of, submitted to the Court without further notice.

For Rentals and further particulars application to be made at the Registrar's Office, Land Judges' Court, Inns-quay, Dublin; to

THOMAS DONNELLY, Esq., Solicitor, 27 Dame-street, Dublin; or to

SAMUEL P. REDINGTON, Solicitor having carriage of the Proceedings, 32 Rutland-square, Dublin. 44

RENTALS, &c.

SOLICITORS having the Carriage of Sales of Property in the Landed Estates Court, are respectfully informed that they can have their Printing executed correctly, and with the utmost despatch by

J. FALCONER, 53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

"They are the best Pens invented, and it is only justice to the patentees to record the fact."—Shrewsbury Journal.

"MACNIVEN & CAMERON'S PENS ARE THE BEST."—Public Opinion.

"1745 NEWSPAPERS RECOMMEND THEM."—See The Graphic.

Just out,
THE BIG 'J' PEN,
For Music and Broad
Writing.

THE WAVELEY PEN.
THE OWL PEN.

THE PICKWICK PEN.
THE NILE PEN.
THE HINDOO PEN.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3.
These Pens are strongly commended for use in Law Offices.

"They come as a boon and a blessing to men,
The Pickwick, the Owl, and the Waverley Pen."
"They are a treasure."—Standard.

SHIPPERS and DEALERS SUPPLIED AT SPECIAL RATES.

Patentees of Pens and Penholders:

MACNIVEN & CAMERON, 23 to 25, Blair-street, Edinburgh,
Pen Makers to Her Majesty's Government Offices (Estab. 1770).
"The world owes a debt of gratitude to the patentees for their excellent inventions."—Sun.

Beware of the party offering imitations of these Pens. 210

BILLIARD BALLS, CHALKS,

CUBES, and TIPS, and all other Billiard
Table requisites, at HENNIG BROS. Ivory Works, 11, High-street, London, W.C. Also the cheapest house in the trade for Ivory Hair-brushes, Mirrors, and all other Ivory Toilet articles and Ivory Goods in general. Old Balls adjusted or exchanged, and Tables re-covered. Price Lists, Cloth, and Cushion Rubber Samples Post Free.—Established 1862. 26

STOKES BROTHERS,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LONDON and LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN. 293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

LITERARY and General Sale Rooms, No. 8, D'Olier- street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.

J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees,
Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realizing the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Figgott, Judge Redcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.
Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.

D. W. CARROLL,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
Wishes to call attention to his large

STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
Comprising Bags, Purses, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-
randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges. 193

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW
WRITERS and SOLICITORS.
STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK for STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens; it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and is, consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each;
and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each. 581

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—S.
HISBY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

Printed and Published by the Proprietor, JOHN FALCONER, every Saturday, at 53, Upper Sackville-street, in the Parish of St. Thomas and City of Dublin.—Saturday, March 11, 1882.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

THE SIMPLEX PRINTER

Will take 50 or more Copies of any Writing or Drawing in Violet, Green, Blue-Black, or Red, in ten minutes, and, unlike the great number of "Graphs" now before the Public, it does not require washing or remelting, but when the desired number of copies have been taken the remaining ink will sink into the plate, leaving the surface clear and ready for another. It is clean in use, and, having a raised level surface, presents a great advantage for using roller and allowing a copy to be taken in the copying book.

Prices—8vo, 5s.; 4to, 2s.; cap. 11s.; folio, 16s.

GERRARD BROTHERS,
AGENTS FOR THE SIMPLEX PRINTER,
37, STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 188

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE,
Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection.

10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps.
21, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID,

Curls the straightest and most ungovernable Hair, 3s. 6d.,
sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE,

To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d. or Stamps. His
GREAT HAIR RESTOREE,

3s. 6d.; it changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles.
As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 3s. 6d.; his DEPLATORY for removing Hair, and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers. 7

ROBERT WHYTE,

Ladies' & Gentlemen's Boot & Shoe Manufacturer,

1, NORTH FREDERICK-STREET
(Rutland-square),

ESTABLISHED OVER HALF A CENTURY.

Boots made for Weak Ankles, Deformed Feet, and Surgical purposes of every description.

All Work executed on the Premises under my personal superintendance.

None but first-class Workmen employed in either Making or Repairing.

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE

PERMANENT

BUILDING SOCIETY,

53, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Eight Hundred and Fifty Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 3 per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.

Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached. The rates of interest will be 3½ per cent. when taken for one year, and 4 per cent.
for two or more years.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:

The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

534 ALFRED H. MEECEB, Secretary,
53, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10 TO £1,000 (IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days.
Two UPPERING RULES for success, in Explanatory
Book, sent free.
Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham
House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

LOAN.

WANTED—£20,000, at 4½ per cent., on the Security of Property of ample value in the County Antrim. Apply to—
W. J. BRETT, 43, Dame-street, Dublin. 39

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, MARCH 18, 1882.

No. 790

PRESUMPTIONS OF LIFE, DEATH, AND SURVIVORSHIP.—II.

"We have fortunately no rule founded on presumption derived from the lapse of any fixed period of time; and every case which I have ever seen shows how unwise it would be to attach any such weight merely to the lapse of a certain number of years without regard to the age and character of the party, and his condition in life, and the character of the country in which he was last resident." Yet, notwithstanding the satisfaction with the Scottish law thus expressed by the Lord Justice-Clerk Hope, in Fife v. Fife (17 D. 954), the unsympathetic Legislature had the temerity last year to pronounce, that great hardships had arisen from the want of any limitation to the presumption of life as regards persons who had been absent from Scotland or had disappeared for long periods of years, and that it was desirable to provide a limitation. It was accordingly provided, in effect, by 44 & 45 Vic., c. 47, that in the case of persons absent and unheard of for seven years, the presumption of life should be limited to that period, so far as to enable the Court to make an order for the disposal of the income of their heritable or movable estates; but title to the fee or capital of such movable estates requires the lapse of another seven years from the date of such order, which is increased to thirteen years as regards the heritable estates. Certainly, this seems to be a sufficiently temperate tampering with a presumption that your usual Scotchman lives to the age of a hundred. Quite cautious enough, at all events, are also the provisions of the Austrian Civil Code. Under Article 24, the cases in which an individual who has disappeared may be presumed dead, and in which, consequently, the representatives can obtain a "declaration of decease" from the tribunals called the Todeserklärung, are thus enumerated: (1) When a person, eighty years of age, has disappeared from his domicile for the space of ten years; (2) when a person, of any age, has disappeared for a period of thirty years; (3) when a person has received a severe wound in war, or was in a vessel since shipwrecked, or has been exposed to any other danger of death, since the happening of which three years have elapsed. The last category is rather wide in its scope. In one case (S. viii., No. 3, 847) it was held that, where a man afflicted with melancholy had declared that he would kill himself, in a tone and manner which left no doubt as to his intention, and had made preparations to carry his threat into execution, he should be considered as being exposed to the danger of death; so that, on his having disappeared during three years, he was treated as legally dead, and his wife obtained a certificate of his death in order to enable her to marry again. In the French Civil Law there exists nothing analogous to the Austrian declaration of decease; and the French declaration of absence, permitting parties interested to exercise the same rights as if the person were dead—only granted in cases of prolonged absence—does not confer on the wife of the absent party the right to re-marry. In the United Kingdom seven years' absence was the period fixed by the Statute of Bigamy (1 Jac. 1, c. 11, s. 2, and so 10 Car. 1, s. 2, c. 21, 24 & 25 Vic., c. 100), and five years is the period fixed in California. Seven years was the period fixed, also, by 19 Car. 2, c. 6 (Eng.), which was passed to remove or lessen the inconvenience arising from the difficulty of ascertaining and proving the death of cestui que vies in leases—an inconvenience which had become very great in the seventeenth century in consequence of the increased intercourse between distant countries. This was followed up by 6 Anne, c. 18, the provisions of which have never been adopted here (see 1 Gabbett, Dig. 473). But the statute of 7 Will. 3, c. 8 (Ir.), corresponds to the English enactment of 19 Car. 2, c. 6. In those days there was a presumption of the continuance of life until the contrary was shown, more distinct than that (if any, as to which the decisions have been already mentioned) which may now be at all recognised: Wilson v. Hodges, 2 East, 313; Doe v. Jesson, 6 ib. 80; Rowe v. Hasland, 1 W. Bl. 404. But, the effect of the statute law in question was that, in such cases, the presumption of life terminated on the expiry of seven years from the period when the person was last known to be living: Doe v. Jesson, ubi supra; Nesbitt v. M'Manus, 3 Ir. C. L. R. 600; the fact of his death being then presumed, but not the particular time of his death within the seven years: Nepean v. Doe, 2 Sm. L. C. 562.

The analogy derived from the statutes of bigamy, and concerning leases for life, was afterwards adopted and applied in other cases in which the duration of life came into question: 1 Greenl. Ev., s. 41, n.; M'Mahon v. M'Elroy, 1 R. 5 Eq. 1. And now the rule is general, that a person shown not to have been heard of for seven years by those (if any) who, if he had been alive, would naturally have heard of him, is presumed to be dead, unless the circumstances of the case are such as to account for his not being heard of without assuming his death: Nepean v. Doe, ubi supra; Hope-well v. De Pinna, 2 Camp. 113; M'Mahon v. M'Elroy, ubi supra; De Martana v. De Martana, 33 L. T. N. S. 685; Wentworth v. Wentworth, 71 Maine Rep.; Davie v. Briggs, 8 Central L. J. 55; but there is no presumption as to his having been either dead or alive at any particular period of time during the seven years: Nepean v. Doe, ubi supra; Watson v. King, 1 Stark. 121; Re Phene's Trusts, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 139; Re Lewes' Trusts, L. R. 6 Ch. 356, 11 Eq. 236; Re Green's Settlement, L. R. 1 Eq. 282; R. v. Lumley, L. R. 1 C. C. 196; Davie v. Briggs, ubi supra; see Gill v. Manly, 16 Ir. L. T. Rep. 57. A case depending on his having been dead or alive at any precise time in the period of seven years must be proved affirmatively: see same cases; Re Nichols, L. R. 2 P. & M. 461; Re Smith, 31 L. J. P. & M. 181; but see Re Walker, L. R. 7 Ch. 120; Re Westbrook, W. N. 1873, 167; and the question of time is one of fact for the jury: Nesbitt v. M'Manus, 3 Ir. C. L. R. 600; R. v. Wiltshire, 6 Q. B. D. 366; R. v. Lumley, ubi supra. The onus of proving his death at such particular time is cast on the person asserting it, or to whose title it is necessary to prove the exact date. "It is, however, often a doubtful question on whom the onus of proof is thus shifted," writes a recent author, who, after examining the then decisions on the point (and see R. v. Wiltshire, ubi supra), adds that "it is much to be desired that some rule, even a merely arbitrary one, should be settled on the subject:" Banning, Limitation of Actions, 104-5.

It has been said that the presumption of the law is better than that of man (Esprit des Loix, l. 29, c. 16); and we would go further than Mr. Banning, for we would rather approve of the introduction of a statutable enactment of some such description as we find in the Presumption of Life Limitation (Scotland) Act, 1881, section 8, providing that, for its purposes, in all cases where a person has left Scotland, or has disappeared, and where no presumption arises from the facts that he died at any definite date, he shall be presumed to have died on the day which will complete a period of seven years from the time of his last being heard of, at or after such leaving or disappearance. Taking the law as it stands, however, we shall next proceed to note some further points.

THE SALE OF POISONS.

In connexion with our recent paper (ante, p. 69), maintaining that the existing legislation regulating the sale of poisons is inadequate, the following passages from the evidence on Dr. Lamson's trial should be noted. On his re-examination by Mr. Poland, William Ralph Dodd, an assistant at Messrs. Allen and Hanbury's, wholesale and retail chemists, of Plough-court, Lombard-street, said:—"We do not enter in the register of poisons sales to medical men. Aconitia, with its preparations, is one of the poisons under the Poisons Act. If it is one of the public who buys aconitia or any such poison the purchaser must be introduced by some person we know. Then we have to enter in our register the date, name of purchaser, name and quantity of the poison sold, the purpose for which it is required, and then to take the signatures of the purchaser and the person introducing. If we are satisfied that the purchaser is a medical man, then we need not, by the statute, make the entries. We thus referred to the Directory to see whether there was such a medical man.

"Mr. JUSTICE HAWKINS.—Supposing I went in and having got hold of the 'Medical Directory' and taken a name—say Mr. Brown—would you serve me with two grains of aconitia?"

"Witness.—That would not be sufficient.

"What would be?—You would have to write your name in a formal manner.

"What then?—If I were satisfied that you were a medical man I would let you have it.

"Then, do I understand, that anyone of respectable appearance and well-dressed might apply and that without any means of satisfying yourself that he is not an impostor and not telling you what is untrue, you would supply him?"

"Witness.—The only test would be the style of writing which is a characteristic of medical men.

"Mr. JUSTICE HAWKINS.—That hardly seems satisfactory.

"Mr. Poland said the statute was the 31st and 32nd Vic., cap. 121, section 17, schedule A. The Amendment Act was 32nd and 33rd Vic., cap. 117, section 3. The sale to a duly qualified medical man was not dependent upon an introduction and need not be entered.

"Mr. JUSTICE HAWKINS.—It strikes me that anyone could go in and represent himself as a medical man if he had picked up sufficient knowledge to be able to write 'aconitia' in the technical way and be supplied with it without difficulty, and though the matter is not before us in this case, it may be that the law requires amendment in this particular."

But, how? Does not this matter supply an additional illustration that we were right in pronouncing, that no legislation of the kind "can be thoroughly effective so long as the responsibility for the legitimate sale of poisons is distributed among countless chemists and druggists; some one medical man for each district should alone be licensed to authorise sales, and in him the responsibility should be centralised; and through him perhaps even the delivery of the poison, purchased elsewhere, should be carried out." But, be this as it may, we cannot but agree with the Standard, that it is clear that the facilities for obtaining poisons enjoyed by anyone who can quote a name out of the "Medical Directory" ought to be abridged. Palmer, Pritchard, and Smethurst were also medical men. Unquestionably, as we need hardly point out, the detection and conviction of the most accomplished poisoner of the age is in no degree due to the operation of any legislative enactment regulating the sale of poisons; and everyone must agree with the presentment of the jury—concurrent in by Mr. Justice Hawkins—that upon such sales greater restrictions should be imposed by the Legislature.

THE REFORM OF LEGAL PROCEDURE.—II.

(Continued from page 78, ante.)

The framers of the Judicature Acts undertook—whether wisely or not it is too late to discuss—to provide one uniform system of pleading and procedure for all the superior courts of justice consolidated by the Acts into one Supreme Court. They had before them, as we have seen, two distinct systems which, though time and neighbourhood had produced a certain amount of mutual approach and softened down their sharpest points of opposition, still retained their own peculiar characters. They had likewise to deal with men imbued with one or other of those systems, and unwilling to give up more of their familiar principles and practice than the letter of reforming legislation positively compelled them to do. Controversies were not wanting at the time, which it is now needless to revive. A majority of the Chancery Bar were persuaded that the very existence of equity jurisprudence was in danger—a fear which has in no way been realised. Equity jurisprudence has been gently constrained to speak less in artificial metaphors and more in the language of common understanding, and is all the better for it. Hardly any one foresaw what would happen in the Common Law Divisions, and those who did were not listened to. The outcome was a compromise between equity and common law practice, in which equity got considerably the larger share. It is needless to enter into the details of the scheme which has been at work since the morrow of All Souls in 1875, and is by this time familiar to the present generation of lawyers. Let it suffice to call to mind the more salient features. The pleadings were assimilated, or intended so to be, to a shortened and further simplified Chancery pattern, but the Chancery practice of combining the defendant's pleading with a sworn answer to interrogatories was not adopted. Powers of interrogation and discovery as wide as those previously existing in Chancery were given, but subject to leave being obtained. This apparently wholesome provision is, perhaps, of all the reforms of the Judicature Acts that which has had the most surprising results. The common law method of taking evidence was justly preferred, though evidence by affidavit was not excluded; and this latter is still used, not only in interlocutory proceedings, where even at common law it has long been admitted, but at all stages of that large and important class of Chancery suits which are purely administrative, or where the facts in dispute are of slight importance as compared with the legal questions arising on facts or documents which are admitted. As to the mode of trial, the provisions of the Judicature Act, and the Rules of Court were found obscure; but, after much confusion and one or two conflicting decisions, things went on in substance as they had done before. Last, and by no means least, an elaborate system of appeals was instituted.

The scheme of the Judicature Act, as applied to the Common Law Divisions, offered to the suitors and their advisers two chief points of novelty—great increase of powers of discovery and great multiplication of opportunities for appeal. This new machinery was derived from a procedure that in its origin was of an inquisitorial nature and under the control of the Court; and, though that control had lost most of its reality, the procedure had on its native ground been fixed in a well-established routine, and if somewhat cumbersome and costly, was not on the whole felt as vexatious. Now the machinery was put in full working order into hands accustomed to work a purely contentious procedure. The result was that for every avenue of technical dispute that was closed, one or more were opened; and in the field thus opened contentions were vastly multiplied. In order to put some check on eager and vexatious litigants, it had been thoughtfully provided that the new powers of discovery should be exercised only by leave of the Court. As it turned out, no more effectual encouragement to long and wasteful litigation could have been given. Plaintiffs, or rather their solicitors, were anxious to make the best use of the weapons for the first time at their disposal. Defendants were as anxious to keep their effect within bounds. The whole subject being strange to practitioners of the common law, disputes naturally arose. In the regular course they came before a Master in Chambers; and if they had gone no further, it might have been well enough. But from the Master there was an appeal to the Judge at Chambers, often made necessary less by the inherent difficulties of the case than by the imperfect materials for decision brought in the first instance before the Master. From the Judge, again, there was an appeal to the Divisional Court, from that, again, to the Court of Appeal, and, finally, from the Court of Appeal to the House of Lords. It is only fair to remember that this last step was excluded by the Judicature Act in its original form. Three appeals, however, are a heavy enough burden for points of practice to carry. Thus, the anxiety of reformers to prepare cases in the best possible manner for a full and fair trial, or even to bring about at an early stage disclosures which would make trial needless, produced an abundant crop of litigation and that of the most vexatious and useless kind; upon interlocutory applications. Probably this would have happened even if all suitors conducted their causes in good faith. Possibly things would have been different if counsel and solicitors had striven to work the Acts and Rules with a single eye to saving the time and the purses of their clients. But lawyers are men, and cannot be expected to work against their own apparent interest. And although many lawyers in both branches of the profession are men of honour above the breath of suspicion, and most are honourable, this is not the case with all. There is notoriously a sort of solicitors who live and thrive by taking up cases which better men will have nothing to do with. Their delight is in sharp practice and in running up costs, against the adversary if practicable, but otherwise against their own client. And we fear there are counsel who do not scruple to lend themselves to these objects. Every change in the practice of the courts is watched by such people for their own purposes. A few of them can do much mischief, and on this occasion their activity has not been wanting. When two practitioners of this class meet as adversaries they play into each other's hands. Whichever of them is defeated is slow to dispute the costs charged against him by the victor. They come out of his client's pocket, not his own, and the next time, besides, it may be himself who wants to make costs in the same fashion. Thus the game is carried on at the client's expense, and he innocently wonders why the reign of abundant and cheap justice which reformers promised him persists in appearing so remarkably far off. The officers of the Court have no effectual power to stop the abuse of its process except in the most flagrant cases. On the whole, the expense of proceedings in the Common Law Divisions (now the Queen's Bench Division) has decidedly increased under the Judicature Acts.

We now come to the report of the Committee appointed last year. Dealing first with the question of pleadings, they consider the proposal of making some kind of concise pleading a part of the very first step taken in an action. This they reject, rightly as we think. For a great majority of the actions that are brought are undefended or practically so. The High Court of Justice is, as regards these cases, nothing but a public office for collecting debts under the pressure of public authority. The simplest machinery that answers the purpose is the best; and as the writ of summons in its present form is found effectual, it would be a mistake, as the Committee point out, to increase its cost by adding more matter to it. The truth is that in these cases, and in a good many others, the defendant knows perfectly well what the plaintiff's claim is, and the expense of any fuller statement would be mere waste. We start, then, with the writ, and its indorsement showing the nature of the claim, just as they stand at present. What is to be done about further pleadings? The Committee think that in a majority even of disputed actions they are not required for ascertaining the question between the parties. They propose that within a certain time the defendant shall give notice of any special defence he means to raise. This notice, we apprehend, would not go into the facts, but only specify the nature of the defence. After this, "the plaintiff shall give notice of any special matter on which he intends to rely." Thus we should have a rudimentary system of pleading, limited to the indication, with the least possible technicality, of the general nature of the case intended to be made at the trial. Beyond this the Committee think no pleading should be allowed, unless by order. Their intention is in the right line, but we do not feel sure that their method is a safe one. To allow pleadings by leave of the Court is, in the first place, to make a new occasion for interlocutory applications. And we have seen for the last half-dozen years what interlocutory applications are capable of. In fact, they are the spring and strength of the present distress. There would be danger on either hand in this conditional allowance of pleadings. Leave to plead might come to be a matter of course whenever the action was seriously defended. In that case we should be where we are now, with the additional expense of an order of the Court. On the other hand, applications to deliver pleadings might be stubbornly resisted. In that case the discussion whether there should be pleadings or not might cost as much as the pleadings themselves; and what is more, it would be a new demand on the time of Judges and Masters. Doing things by leave of the Court looks very well at first sight; but it has an ill sound after the recent experience of the Common Law Divisions. At least two other ways of dealing with this question occur to us. The present practice is that the plaintiff must deliver a statement of claim, unless it is dispensed with by the defendant. It would be simple to reverse this rule, and say that a statement of claim should be delivered only if the defendant required it. Similarly, it might lie upon the plaintiff to require a statement of defence. But such a rule would be effective only with the provision that the party requiring a statement when in the opinion of the Court it was not necessary or useful for the determination of the case should have to pay the costs of it. Otherwise the requisition would tend to become a matter of form. And there is another way which would be simpler and better—namely, to abolish pleadings altogether. Pleadings are assertions either of facts relied upon, or of conclusions of law which the party founds upon facts he intends to prove, or partly of the one and partly of the other. The old common law system exhibited pure, or almost pure, conclusions of law. In the Chancery system facts prevail, but conclusions of law were often added. In the Scottish system the facts and the law of the case are pleaded separately. We must assume that for England the day of formal pleadings is over. Whatever pleading is now possible must be mainly a statement of fact. To what purpose should such a statement be made in that form? It must be made as being in the interest of one or both parties. One party may want information from the other; or he may think a connected account of his case advantageous to himself; or both may be agreed about the facts on which the question arises, and wish to lay them before the Court as admitted. As things now are, the parties may state a case for the opinion of the Court if they can agree upon it; and if one of them wants information from the other, he can get it by way of particulars and discovery. For neither of these purposes, then, does pleading seem to be needful. It may be said that pleadings are in the interest of both parties, inasmuch as they provide halting points in the action at which their advisers are in a manner compelled to take a survey of the field. Opportunities are thus made for compromise or arbitration which may prove of great value. These halting-places, however, seem to be fairly well given by the notice of defence and notice of special matter in reply which are proposed by the Committee as the regular steps in a contested suit. These notices might and ought to be so framed in all simple cases as to define the real issue between the parties, and to define it to the satisfaction of a plain man's understanding, a purpose for which the old pleadings were too artificial and the new statement of claim is too lax. There remains the case of a party wishing to tell his story for his own advantage. This he should certainly be allowed to do, though common law suitors till 1875 did pretty well without it. But, subject to one condition, we do not see why the statement should be called a pleading, or why the leave of the Court should be necessary. That condition is that the statement should be regarded as a luxury of litigation. We would let parties please themselves about delivering statements; but the cost of them should be borne, in any event, by the party making them, unless the Court certified that in the particular case they were necessary or materially useful. In this suggestion we were only borrowing the principle of the Committee's own excellent recommendation as to discovery, which we shall presently mention. A party's statement of his case should be treated as merely a memorandum. If it were useful only or chiefly to his own counsel, he should pay for it himself; if found useful by the Court, he should be allowed credit for it, but not too easily.

Next come the knotty questions of interlocutory applications and discovery. The Committee say "that much of the expense of litigation is now due to the power which the parties have of resorting to all the modes of procedure furnished by the Judicature Acts, without regard to the real requirements of the cases." Exactly so. We have constructed a machine for doing justice in varied and elaborate forms, and have forgotten that it is also a machine for making costs, and worked by those who are under the strongest temptation to regard it chiefly in that light. The Committee, therefore, were disposed "to recommend a change in procedure which should enable the Court, at an early stage of the litigation, to obtain control over the suit, and exercise a close supervision over the proceedings." In itself this general idea deserves nothing but approval. The difficulty in the way of working it out is one that can hardly be got rid of by any device of administrative skill. Judges and Masters cannot well exercise of their own motion, a paternal jurisdiction to control the proceedings and out down useless costs. This kind of jurisdiction has been tried long ago in the civilian procedure, and to some extent in Chancery; and we have seen that it degenerated into mere formality. Unless it can command superhuman zeal and diligence in its officers, the Court must be aided by the parties to do this kind of work thoroughly; and there is too much reason to fear that the parties, as represented by their solicitors, will seldom be strenuously minded to give this aid. Our belief is that whenever the public finds out the real state of things there will be a far more vehement demand for a reform of the legal profession than there ever has been for the reform of legal procedure. That time, however, is not yet. Meanwhile the difficulty is no reason against seeking the best remedy which under present conditions can be found.

The Committee propose to swallow up the present crowd of disjointed interlocutory applications in one general "summons for directions," which is to include questions of further particulars, venue, discovery, evidence, mode of trial or reference, "and any other matter or proceeding in the action previous to trial." Subsequent separate applications which might have been made on the general summons are to be discouraged by throwing the costs upon the party making them. It is contemplated, we presume, that the summons for directions should be a regular incident in every contested case; this it certainly would become. A large foresight on the part of the Judge or Master hearing it would seem to be required if he is to settle at one stroke the whole course of the proceedings down to trial. If this foresight failed in any particular there would be other supplementary applications, not without vexatious wrangles on the question whether they were necessary or not. It may be, however, that the proposed rule as to costs, if strongly worked, would be sufficient to keep this head of litigation within due bounds. And if the necessity or advisability of getting all interlocutory matters disposed of at once had the effect of making the settlement of a somewhat rougher kind than at present, we do not think it would be any great harm. Human justice and government are rough instruments at best, and beyond a certain point it is waste of labour and skill to polish them. Certainly our average standard of discrimination is finer than that of the Cornish juryman who, in a capital case, delivered his opinion to the foreman that "between the hanging of 'en and the not hanging of 'en there isn't a halfpenny odds." But it is quite possible to refine too much, and to make distinctions in law and procedure which look very well on paper, but, being in truth minuter than the inevitable margin of human error, turn out idle in practice. On the whole, we do not look with any confident faith on the "summons for directions," but as nothing could well be worse than the present confusion, it is at least worth trying. The proposal to assign each action and all interlocutory matters therein to a particular Master's list, from which the Masters themselves dissent, is a point of detail to be fully discussed only by and among experts. The apparent analogy to the long established practice before the Chief Clerks in Chancery is by no means conclusive. For the Chief Clerk is the officer of a particular Judge to whom the cause is attached through all its stages. He is not a separate officer of the Court giving his own decisions and liable to have them appealed from, but the delegate of the Judge exercising his powers under general instructions, and with liberty to refer to his principal at any time. In the Queen's Bench Division it would obviously be impossible to attach causes to particular Judges; and the partial imitation of Chancery practice recommended by the Committee would probably satisfy nobody.

On the point of discovery the Committee report that the powers of obtaining disclosure of documents and delivering interrogatories are often exercised oppressively. They are engines for harassing opponents and piling up needless expense. The Committee propose that discovery and interrogatories shall be allowed only within limits to be fixed by the Master—as a rule, we presume, on the hearing of the "summons for directions." And, what is still more to the purpose, the costs are to be allowed "where and where only such discovery or interrogatories shall appear to have been reasonably and usefully asked for." This is the Committee's master stroke, and goes to the root of the mischief. To a certain extent it is approved beforehand by experience. Some of the Masters have lately made a practice of reserving the costs of interlocutory applications for the final taxation—that is, they leave it to be determined in the light of a review of the whole proceedings in the action whether the particular application was proper. Another recommendation is made, and on similar principles, as to giving notice to admit specific facts, refusal to admit them being at the risk of costs, if it appears to the Court to have been improper. This if adopted, would further strengthen the argument for wholly doing away with pleadings.

With regard to the trial of causes, the Committee "recommend that, in the absence of directions to the contrary, the mode of trial shall be by a Judge without a jury." This proposal at first sight looks revolutionary. But a little consideration will show that the innovation is much less than it seems. Out of the whole number of actions commenced in the Queen's Bench Division those which now are tried out by a jury are in the proportion of 1 in 400, or  $\frac{1}{400}$  per cent. Those which come into Court at all are between 2 and 3 per cent., and the majority of these go off in various ways, often at the last moment. "The parties go down to trial with all their witnesses and deliver their briefs, and then are coerced into a reference; the Judge, the jury, and counsel, all feeling that a jury is wholly incompetent to deal satisfactorily with the matter." The Committee are justly of opinion that this is a scandal which should be put short. For this end they propose that, as a rule, the trial should be before a Judge alone, but a jury may be had on the application of either party if he can satisfy the Master that trial by jury would be convenient in the particular case. In cases of libel, slander, seduction, false imprisonment, malicious prosecution, and breach of promise of marriage, the absolute right to jury trial is to be preserved. We think this provision errs in over caution, if at all. The semi-political reasons which make it proper to retain the jury in criminal cases do not apply to these. There is no reason to suppose that jurymen are more competent than a Judge to decide questions involving personal honour and reputation. And the most delicate questions of this class have, in fact, for many generations been decided by equity judges sitting alone. We are not aware that their decisions have given rise to any dissatisfaction, or have been considered worse than those of juries. As to the common run of civil causes, we have little doubt that they would be much better dealt with by a Judge alone. The saving of time, to begin with, would be considerable. Counsel's speeches would be shortened, there would be no summing-up, and much less dispute about points of evidence. And the cases where the jury are likely to form a better opinion of the facts than the Judge would without them may be reduced to an exceedingly small number. We do not mean to undervalue the services of a good jury in some kinds of cases. A special jury of business men in London, Manchester, or Liverpool is oftentimes of substantial assistance to the Judge. In this case, however, one is apt to think it is hardly worthy of a great nation to compel skilled mercantile assessors (for such they really are) to give their time and labour to the Court for a nominal recompense. Another function of the jury, humble but not to be despised, is to veil the uncertainties of human judgment. There are cases in which it is almost impossible to derive a conclusion from the evidence with any reasonable confidence. It may be plain that at least one of two or more conflicting witnesses is perjured, but extremely difficult to say which. In these cases the jury have to agree somehow. Their verdict, being necessarily unqualified, and unaccompanied with reasons, has an appearance of certainty, and the public, fortunately for the credit of justice, do not hear how it was arrived at. The jury disperses and its responsibility is dispersed also. A Judge sitting alone might feel embarrassed on occasions of this sort. But there is nothing in the nature of things or in the recommendations of the Committee to prevent the jury from being retained in every case in which it is really useful now. The Judges would have to arrive at some sort of understanding as to the extent to which they should give reasons for their decisions; but there would be no grave difficulty about this. A new check on the jury, where retained, is proposed by the Committee in the shape of a rule enabling the Judge to direct a new trial on the application of either party if he is dissatisfied with the verdict. This also is less of an innovation than it looks, for the Court which now grants or refuses a new trial seldom refuses it when the Judge who tried the cause thinks the verdict was wrong. The simplified procedure for obtaining a new trial would, of course, be swifter and cheaper.

There remains the topic of appeals, besides some other points of practice. As to interlocutory matters, it is proposed that the appeal from a Master should still be to a Judge at Chambers, and that there should be a further appeal from him only by leave of himself or of the Court. We think it a mistake to admit an application to the Court. Successful or not, it would mean more costs. It would be better to leave the Judge at Chambers an absolute discretion as to the propriety of allowing an appeal. He might be wrong, but, after all, so might the Court. In interlocutory business it is more important to make the way clear to finis litium, or rather to the final litis contestatio, than to secure the highest refinement of judicial wisdom. As to appeals on the result of a trial, the following are the principles embodied in the Committee's recommendations:—

Appeals from a Judge sitting alone or from his absolute direction of a verdict to go straight to the Court of Appeal. Applications for a new trial in jury causes to go to Court in Banc of three judges, not including him who tried the cause. (This would apply, it will be observed, only where the judge trying the cause was not dissatisfied with the verdict.) The decision of the Court in Banc to be final, "except with their leave or in case of difference of opinion, or where the subject-matter of appeal exceeds £500." Appeals from the Court in Banc to go to a Court of Appeal of at least five judges.

This arrangement, it is thought, would avoid overloading the Court of Appeal with work that used to be, and can be, effectually done by the judges of first instance, and would give more weight to its decisions. The suggestion involves no violent change, and is about as good a one as could be made under existing conditions. But there is a fact officially ignored in all discussions of the rearrangement of judicial business, which nevertheless is true, and which sooner or later the public and Parliament must face. It is that of late years the work of the judges and officers of the Courts has increased out of all proportion to their number. And every reform which improves or expedites procedure tends to increase it still more. Time and labour may doubtless be saved in many ways by improvements of this kind; but they will attract at least as much new business as the saving allows room for. An able military critic lately pointed out the indisputable truth that no amount of ingenious manipulation of short service, reserves, or any other invention would enable one boy to do the work of two men. It is the same in the case before us. Increased accommodation and higher speed are not to be made out of nothing or to be had for nothing in a Court of Justice any more than on a railway, and if the public choose to have them they must be paid for. Cheap justice means rough justice. The County Courts are sufficiently rough in comparison with the Superior Courts, and even they are by no means very cheap. It is for the public to make up their mind whether cheapness or efficiency is to be considered first. So long as it passes for an unalterable maxim that no shilling is to be spent on doing a thing well if it appears that it can be patched up for ninepence, there is not much prospect of the nation seeing the best value for its money, either in the Courts of justice or in other departments.—Times.

A LONG LAW SUIT.—The longest law-suit ever heard of in England was between the heir of Sir Thomas Talbot, Viscount Lisle, on the one part, and the heirs of Lord Berkeley on the other, respecting certain possessions not far from Wotton-under-Edge in the county of Gloucester. It commenced at the end of the reign of Edward IV., and was pending till the reign of James I., when a compromise took place, it having lasted above a hundred and twenty years.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—VI.

(Continued from page 84, ante.)

STATUTORY MORTGAGE.

Mortgage by one Person to another.

Up to the present time we have been considering how far documents can be abbreviated by omission of clauses in reliance on the statute, or by the substitution of some technical words which, by virtue of the statute, supply some lengthy covenant or provision. But, in Schedule III. of the Act, are certain forms of great brevity which, in small transactions of a simple nature, seem likely to be much employed. They derive their efficacy from Part V. of the Act, ss. 26-29. Form No. 1 is a deed of statutory mortgage. By the employment of that form there will be implied, by virtue of sect. 26, (a) Covenant by mortgagor for payment of the mortgage money and interest at the stated time, (b) Covenant for payment of interest after default, (c) Proviso for redemption. The heirs of the mortgagor will be bound by his covenants, by virtue of section 59, and the representatives of the original mortgagee can claim the benefit of the covenants (s. 2, vi.). To imply these provisions the deed must be expressed to be "by way of statutory mortgage," and the mortgagor must convey "as mortgagor." Persons using these forms will doubtless generally rely on the Act throughout. The mortgagor should also convey as "beneficial owner," so as to imply the covenants of sect. 7. General words and "all estate clause" will be omitted (ss. 6, 68). Power of sale and other provisions will be omitted under sects. 19-24. The result is, that a statutory mortgage, when the parcels are brief, can be easily written on a sheet of note paper. These statutory forms may be used with variations and additions (see sects. 26, 27, and notes at the end of the forms). So that leasing powers of mortgagor and his subsequent mortgagee should be excluded as usual, and covenant by mortgagor to insure can be added, if desired. It will be well, in accordance with the forms in Schedule III., throughout these forms to use the word "convey" in the operative part, instead of "grant" (s. 40), and to employ the new technical words "in fee simple," instead of the ordinary words of limitation, "and his heirs" (s. 51). But we should feel inclined to add the words "in fee simple" in the conveying part, although in the form in the schedule they occur only in the habendum. The first form, as thus altered, would read: "A. as a mortgagor and beneficial owner hereby conveys to M. in fee simple all that [etc.], to hold to and to the use of M. in fee simple." But of course this is not a point of any vital consequence.

It should be noticed that these statutory mortgages can only be made with respect to freehold or leasehold land (s. 2, ii.) and that they must be made by deed (s. 26). It is not unlikely that, besides being used in small transactions, they will often be employed instead of memorandums of deposit, accompanied by agreements to execute mortgages. They will also be found extremely convenient in family arrangements, where the object is to obtain a legal security with as little expense as possible, and where the parties are known to, and have confidence in, each other.

Mortgage by several Persons to one.

By sect. 28 the covenants for payments of principal and interest implied under sect. 26 will be joint and several. This is quite satisfactory, and in accordance with common practice (see David, ii. 915, 935.) With regard to implied covenants for title, and other matters not peculiar to statutory assurances under this part of the Act, the reader must be referred to our previous remarks.

Mortgage by one Person to several.

Here, by sect. 28, the covenants will be joint, except in the case mentioned below. This is in accordance with present practice: David, ii. 871. If the money is stated to be owing to the mortgagees on a joint account, the benefit of the covenants for payment of the money and interest, and the money itself, will pass to the survivors and survivor, and the personal representatives of the last survivor, in the usual way (ss. 60, 61).

If, however, the amount secured is expressed to be secured to the mortgagees in shares, or distinct sums; the covenant implied will be deemed to be with each severally in respect to the share or distinct sum secured to him. This is in effect a case of several mortgages in one deed, and so the implied covenant seems quite satisfactory.

Transfer of Statutory Mortgage.

Where a mortgage exists in "statutory" form, it will obviously be convenient, when a transfer takes place, to make a "statutory" transfer. The deed must expressly state that it is made "by way of statutory transfer," and should be drawn in one of the three forms (A), (B), and (C) in Schedule III., Part II. Then by sect. 27 (2) the mortgage money and interest, and the right to sue, and the estate of the mortgagee in the land, becomes vested in the transferee. The transfer must be indorsed on the mortgage, or declared supplemental to it, or else it will be needful to recite the mortgage. The transferor conveys "as mortgagee," which raises the ordinary covenant by a mortgagee against his own incumbrances, sect. 7 (F). This is quite satisfactory. The three forms (A), (B), (C) correspond to the three varieties of transfer explained in David, ii. 814. In Form (A) the mortgagor does not join. Compare David, ii. 1292, 1295. In Form (B), a "covenantor" joins, and by implication covenants for payment of mortgage money and interest by force of sect. 27 (3). This form is applicable to a case where the mortgagor is a party, but has charged or limited the equity of redemption. He simply joins for the purpose of covenanting for payment, and so is styled "a covenantor." It should be noticed that this differs considerably from the corresponding form in David, ii. 1299. The statutory form contains no recital of the state of the mortgage debt, or request by the mortgagor to the old mortgagee to transfer the debt and the estate. It is therefore less eligible than the common form, but doubtless it will in most cases be found practically sufficient.

Form (C) is a statutory transfer and statutory mortgage combined, and derives its efficacy from sect. 27 (4). It is applicable to a case where the mortgagor joins in a transfer, and has not made any incumbrances since the original mortgage. According to the old form, a transfer under such circumstances was made so as to be, in fact, a new mortgage, but the old mortgage was kept on foot to defeat any possible mesne incumbrances. This plan is followed in the statutory form. Also the old mortgagee conveys by the direction of the mortgagor, and the latter conveys as beneficial owner, so that the covenants of sect. 7 (C) by the mortgagor are implied, as well as those of sect. 7 (F) by the mortgagee. The form is therefore satisfactory. By sect. 27 (4) no extra stamp will be required by reason only of the deed being designated a mortgage.

In statutory transfers, as well as in statutory mortgages, joint and several covenants by the persons conveying as mortgagors, or joining as covenantors, will be implied; and also, where there are more transferees than one, the covenants will be deemed to be made with them jointly, except the amount is stated to be secured in distinct shares or sums (s. 27). The statutory forms of transfer are therefore applicable to cases where there are several mortgagors or mortgagees. If the money belongs to the transferees on a joint account it should be so stated.

Statutory Reconveyance.

This form is authorised by sect. 29, probably for the sake of providing a convenient short model form, as it has no special force given it by statute. It is made supplemental to the last transfer of the mortgage, and not to the mortgage; nor is the mortgage recited. Apparently it is considered that, as the reconveyance is supplemental to the transfer, and the transfer to the mortgage, therefore the reconveyance is supplemental to the mortgage. However this may be, the statutory reconveyance gives no information as to what is the mortgage which is being reconveyed. Also it conveys the estate "discharged from all principal and interest secured by and from all claims and demands under the said indenture"—i.e., the transfer.

Now, the transfer, in the case to which the form relates, was not "a statutory transfer of mortgage and statutory mortgage" in form (C), for otherwise it would have been recited as such, and not merely as "a statutory transfer." So that either the mortgagor did not join at all in the transfer, or only joined as covenantor. But, in any case, a reconveyance should release the mortgagor from that which bound him, viz., the original mortgage. So that, though this statutory form should be used when the previous assurances have been "statutory," it will require considerable alteration. The mortgage should be expressly referred to, and the land conveyed discharged from it. The mortgagee conveys "as mortgagee," and so the covenants of sect. 7 (F) are implied.

Mortgage of Leaseholds.

The forms in Schedule III only relate to freehold land, but statutory mortgages and transfers may also be made of leaseholds. The forms require little alteration. The lease must be recited, and, where necessary, the usual short recital as to mesne assignments and acts in the law must be added: (for form, see David. ii. 971; Wolst. & T. 163.) The word "convey" will be used in the operative part, but instead of the words "in fee simple" there will be substituted "the residue of the term of years granted by the said lease except the last three days thereof." Also there must be a trust of the last three days in favour of purchaser: (for form of such a trust, see David. ii. 974; and compare Wolst. & T. 164.)

(To be continued.)

HEAD-NOTE ODDITIES.

In noting Mr. Heard's recent productions the Law Journal observes: "The head-notes to reported cases form a field which would, we think, further reward the research of Mr. Heard. Their brevity, of course, tends to obscurity, and this obscurity often takes a humorous turn. Perhaps the best of them all is one which has, we think, escaped Mr. Heard. It is the head-note to Smith v. The Great Eastern Railway Company, L. R. 2 C. P., which runs as follows:—

"The plaintiff was bitten by a stray dog at a railway station while waiting for a train. It was proved that, at 9 p.m., the dog flew at and tore the dress of another female on the platform; that, at 10.30, he attacked a cat in the signal box near the station, when the porter there kicked him out and saw no more of him, and that he made his appearance again at 10.40 on the platform, where he bit the plaintiff. Held no evidence to warrant a jury in finding that the company had been guilty of any negligence in keeping the station reasonably safe for passengers."

"In this inimitable tale it is difficult to know which most to admire—the rapidity with which the hero changes his sex, being first a dog, then attacking 'another female,' and then again a 'he;' or the punctuality of this dog, putting to shame the best express train of the company which so basely repudiated him, or the anticlimax by which, after all this graphic history of tearing, cat-baiting, and kicking, no one has to pay for it. He was an irrepresable dog, too. His historian, being evidently told that there was something not quite clear in the narrative as given, endeavoured, in the 'Law Reports Digest,' to give an appearance of more probability to the story. But even there we find him flying at 'another person.' Mr. Heard has also, we think, missed the unparalleled case of the County Court judge 'who actually took a note of the evidence' as recorded last year in the Law Reports. Head-notes of cases supply good material for compilations like the present, because the modern tendency to diffuseness does not affect them so largely. The recent examples chosen are almost all much longer than the older examples. Our own columns and head-notes of the Law Journal Reports are quite at the service of Mr. Heard, and we imagine that he might often run his quarry to earth in the "Irish Law Reports."

PARISIAN LAW-STUDENT LIFE.

Most foreigners get their ideas of the Parisian student and his way of living from books like Kimball's "Romance of Student Life Abroad," Thackeray's "Paris Sketch Book," Murger's "Le Pays Latin," and some of the tales of Alfred de Musset. They consequently obtain a rather narrow and one-sided view of life in the Latin Quarter. Kimball presents only the romantic side of the French student; Thackeray takes you among the art students only; Murger does not so much describe the Latin Quarter as he does the career of a woman who happens to live in it; and Alfred de Musset, with his Mimi Finsom and his Bernerette, gives you a poetical rather than a real picture of persons and things on the left bank of the Seine. The writer has not yet come who has treated the Parisian student life as thoroughly as Tom Hughes did the Oxford, and Astor Bristed the Cambridge, student doings; nor have we in our language any work on French schools, colleges, and universities half as complete and interesting as Mr. Hart's book on life at Göttingen, Berlin, and Leipsic. Until such a faithful chronicler arrive the following sketches may throw some light on an attractive subject:—The Latin Quarter is that extensive part of Paris which is bounded on the north by the Seine, on the south by the Mont Parnasse Railway station, on the west by the Rue Bonaparte, and on the east by that shapeless pile, the Halle aux Vins. The university buildings are not contiguous. The Law School is at ten minute's walk from the Medical School, and it takes you eight minutes to walk from the Collège de France and the Sorbonne to the School of the Fine Arts. The Sainte Geneviève Library is at least at twelve minutes' distance from the Mazarin Library, and the uniformed members of the Polytechnic School have to walk at a brisk step if they wish to gain the Boulevard St. Michel in eight minutes. The visitor to the quarter and the student living in it are, therefore, obliged to ramble about if they desire to see the attractions of this scholastic spot. The attractions are numerous. There is the Odéon, the second theatre in France, a Doric structure that witnessed the early triumphs of Hugo, Ponsard, George Sand, and Dumas. There is the Institute, whose massive cupola resembles that of the Invalides, a resemblance which suggested to Heine the bitter hint that the men beneath the former cupola are also invalids. The Mint, the Senate, the Courthouse, the Prefecture of Police, the Sainte Chapelle are all in the student quarter. It is a quarter which, in spite of the modern improvements set on foot by Napoleon III., its aristocratic-looking Boulevard St. Michel (the main artery of the section), its many new houses and pretty shops, its broad streets usurping small, winding, and romantic ones, still contains much that gives it a stamp of its own. When you stand under the shadow of the Pantheon, or within earshot of the silver chimes of St. Etienne de Mont, or under the gloomy vaults of St. Severin—when you see the crowds of young men seated in front of the café, grouped in front of the lecture-rooms, strolling along boulevard and street, you are persuaded that you are in the midst of a quarter where youth and merriment and studious quiet predominate. In the spring the lilacs waft their sweet perfume upon the student as he passes the garden of the Luxembourg, and in autumn he can behold the gorgeous tints of falling leaves in the Jardin des Plantes. The Parisian student, with the exception of the followers of Æsculapius, is a late riser; "Paris is like the Duke de Vendôme," said Benjamin Constant. "It is epicurean, cynical, lazy. It gets up at noon, but it arises to go forth and conquer." The Parisian student is something like that. At any rate, when he does not arise, he takes his breakfast in bed, and when he does he takes it in a crémier restaurant. This repast consists not of beefsteak, nor of buckwheat cakes, nor of ham and eggs, but of a bowl—a Caspian Sea full—of coffee and an infinitesimally small roll. We should not forget the spoon, which may be classed just after the ladle in size. When he has finished this first breakfast (cost 20c. to 30c.) the student goes to the lecture-room, or to his studies, or to the hospital, as the case may be. Students of the law generally complete their studies in three years; at the end of that term they are licenciés. In order to attain this degree, which opens the way to all liberal and administrative positions, they must have passed four examinations satisfactorily, and presented a thesis that has been approved by the Faculty. They attend lectures at the Law School and frequent private classes called conférences. There is no roll-call at the lectures, and therefore attendance is as irregular as at an American college chapel. Every regularly registered law student has his card—carte d'étudiant—signed by the Dean and Secretary of the Faculty, and the signature of the bearer is likewise affixed. This card is good for one year only, and must be shown by the student when requested to do so. The lecture-rooms are generally arranged in amphitheatre form. They are old and dingy, and the system of ventilation dates back to Noah's days. The Professor has a red gown. He now and then takes a sip of the sugar-water on the desk before him. The students distinguish themselves by the noise they make before the learned gentleman's arrival, by the paucity of the notes they take, by their listless attention when he is there, and by the impatient snapping of their watch cases when he stays beyond his time. The conférences—a species of French "coaching clubs"—are the real workshops of the law students. There they are questioned by young and keen tutors, who stand in pretty much the same relation to the Law School that the Privat Dozenten do to the university in Germany. The conférenciers treat of the same subjects as the lecturing Professors, but in a more thorough and questioning manner. Indeed, they supplement the Professors. The following are the studies to be mastered by the French law student:—In the first year he is required to study Books I. and II. of Justinian's "Institutes," the general history of French law as taught by the Professor, who, of course, recommends his own text-book; two books of civil law, two books of penal law, and certain specified articles of criminal procedure. In the second year the candidate takes up Books III. and IV. of Justinian's "Institutes," political economy as taught by the Professor, the third book of the civil law, and three books of civil procedure. His third and last year comprises the study of administrative law, the Commercial Code, some more articles of the civil law, and private international law as taught by the Professor. Having passed on those subjects, the last examination taking place before five Professors, he presents his thesis, consisting of two dissertations, one in Latin, and one in French, and when it has been approved he has it printed. He usually dedicates it to his grandparents, if living, his parents, if living, and if deceased, to their memory; to his brothers and sisters, to his favourite Professor, and to his intimate friends, not collectively, be it noted, but singly and by names. The dedication page of a French student's thesis somewhat resembles the string of hieroglyphics on the obelisk in the Park. The degree of licencié is not the highest in the gift of the Law Faculty, though it is the one generally sought. The highest is that of LL.D., and this is obtained by another year's study, and satisfactory examination on all of Justinian's "Institutes," the Pandects, the whole of the civil law, the history of law, the droit coutumier, industrial and commercial law, constitutional law, and finance. Though there is no Professor of elocution as in our Law Schools, and though moot courts are not held, the students exercise their oratorical powers in the conférences, but, above all, in the cafés and beer saloons. It is there that you can frequently hear some hot debate on law or politics between two students. I have also assisted at some very fine informal discussions in students' rooms, where the arguments were good, the flow of elocution easy, and the reading displayed broad. But what the French student lacks is training in Parliamentary law. He has but a very faint idea of it in his youth, and that he continues in his maturer years to have a vague idea on the importance of the matter is proved by the worse than school-boyish indecorum of the proceedings in the Chamber of Deputies. A little less Demosthenes and a little more Cushing would do them no harm. When eleven o'clock strikes in the dome of the Sorbonne most of the students hasten to their lunch or déjeuner à la fourchette, and when that meal is despatched they stroll leisurely to their habitual café. The most popular of the day cafés are the Source, frequented by Parisians, South Americans, a few Luxembourgers, a colony of Basques, and a sprinkling of other nationalities; the Voltaire, a respectable, solid establishment, with a good stock of papers; the Cluny, the Anglo-Saxon head-quarters, though there are numerous Roumanians in the billiard rooms up-stairs; the Vachette, the "swell" café of the quarter, where coffee costs just 1 cent more than in the other coffee-houses on the Boulevard St. Michel, and where the women are just one shade older and better dressed. It is in these resorts that the Parisian student takes his noon cup of coffee or sips his mazagan or slowly quaffs his liqueur. Here he reads the morning news or discusses a question of study with his friends, or plays a game of sixty-six, écarté, baocarat, or whist, or tries his hand at checkers or at chess. At about 1 30 he leaves and goes about his regular occupation.—New York Times.

LEX NON COGIT AD IMPOSSIBILIA.

THE following, we need scarcely say, comes from Ireland:—

"Every process server shall before service compare the copies of the civil bills delivered to him for service with their respective originals, and prior to the service of such copies endorse his name upon the original, the time when, the manner in which, and the place where such service was made, and the person (whether relative or servant) on whom the same was served."

The extract is from "Rules for the Guidance of Process Servers," issued by the clerk of the peace for County Clare. After this we should think that process servers will give up the business in despair. The Court whose officer he is, appears to be harder upon him than even the defendant and his sympathising friends are said sometimes to be. A man may escape being made to eat the writ he is serving, but how can any merely human process server record the details of an event before it happens?—Law Journal.

THE PREROGATIVE OF MEROY.

A Parliamentary paper which has been lately issued will lend considerable support to those who wish to inaugurate a tribunal of appeal in criminal cases. It is a return of cases since 1860 "in which appeal has been made on behalf of persons convicted of capital offences to the Home Secretary for the exercise of the Royal prerogative of pardon or mitigation of sentence." The total number of these appeals amounts, in the last twenty years, to 512, giving a yearly average of some twenty-five cases, and of these 279, or an average of nearly fourteen a year, have been unsuccessful. Of the remaining convicts, the majority have been sentenced to penal servitude for life or shorter term, thirteen have been reprieved without commutation of sentence, and sent to Broadmoor as lunatics, and six have been granted a free pardon. In one case only was the sentence of death quashed by the existing Court of Crown Cases Reserved. The bearing of these statistics upon the administration of the criminal law is undeniably important. Seeing that in eleven out of every twenty-five instances in which an appeal is made the sentence is commuted, it must be assumed that, did no power of appeal exist, the most fatal miscarriage of justice would constantly occur. That the power of reviewing doubtful verdicts in so numerous a class of offences should be vested in the Home Office seems, to say the least of it, illogical and anomalous to the last degree.—Law Times.

EXPULSION FROM CLUBS.

Club law, in one sense, is daily receiving illustration in Ireland. In another and less unpleasant sense it is receiving frequent illustration in England. The latest club case is that of Lambert v. Addison, which was decided by Mr. Justice Kay, on February 1, in a way open to considerable remark. Captain Lambert was a member of the Junior Army and Navy Club. In May, 1880, he called the attention of the general meeting of the club to a special piece of alleged misfeasance of the committee in readmitting, as a member of the club, without a new ballot or formal re-election, a certain Lieutenant Gould, who had retired from the club in December, 1879. It appeared that Mr. Gould had been readmitted because Sir Norman Pringle, to whom the committee had applied for pecuniary assistance, had made it part of the terms on which he gave that assistance that Mr. Gould should become a trustee. Mr. Gould became a trustee, and was not only readmitted to the club, but was placed upon the committee. The committee were entrusted by the rules with the power of electing new members, and of publishing such bye-laws in regard thereto as they might feel expedient. Mr. Gould was readmitted under a bye-law passed in November, 1879, enabling retired members to be readmitted, with the committee's approval, on payment of back subscriptions, which payment he made. Captain Lambert, as he had a right to do, criticised the action of the committee, and described it to the meeting as "a pocket borough, keeping within their number the selection of members." He was himself put up for election on the committee at the same meeting, but was not elected. Subsequently he seems to have expressed rather loudly his dissatisfaction with the management of the committee, occasionally even in the presence of strangers or servants. In December he received a notice that the committee were going to take his conduct into consideration, under rule 11. This rule provided that, "if the conduct of any member, either in or out of the clubhouse, shall, in the opinion of the committee, . . . be injurious to the character and interests of the club, the committee shall be empowered to request such member to resign," and to expel him if he refuse: "Provided that no request be sent to any member unless the resolution to send the same be agreed to by two-thirds of the members of the committee actually present at a meeting to be specially summoned for the purpose." After some correspondence—in which Captain Lambert apologised if he had overstepped just criticism, but declined to attend before the committee to answer the charges against him—he was eventually requested to resign; the resolution to that effect being carried by six votes to three; in which six votes was included that of Mr. Gould, whose presence in the club was the chief ground of complaint against the committee.

On these facts, Mr. Justice Kay held that the plaintiff was expelled in accordance with the rules, and after a fair trial, or opportunity of a fair trial, and that perfect bona fides had been shown throughout. He referred, in support of his decision, to Lord Romilly's observation in Hopkinson v. Marquis of Exeter, 37 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 178; L. R. 5 Eq. 68, that, "if the decision of the club meeting has been arrived at bona fide, and without caprice or improper motive, it is a judicial opinion from which there is no appeal;" and to the remarks of Lord Justice James in Dawkins v. Antrobus, L. R. 17 Chanc. Div. 617, "unless we can say that their decision, that such conduct would be injurious to the character and interests of the club, was so manifestly absurd and manifestly idle that it could only have been a false pretence to cover something else, and, therefore, was, in fact, fraudulently put forward for the purpose of giving effect to some preconceived notion of removing him without cause, we have no right to sit in judgment on their decision." Now, if the conduct of Captain Lambert had not consisted entirely of reflections on the committee who sat in judgment on him; or if the question had been submitted, as the committee had power to submit it, to the judgment of a general meeting, there would be no doubt as to the correctness of the decision. But, seeing that the committee were sitting in judgment in their own cause, and that one of the chief grievances of the plaintiff was the presence in the club at all of one of the members of the committee whose vote expelled him, we cannot but think that there is considerable room for doubt whether the case is not rather within the scope of Fisher v. Keane and Labouchere v. Earl of Wharncliffe, than of Dawkins v. Antrobus. In the former case, reported 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 11; L. R. 11 Chanc. Div. 353, the plaintiff had been expelled by the committee for drunkenness, accompanied by bad language to a guest in the club, without a hearing, and the action of the committee had been sustained by a general meeting. The Master of the Rolls reinstated the plaintiff on the ground that he had not had a fair trial before the committee, and that the case was not put properly to the general meeting. So in Labouchere's case, one of the grounds on which he was reinstated in the Beefsteak Club was, that the question of expulsion was put to the general meeting in the form of an issue between the committee and Mr. Labouchere. But the case under consideration is parallel to the last cited case, in that the committee were judges in their own cause, and the practically casting vote was given by the very member of the committee whose admission was the subject of the plaintiff's complaints. There is obvious impropriety in a "quasi-judicial tribunal," as the cases have it, being composed entirely of those, criticism on whose conduct is the matter in issue, and eventually determining its action by the vote of a person who, the plaintiff said, not only ought not to have been a member of the tribunal, but ought not to have been a member of the club at all. The case, indeed, is somewhat similar to that of Lyttelton v. Blackburn, in which, pending an appeal to a general meeting, the committee of a proprietary club expelled a member for complaining of the conduct of the committee at a general meeting, and by letter to the committee in a quite unexceptionable manner. But that case, reported 45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 219, was decided by Vice-Chancellor Bacon, on the sworn answer of the committee that they had not acted capriciously, wantonly, or unjustly; and in the consideration that, probably, the Court had no jurisdiction to interfere if they had. This case is in conflict with the later cases already cited, and the two cases of Lyttelton v. Blackburn and Fisher v. Keane cannot stand together. The committee's answer in Lyttelton v. Blackburn was of little value except as a plea "of not guilty," and their performance of a judicial or quasi-judicial office was not in accordance with the "ordinary principles of justice." Their conduct, as well as the plaintiff's had been called in question, and each party had declared its intention of appealing to the club in general. Yet, while that appeal was pending, they sat as judges in their own cause, and gave judgment in their own favour by expelling their critic. Vice-Chancellor Bacon, himself, seems now to prefer the law as laid down in those cases to his own; since in the case of Foster v. Harrison, decided by him on January 9 this year, he reinstated a member who had been expelled by a club committee for getting the club fined for an infringement of the licensing law. The present state of the law on this point, as laid down by the Master of the Rolls and followed by Vice-Chancellor Bacon, would, therefore, appear to be that in expulsion cases the club should not only act strictly in accordance with the rules of the club, but with the ordinary principles of justice; and that, in particular, attention should be given to the constitution of the Court, so that no one who has any bias or interest in the matter in question should sit as a member of the tribunal on the inquiry. On these principles, it is difficult to see how the decision in the case of Lambert v. Addison is right. Governing bodies are notoriously impatient of criticism. They can hardly be justified in inflicting so serious a punishment as expulsion from a club for criticisms, however indiscreet, when they had another mode of operation open to them.—Law Journal.

LIABILITY TO COUNTY CESS.

At Monaghan Assizes, on March 11th, Judge Lawson decided that the sale of a tenant-right of a farm carries with it the liabilities as well as the advantages possessed by the previous tenant, and that, although the sale took place after the passing of the Land Act of 1870, the holding having been created before that Act, the new tenant is bound to pay the whole of the county cess.

NOTES OF ENGLISH CASES.

(From the Law Journal.)

COURT OF APPEAL.

Before JESSEL, M.R., BRETT AND HOLKER, L.JJ.

UNION BANK OF LONDON v. INGRAM.

Feb. 1.—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict., c. 41), s. 25—Order for Sale of mortgaged Property after Decree for Foreclosure.

A building estate, situate near Addison Road, Kensington, had been mortgaged (1) to Ingram, (2) to the Union Bank, (3) to a Miss Lee, and successively to five other mortgagees. Under a decree for redemption and foreclosure made in this action in May, 1879, the official referee, in April, 1881, found £9,083 due to Ingram. The bank then redeemed Ingram, and in November, 1881, the official referee found £23,219 due to the bank. About £4,000 was due to Miss Lee. The property had been valued by experienced valuers at only £18,500. The bank now asked for a sale under section 25 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881. KAY, J., was of opinion that there was no power to make an order for sale after a foreclosure decree; but suggested a reference to the Court of Appeal.

Ince, Q.C., and Methold for the appellants.

Freeman appeared for the eighth mortgagee, but nobody opposed the granting of the order.

Their LORDSHIPS were of opinion that there was nothing in the wording of the section which prevented the Court from making an order for sale, at any time before foreclosure, absolute.

Appeal allowed.

HARLOCK v. ASHBERRY.

Feb. 3.—Mortgage—Foreclosure—Action—Recovery of Land—Statutes of Limitations—Payment of Rent by Tenant.—3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 27, ss. 2, 40; 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict., c. 28.

Appeal by the defendant from the judgment of FRY, J. The case is reported 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 745.

Kekewich, Q.C., and H. A. Giffard, Q.C., for the appellant.

Cookson, Q.C., and Covens Hardy, Q.C., for the plaintiff.

Their LORDSHIPS held that a foreclosure action is an action for the recovery of land within section 2 of 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 27., and not section 40; that the payment required by 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict., c. 28, to take the case out of that section must be a payment of principal or interest by the mortgagor or his agent, or some person bound or entitled to pay on his behalf. Held, overruling FRY, J., that payment of rent by the tenant to the mortgagee is not such a payment that there could not be a ratification in law, even had there been evidence in fact of such payment by the mortgagor, to make it a payment on her behalf.

Appeal accordingly allowed, except as to the part of the mortgaged property in the occupation of Wade, the tenant, who had paid the mortgagee the rent.

(From the Times.)

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

(Before MATHEW and CAVE, JJ.)

DRAKE AND OTHERS v. JARDINE AND OTHERS.

Feb. 18.—Service of process—Jurisdiction—Balance of convenience.

In this case the traveller of the plaintiff firm, wholesale grocers in the City, called upon a Belfast grocer, and got an oral order for a quantity of sugar, to be shipped promptly and paid for, as the traveller said, on delivery of bills of lading in London. The sugar was shipped, though not by the next vessel, and the bills of lading were delivered in London; but the sugar was lost before delivery, and the Belfast grocer refused payment of the amount claimed, which was £130, whereupon the wholesale house sued him in the High Court. By a recent rule or order of the High Court of Justice, the Court or Judge are to exercise a discretion as to allowing service of process of the High Court on a party in Scotland or Ireland where either the contract or the breach of it occurred in England, having regard to the amount claimed, and whether there is in the place in Scotland or Ireland where the party lives a local Court of limited jurisdiction, and, generally, to considerations of convenience. There was an affidavit for the plaintiffs that they would have to call brokers in the City to prove what was meant by "prompt shipment," and, further, that there is no local Court of limited jurisdiction in Belfast. Under these circumstances the Judge at Chambers had made an order allowing service of process on the grocer in Belfast in an action in the High Court, to be tried in London. This was an appeal on his part from that order.

Mr. Crump, on his behalf, contended that as the grocer lived in Belfast, and his witnesses would be there, the action ought to be there, and there was no such preponderance of convenience as required it to be brought here.

Mr. R. V. Williams and Mr. Hansell, on the other side, for the wholesale house in London, insisted that the order was right, as the sum was considerable, and the breach of contract was in London, by non-payment on delivery of the bills of lading, and there was no local Court at Belfast.

Mr. Justice Mathew observed that on this application it must be assumed that the breach of contract was in London, the contract being for payment on delivery of bill of lading there, and

Mr. Justice Cave observed that it was the fault of the defendant, the grocer, for entering into such a contract, and that he ought to have stipulated that payment should be on delivery of the sugar to him at Belfast.

On the whole, after some discussion,

The Court came to the conclusion that there was no ground for disturbing the decision of the Judge, who had exercised his discretion upon all the circumstances of the case as to the balance of convenience on one side or the other.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

LIABILITY OF MEMBERS OF DISPENSARY COMMITTEES.

At the recent Claremorris Quarter Sessions, before Mr. Richards, County Court Judge, Dr. O'Rorke, medical officer of Ballinrobe Dispensary District, sued Mr. Monahan for £1 ls., for one visit paid to a patient on a visiting ticket issued by defendant; also for 10s. 6d., for advice given to a patient at the Dispensary, on a black ticket issued by the defendant. In both instances the patients were held by the Committee of Management of the Dispensary District not to be fit persons to receive Dispensary medical relief, and the tickets were cancelled. The defence was that defendant did not know for whom he had issued the tickets or the circumstances of the patients, but thought both tickets had been obtained by children. The judge said that the issuer was guilty of carelessness, and that the system being liable to such abuse, he would give a decree for the amount claimed against the defendant, as the person who called in the Doctor was liable for the payment of his fees, and defendant was the person in these instances who had demanded the medical officer's services. No appeal against the decision was made. This case establishes the liability on the part of a ticket issuer for having improperly exercised his privileges; while in former cases numerous instances of decrees against the recipients of medical relief are recorded, but this is the first case of a decree against a ticket issuer.

THE SALARIES OF CORONERS.

The new Coroners' Act having been submitted to the grand jury at Armagh on Monday last, they appointed a committee of five to ascertain the average number of inquests held by each of the three county coroners. That being done, the grand jury proceeded to present for half a year's salary to each, but payable up to 1st May next. Mr. Coroner Peel took exception to this, but as the grand jury would not, in accordance with the 3rd section of the Act, pay the half year due on 1st November last, he retained Mr. Boyd, Q.C., to bring the matter before the judge, the Right Hon. A. Lawson. The grand jury having received notice, sent the foreman and Mr. J. C. Stronge, J.P., to the judge, who heard their case in chamber. His lordship decided that they were bound to pay the coroners the half year's salary due at November 1st, 1881, and so on half yearly. The grand jury then afterwards sought to deduct the fees paid at July, 1881, but to that Mr. Peel also objected, and the grand jury gave way, complying with the law.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

(Continued from page 90, ante.)

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 194.

The principle of protecting confidential communications is not to be extended to protect those that are made by a third party to a solicitor for the purpose of enabling the solicitor to advise his client in a matter as to which no litigation is pending or contemplated (Wheeler v. De Marchant, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 798)—C. A.

Robson on Bankruptcy (4th Edition), 557.

Pitt-Taylor on Bankruptcy, 115.

A delivery of goods, seized under an elegit, to the execution creditor at the value appraised by the jury, is a sale under section 95, subsection 3, and is, therefore, a protected transaction (In re Bannister, ex parte Vale, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 797)—C. A.

Sugden on Powers (8th Edition), 442.

An instrument exercising a power of appointment must be executed and construed, according to the rules applicable at the time of its execution, to an ordinary instrument of that kind, although the power may have been created before, but exercised after, a change in the law relating to the construction and execution of such instruments. So held where a power to appoint, by will, was created before, but exercised after, the passing of the Wills Act (Freme v. Clement, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 801).

Judicature Act, 1873, s. 49.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 44.

Where, in an action, the only order made is "that the defendant do pay the costs of the action," an appeal against the order is not an appeal for costs only (Dicks v. Yates, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 809)—C. A.

Copinger on Copyright (2nd Edition), 70.

There can be no copyright in a title which is not original (Dicks v. Yates, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 809)—C. A.

(To be continued.)

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. Jeffrey Browning, Suffolk-street, has been appointed solicitor of the Land Commission.

Sir Samuel Ferguson, LL.D., Q.C., Deputy Keeper of Public Records, has been elected President of the Royal Irish Academy.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

A Concise Practical Treatise on the Law of Property. By H. W. BOYD MAOKAY, Esq., LL.B., of the Middle Temple and the King's Inns, Barrister-at-Law &c. London: H. Sweet, 3 Chancery-lane, W.C., Law Book-seller and Publisher. 1882.

LAW STUDENT'S JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

EASTER SITTINGS, 1882.

NOTICE.

The PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION of Candidates for Apprenticeship will be held at the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin, on Monday and Tuesday, the 3rd and 4th days of April, 1882, at Eleven o'clock.

N.B.—All Papers to be lodged on or before Friday, 17th March, 1882.

The FINAL EXAMINATION of Candidates seeking admission as Solicitors will be held at the same place, on Wednesday and Thursday, the 5th and 6th days of April, 1882, at the same hour.

By Order of the Council,

JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin.

N.B.—The decision of the Court of Examiners will be announced on Wednesday, the 26th of April, 1882, at Three o'clock, p.m.

Candidates residing in the country need not remain in town to hear decision, but can learn same from the Dublin Morning Papers of the day following the announcement.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

TRINITY SITTINGS, 1882.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

NOTICE.

Candidates wishing to present themselves at the above Examination must lodge their papers, &c., on or before the first day of Easter Sittings, 1882.

By Order,

JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin,
3rd February, 1882.

Holloway's Pills.—Nervousness and want of Energy.—When first the nerves feel unstrung, and listlessness supplants energy, it is the right time to take some alternative as Holloway's Pills to prevent disorder running into disease. These excellent Pills correct all irregularities and weaknesses. They act so kindly, yet so energetically on the functions of digestion and assimilation, that the whole body is revived, the blood is rendered richer and purer, the muscles become firmer and stronger, and the nervous and absorbent systems are invigorated. These Pills are suitable for all classes and all ages. They have a most marvellous effect on persons who are out of condition; they soon rectify whatever is in fault, restore strength to the body and confidence to the mind.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—W. Mathers, allocate.

IN COURT.—Assignees S. M'Clean, to examine witness.—T. Sexton, from 13th.—W. Rowland, receiver.—County Court Appeal, Vint v. Miscampbell, judgment.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

A. M. Miller, rental.—G. S. Graves, do.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—Trustees Corbett, from 14th.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—H. J. Blake, from 14th.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. M. Walker, rental.—C. Martin, do.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

R. EAMES	-	-	-	1 lot.
V. WALL	-	-	-	1 „
P. LAWLESS	-	-	-	1 „
R. L. WATSON	-	-	-	2 lots.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

T. Colslough, rental.—J. Callaghan, do.—J. S. Peet vouch.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

J. Ronayne, rental.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

List of Petitions presented to the Land Judges in the month of February, 1882.

DATE	TITLE OF MATTER	OBJECT OF PETITION	COUNTY	PROFIT RENT	SOLICITOR
Feb. 2	Elizabeth Chambers and others, owners; Louisa Chambers, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Co. Meath	£ s. d. 289 2 6	G. O'B. Kennedy
" 8	Catherine Fitzgerald, owner; The Munster Bank, petitioners	Receiver, Partition, and Sale	Co. Cork	828 4 8	Thomas H. Kenny
" 4	Edmund Fitzgerald, owner and petitioner	Sale	Co. Limerick	865 0 11	Charles L. Perrott
" 6	John O'Flanagan and others, owners; Catherine Peacocke, petitioner	Receiver and sale	City Dublin	486 15 6	Mitward Jones and Co.
" 11	William Hitchcock and others, owners; Edward Roper, petitioner	Sale	Co. Limerick	249 18 9	Alexander D. Kennedy
" 7	Francis Joseph Jackson, owner; Arthur Henry Jackson, petitioner	Receiver and sale	King's Co.	266 9 9	T. W. Hardman and Sons
" 11	Hampden Evans Tener, owner; Michael King and another, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Tyrone	278 16 9	John A. French
" 8	John Dean Vimpani and Wife, owners and petitioners	Sale	Co. Dublin	65 0 0	Keily and Lloyd
" 9	Alexander Hunter Steen and another, owners and petitioners	Partition and Sale	Co. Antrim	1,861 2 9	L'Estrange and Brett
" 11	Robert Swanton and others, owners and petitioners	Sale and parti- tion	Cork	280 4 8	Babington and Co.
" 11	Robert Swanton, owner; John Atkins, petitioner	Sale and parti- tion	Cork	59 8 2	Babington and Co.
" 14	James Martin, owner; The Governor and Co. of Bank of Ireland, petitioners	Sale	Dublin	Not known	E. H. DeMolegns
" 16	Leslie Wren, owner; The Edinburgh Life Assurance Company, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Counties Meath and Kerry	710 15 0	J. and J. Galloway.
" 11	Martin Murphy, owner; Patrick O'Connell, petitioner	Sale of life estate in certain funds	—	—	Charles Thorp.
" 20	Charles J. S. Stephens, owner; James Fuller, petitioner	Sale	Galway	99 10 0	Johnston, Dillon, and Co.
" 21	Hugh Hamilton, owner; James M'Carthy, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Tyrone	61 15 0 Griffith's Valuation	Andrew Elliott.
" 22	Elizabeth A. Gordon and another, owners; William Seeds, petitioner	Sale	Antrim	186 5 0	Charles Higginson
" 24	Cork Harbour Docks Company, owners; Thomas F. Lyons and another, petitioners	Sale	Cork	Not known	Babington and Babington.
" 27	Cornelius A. Keogh, owner; John Gilbert King, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Co. Sligo	969 8 8	Chomley and St. George
" 28	William P. Cullen and Wife, owners; The Scottish Union and National Insurance Co., petitioners	Receiver and sale	Galway and Leitrim	167 12 0 Griffith's Valuation	A. H. Goddard

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1882.

No. 791

PRESUMPTIONS OF LIFE, DEATH, AND SURVIVORSHIP.—III

IN the American case of Wentworth v. Wentworth, already cited, decided in 1880, it was held that the rule that it must appear that the person whose death is in question has not been heard of by those persons who would naturally have heard from him during the time had he been alive, does not confine the intelligence to any particular class of persons—it may be to persons in or out of the family; and the mere failure to hear from an absent person for seven years, who was known to have had a fixed place of residence abroad, would not be sufficient to raise the presumption of his death, unless due inquiry had been made at such place without getting tidings of him. So in Re Rhodes, Frazer v. Renton, 28 L. T. N. S. 392, it was held that death will not be presumed if it appears that further evidence can be obtained; so, if sufficient inquiries have not been made: In re Creed, 1 Drew. 235; Goods of How, 1 S. & T. 53; Goods of Smyth, 28 L. J. Pro. 1; Re Timball's Trust, 30 Beav. 151; and in Gill v. Manly, 16 Ir. L. T. Rep. 57, the same principles, in effect, were most properly applied. Accordingly, in equity or probate proceedings, advertisements are directed, though the seven years have expired: Re Allin, 15 W. R. 1164; Re Atkinson, I. R. 5 Eq. 219; and see as to the particularity necessary in affidavits in such cases, Goods of Cooke, I. R. 5 Eq. 240, and as to the form of procedure for settlement of those questions in the Probate Division, Peppercorne v. Gardner, L. R. 3 P. & D. 149. In Re Webb's Estate (I. R. 5 Eq. 235) it appeared that a person emigrated to Australia, under circumstances showing that he was likely to communicate constantly with his family in Ireland, and having so communicated with them for some time, then ceased to do so, and was not heard of for more than seven years. From his last letter it was probable that, had he lived, he would have continued to write home. Inquiries were made by his family concerning him, and advertisements published, but with no result. And it was held that there was sufficient prima facie evidence to establish a title, depending on his death without issue during the lifetime of a person who died after the expiration of the seven years. Compare Gill v. Manly, 6 Ir. L. T. Rep. 57. But, the presumption does not arise where it is improbable there would have been any communication with home: Bowden v. Henderson, 2 Sm. & G. 360; Watson v. England, 14 Sim. 28; and see Re Smith, 31 L. J. P. & M. 182; M'Mahon v. M'Elroy, ubi supra; Re Mileham, 15 Beav. 507. There is no presumption as to the age at which a person died who is shown to have been alive at a given time: see Steph. Ev., c. 14, a. 99 (and as to death without issue, see Re Webb, ubi supra; Mullaly v. Walsh, I. R. 6 C. L. 314; Doe d. Banning v. Griffin, 15 East, 293; Re Hanby, 25 W. R. 427; or leaving no widow, Re Westbrook, W. N. 1873, 167). But the age and state of health at the time of disappearance are to be regarded: Gill v. Manly, 16 Ir. L. T. Rep. 57; Danby v. Danby, 5 Jur. N. S. 54; R. v. Harborne, 2 A. & E. 544; Re Beasney, L. R. 7 Eq. 498. In Gill v. Manly, 16 Ir. L. T. Rep. 57, the departed (not declared deceased) would, at the time of controversy, be only about sixty years old—the age at which the terrible

Duke of Alva first set out on his six years' career to crush the liberties of the Netherlands.

The circumstances appearing in the case last mentioned were as follows:—In April, 1842, a lease was made for 21 years, and during the life of Bryan Gill, then aged 21, or 24. In 1856 Bryan Gill went to Stevens's Hospital, Dublin, suffering from an affection in his eyes; and a short time afterwards some members of his family called, but could hear nothing of him. It was deposed that he had left this country in that year; and it was stated that, when leaving home, before going to the hospital, he had got £5 from his relatives. It did not appear that he had at any time subsequently asked for any assistance from them; and William Gill, his brother, had not heard from him since, and stated his belief that his other brothers and sisters had not heard from him. But the other brothers and sisters made no affidavit; nor did it appear what inquiries were instituted to discover his whereabouts; and it was sworn by or on behalf of the lessor that a bailiff had been informed that Bryan Gill was a mate on board an American vessel in March, 1875. During Bryan Gill's absence rent had been paid by William Gill, and received by the lessor, but not, so far as appeared, with knowledge that, as alleged, Bryan Gill was dead. William Gill (whose elder brother would have been entitled to the land, if Bryan Gill was still alive) claimed to be a "present tenant," under a tenancy from year to year, and served an originating notice to fix a judicial rent, under the Land Law Act, 1881, at a time when Bryan Gill, if still alive, would be about sixty years of age. On an application by the lessor to set aside the originating notice, it was contended that it lay on William Gill to show by evidence that there was sufficient ground for deeming that Bryan Gill was dead; and that it was, also, material for him to establish the time of the death, whether before or after the passing of the Act, in order to sustain his position as a "present tenant" from year to year within its provisions. If the evidence of the bailiff were to be received, it would appear that Bryan Gill was alive about six years and eleven months previous; it was objected that this was only the hearsay of a person who had not even made an affidavit; but, some degree of reliance seems to have been placed on it by the Court. The case of Prudential Assurance Co. v. Edmunds (2 App. Ca.) may be referred to, however, where the question, in 1874, was as to the death of Nutt, who had disappeared in 1867, and his sister and brother-in-law deposed that they had not heard of him for seven years, but, on cross-examination, admitted that a niece of Nutt's had said that in 1872 she saw a man at Melbourne whom she believed to be her uncle (in which the jury thought she might be mistaken), but he was lost in the crowd before she could speak to him. Kelly, C.B., declined to tell the jury that Nutt should be presumed dead, as having been absent for seven years without being heard of, but, on the contrary, charged strongly for the defendants on the ground that all the members of Nutt's family had "heard" what the niece had stated. The Court of Appeal, however, held this to be a misdirection, and, as the House of Lords could not agree on the subject, their decision stood affirmed. If then the bailiff be eliminated from Gill v. Manly, it stands as a case where a man had disappeared for no less than 26 years, unheard of. But, on the other hand, there was the circumstance (which rightly seems to have weighed mainly with the Court) that, while it was stated that there were brothers and sisters of Bryan Gill living, they had made no affidavit, nor did it appear what inquiries had been instituted to discover his whereabouts: see cases above collected. It was contended that, although there was no presumption of his death at a particular date, yet, if the presumption were that he was dead at the end of the first seven years, it should be presumed that he was dead before the commencement of the second seven years. But, Mr. Commissioner Litton held, rightly as we think, that sufficient evidence had not been brought forward to establish the death at all, so as to warrant any presumption. Indeed, if he quite got over that "affection in his eyes," Bryan Gill, aged 60 (the first grand climacteric not being till 63), may even be counted, at the present moment, among the readers of the IRISH LAW TIMES; but we do not think it was a case that admitted of any presumptio juris whether of life or death, although like the Corsair,

"Nor trace, nor tidings of his doom declare Where lives his grief, or perished his despair."

RECENT BILLS OF SALE CASES.

The true statement of the consideration in a bill of sale is largely a question of fact. The meaning of the words used in the bill may be a question of law in the sense that it is for the judge to determine it; but the advantage to the debtor, in consideration for which he really and truly gave the bill, must be a question of pure fact. A series of decisions on this subject is finding its way into the books, slender as is the basis of the whole superstructure. When the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, required the bill to "set forth the consideration," it probably occurred to one that the most formidable of the numerous obstacles to the validity of the bill was being established. When, however, the matter came before the Courts, there was a general agreement that the consideration set out must be the genuine consideration inducing the giving of the bill. We believe the point was not even taken that the bill itself, under the hand of the grantor, should be considered conclusive evidence that the consideration was as there stated. It is too late now to argue that evidence outside the document may be inquired into to show that the real consideration was something different from that stated, unless some adventurous person should carry the point to the House of Lords. The crucial question, therefore, being not so much the meaning of the consideration stated, but what in very truth was the consideration, the matter resolves itself, in most cases, into a question of fact, as is pointed out by the Master of the Rolls in the case of In re Spindler, ex parte Rolph, reported in the February number of the Law Journal Reports.

In that case Spindler assigned his household furniture and other goods to Nicholson in consideration, as expressed in the deed, "of the sum of £50 by the assignee paid to the assignor at or immediately before the execution hereof." The bill was executed on March 23rd, and on that day a letter was signed by Spindler directed to Nicholson, and asking him to deduct £3 10s, his expenses in preparing the bill, and to pay £25, a quarter's rent due for Spindler's house. This letter was evidently required by Nicholson in order to justify his not paying the whole £50, the consideration stated in the bill. In fact he handed Spindler only £31 10s. Of the balance he kept £3 10s. for his own services, and on March 30 paid £25 to Spindler's landlord for rent due on the 25th. The conclusion arrived at by the judges was that the preparation of the bill, the retention of the rent, and the advance of £21 10s. was the true consideration for the bill of sale, and not "£50 paid at or immediately before the execution," although those three items came in all to £50. The Master of the Rolls arrives at this conclusion by, first of all, eliminating £25 from the £50, because this sum never was in fact paid to the grantor, and he never had the chance of retaining it, the grantee not trusting him to do so, but protecting his own security by having in hand wherewith to keep the landlord from distraining on the goods. He then criticises the words "paid at or immediately before the execution," pointing out that the £25 were not paid till seven days after the execution. Some previous cases in which the statement of the consideration was upheld require to be considered. In the case of In re Haynes, ex parte The National Mercantile Bank, 49 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 62, decided by the Court of Appeal, the bill was stated to be in consideration of an advance of £2,050 at the execution, when, in fact, £550 of this sum was handed back to the bank for the purpose of taking up some bills on which the grantor was liable to the bank. The money was paid in notes and gold to the grantor, and handed back to the grantee. The Chief Judge in Bankruptcy pronounced this "a comedy," but Lord Justice James was unable to see it in that light. The Master of the Rolls does not approve or question this decision, but remarks that the Court of Appeal decided as a matter of fact that the real consideration was the same as the consideration stated. In the case of In re Rogers, ex parte Challinor, £560 was stated to be the consideration; but £40 was retained as the solicitor's costs of the bill, and £20 for a valuation of the goods. The Court of Appeal, again overruling the Chief Judge, held this to be a sufficient statement of the consideration. The Master of the Rolls considers that this case presents more difficulty, but he approves of the finding of fact under the circumstances that the real consideration was £560, but the mere form of handing the £60 backwards and forwards was not gone through. The later case of Hamilton v. Chaine, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 456, is referred to by Lord Justice Lindley, but is not referred to by the Master of the Rolls or Lord Justice Lush. It is a case in which the Court of Appeal gave a strict construction to the requirement that the consideration should be stated; and it is difficult to reconcile it with Re Haynes, on which case Lord Justice Brett, in his judgment in Hamilton v. Chaine, throws some doubt. In the last-mentioned case the consideration was stated to be £700, and a cheque for that amount was actually received by the grantor and cashed. He, however, returned £7 10s. and a promissory note for £10 for commission and expenses. However expedient it might be to forbid a proceeding of this kind, a misstatement of consideration is but a slender basis on which to found the decision. We confess to feeling sympathy with the more masculine views expressed by Lord Justice James in preference to those of Lord Justice Brett and the Chief Judge. Those, however, who are concerned in a bill of sale, will do well to take to heart the more stringent views of the latter judges, and give the ultimate destination of every penny expressed to be advanced in the bill of sale. When money is retained to meet a future liability—a temptation sometimes felt in respect of interest—all the judicial commentators agree that this cannot be truly stated as advanced, and if so stated, the bill is void.—Law Journal.

JURY TRIAL—CHARGING THE JURY.*

We have an excellent work on each of the above-stated subjects, which for fairness, completeness, learning, and ability may be recommended to the American lawyer.

It is not our purpose to review the above-named works, but to discuss some very important points contained therein, and in connexion with the subjects—Jury Trial, and Charging the Jury; and they are so connected, and bear such relation one to the other, that it is necessary they should be considered, not by comparison; but by a united view of their connexion and constant bearing one on the other.

(1) Proffatt on Jury Trial.

(2) Charging the Jury (Thompson).

The history of jury trial is very interesting and instructive, showing in its rise and development, its influence in reducing the rigor of English jurisprudence, and tempering with justice and mercy the severity of English law in the administration of civil and personal rights.

Proffatt truly remarks: "The popular courts of the Anglo-Saxons were the means of cultivating, diffusing, and maintaining a spirit of freedom, order, and self-government, and in these courts we find the characteristic element of their jurisprudence, and from them, as has been shown to be the case generally with popular assemblies, there arose those special tribunals to which we must look to find the origin and idea of the jury."<sup>1</sup>

The trial by jury may be considered one of the gems of the great bulwark of English liberty—magna charta—secured by the memorable expression that no freeman shall be hurt in either his person or property—nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum vel per legem terræ. The leading commentators on English law refer to this instrument as the security of trial by jury.<sup>2</sup>

The gradual development of jury trial shows that it was brought into use as a matter of convenience, then recognised under some rulers as a concession, until it finally came to be claimed as a right through judicial precedent, and finally by the enactments of the royal charter, and gradually acquired character and form under the conditions and pressing wants of society and the developments of law.

The trial of Sir Nicholas Throckmorton,<sup>3</sup> in the reign of Mary, illustrates the force of a jury trial at that day, and the necessity of such an institution, while at the same time it illustrates this truth: that the jury, to be of sufficient service in protecting individual liberty and civic rights, must be surrounded and supported by free, untrammelled popular action; and to be efficient and useful, it must be actuated by that public spirit and a fearless conscientiousness sufficient to resist under all circumstances every feature of despotism. Nevertheless, the true functions of the jury, while it is independent in the exercise of its legitimate authority, are not, as we will discuss in a subsequent portion of this paper, independent of or superior to the courts under which it acts.

With the downfall of the Stuarts, and the abolition of the Star Chamber, began the independence and enlarged province of the jury, which has made it one of the most valued and cherished of England's free institutions.

The trial by jury has flourished in all free communities and endeared itself to popular regard, and we can easily see the reason in examining its relation to civil government; the character and functions of the jury are so nearly allied to the moral and social condition of a people that its leading features will always be influenced by the spirit of liberty as reflected in the public institutions; and in its own province it will also influence the administration of law in obedience to a free and liberal estimation of personal and civil rights. Yet it must be remembered that in the history of trial by jury the system is influenced to a great extent for its worth and character in a free State by the character of the people among whom it is established. Streams are not purer than their source.

The English Colonists settled here with a strong love for the trial by jury. Its history in the formation of the Constitution of the United States is not only interesting, but the views of some of the public men of the early days of the Republic instructive. It was provided by the Constitution of the United States (Art. III, sec. 2) that the trial by jury of all crimes, except impeachment, should be preserved; but it was silent in regard to trials in civil cases. The reason of this omission is supposed to be owing to the diversity of practice in the different colonies which made it difficult to adopt a measure which would command general approval.<sup>4</sup> The convention that drew up the Constitution was greatly divided on the subject.<sup>5</sup> It was thought best to say nothing in relation to the trial by jury at the time of the framing the Constitution, for the reason "that the changes which are continually happening in the affairs of society may render a different mode of determining questions of property preferable in many cases in which that mode of trial now prevails."<sup>6</sup>

The English sentiments in favour of trial by jury had fully impressed the Colonists. It was said by the Supreme Court (Story, J. delivering the opinion): "One of the strongest objections originally taken to the Constitution was the want of an express provision securing the right of trial by jury in civil cases."<sup>7</sup>

The impatience and anxiety of the people in reference to this omission were exhibited in conventions and resolutions, until it was incorporated in the seventh amendment to the Constitution, as proposed by the first Congress in 1789, and ratified by a sufficient vote of the States by 1791, which extended the right of trial by jury in all suits at common law where the value in controversy exceeds twenty dollars, but this provision is confined to the Federal judiciary by express terms—"in any court of the United States."

The trial by jury is now universally recognised in the States, though some have restricted the right in criminal cases to graver offences than in others.

In discussing this question, we wish to refer to the diminished influence and powers of juries at the present time in England and the United States—especially in the Federal courts—compared with its former history in the early part of the present century; and this is clearly illustrated by the force and language used and expressed in instructions to the jury.

Forsyth remarks: "An institution like the jury, existing for ages amongst a people, cannot but influence the national character," and on this subject he appropriates a chapter: "The jury considered as a social, political, and judicial institution."<sup>8</sup> An examination of this subject, as treated by Forsyth and Proffatt will fully illustrate the beneficial influence resulting from this institution alike in England and America, in a social and political sense, as well as its judicial bearing on the functions of the court; but it is evident from its history that the judicial authority and power have been modified from time to time through the legislative departments, and this produced from the social influence bearing on the tendency and practical application of the jury system.<sup>9</sup>

In this article we will discuss the relative changes which have occurred in the judicial status of the jury in England and America; we will endeavour to point out the distinctions existing in the character of the charges to the jury from an English and an American court, State and Federal—a difference, it may be observed, which has been produced in a measure by legislation; yet in many instances judicial dicta have established authority going beyond the organic, constitutional or legal functions of the courts; and this may occur from a disposition on the part of the judiciary to enhance its powers, and dictate through the medium of the legal form of "charges to the jury" the determination of the verdict.

The profession is well acquainted with the exalted eulogium of Blackstone on the trial by jury as "the glory of the English law," and also with the lucid demonstrations of the existing defects at the time he published his Commentaries.<sup>7</sup>

The power of the courts, through the charge, has increased very much in England since the days of Blackstone. We will not weary the learned reader by

(1) Proffatt on Jury Trial, p. 19, section 14.
(2) 4 Black. Com., 349; Lingard, vol. 2, ch. 14.
(3) Howell's State Trials, vol. 1, p. 870.

(1) Proff. Trial by Jury, section 83.
(2) Story Com on Const., sec. 1763.
(3) Federalist, No. 83, Article by Hamilton.
(4) Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet 446.

(5) Hist. of Trial by Jury, chap. xviii.
(6) On this point, vide M. de Tocqueville—De la Démocratie en Amérique, Tom. 11, 184-186.
(7) Black. Com., vol. 2, pp. 378-9-81, 2, 3—Wendell's edition.

tracing the development of the power of the court over the jury in England, though its history is interesting and instructive to the American jurist in many respects.

Thompson has accurately said, speaking of the character of instructions given by an English court: "In that country the judges, in summing up, are in the constant habit of intimating to the jury their opinions upon the weight of the evidence; and even where the question is purely one of fact, it is no ground for a new trial that the judge expressed his opinion in strong terms upon the facts, provided he left the jury to the exercise of their discretion."<sup>1</sup>

Brougham remarks on this subject, in reference to the course of Lord Ellenborough: "Upon each case that came before him he had an opinion, and, while he left the decision to the jury, he intimated how he thought himself. This manner of performing the office of a judge is now generally followed and most commonly approved."<sup>2</sup>

It has been held in England that the judge has an undoubted right to state to the jury his own impressions of the evidence, even though he do it in strong terms.<sup>3</sup>

Thompson says: "In the Federal courts a rule obtains similar to that in the English courts. In these courts the propriety of the judges leaving to the jury questions of fact which are fairly in doubt, is not questioned. He may, if in his discretion he judge proper, sum up the facts to the jury, as the English judges are in the habit of doing, and submit them to the free judgment of the jury, together with proper instructions as to the inferences of law deducible therefrom. But he should, in all cases, take care to separate the law from the facts, and to leave the latter in unequivocal terms to the judgment of the jury, as their true and peculiar province."<sup>4</sup> He may not only thus present to the jury the facts proved, but he may give his opinion as to those facts for their consideration. But, as the jurors are the triers of the facts, such an explication of opinion by the court should be so guarded as to leave the jury free to exercise their own judgment. They should be made distinctly to understand that the instruction was not given as a point of law by which they were to be governed, but as a mere opinion as to the facts, to which they should give no more weight than it was entitled to.<sup>5</sup> The same doctrine was reiterated in a subsequent case, preserving the same distinction. The judge's opinion on a matter of fact may properly be given, but it is not conclusive, and is to receive at their hands no more consideration than they think it entitled to."<sup>6</sup>

"It is not error for a judge to give his opinion to the jury on the weight of evidence."<sup>7</sup>

"That he must not instruct them on the sufficiency of evidence to show a controverted fact or as to the credibility of witnesses."<sup>8</sup>

"That he should not give such instructions as to supersede an inquiry into facts by the jury" is fully explained in the case of Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. v. Knapp.<sup>9</sup>

The distinguished author of "Charging the Jury" has very carefully and fairly presented the history of this question as it arose, and has progressed in our Federal judiciary. We make reference to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, of later date than the publication of his essay.

"A judge has no right to submit a question when the state of the evidence forbids it. Michigan Bank v. Eldred, 9 Wall. 844. On the contrary, where there is an entire absence of testimony, or it is all one way, and its conclusiveness is free from doubt, it is competent for the court to direct the jury to find accordingly. Merchants' Bank v. State Bank, 10 id. 604. The practice condemned in Michigan Bank v. Eldred is fraught with evil. It tends to create doubts which otherwise might not, and ought not to exist, and may confuse the minds of the jury and lead them to wrong conclusions."<sup>1</sup>

Thompson is inclined to favour a stronger exercise of power on the part of the court than has yet been sanctioned by judicial authority of the Supreme Court. He says: "Our books of reports are filled with decisions on the propriety of giving or refusing certain evidence, with scarcely any attention paid to the question whether the verdict is right—decisions which, in the eyes of an English jurist, would look trivial in the extreme. With us "the province of the jury" is a sort of sacred realm, surrounded by the barrier of a superstitious veneration; while in reality, it is in many cases a judicial White Friars, whose privilege of sanctuary is pernicious to the best interests of society."—Introduction, p. vii.

Thompson asserts what is known to every judge, speaking of the weight and effect of testimony, and how it should affect the cause:—"The judge, by reason of his experience in such matters, is, in ordinary cases, much better qualified to sift testimony and to weigh evidence than the jury. He is an expert in such matters; almost as much as in matters of law. This being so, his aid should never be withheld from the jury in determining the questions of fact arising in the trial of causes. It should be his office, and not merely his privilege, to sum up the evidence and to give the jury the benefit of his opinions as to the facts of the case."—Introduction, p. vii.

The author says, in the body of his essay, writing of the Federal Court, "It is the general practice for the presiding judge at a non pro trial, in his charge to the jury, to take up the facts and circumstances in proof, explain their bearings on the controverted points, and declare what are the legal rights of the parties arising out of them."<sup>2</sup> He cites, Express Co. v. Kountz.<sup>3</sup>

The author also, following the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, says: "We must accept it as the settled rule of the Supreme Court of the United States, that when the judge is clear of doubt that a verdict ought to be rendered either for the plaintiff or defendant, and that it would be his duty to set a contrary verdict aside, he ought to instruct the jury so to find. On the other hand, such a direction cannot properly be given to the jury unless the evidence is such as to leave no room for doubt that it is the duty of the jury to find accordingly."<sup>4</sup>

On this point he cites Pence v. Langdon,<sup>5</sup> which uses the following language:—"The jury should not be instructed to find for the defendant, unless the evidence is such as to leave no doubt that it is their duty to return a verdict in his favour."

Every legal view from Thompson is worthy of careful consideration, and demands the respect of the profession, and while the judicial grade of the charge to the jury has not reached by general agreement of the decisions in the United States, the recognition of the right of the courts to influence the jury according to the particular bearing of testimony, and in some respects we do not agree with the author to the extent he goes, yet we concur with him when he says "the judge, by reason of his experience in such matters (alluding to the weight of testimony), is, in ordinary cases, much better qualified to sift testimony and to weigh evidence than the jury."—Introduction viii. The

(1) Thomp. "Charging the Jury," sec. 41; Bolcher v. Prettie, 4 Moore & Scott, 295; Poizer v. Steels, 5 Scott, 28; Bolarte v. Melville, 7 Barn & Cres 430, 435.

(2) Brougham's Miscellanies—"Public Characters," p. 89.

(3) Thompson, "Charging the Jury," sec. 41; Davidson v. Starley, 3 Scott N. R. 46.

(4) M' Lanahan v. Universal Ins. Co., 1 Pet. 170.

(5) Tracy v. Swartworth, 10 Pet. 80.

(6) Gaves v. Stiles, 14 Pet. 322.

(7) Michel v. Harmony, 13 How., U. S., 115; Richardson v. City of Boston, 24 How., U. S., 188; United States v. Fourteen Packages, 11 G. B. 245; Conseguia v. Willings, 1 Pet. C. C. 225.

(8) Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. v. Knapp, 9 Pet. 841, 2 Pet. 187.

(9) Charging Jury, Thompson, sec. 42, 9 Pet. 841.

(1) M'Gwire v. Corwine, U. S. R., S. C. 111. October Term, 1879. Michigan Bank v. Eldred, and Merchants' Bank v. State Bank, are cited by Thompson—pp. 89, 88, 93.

(2) Thompson "Charging the Jury," p. 118.

(3) 8 Wall. 342, 353.

(4) Thompson, "Charging the Jury," p. 28.

(5) 99 U. S. 578. For cases leaning towards the old rule, Thompson refers to Drakely v. Gregg, 3 Wall. 242; Hickman v. Jones, 9 Wall. 197.

general principle thus stated must nevertheless, in its application, be subjected to the practical bearing of the testimony in the case.

THE CHARGE SHOULD BE ON THE LAW OF THE CASE.

In many States the law in relation to instructions to the jury is that the charge should be on the law of the case. This presents a point not directly discussed by Thompson in his work "Charging the Jury."

It is evident in nearly every trial submitted to the jury that the testimony controls the law of the case; the verdict must be according to law, the application of which is in accordance with the testimony.

"The purpose of instructions is to give to the jury a statement of the law applicable to the particular case, to declare what presumptions of law are applicable to the facts, and to declare the legal effects of certain evidence."

"The purpose of an instruction is to assist the jury in correctly applying the law to the facts of the case." Thus it appears, the authorities are satisfactory that, the law of the case being governed by the testimony, it is a logical sequence that the court must connect the instructions on law points in obedience to the testimony. On this point Thompson and Proffatt agree. The former sustains this view by the clear and forcible manner in which he has treated the question, that it is an "error to lay down abstract propositions of law;" to sustain which he has cited in a note more than one hundred authorities from American Reports. In explanation of his views, and the accuracy of his conclusions, he cites approvingly "the fair test of the propriety of a charge cannot be whether, in the abstract, it is right. It must be taken in view of the evidence charged, on which the jury is required to respond. A charge in the abstract, as a mere legal proposition, might be perfectly inoperative and harmless; when, however, referred to a certain set of facts and circumstances in proof, it might have a most important and conclusive influence on the jury in forming their verdict."

It has been very well said, "We hold in all cases an instruction—unless it be upon an abstract proposition of law, which the court may give or refuse at its pleasure—must have some evidence on which to base it and spring out naturally from the evidence."

It has been held and uniformly sustained, "though the decisions of questions of fact belongs to the jury, yet, when the court is asked for instructions, based upon evidence, it must judge of the relevancy, and to some extent of the definiteness and certainty of that evidence, but should avoid giving any instruction upon a question which the evidence does not fairly allow to be raised."

"It is no invasion of the privilege of the jury for the court to present to them its views of the nature, bearing, tendency and weight of evidence."

The above cited cases sustain the position, beyond controversy, that instructions on the "law of the case" must, as far as the evidence is applicable, be stated by the court. Especially is this true under the views presented alike by Thompson and Proffatt, in relation to instructions not containing mere abstract propositions of law. In this connexion we deem it proper to say the court should never invade the province of the jury.

No question is of more importance, nor addresses itself with more interest to the court than this. It is apparent that the English courts now recognise what in former years would have been a serious encroachment on the province of the jury; and that the Federal Judiciary has in its Circuit and District Departments exhibited a leaning towards the policy of the English courts; yet in the Supreme Court of the United States the old American land-marks are preserved with fidelity to the earlier days of the independent functions of the jury.

The position of the State courts is, however, more decided in maintaining the independent relations of the jury than the lower Federal tribunals.

The practice introduced in modern times of drawing the jurors, with unlimited right of challenge, for cause has, and will continue to have a beneficial and purifying influence in every department of our judiciary where the jury is used.

We close this article with a reference to an opinion delivered by one of our most eminent and learned Chief Justices of State courts. He says:—

"It is of the highest importance in the administration of justice, that the court should never invade the province of the jury; should give them no intimation as to his opinion upon the facts, but should leave them wholly unbiased by any such intimation to ascertain the facts for themselves." And again, the Chief Justice observes, in the same opinion, "But it pertains to the judge to declare the law applicable to the case. He has nothing further to do with the facts than as furnishing the basis of his charge, while the jury are the triers of the facts under the law, as given them in charge by the judge, who, upon contested questions of fact, should sedulously avoid giving the least intimation as to his own opinion."

The force, truth, and excellence of this opinion of Chilton, C.J., commends itself to the Bench, and should be carefully read by State and Federal judges. We would call attention to it on another point which is discussed in this article, that notwithstanding the requirement that the jury is the judge of the facts in the case, and the jury must be charged according to the "law of the case" to what extent they must form "the basis of his charge." This can be done without any leaning on the part of the judge to either side, or influencing the jury beyond the force of the law.—Virginia Law Journal.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—VII

(Continued from page 116, ante.)

LEASES.

Effect of Provision as to Relief against Forfeiture.

The Act, by its provisions for relief against forfeiture (sect. 14) makes a very considerable difference in the position of landlords and tenants, but in general there will be little alteration in the form of leases, as the section cannot be excluded by stipulation: sect. 14 (9).

Sect. 14 does not affect the law relating to re-entry, or forfeiture, or relief in case of nonpayment of rent: sect. 14 (8). Nonpayment of rent is dealt with by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, s. 1.

Breach of covenant to insure falls within this section; and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, s. 2, and 22 & 23 Vict. c. 85, ss. 4 to 9, under which relief for breach of covenant to insure was formerly obtained, are now repealed by sect. 14 (7) and Part I. of Schedule II. to the Act. The repeal, however, does not affect past and pending transactions (sect. 71). By sect. 14 (6) the section does not extend to assignment by, or bankruptcy of, the lessee, nor to certain covenants in mining leases.

The following remarks therefore apply to covenants to insure, but not to covenants to pay rent, or to the covenants excepted by sect. 14 (6).

However stringently the lease may be worded, the lessor cannot bring any action to enforce a forfeiture for breach of covenant without giving previous notice, in writing (sect. 67), in accordance with sect. 14 (1).

(1) Proffatt on Jury Trial, s. 311.

(2) Sawyer v. Sauer, 10 Kan. 470.

(3) Lipscomb, J. Thompson v. Shannon, 9 Tex. 538. Cited by Thompson in his work "Charging the Jury," p. 91.

(4) Galena, etc., R. Co. v. Jacobs, 20 Ill. 478, 486; Parker v. Fergus, 82 Ill. 419. Cited by Thompson, p. 93.

(5) Roach v. Bunting, 18 Pet. 313.

(6) United States v. Fourteen Packages of Pins, 41 U.S. 236.

(1) Hair v. Little, 28 Ala. 236. Opinion by Chilton, C.J.

Also if the lessor demands as compensation for the breach of covenant an unreasonable sum, he will run the risk of being made liable for costs, if the court is of opinion that the conduct of the lessor has been vexatious: sect. 14 (2).

However, in all ordinary cases, leases should be drawn as usual, and the provisions for re-entry on breach, or non-performance, of the covenants inserted in the ordinary way.

Sometimes it may be advisable to specify a sum to be paid by the tenant on breach of some particular covenant, as liquidated damages. But it should be remembered that if the court considers the sum is really inserted as a penalty, it will relieve against it: (see Chitty Contracts, 10th ed. 807; Pollock Contracts, 1st ed. 419; Sloman v. Walter, 2 L. C. Eq. 1094; Protection Loan Co. v. Grice, 43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 564; L. Rep. 5 Q. B. Div. 592).

The section is so framed as to exclude the method which no doubt would have been adopted to evade the Act. By sect. 14 (5) a lease limited until the lessee commits some breach, is construed as a lease with a condition of re-entry, and relief given accordingly.

The only safe way of escaping the operation of the section is to grant merely a tenancy at will, and then to avoid doing anything which will convert the tenancy at will into a yearly tenancy: (see Tudor L. C., Conv., 3rd ed. 22; Woodfall, 208). In some cases, where the lessor is also mortgagee, his position will be strengthened by the insertion in the mortgage deed of covenants which occur in the lease: see sects. 19, 20, iii.

It is not improbable that, where it is essential to the lessor to enforce the covenants of the lease, and where the lessee insists on some further security than a mere tenancy at will can give him, some attempt will be made to avoid this section by the lessor granting only a tenancy at will, but at the same time entering into a bond with the lessee in a substantial sum, the bond being conditioned to become void if the lessor permits the lessee to remain in possession until either years have elapsed, or there has been a breach or non-performance of the covenants by the lessee. Probably the covenants would be set out in the bond. For forms of bonds see David, vol. v. part ii. pp. 269, 279. We give no opinion as to the efficacy of such a plan.

As to substituting a license for a lease with a view to try and avoid sect. 14, see below.

Although this section will make, in general, very little alteration in the form of leases, it will greatly alter proceedings for forfeiture. The section applies to leases made before the Act, sect. 14 (9); and compare Page v. Bennett (2 Giff. 117; 29 L. J. 898, Ch.).

In an action for re-entry or forfeiture, the giving of the precedent notice required by sect. 14 (1) should be alleged in the statement of claim, and it should be stated that it was given in writing (sect. 67).

It will also probably affect actions for specific performance of an agreement for a lease, where the lessee has entered and has done or omitted something which would have caused a forfeiture had there been a lease. In such a case the court would not previously have granted the intended lessee a decree for specific performance (Dart, 5th ed. 1088; Seton, 1323). Probably, however, now the court would grant specific performance to the intended lessee on the same conditions as it would have granted relief to an actual one: Prideaux, 11th ed. p. 19; see, however, the definition of lease in sect. 14 (3), and compare sect. 18 (17).

It was not unusual, in leases containing provisions for re-entry on breach of covenant, to insert some provision for the protection of the lessee. Thus, in David, v. 189, will be found a proviso that the power of re-entry shall not, except in certain cases, be exercised without six months' notice: (compare David, v. 156, 392).

Now, however, provisions of this kind will seldom be really necessary, as in most cases the lessee will be sufficiently protected by the section: Prideaux, 11th ed. 64, note.

Leases by Mortgage.

A considerable difference will be made by the Act in leases by mortgagor where the mortgage is made after the 31st Dec., 1881, sect. 18 (16), unless there is some provision in the deed excluding or modifying the Act. A mortgagor in possession will have power to grant an agricultural or occupation lease for twenty-one years, and a building lease for ninety-nine years, sect. 18 (1). So that, in many cases, a valid lease may be made by the mortgagor alone without joining the mortgagee, which was formerly essential to the validity of the lease as against the mortgagee. For old forms, see Davidson, vol. v. 159; Woodfall, 852; Prideaux, 11th ed. 52.

Of course a lease, so made by a mortgagor alone, must strictly follow the requirements of the Act (sect. 18). And the mortgagor must, for his own safety, deliver the counterpart of the lease to the first mortgagee, sect. 18 (8) (11). Compare form of lease under a power (David, v. 166; Prideaux, 11th ed. 53); and leases under Settled Estates Act, 1877 (Woodfall, 858). Where the mortgage was made before 1st Jan., 1882, sect. 18 does not apply, unless there is an agreement "in writing" that it shall apply, sect. 18 (16). Messrs. Wolstenholme and Turner give a form of such an agreement (p. 181). Where the mortgage is by deed, it will be most prudent to have this agreement also under seal.

In cases where a considerable amount of land is likely to be leased, and the mortgagee has sufficient confidence in the mortgagor it will sometimes be found more convenient to incorporate the statutory leasing powers by such an agreement, than to make the mortgagee join in every lease. The statutory powers may be incorporated wholly or partially: sect. 18 (16).

General Words.

The general words may now usually be omitted from leases, made by deed, of land and houses, in reliance on sect. 6. The word "conveyance," used in that section, includes a lease under seal by virtue of sect. 2 (v.). "Land" bears the extended meaning given to the word by sect. 2 (ii.). In any case where, before the Act, there would have been special mention of any appurtenance or easement, such special mention should continue.

Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment.

This will be inserted as usual. Sect. 7 does not apply to leases at a rent: sect. 7 (5).

(To be continued.)

CLUBS AND THE OUTSIDE WORLD.

With the great extension of the club system the courts of law have been of late increasingly occupied with cases relating to the laws and regulations of clubs. The majority of club cases that have been brought before the courts recently deal with the relations of members of clubs inter se, particularly in regard to the power of expulsion—a power frequently exercised with more gusto than sense of justice. A smaller class of cases are those in which the club, as a whole, is brought into contact with the outside world, as, for instance, with the licensing laws. This week another branch of the subject, important in itself, and not without bearing on the licensing question, has been brought before the courts in the case of Calcutt v. Ross, heard before Mr. Justice Lopes and a jury on March 6. In this case the plaintiff, a butcher, brought an action against Mr. Ross and some other gentlemen, members of the committee of the Portland Club, to recover £90, the price of meat supplied to the club, and also £20 lent to the steward of the club, who had embezzled money and absconded. This steward, it appeared, had really been the caterer of the club. He had acted in the capacity known at Oxford as maniple—that is, he had undertaken to supply the members at a fixed tariff, he himself providing the supplies, and taking all the risk and profit of the transaction. The only powers that the committee possessed were those of fixing the tariff and seeing that the contract made by the steward was carried out to the satisfaction of the members. Under these circumstances, it was clear that neither the committee nor the club were liable for the failure of the steward to pay for the provisions he had ordered. The club being, as all clubs are, a "ready-money concern," the individual members who had paid on the spot for the provisions they had eaten could not be expected to pay over again. The committee could not be personally liable for the goods which they had neither themselves ordered nor had authorised the steward to order on their credit. The £20 in question was lent by the plaintiff to cash the cheques for members, and was plainly a personal trust of the steward. The committee supplied the steward with £250 for that purpose, and he had no authority to exceed it. Upon this evidence, which was not disputed, a verdict was entered for the defendants.

It is to be observed that this case was a somewhat exceptional one. Owing to the arrangement with the steward the club was a quasi-proprietary club. In proprietary clubs it is distinctly understood by all parties that the club is a private speculation of the proprietor. He advances the money, and, if the club is successful, he repays himself out of the entrance fees and subscriptions; if unsuccessful he probably goes bankrupt, or compounds with his creditors, or, as in the present case, absconds. He is an independent person acting on his own behalf, and personally liable for all the expenses he incurs in purveying provisions or otherwise, with no right of contribution over against any persons who are members of the club or the committee, unless, of course, they have expressly lent their names and authority to obtain him credit. In a members' club the management is placed in the hands of a committee chosen by the members. They select and dismiss servants; order furniture, books, papers, and provisions to meet members' requirements; and generally are responsible for the domestic economy of the club. Ordinarily, therefore, the committee empower the steward to give orders for goods to be supplied to the club, and generally become personally liable for such orders. So far as regards provisions they have no right of contribution over against the members. For, as Lord St. Leonards said, in the St. James's Club case, 2 De G. M. & G. 388: "The member pays on the spot, and were he also liable to those supplying the articles he would pay twice over." This is well illustrated by the case of Fleming v. Hector, 6 Law J. Rep. Exch. 43, 2 M. & W. 172. A club called the Westminster Reform Club had been started, but was dissolved through want of support. The committee made a call on the members of 11 guineas apiece to meet the liabilities of the club. The defendants and other members, who had been dissatisfied with the management of the club, refused to pay. They were then sued by a tradesman for the price of wine and stores, knives, forks, &c., supplied to the club. One of the defendants had himself been on the committee, but he was not shown ever to have acted. The Lord Chief Baron, Lord Abinger, pointed out that, unless the rules of the club empowered the committee to pledge the credit of the club, the committee had no power to bind the members, nor even to bind themselves as a body. He decided that the case rested on the law of principal and agent, clubs being in no sense a partnership. If clubs were partnerships one member would have power to bind the others. But, not being so, the committee could only as agents bind the members as principals, if they had authority to do so. As members' clubs are on the ready-money system it is probable that in none have the committee power to pledge the credit of the club.

Even to charge the committee, as a whole, it is necessary for creditors of the club to establish agency on the part of those actually giving the order. It is, in fact, a question for the jury. Thus, in Todd v. Emly, 10 Law J. Rep. Exch. 262, M. & W. 505, the house steward ordered wine for the club by the authority of the committee. Two members of the committee were sued for the price, and it was held that the question for the jury was not whether all the members of the committee had by their known course of dealing held themselves out as personally liable, but whether, as a question of principal and agent, the two members sued had individually given authority to the steward to order the wine in question. So, in Delanay v. Stewart, 2 Stark, 416, Stewart was sued for the price of plate supplied to the General Service Club, of which he and R. and another were the managing committee. R. had ordered the plate, being previously known to Delanay, and was debited in Delanay's books in his own name with the whole amount. The jury, however, found that credit was given to all three, and that they were jointly liable. Of course, as between themselves, if the one who actually paid could establish that he acted on the authority of the others, he would have a right to contribution over against them, even though, as regards the tradesman, credit was given to one alone. A club committee, should, therefore, be careful not to exceed their powers or pledge their credit beyond the funds in hand, or they may find themselves saddled with a heavy responsibility, owing to a failure of funds or an embezzling steward. On the other hand, it behoves tradesmen and others, who supply money or money's worth to a club, to ascertain that the servant, or other person giving the order, has authority to do so, or is himself a person of substance enough to meet a personal liability. It should be remembered that clubs are not partnerships or companies, but simply a conglomeration of individuals, whose relations are regulated entirely by their written contract—the rules by which they have agreed to bind themselves. The bearing of this result on the law of licensing perhaps requires explanation. A members' club, as was recently decided in Graff v. Evans, noted in this week's Notes of Cases, is not liable to penalties for a sale, because there is not a "sale" in respect of one's own property. But it may be asked, if the members of a club cannot ordinarily be sued on a contract for the supply of their wine, how can the wine be theirs when supplied? The answer is that, although they do not authorise their credit to be pledged, they do authorise goods to be purchased for them, and they provide money to pay for it. The goods when bought are, therefore, theirs. They are not partners, but joint owners of the property of the club.—Law Journal.

DISCHARGE OF JURY BEFORE VERDICT ON INDICTMENT.

The proceedings at the recent assizes holden at Hertford, before Mr. Justice Grove, were interrupted by a very peculiar and unusual incident. A prisoner was being tried pursuant to the statute, 9 Geo. IV., c. 69, s. 9, for being concerned with two other persons in taking game by night, armed with a gun. Suddenly, and whilst the case for the prosecution was still incomplete, one of the jury stood up and intimated that they were all agreed that there was no case made out against the prisoner. Mr. Justice Grove said: "If that is so we need not proceed further, but at the same time it would have been better, gentlemen, if you had waited until the case for the prosecution was closed." At this stage a juror stated he had not agreed to a verdict of not guilty, and had not authorised the other juror to make any statement to that effect. The juror who had first spoken then said, "I shall never convict the prisoner." Mr. Justice Grove, after some deliberation and reference to the authorities, said: "This is a most unfortunate incident. I shall discharge the jury, and take the defendant's own recognisance to come and take his trial at the next practicable assizes; that is, at the next assizes at which prisoners on bail are triable."

We think there can be no doubt that the learned judge was acting strictly in accordance with precedent in taking this course, spite of the authority of Sir Edward Coke, who wrote: "A jury sworn and charged in case of life or member, cannot be discharged by the Court, or any other, but they ought to give their verdict:" (Co. Litt. 227 b). This passage seems to ignore the death or serious and sudden illness of a juror, so that we find a qualified statement by Blackstone, the words "except in case of evident necessity" being added.

The question came before the Court in Reg. v. Charlesworth (1 Best & Smith, 460), which was an information by the Attorney-General for bribery at an election for a member of Parliament. At the trial a material and necessary witness for the Crown refused to give evidence, and was committed for contempt, whereupon, on application of counsel on behalf of the Crown (the defendant objecting), the judge (Mr. Justice Hill) discharged the jury from giving any verdict. The defendant applied for leave to add a plea puis darren continuance to the record setting out the facts; this was refused upon the ground that there was a plea of "not guilty" already on the record, and that to grant the application would be to permit a violation of the rule of pleading as to duplicity. The Court, however, gave permission that the above facts as to the discharge of the jury should be placed on the record as part of the proceedings, and the matter then came before the Court on a rule to show cause why judgment should not be entered for the defendant quod eat sine die. The rule was discharged, the Court holding that, whether the judge had power to discharge the jury or not, the defendant could not claim final judgment, and that there ought to be a new trial, it being open to the defendant to take advantage of his objection by writ of error. In the course of the arguments, which are very lengthy and display a prodigious amount of learning, there was a great deal of extra-judicial opinion as to the power of a judge to discharge a jury, and the weight of opinion points to the conclusion that such power exists undoubtedly in law, and is limited only by the discretion of the judge. Reference was more than once made to an Irish case (Reg. v. Conway and Lynch, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 149), in which the majority of the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland held that the discharge of the jury after they had been kept twenty-four hours in deliberation could not be justified, and that consequently the prisoner was not liable to be put a second time on his trial. From the judgment in this case Mr. Justice Crampton dissented, and in Reg. v. Charlesworth both Chief Justice Cockburn and Mr. Justice Blackburn said that, though the learned judge had failed to convince the majority of the judges in the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland, he had entirely convinced them.

The whole matter came before the Court of Queen's Bench again in the year 1866 on a writ of error, the case being that of Charlotte Winsor v. The Queen (L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 289). Here the record of conviction was for felony (murder), and showing that, on the trial of the indictment, the jury being unable to agree, the judge discharged them; that the prisoner was given in charge of another jury at the next assizes, and a verdict of guilty returned and judgment and sentence passed. Held, that the judge had a discretion to discharge the jury, which a court of error could not review; that the discharge of the first jury without a verdict was not equivalent to an acquittal; that a second jury process might issue, and that there was no error on the record. This decision was subsequently affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber. Chief Justice Erle, in giving the judgment of the Court, said: "With reference to the facts on this record we hold that the judge at the first trial had by law power to discharge the jury before verdict, when a high degree of need for such discharge was made evident to his mind from the facts which he had ascertained. We cannot define the degree of need without some standard of comparison; we cannot approach nearer to precision than by describing the degree as a high degree, such as in the wider sense of the word might be denoted by necessity. We hold further that the judge alone had to decide when the "necessity" in this sense of the word for the discharge of the jury was made evident to him, and his decision thereon is not made subject to review by any legal tribunal. It was his duty to exercise his discretion both in ascertaining the relevant facts and in determining their effect in making the necessity for the discharge evident to himself. The lawfulness of the discharge depended upon the result of this exercise of his discretion, and the statement of that result upon the record is, in our judgment, sufficient to establish that the order for the discharge in question was lawfully made, and that the subsequent proceedings to trial and conviction are not rendered erroneous thereby."—Law Times.

JUSTICES INTERESTED.

The question how far the interest of justices of the peace in the cases they dispose of unduly influences and warps their judgment seems to be one of constant recurrence, though the Legislature has endeavoured to put an end to some of the old objections that used to be raised on that account. The foundation of the illegality of a decision given under such an undue influence is not founded on any statute, but is the effect of the high tone of morality which is the accepted standard for justices as well as arbitrators, and all who exercise legal discretion and judgment. Though counsel at the bar are paid to think in a particular way, and may excuse themselves from being impartial, yet when a justice of the peace sits in the administration of justice he is expected to be free himself from all the influences which sway mankind and bend their disposition in one direction. It is not difficult to lay down a sweeping general principle, but when we come to details and particular instances it is by no means easy to say how the courts will apply that rule. The subject is one of great nicety, and from the uncertain sound of the dicta and their application nothing but a variety of illustrations can assist one to a fair appreciation of the difficulty in each case, as well as of the most likely mode of overcoming it. Indeed, the most experienced judges fail to supply anything like a key to the bewilderment which surrounds many of the cases. It is well to examine some that have been decided within the last fifteen years.

One case is frequently referred to, R. v. Rand, or R. v. Justices of Bradford, L. R. 1 Q. B. 280; 50 J. P. 298, which was a considered judgment of Blackburn, J., and was thought to have cleared up the matter at least for a time. In that case justices had power to certify the completion of a reservoir and its capacity to hold a certain quantity of water, whereupon the Corporation of Bradford were to get certain pecuniary advantages. Two justices so certifying were trustees of a provident society which had lent money to the corporation, and which money was charged on the corporation funds. The security therefore would be improved by the granting of the certificate, but the justices had no other interest whatever in the matter. The certificate of completing the reservoir was brought up by certiorari to be quashed on the ground of interest. The court held this interest was too remote, Blackburn, J., said "There is no doubt that any direct pecuniary interest, however small, in the subject of inquiry, does disqualify a person from acting as a judge in the matter, and if by any possibility these gentlemen, though mere trustees, could have been liable to costs or to any other pecuniary loss or gain in consequence of their being so, we should think the question different from what it is, for that might be held an interest." The court, however, held that there was nothing but a suspicion of favour in this case, and not a real bias, and so the certiorari was refused.

Ten years later another decision of the same judge was given in R. v. Myers, 1 Q. B. D. 178. One local board prosecuted another for polluting the river Lea, which was under the care of the prosecuting board, and one of the justices was the chairman of the prosecuting board, and an order to pay a sum of money was made against the other board. This order was sought to be quashed on the ground of interest in one of the justices, namely, the chairman of the prosecuting board. Blackburn, J., said that in this case the chairman was substantially a litigant in a matter in which it was his interest that a conviction should be made. He was sitting as judge in a matter where he was a party, and therefore the judgment must be set aside.

This last case was used in a later case of R. v. Alcock, 87 L. T. N. S. 829, where one of the Essex justices had joined in convicting for malicious injury to some notice boards erected in Epping Forest. The ground of interest was said to be that the defendant was a commoner, having rights over the forest, and so was one of the justices, but that this justice had been mixed up with Chancery proceedings in which he was a witness on the side opposed to the defendant. But the Queen's Bench Division said it was preposterous to suppose that anyone in the position of a magistrate would be biased in his administration of justice by the mere expression of his views as to what was for the advantage of the commoners in such a case. So the conviction was held not open to objection.

The next case was that of R. v. Milledge, 4 Q. B. D. 332, and it turned to some extent on the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 258, which enacts as follows:—No justice of the peace shall be deemed incapable of acting in cases arising under this Act by reason of his being one of several ratepayers or one of any other class of persons liable in common with the others to contribute to or be benefited by any rate or fund out of which any expenses incurred by such authority are under this Act to be defrayed. In this case complaint had been made to the Local Government Board of a nuisance arising from a piece of water in Weymouth, and the Board thereupon required the town council of Weymouth, as the urban sanitary authority, to abate the nuisance. The town council passed a resolution that steps should be taken against the owners of the water for the abatement of the nuisance. Two justices of the borough, who were members of the town council, and who had taken an active part in discussions on the question were, with four other magistrates, on the bench of justices, when the summons against the owner of the water came on for hearing. They refused to retire, although the defendant objected to their sitting, on the ground that they were the prosecutors. At the hearing the defence was that the nuisance was caused by the town council themselves sending the drainage of the town into the water complained of. The defendant was convicted by a majority of four to two, the justices in question voting in the majority. The defendant applied for a certiorari to set aside that conviction. The Queen's Bench Division held that two justices, members of the town council, assumed the double role of prosecutors and judges in their own cause. If they had not sat and taken part in the hearing there would be nothing to complain of. The 258th section of the Public Health Act, 1875, does not warrant a person sitting as a judge in a case in which he is a prosecutor and which he has set on motion. The two justices need not have sat on the bench, or the sanitary authority might have allowed a private prosecutor to act, but the latter did not so think fit, and the two justices did not refrain from sitting. Therefore the conviction was bad.

A recent case of no small interest has occurred where the justices were adjudicating on a prosecution by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, to which society they were subscribers. In Reg. v. Justices of Deal, ante, p. 71, it appeared that the society is managed by a committee which meets in London and is elected at the annual meeting by the subscribers. The society employs officers stationed in various parts of England, who duly report to the secretary in London any cases of cruelty coming under their notice. Upon receiving their reports the secretary directs the agents to take proceedings, and when this is directed the district officer receives orders from the secretary alone, and is forbidden to take instructions from any other person. The sole objects of the local branches of the society are to disseminate the literature of the society, to report the conduct of local officers to the secretary, and to collect funds and forward the same to the head office. No member of any local society has any power in the election of members of the committee of the London society, nor can they in any way interfere with or control the London society or its executive. Subscribers to the local societies are not thereby subscribers to the London society, nor are there any records in the London society's books showing who are the subscribers to the local society. The secretary never consults the local society or its officers as to any prosecutions ordered, nor are they informed of the facts relating thereto. There was a local or affiliated society at Deal, and two justices of Deal, Mr. Robert Lush and Mr. John Nethersole, were subscribers and members of the local committee. But they had no voice in the institution or conduct of any prosecution.

In this case the officer of the London society at Margate reported to the secretary in London certain facts, and a carter named George Curling was served with a summons for cruelty to a horse. The summons was heard by a bench of justices consisting of the Mayor of Deal, Edward Brown, Esq., and Mr. Lush, and Mr. Nethersole; and they convicted the defendant of cruelly ill-treating a mare by driving her whilst suffering from a sore place on her back, and fined him 15s. After the Mayor had delivered the decision of the bench he stated that he was a subscriber to the society, and so were Mr. Lush and Mr. Nethersole. He was not a member of the local committee; but the two justices last named were on the committee.

The Cruelty to Animals Prevention Act, 12 & 13 Vict., c. 92, s. 21, enacts that all pecuniary penalties which shall be recovered under the Act shall be respectively divided, paid, and distributed in the following manner:—One moiety thereof to the overseers of the poor of the parish, and the other moiety to the person who shall complain and prosecute for the same, or to such other person as to such justices shall seem fit and proper. No part of the penalty is ever received by the society, and the said two justices, Messrs. Lush and Nethersole, could not in any way benefit by the success of the prosecution in the present case. A rule for a certiorari to quash the conviction on account of the interest of the justices as subscribers was obtained and argued. The defendant's counsel contended that these justices had a pecuniary interest in this way, that they might have directed one moiety of the penalty to be paid to the officer of their society.

The Queen's Bench Division considered that the justices had not in this case the slightest control over the person who was the prosecutor and who was nominated by the secretary in London. They were not parties prosecuting, for they had nothing whatever to do with the prosecution. The utmost that could be said was that their being subscribers was reasonably calculated to produce in their minds a bias in favour of the prosecution. And in support of this proposition the cases of R. v. Milledge and R. v. Myers were relied upon. But the court held that this was at most a mere sentimental interest. As Cave, J., expressed it: "Why the taking an interest in the protection of animals from cruelty should make the justices convict a man who was innocent I cannot conceive. It is quite clear from the case of R. v. Alcock, that the expression of opinion upon the general subject matter out of which the prosecution arises, is not sufficient to disqualify the magistrate. The giving of a subscription is only one way of expressing an opinion with regard to the general subject matter—there may be more direct ways. But it would be very strange to say, that because a man took an interest in the laws relating to cleanliness he could not sit and adjudicate upon a prosecution for a nuisance. The mere suspicion of favour one way or the other ought not to oust the jurisdiction of the justices." So the certiorari was refused.

Another still more recent case is that of R. v. Justices of Burnley, ante, p. 119, where the justices who heard a summons for non-payment of the borough rate dismissed it on the ground that the prosecutor was an officer of the corporation, and one of the sitting magistrates was a member of the common council, and so he might be deemed interested. A rule for a mandamus was applied for, and it was shown that the local Act which imposed the rate contained a section similar to the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 258. There were three previous cases which were not quite in harmony, namely, R. v. Huntingdon, 4 Q. B. D. 528; R. v. Gibbon, 6 Q. B. D. 168; and White v. Reafers, 5 Q. B. D. 15, and the court were at liberty to exercise their own judgment. And their judgment was that the mere fact of the justices being members of the corporation did not amount to any substantial interest such as to create a bias. And so the justices were directed to hear and adjudicate.

These cases, and especially the last, show that there is still some difficulty in seeing what is or is not enough to create a bias, which must always be a question of degree. But whenever the justice is one of the body which prosecutes, or at least who takes some active part in directing the prosecution, that is a fatal objection. And whenever a pecuniary interest is shown such as in the enforcing of a borough rate, then it requires an enactment like section 258 of the Public Health Act to protect the justices from having their decisions treated as invalid by reason of interest.—Justice of the Peace.

NOTES OF CASES.

ASSIZES.

(Before LAWSON, J.)

MURTAGH v. MARQUIS OF BATH.

March 10, 11, 1882.—Grand Jury Cess—L. & T. Act, 1870, s. 65—Sale of tenant-right subsequent to Act—Continuance of tenant's liability to pay the whole rates—Surrender by operation of law—Implied agreement in new tenancy.

The circumstances of this case, heard at Monaghan, are stated in the judgment, which was as follows:—

LAWSON, J.—The plaintiff sought to recover a sum of 11s. 4d., half the county cess paid by him, relying on the 65th section of the Land Act of 1870, whereby with respect to tenancies created subsequently half the county rates are to be paid by the landlord. The question is one of general importance as affecting the sale of the tenant-right. It appears that in February, 1880, Woods, who was a tenant of a farm under the Marquis of Bath, applied to the office for leave to sell his farm to Murtagh, the plaintiff, for a sum of £70. The agent gave the permission, and the purchase money, £70, was paid into the office, according to the usual custom, and after deducting from it the half-year's rent due the balance was handed over to Woods, and the balliff of the estate went and put him into possession. It is relied on that this operates as a surrender of the old and the creation of a new tenancy, and that therefore the 65th section transferred the liability to half the rates to the landlord. It does operate, I think, in point of law, to create a new tenancy, but as the former tenant was bound to pay all the rates the new tenant is under the same obligation. The section relied on does not prevent the entering into an agreement which would render the tenant liable to all the rates, and in my opinion that is implied in his contract and is just as binding as if it had been expressly mentioned. It would be very injurious to the tenants themselves to hold that such a transaction did not give to the tenant all the rights which his predecessor had, and if he has the rights he also takes all the liabilities of his predecessor. I must therefore, dismiss the process.

(Before OMSBY, J.)

In re MOSTYN'S PRESENTMENT.

March 20, 1882.—Presentment—Coroner—Salary—Expenses—44 & 45 Vic., c. 35—9 & 10 Vic., c. 37.

The Magdormot, Q.C. (with him O'Malley), applied to his lordship to direct the Grand Jury at Ballina to allow to Mr. V. Mostyn, the coroner for Ballina, certain charges which had been made connected with the discharge of his duty.

It appeared Mr. Mostyn for many years held inquests outside his own district, and in the district of Mr. Burke, whose health had been failing for a long time. Mr. Mostyn, in calculating the number of the inquests held by him for the last five years, as the basis of the annual salary in future to be paid to him as coroner, had included these in his estimate. He had also claimed for expenses a sum of £36 incurred by him during an inquest in the county which lasted fourteen days. The Act, it was contended, entitled him to charge sixpence a mile going to and returning from the place of the inquest, but as the distance was forty there and forty back, he remained at the place and claimed £36 for hotel and other expenses, instead of £40 for car hire.

Sergeant Robinson, Q.C., for the Grand Jury, contended that it was an absurd construction to put upon an Act of Parliament fixing the future salaries of coroners for separate districts—a reading which would leave one district entirely without a salary for the future coroner, when, as in this case, the coroner of a neighbouring district had for the last five years done the work of both. He, also, contended that the expenses mentioned in the 3rd section of 44 & 45 Vic., c. 35, were similar to those mentioned in Schedule C to 9 & 10 Vic., c. 37, and did not include hotel expenses.

OMSBY, J., decided that only those inquests held by a coroner in his own district should be included in the estimate of the five years' average in calculating his future salary, and also that the expenses mentioned in the 3rd section of the 44 & 45 Vic., c. 35, were those described in Schedule C to the 9 & 10 Vic., c. 37.

[NOTE.—The operation of 44 & 45 Vic., c. 35, was also brought under notice at Cork, before Dowse, B., on March 21st; when

Mr. W. R. Meade, a Grand Juror, said that while the new Act directed that a certain salary should be paid to the coroners, it did not give the Grand Jury power to present for the new sum at all, but merely directs the treasurer to pay it.

Lawrence, on behalf of the coroners, said that 44 & 45 Vic., c. 35, repealed so much of the old Act—9 & 10 Vic., c. 37—as related to the election of coroners and their payment, and the third section provided that on and after the 18th November, 1881, the coroners should receive a salary equal to the average fees payable to him for the previous five years, provided that the sum was not less than £3 for each inquest held, and that the treasurer of the county should pay out of the borough fund such salary half-yearly. The difficulty in the matter was that the Grand Jury were of opinion that the 1st section, in repealing so much of the old Act as related to the payment of coroners, took away their power to present; but he submitted that the new Act did not take away this power.

Baron Dowse said he sympathised with the Grand Jury in their difficulty, but he believed there must be this power of presenting, or the Act of Parliament would not be sense. Is it not a fact, Mr. Meade, that the treasurer would have no authority to pay unless the Grand Jury presented for it?

Mr. Meade replied that under the new Act the treasurer was obliged to pay, but he would have to pay it out of his own pocket. He might have sufficient balance at one time to pay the money, but he could not go on paying it.

Baron Dowse said the Grand Jury had acted properly in bringing the matter before him, but he was satisfied that they should present for the payment of the coroners' salaries, otherwise the Act would fail.]

(Before DEASY, L.J.)

In re LORD CLONCURRY'S PRESENTMENT.

March 20, 1882.—Presentment—Malicious Injury—Fishing net—6 & 7 Will. IV., c. 116, s. 136.

Brady, in support of this presentment (Co. Donegal), for compensation for the malicious destruction of a fishing net argued that it came within section 135, of 6 & 7 Wm. IV., c. 116, for compensation as "other works."

Mr. Patrick Maxwell, solicitor, contra.

DEASY, L.J., held that the net did not come within the meaning of the Act.

COMMISSION OF OYER AND TEBMINER.

(Before MAY, C.J., and a Jury.)

R. v. POWELL.

Feb. 8, 1882.—Criminal law—Jury—Juror sworn under wrong name, in mistake for another person.

On the jury returning after considering their verdict, on the trial of this indictment,

The Foreman stated that Mr. James Ryan had been sworn and acted on the jury in mistake, as it was Mr. Denis Ryan's name appeared on the issue paper.

Keogh, for the traverser, said that as Mr. Denis Ryan was actually in court, and another juror was wrongfully sworn in his place under his name, the trial was abortive. If this were permitted, men of every sort might be smuggled into the jury box. He should, therefore, ask to have a nolle prosequi entered.

Murphy, Q.C., and W. O'Brien, Q.C., contra.

MAY, C.J., said that a case of felony had been tried in which two jurors were summoned whose surnames were the same but the initials were respectively J. T. and W. T. By mistake the latter was sworn on the jury instead of the former, and the prisoner was convicted. Next day the error was discovered and the verdict was appealed against. It was however, decided by the majority of the judges who tried the appeal, that the verdict was quite legal, and the prisoner had only the right of challenge in the case. He (his lordship) should, therefore, hold that the jury was legal.

The jury found a verdict of guilty; and his lordship declined to reserve the point raised.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

(Continued from page 127, ante.)

Williams on Executors (8th Edition), 2,033.

Where an executor has brought an action against his co-executor for the administration of his testator's estate, the Statute of Limitations does not cease to run against the simple contract creditors of the estate (In re Greaves, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 817).

Williams on Executors (8th Edition), 1,699.

In an administration where, the personal estate being insufficient, the specialty debts were paid out of the realty, an executor was not allowed to retain a simple contract debt out of a fund in Court representing proceeds of personality (Walters v. Walters, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 819).

Robson on Bankruptcy (4th Edition), 653.

After resolutions for a composition have been passed, a creditor, who is bound thereby, cannot effect a secret arrangement with the debtor to have his own debt paid in full (Ex parte Barrow, in re Andrews, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 821)—C. A.

Buckley on the Companies Acts (3rd Edition), 229.

A shareholder, who is also the solicitor of the company, may set off his bill of costs against calls due from him (In re Exchange Banking Company, Ranwell's Case, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 827).

(To be continued.)

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Outward infirmities.—Before the discovery of these remedies many cases of sores, ulcers, &c., were pronounced to be hopelessly incurable, because the treatment pursued tended to destroy the strength it was incompetent to preserve, and to exasperate the symptoms it was inadequate to remove. Holloway's Pills exert the most wholesome powers over the unhealthy flesh or skin, without debarring the patient from fresh air and exercise, and thus the constitutional vigour is husbanded while the most malignant ulcers, abscesses, and skin diseases are in process of cure. Both Ointment and Pills make the blood richer and purer, instead of permitting it to fall into that poor and watery state so fatal to many labouring under chronic ailments.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

A Concise Exposition of the New Conveyancing Act and of the Solicitors' Remuneration Act: with Practical Hints, and an Appendix containing the Acts. Second Edition. By ARTHUR UNDERHILL, LL.D., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, &c.; assisted by HARRY LYNDSEY MANBY, M.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. London: Richard Amer, Law Publisher, Bookseller and Binder, Lincoln's Inn Gate, Carey-street, W.C. 1882.

LAW STUDENT'S JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

TRINITY SITTINGS, 1882.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

NOTICE.

Candidates wishing to present themselves at the above Examination must lodge their papers, &c., on or before the first day of Easter Sittings, 1882.

By Order,

JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin,
3rd February, 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—F. W. Crofts, allocate.

IN COURT.—T. H. Crofts, to be mentioned.—M. W. Cooke, do.—Trustee Webb, do.—A. Breslin, from 13th.—Trustee Jane Elliott, examination of witness.—W. Rowland, from 20th.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

E. M. Gannon, rental.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—A. Noble, final schedule.—T. Kennedy, do.—H. Conter, as to schedule.

SALES IN COURT.

W. Ohancy, 1 lot.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

T. J. Daff, rental.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

H. V. Baillie, rental.—J. Trueman, do.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—Trustee J. Elliott, examine witness.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. Lennon, rental.—C. Martin, do.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

S. Litchfield, rental.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).
M. Kelly, rental.—H. Fitzgerald, do.—J. M'Nea, do.—
E. Turner, ditto.

THURSDAY.

In COURT.—T. Barnes, final schedule.—J. Fitzgerald, do.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).
Trustee Dublin Library, rental.—F. A. Echlin, do.—H. Coulter, vouch.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Stittings follow in Italics.
Rorke, Michael, of Elphin, in the county of Roscommon, draper and publican. April 4; Tuesday, May 2, and Tuesday, May 16. Peter Delany, solr.

Not long since an American attorney brought suit for killing stock by a railroad, occasioned by failure of the railroad company to fence the road as required by law. A judgment was rendered in the justice's court for the damages proven, and the company, as usual, appealed the case to the circuit court. In the course of time, and after repeated delays, the case came up for trial in the circuit court, when the attorney who brought the suit became satisfied that under a recent decision of the Supreme Court (rendered since the trial before the justice), the petition or complaint was defective; so the aforesaid attorney proceeded to address His Honor, the circuit judge, as follows:—"If your Honor please, I think I can prepare a suit for killing stock in this case. I know I brought this suit right when I commenced it before the justice. I am sure it was brought then according to the law as expounded by our august Supreme Court; but since then our highest court has rendered a decision changing the law, so I must, of necessity, dismiss this case and bring suit anew. If our Supreme Court could only keep still awhile, I am sure I can prepare a good complaint; I therefore dismiss this case in order to bring it to conform to the last decision of the Supreme Court!"

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

CLAY—April 12, at Anglesy, Killiney, the wife of Robert K. Clay, of a son.
LYNCH—April 9, at Lower Leeson-street, Mrs. David Lynch, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

SHARPE and WORTHINGTON—At St. Catherine's Parish Church, by the Rev. A. E. Burton, M.A., Robert W. Sharpe, C.E., youngest son of the late James Sharpe, of Mount Down, to Mary Louisa, eldest daughter of the late Robert Shaw Worthington, Esq., barrister-at-law, of Salmon Pool, Island-bridge, Dublin.
TRENCH and REEVES—April 13, at St. Stephen's Church, Dublin, by special licence, by his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin, assisted by the Rev. Canon Walsh and the Rev. Francis Chenevix Trench, Philip Francis Chenevix Trench, eldest son of Philip Charles Chenevix Trench, Esq., of Botley, Hampshire, to Frances Angel Reeves, only daughter of Robert Reeves, Esq., of Fitzwilliam-place, Dublin.

DEATHS.

CLAY—April 13, at Anglesy, Killiney, Robert Thomas, infant son of Robert K. and Florence Clay.
MACCARTHY—April 7 (Good Friday), at Herbert-terrace, Blackrock, Dublin, Denis Florence MacCarthy, M.R.L.A., Esq., barrister-at-law.
MULHALL—April 7, at his residence, Erin Lodge, Carlow, John Bernard Mulhall, Esq., solicitor, aged 64 years.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET.

3-7

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	APRIL
	Sat. 8	Mon. 10	Tues. 11	Wed. 12	Thur. 13	Fri. 14
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	—	—	100	100	—	—
— New 3 p c Stock ..	—	—	100	100	100	100
INDIA STOCK
4 p c Oct. 1858 Traffic at ..	—	—	104	104	104	—
3 1/2 p c Jan. 1861 Traffic at ..	—	—	104	104	104	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	—	317	317	317	317
25 Hibernian Banking Co ..	—	—	35	—	—	—
20 London and W'minster, W'd ..	—	—	—	—	—	70
30 Munster Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	7	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	23	—	23	23
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	—	57	57
30 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	23	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	29	—	—	—
25 Standard of B. S. A., W'd ..	—	—	—	—	58	58
Steam.
50 Dublin & Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co ..	—	—	—	—	—	53
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance & Dub. Com. Gas ..	—	—	—	—	x d	15
7 1/2 Dub. Drapery Wholesale, Ltd. ..	—	—	5	—	—	—
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..	—	—	6 1/2	—	—	—
10 M'Kenzie & Sons (ltd.) ..	—	—	58	—	—	—
25 National Assurance ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 National Discount, Ir., Ltd. ..	—	—	—	—	3	3
Tramways.
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	—	—	10	—
9 Glasgow Tram & Bus, Hm. ..	—	—	—	—	—	16
10 L'ri Unt'd Tram & Bus Int ..	—	—	—	—	—	13
5 Tramways Union—limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	5
Railways.
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	—	—	43	43
100 Dublin, Wicklow, & W'ford ..	—	—	79	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	117	117	117	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	—	112	112	—	113
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	84	—	84	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	8 1/2	32	—	32
Railway Preference
100 Gt. N'th'n (Irlnd) g'd 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	104
100 Do. 3 1/2 p c ..	—	—	—	—	87	87
100 Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	107	—	—	107
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	—	—	100	—	—	101
Leased at Fixed Rentals
100 Gt. Northern and Western ..	—	—	—	—	126	—
100 Londonderry & Enniskillen ..	—	—	—	—	—	126
Debenture Stocks.
— Cork and Bandon, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	101
— Cork & Macroom, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	95
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	108
— Gt. South'n & West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	109
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	105
— Do., 4 1/2 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4 1/2 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	113
Miscellaneous Debent.
Alliance & Cons. Gas, 4 p c ..	—	—	100	—	—	99
City Deb. of £93 6s 3d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	93
Dub. & Glas. S. P. Co. (1887) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	100

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics.
Bank Rate—1/2 Discount—6 per cent. 30th January, 1882
Of Deposit—3 per cent. 30th January, 1882.
Name Days—April 27th, and May 11th, 1882.
Account Days—April 28th, and May 12th, 1882.
Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

LEGAL POSTINGS:

In the HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE in IRELAND.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

SALE

On TUESDAY, the 2nd day of MAY, 1882.

COUNTY OF THE CITY OF DUBLIN.

In the Matter of the Estate of
THE VERY REV. AUGUSTUS WM. WEST,
Owner and Petitioner;
Continued in the Names of CHARLES HENRY JAMES,
LUCIUS HENRY DEERING, and THOMAS ROBERT,
Official and Trade Assignees of the said Very Rev. A. W.
WEST, the owner, as owners.

TO BE SOLD BY AUCTION,

In 24 Lots,
Before the Right Hon. Judge ORMSBY,
At his Court,
In the High Court of Justice in Ireland,
Chancery Division—Land Judges,
Inns-quay, in the City of Dublin,
On TUESDAY, the 2nd day of MAY, 1882,
At the hour of 12 o'clock, noon.
Lot 1 consists of the Business Houses known as Nos. 21 and 22
Christchurch-place, in the Parish of St. Werburgh, and City of Dublin, held in fee-simple, subject only to the yearly rent of 2s 6d, and a portion of the Yard at re-re of No. 21, held under lease, dated the 20th of July, 1786, for a term of 98 years, from the 25th of March, 1786, at the yearly rent of one peppercorn, if demanded, and producing a profit of £76 17s 7d per annum, less the usual taxes.

Lor 2, consisting of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, now known as Nos. 51 and 49 Mountjoy-square, in the Parish of St. George, Barony of Coolock, formerly in the County, but now in the City, of Dublin, held with Lots 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, in the printed rental in this matter, and other premises (not for sale in this matter), under lease dated 10th day of March, 1790, for a term of 99 years, from the 25th day of March, 1789, at the yearly rent of £19, late currency, equivalent to £16 12s 3d present currency, which will be sold liable to the whole of said head rent, and bound to indemnify all the other premises in said lease against payment of said head rent, now producing the profit rent of £28 15s 4d.

Lor 3, consisting of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, now known as No. 46 Mountjoy-square, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 10th day of March, 1790, now producing the yearly rent of £42 9s 3d, less the usual taxes.

Lor 4, consisting of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, now known as No. 46 Mountjoy-square, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 10th day of March, 1790, and producing the annual profit rent of £37 13s 10d, less the usual taxes.

Lor 5, consisting of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, now known as No. 50 Mountjoy-square, aforesaid; held under said lease of 10th day of March, 1790, and now producing the yearly rent of £37 13s 10d.

Lor 6, consisting of the House and Premises, now known as No. 21 Middle Gardiner-street, in the Parish of St. George, Barony of Coolock, formerly in the County, but now in the City, of Dublin; held under said lease of 10th March, 1790, and now producing the yearly rent of £14 15s 4d.

Lor 7, consisting of the House and Premises, now known as No. 25 Middle Gardiner-street, aforesaid; held with Lots 8 and 9 under lease dated the 24th day of March, 1800, for a term of 98 years, from the 25th day of March, 1801, at the yearly rent of one peppercorn, if demanded, and now producing the yearly rent of £65, less the usual taxes.

Lor 8, consisting of the House and Premises, now known as No. 39 Middle Gardiner-street, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 24th day of March, 1800, and now producing the yearly rent of £65, less the usual taxes.

Lor 9, consisting of the House and Premises, now known as No. 37 Middle Gardiner-street, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 24th day of March, 1800, and now producing the yearly rent of £32, less the usual taxes.

Lor 10, consisting of the Dwellinghouses and Premises, now known as Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 Mountjoy-place, in the Parish of St. George, Barony of Coolock, formerly in the County, but now in the City, of Dublin; held with Lots 11 to 28, both inclusive, in the printed rental in this matter, and other premises not for sale in this matter, under lease dated the 23rd day of June, 1791, for a term of 99 years, from the 25th day of March, 1791, subject to the yearly rent of £58, late currency, equivalent to £53 10s 9d, present currency, to payment of the whole of which this Lot will be sold, liable and bound to indemnify all other premises comprised in said lease against the entire of said head rent. This Lot now produces the yearly profit rent of £51 14s 8d, less the usual taxes.

Lor 11, consisting of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 6 Mountjoy-place, aforesaid; held under said lease dated the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the annual profit rent of £13 16s 11d, less the usual taxes.

Lor 12 consists of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 7 Mountjoy-place, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the annual profit rent of £13 14s 9d, less the usual taxes.

Lor 13 consists of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 8 Mountjoy-place, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the annual profit rent of £13 14s 9d, less the usual taxes.

Lor 14 consists of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 9 Mountjoy-place, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the estimated annual rent of £70, less the usual taxes.

Lor 15 consists of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 10 Mountjoy-place, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the annual rent of £52, less the usual taxes.

Lor 16, consisting of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, now known as No. 32 Mountjoy-square, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the yearly rent of £46, less the usual taxes.

Lor 17, consisting of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, now known as No. 33 Mountjoy-square, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the yearly rent of £59, less the usual taxes.

Lor 18, consisting of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 1 Great Charles-street, in the Parish of St. George, Barony of Coolock, formerly in the County, but now in the City, of Dublin; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the annual rent of £45, less taxes.

Lor 19 consists of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 3 Great Charles-street, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the annual rent of £43, less the usual taxes.

Lor 20 consists of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 3 Great Charles-street, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and of the estimated yearly letting value of £44.

Lor 21 consists of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 4 Great Charles-street aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the annual profit rent of £33 2s, less the usual taxes.

Lor 22 consists of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 5 Great Charles-street, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the annual profit rent of £21, less the usual taxes.

Lor 23 consists of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 6 Great Charles-street aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, producing the annual profit rent of £21, less the usual taxes.

Lor 24 consists of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 7 Great Charles-street aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the annual profit rent of £9 4s 7d, less the usual taxes.

Lor 25 consists of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 8 Great Charles-street, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the annual profit rent of £25 17s, less the usual taxes.

Lor 26 consists of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, No. 9 Great Charles-street, aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the annual profit rent of £24, less the usual taxes.

Lor 27 consists of the Dwellinghouses and Premises, Nos 1 to 7 Mountjoy-court, in the Parish of St. George, Barony of Coolock, formerly in the County, but now in the City, of Dublin; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the annual profit rent of £30, less the usual taxes.

Lor 28, consisting of the Dwellinghouse and Premises, Nos. 8 and 9 Mountjoy-court aforesaid; held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, lately producing the yearly rent of £28.

Lor 29 consists of the Dwellinghouse and Premises now known as No. 16 Middle Gardiner-street, the Houses and Premises, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 Temple-court, and the Ground whereon the House No. 7 Lower Temple-street formerly stood, all situate in the Parish of St. George, and County of the City of Dublin; held partly under lease dated the 18th of January, 1786, for the term of 99 years from the 25th day of March, 1785, at the yearly rent of £9 2s, late, equal to £8 8s present, currency; and partly by lease dated 28th of September, 1792, for three lives renewable for ever, at the yearly rent of 2s 6d late, equal to 2s 3d present, currency, and a renewal fine of one peppercorn on the fall of each life, which will be converted into a grant in fee-farm, as particularised in statement of tenure, and producing the net yearly profit rent of £25.

Lor 30, consisting of the Dwellinghouse and Premises now known as No. 23 North Cumberland-street, in the Parish of St. Thomas, and County of the City of Dublin; held under lease dated the 24th day of March, 1774, for a term of 98 years from the 25th day of March, 1774, subject to the yearly rent of £5 late currency, equivalent to £7 7s 7d present currency, and 12d late currency, for every chief and 6d like currency for every under tenant, as a common fee or loet money, and now yielding the yearly profit rent of £22 12s 4d.

Lor 31, consisting of the Dwellinghouse and Premises now known as No. 24 North Cumberland-street, in the Parish of St. Thomas, and County of the City of Dublin; held under lease dated the 24th day of March, 1774, for a term of 98 years from the 25th day of March, 1774, subject to the yearly rent of £6 late currency, equivalent to £5 10s 9d present currency, and 12d late currency, for every chief and 6d like currency for every under tenant, as a common fee or loet money, and now yielding the yearly profit rent of £24 9s 3d.

Lor 32 consists of the valuable Business House and Premises now known No. 106 Grafton-street, in the Parish of St. Andrew, and City of Dublin; held under lease dated 6th day of June, 1781, for three lives renewable for 70 years from the 25th day of March, 1781, subject to the yearly rent of £18 late currency, equivalent to £16 12s 3d present currency, and one couple of fat oasons, or 5s late currency, equivalent to 4s 7d present currency, and renewal, dated the 19th day of April, 1852, for three lives, whereof two are in still existence, and now producing the yearly profit rent of £46 3s, less the usual taxes.

Lor 33 consists of the valuable Licensed House and Premises, now known as No. 4 North Earl-street, in the Parish of St. Thomas, and County of the City of Dublin; held under lease dated the 18th day of October, 1787, with tories quotes covenant for renewal during 900 years, from the 1st day of March, 1789, at the yearly rent of £28 8s 9d late, equivalent to £26 5s present, currency, with 6d for every chief or under tenant, and a renewal fine of one peppercorn, if demanded, and yielding a profit rent of £21 15s per annum, less the usual taxes.

Lor 34, consisting of the valuable Business House and Premises, now known as No. 5 North Earl-street, in the Parish of St. Thomas, and County of the City of Dublin; held under lease dated the 18th day of October, 1787, with tories quotes covenant for renewal during 900 years, from the 1st day of March, 1788, at the yearly rent of £24 8s 9d late currency, equivalent to £26 5s present currency, with 6d for every chief or under tenant, and a renewal fine of one peppercorn, if demanded, and yielding a profit rent of £19 18s 1d per annum, less the usual taxes.

Dated this 1st day of March, 1882.

IGNATIUS O'KEEFE, for Examiner.

Proposals for all or any part of the Lots will be received by the Solicitors having carriage of the Sale up to the 18th day of April, 1882, and submitted to the Judge for approval.

For Rentals and further particulars apply at the Office of the Clerk of Sales, Chancery Division, Land Judges' Court, Inns-quay, in the City of Dublin; or to CHOMLEY & ST. GEORGE, Solicitors having carriage of Sale, 43 No. 40 Upper Gloucester-street, Dublin.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

"They are the best Pens invented, and it is only justice to the patentees to record the fact."—Shrewsbury Journal.

"MACNIVEN & CAMERON'S PENS ARE THE BEST."—Public Opinion.

"1745 NEWSPAPERS RECOMMEND THEM."—See The Graphic.

Just out,
THE BIG 'J' PEN,
For Music and Broad
Writing.
THE WAVERLEY PEN.
THE OWL PEN.

THE PICKWICK PEN.
THE NILE PEN.
THE HINDOO PEN.
Nos. 1, 2, and 3.
These Pens are strongly commended for use in Law Offices.

"They come as a boon and a blessing to men,
The Pickwick, the Owl, and the Waverley Pen."
"They are a treasure."—Standard.

SHIPPERS AND DEALERS SUPPLIED AT SPECIAL RATES.

Patentees of Pens and Penholders:

MACNIVEN & CAMERON, 28 to 33, Blair-street, Edinburgh,
Pen Makers to Her Majesty's Government Offices (Estab. 1770).
"The world owes a debt of gratitude to the patentees for their excellent inventions."—Sun.

Beware of the party offering imitations of these Pens. 210

EVERY MAN WHO SMOKES
Should invest 24 stamps for the
NEW PERFECTED

The Best
Selected Briars
only.

JENINGS & CO., Inventors, 97, NEWGATE-STREET.
The most Perfect Pipe invented since Smoking began.
Prospectus Free. 61

D. W. CARROLL,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,

Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.
His large Stock of

LEATHER GOODS,

Comprising Bags, Purses, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-
randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges. 193

LITHOGRAPHY } MAPS, PLANS, MEDICAL PLATES
JOHN FALCONER, CIRCULARS, &c., executed by 53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE,
Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped
to perfection.

10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps.
21, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST. HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID,

Curls the straightest and most unmanageable Hair, 3s. 6d.,
sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE,
To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His
GREAT HAIR RESTORER,

8s. 6d.; it changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles.

As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 3s. 6d.; his DEPILATORY for removing
Hair, and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers. 7

IRISH LAW TIMES.

WANTED the following Numbers, for which full price will be given:—53, 54, 56, 63, 104, 112, 117, 208, 210.
Apply—53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

Printed and Published by the Proprietor, JOHN FALCONER, every Saturday, at 53, Upper Sackville-street, in the Parish of St. Thomas and City of Dublin.—Saturday, April 22, 1882.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED
FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO
GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 6c
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A.
FERCY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

ROBERT WHYTE,
Ladies' & Gentlemen's Boot & Shoe Manufacturer,
1, NORTH FREDERICK-STREET
(Rutland-square),

ESTABLISHED OVER HALF A CENTURY.
Boots made for Weak Ankles, Deformed Feet, and Surgical purposes
of every description.
All Work executed on the Premises under my personal superintendence.
None but first-class Workmen employed in either Making or Repairing.

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE
PERMANENT
BUILDING SOCIETY,
52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.
President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Eight Hundred and Fifty Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgages.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 2½ per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.

Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.
Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired - not less than one year - with half-yearly coupons for interest attached. The rates of interest will be 3½ per cent. when taken for one year, and 4 per cent.
for two or more years.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:—
The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.
52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10
to £1,000
{ IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five
to ten times the amount invested in as many days.
TWO UNERRING RULES for success, in Explanatory
Book, sent free.
Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham
House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1882.

No. 796

EQUITABLE MORTGAGES BY DEPOSIT OF TITLE DEEDS.—I.

PREVIOUSLY to the establishment of the doctrine of equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds, it was held that the mere possession of them gave the holder no interest in the estate, except collaterally, as in the instance put by Lord Eldon in Ex p. Hooper, 1 Mer. 7: see Coote, Mtge., 4th ed., 310. The foundation on which rests the now received doctrine was laid by Lord Thurlow, in Russell v. Russell, 1 Bro. C. C. 269. And notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds, it is now settled that the deposit of title deeds, even without verbal communication, is per se evidence of an agreement executed for a mortgage of the estate: Ex p. Wright, 19 Ves. 258. Such equitable mortgages may, then, be created with or without a memorandum in writing: Russell v. Russell, ubi supra; Ex p. Langston, 17 Ves. 230; Ex p. Wright, 19 ib. 258; Ex p. Mountfort, 14 ib. 606; Parker v. Housefield, 2 Myl. & K. 419; and if the deeds are deposited without any memorandum, parol evidence may be admitted to explain the nature of such deposit, while if the documents deposited were not all specified in the memorandum, the whole may still be deemed included: Ferris v. Mullins, 2 Sm. & G. 378; and the absence of a written memorandum does not take the mortgage out of the operation of Locke King's Act (17 & 18 Vic., c. 113): Davis v. Davis, 24 W. R. 962. This species of security, however, has excited much judicial disapprobation: Ex p. Haigh, 11 Ves. 403; Norris v. Wilkinson, 12 id. 192; Ex p. Whitbread, 19 id. 211; Ex p. Hooper, 1 Mer. 7. Lord Eldon, indeed, denounced the decisions by which the doctrine was established, as virtually repealing the Statute of Frauds: Ex p. Whitbread, ubi supra; and repeatedly declared his determination not to extend that doctrine, while expressing his surprise that it ever was admitted: Featherstone v. Fenwick, Harford v. Carpenter, 1 Bro. C. C. 270, n. And in Mackeson's edition of Coote on Mortgages it is said: "How far its existence in deterioration of the public revenue, by diminishing the amount of stamp duties, is of sufficient importance to attract the notice of the Legislature remains to be seen." And again: "On a review of the decided cases establishing this mode of mortgage security, it is perhaps to be regretted that the old law was not adhered to and the principle on which the Statute of Frauds was founded more respected. For although equity, by declaring the deposit itself to be evidence of an agreement executed, has contrived to evade the strict and literal wording of the statute, yet it is manifest that the door has been in some degree open to fraud and perjury; nor does a creditor seem to deserve much favour who will not be at the trouble of a few lines in writing (Ex p. Whitbread, ubi supra) if he is desirous to have a charge on his debtor's estate. If the debtor denies that the deposit was intended to cover future advances, as in Ex p. Mountfort (14 Ves. 606), or if he insist that the deeds were not delivered by way of deposit but with a different intent, resort must, in many cases, be had to parol evidence; and, as remarked by Lord Eldon (ibid.), 'the mischief of all these cases is, that the court is deciding upon parol evidence with regard to an interest in land within the Statute of Frauds.'" As regards future advances, indeed, a person who has obtained a legal mortgage may be in a worse position than an equitable mortgagee, under the distinction which was made to avoid an extension of the doctrine acted upon in Ex p. Langston, 17 Ves. 227; and, as observed in Fisher on Mortgages, 3rd ed., "the result justifies the remark made in another case by Lord Eldon, that 'departing from the Statute (of Frauds), we have no rule to go by.'"

Lord Eldon himself, however, accepted the doctrine as settled law; and it has been held that, where the lex loci rei sitæ does not forbid, and the parties do not contract with reference to any other particular law, and the general law of the place is English, an equitable lien will be created upon land by a deposit of title deeds: Varden Seth Sam v. Luckpathy Royjee Lallah, 9 Moo. Ind. App. 303. In America, too, the English doctrine has been adopted: Griffin v. Griffin, 3 C. E. Green, 104; Brewer v. Marshall, 4 ib. 537; Gale v. Morris, 29 N. J. (Eq.) 222; English v. M'Elroy, 8 Rep. 13. As regards the nature and character of such a mortgage, Ball, C., observed, in M'Kay v. M'Nally (13 Ir. L. T. Rep. 130): "I do not know that this is anywhere better stated than by Lord Cottenham, in Parker v. Housefield (2 Myl. & K. 42), 4 L. J. Ch. 57). Speaking of the analogy between legal mortgages and mortgages by deposit, he says, 'To determine this it is material, in the first place, to consider in what light courts of equity view such equitable mortgages; and it appears that a deposit of title deeds has always been considered as an imperfect mortgage, which the mortgagee is entitled to have perfected, or rather as a contract for a mortgage, which, according to the well-known doctrine of courts of equity, would give to the party claiming the benefit of such contract all such rights as he would be entitled to if the contract had been completed.'" And see Crone v. Hegarty, 13 Ir. L. T. Rep. 86; In re Girdwood's Estate, 14 Ir. L. T. Dig. 9. Such a mortgage does not constitute a breach of a covenant not to "mortgage, sell, assign, or otherwise part with" an indenture of lease, or the premises thereby demised: M'Kay v. M'Nally, ubi supra. And such an equitable mortgagee will have preference over a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of the legal estate, with notice of the charge by deposit: Jones v. Williams, 21 Beav. 27; Leigh v. Lloyd, 35 ib. 455; which notice will be implied from the nature of the transaction, as if the subsequent purchaser or mortgagee was informed that the creditor was in possession of the title deeds, and neglected to make inquiry for what purpose he held them: Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. 114; and so, even though the purchaser only had notice by a letter stating that the memorandum (unregistered) of deposit was "useless": Christie v. Farr and Corkin, 16 Ir. L. T. 105; see Coote, Mtgs., 4th ed., 779; 7 Ir. L. T. 29. But a purchaser who has notice that the title deeds of the property are deposited with a bank to secure a current account is not bound to inquire whether the bank has made fresh advances on the security of the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money, and the burden lies on the bank, if it makes such advances, to give notice to the purchaser: The London and County Bank v. Ratcliffe, 6 App. Cas. 722, 51 L. J. Ch. 28.

As regards the effect of an equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds, unaccompanied by any memorandum in writing, and unregistered under the Registry Act, 6 Anne (Ir.), c. 2, as against a bonâ fide purchaser without notice, under a subsequent registered conveyance for value, in re Burke's Estate, decided by the Court of Appeal in December last, has decided that the equitable mortgagee (with whom in that case an agreement for a lease had been deposited) is entitled to priority; following Sumpter v. Cooper (2 B. & A. 223) and In re Stephens' Estate (I. R. 10 Eq. 282, 10 Ir. L. T. Dig. 15), and overruling In re M'Kinney's Estate (6 Ir. L. T. Rep. 179, I. R. 6 Eq. 445). But, the fuller discussion of this important subject must be reserved for a subsequent paper.

THE LAMSON CASE.

The affidavits to mental disease on which the application of our Government to that of Great Britain in this case was founded, present, in a very different phase, the same underlying question which added so great a professional interest to the universal popular attention attracted by the case of Guiteau. A man conversant with narcotics, poisons, and antidotes, a physician by profession, gradually yields to an habitual indulgence in morphine, which originated in proper medical use for relief from pain, and becomes wholly unbinged from practical life, incapable for ordinary affairs alike when under the influence of the drug and when suffering the reaction from the disease of it. He presents to his friends the appearance not only of a dangerous situation for himself, but a man of dangerous powers by reason of the decay of his mind and of his self-restraint, while his familiarity and freedom in the use of deadly poisons increases. They caution each other not to let him prescribe or give medicine. They watch him lest he do himself or others mischief. He passes from one hospitable refuge to another, making the same warning impressions. At last, in the necessities in which his wasted life leave him, he recklessly uses on another the fatal drug he has so often used on himself. Few men of observation do not see around them parallels to the incipient stages of this course.

The question of criminal responsibility under such circumstances is doubtless a grave one, but if the sanctions of the criminal law do not protect the community, what shall take their place?—New York Daily Register.

THE SETTLED LAND BILL.

The Settled Land Bill, introduced by Lord Cairns, has now passed the third reading in the House of Lords. Its scope and object are explained by its promoter in a memorandum laid on the table of the House as being "to enable tenants for life or other limited owners to dispose of part or the whole of settled land," with proper provisions for securing the due application of the purchase-money and protecting the interests of remaindermen. It does, however, more than this, for it considerably extends the powers of limited owners to effect improvements on their estates, and simplifies the means by which they can do so. The policy of some such piece of legislation may well be admitted. There is a consensus of authority to the effect that the soil of England is less productive than it might be, by reason partly of the restrictions placed upon the ownership of land under wills and settlements, and the obstacles placed in the way of the free circulation of land as a marketable commodity. It is no answer to this finding of the special jury which has considered the matter to say that every tenant for life, under a properly drawn instrument, already enjoys a power of sale which enables him, or the trustees at his direction, to sell the land as freely as if he were absolute owner. The fact is as stated. But as the power is always coupled with provisions that the proceeds of the land sold shall be reinvested in the purchase of lands, and that, until reinvestment, the same shall be invested in Consols or on mortgage, and the moneys held upon the same trusts as the land, the power practically remains unused, except for the purpose of rounding off estates. The difference between the 2½ and 8 per cent. on the value represented by the rents of land, and the 8 or at the utmost 5 per cent. to be got from the investment of the proceeds of sale, is not enough to induce a tenant for life to undergo the pangs of parting with ancestral acres and the worry and expense of a sale, unless under very special circumstances. The new bill holds out very different inducements to limited owners to sell.

After providing in section 1 that the Settled Land Act, 1882, is to come into operation from December 31 in the present year, it proceeds in section 2 to sweep into its folds all conceivable arrangements for tying up land whether made in the past or the future, or both. We may note in passing that sub-section (6) is perhaps not quite adequately expressed. In defining who are to be considered trustees of a settlement so as to come within the purview of the Act, it mentions, amongst others, "the persons, if any, for the time being, who are by the settlement declared to be trustees thereof for purposes of this Act." These words seem either superfluous or insufficient. They are superfluous if they only include trustees hereafter specifically named to act generally under the new Act, because they would necessarily have power to act thereunder as directed. They seem insufficient if intended to include persons named to perform some special functions mentioned in the Act, but not all of them. The insertion of the words "any of the" before "purposes" would make the meaning clearer. The bill may be broadly divided into three parts—those which deal with powers of sale, those which deal with powers of leasing, and those which deal with powers of improvement. The two last-named parts may, indeed, be regarded as merely subsidiary and auxiliary to the first, which would be incomplete without them; but as they are, of course, not concurrent with, but alternative to a sale, they must be treated separately. As regards sales, section 3 is the important substantive enactment of the bill. It makes a power of sale, exchange, and partition an inseparable incident of the estate of a tenant for life. The rest of the bill relating thereto consists of regulations and restrictions of the exercise of the power. Section 4 provides that it may be exercised in any way so long as "the best price that can reasonably be obtained" is obtained. Part IV. (or sections 7 to 15) makes powers of leasing a like incident, but for the terms only which are now commonly inserted in settlements—viz. for building, 99; for mining, 60; and for other purposes, 21 years. To the restriction of these terms considerable objection may be taken. For instance, in Lancashire and other parts of the country, 999 years are perhaps even more usual than the restricted terms for building or even mining leases; while the most improving landlords, such as Lord Leicester and Lord Portsmouth, grant agricultural leases for 31 years, with substantial security for renewal. It would seem wiser, therefore, not to impose any limitation of terms on any class of lease, but to leave limited owners the same power of giving security to their tenants as other owners. Otherwise, there will still be a necessity for the insertion of these powers in settlements, instead of their being treated as legal incidents thereof, and so becoming a matter of common knowledge, and left to the unrestricted operation of the law. For the same security will exist against an improvident disposition in the case of a long as of a short term. Section 16 imposes the most important restrictions in the Act, prohibiting the principal mansion-house, park, and "domain" land from being sold or leased without the consent of the trustees of the settlement, or an order of the Court. Section 17 extends to the tenant for life the powers possessed by the Chancery Division under sections 20 to 22 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877, of laying out streets, open spaces, drains, and the like, and dedicating them to public uses in connexion with the development of building land. Section 18, in a similar way, gives the powers of section 16 of the same Act as regards a disposition of mines apart from the surface, and of surface apart from mines. Section 20 provides that a disposition by the tenant for life, in accordance with the Act, shall operate as a pro tanto release from the settlement, subject, of course, to any prior subsisting interests or incumbrances.

Parts VI. and VII., dealing with the application of the money to the improvements of settled estates, contain the inducements to the tenant for life to exercise the various powers conferred by the previous provisions of the bill. By section 21 money, in the nature of capital received on any sale, exchange, or fine on lease, &c., may be applied in any of eleven specified ways: (1) Investment in Government securities, or any securities authorised by the settlement or by law. This proviso does not go far enough. It would be much better to insert an investment clause with a wide range of investment, extending to shares of any company paying a dividend; because, as we have before pointed out, the difference between rents and interest on purchase-money is not sufficient to induce an embarrassed owner to sell when the investment is confined to Government stocks and mortgages on land, the usual mode prescribed by a settlement of real estate. The next two modes of application, however, considerably extend the present inducement to sell. For the money may be applied, by sub-section ii., in the "discharge, purchase, or redemption of any incumbrance affecting the inheritance of the settled land, or other the whole estate, the subject of the settlement," or of land tax, chief rents, quit rents, and the like; and, by sub-section iii., in payment for any improvement authorised by the Act. By sub-sections 5 and 6, the further power is added of acquiring the fee, or enfranchising in the case of leaseholds and copyholds. The other modes specified are merely those already adopted in settlements. The importance of sub-sections ii. and iii. can hardly be overestimated. They will tend to remove the chief objections to the present system of settlements. They will not, indeed, enable a tenant for life to sell the land to pay incumbrances created by himself, for to do so would be to make him absolute owner; but they will enable him, when encumbered by rent-charges and annuities to widows and children of former owners, to sell part of the land and relieve himself of the burden by paying them off with the proceeds, leaving him free to deal with the remainder unhampered. In view of the long list of improvements set out in section 25, the tenant for life will thus be enabled to play the part of an improving owner almost as readily as an absolute owner in fee-simple. "Almost," not quite; for, by section 26, he will be compelled to submit a scheme for the sanction of the Land (now the Tithe and Inclosure) Commissioners. This is, we cannot help thinking, a mistake. Red tape means delay and expense, and acts as a discouragement to improvements on the part of the landowners. It would be as well to make an application to the commissioners compulsory only in cases where the remainderman or the trustees objected to the proposed improvements, in the same way as by sections 88 to 48 powers of interference and of an appeal to the Court are given to the trustees in case of an improvident sale or lease, or an improper application of purchase-moneys. Section 51 makes the Act compulsory, and makes void all attempts to prevent its provisions being obligatory. This section is most important. The shortcomings of the Agricultural Holdings Act and of the Land Transfer Act, through want of compulsion, are sufficient evidence of its wisdom and necessity. It adds the coping-stone to a very effective piece of legislative work, well fitted to effect the purpose for which it is designed. It is, of course, too much to hope that the bill will please every one. The extreme of both sides who want to abolish settlements altogether, or to preserve them intact, will be dissatisfied with it. But to that large majority who wish to keep settlements, yet not to tie up the land, or render it insusceptible of improvement, the Settled

Land Bill will commend itself as a wise and well-considered effort of legislation.—Law Journal.

THE MARRIED WOMAN'S PROPERTY BILL.

Some weeks ago we called attention to the numerous mistakes made in the Acts of last session, and suggested the appointment of a Parliamentary Committee, including the original draftsman, who should revise the Bills when they approach a late stage. Of course the plan is not yet adopted, and so all we can do, to supply its place, is to endeavour to point out some of the salient defects, and more obvious difficulties, in the Bills of importance, when they are issued to the public and printed in an amended form.

The Bill before us might almost fairly be called "A Bill to abolish Married Women;" of course we mean by this to abolish their status, with its peculiar disabilities and special privileges. We propose to consider a few of the clauses in detail. By clause 1 (1) "A married woman shall be capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing, by will or otherwise, of any real or personal property, as her separate property, in the same manner as if she were a feme sole, without the intervention of any trustee." Clause 1 (2) declares that "a married woman shall be capable of entering into and rendering herself liable on any contract in respect of her separate property, and of suing and being sued, either in contract or in tort, or otherwise, in all respects as if she were a feme sole . . . and any damages or costs recovered against her in any such action or proceeding shall be payable out of her separate property, and not otherwise."

Is it intended by the words "render herself liable . . . as if she were a feme sole," to abolish the personal immunity of married women? Hitherto they have not been personally liable on their contracts binding their separate estate, it is only the separate estate that is liable. This distinction is pointed out in Pike v. Fitzgibbon (44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 562; L. Rep. 17 Ch. Div. 454), and in Atwood v. Chichester (L. Rep. 3 Q. B. Div. 722). The last words of clause 1 (2) suggest that the old rule is to be maintained, and this view is strengthened by the distinction drawn between a judgment "against the husband personally," and "against the wife as to her separate property," at the end of clause 14. Sed quare.

Clause 1 (3) declares that every contract entered into by a married woman shall prima facie be deemed entered into with respect to her separate property.

This is likely perhaps to relieve husbands, but will rather seriously affect tradesmen and others dealing with married women who have no separate property, unless it is decided that this provision does not apply to such cases. The meaning is not clear.

Clause 1 (4) provides that contracts shall bind after-acquired separate property.

By clause 1 (5) "Every married woman carrying on a separate trade shall, in respect of her separate property, be subject to the bankruptcy laws in the same way as if she were a feme sole."

We suppose by "separate trade" is meant "separate from her husband." It can hardly be intended to exclude the case of a married woman in partnership with some other person; but the serious question arises whether it is intended that the married woman shall personally become a bankrupt, and be personally liable to the bankruptcy laws "in the same way as if she were a feme sole," or only that her separate property can be attached by bankruptcy proceedings. Compare Ex parte Jones (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 790; L. Rep. 13 Ch. Div. 484).

The third clause of the Bill seems well calculated to cause litigation: "Any money or other estate of the wife lent or entrusted by her to her husband for the purpose of any trade or business carried on by him, or otherwise, shall be treated as assets of her husband's estate in case of his bankruptcy;" subject, however, to the wife's claim to a dividend after all other creditors for value have been satisfied. We suppose this is not intended to affect loans by the wife's trustees to the husband, nor yet money, entrusted to the husband by the wife herself for investment, which he wrongfully employs in trade. But what are the words "or otherwise" intended to cover? If she simply lends it to her husband for no especial purpose, does the clause apply? Or does it only apply to traders? Can the wife prove in the bankruptcy on a level with other creditors, if the money has been lent to the husband and spent over the household? These are questions which, if the Bill passes in its present form, will need judicial decision, and occasion great expense.

By clause 7 any married woman, or woman about to be married, may apply for transfers of money in the funds and shares in companies, or certain registered societies, to which she is entitled, into her name or intended name as a married woman for her separate use. And the proper officers are required to make the necessary entries in their books; and apparently, if the woman is only beneficially entitled, and shares are standing in the name of some other person, the legal owner need not join in the transfer. Surely this cannot be intended. Also there is no provision made for the transfer fees.

Clause 17, according to its marginal note, is a "saving of existing settlements and the power to make future settlements." The clause also affirms the validity of the "restraint upon anticipation," with certain exceptions. This rather important provision is ignored in the marginal note. The reference to "such woman," at the end of the clause itself, makes its meaning extremely vague. No doubt the main object of this Bill is the protection of married women; but at the same time a spirit of fairness requires that the interests of men should not altogether be overlooked. If wives are allowed by law, and without any special agreement, to enjoy and dispose of their property in the same way as if they were unmarried, it certainly seems unfair that the husband should be liable for the wife's torts committed after marriage. The Bill puts wrongs committed by the wife before marriage in the same position as ante-nuptial debts, and limits the husband's liability "to the extent of all property whatsoever belonging to the wife which he shall have acquired or become entitled to from or through his wife" (clause 13). Why should not post-nuptial torts be placed on the same footing, or the husband entirely relieved from all liability with regard to them? We have only been able in this article to examine a portion of the Bill; but we have shown that it requires most careful examination in the House of Commons before it is allowed to become law.—Law Times.

WOMEN'S PROPERTY IN FINLAND.

In its last session the Finland Diet discussed a petition requesting that married women should have the free disposal of their property arising either from their dowries or inheritances. The supporters of the motion showed that according to the law voted by the Diet in 1863 women become of age at twenty-five years, and that unmarried ladies have a right to do with their money anything they like, whilst married ladies were not able to do anything with what belongs to them except by the permission of their husbands, which was a grave anomaly. The opponents said that, marriage being only a moral union not falling under the laws, they thought that the petition ought to be set aside. In spite of a very able speech by Deputy Tavedberg, the petition was rejected by thirty-five votes to eighteen. The same Diet has also rejected the project to transform the Diet, with its separate orders, into a parliament, as in most countries on the Continent, and the admission of the peasants in it.—Golos.

At a meeting of the Presbyterian Association, Sackville Hall, on Thursday evening, a Reading of "As you like it" was given, in which Mr. Justice Lawson assumed the part of Touchstone, the Court Jester.

SIR FRANCIS S. REILLY, K.C.M.G.

Sir Francis S. Reilly, who has lately been appointed Counsel to the Speaker, as Queen's Counsel, and also has received the honour of being made a Knight Commander of St. Michael and St. George, is one of the two surviving sons of the late Mr. James Miles Reilly, of the Irish Bar, the other being Colonel Reilly, C.B., now commanding the Royal Artillery at Aldershot, was born in 1825, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he obtained a Foundation Scholarship, and other honours. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, in 1851, and has had a large practice as a Parliamentary draftsman both in public and in private legislation. He acted as assessor to Lord Salisbury and Lord Cairns in the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Arbitration, to Lord Cairns in the Albert Life Assurance Company Arbitration, and to Lord Westbury and Lord Romilly successively in the European Assurance Society Arbitration. On Lord Romilly's death, Sir F. Reilly was appointed arbitrator, subject to appeal, in the European Arbitration, which he brought to a conclusion. He has been a member of the Statute Law Committee from its first appointment, and has been much employed professionally by various Departments of Her Majesty's Government. As regards the Foreign and Colonial Offices, besides preparing and advising under many important Orders in Council regulating British jurisdiction in the Ottoman Dominions, China and Japan, and other countries, he has acted, for instance, in the San Juan and the Mosquito Coast Arbitrations, in the affairs of Cyprus, of the Western Pacific, and of the Suez Canal Company, and in relation to the International Courts in Egypt.

COUNTRY LAWYERS.

The country lawyer of good standing differs as much from the pettifogger as a field-marshal differs from a private of marines. He is the secret-holder of the most important families in the county; his advice is sought and followed by grandees, squires, and great ladies, and he is generally a wealthy man himself. One source of his influence is that he often has much more knowledge of his clients than they have of themselves. He knows exactly how much a year each of them has, which is more, in many cases, than they know themselves; he knows the acreage of their properties, the exact conditions under which they hold them, and what their lands would probably be worth if thrown upon the market. He often has complete charge of their affairs, and remembers precisely in what manner they have disposed of their properties in their wills—a thing that laymen are exceedingly apt to forget. He has only to ring for his clerk, and in two minutes he can have any of their deeds, settlements, wills, or estate accounts placed on his writing-desk for immediate study; while the chances are that they are themselves unaware of the very existence of some of these instruments, and know very little about the others. Moreover, when he looks at a poor fellow who is struggling hard to keep a wife and large family on three hundred a year, he may know that in one of his tin boxes there is a will which will some day entitle that man, if he lives, to two hundred thousand pounds; and when he looks at another who imagines himself to be the sole heir to an immense property, he may wonder what his feelings would be if he were aware that the said property is to be divided equally between himself and his nine cousins. Then those who seek the advice of lawyers are obliged to be confidential, and lay open before them the whole state of their affairs, with everything that bears upon them either directly or indirectly. The consequence of this is that a shrewd lawyer has many opportunities of acquiring information. What one client tells him of his own affairs has often an indirect bearing upon those of others. This, of course, is much more the case in the country—where many of the neighbours are either related to each other or have adjoining properties, and have similar or conflicting interests in the same matters—than in large towns, where men do not know the names of the people who live next door to them, and where lawyers are frequently in utter ignorance of the family concerns of their clients. Idle people proverbially consider themselves the busiest; and a country gentleman, when he has nothing else to do, always imagines that he has urgent business necessitating a visit to his solicitor. A horse is therefore put into a dog-cart, and he starts off with an air of great importance for the county town, in order to confer with his legal adviser. After passing through one or two ante-rooms, occupied by clerks penned up in things resembling old-fashioned family pews with glass cases at the top, he is ushered into the presence of the great man. An open tin box is placed beside the lawyer, on which the name of the Duke of Cambria is printed in large capitals. Maps of large estates are hung over chairs or are lying on the ground; there is a profusion of parchments on the table, which may fairly be assumed to be the title-deeds of immense landed properties; bundles of letters, doubtless representing transactions of untold magnitude, lie about in all directions; and there is a general atmosphere of "land and capital" about the chamber of the oracle. The client has scarcely seated himself before a clerk brings in a telegram, which the solicitor opens, glances at, and tosses carelessly on his table, as if he were in the habit of receiving telegraphic communications every five minutes. We are far from saying that the matters which bring clients to lawyers are not often of an important character; but it is certain that the amount of absolute business transacted between a country gentleman and his lawyer at a single consultation is not uncommonly much as follows:—After the usual greetings, remarks about the weather, unbuttoning of gloves, finding places for hats, and taking off of great-coats, the client asks his legal adviser whether he has yet heard from Mr. Brown. The lawyer then replies that he has not yet heard from Mr. Brown; that he has been expecting to hear from him every day; that he cannot believe any great length of time can elapse before he will hear from him; and that, if he should not receive any communication from him by a certain date, he will certainly write again to him. Having transacted this most urgent piece of business, the client considers himself fairly entitled to a little gossip. He inquires whether this is true, and whether that is true, whether there are any grounds for such and such a rumour, and whether his solicitor has heard so and so. The lawyer tells him as much as he thinks right, and gets as much information out of his visitor in return as he can. Some country gentlemen, when out of humour, go, or are sent by their wives, to their lawyers to be put into a good temper again. A successful lawyer is generally a master in the art of improving people's tempers. His clients may enter his sanotum with gloomy faces, but will often come out smiling. He will tell them of a blunder committed by their bitterest enemy; or he will inform them that one or two people have been making inquiries about their unlet farms. He will shake his head and look incredulous about the supposed unlimited wealth of the neighbour of whom they are jealous, and he will hint in a mysterious way at troubles that are in store for that provoking family which always appears prosperous and happy. He has some pleasant little bits of gossip about the unpopularity of the parson, and the "high doings" that go on at the iron chapel of ease in the early mornings. There is a report, he says, that the Jesuits are about to buy one of the largest houses in the neighbourhood, and he has heard that there has been a grand quarrel between two leading members of the United Methodists. He is generally very strong upon the underhand doings of "those rascally dissenters," who, by the way, have an unholy habit of employing lawyers of their own. In most neighbourhoods there is an old maiden lady of eccentric habits, a gentleman of strongly pronounced religious opinions, a scapegrace on the verge of ruin, and a mau with a hobby. Of each of these the lawyer has a pleasant anecdote. A lawyer often acts also as a sort of confessor and director to his clients. One will confess that he has lost his temper and insulted an acquaintance, and will want help in propitiating the injured person; another will accuse himself of having lost heavily on the turf, and will want to know how to raise money without the knowledge of his parents; this man will have made a foolish promise, from which he wishes to recede, and that man will have written a libellous letter, from the penalties of which he is naturally anxious to screen himself. Many clients will confess that they have been extravagant, and will seek to raise money on mortgage, while not a few will have exceeded their allowances and will require a temporary loan. It is needless to say that lawyers' visitors are not exclusively of the male sex. Most country solicitors have aged female clients who constantly call on them. The primary objects of their visits are usually to make codicils to their wills, leaving five pounds to some other antediluvian, or to inquire whether their legal advisers can recommend any perfectly safe investment that will make a return of 15 per cent.—a rate of interest which they hear is obtained by a relative living in the Republic of Venezuela. The secondary object of their consultation is to find out whether that odious Miss Higginbottom is really going to be married to Dr. Goodenough, or whether Ghostly Manor has actually been let to an East-End pawnbroker. It must not be supposed that the time of a lawyer is entirely spent in agreeable conversation or entertaining gossip. He occupies a position of great responsibility, and his life is one of considerable anxiety and not a little drudgery. He has to wade through long wordy deeds and documents, which have a dangerously soporific tendency while they require most shrewd and careful attention: One dull, and to lay eyes meaningless, sentence, among many dreary pages of a deed or settlement, may at some time or other lead to a Chancery suit, if it escapes his notice. As regards the profits of solicitors, although still very large, they are small in comparison with what they were when the principal lines of railway were being projected in England. Gossiping clients are often surprised at the length of their lawyer's bills; but, if they like to employ a professional man to spend his time in chattering to them, it seems but reasonable that they should pay for it. It would be hard, indeed, if a country lawyer should not earn some profits when the wide nature of his functions is taken into consideration; for he has sometimes to serve in each of the following capacities—conveyancer, law-stationer, land-agent, secretary, book-keeper, newsvendor, political agent, money-lender, railway agent, banker, and electioneering agent. Nor must it be forgotten that another cheerful occupation has lately been discovered for him—namely, that of serving long terms of imprisonment in her Majesty's gaols, when he has been executing what had hitherto been considered the recognised duties of a canvassing agent.—Saturday Review.

MALICIOUS INJURIES TO PROPERTY.

The exact effect and meaning of section 7 of the Malicious Injuries to Property Act (24 & 25 Vict., c. 97) has just formed the subject of an important judicial opinion in the case of Reg. v. Harris and Atkins, which was tried before Sir Henry Hawkins, at the Old Bailey, on the 16th ult. The indictment against the prisoners contained four counts: (a) wilfully and maliciously setting fire to a dwelling-house with intent to injure; (b) wilfully and maliciously setting fire to a dwelling-house, persons being therein; (c) wilfully and maliciously setting fire to a picture frame, under such circumstances that, if the building were thereby set fire to, the offence would amount to felony; (d) against Atkins only as an accessory after the fact. The facts were of the simplest kind, the evidence being that Harris was employed with other men to repair, paint, and decorate a dwelling-house at 108 Lancaster-gate, the property of Mr. Alcroft. On the premises was a very valuable painting, by Sydney Cooper, R.A., styled "The Monarch of the Meadows," which, for safety, had been placed in the boudoir, covered with a cloth. The painting was seen safe on the evening of 12th Sept., the workmen being all supposed to leave at six o'clock; the next morning, at half-past six, the boudoir was found in flames so far as the floor was concerned, the smoke having filled the drawing-room and done damage to the extent of nearly £1,500.

The picture had been cut from the frame, and the evidence of the salvage man proved conclusively that three distinct fires had been lighted on the floor, by the aid of a large sheet torn into pieces, and the assistance of linseed oil or turps, no doubt with the object of destroying the frame and so concealing the larceny of the picture. Harris, whilst denying the charge of setting fire to the dwelling-house, admitted he was outside and received the picture from the hands of another man who he said had cut the picture from the frame, and subsequently was aiding Atkins to advertise and try and obtain the reward, when he was taken into custody on another charge. The evidence further showed that Harris was at work at 108 Lancaster-gate, all day on the 12th, and was supposed to leave about a quarter to six, but that there was abundant opportunity, if he desired to avail himself of it, of remaining on the premises; also that two maid servants slept in the house, and that the front door was not finally fastened until nine o'clock, the theory of the prosecution being that Harris remained behind after the other workmen left, cut the picture from the frame, then kindled three separate fires on the floor with the view of destroying all traces of the larceny. On the opening statement of counsel the learned judge said he should have stopped the case but for the third count, and upon that intimated that he did not think there was sufficient evidence to convict in point of law, propounding the novel doctrine that, in order to convict under the 7th section, it is necessary for the prosecution to show affirmatively that the incendiary intended, when setting fire to the things in the house, to set fire to the house itself. All we can say is that, if that be the proper reading of the section, it must necessarily become a dead letter for practical purposes. The learned counsel for the prosecution, however, declined to withdraw the case, and it accordingly proceeded. We are clearly of opinion that there was strong evidence on all the counts of the indictment. Wilfully to set fire to the floor of a house is as much arson as burning the whole house down. If the intention was to set fire to the frame, which was the property of the owner of the house, is not that an intent to injure? If it could even be rightly held that this is not so, then at any rate there must have been evidence for the jury on the second count, it being proved that persons were in the house, and the act being clearly wilful and malicious, from the fact of the existence of three distinct fires, it being unnecessary either to lay or prove any intent under the second section of the Act. Indeed, under sect 8 of 24 & 25 Vict., c. 97, it was decided in Reg. v. Farrington (R. & R. 207) that, on proof of a wilful and malicious setting fire to a dwelling-house, the intent to defraud or injure will be presumed, pursuant to the general rule of law, that a man must be presumed to intend the probable consequences of his act. Finally the case went to the jury against Harris only on the third count, and in reply to questions from the judge the jury found: (a) That Harris set fire to the house; (b) that the probable consequence of that act was to set fire to the house; (c) that Harris did not intend to set fire to the house; (d) that he was not, when he set fire to the frame, reckless whether he set fire to the house or not. The learned judge was understood to say that he left the last question to the jury only out of deference to the decision in Reg. v. O'Neil (L. Rep. 1 C. C. R. 808), and that if the jury found he was reckless he should still reserve the point if they were of opinion he did not intend to burn the house.

In the case we have quoted Mr. Justice Blackburn held that the true construction of 24 & 25 Vict., c. 97, s. 7, was not such as to make it felony maliciously to set fire to goods in a dwelling-house per se, but that if the dwelling-house in which the goods were had caught fire from the burning goods the question whether the offence would have amounted to felony depended upon a further question—viz., whether such a setting fire to the dwelling-house would have been malicious and with intent to injure. In Harris's case the dwelling-house was set fire to and the floor burnt through, the act was clearly wilful and malicious, and persons being in the house the necessity to prove any intent was done away with. In Reg. v. Batstone (10 Cox, 80) the indictment was also under the 7th section, and the evidence was that the prisoner wilfully threw a lighted match into a post-office letter-box affixed to a dwelling-house with intent to burn the letters. Justice Williams said: "How can you support this indictment? From the evidence it appears that this act on the part of the prisoner was what is vulgarly called a lark, and that there was no intention to set fire to the house. No doubt, if it was intended that the fire should do its worst, they would be guilty; but if they only set fire to the letters, and it was contrary to their intention to burn the house, if the house had been burned they would not have been guilty, and I shall so leave the case to the jury." This case differs from that of Harris in a most important particular—viz., that the probable consequence of throwing a match into a letter-box is not to set fire to the house, whereas to light three fires with sheeting and linseed oil necessarily is.

We cannot pursue the subject further at present except to add that, in Reg. v. Haseltine (12 Cox, 404), it was held by Baron Pollock, after consulting Mr. Justice Archibald, that it is not necessary in a count in an indictment laid under sect. 7 to allege an intent to defraud, but that it is sufficient to follow the words of the section without substantively setting out the particular "circumstances" relied on as constituting the offence.—Law Times.

CALLS TO THE OUTER BAR.

The following gentlemen have been called to the Bar:—

Patrick Joseph M'Elroy, only son of James M'Elroy, Esq., of Mouteith-row, Glasgow, merchant.

Robert John Newell, eldest son of Robert Newell, late of 1 Wilmount-avenue, Kingstown, in the County of Dublin, Esq., deceased. Mr. Newell obtained a Scholarship in Common Law at the Middle Temple in Hilary Term, 1882.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—XII.

(Continued from page 175, ante.)

SETTLEMENT OF LAND AS PERSONALTY.

Introductory.

The usual and proper mode of dealing with land intended for division among the children of a marriage, is to convey it to trustees upon trust for sale, and to declare trusts of the money proceeding from the sale. The declaration of trust should be by separate deed of even date. We shall consider the latter deed first.

Declaration of Trusts of Proceeds of Sale

With regard to this, it will not be desirable to attempt to save the recital of the conveyance to the trustees by declaring it "supplemental" (sect. 58), as the conveyance would usually be handed to the purchaser on the complete exercise of the trust for sale. We shall consider other recitals at the close of this article, as they bear upon covenants for title. It will be needless for us to repeat in detail what we have said as to the trusts of a similar settlement of personal property. The deed must contain the trusts of the proceeds of the sale, and of rents until sale. The "maintenance" and "accumulation" clauses may be omitted. See Article 9 of this series, Law Times, March 11, 1882, pages 328, 329. The power to appoint new trustees may be greatly abbreviated, it being only necessary to state that the husband and wife and the survivor shall have, during their lifetime, power to appoint new trustees, and to give the trustees an indemnity for lending on leasehold securities, without production of lessor's title, or for otherwise lending on less than a marketable title. See Law Times (ubi sup.), page 329. If it is desired that trustees shall have power to settle questions and apportion funds among the beneficiaries, a power must be inserted. But sect. 37 renders any power to compound debts or compromise claims with stronger to the settlement needless; it may, however, be sometimes desirable to limit the operation of that section. See Law Times, March 18, page 346. Of course there will be no covenants for title.

For old forms of declaration of trust of this description, see David. iii. 862, 874; Conc. David. 2nd edit. 239. For new forms, see Conc. David. 12th edit. 893; Pridcaux, 11th edit. ii. 252.

Conveyance upon Trust for Sale.

In this deed some considerable abbreviations may be made. The "general words" and "all estate clause" may be omitted, in reliance upon sects. 6, 68. See Law Times, Jan. 7, 1882, page 167.

Instead of inserting a lengthy trust for sale, it will only be needful to state that a trust for sale is vested in the trustees or trustee for the time being, and that it is to be exercisable at the request of the husband and wife, and of the survivor, and after the death of the survivor at the discretion of the trustees. Then by sect. 38, the trustees can sell with the usual powers. The trusts of the proceeds of the sale, and of rents and profits until sale, must be declared as before, by reference made to the settlement of even date. For old form see David. iii. 858, and compare Bythewood, vii. 518. For short new form, see Pridcaux, 11th edit. ii. 260; Conc. David. 12th edit. 892. The trustees' receipt clause may be omitted (sect. 36). The usual power of leasing until sale must be inserted. For form, see David. iii. 859; Conc. David. 892.

A few words, giving the husband and wife, and the survivor, during their lives, the power to appoint new trustees should be added. Indemnity to trustees for accepting unmarketable title should be omitted. See Law Times, March 11, page 329. It only remains to be considered what covenants for title should be added, and how far the short phrases of sect. 7 may be used to imply covenants. We shall consider this under a separate heading.

Covenants for Title.

It has hitherto been the habit of many practitioners to insert in conveyances of land on trust for sale made for the purpose of settling the proceeds, the same covenants as the vendor would make upon a sale. Mr. Davidson says: "The husband, or other grantor of the estate, enters into the usual covenants for title as upon a sale, both because a settlement for valuable consideration, as a marriage settlement, is on the footing of an assurance to a purchaser, and in order that a vendee buying from the trustees may have the benefit of a proper chain of covenants up to the conveyance to them:" (David. iii. 59; see also David. i. 121.)

So in the precedents, David. iii. 860, 878; Bythewood, vii. 447, 495, it will be found that the intended husband enters into vendor's covenants. And the intended wife does the same on settlement of her freehold (Bythewood, vii. 504); see also Pridcaux, 10th edit. ii. 237, 262, where, however, it is not stated whether the settlor, when he takes under an ancestor or testator, should covenant with respect to them as a vendor would, or whether he should only covenant with respect to himself and those claiming under him.

Mr. Joshua Williams, in his work on Settlements, page 126, also states it to be the usual practice for the settlor to enter into vendor's covenants. It should be noticed that these covenants render the covenantor liable, if he has obtained the property by inheritance or will, for the incumbrances made by his ancestor or testator. This seems to us very undesirable. We are unable to see the force of either of the reasons stated by Mr. Davidson in support of the practice. It is no doubt true that marriage is a "valuable consideration," but it is of an entirely different nature from a pecuniary one. A settlement partakes of the nature of a bounty as well as of a bargain. And it is of no advantage to the settlor or his trustees to give a purchaser from the trustees the settlor's covenants. It is of course an advantage to the purchaser, but he cannot object to the title on the ground that there are not proper covenants in the conveyance to the trustees: (Sug. V. & P. 14th edit. 574.)

Moreover it would probably be held that, in a conveyance for the purposes of a settlement, a covenant for further assurance was now a "proper" one. For the statutory covenant suggested by sect. 7 for "a conveyance by way of settlement," is only a limited one for further assurance; and this is the only covenant implied in the form given in Schedule IV. of the Act. And this covenant is declared "proper" by sect. 66, and as the common form covenant is rather wider than the statutory one, it would seem objection could not be raised to the former as being insufficient.

Messrs. Wolstenholme and Turner strongly deprecate the practice of making a settlor enter into vendor's covenants, and advise that, if he enters into any covenants at all, he should not do more than convey "as settlor," and thus imply the limited statutory one. No doubt the form in Schedule IV. is of a direct settlement of land, and not of a trust for sale of land for the purposes of a settlement. But we submit that the principle is the same, whether land is conveyed to trustees for sale, and the proceeds are to be settled, or a settlement is made with a power of sale. See definition of settlement in 40 & 41 Vict. c. 18, s. 2, and comment on similar definition in the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, s. 1, by Davidson, iii. 2; see also Living's Trusts (14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 57; L. Rep. 1 Eq. 416), and other cases cited in Seton, 1477, and Alphabetical Practice, 779. Similarly, Mr. Pridcaux now only makes the settlor convey "as settlor," which is a considerable modification of his former practice.

It will be well to compare Mr. Davidson's opinion with the testimony of Lord St. Leonards. In Money-penny v. Money-penny (9 H. L. C. 114, 133) his lordship said: "When a man marries and puts his estate in settlement he is never made to do more than covenant against his own acts and the acts of those claiming under him. If his title should prove infirm it is a family misfortune; but if he had warranted the title absolutely he would be called upon to pay the value of his estates at the very moment that the means of payment, the estates themselves, were taken from him." The practice thus to limit liability would, of course, apply still more forcibly in the case of a relative of the husband's bringing his estate into settlement.

The decision of the majority of the court was that, upon the construction of the particular deed, the settlor was personally liable, on it appearing that he had not a good title; but Lord St. Leonards dissented. His lordship's opinion as to the practice of conveyancers was cited, with approval, in Thompson v. Thompson (6 Ir. R. Eq. 118, 118). It will be noticed that Lord St. Leonards' reasons apply to a claim under an ancestor or testator, as well as to a claim by a complete stranger.

We consider, therefore, that it is unwise to insert vendor's covenants; and, of course, equally so to make the settlor convey "as beneficial owner," and by that means to imply vendor's covenants: sect. 7 (A).

If, however, in any instance vendor's covenants are desired, in most cases it will be safe to imply them by conveying "as beneficial owner." See Law Times, Jan. 7, p. 167. This plan is adapted in the precedent of conveyance in trust for sale for the purposes of a marriage settlement in Concise David, 12th edit. 891.

We prefer the ordinary express covenant for further assurance to the more limited one implied by the use of the words "as settlor." As we explained in our article last week, we can see no sufficient reason why the covenant should be limited to persons deriving title under him subsequent to the conveyance. Moreover, as sect. 7 (E) uses the phrase "Conveyance by way of settlement," a doubt may be raised whether it includes a conveyance on trust for sale for the purposes of a settlement. But see above. It seems desirable that our readers should see the effect of the ordinary covenant.

Effect of Covenant for further Assurance.

A covenant for further assurance will be broken by a refusal to convey any interest acquired in the estate, even by purchase for valuable consideration; or to remove a judgment or other incumbrance; or to execute a duplicate of the conveyance if the original has been burnt; or (semble) handed over to a sub-purchaser of part of the estate; but, in such cases, either the conveyance should bear an indorsement expressing that it is a duplicate, or it should, upon the face of it, purport to be merely a deed of confirmation: (Dart. V. & P. 5th ed. 788; see also King v. Jones, 5 Taunt. 427; Platt on Covenants, 340.) The covenantor is only bound to convey any interest he has obtained by fair and honest means: (Heath v. Crealock, L. Rep. 10 Ch. App. 81; 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 650.)

Liability of Trustees for not proceeding on Covenants.

Among the objections urged by Messrs. Wolstenholme and Turner against the insertion of any covenants for title in a marriage settlement, beyond the limited one for further assurance implied by the words "as settlor," is the liability incurred by trustees for not enforcing covenants. This, no doubt, might prove a great hardship. It is clear that trustees may be so liable: (Macnamara v. Macnamara, 1 Ir. Rep. Eq. 9.) Compare Seton, 406; Lewin, 789; and Youde v. Cloude (L. Rep. 18 Eq. 634). This can be avoided by the insertion of a clause to the effect that they shall not be liable for neglecting to enforce the covenant. A form can be easily framed by adapting the clause which exonerates trustees from seeing to the settlement of after-acquired property: (Wolst. and T. 141; David, iii. 784; Conc. David, 12th edit. 337.) But much the simplest way is to insert only the ordinary covenant for further assurance, or, if thought satisfactory, the words "as settlor," and then there will be no need for this additional caution.

Recitals of Seisin and Agreement to settle.

In immediate connexion with covenants for title, there arises the question whether such recitals should be inserted, as in several cases an attempt has been made to treat them as amounting to a covenant, or at least to a representation which the settlor was personally bound to make good. In Money Penny v. Money Penny (9 H. of L. Cas. 118), great stress was laid on such recitals, and the personal estate of the settlor was, on the construction of the whole deed, held liable. A like attempt was made unsuccessfully in two Irish cases—viz., Thompson v. Thompson (6 Ir. R. Eq. 113) and Burrows v. Burrows (Ibid. 369). See also Heath v. Crealock (ubi sup.).

On the other hand, the case of Bolton v. London School Board (88 L. T. Rep. N. S. 277; L. Rep. 7 Ch. Div. 766) shows the advantage to the title afforded by a recital of seisin. This case has been much doubted, and certainly a settlor should not run any risk for the sake of possibly saving some trouble on a sale. We think, therefore, that either recitals should be omitted, or if they are necessary that they should be very carefully worded.

Summary.

In marriage settlement of land as personalty insert common form covenant for further assurance. Where brevity is the great object, omit that covenant and let the settlor convey "as settlor." Avoid recitals of title and agreement to settle.

(To be continued.)

TRADING RIGHTS IN NAMES.—The tribunal of Commerce of the Seine, in the case of La Banque Populaire v. La Banque Populaire d'Escompte, has granted an injunction against the defendant using the words "Banque Populaire" in its title, on the ground that "a business name is the property of whoever first uses it."

NOTES OF CASES.

LAND COMMISSIONION.

(Before O'HAGAN, J., LITTON, Q.C., and J. E. VERNON, Esq.)

BONAR v. WILSON.

April 18, 1882.—Land Law Act, 1881—Determination of fair rent—Tenant, who entitled to proceed for—Award of compensation on quitting holding—Fixing fair rent, whether ancillary to sale.

Case stated by Sub-Commission No. 6, from their Donegal sittings, for the opinion of the Court.

It appeared that previous to May 1st, 1881, the landlord served a notice to quit, determining the tenancy on November 1st, 1881. At the June Land Sessions in 1881 the tenant was awarded £290 under the Act of 1870. This sum had not been paid or lodged in court. On November 3rd, 1881, notice to fix a fair rent was served. In January, 1882, at the Quarter Sessions a civil bill ejectment was brought by the landlord on the notice to quit. The chairman adjourned the hearing of this ejectment, the tenant's solicitor undertaking that the application to fix a fair rent should be heard before the April Sessions. At the hearing before the Sub-Commissioners, Mr. Gallagher, for the tenant, submitted that he was entitled to have a fair rent fixed, but refused to serve a notice to sell. Mr. Wilson (for the landlord) submitted that the tenant could not have a fair rent fixed as he had been allowed the value of his tenancy; and, if this was ruled against the landlord, the tenant could only apply to have a fair rent fixed for the purpose of sale. The Sub-Commissioners decided that the tenant was not barred by his application, under the Act of 1870, from having his fair rent fixed, inasmuch as although the amount had been awarded it had not yet been paid or lodged in court. They, also, decided that the tenant could only get a rent fixed for his holding for the purpose of sale; but Mr. Gallagher refusing to sell, the case was dismissed, and as the tenant would be ejected at the next sessions the Sub-Commissioners agreed to submit for the opinion of the Court the question—Is the applicant, having regard to the facts, entitled to have a fair rent fixed without serving notice of sale?

Drummond, for the tenant.

Holmes, Q.C., for the landlord.

O'HAGAN, J., in delivering judgment, said—Upon the hearing of this case two questions were argued on behalf of the landlord, being the same two questions which were argued below. The first was that, having regard to the fact that the tenant had obtained an award of £290 from the chairman as compensation upon quitting his holding he was not in a position to be considered a tenant entitled to have a fair rent fixed under the Act of 1881. The second point was that, even supposing that in any case he could be entitled to have such fair rent fixed, he was not entitled to do so save as ancillary to a sale of premises. Having considered the sections of the Act bearing on the questions, his lordship said a plaintiff proceeding to obtain compensation under the Act of 1870, and having actually obtained a decision of the chairman, could not in the opinion of the Court come in as a tenant to have a fair rent fixed. As soon as an adjudication was made by the County Court Judge mutual rights sprang up, the tenant was entitled to his money, and the landlord entitled to his land upon paying the money. The right of the landlord on one side was as strong as that of the tenant on the other. The Court could not hold that a simple delay from last June in lodging the compensation was such as to sweep away the rights of the landlord, and that being so, it was unnecessary to consider the second point. The Court was therefore of opinion on the first point that the dismissal below was right.

COUNTY COURT.

(Before W. F. DARLEY, Q.C.)

BYRNE v. BYRNE.

April 18, 1882.—Land Law Act, 1881—Valuer, employed under County Court—Expenses.

Holding, situate at Arklow, containing 11 statute acres; present rent, £7 10s.

The JUDGE said this case came before him at last Land Sessions on the 21st January, and it was then agreed by both parties to leave the rent to be fixed upon the valuation of Mr. Bridgman, a professional valuer. Mr. Bridgman had gone over the land, and he gave, in the report which he had submitted, a very minute valuation of each field. He assessed the whole yearly value at £6 4s. 3d.; but as at present the tenant pays neither poor rate nor county cess, he thought a sum of about 15s. should be added to this amount, as the tenant's proportion of those charges, making the whole rent £6 19s. 3d.

[Mr. Burkitt, on behalf of the landlord, said the amount of poor rate and county cess, which the tenant ought to pay, was really £1 11s. 6d., and he thought that sum ought to be allowed.]

The JUDGE.—I shall abide by Mr. Bridgman's valuation, as it was agreed should be done, and shall fix the rent at £7. And now there comes a question what we are to do with regard to Mr. Bridgman's expenses. This is the first time I have called the services of a valuator into question under this Act, and I have a few observations to make, which I should wish to have reported. When I was here last January, in addressing the Grand Jury, I spoke of the great difficulty thrown upon County Court Judges with reference to the payment of valuers employed by their order, for which no provision is made in the Act. I stated that I had applied to the Government on the subject, but up to that time had received no reply. Since I left this county I have received a reply from the Government. That reply was this—that no provision had been made or could be made for the payment of valuers appointed by County Court Judges out of the public funds, but that if I were to apply to the Commission in Merrion-street probably they could give me a valuator, and if so his expenses would be payable from the public funds. In consequence of this I went to the office of the Commission in Merrion-street, and had an interview with the Secretary to the Commission, to whom I pointed out all these facts. He told me that in certain cases valuers were given to certain County Court Judges, and that their expenses would be paid from the public funds. I said that I was a County Court Judge of four counties, and that I wanted to know if they could give me a valuer whose expenses would be paid. He said they could not—that they had no valuer whose services could be appropriated to these counties. I said this was a very hard case, that lately a large number of cases—more than 70 in the district of Gorey alone—had been removed from my court into those of the Sub-Commissioners—the reason as far as I could discover being that the expenses of the valuer whom I had stated my intention to employ would fall upon the parties to the case, and that looking at this and the fact that the same judicial powers are vested in the County Court Judges, as in the Sub-Commissioners in land matters, I thought some provision should be made for the payment of a valuer whom they might deem it necessary to appoint. He said they had no power, but of course I was at liberty to write to the Treasury on the matter. Not being satisfied with this answer, I have since applied to the Commissioners and have received from them a similar reply. Now I consider—and I say it openly and publicly—that it is a very great hardship upon me, as a County Court Judge, that if I should consider it right to appoint a valuer I should have no means of providing for the payment of his expenses, except by putting them upon the parties in court. The Land Commissioners frequently appoint valuers, and the expenses of these valuers do not fall upon the parties to the case. And in certain cases they have given valuers to the County Court Judges. Now I have no means of paying this valuer, except by throwing his expenses upon the parties to the suit, and in this case I must direct that the landlord and tenant each pay an equal share of the amount. Mr. Bridgman's expenses amount to £3 17s. 10d., so that each party will pay £1 19s.

DOYLE AND OTHERS v. BOLAND.

April 18, 1882.—Land Law Act, 1881, s. 58 (2)—Town park, what constitutes—Town—Holding partly used for agricultural purposes.

Applications for determination of judicial rents.

The JUDGE said these cases, in which the town-parks question was involved, came before him in Jan. last, one of them (Doyle's) being then fully argued by Mr. J. K. Toomey, for the tenant, and Mr. Johnson, with counsel, for the landlord. The four cases are all under similar circumstances, forming part of an estate, known as the Abbeylands, situated within a mile of the town of Arklow. They had been in the occupation of tenants who did not appear to have any residence at all upon them. The question was whether these lands were town-parks. The Act of Parliament gives a description of what is required to constitute a town-park. And he had come to the conclusion that these lands come within that description. They are in the vicinity of the town, they are occupied by tenants living in the town, and they bear an increased value as accommodation land. The valuer in Doyle's case stated that the present rent of £28 was a very high one, even for town-parks, and placed the value at £14. As to Arklow being a town within the meaning of the Act, he (the Judge) found, on examination, that there were over 5,000 persons living within it, and that it was governed under the Towns Improvement Act. The fact that the lands were partly used for the purposes of agriculture did not matter, and his decision would be that the lands were town-parks, and the applications would, therefore, be dismissed.

BURNS v. THE JUSTICES OF ENNISKERRY.

April 17, 1882.—Assault witnessed by constable—Assaulted party refusing to prosecute—Summons by constable in his own name—24 & 25 Vic., c. 100—25 & 26 Vic., c. 50.

The JUDGE, addressing Mr. Major, said there was an appeal before him at the last Quarter Sessions in which a point, involving the right of police constables to prosecute for assault under certain circumstances, was argued before him by Mr. Major and Mr. G. Perrin. He did not decide the case upon the point argued, but on another—the absence of the assaulted party in the hearing in the court below, which he held to be fatal to the prosecution. Since then, however, he had carefully looked into the Act and he had come to the conclusion that where a police constable witnesses an assault, and the assaulted party refuses in his presence to prosecute, the constable is perfectly justified in issuing a summons against the assaulter in his own name, without first coming before the magistrates at petty sessions to show that the person assaulted refused to proceed, and to obtain their authority for the action. The position taken by Mr. Major with reference to the amending power of the statute 25 & 26 Vic., c. 50, upon 24 & 25 Vic., c. 100, s. 42 (the Act relied upon by Mr. Perrin) was, therefore, in his opinion correct, but as the case was not decided upon that point of course the decision would not be affected.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Ever Useful. The afflicted by illness should look their diseases fully in the face, and at once seek a remedy for them. A short sear it will convince the most sceptical that these noble medicaments have afforded ease, comfort, and oftentimes complete recovery, to the most tortured sufferers. The ointment will cure all descriptions of sores, wounds, bad legs, sprains, eruptions, erysipelas, rheumatism, gout, and skin affections. The Pills never fail in correcting and strengthening the stomach, and in restoring a deranged liver to a wholesome condition, in rousing torpid kidneys to increase their secretion, and in re-establishing the natural healthy activity of the bowels. Holloway's are the remedies for complaints of all classes of society.

BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETIES AND BANKS.

It is clear law that benefit building societies, established under the Act 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 82, have no power to borrow money unless it has been conferred upon them by their certified rules. The books contain numerous decisions to that effect, the last of which (Chapleo v. The Brunswick Building Society) is reported 6 Q. B. Div. 711; 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 449. In a case recently argued before the Chancellor in the Chancery Court of Lancashire, an ingenious attempt was made to evade this rule. A benefit building society had deposited all their deeds and writings with their bankers for safe custody. The society had no powers of borrowing, but, becoming indebted to the bank in considerable sums on an overdrawn account, a memorandum was signed by the solicitor and secretary of the society and handed to the bank. The document stated "that the deeds and writings enumerated in the mortgage book, and which are from time to time deposited in the bank, are so deposited, not only for safe custody, but also as a lien to secure the sum or sums of money which may from time to time be due from the society to the bank on balance of banking account." It was subsequently agreed that the overdraft was not to exceed £25,000. On the society subsequently going into liquidation, the bank refused to deliver up the deeds to the trustees, unless they were paid the balance due to them, on two grounds: (1) That their transactions with the society did not amount to a loan; (2) that as bankers they had a lien upon the deeds for the balance of their account. For the purposes of the Benefit Building Societies Act, the transaction between the society and the bank clearly amounted to a loan by the latter to the former, and was therefore ultra vires and void, and the bank could not maintain their claim to retain the deeds. The stringent rule of law forbidding building societies to borrow unless authorised by their rules would at once be evaded if it was held not to apply to banks, who could therefore allow an overdraft to any amount without fear of coming within the rule. It is in consequence of the existence of the rule of law that banks must not treat building societies on the same footing as other customers who are fettered by no such rule. What in the one case is clearly only an overdraft is as equally clearly a loan in the other. The second contention, however, advanced by the bank, namely, that they were entitled to retain the deeds until payment by virtue of their lien raises a more difficult question, in consequence of the decision in Wilson's case (L. Rep. 12 Eq. 521). If it were not for that case the rule of law applicable to the fact is as equally clear against the second contention of the bank as it is against the first. As stated by Lord Justice Baggallay in Chapleo v. The Brunswick Building Society, the rule is this: "Everyone who has dealings with a building society is bound to know that such a society has no power of borrowing, except such as is conferred upon it by its rules; and if in dealing with such a society they neglect or fail to ascertain whether it has the power of borrowing, or whether any limited power it may have has been exceeded, they must take the consequences of their carelessness." The decision in Wilson's case is undoubtedly to some extent in conflict with the principle thus enunciated by Lord Justice Baggallay. It may perhaps be distinguished on the ground that the Vice-Chancellor in his judgment states that the transaction in that case was one not likely to raise any suspicion in the mind of the man who lent the money. Was he not bound, however, to know the limited power of borrowing conferred upon the building society? From the judgment in Chapleo v. The Brunswick Building Society it would appear that he was, and though apparently the question has never been actually decided in any of the Superior Courts, the weight of authority certainly appears opposed to both contentions raised by the bank in the case in the Lancashire Chancery Court. If banks choose to allow building societies to overdraw, they must be content to be treated in the same way as other persons who advance moneys to them. They cannot either shelter themselves under their lien, or contend that the overdraft is not in fact a loan.—Law Times.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 76, s. 57.

The mayor of a borough under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, which has no separate commission of the peace, is not a justice of the peace for the borough (Wilson v. Strugnell, 50 Law J. Rep. M. C. 145).

Pollock on Contracts (3rd Edition), 349.

Money received as security from the accused by his bail on a criminal charge can be recovered back before the bail has applied it in reimbursing himself for loss actually sustained (Wilson v. Strugnell, 50 Law J. Rep. M. C. 145).

Robson on Bankruptcy (4th Edition), 160.

A convict can be made bankrupt on a petition alleging that, for twenty-one days after service in prison with a debtor's summons, he has neglected to pay the debt (In re Harris, ex parte Graves, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 1)—C. A.

The Felons Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 25), s. 8.

The restraint on alienation imposed upon a felon by section 8 of the Act does not extend so far as to prevent him from paying his debts (In re Harris, ex parte Graves, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 1)—C. A.

Dart on Vendors and Purchasers (5th Edition), 898.

Davidson's Precedents, iii. 670.

Limitations in a marriage settlement of personalty belonging to the wife in favour of her next-of-kin are irrevocable (Paul v. Paul, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 14, not followed; Paul v. Paul, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 5).

OBITUARY.

MR. SAMUEL GERRARD.

It is with deep regret we have to-day to record the death of one of the most esteemed and respected solicitors in Ireland. Mr. Samuel Gerrard died on the 22nd inst., at his residence, Bachelor Hall, Rathfarham. He was the son of Thomas Gerrard, J.P., of Liscaheen Castle, Co. Meath. The family, of Alsatian origin, settled in Lancashire in the early part of the fifteenth century, and a branch of it immigrated to this country early in the seventeenth century, and settled in the Co. Meath. The elder branch is now represented by Thomas Gerrard, J.P., of Gibbetstown, and Boyne Hill, Navan, Deputy Lieutenant, Co. Meath. Samuel Gerrard was born on the 17th of March, 1814, and came to Dublin at an early age, for the purpose of entering the legal profession. After serving his apprenticeship to the late Arthur Baker, Esq., solicitor, Mountjoy-square, he was admitted a solicitor in Hilary Term, 1848, and long enjoyed a large private practice. He took a deep interest in, and possessed a special knowledge of agricultural matters; and in 1862, in open competition, he carried off a prize given by the Agricultural Society of Ireland for the best essay upon the management of small farms in Ireland. By his honourable and upright conduct during a long professional career, Mr. Gerrard earned the respect of his professional brethren and of all with whom he came in contact; and many are the sincere friends who now lament the loss of one who was so deservedly popular. His eldest son, Thomas Gerrard, who succeeds to his business, is Crown Solicitor for the Queen's County and County Carlow, Solicitor to the Provincial Bank of Ireland, and enjoys a large private practice in the city. His second son, John N. Gerrard, is a well-known member of the junior bar, one of the Crown Counsel on the Home Circuit, and editor of the second edition of Carleton on Parliamentary Elections. And his third son is a Civil Engineer, in the Indian Civil Service.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Nineteenth Century. A Monthly Review, Edited by JAMES KNOWLES. No. 63. May, 1882. London: C. Kegan Paul & Co.

Contemporary Review. May, 1882. London: Strahan and Co., Limited, Paternoster-row.

Cassell's History of England from the earliest period to the present time. With about 2,000 Illustrations. Part 80. London, Paris, and New York: Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.

Milton's Paradise Lost. Illustrated by Gustave Doré. Edited, with Notes and a Life of Milton, by the late ROBERT VAUGHAN, D.D. London: Cassell, Petter, Galpin, & Co.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Letters and communications intended for publication, and addressed to THE EDITOR, 33, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin, must be authenticated by the name of the writer, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We throw open the columns of this Journal most willingly for the discussion of subjects of interest to the Profession; but it must be understood that we do not necessarily agree with all the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

EQUITABLE MORTGAGES AND REGISTERED ASSURANCES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.
Chambers, 26, Eustace-street,
Dublin, 21st April, 1882.

SIR,—Will you kindly favour your readers with a short account of the judgment delivered by the Irish Court of Appeal on 20th December last in the case of Burke's Estate, involving an important question under the Irish Registry Act. The appeal was from a decision of Judge Flanagan, dated 30th February, 1881.

According to the reports in the daily newspapers, the Court of Appeal held unanimously that an unregistered equitable mortgage (without writing), by deposit of a mere agreement to convey lands, took priority over a subsequent duly registered conveyance of the same lands. If this be so, what protection has a bond fide purchaser who duly searches the Registry, and also gets in all the known title deeds, against a mortgage created by the deposit of a document, however informal, signed by his vendor, and amounting to an agreement to convey?

I am, Sir,
Yours obediently,
ARCHIBALD TUTTILL.

[We have much pleasure in complying, elsewhere, with our correspondent's suggestion.—Ed.]

CIVIL BILL COURT PRACTICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—It very often happens in the Civil Bill Court that processes are issued which the plaintiff never dreams will or can be defended. He duly attends Court at the hearing of "Undefended Civil Bills," and when his letter is reached his solicitor is calmly informed, on inquiring about the Civil Bill, that a "defence has been entered." A scheming debtor is, perhaps, invoking the Statute of Limitations, or setting up some other defence of more ingenuity than honesty, and the creditor, marvelling what defence will be set up, loses his day, and is told to come again on the day when defences in his letter will go on.

Now this could be very simply rectified by a rule requiring defendants to give notice of defence, and grounds thereof, a couple of days before sessions, so as to enable a solicitor to meet the defence, and notice his client of its entry.

Could nothing be done to provide Equity Rules for the County Court? The present missum gatherum of Civil Bill Rules and "the enactments and practice relating to the Chancery Division," is very misleading.

Yours,
D. CREE.

LAW STUDENT'S JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

FINAL EXAMINATION FOR APPRENTICES TO SOLICITORS, Pursuant to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (Ireland), 1866.

EASTER SITTINGS EXAMINATION, 1882.

PRACTICE OF THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

MR. NEILSON, Examiner.

1. Within what time must a Debtor Summons be served, and state the ways in which it may be served?
2. State what is necessary to obtain an Adjudication in Bankruptcy grounded upon a Debtor Summons distinguishing between a Trader and non-Trader, and the proceedings necessary to obtain the Debtor Summons?
3. What are the statements necessary to be contained in a charge filed by an Incumbrancer upon a Bankrupt's Estate?
4. What Debts are to be counted in the voting for an arrangement, and what in a Composition after bankruptcy?
5. What are the grounds upon which the Court may dismiss a Petition for arrangement filed by a Debtor?
6. When may a Certificate of Conformity be applied for by a Bankrupt? What are the grounds upon which the granting of same may be refused by the Court?

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

EASTER SITTINGS, 1882.

At the Examination of Applicants seeking to become Apprentices to Solicitors, held on Monday the 4th, and Tuesday the 5th of April, 1882, the undernamed candidates were adjudged by the Court of Examiners to have passed said Examination, and their names were arranged in order of merit, viz. :—

- |                     |                    |
|---------------------|--------------------|
| 1. James Boyle      | 5. Samuel Morrison |
| 2. Edmund M. Hurley | 6. George Buchanan |
| 3. Michael Maguire  | 7. Cecil Miniken   |
| 4. Patrick M'Carthy |                    |

The first two candidates on the "admitted" list—namely, James Boyle and Edmund M. Hurley, are to be permitted to compete for the Society's Prize at next Michaelmas Sittings (1882) Prize Examination.

The other candidates on the list have been postponed.

EASTER SITTINGS, 1882.

At the Examination of Applicants seeking admission as Solicitors, held on Wednesday the 5th, and Thursday the 6th of April, 1882, the Court of Examiners decided that both the candidates who presented themselves should be allowed the Examination, and their names were arranged in the following order, viz. :—

- |                     |                      |
|---------------------|----------------------|
| 1. David J. Higgins | 2. David G. Lockhart |
|---------------------|----------------------|

HENRY J. P. WEST, Esq. (President), then distributed the following prizes awarded to candidates at last Hilary Sittings Final Examination, viz. :—A silver medal to Mr. Edward H. Macardie, Junr.; and special certificates to Messrs. William Ford, Junr.; and Thomas M'Minn, and James Mulcair.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

TRINITY SITTINGS, 1882.

NOTICE.

The PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION of Candidates for Apprenticeship will be held at the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin, on Thursday and Friday, the 18th and 19th days of May, 1882, at Eleven o'clock.

N.B.—All Papers to be lodged on or before Tuesday, 2nd May, 1882.

The FINAL EXAMINATION of Candidates seeking admission as Solicitors will be held at the same place, on Monday and Tuesday, the 22nd and 23rd days of May 1882, at the same hour.

By Order of the Council,
JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin.

N.B.—The decision of the Court of Examiners will be announced on Wednesday, the 14th of June, 1882, at Three o'clock, p.m.

Candidates residing in the country need not remain in town to hear decision, but can learn same from the Dublin Morning Papers of the day following the announcement.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed. Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—F. A. W. Ker, allocate.—H. Coulter, do.—E. B. Booth, from 24th.

IN COURT.—D. Bingham, payment by receiver.—D. Carleton, do.—H. E. Henderson, as to occupation rent.—J. W. Stanford, declaration of title.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

D. O'Callaghan, rental.—M. Watson, do.—J. Fairbrother, vouch.

TUESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

Trustee Blake, vouch.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—E. A. Peile, final schedule.—A. W. Travers, from 20th April.—Trustee T. F. Burke, from 27th April.—G. B. Low, do.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

S. DAVIS, 3 lots.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—D. P. M'Carthy, confirm sale.

IN COURT.—Assignees D. W. Cruice, rehearing.—W. K. Burroughs, objection.—E. Morphy, receiver.

TUESDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

REV. A. W. WEST, 34 lots.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

F. R. Lambert, rental.—J. M'Nea, rental from 19th April.—M. Fox, from 28th April.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—W. Petrie, from 20th April.—S. Henderson, adjourned motion.—C. Langdale, retain funds.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

W. R. O'Byrne, rental.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Charleton, Thomas James, of Magherafelt, in the county of Londonderry, grocer. April 14; Friday, May 5, and Tuesday, May 28. J. C. White and W. J. Brett, solrs.

Crawford, William, junior, and James Kennedy, late of 8, Rosemary-street, Belfast, in the county of Antrim, stock brokers, carrying on business and trading as "W. Crawford, junior, and Company." April 12; Friday, May 5, and Tuesday, May 28. James Henry, solr.

Murray, John, of Grenanstown, in the county of Tipperary, farmer. April 14; Friday, May 12, and Friday, May 26. Jeremiah Perry, solr.

M'Dermott, Edmond, late of Foynes, in the county of Limerick, and of Gardiner-street, in the city of Dublin, now of Lynch's Hotel, Dungarvan, in the county of Waterford, Esquire, late of the Royal Irish Constabulary April 14; Tuesday, May 16, and Friday June 2. James Rose Byrne, solr.

West, Georgianna Grove, of Ardenode, Brannockstown, in the county of Kildare, widow. April 18; Tuesday, May 16, and Friday, June 2. Patrick Anna Smith, solr.

Woodlock, Thomas, of 42, Dame-street, in the city of Dublin, stock broker and insurance agent, trading as Woodlock and Co. April 21; Tuesday, May 16, and Friday, June 2. John Anthony Hogan, solr.

Yorell, William, of Blackbull, Dunboyno, in the county of Meath, shopkeeper. April 18; Tuesday, May 16, and Friday, June 2. Thomas O'Meara, solr.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	APRIL
	Sat. 22	Mon. 24	Tues. 25	Wed. 26	Thur. 27	Fri. 28	Sat. 29
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½
— New 3 p c STOCK ..	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1898 } Traffic at ..	104½	104½	104½	104½	104½	104½	104½
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	104½	104½	104½	104½	104½	104½	104½
BANKS.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	318½	318½	317½	318½	318½	319
20 London and County (Ld'rs) ..	—	—	—	—	75	—
30 London and W'minster, W'd ..	70½	—	—	—	70½	—
10 Do. New ..	—	60½	—	—	—	60½
3½ Munster Bank (Limited) ..	7	7	7	7	7½	7½
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	23½	23½
10 National of Assoc'n (Ld'rs) ..	—	—	—	—	14	—
15 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	—	56½	56
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	—	29½	—	—
25 Standard of B. S. A., W'd ..	—	—	—	—	57½	57
2½ Ulster Banking Co. ..	—	—	—	—	10½	—
MISCELLANEOUS.
10 Alliance & Dub. Com. Gas ..	15½	—	—	—	15½	—
4 Arnott & Co., limited ..	—	—	6	—	—	—
100 Grand Canal ..	—	—	—	—	46	—
8 Goulding & Co., limited ..	—	—	—	—	8½	—
4 National Discount, Irs., W'd ..	—	—	2½	2½	—	—
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance ..	—	—	—	10½	—	10½
TRAMWAYS.
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	—	10½	10½	10½
10 L'pl Un'ed Tram & Bus'ld ..	—	—	—	—	12½	—
RAILWAYS.
10 Athenry and Tuam ..	—	—	—	—	3½	—
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	—	—	48½	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	—	118½
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	113½	—	—	113½	—
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	—	94½	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	32½	—	32½
RAILWAY PREFERENCE.
100 Gt. N't'n (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	106
LEASED AT FIXED RENTALS.
100 Dublin and Kingstown ..	—	—	—	233½	—	—
DEBENTURE STOCKS.
— Belfast & N't'n Coe, 4 p c ..	—	105	105	105	—	105
— Dublin & Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	105	—	105½	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	100	109	109	—	—	—
— Do. 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	128
— Gt. South'n & West'n, 4 p c ..	109½	—	—	—	109½	109½
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	105½	—	—	105½
— Waterford & Central 5 p c ..	104	—	105	—	—	—
MISCELLANEOUS DEBENT.
Alliance & Cons. Gas, 4 p c ..	—	100	—	—	—	—
City Deb. of 1892 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	93½	—	—	—	93½
Do. Defd. of 1892 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	92

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics.

Bank Rate—Of Discount—6 per cent., 30th January, 1882

Of Deposit—5 per cent., 30th January, 1882

Name Days—May 11th and 25th, 1882.

Account Days—May 12th and 26th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1882.

No. 797

EQUITABLE MORTGAGES BY DEPOSIT OF TITLE DEEDS.—II.

THE well-known and often canvassed decision of Judge Lynch in Re M'Kinney's Estate (6 Ir. L. T. Rep. 179), he had himself hoped would have been appealed from, as did a commentator in those pages (6 Ir. L. T. 609); but, perhaps because the amount of property involved was inconsiderable, that decision passed unchallenged. Previously, the point had, indeed, been regarded as settled law, to the opposite effect; but, as Law, C., observed in Re Burke's Estate, Judge Lynch was unfortunately misled by the imperfect report of the appellate decision in The Agra Bank v. Barry (1 R. 6 Eq. 128). Lord Justice Christian, also, animadverted on the misapprehension thus arising, in Keilly v. Garnett (L R. 7 Eq. 17); yet, he observed, undoubtedly Re M'Kinney's Estate "has placed the law upon this most reasonable footing, that registration is a protection against all secret and unregistered titles whatsoever, whether their absence from the Registry was because they were neglected to be placed there, or because they were incapable of being placed there. It is impossible to avoid being struck by the good sense of this, and of the reasons which were given for it." This was in 1872, while, so lately as in Cleary v. Fitzgerald (7 L. R. I. 265), we find Fitzgibbon, L.J., also remarking: "I foresee great danger in admitting that, by adopting irregular modes of charging lands by parol, the effect of the Registry Acts may be avoided." At last, however, after a most careful and elaborate examination of the authorities, this question, affecting such large and varied interests, has been set at rest; and it would be the merest supererogation on our part to discuss at large the many cases, and the train of reasoning founded upon them in connexion with the terms of the statute itself, that led the Court of Appeal to its unanimous conclusion. A parol deposit of title deeds does not come within the provisions of the Registry Acts—there is nothing to register; and as Fitzgibbon, L.J., remarked, "our decision may appear in some degree to weaken the security of a registered title, but, if this be so, it is because the lawful operation of a deposit of title deeds, though (to adopt Lord Hatherley's language in Neve v. Pennell, 2 H. & M. 187) it may introduce the mischief intended to be remedied by the Registry Acts in another form, does so in a form which the machinery furnished by the Acts cannot meet. It is only another instance in which an Act of Parliament, appearing when passed to be sufficient, has failed to meet every case which subsequent events, legal ingenuity, or the logical application of known principles, may raise to try its efficacy." We have seen that, in M'Kay v. M'Nally (13 Ir. L. T. Rep. 130), a security by deposit of title deeds had already been held not to constitute a "mortgage" within the terms of a covenant—although in three cases (which were not cited) it was held to constitute a charge "by way of mortgage," within Locke King's Act (even if by parol, according to Davis v. Davis, ubi supra); and though Tindal, C.J., observed, in Warburton v. Ivis (2 D. & C. 494), that every "deed by which any interest in lands or tenements is transferred, or any charge created thereon, should be registered," and favoured the construction forcing "all transfers and dispositions of every kind, by whomsoever made, to be put upon the face of the register," yet certainly the Act of Anne, in its terms dealing only with "deeds or conveyances," while the word "disposition" in section 4 is controlled and limited by its context, seems hardly to embrace literally the case of parol equitable mortgages by deposit, which indeed were then unknown. In truth, there is nothing in the Act to show that it was intended to apply to all kinds of titles. As it was put by Sir E. Sullivan, M.R.: "Suppose a man marries a woman entitled to a term of years, or to a fee-simple or freehold estate, in each case an estate becomes vested in him by the marriage. Again, by the birth of a living child, an estate by the curtesy may become vested in the husband; none of these titles can be placed upon the Registry. Well, I suppose the extraordinary doctrine could not be contended for that if a wife, separated from her husband, suppressing the fact of marriage, makes a conveyance of the lands which belonged to her at the time of the marriage, the mere registration of such conveyance would defeat her husband's title; which would be the result if the statute applied to all titles, no matter how acquired, whether incapable of being put on the Registry or not." [Cf. the Australian case of Fitzpatrick v. Barker, 12 S. C. R., Eq., 83.] Limitations of this kind to the protection afforded by the Registry are, indeed, inseparable from any system of record or registration. As observed by Cooley, C.J., in a paper on the Recording Laws of the United States, read last year before a meeting of the American Bar Association, "it is impossible such records should be an entirely safe reliance, because many things that may affect a title either cannot be shown by them under any circumstances, or cannot be shown under any provisions of law as yet made for the purpose. Heirship is one of these. If the apparent owner of the record dies, whoever purchases of his supposed heirs must run all risks of error or misinformation in learning who they are. Provision has indeed been made in a few of the States for recording a certificate of the heirship from the court having jurisdiction of the estate of decedent; but these provisions are exceptional, and the certificate would of course be ineffectual to cut off the right of an actual heir, unless under provisions of law which require a judicial hearing and determination, after notice to all concerned. Questions of marital right in lands are also not to be settled by a mere inspection of the record; and not to mention other things which might defeat an apparently good title, it is sufficient for our present purpose to say that any deed in the chain of title may prove to be incorrectly recorded, or be forged, or be given by a minor, and therefore voidable, or by an insane person, and therefore wholly void." It should be observed that in Re Burke's Estate nothing turned on the nature of the particular subject-matter of the deposit (see 7 Ir. L. T. 29, 30). It was an agreement for a lease, or purchase, which would be clearly sufficient: Unity, &c., Co. v. King, 25 Beav. 72; Allen v. Woodruff, 96 Ill. (Amer.); et cf. Ex p. Orrett, 3 M. & A. 153; Ex p. Smith, 2 M. D. & De G. 544; and 4 Madd. 249.

Pressed by the obvious unreasonableness of having to ask the court to strain the language of the Acts so as to make them require the registration of this kind of security, for accomplishing which no machinery is furnished, the respondent's counsel proceeded to impeach the policy of permitting mortgages by parol deposit at all. On this subject we have already supplied a good deal of additional materials for consideration; and references may be added to 2 Story, Eq. Jur. s. 1020, 4 Kent. Com. 151, observing, inter alia, that the disposition of the courts has been to restrict rather than enlarge the operation of the doctrine, and that it is not, therefore, ordinarily applied to enforce parol agreements to make a mortgage, or to make a deposit of title deeds for that purpose; and see, further, as to the extent of the reception of the doctrine in America, 1 Hil. Mtge. 599; Browne, Stat. of Frauds, s. 64; Carter v. Wake, 16 Am. L. Reg. 447. But, on the other side, we are surprised that Lord Abinger's vindication of the policy and reasonableness of the doctrine (in Keys v. Williams, 3 Y. & Coll. 60) was not quoted. However, as Sir E. Sullivan, M.R., observed: "It appears to me that we have now nothing to do with the policy of allowing securities to be taken by mere deposit—that is a matter for the Legislature—and we cannot be influenced by the fact that such securities only received their full development after the Registry Act was passed. The law allows of the security, and there is no means of placing it on the Registry; the provisions of the Act do not reach the case, and we here cannot make them do so. It is, too much, however, in any view to suggest, as has been done, that a deposit of deeds is entirely a secret disposition. The deeds are at all events a strong symbol of ownership; and if a person subsequently dealing with the owner, without deeds, makes no inquiry after them, and utterly neglects to ascertain how they are circumstanced, he must only take the consequences." "If any purchaser," observed Fitzgibbon, L.J., "chooses to accept a property without getting possession of those documents of title which have been well called the 'visible badge' of ownership—if he chooses to rest satisfied with any plausible excuse for the non-production of those documents—if he fails to verify the explanation given of their absence, he must take the risk; but the circumstances must be extraordinary, and the cases must be few indeed, in which a purchaser of ordinary caution can be prejudiced. It will in all cases be his plain interest, it will be the duty of his advisers, and it will be open to himself, to insist on getting up the documents of title, to verify the explanation of their absence, or to decline to complete the purchase; but in any case in which a conflict such as the present may arise, between a disposition by deposit and a conveyance by registered assurance, both being lawful and effective dealings, we have no right artificially to postpone either to the other, and the earlier must prevail." And no doubt these considerations do minimise the practical extent of the decision, as an infringement of the security of registered titles; but cases such as we have had often occasion to comment upon (see 6 Ir. L. T. 334, 7 id. 29, 11 id. 516) will still continue to recur from time to time; and in one point of view we rather think the effect of this decision is calculated to render equitable mortgages by deposit still more open to the objections that, as we have seen, have been so often advanced against that form of security. It gives an advantage to parol transactions; for, if there be a written memorandum, and it is unregistered (even though informal—a case, at all events, uncovered by the present decision, but see Eyre v. M'Dowell, 9 H. L. 652; In re Hamilton, 9 Ir. Ch. B. 512), its operation will be defeated; and as regards parol transactions it reintroduces the necessity of having recourse to statutable declarations, &c., and imposes on purchasers and incumbrancers all the burdens that the Registry Act was passed to obviate. Who could now, with any degree of assurance, advise a trustee to take a second mortgage? (As to the necessity of inquiry when taking mortgages from trustees, see Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 D. M. & G. 635, 648.) What protection has a bond fide purchaser who duly searches the Registry, and gets in all the known title deeds? His own caution—which, perhaps, may best be exercised by his not becoming a purchaser at all. Still, as Judge Lynch had himself observed in Re Driscoll's Estate (I. R. 1 Eq. 288)—quoted by Deasy, L.J., in Re Burke's Estate—"if such a transaction creates an equitable security, it would seem rather hard to hold that, while it is incapable of receiving aid or protection from the Registry Act, it is liable to be defeated by their operation;" and the true remedy appears rather to lie with the Legislature. That, as it stands, this mode of security is open to objection there can be no doubt, as Law, C., allowed in Re Burke's Estate; and he then referred to the Irish Registration Act of 1850, and to Lord Westbury's Registry of Title Act, 1862; but, as several Commissions and Parliamentary Committees have already suggested specific amendments of the law on the assumption that, as existing, it does not afford adequate protection, it will suffice to point to Re Burke's Estate as a further illustration that amendment is indeed necessary. The old English notion was that the possession of the title deeds was the best evidence of title; the system of registry was to have supplied a substitute, under which any man might safely purchase, or safely accept incumbrances; but, the possession of the title deeds is now enough to defeat the purpose of the recording laws, and the protection afforded by the system of registry has been rendered completely deceptive or hap-hazard by the decision in Re Burke's Estate, which may, unfortunately, have the effect of not only further diminishing the credit-operations of capitalists in this country, but of still more alarming the English investor in our landed securities.

THE IRISH LAND COMMISSIONERS.

A Parliamentary return has just been issued giving particulars as to the Assistant-Commissioners under the Irish Land Act. There are four legal Assistant-Commissioners, holding office for seven years—namely, Messrs. Robert Romney Kane, Robert Reeves, Edward Grmer, and J. G. M'Carthy. The eight lay Commissioners appointed for the same period are—Mr. Thomas Baldwin, Superintendent of Agricultural Department, Board of National Education; Lieutenant-Colonel H. R. Bayly, Justice of the Peace and land agent; Mr. Richard Garland, Justice of the Peace and practical farmer; Mr. James Haughton, practical farmer; Mr. Cornelius O'Keefe, ditto; Mr. John J. O'Shaughnessy, Justice of the Peace, practical farmer, a landlord, and a tenant; Mr. John Rice, practical farmer and member of the Royal Agricultural Commission; Mr. James M. Ross, landlord, land agent, and practical farmer.

The following are legal Commissioners appointed for one year:—Messrs. Ulick Bourke, Gerald Fitzgerald, S. G. M'Devitt, Romney Foley, Francis G. Hodder, Thomas D. Bearden, Cecil R. Boche, J. O. Wylie, Michael T. Crean, Charles P. Hamilton, and Thomas Perry Lynch. The remaining twenty-five are lay Commissioners appointed for one year. Their names and qualifications are as follows:—Mr. Andrew Cwynn, Justice of the Peace, landed proprietor, and practical farmer; Mr. William Davidson, land agent; Mr. Pierre Mahony, Justice of the Peace and practical farmer; Mr. Edmund Murphy, Justice of the Peace, land-holder, and land agent; Mr. Edward William O'Brien, Justice of the Peace, Deputy-Lieutenant, and landed proprietor; Mr. Thomas Walpole, Justice of the Peace and practical farmer; Mr. James G. Barr, Justice of the Peace, landlord, and land agent; Mr. John F. Bomford, Justice of the Peace, practical farmer, and land agent; Mr. John Cunningham, practical farmer and land agent; Mr. Laurence Doyle, barrister-at-law, landlord, and practical farmer; Mr. James Howlin, Justice of the Peace, grand juror, and landlord; Mr. George O. Kenny, barrister-at-law and practical farmer; Mr. M. P. Lynch, barrister-at-law, practical farmer, and land agent; Mr. Hugh R. Morrison, Justice of the Peace and practical farmer; Mr. Seymour Mowbray, practical farmer, and Secretary of Royal Agricultural Society of Ireland; Mr. John M. Weir, Justice of the Peace and practical farmer; Mr. Alexander W. Ellis, practical farmer; Mr. John Golding, practical farmer and land agent; Mr. Jerome J. Guiry, Justice of the Peace, landed proprietor, and practical farmer; Mr. John Headach, landed proprietor and practical farmer; Mr. Edward McCausland, Justice of the Peace and registrar to a sub-commission; Mr. Thomas Meek, practical farmer; Mr. Thomas Roche, ditto; Mr. Robert Sproule, Justice of the Peace, practical farmer, and landed proprietor; and Mr. Patrick Taffe, Justice of the Peace and practical farmer.

Each of the Legal Assistant-Commissioners receives a salary at the rate of £1,000 a year, with actual travelling expenses, and £1 1s. a night for hotel expenses.

Each of the Lay Assistant-Commissioners receives salary at the rate of £750 a year, with similar travelling and hotel allowances.

Gentlemen holding land agencies have been required to resign their agencies.

THE SETTLED LAND BILL.

This important Bill was presented to the House of Lords by Lord Cairns. A convenient summary of its provisions, as thus introduced, will be found in the Law Times of March 11th and 18th of the present year (pp. 330, 347), and the text of the Bill will be found in the Weekly Notes of the 4th March, 1882. It was brought from the Lords on the 30th March, and ordered to be printed on the following day. The importance of the Bill can hardly be over-estimated. It applies both to England and Ireland, and affects land the value of which can only be reckoned by millions; and, as it applies to wills, it affects all classes. It is indorsed with a very useful memorandum giving what the promoters intend to be the general effect of the clauses contained in the Bill. The first two paragraphs of the memorandum give the key to the whole: "1. The main object of this Bill is to enable a tenant for life—which term is used to include generally the class of limited owners—to dispose by sale, lease, or otherwise, of any part of the settled land, or even of the whole of it; proper provision being made for securing the purchase-money on a sale, and otherwise for protecting the interests of a remainderman and of others entitled to come in under the settlement. 2. The Bill is not confined in its operation to future settlements."

We may add that it contains a clause the object of which is "to nullify devices for depriving a tenant for life of the powers given to him under the Bill by means of forfeiture of property or otherwise." There are two main objects of a settlement of land: first, to secure a provision for the persons from time to time entitled under it; secondly, "to keep the land in the family." The Bill then proposes carefully to guard the first; and in a great measure to override the second, so as to render the alienation of land more general.

It is not our intention in the present article to discuss the wisdom or otherwise of the Bill, but to examine whether its professed objects are carried out in a satisfactory manner. The conclusion we arrive at is, that the plan of the Bill is susceptible of great improvement, and that it needs many modifications and corrections in detail. The second clause of the Bill contains seven sub-clauses. Each of the first six of these contains a definition, or explanation, of a word or phrase, and the seventh contains sub-sub-clauses, which comprise about twenty definitions. The mode of definition employed by the Bill is not always happy. Thus, clause 2 (5) explains who is tenant for life; but Part xiii. is headed "Limited owners generally," and clause 58, which is the first clause comprised in that part, declares that no less than nine classes of persons shall have the powers given by the Act to a tenant for life. Surely all this should have been placed at the commencement of the Bill. The powers, throughout almost the whole Bill, are given to "the tenant for life," and then they are extended to other limited owners by clause 58; but curiously enough, in clause 29 (6), we read of "tenant for life, or for any greater estate," and in clause 58 of "tenant for life or other limited owner." Why is this?

By clause 60, where an infant is "tenant for life," the powers given by the Bill to a "tenant for life" may be exercised by the trustees of the settlement. Now, clause 46 requires that, before any sale, &c., is made by "tenant for life," he must post a registered letter giving notice to the trustees. So apparently in this case the trustees must post letters to themselves. This should be altered. As we have mentioned the provisions relating to infants, we may add here that the Bill should expressly state that certain windfalls which "tenant for life may take for his own use" shall be held in trust for the infant.

The framers of the Bill seem to have forgotten that by the Settled Estates Act, 1877, ss. 46, 49, the guardians of infants have power to grant certain leases. The result is apparently that both guardians and trustees have concurrent powers. This seems clearly an oversight.

It is unfortunate that the definitions in the Bill do not coincide with those in the Conveyancing Act. Thus there are different definitions of "land," "mining purposes," and "will." The last definition is very wide: "Will includes codicil and other testamentary instrument and a writing in the nature of a will." It is no doubt correct to include "testamentary instrument" (Re Savage, L. Rep. 2 P. & M. 78), but the last words seem likely to mislead. But perhaps the most peculiar provision in the Bill, when taken in connexion with the Conveyancing Act, is clause 50, which is as follows: "The powers under this Act of a tenant for life are not capable of assignment or release, . . . but this section shall operate without prejudice to the rights of any person being an assignee for value of the estate or interest of the tenant for life. . . ." Also contracts not to exercise the powers are void, with the like exception. Now, by section 52 of the Conveyancing Act, "a person to whom any power, whether coupled with an interest or not, is given, may by deed release or contract not to exercise that power." If the Bill becomes law it clashes with this section of the Conveyancing Act. The effect of it is that, subject to the exception in favour of assignee for value of the "tenant for life," his powers are indestructible, and this exception is subject to a limitation. The tenant for life may grant leases for twenty-one, sixty, or ninety-nine years, according to the nature of the lease, provided he reserves the best rent without fine, and the lease is otherwise in conformity with the Act. And this applies to assignments before the Act. So that, although by the terms of a mortgage tenant for life is precluded from leasing, yet he is given the power by this Bill. No doubt this provision will greatly commend itself to limited owners, but we doubt its fairness to their incumbancers. And, in future, it will of course pro tanto diminish the security limited owners can give. It certainly will be a rather strange result of legislation that an owner in fee-simple who has incumbered may be deprived of leasing power, but the "limited owner" cannot. Of course this affects section 19 of the Conveyancing Act. The power of transferring incumbrances from one part of the settled land to another part, with consent of the incumbancer, seems insufficiently guarded. A second mortgage may be turned into a first, or a mortgage on leasehold into one on freeholds, to the disadvantage of the remainderman.

Clauses 7 to 15 relate to leases. They enable "tenant for life" to grant ordinary leases for twenty-one years, and building and mining leases for sixty and ninety-nine years respectively. They enable the "tenant for life" to take a fine. We cannot refrain from expressing surprise at this provision, which is of a retrograde nature. It is contrary to the principles of most recent statutes, and also to the general practice of the profession. It is true that, where "tenant for life" has incumbered, he will not be able to take a fine without the consent of the incumbrancer (see clause 50) and the remainderman is protected by the provisions requiring that the fine be treated as capital (clause 21). In all probability the power to take a fine will very seldom be used. On the other hand, building leases for ninety-nine years are thought by many to be injurious to the public as encouraging defective building. It is very general in the North of England to grant leases for 600 or 999 years, and certainly this ought to be permitted, without the necessity of any application to the Court under clause 11. A rather strange power is given by clause 7. It enables tenant for life, although impeachable for waste, to give leases "involving waste." This seems inconsistent. However, in case of a mining lease, protection to the remainderman is given by clause 12. In clause 7 (4) execution of a lease is to be "evidence" of the execution and delivery of the counterpart, and by clause 9 (4) a certain statement is also made "evidence" of certain matters. It should be stated whether prima facie or conclusive evidence is intended. We presume the former (see clause 54), but it should be expressly stated. Clause 9, which regulates the building leases the "tenant for life" may make, seems to contain a mistake. It declares, "Every building lease shall be made partly in consideration of the lessee, or some person by whose direction the lease is granted, or some other person, having erected or agreeing to erect buildings . . ." Does this really mean to enable a tenant for life to grant a building lease (ninety-nine years) because "some other person," perhaps the settlor, or a previous "limited owner" under the settlement, has erected buildings? A building lease is granted because the lessee has built, or agrees to build. This must be altered. By clause 14 "tenant for life" may accept a surrender and take any money consideration for it for his own use. This seems inconsistent with the idea of making him a trustee for the benefit of all persons entitled under the settlement (see clause 53). It would be better to compel the tenant for life to treat it as capital.

A more serious point arises in connexion with clause 20, which directs the mode of conveyance under the Act. The conveyance by deed of the tenant for life is to pass the land conveyed free from the estates and powers of the settlement, but subject to (i.) All estates, interests, and charges having priority to the settlement; (ii.) "All such other, if any, estates, interests, and charges as have been conveyed or created for securing money actually raised at the date of the deed;" (iii.) Certain leases and grants "made for value in money or money's worth, or agreed so to be, before the date of the deed." Apparently, then, if a mortgage is made to A., and afterwards another to B., A.'s security would lose priority, unless A.'s money were actually paid before the conveyance to B., although it was paid after notice of the mortgage to B. Also a marriage settlement made by tenant for life, out of his own estate, would be set aside by subsequent conveyance for money value. But this view does not agree with clause 50 (8). Which is to prevail? We propose to discuss other clauses of the Bill in a future article.—Law Times

THE MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY BILL.

There is probably no part of the law of England at the present day which presents more inconsistencies and absurdities, or which is less in accordance with civilised opinion, than that relating to the property of married women. The rigorous simplicity of the common law, which deprived a woman during marriage of all property, was long ago mitigated by the distinctions and exceptions introduced by equity, and has since been materially modified by statute; particularly by the Married Women's Property Act, 1870. The result is a complexity and uncertainty of law and practice which may be fairly gauged by the fact that some thirty double-column pages of the new "Digest of the Law Reports" are taken up with cases relating to this subject. The hardships and wrongs not only to married women, but to creditors, produced by the present state of things are matters of every-day experience. The bill before us is an application of the policy of "thorough" to this state of things. It aims at abolishing the old law altogether, and placing married women on the same footing with regard to rights and liabilities of property as unmarried women, or as men.

As originally introduced in the House of Lords it consisted of nineteen clauses, which were practically identical with the bill for the same purpose introduced by Mr. Hinde Palmer in the House of Commons last year. It echoed last year's bill so exactly as to provide that the commencement of the Act should be January 1, 1882, thus making it to some extent retrospective. But numerous amendments were introduced in committee, and as the bill now stands it is to begin on January 1, 1883, though it is still, owing to some slip, to be called the Married Women's Property Act, 1881. The first two sections contain the substantial part of the bill; the rest dealing with matters of detail. By clause 1 (i.) a married woman "shall be capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing by will or otherwise, of any real or personal property as her separate property, in the same manner as if she were a feme sole, without the intervention of any trustee." The next sub-clause gives her power to contract, and to sue and be sued, as if she were a feme sole, and without her husband being joined; thus sweeping away the absurdity established by Hancocks v. Lobbache, 47 Law J. Rep. C. P. 514; L. R. 3 C. P. Div. 197, that notwithstanding the Judicature and Married Women's Property Acts, in an action to charge the wife's separate estate, acquired as earnings or wages, it was still necessary to make the husband a co-defendant. Sub-clause (iii.) establishes a presumption that every contract by a married woman is intended to bind her separate property unless the contrary be shown. Sub-clause (iv.) abolishes the rule laid down in Pike v. Fitzgibbon, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 394; L. R. 17 Chanc. Div. 454, and makes after-acquired property liable to previous contracts. Sub-clause (v.) says that every "married woman carrying on a separate trade shall, in respect of her separate property, be subject to the bankruptcy laws in the same way as if she were a feme sole." This section reverses the case of Ex parte Jones, In re Grisell, 48 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 169; L. R. 12 Chanc. Div. 484, in which the Court of Appeal held that a married woman could never be made bankrupt. But it is hardly explicit enough. A doubt has been suggested; whether the specification of separate trade would not by implication prevent the bankruptcy law from being applied in other cases. It would seem better to omit the words "carrying on a separate trade." There is no reason why a woman, like a man, should not be made bankrupt in respect of private as well as of trade debts; and, if she is actually in partnership with her husband in trade, there is no reason why she should not be equally liable to bankruptcy as if she were carrying on a separate trade. Clause 8 would protect her, as it would anyone else, if she merely lent money to the husband to be employed in trade, and the question of partner or no partner would not be necessarily more difficult to settle in the case of husband and wife than of strangers. That clause (8) provides that if a wife's separate money is lent to the husband, she shall be entitled to prove as a creditor for the amount, in case of his bankruptcy; but shall be postponed to other creditors. Clause 2 embodies the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, ss. 1, 7, 8, but extends it by declaring that a woman who marries after the Act, shall "be entitled to have and hold as her separate property, and to dispose of, in manner aforesaid, all real and personal property which shall belong to her at the time of marriage, or shall be acquired by her or devolve on her after marriage," including any wages, &c. It seems unnecessary to add this last clause, if she is to be entitled to any property which shall be acquired by her; but perhaps, by way of avoiding the extraordinary results that are sometimes arrived at by comparing repealed with existing statutes, it may be as well to insert it ex abundanti cautela. But it is to be regretted that Acts of Parliament should be defaced, and sometimes made a dead letter, owing to too great anxiety to specify particulars.

Clause 4 extends to women married before the Act similar rights to those conferred on women married after the Act, in relation to all property the title to which accrues after the Act. As it specifically includes contingent and reversionary property, it emphasises the supercession of Malins's Act, which is not, however, repealed by this Act. This is, however, done by Lord Cairns's Conveyancing Bill, in discussing which we said that the clauses relating to married women's property (clauses 6-9) could be better treated in connexion with the present bill. Clause 8 of that bill gives a married woman, with the concurrence of her husband, power, by deed, to "dispose of any present or future or reversionary interest, vested or contingent, in any property," and to release or extinguish any power given her, or any equity to a settlement, or to dispose of any property accruing to her by or under any instrument made before or after the Act; but special exemption is made (as in clause 17 of the present Act) of any property subject to a restraint on anticipation, and of any property subject to her marriage settlement. It is to be observed that, in the main, these provisions coincide with the present Act, but are of greater retrospective force, since they apply not only to cases where the title accrues after the commencement of the Act, but to all cases; while, on the other hand, such disposition can only be made jointly with her husband. Clause 9 of the Conveyancing Bill gives limited powers of binding separate estates as compared with the present bill, but equally overrules Pike v. Fitzgibbon. Clause 6 sweeps away all necessity for the acknowledgments of deeds or for examinations of married women and the offices of commissioner to take those acknowledgments and to record them. Taken simply in view of the Conveyancing Bill, this provision is certainly open to grave objections. As some of our correspondents have pointed out, it would remove a safeguard to married women, which experience has shown to be necessary and beneficial. But, if the Married Women's Property Bill passes, those objections would be to a great extent removed. At present it may very well happen that the examination conveys the first and only information to the wife that she is to sign away property belonging, or which may belong, to herself. But under the new law it will be a fact well known to every woman that her property is really her property; and that, if she is asked to sign a deed, it must be for the purpose of dealing with something to which she must have a right. The present examination is not, and cannot be, a protection against violence or pressure on the part of the husband, but only against his fraud or the ignorance of the wife. In future that ignorance cannot exist; and the fraud will, therefore, be barely possible. Against both fraud and violence, too, she is protected by section 11 of the bill, which gives her power to protect her property by proceedings against anyone, including her husband, as if she were a feme sole; and by section 16, which gives power to apply to the High Court or a County Court, in a summary way, in any questions affecting property between herself and her husband. The provisions of section 6 of the Conveyancing Bill may well be transferred to this bill, and the acknowledgments of deeds and examinations abolished. Clauses 8 and 9 of the Conveyancing Bill would be superfluous, and better omitted. But the retrospective effect of clause 8 might usefully be given to section 4 of this bill. Seeing that the separate estate already acquired under the Married Women's Property Act will—as to power of suing and being sued, and, indeed, as to dealing with it generally—be retrospectively affected by the Act, it is worth grave consideration whether it would not be better to make the Act retrospective generally. The Settled Land Bill, which is an enlarging bill, is retrospective in its operation, as are many of the provisions of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and of the Conveyancing Bill, 1882. It would greatly contribute to symmetry and simplicity, to the saving of doubts and litigation, and would, if the bill be just, not inflict injustice on anyone, to make this bill also retrospective. The rest of the bill is chiefly auxiliary and administrative. Clauses 5 to 10 are mainly repetitions, with improvements in detail, of sections 2 to 6 and section 10 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, relating to the manner by which various kinds of property can be legally vested in, or transferred to, married women. The elaborate provisions in section 10 for the appointment of new trustees of policies are unnecessary, in view of the trustee clauses of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.

In any change in the law of married women's property, two dangers have to be guarded against, and two sets of separate, and often conflicting, interests as far as possible preserved. On the one hand, you have to prevent the husband being unduly saddled with liabilities imposed on him by his wife; and, on the other, to prevent husband and wife combining to evade their liabilities altogether, and defraud their separate or joint creditors. Both these objects are aimed at in the bill, and apparently with success. Clauses 12 and 13 protect the husband against the antenuptial debts or wrongs of his wife, except to the extent of assets coming to him from her, as in the amendments made in 1874 to the Act of 1870. The wife is liable to be sued for them, and her separate estate is primarily liable thereto; but, to prevent such difficulties as were felt by creditors in Mercier v. Williams, clause 14 provides that one may be sued alone, or both may be sued together, in which case judgment is given against either or both, according as the facts turn out to be. By clause 15 the husband is protected against criminal acts on the part of the wife, as the wife is against such acts on the part of the husband; and clause 16 gives them power to apply to the Courts for summary orders in civil matters relating to property, the one against the other. Clause 17 preserves existing and future settlements, and the restraint on anticipation, as a protection against the husband; but henceforth a woman will only be able to settle her own property, as against creditors, in the same way that a man can settle his. One point in the bill is not made sufficiently clear for the protection of creditors—that is, whether there is any personal liability imposed on married women; whether, that is, a judgment can be given and executed against her personally, or only against her separate estate. The former seems to be pointed at by the provision that she is to sue and be sued, and by the power of making her bankrupt, as if she were a feme sole; but the latter seems to be implied in clause 14, where joint judgment is to go against the husband personally so far as liable, and the separate judgment, not against the married woman personally, but against her separate estate. As there can no longer under the bill be any reason for making proceedings against a married woman differ from those against an unmarried woman or a man, it would be as well that the doubts should be cleared up by express words to that effect.—Law Journal.

CRIMINAL LIABILITY OF AVOWTHERERS.

We are strongly of opinion that it is eminently desirable to amend the criminal law making it felony in an avowterer to be concerned with the wife in taking and carrying away the goods of the husband. The law as it now exists is thus summarised by Mr. Justice Stephen in his "Digest of the Criminal Law," p. 213: "A married woman cannot commit theft upon things belonging to her husband. If any other person assist a married woman in dealing with things belonging to her husband in a manner which would amount to theft in the case of other persons, such dealing is not theft, unless the person so assisting commits or intends to commit adultery with the woman; in such case he, but not she, commits theft. But this exception does not apply to the case of an adulterer or person intending to commit adultery, who assists a married woman to carry away her own wearing apparel only from her husband." This latter exception was established by the decision of the Court in Reg. v. Fitch (D. & B. 187), overruling Reg. v. Tollett (C. & M. 112), in which case Mr. Justice Coleridge had told the jury that "If the prisoner elopes with an adulteress, and they take her clothes with them, it is larceny to steal her clothes, just as much as it would be larceny to steal her husband's wearing apparel, or anything else that was his property." Mr. Justice Coleridge took part in the decision in Reg. v. Fitch, but oddly enough his previous decision in Reg. v. Tollett was not referred to; but, as observed by the late Mr. Greaves in his notes on these cases, there can be no doubt as to the propriety of the decision in Reg. v. Fitch, because, where the wearing apparel alone is taken, the necessity for which it is taken furnishes the motive, and negates the animus furandi. Where the prisoner does not take away the goods in company with the wife, but she joins him and subsequently commits adultery, and no distinct possession of the goods on the part of the prisoner is shown, he cannot be convicted. This was distinctly decided in Reg. v. Rosenberg (1 C. & K. 238) by Lord Chief Justice Deaman and Baron Parke. There is one case, that of Reg. v. Deer (1 L. & Q. 240), which seems to be authority for the proposition that an avowterer can be found guilty of "receiving" property stolen from the husband when the evidence is not sufficient to show he either stole it himself or assisted the wife in doing so. The report of this case is a very indifferent one and is clearly wrong, for the conviction should have been for larceny and not receiving, for a wife cannot steal from her husband; and so, if there was no participation by the avowterer in the "taking and carrying away," there could be no larceny, and therefore no receiving stolen property by him.

One need hardly say we have no sympathy with the class of men who amuse themselves by running away with other people's wives, regardless of the misery and ruin occasioned by their selfish conduct, and we should be very pleased if such an act were made an offence and punished by imprisonment with hard labour; at the same time the law as to larceny by an avowterer enables private malice to be gratified at the expense of the proper administration of the criminal law, and we think that a condition precedent to the institution of any such prosecution should be either the consent of the Public Prosecutor or the fiat of the Attorney-General. An excellent illustration of the necessity for this reform has been afforded by the case of Reg. v. Frank Turner, in which the grand jury ignored the bill at the assizes held last week at Newcastle. Mr. Turner, who was a lieutenant in the King's Own Borderers, eloped on the 12th ult. with a Mrs. Weddell, the wife of a solicitor residing at Berwick, where the prisoner and his regiment had been stationed. On his return to Berwick two days later Mr. Turner was arrested on a charge of stealing a lady's travelling-trunk and a portmanteau, value 50s., the property of Mr. Weddell, and subsequently there was a further charge in respect of four silver salt-cellars, four silver spoons, and six silver teaspoons, proved by the police officer to have been found in one of Mrs. Weddell's trunks. Now, there seems to be no possible doubt that, as an avowterer cannot, since Reg. v. Fitch, be convicted for stealing the wife's necessary wearing apparel, the same argument would apply to the trunks in which such wearing apparel was placed. As to the silver, Mr. Turner was clearly not a party to the original taking, because the evidence showed that Mrs. Weddell met him at a place called Magdalene Fields, whence they drove to Ayton Station on the North British Railway. If, however, it could have been shown that she took it by pre-arrangement with him, and that he adopted her act, and received it into his possession, that would have amounted to larceny; but there was not a particle of evidence to this effect, or that he had the remotest idea the silver was in the trunk at all. Nevertheless, a bench of magistrates committed the case for trial to the next quarter sessions; however, the accused very wisely rendered himself into custody, and so the bill of indictment was preferred before the grand jury at the gaol delivery at Newcastle. We have not before us the charge of the learned judge (Mr. Justice Watkin Williams), but, as he subsequently refused to allow the costs of the prosecution, and concurred in a presentment of the grand jury that the prosecution ought never to have been instituted, we presume he charged them strongly to throw out the bill. No one can doubt that such was a fitting termination of an attempt to make use of the criminal law for motives of private vengeance, particularly as the prosecutor in this case was a solicitor, who must or ought to have known that his proper remedy was to take proceedings in the Divorce Court, and so obtain compensation in the shape of damages for the injury inflicted on his reputation and the dishonour brought upon his home.—Law Times.

OVERDUE CHEQUES.

The headnote to the case of The London and County Bank v. Grooms, reported in the April number of the Law Journal Reports, was probably read with some surprise. In it we are informed that a cheque eight days old is not necessarily taken subject to the equities attached to it; but that it is a question of fact for a jury whether the holder took it under such circumstances as ought to have aroused his suspicions. The mind is accustomed to look upon a cheque as a short-lived bill of exchange. Overdue bills of exchange, payable at a fixed date, it is well known, are taken subject to the equities, whether the holder has or has not notice of them. The legitimate life of a bill of exchange is the interval between its creation and its maturity. After the date at which it is payable, nothing remains except duty to pay it. At that date it is a dead thing, and anyone who chooses to treat it as alive must do so at his own risk. It has lost its power of negotiability in the sense of its starting afresh at every new transfer, and carrying a better title to a new holder than belonged to the person from whom it came. If this is true with regard to a bill of exchange, at first sight it would seem even more appropriate to the evanescent life of a cheque, which, in general, exists only for one day more than that on which it is brought into being. A cheque given to-day to a person in the same town as the banker ought to be presented to-morrow, otherwise the holder will lose his money, if the banker become insolvent. Reflection, however, and a study of the judgment of Mr. Justice Field, show that these considerations by no means exhaust the matter. A cheque, in fact, more closely resembles, in regard to the title it confers, a bill of exchange or promissory note payable on demand. With regard to these instruments no period has been assigned after which their vitality must be considered spent. The rule has only been applied to instruments payable at a fixed future date. With regard to bills and notes payable on demand, it cannot be contended that they are held subject to the equities at any definite date from their making. These documents are intended to be negotiated; but a cheque is different. The negotiability of a cheque has not been much favoured by the law, and the present decision is one of the few which gives security to the holder of a cheque, and, therefore, must be considered as of no small importance.

The facts of the case were of a familiar type. On August 21, 1880, Grooms, the defendant, drew a cheque for £98 on the National Bank, payable to bearer. At that time the defendant received a bill for discount from one Colls, to whom he gave the cheque as security, and upon a promise by Colls that he would not part with it until the defendant procured discount of the bill. The defendant was unable to discount the bill, and gave notice to Colls, who, notwithstanding, paid the cheque to his bankers, the plaintiffs, who gave consideration for it. Questions were raised on the pleadings as to notice in fact and want of consideration from the plaintiffs, but these were all abandoned, and the case narrowed itself into the question of law whether a cheque eight days old is taken subject to equities such as that which was undoubtedly attached to the cheque in this case in favour of the defendant. The defendant's counsel relied entirely on the case of Down v. Halling, 4 B. & C. 330; while the plaintiffs' counsel relied mainly on Rothschild v. Corney, 9 B. & C. 388. In the former case, the plaintiff was the drawer of the cheque, which had been paid to the defendant by the bankers. Six days after the cheque was drawn it was handed to the defendant by a woman unknown to him, who bought goods in his shop, paying for them with the cheque, and receiving change. The plaintiff produced no evidence showing how the cheque had left his hands, and the defendant claimed a non-suit. Lord Tenterden, who tried the case, did not non-suit the plaintiff, but left to the jury the question whether the defendant had taken the cheque under circumstances which ought to have excited his suspicion; on which direction the jury found for the plaintiff. So far the case does not support the position that a cheque is like an overdue bill. It is rather the other way. On a motion, however, for a new trial, Mr. Justice Bayley is reported to have said: "If a bill, note, or cheque, be taken after it is due, the party taking it can have no better title to it than the party from whom he takes it." This dictum from a judge of high authority, supported as it was by Mr. Justice Holroyd, and to the extent of throwing the onus of proof of title on the defendant by the third judge (the Chief Justice), is the foundation for the proposition contended for. On the other hand, in Rothschild v. Corney, the plaintiff, the drawer of a cheque, sued the defendant, who had cashed it at the bankers', on the ground that the cheque had been obtained from the plaintiff by the fraud of one Brady, and handed to the defendant five days after date. The judge directed the jury in the same terms as Lord Tenterden in the previous case. The jury found for the defendant; and, on a motion for a new trial—in the course of which Down v. Halling was cited—Lord Tenterden laid down that it could not be held, as a matter of law, that a person taking a cheque after any fixed time from its date does so at his peril.

The dictum of Mr. Justice Bayley did not, therefore, obtain the support of the subsequent case, and must stand or fall on its own merits. If the learned judge be accurately reported, the expression used is not of the most exact. "Bills, notes, and cheques" are placed in the same category, as if all kinds of bills and notes, as well as cheques, were subject to the same rule. The learned judge can hardly have said advisedly that a promissory note, payable on demand, is absolutely subject to equities when overdue. When, in fact, is such a note overdue? Practically, it must be always overdue, because the person to whom it was offered could never know whether the demand had been made; whereas, in the case of a note payable at a future date, the note speaks for itself. The fact that bills and notes are involved indiscriminately with cheques seems to detract from the weight of Mr. Justice Bayley's opinion, as showing that the subject had hardly been sufficiently considered. Still, it may be that cheques stand on a different footing from bills and notes payable on demand. With regard to such bills and notes we are left in doubt at what date Mr. Justice Bayley meant that they were overdue. With regard to cheques there can be no such doubt. If they are ever overdue, they are always overdue. If Mr. Justice Bayley's view be correct, a cheque cannot be utilised as a negotiable instrument. We see no reason why the utility of cheques should be so restricted. The only reason for such restriction is the inconvenience it may be to the drawer to have a cheque afloat in the world for any considerable period. Most men like to see all the cheques drawn down to the last few days returned to them with their passbook; and to keep a cheque for more than a day or so without presenting it is not considered a businesslike proceeding. The negotiability of cheques, for these reasons, is never likely to be very extended; but there is no reason why persons having no banking account, or for other reasons should not be allowed to negotiate them. The man who takes a cheque many days old will, according to the ruling of Mr. Justice Field, still be liable to have his conduct scrutinised by a jury of business men, who will largely be governed by the view taken of the position of cheques by the community. It may, therefore, be safely taken that Mr. Justice Field's decision is sound in policy as well as law, and in accordance with the ideas of the day, which lean greatly in favour of freedom of negotiability.—Law Journal.

THE WORKING OF THE LAND LAW ACT.

A Parliamentary return of proceedings under the Land Act up to the 15th ult. has been published, from which it appears that the total number of applications to have fair rents fixed up to that date was 76,889, and agreements to fix fair rents 4,917, making a total of 81,806 cases brought under the notice of the Land Commission. Of these, in 4,449 cases rents were fixed, 664 applications were dismissed or struck out, and 469 applications were withdrawn, the 4,917 agreements to fix fair rents being also adjusted, making a total of 70,499 fair rent cases decided. The applications to have leases declared void were 1,434, of which 73 were declared void, 406 applications were dismissed or struck out, and 195 applications were withdrawn or compromised—a total number of 673 lease cases disposed of. The number of miscellaneous originating notices received was 84, of which five were disposed of. The number of appeals lodged in the matter of fair rent is 1,428, of which 195 have been heard and 52 withdrawn.

LAND LAW (IRELAND) ACT, 1881.

RULES in further continuation of those issued by Irish Land Commission, 1st October, 1881.

5th day of January, 1882.

141. It is ordered that from and after this date, in lieu of so much of Rule 22 as provides that the Court may at all times extend the time prescribed by their rules for serving notices, or doing any other act, the following rule be substituted:—

The Court shall have power to enlarge or abridge the time appointed by the rules, or fixed by any order enlarging time, for doing any act or taking any proceeding, upon such terms (if any) as the case may require, and any such enlargement may be ordered, although the application for the same is not made until after the expiration of the time appointed or allowed.

14th day of March, 1882.

142. It is this day ordered by the Irish Land Commission, that when any application is made for advances under Part V. of the Act, if it shall appear to the Commission necessary to make preliminary inquiries in respect of the application, they may before entertaining it require the applicant to lodge such a sum as they may consider sufficient to cover the reasonable expenses of the inquiries; and in the event of the transaction being carried out, credit shall be given for such sum out of the percentages chargeable by the Commission for expenses in relation to purchases.

22nd day of April, 1882.

Agreements to refer amount of fair rent to valuer named by Commission.

It is ordered by the Land Commission as follows:—

143. The landlord and tenant of a holding desirous of entering into an agreement and declaration as to the fair rent of the holding, to be filed in the Court of the Land Commission, but not agreed as to the amount of such fair rent, and whether an originating notice to fix a fair rent has been previously served or not, may consent that the fair rent to be stated in such agreement and declaration may be referred to and determined by a valuer to be named by the Land Commission for that purpose, such valuer being aided, where he shall deem it necessary, by the decision of the Land Commission upon any disputed question or questions of law or fact.

144. Such reference shall be signed on the part of the landlord by himself, his land agent, or his solicitor, and on the part of the tenant by himself or his solicitor, and shall be accompanied by the sheet of the Ordnance Map showing the holding or holdings.

The Land Commission may thereupon name a valuer who shall proceed to value the holding.

145. If the valuer, before making his award, desire to have any disputed question or questions of law or fact decided by the Land Commission he may submit the same for such decision by a special report which may be according to Form No. 70, and the Land Commission shall thereupon consider such question or questions, and transmit their decision thereon to the valuer.

146. When the valuer has signed his award the landlord and tenant shall thereupon sign the declaration and agreement fixing the amount so awarded as the fair rent of the holding, the tenant's signature being witnessed as provided by Rules 100 and 101.

147. The reference, the appointment of valuer, and his award, and the agreement and declaration fixing the fair rent may be all according to Form No. 69.

148. Rules 102, 103, 104, and 105 shall be applicable to such agreement and declaration, save that the filing and lodgment shall be in the Court of the Land Commission, and with this addition that not only the agreement and declaration, but the reference, the appointment, and the award shall be likewise lodged and filed.

149. A certificate given pursuant to the above Rule No. 148 or to Rule No. 102, need not henceforth be sealed with the seal of the Land Commission, but may instead, where deemed convenient, bear the signature of the Secretary.

150. Where an originating notice to fix a fair rent has been served by the tenant in any case in which the Poor Law valuation of the holding shall not be under £10, the landlord may demand from the tenant the particulars of any improvements intended to be relied upon by the tenant as having been made by him or his predecessor in title with the dates at which the same were made, and in case of neglect or refusal to comply with such demand within a reasonable time, the landlord may apply to the Court for an order that such particulars be given. The Court may, on special grounds, make an order that particulars shall be given when the valuation is under £10, or shall be given by either landlord or tenant in any other case not provided for by any rule of Court.

151. Rule 64 of the rules of the 1st October, 1881, is rescinded, and the following substituted:—

Every order of the Land Commission or any member or members thereof shall bear the signature of the Registrar or an Assistant Registrar of the Court of the Land Commission.

Every order of a Sub-Commission shall be signed by the members of such Sub-Commission.

Every order of the Land Commission or of any member or members thereof or of any Sub-Commission shall bear date as of the day on which such order was actually pronounced.

152. Every application made for the purpose of transferring proceedings from the Civil Bill Court to the Court of the Land Commission shall be supported by an Affidavit that such application is not made for the purpose of delay, and the Court may upon such application impose such terms upon either party as to the Court may appear just or reasonable.

153. An application to the Land Commission to transfer a case from the Civil Bill Court to the Land Commission may be made not only at the time mentioned in Rule 62, but may be made at any time not later than three weeks before the first day of any adjourned Sessions, or the first day of the Sitting of the Court for Civil business at any subsequent Sessions, so that such adjourned or subsequent Sessions be held before the hearing of the case has actually commenced.

BARRISTERS' FEES.

During the week a lay newspaper has, in a paragraph headed "Barristers' Fees," pronounced in severe terms against a practice which it alleges obtains at the Parliamentary Bar. This practice may be explained by stating a hypothetical case. Opposition Bills for the construction of separate lines to run over much the same ground, are before the Commons, promoted by separate existing railway companies. The parliamentary agents of one company retained a well-known parliamentary leader, but upon calling soon afterwards at the leader's chambers his clerk told the parliamentary agent that his principal had been offered a retainer by the other railway company, but which was of course refused, seeing that the two Bills were competing schemes, but the leader's clerk added that the subsequent offer of retainer by the other company involved the first comer in paying double fees on the first and last day that the Bill would be before the committee. Our contemporary assures us that these double fees were actually paid. We are not prepared to adopt the severe language made use of in the newspaper paragraph before us, but we do on behalf of solicitors enter a respectful protest against this, as it appears to us, indefensible practice. Sir Edmund Beckett was, when in practice, in the front ranks of the Parliamentary Bar, and after his vigorous assault upon the existing system by which insurance offices pay commissions, we feel quite sure that this custom of the Parliamentary Bar is one which Sir Edmund never could have recognised or sanctioned. It is manifest that such a system as that of requiring double fees where a retainer has been offered, as in the case here stated, opens the door to irregularities; for a parliamentary agent's clerk would only have to go and offer a retainer to a particular leader, whom he had heard was likely to be retained on the other side, to stand a very good chance of compelling his opponent to pay double counsel's fees.—Law Times.

PRACTICE UNDER THE CONVEYANCING ACT.

The 39th section of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, seems not unlikely to occasion some difference of practice among the different judges of the Chancery Division. At all events the decision of Mr. Justice Fry in Hodges v. Hodges, on the 3rd ult., does not appear to be dictated by quite the same spirit as that which prompted the observations of Vice-Chancellor Hall in Tumplin v. Miller, on the 17th March, to which we recently took occasion to advert. The case is one in which it is perhaps unavoidable that there should be some difference of practice, since it is hardly to be expected that every judge will take the same view of what is for the benefit of a married woman, and applications under the section are not likely to come frequently before the Court of Appeal. Vice-Chancellor Hall said that he should require very strong reasons before he consented to exercise the discretion conferred upon him by the Act, and that it was by no means enough for a married woman to come to the court and say that she wanted to use the property on which the restraint on anticipation was imposed. Yet, in substance, the application in Hodges v. Hodges amounted to little more than this. In that case a fund in court was settled on a lady married to a French subject, and domiciled in France, for life, then, in default of children (which happened), she had a general power of appointment by will, and in default of appointment the fund went to her absolutely. Mr. Justice Fry considered that, since the lady had the interest of the fund for life, and on her death, whether she exercised the power or not, it passed subject to her debts, it was for her benefit that a portion of the fund should be sold and the proceeds handed over to her for payment of debts, which harassed and annoyed her greatly. The annoyance was occasioned in great measure by the fact that the French creditors knew of their debtor being entitled to a large fund in England, and could not understand the restraint on anticipation; that not existing in the law of France. No doubt there is much to be said for the view that a fund intended to constitute an inalienable possession for a married woman should not be lightly allowed to be alienated; but when a lady is practically the only person interested in a fund, when that fund must, under any circumstances, be liable to payment of her debts, and when those debts harass and surround her with sordid cares, it can scarcely be doubted that it is more for her interest that the debts should be paid out of the fund while she is still living, than after her death, possibly hastened by anxieties, when the payment is not for her relief, but for that of those who come after her.—Law Times.

A DEAD MAN COMING TO LIFE AGAIN.

Mr. Justice HARRISON, with a city common jury, had before him on Thursday an extraordinary case. It arose out of an interpleader issue in reference to the ownership of certain property seized in March last under an execution at the suit of Christopher Nowlan against Thomas Kelly. The plaintiff carries on the business of a victualler in Camden-street, and the defendant was a farmer residing in the County Dublin. It appeared that Nowlan had lent a sum of £50 to Kelly, and the latter failing to repay the debt had proceedings taken against him. A notice to the effect that Kelly was dead was served on Nowlan, but the latter, believing the statement to be untrue, continued the action, and having obtained a decree seized the defendant's property. The defendant's son-in-law, Patrick Nowlan, however, claimed the goods seized, alleging that he had purchased them. The present issue was consequently directed to try the ownership in the property.

Mr. Teeling, in stating the case for P. Nowlan, said that there were only two points involved in the case—firstly, whether Patrick Nowlan had, as alleged, purchased the property, and whether Thomas Kelly was dead at the time these proceedings were commenced. The plaintiff alleged that Thomas Kelly was then and is still alive, and he denied that there was any bona fide purchase by Patrick Nowlan. Counsel said it would be proved by several witnesses that Thomas Kelly's death took place on the 1st of January in the present year, that he was afterwards buried in a graveyard at Glencullen, and that a number of persons living in the district attended his funeral.

The Plaintiff was examined, and deposed that he purchased the goods for £16, and he also stated that he was aware Thomas Kelly was dead. He attended the wake, and saw the corpse, which was afterwards buried at Glencullen.

Thomas Mannin also gave evidence as to the purchase of the goods by the plaintiff. He knew an undertaker in Winetavern-street from whom they purchased a coffin for deceased for £1 12s. Witness got 1s. commission on the transaction from the undertaker. The coffin had a breastplate, with the name of the deceased and his age, "72 years," engraved on it.

Margaret Kelly, widow of the "deceased," deposed that her husband died very suddenly, as she believed from bronchitis. He had not been visited by any doctor.

This closed the plaintiff's case.

Mr. Murphy, Q.C., stated the defendant's case, and characterized the case made for the plaintiff as a conspiracy and fraud. It would be shown that Thomas Kelly was still a living man. He was forcibly reminded by this case of one of Lever's novels, in which it was stated that a gentleman who was in distressed circumstances, fearing that his person would be seized, got it reported that he was dead, and went through a mock funeral to escape his creditors. (Laughter.) One of the earliest cases Lord St. Leonards had to decide when he came to this country as Lord Chancellor was an administration suit of a gentleman who was supposed to have died intestate. The case lasted several days. Witnesses had proved the man's death, but towards the close of the case a gentleman in court got up and asked permission to make a statement. Lord St. Leonards asked who dared to disturb the court? The gentleman replied, "My lord, I am the intestate." (Laughter.) That case still remains in the books, but there had been no decision yet on the point as to whether or not an intestate had a right to appear in his own behalf. (Continued laughter.) He would produce evidence for the jury to prove beyond all doubt that Thomas Kelly was still a living man.

Dr. Mackey, registrar of the district in which Kelly resides, gave evidence to the effect that Kelly's wife offered him £2 for a certificate of her husband's death, which, of course, he refused to give.

The Rev. Mr. Boland proved that Mrs. Kelly called on him, and insisted on getting a certificate of her marriage, which occurred 42 years ago, the object being to have it described in the certificate that she was a widow, and that her husband was now dead. He refused to give her the certificate.

Mrs. Donnelly, wife of an undertaker in Winetavern-street, stated that Mrs. Kelly and her son had purchased a coffin and breastplate, on which the name of the "deceased," the date of his death, and his age were inscribed.

A witness named O'Connell swore that he saw the supposed deceased alive a few weeks since at a place called Oldtown, in the County Meath.

Other witnesses also deposed to the fact that deceased was still alive.

Mr. Justice HARRISON, at this stage, said he felt bound to ask plaintiff's counsel whether they hoped to succeed, and if they intended to push the case further?

Mr. Teeling, after some consultation, said that having regard to the evidence which had been adduced, he thought it was hopeless to continue the proceedings.

The jury then found a verdict for Christopher Nowlan on all the issues raised.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—XIII.

(Continued from page 192, ante.)

SETTLEMENT OF LAND ON MARRIAGE, THE CHILDREN TAKING AS TENANTS IN COMMON IN TAIL.

Introductory.

When Lord Cairns introduced into the House of Lords the Bills which became the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, he also introduced a Settled Land Bill, one object of which was to shorten and simplify settlements. The Liberal Government, however, opposed the Settled Land Bill, which was accordingly dropped. It has this session been again introduced by Lord Cairns. For account of this Bill see Law Times, March 11, p. 390; and Weekly Notes, March 4, p. 7. Thus it was not intended that the Conveyancing Act should make any great changes in settlements of land; nevertheless settlements of real, as well as of personal, estate can often be considerably abbreviated by reliance upon the Act.

The first example that we shall take will be a marriage settlement. The more usual and approved method of settling land upon the children of a marriage is to convey the land to trustees for sale, and to settle the proceeds. This mode of settlement is described and discussed in our last article (Law Times, April 1, p. 382), but the present plan is sometimes adopted. For old forms see Bythewood vii. 399; Barton vii. 309, 457; David, iii. 1234; Concise David, 2nd edit. 225; Key & Elphinstone, 1150. For new form see Conc. David, 12th edit. 377.

Recitals.

Recitals of title and of agreement to settle should be avoided where reasonably practicable, lest a covenant for, or representation of, title should be implied (see Law Times, April 1, p. 383). But of course this is not in any way affected by the Act.

The Limitations.

The life estates of the husband and wife, and the powers of appointment to the children will be inserted as usual: (David. iii. 1236; Conc. David. 12th edit. 878).

The next limitation, "To the use of all the children of the said intended marriage, and the heirs of their respective bodies in equal shares as tenants in common," may now be abbreviated by virtue of sect. 51, and will run, "To the use of all the children of the said intended marriage as tenants in tail in common in equal shares."

The Accruer Clause.

Mr. M. G. Davidson (Conc. David. 12th edit. 379) omits the accruer clause, and instead, after the words "equal shares," adds "with cross-remainders between or among them."

Mr. Stephen, in the last edition of his Commentaries (book ii. pt. 1, c. 8, p. 351), states the law with regard to cross-remainders to be as follows: "In a deed they can be given only by express limitation, and shall never be implied; though it is otherwise with respect to wills, which are here again expounded more liberally, with a view to the presumable intent of the donor. Hence, in these cross-remainders may be raised not only by actual limitation, but by any expression from which the design to create them can reasonably be inferred."

No doubt this simple mode of dealing with accruing shares was valid in wills. For form in will see Hayes & Jarman, 8th edit. 190; Pridcaux, 11th edit. 498. But there is a great distinction between wills and deeds with regard to the creation of cross-remainders. It is laid down by the authorities that in deeds, when the limitations are legal, they can only be created by express words: (Butler's note to Co. Litt. 195 b; Leading Cases Conveyancing, 3rd edit. 658, see cases there cited. Compare Preston on Estates, i. 94, 115; Shepp. Touch. by Atherley, 8th edit. 442). So it has been held that cross-remainders can only be raised by proper words of limitation, and that plain intention is not sufficient: (Doe v. Fequet v. Worsley, 1 East, 416). In the last-mentioned case Lawrence, J., said that an express declaration "that there shall be cross-remainders," was insufficient in a deed; and so Pollock, C.B., stated, in Doe v. Clift v. Birkhead (4 Ex. 110, 124), that if the deed contained an express clause that in case one of two tenants in common in tail should die without heirs of the body, his moiety should go over to the other by way of cross-remainder in tail, the intention could not be carried into effect for want of the words "heirs of the body" connected with the gift over by way of cross-remainder, and that this could not be done by any words except the words "heirs of the body."

This strict rule arises from the fact that a cross-remainder in tail is an actual estate. Each child has a vested estate tail in his own original share, and also a vested estate tail in remainder expectant on the decease and failure of issue of every other child in a share (according to the number of children) of the share of every other child. Hence in limiting a cross-remainder as in limiting every other estate tail, the words "heirs of the body" were essential in a deed. The nature of cross-remainders will be found more fully explained in Williams on Settlements, 204; Elphinstone, 2nd. edit. 898.

We have now to consider whether any alteration has been made by the Act. It should be observed that sect. 51 of the Act never makes express mention of cross-remainders, but that it permits substitution of the words "in tail" for "heirs of the body," &c. It does not declare that any informal words which would be efficacious in a will shall have like effect in a deed. But in the form of settlement given in Schedule IV. to the statute, it will be seen that this short mode of limitation of cross-remainders is employed. This does not distinctly affect the question, because sect. 57 only declares the sufficiency of the forms "in relation to the provisions of this Act," so that if these cross-remainders are not validated by sect. 51, they are not assisted by sect. 57. But it can hardly be doubted that the courts will hold this short mode sufficient. In Doe v. Clift v. Birkhead (4 Ex. 110) it was held that the intention of the deed prevailed to show what interests passed if only the deed contained the proper words of limitation. It should be noticed, therefore, that the words "in tail" are essential.

On the other hand, it may be objected that the short limitation "with cross-remainders in tail between or among them," is only equivalent to "with cross-remainders between or among them and the heirs of their bodies," and that this was not the usual form previously to the Act, and possibly is insufficient.

On the whole, as the Act contains no express sanction of this short mode of limitation, we should be inclined, for the present to limit them in the old way, with the exception of employing the words "in tail." The limitation will accordingly read thus: "To the use of all the children of the said intended marriage as tenants in tail in common in equal shares; and if and so often as any such child shall die without issue, then, as well as to his or her original share, as also as to the share or shares that shall have survived or accrued to him or her, or to the heirs of his or her body, to the use of the others of such children in tail as tenants in common in equal shares."

Of course, if one of the children has died leaving heirs of the body—when the issue of another child fails—the accruing share will pass to the heirs of the body of the deceased child. But the estate is correctly limited to the children in tail.

(To be continued.)

THE PRESERVATION OF PARISH REGISTERS.

A Bill prepared and brought in by Mr. Boriase, Mr. Bryce, Mr. Cochrane Patriok, and Mr. Mellor, to make provision for the better preservation of ancient parochial registers, was published during the late week. In its present form it applies only to England and Wales, but it is a sign of the increased interest that is being manifested of late years by the nation in the matter of historical documents or records of the past. Would that such interest was manifested in Ireland long since, and many a valuable and interesting record would have been saved. During the civil wars in this country, and through the destruction of our ecclesiastical institutions, a very great number of records or MSS. perished, while comparatively few escaped. Some were hid or stowed away in places where they were forgotten till ruin overtook them; others were appropriated by the spoliators of our national monuments, and some were carried off by ecclesiastics to the Continent, and found their way into libraries, where they remained almost unknown and unconsulted till a quite recent date. Although mere parish registers are not of great public value in the passing century to which they belong, it is otherwise when a century or two have passed by. Then they become materials for the local historian, and their perusal reflects many side-lights of modes of thought and usages obtaining in the age to which they belong. Under the provisions of the bill alluded to every existing register which shall have been kept in any parish prior to the 1st of July, 1837, and every transcript thereof now existing in the registries of the various dioceses of England and Wales, shall, from and after the passing of this Act, be under the charge and control of the Master of the Rolls, on behalf of her Majesty, and shall be removed to the Record Office; and as regards all bishops' transcripts of a date prior to that above-mentioned, and such of the registers as were made and entered prior to January 1st, 1818, the Master of the Rolls shall issue warrants to the several persons having the care of them, ordering such persons to allow the same to be removed from their present places of custody, and deposited in the Record Office. Such registers as were made and entered from January 1st, 1818, to June 30th, 1837, inclusive, shall remain, it is provided, in the custody of their present legal custodians for a period of twenty years from the passing of the Act, after that time to be transmitted to the Record Office. The provisions of this Act will apply to registers of baptisms, marriages, and burials of cathedral and collegiate churches, and chapels of colleges and hospitals, and the burial registers belonging thereto, and to the ministers officiating therein. The Act provides for the proper keeping and indexing of the registers, and fixes the fees for searching the same; with other provisions. The title of the Act is "The Parochial Registers Preservation Act, 1832."—Irish Builder.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Buckley on the Companies Acts (3rd Edition), 353.

The holders of policies in mutual societies are not liable to contribute to the society's debts (In re Great Britain Mutual Life Assurance Society, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 10)—C. A.

Coote on Mortgage (4th Edition), 826.

The principle of Hepkinson v. Roll extends to a purchaser as well as to a subsequent mortgagee; and, where the security is for a debt and further advances, the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money is not affected as against the purchaser by advances made after the contract of sale (London and County Bank v. Ratcliffe, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 28)—H. L.

Coote on Mortgage (4th Edition), 314.

A purchaser, with notice of deposit of title-deeds with a bank to secure a current account, is not bound to inquire whether fresh advances have been made by the bank on the security of the vendor's lien; the bank must give notice of such advances to the purchaser (London and County Bank v. Ratcliffe, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 28)—H. L.

Coote on Mortgage (4th Edition), 1,133.

The rule in Clayton's case applies in favour of the purchaser of property mortgaged to a bank, to secure a current account, where the bank has notice of the sale (London and County Bank v. Ratcliffe, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 28)—H. L.

Dart on Vendors and Purchasers (5th Edition), 169.

Affidavit by lessee that, to the best of his belief, the covenants had been performed, held prima facie evidence on purchase, although ejectment pending (Ringer to Thompson, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 42).

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Procedure on Elegit and Equitable Execution, with Forms. By FREDERICK STONE, Solicitor, and Clement's Inn Prizeman. London: Richard Amer, Law Bookseller and Publisher, Lincoln's-inn Gate, Carey-street, W.C. 1882.

If the Conveyancing Bill, which is soon to come on in the Commons for second reading, passes into law in its present form, the occupation of perpetual commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds by married women will be at an end. In view of the terms of the bill in question, solicitors will do well by not applying, just at the present time, for such a commission, the stamp on which is £1.—Public Opinion.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

KING'S INNS.

EASTER TERM, 1882.

The following gentlemen have been admitted by the Benchers as Students of Law:—

Patrick James Nolan, Student, London University, third son of James Nolan, of the City of Limerick, Merchant.

Peter Maurice Staunton, Student, T.C.D., only son of Michael John Staunton, late of Ballysimon, in the County of Limerick, Esq., deceased.

John Edward Spread Morgan, LL.B., University of Dublin, only son of Edmond Moore Mulcahy, late of Garranlea, in the County of Tipperary, Esq., deceased.

John Wakely, Student, T.C.D., eldest son of John Wakely, of Ballyburly, Edenderry, in King's County, Esq., D.L.

James O'Donnell M'Laughlin, Student, Queen's College, Galway, fifth son of William M'Laughlin, of Drumfries, in the County of Donegal, Gentleman.

William Conlan, Student, T.C.D., eldest son of William Joseph Conlan, late of Ellerslie, Lancashire, Esq., deceased.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

FINAL EXAMINATION FOR APPRENTICES TO SOLICITORS, Pursuant to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (Ireland), 1866.

DUBLIN, EASTER SITTINGS, 1882.

[Every answer is to be accompanied by reasons concisely stated.]

COMMON LAW.

1. What is the distinction between express and implied contracts? Give some instances of those of the latter description.

2. To what extent are common Carriers liable at Common Law for the safety of goods conveyed? How has this liability (as to Carriers by land) been modified by Statute?

3. To what extent does the maxim Caveat emptor prevail in reference to the goodness of that which is purchased? Refer to some of the leading cases upon this point.

4. If, while goods are in bailment, a third person should become possessed of them, and should wrongfully convert them to his own use, the right to recover possession will, in some degree, depend on the nature of the bailment. Explain and illustrate this proposition.

5. "There can be no such thing as an Estate for life in personal property." What apparent exception to the above rule has long been established? Explain the legal doctrine on the subject.

6. What is a "Patent." On what Statute may the modern law with respect to Patents be said to be founded?

7. To the validity of what contracts is a Deed essential? To the validity of what contracts is writing essential?

8. What is the difference in the provisions of the 4th and 17th sections of the Statute of Frauds, with regard to contracts falling within these sections.

9. Define a particular custom, and give instances of customs superseding the general law.

10. "A" being about to arrange with his creditors, offered a composition of 5s. in the pound. "B" a creditor refused to accept it unless A paid him £50, and gave him a Bill of Exchange for £100. The money being paid and the bill handed over, B executed the Composition Deed. Could B recover the amount of the bill from A, or could A recover back the £50 from B?

11. State as accurately as you can in general terms, what will be the question for the jury in a case where the doctrine of contributory negligence is involved.

12. What are the rights of the Plaintiff in an action for breach of contract to deliver specific goods under the Mercantile Law Amendment Act?

REAL PROPERTY, EQUITY AND CONVEYANCING.

1. Give an account of the successive changes in the law as regards the right to devise lands by will.

2. State accurately the distinction between executed and executory trusts, and between trusts executory in marriage articles and trusts executory in wills.

3. Explain the distinction between a vested and contingent remainder; between a contingent remainder and an executory interest.

4. What is the distinction, and the reason of it, between the liability of a Trustee and an Executor who joins in the receipt for purchase-money, which is in fact received and misapplied by his Co-Trustee or Co-Executor?

5. If lands were given before the Statute de donis to a man and the heirs of his body, under what circumstances could he alienate these lands? Explain the operation and effect of that Statute.

6. On what principle is it that a Court of Equity will support a family compromise, although the parties may have misunderstood their position and mistaken their rights? What elements are essential to the validity of such a compromise?

7. Explain and illustrate the doctrine of Election. Does the same principle apply in the case of electing to take against, as in electing to take under the instrument?

8. Illustrate the doctrine that the Court will effectuate the general intention of the donor of a power, if the particular intention fail.

9. What Estate does "A" take under the following limitations, if contained in a Deed?

"To him and his heirs male."

"To him and the heirs of his body."

"To him and his seed."

"To him and the issue of his body."

"To him for ever."

"To him and his assigns for ever."

Is there any, and what, difference if contained in a will?

10. Give a short explanation of the former law of "forfeiture" and "escheat," and say what changes have been made by a recent Statute.

11. Terms of years may practically be considered as of two kinds. What are they? How were satisfied terms of years formerly kept on foot, and why was this done?

12. Draft a Mortgage of an Estate for life in freeholds, and a Policy of Assurance.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

MICHAELMAS SITTINGS, 1882.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

NOTICE.

Candidates wishing to present themselves at the above Examination must lodge their papers, &c., on or before the first day of Trinity Sittings, 1882.

By Order,

JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin,
25th April, 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed
Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—W. H. Scott, explain delay.—M. Corcoran, liberty to bring action.

IN COURT.—D. Luby, as to petition.—R. Bolton, payment by receiver.—W. Anketell, do.—D. Bingham, payment from Ist.—D. Carleton, do.—Assignees J. Cuneen, as to letting.—J. O'Callaghan, payment.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. M'Manus, rental.—M. Watson, do.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—R. E. Fox, to appoint receiver.—A. Elliott, from 25th April.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—G. B. Low, receiver from 5th.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

G. Jackson, rental.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—C. A. Carroll, repairing lease.—T. Manley, explain delay.

IN COURT.—Trustees Roche, final schedule.—Sir J. St. George, payment.

TUESDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

S. E. GOODWIN, - - - 1 lot.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

Administrator M. Montgomery, rental.—W. M'Kinlay, do.—F. R. Lambert, do. from 3rd.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—T. S. Nolan, final schedule.—T. Colclough, ditto.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

H. M. Meredyth, rental.—J. P. Taaffe, do.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given. The Sittings follow in Italics.

Hyland, Patrick Joseph, of Castlecomer, in the county of Kilkenny, draper. April 22; Friday, May 19, and Tuesday, June 6. Bennett Thompson, solr.

Kelly, John, of Ballycressane, in the county of Galway, commercial agent. April 18; Friday, May 19, and Tuesday, June 6. John L. and W. Scallan, solrs.

Newell, Pierce Barron, of Johnshill, in the county of Waterford, Esq. April 21; Friday, May 19, and Tuesday, June 6. Joseph W. Howard, solr.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1882.

No. 798

EQUITABLE MORTGAGES BY DEPOSIT OF TITLE DEEDS.—III.

It is not in Ireland alone that the doctrine of Re Burke's Estate, carrying such serious consequences, prevails. So far back as 1831, a similar decision was arrived at in England, under 7 Anne, c. 2: Sumpter v. Cooper, 2 B. & Ad. 223. That, too, was a case of parol equitable deposit, and Lord Tenterden said, "As to the statute of Anne, we think it cannot be held to apply to the case of an equitable mortgage: it refers only to the registration of deeds, and where there is merely a lien or equitable mortgage created by the deposit of deeds, there is no instrument to register." Yet, notwithstanding the words "conveyance" and "deeds" in the Act, equitable incumbrances, instruments not under seal, a memorandum of further charge, and agreements for a mortgage, have been held to require registration: Moore v. Culverhouse, 27 Beav. 639; Neve v. Pennell, 2 H. & M. 170, 33 L. J. Ch. 19; Re Wight's Mortgage Trust, L. R. 16 Eq. 41; Credland v. Potter, 18 ib. 350; In re Hamilton's Estate, 9 Ir. Ch. Rep. 512; and see Mack v. Bayliss, 31 L. J. Ch. 448; Copland v. Davies, L. R. 5 H. L. 358; Brigham v. Morton, 4 New Zea. Jur. N. S. 6. But, while Russell v. Russell (1 Bro. C. C. 269), the foundation on which the doctrine of equitable mortgages by deposit rests, was acted on by the House of Lords so recently as in The London and County Bank v. Ratcliffe (51 L. J. Ch. 28), so Sumpter v. Cooper, establishing one of the most startling consequences of that doctrine, was not only followed in this country by the late case of Re Burke's Estate, inter alia, as well as by Lord Hatherley in Neve v. Pennell, ubi supra, in England, but has there, too, been approved by Fry, J., so recently as January last, in Kettlewell v. Watson (which we find reported in the Law Journal, 51 Ch. 281), subsequent to the decision in Re Burke's Estate, which, however, was not referred to, while for that very reason Kettlewell v. Watson is the more remarkable as an authority on this question.

The Registration Act applying to Yorkshire requires the registration of every deed and will, and declares that an unregistered deed shall be deemed fraudulent and void; and it was this Act that was in question in Kettlewell v. Watson. "It has been said," observed Fry, J., "that whenever you are in a register county, and whenever you could evidence your lien or equitable mortgage by writing, you are bound so to do, and that, if you do not do so, you lose your lien or equitable mortgage as against every person who puts his deed on the register. I cannot come to any such conclusion. The Act is plain. It does not apply to interests in land which, I think very unfortunately, the courts of equity have allowed to be created without writing. It applies only in terms to deeds and wills. It has been held by parity of reasoning to apply to writings; but, more than fifty years ago, it was determined (Sumpter v. Cooper, 2 B. & Ad. 223) it did not apply to an equitable mortgage created by deposit. That case has, I believe, governed a very large number of transactions, and, as far as my knowledge and belief go, it has always been considered to be the law, and I find, in a text-book so much used as Mr. Dart's work on Vendors and Purchasers, the law is laid down as perfectly plain on the authority of that case. I, therefore, cannot shake what I believe to be the established law by any conclusion of my own as to what may be expedient." "The case, as I have observed, is one in which the registered conveyances of the defendants are asserted to give a good title as against a vendor's lien, which is not a registered title. It is not a case of two instruments both capable of registration. That must be borne in mind throughout the whole case." So, in O'Connor v. Stephen's (13 Ir. C. L. Rep. 63), Pigot, C.B., observed: "I think the 5th section of the Registry Act must be construed as only applying to a condition of things in which a conflict arises between two deeds, of which that which is to be postponed only by reason of the registry of the other, and which, but for that registry, must have priority, is capable of being registered, so as to have its priority maintained." And so, in Re Stephen's Estate (ubi supra), Ormsby, J., said, "In my opinion the Registry Act is only applicable to a case in which there is a conflict between instruments capable of registration." Flanagan, J., also, whose decision was the subject of appeal in Re Burke's Estate, had acted on the same view, which was upheld by the Court of Appeal; but the appellate tribunal was rightly unable to concur with the view he took of the comparative equities of the parties, inducing him to decide in favour of the registered deed against the deposit, by reason of its being left open to another person to take a subsequent security, which could be and was registered. "In my opinion," said Sir E. Sullivan, M.R., "that view rests upon a fallacy; there is no such state of facts, no equity whatever to be raised or laid hold of; such a view as an abstract proposition would lead to this extraordinary result, that although registration being a creature of statute, and not applicable to a case of the kind, yet an equity is to be derived out of the law of registration, by reason of the fact that the man who took the security in the first instance took one which was not capable of being registered, but which the law allowed him to take, and gave him no means of registering. It is right to state that the case of Phillips v. Phillips (4 De G. F. & J. 208), in which Lord Westbury explains what constitutes a superior equity, was not cited before Judge Flanagan; and if it had been, I cannot but think he would have seen the fallacy upon which, in my opinion, this part of his judgment rests." And we shall but add that Phillips v. Phillips was, also, applied by Fry, J., in Kettlewell v. Watson.

"Whatever may be the ultimate decision in this case," remarked Fry, J., in commencing his judgment, "it is impossible to listen to it without great pain, because it exhibits in a very forcible manner the dangers to which purchasers of small plots of land are exposed;" and, as we have seen, he, too, like so many other judges, considered it unfortunate that the doctrine of equitable mortgages by deposit had ever been introduced. In New Zealand it has been enacted, by s. 42 of the Conveyancing Ordinance, 1842, that "no land shall be charged or affected by way of equitable mortgage or otherwise by reason of any deposit of title deeds relating thereto, whether or not such deposit shall be accompanied by a written memorandum of the intent with which the same shall have been made" (which, however, does not disentitle a pledgee to hold the deeds until payment: Hare v. Tiffen, 2 N. Z. Jur. N. S. 263). But, whatever may be thought to be the proper remedy for the state of the law we have discussed, we think it unquestionable that, more than ever, as regards registration, in the words of Christian, L.J., in Reilly v. Garnett, "the law upon this point is now in an unsatisfactory condition."

THE PHOENIX PARK ASSASSINATIONS.

ANOTHER page in the annals of our time has been written in blood. A new policy of conciliation had been inaugurated; order and contentment, it had seemed, were about to resume their halcyon reign; the law was again to live in the land—and it was to be tempered with mercy. Lawlessness without mercy spurned the olive branch; and within seven hours after the arrival of the new Viceroy and Chief Secretary, while yet echoed the acclamations that greeted the heralds of a generous and trustful policy already harbingered by the opening of the prison doors, the knife of the assassin flashed in the fair light of a May evening, and the Chief Secretary and Under-Secretary for Ireland lay dead in the pleasure-ground of the citizens of Dublin, within view of the palace of the Viceroy.

No place in the whole broad expanse of the Phoenix Park could have been more aptly chosen by a conspiracy. Was it deliberately selected, or did chance alone ordain that there the gore of the murdered was to lie in indelible remembrance? This question seems to us of primary importance. If pre-selected (directly fronting, as it did, the Viceroyal Lodge), another demonstration is afforded that the crime was perpetrated, not from motives of private malice or revenge, but in consequence of some political instigation, or in order to avenge some political act, as, of course, the victims chosen would also indicate. Again, the purely fortuitous meeting of both the victims could hardly have been had in the contemplation of their ruthless slayers; and of the two it must have been the Under-Secretary, in every probability, whose life was more intentionally aimed at. Moreover, while such preselection would in itself prove the deliberacy of the atrocity, and the murder, if actuated politically, may probably be ascribed to the conspiracy of not a few, other preparations in connexion with the place should be supposed to have been made. Towards what would those preparations have been directed? Firstly, towards the consummation of the act, for which purpose spies (not only on the victims, but, perhaps, on the assassins) would have been posted, and assistance, if needed, would be rendered available near at hand; secondly, the escape of the murderers, for which purpose (in case flight otherwise became impossible) accessories might be posted in the adjoining thickets, so as to provide the means of changing dress, or by suffering their own arrest, or giving deceptive information, to turn aside pursuit; thirdly, the defeat of justice, for which purpose partisans might be posted about to receive and make away with the apparatus and other tangible evidence of the crime, and in order to bear false witness. Preparations of this description, if such were made by the conspirators, may have been actively ready for lengthened periods previously, and may have attracted some notice, more or less slight. A few days before the occurrence, a member of the bar, chancing to cross the roadway at the very spot and hour where and when the murder was accomplished, struck across the park grass and through the thicket adjoining the spot. In the thicket was sitting an elderly woman—if the sex may have been such—of a fierce and repulsive aspect; the hag did not speak, but turned her head aside, and placed her hand over her mouth—as if (it even then seemed to him) to avoid recognition. And some distance off was a young man (whom he did not particularly notice), who moved still further away, and then stood, remaining still laired in the thicket, which is close to the roadway. It is only the after-event, of course, that could make one inquire who were they, and why were they there; but it is an actual fact that, so suspicious did the circumstance seem even then, and such was the involuntary antipathy and indefinable apprehension inspired in a beholder by no means timid on occasions of real danger, he vowed never again to risk such an encounter by passing beyond the public footpaths of the park. The matter may indeed be scarcely worth observation; but, it serves to illustrate that which we would impress. Inquiry should take a broader range; it should be assumed as highly probable that the identical scene of the murder was long pre-determined, and efforts towards detection should not be too exclusively devoted to the apprehension of the actual perpetrators; while now especially it behoves the authorities to beware of possible false witness.

An outrage so malignant that it has moved every civilised people to mingle in the cry for vengeance, has not failed to evoke a feeling of the utmost horror in the legal profession of this country—a feeling which we deeply share. On Monday last a meeting of the Judges was held for the purpose of considering whether it would not be becoming to adjourn the sittings of the respective courts in token of respect to the memories of the victims. And in the Court of Appeal, the Lord Chancellor said: "Before we resume business this morning it is right for me to say that we do so not without full appreciation of the circumstances in which we are placed. The Judges of the Supreme Court have met and considered whether we should all adjourn to-day in token of respect for those who have been foully murdered, and to mark our detestation of so atrocious a crime. It has, however, been thought that we shall best do this by steadily holding on in our course for the due administration of justice." On the same day, in consequence of the horrible event, the sittings of the Land Sub-Commission at Kilmainham was adjourned; and the Dublin Grand Jury, at the Quarter Sessions Court, delivered a presentment forcibly expressing their detestation of the diabolical crime. The meeting of the Law Students' Debating Society was, also, adjourned, as was that of the Associated Law Clerks on Tuesday; and elsewhere we report the proceedings at the meeting of the Incorporated Law Society, who adopted a strong resolution on the occasion. But, all outward demonstrations are still inadequate to express the universal sense of horror and detestation of an atrocity so savage and abnormal that it has been hitherto unexampled, unless it be by some butchery committed by that hideous Asiatic tribe which has bequeathed to our language their own name of Assassins.

THE NEW TREASURY REMEMBRANCER.

We understand that Mr. Robert W. Arbuthnot Holmes, M.A., has been appointed to the office of Treasury Remembrancer for Ireland. Mr. Holmes, who was called to the bar in Trinity Term, 1876, was secretary to Lord Chancellor Ball, and in April, 1880, was appointed Clerk of the Crown and Hanaper. Of his affable and courteous disposition everyone brought into contact with him has had pleasing experience, while the capacity he has already displayed augurs well for the future fulfilment of the duties of a position so important and responsible as that to which he has been now promoted.

We understand that a debate is commenced by the "Family Parliament" in the current issue of Cassell's Family Magazine, entitled, "Ought Trial by Jury to be Abolished?" in which the various arguments for and against the system are clearly set forth.

A COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.

The Lamson case has brought once more to the front the oft-mooted question of a Court of Criminal Appeal. In view of the persistent pressure which it is now the custom to bring to bear upon the Home Secretary on behalf of persons convicted on a capital charge, especially if the convict holds a so-called respectable position, the desirableness, if not the necessity, of some better method of determining whether a sentence of death should be carried out is becoming patent. Under the present system the Home Secretary is really a Court of Appeal to review the trial, and revise, if necessary, the sentences, in every case of murder; while there is a growing tendency to invoke his aid on behalf of those convicted of lesser crimes, especially if tried by county magistrates. Even now an appeal is permitted on questions of law—whether such and such an act constitutes embezzlement or larceny within the provisions of a statute, or an assault within the common law, or under the authority of decided cases, or the like—to the Court for Crown Cases Reserved. But though points of law, owing to the haphazard way in which the chief criminal statutes were passed, are unhappily too numerous, yet they are not very numerous even now. They serve mainly to get off on technical grounds some lucky or crafty criminal who richly deserves to be punished. With the passing of a criminal code such cases would almost disappear. Of the power of appeal which exists by proceedings in error on grounds of informality, it is enough to quote Lord Justice Holker's statement to the House of Commons, when he was Attorney-General, that "even the lawyers would, if they could only bring themselves to be perfectly honest, admit that the subject is almost a sealed book." Nor do these proceedings touch the real grievance, the want of an appeal on matters of fact, of which Sir John Holker said, on introducing the Criminal Code Bill in 1878: "At present, though a convicted person may get his conviction reversed on the ground of error in law, he has, in the great majority of cases, no remedy for mistake in fact; the jury may take an unduly adverse view of the evidence; they may consider circumstances which are really consistent with innocence strongly indicative of guilt; and they may, and perhaps not unfrequently (sometimes even in accordance with the view expressed by the presiding judge), come to a wrong verdict. . . . It is indeed startling to consider that at present, whereas a man who has been mulcted in £25 damages in a civil action can obtain a new trial if the verdict was against the weight of evidence, a man who is convicted of murder by an erroneous verdict, and consequently condemned to death, has no such remedy. He can appeal to the clemency of the Crown, and the Home Secretary, whose office it is to advise the Crown, does his best to investigate the matter and discover the error, if error there be; but he has not the proper means of doing so, for he cannot sift the evidence as it can be sifted in a public court; and even if he takes a view favourable to the condemned, the remission of the sentence, even if complete, which he advises her Majesty to make, does not wipe out the stain of conviction and the degradation—lifelong degradation—which is entailed thereby." He can, in fact, only grant a pardon for an offence which has not been committed, or lessen a sentence, because the evidence is not sufficient to convict of the full charge—a sufficient absurdity in either case. It may be perfectly true that, as Sergeant Ballantine says in his experience, a really innocent person is rarely convicted; but it undoubtedly does happen sometimes even on capital charges; and still oftener on lesser charges, when the amount of care and attention bestowed by every one concerned is less; while in one large class of cases, offences against women, all observers are agreed that the proportion of wrong convictions is considerable. It is only necessary to mention the cases of Edmund Galley and Habron on trials for murder, and of Clowes and Johnson for a lesser offence, to show that mistakes do occur, which in all probability would not have happened if there had been a possibility of an open rehearing. On the other hand, the case of Dr Smethurst's pardon in 1859 is a remarkable instance of the absurdity of the present system of rehearing by the Home Secretary. It was a poisoning case, and after hearing scientific evidence on both sides, the jury convicted, but eventually, owing to the statement by Sir Benjamin Brodie, to whom the Home Secretary referred the matter, that a doubt existed in his mind a free pardon was given; so that, as Sir James Stephen put it, "the private opinion of a single eminent surgeon who might have been and was not called as a witness at the trial—who heard no witnesses, no counsel, no summing up—was allowed to overrule the verdict of a jury who had enjoyed all those advantages." The remedy appears to lie in allowing an appeal to a court of criminal appeal on questions of fact as well as law, as proposed by the Criminal Code, by way of a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence. On appeal any new evidence might be brought forward and fairly sifted in open court; and the court would have power either to affirm the conviction, to order an acquittal, or to send the case back for a new trial, if necessary. No doubt the latter result is open in some degree to Sir James Stephen's objection, in his book on Criminal Law (published in 1863), that the case should go back to a second jury fore-determined by the judgment of the Appeal Court on the verdict of the first jury. But if the Appeal Court is given power to affirm or reverse the conviction, the case would only go back if further evidence had been discovered of sufficient importance to demand the judgment of a second jury. The experience of civil cases, notably Smitherman v. The South-Eastern Railway Company, shows that, notwithstanding the decision of a court above, the verdict of a second jury is by no means necessarily at variance with that of the first. However, as Sir James Stephen drew the Criminal Code, and was one of the commission which considered it in 1878, he may be taken to have given up the objections he entertained in 1863. The provisions for a new trial have been approved by Lord Blackburn, Lord Justice Lush, Lord Justice Holker, and are adopted both by Mr. Gorst and Mr. Hopwood, almost verbatim from the Code, in their Bills now before the House of Commons to amend the criminal law. Such a consensus of authorities ought to carry conviction that the proposed change is required.

But, as the Lord Chancellor pointed out to the House of Lords on Monday, there would still remain cases in which it might be desirable to exercise the prerogative of mercy on grounds of which a regular court of law could not take cognisance. It may be questioned whether such cases ought to occur, but, if they do, a useful provision was embodied in the Criminal Code which was originally suggested by Sir James Stephen, and has been adopted in Mr. Hopwood's, though not in Mr. Gorst's Bill. This is to give the Home Secretary power to refer the whole case to three judges nominated by him, who should "for this purpose not be bound by the ordinary legal rules, but may call for and receive such evidence as they may deem fit to enable them to decide." The adoption of this provision would relieve the Home Secretary of a very onerous responsibility, and substitute for a hearing in camera before a possibly incompetent tribunal a public trial before men accustomed to deal with evidence, and not subject to pressure from without.

As the giving an appeal in criminal cases is quite separable from reforms in the criminal code or criminal procedure in general, it will be a misfortune if another session passed by without the settlement of this very pressing and urgent question.—Law Times.

Mr. Morgan Butler Kavanagh, Seville Lodge, County Kilkenny, and 20, Merriou-square, Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed by the Lord Chancellor to the Commission of the Peace for the County Kilkenny.

The Chinese Government has just issued a handsome edition of the Code Napoleon in Chinese.

DISTRESS AMENDMENT.

A Bill to amend the Law of Distress.

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law of distress and to provide, amongst other things, that live stock and agricultural and other machinery, not being the property of the tenant, should in certain cases be exempted from distress for rent in arrear:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Short title.—This Act may be cited for all purposes as "The Distress Amendment Act, 1882."

2. Interpretation of terms.—In this Act—

"Court of summary jurisdiction" means, as regards England, a court of summary jurisdiction as defined in section 50 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, and, as regards Ireland, any justice of the peace, metropolitan police magistrate, stipendiary police magistrate, or other magistrate or officer, by whatever name called, who is capable of exercising jurisdiction in summary proceedings for the recovery of penalties.

3. Live stock and agricultural and other machinery exempted from distress.—From and after the passing of this Act the things hereinafter enumerated shall no longer be liable to distress for rent in arrear:

(a.) Live stock of all kinds whatsoever being the bona fide property of a person other than the tenant, and being on the land or premises of the tenant under a bona fide agreement with him for the agistment or feeding thereof, of which agreement notice in writing shall, within four days after the making thereof, have been given by the owner of such live stock to the landlord or his agent. Such notice shall contain a statement of the number of such live stock of each kind, and of the owner's marks thereon, and shall also state an address to which notices given by the landlord to such owner in pursuance of this Act may be sent; and if after such notice has been given by the owner, any alteration shall be made by exchange or otherwise in such live stock, a fresh notice shall forthwith be given as aforesaid stating such alteration and the number and marks of the new stock, if any, sent upon the land or premises of the tenant; and until such fresh notice has been sent to the landlord or his agent, the new stock so sent upon the said land or premises shall not be entitled to exemption from distress under this Act. The owner shall also give notice in writing to the landlord or his agent of any alteration in the address to which notices may be sent by the landlord under this Act:

(b.) Male stock of all kinds being the bona fide property of a person other than the tenant, and either hired by the tenant or in his temporary possession solely for purposes of breeding:

(c.) Agricultural machinery being the bona fide property of a person other than the tenant and being on the land or premises of the tenant under a bona fide agreement with him for the hire or use thereof by him in the conduct of his business, unless such machinery shall have been on the said land or premises for any period exceeding six calendar months, or unless such agreement shall be for any period exceeding six calendar months.

(d.) Machinery being the bona fide property of a person other than the tenant, and being on the land or premises of tenant under a bona fide agreement with him for the hire or use thereof by him in the way of his trade or handicraft, unless such machinery shall have been on the said land or premises for any period exceeding twelve calendar months, or unless such agreement shall be for any period exceeding twelve calendar months.

4. Payment by owner of live stock to landlord of arrears of rent or removal of stock.—In the case of live stock included under sub-sections (a) and (b) of section 3, it shall be lawful for the landlord from time to time by notice in writing signed by him or his agent to the owner of the live stock, stating the amount of rent then in arrear from the tenant in respect of the said land or premises, to require such owner of live stock, within four days after delivery of such notice, to pay to such landlord or his agent the said amount, or to remove his live stock from the land or premises, within the said four days; and if within such period the arrears be not paid by the said owner, or his live stock removed from the said land or premises, the said stock shall not be entitled to exemption from distress under this Act.

Provided always, that it shall not be competent to the landlord to demand payment of an amount in excess of the rent which is actually in arrear and for which he might have distrained at the time of making such demand.

5. Amount paid by owner recoverable from tenant.—Any amount paid by the owner to the landlord or his agent in respect of arrears of rent as aforesaid may be by him deducted from or set off against any sum which is or may become due from him to the tenant in respect of agistment or feeding or hiring of such live stock, or may be recovered as a debt due to him from the tenant.

6. Removal of stock determines owner's agreement with tenant.—If in pursuance of such notice as aforesaid from the landlord the owner removes his live stock from the said land or premises, such removal shall be deemed and taken to be a legal determination of his agreement with the tenant for the agistment or feeding or hiring thereof, subject, however, to any rights or claims which may have arisen under the agreement before such determination thereof.

7. Remedy if distress proceeded with.—Where any distress has been levied upon any live stock or agricultural or other machinery exempted by this Act from distress, a court of summary jurisdiction may, on complaint made by the owner thereof, make against the person or persons levying or causing to be levied any such distress, and against the person or persons on whose behalf such distress is levied or any of them, a summary order for restoration of the live stock or things seized, or for payment of the real value thereof, and respecting costs, as to the court seems just; and any sum of money so ordered to be paid, whether as real value or costs, shall be a civil debt recoverable summarily.

8. Appeal to Quarter Sessions.—If any party thinks himself aggrieved by any order of adjudication of a court of summary jurisdiction under this Act, or by dismissal of his complaint by any such court, he may appeal therefrom, subject, as regards England, to the conditions and regulations contained in sect. 31 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, and as regards Ireland, to the conditions and regulations following; (that is to say.)

(1.) The appeal shall be made to some court of general or quarter sessions for the county or place in which the cause of appeal arises, holden not less than fifteen days, and (unless adjourned by the Court of Appeal) not more than four months after the decision of the court of summary jurisdiction.

(2.) The appellant shall, within seven days after the cause of appeal has arisen, give notice in writing to the other party and to the court of summary jurisdiction of his intention to appeal, and the ground thereof.

(3.) The appellant shall immediately after such notice enter into a recognisance before a justice of the peace, with two sufficient sureties, conditioned personally to try such appeal, and to abide the judgment of the court thereon, and to pay such costs as may be awarded by the court, or give such other security, by deposit of money or otherwise, as the justice thinks fit to allow.

9. Exclusion of certiorari.—No order or conviction of a court of summary jurisdiction under this Act shall be quashed for want of form, or be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any superior court.

10. Limitation of landlord's power to distrain.—After the 31st Dec., 1882, no arrears of rent shall be recovered by any distress, but within two years after the same shall have become due.

11. Extent of Act—This Act shall not extend to Scotland.

AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS (LAW OF DISTRESS.)

A Bill to Abolish the Law of Distress for the Rent of Agricultural Holdings.

Be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same as follows:

1. Landlord not to take distress for rent after 31st Dec., 1882.—It shall not be lawful for any landlord or other person entitled heretofore to take distress for rent due in respect of any farm, market garden, or land used for agriculture or pasture, or partly for agriculture and partly for pasture, to take or cause to be taken any distress for rent due in respect of any such farm, market garden, or land used for agriculture or pasture, or partly for agriculture and partly for pasture, after the 31st day of Dec., 1882.

2. Extension of Act—This Act shall not extend to Scotland.

3. Short title.—This Act may be cited as "The Distress Act, 1882."

THE SETTLED LAND BILL.

In our article of last week upon this Bill we chiefly discussed the clauses which gave various powers to the tenant for life, or other limited owner, of settled land. We now proceed to consider the checks on his powers provided by the Bill, and the practical working of the whole Bill on both present and future settlements.

In paragraph 7 of the memorandum annexed to the Bill we are informed that "special protection is provided for the mansion house and park. In proper cases they may be sold, but not by the tenant for life alone; he must get the consent of the trustees, or an order of the court (clause 16)." Now the Bill applies, not only to land included in what are known to the public, as well as to the Profession, as "settlements," but also to land devised by will. Thus it applies to a devise of a few cottages to a widow for life and after her death to her children. We believe that the public do not understand this, otherwise the Bill would command much more attention. But the phrase "settled land" seems to suggest a Bill relating to large estates, and the reference to "mansion house and park," which is thus conspicuous in the memorandum, is not likely to guide them aright. On referring to clause 16 we find the protection is given to "the principal mansion house on any settled land, and any park or domain land usually occupied therewith. . . ." If we take "mansion house" in its legal sense of "dwelling-house," this clause protects, in such a devise as that which we have mentioned, the best cottage and its garden, at least if that was the home of the testator and his family. Now in many wills of this description a power of sale has been given, not to the tenant for life, but to trustees. But the Bill, by clause 56, appears to require that the consent of "tenant for life" shall be necessary to sale by the trustees, so that in such a case an additional difficulty in alienating has been created. This could hardly have been intended, and is probably due to a familiarity with large properties, rather than with the small holdings of the artisan and lower middle classes. Of course in settlements and wills, made after the Bill becomes law, details like some of those we have considered can easily be remedied by the draftsman, but the principal danger may be apprehended in the case of documents which have already been drawn, and of wills prepared without professional advice. Also no doubt difficulties will arise from persons acting on the letter of the will, or deed, under which they are interested, without being aware that this Bill annexes these various powers to the estate of "tenant for life," notwithstanding the settlement or will (clause 56). Here then we should advise that the protection as to the "principal mansion house" should be withdrawn; or at least that it should be so worded as to apply only to houses of large value. Probably the simplest plan would be to say that when the consideration money exceeded £10,000 consent of trustees or court must be obtained, unless the "settlement" otherwise ordered.

The Bill properly protects the remainderman by requiring that, on a sale, the purchase money be paid either to the trustees or into court (clause 22); and gives powers of investment, which include numerous modes of application of the purchase money for the improvement of the settled land (clause 21). In one instance we find a difficulty. It may be applied "in discharge . . . of incumbrances affecting the inheritance of the settled land or other the whole estate the subject of the settlement . . ." (clause 21, ii.). We assume that the word "estate" is used in the technical sense, and as opposed to "the inheritance." Does this mean that if the settled land includes freeholds, and leaseholds which have (say) only twenty years to run, and which are subject to an incumbrance, the tenant for life may sell part of the freeholds and employ the purchase money in paying off the incumbrance on the leaseholds?

Another mode of application of purchase moneys is planting (clauses 21, iii., 25, ix.). This is done with the consent of the Land Commissioners (clause 26). When trees are once planted as an improvement under the Act the tenant for life and his successors cannot cut them down, or knowingly permit them to be cut down, except in proper thinning. This restriction may lead to some inconvenience, and there should be some power to remove it. Clause 30 enables "tenant for life and each of his successors in title" to enter on the land to execute any improvements authorised by the Act, and to get stone and cut timber for purposes connected with such improvements. Surely some express provision ought to be inserted for the protection of tenants.

Another question, of great importance with regard to the scope and effect of the Bill, arises with regard to settlements made by a conveyance of land upon trust for sale and settlement of the proceeds, with trusts of rents and profits until sale. Is such a settlement within the Bill? From clauses 2 (1) (5), 58 (ix.), we infer that it is, but it ought to be clearly stated in the second clause. If it is not, it affords a ready means of evasion; if it is, it leads to difficulties tending to fetter alienation. Clause 56 (2) declares that, where the settlement gives power of sale to trustees the consent of tenant for life shall be necessary, notwithstanding the settlement. If this clause does not apply to a "trust" for sale, we have the possibility of trustees and tenant for life making concurrent sales; if it does apply, we have the consent of tenant for life made necessary to the sale, and thus a new fetter placed on alienation. In some settlements this may be serious, as the position of "tenant for life" may be filled by persons in old age or abroad, or by several persons.

With regard to land belonging in fee to an infant the powers of clauses 59 and 60 seem together to clash with the powers of leasing which, it is believed, belong to his guardian under sect. 41 of the Conveyancing Act, combined with sects. 46 and 49 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877.

So far we have discussed rather the details of clauses than the principle of the Bill. It remains for us to consider how far it really gives that power of alienation which we believe the Legislature desires to give. We think it does not entirely succeed in this. It gives power to make certain dispositions only, instead of giving the limited owner a general power of disposition, and simply securing the consideration money when it partakes of the nature of capital. The partial protection given to the purchaser under clauses 46 (2) and 54 is insufficient.

The object of the Bill will fail if purchasers' legal advisers are to be in any way concerned as to the propriety or regularity of the sale. Also there is a vagueness about the power to rescind contracts given to the court by clause 32 (3), which seems likely to cause difficulties, especially when read in connexion with clauses 44 and 45, which enable the trustees to make applications to the court respecting the exercise by the "tenant for life" of any of the powers of the Bill.

The Bill does not deal clearly with a case which is not at all unlikely to occur frequently: "Tenant for life" desires to sell land near a town, value, say £1,000. The sale will be perfectly fair as between vendor and purchaser, but if the land is retained for a few years it will, in all probability, fetch a very much higher price. What is the position of the purchaser (1) if the trustees promptly make application to the court; (2) if they do nothing, and some time afterwards, the remainderman applies? The tenant for life is declared to be a trustee for all parties entitled under the settlement (clause 53), and the purchaser of course has notice of this, and of the facts. We think that, if the trustees took action before fourteen days elapsed (clause 46), they would, if the sale was improper as regards the parties interested under the settlement, be able to prevent the sale, but if they let the fourteen days pass, and an actual contract be made, it is not quite clear. The best plan would be to declare sales or other transactions between "tenant for life" and "purchaser" shall, except in the case of bad faith on the part of the purchaser, be as valid as if the tenant for life were absolute owner. And though the provision of clause 46 requiring tenant for life to give fourteen days' notice to the trustees before any transaction should be retained, it should be definitely stated that if no application to the court is made within a specified time no question could be afterwards raised as to the propriety of the sale. The remainderman should have his remedies afterwards against tenant for life in damages.

Clause 42 purports to protect trustees from liability for abstaining to make applications and for not interfering with the sales or purchases of "tenant for life." It does not, however, state whether they are liable if they have probable reason to believe that the transaction is improper, or if they have express notice to that effect. This should be stated. In conclusion, then, we must express a hope that this Bill will pass, but that it should be carefully considered in committee and considerable amendments made.—Law Times.

TITLE OBTAINED IN MARKET OVERT

The case of Walker v. Mathews, reported in the Law Journal Reports for April, suggests some curious questions, arising out of the well-known rule of law that the property in stolen goods sold in market overt vests in the purchaser, subject, however, to the necessity of restoring the goods to their original owner should he succeed in prosecuting the thief to conviction. The interval between the sale in market overt and the conviction is a country not, as yet, surveyed and mapped, although its confines have several times been approached, as in the case just reported. A voyage of discovery within it is of interest, and not without some practical importance. But little imagination is required to suggest a series of questions which might arise. If the thing stolen were a barrel of oysters, could the buyer eat them? If it were a case of champagne—which, in London, might conceivably be sold in market overt—could he drink the wine? If it were a cow in calf, could he keep the calf and sell the milk? All these questions appear to turn on the consideration whether the right of property, although subject to be divested in certain events, is not absolute, so long as it lasts.

The newly reported case arose in such a way as to make it singularly ineffectual in deciding the main point. On June 7, 1880, two cows in calf were stolen from the plaintiff, and on the 11th of the same month they were sold in market overt to a cattle dealer, who sold them to the defendant. While in his possession, the cows calved and gave milk. On April 5, 1881, the thief was convicted and sentenced. Thereupon the original owner of the cows sued the defendant for them in the Huntingdon County Court. The student of law will regret that the defendant, for reasons doubtless satisfactory to himself, did not thereupon raise the legal question so neatly presented, and take to the High Court the question whether the calves were not his. Instead of so doing, he, in a most disappointing manner, entered a counter-claim for the keep of the animals; and, when the County Court judge decided against him, took his counter-claim to the High Court. This was a sad playing into the hands of the enemy from the scientific point of view. The parts of the original owner and the purchaser thereupon became reversed, like the combatants in Macanlay's allegory who each turned into the other. We find the purchaser's counsel arguing that his client was a sort of bailee of the cows and the calves, and might even be sued for the milk. Had he claimed for his client the absolute property in the purchase until the conviction, the counter-claim would at once have been overthrown by the epigram that he was wanting to be paid for the keep of his own cattle. But legal science was avenged in the result. Mr. Justice Grove and Mr. Justice Lopes disallowed the counter-claim, thus maintaining so far as the decision went, the position that while it lasted the defendant's property was absolute. If the property in the stolen cattle vested by the sale absolutely in the purchaser, the milk and the calves would belong, upon the principle that all accretions go to the owner, not to the original owner, but to the defendant, who bought from the purchaser in market overt; but if a sale in market overt gives merely a right of possession, and only suspends the right of the original owner until the conviction of the thief, then, as the purchaser is not absolute owner, the increase of the stolen goods would belong to the plaintiff, whose goods were carried off by the thief.

By the common law a sale in market overt passed the property indefeasibly to the buyer; but this was found to be so inconvenient that the statute 21 Hen. VIII., c. 11, was passed. This Act provided that, upon the conviction of the thief, "the owner should be restored to his money, goods, and chattels." The terms of this provision are remarkable. The reader would expect the goods to be restored to the owner, rather than the owner to the goods. It is not impossible that the phrase was used advisedly. If so, it would tend to show that there was no intermediate property in the purchaser. His being "restored to his goods" sounds rather as if he were restored to his original position. But this Act was repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV., c. 27—a statute, in its turn, repealed by 24 & 25 Vict., c. 96, upon the words of which statute the matter now turns. Section 100 provides as follows: "If any person guilty of any such felony or misdemeanour, as is mentioned in this Act, in stealing, taking, obtaining, extorting, embezzling, converting, or disposing of, or in knowingly receiving any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, shall be indicted for such offence by or on behalf of the owner of the property, or his executor or administrator, and convicted thereof, in such case the property shall be restored to the owner or his representatives." The phrase, therefore, in the statute of Henry VIII. must now be taken to be merely clumsy or antique English, and the property is now, by the modern statute, to be restored to its owner. As, however, the previously existing rule as to market overt is left untouched, that rule is in full force until there is a conviction. It is not that the old rule is abrogated, and the possession of the goods restored on conviction, but that the old rule remains in force until a conviction, when the new rule operates. There is, we believe, no authority in the books controverting this position. In Scattergood v. Sylvester, 19 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 447, referred to by the defendant's counsel in the case under discussion, the plaintiff sued the defendant in trover for a cow and a calf and 200 gallons of milk, the cow while in calf having been stolen and sold to the defendant in market overt. But neither the calf nor the milk gave rise to the question before us. The calf, it is true, was born after the sale, and before the conviction of the thief, but it took the law into its own hands and died directly after its birth; and the milk was all drawn from the cow after the date of the conviction. Judgment was given for the plaintiff; but the only question argued was, whether the statute of Geo. IV. (which is, in terms, similar to the more recent statute) did not make an order for restitution a condition precedent to the restoration of the cow; and the decision of the judges was on that point alone, it being impossible to argue that the plaintiff was entitled to anything in respect of the dead calf.

The case of Lindsay v. Cundy, 45 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 381, though reversed on appeal upon another point, decides, as was recognised by the late Lord Chief Justice in Moyes v. Newington, 48 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 125, that the time when the property reverts in the original owner is the date of the conviction of the thief, and does not relate back to the original wrongful taking; though this was not always thought to be so, as will be seen from Lord Kenyon's judgment in Horwood v. Smith, 2 T. R. 950. The effect of these decisions appears to be this, that it is possible for a man to be deprived by the wrongful act of another of the property in a chattel, and that though he may recover his right by the conviction of the thief, yet he will nevertheless have lost all claim from the time of its purchase in market overt until the conviction. This appears to be the only statutory limitation to the absolute right of property gained at common law by the man who buys in market overt. If this be a correct view of the law, it will follow that if there be produce in the interval it will belong to the purchaser—a right which may sometimes be a matter of serious consideration. A., let us say, owns a valuable shorthorn cow within three months of calving; B. steals her and sells her in market overt to C., who purchases her bona fide for £70. Six months afterwards B. is caught, tried, and convicted, and the right to the cow is again absolutely vested in A.; but the three months' old calf, having been born between the purchase and conviction, belongs to C., who thereby obtains an animal which may, perhaps, eventually turn out to be worth £500 or £600. Similarly it can hardly be doubted that, supposing C. had sold the calf previously to the date of the conviction of B., A. would have had no right against C., nor would C.'s purchaser have been able to make any claim against him, for he could make a good title to the animal; and the fact that the original owner can recover the cow, not by virtue of any revival of his previous right, but by the commencement of an entirely new title, cannot give him any claim to the calf which has come into existence while he was not clothed with a right of property in the cow. The result is, of course, not intentional; but anomalies like this occur frequently in a system of law which grows by legislation piled on common law, and further legislation upon that. It would have been better for the uniformity of the law in this, as in other instances, if the Legislature had gone to the root of the matter, and repealed altogether the doctrine of title by purchase in market overt. The doctrine itself offers facilities for the disposal of stolen goods, while the condition on which it has been modified—namely, that the owner shall convict the thief—throws on private persons a duty which properly belongs to the public.—Law Journal.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—XIV.

(Continued from page 206, ante.)

SETTLEMENT OF LAND ON MARRIAGE, THE CHILDREN TAKING AS TENANTS IN COMMON IN TAIL.

Provision for Management and Application of Rents and Profits during Minority.—Sect. 42.

It will not be safe to rely upon the powers given by sect. 42; for that section applies only to "land" to which the infant is beneficially entitled; and although "land" includes an undivided share in land (sect. 2, ii.) it would not, in a case where one of the children entitled under the settlement is an infant, and another or others of them of age, enable the trustees to exercise the powers of the section over the whole land. They might, however, join with the children who were of age in exercising those powers, sect. 42 (6), but that would not be a very convenient arrangement. Moreover, the power of the trustees does not extend to land, or to a share in land, to which an infant married woman is entitled.

The statutory power does not enable the trustees to open new mines, though they may work old ones. For form of power to work new mines see David. iii. 1126. This will of course seldom be needed. Messrs. Clerke and Brett observe (2nd ed. p. 155), that the power given by this section to fell timber is not extended to "other trees" as in sect. 19 (i. iv.). It, however, expressly includes "underwood," and will in most cases be found sufficient. As to ornamental timber, see David. iii. 229; Baker v. Sebright (41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 614; L. Rep. 13 Ch. Div. 179), and Garth v. Cotton (1 L. C. Eq. 697). As to what is timber, see Dart. V. & P. 138; Stephen's Comm. iii. 420; Williams on Settlements, 228.

The trustees' power to cut timber, &c., given by the Act does not exceed that which the infant would have possessed had he been of full age.

The statutory power (sect. 42, iv.) to apply the income (sect. 2, iii.) for the infant's benefit is amply sufficient, and expressly empowers payment to the "parent," which is a convenient provision not always found in the forms. But the accumulation clause requires some supplement.

It will be proper to declare trusts of the fund arising from accumulation of income where the infant dies before he or she becomes entitled. If no trusts are declared the accumulation would pass, apparently, to the personal representatives of the infant, sect. 42 (5, iii.). This would be unsatisfactory, as administration would have to be taken out. A form of supplement will be found in Conc. David. 12th edit. 380. (In future we shall refer to this edition unless we state otherwise). This form declares, in effect, that the powers of management conferred by sect. 42 shall be exercisable by the trustees; and that accumulations of income, in case the person being tenant in tail by purchase under the settlement dies while an infant, and being a woman without ever having been married, shall be held on the same trusts as the produce of sales under the power of sale.

It will be seen that this form does not in any way attempt to overcome the difficulty as to management when some of the children are of age and others infants, or when one of them is a female infant and yet married. Compare also the form in Prideaux, 11th edit. ii. 309.

Yet it does not seem necessary to insert the old full form, and entirely to ignore the statute. The following form is suggested as supplementing the deficiencies of the Act:

"It is hereby declared that the trustees or trustee hereof are hereby appointed to exercise the powers of sect. 42 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, and further that the said trustees or trustee shall have the powers of management conferred by the said section with respect to the entirety of the said premises, so long as any child of the said intended marriage shall be an infant, as though the entirety of the said premises were vested in infants, notwithstanding some other child or children of the said intended marriage shall have attained twenty-one, or being female have married under that age; but the said trustees or trustee shall pay to such of the children of the said intended marriage as shall for the time being have attained twenty-one his, her, or their share or respective shares out of the net rents and profits."

"And it is also hereby declared that in case any child of the said intended marriage dies during infancy, and if a woman without having married, the accumulated fund referred to in sect. 42 (5) (iii.) of the said Act shall be held upon the trusts, and subject to the powers and provisions applicable to the moneys arising from the power of sale hereinbefore contained, and the investments thereof."

It should not be forgotten that the powers of the section extend during the entire existence of the entail; they are not limited to the lifetime of tenants in tail by purchase, as in the common form, except the trust for accumulation, sect. 42 (5, iii.).

Before the Act such a wide power would probably have been invalid.

For old form before the Act, see David. iii. 999.

Power of Leasing.

By sect. 46 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict., c. 18), the tenants for life have power to grant a lease for twenty-one years of any of the land comprised in the settlement, "except the principal mansion house and the demesnes thereof, and other lands usually occupied therewith." This exception will often be found inconvenient. It is usually the best plan to give an express power of leasing to the tenants for life, as well as to the trustees during the minority of any of the children, and to let the power extend to all the land in settlement.

Previous to the Conveyancing Act, it is probable that the guardians of the children, if left infants at the death of the tenants for life, would have had power to lease for twenty-one years without any application to the court, by virtue of the combined operation of sects. 46, 49, of the Settled Estates Act, 1877. But it has been doubted whether sect. 42, giving power to the trustees to take possession of and to manage the land, does not prevent the infant from being a person entitled within the meaning of sect. 41 of the Settled Estates Act, and therefore deprives the guardians of the power of leasing: (see Conc. David. 454).

It certainly cannot have been the intention of the framers of the Conveyancing Act to take away the power from the guardians, as they have not given it by sect. 42 to the trustees, and the whole scope of the Act shows an intention that, as far as possible, all land shall be capable of being leased (see sects. 18, 41). But, however this may be, an express power should always be inserted. For forms of power to lease for twenty-one years, see Conc. David. 383; Wolst. & T. 143; Pridaux, 311. Where a power to grant building or mining leases is desired, it should in every case be inserted to save the expense of application to the court under the Settled Estates Act.

Power of Sale and Exchange.—Sect. 35.

It should be noticed that the statute does not supply a power of sale and exchange if nothing is said in the settlement. But by 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145 (Lord Cranworth's Act, Part I.), where a settlement expressly declares that trustees shall have a power of sale and exchange, various subsidiary powers and provisions are annexed, so as to enable the trustees to exercise the power in a satisfactory manner. And the powers of Lord Cranworth's Act are somewhat enlarged by sect. 85 of the Conveyancing Act. The earlier statutory provision is fully discussed in David. iii. 560, 1014; and Sugden on Powers, 8th edit. 878; Lewin, 6th edit. 883, &c. It is not repealed by the Conveyancing Act, although other portions of Lord Cranworth's Act are repealed by sect. 71 of the recent statute.

For form declaring that the trustees shall have a power of sale and exchange, and thus incorporating the statutory powers, see Conc. David. 389, and compare form previous to the recent Act in David. iii. 1014, note. It will usually be well to declare that the power shall be exercisable with the consent of the husband, if he is the settlor, during his life, and then of the wife during her life, and afterwards at the discretion of the trustees. See, however, 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, s. 10.

It is clear that in simple settlements of the description before us it will be quite safe, when the land comprised in the settlement is freehold, to rely on the statutory powers incorporated in the manner indicated: (Conc. David. 66, 883).

Indeed, this was often done even before the extended powers given by the recent Act: (David. iii. 569; compare Pridaux, ii. 204; and Elphinstone, 412).

It may be noticed that 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, s. 5, and the Conveyancing Act, s. 85 (1), enable the trustees on a sale to deal with incumbrances and charges.

It is usually considered that the earlier Act applies to leaseholds (David. iii. 560); the later one obviously does so (see definition of "property," sect. 2, i.). On the other hand, sect. 85 of the Conveyancing Act applies to sales only and not to exchanges, while the former Act applies to both. But this is of little consequence.

The earlier Act gives no power to the trustees to expend any part of the purchase money in the enfranchisement of copyholds (David. iii. 566), or in renewing copyholds for lives (Ibid. 668), nor, apparently, does it enable them in the case of a manor being comprised in the settlement to buy up the copyholders' interests, also it gives them no power to dispose of land with a reservation of minerals. The Confirmation of Sales Act (25 & 26 Vict., c. 108), which gave retrospective validity to sales from which minerals were excepted, does indeed enable the trustees in future settlements to sell with a reservation of minerals, but the sanction of the court is necessary under that Act. See also Settled Estates Act, 1877, sect. 19; and Seton, 1259.

It was therefore usual, in appropriate cases, to insert, in settlements, a power to sell minerals and easements apart from the surface: (Dart. V. & P. 69; David. iii. 579; for forms see David. iii. 1019; Lewin, 382, note). It will be advisable to retain this provision where it would have been used before the new Act, notwithstanding that sect. 85 (1) permits the sale of "any part of the property," and the wide definition of "property" contained in sect. 2 (i.). In the same way, if ever required, a power to sell the estate apart from the timber (where the tenant for life is without impeachment of waste) should be inserted. See Dart. 68; David. iii. 295; Lewin, 382; Williams on Settlements, 232; and compare 22 & 23 Vict., c. 85, s. 13. For form of power to trustees to cut timber, see David. iii. 1159; but this will often be sufficiently supplied by sect. 42 (2).

It should be noticed that the statutory powers are not entirely satisfactory in the case of property comprising either a manor with copyholds held thereof, or copyholds themselves.

For forms of powers of sale and exchange independent of the statutes, see Conc. David. 383; David. iii. 1011, 1212; Pridaux, ii. 316.

(To be continued.)

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

The general half-yearly meeting of this Society was held, on Tuesday, in the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts—

Mr. HENRY J. P. WEST, President, in the chair.

The following gentlemen were present:—

Messrs. James Atkinson, Thomas R. Bailie Gage, Arthur L. Barlee, Frank W. R. Browne, Wm. Croker, Francis R. M. Crozier, C. H. Dillon, Henry T. Dix, John B. Eaton, Wm. Flindlater, M.P.; Thomas C. Franka, H. B. Falkiner, John Galloway, Hanbury C. Geoghegan, Frederick Gifford, Keith H. Hallows, J. T. Hamerton, Townley B. C. Hardman, Wm. Milward Jones, M. Larkin, Robert O. Longfield, Richard A. Macnamara, Henry F. Martley, Jehu Mathewa, Patrick Maxwell, Henry S. Mecreedy, Thomas B. Middleton, Henry C. Nelson, John Noble, John H. Nunn, Thomas F. O'Connell, Michael P. G. O'Meara, Richard H. M. Orpen, Frederick R. Finn, Wm. Rees, R. S. Reeves, Archibald H. Robinson, jun.; Wm. B. Stanley, C. G. Stanwell, Edward F. Stapleton, Shapland M. Tandy, Archibald Tisdall, Henry A. Dillon, and Patrick K. Whyte.

Mr. JOHN H. GODDARD (Secretary) having read the notice summoning the meeting,

The CHAIRMAN said—Gentlemen, there would have been abundant reasons for adjournment, and in all probability, owing to the terrible and calamitous event which has taken place in this city, we should have proposed to you that this meeting to-day should have been adjourned, were it not for the fact that the business is of a purely formal nature. However, a resolution on the subject will be submitted to you after the formal portion has concluded. It is my duty to formally submit to you the names of the gentlemen for election as Auditors of this Society's accounts, pursuant to the 28th general rule—viz., Messrs. George Hill Major, John Weldon, Joseph Galloway, John C. Smith, and George C. Stapleton. It is also my duty to submit to you the names of the following gentlemen to act as scrutineers of ballot for Council of the Society, to be held on the 21st November, 1882—Messrs. John Weldon, Joseph Burke, George Wm. Shannon, Abraham Belas, and Robert K. Clay.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Mr. EDWARD T. STAPLETON, Vice-President, then moved as follows:—

“Resolved—That we desire to record our sentiments of horror and detestation at the recent murder of the Chief Secretary and Under-Secretary, by which shame and disgrace have been cast upon our country, and to express our earnest hope that the perpetrators of that brutal and dastardly outrage may speedily be brought to justice. And we desire also to express our respectful sympathy with the bereaved relatives of the unfortunate victims.”

He said it was with very great pain and regret he had to propose this resolution, which not only expressed the unanimous feeling of their profession, but also that of the public at large. It would not require any words of his to commend it to them. He was sure they all sympathised with those who had suffered, and deplored the frightful and horrible murder which had lately taken place in their city.

Mr. CHARLES H. DILLON said he begged to second the resolution. He did not think any words of his were required to cause the resolution to be adopted by them, as it fully expressed their feelings on the matter.

Mr. HENRY T. DIX supported the resolution, and said he would have been inclined to give a silent vote on this question, as no person could but sympathise with the subject of the resolution. They had been all aghast at the terrible announcement received on Saturday evening, and the whole city had been in a state of horror ever since. He felt that it scarcely represented his own feelings on the matter. It appeared to his mind that this fearful murder seemed to be the climax of several other frightful crimes committed in their land. His sympathy and abhorrence were not confined to the case of those gentlemen killed on Saturday. He also felt the same horror and detestation of the series of crimes of which this seemed to be the climax. He also condemned the barbarous butchery and murder on the hillside, and the brutal murder of an innocent lady, who had been assassinated in the same way. He also desired that they should express their sympathy and abhorrence of the frightful crimes which had been committed, of which they had had so many instances during the past twelve months.

The CHAIRMAN said he was sure all agreed with Mr. Dix in his remarks upon the transactions.

The resolution then passed, and the meeting terminated.

THE LAW OF TREASON.

Remote as may be all chances of general political disturbance or disaffection at the present day, public attention has been rightly called by one of the magazines to the eccentricities displayed by that branch of our law which relates to treason. No statutes cry for codification more emphatically than those treating of this important crime. There are now in force two totally distinct sets of enactments, both of them dealing for the most part with precisely the same offences. There is, first, the old law of high treason, originally enacted in 1350 (25 Edw. 3, stat. 5, c. 2), and, after some fifty years of abeyance—from 1795 to 1848—revived by an Act of the present reign, together with all the judicial interpretations of constructive treason and the like, so familiar to the readers of Hallam. There is, secondly, the modern legislation of 1848 (11 & 12 Vict., c. 12), whereby the new crime of treason-felony was created and defined. In this Act are enumerated most of the offences known as treason under the old law, but the penalty attached to them is mitigated, penal servitude being substituted for death. Practically, therefore, a particular group of offences against the State is dealt with twice over in the Statute-book, and in many cases it is optional whether a crime be treated as treason or as treason-felony, although the punishment and mode of procedure differ in the two cases. Such an arrangement can scarcely be called scientific or artistic. But further, there are all the subtle distinctions and intricate details of constructive treason, as laid down in the course of five centuries, to be unravelled and digested; and to decide which of them would be recognised and acted upon at the present time is a task requiring the utmost care and discrimination.—Law Times.

CONSTRUCTIVE SELF-DEFENCE.

B. may be killed by A.—

I. To save A.'s life.

II. To save the life of A.'s wife, husband, child, parent, master, or servant.

III. To save the life of a stranger.

IV. To save the life of A.'s brother, sister, or other collateral relative.

Justification in the first and second cases, grows out of the right of self-defence; in the third, it rests upon the ground of public duty; but how is the killing justified in the fourth instance?

It is not a little singular that a person should be allowed by law to defend the life of a servant upon a more liberal principle than that of a brother or sister, and yet this seems to be the settled doctrine.

Homicide in self-defence takes place when a man, in defence of his person, habitation or property, kills another who manifestly intends and endeavours by violence or surprise, to commit a forcible or atrocious felony upon either; and “under this excuse of self-defence, the principal civil and domestic relations are comprehended; therefore master and servant, parent and child, husband and wife, killing an assailant in the necessary defence of each, respectively, are excused, the act of the relation being construed the same as the act of the party himself.” 4 Bl. Com. 186; 1 Hale, P. C. 484. Neither brother nor sister is mentioned here, nor in any other statement of the doctrine that I have seen, except a single instance to be noticed presently. But are we, therefore, to conclude that collateral relations have no right of mutual assistance and protection, even in cases of imminent personal danger?

This question will be now considered.

It is said to be the duty of every citizen to prevent the commission of a felony actually occurring in his presence, by promptly arresting the offender; and if the felony be attempted with violence and with evident and imminent peril to the life of another, the felon may be lawfully killed. And it is laid down by Hale, that “if A., B. and C. be of a company and walking together in a field, C. assaults B. who flies, C. pursues him and is in danger to kill him, unless present help, A. thereupon kills C., in defence of the life of B., this occasion of C. by A. is in nature se defendendo. But then it must appear that the imminent danger of the life of B. be apparent and evident. And the reason seems to be because every man is bound to use all possible means to prevent a felony as well as to take the felon.” 1 Hale, P. C. 484. Therefore if A. may lawfully kill the assailant of his brother or sister, he is justified not upon the ground of the relationship, but because of the duty he owes to the public.

But practically does it make any difference whether we refer the justification to either the one or the other of these two grounds? For if a parent or master may lawfully slay an assailant only in the necessary defence of a child or servant, how does the supposed privilege of relationship differ in effect from the duty which the law in such a case would impose upon the parent or master, if the person assaulted were not a child or servant? Would a parent be justified in killing another to save the life of a child, under circumstances of less urgent peril, than would excuse such killing to save the life of a stranger? In all these cases, the danger must be imminent and evident, whether the homicide be in self-defence or to prevent a felony, and if there be no such pressing and apparent danger, the killing would not be excusable.

Still there is a marked diversity between the two classes of cases, and it arises from the different principles upon which they are founded. "It is laid down by writers on this subject," says Mr. Davis, "that in those cases in which the party whose person or property is attacked, might himself justify homicide committed in its defence, any person present may lawfully interpose to prevent the crime; and if death ensue, the party so interposing will be justified. No difference is said to exist in this respect between the authority of the person assaulted and those who come to his aid. The ground of justification, however, is not the same in the latter as in the former case. In the former case it is the natural right of self-defence; in the latter the alleged right and duty of all persons to prevent the felony about to be committed. And as the latter ground does not appear to be as well established as the former, nor entitled to as much indulgence, it is proper that it should be more cautiously acted upon." Davis Cr. L. 71, 72.

Let us now inquire what persons are included within the principle of constructive self-defence and thus entitled to the greater indulgence, which Mr. Davis very properly claims for them.

Hale, Blackstone and other writers, as we have seen, expressly mention master and servant, husband and wife, parent and child, but no others. Hale does indeed intimate an extension of the principle to a person standing in the relation of a friend or even a companion, but he takes care to accompany the statement with a doubt, "Therefore," he says, "if B. and C. be at strife, A., a bystander, is to use all lawful means that he may, without hazard to himself, to part them, and the very relation of acquaintance and mutual society between A. B. and C." (previously supposed to be together in a field) "seems to excuse the fact of A., in the necessary safeguard of the life of B., from the crime of simple homicide, tamen quere."

Mr. Bishop states the law as follows:—"The general doctrine here is that whatever one may do for himself he may do for another. The common case indeed is when a father, son, brother, husband, servant, or the like, protects by the stronger arm the feebler." 2 Bish. Cr. L. 877 (6th ed.).

Is a brother included? I have examined every authority cited by the learned author, and not one of them sustains him on this point.

In Rez v. Bourne, 5 C. & P. 120, the defendant was fighting with his brother, and stabbed Lightfoot who interposed to stop the combat. Mr. Bishop was evidently misled by a too hurried glance at the syllabus in this case.

Stoneman's case, 25 Gratt. 877, did not present the question. Judge Staples said:—"The excuse given by the prisoner for the homicide is that the deceased had threatened to kill members of the family and burn the house, and the prisoner feared he was there for that purpose. . . . At the time of the shooting the deceased was sitting quietly in the bushes, unarmed, unresisting, not only making no attack or demonstration of a hostile character, but so situated as to be incapable of making it had he desired."

Pond v. The People, 8 Mich. 150, was a homicide in defence of one's self and his servant. The Court said: "The only variety of excusable homicide (as contradistinguished from justifiable homicide at common law) which we need advert to, is that which is technically termed homicide se aut sua defendendo, and which embraces the defence of one's own life or that of his family or dependents within those relations, where the law permits the defence of the others as of one's self. . . . A man may defend his family, his servants, or his master, whenever he may defend himself. How much further this mutual right extends it is unnecessary in this case to consider. 4 Bl. Com. 184.

Staten v. The State, 30 Miss. 619, was a killing in defence of a wife, and the statute of Mississippi expressly limited the principle to husband and wife, parent and child, master and servant.

United States v. Wiltberger, 3 Wash. C. C. 515, was strictly a case of self-defence. Washington, J., said: "As to this the law is that a man may oppose force to force in defence of his person, his family or property against one who manifestly endeavours by surprise or violence to commit a felony, as murder, robbery, or the like."

In Sharp v. The State, 19 Ohio, 379, a father wantonly made an assault on another, and the son, coming to the aid of the father, was held, under the circumstances, not to be justified on the ground of the relationship.

In Patten v. The People, 18 Mich. 814, the accused was living with his parents, and killed one of a number of rioters who had assembled about the dwelling, and were so acting, it was claimed, as to endanger the life of the mother who was in delicate health.

In Parker v. The State, 31 Tex. 182, the prisoner, a negro, shot Green for beating a woman with whom Parker was living in a state of illicit cohabitation.

Dupree v. The State, 33 Ala. 380, was a case of alleged self-defence, and the homicide was sought to be justified upon the ground of threats against the prisoner.

In Bristow's case, 15 Gratt. 624, the accused inflicted a mortal wound on the deceased, who was engaged at the time in a fight with Bristow's father, and a conviction was sustained by reason of evidence which showed malice in the son.

In Rez v. Harrington, 10 Cox, C. C. 870, a father inflicted a fatal blow on the husband of his daughter, on seeing her violently beaten by him.

It thus appears that Mr. Bishop is mistaken, if he has no other foundation for the statement under consideration than the authorities here presented; and doubtless no such authority can be produced. The indulgence of the law in allowing the doctrine of constructive self-defence is a concession to the infirmity, or rather to the strength of human feelings, and is wisely limited, with one exception, to those relationships which constitute the closest ties of mutual duty and affection. A line must be drawn somewhere, though a brother be excluded, and a servant admitted. For if a brother might claim this privilege, so might any other collateral relative, and then an intimate friend, and then a bare acquaintance or a casual companion, and the consequence would be that what was intended primarily for indulgence would too often become license, and the violence of unrestrained passion would be invoked to palliate what forbearance and self-control, with little effort, might avoid.

What the law prescribes, however, is one thing; what a verdict will be, is quite another; and, therefore, it may very reasonably be hoped that a jury would find out some way by which a person on trial for slaying the murderous assailant of his brother, would get the benefit of all the indulgence that could be afforded by the doctrine of constructive self-defence.—SAMUEL D. DAVIES, Richmond College, Va., Dec., 1881.

In connexion with Prof. Davies' article on Constructive Self-defence, ante, 187, attention is called to Ross v. State, 10 Tex. Ct. App. 455, holding that one may justify resistance to an unlawful arrest of his brother, opposing force to force, to any necessary extent, even to killing. The Court say:—"As to the right of Alonzo Ross to act in the protection of the life, liberty, and property of his brother William, there can be no question." The question was more carefully examined in Alfred v. State, 8 id. 545, where the Court, referring to Tooley's case, 2 Ld. Ryam. 1296, holding that killing in resistance to unlawful arrest is manslaughter, say that the "case has received much adverse criticism, notably from Foster, in his Discourses; but these criticisms relate chiefly to the power of interference by entire strangers in behalf of a prisoner already in confinement, and concede the lawfulness of such interference by a fellow-servant, friend, or brother of the prisoner incarcerated." It must be noted, however, that the Texas Criminal Code provides that resistance may be made "either by the person about to be injured, or by some person in his behalf."—Albany Law Journal.

WOMAN BEATERS.

It must be admitted that the ill-treatment of women, now so rife in many parts of the country, demands some drastic remedy, but it is highly improbable that the measure introduced by Mr. T. D. Sullivan, and three other Irish members, for this purpose, will be accepted in its integrity. The opening clauses indeed reascitate a punishment so obsolete and impracticable, that some doubt will be felt whether the authors of the Bill are in earnest in proposing it. They would provide that any male of the age of fifteen or upwards, convicted of unlawfully beating or wounding any female, may be exposed for a period not exceeding four hours in a public pillory, or some similar contrivance. This erection is to be set up in some place of public resort, and over the offender's head is to be exhibited in large letters his name, and the words "woman-beater" or "wife-beater." It is needless at the present day to recapitulate the objections to which the public exposure of delinquents is liable, or the inefficacy of all punishments whose principal effect is ignominy and disgrace. The subject, it is well known, was fully ventilated some fifty years ago, and the result is to be seen in the statute of 1837 (1 Vict., c. 23), whereby the pillory was formally abolished. The similar forms of punishment, such as the French carcan, once in vogue in other European countries, have also, it is believed, been long since universally withdrawn. Upon the remaining provision of the Bill, however, a more favourable judgment may be pronounced. On conviction of a second offence within three years, the offender is to be once, twice, or thrice, privately whipped, as the court may direct, provided only that the number of strokes on each occasion shall not exceed fifty. With the purport of this provision we entirely concur. For violent assaults of all kinds no more appropriate remedy can be devised than the corporeal punishment of the delinquent; and especially in this case, where, as in woman-beating, cowardice is combined with violence. We believe, moreover, that similar measures have been adopted with most beneficial results in more than one of the United States. We fail, however, to see sufficient reason for reserving this punishment until the second offence; nor do we understand why Scotland and Ireland should be excluded from the Act. If conjugal disagreements are unknown in those countries, the operation of the Act will not affect them; but if it is otherwise, surely bad specimens of Scotch and Irish husbands deserve suppression as much as any others.—Law Times.

A REVISED STATUTE.

We read in the Revised Statutes of Manitoba, c. 8, s. 97, the following interesting enactment: "Any person using obscure language, or being disorderly, or being drunk while on any of the public ferries, shall incur a penalty for each offence not exceeding five dollars, on the complaint of any person within three months from the committing of the offence, and the penalty shall be paid to the use of the Crown." It is a little difficult to understand why obscure language on a public ferry should be regarded as any more culpable than obscure language off a public ferry. However, this may be the result of a compromise. It is, of course, very gratifying to know that in a new country generally supposed to contain many characters of questionable respectability, there is no necessity to provide against the use of obscure language, so common, unhappily, under like circumstances in other countries.—Canada Law Journal.

MISREPRESENTATIONS LEADING TO CONTRACTS.

We reported not long ago an interesting case on specific performance, decided by the Court of Appeal at Lincoln's-inn, which arose out of an advertisement that appeared in our columns two years since, and the result of which should be to induce advertisers to be more careful as to the character of the statements which they set before the public (Redgrave v. Hurd, 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 485). It will also, no doubt, be frequently referred to for the valuable statement by the Master of the Rolls of the law as to the avoidance of contracts which have been entered into after representations which are inaccurate, though not, strictly speaking, fraudulent. The material part of the advertisement was as follows:—

"LAW PARTNERSHIP.—An elderly solicitor of moderate practice, with extensive connection in a very populous town in a Midland county, contemplates shortly retiring, and having no successor, would first take as partner an efficient lawyer and advocate, about forty, who would not object to purchase advertiser's suburban residence, suitable for a family, value £1,600."

The defendant in the action answered the advertisement, and according to his own evidence (though this was contradicted by the plaintiff), he was informed by the advertiser, at an interview which he had with him, that his practice had amounted to from £300 to £400 a year. Accounts were produced in reply to a request for further particulars, but they only showed a sum of £200 a year as the outside gross earnings of the practice. The defendant accordingly asked by a letter (to which, however, Mr. Justice Fry gave a somewhat different construction) how this discrepancy was accounted for, and the reply to this inquiry, given at a second interview, was a reference to a mass of papers which, according to the plaintiff, contained the details of work done which had not yet gone into the accounts. The defendant was satisfied with this explanation, and signed the contract; but it proved that the papers in question did not represent more than £5 or £6 beyond that which had been shown in the accounts. He afterwards declined to complete the purchase; and Mr. Justice Fry, before whom the case came in the first instance, while holding that there had been a misrepresentation as to a material fact, was of opinion that the defendant having had it put in his power to ascertain the real facts of the case, and having neglected to ascertain them, was not entitled to rescind the contract. The Court of Appeal reversed this decision, and held that where a misstatement of a material fact has been made, whether intentionally or not, by way of inducement to enter into a contract, it lies on the party who made the misstatement to prove that the party who entered into contract with him did not in fact rely upon the misstatement, but upon his own investigation into the facts of the case. Otherwise, according to the principles which formerly prevailed in the Court of Equity, and which are now, by virtue of the Judicature Act, prevalent in all the courts, the party who made the misrepresentation will fail in an action for specific performance, and the party to whom it was made will be entitled to a rescission of the contract.

Mr. Justice Fry, in his judgment, referred to the case of Attwood v. Small, in the House of Lords (6 Cl. & Fin. 232), as supporting the view which he took, that the defendant, having had the opportunity of testing the statements made to him, could not, in the absence of fraud, avail himself of their incorrectness. The Master of the Rolls, in his judgment, showed that this case did not bear out the proposition deduced from it by the learned judge, and which, it may be observed, is also contained in the head-note to the report. That case arose out of the sale by the appellant Attwood to the British Iron Company of a valuable iron and coal mining property in Staffordshire for the sum of £550,000, and was remarkable alike for the great length of time which it occupied,—being heard for forty-six days in the House of Lords alone,—by the numerous points of practice and pleading which it involved, and by the difference of opinion between the learned lords who took part in the hearing of it. In the result, Lords Lyndhurst and Wynford were of opinion that a case of fraudulent misstatement had been made out against the vendor, such as to disentitle him to specific performance of the contract. On the other hand, Lords Cottenham, Brougham, and Devon, were of opinion that specific performance must be decreed, notwithstanding that some of the statements made by the plaintiff proved to be incorrect; but the reasons assigned by them for this conclusion were, as the Master of the Rolls pointed out, somewhat different. However, his Lordship was of opinion that they might be summed up in these three: (1) That there was no fraud, (2) that the company were aware of the facts, and (3) that they did not rely upon the statements of the vendor, but solely upon their own investigations. His Lordship laid down the law resulting from that case, and illustrated in many of the cases on misstatement in prospectuses substantially as we have stated it above. He also referred to the statement of the law on the subject made by Lord Cairns in the case of Reese River Silver Mining Company v. Smith (L. Rep. 4 E. & I. App. 64): "If persons take upon themselves to make assertions as to which they are ignorant whether they are true or untrue, they must, in a civil point of view, be held as responsible as if they had asserted that which they knew to be untrue." This, as was observed by the Master of the Rolls, is a somewhat wider doctrine than has been laid down in the cases at common law, but is now, of course, of universal application.—Law Times.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Theobald on Wills (2nd Edition), 505.

Held, that the words "survivor or survivors" could not be construed as "other or others" in a will (In re Horner's Estate, Pomfret v. Graham, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 48).

Order II., Rule 3.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 185.

A writ of summons, issued after the cause of action accrued, but on the same day, is good (Clarks v. Bradlaugh, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 1).

Lodgers' Protection Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict., c. 79).

Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant (12th Edition), 416.

To constitute a lodger under the Lodgers' Protection Act there must be a personal relation between the landlord and tenant, giving the landlord by himself, or his servants, a dominion over the house (Morton v. Palmer, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 7)—C. A.

Judicature Act, 1875, s. 49.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 44.

The rule that no order of Court as to costs only is appealable applies to interpleader proceedings (Hartmont v. Foster, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 12)—C. A.

Order XLV., Rule 6.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 235.

Where, in garnishee proceedings, there is reasonable suspicion that money sought to be attached does not belong to the judgment debtor, the judge (even though no suggestion is made that the money belongs to some third person) can order an issue to determine whether or not the money is trust money (Roberts v. Death, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 15)—C. A.

Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict., c. 55), Schedule 2, Rule 70.

A member of a board who is concerned in a contract with the board, and who afterwards acts as such member, is liable to the penalty under rule 70 "as disabled from acting" (Fletcher v. Hudson, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 48)—C. A.

The Solicitors Act, 1874, (37 & 38 Vict., c. 68), s. 12.
Cordery on Solicitors, 117.

A person not a solicitor cannot recover the amount of Court fees paid by him in a County Court action on behalf of the defendant, or for remuneration for services rendered in or out of Court (Verlander v. Eddolls, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 55).

Hodges on Railways (6th Edition), 601.

A railway company, carrying goods at "owners risk rate" on condition that they shall not be liable "in respect of loss or detention," are liable for an intentional refusal to deliver in virtue of a claim of lien (Gordon v. Great Western Railway Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 58).

Order XXXIII., Rule 10.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 193.

The writer of a letter unable to recollect its contents held not bound to answer further (Dalrymple v. Leslie, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 61).

Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict., c. 31), s. 8.

An affidavit of attestation of a bill of sale stating that the name written under the attestation clause was the signature of the solicitor whose name it purported to be, is insufficient (Sharp v. Birch, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 64).

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

MICHAELMAS SITTINGS, 1882.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

NOTICE.

Candidates wishing to present themselves at the above Examination must lodge their papers, &c., on or before the first day of Trinity Sittings, 1882.

By Order,

JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin,
25th April, 1882.

It was not to be supposed that an occurrence which has so affected men's minds as the Dublin murders should escape the coincidence-hunters. One of these gentlemen, Mr. R. H. Mason, has ferreted out the fact that Chief Justice Cavendish, whom he calls the first distinguished member of the Devonshire family, was murdered by the rebels during Wat Tyler's insurrection, in June, 1351. The crime was perpetrated in the market-place of Bury St. Edmund's, after the rising had extended into the East Anglian counties.—The Globe.

WOMEN LAWYERS IN AMERICA.—The Supreme Court of Massachusetts having decided that only men were entitled to practice in the Courts of that State, the Legislature is to be appealed to, and a Bill has been introduced to admit women on equal terms with men. It may be added, that they are so admitted already in Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, North Carolina, Ohio, and Wisconsin. Further, by an Act of Congress passed in 1879, those women who have been for three years members of the Bar of the highest Court of any State or territory, or of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, may be admitted to practice in the United States Supreme Court.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—G. H. Mayes, to confirm sale.—H. G. Smith, allocation.

IN COURT.—P. J. Kennedy, from 11th.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

C. W. L. O'Gilby, rental.—H. Leader, do.—J. E. O'Sullivan, vouch.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—G. B. Low, from 11th.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. Kenny, rental.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN COURT.—Sir J. St. George, from 8th.—H. Leader, adjourned motion.—S. Henderson, do.—J. Callaghan, final schedule.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

T. J. Nolan, vouch.—T. Colclough, do.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

T. J. Nolan, vouch.—T. W. Browne, for deeds.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—T. Barklie, from 20th ult.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Cairnes, Alexander, of 11 and 15 Great Edward-street, Belfast, in the county of Antrim, publican. May 1; Tuesday, May 23, and Friday, June 9. Henry T. Stewart, solr.

Foley, Mathew, of 19 Charlotte-street, in the city of Dublin, tobacconist. May 1; Friday, May 26, and Tuesday, June 18. Casey & Clay, solrs.

Moore, James F., of Carrick-on-Shannon, in the county of Leitrim, provision dealer. May 8; Friday, May 26, and Tuesday, June 18. Hamilton & Craig, solrs.

Ryan, Honoria, of Doon, in the county of Limerick, widow and draper. April 28; Friday, May 26, and Tuesday, June 18. H. F. Leachman, solr.

Stewart, George, of Ballymena, in the county of Antrim, draper. May 5; Friday, May 26, and Tuesday, June 13. Richard Davoren, solr.

Walsh, David, of 8 and 9 Orr's Cottages, Church-road, in the city of Dublin, houseowner. April 25; Tuesday, May 23, and Tuesday, June 6. Wm. Mooney, solr.

Holloway's Pills.—No Mystery.—Whenever the blood is impure or the general health is impaired the human body is predisposed to attacks of any prevailing epidemic. The first indications of faulty action, the first sensations of deranged or diminished power, should be rectified by these purifying Pills, which will cleanse all corrupt and reduce all erring functions to order. These Pills counteract the subtle poisons in decaying animal or vegetable matter, and remove all tendency to bowel complaints, biliousness, and the host of annoying symptoms arising from foul stomachs. The fruit season is especially prone to produce irritation of the bowels and disorders of the digestive organs; both of which dangerous conditions can be completely removed by Holloway's corrective medicines.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	MAY
	Sat 6	Mon 8	Tues 9	Wed 10	Thur 11	Fri 12
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	—	—	100½	101	100½	100½	100½
— New 3 p c Stock ..	100—	100	100—	100½	100½	100½	100½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1898 } Traffic at ..	—	104½	104	104	104	104½	104½
3½ p c Jan. 1891 } Bk. of Irel. ..	101½	101½	—	—	—	—	101½
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	318½	319	320	—	—	—
35 Elberhian Banking Co ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and County (Ld'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock ..	—	—	—	54½	—	—	—
20 London and W'minster, Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	70½	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Munster Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	7½	—	—	—	7½
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	23½	—	—	23½	23½	23½	—
10 National of Liverpool (Ld'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
35 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	29½	—	—	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British and Irish ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	—	—	—	107½	106½	—	—
50 Dublin & Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co. ..	—	—	—	58	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Mines.
4½ Berahaven (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
1 Killaloe Slate Co. (Ld'd) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (Ld'd) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance & Dub. Cons. Gas ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnot & Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	6	6	—
7½ Dub. Drapery Warehouse, Ltd. ..	4½	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Grand Canal ..	—	46	—	—	—	—	—
8 Guiding & Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
35 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	41½
4 National Discount, Frs., Ltd. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	10½
Tramways.
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	10½	—	—	10½	10½	—
10 Edinburgh Street Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 L'pl' Unt'd Tram & Bus l'td ..	—	—	—	—	12½	—	—
10 Leeds Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 N'th Metr. Tramway, Lond. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Provincial Trams, lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
5 Tramways Union—limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
10 Athenry and Tuam ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	43½	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and Northern Cos. ..	—	—	—	—	50½	—	—
100 Dublin, W'klow, & W'ford ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	119—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	113½	114	—	—	—	—	113½
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	32½	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast & N'th'n Cos. 4 p c ..	—	100½	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. N'th'n (Irlnd) gr'd 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	107	—	—	106½
100 Mid. Great Western. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast & N'th'n Cos. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin & W'klow 4 p c ..	—	—	105½	105½	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	112	—	—	—
— Do. 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n & West'n. 4 p c ..	109½	109½	—	—	109½	—	109
— Midland Gt. West'n. 4 p c ..	106	—	—	—	—	—	106
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	114½	—	—	—	—
— Waterford & Central 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterf'd & Limerick 4 p c ..	—	104½	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
Alliance & Cons. Gas, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Ballast Office Deb. £92 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
City Deb. of £92 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	93	93	—	—
Do. Defd. of £92 6s 2d 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Dub. Port & Docks, 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	100½
(1848) Rathm. & Pem. M. Drain, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d
 Bank Rate—If Discounts—6 per cent., 30th January, 1882
 Of Deposits—3 per cent., 30th January, 1882
 Name Days—May 25th, and June 13th, 1882.
 Account Days—May 26th, and June 14th, 1882.
 Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

DEATHS.
 THOMPSON—May 6, at Leeson Park, the infant daughter of Bennett Thompson, Esq., solicitor, aged 7 months.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49. WALLER, 50, DENZILLE-STREET.

NEW FORMS UNDER THE LAND ACT.

FORM

67. Fee-farm Grant from Landlord to Tenant . . . . . 3d. each.
 68. Mortgage from Tenant to Landlord, to secure one-fourth, or other balance, of Purchase Money . . . . . 3d. ,,
 69. Reference to Valuer to be named by Land Commission . . . . . 1d. ,,
 70. Special Report of Valuer . . . . . 1d. ,,

JOHN FALCONER, 53 UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

IRISH LAND COMMISSION.

The Irish Land Commissioners have, in conformity with Rule 104 of the Rules made pursuant to the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, ordered a schedule of Agreements fixing Fair Rents to be inserted in the "Dublin Gazette" of May 12th, 1882. A copy of this schedule, in which are entered all Agreements lodged during the month of March, 1882, will be sent to any person applying for the same to the Secretary, Irish Land Commission, 24 Upper Merrion-street, Dublin.

By Order,
DENIS GODLEY.

Irish Land Commission,
11th May, 1882.

75

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED
FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH. with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

62

PATENT OFFICE, DUBLIN.

J. K. FAHIE & SON, Consulting Engineers and Patent Agents, 2, Nassau-street, Dublin, and 323, High Holborn.

London, transact every description of business relating to Patents for Inventions, Registration of Designs, Copyrights, and Trade Marks. Authors of "Hand-book on British and Foreign Patent Law." A paper on the Law of Copyright &c., to be had on application, price Sixpence.

31

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE.

978

WATCHES.—JEWELL'S RY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PERCY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham.

181

PUBLIC NOTICES:

EVERY MAN WHO SMOKES
Should invest 24 stamps for the
NEW PERFECTED

The Best
Selected Briars
only.

JENINGS & CO., Inventors, 97, NEWGATE-STREET.
The most Perfect Pipe invented since Smoking began.

Prospectus Free.

61

D. W. CARROLL,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
Comprising Bags, Purses, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are sold much under usual charges.
Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge.

72

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT
CO., LIMITED.
SECURITY, &c.
RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—
29, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN.

51

THE EDINBURGH LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY,

ESTABLISHED 1823

(Being the oldest Life Office but one in Scotland).

Assurances in force at 31st March, 1881,	..	£6,000,000
Income at that date,	..	£248,146
Accumulated Funds over,	..	£1,729,811

Proposals completed before 31st March next will rank for Four Years' Bonus at the next division.

The new Terminable Premium Plan at whole Life Rates is explained in a Special Prospectus, which can be had on application to—

WILLIAM B. MARTIN, Res. Secretary,

31 55, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin.

IRISH LAW TIMES.

WANTED the following Numbers, for which full price will be given:—53, 54, 56, 68, 104, 112, 117, 208, 210.
Apply—53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1882.

No. 799

CONTRACTS OF CARRIERS OF GOODS.—I.

THE liability of carriers of goods so frequently comes into question both in the superior and inferior courts, that, although we have dealt with the subject on some previous occasions (14 Ir. L. T. 368, 379, 387, 401, 15 ib. 367, 381), it is desirable to keep our readers au courant with the latest decisions, embracing two Irish and two English cases, and one Canadian case.

In M'Indoe v. M. G. W. (of Ir.) Ry. Co. (16 Ir. L. T. Rep.), we find it held by May, C.J., on a civil bill appeal, that a railway company, carrying live animals, are not insurers thereof, and, in the absence of any evidence of negligence or proof of the cause of injury to the animals, will not be liable to damages for such injury—a useful affirmation of a rather important principle, which would seem to be sustained by Blower v. G. W. Ry. Co. (L. R. 7 C. P. 655), Kendall v. L. & S. W. Ry. Co. (L. R. 7 Ex. 373), and other cases collected in 14 Ir. L. T. 368, both English and American; but in most of the States such carriers are held to be common carriers, and to be insurers to the same extent as if engaged in carrying general merchandise, subject to exemption in respect of damage caused by the animals to themselves and to each other (see 4 Stm. L. R. 464). Not content, however, with this limitation to their liability—a question only debated in modern times, for the transportation of living animals was unknown to the era of the formation of the common law—such carriers habitually endeavour to diminish their liability by special contracts, perhaps too readily entered into by consignors who trust, in case of loss, to the ingenuity of counsel to show in some way or other that the conditions imposed are not just or reasonable. Moore v. Great Northern Ry. Co., decided by the Queen's Bench Division in March last, was a case of this kind, as observed by Fitzgerald, J., and should next be noticed.

There it appeared that the plaintiff delivered a horse to the defendant company, for carriage under a special contract, containing a condition that, in case of animals for which a contract note with two rates of carriage should be offered to the customer, the defendants would give him the alternative of carrying at either rate; that at the full rate, which would be charged when the contrary was not expressed, the defendants would undertake the ordinary duties of carriage subject to the conditions in the said contract note and their statutory rights; but, that at the reduced rate the defendants would carry "at owner's risk," exempt from all liability not occasioned by the wilful misconduct of the servants acting within the scope of their authority; while by a further condition they were to be exempted "in all cases from liability for injuries caused by fear or restiveness of animals." The plaintiff elected to have the horse carried at the lower rate, and the horse having been injured in consequence of a platform having been rendered unfit for the transit of the horse along it, by reason of its being crowded at the time with goods, the action was brought to recover damages for negligence. At the trial, May, C.J., held that the last quoted condition was unreasonable, and, as it formed an integral portion of the alternative offered to the plaintiff, he determined that the whole was inoperative. On a new trial motion, Fitzgerald, J., said: "If the true interpretation of that provision is, that it embraces every case in which injury immediately flowed from the fear or restiveness of the animal, although the state of fear or restiveness was directly caused by some act of negligence, or want of care on the part of the defendants, we should be inclined to adopt the view of the Lord Chief Justice; for it would seem not just or reasonable to say we accept at the higher rate the risks of carriers for hire, but we limit that liability by excepting from it losses arising in certain cases from our own neglect or default. E. gr.: a collision occurs, arising from the misconduct or negligence of the defendants, not directly occasioning injury to the animal, but creating a condition of 'fear,' excited by which the animal injures itself. If the term in question was to protect the defendants from liability as carriers at the higher rate for hire, we should be inclined to come to the conclusion that an alternative embracing such a condition was unreasonable." In the opinion of the Court, however, the provision in question should not be construed in a sense so large, but covered only "all cases in which the injury arises from the fear or restiveness created by transit in (sic) its ordinary accompaniments, and without any negligence or default on the part of the defendants; such, for instance, as contiguity to the engine, noise of the engine, or whistle, shunting, passing trains, &c. Taken in that limited sense, we are of opinion that the condition was not unreasonable. The case of Gill v. Manchester Ry. Co. (L. R. 8 Q. B. 186), decided in 1873, seems to bear out this view of the construction of the condition." See, further, as to the construction of such contracts, and as to their not exempting from liability in respect of even the excepted perils where the defendants' negligence has contributed to the loss, the English and American cases collected in 15 Ir. L. T. 367, 381. As regards the particular negligence in question in Moore's case, we think Rooth v. N. E. Ry. Co. (L. R. 2 Ex. 173, 36 L. J. Ex. 83) more in point than any of the cases that were cited; and see Rhodes v. Louisville Ry. Co., 9 Bush. 686; Hawkins v. G. W. Ry. Co., 17 Mich. 57, 18 ib. 427. The case of Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada v. Fitzgerald (13 Can. L. T. 266, 1 Can. L. T. 449), decided by the Supreme Court, Ontario (June, 1881), touches the same question, and may here be mentioned.

There, the plaintiffs (respondents) sued the defendants (appellants) for breach of a contract to carry a quantity of petroleum in covered cars from London (Can.) to Halifax, alleging that they so negligently carried the same upon open platform cars, whereby the barrels in which the oil was, were exposed to the sun and weather and were destroyed. At the trial a verbal contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants' agent at London was proved, whereby the defendants agreed to carry the oil of the plaintiffs in covered cars with quick despatch. The oil was forwarded in open cars, and delayed at different places on the journey and in consequence of which a large quantity was lost. On the delivery of the oil the plaintiffs signed a receipt note, which said nothing about covered cars, and which stated that the goods were subject to conditions endorsed thereon, amongst which were—viz., "That the defendants would not be liable for leakage or delays, and that oil was carried at owners' risk." It was held by Sir W. J. Ritchie, C.J., and Fournier and Henry, JJ., that the loss did not result from any risks by the contract imposed on the owners, but that the loss arose from the wrongful act of the defendants in placing these goods on open cars, which act was inconsistent with the contract they had entered into and in contravention as well of the undertaking as of their duty as carriers. While Strong, Fournier, Henry and Gwynne, JJ., were of opinion—affirming the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas—that the verbal evidence was admissible to prove a contract to carry in covered cars, which contract the agent at London was authorised to enter into, and which must be incorporated with the writing, so as to make the whole contract one for carriage in covered cars, and therefore defendants were liable.

SAVAGERY AND CIVILISATION.

We are so often asked to contemplate with delight and self-satisfaction the amazing rate at which progress of all kinds, moral and physical, is going on around us, that it is wholesome to look from time to time at drawbacks and shortcomings which are not far to seek. The old recipe for due abasement of spirit was to moralise over a grisly skull, to visit the tombs, or to read something about the brevity of life. Grisly skulls are not always to hand, and there is much to be said against graveyards as places for promenading; but there is a preservative against undue self-satisfaction which is quite as effectual and usually more accessible. When people are in peril of being inflated with pride by the study of flattering statistics respecting the advance of education, the growth of temperance, the multiplication of churches, and the victories of science, they may easily find correcting and chastening reflections by entering one of our criminal courts, or by reading their daily records. They will there see how superficial are the effects of these vaunted triumphs, how strong and perennial are the old causes of vice. It would, indeed, be unfortunate for the good name of this country if it were to be judged by the complexion of the cases which are presented before the Assize Courts. All that is worst in the national character there comes to light. The strong passions of the race, the proneness to intemperance, the tendency to high-handed action are painfully visible in the gloomy records of every assize. Englishmen do not lurk in dark corners and stab their enemies. They do not shoot their creditors from behind hedges after the manner of the finest peasantry in the world. They are rarely guilty of that malignant ingenuity in crime which proceeds from premeditated malice and a feeling that to taste vengeance is the sweetest gratification. But brutality towards the weak, and gross disregard of the rights of women and children and inferiors, are far too common. The trial of Osmond Brand at Leeds for the murder of William Papper, an apprentice, is a case in point. The lad was the victim of and died from cruelties which one had thought were obsolete on shipboard. The Merchant Shipping Acts regulate the most minute acts of masters of ships. They cannot move a finger without finding that they are coming in contact with some enactment. The Board of Trade acts as a sort of earthly Providence to seamen. Endless pains are taken to protect apprentices on shipboard. And yet on the Hull smack, where this miserable lad was apprenticed, he was subjected to brutalities which could not have been surpassed in pre-philanthropic days, before the Legislature had looked into the fore-castle, and when the captain's word was law to all before the mast. The evidence showed that Papper was beaten repeatedly; that buckets of water were thrown over him; that the captain kicked him with his heavy boots, jumped upon him, and dragged him along the deck; and that in the depth of winter, while the vessel was in the North Sea, the lad was compelled to stand in the stern for hours. From the time that the smack left the Hamber the prisoner practised a system of brutality towards Papper, as to which the strangest fact is that the crew seem to have allowed the captain to do as he liked towards his victim without much remonstrance. In the end the lad died under this prolonged savagery, and the body was thrown overboard in the North Sea; the captain on his return circulating the story that Papper had been knocked overboard by the foresail sheet. The cruelties which occurred in times when a captain was admitted to be privileged to do to his crew on his own ship what he liked were committed in an aggravated manner on board this smack. The jury took a very unfavourable view of the prisoner's conduct, and they could not well do otherwise. He was found guilty of murder and sentenced to death, and we cannot say that the punishment is excessive for the crime. A captain has, and always must have, by reason of his office, large authority. Discipline must be preserved, and to secure this object he must be free, when occasion calls for it, to chastise his crew or put them in irons. He may do a multitude of things which no one on shore is permitted to do. To prevent this power becoming a hideous tyranny, it is of supreme importance that when grave abuses are discovered they should be punished sternly. If ever there was a case which called for the exercise of severity, it was that which was tried at Leeds yesterday. Many a man who has paid for an act of passion by forfeiting his life was a Christian hero in comparison with this Hull skipper, and we say so notwithstanding the fact that his appearance struck every one who saw him as prepossessing and respectable.

In the evidence which was given in the trial at the Central Criminal Court of Baker, who is charged with having murdered his partner in a burglary committed at Finchley, one gets glimpses of a state of life to which the boasted appliances and agencies of our civilisation do not reach. Baker is accused of having murdered his companion in a wood at Finchley, about the 2nd of March. It becomes essential to ascertain minutely what were the prisoner's haunts and movements and companions about that date. The evidence as to this is a curious commentary on the imperfections of our civilisation. It reveals a society at our door in which men and women do not think of marrying, in which relations lightly formed are lightly broken, in which theft is the recognised mode of livelihood, and a drunken orgy the most approved recreation. It is all very well to examine minutely the customs of savage tribes in Australia or Africa, and to go as far as Thibet, or farther, to detect quaint social practices. In the Borough are savage communities with habits as curious as those which Mr. Mc'Lennon or Mr. Morgan has investigated. Hard by our churches, schools, and museums, live people who are as much outside the range of these institutions as a besotted Papuan. The old civilisations fell by reason of the barbarians who came from without. Were they more formidable than the barbarians who dwell within, and seem bred by, our modern civilisations?

As a contrast to the multitude of criminals whose tale is the monotonous record of ignorance and mental weakness, the history of Thomas Fury, who was convicted on his own confession about a week ago at Durham for the murder of a woman, is worth studying. He belongs to a very small class of criminals. The Eugene Aram of fiction, the man of high feelings and education who stains his hands with crime, is very rare in reality. Thomas Fury came as near to this type as any person one is ever likely to see in a dock. The statement which he drew up of the causes which had brought him to ruin shows that he was educated, that he had read much, that he had at least dipped intelligently into abstruse books, and that he had worked out a rough philosophical system of pessimism. It is not often a prisoner convicted of a foul murder can quote "the judicious Hooker," or cite Sir William Hamilton as an authority for an argument. Fury's thesis is old and familiar. It is the well-worn theme that intemperance feeds crime, that society makes criminals, and that the gale in which it immures them are places in which they are made worse, not better. All this is trite enough, but from him it comes with new force. One feels that this man, who had so keen a sense of duty that he must give himself up to justice for a crime committed thirteen years ago, ought, in a better organised society, to have been no criminal at all.—Times.

CONVEYANCING BILL.

The Bill has passed the House of Lords, and is printed by order of the House of Commons, so that it is now time for us to discuss its principle and details. The Bill contains clauses substantially the same as those which were contained in the Bill which became the Conveyancing Act, 1881, but were dropped out at the end of the session. It also contains an additional clause (14) which amends the "long term" section (65) of that Act. The Bill, as introduced this session, is printed in the "Weekly Notes" of the 4th March, and a summary is given in the Law Times of the same date, page 312. The clauses as contained in the former Conveyancing Bill will be found in Wolstenholme and Turner, pp. 217-226; and in Rubinstein, 3rd edit., Appendix, p. 1.

It is worth while to examine the dropped clauses, because they are numbered with reference to their original position in the old Bill, and therefore indicate to some extent in what connexion it was intended that they should be read.

The Bill gives several definitions, and we are surprised to find that the definition of "property" is in terms wider than that in the Conveyancing Act, 1881, a 2 (l). "Person" ought to be defined. It has different definitions in the Conveyancing Act and Solicitors' Remuneration Act, and none at all here. Clause 2 enables the solicitor of a "purchaser" to dispense with investigation of title if the title has been investigated and accepted on behalf of a previous "purchaser" through whom the title has been deduced. Apparently, in consequence of the wide definition of the word "purchaser," an intending mortgagee's solicitor may accept without inquiry a title which was investigated on a sale, and vice versa. But it should be expressly stated whether this is intended, as a title may be accepted on a mortgage and rejected on a sale and vice versa, the objects of a buyer and a lender not being precisely similar. It also should definitely state that the previous investigation must have been made by a solicitor or counsel, and also it should be made clear whether it will suffice if it has been made under special conditions. We suppose that the clause would apply in cases where, on the previous transaction, sect. 3 of the Conveyancing Act had not been excluded.

Clause 3 provides for official searches for entries made in the central office of the Supreme Court under any Act described in Part I. of the first schedule to the Conveyancing Act, 1881, or any other Act. It will be remembered that Part I. of the first schedule was left in the Act by mistake when the clauses connected with it were dropped. It would be more convenient to repeat it here than to send the reader away to another statute for information.

A more important question is raised by clause 4, which is as follows:—

"(1) A purchaser shall not be prejudicially affected by notice of any instrument, fact, or thing unless (i.) it is within his own knowledge; or (ii.) it has come to the knowledge of his counsel, as such, or of his solicitor, or other agent as such; or (iii.) it would have come to the knowledge of the purchaser, or of his solicitor, or other agent as such, if such inquiries and inspections had been made as ought reasonably to have been made by them or one of them."

But by sub-clause 2 this shall not exempt a purchaser from any liability or obligation under "any instrument under which his title is derived mediately or immediately." This necessary sub-clause was not in the Conveyancing Act as originally drawn (Wolst. & T. 219), and its omission would have led to very serious consequences; so that the delay has certainly had a beneficial effect in giving time for reconsideration.

It will be observed that the clause recognises the employment of "agents" other than solicitors. This is necessary, for it would be obviously unjust to protect transactions through "agents" which would not be protected if conducted through a solicitor's office. But it would be well to add some words to show that this was in no way to authorise the employment of non-professional persons in conveyancing matters.

The special importance of the clause will be seen if sub-clause (1, iii.) is read with sects. 8 and 66 of the Conveyancing Act, for by sect. 66 a solicitor is protected for not excluding sect. 3, which implies various conditions of sale in contracts. This protection to the solicitor will be by clause 4 (1, iii.) extended to the client but with the very important exception contained in sub-clause (2). Apparently it will not therefore relieve a purchaser from the consequences of, e.g., not investigating lessor's title, and thus will still maintain, as regards deeds forming the direct chain of title, the rule laid down in Patman v. Harland (44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 728; L. Rep. 17 Ch. Div. 853).

The clause is likely to be beneficial as an attempt both to define and limit the doctrine of constructive notice, which, as Lord Justice Brett said in Allen v. Seckham (L. Rep. 11 Ch. Div. 790), "depends on a fiction." It assumes notice where no notice exists. We think, however, it would be much improved if it dealt also with searches. They are costly and troublesome. Mr. Dart declares "that as a rule, subject of course, as every rule is, to occasional exceptions, the searches advised by counsel are theoretically imperfect and practically useless." (Dart. V. & P. 5th ed. 491.) The question has obtained increased importance in consequence of the decision in Ford v. Hill (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 41; L. Rep. 10 Ch. Div. 266), since which solicitors have commonly refused to answer a general inquiry as to incumbrances. The Bill (clause 8) does facilitate searches, but some further provision would be beneficial. We shall consider the other clauses of this short, but very important, Bill in another article.—Law Times.

"LAW JOURNAL REPORTS" FOR MAY.

The monthly number of the Law Journal Reports for May contains pages 305 to 406 of the Chancery Division, pages 257 to 312 of the Queen's Bench Division, and pages 41 to 56 of the Magistrates' Cases. In all forty-three cases are reported, of which twenty-two are from the Chancery Division, sixteen from the Queen's Bench Division, and five are Magistrates' Cases.

The Chancery cases are remarkable for the number of decisions in the Court of Appeal, all, with but one exception, overruling the decision below. There are two interesting cases of specific performance turning on the sufficiency of the agreement. There are three company cases of interest, and two cases of direct interest to solicitors (Burden v. Carte and Schjott v. Schjott). A second solicitors' case (In re Horton) will be found in the Queen's Bench Division. The first case in the Chancery Division (Berrington v. The Metropolitan District Railway Company) decides that the special powers given to railway companies with regard to minerals do not prevent their compulsorily purchasing the minerals as well as the surface of land required for the undertaking. In the case of In re Baker, Collins v. Rhodes, it was held by the Court of Appeal, if decision were necessary, that a specialty creditor does not prejudice his right to sue by allowing eighteen years to elapse. In Hobbs v. The Midland Railway Company Mr. Justice Manisty decided that the unauthorised sale of land by one railway company to another was not conclusive proof that the land was superfluous. In Marshall v. Berridge it was held by the Court of Appeal that an agreement for a lease which bore a date, but which did not specify the date for the beginning of the term, did not satisfy the Statute of Frauds, and specific performance was refused. In the case of In re Robson, Emly v. Davidson, the Court of Appeal allowed, in spite of the Mortmain Act, a claim on an estate consisting of an equitable mortgage on leaseholds arising out of a series of assurances executed the same day—namely, a deed by which A., whose estate was being administered, covenanted to pay to trustees £20,000 on such trusts after the death of A. and M., as M. should appoint by will; a will by which M. appointed the fund to the trusts of a deed poll, after paying legacies; and thirdly, a deed poll by which the fund was directed to be applied to charitable uses. In the case of In re the Padstow Total Loss and Collision Assurance Association, ex parte Bryant, a mutual marine insurance association, consisting of more than twenty members, was held to be for the "acquisition of gain," so that, not being registered, it could not be wound up. In Shardlow v. Cotterill "property purchased at Sun Inn, Pinxton, March 29, Mr. G. Cotterill, owner," was considered by the Court of Appeal a sufficient description in a contract of sale. In the case of In re Tulbot it was held that an application for a supersedeas of a lunacy commission ordered in Ireland, and registered in England, must be made in Ireland. In The Scottish Widows' Fund v. Craig the holder of a rent-charge on glebe land was held by Vice-Chancellor Hall, to be entitled to a sale, although the Act creating the charge contained only special powers of distress and entry. In the case of In re Latham, ex parte Gregg, a trustee of a liquidating debtor, having a lease with power to remove fixtures, removed the fixtures and disclaimed the lease. His act was held wrongful, as the disclaimer amounts to a surrender at the date of the appointment of the trustee. Schjott v. Schjott, an action by a married woman through her next friend, was dismissed with costs against the solicitor, on the failure of the next friend, to produce a written authority from the wife. In Enden v. Carte a solicitor of a bankrupt was allowed a charge under the Solicitors Act on money paid into Court in the alternative, but not in respect of costs incurred in resisting a successful claim of the trustee to the money. In Blake v. Blake the signature to a will, which was not signed in the presence of the attesting witnesses, and was covered over with a piece of blotting paper when they signed, was held not to be duly acknowledged. The attestation clause was in due form; and, except for some erasures, probate would have been granted in common form, but the witnesses were unable to swear that they saw the signature. These facts illustrate, what is tolerably well known, that wills not duly attested, but good on the face of them, are constantly admitted to probate. In Ex parte Nesbit, in re Garrod, the clause in a building agreement, forfeiting the materials to the building owner on failure in the contract, was held by the Court of Appeal not to make the agreement a bill of sale, because it did not "secure a debt." Williams v. Williams is the case in which Mr. Justice Kay held that a testator could not leave his body to a particular person to be buried. It has already been commented on. In the case of In re The Fren Colliery Company a judgment creditor was not allowed to proceed with an execution against the goods of a liquidating debtor, although the creditor was said to have postponed his action through the representations of the company. In Harlock v. Ashberry the taking of rent by a mortgagee in possession was held not a payment by the mortgagor so as to prevent the time for foreclosure from running. In the case of In re Russell, Russell v. Chell, a bequest of "all my share in a partnership" was held to pass the whole partnership, although, at the time of the will, the testator had only a third. In The New London and Brazilian Bank v. Brocklebank, Vice-Chancellor Bacon decided that shares held in a bank, subject under the articles to a lien in respect of the debts of the shareholders to the company, were subject to the lien, although the shareholders were trustees. In the case of In re Atkins, ex parte Edmonds, the trustees of a friendly society were held, under the Acts, entitled to a preferential payment on the bankruptcy of the treasurer. In Earl De la Warr's Settled Estates authority was given, on petition, to the trustees to pay costs incurred by the tenant for life in resisting claims to rights of common.

Of the Queen's Bench cases, The York Tramways

Company v. Willows, in the Court of Appeal, deals with the question of the validity of the appointment of a director, so as to make him liable for calls on qualifying shares. In Ferguson v. Davison the Court of Appeal upheld the view that, where an action is referred by consent, the costs to abide the event, the plaintiff recovering less than £20 in contract does not obtain costs without an order. Hicks v. Faulkner decides that it is good ground for reasonable and probable cause in an action of malicious prosecution, if the defendant, trusting his own memory, bona fide believed a fact, justifying the prosecution, to have happened, although it did not in fact happen. Mr. Justice Hawkins elaborately examines the law on the subject. In Waller v. Lock the Court of Appeal held that information given by a mendicity society to inquirers is privileged in an action of libel. In Keen v. The Millwall Dock Company the Court of Appeal upheld the necessity for a written notice giving particulars as a condition precedent to an action under the Employers' Liability Act. To refer to particulars given to the defendants by their superintendent is not enough. In Fear v. Castle it was held that where the first of two actions brought against husband and wife for the debt of the wife contracted before marriage is satisfied, and exhausts the property acquired from the wife, the second action is "subsequent" within the Married Woman's Property Act, although commenced before the judgment in the first. In Toke v. Andrews we are introduced to a new creation of the Judicature Acts—viz., a "counter-claim upon a counter-claim." The action was for arrears of rent; the defendant counter-claimed for money due on a valuation on going out; and the plaintiff was allowed to reply, claiming rent due since the writ. In Patten and The Corporation of Liverpool it was held that the three months allowed by section 23 of the Lands Clauses Act, for an umpire to make his award, is to be calculated from the date of his appointment, and not from the time when the awarding power of the arbitrators came to an end. In Morgan v. Thomas it was held that land devised to L. for life, "and after his decease to his lawful issues and their heirs for ever if any," and, if L. should die without leaving any children born in wedlock, to E. and his heirs for ever, conferred on L. an estate for life, and not in tail. In Young & Co v. The Corporation of Leamington it was held in the Court of Appeal that even where an urban sanitary authority has had the benefit of a contract, it cannot be enforced against the authority unless the terms of the Public Health Act as to contracts are complied with. In Coomber v. The Justices of Berke it was held that Assize Courts do not pay property tax. In Regina v. The Judge of the City of London Court a collision between ships in an artificial dock not subject to the tide is pronounced within Admiralty jurisdiction, and capable of being entertained in the county having Admiralty jurisdiction in the district in which the dock is. In Morton v. Palmer it was held that where costs are ordered to be paid as part of an order, there is no stay of proceedings without a substantive direction to that effect. In the case of Re Horton a solicitor who once taxed a bill in London was held not to carry on business in London for stamp purposes. In Lilley v. Donnelly a defendant who had contracted to warehouse goods in one place was held liable when he warehoused them in another and they were burned.

Of the Magistrates' Cases in the case of The Duke of Bedford v. St. Paul's, Covent Garden, already commented on in these columns, the duke was held liable to be rated in respect of tolls taken in parts of Covent Garden devoted by his Act of Parliament to the sale of special produce, such tolls being in the nature of stallage tolls, and arising out of the enjoyment of land. In Regina v. Barclay and Another it was held that the rating authority may exercise a discretion as to rating small tenements on the owner, but when it does so the amount must be one-half of the rateable value. In Pool and Forden Highway Board v. Gunning it was decided that the six months within which summary proceedings under the Highways and Locomotives Act may be taken for recovery of expenses for damage caused by extraordinary traffic, are to be computed from the certificate of the surveyor. In Regina v. Rowland the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved decided that a man, although there have been no bankruptcy proceedings, may be guilty of removing property to avoid a judgment debt, under section 15, sub-section B, of the Debtors' Act. In Galloway v. Marids it was held that a wooden box on which the defendant stood for betting purposes, in the ring of a racecourse, was a "place" within the meaning of the Betting Act. It will be seen that the cases reported this month are of more than usual interest.—Law Journal.

AN IRISH SALMON FISHERY CASE.

On Monday the House of Lords adjourned the further hearing of an appeal from an Irish decision in favour of the Duke of Devonshire's right to an exclusive fishery on one side of a navigable reach of the river Blackwater. The arguments of the counsel for the appellants, who claim to be entitled as members of the public to capture salmon by drift-nets, are concluded. Before selecting the points upon which the law lords desire to hear the counsel for the Duke, they wish to consider the very voluminous evidence for themselves. A natural instinct may have weighed with them not to disturb the solemnity of national grief which environs the honoured House of Cavendish at the present moment by associations with the conduct of worldly business. But the suit is in itself sufficiently intricate and involved to have excused the delay. For the past thirteen years it has been the subject of perpetual litigation in Ireland, with various fortunes. In 1869 a trial of seventeen days, before Chief Baron Pigott, terminated in a verdict for the various persons accused of trespasses. Another action was then brought, and in 1873 the Duke was again defeated. In 1874, an order having been obtained for a new trial, the jury disagreed. A fresh action was commenced in 1875 against the ostensible appellants, who are a fish-dealer and a fisherman. In this action the Duke obtained a verdict, though the verdict was subsequently set aside on the ground of the reception of improper evidence. Once more the case came on for trial before Chief Baron Pigott's successor, and the jury once more disagreed. For the seventh time the Duke returned to the charge; and in 1878, before Mr. Justice Lawson, he succeeded. A motion was made by the appellants before Chief Baron Pules and Barons Fitzgerald and Dowse for a new trial, and was refused. Lord Chancellor Bull and the Master of the Rolls affirmed the refusal, against the Lord Chief Justice, who differed from the ruling of Mr. Justice Lawson. Should, indeed, the present appeal be dismissed, the conflict will at length be ended. If the law lords accept the view of the appellants, their decision will not close the controversy. The whole will then be remitted to Ireland for a fresh series of trials and appeals for new trials, which may take another dozen years.

This protraction of litigation through an infinite succession of trials, and applications for new trials and appeals at every turn; is the scandal of British law. Justice even in the abstract is not advanced by the inordinate multiplication of inquiries. Whatever the result of the present stage of the pending action, ultimate certainty will not have been attained by it more than had the matter been peremptorily wound up by the verdict before Chief Baron Pigott. If, however, a system authorizing and almost inviting ten several contentions before Courts of Law could ever be admitted to be in accordance with the principles of common sense, the claim of the Duke of Devonshire to a several fishery in these seven miles of the Blackwater might be allowed to constitute an exception. The mere history of the case ranges through six centuries and a half. The Duke's first muniment of title is dated July, 1215; and that itself is only of importance as presupposing a higher antiquity. Magna Charta was signed a month before. Since the Great Charter the Crown can make no binding grant of an exclusive fishery in a navigable river like the Blackwater. But the Courts have held that Royal grants of subsequent date, if accompanied by possession, and without evidence of resistance, may be adduced in proof that an exclusive fishery had been created previously, and was by the grants only confirmed. It is the opinion of Mr. Justice Lawson, and of other Irish Judges who have supported his direction to the jury of 1878, that the presumption of a very early appropriation by the sovereign power of a thing of such recognized value as the salmon fishery of the Blackwater is strong and manifest. Although the fishery is not particularly mentioned in these original grants to the Duke's predecessors in title, they infer that it was meant to pass, and did pass. In the grants much more was comprised than the fishery now in dispute. The whole region formed part of the vast domain of the Earls of Desmond. On their overthrow in the reign of Elizabeth, Sir Walter Raleigh obtained a share of their spoils. To him, among other possessions, fell, partly by grant from the Crown and partly by private arrangement with the Bishop of Lismore and Waterford, the bed of a reach of the Blackwater opposite the manor of Stracally. Sir Richard Boyle, in part by purchase from Raleigh, and in part by grant from James I. on Raleigh's attainder, acquired Raleigh's rights in the manor and in the waters which washed it. From the family of Boyle by a marriage with its heiress the Cavendishes have inherited them. A remnant of the Desmond estates remained to a younger branch of that house, now represented by Mr. Villiers-Stuart of Dromana. In 1688 this family and the Boyles disputed with each other their respective rights to the fishery. The Boyles claimed, under their Royal grant, a monopoly of the entire fishery. The Villiers family asserted that it was entitled to the fishery along the Dromana bank and to the middle of the stream. The Villiers of the period was extremely indignant at finding rights attacked which had existed, his answer in Chancery alleged, "long before the complainant or any of his ancestors had any estate in Ireland." His contention prevailed; and the Boyles were forbidden to interfere with the fishery on the Dromana side. The circumstances of that defeat are now relied upon by the ducal representative of the Boyles as positive evidence of the appropriation by private persons as against the public of exclusive fishery rights in the waters over against Stracally, and as presumptive evidence of the rights claimed by the Duke of Devonshire on his side. If the salmon fishery were lawfully appropriated, as the Decree in Chancery of 1683 implies, in one half of the Stracally reach of the Blackwater, it is argued for the Duke that it is inconceivable it should not have been appropriated in the other half. If it were appropriated, the benefit of the appropriation, he may assume, belongs to him. His opponents deny that he has established the initial fact of an operative Royal grant of an exclusive fishery, or of any grant at all of such a privilege, whether operative or inoperative. They concede that the land on the banks was granted and the bed of the river itself. They do not concede that the fishery either could be or was granted. In respect of the proceedings of 1688 the Lord Chief Justice of Ireland concurs with their view that a litigation between two private owners is incapable of barring the right of the public, which was no party to the proceedings. They urge, moreover, that a rejection by a Court of the claim of the Boyles to a fishery on the Dromana shore cannot be deemed equivalent to an affirmation by the Court of the title of the Boyles to a fishery on the Stracally shore. If the Duke or his predecessors ever had a title, the appellants assert that they have lost it now, since the manor of Stracally has passed away from them by sale through the Encumbered Estates Court. In truth, however, the Duke and his ancestors, and they from whom this title is traced, never, according to the appellants, set up their present pretension until a few years ago, when the salmon fishery became valuable. At the utmost they took proceedings against the construction of weirs which were an interference with the bed of the river, their undoubted property. Although they were aware, as was the whole country, that forty or sixty cotmen plied their nets and caught and sold salmon freely, they never stirred to prevent them. They did not stop them because they knew they could not. To these arguments the Duke is able to make a reply, in which, as his adversaries may boast the assent of the Irish Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench Division, he has the countenance of the Irish Exchequer Division and a majority of the Irish Court of Appeal. As against the public he is able to argue, and some eminent Judges support him, that in cases involving a general right a judgment, as was the judgment of 1883, upon the matter directly in issue between other parties is evidence of the state of facts and usage at that time. Further, the Irish Court of Chancery, he contends, took for granted, in curtailing the excess of the claim of the owner of Stranally against the owner of Dromana, that the former was entitled so far as the latter was not. On the point of adverse possession and exercise of the monopoly, he argues that the appropriation by his predecessors of weirs and their resistance to the attempts of others to construct fresh weirs amounted to the maintenance of a fishing monopoly, and to the prohibition of any public liberty of fishing. So long as the attacks upon the right were confined to the industry of poor cotmen a great proprietor may well have scrupled to interpose. Fishing by drift-nets, though the claim shelters itself under the supposed prescription of cot fishing, is a practice essentially different. These drift-nets are described in the judgment of the Irish Master of the Rolls as of enormous dimensions, spanning the whole extent of the river, and each longer than the nets of forty pairs of cots. Enjoyment of a paramount right to a salmon fishery in the Blackwater might co-exist with cot fishery; obviously drift-net fishing is incompatible with any advantage from it.

When the evidence in a suit commences with King John, and after being summed up in one volume of 863 pages, requires to be supplemented by additional documents which cover 300 more, it is scarcely to be anticipated that the decision, whatever it may be, will carry conviction to all minds. Disputes swell to this huge mass, and demand this enormous accumulation of evidence and discussion, because in their own nature they admit of little or no certainty. Right and practice were not necessarily in unison in the ages which the history of this suit covers. Nobles and courtiers often sought grants from kings which they cared to assert in action principally against the grantors. On the other hand, tenants and subordinates not rarely abstained from resisting claims of their superiors which were simple usurpations. Neither is the absence of evidence that alleged rights under Royal grants were habitually put in operation to inhibit the occupation of fishermen conclusive against the reality of the rights, nor is the willingness of fishermen to ply their industry with the consent of the powerful lord of the locality rather than against it absolute testimony that they pursued their vocation only by sufferance. Judges in inquiries like this cannot do more than balance probabilities. As for the public, although the appellants assume to represent it, fortunately it can regard with philosophic indifference the issue, whatever it may be. Ducal claimants of fishery monopolies cannot, it is true, expect popular sympathy with their attempts to enforce them; but from the point of view of national concern in the multiplication of salmon and in the prudent management of salmon streams, it may be questioned whether the venerable lord of Lismore Castle be not at least as genuine a champion of public interests as the worthy fish-dealer of Youghal and fisherman of Dromore.—Times.

NEW STATUTES.—During the present Session only 13 Acts of Parliament have been passed, seven public and six local.

THE LATE MR. J. N. DARBY.

The late Mr. John Nelson Darby, formerly a barrister-at-law, of Dublin, who died at Bournemouth, on the 29th ult., in the eightieth year of his age, was the youngest son of the late Mr. John Darby, of Markley, Sussex, and of Leap Castle, King's County, and a nephew of the late Admiral Sir Henry Darby, who commanded the Bellerophon in the battle of the Nile. Mr. Darby was born in London in 1800, and was educated at Westminster School, whence he proceeded to Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in 1819 as gold medalist. He was called to the Irish bar about the year 1825, but subsequently took holy orders. Afterwards deploring the divisions of Christendom, he joined a movement for religious fellowship upon a broader basis than orthodox communions ordinarily present. Dublin was at first the centre of the "Brethren;" but their views quickly found expression in England, notably at Plymouth, hence their usual designation.—Law Times.

LIABILITY OF ATTORNEYS.

The Supreme Court of Indiana has recently rendered an interesting opinion upon the liability of an attorney: Hillegress v. Bender, 1 Am. Law Mag. 7. The facts of the case were these: A. obtained a judgment against B. After the entry of the judgment, the defendant gave to D., his attorney in the case, the money to pay this judgment. D. gave it to the Clerk of the Court, who satisfied the judgment of record, but did not deliver the money to the plaintiff A. After the death of the Clerk and of D., B. brought suit against D.'s administrator for the money delivered by him to D. The Court held that the general power of an attorney for a defendant ceases upon the entry of a judgment finally terminating litigation; that "it is no part of the duty of a defendant's attorney, in the capacity of an attorney, to pay a judgment entered against his client, although furnished with the money for that purpose. It may be in such a case, his duty as an agent to pay the money to the creditor; but ordinarily, attorneys are not bound to hunt up and pay judgment creditors;" and that "when the duty ends the liability ceases." The Court was not lenient, however, in prescribing an attorney's duties. It said:—

"A lawyer is liable for a negligent omission to perform a plain duty. Upon this ground rests the decision in State v. Harrison, 73 Ind. 17. In that case the duty was a plain one—there was no doubtful questions of law for decision, nor any conflicting mode of procedure to embarrass or to mislead. A lawyer is not liable for every mistake. He is not liable for a mistake committed in matters where the law is doubtful and uncertain. 'God forbid,' said C. J. Abbott, 'that it should be imagined that an attorney or a counsel, or even a Judge, is bound to know all the law. Nor is the lawyer bound to bring to the practice of his profession the highest skill and learning. He is bound to possess and exercise competent skill; and if he undertakes the management of a law affair, and neither possesses nor exercises reasonable knowledge and skill, he is liable for all loss which his lack of capacity or negligence may bring upon his client.' 'What an attorney does profess and undertake, and all that he professes and undertakes is, first, that he possesses the knowledge and skill common to the members of his profession; and, second, that he will exercise in his client's business an ordinary degree of attention, prudence, and skill;' Shearman & Red. Neg., sec. 212; Riley v. Cavanaugh, 29 Ind. 435; Carale v. McQueen, 128 Mass. 574. The man who professes to act as a lawyer must be acquainted with the settled rules of law, and the practice of the Courts prevailing in the locality wherein he practices. 'For this purpose,' to borrow the language of a late writer, 'there must be a familiarity with the adjudicated local law as well as the statute bearing on the particular point, and there must be a knowledge of the legal machinery necessary for the application of this law.

To undertake the management of a case without such knowledge is negligence, which makes the lawyer liable for any loss which his client may incur: Whart. Neg., sec. 749. Another author thus states the rule: 'The law requires an attorney to be acquainted with the practice of his Court, with ordinary rules of pleading and evidence, the existence of statutes, and the rules of Court, and in cases free from doubt, with their construction also.' Weeks on Attorneys, 474, sec. 285.

"It is the duty of a lawyer to know whether public matters, such as the duties of the officers connected with the Court in which he practices, are regulated by statute. A lawyer who does not know whether the duties of the clerk of the Court in which his professional duties are performed are or are not defined by statute, cannot be deemed to possess competent skill. It is a lawyer's duty to know the elementary rules of law upon familiar matters of practice, as well as the settled rules governing matters which spring out of the ordinary transactions of every-day life, and which are of frequent application. A rudimentary knowledge of the law would have acquainted the appellant's intestate with the elementary rule that payment must be made to the creditor or to some one duly authorized to act for him. A rule so long settled and so familiar ought to be known to all who assume the character of lawyers. A knowledge of the statute would have shown the intestate that there was in them no provision changing the familiar and long established rule. It must be held that if the intestate was appellant's attorney when he paid the money to Eidsall, and paid it as his attorney, a right of action accrued to the appellee, because competent skill was either not possessed or was not exercised."—Pacific Coast Law Journal.

FRACTIONS OF A DAY.

The wisdom of our ancestors has transmitted to us a good many maxims in the law which we are often ashamed to accept, and has too often involved us in no end of difficulties in order to reconcile these with common sense. Yet the courts deal tenderly with all the obsolete doctrines which pass through their hands, because one of the theories is, that the courts can or once could do no wrong, and hence all their practices were accepted as the perfection of reason. Whatever a judge once decided was taken at once for something very near infallibility, and the successors of that judge were grieved in spirit to question its authority. One of the troubles attending this inheritance of legal wisdom is the maxim that anything done on a certain day is taken to be done at the first moment of that day. Probably our ancestors were a little put about for time-pieces, and hence the short and easy way in which they dealt with minute points of time, yet which now-a-days we often seem to think so important. Some phases of this maxim have of late perplexed justices not a little, and the points dealt with by the courts are well worth bearing in mind, for there can be little doubt that as we live in an age when time and punctuality are of the essence of all kinds of business, we will depart more and more from the old-world theory of dating acts done from the hour of midnight preceding them.

Some years ago a novel difficulty of this description arose out of the not uncommon occurrence of dog licenses being taken out a little too late, and people being detected in an apparent illegality, though probably they had no serious intention of defrauding the revenue. As we all know a decree has gone forth that those who keep dogs shall pay for the luxury by giving to the revenue a yearly contribution. The Revenue Act, 30 Vict., c. 5, s. 5, enacted that a license to keep a dog shall commence on the day on which the same shall be granted, and if a person shall keep a dog without having in force a license authorising him to do so he shall incur a penalty of £5. Accordingly, the form of license bore a date of the day of its issue, though it did not occur to the officials to insert the hour of the day on which such document may have been issued.

In the case of Campbell, appellant, v. Strangeways, respondent, 3 C. P. D. 105, it appeared that one day at 12 40 p.m. it was discovered by the Inland Revenue officials that the respondent Strangeways had a dog for which no license was in force. But at 1 10 p.m. of the same day the respondent took out a license in the usual form bearing date of that day. The officer took out a summons against the respondent for keeping the dog without a license, the time, of course, being only about half an hour, and the magistrate was asked to impose a penalty for that bad half hour. The magistrate was of opinion that the license produced was an answer to the information, and dismissed the charge, whereon the official demanded a case for the opinion of the court. In the hearing of the case some of the learning of the subject was referred to. A case before Lord Mansfield was cited where two actions of debt had been brought against a person for the same act, and the question arose whether the second could be gone on with. And the judge said he did not see why they should not inquire into the hour of the day so as to discover which was first and which was second. In another case an execution issued against a man on the day he died, and the question raised was whether he was alive or dead when the execution issued. There also the court held that the hour of the day might be inquired into. And again, the same thing was said when a feri facias issued against a man, and he was also made bankrupt on the same day. The magistrate had thought that these being questions in civil actions the rule that the act done related back to the first hour of the day might well be departed from, but not so in a criminal offence such as this proceeding was for a penalty for want of a dog license. But the Common Pleas Division reversed the judgment of the magistrate, and held that as the dog license had not been taken out till after the offence had been committed, the maxim did not apply, and that inquiry might properly be made as to the precise hour of the day. As Lindley, J., expressed it: The provision of the Act that the license shall commence on the day it bears must mean that it did not commence at any previous day. It is going too far to say that a license taken out in any hour of the day covers the whole day. The two sections of the Act may be reconciled by reading "on the day" to mean "at and from the time when the license was obtained." So the court held that as the dog was kept without a license for half an hour before the license was taken out, the penalty had been incurred, and was not wiped out by the subsequent taking out of the license.

The next question that arose was one of no small interest and nicety, and seemed to be decided differently though a different reason no doubt existed. In Tomlinson v. Bullock, 4 Q. B. D. 230, an Act of Parliament altering the law of bastardy had been passed on the 10th of August, 1872, and it declared that the new law should apply to any bastard child born after the passing of the Act. It so happened that a bastard child was born on the same 10th of August, 1872. And it is needless to say that though the Act recognised the old law as still applicable to children born before 10th August, 1872, it said not a word about the children that might be born on the 10th August. The justices heard an application of the mother of the bastard child, and came to the conclusion that as the child was born on the 10th August, it could not be treated as born after the 10th, and so was not within the new law introduced on that day. The old cases were again cited on this question, but the court to which a case had been sent for opinion reversed the decision of the justices, and held that the Act of Parliament came into operation at the midnight preceding the 10th August, and therefore that everything that happened during that day, including the birth of the child, happened after the passing of the Act.

The reason of this last decision was somewhat recondite. The court said that at common law it was the ancient maxim that all the statutes passed during one session of Parliament were deemed to have been made on the first day of the session. This maxim, as may be supposed, was productive in many instances of the most serious consequences. And accordingly an Act of Parliament of 28 Geo. 3: was passed which required the clerk of the Parliament to indorse on every Act the day, month, and year when the same received the Royal assent, and enacted that such indorsement should be the date of its commencement where no other commencement was provided. The only point of time which this Act made material was the day on which the Royal assent was given. It thus recognised the well-known maxim that the law takes no notice of fractions of a day, and except in cases where there are conflicting rights between subject and subject for the determination of which it is necessary to ascertain the actual priority, such was the universal rule. An Act of Parliament accordingly, which comes into operation on a given day, becomes law as soon as the day commences, and every event which occurred during that day was, in contemplation of law, an event which took place after the passing of the Act.

Such was the reasoning of the court as to the commencement of an Act of Parliament, and it will be observed that part of it is mere assumption, namely, that because a very foolish rule once existed of making Acts of Parliament date back several months at a time it must be assumed that when a new Act declared that that rule should no longer apply, the court will nevertheless retain a small part of the same foolish rule, namely, that of dating the Act, which probably passed at about 2 p.m. from a time preceding its real passing by fourteen hours. This mode of reasoning, it is true, has a certain air of conformity to the established method. The new Act demolished the old rule as it existed on a large scale of months; but it saved the old rule as it existed on the smaller scale of one day. The rule was bad as regarded weeks and months but it is sound for at least one day. Whether the logic of the decision was right or wrong it is at present to be treated as the law, and hence we must now consider it as settled, that when an Act of Parliament passes on a stated day it means the first moment of that day, namely, the moment after the preceding midnight. When a rule indeed is once settled, it matters very little what was the reason given for it or whether that reason bears strict scrutiny. It is enough that it is settled and can be easily understood and followed.

The late case of Clarke v. Bradlaugh; L. R., ante, p. 278, is a very natural sequel to the security and attending the old maxim notwithstanding the above two recent decisions. The point was of great nicety. Mr. Bradlaugh had on a certain day sat and voted in the House of Commons without having taken the statutory oath, and thereby incurred a penalty. There were persons watching his proceeding, and on the next day for the cause of action, and one gentleman named Clarke was so zealous in the cause as a champion of orthodoxy, that he drove at once to his solicitors, and on the very same day issued a writ of summons in an action to recover the penalty. The difficulty raised was whether the plaintiff had not been rather premature in what he did, and whether he had not actually issued the writ before the cause of action accrued, that is, before the defendant had voted in the House of Commons. The defence was raised by demurrer that the statement of claim disclosed no cause of action, inasmuch as it alleged that the defendant sat and voted in the House of Commons on the day on which the writ was issued. This point was argued, and the Queen's Bench Division gave judgment for the plaintiff, holding that the court could inquire into the hour of the day in which the respective acts were done, namely, the voting and the issuing of the writ. The defendant appealed to the Court of Appeal, and again the learning of the subject as embodied in the old cases was discussed and reviewed.

The question turned in the judgment of the court on whether the issuing of the writ of summons was a judicial act or the act of the party. The court assumed that for most of the purposes of justice the hour of the day might be inquired into. It also assumed that there was a general rule that judicial acts related back to the beginning of the day on which such act was done. Therefore if the court was satisfied that the writ of summons was the act of the party and not a judgment of a court then the fraction of a day might be considered, and if so, the plaintiff would succeed. Accordingly the court came without much difficulty to the conclusion that the issuing of a writ of summons was in no sense a judicial act. Anybody could go at any moment of any day, and, on paying a fee, issue a writ on any cause or alleged cause of action, which he thought fit to assert, or assume, or invent. If so, this surely could not be deemed a judicial act. The court could not originate it, nor could it refuse the issuing of the writ when it was asked for. The consequence, therefore, followed that the plaintiff was deemed to have competently brought this action, it being assumed for the purpose of the decision that the writ was not issued till after the hour of day when the illegal act was done.

These cases show that while the law still deems an Act of Parliament passed and a judgment of a court pronounced on the first moment of the day, there is in other cases no objection to looking at the fraction of a day. Yet possibly there will still be difficulties in applying these maxims to the cases that will arise from time to time.—Justices of the Peace.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—XV.

SETTLEMENT OF ESTATE ON MARRIAGE; THE CHILDREN TAKING AS TENANTS IN COMMON IN TAIL.

(Continued from page 216, ante.)

Trustee Clauses.

The clauses relating to the appointment of trustees and their indemnity will be in the same form as those inserted in settlements of personality (David, iii. 1239, 720). They have already been discussed under that heading in the Law Times of the 11th March, p. 329, and the 18th March, p. 346. It will be seen that our view is that the settlement should supplement the statute by vesting the power of appointing new trustees in the tenants for life during their lifetime; after the death of both of them the statutory power given by sect. 31 will suffice. Also the settlement should indemnify the trustees for investing upon property held with less than a marketable title. We suggested the following form:—"And it is hereby agreed that the said [husband] and [wife] during their joint lives, and the survivor of them during his or her life, shall have power to appoint new trustees of these presents, and the trustees or trustee may dispense with investigation or production of the lessor's title on lending money on leasehold securities, or otherwise may lend on any security with less than a marketable title, and shall not be responsible for any loss thereby occasioned."

Compare old common form, David, iii. 721; form supplementing Lord Cranworth's Act, ibid. 720; form supplementing new Act, Conc. David, 329; Prideaux, 11th edit. 221.

The trustees' receipt clause may be omitted, in reliance on sect. 36, and it will not be needful to insert any power to compound or compromise debts or claims (sect. 37). Possibly it may sometimes be necessary to exclude the wide powers of sect. 37. See Law Times, March 18, p. 346.

Covenants for Title.—Sect. 7.

We think it best that the settlor should not be expressed to convey either "as settlor," or as "beneficial owner," but that the ordinary covenant for further assurance should be inserted. For form compare David, iii. 1027, 1029; Conc. David, 2nd ed. 235; Prideaux, 10th ed. vol. ii. 310. It is slightly different from the form of covenant used when the land is conveyed on trust for sale. We are of opinion that the covenant (sect. 7, E.) implied by statute if the settlor conveys "as settlor," is rather too limited, as apparently it would not apply to cases where the settlor himself incumbers previously to the conveyance. As to this see our articles, Law Times, March 25, p. 365; and April 1, p. 382.

On the other hand, we think, notwithstanding the high authority of Mr. Davidson and others, that the insertion of the words "as beneficial owner," and the consequent implication of the covenants in sect. 7 (A), which are substantially the same as vendor's covenants, more objectionable, as placing too great a burden on the settlor. See Law Times, April 1, p. 382.

If, however, brevity is a great object, covenants for title should be omitted, and the words "as settlor" inserted in the conveying part.

Of course the possible doubt whether sect. 7 (B) applies to the case of a conveyance of land upon trust for sale for the purposes of settlement, could not be raised in the case before us. For this is clearly "a conveyance by way of settlement." In the form of marriage settlements given as No. 4 of Schedule IV. to the statute the words "as settlor" are used, and covenants for title omitted; and although that form is one of a settlement on first and other sons in tail, &c., and not exactly of the same description as the settlement under discussion, in this respect the principle is the same. Under these circumstances, although we prefer the ordinary covenant for further assurance, we should not hesitate, where brevity is a great object, to use the words "as settlor" instead. As to the authority of the forms at the end of the Act, see sects. 57, 66. We may mention that Mr. Pridaoux, in his most recent edition, employs the phrase "as settlor" in a settlement of real estate, and omits covenants for title.

Before leaving this subject it will be well to notice that there is another difference between the covenant of sect. 7 (E.) and the ordinary one for further assurance (ubi sup.). In the ordinary one the covenant is made with the trustees, and the benefit of the covenant will be distributed by the Statute of Uses to the persons who from time to time become entitled under the settlement (Third Report of Real Property Commissioners, cited in David, i. 138; Dart, 5th edit. 778; Sug, V. & P. 14th edit. 578; Notes to Spencer's case, 1 Smith L. C. 82.); and it is to the effect that the settlor will further assure the property to the uses declared in the settlement.

The statutory one is made with the "persons to whom the conveyance is made," sect. 2 (1). We suppose this means the trustees, who are the grantees to uses, and not the persons to whom the Statute of Uses vests the legal estate. Then by the Statute of Uses, as mentioned above, or by sect. 7 (A), the benefit of the covenants will be distributed to the persons entitled. So far then the statutory and ordinary covenants agree. It is to the matter of the covenant that they seem to differ. The ordinary covenant is that the settlor will further assure the property to the uses declared in the settlement; while the statutory one is that the settlor will assure the property "to the persons to whom the conveyance is made and those deriving title under them, subject as, if so expressed, and in the manner in which the conveyance is expressed to be made, as by them or any of them shall be reasonably required."

We have seen above that "the persons to whom the conveyance is made" are the trustees. It can hardly be said with accuracy that the person in whose favour uses are declared "derive title under" the trustees. Nor can the conveyance be said to be made "subject" to the uses. The word "subject" would rather refer to any mortgage or charge affecting the property than to the uses to which it is conveyed. There remains, however, the phrase "in the manner in which the conveyance is expressed to be made." The effect of this is, that any conveyance, made under this implied covenant for further assurance, must be made to the trustees, but it must be made to uses, just as the original conveyance was. The difference then is that, under the ordinary covenant, the "further assurance" will be made to the uses, but in the statutory one it will be made to the trustees. But the statutory covenant to make the further assurance may be enforced by the persons in whom the use is vested, sect. 7 (6). Practically, then, in the settlement before us, the difference is of little consequence.

Summary.

It will be convenient here to summarise the results of our two previous articles on this description of settlement, contained in the Law Times of April 8, page 401, and April 15, pages 419, 420:—

The limitations to the children, and the accuser clause, may be slightly abbreviated by use of the phrase "tenant in tail" instead of the old limitation to the children and the heirs of their bodies; but, at present, we should not advise that the very short mode of limiting cross remainders usual and proper in wills should be adopted in deeds. See Law Times, p. 401.

We think that partial reliance may be placed on sect. 42 as to provision for management of the land and application of its income during the minority of any of the children. Power of leasing should be inserted. In simple settlements it will only be necessary to state that the trustees shall have a power of sale and exchange, and to declare with what consent it shall be exercisable. Lord Cranworth's Act, and the Conveyancing Act, 1881, will supply the details (Law Times, pp. 419, 420). A short trustee clause will be necessary, and the ordinary covenant for further assurance should usually be inserted. See above in the present article. Of course the general words and all estate clause may usually be omitted, in reliance upon sects. 6, 63. See Law Times, Jan. 7, p. 167. The above remarks apply to settlements of freeholds only.

(To be continued)

LAW REFORM.

In closing his answer to Mr. Ewart's argument before the Senate Judiciary Committee against the Civil Code, Mr. Field said:—"Finally, I have devoted a quarter of a century to the amelioration of the laws of this Imperial State. When I came to the bar I found that justice was two-fold in its first great divisions, and seven-fold in one of these divisions. I saw suitors turned out of a court of law into a court of equity, and then back again from equity to law; and I knew a plaintiff defeated in the highest court of the State, not because he lacked a good case, but because his attorney had brought his suit in the equiv instead of the debit. All this was believed by ninety-nine hundredths of the most conservative of professions to be the outcome of 'the wisdom of ages,' the expressions of 'those eternal principles of justice that existed before legislators ever saw'—I resolved in my soul, my fanaticism, if you please, to break up this system. Some brave friends joined me. We smote the idol, and its broken limbs lie scattered on the banks of the Hudson and the Mississippi, the Thames and the Ganges. The gentleman laughed at the Code. Then, as now, facetious, he proposed a feast to a jovial and admiring company of his professional brethren, 'Jack Cade and Jack Code.' Well, the Jack Code that the gentleman derided has grown to be a man and a gentleman; he has marched over land and sea, entered the old judicial halls of England, and taken his seat upon the woolsack, a few years ago, being in the Southern hemisphere, I read under the Southern cross, in the statutes of that land, words written here in Albany thirty winters before, and I felt a pride which the gentleman, it appears, can neither feel nor understand. And when last year I went into Westminster Hall, the Hall of William Rufus, the scene of so many tragedies and so many glories, and looked from the steps at the upper end down upon the rooms, over the doors of which were written Court of Chancery, Court of Queen's Bench, Court of Common Pleas, and Court of Exchequer, I said to myself, 'Old things have passed away and all things have become new,' and I could not but think that possibly in some future time a place may be found in the hall for the escutcheon of New York with her proud motto 'Excelsior,' to remind the visitor of the daughter beyond the sea, and of the contribution made by this daughter to the simplification of the laws of the mother-land."—Albany Law Journal.

THE ASSISTANT UNDER-SECRETARY.

We are happy to be in a position to state that the allegation of the Daily Chronicle to the effect that Dr. Kaye, Q.C., had received a threatening letter, is without foundation.

ALLEGED POLICE PROTECTION OF THE IRISH JUDGES.

The Press Association says:—All the judges and officials in Dublin are now guarded by policemen in plain clothes. Detectives are placed at the law and other public courts, and at the private residences of the judges.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

30 & 31 Vict., c. 142, s. 10.

There is no appeal without leave to the Court of Appeal in a High Court action remitted to the County Court under 30 & 31 Vict., c. 142, s. 10, such action becoming a County Court action (Bowles v. Drake & Co., 51 Law J. Rep Q. B. 66)—C. A.

Fry on Specific Performance (2nd Edition), 530.

Particulars of sale contained a misstatement of the length of a term for which a tenant of the vendor held a portion of the property; another portion was described as producing a rental which at the time the particulars were issued was not produced, but which, before the day of sale, owing to repairs done, was raised to the stated amount. Held, there was no such misrepresentation as would enable a purchaser to resist specific performance (Goddard v. Jeffreys, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 57).

Daniell's Chancery Practice (6th Edition), 1162.

In a sale of property by solicitors under an order of the Court, it is the duty of the solicitors having conduct of the sale to pay the deposit into Court for the auctioneer; and, therefore, where an auctioneer sent the deposit to the solicitors, and it was misappropriated by a member of the firm, the innocent members were held liable for the default (Biggs v. Bree, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 64).

Robson on Bankruptcy (4th Edition), 603.

A trustee in bankruptcy cannot sell his debtor's estate to his partner, nor anyone through whom he may derive benefit (In re Moore, ex parte Moore, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 72).

Jarman on Wills (4th Edition), ii., 306.
Theobald on Wills (3rd Edition), 387.

A bequest of an annuity to B. S. charged on two specified real estates, with usual powers of distress and entry in case of arrears, was held a legal limitation of a rent charge, so that the personal estate was exonerated therefrom (Patching v. Barnett, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 74)—C. A.

Morgan on Costs, 117.

In an administration of real and personal estate, costs exclusively occasioned by the real estate must be borne by the same, the general costs being borne by the personal estate; and the judge should make the appointment. [Semble, In re Middleton; Thompson v. Harris, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 525 (noted L. J. 1881, p. 335), overruled] (Patching v. Barnett, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 74)—C. A.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN IRELAND.

At a meeting of the Judges on Thursday, the following resolution was passed unanimously:—"That, in the opinion of the Judges of the Superior Courts, the imposition upon them of the duty proposed by the Prevention of Crime (Ireland) Bill would seriously impair the public confidence in the administration of justice in Ireland." All the Judges attended save the Lord Chancellor, Chief Justice Morris (who is away), Baron Dowse (who is ill), Mr. Justice Lawson (who is away), and the Judges of the Bankruptcy and Admiralty Courts.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTA BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. James W. McLaughlin, Barrister-at-Law, of the North-West Circuit, has been appointed a Junior Crown Prosecutor for the County of Cavan.

Mr. John Crockett, Ulster House, Castlederg, has been appointed Clerk of Petty Sessions for Castlederg (County Tyrone) Petty Sessions district.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

KING'S INNS.

HONOR EXAMINATION, OCTOBER, 1882.

The Benchers of the King's Inns in Ireland have approved of the following Rules for the Honor Examination of Law Students:—

"An honor examination, to be conducted by members of the Bench and the Professors at the King's Inns, shall be held in October in each year, commencing in October, 1880. The honor examination shall be in the following subjects, viz.:—1. The History of Law, Constitutional Law, and Criminal Law. 2. Jurisprudence, Civil Law, and International Law. 3. The Law of Real Property. 4. The Law of Personal Property. The rules as to the time, place, and subjects of examination, shall be published by the Education Committee at least six months before each honor examination.

"Every student who shall, within the three years preceding the examination, have kept at least eight of the Terms' Commons, and attended the two continuous Courses of Lectures necessary to qualify him for admission to the Irish Bar, shall be qualified to compete at an honor examination on entering his name at the Under Treasurer's Office, seven clear days, at the least, before the day of holding such examination, but no student may compete at more than one honor examination.

"The 'John Brooke Scholarship' of fifty pounds per annum, to continue for three years, shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each honor examination, and an exhibition of twenty-one pounds per annum, to continue for three years, shall be conferred on the student obtaining the second place at each honor examination. Each student obtaining a scholarship or exhibition, may, if so recommended by the Education Committee, be excused from keeping two Terms' Commons in the Dining Hall of the Society, and from attending two Terms of Lectures, which would be otherwise required for his admission to the Bar. A prize of twenty-one pounds shall be conferred on the student obtaining the third place at each honor examination, and any such student may also, if so recommended by the Education Committee, be excused from keeping one Terms' Commons in the Dining Hall of the Society, and from attending one Term of Lectures, which would be otherwise required for his admission to the Bar.

"Each scholarship and exhibition shall be tenable for the three years next following the holder's call to the Irish Bar, provided such call shall take place not later than in the Hilary Sittings after his election, otherwise the period of three years shall be computed from the call day of such Sittings, but the payment shall not accrue until the date of the holder's call to the Bar, and shall if necessary be apportioned.

"Each scholarship and exhibition shall continue so long only as the holder shall remain a practising member of the Irish Bar, and shall retain the personal benefit of such scholarship or exhibition. The Benchers reserve to themselves the power to deprive the holder of any scholarship or exhibition for what shall appear to the Bench to be sufficient cause.

"The Benchers reserve to themselves a discretion of withholding a scholarship, exhibition, or prize, in case the Education Committee report that they do not consider the answering sufficiently meritorious. The Benchers may give certificates of honor to students failing to obtain the first, second, or third places, where the Education Committee report that the answering merits such distinction.

"A list, arranged in order of merit, of all the students obtaining scholarships, exhibitions, prizes, or certificates at each honor examination, stating the distinctions conferred, shall be placed in the Hall of the Four Courts, in the Law Library of the Four Courts, the Library of the Society in Henrietta-street, and in the Lecture Room of the King's Inns.

"At any call to the Bar, those students who have obtained scholarships, exhibitions, or prizes, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day, and those who have obtained scholarships, exhibitions, or prizes, shall take rank in seniority among themselves, according to the rank and date of the distinctions obtained by them."

Rules for the Honor Examination of Students for "The John Brooke Scholarship," Exhibitions, Prizes, and Certificates.

An honor examination will be held immediately before the Michaelmas Sittings, 1882, at which any qualified student of the King's Inns, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for "The John Brooke Scholarship," an exhibition, or prize, or certificate of honor, shall be entitled to present himself.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination is required to enter his name at the Under Treasurer's Office, King's Inns, Henrietta-street, on or before Tuesday, the 17th day of October, 1882.

The examination will be held on Tuesday, the 24th, and Wednesday, the 25th days of October, 1882.

It will take place in the Hall of the King's Inns, and the doors will be opened half an hour previous to the hour, and closed at the hour appointed for the examination, and no student can be admitted after the doors have been closed.

The examinations will be conducted by members of the Bench, and will be in the following order:—

On Tuesday, the 24th of October, from the hour of 10 o'clock, a.m., till 12 o'clock, noon, on History of Law, Constitutional Law, and Criminal Law; and from 2 o'clock to 4 o'clock, p.m., on Jurisprudence, and Civil and International Law.

On Wednesday, the 25th of October, from the hour of 10 o'clock, a.m., to 12 o'clock, noon, on the Law of Real Property; and from 2 o'clock to 4 o'clock, p.m., on the Law of Personal Property.

Subjects of Examination.

1st.—History of Law, Constitutional Law, and Criminal Law.

I. and II. History of Law and Constitutional Law, during the following period—

From the Restoration to the Accession of George I.

III. Criminal Law.

The Law relating to Conspiracy.

2nd.—Jurisprudence, Civil, and International Law.

The Contract of Mandate, in Roman Law, with its Analogies in French and English Law.

3rd.—Law of Real Property.

The Law of Mortgage of Real Estate.

4th.—The Law of Personal Property.

The Law of Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes.

By Order of the Education Committee,
JOHN D. O'HANLON, Under Treasurer.

KING'S INNS, 22nd April, 1882.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY
OF IRELAND.

MICHAELMAS SITTINGS, 1882.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

NOTICE.

Candidates wishing to present themselves at the above Examination must lodge their papers, &c., on or before the first day of Trinity Sittings, 1882.

By Order,

JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin,
25th April, 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES' COURT.

EXTENSIVE SALE OF HOUSE PROPERTY IN THE CITY OF DUBLIN.

Before the Right Hon. JUDGE OMBEY,

On Tuesday, the 2nd May.

Estate of the Very Rev. Augustus William West,
owner and petitioner.

Lot 1.—The Houses, Nos. 21 and 22 Christchurch-place, held in fee, subject to the yearly rent of 2s. 5d., and a portion of the yard at-rear of No. 21, held under lease for 98 years from 1786, at the yearly rent of one peppercorn; profit of 275 17s. 7d. per annum, less the usual taxes. Sold to William Burke for 2340.

Lot 2.—The Houses and Premises, Nos. 48 and 49 Mountjoy-square, held, with other premises, under lease of 10th March, 1790, for a term of 999 years, at the yearly rent of 218, late currency, which will be sold liable to the whole of the said head rent, and bound to indemnify all the other premises in said lease against payment of said head rent; now producing the profit rent of 238 15s. 4d. Sold to Mrs. Nugent for 2830.

Lot 3.—The Houses and Premises, Nos. 51 and 52 Mountjoy-square, held under said lease of the 10th day of March, 1790, producing the profit rent of 242 9s. 2d., less the usual taxes. Sold for 2720.

Lot 4.—The House and Premises, No. 46 Mountjoy-square, held under said lease of the 10th day of March, 1790, and producing the annual profit rent of 227 13s. 10d., less the usual taxes. Sold to W. J. Tyndall for 2540.

Lot 5.—The House and Premises, No. 50 Mountjoy-square aforesaid, held under said lease of 10th day of March, 1790, and now producing the yearly rent of 227 13s. 10d. Sold to Mr. Tyndall for 2560.

Lot 6.—The House and Premises, No. 21 Middle Gardiner-street, held under said lease of 10th March, 1790, and now producing the yearly rent of 214 15s. 4d. Sold to C. G. Westropp for 2240.

Lot 7.—The House and Premises, No. 25 Middle Gardiner-street, held, with lots 8 and 9, under lease dated the 24th day of March, 1800, for a term of 998 years from 1801, at the yearly rent of one peppercorn, and now producing the yearly rent of 265, less the usual taxes. Sold to John Flynn for 2510.

Lot 8.—The House and Premises, No. 26 Middle Gardiner-street aforesaid, held under said lease of the 24th day of March, 1800, and now producing the yearly rent of 265, less the usual taxes. Sold to Mr. Flynn for 2510.

Lot 9.—The House and Premises, No. 27 Middle Gardiner-street, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 24th day of March, 1800, and now producing the yearly rent of 232, less the usual taxes. Sold to Mr. Flynn for 2360.

Lot 10.—The Houses and Premises, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 Mountjoy-place, held, with lots 11 to 28, both inclusive, and other premises, under lease dated the 23rd day of June, 1791, for a term of 999 years from 1791, subject to the yearly rent of £58, late currency, to payment of the whole of which this lot is sold, liable and bound to indemnify all other premises comprised in said lease against the entire of said head rent; this lot now produces the yearly profit rent of £51 14s. 8½d., less the usual taxes. Sold to Mr. Flynn for £690.

Lot 11.—The House and Premises, No. 6 Mountjoy-place, aforesaid, held under said lease dated the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the annual profit rent of £18 16s. 11d., less the usual taxes. Sold to A. Dillon for £275.

Lot 12.—The House and Premises, No. 7 Mountjoy-place, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the annual profit rent of £12 14s. 9d., less the usual taxes. Sold to C. G. Westropp for £225.

Lot 13.—The House and Premises, No. 8 Mountjoy-place, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the annual profit rent of £22 14s. 9d., less the usual taxes. Sold to Mr. Westropp for £220.

Lot 14.—The House and Premises, No. 9 Mountjoy-place, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the estimated annual rent of £70, less the usual taxes. Sold to T. A. MacMahon for £570.

Lot 15.—The House and Premises, No. 10 Mountjoy-place, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the annual rent of £52, less the usual taxes. Sold to John Flynn for £500.

Lot 16.—The House and Premises, No. 32 Mountjoy-square, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the yearly rent of £46, less the usual taxes. Sold to W. J. Tyndall for £620.

Lot 17.—The House and Premises, No. 33 Mountjoy-square, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the yearly rent of £59, less the usual taxes. Sold to G. J. Wells for £660.

Lot 18.—The House and Premises, No. 1 Great Charles-street, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the annual rent of £44, less taxes. Sold to Mr. Wells for £360.

Lot 19.—The House and Premises, No. 2 Great Charles-street, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and now producing the annual rent of £43, less the usual taxes. Sold to George Tickell for £365.

Lot 20.—The House and Premises, No. 3 Great Charles-street, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and of the estimated yearly letting value of £45. Sold to John Flynn for £370.

Lot 21.—The House and Premises, No. 4 Great Charles-street, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the annual profit rent of £23 2s., less the usual taxes. Sold to Thomas Brunker for £355.

Lot 22.—The House and Premises, No. 5 Great Charles-street, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the annual profit rent of £21, less the usual taxes. Sold to Mr. Brunker for £320.

Lot 23.—The House and Premises, No. 6 Great Charles-street, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, producing the annual profit rent of £21, less the usual taxes. Sold to Mr. Brunker for £325.

Lot 24.—The House and Premises, No. 7 Great Charles-street, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the annual profit rent of £9 4s. 7½d., less the usual taxes. Sold to Mr. Whitton, in trust, for £180.

Lot 25.—The House and Premises, No. 8 Great Charles-street, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the annual profit rent of £25 17s., less the usual taxes. Sold to R. Johnston for £350.

Lot 26.—The House and Premises, No. 9 Great Charles-street, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the annual profit rent of £24, less the usual taxes. Sold to the Hon. F. de Montmorency for £340.

Lot 27.—The Houses and Premises, Nos. 1 to 7 Mountjoy-court, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, and producing the annual profit rent of £30, less the usual taxes. Sold to G. J. Wells for £235.

Lot 28.—The House and Premises, Nos. 8 and 9 Mountjoy-court, aforesaid, held under said lease of the 23rd day of June, 1791, lately producing the yearly rent of £28. Sold to Mr. Wells for £115.

Lot 29.—The House and Premises, No. 15 Middle Gardiner-street, the Houses and Premises, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 Temple-court, and the Ground whereon the House No. 7 Lower Temple-street formerly stood, held partly under lease dated the 18th of January, 1780, for the term of 999 years, at the yearly rent of £8 8s., present currency, and partly by lease dated 26th of September, 1792, for three lives, renewable for ever, at the yearly rent of 2s. 8½d. present currency, and a renewal fine of one peppercorn on the fall of each life, and producing the net yearly profit rent of £25. Sold to Mr. Wells for £330.

Lot 30.—The House and Premises, No. 23 North Cumberland-street, held under lease dated the 24th day of March, 1774, for a term of 997 years, subject to the yearly rent of £7 7s. 7½d., present currency, and 12d., late currency, for every chief, and 6d., late currency, for every under tenant, as a common fee or leet money, and now yielding the yearly profit rent of £22 12s. 4½d. Sold to J. F. Clinch for £150.

Lot 31.—The House and Premises, No. 24 North Cumberland-street, held under lease dated the 24th day of March, 1774, for a term of 997 years, subject to the yearly rent of £5 10s. 9d., present currency, and 12d., late currency, for every chief, and 6d. late currency for every under tenant, as a common fee or leet money, and now yielding the yearly profit rent of £24 9s. 8d. Sold to T. V. Ryan for £210.

Lot 32.—The House and Premises, No. 108 Grafton-street, held under lease dated 6th day of June, 1781, for three lives, renewable for 70 years from the 25th day of March, 1781, subject to the yearly rent of £16 12s. 8½d., present currency, and one couple of fat capons, or 4s 7½d., present currency, and renewal dated the 19th day of April, 1852, for three lives, whereof two are still in existence, and now producing the yearly profit rent of £46 3s., less the usual taxes. Sold to H. J. P. West for £500.

Lot 33.—The Licensed House and Premises, No. 4 North Earl-street, held under lease dated the 18th day of October, 1787, with toties quoties covenant for renewal during 900 years, at the yearly rent of £26 5s., present currency, with 6d. for every chief or under tenant, and a renewal fine of one peppercorn, if demanded, and yielding a profit rent of £21 15s. per annum, less the usual taxes. Sold to Mr. West for £475.

Lot 34.—The House and Premises, No. 5 North Earl-street, held under lease dated the 18th day of October, 1787, with toties quoties covenant for renewal during 900 years, at the yearly rent of £26 5s., present currency, with 6d. for every chief or under tenant, and a renewal fine of one peppercorn, if demanded, and yielding a profit rent of £19 18s. 1d. per annum, less the usual taxes. Sold to Mr. Whitton, in trust, for £320.

Solicitors: Messrs. Chomley & St. George.

A GOVERNMENT BY LAWYERS.—The New York Sun publishes an analysis showing the professions of the members of both Houses of Congress in the United States. The result is that it is seen that the legal profession has an overwhelming predominance. In the Senate, out of 80 members, no less than 57 are lawyers; while in the House of Representatives there are no less than 195 lawyers, although here the proportion is smaller, the total number of members being 361.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

Table with columns: DESCRIPTION OF STOCK, Sat. 13, Mon. 15, Tues. 16, Wed. 17, Thur. 18, Fri. 19. Rows include Government, India Stock, Banks, Mines, Tramways, and Leased at Fixed Rentals.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.
BARLEE—May 18, at Florence House, Merrion, the wife of Arthur Lee Barlee, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.
MARRIAGES.
O'RORKE and MULLAN—May 11, by special permission of his Eminence Cardinal Manning, at the Church of Corpus Christi, Strand, London, by the Rev. Alfred Roche, Alexander O'Rorke, junr., Esq., solicitor, to Alice Mary Mullan, both of Ballymena, County Antrim.
DEATHS.
O'LEARY—May 18, suddenly, of heart disease, at Hanover-square, London, Joseph Patrick French, eldest son of the late John O'Leary, Esq., barrister at law, in his 70th year.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
49, W A L T E R S T R E E T , 50,
DENZILLE-STREET. 3-7

PUBLIC NOTICES.
ROBERT W HYTE
Ladies' & Gentlemen's Boot & Shoe Manufacturer,
1, NORTH FREDERICK STREET,
(Rutland-square).
ESTABLISHED OVER HALF A CENTURY.
Boots made for Weak Ankles Deformed Feet, and Surgical purposes of every description.
All Work executed on the Premises under my personal superintendence.
None but first-class Workmen employed in either Making or Repairing.

LITHOGRAPHY } MAPS, PLANS, MEDICAL PLATES
CIRCULARS, &c. executed by
JOHN FALCONER,
58, UPPER SACKVILLE STREET, DUBLIN.
BOOKBINDING } of every description executed by
JOHN FALCONER,
58, UPPER SACKVILLE STREET DUBLIN.

Table with columns: FORMS UNDER THE JUDICATURE ACT. Rows include Writ of Summons, Affidavit of Debt, Affidavit of Service of Writ of Summons, etc.

Holloway's Pills.—Wrongs made Right.—Every day that any bodily suffering is permitted to continue renders it more certain to become chronic or dangerous. Holloway's purifying, cooling, and strengthening Pills are well adapted for any irregularity of the human body, and should be taken when the stomach is disordered, the liver deranged, the kidneys inactive, the bowels torpid, or the brain muddled.

J. FALCONER, 58, UPPER SACKVILLE-ST., DUBLIN,

NEW FORMS UNDER THE LAND ACT.

FORM

- 67. Fee-farm Grant from Landlord to Tenant . . . . . 3d. each.
- 68. Mortgage from Tenant to Landlord, to secure one-fourth, or other balance, of Purchase Money . . . . . 3d. „
- 69. Reference to Valuer to be named by Land Commission . . . . . 1d. „
- 70. Special Report of Valuer . . . . . 1d. „

JOHN FALCONER, 53 UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS.
(Royal Route via Orkney and Caledonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Lochawe, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Stornoway, &c. Official Guide, 3d.; Illustrated, 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Fares free, at CARSON BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post from the owner, DAVID MACBRATNE, 119 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 23, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. FERCY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

EVERY MAN WHO SMOKES Should invest 24 stamps for the NEW PERFECTED

The Best Selected Briars only.

JENINGS & CO., Inventors, 97, NEWGATE-STREET. The most Perfect Pipe Invented since Smoking began. Prospectus Free. 61

D. W. CARROLL, 44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN, Wishes to call attention to his large STOCK OF NOTEPAPERS AND ENVELOPES, Direct in every instance from the Makers. They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices. His large Stock of LEATHER GOODS, Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases, With every article connected with Stationery, Are Sold much under usual charges. Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer. Letterpress and Lithographic Printer. Estimates free of charge. 72

IRISH LAW TIMES.

WANTED the following Numbers, for which full price will be given:—53, 54, 56, 68, 104, 112, 117, 208, 210. Apply—53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

WANTS:

AGENCIES TO SOLICITORS.

A FIRM of SOLICITORS of long standing is open to take a few Agencies for Country Solicitors; exceptional advantages and moderate terms will be offered. Apply—A. B., IRISH LAW TIMES Office. 74

LEGAL POSTINGS:

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE IN IRELAND. CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

SALE
On FRIDAY, the 9th day of JUNE, 1882.

In the Matter of the Estate of OWEN CONNOLLY, Owner; Continued in the names of the Assignees of the said OWEN CONNOLLY, (Owners); THE MUNSTER BANK, Limited, Petitioners.

TO BE SOLD BY PUBLIC AUCTION, In Three Lots, Before the Right Honourable Judge Flanagan, At his Court, Inns-quay, in the City of Dublin, On FRIDAY, the 9th day of JUNE, 1882.

Lot 1 consists of the Dwelling-house and Warehouse at the rear known as No. 21 Mary's Abbey, in the Parish of St. Mary, in the CITY OF DUBLIN, held under Lease for 100 years, from the 25th December, 1857, subject to rent of £45, and producing an estimated profit rent of £45. The purchaser can have immediate possession.

Lot 2, consisting of the Anglesea Fruit Market, with the tolls and customs thereof, having two large Gate Entrances opening into said market, on the West from Little Green-street, and a large and small Gate Entrance from the East, from Anglesea-row, and the Markets, usually held on said premises, and the tolls, customs, rents, profits, and emoluments thereof, and the right of passage for foot passengers through Archibald-place, in the Parish of St. Michan, and City of Dublin, held under Lease for 30 years from 1st July, 1875, at rent of £245, and estimated to produce a profit rent of £176 15s 4d.

Lot 3 consists of Parts of the Lands of Hazelhatch, known as the Commons of Hazelhatch, containing 18a 0r 4p statute measure, lying on the North side of the Grand Canal, held on Lease for 200 years, from 25th March, 1869, subject to the yearly rent of £37.

Also that part of said Lands, containing 27a 3r 28p like measure, lying on the South side of said Canal, held under Lease for 200 years from 25th March, 1869, subject to the yearly rent of £37.

Also that Part of the Lands of Newcastle called Hazelhatch and Commons, containing 7a 0r 16p like measure, held on Lease for 31 years from the 25th March, 1872, subject to the yearly rent of £15. All said Lands being situate in the Barony of Newcastle, and COUNTY OF DUBLIN, and producing a net profit rent of £101 9s. 6d.

Dated this 12th day of May, 1882. J. M. KENNEDY, Examiner.

Proposals for all or any of the Lots will be received by the Solicitors having charge of the Sale up to the 1st day of June, 1882, and if approved of, submitted to the Judge for approval.

For Rentals and further particulars apply at the Office of the Clerk of Sales, Chancery Division, Land Judges' Court, Inns-quay, Dublin; to

HENRY A. COFFEY, Esq., Solicitor for Receiver, 25 Westland-row; or to MAXWELL and WELDON, Solicitors having charge of Sale, 37, North Great George's-street, Dublin. 78

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO., LIMITED.

SECURITY, &c. RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—

39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 51

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, MAY 27, 1882.

No. 800

CONTRACTS OF CARRIERS OF GOODS.—II.

ANOTHER condition in Moore v. The Great Northern Ry. Co. was, that no claims in respect of "goods" would be allowed unless made within three days after delivery. This it was, also, contended was unreasonable; but, no cases on the subject seem to have been referred to in argument. "We incline to think," said Fitzgerald, J., "that this condition applies to inanimate goods and not to cattle, and that it is not unreasonable; and further, we desire to point out that the conditions which the court or judge is to determine to be just and reasonable under the statute are, 'with respect to the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of animals, goods or things.' The 8th condition relates to something to occur after delivery." We may add that in Simons v. G. W. Ry. Co. (18 C. B. 805, 26 L. J. C. P. 25) a condition was held reasonable that "no claim for deficiency, damage, or detention shall be allowed unless made within three days after delivery of the goods, nor for loss, unless made within seven days after the time when they should have been delivered;" and so in Lewis v. G. W. Ry. Co. (5 H. & N. 867, 29 L. J. Ex. 425); but, see per Cookburn, C.J., Garton v. Bristol, &c., Ry. Co. (1 B. & S. 112). In the United States the weight of authority appears, on the whole, to preponderate in favour of sustaining regulations relating to the time and manner of presenting claims for damages; but in all, or nearly all, the cases the time limited was about 30 days. The following may be consulted in support of the reasonableness of such conditions:—U. S. Express Co. v. Harris, 51 Ind. 127; Weir v. Express Co., 5 Phila. 355; Express Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 264; Southern Express Co. v. Hunnicutt, 54 Miss. 566. But, on the other hand, see Capehart v. Seaboard & Roanoke Ry. Co., 81 N. C. 438; Adams Express Co. v. Reagan, 29 Ind. 21; Southern Express Co. v. Caperton, 44 Ala. 101; Place v. Union Ex. Co., 2 Hilt. 19. A stipulation, in a contract of shipment of live animals, that no claim for loss or damage will be allowed unless made "before or at the time the stock is unloaded" (not to be deemed limited to the identical moment), was held reasonable in Goggin v. Kansas, &c., Ry. Co., 12 Kas. 416; and see Rice v. Kansas, &c., Ry. Co., 63 Mo. 314; and Ozley v. St. Louis, &c., Ry. Co., 65 ib. 629, where, in reference to a provision that the claim for damages should be made to the general freight agent in writing "within three days" from the time the stock was unloaded, the Court said, "we are not prepared to say that the failure of the plaintiff to make this claim in the manner and within the time specified would on that account alone deprive him of his right of action." Non-delivery of the goods themselves was held not to be "loss" or "damage" within the meaning of such clauses in Porter v. Southern Express Co., 4 S. C. 135. A condition in a bill of lading that all claims for damages should be made before the article was taken away from the station was held to be reasonable, except as to latent defects, in Capehart v. Seaboard, &c., Ry. Co., 77 N. C. 315; but in a subsequent case of the same name (81 N. C. 438) a precisely similar provision was held, by the same court, to be unreasonable.

Again, it was conditioned, in Moore's case, that all goods were received subject to the company's "general lien," both for carriage thereof and all other charges against the customer; and this was argued to be unreasonable, as giving them a general instead of only a particular lien confined to the freight and charges on each particular parcel of goods. "We do not," said Fitzgerald, J., "interpret the 9th condition in that light, nor do we think it unfair, or a condition coming within the statute." The common law right is a specific lien: Butler v. Woolcott, 2 B. & P. 64; and the right to a general lien can only be supported by proof of general usage, special agreement, or mode of dealing, supporting such a claim: Rushforth v. Hadfield, 6 East. 519; Wright v. Snell, 5 B. & Ald. 350; and see Wiltshire Iron Co. v. G. W. Ry. Co., L. R. 6 Q. B. 776. Gordon v. G. W. Ry. Co. (8 Q. B. D. 44, 51 L. J. Q. B. 58, 45 L. T. N. S. 509), which seems not to have been cited in Moore's case, arose out of a detention of goods on the ground that the company had a lien which did not in fact exist, and may next be noticed.

There, it appeared that the plaintiff delivered to the defendants at W. some cattle to be carried to G., and there delivered to his agents. The cattle were consigned, and the carriage prepaid, at a reduced rate known as "owners' risk rate," to which it was a condition that the defendants should "not be liable in respect of loss or detention of, or injury to, the said animals or any of them, in the receiving, forwarding, and delivery thereof, except upon proof that such loss, detention, or injury arose from the wilful misconduct of the company or its servants." On arrival at G. the cattle were unloaded and placed in cattle-pens by the defendants' servants, but, in consequence of the clerk at W. having negligently omitted to enter the cattle on the consignment note as "carriage paid" the defendants refused to deliver them to the plaintiff until two days afterwards, alleging that the carriage had not been paid, and claiming a lien accordingly. Without actually deciding whether, under each circumstance there was evidence of "wilful misconduct" (see Goldsmith v. G. E. Ry. Co., 44 L. T. N. S. 181, commented on in 15 Ir. L. T. 381, which case was not cited), it was held that the defendants were liable, as the "detention" contemplated in the condition did not cover the case of an unjustifiable refusal to deliver at the proper time on arrival. "If it included a case like the present," said Grove, J., "the company would virtually be protected from loss however occasioned, and the condition would be highly unreasonable." There was no casual detention, no detention occasioned by some act on the part of the company's servants which had delayed the transit or delivery of the cattle, but an intentional detention of the cattle for reasons entirely without foundation, and not in the course of "delivery thereof." See further, as to delay in delivery, and warehousing of goods, 14 Ir. L. T. 245, 255; Bryant v. South Western Ry. Co., 66 Geo. (Amer.).

Brown v. The Manchester, &c., Ry. Co. (46 L. T. N. S. 390), the last of the recent cases to be here noticed, also arose in consequence of delay in delivery. The plaintiff had signed a "risk note," by which the defendants were to be free "from all liability for loss or damage by delay in transit, or from whatever other cause arising," in consideration of which the defendants agreed that the rates charged were to be "one-fifth lower than where no such undertaking is granted," freeing them from their liability as common carriers. Was this a just and reasonable condition? "Whether it is so," said Cave, J., "must depend upon what the sender gets in exchange for the liability of the company that he gives up. If, for instance, there was only one rate, and a condition that the company was not answerable at all, I should hold that it was unjust and unreasonable; but, that is not this case. Here they offered a reduction of one-fifth the ordinary rate to free the company from liability." And accordingly, as the plaintiff had an alternative open to him under which the defendants would have undertaken the carriage, at the ordinary rate, subject to all the liability of common carriers, it was held that the condition, which the sender had accepted for his own convenience and advantage, was reasonable. He "knew what the ordinary rates were," it is to be observed, as Mathew, J., remarked; but, as he mentioned, a "difficulty" had presented itself at the outset, "that the evidence did not disclose what the other rates referred to were," which, however, was removed by an admission of the counsel. And this brings us back to Moore v. G. N. Ry. Co., as to which we have to mention, in conclusion, that, it having been urged that the two alternative rates should appear in figures on the face of the contract note, whereas only the lower rate was specified, Fitzgerald, J., said: "We see no ground for this contention, and observe that the conditions refer to the company's tariff, in which all the rates to and from each particular station are specified, and which we have no doubt were well known to the plaintiff." Perhaps this is not too violent a presumption, as the plaintiff was a "professional owner of horses" (sic), and it was not the first time he had signed such contracts; but, we cannot help thinking that it would have been more satisfactory if the court had some more decisive grounds for imputing knowledge to the plaintiff, as well as of its extent and nature, especially if the English decision (reported alone in 10 Ir. L. T. 128) of Bradbury v. The G. W. Ry. Co., be correct, that, had the full parliamentary toll been in fact exacted under the quasi-lower rate, also, such conditions would offer no bond fide alternative (and see Gallagher v. G. W. Ry. Co., 8 Ir. L. T. Dig. 26.)

THE CONVEYANCING BILL.

One of the most important portions of this Bill is clause 6, which abolishes "the acknowledgment of deeds by married women under any Act of Parliament, and the examination of married women in Court or otherwise prescribed by the Settled Estates Act, 1877." It should be observed that this does not abolish the examination of married women entirely, but only that which was necessary under the Settled Estates Act, so that where the Court makes a decree or order directing payment, transfer, or application of property in respect of which a married woman has an equity to a settlement, separate examination will still be available. The married woman may also be separately examined where an application is made to deal with purchase money of real estate belonging to her. However, by clause 7, she has power to dispose of her equity to a settlement, and, with certain exceptions, her property generally, by deed made with the concurrence of her husband. The result is that the separate examination, though still existing, will seldom be used. When the concurrence of the husband cannot be obtained by reason of his insanity, &c., section 91 of the Fines and Recoveries Act is to apply, clause 7 (2), and an order of the Court can be obtained dispensing with the husband's concurrence. In such case there would even now be no need for acknowledgment: Goodchild v. Dougal, L. Rep. 3 Ch. Div. 650. It would be better to set out in the Act so much of section 91 of the Fines and Recoveries Act as may be necessary instead of incorporating it by reference, especially as this Bill repeals several sections of that Act.

The provisions with regard to copyholds are incomplete. By clause 6 (2), surrender by husband and wife of equitable estates of the wife, or of her and her husband in her right, in "copyholds" will be effectual, without separate examination, which is abolished with reference to surrenders, "but this provision does not affect the custom of any manor relative to surrender or admittance." These last words need explanation. Also customary freeholds should be expressly included. The Bill contains no definition of the word "copyhold." And why does not the Bill expressly mention legal interests in copyholds? Surely it cannot be intended to retain separate examination on their alienation by married women, nor yet to enable their disposition under clause 7 without any surrender.

Clause 7 will enable a married woman, by deed, made with the concurrence therein of the husband, to dispose of all her property and every interest therein, including equity of settlement, except (i.) property which she is restrained from affecting by alienation, anticipation, or otherwise; or (ii.) property settled on her by settlement, or agreement for settlement, made on her marriage. "Agreement for settlement" should be defined. Does it include a post-nuptial settlement made in pursuance of a previous parol agreement in cases where there has been no part performance beyond the marriage so as to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds? Such a settlement would seem to rank only as a voluntary one: Warden v. Jones, 23 Beav. 487; Trowell v. Shenton, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 369; L. Rep. 8 Ch. Div. 318. Will it include like settlements where there has been such part performance, so that the settlement is one for valuable consideration? What will happen in the case of a post-nuptial settlement made to fulfil prior representations? Doubtless, if the Bill is left in its present form, the Courts will be able to give decisions on these questions; but why should Parliament leave them open? The phrase seems to have been taken, with verbal variation, from section 4 of Malins' Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 57), as to which see Clarke v. Green, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 38; 2 H. & M. 474.

Clause 8 enables a married woman, by covenant, bond, or obligation under seal, or "other contract in writing," to bind her then present and future separate estate so as to create a debt recoverable thereout against her and her representatives taking her separate estate. This clause only applies so far as she is not restrained from anticipation. This will in part overrule Pike v. Fitzgibbon, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 562; L. Rep. 17 Ch. Div. 454; so far as it decided that a general engagement of a married woman could not be enforced against separate estate (not restrained) to which she became entitled after the time of the engagement. But is it intended to overrule the same case as to separate estate to which she was entitled at the time of the engagement subject to restraint on anticipation, but which is held free from such restraint at the time when a judgment is given in an action brought to enforce the engagement? Also, if a married woman makes an engagement, and afterwards property is given her for her separate use, it is clear that the clause will make it liable; but what will be the case if the property is given her after she has become a widow? Can it rightly be called "separate property?" And yet it seems strange if in one case the property is to be liable and not the other. This should be made clear. It should be noticed that the effect of the clause will be to make a debt payable out of future separate estate, but it will not, apparently, give the married woman the status of a debtor: Atwood v. Chester, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 48; L. Rep. 8 Q. B. Div. 722; Pike v. Fitzgibbon, ubi sup. This certainly does not seem to agree with clause 1 of the Married Women's Property Bill, which was issued in an amended form at the end of last week. The clause of the Bill before us applies to covenants implied by virtue of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. No doubt this points especially to section 7 (3) of that Act. But the first difficulty is to discover what section 7 (3) means. If husband and wife each conveys as "beneficial owner," Messrs Wolstenholme and Turner state the three following covenants will be implied: (1) by the wife, as beneficial owner, binding her separate estate (see Tullett v. Armstrong, 4 Beav. 323, per M.R.); (2) by the husband as beneficial owner; and (3) by the husband in the same terms as the covenant implied by the wife—i.e., in effect, that notwithstanding any act or default by her, or by anyone through whom she derives title otherwise than, &c. Messrs. Clarke and Brett (2nd edit. 56) suggest that a fourth covenant is implied, but we cannot concur in that view.

The result of this new clause will be to make it perfectly clear that covenant No. 1 does bind the separate estate, and to extend it to future separate estate. It does not appear that it will personally bind a married woman to execute a deed for further assurance in accordance with her covenants, only her separate estate will be liable in damages. There seems no reason why a married woman should not be called upon specifically to perform a covenant for further assurance under the same conditions as an ordinary vendor: see Sug. V. & P. 612. It makes the anomaly the greater that, under covenant No. 3, if we rightly interpret it, after the husband's death his representatives may be liable for the consequences of the wife's refusal to perform her covenant, while she, if she has no "separate estate," will escape. This surely is capable of remedy. We may remind our readers that the Married Woman's Property Bill, which is also on its way through Parliament, and is undergoing alterations, affects in an important way some of the clauses of this Bill. We shall discuss these in a future article, but meanwhile we must express an earnest hope that the various changes taking place in that Bill will be carefully considered in relation to the clauses affecting married women in the Bill before us.—Law Times.

COUNTER-CLAIM ON COUNTER-CLAIM.

A main portion of the science of procedure resolves itself into the problem where to draw the line. A proceeding may seem from many points of view to be reasonable and just, and yet it may not be permissible as a rule of procedure, which must be governed by rules at once the strictest, and framed according to the most general considerations. We are inclined to think that the necessity for drawing the line so as to run in a manner most convenient to the average of cases has not been sufficiently dwelt upon in the decision of Toke v. Andrews, reported in the May number of the Law Journal Reports. The action was for rent due at Midsummer, 1861. The writ was issued on August 26, the statement of claim delivered on November 29, and the statement of defence on December 22. The tenancy subsisted until Michaelmas Day, and the defendant alleged that he was entitled to an outgoing valuation, which he accordingly claimed by way of counter-claim, although it had accrued since the issuing of the writ. On the same day, however, the plaintiff would be entitled to another instalment of rent. He accordingly proceeded to claim this sum by means of a counter-claim to the defendant's counter-claim—a new and hitherto unheard-of proceeding, which, however, has now received the sanction of Mr. Justice Field and Baron Huddleston. If this decision be right, there is no end to the vitality of an action under reasonably favourable circumstances. There is, let us suppose, a twenty-one years' lease subsisting between plaintiff as landlord and defendant as tenant, who is sued for his first quarter's rent. The defendant sets up a counter-claim that the plaintiff covenanted to put a new roof on the house. The plaintiff does not deliver his reply until a second quarter's rent is due, when he counter-claims in respect of that amount. By the time the defendant delivers his rejoinder a fresh grievance of his is ripe, possibly that the plaintiff undertook to paint in the first six months. The action is now ready for trial; but before it is reached another quarter-day passes, and the plaintiff adds a fresh counter-claim. It will go hard if the defendant does not cap the effort, and if, under the rather exasperating circumstances of the case, the monotony of the proceedings is not relieved by a counter-claim or two for assault and battery, to which possibly the wife of one or other of the parties is made third party. There is, in fact, no reason why the litigation should not go on for one-and-twenty years, and such time afterwards as judges and jurymen can be made to understand the case.

This picture may seem extravagant. It is enough if it is a possible picture, unless some limit be placed on the right to counter-claim. The decision in Toke v. Andrews allows an unlimited right to counter-claim in either plaintiff or defendant. With this must be contrasted the decision of the Master of the Rolls in The Original Hartlepool Company v. Gibb, 46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 811, which drew so strict a limit to counter-claims as to exclude damages suffered by a defendant since the date of the writ. On the general principle we prefer the decision of the Master of the Rolls to the present; that is, so far as the Master of the Rolls held that a limit must exist. We, on a previous occasion, expressed disapproval of the actual limit placed by the learned judge. His mistake, which is now generally admitted, proceeded apparently from a want of experience in cases in which damages were claimed, the Master of the Rolls being under the impression that damages since the date of the writ could not be recovered by a plaintiff, and, therefore, holding that they could not be recovered by a defendant on a counter-claim. Mr. Justice Fry, in Beddall v. Maitland, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 401, declined to follow the Master of the Rolls, and held that a cause of action arising since the writ may be the subject of counter-claim. These two cases are far from standing and falling together. It does not follow, because damages since the writ may be recovered on a counter-claim, that a cause of action arising since the writ may be the subject of a counter-claim. The state of facts which arose in Toke v. Andrews, in so far as they throw light on Beddall v. Maitland, tend rather to throw doubt on the principle there laid down. The defendant's counter-claim in Toke v. Andrews arose since the date of the writ, and the plaintiff's counter-claim arose at exactly the same date. To allow the defendant to set up this cause of action, and to shut the plaintiff out of a cause of action arising at the same time, has the appearance of inequality. It may well be said that, in order to prevent a confused pile of counter-claims, the line ought to be drawn at the date of the writ. We do not think this is necessarily so, because the Judicature Acts speak of a counter-claim as a cross-action; and, if the plaintiff is so backward in pressing forward his claim as to give time for a counter-claim to issue against him, he has only himself to blame. The proposition at present in question is, whether the plaintiff can be allowed a counter-claim.

The foundation of the law of counter-claims is to be found in sub-section 3 of section 24 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and in Order XIX., Rule 3. Neither in the Act nor in the rule is to be found anything to suggest that a counter-claim is an instrument which may be used by a plaintiff against a defendant. The Act refers to relief being given by this means "to any defendant against any plaintiff," and the rule refers to "the defendant setting up claims against the claim of the plaintiff." Order XX. provides for pleading puis darrein continuance, but applies only to "grounds of defence," between which and counter-claims a broad distinction is drawn. There can be little doubt that the draftsmen of the Acts and Rules had in their minds only causes of action accrued at the time of the issuing of the writ, but it is still possible that room may be left for claims accruing since. If this be so, the question arises whether such a claim accruing to the plaintiff can be introduced by way of counter-claim, or whether it should not be made by way of amendment? It seems to have been assumed, in Toke v. Andrews, that the writ could not be amended so as to allow the rent accruing subsequently to be claimed. But is this clear?

The date of the writ must, of course, remain as originally given; but there seems no reason why it should not be stated that by amendment dated subsequently a further claim was added. If the true reading of the rules is that subsequent claims by a plaintiff may be introduced by amendment of the writ, there is a substantial difference between the right practice and that laid down in Toke v. Andrews. Under Order XXVII, Rule 11, an order must be obtained to amend the writ, whereas Toke v. Andrews permits a plaintiff to counter-claim as a matter of right. It must be remembered that a plaintiff, by issuing his writ, elects to sue on the causes of action then existing. If there are other causes of action in prospect, he has only to wait, when he can combine both. The whole subject, especially considering the view taken by the Master of the Rolls, requires investigation before the Court of Appeal, which was invited by Mr. Justice Fry in the case before him, and is more than ever necessary since Toke v. Andrews. As the law at present stands interpreted, the pleadings in the action seem capable of becoming very inconvenient and perplexing in their character, and extending to a length compared with which a sutreibutter was a moderate limit.—Law Journal.

"OFFICIAL" REPORTS.

In our review of recent English decisions in the present number we are able, for the first time, by reason of having reviewed the Law Reports up to date, to turn to the Law Journal Reports, and notice those cases of important application which have not as yet appeared in the former Reports. Our present issue reviews the cases in the January and February numbers of the Law Journal Reports; and it will be a surprise to many, probably, to find that there are so many cases of considerable importance which have appeared there so long ago as January or February, but which have not as yet been reported in the official Reports. This would not be a matter of surprise if these were decisions of the various Divisional Courts merely, for it might then be supposed that they were standing for appeal, and that the editors of the Law Reports were waiting, so as to carry out their very convenient practice of reporting at the same time the decisions of the Court a quo with the decisions in the Court of Appeal; but it will be found that several of the cases we review in this number are cases in the Court of Appeal.—Canada Law Journal.

INDEXING AND DIGESTING.

The following observations (which the Central Law Journal quotes from a London contemporary) may be read in connexion with our own remarks on the subject, 18 Ir. L. T. 79:—

"Some discussion has recently taken place in the American legal journals on the subject of legal digesting and indexing, and we think that attention might not unprofitably be turned to this subject in England. As regards digests, it appears to us that the Law Reports some time ago introduced a completely erroneous principle. The digests issued from time to time by the other current series of reports have always proceeded on the plan of selecting, wherever it is possible, broad general headings, grouping under sub-headings the cases falling under these general headings, and inserting for the cases falling under these general headings, and for others which do not come within them, cross-references under so many of the titles as are necessary to secure that no one looks in vain for any point in the digest. The digest published by the Law Reports in 1870 introduced a new principle of arrangement. There is not a single case given under most of the general headings, but only a series of references to other places. Thus, to take one of the best known headings, "Landlord and Tenant," there are about a hundred references to other parts of the digest, including eleven relating to distress—as, for instance, "Distress by opening a window which is shut but not fastened.—See Entry by opening window."

As there happens to be no such heading in the digest as "Entry by opening window," this is embarrassing; but, even when such mistakes do not occur, consider the trouble and annoyance which this mode of arrangement occasions to the practitioner who wants to run his eye over all the recent cases relating to distress. Consider, also, the difficulty occasioned to persons who cannot remember or guess the minutiae of a case sufficiently to look for it at once under the word which relates to a small detail. And again, consider the labour thus occasioned to anyone who wants to note up his text-books on particular subjects. We refer to this matter now because in the Consolidated Digest recently issued by the Council of Law Reporting we observe with satisfaction that this absurd principle has been departed from to a considerable extent. We have now, under the heading of "Landlord and Tenant," fifteen sub-headings, comprising the most important branches, and with the cases arranged under each sub-heading. These are followed by cross-references to miscellaneous points relating to the subject. We hope this is an indication that the evil experiment has been abandoned, and that we are now to return to the old and convenient principle. As regards indexes to law books, we have come across many quærit instances illustrating the practice of their preparation without any definite principle. We could point to a work which has a general heading in the index "New," followed by sub-heads such as "Trial," and to another book in the index to which there is first a general heading "Judge," with a sub-heading "Single;" followed by another general heading "Judges, and see Judge." And there is another legal work which has a heading "Vermin—see Hunting and Trespassing," which reminds us of the heading in the index to the North Carolina Statutes, "Stud-horses—see Religious Societies."

THE PREVENTION OF CRIME BILL.

Whatever arguments may be urged against the alleged severity of the Bill for the prevention of crime in Ireland, it is an undeniable fact that its most stringent provisions are for the most part in substance mere reproductions of earlier legislation. The clause directed against "unlawful associations" is, for example, founded on the Westmeath Act of 1871 (64 Vict., c. 25), and its enactments against the Ribbon Society. So also the power of arresting strangers found in proclaimed districts under suspicious circumstances is to be found both in the Act of 1868 (8 & 4 Will. 4. c. 4) and in the Peace Preservation Act of 1870 (38 Vict., c. 9). In the latter Act, again, are to be found precedents for the power of arresting persons out of their homes at night, the seizure of seditious newspapers, the power of summoning persons suspected of being able to give evidence of an offence where no individual is charged with it, and the right of apprehending absconding witnesses. The revival of the Alien Act speaks for itself. Finally, the payment of compensation for personal injuries by the district in which they were perpetrated is also recognised by the Act of 1870, but is there made assessable by the grand jury of the county instead of by the Lord Lieutenant as in the present Bill.

In one section of the Bill there occurs a word which, as far as we know, is almost unknown to the English language. It is provided that any charge for additional constabulary or compensation shall be "applotted" rateably upon all rateable hereditaments in the district. On reference to the dictionaries we have been able to discover two passages in which the word is used, and, oddly enough, both of these relate to Ireland. One is from the articles of peace with the Irish rebels in 1448: "They shall have power to applot, raise, and levy means with indifferency and equality, for the buying of arms and ammunition. . . . They shall be authorised to appoint receivers . . . for such money as shall be assessed, taxed, or applotted." The other passage is from articles of peace between the Roman Catholics and the Lord Lieutenant in 1648: "His Majesty is graciously pleased that in the directions which shall issue to any such county for the apportioning, sub-dividing, and levying of the said public assessments," &c. It is remarkable that, although he cites this last passage, Richardson defines the term as meaning "to scheme, to contrive, to plan." Latham, on the other hand, gives the obviously correct rendering, "to effect by assessment, apportionment, or allotment."—Law Times.

LADY LAWYERS.

The Massachusetts Legislature have enacted that women may practice as attorneys-at-law, subject to the ordinary rules of admission. We are inclined to think this is right. It is difficult to see why men should adjudge that women shall be excluded from any lawful occupation. Exclusion of either sex on ground of policy, such as want of education, experience or capacity, is defensible in respect to many classes whose occupations intrinsically concern the lives or property of the community, such as physicians, apothecaries, lawyers, pilots, engineers, and the like; but exclusion on account of sex or colour is indefensible on philosophical or political grounds. A woman has just as good a natural right to earn her living as a lawyer as she has to earn her living as a teacher, editor, lecturer, painter, actor, or singer, or in the domestic vocations. The question is entirely distinct from that of her right to vote or sit on juries or hold office. Nothing but a childish jealousy has thus far debarred women from access to our profession. Very few probably will ever enter it. Of those who enter it few probably will make a shining success, partly from want of native aptitude, partly from want of public confidence. Women are better adapted to divinity, medicine, and especially to teaching, than to the law, but they have a right to try the law. It is high time that men divested themselves of the foolish notion of their native superiority to women—a notion that leads some communities to enact that they have a sovereign and exclusive right to commit adultery. The question is not so much of superiority as of difference. Man is not physically superior to woman because he can chop wood or play ball better; as a wet-nurse he would make a mortifying failure, and a woman can bear the toothache a great deal better. In intellectual matters they stand about equal in the schools where they taught together, the advantage if any being on the side of the girls. It is perhaps only in intellectual endurance that men surpass women, and this fact will always render man the stronger in the law. But we know a great many pitifully poor he-lawyers. On the whole, we should like to see the learned professions thrown open to women. If any woman wants to be a lawyer, we cannot see why she should not be; and if any man or woman wants to employ a woman-lawyer, we cannot see why the privilege should not be granted.—Albany Law Journal.

CERTIFICATES FOR TOWN AND COUNTRY.

The case of Re Horton, reported in the May number of the Law Journal Reports, deals with a subject upon which there is some difference of opinion between country and town solicitors, and which was incidentally involved in the recent action against the law stationers. It was adverted to in an article on "Solicitors and Law Stationers," on April 1 last; and, now that a decision is reported, it deserves fuller treatment. Readers of the case must, however, be prepared for a disappointment, because, in fact, it decides little more than the case in hand, and does not supply a test for a difficulty much needing solution. Mr. Horton, a solicitor, had a bill of costs of his in an action taxed by a client named Brown under an order. Brown was represented at the taxation, which took place at the Royal Courts, by Messrs. Huggins & Mallard, solicitors, of Birmingham. The bill was cut down considerably, and the costs of the taxation became payable by Mr. Horton. The bill of Messrs. Huggins & Mallard was, however, objected to by Mr. Horton on the ground that those gentlemen had only country certificates, whereas by attending the taxation at the Royal Courts they had practised in London. If this contention were well founded, Messrs. Huggins & Mallard could not recover the costs in question, because, by section 59 of the Stamp Act, 1870, every person who "acts or practises" as a solicitor, without a duly stamped certificate, is declared "incapable of maintaining any action or suit for the recovery of any fee, reward, or disbursement, on account of, or in relation to, any act or proceeding done or taken by him in such capacity." The schedule of the Act imposes a duty of £9 "if such person practises or carries on his business in England within ten miles from the General Post Office," and £6 if "beyond the above mentioned limits." Had Messrs. Huggins & Mallard practised or carried on their business "at the Royal Courts by attending the taxation? Mr. Justice Field decides that they had not, because the words "acts or practises" in the penal clause, and "practises or carries on business," point to a distinction in the case of a person who has no certificate at all, and a person who has a country certificate. The word "acts" occurs in the penal clause but not in the schedule, thus apparently showing that one "act" by an uncertificated person is penal; but there must be a "practising" in London by a person with a certificate of the limited kind.

This seems to be the true reading of the judgments of Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Cave; otherwise, if acting and practising are the same, it would be necessary to show several acts before a totally uncertificated person could be convicted. The statute 23 & 24 Vic., c. 127, s. 19, appears to have been referred to in the argument; but it was unfortunately not dealt with by the judges, who did not hear Messrs. Huggins & Mallard's counsel. It provides that "for determining the rate of stamp duty payable on the certificate, the place or places where the attorney or solicitor carries on his business shall be deemed to be the place or places of his residence within the meaning of the Acts relating to stamp duties on certificates." The Stamp Act was passed since this Act; but it did not repeal the section in question, and the Solicitors Act, 1877, while it repealed a portion of the section, left the words quoted standing. It would thus seem that the Legislature intended "residence" in London or in the country, to be the test of the amount of the duty. The Stamp Act, 1870, it is true, besides the words "carrying on business," uses the word "practise," which latter word is not defined by section 19 of the Solicitors Act, 1877; but the declaration which solicitors have to make, given in the schedule to the Solicitors Act, 1877, uses the words "carry on business" only; thus assuming that practising and carrying on business are one and the same thing, as, in point of language, they would seem to be. It is disappointing that the effect of these provisions should not have been examined, when the question was so neatly raised as in Re Horton. The anxiety of judges to shorten arguments by not hearing counsel on both sides, and otherwise, is laudable from some points of view; but, while it saves time at the moment, it not infrequently prolongs litigation by leaving the decision incomplete. If the Court had decided that residence was the test, solicitors would have little difficulty in guiding their conduct. Residence, of course, does not mean merely the place where the solicitor lives. If a solicitor has offices in London, and also twenty miles off, where he lives, he would still have to take out a London certificate. But to satisfy the test of residence, he must, we think, at least have an office or place of call in London. As the case stands, there is some doubt whether practising in London may not be something different from residing. The judges decide that one visit to the central office is not practising in London. But how many visits would constitute practising? If this is the test, one professional act may safely be done in London by a solicitor with a country certificate, but not two. The inconvenience of such a state of the law is a further argument why the simpler criterion of residence was intended to be adopted. It may be said that if residence be the only test, a solicitor might have his office just outside the ten miles from the Post Office, take the train, and do business all day long at the Central Office, Bedford-row, and the City. The answer to this is that the line must be drawn somewhere; and a solicitor who has no office or address within ten miles of the Post Office cannot in any fair sense be said to be practising in London, although he may on occasion issue a writ or attend a trial within the radius. We believe residence to be the test; but we should have been glad of the decision of the Court one way or the other. At present, the learned judges, while deciding the not very disputable question that one taxation does not make a practice, have inadvertently missed the real point of the matter.—Law Journal.

CIVIL BILL APPEALS.

At the meeting of the Statistical and Social Inquiry Society of Ireland, on the 23rd instant, a paper was read by Mr. THOMAS LODDELL O'SHAUGHNESSY, Barrister-at-Law, making the following "Suggestions for the Amendment of the Law relating to Civil Bill Appeals."

There can be little doubt, whatever may have been the object of those who devised the trial of small causes by assistant barristers at quarter sessions, the idea was suggested by the ancient and popular practice, which prevailed in the last century, of judges of assize hearing small cases by civil bill. The best part of a century has passed over since the establishment of the quarter sessions court, and during that period their jurisdiction has grown by legislative shreds and patches until, with few exceptions, they now possess a limited jurisdiction in almost every class of litigation. The procedure as originally devised was and has remained simple, the expense small; and these elements, with the natural desire of the inhabitants of this part of the United Kingdom for cheap litigation, bid fair to give the courts a practical monopoly of what constitutes the great bulk of litigation—small causes. The office machinery was quite adequate for the class of cases determined on in these courts before 1870: they were ordinary landlord and tenant ejectments, the most usual classes of torts and contracts, appeals from petty sessions, and business of a kindred class. The chairman was almost always a practising barrister of position, the sessions never lasted longer than the fixed period in each term, a week or less, and from 500 to 600 cases were got through in the week, and for the most part fairly and well decided. Since 1870 the Legislature, having regard to the popularity of the courts, arising in a great measure from the reasons before mentioned, has by a series of enactments conferred a more important and extensive jurisdiction on them—remitted causes, title to corporeal or incorporeal property, and rights where the annual rating of the lands is disputed, or out of which the right is claimed, does not exceed £30; an equity jurisdiction as large as the English county courts; claims under the Employers' Liability Act; land claims; and lastly, the fixing of fair rents between landlord and tenant. Whilst so largely increasing the jurisdiction, the efficiency of the courts has been materially diminished, not only by reason of the increase, but in addition, by the attempt to apply the old procedure devised for the simplest of cases, to the determination of rights often of an exceedingly complex and difficult character. These difficulties have been enhanced by depriving the court of the benefit of chairmen who are practising barristers, thereby getting inferior men, by attempting, without any substantial increase of staff, to work the increased business arising from the new jurisdiction; and, lastly, by substantially applying to judgments on new and important rights the same cumbrous mode of appealing as theretofore existed in common law cases, and by the invention of a mode of appealing in equity cases, consisting of an imperfect copy of all the vices of the very unsatisfactory system prevailing in England.

I propose to discuss a remedy for the latter, and to suggest one or two heads of equity jurisdiction ancillary to that now possessed, which ought to be conferred on the court.

The office machinery as it at present exists in equity cases is incapable of improvement, and save in the counties of Armagh and Antrim, where the clerk of the Crown in the former, and the registrar, in the latter, are gentlemen of exceptional ability and industry, the most monstrous delay, expense, and injustice is the result. The judges are in no fault—they cannot take accounts, settle conditions of sale, and perform all the mass of office work of an administration suit; if they did so the ordinary business could not be got through. Those alone are to blame who in extending a useful measure, stopped short at a most vital point of the English Act, namely, its well-regulated equity office machinery, with a result that their reform is impaired, that suits drag on for years, and usually only terminate in an enforced compromise.

That a cheap and simple mode of appealing should exist from a court so constituted as the civil bill courts are, no one would have the temerity to deny. The present mode consists of the ordinary common law appeal and the equity appeal. The former to the judge of assize, the latter to the Lord Chancellor. An appeal lies in the former from a decree, whether in favour or adverse to a party, from a dismissal on merits; but no appeal lies from a dismissal without prejudice, from an order striking out the case with costs, from an adjudication in an interpleader, under the 150th section of the Civil Bill Act—the procedure is during the hearing of civil bills at the sessions in which the judgment has been pronounced and after it has been written out by the opposite parties' solicitor, and signed by the judge, any of the parties in the case before mentioned may—by lodging double the costs according to a scale provided, and entering into a recognisance in double the amount decreed and costs, or without costs as the case may be, with two sureties—appeal to the judges. On the mere statement it would naturally occur to an intelligent person such a system is unfit for the present day. I will now proceed to point out a few glaring anomalies that I have known to result from it:—The appeal can only be taken when the decree or dismissal is signed; persons have been kept for a whole session, day after day waiting for the opposite solicitor to hand in decree, and I have made applications for the purpose of compelling it to be handed in; the double costs must be lodged and were formally a forfeit, and even now in many counties are still so; the party appealing must get sureties, even the lodgment of the money is not sufficient; if the case be amongst the last heard an adjournment of the sessions has to be applied for to the following day in order to take appeal—in fact, in reference to cases heard on the last day, if the party does not come prepared with sureties, even though he is prepared to lodge the money, he loses his right of appeal, and, with few exceptions, slight facilities are given by chairmen for taking appeals. Only one who has attended a sessions in a small town can realise the difficulty of getting sureties, or a stamped appeal bond; I remember an appeal for this reason on one occasion being taken on two civil bill processes, and I know that the decree was reversed. In remitted cases any amount may now be given, the plaintiff is necessarily a pauper, and if a decree for £500 is given, no surety can be got, and a man may be ruined at the suit of a pauper. The £50 decree is a mode of stopping an appeal, to get two sureties for £100, and lodge £10 or £11 costs is a very serious matter, and in many instances large decrees are given for that very purpose; in this respect a course similar to that in existence before the Act of 1877 now prevails. Until the recent alteration in the law, the favourite mode of stopping an appeal by a plaintiff was to give a decree for a farthing—he could not appeal and the suit was thereby determined. I remember this course being adopted in a case I was counsel in. An action for assault was brought against a policeman of a very gross and aggravated character, the chairman gave a decree for a halfpenny, and although urgently pressed to give a dismiss in order to enable an appeal to be brought he declined to do so. The same result is now produced by the large decrees, or by pronouncing a dismiss without prejudice, or an order striking out the case with costs; from the first mentioned, an appeal is so clogged with conditions that practically it is useless, and from the last it does not exist.

The instances of hardship and inconvenience might be multiplied, but I have confined myself to those within my own knowledge. The present procedure encourages useless appeals in small cases; it is easy to appeal in a £1 or up to a £5 decree; the parties are hot in the controversy, for it is during the sessions, and enter recklessly into further litigation; nothing else can account for the number of small appeals which are withdrawn, and the number which are heard.

Having pointed out many of the defects in the common law appeals, permit me to adopt a similar course (based in like manner on personal knowledge) in equity appeals: the procedure is within one month, £10 is lodged with the clerk of the peace, the judge's note and registrar's note, which is usually the name of the case, are obtained, and a notice of appeal served on the opposite party; this with the notes is lodged within the like period with the chancellor's secretary, and the appeal on the notes comes on to be heard, perhaps at end of three, more likely six months.

The first objection to this system is the hearing the case on notes, it is equivalent to the old plan of affidavit in chancery which has been condemned on every side. The case often depends on complicated facts, the attempt to unravel the truth from affidavits has always been a failure, and how it is supposed it could succeed in this I am at a loss to conceive. In addition, it is with great difficulty many county court judges are got to take anything like a full note, and it is often with greater difficulty they are obtained from them. I remember being present at the hearing of an equity case and advising that the decree was wrong when the notes were afterwards procured; the entire evidence on which I based my opinion was absent, I do not say nor believe wilfully, but because of the hurry that must exist in hearing of these cases at sessions. A case came before Lord Chancellor Ball on appeal, and it was a matter of notoriety at the time that the county court judge's notes were impugned, and affidavits were filed by the solicitor, stating that a material portion of them was false; the Lord Chancellor acted on the affidavits. I refrain from stating the name of the case or chairman, because I have not personal knowledge of the facts, but I was put in possession of them by a professional gentleman of unimpeachable veracity. Such a case demonstrates that the present system is open to gross abuse. One more illustration: an equity suit, the commonest of all, by one of several next of kin to administer assets was dismissed on a wholly unsustainable objection, an appeal taken, it was six months before the dismiss was reversed, and then the judge who heard the appeal could make no order except remit it back to the chairman, in the meantime the administrator had sold a considerable quantity of the assets, thereby reducing the security of the share of the next of kin. The system is radically bad, it is open to every possible objection, it is most expensive, it is very tardy; the same security must be given in the smallest legacy case as in one involving £500—showing of course that in the small case it is too large, in the large too small.

No more complete remedy could be devised than the Bill brought in by Mr. Findlater, and now before the House of Commons. It proposes to repeal all the appeal sections of the County Court Acts, and to give an appeal from every adjudication, whether legal or equitable, to the judge of assize, provided notice of appeal be given within four days after the close of the sessions; and it further gives a stay of execution only in case the amount decreed be lodged, or costs, as case may be, or sufficient security entered into within a like period, thus simplifying the procedure, allowing time for consideration before bringing an appeal, and enabling in equity cases the judge to hear the witnesses and judge of the facts from them—at once putting an end to every difficulty in the way of testing the validity of a decision, and as far as possible preserving a similitude to the mode of appeal in use in the superior courts since the Judicature Acts.

Under the present system the court has no power to administer assets at the suit of an executor or administrator, nor has it power to set aside fraudulent deeds or bills of sale at the suit of creditors, to attach debts, or to make its judgments available against the lands of debtors; provisions giving such a jurisdiction would be useful, and attendant with considerable benefit.

COUNTY COURT AMENDMENT BILL.

A Bill to amend the Acts relating to the County Courts in Ireland, and to make better provision for Appeals under the said Acts.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the law and procedure regulating appeals from county courts in Ireland: Be it enacted, &c.

This Act shall extend to Ireland only.

This Act may be cited as the County Court Amendment Act (Ireland), 1882.

The terms "county court judge," "clerk of the peace," "civil bill court," "county," and "borough," in this Act shall have the same meaning as is provided by the 40 & 41 Vict. c. 56.

1. Any person dissatisfied with any decree, dismiss, or order, whether adverse to him or in his favour, pronounced by any county court judge, in the exercise by him of any jurisdiction at law or in equity under the several Acts conferring jurisdiction on county or civil bill courts in Ireland, may, in manner herein provided, appeal therefrom to the judge of assize for the respective counties in which such decree, dismiss, or order shall have been made or pronounced; and such judge of assize is hereby empowered and required to hear such cause, suit, or matter, and to make such decree or order thereon, and issue such execution in all respects as is empowered by the several statutes in that behalf by the said county court judges to be awarded, and the said judge of assize may upon any such appeal adjourn or remit, the cause, suit, or matter back to the county court judge with such declarations or directions as he shall think proper, and may upon said appeal make such order with reference to the costs thereof as he shall think fit.

2. Every appeal under this Act shall be by notice signed by the party appealing or his solicitor in the form or to the like effect in the schedule to this Act annexed. Such notice shall be served within four clear days from the close of the sitting of the county court for the hearing of civil bills at which the decree or adjudication appealed from shall have been made, and shall be to the next assizes to be held after the said period. Service of such notice shall be effected on the opposing party or his solicitor personally, or by leaving same at their or either of their residences with a clerk, servant, wife, or child, or other person therein over the age of sixteen years; and proof of such service shall be by affidavit made before any justice of the peace, which he is hereby empowered to take, or before the clerk of the peace; and on such proof being given the clerk of the peace shall enter the same for hearing before the judge of assize, and such entry shall be prima facie proof of due service thereof before such judge of assize.

3. A notice of appeal shall be a stay of execution, provided a recognisance conditioned to pay the sum recovered and costs, or costs awarded in case no sum is recovered if a defendant appealing, or to pay the costs awarded where the appellant was a plaintiff in the county court, or to pay the costs of the appeal in case the adjudication appealed from was in favour of the party appealing, be entered into with sufficient sureties within the said period of four clear days before the clerk of the peace or any justice of the peace of the county, or in case the party appealing desire to dispense with a recognisance by lodgment within the like period of the amount of said sums respectively with the clerk of the peace, who shall retain the same and dispose thereof as he shall be directed by the judge of assize; and in case of an appeal under Part II. of the County Court Officers and Courts (Ireland) Act, 1877, where any act shall be ordered to be done other than the payment of a sum of money, then on entering into the like recognisance as aforesaid with the additional condition to abide any order that may be made by the judge of assize in reference to any such act; and the recognisance herein provided may be in the Form 31, Schedule C. of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 57., or to the like effect, and with such variation as is by this Act provided; and the reception of such recognisance by the clerk of the peace shall be conclusive evidence that the several provisions herein enacted in reference thereto have been complied with, and in case any such recognisance shall have been taken by any justice of the peace, the same shall be returned to the clerk of the peace within two days after same shall have been taken or acknowledged.

4. In case any decree, dismissal, or adjudication, notwithstanding notice of appeal and of the entry into such recognisance or of the making of such lodgment as is herein provided, shall be executed, the party so executing the same or continuing in possession of any goods thereafter shall be deemed to be a trespasser, and may be proceeded against accordingly.

5. From and after the passing of this Act sections 127, 129, and 130 of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 57., and of sections 43 and 45 of the 40 & 41 Vict. c. 56., are hereby repealed, and the following sections, namely, sections 128, 133 to 137, both inclusive, of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 57., shall be deemed to be and are hereby re-enacted; and it is hereby further enacted that every decree, dismissal, or adjudication made under section 150 of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 57. may be appealed from as in this Act provided.

6. Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to include any appeal brought under the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1870, or the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, and appeals thereunder shall be brought in manner and to the court provided by the 47th section of the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Morgan's Chancery Acts (6th Edition), 190.

Where a person had assigned a policy of assurance on his life and died intestate, in an action to recover the policy-moneys, held that this was a proper case for the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction to dispense with the presence of a legal personal representative of the assured (Curtius v. Caledonian Fire and Life Insurance Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 80)—C. A.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 426. Wilson on the Judicature Acts (2nd Edition), 469.

In taxing the costs of an interlocutory application, the costs of copies of pleadings necessary for the application were disallowed by the master on the ground of a general rule that costs of pleadings were only allowed on the hearing. Held that the general rule was wrong, it being the duty of the taxing-master to consider what is necessary for the attainment of justice in each particular case (Warner v. Moses, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 89)—C. A.

Bills of Sale Act, 1878, s. 3. Wilson on Bills of Sale (2nd Edition), 54.

The consideration for a bill of sale was stated to be "£50 paid at or immediately before the execution thereof." Only £21 10s. was actually paid, £25 being retained to meet the rent of the grantor's house not then due, and not paid till afterwards, and £3 10s. for costs of registration and preparation of the bill of sale. Held that the consideration was not truly stated under section 8 (In re Spindler, ex parte Rolph, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 88)—C. A.

Theobald on Wills (2nd Edition), 252.

Under a gift to "second cousins" by a testator, who had none either at the date of his will, or of his death, or during his lifetime, first cousins once removed were held entitled [Bentham v. Wilson, 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 587—on appeal, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 629—noted L. J. 1881, p. 402, distinguished] (In re Bonner, Tucker v. Good, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 83).

PROCRASTINATED LITIGATION.

Probably few cases of modern times have reached the acme of vicissitude and delay attained by the action of Neill v. The Duke of Devonshire, now in the course of hearing before the House of Lords. The dispute arises out of a claim to a right of fishery in the county of Cork, and is said to have been constantly before the courts of Ireland for the last thirteen years. The proceedings commenced in 1869 in the form of an action for trespass, which after a trial of more than a fortnight ended in a verdict for the defendants. A similar result attended another action four years later. Next, an order having been granted for a new trial, the jury disagreed. The following year a verdict was obtained by the Duke, but was subsequently set aside. Then came another trial, at which the jury again disagreed; then a seventh hearing, which ended in favour of the Duke. Shortly afterwards application was made to the Divisional Court for a new trial, but was refused, and the refusal was subsequently affirmed by the Court of Appeal by a majority of two judges to one. The further appeal from this judgment is now before the House of Lords. If the decision is upheld the litigation will of course be concluded, but, if otherwise, the whole matter will be reopened for another indefinite period. Admitting the dispute to be intricate and voluminous to the last degree—the muniments of title, we believe, extend over six centuries and a half—the possibility of justice being so procrastinated betokens the hardly disputable fact that our judicial system is still far—very far—from absolute perfection.—Law Times.

REVIEWS.

David MacBrayne's Official Guide. Summer Tours in Scotland: Glasgow to the Highlands. 1882.

To those who meditate taking a trip to the Scottish Highlands this season we strongly offer the advice, to provide themselves beforehand with a copy of Mr. MacBrayne's Official Guide Book, "Glasgow to the Highlands," which can be procured for 8d., and an Illustrated Edition for 6d. It contains in the fullest form the particulars of the "Royal Route" (via Crinan and Caledonian Canals); the Time Tables and List of Fares by the R. M. Steamers Columba, Ionas, &c., &c.—which number in all a fleet of twenty-four steamers; Lists of Daily and Weekly Circular Tours; and a List of Calling Places, with Hotels. The Guide Book, and all further information can be obtained at Messrs. Carson Bros., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. Wm. Neilson Hancock, LL.D., Q.C., Keeper of the Land Commission Records, has been appointed Clerk of the Crown and Hanaper.

They had a good deal of trouble in a Montreal court the other day, trying to swear in a Chinaman. He said he "believed" in anything; "that he no swaeres at alle;" and he didn't swear on a saucer. When asked if he was a Buddhist, he answered: "Me no knowee what you say. What you talkee about?" In reply to the question, "What religion do you belong to?" he said, "State of Ohio," and was finally sworn by crossing his hands on his heart.—Montreal Witness.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Partition Act, 1868 and 1876; a Manual of the Law and Practice of Partition and of Sale in lieu of Partition; with the Decided Cases, and an Appendix containing Judgments and Orders. Second Edition, enlarged. By W. GREGORY WALKER, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, &c. London: Stevens & Haynes, Law Publishers, Bell-yard, Temple Bar. 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—M. McGarry, to confirm sale.—G. Le Hunte, payment.

IN COURT.—Administrator S. Gillman, from 18th May.—G. B. Low, from 17th May.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

R. L. Watson, rental.—M. Linsame, do.—Trustee A. Blake, vouch.

FRIDAY.

SALMS IN COURT.

J. M. WALKER, . . . . . 1 lot.
TRUSTEES W. SOULLY, . . . . . 2 lots.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

W. Deane, rental.—H. Leader, do.—M. Handley, vouch.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—M. Bouska, confirm sale.—J. Ronayne, do.—F. Graham, do.

IN COURT.—C. M. Gowan, final schedule.—T. Ryan, do.—D. P. McCarthy, do.—T. Barkle, from 18th.—O. Burns, do.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

A. D. Browne, rental.—T. Manley, do.—Devisee Levey, do.—J. Ramsay, do.—C. E. Bell, vouch.—T. Colclough, ditto.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.
Fenton, J. Cunliffe, of Fermoy, in the county of Cork, a Lieutenant in Her Majesty's 1st (The Royal Scots) Regiment. May 9; Friday, June 9, and Tuesday, June 27. Henry Greens Kelly, solr.
Fitzpatrick, Denis, of 53, Francis-street, in the city of Dublin, boot and shoemaker. May 16; Friday, June 9, and Tuesday, June 27. Cronhelm & Tobias, solrs.
O'Shaughnessy, Margaret Josephine, of Dangan House, Galway, at present residing at No. 26, Aynhoe-road, West, Kensington Park, in the county of Middlesex, widow. April 25; Tuesday, June 6, and Friday, June 23. Thomas Geoghagan & Sons, solrs.
Steell, Thomas, and David Steell, both of Vulcan Foundry, in the city of Cork, iron foundry, trading as "John Steell and Sons," May 9; Tuesday, June 6, and Friday, June 23. Thomas Gerrard, solr.
Wisheart, Bernard, of No. 1, Duke-street, in the city of Dublin, and No. 3, Fortfield-terrace, Rathmines, in the county of Dublin, stationer. May 16; Friday, June 9, and Tuesday, June 27. Bouchier Eaton, solr.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	MAY
	Sat. 20	Mon. 22	Tues. 23	Wed. 24	Thur. 25	Fri. 26
Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	101	101½	101½	101½	101½	101½
— New 3 p c Stock ..	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1888 } Treas. at ..	104½	104½	—	104½	—	104½
2½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	101½	—	—	—	—	101½
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	319½	—	319½	—	—	320
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	29
20 London and County (Lid.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and W'minster, Ltd ..	70½	71	—	—	—	71
10 Do. New ..	—	—	61½	—	—	—
3½ Minster Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	7½
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	24	—
10 National of Liverpool (Lid.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	53	—	—	—	52½	53½
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	—	—	29½	—
25 Standard of B. S. A., Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	57
Mines.
4½ Berghaven (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
1 Killaloe Slate Co. (Ltd) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (Ltd) ..	—	—	—	—	—	2½
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons. Gas ..	—	—	15	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 National Discount, Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 National Assurance ..	—	—	—	—	—	57
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Edinburgh Street Trams ..	—	—	—	14½	14½	—
10 L'pl Un'd Trm &amp; Bus Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Leeds Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
10 Athenry and Tuam ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and Northern Cos. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Dublin, Wicklow, &amp; W'ford ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	119½	119½
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	—	—	—	112	112
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	—	83	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	82
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	101½	—	—
100 Do., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	122	—
100 Gt. Nth'n (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	107½	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 4 p c ..	—	107½	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	122½
Leased at Fixed Rentals.
100 Dublin and Kingsdown ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	104½
— C'fergus and Larne 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	105½
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	105½	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Kilkenny Junction, A. 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterford &amp; Central 5 p c ..	108	—	—	—	—	—
— Water'd &amp; Limerick 4 p c ..	104½	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
— Alliance &amp; Cons. Gas, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Belfast Office Deb., 5 p c 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dub. &amp; Glas. S. P. Co. (1887) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— (1888) Rathm. &amp; Pom. M. Drain, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	103

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d
Bank Rate—Of Discount—6 per cent., 30th January, 1882.
Of Deposit—3 per cent., 30th January, 1882.
Name Days—June 13th and 29th, 1882.
Account Days—June 14th and 29th, 1882.
Business commences at 1 30 p.m.
HOLIDAY.—The Stock Exchange and Brokers' Offices will be closed on Monday, 29th inst.

Holloway's Pills.—Easy Digestion—These admirable Pills cannot be too highly appreciated for the wholesome power they exert over all disorders of the stomach, liver, bowels, and kidneys. They instantaneously relieve and steadily work out a thorough cure, and in its course dispel headache, biliousness, flatulence, and depression of spirits. It is wonderful to watch the daily improvement of the complexion, as Holloway's Pills purify the blood, and restore plumpness to the face which had lost both flesh and colour. These Pills combine every excellence desirable in a domestic remedy. The most certain and beneficial results flow from the occasional use of this regulating medicine; even persons in health, or when following sedentary occupations, will find it an invaluable aperient.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.*MARRIAGES.

HINDE and WHITE—May 20, at St. Peter's Church, Dublin, by the Rev. J. B. Shields, A.M., Assistant-Chaplain Christ Church, Leeson Park, George Langford Hinde, Esq., Brigade Surgeon Army Medical Department, to Frances Mary Crawford, youngest daughter of Thos. J. White, Esq., barrister-at-law, of Grosvenor-road, Rathgar.

DEATHS.

MOORE—May 22, at his residence, Mountjoy-square, suddenly, James Hamilton Moore, solicitor, eldest surviving son of the late Hugh Moore, of Dromont, County Tyrone, aged 62 years.

O'MEAGHER—May 20, at Wellington-quay, Upper Leeson-street, in his 80th year, Joseph O'Meagher, solicitor, formerly of Beaumont, Tullow, County Carlow.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET.

s-7

PUBLIC NOTICES:

BILLIARD BALLS, CHALKS, CUES, and TIPS, and all other Billiard Table requisites, at HENNIG BROS. Ivory Works, 11, High-street, London, W.C. Also the cheapest house in the trade for Ivory Hair-brushes, Mirrors, and all other Ivory Toilet articles and Ivory Goods in general. Old Balls adjusted or exchanged, and Tables re-covered. Price Lists, Cloth, and Cushion Rubber Samples Post Free.—Established 1862. 26

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO., the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.
Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 118 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewart & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

ROBERT WHYTE,

Ladies' & Gentlemen's  Boot & Shoe Manufacturer,

1, NORTH FREDERICK-STREET

(Rutland-square),

ESTABLISHED OVER HALF A CENTURY.

Boots made for Weak Ankles, Deformed Feet, and Surgical purposes of every description.

All Work executed on the Premises under my personal superintendence.

None but first-class Workmen employed in either Making or Repairing.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PERRY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 18r

PUBLIC NOTICES:*SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS,
(Royal Route VIA Orinam and Caledonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Lochawe, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Stornoway, &c. Official Guide, 3d.; Illustrated, 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Fares free, at CARSON BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post from the owner, DAVID MACBRAYNE, 119 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 97b

EVERY MAN WHO SMOKES
Should invest 24 stamps for the
NEW PERFECTED

The Best

Selected Briars

only.

JENINGS & CO., Inventors, 97, NEWGATE-STREET.
The most Perfect Pipe invented since Smoking began.
Prospectus Free. 61

D. W. CARROLL,
D. 44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,

Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges.
Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge. 72

IRISH LAW TIMES.

WANTED the following Numbers, for which full price will be given:—53, 54, 56, 68, 104, 112, 117, 208, 210.
Apply—53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO., LIMITED.
SECURITY, &c.
RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—
39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 51

NEW FORMS UNDER THE LAND ACT.

FORM

- |   |           |
|---|-----------|
| 67. Fee-farm Grant from Landlord to Tenant . . . . .  | 3d. each. |
| 68. Mortgage from Tenant to Landlord, to secure one-fourth, or other balance, of Purchase Money . . . . . | 3d. „     |
| 69. Reference to Valuer to be named by Land Commission . . . . .  | 1d. „     |
| 70. Special Report of Valuer . . . . .  | 1d. „     |

JOHN FALCONER, 53 UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

Printed and Published by the Proprietor, JOHN FALCONER, every Saturday, at 53, Upper Sackville-street, in the Parish of St. Thomas and City of Dublin.—Saturday, May 27, 1882.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1882.

No. 801

NOTICES OF INJURY, UNDER THE EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT, 1880.

THE service of a notice of injury is rendered a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, by virtue of the provisions of section 4, while the mode of service and the particulars to be contained in the notice are prescribed by section 7, which further declares that the notice is not to be deemed invalid by reason of any defect or inaccuracy therein unless it was for the purpose of misleading, and the defendant was thereby prejudiced in his defence. Those enactments have been construed in several cases by the English county court judges, and have recently formed the subject of three superior court decisions, which it is our present purpose to collate.

In the first of those cases (Moyle v. Jenkins, 8 Q. B. D. 116) it was held that the notice must be a written one, although, as had been argued, there could be no reason for so requiring where the employer may have either witnessed the accident or, as the fact was, arrived on the spot immediately afterwards, and had assisted and given money to the plaintiff, thereby acknowledging his liability, and though it was argued that this amounted to a waiver of the requirement of a written notice a nonsuit in the county court, by reason of its absence, was sustained. So, we may add, it has been held that the notice of distress required under 2 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 2, must be in writing: Wilson v. Nightingale, 8 Q. B. 1034. But, as to waiver, it seems to us that it would be hard to reconcile the county court cases of Macay v. Hodson (72 L. T. 140) and Wallace v. St. Helens Coll. Co. (71 ib. 416) with Moyle v. Jenkins; et cf., under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, Kemp v. S. E. Ry. Co., L. R. 7 Ch. App. 364; R. v. Com. of S. H. Drainage, 8 A. & E. 429. As regards the necessity for writing, Moyle v. Jenkins was subsequently approved by the Court of Appeal in Keen v. The Milwall Dock Co., reported in the May number of the Law Journal, Q. B. 277 (s. c. 8 Q. B. D. 482). There, it appeared that the plaintiff, a workman, was injured by an accident while in the employ of the defendants. He at once told an inspector of the defendants the circumstances of the accident, and the inspector made a written report to one of their superintendents. The plaintiff's solicitor wrote to the defendants themselves within a week, asking for compensation, mentioning that their superintendent already knew the particulars, but not referring in terms to the inspector's written report. It was held that the Act was not complied with, as the written report containing the particulars was not incorporated by reference in the solicitor's letter, and no other written notice had been given to the defendants within the time limited. There was a variance of opinion as to what would have been the effect if the letter had referred in terms to the inspector's report to the superintendent. Lord Coleridge, C.J., thought that this would not have sufficed, as, from his point of view, the statute described a notice one and single, delivered at one and the same time, containing in it at one and the same time all the incidents which the statute has made a condition precedent to the right to maintain an action. Brett, L.J., agreed that, as a rule, the notice should be one notice, but was not prepared to say that the fact of its being contained in two documents would be fatal to it, and that it would be more than an inaccuracy which could be remedied. "Suppose," he observed, "that the injured person were to write a letter containing the particulars of the injury received, but omitting his name and address, and were then to write a second letter containing the name and address, I am not prepared now to say that the second letter, if sent in time, and if it referred to the first letter, could not be taken so to incorporate the first letter as to cure the inaccuracy of the first notice, and thus render it a valid notice." And the late Lord Justice Holker said: "I should require further consideration before I could say that a notice under this statute cannot be a good notice because it is contained on more than one piece of paper. I am not prepared to say that there might not be cases in which a man injured away from home might not send an account of his injuries to a friend, which, when sent in to the employer with a letter giving his name and address, might not be held to constitute, when read together, a good notice within the statute."

"It seems to me," said Brett, L.J., in the case last cited, "that a notice may avail although there be some defect in it—if, for instance, it should not name the day, or if the cause of the injury be inaccurately described—in the one case there would be a defect, in the other there would be an inaccuracy in the notice—and yet that defect or that inaccuracy could be supplied, and the notice would not necessarily be invalid." Stone v. Hyde (46 L. T. N. S. 421), subsequently decided, was a case on this subject. There the notice given to the employer omitted to state the cause of the injury, and the plaintiff was nonsuited accordingly in the county court, the judge holding that this was not such a defect or inaccuracy as could be amended, and further (without taking any evidence), that, if it could be so regarded, it was such as would prejudice the defendant in his defence, and must have been made for the purpose of misleading. Mathew and Cave, J.J., however, were of opinion that the notice was not a mere nullity, but a defective notice which might be amended, while the county court judge should not have regarded its prejudicing and being intended to mislead the defendant as a mere legal inference, without examining into the circumstances and finding his conclusion as a matter of fact. Some correspondents, writing in the last issue of the Law Times, look on this case as seeming to be in conflict with Keen v. Milwall Dock Co. (ubi supra). We fail to perceive any conflict with that case; but, it does seem inconsistent with the county court cases of Franks v. Silver & Co. (reported in the same issue), and Farley v. Clemson (71 L. T. 267).

The next case to be adverted to, Adams v. Nightingale, has not yet found its way into any of the Reports, but has been noted in 17 L. J. 199. It came before the Queen's Bench Division on appeal from the Southwark county court, where the plaintiff had been nonsuited. The county court judge stated that the matter of law involved in the first question he had decided was, "whether the 'delivering a notice at the residence or place of business of the person on whom it is to be served,' as required by section 7 of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, means simply delivering the notice to any person (whether an infant or not), or leaving the same at such residence or place in any manner whatever; or whether it means delivering it to some person, or leaving it at such residence or place in such a manner that it might be reasonably presumed that it would come safely into the hands of the person to whom it was addressed; and upon such matter of law I was of opinion that the meaning of the section was that the notice should be delivered to some person, or left at such residence or place in such a manner that it might be reasonably presumed that it would come safely into the hands of the person to whom it was addressed. The matter of fact involved in such first question was in my opinion whether the delivery of the notice to a child, and the leaving of the notice at the defendant's premises, as proved by the witness Livisey, was delivering or leaving it in such a manner that it could be reasonably presumed that it would come safely to the hands of the defendant, and I was of opinion that it was not, inasmuch as the notice so delivered and left was liable to be removed and hidden or destroyed intentionally or unintentionally by a human or brute being, or by mere accident (as by a gust of wind), and so prevented from ever coming to the defendant's knowledge; and in point of fact there was no evidence that the notice had come to the knowledge of the defendant, but strong evidence to the contrary. That the second question raised by the defendant's counsel at the trial was, in my opinion, one of law only—viz., whether the defendant's knowledge of the injury suffered by the plaintiff within six weeks cured any informality with regard to the notice required by section 7 of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880; and I was of opinion that it did not cure any informality with regard to such notice, or, at all events, that it did not cure the insufficiency of the service of such notice in the present case, inasmuch as there was no provision to that effect in the Employers' Liability Act, 1880." Grove, J., and Huddleston, B., held (April 5, 1882) "that the nonsuit was right, and that a notice under the Act must be delivered in such a manner that it is reasonable to expect that it will come to the defendant's knowledge in the ordinary course of business; and dismissed the appeal, with costs." In the county court case of Faul v. Fletcher & Co. (71 L. T. 84) it was held that registration of the letter with the notice was unnecessary, where the defendants had admitted its receipt.

"It was clearly intended by the legislature that the notice should be one which a working man or his friend could frame without professional advice," as was remarked by the county court judge in Wall v. Burnyeat, Brown & Co. (17 L. J. 139; and see 14 Ir. L. T. 588); and, on the whole, the decisions that have taken place seem calculated to carry out this object, and to divest this requirement, as far as possible, of all technical difficulties. Yet, it must be confessed that it still interposes sometimes a rather too serious impediment to the remedy of admitted wrongs. "I know of a case," writes a correspondent in the Morning News (Belfast) of the 22nd ult., "where a man met with a serious accident, and, although not just at the time in danger of his life, the doctor in whose charge he was would not allow him to be disturbed, as it might occasion a relapse. Consequently, this person lost all benefit under the Act. He will never be able to work. Again, a boy had his two legs broken in the yard of a respectable shipbuilding firm in town. His father employed a solicitor, and got a notice drawn up. Before it was served the father went to the firm, who promised the boy would not want. When three months were up the money stopped, and the notice not being served nothing could be done." In the same paper we observe, by the way, an able judgment delivered by Mr. Otway, Q.C., in a case under the Act (Macaulay v. Greeves, which we intend to report), but, as it does not touch on the specific matter here discussed, it need not be further noticed at present; and see, as to transfer of actions from the county courts, and their jurisdiction as to damages, Magee v. Martin, 16 Ir. L. T. Rep. 5.

THE NEW LAW LORD.

It has been said that the severest test which can be applied to a man, almost in all the relations of life, is to place him on the judicial bench. But, while various and great are the endowments needed to stand that test, illustrious indeed must be the character rendered pre-eminent by their possession when the temple of justice is served, as now, by so many an exemplary

"priest of Law,
To pour the oracles by Law inspir'd."

The Right Hon. John David Fitzgerald, whose selection from the ranks of the English and Irish judiciary to occupy the high position of Lord of Appeal in Ordinary induces those reflections, belongs to a well-known Roman Catholic family, other members of which have of late years attained to distinction. He was born in 1816, and was educated in the University of Dublin, where he took the degree of LL.D. In Easter Term, 1838, he was called to the Bar, and joined the Munster Circuit. He took silk in 1847, and, on the retirement of Mr. Jonathan Henn, became the acknowledged leader of his circuit. In 1852 he entered Parliament as member for the borough of Ennis, which constituency he continued to represent until 1860. It will be remembered that, on the introduction of the Prevention of Crime Bill, last month, Mr. Healy, M.P., presumed to refer to him as "a man for whom the people of Ireland spilt their blood in the county of Clare twenty years ago," which evoked a written reply from the learned judge, who said:—"I was member for Ennis up to 1860, and had been six times returned to Parliament for that borough, but at none of my elections was there any bloodshed, or any riot or disorder of any kind. Thirty years since, at the election for the county of Clare, Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Fitzgerald (late Field-Marshal) was one of the candidates, and a serious affray took place at Sixmilebridge between the military and the people, in which several lives were unhappily lost. That calamity had no connexion whatever with any election of mine, and at the time of its occurrence I was busily engaged at the Cork assizes. I was summoned from thence by my own constituents to come to Clare, and, as a J.P. for that county, to assist in the investigation then about to take place. I came and assisted, and such was my only connexion with that lamentable tragedy." It may be added that, besides being a J.P. for the county Clare, he holds the commission of the peace for the county Dublin. He had entered Parliament as what was known in those days as a staunch Liberal—that is to say, in favour of reform, vote by ballot, abolition of church-rates, and, more important still, in favour of tenant-right. And without sacrificing any of those opinions, he took office as Solicitor-General for Ireland under Lord Palmerston's administration, in February, 1855, being subsequently appointed Attorney-General, 1856, which office he held till February, 1858, and again from 1859 to 1860. While he held this position the Court of Appeal in Chancery was created under an Act which he prepared and passed, but he relinquished his claim to the office of Lord Justice at the request of the Government; and on a similar request, he waived his right in relation to two vacancies in the Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, one of which was filled by the late Mr. Justice O'Brien, and the other by Mr. Justice (afterwards Lord Justice) Christian. In 1859, Mr. Justice Crampton consented to resign, and Mr. Fitzgerald (still Attorney-General) consented to continue in office. But before a successor could be appointed to Mr. Crampton, there was a change of Government, and the late Mr. Justice Hayes was appointed. He adopted the same course again in 1859, and at the like instance, a vacancy having occurred in the Court of Exchequer by the retirement of Baron Richards, to which the late Baron Hughes was appointed. At last, on the resignation of Mr. Justice Perrin in 1860, he was appointed a puisne judge of the Queen's Bench, and since then none of the Irish Judges have worked harder or more continuously. In such test cases, evoking strong passions on either side, especially in Ireland, as election petitions, Bible-burnings, Phoenix or Fenian conspiracies, &c., by the common consent of the Bar and the public, he has never swerved from the strict line of duty, and his utterances from the bench have been at all times calm, temperate, dignified, and impartial. Perhaps the most striking tribute to his fitness for high judicial office is afforded by the fact that more than one Government, Liberal or Conservative, when the office of Chief Justice or Master of the Rolls fell vacant, seriously balanced the question whether, for once, the paramount claim to immediate promotion of the Law Officer of the day might not be waived in favour of Mr. Justice Fitzgerald. But, popular as he has ever been, it is not to be wondered at that even he did not escape being made the recipient of a threatening letter; and it only served to give another opportunity for the display of that scrupulous fairness and consideration by which his judicial bearing has always been characterised, for, on the occasion in question, it will be remembered how he suppressed all mention of the threat addressed to him when taking his seat upon the bench, and only read the letter after the prisoner had been acquitted of the crime of violence of which he was accused. During his tenure of office as judge of the Queen's Bench, in which his special abilities and experience will now be sadly missed, he has been selected and named on almost every Special Commission that has been issued, including those for the trial of the Fenian prisoners at Dublin in 1865-6, at Cork in 1866, and again at Dublin in 1867-8. In January last year, he too it was who presided at the trial of The Queen v. Parnell and Others. In 1855 he had been elected a Bencher of the King's Inns, and in the following year was appointed a member of the Privy Council in Ireland. It only remains to notice, among his other public services, that he is a Commissioner of National Education in Ireland, of Charitable Donations and Bequests, and of Endowed Schools; while he is, also, a Governor of the Royal Hibernian Military School, and Visitor of the Queen's Colleges. He married first, in 1846, Rose, second daughter of the late John O'Donohoe, Esq., of Fitzwilliam-square, Dublin; and second, in 1860, the Hon. Jane Southwell, sister of the fourth Viscount Southwell.

Lords of Appeal in Ordinary were created under the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, for the purpose of aiding the House of Lords. Two were to be appointed, at a salary of £6,000 a year, and entitled to a retiring pension after fifteen years service (in which serving as a judge of the Queen's Bench would be computed). Every Lord of Appeal in Ordinary is entitled during his life to rank as a Baron by such style as her Majesty may be pleased to appoint, and while in office, but no longer, is entitled to sit and vote in the House of Lords. His dignity as a Lord of Parliament, however, is not to descend to his heirs. "If a Privy Councillor," he is also to be a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; but the Act contemplated the gradual extinction of paid members of that Committee, and authorised the substitution of a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary for every two of such members as might die or resign. Sir James Colville having died, and Sir Montague Smith retired, Mr. Justice Fitzgerald now succeeds to the vacancy, and becomes a peer of the realm. His duties, however, are likely to be somewhat different from those originally assigned to Lords of Appeal, for a new measure is being introduced by Lord Selborne, enabling both the Law Lords and the members of the Judicial Committee (now including every Lord Justice who is a Privy Councillor: 44 Vic., c. 3) to assist at any time in the intermediate Court of Appeal; and under this condition we presume the new appointment has been made. Certainly, we doubt whether such an arrangement will prove conducive to the dignity of the Law Lords; and we trust it may not be made the stepping stone to further encroachments and innovations. To Ireland and Scotland is due the preservation of the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords, such as it is; but, what will become of its distinctiveness, if the judges of the three principal appellate tribunals in England are to be interchangeable at pleasure? Yet, never can we cease to cherish the traditional respect that has always attended the judicial administration of the House of Lords, while it continues to be adorned by such judges as the new Law Lord.

CONVEYANCING BILL.

[CONCLUDED.]

After the clauses relating to married women, we arrive at clause 9, which makes a power of attorney, given for valuable consideration, absolutely irrevocable, if in the instrument creating the power, it is expressed to be so. This, however, only applies in favour of a "purchaser," which, by clause 1 (4), includes lessee, mortgagee, "or other person who for valuable consideration takes or deals for property." Neither the death, marriage, lunacy, or bankruptcy of the donor of the power, or any act on his part without the concurrence of the donee of the power, will affect it, even though the donee of the power and purchaser have express notice of such death, &c., or of the attempted revocation by the donor. The next following clause makes similar provisions for a power of attorney limited for a fixed time not exceeding one year from the date of the instrument creating it, whether given for valuable consideration or not. These clauses were contained in the Bill which became the Conveyancing Act, 1881, in a rather different form (Wolst. & T. 223; Rubenstein, 3rd ed., App. p. v.); and they should be read in connexion with ss. 46, 47 of the Conveyancing Act. The object of the clauses is to facilitate transfer by removing difficulties attending sales conducted under powers of attorney.

In the first place, we must call attention to the word "instrument" used in these clauses. It is not defined in this Bill. In the Conveyancing Act it includes a will (sect. 2, xiii.). An "instrument" need not be a deed. But a power of attorney must be given by deed (David i. 475; Co. Litt. 52a), so that it would be better to substitute the word "deed" for "instrument."

A more important question is raised by a correspondent in our columns some weeks ago (Law Times, March 11, 1882, page 339). Mr. S. H. King points out with considerable force that a purchaser of property might find after completion that the estate had been conveyed to someone else, by virtue of a power of attorney made before his purchase. We think that, if the Bill passes in its present form, and is construed literally, it would seem that a sale by the donee of the power would prevail even over a prior sale of the owner, and notwithstanding both donee of the power and his purchaser had notice of such prior sale. Of course, on any purchase, the purchaser runs a slight risk of finding that the vendor has sold and conveyed previously, but the possession of the title deeds by the vendor is generally sufficient guarantee against this. But there is no provision in the Bill that the title deeds shall be handed to the donee of the power of attorney, or that the power shall, in register counties, be put upon the local register.

Moreover, a power of attorney may be given over after-acquired property. It would therefore seem that this Bill will afford a convenient mode of charging such property. In Tadman v. D'Epineuil (decisions not yet reported, Law Times, May 6, page 8) it was held that a charge by A. on all his present and future personalty, to secure to B. any sum he might owe him when B. should choose to enforce the charge, was invalid as to property acquired by B. after the date of the charge. Is it intended that such a charge should be made by power of attorney giving a power to sell, and to apply the proceeds in discharge of the debt? Mr. S. H. King also points out that the provision enabling powers of attorney to be acted on after the death of the donor of the power would enable powers of attorney to be given under which the whole of the property of a deceased might be realised, and, if the donee of the power was willing to incur the risk of distributing the money, and no administration to the deceased's effects were taken out, the revenue might be defrauded. We trust the attention of the Chancellor of the Exchequer may be given to this.

We can suggest some safeguards against the evils which we have pointed out. The Conveyancing Act, 1880, sect. 48, gives power to register powers of attorney. Make the provisions of the present Bill apply to registered powers of attorney only; and let the official conclusive searches, which clause 3 of this Bill provides, include a search for powers of attorney. Let it be incumbent, under a penalty, for the donee of any registered power of attorney to give notice to the officials of the death of the donor, so soon as he shall be aware of it. The register will afford to the revenue officers a means of occasional detection in case a donee neglects to give the prescribed notice, so that the penalty can be enforced.

Clause 11 of the Bill contains a restriction on executory limitations with respect to land. The word "land" is not defined in the Bill, although it is in the Conveyancing Act (s. 2, ii.), so that it must bear the meaning given in Lord Brougham's Act (13 & 14 Vict., c. 21), s. 4. This clause has undergone considerable alteration: (see Wolst. & T. 224.) In its earlier form it spoke of "a tenant in fee simple;" now it is more general, and relates to a person "entitled to land." It should be stated whether by "entitled" the ownership in fee simple is intended.

The object of clauses 12 and 13 is to give one name to the Inclosure, Copyhold, and Tithe Commissioners, and to enlarge their powers. These two sections apply to Scotland, a fact which ought to have been noticed upon the memorandum preceding the Bill, as the Conveyancing Act which this purports to amend does not extend to that country (sect. 1, 3).

Clause 14 amends the "long term" sect. 65 of the Conveyancing Act. As it is retrospective, practitioners should even now carefully peruse it before enlarging any long term. But it most certainly needs amendment, for as it stands at present it invalidates certain deeds extending terms by virtue of the Act. So that the owner of the term may have enlarged it into a fee simple, and done certain acts which would create a forfeiture had it been leasehold. If, then, by this clause it is declared that sect. 65 never applied to such a long term, forfeiture would seem to ensue. Another inconvenience is, that a will may have been made when such a term had become fee simple, devising all the testator's freehold estates. Really it would be too bad to pass an Act in 1881 enabling the conversion of leaseholds into freeholds, and then in 1882 to pass another declaring that that Act never did apply in certain cases. Retrospective legislation is usually objectionable, and this is no exception to the rule.—Law Times.

THE IRISH BENCH.

Lord Redesdale, who was Lord Chancellor of Ireland at the beginning of this century, once said that there existed in Ireland two sorts of justice—the one for the rich and the other for the poor, and both equally ill-administered. But the time has long gone by when such an accusation could be levelled with any truth at the Irish judicial bench; and the Irish judges of the present day, for impartiality, common sense, and legal acumen, need fear no comparison with our own. Mr. Sexton's complaints against the political subserviency of the Irish Bench and Bar have been made over and over again by Irishmen outside the lines of promotion; but at no time with less excuse than now. It stands to reason that the Irish Bar must continue (like our own) to be divided into two hostile camps as long as the ermine remains practically in the gift of the Minister of the day. To the Irishman, indeed, who under the best of circumstances can never now expect to make a fortune at the bar, a judgeship is a far more tempting bait than to the Englishman, who often suffers a pecuniary loss by the exchange. But a glance at the English judicial Bench will show that the reward of political service has had much to do with its constitution too; and if the presence of old political partisans is more conspicuous on the Irish than on the English Bench, it is easily explained by the fact that in Ireland there are only about a third as many judgeships to give away, and one more law officer—the "Castle" adviser—to provide for. With the exception of Lord Chief Justice May the chiefs of all the Irish Courts are all Liberals, promoted presumably for political services in Parliament. The Lord Chancellor, Mr. Law, was only the other day the Attorney-General for Ireland; while Chief Baron Palles, Baron Dowse, and Mr. Justice J. D. Fitzgerald, have all filled with distinction (the latter twice) the same office.—St. James's Gazette.

CONTRACTING OUT OF THE EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT.

In the Dudley County Court a decision was given, on May 16, in an action in which the widow of an under sinker, named Griffiths, sued the Earl of Dudley for £150, the estimated amount of three years' earnings by her husband. Shortly stated, the circumstances of the case are these: The deceased was at work, with a master sinker named Gould, in making "manholes" or places of refuge, in the pumping shaft of Lord Dudley's No. 2 pits, Himley Colliery, on November 19 last. They had fired a shot for the purpose of an excavation, and had given the signal to ascend to the pit bank, when, at the critical moment, the indicator of the engine failed to act, and the men were drawn up close to the pulley, but not over it. Gould, the head sinker, clung to the pit frame and was saved; the deceased, in an effort for life, tried to jump from the "bowk" to the pit's bank, in essaying which he fell down the shaft and was killed. The case came before Sir Rupert Kettle, at the Dudley County Court, on March 24 last, when it was urged on the part of Lord Dudley that the deceased had accepted the "conditions of employment" in force at his lordship's collieries, and had thus contracted himself out of the Act. Sir Rupert Kettle, who reserved his decision at the time in view of the importance of the case, now delivered judgment. He awarded the widow the full amount claimed, as he held that no man had a right or legal power to bind his representatives by contracting himself out of the Act. The learned judge agreed to stay execution, pending an appeal to a higher Court. On the 26th ult. the Queen's Bench Division granted a rule nisi to enter a nonsuit.

REPORTS AND REPORTERS.

Reports are the first endeavour of traditional law to become written. With all respect to those persons who have discovered in the present confused state of the law a virtue which they call elasticity, the period during which the law is extracted from reports is only a transitional period. So long as there was no authority higher than the judge's own conscience and knowledge to which to appeal, the law was oral and really in the judge's breast. So soon, however, as the binding force of a decision of another judge recorded in a notebook came to be recognised as an authority to which the judge must bow, the law became partially written. When the authority of a reported decision first became thoroughly recognised, the first step towards a code was taken. To the extent to which decisions were reported, the law was then already written. So soon as decisions regarding all branches of the law were reported, the whole law became written, and a code became a mere matter of form and labour. The last remnant of the struggle between a genuinely traditional and a written law is to be found in the attacks which the judges, from time to time, made on the reporters. We do not think there is a single reporter, however eminent, against whom some judicial criticism, unfavourable to his accuracy, has not been passed. Too much attention ought not to be given to these reflections, which are sometimes petulant and often hasty. A judge who wishes to decide a point of law in a particular way, is hard pressed in argument by a decision in the opposite direction. Like the old instructions to counsel, "No case; abuse the plaintiff's attorney," there is nothing for it but to impugn the accuracy of the reporter. Judgments on reporters arrived at under this pressure thereupon become traditional, and, to some extent, the judges recover their right to extract the law from their own breasts; and the old theory of an oral law regains ground to the extent to which the authority of written decisions is impugned. At the present day, judges complain little that their decisions are misreported. The practice of writing judgments in important cases is commonly followed. The complaint is rather that cases are not reported than that they are wrongly reported. When much labour on the bench and at the bar have been spent on a case, it seems a waste that the result should go unrecorded. But the reporter's duty is merely to fill up gaps in the existing series of decisions. Clauses in a code are not written twice over, neither ought the reports to be encumbered with a decision "already in the books." The common law has long arrived at a condition when it is ripe for codification. The vast majority of cases now reported are merely on the meaning of statutes; and when a code is completed, the reporter's duty will be simply to record decisions on the meaning of the code.—Law Journal.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—XVI.

(Continued from page 231, ante.)

SETTLEMENT UPON MARRIAGE OF FREEHOLDS IN FEE SIMPLE WITH USUAL CLAUSES.

Introductory.

Settlements of land as realty are among the most lengthy documents which the conveyancer has to prepare. They can, however, be considerably abbreviated by reliance upon the recent Act. The sections of the Conveyancing Act which more or less bear upon settlements of this description are very numerous. We shall also have occasion to mention, in connexion with this subject, Lord Cranworth's Act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 145) and the Settled Estates Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 18). Forms of settlement previous to the recent Act will be found in Bythewood, vii. 399; David, iii. 982; and since the Act in Cono. David. 387; Frid. ii. 802.

The Grant, General Words, All Estate Clause, Habendum.

The form given in the schedule to the Act runs thus: "This indenture made, &c., between &c., witnesseth, that in consideration of the intended marriage between John M. and Jane S., John M. as settlor hereby conveys to X. and Y. all that [&c.] to hold to X. and Y. in fee simple to the use of John M. in fee simple until the marriage, and after the marriage to the use of John M.

during his life, &c." The word "convey" is introduced on account of sect. 49. It is sometimes convenient to use it when it is intended to assign leaseholds also, as the word "convey" is applicable both to freeholds and leaseholds: (see sect. 2 (v.) and Wolst. & T. 76). But in the case before us we see no particular reason for discarding the old word "grant." However, it does not in the least signify which is used. The words "in fee simple" are substituted for the usual words of limitation, "and his heirs," by virtue of sect. 51.

It is no doubt much more intelligible to the non-legal reader, when it is intended to vest the absolute ownership in land in a person (as far as such absolute ownership can be vested in a subject), to give it to him "in fee simple," instead of granting it "to him and his heirs." But in a settlement of this sort, where the fee simple estates given are very far removed from absolute ownership, we think the use of the phrase is likely to be still more confusing than the old legal expression "and his heirs." But again it does not matter which phrase is used. We should, however, be inclined to add, in the clause which conveys the property to "X. and Y.," the words "in fee simple," or "and their heirs," according to the form which it is intended to use in the Habendum. No doubt the limitation of the fee simple in the Habendum explains or "cures" the omission of words of limitation in the granting or conveying part. The two must be read and construed together. Still we certainly prefer the practice which has hitherto usually obtained.

The "general words" and "all estate clause," may be omitted in reliance upon sects. 6, 63: (Law Times, Jan. 7, page 167). Where brevity is much desired the settlor may be stated to convey "as settlor," and then the limited covenant for further assurance will be implied, and no covenants for title need be inserted; but we decidedly prefer not to insert the words "as settlor," and to add the usual covenant for further assurance in its proper place: (see Law Times, April 22, page 434).

The Preliminary Limitations.

The limitation to the use of the settlor in fee until marriage will be inserted as usual, and also the limitation to the husband for life, if the property to be settled is his, or given by his family.

Wife's Jointure Rentcharge.—Sect. 44.

The usual mode of securing the wife's jointure is to limit the estate, to the use that if she should survive her husband she and her assigns should thenceforth receive, during her life, the yearly rentcharge of £ in full for her jointure and in bar of all dower and free bench to be charged upon the premises expressed to be granted, payable quarterly, the first payment to be made at the end of three calendar months after the death of the husband if the wife is then living: (Bythewood, vii. 405; David, iii. 984; for forms since the Act see Cono. David. 388; Frid. ii. 808).

By the 5th section of the Statute of Uses this will vest in the wife a legal rentcharge: (Sanders on Uses, i. 75, 108; David, iii. 310).

There is no need of any apportionment clause, as, if the wife dies between any of the quarter days, the apportioned part will clearly be payable for the benefit of her estate: (33 & 34 Vict. c. 35, s. 2; David, iii. 311).

The forms previous to the Conveyancing Act gave to the jointress remedies by distress and entry, which were also limited by way of use and executed by the Statute of Uses—i.e., they were transferred to her by virtue of that statute.

A power of distress was annexed to rents by 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, but nevertheless it was usual to expressly limit it. The right of entry arose only when expressly given. But sect. 44 of the Conveyancing Act annexes powers both of distress and entry to a rentcharge of this description. It must, however, be expressly stated that it is an annual rentcharge, although it may be payable half-yearly or otherwise, sect. 44 (1).

It was formerly usual further to secure the wife's jointure by limiting a term to trustees (Bythewood vii 414; David. iii. 986, 988), but more recently it has been very usual, instead of actually limiting a term, to give the jointress and her representatives, within a specified time after her death, power to limit a term: (David. iii. 320; for form see Ibid. 1074). The Act, by sub-sect. (4) follows the more recent practice, and enables "the person entitled to the annual charge," by deed, to demise the land charged to a trustee for a term of years on trusts for raising the rentcharge and all expenses.

It should be noticed that these powers of distress and entry and of demising are given to "the person entitled to receive the annual sum," and to "the person entitled to the annual charge." No express mention is made either of the assigns, or of personal representatives, of the person originally entitled, but they seem clearly to be included in the phrases used in the statute. The result is, that neither powers of distress or entry, nor the limitation to trustees to secure the jointure, nor the power to limit a term to trustees for that purpose, are now necessary in a settlement. It may, however, be convenient to declare that the representatives of the jointress shall not have power after one year has expired since her death to limit a term; and also to declare that in any case no term longer than 299 years shall be limited. The object of this last clause is to prevent the acquisition of such a "long term" as may be enlarged into a fee simple under sect. 65, as to which see below. The following form is suggested: "And it is hereby declared that the term of years which may be limited under sub-sect. 4 of sect. 44 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, to secure the said jointure rentcharge shall not exceed 299 years, and further that it shall not be lawful to limit any term under the said sub-section after more than one year has elapsed from the death of the said [jointress]."

Portions' Term.

It is usual next to limit a term of several hundred years to the trustees. Later on in the settlement the trusts of this term are declared to be to raise specified sums of money as portions for the younger children of the marriage. For form of limitation see David. iii. 986, and for form of trust, Ibid. 988; for the law connected with the subject see Ibid. 405-465, and Lewin, 6th edit. 340. The trusts may be slightly shortened, but the limitation of the term will be inserted as usual, except that it may be considered well not to limit a term for more than 299 years. This will be quite long enough, and it will prevent the trustees from enlarging the term into a fee simple under sect 65. It seems that, if the term was for 300 years, the trustees could, after entering into the receipt of the income sect. 65 (2) (ii), so enlarge the term. As the ordinary form of settlement declares a trust of any surplus moneys raised under the powers connected with the term, in favour of the person for the time being entitled in reversion, the eldest son (tenant in tail) would be protected as regards the income, sect. 64 (4), but complications might arise as to his estate.

Limitations in Tail.—Sect. 51.

The words "in tail male" may be substituted for "and the heirs male of their respective bodies." The limitation will thus run:

"To the use of the first and every other son of the said A. B. by the said C. D. successively in remainder one after another, according to their respective seniorities, in tail male;" (Conc. David. 388).

The other limitations will follow in like manner. As to cross-remainders, they should be limited in the usual way, except that the phrase "in tail" may be used. See Law Times, April 8, p. 401.

Ultimate Limitation.

This will be in fee simple. If the previous estates have been limited by means of the words "in tail," the connecting words formerly employed, "and in default of such issue," will be inapplicable. This limitation will therefore run: "With the remainder to the use of the said A. B. in fee simple," or "of the said A. B., his heirs and assigns, for ever."

Trusts of Term to secure Jointure Rentcharge.

This will be omitted. See above.

Trusts of Term for raising Portions.

The preliminary trusts must be inserted as usual, and also, when required by reason of any power of appointment, the hotchpot clause: (David. iii. 988, 990).

It would seem that the clause which enables the trustees to raise money for maintenance and education may be slightly abbreviated, in reliance upon sect. 43; but we should not advise its omission. Compare Conc. David. 452; Prid. ii. 307.

Sect. 43 relates to "property held by trustees in trust for an infant either for life or any greater estate, and whether absolutely or contingently on his attaining the age of twenty-one years, &c." It does not seem that the interest which the infant has in the money to be raised under the trusts of portion falls within the terms of this section, unless we take a very wide view of the word "property." As to this, however, see the definition in sect. 2 (i.).

The following form will probably be sufficient where the first trust to raise portions contains no reference to maintenance: "Provided always that for the respective maintenance, education, or otherwise for the benefit of the child or children for the time being entitled in expectancy to any such portion or portions, such portion or portions shall be deemed to be property held by the said trustees or trustee on trust for such child or children within the meaning of sect. 43 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, and for such purposes the said portion or portions shall be deemed to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, which interest shall be raiseable by the said trustees or trustee out of the rents and profits of the said premises comprised in the said term accordingly."

If, however, the first trust of the portion contains a power to the husband, or husband and wife, to appoint the portions among the children, and to make provisions for maintenance and education, it will be found more convenient to set out the trust for maintenance. And generally it will be best to set it out. For form see David. iii. 991; Prid. ii. 307.

If it is desired that there shall be no power of maintenance out of portions it will be prudent to negative sect. 43 as far as regards the trusts for portions, and until they are actually raiseable.

If it is desired that the trustees shall have a power of advancement either after the death of the tenant for life, or during his lifetime by consent, a form must be inserted as usual: (David. iii. 991).

The same remark applies to power for tenant for life to require that portions be raised in his lifetime, and other provisions connected with portions: (David. iii. 992-996).

These provisions terminate with a declaration that the surplus income during the term, after satisfaction of the portions, &c., and all expenses, shall belong to the next reversioner: (David. iii. 996). This will be inserted as usual.

(To be continued.)

FOREIGN CHECKS ON CRIME.

A correspondent of the Times writes: The Act for the prevention of crime will not put the Irish in a worse position than that in which the natives of most Continental countries habitually stand. The freedom which British subjects enjoy has always to foreigners appeared excessive; and anyone who reflects on it must see that such freedom can only be maintained so long as it is not used for seditious purposes. Touching aliens, for instance, there is not a country in Europe where strangers are allowed to come and go as they are in the Queen's dominions without ever being questioned by the police as to their business or identity. Even in Switzerland and Belgium, where boundless liberty is supposed to exist, foreigners intending to settle in the country are bound to give an account of themselves, and they are liable to summary expulsion if by any means they become a nuisance to the authorities. In Switzerland a foreigner sojourning elsewhere than in an hotel is required to obtain a permis de séjour, which is only delivered on his producing a passport, a certificate of nationality, or some other pièce d'identité; in Belgium the law is even stricter, and the recent notification from our Foreign Office advising travellers to Belgium to furnish themselves with passports was really necessary, because the Belgian police subject strangers to so many prying questions that the exhibition of a passport is the shortest way of satisfying them. Strangers, however, cannot fairly complain of the inquisitorial fashion in which they are handled, for exactly the same treatment is meted out to natives. In all continental countries persons who come to settle in a district where they are unknown must state to the police who they are, and they incur serious penalties if they cannot justify their right to the names, titles, or professional designations which they assume. In the British Isles the laxity as to what is termed abroad état civil is so great that a man may style himself by what names and titles he pleases without ever been called upon to prove that they are truly his. Prisoners constantly appear in our courts of justice with several aliases without the police having any means of declaring what their real names are. An unscrupulous man may enlist in the army, desert, and re-enlist; marry, desert his wife, and re-marry; be convicted and re-convicted all under false names, and, finally, be buried under a name that was never his, without any official person taking the trouble to penetrate the mystery that surrounded him. Such facilities for concealing one's identity exist nowhere else, and to foreign officials they seem monstrous. Abroad a man cannot perform any public act—he cannot take lodgings, marry, come forward as a candidate at elections, or even enter into a situation as a servant without showing his pièces d'identité, and the means thus afforded to the police of finding out on all occasions who a man is and what are his antecedents arm foreign Governments with a formidable weapon for checking crime. But foreign Governments have a still more effective weapon in the forms of their judicial procedure, which enable magistrates to cross-examine prisoners, and to punish them by long detention if they decline to answer or make untruthful replies.

It is only in British courts that accused persons stand unquestioned, and merciful as the rule may be which forbids that a man should be forced to inculpate himself, it cannot be denied that the rule often balks justice sadly in its attempts to get at the truth. Irishmen have complained that the new Act empowering the police to arrest and question suspicious-looking persons found wandering about at night will be oppressive, but in what foreign country are suspicious night wanderers allowed to claim impunity from the interrogations of gendarmes? It is the principal business of gendarmes to stop tramps whom they meet in country roads, and to assure themselves that such persons are not prowling about with evil intent; what is more, when a tramp cannot prove that he has means of subsistence, he becomes liable from that mere fact to three months' imprisonment as a vagabond, and if he be an alien he will, on the expiration of his imprisonment, be expelled from the country. This law holds good in all foreign States. Even in Republican France at this moment, under the government of men who are ardently Liberal, the police powers for the prevention of crime, for arresting and questioning suspected persons, for searching their dwellings, &c., remain exactly what they were under the empire. Walking on the boulevards of Paris at night or in broad daylight, any man may be called upon to give up his name to an agent de la sûreté; and any commissaire de police may, without warrant, pay him a domiciliary visit, overhaul his papers, and send him to the dépôt of the prefecture, without alleging further excuse for his conduct than that the man had been denounced to him as a dishonest or dangerous character. Foreigners see no hardship in all this; in fact, they altogether dissociate political liberty from the liberty which may assist men to commit crimes and to baffle judicial investigations into the same. As to trial by jury, it is certainly the fact that in most Continental countries men are tried for their lives in times of civic peace (though not in times of sedition) before juries; but in all Continental States men can be sentenced to as much as five years' imprisonment, with five years' subsequent police supervision, by the Correctional Courts, in which three judges sit without a jury. The French judicial organisation has been more or less copied in all European countries except Great Britain; and trial by jury is everywhere reserved for the greatest crimes. It must not be forgotten, however, that trial by jury abroad, where prisoners are questioned and are, indeed, never brought to trial till the Public Prosecutor has collected all the materials for his indictment out of their own confessions, is a very different thing from trial before a British jury. An English jury must be unanimous to give a verdict, whereas the verdict of foreign juries is taken by the vote of a majority; and, again, when a foreign jury acquits, the prisoner is not necessarily set at liberty. The Public Prosecutor may appeal against the acquittal; he may even appeal a minima, as the term goes, if the prisoner has been convicted and has received what appears to be an insufficient sentence. If a Court of Appeal confirms an acquittal even then a prisoner's troubles are perhaps not at an end, for the Public Prosecutor may indict him before a Correctional Court on some minor count that was not laid before the jury. Finally, if the Correctional Court absolves the man the Public Prosecutor can commit him to the general surveillance of the police as a dangerous character; and he would unquestionably do this if the jury's verdict and the acquittal of the lower court had been obtained under circumstances that were not satisfactory. It will be seen from all this that even under the new Act, which will empower the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland to commit certain prisoners to be tried before three judges, these prisoners will still be better off than Continental prisoners usually are. They will not be questioned by the judges, and the prosecution will have no right of appeal if they are acquitted.

THE ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF WILLS.

A harmless love of mystery not uncommon in the feminine mind, produced the case of Blake v. Blake, reported in the May number of the Law Journal Reports. Some women have a weakness for hiding keys not always to the convenience of domestic arrangements; but it is in such solemn matters as making a will that the love of mystery comes out the strongest. Mrs. Mary Gunston did not apparently employ a solicitor when she wished to make her will, but she knew a retired clerk in the Probate Office; and, as the result of a consultation with him, an attestation clause, with which no fault could be found, was appended to her will. Beneath the clause appeared the signature of the testatrix and two witnesses, Ann Harradine and Susan Harradine, in so regular a form that it seemed the will would be proved without question. Unluckily, however, there were some erasures in the will, and when the attesting witnesses were appealed to for an affidavit it appeared that they could not say that Mrs. Gunston had signed the will in their presence. The gentleman who had been in the Probate Office gave her accurate instructions in writing as to the proper mode of executing a will; but instructions of that kind frequently go wrong, unless there is some one to see them carried out. He probably did not anticipate erasures; and, if there had been no erasures, the defect in the execution of the will would never have come out. The will, notwithstanding, was defective as many seemingly perfect wills are, and the circumstances which brought about its informality possess more dramatic interest than is usually to be found in a law report.

Mrs. Gunston, it appears, took the opportunity of a visit paid to her house by the aunt of her maid-servant to have her will attested. Ann and Susan Harradine were duly called into the room, when the important document was disclosed, or rather, not disclosed, under a piece of blotting paper. Mrs. Gunston naturally did not care that they should read her will; she did not even wish them to know she was making a will. The two women were not quite agreed as to what she did say. Susan, the aunt, believed that she said "We have all our little wishes, and this is one of mine." Ann, the servant, thought the words were simply, "This is a little whim of mine." Mrs. Gunston might safely have indulged her little turn for mystery by hiding the will. She need not even have said that the paper was her will. But when she signed the will before the witnesses came in, and hid her signature under the blotting paper, she made the false step which has proved enough to undo all her care. Sir James Hannen decided that the execution was irregular, and the Court of Appeal have upheld his decision. No attempt was made to argue that the testatrix signed, as the attestation clause professed, in the presence of the witnesses. But it was contended that she acknowledged her signature in their presence. The facts that they did not see her signature, and that she did not say her signature was on the paper, or that the paper was her will, were enough, in the opinion of all the judges, to show that there was no acknowledgment of the signature. The same view is taken by all the judges of the essential requisite of an acknowledgment, although some little difference of opinion existed as to the meaning of two previous cases. All the judges agree that there cannot be an acknowledgment unless the witnesses see, or are able to see, the signature, just as there cannot be an attestation unless the witnesses see, or have the means of seeing, the signature. This view is in accordance with the case of Hudson v. Parker, 3 Robert, 25, in which Dr. Lushington held that there was no sufficient acknowledgment unless the witnesses saw the signature. The Master of the Rolls says that it is in accordance also with Gwillim v. Gwillim, 3 Sw. & Tr. 200—a decision of Sir Cresswell Cresswell which Lord Penzance followed, or believed he followed, in Beckett v. Howe, 39 Law J. Rep. P. & M. 1. Both the Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice Brett agree in overruling Beckett v. Howe, in which Lord Penzance laid down that, if the testator told the witnesses that the paper was his will and the will was already signed, there was a sufficient acknowledgment. Lord Justice Brett thought Gwillim v. Gwillim, on which Lord Penzance relied, must go with Beckett v. Howe. On the other hand, the Master of the Rolls is of opinion that Lord Penzance misunderstood Gwillim v. Gwillim, which he thinks is good law. Lord Justice Holker, the third judge present, does not take part in this controversy, which is not of a very important character. In Gwillim v. Gwillim the testator's signature was immediately above the signatures of the witnesses, and there was no evidence that the signature was covered over. According to the Master of the Rolls, Sir Cresswell Cresswell drew the inference of fact that the signature must have been seen by the witnesses. Lord Justice Brett, on the other hand, refers to the statement by Sir Cresswell Cresswell that he "was at liberty to judge, from the circumstances of the case, whether the name of the testator was on his will," as showing, in the mind of a judge accustomed to express himself clearly, that the existence of the signature, added to the statement that it was the testator's will, was enough. Whether Sir Cresswell Cresswell did or did not take an erroneous view of the law is not, practically, of much importance. It involves more a question of evidence than principle. The principle that is to guide in the matter is clearly established. The acknowledgment will not be sufficient unless the witnesses see, or have an opportunity of seeing, the signature, and unless the testator says "This is my signature," "This is my will," or something to that effect. The best advice to testators is, however, not to resort to an acknowledgment at all, but to sign their will in the witnesses' sight in the ordinary way.—Law Journal.

THE EXPULSION OF FOREIGNERS.

It will have been observed that one of the clauses of the Bill now before Parliament for the prevention of crime in Ireland relates to "the removal of aliens from the realm," and expressly re-enacts a statute for that purpose which has been obsolete for more than thirty years. But, exceptional as such a measure may now appear, a slight research into the history of the present century shows it to have been a far from unusual course to adopt in times of general political disturbance and insecurity.

It seems that almost from time immemorial the right of compelling foreigners to withdraw from the kingdom has been considered the undoubted prerogative of the British Crown. In the reign of Elizabeth, for example, there are on record three separate instances of its exercise; but from that time down to the latter years of the eighteenth century the power remained in abeyance. In 1794, however, the revolution in France and its accompanying dangers had the effect of driving across the Channel large numbers of refugees, many of whom were suspected, not without reason, of Jacobite proclivities and hostility to the Government of this country. To guard against their schemes, exceptional powers were accordingly conferred on the Executive. By the Alien Act of that year (39 Geo. 3, c. 4) an account was to be taken of all foreigners arriving at the ports throughout the country, and they were required to declare their names and rank on pain of immediate expulsion or transportation for life. Any arms or ammunition imported by them were to be confiscated; they were forbidden to travel without passports; the Secretary of State was empowered to conduct out of the kingdom all whom he suspected of disobedience, they might be required to reside in certain districts; and their houses might be searched for arms. In the first instance these provisions were to remain in force for one year only, but before the end of that time they were revived, and were from time to time re-enacted without intermission until the conclusion of the general peace. On that event the more stringent clauses of the Act were relaxed, but measures of similar character continued in existence for some years longer. The last occasion on which the Act was renewed was in 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 37), and it finally expired two years later.

For the next twenty years such measures remained unnecessary; but in 1848, during the political ferment upon the Continent, the executive was again authorised for a limited period to remove foreigners whom "for the due security of the peace and tranquillity of this realm" it was expedient to treat in that manner. The Act by which this power was conferred (11 & 12 Vict. c. 20) is that which the present Bill proposes to re-enact, subject only to one slight modification. It will therefore be useful to set out briefly its provisions. By the first clause it is enacted that when and so often as the Secretary of State in Great Britain, or the Lord Lieutenant in Ireland, shall have reason to believe it expedient to remove any alien, he may, by order to be published in the Gazette, direct such alien to depart the realm within a specified time, and, if such alien wilfully refuses to obey the order, he may be arrested and committed to gaol for the purpose of being sent out of the country. Disobedience to the order is to constitute a misdemeanour, and the offender may be imprisoned for periods not exceeding one and twelve months respectively, according as it may be his first offence or otherwise. Aliens neglecting the orders of the Secretary of State or Lord Lieutenant may be conveyed by warrant out of the kingdom: provided that, if any excuse for non-compliance be alleged, the Privy Council shall decide its sufficiency; and in such event the delinquent shall receive a summary of the allegations to be made against him, and may be heard either in person or by counsel as he may think fit. It is further provided that judges may admit aliens to bail in all cases where they see sufficient cause; and where an alien shall not have been sent out of the realm within a month of his committal to gaol for that purpose, they are authorised, upon application, to order the prisoner to be continued in custody or discharged from it at their discretion. Finally, there are to be exempted from the operation of the Act all foreign ministers and their suites, all aliens under fourteen years of age, and all who have resided in the kingdom for three years before the passing of the Act.

The only modification now to be imposed on these provisions is one required by the special circumstances of the case, namely, that no order shall be made directing an alien in Great Britain to withdraw unless he shall have come to this country having been previously expelled from Ireland. How far the exercise of these powers may be advisable at the present juncture it is not our purpose to consider, but it is a significant fact that, according to the official return issued in 1850, the Act of 1848 remained a dead letter, and was put in force in no single instance. Equally inoperative, it may be added, and have been for many years past, the enactments respecting the registration of foreigners by a system of declarations and certificates, which are, nevertheless, still to be found in the Statute book: (see 7 Geo. 4, c. 54, and 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 11). It appears therefore that, useful as a power of supervising and deporting aliens who abuse our hospitality may seem to be, there are in practice certain difficulties in its enforcement. Accordingly, we shall not be surprised if the present revival of precautionary measures proves as barren and ineffective as the preceding enactments.—Law Times.

THE LIQUOR LAWS.

The Liquor Law of Russia is very comprehensive and easily understood. There is no "local option" about it, but the Czar decrees that there shall be no more than one drink shop in any Russian village, and where two or three villages are near together, the one drink shop shall suffice for all, and this shall be managed by a "man born and resident in the village," who shall be appointed by the Common Council and paid by salary. He is to derive no pecuniary profit beyond his salary, is to sell also food and wares, and is liable to a fine, dismissal, and even imprisonment if he allows any man or woman to get drunk on his premises. In a given contingency, if the population should become notoriously drunken and disorderly, the communal authorities are to interdict the sale of liquor entirely in that district or village, for as long a time as they shall see fit.

The Massachusetts House has passed a Bill providing for the submission to the people next Fall of the restoration of the old prohibitory liquor law, and the Senate has passed a proposed constitutional amendment for biennial elections. The Connecticut House of Representatives adopted a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in that State. The measure now goes over to the next General Assembly, where it must pass both Houses by a two-thirds majority before being submitted to the people.—Public Opinion.

At the end of this year the Irish Sunday Closing Act, which was passed in 1878, comes to a close, unless it be renewed. In a Bill for rendering it permanent, Mr. Richardson, M.P., proposes to do away with the exemptions which at present allow intoxicating liquors to be sold at certain hours on Sundays in the five large towns—Dublin, Cork, Limerick, Waterford, and Belfast. The Bill also makes the closing of licensed premises obligatory on Good Friday and Christmas Day, as well as on Sundays. The bonâ fide traveller, too, receives another definition. A new qualification is that he must have lodged the preceding night at a place at least seven miles distant from the premises where he demands to be supplied with liquor. Moreover, to enable the liquor to be served, it is made necessary that the licensed premises contain, at least, four apartments set apart exclusively for the sleeping accommodation of travellers, and be otherwise structurally adapted for use as an inn for the reception of guests and travellers, and be mainly so used.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Chitty on Contracts (11th Edition), 640.

The vendor of the goodwill of a business in the absence of express covenant, does not lose his right to deal with former customers [M.R. in Ginest v. Cooper, 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 601, overruled] (Leggott v. Barrett, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 90)—C. A.

Order LVIII., Rule 15.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 262.
Seton on Decrees (4th Edition), 1,615.

The mere poverty of an appellant is sufficient ground for requiring security for costs of the appeal (Harlock v. Ashberry, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 96).

Order XXIX., Rule 10.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 187.
Wilson on the Judicature Acts (2nd Edition), 222.

Where an infant defendant fails to put in any defence, the action may at once be set down as against him on notice of trial (National Provincial Bank v. Evans, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 97).

Order LVIII., Rules 16 and 17.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 203.
Seton on Decrees (4th Edition), 1,618.

Where an action has been dismissed, and an appeal is pending, the Court below has jurisdiction to entertain an application seeking to stay proceedings under the order appealed from [Wilson v. Church, 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 690, explained] (Otto v. Lindford, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 102)—C. A.

Order XI., Rule 3.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 141.

Where a plaintiff has obtained an order to serve a writ on the defendant out of the jurisdiction, the defendant, on moving to discharge the order, may go into evidence to show that no cause of action has arisen within the jurisdiction (Fowler v. Barstow, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 103)—C. A.

1 Smith's Leading Cases (8th Edition), 68.

Contract to repair held not to run with the rent, so that the assignee in fee of the covenantor was held not bound to repair in favour of the assignee of a rent-charge assigned with benefit of covenants (Haywood v. Brunswick Permanent Benefit Building Society, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 73)—C. A.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, with the Statutes incorporated therewith, and the Rules and Forms issued thereunder; being a Practical Exposition of the Act. With Explanatory Notes, an Abstract of Decided Cases, and Copious Index. By T. M. HEALY, M.P. Dublin: M. H. Gill & Son, 50 Upper Sackville-street. 1882.

The Nineteenth Century. A Monthly Review, Edited by JAMES KNOWLES. No. 64. June, 1882. London: C. Kegan Paul & Co.

Contemporary Review. June, 1882. London: Strahan and Co., Limited, Paternoster-row.

Cassell's History of England from the earliest period to the present time. With about 2,000 Illustrations. Part 81. London, Paris, and New York: Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.

Milton's Paradise Lost. Illustrated by Gustave Doré. Edited, with Notes and a Life of Milton, by the late ROBERT VAUGHAN, D.D. London: Cassell, Petter, Galpin, & Co.

OBITUARY.

MR. JAMES O'HEA.

MR. JAMES O'HEA, who died on the 27th ult., was born in 1809, and educated at the University of Dublin, where, as scholar and prizeman (Sch. 1829, B.A. 1831), his career was eminently successful, and he won the gold medal of the Historical Society. In Easter Term, 1836, he was called to the bar, and joined the Munster Circuit. He early acquired a considerable reputation as a criminal lawyer, and was one of the counsel for the traversers in the State Trials of 1844. At the Special Commission of 1848, also, he was assigned as counsel for the prisoners. Subsequently, he was appointed Crown Prosecutor for the Counties of Cork and Limerick. Mr. O'Hea, who was an intimate personal friend of O'Connell, was one of the most active of those who led the van in the Repeal agitation. But, though he had been solicited to become a candidate for the parliamentary representation of Limerick, all his expenses being guaranteed, he was obliged to decline the honour, owing to his professional engagements, and he never entered Parliament, though he had attained such a distinguished place in politics. His name on the occasion of an election contest for the representation of Trinity College suggested to one of the students a humorous idea of applying the clôture in a classical form to his speech, which was delivered amid some impatience and angry interruptions. At length one of the audience exclaimed in a stentorian voice, "Ohe, jam satis," and the desired effect was immediately produced. He found it impossible to proceed amid the derisive cheers and exclamations of the meeting. Mr. O'Hea was a brilliant classical scholar, an able lawyer of the old type, and in private life a gentleman whose amiability of character, ready humour, thorough honesty, and varied accomplishments gained him a host of friends.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. William W. Glenný has been appointed Keeper of the Land Commission Records.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION FOR APPRENTICES TO SOLICITORS,

Pursuant to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (Ireland), 1866.

DUBLIN, TRINITY SITTINGS, 1882.

HISTORY.

1. Who were the Normans? What led to, and what were some of the effects of the conquest of England by them?
2. Who were the Bretwaldas, and for what was the office instituted?
3. What were the provisions of Oxford?
4. What was the first remarkable occasion on which artillery was used in Europe?
5. Give some account of the origin of the House of Commons?
6. When was Calais taken by the English, and when lost?
7. Mention some of the victories of Edward the Black Prince; and give an account of the loss of the English dominion in France in the reign of Henry VI.
8. What monarch was first styled "Defender of the Faith," and why?

9. What were the chief provisions of the Bill of Rights, and when was it enacted?

10. When was the East India Company first established? State briefly how the English acquired their principal possessions in India.

11. What was the Cato-street conspiracy?

12. For what events in English history are the following places remarkable:—Naseby, St. Albans, Bosworth, Troyes, Fontenoy?

GEOGRAPHY.

1. Explain why the latitude of a place in the Northern Hemisphere always corresponds to the altitude of the polar star.

2. If it be 12 o'clock in Dublin, what hour is it in a place 45 degrees to the east, and what hour in a place 30 degrees to the west of Dublin?

3. How is an eclipse of the sun, and how an eclipse of the moon caused?

4. What is the snow-line? On what circumstances does the height of the snow-line depend?

5. Enumerate the principal rivers of Asia, through what countries and into what seas do they flow?

6. Mention the principal islands in the Archipelago.

7. What are the principal branches of the Atlantic ocean?

8. Where are the following situate:—Gulf of Riga, Straits of Kaffa, Bay of Honduras, Sierra Nevada, Dantzic, Heligoland, Messina?

9. Mention the counties on the western coast of England and Wales, and the principal towns of each.

10. To what counties do the following belong:—Mizen Head, Clew Bay, Lough Mask, Bristol, Winchester, St. Ives, Plymouth?

ARITHMETIC.

1. What is the price of 13 cwt. 3 qrs. 4 lbs. at £2 18s. 4d. per cwt.?

2. Divide £9,604 10s. by 144j.

3. Reduce 1s. 7½d. to the fraction of a £.

4. What is the poor-rate chargeable on 128a. 1r. 17p., the valuation being £2 17s. per acre, and the rate 11½d. in the £?

5. The debts of a bankrupt amount to £4,968, he pays 9s. 7d. in the £, what are his assets?

6. What is the interest of £584 18s. 8d. for one year and nine months at 8½ per cent.?

BOOK-KEEPING.

1. What books are used in book-keeping by double entry? Explain the use of each.

2. Explain what are "real," "personal," and "fictitious" accounts?

3. When you open an account for stock in the ledger, on which side would you enter the cash in hand?

4. What entry is made in the journal when goods are sold for part cash, part on credit, and part bills receivable?

5. Open a cash account? Enter the following transactions, and balance the account:—

	£	s.	d.
Cash in bank, - - -	841	12	6
Cash in hand, - - -	-	-	38 6 4
Paid A. Jones amount of his account, -	46	10	5
Received of John Brown, - - -	86	8	9
Paid amount of my acceptance of John Smith's draft, - - -	95	3	4
House expenses, - - -	27	9	8
Paid William White's account, - - -	218	5	4
Thomas Smith paid me amount of his acceptance, - - -	106	3	8
Paid house rent, - - -	73	2	7
Lent to John Smith, - - -	23	10	0
H. Williams paid to my account at bank, -	97	8	10

BARON ALDERSON once told a lawyer, "You seem to think that the art of cross-examination is to examine crossly."

COURT PAPERS.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.—CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

List of Petitions presented to the Land Judges in the month of April, 1882.

DATE	TITLE OF MATTER	OBJECT OF PETITION	COUNTY	PROFIT RENT	SOLICITOR
April 1	Arthur A. Lawder, owner; Joshua Brereton, petitioner	Sale	Roscommon and Leitrim	£ s. d. Not stated	Joshua Brereton
" "	Michael O'Kelly, owner; Arthur Usher and another, petitioners	Sale	Galway	1,254 12 6	Archibald Robinson and Son
" 8	Mary J. Morris and the Assignees of the Court of Bankruptcy, owners; Irish Civil Service Building Society, petitioners	Sale	Mayo	17 15 0 Valuation	H. T. Dix and Son
" "	John Lloyd Bagot, owner; Robert Charles Goff, petitioner	Sale	Galway and Roscommon	1,756 7 7	Longfield, Davidson, and Kelly
" "	Denis Luby, owner; John Connell, petitioner	Sale	Tipperary	54 0 0 Griffith's Valuation	John O'Dwyer
" 5	John Doyle and another, owners; William Quigley, petitioner	Sale and receiver	Armagh	105 0 0 Griffith's Valuation	Webb, Scott, and Seymour
" 6	Nathaniel Wynne, owner; Margaret Lamie, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Cork	62 11 0	Anthony O'Connor
" "	John M'Cavana, senr., owner and petitioner, and Partition Acts	Sale	Antrim	Not stated	Peter Maccaulay
" "	Trustees William Phillips, owners; William Seeds, petitioner	Sale	Down	70 0 0	Charles Higginson
" "	Trustees William Phillips, owners; David Robinson, petitioner	Sale	Down	85 0 0 Estimated	H. and W. Seeds
" 12	Daniel Cronin and others, owners; Denis Heffernan, petitioner	Receiver, Partition, and Sale	Cork	42 10 0 Griffith's Valuation	Daniel C. Bastable
" "	Michael F. Marshall and another, owners and petitioners	Sale	Clare	151 18 11	William Fry and Son
" "	Agnes Hickey, owner; The Munster Bank, petitioners	Sale	Cork	Not stated	Thomas Downes
" "	John Cuddihy, owner; The Munster Bank, petitioners	Sale	Dublin and Kerry	428 15 6 Estimated	Maxwell and Weldon
" 14	John O'Connell, owner; The National Bank, petitioners	Sale	Tipperary	61 2 0	Michael Larkin
" 15	Henry Mills, owner; Thomas Parker, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Cork and Dublin	237 0 1	Samuel Abbott
" 17	Thomas Hyrne, owner; Robert Cooke and others, petitioners	Sale	Mayo	7 0 0	William T. Daniel
" 18	Chambre B. Ponsonby, owner; The Bank of Ireland, petitioners	Sale	Limerick	Not stated	E. H. De Moleyns
" 20	Tyrrell Conry and another, owners; James W. O'Reilly, petitioner	Sale	Roscommon	Not stated	James W. O'Reilly
" "	William H. Greene, owner; Anna E. Hogan, petitioner	Sale	Dublin	Not stated	William C. Hogan and Son
" "	Robert Charters, owner; W. H. Stephenson and another, petitioners	Sale	Longford	120 12 6	John E. O'Farrell
" "	William John C. Allen and another, owners and petitioners	Sale	Antrim	154 2 10	James Campbell
" "	Pierce John Barron, owner; Edward Kelly, petitioner	Sale	Waterford	691 0 0 Estimated	Richard A. Macnamara
" 21	William Vincent Dowdall, owner and petitioner	Sale	Louth	185 18 4 Estimated	James Goff
" 24	George Andrew Bell and others, owners; Margaret Hopps and others, petitioners	Sale	Tyrone	143 0 0 Griffith's Valuation	Edward Green Foley
" "	Henry E. J. Lutman, owner; Robert Cooke and others, petitioners	Sale	Tipperary and Limerick	570 14 7	William Thomas Daniel
" 25	John Langford Rae, owner; Representative Church Body, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Kerry	2,605 7 1	John Maunsell
" "	Mercy Baldwin Townsend and others, owners; Maria T. M'Carthy, petitioner	Sale	Cork	120 8 8	Thomas Downes
" "	William M'Kay and another, owners; James H. Sclater, petitioner	Sale	Meath	696 0 0 Griffith's Valuation	Thompson and Tatlow
" "	Thomas Manley and another, owners; Patrick Joseph Kelly, petitioner	Sale	Wicklow	145 0 0 Griffith's Valuation	G. O'B. Kennedy
" 26	James Francis Moore, owner; Esory Carmichael, petitioner	Sale	Roscommon	30 0 0	A. F. Burton
" 28	William John Murphy, owner; Margaret Murphy, petitioner	Sale	Down	54 8 0	Robert Kelly
" "	Eliza Netterfield and others, owners; Majr-General T. H. Clifton and others, petitioners	Sale and receiver	Cavan	882 8 11	G. H. Major
" 29	Rev. John Harrington, owner; Edward Harding and another, petitioners	Sale	Cork	86 0 0 Griffith's Valuation	R. W. Doherty, junr.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—A. G. Shaw, payment.—Trustee A. Blake, do.—M. M'Tier, do.—Trustees Cooke, do.—M. Handley, do.—J. M'Garry, confirm sale.

IN COURT.—R. L. Watson, as to ejection.—W. R. O'Byrne, receiver.—G. Bolton, payment by receiver.—C. B. Jennings, appoint receiver.—L. Walsh, liberty to bid.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

H. V. Baillie, rental.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—J. O'Shea, final schedule.—J. M'Caig, do.—P. Bradley, receiver.—R. A. Tennent, do.—M. Cody, as to policy.—J. J. Casey, continue proceedings.—G. A. Waller, as to carriage.—N. Woods, to make order absolute.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

G. Graham, rental.

WEDNESDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—E. G. Holt, explain delay.—S. Holt, do. IN COURT.—J. Wilson, attachment.—L. Simpson, re-entry.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

C. S. Brice, vouch.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—A. H. Goff, proposal.

IN COURT.—Devises Hurley, payment.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

F. Blake, rental.—A. Elliott, do,

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

G. S. ROPER, . . . . . 4 lots.
O. CONOLLY, . . . . . 3 „

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

W. Deane, rental.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—C. E. Bell, allocate.—T. J. Nolan, do.—T. Colclough, do.

IN COURT.—H. Leader, to examine witness.—E. Jameson, receiver.—T. J. Nolan, attachment.—J. Gartlan, payment.—J. Eyre, as to letting.—T. W. Grady, credit.—D. P. M'Carthy, final schedule.—Lord Huntingdon, receiver.—H. C. O'Connor, to make order absolute.

TUESDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

P. H. HORE, . . . . . 1 lot.
TRUSTEE W. SCANLAN, . . . . . 5 lots.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

R. Malcomson, rental.—W. W. Gray, do.—M. R. Dalway, do.—G. V. Stewart, do.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—Scanlan v. Bunton, action.—D. W. Cruice, final schedule.—H. Leader, to examine witness.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

P. Leonard, rental.—Devises Leavy, do.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	MAY				JUNE
	Sat 27	Mon 29	Tues 30	Wed 31	Thur 1	Fri 2
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	101½	—	101½	101½	101½	101½
— New 3 p c Stock ..	100	—	100½	100	100	100
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1838 } Trsbis. at ..	—	—	—	104½	104½	—
3½ p c Jan. 1831 } Bk. of Irel. ..	101½	—	—	—	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	—	—	320	320	—
25 Hibernian Banking Co ..	—	—	—	—	34½	—
20 London and County (Lid'd) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and W'minster, Lid'd ..	71	—	71	71½	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
34 Minster Bank (Limited) ..	7½	—	7½	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	23½	—	23½	—	—	23½
10 National of Liverpool (Lid'd) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Standard of B. S. A., Lid'd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Mines.
4½ Berehaven (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
1 Killaloe Slate Co. (Lid'd) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (Lid'd) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
Alliance & Dub. Cons. Gas ..	—	—	15½	15½	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..	—	—	—	—	42	—
4 National Discount, Ir., Lid'd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 National Assurance ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	10½	—	10½	10½	—	—
10 Edinburgh Street Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	14½
10 L'pl Un'ed Tram &amp; Bus Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Leeds Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
10 Athens and Tuam ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and Northern Cos ..	—	—	—	—	51	—
100 Dublin, Wicklow, &amp; W'ford ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	112½	—	112½	—	113½	—
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	83	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	32	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	101½	—	—
100 Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Nth'n (Irlnd) gt'd 4 p c ..	—	—	—	106½	—	—
100 Do., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	107½
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Watfd. &amp; Limerick, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Do., new red, 5 p c ..	—	—	—	102	—	—
Leased at Fixed Rentals.
100 Dublin and Kingstown ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos, 4 p c ..	105½-5	—	—	105½	—	105½
— C'fergus and Larne 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	105½	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	109½	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	109½	—	109½
— Kilkenny Junction, A, 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	105½
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
Alliance & Cons. Gas, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	100	—	100
Ballast Office Deb., £220s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Dub. & Glas. S.P. Co. (1887) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Pipe Water Old, £92 8s. 2d. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Do. New, £100, ..	—	—	—	—	9½	—
(1938) Rathm. & Pem. M. Drain, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—6 per cent. 30th January, 1882
Of Deposit—3 per cent. 30th January, 1882

Name Days—June 13th and 29th, 1882.
Account Days—June 14th and 29th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Pills.—The stomach and its troubles cause more discomfort and bring more unhappiness than is commonly supposed. The thousand ills that settle there may be prevented or dislodged by the judicious use of these purifying Pills, which act as a sure, gentle anti-acrid aperient, without annoying the nerves of the most susceptible or irritating the most delicate organization. Holloway's Pills will bestow comfort and confer relief on every headachy, dyspeptic, and sickly sufferer, whose tortures make him a burden to himself and a bugbear to his friends. These Pills have long been the popular remedy for a weak stomach, for a disordered liver, or a paralysed digestion, which yield without difficulty to their regulating, purifying, and tonic qualities

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

NOLAN—May 24, at Connaught-terrace, Rathgar, the wife of James V. Nolan, Esq., solicitor, of a son.

DEATHS.

DAVIES—May 25, at Derby, John Francis, youngest son of the late Thomas Davies, Esq., solicitor, of Kenistown House, County Galway, aged 25 years.

GASON—May 24, at Via San Sebastiano, Rome, Eliza, wife of John Gason, Esq., M.D., and daughter of the late Sir Jonas Greene, Recorder of Dublin.

JONES—May 30, suddenly, of bronchitis, at the Royal Albert Hotel, Dublin. Augustus T. Jones, Esq., solicitor, of Rushin House, County Fermanagh, second son of the late Captain Charles Jones, formerly of the 90th Regiment.

O'HEA—May 27, at Harcourt-street, James O'Hea, Esq., barrister-at-law.

O'SHAUGHNESSY—May 31, at his residence, Mercer-street, James O'Shaughnessy, for many years the faithful clerk of Francis Hastings, Esq., solicitor.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, W A L L E R, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET.

3-7

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY,

52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off Incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 2½ per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.

Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:—

The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary,
52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

80

£10
TO £1,000

IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days. Two UNERRING RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free.
Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

PUBLIC NOTICES:

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS.

(Royal Route via Crinan and Caledonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Lochawe, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Stornoway, &c. Official Guide, 3d.; Illustrated, 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Fares free, at CARSON BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post from the owner, DAVID MACBRAYNE, 119 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK for STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens; it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each. 581

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANBATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,

the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Chering Cross, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

Agents—Messrs. Dudgeon & Son, 113 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewart & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

ROBERT WHYTE,

Ladies' & Gentlemen's  Boot & Shoe Manufacturer,

1, NORTH FREDERICK-STREET
(Rutland-square),

ESTABLISHED OVER HALF A CENTURY.

Boots made for Weak Ankles, Deformed Feet, and Surgical purposes of every description.

All Work executed on the Premises under my personal superintendence.

None but first-class Workmen employed in either Making or Repairing.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PERCY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

NEW FORMS UNDER THE LAND ACT.

FORM

- 67. Fee-farm Grant from Landlord to Tenant . . . . . 3d. each.
- 68. Mortgage from Tenant to Landlord, to secure one-fourth, or other balance, of Purchase Money . . . . . 3d. „
- 69. Reference to Valuer to be named by Land Commission . . . . . 1d. „
- 70. Special Report of Valuer . . . . . 1d. „
- 71. Application and Consent to withdraw Originating Notice . . . . . 1d. „
- z. Notice by Landlord demanding Particulars . . . . . 1d. „

JOHN FALCONER, 53 UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

GERRARD BROTHERS'
RUBBER STAMPS,FOR MARKING BOOKS, LINEN, PAPER, &c.
Complete, 2s.; or by Post, 2s. 6d.

RUBBER STAMPS

FOR BUSINESS PURPOSES,
All Sizes, and any Design to Order. Specimens on application.GERRARD BROTHERS,
STATIONERS AND RUBBER STAMP MAKERS,
37 STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 59

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEEDED
FIVE MILLIONS.HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane. 62

D. W. CARROLL,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTEPAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers.

They are sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of

LEATHER GOODS,

Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-
randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are sold much under usual charges.

Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.

Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge. 72

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE,

Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped
to perfection.

10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps.

21, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID,

Curls the straightest and most ungovernable Hair, 8s. 6d.,
sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE,

To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His

GREAT HAIR RESTORER,

3s. 6d.; It changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles.

As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 3s. 6d.; his DEPILATORY for removing Hair, and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers. 7

WANTS:

WANTED by a Solicitor, recently admitted, a Partnership, in either City or Country. Address—"M. A.,"
Office of IRISH LAW TIMES.

LEGAL POSTINGS:

IN THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY
IN IRELAND.

In the Matter of—

HUGH FITZGERALD,
of Falaise, Clontarf, Co. Dublin, Victualler, a Bankrupt.

TO BE SOLD BY PUBLIC AUCTION,

Before the Court,

At the Four Courts, Dublin,

On FRIDAY, the 16th day of JUNE, 1882,

At the hour of Twelve o'clock noon,

All the Estate and Interest of the Bankrupt and his Assignees, for the Life of the Bankrupt (now aged about 68 years), in and to

Lot 1—Part of Acre Lots 39 and 40, on the North Strand, in the Parish of St. Thomas and City of Dublin, upon portions of which Houses in Leinster-avenue, Leinster-street North, Spencer-street, Spencer-place, St. Joseph's-terrace, James-street North and Stoneyroad, have been built; held under Conveyance from the Landed Estates Court, subject to the payment of interest at £8 per cent. per annum (reducible to £5 per cent.) on £50, and to £4 per cent. per annum on £700, pursuant to the Orders of the 11th May, 1881, and 10th March, 1882, respectively, and subject to such claims as the Corporation of the City of Dublin, as the Urban Authority, may have in respect of works executed in or on said Streets, Avenues, Places, or Premises, under the provisions of the "Public Health (Ireland) Act," 1878. Copies of said Orders and particulars of said Claims, as furnished to the Vendor's Solicitors, may be seen at the Office of the Solicitors having carriage of the Sale. The Yearly Rents and estimated Value, subject to Taxes and to the claims of the Corporation (when assessed), is £325 18s.

Lot 2—Policy on Life of the Bankrupt (age admitted), dated the 23rd November, 1877, with the Scottish Provincial Assurance Company, for £200, at the half-yearly Premium of £5 7s., payable 22nd
May and 22nd November.

Lot 3—Policy on Life of the Bankrupt (age admitted), dated the 25th of February, 1880, with the National Assurance Company of Ireland, for £300, at the half-yearly Premium of £8 18s. 6d., payable 25th August and 25th February.

Lot 4—Policy on Life of the Bankrupt (age admitted), dated the 25th of February, 1880, with the National Assurance Company of Ireland, for £300, at the half-yearly Premium of £5 15s. 8d., payable 25th August and 25th February.

Lot 5—Policy on the Life of the Bankrupt (age admitted), dated the 7th July, 1881, with the Royal Assurance Company of Liverpool, for £100, at the half-yearly Premium of £28 12s. 6d., payable 4th
January and 4th July.

A Statement of Title and Conditions of Sale are lodged in the Office of the Court, and may be seen also in the Offices of the undesignated Solicitors having carriage of the Sale.

Dated this 28th day of May, 1882.

WM. PERRIN, Chief Registrar.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The Premises comprised in Lot 1, are situate in Leinster-avenue,
Leinster-street North, Spencer-street, Spencer-place, James-street North, and Stoney-road, close to the road leading to Clontarf. Trams to Clontarf pass every 20 minutes.

LEINSTER-AVENUE consists of two Plots of Ground let on long leases, on which the tenants have built 10 Houses, and have valuable interests in their holdings.

LEINSTER-STREET NORTH—One portion consists of two Plots of Ground let on long leases, on which the tenants have built 3 Houses, and have valuable interests in their holdings. The other portion consists of 8 Houses built by the Bankrupt, two of which are let to respectable tenants; the remainder are in Vendor's possession.

SPENCER-STREET and SPENCER-PLACE—One portion consists of 9
Plots of Ground let on long leases, on which the tenants have built 38
Houses, and have valuable interests in their holdings. The other portion consists of 2 Houses built by the Bankrupt, one of which is let to a respectable tenant; the other is in Vendor's possession.

JAMES-STREET NORTH consists of 6 Plots of Ground let on long leases, on which the tenants have built 16 Houses, and have valuable interests in their holdings.

Proposals for purchase by Private Contract will be received by the Official Assignees up to the hour of Twelve o'clock, noon, on the 4th day of June, 1882. If an offer be made which can be recommended by the Vendors, it will be submitted to the Court for approval without further notice.

For Rentals and further information, apply to

CHARLES HENRY JAMES, Esq., Official Assignee, 16 Merchants'-quay;Messrs. CASEY & OLAY, Solicitors for Assignees, having Carriage of the Sale, No. 21 St. Andrew-street, Dublin, where may be seen Statement of Title and Conditions of Sale.

GEO. M'QUESTION, Esq., Receiver, No. 11 Leinster-st., Dublin.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1882.

No. 802

THE EFFECT OF THE DEATH OF AN ACCEPTOR OF A BILL OF EXCHANGE, BLANK AS TO DRAWER'S NAME.

IN reviewing the fifth edition of Mr. Lloyd's able work on the Law of Compensation, the current number of the Law Magazine observes that he "refers frequently to Scottish, Irish, Colonial, and American cases. These will be found in not a few points to throw a valuable side-light on the binding cases, and it is well that counsel should find ready to hand a suggestion of what may open up a new view that may ultimately find its way into English case-law." The recent English case of Carter v. White, reported in the June number of the Law Journal, 51 Ch. 465, exemplifies this utility as regards Irish cases, as we there find Kay, J., following In re Duffy; Dutch v. O'Leary (14 Ir. L. T. Dig. 8). And guided by the same conception of the utility of referring to decisions other than those of our own courts, we too shall, in the first place, before proceeding to examine Carter v. White, quote from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Angle v. North Western Mut. Life Ins. Co. (92 U. S. 330), in reference to the ground on which the right to fill up blanks in negotiable instruments, and the liability in respect of them was formulated. "Negotiable instruments," said Clifford, J., are frequently delivered for use, with blanks not filled; and in respect to such instruments, it is held, that where a party to such instrument intrusts it to the custody of another for use, with blanks not filled up, whether it be to accommodate the person to whom it is intrusted or to be used for the benefit of the signer of the same, such negotiable instrument carries on its face an implied authority to fill up the blanks necessary to perfect the same; and the rule is that, as between such party and innocent third parties, the person to whom the instrument was so intrusted must be deemed the agent of the party who committed the instrument to his custody, in filling up the blanks necessary to perfect the instrument." See, as to this general doctrine, 14 Ir. L. T. 193, 217, 230; and as to the effect of the death of the drawer of a cheque, see 13 ib. 448; and as to the effect of death as revocation of agency, see 13 ib. 417, 433, 12 ib. 325.

In Carter v. White the action was brought by the trustee in bankruptcy of Geo. Noble, who had, on Nov. 19, 1874, deposited with the defendant the certificates of £505 stock as collateral security for a debt of £500 due to the defendant from James Randle. This deposit was made by Noble in consideration of the renewal by the defendant of an acceptance of £250, part of that debt. The renewal was effected by an acceptance of Randle for £250, dated Nov. 18, 1874, payable three months after date; and another bill of exchange was given by Randle for the rest of the debt, dated Oct. 15, 1874, payable two months after date. Both those bills of exchange were accepted by Randle and delivered to the defendant, duly filled up, excepting only the name of the drawer. Randle died on Jan. 6, 1875, leaving his widow his executrix. On July, 23, 1879, Noble became bankrupt. The trustee in bankruptcy sought an account against the defendant, and claimed to have the stock certificates given up to him by the defendant, and to be relieved from the suretyship, the ground chiefly relied on being that the defendant had neglected to perfect the bills of exchange by filling in his name as drawer, and could not do so after the acceptor's death, so that he could not hand them over to the plaintiff as complete securities. The argument in support of this contention was founded very much on the language of the judgment in Montague v. Perkins (22 L. J. C. P. 187), treating the drawer as agent of the acceptor; while, if there was agency, it was argued that the case came within the principle of the authorities like Watson v. King (4 Camp. 273), deciding that under a power of attorney, though coupled with an interest, no valid act can be done in the name of the donor after his death. "I cannot see how the drawer who has given value to the acceptor can be his agent to sign his own name as drawer," said Kay, J.; "but here, even if the drawer could be considered Randle's agent, nothing is to be done in the name of Randle to complete this bill." We find the distinction here pointed to also taken in Story on Agency, s. 495. "Regularly, indeed," observes that great and authoritative American jurist, "when the act to be done must be done in the name of the principal, and not in that of the agent, the authority is extinguished by the death of the principal, because it has become incapable of being so executed. . . . Where the act, notwithstanding the death of the principal, can and may be done in the name of the agent, there seems to be a sound reason why his death should not be deemed to be a positive revocation under all circumstances." But, putting aside the question whether the right is referable to agency (see 14 Ir. L. T. 231), how stand the authorities? In Armfield v. Allport (27 L. J. Ex. 44), Pollock, B., says: "A man who writes his name across a stamped paper as acceptor, there being a direction to him upon the paper, is liable; he gives his authority to anybody to draw upon him when it may be convenient to do so, or when the person to whom the paper is given may think it advisable to apply it for this purpose." And if an acceptance blank as to the name of the drawer be handed to the proposed drawee for valuable consideration, the drawer, or his executors after his death, as in Scard v. Jackson (34 L. T. N. S. 65, n), approved in Harvey v. Cane (ib.), or an endorsee for value, as in the case last cited, may complete the bill by inserting his own name as drawer, and this after the bill has become due. Then, in Usher v. Dاونcey (4 Camp. 97), a bill of exchange drawn and indorsed in blank by a partner, and delivered by him to a clerk of the firm, who after the partner's death filled it up with the date, sum, and names of other parties in the counting-house of the person who accepted it, was held to be a good bill in the hands of persons who had discounted it, and to bind the surviving partners. Again, in Hatch v. Searles (2 Sm. & G. 147; on app., 24 L. J. Ch. 22) an accommodation acceptance was given in blank, and filled up after the death of the acceptor, and handed to a person who knew it had been given as a blank acceptance. It was proved that the person to whom it was first given in blank had no right to get it discounted, and that the person who discounted it knew, or must be taken to have known, this; and therefore, he could not recover. This case is cited in the last edition of Byles on Bills as an authority for the proposition that a blank acceptance for value is irrevocable; but, without any direct decision, it merely seems to have been there assumed that if the transaction had been bonâ fide, the holder might have recovered, notwithstanding the acceptor's death before the bill was filled up. However, the very point called for decision in Re Duffy, Dutch v. O'Leary (ubi supra), where it was expressly held that, where an instrument in the form of a bill of exchange is accepted, with a blank space for the drawer's name, a bonâ fide holder, or his personal representative, is entitled to fill up the blank as drawer, and thus make the instrument a complete bill of exchange. "That decision seems to me consistent with principle," said Kay, J., "and I follow it by overruling this objection. In this case the objection is merely technical, and no relief can, I understand, be had against Randle's estate." Accordingly, the action was dismissed with costs, except so far as it sought an account against the defendant.

"LAW JOURNAL REPORTS" FOR JUNE.

The monthly number of the Law Journal Reports for June is a double one, and contains pages 25 to 48 of the Privy Council cases, pages 409 to 520 of the Chancery Division, pages 313 to 369 of the Queen's Bench Division, pages 25 to 40 of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, and pages 59 to 96 of the Magistrates' Cases; in all seventy-nine cases are reported, of which three are Privy Council cases, forty-eight are from the Chancery Division, fourteen from the Queen's Bench Division, six from the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, and eight Magistrates' Cases.

The number opens with three Privy Council cases: one from Canada, one from Mauritius, and the third from Nova Scotia. The first case in the Chancery Division is Lyell v. Kennedy, in which interrogatories by a plaintiff in an action for the recovery of land, asking from the defendant admissions of his title, and discovery as to the defendant's title, were disallowed by the Court of Appeal. In Avery v. Andrews trustees of a friendly society, who had been enjoined not to divide its funds among the members, but who had, as members, taken a share of funds distributed by a new set of trustees appointed for the purpose, were pronounced by Mr. Justice Kay guilty of a contempt of Court. In Hurst v. Hurst Mr. Justice Fry held that a limitation of property in trust to a man for life, with remainder to his children in equal shares, and a clause of cesser on the life tenant's bankruptcy or alienation, could not be accelerated in favour of the children on the life tenant's alienation. In Henty v. Wrey the exercise of a power to appoint portions before it was necessary, was held invalid. In the case of In re Woodfin and Wray a personal undertaking by a solicitor to pay the costs of the committal on the release of his client, was enforced summarily. In Chard v. Jervis the Court of Appeal held that an undischarged bankrupt, living with his wife who had means, could not be sent to prison for nonpayment of a debt under the Debtors Act. In Foulers v. Walker a claim for ancient lights in behalf of a warehouse which had succeeded some cottages with ancient lights, fell through in want of evidence that the windows were in the same place as before the rebuilding. In Kirk v. Todd it was held by Vice-Chancellor Hall that an action for an injunction for fouling a stream could not be continued against the executors of a defendant who had died more than six months after the injury complained of. In Stigand v. Stigand it was stated that in the Chancery Division the practice in obtaining leave to issue and serve writs abroad is to apply to the chief clerk, who, in plain cases, gives the leave without referring to the judge. In Briggs v. Massey a trustee liable for default in not getting in certain gas shares was made to pay the value of bonus shares, less the calls. In In Ex parte Sear, sâ re Price, it was held that an attachment in the Tolzey Court of Bristol has the same effect as in the Mayor's court of London, and the plaintiff is not a secured creditor. In the case of In re Bannerman an annuity left "free from all deductions in respect of taxes" was held to be free of income tax. In the case of In re Atkinson natural children entitled to succeed according to Italian law were held liable to pay succession duty as "strangers in blood." In the case of In re Hudson a gift by will of property to divide the income among children and, on the death of the last, to grandchildren, was held to be an interest for the children's lives only. In Fordham v. Clagett it was held that an appeal lay against the disallowance of the debt of a creditor in an administration suit, although no order has been drawn up. In Ex parte Richdale, sâ re Palmer, a post-dated cheque, given to a person who became bankrupt before it fell due, was held a protected transaction, and that there was no liability on the drawer to stop the cheque. In Carter v. White Mr. Justice Kay held that the holder of an acceptance without a drawer's name may insert his name as drawer after the death of the acceptor. Robinson v. The Local Board of Burton is another illustration of what a "street" is not within the Public Health Acts. In Jerman v. Chatterton the Court of Appeal committed for contempt, although the judge below had declined. In Ex parte Firth, sâ re Conburn, the consideration of a bill being stated to be "£40 now lent and paid by the mortgagees to the mortgagors," whereas in fact £1 10s. was retained for expenses of execution, the bill was held void. These cases are now beginning to produce some very fine distinctions. Harter v. Colman is a case in which a mortgagee of two properties who became mortgagee of the second after the assignment of the equity of redemption of the first was held not entitled to consolidate. In the case of In re The General Financial Bank it was laid down that an official liquidator ought to be appointed in chambers, and not in Court. In the case of In re Count d'Epineuil it was unsuccessfully attempted to invalidate an unregistered bill of sale as against the unsecured creditors of an insolvent dead person—a very ingenious attempt to apply section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875. In re Bowllon's Trusts decides that a petition of trustees for the advice of the Court under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30, still requires the signature of counsel. In Ex parte Child, sâ re Ottaway, the practice in bankruptcy, as to cross-examining on affidavits, was settled. If the affidavit is filed, but not read, the deponent cannot be cross-examined. Crawcour v. Saller is another case in which the custom of hotels hiring furniture was allowed to take it out of the order and disposition clause. In Little v. The Kingswood and Parkfield Colliery Company, Vice-Chancellor Hall restrained a solicitor who had formerly acted for the plaintiff from acting for his opponent. This case came before the Court of Appeal on Thursday, May 25, when the Master of the Rolls said he thought the Vice-Chancellor had gone further than any of the previous cases; but the matter was compromised. In the case of In re Jesscock's Trusts, Mr. Justice Chitty held that a power to lease to a "person or persons" authorised a lease to a corporation. In The Union Bank of London v. Ingram the Court of Appeal, overruling Mr. Justice Kay, held that, under the Conveyancing Act, an order for sale of mortgaged property may be made after a foreclosure decree. In Barber v. Blalberg Mr. Justice Fry seems at the trial to have disallowed a counter-claim as not relating to the action. In Turner v. Hancock the Court of Appeal held that a trustee whose costs are disallowed out of the trust fund may appeal.

In the Queen's Bench Division Gibbs v. Guild is the first case, deciding that the Statute of Limitation for false representations runs from the discovery, not the committal of the fraud—an important decision from which the late Lord Justice Holker dissented. Thomson v. The South-Eastern Railway Company lays down rules as to the terms of staying cross-actions arising out of the same subject matter. In Jackson v. Litchfield & Sons it was held that one of the partners in a firm sued failing to enter appearance the proper course is to proceed to judgment before issuing execution against him. In Wigzell v. The School for Indigent Blind it was held that, on a contract by a vendee to build a wall on the property sold, the measure of damages was not the cost of the wall, but the depreciation of the vendor's adjoining property. In Burgoyne v. Collins it was held that, although a Burgess at a municipal election can only nominate as many candidates as there are vacancies, it is only the excessive nominations which are void, not all. In the case of In re Chapman it was held that the necessity for a certificate for counsel applies in taxations as between solicitor and client—an important decision, as it is not uncommon to neglect to ask for the certificate when the other side has not to pay. Harris v. Truman & Co. is a puzzling case as to the property in some malt, in which the decision of the Court below for the defendant was upheld. In Ormerod v. The Todmorden Joint Stock Mill Company the Court of Appeal overruled the discretion of a judge at the trial, who had refused an action. In The Highway Board of Stockport v. Grant it was held by Mr. Justice Lopes that a wall giving an easement of support to a Highway, in the absence of stipulation, is to be repaired by the owners of the highway. In Bell v. Lawes an allegation in a statement of defence that the defendant did not falsely or maliciously write the libel was held bad. In Richards, Tweedy & Co. v. Hough it was held that an objection to a witness affirming instead of taking an oath on commission ought to be taken at the time of his appearing before the commissioner. In Brown v. North the Court of Appeal allowed a married woman with separate property to sue without her husband and without security for costs. In Pugh v. Heath the House of Lords held that an action for foreclosure prevents the Statute of Limitation running against the mortgagee, Lord Cairns delivering a short but masterly judgment.

In the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division the Vesta decides that pilotage is compulsory in the Thames on vessels bound for a port between Boulogne and the Baltic. In the Stowaway the goods of a shipper on board a general ship were held not subject without notice to the lien reserved from the charterer to the shipowner. In Brownrigg v. Pike a will appointing an executor, although dealing only with realty, was held entitled to be proved. In Smith v. Smith Sir James Hannen refused to alter his decision given at the hearing not to allow more costs to the solicitor of a guilty wife than were secured.

Of the Magistrates' Cases, in The Hackney District Board v. The Great Eastern Railway Company a railway company passing under a bridge forming part of a street was held to be an adjoining owner so as to be liable to contribute to paving the street. In Reece v. Millar a claim of a right to fish supported by meagre evidence was held not a reasonable claim ousting the jurisdiction of justices. Regina v. Coney is the case before a full Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases, which decides that the combatants in a prize fight are guilty of an assault, although a mere spectator is not necessarily aiding and abetting. In Regina v. Morby it was held that to justify a verdict of manslaughter in a case of neglect to call in medical assistance, it must be proved that death was caused or accelerated by the neglect. In Regina v. Newman it was held that a solicitor who misappropriates money entrusted for investment does not misappropriate property entrusted for safe custody. In Regina v. The Justices of Montgomeryshire it was held that an appellant in a bastardy case may appeal either under the Bastardy Acts or under the Summary Jurisdiction Act.—Law Journal.

It is difficult to follow the mind of a judge who sentences a youth to a fearful punishment of ten years' penal servitude for sending a threatening letter to the Queen. No doubt Her Majesty must be protected from annoyances of this kind—but ten years' penal servitude! a sentence given for homicide and grave crimes against person and property. It is incomprehensible, and we should much like to hear how Mr. Justice Lopes could justify it.—Law Times.

LORD FITZGERALD.

The elevation of Mr. Justice Fitzgerald, of the Queen's Bench Division in Ireland, to the peerage as a life-peer and a Lord of Appeal, divides the Lords of Appeal with tolerable fairness between the three kingdoms. England, Ireland, and Scotland have now each a Lord of Appeal; although Scotland, not without precedent, has the best of the bargain, as Lord Blackburn may be accounted at least half Scotch. The balance in favour of England is, however, made up by the hereditary law lords.—Law Journal.

The Law-lordship long vacant has at last been filled up by the appointment of Mr. Justice Fitzgerald. He has long had a high judicial reputation in Ireland, and English readers have had frequent opportunities of appreciating the commanding firmness with which he addresses an Irish jury. If judicial appointments are to be looked on as acts of graceful homage, it may also be said that his appointment is an act of graceful homage to the merits of the Irish Bench.—Saturday Review.

THE PHOENIX PARK ASSASSINATIONS.

At the opening of the Commission of Oyer and Terminer, on the 2nd inst., the Lord Chief Baron, addressing the County Grand Jury, said:—Gentlemen, whilst on the subject of undetected crime, I cannot refrain from referring to those crimes of almost unparalleled atrocity which were committed in a suburb of this city, and which no less than four weeks ago startled and horrified the whole civilized world. Of the perpetrators of these black deeds, as far as I am aware—for on this subject I have no official information, and know no more than any of you, or any other member of the public—there has not been discovered one single trace. A circumstance of greater moment than this it is, in my mind, difficult to conceive. If you consider how many persons were probably actually present at the commission of the crime, aiding and abetting; how many conveying information to the actual perpetrators—covering or hiding their retreat, endeavouring to divert others from their paths; how many places of concealment must have been prepared; how many would have had opportunities of seeing the assassins before they changed their blood-stained clothes; the enormous rewards which have been offered in vain for information; and if you find that the outcome of all this is simply nothing—the result appears to indicate that our present mode of detecting crime might with advantage to the public be reconsidered. Gentlemen, there are many other considerations the importance of which it is difficult to exaggerate, which these circumstances naturally suggest—the causes which have led to these crimes, and the steps which will be taken to prevent their repetition; but on these things it is not my province to enter, for they are political not judicial considerations. Having, however, enjoyed the privilege of the friendship of both those gentlemen, whose lives were recently most cruelly taken in the discharge of their public duty, I may be allowed the melancholy consolation of adding to the almost unanimous voice of Ireland the tribute of my humble but sincere testimony to their public and private worth, and the irreparable loss which their deaths have entailed upon their Sovereign and their country.

FOREIGN CHECKS ON CRIME

The Geneva correspondent of the Times writes:—“The letter on this subject which appeared recently in the Times contains a few slight errors as touching Switzerland that it may be well to correct. There is no general law in this country concerning permis de séjour, and although, by virtue of a cantonal law, permits are obligatory in Geneva, they are not obligatory in every other part of the Confederation. Even in Geneva a foreigner unprovided with passports or other means of proving his identity is allowed to remain so long as he reports himself once a month at the Hôtel de Ville. If it were otherwise, the Russian refugees and other 'paperless' strangers who make their temporary homes here would have to find asylums elsewhere. On the other hand, the police have the power to expel from the canton foreigners who are suspected of using an alias, who misbehave themselves, or who have neither occupation nor means. When Prince Krapotkin first came to Geneva he called himself by the name under which he had escaped from Russia. When this fact came to the knowledge of the authorities they sent him out of the Canton; but at Montreux, whither he went, nobody troubled him. He was afterwards, on assuming his right name and producing a witness to his identity, allowed to return to Geneva. His second and subsequent expulsion was expulsion from the Confederation by order of the Federal Council—at the instance, as was believed and stated at the time, of the Russian Government. In respect of expulsion the powers of the Swiss Government seem to be almost unlimited, and applicable as well to natives as to foreigners. Bishop Mermillod, though a born Swiss, was expelled, without trial or notice, on the ground that his conduct tended to disturb the peace of the Commonwealth. Though Switzerland is so thorough a Democracy, and the powers of the police are so much more restricted here than they are in France, Germany, Italy, and other countries, and albeit the Press is quite as free as in England, measures for the detection of crime are adopted which in England are never practised, and would probably not be tolerated. A case in point occurred a short time ago. A number of burglaries were committed in a suburb of Geneva, and so adroit were the thieves—evidently a gang—that they invariably escaped with their booty, and for a long time evaded all the attempts of the gendarmes to lay hands on them. In the end an expedient was tried which had the desired effect. One night shortly after sunset, all the roads in the neighbourhood in question were beset with police, detectives, and gardes-champêtres. Every lane was watched, every exit and entrance guarded, every passer-by stopped and questioned and if there were anything suspicious in a man's appearance or in his person he was provisionally detained. One of the men detained had housebreaking tools in his possession. He was led off to gaol. All the others were set at liberty. The prisoner, after being examined and cross-examined a few times by a Juge d'Instruction, and kept a week or two in solitary confinement, made a full confession, gave the names of his confederates, and such other information as enabled the police to capture the entire gang, as well as the receiver of the stolen goods, who occupied so respectable a position that suspicion had never for a moment rested upon him. If a similar expedient were occasionally practised in the disturbed districts of Ireland, might it not conceivably lead to equally satisfactory results? Whatever may be thought of the Continental system of interrogating accused persons, there can be no question as to its efficiency in the detection of crime and the conviction of criminals. During the last few years there have been many trials for murder in Switzerland, but I do not remember one that has broken down for lack of evidence, or a single case in which the prisoner has not been brought before trial to make full avowal of his guilt."

FREAKS OF JURIES.

Sheil, in his inimitable sketches of the Irish bar, tells of the verdict of a Clare jury, in a case of "felo-nious gallantry." They acquitted the prisoner of the capital charge, but found him guilty of "a great undacency." R. Shelton Mackenzie, in his notes to Sheil's text, says—"This is nothing to the verdict of a Welsh jury: 'Not guilty—but we recommend him not to do it again.'" Mackenzie also relates that an English jury, not very bright, having a prisoner before them charged with burglary, and being unwilling to convict him capitally, as no personal violence accompanied the robbery, gave the safe verdict—"Guilty of getting out of the window." He adds that the most original was that of an Irish jury before whom a prisoner pleaded guilty, throwing himself on the mercy of the Court. The verdict was—"Not guilty." The judge, in surprise, exclaimed, "Why, he has confessed his crime!" The foreman responded—"Ah, my lord, you do not know that fellow, but we do. He is the most notorious liar in the whole country, and no twelve men who know his character can believe a word he says." And as the jurors adhered to their verdict, the "liar" escaped. J. W. Edmunds reported to the Albany Law Journal of June 18, 1870, a murder trial, which took place in New York City, and in which he appeared for the accused some thirty years before by appointment of the court. The defendant was a young woman who, leaving poor parents in New Jersey, went to New York City, and obtained a place as waiter in a restaurant. She met and married a young butcher boy, but kept at work until her pregnancy compelled her to desist, when she went to her parental home to be confined. When she returned to her husband's lodgings in New York City, she found them vacant and her own effects packed off. It was a case of heartless desertion. She discovered him at a slaughter house talking to a woman, who wore at the moment, what she recognized as her, the defendant's, best dress, which she had bought with her own earnings before marriage. He refused to talk with her. The next morning he was seen to take a proffered cake from the hands of a young woman, divide it with some companions, and in a few hours was dead, his companions being taken very sick, but surviving. The police, investigating the matter found that the deceased had three wives, or rather three women supposed themselves his wives. All three were arrested, but two were speedily released, as our heroine admitted that she had done the business. The case for the defence was weak, but after a few minutes' absence the jury returned with a verdict of not guilty. The prisoner's counsel asked one of the jurors on what ground she had been acquitted. "It served him right," was the answer.

A PATRIARCHAL SOLICITOR.

Full of years and honours, the oldest solicitor in the United Kingdom has just been struck off the rolls by the hand of a Power greater than the Incorporated Law Society, the judges of the Supreme Court, and the Lord Chancellor all combined. Mr. Henry Ingledew, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, is the name of the legal gentleman who has died, at the age of ninety-six, after having devoted himself to the study, and still more to the practice, of the law for more than sixty-five years. It was in 1817 that this patriarch of the Legal Profession was admitted to practice as a solicitor, or rather attorney-at-law, as the title then was. He began his professional career in the reign of George III., continued it through the reigns of George IV., and William IV., and ended by enjoying forty-five more years of legal activity during her present Majesty's auspicious tenure of the throne. Moreover, it is apparent that Mr. Ingledew was no juvenile when he first entered on the status of attorney, having already spent thirty-one years of his existence in other occupations. Finally, however, about the time that Europe was settling down after the Napoleonic wars which have bequeathed to us a debt of six hundred and thirty million pounds, Mr. Henry Ingledew also settled down in life, and took to the honourable career which he pursued in Newcastle for nearly three-quarters of a century. Mr. Henry Ingledew, solicitor and notary, and perpetual commissioner for acknowledgments of deeds by married women, had also been at the time of his death for forty-three years a member of the Newcastle Town Council, and an alderman of the Northern city. When it is borne in mind how important to all sections of the community is the work which is daily entrusted to solicitors—what industry, judgment, learning, and integrity it involves, and what a powerful and respected guild they form all over the country—it must seem astonishing that the honour which appertained to Mr. Ingledeu, of being a town councillor of his borough, was really about the highest dignity to which he could hope to aspire. The enjoyment of a seat at the Municipal Council table of Newcastle is undoubtedly not an honour to be despised. The labour of a civic provincial parliament is always important in its results, and calls forth qualities which afterwards may shine in a higher assembly. We would in no wise decry the laudable ambition to belong to such a body, for the fact that men of position and ability are willing to give time and trouble to the business of municipalities is a most gratifying feature of English life. Nevertheless we must regret that, as we have said, the civic laurel is about the only one to which a solicitor can by any possibility look forward. Because his work is not blazed forth to the world by means of speeches to juries, because he is content to take the less conspicuous part of "instructing counsel" what to say, he is doomed to a career of useful and lucrative obscurity. Can it be maintained that this is a natural, a just, or a wholesome arrangement in any way? At the end of the long lane which barristers travel there is a glittering heap of rewards and honours waiting; a grateful country showers judgeships on the successful advocate; she invites him temptingly to enter the political arena and stand for Parliament—an invitation which he in general accepts, and dangles the bait of the Great Seal before his longing eyes, morning, noon, and night. His course is, like Lord Bacon's, "through indignities to dignities." The solicitor does the same kind of work, discusses the same humdrum legal problems in the same sort of way, and receives no recognition whatever from the State, and has absolutely nothing except fees to which he can aspire. To neglect a great profession in this way is ridiculous. It is not as if solicitors did petty hole-and-corner work, which was of little private and no public value at all. The affairs of every great family, and the secrets of a thousand institutions, are shut up in the solicitor's deed-boxes, or locked in the still safer custody of his mind. Solicitors are the all-important bridge by which the litigious and unlitigious public can alike pass into the mysterious regions of common law and equity; they are the fly-wheel of the whole legal machine. The distinction between them and barristers has recently been much weakened, and the transition from the one sphere to the other is rendered far easier than it was. In time we may arrive at that complete amalgamation of the two branches of the law which obtains in the State of New York, and is generally found to work well in America. It is a great deal more likely, however, that the old difference of position between the person who prepares the evidence and the person who lays it before judge and jury, will last, at any rate in this country, as long as there is any Legal Profession at all. There is thus all the more reason that antiquated prejudices should be dispensed with, and that, as solicitors are now placed practically on the same level as barristers, some means should be devised for recognising them as a learned body. A solicitor ought to be—even if he is not—just exactly as much as a barrister a learned man. There is a terribly tough examination to be passed before the certificate of a practising solicitor can be obtained. More than this, the threefold examination in question, consisting of preliminary, intermediate, and final, is growing harder year by year. The expense attaching to the enrolment among the solicitor fraternity is very considerable; while in numbers and influence the ancient profession of attorney yields to none in the kingdom as justly claiming a share of the honours, as well as of the leaves and fishes, which the State has to bestow. Sir William Garvey, in his edition of the Judicature Act, remarks that an attorney was not a lawyer, but simply a substitute for another man, in the earliest periods of English history. "To appear by attorney" meant only the appearance in court of somebody other than the actual party summoned; some excessively kind-hearted friend who was willing to bear his burden and to set in his "turn" or stead. Then came the separation of such persons into a distinct profession, known as

"attorneys-at-law," and finally ensued the great change of nomenclature, which has recently abolished the time-honoured title of attorney, and substituted for it "Solicitor of the Supreme Court." Now, solicitors and attorneys were once upon a time very different persons, the latter attending to the Common Law department, while the former were engaged in Chancery. Perhaps, in anticipation of the marriage of Westminster and Lincoln's Inn—of law and equity—which was duly celebrated by the passage of the Judicature Act, the word attorney was considered needless in future. Certain it is that "attorney" and "proctor" have both yielded to the usurpation of the comparatively mushroom title of "solicitor." Peradventure, some day the attorney will belong to as completely extinct a race as the moribund sergeant. All things legal have lately been put into the crucible of change, in many respects to the advantage both of the general public and of the Profession itself. In hacking away much that is useless, and some few things that were useful and ornamental, we might, at the same time, remember that this is a peculiarly fit and proper opportunity to make those alterations in the status and prospects of solicitors to which their actual position entitles them. Unnatural and artificial restrictions should be done away with; State recognition should be granted, and more honourable ambitions should be placed in the way of the aspirants who don the solicitor's robe. Solicitors would no doubt infinitely prefer a little more of the so-called "empty praise," and would even feel inclined to surrender fragments of the solid pudding, in the consumption of which they take about equal shares with the more brilliant branch of the law. It is a foolish and injurious plan for a State to relegate any great class or profession to mere money-making, unrelieved by the distinctions and dignities which act as an all-potent stimulus to honourable activity.—Daily Telegraph.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—XVII.

SETTLEMENT UPON MARRIAGE OF FREEHOLDS IN FEE SIMPLE WITH USUAL CLAUSES.

(Continued from page 252, ante.)

Declaration as to the Receipt and Application of Rents during Minorities.

This follows in due course next after the limitations and trusts which we discussed in our article last week, and may be very greatly abbreviated by reliance upon sect. 42 of the Act. It gives extensive powers of management to "the trustees appointed for this purpose by the settlement, if any, or if there are none so appointed then the persons, if any, who are for the time being, under the settlement, trustees with power of sale." We pointed out in a previous article (Law Times, April 15, page 418), that, where the property belonged to several, as tenants in common, some of whom might be infants and some not, the statutory powers were not altogether satisfactory, as they did not give the trustees power of management over the entirety of the property under such circumstances. If then the settlement contains limitations to daughters as tenants in common, which are really likely to come into practical operation, then some additional clause should be employed, giving the trustees power over the entirety during the minority of any such daughter as tenant in common. For old form see David iii. 1197, and compare the new supplementary form suggested for a settlement where the children take as tenants in common, in the Law Times of April 15, page 419, and form in Conc. David. 880. Although the statutory power exists so long as the settlement itself endures, it would hardly be safe to endeavour to make the supplementary one extend beyond the usual limits, lest it should be held void as against the rules as to perpetuity: (see 1 Jarman on Wills, 4th edit. 274; Wolst. & T. 70.)

sect 42 (7) enables settlers to limit the application of the section, but it does not appear to authorise any such extension as would be given by a supplementary power extending during the entire settlement. If, however the settlement contains no limitations to tenants in common, or if there is only a remote chance of their estates falling into possession, i.e., of such tenants in common ever obtaining the property, then it will suffice, in ordinary settlements, to declare that the trustees shall have the powers of management given by sect. 42. It will be better to make a direct statement than to leave the Act to vest the powers in them because they are trustees with power of sale and exchange.

The statutory power does not authorise the trustees to open new mines, so that sometimes the power must be supplied. The power to cut timber will usually be sufficient; see Law Times, April 12, page 418.

The statutory provision for disposal of accumulations during infancy, made by sect. 43 (5), will usually require a supplement, as indeed is evidently contemplated by sect. 42 (5, iii.). The statutory accumulation is strictly confined within the limits assigned by the rules as to perpetuities, and of course the supplementary form must be similarly restricted.

For old forms of power of management and trust for accumulation, see David. iii. 999, 2197; for new short form, see Pridaux, ii. 309, and compare forms in Law Times, April 15, page 419, and Conc. David. 880, 449, 459.

Power for Husband to Jointure future Wife.

This can be considerably shortened by the omission of all reference to the powers for securing the rent-charge. For old forms see David. iii. 1001, and compare Conc. David. 450, and Pridaux, ii. 308. Sect. 44 (5) speaks of "the instrument under which the annual sum arises; but that section clearly applies to the case before us, although the annual sum arises from two instruments, viz., the settlement and the deed or will by which the power is executed. We have shown the sufficiency of the statutory powers. See Law Times, April 29, page 458. In the case before us it will not be worth while to insert the proviso against limitation of a term of more than 299 years, &c.

Powers with Relation to Charging Portions on Future Marriage.

These will be inserted as usual. For form see David. iii. 1002; Pridaux, ii. 308.

Powers of Leasing.

This should always be inserted. See Law Times, April 15, page 419. The statutory powers are insufficient. For forms of lease for twenty-one years see Conc. David. 892; Wolst. & T. 143; Pridaux, ii. 311. It is usual to "appoint by way of lease;" (David. iii. 481.)

Powers of Sale and Exchange.

These cannot be omitted, but may be greatly abbreviated by reliance on Lord Cranworth's Act (23 & 24 Vict., c. 145), and sect. 35 of the present Act. It will usually, in small settlements, only be necessary to declare that the trustees shall have a power of sale, and that it shall be exercisable during the lifetime of the tenant for life with his consent and afterwards at their discretion. Sometimes a special power to sell minerals and easements apart from the surface, powers with respect to copyholds, and other special powers, must be inserted. See Law Times, April 15, pages 419, 420, and form in Pridaux, ii. 320.

It should be noticed that sect. 5 of Lord Cranworth's Act gives power to employ the sale moneys in paying off incumbrances, so that the powers of charging portions, &c., do not seem to necessitate any special provision with respect to this. And sect. 35 of the Conveyancing Act permits sale subject to charges. It would seem, however, most prudent that there should be a clause providing that the power of sale and exchange should overreach all estates and charges to be created under the powers or terms of years, except leases actually granted and sales or mortgages actually made (Conc. David. 885, n.) For forms see David. iii. 1018, i. 392. The Settled Land Bill, as it stands previous to its second reading in the House of Commons, makes express provisions as to such priorities. It is believed, however, that such a clause is usually of little consequence. See David. iii. 565, 579; Sag. Pow. 492.

Interim Investment.

Until the purchase money is invested in other lands in accordance with section 6 of Lord Cranworth's Act, or is otherwise disposed of, it will be invested "at interest" under that Act (sect. 7). If it is desired to give a wider range of securities than that given by law, a special or additional power must be inserted.

Trustee Clauses.

The clauses relating to the appointment of trustees may be much abbreviated. They have already been discussed in the Law Times of March 11, page 329, and March 18, page 346. The settlement should supplement sect. 31 of the Act by vesting the power of appointing new trustees in the tenant for life during his lifetime, and, if so desired, in his wife during her life. It should also indemnify the trustee for lending money on leaseholds without investigating lessor's title, and for lending on a less than marketable security. For old forms, see David. iii. 721, 1026; for new forms, see Conc. David. 829; Pridaux, 821; and Law Times, March 11, page 329; April 22, page 434.

Covenants for Title.

We advise the insertion of the ordinary covenant for further assurance, and not the words "as settlor" or "as beneficial owner." Of the two implied covenants, we think that implied by the expression "as settlor" least objectionable. See Law Times, March 25, page 365; April 1, page 382; April 22, page 434.

Summary.

The grant and habendum will remain unaltered, or only receive verbal alteration. The "general words" and "estate clause" will be omitted. The powers of distress and entry, which were usually annexed to the wife's rentcharge will be omitted, but it may be convenient slightly to restrict the powers given by sect. 44 (4). The limitations in tail may be slightly shortened. The trusts of term to secure jointure rentcharge will, like the term itself, be omitted, but the term for securing portions, and the trusts of such term, will be inserted: (Law Times, April 29, pages 458, 454.) It is unnecessary for us to summarise the results of the present article.

(To be continued.)

LORD DERBY AND THE MAGISTRACY.

After having laid the foundation-stone of a new county sessions-house in Liverpool, on June 1st, the Earl of Derby said:—He was not sure that, in any circumstances, a court-house, a place of justice, was exactly one of those places which impressed the mind with a strong feeling of sympathy. He was not now talking of the unluckily rather numerous class whose visits were of an involuntary character, and in whose minds it could only be connected with disagreeable reminiscences of well-deserved penalties; but he did not think it excited a feeling of very lively gratitude in the minds of jurymen when they recalled their long and weary hours of compulsory and ill-paid attendance. Possibly it did not raise entirely agreeable recollections in the minds of witnesses who looked back upon cross-examinations which they had undergone, in the course of which they had been made to say exactly what they did not mean, and being abused for saying it afterwards. Even their friends of the learned profession, he was told, did not reap that golden harvest which Quarter Sessions were accustomed to give. Their happy hunting grounds had been materially curtailed, partly by the simplification of the law, and partly by the increase of summary jurisdiction. They (the magistrates), at any rate, might look back to the many hours of attendance that they had passed, and forward to the many hours they should pass in one or other of these temples of justice, with the satisfaction which arose from the conscientiousness of unpaid and voluntary service given to the public, and the conviction that, whether that service was worth little or much, it was, at any rate, the best they had to give. Public opinion was a difficult thing to gauge, and, of course, he might be mistaken; but he was inclined to think that there was a change since those days when everybody who wanted to be smart was in the habit of talking about "Justices' justice," and about magistrates committing themselves oftener than they committed anybody else, and unpaid service being worth just what it cost, and other amenities of a similar kind. He did not believe, as far as he could judge, that there was now any desire in the public mind—whether it was that the public had grown wiser, or that the magistrates had grown wiser, or a little of both—but he did not believe there was any desire for the abolition of the unpaid magistrates of this country and the substitution of what would be a very costly army of stipendiaries. But, while he held that opinion, he thought, at the same time, there were some modifications in the way of administering local justice which might be possible and desirable. He had often said the same in public before, and, therefore, he was not now starting an opinion which would be new to that or any other audience. Though he was himself a lay chairman of Quarter Sessions, he had long entertained considerable doubt whether matters would not be on a better footing if in future that office was filled by a professional lawyer; and, speaking for Lancashire, if one such appointment could be made to serve for the entire county, he was perfectly prepared, so far as he was concerned, to give effect to that view whenever it was the general wish. It would require a private Act of Parliament, but that was not a very difficult thing to obtain. If there was to be any general legislation on the subject he would have it upon these lines. He would leave the magistracy in general as it was, but he would make the chairman of sessions a professional man; and if that course were adopted he thought it would be possible to combine with it another improvement, and to extend the jurisdiction of Quarter Sessions so as to materially relieve the judges of Assize from a portion of the very laborious duties which they now perform. As to the other part of their work, the administrative business which was done there, he supposed they must make up their minds before long to hand over, if not the whole, at least the greater part, to somebody chosen upon the representative and elective principle. He was quite prepared to accept that change. It was founded upon a sound principle; but while he did so he must say that he did not think that the magistrates by whom the local affairs of the country had heretofore been administered had any reason to fear competition with their successors, whoever they might be, in regard to the purity, the economy, or to the efficiency of the county administration as it had been managed by them. He only hoped that those who succeeded them might do us well in these respects.

MEDLEYAL BOYCOTTING.

A correspondent, writing in the Times, says:—"Our forefathers had to deal with "Boycotting" of an extraordinary kind, but the law seems to have been sufficient for the evil. In the seventh year of Henry III. the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Lincoln enjoined the faithful not to sell victuals to the Jews, nor have any communication with them, whereupon the King ordered the sheriffs and Mayors to issue counter injunctions, and to imprison any one who refused to supply the necessaries of life. Thirteen years later the Bishop of London followed the course adopted by his episcopal brethren, and the King thereupon issued a writ to the Mayor and Sheriffs of London to stop the evil. In the reign of Edward I. the Archbishop of Canterbury threatened to excommunicate every one in the province of Canterbury who should have any intercourse with the Archbishop of York, or supply him or his servants with the necessaries of life. He was subsequently obliged by the King and Parliament to revoke his threats."

THE LIABILITY OF AGENTS IN ACTIONS BASED ON FRAUD.

We referred, at the time when it was decided, to the decision of the Court of Appeal in the case of Heatley v. Newton (now reported, 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 455; L. Rep. 19 Ch. Div. 826) as to the point of practice which arose in it with regard to the time of appealing from orders made in chambers in the Chancery Division. The principal questions raised on the appeal are also of great importance, especially to auctioneers. The action was one brought to set aside a contract for sale of land, alleged to have been entered into under the following circumstances:—One of the plaintiffs, as agent for the other, attended a sale by auction of the land in question, which was conducted under conditions announcing that "Subject to the right which the vendors reserve of bidding once or oftener by themselves or their agent, the highest bidder shall be the purchaser." According to the statement of claim, there appeared to be an animated competition between bidders in different parts of the room, which brought the biddings up to £12,950, at which point the plaintiff bid the sum of £18,000. He paid the deposit of 10 per cent. into the hands of the auctioneers, in accordance with the conditions of sale; but subsequently, before completing the purchase, he ascertained that a large proportion, if not the whole, of the biddings previous to his own were fictitious, having been made by the vendors and their agents bidding against each other. He consequently brought an action for the rescission of his contract, and to this action he made the auctioneers co-defendants with the vendors. The Master of the Rolls made an order in chambers, at the instance of the auctioneers, dismissing them from the action on payment into court of the deposit which they had received, and on their undertaking to pay interest up to the date of such payment, with the costs of the action, if not paid by their co-defendants, in case the plaintiffs should ultimately succeed in their action. This order the Court of Appeal held to be unsustainable, on the simple ground, as stated by Lord Justice Lindley, that the auctioneers had not given the plaintiffs all they asked for, and were therefore not entitled to a stay of proceedings against themselves. The liability of the auctioneers depended on their participation in what is sometimes called a legal fraud; for although the question whether such biddings by agents of the vendors are fraudulent, so as to avoid the sale, could not be finally decided on this application, Lord Justice Lush, in particular, intimated a clear view that it would be so held.

The general question of the liability of an agent personally concerned in a fraud or misrepresentation to be joined as co-defendant with his principal, in an action based on the fraud, was discussed in the Court of Appeal in the case of Mathias v. Yeats (noted 72 Law Times, 548). There a misrepresentation had been made by a vendor which the Court of Appeal considered sufficient to invalidate the contract, and the purchaser accordingly obtained judgment for a rescission. The purchaser had made co-defendant in the action the vendor's solicitor, against whom the Court of Appeal, agreeing on this point with the judgment of the court below, considered that no case had been made—indeed, the solicitor was able to prove that his client had refused to accept the modifications of the advertisement containing the untrue statements which he had suggested, and had adhered to the original form in spite of his advice. The Master of the Rolls observed that the old rule that an agent, an auctioneer, or an attorney may be made a co-defendant for costs (the three A.'s rule, as it was formerly called) is always a dangerous one to set upon, as a much stronger case must generally be made out against the agent, and you have to bring home to him personal cognizance of the fraud. As he is only liable for costs jointly with the principal defendants, it is rarely useful to join him as a co-defendant, unless the principal be insolvent or a man of straw. Of course, these considerations do not fully apply where, as in Heatley v. Newton, the agent joined as co-defendant is a stake-holder, and is sued for the recovery of a deposit in his hands. In that case the Court of Appeal considered that the liability of the auctioneers as the persons conducting the sale in the improper manner alleged by the pleadings was sufficiently material to the plaintiffs' case to give the latter a right to retain them until the trial, and that they could not be dismissed unless or until they had given to the plaintiffs all the relief which could be obtained against them at the hearing.—Law Times.

ADDRESSES TO LORD FITZGERALD.

Yesterday, at the sitting of the Queen's Bench Division, valedictory addresses were presented on the part of the Bar, and of the Incorporated Law Society, representing the Solicitors of Ireland, to Lord Fitzgerald, on the occasion of his sitting for the last time as a member of the Irish Bench.

Amongst the Queen's Counsel present were:—

Mr. E. J. Lane, Q.C., Father of the Bar; Sergeant Sherlock, Q.C.; Mr. Purcell, Q.C.; Mr. E. H. Pennefather, Q.C.; Mr. Robert Ferguson, Q.C.; Mr. Egan, Q.C.; Mr. John Nash, Q.C., Law Adviser; Mr. Fiers White, Q.C.; Mr. De Meleyens, Q.C.; Mr. Campbell, Q.C.; Mr. Boytagh, Q.C.; Mr. James Murphy, Q.C.; Mr. W. D. Andrews, Q.C.; Mr. Isaac Walr, Q.C.; Dr. Webb, Q.C.; Mr. Wm. M'Laughlin, Q.C.; Dr. Boyd, Q.C.

The Law Society was represented by its President, Mr. Henry J. Pelham West; the Vice-Presidents, Messrs. Edward T. Stapleton and E. M. Kelly; its Secretary, Mr. John H. Goddard; and the following members of the Council:—

Messrs. Thomas Dix, Richard S. Reeves, Charles G. Stanuall, Michael Larkin, Arthur Lee Barlow, John T. Hamerton, William Read, ex-President; Henry J. P. West, John Mathews, Henry A. Dillon, ex-President; William D'Alton, Patrick Maxwell, W. Milward Jones, Henry Leland Kelly, Edward M. Stapleton, Archibald Tisdall, John Galloway, Shapland M. Tandy, Francis R. M. Crozier, Keith H. Hallows, Richard H. M. Orpen, Thomas C. Franks, Sydenham Davis, Henry S. Meereby, Henry C. Neilson, Thomas E. Baillie-Gage, Robert O. Longfield, John B. Eaton, and William B. Stanley.

The Lord Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Fitzgerald, and Mr. Justice Barry having taken their seats on the bench,

Mr. LANE, Q.C., said—My Lords, understanding that this is the last occasion on which you, Mr. Justice Fitzgerald, will sit in this court as judge I have the pleasure as Father of the Irish Bar—and the pleasure is enhanced by my being the Father of the Circuit of which you are a member—to present to you the following address, unanimously agreed to at a very large meeting of the Bar of Ireland.

“MY LORD—The Bar of Ireland cannot permit your connexion with them to close without endeavouring to express their feelings of respect and admiration after so many years of intercourse. They have recognised and appreciated your high judicial and personal qualities—the learning, impartiality, dignity, courtesy, and firmness which have always distinguished you on the Bench, and which they believe eminently fit you for the high position to which you have been now called. Whilst congratulating you most heartily on this merited advancement they cannot but feel the loss which the legal profession, and this country will sustain by your promotion. They can only express their sincerest wishes for your future welfare and happiness in your new and distinguished position; and they hope that your elevation to a higher and wider sphere of public usefulness will sever as little as may be your connexion with the Irish Bar, and the happy and friendly relations which you have so long maintained with its members. Signed on behalf of the Bar of Ireland,

“RICHARD JAMES LANE, Father.”

Lord FITZGERALD replied:—Father and Brethren, I am truly honoured in being presented with this address from the Bar of Ireland. The honour is as great and exceptional as the occasion is unusual. By the favour of her Most Gracious Majesty I am about to be removed to a higher judicial position, but not one of more dignity than the seat which I now occupy. No judicial position could be more honourable than to sit on the same bench on which Bushe, Lefroy, Whiteside, Burton, and Louis Perrin formerly presided. It will not be necessary that I should absolutely retire from amongst you, and, on the contrary, I hope to be often in the midst of you, and to continue to show as much interest as ever in your welfare and prosperity. It would make me happy, indeed—too happy—if I could bring myself to believe that I deserved in any proximate degree the terms in which you have described my judicial career; but it would, indeed, be unpardonable presumption in me to take such merit to myself, and I feel that your expressions of approval are due to your kindness and your friendship, rather than to any just claim of mine. I do claim for myself one high judicial attribute—the quality of strict impartiality. I believe that during my long career I have never failed in that quality; and I am gratified, indeed, to find that you, who have known me so long and so well, have spontaneously anticipated and admitted the justice of that claim. If I have been able to assist with some degree of efficiency in the administration of justice, that is largely due to the assistance I received from you. I have ever found you to be a body of advocates of great learning, efficiency, and independence, seeking no favour—not whispering in the ear of justice, but boldly insisting that right and justice should be done. With such aid if the judge fails the fault is his alone. You have given me credit for courtesy. I have endeavoured to show it to all alike who came before me in the administration of justice, and if I have failed I take this occasion to express my regret. You kindly wish for my success and welfare in the new position which I am about to occupy. I feel, however, quite overawed and overwhelmed by the new duties which I have too rashly undertaken, but should I require any incentive to exertion it will be found in the recollection of the terms of your address, and in my own anxious desire that no failure of mine should cast discredit on the Irish Bar or the Irish Bench. Father and Brethren—I have been too highly honoured by my Sovereign, but I say with the utmost sincerity that the honour conferred on me has been greatly enhanced by the bright reward of your approval. There is another view, however, of the present occasion which presses itself on me with pain, and sorrow, and that is the disruption of old ties and life-long friendships, and the separation from my much loved and honoured colleagues which necessarily ensues. I sit for the last time in this chair, and if my lord and brother were not now present it would be to me a duty of affection to dilate on their high qualities and distinguished merits. I am coerced by the circumstance of their presence to be silent. I may, however, gratefully acknowledge their long continued and unselfish kindness, and I must add that if I have been enabled to keep on the straight path of law, to help in administering that tempered justice which is due to humanity, and to exercise sound, judicial discretion, it has mainly been by their instruction, their help, and their guidance. To my lord, my brother, and to you, gentlemen, I confess a debt of gratitude so weighty that no hope can exist on my part of being able to repay it.

Mr. WEST, President of the Incorporated Law Society, then rose, as also did the other solicitors. He said—As President of the Incorporated Law Society, I have to state that the Council of that Society unanimously resolved upon the occasion of your lordship's retirement from the Irish Bench, consequent upon your recent elevation to a high position in England, that they would present to you the address I shall take the liberty of reading. I feel that no words of mine could add anything, or give any additional value to that address; but I cannot refrain from expressing on my own behalf the very great pleasure it gives me to be the medium of this communicating to your lordship, the sentiments of the Council in which I heartily concur, and which I am sure reflect not only the feelings of the Council, but those of the entire profession. The address is as follows:—

"My Lord—The Council of the Incorporated Society of the Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland, desire on the occasion of your retirement from the Irish Bench, to express on behalf of their branch of the legal profession, their appreciation of the ability, learning, and fearless independence which have gained for you the admiration and approval of all her Majesty's loyal and law-abiding subjects. While we heartily congratulate your lordship upon the honour conferred on you in being selected from the Judicial Bench of the United Kingdom to be a member of the highest court of the realm, we cannot but feel that your retirement from the Irish Bench deprives it of one of its brightest ornaments. In conclusion, we desire to acknowledge the invariable courtesy which our profession ever experienced at your lordship's hands, and offering our best wishes for your lordship's happiness in your future exalted career,—We respectfully bid your lordship farewell."

Lord FITZGERALD replied—President and Council of the Incorporated Law Society of Ireland—I could with difficulty find words adequate to express how grateful I am for your address, and how acceptable it is to me. I know, and have long known you, one and all, and you constitute a body of enlightened gentlemen whose good opinion, collectively and individually, I estimate in the highest degree. In the answer which I have given to the address from the Bar, I have anticipated the topics which I would otherwise have introduced in reply to yours, and I pray of you to take that answer as equally applicable to your address. You give me credit for courtesy to the solicitors of Ireland. I should have been forgetful indeed of the inestimable services you have rendered to the administration of the law, if I failed in showing you that courtesy which should ever prevail amongst educated gentlemen. You are sometimes styled the second branch of the profession of the law: let me add that you are not the less important of the two branches. The administration of the law largely depends on you who are brought into direct intercourse with the people; and I have no doubt that you will continue to use your best exertions to make the law respected as "the staff of honesty and the shield of innocence." And now, my friends, in taking leave of you all at a period of deep gloom, let me hope that I may still be permitted with you to aid our native land in her present straits and difficulties. In conclusion, let me express my fervent prayer that it may please the Almighty to relieve us from the oppression of crime and its attendant calamities, to restore to this land peace and the love of law and right, and with these blessings that prosperity which can only rest on security, and on honesty and justice.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE—The Bar of Ireland and the solicitors of Ireland have suitably expressed their feelings upon the present occasion, and, I think, it would be very much to be lamented if the Bench of Ireland did not add their tribute of admiration. Judge Fitzgerald is the senior member of the Bench of Ireland. He is older than most of them, and during the course of a long judicial career they have had opportunity of appreciating those eminent judicial qualities by which he has always been distinguished. You have expressed in eloquent language your appreciation of those qualities, and, therefore, it is hardly necessary for me, on behalf of the Bench of Ireland, to add anything. It has always appeared to us that no man ever sat upon a bench of justice more distinguished by a lofty intelligence, or more distinguished by that impartiality of which he is himself conscious. He has never been deterred in the administration of his duty by any considerations external to himself. He is possessed of a lofty and serene intelligence, placed upon a height which is unassailable by any lower influence which could possibly be attempted. Judge Fitzgerald anticipates that in the career which is now open before him, he will experience difficulties. I have no doubt that, being introduced into a higher sphere of action, he will encounter some difficulties, owing to this, that he will be obliged to deal with laws with which he is not so familiarly acquainted as those of our own country. But I have no doubt whatever, and nobody can have any doubt, that those mental faculties which have been exhibited here in Ireland will enable him to master any difficulties which any change of procedure may present before him, and that in whatever sphere he may act, in whatever tribunal he may occupy a seat, he will render eminent assistance. I am speaking the sentiments of the Bench in general. But what shall I say if I attempt, in a few words, to express the loss which this Court will sustain, and the feeling—the deep-feeling regret which the Judges of this Court must feel, that they are now to be deprived of that assistance on which they have always leaned. For my own part, since I have occupied a seat on this bench, my Brother Fitzgerald has always been beside me, and I have always leaned upon his learning and experience; and I must say that it is with deep pain and sorrow, to which I cannot venture to give expression, that I have to consider that for the future I shall be deprived of that assistance. There is one thing that gives us some consolation—we are not parting with Judge Fitzgerald as it were for ever. He is removed indeed to another sphere; but we have the satisfaction of thinking that that is merely an advancement by way of honour, that he carries with him faculties unimpaired by time, that his long experience, and the progress of years have simply developed his intelligence, and added to the stores of learning of which he is possessed. We cannot entertain any doubt that when he comes to apply himself to whatever subjects may be brought before him, those same high mental faculties will enable him to deal with them in a satisfactory manner; and I hope, as has been thrown out, that the judge will not part with this country, though he must, as it were, part from this court, and that he will have the satisfaction of maintaining the cordial relations which have always existed between us.

Lord Fitzgerald then bowed to the bar, the solicitors, and finally to his brother judges, and retired from the bench amid hearty plaudits.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Fry on Specific Performance (2nd Edition), 288, 289.

Where a person has been induced to enter into a contract by misrepresentations, it is no answer to his claim for rescission to say that if he had used due diligence he would have discovered the untruth, and the inference should not be drawn that the plaintiff did not rely upon the misrepresentation. Defendant must prove either that the plaintiff knew the representations were untrue, or that he stated he did not rely on them (Redgrave v. Hurd, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 118)—C. A.

Wilson on the Judicature Acts (2nd Edition), 290.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 252.

A fund with a gift over on its being charged can still be made subject to an attachment order (South Western Loan and Discount Company v. Robertson, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 79).

41 Vict., c. 16, s. 13.

A house divided into different sets of rooms, but having one outer door, is not divided into different tenements so as to make a set used for business purposes exempt from inhabited house duty (Yorkshire Fire and Life Insurance Company v. Clayton, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 82)—C. A.

Wilson on the Judicature Acts (2nd Edition), 313.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 352.

Held that there was no appeal against an order imposing the defendant's costs in the action on a third party (Hornby v. Cartmell, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 89)—C. A.

Orderly on Solicitors, 166.

A town agent is not entitled to set off a general account with a country solicitor against a claim for money recovered in an action made by the client of the country solicitor (In re Johnson, ex parte Edwards, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 109)—C. A.

Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42), s. 4.

A written notice must be given by employed to employer before action under the Employers' Liability Act (Moyle v. Jenkins, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 112).

Income Tax Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), Schedule A, No. III., Rule 3.

The board held by the Court of Appeal, reversing the decision below, liable to pay income tax on profits; although, under their Act, the profits would only go to reduce past debts (Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Lucas, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 114)—C. A.

Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 308.

Compensation given for being obliged to give support to sewers passing through his land, in which there were mines; but not for injury through percolation (Corporation of Dudley and the Trustees of the Earl of Dudley, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 181)—C. A.

Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 39.

Damages arising under a contract may be set off against a claim of debt arising on the same contract made by the trustee of a liquidating debtor (Peat v. Jones & Co., 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 128)—C. A.

CALL TO THE OUTER BAR.

James O'Shanahan, Esq., second son of Edmund O'Shanahan, Esq., of Listowel, in the county Kerry, has been called to the Bar.

REVIEWS.

The Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, with the Statutes incorporated therewith, and the Rules and Forms issued thereunder; being a Practical Exposition of the Act. With Explanatory Notes, an Abstract of Decided Cases, and Copious Index. By T. M. HEALY, M.P. Dublin: M. H. Gill & Son, 50 Upper Sackville-street. 1882.

"THE Act of 1881 is already antiquated in not a few of its provisions. Its clauses, dealing with arrears of rent, have not done the work expected from them. Its purchase clauses have been equally inoperative. The Bill now before the House of Commons takes up the arrears question and deals with it in a new way. When this amendment of the Act has been completed, the purchase clauses will remain to be dealt with. If these are amended and developed after the fashion of the arrears clauses, if provision is made for the general transfer of the land in Ireland from its owners to their tenants, there will not be much left of the Act of 1881. It will have been wholly changed in some parts, and the changes so introduced into it will have gone far to supersede the remaining clauses. The fixing of a fair rent will be of no consequence if the result on the whole case is that no rent whatever is to be paid. The identity of an Act so altered becomes a mere question of metaphysics." So writes the Times on the 27th ult.; and it is while our land law stands as unsettled that Mr. Healy has ventured to publish a volume on the subject, of 443 pages, in which he must necessarily run the risk of saying either too much or too little—amphora caput instiluit; currente rota curvata erit. But, this is not his first published reading on the new law; for we remember noticing that an attempt to do a previous smaller performance of his was made before the Land Sub-commission in M'Gowan v. Clements, but was summarily crushed on the ground that its author was only a law student. We trust that Mr. Healy's legal penmanship will not prove, at all events, so obstructive to his advancement to the legal profession, as was Lord Chancellor Clarendon's "Notes of Cases," published while he too was a law student, which nearly caused his rejection by the Benchers. In fact, for aught we know, the honourable member for Wexford may be already a full-fledged barrister; but, it is only too significant that his name as such appears neither in the Law List nor on the title-page of his book. Yet, if not a legist, he is a legislator, and one too who has had much to do with the shaping of the Act of 1881. His experience in this way ought to have had the effect of enabling him to detect the really salient provisions of the measure; but, it is not to be supposed that the more weight should be attached to his opinions, whether on their intention or bearings. Not but that "Hansard" itself has now almost pushed its way into the position of a legal authority (see 18 Ir. L. T. 288), while in America it would seem to be thought that the discussions in Congressional Debates may be resorted to in construing statutes, though the courts are not at liberty to rely on the views of individual members of Congress (see 9 Wash. L. Rep. 242, 321). So that Mr. Healy's particular ideas even about the famous 9th subsection of section 8 (Act, 1881) would carry no special weight. On the merits, however, what he has to say is well worth perusal; and we commend to notice his observations on the cause celebre of Adams v. Dunseath, (16 Ir. L. T. Rep. 59), thus concluding:—"The decision of the Court on the fifth point adverted to in their judgments (that is, the point as to whether the landlord should not be allowed some rent in respect of improvements made during the currency of the lease) seems to conflict directly with the conclusion come to on the second (that is, as to rent in respect of all improvements made previous to the expiration of the lease). The legal question involved would seem to be still undecided, and it is not clear that if an exactly similar case came before the Court again, a contrary conclusion might not be arrived at. Three members of the Court dissented from the decision come to; and three of the majority of four judges, whose judgments prevailed, based their decision on a construction of the phrase 'predecessors in title,' which the majority of the Court had previously, in deciding point number two, declared to be incorrect; while the fourth judge, whose voice turned the scale on this question, based his decision on a view of the law which three other members of the Court had previously dissented from. The result of this curious complication is rather doubtful, and a further decision of the Court would appear to be necessary to set the matter at rest." In referring to the decisions, by the way, it may be mentioned that Mr. Healy has taken advantage of the full reports in the IRISH LAW TIMES, and also of the other un-official reports which were published up to last March; but, instead of referring to the un-revised report of Rutledge v. Rutledge in the latter, it would have been of some importance to cite the authentic report in 15 Ir. L. T. Rep. 107 (see 15 Ir. L. T. 638). He makes no attempt to make his book a treatise on the Act of 1870—a very serious shortcoming, as we have had once before to observe (15 Ir. L. T. 484)—though he does generally point out its bearings on, and connexion with the Act of 1881. So far as we have been able to examine the book, it appears to be well executed on the whole; and we would especially point to his observations, in the Introduction, on the subject of "'Durability,' not 'Perpetuity' of Tenure," and to his reading on section 58 of the Act of 1881 (though as regards Town Parks it might have been well to refer to 15 Ir. L. T. 621, 638, 641, and as regards Chancery Lettings it would have been better to have referred to the cases discussed in 8 ib. 297). Mr. Healy makes a good deal of use of the decisions of the Sub-commissions, but a still more extended use of them might have been made; and it is in a book of this kind, rather than in full reports, that most of those decisions might be most suitably abstracted. On the whole, as we have said,

He appears to have well performed his task, and his book is certainly calculated to prove serviceable to practitioners, and deserves by its success to enable its author to paraphrase Pope's exclamation (a precedent in point for Judge O'Hagan's well-known utterance), after the completion of his imperishable translation,

"Thanks to Homer, since I live and thrive, Indebted to no prince or peer alive."

OBITUARY.

MR. CHARLES FITZGERALD.

MR. CHARLES FITZGERALD, whose death on the 3rd inst. it deeply pains us to have to record, was the surviving member of a well-known firm of solicitors, who had for a long period enjoyed a very extensive practice, especially in the criminal and civil bill courts. His grandfather, Armstrong Fitzgerald, was the solicitor by whom the brothers Sheares were defended in 1798; and his father (who died in May, 1872), though a very pronounced Conservative in politics, whose party services were on one occasion acknowledged by the gift of a silver snuff-box from the Eldon Orange Lodge, was entrusted with the defence of the Ribbonmen, and was publicly thanked by Daniel O'Connell, at the termination of his year of office as Lord Mayor of Dublin, for the advice and assistance which he had rendered him. Mr. Fitzgerald, who was born about 60 years ago, was admitted a solicitor in Trinity Term 1861. He had been in delicate health for some time past, but his death was unexpected and deeply indeed is it deplored. Of his many amiable and sterling qualities, of his genial, courteous, and kindly disposition all who have had the advantage and real pleasure of knowing him, whether in his private or business relations, cherish a vivid recollection. To no man had he ever given offence. In politics he was no partisan. In the practice of his profession he was all that worth, honour, integrity, and perfect fairness could combine to win for him the respect and esteem of his clients and his brethren. To his lot it fell to conduct the defence of many of the accused during the Fenian trials, and in most cases success was the reward of his personal attentions. His support was always rendered for any measure for the improvement of the township of Clontarf, where he had fixed his residence, and he was one of the first members of its Yacht and Boat Club. And in him his branch of the profession has lost a brother who had ever its best interests at heart; the poor have lost a true benefactor; and the many friends to whom he was endeared have lost one who never had an enemy.

MR. JOSEPH O'MEAGHER.

MR. JOSEPH O'MEAGHER, Solicitor, whose decease was announced in our issue of 27th ult., was born at the beginning of the present century. He belonged to an old Irish family, being a lineal descendant of John O'Meagher, of Clonyne Castle, near Roscrea, who, in 1658, was dispossessed by the Cromwellian Government of his ancestral lands—Ballybeg, Camlin, Clonyne, Grange, Gortvohine, &c., in the Co. Tipperary—and transplanted to Connaught, where he died in the year 1712, in reduced circumstances. In early life Mr. O'Meagher settled in Carlow, and took an active part in all the contested elections for the county, especially in the one in 1862, when he was mainly instrumental in securing the return of Mr. John Ball, son of Judge Ball, who resigned the appointment of Poor Law Commissioner—a position worth £1,200 a year—to become a candidate. Lord Beaconsfield nominated Mr. O'Meagher for the Commission of the Peace for the Co. Carlow, but he declined the honour, as Lord Chancellor Brady made it a condition that he should get his name removed from the roll of Solicitors, which he refused to do, preferring to "live and die an attorney." He retired in 1856 in favour of his son, Mr. Joseph Casimir O'Meagher.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Letters and communications intended for publication, and addressed to THE EDITOR, 52, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin, must be authenticated by the name of the writer, not necessarily for publication, but as a warranty of good faith.

We throw open the columns of this Journal most willingly for the discussion of subjects of interest to the Profession; but it must be understood that we do not necessarily agree with all the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

Re BURKE'S ESTATE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—A popular cry demands that the transfer of land should be simplified, and the time necessary for, and the cost of, transfer materially lessened. Recent legislation seems to be in compliance with this demand, but when one considers the effect of the decision in Re Burke's Estate it would seem that the Courts are running counter to the policy of the Legislature.

As I understand the effect of that decision, no purchaser (save from the Landed Estates Court), no matter what expense he may incur in investigating the title, can be sure that it is a good one, while the vendor who has lost his title deeds is wholly precluded from selling, unless at an immense sacrifice, to cover risk.

Not long ago a great fraud was perpetrated in England by means of forged deeds, and it was then stated that such could not have taken place in Ireland because of its system of Registration of Assurances. But what security is the Registry Act in such a case? None. The purchaser searches for Acts and finds none; he gets the title deeds (as he thinks), but it turns out that the real deeds are lodged as an equitable mortgage, and to the extent of that mortgage he is defrauded (Re Burke's Estate).

It seems, therefore, that a prudent purchaser should require that the execution of every deed presented to him, and which apparently completes the title, should be verified by the affidavit of the attesting witnesses. And what delay and expense will this requisition occasion if the witnesses are scattered all over the globe? The purchaser must still incur the expense of a search in the Registry of Deeds, for acts capable of registration, and, after all the delay and expense, it may happen that the witnesses had committed perjury, and the purchaser's deeds were forgeries, while the holder of the genuine deeds had priority by reason of mere deposit. Thus, by reason of this decision, it seems to me that the transfer of land is altogether stopped (save through the Landed Estates Court), and that, whilst the Registry Act increases the expense it gives no protection.

It seems, also, that a mortgagee by mere deposit of the title deeds is in a better position than one having an expensive and formal deed of mortgage. Further, that the doctrine "where equities are equal the law must prevail" no longer exists; for, if a purchaser got title deeds which appeared to be genuine, and used all the precaution which is expected of a prudent man, or if a deed were missing, and he made due inquiries, and received natural and sufficient explanations to account for its loss, and believed that no incumbrance existed, he is as innocent as a prior asset; equitable incumbrancer, and his equities (formerly supposed) equal, and when he clothed himself with the legal estate by a deed of transfer, this doctrine gave him priority; but, by the decision in Re Burke's Estate, the deed of transfer giving the legal estate adds nothing to the purchaser's title, and the maxim "Prior tempore potior jure," has no exception.

Therefore, if my interpretation of that decision be correct, no land can be transferred with perfect security save through the Court; while to make a marketable title the costs and delay are increased, and titles marketable before are now wholly unmarketable.

this is so, a great grievance exists, which calls for immediate redress.

I, and perhaps many others of your readers, would like to read the opinion of your Journal on this decision and its result.

I remain, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
ONE INTERESTED.

Cork, June 3rd, 1882.

[Our correspondent will find our opinion of the decision in Re Burke's Estate and its result stated ante, pp. 185, 197, 209.—Ed.]

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. John Givan, solicitor, M.P. for county Monaghan, and an elder of the Aghnacloy Presbyterian Congregation, has been unanimously elected a trustee of Magee College, Londonderry, by the General Assembly.

Mr. James Vernon has been elected Clerk of Petty Sessions for Sligo.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

FINAL EXAMINATION FOR APPRENTICES TO SOLICITORS,
Pursuant to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (Ireland), 1866.

TRINITY SITTINGS EXAMINATION, 1882.

[Every answer is to be accompanied by reasons concisely stated.]

CHANCERY DIVISION.

Mr. DIX, Examiner.

1. What is necessary to be shown to ground an application for liberty to issue and serve a Writ of Summons out of the Jurisdiction?
2. What would you advise a client to do who has money in his hands in relation to which there are conflicting claims in order to relieve himself from responsibility concerning it?
3. Upon whom is it necessary to serve Notice of an Originating Petition in a Minor Matter, and what statements should such Petition contain?
4. State generally what you know of the requirements of the Court in relation to Affidavits filed in the Chancery Division?
5. Where there is a large arrear of Interest due on foot of a Mortgage, state what remedies are open to the Mortgagee in respect to his Security?
6. How do you proceed to appoint a Receiver, and what are the principal requirements of the Court in relation to that Office?

CHANCERY DIVISION, LAND JUDGES.

Mr. DILLON, Examiner.

1. When is the Purchaser of an Estate to be deemed the Owner?
  - A. In case of a Sale in Dublin.
  - B. In case of a Sale in the Country.
2. At what stage of the proceedings can an Incumbrancer be obliged to part with the Instrument creating his Security?
3. In cases of Sales to Tenants of their holdings by agreement between Landlord and Tenant, what are the restrictions to the Landlord's power of Sale?
4. What is the Rule as to the payment of the Costs of a Petition for Sale to a Petitioner who is an Incumbrancer?

5. What is the distinction between the rights of the petitioning Incumbrancer and an ordinary Incumbrancer as to bidding at a Sale?

6. Until what time is a Motion to transfer carriage of proceedings premature?

PROBATE AND MATRIMONIAL DIVISION PRACTICE.

Mr. JONES, Examiner.

1. Where alterations are found in a Will what course must be adopted before same is admitted to proof?
2. Is there any, and if so what difference between the present and former practice in taking out Grants of Probate or Administration as regards secured or simple contract debts due by the deceased, and state definitely how the Duty is computed?
3. State accurately the practice for re-sealing an English Grant in Ireland, and what Documents are requisite?
4. What responsibility does a person incur who intermeddles with assets of a Deceased without having taken out a Grant? and how in the case of an Executor?
5. What step should be taken after a Caveat has been warned and within what time?
6. In what cases will Security for Costs be required, and how should same be given?

COMMON LAW DIVISIONS PRACTICE.

Mr. BARLEE, Examiner.

1. Where a verdict is given for either party in an action, but leave reserved to the other to apply to have such verdict had, changed into a verdict for him, state shortly what is the course of procedure, and is there any difference in this respect between actions tried at Nisi Prius in Dublin or at the assizes?
2. State the preliminary steps necessary to be taken in an action to be brought against a party residing out of the jurisdiction.
3. When one party in an action demurs to the other's pleadings, state shortly how such demurrer is to be brought to a hearing.
4. What are the steps necessary to be taken by a defendant to have an action remitted from the Superior Courts to the Quarter Sessions, and what must be shown to the Court to entitle the defendant to succeed in so remitting the action?
5. Where it becomes necessary after service of a writ of summons to add another party to the action, what is the procedure?
6. At what stage of the proceedings in an action can either party apply for discovery of documents; what is the procedure necessary to enforce such discovery being made, and in what form does the party making discovery furnish the particulars required of him?

In 1788 there were only 300 members of the English Bar altogether, and very few practising in Chancery.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.—Up to the present time only eight public and twenty-five local Acts have received the Royal Assent. The Session commenced on the 7th of February.

Holloway's Pills are strongly recommended to all persons who are much reduced in power and condition, whose stomachs are weak, and whose nerves are shattered. The beneficial effects of these Pills will be perceptible after a few days' trial, though a more extended course may be required to re-establish perfect health. Holloway's medicine acts on the organs of digestion, and induces complete regularity in the stomach, liver, pancreas, and kidneys. This treatment is both safe and certain in result, and is thoroughly consistent with observation, experience, and common sense. The purification of the blood, the removal of all noxious matter from the secretions, and the excitement of gentle action in the bowels, are the sources of the curative powers of Holloway's Pills.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.
Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—L. Simpson, valuation.
IN COURT.—R. H. O'Bryen, receiver.—P. J. Boylan, allocate.—W. Anketell, objection.—H. Leader, receiver.—J. M. Cochrane, payment.—J. McGarry, from 5th.—J. Spencer, payment.—G. B. Low, receiver.—W. Rowland, ditto.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—J. Russell, final schedule.—J. J. Casey, from 6th.—M. Cody, do.

WEDNESDAY.

IN COURT.—D. Murray, receiver.—W. P. Cullen, do.—N. Woods, make order absolute.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—C. B. Jennings, receiver from 5th.—R. Moore, from 8th.—J. Carey, do.—E. P. Peyton, do.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

H. WIGMORE, . . . . . 1 lot.
P. HOLLAND, . . . . . 1 "

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—F. Graham, to confirm sale.—A. H. Irwin, to continue proceedings.

IN COURT.—J. Ryan, final schedule.—J. Gartlan, from 8th.

TUESDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

ADMINISTRATRIX CAROLAN, . . . . . 9 lots.
R. BURKE, . . . . . 2 "

IN COURT.—D. W. Cruise.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

A. M. Nicholson, vouch.—J. Collins, discharge queries.—M. Gallagher, to take account.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—Rev. A. W. West, final schedule.—R. Burke, ditto.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

A. Noble, rental.—Devisee Leary, do.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.
Bourke, Nicholas, of 88 Lower Buckingham-street, in the city of Dublin, farmer. May 19; Tuesday, June 13, and Friday, June 30. William Robinson, solr.
Gracey, James, of Belfast, in the county of Antrim, merchant. May 17; Tuesday, June 13, and Friday, June 30. George L. Moore and H. F. Leachman, solrs.
Kerr, James, of Broome Lodge, Cabra, in the county of Dublin, gentleman. May 28; Tuesday, June 20, and Friday, July 7. Wm. Robinson, solr.
Lilley, James, of Ballymena, in the county of Antrim, trading as "James Lilley and Co.," drapers. May 19; Tuesday, June 13, and Friday, June 30. William Neilson & Son, solrs.

Lyons, William H., of No. 1 O'Connell-street, in the city of Dublin, house and land agent. May 28; Tuesday, June 13, and Friday, June 30. George William Shannon, solr.
Madden, Joseph W., of Ballycastle, in the county of Mayo, shopkeeper. June 1; Tuesday, June 27, and Friday, July 14. R. Davoren, solr.
Reid, Arthur, of Newtownards-road, Ballymacarrett, in the county of Down, grocer. May 30; Tuesday, June 27, and Friday, July 14. M'Lean, Boyle, and M'Lean, and B. Thompson, solrs.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	JUNE
	Sat. 3	Mon. 5	Tues. 6	Wed. 7	Thur. 8	Fri. 9
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols .. .. .	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½
— New 3 p c Stock .. .. .	100	100	99½	99½	99½	99½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1888 } Trafal. at .. .. .	104½	104½	104½	104½	104½	104½
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. .. .. .	101½	101½	101½	101½	101½	101½
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland .. .. .	320	320	319	319	319	319
25 Hibernian Banking Co. .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and County (Lit'd.) .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and Westminster, lit'd .. .. .	—	—	70½	70½	70½	70½
10 Do. New .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 Munster Bank (Limited) .. .. .	—	—	—	7½	—	7½
10 National Bank (Limited) .. .. .	24	24	—	—	—	23
10 National of Liverpool (Lit'd.) .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank .. .. .	—	—	—	—	57	—
10 Do. New .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Standard of B. S. A., lit'd .. .. .	29½	29½	29	29	29	29
Steam.
50 British & Irish .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin .. .. .	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½
Mines.
45 Berchamans (Limited) .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
1 Killaloe Slate Co. (lit'd) .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (lit'd) .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance & Dub. Cons. Gas .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott & Co., Limited .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 National Discount, Irs., lit'd .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 National Assurance .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Dublin United Tramways .. .. .	—	—	—	—	10½	—
10 Edinburgh Street Trams .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 L'pl Un'td Tram & Bus lit'd .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Leeds Trams .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
10 Athlery and Tuam .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and County Down .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and Northern Coa. .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Dublin, Wicklow, & W'ford .. .. .	81	81	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) .. .. .	118	118	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western .. .. .	—	—	114½	114½	115	—
100 Midland Gt. Western .. .. .	—	—	84	84	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 5 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Watfd. & Limerick, 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	98½	—	—
50 Do., new red, 5 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
Leased at Fixed Rentals.
100 Dublin and Kingstown .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast & N'rn Coa. 4 p c .. .. .	105½	105½	—	—	—	105½
— C'fergus and Larns 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin & Wicklow 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c .. .. .	109½	109½	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 5 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n & West'n, 4 p c .. .. .	109½	109½	—	—	—	—
— Kilkenny Junction, A, 5 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c .. .. .	105½	105½	—	—	—	106
— Do., 4½ p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterford & Central 5 p c .. .. .	108	108	—	—	—	—
— Waterfd & Limerick 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. .. .	111½	111½	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
— Alliance & Cons. Gas, 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Ballast Office Deb., 5½ p c 2d, 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— City Deb. of 1892 2d, 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dub. & Glas. S. P. Co. (1887) 5 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d
Bank Rate.—Of Discount—6 per cent., 30th January, 1882.
Of Deposit—3 per cent., 30th January, 1882.
Name Days—June 13th and 28th, 1882.
Account Days—June 14th and 29th, 1882.
Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

MARRIAGES.

CARSON and WILSON—June 1, at the First Presbyterian Church, Cookstown, by the father of the bride, Thomas G. Carson, of Coleraine, Esq., solicitor, to Janie Knox, third daughter of the Rev. Hamilton B. Wilson, Cookstown.
M'MINN and SWAN—June 5, by special licence, at Rostrevor, by the Rev. James A. Allison, 1st Monaghan, O. C. M'Minn, Esq., solicitor, Monaghan, to Charlotte, eldest daughter of William Swan, Esq., Monaghan.
O'DOWD and MORGAN—June 5, at the Church of the Assumption, Booterstown, County Dublin, by the Rev. James Colohan, C.C., Julia, only child of the late Thomas O'Dowd, Esq., solicitor, Swinford, County Mayo, to William John, eldest son of John Morgan, Esq., Lower Gardiner-street, Dublin.

DEATHS.

BOLTON—June 7, at Upper Leeson-street, Martha, relict of the late Edward J. Bolton, Esq., solicitor, of this city.
CLANCHY—June 1, at Cheimford-road, Thomas H., youngest son of the late John D. Clanchy, Esq., barrister-at-law, aged 81 years.
FITZGERALD—June 8, at St. John's-terrace, Clontarf, Charles Fitzgerald, Esq., solicitor.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET. 3-7

PUBLIC NOTICES:

GERRARD BROTHERS'
RUBBER STAMPS,
 FOR MARKING BOOKS, LINEN, PAPER, &c.
 Complete, 2s.; or by Post, 2s. 6d.

RUBBER STAMPS
 FOR BUSINESS PURPOSES,
 All Sizes, and any Design to Order. Specimens on application.

GERRARD BROTHERS,
 STATIONERS AND RUBBER STAMP MAKERS,
 37 STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 59

D. W. CARROLL,
 44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
 Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTEPAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
 Direct in every instance from the Makers.
 They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.
 His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
 Comprising Bags, Purses, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-
 randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
 With every article connected with Stationery,
 Are Sold much under usual charges.
 Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
 Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge. 73

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,
 No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.
J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),
 Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees,
 Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Bergeant Armstrong, and many others.
 Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.
 91

PATENT OFFICE, DUBLIN.

J. K. FAHIE & SON, Consulting Engineers and Patent Agents, 2, Nassau-street, Dublin, and 323, High Holborn, London, transact every description of business relating to Patents for Inventions, Registration of Designs, Copyrights, and Trade Marks.
 Authors of "Hand-book on British and Foreign Patent Law." A paper on the Law of Copyright &c., to be had on application, price
 Sixpence. 31

Printed and Published by the Proprietor, JOHN FALCONER, every Saturday, at 53, Upper Sackville-street, in the Parish of St. Thomas and City of Dublin.—Saturday, June 10, 1882.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.
GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS.

(Royal Route via Orkney and Caledonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Lochawe, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Stornoway, &c. Official Guide, 3d.; Illustrated, 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Fares free, at CARSON BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post from the owner, DAVID MACBRAYNE, 118 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS' SCARLET INK for STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens: it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.
 Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each. 581

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 976

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
 ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
 ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
 ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,
 the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinross, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London. WILLIAM J. VIAM, Secretary.

Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 118 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs Stewarts & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

ROBERT WHYTE,

Ladies' & Gentlemen's Boot & Shoe Manufacturer,

1, NORTH FREDERICK-STREET
 (Rutland-square),

ESTABLISHED OVER HALF A CENTURY.
 Boots made for Weak Ankles, Deformed Feet, and Surgical purposes of every description.
 All Work executed on the Premises under my personal superintendence.
 None but first-class Workmen employed in either Making or Repairing.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PEARO, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

EVERY MAN WHO SMOKES
 Should invest 24 stamps for the
 NEW PERFECTED

The Best
 Selected Briars
 only.

JENINGS & CO., Inventors, 97, NEWGATE-STREET.
 The most Perfect Pipe invented since Smoking began.
 Prospectus Free. 61

BILLIARD BALLS, CHALKS,
 CUES, and TIPS, and all other Billiard Table requisites, at HENNIG BROS.' Ivory Works, 11, High-street, London, W.C. Also the cheapest house in the trade for Ivory Hair-brushes, Mirrors, and all other Ivory Toilet articles and Ivory Goods in general. Old Balls adjusted or exchanged, and Tables re-covered. Price Lists, Cloth, and Cushion Rubber Samples Post Free.—Established 1862. 26

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1882.

No. 803

RAILWAY CARRIERS, AND THE CONTAGIOUS DISEASES (ANIMALS) ACT, 1878.—I.

IN Rooth v. The Midland Railway Co., heard on appeal before Sir G. Jessel, M.R., Lindley and Bowen, L.JJ., on the 9th inst., the action was for breach of contract to carry some cows, which were detained on the road and suffered damage by the detention. They were kept from Saturday to Monday at Nottingham because receiving licences could not be obtained under the Orders of the Privy Council, made in pursuance of the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act with regard to the foot-and-mouth disease. One of the cows gave birth to a calf while they were in the truck and died; the others had recently calved and were considerably damaged. At the trial the railway company had been prepared to show that the cows had been properly cared for, and an arrangement was come to between the counsel engaged that the only question was whether the cattle had been kept too long in the truck. The jury were then discharged and the question reserved for further consideration. In November, 1881, Mr. Justice Stephen decided this question in favour of the defendants (unreported). The plaintiff sought to upset this decision. The Master of the Rolls, delivering the judgment of the court, said that "In this case a course had been taken at the trial which had turned out badly for the plaintiff. The plaintiff's contention was that the cows were not properly cared for. The defendants said they were, as far as possible, but that it had not been possible legally to remove them from the truck. The defendants being prepared to show this, an arrangement was come to by which the trial was stopped and the question whether the cows could have been legally removed from the truck was reserved for further consideration. When the case was before the learned judge he could only try the point of law, and this he was obliged to decide against the plaintiff. He could not go into the question whether the cows were fed or not. Whatever the facts might be, the appellants could not take advantage of them now; he should have insisted on the trial going on. If it was true that the cows were not fed at all from Saturday to Monday, the defendants were wrong; even as unwilling bailees they were bound to take proper care of them. But it would be impossible to conduct trials if parties were not to be bound by their counsel; and the result was that the appeal must be dismissed."

Necessarily contracted as is this decision, it is to be regretted that the two cases which have arisen in Ireland, in reference to the same Act as affecting the liability of carriers, have also been shorn of much of their possible interest and practical value, in consequence of the decisions largely turning on mere points of pleading. So it is with Shaw v. G. S. & W. Ry. Co. (15 Ir. L. T. 115, 8 L. R. Ir. 10). There the statement of claim alleged that the plaintiff delivered certain pigs to the defendants to be carried from M. to L.; and (1st) that at the M. station the defendants placed the pigs in a pen, and that the defendants had so negligently kept the pen, and had so negligently permitted it to be covered with lime, that the pigs were injured; (2nd) that it was the duty of the defendants to provide fit and proper pens or other accommodation at the station for keeping the pigs until they should be carried by the defendants; and that the defendants neglected to provide fit and proper pens or other fit and proper accommodation during the period aforesaid, whereby the said pigs were injured: (3rd) that at the request and by the invitation of the defendants, the plaintiff, pending the delivery to and the receipt of the said pigs by the defendants for the purpose of being carried by them, placed the said pigs in a pen of the defendants at the said station at M., pending such delivery and receipt, and that the defendants so negligently kept the said pen for the reception and penning of the said pigs, and so negligently permitted same to be covered with lime, or some preparation thereof, that, by reason of the said pigs coming and being in contact with the said pen while so confined therein, they were injured. The statement of defence stated an Order of the Lord Lieutenant in Council, made on the 20th of September, 1878, under the provisions of the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1878, duly published in the Dublin Gazette, whereby it was inter alia ordered that every loading-pen of a railway company should be disinfected before the using thereof, by the application to all parts of the loading-pen, with which animals or their droppings had come in contact, of a coating of lime-wash, as in said Order prescribed; and alleged that it was necessary for the defendants, in the due and ordinary course of traffic, to pen the plaintiff's pigs, and that the defendants, in accordance with the provisions of the said Order, carefully—and a reasonable and proper time for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the said Order before using the pen for the plaintiff's pigs—disinfected the pen, and duly and carefully applied to the said parts thereof the preparation of chloride of lime, and that the pigs were injured by coming in contact with that preparation, and not otherwise; and that, save by reason of the application of said lime-wash, the pen was in a fit and proper condition for the reception of and penning the said pigs. Similar defences, mutatis mutandis, were pleaded to the second and third causes of action. The plaintiff demurred. "It may be taken that the Orders in Council have the force of a statute as to all matters therein directed," said Sir E. Sullivan, M.R.; "but, it is to be borne in mind that these Orders are in no respect conversant with the duties or liabilities or privileges of common carriers, but form merely a code of rules to prevent the spreading of diseases amongst animals. Now, it appears to me that the proposition involved in the three defences of the defendants which have been challenged is this—that they, being common carriers, are freed from all responsibility in relation to the proper state of their pens if they simply do what the Order in Council has directed. That proposition is, in my opinion, far too wide, and cannot be maintained in point of law." "The defendants are aiming at a defence which may raise a very serious question—viz., whether, if it were impossible to have a safer pen for pigs consistently with the Order in Council, the defendants were not discharged of responsibility by mere compliance with the Order; but, these defences, as pleaded, fall entirely short of averments raising that question, and of actual compliance with the Order before us, which is entirely conversant with checking the spread of cattle disease, and leaves untouched numbers of instances of neglect which the company may be guilty of in the mode and time of putting on the application, which may involve positive injury to the animals which they are bound to carry. Although the company is bound to treat the pen as described by the Order in Council, it is manifest that want of due care and precaution in the reception of the animals into it may, by taking them into it too soon, exist. Where the defence, I think, radically fails is, that it shows no necessary connexion between compliance with the Order and the pens being injurious at the moment of reception, which may be the entire cause of the injury. I give no opinion on the question, suggested during the argument, on the non-liability of the company for the injury to the pigs which, it is said, would result from the use of the lime-wash even if they had been received into the pens after it had been perfectly dry, and all precautions had been taken in regard thereto. Assuming that the company is not warranted in removing the coating of lime-wash, to be applied under the Order, before the reception of cattle, including, of course, pigs, it may be that the company is still bound to counteract the supposed injurious consequences of pigs lying on this coating of lime-wash, by the use of straw, or saw-dust, or some similar covering. That point, as I understand the defences here, does not call for any decision." But, so far as regards the actual decision arrived at, Shaw's case appears to be quite in accord with Roth's.

The recent case of Lynch v. The Midland Ry. Co. (not yet reported, but the judgments in which are now before us), to which we shall next advert, gave rise to a very nice question, as to whether any obligation rested on the carriers, by any contract express or implied, or by reason of any duty imposed on them and arising out of the facts alleged, to procure the licence, rendered necessary by the Act and Orders in Council, so as to enable them to deliver the cattle carried without delay.

JUSTICES' JUSTICE.

Lord Derby mooted, at the opening of the new county sessions-house in Liverpool, which is to take the place of the old court-house at Kirkdale, a question which has a little passed out of public notice, but which may become again prominent. He observed that he did not believe that there was any desire on the part of the public—and few men are better judges of a fact of this kind than Lord Derby—for "the abolition of the unpaid magistrates of this country and the substitution of what would be a very costly army of stipendiaries." Lord Derby would not always have said the same. Justices' justice has not been uniformly in repute. The unpaid have been the subjects of much facile sarcasm. The anomalousness of a system under which untrained men administer an unusually complicated body of law is obvious, and the most has been made of this peculiarity. It was the first article in the creed of the legal reformer of other days that an unpaid magistracy was an abuse to which even cheapness ought not to reconcile the nation. But the same language does not now find favour; and we doubt whether all of those who would thirty years ago have voted in favour of creating stipendiaries everywhere would be of the same mind to-day. The cost of taking such a step is a serious element in the problem. When rates are being raised all over the country, and the normal county expenses grow no matter how much care is taken to economise, people are in no mood to set up an army of magistrates at salaries varying from £500 to £1,500. Few of the towns which have the power of obtaining stipendiaries have been in a hurry to make use of it. The Justices may not, perhaps, give complete satisfaction to those who watch their conduct. Their decisions are criticised severely, and their failings are held up to scorn or obloquy. But in few localities is there any general or pronounced desire to sweep away the local magistracy and to replace it by a new order of paid officials.

This change of feeling is due to circumstances for which there is good reason to be thankful. Most men who are now placed on the commission do not think that they have discharged their whole duty by sitting occasionally on the Bench and taking the law from the clerk and the sentences from the chairman. The modern magistrate talks about his obligation to the public and prepares himself for his judicial work. He buys Stone's "Practice." He looks into Burn's or Oke's "Justice," and "Russell on Crimes." He seeks to obtain elementary notions as to the laws of evidence. He questions his lawyer about the distinction between felony and misdemeanour. He talks about his grave responsibility, and feels that he owes it as a duty to his country to concern himself with the differences between larceny and embezzlement. He follows intelligently each trial and joins in the discussion as to points of law. He whispers queries or suggestions into the ear of the chairman. No doubt, too, in some counties it has become the practice, with the very best effect, to appoint as chairman a barrister, resident in or connected with the neighbourhood. The result is to give an excellent tribunal. The magistrates are pretty sure to know the circumstances and character of every accused or witness. They are able to apportion sentences with nice regard to the requirements of each case. They form a special jury of unusual excellence, and, with the assistance of a trained lawyer, they are well fitted for the trial of minor offences. They know if a loafer or a poacher is brought before them. They can detect an impostor under a specious garb. They are also likely to have compassion for the criminal who they know has been the victim of adverse circumstances. We do not pretend that they rise above local or class prejudices; but, on the whole, there are few better tribunals for the hearing of cases than one or two squires and large employers of labour, assisted by a competent lawyer. Such is the composition of many Quarter Sessions; and where this mixture of elements does not exist there is generally a desire to bring it about without the assistance of Parliament. The present Ministry foreshadowed a measure which was to alter greatly local government. It may be assumed that a bill of the kind would not be in harmony with the present temper of the public if it dealt in a rough and drastic fashion with the unpaid magistracy. Most of us are prepared for some time to endure Justices' justice. It is not perfect, or, perhaps, theoretically defensible. It has the faults of amateur work. In particular, the sentences of an unpaid Bench are apt to be eccentric and unbalanced to an extent not to be seen in the action of men accustomed all their lives to the atmosphere of Courts. But for centuries the Justices have been conservators of the Queen's peace in their counties, and there is no inclination to depose them at once. Their office has much stronger justification than the fact that the work of trying and sentencing their neighbours affords light and interesting occupation for gentlemen of leisure, influence, and means. We hear much of the magistrates who inflict hard sentences upon girls for picking flowers in public gardens or boys for playing at chuck-farthing on the highways, and who are mild and considerate to wife-beaters. Little is said of the mass of arduous work which is quietly and satisfactorily transacted, without cost to the community, at Petty and Quarter Sessions.

But Lord Derby does not say that the tribunal with which he, a veteran chairman of Quarter Sessions, is so familiar is not to be touched or modified, and no one who is unprejudiced and conversant with the facts will take up any such uncompromising position. The present tendency of legislation is to enlarge the area of summary jurisdiction, and this, of course, reduces the labours of the Quarter Sessions in regard to minor offences. The last Summary Jurisdiction Act—that of 1879—operates in that direction, and is pretty sure to be a feature of future Acts dealing with crime. Blackstone tells us that the Common Law abhorred summary procedure; but modern times abhor, in this respect at all events, the Common Law. On the other hand, the tendency is to withdraw certain offences from the Assizes and leave them to be disposed of at Sessions. Judges complain that they are compelled to try petty cases—of burglary, for example, which might properly have been dealt with on the spot. The complaint is well-founded; and Lord Bramwell last night introduced into the House of Lords a Bill enabling Courts of Quarter Sessions to try cases of burglary in some instances. We must, therefore, look to the probability of Justices at Quarter Sessions being called upon to discharge more arduous work than heretofore. Had we a well drafted Criminal Code—a Code which, to quote the late Lord Chief Justice, would be “an exposition of law for the information and instruction of all”—laymen might be left to perform the work with some confidence that it would be done well. But such a handy epitome does not exist, and seems not likely to be soon obtained. Lord Derby recognises the existence of defects in the present state of things, and while desirous of leaving the magistracy in general as it is, he would make a professional lawyer the chairman. It is open to question whether a universal change of this kind is really needed. Sessions might be named with respect to which no such alteration is expedient. But there are others at which much business is transacted and to which more might with advantage be referred, and in them professional aid may be required. Make this alteration here and there, and it would be possible to extend the jurisdiction of the Sessions so as to materially lighten the labours of the Judges at Assizes. What has been done at the Middlesex Sessions might probably be imitated elsewhere with good effect. But few persons want to go further and to disturb the basis of the lay tribunals which have hitherto answered their purpose fairly well, have always been above the suspicion of corruption, and are quite competent to deal with the bulk of the cases brought before them. Lord Derby is resigned to the prospect of handing over the greater part of the administrative business of counties to some elective and representative body. This reform is impending; and he would welcome such a change. He and many others, however, cling to a system of local administration of justice, the worst defects of which are superficial, and which, having been often menaced, seems about to enter upon a new lease of life—Times.

THE PARTNERSHIPS BILL.

The bill to consolidate and amend the law of partnership brought in by Mr. Monk, has emerged from the limbo of a second select committee of the House of Commons; and as it is now, except in a few unimportant details, a mere consolidation, it bids fair to become law. It is not the first nor the second session that this bill has appeared upon the order-book of the house, and Mr. Davey's objection to it on Monday came rather late. It has been submitted to thorough discussion and criticism, both by legal and mercantile men—amongst them by no less an authority on this branch of the law than Lord Justice Lindley—in and out of the House, and has been generally accepted. If it becomes law it will be the first block, and that a most important one, in the structure of our Civil Code. The bill was drawn by Mr. Frederick Pollock, whose “Digest of the Law of Partnership” is a reproduction of the bill, with comments. It is, in the main, founded on the Indian Contract Act; which contains extensive provisions as to the particular branch of the law of contractual relations known as partnership; but that Act has been treated as “a model to be followed and improved upon, and not merely an example to be copied.” There is this essential difference between them, as there is between Mr. Justice Stephen's “Digest of Criminal Law” and the Criminal Code Bill, that the bill omits the illustrations which form an important part of the Digest and of the Indian Code on which it is founded. The omission is to be regretted, as the illustrations give flesh and blood to the dry bones of the law, and would afford an easy method of noting up the Act to the latest results of judicial decision. But the insertion of illustrations would be an innovation which might prejudice the chances of the bill. As it has now been discovered in India that the illustrations and the substantive sections are apt to conflict, and in such case it has been decided that the construction placed upon the text by the judges is to overrule the construction put upon it by the Legislature in the illustrations, the omission is not, perhaps, to be altogether regretted. During its progress through the select committee, two very important parts of the bill, which proposed to establish limited partnerships, or what the French call société en commandite, and to compel the registration of firm names, and the members belonging to them, have been struck out. The bill is, of course, less complete, but, as they raised matters of controversy, more “passable” without them. As it now stands, it consists of three parts and sixty-four sections. The first part deals with the definition of partnership and the liability and authority of partners as regards the firm as a whole; the second part deals with the relations of partners to each other while the partnership is a going concern; and the third, with the dissolution of the partnership and its consequences.

The first part opens, in clause 6, with a definition of partnership, which is taken, as a memorandum attached to the bill states, from the Indian Contract Act, modified to meet the criticism of the Master of the Rolls. It is “the relation which subsists between persons who have agreed to share the profits of a business carried on by all or any of them on behalf of all of them;” and, by a sub-clause, in deciding what a partnership is, the Court shall have regard to the true contract and intention of the parties as appearing from all the facts of the case. This is the test laid down in Molloy, Marsh & Co. v. Court of Wards, L. R. 4, P. C. 419. But the Courts are to be given something more definite as a test than the test stated. Having defined what partnership is, the bill goes on in eight consecutive clauses to say what it is not. It, in effect, incorporates all the cases which have turned on the question of partnership or no partnership. Thus, clause 7 excludes the presumption of partnership arising from joint ownership, and the presumption that the property of partners who are joint owners is necessarily that of the firm; clause 8, that arising from sharing gross profits, and clause 9 (founded on Cox v. Hickman, 8 H. L. C. 267; Ex parte Tennant, L. R. 6 Chanc. Div. 308) net profits; clause 10 (founded on such cases as Syres v. Syres, L. R. 1 App. Cas. 174; Pooley v. Driver, 46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 466) negatives the presumption of partnership arising from receiving debts or other liquidated amounts by instalments out of profits; clauses 11-15 re-enact substantially sections 1 to 5 of the Partnership Amendment Act, 1865. Under our present system of legislation this negating of special cases may be necessary, but it is dangerous and cumbersome. It is for this purpose that illustrations would be useful as showing in a short form the result of decided cases. The danger of incorporating them in the text is, that it gives the Courts an opportunity of applying the maxim exclusio unius est inclusio alterius, and, notwithstanding the generality of the substance of clause 6, sweeping in as a partnership every arrangement which could not be brought within one of the specific negations, however alien from the intention and acts of the parties.

In dealing with the liabilities of firms, clause 19 substitutes for the cumbersome verbiage of section 4 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1858, the following, from the Indian Contract Act: “A continuing guaranty given either to a firm or to a third person in respect of the transactions of a firm is, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, revoked as to future transactions by any change in the constitution of the firm to which or in respect of which the guaranty was given.” The words “as to future transactions” are somewhat ambiguous where they stand; and the meaning would be clearer if placed at the end of the sentence. But the new form is a distinct improvement on the old. Clause 20, on the authority of Kendall v. Hamilton, 48 Law J. Rep. C. P. 705, settles the law differently from that laid down by Mr. Justice Lindley as to the liability of partners for the firm on contracts as being joint only during life, though their estates after their death are also severally liable. Clause 21 is a neat statement of the doctrine of novatio, and clause 22 of the doctrine of "holding out" as applicable to partnership. Section 24 lays down generally, that partners are agents for the firm in the usual business of the firm, but subject to the exception "unless the partner so acting has in fact no authority to act for the firm in the particular matter, and the person with whom he is dealing knows that he has no authority, or does not know him to be a partner." Clause 25 specifies—but with a wise provision that the specification is not to prejudice the general section—the usual power of a partner on behalf of the firm, as generally embodied in partnership deeds. Clause 81 defines the liability of partners for torts as joint and several. A distinction is thus drawn between their liability on contracts and on torts. Surely in both cases the liability should be several as well as joint. The authority of text-books is to that effect; and there seems no valid reason why the dictum of the House of Lords, in Kendall v. Hamilton, on this point should have upset that authority. Clauses 83 and 84 specify particular cases in which the wrongful act of a partner shall entail liability on the firm.

The second part consists chiefly of doctrines of law well settled, or, as in clause 42, states those which are usually inserted, though implied by law, in partnership deeds. But clause 88 extends the law in accordance with the current of modern decisions and convenience, by laying it down that land which is partnership property is converted out and out into personalty, "unless the contrary appears by express agreement or by the conduct of the partners." It would, we think, be well to confine the exception to "express agreement." It is prudent, as far as possible, to close the door to controversy on disputed points of the law of property; and, as the law of conversion is one of the most intricate and complicated of these points, it would be well to close this avenue to it, at least. In committee a new clause (41) has been introduced, which would more properly belong to the new rules of procedure. It provides that, in future, "a writ of execution shall not issue upon any partnership property, except upon a judgment against the firm; and it gives the judgment creditor of any partner power to apply to the High Court by summons for an order charging that partner's share with the amount due and with all necessary or consequent directions, extending to a dissolution of the partnership and a sale of the share; but on any order for foreclosure or sale the other partners are to have liberty to redeem. This is, in one direction, a considerable extension of the powers of obtaining an order in chambers or interpleader summons to take the partnership accounts in favour of a creditor of one of the partners, while it puts a stop to the inconvenient practice of taking partnership property in execution for a partner's separate debt. It is likely to prove a considerable help to a creditor, while saving the expense to the debtor of a long and circuitous process, and to the firm the annoyance of a sale of their partner's share.

The third part deals with dissolution. Clause 56 sums up the causes of dissolution. Its last limb is not sufficiently clear. "In the last-mentioned case—i.e., partnership not for a fixed term, the partnership shall be dissolved as from the date of the communication of this notice." Presumably it means from the date of the notice reaching the person to whom notice is given; but it may mean from the date of sending the notice off. Which is the rule, seems immaterial, but it should be certain. In clause 59 the decision in Atwood v. Maude, L. R. 3 Chanc. 369, has been followed; and we note that an addition has been made in committee of the rule laid down in Mycroft v. Beaton, 49 Law J. Rep.

Chanc. 12; L. R. 13 Chanc. Div. 384, to the effect that when a partnership has been rescinded on the ground of fraud, the defrauded party is entitled to a lien on the assets for any money paid by him for the purchase of an interest in the partnership. Taken altogether, the bill is a good piece of scientific legislation; and, both for its intrinsic merits and as a foretaste of more to follow, it may well find a place in the statute book this session—Law Journal.

OLD INNS OF COURT CUSTOMS.

The history of the Inns of Court in days gone by, apart from its legal interest, affords us a good insight into the festive and social life of our forefathers. Indeed, the merry doings associated with these old institutions are proverbial, and many a graphic picture has been bequeathed to us illustrative of the joviality which once formed a prominent characteristic on all seasons of rejoicing. Thus, it may be remembered that in the hall of the Middle Temple was performed Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," a fact recorded in the table-book of John Manningham, a student of the Middle Temple:—"Feb. 2, 1601-2.—At our feast we had a play called 'Twelfth Night; or What You Will.'" As Charles Knight remarks in his "Pictorial Shakespeare," "it is yet pleasant to know that there is one locality remaining where a play of Shakespeare was listened to by his contemporaries, and that play 'Twelfth Night.'" We read, too, how, in the reign of Charles I., the students of the Middle Temple were accustomed at All Hallows-tide, which they considered the beginning of Christmas, to prepare for the festive season, an account of which we find in Whitelock's "Memoirs of Bulstrode Whitelock." Evelyn alludes to the Middle Temple feasts, and describes that of 1688 as "very extravagant and great, as the like had not been seen at any time." Equally famous were the entertainments at the Inner Temple—Christmas, Candlemas, Ascension Day, and Halloween having been observed with great splendour. In 1561 the Christmas revels were kept on a very splendid scale. At breakfast, brawn, mustard, and malmsey were served; and at the dinner in the hall several imposing ceremonies were gone through. Thus it is related how, between the two courses, first came the master of the game, then the ranger of the forests, who, having blown three blasts of the hunting-horn, paced three times round the fire, then in the middle of the hall. Nine or ten couples of hounds were then brought in, with a fox and a cat, which were set upon by the dogs, amidst the blowing of horns. At the close of the second course the oldest of the masters of the revels sang a song. Finally, after supper, the Lord of Misrule addressed himself to the banquet, which, amongst other diversities, generally concluded with minstrelsy and dancing.

Many of the dinner customs of the Inns of Court are curious. Thus a banquet at the Inner Temple is a grand affair. At six, the barristers and students in their gowns follow the benchers in procession to the dais; the steward strikes the table three times, grace is said by the treasurer or senior bencher present, and dinner commences. The waiters are called "panniers," from the "panarii" who attended the Knight Templars; and in former years it was the custom to blow a horn in every court to announce the meal. The loving cups used on important occasions are huge silver bowls, which are passed down the table filled with time-honoured "sack," which consists of "sweetened and exquisitely-flavoured white wine;" each student being restricted to a "sip." On the 29th May a gold cup of this fragrant beverage is handed to each member, who drinks to the happy restoration of Charles II.

Referring to the customs once observed at the Middle Temple banquets, many of these have died out. "The loving cup," Mr. Thornbury remarks in "Old and New London" (I. 179), "once fragrant with sweetened sack, is now used to hold the almost superfluous toothpicks. Oysters are no longer brought in, in Term, every Friday before dinner; nor when one bencher dines does he, on leaving the hall, invite the senior bar-man to come and take wine with him in the Parliament Chamber (the accommodation-room of Oxford colleges)." Dugdale informs us that "until the second year of Queen Elizabeth's reign, this society did use to drink in cups of aspenwood; but then those were laid aside, and green earthenware pots introduced, which have ever since been continued." Amongst the old customs associated with the Middle Temple may be mentioned the calves'-head breakfast which was given by the chief cook of the society to the whole fraternity, for which every member paid at least one shilling. In the eleventh year of James I, however, this breakfast was turned into a dinner, and appointed to be held on the first and second Monday in every Easter Term. The price per head was regularly fixed, and to be paid by the whole society, as well absent as present, and the sum thus collected was divided amongst all the domestics of the house.

The merry doings at Lincoln's-inn were, in days gone by, kept up with much enthusiasm; and frequent notices of the "Revels" are given by our old writers. Charles Knight, too, in his "Oyclopaedia of London," tells us that on such occasions dancing and singing were insisted on, and, by an order of Feb. 8, in the 7th James I, it appears that "the under-barristers were by decimation put out of commons for example's sake, because the whole Bar were offended by their not dancing on the Candlemas Day proceeding, according to the ancient order of the society, when the judges were present." Of the social customs formerly observed, we read that at each mess it was a rule that there should be a "moot daily;"—the junior member of each mess having to propound to the rest at his table some knotty question of law, which was discussed by each in turn during the dinner. Not many years ago, too, it was the custom for one of the servants, attired in his robes, to go to the threshold of the outer door about twelve or one o'clock, and call out three times, "Venez manger." To quote a further old custom, in the first year, of Elizabeth, it was ordered "that no Fellow of the House should wear a beard of above a fortnight's growth, under a penalty of loss of commons, and, in case of obstinacy, of final expulsion."

Gray's-inn, again, formerly had its masques and revels, when the presentation of plays seems to have been one of the chief features. A comedy, acted at Christmas 1527, written by John Roos, a student of the inn, so offended Wolsey that its author was actually imprisoned. Amongst the many customs relating to the dining-hall, we are told that in 1581 an agreement was made regarding Easter, in accordance with which the members who came to breakfast after service and communion were to have "eggs and green sauce" at the expense of the House, and that "no calves' heads were to be provided by the cook." In the year 1600 the members were instructed not to come into the hall with their hats, boots, or spurs; but with their caps, decently and orderly, "according to the ancient orders." Gray's-inn has also been noted for its exercises known as "bolting," which is thus defined in Cowell's Law Dictionary—"Bolting is a term of art used in Gray's-inn, and applied to the bolting or arguing of moot cases."

Lastly, a very curious dinner custom has in years gone by been kept up at Clifford's-inn. The society consists of two distinct bodies—"the Principal and Rules," and the junior members, or "Kentish Mess." Each body has its own table. At the conclusion of the dinner the chairman of the Kentish Mess, first bowing to the Principal of the Inn, takes from the hand of the servitor some small rolls or leaves of bread, and, without saying a word, he dashes them three several times on the table; he then discharges them to the other end of the table, from whence the bread is removed by a servant in attendance. Solemn silence—broken only by three impressive thumps upon the table—prevails during this ceremony.—Illustrated London News.

By railway accidents in 1881 there were 521 employees killed and 2,446 injured.

HOMICIDE.

Manlaughter is unlawful homicide without malice aforethought; murder, on the other hand, is unlawful homicide with malice aforethought. "Malice aforethought," says Mr. Justice Stephen (Digest of the Criminal Law, p. 359), "is a mere popular phrase unluckily introduced into an Act of Parliament and half explained away by the judges. It throws no light whatever on the nature of the crime of murder, and never was used in its natural sense of premeditation. On the other hand, it served as a sort of standing hint at the kind of definition which was wanted, for it was equivalent to saying there were two degrees of homicide—homicide with premeditation, or other circumstances indicating the same sort of malignity; and homicide provoked by a sudden quarrel, or accompanied with other circumstances indicative of a less degree of malignity." Perhaps the best illustration of homicide without premeditation is afforded by the case of Reg. v. Denwood, Barrett, and others (Times report, April 28, 1868), in which the prisoners blew up by gunpowder a portion of the wall of Clerkenwell prison with the object of effecting the escape of an imprisoned comrade. The gunpowder, which was in a barrel, was exploded in the public street, and a number of persons were killed, and the prisoners were convicted of murder. Lord Chief Justice Cockburn said: "If a man does an act, more especially if that be an illegal act, although its immediate purpose might not be to take life, yet, if it were such that life was necessarily endangered by it—if a man does such an act, not with the purpose of taking life, but with the knowledge or belief that life is likely to be sacrificed by it, that is murder." In this case, though there was premeditation so far as the illegal act was concerned, the homicide was unpremeditated, and probably undesired; nevertheless the crime amounted to murder.

Again, it is the law that if any person engaged in the commission of a felony accidentally kills a person, the crime is that of murder: (Foster, 258). Thus, if a medical man seeks by the aid of a drug, or instruments, to procure abortion and the patient dies, beyond all doubt he is guilty of murder, though it is very difficult sometimes to get a jury to convict, no doubt because where death occurs in such cases, it not being the immediate purpose of the person causing the death, it is thought a harsh law to make the act murder.

"When a constable or other person properly authorised, acts in the execution of his duty, the law casts a peculiar protection around him, and consequently, if he is killed in the execution of his duty, it is in general murder, even though there be such circumstances of hot blood and want of premeditation as would in an ordinary case reduce the crime to manslaughter. But when the warrant under which the officer is acting is not sufficient to justify in arresting or detaining the prisoner, or there is no warrant at all, he is not entitled to this peculiar protection, and consequently the crime may be reduced to manslaughter when the offence is committed on the sudden, and is attended by circumstances affording reasonable provocation."

The above passage is an extract from a letter written by Lord Blackburn in reply to an earnest appeal by all the counsel for the defence in Reg. v. Allen and others (17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 223), inviting him to reconsider the refusal of the court to grant a case for the consideration of the judges. The prisoners were tried at Manchester by a special commission, consisting of Justices Blackburn and Mellor, for the murder of Sergeant Brett, who was in charge of a prison van containing some Fenians. The warrants under which the prisoners were arrested were improperly granted, one being for treasonable practices committed in Ireland, in respect of which a magistrate in this country has no jurisdiction, and cannot even remand a prisoner so charged. It was urged that, not being lawfully in custody, the killing of Sergeant Brett did not amount to murder, but was manslaughter only. Mr. Justice Blackburn said that the court entirely agreed with the opinion of Lord Hale

(2 Pleas of the Crown) that, though defective in form, the gaoler or officer is bound to obey a warrant in this general form, and consequently is protected by it; still, if the act has been unpremeditated, the point would have been reserved. As, however, it was clearly proved that there was a conspiracy to attack the police with firearms, and shoot them if necessary to effect the release of Kelly and Deasy, it was idle to grant a case on so clear a matter, and to do so would be productive of most serious mischief, by discouraging the police in the performance of their duties, and by encouraging the lawless in a disregard of the authority of the law.

The "Finchley murder," tried last week at the Old Bailey before Mr. Justice Hawkins, after a very long trial, and a deliberation of several hours, resulted in the jury bringing in the extraordinary verdict of "guilty of murder without premeditation." On this finding the judge directed a verdict of manslaughter to be recorded. The prisoner and his comrade, the unfortunate deceased, had together committed a burglary. A feeble attempt was made to show that the deceased was not killed by the prisoner at all; but there being a large body of evidence on this point, the substantial question was, Did the prisoner intentionally cause the death, or did they quarrel over the proceeds of the burglary, or for any other cause, and did death so ensue? In favour of the first view was the fact that the spot where the body was found did not show any sign of a struggle, and that the prisoner was unharmed. On the other hand, there was no direct evidence, and we cannot but think, if the facts had been left with a simple direction to the jury, they would have readily found a verdict of manslaughter, which was obviously the safer one under all the circumstances.

A practice has, however, sprung up, which we cannot but think an unfortunate one, which reverses the old rule that the summing-up of a judge in a criminal case should consist of a clear exposition of the law, and a logical arrangement of the facts, leaving it wholly to the jury to say what verdict is alone consistent with the evidence. We think it a mistake for a judge to let it be clearly apparent that he considers but one verdict possible, where the facts fairly admit of a different view, because judges have immense influence with juries, and they are at all times averse to finding a verdict in the teeth of the judge's summing-up, and by the law of England the jury alone are the judges of the facts. Another objection to this practice being resorted to by Her Majesty's judges is, that it is servilely followed by inferior judges to whom unhappily the trial of prisoners has to be entrusted, who, instead of summing-up the case, simply act as counsel for the prosecution, which is not an edifying spectacle, particularly if the jury take the case into their own hands and acquit the prisoner, or counsel for the accused has to observe on the obvious one-sidedness of the conduct of the judge or chairman.—Law Times.

EVIDENCE OF FOREIGN LAWS.

(From the Law Magazine.)

A case has lately been decided by the Landgericht, or Superior Court of the Grand Duchy of Baden, which presents several features of International interest, and especially concerns the numerous class of British subjects who may, without prejudice to their animus revertendi, be described as living abroad.

In 1860, X., an Englishman, married a German lady in Germany. The marriage was duly solemnized at the British Embassy. The lady was neither possessed of nor inherited any property, and no settlement was made either before or after the marriage. In 1865, X. purchased a freehold at Y., within the Grand Duchy of Baden, and commenced to build a house on it. The purchase was registered at the official Registry of Titles, an excellent German institution, which registers the sale of all realty; thus the Municipality become in practice the keepers of every one's title to land, and thereby imperfect titles are entirely obviated. However, this system has its drawbacks, as will be noticed presently. In 1876 the wife of X. died, leaving several children issue of the marriage. The authorities of the Grand Duchy regarded X. and his family as aliens, and therefore on the death of the wife took no steps to assure themselves concerning his property, or concerning the tutelage of the children. No question of domicile was raised; we may, therefore, assume for all purposes, that X. was merely a sojourner, or temporary dweller, in the Grand Duchy. X. subsequently married again.

In 1880 X. sought to raise some money by mortgage on his freehold, but found that he could not do so on account of the following entry having been made, by the Pfandrichter, or Registrar, in the Register of Titles, viz. :—

"Since the purchase of the land to be mortgaged, the first wife of the (would be) mortgagor has died, leaving children who are minors. The Registrar does not know what property, priority and mortgage-rights the minors may have, according to the laws of their own country. Therefore, the mortgage can only be effected subject to the rights and claims of the minors. The Registrar therefore refuses to be responsible to the mortgagor."

Thereupon X. wrote to England, and having fortified himself by obtaining the written opinion of an Equity barrister, to the effect that the minors had no rights according to English law, complained to the Amtsgericht or judges of the Inferior Court. The Registrar who had raised the question, did not profess to know anything about the English law, but was uneasy under the influence of the unknown. He justified his views, however, by asserting that, as the case then stood, in the absence of a marriage settlement, and until the contrary should be proved either by English officials or by a decision of the Baden Courts, the minors were entitled to half the freehold. X., on the other hand, triumphantly produced the counsel's opinion, pointing out that it clearly supported what he had previously explained, and that the law was so obvious that the question would never have been raised in England. The Judges and the Registrar all looked at the opinion. They were horrified at its being without a seal. How could a man, who is not a Government official, dare to give an opinion? It was monstrous! They became obstinate, and remained horrified at the idea of a private individual thinking himself competent to give an opinion, which should in any way bind the very smallest German official. The complaint was dismissed, and X. was ordered to pay the costs "as his complaint was groundless." The Court, holding that the children of a foreigner have no rights, by virtue of the Baden law, to the realty of their father situate in the Grand Duchy, observed that it was not authoritatively shown to the Court what were the children's rights according to the law of their own country.

From this decision X. appealed to the Landgericht, or Superior Court, consisting of five Judges. These judges eventually decided that according to the law of England the minors had no rights to the realty. Their decision (the later portion of which suggests an idea hitherto unknown to English Jurisprudence) was conceived in the following terms :—

"The Landgericht decides that the following paragraphs are proved beyond a doubt, viz. :—The children of X. have not inherited any rights from their mother, who brought no property into the marriage. The mother had herself no claims on the property bought by the father during marriage, and consequently, as she had herself no claims, the children cannot deduce any claims through her. The law does not give the children any mortgage claims on their father's property, and as such claims are not known to English law, minors are protected by trustees, or by the Court of Chancery."

The decision of the Superior Court of Baden, in the case before it, was substantially correct so far as the English law is concerned. But what if it had not been so? X. would in such case have been unable to mortgage his property, and with the adverse note against it in the Registrar's books, would have been unable to sell it. It will be noticed that the main difficulty that X. was under, all through this tedious transaction, was the difficulty of producing to the German authorities an authoritative declaration of some English official, capable of pronouncing on the question of law. The opinion of a mere conveyancing counsel was scouted as being unofficial; the British Chargé d'Affaires stated that he was unable to make an official declaration of what was the English law; and an English County Court Judge, on the request being made to him, very properly declined to do so.*

This difficulty was some years ago recognised by our Legislature. The Act 24 & 25 Vict., c. 11, passed in 1861, for the better ascertainment of the law of any foreign country or State, with the Government of which Her Majesty may be pleased to enter into a Convention, enacts (section three) as follows:—

"If in any action depending in any Court of a foreign country or State with whose Government Her Majesty shall have entered into a convention as above set forth, (i.e., for the purpose of mutually ascertaining the law), such Court shall deem it expedient to ascertain the law applicable to the facts of the case as administered in any part of Her Majesty's dominions, and if the foreign Court in which such action may depend shall remit to the Court in Her Majesty's dominions whose opinion is desired a case setting forth the facts and the questions of law arising out of the same, on which they desire to have the opinion of a Court within Her Majesty's dominions, it shall be competent to any of the parties to the action to present a petition to such last-mentioned Court, whose opinion is to be obtained, praying such Court to hear parties or their counsel, and to pronounce their opinion thereon in terms of this Act, or to pronounce their opinion without hearing parties or counsel; and the Court to which such petition shall be presented shall consider the same, and if they think fit, shall appoint an early day for hearing parties or their counsel on such case, and shall pronounce their opinion upon the questions of law as administered by them which are submitted to them by the foreign Court; and in order to their pronouncing such opinion they shall be entitled to take such further procedure thereupon as to them shall seem proper, and upon such opinion being pronounced a copy thereof, certified by an officer of such Court, shall be given to each of the parties to the action by whom the same shall be required."

It is much to be regretted that no Convention has up to the present date been entered into by this country with any foreign Government; and this useful Act of Parliament therefore remains, like so many other statutes, a dead letter. It is almost incredible that at the present day, with the boundless facilities for foreign travel at command, and the vast network of commercial transactions of our mercantile community rendering more and more frequent the occasions when our Courts of Justice are called upon to seek for an accurate knowledge of foreign laws, this most valuable and indeed necessary Act should be permitted to remain inoperative.

Why is this state of things suffered at all, and how much longer is it to be allowed to last?

In the absence of any International convention or agreement, it becomes necessary to consider what evidence of the law of a foreign State is sufficient in order that it should be received. In this country, the rule appears to have been more lax in the Courts governed by the civil law than in the common law Courts, and even the latter did not always concur. A copy of the foreign law if proved to be such, is sufficient to prove the existence of the bare law, although a professional witness may be required to interpret it.

Of late years the oral evidence of an expert (i.e., a witness who in the opinion of the Court is competent to prove a foreign law, from having had peculiar means of becoming acquainted with it) has been held admissible, without the production of a copy of the foreign law.

In 1802, Lord Stowell accepted as evidence extracts from the Council of Trent, referred to by advocates practising at the Hague, and copied into their opinions, on the ground that the extracts were authenticated, and that there was every reason to believe that such ordinances were, at the time in question, valid and in force. Middleton v. Janssen, 2 Hagg. Consist. R., 437.

In 1808, in an action in the King's Bench, an opinion was read showing the proper interpretation of a particular Russian law; this opinion was signed by the three presiding judges of the Custom House Court of St. Petersburg, and was sealed with the seal of that Court. But the Court did not find it necessary to decide the case on the question governed by the opinion, and declined to say whether it was admissible or not. Bohlingk v. Inglis, 3 East, 331.

In 1806, in the proceedings before the Court of King's Bench at Westminster, against Thomas Picton, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Trinidad, on an indictment for causing torture to be inflicted on a free Mulatto woman, Lord Ellenborough is reported to have said, "to prove the written law of any nation, a copy of that law should be produced. If I were sitting at Guildhall, and proof of foreign commercial regulations were necessary, I should require an authenticated copy of those regulations. . . . The text-writers furnish us with their statement of the law, and that would certainly be good evidence upon the same principle which renders histories admissible. There is a case in which the history of the Turkish Empire by Cantemir was received by the House of Lords, and received after some discussion; I shall therefore receive any book that purports to be a history of the common law of Spain." Re Picton, 30 How. State Trials, 491.

In 1812, it being stated to the same learned judge that at Surinam all agreements must be stamped to be of any validity, and that there was a written law of the colony to that effect, he thought it quite possible that the colonial law might not be without some exceptions, like our own Stamp Act, and required an authenticated copy of the law to be produced. Clegg v. Levy, 3 Camp. 166.

In 1815, Chief Justice Gibbs, sitting at the Guildhall, held that foreign laws, not written, are to be proved by the perol examination of witnesses of competent skill, but that where they are in writing, a copy, properly authenticated, must be produced. Miller v. Heinrich, 4 Camp., 155.

In 1834, Chief Justice Tindal directed the circumstances of an action in the Common Pleas to be set forth in a special case, and to contain any opinions of French advocates which had been taken on either side up to that period. (Trimbeu v. Viguer, 1 Bing. N. C., 158).

In the Sussex Peerage Case (1844), it was objected that the late Cardinal Wiseman, then Dr. Wiseman, holding the office of coadjutor to a Vicar Apostolic in this country, was not admissible as a witness to prove the Canon Law with respect to marriage administered by Ecclesiastical Courts in Rome; for it was necessary that he should have some peculiar means of knowledge, as for instance from his office. But the Committee of the House of Lords determined that he did come within the description of a person peritus virtutis officii, for he was engaged in the performance of responsible public duties, and in order to discharge them properly, was bound to make himself acquainted with the subject of the law of marriage. 11 Cl. & Fin., 133.

In 1845, the Court of Queen's Bench permitted a French Advocate, practising at Strasburg, to give evidence that the feudal law had been put an end to in Alsace de facto by the French Revolution in 1789, and de jure by the Treaty of Lunéville in 1801; and upon the said Advocate being asked whether there was not a decree to that effect, he added that there was such a decree of the National Assembly of the 4th of August, 1789, and that he had learned this in the course of his legal studies, it being part of the history of the law which he learned while studying for the Bar. It was objected that this evidence was inadmissible, on the ground that it was not offered as secondary evidence admissible on account of any difficulty in procuring primary evidence, but as the primary evidence itself, and that it was as if the original decree were shown to be in Court, and yet oral evidence were offered. The evidence was, however, held admissible by Lord Chief Justice Denman and Justices Williams and Coleridge, on the ground that the opinions of persons of science must be received as to the facts of their science, and that this rule applies to the evidence of legal men, and is not confined to the unwritten law, but extends also to the written laws which such men are bound to know. Properly speaking, the nature of such evidence is not to set forth the contents of the written law, but its effects and the state of law resulting from it. The mere contents, indeed, might often mislead persons not familiar with the particular system of law; but the witness in such cases is called upon to state what law results from the instrument referred to. This rule does not apply to the case of a Treaty, for no class of persons are so peculiarly conversant with the subject matter as to invest it with the character of a science. Baron de Bode's case, 8 Q. B., 208.

* X. produced a copy of Blackstone to the Landgericht, and the author of the present article having been consulted, offered some suggestions, which in the end prevailed.

In 1849 the Court of Common Pleas admitted a native of Belgium to give evidence of the law of Belgium with respect to bills and notes. He had formerly carried on the business of a merchant and commission agent in stocks and bills of exchange at Brussels, but was then a hotel keeper in London. He stated that he was well acquainted with the Belgian law on the above subject. The Superior Court, consisting of Justices Maule, Cresswell, Williams, and Talford confirmed the admissibility of this evidence, on the ground that he was a person having special and peculiar means of knowledge of the law of Belgium with regard to bills and notes, one whose business it was to attend to and make himself acquainted with the subject, and that inasmuch as he had been carrying on a business which made it his interest to take cognisance of the foreign law, he fell within the description of an expert. Applying common sense to the matter, why should not persons who may be reasonably supposed to be acquainted with a subject, though they have not filled any official appointment such as judge or advocate, be deemed competent to speak upon it? Persons who have practised as physicians are frequently examined, and no inquiry is ever made as to whether or not they have a regular diploma. All persons who practice a business or profession which requires them to possess a certain knowledge of the matter in hand are experts so far as expertness is required. Foreign law is a matter of fact; any person who can satisfy the Court that he has had the means of knowing it is an admissible witness to prove it. Vander Donck v. Thelasson, 8 Q. B., 828. But in 1850, in the case of Bristow v. Sequerville (5 Exch., 275), Baron Alderson, sitting at Nisi Prius, doubted whether the law of Prussia was sufficiently proved by a witness who stated that he was a juriconsult and adviser to the Russian consul in England, that he knew the Code Napoléon was in force at Cologne, and that by that Code certain receipts would be inadmissible in foreign courts, because unstamped; the witness also stated that he had studied law at the University of Leipzig, and from his studies there was able to speak as to the Code Napoléon being the law of Cologne. On a motion for a new trial, Chief Baron Pollock, and Barons Platt, Alderson and Rolfe, threw doubts on the relevancy of such evidence; the rule, however, was refused on another ground. This case is to be distinguished from the two last foregoing cases, in this, that the Court doubted the competency of the individual, but it does not shake the now generally received opinion, that the oral evidence of a trustworthy expert is always admissible to prove a foreign law.

In 1862, a certificate of the Ambassador from the King of Hanover, under the seal of the Legation, declaring the Hanoverian law on a question concerning testaments, was admitted in the Probate Court (Re Klingemann, 32 L. J. (N. S.), P. M. A., 16), and in an earlier case in the Ecclesiastical Court, the certificate of the French Consul-General was deemed sufficient evidence of the law of France. Re Dormoy, 8 Hagg. Eccl., 767.

The Courts of the United States generally require authenticated copies of foreign laws to be produced when they can be procured. Foreign unwritten laws and customs are proved by parol evidence, and when such evidence is objected to on the ground that the law in question is a written law, the party objecting must show the fact (15 Serg. & R., 87). Proof of such unwritten laws is usually made by the testimony of witnesses learned in the law, and competent to state it correctly on oath (3 Oranch, 287; 15 Serg. & R., 84). By the Constitution of the United States (Art. 4, s. 1.) "full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts of every other State" of the Union; and these Acts are authenticated by having the seal of the respective State affixed thereto.

The public seal of a foreign sovereign, or foreign State, affixed to a writing purporting to be a written law or edict, is of itself the highest evidence; although further proof of the seal of a foreign court is required. Courts of Admiralty, however, are Courts under the Law of Nations, and their seals are always admitted without further evidence.

The reported cases which we have considered in the earlier part of this article, form a curious exception to the rule of law, that witnesses are to inform the tribunals of facts, and not of their opinions. But cessante ratione legis cessat ipsa lex. When circumstances rebut the presumption that a tribunal is as capable of forming a judgment on the facts as a witness, the rule gives way, and competent witnesses are permitted to give their opinions in evidence on questions of science, skill, trade, and the like, as well as on questions of Foreign Law.—SHERBORN BAKER.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—XVIII.

(Continued from page 266, ante.)

SETTLEMENT OF LEASEHOLDS.

Introductory.

In discussing settlements of leaseholds, it will be impossible for us to enter into many details, or to recapitulate what we have already said with regard to freeholds; we can only give some general remarks and suggestions. Except where leaseholds are assigned on trust for sale, and the proceeds of the sale form the subject of the settlement, the trusts of the leaseholds will usually be very simple, or else the leaseholds will form part of a settlement comprising freehold land, and the leaseholds will be settled by reference to the freeholds. We shall in the first instance treat of matters which are common to most settlements of leaseholds.

Recitals.

In some settlements where it was formerly usual to recite the lease, an abbreviation may sometimes be made by omitting the lease, and declaring the settlement "supplemental" by virtue of sect. 53. But this should only be done where the property comprised in the settlement is small, and is held under one lease, and is unlikely to be divided or sold, so that the lease can always be kept with the settlement. If the settlement is made by means of an assignment on trust for sale, the assignment and not the settlement of the proceeds will be declared "supplemental" to the lease. Of course, when leaseholds are settled with freeholds, the settlement should not be declared supplemental to lease.

Assignment, Habendum, All Estate Clause, General Words.

There is no object in using the word "convey" instead of "assign," except freeholds are conveyed also, and then possibly it may sometimes be found convenient, as the word "convey" is applicable to both freeholds and leaseholds. The "all estate clause" and "general words" will usually be omitted.

Covenants for Title.

As in settlements of freeholds, we prefer that the settlor should neither convey as "settlor" nor as "beneficial owner," but that the ordinary covenant for further assurance should be inserted. Indeed, our objection to the use of the phrase "beneficial owner" is stronger in this case than in that of a settlement of freeholds, as there is an additional covenant implied: see sect. 7 (1) (B). It should be noticed that this implied covenant extends to the settlor's predecessors in title "otherwise than by purchase for value."

Settlements of Leaseholds as Personality.

A like settlement of freeholds forms the subject of our article in the Law Times of the 1st April, page 882. The old trust for sale may be much abbreviated in reliance on sects. 85, 86, 88. The word "property," which is used in sect. 85, includes leaseholds, s. 2 (i). Trustee's receipt clause may be omitted (s. 86). Trusts of proceeds of sale and of rents and profits till sale will be declared as before. Power of leasing should be inserted. For old form of assignment of leaseholds on trust for sale in contemplation of marriage, see Conc. David. 895. In the settlement of proceeds the maintenance and accumulation clauses will be omitted and trustee clauses abbreviated: (see Law Times, ubi sup., and Conc. David. 897.)

Settlement of Leaseholds upon Trusts corresponding with Uses of Freeholds.

When it is intended to comprise leaseholds in the same settlement as freeholds it is usual to settle them by reference. We shall take as an example an ordinary marriage settlement on husband for life, with jointure to wife, and remainder to the first and other sons in tail. The leaseholds are assigned to trustees upon trusts, and subject to powers, &c., corresponding with the uses, trusts, powers, &c., previously limited, as nearly as the different tenure and the rules of law and equity will permit, but, as regards leaseholds for years, so that they shall not vest in tenant in tail male by purchase until he attains twenty-one, but shall, if he dies under age, go over as freeholds: (see David. iii. 599, and for form Ibid. 1180.)

Whether, and to what extent, the draftsman should rely on the Act must depend partly on the value of the leaseholds, both absolutely and in proportion to the freeholds, and partly on the complexity of the settlement. He should, however, if he relies at all on the Act, take care, in making a reference to the powers, &c., affecting the freeholds, to use apt words to include the powers, &c., added by statute in consequence of using phrases employed in the settlement.

It will often be necessary to add special powers; thus, if the property comprises renewable leaseholds of value, a trust for renewal should be inserted, as the power or discretionary trust given by 28 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 8, is hardly satisfactory: (David. iii. 568, 622.) A clause indemnifying the trustees for neglecting to renew should be inserted with the trust for renewal: (David. ibid. 607.)

It should be noticed that the powers of management conferred by sect. 43 do not assist; they only give the trustees power, during infancy of tenant for life, &c., to act as landlord, not to effect renewals in the capacity of tenant.

Provision for Management and Application of Rents and Profits during Minority.—Sect. 43.

As to this power with respect to freeholds, see Law Times, April 15, page 419. The word "land" used in sect. 43 (i.) includes "land of any tenure," sect. 2 (ii.) and therefore sect. 43 applies to leaseholds. Where leaseholds are settled with reference to freeholds, it is sometimes rather difficult to see what will be the precise effect of sect. 42 (5) (iii.) This plan of enacting a section with regard to freeholds and leaseholds, and then inserting a clause which cannot be construed literally with regard to leaseholds, leads to great difficulty. Compare sect. 4 of Lord Cranworth's Act and see remarks in David. iii. 566.

Power of Sale and Exchange.

In our article on this power in connexion with freeholds we pointed out that sect. 85 of this Act obviously applied to leaseholds, and that it was usually considered that Lord Cranworth's Act (28 & 24 Vict., c. 145), part 1, also applied. See Law Times, April 15, page 419.

The use of the word "hereditaments" in sect. 1 of Cranworth's Act has given rise to the doubt, but it is clear that that word may include leaseholds, and in sects 4, 8, 9 of this very Act it is used in connexion with leaseholds. However, sect. 4, relating to the conveyance of the purchased lands, is not strictly applicable when leaseholds are sold: (David. iii. 561, 566.) We think there is no reasonable doubt that the Act does apply.

Assume, however, that an intending purchaser should raise the objection that leaseholds are not comprised in Lord Cranworth's Act, part 1; the trustees would reply that they had full power to sell under sect. 85 of the Conveyancing Act. The new Act contains no provision that the purchaser shall not be bound to inquire whether the trustees contemplate re-investment in purchase of any other hereditaments or otherwise. This provision is contained in the last clause of sect. 2 of Lord Cranworth's Act, but is wholly needless: (David. iii. 564.)

Also the new Act contains no power to revoke uses (which, however, would not apply to leaseholds for years), nor does it give, in so many words, power to convey, like sect. 8 of Cranworth's Act: (see Sng. Pow. 196, 837.)

The best plan will be, when the power is not fully set out, to declare in the settlement that the trustees shall have power to sell, exchange, and convey the lands comprised in the settlement.

The result will follow that it will be impossible for any purchaser to raise any objection to the sale, for the settlement gives power to sell, then sect. 85 of the Conveyancing Act gives liberty as to the mode of sale, and the settlement expressly gives power to convey, while sect. 86 supplies a receipt clause. We may observe that section 85 does not apply to exchanges, but that Lord Cranworth's Act does, if a power of exchange is expressly given.

SETTLEMENT OF COPYHOLDS.

Introductory.

The introductory remarks which we made in a previous part of the article with regard to settlements of leaseholds will for the most part apply equally to those of copyholds. It may be convenient to mention here that the following sections of the Act affect or relate to copyholds:—Sect. 6. General words. Sect. 7. Covenants for title, but see sect. 7 (5). Sects. 81 to 88. Trustees. See, however, sect. 84 (8). Sect. 85. Trustees' power of sale. Sect. 86. Trustees' receipt clause. Sect. 87. Trustees' power to compound. Sect. 88. Survivorship of trustees' powers. Sect. 42. Management of land, &c., during minority. See, however, sect. 43 (5) (iii.). Sect. 48. Maintenance. Sect. 44. Remedies for recovery of rentcharge. Sect. 51. Limitation of estates in fee, and also, where there is a custom to entail, of estates in tail. Sect. 53. Supplemental deeds. Sect. 68. All estate clause. Of course other sections affect copyholds, but these are the only ones to which we have occasion, at present, to refer.

Covenants to surrender Copyholds.

A covenant to surrender will still be necessary as before: see sect. 7 (5). For forms, see David. iii. 1024, 919; Conc. David. 885. Neither general words nor the all estate clause need be inserted. It was formerly usual to add a declaration of trust until the surrender, so that a vesting order could be obtained under the Trustee Acts without suit (David. iii. 597); but it seems that on a sale such an order may now be obtained without any such declaration after the purchase money has been obtained (Re Cumming, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 789; L. Rep. 5 Ch. App. 73; David. ii. 866), and the same principle would apply to a marriage (Conc. David. 886). For old form of trust, see David. iii. 1025.

Covenants for Title.

Sect. 7, implying covenants if the words "as beneficial owner" or "as settlor" are used in the conveying part, applies to copyholds. See sect. 7 (5), and sect. 2 (v.) which interprets "conveyance" to include "covenant to surrender." We prefer not to employ either phrase, but to insert the usual covenant for further assurance.

Settlement of Copyholds upon Trusts corresponding with Uses of Freeholds.

This is usually done by means of a covenant to surrender. For form see David. iii. 1150, 1025; Conc. David. 885, and compare Prideaux, 11th edit. 832.

The declaration of trust until surrender is now needless, as we said above. As we stated in our remarks on a similar settlement comprising leaseholds, care must be taken that the reference to the powers, &c., declared as to the freeholds, sufficiently comprises the powers which have been omitted in reliance on the statute. The tenure of copyhold of inheritance is very analogous to freehold tenure, so that there seems no reason why in many matters reliance should not be placed on the statute in the one case as well as in the other.

Special powers will often be necessary. Thus powers in relation to obtaining enfranchisement will be useful.

The powers of sect. 42 for management and application of rents and profits during minority apply to copyholds. Sect. 42 (5) (iii.), relating to tenants in tail, may occasionally create some difficulty where the land is situate within a manor in which there is no custom to entail copyholds, as a limitation which would have created an estate tail will confer a fee simple conditional, subject to the incidents of that estate before the statute De donis: (David. iii. 599; Scriven. 6th edit. 42; Tudor. L. C. Conv. 749.)

There is no doubt that the powers of sale in Lord Cranworth's Act, as well as in sect. 85 of the new Act, apply to copyholds of inheritance, but it gives no power to apply moneys received on a sale for purchasing the enfranchisement of the copyholds. This power should be added if desired.

(To be continued.)

THE JUDICIAL VACANCIES.

We are enabled to state that the vacancy in the Judicial Bench in the Queen's Bench Division, which was created by the death of the late Mr. Justice O'Brien, will be filled up by the transfer of Mr. Justice Lawson from the Court of Common Pleas. Mr. Gladstone was expected to make this announcement on Monday night; but we presume that he was restrained by more regard for official etiquette than he is usually credited with from making a public statement until the arrangement has received the sanction of the Queen. There is now no longer any obligation of reticence, and the public will learn, we are sure, with satisfaction that Mr. Justice Lawson will retire from the Common Pleas, and take his place in the Queen's Bench. We need hardly say that the accession of a judge of his ripe experience, thorough knowledge of constitutional law, sagacity, energy, and firmness in the administration of justice, will materially strengthen the important court to which he is to be transferred. This is a great desideratum at present, when the law requires to be clearly interpreted and vigorously administered. The Right Hon. James Anthony Lawson had a distinguished reputation as a scholar and a lawyer before he was elevated to the Bench as Second Judge of the Common Pleas in 1868. Since then he has had a long and varied experience in the judicial office, and has exhibited qualities which eminently fit him for the position which he is about to assume. There never was a time in the history of the country when the Queen's Bench so much required strength of character and breadth of knowledge, as well as an impartial judgment, for the adequate discharge of its duties. We have little doubt that the other members of the court will gladly welcome so able a colleague. With respect to the other legal changes which are likely to occur, nothing definite is yet settled. It is understood that the Attorney-General will succeed to the vacancy in the Queen's Bench which will be caused by the retirement of Mr. Justice Fitzgerald, but the place cannot be filled at present, as the Attorney-General's help in Parliament is needed during the passage of the Crimes Bill. For the vacant place in the Common Pleas Division different persons are named, and amongst the most likely the Solicitor-General, but it may be doubted whether the Government will be disposed to lose his services in the House at such a time.—Daily Express.

THE IRISH JUDGES, AND TRIAL BY JURY.

In the House of Commons, on Monday last,

Mr. HEALY asked the First Lord of the Treasury if he had now received the protest of the Irish judges against the abolition of trial by jury in Ireland, and what reply it was intended to make thereto; or if any had been sent?

Mr. CALLAN asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether, since his statement to the House that no communication or memorial from the Irish judges had reached him or any of his colleagues in the Cabinet, he had received a letter from the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, Ireland, stating that the resolution come to by the judges had been forwarded, when passed, to the Lord Lieutenant by the Lord Chancellor; whether such letter and resolution had not, in fact, at the time been received by the Lord Lieutenant; could he state what answer had been returned to the letter and resolution of the judges so forwarded, and was it still his intention to persist in imposing distasteful duties on the Irish Bench; whether the judges had again met, and passed a resolution reiterating in language of increased emphasis the former declaration; and whether he would have any objection to place upon the table a copy of these resolutions of the Irish judges?

Mr. GLADSTONE said that since his last reply on this subject he had found that the document in question had been received by the Viceroy, but it was not communicated in a manner that seemed to call for any formal answer. The proposition was before Parliament, and it would now be for Parliament to say whether those duties should be committed to the Irish judges or not. The Government's intentions were expressed in the Bill.

Mr. CALLAN asked whether there would be any objection to lay a copy of the resolution on the table of the House.

Mr. GLADSTONE said there would be no objection.

Mr. HEALY asked what answer was to be returned.

Mr. GLADSTONE said that, in their opinion, the resolution did not call for any reply.

AGRICULTURAL LABOURERS IN IRELAND.

A Parliamentary paper just published shows "the nature of the provision made for labourers in each of the cases reported by the Irish Land Commission on January 28, 1882, together with information in each case whether such order was made on landlord or tenant." There are 42 such cases. In almost the whole of these the order is made upon the tenant. Such orders chiefly apply to the provision of better cottage accommodation, and generally include an addition to the land attached to the cottage. The following order, made upon the tenant on the Earl of Arran's estate, may be taken as a fair example of the rest:—"It is ordered that the tenant do build and complete a labourer's cottage, in lieu of the existing one, before the 1st of November, 1882. The new cottage to have a slated roof, and to consist of a kitchen not less than 15 ft. square, and a bedroom (floored) not less than 15 ft. by 10 ft. We also order him to inclose half an acre of land as a garden convenient to the new cottage, and that the rent of the said cottage and garden, to be let to the labourer for the time being employed on the farm, be 1s. per week."

QUEEN'S COUNSEL SWORN IN AS MAGISTRATES.

The following Queen's Counsel (named in the Commission of the Peace for each county in Ireland) have selected to be sworn in, so as to enable them to act as magistrates for the counties set opposite to their names:—Richard Paul Carton, Esq., County Louth; John Ayle Curran, Esq., County Dublin; William Harris Falloon, Esq., County Antrim; W. Neilson Hancock, Esq., LL.D., County of Antrim and City of Dublin; Constantine Molloy, Esq., King's County; John B. Murphy, Esq., County Tipperary; Robert W. Shekleton, Esq., City of Dublin; Piers Francis White, Esq., County and City of Dublin.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. Francis Egan has been elected Petty Sessions Clerk for Westport district.

CORRESPONDENCE.

COUNTY COURT EQUITY JURISDICTION AND PRACTICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I expect the matter about which I ask to say a word or two, through your paper, contains much interest for the Sessions Solicitors all over Ireland, and I trust this letter may be of some service.

The County Officers and Courts Act of 1877 greatly extended the jurisdiction of the County Court Judges, and gave them all the powers of the Court of Chancery in certain matters, subject to a limitation as to value; and a vast number of cases is pending under this useful provision. In pursuance of that Act, certain rules were made as to the course of procedure in some few matters connected with the new jurisdiction, and for the rest the officials and practitioners were referred to the procedure in the Court of Chancery.

Now, I think I am correct in assuming that provincial solicitors, as a rule, leave the conduct of Chancery matters, especially the Chamber business, to their town agents, and I am certain that those clerks of the peace who are not solicitors are for the most part ignorant of the duties cast upon them by the late Act and Rules. Take the case of a suit by a mortgagee to realise. What does the ordinary provincial solicitor know of the intricacies of the Chamber practice in Chancery? and, above all, what do the County Court officials know of it? In fact, I am of the belief that such suits were not very frequent in Chancery since the Landed Estates Court was established.

The procedure in Chancery seems to me of a very elaborate and confusing character, and I have often thought a much less intricate machinery might well have been devised by the framers of the Rules under the Act of 1877. For instance, the value of the property involved in the suits in the County Courts would not at all pay for the aid of counsel at every turn round; and the registrars, under the direction of the judges, might well do what counsel is called upon to do in the heavier suits in the superior courts.

I would be anxious to see a book dealing with this new branch of the County Court work, going fully into the powers and duties of the Court and its officials, showing exactly the different steps at present applicable to the various suits, including the Lunacy department. Such a book is much wanted among the profession, and it might well include the present Chamber practice of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice.

I know of several pending suits in which the only hope seems to be that the parties may settle and relieve the Court.

Yours truly,

P. MAXWELL.

5 East Wall, Derry, 8th June, 1882.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Law of Life Insurance, with a Chapter on Accident Insurance. By CHARLES CRAWLEY, M.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, &c. London: William Clowes and Sons, Limited, 27 Fleet-street. 1882.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

TRINITY SITTINGS, 1882.

At the Examination of Applicants seeking to become Apprentices to Solicitors, held on Thursday the 18th, Friday the 19th, and Saturday the 20th of May, 1882, the undernamed candidates were adjudged by the Court of Examiners to have passed said Examination, and their names were arranged in the following order, viz. :—

- |                       |                        |
|-----------------------|------------------------|
| 1. Michael Coyle      | 12. Charles Mullin     |
| 2. James Thompson     | 13. Thomas Maguire     |
| 3. Matthew Riordan    | 14. Lionel A. Julian   |
| 4. Thomas F. Monks    | 15. Arthur M. P. Keogh |
| 5. Thomas B. Wallace  | 16. Patrick O'Rorke    |
| 6. Frederick W. Clay  | 17. J. J. O'Callaghan  |
| 7. Rody X. M. Gleeson | 18. John Hardiman      |
| 8. James Binohy       | 19. George Murphy      |
| 9. Thomas J. Harbison | 20. Hugh H. Musson     |
| 10. Edward S. Jones   | 21. Alexander M'Dowell |
| 11. Francis M. Fitt   |                        |

The remaining candidates on the list have been postponed.

TRINITY SITTINGS, 1882.

At the Examination of Applicants seeking admission as Solicitors, held on Monday the 22nd, and Tuesday the 23rd of May, 1882, the Court of Examiners decided that the undernamed candidates should be allowed the Examination, and their names were arranged in the following order, viz. :—

- |                          |                       |
|--------------------------|-----------------------|
| 1. William S. Collis     | 13. Thomas H. Risk    |
| 2. Patrick A. Chance     | 14. Daniel O'C. Miley |
| 3. Edward J. M'Ardle     | 15. William Shean     |
| 4. Maurice Healy, Jun.   | 16. James J. Aglietta |
| 5. William H. Hancock    | 17. Thomas J. Bennett |
| 6. James Clarke          | 18. Hubert C. West    |
| 7. Hugh J. Hayes         | 19. William H. Irwin  |
| 8. Paul A. Brown         | 20. John C. Wakeham   |
| 9. Thomas Rice           | 21. John H. M'Cann    |
| 10. Henry F. C. Stephens | 22. Gerard A. Bird    |
| 11. Albert Cagney        | 23. Samuel Cunningham |
| 12. Michael Murphy       |                       |

Mr. Edward T. Mulhall has also been allowed the Special Examination for which he had leave to present himself.

The Court of Examiners have awarded a gold medal to Mr. William S. Collins; silver medals to Messrs. Patrick A. Chance, and Edward J. M'Ardle; and special certificates to Messrs. Maurice Healy, Jun., William H. Hancock, and James Clarke.

The other candidates on the list were postponed.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

FINAL EXAMINATION FOR APPRENTICES TO SOLICITORS,
Pursuant to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (Ireland), 1866.

TRINITY SITTINGS EXAMINATION, 1882.

FRACTION OF THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. NEILSON, Examiner.

1. From what debts does a certificate of conformity not release the bankrupt?
2. State what powers the Court has to give possession of lands or premises sold by the Court.
3. Within what period, and under what circumstances, may voluntary settlements be voided?
4. What are the statements necessary to be contained in a charge filed by an incumbrancer upon a bankrupt's estate?
5. A debtor desires to have himself immediately adjudicated a bankrupt at the instance of a creditor; state the proceedings and proofs necessary for such purpose.
6. What are the rights of a creditor, holding a mortgage on a policy of insurance, against the estate of the bankrupt, such mortgage containing a covenant by the bankrupt to pay the premiums on the policy?

DUBLIN, TRINITY SITTINGS, 1882.

[Every answer is to be accompanied by reasons concisely stated.]

COMMON LAW.

1. "When personal property is directed to be paid to any person at a future time, the leaning of the Court is always in favour of vested interests." Explain and illustrate this proposition.
2. A liability to the debts of a partnership was, until recently, incurred by a participation in the profits, although the circumstances of such participation might be unknown to the creditors. State accurately the present state of the law in this respect.
3. Where a contract, not under seal, is made with an agent in his own name for an undisclosed principal, either the agent or the principal may sue upon it. This right of the principal to intervene and charge the other contracting party is subject to certain exceptions. Explain and give instances.
4. Define accurately the nature of "lien," the distinction between particular and general lien, and give examples of each.
5. State accurately the statutable requisites for the valid execution and attestation of Warrants of Attorney and Cognovits.
6. What was the state of the law respecting the apportionment of income of different kinds previous to the passing of the "Apportionment Act, 1870," and what are the provisions of that Act?
7. What interests in lands may be sold by a Sheriff under a writ of fi fa? What course should the Sheriff adopt, and how make title to the purchaser? At what time does such title accrue, and what steps are necessary to give it effect?
8. Some general doctrines and rules of construction have been laid down upon the question whether the terms of the contract import a condition precedent to the promise. Explain and give instances.
9. "Conditions precedent must be performed and satisfied in order to render the conditional covenant or promise absolute, and to entitle the promisee to the performance." Are there any cases in which the conditions precedent may be discharged or excused? How if the condition be partly performed?
10. Is a master under all or any, and what circumstances liable for damages occasioned by the negligence or criminal act of his servant?

11. What provision is made by the Joint Stock Companies Acts for the winding up of a company, and what are the rules regulating the liability of Contributories?

12. How does Broom classify "extraordinary remedies"? Give an instance of each class.

REAL PROPERTY, CONVEYANCING AND EQUITY.

1. What are the provisions of the Statutes, 18 Elizth., c. 5, and 27 Elizth., c. 4, and illustrate these provisions by referring to some decisions upon each?
  2. Explain accurately what are resulting trusts, and mention the different classes of cases in which the presumption of a resulting trust will be rebutted.
  3. "If a person does not expressly fill a fiduciary character, as that of Trustee or Executor, but is merely a Constructive Trustee, his liabilities are in some respects different from those of an Express Trustee." Explain how and illustrate.
  4. The modes in which it has been held that property may belong to a married woman independently of her husband are various. Mention the principal of them, and state what new classes of separate property have been created by the Married Women's Property Acts, and what facilities have been given for its investment.
  5. Mistakes of fact are, as a general rule, relievable in Equity. State the qualifications of this rule. Give examples of the principles on which the Court acts in the rectification of mistakes in Marriage Settlements, and in the case of defective execution of powers arising from mistake.
  6. Cases of actual fraud may be divided into two classes; cases of constructive fraud into three classes. Distinguish and give instances of each.
  7. In the exercise of powers of appointment amongst children, in what cases are the limits of perpetuity to be reckoned from the time of the exercise of the power and in what cases from the date of its creation?
  8. Suppose that a married woman is entitled, on the death of A, a person now living, to a sum of stock standing in the names of Trustees, and that her husband should make an assignment of this reversionary interest to B, a purchaser. The benefit which will accrue to B by virtue of this assignment will vary according as the husband, the wife or A, the tenant for life, may happen to die first. How would this be in each case?
  9. Lands are devised by Will to A for life with remainder in fee to such son of B as shall first attain the age of twenty-one years. In this case the limitation to the son of B may be either a contingent remainder or an executory devise. Explain accurately.
  10. An important step towards levelling securities differing in degree was effected by the 32 & 33 Vict., c. 46. What was this? What enactments are contained in the Judicature Act on the same subject?
  11. What was "Taltarum's Case," and when was it decided? Explain what points in the case make it so important in the history of the law of real property.
  12. Draft a devise of real estate to use that testator's wife may receive a rentcharge during her life, and subject thereto to testator's sons in strict settlement, remainder to testator's daughters as tenants in common in tail.
- It is not generally known that the late Lord Justice Holker served in early life under articles of clerkship to a well-known solicitor (Mr. Eastham), of Kirkby Lonsdale, Westmoreland. The service extended over several years and up to the time of the deceased learned judge entering as a bar student at Gray's-inn in 1851. When called to the bar he was twenty-six years of age. This is another of the many instances in which lawyers who have risen to the highest judicial positions have commenced with a training in a solicitor's chambers. Law Times.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—B. Hegarty, confirm sale.—Trustee A. M. Blake, allocate.

IN COURT.—Assignees A. M. Miller, occupation rent.—E. Guilfoyle, as to letting.—W. Bagnall, payment.—J. Kilbee, re-entry notice.—J. Kilbee, to give possession.—T. H. Crofts, as to sale.—Trustees Little, receiver.—R. Moore, do.—E. P. Peyton, two notices from 15th.—W. Anketell, from 16th.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

F. Blake, rental.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—B. D. Smith, as to costs.—S. Davis, final schedule.—E. J. Brady, payment.—M. Cody, as to policy.—E. H. O'Brien, receiver from 15th.—G. B. Low, do.—W. Rowland, do.—Rev. J. Bradshaw, do.—M. Murphy, to vary order.—Representatives Church Body, receiver.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—R. Moore, from 8th.—R. O'Donnell, receiver.—H. Leader, payment by receiver.—E. J. Holt, as to carriage from 15th.—S. Holt, do.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—R. W. Fearon, payment.

IN COURT.—L. O. Weir, carriage.—B. M. Bloomfield, receiver.—E. E. J. Lutman, adjourned motion.—D. W. Cruise, peremptorily.—Rev. A. W. West, final schedule from 15th.

TUESDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

T. HIGNELL, 2 lots.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

J. Young, rental.—D. P. M'Carthy, vouch.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—J. Harshaw, confirm sale.

IN COURT.—P. H. Hore, final schedule.—Rev. A. Cooke, do.—E. Burke, liberty to bid.—R. Kelleff, as to partition.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

- Bell, George, of Armagh, in the county of Armagh, shoe warehouseman. June 1; Friday, June 30, and Tuesday, July 18. Cronhelm & Tobias, solrs.
- Curran, Thomas, of Millertown, Stradbally, in the county of Waterford, farmer. May 28; Friday, June 30, and Tuesday, July 18. R Davoren, solr.
- Flanagan, John, of Tullamore, in the King's County, shoe-maker. June 1; Friday, June 30, and Tuesday, July 18 Cronhelm & Tobias, solrs.
- Freeman, Richard Deane, of Beachfield, Clontarf, in the county of Dublin, Esquires. June 5; Tuesday, July 4, and Friday July 21. D. & T. Fitzgerald, solrs.
- O'Brien, Michael, of No. 8 Essex-bridge, in the city of Dublin, grocer. June 1; Friday, June 30, and Tuesday, July 18. Casey & Clay, solrs.
- Tweedie, David Henry, of Canal-street, Newry, in the county of Armagh, grocer and publican. June 6; Tuesday, July 4, and Friday, July 21. Henry C. Neilson, solr.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	JUNE
	Sat. 10	Mon. 12	Tues. 13	Wed. 14	Thur. 15	Fri. 16
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	100½	100½	—	100½	—	100½
— 3 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	99½	—
— New 3 p c Stock ..	100	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1888 } Trafalgar at ..	—	104	104½	104½	104	104
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	—	101½	—	—	101½	—
BANKS.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	819	—	819	—	—	819½
25 Hibernian Banking Co ..	—	—	—	32-18	—	32
20 London and County (Ld'd.) ..	—	—	75	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock ..	—	56½	56	—	—	56
20 London and Westminster, M'd ..	—	—	70½	70½	70½	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	61	—	—	—
3½ Munster Bank (Limited) ..	—	7½	7½	7½	7½	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	23½	23½	—	23½
10 National of Liverpool (Ld'd.) ..	—	—	14½	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Standard of B. S. A., M'd ..	—	—	58	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	—	—	101	101½	101½	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	5½
MINES.
4½ Borahoen (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
1 Killaloe Slate Co. (ltd'd) ..	—	—	12/6	—	—	—
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (M'd) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons. Gas ..	—	—	—	—	15½	15½
8 Do. New ..	—	—	11½	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 C. Dub. Brewery Co. (ltd.) ..	—	—	5½	—	—	—
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 National Discount, Fra., Ltd ..	—	—	—	2½	—	—
25 National Assurance ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance ..	—	—	—	10	—	—
TRAMWAYS.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	8½	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Edinburgh Street Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 L'pl Un'ed Tram &amp; Bus l'hd ..	—	—	—	138½	—	—
10 Leeds Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 N'th Metr. Tramway, Lond. ..	—	—	18½	—	—	—
Railways.
100 Dublin, Wicklow, &amp; W'ford ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	118½	118½	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	—	—	114½	—	—
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	84½	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	31½	—
Railway Preference.
100 Gt. N'th'n (Ireland) g'd 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	108	—
100 Do., 3½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	87
Leased at Fixed Rentals.
100 Dublin and Kingsdown ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Londonderry &amp; Enniskillen ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., Pref. 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	127	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; N'th'n Cos. 4 p c ..	105½	105½	—	—	—	—
— C'fergus and Larne 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	106	—	106	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	109½	109½	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4½ p c ..	—	—	109½	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c ..	109½	109½	109½	—	—	109½
— Kilkenny Junction, A, 5 p c ..	—	—	80	—	—	—
— L'derry &amp; Enniskillen 5 p c ..	—	—	—	125½	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	114½	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	106	105½	—	105½
— Do., 4½ p c ..	109½	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterford &amp; Central 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
Do. New, £100, ..	—	—	—	—	—	99

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—1/1 Discount—6 per cent., 30th January, 1882.

Of Deposit—5 per cent., 30th January, 1882.

Name Days—June 28th, and July 12th, 1882.

Account Days—June 28th, and July 12th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Debilitated Constitutions.—When climate, age, or hardship, have undermined the health, skin diseases are prone to arise and augment the existing weakness. Holloway's medicaments daily prove most serviceable even under the most untoward circumstances. This well-known and highly-esteemed unguent possesses the finest balsamic virtues, which soothe and heal without inflaming or irritating the most tender skin or most sensitive sore. Holloway's Ointment and Pills are infallible for curing bad legs, varicose veins, swollen ankles, erysipelas, scaly skin, and every variety of skin disease. Over all these disorders Holloway's remedies exert a quick and favourable action, and, where cure is possible, gradually but certainly arrive at that consummation. They are invaluable in the cure of scrofula and scurvy.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.*BIRTHS.

ALLEN—June 10, at Upper Temple-street, Dublin, the wife of Elobard Allen, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.
FRENCH—June 13, at Dancesfield, Aylsbury-road, Dublin, the wife of John A. French, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.
GEOFFGAN—June 8, at Sunbury Gardens, Upper Rathmines, the wife of Hanbury C. Geoghegan, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.
HARRISON—June 11, at Mountjoy-square, the wife of the Hon. Mr. Justice Harrison, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

HARDING and MAGUIRE—June 6, in the private chapel at Ardmanagh, Passage West, by the Very Rev. Canon A. Maguire, P.P., Ballinacraig, uncle to the bride, Edward Harding, eldest son of the late John Harding, Esq., barrister-at-law, Cork, to Mary, fourth daughter of the late John Francis Maguire, M.P.
M'MINN and SWAN—June 5, by special licence, at Rostrevor, by the Rev. James A. Allison, 1st Monaghan, C. C. M'Minn, Esq., solicitor, Monaghan, to Charlotte, eldest daughter of William Swan, Esq., Monaghan.
O'HARA and RUSSELL-CRUISE—June 13, at St. Kevin's Chapel, Pro-Cathedral, Marlborough-street, by the Rev. B. Conlan, Admr., assisted by Very Rev. N. Walsh, S.J., and Rev. A. Murphy, S.J., Robert F. O'Hara, Esq., barrister-at-law, Mountjoy-square, Dublin, and Derryhoyle, County Galway, only son of John M. O'Hara, Clerk of the Peace, County Galway, to Beatrice, daughter of Robert Russell-Cruise, Esq., J.P., Drynam, Swords, and Mountjoy-place, Dublin.
STRITCH and DUNN—June 8, at St. Thomas's Church, by the Rev. James White, A.M., Rector, M. M. Stritch, Esq., S.I., Royal Irish Constabulary, third son of the late Andrew Russell Stritch, Esq., barrister-at-law, E.M.M., to Lissie E., only daughter of John Dunn, Esq., L.B.C.S.I., Summerhill, Dublin.

DEATHS.

CRONHELM—June 13, Florence, aged two years, youngest daughter of Wm. Henry C. Cronhelm, Esq., solicitor, Marlborough Park, Belfast.
DOWLING—June 12, suddenly, at his residence, Lower Gardiner-street, Wm. P. Dowling, Esq., solicitor.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
 DENZILLE-STREET. 37

PUBLIC NOTICES:

D. W. CARROLL,
 44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
 Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTEPAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
 Direct in every instance from the Makers
 They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
 Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
 With every article connected with Stationery,
 Are Sold much under usual charges.
 Price Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
 Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge.

72

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,
 No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.
J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees, Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.
 Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.

91

ROBERT WHYTE,

Ladies' & Gentlemen's  Boot & Shoe Manufacturer,

1, NORTH FREDERICK-STREET
 (Rutland-square),

ESTABLISHED OVER HALF A CENTURY.

Boots made for Weak Ankles, Deformed Feet, and Surgical purposes of every description.

All Work executed on the Premises under my personal superintendance.

None but first-class Workmen employed in either Making or Repairing.

PUBLIC NOTICES:*THE CHROMOGRAPH.
 INSTANTANEOUS REPRODUCTION
 OF MANUSCRIPTS, DOCUMENTS, PLANS, &c., &c.

Plans and Designs in various Colours obtained by One Single Operation.

The Chromograph is used WITHOUT either PRESS, INKING, or STRIPPING, and with ANY DESCRIPTION OF PAPER.

From eight to ten minutes suffice to obtain 40 to 50 copies.

To take off the writing from the composition, it is sufficient to wash the apparatus with a soft sponge in clear water IMMEDIATELY after having taken the last impression.

PRICES OF CHROMOGRAPHS.

No. 1. Octavo Boxes, with a Bottle of Ink, .. ..	10/-
" 2. Quarto " " " " .. ..	18/-
" 3. Foolscap " " " " .. ..	25/-
" 4. Folio " " " " .. ..	34/-

Extra Bottles of Ink, 1/- per Bottle.

Composition, 3/- per lb.

TERMS:—CASH WITH ORDER.

GERRARD BROTHERS,

87 STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 59

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANBATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 976

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,
 the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 118 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs Stewarts & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PERCY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

MONEY:*IRISH CIVIL SERVICE PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY,

52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 2½ per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.

Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz. :—

The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to 80

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.

52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10

TO

£1,000

{ IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days. Two TREBBLING RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free. Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, JUNE 24, 1882.

No. 804

RAILWAY CARRIERS, AND THE CONTAGIOUS DISEASES (ANIMALS) ACT, 1878.—II.

IN the first place, in order the more readily to discern the true bearing and effect of Lynch v. The Midland Ry. Co., it will be well to recall some general principles of the law of contracts which were brought into application or distinguished. Those on which impossibility of performance rests as a defence (see Pollock, Contr., 2nd ed.; Anson, Contr.; 2 Parsons, Contr.; 12 C. L. J. 4; 19 Amer. L. Reg. 548) were primarily invoked. Now, such impossibility may relate (1) to the consideration of a contract—i.e., where the consideration cannot be executed by the promisee because it is either illegal, or impossible to perform, for some reason or other (as to which category Bates v. Cort, 2 B. & C. 474, may be cited as a strong example); and (2) where the impossibility exists in the performance of the promise, arising either (a) from the act of God, or (with a few limited exceptions) from inevitable accident, (b) from the act of the law (of our own country), or (c) from the acts of the promisee. We have here to do with impossibility existing in the performance of the contract, and arising either from the act of the law or of the promisee. Firstly, then, while as regards cases of impossibility of consideration, any impossibility, arising from whatever cause (except the act of the promisor), will constitute a good defence, cases of impossibility arising in the performance of the promise by the promisor are governed by a narrower rule; and as to the latter the general rule is that impossibility of performance, whether arising through the fault of the promisor or not, if the promise was made unconditionally, and not obtained through fraud or collusion, will not constitute a defence. The question has chiefly occurred, however, where the impossibility has arisen after the contract is made; and as to such cases the general doctrine may be expressed that, where a person contracts absolutely to do a certain act, he will not be discharged from his obligation by the supervention of circumstances rendering performance impossible: Atkinson v. Ritchie, 10 East, 530; Kearon v. Pearson, 7 H. & N. 386, 31 L. J. Ex. 1; This v. Byers, 1 Q. B. D. 244; Brown v. Royal Insurance Co., 1 E. & E. 853, 28 L. J. Q. B. 275; Brewster v. Kitchell, 1 Salk. 198; Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 B. & S. 826, 833, 32 L. J. Q. B. 164, 166; Hill v. Sughrue, 15 M. & W. 253 (as to which see Anson, Contr. 313, n., Pollock, Contr., 2nd Ed., 356, n.); Arthur v. Wynne, 14 Ch. D. 603; Jervis v. Tomkinson, 1 H. & N. 208; Bullock v. Dornit, 6 T. R. 650; Brecknock Co. v. Pritchard, ib. 750; Duncan v. Gibson, 45 Miss. 352; Lomis v. Ruetter, 9 Watts, 516; Huling v. Craig, Addison, 342; Thorp v. Ross, 4 Abb. App. Dec. 416; Dermott v. Jones, 2 Wall. 1; Anspach v. Bast, 2 Smith, Pa. 356; Ketzinger v. Sanborn, 70 Ill. 146; Lewis v. Atlas M. L. I. Co., 61 Mo. 534; Cobb v. Harmon, 23 N. Y. 148; Dodge v. Van Lear, 5 Cranch C. C. 278; Booth v. Spuyton D. R. M. Co., 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 368; Beebe v. Johnson, 19 Wend. 500; Porter v. The New England, 17 Mo. 390; Gilpins v. Consequa, Pet. C. C. 86; Harmony v. Bingham, 2 Kern. 90; Jones v. U. States, 17 Amer. L. R. 500; and as to impossible conditions in wills, see Flood, Wills Per. Prop. 437; Thomas v. Howell, 1 Salk. 170; Bunbury v. Doran,

I. R. 9 C. L. 284; Decrow v. Moody, 25 Alb. L. J. 457. This rule, however, only extends to express contracts: see Taylor v. Caldwell, ubi supra; Fitzgerald v. Mid. Ry. Co., 34 L. T. N. S. 771; Adams v. Nichols, 19 Pick. 275; Boyle v. Agawam Canal, 22 Pick. 381; Dermott v. Jones, 2 Wall. 1; see Bishop, Contr. ss. 615, 619; and an undertaking to be answerable for delay caused by vis major cannot be made part of an implied contract: Ford v. Cotesworth, L. R. 5 Q. B. 544; Fitzgerald v. Mid. Ry. Co., ubi supra; cf. Boswell v. Sutherland, 1 Canada L. T. 726. And to this general rule of law one exception is, as we have premised, that (b) legal impossibility, arising from a change in the law of our own country, exonerates the promisor: Baily v. De Crespigny, L. R. 4 Q. B. 180, 38 L. J. Q. B. 98; Brown v. Mayor of London, 9 C. B. N. S. 726, 13 ib. 828; Atkinson v. Ritchie, ubi supra; Doe d. Anglesea v. Rugeley, 6 Q. B. 107; Richards v. Easto, 15 M. & W. 253; and see Newby v. Sharpe, 8 Ch. D. 39; Newington Local Board v. Cottingham Local Board, 12 ib. 725; Esposito v. Bowden, 7 E. & B. 763, 27 L. J. Q. B. 17; Beason v. Dean, 3 Mod. 38; Brewster v. Kitchell, ubi supra; Brick Presbyterian Church v. New York, 5 Cow. 538; Brown v. Dillahunty, 4 Sm. & M. 713; Bennett v. Woolfolk, 15 Ga. 213. So, a process from court interrupting and rendering performance impossible, will furnish an excuse: Walker v. Fitts, 24 Pick. 191, 195; Lord v. Thomas, 64 N. Y. 107; Bain v. Lyle, 18 Smith, Pa. 60; Ohio, &c., Ry. Co. v. Yohe, 51 Ind. 181; Styles v. Davis, 1 Black, 101; Bliven v. Hudson River Ry. Co., 36 N. Y. 403; Burton v. Wilkinson, 18 T. R. 186; and so where goods are attached in the hands of a carrier: Verrall v. Robinson, Tyrw. 1069, 4 D. P. C. 242, 2 C. M. & R. 495; Styles v. Davis, ubi supra; Lawson, Contr. of Car. 18; 4 Sthn. L. Rev. N. S. 465; and where a vessel was detained by a military officer, it was held that the owner was not answerable for a loss by reason of a fall of prices of goods on board during the period of detention, he having yielded only to a force which he could not resist: The Schooner Onrust, 1 Ben. 446; but, see Gosling v. Higgins, 1 Camp. 451 (regarded as bad law by Mr. Lawson, Contr. of Car., and by Judge Rose, writing in 4 Sthn. L. Rev. N. S. 465). And a statute may so act upon a contract as to suspend its operation for a time, and yet leave it so far subsisting that upon the repeal of the law the contract will be revived and its obligations enforced; so, it was held that a law of the United States laying an embargo for a limited time, did not destroy a contract to deliver debentures, but only suspended its operation as long as the law continued in force: Baylies v. Feltplace, 7 Mass. 325; and see Hadley v. Clark, 8 T. R. 259. Another exception to the general rule is, as we have premised, that (c) if the impossibility results from the act (or default: Bigland v. Skelton, 12 East, 436; 1 Ro. Ab. 453, N.) of the promisee or his agents, the promisor is excused; and so, even if the impossibility arises only indirectly from such acts, as where one was engaged to excavate some land, and to replace the earth in a certain way, and by the direction of the promisee he deposited the earth temporarily upon the land of a neighbour, who refused to allow him to remove it: Tome v. Doelger, 6 Rob. 251; and see Caines v. Smith, 15 M. & W. 189; Short v. Stone, 8 Q. B. 358; Ford v. Tillet, 6 B. & C. 326; Bowdell v.

Parsons, 10 East, 359; Roberts v. Bury Com., L. R. 4 C. P. 755, 5 ib. 310; Tewksbury v. O'Connell, 21 Cal. 60; Johnston v. Caulkins, 1 Johns. Cas. 116; M'Collough v. Baker, 47 Mo. 401; Squire v. Wright, 1 Mo. App. 172; Seipel v. International Life Ince. Co. 3 Norris, Pa. But, in all such cases within those exceptions there must be an actual impossibility, and it is not enough that the change of circumstances would render the performance more difficult, onerous, or expensive: Williams v. Vanderbilt, 38 N. Y. 217; and see cases cited supra, in reference to general rule; nor is the promisor excused if the impossibility of performance applied to him individually, and the thing is not inherently impossible: Lloyd v. Crispe, 5 Taunt. 249; M'Niel v. Reed, 2 M. & S. 89, 9 Bing. 68; and the defendant's insolvency, and consequent inability to carry out his part of the contract, constitutes no defence: Lewis v. Atlas Mut. Life Ince. Co., 61 Mo. 584; Malone v. Dockrill, I. R. 3 C. L. 561.

Passing from this subject, we have now to turn to some other doctrines of the law of contracts. And first we may note that the general principle is that the person who is to be discharged from his liability upon a contract, by the performance of a certain act, is impliedly bound to do, or cause to be done, the act which is to discharge him: Cranley v. Hillary, 2 M. & S. 120. But, in reference to various contracts, it becomes a question on whom the obligation so rests of performing certain acts necessary for the completion of the contract: see Bigland v. Skelton, 12 East 436; Fry, Spec. Per., 2nd ed., 633; Horgan v. South City Market Co., and Posnett (Q. B. D., June 8, 1882). "I think," said Lord Blackburn, in the recent case of Macay v. Dick (L. R. 6 App. 251), "I may safely say, as a general rule, that where in a written contract it appears that both parties have agreed that something shall be done, which cannot effectually be done unless both concur in doing it, the construction of the contract is that each agrees to do all that is necessary to be done on his part for the carrying out of that thing, though there may be no express words to that effect. What is the part of each must depend on circumstances. In a very early case in England, in the Year Book of 9th Edward IV., Easter Term, 4 A., where the defendant was sued on an obligation, the condition of which was that, if the great bell of Mildenhall should be brought, at the cost of the men of Mildenhall, to the house of the defendant in Norwich, and there weighed and put in the fire in the presence of the men of Mildenhall, and the defendant made a tenor of it to agree with the other bells of Mildenhall, the obligation should be void. Choke, then Chief Justice, and Littleton, and Moile, then judges, held that a plea by the defendant that the bell was not to be weighed nor put in the fire was bad, for the defendant, being a brazier, it was his part to weigh it and put it in the fire; Needham, who was the fourth judge, thought that the weighing of the bell required no particular skill, and might as well have been done by the men of Mildenhall or those they employed as by the defendant. But he said that the putting it into the fire was the part of the artificer." And in reference to the time of performance in such cases, the same learned judge laid it down (Ford v. Cotesworth, ubi supra) that, whenever a party to a contract undertakes to do some particular act, the performance of which depends entirely on himself, so that he may choose his own mode of fulfilling his undertaking, and the contract is silent as to the time, the law implies a contract to do it within a reasonable time under the circumstances; but, when the act to be done is one in which both parties are to concur, and both bind themselves to the performance of it, that which is implied by law is not that either party contracts that it shall be done within a fixed or a reasonable time, but that each contracts that he should use reasonable diligence in performing his part. In Wise v. G. W. Ry. Co. (1 H. & N. 68, 25 L. J. Ex. 258), a horse was delivered to the company to be conveyed to W. for the plaintiff. On arrival at W., the company's servants either forgot or did not notice that the horse had arrived, and on the plaintiff calling for it the next day it was discovered in a horse-box on the siding, and found to be injured from remaining all night in the cold and in a confined position. It was the usual and proper course for the sender to give an intimation to the consignee, and for someone to come to meet the horse at the end of the journey, and this had not been done. It was considered that (independently of the special contract in the case) the company would not have been liable, as the injury had been the result of the plaintiff not being ready to receive the horse on its arrival at W. Cf. Gordon v. G. W. Ry. Co., 8 Q. B. D. 44; M'Kean v. M'Iver L. R. 6 Ex. 36; and as to agreements to perform services with instruments supplied by the other party, see Robertson v. Amazon Tug Co., 7 Q. B. D. 598. It was held in Hall v. Pennsylvania Ry. Co. (19 Amer. L. Reg. 250), that a strike of its employees is no defence to a common carrier in an action for damages for delay in transportation: but, in Pittsburg, &c., Ry. Co. v. Hollowell (65 Ind. 188), it was held that, in an action against common carriers for failure to receive and carry live stock in pursuance of their agreement, it is a good defence that they were prevented from fulfilment solely by the armed violence of their late employees, whose wages had been reduced, and who had quit work and struck for higher wages. If a carrier give notice that he will not be liable unless certain conditions are complied with, he must provide the means for obtaining the customer's compliance: thus, a regulation that the carrier will not be liable for the loss of baggage, unless the same has been checked, if it have any effect (Williams v. G. W. Ry. Co. 10 Ex. 15; G. W. Ry. v. Goodman, 12 C. B. 313), will not prevent a person who gave his baggage to the carrier's agent and demanded a check, but failed to receive one, because the person whose duty it was to give them was not present, from recovering its value: Freeman v. Newton, 3 E. D. Smith, 245 (Amer.). And as to the exoneration of the carrier from liability for results arising from the discharge of duties undertaken by the customer, which would otherwise devolve on the carrier, see cases collected in 14 Ir. L. T. 380. Bearing those general principles and illustrations in mind, we shall next state the effect of Lynch v. The Midland Ry. Co.—a case on which we think it right not to comment more directly at present, as we believe an appeal is projected; and we shall but add that, of the decisions here collected, the only ones there cited were Bailey v. De Crespigny, Esposito v. Bowden, Richards v. Easto, Shaw v. G. S. & W. Ry., Newington Local Board v. Cottingham Local Board, and Fitzgerald v. The Midland Ry. Co.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The Salvation Army has managed at last to get a decision from a superior court on the moot question of the legality of their public gatherings. The case has been attentively watched over the entire kingdom, for the difficulty of dealing with the noisy if well-meaning army has been no small one. It is fortunate that the facts before the court on Tuesday last are representative of the ordinary daily occurrences throughout the country, for the decision will at least inform magistrates what their duty is, though it may be doubtful whether it has rendered it easier.

The facts of the case were as follows: A charge was made by the police of Weston-super-Mare against the defendants, who were leaders of the Salvation Army, "for that they did unlawfully and tumultuously assemble with divers other persons to the number of 100 or more in public thoroughfares" to the disturbance of the public peace. It was proved that the Salvation Army is an organised body of persons who are and have for some time been in the habit of forming themselves into public processions, and parading the public streets with bands, flags, and banners. They start from a hall for the purpose of collecting as they go a mob of persons, with whom, attended by much shouting and singing, noise and uproar, they return. At Weston-super-Mare there was another body who called themselves the Skeleton Army, which also paraded the streets for the express purpose of disturbing the operations of the Salvation Army. There were also large numbers of other persons who were accustomed to assemble around or in front of the Salvation Army, some of whom came to assist the Skeleton Army in disputing their passage, while others encouraged such passage by shouting, uproar, and noise, the effect produced being, to use the words of the special case, "to the great terror, disturbance, annoyance, and inconvenience of the peaceable inhabitants of the town and to the endangering of the public peace." On several occasions when the hostile bodies had come into collision there was a free fight, and great disorder, among the incidents of which blows and stone-throwing were noticeable. On the 23rd March last one of these fights occurred. The police were for a long time unable to cope with the disturbance, but at length they were reinforced and the crowd dispersed. Complaints were made by the inhabitants to the police, and a notice was consequently issued, signed by the magistrates, to the effect that there were reasonable grounds for apprehending a repetition of such riotous and tumultuous assemblies, and concluding with these words:—"We do therefore hereby require, order, and direct all persons to abstain from assembling to the disturbance of the public peace in the public streets within the parish" of Weston-super-Mare. On Sunday, the 26th March, while numbers of the inhabitants were proceeding to morning service at the various churches and chapels, the Salvation Army, formed into a procession headed by the defendants, began to march from their hall through the streets. They were surrounded by a tumultuous and shouting mob which increased in numbers as they went on. The police stopped them, and the defendants admitted that they were leading the procession, and that they had received or seen the notice. The police required them to comply with the notice and to desist from leading the procession, but the defendants refused and marched on some 20 yards further, saying that they should still proceed. They were then arrested. None of the defendants were guilty of any overt act of violence other than these acts, and submitted quietly to their arrest. The special case concluded by finding that the procession on the morning in question was calculated to cause a breach of the peace, and that there was reason to fear another collision with the Skeleton Army, followed by the usual fighting and disturbance. Before the magistrates the defendants contended that there had not been any tumultuous and unlawful gathering on their part, that they had not been guilty of the charge against them, and that their arrest was illegal. The magistrates decided against the defendants, and ordered them to find sureties to keep the peace. From this the defendants appealed, and the question before the court was whether the order of the magistrates was valid.

For the appellants it was argued that they had used no force or violence, and had not intended to resist the police, but merely to go on with their procession notwithstanding the opposition of the Skeleton Army. To that extent they were justified, for they were not an unlawful assembly—i.e., an assembly for an unlawful object or with intent to carry out a lawful object riotously and tumultuously. The only riot or tumult was that of the persons besetting them. Their object in walking through the streets was in itself lawful; if so, the assembly could not become unlawful by the conduct of other persons, and that even although it tended to provoke opposition, R. v. Vincent, 9 C. & P. 91, was referred to. There Alderson, B., in summing up told the jury, "I take it to be the law of the land that any meeting assembled under such circumstances as, according to the opinion of rational and firm men, are likely to produce danger to the tranquillity and peace of the neighbourhood is an unlawful assembly. You will have to say whether, looking at all the circumstances, the defendant attended an unlawful assembly." This was an authority for the proposition that the court must look at the nature and intent of the assembly itself. In the present case the defendants only intended to do a peaceable and lawful act, and they ought to have been protected against the violence of others who sought to assail them.

For the magistrates it was pointed out that there was no conviction of the defendants, but merely an order to find sureties. The magistrates were justified in making the order even if the assembly was not unlawful, if there was a tendency to produce a breach of the peace. The defendants had gone through the streets to collect a mob of the roughest and worst classes, possibly in order to induce them to attend their services, but still causing disturbance to the public peace in so doing. They were aware that they would have opponents, and that disorder would follow from their proceedings. The notice of the magistrates was general, and included both the defendants and their opponents. Reference was made to the cases of persons exhibiting pictures, &c., in their shop windows and causing crowds to assemble, who were held to be guilty of nuisance. The defendants were the cause of riot and tumult, and might, therefore, properly be called upon to find sureties to keep the peace.

The court, without calling on the other side for a reply, held that the order of the magistrates was invalid. The object of the defendants was in itself laudable, and they had not used any force or violence. Their marching in procession was not of itself unlawful, any more than the like acts on the part of many other public bodies. Before the magistrates could bind them over to keep the peace they must be justified by some unlawful act committed. The defendants were charged with "unlawfully and tumultuously assembling with others to the disturbance of the peace." Their mere number did not make their assembly unlawful. They were not in themselves tumultuous, nor were they themselves guilty of any disturbance of the peace. If it had been their intention, or if it had been the natural consequence of their acts to produce disturbance they might have been responsible. But it was only because others would molest them that any riot or tumult would arise. What right had these others to interfere with them? these others had no such right, and it was the duty of the magistrates and police to prevent such interference. The riots caused not from the acts of the Salvation Army, but from the opposition to them. It was unlawful for persons to assemble with the intention of doing anything which if carried out would be riotous; but because others acted riotously the defendants would not be guilty of riot. It was not unlawful to do a lawful act merely because others made it the pretence for raising a riot. The court also intimated a strong opinion that the magistrates would fail to do their duty, if, in the event of future disturbance, they did not arrest and make an example of the real disturbers, viz., the Skeleton Army.

We have set out at length the substance of the arguments and the judgments in this case, as it will be some little time before the full reports are published, and because of its importance to magistrates. That the decision is right will not seriously be questioned, although there are many inhabitants of towns to whom the Salvation Army and its gatherings are a real nuisance, and who cannot therefore be expected to appreciate a legal doctrine when it occasions them personal discomfort. But now that the meetings and processions of the Salvation Army are pronounced to be legal, and any interference with them illegal, it is probable that the opposition they have encountered will largely abate, if not cease altogether. In any event the duty of the magistrates and the police is clear. They must arrest the persons actually causing the breach of the peace and require them to give sureties for their good behaviour. In fact, they must deal with them in the same way as the Weston-super-Mare magistrates sought to deal with their peaceable opponents. The wonder is that it did not occur to them to have done so before.—Justice of the Peace.

MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY BILL.

This Bill is now in the House of Commons, and was ordered to be printed June 2. We discussed the Bill as amended by the Committee of the House of Lords, in the Law Times of April 15, p. 417, but since that time some considerable changes have been made, so that it is necessary to re-examine the Bill in its altered form. It contains four new clauses: "Execution of general power" (4); "Married woman as an executrix or trustee" (18); "Legal representative of married woman" (23); "Interpretation of terms" (24). This plan of putting an interpretation of terms at the end of an Act is very objectionable. If it is not "locking the door on the inside," it is at least putting the key in a most inconvenient place. And the key is a very important one. "The word 'contract' in this Act shall include the acceptance of any trust, or of the office of executrix or administratrix, and the provisions of this Act as to liabilities of married women shall extend to all liabilities by reason of any breach of trust or deceit committed by any married woman being a trustee or executrix either before or after marriage."

We cannot but think this very important extension of the Bill has been made without due consideration of the effect of this non-natural interpretation of the word "contract." By the first and governing clause of the Bill the married woman may enter into any "contract" as if she were feme sole. Hence by this new clause she may accept a trust or executorship as if she were feme sole, and therefore apparently without the consent of the husband; but by the present law a husband is liable for his wife's breaches of trust (Lewin, 82), and also for her deceits (Wms. Exors. 1836). Obviously the husband should be freed from this liability. But it is by no means clear whether this Bill gives such relief. If we read the words "acceptance of trust" in some of the various places in clause 1, where the word "contract" occurs, we simply get nonsense. How can a married woman or anybody else be sued "either in 'acceptance of any trust' or in tort?" And the sub-clause (3) will have to be read, "Every acceptance of any trust entered into by a married woman shall be deemed to be an acceptance of trust entered into by her with respect to and to bind her separate property, unless the contrary be shown."

This addition of an extension clause, under the name of an interpretation, renders a careful revision of the whole Bill needful; and it would be a great improvement if a clause were added protecting a husband from any liability in consequence of his wife's acceptance of any trust or executorship, &c. The framers and supporters of this Bill seem so entirely to ignore the interests of married men that we cannot help suggesting that they must all be confirmed bachelors. Clause 4, which will render the property passing under a married woman's will, in consequence of her execution of a general power, liable for her debts, seems very reasonable. Compare the present law in Bagden on Powers, 8th ed. 474, and the notes to Silk v. Prims and Hulme v. Tarrant in White and Tudor's Leading Cases on Equity, vol. 1. 140, vol. ii. 495. Clause 23 declares that the personal representative of the married woman shall "in respect of her separate estate, have the same rights and liabilities, and be subject to the same jurisdiction, as she would be if she were living." This is not grammar, and, moreover, becomes ridiculous when read with clause 12, which relates to legal proceedings between husband and wife, and makes special regulations with regard to such proceedings when they are living together.

It will be seen that the Bill has been greatly altered, but in some respects not amended.—Law Times.

PRACTICE IN "FAIR RENT" CASES.

It is important to suitors and their advisers in the Land Commission Court to attend to the notice, which we print elsewhere, in reference to the practice in fair rent cases. Agreements entered into in Form No. 83 do not at once operate as a withdrawal of an originating notice, so that it is desirable in such cases to make a distinct application, in Form No. 71, for leave to withdraw the originating notice. Neglect so to do will render the parties liable to incur costs that might otherwise have been avoided.

SPECTATORS AT A PRIZE-FIGHT.

When the full Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved meets, it nearly always differs. This is partly because so many as a dozen lawyers, even when they are judges, are not likely to agree upon any subject, but more substantially because the full Court is not summoned except in very doubtful cases. The result usually obtained from so numerous a concilium is seldom in proportion to the labour involved. The knot required to be untied is either of an exceptional character, not likely to occur again; or it is found, after all, to be matter of fact rather than of law. This last consideration accounts a great deal for the difference of opinion in Regina v. Coney, heard before eleven judges, and reported in the June number of the Law Journal Reports. Upon the only pure question of law involved—namely, whether a prize-fight is an assault by the combatants on one another—there is no difference of opinion; but the judges are eight to three on the character of the evidence necessary to convict a spectator of aiding and abetting the assault. As Mr. Justice Manisty points out, the purely legal question was not before the Court. No point of law was reserved, in reference to the principals in the fight, who were convicted without appeal. The case stated in regard to Coney and two others, who were bystanders, was consistent with the fight not being a prize-fight. All that was stated was that the men fought, and there were blue stakes and a rope forming a ring. Nearly all the judges, however, assumed in the prisoners' favour that the fight was a prize-fight, and so put beyond future controversy the principle that a public prize-fight is an assault between the combatants. The majority of the judges further held that to prove a defendant to have been at a fight and looking on, without other evidence, is not enough to justify a conviction for aiding and abetting the fight.

We have described the unanimous decision of the judges as having reference to a public, as distinguished from a private, prize-fight, and this was the only question before them upon the facts stated in the special case. Probably, in practice, there can be no prize-fight without spectators. Two men in anger may well fight alone, either with fists or weapons, but they are not likely to do so for money. Yet most of the judges appear to rely, in part at least, on the publicity of the fight as making the consent on both sides immaterial. Mr. Justice Stephen—in a judgment which, in some places, takes a high flight into the philosophy of judges' decisions—says: "The consent is no defence if the injury is of such a nature, or if it is inflicted under such circumstances, that its infliction is injurious to the public as well as to the person injured." Lord Coleridge says: "As the combatants in a duel cannot give consent to one another to take away life, so neither can the combatants in a prize-fight give consent to one another to commit that which the law has repeatedly held to be a breach of the peace." Lord Coleridge's illustration suggests that it is doubtful whether the distinction in question was present to his mind. If the immateriality of consent depends on the same principle in a prize-fight as in a duel, it does not matter whether the fight was public or private. If a man kills another in a duel in a room in an empty house, let us say, on Dartmoor, the survivor is clearly guilty of murder. And yet there is no breach of the peace in the sense of public scandal. It may possibly be that there is a distinction between the case in which two men agree to do their best to kill one another, and the case in which they do their best only to maim one another. Mr. Justice Stephen seems to think there is; and Lord Coleridge appears to think so, unless his phrase "breach of the peace" means nothing more than breach of the law. Mr. Justice Cave—who delivered judgment first, taking the place of Mr. Justice North, and whose careful examination of the authorities formed the basis of the judgments of most of the other judges—leaves the matter in doubt. We are a little disappointed to find that, after all, we do not get to the bottom of the reason why consent is no defence to a criminal assault. Even Mr. Justice Stephen, who is generally clear and fearless in his views, after the passage already quoted, adds: "The injuries given and received in prize-fights, are injurious to the public, both because it is against the public interest that the lives and health of the combatants should be endangered by blows, and because prize-fights are disorderly exhibitions and mischievous on many obvious grounds." If the first reason is true, the second is totally unnecessary. We believe that the first reason is the only true one. Consent excuses what would otherwise be a criminal assault when the blows are given in sport, but not when they are given in earnest. Two men may spar with boxing gloves, if the gloves are not a mere pretext; but they may not fight, although they both agree. The principle is that of public policy, and rests on the same ground as the law against suicide. In this view public scandal does not affect the question. The elements of a breach of the peace may be present at a genuine boxing match as well as at a fight, and yet it is not suggested that the competitors would be guilty of an assault on the ground of the public scandal of the exhibition. For the reason that the distinction referred to was not clearly present to the minds of the judges, the decision is not so valuable as it might have been.

The attention of the judges was directed so closely to the second point on which they disagreed that the first was not determined with scientific accuracy. The direction given by the chairman of the Berkshire Quarter Sessions is probably the same which most lawyers would have given off-hand, although such opinions have often to be modified on consideration. The law, as laid down, had crept into the text-books, and is supported by Russell on "Crimes," in a passage based on the opinion of Mr. Justice Littledale in Regina v. Murphy, 6 Car. & P. 103. The direction given to the jury was to the effect that if they thought the defendants were present at the fight not casually, but as spectators, they were guilty of aiding and abetting it. Upon this direction a verdict of "guilty" was returned, but this verdict was set aside by the majority of the judges. The burden, it seems to us, lies on those who maintain that the mere looking at a crime is criminal in itself. We are not convinced by the arguments with which Lord Coleridge, Baron Pollock, and Mr. Justice Mathew discharge themselves of this burden. The line of argument which Lord Coleridge adopts, is that the view maintained by the prosecution is desirable in itself, because if there were no spectators there would be no prize-fights, and that there is respectable authority in support of it. But is not this reasoning based on much too narrow an appreciation of the materials upon which a judge should act? His decision ought to be in consonance with the whole law in question as laid down by the best authorities; and with the general considerations involved in the subject. It ought not to be content to rest merely on expediency shod out with a little authority. Baron Pollock treats the question as pure fact, drawing inferences from the posts, and the cord, and the other indications of a deliberate fight. His judgment amounts to little more than that, as a jurymen, Baron Pollock would have drawn an inference sufficient to convict Coney. The same observation may be made on the judgment of Mr. Justice Mathew. But ought not the jury to have been asked whether, in their opinion, the presence of the defendants with the surrounding circumstances amounted to aiding and abetting? Was it right to tell them that merely standing to see the assault was a crime? It is difficult to answer this question in the affirmative upon general principle or upon authority. There is no statute creating the offence out of the materials laid before the jury. There must be an aiding and abetting of the assault which one combatant was committing on the other. No doubt the crowd of spectators is one of the incidents which encourage a prize fight. But is every individual in the crowd responsible for the whole crowd? If there had been evidence that a dozen men agreed to attend the fight, the proof would have gone far to establish the case insisted on by the dissentient judges. As it was, merely to stand still is not to aid; merely to look is not to abet. The passages cited by Mr. Justice Cave from Hale and Foster tend to support this view as strongly as do general principles. In fact, Mr. Justice Littledale and Mr. Justice Patteson had gone a little too far in directing juries. They had applied a test which turns out to be incomplete. The decision of the Court, we think, does not amount to more than this, and cannot be said to settle any great rule of criminal law. In fact, the judgments of the Court of Crown Cases are rather interesting from the insight which they give into the modes of thought of individual judges, than useful as clear expositions of a branch of the law. We doubt whether there is advantage in numbers on the bench; and the time, we hope, is not far distant when points of criminal law will go to the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords, like other points of law.—Law Journal.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881, WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—XIX.

(Continued from page 284, ante.)

WILLS.

Devise of Trust and Mortgage Estates.

Hitherto it has been usual in all wills, whether of realty or personalty, to insert this. Now it may be omitted in reliance upon sect. 30: (Cons. David. 490; Prideaux, 11th edit. §72.) Messrs. Clerke and Brett (page 120) consider it doubtful whether this section includes copyholds. We think it clearly does include them: (Walst. & T. 59; Cons. David. 62.)

There are "estates of inheritance" in copyholds, and a copyhold may be both a tenement and hereditament. The section renders any devise invalid; it has, however, been suggested that, by appointing the intended devisee executor for that special purpose, the testator's desire may be affected: (Walst. & T. 60; but see Clerke & Brett, 121.) As to executors for limited purposes, see Warr. Exors. 252. It would seem that, quoad creditors, all the executors are as one executor and may be sued accordingly: (Ross v. Bartlett, Cr. Car. 293.)

This plan of appointing limited executors is not usually to be recommended.

Before this Act, when a sole trustee was an admitted copyholder, he could devise the copyhold which he held in trust to such uses as his trustees should appoint, and so, in case of a speedy sale, avoid the fees on a double admittance: (Hayes & Jarman, 8th edit. §78; Prideaux, 470.) This plan can, of course, still be adopted with regard to a testator's own copyholds, but not for those he holds as trustee or mortgagee.

It was held in Garland v. Mead (24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 491; L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 441) that, under sect. 3 of the Wills Act, the legal estate in devised copyholds descends to the customary heir until the admittance of the devisee: (David, iv. 82.)

By the legal estate of course the customary estate is meant. It is not easy to decide whether the present section places the executor in the position of devisee or of heir: (see Clerke & Brett, p. 120.) For many purposes the heir is a copyholder before admittance: (Soriven, 6th edit. 81, 189.)

Trust for Sale.

This may be much shortened in reliance upon sect. 35 of the Act. For form see Cono. David. 412; Prideaux, 454.

Where the testator has copyhold estates, and the fines on admittance are considerable, it will be best to devise the copyholds to uses as the trustees shall appoint. For form see David. iv. 82; Hayes & Jarman, 8th edit. 121; Cono. David. 417.

Maintenance and Accumulation.

These clauses are, in general, no longer essential, when the property is held on trust in favour of infants taking at twenty-one, in consequence of sect. 43 of the Act: (Cono. David. 415.) Sometimes, however, they both should be inserted. Compare article on settlements of personality, Law Times, March 11, page 323.

Sect. 43 relates to "settlements," but there seems no possible reason to doubt that this word here includes settlements by will as well as those created by deed. Messrs. Clerke & Brett (p. 154) point out that this view is confirmed by the use of the general word "instrument" in sub-sects. 7 and 8. Mr. Wolstenholme takes the same view, and so omits these clauses (pp. 67, 206, 189), and so does Cono. David. and Prideaux (p. 455); see also definition of the word in sect. 1 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877; David. iii. 2. Advancement clause must be inserted if desired. For forms see Cono. David. 327; Prideaux, 455.

Trustee Clauses.

These may be abbreviated. For form see Cono. David. 418. Trustees receipt clause, and power to trustees to compound debts, may usually be omitted. Compare Law Times of March 18, page 846. It will be usually proper to state by whom new trustees are to be appointed, and to supplement the statutory indemnity. Compare Law Times, March 11, p. 329. And for new forms see Cono. David. 418; Prideaux, 457. For old forms see David. iii. 55, 56. When the testator has much property in a foreign country or colony it is generally best to set out the clauses fully, as it is doubted whether the statutory powers can operate abroad: (Hayes & Jarman, 8th edit. 120; David. iv. 375.) In some colonies similar provisions are in force: (David. iv. 375, 353.) If it is intended that a solicitor trustee should charge his costs a suitable clause must be inserted.

COPYHOLDS.

The definition of "land" in sect. 2 (ii.) includes copyholds, so that as a general rule, and unless a contrary intention appears, the provisions of the Act relating to land apply to copyholds. But in the application of this rule it will be found that there are many exceptions and limitations. Conditions of sale may, in reliance upon sect. 3 (2) be slightly shortened by omitting the common condition that the vendor should not be called upon to show the title to make the enfranchisement: (Dart, 6th edit. 166, 289.)

Mr. Wolstenholme (2nd edit. 14) states that "the title to the freehold of enfranchised copyholds . . . commences with the deed of enfranchisement. This sub-section should be read in connexion with sub-sect. 3 . . ." See Dart, 293; and Sug. V. & P., 14th edit. 372. It would, however, appear that the copyhold title whilst the transaction is a recent one is also necessary. As to sale of enfranchised copyholds under the description of freehold, see Upperton v. Nicholson (L. Rep. 6 Ch. App. 436; 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 343; 25 Ib. 4); Dart, 188.

Other portions of this section also relate to copyholds as well as freeholds: see sub-sects. 8, 6, 7 to 11. "General words," and the "all estate clause" will not be necessary (sects. 6, 63); indeed they were, even before the Act, often omitted from covenants to surrender copyholds. Mr. Davidson inserted the general words, but omitted the estate clause (vol. ii. 365); while Bythewood abbreviated or omitted the former, but added the latter, though stating it to be unnecessary (vol. vi. 69, 312). Unless they happen in any case to be on the court rolls they may usually be omitted with perfect safety.

By virtue of sect. 7 covenants for title may be omitted from purchase deeds if the words "beneficial owner" are used in the covenant to surrender: sect. 7 (5), sect. 2 (v.). For old form see David. ii. 365, and for new form Cono. David. 140; Prideaux, i. 231. If, however, the copyholds are surrendered without any previous deed of covenants the statute will not supply the covenants for title, and the usual deed of covenants for title must be executed. For form see David. ii. 367. It would not be safe, under such circumstances, to declare that the vendor had surrendered as beneficial owner, or to attempt by any other device to imply the covenants. Nor can they be incorporated in the surrender: (Wolst. & T. 2nd edit. 85.) The same remarks apply mutatis mutandis to mortgages. For old form see David. ii. 961, and for new form Cono. David. 190. In settlements we should advise that the usual covenant for further assurance be inserted. This may be framed from the forms in David. iii. 928, 1029, which give more covenants than the one we advise. See Law Times, March 25, p. 365; April 1, p. 382; and April 23, p. 484; and see further as to settlements of copyhold, Law Times, June 3, p. 78; and for form see Wolst. & T. 2nd edit. 228.

It is not possible for us in this series of articles to do more than give this short outline of the effect of the Act on copyhold assurances. As to wills of copyholds, see above in this present article. It may be convenient to add here that the following sections and sub-sections of the Act make special reference to copyholds—viz.: sects. 2 (v.), 3 (2) (6), 7 (5), 21 (1), 54 (8).

Some Cautions in Application of the Act to Copyholds.

It will be well in mortgages of copyholds to insert a clause prohibiting the mortgagee, as well as the mortgagor, from making any lease under sect. 18 without licence from the lord, and, if the mortgage is by deed, from cutting down timber or doing any other act under sects. 19-24 without licence, which might create a forfeiture. An exception may be made, in favour of the mortgagee, as to leases which may be granted without forfeiture. The statutory mortgages authorised by sects. 26 to 29 do not apply to copyhold land. It should be noticed that the power of sale given by sect. 19 only arises where the mortgage is by deed, so that it does not apply to a mere surrender: (Wolst. & T. 2nd edit. 60.) It seems doubtful whether the power arises under a simple covenant to surrender. Wolstenholme and Turner give an express charge, and consider that then the power is implied (2nd edit. p. 60). For forms see Wolst. & T. pp. 205, 153. By sect. 2 (vi.) the word "mortgage" includes "charge."

Sect. 84, relating to the vesting of property in new trustees, contains (sub-sect. 3) an exception as to the legal estate in copyholds. Compare form in Wolst. & T. 2nd edit. 257.

Sect. 51 applies only to deeds, so that the word "heirs" must be used in surrenders as formerly. Sect. 62, relating to grants of easements, does not apply to copyholds. From the above remarks it will be seen that considerable care is necessary in the application of the Act to customary tenures.

Proposed Summary.

We shall, in our next article, conclude this series with a general summary of the results at which we have arrived.

(To be continued.)

A LAWYER in Bangor, Me., has brought suit for $5,000 damages against the publishers of a history of Penobscot county which reported him as dead, and gave him a complimentary obituary sketch. This is the first time we ever knew a lawyer, "living or dead," to sue anybody for saying a good thing of him.—Chicago Legal News.

FIXING FAIR RENTS.

In the case of Deegan v. Adair (Queen's Co., June 13, 1882), the County Court Judge (Joshua Clarke, Q.C.) observed:—"I know nothing about land. If I went out on the fields to look at them, and had some sods cut up, I would not be one bit wiser than are some of these land commissioners. I would take Griffith's valuation and the landlord's rent. Suppose Griffith's valuation to be £20, and the rent £30, I would simply split the difference, and settle the new rent at £25; thus giving half the valuation to the tenant. That is my fixed rule, and one I will not depart from, and it is just as well you should all know it in case I should come here again."

"THE COURT" ON HORSEBACK.

On a pleasant Friday afternoon in early June in the year of grace eighteen hundred and eighty-two, two solitary horsemen might have been seen by an attentive observer, wending their way along the dusty highway leading from the magnificent capital of the Empire State to the world's greatest watering-place. Somewhat past the meridian of life, of middle height, of amplitude of person indicative of quiet conscience, good digestion, long unexpired term of office, and ample salary, and of that easy dignity that bespeaks long and intimate association with courts (of law), they sat their steeds with a steadiness that evinced a great experience in balancing on the bench, and pursued their journey at a dignified pace, that promised to bring them to its end without infringing the law of the State against Sunday travel. They wisely refrained from announcing themselves as candidates for the Presidency, by avoiding the tow-path of the canal that skirted their way. They were in light marching order, having sent forward their judicial opinions and other impedimenta by railway. A tinge of sadness perceptible on their brows was probably attributable to the absence of their accustomed pioneer, the gallant clerk, P—n, and to the consciousness that their entry upon the streets of the gay Spa would consequently lack something of the brilliancy of the like event in the last preceding year. We hardly need say to the initiated that these two horsemen were their honors, A—s, C.J., and D—b, J., on their way to hold a tournament of the Court of Appeals at Saratoga. We make this explanation lest some might suspect that they were Hanover and Youatt on the Horse. Going to court on horseback probably has some advantages for the judges. It enables them to seize the mane points, and tends to put their decisions on a stable basis, and they cannot be accused of not having sufficiently taken oats on the arguments. One word of caution perhaps is superfluous, but at least is well meant—let them on no account be over-persuaded into entering their horses at the races, for the characteristic of the judicial cob is or should be deliberateness and not swiftness, and the judges of the racecourse are as unapt to grant retrials as their honors are indisposed to accord rearguments.—Albany Law Journal.

A NOVEL MARRIAGE CONTRACT.

Probably few funnier things have ever come before a Court of Justice than the following agreement, made between the parties concerned previously to entering the bonds of matrimony. It is to be found given in its beautiful entirety in the recent case of Dagg v. Dagg, 51 L. J. N. S. 19, in which the husband was suing for dissolution of the marriage in question. The male to the agreement, be it remembered, was a porter, and the female party a cook in a hydropathic establishment; and it is necessary to add, we regret to say, that the porter had been guilty of certain familiarities with the cook, which one would have hoped a man of his refinement would have shrunk from. This is the agreement:—

"This is to certify that whereas the undersigned parties do agree that they will marry, and that only to save the female of us from shaming her friends or telling a lie; and that the said marriage shall be no more thought of, except to tell her friends that she is married (unless she should arrive at the following accomplishments—namely, piano, singing, reading, writing, speaking and deportment); and whereas these said accomplishments have in no way being sought after (much less mastered), therefore the aforesaid marriage shall be, and is, null and void; and whereas we agree that the male of us shall keep his harmonium in the aforesaid female's sitting-room, and agree that it shall be there no more than four months, and that from that time the aforesaid and undersigned shall be free in every respect whatsoever of the aforesaid female, as witness our hands, &c., Catherine L. H. Jeffries, William Pritchard Dagg."

Who can doubt, from internal evidence, that it was the "male of us," the elegant and accomplished, but too fastidious, Dagg, who penned this agreement with his own hand? Who can help admiring his heroic condescension in marrying the illiterate "female of us," even though she had in no way sought after, much less mastered, the accomplishments of piano, singing, reading, writing, speaking and deportment? Lastly, who will not deplore the hard-heartedness of the judge who refused to grant poor Dagg's petition, and dissolve his marriage with this uncongenial "female of us?"—Canada Law Journal.

THE PARTNERSHIPS BILL, 1882.

In the present deadlock of all legislative business it would obviously be unsafe to predict with certainty the ultimate fate of any measure introduced by a private member of the House of Commons; but so far as can be seen, there would appear at least a reasonable chance that Mr. Monk's Bill respecting the law of partnership may pass into law before the end of the current session. The fact that the measure has just issued from the hands of a select committee seems to afford an opportune occasion for examining its most salient points and the main purport of its provisions.

In the first place, it is to be observed that the Bill, as now amended, has a much narrower scope than was originally intended. Its objects as it was at first drawn were threefold. First, it was intended to consolidate the existing laws of private partnership, so far as they are uncontrolled by the law of bankruptcy; secondly, it proposed to introduce a system of limited partnerships, corresponding to the Continental Sociétés en Commandite, and the similar American institutions; and, thirdly, it provided for a general registration of commercial firms. With these views the Bill was divided into five distinct parts. Of these the first three dealt with the consolidation of existing laws, the fourth set out the principles of limited partnership, and the fifth treated of registration. In the Bill as it now appears, the two last divisions have wholly disappeared, and the three preceding parts alone remain; consequently the measure is reduced for the most part to a mere explanation and consolidation of established doctrines.

Turning to the Bill in its existing state it will be seen that the first division deals with the liability of partners and their authority in respect of partnership dealing. Partnership is at the outset defined to be "the relation which subsists between persons who have agreed to share the profits of a business carried on by all or any of them on behalf of all of them," and the question whether a partnership exists in any particular case is to be decided by the crucial test of the intention and contract of the parties. This definition, it is evident, includes many associations that are not subject to the law of partnership, but are regulated by special legislation, as, for example, corporations and joint stock companies. In other respects, however, it appears unobjectionable, and as is stated in the memorandum annexed to the bill, it is expressly devised to meet the criticism passed by the Master of the Rolls, presumably in Pooley v. Driver (36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 79; L. Rep. 5 Ch. Div. 458) upon the definition given by the American jurist Kent, whereby the contribution of labour and skill is made a necessary element of partnership. In giving special prominence to the intention of the parties the Bill follows the dicta of the Privy Council in Molloy, March and Co. v. Court of Wards (L. Rep. 4 P. C. 419). The clauses that follow provide what circumstances shall not of themselves create a partnership, as, for instance, part ownership, the sharing of gross returns, and the various arrangements enumerated in Bovill's Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 86). The ruling in the well-known case of Cox v. Hickman (8 H. of L. Cas. 268) is also incorporated to the effect that mere participation in profits is not conclusive evidence of the existence of a partnership.

Passing by the limitation placed upon the members of a firm, as to which the Bill adopts the provisions of the Companies Act, 1862, s. 4, the next point that calls for notice is the clause respecting the revocation of a continuing guarantee by a change in the constitution of the firm; and here the Bill incorporates the concise enactment of the Indian Contract Act, in lieu of the verbose provision to the same effect of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856. In defusing the liabilities of partners the Bill lays down a rule somewhat different to the popular statement of the law, but in accordance with the judgments in Kendal v. Hamilton (30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 250; 41 Ibid. 418; L. Rep. 8 O. P. Div. 403; 4 App. Cas. 504), and other recent cases, making the liability of partners for debts and other obligations joint rather than joint and several; while, by subsequent clauses, their liability for torts inflicted on third persons is extended to both joint and several responsibility. The bill next goes on to describe the position of outgoing partners, and of persons who hold themselves out as partners. A further clause is founded on the expressions of Barou Cleasby in Holme v. Hammond (L. Rep. 7 Ex. 233), making the acts of a partner in the usual course of business as binding on his co-partners as if he were their duly appointed agent; and another section, due to the words of the Master of the Rolls in Williamson v. Barbour (37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 698; L. Rep. 9 Ch. Div. 535), constitutes notice to any acting partner equivalent to notice to the firm.

The second part of the Bill describes the relations of the partners to one another, as, for example, their right to indemnity and contribution, their duty of gratuitous diligence and of abstaining from competition with the firm, the admission of new partners, and the inspection of the books. The existing rules of law respecting most of these are incorporated, and are too well-known to need special remark. We may notice, however, the 38th clause, which states the established doctrine that land which has become partnership property is to be treated as personal and not real estate, "unless a contrary intention appears either by express agreement or by the conduct of the partners;" and the 41st, which relates to a matter of procedure, and is intended to remedy the hardship and inconvenience now caused by partnership property being seized in execution for a partner's separate debt. Henceforth, it is proposed, no writ of execution shall issue against any partnership property except upon a judgment against the firm. On the other hand, an order may be made with all necessary directions, charging a partner's share in the partnership assets with payment of his private debt. Notice, however, of any application for such order must be given to all the other partners, and every order for sale or foreclosure must include liberty for the other partners to buy or redeem the charged share. These provisions seem amply to respect the rights of all parties, and are therefore free from objection.

The dissolution of partnership and its consequences occupy the third portion of the Bill. Dissolution by expiration, by notice, by bankruptcy, by death, and by other causes, is dealt with; cases are enumerated in which application for a dissolution may be made to the court; and the rights of the partners as to the partnership assets and goodwill on dissolution are defined.

One or two doubtful points of law are settled according to the most recent authorities. After dissolution every partner may restrain the others from carrying on the same business under the same name until the affairs have been wound up: (Lindley, 2, p. 1042.) On a premature dissolution the court may apportion any premium paid by a partner as it thinks fit (Atwood v. Maude, L. Rep. 8 Ch. 369); and where the partnership is rescinded on the ground of fraud, the defrauded party shall have a lien on the assets for money paid in purchasing an interest in it: (Mycock v. Beaton, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 141; L. Rep. 13 Ch. Div. 884.) It remains only to add that the enactments it is proposed to repeal are Bovill's Act and sect. 4 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856. Both, however, as we have already seen, are in substance re-enacted, the former with some slight extension, and the latter in a simplified form.

On the whole the Bill may certainly be taken as a well-arranged exposition of the existing law of partnership. It is, perhaps, to be regretted that the provisions concerning limited partnerships and registration have disappeared, for until these have been discussed no codification can be considered final or complete. But their elimination has gone far to remove the measure from the sphere of controversy, and even in its present state its probable reception into the Statute-book is to be viewed with no small satisfaction.—Law Times.

LIMITATION LEGAL AND EQUITABLE.

The case of Gibbs v. Guild, reported in the June number of the Law Journal Reports, has a double importance. It decides that a wide interpretation is to be given to the Judicature Act in providing that, "in all matters in which there is any conflict or variance between the rules of equity and the rules of the common law with reference to the same matter, the rules of equity shall prevail." It also decides a question of frequent occurrence; namely, that the Statutes of Limitation begin to run from the discovery of the cause of action and not from the cause of action itself in cases in which the cause of action has been concealed. It is a remarkable accident that the judges who gave this decision were all common lawyers; but evidence that modes of thought die hard was supplied in the dissent recorded by Lord Justice Holker, then newly arrived on the bench from the common law bar, and now unfortunately lost to the law. The short judgment of Lord Justice Holker will be read with great interest, and the line of thought adopted may be stated in a few words. The late Lord Justice took his stand on the words of the statute of James I. That statute provides that "actions on the case shall be commenced within six years next after the cause of such actions or suits, and not after." The action in question was an action on the case commenced after six years from the cause of it; and, therefore, in Lord Justice Holker's view, there must be judgment for the defendant. As it stands, this reasoning is, we think, unimpeachable. It is the protest of the common lawyer against the bad logic in which equity lawyers allowed themselves to indulge. But how, if the Act of James I. is itself repealed or modified by another Act of Parliament? If that is so, Lord Justice Holker's reasoning fails. The Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub. 11, provides that where law and equity are in conflict, equity is to prevail. It therefore gives statutory force to the decisions of equity judges on the Statutes of Limitation and other statutes, unsond as those decisions may have been at the time when they were delivered. Hard cases make bad law, but there is nothing to prevent the bad law being turned into good if it is done by an Act of Parliament.

It is not difficult to clear the ground occupied by this case, so as to reduce its decision to a very general question. There was some doubt whether, at common law, the concealment of a cause of action did not prevent the Statute of Limitation running. In Bree v. Holbeck, 2 Dong. 654, Lord Mansfield, while deciding that the Statute ran, notwithstanding a concealment, in an action for money had and received, said "there may be cases which fraud will take out of the Statute of Limitation," and gave leave to the plaintiff to amend. But, in The Imperial Gas Light Company v. The London Gas Light Company, 23 Law J. Rep. Exch. 303, Chief Baron Pollock and Barons Alderson, Platt, and Martin treated the contention that the time did not run till the discovery as unarguable. In 1856—two years later, and after the Common Law Procedure Act had authorised equitable pleas—the same Court (Barons Bramwell and Watson being in place of Barons Platt and Martin), in Hunter v. Gibbons, 26 Law J. Rep. Exch. 1, decided against an equitable replication of fraudulent concealment to a plea of the statute in an action for abstracting coal from a mine. The "rule of the common law" was, therefore, ascertained, with reasonable accuracy, to be against the replication in question. On the other hand, "the rule of equity" was ascertained even more clearly, to be in its favour. Booth v. Warrington, 4 Bro. P. C. 163, was a suit in equity for the return of money obtained by fraud, the lapse of the period of limitation being excused by an allegation of concealment. This case was decided for the plaintiff in the House of Lords, and only fails of conclusiveness through its being loosely reported. It is clear, however, that the point at issue was before the Lords, because the questions put to the judges are directed to it. Here, then, was a rule in equity in one sense, and a rule of law in the opposite sense. Was there "a variance or conflict" within the meaning of the Judicature Act? It may be argued, with plausibility, that the Act only contemplated a "conflict" in its severest form—that is to say, when equity would interfere by injunction with the litigant taking advantage of the law. There is no instance, apparently, of an injunction being granted to prevent a defendant taking advantage of the Statute of Limitation. Lord Justice Brett, in his judgment, appears to think that there was no reason why there should not be such an injunction, but the reason why there was not is tolerably obvious. Where a plaintiff had a Statute of Limitation staring him in the face, he sued in equity and not in law. The test whether there would have been an injunction does not, therefore, apply; but whether there would be an injunction or not is accidental, depending on the question whether it was the party suing or the party sued who invoked the equity. The only other explanation of the word "conflict" is inconsistency. The generality of this word is limited by the phrase "with reference to the same matter." A mere logical inconsistency is not enough. There must be a practical inconsistency. Such a conflict existed in this instance. Probably in equity the action would be for money obtained by fraud, whereas at law it would be for damages. In the case of coal abstracted, the claim in equity would be for an account, and at law for damages. But, for practical purposes, the claims were the same.

Whether the decision arrived at is in accordance with a right view of the Statutes of Limitation is a question with which the judges were not directly concerned, but is of interest. Two theories may be set up as the foundation of these statutes: one based on the maxim interest reipublice ut sit finis litium, and claiming absolutely that after a definite lapse of time there shall be a certain immunity from legal proceedings; the other based on the equitable doctrine of laches, and allowing proceedings, however far back in time, to be brought into Court so long as the plaintiff has not been guilty of undue delay. It is the second of these theories which has now been established; and it is not without its dangers. Lord Justice Holker is undoubtedly right in saying that the Statutes of Limitation have been repealed. There is now no limit after which a man can feel safe from an action, so long as the plaintiff alleges not only that the defendant has injured him, but that he has concealed the injury from him. Such an action is possible twenty or thirty years after the event—in fact, there is no limit. This state of the law cannot be expedient. While admitting that the fraudulent concealment of an injury ought to give the injured man a longer period in which to enforce his rights, yet there ought to be an absolute limit to which there is no exception. The man who does not find out that he has been wronged for seven or eight years is either little alive to his own interest, or there is not much reality about his wrongs. In either case his interests do not deserve maintaining. This subject would appear to require the attention of the Legislature, and it is by no means clear that, on the ground of mere expediency, the rule of the common law ought not to prevail over the rule of equity.—Law Journal.

THE LABOUR LAWS.

In these days of trades unionism, strikes, and constant conflicts between capital and labour in almost every branch of the industries of this kingdom, it is interesting to turn back to statutes the existence of which is generally unknown, and to see how such matters were dealt with by Parliament in early times. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth (1562) a statute was passed which repealed all existing statutes dealing with the subject of the labour laws, and which was intended to codify the whole law concerning the employment of artificers, labourers, servants of husbandry, and apprentices. From the recital it appears that an amendment of the existing laws was thought necessary for several reasons, but chiefly "that the wages and allowances, limited or rated in many of the said statutes, are in divers places too small and not answerable to this time respecting the advancement in prices of all things belonging to the said servants and labourers;" and the recital concludes with the words that "there is good hope that it will come to pass that the same law (being duly executed) should banish idleness, advance husbandry, and yield unto the hired person, both in the time of scarcity and in the time of plenty, a convenient proportion of wages." The statute itself contains what is intended to be a complete code of the orders regulating all kinds of labour, of which the following may be taken as affording the best examples and the most striking contrasts to the state of affairs at the present day. Section 12 provides that all artificers and labourers being hired for wages by the day or week shall, betwixt the months of March and September, be and continue at their work at or before five of the clock in the morning, and continue at work and not depart until betwixt seven and eight of the clock at night (except it be in the time of breakfast, dinner, or drinking, the which times at the most shall not exceed two and a half hours in a day), upon pain to lose and forfeit one penny for every hour's absence, to be deducted out of his wages that shall so offend. Section 13 provides that anyone who shall be lawfully retained in and for the building or repairing of any church, house, ship, mill, or every other piece of work taken in great, or gross, shall not depart (unless it be for nonpayment of his wages) until the same be finished, upon pain of imprisonment for one month, and the forfeiture of the sum of five pounds to the person from whom he shall so depart. Perhaps, however, the most remarkable of all the provisions of this statute is that contained in sect. 15, which provides for the regulation of the price of labour. It enacts that the justices of the peace of every shire, riding, and liberty within the limits of their several commissions, and the sheriff of that county, if he conveniently may, every mayor, bailiff, or other head officer within any city or town corporate, shall before the 10th June next coming, and afterwards shall yearly at every general session first to be holden and kept after Easter, assemble themselves together, and they so assembled calling unto them such discreet and grave persons of the said county, or of the said city or town corporate, as they shall think meet, and conferring together respecting the scarcity or plenty of the time and other circumstances necessarily to be considered, shall have authority within the limits of their commissions to limit, rate, and appoint the wages of all servants and workmen whose wages in time past hath been by any law or statute rated and appointed.

The section further provides for proclamation to be made of the rates of wages in the various districts when approved by the Lord Chancellor. No better instance could, we venture to think, be found of the extraordinary difference existing between the present state of society and that existing three hundred years ago. No single person could now probably be found who would wish for a return to a state of things suggested by this statute of Elizabeth; still, as a matter of history, it is interesting to rake it up. It affords a striking contrast between England in the reign of Victoria and England in the reign of Elizabeth, and affords ample occupation to the thoughtful mind in tracing the causes which have produced such a change, and in prophesying the result to which such a change will tend.—Law Times.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. William O'Brien, Q.C., has been appointed a puisne judge of the Common Pleas Division, vice Lawson, J., transferred to the Queen's Bench Division.

Mr. Richard Hicksen, Deputy Clerk of the Peace, has been appointed Deputy Clerk of the Crown for the county Sligo.

OBITUARY.

MR. W. M. BOURKE.

MR. WALTER M'WILLIAM BOURKE, of Curraghlea, Co. Mayo, and Rahassane Park, Co. Galway, who was assassinated at Castle Taylor (a place over which he was land agent), near Ardahan, in the latter county, on the 8th inst., was the eldest surviving son of the late Isidore Bourke, Esq., Crown Solicitor for the Co. Mayo, by his marriage with Matilda, daughter of Matthew Crozier, Esq., M.D., of the 52nd Foot. Born in 1838, Mr. Bourke was educated at the Colleges of Stonyhurst and Clongowes Wood, and at the University of Dublin where he was a member of the Historical Society, and took the degrees of A.B. and M.A. He had at one time contemplated entering the Indian Civil Service, and won a high place in the examination, but his age was afterwards found to exceed the prescribed limit. In Trinity Term, 1858, he was called to the bar, and joined the Connaught circuit. He practised here for some years, and also became a contributor to some literary Magazines, since defunct, which were then published in Dublin. Failing, however, to meet with that fall and rapid measure of success which rewards the efforts of so few, he went to India, and there, as an advocate in the High Court of Calcutta, Mr. Bourke, who was a good but rather florid speaker, soon realised a considerable fortune. He, also, published a volume of Indian law reports, which displays a good deal of industry and ability. About two years ago, on his return from India, he succeeded to the inheritance of Curraghlea, on the death of his elder brother, Major Bourke, and he himself purchased the estate of Rahassane Park, which had once belonged to the family of the Frenchs. Mr. Bourke, who was appointed to the commission of the peace for the County of Mayo, was more than once a candidate for senatorial honours, having on one occasion, shortly after his call to the bar, contested Tralee with the present Lord O'Hagan, and at the last general election having been nominated for Mayo. During the distress of 1879-80, Mr. Bourke, who was a most active member of the Board of Guardians of the Poor of the Claremorris Union, exhibited the most kindly and generous spirit towards the poorer tenantry. But, subsequently, he evicted many of the tenants on his Rahassane property, in some cases even acting as his own bailiff, and about a year ago he was pictured in the Graphic personally serving notices to quit. He became extremely unpopular, and was in the habit of carrying about a repeating rifle, armed with which, a few months ago, he attended Mass at Carraroe, refusing to leave when requested by the officiating clergyman, and having subsequently to get away by a side door in order to avoid the mob which was waiting to attack him. Indeed, so unpopular had he become, that his life was threatened, and a military escort was told off for his protection. He was returning home after attending the sittings of the Land Sub-Commission at Gort, when he and the soldier by whom he was accompanied met their terrible fate.

REVIEWS.

1. Business.
2. Money.
3. Morality.
4. Life.
5. Economy.
6. Progress. By JAMES PLATT. London: Simpkin, Marshall, & Co., Stationers' Hall-court.

THIS excellent series of books has deservedly attained a worldwide reputation. As their titles indicate, Mr. Platt deals with the most important questions of the day, and we are bound to say in his treatment of them he is plain and straightforward, often in his earnestness rising to eloquence; and the copious quotations, both prose and poetical—which are admirably chosen and always to the point—add an additional charm to his writings. As Canon Farrar said the other day—"Reading is an amulet against vice and misery, taking away from the poorest youth all excuse for seeking companionship in the gin palace, or the low haunts where pleasure foraged for death. With books loneliness is not altogether lonely, nor sadness altogether sad." So, we believe, if Mr. Platt's books are carefully read, though there may be much with which we may differ, there is still very much more that we can approve as good and sound, when habits of temperance and honesty are inculcated, and when his readers are advised to make all they can from "Business," to remember "Morality," to use "Money" wisely, to study the true principles of "Economy," and to believe that "Life" rationally and wisely led must end in individual and national "Progress."

Mr. Platt is a thoroughgoing Free Trader, and he states his views as opposed to Protection and Reciprocity in a most exhaustive manner. He traces the history of the Civil Service Stores and Co-operative Trading, and shows how their effects can be counteracted. Nowhere do we remember to have seen a better defence of the House of Lords than in his chapter on "Causality," in "Progress."

In the same book he discusses the Irish Land Act of 1881; but Mr. Platt must dip a little deeper into contemporary Irish history. He judges of Ireland too much from the standard of his own prosperous England. Now that the Irish Land Act is beyond recall, we recommend for his perusal a very able article in this month's Contemporary Review, on "Judicial Rents," by Mr. W. S. Seton-Karr, in which he shows that in India the practice of invoking the assistance of the established tribunals to decide on the status and rent of a tenant has been recognised by the Government, by the law courts, and by the agricultural community, Hindu and Mohammedan, ever since the great settlement of Lord Cornwallis in 1793.

EVICIONS (IRELAND).—A return to an Order of the House of Lords, dated June 8, 1882, shows that the number of evictions in Ireland during the first three quarters of the year 1881 was 2,697 families, containing 15,490 persons. The number of those evicted who were readmitted as tenants before March 31, 1882, was 781 families, containing 4,263 persons.

A MEMPHIS coloured man was unable to secure the services of a lawyer to defend him from mule stealing, because he had not paid his fee for a previous acquittal for bed-clothes stealing. Even his "Why, boss, I stole dot mule 'specially to sell him and pay you," did not affect the lawyer's obdurate heart.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

SOLICITORS' APPRENTICES.

NOTICE.

The SESSIONAL EXAMINATION will be held on Friday, the 30th of June instant, and Saturday, the 1st of July next, from 9 30 A.M. to 12 30 P.M. and from 1 P.M. to 4 P.M. on each day. Candidates desiring to be examined will have to enter their Names at the Secretary's Office, Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, not later than Tuesday, the 27th day of June instant, in order that the necessary arrangements may be made.

Candidates whose names begin with letters from A to F (inclusive), will be examined at 9 30 A.M. on Friday, the 30th of June instant.

Those whose names begin with letters F to Ke (inclusive) will be examined at 1 o'clock P.M. on the same day.

Those whose names begin with letters K to P (inclusive), will be examined at 9 30 A.M. on Saturday, the 1st of July next.

The remaining Candidates at 1 o'clock P.M. on the same day.

Apprentices are requested to take notice that the Sessional Examination held at the end of the month of June, or the beginning of July, is the Examination held after each Course of Lectures under the 25th Rule of the Society, and that no Apprentice can be examined at any other time unless he has been hindered from attending at the regular Examination by illness, or some similar unforeseen mischance, to be proved to the satisfaction of the Council.

By Order,

WILLIAM HICKSON,
Professor.

Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts,
Dublin, 21st June, 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

CIRCUIT LIST.—SUMMER ASSIZES, 1882.

HOME CIRCUIT.

Trim—July 2, at 11 o'clock. Maryborough—July 10 at 11.
Mullingar—July 5, at 11 30. Carlow—July 12, at 11 30.
Tullamore—July 7, at 11 30. Naas—July 14, at 11.

Judges—MORRIS, C.J., and PALLES, C.B.
Registrars { Arthur H. Courtanay, Esq., 14 Fitzwilliam-sq., East.
Andrew Palles, Esq., 21 Northumberland-road.

NORTH-EAST CIRCUIT.

Drogheda—July 2, at 11 o'clock. Downpatrick—March 14, at 11.
Dundalk—July 4, at 11. Belfast and Carrickfergus—
Monaghan—July 6, at 2. July 17, at 2.
Armagh—July 10, at 11.

Judges—MAY, C.J., and HARRISON, J.
Registrars { George C. May, Esq., 13 Fitzwilliam-square, East.
Robert F. Harrison, Esq., 3 Mountjoy-square, North.

NORTH-WEST CIRCUIT.

Longford—July 2, at 2 o'clock. Lifford—July 17, at 12.
Cavan—July 7, at 11. Londonderry (city and co.)—
Enniskillen—July 10, at 2. July 20, at 11.
Omagh—July 12, at 11.

Judges—FITZGIBBON, L.J., and FITZGERALD, B.
Registrars { Pelham J. Mayne, Esq., 33 Merrion-square, North.
John Allen Shone, Esq., 61 Upper Sackville street.

CONNAUGHT CIRCUIT.

Carrick-on-Shannon—July 4, at Galway (town and co.)—July 11 o'clock. 12, at 11.
Sligo—July 7, at 4. Roscommon—Not Fixed.
Castlebar—July 12, at 11.

Judges—ORMSBY, J., and O'BRIEN, J.
Registrars { Alfred Hamilton Ormsby, Esq., 16 Fitzwilliam-sq., E.

MUNSTER CIRCUIT.

Ennis—July 2, at 5 o'clock. Tralee—July 12, at 11.
Limerick (city and co.)—July 7, Cork (co.)—July 18, at 2.
at 11. Cork (city)—July 21, at 11.

Judges—LAWSON, J., and BARRY, J.
Registrars { Arthur Lawson, Esq., 27 Upper Fitzwilliam-street.
James Barry, Esq., 8t. Helen's, Rathgar.

LEINSTER CIRCUIT.

Nenagh—July 4, at 11 o'clock. Waterford (city and co.)—July Kilkenny (city and co.)—July 7, 15, at 11.
at 11. Wexford—July 19, at 11.
Clonmel—July 11, at 11. Wicklow—July 22, at 11.

Judges—DEASY, L.J., and DOWSE, B.
Registrars { J. W. Clarke, Esq., Carysfort, Blackrock.
Richard Dowse, jun., Esq., 38 Mountjoy-square.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed,
Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN COURT.—G. M. Hewson, receiver.—G. A. Waller, re-entry.—M. Murphy, from 20th.—G. H. Mayes, liberty to bid.—Trustees Little, from 22nd.—W. R. O'Byrne, objection.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).
Trustee A. Sullivan, rental.—M. Horgan, ditto.

TUESDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—T. M. Cummins, proposal.—F. W. Crofts, ditto.

IN COURT.—R. F. Barry, payment by receiver.—M. Cedy, as to policy.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).
J. M'Caig, vouch.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—H. Leader, payment by receiver.
Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).
Devises R.-C. Hurley, vouch.—J. W. Pollock, ditto.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.
R. B. BOOTH . . . . . 2 lots.
Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennaedy).
Rev. J. F. Shearman, rental.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—J. Butler, allocation.—Rev. A. Cooke, ditto.

IN COURT.—D. C. Taylor, reference.—M. O'Kelly, objection.—R. W. Fearon, payment.—E. P. Brennan, receiver.—A. H. Irwin, do.—M. Bourke, final schedule.—Trustees Roche, do.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).
Rev. A. W. West, vouch.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).
M. Quaine, vouch.—W. Johnston, do.—Executors M. Macnamara, amend rental.—J. Morgan, take account.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—T. Barklie, special.—A. Carolan, final schedule.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).
F. Salmon, rental.—T. J. Nolan, ditto.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

List of Petitions presented to the Land Judges in the month of May, 1882.

DATE	TITLE OF MATTER	OBJECT OF PETITION	COUNTY	PROFIT RENT	SOLICITOR
May 2	Alexander George Richey, Trustee of Anne King, owner and petitioner	Receiver and sale	Leitrim	£ s. d. 1,006 11 2	Hallowes and Hamilton
" 8	Joseph Bourke and another, owners; Margaret M. Bourke and another, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Mayo and Galway	568 11 1	Robert P. Bourke
" "	Assignees of Michael Rochfort, owners; Robert Sheil and another, petitioners	Receiver and sale	City Dublin	100 0 0 Valuation	Longfield, Davidson, and Kelly
" 4	Henry William Baldwin, owner; William Massey and H. Massey, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Co. Cork	1,744 16 10	Thomas K. Sullivan
" 6	Arthur O'Donnell and others, owners; Arthur O'Donnell, petitioner	Sale	Co. Clare	845 0 0	Francis Kearney
" "	James Browne and others, owners; Emanuel Churcher, petitioner	Sale	Co. Galway	Not stated	R. H. Beauchamp
" "	Helen Gillman, owner; Emily Leonard, petitioner	Sale	City Cork	56 18 4	Thomas Ware
" 8	William Casey and another, owners; Mary Hill, petitioner	Sale	Tipperary	64 10 0 Griffith's Valuation	Wm. H. Robinson
" "	William Donnelly and others, owners; Philip R. Pigott, petitioner	Receiver and sale	City Dublin	155 11 6	Joshua L. Nunn
" 9	Howard John St. George, owner and petitioner	Sale	Kilkenny	1,487 14 10	Russell and MacDermott
" "	Henry Daunt, owner; Thomas Haynes and others, petitioners	Sale	Cork	617 10 0 Griffith's Valuation	Thomas F. O'Connell
" "	James Lecky, owner; Rev. George W. Biggs, petitioner	Sale	City Dublin	62 0 0	William C. Hogan and Sons
" "	Sarah Jane Tucker, owner; James Campbell, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Meath	201 1 6	James Campbell
" 10	William Chartres and Wife, owners and petitioners	Sale	Fermanagh	50 10 0	John T. Hinds
" "	Dermot O'Conor Donelan, owner; A. S. Drake and Wife, petitioners	Sale	Galway	181 11 8 Estimated	Thomas F. O'Connell
" 11	Daniel Ryan, owner; Samuel C. Wilmot, petitioner	Sale	Co. Tipperary	188 10 0 Estimated	Russell and MacDermott
" "	John Maurice O'Connell, owner; The National Bank, petitioners	Sale	Co. Cork	In owner's possession	Reuben T. Harvey
" "	Wilbert Finnermore, owner; Rice Meredith, petitioner	Sale	King's Co.	Not stated	W. D. Whelan
" "	Ellen Reford, owner and petitioner, and Partition Acts	Partition and Sale	Antrim	Not stated	H. H. Orr
" 19	William Montgomery, owner and petitioner, and Partition Acts	Sale and partition	Fermanagh	418 5 2	John T. Hinds
" 23	Cornelius Alexander Keogh, owner and petitioner	Sale	Sligo and Clare	1,251 19 8	Meade and Colles
" 24	John O. Mahony, owner; Stephanie Rochford, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Kerry	1,872 6 4	Hatton R. O'Kearney
" "	George Burrowes, owner; Richard Perrott and others, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Londonderry	268 8 1	H. and A. Blake
" "	William Black, owner; Anne Black, petitioner	Sale	Donegal	97 10 0 Valuation	William Martin
" "	John Lennon and another, owners; The National Bank, petitioners	Sale	Co. Dublin	In owner's possession	Michael Larkin

LAND JUDGES' COURT.

SALES.

June 9.—Before the Right Hon. Judge FLANAGAN.

CITY OF DUBLIN.—Estate of Geraldine S. Roper, owner; W. R. Atkin and another, petitioners.

Lot 2.—Two third parts of a fee-farm rent of £33 15s. 4d., payable out of houses and premises Nos. 55, 56, and 57 South Richmond-street, subject to two-thirds of a superior rent of £16 15s. 2d.; annual profit rent £11 6s. 10d. Sold to G. V. Patton for £190.

Lot 4.—Two third parts of a fee-farm rent of £22 17s. 10d., payable out of houses and premises Nos. 58 and 59 South Richmond-street; annual profit rent £15 5s. 2d. Sold to R. Newland for £300.

Sale of Lots 1 and 3 adjourned.

Solicitor, Henry F. Martley.

June 13.—Before the Right Hon. Judge OMSBY.

COUNTY AND CITY OF DUBLIN.—Estate of Anne Carolin, administratrix of Robinson Carolin, deceased, owner and petitioner.

Lot 1.—Dwelling-house and premises No. 6 Burlington-road, held under lease for 150 years from 1854; head rent, £8 15s.; profit rent, £92 5s.; valuation, £80. Sold to Mr. Littledale, solicitor, in trust for Mrs. C. Hewson, for £1,650.

Lot 2.—Dwelling-house and premises, No. 8 Burlington-road, similarly held; head rent, £8 15s.; profit rent, £111 5s.; valuation, £78. Sold to Mr. C. B. Hely for £1,620.

Lot 3.—Dwelling-house and premises, No. 38 Lansdowne-road, held under lease for 150 years from 1859; head rent, £8; profit rent, £92; valuation, £55. Sold to Mr. Hely for £1,000.

Lot 4.—Dwelling-house and premises, No. 40 Lansdowne-road, same tenure; profit rent, £87; valuation, £55. Sold to Mr. Hely for £1,055.

Lot 5.—Dwelling-house and premises, No. 35 Lower Gardiner-street, held under lease for 999 years; head rent, £9; profit rent, £61; valuation, £58. Sold to M. E. Solomon for £475.

Lot 6.—Dwelling-house and premises, No. 62 Lower Gardiner-street, same tenure; head rent, £10; profit rent, £60; valuation, £60. Sold to Mrs. Jackson for £630.

Lot 7.—Dwelling-houses and premises, Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 7½, and 8 Lower Mecklenburgh-street, same tenure; head rent, £55 7s. 8d.; profit rent, £62 12s. 4d.; valuation, £76. Sold to T. E. Jones for £325.

Lot 8.—Dwelling-houses and premises, Nos. 12, 13, and 14 Lower Mecklenburgh-street, and Nos. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35 Mabbot-street, same tenure; head rent, £46 7s. 8d.; profit rent, £87 19s. 5d.; valuation, £149. Sold to Peter Whelan for £275.

Lot 9.—Dwelling-houses and premises, Nos. 15, 16, and 17, Lower Mecklenburgh-street, Nos. 1 and 2 Eyre's-court, and 52 and 53 Purdon-street, same tenure; head rent, £24 13s. 10d.; profit rent, £21 6s. 2d.; valuation, £39. Sold to John Redmond for £70.

Solicitor, William Sterne.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sitings follow in Italics.

Cullinane, James, of Loughrea, in the county of Galway, victualler and cattle dealer. May 27; Tuesday, June 27, and Friday, July 14. Thomas J. White, solr.

Fleming, John, of Millmount, Dolphin's-barn, in the city of Dublin, manufacturer. June 2; Friday, July 7, and Tuesday, July 25. William P. M'Evoy, solr.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	JUNE
	Sat. 17	Mon. 19	Tues. 20	Wed. 21	Thur. 22	Fri. 23
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	100½	100½	100	100½	99½	—
— 3 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— New 3 p c Stock ..	100	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1898 } Trafalgar ..	104	—	103½	103½	103½	103½
3½ p c Jan. 1931 } Bk. of Irel. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	315	315	314	315	—	—
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	—	—	31½	—	—	—
20 London and County (Ld'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	74½
15 London Joint Stock ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and W'minster, Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	69½	69½
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
24 Munster Bank (Limited) ..	7½	7½	7	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	23½	23½	23½	—	—	—
10 National of Liverpool (Ld'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	101	101	—	—	100½	—
50 Dublin and Glasgow ..	—	—	—	11½	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Mines.
4½ Berehaven (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
1 Killaloe Slate Co. (Ld'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (Ld'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
24 Wicklow Copper ..	—	13/-	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons. Gas ..	—	—	15	—	15½	15
8 Do. do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co. (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 C. Dub. Brewery Co. (Lim.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
8 Coulding &amp; Co. (Limited) ..	—	8½	—	—	—	—
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 National Discount, Ire., Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 National Assurance ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance ..	—	—	10	—	—	10
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	10½	—	—	10½	—	10½
10 Edinburgh Street Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 L'pl Un'ed Tram &amp; Bus Ltd ..	—	13½	13½	—	—	—
10 Leeds Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 N'th Metr. Tramway, Lond ..	18½	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
100 Dublin, Wicklow, &amp; W'ford ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	118½	118½	—	—	118½
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	—	—	—	—	114
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	—	83½	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 D., W., &amp; W., 5 p c (1880) ..	—	—	—	—	—	117
100 Gt. N'th'n (Irlnd) gr'd 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Watfd. &amp; Limerick, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Do., new red, 5 p c ..	102	—	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; N'th'n Cos. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— C'fergus and Larne 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	109½	109½	109½
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c ..	—	110	—	—	110	110
— Kilkenny Junction, A, 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— L'derry &amp; Enniskillen 5 p c ..	130	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	106	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterford &amp; Central 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
Dub. &amp; Glas. S.P. Co. (1887) 5 p c ..	—	—	100	—	—	—
Pipe Water Old, £92 6s. 2d. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Do. New, £100 ..	—	—	—	99½	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—6 per cent., 30th January, 1882.
Of Deposit—3 per cent., 30th January, 1882.

Name Days—June 28th, and July 12th, 1882.

Account Days—June 29th, and July 13th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Pills can be confidently recommended as a domestic remedy for the ailments of all classes and conditions of people. Young and old of both sexes may take this medicine with the certainty of deriving benefit from its use, when disorder or disease is making them miserable. Holloway's Pills are unrivalled for their purifying, aperient, and strengthening properties. They remove indigestion, palpitation, and headache, and are specially serviceable in complaints peculiar to females. Each box is wrapped with printed instructions for the guidance of invalids who will readily understand, from carefully studying them, the best way of recovering health. Holloway's Pills will work a thorough change in the constitutions of the weak and nervous.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS

DUNN—June 16, at Belgard-bridge, the wife of M. J. Dunn, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a daughter.
FROSTE—June 17, at Barba Villa, Howth, the wife of Richard Pope Froste, Esq., A.B., solicitor, of a daughter.
LITTLE—June 16, at Dundrum House, the wife of Judge Little of a daughter.
M'WILLIAM—June 15, at North road, Monaghan, the wife of Wm. M'William, Esq., solicitor, of a son.
TOBIAS—June 20, at Strand-road, Sandymount, the wife of Matthew Tobias, Esq., solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

BELAS and BIRD—June 17, at St. John's Church, Monkstown, County Dublin, by the Rev. J. Sandys Bird curate of St. John's, Monkstown, assisted by the Rev. F. E. K. Bird, incumbent of Leixlip, County Kildare, brothers of the bride, Charles William, youngest surviving son of George Henry Belas, of Ivy House, Leixlip, Esq., solicitor, to Eva, youngest daughter of the late John Sandys Bird, Esq., J.P., Kinsale, County Cork.
CORCORAN and LETT—June 22, at St. Peter's Church, Dublin by the Rev. R. W. Buckley, D.D., John Corcoran, Esq., solicitor, Ennisceorthy, County Wexford, eldest son of the late L. W. Corcoran, Esq., to Grace Anne, only daughter of the late Joshua Lett, Esq., J.P., Ballybane, County Wexford.

DEATHS.

LONGFIELD—June 20, at Fitzwilliam-square, Dublin, Elizabeth Penelope, wife of the Right Hon. Mountfort Longfield.
LOUGHEED—June 19, at Fortarlington, Caroline T., the beloved wife of Henry M. Lougheed, Esq., solicitor.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50, DENZILLE-STREET. 3-7

LEGAL POSTINGS:

IN THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY IN IRELAND.

In the Matter of

THOMAS WOODLOCK, of 43 Dame-street, in the City of Dublin, Stock and Share-Broker, a Bankrupt.

A Public Sitting will be held before the Chief Registrar, at the said Court, at the Four Courts, Dublin, on FRIDAY, the 7th day of JULY, 1882, at the hour of Half-past Eleven o'clock forenoon, for the Proof and Admission of Debts. The Account of the Official Assignee and the Vouchers for the same will also be examined.

A Creditor may prove his Debt at the Sitting, or send his Affidavit of Debt in the prescribed form to the under-named Official Assignee, four days previously to the Sitting, in order to have the same admitted as a Proof.

Dated this 22nd day of June, 1882.

W. H. S. MONK, Chief Clerk.

CHAS. HENRY JAMES, Official Assignee, 16 Merchants'-quay, Dublin.

MICHAEL LARKIN & CO., Solicitors for the Assignee, 51 Dame-street, Dublin. 94

PUBLIC NOTICES:

D. W. CARROLL, 44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN, wishes to call attention to his large STOCK OF NOTEPAPERS AND ENVELOPES, Direct in every instance from the Makers They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of LEATHER GOODS, Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases, With every article connected with Stationery, Are Sold much under usual charges. Prime Medal Account Book Manufacturer. Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge. 72

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 600 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PRACY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

PUBLIC NOTICES:

THE CHROMOGRAPH. INSTANTANEOUS REPRODUCTION OF MANUSCRIPTS, DOCUMENTS, PLANS, &c., &c.

Plans and Designs in various Colours obtained by One Single Operation.

The Chromograph is used WITHOUT EITHER PRESS, INKING, OR STEERING, and with ANY DESCRIPTION OF PAPER.

From eight to ten minutes suffice to obtain 40 to 50 copies. To take off the writing from the composition, it is sufficient to wash the apparatus with a soft sponge in clear water IMMEDIATELY after having taken the last impression.

PRICES OF CHROMOGRAPHS.

Table with 4 columns: No., Description (Octavo Boxes, Quarto, Foolscap, Folio), Ink, and Price (10/-, 18/-, 25/-, 34/-).

Extra Bottles of Ink, 1/- per Bottle. Composition, 3/- per lb.

TERMS:—CASH WITH ORDER.

GERRARD BROTHERS, 37 STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 59

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS. (Royal Route via Crinan and Caledonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Lochawe, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Stornoway, &c. Official Guide, 8d.; Illustrated, 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Fares free, at CARSON BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post from the owner, DAVID MACBRAYNE, 119 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

PATENT OFFICE, DUBLIN.

J. K. FAHIE & SON, Consulting Engineers and Patent Agents, 2, Nassau-street, Dublin, and 323, High Holborn, London, transact every description of business relating to Patents for Inventions, Registration of Designs, Copyrights, and Trade Marks. Authors of "Hand-book on British and Foreign Patent Law." A paper on the Law of Copyright &c., to be had on application, price 8s. 6d. 31

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY,

52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN. President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 2 1/2 per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied. Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:—The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.

50 52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10 TO £1,000 IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days. Two USHERS RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free. Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, JULY 1, 1882.

No. 805

CONTRACTS IN OUSTER OF THE EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT, 1880.

THE important decision of the English Queen's Bench Division in Griffiths v. The Earl of Dudley, on the 16th ult., confirms an opinion expressed first by the present writer more than a year and a half ago, in reference to the question whether it is competent to a workman to enter into a contract with his master so as to oust the remedial operation of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (see 14 Ir. L. T. 590, 612, 621). We ventured to maintain the affirmative view, notwithstanding the opinion to the contrary advanced by a learned and well-known jurist and legal writer, Dr. Wharton, who maintained that such contracts would be invalid, because "by the consent of the great body of our American courts, contracts to relieve a party from the consequences of his negligence are unlawful, as against the policy of the law": 3 Stn. L. R. (N. S.) 745. But, as we then observed, to our thinking he must have had in mind merely the decisions (referred to, 14 Ir. L. T. 367) as to contracts limiting the liability of railway companies, respecting which some exceptional considerations of public policy are concerned: see 5 Stn. L. R. 202; while even as to them our courts had allowed extreme latitude prior to the passing of Cardwell's Act: see 14 Ir. L. T. 367, et seq.; 25 Journ. of Jur. 478; et cf., as to waiver of statutory benefits in reference to insurance policies, Farmers, &c., Ince. Co. v. Curry, 13 Bush. 312; White v. Connecticut, &c., Ince. Co., 4 Dill. 177; Reilly v. Franklin Ince. Co., 48 Wis. 449; Thompson v. St. Louis Ince. Co. ib. 459; Chamberlain v. Ince. Co., 55 N. H. 249. Since then, however, we find it held last year, in the Indiana case of Rosener v. Hermann (8 Federal Rep. 782), that a contract between employer and employee, whereby the latter, in consideration of the employment, agrees to release and discharge the former from all damages on account of accident or death to the employee, caused by the negligence of his employer or co-employees, is void as against public policy. "So far as he could do so by the exercise of reasonable care, the defendant was bound," said the court, "to supply his factory with suitable and safe machinery. If he failed to do this, and required his employee to operate machinery which was unsound and unsafe, and in doing so the latter, while exercising ordinary care and prudence, received injuries which caused his death, his personal representative has a right of action for the benefit of those who have sustained loss from the injury and death. When the defendant's negligence in supplying his employees with unsafe machinery has caused the death of the latter, the law will not allow the defendant to say—as in effect he does say in this answer—'it is true that my machinery was defective and unsafe, and my negligence caused the death of my employee, but I am not liable to those who have suffered from the loss of his life, because I had a contract with my employee which secured to me the right to supply him with defective and unsafe machinery, and to be negligent.' Such a contract is void as against public policy." We find, however, that in a previous Georgia case (Western, &c., Ry. Co. v. Bishop, 50 Ga. 465), a well-considered decision to the contrary was delivered, the court distinguishing the case of a common carrier, as we, also, had thought such cases distinguishable; but, we further find it held that a railway company may, in the contract of employment, stipulate that they will not be responsible for injuries sustained through the negligence of a co-employee (Western, &c., Ry. Co. v. Strong, 52 ib. 461; cf. Ingersoll v. Randall, 14 Minn. 400), although there is a statute making it no defence, in that State, to actions for injuries sustained by railroad employees, that the injury was caused by a fellow-servant: Code Ga. 1873, ss. 2083, 3036.

Now, in Griffiths v. The Earl of Dudley, it appeared that there had been established in the defendant's collieries a kind of club or benefit society, called the "Field Box," which was a fund raised by levying weekly contributions from workmen, in some cases directly and in other cases indirectly, through the agency of the contractors under whom they worked. The Earl, as the owner of the collieries, added to the fund a gross sum equal to the amount of the total contributions levied from the workmen. The deceased was a journeyman pit-sinker, and from his wages was deducted by the contractor in whose immediate employment he was 4d. per week for the fund. He was not asked to contribute, but the sum was deducted from the amount payable to him at each reckoning. The Earl's contributions to the fund were voluntary. The benefits derived by the workmen from the fund were—(a) surgical aid in case of personal injuries in their work; (b) a weekly allowance in case of inability to work from injuries or sickness; (c) money to pay funeral expenses in case of a workman's death; and (d) an allowance to the widow and family in case of workmen killed when engaged in their employment. The club or society was not registered as a benefit society, nor, was there any rule for its management. There was no evidence that there were any officers, nor, as between the parties, any balance-sheet or audit. The payments out of the fund were voluntary and at the discretion of the agents who managed the fund as part of the business of the collieries. As regarded the case of a widow, the allowances made were optional, and so as to the allowances as to children. When the Employers' Liability Act was passed, meetings of the men took place (which, however, it was not proved that the deceased man attended), resulting in an agreement to accept the existing arrangement, and the Earl circulated conditions the effect of which would be that all the workmen were to be members of the club or relief society on the basis already existing, and that they should thus contract themselves out of the Act; and that no workman, nor, in case of death, any person entitled to look to the funds of the society for compensation should be entitled to sue the Earl. It was proved that Griffiths read these conditions, and went on to work as before, paying his subscriptions as he had been used to do. He afterwards lost his life in consequence of the negligence of a person in the employment of the Earl, who had a superintendence which under the Act would give a workman or his widow a right of action against the Earl, and his widow brought such an action under Lord Campbell's Act and the Employers' Liability Act, in the county court. The Earl set up as a defence the implied contract entered into by the deceased workman to waive for his widow the benefits of the Act. It was contended on the part of the plaintiff that she was not bound by it, and that in truth there was no binding contract, it being void for want of mutuality and want of consideration, and also as contrary to public policy as tending to defeat the object of the Act; and the county court judge yielded to this contention. From this decision the defendant appealed. The plaintiff's counsel strongly relied on the words of the Act of 1860, that in the classes of cases provided for "the workman or, in case the injury results in death, the legal personal representatives, and any persons entitled in case of death shall have the same right of compensation and remedies against the employer as if the workman had not been a workman, nor in the service of the employer, nor engaged in his work." In giving judgment, Field, J., said that the general object of the Act was to avoid the injustice which was considered to have arisen in cases where workmen were killed or injured by reason of negligence of persons in superintendence under the employers, and where there was before the Act no remedy. The object, however, was only to get rid of the obstacle to recovery of compensation arising merely from the fact that the person injured was in the employment of the person sued. It was not intended to get rid of actual and express contracts. When the Act came into operation Lord Dudley intimated that he would not employ workmen except upon the conditions published, and it was clear that the deceased had assented to them. And these conditions expressly stipulated that in such case the workman or his widow should not look to the Earl for compensation. It was a reasonable contract, fairly entered into, and there was abundant consideration for it, as the Earl largely contributed to the fund. That being so, the workman sustained injuries in his employment which caused his death, and his widow sued the Earl, who set up the contract in defence. The county court judge had overruled the defence, taking a view of the contract in which this court could not concur. First, he held the contract void for "want of mutuality," but that was not pressed in argument, and was clearly untenable. Next he held that the contract was void as being contrary to public policy, because tending to frustrate the object of the Act. But why was it so? He thought, on the contrary, that it was quite consistent with and tended to carry out the object of the Act. Then it was urged that the workman could not contract his widow out of the Act, as her right of action was quite distinct from his own or his representative's, and so, in a sense, it was, for by the recent Act she could sue under Lord Campbell's Act if the representatives did not, but that, though in a sense a new right of action, was rather a change of procedure than a new right of action, the right of action really remained the same. Then the words of the Act referred to were relied upon, that the workman or his widow should be in the same position as if he were not a workman in the service of the parties sued. But that only got rid of the objection arising before the Act from the doctrine of "common employment," and was not to be taken literally, and, indeed, if it were to be so the action could not be maintained at all, for it could only be maintained on the ground that the workman was in the employment of the person sued. It was to be taken then that the deceased workman had contracted himself out of the Act. There were no words in this Act—as there were in others—providing that the workmen should not contract themselves out of the Act. And where it was not expressly provided that freedom of contract should be restrained, it was not to be interfered with. On these grounds, therefore, he came to the conclusion that this action could not be maintained against the Earl, and that the decision of the county court judge must be reversed and judgment entered for the Earl. Cave, J., in concurring, said that the question was whether the workman could contract his representatives and his family out of the Act, as well as himself, and he was clear that he could. The only effect of the words in the Act relied upon was that the objection could not be taken—in the classes of cases provided for—that the workman was in the defendant's employment; but it did not interfere with freedom of contract, nor prevent the workman from entering into such a contract as this, which was really for his benefit.

This decision, as we have said, not only in conformity with the opinion originally expressed in this journal, but with the opinions (quoted, 14 Ir. L. T. 620) of the late Lord Justice Holker, when Attorney-General, and of Mr. Horace Smith, the writer of a well-known work on the Law of Negligence, as well as with the opinion maintained by Messrs. Roberts and Wallace in their excellent edition of the Act; and a like opinion was affirmed by Bramwell, and Brett, L.JJ., in their evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Employers' Liability. To us it seems that the only point that could have been thought substantially open to question, was as to whether the deceased could so contract his wife and children also out of the benefit of Lord Campbell's Act, which the first two of those opinions affirmed he could do. However, if it be allowed that Lord Campbell's Act gave no new right of action to the representatives of the deceased, and was merely intended to prevent his death operating as a bar to an action for damages (see 13 Ir. L. T. 565; Byrne v. Wilson, 15 Ir. C. L. R. 363; Reed v. G. E. Ry. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 555), the decision on that point too must be taken as practically following. But, whether an employer could exempt himself from liability for his own wilful negligence, is another question, unconcluded by this decision. As it is, however, the occasion would seem to be ripe for reconsideration of this subject, remembering the words of Mr. Dodson, the former President of the Local Government Board, declaring (Nov. 11, 1860) that, "as regarded any attempts to evade or frustrate the intentions of the Legislature, if such attempts occurred, then would be the time for the Government and the Legislature to consider the nature of the cases and whether they called for any legislative interference." "It does not appear," remarks Mr. Murehie, Secretary of the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, in their 22nd annual report, just issued, "that any justification can be found for the permissive character of the Act, and the Parliamentary Committee of the Trades Union Congress have resolved to make a strong effort to induce Parliament, along with other very necessary improvements, to insert a clause which will render it impossible for either employers or workmen to contract themselves out of its provisions." And certainly, as Lord Shand maintained two years ago, workmen have reason for agitating against such a perversion of what the law would seem to recognise as their ordinary rights; though we find that, at the meeting of the Sheffield Chamber of Commerce, this week, it was resolved that such interference, as now proposed, with the right of free contract between adults would be prejudicial to the interests of commerce in this country.

MORTGAGES AND THE STATUTE OF LIMITATION.

Our ancestors in the law, when they created the present form of mortgage, sowed the seed of fiction which has produced a crop of misapprehension. If the equity lawyers had possessed sufficient firmness of mind to allow a mortgage deed to mean what it said, an intelligible mode of securing the loan of money would have sprung up which, doubtless, would have been quite as convenient as the present, and would, at the same time, have been clear on the face of it. One of the perplexities arising from the double nature of a mortgage transaction has lately required a Lord Chancellor, an ex-Chancellor, and a Chief Justice, besides three Lords of Appeal, two Lords Justices, and a puisne judge, to solve it. In the action of Heath v. Pugh—an action of ejectment, reported in its last stage in the June number of the Law Journal Reports—Mr. Justice Denman, at the trial, held that the plaintiff, being the mortgagee of the land, was entitled to recover it. On appeal to Lord Coleridge and Mr. Justice Lindley, it was held that, as twenty years had elapsed from the date of the mortgage, and there was no proof of the payment of interest, the Statute of Limitation applied. In the Court of Appeal (consisting of Lord Selborne and Lords Justices Baggallay and Brett), it was held that, as the plaintiff had obtained a foreclosure decree within twenty years from bringing his action, he was entitled to recover. In the House of Lords this judgment was affirmed, with the full approbation by Lord Cairns of the judgment of his successor on the woolsack, and with the concurrence of Lords O'Hagan, Blackburn, and Watson.

The facts of a case frequently referred to need be recalled but briefly. In 1856, the plaintiff, Heath, with a co-trustee, Creaklock, invested trust money on the security of the land in question. Creaklock, with the complicity of the mortgagor, in 1859, sold the land to the defendant without disclosing the mortgage. The defendant took possession, and Creaklock appropriated the purchase money. He appears afterwards to have kept matters quiet by paying the interest; but in 1870, in order apparently to cover up the transaction, he induced Heath to execute a reconveyance to the mortgagor on the representation that the mortgage was to be paid off. Shortly afterwards he absconded. In 1870 Heath filed a bill for foreclosure, and in 1873 he obtained a decree, the reconveyance being set aside as fraudulent. In 1878 he brought the present action of ejectment against the purchaser from Creaklock. If the twenty years were to count from 1856, or so soon as the redemption clause in the mortgage deed was exhausted, the plaintiff was out of time; and it was equally clear that in 1870, when he brought the foreclosure action, he was within time, and would be within time if the period of limitation only began to run from the foreclosure. The question is one of those upon which judges may well differ, form and substance being mixed up in a manner likely to give the result a turn either way in the judge's mind. Lord Coleridge, when the matter came before him and Lord Justice Lindley, seemed to be influenced by the fact that the defendant had bought and paid for the land, and that between him and the plaintiff, both being innocent persons, the plaintiff, by not bringing his action before, was the more to blame. Mr. Justice Lindley, although an equity lawyer, seems, sitting in the Common Pleas, to have taken a rather extreme common law view of the case. Both agreed that a foreclosure action does not deal with the possession of the land; and in very short judgments, without citing cases, decided for the defendant. In the Court of Appeal the Lord Chancellor happened to be sitting, and, out of deference to the judges below, gave an elaborate judgment overruling their decision. In the House of Lords, Lord Cairns contents himself by referring to the judgment of Lord Selborne in the Court of Appeal, but puts the considerations involved in a very brief but powerful way. Lord Cairns, after stating all the material facts in ten words, points out that if the mortgage, instead of being legal, had been equitable, there would have been no possible question that the proceedings in Chancery would have given a right to the mortgaged property. Lord Cairns adds: "The Court is not now a Court of law or a Court of equity; it is a Court of complete jurisdiction; and if there were a variance between what, before the Judicature Act, a Court of law and a Court of equity would have done, the rule of the Court of equity must now prevail." These words appear to us to give a wider meaning to the Judicature Act than has ever been given before. Lord Cairns's words may be construed to mean that where an equitable right gives certain privileges, a fortiori a legal right gives them. No strain must, however, be put upon the words, which appear intended mainly to point a reductio ad absurdum. He proceeds to ask why a legal mortgagee is to be worse off than an equitable mortgagee: and refers for authority to the case of Wrighton v. Viz, 8 Dr. & War. 104, decided by Lord St. Leonards. Lastly, he lays down the proposition that the right of the mortgagee to bring his action of ejectment as absolute owner did not accrue until he had brought his action of foreclosure; and, therefore, that the statute did not begin to run at all until the foreclosure decree was obtained. Lord Cairns treats this proposition as not necessary for the decision of the case. He relies sufficiently on his reductio ad absurdum to dispose of the case in hand. Lord Selborne, however, in his judgment, concurs in this proposition; and the sufficiency of the first ground on which Lord Cairns affirms the decision of the Court of Appeal may well be doubted. The establishment of this doctrine completes the triumph of substance over form. There was a time when the common law Courts looked upon a mortgagor as a mere tenant at sufferance of the mortgagee; now he is declared to be the true owner of the estate, and the mortgagee can only obtain a full right to turn him out by obtaining a decree of foreclosure. Lord Cairns, of course, does not say that a mortgagee cannot bring an action of ejectment until he has obtained a foreclosure decree. This would be vastly to restrict his rights. He may enter into possession, by ejectment or otherwise, "of land which he is to hold as a pledge, subject to account and to all the infirmities of a mortgagee's title;" but when he has obtained a foreclosure decree he obtains a new title, being that of absolute owner.

This view would seem to put the decision on its firmest ground. The mortgagee may have two rights of entry. One he has at all times during the continuance of the mortgage; namely, that which, when exercised, makes him mortgagee in possession. The other he has only after a foreclosure decree, which makes him absolute owner. This view avoids the difficulty that a foreclosure action is not an action for the recovery of land—a fact upon which the judges in the Divisional Court relied. If it were an action for the recovery of land, the present question would never have arisen, because the land would already have been recovered. But the foreclosure decree gives an entirely new title. It is as if a person who was tenant for life became tenant in fee by the happening of some event. The statute would run, not from the accrual of his first title, but from that of the second. The difference in the character of the titles is, no doubt, recognised in equity only, and not in law, but the Court is now a Court of equity. The decision involves propositions which it is not difficult to criticise, but such criticism is not of a profitable kind. We have now the highest authority on the subject, and the conclusion arrived at is in accordance with convenience and justice.—Law Journal.

PARTICULARS AND CONDITIONS OF SALE.

(From the Law Times.)

In consequence of the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, and the Conveyancing Act, 1881, a very considerable abbreviation can be made in those conditions of sale which relate to title or evidence of title. But conditions of sale can by no means be dispensed with, and we propose to give some common form conditions of sale, which may be useful both in auctions and in private contracts. Most of our readers are aware that some of the provincial law societies did, before the passing of the Conveyancing Act, issue general conditions of sale, which have been largely adopted in the districts represented by such societies. The advantage of general conditions is very obvious. They save much labour to the vendor's solicitor. Although he has to peruse the title to the property for sale for the sake of drawing any special conditions which may be necessary, he is relieved from much mechanical work, and also in some cases from the trouble of deciding whether it is necessary to insert such and such a condition. He can limit his attention to framing the special conditions. To the purchaser's solicitor, again, if he practises in the districts where the conditions are current, the relief is considerable. He is acquainted with the general conditions, and does not therefore, while he peruses the abstract, need to be perpetually referring to the conditions to see whether some inquiry is barred, or some right of the purchaser restricted. He can keep his attention the better to matters which are really of consequence to the title. Of course, to make the general conditions useful, they must be moderate and be generally adapted. The disadvantage of the present system is that each society has different conditions, and solicitors are not likely to be acquainted with those of societies at a distance.

This gives more trouble to the Profession. Also, many societies have no conditions, or have not yet adapted them to the recent changes. We propose, therefore, to frame some general conditions of sale to be called the "Law Times Conditions," in which we shall, as far as is reasonably practicable, rely on the statute. We shall make some preliminary remarks on particulars and conditions, and we shall also give some notes upon the conditions we propose for acceptance, and state the recent decisions relating thereto, with references to well-known text books.

The distinction between the office of particulars and conditions should be thoroughly understood. It is for the particulars to describe the subject-matter of the contract, and of the conditions to state the terms on which it is sold: (Torrance v. Berton 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 722; L. Rep. 14 Eq. 120). In other words, the particulars state what is sold, and the condition how it is sold. The importance of the distinction arises from the fact that an omission made in the particulars will not necessarily be remedied by a statement, however explicit, in the conditions; unless it can be shown that the purchaser's attention was expressly directed to it: (Dart, 114). So also the usual condition for compensation will not avail in case of material misdescription, as where long leasehold or copyhold is described as freehold (Dart, 159); or where land, which was formerly copyhold and has been enfranchised, but in which the minerals belong to the lord, is described as freehold (Sydney v. Nicholson, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 4; L. Rep. 6 Ch. App. 436). In selling an underlease it is best to show clearly, in the particulars, that it is not an original lease. It is not prudent to call it a lease in the particulars, and leave it to the conditions to explain that it is an underlease; but the very strict view held in Madeley v. Booth (2 De G. & Sm. 718) has been impugned in later cases (Dart, 148); and was disented from in very strong terms by Sir G. Jessel in Camberwell, &c., Building Society v. Holliday (41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 752; L. Rep. 15 Ch. Div. 760). In that case it was held, that there was enough in the conditions to give notice to the purchaser that the property was held under a derivative lease. Still it is most prudent to show it in the particulars. So the condition as to compensation will not cover a material misdescription as to the land sold, whether with regard to quantity or otherwise (Dart, 144-145; Arnold v. Arnold, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 705; L. Rep. 14 Ch. Div. 270). Where, on a sale of leasehold, at Liverpool, by a slip, the ground rent was not stated, and the purchaser believed that there was no, or only a nominal, ground rent, he was held entitled to be discharged from the contract (Jones v. Rismer, 43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 111; L. Rep. 14 Ch. Div. 526). If the land is held subject to any restrictions they should be stated. It is proper on sale of freeholds to mention heriots and quit rents. In case of a long term which has been enlarged into a fee simple under sect. 65 of the Conveyancing Act, if there are onerous restrictions which are kept alive by sub-sec. (4), they should be mentioned or noticed in the particulars. In fact, the particulars should not merely be not untrue, or even just true, but they should be a fair honest description of the property to be sold. However, it is not necessary on sale of leaseholds to notice the covenants, although unusually stringent, if the purchaser has an opportunity of examining the lease; and so on sales of copyholds the uses and customs of the manor, and the lord's rights as to minerals, need not be mentioned, as they are the ordinary incidents of copyholds; but, as a matter of expediency, it is best to mention the fines. The above remarks are not intended to be a summary of the law relating to particulars, but merely to give a general view of their nature. For further information see Dart, 118-122; 1 Davidson, 511; and as to Plan incorporated with the particulars, see New Valley, &c., v. Dunkley (L. Rep. 4 Ch. Div. 1). We shall endeavour to make our general conditions as comprehensive as possible, so as to reduce the number of the special conditions. It will often be practicable then, in an advertisement of the property for sale, to state the conditions in the following simple form:—"The property will be sold subject to the Law Times Conditions 1882, the title to commence with a conveyance on sale dated the _____ of _____, 18, and the purchase to be completed on the _____ day of _____ next."

(To be continued.)

CONTRACT OF CARRIAGE—LIMITATION OF TIME FOR PRESENTING CLAIM FOR DAMAGE.

In Capelhart v. Seaboard and Roanoke Railroad Company, 81 N. C. 493, it was held that a stipulation in a bill of lading given by a common carrier, that in case any claim for damage should arise for the loss of articles mentioned in the receipt, while in transit or before delivery, the extent of such damage or loss should be adjusted before removal from the station, and claim therefor made in thirty days to a "trace agent" of the carrier, is an unreasonable provision, which the courts will not uphold. The court said:—"The jury having found that there was negligence on the part of defendant, we must take that as a fact, and adhering to the principles established in the cases cited, we are of the opinion that the defendant's liability for damages is not diminished or affected in any way by the notice or contract annexed to the bill of lading, not even by the stipulation that the damages must be adjusted before the removal of the goods from the station and the presentation of the claim for payment within thirty days; for the stipulation must be reasonable; and we do not think it is reasonable to require the consignee of a car-load of cotton to cut into the bales before they are received to ascertain whether they have been seriously damaged. A contract restating the responsibility of the carrier must be reasonable in itself, and not calculated to ensnare or defraud the other party. A contract requiring notice of loss in thirty days is not reasonable." Adams Express Co. v. Reagan, 29 Ind. 21; So. Ex. Co. v. Caperton, 44 Ala. 101; S. C., 4 Ark. Rep. 118; Place v. Union Ex. Co., 3 Hilt. 19."

In Adams Express Co. v. Reagan, 29 Ind. 21, it was held that a condition that the carrier should not be liable for any loss, unless a claim was presented within thirty days after shipment, was void. The shipment was to Savannah, Georgia, during the war, when transportation was much interrupted. The court said:—"The conditions must be reasonable in themselves, and not such as will operate as a snare and fraud upon the public." "In the case under consideration, the company, in a shipment of a package sent from Clayton, in this State, to Savannah, Georgia, at a time when the country was in an unsettled condition, occasioning great delays in shipments, and in the transmission of the mails, attempt to incorporate into their contract a condition precedent, that they will not answer for any loss or damage, unless the claim therefor shall be presented to them, at their office at the former place, within thirty days after the date of the receipt; thus placing it in their power, by a delay which perhaps under the circumstances would not have been unreasonable, to prevent any claim for loss or damage, however gross might have been their negligence. We think the stipulation in question void as being against public policy."

In U. S. Express Co. v. Harris, 51 Ind. 127, there was a condition that any claim must be presented within thirty days from the date of the receipt, at the office of shipment. The shipment was at Pittsburgh, Penn., for Jonesboro, Ind. The court say:—"We know of no reason why this stipulation is not binding and valid between the parties." "It seems to us reasonable." They lay stress on the fact that the transportation would ordinarily be completed in a day or two, and cite Southern Express Co. v. Caldwell, and Weir v. Express Co., infra. They distinguish Adams Express Co. v. Reagan, on the ground of the peculiar circumstances of that case.

In Southern Express Co. v. Caperton, 44 Ala. 101; S. C., 4 Am. Rep. 118, the condition was that the claim should be made, at defendant's receiving office, in writing, within thirty days from the date of the receipt, with the receipt annexed. The transportation was to be from Stevenson to Huntsville, Ala. On this point the court simply said:—"He cannot be allowed to make a statute of limitations so short as to be capable of becoming a means of fraud. Thirty days might elapse before the consignee became aware that anything had been consigned to him, especially if he was absent from home. It was the duty of the defendant to deliver this package to Mr. Cruse, and it is more than unreasonable to allow it to appropriate the property of another by a failure to perform a duty, and that, too, under the protection of a writing signed only by its agent, the assent to which by the other party is only proven by his acceptance of the paper." The court queried whether the paper constituted a special contract.

In Weir v. Express Co., 5 Phila. 355, the condition was that claim must be made within thirty days after the time when the property had or ought to have been delivered. The particular facts are not disclosed. The court say:—"This is a very reasonable and proper provision, to enable the defendants, while the matter is still fresh, to institute proper inquiries, and furnish themselves with evidence on the subject. The defendants do a large business, and to allow suits to be brought against them, without such notice, at any length of time, would be to surrender them bound hand and foot to almost every claim that might be made. It would be next to impossible, when a thousand packages, large and small, are forwarded by them daily, to ascertain anything about the loss of one of them at a distance of six months or a year."

In Express Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 264, a condition that the claim must be made within ninety days from delivery to the company, was held reasonable where the time required for the transportation is not long, as in that case a single day. The court said:—"Policies of fire insurance, it is well known, usually contain stipulations that the insured shall give notice of a loss, and furnish proofs thereof within a brief period after the fire, and it is undoubted that if such notice and proofs have not been given in the time designated, as have not been waived, the insurers are not liable. Such conditions have always been considered reasonable, because they give the insurers an opportunity of inquiring into the circumstances and amount of the loss, at a time when inquiry may be of service. And still more, conditions in policies of fire insurance that no action shall be brought for the recovery of a loss unless it shall be commenced within a specified time, less than the statutory period of limitations, are enforced, as not against any legal policy. Riddleberger v. Hartford Ins. Co., 7 Wall. 386."

Telegraph companies, though not common carriers, are engaged in a business that is in its nature almost if not quite as important to the public as is that of carriers. Like common carriers they cannot contract with their employers for exemption from liability for the consequences of their own negligence. But they may, by such contracts, or by their rules and regulations brought to the knowledge of their employers, limit the measure of their responsibility to a reasonable extent. Whether their rules are reasonable or unreasonable must be determined with reference to public policy, precisely as in the case of a carrier. And in Walf v. Western Union Telegraph Company, 62 Penn. St. 69; S. C., 1 Am. Rep. 587, a case where one of the conditions of a telegraph company, printed in their blank forms, was that the company would not be liable for damages in any case where the claim was not presented in writing within sixty days after sending the message, it was ruled that the condition was binding on an employee of the company who sent his message on the printed form. The condition printed in the form was considered a reasonable one, and it was held that the employer must make claim according to the condition, before he could maintain an action. Exactly the same doctrine was asserted in Young v. Western Union Telegraph Company, 84 N. Y. Superior, 890.

In Lewis v. Great Western Railway Co., 5 H. & N. 867, which was an action against the company as common carriers, the court sustained, as reasonable stipulations in a bill of lading that 'no claim for deficiency, damage, or detention, would be allowed unless made within three days after the delivery of the goods, nor for loss, unless made within seven days from the time they should have been delivered.' Under the last clause of this condition the onus was imposed upon the shipper of ascertaining whether the goods had been delivered at the time they should have been, and in case they had not, of making his claim within seven days thereafter. In the case we have now in hand the agreement pleaded allowed ninety days from the delivery of the parcel to the company, within which the claim might be made, and no claim was made until four years thereafter. Possibly such a condition might be regarded as unreasonable, if an insufficient time were allowed for the shipper to learn whether the carriers' contract had been performed. But that cannot be claimed here. The parcel was received at Jackson, Tennessee, for delivery at New Orleans. The transit required only about one day. We think, therefore, the limitation of the defendants' common law liability to which the parties agreed, as set up in the plea, was a reasonable one, and that the plea set up a sufficient defence to the action."

The court then advert to Southern Express Co. v. Caperton, and, after describing the case, remark:—"It will be observed that it was a much more onerous requirement of the shipper than that made in the present case, and more than was necessary to give notice of the loss to the carrier." "This case is a very unsatisfactory one. It appears to have regarded the stipulation as a statute of limitations, which it clearly was not, and it leaves us in doubt whether the decision was not rested on the ground that there was no sufficient evidence of a contract."

In Lewis v. Great Western Railway Co., supra, Pollock, C.B., said:—"Such a condition is perfectly reasonable. The law allows persons to make their own bargains in matters of this sort."

In Southern Express Co. v. Hummell, 54 Miss. 566; S. C., 28 Am. Rep. 885, the condition was that claim must be made at the shipping office within thirty days from the date of the receipt. The shipment was at Landerdale, Miss., for delivery at New York city. The court said:—"We find that the precise condition set up in the plea was held to be reasonable, and a discharge of the company from all liability if not complied with, in United States Express Co. v. Harris, 51 Ind. 127. There, as in the case before us, the claim for loss was required to be made in thirty days from date of receipt. In Weir v. Express Co., 5 Phila. 355, before Sharswood, P. J., the claim was required to be made of the express company within thirty days after the property had been, or ought to have been, received; and the ruling was that the owner had lost his remedy, where non-delivery was complained of, if the claim was not preferred within thirty days after delivery ought to have been made. Such provision in the contract was said to be reasonable, as enabling the express company while the matter was fresh, to institute proper inquiries, and furnish themselves with evidence on the subject. The chief business of express companies, as is well known, is to carry small but valuable packages. There is more or less liability, that in the vast multitude of parcels which they handle, passing through the hands of so many agents, a loss, by mistake or accident, or by the appropriation of an employee, will at times occur. It is not unreasonable that the individual shippers, who have, or may be supposed to have, distinct knowledge and recollection, should be required to give notice of non-delivery or unreasonable delay. The law is settled by the great weight of authority that a common carrier may limit his liability by contract, provided the special contract does not exempt from losses by negligence or misconduct. The exemption thus claimed must be reasonable, and the carrier cannot take advantage of his powers and of the necessities of the public, to exact exemptions from that measure of duty which public policy demands. Such was the line of observation of the Supreme Court of the United States in Express Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 264, upholding as reasonable a stipulation in the contract, not differing from that in this case, except that the time for making the claim was ninety days. The only case holding a contrary doctrine is Southern Express Co. v. Caperton, 44 Ala. 101; S. C., 4 Am. Rep. 118, which is said in the case last cited to be a very unsatisfactory decision. The Alabama court puts its objection to the covenant on the ground that it was a statute of limitations. Clearly it was not, any more than is notice of a fire, and proof of loss within a specified time. The stipulation is no more than a condition, with which the owner and shipper must comply, or lose his claim; if he does comply, he may bring his suit within the time prescribed by the statute of limitations.

"It appears that the usual time required for the transportation of this package to New York from Lauderdale station is three or four days. We are not called upon in this case to say whether thirty days from the date of the receipt is an unreasonably short time to make claim for damages or loss. The pleadings raise no question of that sort, but admit that it was reasonable. Reasonable time would be time ample to ascertain the non-delivery of the parcel at the place of destination, which depends on the distance and facilities of communication. If Hunnicutt received no tidings of his package in ten or twelve days from the shipment, his suspicion ought to have been aroused, and inquiry made. If that had been done, it is almost certain that the parcel would have been found in due time for its delivery at New York."

The condition in the principal case, it will be observed, was much more stringent than in any of the cases above reviewed, and it may well be that it was unreasonable even within those cases.

Mr. Lawson, in his recent valuable monograph on Contracts of Carriage, speaks of the principal case as holding the condition "reasonable except as to latent defects." We do not find any warrant for this construction of the case.—Albany Law Journal.

In reference to the last paragraph in the above paper, Mr. J. D. Lawson subsequently wrote as follows:—

"In Caphart v. Seaboard, &c., R. R. Co., 77 N. C. 855, decided in 1877, the bill of lading stipulated that any claim for loss or damage to the article shipped should be adjusted in the presence of an officer of the road before it was taken from the station; and also, that within thirty days thereafter the claim should be taken before another officer who had the authority of the road to settle such matters. On the trial the defendant asked the court to charge the jury that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover because he had not proceeded according to the stipulations of the bill of lading. This the court refused, and there was a verdict for the plaintiff. 'We think,' said Reade, J., in reversing the judgment below, 'that it is a reasonable regulation that a claim for damages should be made by the consignee at the delivery station before the article is taken away.' . . . 'Of course the provision would not protect the carrier against liability for latent defects.' This is the case to which I referred in my book.

"In Caphart v. Seaboard, &c., R. R. Co., 81 N. C. 438, decided in 1879, and reported since my book went to press, a precisely similar provision was held unreasonable. This is the case to which you referred in your article.

"I shall neither attempt to reconcile these decisions nor to explain why the court did not in the last case deign to notice their former ruling. It is, however, worth while to note that the reason which they give to sustain their latest position applies only to what Reade, J., called a 'latent defect' (better latent 'injury')—viz., 'the stipulation must be reasonable; and we do not think it is reasonable to require the consignees of a car-load of cotton to cut into the bales before they are received, to ascertain whether they have been seriously damaged.' The case required no such opinion, as the jury had found that the damage sued for was patent."

Another correspondent observes:—"The facts are that the court was differently constituted when Caphart v. S., &c., R. R. Co., was again brought before it, and the decision in 81 N. C. was intended to overrule the decision in 77 N. C.; that no reference is made to the one in the other, was probably an inadvertence on the part of Judge Ashe in delivering the opinion of the court."

EXCESSIVE CHARGES BY RAILWAY COMPANIES.

The case of Brown v. The Great Western Railway Company, recently decided by the Court of Appeal, is deserving of greater attention than at first sight it seems to demand. The amount in dispute was a mere trifle, but the principle involved one affecting the railway company against whom the decision was given considerably. The plaintiff, travelling third-class from Paddington to Bristol, a distance of 118½ miles, was charged 10s. 6d. for the journey. He paid the money under protest, contending that he was overcharged. The same thing happened on the return journey, and he sued the company for the amount he had been overcharged—about twopences. A Divisional Court, upon a special case raising the point, decided in favour of the plaintiff, and the Court of Appeal now upheld that decision upon the ground that the company were not justified, by virtue of certain Acts of Parliament upon which they relied, in charging what they did, to the extent complained of by the plaintiff. It is unnecessary for our present purpose to mention the Acts relied upon or quote from them, as the Court has pronounced a distinct decision, which interprets them unfavourably to the company. It is sufficient to state that the company endeavoured to make an illegal charge and failed. Now, this levying of excessive fares has been carried on generally, and therefore the public using the company's line between Bristol and Paddington have been systematically overcharged, and, whether knowingly or not, have acquiesced in such overcharging. It is pretty certain, too, that had not the plaintiff taken up the case the company would have continued to act in excess of their rights until some one of equal determination took up his stand against them. Unfortunately, however, men who, when the amount is so small as this, have the courage to vindicate their rights and those of their fellow-subjects by bringing an action against a powerful company are rarely to be found, and, acting upon this well-known fact, not only this, but many other railway companies daily levy with impunity charges they are not authorised by their statutes to make. This, as we have, when dealing with such cases before, repeatedly pointed out, applies not only to cases of passenger fares, but, and to a much greater extent, to cases of ordinary goods traffic. It is a most unfair condition of things which permits the creation of powerful monopolists like railway companies, and provides no adequate means of preventing the excessive abuse of their powers. Even such means as the Legislature has provided for protecting the public are not made use of by the body to whom they have been entrusted—viz., the Board of Trade. In pursuance of a recommendation in the Report of the Royal Commission on Railways of 1866, it was provided by sect. 16 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, that an officer of the Board of Trade might act for the public, and might upon the Board's certificate take proceedings before the Railway Commissioners. From the first the Board of Trade objected to having these powers conferred upon it, upon the ground that it was a matter of great difficulty to determine what is and what is not a matter of public interest and what is a grievance. Whether in the first years of the existence of the Railway Commissioners' Court applications under sect. 16 were made to the Board of Trade or not is difficult to say, but certain it is that, if any were made, none were acted upon. In their fourth annual report the commissioners deal with this matter thus: "Up to this time no use has been made of this form of procedure, and we recommend that, as another means of carrying its principle into effect, the certificate entitling and requiring the officer to act should be one that might be granted not only by the Board of Trade, but by ourselves as well. The issue of a certificate must be founded upon some preliminary inquiry, and it would not be difficult for us to deduce from a statement and answer whether the case is a fit one to be taken up on behalf of the public, and whether prima facie the facts alleged upon either side afford a good cause of action or an adequate defence. The course would then be that, wherever the public interest was affected, anyone would be at liberty to complain to us, and if the affidavit filed in support of the complaint appeared to us to disclose a sufficient case, and if we were also satisfied upon the point of public interest, we would issue a certificate, substituting the public officer for the party who had complained, for the further proceedings to be taken to prosecute his complaint and to enforce the law." The objection which has been taken to this recommendation is that, if carried out, the commissioners would be both prosecutors and judges in the same cause, but a little reflection will show that that is not so, and it is not likely that they would in any way feel bound to find against the companies when the matter came on for hearing because they had upon mere ex parte statements decided that if these were true a case would be made out. The same objection applies with equal force to the proceedings of magistrates who sit at quarter sessions, and hear the very cases they themselves have committed for trial. This, however, is clear, that, as the Board of Trade have shown themselves either too supine or too obstinate and regardless of their duties to exercise the powers conferred upon them by the Act of 1873, some other body or person should be entrusted with those powers, or even additional powers, so that the public should no longer remain subject to the tyranny of the companies, tempered only by the courage and determination of such men as Mr. Brown.—Law Times.

GIFTS CAUSA MORTIS.

Justinian, in describing a donatio mortis causa, says that it is "when the donor wishes that the thing given should belong to himself rather than to the person to whom he gives it, and to that person rather than to his own heir." In illustration of which he cites the words which Homer puts into the mouth of Telemachus when the latter gives to Pircus: "Pircus, for we know not how these things shall be, whether the proud suitor shall secretly slay me in the palace, and shall divide the goods of my father. I would that thou thyself shouldst have and enjoy these things rather than that any of those men should; but if I shall plant slaughter and death amongst those men, then indeed bear these things to my home, and joying give them to me in joy."

Gifts causa mortis have not been generally favoured in the law. It is now more than a hundred years since Lord Chancellor Hardwicke declared it to be a pity that the statute for the prevention of frauds and perjuries did not set aside all such gifts.<sup>1</sup> A donatio mortis causa was required by the law of Justinian to be made in the presence of five witnesses.<sup>2</sup> But the common law does not require the gift to be executed in the presence of any stated number of witnesses, notwithstanding the fact that such donations amount to a revocation pro tanto of written wills.<sup>3</sup> As they lack all those formalities and safeguards which the law, in its wise precaution, throws around wills, it cannot be denied that a strong temptation is created to the commission of fraud and perjury. Such gifts are, therefore, said by Chancellor Kent in the note last cited, to be "of a dangerous nature." "Cases of this kind demand the strictest scrutiny. So many opportunities, and such strong temptations," says Lord Chelmsford, "present themselves to unscrupulous persons to pretend these death-bed donations, that there is always danger of having an entirely fabricated case set up. And, without any imputation of fraudulent contrivance, it is so easy to mistake the meaning of persons languishing in a mortal illness, and by a slight change of words, to convert their expressions of intended benefit into an actual gift of property, that no case of this description ought to prevail, unless it is supported by evidence of the clearest and most unequivocal character."<sup>4</sup> Such gifts are never presumed, and the maxim is applied, nemo donare facile prae Sumitur. Such gifts "must be established beyond suspicion;"<sup>5</sup> and "where a gift causa mortis is alleged the presumption being against it, clear proof on the part of the claimant is required."<sup>6</sup> And there is no doubt that they have been "a fruitful source of litigation, often bitter, protracted and expensive."<sup>7</sup>

Now, a donatio mortis causa is defined to be a conditional gift, depending on the contingency of expected death, and defeasible by revocation, or deliverance from the peril.<sup>8</sup>

And the rule is that in order to render perfect a donatio mortis causa three things must concur;<sup>9</sup> 1. The gift must be made with a view to the donor's death. 2. It must be made with a condition, either express or implied, that it shall take effect only on the death of the donor by a disease from which he is then suffering. 3. There must be a delivery of the subject of the donation.

