While it is essential that the donor make the gift in his last illness, or in contemplation or expectation of immediate death,<sup>10</sup> yet it is not necessary that it should be made in extremis like a nuncupative will.<sup>11</sup> Where a citizen of Tennessee, on leaving his home in Tennessee to enlist in the Federal army in Kentucky, delivered money and notes to be a gift to the donee in case he perished in the war, it was held that the peril and appre-

(1) Ward v. Turner, 2 Ves. 481, 487 (1752).
 (2) Sanders' Justinian (Hammond's ed.) 218.
 (3) 2 Kent's Com. 444.
 (4) Cochran v. Grace, 15 Moore P. C. 215, 222.
 (5) Gray v. Gray, 47 N. Y. 552, 556.
 (6) Conklin v. Conklin, 30 Hus. 278, 286. See also, Walter v. Ebdop, 2 Swans. 97; Contant v. Schuyler, 1 Paige, 816.
 (7) Hatch v. Atkinson, 56 Me. 328.
 (8) Nicholas v. Adams, 3 Wharton, 17.
 (9) Taylor v. Henry, 48 Md. 580; Murray v. Cannon, 41 Md. 466; Dole v. Lincoln, 31 Me. 422; Smith v. Kirtbridge, 31 Vt. 288; French v. Raymond, 29 Vt. 628; Bianchard v. Sheldon, 16 Vt. 268; Raymond v. Saltick, 10 Can. 484.
 (10) Lanson v. Lanson, 1 P. W. 441; Miller v. Miller, 3 P. W. 288; Bisnet v. Burrows, 1 Vesey, Jr. 546; Cochran v. Grace, 15 Moore P. C. 215, 222; Grattan v. Appleton, 3 Story C. C. 755; Courley v. Laubigler, 51 Pa. St. 845; Rhodes v. Childs, 64 Pa. St. 18; Robinson v. Ring, 72 Me. 144; Cass v. Dennison, 9 E. E. 88; Cass v. Simpson, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 288; Chaplin v. Seaber, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 46; Irish v. Nulling, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 370; Sheldon v. Burtin, 6 Hus. (N. Y.) 110; Merchant v. Merchant, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 422; Barter v. Barker, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 844; Shogoy v. Perkins, 4 Baxter (Tenn.), 278; Kwoit v. Hogan, 4 Met. (Ky.) 101.
 (11) Nicholas v. Adams, 2 Wharton (Penn.), 17; Cass v. Simpson, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 288.

(1) Sanders' Justinian (Hammond's ed.) 218.

hension were sufficiently immediate to justify a gift causa mortis.<sup>13</sup> On the other hand, the Supreme Court of New York has held that the delivery of a promissory note, by a person about entering the army, to his brother, with directions to give it to his mother should he not return alive, was not a valid gift to the mother.<sup>14</sup> And where a gift was made in expectation of immediate death from consumption, and the donor afterwards recovered so far as to attend to his ordinary business for eight months, and then finally died from the same disease, the court held that the gift could not be supported as a donatio mortis causa.<sup>15</sup> The expectation or apprehension of death may arise from infirmity or old age, or from external and anticipated danger.<sup>16</sup>

That delivery of the gift is essential, is a principle established by a long line of decisions, and disputed by none.<sup>17</sup> But it is not necessary that the delivery should be to the donee personally, it may be made to a third person in his behalf.<sup>18</sup> And instead of delivering the gift to the donee or to a third person in trust for him, the donor may create himself a trustee for the donee. As where money is deposited in bank in the name of the donor as trustee for the donee, and a pass-book is received containing an entry that the funds are in trust. In such case there may be a valid gift, although the cestui que trust possesses no knowledge of the trust, and although the pass-book is in the donor's possession until death.<sup>19</sup> The acceptance of the gift by the donee is also essential in order to make a gift complete or perfect.<sup>20</sup> But acceptance may be presumed in cases where it would be beneficial to the donee.<sup>21</sup> And in general any gift by deed, will, or otherwise, is supposed prima facie, unless the contrary appears, to be beneficial to the donee.<sup>22</sup> Not only must there be a delivery of the gift, a change of possession, but this change of possession must be continued in the donee, or in a third person for him, until the donor's death.<sup>23</sup>

Although a difference of opinion at one time existed as to what could be the subject of a gift causa mortis, the principles determining the question are now well settled. A donatio causa mortis extends only to personalty, and a gift of real estate cannot be sustained as such a gift.<sup>24</sup> In Pennsylvania the courts have held that the gift of all a person's property to take effect after death, was not a valid donatio causa mortis, that a gift causa mortis could not thus be made to operate as a will,<sup>25</sup> though the same court, in a subsequent case, has held that the rule is otherwise as to a particular chattel, although such chattel may have constituted the principal part of the donor's property.<sup>26</sup> But it has been held in Vermont that there is no principle of limitation as to the amount of property which may be transferred by a donatio causa mortis, and it was held a valid gift where the donor, on his death bed, executed a deed of all his personal property to his wife.<sup>27</sup> It was formerly held that a mere chose in action did not pass by delivery, and could not take effect as a gift causa mortis.<sup>28</sup> But such is no longer the rule, and it is well settled that a promissory note made by a third person, and payable to the order of the donor, or a bill of exchange may be a valid gift causa mortis.<sup>29</sup> But the donor's own promissory note is not the subject of such a gift.<sup>30</sup> Such a note is a mere promise of the donor, and can no more be recovered upon as a gift, than could a recovery be had upon the unwritten promise of the donor. Such notes "are of no more value than blank paper," for a mere intention or naked promise to give is not a gift, and a court of equity will not interfere and give effect to a gift left inchoate and imperfect.<sup>31</sup> And if the promissory note of a third person be given causa mortis, and be secured by a mortgage, the mortgage will enture solely to the benefit of the donee, although the mortgagee died was not delivered with the note, or even alluded to at the time of the delivery of the note, but continued to remain in the donor's possession until his death.<sup>32</sup> It is also settled that it is entirely unnecessary that the note should be indorsed in order to pass the title.<sup>33</sup> So a bond may be given without any written assignment.<sup>34</sup> And the delivery of a certificate of deposit on a life insurance company has been held to be effectual, without a written assignment to transfer the deposit itself to the donee, as a gift causa mortis.<sup>35</sup> A deposit in a savings bank may be the subject of a valid gift causa mortis, and such gift may be proved by the delivery of the bank or pass-book to the donee, accompanied by an assignment;<sup>36</sup> or it may be proved by the simple delivery of the pass-book, without any assignment.<sup>37</sup> It has been held that the delivery of a banker's deposit note may be a good gift causa mortis.<sup>38</sup> In Cherry v. Powers, recently decided in the New York Court of Appeals, it was held that the delivery of a cheque upon a savings bank, payable four days after the death of the drawer, together with the pass-book of the depositor, did not amount to a valid gift causa mortis.<sup>39</sup> And in the English case of Hewitt v. Kaye,<sup>40</sup> where a cheque given by the drawer was not presented for payment until after the death of the donor, it was held not to amount to a good donatio mortis causa. But in Reid v. Pearce, where a cheque was drawn by a donor payable to his wife or her order, and was given to him by her shortly before his death, was indorsed by her and paid into a foreign bank against the amount of which she (13) Gass v. Simpson, supra.

(14) Sheldon v. Sutton, 8 Hun. 110.

(15) Wright v. High, 17 Me. 289.

(16) Dig. 39, 6, sec. 3, 4, 5, 6; 2 Kent's Com., 444.

(17) Ward v. Turner, 2 Vesey, 431; Tait v. Gilbert, 2 Vesey, Jr. 111; Dunn v. Marthens, 7 Taunton, 224; Powell v. Hillier, 28 Beavan, 261; Gough v. Tinson, 3 E. L. & Eq. 507; Drury v. Smith, 1 P. W. 404; Reese v. Sonn, 25 Wia. 286; Carpenier v. Dodge, 20 Vt. 595; Frost v. Frost, 38 Vt. 639; Turner v. Brown, 6 Hun. 338; Cox v. Sprigg, 9 Md. 574; Powell v. Leonard, 9 Fla. 359; Cass v. Danston, 9 R. L. 88; Egerton v. Egerton, 1 C. E. Green, 419; Dow v. Gould, & Co., Man. Co., 21 Cal. 629; Smith v. Wiggins, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 221; Singleton v. Cotton, 23 Ga. 261; M'Kenzie v. Downing, 20 Ga. 669; Hatch v. Atkinson, 26 Me. 324; Young v. Young, 20 N. Y. 499; Brown v. Brown, 18 Conn. 414, 417; Phelps v. Hope, 16 Ohio St. 686; Craig v. Craig, 3 Barb. Ch. 76; Champion v. Seaber, 56 How. Pr. 48; Waring v. Edmonds, 11 Md. 424; People v. Johnston, 14 Ill. 343; Withers v. Weaver, 10 Bar. 381.

(18) Drury v. Smith, 1 P. W. 404; Caldwell v. Royfree, 38 Vt. 213; Jones v. Deyer, 16 Ala. 221; M'Gouldy v. Cook, 5 Blackf. 178; Michener v. Dale, 28 Pa. St. 59; Gourley v. Linsanbigler, 51 Pa. St. 345; Wells v. Tucker, 5 Binney, 368; Grymes v. Hons, 49 N. Y. 17; Borneman v. Stalinger, 15 Me. 429, 431; Dole v. Lincoln, 31 Me. 423; Waring v. Edmonds, 11 Md. 424; Gass v. Simpson, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 288.

(19) Marlin v. Funk, 75 N. Y. 184, and the cases there cited.

(20) Dehnote v. Taylor, 1 Ream. 417; Dow v. Gould, & Co., Manuf. Co., 21 Cal. 629; DeLevellain v. Evans, 39 Cal. 120; Higman v. Stewart, 28 Mich. 618, 624; Darland v. Taylor, 52 Iowa, 508.

(21) Gass v. Singleton, 2 Head (Tenn.), 67; DeLevellain v. Evans, 39 Cal. 120; Higman v. Stewart, 28 Mich. 618, 624; Darland v. Taylor, 52 Iowa, 508.

(22) Gass v. Singleton, 2 Head (Tenn.), 67.

(23) Hatch v. Atkinson, 26 Me. 324; Jones v. Deyer, 16 Ala. 221.

(24) Meach v. Meach, 24 Vt. 591; Gilmore v. Whitehead, Dudley (S. C.), 13.

(25) Headley v. Kirby, 19 Pa. St. 226.

(26) Michener v. Dale, 28 Pa. St. 59.

(27) Meach v. Meach, 24 Vt. 591.

(28) Miller v. Miller, 3 P. W. 358; Bradley v. Hunt, 3 Gill & J. 54.

(29) Austin v. Mead, 15 L. R. Ch. Div. 651; Peal v. Peal, 27 Beavan, 202; Rankin v. Wagoner, 1d. 399; Calhoun v. Rawfoss, 28 Vt. 219; M'Connell v. M'Connell, 11 Vt. 290; Turpin v. Thompson, 3 Meic. (Ky.) 421; Brown v. Brown, 18 Conn. 414, 417; Borneman v. Stalinger, 15 Me. 429; Wing v. Merchant, 57 Me. 383; Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. 261; Bates v. Kempton, 7 Gray, 382; Parlor v. Marston, 27 Me. 126; Contant v. Schuyler, 1 Palg. 318; Harrie v. Clark, 2 Barb. 94; a. c. 2 N. Y. 93; Champney v. Blanchard, 39 N. Y. 111.

(30) Blanchard v. Williams, 70 Ill. 647, 652; Porter v. Stone, 14 Pick. 192; Priester v. Priester, Rich. Eq. Can. 96; Brown v. Moore, 3 Head (Tenn.) 671; Raymond v. Bellch, 10 Conn. 494; Smith v. Kirtledge, 21 Vt. 338; Voorhees v. Woodhull, 33 N. J. Law 494, 498; Smith v. Smith, 20 N. J. Eq. 562; Haymore v. Moor, 8 Ohio St. 239; Starr v. Starr, 9 Ohio St. 74; Craig v. Craig, 3 Barb. Ch. 76; Harris v. Clark, 3 N. Y. 98; Dodge v. Pond, 23 N. Y. 69; a. c. 28 Barb. 121.

(31) 2 Kent's Com., 289; Andrews v. Smith, 12 Ves. 22; Pennington v. Gittings, 2 Gill & J. 208.

(32) Brown v. Brown, 18 Conn. 414, 417.

(33) See the cases cited in note 29.

(34) Waring v. Edwards, 11 Md. 424; Welsh v. Sexton, 56 Barb. 261; Duffield v. Elwes, 37 Beavan, 309.

(35) Waterloo v. DeWitt, 36 N. Y. 240.

(36) Kingman v. Perkins, 105 Mass. 111; Poss v. Lowell Five Cents Savings Bank, 111 Mass. 235; Sheedy v. Boach, 124 Mass. 472; Dowd v. Ney, 125 Mass. 600.

(37) Pierce v. Boston Five Cents Savings Bank, 120 Mass. 425; Turner v. Boston, &c., Savings Bank, 15. 425; Hill v. Stevenson, 63 Me. 264; FWingham v. Wheaton, 3 R. I. 588; Camp's Appeal, 26 Conn. 86; Penfield v. Thayer, 3 E. D. Smith, 205.

(38) Amis v. Will, 28 Beavan, 619; Moore v. Moore, L. R. 16 Eq. 474; Brooks v. Brooks, 12 S. C. (N. S.) 424.

(39) 70 N. Y. 212.

(40) L. R., 6 Eq., 198.

drew, the court held it to be a good donatio mortis causa, although the cheque was not presented for payment at the bank on which it was drawn till after the death of the donor.<sup>41</sup> The delivery of a bill of exchange payable to the donor or order, and which did not fall due until after he died, has been held a gift causa mortis.<sup>42</sup>

A distinction, therefore, exists as to cheques, and the principle is, that although the drawer of the cheque may deliver it to the payee, intending thereby to give to the donee the fund on which the cheque was drawn, that, nevertheless, until the cheque has been paid or accepted the gift is incomplete, and that, in the absence of either payment or acceptance, the death of the drawer operates as a revocation of the gift.<sup>43</sup> The rule then, is that personal chattels, bonds or choses in action, may be the subject of disposal as gifts, either inter vivos or causa mortis,<sup>44</sup> but that a donor's own promissory note cannot be so disposed of, and that a cheque which he has drawn and given to the payee, must be either paid or accepted before the donor's death, to make the gift valid and complete. While personal property is thus the subject of gifts causa mortis, as above stated, yet the rule is that the only property which can thus be disposed of, is the balance left after the payment of all debts. Or, in other words, the donee takes the property, subject to the right of the administrator to reclaim it, if required for the payment of the debts of the donor,<sup>45</sup> but not to the claims of legatees.<sup>46</sup> So, by the civil law, such gifts were liable to debts. If the donor was insolvent at the time of his death, this was considered an implied revocation of the gift.<sup>47</sup>

We have stated that delivery is essential to complete a gift causa mortis. It remains, however, to direct attention to what is a sufficient delivery of the property, which is the subject of the gift, to satisfy the requirements of the law upon this branch of the subject. For while the maxim "donatio perfecta possessione accipiuntur" is an ancient one in the law, it has not always been easy to determine what is a sufficient possession of the property to perfect the title of the donee. This question of delivery was elaborately considered and learnedly discussed by Lord Chancellor Hardwicke in Ward v. Turner,<sup>48</sup> in the year 1752. In the course of the opinion announced by the Chancellor, he said: "It is argued that, though some delivery is necessary, yet delivery of the thing is not necessary, but delivery of anything by way of symbol is sufficient; but I cannot agree to that; nor do I find any authority for that in the civil law, which required delivery to some gifts, or in the law of England which required delivery throughout. Where the civil law requires it, they require actual tradition, delivery over of the thing. So in all the cases in this court delivery of the thing given is relied on, and not in the name of the thing." While thus holding that delivery should be actual and not symbolical, he adds that "delivery of the key of bulky goods, where wines, &c., are, has been allowed as delivery of the possession, because it is the way of coming at the possession, or to make use of the thing; and, therefore, the key is not a symbol, which would not do." The point actually decided was, that the delivery of receipts for certain South Sea annuities did not amount to a delivery of the annuities. Subsequently this subject was discussed, and with marked learning, in Tate v. Hilbert,<sup>49</sup> when Lord Loughborough again argued the necessity of actual delivery to the efficacy of gifts of this nature, unless the transfer was perfected by means of a deed or written instrument. He decided that where a person, in his last sickness, gave his cheque on his banker for a sum of money, and died before the cheque was paid, it was not a good gift causa mortis, and, that where the same person, at the same time, gave his own promissory note for a sum of money to another donee, that it was not good as such a gift, inasmuch as it was no transfer of property. It is settled that there must be such a delivery as comports with the nature of the subject matter.<sup>50</sup> The delivery should be secundum subjectum materiam. It should "be the true and effectual way of obtaining the command and dominion of the subject."<sup>51</sup> The rule is well stated in a case decided in Virginia, where it is said: "A delivery is indispensable to the validity of a donatio mortis causa. It must be an actual delivery of the thing itself, as of a watch, or a ring; or of the means of getting the possession and enjoyment of the thing, as of the key of a trunk or a warehouse in which the subject of the gift is deposited; or if the thing be in action of the instrument by using which, the chose is to be reduced into possession, as a bond, or a receipt, or the like."<sup>52</sup> The fact that the property is out of reach of the would-be donor, so that delivery is impossible, is entirely immaterial, the gift cannot be sustained in the absence of a delivery, whether delivery is possible or not.<sup>53</sup> In illustration of the principles discussed, a reference to a few of the cases may not be out of place. In Hatch v. Atkinson,<sup>54</sup> the court held that the delivery of a key of a trunk containing money and government bonds, was not a valid delivery of the money and bonds. "Although delivery of the key of a warehouse, or other place or deposit," said the court, "where cumbersome articles are kept, may constitute a sufficient constructive or symbolical delivery of such articles, it is well settled that delivery of the key of a trunk, chest, or box, in which valuable articles are kept, which are capable of being taken into the hand, and may be delivered by being passed from hand to hand, is not a valid delivery of such articles. The rule is that the delivery must be as perfect and complete as the nature of the articles will admit of. While a constructive delivery may be sufficient for large or cumbersome articles, it will not be sufficient for small articles, capable of a more perfect and complete delivery." In Bunn v. Markham,<sup>55</sup> the would-be donor had certain bonds and notes brought out of his chest and laid on his bed. He then caused them to be sealed up in packages, the amount of the contents written on them, with a statement "for Mrs. C." "for Miss G." This being done, he directed that they should be returned to the chest, that the chest should be locked, the keys sealed up, and the keys to be delivered to one J. after his decease. The gift was invalid for want of delivery. In Powell v. Hellier,<sup>56</sup> the donor told one A. to take the keys of his dressing case and box, containing her watch and trinkets, and immediately on her death to deliver the watch and trinkets to the plaintiff. A. acted accordingly, but it was held that the gift was incomplete for want of delivery. But in Smith v. Smith,<sup>57</sup> it was ruled that the delivery of the key of a room containing furniture was such a delivery of possession of the furniture as to render a gift causa mortis valid. Other cases may be referred to,<sup>58</sup> but those cited plainly illustrate the necessity of delivering the thing itself in all cases when the nature of the thing admits of such a delivery. Upon this question of delivery, and of delivery as distinguished from possession, we quote as follows: "It

(41) L. E. 5 Ch. Div. 730.

(42) Austin v. Mead, L. R. 15 Ch. Div. 681.

(43) Second National Bank v. Williams, 13 Mich. 282; Simmons v. Savings Society, 81 Ohio St. 467.

(44) Blanchard v. Williams, 70 Ill. 647, 652.

(45) Pitman v. Boston Savings Bank, 129 Mass. 425, 433; Mitchell v. Pease, 7 Conn. 250; Chase v. Eddings, 13 Gray, 418; McLean v. Woods, 67 Me. 297; a. c., 65 Me. 411; Gowan v. Tucker, 18 Ala. 27; Barnaman v. Stidinger, 15 Me. 429, 431; Gowan v. Grant, 4 Lana. 298.

(46) Gowan v. Tucker, 88 Ala. 37.

(47) Sanders' Justinian (Hammond's ed.) 219.

(48) 2 Vesey, 431, 443.

(49) 2 Vesey, Jr. 111.

(50) Turner v. Brown, 6 Hun. (N. Y.) 338; Hitch v. Davis, 3 Md. Ch. 266; Brown v. Brown, 18 Conn. 414; Pope v. Randolph, 13 Ala. 214; Carroll v. Collins, 7 S. & M. 438; Blakely v. Blakely, 9 Ala. 391; Hillebrand v. Brewer, 6 Text. 46; Powell v. Leonard, 9 Fla. 359.

(51) 2 Kent's Com., 439.

(52) Miller v. Jeffers, 4 Gratt. 479.

(53) Case v. Dennison, 9 B. L. 8.

(54) 56 Me. 324.

(55) 7 Taunton, 228.

(56) 26 Beavan, 261.

(57) Str. 955.

(58) Jones v. Shelby, Chan. Proc. 300; Ferguson v. Case, 2 Colby, 256; Cooper v. Burr, 45 Barb. 9; Reddel v. Dobree, 10 Sim. 246.

is not the possession of the donee, but the delivery to him by the donor, which is material in a donatio mortis causa; the delivery stands in the place of nuncupation, and must accompany and form a part of the gift; an after-acquired possession of the donee is nothing; and a previous and continuing possession, though by the authority of the donor, is no better. The donee, by being the debtor or bailee or trustee of the donor, in regard to the subject of the gift, stands upon no better footing than if the debt or duty were owing from a third person. A debt or duty cannot be released by mere parole, without consideration; and where there is nothing to surrender by delivery, the only result is, that in such a case, there cannot be a donatio mortis causa; and a release, without valuable consideration therefor, must be by testament, or by some instrument of writing which would be effectual for the purpose inter vivos.<sup>10</sup>

It remains for us to notice that it has been that until death the title to the subject of the gift remains in the donor, and vests in donee only at time of donor's death, having relation back to the time of delivery.<sup>11</sup> Is it not more correct to say that the title passes to the donee at the time of delivery, and that the title thus obtained is defeasible only on the recovery of the donor, or on his express revocation? While a gift inter vivos, having been perfected by delivery is irrevocable,<sup>12</sup> a gift causa mortis may be revoked at any time before the donor's death.<sup>13</sup>—Central Law Journal.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—XX.

(Continued from page 294, ante.)

GENERAL SUMMARY AND CAUTIONS AS TO USE OF THE ACT.

It is believed that it will be a convenience to our readers if we give a summary of this series of articles, and point out briefly the results at which we have arrived. The series commenced with an article in our issue of the 7th Jan. 1882, and has been continued with a few interruptions up the present date. When we quote the Law Times of any date, it must be understood that we are referring to the present year unless it is otherwise stated. It must be also noted that we are speaking in this summary generally, and of ordinary assurances and transactions, and that for the exceptions the reader must look at the articles to which we make reference.

Conditions of Sale, sect. 3.

These may be shortened in reliance on sect. 3, but cannot be dispensed with. See Law Times, Jan. 7, p. 166.

General Words—All Estates Clause, sects. 6, 61.

These may be omitted from almost every description of conveyances of land, in reliance upon sects. 6, 63. See Law Times, Jan. 7, p. 166. We shall not repeat this in our future remarks on various assurances in this summary.

Covenants for Title, sect. 7.

These may be omitted in most conveyances on sale and mortgages of land if the person conveys, and is expressed to convey, "as beneficial owner." The statutory phrase must be used. There are, however, several cases where it is better to insert the usual covenants—e.g., in conveyances of wife's estate, and perhaps in appointments. Considerable adaptation is needed for conveyances by joint tenants, by tenant for life and remainderman, and by trustees with power of sale conveying with consent of tenant for life. The Act may easily be used in conveyances by tenants in common, and in conveyances both to joint tenants and tenants in common: (Law Times, Jan. 7 pp. 166, 167.)

The Act applies to covenants to surrender copyholds (see Law Times, June 10, p. 96), and to assurances of leaseholds: but in the latter case, covenant by purchaser for indemnity against rent and covenants of the lease must be inserted. In marriage settlements, either of land or personalty, it is generally best to insert the ordinary covenant for further assurance. See as to settlements of personalty, Law Times, March 25, p. 365; of land as personalty, Id. April 1, p. 382; of land, the children taking as tenants in tail, Id. April 22, p. 434.

In marriage settlements, however, and other settlements for valuable consideration, either "vendor's covenants" or "settlor's covenants" may, if desired, be implied by using the statutory phrases "as beneficial owner" or "as settlor;" but in voluntary settlements "vendor's covenants" cannot be raised by implication, though "settlor's covenants" may: (Law Times, Jan. 7, p. 167). As to what is a settlement, see Law Times, April 1, p. 382.

This section does not apply to leases at a rent: (subsect. 5).

In conveyances by trustees, mortgagees, &c., they may be expressed to convey as such, and usual covenants against incumbrances may then be omitted: sect. 7 (1) (F).

In bills of sale and mortgages of policies of assurance, it is necessary either to insert usual covenants, or else carefully to supplement the statute: (Law Times, Jan. 21, p. 204; Jan. 28, p. 220.) In mortgages by several persons, if joint and separate covenants are desired, it will be easiest to set them out: (Law Times, Feb. 11 p. 257.) We shall not repeat these remarks.

Completion of Purchase, sect. 56.

Authority to receive purchase money is now unnecessary if vendor's solicitor produces deed and indorsed receipt signed by person entitled to give receipt. Semble, this does not apply to accountants, solicitors' clerks, &c. See Law Times, Jan. 14, p. 185.

Mortgages of Land, sects. 18, 24.

It is best now to exclude leasing powers by mortgagor and his assigns. In legal mortgages of freeholds made by deed, powers of sale, of cutting timber, and of appointing receiver, may usually be omitted; but the statutory power of sale is not quite satisfactory in charges, mortgages for a term, or mortgages of leaseholds by demise. In any case the insurance provisions are incomplete. The sum in which the property is to be insured should be stated; and if it is desired that mortgagor shall insure provision must be made: (Law Times, Jan. 14, p. 185.)

In a mortgage of leaseholds by demise, or freeholds for a term, a covenant by mortgagor to stand possessed of the reversion on trust for the purchaser should be inserted: (Law Times, Jan. 14, p. 185.) As to copyholds, either a distinct charge must be made in the covenant to surrender, or to a power of sale must be inserted: (Law Times, June 10, p. 96.)

Mortgage of Chattels.

Sect. 18 does not apply, but sect. 19 does, so far as it relates to power of sale, insurance, and apparently to appointment of receiver. But if the Act is relied upon considerable supplementary provisions will be necessary. See Law Times, Jan. 21, p. 204.

Mortgage of Policy of Assurance.

This may be shortened by reliance on receipt clause of sect. 22. Statutory power of sale is unsatisfactory. See Law Times, Jan. 28, p. 220.

Mortgage to Joint Tenants.

The Mortgage money should be stated to belong to the mortgagees on a joint account, and then joint account clause may be omitted (sect. 61). The usual declaration that heir of surviving mortgagees shall concur in sale may be omitted in mortgages of freehold

(59) Miller v Jeffress, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 480; and see French v Baymond, 39 Vt. 624.

(60) Case v. Simpson, 4 Quidw. (Irean.) 268.

(61) 2 Kent's Com., 440.

(62) Id., 447.

land of inheritance, as the legal estate will pass by virtue of sect. 80. See Law Times, Jan. 28, p. 221.

Mortgage by Tenants in Common (Partners) of Works.

Exclude leasing powers of mortgagors and their assigns. The power of sale will need modification, especially as to notices. Law Times, Feb. 11, p. 257.

Deeds connected with Mortgages.

Often a further charge may be declared supplemental to the mortgage (sect. 53). If the form in Schedule IV. is used, a clause against redemption of mortgage without payment of fresh advance should be added. The Act encourages second mortgages (sects. 15, 17). Transfers and reconveyances may sometimes be made "supplemental." Covenants for title may be omitted if proper statutory phrases are employed. As to joint account clause in transfer, see above. Law Times, Feb. 11, p. 258.

Statutory Mortgages, sects. 26-29.

These can only be made by deed and with respect to freehold or leasehold land. The deed must be stated to be by way of statutory mortgage, and mortgagor should convey "as mortgagor." Power of leasing given to mortgagor and his assigns by sect. 18 should be excluded. These forms will be convenient for small transactions and family arrangements. The forms are satisfactory for mortgages (1) by one person to another, (2) by several persons to one, (3) by one person to several. The statutory forms of transfer (A) and (C) are satisfactory, and form (B) will usually suffice in practice, though not perfectly satisfactory. These forms are in Part II. of Schedule III. to the Act, and are authorised by sect. 27. The deed must be expressed to be by way of statutory transfer. The statutory form of reconveyance should be altered, as it is very incomplete. These statutory assurances can be made with respect to leaseholds, but a trust of the last three days should be declared in favour of the purchaser from the mortgagee, and other alterations made. Law Times, Feb. 18, pp. 275, 276.

Leases.

Notwithstanding sect. 14, provisions for re-entry on breach or non-performance of covenant should be inserted as usual. The only safe way to avoid operation of the section is to grant merely tenancy at will. Sometimes it will be well to specify penalty on breach of covenant. Other plans of avoiding the section may be suggested. In action for re-entry or forfeiture on breach, the giving of precedent notice required by sect. 14 (1), should now be alleged in the statement of claim, and it should be stated that the notice was in writing (sect. 67).

The law as to specific performance of agreement to grant a lease is probably altered by this section. It will seldom now be necessary to insert in a lease-provisions protecting lessee from the exercise of power of re-entry without notice. The law as to leases by a mortgagor is considerably altered by section 18. It will sometimes be convenient, by agreement in writing, sect. 18 (16), to extend the powers of sect. 18 to mortgagors who hold subject to securities made before the Act. If the security was by deed it will be prudent to make this agreement under seal. In leases the covenant for quiet enjoyment should be inserted as usual. See Law Times, Feb. 25, pp. 292, 295.

It will sometimes be prudent for an intending lessee to stipulate that lessor shall show title. Law Times, March 4, p. 312.

When a guardian grants lease of infant's land (see sect. 41 and Settled Estates Act, 1877, ss. 46, 49), he should get the infant to join if he is old enough, and should carefully limit his own covenant for quiet enjoyment. When the lessee is likely to spend a considerable sum on the land it will be best to apply to the court to authorise the lease.

For remarks on leases to companies, mining, and other licences, and for explanation of the apportionment sections (10-12), see Law Times, March 4, p. 311.

Notwithstanding sects. 10, 11, 58, if the conveyance wishes covenants to bind the assigns, or impose any obligation upon them, the assigns should be mentioned in all cases where their mention was previously necessary.

In leases for lives the word "heirs" should be retained in the limitation of the estate and also lessor's covenant for quiet enjoyment should be inserted, sect. 7 (3).

Conveyances at a Fee Farm Rent.

For explanation of "fee farm," see Law Times (ubi sup.). Add to the cases there cited, London and South-Western Railway v. Gomm (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 449). The provisions of sect. 14 apply (sub-sect. 8). The powers of distress and entry for securing the rentcharge may be omitted (sect. 44). If covenants for title by vendor are omitted, and he conveys as "beneficial owner," some words should be added to exclude the rentcharge and remedies from the scope of his covenant. Covenants by purchaser must be inserted as usual: (Law Times, March 4, p. 311.)

Settlements of Personality.

Maintenance and accumulation clauses may be omitted where the infants are to become entitled at twenty-one, or on occurrence of any event before twenty-one: (sect. 43.) Where the infants become entitled at some age exceeding twenty-one both maintenance and accumulation clauses must be added. The power does not authorise application of capital for maintenance: (Law Times, March 11, p. 328.) Power to appoint new trustees may be shortened (sect. 31). Power should simply be given to husband and wife to appoint the new trustees, and the trustees should be indemnified for lending on leasehold securities without production of lessor's title, and for lending with less than a marketable title: (Law Times, March 11, p. 329, where a form is given.) Trustees' receipt clause may be omitted (sect. 28), except in cases where the trust funds may be realised by anticipation. It is needless to give trustees any power to compound debts, &c. (sect. 37). Sometimes it may be well partially to exclude this section: (Law Times, March 18, p. 348, where a form is given). If it is wished to give the trustees power to settle questions among the beneficiaries, power must be expressly given. The Law Times, March 25, contains a discussion on covenants for title in these settlements. We advise usually that the settlor should simply covenant for further assurance. In a settlement of policy of assurance usual covenants as to keeping up policy, &c., must be inserted. If the policy is effected in the name of the trustees no covenants for title will be needed. If it is effected in settlor's name, covenant for further assurance should be inserted. If higher covenant is desired, he should convey as "beneficial owner." An additional covenant should be added to the effect that he will enable the trustees to recover the money secured. In a settlement of mortgage debt the settlor should convey "as mortgagee," and also give covenant for further assurance: (Law Times, March 25, p. 365.)

Settlement of Land as Personality.

This will be effected by two deeds, viz., conveyance upon trust for sale, and declaration of trusts of proceeds of sale. From the former omit maintenance and accumulation clauses, and shorten trustee clauses as above. In the latter give the trust for sale to the trustees, and state with what consents (if any) it is to be exercised, then sects. 85, 86 render it needless to insert the old lengthy trust for sale. Omit receipt clause (sect. 80). Insert trusts of proceeds and power of leasing as usual, and usual covenant for further assurance: (Law Times, April 1, page 392.) For effect of covenants for further assurance and for liabilities of trustees in connexion therewith, see Law Times, March 25, p. 365, and April 1, p. 362.

(To be continued.)

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.—The number of Acts passed this Session is 73, of which 16 are public and 57 local.

ADMISSION OF SOLICITORS.

The following gentlemen have been admitted Solicitors of the Court of Judicature:—Messrs. Patrick A. Chance, Edward J. M'Ardule, William H. Hancock, James Clarke, Paul A. Brown, Thomas H. Risk, Gerard Acheeson Bond.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Addison on Torts (5th Edition), by Cave, 93.

A cab proprietor letting his cab to a driver at weekly hire, the driver providing horse and harness, held not a master so as to be responsible for the driver's negligence (King v. Spurr, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 105).

Order XXXI, Rule 12.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 193.

The defendant held entitled to stay until the ship's papers were produced by the plaintiff and all interested, as before the Judicature Acts. (China Trans-Pacific Steamship Company v. Commercial Union Insurance Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 132)—C. A.

Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), s. 2.

Succession duty is payable on the whole value of a fund settled on A. for four years, if he should so long live, and, on the expiration of the four years or his death, to A.'s niece, A. having died before the four years expired (Attorney-General v. Noyes, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 135)—C. A.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NORA BARRA.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. Peter O'Brien, Q.C., has been appointed Junior Crown Prosecutor at the Commission of Oyer and Terminer.

Mr. William Sullivan, Barrister-at-law, has been appointed Registrar to the Hon. Mr. Justice O'Brien.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Nineteenth Century. A Monthly Review, Edited by JAMES KNOWLES. No. 65. July, 1882. London: C. Kegan Paul & Co.

Cassell's History of England from the earliest period to the present time. With about 2,000 Illustrations. Part 82. London, Paris, and New York: Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.

Milton's Paradise Lost. Illustrated by Gustave Doré. Edited, with Notes and a Life of Milton, by the late ROBERT VAUGHAN, D.D. London: Cassell, Petter, Galpin, & Co.

Little Folks. New Series. Part 91. July, 1882. London: Cassell, Petter, Galpin, & Co.

"LITTLE FOLKS."—We hear their Royal Highnesses the Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud, of Wales have enrolled themselves as Members of the Humane Society established in connexion with Little Folks. The July Part of this Magazine, in addition to the names of their Royal Highnesses, contains the names and addresses of between four and five thousand new Officers and Members. The Little Folks Humane Society, which was inaugurated at the commencement of the present year, now numbers nearly twelve thousand Officers and Members, and a large number of children are daily joining its ranks.

LORD FITZGERALD.—On the 27th ult., Baron Fitzgerald, of Kilmarnock, in the Co. Dublin, took the oath and his seat in the House of Lords.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

UNIVERSITY INTELLIGENCE.

TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN.

Examination for Degree of Doctor in Laws, held 19th and 20th June, 1882:—M'Arthur, William; Ponnott, H. M.; Woolcombe, R. L.; Wood, James; Seddall, Henry; Kane, R. R.; Broughton, Thomas; Moxley, Stephen.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

SOLICITORS' APPRENTICES.

NOTICE.

The SESSIONAL EXAMINATION will be held on Friday, the 30th of June instant, and Saturday, the 1st of July next, from 9 30 A.M. to 12 30 P.M. and from 1 P.M. to 4 P.M. on each day. Candidates desiring to be examined will have to enter their Names at the Secretary's Office, Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, not later than Tuesday, the 27th day of June instant, in order that the necessary arrangements may be made.

Candidates whose names begin with letters from A to F (inclusive), will be examined at 9 30 A.M. on Friday, the 30th of June instant.

Those whose names begin with letters F to K (inclusive) will be examined at 1 o'clock P.M. on the same day.

Those whose names begin with letters from K to P (inclusive), will be examined at 9 30 A.M. on Saturday, the 1st of July next.

The remaining Candidates at 1 o'clock P.M. on the same day.

Apprentices are requested to take notice that the Sessional Examination held at the end of the month of June, or the beginning of July, is the Examination held after each Course of Lectures under the 25th Rule of the Society, and that no Apprentice can be examined at any other time unless he has been hindered from attending at the regular Examination by illness, or some similar unforeseen mischance, to be proved to the satisfaction of the Council.

By Order,

WILLIAM HICKSON,
Professor.

Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts,
Dublin, 21st June, 1882.

SOLICITORS' APPRENTICES DEBATING SOCIETY.

At a general meeting of the above society, held on June 15th, the following gentlemen were elected to hold office for the coming session (1882-3):—

Vice-Presidents—Mr. T. E. Nelson, M.A., and Mr. H. Devereux; Auditor—Mr. H. C. Weir, LL.B.; Treasurer—Mr. J. P. Murphy; Secretary—Mr. M. P. Bannin.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—N. Ware, appoint guardian.—H. T. Rathborne, dismiss petition.—M. Quane, allocate.—A. Henkell, payment.

IN COURT.—G. H. Mayes, liberty to bid.—G. A. Bell, to be mentioned.—J. Spencer, do.—J. Graham, do.—Anderson, do.

Before EXAMINERS (Mr. Kennedy).

R. Chadwick, rental.

TUESDAY.

In COURT.—J. W. Garvey, final schedule.—Rev. J. Bradshaw, receiver.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

P. HANLY - - - - - 1 lot.
H. FITZGERALD - - - - - 3 lots.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

W. R. O'Byrne, rental.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

G. J. Kernan, rental.—Executors M. M'Namara, objection.—E. Turner, rental.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

- Allman, Daniel, of 8 Upper Sackville-street, in the city of Dublin, hosier. June 14; Tuesday, July 11, and Friday, July 28. D. & T. Fitzgerald, solr.
- Angel, Catherine, late of Golden-bridge, Richmond, in the county of Dublin, messwoman, but now of No. 78 Manor-street, in the city of Dublin, widow. June 9; Tuesday, July 11, and Friday, July 28. John T. O'Dowda, solr.
- Culhane, Maurice, of Ballincolly, in the county of Limerick, farmer. June 18; Friday, July 14, and Tuesday, August 1. R. Davoren, solr.
- Frewen, Thomas, of Boesborough, Tipperary, in the county of Tipperary, farmer. June 18; Friday July 14, and Tuesday, August 1. Jehu Mathews, solr.
- Grier, James E., late of Chelmsford-road, in the county of Dublin, esquire, now of Haytesbury-street, in the city of Dublin. June 6; Tuesday, July 4, and Friday, July 21. J. Ross Byrne, solr.
- Loughran, James, of No. 7 Lower Bridge-street, in the city of Dublin, hardware merchant. June 14; Friday, July 14, and Tuesday, August 1. John L. & W. Scallan, solrs.
- M'Kee, Eliza, of Latmaoollin, in the county of Armagh, spinster. June 18; Friday, July 14, and Tuesday, August 1. John L. & W. Scallan, solrs.
- O'Brien, Patrick, of No. 6 City-quay, in the city of Dublin, vintner. June 18; Tuesday, July 11, and Friday, July 28. F. Kennedy & H. S. Butler, solrs.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES. AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

- DAVIS—June 26, at Sydenham-road, Dundrum, the wife of James Davis, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.
- HORGAN—June 18, at The Laurels, Mardyke Walk, County Cork, the wife of M. J. Horgan, Esq., solicitor and county coroner, of a son.
- KELLER—June 26, at Grenape House, Kanturk, County Cork, the wife of Nicholas W. Keller, Esq., solicitor, of a son.
- SAMUELS—June 29, the wife of Arthur Warren Samuels, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a daughter.
- SEEDS—June 27, at Rutland-square, West, Dublin, the wife of Robert Seeds, Esq., Q.C., of a son (prematurely).

MARRIAGES.

FLEMING and KACKINNON—June 21, at St. Luke's Parish Church, Edinburgh, by the Rev. Ronald Macpherson, William Fleming, Esq., solicitor, Berkeley-street, Dublin, to Margaret Anne, widow of the late Captain Donald Mackinnon, and daughter of the late William Murray, Esq., of Glasgow.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	J U N E
	Sat. 24	Mon. 26	Tues. 27	Wed. 28	Thur. 29	Fri. 30
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols .. ..	99½	—	99½	99½	99½	—
— 3 p c Reduced .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— New 3 p c Stock .. ..	99	98½	99-1	98½	99-1	99
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1888 } Traffic at .. ..	—	103½	—	103½	103½	—
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. .. ..	—	—	—	100	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland .. ..	314½	—	314½	314½	314½	314½
35 Hibernian Banking Co .. ..	—	—	—	—	31	—
20 London and County (Ld'd) .. ..	—	74½	—	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and W'minster, W'd .. ..	—	—	—	69½	—	69½
10 Do. New .. ..	—	—	—	—	59	—
3½ Munster Bank (Limited) .. ..	—	—	—	7	—	7½
10 National Bank (Limited) .. ..	—	—	—	23½	23½	—
10 Royal Bank .. ..	—	29	—	—	—	—
25 Standard of B. S. A., N'd .. ..	—	—	—	56½	—	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin .. ..	—	100	—	—	—	—
50 Dublin and Glasgow .. ..	11½	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	5½
Mines.
4½ Berehaven (Limited) .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
1 Killaloe Slate Co. (Ld'd) .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (Ld'd) .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
2½ Wicklow Copper .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons. Gas .. ..	—	—	—	15½	15½	—
8 Do. do. New .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co. Limited .. ..	—	—	—	6	—	6
20 G. Dub. Brewery Co. (Lim.) .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
8 Gosling &amp; Co. Limited .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Grand Canal .. ..	—	—	—	—	45-1	—
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 National Discount, Irel., Ld'd .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 National Assurance .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance .. ..	—	—	—	10	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways .. ..	—	—	—	10½	10½	—
10 Edinburgh Street Trams .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 L'pl Un'd'd Tram &amp; Bus L'd .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	12½
Railways.
100 Dublin, Wicklow, &amp; W'ford .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western .. ..	—	—	—	112½	112½	112½
100 Midland Gt. Western .. ..	—	—	—	88½	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 D., W., &amp; W., 5 p c (1860) .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. N'rh'n (Irish) 6½ d 4 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 8½ p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Waterf'd &amp; Limerick, 4 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Do., new red, 5 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Debtent. Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; Miln's Co., 4 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— O'Leary and Larne 4 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c .. ..	—	—	—	109½	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 5 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	131	131
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4½ p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Kilkenny Junction, 4, 5 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c .. ..	—	106	106	106	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. ..	—	—	—	109½	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. ..	—	—	—	114	—	—
— Waterford &amp; Central 5 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterf'd &amp; Limerick 4 p c .. ..	—	104½	104½	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debtent.
Dub. &amp; Glas. S. P. Co. (1867) 5 p c .. ..	100½	—	—	—	—	—
Pipe Water Old, £29 6s. 3d. .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Do. New, £100. .. ..	99½	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—6 per cent., 30th January, 1882.
Of Deposit—3 per cent., 30th January, 1882.

Name Days—July 19th and 27th, 1882.
Account Days—July 18th and 23rd, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Counsel for the delicate.—Those to whom the changeable temperature is a protracted period of trial should seek the earliest opportunity of removing all obstacles to good health. This cooling Ointment perseveringly rubbed upon the skin, is the most reliable remedy for overcooming all diseases of the throat and chest. Quinsy, relaxed tonsils, sore throat, swollen glands, ordinary catarrh, and bronchitis, usually prevailing at this season, may be arrested as soon as discovered, and every symptom banished by Holloway's simple and effective treatment. This Ointment and Pills are highly commended for the facility with which they successfully contend with influenza; they slay in an incredibly short time the distressing fever and teasing cough.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

D. W. CARROLL,
 44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
 Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTEPAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
 Direct in every instance from the Makers
 They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.
 His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
 Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-
 randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
 With every article connected with Stationery,
 Are Sold much under usual charges.
 Prime Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
 Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge. 72

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK.
 Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
 Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.
 The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.
 The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.
 Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.
 A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO
 GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no
 rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
 FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
 A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane. 63

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A.
 PEARCE, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

LITERARY AND GENERAL SALE ROOMS,
 No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.
J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),
 Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees,
 Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Gessane, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.
 Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.
 91

LIVERPOOL.
PRIVATE ENQUIRIES AND INVESTIGATIONS
 CONDUCTED BY
MR. THOMAS DEANE,
 17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange).
 Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.
 Efficient Staff.
 MODERATE CHARGES.
 References.
 ESTABLISHED 1878. 167

STOKES BROTHERS,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
 LONDON and LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
 22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
 DUBLIN. 298

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.
CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
 73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
 are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
 Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

Printed and Published by the Proprietor, JOHN FALCONER, every Saturday, at 53, Upper Sackville-street, in the Parish of St. Thomas and City of Dublin.—Saturday, July 1, 1882.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

THE CHROMOGRAPH.
 INSTANTANEOUS REPRODUCTION
 OF
 MANUSCRIPTS, DOCUMENTS, PLANS, &c., &c.

Plans and Designs in various Colours obtained by One Single Operation.

The Chromograph is used WITHOUT either PRESS, INKING, or STREPP-
 ING, and with ANY DESCRIPTION OF PAPER.
 From eight to ten minutes suffice to obtain 40 to 50 copies.
 To take off the writing from the composition, it is sufficient to wash the apparatus with a soft sponge in clear water IMMEDIATELY after having taken the last impression.

PRICES OF CHROMOGRAPHS.

No. 1. Octavo Boxes, with a Bottle of Ink, ..	10/-
" 2. Quarto " " " " " " " " " " " "	18/-
" 3. Foolscap " " " " " " " " " " " "	25/-
" 4. Folio " " " " " " " " " " " "	34/-
Extra Bottles of Ink, 1/- per Bottle.
Composition, 8/- per lb.

TERMS:—CASH WITH ORDER.

GERRARD BROTHERS,
 37 STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 59

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS.

(Royal Route via Crinan and Caledonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Lochawe, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Stornoway, &c.
 Official Guide, 2d.; Illustrated, 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Fares free, at CARSON BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post
 from the owner, DAVID MACBRAYNE, 119 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

WANTED.—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old
 Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE

PERMANENT

BUILDING SOCIETY,

52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKEE, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 2½ per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.
 Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired, not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:—
The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgage.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary,
 52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10 TO £1,000
 IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days.
 Two UNSINKING RULES for success, in Explanatory
 Book, sent free.
 Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham
 House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT
 CO. LIMITED.

SECURITY, &c.

RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—

39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 51

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, JULY 8, 1882.

No. 806

RAILWAY CARRIERS, AND THE CONTAGIOUS DISEASES (ANIMALS) ACT, 1878.—III.

Lynch v. The Midland Railway Co. came before May, C.J., and Barry, J., on demurrer by the defendants to certain replies pleaded by the plaintiff to defences of the defendants. The statement of claim (paragraph 1) alleged that the defendants were carriers of cattle for hire from Dublin and Drogheda to Lynn and March, in England. The 2nd paragraph alleged that the plaintiff delivered to the defendants, as such carriers, 45 head of the cattle to be by the defendants carried from Dublin to March, with all due and reasonable speed, and at March to be delivered for the plaintiff within a reasonable time. The 3rd paragraph alleged that at Liverpool it was agreed between the plaintiff and defendants that the defendants would carry 20 of the said 45 head of cattle to Lynn, instead of March, and there deliver them within a reasonable time. By the 4th paragraph it was stated that the defendants did not deliver the said 20 cattle at Lynn within a reasonable time, but delayed and detained them in trucks and waggons after their arrival at Lynn for a long and unreasonable time, whereby the cattle were injured, and the plaintiff put to expense in feeding them, and so forth. By the 5th paragraph it was alleged that the defendants did not deliver the 25 head of cattle destined for March within a reasonable time, but, on the contrary, delayed them for a long time in trucks and waggons on the journey between Liverpool and March, whereby they were injured, and deteriorated in value. The 14th paragraph of the defence, pleaded to the 4th paragraph of the statement of claim, alleged that the defendants were always ready and willing to deliver the 20 head of cattle at Lynn within a reasonable time, but were prevented from so doing by the causes thereafter mentioned. The defendants then referred to the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1878, and stated in substance that by an order of the Privy Council, made in pursuance of that Act, the county of Norfolk, in which Lynn is situate, was declared to be an area infected with foot and mouth disease; and that under the 4th schedule of the said Act and the orders of the Privy Council of Jan. 3, 26, 1881, it became unsafe to move the said cattle from the trucks in which the same had arrived at Lynn except by a licence of the Local Authority, granted on conditions prescribed by the orders in Council; and the defendants said that no such licence was forthcoming when the said cattle arrived at Lynn. The Local Authority of and for the county of Norfolk refused to allow the cattle to be, and prevented the same from being, moved out of the said trucks unless and until such licence as aforesaid was obtained and produced to their proper officer, and the defendants said that such licence was afterwards obtained and produced to the said officer, whereupon the Local Authority permitted the said cattle to be removed from the said trucks, and the defendants thereupon forthwith removed the same and delivered them to the plaintiff. The 15th paragraph of the defence, pleaded to the 5th paragraph of the claim, referred to the same sanitary Act and orders in Council. It stated that the defendants carried the said cattle with due and reasonable speed as far as the town of Peterborough, which is on the borders of the county of Norfolk, and that it was unlawful to move or carry the said cattle from the said town of Peterborough unto the said town of March without a licence of the Local Authority of the said county of Norfolk, and that previous to the arrival of the said cattle at Peterborough the plaintiff had not obtained such licence, nor was any such licence given, and by reason of the premises it became unlawful to carry the cattle further on the said journey, and the cattle were prevented from being so carried for a time, and did remain at Peterborough for a time. To the 14th paragraph of the defence the plaintiff replied to the following effect, viz.—that one of the conditions prescribed by the Privy Council upon which the said licence would be granted was, that the owner of the cattle would make and sign a declaration, as in the schedule to the order set forth, and the plaintiff, as the owner of the said cattle, made and signed the said declaration, and at the request of the defendants, and before the said cattle were despatched from Liverpool on the way to Lynn, delivered the said declaration to the defendants, but the defendants did not forward the said declaration to Lynn with the said cattle, so as to have the same forthcoming when the said cattle arrived at Lynn or March, but, on the contrary, negligently made default in so doing; that the Local Authority at Lynn was always ready and willing to grant the said licence upon the production by the defendants of the said declaration, and the refusal of the Local Authority to allow the said cattle to be removed from the said waggons was occasioned by the neglect and default of the defendants in not producing the declaration to the said Local Authority. To the 15th paragraph of the defence the plaintiff replied to the effect that the licence there referred to was obtainable from the proper Local Authority on the arrival of the cattle at Peterborough by the production to the said Local Authority of a declaration in writing made by the plaintiff and delivered by him to the defendants before the departure of the said cattle from Liverpool, and which declaration the defendants negligently and improperly omitted to produce to the said Local Authority, by reason whereof a licence for the removal of the cattle from Peterborough could not for a long time be obtained, and the delay in the 15th paragraph mentioned was occasioned thereby. To those replies the defendants demurred, on the ground that they did not disclose any contract or obligation upon the part of the defendants to forward the declaration to the Local Authority.

Did any obligation rest on the defendants, by any contract express or implied, existing between them and the plaintiff, or by reason of any duty imposed on them and arising out of the facts alleged, to procure the licences necessitated by the Act and Orders? This appeared to the court to be the substantial question arising on the pleadings, and was determined in the negative, the demurrer being allowed accordingly. The reasoning by which May, C.J., arrived at this conclusion was as follows: On the pleadings there was no allegation that the declaration was delivered by the plaintiff to the defendants to be delivered by them to the Local Authority; nor even that they were informed of its nature and object, or were aware of the necessity for its production. No facts were, therefore, stated from which such a contract could be implied, and no express contract having been alleged, it only remained to consider whether a duty otherwise rested on the defendants. They were sued simply in their capacity as common carriers; and the limit of their duty, as such, was to carry the animals safely and deliver them within a reasonable time. No additional duty rested on them, as such, owing to the exceptional fact of the place of destination being within an infected area. It is true that, if an absolute contract to do a certain act is entered into, the promisor is not discharged from his obligation by the supervention of circumstances rendering performance difficult or even impossible. But this principle did not here apply. The contract was not to carry and deliver at any specified time, but within a reasonable time; and whether they were so conveyed and delivered would depend on all the circumstances [see 14 Ir. L. T. 255]. They would not be responsible for delay occasioned by the regulations imposed or springing out of the Act and Orders, especially where these were known to the plaintiff; nor could the plaintiff be heard to complain of delay occasioned by the absence of the proper licence. The obligation to take the proper steps to procure the licence, rested, in the opinion of the Lord Chief Justice, not on the defendants but on the plaintiff, who was the owner of the cattle, and was aware that it was necessary, and had the power to take the proper steps to procure it. Barry, J., concurred in holding the replies bad; and with reference to the defence, he said:—"We were much pressed with an argument that the statement of defence admits an absolute and unconditional contract to carry and deliver within a reasonable time, and admits a breach of that contract; and that the defendants cannot rely on the want of the licence as they had not made it an express condition of the contract that the plaintiff should obtain the licence. This argument might, and most probably would have prevailed under the former system of pleading; but, I think, under the existing system we may interpret the defence in a more liberal spirit. And it seems to me that the fair result of the pleading may be held to be:—'True it is, there was a delay in the delivery of the cattle, but we, the defendants, did everything in due performance of our contract as carriers; we carried, and were ready and willing to deliver within a reasonable time, and the delay was solely caused by you (the plaintiff), failing to obtain the licence necessary by law for enabling you to take delivery of the cattle.' On this construction, I think the defence is a good one, though vaguely pleaded."

Without at present commenting on that decision (as it is now under appeal), we shall conclude by referring to another very recent case in reference to impossible performance, which we find in the Reporter (Amer.) of the 14th ult.: Pennsylvania Ry. Co., app. v. Reichert, resp. It there appeared that in 1879 the appellee was the owner of a lot of ground in the city of Cumberland, occupied by him as a coal dealer, upon which there was erected a trestle connected by a switch with the Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railroad, by which he received supplies of coal for his customers. The appellant, requiring to have a right of way across the lot for its railroad, caused proceedings for condemnation to be instituted, under which a part of the lot was condemned for the use of the appellant. In constructing the road of the appellant it was necessary to remove the trestle of the appellee. The inquisition returned by the jury awarded to the appellee the sum of $600 as damages. It was also provided that the company should construct for Reichert a trestle as therein described, and should not charge more than one per cent per ton for hauling coal, &c.; and for non-compliance the sum of $1,500 was awarded to Reichert as damages. The inquisition was ratified by the consent and agreement of the parties. The appellant having failed to perform, the present suit was instituted, and resulted in a verdict for $1,200 in favour of the appellee. Bartol, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal of Maryland, said: "By the terms of the inquisition the appellant was bound to construct the trestle as located on the plat, a part thereof being located on the land of appellee; his consenting to the terms of the inquisition imposed an obligation upon him to permit the other party to enter upon his land for that purpose; a general averment of performance of everything on his part to be done implies that he consented to such entry on his land. If, on the contrary, he had withheld his assent, or prevented the appellant from performing the contract on its part, that was matter which the appellant might have pleaded in defence. The third and fifth pleas were ruled bad on demurrer. The former alleges as an excuse for the failure of the appellant to connect the switch or trestle of the plaintiff with the Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railroad, that the said railroad company refused to permit the appellant to make such connexion, although the appellant has ever since, with reasonable diligence, endeavoured to effect such connexion. And the fifth plea alleges that 'the plaintiff failed to obtain the permission of the Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railroad Company to have its tracks connected with said trestle, though the defendant requested him so to do.' According to the true construction of the contract, the duty of obtaining the assent of the Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railroad Company to the proposed connexion with its road did not rest upon the appellee, but was assumed by the appellant, and therefore the demurrer to the fifth plea was well sustained. The appellant having, by agreeing to the terms of the inquisition, undertaken unconditionally to make the connexion for the appellee with the Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railroad, cannot be excused by reason of the refusal of that company to permit such connexion. 'If the thing promised be possible in itself, it is no excuse that the promisor became unable to perform it by causes beyond his own control, for it was his own fault to run the risk of undertaking unconditionally to fulfil a promise, when he might have guarded himself by the terms of his contract': Benjamin on Sales, s. 570 (3d. Am. ed.); Kribs v. Jones, 44 Md. 406. There was no error in sustaining the demurrer to the third plea."

"LAW JOURNAL REPORTS" FOR JULY.

The monthly number of the Law Journal Reports for July contains pages 521 to 584 of the Chancery Division, pages 369 to 432 of the Queen's Bench Division, pages 41 to 56 of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, and Chapters 1 to 14 of the Statutes of the Realm. In all, forty-seven cases are reported, of which twenty-five are from the Chancery Division, seventeen from the Queen's Bench Division, and five from the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division.

Of the Chancery cases, Ex parte Russell, in re Butterworth, decides that a post nuptial settlement made by a certain baker, on his adding the business of a grocer to his trade, was void against creditors. In the case of In re The Exchange Company Vice-Chancellor Bacon decided that the Statute of Limitation did not bar a claim against directors for dividends paid out of capital; nor could they set off money due to them severally from the company against their joint debt. In The London and South Western Railway Company v. Gomm, the company sold a piece of land, subject to a covenant by the purchaser and his assigns to reconvey. The purchaser sold to the defendant, with notice; but the covenant was held to create a void interest in the land. In Curtis v. Sheffield, an unsuccessful attempt was made to revive an action for the purpose of appealing against an order made forty-six years ago. In the case of In re Walton, ex parte Walton, a standing rule of a County Court to appoint the high bailiff receiver and manager in bankruptcy was held ultra vires. Seddon v. The Bank of Bolton is a case of ancient lights, in which the plaintiff failed to shift the burden of proof of obstruction on to the defendant. In Cooper v. Crabtree the Court of Appeal held that a reversioner on a weekly tenancy could not maintain an action for placing a hoarding on the demised property. In The Corporation of Sunderland v. Alcock paving expenses were enforced as "a charge on the premises," although the owner was not owner at the time of the works, and the summary remedies against the then owner had not been enforced. In Hodges v. Hodges payment was ordered, under section 39 of the Conveyancing Act, of the debts of a married woman past child-bearing out of realty represented by a fund in Court to which she was entitled in default of children. In Glen v. Gregg it was held that an action on the trusts of a building for religious worship cannot be commenced with the sanction of the Charity Commissioners under section 17 of the Act, in spite of the exception in section 62. In Clare v. Clare it was held by Vice-Chancellor Hall that a defaulting trustee, retained as party in an action, is entitled to his costs incurred after his bankruptcy, although the bankruptcy does not discharge him. In Biggs v. Peacock—a partition action—a sale was refused on the ground of want of jurisdiction, as it would interfere with the discretion of trustees. In Ex parte Hall, in re Cooper, pressure put on a debtor about to become bankrupt did not cure an otherwise fraudulent preference. In re Dickinson, ex parte Rosenthal, it was held that the deposit required before an appeal from a County Court in bankruptcy must be made within the twenty-one days limited for the appeal. In the case of In re Maggi, Winehouse v. Winehouse, it was held that the application to administrations of the bankruptcy rules by the Judicature Act does not affect creditors inter se. In Prampton v. Stephens it was held by Mr. Justice Fry that dower was barred by a decree of divorce obtained by the wife. In the case of In re The German Dale Coffee Company that company was ordered to be wound up, on the application of a minority of shareholders, as its primary object had been defeated through failure to obtain a German patent. In Loosemore v. The Tiverton and North Devon Railway Company it was held that where a railway company had given notice to take land, its right to the land was not defeated by the expiration of its compulsory powers. In Fraser v. Cooper, Hall, & Co., where the plaintiffs sued as representing a class except the defendant, another defendant was added to represent others of the class dissenting from the plaintiffs. In Worsley v. Swann an injunction to restrain the building of a circus was refused against persons who had covenanted to use the premises as a private dwelling-house only. In Wallis v. Smith the creditors of the plaintiff in the action, who had obtained a garnishee order, were, after judgment, made parties to it, on the ground that a devolution of estate had taken place. In the case of In re Harwood an order was made under the Trustee Extension Act, vesting the right to transfer stock in a person in whose name it stood jointly with an infant beneficially entitled. In the case of The Albion Assurance Society an application to put non-registered assignees of a participating policy on the list of contributories of the company was refused by Mr. Justice Fry, on the ground that the directors had power to require evidence of assignment, and had not done so. In Ex parte The Rector of Kirkstow Vice-Chancellor Hall declined to allow a rent-charge on a glebe to be satisfied out of money paid into Court under the Lands Clauses Act in respect of the purchase of the glebe by a railway company. In Cripps v. Wood—an action by second mortgagees against subsequent incumbrancers and the mortgagor's trustee in liquidation, there being evidence that the sale of the property would leave a very small margin for the subsequent incumbrancers, only one of whom appeared—one time certain was fixed for all the defendants to redeem or be foreclosed.

Of the Queen's Bench cases, it is decided by the Court of Appeal, in Neilson v. James, that when a shareholder employs a broker to sell shares, and the broker enters into a contract incomplete under 30 Vict., c. 29, the broker is liable for the price, but the shareholder cannot recover for calls paid on the winding up of the company. In Turner v. Bridgett the Court of Appeal decide that when a judge at chambers refers an interpleader summons to the Court, and the Court gives judgment and makes an order thereon without directing an issue, that order is final, and no appeal can be brought from that judgment. In Scott v. Sampson Mr. Justice Mathew and Mr. Justice Cave decide that, in an action of libel, general evidence of the plaintiff's character may be given in mitigation of damages, but not particular facts proved. In Percival v. Hughes the Court of Appeal, subject to the dissent of Lord Justice Holker, held a householder liable to his adjoining neighbour when the contractor had negligently and without authority cut into the party wall. In The Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, London, and China v. The Netherlands India Steam Navigation Company, Limited, Baron Pollock held that the clause in a bill of lading excepting "loss and damage from collision" does not apply to a collision with another of the defendant's ships, that ship being mainly to blame. In Weston v. The Metropolitan Asylums District, a landlord reserving an additional rent if an offensive trade were carried on, and also a right of re-entry, was held by the Court of Appeal entitled to re-enter. In Suffell v. The Bank of England the Court of Appeal held that the alteration of a number on a bank note avoids the instrument. In Lumden v. Winter it was held that a plaintiff not delivering his reply in time exposes himself to a motion for judgment on admissions under Order XL., Rule 11. In Norden v. Defries a shorthand note taken by the plaintiff, in an issue in which he was defendant, was held privileged on the ground that it was taken for the purposes of the action. In Gordon v. Jennings the secretary of a tramways company was held not a "servant, labourer, or workman" whose wages cannot be attached under the Act of 1870. In Regina v. Gans it was held that the clause in an extradition treaty excluding the surrender of the subjects of the surrendering Government does not help the subjects of a third Government. In the arbitration between Walker v. Brown it was held that "costs of the reference" in a submission included the costs of the award. In Synde v. Gould it was held that a motion by a sheriff for an attachment against a person who had removed goods from his hands must be by notice. In Durrant v. Ricketts a personal judgment against a married woman, obtained under Order XIV., was set aside, and a judgment for an inquiry as to separate property substituted. In The Whitecross Wire and Iron Company v. Savill it was held that pouring water into a ship to extinguish a fire in the hold, is a general average act, which entitles the owner of cargo which has been damaged by the water to contribution.

In the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, in Gandy v. Gandy the Court of Appeal decide that the adultery of the husband is of itself no ground for setting aside a separation deed, by which the wife undertakes not to compel alimony except as agreed. In Morrell v. Morrell a will bequeathing forty shares to a legatee was admitted to probate without the word "forty," it being proved that the word was inserted without the knowledge of the testator, who had instructed his solicitor as to all the shares. In Williamson v. Williamson a husband who, after his wife had served a term of imprisonment for larceny and returned to domestic service, declined to cohabit with her, was held not to have deserted her. In the Douglas the duty of those in control of a ship which has sunk, to take reasonable precautions against injury from the wreck, was laid down and enforced. In the Miranda it was laid down that Preliminary Acts will not ordinarily be amended. The number concludes with a not inconsiderable instalment of the legislation of the session. Chapter 2 authorises the issue of reply post cards; chapter 9 gives documents printed by the Government Stationery Office the same authority as those printed by the Queen's Printers, whom it is apparently intended to relieve in times of pressure.—Law Journal.

THE DEVOLUTION OF TRUST AND MORTGAGE ESTATES AFTER DEATH.

Among the practical inconveniences of the distinction drawn by English law between real and personal property, not the least is the difficulty of deciding whether, in a given will, general words have passed estates in which the testator had no beneficial interest. Often, too, when the legal estate had passed to an heir-at-law, additional expense was caused and sometimes an application to the Court of Chancery rendered necessary. An important section of the new Conveyancing Act (44 & 45 Vict., c. 41) was passed to cure these evils. Sect. 80 provides that trust and mortgage estates of inheritance shall, upon the death of a person after the Act, in whom such estates were solely vested, pass to his personal representatives from time to time, notwithstanding his will, like chattels real. One of several executors or administrators can dispose of them like chattels real. Within the meaning of all trusts and powers, personal representatives shall be deemed "heirs and assigns" of the deceased. Sect. 4 of the Vendors and Purchasers Act (37 & 38 Vict., c. 78) and sect. 48 of the Land Transfer Act, 1875, are repealed. This section, including the repeals, applies only in cases of death after 31st Dec., 1881. It will be noticed that, in the devolution of trust and mortgage estates, this section assimilates the law of real to that of personal property. It also affects the Wills Act, though that Act is not placed in the list of those affected (schedule 1, part 1), as a testator can no longer dispose of this property, except by appointing the devisee executor for this purpose. The section only applies to "every estate or interest of inheritance or limited to the heir as special occupant, in any tenements or hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal." Compare sect. 2 (ii) of the Act. It does not apply unless the estate has been solely vested in the deceased. This section will, in time, simplify titles, but at present it rather adds to the complications arising in the devolution of trust and mortgage estates by frequent legislation.

At common law, trust and mortgage estates of inheritance, of which a person died solely seized, passed to the heir-at-law just as if the estates had been his own, if he was intestate. He could, however, dispose of them by will. And they passed by a general devise of real estate, unless an intention to the contrary could be inferred from expressions in the will, or the purposes or objects of the testator: (Lord Braybrooke v. Inskip, 8 Ves. 417; Tudor's Leading Cases, Conveyancing, 3rd edit. 986.) As to what is sufficient to show a contrary intention, see as to trust estates Brown and Sibley's Contract (L. Rep. 3 Ch. Div. 156); Bell's Trusts (36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 644; L. Rep. 5 Ch. Div. 504), in which the previous case was dissented from. And, as to mortgage estates, Packman and Moss (34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 110; L. Rep. 1 Ch. Div. 214); Smith's Estate (35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 690; L. Rep. 4 Ch. Div. 70). See also Re Brown (35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 305; L. Rep. 3 Ch. Div. 156). It will be observed that the only question here was between the devisee and the heir; the personal representative, as such, had nothing to do with the legal estate. But by sect. 4 of the Vend. and Purch. Act, 1874, "The legal personal representative of a mortgagee of a freehold estate, or of a copyhold estate to which the mortgagee shall have been admitted, may, on payment of all sums secured by the mortgage, convey or surrender the mortgaged estate, whether the mortgage be in form an assurance subject to redemption, or an assurance upon trust." This section only applied to a case where the money was paid off; it was held in Spradbery's Mortgage (41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 82; L. Rep. 14 Ch. Div. 514) that it did not apply to a transfer of a mortgage, so that the legal personal representative of a mortgagee could not, on receiving payment of the mortgage money, convey the estate to a transferee. This section is now repealed, but only as to deaths after 31st Dec. 1881, so it still applies to previous deaths. It is only permissive. It is a question whether it includes the case of a mortgagor, who, having been paid off, dies without reconveying: (Dart, Vendor and Purchaser, 5th edit., 16.) It would seem to be necessary that the mortgage debt be paid off after the Act (Aug. 7, 1874), but that the death may have occurred before.

With regard to trust estates, it was provided by sect. 5 of the Vendors and Purchasers Act, 1874, "Upon the death of a bare trustee of any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament of which such trustee was seised in fee simple, such hereditament shall vest like a chattel real in the legal personal representative from time to time of such trustee." This was repealed, as to England, except as to anything duly done thereunder before the 1st Jan., 1876, by sect. 48 of the Land Transfer Act, 1875; and is repealed, as to Ireland, with respect to deaths after 31st Dec., 1881, by 44 & 45 Vict., c. 41, s. 78. By sect. 48 of the Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict., c. 87), "Upon the death of a bare trustee intestate as to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, of which such trustee was seised in fee simple, such hereditaments shall vest like a chattel real in the legal personal representative from time to time of such trustee; but the enactment by this section substituted for the aforesaid section (sect. 5) of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, shall not apply to lands registered under this Act." It will be noticed that these enactments only apply to "bare trustees," and are not extended to trusts in general like the new Act. A trustee without any active duties to perform, or any beneficial interest in the trust estate, is a bare trustee; a trustee with a beneficial interest is not. It is doubtful whether a trustee, without a beneficial interest, but with active duties, is a bare trustee: (Christie v. Ovington, L. Rep. 1 Ch. Div. 279; Morgan v. Swansea Urban Sanitary Authority, L. Rep. 9 Ch. Div. 582; and Lysaght v. Edwards, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 787; L. Rep. 2 Ch. Div. 499.) Compare Vendors and Purchasers Act, 1874, sect. 6. The Section of the Land Transfer Act only applies when the trustee died intestate. It does not apply to deaths after 31st Dec., 1881. The important section of the new Act which we have been discussing does not apparently apply to estates contracted to be sold, as to which see, however, Lysaght v. Edwards (ubi sup.), nor do the above-cited sections of the Vendor and Purchaser Act and the Land Transfer Act: (Morgan v. Swansea Urban Sanitary Authority, ubi sup.) The personal representatives of a deceased vendor have a permissive power to convey given them by sect. 4 of the new Act.—Law Times.

THE COURT OF APPEAL.

The short bill to amend the Judicature Acts, presented by the Lord Chancellor to the House of Lords on Tuesday, is likely a little to puzzle the profession through bad drafting and otherwise. The main object would appear to be to carry out the intention of the Lord Chancellor expressed last May, when he was understood to say that he intended to make the Lords of Appeal in the House of Lords available for service in the Court of Appeal. Clause 2 deals with this subject, and provides that, "on the request of the Lord Chancellor, any person who has held the office of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, or of a judge of one of Her Majesty's Superior Courts of England, within the meaning of section 25 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, may, if he shall consent so to do, attend the sittings of the Court of Appeal." In the first place, do the words "who has held" include or exclude persons who have held and still hold the offices mentioned? It is probably intended to exclude them, but the expression of the intention is far from clear. The Lords of Appeal are, moreover, not necessarily the persons who may be asked to sit. The clause, as drafted, would apply to Lord Blackburn, Lord Bramwell, and Lord Penzance; but not to Lord O'Hagan, Lord Watson, or Lord Fitzgerald. As to Sir Robert Collier, the qualification provided may perhaps reopen an old controversy. According to the present principle of selection of Lords of Appeal, the bill is never likely to apply to more than one, or, perhaps, when their number is further increased, to two, Lords of Appeal. The idea probably is, that Irish and Scotch judges ought not to sit in a purely English Court. Irish and Scotch judges may overrule English judges in the House of Lords, but not in the Court of Appeal. This restriction may be necessary, but it is anomalous; and it is hardly fair to the English Lord of Appeal to ask him to undertake duties to which his brethren are not liable. It, moreover, reduces the possible relief of the Court of Appeal to very slight dimensions. Only from the accident of Lords Bramwell and Penzance, and perhaps Sir Robert Collier, being available, it would give only one occasional judge to the Court of Appeal.—Law Journal.

SOLICITORS' FEES.

The following NEW RULES and ORDERS of the SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE have been made with the concurrence of the majority of the Judges, under the Jud. Act, s. 61:—

1. The fees set forth in the Schedule to Order VII. of "The Rules of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Ireland), April, 1878," and therein numbered 1, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 34, 35, 53, 59, 62, 74, 95, 101, 145, 161, 167, and the fees set forth in the Schedule to Rule 68 of "The Rules of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Ireland), of the 16th of June, 1879," shall not be henceforth charged or allowed.

2. Subject to the provisions of Order VII. of the said Rules of April, 1878, solicitors shall be entitled to charge, and shall be allowed the fees mentioned in the following Schedule.

SCHEDULE.

	Lower Scale		Higher Scale
	£	s. d.	£	s. d.
1 Writ of Summons for the commencement of any action . . . . .	0	6 8	0	13 4
2 Summons to attend at Judges' Chambers . . . . .	0	3 4	0	6 8
3 Or if Special, at Taxing Officer's discretion, not exceeding . . . . .	0	6 8	1	0 0
4 Copy for the Judge when required . . . . .	0	2 0	0	2 0
5 Or if more than six folios, per folio . . . . .	0	0 4	0	0 4

SERVICES, NOTICES, AND DEMANDS.

6 Service through a Solicitor of any Summons, Interrogatories, Order, Notice, Demand, or other Document (not being a Writ of Summons or citation) on a party who has entered an appearance, if not authorised to be served through the Notice Department of the Consolidated Record and Writ Office . . . . .	0	1 0	0	1 0
7 Like service otherwise than through a Solicitor . . . . .	0	2 6	0	2 6
8 As to summons to attend at the Judges' Chambers, for each copy to serve . . . . .	0	1 0	0	2 0
9 Or, if more in the lower scale than three folios, or in the higher scale than six folios, per folio . . . . .	0	0 4	0	0 4

APPEARANCES.

10 If entered at one time for more than one person, for every defendant beyond three . . . . .	0	1 0	0	2 0
--	---	-----	---	-----

INSTRUCTIONS.

	£	s. d.	£	s. d.
11 For Statement of Complaint . . . . .	0	10 0	1	11 6
12 For reply by plaintiff when defendant sets up a counterclaim . . . . .	0	10 0	0	15 0
13 For special accounts, statements, charges, and discharges . . . . .	0	6 8	0	6 8
14 For brief on Motion for Special Injunction . . . . .	0	13 4	1	0 0

DRAWING BRIEFS AND OTHER DOCUMENTS.

15 Drawing brief for trial or on hearing of cause, issue of fact, assessment of damages, examination of witnesses, demurrer, special case and petition before a Court or Judge, sheriff, commissioner, or officer of Court, when necessary and proper, to comprise necessary and proper observations, statement of case, testimony of witnesses, and abstracts of documents too long to brief, per folio . . . . .	0	0 9	0	1 0
16 Accounts, statements, and other documents for the Judges' Chambers or Master's Office when required, including copy for use and fair copy to leave, per folio . . . . .	0	0 8	0	1 4

PERUSALS.

17 Of accounts, statements, charges, discharges, or reports . . . . .	0	6 8	0	6 8
18 Or under special circumstances, not exceeding . . . . .	1	0 0	1	0 0
19 Of notice to produce or to admit by Solicitor of party served . . . . .	0	6 8	0	6 8

ATTENDANCES.

20 To bespeak and obtain certificate of pleadings (one fee only) . . . . .	0	3 4	0	6 8
21 To bespeak and obtain certificate or account of funds (one fee only) . . . . .	0	6 8	0	6 8
22 On a summons at Judges' Chambers when in the list for the day, and not reached . . . . .	0	6 8	0	6 8
23 On consultation or conference with Counsel . . . . .	0	13 4	0	13 4
24 In Court on every Special Motion when heard, each day, according to circumstances, not to exceed . . . . .	1	1 0	2	2 0
25 Term fee in agency cases when the town agent is a qualified Solicitor, and is named upon the papers, in addition to other fees allowed . . . . .	0	5 0	0	5 0
26 On hearing or trial in Dublin of any cause, or matter, or issue of fact, before a Judge, with or without a Jury— When in list for hearing, if not heard, each day . . . . .	0	10 0	0	10 0
27 When heard or tried, first or only day of hearing or trial . . . . .	1	1 0	2	2 0
28 Each succeeding day of hearing or trial, according to circumstances, not exceeding . . . . .	2	2 0	2	2 0
29 On hearing or trial, not in Dublin, of any cause, or matter, or issue of fact, before a Judge, with or without a Jury— When heard or tried—first or only day of hearing or trial . . . . .	3	8 0	5	5 0
When heard or tried—each succeeding day of hearing or trial . . . . .	2	2 0	2	2 0

3. Order VIII., Rule 2, of the Rules of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Ireland), April, 1878, and Order II.

of the Supplemental Rules under the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, (Ireland), 1877, made the 2nd day of July, 1881, shall be and the same are hereby respectively rescinded.

4. The following Rule shall henceforth be read with the said Rules of April, 1878, as "Order VIII., Rule 2." : In all cases in which a plaintiff shall have obtained a judgment by default, there shall be added by the officer to the principal sum for which such judgment is marked for the costs thereof, the following sums, and no more :—

	£ s. d.
That is to say—In all cases where the principal sum for which judgment is marked shall not exceed £10,	1 0 0
And if execution do issue, the further sum of . . . . .	0 3 8
	£1 3 8
And if more than one defendant served, a further sum of 3s. for each additional defendant.
In all cases when the principal sum for which judgment is marked shall exceed £10 and shall not exceed £20,	1 17 0
And if execution do issue, the further sum of . . . . .	0 7 0
	£2 4 0
And if more than one defendant served, a further sum of 5s. for each additional defendant.
In all cases when the principal sum for which judgment is marked shall exceed £20, if the writ is served in the city of Dublin,	8 14 0
And if the writ is served in the county of Dublin, or in any city (other than Dublin) or in any county town, in addition,	0 5 0
Or if the writ is served in any other county than Dublin, and not in any city or county town, in addition,	0 10 0
And if more than one defendant served, a further sum of 10s. for each additional defendant.
Where, in consequence of the distance of the party to be served, it is proper to effect such service through an agent, for correspondence, in addition,	0 5 0
Where more than one attendance is necessary to effect service or to ground an application for substituted service, such further allowance may be made as the taxing officer shall think fit.
And if registered under the 13th and 14th Vic., cap. 74, but only in cases when the principal sum for which judgment is marked shall exceed £20, for the costs of such registration,	1 0 0
And if such judgment shall be registered against more than one defendant, then, for the second registration, an additional sum of . . . . .	0 15 0
And if registered against three or more defendants, then for each registration in addition to the first two,	0 9 0

5. The following Rule shall henceforth be read with the said Rules of April, 1878, as Order X., Rule 8 (a).

In taxing the expenses and allowances of witnesses the Taxing Officer shall, in ordinary cases, have regard to the following scale :—

A. For labourers, journeymen, and other like witnesses—
If resident within five miles of place of trial, or ten miles if there is a railway for three-fourths the distance, per day; not exceeding . . . . .	0 3 6
If beyond that distance, per day; not exceeding . . . . .	0 5 0

B. For master-tradesmen, farmers, and other like witnesses—

	£ s. d.
If resident within five miles of place of trial, or ten miles if there is a railway for three-fourths the distance, per day; not exceeding . . . . .	0 5 0
If beyond that distance, per day; not exceeding . . . . .	0 7 6

C. For mercantile and other clerks and assistants and other like witnesses—

If resident within five miles of place of trial, or ten miles if there is a railway for three-fourths the distance, per day; not exceeding . . . . .	0 7 6
If resident beyond that distance, per day; not exceeding . . . . .	0 10 0

D. For esquires, bankers, merchants, and other like witnesses—

If resident within five miles of place of trial, or ten miles if there is a railway for three-fourths the distance, per day; not exceeding . . . . .	0 10 0
If beyond that distance, per day; not exceeding . . . . .	1 0 0

E. For medical men, notaries, engineers, surveyors, and other professional witnesses—

If resident within five miles of place of trial, or ten miles if there is a railway for three-fourths the distance, per day; not exceeding . . . . .	1 1 0
If beyond that distance, per day; not exceeding . . . . .	3 3 0

F. For other witnesses, and for females according to their station in life, having regard to the foregoing scale.

The above scale includes in each case the board and lodging of the witnesses, but does not include reasonable travelling expenses actually paid, which may be allowed in addition.

In special cases the Taxing Officer may increase the above allowances on special grounds to be stated in his certificate.

MORTGAGING A LICENSE.

The English Court of Appeal on Wednesday, in Rutter v. Daniell, had to deal with a licensing difficulty which not infrequently arises, but which has seldom or ever been before the Courts. A license-holder mortgaged the licensed premises by sub-lease, without any express covenant in regard to the license. The mortgagee brought an action for foreclosure and sale, and a receiver was appointed. By a further order of Mr. Justice Fry, now confirmed by the Court of Appeal, the mortgagor was ordered to deliver the license to the receiver, and to do all necessary acts to transfer the license to him. The Court of Appeal held that the mortgagor is bound to do his best to transfer the license to the receiver, so that we have the anomaly of a license-holder applying to the justices to transfer his license against his will. The justices have jurisdiction to transfer under section 14 of the Licensing Act, 1838, when the licensed person "shall remove from or yield up the possession of the house." When the mortgagee takes possession there is no difficulty in saying that the license-holder has yielded possession; and the same may, we suppose, be said when the receiver, who acts neither for mortgagor nor mortgagee, but in the interests of both and for the Court, is put in possession. As to the unwilling acquiescence of the transferor of the license, it would seem to make no difference whether his good wishes go with the application, or whether he applies on the compulsion of a contract, so long as he does in fact apply, and the justices have no objection to the transfer itself or to the transferee.—Law Journal.

SUNDAY LAWS—WORKS OF NECESSITY.

The Judges of the Common Pleas Division have just decided in Regina v. Taylor, that it is unlawful for an ordinary barber to shave his customers upon Sunday; and this on the ground that he is a workman within the meaning of the Lord's Day Act (R. S. O. ch. 189, sec. 1.), and the shaving is a worldly labour or work done by him in the course of his ordinary calling as a barber, and is not a work of necessity or charity. Their Lordships were not prepared to say that a barber connected with an hotel would not be permitted to shave on the sacred day; for in such a case he might be looked upon as a servant kept in a private family to do work on Sundays as well as other days. The Court considered the Scotch case of Phillips v. Innes, 4 O. & F. 284, decided in 1837, and in which the House of Lords declared shaving on Sunday by a barber not a work of necessity or mercy, a binding decision.

The subject is not only an important, but also an interesting one. It has been considered by several Courts on the other side of the line. In Commonwealth v. Jacobus, 1 Penn Leg Gaz. Rep. 491, it was held that the business of a barber in shaving his customers on Sunday morning is "worldly employment," not "a work of necessity or charity." The Court said: "It is argued that as the law does not forbid a person to wash and shave himself on Sunday, and thus to prepare himself to attend public worship, or otherwise properly to enjoy the rest and recuperation which it was the purpose of the day to give, therefore, another may do it for him without incurring the condemnation of the law. This view is not sustained by the authorities.

It is further contended by the counsel for the defendant, that long-continued usage and customs of society, prove that the business of a barber is by common consent considered a necessity within the meaning of the law. . . . But is it a work of necessity? Many persons shave themselves on that day, who are shaved by a barber on other days of the week, and not one in ten who shave on that day employ the services of a barber." In this case Jacobus shut up his "tonsorial parlour" at 10 o'clock on Sunday morning; the Court thought that made no difference, and added, "if the closing of these shops on Sundays is an inconvenience to the public, the remedy rests with the Legislature and not with the Court.

Lord Brougham, by the way, in Phillips v. Innes, seemed to think that the shaving might be done in Dundee on Saturday, as the Glasgow people did it then. The magistrates of Dundee had held that shaving on the Sabbath was right, although it was "not lawful for the barber to work in the making of wigs on Sunday."

In another case in Pennsylvania, it was held to be illegal for a barber to shave on Sunday, even those who were sick on Saturday and could not come on that day to be cleansed; and the fact that he did not charge for his labour is considered no excuse. (Commonwealth v. Williams, Pearson's Decisions, p. 61.) Even so late as the middle of the eighteenth century "ministers were sometimes libelled" in Scotland "for shaving" themselves on the Lord's day. (Buckle, vol. iii., ch. iv., note 168.)

On the other hand, a barber at Tunbridge Wells was summoned for infringing the Act of Charles II., and he ingeniously pleaded that if any of his customers had no money they were shaved for nothing, thus making "the operation a work of charity," and further, that if a footman or waiter were not shaved on Sundays he would probably be discharged, and to serve him was therefore "a necessity." This satisfied the magistrate, and the summons was destroyed. (The Graphic, Nov. 27th, 1879.)

And in Tennessee, a couple of years ago, it was held that keeping open a barber's shop on Sunday is not indictable either as a misdemeanour or a nuisance. It was held not to be a misdemeanour, because a penalty for the violation of the Sunday laws is imposed. The question then was, whether it was a nuisance, and the Court said: "It cannot be said that a barber's shop is something which incommodes or annoys, or which produces inconvenience or damage to others. On the contrary, the business of barbering is so essential to the comfort and convenience of the inhabitants of a town or city, that it may be regarded as a necessary occupation. To hold that it becomes a nuisance when carried on on Sunday, is a perversion of the term "nuisance." All that can be said of it is, that when prosecuted on Sunday it is a violation of the statute, and subject to be proceeded against as prescribed by law, but not subject to be indicted as a nuisance. It may shock the moral sense of a portion of the community, to see the barber carrying on his business with open doors on Sunday, but it produces no inconvenience or damage to others, and, therefore, cannot be regarded in legal contemplation "a nuisance." (State v. Lorry, 7 Baxt. 95.)

It appears that every State in the Union, except Louisiana, has a Sunday law; the original and model of most of them is the English Statute of 1676, passed when Charles II. was king. The laws differ greatly, therefore do the decisions; but the general principle of all is the same; ordinary business and labour is forbidden, except works of necessity and charity. In some of the statutes the laws contain special provisions against what we may assume to be the besetting sins of the inhabitants. The Arkansas Statute punishes Sunday indulgence in brag, bluff, poker, seven-up, three-up, twenty-one, thirteen cards, the odd-trick, forty-five, whist, or any other game at cards by a fine of from $25 to $50. California charges from $50 to $500 (in the shape of a fine) for attending any bull, bear, cock, or prize fight, horse-race or circus; or for keeping open any gambling house, or any place of barbarous or noisy amusement, or any theatre where liquor is sold on the Lord's day. In ages gone by in England bull-baiting or bear-baiting used to cost three shillings and fourpence, and wrestling and bowling five shillings, upon Sunday (1 Car. I.). The Florida law enacts that anyone disturbing a congregation of whites, is subject to a penalty of not more than $100; or the offender may be whipped, the stripes not to exceed the orthodox forty save one; or be imprisoned for not more than six months.

South Carolina alone sticks to the old notion of compelling people to go to church. Her statute provides, "that all persons having no reasonable or lawful excuse, on every Lord's day shall resort to some meeting or assembly of religious worship, tolerated and allowed by the laws of the State, and shall there abide orderly and soberly during the time of prayer and preaching, on pain of forfeiture, for every neglect of the same, of the sum of one dollar."

In the original Sunday-go-to-Meeting Act, that of Elizabeth, every person had to repair to his parish church every Sunday, on pain of forfeiting one shilling for each offence; and anyone over sixteen who absented himself for a month, forfeited £20 a month. (Eliz., c. 2. 28 Eliz., c. 1.)

In Indiana the Act forbidding working, &c., on the day of rest, applies only to those over 14 years of age.

"Necessity" is a relative term, and the law does not mean that the work to be allowed must be "absolutely necessary." "If nothing but absolute necessity were intended, it would, in general, be unlawful to prepare a meal on the Sabbath, because it might without difficulty be previously prepared, or most people might safely enough fast for twenty-four hours. To supply gas light would be equally unlawful, for people might use candles previously provided, or might retire to bed at twilight."

The great object of all these laws is to make the day a day of rest; but some things are more important and necessary than even rest: and the doing of such things when indispensable is allowed. So it was held that the reasonable preparation of breakfast for her employer's family was such a work of necessity, as justified a maid-servant in travelling on Sunday morning (Crossman v. Lyon, 121 Mass. 301); and a servant may drive his master's household to church in his master's carriage (Com. v. Nesbit, 24 Penn. St. 899). In fact "the law has never been regarded as applying to the proper internal economy of the family. It does not except the ordinary employment of making fires and beds, cleaning up chambers and fire-places, washing dishes, feeding cattle, and harnessing horses for going to church, because these were never regarded as the worldly business of the family, and therefore not forbidden to the head of the family, or to any of the domestics."

In Pennsylvania it was held unlawful to run street cars on Sunday (Com. v. Jeandell, 2 Gr. Pa. Cas. 506), or an omnibus (Com. v. Johnston, 22 Pa. St. 102), even if the omnibus is used partly by church-goers it will not help the case. Still, "if an invalid, or a person immersed for six days within the close walls of a city, requires a ride into the country as a means of recuperation, which is the true idea of rest; there is nothing in the Act of 1794 to forbid the employment of a driver, horses and carriages on Sunday to accomplish it. Equally lawful is the employment of the same means to go to the church of ones choice, or to visit the grave of the loved and lost to pay the tribute of a tear." (Com. v. Johnston, sup.) In Georgia, however, it was recently decided that the running of street cars in cities and their vicinity is a work of necessity (Angusta and S. R. R. v. Rens, 55 Ga. 126.)

Appropos of the labour of domestic servants. A doctor's boy, having declined to wash his master's gig on Sunday, had the pleasure of drawing forth from the judge of the Aberdeen and Kincardine Small Debt Court the following remarks:—"It is essential to bear in mind that in determining what is a work of necessity in a domestic establishment, a great deal must be left to the discretion of the master. Life would be intolerable in a house in which the servants were to refuse to do a certain piece of ordinary work on a Sunday, which their employer thought necessary, on the ground that they were of a different opinion. The Sunday work which a master may insist upon having done, must be reasonably incidental to work that is necessary. For example, I should hesitate to hold that the master was entitled to insist that Sunday should be the weekly washing day, or the day on which the silver plate, not in daily use, was to have its periodical scrubbing. On the other hand, a servant would be bound to see that such things as are in use at every meal are cleaned, even although that involve the operation of cleaning being done between the first Sunday meal and the second." The judge held that the boy should have obeyed his master, and that he was not excused by having offered on Sunday night to clean it. (Scottish Law Magazine, 1880.) Even the 29 Car. II. allowed the dressing of meat in families, inns, cook-shops, or virtually houses, and the crying of milk on a Sunday in the morning and evening.

The "necessity" intended is "not a personal necessity, but one arising out of the nature of the thing to be accomplished and the need of the community." Poverty and the need of money is no excuse for working on the Sabbath. What a farmer may do in one State he may not do in another; and what he may or may not do is sometimes very doubtful.

In Indiana a man may lawfully feed his hogs on Sunday; and, if according to the practice of good husbandry, it be necessary for him to gather the feed in the field and haul it to the feeding-place on that day, he may do it all without incurring any pains or penalties (Edgerton v. State, 67 Ind. 588). An honest yeoman may gather in his grain on the Sabbath day, if by leaving it in the field until Monday it is likely to be spoiled; progathered his wheat into his garner sooner than he did (Turner v. State, 67 Ind. 595). In that State, too, he can pick and haul to market his water melons—as a work of necessity—if otherwise they would spoil (Wilkinson v. State, 59 Ind. 416). The need of the community for water melons must be great! It appeared from the evidence in this case that Wilkinson was prosecuted for drawing a load of 100 melons to market on a Sunday. On that day he had over 600 dead ripe and ready for market, and he lost all except the one load he marketed. Judge Hawk, in giving judgment on an appeal from the conviction for Sabbath breaking, said: "It would seem that a kind Providence had crowned the labours of the appellant with a bountiful harvest of melons. They were ripening and decaying much faster than he could get them to the market, twenty-six miles off." The learned judge then gave his ideas on water melons and works of necessity: "A ripe water melon in its season is a luxury; but there is nothing more stale, flat and unprofitable than a decayed or rotten melon. It seems to us that it was his duty as a prudent and careful husbandman to labour diligently to get as many of his melons as he could to market. Whatever was his duty to do in the premises, there was a moral necessity for him to do; and in the accomplishment of the main purpose of saving and securing the benefits of his crops, whatever labour he was reasonably required to do on Sunday must be regarded, as it seems to us, a work of necessity." The judge further remarked: "It is no desecration of the Sabbath to garner and secure on that day the fruits of the earth, which would otherwise decay and be wasted. It is not necessary for the protection of the Sabbath that men should abuse or overwork either themselves or their horses by midnight work."

Yet down in Arkansas (see above as to some of the provisions of their Sunday laws) there was a poor farmer named Goff, whose wheat was wasting from over-ripeness; but he had no cradle wherewith to cut it, and he waited to borrow one until Saturday night, as his poverty compelled him to work for his neighbours during the week. On Sunday he cut his own grain with the borrowed implement. The Court decided that there was no general necessity that wheat should be cut on Sunday, therefore no one might do it, and that the poor man was not justified in breaking the Sabbath (State v. Goff, 20 Ark. 289). The disciples of the Man of Nazareth, who not only gathered but also threshed the wheat for their daily bread on the Sabbath day, would have had small chance of an acquittal before this Court; as little chance as any of them would have had if he had been in the poor shoemaker's boots in Massachusetts. This wretched mortal had a garden patch where ill weeds had grown apace. For days he could not get away from his master's shop; at last he got a two days' holiday—Friday and Saturday. He worked hard at his crops, even by moonlight, until late on Saturday night. When he ceased a few hills remained unfinished, in a very bad condition and suffering from want of hoeing. On Sunday morning about eight o'clock, he spent half an hour in finishing these hills of corn. He was convicted for breaking the Sabbath, and the Court, on appeal, sustained the conviction. (Com. v. Josselyn, 91 Mass., 411; see also Com. v. Sampson, 97 Mass., 407.) The judges in this case must have belonged to that school of the Rabbis which insisted that it was a sin to eat an egg laid upon the seventh day; or have been lineally descended from the members of the Kirk session of Humber, who cited poor Margaret Brotherton before them "for that she did water her kail upon the Sabbath day," and ordered her, she having confessed her sin, "to give evidence in public of her repentance the next Lord's day." (Buckle, vol. iii., chap. iv., note 182.)

In Indiana (and even in Vermont, although the latter State is very near the unco' guid of Massachusetts) the Courts have considered that the collecting and the boiling down of maple sap is a work of necessity on Sunday where the sap is flowing freely and all the troughs are full; the maple sugar man having no way of saving his harvest save by emptying the troughs that are full. (Morris v. State, 31 Ind. 189; Whitcomb v. Gilman, 85 Vt. 297.)

Again in liberal Indiana, the brewer is allowed to turn or handle the barley which he is manufacturing into malt for his beer, as twenty-four hours neglect would make it unfit for use. The turning is a work necessary to accomplish the object which the brewer has in view, and as the law authorizes the manufacture of beer the labour necessary to make it is lawful and a work allowable on Sunday. (Crockett v. State, 33 Ind. 416.)

In Ohio it was held that under special circumstances a miller might grind on that day. The Judge said he thought it would hardly be questioned that a gas company might supply gas, a water company water, and a dairyman milk to their customers on that day; for it is no part of the design of the law to destroy or impose ruinous restrictions upon any lawful trade or business. (M'Gatrick v. Wason, 4 Oh. St. 566.)

Again in Indiana an inn-keeper sold cigars from a stand which was a part of his establishment, and the Court held that he was not punishable. The Judge said:—"There is a daily necessity for putting a house in order, cooking meals, drinking coffee or tea, smoking a cigar by those who have acquired the habit, or continuing any lawful habit on Sunday, the same as there is on a work-day, and whatever is necessary and proper to do on Sunday to supply this constant daily need is a work of necessity within the meaning of the law. It is not unlawful to keep a hotel on Sunday in the same way that it is usually kept on a week-day, and if a hotel keeps a cigar stand, which is a part of its establishment, from which it sells cigars to its guests, boarders and customers on a week-day, to sell cigars from the same stand in the same way on Sunday is not unlawful. There is no difference legally between the act of selling a cigar under such circumstances and the act of furnishing a cup of tea or coffee, a meal of victuals, or supplying any other daily want to a customer on Sunday for pay." (Carver v. State, 69 Ind. 61.) Smokers therefore, cannot complain.

In Alabama, as in Ontario, all shooting is forbidden if it is not justified by necessity, and shooting a dog in mere mischief is not a necessity. (Smith v. State, 50 Ala. 159.) In Missouri, however, a man went out hunting on Sunday. He was prosecuted, but acquitted as the law only forbade working on the Sabbath day; the district attorney argued that "hunting" was "working," but the Judges could not see it in that light. (State v. Carpenter, 62 Mo. 594.)

In Massachusetts it has been held that cleaning out a wheel-pit on Sunday, to prevent the stoppage of mills employing many hands, is not a work of necessity within the meaning of the law. Nor can one who helped at this work as a matter of kindness protect himself by claiming that what he did was a work of charity. (M'Grath v. Mervin, 112 Mass. 467.) No wonder, when the law is such, that the poet wrote, "Alas for the rarity of Christian charity under the sun."

The consideration of works of charity must be deferred until some future time.

[See also, on above subject, Seaman v. The Commonwealth, 21 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 256.—Ed. C. L. J.]—Canada Law Journal.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1881. WHERE IT SHOULD BE ADOPTED, AND WHERE EXCLUDED.—XX

(Continued from page 313, ante.)

Settlement of Land on Marriage, the Children taking as Tenants in Common in Tail.

The limitations may be slightly shortened by use of the phrase "tenant in tail" (sect. 51); but we advise that the accruer clause be set out fully, and that the short accruer clause used in wills should not be used in deeds: (Law Times, April 8, p. 401.)

It will not be safe to rely upon sect. 42, which makes provision for management of land, and application of rents and profits during minority, unless a supplementary clause is added. The statutory power, unlike the common one, does not apply to the entire land when an infant has a share. It only applies to the infant's share. In any case it should be stated in the settlement that the powers of sect. 42 are given to the trustees. Power of leasing should be inserted. A power of sale and exchange should be given, but in case of freehold land the details may be omitted in reliance upon 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, Part I., and sect. 85 of the Conveyancing Act. But the statutory power is not quite satisfactory when the property consists of manors or copyholds. Also power to sell minerals apart from surface should be inserted if required. (Law Times, April 15, pp. 419, 420.)

Our remarks above as to trustee clauses apply here. As to covenants for title, see Law Times, April 22, p. 484. We advise usual covenants for further assurance. As to power of interim investment, see below.

Settlement upon Marriage of Freeholds in Fee Simple with usual Clauses.

Limitation of wife's jointure rentcharges may be shortened by omitting powers of distress and entry (sect. 44). It must be distinctly stated that it is an annual rentcharge: sect. 44 (1). Omit apportionment clause (33 & 34 Vict., c. 85, s. 2). There is no need either to limit a term or to empower the jointress to limit a term: sect. 44 (4). It may, however, be well to add a proviso preventing the representatives of the jointress limiting a term after the expiration of one year from her decease, and preventing in any case the limitation of a term exceeding 299 years. This is to oust the "long term" section (65). So the portions term may be restricted to 299 years for the like purpose. The limitations in tail and fee may be slightly shortened (sect. 51), but the cross-remainder clause should be set out as stated above. The trusts of portions term may be slightly shortened, but generally it will be best to set them out much as usual: (Law Times, April 29, pp. 453, 454.) The declaration as to receipt and application of rents and profits during minority may be much shortened (sect. 42). If the settlement contains limitations to tenants in common likely to come into practical operation, insert supplement to sect. 42 as above. The power of sect. 42 should be expressly given to the trustees. Statutory provision for accumulations needs a supplement sect.: 42 (5) (iii.) As to future wife's jointure, power of leasing, powers of sale and exchange, trustee clauses and covenants for title, see above. In settlements of considerable value, add clause expressly making power of sale and exchange overreach estates and charges, and, in any case, it will be well to give wider powers of interim investment than that given by Lord Cranworth's Act (sect. 7): (Law Times, May 6, pp. 5, 6.)

Settlement of Leaseholds.

In settlement of leaseholds as personality, the trust for sale may be shortened (sects. 55, 56, 58), receipt clause (sect. 36), maintenance, and accumulation clauses (sect. 43) omitted, and trustee clauses much abbreviated. In settlement of leaseholds upon trusts corresponding with those of freeholds caution will be needed to secure that the powers, implied by statute as to the freeholds, are extended to the leaseholds. Often special powers as to renewable leaseholds should be inserted. Sect. 42 applies to leaseholds, but it is not easy always to see effect of sect. 42 (5) (iii.) As a doubt has been raised as to whether Part I. of Lord Cranworth's Act applies to leaseholds, the best plan will be to give the trustee power to sell, exchange, and convey the lands. This will suffice for sales, even if Cranworth's Act does not apply. See sects. 35, 36 of Conveyancing Act: (Law Times, June 3, p. 78.)

Settlement of Copyholds.

Covenant to surrender will be necessary, but declaration of trust may be omitted: (Re Cuming, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 739; L. Rep. 5 Ch. App. 72.) Insert covenant for further assurance. Often special powers for applying sale money in purchasing enfranchisement will be needed. In settlements by reference to settlements of freeholds the same caution is needful as in similar settlements, by reference, of leaseholds. Sect. 42 applies, but sect. 42 (5) (iii.) will sometimes create a difficulty: (Law Times, June 3, p. 78.)

Wills.

Omit devise of trust and mortgage estates in consequence of sect. 30. Trust for sale may be shortened (sect. 35). Maintenance and accumulation clauses may be omitted if children are to be entitled at twenty-one, &c. (sect. 43). Trustee clauses may be shortened. Compare remarks on settlements. They should be set out fully if the will includes foreign property. Advancement and solicitor trustee clauses should be inserted if required: (Law Times, June 10, p. 96.)

Copyholds.

For partial list of sections affecting copyholds, see Law Times, June 3, p. 178. Sects. 2 (v.), 3 (2) (6), 7 (5), 21 (1), 34 (3) make some special reference to copyholds. Sect. 62 (easements) does not apply to them.

Conditions of sale may be shortened by reliance on sect. 3 (2). In covenants to surrender omit general words and all-estate clause, except they are on the court rolls. In conveyances on sale and mortgages, the statutory words may be used, and covenants for title omitted if there is a covenant to surrender, but not otherwise. Mention the "heirs" in surrenders. In mortgages, either insert power of sale, or at least give an express charge with the covenant to surrender: (Law Times, June 10, p. 96.) As to settlements, see above.

Some additional Cautions as to Reliance upon the Act.

Where it is intended to make the benefit or burden of a covenant run with the land, the word "assigns" should be mentioned, notwithstanding sect. 68. Before enlarging any long term under sect. 65, the new Conveyancing Bill now before Parliament should be read and considered, as it contains a retrospective provision. Be cautious as to reliance on the Act in case of settlements and wills where the trusts relate to property abroad.

We may add that, in many cases where the details of powers are omitted in consequence of the Act, it may be wise to give a power of investment of proceeds of sale money wider than that given by law.

Conclusion.

We have been unable in this series to discuss the subject of the enlargement of long terms, but hope to find an opportunity for this after the passing of the Conveyancing Bill before mentioned. Also it will be better to consider the effect of this Act on the law relating to married women after the fate of the Conveyancing Bill and Married Women's Property Bill have been decided. The Conveyancing Bill also makes great alterations with regard to powers of attorney, and the discussion of these likewise will be postponed.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Beerhouse Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 27), s. 3.
Lely and Foulkes on Licensing (2nd Edition), 72.

Where the justices' clerk makes a minute of the grounds of the refusal of an off-licence for non-qualification, there is a sufficient specification in writing to satisfy the statute (Regina v. Licensing Justices of Cumberland, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 142).

Malicious Injury to Property Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 52.

Malicious injury to the property of the owner of a right to the herbage is not committed by playing bowls on the turf (Laws v. Eltringham, 51 Law J. Rep. M. C. 13).

Highways and Locomotives Amendment Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 23.

Justices held justified in finding that carting building material necessitating the use of "trails" down hill was not extraordinary traffic giving occasion for a claim for damages (Pickering Highway Board v. Barry, 51 L. J. Rep. M. C. 17).

QUARTERLY INDEX TO CASES.***

Adding party (see Amendment).

Administration: (and see Death.)

absent administrator become bankrupt; limited administration to his assignee. Goods of Hammond—Mis. 154.

of real and personal estate; costs, how to be borne. Patching v. Barnett—Mis. 232.

Amendment: adding co-defendant; agency; two causes of action; breach in respect of one out of the jurisdiction; Jud. Act, Sch. r. 19; O. XV., rr. 3, 4. Creaton v. M. G. W. Ry. Co.—Rep. 94.

Appeal: (and see Landlord and Tenant.)

order as to costs; interpleader proceedings. Hartmont v. Foster—Mis. 220.

action remitted to county court; appeal to Court of Appeal. Bowles v. Drake & Co.—Mis. 232.

order imposing defendant's costs on third party; appeal against. Hornby v. Cardwell—Mis. 269.

Arbitration (see Principal and Surety).

Assault: constable witnessing; assaulted party refusing to prosecute; summons by constable in his own name; 24 & 25 Vic., c. 100; 25 & 26 Vic., c. 50. Burns v. Justices of Enniskerry—Mis. 193.

Attachment of debts: money due to debtor on deposit receipt; debt due, but not payable; conditional order to attach; C. L. P. A. Act, 1856, s. 63; O. XLIV., r. 2. Reidy v. Casey—Rep. 98.

application for; reasonable suspicion that money does not belong to judgment debtor; issue to determine whether it is trust money. Roberts v. Death—Mis. 220.

fund with gift over on its being charged. S. W. Loan, &c., Co. v. Robertson—Mis. 269.

Auction (see Sale).

Award (see Principal and Surety).

Bail: (and see Sureties to be of good behaviour.)

money received as security from the accused on criminal charge; recovery back. Wilson v. Strugnell—Mis. 194.

Bankruptcy: (and see Administration.)

disclaimer of lease; discretion as to terms. Ex parte Ladbury—Mis. 154.

convict; debtor's summons; adjudication. In re Harris—Mis. 194.

bankrupt's estate; sale to his trustee's partner. In re Moore—Mis. 232.

Bill of Exchange (see Negotiable Instrument).

Bill of Sale: affidavit of attestation; signature of solicitor. Sharp v. Birch—Mis. 220.

statement of consideration; whole amount stated as paid on execution; part retained for other purposes. In re Spindler—Mis. 244.

Breach of Marriage Promise: evidence; corroboration; — v. Rice—Mis. 165.

Carrier: live stock; absence of evidence of negligence, or of cause of injury. M'Indoe v. M. G. W. Ry. Co.—Mis. 223.

contract limiting liability; reasonable conditions. Moore v. G. N. Ry. Co.—Mis. 223, 237. [And see Com., by the present writer, ib.—E. N. B.] live stock; delay in transportation; Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1878; contract; impossible performance. Rooth v. The Midland Ry. Co.—Mis. 275. [And see Com., by the present writer, ib. 275, 289, 317.—E. N. B.]

Certiorari (see Sureties to be of good behaviour).

Collision (see Merchant Shipping Act, 1854).

Company: shares forfeited for non-payment of calls: resale by directors at less than full price; contract not registered; Ramwell's case—Mis. 145.

* Resumed from p. 153, ante. The numerals with Rep. prefixed refer to the pages of the IRISH LAW TIMES REPORTS. The numerals with Mis. prefixed refer to the pages of the Miscellaneous portion of this Journal.

insolvent, but winding-up petition not presented; solicitor, directed by the Directors, paying pressing claims; receipt from Directors for amount in pre-payment of calls; fraudulent preference. In re The Exchange Banking Co.—Mis. 145.

petition to wind up, by mortgagee shareholder; no assets but property mortgaged; restraining power of sale till hearing. Ex p. Fell—Mis. 154.

bond fide dispute as to debt, and company solvent; jurisdiction to restrain creditor from presenting winding-up petition. Circle, &c., Co., v. Lavery—Mis. 154.

contribution to company's debts; holders of policies in mutual societies. In re Great Britain, &c., Soc.—Mis. 207.

Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1878 (see Carrier).

Contract (see Carrier).

Convict (see Bankruptcy).

Corrupt Practices Act: witness not truly answering criminal question; jurisdiction to withhold certificate. R. v. Holl—Mis. 154.

Costs: (and see Administration—Appeal—Landlord and Tenant) recovery of Court fees paid by person not a solicitor. Verlander v. Eddolls—Mis. 220.

Criminal Law (see Assault—Bail—Felonies Act, 1870).

Death: (and see Employers' Liability Act 1880—Negotiable Instrument) presumption of; absence for over seven years; advertisements; grant of letters of administration; evidence of death. Re Keary's Trusts—Mis. 187. [See Com., by the present writer, ib.—E. N. B.] evidence of; advertisement without result; grant of administration. Goods of Drugan—Mis. 147.
evidence of, to determine survivorship; deserter from army ceasing to communicate; presumption. Stewart's Trustees v. Stewart—Mis. 171.—[See Com., by the present writer, ib.—E. N. B.] evidence of; burial; life shown still in existence. Nolan v. Kelly—Mis. 205.

Demur, leave to (see Pleading).

Deposit receipt (see Attachment of debts).

Discovery: letter; writer unable to recollect contents. Dalrymple v. Leslie—Mis. 220.

Disclaimer (see Bankruptcy).

Distress (see Landlord and Tenant—Mortgage).

Easement: owner of land building house on its extremity; right to lateral support at end of twenty years. Angus v. Dalton—Mis. 154.

Employers' Liability Act, 1880: notice of injury from negligence; delivery. Adams v. Nightingale—Mis. 247. [See Com., by the present writer, ib.—E. N. B.] contract in ouster of; public policy; power to contract surviving relatives out of benefit of Lord Campbell's Act. Griffiths v. Earl of Dudley—Mis. 303. [See Com., by the present writer, ib.—E. N. B.]

Equitable Mortgage: deposit of title deeds; non-registration; priority of incumbrance. Re Burke's Estate—Mis. 185, 197, 209. [See Com., by the present writer, ib., and by others 195, 271.—E. N. B.]

Evidence (see Breach of Marriage Promise—Corrupt Practices Act—Death).

Execution: writ of fi. fa.; direction to sheriff; solicitor and client; implied authority. Smith v. Keul—Mis. 166.

Executor (see Mortgage).

Felonies Act, 1870: restraint on alienation; payment of debts. In re Harris—Mis. 194.

Garnishee (see Attachment of Debts).

Impossibility (see Carrier).

Injunction (see Mortgage).

Interpleader (see Appeal).

Judgment (see Principal and Surety).

Justice of the Peace: (and see Sureties to be of good behaviour).

borough under Municipal Corporations Act, 1885, not having separate commission of the peace; mayor not justice of peace for borough. Wilson v. Strugnell—Mis. 194.

Landlord and Tenant: (and see Bankruptcy.)

Act, 1881, ss. 7, 8 (9), 57; Act, 1870, s. 4; judicial rent, determination of; improvements; predecessor in title; lessee continuing in occupation from year to year; compensation by landlord; true value; fair rent; appeal, subject of; statute, construction of; retroactive operation. Adams v. Dunseath—Rep. 59.

Act, 1881, ss. 7, 8 (9); judicial rent, determination of; improvements; predecessor in title; lessee continuing in occupation from year to year; compensation by landlord; low rent. Colliver v. Lord Fitzwilliam—Rep. 86.

Act, 1881, s. 5 (9); Act, 1870, s. 4 (a); judicial rent, determination of; improvements; permanent buildings; acceptance of lease, covenanting to keep and give up in repair; deductions from letting value, in respect of improvements. Brennan v. Latouche—Rep. 88.

Act, 1881, s. 5; fees payable; notice of appeal; copies of orders and documents—Mis. 163.

Act, 1881; effect of, as to party responsible for condition of premises, under the Sanitary Acts. Athy Board of Guardians v. Keegan—Mis. 175.

Act, 1881; determination of fair rent; tenant, who entitled to proceed for; award of compensation on quitting holding; fixing fair rent, whether ancillary to sale. Bonar v. Wilson—Mis. 192.

Act, 1881; valuer employed under County Court; expenses of. Byrne v. Byrne—Mis. 193.

Act, 1881, s. 52 (2); town-park, what constitutes; town; holding partly used for agricultural purposes. Doyle v. Boland—Mis. 193.

Act, 1881; extension of time for serving notices, &c., expenses of inquiries on applications for advances; agreements to refer amounts of fair rent to valuer named by Commission—Mis. 203.

distress for rent; lodger, who under 34 & 35 Vic., c. 79. Morton v. Palmer—Mis. 220.

Act, 1881; agreements as to amount of fair rent; Form No. 33; withdrawal of originating notice.—Mis. 292.

Lease (see Bankruptcy).

Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871 (see Landlord and Tenant).

Magistrate (see Justice of the Peace—Sureties to be of good behaviour).

Married Woman (see Probate—Settlement).

Merchant Shipping Act, 1854: collision; limit of liability; register. The John Ormston—Mis. 166.

Misrepresentation (see Specific Performance).

Mortgage: (and see Company—Equitable Mortgage) mortgagees prevented by mortgagor from taking possession; injunction; receiver. Truman v. Redgrave—Mis. 145.
mortgagor in liquidation; distress by mortgagee for interest; retention of surplus realised, towards principal. In re Betts—Mis. 145.
executor taking renewal of lease in his own name; mortgage for his own purposes; title of mortgagee subject to prior equities of testator's estate. In re Morgan—Mis. 154.

Negligence: (and see Employers' Liability Act, 1880.)
sewer required by Act of Parliament to be made by defendants; outfall into river necessary; injury to barge; defendants not liable without negligence. Dixon v. Met. Board of Works—Mis. 154.

Negotiable Instrument: delivery with blanks not filled; implied authority. Angle v. N. W. Inco. Co.—Mis. 261. [And as to the effect of the death of an acceptor of a bill of exchange, blank as to drawer's name, see cases collated by the present writer, ib.—E. N. B.]

Parties (see Amendment).

Pleading; leave to plead and demur; application on summons; O. XXVII., r. 5. Kane v. Stoneyford River Drainage Co.—Rep. 93.

Police Constable (see Assault).

Predecessor in title (see Landlord and Tenant).

Presumption (see Death).

Principal and Surety: judgment or award against principal; effect as against surety; agreement to be bound. Ex p. Young—Mis. 145.

Probate: (and see Bankruptcy).

married woman; disposition by will, under power of appointment, of real estate only. Goods of Thomson—Mis. 154.

two wills and codicil, made, relatively to first, by mistake for second; all included in probate. Goods of Studham—Mis. 166.

Railway (see Carrier).

Receiver (see Mortgage).

Remittal to Inferior Court: (and see Appeal.)

county not specified in notice of motion; C. L. P. A. Act, 1870. Ferguson v Burrows—Rep. 93.

Rentcharge (see Will).

Sale: (and see Bankruptcy—Company—Specific Performance.)

warranty; goods of vendor's own manufacture. Johnson v. Raylton—Mis. 154.

auction under order of Court; duty of solicitor to pay deposit into Court for auctioneer; defalcation by one of firm of solicitors; liability of others. Biggs v. Bree—Mis. 232.

Settlement: wife's personality; limitations in favour of her next of kin irrevocable. Paul v. Paul—Mis. 194.

Sheriff (see Execution).

Ship (see Merchant Shipping Act, 1854—Negligence).

Solicitor (see Bill of Sale—Costs—Execution—Sale).

Specific Performance: particulars of sale; misstatement of length of term for which tenant of vendor held; rental; misrepresentation. Goddard v. Jeffreys—Mis. 232.

misrepresentation; knowledge of untruth, or statement of non-reliance on representations. Redgrave v. Hurd—Mis. 289.

Summons (see Assault—Pleading—Sureties to be of good behaviour).

Sureties to be of good behaviour: inciting tenant not to pay rent; justice of the peace; jurisdiction; certiorari; practice; supplemental affidavits; 34 Ed. 3, c. 1. Queen (Reynolds) v. Justices of Co. Cork—Rep. 89.

inciting tenants not to pay rent; justice of peace; jurisdiction; summons or warrant; certiorari; 34 Ed. 3, c. 1. Queen (M'Cormick) v. Justices of Co. Clare—Rep. 91.

Survivorship (see Death—Will).

Warrant (see Sureties to be of good behaviour).

Warranty (see Sale).

Will: (and see Probate.)

"survivor or survivors;" construction. Re Horner's Estate—Mis. 220.

ADMISSION OF SOLICITORS.

The following gentlemen have been admitted solicitors of the Court of Judicature:—Messrs. Hugh J. Hayes, Thomas Rice, John C. Wakeham, Henry F. O. Stephens, William Shean, Thomas J. Bennett, and Gerald R. Fitzgerald.

THE LATE JUDGE KEOGH.

Mr. A. P. Sharp, of Great Brunswick-street, sends a photograph of a Celtic Cross which he has erected at Bonn, on the Rhine, to the memory of the late Right Honourable Judge Keogh. This latest sample of native art has been executed from a design by Mr. Thomas Drew, R.H.A., architect. The cross, which stands 18 ft. in height, is of Kilkenny limestone of finest quality, and is carved (as from the clearness of the photograph we are well enabled to judge) in a style which does the sculptor the highest credit. The shaft is ornamented with the well-known interlaced patterns taken from old examples; while the upper part has symbolical heads in high relief. The following is carved in sunk letters on base:—

Underneath lies buried
The Right Honourable
WILLIAM KEOGH,
Who died in Bonn, on the 30th day of September, 1878, Aged 60 years.
He was for Ten years a member of the British House of Commons, and for Twenty years a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, and Member of the Privy Council in Ireland.
He was distinguished as an Orator, Statesman, and Judge.
"Justum ac tenacem propositi virum."
Friends and admirers have erected this Irish Cross to his memory.
R.I.P.

—Irish Builder.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. John F. Moriarty, A.B., Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed a Crown Prosecutor for the Counties of Cork and Clars.

Mr. Edward Sullivan, A.B., Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed a Crown Prosecutor for the City of Cork.

Mr. John Ellard, Solicitor, has been appointed Clerk of the Peace and Crown for the County of Limerick.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

A Summary of the Law on the Liability of Employers for Personal Injuries. By W. HOWLAND ROBERTS, of the Middle Temple and Western Circuit, Esq., Barrister-at-Law; and GEORGE HENRY WALLACE, M.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister at-Law. Second Edition, Enlarged. London: Reeves & Turner, 100 Chancery-lane, Law Booksellers and Publishers. 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.
Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—Trustees Sir E. Hulse, confirm sale.—D. O'Callaghan, do.—Sir J. C. FitzGerald, allocate.—A. H. Goff, to declare purchaser.—Trustees Rotherham, allocate.

IN COURT.—Miscampbell, to vary order.—G. Graham, as to objection.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

R. Chadwick, rental.

TUESDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—J. Trueman, confirm sale.

IN COURT.—J. M. Walker, final schedule.—O. Conolly, do.—Trustees W. Scully, do.—G. S. Roper, do.—L. H. Nuttall, do.—P. Holland, do.—P. Hanley, do.—Representative Church Body, as to letting.—R. L. Hunt, do.—R. Hall, payment.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

A Sullivan, rental.

SALES.

CORPORATION OF LIMERICK - - 27 lots.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—G. A. Bell, from 6th.—H. Coulter, directions.—H. Coulter, objection.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

J. CAREY	-	-	2 lots.
TRUSTEE DUBLIN LIBRARY	-	-	1 lot.
E. CROGHAN	-	-	1 "
L. CROSTHWAITE	-	-	3 lots.
TRUSTEE G. WEBB	-	-	1 lot.
A. D. BROWNE	-	-	1 "
J. M'ANUS	-	-	1 "

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

Munster Bank, rental.—J. Morgan, to take account.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

W. W. Gray, as to map.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

- Bruce, Jonathan, of Sunville, Pallasgreen, in the county of Limerick, Esquire. June 16; Friday, July 14, and Tuesday, August 1. R. Davoren, solr.
- Feury, Patrick, of No. 12 Cook-street, and No. 16 Mary's-abbey, in the city of Dublin, publican. June 20; Tuesday, July 18, and Friday, August 4. Frederick Sutton, solr.
- Murphy, John, of Joy-street, Belfast, in the county of Antrim, contractor and measurer. September 16; Tuesday, July 25, and Friday, August 11. Bennett Thompson, solr.
- O'Brien, Peter, of 29 Essex-street, in the city of Dublin, grocer. June 20; Tuesday, July 18, and Friday, August 4. Casey and Clay, solrs.
- O'Neill, Andrew, of Barronstrand-street, in the city of Waterford, ironmonger. June 27; Friday July 21, and Tuesday, August 8. Thomas Gerrard, solr.
- Slattery, Harriett, of Thomas-street, in the city of Limerick, widow. June 18; Tuesday, July 25, and Friday, August 11. Michael Larkin & Co., solrs.

SOME years ago Col. V., who was a lawyer of this place, and a man of considerable self-esteem, argued one of his own cases before the Supreme Court of Georgia. In opening his address he said; "May it please your Honors, there is an old French maxim, that a 'lawyer who argues his own case has a fool for a client;'" and then went on to win his case, and, of course, to refute the "old French maxim." He requested Judge M., who was to remain in Atlanta a few days, to telegraph him at Augusta the decision in his case. The judge telegraphed: "As to old French maxim, affirmed; as to case, reversed."—Central Law Journal.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

WHITE—July 6, at Gar.iner's-place, the wife of P. A. O'C. White, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

EYRE and ELLISON—July 5 at St. Marie's, Sheffield, Edmund W. Eyre, Esq., son of the late Edmund Moore Eyre, Esq., solicitor, Dublin, to Hilda Mary (Lily), youngest daughter of M. J. Ellison, Esq., Beech Hill, Sheffield.

DEATHS.

O'BRIEN—June 30, at the Convent of the Sacred Heart, Harcourt-street, Dublin, in her 44th year, and the 16th of her religious profession, Mother Margaret O'Brien, second daughter of the late Hon. Justice O'Brien.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET.

3-7

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	JULY
	Sat. 1	Mon. 3	Tues. 4	Wed. 5	Thur. 7	Fri. 9
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols .. ..	99½	—	100	99½	99½	99½
— 3 p c Redneed .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— New 3 p c Stock .. ..	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½	99
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1882 } Trafal. at	103½	103½	103½	103	103-4	—
5½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	100	100	100	100	100	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland .. ..	315	314½	314½	—	—	314
25 Hibernian Banking Co .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and County (Ltd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and Westminster, Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
31 Munster Bank (Limited) .. ..	7	7	7	—	—	7
10 National Bank (Limited) .. ..	24	24	—	—	—	—
10 National of Liverpool (Ltd) ..	—	—	—	—	14½	—
10 Royal Bank .. ..	—	—	29½	—	—	—
25 Standard of B. &amp; A., Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin .. ..	—	—	—	100	—	—
50 Dublin and Glasgow .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Mines.
4½ Berehaven (Limited) .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
1 Killaloe Slate Co. (Ltd) .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (Ltd) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons. Gas ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
8 Do. do. New .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited .. ..	—	—	—	—	6	—
20 C. Dub. Brewery Co. (Lim.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	—	—	10½	—
10 Edinburgh Street Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 L'pl Un'ed Tram &amp; Bus Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
100 Dublin, Wicklow, &amp; W'ford ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	117½	117½	117½	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	114	—	—	—	—	—
100 Midland Gt. Western .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick .. ..	HOLIDAY	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 D., W., &amp; W., 5 p c (1860) ..	—	—	—	—	—	117
100 Gt. N'hn (Ireland) gt'd 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 3½ p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 5 p c .. ..	—	—	124	—	—	—
100 Watfd. &amp; Limerick, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Do., new red, 5 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; N'hn Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	105½	—	—	—
— C'fergus and Larne 4 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c .. ..	—	—	105½	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. ..	108	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	109½
— Do., 4½ p c .. ..	113	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 5 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	110	—	—	—
— Kilkenny Junction, A, 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	105½	105½	105½	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	109½
— Do., 4½ p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	114½	—	114
— Waterford &amp; Central 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterfd &amp; Limerick 4 p c ..	—	—	—	104½	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	111½	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
Ballast Office Deb., £92 6s 2d, 4 p c	—	—	—	—	—	93	—
Dub. & Glas. S. F. Co. (1887) 5 p c	—	—	—	—	—	—	100½
Pipe Water Old, £92 6s. 2d.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Do. New, £100.	—	—	—	—	—	—	99

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics.

Bank Rate—Of Discount—8½ per cent. 23rd March, 1882
Of Deposit—1 per cent. 23rd March, 1882

Name Days—July 12th and 27th, 1882.

Account Days—July 13th and 28th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

The Stock Exchange and Brokers' Offices will be closed on Saturday during the months of July and August.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Though it is impossible, in this climate of changing temperature, to prevent ill-health altogether, yet its form and frequency may be much mitigated by the early adoption of remedial measures. When hoarseness, cough, thick breathing, and the attending slight fever indicate irritation of the throat or chest, Holloway's Ointment should be rubbed upon th se parts without delay, and his Pills taken in appropriate doses, to promote its curat'ive action. No catarrhs or sore throats can resist these remedies. Printed directions envelope every package of Holloway's medicaments, which are suited to all ages and conditions, and to every ordinary disease to which humanity is liable.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, JULY 15, 1882.

No. 807

SOLICITOR'S LIEN FOR COSTS ON "PROPERTY RECOVERED OR PRESERVED."—I.

IN consequence of the decision in Shaw v. Neals (6 H. L. C. 581), denying the right of a solicitor to a lien for his costs on real estate recovered by him for his client, the legislature enacted, by 23 & 24 Vic., c. 127, s. 28, that, "in every case in which an attorney or solicitor shall be employed to prosecute or defend any suit, &c., it shall be lawful for the court or judge before whom any such suit, &c., has been heard, or shall be depending, to declare such attorney or solicitor entitled to a charge upon the property recovered or preserved, and upon such declaration being made such attorney or solicitor shall have a charge upon and against and a right to payment out of the property, of whatsoever nature or kind the same may be which shall have been recovered or preserved through the instrumentality of any such attorney or solicitor, for the taxed costs, charges, and expenses of or in reference to such suit, &c." And by section 3 of 39 & 40 Vic., c. 44, in identical terms, a like provision is extended to this country. Those enactments have formed the subject of construction and application in three very recent decisions, Emden v. Carte (before the English Court of Appeal, Nov., 1881), M'Alahey v. M'Alahey (before Chatterton, V.C., March 6, 1882), and Cole v. Dawson (before Palles, C.B., and Fitzgerald, B., on the 1st inst.), in reference, inter alia, to the terms "property recovered or preserved;" and we here propose to collate those cases, without going over the wider ground already covered by our papers on "solicitor's charging lien on moneys of client" (15 Ir. L. T. 465, 475, and see 16 ib. 29).

In the first place, however, it may be well to note some previous decisions (not elsewhere so fully collected) on the effect of the legislation in question. A petition (by which, or on summons, the application may be made: Brown v. Trotman, 41 L. T. N. S. 179; Hamer v. Giles, L. R. 11 Ch. D. 942, 48 L. J. Ch. 508) for a declaration of charge under those statutes (to be enforced by sale or otherwise: Pilcher v. Arden, L. R. 7 Ch. D. 318) must be intitled in the suit, where the costs have been incurred in one: Twynam v. Porter, L. R. 11 Eq. 181; Hamer v. Giles, ubi supra; and (although the suit may have been absolutely dismissed) the order must be made in the branch of the court to which it was attached: Heinrich v. Sutton, L. R. 6 Ch. D. 865; or before the judge who tried the action: Owen v. Henshaw, 7 ib. 385; and see Higgs v. Schrader, L. R. 3 C. P. D. 252; Porter v. West, 43 L. T. N. S. 569, 50 L. J. Ch. 231. It is not necessary that a judgment or verdict should have been rendered, a compromise being sufficient: Jones v. Frost, L. R. 7 Ch. 773; Twynam v. Porter, ubi supra; cf. In re Hahn, 13 Rep. (Amer.) 791. Semble, the petition should be served on all the parties to the suit, according to Re Keane, 19 W. R. 429; but, in Brown v. Trotman, 41 L. T. N. S. 179, it was held that where such an application is made for an order charging the defendants interest in the fund the plaintiff ought not to be served. As to the priority of the solicitor's claim over a subsequent garnishee order, see Birchall v. Pugin, L. R. 10 C. P. 397; Re Jeff. Davis, L. R. 2 A. & E. 1; Shippey v. Grey, 49 L. J. C. P. 524, 42 L. T. N. S.

673; and see further, as to priorities, The Heinrich, L. R. 3 A. & E. 505. The charge is not affected by an assignment of the property for value with notice that the solicitor's costs are unpaid: Pilcher v. Arden, L. R. 7 Ch. D. 318; Faithfull v. Ewen, ib. 495. In Porter v. West (50 L. J. Ch. 231, 43 L. T. N. S. 569) an action was brought against two defendants and a building society, in which the plaintiff claimed money standing in the name of one of the defendants on the books of the society, as his in his marital right as husband of the other defendant. Judgment was given for the defendants, and the solicitor for the first two defendants petitioned for a charging order on the fund. The society opposed on the ground that they had a lien on the fund for their costs—firstly, because they were in the position of trustees; but, Fry, J., held that they were in the position of debtors to one of the defendants, West, and not in that of trustees. And secondly, he said: "Another argument, however, which has been urged in their favour is that the Solicitors' Act gives the solicitor a charge for his costs on the property 'recovered or preserved.' The operative words are 'recovered or preserved,' and it is said that if the plaintiff Thomas Porter had won he would have got the fund less the costs of the building society, and that therefore what is preserved is the fund less the building society's costs, and that this is everything the defendants Mary West and Mrs. Porter can claim. I am of opinion that that contention is untenable. What is preserved is all the defendants get, which, if the plaintiff had succeeded, they would not have got. Here the whole sum is what the solicitor has preserved, because no order to pay any costs of any co-defendant or other person was made. The building society, therefore, are not entitled to deduct their costs from the fund before paying it over." In Clover v. Adams (L. R. 6 Q. B. D. 622), the defendant having paid money into court, the plaintiff's solicitor declined to proceed with the action, except on terms to which the plaintiff would not agree. The plaintiff obtained an order for change of solicitors, and afterwards his former solicitor obtained a judge's order charging the money in court with his costs in the action; and it was held that this order was rightly made. A town agent has been held entitled to such a charge for the unascertained balance due to him by the country solicitor: Tardrew v. Howell, 3 Giff. 381; see 16 Ir. L. T. 29. The lien is for taxed costs, and unless the client's right to tax has expired when the fund recovered is paid into court, such right is unaffected by subsequent lapse of time: De Bay v. Griffin, L. R. 10 Ch. 291. An order having been made for payment of taxed costs out of a trust estate, the solicitor was held not entitled also to have the amount declared to be a charge upon the trust estate pending its realisation, in Re Viney's Trust, 18 L. T. N. S. 851; see Porter v. West, ubi supra. In a suit on behalf of an infant to recover or preserve his real estate, the solicitor is not, it seems, entitled to a declaration of charge on the property until the infant has attained twenty-one: Bonser v. Bradshaw, 4 Giff. 260; Baile v. Baile, L. R. 13 Eq. 497; and see Früchard v. Roberts, L. R. 17 Eq. 222; Catlow v. Catlow, L. R. 2 C. P. D. 362. The costs of a married woman incurred in successfully defending a suit by her husband, to set aside a post-nuptial settlement assigning funds for securing an annuity for her separate use without anticipation, have been so charged upon the annuity: Re Keane, L. R. 12 Eq. 115.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

In our columns to-day (July 10) appears a report of the annual meeting of the [English] Incorporated Law Society. To many it will give for the first time a glimpse into the operations of a body which plays a not unimportant part, but of which little is known by outsiders. The Inns of Court are ancient and familiar institutions, and most of us know what they do, or are supposed to do. The Incorporated Law Society is but of yesterday as compared with Lincoln's Inn and the Temples. It boasts of no ancient library or hall, no silver plate coming from Tudor or Stuart times, no ranges of stately buildings, no rich endowments. About it is no halo of historic memories. The Society was established somewhere about 1827. Young though it is, it is not lacking in vigour; it has done considerable work; and the future in store for it may be greater than its past. Even if it did nothing more than act as examiner of the crowds of youths who press forward for admission into the ranks of solicitors—crowds which steadily increase—it would be doing important work. The history of the Incorporated Law Society is an epitome of the recent history of the fortunes of the profession which it represents. It established examinations at a time when there was no great demand for them, and when, in fact, any one who talked about legal education ran a risk of being thought a little crazy. Attorneys or solicitors had no corporate existence; they were divided and powerless. They had no societies, or none of any influence; the solicitors' inns were small clubs fast disappearing out of sight. At the time when the Incorporated Law Society was established few University men were admitted as solicitors. The education which was obtained at an office desk in copying common forms and making out bills of costs was thought good enough for them. The founders of the Incorporated Law Society set themselves to alter all this, and they seem to have done their work well. The Society sought to improve the education of those who were admitted into the profession. It has steadily encouraged the entrance of educated men, especially by consenting to the reduction of the term of probation for the benefit of those who have been at the Universities. It will always be a matter for honest pride to solicitors that they entered the field of legal education long before the Inns of Court, notwithstanding the rich endowments at the disposal of the latter, moved in a similar direction. The examinations established by the Law Society have the reputation of being severe; and now that illiterates are no longer admitted so freely as they were while the late Lord Chief Baron exercised a dispensing power the average level of professional and general knowledge is pretty sure to rise. Without troubling Parliament or making a fuss about the work in which it was engaged, this Society has silently brought about a considerable improvement in the position of solicitors. For a time its existence was not recognised by the Legislature. Gradually, however, important duties were confided to it. Thus it was called upon to act as registrar of solicitors and attorneys. The Legislature by-and-by saw the propriety of committing to it the task of conducting the examination of solicitors—no light duty, as shown by the multitude of names of candidates at the final and preliminary examinations, which we published on Saturday. Only about a third or fourth of the whole body of solicitors in England and Wales—some 12,000 or 13,000 in all—are members of the Incorporated Law Society; and other legal societies of considerable importance still exist in the provinces. It is true, too, that the action of the authorities in Chancery-lane does not always satisfy the bolder spirits of the profession. Nevertheless, the Society, such as it is, has greatly helped to give importance, the advantages of corporate existence, and the strength of unity to a profession hitherto consisting of a multitude of isolated members; and the result of the change may soon be marked.

Twelve thousand men, most of whom are above the average in intelligence and activity, can do much even when they are scattered. They will do far more when they are acting together; and it is well to remember that solicitors think that they have good reasons for uniting. They have their grievances, of which we may some day hear much more than we have yet done. They complain that they are at once greatly trusted and needlessly suspected. The men into whose ears the most solemn secrets of life are whispered, to whom we resort in all troubles, are hemmed in by stringent regulations which most professions would resent as intolerable. They may not freely contract with their clients; and in the conduct of their business at all points their hands are tied by strict and often stupid Acts. Their bills are cut about by arbitrary taxing masters, of necessity imperfectly acquainted with the nature of the services which they appraise. If they deviate a hair's breadth from the paths of rectitude, they are not treated with the indulgence shown to an erring banker or accountant. They are struck off the rolls, or their certificate is suspended, or they are "attached" and put in prison for misconduct which might pass almost unmeasured in other walks of life. At the provincial meetings of the Incorporated Law Society, and other places in which the opinion of solicitors is heard, these restrictions and disabilities, savouring of prejudices which have passed away, are frequently the subjects of complaint. In many ways solicitors are showing their growing power, the result of united action. For example, they are making inroads into the domains of barristers at many points, and they are vigilant in frustrating measures of retaliation. They have secured right of audience in most inferior courts. If a new legal office happen to be founded, they insist that it be open to solicitors; and if a barrister be appointed to one of the posts—and they are but few—to which they are eligible—they take care to draw attention to the slight offered them. Our law reports frequently bear testimony to the steady efforts of the Incorporated Law Society, as the representative of solicitors, to punish unqualified persons who intrude upon their domain. At the present time they are engaged in a professional struggle with the law stationers, who are accustomed to send original wills and engrossed copies, together with the necessary affidavits, to the principal registry office at Somerset House, and to fetch away the probate. Unsuccessful in the Court of Appeal, they have resolved to carry the matter to the House of Lords. While the Benchers of the Inns of Court go their quiet decorous way, and the Bar seems to have lost almost the sense of corporate existence, solicitors are active and watchful as to the varying phases of their interests. And, to do their representatives justice, they have concerned themselves about other matters besides scales of costs and patronage. They have been zealous about education, and the result is that a generation of solicitors who know their books, and who are not dependent upon counsel, is growing up. Lord Campbell, in his autobiography, speaks of the pupils in Mr. Tidd's chambers throwing solicitors into raptures by "quoting statutes that were never passed, and citing cases that were never decided." The innocence thus practised upon would not now be easily found; and this improvement in professional knowledge is largely due to the efforts of the Incorporated Law Society. Perhaps even still more valuable is the fact that it has encouraged the discussion at its meetings of legal questions in no pettifoggish spirit, and has been instrumental in furthering important reforms. The suggestions of the Council with respect to legal procedure, the Settled Land Bill, the Partnership Bill, and bills of sale are well worthy of attention; and the annual meeting showed its sense of the fitness of things on Saturday by resolving to take into consideration the practice and procedure of County Courts in view of the growth of their jurisdiction.—Times.

CORROBORATIVE EVIDENCE.

There is practically only one case, that of a trial for treason, where the law of England requires more than one witness to prove the crime. But in a large number of cases, both criminal and civil, it is necessary that the evidence of a witness, a complainant, or a plaintiff, should be corroborated. The nature of the corroboration required is frequently mistaken, and an instance which came to our notice a few days ago showing the commonest variety of mistake has induced us to lay before our readers, at the risk of telling many of them what they know already, a short account of the cases in which corroboration is necessary and the kind of evidence which amounts to corroboration.

One very important case in which the evidence of one witness must be corroborated is that of the hearing of a charge of perjury. The rule is thus stated by Stephen, J., in his "Digest of the Law of Evidence," "If, upon a trial for perjury, the only evidence against the defendant is the oath of one witness contradicting the oath on which perjury is assigned, and if no circumstances are proved which corroborate such witness, the defendant is entitled to be acquitted." Now it is to be observed that two witnesses are not necessary to disprove the fact sworn to by the defendant, "for if any material circumstances be proved by other witnesses in confirmation of the witness who gives the direct testimony of perjury, it may turn the scale and warrant a conviction," (3 Russell on Crimes, p. 72). As an example of what amounts to sufficient corroboration in perjury we may cite Reg. v. Shaw, 84 L. J. M. C. 169. In that case it appeared that one S. K. had been summoned before justices for selling beer during prohibited hours. The defendant was called on his behalf at the hearing and swore that he was not in the house on that particular day, and that he had not been in the township on that day or for a fortnight before. At the trial, a policeman, to prove the perjury, swore that he had seen the prisoner in S. K.'s house between three and five on the day in question, and to corroborate the policeman two other witnesses were called. One swore that he had seen the prisoner in the township at two o'clock on that day, another that she had seen the prisoner between three and four on the road leading to S. K.'s beerhouse, and close to the beerhouse. The court held that there was direct corroborative evidence of the one assignment of perjury that the prisoner had not been in the township on that particular day, and that there was also corroborative evidence of the assignment that the prisoner was in the house on that particular day from the fact that he was seen "near to and apparently in progress towards the door of the beerhouse." This case affords a good illustration of what corroboration ought to be. It is not necessary to prove the truth of every particular by additional evidence, it is sufficient to do so in one or more material points. And it is not necessary to do this by a witness. Thus in Reg. v. Mayhev, 6 O. & P. 815, it was held that to prove perjury, it is sufficient if the matter alleged to be falsely sworn be disproved by one witness, and in addition to the evidence of that witness there be proof of an account or a letter written by the defendant contradicting his statement on oath. A very remarkable case bearing on this subject is to be found in a note to Reg. v. Harris, 5 B. & Ald. 939. A defendant was charged before Yates, J., with having committed perjury. He had first made his information on oath before a justice of the peace, that three women were concerned in a riot at his mill which was dismantled by a mob on account of the price of corn. Afterwards at the sessions when the rioters were indicted, he was examined concerning the same women, and, having been tampered with in their favour, he then swore they were not in the riot. There was no evidence on the trial of the defendant for this perjury to prove that the women were in the riot (which was the perjury assigned), but the defendant's own original information on oath being produced and read, whereby he had sworn they were in the riot, the judge thought it sufficient to convict him. This is an admirable illustration of the meaning of the phrase corroborative evidence. Here there was oath against oath and that of the same person, but there was corroboration in that there was evidence that the defendant had been tampered with to swear falsely on one occasion. In a very similar case, Reg. v. Hook, 8 Cox C. C. 5, when the defendant had made contradictory statements on oath at different times the statements of the defendant not made upon oath were held to amount to sufficient corroboration. This last case is worthy of careful perusal.

Closely connected with the principle of the above cases is the rule as to the evidence of accomplices. It is sometimes stated that the evidence of an accomplice is not alone sufficient to support a conviction, but that it must be corroborated. But such is not the case. A jury may lawfully convict on the testimony of an accomplice without corroboration. In Reg. v. Stubbs, 25 L. J. M. C. 16, Jervis C.J., said:—"It is not a rule of law that accomplices must be confirmed in order to render a conviction valid, and it is the duty of the judge to tell the jury that they may act on the unconfirmed testimony of an accomplice; but it is usual in practice for the judge to advise the jury not to convict on such testimony alone; and juries generally attend to the judge's direction, and require confirmation. But it is only a rule of practice." The extent of the confirmation which should be looked for in such cases was thus stated by Hallock, B., in summing up to the jury in Reg. v. Barnard, 1 C. & P. 88:—"It was not necessary that the accomplice should be corroborated on every material point; as then his evidence would be superfluous; but he must be confirmed in such and so many material points as to convince the jury that his statement was the truth." There is, however, an important limitation to this general statement. If there are two or three prisoners the accomplice should be confirmed as to each prisoner, for "the accomplice may speak truly as to all the facts of the case, and at the same time in his evidence substitute the second or third prisoner for himself in the narrative of the transaction" (per Jervis, C.J., in Reg. v. Stubbs, supra). In further illustration of this point, reference may be made to R. v. Wilkes and Edwards, 7 O. & P. 272. The prisoners were charged with stealing a lamb. One Gardner, an accomplice, proved the case against both prisoners, and stated that they threw the skin into a hole which he described. To confirm his evidence a constable was called who proved that he had found the skin in the hole described. Upon this, Alderson, B., pointed out that though there was corroboration of the accomplice's having been concerned in the transaction, there was none that the prisoners were. In summing up the learned judge said:—"The confirmation of the accomplice as to the commission of the felony is really no confirmation at all; because it would be a confirmation as much if the accusation were against you or me, as it would be as to the prisoners. You may legally convict on the evidence of an accomplice only if you can safely rely on his testimony; but I advise juries never to act on the evidence of an accomplice, unless he is confirmed as to the particular person who is charged with the offence." (See also Reg. v. Fowler, 8 O. & P. 107). It may be gathered from these cases that practically the rule as to corroboration applies to the evidence of an accomplice, viz., that he must be confirmed to an extent sufficient to justify the jury in believing in the truth of his statement, and that the jury ought to require some corroboration as to the person charged. It may be added before leaving this part of the subject that two accomplices are held not to corroborate each other (Reg. v. Noakes, 5 O. & P. 826). Nor does the evidence of the wife of an accomplice corroborate that of her husband, Taylor on Evidence, p. 814.

As all our readers know, there must be evidence in corroboration of the mother's statement in bastardy cases. By way of example under this head we may refer to Reg. v. Percy, 18 L. T. O. S. 286. There the corroborative evidence was the testimony of a witness who deposed to a conversation between himself and the defendant. He had told the defendant that the mother alleged him (the defendant) to be the father of the child, and he added "you must keep it." There defendant replied that he would not, that he would rather go to America. It was held that this was sufficient corroboration, being in fact an admission of the paternity of the child. Very similar to this case is Beesla v. Stern, 2 C. P. D. 265, 42 J. P. 197. That was an action for breach of promise of marriage, another instance in which the law requires the statement of a party to be corroborated (32 & 33 Vict., c. 63, s. 2). There the sister of the defendant swore that she had overheard a conversation between the plaintiff and the defendant, in which the former said, "you always promised to marry me and you don't keep your word." To this the defendant made no answer beyond offering the plaintiff money to go away. It was held that this was sufficient corroboration for the reasons thus stated by Bramwell, L.J., in his judgment:—"The defendant made no answer. If we were to hold that that was no evidence of a promise, we should get rid of a great deal of evidence which is given every day at nisi prius. A claim is made on a man in respect of goods sold and delivered and he does not deny it. If a statement is such that a denial of it is not to be expected, then silence is no admission of its truth; but if two persons have a conversation, in which one of them make a statement to the disadvantage of the other, and the latter does not deny it, there is evidence of an admission that the statement is correct." Corroborative evidence may consist of proof of the acts or conduct of the defendant. Thus in Cole v. Manning, 46 L. J. M. C. 175, evidence was given of acts of familiarity on the part of the alleged father towards the mother having occurred several months before the child could have been begotten, and that in consequence he had been forbidden the house by her parents. It was also proved that the woman was a person of weak intellect. No corroboration in relation to the actual begetting of the child was given. Field, J., said, "All such evidence must be entirely for the magistrate to consider the weight of. There is no rule of law that because the circumstances took place some months before, they are not to be considered in the light of corroboration. I am very clearly of opinion that they ought." In Reg. v. Berry, 28 L. J. M. C. 86, Lord Campbell, C.J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said that the payment of money for the maintenance of the child was corroborative evidence of the paternity. But where proof of the payment of money by way of maintenance within the 12 months is required merely to give jurisdiction, the evidence of the mother as to such payments is sufficient without corroboration, Hodges v. Bennett, 29 L. J. M. C. 224. In that case Bramwell, B., said:—"The evidence of the mother must be corroborated in some material particular; that is, she must be corroborated to the satisfaction of the justices, but not as to the payment of money. No doubt under the 7 & 8 Vict., c. 101, s. 3, the justices must inquire into the fact of payment within the twelve months to ascertain whether they have jurisdiction, but not further."

Under the Divided Parishes Act, 1876, s. 34, which enables a person to acquire a settlement by residence it is provided that "an order of removal in respect of a settlement acquired under this section shall not be made on the evidence of the person to be removed without such corroboration as the justices or court think sufficient." No decision has been given upon the part of the section, but the principles we have already illustrated ought to be amply sufficient to determine any question which may present itself for decision. There must be some evidence beyond the pauper's statement, but any evidence which is legally admissible whether of witnesses, documents, or the like, may be tendered in corroboration; and such evidence must be upon some material point such as would convince the court of the truth of the rest of the statement. But it is not necessary that the corroboration should go to every point or even to every material point if the court is satisfied with the corroboration already given.—Justice of the Peace.

PARTICULARS AND CONDITIONS OF SALE.

(Continued from page 313, ante.)

In our previous article, we stated our intention of providing some general conditions of sale. It will be essential for the success of our project that they are made generally acceptable. We propose, therefore, first to print a draft of them annotated and explained. We shall then be happy to receive any communications and suggestions from our readers with regard to them. We shall then, after making any improvements which may be necessary, print them in a continuous form as the Law Times conditions. The following conditions, therefore, are not the Law Times conditions, but only proposed ones. We mention this as it might lead to great inconvenience if different sets of conditions existed each bearing the same name. We have to express our obligations to the Common Form Conditions of Birmingham, Liverpool, and Sheffield, which were in use previously to the Act.

It will be convenient first shortly to mention the sections of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, and the Conveyancing Act, 1881, which bear on the subject. We shall cite the former Act as V. P. A. and the latter as C. A.

Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874.

Sec. 2 (1). On sale of lease or underlease (for years) title to freehold cannot be called for. Sec. 2 (2). Recitals and statements of facts, &c., twenty years old, are prima facie evidence. Sec. 2 (3). Equitable right to production of deeds is sufficient. Sec. 2 (4). Covenants for production to be furnished at purchaser's expense. Sec. 2 (5). If vendor retains part of the estate he retains the deeds. Sec. 8 cures non-registration of wills in Middlesex and Yorkshire in certain cases. These sections only apply to land, and sect. 2 (1) does not apply to lease for lives.

Conveyancing Act, 1881.

Sec. 3 (1). On sale of underlease (for years), purchaser cannot call for title to lease. Sec. 3 (2). On sale of enfranchised copyholds, purchaser cannot call for title to make enfranchisement. Sec. 3 (3). Recitals of documents dated before the time for commencement of title to be deemed prima facie correct. No production of or information about such documents can be required. This applies to "property" generally. Sec. 3 (4). On sale of lease, it is to be assumed prima facie that it was duly granted, and receipt for last rent due to be prima facie evidence of performance of covenants. Sec. 3 (5). On sale of underlease, similar provisions as to underlease and superior leases. Sec. 3 (6). Expenses generally thrown on purchaser. Sec. 3 (7). Purchaser of two lots can only require common title.

Other sections in the Act relate to matters connected with the completion of sales; thus sect. 8 deals with the rights of purchaser as to execution of the deed; sect. 9 with production and custody of title deeds; sect. 14 renders proof of performance of covenants of leases of less importance; sect. 38 relates to trustees' receipts; sect. 56 to payment of purchase money to solicitor; sect. 61 to payment of advance on joint account.

DRAFT PARTICULARS AND CONDITIONS OF SALE.

To be sold by auction, by M _____, at _____, on the _____ day of _____, 18____, at _____ o'clock, subject to the following conditions of sale.

PARTICULARS.

[Here insert a fair and accurate description of the property to be sold. Mention the tenure, and any incumbrances, &c., to which it is sold subject. See Law Times, June, 24, p. 136.]

DRAFT SPECIAL CONDITIONS OF SALE.

The property will be sold subject to the conditions following, and also to the Law Times General Conditions of Sale, 1882, a copy of which is annexed. If there is any variance or inconsistency between these conditions and the said general conditions, these conditions shall prevail :

1. The title shall commence with—
  2. The day fixed for the completion of the purchase shall be the day of 18
- [Here follow other special conditions.]

DRAFT GENERAL CONDITIONS OF SALE.

Rights of Vendor Reserved.

"1. The vendor reserves to himself the following rights, viz. : (1) A right to bid by himself or one agent ; (2) a right to withdraw the property from sale, either in the event of a disputed bidding, or without offering the same for competition or declaring the reserved price ; (3) a right to arrange the property in other lots than those in the particulars, and to consolidate two or more lots into one."

As to this condition, see Dart, 118, 194 ; Pollock on Contracts, 174 ; and 30 & 31 Vict., c. 48. If the sale is without reserve, it should be so stated in the particulars or special conditions.

The Auction.

"2. The amount of each bidding shall from time to time be prescribed by the auctioneer, and no bidding shall be retracted. Subject to the rights hereinbefore reserved to the vendor, the highest bidder shall be the purchaser ; and, if any dispute arise concerning a bidding, the property shall be put up at a former bidding, or the auctioneer, whose decision shall be final, shall determine the same."

It is believed that the condition against retraction of any bidding only binds people who are in some way connected with the parties to the sale ; but it is usual to insert it : (Sug. V. & P. 14 ; Dart, 124.)

The Deposit.

"3. The purchaser shall, immediately after the sale, pay to the vendor or his solicitor a deposit of £10 per cent. on the amount of the purchase money, and sign an agreement in a form annexed to these conditions to pay the remainder of the purchase money, and complete the purchase according to the conditions of sale."

As to this, see Dart, 125. If deposit will be large, provision should be made, by a special condition, for investment at interest.

Requisitions and Objections.

"4. The purchaser shall deliver to the vendor's solicitor a statement in writing of all his objections and requisitions in respect of the title, and of all matters appearing on the abstract particulars or conditions of sale, within twenty-one days from the delivery of the abstract, and all further objections and requisitions arising out of the replies to any former objection or requisition within ten days from the delivery of such replies. In default of such objections and requisitions (if none), and subject only to such (if any) the title shall be deemed accepted, and all other objections and requisitions waived. Time shall be in all respects of the essence of this condition."

As to the above condition see Dart, 157, 159 ; Re Tanqueray-Willams and Landau (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 542), and Want v. Stallibras (L. Rep. 8 Ex. 175). It should be noticed that no time is specified for delivery of the abstract. This omission is made advisedly : see Wolst. & T. 111, note, and compare Dart, 5th edit. 125, 126, and Davidson 1, 540, and see Upperton v. Nicholson (25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 4 ; L. Rep. 6 Ch. App. 486) ; and Venn v. Cattell (27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 469). Both Wolstenholme and Davidson omit the provision from their general conditions. In sales under the court it should be inserted as a special condition ; see 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 56, and Alph. Pr. 738. There is no need to insert condition as to giving one abstract in case of purchase of two lots under common title : C. A., s. 3 (7). If time is by condition essence of contract extension of time is not an absolute waiver of such condition : (Barclay v. Messenger, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 350).

(To be continued.)

A FAMOUS FRENCH CRIMINAL LAWYER.

M. Lachaud, who exercised a magical influence over juries, was three years ago called upon to defend a girl named Marie Biere, who had shot at her paramour with a revolver and wounded him so dangerously that for weeks he lay at the point of death. Marie Biere was not an artless girl wreaking frantic vengeance on a man who had seduced her, but a person of worthless antecedents, who, having formed a liaison with a young gentleman of property, wished to induce him to marry her and shot him because he was going to marry some one else. It ought to have been regarded as an aggravating circumstance in her crime that her paramour had not sought to cast her off penniless, but had liberally settled an income of £144 a year on her for life ; and yet it was precisely on this fact that M. Lachaud based his most masterly defence of the girl and obtained her acquittal. He fully admitted how bad Mlle. Biere's antecedents had been ; "but," he asked, with his fiery eloquence, "what has that to do with it ? If this poor creature conceived a true and tender feeling of love for this man, if she had cherished the dream of becoming his wife and leading a life of purity thenceforth, was it not a most pitiable thing that her hopes of redemption should have been destroyed ? You saw how she spurned his money—her love had purified her—he had won her heart and his desertion made her desperate. Are you going now by your verdict to affirm that women who have once fallen shall never be allowed to love, shall never blot out the past, shall be subject all their lives to the degradation of offers such as this by which Marie Biere's lover sought, as he cynically said, to compensate her ? Compensation at the rate of 800*l.* a month for a broken heart ! Compensation by insult for a wrong most cruel, most worthy of good men's compassion !" There were numbers of fine ladies, actresses, authors—the author of the "Dame aux Camelias" among them—who wept in court during this stirring address ; and the bewildered jury brought in a verdict of not guilty, which was hailed with tremendous applause, waving of handkerchiefs and hats. Marie Biere, in leaving the court, received an enthusiastic ovation from the crowd in the Salle des Pas Perdus, and for several days afterward the girl's lodgings were beset by warm-hearted people, who brought her bouquets, cards, and more substantial gifts. But her acquittal produced most disastrous consequences. It led, in fact, to a very epidemic of shooting and vitriol throwing. In the course of the last two years, at least twenty girls have been arraigned at the assizes for seeking reparation for their blighted hopes vi et armis, and M. Lachaud's famous speech, repeated with every kind of variation suitable to particular circumstances, by barristers great and small, has always led to acquittals. In one of these cases, M. Georges Lachaud, nephew of the great Lachaud, had to meet the remonstrances of the public prosecutor, who plainly pointed out that the constant acquittal of adventuresses who had no object but to bring themselves into notoriety by committing murder, was really a public scandal and a danger to society. "I contend on the contrary, that such acquittals are tending unmistakably to moralize society," answered M. Georges Lachaud. "By proving that you have no sympathy with young men of loose morals, you are making them cautious. All laws have failed to make them virtuous, but one such verdict as you may render can frighten them into becoming so."—Cornhill Magazine.

A RETURN of the proceedings of the Land Commission up to June 30 shows that of 78,719 applications to have fair rents fixed, 1,068 were withdrawn, 1,714 dismissed or struck out, and in 9,845 cases "fair rents" were fixed. There were 9,869 cases in which fair rents were fixed by agreement. The applications to have leases declared void numbered 1,509, and of these 98 were declared void, 615 were struck out, and 808 withdrawn or compromised ; 2,699 applications were lodged, and 770 were disposed of.

THE LEGAL PROFESSION IN FRANCE.

The legal profession in France is divided and subdivided much more minutely, and is much more closely restricted, than in England. There are avocats or barristers, avoués or solicitors, agréés or agents in commercial Courts, and notaires or notaries who alone draw wills and deeds. Avocats differ but little from barristers. They cannot sue for their fees; but they do not give credit, and their fees are not recoverable from the losing party. They have exclusive audience, but in their absence the avoué may be heard. They may personally be condemned in costs for a default. The number of avoués is limited; partnerships are forbidden, and entrance can be obtained into the profession only by waiting for a vacancy and buying the practice. Litigants must employ an avoué. Aggréés practice in the commercial Courts only, and are admitted on the presentation of a retiring member. Their number is limited to fifteen in Paris, although there were twenty-one in 1809. There are further sub-divisions. A litigant must employ an agréé in a commercial Court, an avoué de première instance in the civil Courts of first instance, an avoué d'appel in the Appeal Court, and an avocat de cassation, who is both avoué and avocat, in the Cour de Cassation, the highest Court in France. This is something like the state of things which existed with us in the days when sergeants had exclusive audience in the Court of Common Pleas, proctors and advocates in the Probate and Divorce Courts, when the City pleaders flourished, and before "Jacob Omnium" had his celebrated litigation in the Palace Court. It is obvious that the close relationship between a client and a solicitor, so important a feature in English life, cannot exist in France, where the legal profession consists of little but groups of officers attached to their respective Courts. The Americans' travestie of the division of labour between barrister and solicitor, as "being lathered in one shop and shaved in another," was nothing to this. On the other hand, the system of monopoly seems to keep down the cost of litigation in France. Business can always be done cheaply, if there is enough of it.—Law Journal.

THE PUBLIC LIBRARIES ACTS.

The right to demand a poll as an incident of those meetings in which the ratepayers of a parish in vestry are assembled for purposes of deliberation is one of the elementary rules which most of us are supposed to know or learn almost instinctively. Wherever and whenever large numbers of persons meet for almost any purpose the whole class of persons invited or qualified seldom come forth; there are the maimed, the halt, and the blind, the old, the infirm, the negligent, the apathetic, who do not attend to the appointment. The building is never full; there are always some short of the total available strength of public opinion. And there are always a considerable percentage of persons who for urgent private affairs are elsewhere engaged, and cannot come at the time appointed. Hence whenever a matter of great interest is in hand, it is reasonable and proper that there should be some mode of bringing to bear, with the least inconvenience, the greatest possible number of votes, so as to satisfy the promoters of the movement. Such is the key to the whole art and mystery of a poll in a vestry meeting. The first meeting is rather of a tentative or experimental character. There may be a show of hands, and a rough and ready mode of guessing thereby how the total number of persons are inclined to vote. But it is better that there should be a further and better mode of eliciting the universal opinion in which the greatest possible number of persons may concur with the least possible inconvenience. Hence the whole doctrine is rather a conclusion of common sense than a mere arbitrary rule, the origin and object of which are so often inexplicable.

The soundness and universality of the right to demand a poll have often been somewhat ostentatiously demonstrated in some of the decisions of the courts, as if it required elucidation. Thus in the case of Anthony v. Sayer, 1 Hagg. Cons. 13, it is laid down that where a poll is demanded the election commences with it, as being the regular mode of popular elections, the show of hands being only a rude and imperfect declaration of the sentiments of the electors. It often happens that on a show of hands the person has a majority who on a poll is lost in a minority, and if parties could afterwards recur to the show of hands there would be no certainty or regularity in elections. When a poll is demanded it is thus an abandonment of what has been done before. Everything anterior is not of the substance of the election nor to be so received. And as usual with many of the judgments of Tindal, C.J., what he said in the case of Campbell v. Mound, 5 A. & E. 879, well expresses the standard view taken of the same matter. That learned judge said, "We think such right to demand a poll is in point of law a necessary incident or consequence to the mode of election by show of hands, wherever it is not by special custom excluded. Independently of any authority upon the subject, the recourse to a poll where the population of the parish is large appears to be the only mode of ascertaining with precision the numbers of those who vote on each side, and the right of each elector to vote. Again it is under the same circumstances the only mode by which each individual elector can have the power of expressing his opinion at all; for in the case of populous parishes no vestry room can be large enough to contain the whole body. Still further where the election is carried on with any warmth of popular feeling it is the only mode by which a large portion of the community can express their opinion with freedom and security."

Thus the whole object of the poll is merely to get at the views of the greatest number of persons who will take the trouble to state them, and hence all the machinery must be devised in order to accomplish that one end. The right must be conceded to any ratepayer, and when conceded care should be taken to allow ample notice to all, so that the local orators may in the meantime bring to bear all their eloquence on the rival propositions. Some Acts of Parliament it is true have varied the mode of arriving at the sense of a vestry or meeting of qualified persons by restricting it to the greatest number of those who actually attend or by restricting the decision to a particular proportionate majority such as three or two to one. But unless some Act of Parliament has expressly or by necessary implication declared that the natural and ordinary right to a poll shall no longer be available, then it is good sense still to construe the Act as not excluding the best and only true way of arriving at the opinions of the largest number of persons, and that is of course in other words describing that there shall still be as a last resort the right to demand and secure the exercise of a poll.

To show how slow the courts are to construe a particular statute as impliedly revoking the right to a poll, reference may be made to Reg. v. How, 33 L. J. M. C. 53, where the Highway Act was considered in reference to that point. That Act said that a resolution should be come to by a majority of two-thirds of the votes of the vestrymen present at such meeting; and yet this was held not to exclude the right of any vestryman to demand a poll. And a like conclusion has been long ago arrived at under Sturges Bourne's Act and other statutes. In short unless a statute almost in so many words distinctly abolishes the right to a poll for some intelligible reason, it is difficult to find an instance of the right to a poll being abolished.

Two recent cases have, however, been stoutly fought under the Public Libraries Act where a mode of ascertaining the determination of the ratepayers as to the adoption of those Acts has been described, and the point has been discussed as to whether this supersedes the right to a poll. The Public Libraries Act, 1855, 18 & 19 Vict., c. 70, s. 8, enacts that upon the requisition in writing of at least 10 ratepayers of any parish of 5,000 persons, the overseers shall appoint a time for a public meeting of the ratepayers in order to determine whether the Act shall be adopted for the parish. And if at such meeting two-thirds (now more than one-half according to 29 & 30 Vict., c. 114, s. 5) of the ratepayers then present shall determine that the Act ought to be adopted for such parish, the same shall come into operation in such parish; provided that in parishes of 8,000 inhabitants 10 ratepayers may deliver a requisition that the votes be taken according to the provisions of Sturges Bourne's Act, 58 Geo. 2, c. 69. It may be observed that the Amendment Act 29 & 30 Vict., c. 104, which assimilated the laws in England and Scotland, repeals so much of the Scotch Act as authorised the demanding of a poll. This seemed to show that the draftsman of the Act 29 & 30 Vict., c. 104, thought a poll had not been demandable under the English Act, 18 & 19 Vict., c. 70, s. 8; but then he may have misapprehended the construction, and his mistake would not have the effect of altering the true construction.

In the case of R. v. St. Matthew, Bethnal-green, 32 L. T. N. S. 558, a rule had been obtained to command a poll to be taken under the following circumstances. There had been a meeting called of ratepayers in a large parish of 17,000 ratepayers in order to determine whether they should adopt the Public Libraries Act. The meeting was duly held and a resolution to adopt the Act was put to the meeting, and on a show of hands was declared to be carried. Thereupon nine ratepayers demanded a poll which the chairman refused, and another meeting of ratepayers was held afterwards which declared the chairman's act of refusing a poll illegal, and that the determination of that prior meeting should not be acted upon. A rule was obtained for a mandamus by those who wished the Public Libraries Act to be adopted, and the point of law was argued whether the right to a poll was impliedly taken away by the Public Libraries Act. The Court, after hearing both sides, came to the conclusion that there was no such implied repeal; and that, in accordance with the series of former decisions and with common sense, the right to demand a poll remained as before unassailable. It was decided that any ratepayer who was dissatisfied with the resolution of the meeting might still ask for a poll, and was entitled as of right to it. And the Court boldly stated that the draftsman of the later Act of 29 & 30 Vict., c. 114, had been under a delusion as to the correct construction if he considered that the right to a poll had been taken away by the 18 & 19 Vict., c. 70.

Since this last decision, which was in 1875, another statute—namely, 40 & 41 Vict., c. 54, s. 1—had passed which recited the Free Libraries Acts for England and Scotland, and enacted that it shall be competent for the prescribed local authority in any place or community which has the power to adopt one of the above recited Acts to ascertain the opinions of the majority of the ratepayers either by the prescribed public meeting or by the issue of a voting paper to each ratepayer, and the subsequent collection and sorting thereof, and any expense in connexion with such voting papers shall be borne in the same way as the expense of a public meeting would be borne, and the decision of the majority so ascertained shall be equally binding.

Another case has very recently been brought before the Court as to the right to a poll when ratepayers deliberate on the adoption of these Acts. In Reg. v. Wimbledon Local Board, ante p. 292, a meeting of ratepayers had been duly summoned to consider the expediency of adopting the Public Libraries Act. A resolution to adopt the Acts had been carried after a show of hands. Two ratepayers then demanded a poll, but the chairman refused it, and then the meeting was dissolved. Afterwards a rule for a mandamus was applied for in order to compel the local board to carry out the resolution. And this was opposed by the local board on the ground that the right to a poll had been illegally refused and so that the resolution of the first meeting was void. Those who were anxious to enforce the resolution, contended before the Court that whatever may have been the law at the time of Reg. v. St. Matthew, Bethnal-green, that law had been now entirely changed by the recent Act, 40 & 41 Vict., c. 54, which impliedly superseded it and directed in future that the majority should be conclusively discovered either by the public meeting or by the collection of voting papers. But the Queen's Bench Division, consisting of Denman, J., and Hawkins, J., thought that no such change had been effected by the recent Act, and that the matter remained as before leaving a right to a poll still inherent in each of the ratepayers. The case was taken to the Court of Appeal and more elaborately discussed. But that Court has also unanimously affirmed the judgment. Cotton, L.J., observed as to the late Act of 40 & 41 Vict., c. 44: "The voting may be by the prescribed public meeting in which case, if there was a common law right to a poll before the Act, it would continue to exist; or the local authority may dispense with the preliminary meeting of the ratepayers and may ask them to go to the poll and express their opinion without holding any such meeting. In my opinion this Act does not take away the common law right to demand a poll in cases where the meeting is held."

These cases, therefore, leave it uncontroversial that in meetings of ratepayers the right to a poll exists in full force. It is true that a public meeting should always be held, for by that means alone arguments on both sides can be urged. But in any case it must ultimately be left to the whole of the ratepayers by virtue of a poll, if demanded, to determine the matter conclusively.—Justice of the Peace.

LAWYERS ON LIBERTY AND PROPERTY.

At the recent meeting of the Liberty and Property Defence League, the following extracts from letters were read, among others: "My opinions," wrote Lord Bramwell, "of half a century standing, are as strong as ever. I like to be governed as little as possible, and what I like for myself I like for others. No one can know my wants as well as myself, and I am very sure that no one will take so much pains to gratify them." Lord Penzance wrote: "Since the gross departure from all principle has set the example in Ireland of fixing rent by law, numerous classes are beginning to turn their eyes to the Legislature to improve their position; and the sooner a firm stand is made in the assertion of those principles of fair dealing between man and man, which were once watchwords of the Liberal party, the better it will be for all classes."

QUOTATIONS IN COURT.

It is dangerous to quote in Courts of law, even when the quotation is familiar. In the course of the trial of Doherty v. Loather, Baron Huddleston remarked that he would have to interpret the rules of racing and of the Jockey Club, however incompetent to do so. Whereupon the defendant's counsel said gallantly, "'I would not hear your enemy say so,' my lord," quoting Hamlet's protest against Horatio's self-imputed "truant disposition." This was reported as "I do not hear, my lord, your enemies say so;" as if the judge had enemies who went about saying that he knew too much about racing, whereas, in truth and in fact, the learned baron has no enemies at all. Next day the report was corrected by substituting, "I would not hear your enemies say so," which scarcely mends the matter. It is hard that misquotations should be suffered at the hands of brother reporters by an eminent law reporter; for such Shakespeare, amongst other things, appears to have been, as one, at least, of his cases is preserved, and is confirmed by the report of Plowden.—Law Journal.

At a Court held by the Queen at Windsor on the 20th June, the Right Hon. John David, Baron Fitzgerald, Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, and Lord Justice Bowen were, by Her Majesty's command, sworn of Her Majesty's Most Hon. Privy Council, and took their places at the board accordingly.

LAND TENURE IN ENGLAND.

At a meeting of the Dialectical Society, held last Wednesday, a paper was read by Sir A. Hobhouse on the "Law relating to the ownership and transfer of land." Professor Hunter occupied the chair. Sir A. Hobhouse said it could not be denied that among thoughtful men there was a growing dissatisfaction with the state of the Land Laws. While the population was increasing, the ownership of the land was falling into fewer and fewer hands, and it was impossible not to observe that the ugly phenomena of pauperism and prostitution were simultaneously increasing. Amongst the remedies suggested were the nationalisation of the land, the prohibition of mortgages, and the limitation of the areas of estates. With the first suggestion he could not sympathise, because it presupposed the existence of moral conditions to which mankind had not yet attained; nor was he inclined to agree to such a supervision of one's affairs as was represented by the other alternatives. What was wanted was less rather than extended interference. The mischief lay in shutting out living men from the full management of their own affairs, and he thought that an amendment of the law in this particular, coupled with the institution of greater facilities for the transfer of land, would remedy most of the evils complained of.

SOME IMPORTANT WILL CASES.

Cases on the construction of wills are apt to turn on minute differences of expression; so that, amidst the infinity of cases distinguished and followed, there is often but little instruction to be obtained from them as to the general principles on which the court proceeds. Three recent cases, however, are of considerable value, as laying down and illustrating important and comprehensive principles of construction, and they are destined no doubt to be frequently discussed and applied.

The first of the decisions to which we refer is that of the Court of Appeal in Re Bywater (L. Rep. 18 Ch. Div. 17). The importance of that case consists in its having laid down what we believe to be a new rule of construction—viz., that where there is a gift in a will, followed by "a direction how that gift is to be paid, which direction is inconsistent with the language of the gift itself" the Court will strike out the direction "as a superfluous inconsistency and an inaccuracy," instead of relying upon the rule which makes the latter of two repugnant clauses in a will prevail over the earlier of them. The words which we have placed in quotation marks are from the judgment of Lord Justice James, which was concurred in by Lord Justice Brett. Lord Justice Cotton thus stated the principle on which the Court proceeded: "We must . . . not increase or alter the thing given by a direction as to the time of payment." The Court reversed the decision of the Master of the Rolls, who had held the two clauses to be absolutely inconsistent, and had therefore given effect to the later of them, according to the well-known principle already referred to.

It has often been laid down that a court of construction will struggle to avoid the application of the rule as to repugnant clauses, and will, if necessary, put a somewhat forced interpretation upon one of them, if it may so be made to harmonise with the rest of the will. This principle was strikingly illustrated in the second of the cases to which we refer, that of Rhodes v. Rhodes (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 463; L. Rep. 7 App. Cas. 192). This was a case before the Privy Council, on appeal from the Courts of New Zealand, where the will the construction of which was in dispute had been the subject of much difference of judicial opinion. The solicitor who prepared the will had made no provision for future children of the testator, and it had been sent back to him to insert clauses providing for them which had been contained in a previous will. In inserting these clauses he had, without instructions, but in the bona fide belief that the words were proper to be contained in the will, added the following introductory clause to certain subsequent provisions, "And from and after the decease of my said wife without having issue of our said marriage." The effect of these words, according to their obvious meaning, would have been to postpone the operation of certain provisions made by the will for a natural daughter of the testator till after the decease of his widow, a result certainly not contemplated by him or his solicitor. A less natural construction of the words was to restrict their effect to certain properties which were, by the subsequent clauses of the will, given to the widow for her life; and this construction was adopted by the Judicial Committee, whose judgment was delivered by Lord Blackburn. It was found, on going carefully through the will, that whilst this restricted meaning would harmonise with the general scope of the whole, the more obvious meaning was inconsistent with several of the provisions contained in the will, and would lead to very anomalous results. Several authorities in the House of Lords were referred to as laying down the principle that, whilst the words of a will must generally be taken in their natural meaning, notwithstanding the harsh and even absurd consequences which may arise, yet the fact that such consequences would follow is an argument in favour of adopting a more rational, though less natural, construction, if such other construction be borne out by the whole context of the will.

The third case, that of Morrell v. Morrell (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 495; L. Rep. 7 P. Div. 68), involved another point which also arose in Rhodes v. Rhodes, though it had to be decided differently in the two cases. In Rhodes v. Rhodes it was sought to apply the principle thus stated in Lord Blackburn's judgment, that "when it is sufficiently proved that the instrument comprised his (the testator's) will; but that from fraud, or perhaps from inadvertence, such as that in the Goods of Duane (2 Sw. & Tr. 590) the instrument which he actually executed contained also something which was not his will, the latter part is to be rejected." The Judicial Committee, however, held that this principle could not be applied to the case before them, where the mistake was simply in the wording by which the draftsman sought to effectuate the testator's intention, and the will had been read over to the testator; obviously, if such an argument were acceded to, many wills would have to be rectified, and endless confusion would result. In Morrell v. Morrell, however, the principle above stated, which had been adopted by the House of Lords in Fulton v. Andrew (32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 209; L. R. 7 H. L. 448), was applied by Sir James Hannen. The jury in that case found that the word "forty" had been introduced, without instructions from the testator, by mistake, and without his knowledge, into a gift of shares to his nephew, and that the will had not been read over to him; and his Lordship directed the word to be struck out of the will accordingly. The only difference between the case before him and that of Fulton v. Andrew was, that in the latter case a whole clause was struck out, and his Lordship considered that the same principle must apply to a single word.—Law Times.

VALUERS IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

At the hearing of Fyffe (tenant) v. Beatty (landlord), at Enniskillen, on the 30th ult., before Mr. BLAKE, Q.C., the learned County Court Judge said:—In this case I shall read this letter to show you how I have endeavoured to have facilities for ascertaining a fair rent. On April 1st, April Fool's Day—(a laugh)—this letter was written to the Clerk of the Land Commission in Dublin:—

"Peace Office, Enniskillen, 1st April, 1882.

"SIR,—I am directed by the County Court Judge to communicate with you. He has a number of Originating Notices coming before him at the present sessions, and he desires to appoint Mr. John Wray, as a person in whom he has the most implicit confidence, as a valuer to the Court. The Judge wishes to know if Mr. Wray when appointed by him will be paid by the Treasury, and what are the usual fees allowed to valuers.

"I would feel obliged if you would reply by return, as the sessions commences for these cases on Tuesday.

"Your obedient servant,
"J. W. HANRAHAN.

"D. Godley, Esq., Land Commission, Dublin."

Mr. Godley, the Secretary, in reply wrote:—

"The Irish Land Commission,
"24 Upper Merrion-street, Dublin.
"4th April, 1882.

"SIR,—I am directed by the Irish Land Commissioners to acknowledge the receipt of your communication, dated the 1st inst., and to inform you they have no power to pay a valuer appointed by the County Court Judge.

"The expense of employing a valuer, under the 37th section of the Land Law Act, must be borne by the parties as the Court may think just.

"The Commissioners are informed that the fees of valuers vary from two guineas to five.

"I am, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"DENIS GODLEY.

"J. W. Hanrahan, Esq., Clerk of the Peace
"Co. Fermanagh."

On the day I opened the last Sessions at Newtownbutler, the 16th of June, I directed Mr. Hanrahan to write another letter:—

"Peace Office, Enniskillen, 16th June, 1882.

"SIR,—I am directed by the County Court Judge to communicate with you, as the officers of the Land Commission, respecting the appointment of a valuer for this county. Without the assistance of such a person the Judge cannot hope to discharge his duties under the Act, as such aid is as requisite for him as for the Commissioners, the Sub-Commissioners, and the County Court Judges to whose districts valuers have been sent. He desires me to request that you will communicate the contents of this letter to the Commissioners that they may take the necessary steps to provide him with a competent valuer. I shall feel obliged if you will at your earliest convenience let me know the result of this communication, as the Land Cases for this County will be heard next week, or early the week after.

"Your obedient servant,
"J. W. HANRAHAN.

"D. Godley, Esq., Land Commission, Dublin."

Very promptly Mr. Godley answered it on the 17th as follows:—

"Irish Land Commission,
"Dublin, 17th June, 1882.

"SIR,—I am directed by the Irish Land Commissioners to say that they regret that all their valuers being at present engaged they are unable to send one to the assistance of the County Court Judge of Fermanagh.

"I am, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"DENIS GODLEY.

"J. W. Hanrahan, Esq., Enniskillen."

Now as a matter of fact, two of the Commissioners, Judge O'Hagan and Mr. Vernon, were in Castlebar hearing cases on the 17th June, and only Mr. Commissioner Litton was in Dublin. Therefore it would be difficult to communicate directly with those Commissioners, although the Secretary says:—"I am directed by the Irish Land Commission." He says he is directed by them, they being at the time out of town. That appears by the newspapers—in the Freeman's Journal, and in it I find the presence of Judge O'Hagan and Mr. Vernon at Castlebar on the 17th, and they continued there till Monday the 19th. It may be that when they have not a valuer that this is a stereotyped answer, and it is after the manner of other officials saying:—"I am directed by the Lords of the Treasury." However, I am without a valuer now, and I wish it to be seen how I cannot appoint a valuer, for he would have to go out, and I must mulct either the landlord or the tenant, and treat them in a different manner than the Sub-Commissioners and some of the County Court Judges are treating those who apply to them. Well, I think it an unreasonable thing to say that the landed proprietors and the tenants are to bear the costs of my sending out a valuer in whom I have confidence. I do not see why they should not get the same advantages of other counties. I have said this for the purpose of explaining my position. I am called upon, like the Israelites in Egypt, to make bricks without straw.

NOTES OF CASES.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

COURT OF APPEAL.

(Before LAW, C., MORRIS, C.J., DEASY and FITZGIBBON, L.JJ.)

HARPUR v. DAVIES.

April 27, 1882.—Land Law Act, 1881, s. 58 (5)—Fixing judicial rent—Pastoral holding, what constitutes.

Appeal, by tenant, from decision of Land Commission (Litton, Q.C.), setting aside originating notice to fix judicial rent. The circumstances are sufficiently explained in the judgment.

Spaight v. Ir. Church Temp. Com., 11 Ir. L. T. Rep. 140, was cited.

Without calling on counsel for the respondent, the judgment of the court was delivered by LAW, C.—It appears to us that this tenancy is one which falls within the terms of the exception in section 58, sub-section 3, of the Land Law (Ir.) Act, 1881, as being a holding which has been let mainly for the purpose of pasture. The contract of tenancy is embodied in a written instrument, dated the 13th April, 1865, whereby the lands were let to the appellant, subject to certain provisions, the most material of which for our present purpose are as follows:—After demising the lands of Naptown, containing about 172 statute acres, to be held from year to year at a certain rent, the agreement proceeds thus: "All the land that is not now under grass, to be properly sown by the tenant, this present spring, with clover and hayseed, with the exception of one field, which must be well and properly cleaned, and be put under green crop; and also with the exception of the paddock lying to the south of the farmyard, and the field adjoining it to the south-east;" describing the paddock and adjoining field as containing eight acres. It then further provides that the field which was to be cleaned and put under green crop the first year should in the next season be laid down with clover and grass-seed, whilst the eight acres, consisting of the specified paddock and adjoining field, might be kept in tillage, or laid down in grass, at the tenant's option. The natural meaning of this would seem to be that all the farm was to be kept in grass, with the exception of the eight acres just referred to. Subject to that exception, every field that was not already in grass the tenant bound himself to put into grass; and it cannot, therefore, be reasonably contended that when he had once done this he was to be at liberty forthwith to break it up and keep it in tillage if he pleased. That would be a very unnatural construction of the agreement, and inconsistent too with what is implied by the express permission to keep in tillage the eight acres. The plain meaning of the agreement, as it seems to me, was that, except the specified eight acres, all the farm was to be put into and kept in grass. But then it is argued that, even so, it does not follow that it was let to be used mainly for the purpose of pasture, and that if the contract admitted of the land in grass being all "meadowed," or used for the production of hay, the letting would not be one mainly for the purpose of pasture. The agreement, however, contains some further provisions which, in my opinion, show that the use of the land for meadowing or hay-farming was not in the contemplation of the parties. It contains a clause in these terms:—"The tenant is not to remove nor allow to be removed any hay from the said farm, with the exception of such portion of the hay crop of the year 1866 over and above what he may require for consumption on the farm." It then provides that if the tenant breaks up any of the land then in grass, or thereby agreed to be put under grass, he is to pay £7 an acre for the land so broken up. And, finally, in consideration of the tenant putting the land under grass, the landlord agrees to allow the tenant £10 half-yearly for the first two years. It is plain to us, on the language of this agreement, that the parties to it contemplated a letting mainly for the purpose of pasture, and nothing else. It no doubt allowed of hay being made on the farm; but, as it did not permit that hay to be removed off the farm, the parties must be taken to have intended that only so much hay should be made as would be needful for supplementing the actual pasturage of the cattle on the farm. Speaking for myself, I think the test is not whether the landlord could or could not obtain an injunction against the tenant to prevent his breaking up any of the land that was in grass—though I have a strong opinion on that point too—but rather whether, on the whole of the written contract, the court is satisfied that the use of the land for pasture was mainly what the parties had in view. As to this we are all, I believe, clearly of opinion that, having regard to the terms of this contract of tenancy, the holding was let to be used mainly for the purpose of pasture, and that the appeal should therefore be dismissed with costs.

NOTES OF ENGLISH CASES.

[From the Law Journal.]

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

COURT OF APPEAL.

(Before JESSEL, M.R., and LINDLEY, L.J.)

FORD v. KETTLE.

May 26.—Bill of sale—Registration—Affidavit of execution and attestation—Bills of Sale Act, 1878, ss. 8, 10.

A bill of sale was executed, on December 19, in favour of the plaintiff. The execution was attested by two witnesses, one of whom was a solicitor, and the other a solicitor's clerk. The attestation clause stated that the deed had been executed by the grantor in the presence of the solicitor, by whom the effect of it had been duly explained to the grantor. The bill of sale was registered on December 30, the affidavit filed on registration being made by the clerk, who deposed that the signatures of the attesting witnesses were in the respective handwriting of the solicitor and himself; but the affidavit did not state that the solicitor attested the execution of the deed, or that he was present at its execution.

On January 4 the goods comprised in the bill of sale were seized under an execution, on behalf of the defendants, who were creditors of the grantor. The plaintiff claimed the goods under the bill of sale; and the sheriff took out an interpleader summons. An issue was directed, and tried before Field, J. At the trial it was objected that the affidavit filed on registration was not sufficient under section 10 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878; and a verdict was found for the defendants.

The plaintiff applied for a new trial. The application was refused by a Divisional Court; but the Court of Appeal granted a rule nisi for a new trial; and the rule now came on for argument.

A. Charles, Q.C., and Herbert Reed for the defendants. Crump and Banks for the plaintiff.

Their LORDSHIPS discharged the rule; and held that the affidavit was insufficient, inasmuch as it did not state that the solicitor had attested the execution of the deed—i. e., that he was present at the time of its execution by the grantor. The objection was a highly technical one; but the words of the Act must be followed.

(Before JESSEL, M.R., LINDLEY and BOWEN, L.JJ.)

In re STOREY. Ex parte POPPLEWELL.

June 8.—Bill of Sale—Agreement not to register—Increased bonus—Statement of consideration—Defeasance or condition—Misdescription of grantor—Bills of Sale Act, 1878, ss. 8, 10.

This was an appeal from a decision of Bacon, C.J., confirming a decision of the Manchester County Court, whereby a bill of sale was held valid as against the trustee in bankruptcy of one of the grantors.

The grantors, who were a father and son, had applied to the respondent, who was a money lender, for a loan of £242, and offered to give a bill of sale as security. It was verbally agreed that the bill of sale should not be registered; and the sum of £100 was to be added by way of interest and bonus to the amount secured by the bill of sale, the bonus being larger than was usually demanded, in consequence of the agreement not to register. The consideration for the bill of sale was stated to be £242.

The bill of sale was, in fact, registered; and it, and the affidavit filed on registration, described the grantors by their true addresses, and added that they were both mantle manufacturers carrying on business together. They had been in partnership; but at the date of the bill of sale the business was carried on by the father alone, the son being in the position of a clerk. The property belonged to the father alone, though both executed the deed. The father filed a liquidation petition, and his trustee now appealed.

Ambrose, Q.C., and Bradbury, for the appellant, contended, first, that the agreement not to register should either have been stated as part of the consideration, or registered as a defeasance or condition making the bill of sale void as against a trustee in bankruptcy or an execution creditor; and, secondly, that there was misdescription of the grantors.

Winslow, Q.C., and Yates, for the grantee, were not called upon.

Their LORDSHIPS held that the agreement not to register was collateral, and not part of the consideration, and need not, therefore, be stated; neither was it a defeasance or condition which ought to be registered. They also considered that there was no sufficient misdescription of the grantors to affect the validity of the registration, because, as to the son, any misdescription was immaterial, he not being a bankrupt; and, as to the father, the statement that he was carrying on business with the son was mere surplusage, and not calculated to mislead.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

PULLING v. THE GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

June 7.—Administration—Personal injury to intestate occasioning expense—Damage to intestate's estate, action for—Loss of intestate's wages.

This was a demurrer to a statement of claim, in which the plaintiff sued as administratrix of her late husband, who had, as was alleged, been run over by a train owing to defendants' negligence. The injuries he sustained prevented him from following his business, and he was wholly incapacitated until his death; and, meanwhile, incurred expenses for medical attendance and nursing, all which diminished the value of his personal estate.

Lush Wilson in support of the demurrer.

W. H. Clay for the plaintiff.

The COURT (DENMAN, J., and POLLOCK, B.) gave judgment for the defendants, holding that the alleged cause of action did not survive; and that the administratrix could not sue for damages to the estate occasioned by the expenses and loss of earnings.

PARSONS (Appellant) v. BIRMINGHAM DAIRY COMPANY (Respondents).

June 16.—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict., c. 63), ss. 6, 12, 13, 14, 20, 21—Sale of Food and Drugs Amendment Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict., c. 30)—Analysis—Notification to Seller—Private Purchaser—Public Officer.

Case stated by the stipendiary magistrate of Birmingham under 20 & 21 Vict., c. 43.

It appeared from the case that the respondents, to whom a certain quantity of milk had been sold by the appellant, kept a sample of it upon their premises for two days after delivery to them, before they notified to the appellant their intention of having it analysed.

The learned magistrate convicted the appellant, holding that section 14 of 38 & 39 Vict., c. 63, which enacts that "the person purchasing any article with the intention of submitting the same to analysis shall . . . forthwith notify to the seller . . . his intention to have the same analysed by the public analyst," did not apply to a purchase by a private purchaser, but was limited to one by a public officer.

Vesey Fitzgerald for the appellant.

Baylis for the respondents.

The COURT (FIELD, J., and CAVE, J.) reversed the decision of the magistrate.

HETHERINGTON (Appellant) v. THE NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY (Respondents).

June 20.—Negligence—Action on behalf of relatives of person killed—Pecuniary interest in life of deceased—Evidence—9 & 10 Vict., c. 93.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, who was the father of the deceased, to recover damages under Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict., c. 93) for the death of his son through the respondents' negligence.

At the trial in the County Court, the plaintiff, who was fifty-nine years old, deposed that his son was twenty-five; that he (the plaintiff) was nearly blind, and suffered from some injury to the leg; that the deceased was always kind to him, and used to contribute to his support some five or six years ago, when he (the plaintiff) was unable to work for six months.

At the close of the case, the plaintiff was nonsuited, on the ground that he had failed to show that he had suffered a pecuniary loss by his son's death sufficient to entitle him to maintain an action under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93.

The plaintiff appealed.

Stevenson appeared for the appellant.

Gainsford Bruce for the respondents.

Per Curiam (FIELD, J., and CAVE, J.)—There was some evidence that the plaintiff had a reasonable expectation of pecuniary advantage from a continuance of his son's life, and it was for the jury to determine what was the value of it. The nonsuit must, accordingly, be set aside.

New trial ordered.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(Before BACON, C.J.)

Re MOULSON. Ex parte KNIGHTLEY.

June 19.—Bill of sale—Registration—Affidavit of execution and attestation—Bills of Sale Act, 1878, ss. 8, 10.

Appeal from the County Court at Bradford.

A bill of sale was attested by two witnesses, one of whom was a solicitor, and the other a clerk. The affidavit filed on registration was made by the clerk, who deposed to the signatures of the attesting witnesses and to the explanation of the effect of the bill of sale by the solicitor, "one of the attesting witnesses," before its execution by the grantor; but did not otherwise state that the solicitor was present when the bill of sale was executed.

Winslow, Q.C., and Ashton Cross for the appellant.

Willis, Q.C., and F. Knight for the respondent.

The CHIEF JUDGE held, on the authority of Ford v Kettle, "Weekly Notes," June 17, 1882, p. 90, that the affidavit was insufficient, that the registration was invalid, and the bill of sale consequently inoperative as against the trustee.

ADMISSION OF A SOLICITOR.

Mr. Hubert O. West, son of Mr. Henry J. P. West, North Great George's-street, and Richelieu, County Dublin, has been admitted a Solicitor of the Court of Judicature.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOLICITORS' FEES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Will you please say in next issue what time the Schedule of Fees came, or will come, into operation. I refer to those in your issue of 8th inst.

Yours truly,

J. A. C.

July 11, 1882.

[The schedule in question was gazetted on the 27th ult., and is now in operation.—Ed.]

"THE LAW OF TAXES."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I wish some intelligent and qualified member of either branch of the legal profession would take up the above subject and publish a handy manual on it. The subject is continually turning up in sales, particularly of house property. Some taxes are merely personal debts, others are charges upon the premises, and others are subject to restrictions as to time of recovery. A book distinguishing all these taxes, general and local, and the relative liabilities of owners and occupiers, vendors and purchasers, would be a great boon to the legal profession, but particularly to the profession of

Your obedient servant,

A SOLICITOR.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Wilson's Supreme Court of Judicature Acts, Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, Rules of Court and Forms; with other Acts, Orders, Rules, and Regulations relating to the Supreme Court. With Practical Notes. Third Edition. By M. D. CHAMBERS, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, assisted by HERBERT LUSH-WILSON, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London: Stevens and Sons, 119 Chancery-lane, Law Publishers and Booksellers. 1882.

Fugitive Offenders: being the Law and Practice relating to Offenders flying to or from this Country; including the Extradition Acts and Treaties. By F. J. KIRCHNER, of the Criminal Investigation Department, Metropolitan Police. London: Stevens and Sons, 119 Chancery-lane, Law Publishers and Booksellers. 1882.

A Manual of the Law regulating the Volunteer Forces, including the Volunteer Acts 1863 and 1865, and the other Acts relating to the Volunteers. With Forms of Complaint, Summons, and Order, in all Proceedings in Courts of Summary Jurisdiction under the Acts. By WALTER ADAM BURN and WILLIAM THOMAS RAYMOND, of the Middle Temple, Esquires, Barristers-at-Law; Captains in Her Majesty's Volunteer Forces. London: Stevens and Sons, 119 Chancery-lane, Law Publishers and Booksellers. 1882.

Legal Medicine. Part I. By CHARLES MEYNOTT TIDY, M.B., F.C.S., &c., &c. London: Smith, Elder & Co., 15 Waterloo-place. 1882.

CURIOSITIES OF THE LAW OF TREASON.

The antiquity and historical continuity of the law of treason is a fact which has hardly any counterpart in the history of law in modern Europe. The authority of precedent in it is so potent that it is always difficult to say what part of it is really obsolete. A layman who reads in the Act of 11 Victoria that nothing therein should affect the statute of Edward III., does not easily imagine what a code of pitiless learning, what a record of complicated doom was thereby reopened to the modern air. The 530 years which have passed since 25 Edward III. have each added something to the mass, and no part of it is quite converted into dust. Everything about it is at once archaic and alive. The barbarous French of the old Act, the procedure with its ancient forms, the old case law that broadens slowly down, from precedent to precedent, all impress the mind like some antique national epic. The history of our law of treason is as fine a poem as the "Nibelungen-Lied." When a State criminal is now tried for high treason he would ordinarily come before some successor of the Chief Justice who has sat on the King's Bench for more than six centuries; perhaps in the very hall where Red Rose and White Rose, Lollard, Papist, Non-conformist, and Nonjuror, Cavalier and Roundhead, Plantagenet and Stuart, Jacobite and Jacobin, have been tried; they would cite the old Norman French, or rather dog-French, which the courtiers used at the height of the first French wars; the counsel would rely on the dicta of men who saw the wars of the Roses, and the wars of religion, the Commonwealth, and the Revolution. Much of the old tragic ceremony would be rehearsed, sheared, for the most part, of its mediæval barbarity. But the "quant homo fait compasser," &c., has to us still all the sacramental mystery that the lines from the Twelve Tables had to a Roman of the Empire, "caput obnubito, infelici arbori suspendito." It is much to be regretted that this tremendous page of our annals is less familiar than it was. Perhaps our lawyers have small cause now to feel interest in those maxims of constitutional right which occupied so keenly the lawyers of some former times. Does the public, does anyone, now read the "State Trials," one of the most fascinating books in the historical library? The Macaulays, the Froudes, the Greens have nothing that touch them in dramatic history, while Freeman himself is not more terribly in earnest and not so voluminous. The trials of the Queens, Ann Boleyn and Mary Stuart, of Charles Stuart and of his Judges, of Harrison and Tonge, of Vane and Sidney, of College and Cornish, of Lady Lisle and Lord Preston, of Lord Gordon and Watson, and fifty more, are hardly exceeded in pathetic power by Shakespeare himself. Anyone who knew the whole of that mine of learning, text and notes, would have a pretty idea of constitutional law. Unfortunately this profoundly touching and most instructive collection is so vast as to be to many readers practically hopeless. Most men are baffled at the sight of thirty-four closely printed volumes, each having 1,200 pages of print, in double column, in a rather illegible type, and crammed with notes till the double columns overflow.—Portnightly Review.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]Public Health Act, 1875, s. 47.

The offence of keeping pigs so as to be a nuisance does not require proof of injury to health (Banbury Urban Sanitary Authority v. Page, 51 Law J. Rep. M. C. 21).

Robson on Bankruptcy (4th Edition), 354.

Although the title of a trustee in bankruptcy relates back to the act of bankruptcy, yet where there have been mutual debts and credits, the title of the trustee to a credit does not accrue till the holder of such credit has notice of the act of bankruptcy (Elliott v. Turquand, 51 Law J. Rep. P. C. 1).

Coote on Mortgage (4th Edition), 833.

The purchaser of an equity of redemption takes subject only to existing equities, and as against him there can be no consolidation of a mortgage subsequently created by the vendor on another estate [Tassell v. Smith, 2 De Gex & J. 713; 27 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 694 overruled] (Jennings v. Jordan and Price, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 129).

Order XVI., Rule 7.

Wilson on the Judicature Acts (2nd Edition), 177.
Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 154.

A trustee sufficiently represents his cestui que trust for the purposes of a redemption action (Jennings v. Jordan, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 129).

Coote on Mortgage (4th Edition), 89.

The heir-at-law of a testator (before the will was registered) by forgery and personation mortgaged the testator's lands to an innocent mortgagee, who registered his mortgage. Held, that, notwithstanding the heirship, the title of those claiming under the will prevailed over that of the mortgagee (In re Cooper, Cooper v. Vesey, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 149).

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN COURT.—M. O'Brien, to lodge money.—J. M. O'Connell, to examine witness.—H. W. Montgomery, receiver.—J. M. O'Connell, to make order absolute.—R. H. O'Brien, receiver.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

G. S. Roper, vouch.—G. M. Hewson, rental.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—C. Lewis, final schedule.—J. Ramsay, do.

SALES IN COURT.

S. A. KELLY,	-	-	-	2 lots.
W. T. MURRAY,	-	-	-	3 "
T. MANLY	-	-	-	4 "

THURSDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

G. Graham, rental.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

M. WATSON, - - - 2 lots.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

Sir J. Ferguson, rental.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

D. M'Daniel, rental.—J. Wright, do.—J. Mallan, do.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Taylor, Richard, of Clontough, Kenmare, in the county of Kerry, Esquire. June 2; Friday, July 28, and Tuesday, August 15. James J. Malone, solr.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.—Up to the present time 20 public and 96 local Acts have been passed in a session of five months.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

Table with columns: DESCRIPTION OF STOCK, JULY (Sat, Mon, Tues, Wed, Thur, Fri), and various stock entries including Government, India Stock, Banks, Mines, Tramways, and Railways.

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d
Bank Rate—Of Discount—3 1/4 per cent., 23rd March, 1882.
Of Deposit—1 per cent., 23rd March, 1882.
Name Days—July 27th, and August 1882.
Account Days—July 28th, and August 1882.
Business commences at 1 30 p.m.
The Stock Exchange and Brokers' Offices will be closed on Saturdays during the months of July and August.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Diseases of the most formidable and chronic characters have been cured by Holloway's remedies. Ulcerations which have proved themselves incurable by any other known means have healed kindly under and purifying the regenerating influence of this excellent Ointment. Sprains, stiff joints, contracted muscles, and glandular swellings can be most safely and effectually healed by Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which can do no harm under any circumstances.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.
CREAGH—July 10, at Listowel, the wife of Francis Creagh, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.
KENNEDY—July 7, the wife of Peter V. Kennedy, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.
MACNAB—July 10, at Rostellan Villa, Brighton-avenue, Rathgar, the wife of E. S. Macnab, Esq., solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.
HILL and GAMBLE—July 12, at St. Peter's Church, Dublin, by the Rev. J. B. Keene, Rector of Navan, cousin of the bride, assisted by the Rev. Canon Wynne, Incumbent of St. Matthias's, Edward M. Hill, B.A., Oriel Coll., Oxford, to Louisa C., second daughter of R. W. Gamble, Esq., Q.C., J.P., County Court Judge, Fitzwilliam-square.

WALSHE and COPINGER—July 6, at Ghent, by special dispensation from Rome, Thomas Patrick Walshe, Esq., M.D., son of the late James N. Walshe, Esq., M.D., Ballinakill, to Kate, daughter of the late Christopher Copinger, Esq., Q.C., of Abbey View, Dalkey.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
49, WALLER, 50, DENZILLE-STREET. 3-7

PUBLIC NOTICES:
SOLICITORS' APPRENTICE PRELIMINARY.
TRINITY TERM, 1882—Messrs. Monks and Murphy. Former successes—Messrs. Hudson, O'Reilly, Carton, Hynes, Broderick, O'Callaghan, Fitzpatrick, Maguire, Coman, Fisher, Kelly, Gresson, Doran, &c. Class in operation for October.
JAMES A. POOLE, M.A., 29 Harcourt-street.

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.
STEPHENS' SCARLET INK FOR STEEL PENS.
This ink is unaffected by steel pens: it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.
Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each. 58r

FORMS UNDER COUNTY OFFICERS AND COURTS ACT.

- 3. Civil Bill Ejectment .. 1d.
4. Civil Bill Ejectment for the recovery of the possession of Lands under a claim of title under 14 & 15 Vic., cap. 57, sec. 79, as amended by the 40 & 41 Vic., cap. 56, sec. 53 .. .. . 1d.
5. Title Jurisdiction—Civil Bill Ejectment on the Title .. .. . 1d.
6. Civil Bill Ejectment for Overholding .. .. 1d.
13. Civil Bill Process in Replevin .. .. 1d.
14. Ordinary Decree .. .. 1d.
15. Decree by Instalments .. 1d.
16. Decree for Recovery of Lands .. .. 1d.
18. Decree in Ejectment for Non-payment of Rent .. 1d.
30. Ordinary Dismiss .. 1d.
31. Ejectment Dismiss .. 1d.
32. Affidavit or Affirmation of Default by Instalments 1d.
33. Affidavit or Affirmation of Renewal .. .. 1d.
35. Notice to Renew a Decree, or Dismiss, Affirmance, or Reversal .. .. 1d.
6. Renewal on Notice .. 1d.
8. Recognisance on the Defendant's Appealing from a Decree; or on the Plaintiff's Appealing from a Decree or Dismiss .. 1d.
47. Certificate of the Clerk of the Peace as to the Lodgment of Money by a Defendant or Rent and Costs in a Civil Bill Ejectment Case .. 1d.
55. Order of Replevin .. 1d.
59. Committal under the Debtors Act (Ireland), 1872 .. .. 1d.
62. Equity Civil Bill by a Creditor against an Executor for administration of the personal Estate of a deceased Debtor .. .. 1d.
63. Equity Civil Bill by a Legatee for the Administration of the Personal Estate of a Testator .. 1d.
80. Summons in Chamber .. 1d.
81. Notice to Creditor to prove his Claim .. .. 1d.
82. Notice to Creditor of Allowance of Claim .. 1d.
84. Notice that the Clerk of the Peace's Certificate may be inspected .. 1d.
99. Summons for Witness .. 1d.
110. Certificate of Clerk of the Peace in case of Money 1d.
111. Certificate in case of Transfer of Stock .. 1d.
112. Notice of Payment into P. Office Savings Bank, or Transfer of Stock or Deposit of Security .. 1d.
— Affidavit to obtain a Decree by Default .. 1d.
— Form of Notice to be served upon the Defendant with the Civil Bill Process where the Plaintiff seeks a Decree by Default .. .. 1d.

J. FALCONER, 58, UPPER SACKVILLE-ST., DUBLIN.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

D. W. CARROLL,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
Comprising Bags, Purses, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges.
Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge. 72

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK—
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.
A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENS CROFT, Manager. 63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEEDED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENS CROFT, Manager. 63

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane. 63

LITERARY AND GENERAL SALE ROOMS,
No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.

J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones).

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees, Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greeno, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.
Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms. 91

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES AND INVESTIGATIONS
CONDUCTED BY

MR. THOMAS DEANE,

17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange),

Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.

Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.

References.

ESTABLISHED 1876. 167

STOKES BROTHERS,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN. 293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank), are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy, Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

PUBLIC NOTICES:

THE CHROMOGRAPH.
INSTANTANEOUS REPRODUCTION
OF
MANUSCRIPTS, DOCUMENTS, PLANS, &c., &c.

Plans and Designs in various Colours obtained by One Single Operation.

The Chromograph is used WITHOUT either PRESS, INKING, or STEELING, and with ANY DESCRIPTION OF PAPER.

From eight to ten minutes suffice to obtain 40 to 50 copies.
To take off the writing from the composition, it is sufficient to wash the apparatus with a soft sponge in clear water IMMEDIATELY after having taken the last impression.

PRICES OF CHROMOGRAPHS.
No. 1.	Octavo Boxes, with a Bottle of Ink,	.. ..	10/-
" 2.	Quarto " " " "	.. ..	18/-
" 3.	Foolscap " " " "	.. ..	25/-
" 4.	Folio " " " "	.. ..	34/-
Extra Bottles of Ink, 1/- per Bottle.
Composition, 3/- per lb.

TERMS:—CASH WITH ORDER.

GERRARD BROTHERS,
37 STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 59

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS.
(Royal Route via Orkney and Caledonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Leabear, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Staronway, &c. Official Guide, 3d.; Illustrated 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Faree free, at CAESAR BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post from the owner, DAVID MACBRATH, 119 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK MARRATT, 78, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE
PERMANENT

BUILDING SOCIETY,

52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.F.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off Incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 9½ per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.
Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

Depositors have the following guarantee, viz.:—
The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

80 ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.
52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10	}	IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days. Two UNERRING RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free. Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London. 239
TO £1,000

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO., LIMITED.

SECURITY, &c.
RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—

39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 51

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, JULY 22, 1882.

No. 808

SOLICITOR'S LIEN FOR COSTS ON "PROPERTY RECOVERED OR PRESERVED."—II.

In order to entitle the solicitor (or his representative: Baile v. Baile, L. R. 13 Eq. 497) to a charge, there must have been an actual recovery or preservation of property: Pinkerton v. Easton, L. R. 16 Eq. 490; but see Jones v. Frost, L. R. 7 Ch. 773; and the charge extends only to the particular property in the recovery or preservation of which the costs were incurred: Ex p. Thompson, 3 L. T. N. S. 317; and see Porter v. West, ubi supra. On the question whether it is limited to, or exists irrespective of, the clients' interests in the property recovered or preserved, see Berrie v. Howitt, L. R. 9 Eq. 1, contra Bailey v. Birchall, 2 H. & M. 371; and see Bulley v. Bulley, L. R. 8 Ch. D. 479. In a partition action the lien is limited to the client's share in the property, and does not extend to the whole property, where the costs have been made costs in the action, and not (as yet) directed to be paid out of the proceeds: Lloyd v. Jones, 40 L. T. N. S. 514; and see Prichard v. Roberts, ubi supra; Mildmay v. Quicke, L. R. 6 Ch. D. 553. It applies to the interest in the mortgaged property of a plaintiff in a foreclosure suit: Wilson v. Round, 4 Giff. 416; and has been extended to the interest of a defendant in such a suit, whose right to a subsequent charge has been therein established; Scholefield v. Lockwood, L. R. 7 Eq. 83. In Foxon v. Gascoigne, L. R. 9 Ch. 654, it was held that an easement incident to property (e.g., the right to ancient lights) is not property within the meaning of the Legislature. Mellish, L.J., said: "The suit was one relating solely to an easement. Now, first let us suppose that the plaintiffs entirely succeed in such a suit, that they sustain their right to the lights, and obtain an injunction preventing the defendant from obstructing them, could the plaintiffs' solicitor say that any property was recovered, so as to entitle him to a charge upon it? Would it be possible to say that the house was recovered, or that the house was preserved? It seems to me that it would be impossible to say so. The title of the plaintiffs to the property in these houses is not in question at all. All that can by any possibility be said to be recovered or preserved, whichever word you choose to employ, is the right to the lights. How is it possible to make a charge upon a right to the lights? A charge can only be made upon the property itself, which is recovered or preserved, and it cannot be made if the suit relates only to some incident of the property." In Jones v. Frost, ubi supra, it was held that a solicitor is entitled to a charge for his costs on property the subject of a successful suit, conducted by him against an incumbrancer, although the incumbrance be entirely valueless, provided it formed a cloud upon the title. And in Birchall v. Pugin, L. R. 10 C. P. 397, the question as to what constitutes such property again arose under the following circumstances: The defendant having recovered a sum of money in an action brought by him against M., B., the defendant's attorney in that action, had taken out a summons for an order charging his costs in such action upon the sum recovered. The plaintiff afterwards, having recovered judgment in his action against the defendant, obtained an ex parte garnishee order attaching the sum recovered by defendant against M. in execution. B.

claiming to have a charging order on the judgment-debt as property recovered, within the section, and the plaintiff claiming an order on M. to pay the sum attached to him, it was held that the sum recovered was property within the section; and that the attorney was entitled to priority (see 13 Ir. L. T. 52; "The Leader," L. R. 2 A. & B. 314; and cases cited supra), an order being made in his favour accordingly. "The words used in the section," said Lord Coleridge, C.J., "are of the widest possible character, and include all property of whatsoever kind; not only property known to the common law, but property of every kind. It seems to me that this is property of some kind: it is a chose in action."

In M'Alveay v. M'Alveay, also, we are glad to observe, the Act was liberally construed, in conformity with Birchall v. Pugin. A reference to arbitration having been made in the action, the arbitrator awarded that a certain sum should be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, and the award was confirmed by the court. Before the amount awarded had been paid over to the defendant, his solicitor moved, under 39 & 40 Vic., c. 44, s. 3, for a declaration of his lien for unpaid costs upon the sum which the plaintiff had been adjudged to pay, as being property recovered or preserved for his client through his instrumentality. It was held, by Chatterton, V.C., on the 6th of March last, that the solicitor was entitled to the order sought.

In Emden v. Carte, an undischarged bankrupt, without the knowledge of the trustee in his bankruptcy, brought an action, claiming (inter alia) remuneration for services rendered by him since his bankruptcy as an architect to the defendant, and damages for wrongful dismissal. The defendant, without admitting any legal liability to the plaintiff, paid £360 into court. The plaintiff took out a summons to have the money paid out to him, but before the summons was heard the action came to the knowledge of the trustee, and he obtained an order joining him as co-plaintiff in the action, on the ground that the remuneration and damages claimed were his property. The bankrupt's solicitor then applied for a charging-order on the £360, in respect of his costs, charges, and expenses of or in reference to the action. And (reversing the order of Fry, J.) it was held by the Court of Appeal, as reported in the Law Journal (51 Ch. 371) for May last, that the bankrupt's solicitor was entitled to a charging-order for his costs properly incurred up to the time of the intervention of the trustee, on the fund in court, as being property recovered or preserved through the solicitor's instrumentality. "If the plaintiff has a sum of money in court which belongs to him, which he has only to ask for in order to get it, surely it is his property," said Jessel, M.R.: "It is property recovered by him or preserved for him in a Court of Justice, and it does appear to me that there is no fair interpretation reasonably possible to be given to the words 'recovered or preserved' in the 28th section of the Solicitors Act, 1860, which will not apply to money in this position." And it was further laid down that a judge was invested with a discretion as to making such orders; and that it would be his duty, in making an order, to limit it to the costs properly incurred, and to direct taxation thereof. But, where, in consequence of a change of solicitors, taxation could not be had, a charging-order was granted in Pilcher v. Arden (7 Ch. Div. 318, 47 L. J. Ch. 479); and a like order, where the solicitor had been changed, was made in Faithful v. Ewen (7 Ch. Div. 495, 47 L. J. Ch. 457); see 12 Ir. L. T. 408.

In Cole v. Dawson, the most recent case on the subject, it appeared that C. had bequeathed a chattel interest in land to his widow so long as she continued unmarried. She married D., one of the defendants, and died intestate. The plaintiff, the eldest son of C., took out administration to his father's will, and brought an action to recover possession of the land, against D. and his two brothers. D. alone took defence. The trial was listed for hearing on Dec. 15, 1881, when the plaintiff's solicitor was informed that the action was settled by an agreement, and the case was struck out accordingly. By this agreement, signed by the plaintiff and the three defendants, the plaintiff was to abandon his claim, receiving from the defendants £120 and a promissory note for £20, each party paying his own costs. A few days before this compromise one of D.'s brothers had, as a legatee, instituted a civil bill action to administer the assets of C. The solicitor of the plaintiff applied to him without success for payment of the costs, and the plaintiff afterwards went to America. On March 2, 1882, the solicitor applied for payment to D., but alike without success. On June 29, ult., he moved for a charging order, or for an order that the defendant D. should pay the costs, the £120 having been paid in his own wrong. The applicant deposed that the agreement had been entered into without his knowledge, and with a view to defeat his claim; while, on the other hand, it was sworn that it had not been fraudulently entered into, nor in order to deprive him of his costs. See Hill v. Hibbit, 8 Ir. L. & S. J. 78. Palles, C.B., was of opinion that it was not necessary that there should have been a judgment recovered (see cases cited supra); that the agreement was equivalent to a purchase by D. of the plaintiff's equitable interest in the land, and that the solicitor's right to the costs could not be defeated thereby (see Pilcher v. Arden, 7 Ch. D. 318, Baile v. Baile, L. R. 13 Eq. 497, and Hill v. Hibbit, ubi supra, which were not cited); and that the property had been recovered or preserved, within the meaning of the statute. But then, neither the plaintiff nor the co-defendants of D. were before the court; and he thought that the right course would be to serve the conditional order on the co-defendants (see Re Kaana, 19 W. R. 429, and Brown v. Trotman, 41 L. T. N. S. 179, 12 Ch. Div. 880, which were not cited). "There has also," he added, "been great delay in application to the defendant; this has pressed upon me" (but, see De Bay v. Griffin, L. R. 10 Ch. 291, not cited); "and if it were a matter of discretion, it is a case in which I think I would not exercise it, but it is a right" (but see Bmdes v. Carte, supra, not cited), "and the time that has elapsed has not been sufficient to disentitle the applicant." On the other hand, Fitzgerald, B., appeared to regard the agreement as a mere release, and to consider that such would not be equivalent in effect to a sale of the property; he would not say that it is always necessary that the action should be prosecuted to judgment, but he could not see that the right of the plaintiff was established by this transaction. In consequence of this difference of opinion, the court pronounced no rule.

For our own part, we cannot help thinking that, in Cole v. Dawson, the property had been adequately recovered or preserved within the meaning of the statute, and that the plaintiff's right had been tangibly established by the transaction, consequent on the legal proceedings. The application was referred to as being the first under the Act that had been made in Ireland; but, it had been preceded by M'Alcavy v. M'Alcavy (supra), which was not mentioned, where, on a rightly liberal construction of the Act, a more satisfactory result was arrived at, in reference to a mere award on an arbitration, which had been made a rule of court, but under which the amount awarded had not been paid over; but, we do not doubt that the order asked for as against the defendant, in reference to the £120, could not properly be allowed (cf. Pringle v. Gloag, 10 Ch. Div. 676, not cited). And while, of course, the language of the Act should not be extended beyond its proper and natural meaning in order to meet particular cases (as Lord Selborne observed in Pinkerton v. Boston, L. R. 16 Eq. 490, not cited), we agree with Lord Romilly's remark in Scholesfield v. Lockwood (L. R. 7 Eq. 88, not cited), that "the Act is intended to be construed liberally, and solicitors ought not to be deprived of their lien in these matters where there has been a good deal of work done."

THE NEW LAND COMMISSIONER.

On Thursday last, Mr. Gladstone announced that Lord Monck is to be appointed a Commissioner under the Arrears of Rent (Ireland) Bill. We believe he had already been offered, and refused a Land Commissionership under the Act of 1881, but his accession now will certainly add considerably to the effective strength of the Land Commission.

Charles Stanley, 4th Viscount Monck, to which title he succeeded in 1849, is the eldest son of Charles Joseph Kelly, 3rd Viscount, and Bridget, daughter of the late John Willington, Esq., of Killoshane, Co. Tipperary, and was born in October, 1819. He was called to the Bar in Michaelmas Term, 1841; and in 1844 married Lady Elizabeth Louise Mary Monck, third daughter of the 1st Earl of Bathdowne. He entered Parliament as member for Portsmouth (1852-57) and was appointed a Lord of the Treasury (1855-58). In 1861 he was appointed Governor-General of Canada, and in 1867 of the Dominion of Canada. He was appointed a Commissioner of Church Temporalities in Ireland, in 1869, and in the same year was sworn of the Privy Council of Ireland and created G.C.M.G. He was appointed a Commissioner of National Education in 1871, and became Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the Co., and Co. of the City of Dublin, 1874, and Deputy-Lieutenant of the Co. Wicklow.

Liberal and moderate in his views, Lord Monck has always displayed an anxiety for the practical advancement of the country, and has succeeded in winning public esteem and respect; and, judging from his distinguished antecedents, we doubt not that, identifying himself energetically with the administration of the Land Law, he will establish a still higher reputation, winning alike popular confidence and professional approval.

TEMPORARY LAWS.

Is Parliament growing distrustful of its wisdom and powers? Has it come to admit, that for the most part making laws is vanity of vanities, labour unprofitable, and often mischievous? One might be half inclined to think that this was so if one looked into a Parliamentary paper, just published, which gives a list of the temporary measures in force, and the dates at which they expire. This long list is published in consequence of the recommendations of a Select Committee of the House of Commons which sat about 1866. They thought that a register should be kept by some officer of the House which would show the duration of all temporary Acts and the dates of their expiry, so as to render unnecessary in future Sessions the appointment of a Select Committee upon Expiring Laws. The inconvenience attending such legislation has been considerably lessened by an enactment to the effect that if a Bill be in Parliament for the continuance of a temporary measure, and the latter expires before the Royal assent is given to the Bill, the Act does not lapse. Obviously some record must be kept of these expiring powers. As a merchant must have his bill-book to tell him of the time when his own or other persons' engagements mature, the Legislature must have a reminder of its obligations. They might well escape attention, for they are not a few. We question whether thirty years ago there would have been materials for such a list as that which is now published. Then there were few temporary laws of consequence—with the exception, of course, of the Mutiny Act and a few measures relative to the service of each year. Parliament boldly professed to legislate for all time. It had no qualms or apprehensions as to the propriety of what it did. It was sure that it knew what was good for posterity; and Acts of Parliament were passed as if they were to endure for ever. Nowadays legislation is marked by modesty. If we introduce a new principle into the statute-book, we are pretty sure to do so tentatively and temporarily. Finality, measures are out of fashion, and wherever a really novel measure is not avowedly temporary it is probably permissive. Looking at the history of our legislation, Bentham thought that he could trace in it two or three stages—one a time in which the law was the mere expression of the reigning king's will, operative only so long as he lived; a second period during which the duration of a law was unsettled and left to chance; and a third period during which people aspired to give eternal duration to statutes. We are far away from this last phase. Parliament is much less fond than it was of this species of dogmatism; and it is a very durable statute indeed which lasts for a whole reign. The Corrupt Practices Acts are striking examples of the brevity of the life of modern legislation. Since 1854, to go no further back, Parliament has been engaged upon this subject. Scarcely a year has passed without a new measure affecting it becoming law. But no measure aspiring to be final has been passed; and the chief statute now in force expires at the end of the present year. The same course has been pursued in regard to the Parliamentary election law introduced in 1880. When Parliament decided in 1868 to commit the trial of election petitions to a rota of judges, it did not boldly say that such and such was to be the case for all time. It timidly confined the operation of the Act to three years. Tentative, temporary measures have been in favour as to this subject; and one of the chief measures which at present regulate it expires on the 31st of December next year. For years the ballot was discussed in and out of Parliament. It was not adopted hastily or without long consideration. Never was a public question more copiously debated. Yet when Parliament at length assented to the ballot, its operation was limited to eight years. An equally conspicuous example of this modern characteristic is the Employers' Liability Act, passed in 1880. It became law after full discussion. The principle of the Bill was generally agreed to. Yet, unless renewed, the Act does not endure beyond the Session of 1887. The regulation of railway rates, to take another instance, has been dealt with in the same timid spirit. It is a question upon which much difference of opinion prevails, and Parliament is drawn opposite ways. On the one hand, it is naturally inclined to leave companies to manage their own affairs and to give preponderant weight to the arguments against interference. On the other hand, it cannot be deaf to the complaints of traders as to the exorbitance of the power of railways and the danger of permitting monopolists to order their charges as they think fit. Under the stress of these influences, it has hitherto refrained from making the powers of the Railway Commissioners perpetual. It began by giving them a short spell of power, the Act by which they were established being operative for only five years. These were innovating, experimental measures, for the temporary nature of which there were reasons. No ingenuity, however, can account for the temporary character of some of the Acts which are included in the list just published. Why, for example, should a measure passed to remove restrictions on the negotiation of promissory notes and bills of exchange be originally in force only for three years? What was the reason for confining to a short period the operation of an Act passed to restrict prosecutions under the Sunday Act of Charles II? Why should habitual drunkards be the subject of Parliamentary solicitude until 1890 and then be left to shift for themselves? We fail to understand why steam locomotives should be deemed a matter of national importance from 1865 to 1881 and should then be lost sight of. There may be significance in the fact that the Acts to facilitate the improvement of landed property in Ireland are inoperative after 1881. But there cannot, one would say, be rhyme or reason in the termination of statutory powers as to salmon fishing in Scotland after 1881. What is not without deep significance is the circumstance that out of the fifty temporary Acts included in the list a dozen specially relate to Ireland. What a testimony to the variability, the perplexity, and real despondency of Parliament as to the ever-present problems of that country! What a melancholy train of reflections is called up by the recital of ephemeral statutes which Parliament did not even venture to hope could be durable! These short-lived Acts are the records of experiments ending too often in mortification and disgust; alternate essays of magnanimity, coaxing, and intimidation, the rays of prosperity and tranquillity always seeming to be about to pierce a wintry sky, but somehow failing to do so.

Perhaps this proneness to pass temporary laws, this confession of lack of prophetic power, is indicative of true wisdom. We belong to generations which have been often deceived by the specious promises of law-makers, which have often experienced the bitter turning sweet, and boastful measures intended to cure a multitude of ills proving shallow quackery, and we cannot be so sure as we would fain be that a crowd of four or five hundred gentlemen sitting at Westminster will judge infallibly of the requirements of future ages. Each of them is very human and erring in the conduct of his own affairs; and it is much if with their concentrated intelligence they see ahead five years, not to say fifty. If modern legislation be written on tablets of wax and not graven on brass, it is, perhaps, well, and betokens becoming modesty; for as time goes on most of us are more and more impressed with the sense that there are as many misses as hits in legislation, and that the work done at Westminster with so many formalities and flourishes of trumpets is very much guesswork and shooting at random. Who knows that avowedly temporary statutes will not yet become, as we learn the limitations of legislation, the most prevalent form of it? No one nowadays supposes that the statute-book contains what used to be called irrevocable laws; in fact, the term is never heard of, except when somebody applies it to a measure which he is very much afraid has little chance of lasting long. The term turns up at St Stephen's and elsewhere when some institution is about to be abolished. No one doubts that Parliament, in its omnipotence, can repeal any Act, even though the generation which passed it pronounced anathemas on the heads of those whose impious hands should touch it. Bentham long ago routed this fallacy out of the field. The very Acts which are worded as if they were to co-exist with the solar system, to endure while two and two make four and the planets arrange themselves according to Kepler's laws, may be repealed if the Opposition gain a few seats and come into power. If ever Parliament limits the operation of Acts to the exact period which it can see ahead, what will be their duration? And, to put another relevant question, if a list could be prepared of the Acts which are really temporary, though worded differently, would they be only fifty in number?—Times.

THE "noble" (6s. 8d.), introduced by Edward III., is the origin of the solicitor's well-known fee

PARTICULARS AND CONDITIONS OF SALE.

(Continued from page 335, ante.)Power to Rescind.

"5. If the purchaser shall insist on any objection or requisition as to the title, or abstract or evidence of title, particulars, conditions, conveyance, possession, receipt of rents, surrender or otherwise (not being a claim to compensation under condition below), which the vendor shall be unable or unwilling to remove or comply with, the vendor may, by notice in writing, notwithstanding any intermediate or pending negotiation, or litigation, in respect of such obligation or requisition, or any attempt made to comply therewith, rescind the contract, unless within ten days after delivery of such notice the purchaser shall, by notice in writing, withdraw such objection or requisition, and upon such rescission the purchaser shall be entitled to receive back his deposit money, but without any interest, costs of investigating title, or other compensation, or payment whatever, and the purchaser shall thereupon return the abstract and other papers furnished to him. For the purpose of any objection or requisition the abstract of title shall be deemed to be perfect if it supply the information suggesting the same though otherwise defective."

As to provision enabling vendor to rescind, see Dart, 157, and Jackson and Oakshott (41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 719; L. Rep. 14 Ch. Div. 851). It is important that it should cover objections as to conveyance, and should apply notwithstanding negotiations (Dart, 158, 161). As to last clause of this condition, see Dart, 127. The above condition will not apply where the vendor fails to show any title whatever: (Bowman v. Hyland, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 90; L. Rep. 8 Ch. Div. 598.) As to compelling purchaser to accept doubtful title, see Dart, 1103; Palmer v. Locke (45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 229; L. Rep. 18 Ch. Div. 381).

Easements, &c.

"6. The property is sold subject to all rights of way and water, and other easements (if any), land tax, tithes, tithe commutations, and other outgoings, and to all tenancies from year to year, or for any less period, whether mentioned in particulars of sale or not, and to all rights and claims under such tenancies, whether arising during the continuance or after the expiration thereof, and as to any land which in the particulars is stated to have been formerly waste or common, subject to the provisions of any inclosure Act, order, or award, affecting the same. If the property is subject to any chief or quit rent not mentioned in the particulars, compensation shall be allowed in accordance with condition below, but the sale shall not be annulled on account thereof."

Heriots and quit or chief rents should be stated, where they exist, in the particulars, see Dart, 116, 118. If the property is free from the common burdens of tithe, or land tax, it will be well to state it, to improve the sale. As to tithes, see Dart, 288, 295. As to above condition, see Dart, 158. As to conveyance subject to quit rents, see Gale v. Squier (36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 632; affirmed L. Rep. 5 Ch. Div. 625). As to compulsory redemption of quit rents, see O. A. s. 45. This last provision makes the existence of quit rents of much less importance, and affords a ready means of making property "freehold" in the popular sense, which had formerly been so only in accordance with the legal meaning of that term. Condition , to which reference is made above, will be printed in another article. As to "outgoings," see Midgley v. Coppock (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 870; L. Rep. 4 Ex. Div. 309).

Identity.

"6. The purchaser shall admit the identity of the property purchased with that comprised in the muniments offered by the vendor as the title to such property upon the evidence afforded by a comparison of the descriptions in the particulars and muniments, and of a declaration to be made (if required) at the purchaser's expense that the purchased property has been enjoyed according to the title for twenty years."

As to this condition, see Dart, 153; Sag. V. & P. 26; David. i. 558. It is taken from David i. 610. It has only a limited effect, and does not provide for entire absence of evidence or for repugnance. To meet these a special condition may be needful. For such special conditions, see David i. 678-688.

Dower and Freebench.

"7. The purchaser shall assume that every former owner whose wife or widow (if any) might be entitled to dower or freebench—and is not mentioned in the title—was unmarried when he ceased to be the owner."

As to dower, see Dart, 513-516. As to freebench, see Ib. 274, 576; David ii. 205; Scriven, 6th edit. 70; Tudor, Leading Cases Conveyancing, 77. Since the New Wills Act a general devise of copyholds, or of lands, will pass the copyholds freed from freebench (Lacey v. Hill, L. Rep. 19 Eq. 346—i.e., where surrender would formerly have barred such freebench, but not where the concurrence of the widow in the surrender was necessary for that purpose. This is mentioned here, because Lacey v. Hill is sometimes misunderstood.

Stamps and Registration.

"8. No objection shall be made on account of any document dated twenty years or upwards before the day fixed for completion, being unstamped, or insufficiently stamped. Any stamping or re-stamping required by the purchaser shall be done at his expense. Where the property to be sold comprises land in Middlesex or Yorkshire, any document which may not have been registered, or properly registered, in the register of the county or riding, and of which registration or re-registration may be required by the purchaser, and be practicable, shall be registered or re-registered at the vendor's expense if dated within twelve years before the day fixed for completion, and not being a will or codicil, but in every other case at the purchaser's expense, but the purchaser shall not make any other requisition or objection in respect of such non-registration or insufficient registration; nor shall the completion of the purchase be delayed with a view to such registration or re-registration."

As to registration in county registry, see Dart, 679. By sect. 8 of V. P. A., where a will has not been registered in due time, an assurance by a devise, or someone deriving title under him, will, if registered first, obtain priority over assurance from testator's heir-at-law. This often cures non-registration of wills. For recent case discussing the operation of the doctrine of constructive notice in connexion with registration, see Kettlewell v. Watson (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 88).

(To be continued.)

RECTIFYING MISTAKES IN WILLS.

The case of Morrell v. Morrell is of importance, as showing how mistakes occasionally creep into a will, and interesting as an example of the refined distinctions to be found in the law on the subject. The broad result of the case is, that a will by which on the face of it the testator disposed of forty shares in a company was admitted to probate with the word "farty" omitted wherever it occurred, with the effect of disposing of four hundred shares, being all which the testator had. The decision barely stated is likely to produce some surprise. A will which is not ambiguous in any sense, but which in the clearest words bequeaths one thing, has been made to bequeath another. The word "farty" is held to have found its way into the will by mistake; and although it has all the sanction of the signature of the testator and of the attestation of the witnesses, it has been disregarded. On the other hand, it was clear that the testator meant to deal with all his shares, amounting to 400, and his instructions to his solicitor were express on this head. Sympathy is all on the side of the decision; so that, if the omission of the word "forty" can be reconciled with general legal principles, the lawyer will have a leaning to adopt that course.

John Morrell, the testator, was a Liverpool provision merchant, who had converted his business into a limited company, of which he was chairman, and in which his four nephews, who had before taken part in the business, were employed. He had 400 "B. shares," fully paid up, and, in instructing Mr. William Alfred Jevons, his solicitor, to prepare his will, he directed that all his B. shares should be given to his four nephews. A draft was prepared in which the words "all my B. shares" were used in dealing with the shares bequeathed to the nephews. The draft was sent to London to be settled by counsel. The counsel, it is stated, "inadvertently" inserted the word "forty" after "my," so that the bequest was of "all my forty shares." The counsel does not appear to have been called as a witness, and it is difficult to see how he could have put in the word "forty" by inadvertence. Why "forty," of all numbers in arithmetic? In all probability he knew from some source the number of the shares belonging to the testator, and confused forty with four hundred. It is remarkable that this matter was not more fully investigated, as, in Sir James Hannen's opinion, much turned upon it. When the will was engrossed for execution Mr. Jevons read it, and noticed the word "forty;" but it did not occur to him that the insertion was material. Whether he knew the number of the testator's shares does not appear; but he probably did. When the will was executed, it was not wholly read over to the testator. In summing up to the jury Sir James Hannen told them in effect that if words were left out, there was plainly no remedy, and if words were put in by fraud they could plainly be discarded; but the case in which one man employs another to make his will for him, and that person inserts a word by mistake, was intermediate. The main question left to the jury was whether the mistake consisted in putting in the "forty" or in omitting the "four hundred." The judge plainly intimating his opinion that in the latter case the accident could not be cured. The jury in the result found that the words "forty" repeated several times were inserted by mistake; that the mistake consisted in the insertion of the words; that the testator did not know of the insertion of the words; that the will was not read over to him; and, lastly, that he meant his nephews to have all the shares. This last finding was immaterial, as the question was one of form and not of intent, and the learned judge took time to consider his judgment, as it was supposed that a similar case was pending in the Privy Council. Eventually he ordered the will to be admitted to probate with the omission of the word "forty" wherever inserted. Sir James Hannen does not appear to have had any hesitation as to the right course to pursue. He said that the verdict of the jury had disposed of the whole matter, and referred to the case of Fulton v. Andrew, 44 Law J. Rep. P. & M. 17, in the House of Lords as an authority. This case cannot, however, be said to settle the law on the subject satisfactorily. It is true that the learned lords were of opinion that a certain residuary clause might be omitted from the probate; but their arguments are mainly addressed to some imperfections in the form of the proceedings. It is possible that Sir James Hannen thought it best not to attempt to generalise. The subject is one which it is difficult to put in comprehensive language, and which, when so put, is very apt to mislead. At the same time, when all the facts are ascertained by a verdict, it is not very difficult to say on which side of the line the case falls. In this instance the rejection of the words in question seems to have been rightly allowed.

The matter is apt to be a little confused by the fact that a solicitor and counsel were employed to make the will. For any mistake made by them in their art or mode of carrying his intention into legal effect, the testator would, doubtless, be held responsible himself; but in regard to the word "forty," they were only in the position of amanuenses? They had no authority to insert the word "forty" in the will at all. Suppose the testator had dictated his will to his valet, and this worthy, believing he knew the number of shares, belonging to his master, wrote "all my forty shares," when the testator said, "all my shares," would the fact that the testator afterwards signed the document without reading it, bring about a result which was very far from the testator's intentions? Suppose the converse case, that the testator dictated "forty of my shares," and the amanuensis wrote, through carelessness, "my shares," the forty, although it can be abstracted from the will, cannot be inserted. Nothing but the attested signature of the testator can make a word part of a will, but proof that a word was inserted by mistake may take it out of a will. In other words, the Probate Court cannot make a man's will for him, but it can prevent anything that is not really part of a man's will being given to the world as his, if that part can be severed from the rest. It may be said that in reality it is making a will to abstract words from the signed document, and so it is in a certain sense. The distinction stated in its result is a fine one, but it arises from a conflict between the duty of the Court to allow only a man's true will to be proved and the requirements of the law that certain formalities shall be regarded. Even when these formalities have been duly performed, the Court will sometimes disregard that which has obtained their sanction, but it cannot in any case dispense with those formalities. It can clear a duly executed will of foreign matter which should not be there, but it cannot introduce matter which should be there when such matter has not had the sanction of due execution.—

Law Journal.

RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS AS TO LAND.

In many leases it is not uncommon for landlords to insert a covenant on the part of the lessee not to use the premises for the sale by retail of intoxicating liquors. It is not difficult to understand the motive of such an agreement. Few people care to live next door to a public-house where the spectacle of pewter pots carried to and fro with a head on them, and the Bacchanalian shouts of customers towards midnight vex the ear and eyes. And if the landlord has other property adjoining, this consideration becomes much more important. Even if the premises were to be sold in the market, the existence of such a covenant in a going lease must operate favourably to the vendor, for it keeps up the respectability of the neighbourhood. Hence landlords act prudently in keeping a tenant tied down by such a restriction, which, however, the landlord can waive, if he think fit. One remarkable instance of this kind of covenant recently occurred in a Scotch town, most of which belonged to the Earl of Zetland. His predecessors had granted long leases, or what are called fens in Scotland, which are, indeed, nearer to a fee-simple than a lease, and in all the deeds a covenant of the above kind had been inserted. The tenant or purchaser had sold and re-sold the premises, but the same covenant was repeated at each reconveyance. There were 15 public-houses, and most of the original conveyances were about 70 years old. The landlord had never hitherto enforced the covenant until quite recently, when he began to consider that half of the public-houses were adequate for so small a town. He then sought the aid of the court to prohibit the other half of this number of tenants from keeping a public-house. The tenants contended that the covenant was void, or, at least, had been waived or abandoned. And the Scotch court went the length of holding that the defence was good. Two of the judges held that the covenant was void in law as inconsistent with freehold property, and tended to create a monopoly, and other two judges held that the landlord had, at all events, no sufficient legal interest to support his action. The Earl appealed to the House of Lords, and that High Court reversed the judgment of the Court below. The law lords said it was a very proper and competent covenant to insert in such conveyances; that it was not invalid; and though, of course, the landlord might waive it, still it lay on the tenants to prove that he had done so. And this plea of waiver was the only plea in defence that the tenants could competently set up.

This decision, or rather the difficulty involved, turned on the peculiarity of the Scotch conveyancing, as the kind of estate created was something between a lease and a conveyance of the freehold. But the subject received much consideration, and the doctrines of the English courts, both as regards leasehold and freehold property when like covenants are inserted, were inquired into and treated as guides. In such cases it was urged that there was a distinction to be made between leases and freeholds, and that though a tenant might easily, and often is found to be, subjected to such a restriction, yet it was not quite so easy to enforce it in case of freehold property, the purchaser of which might get rid of the restriction by selling it to another who might not be affected by the same burden.

Such cases, however, occasionally arise even as to sale of freehold property by virtue of the covenant being made one which will run with the land. And on this subject some niceties are to be observed. Only a year ago a case of Thornévell v. Johnson, 50 L. J. Ch. 861, arose of a property being sold in lots, and the purchasers being put under a covenant of this description. The British Land Company, Limited, had a building estate at East Dulwich, and cut up the estate into lots for sale by auction according to a plan and conditions setting forth various stipulations. The purchaser of one of the lots was Thomas Firninger, and one of the stipulations was that the trade of an innkeeper, victualer, or retailer of wine, spirits, or beer, was not to be carried on upon any lot. It was also stipulated that the conveyance of each lot shall contain covenants by the vendors and purchaser to observe the above stipulations, with a proviso limiting the liability of each covenantor to the period of ownership. The covenant by the purchaser was to be with the vendors and the other owners for the time being of the land to which these stipulations relate and also with some neighbouring owners. Afterwards an indenture was executed, and thereby Thomas Firninger covenanted for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, and assigns, with the British Land Company, and the owners of any other land to which the benefit of the stipulations was attached, and their respective heirs and assigns, for the proper observance of the same. Afterwards Firninger granted a long building lease of this lot to Dean, who built a house. It was not proved whether Dean knew of the above covenants. Dean then granted a lease for three years of the house to the defendant Johnson. The lease said nothing about the covenant or any similar restrictions, and it was not known whether the defendant knew anything about the restrictions. At a subsequent sale another lot was purchased from the British Land Company exactly opposite to the defendant's house by the plaintiff, who entered into the same covenant as Firninger had done.

Such being the way in which the plaintiff and defendant came to occupy houses opposite to each other it happened that the defendant opened a shop and obtained a license to sell beer and wine to be consumed off the premises. The plaintiff complained of this as a breach of covenant and a nuisance to his own house, and he brought an action for an injunction to restrain the selling of beer and wine. The defendant set up the defence that the original covenant entered into by his landlord's predecessor did not bind him, and that he had no notice of the same. To this the answer was that the covenant ran with the land and bound all who became the possessor of the premises. Vice-Chancellor Bacon held that it was part of the original contract for the sale of the land that the land should be always subject to certain restrictions, one of which was that there was to be no retailing of wine or beer on the premises. The covenants were properly framed with this object, and the restriction was therefore inherent to the possession of the property into whose hands soever it might ultimately come, and notice or no notice made no difference. In short, this was the case of a covenant running with the land. The effect of such covenant was to bind subsequent owners. If it were not so, any purchaser had only to make over the property to some man of straw who might set up a soap factory or any other noisome trade, and say that he had no notice of the restrictions. So the defendant was restrained from carrying on his beer-house.

The doctrine of Covenants running with the land has several times of late years come into question, and the courts have not been quite consistent in the doctrine, as will be seen from one or two cases. In Morland v. Cook, L. R. 6 Eq. 282, the following state of things occurred. In 1794 certain property had been divided under a deed of partition between different owners, and a covenant was entered into by the owners for themselves, their heirs, and executors, that the cost of maintaining a sea wall should be borne and paid by them, their heirs, and assigns, out of the lands so partitioned according to certain proportions. Part of this property was conveyed in 1829 to Sir Edward Knatchbull, and by him in 1862 portions were again conveyed to the defendants, who knew nothing about the covenants, and their conveyances said nothing about them. A suit was instituted by some of the owners against the defendants, to compel the latter to contribute their share of the expense of repairing the sea wall, and the defence set up was that the covenant did not bind the defendants. The Master of the Rolls held the defendants to be liable. He said that the cases of covenants running with the land usually arose as between landlord and tenant, or vendor and purchaser, and that this was a peculiar case. Every one of the five persons filled the double character of vendor and purchaser, because the original deed was one of partition. Here the defendants had sufficient notice to set them on inquiry, and where a man acquires property with notice that the person under whom he claims has entered into a mutual covenant with the adjoining owners that the property shall not be used in a particular manner, or that it shall contribute to the support of a common protection, he cannot afterwards dispute his liability to perform the condition imposed by the previous owner. And the learned judge said there was no distinction between abstaining from using his property and contributing his quota to a common benefit.

Another case arose of Cook v. Chilcott, 8 Ch. Div. 694, where in 1849 Farmer purchased from Hinton certain premises of freehold land on which was a well, and covenanted for himself and his assigns to supply water to all houses erected or to be erected on Hinton's adjacent land, which had been laid out for building purposes. And Hinton covenanted to insert in the conveyances to purchasers covenants by them to take water from Farmer at a fixed price. Hinton subsequently sold to the plaintiff the adjoining land, and Farmer sold his land to the defendant, both parties knowing about the covenants, but the defendant refused to supply the water. An action being brought the Vice-Chancellor Malins held that the covenant ran with the land: at all events the defendant bought the premises with notice of the covenant, and in either view the defendant was liable.

The latest case on this interesting subject is that of Haywood v. Brunswick Building Society, ante, p. 356. A plot of land was conveyed, subject to a rentcharge, the grantee covenanting for himself, his heirs and executors with the grantor, his heirs and assigns, that he the grantee will erect and at all times keep in good and tenantable repair on the said plot of land such good and substantial buildings as shall be of the annual letting value of double the amount of the rentcharge. The plaintiff was the assignee of the grantor, and he sued the defendants, who were the assignees of the grantee, claiming damages for breach of the covenant to repair. Buildings had been erected but were not kept in repair, and the question raised was whether this was a covenant which ran with the land, and which could be enforced. Stephen, J., held that the covenant ran with the land, and that the defendants were liable. But the Court of Appeal reversed the judgment, one of the Lords Justices dissenting. The court drew a distinction between covenants of a restrictive kind and covenants which bound the covenantee to expend money. All the cases in which an assignee took with notice of a restrictive covenant affecting the land, and was bound by his covenant, were covenants which could be enforced without any outlay of money. And the court discredited the above case of Cook v Whitcott, and said the judge was mistaken in holding that that covenant ran with the land.

This last case opens up difficulties and niceties in applying the doctrine relating to covenants running with the land, and that law must be applied with caution, at least when outlay is undertaken by the original covenantee.—Justice of the Peace.

A REASONABLE DOUBT.

Probably no principle of the law is more universally understood by the class of persons who serve on our juries than this: That the prisoner on trial for a crime is entitled to an acquittal if the jury have a reasonable doubt as to his guilt. What is a reasonable doubt is very difficult of a clear definition. It has perplexed jurymen; and courts, in their attempts to explain it, have found it a stumbling block in their paths. In many cases, attempts from the bench to elucidate the term and give to it a definition, have been productive of more evil than good; and have led the jury to an acquittal when there should have been a conviction. Often the juries have mistaken the meaning of a reasonable doubt, believing it to be the least imaginary doubt which might enter their minds, and have acquitted the defendant when the evidence was strong against him. There is a distinction to be made between civil and criminal cases in this respect; in the one, the jury weigh the evidence on both sides, and decide accordingly; but, in criminal cases, the defendant's guilt must be proved beyond a rational doubt, or the jury cannot convict. It is chiefly to criminal cases that we shall confine ourselves in treating the subject of a reasonable doubt, as in these it more frequently arises, and has been more frequently adjudicated upon by the superior courts.

Some definitions which the courts have laid down as to what should constitute a reasonable doubt, might not be out of place. Chief Justice Shaw has defined it to mean, "Not a mere possible doubt, because everything relating to human affairs, and depending upon moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition, they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the charge."<sup>1</sup>

This reasonable doubt should be actual and substantial, and not based upon a mere possibility or imagination. It must be such a doubt that the jury can give a reason for.<sup>2</sup>

If the guilt of the prisoner be established by a chain of circumstances, and the jury have a reasonable doubt as to any one of the links in the chain; it ought not to have any influence with them in making up their verdict.<sup>3</sup> It is such a doubt as would cause a reasonable and prudent man to pause and hesitate before acting in the more important affairs in life, or that would cause him to act with the same degree of caution if acting in his own more consequential affairs.<sup>4</sup>

This doctrine is at variance somewhat with the weight of authority, the courts holding that a charge that if the evidence is such that a man of prudence would act upon it in his own affairs of the greatest importance, is erroneous; that it requires nothing more than a mere preponderance of evidence to convict the prisoner.<sup>5</sup> California courts define a "reasonable doubt of the guilt of a person" to be "that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition, that they say they cannot feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge."<sup>6</sup>

In a Mississippi case it is said; "That which amounts to a mere possibility only, or to conjecture or supposition, is not what is meant by a reasonable doubt. The doubt which should properly induce a jury to withhold a verdict, should be such a doubt as would reasonably arise from the evidence before them."<sup>7</sup>

The Supreme Court of Alabama has condemned the practice of giving definitions of a reasonable doubt, saying: "We think all such efforts, to say the best for them, are unsafe, indiscreet, and oftener than otherwise, distract and confuse juries, and may lead them to acquit where they ought to convict."<sup>8</sup> It is not necessary that the whole jury should have a doubt as to the prisoner's guilt; if a reasonable doubt exists in the mind of any one juror as to the defendant's guilt, there should be no conviction.<sup>9</sup> The definition given by Chief Justice Shaw has been almost universally accepted as being less liable to confuse the jury than some of the others; but we cannot but agree with the Alabama Court, who condemn the practice of explaining to the jury the meaning of a reasonable doubt. The simple statement to a jury of average intelligence, that the doubt must arise in the case before them, or that nothing occurring outside the proof in the case should influence their verdict, would generally be sufficient to enable them to understand the meaning of a reasonable doubt.

It is more frequently a question to be left solely to the jury, as to what must constitute a reasonable doubt, and the circumstances of each particular case must control their verdict. That which might be sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt in one case, might in another, where connected with different circumstances, not be of ample consequence to cause the shadow of a doubt to cross the minds of the jurors.

Each individual juror must be governed by his own sense of morality and sound judgment, and his verdict should be accordingly. A biased juror in favour of the prisoner would always have a reasonable doubt, but it would exist the same were the court to define a reasonable doubt, and endeavour to elucidate its meaning.

It is, then, for the jury to determine, without aid from the court, whether such a doubt exists as will warrant an acquittal of the prisoner, and no tribunal can ever know whether they acted wisely or unwisely.—

Central Law Journal.

A FRENCH ASSIZE.

Prisoners sentenced to death stand in quite a different position to that of English convicts in the same case. They receive no intimation of the date when their execution will take place. The Court of Cassation to which they have appealed may perhaps not call up their case for a couple of months; and after that some more days will be occupied in forwarding a recours en grace, or petition for mercy, to the President of the Republic. M.

(1) Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 320; Commonwealth v. Goodwin, 14 Gray, 66.

(2) Commonwealth v. Harmon, 4 Barr. 270; Pate v. People, 3 Gillman, 84; United States v. Foulke, 5 McLean (Cir. Ct.), 349; Giles v. State, 5 Ga. 283; State v. Schoenwald, 31 Mo. 147; Winter v. State, 20 Ala. 28; 3 Greenl. Ev., sec. 29; Earle v. People, 73 Ill. 329.

(3) Sumner v. State, 5 Blackf. 679; Houser v. State, 58 Ga. 78; Jarrell v. State, 58 Ind. 293; State v. Hayden, 45 Iowa, 11; State v. Felker, 32 Iowa, 53; Smith v. People, 74 Ill. 144.

(4) May v. People, 60 Ill. 119; Miller v. People, 39 Ill. 457.

(5) People v. Dransan, 47 Cal. 96; People v. Ah Ling, 51 Cal. 378; State v. Oscar, 7 Jones (N. C.), 305; Jane v. Commonwealth, 2 Met. (Ky.) 30; Anderson v. State, 41 Wis. 430; State v. Bour (Nev.), 3 Law & Eq. Reporter, 423, overruling State v. Witham, 5 Nev. 409; Bradley v. State, 31 Ind. 492; State v. Bruce, 43 Ia. 580; State v. Northrup, 43 Ib. 683.

(6) People v. Ash, 44 Cal. 282. See, also, People v. Finney, 38 Mich. 482; Webster's Case, 5 Cush, 320; Commonwealth v. Carey, 3 Brews. (Pa.) 404.

(7) Bowler v. State, 41 Miss. 571. See Wise v. State, 2 Kan. 419; State v. Ford, 21 Wis. 610; State v. Shettleworth, 18 Minn. 309; State v. Fligate, 27 Mo. 335. But see Dismore v. State, 67 Ind. 303.

(8) McAlpine v. State, 47 Ala. 78; Therrell v. State, 40 Ala. 715.

(9) State v. Rodaback, 19 Ia. 154; State v. Stewart, 2 Hawley's Crim. Rep. 603.

Grévy is opposed to capital punishment; but not so determinedly opposed to it as never to have signed a death warrant. He has allowed three men to be guillotined out of about sixty who have been sentenced to death since his accession, and this proportion, small as it is, is sufficient to prevent murderers from feeling absolutely reassured as to the fate awaiting them. They hear nothing of what is being done for or against them outside the prison walls. The avocats who defended them draw up the recours en grâce, but the convicts are not supposed to know what chances there are of these petitions being entertained or rejected. If a convict is to be executed, the first certain intimation which he receives of the painful fact comes about a quarter of an hour before his head drops into the sawdust basket of the guillotine. Some morning—it may be two or three months after his trial—he is aroused at break of day by the governor of the prison entering his cell and saying kindly:—"A—, your appeal has been rejected, and your petition dismissed: the moment has arrived . . ." The unhappy man, rolling out of bed and staggering to his feet, sees the gaol chaplain, who has walked in behind the governor, and two or three warders who assist him hastily to dress. From this moment everything is done with the utmost celerity. The prisoner has wine pressed upon him; three minutes are allowed him to make his shrift, then he is led out and plighted. Next moment he is half conducted, half pushed, into the open air, where the guillotine stands surrounded by dense squares of mounted troops and police, behind whom are massed large crowds straining their eyes, with not much effect, to see what is about to take place. The modern guillotine is not erected on a platform, but is placed on the ground. The convict makes half a dozen steps; the executioner's assistants seize him, push him roughly against an upright board, which falls forward, pivoting under his weight, and brings him in a horizontal position with his neck between the grooves, above which the knife is suspended. The executioner touches a spring; the knife flashes as it falls; and all is over. Watch in hand it has been reckoned that when all the preliminaries of execution are smartly conducted, no more than fourteen minutes ought to elapse from the time when the convict is startled out of sleep to the instant when his head and body part company. From the Christian point of view it is certainly deplorable that a convict having a sure knowledge of his impending death should never be able seriously to prepare his mind for it. But the French act upon the principle of making things as easy as possible for the doomed man. Even the prison chaplain thinks it his duty to hold out hopes of a commutation, though he may have no good reason for feeling that the sentence will not be carried out. The convict then passes his last weeks of existence in a fool's paradise. He is encouraged to smoke, he is allowed enough wine to make him, if not drunk, at least merry—that is a quart a day—and the warders in his cell play cards with him as much as he likes—it being their chief care to keep the man from moping and giving them trouble.—Cornhill Magazine.

THE EUROPEAN CONCERT.

The doctrine of a balance of power in Europe was exploded many years since. The European concert has taken its place. Both may in some measure agree in origin and objects; they operate by a different procedure and amid different circumstances. The balance of power was positive, and worked by positive means. Nations combined actively to put down the attempt of another to overstep its boundaries. Concerts are of various kinds. The European concert is of a very peculiar sort indeed. It resembles the effect produced by the intrusion of an explorer into a cavern tenanted by bats and other night birds, or by the approach of a boat within gunshot of a rocky haunt of sea-fowl. There may have been silence solemn and profound the instant before. In a moment the air rings and vibrates with hundreds and thousands of screams. At the European concert the performers are fixed at their posts. They are mute, or if they touch their instruments the result is as faint as a whisper. But they are always ready to burst into a tumult of sound. They are waiting only for some one to stir, though it be but a member of their own company roused by a disturbing dream.—Times.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

When a person has been charged with a criminal offence, and been tried and acquitted, the first thing that the defendant thinks of, or is persuaded to think of, is whether he cannot turn his misfortune to some advantage, and turn the tables on the prosecutor. It is too easily assumed by the acquitted defendant that because he has been acquitted, the other party must have been altogether in the wrong, and may be brought in turn to justice. But at this stage he encounters several difficulties. He finds out that it is not enough that he has been acquitted; but that he must show something very difficult to show in most cases, namely, that the prosecutor was animated by pure spite or malice, and that he had no reasonable and probable cause for the accusation. Indeed, sometimes he is met by a further difficulty, namely, that he may have no opponent at all to attack, for there may be no prosecutor in the common acceptation of the term, but the law may have been set in motion by some official who can scarcely be got at owing to the protection surrounding him.

This last point has given rise to many nice questions. It is often the case that the leading witness, on whose evidence the accusation rested, was nothing more than a witness, and if so he is invulnerable. In a case of Darby v. Dearsley, 43 L. T. N. S. 603, where a master had given a servant into custody for stealing some clip-pers from his stable, the defence was, that the defendant was not the prosecutor. The Court said that there was not in the books any express authority as to what a prosecutor was. He might be instrumental in putting the law in force. But all that this defendant had done, was to state what he knew to the constable, and then what followed as to the arrest and charge was the act of the constable. As Lindley, J., put it, "It has been said that the defendant so acted that he intended the plaintiff to be arrested by the constable, or as it was said, to use the common phrase, he set the stone rolling. Now what stone has he set rolling? It is simply a stone of suspicion. There was no direction to the constable to arrest and to prosecute. He no doubt suspected the plaintiff and described the things to the constable, but there is not the slightest evidence that the defendant either prosecuted or directed anyone else to prosecute."

One noted class of cases where this kind of difficulty is found is where a prosecution for perjury is ordered by a judge. In Fitzjohn v. Mackinder, 9 C. B. N. S. 505, an important question arose as to whether the defendant was liable to such an action when the county court judge directed the plaintiff to be prosecuted, and made an order to that effect pursuant to the statute 14 & 15 Vict., c. 100, s. 19. The case went to the Exchequer Chamber, and the judges were divided. Three, being the majority, held that though the judge ordered the prosecution, yet this was done as a consequence of the false swearing of the defendant, and that the defendant had by his perjury procured the order of the Court. On the other hand, the two judges in the minority held that the defendant was a mere witness and nothing more, and was not responsible for the judge making the order, and which order was according to the jury's mistake of the judge's own, and not of the defendant's.

As, however, there are many cases of malicious prosecution where the difficulty as to who is the prosecutor is not raised, it is next to be considered what the plaintiff is obliged to make out in order to succeed in this action. A leading case was decided in 1870 of Lister v. Perryman, L. R. 4 H. L. C. 585, and being by the House of Lords is of the highest authority. It was an action for false imprisonment and not for malicious prosecution, the burden of proof being different in the two cases, but the substantial defence is much the same. Perryman was a stranger, and had been charged with stealing a rifle of the defendant, Lister. One Hinton, the coachman of Lister, told his master that another man, Robinson, had seen this rifle in Perryman's barn, that Robinson and Hinton had gone to Perryman and taxed the latter with having the rifle, that Perryman denied it, and produced a rifle which was not that which the man Robinson had seen in Lister's barn. Perryman was given into custody but discharged by the magistrate, and then an action was brought for false imprisonment. Lord Chelmsford said the question was not whether the master might have obtained more satisfactory grounds of belief by applying to Robinson for direct information, but whether the facts brought to his knowledge furnished reasonable and probable cause for his believing that the plaintiff had dishonestly possessed himself of his rifle, and justified him in acting in that belief without further inquiry. The master had information both from his servant Hinton and from Robinson that the missing gun had been seen in the possession of Perryman, though Perryman denied it and said it was another gun. The question thus came to be, as Lord Chelmsford said, whether in an action like that for a malicious prosecution where a person is proved to have acted upon the information of a trustworthy informant, he can be said to have acted without reasonable and probable cause because he has not made inquiry of someone else who could have repeated and confirmed what was told him. And Lord Westbury said it was not law that you can never proceed on hearsay evidence when you have a good opportunity of testing the accuracy of the hearsay evidence by examining the person who is represented to have said such-and-such things. In that case the result was that a new trial was directed, and it was laid down that a prosecutor may act honestly and with reasonable and probable cause, though he proceeded solely on hearsay evidence; and, indeed, it is often impossible to do otherwise in a great majority of cases, than proceed on the faith of such hearsay statements.

An important contribution to the learning of this subject has recently been made in the case of Hicks v. Faulkner, ante, p. 420. The defendant was a landlord of a house in a London suburb, and the father of the plaintiff was tenant of the house. In February, 1879, the defendant, as landlord, sued for rent in the county court. The defence was, that before the rent became due the plaintiff surrendered possession, and the key of the house was delivered to and accepted by the defendant. To support this defence the plaintiff was called as witness for his father, and swore that he, at the defendant's request, gave up the key to the defendant. This was a material fact, if proved. After the determination of the action the defendant caused the plaintiff to be indicted for perjury, and the plaintiff was acquitted, and then commenced this action for malicious prosecution. At the trial the defendant denied the plaintiff's statement about giving up the key, and in confirmation of his testimony referred to his diary and other corroborating circumstances. Huddleston, B., the judge, after stating the more simple suppositions as to the law of the case, told the jury that it might be they would come to the conclusion that the plaintiff did, in fact, deliver up the key as he swore, and that the defendant had a very treacherous memory and had forgotten all about it, and went on with the prosecution under the impression that he never had the key. Nevertheless, if that was an honest impression, the upshot of a fallacious memory, and acting upon it he honestly believed the plaintiff had sworn falsely and corruptly, no jury would be justified in saying that the defendant maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause prosecuted the plaintiff, because the best probable and reasonable cause would be that he honestly believed it. The jury returned a verdict for the defendant.

A new trial was afterwards moved for on the ground of misdirection. The main contention of the plaintiff's counsel was, that where a defendant relies on his memory for the facts which go to make up probable cause he must prove to the satisfaction of the jury that his memory of the facts was accurate, and he must stand or fall by its accuracy. He must take the risk of his forgetfulness, and it was no excuse to say that his memory was treacherous. The court, consisting of two judges, Huddleston, B., and Hawkins, J., examined this position carefully as to the treacherous memory, and a most interesting review of that faculty was given so as to determine whether a man might honestly be led astray by it. On this subject Hawkins, J., in the judgment thus put the matter. The question of reasonable and probable cause depends in all cases not upon the actual existence but upon the reasonable bond fide belief in the existence of such a state of things as would amount to a justification of the course pursued in making the accusation complained of. It cannot of course be laid down as an abstract proposition that an accuser is justified in acting either upon the credited statement of an informant or upon his own memory. The question must always arise according to circumstances whether it was reasonable to trust either the one or the other. A person who acts upon the information of another trusts the veracity, the memory, and accuracy of that other, in each of which he may be completely deceived; his informant's veracity may be questionable; his memory fallacious; and his accuracy unreliable; yet it does not follow that it was unreasonable to believe in his information if he never had cause to doubt him. In like manner a man may be deceived by his own memory, yet it does not follow that it was unreasonable to trust it if he never before knew it to be defective. Why, if he may rely upon the memory of another, may he not rely upon his own? The reasonableness or otherwise of their reticence is for the jury to determine.

The upshot of the learned judgment was that a man may be very honest and reasonable and yet have a slippery memory, and he ought not to be made responsible for the slip. This is a conclusion which most people have arrived at for themselves. The new trial was accordingly refused; and on appeal the judges held that they could not see anything wrong in what had been laid down on this matter by the judge at the trial, and by the Queen's Bench Division on the motion for a new trial.

The point is one of considerable value in a practical point of view. The world abounds in slippery memories, and it is to be feared that this decision will give too great encouragement to the slippery tribe of witnesses. Nevertheless there will be always a jury to check any abuse of this tendency, and with this qualification we cannot help feeling some relief that the non mi ricordo defence will sometimes win in these speculative actions.

—Justice of the Peace.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT.

The old principle that there can be no copyright in an advertisement was intelligible so long as an advertisement usually meant no more than the name and address and trade of the advertiser. There can be no reason why literary and artistic skill should be without protection against piracy because they are used in producing an advertisement instead of a work intended for sale. This doctrine was applied to original letterpress in a bookseller's catalogue by Vice-Chancellor Wood, in the case of Hotten v. Arthur (9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 199; 1 H. & M. 603); but, for some reason not very clearly appearing in his judgment, the late Master of the Rolls held, in the case of Cobbett v. Woodward (37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 260; L. Rep. 14 Eq. 407) that it did not apply to the illustrations of furniture in a dealer's catalogue. Vice-Chancellor Hall refused to follow this case in Grace v. Newman (L. Rep. 19 Eq. 628), where he held that a book of pictures of sepulchral monuments collected and made for a cemetery mason to be shown to customers ordering a monument, was the proper subject of copyright. The Court of Appeal have now in the case of Maple v. The Junior Army and Navy Stores (noted in our last number) adopted the decision of Vice-Chancellor Hall, and disapproved that of Lord Romilly, holding that the pictures in an illustrated catalogue of furniture are the subject of copyright though there happen to be no letterpress in the catalogue for which copyright can be claimed. The elaboration with which these catalogues are frequently got up must make them a valuable property, and the decision of the Court of Appeal is important to tradesmen as definitely bringing the law into accordance with the plain justice of the case.—Law Times.

NOTES OF ENGLISH CASES.

[From the Law Journal.]

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

COURT OF APPEAL.

(Before JESSEL, M.R., LINDLEY and BOWEN, L.JJ.)

QUILTER v. MAPLESON.

June 20.—Landlord and Tenant—Breach of covenant to insure relief against forfeiture—The Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 14—Order LVIII., Rules 2; 5.

Appeal from the decision of Coleridge, C.J., in an action by a landlord against a tenant to recover possession of the demised premises, on the ground of breach of the tenant's covenant to keep the premises insured at all times from loss by fire for the sum of £14,000.

The policies had lapsed on March 25, 1880; but new policies for the full amount were effected on May 14, 1880.

On July 4, 1881, Coleridge, C.J., gave judgment for the plaintiff, the landlord, but stayed execution in order to allow the defendant to appeal.

The Solicitor-General (Sir J. Herschell), W. G. Harrison, Q.C., and Harmanworth for the appellant.

Webster, Q.C., and H. D. Green for the respondent.

The questions raised were—(1) whether section 14 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, applied to a forfeiture in respect of which an action had been brought and judgment given before the passing of the Act; and (2) whether the Court of Appeal could give any other judgment than that which the Court below ought to have given at the time when it did give judgment.

Their Lordships, on the first point, held that section 14 was retrospective both as regards the rights of parties and as to procedure, and applied to any case in which the lessor had not recovered actual possession of the property before the Act passed. It therefore, included the present case. On the second point, their lordships were of opinion that, as every appeal was now a rehearing, they had jurisdiction under Order LVIII., Rules 2 and 5, to give any judgment and make any order which ought to have been made. Relief was accordingly granted against the forfeiture on the terms of the defendant's effecting an insurance in accordance with the covenant, and paying the plaintiff the amount he had paid for premiums, with interest, and the costs of the action and appeal.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(Before BACON, C.J.)

Re ROPER. Ex parte BOOTH.

June 26.—Bill of Sale—Registration—Setting forth of consideration—Affidavit of execution and attestation—Bills of Sale Act, 1878, ss. 8, 10, subs. 2.

Appeal from the County Court at Liverpool.

In October 1879, Roper, the debtor, contracted to purchase from Booth a brewery for £2,250. On completion of the purchase £250 was paid in cash, and a mortgage over the brewery and stock-in-trade and after acquired property was given by Roper for £2,000, the balance of the purchase-money. The mortgage, which was dated October 22, 1879, contained a recital that the mortgagees "had agreed to lend" the mortgagor £2,000. This mortgage was duly executed as a bill of sale, the attestation clause stating that, before the execution, the effect had been explained to the grantor by C. E. Lake, the attesting solicitor. The affidavit filed on registration was made by C. E. Lake, who deposed to the correctness of the copy-mortgage, and of every attestation and execution thereof, and that it was given on the day it bore date; that he was present and saw Roper sign and execute the deed; and that at the time of his execution he resided at—; and that the name "C. E. Lake, set and subscribed as attesting the due execution" of the said mortgage, was in the deponent's handwriting; and that he resided at Stockport, and was a solicitor of the Supreme Court.

The trustee contended that the bill of sale was void as against him—(1) because the consideration was not truly stated; (2) because there was no verification on oath of the fact that the effect of the bill of sale had been explained to the grantor previously to its execution. The County Court judge held these objections fatal. The bill of sale holder appealed.

Winslow, Q.C., and Taylor for the appellant.

Horton Smith, Q.C., and Walton for the trustee.

The CHIEF JUDGE was of opinion that the consideration was truly stated; that it was not necessary that the affidavit filed on registration should contain a specific statement that the bill of sale had been previously explained to the grantor; that in the present case the attestation was regular, the explanation certified in due form, and that the affidavit sufficiently complied with the requirements of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, s. 10, subs. 2.

Appeal allowed, with costs.

Re HEWER. Ex parte KAHEN.

July 10.—Bill of sale—Registration—"True copy"—Clerical error—Description of residence of maker—Bills of Sale Act, 1878, ss. 8, 10 (2), and 20.

Appeal from the County Court at Exeter.

Hewer was an innkeeper. On April 8, 1882, Hewer executed a bill of sale of his furniture, stock-in-trade, and effects in favour of Kahen for £100. The bill of sale provided for the re-payment of the £100, with a bonus of £50, "by twelve consecutive monthly instalments," each payment "to be made on the 8rd day of each month, and the first instalment to become due and payable and be made on the 8rd day of May."

On April 5 Hewer committed an act of bankruptcy by departing from his house and going abroad.

On April 6 a petition in bankruptcy was presented, and a receiver appointed, who forthwith took possession of the bankrupt's estate. On the same day the affidavit of the due execution of the bill of sale was made by the attesting solicitor, in which the debtor's residence was given as of "North Devon Inn, 58 Paul-street."

On April 8 the bill of sale was registered. The copy bill of sale filed on registration was an exact copy, except that in the proviso for repayment the words "8rd day of each month" was omitted.

The County Court judge on June 15 decided that, the act of bankruptcy having been committed before registration of the bill of sale, the chattels comprised therein were not protected by the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, s. 20.

The bill of sale holder appealed.

Winslow, Q.C., and F. C. Willis for the appellant.

Cress, for the trustee, besides supporting the judgment of the Court below, also argued that the bill of sale was void on the grounds (1) that the copy bill of sale filed on registration was not "a true copy;" and (2), on the authority of Button v. O'Neill, 48 Law J. Rep. O. P. 868, L. R. 4 O. P. Div. 854, that the description of the residence of the maker of the bill of sale, at the time of swearing the affidavit by the attesting solicitor when the debtor was abroad, had not been given.

The CHIEF JUDGE held that registration any time within the period prescribed by section 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, gave the bill of sale holder the benefit of section 20; that the omission in the copy bill of sale was a mere clerical error, which could mislead nobody, and did not make the copy other than "a true copy" within section 10, subs. 2; and, distinguishing Button v. O'Neill, that the description of the residence at the time of the execution was sufficient.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

The Act for preventing cruelty to animals, which was passed in 1849, applies to domestic animals. It is proposed, in a bill introduced by Mr. Anderson, M.P., to extend the statute to all "vertebrate animals, whether of domestic or wild nature, kept in confinement or captivity." The bill, moreover, proposes to impose penalties on those who keep or use places for the purpose of shooting at birds liberated from traps, &c.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 226.
Wilson on the Judicature Acts (2nd Edition), 153.

A judgment against a firm is binding upon all the partners who were members of the firm at the time when the liability sued upon was incurred; but such a judgment cannot be enforced in bankruptcy by a debtors' summons against a partner who has retired from the firm before action commenced, and who has not been personally served with the writ (In re Young, ex parte Young, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 141.)—C. A.

Croote on Mortgage (4th Edition), 863.

Where the Court declares priorities, it must order title deeds to be delivered up accordingly, even by an innocent holder (In re Cooper, Cooper v. Vesey, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 149).

White and Tudor's Leading Cases, vol. i. 318.

A mother by voluntary deed conveyed her farm and all the rest of her property to her two daughters who covenanted to pay the farming debts and to maintain their mother. Held that the deed was not void under 13 Eliz. c. 5 (Golden v. Gillam, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 154).

Order XLV, Rule 3.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 232.
Wilson on the Judicature Acts (2nd Edition), 291.

A debt to be available for attachment under Order XLV., Rule 2, must be a debt actually due, and not merely payable on a condition (Hovell v. Metropolitan District Railway Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 158).

Theobald on Wills (2nd Edition), 391.

An annuity given to A. for life, and after her death to B., held to be limited to the life of B. [Braun v. Walker, Law J. Rep. 3 Chanc. Div. 211, disapproved] (Blight v. Hartnoll, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 162).

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—J. M. Lynch, reference.—R. Carew, transfer carriage.—Trustees W. St. J. Corbett, allocation.

IN COURT.—M. M. Apjohn, receiver.—P. Callan, payment.—R. Harte, as to action.—J. Doyle, make order absolute.—G. F. O'Grady, receiver from 17th.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

F. Blake, rental.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—Trustees Sir E. Hulse, final schedule.—H. G. Smith, receiver.—W. Griffith, do.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

G. H. Mayes, vouch.—R. B. Booth, do.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

C. M'Causland, rental.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—J. O'Shea, proposal.
IN COURT.—H. E. Odium, receiver.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

T. Barry, rental.—G. Graham, do.—P. Hanly, vouch.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

P. LAWLESS,	-	-	-	1 lot.
S. DAVIS,	-	-	-	3 lots.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

T. W. Browne, for deeds.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—E. L. Hartstonge, final schedule.—J. Bury, ditto.

LAND JUDGES' COURT.

SALES.

June 30.—Before the Right Hon. Judge FLANAGAN.

Co. CAVAN.—Estate of Robert Bell Booth, owner and petitioner. The rental was prepared for a sale in two lots. Both lots were, however, put up together, and were sold to Michael and Bernard Sheridan for £4,700.

Lot 1.—Part of the lands of Drumcarban, containing 234a. 2r. 89p. statute measure, held in fee; annual profit rent, £238 5s. 7d.; Griffith's valuation, £171 15s.

Lot 2.—Other part of said lands of Drumcarban, containing 123a. 2r. 5p. statute measure, held in fee; annual profit rent, £77 19s.; Griffith's valuation, £64 15s.

Both lots were sold subject to an annuity of £80 for a life aged 81.

Solicitors, Messrs Barlow & Orr.

July 7.

Co. GALWAY.—Estate of Patrick Hanly, jun., and others, owners; the Most Rev. John M'Evilly and others, petitioners.

The lands of Carrowmanagh, and part of the lands of Carrowgorm, containing together 205a. 1r. 26p. statute measure, held in fee; estimated annual profit rent, £94 2s. 5d.; Griffith's valuation, £77 15s. Sold to Roderick Quin for £1,920.

Solicitors, Meldon & Co.

COUNTY OF THE CITY OF DUBLIN.—Estate of Hugh Fitzgerald and others, owners; Patrick Walsh, petitioner.

Lot 1.—Building ground, houses, and premises on the North Strand-road, held under lease for 999 years; annual profit rent, £143 10s.; tenement valuation, £71. Sold to Matthew Dunne for £1,100.

Lot 2.—Other building ground, houses, and premises, also situate on the North Strand-road, held under lease for 999 years; annual profit rent, £56 6s. 8d.; tenement valuation, £392. Sold to B. T. Wislaw and Rev. D. G. Westropp for £375.

Solicitor, John Thornton.

CITY OF COBK AND CITY OF DUBLIN.—Estate of Joseph Ramsey, owner and petitioner.

Lot 2.—House and premises, 98 Patrick-street, Cork, held under lease for 800 years; annual profit rent, £37 16s. 11d.; tenement valuation, £57. Sold to Robert Day for £520.

Sale of Lots 1 and 3 adjourned.

Solicitor, Robert Meeready.

We have great pleasure in announcing that E. BROUGHAM LEECH, Esq., Professor of International Law in the University of Dublin, has been admitted and sworn in a Senior Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

List of Petitions presented to the Land Judges in the month of June, 1882.

DATE	TITLE OF MATTER	OBJECT OF PETITION	COUNTY	PROFIT RENT	SOLICITOR
June 1	William Mahon, owner; Andrew Lighton, petitioner	Sale	Roscommon	£ s. d. 478 11 8	Archibald Robinson and Son
" 5	John Grady, owner; William Wellwood and another, petitioners	Sale	Roscommon	82 8 0	William Whitton
" "	Assignees of the Court of Bankruptcy and Lieut. Col. Wm. Thomas Murray, owners; Rev. H. R. Bayly, petitioner	Sale	Meath	142 4 8	Ellis and Barlow
" 8	Robert Langley Hunt, owner; Philip W. Kennedy and another, petitioners	Sale	Tipperary	142 0 0	A. H. Bland
" "	Andrew Enright, owner and petitioner	Sale	Clare	In owner's possession	James B. Moloney
" 12	James M'Cully Johnstone, owner and petitioner	Sale	Down	164 16 8	Cunningham and Dickey
" "	Philip William Creagh, owner; Lord Baron Clonbrock and others, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Cork and Kerry	649 18 2	Edward Roper
" 18	Thomas Haseard Montgomery and another, owners and petitioners	Sale	Down	Not stated	H. and W. Stanley
" "	Hugh Lyons Montgomery and another, owners; James Hope and others, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Leitrim	8,658 10 6	Whitney and Armstrong
" 14	John B. C. Justice, owner; The National Bank, petitioners	Sale	Cork	In owner's possession	Reuben T. Harvey
" 15	Bridget Hughes, owner; Joshua T. Russell, petitioner	Sale	Dublin	142 0 0	Thomas Falls
" "	Assignees of James Guiler and another, owners; The Bank of Ireland, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Antrim	128 0 0	E. H. De Moleyns
" 17	Anne Lawrence and others, owners; Samuel Lawrence, petitioner	Sale	Antrim and Londonderry	875 14 4	Bennett Thompson
" 19	George Beresford Hearn, owner; Francis O'Donnell Murphy and another, petitioners	Partition	Waterford	887 5 4	Pierce William Kelly
" 20	William Edge, owner; George K. Crampton and another, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Queen's Co.	1,109 19 4	Samuel and R. C. Walker
" 21	James Daly and another, owners; William F. Littledale, petitioner	Sale	Cork	Rent and Valuation 144 0 0	William F. Littledale
" 22	Isabella Petrie, owner; Joshua Brereton, petitioner	Sale	Fermanagh	In owner's possession	Joshua Brereton
" 23	Cornelius A. Keogh, owner; The Bank of Ireland, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Roscommon	140 5 0	E. H. De Moleyns
" 24	John William Drought, owner; Edmund M. Kelly, petitioner	Sale	King's Co.	896 10 0	Alexander D. Kennedy
" "	Sarah Jane Maxwell, owner; Thomas Ferguson and another, petitioners	Sale	Co. Down	78 15 0	George G. Tyrrell
" "	William H. Peyton and others, owners; Randle Peyton, petitioner	Sale and parti- tion	Leitrim	Griffith's Valuation 58 16 0	Davis and Montfort
" 26	John Thomas Davys, owner; Frances Boyd, petitioner	Sale	Roscommon	858 17 2	Archibald Robinson
" 28	Martin Francis O'Flaherty, owner; John Pike and another, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Galway	268 16 0	S. P. Redington
" 29	Henry A. Dickson, owner; William Guest Lane, petitioner	Sale	Cork	876 0 0	James and W. G. Lane
" 30	The Earl of Desart, owner; Thomas H. Preston, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Kilkenny	5,708 10 8	John Julian
" "	John Weldon Creaghe, owner; William Fry, petitioner	Sale	Co. Tipperary	1,211 16 1	William Fry and Son
" "	John Joseph Emerson and another, owners; John Robert Boyd and another, petitioners	Sale	King's Co.	827 11 5	Archibald Robinson and Son
" "	Michael H. J. Roberts, owner; Una G. Weston and another, petitioners	Sale	Cork	162 6 10	James and W. G. Lane

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	JULY
	Sat. 15	Mon. 17	Tues. 18	Wed. 19	Thur. 20	Fri. 21
*Paid Government.
3 p c Consols ..	99½	99½	99½	99½	—	—
3 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
New 3 p c Stock ..	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1882 } Traffic at ..	102½	—	102½	—	102½	—
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	100½	—	—	—	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	—	313	—	313	313
25 Elster's Banking Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and Agency (Ld.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and W'minster, M'd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
34 Munster Bank (Limited) ..	7½	7½	—	—	—	—
— Nat. Prov. of England, Imp. ..	—	40	—	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	23½	—	—	—	—	—
10 National of Liverpool (Ld.) ..	—	—	—	—	14½	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	29	—	—	—	—	—
25 Standard of B. &amp; A., M'd ..	—	—	57½	—	58	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	—	—	100½	—	100½	—
50 Dublin and Glasgow ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Peninsular and Oriental ..	—	—	56	—	—	—
Mines.
4 Berehaven (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
1 Killaloe Slate Co. (Ld.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (Ld.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons.' Gas ..	CLOSED	—	—	—	—	—
8 Do. do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 C. Dub. Brewery Co. (Lim.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Edinburgh Street Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Lpl Un'd Tram &amp; Bus L'd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Nth Metr. Tramway, Lond. ..	13½	—	18½	—	—	13
Railways.
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	46	—	—	—
20 Cork, Blackrock &amp; Passage ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Dublin, W'klow, &amp; W'ford ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	116½	—	117½
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	112	112	—	—	—	—
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	—	—	81½
100 Waterford &amp; Cont. Ireland ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 D., W. &amp; W., 5 p c (1880) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Nth'n (Ireland) gt'd 4 p c ..	—	—	107	—	—	—
100 Do., 3½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	87½
100 Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Watfd. &amp; Limerick, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Do., new red, 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Kilkenny Junction, A, 5 p c ..	80	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterfd &amp; Limerick 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	111	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
— Ballast Office Deb., 292 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	93	—	—	—
— City Deb. of 292 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	94	—	93	—
— Dub. &amp; Glas. S. F. Co. (1887) 5 p c ..	100	100	—	—	—	—
— Pipe Water - Old, 292 6s. 2d. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. New, 100. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—3½ per cent. 23rd March, 1882.

Of Deposit—1 per cent. 23rd March, 1882

Name Days—July 27th, and August 16th, 1882.

Account Days—July 28th, and August 16th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

The Stock Exchange and Brokers' Offices will be closed on Saturdays during the months of July and August.

Holloway's Pills are the medicine most in repute for curing the multifarious maladies which beset mankind when dry, sultry weather suddenly gives place to chilly, drenching days. In fact, these Pills offer relief even if they fall of proving an absolute remedy in all the disturbances of digestion, circulation, and nervous tone which occasionally oppress a vast portion of the population. Under the genial, purifying, and strengthening powers exerted by this excellent medicine the tongue becomes clean, the appetite improves, digestion is quickened, and assimilation is rendered perfect. These Pills possess the highly estimable property of cleansing the entire mass of blood which, in its renovated condition, carries purity, strength, and vigour to every tissue of the body.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

FITZGERALD—July 17, at the residence of her mother, Lower Mall, Tralee, the wife of William J. Fitzgerald, Esq., solicitor, Mallow, of a son.

MALONE—July 14, at Kildare-street, the wife of James J. Malone, Esq., solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

ARMSTRONG and ATKINS—April 6, at St. George's Church, Malvern, Australia, by the Rev. H. A. Langley, Henry Charles, youngest son of the late William Armstrong, of Woodlodge, County Cavan, to Zarinia, youngest daughter of the late John Roberts Atkins, Esq., B.A., barrister-at-law, Toorak.

BREMNER and GRAHAM—July 12, at Christ's Church, Albany-street, London, by the Rev. J. C. Rust, Vicar of Soham, Cambridge-shire, assisted by the Rev. J. W. Festing, Vicar of the Parish, Harry J. Bremner, Lieutenant Royal Munster Fusiliers, eldest son of John Trull Urcuhart Bremner, Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets, Chatham and Walmer, to Edith, youngest daughter of John Graham, Esq., B.C.S., Enniskillen.

M'INALLEY and MOORE—July 11, at the Church of All Saints, Ballymont, by the Rev. J. Lynch, P.P., V.F., assisted by the Rev. J. M'Allister, C.C., Lisburn, Thomas M'Inalley, son of J. M'Inalley, Glasgow, to Mary Josephine, elder daughter of the late James Moore, Esq., solicitor, Ballymena.

DEATHS.

CHURCH—July 16, at Oatlands, near Linnavady, Alicia Hartley, the beloved wife of James Church, Esq., barrister-at-law.

MOORE July 6, at Clonroher, near Maryborough, the Very Rev. Arthur Moore, Dean of Achonry, aged 68 years, eldest grandson of the late Right Hon. Arthur Moore, a pulsive Judge of the Common Pleas, the companion of Plunket, and the contemporary of Norbury and Curran.

MOORE—June 25, at Wordsworth-road, Penge, Henry Moore, Clerk of the Peace for County Limerick, in his 61st year.

ROE—July 2, at her residence, Carrolton, County Galway, after a long illness, Arabella, widow of the late William Roe, Esq., solicitor, of this city.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET.

3:7

PUBLIC NOTICES:

IRISH LAND COMMISSION.

The Irish Land Commissioners have, in conformity with Rule 104, ordered a Schedule of Agreements fixing Fair Rents to be inserted in the Dublin Gazette of the 21st July, 1882. A copy of this Schedule, in which are entered all agreements lodged during the month of June, 1882, will be sent to any person who applies for the same to the Secretary, Irish Land Commission, 24 UPPER MERRION-STREET, DUBLIN.

By Order,
DENIS GODLEY.

19th July, 1882.

105

SOLICITORS' APPRENTICE PRELIMINARY.

TRINITY TERM, 1882—Messrs. Monks and Murphy. Former success—Messrs. Hudson, O'Reilly, Carton, Hynes, Broderick, O'Callaghan, Fitzpatrick, Maguire, Coman, Fisher, Kelly, Greene, Doran, &c. Class in operation for October.

JAMES A. POOLE, M.A.,
29 Harcourt-street.

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK FOR STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens: it is a most brilliant and permanent colour: it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each.

581

PATENT OFFICE, DUBLIN.

J. K. FAHIE & SON, Consulting Engineers and Patent Agents, 2, Nassau-street, Dublin, and 323, High Holborn, London, transact every description of business relating to Patents for Inventions, Registration of Designs, Copyrights, and Trade Marks. Authors of "Hand-book on British and Foreign Patent Law." A paper on the Law of Copyright &c., to be had on application, price 5s. per copy.

HENDRICK and CO.,
PRINTERS, STATIONERS, SCRIVENERS,
and ARTISTS' WAREHOUSE,
28 CLARE-STREET,
DUBLIN.

1c6

PUBLIC NOTICES:

D. W. CARROLL,
 D. 44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
 Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
 Direct in every instance from the Makers
 They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
 Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-
 randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
 With every article connected with Stationery,
 Are Sold much under usual charges.
 Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
 Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge. 72

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.
 Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
 Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.
 The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.
 The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.
 Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.
 A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENS CROFT, Manager. 63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED
 FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO
 GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no
 rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
 FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
 A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENS CROFT, Manager. 63

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,
 No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.
J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 28 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),
 Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees,
 Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.
 Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.
 91

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES and INVESTIGATIONS
 CONDUCTED BY
MR. THOMAS DEANE,
 17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange),
 Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.
 Efficient Staff.
MODERATE CHARGES.
 References.

ESTABLISHED 1878. 167

STOKES BROTHERS,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.
 LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
 22, WESTMORELAND STREET,
 DUBLIN. 293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
 78, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
 are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
 Partnership Accounts &c., &c. 160

N. PETERSON & SON,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.
 LIVERPOOL and LONDON CHAMBERS,
 1, FOSTER-PLACE, COLLEGE-GREEN,
 DUBLIN. 813

PUBLIC NOTICES:

THE CHROMOGRAPH
 INSTANTANEOUS REPRODUCTION
 OF
MANUSCRIPTS, DOCUMENTS, PLANS, &c., &c.

Plans and Designs in various Colours obtained by One Single Operation.

The Chromograph is used WITHOUT either PRESS, INKING, or STEEP-
 ING, and with ANY DESCRIPTION OF PAPER.
 From eight to ten minutes suffice to obtain 40 to 50 copies.
 To take off the writing from the composition, it is sufficient to wash
 the apparatus with a soft sponge in clear water IMMEDIATELY after having taken the last impression.

PRICES OF CHROMOGRAPHS.

No. 1. Octavo Boxes, with a Bottle of Ink,	..	10/-
" 2. Quarto " " "	..	18/-
" 3. Foolscap " " "	..	25/-
" 4. Folio " " "	..	34/-
Extra Bottles of Ink, 1/- per Bottle. Composition, 2/- per lb.

TERMS:—CASH WITH ORDER.

GERRARD BROTHERS,
 37 STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 59

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS.

(Royal Route via Orkney and Caletonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Lochawe, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Stornoway, &c.
 Official Guide, 3d.; Illustrated, 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Fares free, at CARSON BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post from the owner, DAVID MACBRATNE, 119 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old
 Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANEATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE
 PERMANENT
BUILDING SOCIETY,
 52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.
 President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 2½ per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.

Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:

The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.

50 52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10	IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days. Two URRING'S RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free. Address GEO. EVANS &amp; CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London. 239
£1,000

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT
 CO., LIMITED.

SECURITY, &c.

RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—
39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 51

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, JULY 29, 1882.

No. 809

PRESUMPTIONS OF LIFE AND DEATH.—I.

THE Times of the 12th inst. reports a remarkable case of presumption of death on cumulative circumstantial evidence (In re Murray), which, in connexion with our previous papers on the subject in the current volume, is worth recording. It came before Sir James Hannen on an application for probate of a will executed on the 12th of January last. The testator was a market gardener, and on the night of the 24th of January, following, left his house at Sunderland. Before doing so he placed on a table his purse, which contained £12 in gold and silver. As to take a walk at night was by no means an unusual occurrence with him, his going out on this particular night caused no surprise or suspicion to the members of his family; but he did not return, and, being unable to find any tidings of him in the morning, they issued an advertisement giving a description of him and of the clothes he was wearing when he left home. Subsequent inquiries led to the discovery that an elderly man answering to the description of Mr. Murray had hired a cab in Sunderland on the night of the 24th of January and rode in it to Hullwell Mill, close to which are lime kilns. The cabman recognised a photograph of Mr. Murray as one of the men who took that ride to Hullwell Mill, and a woman living close to the kilns stated that she saw a man in every way answering to the description of Mr. Murray walk towards the kilns just after Mr. Murray alighted from the cab. It was further shown that on the night of the 24th of January the lime kilns were filled with burning material, and that when in a lime kiln the fire reaches the surface the latter becomes white. On the morning of the 25th of January a man attending to the kilns observed on the surface of one of them what appeared to him to be a dark shadow in the shape of a man's figure. He summoned a police-constable, and, in presence of the latter, applied a rake to the figure. The result was that he drew from the surface of the kiln a number of bones, some copper money, two heel-plates, part of a pocket-knife, a button, and a buckle. A surgeon who examined the bones gave his opinion that they were human, but whether those of a man or of a woman he could not say. The heel-plates, the pocket-knife, the buckle, and the button were proved to have belonged to Mr. Murray. The bones were produced as an exhibit, but Sir James Hannen refused to take them into account, as he could not recognise them as those of Mr. Murray. But, he said, the circumstances proved in the case left no doubt in his mind that Mr. Murray was the person who perished in the lime kiln; there was nothing to show whether the death was accidental or what was the state of his mind when it occurred; it was to be presumed that he died on the 24th of January; and probate of the will was granted accordingly. Now, undoubtedly, the evidence derived from burnt remains must, as a rule, at best be unsatisfactory, as Dr. Tidy maintains in his valuable work on "Legal Medecine," Part I of which has just been published; but, here the articles found along with the remains, and identified, supplied abundant evidence to fortify the conclusion suggested by the other circumstances of the case. Not that we regard the articles found along with the remains as in themselves conclusive; as a case arising out of the Ashtabula Bridge catastrophe, in 1876, will serve to illustrate. The only alleged relics of her husband which Mrs. Webber, of Rochester, N. Y., could find in the wrecked train, were a piece of cloth belonging to his coat, and a bunch of keys, one of which fitted a clock in her house, another a chest, and another a door. The (Lake Shore) company offered her $4,000, but she wanted $5,000, and so the case went to trial. Two men swore to having seen the "deceased" in the train; but, the defendants established that a man of his name, exactly answering his description, and who said he had a wife and children in Rochester, was still alive and safe in the Wisconsin soldiers' home, and that he had not been at or near the disaster. And so, though the sincerity and truthfulness of the "widow" and her witnesses were undoubted, the company saved their money, the woman lost the sum offered, and a neighbour who had advanced the sinews of war to carry on the suit has become forcibly persuaded of the glorious uncertainty of the law. In re Murray, however, though in other respects the evidence of identity was hardly stronger, if so strong, there was no suggestion that a fac-simile Murray was still extant, so that we are the less suspicious even of the button. Many a complication would be prevented if death were always so clearly established; and fiction itself, such as Anthony Trollope's "Dr. Whortle's School," would be deprived of a large portion of its sensational stock if its characters would only take equally adequate steps to determine the actual demise of inconvenient husbands, et alios, who stand in the way. But, even a register of death is no absolute proof of death. In the case of Vital Donat, a man shortly before his bankruptcy insured his life with a Paris Insurance Company for 100,000 francs. His bankruptcy was subsequently declared fraudulent. He then came to England, purchased a coffin, procured a certificate of death from the registrar, and (like Charles V., assisting at his own obsequies) followed the coffin, which he had loaded with lead, to the grave, where it was duly interred. This done, his wife went to Paris and presented to the company copies of the registry of the death and burial of her husband, and claimed the amount of the insurance. But, the coffin being exhumed, the deceased was taken into custody at Antwerp, and the fraud frustrated, unlike that of Udderzook and Goss, which will be found referred to in some previous papers by the present writer ("Life Insurance Frauds," 8 Ir. L. T. 399, 412).

It is but the other day, indeed, that Mr. Justice Harrison and a common jury succeeded in bringing a dead man to life, in Nolan v. Kelly (ante, p. 205). The corpse, after being conclusively "waked" and buried at Glencullen, was shown, by evidence sufficient even to satisfy the counter-protesting "widow," to be not so dead as it seemed. Then, there is the case of Church v. Smith (Exch., Dec. 1853), in which the question whether the plaintiff, who had not heard from her husband for twelve years, was a widow and competent to sue in her own right, was summarily determined in the negative by reason of the appearance of the missing man in the witness box; like the old case before Lord St. Leonards, where the quietude of a Chancery administration suit was disturbed at the last moment by a noisy person who insisted, as the fact was, that he was the intestate. More awkward still was the reappearance of the real Martin Guerre, after an absence of eight years, as we read in the Causés Célèbres before the Parliament of Toulouse, 1560. In this case another man had succeeded in passing himself off as the genuine Guerre, lived with the widow and had children by her, and took possession of the property; but on the subsequent trial, the imposture was made manifest by Martin himself coming forward and establishing his identity. An absence of even thirty years did not suffice to frustrate a similar effort on the part of Cassali to establish his identity; and Baronet was equally successful after twenty-two years' absence, though he had first to endure some years servitude at the galleys, as an impostor: see Foderé, "Traité de Méd. Légale," ch. 2.

LAND VALUERS IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

In the House of Commons, on the 24th inst.,

Mr. TOTTENHAM asked the Chief Secretary whether his attention has been drawn to a report of the case of Fyfe v. Beatty, in the IRISH LAW TIMES of the 15th inst., where the County Court Judge of the County Fermanagh applied to the Land Commissioners to pay a valuer appointed by him to assist him, but was informed that they had no power to do so, and that the expense must be borne by the litigants; whether it is the case, as reported, that he then remonstrated with the Commissioners on this decision, and requested to be provided with a competent valuer, as was done in the cases of Sub-Commissioners and other County Courts, but was informed that all their valuers were engaged; whether this was the result of the joint action of all the Commissioners or of Mr. Commissioner Litton alone; and whether the County Court Judge strongly animadverted on the position in which he was left and the injustice to litigants.

The CHIEF SECRETARY—I have seen the report referred to in the question of the hon. member, and am informed that it is correct. The Land Commissioners have no power to pay a valuer appointed by a County Court Judge. The case of a County Court Judge requiring the services of an independent valuer is provided for by the 37th section of the Land Act. Under that section the costs must be paid by one of the parties or by both conjointly. The Land Commissioners have been most anxious to assist the County Court Judges and to relieve them from the necessity of employing valuers, and whenever the services of a court valuer has been available they have been placed at the disposal of the judges, but for some time back they have not found it possible to spare any of their valuers, as the services of all have been imperatively required in the appeal cases. The Land Commission acted in this matter on the general instructions of all the Commissioners. I see from the number of the IRISH LAW TIMES referred to by the hon. member, that the County Court Judge is reported to have made certain animadversions, which, however, appeared to be directed against the law rather than against the Land Commission.

THE LEGAL POSITION OF THE SUEZ CANAL.

International rights over artificial water-ways from sea to sea, and their relation to those of the power owning the territory in which such ways are situated will probably form an important branch of the international law of the future. At present there are hardly any instances upon which a discussion of such rights can be founded. But in view of the important questions which must soon be settled as to the Suez Canal, it may be interesting to examine what the legal position, so far as law can be held to apply to a subject matter so new and so anomalous, of that undertaking is.

The relations of the company to the Egyptian Government and its suzerain are defined by concessions granted by the Khedive in 1854 and 1856, and finally ratified by the Sultan's firman of the 22nd Feb., 1856.

The most important articles provide that the canal shall be kept open at all times as a neutral channel to the merchant ships of all nations without distinction or preference, the company being allowed to charge a toll not exceeding ten francs per ton. The company is declared to be an Egyptian one, and all disputes between it and the Egyptian Government or third parties are to be decided by the local tribunals according to the laws of the country and to treaties; but as regards its internal affairs, and the rights of its shareholders, it is declared to be a French Société Anonyme, and subject to the laws regulating such societies. The canal and its dependencies are made subject to the police of the Egyptian Government, in the same manner as the rest of its territory. Certain land upon the banks is given up to the company, but the Government reserve power to take back and occupy any points of strategic importance, agreeing not to interfere with the navigation of the canal. The concession terminates at the end of ninety-nine years, unless a fresh agreement is entered into, and it is provided that the 15 per cent. share of profits given to the Khedive is to be increased by 5 per cent. on every such fresh agreement till it has reached 35 per cent.

There is nothing in this concession which in any way abandons the sovereign rights of the Egyptian Government or its suzerain, the Sultan, over the canal, nor which gives any rights to any other Power. It is simply a private contract between the Khedive and the company, ratified by the Sultan. Acting upon this view, the company, soon after the opening of the canal, obtained leave from the Sultan to charge a sur-tax of one franc per ton for the passage of vessels, and they then further increased the toll, without such leave, by charging upon what they considered the actual capacity instead of, as at first, upon the registered tonnage of vessels using the canal. The Sultan, pressed by the Powers to put an end to this exaction, called a Conference in Oct. 1873, at Constantinople, to agree upon a general standard of tonnage. The Conference wisely refused to embark upon this general question, but agreed upon a mode of measurement which they considered fair for the Suez Canal, and recommended the Porte that the company should be compelled to adopt this measurement, and, at the same time, should be allowed to charge a sur-tax of three francs per ton, to be reduced upon a sliding scale as the tonnage of ships using the canal increased. The Porte accepted these recommendations, and at the same time voluntarily declared that the Turkish Government would not allow any increased toll to be levied without its consent, and would come to an understanding with the principal Powers interested before coming to a decision.

The Powers throughout the negotiation recognised the absolute right of the Porte to regulate the tolls, and the recommendations of the Conference were carried out as the act of the Porte. The company refused to accept the terms agreed upon, and even issued a notice that the canal would be closed. They only yielded under pressure of the despatch of an Egyptian force to seize the canal; and accepted the new dues only under protest until 1876, when an agreement was come to slightly modifying in the company's favour the terms imposed by the Conference. About the same time a dispute arose as to jurisdiction, the company claiming to have all disputes in which they were concerned tried by the French Consular, instead of the Egyptian Court. The French Government, however, repudiated any claim that the company was solely under French jurisdiction, and the controversy came to an end on the establishment of the international tribunals in Egypt in 1874. The purchase of the Khedive's shares by the English Government, though it gave that Government a locus standi to enforce the rights of the company in the agreement with the Khedive and the Sultan, could not affect its international position, and some negotiations, which were started shortly before that purchase, for the handing over the management of the canal to an International Commission, fell to the ground before the decided opposition of the Porte. At the outbreak of the Russo-

Turkish war, M. de Lesseps proposed a general agreement between the European Governments that the canal should at all times be open for ships of war as well as of peace, the disembarkation only of troops and munitions of war being forbidden. Lord Derby, however, refused to entertain the proposal of any such agreement, and contented himself with a notice to both of the belligerent governments that any attempt to stop the canal would be incompatible with the maintenance by Her Majesty's Government of passive neutrality. It would seem, therefore, that there are no special international obligations affecting the Suez Canal at all. It is simply a part of the territory of Egypt and her suzerain the Sultan, subject in all respects to their control, but leased for ninety-nine years to a company formed under and governed by French law, upon terms which, in so far at least as regards the tolls to be levied for passage, the Sultan has voluntarily declared he will not alter without consulting the Powers. It is also subject to whatever rights of user can be claimed over it by international law in consequence of its being one of the highways of the world, and the only passage between two open seas, which rights have been to some extent recognised by the voluntary declaration of the Sultan above referred to. What the measure of such rights may be it is impossible to say, but they cannot be greater than those which obtain in a natural strait between two seas where both shores are in the territory of the same power. It seems to be the accepted opinion of jurists that in such a case, while the territorial power has no right to prevent the passage of merchant ships, no other power has a right to claim passage for ships of war, or troopships. In law, therefore, as well as in fact, the canal can only be kept open for English troopships and ships of war either by special treaty with all the European Powers, or by England's possessing in some form or another the control of the territory within which the canal is situated.—Law Times.

THE BILLS OF EXCHANGE BILL.

It is not impossible that the present session of Parliament, although not productive of measures requiring public discussion, may yet produce some Acts of great importance to the lawyer. The House of Commons, in its corporate capacity, has not been making great progress; but select committees have been working assiduously. The Bankruptcy Bill has been abandoned; and probably the only important bill generally interesting to lawyers, and raising questions about which there is great difference of opinion, which is likely to pass, is the Bills of Sale Bill. But there is another class of measure of which two examples are very far advanced. The Criminal Code raises momentous questions which are not likely to be settled for some sessions to come, but the Partnership Bill and the Bills of Exchange Bill have some prospect of passing this session. The Bills of Exchange Bill professes to be almost entirely a code of the existing law. It has been two sessions before Parliament, and, after undergoing the ordeal of a select committee of the House of Commons, has passed that House. It was introduced on Tuesday to the House of Lords by Lord Bramwell, who, without undertaking to guarantee it, gave it a very high character. It is to be read a second time on Tuesday next. It is not likely to undergo much discussion among the peers as a body. It deals with bills of exchange known to the business world, and but little with that spurious form known as an accommodation bill, in which peers may be not uninterested on behalf of sons or nephews, or in legislating for which the experience of younger days might be useful. The real tribunal which the bill ought to satisfy is a select committee composed largely of law lords. The reference to such a committee would of course shelve the bill until next session; but there is no hurry for it. It is, so far as we know, the first effort at codification which has come within a reasonable distance of passing. If the bill is passed, and turns out a failure, a serious injury will be done to the cause of codification. Moreover, the House of Lords is the legislative body to which the public look in the case of such bills as the present. A committee thoroughly competent as lawyers to criticise the bill can be formed in that House such as is impossible in the Lower House. The bill, before it is passed, ought to satisfy mercantile men and lawyers of the highest class. It has, in the House of Commons, run the gauntlet of mercantile men of the highest kind available in the country. The highest class of lawyers can only be found in the House of Lords, and they can only bring their knowledge to bear in the form of a select committee. To such a tribunal, therefore, we think the bill ought to go.

No one can read the bill without being impressed with its high value. It was drafted under the directions of the Institute of Bankers, and introduced last session by Sir John Lubbock, Mr. Cohen, Sir John Holker, Mr. Lewis Fry, and Mr. Monk. It was reintroduced this session, and referred to a select committee, over which the Solicitor-General presided. It, therefore, appears before the House of Lords with good credentials, and even a casual perusal of it discloses its merits in point of brevity and clearness. It consists of 105 clauses, and in this short space compresses, so far as can be judged, all the law of bills of exchange, promissory notes, and cheques. The side-notes give the cases and statutes relied on to support the propositions in the text. They are not, of course, to appear in the Act, if that stage be reached, but are intended to help the critic. The reader is attracted, at the commencement of the bill, by the brevity of its interpretation clause. Thirteen words are defined; and it is the highest praise we can give to the clause to say that it is unnecessary. The words defined, with insignificant exceptions, bear the meanings attributed to them. The bill, therefore, does not swim on bladders, like the bills of bad draftsmen, but relies only on natural means for attaining its end. After a definition of a bill of exchange, and a description of its parties, we are told (clause 8): "A bill is payable to order which is expressed to be so payable, or which is expressed to be payable to a particular person, and does not contain words prohibiting transfer or indicating an intention that it should not be transferable." Whether intentionally or not, the second branch of this sentence alters the law. According to English law, a bill payable to A. B. is not negotiable. This result is due to a logical use of language. Looking at the words of the document, a bill payable to A. B. does not suggest negotiability. It may, however, well be a convenience to mercantile men to make such bills negotiable. If such is the case, probably their convenience will prevail, as it prevailed in the case of the acceptance of a bill by signature alone without words of acceptance. There seems some doubtful drafting in clause 20, sub-clause 3: "Where the bill when complete is negotiated to a holder who knows that it was sent forth in an incomplete state, such knowledge operates as notice that the bill was filled up without authority, or in contravention of the authority given, if such be the fact, and shall deprive him of rights given to the holder in due course." "Sent forth" is not a clear phrase; and "in contravention" probably means "in excess," or should have those words added to it. Clause 26 of the bill does not very successfully deal with a vexed subject. It provides that "where a person signs a bill as drawer, indorser, or acceptor, and adds words to his signature, indicating that he signs for or on behalf of a principal, or in a representative character, he is not personally liable thereon; but the mere addition to his signature of words describing him as an agent, or as filling a representative character, does not exempt him from personal liability." Words describing the person who signs as filling a representative capacity are not to prevent personal liability; words indicating that he signs in a representative capacity prevent personal liability. Are we any further forward? To what class does "signed Jones, agent for Smith" belong? Would it be different if the signature were "as agent for Smith?" In fact the test shadowed out, although it may be of use in an agreement, is not of much use where, as on a bill of exchange, there is nothing but a signature.

A close and deep examination of the bill will doubtless disclose many points of doubt; or where, at least, it is capable of improvement. Lawyers look upon bills of this class with no great favour. It is supposed that they send us all to school again. Before such a bill passes, the lawyer assumes that he knows the law of bills of exchange, and after that he is doubtful. This, however, is not really the case. Very few lawyers know all the law on a subject like bills of exchange. Let them test their knowledge by reading this bill, and see if they do not learn something. Bills of this kind, in fact, facilitate the lawyer's knowledge, and make him able at once to lay his hand on his authority when consulted. To some extent, perhaps, codes make men their own lawyers; but no lawyer believes that he has anything to fear from that result. After the bill has passed through the fire of criticism from the law lords in committee, it may be confidently accepted as an admirable contribution to the codification of commercial law.—Law Journal.

BLASPHEMOUS PUBLICATIONS.

There seems to be a general feeling among the public that proceedings such as those lately initiated against the Freethinker for the publication of blasphemy, are at the present day ill-advised and out of place, and their utility in suppressing the abnoxious literature doubtful. It is, at any rate, certain that within recent times the powers which the State possesses of punishing such offences have rarely been invoked, and that the sources from whence the law is derived, must be sought in the statutes and reports of the 17th and 18th centuries rather than in those of the present age.

Blasphemy, it is to be observed, may be regarded in two aspects; either spiritually, as an offence against the Deity, or temporally, as it affects the peace and good order of civil society. It is of course in the latter relation only that it is cognizable by municipal law; in other words, its punishment is founded on the dangerous consequences likely to arise from the removal of religious and moral restraints. On this ground it seems to be well established that blasphemy against God by denying his being or providence, contumelious reflections upon the life and character of Christ, and all scoffing or indecorous comments upon the Scriptures, are indictable offences at common law, punishable with fine and imprisonment, and also, it is said, with "infamous" corporal punishment.

Of the leading cases on this subject the earliest on record is that of one Atwood, in 15 Jac. 1, who was convicted of speaking words reflecting on religious preaching—viz., that it was "but prating, and the hearing of service more edifying than two hours preaching." Notice may also be made of the trial of one Taylor (Vent. 298), for uttering gross blasphemies, in the course of which Chief Justice Hale observed that to say religion is a cheat is to dissolve all those obligations whereby civil society is preserved; that Christianity is part of the laws of England, and therefore to reproach the Christian religion is to speak in subversion of the law. On the same ground a conviction was sustained in the case of R. v. Woolston (Str. 834), where the libel stated that Christ was an impostor and fanatic, and his life and miracles were turned into ridicule. In 1763, again, one Annett was convicted of publishing a libel called "The Free Inquirer," tending to ridicule the Scriptures, and particularly the Pentateuch, by representing Moses as an impostor; and a similar result followed the case of R. v. Williams, in 1797, for publishing Paine's "Age of Reason," in which the authority of the Old and New Testament was denied, and the prophets and Christ were ridiculed. The same doctrine has been fully recognised in other cases, one of the latest, perhaps, being that of Carlile (3 B. & Ald. 161), who, in 1820, was sentenced to pay a fine of £1,500, to be imprisoned for three years, and to find sureties for his good behaviour during life.

But, besides the common law, the Legislature itself has made certain provisions against this kind of offence. The statute 1 Edw. 6, c. 1, for example, enacts that persons reviling the sacrament of the Lord's Supper by contemptuous words or otherwise shall suffer imprisonment. By 1 Eliz., c. 2, again, if any minister shall speak anything in derogation of the Book of Common Prayer, he shall be punishable, as there mentioned, by imprisonment and loss of benefice. So also, by 3 Jac. 1, c. 21, whoever shall use the name of the Holy Trinity profanely or jestingly in any stage-play or show, is made liable to a fine of £10. Lastly, by 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 30, it is enacted that, if any person educated in, or having made profession of, the Christian religion, shall by writing, teaching, or advised speaking, assert that there are more gods than one, or deny the Christian religion to be true, or the Scriptures to be of Divine authority, he shall, upon the first offence, be incapable of holding any office or trust; and on the second conviction shall be for ever incapable to bring any action, or to bear any office or benefice, and further shall suffer imprisonment for three years. It has been held, moreover, that the effect of this enactment is cumulative, and that an offender against it is still punishable at the common law.

But it is not of course true that every publication which tends to weaken a religious argument is illegal; nor is there any doubt as to the general right of inquiry and discussion, even upon the most sacred subjects, provided the license be exercised in a spirit of moderation and fairness, without any intention to affront or injure religious sentiments. It is, however, impossible to draw the boundary with certainty; general principles alone can guide to a correct decision. It is to be remembered, as an eminent authority (Starkie on Libel) has well observed, that in such cases "a malicious and mischievous intention, or what is equivalent to such intention, in law as well as morals—a state of apathy and indifference to the interests of society—is the broad boundary between right and wrong." If, therefore, it can be collected from the circumstances of the publication that the author's design was to occasion the mischief to which the libel tends, "to destroy or weaken men's sense of religious or moral obligations, to insult those who believe by casting contumelious abuse and ridicule upon their doctrines, or to bring the established religion and form of worship into disgrace and contempt," then the offence against society is complete, and the offender liable to the consequences the law prescribes.—Law Times.

The proceedings at the Mansion House with reference to the Freethinker are likely to strike many persons as being, on the whole, ill-advised. If the case ever goes before a jury, they may take a serious view of the guilt of those concerned in the publication, and the judge may feel it his duty to pass a severe sentence. That, however, would not be a complete justification of such a prosecution. Whatever be the result in a court of law, there is still reason to apprehend that it may do more harm than good. On the surface lies the fact that proceedings of this kind give publicity to people who sedulously court it. We know that whenever such a prosecution is started familiar figures will be certain to appear upon the stage, and will steadily keep possession of it. It is, too, the penalty paid for these efforts in the interest of public morals that they bring prominently before one thing which have been unnoted by most of us, or which one would fain forget. A prosecution for blasphemy begun at the Mansion House and continued at the Old Bailey accentuates breaches of good taste and decency which would otherwise have been quickly forgotten. In this instance a periodical which, we hope, may be described without offence as somewhat obscure, and little likely to be much sought after if left to itself, is advertised widely, and the very object of the prosecution, which is, no doubt, to suppress such literature, is pretty certain to be defeated. It is difficult for the most zealous friend of public morality to be enthusiastic about prosecutions the clearest effect of which is to increase the sale of the publications which are complained of. The propriety of putting in operation the common law as to blasphemy, even against publications which shook all right-minded men, is not always clear. That law was constructed long ago, and it is not surprising that it fails to be in accordance with modern notions. It is terribly comprehensive and sweeping. It is somewhat too dangerous a weapon for general use. It cannot be handled by every one with safety. When a novice rushes to the Mansion House and asks for a summons in order to put this law in force against some notable heretic, it is for all the world like a child taking down an old blunderbuss which has long hung over the fire and levelling it without much caring to know whether it is loaded. Inoffensive bystanders in both cases are not unlikely to suffer. To waken the sleeping terrors of this half obsolete part of our law is to expose the community to the risk of ill-judged and, indeed, mischievous prosecutions. It is alarming to consider the possibility of setting in motion the powers which slumber in the Statute-book, or in the Common Law. To call in question the formularies of the Church of England may be blasphemy. To speak anything in derogation of the Book of Common Prayer is an offence which may be punishable in a layman, on the third occasion, by imprisonment for life. Our fathers prosecuted Carline with such effect that a hero naturally not particularly attractive became known even among those who had no liking for his opinions, as "the martyr of irreligion." Perhaps the last prosecution for blasphemy was that of Pooley, a half-crazy well-inker, in Cornwall. He had persistently scribbled on a gate foul and blasphemous words. For this he was tried before the late Mr. Justice Coleridge at Bodmin Assizes. He was found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment for twenty-one months. Symptoms of insanity unmistakably declared themselves after he was confined, and he was pardoned. But the trial left in most minds an impression that the prosecution was ill-advised, and ought not to be imitated. The aversion to such prosecutions springs not merely from experience of their failure to promote the objects which good men have at heart. But most of us have long ceased to believe that it is right to punish men for their convictions, however mistaken. Whether from growth of obarity, or indifference, or perplexity, or experience of the mischievousness of persecution, most men are not inclined to put in prison the apostles of the views which they most detest, and they are rather at a loss what to do with persecuting laws which remain unrepealed. Yet it is not at all necessary to deprecate every prosecution for blasphemy. A man may show by his conduct that he intends to insult and outrage the feelings of others. He may be even less desirous of proselytising than giving offence to tender consciences. Such a person cannot fairly appeal to the principle of toleration if he be summarily put down as a public nuisance. It is no interference with liberty, rightly understood, to prevent him noisily and offensively vending his publications in such a manner as to annoy needlessly those who regard as sacred the subjects at which he scoffs. He would be the first, we may be sure, to complain if the meetings of his own sect were disturbed by the protests of a member of the Salvation Army. This consideration suggests a rough test of the circumstances in which such prosecutions are at all expedient or justifiable. They may be reluctantly employed against a well-known publication which wantonly insults and wounds the most cherished sentiments of multitudes. But their policy is always doubtful, their utility always uncertain, when they are the means of making known to the public the very literature which they are employed to put down. They have, on the whole, done so little good hitherto, that every new proceeding of the kind must be a cause of anxiety to thoughtful men.—Times.

BARON FITZGERALD has tendered his resignation. He was appointed a Baron of the Court of Exchequer in 1861.

THE LAW OF DISTRESS.

The committee on this subject, which has sat for nearly four months under the chairmanship of Mr. Goschen, have concluded their labours. Their report has been adopted, and it will shortly be presented to Parliament. The main recommendation of the committee is that a landlord should only be allowed to levy a distress for twelve months' rent instead of for six years' arrears, as is now permitted by the law, except in cases where the debtor has become insolvent or executed a deed of assignment. It was urged during the discussion of the report, and in some of the evidence heard from week to week, that the commercial interest was unfairly prejudiced by the existing conditions of the law, and on this ground several members urged that distress should be altogether abolished; but the majority of the members thought a substantial modification of the law would be more equitable. The report also refers to the excessive and unregulated charges often made for the levy of a distress, and urges that these should be subject to taxation by the county court judge or some other competent authority. At the instance of Mr. Duckham a new sub-section was added, which sets forth that the present law of distress enables the landlord to distrain for the full amount of rent due, without allowing for any counter-claim which a tenant may have secured to him under agreement against his landlord; that some cases of great hardship had been given in evidence where tenants had to resort to actions at law for the recovery of their claims; and that provision should be made to meet this difficulty.

PARTICULARS AND CONDITIONS OF SALE.

(Continued from page 318, ante.)

As to Leasehold Property.

"9. Where the property is of leasehold tenure the receipt for the last payment of rent accrued previously to the completion of the purchase shall be accepted by the purchaser as conclusive proof that the rent reserved by, and the covenants and conditions contained in, as well as the original lease as the derivative leases (if any) under which the property is held, have been paid; observed, and performed up to the time of the completion of the purchase, or that any breaches of such covenants and conditions up to that time have been waived, and no evidence shall be required as to the right of the person by whom, or on whose behalf, such receipt was given, to receive the rent therein expressed to be paid. The lease, whether original or derivative, by the conditions of sale made the root of title, or a copy thereof, shall be produced and may be examined at the office of the vendor's solicitor at any time between the hours of 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. on the three days (other than Saturday or Sunday, or day on which solicitors' offices are usually closed), immediately preceding the day of sale, and shall also be produced at the time of sale, and the purchaser, whether he examines the same or not, shall be deemed to have bought with notice of the covenants and conditions therein contained. The sale of property of leasehold tenure is subject to the consent of the reversioner being obtained when necessary, and the consent fee shall be paid by the vendor."

There is no need to insert condition that purchaser shall assume the lease to be duly granted. This is supplied by sect. 3 (4), and in case of underlease by sect. 3 (5). But the statutory provision made in the same subsections, that the receipt for last rent due shall be prima facie evidence of performance of covenants, is not quite sufficient. Our condition, therefore, makes it conclusive evidence. Mr. Dart's opinion is that even in this stronger form it would only cover breaches unknown to the vendor, or which he had good reason to believe waived: (Dart, 169; see also Edwards v. Wickwar, L. Rep. 1 Eq. 68.) As to evidence of performance of covenants to which purchaser was entitled, under open contract before the C. A., where the receipt for last rent could not be produced, see Ringer v. Thompson (Weekly Notes, Nov. 12, 1881, p. 188; 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 680). Sect. 14 of C. A., authorising relief against forfeiture in most cases, renders breach of covenant often of less consequence than before the Act. In Lawrie v. Lees (42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 486; L. Rep. 14 Ch. Div. 247; affirmed by House of Lords, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 210; L. Rep. 7 App. Cas. 19) a purchaser was held bound by a condition such as the above, although he objected that there might be a forfeiture after completion for a continuing breach of covenant. There clearly were in that case breaches of covenant, but the lessors had been receiving rent with knowledge of this. It was a case with special circumstances, so we must refer the reader to the Reports for full information. In Broad v. Munton (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 828; L. Rep. 12 Ch. Div. 131) a certain condition excluding a known defect was held to be misleading. In Brookes v. Drysdale (87 L. T. Rep. N. S. 467; L. Rep. 3 O. P. Div. 52) a statement that the lease was subject to "usual covenants" was held misleading, it being shown that the lease required, under penalty of forfeiture, all underleases and assignments to be registered with the landlord's solicitor and a fee paid. It is far better to let the purchaser examine the lease as is provided in the above condition.

As to Property Sold subject to Leases.

"10. Where the property to be sold is stated in the particulars to be sold subject to any tenancy greater than a yearly one, counterparts or copies of the leases or agreements (if in writing) under which the tenants hold can be inspected during the fortnight previous to the sale at the office of the vendor's solicitor, or at the time of sale in the saleroom, and the purchaser is to be deemed to have notice of and to take subject to the terms of all the existing tenancies, whether arising during the continuance or after the expiration thereof, and such notice shall not be affected by any partial or incomplete statement in the particulars with reference to the tenancies."

As to yearly or shorter tenancies, see condition 6, above, Law Times, July 15th, page 192. And as to notice of terms of existing tenancies and collateral agreements connected therewith, see Phillips v. Miller 82 L. T. Rep. N. S. 688; L. Rep. 10 O. P. 420. As to whether notice of a tenancy is notice of the length and terms of the tenancy, see James v. Lichfield (L. Rep. 9 Eq. 51) and Oballare v. Henty (80 L. T. Rep. N. S. 814; 9 Ch. App. 447.)

As to Property subject to Incumbrances.

"11. Where the property to be sold is subject to incumbrance, no release by a separate instrument of any incumbrance shall be required, nor shall any objection be made, on the ground of expense, complication, or otherwise, to any incumbrancer joining in the conveyance to the purchaser."

See, as to this condition, Dart, 501, and compare form in Wolstenholme, 121.

Compensation.

"12. If any error, misstatement, or omission in the particulars be discovered, the same shall not annul the sale, but if pointed out before the completion of the purchase, and not otherwise, shall form the subject of compensation, such compensation to be made to or by the purchaser as the case may require, and the amount thereof to be settled by the auctioneer, whose decision shall be final."

See also condition 6, above (Law Times, July 15th, p. 192) as to condition for compensation, and its effect, see Dart, 184, 142, and see the cases cited in our article of June 24th, page 186. Compensation after conveyance was ordered in Turner v. Skelton (41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 668; L. Rep. 18 Ch. Div. 180), but this case was dissented from in Allen v. Richardson (41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 614; L. Rep. 18 Ch. Div. 524).

Interest on Purchase Money.

"13. If from any cause whatever, other than the wilful default of the vendor, the purchaser fails to complete his purchase on the appointed day, he shall pay to the vendor interest on the balance of the purchase money (and also on the valuation for timber, fixtures, and other matters, if by the special conditions of sale provision is made for such valuation) at the rate of 25 per cent per annum from that time until actual completion. Provided always that if the delay in completion shall arise from the default of the vendor, or the state of the title, and if the purchaser shall, at his own risk and expense, deposit the remainder of his purchase money in any bank in London or Westminster, or within twenty miles of the place of sale, on a deposit account bearing interest, or shall, at his own risk and expense, invest the same on any security, and shall forthwith give notice of such deposit or investment to the vendor, the vendor shall from the time of receiving notice of such deposit or investment be entitled to such interest only as shall be actually produced thereby."

For explanation of the words "from any cause whatever," &c., see Williams v. Glenton (84 Beav. 528; affirmed L. Rep. 1 Ch. App. 200 Dart, 636, 641). Interest may be reserved so as to increase on delay: (Herbert v. Salisbury, &c., Railway Company, L. Rep. 2 Eq. 221.) As to appropriation of purchase money, see Dart, 627, 634; and Kershaw v. Kershaw (4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 651; L. Rep. 9 Eq. 56). As to conditions for valuation of timber, see Dart, 183; David i. 607; Wolstenholme, 113; and as to what is timber, see David. "Settlements," iii. 280, and Honywood v. Honywood (80 L. T. Rep. N. S. 671; L. Rep. 18 Eq. 806). In Lowndes v. Norton (Weekly Notes 1876, p. 221) Vice-Chancellor Hall said that the expression "timber-like trees" was not very clearly defined, but that he could not construe it as going beyond "timber," except so as to include trees which, in due course of growth, would become timber. See also Lowndes v. Norton (L. Rep. 6 Ch. Div. 139). Mr. Dart states that a grant of timber and timber-like trees includes trees which, by local custom, are considered timber, and even "thinnings" and probably sound pollards. As to valuation of fixtures, see Dart, 182, 222, 566. If there is no condition as to payment for timber, of course it will pass to the purchaser without payment. This is also the case with common fixtures, including such as are not strictly fixtures: (Dart, 182; and see notes to Elwes v. Mawe, 2 Smith L. C. 200.) As to liability of purchaser to interest if he exercises acts of ownership, even though delay is due to the vendor, see Ballard v. Skutt (48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 178; L. Rep. 15 Ch. Div. 122.)

(To be continued.)

BARRISTERS AND SOLICITORS.

The annual meeting of the Incorporated Law Society has once more called attention to the strange contrast between the two branches of the Legal Profession in respect of their corporate or quasi-corporate character. Solicitors are represented by a powerful, active, and vigilant body. No Bill in Parliament, and no measure of legal administration that in any way touches their interests, escapes the scrutiny of the Law Society. The eyes of the council are equally open to such matters of principle as the scale of professional remuneration, and such points of particular convenience as the accommodation provided for solicitors in the still unfinished portion of the new Courts of Justice. The point of view taken by the solicitors of the kingdom as a body on the greatest and the least of these things is constantly and effectively brought to the notice of those who have charge of them; in the first instance, most naturally, and by no means improperly, on behalf of solicitors and in their special interest, but likewise in many cases for the public good. If the Incorporated Law Society were nothing but a trade union, it would still be of great use to statesmen and legislators in the same way that trade unions are—by making known the wishes and opinions prevailing among its members. Turning to the higher branch of the Profession, as it is called, we find a widely different state of affairs, which, indeed, would be incredible if we had not experience of it. The Bar is nominally governed by four distinct and independent societies, which have no regular means of intercourse or common action. The governing bodies of these societies, again, are in no way representative, and if their administration possesses in any degree the confidence of the Bar—which we cannot say it does in at least one of the Inns—it is by accident. Practically the benchers are co-extensive with Queen's Counsel; in other words, they are persons nominated by the Crown at their own request and for purposes to which the government of the Inns of Court is quite subordinate. As a rule, a successful and busy Queen's Counsel takes little or no part in the affairs of his Inn. A man who gets up at five or six in the morning to read briefs is at work in court from ten to four, and in consultation from four to six, and goes home to read more briefs after dinner, has not much room left for the exercise of public spirit; nor indeed, it may be whispered, for many other of the things which in some people's opinion make human life really having. The result is that the acting benchers of the Inns of Court are, with few exceptions, men past their best days, men who have been comparative failures at the bar, or (worst of all) fussy persons who have crochets in architecture or what not, and think they have a genius for administration. It is impossible to say that the general interests of the Bar are adequately represented by them; and the body of junior barristers (which, the lay reader must understand, means not only young men, but all barristers, old or young, who are not Queen's Counsel or serjeants), have no voice whatever in the government, and no means of making themselves heard. Even in such a matter as the adaptation of new buildings to professional convenience they are helpless. The benchers engage an eminent architect and turn him loose. The eminent architect produces a goodly pile of bricks and mortar, and the barrister who seeks quarter in it is as likely as not to find that it never occurred to his eminent mind to make the simplest inquiries about the manner in which barristers' chambers are occupied and used. If the Incorporated Law Society possessed commanding sites and built solicitors' offices on them, things would be far otherwise managed. It may be said that the disorganised condition of the Bar is not a fault to be thrown upon the Benchers, but rather proceeds from the want of public spirit among the junior barristers themselves; and there is only too much truth in this. The engrossing character of successful practice at the bar is one cause; the overgrown numbers of the profession, and the considerable number of merely nominal barristers it includes, are others. In any case, the present state of things is a public mischief. If the Incorporated Law Society is a good thing, the formless and nerveless condition of the Inns of Court must be a bad thing. It is difficult, however, to see any present remedy. The recent establishment of common-rooms in the several Inns of Court may do some little good; but the separation of the inns, which is the root of the evil, is not only untouched, but made more prominent by it. Already there are those who begin not only to think that one day the distinction between the two branches of the Profession may be broken down, but to think of it with equanimity. Men who are now reading for the Bar may live, unless an effectual reform is taken in hand, to see the Inns of Court annexed by the Incorporated Law Society.—Pall Mall Gazette.

OFFENCES AGAINST THE DEBTORS ACT.

The Debtors Act which was passed in 1869 consolidated and enlarged the enactments relating to debtors and their creditors. New views were then introduced and extension of the bankruptcy jurisdiction to non-traders at the same time gave a better tone to the mode of treating a somewhat delicate subject. Several decisions have been arrived at in the interpretation of the statute, and from the latest it seems that there are things in it which the public are little aware of, and yet which are salutary in their bearing on the habits of debtors.

The Act 32 & 33 Vict., c. 62, is short, but sums up in a small compass several characteristic delinquencies of those who are insolvent. With the civil aspect of the law and the extent and power of committal to prison for debt, it is not at present intended to refer. It is enough to confine our attention to the sections dealing with the punishment of fraudulent debtors. The 11th section groups together a variety of acts of misconduct, each of which is a misdemeanour and may be punished with two years' imprisonment. The person who is adjudged a bankrupt must fully discover to the trustee administering his estate for the benefit of his creditors all his property, and when he disposed of the latest portions in other than the ordinary course of trade. He must deliver up all his property and all his books and documents relating thereto. He must not conceal or fraudulently remove such property. He must state his accounts fairly—must not mutilate or falsify his papers or make false entries. He must not within four months of the bankruptcy fraudulently part with such property, or by false or fraudulent statements acquire more property on credit, and not pay for the same. The 18th section is also important, for a misdemeanour is committed punishable with one year's imprisonment, if any person in incurring debt has obtained credit by false pretences, or if he has with intent to defraud his creditors made a gift of or a charge upon his property, or if he has with intent to defraud his creditors concealed or removed any part of his property since or within two months before the date of any unsatisfied judgment or order for payment of money obtained against him.

These are enactments of extensive application and as usual there have been disputes as to the construction and bearing of some of them. A case of fraudulent removal of property arose in 1874. In Re Creese, L. R. 2 C. C. 106, the defendant was indicted under section 11, sub-section 5, for removing his property in the following circumstances. In October, 1873, he filed his petition for liquidation of his affairs by arrangement, and a trustee was duly appointed. In the previous December, 1872, he had assigned his property to two creditors, Lakin and White, one of whom had advanced money for carrying on the debtor's business. The assignment was for the benefit of the scheduled creditors. There were other creditors besides those scheduled. On the two days before filing his petition he had fraudulently removed portions of the property so assigned to Lakin and White, and it was in respect of these removals he was indicted. The deed of assignment had not been registered under the Bills of Sale Act, and the point raised for the defendant was whether the property removed was his property within the meaning of the Act. The case was tried at the Worcestershire quarter sessions, and a verdict of guilty passed, but the point was reserved, and ultimately the Court for Crown Cases Reserved said there were two flaws in the indictment. In the first place the deed was said to be void against assignees in bankruptcy, because it was not a deed for the benefit of all the creditors, but only for the benefit of the scheduled creditors. It ought therefore to have been registered as a bill of sale, and the deed being void, the moment the petition for liquidation was presented, the property became the property of the trustee, and even before the petition it was no longer the property of the debtor. As therefore he did not remove his own property he was not within the section of the Act, and the conviction was accordingly quashed.

In another case of R. v. Knight, 42 J. P. 166, the defendant was charged, being a trader, with obtaining from Westwich & Co., spice merchants, of London, and others, five cases of Cochin ginger, tea, bacon, cheese, &c., upon credit, under the false pretence of carrying on business, and dealing in the ordinary way of his trade, and not having paid for the same, all this being done within four months next before the commencement of the liquidation by arrangement of his affairs. It was proved at the trial that he filed his petition for liquidation on 19th June, 1877, trustees were duly appointed, and the liquidation proceedings were still pending. He had obtained the things in May and June, 1877.

The jury found him guilty. After the verdict was returned, but before sentence was passed, the defendant's counsel moved to quash the indictment, because there was no averment of any offence under the Debtors Act, there was no averment that he was adjudged bankrupt, or was a person whose affairs were in liquidation, or that a petition for liquidation had been filed. The judge reserved these points for the consideration of the Court for Crown Cases Reserved. On argument in the latter court it was said by the judges, that it could not be disputed that these allegations ought to have been made in the first instance in the indictment as being essential to the charge. If the objection had been taken on demurrer, the defendant must have succeeded. But after verdict the rule was to make every reasonable intendment so as to sustain the indictment. The allegation that the acts were done within four months before adjudication was held by the court to necessarily imply that there had been a liquidation. As Manisty, J., observed, how could the offence be said to be committed within four months next before the commencement unless the act which constituted the commencement had been done? So the court in that case sustained the indictment as good after verdict.

In R. v. Wilson, 5 Q. B. D. 28, the prisoner was charged under section 12 with having feloniously within four months before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him, quitted England, and taken with him his money to the amount of £20 and upwards, which ought by law to have been divided amongst his creditors, with intent to defraud. The prisoner was a Baltic merchant at Hull. On 19th October, 1878, he drew out of his bank the sum of £128 in cash, and on the 27th October quitted England for Sydney, arriving at the latter place in February, 1879. On 30th November, 1878, within the four months of the prisoner quitting England, a petition in bankruptcy was presented against him, and he was on the same day adjudicated a bankrupt. On that day he was on the high seas on his way to Sydney, being near the Equator. On 2nd December, 1878, an order to prosecute the prisoner was made, and in February, 1879, he was arrested, charged with the offence, and gave up £96 to the officer as part of the money he had taken with him from England. He was afterwards tried at Hull, and it was proved that he was an infant of only 19 years of age—and that none of the debts proved against his estate were for necessities. It was contended that by reason of his infancy he could not have any creditors among whom his property ought to have been divided, for since the Infants Relief Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vic., c. 62, contracts by infants were void, and thus he never was liable at law or equity for the debts. The judge reserved the points for the Court for Crown Cases Reserved. One point was whether the quitting England must occur after being made bankrupt. The second point was whether an infant could be said to have any creditors. This last point was almost conceded in the infant's favour, and as the court was clear that an infant could not be indicted under the statute, it was not considered necessary to determine whether the quitting of England must be after the adjudication. The words of section 12 are, "if any person adjudged bankrupt within four months before the presentation or adjudication, quits England, &c." This last point will therefore remain for future elucidation.

The next case was one of considerable practical importance. In Reg. v. Mitchell, 45 J. P. 289, the indictment turned on the 11th section, sub-section 1, "if he does not to the best of his knowledge and belief fully and truly discover to the trustee all his property, real and personal, and how and to whom and for what consideration, and when he disposed of any part thereof, except such part as has been disposed of in the ordinary way of his trade, or laid out in the ordinary expense of his family." One matter proved against the bankrupt was that he was made bankrupt in 1879, and he was asked about goods bought in 1877 from one Keightley, and immediately afterwards sold by the bankrupt at a loss. The prisoner's counsel contended that the bankrupt was not bound to give discovery as to any goods except those which he had at the date of the bankruptcy. It was contended that the word "property" must mean such property as was divisible among the creditors. The evidence as to previous transactions being objected to and admitted the Court for Crown Cases Reserved had to decide which of the two constructions was correct. The court held, without much difficulty, that the word "property," as used in the 11th section, was not confined to property divisible among the creditors, but had a wider signification, and meant all property present or past. So the conviction was held to be valid in this case.

Another very recent case of Reg. v. Rowlands, ante p. 437, touches on a point which comes home to all debtors. A judgment had been obtained against the defendant on 8th November, 1881, for a sum of £18 4s. 8d. Upon the night of the same day he, with the assistance of two men named Williams, removed his goods under circumstances which justified the conclusion at which the jury arrived, namely, that the removal was effected with the object of defeating and delaying the execution creditor from obtaining the fruits of his judgment. The goods in question were a pony, a chest of drawers, furniture, and stock-in-trade. After the removal the house was shut up, and the county court bailiff could not effect service on the defendant. At the trial of the indictment it was contended that a person could not be liable under the 13th section, unless he was either a bankrupt or a person whose estate was in liquidation, and here the defendant was neither. It was further contended that there was no evidence that he intended to defeat all his creditors, but only to defeat the judgment creditor. These objections were overruled by the chairman of quarter sessions, and the points were submitted to the Court for Crown Cases Reserved. The court came to the conclusion that the section applied to all debtors and was not confined to bankrupts. The other objection, however, prevailed, namely, that there was no evidence that all the creditors were intended to be delayed. At the same time the court said that the jury might reasonably infer from such a solitary case against one creditor that all the creditors were thereby also intended to be defeated. This, however, had not been so found by the jury. And, therefore, the court held the conviction could not be sustained. Thus a valuable decision has been arrived at which will no doubt come often in future into requisition.—Justice of the Peace.

DEFRAUDED VENDORS OF CHATTELS.

Fraud upon the vendor of goods and chattels, such as enables him to invoke the remedies which are within his legal grasp, usually consists in misrepresentations concerning the pecuniary standing of the purchaser.<sup>1</sup> The ordinary criterion governing cases of deceit applies to such fraudulent statements. They must be false, and known to be such, material and effectual.<sup>2</sup> They must not be mere expressions of opinion or judgment.<sup>3</sup> They may consist of positive representations, as where the buyer procured the sale of the goods by means of bogus representations and guarantees,<sup>4</sup> false statements of prosperous financial condition and the like; or they may consist of mere concealment, as where the purchaser fails to disclose the pendency of a suit against him, which involves a greater amount than the value of all his property.<sup>5</sup> The distinction is important where the purchaser is insolvent, and knows himself to be in such condition. In that event, the earlier decisions, which are still followed in certain jurisdictions, held that he was not guilty of fraud by merely concealing his condition. It was essential in order to hold him guilty of fraud, that he should have resorted to trick or artifice to obtain the goods. Without fraudulent representa-

(1) Lucky v. Roberts, 25 Conn. 786.

(2) Gregory v. Schoenell, 55 Ind. 101.

(3) Morse v. Shaw, 124 Mass. 59.

(4) Mowrey v. Walsh, 8 Cow., and cases cited in note.

(5) Devoe v. Brandt, 53 N. Y. 462.

tions on his part, or the use of false pretences, felonious or otherwise, the seller could not treat the sale as fraudulent and subject to rescission or such other remedies as the law affords to defrauded vendors.<sup>6</sup> But an overwhelming majority of the later decisions hold that it is sufficient to charge the buyer with fraud, that at the time of the purchase he has no intention of paying for the goods. Such at least is the result of the American authorities.<sup>7</sup> The British decisions favour the same view, though the subject has been but scantily considered in the cases.<sup>8</sup>

The prevailing American opinion, that a preconceived design not to pay for the goods is sufficient, is also adopted by the Federal courts.<sup>9</sup> It has been thought that it would be otherwise if the determination to avoid payment were conceived subsequently to the purchase.<sup>10</sup> The factor which the insolvency of the buyer makes in the transaction, is not that of an essential element. Subsequent insolvency may show the previous fraudulent intent, but it is by no means conclusive. The insolvency may be known to the buyer and may be concealed by him; he may have no reasonable expectation of being able to pay for the goods, and yet the fraudulent intent may be lacking. The insolvent may still act in good faith, believing that he will be enabled to retrieve his fortunes. It is not enough that he does not intend to meet his promise to pay upon a particular day, or that he does not expect to be able to pay all his indebtedness. The fraudulent purpose may also be entertained by a person who is perfectly solvent, but has no idea of paying for the goods he buys. The only important effect of absolute misrepresentations or concealment of financial standing by the purchaser, is to render his fraudulent purpose easier of proof.

The views just sketched as preponderating in the United States, have been announced in Connecticut,<sup>11</sup> Delaware,<sup>12</sup> Kentucky,<sup>13</sup> Maine,<sup>14</sup> Maryland,<sup>15</sup> Massachusetts,<sup>16</sup> Missouri,<sup>17</sup> New Hampshire,<sup>18</sup> New York,<sup>19</sup> Vermont,<sup>20</sup> and Wisconsin.<sup>21</sup> In Stewart v. Emerson,<sup>22</sup> the prevalent position has received its fullest exposition. On the other hand, the contrary view has been maintained in Pennsylvania, where it has been ruled, in the cases of Smith v. Smith,<sup>23</sup> and Backettos v. Speicher,<sup>24</sup> that the intention of the purchaser not to pay for the goods, and his concealment of his insolvency, do not of themselves constitute such fraud as will vitiate the sale; but that there must be artifice intended and fitted to deceive, practised by the buyer upon the seller.<sup>25</sup>

In North Carolina it has been lately held that the vendor was entitled to reclaim the property, and that facts warranted a finding that the purchase was made with fraudulent intent, under these circumstances. The purchaser carried on business in North Carolina. Knowing himself to be insolvent, he bought goods of the agent of a Baltimore house. When asked for reference as to solvency, he gave names of New York firms only. Immediately on receipt of the goods he went into bankruptcy.<sup>26</sup>

In cases where the purchaser makes false and fraudulent representations as to his solvency and means of paying for the goods he buys, it has been laid down that he acquires no right either of property or of possession, and that the vendor would be justified in retaking the property.<sup>27</sup>

But as will be seen later, it is not universally agreed that the fraudulent purchaser gains no title whatever, and therefore replevin would seem to be the proper remedy for the recovery of the specific property, especially since recaption has become so largely obsolete. But if the goods can no longer be retaken or replevied, the vendor may either treat the acts of the fraudulent vendee as a conversion, and bring an action of trover for the value of the goods, or he may bring an action on the case for deceit, or he may even ratify the transaction and bring assumpsit for the proceeds of the articles sold by the defrauding purchaser.<sup>28</sup> The limitations upon these remedies will be considered later.

The same remedies would be available where the fraud concerns the subject matter of the sale, its character and condition or its price. But in such cases it is often difficult to determine when the purchaser is guilty of fraud such as renders the sale subject to rescission. Without misleading words or conduct by the buyer, the sale is binding, although the purchaser concealed the existence of a mine on the land sold, or any valuable element of a chattel of which the vendor was ignorant.<sup>29</sup> The same is true where the vendee had private information (which he was under no obligation to divulge), as news of peace, during the supposed existence of war, or of a great rise in the foreign market; and he should, concealing his knowledge, buy articles, the value of which would be greatly enhanced by such a fact, of a person ignorant thereof.<sup>30</sup>

So the sale is regarded as fraudulent when the purchaser buys at auction and deters others from bidding, by combinations designed to stifle competition, unless such association was rendered necessary by the magnitude of the sale, or has any other object than that of depressing the price of the property below the fair market value.<sup>31</sup> The sale is also treated as fraudulent if made in stolen goods or counterfeit money.<sup>32</sup> So, if the goods are paid for in worthless checks or fictitious or forged paper.<sup>33</sup> In these cases there is not only a failure of consideration, but a fraudulent contrivance to procure the property; and the fact that such false pretences may, under the statutes of various States, be regarded as a felony, does not place the transaction on the same footing as larceny, for the goods are obtained under colour of a sale.<sup>34</sup>

Another mode in which a fraudulent sale may be effected is by the purchaser's false impersonation of another party, or where he represents himself to be the clerk or partner of a firm in good standing. If the goods are sold in that belief, the sale is subject to rescission for fraud; and the fraud is even of a more pronounced character if they are sold on the personal credit of the purchaser, irrespective of any name he may use, or business he may pretend to act for. In the latter case the transaction stands on the same footing as larceny, treat-

(6) See Story on Sales, 4th ed., sec. 176, and cases cited.
 (7) See the cases cited later.
 (8) Ex parte Whitaker, See In re Shackleton, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 446.
 (9) Biggs v. Barry, 2 Curt. 262; Parker v. Byrnes, 1 Low, 539; Conyers v. Ennis, 2 Mason, 236.
 (10) Dows v. Burke, 28 Barb. 157.
 (11) Thompson v. Ross, 16 Conn. 71.
 (12) Mears v. Waples, 3 Houst. 581; affirmed, 4 Houst. 62.
 (13) Wood v. Yeaman, 15 B. Mon. 271.
 (14) Cross v. Peters, 1 Greenl. 378.
 (15) Powell v. Bradlee, 9 Gill. & J. 220.
 (16) Kowley v. Bigelow, 12 Pick. 307; Dow v. Sanborn, 8 Allen, 181; Wiggin v. Day, 9 Gray, 97; Kline v. Baker, 99 Mass. 263.
 (17) Hidault v. Wales, 20 Mo. 546; Fox v. Webster, 46 Mo. 181.
 (18) Stewart v. Emerson, 52 N. H. 301.
 (19) Andrew v. Dietrich, 14 Wend. 81; Ash v. Putnam, 1 Hill, 302; Cary v. Holaday, 1 Hill, 311; Barnard v. Campbell, 65 Barb. 286; Fish v. Payne, 14 N. Y. 686; Henneguin v. Taylor, 34 N. Y. 139; Paddon v. Taylor, 44 N. Y. 681.
 (20) Redington v. Roberts, 25 Vt. 694; Hodgdon v. Hubbard, 18 Vt. 501.
 (21) Rice v. Outter, 17 Wis. 362; Garbutt v. Bank of Prairie du Chien, 22 Wis. 384.
 (22) 52 N. H. 301.
 (23) 21 Pa. St. 367.
 (24) 31 Pa. St. 324.
 (25) Compare, however, Rodman v. Thalheimer, 76 Pa. St. 232.

(26) Wilson v. White, 50 N. C. 230.
 (27) Story on Sales (4th ed.), sec. 173a, citing Hodgdon v. Hubbard, 18 Vt. 504; Johnson v. Peck, 1 Woodb. & Minot, 334; Mason v. Crosby, 1 Woodb. & Minot, 343.
 (28) Hawkins v. Appleby, 2 Sandf. (S. C.) 421.
 (29) Fox v. Macbeth, 2 Bro. C. C. 420; Pidcock v. Bishop, 3 B. & Cr. 605; Prescott v. Wright, 4 Gray, 461; Harris v. Tyler, 24 Pa. St. 347.
 (30) Turner v. Harvey, 1 Jacob. 178; Laddlaw v. Organ, 2 Wheat. 178; Fox v. Macbeth, 2 Bro. C. C. 420; Prescott v. Wright, 4 Gray, 461; Story on Sales (4th ed.), sec. 175.
 (31) Phitppen v. Stichep, 3 Met. 367; Jenkins v. Frink, 30 Cal. 378; Smith v. Greenlee, 2 Dev. 128; Small v. Jones, 1 Watts & S. 128; Switzer v. Skiles, 3 Gillm. 529.
 (32) Tilcomb v. Wood, 38 Me. 588; Green v. Humphrey, 50 Pa. St. 212; Lee v. Portwood, 41 Miss. 109.
 (33) Cochran v. Stewart, 21 Minn. 435; Hawse v. Crows, Ryan & M. 414; White v. Garden, 10 C. B. 919; Bristol v. Wilmore, 1 Barn. & Cress. 514.
 (34) Williams v. Green, 6 Gratt. 268.

pass or conversion by a bailee, and there is no sale to the defrauding person, and no semblance of a title gained by such fraudulent possessor of the goods.<sup>35</sup>

Where the sale is tainted with fraud in any of its countless forms, the vendor has the right of rescission and the privilege of ratification. He may affirm the contract by bringing assumpsit for the price of the goods; but he cannot bring such action before the term of credit has expired, for in affirming the contract he is bound by its terms.<sup>36</sup>

Ratification may also be effected indirectly by delay in rescinding, or by accepting the benefits of the sale in any shape, or other acts of acquiescence in the fraud or indorsement thereof. But mere delay (as waiting a few days before the presentment of a cheque), will not operate as a ratification unless it clearly indicated an intention not to rescind.<sup>37</sup> Having once affirmed the sale, however, by bringing assumpsit, the vendor cannot then change his mind, abandon his suit, demand the goods and proceed in trover, under the claim that he has rescinded the sale for fraud.<sup>38</sup> He is not, however, precluded from setting up the fraud as against the plea of a discharge in bankruptcy made by the purchaser.<sup>39</sup> Nor does the proof of a claim and the receipt of a dividend in bankruptcy, upon notes given for the goods, prevent the maintenance of an action for the fraud perpetrated in procuring the sale.<sup>40</sup> While the defrauded vendor has the alternative of ratifying the contract of sale, his option may be exercised in favour of rescinding the sale. But he cannot thus disaffirm the sale and yet retain any consideration received for the transfer, but must restore such consideration or make a tender of the same, so that if his offer is refused, he may be able to allege performance of all obligations on his part.<sup>41</sup> But if the article is absolutely valueless, it would be a nugatory act to return it.<sup>42</sup> Nor is it necessary to make reimbursements of moneys expended in furtherance of the fraud, as in paying the government tax on whiskey which had been placed in a United States bonded warehouse, where such sums were advanced in order to procure the possession of the property, by a party acting in collusion with the defrauding purchaser.<sup>43</sup> But it has been laid down,<sup>44</sup> and the statement is presumably applicable to a defrauded vendor, that a party having an election to rescind an entire contract must rescind it wholly or in no part.<sup>45</sup> He cannot avoid it to retain his property, and, at the same time, enforce it to recover damages.<sup>46</sup> The contract cannot be rescinded as to one party, and be kept in force as to the other.<sup>47</sup>

The restoration, or an offer equivalent thereto, must, like the rescission, be made promptly. The notes of a third party must be surrendered before suing in tort the fraudulent vendee who has given them in payment.<sup>48</sup> But when the notes of the defrauding purchaser are given for the goods, the vendor may, upon discovering the fraud, bring trover or replevin without first surrendering the notes; but he must do so either before the trial,<sup>49</sup> or on the trial.<sup>50</sup>

(35) Kingsford v. Merry, 1 H. & N. 503; Hallins v. Fowler, 7 Eng. & Gr. App. 757; Hardman v. Booth, 1 H. & C. 804; Moody v. Blake, 117 Mass. 23; Dean v. Yates, 22 Ohio St. 389; Barber v. Dinmore, 73 Pa. St. 427; Cundy v. Lindsay, 3 App. Cas. 459.

(36) Bulter v. Hildreth, 5 Met. 49; Kellogg v. Turpie, 2 Brad. (Ill.) 55; Mortuary v. Stofferan, 89 Ill. 428; Stewart v. Emerson, 52 N. H. 301; Bicknell v. Buck, 58 Ind. 334.

(37) Hodgson v. Barrett, 23 Ohio St. 63.

(38) Bulkeley v. Morgan, 46 Conn. 693; compare Dalton v. Hamilton, 1 Hazey (N. B.), 422.

(39) Stewart v. Emerson, 52 N. H. 301.

(40) McBean v. Fox, 1 Brad. (Ill.) 177; compare, to similar effect, Moller v. Tucker, New York. Notes of Cases, December 13, 1831; mentioned in 13 Reporter, 912.

(41) Horrin v. Libbey, 36 Me. 357; Willoughby v. Moulton, 47 N. H. 205.

(42) See Norton v. Young, 3 Greenl. 33, note.

(43) Suckenheimer v. Asperline, 81 N. Y. 394.

(44) Benj. on Sales (3d. Am. ed.), sec. 452, note a.

(45) Minor v. Bradley, 22 Pick. 457; Voorhees v. Earl, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 292, 298.

(46) Jumblin v. Simpson, 14 Me. 264; Weeks v. Robie, 49 N. H. 816.

(47) Coolidge v. Brigham, 1 Met. 550; Fuller v. Reville, 3 Hun, 600.

(48) Norton v. Young, 3 Greenl. 33, note.

(49) Coghlin v. Boring, 15 Cal. 214; Wells v. Bradley, 1 Sand. 580.

(50) Norton v. Young, 3 Greenl. 33, note.

The disaffirmance of the contract of sale may be made as late as during the trial, if the fraud is then for the first time discovered.<sup>51</sup> Indeed, the general principle is, that the defrauded vendor must rescind with due diligence, and within a reasonable time after the discovery of the fraud. He may keep the matter open so long as he has done nothing in the way of ratifying the transaction.<sup>52</sup> But he may lose his right to rescind by delay if, in consequence of such delay, the position of the wrongdoer is altered; and he will lose it absolutely if, during the interval between the delivery of the goods and the disaffirmance of the sale by the defrauded vendor, the goods have been sold to an innocent third party for a valuable consideration.<sup>53</sup>

The bona fide purchaser, in such a case, who pays actual value and is free from knowledge or notice of the fraud, stands in a better position than the original owner who has allowed himself to be deceived. Such a bona fide purchaser is protected in his right to the property for which he has paid in ignorance of the fraud perpetrated by his vendor. This protection is established by the authorities.<sup>54</sup> It has been declared by the courts of California,<sup>55</sup> Connecticut,<sup>56</sup> Delaware,<sup>57</sup> Georgia,<sup>58</sup> Kansas,<sup>59</sup> Kentucky,<sup>60</sup> Illinois,<sup>61</sup> Indiana,<sup>62</sup> Iowa,<sup>63</sup> Maine,<sup>64</sup> Maryland,<sup>65</sup> Massachusetts,<sup>66</sup> Minnesota,<sup>67</sup> Mississippi,<sup>68</sup> New Hampshire,<sup>69</sup> New York,<sup>70</sup> Ohio,<sup>71</sup> Pennsylvania,<sup>72</sup> Tennessee,<sup>73</sup> Virginia,<sup>74</sup> Wisconsin.<sup>75</sup> In England, the protection of the innocent purchaser from a fraudulent vendee is also established.<sup>76</sup>

The principle, or process, by which the defrauded vendor is divested of his title, and it becomes established in the bona fide purchaser from the fraudulent vendee, is not fully agreed.<sup>77</sup>

The American annotator of Benjamin on Sales fitly remarks on this point:—"In some cases it is assumed that when a sale of goods is procured by fraud of the vendee, no title passes to him, but the vendor still retains the legal right in the goods, and hence it is concluded that a person who has no title to goods can convey none."<sup>78</sup> But, at the same time, it is agreed that a third person may acquire a good title from a fraudulent vendee by giving him value for the property, or incurring some responsibility upon the credit of it, without notice of the fraud. In such a case, it is said that the superior equity of the innocent purchaser is

(51) Clough v. London, &c., R. Co., L. & R. 7 Exch. 26.

(52) Ibid.

(53) See Barnard v. Campbell, 58 N. Y. 75.

(54) See 15 Am. L. Rev., 387.

(55) Page v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 488; Sargent v. Sturm, 22 Cal. 389.

(56) Thompson v. Ross, 16 Conn. 71; Williamson v. Russel, 29 Conn. 408.

(57) Mears v. Waples, 4 Houst. 62; affirming a. c., 3 Houst. 561.

(58) Kern v. Thurber, 57 Ga. 172.

(59) Wilson v. Fuller, 9 Kan. 76.

(60) Arnott v. Cloudes, 4 Dana, 300; Wood v. Fastman, 15 B. Mon. 271.

(61) Chicago Dock Co. v. Foster, 48 Ill. 507; Ohio, &c.; R. Co. v. Kerr, 49 Ill. 558.

(62) Sharp v. Jones, 16 Ind. 314.

(63) Oswego Starch Factory v. Lendrum, December 20, 1861; 10 N. W. Rep. 900.

(64) Ditson v. Randall, 23 Me. 202; Titcomb v. Wood, 28 Me. 563.

(65) Powell v. Bradlee, 9 Gill & J. 520; Hall v. Hinks, 21 Md. 508.

(66) Rowley v. Bigelow, 12 Pick. 307 (1832); Hoffman v. Noble, 6 Metc. 68; Moody v. Blake, 117 Mass. 23.

(67) Cochran v. Stewart, 21 Minn. 435.

(68) Lee v. Portwood, 41 Miss. 109.

(69) Kingsbury v. Smith, 13 N. H. 109; Willoughby v. Moulton, 47 N. M. 205.

(70) Root v. French, 3 Wend. 570; Barnard v. Campbell, 58 N. Y. 75; Stevens v. Brennan, 79 N. Y. 254.

(71) Dean v. Yates, 22 Ohio St. 388; Combes v. Chandler, 23 Ohio St. 178.

(72) Thompson v. Lee, 3 Watts & S. 479; Sinclair v. Healey, 40 Pa. St. 417.

(73) Avandale v. Morgan, 5 Sneed, 708; Hawkins v. Davis, 5 Jere Baxter, 698.

(74) Williams v. Owen, 6 Gratt. 268; Steamship Co. v. Durchhardt, 31 Gratt. 684.

(75) Shufeldt v. Pass, 16 Wis. 689; Rice v. Cutler, 17 Wis. 872; Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Sammons, 49 Wis. 316.

(76) See the cases reviewed by Benjamin, and the latter decisions of Attenborough v. Dock Co., 3 C. F. D. 450 (1875); and Babcock v. Lawson, 4 Q. B. D. 894, affirmed 5 Q. B. D. 284 (1880).

(77) George v. Kimball, 24 Pick. 241, per Morton, J.

(78) The words "hence it is concluded," should rather read, "it is also declared."

allowed to overcome the legal rights of the owner; and it is said to be the single instance in which our law divests the title to property without the owner's consent or default.<sup>79</sup>

"The difficulty," remarks the commentator, "consists in tracing the title and reconciling the right of the defrauded vendor to reclaim his property in the hands of his fraudulent vendee, with the vesting of the title in such purchaser. This difficulty is obviated, however, by adopting the doctrine of the text—that the contract is not void ab initio, but is voidable at the option of the vendor, as between him and the vendee, and those claiming under him, without consideration, or with notice of the fraud. The reference in these comments is to the English doctrine embodied in the authorities already cited herein as establishing the protection of bona fide purchasers from fraudulent vendees.

The same view, that the fraudulent vendee has a title, though it is voidable and defeasible at the option of his vendor, widely prevails in America. It was clearly announced in the case of Rowley v. Bigelow,<sup>80</sup> has been explained in other cases,<sup>81</sup> and has been adopted not only in Massachusetts, but also in New Hampshire,<sup>82</sup> Maine,<sup>83</sup> Delaware,<sup>84</sup> and Virginia.<sup>85</sup> It has also received support directly and indirectly in New York.<sup>86</sup> But the prevailing tendency in that State, as well as in Maryland<sup>87</sup> and Ohio,<sup>88</sup> is to lay most stress upon the principle that the rightful owner is estopped from asserting his right when the act of conferring upon his vendee the possession (and the indicia of title), has led to the payment by an innocent purchaser. At the same time, the superior equity of the innocent purchaser is regarded as an element of importance, and even, in the latest instance, his defeasible title.<sup>89</sup> It would unduly extend the limits of the present article to show the scope and limits of the term "bona fide purchasers" in this connexion, but these particulars may readily be presumed from similar transactions in conveyances of real property and transfers of negotiable paper.—Central Law Journal.

THE ASSOCIATED LAW CLERKS OF IRELAND.

The usual weekly meeting of the committee of this association was held on Monday evening. The attendance included Messrs. Maonamara (in the chair), Jervise, O'Brien, Dodd, Condell, Dowling, Shelly, &c. The secretary announced a donation by Mr. John Falconer, of Sackville-street, to the library, of Mr. M'Dermott's work on the Land Act. On the motion of Mr. Jervise, seconded by Mr. O'Brien, a warm vote of thanks was given to Mr. Falconer for his continued assistance to the association. The president announced that in compliance with the wish of the committee their meetings would be adjourned until the first Monday in October, but he trusted that they would be able to attend the usually monthly meetings, and accordingly moved that the monthly meetings stand adjourned to Monday the 7th August, which having been seconded, the motion was carried. The meeting shortly afterwards adjourned.

The Corrupt Practices Bill has been abandoned for the present session.

(79) Fancher, J., in Barnard v. Campbell, 65 Barb. 288, 289; s. c., 53 N. Y. 73; Root v. French, 13 Wend. 570; Monroy v. Walsh, 8 Cow. 286; Hoffman v. Carrow, 23 Wand. 218; Ash v. Putnam, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 307; Hester v. Hudson River Iron and Machine Co., 30 Barb. 493; Williams v. Birch, 6 Bosw. 299.

(80) 12 Pick., 312.
(81) Stevens v. Hyde, 33 Barb. 180; Somers v. Brewer, 2 Pick. 184, 201; Ayras v. Hest, 19 Me. 281.

(82) Kingbury v. Smith, 13 N. M. 109.

(83) Nicombe v. Wood, 35 Me. 553.

(84) Mears v. Waples, 3 Houst. 581; s. c., 4 Houst. 63.

(85) Williams v. Green, 6 Grant. 268; Steamship Co. v. Burchhardt, 31 Grant. 664.

(86) See Keyser v. Harbeck, 3 Duer. 373; Stevens v. Hyde, 33 Barb. 180; Padden v. Taylor, 44 N. Y. 371.

(87) Holt v. Hinks, 21 Mid. 418.

(88) Combes v. Chandler, 33 Ohio St. 184.

(89) Barnard v. Campbell, 53 N. Y. 73.

EVIDENCE BY EXPERIMENTAL TESTS.

At the trial of Williams v. The Festiniog Ry. Co., at Carnarvon, on the 14th inst., in which the plaintiff claimed damages for negligence,

Mr. Sudenhams, Q.C., who appeared for him, asked Huddleston, B., to allow the plaintiff to walk across the court before the jury, with a view to convince them that the lameness alleged was not assumed.

His LORDSHIP declined to allow this test, and said that ever since he had been reported to have said, during the hearing of the case of Bell v. Lawes, that he should allow the plaintiff to make a bust of himself in court, he had been pestered to allow all kinds of tests to be gone through in court before the jury, and he wished it to be known that the Press had entirely misrepresented him in this matter, and that he had never indicated that he should allow such a course to be taken.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Theobald on Wills (2nd Edition), 433.

A power to appoint among such grandchildren as should be living at a time which might or might not be ascertained within the prescribed period, held void under the rules against perpetuities (Blight v. Hartnoll, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 162).

Dart on Vendors and Purchasers (5th Edition), 768.

Where, on a sale of lands, the vendor covenants that other lands shall not be sold except subject to a restrictive covenant, the purchaser is entitled to the benefit of any such restrictive covenant to which any vendee or sub-vendee of the other lands may have become liable (Nicoll v. Fenning, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 166).

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

Mr. Garrett Eagle, barrister-at-law, has been appointed a stipendiary magistrate for the county of Cavan.

Mr. Philip Thomas Lyster, barrister-at-law, has been appointed a temporary stipendiary magistrate for the county of Galway.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

A Summary of the Law and Practice in Admiralty. With an Appendix, containing a List of the Statutes relating to Admiralty; an Epitome of the Merchant Shipping Acts; Admiralty Rules and Forms; the County Court Rules and Forms relating to Admiralty; Fees paid and allowed in the Admiralty Division; and Forms of Bottomry and Respondentia Bonds. By T. EUSTACE SMITH, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, &c. Second Edition. London: Stevens and Haynes, Law Publishers, Bell-yard, Temple-bar. 1882.

Cassell's History of England from the earliest period to the present time. With about 2,000 Illustrations. Part 83. London, Paris, and New York: Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.

Milton's Paradise Lost. Illustrated by Gustave Doré. Edited, with Notes and a Life of Milton, by the late ROBERT VAUGHAN, D.D. London: Cassell, Petter, Galpin, & Co.

Contemporary Review. August, 1882. London: Strahan and Co., Limited, Paternoster-row.

On Thursday, after Mr. Recorder Falkiner had dismissed a civil bill process, brought by John Fitzpatrick, a tutor, the plaintiff produced a revolver, and exclaimed, "By heavens, won't you give me justice? I'll show you." The man was seized by the police, and said he did not intend to injure Mr. Falkiner, but only to protest against the decision.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—J. O'Shea, proposal.—P. Hanly, allocate.—J. Truseman, from 27th.

IN COURT.—M. Meares, payment by receiver.—C. Lewis, final schedule.—W. Rowland, receiver.—R. Hall, payment.—W. J. Griffith, receiver.—H. G. Smith, do.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

B. Hagerty, vouch.

TUESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

M. Horgan, rental.

WEDNESDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—A. Noble, confirm sale.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

Trustee C. St. George, reference.—J. M. Cochrane, do.

THURSDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

G. Graham, rental.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—M. Hall, payment.—T. Manly, proposal.—W. T. Murray, do.—T. J. Nolan, to discharge receiver.

IN COURT.—T. Manly, final schedule.—H. St. George, receiver.—N. Butler, do.—Armstrong v. Armstrong, to extend receiver.—R. Ramsay, as to order.—J. Bury, final schedule.—E. L. Hartstonge, do.—J. W. Madden, carriage.

TUESDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—M. A. Moore, delay.—E. Hogan, as to conveyance.

IN COURT.—P. H. Hora, final schedule.—R. J. Montgomery, to amend schedule.—R. Kellett, from 29th.—D. V. Mullins, receiver.—M. Thora, to make order absolute.—G. Warburton, to discharge purchaser.—J. Fenton, objection.—S. D. Wright, for surrender.—J. Gill, receiver.—T. Rossingrane, to let lands.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—C. Langdale, payment.

IN COURT.—M. J. M'Kee, confirm sale.—E. S. Brennan, adjourned motion.—T. Higwell, final schedule.—G. E. Lambert, receiver.—G. E. Lambert, cross notice.—As-signees Bolton, payment.—O. Burns, final schedule.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

R. BURKE,	-	-	-	2 lots.
T. M'GLYNN,	-	-	-	1 lot.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

M. H. Jordan, rental.

LAND JUDGES' COURT.

SALES.

July 11.—Before the Right Hon. Judge FLANAGAN.

CITY OF LIMERICK, AND COUNTIES OF LIMERICK AND CLARE.—Estate of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of Limerick, owners; John Stephens, petitioner. All held in fee.

Lot 1.—The Great Lax Weir and Fishers' Stent, near Limerick; yearly profit rent, £295; government valuation, £600; sale adjourned.

Lot 2.—Gas works and premises at West Watergate, Limerick; yearly profit rent, £86 10s. 8d.; government valuation, £101 10s.; sale adjourned.

Lot 3.—Houses and premises at West Watergate, Limerick; yearly profit rent, £26 8s.; government valuation, £27. Sold to Stephen Hastings for £255.

Lot 4.—Gortacklina, or Mulgrave-street, in city of Limerick; yearly profit rent, £41 15s. 4d.; government valuation, £446. Sold to T. M' Mahon Cregan for £780.

Lot 5.—House and premises at Mungret-street, city of Limerick; yearly profit rent, £12; government valuation, £20. Sold to Patrick Riordan for £140.

Lot 6.—Houses and premises at Robert-street and Carr-street, city of Limerick; yearly profit rent, £3 8s.; government valuation, £108. Sold to T. M' Mahon Cregan for £50.

Lot 7.—The lands of Rhebogue, in the city of Limerick; containing, 77a. 8r. 8p.; yearly profit rent, £105 19s. 9d.; government valuation, £116 10s. Sold to Timothy and Thomas Hartigan for £1,950.

Lot 8.—The lands of Clino, barony of Clanwilliam, county of Limerick; containing, 94a.; yearly profit rent, £92 6s. 2d.; government valuation, £118 5s. Sold to Edmond Keane for £1,665.

Lot 9.—Spittal Land, in the same barony and county; containing, 12a. 2r. 18p.; yearly profit rent, £9 10s. 8d.; government valuation, £37 15s. Sold to John Stephens for £165.

Lot 10.—St. Lawrence's Cemetery, in the same barony and county; containing, 13a. 3r. 16p.; yearly profit rent, £67 16s. 8d.; government valuation, £35 5s. Sold to Rev. D. Fitzgerald for £1,230.

Lot 11.—Part of Gortnamanagh, in the same barony and county; containing, 10a. 0r. 9p.; yearly profit rent, £31 8s. 10d.; government valuation, £22. Sold to Patrick Kelly for £570.

Lot 12.—Corkanree, in the barony of Pubble Brien, and county of Limerick; containing, 91a. 0r. 30p.; yearly profit rent, £266 19s. 8d.; government valuation, £160. Sold to Patrick Riordan for £4,865.

Lot 13.—Pennywell, partly in the city and partly in the county of Limerick; containing, 1a. 2r. 3p.; yearly profit rent, £10 10s. 2d.; government valuation, £20 15s. Sold to T. M' Mahon Cregan for £145.

Lot 14.—Houses, &c., at O'Halloran's-lane and Thomondgate, city of Limerick; yearly profit rent, £4 4s. 8d.; government valuation, £10 5s.; sold to Mary Anne Dooley for £100.

Lot 15.—Eight houses at Thomondgate, Limerick; yearly profit rent, £9 10s.; government valuation, £14. Sold to John Goggin for £135.

Lot 16.—Houses and premises at Thomondgate, Limerick; yearly profit rent, £16 10s.; government valuation, £21 10s.; not sold.

Lot 17.—Houses, &c., at Thomondgate, Limerick; yearly profit rent, £13 7s.; government valuation, £18 10s. Sold to G. W. Bassett for £70.

Lot 18.—House at Thomondgate, Limerick; yearly profit rent, £12; government valuation, £18. Sold to Edmond Keane for £190.

Lot 19.—Ground and premises at Osmington-terrace, Limerick; yearly profit rent, £10; government valuation, £88. Sold to Mr. Trousdell for £270.

Lot 20.—Houses at Thomondgate, Limerick; yearly profit rent, £7 2s.; government valuation, £43. Sold to Wm. Vaughan for £160.

Lot 21.—Houses at Thomondgate, Limerick; yearly profit rent, £15; government valuation, £18. Sold to Wm. Ellard for £125.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

D. W. CARROLL,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
Comprising Bags, Purses, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges.
Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge.

73

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.
The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCHROFT, Manager.

63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL REVENUE EXCEEDED
FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO
GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no
rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCHROFT, Manager.

62

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,
No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.

J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones).

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees,
Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.

Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.

91

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES and INVESTIGATIONS

CONDUCTED BY

MR. THOMAS DEANE,

17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange),

Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.

Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.

References.

ESTABLISHED 1878.

167

STOKES BROTHERS,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LONDON and LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN.

293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
72, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c., &c.

160

HENDRICK and CO.,
PRINTERS, STATIONERS, SCRIVENERS,
and ARTISTS' WAREHOUSE,
28 CLARE-STREET,
DUBLIN.

106

PUBLIC NOTICES:

THE CHROMOGRAPH.
INSTANTANEOUS REPRODUCTION
OF
MANUSCRIPTS, DOCUMENTS, PLANS, &c., &c.

Plans and Designs in various Colours obtained by One Single Operation.

The Chromograph is used WITHOUT either PRESS, INKING, or STEEP-
ING, and with ANY DESCRIPTION OF PAPER.

From eight to ten minutes suffice to obtain 40 to 50 copies.

To take off the writing from the composition, it is sufficient to wash
the apparatus with a soft sponge in clear water IMMEDIATELY after having taken the last impression.

PRICES OF CHROMOGRAPHS.

No. 1. Octavo Boxes, with a Bottle of Ink,	..	..	10/-
" 2. Quarto " " "	..	..	18/-
" 3. Foolscap " " "	..	..	25/-
" 4. Folio " " "	..	..	34/-

Extra Bottles of Ink, 1/- per Bottle.
Composition, 3/- per lb.

TERMS:—CASH WITH ORDER.

GERRARD BROTHERS,

37 STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 59

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS.

(Royal Route via Orkney and Caledonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Lochawe, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Stornoway, &c.
Official Guide, 3d.; Illustrated, 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Fares free, at CABORN BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post
from the owner, DAVID MACBRAYNE, 119 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old
Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 976

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE

PERMANENT

BUILDING SOCIETY, DUBLIN.

57, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.F.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 2½ per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.

Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:—

The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.

57, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10	IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days. TWO UNERRING RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free.
to
£1,000	Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Grosvenor House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE and ACCIDENT
CO., LIMITED.

SECURITY, &c.

RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—

39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN.

51

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 5, 1882.

No. 810

PRESUMPTIONS OF LIFE AND DEATH.—II.

IN the Scottish case of Rhind's Trustees v. Bell (5 S. C. 527), it appeared that a sailor, born in 1805, sailed in June, 1842, for the West Indies. He was in hospital at Kingston in 1843, and was never heard of since then. He was of intemperate habits. He was not known to have married. In the division of a succession, it was held (Jan. 1878) that he should be presumed to be dead on 1st June, 1850. The Lord Ordinary (Curriehill) held that the presumption was that he had died in 1843. Lord Moncrieff said: "The man has not been heard of since March, 1843—a period of thirty-four years. It is not necessary to go into the general question of presumption of life. As has been said in the cases quoted, it is always a question of circumstances in each particular case. In accordance with the presumption arising from the facts here, we must hold that the man is now dead, but cannot be held to have died in the same year in which he was last heard of." But, as we have formerly mentioned, there is now a special statute dealing with the subject of presumption of life in Scotland; and this statute came under consideration in the recent case of Rainham (Dec. 2, 1881), where it was held not to apply to an absentee who had never been in Scotland, although alleged to have succeeded to heritable property there. The statute relates to "the case of any person who has been absent from Scotland, or who has disappeared for a period of seven years and upwards;" and in reference to the contention that the latter clause covered the case presented, the Lord President said that the obvious construction of the clause is "that to come within the operation of the Act, the case must be that of a person who has been in Scotland once, or who has either been absent from Scotland seven years or has disappeared; that is to say, the alternative is that the petitioner must prove that the person whose succession is in question has been absent from Scotland for the period mentioned in the statute, or if it cannot be proved that he ever left Scotland, that he has disappeared and not since been heard of. But to apply the Act to a foreigner who has never been in Scotland, and had no connexion with it, would be a strained and unnatural construction." In the recent Canadian case of McDonald v. Forbes (1 C. L. T. 333), where there was evidence of a negative sort, which, though not conclusive, was sufficient to warrant the presumption of the death of certain parties, and also that they had died intestate, the Court, in the absence of positive proof, refused to presume that they had died unmarried and without issue.

Another remarkable Canadian case is McArthur v. Eagleson (43 U. C. R. 406, referred to in 2 C. L. T. 295). There, the plaintiff went away temporarily, leaving his wife on his land. He did not return for thirty years, nor did he communicate with his wife. Within seven years of his departure his wife, believing him to be dead, took another husband, and they lived together on the plaintiff's farm, and had a large family. On his return the plaintiff recovered the land in ejectment. There was no question of presumption in the case, but Harrison, C.J., said—"A man, after seven years, although presumed to be dead, is not conclusively proved to be dead, or compelled to stay presumptively dead contrary to the fact, for the benefit of a person who may have, during his absence, dealt either with his property or his wife upon the supposition of his death. Notwithstanding the inconvenience of the reappearance of such a man under such circumstances, I know of no principle of estoppel which can be properly held, on the facts of this case, to preclude his reappearance, and upon his reappearance, the assertion of all his legal rights." But, on other facts, there might be such an estoppel, according to the American decision (1877) in Rosenthal v. Mayhew, where the points determined were as follows:—(1). If a husband leaves his family and usual place of residence, and goes to parts unknown, or a distant State, and is not heard from for a period of seven years, a presumption arises that he is dead. (2). Where such presumption exists, and where the husband has abandoned his wife and minor children, without other means of support than the house and lot on which he resided before such abandonment, she may enter and contract as a feme sole. (3). If in fact the husband is not dead, yet, in such case, she is capable of binding herself, by way of equitable estoppel, by her acts and contracts as fully as if she were a feme sole. (4). And if she join with the children, who have come of age, in order to induce a sale of said real estate for their mutual benefit, in representing that he is dead, and thereby, and for value received, effects a sale of such real estate, and also joins them, as widow, in a conveyance in fee with covenants of general warranty, and the contract is fully executed by the purchaser: Held, that although the husband be living, and although such conveyance does not operate as a release of her inchoate right of dower, yet she is barred by way of equitable estoppel from treating her contract as a nullity, and from asserting her right to have dower assigned upon the actual death of her husband. (5). It is not necessary, to constitute such equitable estoppel, that a party should design to mislead; it is enough if the act or declaration was calculated to and did in fact mislead another who acted in good faith and with reasonable diligence. Probably, the court would hold that an estoppel of this kind would be created in such a case as that narrated in one of Lever's novels, where a gentleman submitted himself to a mock funeral in order to escape his creditors, if the "widow" went into mourning.

But, in the words of the Book of Maccabees, "to collect all that is to be known, to put the discourse in order, and curiously to discuss every particular point," in reference to a subject so prolific, is rather the duty of a professed text-book; and, as concerning the other cases bearing on it, are they not collected in our previous papers, which "if we have done well, and as it becometh the history, it is what we desired, but if not so perfectly, it must be pardoned us." At all events, we may apply an anecdote, extracted from a source so out of the way as a book on Etiquette, published forty-five years ago. "I once," saith the writer, "sat next to a foreigner, who had endured with exemplary patience a tedious concerto, and who, when it was finished, applauded vehemently, then, turning round to me with a droll expression of countenance, said—'Perchè si finisce.' Approve—for we, too, have finished.

THE VACANT JUDGESHIP.

Nowadays on the instant when a vacancy on the Irish Bench has been whispered of as likely to occur, either we may say from a probable mortal event or the rarer incident of a healthy resignation, the Press busies itself with the choice of a successor, and very confident paragraphs suggest the strength of this or the other lawyer's chances, from motives in each case that it would not be useful to analyse. It might not be easy to defend this modern practice, and we fancy that some of those whose names are wafted about the Hall on a breeze expected to reach the newspaper office can have no great reason to be thankful to their occasional friends for the injudicious patronage often extended to them. There is apt to be created thereby such a sitting of claims as leads to a rapid discrediting of some inferior pretensions which would have been respectable in lower place. Never in the history of the Irish judiciary was it more necessary than in present circumstances that the Bench should be recruited on opportunity arising by men possessed of a mental and physical energy fitting them for hard and constant work and heavy responsibility; men besides of established discretion, and breadth of view and sympathy; good lawyers, but something more than lawyers, having besides professional qualifications superior powers of clear and calm exposition—such as, exhibited with dignity, will have a public effect in moments when in other respects the legal process may fail. Such men are not to be found at any corner; and those on whom the selection falls have a task the importance of which we could not exaggerate. Clumsiness of expression, narrowness of mind, hardness of nature, are all grave objections to an aspirant to the judicial office in this country. Our judges have vastly more of an influence in their power than those who sit on the English Bench, and their best qualities are more frequently and strongly tested than is the case in England. It follows that no considerations, personal or party, should be suffered to warp the choice of such a functionary. The duty is too grave to endure mistake. It may be expected, then, that when the Irish Government come to decide upon the vacancy now existing they will take care to secure the service as a Judge of one who will bring to his functions adequate intellectual and moral strength, and experience in tasks of Government which give the best training for quick discrimination, intense care, and knowledge of the country and people. During the past two years, a period of exceptional, probably unparalleled, difficulty, the country has been served with extreme fidelity and success by the law officers whom the Irish Administration called to its aid. No fault has been found in or out of Parliament with their action. No single imprudence has been imputed to them. Neither undue severity nor want of vigour has been charged in any instance to their discredit. Their judgment in critical matters has been upheld, and their advice has been of admitted value in all matters lying within their province. It is but just to say what the opportunity is only given very occasionally for saying in a manner so direct and necessary. It is known also that the burden has lain less upon the shoulders of the law officers who have been almost constantly occupied in Parliament than upon those daily in attendance at the Castle, to whose energy, diligence, and courage the nation owes not a little. It is in this quarter, first of all, we should say that the proper qualifications would be sought for in a judge whose further duties would in so much be but a continuation of the exercises that have occupied him. To wander into other external places for as yet not entirely used-up material would be a rashness that we could not expect to be committed. The Government have no need to make a search for the proper occupants for the vacant seats. One is designed for the Attorney-General, and cannot in reality be spoken of as a vacancy; but in dealing with the other, which is open, they have it in their power to do justice to those who have served them with energy during the whole of the trying period we have mentioned.—Irish Times.

JUDICIAL CHARACTER AND HABITS.

Without some attention to public matters, some interest in current events, there is danger of the approach of that destroying malady of those who would be "altogether judges," which perhaps may not be inaptly termed judicial crystallisation—a sort of metempsychosis of the mind by which it passes from the state of personal consciousness and natural sympathies to a condition of morbid abstraction and abnormal devotion, and, relinquishing all other aims and aspirations as unworthy, heroically dedicates itself to the perpetual contemplation of judicial ends and essences, as if their proper study required a sacrifice, and they were arbitrary and abstract principles, perfectly ascertained, and to be uniformly applied as contained in the repositories of judicial learning, and were not simply the collected results of human experience, reduced to systems of government and rules of conduct ever undergoing modification and change in the progress of civilisation, and to be as carefully sought and as profitably studied on the latest pages of the open volume of life, as in the dusty tomes of libraries whose precedents perish with their coverings along the pathway of the generations. Instances of such consecration and absorption are frequent, but the cause is generally misapprehended. That habitual absence of mind which is popularly regarded as an indication of fixed and fathoming thought, is but the listless reverie of mental crasi or enervation, proceeding with legitimate certainty from the strain of a mind unrelieved or overwrought in the investigation and exposition of exclusive subjects. Strong, active minds, invigorated by diversified thought, have no such infirmity. And busy men of the world experience no such weakness in grasping the actual of life's concerns. It is the offspring of weariness and apathy, and wherever detected is an evidence of impaired faculties, of diminished powers, of incipient intellectual retroversion. If it would be avoided by the Bench, the functions of the judge and the faculties of the man must be equally and evenly exercised, and the senses of the body must be indulged with healthful excitement, even in direct opposition to the inclinations or prejudices of the mind. The soul draws its inspiration from the senses, which it refines and elevates; and when, in obedience to the behests of virtue, it seeks to gain the ascendancy by denying them proper gratification, it does but waste its own vitality, weaken its power over the propensities, and, by precipitating psychomachy, destroy all. To preserve mens sana in corpore sano, sustain the judge and succour the man, there must be equilibrium of the mental and physical forces and union of the judicial and personal characters. Where this rule occurs there is true greatness; where it does not, there is chance result.—Judicial Record of Ch. J. Chase, by John S. Benson.

DISTRESS FOR RENT.

The report of the select committee of the House of Commons on the law of distress amounts, in the main, to an approval of Sir Henry Holland's bill, and a disapproval of Mr. Blennerhasset's. It was unfortunate that the subject of distress was not referred simpliciter to the committee instead of its being referred "especially as regards agricultural landlords and tenants." The committee have given great weight to the "especially." No witness seems to have been examined in reference to urban tenancies. No recommendation is made by the committee in regard to houses property, although some few of the suggestions necessarily apply to all forms of tenancy. No reference is made in the report to any interest but that of agriculture, except a brief paragraph referring to the existence of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, and some few exemptions allowed in the interest of trade. The constitution of the committee was favourable to the development of the agricultural side of the question. No one can complain of the interests of agriculture largely determining the character of future legislation, if there is to be any; but there is danger of this subject, like so many others in recent times, being treated in parts, and not as a whole.

The most important of the recommendations of the committee are those directed to the right of a landlord to seize goods which do not belong to the tenant. They desire to throw special protection round registered stock, machinery not the tenant's property, and animals temporarily on the premises for breeding purposes. The true criticism on these recommendations is that they do not go far enough. Special considerations may arise with regard to the goods of under-tenants and of persons holding a bill of sale; but with regard to mere strangers, what show of right or equity has the landlord to take their goods for the debt of someone else? It may be that the landlord ought to be protected against a bona fide mistake on his part in seizing the goods of a stranger; but that is the limit of his just rights in this respect. With regard to agisted stock, the committee recommend the application of the rule introduced in 1867 by the Hypothec Amendment (Scotland) Act. By that Act, agisted cattle are liable to hypothec "to the extent of the payment" due from their owner to the tenant, and no further. With regard to the machinery of strangers, the committee merely suggest that "provision be made for its protection;" and, with regard to animals used for breeding, that they be exempt. The case of other people's cattle fed on the land may require exceptional treatment of the same kind as the case of a sub-tenant; but, with regard to other people's machinery and stud horses, they ought to be included in one rule of law which will protect them from being seized for rent, and which will equally apply to the horse and carriage of a visitor who may be taking luncheon with the tenant. The recommendation that the right of distress be limited to one year's rent is also tainted with narrowness of view, besides suggesting a Hibernicism. The report suggests that "the right of distress be restricted to one year's rent, and that this right should only be exercised within six months after the said year's rent has become due." As most rent is payable quarterly, it is difficult to see how a year's rent can be distrained for six months after its becoming due. It is odd that members of Parliament of so much experience, should apparently have assumed that all rent was payable yearly. Striking out, however, the reference to six months, so as to make the recommendation intelligible; we think it would be a mistake to introduce further complications into the law on this subject. At present, the limitation on the right to distress in point of time is a branch of the law of limitation. The landlord may distress for six years' arrears, as he may sue for them. An acknowledgment within six years, of rent due longer than six years ago, will justify a distress, just as it will justify an action. To limit the landlord's right to distress to a year's rent will give rise to the notion that after a year has elapsed the rent is forgiven. It is difficult to see the policy of forcing a landlord to distress. If this recommendation were adopted, the landlord must either distress when his tenant is a year behind, or not at all; whereas one of the advantages of the law of distress is that the landlord has some security, so that he can give time to his tenant, as, for example, in bad seasons. There is, in fact, no good reason why there should be a different limitation of time according to the remedy pursued, whether distress or action; but there are reasons why the right of distress, which is correlative to giving credit, should be coextensive with the debt itself. The rest of the recommendations are on minor subjects. It is proposed to extend 57 Geo. III., c. 93, regulating the cost of distresses for rent not exceeding £20, to distresses for rent not exceeding £50, with power to raise the possession money from half-a-crown to five shillings. With regard to distresses for a larger amount, it is proposed to give the registrar of the County Court power to tax the expenses. Probably the Act of Parliament referred to might be so regulated as to apply to distresses to any amount. It is proposed also to give the tenant fifteen days, instead of five, during which he may postpone the sale on finding security.

It will be seen that a large majority of the committee were in favour of distress as a general principle. Mr. James Howard proposed a report, recommending the abolition of distress; but it was negatived by a majority of eleven to four. It was agreed on all hands that, if distress is to be abolished, there ought to be greater facilities for the landlord to re-enter. The committee state that the law of distress—which they refer to that general receptacle for misunderstood laws, the feudal system—"although varying from time to time under various influences, has been implanted in the ideas and habits and contracts of the people during many generations." Mr. James Howard proposed to omit this sentence; but he had only two followers against twelve on the other side. The "influences," however, have rather been uniform than "various," all of them gradually extending the privileges of the landlord. In support of the law of distress, the committee produce some analogies which are not sound. They say that "the principle of satisfaction by distress is the one general remedy now existing in all cases of rent, assessment, and charge, when property is the basis of liability." We know of no such principle. "In modern statutes," we are told, "whether for the recovery of the rent-charge, recovery of rates of every class, or recovery of penalties, the remedy of distress is generally the one provided in the first instance, and, in some cases, the only remedy. With respect to rates and penalties generally, no procedure can be taken against the individual until the power of distraint has been exhausted. The Crown's remedy for recovery of Crown debts is by distress." All that is beside the mark. The only similarity between the landlord's power of distress and these is, that they are both called distress; but the landlord's right differs from them all in the fact that his is a private remedy, which he can enforce without appealing to a Court of law. All the other cases cited, including the remedy for Crown debts, are cases of execution after judgment obtained, it may be summarily, but in no useful respect analogous to the landlord's right of distress. Distress for nonpayment of poor rates is analogous to a fi. fa. and not to distress for rent, which, among other advantages, gives the landlord the start of every other creditor, because he has to ask no one's leave. The only analogy between rent and the debts cited is that both have, in some instances, priority over other debts but this is because, in the case cited, the debts are public. The committee are, however, right in saying that we are used to distress for rent, and no case has, as yet, been made out for its abolition. They put in a good word for the codification of the law of the subject, which is rapidly becoming a common form with all laymen who attempt to master the intricacies of any branch of law. If reform is needed, however, it will be better not to wait for a code.—Law Journal.

THE EXTRADITION ACT, 1870.

The preliminary steps required by the Extradition Act, 1870 include what is called a "requisition." The Act requires that a requisition for the surrender of a fugitive criminal of any foreign state who is suspected of being in the United Kingdom, shall be made to a Secretary of State by some person recognised as a diplomatic representative of that foreign state. If the Secretary of State is satisfied that the offence is non-political, he then duly signifies to a police magistrate that such requisition has been made, and requires him to issue his warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive criminal. The term "police magistrate" is defined in the Act as the chief magistrate at Bow-street, or one of the magistrates of that court. On receipt of the said order of the Secretary of State a warrant may be issued by a police magistrate, on such evidence being laid before him as would, in his opinion, justify the issue of the warrant if the crime had been committed, or the criminal convicted in England. It is not, however, at all necessary that the requisition should precede the warrant, for it is expressly provided by 33 and 34 Vict., c. 52, s. 8, sub-sect. 2, that a warrant may be issued "by a police magistrate, or any justice of the peace in any part of the United Kingdom, on such information or complaint, and such evidence, or after such proceedings as would, in the opinion of the person issuing the warrant, justify the issue of a warrant if the crime had been committed or the criminal convicted in that part of the United Kingdom in which he exercises jurisdiction." But the Act requires that when a warrant is issued without any order from a Secretary of State, the police magistrate or justice must forthwith send a report of the fact of such issue, together with the evidence and information or complaint, or certified copies thereof, to a Secretary of State, who can, if he thinks fit, quash the warrant and order the discharge of the person detained. The Act goes on to provide that "a fugitive criminal, when apprehended on a warrant issued without the order of a Secretary of State, shall be brought before some person having power to issue a warrant under this section, who shall by warrant order him to be brought, and the prisoner shall accordingly be brought before a police magistrate." The fugitive criminal, on being brought before a police magistrate, must be discharged, unless, within a reasonable time, the magistrate receives from a Secretary of State an order signifying that a requisition has been made for the surrender of such criminal. It would certainly seem, therefore, that a fugitive criminal must in every case be arrested on a warrant, and that he has a further right, when the warrant has been issued without an order from a Secretary of State, that a report of the fact and the evidence on which it was granted, shall be laid before a Secretary of State.

The non-compliance with the Act of Parliament in the matter of the warrant formed the ground of an application to a divisional court, consisting of Lord Coleridge and Mr. Justice Grove, on Monday, the 10th inst., for a habeas corpus in the case of one Jacob Weale. The facts were shortly as follows: On the 25th May last Weale arrived in Queenstown Harbour on board the Servia from New York. He was then apprehended by Maguire, a detective officer of the Cork police, but without a warrant. The prisoner was taken before Mr. Starke, a justice of the peace for the county of Cork, and evidence was given that a private detective, living in London, had received an intimation from New York that the prisoner would arrive by the Servia, and had telegraphed accordingly to Maguire, who, acting upon that intimation, had arrested the prisoner. Mr. Starke remanded the prisoner, and subsequently issued his warrant as required by sect. 8 of the Extradition Act directing him to be brought before a police magistrate at Bow-street. On the 2nd June the prisoner was brought up before Sir James Ingham, and remanded again and again until the 22nd, when depositions were, for the first time, taken, and objection made by counsel appearing for the prisoner that he was not legally in custody, having been arrested without a warrant. The objection was overruled, and the prisoner again remanded until the 29th. Subsequently an order of the Secretary of State, setting out that a requisition had been made for the extradition of the prisoner, and directing the magistrate to act "in conformity with the Act," was received at Bow-street, thereupon Sir James Ingham issued his warrant under sect. 8, sub section 1. On the 29th June the prisoner was finally brought up and committed, the warrant issued by Sir James Ingham having been read, and some further depositions taken. Application was first made to Mr. Justice Dentman at chambers for a rule for a habeas corpus, but that learned judge, considering the matter of great importance, directed that the application should be renewed before the full court. It was then argued that up to the 29th June the prisoner was improperly in custody, as he was apprehended without a warrant, and that the subsequent warrant would not cure the original informality, especially as there was not, even on the 29th June, a formal apprehension; that depositions being taken on the 22nd June, before the prisoner was legally before the court, and the court finally committing upon those depositions, as well as those subsequently taken, the committal was illegal; that the court could not discriminate as to what particular part of the evidence operated upon the magistrate's mind and which did not; that the order of the Secretary of State was insufficient, as it merely directed the magistrate to act "in conformity with the Act," and did not require him in terms "to issue his warrant" (see sect. 7 and form in schedule at end of Act referred to in sect. 20). The Divisional Court refused the application, and the prisoner appealed to the Court of Appeal, and the matter was re-argued before them on Thursday, the 13th inst., but the decision of the Divisional Court was affirmed.

The Master of the Rolls, in giving judgment said: "There is a serious question which will have at some time to be considered, if the case should ever arise, viz., whether having regard to the Judicature Acts this court has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from a divisional court in a case of this kind, which is of a criminal nature; but it becomes unnecessary to determine that point now, because we are all of opinion that, granting that we have jurisdiction, no ground has been shown for the exercise of it. The question before us turns upon the proper construction of sect. 8 of the Extradition Act. All the proceedings in this case were strictly regular with the exception of the fact that the original arrest had been made without warrant. The whole objection then was that the subsequent warrant of Sir James Ingham was not a warrant for the 'apprehension' of the prisoner within the meaning of the Act. I am of opinion that such a construction would place too narrow a meaning upon the word 'apprehension.' Strictly, no doubt, it means seizing or laying hold of a man and detaining him with a view to his surrender; but I am not prepared to limit it to detaining a man not already in custody, because to do so would be to hold that a man already in lawful custody could not be arrested at all under the Act, unless he was first set at liberty. I am therefore of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed."

Lords Justices Brett and Cotton concurred.—Law Times.

THE LIABILITY OF BUILDING OWNERS.

During the short time that Lord Justice Holker was on the bench he differed more than once from his colleagues. His mind was vigorous and independent; and the opinions expressed on these occasions are interesting and instructive. Probably he was not right on either of the reported occasions on which he differed. Although his habit of thought was logical and fearless, it may be doubted whether he possessed the instincts without which lawyers, when they go wrong, generally go very wrong indeed. We have already commented on the case of Gibbs v. Guild, in which Lord Justice Holker differed from the rest of the Court of Appeal, holding, in opposition to the view of the majority, that the concealment of a fraud did not prevent the Statute of Limitation from running. In the July number of the Law Journal Reports—a number particularly rich in interesting cases in the Queen's Bench Division—is to be found, in Percival v. Hughes, another case in which the late Lord Justice was unable to concur with the majority. It was one of those cases in which the sometimes perplexing question is raised, whether the defendant is liable for an act of negligence, or whether the contractor, to whom he had delegated the work, and whose servants were guilty of the act complained of, alone is liable. Lord Justice Holker is found, in this case, in favour of the defendant; while Lords Justices Baggallay and Brett decide that he is still liable, notwithstanding the contract.

The damage complained of was caused in rather a remarkable manner; although, up to a certain point, the history of the case is very commonplace. The defendant was pulling down and rebuilding his houses, and employed a contractor who was to hold him harmless in respect of any damage. The main portion of the rebuilding was completed without accident, but it became necessary to make a staircase from the basement to the ground floor. The new house was lower than the neighbouring houses on either side, one of which was the plaintiff's, but the workmen were ordered not to cut into the party wall. In making the staircase, however, the workmen did cut into the party wall of the house which was not the plaintiff's. The effect was that the house, the party wall of which was cut into, fell; the girders of the defendant's house were displaced, and the plaintiff's house, on the other side, was injured. The defendant relied on the doctrine that a man is not responsible for the negligent acts of his contractor, as he is for his servant; while the plaintiff relied on the exception to that rule contained in Bower v. Peate, 45 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 446, as confirmed by Angus v. Dalton, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 689. The effect of these cases was accepted by all the Lords Justices as being that, where a man directs on his land an operation likely to be dangerous to his neighbour, he is bound to see that his neighbour suffers no injury. The mere fact of his authorising the contractor to pull down the house raised a duty on his part to insure that no injury was done to his neighbour's house. If a labourer, engaged in building a man's house, drop his hod on the head of a passer-by, the owner of the house is not liable; but if the scaffolding erected on the instructions of the owner is negligently put together by the contractor, so that it falls and injures the passer-by the owner is liable. He is bound so to manage his property that he does not injure others. Lord Justice Baggallay pronounces that this positive obligation lay on the defendant until the house was completely finished. Lord Justice Brett admits that, if the defendant had only authorised the erection of a staircase not to be affixed to the wall, and the workmen had, contrary to orders, cut into the wall, the defendant would not have been liable; but he considers the case in question a different case. Both judges agree in treating the pulling down and rebuilding of the house, staircase, and all as one transaction.

Lord Justice Holker, on the other hand, views the matter as two transactions. He admits that the owner of a house is liable for the act of a contractor when a dangerous operation is authorised, although the particular act is not authorised; but he argues that the dangerous operation in this instance was over. The question which he puts to himself is, whether the erection of the staircase was a hazardous operation; and, answering that in the negative, he pronounces the defendant not liable. In support of this view, he points out that it would be "a strange consequence if, after a house had been pulled down and built up again, and after everything but a few trifling matters had been completed, some work is ordered to be done which in itself is not of a hazardous character, that the owner of the house should be liable, but that he should not be liable if that work had been delayed for a few months." The judgment of the reader will probably be that the obligation of the building householder cannot be thus split up. If he orders his house to be pulled down and rebuilt, he must guarantee his neighbour until the last pane of glass is put into the windows. The staircase would never have been wanted at all unless the house had been pulled down and built up again; and, therefore, the erection of the staircase was part of the whole transaction. This result seems the only conclusion which can be arrived at without introducing further refinements into this branch of the law, and without unduly cutting down the duty to one's neighbour.—Law Journal.

ADMISSION OF A SOLICITOR.

Mr. Michael M. Murphy, of Kensington Lodge, Monkstown, Co. Dublin, has been admitted a Solicitor of the Court of Judicature.

PARTICULARS AND CONDITIONS OF SALE.

(Continued from page 364, ante.)

Completion.

"14. The purchaser shall pay the remainder of his purchase money at the time appointed by the special conditions of sale for the completion of the purchase at the office of the vendor's solicitors, and, upon such payment, the vendor and all other necessary parties (if any), will execute a proper assurance to the purchaser, but such assurance and every other assurance which shall be required by the purchaser for getting in, surrendering, or releasing any outstanding estate, right, title, or interest shall be prepared by and at the expense of the purchaser, and the expense of perusal on behalf of, and execution and (if needful) acknowledgment by the vendor; and all necessary conveying parties, of such assurance or assurances shall be borne by the vendor. The grossment of such assurance or assurances shall be tendered or left by the purchaser not less than seven days before the day appointed for the completion of the purchase at the office of the vendor's solicitor."

It is usual to specify date of completion: (Dart. 127.) This is done by the special condition. There is no need to state to whom the purchase money is to be paid; it must be paid to some one who can give a valid receipt. By C. A. 1881, s. 36, receipts in writing of trustees are sufficient discharges. This applies to trusts created either before or after the commencement of the Act. By sect. 56, a receipt in a deed, or indorsed receipt by the person entitled to give the receipt, is a sufficient authority for payment to the solicitor producing such deed or receipt. In case of deed without indorsed receipt, the deed must be executed by the person entitled to give receipt. As to receipts by mortgagees, see C. A. 1881, s. 22. "It is usual to provide that the purchaser shall be at the expense of getting in and procuring the surrender or release of any outstanding legal estate or term:" (Dart. 156.) "The purchaser (in the absence of any express agreement) prepares and pays for the preparation of his conveyance, but the costs of perusal and execution by all necessary conveying parties fall on the vendor, including, it is conceived, the costs of all matters essential to the validity of the deed as a perfect conveyance—e.g., the acknowledgment by married women," &c.: (Dart. 707.) Probably there will soon be no necessity for such acknowledgment.

Trustees, &c.

"15. A trustee, incumbrancer, or other person who sells, or concurs in any assurance merely in a fiduciary capacity shall only be required to enter into a covenant that he has not incumbered, and, in case he retains any title deeds, to give to the purchaser an acknowledgment of his right to production of such title deeds, and to delivery of copies thereof. The expenses of preparation and perusal of such an acknowledgment shall be in accordance with condition 16 below."

This acknowledgment is under C. A., s. 9. By subsect. (6), "An acknowledgment shall not confer any right to damages for loss or destruction of, or injury to, the documents to which it relates, from whatever cause arising." Hence a trustee may safely give such an acknowledgment.

Title Deeds.

"16. The vendor will retain such muniments of title as relate to any part of the property sold, and also to other property in which the vendor retains any estate or interest. Such of the muniments of title as relate exclusively to any one lot shall be delivered to the purchaser of that lot, and such as relate exclusively to any two or more lots mentioned in the particulars shall, on the completion of all the purchases to which the same relate, be delivered to the largest purchaser in value, whether he buy at the present sale or previously or subsequently thereto. The vendor (not being a person such as is described in condition 15) and every other person having the custody of muniments of title under this condition shall, at his own option, either enter into the usual defeasible covenant for the production thereof, or give the proper statutory acknowledgment of right to production and delivery of copies, and the proper statutory undertaking for safe custody thereof, to every purchaser of property comprised in such muniments of title who shall require the same; such covenant or such acknowledgment and undertaking shall be prepared by and at the expense of the covenantee, but the covenantor shall bear the expense of the perusal on his part, and the execution thereof by him."

On a sale of land there is now no need for any condition that the vendor shall keep the deeds relating to land of which he retains any part: (V. & P. Act, ss. 2, 5). But this does not apply to other kinds of property, and there is considerable doubt whether it applies to incorporeal hereditaments: (Dart, 148; but see Lord Brougham's Act, defining "land," 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4; Fish. Dig. 8326). In any case it makes the condition more complete to insert this paragraph. By V. & P. Act, s. 2, (4), the purchaser has to pay the cost of "furnishing" covenants for production of deeds on sale of "land," and C. A., s. 8 (6) extends this rule to sales of all "property," s. 2 (i.), and uses wider language. But it would seem that, in the absence of any condition, the vendor would not only have to pay the costs of his own perusal of such covenants when made by himself, which is reasonable, but he might also, in case of a sale in lots, where some of the deeds were handed to one of the purchasers, be bound to pay for the perusal by such purchaser of covenant to produce to another purchaser: (V. & P. Act, s. 2 (4)). It is well to avoid the risk of this. See, however, Strong v. Strong (4 Jur. N. S. 948) and Dart, 877; Sug. V. & P. 451; and compare Prideaux, 11th edit. i. 48. The statutory acknowledgment and undertaking are under C. A. s. 9. It is slightly better for the covenantor to enter into the statutory obligation, but it seems desirable in these Conditions to give him his choice. As to vendor's obligation to enter into covenant to produce independently of stipulation, see Seton, 1311; Dart, 142, 676; C. A. ss. 9 (8) and 9 (11). As to delivery of title deeds, see Seton, 1311, and as to their custody, Fish. Dig. 3526. For other forms of condition under the new Act, see Wolst. & T. 122; Concise Davidson, 12th edit. 104.

Apportionment of Rents and Outgoings.

"17. The rents and profits or possession will be received or retained, and the outgoings discharged, by the vendor up to the day appointed for completion; and as from that day the rents or possession shall be taken, and the outgoings discharged by the purchaser, and such rents and outgoings shall (if necessary) be apportioned between the vendor and purchaser for the purpose of this condition, and the proper apportioned part shall be paid with or deducted from the purchase money."

The outgoings will, on a sale of leaseholds, include an apportioned part of the current rent: (Lanes v. Gibson, L. Rep. 1 Eq. 135). Also "outgoings" include charge for street improvements: (Midgley v. Coppock, 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 370; L. Rep. 4 Ex. Div. 309.) Where sanitary works or street improvements have been ordered by the authorities in respect of the property, but have not been completed or paid for, a special condition should be inserted, throwing the cost either upon vendor or purchaser as may be deemed expedient. Under a condition such as the above, when the vendor is in and retains possession, the purchaser is entitled to a fair occupation rent from the time fixed for completion: (Metropolitan Railway Company v. Defries, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 494; L. Rep. 2 Q. B. Div. 189, 387.)

Accidents and Insurance.

"18. The property shall, from the time of sale, be at the risk of the purchaser as respects loss or damage by fire, the dropping of lives, and other accidents; and, when the property is insured against loss or damage by fire, the purchaser shall be entitled to the benefit of such insurance, but shall, upon the completion of the purchase, pay to the vendor a proportionate part of current premium. This condition shall not impose upon the vendor any obligation to keep up any insurance, or render him subject to any liability for neglect in respect of the same."

The earlier part of this condition is taken from the Liverpool form. It is obviously improper that a vendor should be able, in case of fire, to take both the full price from the purchaser and yet keep the insurance money paid by the insurers. Yet this would seem to be the law unless there is some condition, express or implied, as to the purchaser receiving the benefit of the insurance: (Raynor v. Preston, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 787; L. Rep. 18 Ch. Div. 1; Castellain v. Preston, 48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 569; L. Rep. 8 Q. B. Div. 613; Poole v. Adams, 12 W. R. 683; 33 L. J. 639, Ch.; 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 287; and see Dart, 812; 2 Smith, L. C. 293.)

Breach of Contract by Purchaser.

"19. Should the purchaser neglect or fail to comply with any of the special conditions or of these conditions his deposit money shall be forfeited to the vendor, who, without being obliged previously to tender an assurance to the purchaser, may sell the property either by public auction or private contract, and subject to such special or other conditions as he may think fit, and the deficiency of price, if any, on such resale, together with all expenses attending the same, shall be immediately paid to the vendor by the defaulter; and in case of nonpayment, the same shall be recoverable by the vendor as liquidated damages; but any surplus on such second sale shall be retained by the vendor for his own benefit."

In Best v. Hamand (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 769; L. Rep. 12 Ch. Div. 1) a railway company sold under a strong condition that purchaser should admit their power to sell. It was afterwards found that prior owners had not waived their right of pre-emption. It was held that the condition was binding, and that the purchaser could not maintain an action for the return of the deposit. There was a forfeiture condition. See also Want v. Stallbrass (29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 293; L. Rep. 8 Ex. 175). In Ex parte Barrett (33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 115; L. Rep. 10 Ch. Div. 512) it was held that, as the contract had gone off by the default of the purchaser, the deposit was forfeited, although there was no condition to that effect. See, as to the above condition, Dart, 162. A purchaser cannot elect to forfeit the deposit and avoid the contract (Ib. 192) except under very special circumstances on sales by the court (Ib. 1927). In Rosenberg v. Cook (L. Rep. 8 Q. B. Div. 162) the defendant purchased from a railway company land over a tunnel which the company had no power to sell. Plaintiff agreed to purchase it as "freehold building land." The conditions allowed seven days only for requisitions, and sold the property subject to certain covenants with the railway, and gave the buyer the opportunity of seeing the conveyance. The vendor had possession, but "the conveyance from the company to him was ultra vires and void." The conditions also provided for forfeiture of the deposit; the plaintiff was held unable to recover it, as his objection was not sent in till after the seven days. The phrase "freehold building land" was considered to be explained by the reference to the conveyance from the company made in the conditions.

Interpretation Clause.

"20. In the above conditions the expressions "vendor" and "purchase" shall apply to several persons as well as to one person, and the word person, in this clause, shall include "corporation." Words importing the masculine gender shall be deemed to include the feminine. When any property is offered for sale in lots the above conditions shall apply to each lot."

In our next article on this subject we shall give the form of memorandum which should be annexed to the conditions, and explain what are its essential contents.

(To be continued.)

THE LIMITS TO LITERARY AND ARTISTIC CRITICISM.

(From the Southern Law Review.)

A good many years ago it was announced from the bench, by an English chief justice, that a person who publishes a book must expect to have his feelings hurt by criticism.<sup>1</sup> "Liberty of criticism must be allowed, or we should neither have purity of taste nor of morals," said, at the beginning of the present century, a great and distinguished judge—Lord Ellenborough—to whose lot it fell to first announce the law touching the right of literary criticism, and who, in his endeavour to guard that right, in the interest of good taste, morality, and religion, laid down a wider privilege than succeeding judges have been willing to acknowledge. Nevertheless, the courts have never lost sight of the fact that it is of the utmost importance to society that works published for general perusal should be such as are calculated to improve and not demoralise the public mind. A man who publishes a book, or who produces any work of art, challenges criticism. If it tends to his praise, he rejoices in it, and it redounds to his fame and fortune. Therefore he is obliged to submit to it if, instead of favourable, it is adverse; and he cannot complain of a legal wrong unless the critic has gone beyond the legal boundary, and exceeded the just limits to privileged criticism.<sup>2</sup> To ascertain exactly what these limits are, by a review of all the reported adjudications on the subject, has proved a task to a legal author at once interesting and instructive.

The earliest case in the English reports in which we find a judicial exposition of the limits to criticism is Tabart v. Tipper,<sup>3</sup> which was tried in the King's Bench, before Lord Ellenborough, in 1808. Tabart was a publisher of, and a dealer in, children's books; while Tipper was the publisher of a periodical called the Satirist, or Monthly Meteor. Tabart alleged that, although he always dealt in books of the most moral kind, and on no occasion allowed anything not having a useful and proper tendency to influence the minds of the youth in a right direction, to leave his press or store, yet had Tipper so far forgotten himself, in a malicious endeavour to do injury to his good name and character, as to cause it to be suspected and believed that he published and vended books of an absurd, immoral, and improper tendency, for children. On the trial it appeared that the libels, which the wicked critic had inflicted on the good Tabart, were published in the Satirist, in the form of a mock panegyric upon certain poems which Tabart had published, and ending with a travesty, thus:—

"Not to tire your numerous readers with needless prolixity, I proceed to the magnificent poem—

"There was a little maid,
And she was afraid
Her sweetheart would come to her;
She bound up her head
When she went to bed,
And she fastened her door with a skewer."

Garrow, for the defendant, in cross-examining one of the plaintiff's witnesses, asked him whether the plaintiff had not published certain books, with a view of showing that the alleged libel was a fair stricture upon the ordinary rank of the plaintiff's publications. The plaintiff objecting, he argued in support of his question, citing Anthony Pasquin's case, as in point, where, in an action for libel upon an author, Lord Kenyon admitted evidence of the character of the plaintiff's works; and, it appearing that they were of the most libellous and scandalous description, Lord Kenyon was reputed to have thrown his parchment at the unlucky plaintiff's head, and to have dismissed him from the court with contumely. The evidence was admitted, Lord Ellenborough, in his ruling, taking a resolute stand in the interest of literary criticism, in language which has become historical: "The main question here," said he, "is quo animo the defendant published the article complained of—whether he meant to put down a nuisance to public morals, or to prejudice the plaintiff? To ascertain this, it is material to know the general nature of the plaintiff's publications to which the libel alludes; and I therefore think, that the evidence is receivable. The plaintiff is bound to show that the defendant was actuated by malice, and the defendant discharges himself by proving the contrary. Liberty of criticism must be allowed, or we should neither have purity of taste nor of morals. Fair discussion is essentially necessary to the truth of history and the advancement of science. That publication, therefore, I shall never consider as a libel, which has for its object, not to injure the reputation of any individual, but to correct misrepresentations of fact, to refute sophistical reasoning, to expose a vicious taste in literature, or to censure what is hostile to morality." Subsequently, several questions of pleading having been gone into, the defendant admitted that the plaintiff had not published the poem imputed to him, but urged that the travesty was intended as a just specimen of his publications. Lord Ellenborough instructed the jury that it was actionable to impute to a bookseller that he had published a poem of the kind shown, to which, in fact, he was a stranger, as the natural tendency was to hurt him in his business; and the plaintiff had a verdict with one shilling damages.

In the same year, in the same court, and before the same judge, the subject received a more thorough discussion.<sup>4</sup> Sir John Carr, a writer whose works are now forgotten, was the author of several books of travel: one entitled "The Stranger in France;" another, "A Northern Summer;" a third, "The Stranger in Ireland." Relying upon Tabart v. Tipper, he alleged that the sale of these works brought him large sums of money; but that the defendant Hood, intending to expose him to contempt and ridicule, had published a malicious and defamatory libel concerning him, in the form of a book, entitled "My Pocket-Book, or Hints for a Right Merrie and Conceited Tour; to be called the Stranger in Ireland, in 1805; by a Knight Errant." The book, it appeared, contained a print, intending to ridicule the plaintiff, called "The Knight leaving Ireland with Regret." It depicted Sir John in the form of a man of ridiculous and ludicrous appearance, holding a pocket-handkerchief to his face, and appearing to be weeping; and, behind him, another caricature of a man, bending under the weight of three large books, one of which had the word "Baltic" printed on its back. The man also held a pocket-handkerchief by the corners, on which was printed the word "wardrobe." The plaintiff alleged that, by reason of this publication, he had been prevented from selling, for the sum of £600, the copyright of a book of which he was the author, containing an account of a tour by him through a part of Scotland. As the trial was proceeding, Lord Ellenborough intimated an opinion that if the book published by the defendant only ridiculed the plaintiff as an author, the action could not be maintained. Garrow, the plaintiff's counsel, admitted "that when his client came forward as an author, he subjected himself to the criticism of all who might be disposed to discuss the merits of his works; but that criticism must be fair and liberal. Its object ought to be to enlighten the public, and to guard them against the supposed bad tendency of a particular publication presented to them, not to wound the feelings and to ruin the prospects of an individual. If ridicule was employed, it should have some bounds. While a liberty was granted of analysing literary productions, and pointing out their defects, still he must be considered as a libeller, whose only object was to hold up an author to the laughter and contempt of mankind. A man with a wen upon his neck, perhaps could not complain if a surgeon, in a scientific work, should minutely describe it, and consider its nature and

(1) Lord Abinger, C.J., in Fraser v. Berkeley, 7 Car. & P. 624.

(2) "Nothing is more important than to draw the line daily between fair discussion, for the promotion of the truth, and publications for the aspersion of personal character." Earle, C.J., in Zobbs v. Wilkinson, 1 Fost. and Fin. 610.

(3) 1 Camp. N. P. 351.

(4) Carr v. Hood, 1 Camp. N. P. 355 (1808).

the means of dispersing it; but, surely, he might support an action for damages against anyone who should publish a book to make him ridiculous on account of his infirmity, with a caricature print as a frontispiece. The object of the book published by the defendant clearly was, by means of immoderate ridicule, to prevent the sale of the plaintiff's works, and entirely to destroy him as an author. In the late case of Tabart v. Tipper, his lordship had held that a publication by no means so offensive or prejudicial to the object of it, was libellous and actionable. Lord Ellenborough said: "In that case the defendant had falsely accused the plaintiff of publishing what he had never published. Here the supposed libel has only attacked those works of which Sir John Carr is the avowed author; and one writer, in exposing the follies and errors of another, may make use of ridicule, however poignant. Ridicule is often the fittest weapon that can be employed for such a purpose. If the reputation or pecuniary interests of the person ridiculed suffer, it is damnum absque injuria. Where is the liberty of the press, if an action can be maintained on such principles? Perhaps the plaintiff's 'Tour Through Scotland' is now unsaleable; but is he to be indemnified by receiving a compensation in damages from the person who may have opened the eyes of the public to the bad taste and insanity of his compositions? Who would have bought the works of Sir Robert Filmer, after he had been refuted by Mr. Locke? But shall it be said that he might have sustained an action for defamation against that great philosopher, who was labouring to enlighten and ameliorate mankind? We really must not cramp observations upon authors and their works. They should be liable to criticism, to exposure, and even to ridicule, if their compositions be ridiculous; otherwise, the first who writes a book on any subject will maintain a monopoly of sentiment and opinion respecting it. This would tend to the perpetuity of error. Reflection on personal character is another thing. Show me an attack on the moral character of this plaintiff, or any attack upon his character unconnected with his authorship, and I shall be as ready as any judge who ever sat here, to protect him; but I cannot hear of malice on account of turning his works into ridicule." The counsel for the plaintiff still complaining of the unfairness of this publication, and particularly of the print affixed to it, the trial proceeded. The attorney-general having addressed the jury on behalf of the defendant, Lord Ellenborough said: "Every man who publishes a book commits himself to the judgment of the public, and everyone may comment upon his performance. If the commentator does not step aside from the work, or introduce fiction for the purpose of condemnation, he exercises a fair and legitimate right. In the present case, had the party writing the criticism followed the plaintiff into domestic life, for the purpose of slander, that would have been libellous; but no passage of this sort has been produced, and even the caricature does not affect the plaintiff, except as the author of the book which is ridiculed. The works of this gentleman may be, for aught I know, very valuable; but, whatever their merits, others have a right to pass their judgments upon them—to censure them if they be censurable, and to turn them into ridicule if they be ridiculous. The critic does a great service to the public who writes down any vapid or useless publication, such as ought never to have appeared. He checks the dissemination of bad taste, and prevents people from wasting both their time and money upon trash. I speak of fair and candid criticism; and this everyone has a right to publish, although the author may suffer a loss from it. Such a loss the law does not consider as an injury, because it is a loss which the party ought to sustain. It is, in short, the loss of fame and profits to which he was never entitled. Nothing can be conceived more threatening to the liberty of the press than the species of action before the court. We ought to resist an attempt against free and liberal criticism at the threshold." The Chief Justice concluded by directing the jury, that if the writer of the publication complained of had not travelled out of the work he criticised, for the purpose of slander, the action would not lie; but, if they could discover in it anything personally slanderous against the plaintiff, unconnected with the works he had given to the public, in that case he had a good cause of action, and they should award him damages accordingly. The jury returned a verdict for the defendant.

In Straus v. Francis,<sup>5</sup> the plaintiff was the author of a novel called "The Old Ledger;" the defendant, the publisher of the Athenæum; and the action was brought for the publication therein of the following critique upon the book:—

"Our first impression, on opening this production, was, that so many italics and inverted commas were never congregated into the same space before. Our last, on closing it, is, that it must be the very worst attempt at a novel that has ever been perpetrated. It cannot even claim the utility of an opiate. Its inanity, self-complacency, and vulgarity; its profanity; its indelicacy (to use no stronger word); its display of bad Latin, bad French, bad German, and bad English; the perpetual recurrence of abuse, or, as the author more euphemistically expresses it, "slightly digressive reflections" on great men, living and dead, and wholly unconnected with the subject, all make the reader even more indignant than weary; and how much this means can wholly be conceived by an operation which few are likely to receive—that of reading the book." The case was tried in 1866, before Erie, C.J., and a jury. The defendant's counsel, in opening his defence, contended that an author who sent his book to a newspaper for review, invited criticism and must submit to it even if wrong, if not also malicious. He proposes to show that the book in question justified the criticism; that it contained revolting attacks upon the private character of persons living and dead, and that it was of a nature utterly unsuited for family perusal. He was then proceeding to read and comment upon passages in the novel, when the plaintiff's counsel, seeing the impression produced by the extracts upon the jury, withdrew the case. But it did not end here. In a subsequent issue, the Athenæum, referring to the conclusion of the trial, said: "We found the book abominable, and we said so. Our readers, we may assume, were satisfied with our verdict, since it is alleged that the sale was instantly arrested." The criticism was reprinted, and the article concluded: "Our object was attained; we had vindicated the rights of free criticism. We wished for nothing more. In such a case as ours the question of costs was a minor consideration, and we had every reason to fear that our only award from the court would have been our costs on paper." The plaintiff again brought an action, and now alleged that he was an interpreter and translator, and that the criticism had greatly injured him in character and reputation as a literary man, particularly the passage in the last as to his ability to pay costs. Cockburn, C.J., who presided on the second trial, told the jury that the question for them was, whether, as a whole, the criticism was fair, or was prompted by malicious motives. Concerning the allusion to the plaintiff's inability to pay costs, he said: "If you think the allusion was brought in only to make an attack upon the circumstances or character of the plaintiff, it would be malicious and actionable; but if it was adverted to merely in order to explain and vindicate the course taken by the defendants; then you would probably think that it was not unfairly introduced. And, in the result, if you think the article, on the whole, was not unfair and malicious, find for the defendant; if you think it was so, then for the plaintiff." The jury took the former view, and the defendant had a verdict.

In New York, in 1840, James Fenimore Cooper sued the editor of the New York Commercial Advertiser, for a libellous publication contained in a criticism which appeared in that paper upon his "History of the Navy of the United States."<sup>6</sup> The offensive critique was as follows:

(5) 4 Post. & Fin. 939.

(6) Cooper v. Stone, 24 Wend. 442.

"COOPER'S NAVAL HISTORY.—Although the same courtesy has not been extended to us in regard to this book by its publishers which we uniformly experienced from them on similar occasions, before we committed any criticisms upon Mr. Cooper or his works, and what we have since continued to experience with respect to the works published by them of other authors; yet we felt so much interest in the subject as to induce us, notwithstanding this neglect, which, as we do not impute it to the worthy booksellers, is upon the whole rather flattering, to obtain this last work of Mr. Cooper's in spite of his prohibition, and to give it early, deliberate, and candid perusal. Little as we owe to the author on the score of personal consideration, and great as had been our disappointment from many of his late publications, the expression of which had, as we found, provoked his resentment, we still cherished the hope that with the elevated theme he had now chosen, he would rise above the personal feelings and political prejudices that disfigure those of his preceding works to which we have alluded. We had hoped that on this occasion Mr. Cooper—to use a sea phrase as he does, in a sense that a seaman never used it in—would "go aloft" instead of remaining in the cook-pit. We even believed it possible that finding the subject congenial with his early tastes and pursuits, he would, if not animated by it to the noblest efforts, at least avoid the rocks and quicksands, which had already well-nigh made shipwreck of his reputation as a writer, and regain a footing upon that strand, whence he first launched his gallant little bark upon a sea which to young and rash adventurers, especially if they belong by nature as well as by profession to the irritable genus, is apt to prove a "sea of troubles." We must confess, however, that we were not without some misgivings. We had heard it rumoured that the "Naval History of the United States" was to contain, if not a vindication of the conduct of Capt. Elliott in the action on Lake Erie, at all events a much more favourable view of it than had been presented to the public by his commanding officer, Com. Perry. But with all our experience of the waywardness, inconsistency, and love of paradox which had distinguished the author of "Home as Found," we could hardly persuade ourselves that he had become so utterly regardless of justice and propriety as a man, so callous to the perceptions of good taste as a writer, so insensible to his obligations and responsibility as a historian, and so reckless of his character as a public candidate for literary distinction and immortal fame, as to forego and disregard the opportunity of retrieving in some degree the reputation and standing which he must have been conscious of having lost. We were certainly not prepared to find that the infatuation of vanity or the madness of passion could lead him to pervert such an opportunity to the low and paltry purpose of bolstering up the character of a political partisan, an official sycophant, and to degrade the name and object of history in a work claiming by its title to be national in its design, by salving the wounded reputation of an individual who, from the time of the transaction referred to by his apologist, has been regarded as one doing at best but doubtful credit to his profession, and who owes his continuance in the service, after the events of that day, solely to the forbearance and magnanimity of his superior, which he subsequently requited with ingratitude and perfidy. We have, indeed, been disappointed, however faint were our hopes; and we acknowledge that we were deceived in our estimation of the discretion, taste, judgment, tact, and sensibility of Mr. Cooper, however doubtful we had felt as to his possession of any one of these qualities. But we must console ourselves with the reflection, that the power of sympathy is sometimes irresistible. Not content with leaving the character and conduct of Capt. Elliott where his gallant commander was content to leave them—to be judged by the official report of the engagement in which most assuredly he distinguished himself—his advocate, by travelling beyond that record, and ascribing to him at least an equal meed of glory with that which, as a historian, he assigns to Capt.

Perry, has but repeated the insane attempt which his hero had before resorted to—of provoking an inquiry. But the patron is worthy of his client. Neither of them, it seems, was satisfied to let the cause rest upon the documentary evidence, and both of them we suspect, will live to repent their indiscretion. We had supposed that such had long been the case with the latter, but the zeal of his apologist affords evidence of a relapse. Can either of them have forgotten the exposure extorted some eighteen years ago from Com. Perry and his friends? As to Capt. Elliott, anxiously as he may have desired it, he must have found it impossible. But perhaps both he and his defender, have imagined that the memory of the public was not so tenacious. The latter cannot be allowed to plead ignorance, as all the documents relative to the subject are to be found on files of the navy department, to which he had access. The conduct, therefore, both of the author and of the actor of this occasion, can be accounted for only on the supposition that quem Deus vult perdere prius dementat; and our readers will be better enabled to decide upon the justice of applying to them this familiar adage, by the extracts which we shall hereafter give from some of these documents."

And the following in a subsequent issue of the same paper:—

"But Mr. Cooper, who has long been regarded as his own worst enemy, has on this occasion proved himself the worst enemy also of his friend. After the lapse of eighteen years he has thought proper to revive the memory of events which, for the reputation and interest of that friend, should have been buried in oblivion; and after a whole generation nearly has passed away, and many of the witnesses of the transaction had gone with it, he has deliberately penned an account of it, intended for posterity, from the statements of Capt. Elliott, and the evidence of his witnesses, and quoted in their support the official encomium of Com. Perry, without affording the least hint or intimation to the readers of his history that the former had been falsified, and the latter retracted. Unfortunately for his purpose, but most providentially for the fame of one of the most able and gallant of our naval heroes, he was provoked in his lifetime to perpetuate the testimony which we have now adduced, to vindicate his conduct, not from the aspersions of a malignant rival—for his envenomed shafts had fallen harmless from the panoply of truth and honour in which the character he assailed was armed—but from the partial and deceptive representations, and the gratuitous and insidious defence of one who has assumed the office and responsibility of a historian, and hopes that his work may be appealed to as an authentic record, by future generations and to the latest age. It shall not be our fault if the bane be not accompanied by the antidote."

The first publication appeared in the Advertiser of June 8, 1839; the second, in the same paper of June 19th. There were two counts in the plaintiff's declaration, the first, upon the alleged libel of June 8th; the second, upon that of June 19th. The case went to the Supreme Court on a demurrer by the defendant to both counts. There the plaintiff had judgment on the demurrers. Cowan, J., who delivered the opinion of the court, after repeating the first of the charges contained in the offensive articles, said: "We are thus presented with a series of remarks, distinctly imputing to the plaintiff a disregard of justice and propriety, an insensibility to his obligations as a historian, the infatuation of vanity, the madness of passion, and low and paltry purposes. They present him as holding an affinity, and standing on a level with, and vindicating and bolstering up the character of an official sycophant, an officer unworthy of his place, a man guilty of ingratitude and perfidy. With such a man the sympathy of the plaintiff is represented to be irresistible, the patron as worthy of his client; and, finally, the plaintiff is accused more directly of palming falsehood upon the world in the name of history. The slander is somewhat diluted, by being mixed up with a small portion of what may, perhaps, be legitimate commentary on that branch of the history in which it professes to have found alimen<sup>t</sup> for its grossness. The defamatory matter is, however, easy of extraction, and, when concentrated, fully answers to the definition of a libel upon a private person. This deflition may be found in any book which treats of the subject. It means a contumelious or reproachful publication against a person; any malicious publication, tending to blacken his reputation, or expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. In the second count, the defendant represents the plaintiff as deliberately penning an untrue account of the battle, intended for posterity and derived from evidence which had been falsified or retracted, without the least hint or intimation of the latter. The defendant speaks of its being unfortunate for the plaintiff's purpose that Com. Perry had himself disclosed the truth; and declares the defendant adduced the statements of Com. Perry to vindicate him from the partial and deceptive representations, and the gratuitous and insidious defence instituted by the plaintiff, who had assumed the office and responsibility of a historian. The libellous matter set forth in this count is less extended and less loaded with epithets than the first. It is, however, sufficiently obvious. It charges the plaintiff with falsehood, an imputation which, when published in a written or printed form, has been holden libellous ever since Austin v. Culpepper<sup>7</sup> was decided, in 35 Car. II." Referring to Lord Ellenborough's language in Carr v. Hood, the court held it "unnecessary to pronounce whether that case may not have gone too far, because no one will pretend that the privilege of the press can warrantably be perverted to the purposes of wilfully and falsely assailing the character of any man. To say that he is an author, editor, or reviewer, is but saying that he is engaged in a profession which has been and may be made eminently useful to mankind, and which would therefore seem to call for particular protection and encouragement. That the law should allow his productions to be criticised with great freedom, is not denied. If he has made himself ridiculous by his writings, he may be ridiculed; if they show him to be vicious, his reviewer may say so. But the latter has no right, therefore, to violate the truth in either respect. The difficulty of sustaining this demurrer lies in its admitting that the plaintiff's moral character has been falsely and maliciously assailed by the defendant. This being imputed in the declaration, it behooved him to show that what he said was true, or at least, that it was no more than a fair deduction from the plaintiff's works. The question is one of good faith. It is always so in case of the highest and most absolutely privileged communications. The claim of privilege can, therefore, be settled only by a jury. I do not speak of criticism upon the works of an author in the abstract; for this, I admit, no action can lie. Certainly not unless the criticism be grossly false, and work a special damage to the proprietor of the book at which the strictures are levelled. The book cannot be plaintiff. I speak of attacks on the moral character of the author; and I will not stop to weigh the argument which would disfranchise him because he happens to be an author."

(To be continued.)

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Prideaux's Precedents in Conveyancing (11th Edition), 12.

A covenant not to use premises as a beer-shop, is broken by selling beer by retail to be drunk off the premises (Nicoll v. Fenning, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 166.)

Davidson's Precedents in Conveyancing (4th Edition), vol. ii., pt. i., 230.

Where the Parcels in a conveyance were described by reference to coloured parts of a plan, a yard delineated but not coloured was held to pass under the general word "yards" (Willis v. Watney, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 181).

(1) Skin. 124.

APPEALS FROM DISCRETIONARY ORDERS.

The Court of Appeal had to consider the question of appeals from the exercise of a judge's discretion in two cases of considerable importance which we have lately reported (Ormerod v. Todmorden Joint Stock Mill Company, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 669; L. Rep. 8 Q. B. Div. 664, which was heard by the division of the court sitting at Westminster; and Re Martin; Hunt v. Chambers, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 399; L. Rep. 20 Ch. Div. 365, which was disposed of at Lincoln's-inn). In both cases the appeal was from an order made by a judge of first instance as to the mode of trial of the action, and in each it was contended by the respondents, on the authority mainly of the judgment of Lord Justice James in Ruston v. Tobin (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 111; L. Rep. 10 Ch. Div. 558), that the Court of Appeal had no jurisdiction to deal with such an order, or, at all events, ought not to interfere with it, unless it could see that the court below had exercised the discretion conferred upon him by the Judoicate Act on an erroneous view of the law on the subject.

Our readers will hardly need to be reminded that, in the case of Ormerod v. The Todmorden Company, the appeal was from an order made by Baron Pollock at the Manchester Assizes last January, referring the case, which was an action for pollution of a mill stream, to an official referee, against the protest of the one party, and without the desire of the other. We have already expressed our satisfaction with the decision of the majority of the court (Lords Justices Brett and Holker), who reversed the order of the learned Baron; and this, notwithstanding the dissenting opinion of Lord Coleridge, who whilst agreeing that the order ought not to have been made, thought that the Court of Appeal could not interfere with it. The case of Re Martin came before the court at Lincoln's-inn, consisting of the Master of the Rolls and Lords Justices Cotton and Lindley, on appeal from a decision of Vice-Chancellor Bacon, refusing an application of the defendant, that the case might be tried before a judge and jury, and the decision was reversed, mainly on the ground that the plaintiff had shown no sufficient reason for depriving the defendant of his prima facie right to a jury, the Court holding that a mistake had been made as to the burden of proof, and that the Vice-Chancellor had consequently exercised a discretion different from that which the Judoicate Rules conferred. But on the general question of the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal in purely discretionary cases to interfere with the mode of exercise of that discretion in the court below, the three learned judges present all laid down that such a discretion exists, much in the same terms as had been done already at Westminster by Lords Justices Brett and Holker.

The chief difficulty on this point, in both cases, arose from some strong expressions in Ruston v. Tobin, and in one or two earlier cases, on applications to strike out pleadings as embarrassing, by Lord Justice James. In the first of these cases (Golding v. Wharton Saltworks Company, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 474; L. Rep. 1 Q. B. Div. 374), his lordship laid down the rule that, as had formerly been the case in the Court of Appeal in Chancery, "on a question which depends on the discretion of the judge, the Court of Appeal does not, in general, interfere with that discretion." The Lord Justice pointed out, in forcible terms, the evil that would arise by encouraging appeals on such questions, but he made the express reservation, "Not that the Court of Appeal has not complete jurisdiction over such cases, or that the decision of the court would not be overruled where serious injustice would result from that decision." In the case of Davy v. Garrett (38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 77; L. Rep. 7 Ch. Div. 473) Lord Justice James concurred in reversing an order of Vice-Chancellor Hall, who had refused to strike out as embarrassing a very prolix statement of claim. The Lord Justice observed that, "if pleadings such as this are to be allowed, the gentlemen who took such pains in the preparation of the rules may say, as Oliver Cromwell did after an unsuccessful attempt to reform abuses, 'The sons of Zeruiah be too hard for me.'

The effect of the two decisions to which we have referred is to apply the same rule to appeals from the judge's discretion in giving directions as to the mode of trial. Such appeals are not to be encouraged, and will not be readily admitted, but "where serious injustice would result" from the decision of the judge of first instance, the Court of Appeal will not hesitate to overrule his discretion.—Law Times.

REVIEWS.

Legal Medicine. Part I. By CHARLES MEYMOTT TIDY, M.B., F.C.S., &c., &c. London: Smith, Elder & Co., 15 Waterloo-place. 1882.

FORENSIC MEDICINE is defined by Chitty as "the evidence and opinions necessary to be delivered in courts of justice, relative to criminal and other matters to be there determined." Is it a science? "It is assuredly a scientific study, but it is not to my mind a science in the sense in which we call Chemistry, Anatomy, and Physiology sciences," maintains Dr. Maclagan, the present professor of Medical Jurisprudence in the University of Edinburgh. "It is in fact," he adds, "the application of the whole range of sciences peculiar or ancillary to medicine to the elucidation of questions which fall to be determined in courts of law." But, strange to say, while it has long formed a necessary part of the studies of every gentleman who is called to the Scottish Bar, there is no provision in England or Ireland for insuring that lawyers should study forensic medicine at all. Opportunities of doing so they possess, no doubt. They might, for instance, attend such lectures as those delivered by Dr. Tidy at the London Hospital last year, the basis of which consisted of the subjects dealt with in his present work on Legal Medicine. Or, they may if they choose enter on a course of independent reading; and on the whole, this seems to be about the best way practically open to them. Certainly, there is no scarcity of works on the subject. To say nothing of the mass of foreign medico-legal literature, from the work of Zacchias published circa 1621, or that of Foderé which appeared in 1796, numerous indeed are the English volumes on medical jurisprudence, from Dr. Farr's book, published in 1783, down to the work of the late Dr. Taylor, which made its first appearance in 1844. The earlier writings on the subject, however, were but speculative and theoretical, and the systematic use of medical jurisprudence for practical purposes is virtually of modern origin—a use to which such latter-day inventions as the microscope (as perfected by Dollond) and spectroscope, together with the advance of analytical chemistry, have so largely contributed that, under consequently changed conditions, legal medicine has assumed an aspect so novel and a range so much enlarged that the labours of its primitive professors have sunk into comparative insignificance. In fact, as Professor Maclagan remarks, "its progress and its rise in public estimation is simply commensurate with the progress of those sciences which it turns to forensic uses."

Hence, on the one hand, a field is open for the labours of fresh writers on the subject, and, on the other hand, while newer works thus advantaged possess, prima facie, a superior claim to attention, they need at once the utmost caution and reserve, without verging on unscientific timidity, and an intrepidity of opinion that yet will not partake of scientific venturesomeness. The work of Dr. Tidy (Part I.) appears to us to display this description of treatment. That degree of scientific certainty which only the coward esteems as uncertainty our author treats without hesitation; and that degree of scientific uncertainty which only the boldness of ignorance ignores he deals with in the spirit of a medical jurist conscious of the true limits of exact scientific knowledge. To his aid he has brought all the resources of modern research, while, in order to clear up what was ambiguous and to reconcile what was contradictory, he himself instituted new inquiries and conducted fresh experiments in most of the subjects discussed. His, indeed, is the work of an expert, highly skilled, painstaking, cautious, and impressed by a sense of that most solemn responsibility without which such a work should never be undertaken. "If anything I write," he observes, "should hereafter be quoted to condemn the innocent or to gain a verdict against right, then indeed most truly could I wish the book had remained unwritten."

In the interests of justice we are glad that Dr. Tidy has been induced to publish this work. Unquestionably, it will prove of special value both to the lawyer and physician; and it appears to us to be eminently trustworthy, and characterised by just such qualities as should ensure respect in judicial investigations. Here we shall not meet with aught of strange or startling beyond what is not only possible but probable. A Dickens would not find in Dr. Tidy a believer in "spontaneous" combustion; and Dr. Tanner will be angry to find that his remarkable return of appetite has raised, in Dr. Tidy, some doubt as to the genuineness of the notorious fasting exhibition. Nor would he, doubtless, have placed much faith in Joan Dotter, of Scania, who was reputed to have lived for several months without any other nourishment than water—a feat which induced Charles XII., as we read in Voltaire's history, to try how long he too could fast without fainting—only five days proving enough for the Swedish hero. Yet, the case of the forty days' fast of Cicely Ridgway is a matter of judicial record (see 14 Ir. L. T. 421). By the way, Dr. Tidy enumerates, among the symptoms of death from starvation, an aspect of great hebetude and "depression." But, naturally to be expected as is such a symptom, and strictly accurate as is the general statement that it is to be found present in such cases, even that appearance is not invariable, as a passage from Napier's Battles of the Peninsula (book iv.) would seem to exemplify:—"In the hills was found a house where thirty women and children were lying dead from hunger, and sitting by the bodies fifteen or sixteen living beings—only one a man—so enfeebled by want they could not devour the food offered to them. All the children were dead; none were emaciated, but the muscles of their faces were invariably dragged transversely, as if laughing, and unimaginably ghastly." Sometimes, though usually not inclined to attach too much weight to doubtful facts, Dr. Tidy appears, to our thinking at least, hardly strong enough in his words of caution or warning; for instance, in reference to evidence derived from footprints—a subject treated with great acuteness; and in reference to questions of likeness (as to which see 12 Ir. L. T. 386, 12 Ir. L. T. Dig. 15, State v. Smith, 54 Iowa, 104). Sergeant Ballantyne, by the way, tells a good story on the latter subject, in his "Experiences of a Barrister," which is worth repeating here. He appeared before Mr. Broderip, a magistrate, for a client who was suggested to be the father of an infant, about which there was an inquiry. Mr. Broderip, he says, "very patiently heard the evidence, and notwithstanding my endeavours, determined the case against my client. Afterward, calling me to him, he was pleased to say: 'You made a very good speech, and I was inclined to decide in your favour, but you know I am a bit of a naturalist, and while you were speaking I was comparing the child with your client, and there could be no mistake; the likeness was most striking.' 'Why, good heavens!' said I, 'my client was not in court. The person you saw was the attorney's clerk.' And such truly was the case." Dr. Tidy, after alluding to the Douglas Peirage case, and the Tieborne case, observes that the true difficulty in such cases appears to be to gauge the exact value to be attached to evidence of this nature, the power of seeing likenesses being essentially peculiar. But there is much more that, had we space, we should like to quote also from his chapter on "Personal Identity" (e. g., his remarks on photographs as evidence, as to which see 13 Ir. L. T. 438); and in a former issue (ante, p. 359) we had occasion to approve of his opinion with regard to burnt human remains as a means of identification. The whole chapter, indeed, is well worthy of consideration, while certainly capable of still more expansion, and the subject possesses great interest (see 1 Southern Law Journal 391, and Fuller's "Adventurers and Impostors"). Again, Dr. Tidy's observations on evidence as to handwriting might serve to provoke a much longer discussion than we can here indulge in (see 15 Ir. L. T. 428, 442, and some able papers in 18 Amer. Law Reg. 278, 21 ib. 425). Dr. Piper, of Chicago (the author of the papers lastly referred to) has, also, investigated with extreme care the subject of the microscopical examination of blood, and we cannot but regret that his researches and writings in reference to it (see 17 Amer. Law Reg. 554, 19 ib. 529, 593) seem to have escaped the notice of Dr. Tidy, whose views might, otherwise, have been modified. This, too, however, is a topic needing far more extensive treatment than we could here devote to it. Indeed, in dealing with such a volume (upwards of 600 pages), though we have really read and studied it most carefully throughout, we can at best express our opinion only in generalities. From a strictly legal point of view, it appears to us reliable in a remarkable degree, and from a purely medical point of view we have no doubt whatever that it is entitled to equal commendation—and in a word, it is a work that should command the esteem of every medical jurist. Even the illustrious John Hunter acquitted himself, on the trial of Donnellan for the murder of Sir Theodosius Boughton, in a manner so incapable as to justify Dr. Taylor's observation that Medical Jurisprudence did not then exist; and if the medical witness of our own time would aspire to make a better figure, he would indeed do well to prepare himself for examination in the way pointed out, with much practical astuteness, by Dr. Tidy. And though the jurist may perhaps find fault with the arrangement of the work, it would be impossible to disapprove of its method in other respects, while for fulness of detail its treatment is unsurpassed.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Letters and communications intended for publication, and addressed to THE EDITOR, 58, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin, must be authenticated by the name of the writer, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We throw open the columns of this Journal most willingly for the discussion of subjects of interest to the Profession; but it must be understood that we do not necessarily agree with all the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

THE SESSIONAL EXAMINATIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Permit me, through the medium of your valuable columns, to revive the subject of placing in order of merit the candidates at the Sessional Examination for Solicitors' Apprentices, which we heard so much about last September.

I do not know if the public are aware that at these examinations, owing to the want of accommodation, the examination is held at four different times for four different sets of candidates, and of course four different sets of papers are given.

As regards classification in order of merit, I do not for a moment object to it, provided one is classed with the persons you have competed along with, and who have got the same paper; but to be classed with persons who have not got the same paper as you—i. e., have been in a different division—I say is very unfair.

I do not for one moment wish to convey that Professor Hickson would endeavour to make one paper harder than another. On the contrary, I know him to be a gentleman of the greatest fairness, and one for whom I entertain the highest respect; but nevertheless, as it is necessary to divide the candidates into classes, I would submit that, if classed at all, it should only be having regard to the different classes separately.

NORMA.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

Mr. Richard D. Crotty, B.A., Barrister at-Law, has been appointed a temporary Stipendiary Magistrate for the county of Clare.

Mr. Albert Meldon, Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed a temporary Stipendiary Magistrate for the county of Waterford.

Mr. Andrew Newton Brady, Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed a temporary Stipendiary Magistrate for the county of Galway.

Mr. Richard Bourke, Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed a temporary Stipendiary Magistrate for the county of Clare.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—A. Noble, confirm sale.—C. Lewis, allocate.—R. B. Booth, do.—B. Hagerty, do.—A. G. Bagot, do.—J. W. Pollock, do.—W. Deane, to discharge annuity.

IN COURT.—A. Bredin, to examine witness and confirm report.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

G. Graham, rental.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—T. M'Glynn, leave to bid.—Trustees Beatty, delay.—Trustees Reilly, payment.—C. Languale, ditto.

IN COURT.—R. Burke, final schedule.—D. V. Mullins, extend receiver.—G. H. Warburton, judgment.—E. L. Hartstonge, final schedule.—J. Bury, do.—J. S. Best, from 3rd.—M. Smythe, do.—Assignees Bolton, payment.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Ferris, Arthur, of Lisburn, in the county of Antrim, farmer and shopkeeper. July 14; Friday, August 11, and Tuesday, August 29. H. and W. Seeds and B. Thompson, solrs.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

MARRIAGES.

GARTLAN and HAMILL—August 3, at the Church of St. Mary, Haddington-road, Dublin, by the Most Rev. Dr. Woolock, Bishop of Ardagh, Alexander Gartlan, third son of George Gartlan, Esq., J.P., Cabra House, Newry, to Emily, second daughter of Arthur Hamill, Esq., Q.C., Pembroke-road.

O'MEARA and WATERS—August 2, at the Church of the Holy Cross, Killea, Dunmore East, County Waterford, by the Very Rev. Nicholas Walsh, S.J., Michael Cartan O'Meara, only son of Michael O'Meara, Esq., solicitor, of Wellington road, Dublin and Kouladuff, County Tipperary, to Bess, second daughter of George Waters, Esq., Q.C., County Court Judge, Mountjoy-square, Dublin.

SUFFERN and HAMILTON—August 1, at St. Mark's Church, Dundela, County Down, by the Lord Bishop of Down, assisted by the Rev. Thomas W. Clarendon, M.A., William Suffern, LL.B., Esq., barrister-at-law, only son of John Suffern, Esq., of Windsor, Belfast, to Lillian Frances, eldest daughter of the Rev. Thomas R. Hamilton, rector of Dundela.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET.

3-7

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	JULY		AUGUST
	Sat. 29	Mon. 31	Tues. 1	Wed. 2	Thurs. 3	Fri. 4
*Paid Government.
3 p c Consols ..	99½	99½	99½	—	99½	—
3 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
New 3 p c Stock ..	98½	99½	98½	98½	98½	—
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1888 } Trade at ..	102½	—	102½	102½	—	—
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	100½	—	—	—	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	—	—	314½	—	314½
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	—	—	34½	—	—	—
20 London and County (Ltd.) ..	—	—	77½	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock ..	—	—	—	52½	—	52½
20 London and Westminster, Ltd ..	68½	—	—	—	68	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	60½	—	60½	—
3½ Munster Bank (Limited) ..	7	—	—	—	7	—
— Nat. Prov. of England, lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	23½	—	—	23½	—	23½
10 National of Liverpool (Ltd.) ..	—	—	—	—	14½	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	—	27½	—
10 Royal Bank ..	29½	—	—	—	29½	—
25 Standard of B. S. A., Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	58½	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	—	—	100½	—	—	100½
50 Dublin and Glasgow ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Pennanular and Oriental ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Mines.
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (Ltd) ..	—	—	—	—	2½	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons. Assurance ..	—	15½	—	—	—	—
8 Do. do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Cannock &amp; Co. Lim'td., Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 C. Dub. Brewery Co. (lim.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dub. (S'th) City Market Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 National Discount, Inc., Ltd ..	—	—	—	1½	1½	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	7½	7½	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	10½	10½	10½	—	—
10 Edinburgh Street Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 L'pl Un'td Tram &amp; Bus Ltd ..	—	—	—	12½	—	—
10 N'th Metr. Tramway, Lond. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 Cork, Blackrock &amp; Passage ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Dublin, Wicklow, &amp; W'ford ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	113½	113½	—	—	—
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	84½	84	—	—	—
100 Waterford &amp; Cent. Ireland ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference
100 D., W., &amp; W., 5 p c (1860) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do. do. (1865) ..	—	—	117	—	—	—
100 Gt. N'th'n (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	108	—
100 Mid. Great Western 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	106	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	109½	—	—
— Do. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Kilkenny Junction, A, 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	105½
— Do. 4 p c ..	—	109	109½	—	—	—
— Do. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterford &amp; Central 5 p c ..	—	—	—	109	109	—
— Waterford &amp; Limerick 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
Dub. &amp; Kingstown 4 p c ..	—	—	—	102½	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d
Bank Rate—Of Discount—3½ per cent., 23rd March, 1882
 Of Deposit—1 per cent., 23rd March, 1882
Name Days—August 15th and 29th, 1882.
Account Days—August 16th and 30th, 1882.
Business commences at 1.30 p.m.
 The Stock Exchange and Brokers' Offices will be closed on Saturdays during the months of July and August.

Holloway's Pills.—The chief Wonder of modern times.—This incomparable medicine increases the appetite, strengthens the stomach, cleanses the liver, corrects biliousness, prevents flatulency, purifies the system, invigorates the nerves, and re-instates sound health. The enormous demand for these Pills throughout the globe astonishes everybody, and a single trial convinces the most sceptical that no medicine equals Holloway's Pills in its ability to remove all complaints incidental to the human race. They are a blessing to the afflicted, and a boon to all that labour under internal or external disease. The purification of the blood, removal of all restraint from the secretive organs, and gentle aperitive action are the prolific sources of the extensive curative range of Holloway's Pills.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S. F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c., for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111 GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's).
 Late of WATERHOUS & Co.'s

PATENT OFFICE, DUBLIN.

J. K. FAHIE & SON, Consulting Engineers and Patent Agents, 2, Nassau-street, Dublin, and 223, High Holborn, London, transact every description of business relating to Patents for Inventions, Registration of Designs, Copyrights, and Trade Marks. Authors of "Hand-book on British and Foreign Patent Law." A paper on the Law of Copyright &c., to be had on application, price 6d.

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE,
 Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection.

10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps.
 21, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID,
 Curls the straightest and most unmanageable Hair, 3s. 6d., sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE,
 To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His GREAT HAIR RESTORER.

3s. 6d.; It changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles.
 As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 3s. 6d.; his DEPLATORY for removing Hair and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PERCY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham.

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
 ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
 ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
 ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,
 the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnauld, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.
 Agents—Messrs. Dudgeon & Son, 113 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewart & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin.

SOLICITORS' APPRENTICE PRELIMINARY.

TRINITY TERM, 1882—Messrs. Monks and Murphy, Former successors—Messrs. Hudson, O'Reilly, Carton, Hynea, Broderick, O'Callaghan, Fitzpatrick, Maguire, Conan, Fisher, Kelly, Greene, Doran, &c. Class in operation for October.

JAMES A. POOLE, M.A.,
 29 Harcourt-street.

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS' SCARLET INK FOR STEEL PENS.

This ink is unaffected by steel pens: it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen. Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each.

BILLIARD BALLS, CHALKS, CUES, and TIPS, and all other Billiard Table requisites, at HENNY BROS' Ivory Works, 11, High-street, London, W.C.

Also the cheapest house in the trade for Ivory Hair-brushes, Mirrors, and all other Ivory Toilet articles and Ivory Goods in general. Old Balls adjusted or exchanged, and Tables re-covered. Price Lists, Cloth, and Cushion Rubber Samples Post Free.—Established 1862.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

D. W. CARROLL, 44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN, Wishes to call attention to his large STOCK OF NOTEPAPERS AND ENVELOPES, Direct in every instance from the Makers They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of LEATHER GOODS, Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Slotters, Writing Cases, With every article connected with Stationery, Are Sold much under usual charges. Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer. Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge. 72

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane. Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued. A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 62 Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,

No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department. J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees, Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Rodcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others. Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms. 91

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES and INVESTIGATIONS

CONDUCTED BY MR. THOMAS DEANE, 17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange), Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience. Efficient Staff. MODERATE CHARGES. References.

ESTABLISHED 1878. 167

STOKES BROTHERS,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS and AUDITORS, LONDON and LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS, 22, WESTMORELAND-STREET, DUBLIN. 293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS and AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO., 73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank), are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy, Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

N. PETERSON & SON,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS and AUDITORS. LIVERPOOL and LONDON CHAMBERS. 1, FOSTER-PLACE, COLLEGE-GREEN, DUBLIN. 813

PUBLIC NOTICES:

THE CHROMOGRAPH. INSTANTANEOUS REPRODUCTION OF MANUSCRIPTS, DOCUMENTS, PLANS, &c., &c.

Plans and Designs in various Colours obtained by One Single Operation.

The Chromograph is used WITHOUT either PRESS, INKING, or STEERING, and with ANY DESCRIPTION OF PAPER.

From eight to ten minutes suffice to obtain 40 to 50 copies. To take off the writing from the composition, it is sufficient to wash the apparatus with a soft sponge in clear water IMMEDIATELY after having taken the last impression.

PRICES OF CHROMOGRAPHS.

Table with 4 columns: No. (1-4), Description (Octavo Boxes, Quarto, Foolscap, Folio), Ink (with/without bottle), and Price (10/-, 18/-, 25/-, 34/-). Includes note on extra bottles of ink and composition rates.

TERMS:—CASH WITH ORDER.

GERRARD BROTHERS, 37 STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 59

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS.

(Royal Route via Orkney and Caledonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Lochawe, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Stornoway, &c. Official Guide, 3d.; Illustrated, 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Fares free, at CARSON BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post from the owner, DAVID MACBRATHE, 119 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 98

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE

PERMANENT

BUILDING SOCIETY,

32, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off Incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 2½ per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied. Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:—The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.

50 52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10 TO £1,000 IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days. Two UNWRITING RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free. Address: GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO. LIMITED.

SECURITY, &c. RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—

39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 51

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 12, 1882.

No. 811

RIGHT TO COSTS OUT OF PARTICULAR ESTATE OR FUND IN LITIGATION.—I.

"WHILE I agree to the decree of the court in this case, I do not agree to the opinion, so far as it is an argument in favour of a principle on which is founded the grossest judicial abuse of the present day, namely, the absorption of a property or a fund which comes into the control of the court, by making allowances for attorneys' fees and other expenses, pending the litigation, payable out of the common fund, when it may be finally decided that the party who employed the attorney, or incurred the costs, never had any interest in the property or fund in litigation. This system of paying out of a man's property some one else engaged in the effort to wrest that property from him, can never receive my approval; and as I have had no opportunity to examine the authorities cited in the opinion. I can do no more than make my protest against the doctrine." So said Miller, J., in the case of Trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund of Florida v. Greenough, reported in the Central Law Journal of June 16th, 1882. But, apart from the question of making such allowances (in itself, certainly, deserving of examination), he appears to have agreed with the well considered judgment there delivered, in reference to the payment of costs to trustees, &c., out of property forming the subject-matter of bona fide litigation; and this latter practice it is on which we propose, at present, to offer some observations. It has recently come under more particular notice in relation to one or two cases in this country, as well as in the American case just cited; and it will be remembered that the Judicature Act (section 53, Ir.; O. L.V., r. 1, Eng.) expressly preserves to "a trustee, mortgagee, or other person" "any right to costs out of a particular estate or fund to which he would be entitled according to the rules hitherto acted on in Courts of Equity."

In Gillooley v. Plunkett, argued on the 16th ult., and decided by Chatterton, V.C., on the 31st ult., one of the questions determined was as to the jurisdiction of the Probate Division (and see as to County Courts, in testamentary suits, Bell v. Hughes, 14 Ir. L. T. Rep. 77) to order payment of costs out of assets. It had, indeed, been held, in O'Kelly v. Brown (9 Ir. L. T. Dig. 12), that this court has no jurisdiction to order costs to be paid out of real estate; and it is the usual practice of the court, without having regard to the amount or the ownership of the property, if the case has been a proper one for litigation, and has been properly conducted, to order the general costs to be paid out of the personal estate. But section 69 of the Probate Act (20 & 21 Vic., c. 79) seems only to have contemplated an award of costs against unsuccessful litigants personally; and the contrary practice had never before come into question directly in reference to jurisdiction. The Vice-Chancellor held that it had been too long exercised and recognised to be now questioned. But, in the next place, a question arose as to the power of the Chancery Division, engaged in the administration of assets, to regulate and control the costs so awarded; and in order to understand the full scope of the decision on this point, the facts must first be recalled. Mr. Plunkett, as executor and residuary legatee in the will of Dr. Patrick Moran, of Ardkenna, county Roscom-mon, propounded the will alone, dated May, 1873, seeking probate thereof. Honora Moran and Mary Jane O'Malley opposed the will, and propounded a later testamentary paper as the will, and failing in that they propounded a codicil to the will set up by Mr. Plunkett, of February, 1876. By this codicil, which was opposed by Mr. Plunkett, the testator gave some additional legacies, and revoked the appointment of that gentleman as residuary legatee, naming Mrs. Moran in his stead. The case was first tried on the 19th June, 1878, when a verdict was had against the codicil and in favour of the will. Mrs. Moran applied for and (after going to the Court of Appeal) obtained a new trial, which was had in June, 1879, when both will and codicil were established, and by a judgment of the Probate Division of the 14th June, 1879, the two testamentary documents were declared to constitute the last will of Patrick Moran, whose estate was now being administered in the Vice-Chancellor's Court. By that judgment it was ordered that the plaintiff in that suit (Mr. Plunkett) should be paid his costs to the 20th June, 1878, except so much of them as had been already paid to him by the defendants out of the assets of the testator; that the defendants (Honora Moran and Mary Jane O'Malley) should be allowed their costs to the same date out of the assets, and their subsequent costs, by the plaintiff; and that the defendant, Patrick Moran, the executor, should be paid his costs out of the assets. The costs were taxed—Mr. Plunkett's at £347 7s. 5d., one half of which, £173 13s. 8d., Honora Moran and Mary Jane O'Malley were liable to pay. Of that they paid him £80 0s. 4d. in cash, and set off against the residue—as they were entitled to do by the order of the Court of Appeal—their taxed costs of the appeal motion, ascertained at £93 13s. 4d. Mr. Plunkett claimed in the administration suit to be allowed £267 7s., being his taxed costs, less by £80 0s. 4d. paid in cash; but the Vice-Chancellor held that the probate order extended also to what had been allowed or set off in respect of the appeal costs, and that all he was now entitled to claim was £173 13s. 8d. The Court of Chancery, said the Vice-Chancellor, exercised a control over the payment of costs so directed to be paid, in the administration of assets, in so far as the priority in which they were payable was concerned: Major v. Major, 2 Drew. 281; Re Mayhew, 5 Ch. Div. 596. Those cases only decided, no doubt, that such costs must be postponed to the costs of an administration suit, but they were important to show that the Chancery Division to which alone the administration of assets was assigned, has power to regulate the manner in which effect should be given on administration to such orders as those of the Probate Division. Even creditors must be postponed in administration to the payment of the costs, and if the assets proved deficient they might be even ordered to pay the costs incurred in the suit by a personal representative. The costs of obtaining probate in the ordinary way were allowed and paid immediately after funeral expenses, but the costs of an adverse litigation were open to different considerations. An expensive litigation might ensue on the setting up or contesting of testamentary papers other than that found to be the will, in which proceedings creditors had no right to intervene, and it appeared inequitable that they should be deprived of their just demands by a grant of costs to the parties then before the Court, swallowing up all the assets. As between litigants in that court such an award of costs must be held to be conclusive; but he (the Vice-Chancellor) could not see that it would be just as against the persons whose rights were paramount, nor in principle how it could bind persons not privy to the suit, and not privy to the parties thereto. Allowing that there was power in the Judge of the Probate Division to make these orders, he was of opinion that the Chancery Division had the right to decide the order in which costs so awarded were to be paid on the administration of assets, even although the result might be that, in consequence of the existence of charges equitably prior to such costs, the fund might prove insufficient for the payment of them in full or at all. If the personal estate were sufficient to pay both costs and legacies, there would be no question to decide; but it appeared that the personal estate would be insufficient for the payment of both; and, therefore, the legatees contended that their legacies should be paid out of the personal estate before these costs, leaving them to be satisfied out of the residue. In determining what rank these costs must take, he should look at their character. Where there was a fair ground for the litigation, and it was plain that without a decision upon the subject matter of the dispute the fund could not be administered, it was plain that the costs should be borne by the fund before it was distributed between legatees, next of kin, or cestui que trust as the case might be. In this case the decree of the Probate Division showed that the learned judge must have considered that there were fair grounds for the litigation, and with his decision he (the Vice-Chancellor) had no authority to interfere. The judge there had the entire case before him, and his opinion was formed upon the merits, and not upon consents of parties. If it had been upon consent, he (the Vice-Chancellor) would throw the costs given by the consent upon the funds coming to the parties to such consent. In the absence of any other circumstances calling for the exercise of the jurisdiction which he had claimed for that court in administering assets, he must hold, having regard to the principle he had stated, that the costs awarded by the Judge of the Probate Division must be paid out of the personal estate before the legacies. The costs of Patrick Moran, the executor, stood upon a still higher ground, and his costs in the Probate suit must take priority of those of the other parties.

"LAW JOURNAL REPORTS" FOR AUGUST.

The monthly number of the Law Journal Reports for August contains pages 585 to 664 of the Chancery Division, pages 435 to 490 of the Queen's Bench Division, pages 97 to 120 of the Magistrates' Cases, and cap. 15 to 25 of the Statutes of the Realm. In all, thirty-seven cases are reported, of which fifteen are from the Chancery Division, sixteen from the Queen's Bench Division, and six Magistrates' Cases.

Of the Chancery cases, we have first the case of The Attorney-General v. The Union of Dorking, in which the Court of Appeal declined to order a sanitary authority to take proceedings against persons improperly draining into its sewers at the instance of a third person thereby injured. In Martinson v. Cloues it was held that an agent of a mortgagee who has acted in the matter, and instructed an auctioneer to sell, is incapacitated from buying the property on his own account. In Smith v. Chadwick the law of fraudulent representations was applied to a prospectus; and it was held that naming as a director a person who had not agreed to act, and stating that the purchase-money of the undertaking was payable by instalments without mentioning interest, did not amount to an actionable misrepresentation. Teevan v. Smith elucidates section 15 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, which allows a mortgagor entitled to redeem to require the mortgagee to assign the debt and convey the property to his nominee. It decides that the section only applies to cases in which the mortgagor was entitled to call for a reconveyance before the Act, and, therefore, not to the case in which the mortgagee has notice of a further encumbrance. In Chappell v. Boosey it was held that the author of a musical piece does not lose his right to perform it by publishing it first. In Stannard v. St. Giles, Camberwell, the Court of Appeal declined to grant an injunction against a vestry taking proceedings before a police magistrate in respect of interference with a drain which the plaintiffs claimed as against the vestry. In Clarke v. Palmer it was held that a first mortgagee, not having the deeds, is postponed to all mortgagees advancing money in the belief that the first mortgagee had them. In re Braby & Co.'s Application is a trade-mark case, in which the registration of a trade-mark was considered not prevented by the fact that a similar mark had been registered with regard to goods of the same class, if there was no risk of confusion. In Warner v. Jacob Mr. Justice Kay declined to interfere with a mortgagee selling under his power bond fide, although the sale appeared disadvantageous. In Harston v. Tenison a claim for money ordered by the Court, in 1858, to be paid in respect of a breach of trust, was made the ground of an administration judgment, the deceased having been out of England till 1870, and died in 1880. In Waite v. Bingley a decree for sale was made in a partition action, subject to a mortgage in fee, notwithstanding that a tenant in common had procured an assignment of the mortgage and obtained possession. In the case of In re the Alexandra Palace Company directors were made to recoup dividends paid out of money borrowed for the purpose, while the company's premises were being rebuilt after a fire. In Crofton v. Crofton Mr. Justice Fry declined to issue a commission to a French Court, on the ground that the case was one in which the witnesses ought to be examined and cross-examined by the parties. In Holroyd v. Garnett, Vice-Chancellor Bacon refused to issue an attachment against a trustee who had erroneously misapplied the fund without fraud.

Of the Queen's Bench cases, the first case is The Prison Commissioners v. The Clerk of the Peace for Middlesex, in which the plaintiffs were held entitled to recover land conveyed to the defendant in trust for the justices of the county, "for the purposes of the Prison Act, 1865, and upon or for no other trust, intent, or purpose whatsoever," the defendant being held by the Court of Appeal concluded by the recital, and the land passing to the plaintiffs under the Prison Act, 1877. In Jenkins v. Jones the sale of a right of entry to which there was a good title was held, since rights of entry may now be granted, not to be forbidden by the Statute of Henry VIII. against the sale of "pretended" titles. In Chard v. Jervis the Court of Appeal declined to commit for non-payment of a debt a man who made an affidavit that the appearance of means in his way of living was due to his wife's money, and that he had none of his own. In the case of Regina v. The Mayor of Maidenhead a mandamus issued to a corporation to raise a rate to pay the expenses of the Court at an election petition, although it was alleged that the barrister intended to visit the respondents with these expenses. In Stone v. Hyde a notice under the Employers' Liability Act which did not state the cause of injury was held cured by the fact that the omission did not prejudice the defendant. In Pulling v. The Great Eastern Railway Company an action of tort for injuries against a railway company was held not to survive to executors. In Hunt v. Austin substituted service of a summons by a solicitor to take out of Court money on which he had a charge, was allowed. In The Local Board of Bexley v. The West Kent Main Sewerage Board a reference provided by a private Act of Parliament between a local board and a parish, was held not a reference by consent, so that the local government were not competent to state a special case for the opinion of the High Court. In Cheriton-upon-

Medlock v. Chorlton Union it was laid down that the rating of premises used for public purposes is to be calculated as if their use was unrestricted. In Saunders v. Crawford it was held, as the result of the Factories Act and the Education Act, that children between thirteen and fourteen cannot be compulsorily sent to school unless they are not under proper control. In Vichary v. The Great Northern Railway Company a master's order that a plaintiff should pay the costs of his being examined visâ voce on interrogatories was upheld. Jack v. Kipping decides that a claim for damages in respect of misrepresentation of the value of shares may be set off against the claim for the price of the shares brought by a trustee in bankruptcy. In Graves v. Terry the plaintiff did not deliver his reply in time, but delivered it before the defendant gave notice of motion for judgment, so that of course the motion was refused. In Heaven v. Pender a workman of a painter who had contracted to paint a ship brought an action against the contractor who put a staging round the ship for the purpose of painting it, and it was held that he could not recover for injuries caused by the staging giving way. In Cony v. Burr an insurance against barratry, free from capture and seizure, was held not to cover the seizure of the ship by a foreign Government by reason of barratrous smuggling. In Titterton v. Cooper the Court of Appeal held a trustee in bankruptcy, who had not disclaimed a lease, liable for rent due after his appointment. In The Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Carter it was held that a waterworks company, under the Waterworks Act, 1868, is bound to supply water although the consumer declines to provide a meter. In Regina v. Dyott it was held that rates cannot be duly published in a parish not having a church; but the effect of the decision was avoided by an Act passed a few weeks ago and printed among the statutes at the end of the number, allowing the rates to be published in a conspicuous place. In Smith v. The Assessment Committee for Lambeth it was held that bookstalls affixed to railway stations, and used by newsgatees under the control of the company, are not rateable. In Parsons v. The Birmingham Dairy Company the formalities required by the Adulteration Act in buying for analysis are held to apply equally to private persons and public officers buying. In Regina v. Vane it was held that a union not having a school board, but contributing to a neighbouring board, can enforce a proportion from one of its parishes. In Beatty v. Gillbanks religious processions in the streets were held not unlawful, so that those who took part in them could not be bound over to keep the peace.—Law Journal.

FELO-DE-SE.

In the course of this Session something has been done to abolish an interesting fiction without much notice being taken of the fact. Parliament has found time to pass a short Act which will virtually put an end to a curious and venerable piece of absurdity. Coroners' juries have hitherto been constrained, in defiance of their oaths and in the teeth of facts, to find fictitious verdicts in cases of suicides. There might be no reason to suppose that the person whose death was the subject of investigation was really out of his mind at the time when he shot or drowned himself. The contrary might be perfectly clear, and the same jury would have unhesitatingly found him competent to make a will and generally responsible for his actions; but, in order to elude a barbarous law, repugnant to most men's feelings, it was deemed right to resort to a pious fraud. The memory of a man guilty of suicide fared badly at the hands of our ancestors. All his goods were forfeited to the Crown. His widow and children were rendered penniless, and the rights of his relatives were ignored. His body was denied decent burial. If all were done in order, the body ought to be ignominiously buried, with a stake driven through it, in a public cross road. From time to time we have cut out the grosser parts of this savage law. More than fifty years ago burial in a public highway was done away with. But the memory of the old view of suicide was kept up in the legal requirement that the body should be interred within twenty-four hours from the finding of the inquisition, and that this should be done between 9 and 12 o'clock at night. We travel slowly in criminal legislation, and not until more than forty years afterwards did we abolish the practice of robbing widows and orphans for the purpose of punishing husbands and fathers. Deodands are also things of the past. Coroners' juries are not in these days required to assess the value of the wagon which crushed or the horse which kicked a man. Now we have taken another step in the right direction. The Act just passed does away with all the ignominious accessories to the burial of the remains of one who has committed suicide. The coroner need now only give directions as to the mode of interment, and that may be done in any of the ways prescribed by the Burial Amendment Act of 1880—that is to say, the burial may take place with or without religious service. The direction of the rubric that the Office for the Burial of the Dead is "not to be used for any who have laid violent hands upon themselves" remains in force. Otherwise, the motive for the compassionate verdicts of "temporary insanity" which coroners' juries have been accustomed to give is gone. They will not be obliged, in order to spare the feelings of the friends of a dead man, to record their opinion that he was a fool. Amiable perjury will not be among the duties of a jurymen called upon to take part in investigating the death of some poor wretch by his own hand.

The old law, the last shreds of which we have just thrown aside, was undeniably brutal and harsh. It was a rough and coarse way of regarding suicide. It surrounded a hideous subject with artificial horrors. It shocked people who were not very easily shocked; it proved too much even for the not over sensitive generations which permitted our goals to be true Infernos and the places in which the insane were lodged to be, if possible, something worse. It was an outrage to the living, and only wounded those who required consolation. Nor had it in all probability much effect in preventing suicide. A man who shuts himself up in a room and lights a charcoal fire, or loads a revolver, or purchases poison, with intent to destroy himself, is not likely to be deterred by the thought that his body may be refused Christian burial. Consuming, all-pervading grief, melancholy wrapping a man round as in a cloud, "perpetual fume and darkness," as Burton has it, the sense of depression and complete extinction both of hope and the power to hope, and all the other mental phases which precede suicide, do not permit the unhappy victim to think much of the proceedings super visum corporis in the future in the back parlour of a public-house. Perhaps all that could be said in excuse of the brutal, blundering system, the last stick and stone of which have been removed, is that it was just as effectual for its purpose as any other. For ages moralists and clever men have been constructing aphorisms about the iniquity and meanness of self-destruction, and they sound very cogent in the ears of those who are quite satisfied with life as it is. Have they, however, ever arrested a case of meditated self-destruction? The man who is demoralised by a long train of misfortunes is not likely to pull himself together by taking a dose of the best apothegms. He is self-absorbed, and is dead to the motives which would influence him in his better moments. Every "mad doctor" will assure us that those who are afflicted with suicidal melancholia appear to understand perfectly well the reasons which are urged against their infatuation; but arguments glance off them without producing any real impression. Their self-absorption grows and grows, regardless of external circumstances, until they one day seek relief in suicide. If the unhappy man will not hear the simple, clear calls of nature and affection, he will be sure to be deaf to the stranger, more distant voices of preachers and moralists. He must be rescued, if at all, by elementary remedies; and, if he be open to reason, there never was much danger that he would do himself harm.

It was once the fashion among writers who thought themselves unusually wise to pen or hint at half apologies for suicide. It was a "note" of culture in the last century to laud the readiness with which a Roman of the times, described by Tacitus, tranquilly quitted life when it seemed to him that the occasion had come for making a graceful or dignified exit; and we have among us some who include in their admiration for cheerful Pagan ways, mild approval of self-destruction if practised judiciously and with picturesque accessories. Our forefathers who constructed the law which is being destroyed, had no such view of their duties. They really thought the man who killed himself wicked. They called him a murderer, and they meant exactly what they said. It has been often pointed out that the practice, now become all but universal, of returning a verdict of insanity at coroners' inquests is of modern origin. A well known legal writer, not so very ancient, protests against "the strange notion, which has unaccountably prevailed of late, that every one who kills himself must be non compos of course." In these days coroners' juries cannot be got to act upon any other than this "strange notion;" and it would be monstrous to think of reviving one jot or tittle of the jurisprudence which treated suicide either as a foul crime or as an unerring sign of insanity. If we are to make a choice of blunders, there is something to be said for keeping to the old theory. It is more manly than, and at least as true, as the notion that suicide is often a piece of heroism. Madame de Staël wrote a book full of instances of people who killed themselves for the most high-sounding reasons. In point of fact, such persons are extremely rare. Suicide is, in the world as it is, generally the vice of weak, shallow natures. Strong-minded men and women with nimble wits and sound hearts do not make away with themselves. Even if influenced by no high motives, they are much too busy and full of interests to think of self-destruction. No matter how poignant grief may be, it rarely drives its victims to suicide. It is vanity, the union of limited faculties with ill-regulated desires, or the wreck of rash speculations, which generally impels men to lay violent hands upon themselves. The young lovers who, as described in our columns on Monday, threw themselves into a stream at Uxbridge in the hope of drowning themselves, and were fished out by a school-master who happened to pass, would not have been murderers, had they managed to make away with themselves, in the sense in which one who kills another is a murderer. People will insist upon drawing a very marked distinction between the two offences. But it would be unfortunate if the less heinous of the two were invested with any false sentiment, or if in abandoning antiquated jurisprudence we were to impair the feeling of contempt for this form of crime. Happily, the two things do not hang together. The new law—of which, to judge from a statement by the borough coroner for Cambridge, some coroners themselves appear to be unaware—removes the necessity or apology for a merciful fiction. Juries will henceforth be free to refrain from pronouncing a man insane who, so far as they know, had all his faculties in perfect order. But we need not fear that this will in any way materially lessen the abhorrence of suicide, which has its roots in a stratum much deeper than the Common Law.—Times.

THE LAND COMMISSION.

LEASEHOLDERS AND LABOURERS.

The following recommendations have been made to the Government by the Land Commission as to an Amendment of those clauses of the Land Act affecting Leaseholders and Labourers:—

"AS TO LEASEHOLDERS.

"The following may be said to be the causes of the comparative inefficiency of the clause of the 21st section, enabling the court, under certain circumstances, to declare void certain leases accepted since the passing of the Act of 1870.

"I. The restriction of the power of giving relief to tenants from year to year, to the exclusion of those who may have been compelled to accept a lease on the determination of their former tenancy.

"II. The necessity that the terms of the lease should be not only unreasonable or unfair in themselves, but unreasonable or unfair, having regard to the provisions of the Act of 1870.

"III. The fact that in a very large number of cases, possibly in the majority of the cases which have been heard, what the landlord set himself to procure by threat of eviction or undue influence was not the acceptance of a lease, but the payment of an increased rent, and the term complained of by the tenant as unreasonable or unfair to him was the payment of such increased rent. In very many cases it was a matter of indifference to the landlord whether the tenant took a lease or not, so that the increase of rent was obtained, and the tenant on the other hand either was indifferent on the subject of a lease—sometimes objecting solely on the score of the expense of taking it out—or else, when he saw that he was compelled to pay an increase of rent, desired to have a lease as a protection against further increase.

"IV. Another ground on which some applications have failed is, that the lease comprised additional land beyond that held under the former tenancy, so that, as to portion of the land in the lease, the leaseholder had not been previously a tenant; and, as the clause gave no power to set aside a lease in part, the application to set it aside failed altogether.

"If the clause were amended so as to admit to its benefits tenants whose leases or other tenancies were expiring, or had determined, and were further amended by not making the unreasonableness or unfairness of the terms depend upon their having relation to the Act of 1870, many leaseholders might avail themselves of the clause who are now excluded. But unless the amendment went further and embraced the cases mentioned above as No. III. it is to be feared that the result would be an amount of disappointment and discontent almost as great as has arisen from the results of the present clause.

"The object aimed at by the clause was, it is apprehended, as follows:—

"The 21st section provides for the inviolability of contracts of tenancy embodied in existing leases. But as it might happen that some of those leases might be both unfair in themselves and unfairly obtained, the power was given of setting them aside, if procured since the Act of 1870, and thus admitting such leaseholders to the benefit of the Act.

"It is submitted that the principle of the clause extends to the case of the enforcement by unfair means of an increase of rent which was at the time unreasonable and unfair, and which was made unalterable for a fixed period by being reserved by a lease, and that relief might justly be given in such a case, although the rent which forms a term of the lease, and not the lease itself, was what the landlord sought to procure by threat of eviction or undue influence.

"JOHN O'HAGAN."

"AS TO LABOURERS' COTTAGES.

"Great difficulty exists in enforcing the orders of the Land Commission in respect of labourers' cottages.

"No penalty is provided by the Act, and the only mode by which the order can be enforced is by attachment for disobedience.

"This is a process most unsuitable for the purpose.

"If the provisions of the statute are to be acted on and effectually pressed, a penalty must be imposed for non-compliance with the order.

"It is suggested that it should be enacted that in case of non-compliance with the order of the Commission or Sub-Commission within the time and according to the direction limiting the same, the labourer or the landlord may, or the clerk of the union, when an order shall have been made by the Land Commission in that behalf, shall proceed by summons at petty sessions against the party in default, and upon the production of a certified copy of the order, and proof of non-compliance, the party bound by the order shall be subjected to a penalty not exceeding twice the amount of the sum allowed by the order to be charged for rent, and not less than the said amount, which penalty shall be payable weekly until the order shall have been certified by the justices to have been complied with. The penalty shall be recovered in like manner as penalties under the Petty Sessions Act, and shall be paid in to the credit of the union in relief of the poor rates.'

"It can hardly be expected that the labourer will proceed to enforce the order. The farmer is not bound to keep the labourer, and any hostile action on the labourer's part against his employer would lead to his dismissal. It is not to be expected that the landlord will move in the matter, as he has no inducement to force his tenant to comply. The result must be that the burden of enforcing the order must rest upon the Land Commission or some local authority. Boards of Guardians composed of tenant farmers will not be inclined to enforce the provisions of the Act, and consequently the Land Commission alone can be relied on for the purpose.

"To enable the Commission to do so, it should have power to appoint and employ an inspector, whose duty it would be to visit the holdings and report to the Commission, and on his report the Commission should have power to direct a prosecution by either the clerk of the union, or by the petty session clerk, or the sub-inspector (Royal Irish Constabulary) of the district, as may be deemed most desirable.

"The entire question of labourers requires to be dealt with by separate and distinct legislation, but some such enactment as here suggested is required to give effect to the provision of the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, in relation to labourers' cottages.

"E. F. LITTON.

"29th May, 1882."

THE LABOURERS' COTTAGES' BILL.

Mr. Stuart's Bill on this subject, which was read a second time in the House of Lords on the 10th inst., provides as follows:—

"1. This Act may be cited for all purposes as the Labourers' Cottages and Allotments (Ireland) Act, 1882.

"2. In this Act the expression 'the principal Act' means the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, and the several words and expressions to which meanings are assigned by that Act shall have the same respective meanings in this Act unless there be something in the context repugnant thereto.

"3. Where under section eight of the principal Act, the landlord and tenant of any holding have agreed and declared, or shall agree and declare, by writing under their hands, what is the fair rent of the holding, and such agreement and declaration, has been or shall be filed in court, the court may at any time within six months from the passing of this Act, or within twelve months from the date of the filing of such declaration and agreement, whichever shall last happen, order the tenant of such holding for the accommodation of the labourers employed thereon to improve any existing cottages, or build any new cottages, or assign to any such cottage an allotment not exceeding half an acre, and may by such order fix the terms as to rent and otherwise on which such accommodation is to be provided, and any such order may be made on application to the landlord, or of the tenant of the holding, or of any labourer employed thereon, or of any inspector appointed under this Act.

"4. When an order is made under this Act, or has been made or is made under section nineteen of the principal Act, for providing accommodation for the labourers employed on any holding, and if such order has not been complied with within six months from the date of such order; or six months from the passing of this Act, whichever shall last happen, the person failing to comply with such order shall be liable thereon-forth to a penalty of one pound for every week during which such order is not complied with, and such penalty shall be recoverable in a summary manner before two or more justices in petty sessions in manner provided by the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, upon the complaint of any inspector appointed under this Act, or of any labourer employed on the holding, and the justices shall award such penalty to the guardians of the poor of the union within which the holding is situate to be applied in aid of the poor rate of such union

"5. Any person who has incurred any penalty under the provisions of this Act may apply to the court for relief from the same, and the court may relieve him from the whole or part of such penalty on such terms as to compliance with the order and as to costs or otherwise as the court thinks fit, and such relief may be granted, notwithstanding that an order has been made at petty sessions for the payment of the penalty.

"6. The Lord Lieutenant may, from time to time, with the consent of the Treasury as to number, appoint, and by order in Council remove, inspectors of labourers' dwellings, who shall hold office for such time as shall be determined by the Lord Lieutenant. There shall be paid to each of such inspectors such salary of remuneration as the Lord Lieutenant may, with the consent of the Treasury, determine.

"The duties of such inspectors shall be such as the Land Commission shall from time to time determine.

"Every such inspector shall be admitted into any labourers' dwelling at any time between the hours of nine in the forenoon and six in the afternoon for the purpose of inspecting the same, or otherwise carrying into effect the duties imposed upon him by the Land Commission.

"7. This Act and the principal Act shall be read together and construed as one Act."

THE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION.

Although bad seasons and foreign competition, aggravated by the price of labour and losses of stock, are, according to the final report of the Royal Commission on Agriculture, the principal causes of the present depressed condition of the farming classes, by no means the least important part of the report deals with matters more within the range of practical alleviation. Some of these, being intimately connected with existing legal enactments, their operation and their proposed amendment, it will hardly be out of place to refer to in these columns.

Of our land laws, in the first place, the Commissioners say that "no different condition of land tenure or of occupation would have materially mitigated the severity of the recent depression or would prevent its recurrence." In support of this view they refer to their reports from foreign countries, where, under different systems of tenure, like depression has existed, and to the fact that in this country owners in fee farming their own land with sufficient capital have suffered no less than life tenants and lessees. The report proceeds, however, somewhat illogically, to describe Lord Cairns' Settled Land Bill as "a bold, comprehensive, and most valuable measure." The ample powers that it confers on life tenants will, it is said, obviate many of the objections which have been urged against the existing laws—objections, it is hardly necessary to point out, just before declared to have no foundation. To the suggested establishment of a peasant proprietary, the Commissioners are decidedly opposed. They think that "no special facilities should be given to stimulate the artificial growth of a system which appears to be ill-adapted to the habits of the people or to the condition of agriculture in this country." At the same time, they deem it highly expedient to facilitate and cheapen the transfer of land.

Another very important question is that of compensation for unexhausted improvements. The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, the Commissioners say, has, notwithstanding its permissive character, done much good. There are, however, many parts of Great Britain in which from various causes no sufficient compensation is secured. The conclusion arrived at is, therefore, that further legislative provision should be made, and that with this object the principles of the Act, with one or two limitations, should be made compulsory "in all cases in which such compensation is not otherwise provided for." With this part of the report, however, Lord Vernon disagrees, owing to what he considers the impossibility of prescribing any universal rule for estimating the value of improvements.

Another alleged impediment to the favourable pursuit of agriculture is the not unfrequent custom of exacting special restrictive covenants as to cropping and the sale of produce. On this subject the commission have examined many witnesses. In conclusion a belief is expressed that the more stringent covenants of this nature are to be found only in the older forms of leases, and that the general improvement in cultivation would justify their removal. Their compulsory abolition is, however, not recommended.

With regard to the law of distress, the report says, the evidence has been conflicting. Some witnesses have been for retaining, some for modifying, and some for abolishing it. Of the last opinion are no less than four of the commissioners themselves. The majority, however, agree in the main with the Select Committee of the House of Commons, who have recently been investigating the same question. They think the law should be modified but not abolished. Abolition, they say, would operate to the prejudice of farmers, especially of the smaller class of holders. In Denmark, where no such law exists, the substitute is found more oppressive to the farmer, consisting as it does of payment of rent in advance, and the provision of security against losses and dilapidations. They propose, therefore, by way of modification that the power of distraint should be limited to two years, and that hired machinery and agisted stock should be exempted from the operation of the law.

A further matter with which the report deals at some length is that of local taxation. The Act (43 Eliz. c. 2) undoubtedly contemplates a contribution to the poor rate according to the ability of every inhabitant, and the courts have at various times decided that personal property is liable equally with realty under that statute. Earby's case, in the early part of the seventeenth century (3 Bulstr. 354), and the more modern cases of R. v. Lumadaine (10 Ad. & E. 157) and R. v. Capel (12 Ib. 332) bear out this view. These decisions, in fact, led to the passing of the Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 89), whereby personalty was first temporarily exempted, and which has been from time to time continued down to the end of the present year by various Expiring Laws Continuance Acts. The exemption, as the report points out, is grounded, not upon justice, but on public convenience. The difficulty of localising a rate on personal property appears indeed unsurmountable, and all that the commission can suggest is that certain local taxes should be assigned to local purposes, or that local expenditure be defrayed out of the Consolidated Fund. It is admitted, however, that to this course some weighty objections may be raised, on the ground of increased centralisation and consequent extravagance.

The remaining points touched on by the report we may pass by briefly, as being of less interest in a legal than in a social aspect. All rates, it is said, should in future be borne equally by owners and occupiers, whatever changes may be made in the incidence of local taxation. Strong disapproval is expressed of any legislative interference with the question of rent between landlord and tenant. The Education Acts are found to operate prejudicially to agriculture by depriving farmers of the labour of boys and giving the latter a taste for other industries. The Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, on the other hand, has had a most beneficial effect, and should be made even more restrictive than it now is. Steps also are recommended to prohibit the adulteration of farm produce and the sale of spurious imitations, and attention is drawn to the inequalities of railway rates and the preferential terms granted to foreign commodities. Finally, it is proposed that the present mode of taking tithe averages should be altered, that the rentcharge be a fixed sum, and that every facility be given for its redemption.

On the whole, it is evident that in the opinion of the Commissioners the wholesale amendment of certain portions of the Statute-book is desirable in the interests of agriculture. The main causes of depression—weather and competition—no legislation can control; but the host of minor causes they have referred to are within the reach of parliamentary remedies, and cannot be taken in hand too soon, if they are ever to be removed. At the same time the Commissioners would have it always clearly remembered, that in this country no interference between the rural classes can render any one of them independent of the other; and that "the best hope for the prosperity of agriculture lies in the mutual confidence and friendly relations of the three classes directly engaged in it, and in the common conviction that their interests are inseparable."—Law Times.

THE LAW OF DISTRESS.

The report has been printed of the Select Committee of the House of Commons appointed to consider "the whole subject of the law of distress, especially as regards agricultural landlords and tenants." After an historical sketch of the law, together with a review of the evidence taken by them, and of the arguments for and against the law, the committee (of which Mr. Goschen was chairman) proceed as follows: "Most of the witnesses who expressed themselves in favour of a retention of the law at the same time advocated considerable modifications in its provisions. Those who desired the total abolition of the law were of opinion that cheaper and more speedy means of re-entry, in the event of non-payment of rent, must be given to the landlord. In the opinion of your committee, a period of commercial and agricultural depression would be very inopportune for the abolition of the law of distress, which would of necessity impair the existing system of credit given by the landlord to the tenant, and cause serious inconvenience. There are some special enactments relating to exemptions that require notice. The Lodger Act of 1871 protects goods that are not the property of the tenant; workmen's tools are exempt from seizure; looms and frames used by workmen at their homes are not liable for the rental of those homes. Goods sent to a house for the purposes of trade, as, for instance, a watch for repair, are not endangered by the law of distress. Beasts at the plough are excepted, unless there are not sufficient goods otherwise to distraint upon; and there are some other exemptions. The tithe owners can distraint for two years only. Under the bankrupt law the landlord has the privilege of preference with regard to one year's rent only. Upon a careful review of the evidence placed before them, your committee are of opinion that a law of distress should be retained. The evidence seems to them to favour modification rather than abolition of the law. Your committee recommend the following alterations in the law: That the right of distraint be restricted to one year's rent, and that this right should only be exercised within six months after the said year's rent has become due. That with regard to agisted stock, the limit of distress should be the consideration payable for the grazing to the farmer who takes in the stock, in accordance with sec. 5 of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 42. That provision be made for the protection of machinery not the property of the tenant; also that animals not the property of the tenant, temporarily upon the holding for breeding purposes, be exempt. That the limit of £20 distress regulated by the Act of 1817 (57 George 3, cap. 93), be raised to £50, and that the allowance in the schedule of that Act for a man in possession be raised from 2s. 6d. to not exceeding 5s. a day. That, the attention of your committee having been called to the heavy and unnecessary costs incident to the processes of distress and the sale of effects, the costs and charges relative to distress for rent in cases above the limit regulated by the Act should be subject to taxation by the registrar of the County Court, or other proper officer. That the time a bailiff may remain in possession under a distress, may, at the request of the tenant and on his giving security for the costs, be increased from five to fifteen days, and that in such case no sale shall take place sooner, except at the request or with the consent of the tenant; also, that at the desire of the landlord, or of the tenant, the goods of the tenant may be removed for sale to public auction rooms or some other fit place. That appraisment previous to sale may be omitted, and that bailiffs should be approved by the County Court judge of the district in which they act, and be subject to removal by him for extortion or misconduct. Your committee are of opinion that, so far as possible, the above recommendations should be embodied in a Bill and laid before Parliament."

BILLS OF SALE.

There is not, and probably never will be, complete agreement as to the best tests of the material prosperity of the country. The state of the revenue, the amount of deposits in savings banks, the statistics of pauperism, our exports, our imports, might each be pronounced, with some show of reason, the safest criterion of real increase in wealth. On all hands, however, it will be owned that the annual returns of bills of sale throughout the country afford valuable indications of the state of business and prosperity. If this be so, the figures for the last seven years, published by the Board of Trade, are well worthy of attention. They show a truly amazing growth of bills of sale. In 1875 they were only 11,844; in 1881, they were 51,687. Between 1878 and 1879 they leaped from 19,596 to 49,623. In 1878 a new Act came into operation. It imposed fresh restrictions on this mode of borrowing. It extended the definition of bills of sale. It made them void, if unregistered, in certain cases, and it required, in the interest of the borrower, new formalities to be observed. On the other hand, it altered the law in one way likely to encourage the creation of such documents. Those which were registered in accordance with the Act protected goods from seizure by the trustee in bankruptcy, even if they were in "the possession, order, and disposition," and, to outward appearance, apparently the property of the debtor. Probably the state of trade had more to do with the multiplication of such bills than the form of the law. At any rate, the number rose from 19,596 in 1878 to 49,623 registered in 1879. It reached 55,518 in 1880, but in 1881 it fell to 51,687. The most serious side of the matter is that the increase has been chiefly in bills of sale for small amounts. A few years ago no one thought of borrowing five or six pounds by giving a bill of sale on his furniture. Even if he wished to do so, there were not the means of gratifying his desire with ease. The whole number of registered bills of sale in 1875 for sums under £10 was 86; but in 1880 it was no less than 8,872, and last year the number to secure advances under £10 was 7,227. Making allowance for the fact that it was not until the Bills of Sale Act of 1878 came into effect that it was of so much consequence to resort to registration or to state the true consideration, it is remarkable that 86 and 761 bills of sale were given in 1875 for sums under £10 and sums between £10 and £20, and that in 1880 the corresponding numbers were 8,872 and 18,978. A change has, it is plain, come over the ways and manners of the poor. A well-to-do person has always tided over his difficulties by going to his banker and obtaining an advance. The poor man has, hitherto, as a rule, gone in his troubles to the pawnbroker, raising a loan by leaving in pledge a fender, a looking-glass, or, in dire straits, the family linen. Bills of sale were the privilege of impecunious traders. They were parts of the machinery of hazardous and dubious forms of business. But this no longer holds good. "Credit has been popularized," to use an expression once common. The workman does as his betters did.

When he cannot make ends meet, he calls at some "friendly," "equitable," "co-operative," "amicable," or "harmonious" office, which gives him an advance in exchange for a bill upon his goods and chattels. The borrower puts every stick which he possesses at the mercy of the lender, who designates himself by a more euphonious name than that of usurer or pawnbroker, but who carries on much the same business.

These facts have not escaped notice. They receive prominence in consequence of the circular which the Lord Chancellor sent to the County Court Judges with a view to elicit their opinion as to the working of the Act of 1878. At the beginning of this Session Mr. Monk introduced into the House of Commons a Bill with the view of amending the law which had permitted the rapid development of this form of credit. One of his proposals was that no bill of sale should have the virtue of transferring after-acquired property; subject to certain exceptions, it should affect only goods and chattels specified in a schedule. Mr. Monk also proposed to make provisions for local registration of bills of sale. By his measure a blow was to be struck at borrowing small amounts. Bills of sale for sums under £50 were to be declared void. Registration within seven days was required, on pain of the bill being void; and for twelve months it was in any case liable to be defeated by a trustee in bankruptcy, so far as goods in "the order and disposition" of the grantor were concerned. This measure, as modified by a Select Committee, passed the Commons. When it came to the House of Lords, it met with qualified approval, and it was referred to a Select Committee, of which Lord Coleridge was the chairman. The Committee took some evidence and suggested a few modifications. By a small majority they agreed to the 12th section, which prohibits bills of sale for sums under £50. They suggested, also, that the requirement of the present law that every bill of sale should be attested by a solicitor should be repealed. They rejected Mr. Monk's proposal as to this, and they proposed as a substitute that every bill of sale should be attested by one or more credible witnesses who were not parties to it. Obviously the measure as it came from the Commons was an attempt to restrict materially the use of one of the readiest modes of borrowing; and whether this is or is not an advantage to the community is open to question. We are not so sure as Mr. Monk appears to be that it is right and expedient to throw all sorts of legislative obstacles in the way of a particular mode of borrowing, and that, too, one which appears to answer a widespread want. It is a fact against such restrictions that they are rarely very successful in their objects; and mischief is apt to be done in the very attempt. Something, too, may be urged against the purpose and principle of such legislation. Take a leading and distinctive clause in Mr. Monk's Bill—that which would cut down a man's power of hypothecating to one creditor goods which he may afterwards get. Very charitable, no doubt, are the motives of those who would try to prevent a trader from plunging into hopeless embarrassments by preventing him from borrowing money on the security of his after-acquired property, and limiting his credit to obtaining advances on articles and property which he has actually in stock. A shopkeeper who really wants money will find ways of getting it, by hook or by crook, in spite of this provision; and why, in all fairness, it may be asked, should not a man be free to borrow upon his stock as it comes in, provided he pays for it? Much the same criticism may be made with respect to other restrictions which are proposed. Why should an artisan who is behind with his rent not be free to go to a loan office, which chiefly lends on bills of sale, as well as to a pawnbroker's to procure a small advance? Some of the provisions which have been made from time to time for the protection of the grantors of such bills come near being puerile. The present law requires a bill of sale to be explained to the person making it by a solicitor, and Mr. Monk's measure proposes that a bill should be executed in the presence of a person authorized to take oaths, whose duty it would be to give explanations to the grantor. We are a little at a loss to understand whom this well-meant machinery can in practice benefit. Of course it is open to question whether bills of sale should exist at all. They are admitted to be contrary to the spirit of many systems of jurisprudence. A Scotch lawyer, for example, does not understand the propriety of a security possession of which is not given to the lender. It strikes him as a fruitful source of fraud. And, no doubt, bills of sale are, as a rule, modes in which a man who is deep in debt, and who is not honest enough to wind up his affairs when he ought, gives away what in fairness belongs to the whole body of his creditors. They are generally artifices for conferring upon later special creditors unmerited preference over those who have earlier claims. No one, however, is prepared at present to propose the abolition of a form of security so well known and so much used. What may be done is to look as vigilantly as possible after the interests of general creditors, and not to allow bills of sale to become, as they often are, ready means of perpetrating the grossest frauds. This is the pinch of the matter; and in mistaken zeal for the interest of a not unknown, but comparatively rare, victim—the needy borrower who cannot read and who does not know whether he is being charged 5 or 50 per cent.—the Legislature has not been sufficiently mindful of the most important point. The grantor of the bill of sale is rarely, in practice, duped. He is too often in the mood to dupe others; we might leave him to protect himself, with the certainty that no great harm would befall him. The persons most liable to be deceived are the general body of creditors who find that the man to whom they have given credit for goods has secretly made away with his property. It is they who most require protection, and who do not find it in the law as it now stands. If the Bill is passed in the shape in which it has emerged from the Lords' Select Committee, it will rectify some minor defects. It may save a few persons from falling into the hands of usurers, and it may lead to safer trading in a few instances. It would be no slight service to do away with the innovation introduced in 1878, which has made bills of sale in recent time so popular a form of security. But we fear that the new measure would not remove all those scandals which have made bills of sale odious to scrupulous men of business.—Times.

THE SETTLED LAND BILL.

Lord Cairns deserved the congratulations of the Lord Chancellor on the success of the important measure which now only awaits the Royal assent. The Settled Land Bill, which came down from the House of Lords before Easter, and had been amended by a select committee of the House of Commons, is the most considerable measure of reform effected in the law of real property these fifty years. In some respects, it might be called the most considerable since the Restoration, for the series of amending statutes which began about the time of the Reform Bill, and were closed a dozen years later, were concerned, important and useful as they were, chiefly with matters of form and machinery. Their general purpose was to provide straightforward methods of exercising powers already recognised, and giving legal effect to common dealings with land, instead of cumbrous and costly devices enveloped in fiction and mystery, and fruitful of sinecure fees. They left unaltered the substance of landowners' rights and powers. The present Bill, which in its original form was introduced by Lord Cairns two years ago, has a much larger aim. It is designed to make the persons known as limited owners—the life-tenants of settled estates and others whose position is only technically distinguishable from theirs—as nearly as possible the masters of those estates for all useful purposes. Limited ownership, so far as compatible with its being preserved at all, is no longer to stand in the way of the land being dealt with to the best advantage. Tenants for life are to have simple and effectual powers of selling and leasing, and may apply the proceeds of sale to clear off incumbrances on the rest of the estate. Such money may also, with the sanction of the trustees of the settlement and the Court or the Land Commissioners, be spent on the execution of permanent improvements; the Land Commission being a proposed new body in which the existing Inclosure, Copyhold, and Tithe Commissions are to be merged. The capital money, again, proceeding from the sale may be invested otherwise than in land—in Government securities, for instance, or in debenture bonds of railways. No power is given to mortgage for improvements. This can be done under an Act of 1864, with a good deal of formality and delay, by the help of the Inclosure Commissioners, and all that is proposed now is to extend the list of authorised improvements for this purpose. It would be useless to say anything here of the technical aids and safeguards by which the working of the measure is assured, and special circumstances, such as the infancy of the limited owner, provided for. These parts of the Bill, however, appear to have been well considered in the first instance, and to have gone through a careful criticism. We do not think any glaring omissions will be found; some clauses, indeed, rather savour of abundant caution. When the Bill first came down from the Lords some Liberals threatened to oppose it altogether on the ground that it was reform of the wrong kind. They objected so much to the whole system of limited ownership that they cared for no amendment short of reforming it altogether. Lord Cairns's proposals were in their eyes a waste of skill and labour on the tinkering of a thoroughly bad and worn-out vessel. Fortunately this line of opposition has not been persisted in. To do so would have been unreasonable in itself and bad policy; the former, because, granting that the Bill is but a palliative, it may with general consent be speedily passed, and so give immediate and much-wanted relief, whereas any more thorough measure is attainable only after a severe contest, for which the time and opportunity are not yet visible; the latter, because the case for a searching reform of our real property laws is in no way weakened by such particular amendments as this. Indeed, the case is rather strengthened by the allowed necessity for them. The costliness and complexity of our land laws are such as, on the first appearance of the thing, to put the whole system on its defence. When that system turns out, by the admission of its own natural advocates, to need constant patching and refitting—and every operation of this kind, however useful in itself and at the moment, adds to a complication already excessive—it is an argument that the days of decrepitude are come. Fifty years ago the Real Property Commissioners, enlightened men according to their light, asserted that the English scheme of family settlements combined sufficient freedom of management with due regard for the interest of successors in exactly the happy mean. A generation later Lord St. Leonards used much the same language; but he lived to be an active or consenting party to legislation which sensibly relaxed the strictness of the provisions thought elastic enough even by the Liberals of his youth. And we may peradventure live to see a successor of Lord Cairns—or what if it should be Lord Cairns himself?—conveniently remember the historical fact that strict settlements have no particular antiquity to boast of, and claim their abolition as a necessary consequence of true Conservative principles.—Pall Mall Gazette.

EVIDENCE BY PRISONERS.

The diversity of opinion which exists amongst all persons competent to form an independent judgment, on the desirability of permitting an accused person to give evidence on his trial for a criminal offence, renders it very interesting to observe what the result is when under the present system of criminal jurisprudence an accused person indirectly becomes enabled to give evidence on his own behalf. We have always entertained the gravest doubt whether the proposed change would be an advantage in practice, although theoretically it rests upon a substantial basis. We have frequently pointed out that the popular notion about the prisoner's mouth being shut is entirely erroneous; that it is competent for him to make a statement at the time of his arrest, which the police officer is bound to take down in writing and produce at the trial; that he can make a further statement or repeat the same statement when charged at the police station; that at the close of the hearing before the magistrates, in reply to the statutory caution, he can tell his own story in his own way; and lastly, by the universal consent of all the judges, he may, even if defended by counsel, tell his own tale to the jury. It is true that the statement in reply to the statutory caution is only evidence against him as an admission, and if not put in by the prosecution cannot be used by the prisoner, but practically the statement is always put in; indeed, the judge usually intimates his opinion that this should be done, and such an intimation no counsel of any experience would be foolish enough to disregard.

The Draft Criminal Code, Part XLIII, s. 523, deals with this subject in the following way: "Every one accused of any indictable offence shall be a competent witness for himself or herself upon his or her trial for such offence, and the wife or husband, as the case may be, of every such accused person shall be a competent witness for him or her upon such trial: provided that no such person shall be liable to be called as a witness by the prosecutor, but every such witness called and giving evidence on behalf of the accused shall be liable to be cross-examined like any other witness on any matter, though not arising out of his examination in chief: provided that, so far as the cross-examination relates to the credit of the accused, the court may limit such cross-examination to such extent as it thinks proper, although the proposed cross-examination might be permissible in the case of any other witness."

This latter provision seems to us most ridiculous, because, whenever the question as to credit has been asked, the mischief is done; e.g., suppose the code to become law so far as this section is concerned, and the prisoner to be called as a witness on his own behalf, he having been previously convicted of burglary and sentenced to penal servitude, it would be competent for the counsel for the prosecution—indeed he seems to be invited by the section—to ask, "Have you not been convicted of burglary?" The court might disallow the question, but the prisoner's chance of acquittal would be substantially reduced, if not altogether taken away, and yet he might be perfectly innocent of the crime for which he was being tried.

In their report (p. 37) the commissioners thus allude to this section: "The Bill contained a clause enabling the accused to make an unsworn statement on his own behalf, and subjecting him to cross-examination of a restricted character. For this we have substituted sect. 523, which renders the accused, and the husband or wife of the accused, competent witnesses for the defence." As regards the policy of a change in the law so important, we are divided in opinion. The considerations in favour of and against the change have been frequently discussed and are well known. On the whole we are of opinion that, if the accused is to be admitted to give evidence on his own behalf, he should do so on the same conditions as other witnesses, subject to some special protection in regard to cross-examination."

A recent trial at the Millstone Assizes, on the 21st ult., is a good illustration of the probable result of the proposed change in the law. The case was one of rape, and was described by Sir Henry Hawkins as the most extraordinary he had ever tried, or indeed even heard of during his long experience. One Dr. McNab, a medical man at Dartford, had gone away for a holiday, leaving one of the prisoners, Dr. Kennedy, in charge of his practice. On the 1st July, Kennedy invited a friend named Hartnett, an officer in Her Majesty's Customs, to spend the day with him, the only other occupants of the house being two female servants, a cook and a housemaid, aged respectively twenty-two and sixteen-and-a-half years. About ten o'clock, Kennedy and Hartnett left the house, the latter intending to catch a train to Gravesend, but he missed the train, and the two returned to Dr. McNab's at about eleven o'clock. Both the girls were up, some drinking took place in the dining-room, and then commenced a scene of unbridled profligacy which lasted until four o'clock in the morning, Kennedy and Hartnett being subsequently, on waking in the morning, charged with rape. The magistrates refused to commit for this offence after a long hearing, and only sent the men for trial for an indecent assault, but bills were preferred for the graver charge, and duly found by the grand jury. There were several indictments, and the prosecution elected to proceed on one charging both prisoners together: Hartnett with committing a rape on Barbara Moore, the cook, and Kennedy with aiding and abetting. The defence was, of course, consent, and the evidence for the prosecution presented many features of improbability, particularly as there were no marks of violence on the girls, although they swore they had been subjected to very great brutality. At the close of the case for the prosecution the learned counsel for the prisoners submitted that there was no evidence of aiding and abetting by Kennedy in the case of the particular rape before the jury, and, after argument, the objection was allowed, and a verdict of "Not guilty" taken as against Kennedy. Kennedy was then called as a witness for Hartnett, and, as there were other indictments against him, including one for a rape on Barbara Moore, he thus practically became a witness for himself. Hartnett was convicted.

We believe, whenever there is a conflict of testimony, a jury would accept in nine cases out of ten the story of the witnesses for the prosecution, who apparently have no object in stating that which is untrue, and would reject that of the prisoner, who is so deeply interested in the result, and that they certainly would never attach greater weight to a statement on oath than to a statement otherwise made. We think the proper solution of the problem would be, to retain the provision in the original Bill drawn by Mr. Justice Stephen allowing the prisoner to make a statement, whether defended by counsel or not; but we would not permit cross-examination of the prisoner under any circumstances, as we consider such a practice would inevitably lead to the conviction of many innocent persons.—Law Times.

THE LIMITS TO LITERARY AND ARTISTIC CRITICISM.

(Continued from page 382, ante.)

One of the latest cases, and at the same time a very notorious one, on our topic, is Reade v. Sweetser,<sup>1</sup> decided in the New York Supreme Court in 1869. The plaintiff was Charles Reade, the English novelist. He asked $25,000 damages for an alleged libel published in the Round Table, a New York weekly paper, in the shape of a criticism of his novel, "Griffith Gaunt," then just issued, which charged that it was "one of the worst stories that had been printed since Sterne, Fielding, and Smollet defiled the literature of the already foul eighteenth century;" that it "is not only tainted with this one foul spot—it is replete with impurity; it reeks with allusions that the most prurient scandal-monger would hesitate to make." The language of Clarke, J., in charging the jury, contains an excellent statement of the limits of literary and artistic criticism, as applied to the criticism in question. "In criticising the productions of an author," said he, "the law allows considerable latitude. The interests of literature and science require that the productions of authors shall be subject to fair criticism; that even some animadversion may be permitted, unless it appears that the critic, under the pretext of reviewing his book, takes an opportunity of attacking the character of the author and of holding him up as an object of ridicule, hatred, or contempt. In other words, the critic may say what he pleases of the literary merits or demerits of the published production of an author; but with respect to his personal rights, relating to his reputation, the critic has no more privilege than any other person not assuming the business of criticism. For instance, he may say that the matter is crude, forced, and unnatural; that it betrays poverty of thought, and abounds with common-places and platitudes, being altogether 'flat, stale, and unprofitable,' and that its style is affected, obscure, and involved. He may say, as Burke said of the style of Gibbon, that it is execrable; but he cannot say that the author himself is execrable, or that he is personally affected, or absurd, or wayward. The critic has the same liberty, under the same restrictions, in relation to all people who come before the public for praise or censure. He may say of the orator who uses excessive gesticulation and vociferation, mistaking extravagant action and verbosity for eloquence, that he has all the contortions without any of the inspiration of the Sibyl. He can say of the player that he mounds his speech, as many players do, or that he 'tears the passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings;' but he cannot abuse him as a 'robustious, periwig-pated fellow,' and recommend that he should be 'whipt for o'erdoing Termagant.' The critic can call a painting a daub and an abortion, but he cannot call the painter himself a low, discreditable pretender and an abortion. The most comprehensive freedom in animadverting upon the productions and actions of public men is essential to the very existence of civil and political liberty, and to the progress of civilization, and I heartily agree with Lord Ellenborough in Tabart v. Tipper. * * * But, although a critic may not have directly assailed the character of an author, or ridiculed his personal appearance, his manners, his voice, or exposed any eccentricities or defects of the man, may he not, nevertheless, defame him and wound him in the most vital spot by imputing to him unworthy motives and evil designs against the well-being of society, intimating that he infers these motives and designs from the sentiments expressed and the characters delineated in the work which he has undertaken to review? My own opinion is that many of the works of fiction which are published in this country are very pernicious in their effects upon public morality. Not that I think fiction in itself is demoralising—far from it: the most instructive lessons in faith and morals have been conveyed through its instrumentality. The founder of Christianity himself did not disdain frequently to employ it; indeed, it was his favourite method of moral and spiritual instruction. But in its very fascination consists its danger; and when we see the press teeming with productions of this kind, describing scenes and portraying characters calculated to corrupt the morals, and even weaken the mental stamina of the multitude of novel-readers who seem to be absorbed in this kind of reading, it will be prudent to allow considerable latitude of criticism in relation to these productions. * * * I make these observations to show that in dealing with this class of literature the critic should not be prevented from inferring the motives and designs of the author from the inevitable effect of his writings. Of course if he imputes motives and designs which he was not warranted in imputing by any opinion or sentiment expressed, or any character delineated in the work, or from its general tone, he is liable and must take the consequences, and the author is entitled to redress. To charge an author with such motives and designs is a most serious imputation; and if it is unwarranted, the critic has committed a grievous wrong, which money is scarcely capable of repairing. Undoubtedly, the criticisms complained of make these imputations against the plaintiff. That can scarcely be denied. * * * The jury have a right to determine, for it is plain that the articles are prima facie libellous, whether 'Griffith Gaunt' is obnoxious to such imputations; and if so, you have the right to infer the culpability of the plaintiff and the truth of the justification." The jury gave Charles Reade a verdict and six cents damages.

(1) 6 Abb. Pr. (N.S.) 2.

(2) Ante, p. 379.

The editor of a newspaper stands in the same position as any other writer, in this regard. In Heriot v. Stuart,<sup>3</sup> the plaintiff was editor and proprietor of the True Briton; the defendant, the printer of a paper called the Oracle. In the columns of the last paper, sometime in 1795, this paragraph appeared:—

"Times v. True Briton."—In a morning paper of yesterday was given the following character of the True Briton: that 'it was the most vulgar, ignorant, and scurrilous journal ever published in Great Britain.' To the above assertion we assent; and to this account we add that the first proprietors abandoned it, and that it is the lowest now in circulation, and we submit the fact to the consideration of advertisers."

Erskine, who appeared for the plaintiff, admitted that the words copied from the Times, charging the paper with scurrility and ignorance, were not actionable, but argued that the concluding sentence was, as it affected the sale of the paper and the profits to be made from advertising. Lord Kenyon, C.J., who presided at the trial, assented to both propositions. Heriot v. Stuart was cited in a similar case, twenty years later, when Lord Ellenborough informed the jury that it was competent for one public writer to criticise another, exerting his talents in all the latitude of free communication belonging to a public writer; that the opinions and principles of a controversial writer were open to criticism and ridicule, in the same way as those of any other author, but that the privilege did not extend to calumnious remarks on the private character of the individual, for in this respect the editor of a newspaper enjoyed the rights of protection in common with every other subject.<sup>4</sup>

Ryan v. Wood<sup>5</sup> was a case where the critic was himself the complainant. Mr. Ryan was the musical critic of the Morning Herald and Standard newspapers, and the sub-editor of the Musical World. Occasionally he got up concerts on his own account, and for his own benefit, at which celebrated singers sang gratuitously. This aroused the suspicion of a paper called the Orchestra, in whose columns Mr. Ryan was spoken of as a "highwayman of the press;" the object of the article being to charge that the critic used his position to force singers to perform at his concerts without pay, they being afraid to refuse lest they should be subsequently attacked in his criticisms of musical performances. Mr. Ryan sued the proprietor of the Orchestra for this libel. On the trial, he testified that the artists who sang for him gratuitously did so because of personal friendship, and not for the reasons imputed by the defendant's paper. Mr. Sims Reeves, Madame Sainton-Dolby, Mr. Jules Benedict, Madame Lancia, and others of eminence in the profession, who had appeared at his concerts without pay, corroborated him, though some of them admitted that musical performances depended a great deal upon newspaper criticisms, and that they knew Mr. Ryan to be a critic. The defendant counsel called no witnesses, but insisted that the charge was true, although, on account of the reluctance of the parties to testify against the critic, he could not prove it. Cockburn, C.J., who presided, told the jury that the libel was of a most serious character. "To impute," he said, "to a public writer, who writes public criticisms upon the performances of others, that he is induced to give or to withhold praise, or to pronounce censure, from interested motives, is to make a charge of the greatest turpitude, for it is a charge of the basest and most dishonourable conduct. Those who undertake to enlighten public opinion and public taste in matters of literature or art, undertake a most important, a sacred trust. It is not only that the public look to them upon matters in which the public must be necessarily less informed or enlightened, for assistance in the formation of their judgment and their taste, but it is also this: that those who are struggling in the race of public competition, for public favour, as the means of their livelihood or success in life, have a right to expect that their performances shall be scanned by fair and impartial critics. There are few of those who constitute the public who are competent to form an opinion upon these subjects." The learned judge then went on to speak of the habit of the people to look to the press for the proper estimate of a new work of literature or art, and to be influenced thereby, and pointed out the importance of the criticisms being conducted with a sense of honour, impartiality, and justice. The remarks on Mr. Ryan went, he said, too far. If the article had stopped with a protest against the practice of a critic receiving gratuitous service from an artist, no complaint could have been heard in a court of law. "The writer has gone much farther. He has not satisfied himself with pointing out the bad consequences of the system which the plaintiff has adopted, but he has imputed to him that he does, in fact, mete out his criticism, favourable or unfavourable, according as these services are rendered to him or not; and that by these means, through the influence of his criticisms upon those artists who dread them if they do not submit to his demands, he is enabled to levy blackmail upon them, and thus to be a kind of highwayman upon the press. Such being the scope of the libel, it assumes a very serious character." Under these instructions the jury, after a brief consultation, gave the plaintiff £250 damages.

(3) Esp. 1796.

(4) Stuart v. Lovell, 2 Stark. 93 (1817).

(5) Frost. & Fin. 738.

In Diddia v. Swan,<sup>6</sup> in the King's Bench in 1793, the plaintiff was the proprietor of a place of public entertainment called the Sans Souci, where songs were sung which were supposed to have been written by him; the defendant was the editor of a newspaper. The libel for which the action was brought inculpated that the songs were written by another person; that on the first night of the performance there had been a very slim audience, composed mostly of "deadheads," from whom alone the applause came; that the music was of a very inferior kind. The plaintiff alleged that the songs, both as to words and music, were of his composition; that there was a very full audience; and that the applause was genuine, coming from persons in no way connected with him. Lord Kenyon stated the law thus: That the editor of a public newspaper may fairly and candidly comment on any place or species of public entertainment, but it must be done fairly and without malice or view to injure or prejudice the proprietor in the eyes of the public. That if so done, however severe the censure, the justice of it screens the editor from legal animadversion; but if it can be proved that the comment is unjust, is malevolent, or exceeding the bounds of fair opinion, that such is a libel, and therefore actionable. The verdict in this case is not reported. Lord Kenyon's language is open to the objection made by the reporter in Paris v. Levy,<sup>7</sup> that it is difficult to see what other object an editor can have in writing strictures upon a public entertainment, if it be not to "prejudice the proprietor in the eyes of the public" by inducing them to abstain from patronizing his exhibition.

An architect was the complainant in the King's Bench in 1827.<sup>8</sup> The alleged libel pretended to give an account of the principles of a new order of architecture, styled the Bæotian, which it is said had been invented by the plaintiff, and whom it called the Bæotian professor; it set out a number of absurd principles as the rules of the new order, from buildings in which the new order had been employed, and which it illustrated by examples—all of them being works of the plaintiff. Lord Tenterden, C.J., in summing up, used language similar to that which he employed, a year later, in Macleod v. Wakely. The publication, he told the jury, professed to be a criticism on the architectural works of the plaintiff. Such works, like literary productions, any man had a right to give his opinion on; and though his taste might be at fault, and his opinion might be unjust to the artist's merit, he was not punishable. An opinion may be expressed through the medium of ridicule. Here the censure was strong, but if they thought it was fair and reasonable, the defendant was entitled to a verdict, even though it was not correct. But if they considered it unfair and intemperate, and written with the intention and for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff in his profession, by imputing to him that he acted on absurd principles of art, then he ought to recover. The jury found for the defendant.

In the King's Bench in 1828,<sup>9</sup> Lord Tenterden, C.J., in giving to the jury a case in which a medical man, the editor of a periodical work called the London Medical and Physical Journal, had sued for a libel on him in the Lancet, said:—

"It has been stated on the part of the defendant that the matter contained in this publication relates to the plaintiff only as an author; but still there is no doubt that a man who is an author has a right to have his character protected, just the same as if he acted in any other capacity. However, notwithstanding that, whatever is fair and can be reasonably said of the works of authors or of themselves as connected with their works is not actionable unless it appear that, under the pretext of criticising the works, the defendant takes an opportunity of attacking the character of the author, and then it will be a libel. That there is in this publication a great deal of ridicule must be admitted by everyone, and I think that there appears also to be some rancour; still, if you think that what is said here was fairly called for by what the plaintiff had done as the editor of another publication, the defendant is entitled to a verdict, but if you should think the remarks were not fairly called for, you will find for the plaintiff."

The nature of the alleged libel does not appear in the report, but the jury gave the plaintiff £5 damages.

(To be continued.)

NOTES OF ENGLISH CASES.

[From the Law Journal.]

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

COURT OF APPEAL.

(Before JESSEL, M.R., BRET and COTTEN, L.JJ.)

In re ROPER. Ex parte BOLLAND.

July 27.—Bill of Sale—Statement of consideration—Explanation and attestation by solicitor—Affidavit on registration—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), ss. 8, 10, subs. 1, 2.

A bill of sale was expressed to be made in consideration of £2,000, "paid by the grantee to the grantor immediately before the execution of the deed." No part of the £2,000 was in fact paid, it being the balance of purchase-money owing in respect of a brewery which had been sold by the grantee to the grantor.

The execution of the bill of sale by the grantor was attested by a solicitor, and the attestation clause stated that before the execution the effect of the deed was explained by the solicitor to the grantor. The affidavit filed on registration was made by the attesting solicitor, and stated that the deponent was present and saw the grantor execute the deed, but did not state that the effect of the deed was explained to him by the solicitor before he executed it.

The trustee in liquidation of the grantor having applied to the Court to declare the bill of sale void as against him, on the grounds (1) that the consideration was not truly stated, and (2) that the affidavit ought to have stated that the effect of the deed was explained by the solicitor to the grantor before he executed it, the County Court judge held that the deed was void on the second ground. The CHIEF JUDGE, on appeal, reversed this decision, and held that both objections failed. The trustee appealed.

Horton Smith, Q.C., and Crump for the appellant.

Winslow, Q.C., and S. Taylor, for the respondent, were not called upon.

(6) 1 Esp. 28. (7) 9 C. B. (n. s.) 353.
(8) Soane v. Knight, Moo. & M. 74.

(9) Macleod v. Wakely, 3 Car. & P. 310.

Their LORDSHIPS considered that both points were covered by the decisions in Ex parte Challinor, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 476 (n); L.R. 16 Chanc. Div.; and Ex parte The National Mercantile Bank, 49 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 62; L.R. 15 Chanc. Div. 42. They, therefore, dismissed the appeal.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Goddard on Easements, 270.

Angus v. Dalton, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 689, extends to support from adjoining buildings as well as from adjacent lands; therefore, in the case of a building, the right to support may be acquired by twenty years' uninterrupted possession (Lemaitre v. Davis, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 173).

Seton (4th Edition), 787.

An increased maintenance for infants entitled to a certain given maintenance under a will was allowed out of income directed to be accumulated, the trustees being ordered to hold their interests as security to recoup any persons affected by the order (In re Colgan, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 180).

Theobald on Wills (2nd Edition), 470.

Gift of real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert and invest and stand possessed of investments in trust for all the testator's children equally at twenty-one or marriage, the share of any female to be for her separate use without power of anticipation. Held that the gift was of an income-producing fund, and that no part of the corpus of their share could be paid to married daughters (In Re Benton, Smith v. Smith (51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 183).

COURT PAPERS.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

- Baldwin, Thomas, of Michael street, in the county of the city of Waterford, ironmonger and general hardware merchant. July 21; Friday, August 25, and Tuesday, September 12. Henry Greene Kelly, solr.
- Canning, Randall John, and Henry Robert Canning, both of Belfast, in the county of Antrim, merchant tailors, trading in copartnership under the style and firm of Canning Brothers. July 25; Friday, August 25, and Tuesday, September 12. Armstrong & Johnston, solrs.
- Doherty, Patrick, of 68 William-street, Londonderry, in the county of Londonderry, builder. July 21; Friday, August 25, and Tuesday, September 12. Jehu Mathews, solr.
- Duffy, Peter, of Ballybay, in the county of Monaghan, shopkeeper. July 19; Friday, August 25, and Tuesday, September 12. W. D. Whelan and George C. Lett, solrs.
- Maguire, Patrick, of 92 and 149 Great Britain-street, in the city of Dublin, provision dealer. July 28; Tuesday, August 29, and Friday, September 15. Hamilton & Craig, solrs.
- M'Namara, Benjamin, of No. 211 Great Britain-street, in the city of Dublin, provision dealer. August 4; Tuesday, August 29, and Friday, September 15. Casey & Clay, solrs.
- M'Eneny, Bridget, of Kingscourt, in the county of Cavan, widow, grocer, hardware and general dealer. August 1; Friday, August 25, and Tuesday, September 12. Jehu Mathews, solr.
- Whelan, Michael, otherwise Michael Phelan, of Clapook, in the Queen's County, farmer. July 25; Friday, August 25, and Tuesday, September 12. Michael Larkin & Co., solrs.

On the 9th inst., Lawson, J., sentenced Fitzpatrick to five years' penal servitude for the recent attack on Mr. Recorder Falkiner.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	AUGUST
	Sat. 5	Mon. 7	Tues. 8	Wed. 9	Thur. 10	Fri. 11
Paid Government.
3 p c Consols .. .. .	—	—	99½	—	—	99½
3 p c Reduced .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
New 3 p c Stock .. .. .	—	—	98½	98½	99½	98½-9
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1838 } Traffic at .. .. .	—	—	—	—	102	—
3½ p c Jan. 1837 } Bk. of Irel. .. .. .	—	—	102½	—	100½	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland .. .. .	—	—	—	314½	314½	315
25 Hibernian Banking Co. .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and County (Ld'd.) .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and Westminster, W'd .. .. .	—	—	—	68	—	—
10 Do. New .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
34 Minster Bank (Limited) .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Nat. Prov. of England, lim. .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) .. .. .	—	—	23½	23½	23½	23½
10 National of Liverpool (Ld'd.) .. .. .	—	—	—	14½	—	—
25 Provincial Bank .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank .. .. .	—	—	29½	29½	—	—
25 Standard of B. &amp; A., W'd .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin .. .. .	—	—	—	100½	—	—
50 Dublin and Glasgow .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Peninsular and Oriental .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
Mines.
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (W'd) .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons. Gas .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
8 Do. do. New .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited .. .. .	CLOSED	HOLIDAY	—	—	—	—
4 Cannock &amp; Co. Lim'd, W'd .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 C. Dub. Brewery Co. (lim.) .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dub. (S'th) City Market Co. .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 National Discount, Ire., W'd .. .. .	CLOSED	HOLIDAY	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways .. .. .	—	—	—	10	10	—
10 Edinburgh Street Trams .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 L'pl Un'd Tram &amp; Bus L'd .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 N'th Metr. Tramway, Lond. .. .. .	—	—	—	18½	—	—
Railways.
100 Great Northern (Ireland) .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	114½
100 Midland Gt. Western .. .. .	—	—	83½	84	—	—
100 Waterford &amp; Cent. Ireland .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 D., W., &amp; W., 5 p c (1860) .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do. do. (1848) .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. N'th'n (Irind) g'd 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 4½ p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	107½	107½	—	—
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	103½	—	—
100 Watfd. &amp; Limerick, 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 4½ p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	102½
Debenture Stocks.
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	109
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	109½	109½	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4½ p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Kilkenny Junction, A, 5 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	105½	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterford &amp; Central 5 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterfd &amp; Limerick 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
Ballast Office Deb., £92 6s 2d, 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	92½	92½	—
Dub. &amp; Kingstown 4 p c .. .. .	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—8½ per cent., 23rd March, 1882.
Of Deposit—1 per cent., 23rd March, 1882.

Name Days—August 15th and 29th, 1882.
Account Days—August 16th and 30th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

The Stock Exchange and Brokers' Offices will be closed on Saturdays during the months of July and August.

Holloway's Pills.—With the darkening days and changing temperatures the digestion becomes impaired, the liver disordered, and the mind dependent unless the cause of the irregularity be expelled from the blood and body by an alterative like these Pills. They go directly to the source of the evil, thrust out all impurities from the circulation, reduce distempered organs to their natural state, and correct all defective and contaminated secretions. Such easy means of instituting health, strength, and cheerfulness should be in the possession of all whose stomachs are weak, whose minds are much harassed, or whose brains are overworked. Holloway's is a-sentially a blood tempering medicine, whereby its influence, reaching the remotest fibres of the frame, effects a universal good.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

BENNER—August 5, at Northumberland-road, the wife of Samuel Benner, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.
BYRNE—August 8, at Lower Leeson-street, the wife of John Onseley Byrne, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.
MACCARTHY CONNER—August 2, at Mountview-terrace, Sunday's Well, Cork, the wife of F. Mac Carthy Conner, Esq., of a daughter.
WALKER—August 6, at Rutland-square, the wife of Samuel Walker, Esq., Q.C., of a son.

MARRIAGES.

BEESTON and READ—August 4, at St. Peter's Church, by the Rev. E. W. Buckley, D.D., Joseph Lleyceley Beeston, L.K.Q.C.P., and L.R.C.S.I., eldest son of the late John L. Beeston, Esq., of Newcastle, New South Wales, to Anna Maria (Annie), youngest daughter of William Read, Esq., Grosvenor-road, Rathmines, solicitor.
GUERIN and RYAN—July 31, at the Redemptorist Church, Limerick, Edmund F. Guerin, Esq., solicitor, to Mary Teresa, second daughter of William Ryan, Esq., The Grange, County Limerick.
PETTIT and MURRAY—August 8, at the Oratory, Brompton, London, S.W., by the Rev. F. Antrobus, Joseph Pettit, Resident Medical Superintendent District Lunatic Asylum, Sligo, to Josephine Marie, eldest daughter of Edward Murray, Esq., Letterkenny, solicitor.

DEATHS.

CHAMBERLAIN—August 5, at her residence, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin, at an advanced age, Dorothea, last surviving daughter of the late Hon. Tankerville Chamberlain, one of the Justices of the Court of King's Bench in Ireland.
KANE—August 7, at Dungiwen, Aylesbury-road, Clare Mary, only daughter of Robert E. Kane, Esq., aged 5 years.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50, DENZILLE-STREET.

3-7

PUBLIC NOTICES:

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S. F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c., for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111 GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's).
 Late of WATERHOUSE & Co.'s

90

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE,
 Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection.

10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps.
 21, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID,

Curls the straightest and most ungovernable Hair, 3s. 6d., sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE,

To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His GREAT HAIR RESTORE,

3s. 6d.; it changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles.

As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 3s. 6d.; his DEPILATORY for removing Hair and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers. 7

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,
 the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.
 Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 113 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewarts & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

SOLICITORS' APPRENTICE PRELIMINARY.

TRINITY TERM, 1882—Messrs. Monks and Murphy. Former success—Messrs. Hudson, O'Reilly, Carton, Hynes, Broderick, O'Callaghan, Fitzpatrick, Maguire, Conan, Fisher, Kelly, Greene, Doran, &c. Class in operation for October.

JAMES A. POOLE, M.A.,

29 Harcourt-street.

99

PUBLIC NOTICES:

D. W. CARROLL,
 44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
 Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTEPAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
 Direct in every instance from the Makers.
 They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
 Comprising Bags, Purses, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
 With every article connected with Stationery,
 Are Sold much under usual charges.
 Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
 Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge.

73

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,
 No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.

J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones)
 Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees, Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.
 Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.

91

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES and INVESTIGATIONS

CONDUCTED BY

MR. THOMAS DEANE,

17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange),

Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.

Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.

References.

ESTABLISHED 1878.

167

STOKES BROTHERS,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
 22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
 DUBLIN.

298

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
 73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
 are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy, Partnership Accounts, &c., &c.

160

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS and SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK for STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens: it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each. 581

THE CHROMOGRAPH.
 INSTANTANEOUS REPRODUCTION

OF
MANUSCRIPTS, DOCUMENTS, PLANS, &c., &c.

Plans and Designs in various Colours obtained by One Single Operation.

The Chromograph is used WITHOUT either PRESS, INKING, or STEREO, and with ANY DESCRIPTION OF PAPER.

From eight to ten minutes suffice to obtain 40 to 50 copies. To take off the writing from the composition, it is sufficient to wash the apparatus with a soft sponge in clear water IMMEDIATELY after having taken the last impression.

PRICES OF CHROMOGRAPHS.

No. 1. Octavo Boxes, with a Bottle of Ink,	..	..	10/-
" 2. Quarto " " " "	..	..	18/-
" 3. Foolcap " " " "	..	..	28/-
" 4. Folio " " " "	..	..	34/-

Extra Bottles of Ink, 1/- per Bottle.
 Composition, 3/- per lb.

TERMS:—CASH WITH ORDER.

GERRARD BROTHERS,

37 STEPHEN'S-GREEN, DUBLIN. 59

THE CELEBRATED GUINEA LEEGER,
700 Pages, with Index.

UNSURPASSED AT THE PRICE.

JOHN FALCONER,
53 UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

IRISH LAND COMMISSION.

GENERAL RULE—LAND LAW (IRELAND) ACT, 1881.

Tuesday, the 8th day of August, 1882.

It is this day ordered by the Irish Land Commission that the Notice of Application to the Court by either Landlord or Tenant to fix a specified value of the tenancy, pursuant to Form No 30, shall be served not only on the opposite party but on the Secretary of the Land Commission or the Clerk of the Peace, as the case may be.

[Seal of the Irish Land Commission.]

109

IRISH LAND COMMISSION.

NOTICE.

The Land Commissioners intend to commence hearing Appeals about the 20th October.

The practice of the Court as to costs of appeals followed during the first judicial year, on account of the novelty of the procedure, will cease, and in cases heard after the commencement of the new sittings costs will be awarded and dealt with as to the Court may seem just.

(By Order),

DENIS GODLEY.

24 Upper Merrion-street, Dublin,
8th August, 1882.

110

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS.

(Royal Route via Crinan and Caledonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Lochawe, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Stornoway, &c. Official Guide, 8d.; Illustrated, 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Fares free, at CARSON BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post from the owner, DAVID MACBRATNE, 119 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

Printed and Published by the Proprietor, JOHN FALCONER, every Saturday, at 53, Upper Sackville-street, in the Parish of St. Thoma and City of Dublin.—Saturday, August 12, 1882.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FARMHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

62

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PERCY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 19, 1882.

No. 812

RIGHT TO COSTS OUT OF PARTICULAR ESTATE OR FUND IN LITIGATION.—II

As a general rule, trustees and executors, as between them and their cestuis que trust, are entitled to their costs from the estate, and usually as between solicitor and client, and all charges and expenses properly incurred are also allowed them: Morg. & D. 290. "It is a general principle," observed Bradley, J., in Greenough's case (already cited), "that a trust estate must bear the expenses of its administration. It is also established by sufficient authority, that where one of any parties having a common interest in a trust fund, at his own expense takes proper proceedings to save it from destruction and restore it to the purposes of the trust, he is entitled to reimbursement, either out of the fund itself, or by proportional contribution from those who accept the benefit of his efforts." And in that case (14 Central L. J. 469), where a large number of bonds issued by a corporation were secured by a trust fund, which was being wasted and misapplied by the trustees, or which they refused or neglected to apply to the payment of the bonds, and a bondholder, in good faith, filed a bill to secure the due application of the fund, and succeeded in bringing it under the control of the court for the common benefit of the bondholders, it was held that the litigant bondholder was entitled to have his costs and necessary expenses of the litigation (as between solicitor and client) paid out of the fund before its distribution—to make them a charge upon the fund being the most equitable way of securing contribution. So, in proceedings for restoring property to the uses of a charity, which had been unjustly divested therefrom, Lord Cowper, C., allowed costs to the relators out of the improved rents which they received for the charity, "for that they had been serviceable to the charity, by easing them of the £620 debt which was claimed against them:" Att.-Gen. v. The Brewers' Co., 16 Wms. 376; and so, see Att.-Gen. v. Kerr, 4 Beav. 297; Att.-Gen. v. Old South Society, 13 Allen 474 (Amer.); Seton, Decrees, 566. The same rule is applied to creditor's suits, where a fund has been realized by the plaintiff's diligence: Stanton v. Hatfield, 1 Keen, 358; Thompson v. Cooper, 2 Coll. 87; Goldsmith v. Russell, 5 D. M. & G. 556; Tootal v. Spicer, 4 Sim. 510; Larkin v. Paxton, 2 Myl. & K. 320; Barber v. Wardle, ib. 818; Sutton v. Doggett, 3 Beav. 9; Wedgwood v. Adams, 8 ib. 103, 104, n.; Adames v. Hallett, L. R. 6 Eq. 473. But, while a plaintiff who institutes a suit for the benefit of others gets a charge on the fund for his costs, he does not necessarily get the costs in priority to a defendant—the rule not being correctly stated in Daniell, Ch., 4th ed., 1306: see In re Middleton (51 L. J. Ch. 273), decided by the Court of Appeal in February last. The rule that a party who recovers a fund for the common benefit of creditors, is entitled to have his costs and expenses paid out of the fund, also prevails in bankruptcy cases: Worrall v. Harford, 8 Ves. 4; Re Williams, 2 Bank. Reg. 28 (Amer.). But, in Ex parte Russell, reported in last month's issue of the Law Journal (51 Ch. 521), where the Court of Appeal, reversing the decision of Bacon, C.J., and affirming that of the County Court judge, set aside a voluntary settlement as void as against the settlor's trustee in liquidation, it was held that the trustees of the settlement should bear all the costs of both appeals. "It is a hard case on the trustees," observed Jessel, M.R., "but, on the other hand, they are asking for costs out of other people's property. They ought to have been satisfied with the decision of the County Court judge. It is a hard case, but the result will be this, that a man will be very slow to accept the trusts of a voluntary settlement." But, see Rashley v. Masters, 1 Ves. jun. 205; In re Dickson, 2 New Zealand Jur. N. S. 207. In M'Cormick v. Patten (Ir. R. 5 Eq. 291), it was held that, although a will contained a specific bequest in trust, inter alia, to pay the testator's "just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses," yet the costs of a suit, rendered necessary by an ambiguity in the will, should be borne by the assets generally. So, in Re Noble's Trusts (ib. 140), costs were given out of a fund lodged under the Trustee Relief Act to unsuccessful claimants, where the question regarding its distribution arose on an ambiguity in a will. But see, in reference to an improper lodgment of money under the Act, In re Fortune's Trusts (Ir. R. 4 Eq. 351); Re Knight's Trusts, 27 Beav. 45; Lewin, Trusts, 859; Eiffe, Jud. Act, 121; and as to where a petition was not presented by the petitioners bonâ fide as executors, but as devisees under the will in question, see In re Willis's Estate, 8 Ir. L. T. Rep. 121. Again, in Courtney v. Rumley (Ir. R. 6 Eq. 99), it was held that a trustee is entitled to be reimbursed out of the trust property all the charges and expenses incurred in the execution of the trust, and in this the court will always deal liberally with a trustee acting bonâ fide; that, where the costs or expenses claimed have been incurred through the misconduct or negligence of the trustee, he will not be allowed them; but, that the fact of his having been unsuccessful in litigation, either as plaintiff or defendant, will not, in the absence of misconduct, disentitle him to be reimbursed his costs. And though, as we have seen, the right of trustees, mortgagees, &c., to costs out of the estate has been preserved under the Jud. Act, that right was always and is still liable to be defeated by reason of misconduct: Re Hoskin's Trusts, 6 Ch. Div. 261; Thighington v. Grant, 1 Ph. C. C. 600; Rose v. Sharrod, 11 W. R. 356; Re Chennell, 8 Ch. Div. 492; Eiffe, Jud. Act, 121. But, as Cotton, L.J., remarked in Turner v. Hancock, reported in the Law Times of the 29th ult. (46 L. T. N. S. 750), as between a trustee and his cestuis que trust, the court can only deprive him of his costs if he has done something contrary to the contract he undertook to perform by becoming a trustee.

In Re Keely's Trusts, on the 26th ult., upon the hearing of a petition for the appointment of new trustees of a deed of settlement, executed in 1879, it appeared that by the deed in question Mr. James Keely (one of the petitioners) put in settlement a sum of £600 invested in Bank of Ireland Stock, which he assigned to trustees in trust for himself for life, and after his death for Mrs. Keely and her daughters (the other petitioners). The trustees named in the deed were the Rev. Francis J. Maguire, of Arran-quay Catholic Church, and Mr. Bartholomew Keely, and the money was accordingly transferred to their names in the books in the Bank of Ireland. Shortly after the execution of the settlement Mr. Bartholomew Keely, one of the trustees, died; and it appeared that the Rev. Mr. Maguire had never assented to act as trustee, that he had not signed the deed, and declined to act in the matter at all, as he stated that to mix himself up in a transaction of the kind was contrary to the rules of the order of which he was a member. New trustees were then nominated, but the Rev. Mr. Maguire declined to sign the deed transferring the fund to their names, as to do so would be equally contrary to the rules of his order. An action was brought to compel him to sign the transfer of the fund, and the matter having been debated before the Vice-Chancellor, his lordship made an order directing the Rev. Mr. Maguire to transfer the fund, and condemning him in the costs of the suit. The Rev. Mr. Maguire, however, was advised that the Vice-Chancellor was wrong, and he brought an appeal, and, after a full argument, the Appellate Court disapproved of the Vice-Chancellor's decision, holding that Mr. Maguire not having signed the deed, and never having acted in the trusts, was not a trustee at all and could not be compelled to sign the transfer, and they accordingly reversed the decree of the Vice-Chancellor with costs. Sir E. Sullivan, M.R., said: "A most lamentable mistake was made in this case. Here was a small fund, worth not quite £600, and enormous costs have been incurred in a most groundless and untenable proceeding, whereby it was sought to make a man a trustee who never had signed the deed and never acted as trustee good, bad, or indifferent. No man could be compelled to act as a trustee unless he had done some act or consented to act in the trusts. It is one of the most shocking cases I ever heard of—enormous costs incurred in a small case of this kind. The Rev. Mr. Maguire was perfectly right in refusing to transfer the money, and it was a monstrous thing to seek to compel him to act under the circumstances. It would be against all reason and equity that the costs of this unnecessary litigation should fall on the trust estate. I shall take good care that the costs shall not be paid out of the trust fund. I shall make it part of my order that no part of the costs of the suit, either in the Vice-Chancellor's Court or in the Court of Appeal, shall be paid out of the trust money, and I shall direct a copy of my order to be served on the new trustees." An order was made accordingly, appointing the new trustees, as applied for, appending to it a declaration that the costs of the litigation should not be payable out of the fund.

LOCAL AND STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES.

At the Limerick petty sessions, on the 11th inst., before the mayor, Mr. J. B. Irwin, R.M.; Dr. O'Shaughnessy, Mr. Ambrose Hall, and Mr. Stephen Hastings, Sub-Inspector Wilton applied to have the case of John O'Dea against John M'Mahon and James Carroll for intimidation referred for trial before two resident magistrates under the Prevention of Crimes Act.

Mr. HALL, J.P., contended that the case should have been brought under the "Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act," as it was an ordinary trade dispute. Prosecutions of that character had been heard before the magistrates of that court, and he saw no reason for the exceptional application made by Sub-Inspector Wilton. He did not know what the opinion of the other magistrates was, but he was prepared to hold to his own, and, if necessary, ask that the point should be decided by a superior court. He was quite willing to accept the responsibility of refusing the application on these grounds for the present. The only object that he saw for making the application was perhaps to justify the curfew clause of the Crimes Act which was being put into operation in the city of Limerick. The case could, of course, be heard before two resident magistrates, but it could also be tried before the ordinary magistrates. He for one would not allow his position as a magistrate on that bench to be abrogated by temporary resident magistrates.

Sub-Inspector PHILLIPS denied that any imputation had been cast upon the legal capacity of the local magistrates to try the case. It was purely a matter of form, the case having been in the first instance dealt with by Mr. Hamilton, R.M., under the Crimes Act, and it was owing to a mistake that it appeared in the petty sessions book. A special court was appointed for 11 o'clock on the following day to try the case.

Mr. HALL said he did not care what the opinion of Mr. Hamilton or any other temporary resident magistrate was. He had read the Act carefully, and presumed to be as well acquainted with its various clauses as Mr. Hamilton. He would say that the appointment of temporary resident magistrates had materially interfered with the intelligent action of the recognised permanent resident magistrates of the country.

Sub-Inspector CARLTON said he would not discuss that question with Mr. Hall as he thought it totally irrelevant to the issue.

Mr. HALL.—I know that, but when you refer to the opinion of a resident magistrate as an authority in this case, I am forced to say that I do not hold my opinion inferior to his. Why, the other day, a man who happened to be a tea planter, and who was on vacation, was appointed a resident magistrate.

Dr. O'SHAUGHNESSY.—I know the gentleman Mr. Hall refers to, and I must say he is quite wrong. The Lord Lieutenant never made a better choice, and I am happy to say that the Lord Lieutenant has made, in the newly appointed resident magistrates in Ireland, admirable selections.

MAYOR.—As chairman of this court I must object to this discussion.

Mr. HALL.—Then, Dr. O'Shaughnessy, you are in the secret, too.

MAYOR.—I really must ask that this discussion shall not proceed.

Mr. HALL.—I think it is better it should drop, because I can enlighten Dr. O'Shaughnessy.

Mr. IRWIN, R.M.—I must say this case is not one for this court. It is one entirely for the two resident magistrates.

The MAYOR declined to express any individual opinion, but stated that the majority of the bench decided to hear the case.

The prosecution was proceeded with, and the evidence went to show that the prosecutor, while at work as a baker, was threatened by the defendants, who are also bakers, with bodily harm if he did not quit his employment, as he was violating the regulations of the society. He refused at first to obey the mandate, but subsequently left the employment as he was afraid of being injured. The accused were returned for trial at the quarter sessions.

LEGAL AND LAY SUB-COMMISSIONERS.

At the Portadown Sub-Commission on the 11th inst., before Messrs. Romney Foley, Q.C.; Davidson and Meek, an extraordinary incident occurred in the case of Count de Salis, landlord; Wm. John Tally, tenant. It was contended by counsel for the landlord that the tenant was a leaseholder, and therefore outside the Act. The tenant in 1856 purchased 77 acres of land, held under lease, which has not yet expired, and a few years afterwards he purchased 10 acres of land, held under a yearly tenancy, from the same landlord. Since then the one rent receipt had been given to the tenant for the amount of the rent of the two holdings, without distinguishing the leasehold. Counsel for the tenant submitted that the landlord by this action had surrendered the lease, and Mr. Foley decided in favour of the tenant's contention. Mr. Davidson said that it was monstrous that a leaseholder should thus be included in the Act, and he refused to adjudicate or inspect the farm, and left the court.

Mr. MANK said that, expressing his own opinion, he probably agreed with Mr. Davidson, but he would be probably guided in legal matters by Mr. Foley. The case could not be proceeded with as there was not a full number of commissioners present, and the registrar was sent to represent the position to Mr. Davidson, who again took his seat, but announced his determination not to interfere in the case.

Mr. ATKINSON, solicitor for Count de Salis, held that under the circumstances the Commissioners could not adjudicate, and refused to produce evidence.

An appeal on behalf of the landlord will be lodged.

THE LICENSING ACTS.

A very important question in connexion with appeals under the Licensing Act arose in a recent case before Mr. Phillips, the stipendiary magistrate at West Ham. By the Licensing Act, 1872 (85 & 86 Vict., c. 94), sect. 52, it is provided that, "if any person feels aggrieved by any order or conviction made by a court of summary jurisdiction, the person so aggrieved may appeal therefrom, subject to the conditions and regulations following:—(1) The appeal shall be made to the next court of quarter sessions for the county or place in which the cause of appeal has arisen, holden not less than fifteen days after the decision of the court from which the appeal is made. (2) The appellant shall within seven days after the cause of appeal has arisen give notice to the other party, and to the court of summary jurisdiction, of his intention to appeal, and of the ground thereof. (3) The appellant immediately after such notice shall enter into a recognisance before a justice of the peace, with two sufficient sureties, conditioned personally to try such appeal, and to abide the judgment of the court thereon, and to pay such costs as may be awarded by the court, or shall give such other security, by deposit of money or otherwise, as the justice may allow." Now it has been found in practice impossible to comply with the provisions of the Act, so far as it relates to taking the recognisances immediately after giving notice of appeal. To do so would frequently, indeed invariably, stop the regular business of the court, and be productive of great inconvenience. The usual practice in the metropolitan police courts is for the appellant to attend with his sureties when giving notice of appeal, and the recognisances are taken either at the adjournment of the court or on a day arranged for the convenience of all parties. In the case which came before Mr. Phillips, which was an appeal from a conviction of one Abrey, for selling beer on the premises, he only having an "off" licence, notice of appeal was duly given within the seven days named in the statute, but the appellant did not attend with his sureties to enter into a recognisance; but two or three days afterwards his solicitor wrote a letter to the magistrate stating Mr. Abrey had given notice of appeal, and that he was prepared to attend at any time which the magistrate might fix, and enter into a recognisance with his sureties to try the appeal. To this letter no reply whatever was sent. The appellant waited a week and then attended before Mr. Phillips, who refused to take the recognisance, stating the appellant was too late.

Now, upon this case two important questions arise: (a) What is the meaning of the expression "immediately after such notice," in sect. 52, sub-sect. 3? (b) Has the magistrate any discretion as to whether he shall take the recognisance of the appellant and his sureties, or is it a purely ministerial act save so far as fixing the amount of the recognisance is concerned? In other words, is it for the magistrate to construe the meaning to be attached to the word "immediately," or is it a question of fact to be determined by the Court of Quarter Sessions? As to the first point, it is quite clear from the decision of the Queen's Bench in Reg. v. Justices of Berkshire (L. Rep. 4 Q. B. Div. 469; 48 L. J. 187, M. C.; 48 J. P. 607) that the word "immediately" must not be construed strictly. This case came before the court by way of mandamus. It appeared upon affidavits that on the 4th March, 1879, the appellant was convicted by a justice under the above statute for unlawfully suffering gaming to be carried on on his licensed premises. The requisite notices of appeal were served on Monday, the 10th March, but the recognisance was not entered into until Friday, the 14th March. At the hearing of the appeal on the 8th April, objection was taken that the recognisance was not entered into within the prescribed time, and, no explanation of the delay being afforded, the sessions declined to hear the appeal. Chief Justice Cockburn said:—"I think this rule must be discharged. The question is, whether the sessions were right in holding that the regulations in 85 & 86 Vict., c. 94, s. 52, sub-sect. 3, as to entering into a recognisance 'immediately' after notice of appeal had been complied with. The notice was given in due time, but the appellant did not enter in the recognisance until four days afterwards. Did this satisfy the words of the statute? The question is substantially one of fact. It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to what is the meaning of the word 'immediately' in all cases. The words 'forthwith' and 'immediately' have the same meaning. They are stronger than the expression 'within a reasonable time,' and imply prompt, vigorous action, without any delay; and whether there has been such action is a question of fact, having regard to the circumstances of the particular case. Who is to decide that question? Undoubtedly the sessions, and unless we can clearly see that they have gone wrong and put some construction on the word 'immediately' which it will not bear, their decision must prevail. The appellant seeks to bring before the court materials which did not come before the sessions. I think we have no different power to receive evidence on the point before the court than in the case of an ordinary appeal from sessions; and this being the case, we ought not, in the exercise of our discretion, to review upon fresh facts the decision of the justices."

The case is more fully reported in the Justice of the Peace. The Lord Chief Justice does not say four days' delay was sufficient to deprive the appellant of his remedy, but says, "I cannot say affirmatively it was acting promptly and expeditiously;" and Mr. Justice Mellor adds, "This question was one for the justices to decide."

This brings us to the second point—viz., whether the taking of the recognisance is a purely ministerial act on the part of the justice, save in so far as fixing the amount is concerned. It must not be thought that the matter is settled by the dictum of Mr. Justice Mellor, "This question was one for the justices (that is in quarter sessions) to decide," because the learned judge was clearly only speaking in reference to the matter before the court, and all that his words imply is, that as between the Queen's Bench Division and the Court of Quarter Sessions, the question was one of fact which it was for the latter to determine. Our own opinion is, that the taking of the recognisances by the justice is not a purely ministerial act, but that when application is made at a time subsequent to that at which notice of appeal is given, the justice can exercise a judicial discretion; we think, however, he is bound to hear and determine the matter if proper application is made to him upon affidavit, and if he declines to do so, we entertain very little doubt that a mandamus would be granted.

At the same time the question is by no means free from doubt, and as it is one of very great importance, we trust that before long it will be authoritatively determined by the Queen's Bench Division.—Law Times.

A PROULAR system of mortgaging farms is used in Switzerland. A farmer may borrow of a dozen men successively, the simple record in an official book showing their order. If he fails to pay, a successor is found for him by beginning at the bottom of the list of debtors, and calling on each in his order to assume all the debts and manage the farm, or step aside and lose his claim.

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO ANALYSE.

On more than one occasion the High Court has recently been called upon to consider the provisions contained in the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. (38 & 39 Vict., c. 63), and the Amendment Act, 1879, (42 & 43 Vict., c. 30, s. 7), relating to the notification required to be given before proceedings can be taken thereunder. The 14th section of the former statute enacts that "the person purchasing any article with the intention of submitting the same to analysis, shall, after the completion of the purchase, forthwith notify to the seller or his agent, selling the article, his intention to have the same analysed by the public analyst, and shall offer the article into three parts to be then and there separated, and each part to be marked and sealed or fastened up in such a manner as its nature will permit, and shall, if required to do so, proceed accordingly, and shall deliver one of the parts to the seller or his agent." In the recent case of Parsons v. The Birmingham Dairy Company, 9 Q. B. D. 172, it was contended that these provisions were only applicable to the purchase of such an article by one of the public officers named in the 13th section of the Act of 1875, and not to a purchase by a private individual. The facts in the case were briefly as follows:—The appellant, a farmer, had contracted with the respondents to supply them with a certain quantity of milk daily. One day a portion of the milk was, immediately on its arrival at the respondents' shop, taken out of the can and placed in a tumbler on a shelf in the shop. It remained there for two days, after which it was forwarded to the borough analyst. When analysed, the milk was found to contain 33 per cent of water. The certificate to that effect of the borough analyst was produced at the hearing of the summons. The magistrate in spite of no notification having been given to the vendor or his agent of any intention to have the milk analysed convicted the appellant, but at the same time stated a case for the opinion of the High Court. After argument the Queen's Bench Division quashed the conviction on the ground that the provisions of the statute as to the notification apply equally to a purchase by a private person as to a purchase by the public officer. Field, J., in the course of his judgment thus deals with the question: "The Legislature has imposed heavy liabilities upon the seller of adulterated articles, but has at the same time taken precautions that he shall be protected against the contingency of the articles said to be adulterated being tampered with after they have left his possession. I think the intention of the Act is to strike at the moment of time at which the seller parts with the article. This was clearly the intention of the Act of 1875, though the Amendment Act of 1879 still further affects the liability of the seller by enacting with respect to milk that a sample may be procured by an officer, inspector, or constable during the course of delivery to the purchaser or consignee in pursuance of the contract of sale." Accordingly it may now be laid down as settled law that it is a condition precedent to the right, whether of a public officer or private person, to take proceedings for the recovery of a penalty under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 and 1879, that he should have given to the vendor the prescribed notification. To this general rule there is, however, one exception; for the notification has been held not to be necessary where milk in course of delivery is seized by the public officer by virtue of the powers conferred on him by the Amendment Act of 1879 (Rouch v. Hall, 6 Q. B. D. 17).

Another recent case bearing on the subject, may be briefly referred to, viz., Barnes v. Chipp, 8 Ex. D. 176. There, a police constable, acting under the orders of the inspector of weights and measures, bought gin from the barmaid of an inn with the intention of submitting it to analysis. He then proceeded to inform her that he was a police constable, and that he had purchased the gin for the purpose of analysis. But he omitted to add that the analysis was to be made "by the public analyst."

Subsequently the inspector of weights and measures directed the gin so purchased to be analysed by the public analyst, who gave his certificate that the gin was diluted. The inn-keeper was accordingly prosecuted and convicted by the justices under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. On the case subsequently coming before the Exchequer Division, by way of a case stated, their lordships (Kelly, C.B., and Pollock, B.) quashed the conviction on the ground that the 14th section of the statute requires the purchaser to forthwith notify to the seller or his agent who actually sells the article, his intention to have the same analysed by the public analyst. The court held, as in the case of Parsons v. The Birmingham Dairy Company, that the notification is a condition precedent to a prosecution under the statute; and that in the case under review the omission on the part of the police constable to add that the analysis was to be made by the public analyst was fatal to the conviction being maintained.

From the authorities cited above, the general rule may be deduced that it is a condition precedent to proceedings under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 and 1879, that the notification not only of the intention to analyse the article sold but also of the intention to submit the case to the public analyst must be forthwith after the purchase given to the vendor.—Justice of the Peace.

THE ADULTERATION ACT.

Mr. Hannay, at the Worship-street Police Court, has stringently applied the stringent decision in Barnes v. Chipp, 47 Law J. Rep. M. C. 85, under the Adulteration Act. That decision was to the effect that a due observance of the forms prescribed in buying for analysis is a condition precedent to a conviction for adulteration, and that to tell the seller that the purchase is "for analysis," and not to add "by the public analyst," is not a due observance of those forms. Mr. Hannay was bound by the decision on the first point; but the second point is, in our opinion, a question of fact. The words "public analyst" are not an "Abracadabra" which must be repeated. "Parish analyst" would do as well; and if the seller knew the name of the public analyst, would not it be enough for the buyer to mention his name? Moreover, it would be very material to know whether the seller knew that the buyer was the sanitary inspector, and was not buying or analysing for private purposes. To apply these considerations, if "the analyst" does not mean the public analyst, what does it mean? What other analyst par excellence is there? Mr. Hannay is not satisfied with Barnes v. Chipp. Others were in the same frame of mind at the time of its decision. The Act of Parliament does not expressly make the analysis a condition precedent to a prosecution; still less does it make all the forms preliminary to the analysis conditions precedent. The certificate of the analyst is prima facie evidence of the ingredients of the thing analysed; and it is far from improbable that the Legislature intended the magistrate to decide in favour of the defendant if there was any doubt as to the fairness of the analysis, and not to make all the forms prescribed conditions precedent to the conviction. It is another question, and one not raised, whether they are conditions precedent to the admissibility of the certificate in evidence. In certain circumstances the thing analysed may be sent by registered letter to the analyst. Would the conviction be bad if it came by ordinary post, without the mystic blue lines across it?—Law Journal.

THE LAW OF DISTRESS.

The report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the Law of Distress is a document of considerable interest, notwithstanding that the committee have not seen fit to approve the heroic remedy suggested by Mr. James Howard, and to recommend the entire abolition of the right of distress. The report is a paper of some length, based on Mr. Salt's draft. It sets out the antiquity of the law of distress, and how it grew out of a feudal custom gradually defined and regulated by statute, until it has at last come to rest upon a mass of case law and a great number of Acts of Parliament. The points to which the evidence was addressed are stated, the arguments telling for and against the existence of a law of distress are set out, and the committee then proceed to recommend that the right of distraint should be restricted to one year's rent, the right only to be exercised within six months after the rent has become due; that the limit of distress as to agisted stock should be the consideration payable to the farmer who takes it in; that provision should be made for the protection of machinery not the property of the tenant, and for the exemption of breeding animals not belonging to him; that the limit of £20 distress under 57 Geo. 3, c. 93, should be raised to £50; and other suggestions are made with the object of diminishing the expenses of this process, described as "the heavy and unnecessary costs incident to the processes of distress and the sale of effects." There is also an expression of opinion in the body of the report that, if the law of distress is to be maintained, the question of the consolidation of the numerous and complicated statutes relating to it ought not to be forgotten. It is obvious at once that this is not a report with which anyone will quarrel on account of the violent and unprecedented character of its recommendations; it is rather to be feared that its recommendations, if carried into effect, would altogether fail to satisfy the class for whose benefit they are designed, and it is worthy of note that in his opposition to the moderate character of the report Mr. Howard generally had the support of the tenant-farmer members of the committee. At the same time there is no doubt that the amendments in the law which are proposed would be of substantial benefit. As the case stands between landlord on the one side and tenant on the other, the right of distress has its advantages as well as its disadvantages, and if it were so limited as to give the landlord the position of a first mortgagee under a mortgage implied by law, there would be nothing unfair in it. One point, however, which always strikes those who are considering the matter is the way in which the right of distress affects third parties, and in this respect the proposal of the committee appears to be very reasonable, amounting, in effect, to this, that the landlord should be able to recover from the owner of property on the land not belonging to the tenant so much as, and no more than, they are liable to pay to the tenant in respect thereof. The matter would thus be reduced to an attachment by a creditor of a debt owing to his debtor by a third party.—Law Times.

THE LAW OF STRIKES.

The best that can be said of trades unions in their most favourable aspect, and when not executing the ostensible objects of their creation, is that they are barely justifiable; but as they exist practically, they are hurtful and pernicious, not only to the public at large, but to the best interests of their own members. No right is dearer to the public interest or more important to be understood and enforced just now, than the right of government to keep within proper restraints this insidious enemy to personal rights. It is the outgrowth of seeds of discontent and rebellion transplanted here from foreign soil, and is not native to America.

Is there no law that forbids dissatisfied workmen from organising and co-operating in schemes and threats to prevent others from working who are not dissatisfied? If not, then such a law cannot be enacted too soon. Of course if actual violence is used, then it becomes a crime under existing laws; but are not combinations, schemes and plans accompanied by threats when they have the effect to deter others from work, also unlawful? Several of the States have statutes broad enough to cover almost every conceivable case of the kind, but others unfortunately have not, and those that have, do not enforce them. In the State of New York the language of the statute is "if two or more persons conspire to commit any act injurious to trade or commerce" they are punishable for a misdemeanour. An act may be punishable when committed by such an organisation that would not be if done by any individual; and if the plan embraces the burning of a building or any violence to a person, it will be punishable, even though no overt act is committed. Many of the States have similar statutes, and in some the common law is made to cover substantially the same ground. A case has been recently decided in New Jersey in which the court takes the broad ground that "combinations of workmen to prevent others from working who wish to do so are criminal." Conceding the right of workmen to combine for the purpose of peaceably advancing a rate of wages, there can be no question but what the law should forbid associations from compelling employees or workmen not in the association to conform to their prescribed rates.

An almost universal element in strikes, and one which precludes every other hypothesis than that they are planned in a spirit of vindictiveness and malice, is that the time selected for them is the one when it will do their employers the most possible harm. As, for instance, the workmen in an iron furnace agree to strike just at a time when the molten metal is ready for casting, or the compositors on a newspaper at an hour too late to supply their places in time for the next issue, or railroad employees leaving their trains of freight and passengers in the most inconvenient places, and selecting the most crowded seasons for their strikes. Now can the law overlook the malice and the intentional mischief of such a strike? Is it not a crime against the public to have commerce, provisions, mails and travel out of without a moment's warning by these organisations? It has been even held that a simple refusal to work was an offence, but this doctrine has been discarded, and it is now universally conceded to be the right of a dissatisfied person to quit, and even where workmen club together and unite upon a rate of wages, if carried out in good faith and without attempt at coercion, either amongst themselves or of others not in the organization, it has been held by some courts that they commit no crime, unless as before stated their strike is so timed as to be evidently their purpose to do either the public or some individual a malicious injury. This has been pretty generally held to be the law, but just recently (May 17, 1882, before Sir R. Harrington, Bart., in the Bromsgrove County Court, in England, in the case of Stokes v. Sanders), the judge laid down a much stronger doctrine. This was an action upon a promissory note given for money loaned to strikers to live on while engaged in a strike, and one of the defences set up was that the money was loaned for an unlawful purpose. The judge, in rendering the opinion, among other things said, "The lenders entered into the contract with the express and avowed purpose of supporting a strike, and if that purpose be an illegal one, there can be no doubt, I think, that the lenders cannot recover. Was then that purpose an illegal one? Notwithstanding the view expressed by the present President of the Probate Division of the High Court of Justice, and the late Mr. Justice Hayes in the case of Farber v. Close, L. R. 4 Q. B., 602, as to the extent to which strikes are illegal, I cannot in this inferior court take the responsibility of holding otherwise than that a combination of workmen to refuse to work, entered into for the purpose of compelling their masters to raise the rate of wages, is, at common law, an illegal combination, as being in restraint of trade. See L. R., 2 Q. B., 153. And even if I thought that the question was open, my own opinion is very strong, that such a combination, which has necessarily the effect of interfering with the freedom of contract between individuals, is in restraint of trade."—American Law Magazine.

SINCE the days of the Hon. Stuart Wortley, observes the Law Times, it cannot be said that any Recorder has been found to possess any great fund of legal knowledge, and the present Recorder certainly does not form any exception to the rule.

CETEWAYO.

The visit of Cetewayo to England has given rise to some curious expressions of opinion as to the effect of his landing in England upon the right to detain him in the Cape Colony after his return. We confess that we cannot see what possible effect it should have upon his status. That the landing of a prisoner of war upon neutral territory sets him free is an accepted principle of international law (Hall on Neutrals, p. 73); but this principle cannot apply, unless it can be made out that Cetewayo was a prisoner of war captured by the Cape Government in a war in which England was neutral. He was and is a prisoner of war to England, captured by the Imperial troops, and the right to detain him cannot in any way be affected by his having been committed to, or taken out of the custody of, a colonial government. The question whether, being a prisoner of war, he could, according to the present rules of international law, properly be detained at all after the war was over, is a far more arguable one. His detention would probably be justified upon the grounds which were put forward in defence of Napoleon (Parl. Debates, 33, 1012, 1059.): (1) Necessity; (2) that the right to the release of prisoners of war belongs to the nation of which the prisoner is subject. The French nation, in the case of Napoleon, would not claim such release; in the present case there is clearly no Zulu government capable of claiming it. It is too often forgotten in cases of this kind that all the doctrines of modern international law pre-suppose an established government on each side capable of carrying out mutual obligations; they cannot without some modification be applied to relations with savage or semi-savage tribes.—Law Times.

LEGAL EXPENSE.

A correspondent writes as follows to the Law Journal:—"No reform of legal expense will be thorough unless it strikes at certain matters with which, with all respect to the judges, I don't think them quite strong enough to deal. One of the first reforms must be a change in the costs allowed to counsel. Let every party employ as many counsel as he likes, but don't let him inflict the cost of more than one on his opponent. Let him go to counsel for advice as often as he likes, but don't let the costs of petty consultations fall on his unsuccessful opponent. Let the solicitor act as junior counsel; this will save great expense. In taxing costs, let the masters pay regard to common sense; at present we see £1,500 costs piled up and allowed in a small action, lasting from beginning to end only three months; on the other, we may see the greatest ability displayed by a solicitor in conducting and shortening proceedings, and, as a penalty, he is practically fined by the taxing-master.

"We need abler men as masters of the Courts—men who know the value of time—who will not be always adjourning or wasting months over details that are not worth the delay."

PARTICULARS AND CONDITIONS OF SALE.

(Continued from page 378, ante.)

We have now completed our draft of conditions, and append a form of memorandum. We are much obliged to some of our readers for suggestions, and we shall delay publishing our settled form for some little time; so our subscribers will be able to peruse the draft conditions as a whole, and will have full opportunity of making further suggestions or remarks.

The Memorandum of Agreement.

This will be printed on the same sheet as the conditions, and must be so worded as to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Both parties should be specified, either by their own names or by some unmistakably clear reference. It is not sufficient to call the vendor "the vendor": (Thomas v. Brown, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 237; L. Rep. 1 Q. B. Div. 720; Williams v. Jordan, L. Rep. 6 Ch. Div. 517; Rositer v. Miller, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 173; L. Rep. 3 App. Cas. 1124; Donnison v. People's Cafe, 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 187; Calling v. King, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 526; L. Rep. 5 Ch. Div. 660.) Of course, when there is any correspondence there may be enough evidence to explain who the vendor is, and thus to satisfy the statute (see above cases, and Dart, 217); but it is far best and safest to give the name: (see Conc. David. 106; Wolst. & T. 113.) The forms in David. i. 615, 622, were drawn before Thomas v. Brown was decided; but in most respects they form excellent models.

Also, the property must be properly described and identified. A general description is sufficient (Dart. 219; Naylor v. Goodall, 37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 422), and the description may be pieced together from different documents if they can be sufficiently connected: (Shardlow v. Cotterell, 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 572; L. Rep. 20 Ch. Div. 90.)

It is not enough for the auctioneer to enter names of vendor and purchaser, and description of the property, and price in his book, if he omits all reference to the conditions of sale: (Dart, 221; Rishton v. Whatmore, L. Rep. 8 Ch. Div. 467.) If the memorandum is printed as we suggest, there is no danger of these accidents rendering a sale invalid. This is one, and by no means the least, of the advantages of a printed form.

The memorandum can either take the form of an agreement between the parties; or of an acknowledgment by the purchaser, with an agreement to complete, and a ratification by the auctioneer as agent for the vendor. We prefer the latter mode, which is adopted by Mr. Davidson. See also Barton, ed. 1821, p. 108.

"Form of Memorandum.

"I of hereby acknowledge that on the sale by auction this day of 18 of the property mentioned in the foregoing particular, I was the highest bidder for and declared the purchaser of lot thereof, subject to the foregoing conditions of sale, at the price of £ , and that I have paid the sum of £ by way of deposit and in part payment of the purchase money to the vendor's solicitor, and I hereby agree to pay the remainder of the said purchase money (and the valuation, if any is provided for by the above conditions), and to complete the said purchase according to the aforesaid conditions.

"As witness my hand this day of 18
"As agent for Mr. , the vendor, I ratify and confirm this sale and acknowledge the receipt of the said deposit of £

Purchase money £
Deposit.....£

Remaining unpaid £

"NOTE.—The vendor must be named. If the sale is of the property in one lot, the words 'of lot' and the blank space after those words should be struck out, and the obliteration should be initialed by the purchaser and the vendor's agent."

As to the Stamp.

If the agreement is under seal it must be stamped as a deed. If not under seal, and if the subject-matter does not appear to be value £5, no duty is payable. If its value is £5 or upwards a 6d. stamp is payable: (83 & 84 Vict., c. 97, sched. tit. "Agreement.")

If on a sale by auction the same person buys several lots a distinct contract arises for each lot, so that no stamp is required for any lot under £5; but there must, in general, be as many stamps as lots of the value of £5 or over: (Dart. 237.) There are exemptions from stamps on certain sales of land (Ib. 237), and on all sales of "goods, wares, or merchandises."

"The duty of 6d. upon an agreement may be denoted by an adhesive stamp, which is to be cancelled by the person by whom the agreement is first executed." (83 & 84 Vict., c. 97, s. 36.)

Postscriptum.

It may be convenient to mention here some additional recent and important cases on Vendor and Purchaser. In Phelps v. White (7 L. Rep. Irish 160, C. A.), there was a condition that error should not annul the sale, but that compensation should be made. The purchaser might have discovered the error before conveyance, but it escaped his notice until after the purchase was completed, and he had taken possession. It was held that he was entitled to compensation, though the error was made through inadvertence of the vendor, and not through intentional deceit. The condition did not expressly exclude the purchaser from compensation after conveyance, but the case is a warning against placing too much reliance on such a condition, however framed. In this case Manson v. Thacker (L. Rep. 7 Ch. Div. 620) and Allen v. Richardson (41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 614; L. Rep. 13 Ch. Div. 524) were considered, and Bos v. Helskam (15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 841; L. Rep. 2 Ex. 72), and Re Turner and Skelton (41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 666; L. Rep. 13 Ch. Div. 180) approved of: (see Dart, 5th ed. 1225.) A note of the above case is given in Mr. Emden's Supplementary Digest of Cases in 1881, p. 141.

In Jenkins v. Jones (Law Times, 3rd June, 1882, p. 80; L. Rep. 9 Q. B. Div. 128) it was held that, although 32 Hen. VIII., c. 9, s. 2, it cannot be said to have been repealed by 8 & 9 Vict., c. 106, s. 6, nevertheless, since the passing of the latter statute a grant of lands to which the grantor has a title existing in fact, but of which he has never been in possession, and on which he is entitled only to a right of entry, will be valid, even although at the time of the grant a litigation is pending as to the title of the lands. See Dart, 289-241, where numerous decisions cutting down the effect of the statute of Henry VIII. are cited. In Jenkins v. Jones the Court held that the statute applied (1) to a title for which there was no foundation; (2) a title which, though not fictitious, was not capable of being conveyed. By 8 & 9 Vict., c. 106, s. 6, contingencies, &c., can be conveyed.

In Bettys v. Maynard (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 766) a sale under a power in a mortgage was set aside as being improper and at a gross undervalue, and also because there was a common mistake in a serious point. The view mentioned in Jones v. Clifford (85 L. T. Rep. N. S. 937; 3 Ch. Div. p. 792) that, even in the case of a complete purchase, the court would give relief against a common mistake as it would against fraud, received approval in this case. But generally speaking it takes a very strong case to induce the court to interfere with a mortgagee's power of sale. He is only a trustee in a limited sense: (Warren v. Jacob, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 697.)

WOMEN AS LAWYERS.

The late Act of the Massachusetts Legislature, conferring upon women the right to practise law, is but another link in the chain of events showing the tendency of the times to depart from the traditions of our fathers, and set up house-keeping for ourselves. And now that we come to think of it, why should the law ever have prohibited women from practising law? We must answer the conundrum in the language of Lord Dundreary, "it is one of the things no fellow can find out." The Legislature, bear in mind, does not undertake to endow her with the wisdom, or knowledge or any of the masculine traits supposed to be requisite to the successful practitioner; but only removes the legal prohibition. The law is not even compulsory. It is only that she may, not that she shall, and for this she should be thankful. There never should have been any legal restrictions against her in regard to any avocation. If by nature her endowments fit her in a less degree for this calling than do those of the man, she will be less likely to embark in it, and less likely to succeed if she does, but even this furnishes no reason for her exclusion by law. Nature has been decidedly parsimonious of her endowments of man in certain avocations where woman is peculiarly fitted; amongst which we may name that of wet nurse; and yet no law has ever prohibited him from making the attempt; and it is this kind of partiality in legislation that has given just grounds to woman to complain. There are masculine women, and there are effeminate men. Let the former practise law and the latter wash dishes, and who shall complain?

That man is superior intellectually to woman has been assumed by the former, but never admitted by the latter (especially not by that portion of them who wish to practise law), and in point of fact it is an open question whether there ever was any good grounds for the assumption. Some claim to find authority for it in the original transgression, on the ground that Eve was first inveigled into eating the forbidden apple; but this authority proves too much. In point of time she did eat it first, but time forms no factor in the determination of the question of strength of mind, but the surrounding circumstances of each case alone are to be considered: and this done, all must agree that Adam fell, upon a much slighter provocation than did Eve, and he also violated one of the very first principles of the law of evidence; he accepted and acted upon hearsay testimony, whilst she had authority for what she did in the direct command of the devil himself: and to say that his provocation was greater than her's, is to concede that she is more subtle than the devil. Then why would she not make a successful lawyer?

But even admitting man's superiority intellectually (which we don't), is that a good reason why woman should be excluded from any of the avocations whereby she could earn an honest living? Certainly not, but rather on the contrary all encouragements and helps should be held out to the weaker ones.

And do not let us, men, flatter ourselves that such an act is one of nobleness and magnanimity; it is only an act of justice and right.

The question has moral, social, and domestic bearings. These we are not discussing, but only the legal one—and we say the law is right. We confess to a sensation, something akin to that of an icicle creeping down our back when we think of our own wife and daughters being pitted against some bloated pettifogger of the police court, amidst a rabble of thieves, tramps, and dead-beats of every description, but we console ourselves with the reflection that they are enjoying their rights.—American Law Magazine.

ECCENTRIC WILLS.

The law coincides with common sense in its application to such bequests as that of the testatrix in Brown v. Burdett, noted in this week's Notes of Cases. This lady devised her house, orchard, and garden to trustees in trust to brick up all the doors and windows (except the kitchen and a room for a caretaker), with all the furniture and other things, especially the clock, as she left them. The house was to remain in this condition for twenty years, after which it was to go to devisees beneficially. If the trustees failed to comply, the property was to fall to others. It was impossible that a will of this kind should not to some extent endow the lawyers. It was disputed in the Probate Court without success; but, when it came before the Chancery Division in an administration action, the bequest was pronounced a mere negation, and an intestacy was considered as created in respect of the twenty years. Pope's sarcasm that "thousands die and endow a college or a cat" was cited in extenuation of the bequest, but Vice-Chancellor Bacon was unable to see even a cat to be benefited. The beneficiaries, if any, were the spiders; or, perhaps, a fit legatee would have been the "dog in the manger." The lady had probably read of rooms locked up and kept for years just as they were left by the dead through the morbid fancy of a survivor. A place at the table duly laid at meals is another form of the same luxury of woe. The lady wanted her heirs to feel her power after her death, and wait with longing eyes on the blocked-up windows all the twenty years. The law has, in theory, declined to gratify such a form of posthumous selfishness; but, in practice, the idea appears to have been carried out. The testatrix died in 1872, so that for ten years she has had her way, thanks to the law's delay, if not to the law.—Law Journal.

THE LIMITS TO LITERARY AND ARTISTIC CRITICISM.

(Continued from page 397, ante.)

In Green v. Chapman,<sup>1</sup> decided in the English Common Pleas in 1837, the plaintiff was a horticulturist, and had exhibited a number of flowers at a public competition, where he was adjudged a prize. Subsequently, in the Horticultural Journal, Florists' Register and Royal Lady's Magazine, there was published the following letter: "Sir: You will recollect a mean, shabby fellow named Green, making a great noise about a fifteen-shilling prize, and using gross language because he did not receive it directly. The name of Green is to be rendered famous, I believe, in all sorts of dirty work. The tricks by which he and a few like him use to secure prizes seem to have been broken in upon by some judges more honest than usual, and Riley, Dunn, and he being little kings of growers among the Bakers' Arms' squad, have formed a new society in which no one who can show against them will be allowed to compete. This is the way in which floriculture is to be supported in the East. Societies ought to obtain the list of members of this new club of amateurs, and carefully exclude from their ranks the knaves who promote, and the fools who join such a despicable gang. If Green be the same man who wrote an impudent letter to the Metropolitan Society, he is too worthless to notice; if he be not the same man, all we have to say is, that it is a pity two such beggarly souls could not be crammed into the same carcass. Dunn and Riley ought to have known better." The plaintiff brought suit against the newspaper, and the case went to the full court on a demurrer to pleas. Here it was argued that the action could not be maintained, as the words set out fell within the description of privileged criticism. The argument was short, only the defendant's counsel being called on. Barstow: "One who in any manner exhibits himself publicly cannot maintain an action for any fair criticism which his exhibition provokes. Throughout the whole of the alleged libel in the present case, no attack is made upon the plaintiff's private character." Tindal, C.J.: "How does the occasion justify such language as this: 'The name of Green is to be rendered famous, I believe, in all sorts of dirty work?'" Barstow: "That was intended to have reference solely to the public exhibition of flowers by the plaintiff." Tindal, C.J.: "Or this, 'If Green be the same man who wrote an impudent letter to the Metropolitan Society, he is too worthless to notice; if he be not the same man, all we have to say is, that it is a pity two such beggarly souls could not be crammed into the same carcass.'" Barstow: "The whole originated in and has reference to the plaintiff in the capacity of an exhibitor of flowers for prizes. The passages complained of contain nothing more than mere terms of reproach as applicable to the plaintiff as an exhibitor of flowers; at the most they merely ascribe to him the absence of certain good qualities, not the possession of bad ones. A party who makes any kind of exhibition thereby invites criticism, and if it be not always couched in the language of compliment, he cannot complain." Per curiam: "The publication is clearly libellous, and is not within the protection of the rule as to matters written with a view to fair criticism." And the plaintiff had judgment.

In Eastwood v. Holmes,<sup>2</sup> the alleged libel was contained in the course of a report of the proceedings of the British Archaeological Association at one of its ordinary meetings. The offensive words were these: "The remainder of the evening was occupied in the discussion of an account drawn up by Mr. C., on the recent forgeries in lead. There are figures reported to have been obtained from the Thames, and called 'pilgrims' signs.' They are being offered, not only in London, but throughout the country, and antiquaries should be on their guard in the purchase of them. Mr. C. had inspected eight hundred of them, but the aggregate is said to be not less than two thousand. The whole are proved to be of recent fabrication. They appear to have been made in chalk moulds. They have been steeped in a strong acid and smeared over with Thames mud. It is to be lamented that there are no legal means of punishing a gross attempt at deception and extortion." The plaintiff was a dealer in antiquities who had purchased, in the way of his business, a number of "pilgrims' signs." At the close of his case, Willis, J., ruled that the action could not be maintained,—first, because the publication was protected by the privilege of fair discussion on matters of public interest, it not being malicious; and, second, because it reflected only on a class of persons dealing in particular goods, and not on the plaintiff. "If a man wrote that all lawyers were thieves," said the learned judge, "no particular lawyer could sue him, unless there is something to point to the particular individual, which there is not here. There is nothing to show that the article was inserted with any special reference to the plaintiff." Gott v. Pulstifer,<sup>3</sup> decided in Massachusetts in 1877, was another case of this kind. The plaintiff was the owner of the "Cardiff Giant," which may be remembered by some as being a colossal stone figure resembling the statue of a man, and which was exhibited to the public as the petrified body of a being of a past age. Exhibiting it to the curious at so much a head had long been a source of profit to the owner, and he was about to dispose of it to one Palmer, who had agreed to pay him the sum of 30,000 dollars for it, when an article in the Boston Sunday Herald, charging that the "giant" was a fraud and humbug, caused Palmer to draw out of the contract. The plaintiff brought an action for libel and the damages resulting to him therefrom, and on the trial asked the judge to instruct the jury that, "if the defendants published said article heedlessly and carelessly, without due regard to the rights of the owner of the Cardiff Giant, they are liable to the plaintiff for all damages thereby caused him." The judge declined to so instruct; and charged the jury that if they believed that the publication was honestly made by the defendant, believing it to be true, that would be a good defence to the action, unless express malice or malice in fact was proved. No definition of malice was given. The jury found for the defendant; but on appeal to the Supreme Court, it was held that the judge should have instructed the jury more fully as to malice, and a new trial was granted. But Gray, C.J., who delivered the opinion of the court, laid it down that "the editor of a newspaper has the right if not the duty of publishing, for the information of the public, fair and reasonable comments, however severe in terms, upon anything which is made by its owner a subject of public exhibition, as upon any other matter of public interest, and such a publication falls within the class of privileged communications for which no action can be maintained without proof of actual malice."

Where an article is charged to be libellous, all of it is to be looked at, and the proper inquiry is, whether as a whole it is fair or malicious; and not whether any particular imputation is untrue. Thus, in Strawes v. Francis,<sup>4</sup> where Mr. Hepworth Dixon in the Athenaeum had, in the course of a review of a novel called "The Old Ledger," criticised "its display of bad Latin, bad French, bad German, and bad English," and, in an action for libel, the author called witnesses to show that there was no bad French or bad German in the book, and contended that in respect of the charge of bad French and bad German he was entitled to a verdict. Cockburn, C.J., said: "No. The question is as to the article as a whole. It is not because (even sup-

(1) 5 Scott, 340.

(2) 1 Foot. & Fin. 347.

(3) 122 Mass. 235.

(4) 4 Foot. & Fin. 1107 (1866).

posing it to be so) the critic was mistaken in saying the plaintiff's German was bad, that therefore you are to have a verdict. The verdict must be upon the article as a whole, and whether as a whole it is to be deemed malicious and libellous."

If the criticism is honestly made, it is not libellous because the terms of censure are strong. This is laid down in Thompson v. Shackell,<sup>5</sup> where the plaintiff had painted a portrait of King George IV., and the defendant, in the John Bull newspaper, characterised it as a "daub." The artist was unable to obtain satisfaction in the courts.

It is important to distinguish between matters of fact and matters of opinion. The critic of a book, as we have seen, may print an unfavourable opinion of a book, and this opinion may be both unjust and untrue. Nevertheless he is not responsible for that opinion. But as to matters of fact, it is otherwise. If he state a fact contrary to the truth, he is responsible, not for his criticisms, but for the false basis he has assumed. This rule is well illustrated in Fry v. Bennett.<sup>6</sup> The plaintiff, the manager of an Italian opera company, sued the proprietor of the New York Herald for a series of libellous publications, in relation to him, in his management of the performances of the company, and in his treatment of his artists and employees. The defence was that the publications were privileged in that they were not beyond the bounds of legitimate criticism. Oakley, C.J., in instructing the jury, pointed out the distinction which the law drew between the two charges. Said he: "These alleged libels may be divided into these two classes: those which relate to the management, by Mr. Fry, of the opera generally, and those which charge him with harsh and unjustifiable conduct in relation to various individuals whom he had employed, especially the female portion of them. Two defences are interposed. The first is that, all these publications are of that class which the laws privilege,—that is, publications which Mr. Bennett had a right to make,—and that he is not responsible, although they may have been founded in entire error; that they relate to the management of the opera, a public amusement introduced by Mr. Fry, in which the public had an interest, and that, therefore, any man, the editor of a newspaper or otherwise, might speak of it by way of just criticism, and that the public have an interest that there should be a free and unrestricted criticism exercised in cases of this kind. Various instances were referred to by the counsel on both sides as illustrating this rule of law. For instance, the works of an author. The public have an interest in the publication of books and all literary productions; and in order that the public interest should be guarded, and that no false impression should be made upon the public mind, the public have an interest that these publications should be open to free remark. It is well settled with respect to a book which a man may choose to write and publish: honest criticism may be made upon it with respect to its dangerous qualities, its destitution of merit, or anything else which the party chooses. These things the public have an interest in, in order that publications inculcating incorrect principles may be exposed, and that no evil should result from them. The counsel for the defence contends that this privilege extends, not only to the work itself, but to the personal character of the author. That was contended upon the former occasion. My own impression for the present is, that the position assumed by the counsel for the plaintiff in this matter is a sound and true one, and that this privilege is to be confined to the discussion of subjects only in which the public have an interest. Thus, a book may be examined and criticised, but anything bearing upon the personal character of the author, anything that touches him personally, does not fall within the rule. I cannot see myself how it will be necessary or useful that the person of an author should be held up in a ridiculous light, or his personal character attacked, or his motives impugned. It is not difficult to draw the line of distinction, and it seems to me that it is a line dictated by good sense and fair dealing. In one word, in any statements of matters of fact in relation to this principle, as well as every other, the party is responsible for the truth of what he states, but is not responsible for his opinion and judgment. That arises from the fact that not only is it important to the public that this opinion should be free, but it is impossible to test it by any rule. The critic may have an honest opinion of a book which is unfavourable and may not be accurate, but he is not responsible for that opinion. Not so with respect to matters of fact. If the critic of a book states a fact contrary to the truth, he is responsible, not for the criticisms which he makes, but for the false basis which he has assumed. In respect to the case before us, all the parts of these libels which reflect on Mr. Fry's want of judgment and skill, either in the selection of operas or the choice of incompetent performers, everything of that kind is open to criticism, and Mr. Bennett is not responsible if these opinions be not correct; but all those parts of the libel which charge Mr. Fry with unjust, tyrannical, and oppressive conduct in reference to his dealings with his artists, do not come within the rule." So, to impute to an author that he had written a certain book, and to attack him for it, when in fact he was not the author of the book, would obviously not be privileged.<sup>7</sup>

Sometimes the author, stung by the attacks of the critics, instead of seeking his remedy in the courts, takes the law into his own hands. This method is always illegal, often unsatisfactory, and generally expensive. It was pursued in England in at least one reported case.<sup>8</sup> The Hon. Grantley Berkeley had published an historical novel called "Berkeley Castle," on which, in a subsequent number of Frazer's Magazine, there appeared what purported to be a critique, but which, in the opinion of the author, was a gross libel on himself and his family. The Hon. Grantley Berkeley read it, and three days after repaired to Frazer's place of business; finding him there, he assaulted him with a whip, two of his friends who accompanied him keeping the bystanders away. Frazer sued him for the assault, and he then brought an action against Frazer for the libel. Lord Abinger, in summing up the first case to the jury, said: "The plaintiff's counsel has put this matter as a sort of debtor and creditor account—that Mr. Frazer libelled Mr. Berkeley, and Mr. Berkeley beat him; and that, on Mr. Frazer bringing his action for the assault, Mr. Berkeley brought his action for the libel. But if you allow for the libel in diminution of damages, Mr. Berkeley will still be entitled to recover damages for it in the cross-action; and as he has chosen his remedy for the libel for his action for damages, I think that he cannot fairly be allowed to take much advantage of it in mitigation of damages in the present action. I really think that this assault was carried to a very inconsiderate length, and if an author is to go and give a beating to a publisher who has offended him, two or three blows with a horse-whip ought to be quite enough to satisfy his irritated feelings." Mr. Frazer recovered £100 damages, which is probably a good deal more than Mr. Berkeley obtained in his action, as it is not reported in the books.

These, then, are the limits and extent of privileged literary criticism: 1. It is protected, however severe, provided it is directed against the work. In other words, the book or artistic production cannot be plaintiff. 2. But the private character of the author is not public property; and the critic must not make his assault on the work a pretext for a personal attack. 3. Neither is the author himself, nor his private character, open to ridicule. According to the language of Lord Ellenborough in Carr v. Hood, any amount of ridicule of the author of a performance, artistic or literary, is privileged as criticism, provided there be no attack on the private or personal character of the artist

(5) Moo. & M. 157 (1828).

(6) 3 Bosw. 309 (1858); 28 N. Y. 320 (1863).

(7) See Tabart v. Tipper, 1 Camp. N. P. 350.

(8) Frazer v. Berkeley, 7 Car. & P. 631 (1836).

or author. "One writer, in exposing the follies and errors of another, may make use of ridicule, however poignant. Ridicule is often the fittest weapon that can be employed for such a purpose. If the reputation or pecuniary interest of the person ridiculed suffer, it is damnum absque injuria." But later cases do not go this length, as we have seen in the opinions of Chief Justice Tenterden in Soane v. Knight, of Chief Justice Cockburn in Strauss v. Francis, and of Cowan and Clarke, JJ., in the only American cases of consequence on this topic. In 1828, also, Chief Justice Best followed the doctrine of Lord Ellenborough in Carr v. Hood, except that he thought that no personal ridicule of the author was justifiable.<sup>9</sup> 4. In matters of opinion, the critic, though mistaken, is not legally responsible, for he is not bound to be infallible. 5. In matters of fact it is different; he is liable for making a false charge, as in other cases of libel where privilege cannot be pleaded.—JOHN D. LAWSON.

THE EXTENT OF THE DUTY IN TORTS.

The case of Heaven v. Pender, reported in the August number of the Law Journal Reports, belongs to a branch of law of much interest but considerable difficulty. The action was brought by a painter whose master had contracted with a shipowner to paint a ship lying in dock against another person who had contracted with the shipowner to put a staging round the ship, in order that the painter might get at his work. The staging gave way, and the painter was injured, whereupon he brought an action, not against the shipowner, but against the man who had undertaken to put up the staging. The cause of the downfall was that one of the ropes was charred through. The action differs from most of the other cases on the same subject, in that the plaintiff had, it would seem, mistaken the right defendant; whereas, in the other cases, the question was whether the action would lie at all. In the "gun" case, Langridge v. Levy, 7 Law J. Rep. Exch. 887, the son of a man who bought the gun from the defendant would have had no right of action whatever, if he had none against the defendant. In the "coach" case, Winterbottom v. Wright, 11 Law J. Rep. Exch. 415, the coachman, who was injured by the breakdown, had no right of action against the Postmaster-General, and his only hope was in his action against the coachbuilder. In the "hair-wash" case, George v. Skivington, 89 Law J. Rep. Exch. 8, the wife would not have been compensated at all if she had not recovered in the action against the chemist who sold the wash to her husband. Not that this fact at all affects the argument. It, of course, does not follow that a plaintiff has a right of action against a defendant because he has a right of action against no one else. But it rather detracts from the serious nature of the action as in reality only involving half the law of the case, and preparing the plaintiff's way to a better remedy.

Most of the cases have also arisen upon the sale of articles, as in each of the three cases referred to, and to this class of case the argument ab inconvenienti is very forcibly applicable. If the maker or seller of an article is liable for negligence in its construction to any other person than the buyer, where is his liability to stop? Is he to be liable for any damage the article may cause to every subsequent purchaser through whose hands it may pass, or to whom it may be lent, or who may come near it? It was upon considerations of this kind that Winterbottom v. Wright was decided against the coachman. Otherwise, it was said, every passenger and every passer-by might have a right of action against the coachbuilder. It was, therefore, necessary to draw the line at the person with whom the defendant had contracted. And yet, in Langridge v. Levy, the line was drawn much wider when the plaintiff's son, the injured person, was allowed to bring the action. This case is, in fact, the leading case on the subject, or there may be persons who would call it the misleading case.

(9) Thompson v. Shackell, Moo. & M. 187.

Just as Fletcher v. Rylands is always cited in support of the proposition that an injury may be actionable without negligence, so Langridge v. Levy is cited in support of the proposition that an action will lie on a contract by one who is not a party to it. The main duty of the Courts in reference to Langridge v. Levy is to distinguish it. Whether it was rightly decided is now an unprofitable question, but it contains in itself the elements for misleading. As is well known, the plaintiff was the son of the purchaser of a gun from the defendant. The terms of the purchase must be taken from the findings of the jury on the questions left to them by Baron Alderson, who tried the case. The report states that "the learned judge left it to the jury to say—first, whether the defendant had warranted the gun to be made by Nock, and to be a safe and secure one; secondly, whether it was in fact unsafe or of inferior materials or workmanship, and exploded in consequence of being so; and, thirdly, whether the defendant warranted it to be a safe gun, knowing that it was not so? The jury found a general verdict for the plaintiff, damages £400." Baron Parke, in delivering the judgment of the Exchequer, carefully rejects the findings of the jury in regard to the contract. "It is clear," he says, "that this action cannot be supported upon the warranty as a contract, for there is no privity in that respect between the plaintiff and the defendant." He then proceeds to state the law as to misrepresentations independently of contract, showing that a false statement made with the intention of being acted upon gave ground for an action. As a corollary to this principle he lays down that a false statement made to one person, intended to be conveyed to another, and intended to be acted upon by that other, gives a cause of action to that other if he is injured by relying upon it. The application of this principle greatly narrows the material facts of the case in question. Levy knowing that the gun was unsafe, and meaning Langridge to act on the statement that it was safe, told Langridge's father that it was safe; meaning the statement to be communicated to Langridge, which statement was communicated to Langridge. Langridge's father was, in fact, the conduit pipe through which Langridge was deceived. It did not matter that a warranty was also given to Langridge's father by way of contract with him, or that the fraudulent statement made was also intended to be acted upon by him. These facts, under different circumstances, might have given a cause of action to Langridge's father either in contract or tort; but that consideration did not prejudice the question of the right of action vested in Langridge. Baron Parke considered that all the elements of an action of deceit brought by Langridge against Levy were present, and so decided in Langridge's favour. This is clearly the drift of Baron Parke's judgment. It is true that the facts assumed by Baron Parke were not left to the jury, or found by them; but it does not appear, from the report, that any of the material facts, except whether the gun was of bad workmanship and that a warranty had been given, were disputed on the defendant's behalf.

The distinction generally taken between Langridge v. Levy and other cases is, that in that case there was fraud. In Heaven v. Pender Mr. Justice Field says:—"There is no fraud in this case—that is clear—as there was in Langridge v. Levy." But, in Langridge v. Levy, there was much more than fraud. As we have seen, the case does not decide that, where a fraud is committed, any one who is injured by the fraud may bring an action. Baron Parke distinctly says:—"We do not decide whether this action would have been maintainable if the plaintiff had not known of, and acted upon, the false representation; nor whether the defendant would have been responsible to a person not within the defendant's contemplation at the time of the sale." It was this misstatement of the effect of Langridge v. Levy which seems to have misled Chief Baron Kelly and Baron Cleasby in George v. Skivington. In that case the Court of Exchequer held that, upon a purchase by a husband of hair-wash for his wife, the wife could sue for the breach of duty in not supplying a thing reasonably fit for the purpose. Both the Chief Baron and Baron Cleasby treat the case as governed by Langridge v. Levy. Baron Cleasby says:—"You have only to substitute negligence for fraud." If the whole point of Langridge v. Levy had turned on fraud, Baron Cleasby's observation might be accepted. Fraud is a tort, and negligence is a tort, and there is no reason per se why they should not be governed by the same rules. Baron Pigott puts his decision partly on the ground that the wife was a person who could not contract for herself; but the action was framed in tort, and not in contract. Upon an action differently framed it is possible that the husband might have recovered in his contract for any expenses or inconvenience to which he may have been put by the illness of his wife. As George v. Skivington stands, it is disapproved by the judges in Heaven v. Pender. Mr. Justice Field says:—"I quite agree that there is no distinction between George v. Skivington and this case," but Winterbottom v. Wright was not cited in George v. Skivington, and the learned judge prefers that case. Mr. Justice Cave's judgment is to the same effect; but he adds that one of the judgments in George v. Skivington "proceeds on the assumption that there is a kind of negligence analogous to fraud, something of which all the world can complain." Upon the true reading of Langridge v. Levy, as we have seen, fraud is not a cause of action of which all the world can complain. In Winterbottom v. Wright the judges were very careful to reduce Levy v. Langridge to reasonable dimensions; but the statement of the decision made by Lord Abinger is another example of the facility with which the case is misunderstood. Lord Abinger says: "We ought not to attempt to extend the principle of that decision, which, although it has been cited in support of this action, wholly fails as an authority in its favour; for there the gun was bought for the use of the son, the plaintiff in that action, who could not make the bargain himself, but was really and substantially the party contracting." This view of the case would have been wholly repudiated by Baron Parke, as we have seen. Baron Alderson, who was a party to Langridge v. Levy, in his judgment in Winterbottom v. Wright puts the right construction on the former case. All the judges agreed that the coachman had no right of action against the coach-builder, whose duty was to the Postmaster-General. Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Cave take the same view of Heaven v. Pender. The County Court judge had found in favour of the plaintiff, but this judgment was set aside. The confusion which is frequently found in this branch of the law depends, we think, on the ease with which readers of Langridge v. Levy are misled in reading that case. It is a case which, after all, does not decide a principle of very general application, as the facts were special. As we read the judgment, it decides that an actionable misrepresentation may be made through a third party to some one else, although it is also made to the third party himself, and although a contract is made with the third party himself, if the statement was intended to be communicated to the injured party, and intended to be relied on by him. It does not decide that where a fraud is committed all the world may bring an action, if injured by the fraud. Still less does it decide that an action of tort may be brought against the tort-feasor by any person who is injured.—Law Journal.

PROPERTY HELD IN MORTMAIN.

One of the latest of Parliamentary returns shows the extent of real property throughout the kingdom that is held in mortmain, or for charitable, public, or perpetual uses, or in such a way that no succession duty is payable thereon. More than one and a half million acres are so held in England and Wales, 284,000 in Ireland, and nearly 130,000 in Scotland. Taking the aggregate area of the United Kingdom at seventy-seven and a half million acres, it would seem that one acre in every thirty-nine comes within the scope of the return, and in England and Wales about one in every twenty-three acres. These facts should help to dispel the common, but of course erroneous, notion that from the time of Magna Charta to the Act of Geo. 2 the Legislature has been constantly engaged in placing absolute prohibitions upon corporations holding lands in mortmain. It can hardly be supposed that the recent relaxations in favour of public parks, schools, &c., have had any material effect upon the figures. The return, therefore, shows clearly that the statutory restrictions are in practice found less stringent than is generally imagined.—Law Times

ADMISSION OF A SOLICITOR.

Mr. Maurice Healy (brother of Mr. Healy, M.P.) has been admitted a Solicitor of the Court of Judicature. He was awarded a special certificate at the late examination.

NOTES OF ENGLISH CASES.

(From the Law Journal)

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

COURT OF APPEAL.

(Before JESSEL, M.R., BRETT and COTTON, L.JJ.)

In re ROBERTS. Ex parte PRICE.

July 27.—Bankruptcy—Jurisdiction—Discretion—Fraudulent deed—13 Eliz., c. 5.—Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 72.

This was an appeal from a decision of Bacon, C.J., reversing an order of the County Court.

The bankrupt had, about eighteen months before the date of the bankruptcy, conveyed to his father, professedly in consideration of £100, land worth about £500. The trustee alleged that after the execution of the conveyance the bankrupt continued to deal with the property as absolute owner, and he applied to the County Court to have the deed declared void on the ground that it was executed for the purpose of defeating the creditors. The father objected to have the question tried in the County Court, and wished to have it tried in the High Court.

The County Court judge overruled the objection, and declared the deed void.

This decision was reversed by Bacon, C.J., who held that the case was one in which the Court of Bankruptcy ought not to exercise its discretionary jurisdiction under section 72 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, but leave the question to be tried by the ordinary tribunals.

The trustee appealed.

Winslow, Q.C., and F. Thompson, for the appellant.

Yate Lee, for the respondent, was not heard.

Their LORDSHIPS held, affirming the decision of Bacon, C.J., that, considering there were allegations of gross fraud against the father and the son, and that the value of the property involved was large, the Court ought not to compel the father—who was not a bankrupt and not, therefore, directly amenable to the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy—to submit to the jurisdiction of the County Court.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

(Before BACON, V.C.)

Re BUSHBY.

Aug. 2.—Conveyancing Act (44 & 45 Vict., c. 41), s. 39—Order binding married woman's property—Consent of married woman—Evidence.

In this case an order was made in chambers, under section 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, binding the interest of a married woman in property with a restraint on anticipation subject to her consent being shown.

H. B. Howard asked that the order might be drawn up on a written request to the solicitors signed by the married woman, her signature being verified by affidavit.

The lady lived in Norfolk and was confined to her home. He referred to Hodges v. Hodges, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 549.

Bacon, V.C., said the order might be drawn up on this evidence, without the separate examination or further proof of the consent of the married woman.

BROWN v. BURDETT.

Aug. 2.—Will—Direction to brick up house and furniture for twenty years—Invalid trust—Intestacy—Wills Act, 1837, s. 3.

Testatrix devised a house, garden, orchard, and out-buildings, at Gilmorton, Leicestershire, to trustees upon trust immediately after her funeral, and on the same day, to cause the doors and windows of every room, except the kitchen, back kitchen, middle attic, and hall, and of the coach house, to be well and effectually bricked up from the outside, with every article of whatever kind, that might then be therein, including her clocks, at her decease, and cause the same to be repaired and renewed as occasion should require, and so bricked up to continue for the term of twenty years after her decease; and subject to the trusts aforesaid upon trust, to place in and remove at pleasure some respectable married couple in the actual occupation of the kitchen, back kitchen, middle attic, and hall, and allow them to live there rent free, in consideration of their taking care of the said messuage and premises, and particularly the blockade to the doors and windows; and, from and after the term, the testatrix devised the property to devisees beneficially. The testatrix gave a number of minute directions to her trustees as to the blocking-up of the premises, and, if they failed to comply with her directions, gave over to other persons interests given to the trustees.

The testatrix died in 1872. This was the further consideration of an administration suit, and one question was as to the validity of the trusts for the term of twenty years, it being contended that the Wills Act, s. 3, only empowered a positive disposition of property to be made; and that the negative trust to leave the property unenjoyed was, in effect, an intestacy for the term of twenty years.

E. K. Karlake, Q.C.; Marten, Q.C.; Hemming, Q.C.; Miller, Q.C.; Langley, Yate Lee, Brett, S. Hall, and Phillips for the parties.

Bacon, V.C., made a declaration that the trusts of the real and personal estate in question were invalid, and that such real and personal estate passed as undisposed of for the term of twenty years from the death of the testatrix.

(Before KAY, J.)

In re CLARK.

July 31.—Infant—Religion.

This was an application by the mother of an infant, eight years of age, who was entitled to real estate in Lancashire, for the appointment of herself and a paternal uncle as guardians. The father was a Protestant; he had allowed his children to be baptised, and, so far as they were capable, educated in the Roman Catholic faith, which the mother held. The infant in question was the second child, a son who was under three when his father died. There were two other children—girls—who had no property. The family lived abroad. The father did not attend any Protestant place of worship, but sometimes went with his wife to Mass.

J. Pearson, Q.C., and Bagshawe for the application.
Cookson, Q.C., and E. Bond, contra.

KAY, J., held, on the evidence, that the father had, by his acts, indicated an intention that the infant should be brought up as a Roman Catholic; and that it would, under the circumstances, be more beneficial to the infant that he should be brought up in that faith; and made the order asked.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Order XVI., Rule 13.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 157.
Wilson on the Judicature Acts (2nd Edition), 180.

The consent required to be given by a proposed new plaintiff need not be in writing. It is sufficient if the solicitor of the original plaintiff states that he consents on his behalf (Cox v. James, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 184).

Theobald on Wills (2nd Edition), 282.

A gift in remainder after a life interest, to the persons who shall "then" be the testator's next-of-kin is a gift to a hypothetical class, to be ascertained as if the testator had died when the tenant for life died (Sturge to the Great Western Railway Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 185).

Joyce on the Doctrine of Injunctions, 109.

Kerr on Injunctions (2nd Edition), 170.

An action by a reversioner of a cottage to restrain the continuance of a nuisance was dismissed on the ground that there was no permanent injury to the reversion (Cooper v. Crabtree, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 189).

CORRESPONDENCE.

Letters and communications intended for publication, and addressed to THE EDITOR, 43, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin, must be authenticated by the name of the writer, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We throw open the columns of this Journal most willingly for the discussion of subjects of interest to the Profession; but it must be understood that we do not necessarily agree with all the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

WITNESSES TO AGREEMENTS FIXING FAIR RENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Having written to the Land Commission, suggesting that Commissioners to Administer Oaths should be eligible as witnesses to a tenant's signature of agreements fixing fair rents, my firm have received a reply from Mr. Godley, in which he states—"Though a Commissioner for Administering Oaths is not specified in the form as an allowable witness to the signature of a tenant, no objection will be made to receive an agreement so witnessed."

This may interest some of your readers.

Yours faithfully,

A SUBSCRIBER.

Dublin, 17th August, 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Dennehy, Michael, of Main-street, Mallow, in the county of Cork, shopkeeper, trading as Dennehy and Co. August 8. Tuesday, September 5, and Friday, September 22. Thomas Gerrard, solr.

Little, John, formerly of, Dungannon, in the county of Tyrone, and lately of Dendalk, in the county of Louth, and now of 2 Elizabeth-place, off Oriel-street, in the city of Dublin, lately carrying on the trade or business of builder and contractor in copartnership with James Little, under the style and firm of "Lytle Brothers." August 4; Friday, September 1, and Friday, September 15. Wellington Young and B. Thompson, solrs.

Lunham, William, of Russell-street, Tralee, in the county of Kerry, provision merchant. August 4; Friday, September 1, and Friday, September 15. Samuel Benner, solr.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	AUGUST
	Sat. 12	Sun. 13	Tues. 14	Wed. 15	Thur. 16	Fri. 17
Government.
3 p c Consols ..	99 1/2	99 1/2	99 1/2	99 1/2	99 1/2	99 1/2
3 p c Reduced ..	99	98 1/2	98 1/2	99	98 1/2	98 1/2
New 3 p c Stock ..	103 1/2	103 1/2	103 1/2	103 1/2	103 1/2	103 1/2
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1888 } Traffic. at ..	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2
3 1/2 p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	315 1/2	315 1/2	315 1/2	315 1/2	315 1/2	315 1/2
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	35	35	35	35	35	35
20 London and County (Ltd.) ..	75 1/2	75 1/2	75 1/2	75 1/2	75 1/2	75 1/2
15 London Joint Stock ..	67 1/2	67 1/2	67 1/2	67 1/2	67 1/2	67 1/2
20 London and Westminster, Ltd ..	7 1/2	7 1/2	7 1/2	7 1/2	7 1/2	7 1/2
10 Do. New ..	7 1/2	7 1/2	7 1/2	7 1/2	7 1/2	7 1/2
3 1/2 Munster Bank (Limited) ..	23 1/2	23 1/2	23 1/2	23 1/2	23 1/2	23 1/2
10 Nat. Prov. of England, Ltd. ..	14 1/2	14 1/2	14 1/2	14 1/2	14 1/2	14 1/2
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	27 1/2	27 1/2	27 1/2	27 1/2	27 1/2	27 1/2
10 National of Liverpool (Ltd.) ..	22	22	22	22	22	22
25 Provincial Bank ..	29 1/2	29 1/2	29 1/2	29 1/2	29 1/2	29 1/2
10 Do. New ..	29 1/2	29 1/2	29 1/2	29 1/2	29 1/2	29 1/2
10 Royal Bank ..	29 1/2	29 1/2	29 1/2	29 1/2	29 1/2	29 1/2
25 Standard of B. & A., Ltd ..	51 1/2	51 1/2	51 1/2	51 1/2	51 1/2	51 1/2
25 Union of Australia ..	69 1/2	69 1/2	69 1/2	69 1/2	69 1/2	69 1/2
Steam.
50 British & Irish ..	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2
100 City of Dublin ..	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2
50 Dublin and Glasgow ..	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2
50 Peninsular and Oriental ..	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2	100 1/2
Mines.
4 1/2 Borehaven (Limited) ..	4/9	4/9	4/9	4/9	4/9	4/9
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (Ltd) ..	5/-	5/-	5/-	5/-	5/-	5/-
2 1/2 Wicklow Copper ..	12/-	12/-	12/-	12/-	12/-	12/-
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance & Dub. Cons. Gas ..	16	16	16	16	16	16
8 Do. New ..	16	16	16	16	16	16
4 Gascock & Co. Ltd. Ltd ..	5	5	5	5	5	5
20 C. Dub. Brewery Co. (Lim.) ..	5	5	5	5	5	5
10 Dub. (Sth) City Market Co. ..	12/-	12/-	12/-	12/-	12/-	12/-
10 M'Kenzie & Sons (Ltd.) ..	1 1/2	1 1/2	1 1/2	1 1/2	1 1/2	1 1/2
4 National Discount, Fra. Ltd ..	2	2	2	2	2	2
Tramways.
10 Belfast Tram ..	8	8	8	8	8	8
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	8	8	8	8	8	8
Railways.
50 Cork and Brandon ..	80-2	80-2	80-2	80-2	80-2	80-2
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	119 1/2	119 1/2	119 1/2	119 1/2	119 1/2	119 1/2
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	114 1/2	114 1/2	114 1/2	114 1/2	114 1/2	114 1/2
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	83 1/2	84	85	85	85 1/2	85 1/2
100 Waterford & Cent. Ireland ..	30 1/2	30 1/2	30 1/2	30 1/2	30 1/2	30 1/2
100 Waterford and Limerick ..	30 1/2	30 1/2	30 1/2	30 1/2	30 1/2	30 1/2
Railway Preference.
100 D. W., & W., 5 p c (1880) ..	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2
100 Do. do. (1885) ..	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2
100 Gt. Nth'n (Ireland) 4 p c ..	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2
100 Do. 4 1/2 p c ..	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2
100 Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c ..	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	98 1/2	98 1/2	98 1/2	98 1/2	98 1/2	98 1/2
100 Waterf. & Limerick, 4 p c ..	98 1/2	98 1/2	98 1/2	98 1/2	98 1/2	98 1/2
100 Do. 4 1/2 p c ..	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2
Debenture Stocks.
100 Belfast & Nth'n Cos. 4 p c ..	105 1/2	105 1/2	105 1/2	105 1/2	105 1/2	105 1/2
100 Dublin & Wicklow 4 p c ..	105 1/2	105 1/2	105 1/2	105 1/2	105 1/2	105 1/2
100 Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2
100 Do. 4 1/2 p c ..	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2
100 Gt. North'n & West'n 4 1/2 p c ..	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2
100 Gt. South'n & West'n, 4 p c ..	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2
100 Kilkenny Junction, A, 5 p c ..	80	80	80	80	80	80
100 Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2	109 1/2
100 Waterf'd & Limerick 4 p c ..	111 1/2	111 1/2	111 1/2	111 1/2	111 1/2	111 1/2
100 Do., 4 1/2 p c ..	111 1/2	111 1/2	111 1/2	111 1/2	111 1/2	111 1/2
Miscellaneous Debent.
100 Ballast Office Deb. £2 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	102 1/2	102 1/2	102 1/2	102 1/2	102 1/2	102 1/2
100 Dub. & Kingstown 4 p c ..	102 1/2	102 1/2	102 1/2	102 1/2	102 1/2	102 1/2

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—4 per cent. 17th August, 1882.
Of Deposit—1 per cent. 23rd March, 1882.

Name Days—August 29th, and September 13th, 1882.
Account Days—August 30th, and September 13th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

The Stock Exchange and Brokers' Offices will be closed on Saturdays during the months of July and August.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Old Wounds, Sores, and Ulcers.—Daily experience confirms the fact which has triumphed over opposition for thirty years—viz., that no means are known equal to Holloway's remedies, for curing bad legs, sores, wounds, diseases of the skin, erysipelas, abscesses, burns, scalds, and in truth, all cases where the skin is broken. To cure these infirmities quickly is of primary importance, as the compulsory confinement indoors weakens the general health. The ready means of cure are found in Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which heal the sores and expel their cause. In the very worst cases the Ointment has succeeded in effecting a perfect cure, after every other means has failed of giving any relief. Desperate cases best display its virtues.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

HOLMES—August 17, at Aylesbury-road, the wife of Alex. Holmes, Esq., M.A., barrister-at-law, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

CRAIG and HUME—August 10 (by special licence), at the residence of the bride's mother, Crumlin, by the Rev. Alexander Cokhucan Canning, assisted by the Rev. John M'Dermott, Belmont, Belfast, J. Walker Craig, Esq., M.A., barrister-at-law, to Eliza Oakman (Elise), youngest daughter of the late George Alexander Hume, Esq., M.D., of Crumlin, County Antrim.

ROSS and DEANE—August 17, at the Parish Church of St. Michan, Dublin, by the Rev. E. J. Stokes, B.D., assisted by the Rev. R. S. O'Loughlin, B.A., Incumbent of Sixmiletown, John Ross, Esq., LL.B., barrister-at-law, eldest son of the Rev. Robert Ross, Ardfoyle, Londonderry, to Catherine Mary Jeffcock, only surviving child of Lieut.-Colonel Deane and Mary Stobart Mann, Dunmoyle, County Tyrone.

DEATHS.

JORDAN—August 13, at her residence, Castlebar, Margaret Josephine, relict of the late Myles Jordan, Esq., Crown Solicitor.

ROWAN—August 11, at his residence, Florence-terrace, Northland-road, Derry, William T. Rowan, Esq., solicitor.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50, DENZILLE-STREET. 3-7

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,
the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.
Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 118 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewart & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

On the First Day of each Month.

FALCONER'S A-B-C RAILWAY GUIDE.
Price 3d., by post 4d.
THE MOST COMPLETE TIME TABLES,
AND
BEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM IN IRELAND.

JOHN FALCONER, 53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
And at all Booksellers and Railway Stalls.

"1745 NEWSPAPERS RECOMMEND THEM.—See The Graphic.

LITHOGRAPHY } MAPS, PLANS, MEDICAL PLATES
CIRCULARS, &c., executed by

JOHN FALCONER,
53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

BINDING "THE IRISH LAW TIMES."
SUBSCRIBERS are informed that they can have THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, with TITLE PAGE and Copious INDEX, Bound at the following Prices, per Volume, viz.:—Whole-bound in Cloth, 2s. 6d.; half-bound in Law Calf, 4s.; whole-bound in Law Calf, 6s. 6d.; also, THE IRISH LAW TIMES REPORTS, or PUBLIC GENERAL STATUTES can be bound separately at the following charges each:—Whole-bound in Cloth, 1s. 9d.; half-bound in Law Calf, 3s.

AT THE OFFICE,
53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

CASES for holding THE IRISH LAW TIMES, AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, for One Year, can be had, Lettered on side, Price—half-bound Leather, 4s.; whole-bound Leather, 6s., by Post 4d. extra, at the Office of the Journal, 53 UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS.

(Royal Route via Orkney and Caledonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Lochawe, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Stornoway, &c. Official Guide, 8d.; Illustrated, 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Fares free, at CARSON BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post from the owner, DAVID MACBRATNE, 119 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Banks, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEEDED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane. 63

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. FERRY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

HENDRICK and CO.,
PRINTERS, STATIONERS, SCRIVENERS,
and ARTISTS' WAREHOUSE,
28 CLARE-STREET,
DUBLIN. 106

PATENT OFFICE, DUBLIN.

J. K. FAHIE & SON, Consulting Engineers and Patent Agents, 2, Nassau-street, Dublin, and 323, High Holborn, London, transact every description of business relating to Patents for Inventions, Registration of Designs, Copyrights, and Trade Marks. Authors of "Hand-book on British and Foreign Patent Law." A paper on the Law of Copyright &c., to be had on application, price 3s. 31

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES and INVESTIGATIONS

CONDUCTED BY

MR. THOMAS DEANE,

17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange),

Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.

Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.

References.

ESTABLISHED 1878.

167

IRISH LAW TIMES.

WANTED the following Numbers, for which full price will be given:—53, 54, 56, 68, 104, 112, 117, 208, 210. Apply—53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

D. W. CARROLL,

44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTEPAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers.
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of

LEATHER GOODS,

Comprising Bags, Purses, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges.
Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge.

72

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,

No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.

J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees, Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.

Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.

91

STOKES BROTHERS,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS and AUDITORS,

LONDON and LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN. 298

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS and AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES &amp; CO.,

73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

N. PETERSON &amp; SON,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS and AUDITORS.

LIVERPOOL and LONDON CHAMBERS,
1, FOSTER-PLACE, COLLEGE-GREEN,
DUBLIN. 813

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS and SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK for STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens: it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each. 581

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S. F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c. for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111 GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's).

Late of WATERHOUSE &amp; Co.'s

90

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE,

Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection.

10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps.

21, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID,

Curls the straightest and most ungovernable Hair, 3s. 6d., sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE,

To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His GREAT HAIR RESTORER,

3s. 6d.; it changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles.

As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 3s. 6d.; his DEPILATORY for removing Hair and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers. 7

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 26, 1882.

No. 813

RIGHT TO COSTS OUT OF PARTICULAR ESTATE OR FUND IN LITIGATION.—III

WHILE it is hoped that our contribution on this subject will be found practically useful, especially by reason of its many citations of cases not elsewhere collected, nor to be found without some degree of troublesome research such as we have devoted to the matter, incomplete indeed would be a treatment excluding discussion of the important and moot topic of the right of appeal in cases of the kind under notice, particularly as it has been the subject of adjudication both in England, Canada, and America, in three decisions reported so recently as July 29th, August 1st, and July 12th, respectively.

Where the subject-matter of a suit has been settled before litigation, the case will not be entertained merely in order to determine who is entitled to costs: Griffin v. Brady, 39 L. J. Ch. 136; and see the Canadian cases of Re Holden, 39 U. C. R. 88; Samson v. Haggart, 25 Gr. 543. And it is on the same principle that, with certain exceptions, appeals for costs alone will not be allowed, for the court will not investigate the merits for the mere purpose of deciding on the incidence of the costs: Owen v. Griffith, 1 Ves. Sen. 249; Palmer v. Walesy, L. R. 3 Ch. 736; and see the Scottish cases of M'Alay v. Adam, 1 S. & M'L. 665; Clyne's Trustees v. Dunnet, M'L. & Rob. 48; Inglis v. Mansfield, 3 Cl. & Fin. 371; and the American cases of Dodge v. Stanhope, 20 Amer. L. Reg. 828; Canter v. Amer., &c., Ins. Co., 3 Pet. 307; Elastic Fabrics Co. v. Smith, 100 U. S. 112; Lubker v. The "N. H. Quimby", 8 Rep. (Amer.) 806; Wood v. Weimer, 25 Alb. L. J. 298; and see Daniel, Ch. Pr., 5th ed., 1332; Eiffe, Jud. Act, 115; Wilson, Jud. Act, 3rd ed., 60; Seton, Decrees, 4th ed., 1603. "Ordinarily," observed Bradley, J., delivering the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the recent case of Trustees, &c., v. Greenough, according to the Reporter (Boston, U. S.) of July 12th, 1882 (S. C. 14 Cent. L. J. 469, 25 Alb. L. J. 492) "a decree will not be reviewed by this court on a question of costs merely, in a suit of equity, although the court has entire control of the matter of costs, as well as the merits, when it has possession of the cause on appeal from the final decree. But it was held by Lord Cottenham, in the case of Angell v. Davis, 4 Myl. & Cr. 360, that when the case is not one of personal costs, in which the court has ordered one party to pay them, but a case in which the court has directed them to be paid out of a particular fund, an appeal lies on the part of those interested in the fund. Lord Cottenham, indeed, suggested other cases in which an appeal might lie from a decree for costs, as where the costs are part of the specific relief prayed; and where the whole of the facts distinctly appear upon the face of the proceedings themselves, so that it is not necessary, in determining the question, to enter into any investigation of the merits. But these suggestions have not met with subsequent approval; and in the case of Taylor v. Dowlen, 4 Ch. App. 697, the court declared that they were not disposed to extend the case of Angell v. Davis, and dismissed an appeal brought by parties ordered to pay costs, which they claimed should be payable out of a fund. But these discussions in the English courts arose under a system in which appeals from interlocutory orders are allowed. We can only entertain an appeal from a final decree; and supposing the objection to the appeal on the ground of its being from a decree for costs only is untenable, as we think it is, then arises another question, whether the orders appealed from amount to a final decree." On this question, suffice it to say that it was held that a decree made by a circuit court, directing payment of costs and expenses, out of a trust fund in court, to the complainant, the fund, in the mean time, remaining in the court in course of administration, was pro tanto a final decree from which an appeal lay. The other question it is, on which the English cases were glanced at, with which we have here to do.

Now in Owen v. Griffith, ubi supra, an appeal for costs, on behalf of an incumbrancer who had been deprived of them and ordered to pay the plaintiff's costs, was entertained by Lord Hardwicke, it being said that the incumbrancer had a lien on the estate for costs, as well as for his demand, and therefore the deprivation of costs affected the merits of the case—or, in effect, that where a person deprived of costs has a "right" to them, he can appeal. Then, we have the case of Angell v. Davis, already mentioned; and again, there is Cotterell v. Stratton (L. R. 8 Ch. App. 295; see 2 Fish. Mtge., 3rd ed., 1002-4), where, in a suit to redeem, a mortgagee, not guilty of vexatious or oppressive conduct, was refused his costs of suit, Lord Selborne saying: "The right of a mortgagee, in a suit for redemption or foreclosure, to his general costs of suit, unless he has forfeited them by some improper defence or other misconduct, is well established, and does not rest upon any exercise of that discretion of the court which, in litigious causes, is generally not subject to review. The contract between mortgagor and mortgagee, as it is understood in this court, makes the mortgage as a security, not only for principal and interest, and such ordinary charges and expenses as are usually provided for by the instrument creating the security, but also for the costs properly incident to a suit for foreclosure or redemption. In like manner, the contract between the author of a trust and his trustees entitles the trustees to all their proper costs incident to the execution of the trust, by way of indemnity out of the trust estate, as between themselves and the cestui que trust. These rights, resting substantially upon contract, can only be lost or curtailed by such inequitable conduct on the part of a mortgagee or trustee as may amount to a violation or culpable neglect of his duty under the contract." But while, as we have seen, Angell v. Davis failed to command plenary approval in Taylor v. Dowlen, so, the effect of Cotterell v. Stratton was qualified considerably by Re Hoskins' Trusts (6 Ch. Div. 281, following Taylor v. Dowlen), where James, L.J., holding that an appeal for costs will not lie where a trustee has been deprived of them on account of impropriety of conduct, said: "A case where a trustee has been deprived of costs for impropriety of conduct is no exception from the general rule, that an appeal for costs alone will not lie;" adding, after stating that the rule has been adopted by the Judicature Act (see Jud. Act, s. 52, Ir.; Jud. Act, 1873, s. 49, Eng.), except where the trustee is entitled to costs out of a particular estate or fund: "The present is not a case where the appellant is ex debito iustitiae entitled to costs, the costs of a trustee being subject to the discretion of the court." This being directly in conflict with the law laid down in Cotterell v. Stratton, we next find that in Re Chennell (6 Ch. Div. 492), where it was held that an order directing payment to a trustee of his "costs, charges, and expenses" of action, properly incurred, is not an order as to "costs only" which are "left to the discretion of the court," within the meaning of the Jud. Act, and therefore that an appeal from such an order would lie without the leave of the court, it seems to have been considered that the fact that costs have been ordered to be paid out of a particular fund, or by a particular person, will not render an appeal from the order the less an appeal for costs, such a direction being a mere incident of the order as to the mode of payment—a result arrived at on the construction of O. L.V., Eng. (Jud. Act, s. 53, Ir.), and opposed to the view taken before the Jud. Act, in such cases as Angell v. Davis (ubi supra). Jessel, M.R., was one of the judges who so decided in Re Chennell; but, we also find him a party to the subsequent decision in Farrow v. Austin (18 Ch. Div. 281), where, an executrix having been refused her costs in the court below on the ground that an administration suit instituted by her was unnecessary, it was held on appeal that she was entitled to costs out of the estate, and had been guilty of no misconduct so as to give the court power to deprive her of "her right to costs," that the costs were therefore not in the discretion of the court, and that an appeal lay from the order as to costs. The previous decisions on the subject, however, were not there cited; and considering how they conflict, it is the more satisfactory now to have yet another determination on the subject. This is presented in the recent case of Turner v. Hancock, reported in the Law Times of July 29th, holding that, although in an action a trustee may be deprived of his costs out of the estate, such costs are not in the discretion of the court, and an appeal lies without leave from an order as to them; Cotterell v. Stratton being approved, Farrow v. Austin followed, and Re Hoskins' Trusts disapproved; both Jessel, M.R., and Cotton, L.J., appearing to consider that the same rule would apply in proceedings under the Trustee Relief Act. (Et cf. Johnstone v. Cox, 19 Ch. Div. 17; Etherington v. Wilson, 1 Ch. Div. 160; Rowcliffe v. Leigh, 26 W. R. 726; In re Rio Grande Do Sul Steamship Co., 5 Ch. Div. 282; Ex p. Russell, ubi supra; Dryden v. Dryden, 3 Australian L. T. 43; Re New York Prot., &c., School, 25 Alb. L. J. 34.) And still more recently we have the case of Re Woodhall, reported in the Canada Law Journal of the 1st inst., where it was decided as follows:—Costs should not be given out of the estate in administration proceedings, unless it appears that the litigation has been in its origin directed with some show of reason, and a proper foundation for the benefit of the estate, or has in its result conduced to that benefit; and, therefore, in this case, where no benefit was shown to anyone by the administration proceedings, as the same result would have been secured without suit, if the plaintiff had not acted so precipitately, and the said proceedings were taken against the will of the adult beneficiaries, it was held that the expense to which the other parties had been put should be paid by the plaintiff, and the order requiring her to pay the costs should be affirmed, according to the rules laid down in Mackenzie v. Taylor, 7 Beav. 467, as explained in Hilliard v. Fulford, 4 Ch. D. 389, and Rosebatch v. Parry, 27 Gr. 193; and further, following Farrow v. Austin, 18 Ch. D. 58, that the question of the residuary legatees' costs is an appealable matter.

Thus, after so much doubt and diversity in the English decisions, the subject seems at last to have been settled in the same way contemporaneously both in England and across the Atlantic, nor can we doubt the salutariness of the result; while, on the other hand, a different result "would tend to destroy, or at least very materially to shake and impair the security of mortgage transactions and the safety of trustees," as Lord Selborne observed in Cotterell v. Stratton, and would also, as he says, "deprive the latter class [i.e., 'those who repose confidence as to property in their friends or neighbours'] of the assistance of all who cannot afford, or are not inclined to bestow upon the affairs of other persons their money as well as their trouble and time." "The old practice of the Court of Chancery, which was so severe upon trustees," as Sir G. Jessel, M.R., remarked in Turner v. Hancock, "had a tendency not only to stop honest people from undertaking the office of a trustee, but was an injury to cestuis que trust by frequently compelling them to employ as trustees the very persons by whose acts they were likely to suffer loss, namely, those unscrupulous persons who are willing to undertake the office for the purpose of making profit by it"; and it is satisfactory indeed, that, as so recently exemplified and affirmed in this case, "it is not the course of the court in modern times to discourage persons from becoming trustees, by making those trustees who have done their duty honestly liable for having made mistakes through a mere error of judgment, or for having committed innocent breaches of trust."

MR JUSTICE O'HAGAN.

Referring to Mr. O. Lewis's criticisms in the House of Commons on the appointment of Mr. Justice O'Hagan as a land commissioner, based on the fact of the learned judge having in his younger days, written and published some verses, couched in rather strong language, and entitled "The Union," the Law Times says: Mr. Lewis has since written a letter to a London newspaper, in which he states that a new edition of the verses is now on sale in London and Dublin, and that in May last he "wrote Mr. Justice O'Hagan, drawing his attention to the republication, and giving him a distinct opportunity of renouncing all connexion with or approbation of the present circulation of his extraordinary views and verses, but that he declined to avail himself of it." Mr. Lewis adds, that he feels sure "that no moralist or lawyer could, under the circumstances, hesitate to hold Mr. Justice O'Hagan to be responsible for them as a present production." We cannot see what ground of complaint Mr. Lewis has. It is unfair to suppose that because, in his youth, Mr. Justice O'Hagan entertained a certain opinion regarding an historical event, or because he still holds the same opinion, he is to be deemed unfit to perform the duties of a land commissioner. It is very certain that, however well or ill he performs his duties, his conduct will not do much towards obtaining a dissolution of the union between England and Ireland.

LIBELS ON THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

The principles upon which Mr. Justice Lawson acted in regard to Mr. Gray in the case of Regina v. Hynes are well recognised in point of law. Almost as soon as newspapers began the practice of commenting on proceedings in court, it was laid down that while the discussion of the merits of a verdict or the decision of a judge with candour and decency was permissible, it was an indelible libel to publish an invective against judges or juries with a view to bring the administration of justice into suspicion or contempt. The best known case is that of White, who in 1808 was convicted at the Guildhall of a libel in a newspaper on Mr. Justice Le Blanc and the jury who had tried a case of murder at the Old Bailey. White was sentenced to three years' imprisonment. The principles on which a judge may act summarily for contempt of Court are not so clearly defined; but he is justified in so doing when immediate action is necessary. The libels in the Freeman's Journal were calculated to inflame public feeling against the jurymen in question, and to demoralise jurymen in subsequent trials; and they proceeded from the officer of the Court specially charged by the law with the duty of supplying jurymen to the Court and protecting them in the discharge of their functions. When an indictment would be nugatory, a summary conviction for contempt of Court is the right proceeding. Mr. Gray is very far from being the first high sheriff who has been so convicted. More than one instance of sheriffs being pronounced guilty of contempt has occurred on the circuits in England within the last few years; but the offence has generally been some unintentional want of respect to the judge, condoned by an ample apology, and not in the end calling for the presence of the coroner, as the qualified executive officer of the law in cases in which the sheriff is personally concerned.—Law Journal.

THE NEW MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY BILL.

Quietly, and almost unobserved by the mass of the persons whom it will affect, a Bill fraught with no small consequence to nearly half the community has been passing through Parliament. The Married Women's Property Bill was brought from the Lords as long ago as May 22. In the Commons it was blocked by the tactics of Mr. Warton. But it has been triumphant even over him, and was read a third time on Tuesday, August 15, and the amendments of the Commons were agreed to on Wednesday, August 16, by the Lords. More than once in other years the measure seemed on the point of passing, and yet was at the last moment shunted, owing to those vague but potent reasons known as "the state of public business." The Bill has not been advanced to its final stage without deliberation. It has been subjected to the scrutiny of three Select Committees; it has been amended in the Lords; and if the authors and friends of the Bill have proceeded upon wrong lines, they have done so with malice prepense. The policy of the measure may be good or bad, but there can be no mistake about the magnitude of the change which it will introduce. It is intended to amend and consolidate the Acts of 1870 and 1874; but it is much more than a consolidation Bill. The first section shows the sweeping character of the alterations which it may make in the economy of many English households. When the Bill becomes law a married woman will be capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing, by will or otherwise, of real or personal property as her separate estate, just as if she were single. The intervention of trustees and the rest of the apparatus of settlements will not be requisite. At common law—and with some modifications the same still holds good—a married woman could not enter into any contracts; if she went through the form of doing so, the result was null. She was more helpless in this respect than infants and lunatics, the two classes in whose company she habitually figured in English law. Everything which she acquired, no matter in what manner, went to her husband, and at death to his personal representatives. If she were injured in a railway accident and recovered damages, she might see the compensation spent by her husband as he in his wisdom or folly thought fit. A married woman might work hard and earn money as an artist or a washerwoman. Her receipt for the price of her labour was no receipt at all, and the person who trusted to it and paid her might have to do so twice over. In several respects this has already been altered, and greater changes are proposed. Under this Bill every married woman will be capable of "entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of and to the extent of her separate property on any contract, and of suing and being sued, either in contract or in tort, or otherwise, in all respects as if she were a feme sole, and her husband need not be joined with her as plaintiff or defendant, or be made a party to any action or other legal proceeding brought by or taken against her." Hereafter the damages which she recovers for a broken leg or injured reputation will be her separate property. An important change will be effected by the adoption of the clause which proposes to enact that every contract into which a married woman enters will be deemed to be a contract binding her separate estate, unless the contrary be shown. A leading presumption of law will thus, apparently, be altered at a stroke. Of still more consequence is the proposal that in the case of any woman married after the measure comes into operation, she shall hold as her separate estate and be free to dispose of, without limitations as to amount, "all real and personal property which shall belong to her at the time of marriage, or shall be acquired by or devolve upon her after marriage." Thus, at a stroke, goes the prime necessity for settlements. Not content with making this measure prospective, the framers of it boldly go on to say, "Every woman married before the commencement of this Act shall be entitled to have and to hold and to dispose of in manner aforesaid, as her separate property, all real and personal property, her title, to which, whether vested or contingent, and whether in possession, reversion, or remainder, shall accrue after the commencement of this Act, including any wages, earnings, money, and property so gained or acquired by her as aforesaid." Compared with these clauses, most of the others are tame and commonplace. But it is, perhaps, worth while to note that the Bill proposes to give every married woman the same civil and criminal remedies against all persons, and, subject to certain exceptions, "including her husband," for the protection and security of her separate property as if it belonged to a feme sole; that, conversely, a wife is to be liable to criminal proceedings by her husband, if she deals improperly with his property; and that if she happens to carry on trade separately from her husband she may be made bankrupt.

An exaggerated conception of the area covered by the measure would be got if we lost sight of a few substantial qualifications which undo not a little of the effect of the most salient clauses of the Bill. It is not intended, for instance, to interfere with existing settlements. There is, too, no proposal to withdraw or curtail the power of making future settlements, unless so far as it is necessary to give creditors the same rights over the property of a married woman who engages in trade and is unable to pay her debts as they now possess in the case of a bankrupt trader. To avert an obvious scandal which would be produced by the adoption of one of the clauses without check or limit, the framers of the Bill say that as to any property "no criminal proceedings shall be taken by any wife against her husband by virtue of this Act while they are living together." Nevertheless this legislation marks a notable advance and heralds some curious social changes. In 1870 the Legislature had its eye directed almost solely to the hardship, which was undeniable, of permitting a husband, who might be wholly remiss in his duties as bread-winner of the family, to sweep away all the earnings made by his wife's pen, pencil, or needle. With general approbation Parliament then took measures to secure the remuneration gained by married women in separate trades, or in the exercise of literary, artistic, or scientific skill. In 1874 Parliament returned to the subject, but only to touch it lightly and perfunctorily. The new measure is more important than either of its predecessors. Unlike them, it is based upon a principle, and one radically different from the principle which has hitherto been supreme in regard to married women's property.

The presumption always has hitherto been that everything which a woman had at marriage or which she afterwards obtained passed to her husband. For centuries that principle has been applied, almost without mitigation, to the poor, and, indeed, to the greater part of the middle classes, who have no family solicitors at their elbows, and are not much concerned about the transmission of property. Until the measures which we have named, and others designed to protect the earnings of women who were deserted by their husbands, were adopted, the Common Law was, in fact, the marriage law of the poor. For the rich there was another law. Men whose daughters were entitled to property took care, as a rule, to settle it to their separate use; and accordingly the well-to-do classes of the community know little of the rigour of the rules which we have stated. Under this Bill the wife of a costermonger will have, in effect, an Act of Parliament settlement. An important legal presumption will be altered, and we shall not have to wait long to observe the result. Those who do not marry without settlements of some sort will continue in the same course; but the millions who do not will live under a law which gives a feme covert much the same rights as a feme sole. Other consequences, perhaps more momentous, are latent in the measure, which will leave little of the Common Law intact. It probably portends indirect social effects much greater than the disposition of property, and it may in the end pulverise some ideas which have been at the basis of English life. Measures which affect the family economy are apt to be "epoch making;" and probably when the most talked of Bills of the Session are clean forgotten this obscure measure may be bearing fruit.—Times.

The present Married Women's Property Act has adopted a plain general rule. All property of whatever kind and to whatever amount, which is inherited by or bequeathed to or gained by a married woman, is to belong to her, just as if she were single, apart from all control of her husband. The Act is retrospective; that is, it applies to a woman married before the Act, but only as to property which comes over to her after the Act. In compensation the wife is to be responsible for her own debts incurred before marriage and afterwards; she is liable to support her own children if the husband cannot, and even to support her husband if he would otherwise go upon the rates and she has money. The law has thus, for all sorts and conditions of women, been brought into accordance with public sentiment. We have lagged behind not only other nations in Europe in doing so, but behind our own kith and kin in the United States and in many of the colonies. The reason, no doubt, was that the richer classes, the "vocal" classes, those who had the ear of Parliament, were practically satisfied with the system of settlements. All women are now brought within the pale. It is to be hoped that the knowledge among even the lowest and roughest, that a woman is no longer a poor wretch with no rights and nothing she can call her own, though it is earned by the sweat of her brow, will tend to give her increased protection. Seeing how many women among the poor are bread-winners and money-spinners, the chances of their bread being changed for gin, and the money spent by the man on himself alone may be considerably diminished. The most lawless domestic tyrant ought to be influenced by the fact that his victim is under the protection of the law.—Pall Mall Gazette.

ARREARS OF RENT (IRELAND) ACT, 1882.

RULES.

The 22nd day of August, 1882.

It is this day ordered that the following general rules and orders shall from this date until further order take effect and be in force in the Land Commission in relation to all proceedings held or taken under and in pursuance of the Arrears of Rent (Ireland) Act, 1882 (hereinafter termed the Act), or any part of any Act incorporated therewith.

1. The tribunal by which applications under the Act are to be heard shall be the Land Commission, or any member or members thereof, provided that the Land Commission may by special order delegate the power of hearing any application or applications under this Act to any Legal Assistant-Commissioner.

2. All the existing rules under the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, shall, so far as applicable, be in force as regards proceedings under the Act.

3. In the interpretation of these rules, the term Treasury shall mean the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, and such person or persons as the Treasury may, from time to time, appoint to represent them, and so notify to the Land Commission, shall, for all the purposes of these rules, be deemed to be the Treasury; and, in every case in which the landlord is mentioned, his land agent, to whom the tenants' rent has been usually paid, may, for all the purposes of these rules, stand in the place of such landlord.

4. The notice to be served by either landlord or tenant ten days previous to making application pursuant to the Act may be in Form A, and shall be served on the landlord or his agent, or on the tenant, as the case may be, in manner provided by the rules relating to service of Originating Notices.

5. The mode of making application under this Act, and the manner in which any tenant shall set out any property or effects, or to which he may be possessed or entitled, and which would be applicable to any arrears of rent, shall be as set forth in the ensuing rules.

6. When the application is made by landlord and tenant jointly, it may be in Form B, and may be verified by the affidavit of the tenant, and also of the landlord or his agent, pursuant to Section 14 of the Act.

7. Where two or more tenants of the same landlord are comprised in such joint application, such application may be in Form C. Provided that no more than twenty tenants shall be comprised in one of such forms.

8. Upon receipt of an application pursuant to Form B or C, duly verified as aforesaid, the Land Commission may make a Conditional Order for payment to or for the benefit of the landlord, of such sum as pursuant to the statute, may be so paid.

9. Notice of the making of such Conditional Order shall be served by the Land Commission upon the Treasury, and in the absence of any notice from the Treasury requiring the case to be investigated (which notice may be in Form D), the Land Commission may at the expiration of a fortnight from the date of service, make the Conditional Order absolute.

10. When the application is made by the tenant, the same may be in Form E.

11. When the application is made by the landlord, the same may be in Form F.

12. Every application made by a tenant, and every application made by a landlord and tenant or tenants jointly, shall be accompanied by a Schedule or Schedules of the property, effects, and liabilities of the tenant or respective tenants, pursuant to Form G.

13. Every application under the Act shall be served upon the Land Commission; and every application in Form E or Form F shall also be served on the opposite party, whether landlord or tenant. Notices served on the Land Commission under the Act should be directed to "The Comptroller of Arrears, Land Commission, Dublin."

14. On receipt of any application by landlord or tenant, or by both jointly, where the same is not accompanied by such affidavits as aforesaid, the Land Commission shall refer the same to one or more of the persons appointed for that purpose, to investigate and report as to the existence or non-existence of the preliminary conditions required to be proved for orders under the Act, and as to the value of the holdings. Due notice of such inquiries shall be given to the landlord and tenant respectively, and also to the Treasury.

15. The report of the investigator may be in Form H. 16. On return of the report the Land Commission may make a Conditional Order for payment to or for the benefit of the landlord, of such sum as he shall be entitled to pursuant to the statute. Notice of such Conditional Order shall be served upon the parties respectively, and on the Treasury; and in case no notice showing cause is in the meantime given, the Court may, at the expiration of one week after the service of such notice, make an Absolute Order.

17. Notice of motion of showing cause against making the Conditional Order absolute may be in Form I, and shall in every case specify the grounds of objection, and shall be heard by the Land Commission or any member thereof, and the Land Commission shall make such Order thereon, either disallowing the cause and making the Conditional Order absolute, or delegating the case to be heard and decided by a Legal Assistant-Commissioner, or remitting the same for further investigation and report as they shall deem just.

18. Notice of the Absolute Order for payment to or for the benefit of the landlord of the sum payable to him pursuant to the statute may be in Form J, and shall be transmitted to the landlord, and a certificate in Form K shall be transmitted to the tenant.

19. When the landlord is himself entitled to receive the sum so ordered to be paid, he shall apply to the Land Commission by a verified claim, which may be in Form L or M, as the case may be.

20. When the landlord is not himself the person entitled to receive the entire sum ordered to be paid, it shall be lawful for him to apply to the Court by a verified claim, which may be in Form N or O, as the case may be, stating the person or persons to whom such sum is payable.

21. No actual payment of the sum so ordered, or of any part thereof, shall be made for one calendar month from the date of the order directing same to be paid to or for the benefit of the landlord.

22. It shall be lawful for any incumbrancer, receiver, trustee, or other person claiming to be entitled to the whole or any part of the sum ordered to be paid to or for the benefit of the landlord, at any time before the actual payment is made, to serve notice on the Land Commission, which notice may be in Form P, claiming to be entitled to or interested in the sum theretofore ordered, or which may be thereafter ordered to be paid, and a copy of such notice shall also be served by the claimant on the landlord.

23. In all cases in which any such notice as is mentioned in the last rule is served, the Land Commission shall before making any payment give notice to the party or parties making such claim, and shall adjudicate on all such claims, and make orders for payment accordingly.

24. Public notice of the intention of the Land Commission to direct payment of moneys lodged in court by tenants pursuant to Sec. 1, Sub-Sec. 5, to the person appearing to be entitled thereto as landlord shall be from time to time given as the Land Commission may direct.

25. Persons appointed to investigate and report as to the existence or non-existence in the case of holdings of the preliminary conditions required to be proved, for the purpose of orders under the Act, shall hold their inquiry in any public court-house within the district, or in such other place as they shall deem most expedient.

26. They shall hear the evidence tendered on behalf of the landlord and tenant respectively, as well as on behalf of any person authorized by the Treasury to appear on their behalf; they may summon witnesses, and cause the production of all documents which may appear to them to be necessary or proper for the purposes of the inquiry.

27. An appeal may be made from any order of a Legal Assistant-Commissioner within one fortnight from the date of such order, and notice of such appeal may be in Form Q, and shall be served on the Land Commission and on the opposite side.

28. The parties shall, as a general rule, bear their own expenses of the hearing of applications under the Act, but the Land Commission, or any member thereof, or the Legal Assistant-Commissioner duly delegated, may in particular cases, if they deem it just, direct costs to be paid by one party to the other. For the purpose of this rule, the person or persons representing the Treasury intervening shall be deemed a party.

29. Costs of appeals shall be in all cases in the discretion of the Land Commission, or the member or members thereof hearing such appeal.

30. Where either the landlord or tenant applies for an Order cancelling the rentcharge charged on a holding for the repayment of an advance made in pursuance of the 59th section of the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, such application may be in the Form R, or Form S, as the circumstances require.

31. Every such application of the tenant shall be accompanied by an affidavit of the tenant and a schedule in Form G, and every such application by the landlord may be accompanied by a like affidavit of the tenant and a like schedule. Notice of application by either landlord or tenant under the 16th section should be given to the other of them at least ten days before such application is made.

32. Where the landlord and tenant of a holding valued at a sum not exceeding £50 a year, make joint application for an advance pursuant to section 16 of the Act, such application may be in Form T, and shall be signed by the landlord or his agent on his behalf, and by the tenant or tenants who shall concur in such application. It shall moreover be verified by the landlord or his agent, and by the tenant or tenants as provided for in such form. No more than twenty tenants shall be comprised in any one such application; but where more than twenty tenants concur, several applications shall be made, each such application containing any number not exceeding twenty.

33. If the tenant or any of the tenants concurring in an application under section 16 of the Act be a tenant or tenants evicted for nonpayment of rent, or whose holdings have been sold and purchased by the landlord, and possession taken by him since the 1st of May, 1880, the application shall, in addition to complying with the requirements mentioned in the preceding rule, contain an undertaking on the part of the landlord to reinstate such tenant or tenants upon the terms in said section set forth.

JOHN O'HAGAN.
E. F. LITTON.
JOHN E. VERNON.
MONCK.

[Seal of the Irish Land Commission]

EQUITABLE MORTGAGE BY DEPOSIT OF TITLE DEEDS—THE AMERICAN AND ENGLISH RULE.

(From the Central Law Journal.)

An interesting and instructive article on this subject, carefully prepared, as far as the English law is involved, appeared in the Central Law Journal of June 2, reprinted from the IRISH LAW TIMES. It presents a full, clear, and accurate view of the English law, but it does not discuss nor explain the decisions of the American courts on this important topic of the law, as it now exists in the jurisprudence of this country.

It is true that some of our most distinguished writers and jurists followed the decisions of the English Courts. Mr. Justice Story held: "Mortgages may not only be created by the express deeds and contracts of the parties, but they may also be implied in equity from the nature of the transactions between the parties, and then they are termed equitable mortgages. Thus, for instance, it is now settled in England (and some American States), that if the debtor deposits his title deeds to an estate with a creditor, as security for an antecedent debt, or upon a fresh loan of money, it is a valid agreement for a mortgage between the parties, and is not within the operation of the Statute of Frauds. This doctrine has sometimes been thought difficult to be maintained, either upon the ground of principle or public policy. And although it is firmly established, it has of late years been received with no small hesitation and disapprobation, and a disposition has been strongly evinced not to enlarge its operation."<sup>1</sup>

Chancellor Kent, with much learning and more explicitness, held the same views, and, after reviewing the decisions of the English Courts, says: "But the decision in Russell v. Russell has withstood all subsequent assaults upon it, and the principle is now deemed established in the English law, that a mere deposit of title

(1) 2 Story Eq. Jur., sec. 1020.
(2) 4 Kent, 151.

deeds, upon an advance of money, without a word passing, gives an equitable lien."<sup>3</sup> In the year 1820, the Supreme Court of the United States held the same views. Mr. Justice Story, delivering the opinion of the Court, said: "It is argued that bills being prima facie evidence of an equivalent advance made by Prior, the possession by the latter of the articles of agreement, and the delivery to him of the accounts signed by Mandeville and Jameson, afford a legal presumption that the articles and account were delivered to him as security for a debt, which lien has always been deemed equivalent to an equitable mortgage. It may be admitted that, according to the course of the authorities in England, and as applicable to the state of land titles there, a deposit of title deeds does, in the cases alluded to, create a lien, which will be recognised as an equitable mortgage, and will entitle the party to call for an assignment of the property included in the title deeds."<sup>4</sup> The weight of the authority of Chancellor Kent and Mr. Justice Story, on all questions of jurisprudence, is equal to any jurists in England or America, and without disputing its force and accuracy, at the time they wrote, and when the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, in Mandeville v. Welch, was delivered, it is nevertheless true that the doctrine, as then held in England and the United States, has in the latter undergone a decided change, though still held in some of the States, as it is understood and prevails in England.

In the United States the doctrine of the authorities adverse to the English view of the law on this subject is equally as weighty and logically more impressive. "The doctrine of equitable mortgages arising upon the deposit of title deeds does not prevail generally in this country. It has, however, been adopted and distinctly acted upon in the case of Rockwell v. Hobby,<sup>5</sup> in New York. The assistant vice-chancellor there says: 'In the absence of all other proof of the evidence of an advance of money and finding of title deeds of the borrower in the possession of the lender is held to establish an equitable mortgage.' In South Carolina the doctrine also appears to be admitted as prevailing, though apparently in Kentucky and clearly in Mississippi it is rejected."<sup>6</sup> In Vermont the question has been lately treated judicially as an open one.<sup>7</sup> Some of the courts of this country have, however, held that an engagement in writing to give a mortgage, or a mortgage defectively executed, or any imperfect attempt to create a mortgage, or to appropriate specific property to the discharge of a particular debt, will create a mortgage in equity, or a specific lien, which will have the precedence of subsequent creditors.<sup>8</sup> Washburn says: "It was doubtful, until within a recent period, whether this species of lien, or equitable mortgage, was, or would be, recognised by any of the courts of this country as valid."<sup>9</sup> This distinguished author treats the subject with great fairness and ability, and his views are clear and impressive, notwithstanding the difficulties that attend a decision on it in the face of able authority on each side. He cites the case of Williams v. Stratton,<sup>9</sup> and remarks: "But the deposit of title deeds will not be held to create a mortgage in Pennsylvania, still if it is accompanied by a written declaration, and an agreement to convey the land if the debt intended to be secured be not paid, and this is recorded in the proper registry of deeds, it will be treated as a mortgage. Indeed it is not easy to see why such a doctrine should prevail in a country where the system of registration is universal, and where it must be carried out, if at all, in direct violation of the Statute of Frauds."<sup>10</sup>

The above wise and accurate view of Washburn deserves great consideration, on account of the conflict among distinguished jurists on this subject, and especially as it accords with the learned opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, delivered as late as 1856, and may be considered as overruling the case of Mandeville v. Welch, decided in 1820. Mr. Justice Campbell, delivering the opinion of the court in the latest case before it, said: "Nor can the real property conveyed in the deed be retained as security for advances or debts subsequently made on the strength of a parol engagement. Such a contract would be avoided by the Statute of Frauds."<sup>11</sup>

We think the following remark of Lord Eldon, in Ex parte Hooper,<sup>12</sup> true, wise, and applicable wherever the Statute of Frauds exists: "The doctrine of equitable mortgage by deposit of title deed has been too long established to be now disputed; but it may be said that it ought never to have been established. I am still more dissatisfied with the principle upon which I have acted of extending the original doctrine so far as to make the deposit a security for subsequent advances: At all events, the doctrine is not to be enlarged." The only criticism we would offer on the above remark of Lord Eldon's is, that he yielded to authority in preference to principle, truth, and reason, when he saw that the authority to which he gave his adhesion as a judge was wrong, and acknowledged it.

Washburn agrees with Browne; and after opposing the soundness of this doctrine so uniformly sustained in England, says: "But it has been recognised in several of the States as being in force. The power of creating a lien by deposit and pledge of a title deed, seem to be recognised, though not applied, in Maine; and the same may be said of the Court in Mississippi, though an intimation is made that a lien in the nature of an equitable mortgage may be valid under their Statute of Frauds for the term of one year. In Georgia, New Jersey, and South Carolina, the power to create such a lien is recognised, and is expressly sustained in New York, though it is remarked by Comstock, J., 'We have no practice of creating liens in this manner;' and in Rhode Island. The same is true of Wisconsin and Illinois. The law is stated as doubtful in Vermont. This is called an equitable mortgage, but it is of little consequence in this country, owing to the difficulty of affecting another claimant with notice of such deposit."<sup>13</sup>

The American edition of Adams' Equity cites also the cases referred to by Washburn and Browne, but takes no position on the point under discussion.<sup>14</sup> Bispham on "Principles of Equity," an American work of merit and authority, published in 1878, remarks, writing on the subject we are now discussing: "The first case in England in which this doctrine seems to have been authoritatively settled, was Russell v. Russell, decided by Lord Thurlow in 1788, and this decision, though strongly disapproved, has nevertheless been recognised by many cases as binding authority; and the doctrine may, therefore, be considered as well established, in spite of its apparent infringement upon the Statute of Frauds. Mortgages by deposit of title deeds have been sustained in several States of the Union, although they have not been of frequent occurrence. They have been disapproved in Kentucky, and rejected in Pennsylvania and Ohio; in Vermont the question is undecided; in quite a number of cases agreements to give a mortgage have been held to create a lien.<sup>15</sup> Hare and Wallace, American annotators of Leading Cases in

(3) Mandeville v. Welch, 5 Wheat. 377.

(4) 3 Sand. Ch. 9 (1844).

(5) Welch v. Usher, 2 Hill's Ch. (S. C.) 166; Williams v. Stratton, 10 Sm. & Marsh. (Miss.) 418; Gothard v. Flynn, 25 Minn. 58; Van Meter v. McFadden, 8 E. Mon. 435; Bowers v. Oyster, 3 Pa. 239; Shils v. Diefendach, 3 Barr. (Pa.) 285; Bicket v. Madonia, 1 Rawle, 325, 327.

(6) Bicknell v. Bicknell, 31 Vt. 498.

(7) Hose's case, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 125; Bank of Muzington v. Carpenter, 7 Ohio, 71; Lake v. Droud, 10 Id. 418; Doe d. Burgess v. Bank of Cleveland, 3 McLean (C. C.), 140; Reed v. Gellard, 2 Desaus. (S. C.) 552. See Browne on the Statute of Frauds, 61, from which the above authorities are taken.

(8) 2 Washb. on Real Property, 84.

(9) 10 Sm. & M. 418.

(10) 2 Washb. on Real Prop. 84.

(11) Williams v. Hill, 15 How. 344.

(12) 1 Merl. Ch. 7, cited by Mr. Justice Campbell in the case above referred to.

(13) 2 Washb. on Real Property, 84-85. See, also, Walker's American Law, 356, to which Washburn refers, and the cases cited by Washburn are also cited by Browne.

(14) Adams' Eq. 314, 4th American edition. By Henry Wharton.

(15) Bispham's Principles of Equity, 414-416; 13 Leading Cases in Eq., H. & W. American edition, pp. 663-6.

Equity, after presenting a few cases in which it has been held to be in violation of the Statute of Frauds, give also other cases in which it has been held otherwise in the United States.<sup>16</sup> It has been held recently in New Jersey, that an equitable mortgage may arise from a deposit of title deeds, citing as authority from that State, Griffin v. Griffin,<sup>17</sup> and Brewer v. Marshall,<sup>18</sup> and referring also to Leading Cases in Equity, the same edition referred to supra.

Very serious objections to the English decisions on this subject have been expressed by the courts of England, yet, notwithstanding the force of these objections, the decisions are uniform in sustaining the law in favour of the equitable mortgage. It is different in the United States, where the law is in a confused, unsettled, and unsatisfactory state, as far as the weight of authority of our writers on the subject, and also decisions of our highest courts, go in settling this question, the Supreme Courts of the different States presenting great contrariety of views, as we have demonstrated in this article. In a logical, as well as practical, sense we think there can be but little difficulty, notwithstanding the eminent authorities against the view, in following the decisions of those States where, under the Statute of Frauds, all such deposits of legal title deeds, with only a verbal understanding, have been held illegal, and of no force or effect. The weight of authorities, with their unanswerable reasons assigned, is sufficient to sustain the views of those courts following the English decisions, fortified in this country by the position of Story and Kent, from whom it may be embarrassing to dissent.

We refer again to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Williams v. Hill,<sup>19</sup> reversing unanimously its former decision. The reasoning of Campbell, J., by whom the opinion of the court was delivered, is unanswerable. We also refer to the clear and unanswerable views of Washburn and Browne, cited supra, as being the most logical, accurate and just, equal to any commentators on the other side, and sustained by the more enlarged and liberal views of the learned jurists of those State courts with which they are in conformity, and agreeing most conclusively with the literal meaning of the Statute of Frauds on this subject, as it exists in probably every State in the Union.

We need not present to the Bar or Bench the Statute of Frauds, nor its history, as it arose in England under 29 Car. II, amended by 9 Geo. IV., the substance and leading features of which we believe have been adopted in nearly all, if not every State in the Union.<sup>20</sup> In examining these statutes as presented in the appendix to Browne's work on the Statute of Frauds, it is difficult to maintain an equitable mortgage on verbal agreement, in the face of statutes which, in express language, reject and forbid all verbal agreements of such character as would attempt to bind an interest in lands as could be embraced in mortgages which would create a title to said lands; the exceptions applying and designed only to apply to rents for, or within a specified time. A court of equity may decide differently from a court of law on principles of equity; or may give an equitable construction to a statute; yet it cannot create an equity in the face of a statute, and against its provisions; for in a statutory sense, as in equity, equitas sequitur legem. It seems to be equivalent to creating an equitable estate, or rights in opposition to the Statute of Frauds, to say that an equitable mortgage can exist, or be brought into existence by the order of a court, when it rests on no other foundation but a verbal agreement.

The deeds are evidence of one title, and only one as expressed on their face; the possession of those deeds by another cannot, nor ought it to create a new and different interest in opposition to a statute law which requires a written instrument executed according to law to convey, or create any title in lands subject to its exceptions, in positive terms and unequivocal language.—

Wm. ARCHER COCKE.

PRIZE ESSAYS ON FISHING LAW.

At the great International Fisheries Exhibition, 1888, prizes of £100 will be offered for essays on each of the following subjects, among others: The effect of the existing National and International laws for the regulation and protection of Deep Sea Fisheries, with suggestions for improvements in said laws.—Relations of the State with Fishermen and Fisheries, including all matters dealing with their protection and regulation, and home legislation affecting regulations for fishing-vessels, protection of spawning-beds, close time (if any) for salt-water fish.—On improved fishery harbour accommodation for Great Britain and Ireland, indicating the localities most in need of such harbours, the general principles on which they should be constructed, and the policy the State should adopt in aiding and encouraging harbour accommodation for fishing purposes, including the effect of the Passing Tolls Act, 1861, the causes which led to its failure, grants to supplement local efforts, loans at low rate of interest, period to which they should be extended. Prizes of £25 will be offered for essays on each of the following subjects: On the legislation at present applicable to the Salmon Fisheries in Scotland (including the Rivers Tweed and Solway), and the best means of improving it.—On the legislation at present applicable to the Salmon Fisheries in England and Wales, and the best means of improving it.—On the legislation at present applicable to the Salmon Fisheries in Ireland, and the best means of improving it. Every essay must be written in the English language, or must be accompanied by an English translation, and must be sent in so as to arrive at the offices of the Exhibition on or before May 1, 1888.—Further information may be obtained of the secretary, J. W. Mollett, 24 Haymarket, S.W., London.

LAW AND LITERATURE.

The appointment of Mr. Thomas Hughes to a County Court judgeship may, perhaps, do something to weaken the prejudice that literature is incompatible with law. It was proof against the practical test of a man of letters becoming Lord Chancellor, which produced the sarcasm that Lord Brougham would know a little of everything if he knew a little law. When Samuel Warren brought out his "Ten Thousand a Year" his friends professed to be anxious to know who wrote the law in it. Yet Brougham was a good, although not a great, lawyer; and Warren, at least, made an efficient master in lunacy. Probably Sir Walter Scott, who never rose in the law beyond a subordinate post in the Court of Session, suffered through his fame as a writer. The County Court bench has hitherto been free from the suspicion of letters, but the author of "Tom Brown" may find a precedent in the case of the author of "Tom Jones." Fielding was an admirable police magistrate, and his novels gained from his experience in Court, while his law was probably not the worse for his having an imagination.—Law Journal.

It is doubtful whether a more delicate form of bribery will ever be devised than that which is alleged to have been resorted to in the trial of a will case in Baltimore. A new trial is sought on the ground that a beautiful daughter of the contestant was in the court room throughout the trial, carrying on a quiet flirtation with a susceptible young man in the jury box, whereby she so influenced him that he confessed his inability to acquiesce in a verdict against her father. It is further alleged that after the close of the trial the victorious father invited the young juryman to his home, where a de jure acquaintance was substituted for the de facto affair that the young people had gotten up in the court room.—Central Law Journal.

(16) Gale v. Morris, 29 N. J. (Eq.) 323. The same case fully noticed in 7 Cent. L. J. 314, decided in 1877.

(17) 3 C. E. Green, 104.

(18) 4 C. E. Green, 537.

(19) 19 How. 248.

(20) Vide Browne's Statute of Frauds, Appendix with a list of the States having this statute, and the statutes.

LODGERS.

In a previous number of the Justice of the Peace we discussed at some length the precise meaning of the term "lodger" in the eye of the law. The conclusion there arrived at was that the principle as laid down by the Master of the Rolls in the case of Bradley v. Baylis, 45 J. P. 847, 848, might be accepted as finally settled law. It will be remembered that the learned Master of the Rolls there laid it down that where the owner of the house does not let the whole of the house, but resides in a part and retains the control over and right to use the passages and staircases to outer doors, giving the inmates the right of access, there the owner is the occupier of the house, and any inmate, whether he has or has not the exclusive use of the room, is a lodger.

An important case bearing on the subject has recently been decided in the Queen's Bench Division. The case alluded to is that of Ness v. Stephenson, 9 Q. B. D. 245. The following were the facts:—The appellant had levied a distress on the respondent's goods for rent due from the appellant's immediate tenant T. in respect of certain premises. The respondent occupied part of the premises, but no rent was due from her. A notice had been duly served on each of the appellants setting forth that the tenant had no right of property or beneficial interest in the goods so distrained, which were the respondent's property. The respondent occupied the whole of the premises at a yearly rent, except the ground floor, which was used and occupied by the tenant as a shop. There was no front door to the premises except the shop door. There was, however, a door from the house into the yard behind it, and from the yard into a back street. A door inside the building led from the shop into the part in the respondent's occupation. Neither the immediate tenant nor any servant of his lived on the ground floor, which was used as an auction room. No auction had been held there during the 15 or 18 months immediately preceding the distress, but dancing parties had occasionally been held there in the evening. With the exception of the articles in the shop, the furniture on the premises belonged to the respondent. The respondent had access to her part of the house by the back street at all times. At her request, subsequently to the commencement of the tenancy, T. allowed her to have a key of the shop and to use the shop door as a front entrance to her premises. The respondent used to clean the shop and act as caretaker. On the hearing of a summons taken out by the respondent against the appellant, it was contended that the respondent was not a lodger within the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871, but the justices held that she was a lodger, and ordered the appellants to return to her the goods they had distrained. This view of the law was confirmed subsequently by the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court. Field, J., thus deals with the legal inferences to be deduced from the circumstances of the case. "It is reasonably clear," says the learned judge, "that the mere right of exclusive occupation, although of a very considerable part of a dwelling-house, is not inconsistent with the existence of the relation of landlord and lodger, nor does the fact that the landlord does not either by himself or agent sleep or reside in the house prevent the existence of that relation, so also the nature or extent of the landlord's enjoyment of the portion of the house retained by him, or the separate and uncontrolled power of ingress and egress granted to the respondent by the use of a door other than the front or shop door, will not prevent the existence of the relation. Neither is it material that the landlord does not render any service to his tenant. All these are matters which may be taken into consideration for the purpose of answering the question to be decided, but they are all consistent with the retaining of such control and dominion over the house by the landlord as is usually retained by masters of houses let in lodgings, as distinguishable from landlords absolutely letting the tenements, and that retention of control and dominion indicates the existence of the relation of landlord and lodger between himself and his tenants." These remarks will, on examination, be found to be in conformity with those of the Master of the Rolls in Bradley v. Baylis.—Justice of the Peace.

THE CONVEYANCE OF RIGHTS OF ENTRY.

The case of Jenkins v. Jones, reported in the August number of the Law Journal Reports, decides a question of considerable interest in an obscure branch of the law. The case, as the names of the parties suggest, came from Wales, and, as coming thence, almost of course involved the title to land. A share in an estate called Hendra, in Cardigan, was in question. Jenkins, the plaintiff, was heir-at-law, and Jones, the defendant, was devisee of David Lloyd, the person ultimately entitled to the property under a settlement. At the determination, however, of the limitations, one David Evans, the person in possession of the estate, showed no disposition to give it up to either. Thereupon Mr. Jenkins brought an action of ejectment; and the only resource of Evans was to show that, at all events, Mr. Jenkins had no title because Lloyd had made a will, and devised the property to Jones. Mr. Jenkins appreciated the force of this objection, but contrived to overcome it by obtaining, for a ten pound note, a conveyance of Jones's title. The conveyance included a covenant for title and quiet enjoyment. Armed with Jones's title, Jenkins recovered judgment of possession; but was himself in turn ejected by Jones's trustees in bankruptcy, upon an adjudication which took place long before the conveyance to Jenkins. Thereupon Jenkins brought an action against Jones upon his covenant for title, claiming £500 damages, admitted to be the value of the estate. To this sum the Court of Appeal held that he was legally entitled.

It is not impossible that there may be lawyers who will, at first sight, be unable to see the difficulties of the case. The defendant had covenanted with the plaintiff that he had a good title to an estate. It turned out that there was an infirmity in his title; so that the plaintiff lost the estate, which was worth £500. The difficulty, however, arose from a statute of Henry VIII. (32 Hen. VIII, c. 9)—passed, probably, at a time when the confusion of titles produced by the Barons' Wars was reaping a crop of litigation. This statute, which is denominated "the Bill of Bracery and Buying of Titles," and is directed also against maintenance, enacts, by section 2, that "no person or persons, of what estate, degree, or condition soever he or they be, shall from henceforth bargain, buy or sell, or by any ways or means obtain, get, or have any pretended rights or titles, or take, promise, grant, or covenant to have any right or title of any person or persons in or to any manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments (except such person or persons which shall so bargain, sell, give, grant, covenant, or promise the same, their ancestors, or they by whom he or they claim the same, have been in possession of the same or of the reversion or remainder thereof, or taken the rents or profits thereof, by the space of one whole year next before the said bargain, covenant, grant, or promise made), upon pain to forfeit the whole value of the lands." This enactment appears to have puzzled even such learned judges as the Master of the Rolls and Lords Justices Brett and Cotton. It would seem, on the face of it, to forbid the conveyance of any title except by a person who has been in possession of the property for a year. This would be an intelligible interpretation of the statute, although it gives no effect to the word "pretended." That word, it should be observed, is applied to the sale of a title, but not to the covenant for a title. Lord Justice Cotton justly observes that "there can be no reason why it should be penal to take a covenant for sale of rights and titles generally; but, in case of actual sale, penal to sell only when the right and title is pretended." But is any meaning to be attached to the word "pretended" at all, and does not its omission in the second branch of the section show that it was merely intended as a word of contempt, like "so-called"? If the word has that meaning, its omission in the clause as to covenants is intelligible enough. The sale of so-called titles and also of covenants for title are forbidden. We do not know that this construction of the statute helps further to a decision of the case than the construction put upon it by the Court of Appeal, which is that the word "pretenced" is an emphatic word, and must be considered as applying both to the case of sale and of covenant. Either construction brings us face to face with the effect, if any, of 8 & 9 Vict., c. 106, s. 6, which enacts that "after the first day of October, one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, a contingent, an executory and a future interest, and a possibility coupled with an interest, in any tenements or hereditaments of any tenure, whether the object of the gift or limitation of such interest or possibility be or be not ascertained; also a right of entry, whether immediate or future, and whether vested or contingent, into or upon any tenements or hereditaments in England of any tenure, may be disposed of by deed." Does the enactment, allowing a right of entry to be disposed of by deed, conflict with the enactment that pretenced titles shall not be granted except by one in possession? The section quoted from the well-known statute is not, it must be borne in mind, the section which substitutes a grant for the lease and release previously in use among conveyancers. That section is s. 2, which runs: "After the 1st day of October, 1845, all corporeal tenements and hereditaments shall, as regards the conveyance of the immediate freehold thereof, be deemed to lie in grant as well as in livery." The distinction is material because it shows that section 6 is not a mere conveyancing section. The lease and release formerly in use was, as is well known, a contrivance by which the vendee was put in possession without resort to a feoffment. Section 6, on the other hand, so far as it relates to right of entry, deals with the possession, not of the vendee, but of the vendor. In virtue of section 2 a vendee out of possession, and without any contrivance having the effect of possession, may have title conveyed to him; and, by virtue of section 6, a vendor who is out of possession may dispose of his right of entry. Under the Act of Henry VIII. a vendor out of possession could not dispose of his right of entry. Therefore the two statutes are inconsistent to this extent at all events, and the later statute must prevail. Moreover, the Court of Appeal, adopting the view of Chief Justice Tindal in Doe dem. Williams v. Evans, 14 Law J. Rep. C. P. 287, declare that the common law forbade the conveyance of a right of entry; and that the statute was only intended to supplement the common law. The only question which remains is whether the Act of Henry VIII. has entirely disappeared in its collision with the Act of the Queen, or whether any portion of its provisions still remains.

The decision of this question depends on the meaning, if any, to be attached to the word "pretenced." If this word, to use an expression applied to definitions of negligence, may be considered merely vituperative, the whole of the older provision falls to the ground in its conflict with the new provision. In this view the old statute enacts that there must be possession for a year before a title can be conveyed; the new statute enacts that a right of entry may be conveyed—that is to say, that there need be no possession at all to support a valid conveyance. The Court of Appeal shrink from entirely disregarding a word like "pretenced" in a statute of long standing which has never been expressly repealed, and which has had a construction put upon it by several authorities. In "Coke on Littleton" (369) we are told: "For the better understanding of which statute you must observe that title or right may be pretenced in two manners of ways: first, when it is merely in pretence or supposition, and nothing in verity; secondly, when it is a good right or title in verity, and made pretenced by the act of the party; and both those are within the said statute." As Lord Justice Cotton observes, "what is said by Coke as to the second kind of pretenced title is not very clear;" but he goes on to cite the judgment of Chief Justice Tyndal in Doe dem.

Williams v. Evans, in which it is laid down that the statute is only in aid of the common law which was, "that he who was out of possession might not bargain, grant, or let his right or title." It is clear that the statute of Victoria repeals this rule of the common law; and, therefore, if the statute of Henry VIII. only affirms the common law, that statute is also repealed. Lord Justice Cotton, however, is unable to reject the word "pretenced" in the statute, or the meaning which Coke, however obscurely, attaches to it. So far as titles are "pretenced" the statute is still in force. But what is a "pretenced title?" In one sense Jones's title was pretenced, because he had no title. The title which he once had belonged to his trustee in bankruptcy at the time of the conveyance. But Lord Justice Cotton says: "In the present case there is no ground for saying that the title which the defendant purported to convey was fictitious; it was a title existing in fact;" by which we take the learned judge to mean that the title once existed in fact in the defendant. What is intended, we suppose, is that a title which has, and never had, any foundation whatever is a pretended title, and cannot be sold. It would be difficult to give an example of this kind of pretended title which is free from fraud in the person who sets it up. If an impostor or a forger were to pretend to convey a title on the strength of his crime, we suppose that the purchaser might recover his money on common law principles without resort to a statute. It therefore seems as if the area to which the statute still applies is very limited. A mere shred of the section is left. The important result of the decision is that a right of entry may be conveyed by a vendor out of possession, which will hold good if the title be sound, and that a covenant for title by a man having a fair claim to real estate may be made the subject of an action for damages if it turns out that there was a flaw in the title.—Law Journal.

LANDLORD'S ACTION FOR NUISANCE TO PREMISES.

While justices of the peace have a great deal to do with the removal of nuisances, and require to be well acquainted with the legal rights of owners, there are some aspects of these offences which are also more effectually dealt with by the High Court, and also by the county courts. The action brought by one owner or occupier against his neighbour, whether in the form of a claim for damages or for injunction, requires often to be borne in mind, especially where there is no summary procedure applicable. Some of these cases have recently occurred and are always of interest. Few people who live in towns can avoid being occasionally annoyed with some unneighbourly conduct, and it is always useful to consider what can be done and what cannot be done for and against the respective parties.

One of the rules applicable to the remedy for nuisance to premises is as to the right of the landlord as well as of the tenant to take some proceeding. The contract between landlord and tenant gives only a limited interest to the tenant, and after him comes the landlord, who has the reversionary interest, and both of these concurring parties may be damaged, and both may sue the offender. Sometimes only the tenant can sue because the injury done is so temporary that the landlord is not affected. And yet there are many doubtful cases where it is difficult to draw the line and say whether the landlord can or cannot sue in respect of his reversionary interest. In the well-known case of Baxter v. Taylor, 4 B. & Ad. 72, a stranger entered upon the field of a tenant with horses and carts, and put a quantity of stones there, alleging that he had a right to do so. When an action was brought by the landlord, the defence was, that there was no injury done to the landlord, and therefore he could not sue. The court held this to be a good defence. Tannton, J., said that acts of that sort could not operate as evidence of right against the plaintiff so long as the land was demised to tenants, because during that time he had no present remedy by which he could obtain redress for such an act. He could not maintain an action of trespass in his name, because he was not in possession of the land: nor in an action on the case for injury to the reversion, because in point of fact there was no such permanent injury as would be necessarily prejudicial to it. As therefore he had no remedy by law for the wrongful acts done by the defendant, the act done by him or any other stranger would be no evidence of right as against the plaintiff, so long as the land was in possession of the lessee.

Where the injury is such as cannot be treated as of so trifling and evanescent a nature as in the last case, the remedy is still open to doubt in many cases owing to the defendant setting up some easement or other right to do the thing that is complained of. In such cases the plaintiff, whether he is landlord or tenant, or both together, often apply to the court for an injunction in order to stop the alleged grievance. Some of the grounds are often difficult to deal with, and they cause the court much difficulty. To go no further back than a few years, there was a case of Mott v. Shoobred, L. R. 20 Eq. 22, where the plaintiff was the landlord of two houses in a London street which had been let to tenants. The defendants were the owners of a large establishment as drapers, hosiers, upholsterers, and had recently built large warehouses immediately opposite the plaintiff's houses. The plaintiff complained that the defendants had a great number of carts and vans of great size, and these were kept constantly standing in the street, and practically converted the street into a stable yard, and so caused a grievous nuisance to the neighbours. The judge, Sir G. Jessel, said that if the tenants of the houses were complaining there could be no answer to the case, but he was of opinion that the injury was not of such a permanent nature as to entitle a reversioner to sue. The case was very different from one where injury was done to the lights, for if these were obstructed this was an injury to the reversionary right. So there was no remedy given to the landlord in that case.

While the landlord is often prevented from suing for such causes, the tenant is often more liberally treated, as appeared in the case of Jones v. Chappel, L. R. 20 Eq. 589. The plaintiff was the lessee of two houses in a London street let out to weekly tenants, and at the back of the premises there was a piece of vacant ground on which had been erected steam engines and stone saw mills, and the noise, steam, and smoke arising therefrom were a nuisance, and caused great damage to the plaintiff and his undertenants, and several of the tenants had left their houses owing to the nuisance. There was also obstruction to light caused by a travelling crane which passed close to the plaintiff's window. Here again Sir G. Jessel, M.R., held, as before, that the landlord could not sue in this case. The injury was a temporary nuisance, because the saws might be stopped and the steam engine might cease working at any moment. It was only an injury to the occupier, and the landlord could not bring an action because before his estate came into possession the nuisance may have ceased, or the person committing it may choose to make it cease at the moment the estate comes into possession. Another ground of action on the part of the landlord might be, that the existence of a nuisance of a temporary character would render it more difficult for him to let to a future tenant or to sell. But that ought not to be a good ground of action because the theoretical diminution of the value of the property could not be taken into account, inasmuch as the purchaser or the new occupier would have a right to stop the nuisance so that he ought not to give less on that account than he otherwise would. Here the houses were occupied only by weekly tenants, but there would be no difficulty in granting an injunction if an occupier, even though a weekly tenant, and his landlord were to join in a suit to restrain the nuisance. There was no decision against a weekly tenant having an injunction to stop a nuisance which is injurious to his health and comfort, and prevents his residing in the rooms or house he may occupy. The next case was one of Sturgis v. Bridgman, 11 Ch. D. 352, where the plaintiff was a London physician who had purchased the lease of a house as his professional residence. Behind this house was a garden, and the plaintiff erected a consulting room at the end of the garden. The defendant was a confectioner in large business in an adjoining street whose garden and premises abutted on the party wall of the plaintiff's consulting room. There was in fact only a wall between the consulting room and the defendant's kitchen, and in this kitchen the defendant had large marble mortars set in brickwork and built up against the party wall. Two large wooden pestles were fixed in an upright position by horizontal bearers were fixed in the wall and were used for breaking up and pounding loaf sugar, and other hard substances, and for pounding meat. The plaintiff brought an action for an injunction to stop the noise and vibration caused by the working of these machines, as they seriously annoyed the plaintiff and materially interfered with the practice of his profession. He said that the noise prevented him from examining his patients by auscultation for diseases of the chest. He also found it impossible to engage with effect in any occupation which required thought and attention. The defendant said that he and his father before him had used such pestles and mortars, at least one of them, for more than sixty years, and the other had been used for twenty-six years. He therefore claimed a prescriptive right to continue to use the pestles and mortars, and relied on the Prescriptive Act, and further added that the plaintiff had brought the nuisance on himself by making his consulting room close to the defendant's wall, for up to that time there was only a garden there, and there was no nuisance.

This case was one of some difficulty, but the Master of the Rolls said it was a clear case for the plaintiff. The learned judge said that it was clear that until a recent period, namely, when the consulting room was built, there was no actionable nuisance to anybody. The nuisance began when the room was built, and before that date the plaintiff could not have brought any action at all. And if he could not have brought any action then the defendant could not have acquired any easement which would avail against the plaintiff. In order that the Prescription Act should apply there must be a mode of stopping the nuisance or suing in respect of it, and here the plaintiff could have done neither. Therefore neither on the theory of lost grant nor on the statute could the defendant claim to do what he had done. And the plaintiff therefore was entitled to have the mortars stopped and removed into another position.

This case was taken to the Court of Appeal, and was affirmed by that court, the judgment being delivered by Theisiger, L.J. The Court of Appeal laid down the law as follows: Consent or acquiescence of the owner of the servient tenement lies at the root of prescription, and of the fiction of a lost grant. A man cannot, therefore, as a general rule be said to consent to or to acquiesce in the acquisition by his neighbour of an easement through an enjoyment of which he has no knowledge, actual or constructive, or which he contests and endeavours to interrupt, or which he temporarily licenses. It was a mere extension of the same notion, or rather it was a principle into which by strict analysis it might be resolved, to hold that an enjoyment which a man cannot prevent raises no presumption of consent or acquiescence.

Though this case of Sturgis v. Bridgman, was decided, with considerable confidence by the two courts, yet the recent case of Dalton v. Angus, 6 App. C. 740, in the House of Lords, has probably made the decision doubtful. The doctrine that no easement can be acquired by one against another unless that other could have brought an action or interrupted the acquirement, has been shaken, and perhaps now no great reliance can be placed on the decision of Sturgis v. Bridgman. At least the later case will require to be considered when the same doctrine is again set up.

The very recent case of Cooper v. Crabtree, 19 Ch. Div. 198, has again brought out the objection that a mere reversioner cannot bring his action for a nuisance unless he can show a permanent injury to such reversion. In that case the plaintiff was the owner in fee of a cottage which was let to tenants. The defendant was the owner of the adjoining land, and there was a small strip of land between them which each of them claimed. The defendant had on this narrow strip erected poles and a hoarding with the intention of obstructing the light in the upper window of the cottage, and so as to prevent the defendant acquiring any easement of light. This hoarding and the poles during the day and night made a constant rattling and creaking noise which was intolerable to the inmates of the cottage. The defendant had tried by means of wires and supports fixed on his own land to prevent or reduce this creaking noise, but had not succeeded. And at last the plaintiff, as the landlord, brought the present action in which he sued for the trespass of fixing the poles on the plaintiff's soil, and also for the noise thereby made. The defence was that the strip of land was not the plaintiff's soil, and the plaintiff being a mere reversioner was not damnified.

The judge, Fry, J., said that the action must fail because of the objection that the plaintiff was not the occupier of the cottage. This prevented his having any remedy.

These actions show that a landlord requires to be very careful in considering the nature of the nuisance in respect of which he seeks a remedy.—Justice of the Peace.

THE LAND COMMISSION.

The task of administering the Arrears Act has led to certain temporary changes in the official staff of the Land Commission. Mr. W. L. Micks, hitherto Assistant Secretary, a very able and courteous officer, is promoted to the responsible post of Comptroller of the Arrears Department. Mr. Glenny, Keeper of the Records, succeeds Mr. Micks as Assistant Secretary. Mr. Shaw takes charge of the Records, and Mr. Chamney becomes Examiner of Payments. Other office changes of a minor character also take place.—Freeman's Journal.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Morgan's Chancery Acts, 605.

Daniell's Chancery Practice (5th Edition), 37.

A petitioner in a winding up was ordered to give security for costs on the ground of his having subsequently filed a liquidation petition (In re Curta Para Gold Mining Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 191).

Levin on Trusts (7th Edition), 785.

Where a married woman, tenant for life with a restraint upon anticipation, who had power to direct trustees to do repairs and charge the estate, employed a builder to do repairs, the trustees were ordered to raise the amount of his charges, and pay the builder (Skinner v. Todd, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 198).

Fisher on Mortgage (3rd Edition), 640.

A solicitor's lien on a policy of assurance is not lost by want of notice to the assurance company against assignees who give notice (West of England Bank v. Batchelor, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 199).

Robson on Bankruptcy (4th Edition), 603.

When once the trustee has executed a disclaimer of a lease, the lessor cannot appeal from the order giving leave to disclaim; he should apply, when the order is made, for a stay of proceedings pending an appeal (Ex parte Sadler, in re Hawes, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 201)—C.A.

Buckley on the Companies Acts (3rd Edition), 163.

A contributory of a company, on being made bankrupt, becomes a stranger to the company, and no order can be made in the winding up on his application. His name is not removed from the list, but his interest passes to the trustee (In re Cape Breton Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 202).

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Analytical Tables of the Law of Real Property, drawn up chiefly from Stephen's Blackstone, with Notes. By CHAS. JAMES TARRING, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-law, &c. London: Stevens and Haynes, Law Publishers, Bell-yard, Temple-bar. 1882.

The Final Examination Guide to the Law of Probate and Divorce: containing a Digest of Final Examination Questions, with the Answers. By ED. HENSLOW BEDFORD, Solicitor, &c. Second Edition. London: Butterworths, 7 Fleet-street, Law Publishers to the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty. Dublin: Hodges, Figgis & Co., Grafton-street. 1882.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

Result of PROFESSOR HICKSON'S Examination in Law, held on the 30th of June and 1st of July, 1882.

The following Apprentices have passed an Examination to the satisfaction of the Professor of Law in the subjects of the Lectures delivered in 1881 and 1882, pursuant to the 25th of the Rules of the Incorporated Law Society of October, 1866.

The names in each Division are arranged in Alphabetical order.

The gentlemen whose names appear in the First Division have answered very well. Those whose names appear in the Second Division have answered well. Those named in the Third Division are entitled to pass.

First Division.

Patrick Boyle
Hutchinson Davidson
John E. Dowman
James Augustine Doyle
William Frewin
William Graham
Henry J. Johns
Frederick G. Kerin
Albert J. Lee
Francis J. Lewis
Thomas J. Marron

Thomas J. M'Caughey
Thomas G. Menary
William Murphy
Thomas Elliott Nelson
George H. Quarry
John P. Stott
Frederick Waring
Henry C. Weir
J. F. Williams
John F. Wray
William H. Wright

Second Division.

Herbert V. Abraham
Michael J. Bannin
Henry R. Barry
John F. Barry
William F. Bennett
Arthur G. Boyd
William A. Breakey
William F. Browne
F. L. Brownrigg
William M. Byrne
William F. Crowley
Patrick Davin
Thomas Douglas
David Doxey
Daniel Dunford
E. S. Finnigan
Robert J. Fitzgerald
Thomas Flynn
W. B. Galway
Martin J. Glynn
Graham A. Goold
James P. Hall
Thomas Harbison
Joseph A. Hardy
Stephen Hastings
William S. Hayes
William Hearn
George J. Hoey
Thomas Huggard
D. P. Humphreys
Robert Hunter

William Jardine
Henry J. Jordan
Michael Kelleher
Quintin Kennedy
Thomas W. Kilpatrick
Patrick Lavery
John G. Lindsay
Alexander A. Lockhart
Philip C. P. MacDermot
Francis Mayne
William M'Arthur
John M'Cormick
J. B. M'Cutcheon
John P. Murphy
Charles E. O'Donnell
J. Powell
James J. Quin
John K. Reid
John Ringwood
Henry Rooke
James Ryan
Joseph P. Ryan
Michael Ryan
John G. Scott
Robert Seymour
Francis Shields
M. B. J. Smyth
James L. Sullivan
Ernest J. Thornton
John J. Tweedy
Thomas M'C. Windle

Third Division.

Patrik Bergin
 William H. Burke
 James F. Caraher
 Thomas Y. Chambers
 Robert H. Cunningham
 H. J. Daly
 William Deverell
 John S. Farrell
 William T. Flood
 John J. Foley
 F. W. Forrest
 F. W. Forsythe
 William J. Garty
 C. Greene
 John L. Hall
 William H. Halpin
 Edward C. Jameson

Myles J. Jordan
 Henry R. Joynt
 Charles Kirkpatrick
 Edward N. Lindsay
 J. T. Maxwell
 John H. Menton
 Allen H. Morgan
 R. H. Morris
 Marcus Purcell
 John Augustine Quinn
 Henry N. Raphael
 Joseph A. Shortt
 Frederick J. F. Smith
 J. E. Strahan
 Laurence C. Strange
 William Tennant
 William Wrafter

Eight other Apprentices, not having answered satisfactorily, cannot be allowed to pass the Examination; and the papers of twelve other gentlemen remain for consideration.

WILLIAM HICKSON, Professor.

25th August, 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Armstrong, William S., of Ballybofey and Stranorlar, in the county of Donegal, draper. August 11; Tuesday, September 12, and Friday, September 29. Horae Wilson, solr.

Killingley, William Hackett, of Belview, Bray, in the county of Wicklow, gentleman. August 10; Tuesday, September 12, and Friday, September 29. Henry Charles Neilson, solr.

Sloan, George, of Coal Island, in the county of Tyrone, fireclay goods manufacturer. August 11; Tuesday, September 5, and Friday, September 22. H. C. Neilson, solr.

THE NEW INDIAN JUDGE.—Mr. Jones Quain Pigot, Barrister-at-Law, who has been appointed to a Puisne Judgeship in the High Court of Calcutta, in the room of Mr. Justice White, resigned, was born about the year 1832, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took his Bachelor's degree in 1855. He practised for some years as a special pleader below the Bar, and was called to the Bar by the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple in Michaelmas Term, 1864, when he joined the Home (now the South-Eastern) Circuit.

PROPOSED VISIT OF LORD COLERIDGE TO AMERICA.—Lord Coleridge has accepted an invitation from the New York Bar to visit that city. His Lordship proposes to fulfil his engagement next year.

PROBATES.—The stamp duty on probates of wills and letters of administration was in net in the last financial year £3,615,884 1s. 8d.

The prospectus is issued of the London Tramways Omnibus Company, Limited, of which 5,000 Shares of £10 each are offered to the public for subscription. It is proposed a first-class Service of Omnibuses between Finsbury Pavement and the Elephant and Castle, thus connecting the London Tramways with the North Metropolitan system, to the evident mutual advantage of both the Tramway Companies and the Omnibus Company; and, when we consider the enormous number of passengers who daily traverse the proposed route, the new enterprise appears to possess every chance of achieving a great success. We notice that the Company intends to use Omnibuses of a very much better type than those in ordinary use in the metropolis, and it is stated that other routes are under consideration in various parts of London. This enterprise has met with the warm approval of the Directors of the London Tramways Company, whose Chairman referred to it in most appreciative terms at the last General Meeting of that Company.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	AUGUST
	Sat. 19	Mon. 21	Tues. 22	Wed. 23	Thur. 24	Fr. 25
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	—	99½	—	—	99½	—
— New 3 p c Stock ..	—	99	99	—	—	98½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1882 } Traffic at ..	—	—	103½	—	—	103½
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
BANKS.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	316	—	316½	—	—
25 Hibernian Banking Co ..	—	—	36	—	—	—
20 London and County (Lit'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock ..	—	46	—	—	45	—
20 London and Westminster, Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
3½ Munster Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	—	7½	—	—
— Nat. Prov. of England, Lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	—	23½	—	—	—	—
10 National of Liverpool (Lit'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	29½	29	—	—	—
25 Standard of B. S. A., Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Union of Australia ..	—	—	64½	—	—	64½
15½ Union of London ..	—	—	46½	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British & Irish ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	—	—	—	—	101	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance & Dub. Cons.' Gas ..	—	16	—	16	—	—
8 Do. Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Cannock & Co. Lim'k, Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 C. Dub. Brewery Co. (Lim.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dub. (S'th) City Market Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 M'Kenzie & Sons (Lit'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 National Discount, Fra., Ltd ..	—	2	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	—	10½	10½	—
10 N'th Metr. Tramway, Lond. ..	—	—	—	17½	—	—
Railways.
50 Cork and Bandon ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	116½	116½	116½	—	—
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	85½	—	—	—	—
100 Waterford & Cent. Ireland ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	28½
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast & N'h'n Cos. 4 p c ..	—	100	—	—	—	—
100 D., W., & W., 6 per cent ..	—	—	148	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	107½	—	—	107½
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Watfd. & Limerick, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast & N'h'n Cos. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin & Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	110	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	114
— Gt. North'n & West'n 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 5 p c ..	—	127	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	110	110½	—	—
— Kilkenny Junction, A, 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	105½	—	105½	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	109	—	109½	—	109½
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	113	—	—	—	—
— Waterfd. & Limerick 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	111½	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
Ballast Office Deb., £92 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	92½	—	—
City Deb. of £92 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	92½
Dub. & Glas. S. P. Co. (1887) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	100
Do. (1889), 6 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	100½
Dub. & Kingsdown 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Dublin Water Works, 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	106½

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—(1) Discount—4 per cent., 17th August, 1882
 Of Deposit—1 per cent., 24th March, 1882.

Name Days—August 29th, and September 12th, 1882.
 Account Days—August 30th, and September 13th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

The Stock Exchange and Brokers' Offices will be closed on Saturdays during the month of July and August.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills will be found the best friend to persons afflicted with ulcerations, bad legs, sores, abscesses, fistulas, and other painful and complicated complaints. Printed and very plain directions for the application of the Ointment are wrapped round each pot. Holloway's alterative Pills should be taken throughout the progress of the cure, to maintain the blood in a state of perfect purity, and to prevent the health of the whole body being jeopardised by the local ailments; bad legs, old age's great grievances, are thus readily cured, without confining the patient to bed, or withdrawing from him or her the nutritious diet and generous support so imperatively demanded, when weakening diseases attack advanced years or constitutions evincing premature decrepitude.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

BOYD—August 22, at Nelson-street, Dublin, the wife of Adolphus J. Boyd, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

BELL and BEASLEY—August 16, at St. Andrew's Church, Watford, Robert Alexander, youngest son of the late Thomas Bell, Esq., A.M., barrister-at-law, of Sandymount, Dublin, to Florence Isabel Alice, youngest daughter of the late Thomas J. Beasley, Esq., A.M., solicitor, of Summerhill, Dublin.

MACDEVITT and POWER—August 15, at the College Chapel, All Hallows, by the Most Rev. Doctor Logue, Lord Bishop of Elyhoe, assisted by the Very Rev. Doctor MacDevitt, brother of the bridegroom, and the Very Rev. Doctor O'Brien, Vice-President of the College, Edward O'Donnell MacDevitt, Esq., barrister-at-law, formerly H.M. Solicitor-General for Queensland, of Gardiner's-place, Dublin, to Katy, eldest daughter of Thomas Power, Clincarrig, Killorplin, County Kerry.

SCULLY and ZIMMERMANN—August 23, at St. Mary's, Booterstown, by the Very Rev. Monsignor J. Canon Farrell, P.P., assisted by Very Rev. A. F. Canon Scully, P.P., John Scully, Esq., D.L., barrister-at-law, second son of the late James Scully, J.P., of Shanballymore, County Tipperary, and Mountjoy-square, Dublin, to Agnes, only child of the late Alois Zimmermann, Esq., of Lucerne, Switzerland.

DEATHS.

FETHERSTON H.—August 18, at Innisfallen, Howth, Co. Dublin, Mary Adelaide, second daughter of Stephen Radcliffe Fetherston H., Esq., solicitor, aged 13 years.

KERNS—August 14, at his residence, Kenilworth-square, Rathgar, Joseph E. Kerns, Esq., solicitor.

TANDY—August 17, at Cliffe-terrace, Tramore, County Waterford, Charles Henry Tandy, Esq., Q.C., of Lower Leeson-street, Dublin, aged 62 years.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET.

3:7

PUBLIC NOTICES:

FORMS UNDER THE JUDICATURE ACT.

Writ of Summons	.. .. .	1d.
Writ of Summons on Bill of Exchange	.. .. .	1d.
Writ of Summons—Rent	.. .. .	1d.
Writ of Service out of Jurisdiction	.. .. .	1d.
Memorandum of Appearance	.. .. .	1d.
Notice of Appearance	.. .. .	1d.
Notice to Limit Defence as required by Order XI.	9	1d.
Notice of Trial	.. .. .	1d.
Statement of Claim	.. .. .	1d.
Statement of Defence	.. .. .	1d.
Affidavit as to Document	.. .. .	1d.
Affidavit of Debt	.. .. .	1d.
Affidavit of Service of Writ of Summons	.. .. .	1d.
Affidavit Service, Rent or Overholding	.. .. .	1d.
Form C—Affidavits of Transmission of Writ of Summons and of Order to Substitute	.. .. .	2d.
Form C—Ejectment—Affidavit in conformity with General Order of 27th December, 1881	.. .. .	2d.
Order	.. .. .	1d.
JUDICATURE PAPER—Per Quire, 1s. 6d.; per Ream, 15s.
BRIEFING PAPER—Per Quire, 9d.; per Ream, 12s. 6d.

J. FALCONER, 58, UPPER SACKVILLE-ST., DUBLIN.

EVERY MAN WHO SMOKES
Should invest 24 stamps for the
NEW PERFECTED

The Best
Selected Briars
only.

JENINGS & CO., Inventors, 97, NEWGATE-STREET.
The most Perfect Pipe invented since Smoking began.
Prospectus Free.

61

BILLIARD BALLS, CHALKS, CUES, and TIPS, and all other Billiard Table requisites, at HENNIG BROS.' Ivory Works, 11, High-street, London, W.C. Also the cheapest house in the trade for Ivory Hair-brushes, Mirrors, and all other Ivory Toilet articles and Ivory Goods in general. Old Balls adjusted or exchanged, and Tables re-covered. Price Lists, Cloth, and Cushion Rubber Samples Post Free.—Established 1862.

26

PUBLIC NOTICES:

LAND LAW (IRELAND) ACT, 1882.

In conformity with Rule 104, a Schedule of Agreements ving Fair Rents that were lodged in the Civil Bill Courts up to and including the 30th June, 1882, has been inserted in the Dublin Gazette of the 18th August, 1882. A copy of this Schedule will be sent to any person who applies for the same to the Secretary, Irish Land Commission, 24 Upper Merrion-street, Dublin.

(By Order),

WM. L. MICKS.

24 Upper Merrion-street, Dublin,
25th August, 1882.

102

NOTICE.

ARRIERS OF RENT (IRELAND) ACT, 1882.

THE IRISH LAND COMMISSION

have issued their Edicts and Forms, which can be obtained from Messrs. THOM & Co., Abbey-street, Dublin, for 6d.

Forms of application (B, C, E, F, R, S, and T, printed on the kind of paper prescribed by the Irish Land Commission) can be obtained from Messrs. THOM.

(By Order),

WM. L. MICKS.

Irish Land Commission,
25th August, 1882.

104

D. W. CARROLL,

44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
Wishes to call attention to his large

STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers

They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of

LEATHER GOODS,

Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,

With every article connected with Stationery,

Are Sold much under usual charges.

Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.

Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge.

72

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,

No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.

J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees, Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.

Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.

91

STOKES BROTHERS,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LONDON and LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN.

293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c. &c.

160

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW

WRITERS and SOLICITORS.
STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK for STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens; it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each.

581

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE,

Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection.

10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps.
31, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID,

Curls the straightest and most ungovernable Hair, 3s. 6d., sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE,

To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His GREAT HAIR RESTORER,

3s. 6d.; it changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles.

As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 3s. 6d.; his DEPILATORY for removing Hair and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers.

7

PUBLIC NOTICES:

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS.

(Royal Route via Orkney and Caledonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Lochawe, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Stornoway, &c. Official Guide, 3d.; Illustrated, 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Fares free, at CARSON BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post from the owner, DAVID MACBRATNE, 119 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

62

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. FERRIS, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 161

HENDRICK AND CO.,

PRINTERS, STATIONERS, SCRIVENERS,

and ARTISTS' WAREHOUSE,

28 CLARE-STREET,

DUBLIN.

106

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES and INVESTIGATIONS

CONDUCTED BY

MR. THOMAS DEANE,

17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange),

Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.

Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.

References.

ESTABLISHED 1875.

167

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,

the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinneir, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserves £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 113 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewarts & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 8, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

LEGAL POSTINGS:

In the HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE in IRELAND,
CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

In the Matter of the Estate of

JAMES FENTON, and ROBERT FENTON, and
THOMAS WALTON GILLIBRAND, or some or one of them,
Owners;Especially—THE NORTHERN BANKING COMPANY,
Petitioners.

TO BE SOLD,

On TUESDAY, the 7th day of NOVEMBER, 1882,

At the hour of Twelve o'clock,

Before the Right Honourable Judge Ormsby,

At his Court, Land Judges' Court, Inns-quay, in the City of Dublin,
The aforementioned Property, in Eight Lots, viz:—

LOT. No. 1.—Part of the Lands of Carricknab, containing 146a 3r 37p statute measure, or thereabouts, and Part of the Lands of Corbally, containing 21a 3r 30p statute measure, or thereabouts, both held in Fee-farm, situate in the Barony of Lecale and County of Down. Net annual rental, £29 0s. 7d. Tenement valuation, £188 6s.

LOT 2.—Part of the said Lands of Carricknab, containing 118a 0r 28p statute measure, or thereabouts, and part of the said Lands of Corbally, containing 84a 5r 30p statute measure, or thereabouts, both held in Fee-farm. Net annual rental, £105 5s. 10d. Tenement valuation, £180 5s.

LOT 3.—Part of the said Lands of Carricknab, containing 2a 0r 3p statute measure, or thereabouts, held in Fee-farm. Tenants' rents, 6d. Tenement valuation, £30.

LOT 4.—The Lands of Ringhaddy, and its sub-denomination of Castleland, with benefit of Rocks and Scars for wreck and seaweed belonging to same, Island Mere, Island Dunsay, Dunsay Rock, Green or Hay Island, and Island Darragh, containing in the whole 379a 1r 2p statute measure, or thereabouts, situate in the Barony of Dufferin and County of Down, held in Fee-farm. Net annual rental, £295 4s. 3d. Tenement valuation, £351.

LOT 5.—Part of the Lands of Ballow, containing 141a 1r 28p statute measure, or thereabouts, and the right enjoyed therewith or in respect thereof, to hold four Yearly Fairs, and a Weekly Market, and a Court of Pie Poudre during said Fairs and Mark ts, situate in the Barony of Dufferin and County of Down, held in Fee-simple. Net annual rent, £154 12s. 9d. Tenement valuation, £225.

LOT 6.—Part of the said Lands of Ballow, containing 23p statute measure, or thereabouts, held in Fee-simple. Net annual rent, 6d. Tenement valuation, £2 10s.

LOT 7.—Part of the said Lands of Ballow, containing 37p statute measure, or thereabouts, held in Fee-simple. Net annual rental, 1s. Tenement valuation, £5.

LOT 8.—The Manor, Town, and Lands of Ardmillan, together with the Rectorial Tithes of said Manor, and also all Courts Leet, Courts Baron, and Customs, and Fairs, and Markets, and comprising the Lands of Ballydrine, otherwise Ballindreen, otherwise Ballydrain, Ballyliddell, otherwise Ballyleghorn, Castle Esple, Tullynakill, together with Watson's Island, Lisbane, otherwise Ballylisbane, Island Roagh, Cross Island, Island Mahle, Bird and Gull Islands, Ringneal, otherwise Ballyranavale, including Rolly Island, Long Island, and Wood Island, Ballymartin, alias Ardmillan—all situate in the Barony of Castlereagh and County of Down, held under a Lease from the late Commissioners of Church Temporalities in Ireland, customarily renewable, as appears from the Orders abstracted in the Rental. Net annual rental, £782 14s. 10d. Tenement valuation, £2,506 15s.

Dated this 5th day of August, 1882.

JOHN MARTLEY, for Examiner.

N.B.—Proposals for the purchase by Private Contract will be received by the Solicitors having carriage of the Order for Sale on or before Saturday, the 28th day of October, 1882, and, if approved of, will be submitted to the Court for confirmation.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

Lots 1, 2, and 3 are situate within about three miles of the Town of Downpatrick, which is the County Town, and is in railway communication with Belfast and Newcastle, the latter a fashionable watering place, about seven miles distant. Tullymurry Station, on the Newcastle Line, is distant about one mile from Corbally.

LOT 4—Ringhaddy—is situate on the Shore of Strangford Lough, about four miles north of the important Town of Killyleagh, and the remainder of the Lot consists of adjacent Islands in that Lough. There is an abundant supply of Sea Weed on the Shore.

Lots 5, 6, and 7—Ballow—are situate adjacent to the Village of Killinchy, and within about five miles of the Town of Saintfield, a Station on the Belfast and County Down Railway.

LOT 8—The Manor of Ardmillan—is situate on the Shore of Strangford Lough, within about two miles south of the Town of Comber, Station on the Belfast and County Down Railway.

For Rentals and further particulars, apply at the Registrar's Office, Land Judges, Inns-quay, Dublin; or to

OWEN MARCH, Esq., Solicitor, Rochdale;

R. F. BERRY, Esq., Solicitor, Market-place, Huddersfield; or to

HUGH WALLACE &amp; CO., Solicitors having carriage of the Order for Sale, 45 Victoria-street, Belfast; English-street, Downpatrick; and 30 North Great George's-street, Dublin.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

Vol. XVI.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1882.

No. 814

PRIVILEGE OF WITNESSES AS TO CRIMINATING QUESTIONS.—I.

"HUMAN Life," observes Sir W. Erla, "is a progress between two sets of physical and moral agencies perpetually striving against each other, the one on the side of falsehood, malice, and destruction; the other on the side of truth, kindness, and health: and the law, if wisely made and properly administered, maintains truth and kindness and health, and so among other things helps persons of honest industry to obey each his own will." Law of Trades' Unions, Introd. Of this spirit of kindness characterising our jurisprudence one of the most striking exemplifications, wisely or not pervading every part of our system of judicial inquiry (Hare on Disc., 2nd ed., 100), is presented by the "general rule, established with great justice and tenderness by the law of England," as Lord Hardwicke pronounced in Harrison v. Southcote (2 Ves. Sen. 389), conferring the privilege on a witness, agreeably to the humane principle nemo tenetur seipsum prodere, to refuse, whether he be a party to the litigation or not, to answer either in a court of law or equity any question, put either vivâ voce or by way of written interrogatory, the answer to which would have a tendency to expose the witness, or the husband or wife of the witness, to a criminal charge, penalty, or forfeiture of any kind, reasonably likely to be sued for or preferred. This rule was very anciently engrafted in the common law, while equity carried its operation still further: Wigram on Disc., 81; Mitford on Pleading, 194; and it is recorded that even Chief Justice Jeffries was pleased to recognise it, when it told against the prisoner. It has been declared by the Law of Evidence Amendment Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vic., c. 99, s. 3); while it has been engrafted upon the Constitutions of all the American States. But, obviously enough, it might be carried too far; wisely made, if not "properly administered" it might become dangerous to the last degree. "If you allowed a witness, merely on his own statement of his belief that an answer to a question would tend to criminate him, to refuse to answer, it would enable a friendly witness who wished to assist one of the parties to escape examination altogether, and to refuse to give his evidence. That must be an evil so great as far to overbear, as a question of public policy, the danger, if it is to be treated as a danger, of occasionally assisting to convict a man out of his own mouth." So said Sir G. Jessel, M.R., in the recent case of Ex parte Reynolds, before the Court of Appeal, which has attracted our notice by the report in last Saturday's issue of the Justice of the Peace (s.c., 28 Ch. Div. 294, 46 L. T. N. S. 506); and that decision in particular, taken in connexion with the recent case of Temple v. The Commonwealth, before the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia (5 Virg. L. J. 366), induces us to comment on this subject.

At one time, indeed, it was vexata questio whether a witness was bound to answer when the answer might subject him even to merely civil liabilities: 6 Cobbett's P. D. 167; but, it is now settled by the Legislature that he cannot refuse to answer in such case: 46 Geo. 3, c. 37; but, see Venables v. Schweitzer, L. R. 16 Eq. 76, 42 L. J. Ch. 386. In cases not covered by the statute, however, the general rule is to the effect already formulated: R. v. Barber, Str. 444; Cates v. Hardacre, 3 Taunt. 424; Sir J. Friend's Case, 4 St. Tr. 649, 16 Ves. jun. 242; Titte v. Grevet, 2 Lord Raym. 1088; R. v. Oates, 4 St. Tr. 9, 10; R. v. Lord George Gordon, 2 Doug. 593; Hardy's Case, 24 How. St. Tr. 755; Parkhurst v. Lowten, 2 Swans. 216; R. v. Boyes, 1 B. & S. 330; R. v. Garbett, 1 Den. 236; R. v. All Saints, Worcester, 6 M. & S. 200; Parkhurst v. Lowten, 2 Swans. 214; Pye v. Butterfield, 34 L. J. Q. B. 17; 1 Stark., Ev., 3rd ed., 191; 2 Tay., Ev., Part III., c. 3; Steph., Ev., Part III., Art. 120; 2 Hawk. c. 46; Mitford's Ch. Pl. 157; and as to compelling prisoners to furnish personal evidence of their own identity, see 14 Ir. L. T. & S. J. 466; and as to objecting on this ground to answer interrogatories, see Eiffe, Jud. Act, 382-4-5; Wilson, Jud. Act, 3rd ed., 294; Hart and Eiloart, Disc. 9. The privilege can be claimed only after the witness is sworn, and the objectionable question is put: Boyle v. Wiseman, 10 Ex. 647; but the witness may claim protection under this rule at any stage of the examination, and, when granted, he cannot be forced to proceed further in answer to such questions: 2 T. R. 268; R. v. Garbett, 2 C. & K. 474; and the privilege being his, and not that of the party (R. v. Kinglake, 11 Cox, 499; Ingalls v. State, 10 Central L. J. 317), the counsel in the case is not permitted to make the objection: Thomas v. Newton, M. & M. 48, n.; but, it seems the judge ought to caution the witness: 6 M. & S. 194; see 14 Ir. L. T. & S. J. 317. If having been cautioned that he is not compelled to answer the question, he answers at all, he is bound to disclose the whole of the transaction: Dixon v. Vale, 1 Carr. C. 278; East v. Chapman, 2 C. & P. 570, Mod. & M. C. 47; Austin v. Poiner, 1 Sim. 348; State v. Freshour, 1 Ky. L. J. 224; and if he voluntarily answers questions tending to criminate him on his examination in chief, he is bound to answer on cross-examination, however penal the consequence may be: 1 Stark. Ev., 3rd ed., 198; State v. Harrington, 5 Central L. J. 154; Town v. Gaylord, 28 Conn. 309; State v. Freshour, ubi supra.

As the latter question is one on which there has been some conflict of opinion, it may be well to refer more particularly to Peuple v. Freshour, as being the most recent decision (1880) on the subject, holding that, where an accomplice called as a witness by the State voluntarily testifies in chief on a particular subject, he may be cross-examined on that subject, even though he claims to be privileged from answering, on the ground that his answers may criminate him in other matters. The prisoner had testified that he was present at and a party to the alleged larceny, and was then asked by defendant's counsel, "state the general plan which you and the defendant entered into for stealing these cattle?" This he was excused from answering; and this was held error. M'Kinstry, J., said: "The witness should not have been permitted to separate the actual taking of the property from the plan of the parties to the taking. His recital of the alleged plan or agreement might have tended to show that the connexion of defendant with the actual taking was innocent—as that he supposed the cattle to be the property of the witness, and was employed by him—or might have led to such expansion of the narrative by witness as would leave him open to contradiction, or to impeachment by reason of the improbabilities of his story. Defendant was entitled to a full history of all that tended to explain the nature and degree of his complicity with the acts of the witness. The scheme of the parties and the acts following were part of one transaction; and when a witness voluntarily testifies in chief on a particular subject, he may be cross-examined on that subject, even though his answers may criminate or disgrace him: Town v. Gaylord, 28 Conn. 309. If the witness had been compelled to give his version of the agreement, it would have aided the jury in determining how far his testimony was credible. He had already testified that there were other parties to the criminal agreement, but it was neither his moral duty nor legal privilege to protect them at the expense of the defendant on trial. If when he had given his version of the plan he had stated there were no other parties to it than defendant and himself, he would have shown that this or his former statement was untrue; if he named other parties, they might have been called to disprove the accusation, and thus discredit the whole of his testimony. It is enough, however, to say that he had already admitted that the conspiracy contemplated and provided for the commission of the particular overt act charged in the indictment. If a witness discloses a part of a transaction with which he was criminally concerned, without claiming his privilege, he must disclose the whole: 10 Fost. 540."

THE DEATH OF MR. GEORGE PERRY.

DEEPLY lamented indeed is the untimely death of Mr. George Perry, which took place on the 29th ult., caused by injuries sustained in falling from an outside car. He was the eldest son of an old and highly respected solicitor, the late Mr. Jeremiah Perry, and, having been called to the bar in 1865, he had rapidly attained a very distinguished position, and enjoyed an extensive practice, especially in the Court of Bankruptcy. His genial, amiable, and courteous disposition had rendered him universally popular, and painful indeed has been the shock to the public and the profession occasioned by his sudden loss. He was but 38 years of age, and brilliant were the professional prospects that seemed to await him in the near future.

"Death! thou dread loosener of the dearest tie,
Was there no aged or no sick one nigh;
No languid wretch who longed, but longed in vain,
For thy cold hand to cool his fiery pain?"

THE CONVEYANCING ACT, 1882.

The Conveyancing Act, 1882, which received the royal assent on the 10th of this month, is a curious illustration of the difficulties under which law reform labours in this country. It is almost entirely composed word for word of sections struck out of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881—sections only struck out because there was some doubt whether some one would not object to them. It is a lucky combination of circumstances which does not always occur in such cases which has brought about their passing this year as a separate enactment. But it is unlucky that, as usual, each reform of the law adds to the complication and complexity of it; and, instead of having one Act, we have two, which we have to construe together to the best of our ability. In this case it is of less importance because the original Act is such a patchwork in itself. But the patchwork process is certainly not calculated to produce scientific legislation or to lighten the labours of the practitioner. However, such as it is, we must accept the Act with gratitude as a stepping-stone to better things. It really does confer some substantial advantages. The provision as to searches (section 2) will considerably lessen the trouble of the necessary, though generally formal, inquiries as to judgments, Crown debts, lites pendentes, and other "common form" searches. The solicitor will now merely have to furnish the central office of the Supreme Court with particulars of the name and property in respect of which he wishes the searches to be made, and the trouble and responsibility of making the actual search will be thrown on the officer of the Court whose duty it is to make the searches. It is a pity that deeds enrolled under the Fines and Recoveries Acts and other Acts of Parliament have not been included in the section; but vested interests and settled practice have been too strong.

Section 3, which deals with the doctrine of notice, is an amplification and improvement of the corresponding provision put forward last year. It practically abolishes the absurd extension of the doctrine of notice which saddled the purchaser with the knowledge of any deed or matter affecting the property purchased which did, or might have, come to the knowledge of his solicitor in some transaction with regard to the property years before, and for some totally different purpose, or even for some other client. The notice to affect the purchaser now must be actual notice to him personally, or a limited constructive notice in cases where he has wilfully or negligently abstained from inquiry; while constructive notice, through his counsel or solicitor or agent, is restricted to cases in which one of them has actual notice in the transaction actually in question, or has wilfully or negligently abstained from inquiries which might lead to such notice. This section is very properly made retrospective, save in cases where an action is actually pending. It is of considerable legal importance, but of little practical value except as preventing the possibility of the recurrence of exceptional cases of exceptional hardship. Section 4 is probably of more practical importance. It provides that, on the assignment of leaseholds, when the lease has been made under a power, and a preliminary contract has been made, no inquiry should be made as to the contract. The section will obviate inquiry whether the contract was in accordance with the power. The title will commence with the lease itself, and there will be no power to go behind it. In dealing with leases taken up by builders on completion, in accordance with an agreement, considerable trouble and expense will be saved in many cases by this provision. The section (7) dealing with the acknowledgment of deeds by married women is a falling off in point of thoroughness from the same section as presented last year. In place of abolishing what, after all had been said on the subject, is, in any case an expensive formality, the present Act curtails the trouble and expense by allowing acknowledgments to be made before one commissioner for taking oaths instead of two. The section appears to be very carelessly drawn. Sub-section 3 provides that a deed acknowledged before or after the commencement of the Act shall not be impeached or impeachable by reason only that "the person by whom the acknowledgment is taken was interested or concerned, either as a party or as solicitor or clerk to the solicitor of one of the parties." Sub-section 5 says "The foregoing provisions of this section, including the repeal therein, apply only to the execution of deeds by married women after the commencement of this Act." There would appear to be a flat contradiction between the two sub-sections. The first says that deeds acknowledged before the Act shall not be impeached; the second says that the Act is not to apply to deeds executed before the Act. It is true sub-section 5 speaks of the execution of deeds, and sub-section 3 of the acknowledgment of deeds; but the substantive sub-section (i.) itself deals only with execution so far as acknowledgment is part of it. Therefore, this explanation will hardly suffice. The fact is, sub-section 5 has been left in from the original draft of the bill, and sub-section 3 inserted before instead of after it, and in forgetfulness of it.

Section 8 deals with powers of attorney, and amplifies and extends sections 46 and 47 of last year's Act. It provides that a power of attorney given for valuable consideration shall be irrevocable, when so expressed in the instrument; and that any act done under it shall not be affected by the death, bankruptcy, &c., of the donor of the power; and a purchaser shall not be affected by notice of such death, &c. Section 9 contains similar provisions as to voluntary powers of attorney, which are expressed to be irrevocable for any fixed period not exceeding a year. The importance of this latter section in these days, when members of nearly every family are resident in the colonies, or India, or abroad, is very great. At present it is still necessary for a person taking a conveyance under power of attorney to ascertain that the principal was alive at the date of executing the conveyance. The Act of last year supplied a partial remedy by enabling the donor of the power to give a good discharge for the purchase money, and to give the purchaser an equitable title in case of the donor's death. But no purchaser could safely rely upon that, and the expense of obtaining evidence that at the date of execution of the conveyance the donor was alive, had to be incurred. Henceforth this difficulty can be obviated by granting the power for a term certain less than a year. Section 10 puts an end to executory limitations over on default or failure of issue of a tenant in fee simple, or for life, as soon as any one of the issue in question attains twenty-one. It puts, as regards barring entails and remainders over, executory limitations on the same footing as legal remainders. Sections 11 and 12 insert amendments in the Act of last year as to the provisions for converting long terms into freeholds (section 65), and the right of a mortgagor to make the mortgagor transfer instead of reconveying to himself (section 15). These provisions seem rather to be directed to satisfying the criticisms of one of our contemporaries by guarding against technically possible misconstructions of the Act, than for the purpose of effecting any substantial amendment in it, or meeting any objection which is likely to approve itself to a sound judicial mind. However, as riders they do no harm, and may possibly save some client the expense of an action instituted by the perverted ingenuity of his opponent's professional advisers. The whole Act is, indeed, open to the same kind of objection, that it rather remedies petty perversions of law and practice, than effects any substantial reform in conveyancing. Still even that is something to be thankful for.—Law Journal.

THE SETTLED LAND ACT.

Of the public Acts which were passed during last session one of the most important is, no doubt, the Settled Land Act. The measure is not, indeed, at all revolutionary, and we do not suppose that, however reasonable it may appear to most landowners, it will satisfy advanced land reformers. In point of fact, it incurred their displeasure in the House of Commons as being too timid. It does not abridge the power of tying up land for a considerable period of time. Men will dispose of their property very much as they did before it was passed. If the ideal state of things be, as we are often told, one in which acres will be transmitted as readily from hand to hand as sovereigns or banknotes, it is not very appreciably advanced by this measure. The Settled Land Act, the credit of which is due to Lord Cairns, proceeds upon the lines upon which Parliament has hitherto proceeded in dealing with the drawbacks and abuses incident to settlements. It does not try to make it impracticable or difficult to create limited ownership in land—a policy so much recommended in modern times. It does not combat the deep-seated general conviction as to their utility or necessity in a society such as ours. It is content to multiply the powers of limited owners; to diminish the restrictions upon their dealings with their property; to enable them to make the most of their estates without doing violence to the rights of remainder-men or other third parties. The Act is to a large extent merely a repetition of legislation from time to time undertaken with a view to improve the position of the tenant for life. Many even of the clauses in which the Legislature has apparently introduced innovations are more important in semblance than in reality; well-drawn settlements prepared by modern conveyancers containing as a rule, not a few of the powers of which Parliament appears to make tenants for life a present. The main object of the Act is to enable them to sell, to lease, or otherwise dispose of their settled estates, either in part or as a whole, provided due provision be made to secure the purchase money on sale, and otherwise to protect the interests of remainder-men and others who are entitled under a settlement. The measure has, indeed, one or two features of boldness, and conspicuous among them is the fact that it is applicable to existing arrangements which come within the wide definition of settlements. But, on the whole, the object of the measure is not so much to innovate as to enable one to do more easily what is already done.

At present, if a sale take place under the machinery of the Settled Estates Act, 1877, there is a petition in Chancery, which, we need not say, implies expense and delay. Liberal though the provisions of that measure are in regard to authorising leases of the whole or part of settled estates, sales of settled estates or timber growing on them, and the laying out of streets and roads, they are trammelled by the necessity of resorting to the Court, and the fact that to so large an extent trustees must take steps to initiate and carry through the sale. Every one knows that trustees are slow to move, disinclined to accept responsibility, and adverse to use all their powers, and hence the reform was not so productive of good as was desired. Under this Act much of the old machinery is dispensed with. A power of sale becomes an incident of the estate of a limited owner just as if he were the owner in fee. This is, in truth, the keynote of the measure. The limited owner need not acquire—he will have a power of sale; and all the elaborate modes by which he has hitherto obtained permission to deal with acres nominally his—modes ironically termed “summary” by Acts of Parliament—will be swept away. Of course, checks are imposed upon this extensive power; and the point upon which most curiosity will be felt by the public is as to their probable efficacy. One condition is that the best price must be obtained for land which is sold. In exercising his powers under the Act, a tenant for life must have regard to the interest of all parties who are entitled under a settlement; and the law will cast upon him the duties and liabilities of a trustee for them. He must not sell, exchange, mortgage, or lease without giving notice to the trustees of the settlement; and if they are of opinion that the step is ill-advised and will be detrimental to the interests of those whom they are bound to protect, they may submit the matter in dispute to the Court, which will give directions as to it. An important check lies in the fact that money arising from a sale of land will not be paid to the tenant for life; it will be received by the trustees, who will either pay it into Court or invest it, at the option of the tenant for life. If it be invested in any of the securities mentioned in the Act, the income will, of course, be applied in the same manner as the rent of the land would have been expended; in other words, the estate, after conversion into money or securities, will be still treated as if it were land. The proceeds of a sale of part of an estate will often be used for the purpose of reclaiming or improving the rest; and a second leading object of the measure is to give large powers as to improvements without the express sanction of the will or deed from which the limited owner derives his title. A tenant for life may apply money acquired by sale in executing any one or more of a long list of works, which include all the improvements mentioned in the Improvement of Land Act of 1864. On the other hand, a tenant may think it more profitable to pay off incumbrances, buy up the land-tax or get rid of other charges, than to lay drains, or make roads, or erect cottages; and the Act provides for cases in which such preference is felt. Of course, extensive powers for granting building and mining leases which are to be found in every well-drawn settlement are given, care being taken that when capital is dealt with the remainder-man shall not suffer or be defrauded. One important proviso, which we would fain hope would be occasionally useful, gives the owner of settled estates power to lay out his own money in improvements and to charge the amount for the benefit of his personal estate at his death. Many of the provisions are of a technical character and intelligible only to lawyers. But any one can understand the drift of such sections as those by which the Legislature has sought to nullify prohibitions or limitations to which owners of property may resort in the hope of evading or defeating the operation of the Act. The intention is, on the one hand, to take away or abridge no power of improvement which a tenant for life may now have; and, on the other hand, to permit no withdrawal or curtailment of the powers which the Legislature has thought should be an incident of ownership.

The measure is no stranger. In substantially the same form as it now is, it has been before Parliament for three sessions. It has been considered by select committees, and it is passed with the distinct approval of an ex-Lord Chancellor and the present Lord Chancellor. The Act does not come into effect until the end of the year, and by that time its provisions will be better understood, and it will be ascertained whether it does much more in fact than shortening settlements by dispensing with the insertion of powers which will exist apart from any express words. Hitherto the measure has met with much favour in all quarters. Its natural critics have been silent. The condition of English agriculture is such that any remedy, however unlikely it is that it will cure deep-seated disease, is caught at. One of the hopes of sanguine people is that somehow alterations in the form of settlements will forthwith enable farms to produce much more than they have hitherto done. The amount of truth in this theory will be determined by the experience of the next few years, and probably none will be more delighted to see it verified by results than those who have been disposed to attach more importance to a series of bad seasons and the influx of cheap foreign produce than to the state of the law of real property. In the meantime it is a drawback to the new Act that it leaves partially in force several measures dealing with the same subject-matter. This is no insignificant disadvantage. During the last few years Act after Act, of great magnitude, dealing with every nook and corner of real property law, has been passed. Some of these measures have been quickly repealed, leaving few traces behind them. Others have been in part removed from the Statute Book. Another class, though not repealed, is virtually obsolete; and others, again, are difficult to reconcile with measures still in force. Lawyers have scarcely had time to master one big Conveyancing Act when this session brings a goodly supplement in the shape of another Conveyancing Act. One is within the truth in saying that the whole law of real property has been during the last ten years cast into the crucible; and we cannot add that it has come forth completely purified and reduced to the simplest shape. In regard to measures affecting real property, or, in fact, any other highly intricate subject, Parliament might do well to pass a self-denying ordinance against enacting fragmentary statutes, not complete in themselves, but requiring reference to others. Such legislation breeds needless difficulties, and there is really no excuse for it.—Times.

MR. GRAY'S IMPRISONMENT.

There has been some misapprehension on certain points in regard to the sentence of Mr. Gray. Lay members of the commission, such as the Lord Mayor of Dublin, have no authority to interfere. Chief Justice Bovill, on one occasion at the Old Bailey, declined to allow an alderman even to put a question to a witness. There is no appeal from Mr. Justice Lawson's decision, as the Irish, like the English Judicature Act, does not allow criminal cases to be carried to the Court of Appeal. There is, however, a power in the Lord Lieutenant to remit the sentence in exercising the mercy of the Crown. This is illustrated by the action of Sir Richard Cross, in 1875, in reference to a sentence of a year's imprisonment passed by Mr. Justice Denman on Oraddock for intimidating a fellow prisoner who had pleaded "Guilty." The Crown cannot release a prisoner committed for contempt of Court in aid of civil rights, which was Mr. Green's case; but committals for contempt of Court by interfering with the course of justice are criminal convictions, to which the prerogative applies. An inquiry into the conduct of the jury at the hotel cannot affect the justice of Mr. Gray's sentence. Apart from the fact that his main offence had nothing to do with the jury's conduct, Mr. Gray's double character puts him in a dilemma in respect of it. If the charge was untrue, Mr. Gray had no justification for publishing it; if it was true, Mr. Gray was the officer of the law responsible to the Court, if any such conduct were made possible. If he is guiltless as a journalist, he is guilty as high sheriff; and vice versa.

The disapprobation which certain public bodies in Ireland seem desirous of bestowing on the sentence passed by Mr. Justice Lawson on Mr. Gray, suggests certain legal considerations which are not unlikely to be forgotten. Although temperate criticism of the decision of a judge is legitimate, yet there is no doubt that anything amounting to a vote of censure by a public body on the decision of a Court is a very high misdemeanour. This is illustrated by the proceedings taken in 1788 against the Corporation of Yarmouth. A member of the corporation, called Watson, had instituted a prosecution for perjury which had failed, and in an action for malicious prosecution heavy damages were given against him. Thereupon the corporation, by a majority, passed a resolution that "Mr. Watson was actuated by motives of public justice, of preserving the rights of the corporation to their Admiralty jurisdiction, and of supporting the honour and credit of the chief magistrate, and therefore, they vote him the sum of £2,300." A motion was made in the Court of King's Bench for a criminal information against twenty members of the corporation on the ground that the resolution was a high contempt of the administration of public justice. The Court unanimously ordered a criminal information, Mr. Justice Buller saying that the tendency of the resolution was "to weaken the administration of justice, and, in consequence, to sap the foundation of the Constitution." In Watson's case the proceeding called in question was a civil action; and an attempt to reverse, by public vote, a decision of a judge in a criminal case is obviously still more open to the mischiefs against which the law is directed.—Law Journal.

It is to be hoped that Mr. Justice Lawson's sentences will not be interfered with, except for some very good cause indeed. It is often extremely unwise for a Government to meddle with the discretion either of a judge or a general, and every holding back of the hand of this severe but just judge will be a victory to the cause of lawlessness.—Law Times.

THE CASE OF FRANCIS HYNES.

The following is a copy of a memorial presented to his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, on Saturday last, by the solicitor of Francis Hynes:—

"To his Excellency Earl Spencer, K.G., Lieutenant General and General Governor of Ireland.

"The humble memorial of John Frost, No. 6 Upper Ormond-quay, in the city of Dublin, solicitor, respectfully sheweth unto your Excellency—

"1. Your memorialist acted as solicitor for Francis Hynes on his trial for the murder of one John Douloughy, which trial took place at Green-street Court-house, in this city, before the Right Hon. Mr. Justice Lawson and a jury, on the 12th and 13th days of the present month of August. The said trial resulted in a verdict of guilty, whereupon the learned judge sentenced the said Francis Hynes to be executed on the 11th September prox.

"2. Your memorialist humbly submits to your Excellency that the said sentence should not be carried into effect for the following reasons and on the following grounds:—

"3. The trial commenced on the 11th inst., and on the evening of that day the Court adjourned without finishing the cause. The jury was given into the charge of special bailiffs to whom was administered an oath in the words following, that is to say—'You shall not allow any person to have communication with the jury, save through the sheriff, with the permission of the Court, nor shall you allow the jury to separate or go at large until after the sitting of the Court, pursuant to adjournment to be made for that purpose.'

"4. The jury then retired to the Imperial Hotel in this city, accompanied by the special bailiffs. Your Excellency has been forwarded eleven affidavits sworn by eleven different persons, all residents or servants in the hotel, all having the amplest opportunity of observing the events of that night, and all having no interest whatever in the trial. Your memorialist submits to your Excellency's consideration the statements as to the occurrences in the hotel in these affidavits contained.

"5. Your memorialist further humbly submits to your Excellency that there is one most important point about which there is in effect no controversy whatever.

"6. It appears from the testimony of several of the persons who made affidavits that no attempt even was made to keep the jurors together in the hotel, and separate from and without communication with the rest of the world. That the said jurors were permitted to go where they pleased in the hotel, and converse with whomsoever they thought proper. That six of the jury entered the public billiard-room of the hotel, and remained there for over three hours, thus separating themselves from their fellows, who remained in another room of the hotel. That members of the outside public passed freely in and out of the billiard-room when the jurors were there. That one of the jurors was in close conversation with Major Wynne, a member of the outside public. That the said juror actually handicapped a game of billiards in which members of the outside public were playing. That the jurors in the billiard-room mixed freely with the outside public in the room.

"7. Your memorialist humbly submits that these facts are substantially placed beyond all controversy by the letter voluntarily addressed to the public Press by Major Hamilton, one of the jurors, a copy of which is herewith sent to your Excellency. In that letter Major Hamilton does not deny any allegation as to the jurors mixing with the outside public in the billiard-room. He, in fact, admits the substantial accuracy of this part of the case.

"8. In view of the foregoing facts your memorialist is advised that his client's remedy lies in this appeal to your Excellency, as the authority with whom rests the discretion of carrying out or not carrying out the sentence. Such was, your memorialist is advised, the decision in the case of The Queen v. Michael Murphy, Law Reports, 2nd Privy Council Appeals, pages 35 and 535. In that case a prisoner, having been tried and convicted of a capital felony by a Court of Oyer and Terminer in New South Wales, and sentence of death passed, an application was made to the Supreme Court of New South Wales for a rule of venire de novo on an affidavit which stated that one of the jury had informed the department that, pending the trial and before verdict, the jury having adjourned to an hotel had access to newspapers which contained a report of the trial as it proceeded, with comments thereon. The Supreme Court of New South Wales made a rule of venire de novo, Sir Alfred Stephen, the Chief Justice of New South Wales, in his judgment, declaring that the bailiffs swore to take charge of the jury, thereby became in fact officers of the Crown. The order of the New South Wales Court was subsequently reversed on technical grounds by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; but in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council

Sir William Erle said—'If irregularity occurs in the conduct of a trial not constituting a ground for treating the verdict as a nullity, the remedy to prevent a failure of justice is by application to the authority with whom rests the discretion either of executing the law or commuting the sentence. As there was, in the opinion of the Court below, irregularity in the respondent sufficient to vacate the judgment, their lordships have no doubt that, upon proper application on behalf of the respondent, which they recommend to be made, such weight will be given to these remarks as they may appear to deserve.' Your memorialist had not been able to obtain any official record of the fact, but he is informed, and verily believes, that in the above case of The Queen v. Murphy the sentence on the convict was at once commuted. There will, doubtless, be within your Excellency's reach ample means of informing yourself correctly on this point.

"9. It is humbly submitted to your Excellency that the separation of the jury in the present case, and their free commerce and communication with the outside public, was a miscarriage of justice and a violation of law. Your memorialist is advised that until near the commencement of the present century the law was that in no case of felony could the Court adjourn over the night. The object of that rule was, according to Lord Chief Justice Eyre, 'that it may be quite sure that justice will be done both to the Crown and to the prisoner; that there should be no opportunity of having intercourse with the jury; and that there may be no improper influence upon the minds of those who are in any manner to take a part in the decision of the cause' (Colbitt's 'State Trials,' vol. 25, page 180). The first case of a trial for felony in which the Court adjourned over the night was, your memorialist is advised, that of The Queen v. Hardy (24 'State Trials,' 414), and in that case, in order to prevent any possibility of the jury communicating with the outside public, beds were supplied for them in the court-house, and they spent the night there. The present practice of sending jurors to an inn arose, your memorialist is advised, for the first time in the case of The Queen v. Tooke ('State Trials,' vol. 25, page 13, et seq.). In that case the Lord Chief Baron Maconald justified the departure from the ancient form in the following words:—"But if you can preserve the spirit and are forced by physical necessity to make the form bend, it does not seem to me that the sacred principle of law is materially trenching upon if the jury continue inaccessible. . . . If the rule of law cannot be preserved consistent with physical necessity, it seems to me the Court is justified in deviating from the particular mode that has obtained, taking care that the jury do continue inaccessible.'

"10. The principle thus laid down by Chief Baron Maconald has, your memorialist submits, ever since been acted upon. When cases of felony run into a second day the jury has been sent to an inn for the night; but elaborate precautions have always been taken by those sworn by the court to take charge of the jury to secure that the jury shall be as inaccessible to the general public while in the inn as when shut up in the jury-box. 'The sacred principle of law, the inaccessibility of the jurors,' is jealously guarded by the oath administered to the bailiffs. It is submitted that in the present case the inaccessibility of the jury was not preserved, as the jury were allowed to go whither they pleased through the hotel—as half their number spent over three hours in the public billiard-room, mixing and conversing with the members of the general public who entered the room, and separated from their fellows. It is respectfully submitted to your Excellency that in this case the confinement of the jury in the hotel was ineffectual; that for all purposes of separation from the outside public they may as well have dispersed to their homes as remained in the hotel; that, in short, what Chief Baron Maconald called 'the sacred principle of law—the inaccessibility of the jury,' was not observed.

"11. Your Excellency's attention is respectfully drawn to the fact that there are many instances in which the prerogative of the Executive has been used to prevent the execution of the sentence where irregularities have been proved to have occurred in the jury-room. Your Excellency's attention is respectfully directed to the very recent case of Gerald Mainwaring, who, at the summer assizes of Derby in the year 1879, was found guilty of wilful murder by a jury and sentenced to death. It afterwards transpired that six of the jury were for a verdict of manslaughter and six for a verdict of murder, and that a casting vote of the foreman of the jury had decided the matter. In that case, when Sir Richard Cross, the then Home Secretary, was questioned in the House of Commons as to whether, owing to the irregularities of the jury, the capital sentence would be carried out, Sir Richard Cross said, in reply, 'He should have thought it absolutely unnecessary to put such a question.' (Hansard, vol. 149, page 676.) Mainwaring's sentence was forthwith commuted.

"12. There have also been cases in which the judges, when they discovered that such irregularities occurred, declined to accept the verdict. For example, a case of the Queen v. Gilligan will be found reported in the Dublin papers of the 26th July, 1867. In that case a woman was tried for child murder at the Tullamore assizes, the presiding judge being the late Lord Chief Baron Pigott. It was discovered during the course of the case that at luncheon time eight of the jurors had left the box, and had gone into a refreshment room which was open to the public, but which was within the precincts of the court-house. The Lord Chief Baron commented strongly on the conduct of the jury, fined each of them, and discharged them from giving a verdict. The woman was subsequently tried on a second indictment, and found guilty of concealing the birth of her child.

"13. In the case of inferior Courts, the Queen's Bench has not hesitated to quash verdicts when the jury was guilty of irregularities or misconduct. Your Excellency's attention is respectfully directed to the case of the Ballyragget inquest, in which judgment was given by the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland on the 6th day of March, 1882. In that case a verdict of wilful murder was returned by a coroner's jury, sitting at Ballyragget, in the county of Kilkenny, against two sub-inspectors of police, named Bouchier and O'Brien. The Attorney-General moved the Court of Queen's Bench to quash the inquisition on the ground that 'it had not been taken and held as by law required; that the jurors impanelled on the inquest had, during the proceedings, communed with persons who were not their fellow jurors, and with whom it was not lawful for them to communicate; that certain of the jurors absented themselves during the examination of some of the witnesses and did not hear the said witnesses examined; also, that after the evidence had concluded, and after the jury had been charged by the coroner, while they were deliberating on their verdict the coroner and his son—the latter not being a juror—remained shut up with the jury during their deliberation.' The communications of the jury with persons not jurors was, your memorialist is advised, one of the main reasons relied on by the Crown for quashing the inquisition. After full argument, the Court of Queen's Bench made an order quashing the inquisition, and the accused parties were thus freed from the verdict. A coroner's jury is in the nature of a grand jury: it decides nothing, but merely presents a case for inquiry. If the irregularity or misconduct of a coroner's jury is a matter so serious that their verdict is quashed and the persons accused by it allowed to go free, it is humbly submitted that the case is surely far stronger in the case of the irregularity or the misconduct of a jury, finally deciding on the life or death of a human being.

"Upon these grounds and for these reasons your memorialist humbly prays that the capital sentence on the said Francis Hynes should not, under the circumstances aforesaid, be carried into effect. And your memorialist will, as in duty bound, ever pray.

"JOHN FROST."

A LEGAL MENU.

One who partook of the Annual Dinner, 1882, of the Canterbury, N. Z., Law Society, held at "Coker's (Upon Lyttleton) Hotel," favours us with the following copy of the Menu:—

Respondent Oysters.

Soups.—A la Reine; "Tort" la.

Fish.—Frost fish, sauce d'Avocat; Filets au Turbot ("Feme Soles" and "Habeas Porpoises," not to be had).

Interlocutory Entries (for trial).—Cutlets à la Nolle Prosequi; Boudins de volaille (very Nisi-Tax-us); Suprême (Court) de veau; Filets de B(ri)sef (N.B. Foe'd well); Vol-au Veuve change avec costes; Pigeons plumés à la mode des Clients.

Relèves.—Turkey in Trover and Boeuf "attached"; Scarlett's Tongue; Wool-saque de Mouton, Q.C. Jelly; Hotch-pot Clauses.

Game.—Faisan rôti en damages spéciales (Hare-at-law and therefore unable to attend).

Entremets.—Diplomatic Padding; New Leases; Charlotte Russe; Macedon of Grapes; Appeals à la Parisienne; Neapolitan Cake; Champagne Biscuits; Scintille Juris; "Petty Bag" atelle; Ramequin of Cheese; Anchovies (Devil's own); as a "Digest."

Dessert Postea.

Wines.—Champagne (Veuve Clicquot) in several "LEADING CASES" to be served "without impeachment of waste;" White Burgundy (Meursault); Steinberg Cabinet et HOOK genus homme; Old Pale Sherry; Law re—"PORTS" and Château Margaux (vintage '70); Madeira; Liqueurs (Marchano and Noyau).

AS-SUM-SIT nearer the Chairman than others they will please request him to circulate the bottle freely and prevent "stoppage in transitu."

THE WORK OF THE SESSION.

Two hundred and eight public Bills have been introduced into the House of Commons during the present session, in addition to 40 "Provisional Order Bills," all of which latter passed. Of the rest 84 have become law, 86 were withdrawn by the members introducing them, and 70 became "dropped orders." Five Bills are placed on the notice-book of the House of Commons to take their chance of being dealt with after the House meets to consider Mr. Gladstone's Procedure resolutions in October. Omitting the Provisional Order Bills, 70 of the public Bills of the present session were Government measures, and of these 54 were placed on the Statute-book. Several of the Bills were more or less duplicates of others: thus there were two Ancient Monuments Bills, one of which became law; two Bankruptcy Bills; two Agricultural Tenants' Compensation Bills, both of which were dropped; two Bills dealing with Church Patronage, both of them withdrawn or dropped; two dealing with Copyright, the one in works of art, the other, which became law, in musical compositions; two Corn Returns Bills; three Fisheries (Ireland) Bills; three Infectious Diseases Notification Bills, two of them applying only to Ireland; three Bills for amending the Irish Land Act of 1881; three relating to corrupt practices at Parliamentary elections; two Poor Removal (Ireland) Bills; two relating to the licensing of passenger vessels in Scotland, one of which became law; two relating to patents for inventions; three Sunday Liquor Bills—one general, one for Ireland, and one for Cornwall; three relating to the Supreme Courts of Judicature, one of which, applying exclusively to Ireland, was passed; and two Tithe Rent Charge Bills. Three hundred and eight private Bills were introduced into Parliament this session, 102 of them originating in the House of Lords and 206 in the House of Commons. Four "Girvan and Portpatrick Railway" Bills were consolidated into one, while a "Metropolis Management, Building, and Floods Prevention Acts Amendment Bill" and a "Metropolitan Board of Works Bill" were consolidated into a "Metropolitan Board of Works (Various Powers) Bill" thus practically reducing the total to 303. Altogether 229 of these Bills passed into law:—Out of 136 railway Bills 92 became law; out of 21 water Bills 18 became law; out of 14 gas Bills 13 became law; out of 22 tramway Bills 21 became law; out of 24 dock and harbour Bills 22 became law; out of 49 local improvement, drainage, bridge, &c., Bills 43 became law. Eight electric lighting Bills were introduced, but all were withdrawn; only one canal Bill was introduced, and it was withdrawn. Among miscellaneous Bills not included in the above enumeration may be mentioned the two Channel Tunnel Bills, which were withdrawn; the Liverpool Hydraulic Power Company's Bill, which never got beyond the House of Lords, into which it was introduced; the Limehouse Subway Bill and the Greenwich and Mill-wall Subway Bill, both of which became law; the Metropolitan Markets (Fish, &c.) Bill, the London Riverside Fishmarket Bill, and the South London Market Bill, all three of which also became law. Among other Bills which became law may be mentioned four private estates Bills, including those dealing with the estates of the Maharajah Duleep Singh and of the Earl of Aylesford; the Agricultural Company of Mauritius Bill, the City of Glasgow Bank (Liquidation) Bill, the City of London Courts Bill, Lecky and Smyth's Patent Bill, the Oyfarttha Works Bill, the Belfast Presbyterian College Bill, the King's College Bill, the Walton Vicarage Bill, and the Railway Management and Working Company's Bill. One bank Bill and two insurance companies' Bills also passed. Among "private" Bills of public interest which did not pass was the Paddington-park Bill. As showing the progress of legislation, it may be mentioned that 26 Bills originating in the Lords never reached the Commons. In the Lower Chamber only two suffered the indignity of being actually rejected, while 10 others were reported as "preamble not proved," and one was stopped for non-compliance with standing orders. Two private Bills received the Royal assent as early as April 28, the next batch being delayed till May 19.

IN RE THE SUEZ CANAL.

It is reported that the judicial council of the Suez Canal Company are of opinion that an action would lie under French law against the English Government, as shareholders in the company, for indemnities for all loss of business or damage done to the canal by the English expedition. In the first place, the evidence would probably be that the English expedition had caused the business to be much greater than if those travelling on the canal had been left to the mercy of the Egyptian rebels. The expedition is not likely to cause damage to the canal itself, but to preserve it from injury. It is extremely improbable that the English Government would submit to the jurisdiction of the French Courts, and it is just as unlikely that the English general will be deterred by the terrible threat of French legal proceedings from using the canal in any way which he may think expedient for furthering the objects of the expedition.—Law Times.

LAKE LEMAN IN A LAW COURT.

Almost from time immemorial the bed of the Rhone at Geneva has been more or less obstructed by weirs, breakwaters, and other buildings, and almost from time immemorial the shores of the lake, especially about the Ouchy and between Ouchy and Vevey, have been subject to periodical inundations, greatly to the loss of lacustrine proprietors. These inundations always occur in the height of summer, when the lake is swollen by the melting of Alpine snows. When a very warm summer follows on a very hard winter the water rises so high that the roads skirting the upper lake are often rendered impassable, and fields and vineyards submerged at the most promising time of the year. The Vaudois contend that these annual floodings, whereby the canton sustains so much damage, are caused by obstructions in the bed of the river at Geneva. The Genevans, on the other hand, say that these obstructions are so slight that they cannot appreciably affect the overflow from the lake, and that the true source of the mischief is to be found in the Upper Rhone, which, owing to the recent corrections (straightenings) of its channels and the channels of its tributaries, pours its waters into the lake much more rapidly than of yore. It is further urged that the filling up of the lake in the neighbourhood of Villeneuve and Bonveret by débris brought down by the Rhone tends to raise its level, and, therefore, to cause flooding. In answer to these arguments the Vaudois point out that, so far back as the 17th century, the Government of Berne made formal complaint to the Government of Geneva in respect of the check on the overflow of the Rhone occasioned by artificial obstructions at Geneva; and in 1721 a conference was held on the subject between Landvogt von Steiger, on behalf of Berne, and representatives of the neighbouring Republic, when the latter formally recognised their responsibility, and promised to remove the principal obstruction—a promise, however, which it is alleged they failed to fulfil. Since that time the complaint has been frequently repeated, and about four years ago Vaud sued Geneva for heavy damages before the Federal tribunal. Geneva disputed the competence of the tribunal in the matter, but the tribunal having affirmed its competence, and its decision on all points of constitutional law being final, the Canton has been obliged to join issue in the case on its merits. Meanwhile, without, however, admitting any responsibility, the municipality of Geneva have removed the obstruction most complained about—a weir placed across the river below Ronssan's Island, in connexion with a hydraulic machine for pumping water to a reservoir in the Bois de la Batie for service in the town. But this, of course, does not settle the question of compensation for past damages—if the weir has been the cause of any—and so the suit goes on. So many technical points being involved, the Federal Government have appointed two foreign experts, M. de Maere, a Belgian engineer, and Herr Bazin, a German engineer, to consider the matter in dispute and prepare a report thereon. The Federal tribunal have appointed two independent experts to assist in the inquiry, and these gentlemen are accompanied in their excursions in the valley of the Upper Rhone, and their inspection of the glaciers which feed Lake Lemman, by other experts specially representing the Cantons of Geneva and Vaud. Now the Rhone and the Aletsch glaciers, as well as the river and the lake, are to be brought into court, an ingenious scientific gentleman having lately started the theory that ice, not water, is the cause of all the trouble. He attempts to prove this by pointing out that, while the glaciers which drain into the Rhone possess a superficies of 1,000 square kilometres, the superficies of Lake Lemman is only 575 square kilometres. Hence the movements of the Rhone and Aletsch glaciers must have a far more powerful influence on the summer height of the lake than any conceivable number of obstructions in the bed of the river at Geneva. For 30 or 40 years past, moreover, the glaciers all over Switzerland have been receding, and, as there is no proof that less snow has fallen than usual, it follows that the summer wasting of the glaciers—the whole of which finds its way into the lake—has been above the average of the previous 30 or 40 years—a period during which the glaciers were either advancing or stationary. This theory, though far from being generally accepted, has attracted considerable attention; and it is evident that, among other things, the Federal tribunal will have to deliver judgment on the effect of the waxing and waning of glaciers in the swelling and shrinking of Swiss lakes. A few days ago the experts concerned in the investigation held a meeting in the Alabama room of the Geneva Hôtel de Ville, when the various matters in dispute were passed under review. From a scientific and technical point of view the discussion is said to have been highly interesting and instructive. There is no reason to suppose, however, that the deliberations of the conference will tend to simplify the case, or hasten its conclusion. The suit has now lasted nearly five years; it may, as likely as not, go on for five years longer; and whatever light it is destined to throw on glacial and lacustrine phenomena, it can hardly fail to involve a heavy expenditure of public money.

EVIDENCE OF REPUTATION IN LIBEL.

The net result of the case of Scott v. Sampson, reported in the July number of the Law Journal Reports, may be stated to be that general evidence of bad reputation may be given against the plaintiff in an action of libel upon an allegation raising that issue in the defendant's pleadings; but instances tending to depreciate the plaintiff's reputation cannot be given. The subject requires first to be stripped of ambiguities in the use of words. The word "character" had best be discarded from it, as it may mean disposition (its original sense) or reputation (the secondary sense which has been given to it). Mr. Justice Cave uses the word "disposition" in place of "character" in its original meaning. It is not a very good word, but is, perhaps, the best available, as free from ambiguity. The ambiguity in the word "character" corresponds, to some extent, to an ambiguity in the law. The law allows an action for damages to character. Does it mean reputation, whether deserved or not? or, does it mean only a deserved reputation? In other words, can a man recover damages on the strength of a character which the world gives him, but which he is far from deserving in fact? A tradesman, for example, may have the highest reputation for honesty, and yet he may habitually sand his sugar. Suppose some one accuses him of dusting his pepper; can the accuser, in order to reduce the damages, prove that the plaintiff sanded his sugar by the evidence of an errand-boy, who was his sole accomplice and who has not hitherto breathed the fact? It was practically part of the contention of the defendant in Scott v. Sampson that the supposed accuser could bring such evidence. The present case decides, among other things, that he cannot. It is the reputation in fact, not the reputation in merit, which the law protects. A reputation no doubt may be valuable although it is not deserved; but it is not easy to reconcile the view taken with the theory upon which a defendant is allowed to justify a libel. It is usually said that truth is a good answer to an action of libel, because the truth cannot injure the plaintiff's character. If so, the "character" protected by the law is the real, not the public, character. Either, then, the reason usually given for allowing justification is not the true reason, or the character protected by law is the real character. Strict logic cannot help out of the difficulty. The law of libel is framed largely on expediency. Few actions of libel could be tried within reasonable limits if the plaintiff's whole history were in issue. On the other hand, where a distinct accusation is made and the accusation is distinctly challenged, the law undertakes to try the question. To that extent it recognises the merits of a character; but, for the rest, is content with reputation.

The libel in the case of Scott v. Sampson may be briefly stated. The defendant, who was the publisher of a newspaper, wrote of the plaintiff, who was the editor of a dramatic periodical, that the plaintiff had attempted to extort money from the executor of a dead actress by threatening to publish statements defamatory of her. The plaintiff was called as a witness by the defendant, and it was proposed to ask him whether he had written a dramatic notice to spite an actor, whether he had apologised for libels, whether he had not taken proceedings for libel against another newspaper and discontinued them, and whether he had not on that occasion made statements inconsistent with his present statements? A witness was tendered to prove what the plaintiff had said, at the Police Court, in the proceedings referred to; and, finally, a witness was tendered to prove that he had heard, before the publication of the libel in question, rumours of the same charge against the plaintiff. The evidence tendered and rejected by the Chief Justice at the trial resolved itself into instances showing a bad disposition on the plaintiff's part, and into rumours of his possessing such a disposition. The authorities on the subject are more numerous than valuable. Almost all the cases cited were Nisi Prius cases, which would not be technically binding on a Court in Banc unless they were uniform.

This was far from the case. As to the admissibility of rumours, Lord Ellenborough appears to have admitted them in one case, and Mr. Justice Cresswell, with the approval of Mr. Justice Wightman, in another. On the other hand, Lord Tenterden and Mr. Justice Coltman rejected them in two other cases, and Sir James Mansfield once admitted them against his own judgment. This was at Nisi Prius. As to the Courts in Banc, the Court of Exchequer rejected the evidence in Jones v. Stevens, 11 Prius 285; and the Irish Court of Exchequer, in Bell v. Parke, 11 Ir. O. L. R. 413, did the same, with the dissent of Chief Baron Pigot. Mr. Justice Cave was, therefore, justified in saying that the weight of authority was against this class of evidence. As to the admissibility of specific instances, the authority seems to have been all against it. Mr. Justice Cave, in a most careful judgment, comes to the conclusion that the evidence tendered was not admissible, although evidence of the general reputation of the plaintiff would have been admissible. Mr. Justice Mathew, in a briefer judgment, agrees with Mr. Justice Cave on both points.

The admissibility of general evidence of bad reputation was not raised in the case, but it can hardly be doubted that such evidence is admissible. Suppose, for example, the defendant was sued for saying that the plaintiff had stolen B.'s watch. The defendant, according to the present ruling, could not prove that the plaintiff had stolen C.'s, D.'s, and E.'s watches, neither could he give evidence that there were rumours that B.'s watch had also fallen a victim to him. But he might call a detective from Scotland Yard to say that the plaintiff was a notorious pickpocket; otherwise the whole case would be tried as if the plaintiff were a blameless gentleman against whom an unfounded charge had been brought, when, as a matter of fact, the defendant had only made a mistake in the name of one of the plaintiff's victims. The question of pleading, also incidentally raised in the case, was not so clear. Mr. Justice Cave gives as an additional ground for rejecting the evidence tendered, the fact that it was not pleaded. He does not say that, in his opinion, general worthlessness of character ought to be pleaded, but he appears to imply as much. Mr. Justice Mathew, while admitting that, according to the best authorities, it was not necessary to plead such a general allegation of bad reputation under the old system, says that it is necessary to do so under the new. We are unable to follow this reasoning. Under the old system nothing was pleaded which did not go to the root of the action. As a general rule a plea to damages was inadmissible; but where special damage formed part of the cause of action, as in some slanders, the special damage might be traversed. The new system requires by Order XIX., Rule 4, that the pleadings shall contain the "material facts on which the party relies." Must not this mean material to the cause of action, as under the old system? If not, to what are the facts to be material? Any other test would lead to great uncertainties. Suppose, for instance, the defendant knew that the plaintiff's chief witness was a person not to be believed on his oath. Is he to plead that fact, or not be allowed to call the half-dozen witnesses he has to show that the plaintiff's witness cannot be believed? The opinion expressed on this head seems to adopt too broad a test of materiality. The decision on the main point is based on expediency, and the capacity of law Courts to investigate cases, rather than on a consistent theory of the law of libel; but it seems to be sound all the same.—Law Journal.

CRIMINAL LUNATICS.—In the year ending the 29th of September the number charged and detained as criminal lunatics in England and Wales was 827—656 males and 216 females.

THE GAME LAWS.—Last year there were 11,117 offences against the game laws and 10,107 in the previous year.

COST OF CORONERS' INQUESTS.—In 1881 the cost of inquests, including salaries, &c., was £88,229 11s. 8d., being an average of 23 4s. 2d. each.

IN THE MATTER OF AN UMBRELLA.

At the Nenagh Petty Sessions on Saturday last—before Messrs. Henry H. Pee (in the chair), Randal Howe, Charles E. Tuthill, and J. F. Lynch, R.M.—an ex-draper's assistant named John Anthony Maher, formerly of Rosorea, late of Nenagh, and latest of Rathdowney, was brought up in custody, and charged by Sub-constable Jeremiah Regan with having stolen a silk umbrella from the house of Dr. Morton, Summer Hill, Nenagh, on Saturday, the 12th ult.

Mr. William Reeves, S.I., R.I.C., conducted the prosecution. The prisoner conducted his own defence with all the assurance of an experienced practitioner, yet with an assumption of injured innocence as if he were a martyr to circumstances.

The principal evidence for the prosecution was that of Nanny Ralph, a servant in the employment of Dr. Morton, who deposed that on the day in question the prisoner called at her master's house, and asked if Dr. Morton was in. She replied that he was not, and asked if Mrs. Morton would do. She then went to inform her mistress of the presence of the man in the hall who wanted to see the doctor. On her (witness's) return to the hall she missed from the stand a silk umbrella, the property of a young lady then on a visit to Mrs. Morton. The umbrella now produced was the one taken from the hall.

CHAIRMAN—Is that the man (prisoner) whom you saw in the hall?

WITNESS—It is, sir.

PRISONER (assuming a tragic air)—

Lady, look me straight in the face,
I am but the wreck of a Royal race;
Of fortune and friends they have bereft,
I'm John Anthony Maher—that's all that's now left.

Evidence was then given by a Mrs. Margaret Minogue to the effect that on the evening in question the prisoner came to her husband's house and asked her to buy the umbrella for two shillings, but she said she did not want to buy it. He then said that he was very hungry, that he wanted his dinner, and then she might have "the article" for a shilling. She gave him the shilling "through compassion, your worships," though she had not known him before, neither did she ask him his name.

The CHAIRMAN expressed his surprise, that a person of such apparent respectability as Mrs. Minogue should have purchased a valuable umbrella from such a man as the prisoner, for a shilling; to which the witness replied that she had no "forecast" in the matter.

PRISONER (who was "all impatience" to make a speech)—Well, gentlemen of the court, what do you charge me with? I went into a house to see a doctor. I was hungry, I was thirsty—nay, gentlemen, I was delirious; in fact 'twas our old familiar friend, John Jameson, that did it all—through me—I was but the "instrument." If I took the umbrella—and we will assume, for argument sake, that I did—I was quite unconscious of having done so; that, gentlemen, is "the head and front of my offending." Now, what's the odds? I had £100 a-year as assistant in a draper's shop in Rathdowney; let me go back to my business there again, and you shall never see me more.

CHAIRMAN—There is no doubt but that you stole this umbrella, and the magistrates—

PRISONER—Pardon me, your worship, for one moment, while I address the Court. There was often ten times as much taken from me, and I never said a word about it. I lost a chain and locket that stood me 19s. 4d.—first cost, gentlemen, I assure you—and I have never seen or heard of them since. I wish I were dead. And who knows if life be not what we poor mortals call death, and death the thing that we call life? There's a problem for you, gentlemen—which of you shall solve it?

CHAIRMAN—Why did you leave Rathdowney?

PRISONER—"Thereby hangs a tale"—

One evening in May, as the setting sun shone,
The shop it was there, and John Anthony gone.

CHAIRMAN—I have here your photograph—

PRISONER (with well-feigned surprise)—What! mine, your worship? Did you say my photo, my second self?

CHAIRMAN—Yes; and it is an accurate likeness. Look at it (and his worship confronted the prisoner with his photo, at foot of which was the date—"17-1-75"—and the prisoner's name in full).

PRISONER (looking at the picture with all the air of an art critic)—Well, your worship, I cannot compliment the artist, for it is not a speaking likeness. However, now, your worship, look on that picture, then on this (striking his breast), for you "ne'er may look upon the like again."

CHAIRMAN—I have also here a record of many previous convictions against you, and by which I find that you were four times convicted of larceny, seven times for vagrancy—

PRISONER—Oh! Mother of Moses!

CHAIRMAN—Once as a public nuisance—

PRISONER—(with a smirk)—You don't say so.

CHAIRMAN—And twenty-one times for drunkenness—

PRISONER—Shall I ever get drunk again?

CHAIRMAN—In fact, we have such a good character of you here on this record, that we shall give you the benefit of it, and send you for trial on this charge to the next quarter sessions.

PRISONER—Now I should like to know who was the recording angel that went to the trouble of jotting down all my peccadilloes. What about all the good things I have ever done?

Oh! if all my meritorious deeds were stated,
They'd more than balance all you have enumerated.

CHAIRMAN—That will do now, you may go down.

PRISONER—

"Down to the dust from which I've sprung, Unwept, unhonoured, and unsung."

CHAIRMAN—Constable, remove the prisoner. The case is now returned for trial to the next Quarter Sessions.

PRISONER—Holy Moses! Then, John Anthony, my boy, after all your journeying to and fro, and after all the pleasant days and nights you've spent, I fear me very much that your sun has at length set, and set for ever.

The prisoner was then removed in custody.

REGISTRATION OF SOCIETIES MAKING GAIN.

Of late years nearly every enterprise which requires considerable capital has been undertaken by a number of persons acting as an association, whereby each contributes a share resembling the manner in which ordinary trading companies are established and carry on business. Whether any such association requires to be registered is one of the first matters to be attended to, and sometimes it has also been deemed prudent to consider whether the association offends against the Lotteries Acts, which justices have to administer, and when they do so they treat with no small severity the offenders. There are many societies which have objects more or less gainful, and more or less philanthropic, and it is necessary to be able to steer clear of all such enactments on one side and on the other; and of late there have been one or two decisions of great authority as to the border line separating one class of undertaking from another. And most people are now interested in societies and associations which come under one or other category.

The Lotteries Acts are directed chiefly against the grosser kinds of practices approaching very near to nuisances, whereby people expect to make their fortunes without the trouble of working for them. But the Companies Act, 1862, deals with another view of the subject, and is designed to regulate the relations between the shareholders and the directors of all kinds of enterprises which are in other respects perfectly lawful if not necessary in ordinary life. When companies became so common, the legislature found it necessary to construct a code whereby those who contribute their money, and those who have the expending of it, may more easily control and bring each other to account. And one of the prominent features is to secure creditors against being too easily imposed on by those who carry on these companies, and often maintain a large business connexion. The Act 25 and 26 Vict., c. 89, s. 4, enacts that no company or partnership consisting of more than 20 persons shall be formed after the date of the Act for the purpose of carrying on any business that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company or by the individual members thereof unless it is registered as a company. There are one or two modifications as to banking and mining companies which do not require a special notice. There are various provisions for enforcing this registration and securing to shareholders and creditors the means of knowing who are the shareholders, and what is the extent of capital under their control. It is thus of great importance to know where a company or association of 20 persons are exempt from the requirements imposed as to registration and its incidents.

Many societies have bye-laws and regulations which give at certain stages powers and advantages which are ascertained by a ballot or what are called drawings. In the case of Wallingford v. The Mutual Society, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 685, the appellant Wallingford was an iron-monger at Andover, and became a member of the Mutual Society which was formed for the purpose of accumulating capital by monthly subscriptions of its members who were, by drawings in rotation, entitled to receive advances which were to be repaid by certain instalments. The appellant had received four advances at different times amounting to about £11,300, and the Society was to receive from him during a period of years certain instalments, the total of which would be £12,700. He had failed to pay some of the instalments, and was sued by the Society. It is unnecessary to describe the proceedings, but one of the defences he set up was that this transaction was void on account of the Lottery Acts. The Lord Chancellor, however, said that one of those Acts plainly, on the face of it, had reference to gambling transactions only, and this was in no sense a gambling transaction. The other statute had reference to persons who kept lottery offices and sold lottery tickets. None of these Lottery Acts, however, touched the case. And Lord Hatherley observed that if this were held to be a lottery then nearly every one of the building societies and similar societies might be found to fall within the same enactments. This transaction, however, had nothing in common with lotteries.

Another case raised the important point as to whether the Society was one for making gain and so requiring registration under the Companies Acts. In Smith v. Anderson, 15 Ch. D. 241, a number of persons had united in a deed or indenture which recited that divers persons had subscribed to purchase certain scheduled securities such as shares of telegraph companies of the nominal value of £420,000, and that 4,200 certificates were to be issued to subscribers, each in respect of £90 subscribed. The holder was to be entitled to £100 of the nominal capital, and ultimately to a share of the profits. When divested of technicalities, this association was intended to do very much the same thing as a stock and share-broker does who invests other people's money, and who changes the stocks by selling and buying. The prospectus held out that there would be a profit of about £30 on every £90 if the person investing should be lucky enough to be a drawer, or if the certificates should be bought by tender. This was to be over and above an ordinary average profit of 26 lbs. 4s. 4d. per cent.

The plaintiff was a certificate holder, and brought an action against the surviving trustees, alleging the sale and purchase of shares and stocks, and that a drawing had taken place, and that the association was formed for the acquisition of gain without being registered, and the drawings were illegal, and claiming to have the trusts administered and the property divided between the certificate holders. The Master of the Rolls first decided the question raised, and after reviewing all the details, came to the conclusion that the association were carrying on a business for the acquisition of gain. His view was very clear and strong, and he had previously decided a somewhat similar case in the same way as he decided this. He said it appeared to him that this was as plain a company or association formed for the transaction of business for the purpose of gain as could be fairly put into words, if you change names and nothing more. If you changed three names and called the certificate holders shareholders, the trustees directors, and the association a company, it was then an ordinary Joint Stock Company. It was not only within the words of the Act, but it was the very thing which the Companies Act intended to prohibit for various reasons, and this was a mere device, and a very transparent one, to endeavour to escape from the plain meaning of the enactment. He said that the deed had no doubt been drawn with great care by eminent counsel; but they often deceived themselves into thinking that they had evaded an Act of Parliament successfully, whereas their handiwork when once it came to be examined in a court of justice satisfied no judicial authority.

The case was carried to the Court of Appeal, and that court, consisting of James, L.J., Brett, L.J., and Cotton, L.J., reversed this very confident judgment of the Master of the Rolls, and thereby overthrew other cases decided by the same authority in the same way. The valuable judgment of the Court of Appeal explained the difference between the kind of floating association and the ordinary definite body called a company. An association of this kind was rather a succession of partnerships than a partnership for any one period. The trustees were not in the position of directors. A trustee is the real owner of property subject only to his accounting to some third parties; while a director is a paid servant of a definite body and never enters into a contract for himself, but merely acts for and binds his principal, that is to say, the company. The learned judges therefore said that here there was nothing to be done which comes within the ordinary meaning of business, and nothing more than what is done by trustees under a marriage settlement who have large properties vested in them, and who have very extensive powers of disposing and exchanging investments, selling them and re-investing the money according to their discretion and judgment, with or without the consent of their cestuis que trust. There was here over £400,000 worth of stock of a particular kind, which was merely a good investment spread over a great number of things in order that the one might equalise the other. Some investments would pay large dividends and some would pay small dividends. But the object was a legitimate object, namely, to have an investment of their money under such circumstances, that the certificate holders might look for a high dividend with a very considerable security for the capital which they were investing. It was nothing like an attempt to evade any Act of Parliament.

Such was the opinion of all the three judges of the Court of Appeal. They held that the only business of the certificate holders was to receive and consider a report from their trustees; to appoint auditors and elect new trustees; and it was impossible to say that these certificate holders were by themselves carrying on any business any more than any persons who were cestuis que trust under any well drawn trust deed. There was thus no registration required of such an association of persons however numerous.

A very recent case of Wigfield v. Potter, J. P., p. 485, has arisen, involving a very similar point, and which has been disposed of according to the view taken in the Court of Appeal. In this last case a society of more than 20 persons called the Moorgate Freehold Society had been constituted by a deed. Their object was to purchase an estate of 28 acres and divide it according to certain rules. There were 21 subscribers and 48 shares or allotments. They had a committee of two trustees, a president, and five members, who were paid for their services such a sum as the members in their annual meeting should determine. The allotments were offered by auction to the members who had executed the deed, each allotment being offered at a certain proportion of the first cost of the estate, and the highest bidder above that sum acquired it, and it was conveyed to him. The plaintiff was sued by the trustees for two of the monthly instalments which he had contracted to pay, and also for some fines incident thereto, and he set up the defence that this was an illegal society because it was intended for purposes of gain, and was not registered under the Companies Act, 1862. The county court judge held that it was not a company for gain, and an appeal was brought to the Queen's Bench Division. The court, on the authority of the previous case, held that this judgment was right, and so that there was no need of registration.

These cases recognise a point of law which is of great interest and importance, especially as regards building and freehold societies, and that it was of some difficulty is evident from the circumstance that the learned Master of the Rolls had several times gone wrong about it.—Justice of the Peace.

IMITATIONS OF COFFEE.

Under an Act of Parliament of 1872 the excise duty on chicory and other vegetable matter applicable to the uses of chicory or coffee grown in the United Kingdom has hitherto been 12s. 1d. per cwt. And under an Act of 1876 the Customs' duty has been 18s. 8d. per cwt. on the raw or kiln dried, and 2d. per pound on the roasted or ground. These regulations are now superseded, except so far as chicory is concerned, in the new Customs and Inland Revenue Act of this year by the grant of an excise duty of a halfpenny on every quarter of a pound on imitations of coffee and on mixtures of such articles with coffee. This duty is to be collected by means of an adhesive stamp, to be fixed to the packets containing the articles. The sale of these imitations of coffee and "coffee mixtures" is made subject to certain conditions, one of which is that the packets are to contain an exact number of quarters of a pound; and another is that a label shall be affixed to each packet, denoting the proper names of the substances of which the mixture is composed. The penalty for infringing the Act is forfeiture of the article and a fine of £30. However, it is declared that the Act is not to affect any statute relating to the adulteration of food. One section of the Act abolishes the restrictions and penalties imposed on the manufacturers of and dealers in these articles by the statutes of 1803 and 1860.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Daniell's Chancery Practice (5th Edition), 1,190.
Macpherson on Infants, 103.

Taking out a summons to appoint a guardian in the matter of an infant and payment of money into Court to her account are both sufficient to constitute her a ward of Court (De Pereda v. De Mancha, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 204).

Daniell's Chancery Practice (6th Edition), 752.

The award of an arbitrator in an action in the Chancery Division need not be made a rule of Court before any order can be made to enforce it (Jones v. Wedgewood, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 206).

Bankruptcy Rules, 143 and 144.
Robson on Bankruptcy (4th Edition), 93.

Where an appeal from the County Court was not entered in the Bankruptcy Court until the last day allowed, and notice of the appeal was not sent off to the country registrar till the day following: held that the notice had not been sent "forthwith," and, therefore, the appeal was out of time (In re Southam, ex parte Lamb, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 207)—C.A.

Daniell's Chancery Practice (6th Edition), 9.

Where it is desired to appeal from the order of a judge in chambers on a summons not afterwards adjourned into Court, the appellant should serve notice of motion to discharge the order, so as to enable the judge to give his reasons for his decision (Holloway v. Cheston, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 208).

Order LVIII., Rule 16.

Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 263.

An application to stay execution for the purpose of appealing to the House of Lords in respect of the amount of damages refused (Webber v. London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B., 154)—C.A.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. John F. Small, solicitor, has been elected to the office of Coroner for the southern districts of County Armagh, vacated by Mr. Garland, J.P., on his appointment as an Assistant Land Commissioner.

Mr. W. J. Keatley has been appointed Clerk of Petty Sessions for the Lifford district.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Prevention of Crime (Ireland) Act, 1882, with a Review of the policy, bearing, and scope of the Act; Notes on the several Sections, chiefly those on the subject of Summary Procedure for Offences against the Act. By HENRY HUMPHREYS. Dublin: Hodges, Figgis, and Co., Grafton-street, Publishers to the University. 1882.

Arrears of Rent (Ireland) Act, 1882, (45 & 46 Vict., Cap. 47.) with Rules and Forms. Dublin: John Falconer. 1882.

The Bills of Exchange Act, 1882. With Explanatory Notes and an Index. By M. D. CHALMERS, Esq., M.A., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Draftsman of the Bill, &c. London: Waterlow & Sons, Limited, London Wall, E.C. 1882.

The Nineteenth Century. A Monthly Review, Edited by JAMES KNOWLES. No. 67. September, 1882. London: C. Kegan Paul & Co.

Contemporary Review. September, 1882. London: Strahan and Co., Limited, Paternoster-row.

Cassell's History of England from the earliest period to the present time. With about 2,000 Illustrations. Part 84. London, Paris, and New York: Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.

COURT PAPERS.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Crosby, John E., of Sir John Rogerson's-quay, in the city of Dublin, trading as "John E. Crosby and Son," and of Eden-quay, in the said city, trading as "Lanigan and Co." rope manufacturer. August 18; Tuesday, September 12, and Friday, September 29. M. Larkin & Co., solrs.

Dixon, William, of Clones, in the county of Monaghan, publican, grocer, and general shopkeeper. August 11; Tuesday, September 12, and Friday, September 29. Henry T. Stewart, solr.

Palmer, Maurice Studdert, of Tralee, in the county of Kerry, gentleman. August 11; Tuesday, September 12, and Friday, September 29. R. Davoren, solr.

Regan, Honora, of Ballinadriscan, in the county of Cork, widow, farmer. August 18; Friday, September 15, and Tuesday, October 3. Richard Davoren, solr.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	AUGUST					Sep.
	Sat. 26	Mon. 28	Tues. 29	Wed. 30	Thur. 31	Fri. 1
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	—	99	—	99½	—	99 ½
— New 3 p c Stock ..	—	98½	99½	99	99	98½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1882 } Traffic at ..	—	103½	103½	103½	103½	103½
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	—	316½	—	319	—
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	—	—	36	—	35½	35½
20 London and County (Ld' &amp;.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock ..	—	—	—	—	—	45
20 London and W'minster, W'd ..	—	68½	—	—	69½	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	61	—	—
3½ Monster Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	7	—	—	—
— Nat. Prov. of England, Lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	—	23½	—	23½	23½	23½
10 National of Liverpool (Ld' &amp;.) ..	—	—	14½	14½	—	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	27½	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	29	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Dublin &amp; Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	58½
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons. G'ns ..	—	—	—	—	—	16½
8 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
7½ Dub. Drapery Whouse, Ltd. ..	—	—	—	—	—	6½
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..	—	—	37½	—	—	—
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance ..	—	—	—	10½	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	10½	—	10½	—
10 L'pl Un'd Tram &amp; Bus L'd ..	—	12½	x d	—	—	—
10 N'th Metr. Tramway, Lond. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
50 Belfast and Northern Cos. ..	—	—	—	—	5½	—
50 Cork and Bandon ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	115½	116	116½	116½	117
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	86½	87½	—
100 Waterford &amp; Cent. Ireland ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 D., W., &amp; W., 6 per cent ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c ..	—	107½	—	—	—	—
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do. 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Waterf. &amp; Limerick, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Leased at Fixed Rentals.
100 Londonderry &amp; Enniskillen ..	—	—	125	—	—	—
100 Do., Pref. 5 p c ..	—	—	125	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos. 4 p c ..	—	105½	—	105½	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	—	105½	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n. 4 p c ..	—	110½	110½	—	—	—
— Kilkenny Junction, A. 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n. 4 p c ..	—	—	105½	—	—	105½
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	109½	—	—	—	—
— L'derry &amp; Enniskillen 5 p c ..	—	—	125	—	—	—
— Waterford &amp; Central 5 p c ..	—	—	107	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
— Ballast Office Deb., 2½ 6s 3d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— City Deb. of 2½ 6s 3d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dub. &amp; Glas. S. F. Co. (1887) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. (1888), 6 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	100½
— Dub. &amp; Kingstown 4 p c ..	—	—	—	102½	103	—
— Dublin Water Works, 5 p c ..	—	106½	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d
Bank Rate—Of Discount—4 per cent.. 17th August, 1882
 Of Deposit—1 per cent.. 23rd March, 1882
Name Days—September 12th and 26th, 1882.
Account Days—September 13th and 27th, 1882.
Business commences at 1.30 p.m.
 The Stock Exchange and Brokers' Offices will be closed on Saturdays during the months of July and August.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Autumnal Remedies.—Towards the fall of the year countless causes are at work to lower the tone of the nervous system, which will be followed by ill-health unless proper means be employed to avert that evil. Holloway's far-famed preparations supply a faultless remedy for both external and internal complaints connected with changes of season. All affections of the skin, roughness, blotches, pimples, superficial and deeper-seated inflammations, erysipelas, rheumatic pains, and gouty pangals all succumb to the exalted virtues of Holloway's Ointment and Pills; which will effect a happy revolution in the patient's condition, though the symptoms of his disorder are legion, and have obstinately withstood the best efforts of science to subdue them.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.
ATKINSON—August 22, at Maryborough, the wife of Mr. J. H. Atkinson, Clerk of Petty Sessions, of a son.
DAVOEN—At Mountjoy-square, South, the wife of Richd. Davoren, Esq., solicitor, of a son.
MEREDITH—August 21, at Waverley-terrace, Meath-road, Bray, the wife of Richard E. Meredith, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a son.
READ—August 29, at Rathgar, the wife of John Read, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.
RUSSELL—August 22, at Downpatrick, the wife of William Russell, Esq., solicitor, of a son.
MARRIAGES.
MANDERS and LANE—August 26, in the Parish Church of Maglilgan, by the Rev. John M'Adams, Rector, Frederick Richard Henry, eldest son of Frederick Manders, Esq., of Donnybrook, County Dublin, to Mary Margaret Moody, youngest daughter of the late Hugh Lane, Esq., Master of the Queen's Bench.
ROSS and MANN—August 17, at the Parish Church of St. Michan, Dublin, John Ross, Esq., LL.B., barrister-at-law, eldest son of the Rev. Robert Ross, Londonderry, to Catherine Mary Jeffcock, only surviving child of Lieut.-Colonel Dean Mann, Dunmoyla, Tyrone.
DEATHS.
MARTLEY—August 25, at Rathgar, John Martley, Esq., barrister-at-law, aged 38 years.
PERRY—August 29, George Perry, Esq., barrister-at-law, of Rutland-square, West, Dublin, aged 38 years.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
 49, W A L L E R, 50,
 DENZILLE-STREET. 3-7

PUBLIC NOTICES:

EVERY MAN WHO SMOKES
 Should invest 24 stamps for the
 NEW PERFECTED

The Best
 Selected Briars
 only.

JENINGS & CO., Inventors, 97, NEWGATE-STREET.
 The most Perfect Pipe invented since Smoking began.
Prospectus Free. 6r

ARRIERS OF RENT (IRELAND) ACT, 1882.

- FORMS PRESCRIBED BY THE RULES.
- A.—Notice of Intention by Landlord or Tenant to apply for Arrears .. .. . 1d.
  - B.—Joint Application by the Landlord and Tenant .. .. . 1d.
  - C.—Joint Application by Landlord and Tenants .. .. . 4d.
  - D.—Notice by Treasury requiring Investigation of the Case .. .. . 1d.
  - E.—Application by Tenant for an Order for Payment of Arrears to or for benefit of his Landlord .. .. . 1d.
  - F.—Application by Landlord for an Order for payment of Arrears due by Tenant to or for benefit of such Landlord .. .. . 1d.
  - G.—Statement of Property and Effects of the above-named Tenant applicable to the satisfaction of the Arrears of Rent .. .. . 1d.
  - H.—Report of Investigator .. .. . 1d.
  - I.—Notice showing Cause against Conditional Order .. .. . 1d.
  - J.—Notice to Landlord of Absolute Order for payment to him or for his benefit of sum in respect of Arrears .. .. . 1d.
  - K.—Notice to Tenant that Arrears of Rent of Holding are Released and Extinguished .. .. . 1d.
  - L.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where the Landlord is absolutely entitled .. .. . 1d.
  - M.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where several Holdings are comprised in claim, and where the Landlord is absolutely entitled .. .. . 1d.
  - N.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where Landlord himself is not in receipt of Rent of Holding .. .. . 1d.
  - O.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where Landlord himself is not in receipt of the Rent, and where several Holdings are comprised in the claim .. .. . 1d.
  - P.—Notice by Incumbrancer, Trustee, or Receiver, claiming to be entitled to Arrears of Rent .. .. . 1d.
  - Q.—Notice of Appeal from Order of Legal Assistant Commissioner .. .. . d.
  - R.—Application by Landlord for cancelling of Rent-charge under 59th Section of Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881 .. .. . 1d.
  - S.—Application by Tenant for cancelling Rent-charge, created under 59th Section of Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881 .. .. . 1d.
  - T.—Joint Application by Landlord and Tenant for Advance by way of Loan under Section 18 .. .. . 4d.
- (Complete Set of Forms post free, 2s. 3d.)

PUBLIC NOTICES:

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW AND THE HIGHLANDS.

(Royal Route via Crinan and Caledonian Canals.)

Royal Mail Steamer COLUMBA or IONA, from GLASGOW DAILY, at 7 a.m., from GREENOCK at 9 a.m., conveying in connexion with his West Highland Steamers passengers for Oban, Fort William, Inverness, Lochawe, Skye, Gairloch, Staffa, Iona, Glencoe, Stornoway, &c. Official Guide, 8d.; Illustrated, 6d. and 1s. Time Bill with Map and Fares free, at CARSON BROS., 7 Grafton-street, Dublin; or by post from the owner, DAVID MACBRAYNE, 118 Hope-street, Glasgow. 79

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. FRAY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

HENDRICK and CO.,

PRINTERS, STATIONERS, SCRIVENERS, and ARTISTS' WAREHOUSE, 28 CLARE-STREET, DUBLIN. 106

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES and INVESTIGATIONS CONDUCTED BY

MR. THOMAS DEANE,

17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange),

Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.

Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.

References.

ESTABLISHED 1878. 167

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,

the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 118 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs Stowarts & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRAATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

PUBLIC NOTICES:

D. W. C A R R O L L,

44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,

Wishes to call attention to his large STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,

Direct in every instance from the Makers

They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of

LEATHER GOODS,

Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-

randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,

With every article connected with Stationery,

Are Sold much under usual charges.

Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.

Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge.

73

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,

No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.

J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees, Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realizing the full value of all property entrusted to his care.

Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Maccliff, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.

Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms. 91

STOKES BROTHERS,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS, LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,

22, WESTMORELAND-STREET, DUBLIN. 393

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,

73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank), are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy, Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW

WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK for STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens; it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each. 581

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE,

Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection.

10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps. 21, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID,

Curls the straightest and most unmanageable Hair, 2s. 6d., sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE,

To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His

GREAT HAIR RESTORER,

3s. 6d.; it changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles.

As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 3s. 6d.; his DEPILATORY for removing

Hair and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers. 7

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S. F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c., for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111 GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's).

Late of WATERHOUSE & Co.'s 90

BILLIARD BALLS, CHALKS,

CUES, and TIPS, and all other Billiard Table requisites, at HENNING BROS.' Ivory Works, 11, High-street, London, W.C. Also the cheapest house in the trade for Ivory Hair-brushes, Mirrors, and all other Ivory Toilet articles and Ivory Goods in general. Old Balls adjusted or exchanged, and Tables re-covered. Price Lists, Cloth, and Cushion Rubber Samples Post Free.—Established 1862. 26

LEGAL POSTINGS:

In the HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE in IRELAND.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

SALE

Of very desirable and well-secured Profit Rents out of Premises
AT SYDNEY-PARADE, MERRION, COUNTY DUBLIN,
On TUESDAY, the 14th day of NOVEMBER, 1882.

In the Matter of the Estate of

F R A N C I S R E A L A M B E R T
and the Rev. WILLIAM HENRY BROWNE, ALEXANDER SMITH ORR, and LOUISA FERRIN, Executors and Executrix of the Will of the Rev. MARK FERRIN, who was the surviving Executor of the Will of FRANCIS REA, deceased,

Owners;

GILES JOHN EYRE LAMBERT,

Petitioner.

And in the Matter of the Estate of

GILES JOHN EYRE LAMBERT,

Owner and Petitioner.

TO BE SOLD,

In 4 Lots, as under,

BY PUBLIC AUCTION,

Before the Right Honourable Judge ORMSBY,
At his Court, Land Judges' Court, Inns-quay, Dublin,
On TUESDAY, the 14th day of NOVEMBER, 1882,
At Twelve o'clock noon,

Lot No. 1.—Part of the Lands of Old Merrion, containing 3a 2r 4p statute measure, held under Lease dated the 27th day of October, 1843, for the term of 61 years from the 29th day of September, 1843, now known as "RICHELIEU," situate in the Parish of Saint Mary's, Donnybrook, Barony of Dublin, and County of Dublin, and producing a net annual rental of £16 11s 8d.

Lot No. 2.—Part of the Lands of Old Merrion, containing 3a 1r 3p statute measure, held under Lease dated the 2nd day of January, 1835, for 73 years from the 29th day of September, 1834, and now known as "NORTH MUNSTER VILLA," producing a net annual rental of £80.

Lot No. 3.—Parts of the Lands of Old Merrion, containing respectively 1a 5r 18p and 0a 1r 5p statute measure, held under Leases dated respectively 9th day of October, 1832, for 74 years from 29th day of September, 1832, and 2nd day of December, 1834, for 73 years from the 26th day of March, 1834, and now known as "ADELAIDE," producing a net annual rental of £74 10s.

Lot No. 4.—Part of the Lands of Old Merrion, containing 0a 1r 19p statute measure, held under Lease dated the 22nd day of June, 1832, for 3 lives, since deceased, or 73 years from 29th day of September, 1832, and now known as "ROSEVILLE COTTAGE," producing a net annual rental of £34 7s.

Dated this 30th day of August, 1882.

JAMES M'DONNELL, Examiner.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS AS TO ALL THE LOTS.

The interest for Sale consists of well-secured Profit Rents arising out of Premises at Sydney-parade, Merrion, in the County of Dublin, close to the Sydney-parade Station of the Dublin and Kingstown Railway Company, together with the valuable reversions (extending for upwards of 13 months to close on 17 years as under stated) expectant on the determination of the Leases by which the occupying Tenants hold.

The property has an extensive frontage to the Strand-road, Merrion. It is part of the Pembroke Estate, and the intermediate Landlord's Lease will, it is believed, expire about the year 1906. The interests under the Leases for Sale herein continue respectively till 29th September, 1904 (Lots 1 and 4); 25th of March, 1906 (part of Lot 3); 29th September, 1907 (Lot 2, and residue of Lot 3).

It is understood that the representatives of O'Reilly, the intermediate Landlord, are in the habit of granting Leases for the outstanding residue of their term at a rent fixed by their valuers, such Leases being only given to the occupying Tenants who may have vested in them the entire of the Leases' term or interest immediately under O'Reilly, which in the present case is the interest for Sale.

The Earl of Pembroke, upon the occupying Tenant acquiring the full reversion, has, it is understood, been in the habit of granting a reversionary Lease to such occupying Tenant upon the terms of an expenditure upon the premises (either immediate or within a limited time, as may be agreed on) and subject to a small rent, which is fixed in the Estate Office, during the continuance of the O'Reilly Lease, and a full rent also fixed in the Estate Office and reserved in the reversionary Lease which becomes payable upon the expiration of the O'Reilly term.

The occupying Tenants upon this property have thus very valuable interests in their holdings, and purchasers at this Sale may (while perfectly secured in the immediate well and punctually paid rental) reasonably look forward to re-selling the property with their reversions thereon to the occupying Tenants at considerable advantage, and, in the event of the purchasers retaining the property, the reversions expectant on the occupying Tenants' Leases would enable the purchasers to become occupiers themselves of the premises, and to treat with the representatives of O'Reilly and with the Earl of Pembroke for the new or reversionary Leases.

The value of property in this neighbourhood near the Railway Station and Tram Line is daily increasing, and has been much improved by the Sewerage Works recently executed.

Lot No. 1.—This Lot comprises the Dwellinghouse and Premises known as "RICHELIEU," situate at Sydney Parade-avenue, in the County of Dublin, with Land attached thereto, containing upwards of 2½ acres statute measure, producing a net annual rental £16 11s 8d. The premises are sublet on Lease which will expire on the 14th day of August, 1903. There is a reversion vested in the owners expectant on the determination of the Tenant's Lease of upwards of 12 months to which a purchaser will become entitled, which would enable him to obtain possession and become the occupier of the premises so as to enable him to treat with the Pembroke Estate and the intermediate Landlord for a new Lease as above pointed out. The present rental is well secured. The Government valuation is £73.

Lot No. 2.—This Lot comprises the Dwellinghouse and Premises known as "NORTH MUNSTER VILLA," otherwise "SIDNEY LODGE," situate at Sydney Parade-avenue, with Land attached thereto, containing nearly 2½ acres statute measure, producing a net annual rental of £80. These premises are sublet on Lease which will expire on the 1st day of October, 1903. There is a reversion vested in the owners expectant on the determination of the Tenant's Lease of about 4 years, to which a purchaser will become entitled, and which would enable him to treat for a new Lease as above mentioned. The present rental is well secured. The Government valuation is £55.

Lot No. 3.—This Lot comprises the Dwellinghouse and Premises known as "ADELAIDE," situate at Strand-road, Merrion, adjoining Sydney Parade-avenue, with Land attached thereto, containing nearly 2 acres statute measure, producing a net annual rental of £74 10s. These premises are sublet on Lease, which will expire on the 1st day of November, 1890. There is a reversion vested in the owners expectant on the determination of the Tenant's Lease of between 16 and 17 years, to which a purchaser will become entitled, and which would enable him to treat for a new Lease as above mentioned. The present rental is well secured. The premises are used as the Masonic Male Schools. The Government valuation is £66.

Lot No. 4.—This Lot comprises the Cottage Residence and Garden attached thereto, known as "ROSEVILLE," situate in Sydney Parade-avenue, producing a net annual rental of £34 7s. These premises are sublet on Lease, which will expire on the 26th day of March, 1899. There is a reversion vested in the owners expectant on the determination of the Tenant's Lease of about 5½ years, to which a purchaser will become entitled, and which would enable him to treat for a new Lease as above mentioned. The present rental is well secured. The Government valuation is £21.

For Rentals and further particulars apply at the Registrar's Office, Land Judges Court, Inns-quay, Dublin; to ARTHUR LEE BARLEE, Esq., Solicitor, 30 Westland-row; or to

SAMUEL P. REDINGTON, Solicitor having the carriage of the Sale, 32 Rutland-square, Dublin. 1c8

In the HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE in IRELAND.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

COUNTY OF TYRONE.

SALE,

On TUESDAY, the 7th day of NOVEMBER, 1882.

In the Matter of the Estate of

N A T H A N I E L M A Y N E,
Owner;

Ex parte—ELIZABETH ANNE HURST,

Petitioner.

TO BE SOLD BY PUBLIC AUCTION,

In Two Lots,

Before the Right Honourable Judge ORMSBY,

At his Court, Inns-quay, in the City of Dublin,

On TUESDAY, the 7th day of NOVEMBER, 1882,

At the hour of Twelve o'clock noon,

Lot 1.—Consisting of the Lands of the Ballyboes of Terlagan and Teerhagan, otherwise Seemaghmore, now known as Terlagan only, containing 26a 0r 17p statute measure, held in fee-farm, and producing a yearly profit rent of £109 14s 11d; and

Lot 2.—Consisting of part of the Lands of Tullybleety, containing 10a 2r 7p statute measure, also held in fee-farm, and producing a yearly profit rent of £86 4s 4d—all situate in the barony of Lower Dungannon and county of Tyrone.

Dated this 19th day of August, 1882.

IGNATIUS O'KEEFFE, for Examiner.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The Lands of Terlagan, exclusive of 36a 0r 6p in the owner's possession, of which the purchaser will get immediate possession, are let to yearly tenants, whose aggregate rents amount to £125 14s, which are, with one exception, judicial rents, and are only subject to £15 18s 1d head rent and rentcharge. The Lands of Tullybleety are all let to yearly tenants, the gross rent amounting to £97 10s, and subject to £11 5s 7½d for head rent and rentcharge. The Lands of Tullybleety and Terlagan, although they lie nearly two miles apart, are about an equal distance from the town of Aughnacloy, in county of Tyrone, both of them lying within 2½ miles of that town. Aughnacloy is a capital market town, and the lands are situate in a most orderly and peaceful neighbourhood. The Lands of Tullybleety are not a mile distant from the main line of road from Caledon to Aughnacloy, and lie within about eight miles of the Caledon Station on the Great Northern Railway. The Lands of Terlagan lie close to the main line of road from Aughnacloy to Dungannon.

For rentals and further particulars apply at the Office of the Registrar of the Land Judges, Inns-quay, Dublin; to

WILLIAM CAREY and SON, Solicitors, No. 1 Wellington-quay, Dublin; and to

ALEXANDER M'CORMACK, Solicitor having carriage of Sale, 1 Wellington-quay, Dublin, and Armagh. 105

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1882.

No. 815

PRIVILEGE OF WITNESSES AS TO CRIMINATING QUESTIONS.—II.

WHILE no agreement can deprive a party of his right to refuse discovery tending to establish a criminal charge against him (Lee v. Read, 5 Beav. 381; Robinson v. Küchen, 21 ib. 365, 370; Hare on Disc.), the privilege may be lost by the witness waiving the right to take the objection: Paxton v. Douglas, 16 Ves. 242; Corporation of Trin. House v. Burge, 2 Sim. 411; Williams v. Farrington, 3 Bro. C. C. 38, 40; Parkhurst v. Lowten, 1 Mer. 391, 400; Hambrook v. Smith, 17 Sim. 209, 215; Pye v. Butterfield, 5 B. & S. 829, 837; or by the liability ceasing: s. c.; Wigram on Disc. 83; and so, where an offence is barred by statute of limitations: Calhoun v. Thompson, 56 Ala. 166; but, it has even been held that a witness is protected although he has received a pardon: 1 Stark. Ev., 3rd ed., 192. In the Massachusetts case of Commonwealth v. Nichols (114 Mass. 285), it was held that a person accused of a crime and voluntarily testifying in his own behalf under a statute allowing him so to do, waives thereby his privilege of not being compelled to criminate himself: and see 101 Mass. 200. But, the contrary has been held in other States: Bigler v. Reyher, 43 Ind. 112; Barker v. Kuhn, 38 Iowa, 395; Bobo v. Bryson, 31 Ark. 387; Dutlenhofer v. The State, 34 Ohio, 6 Rep. 726. And in Temple v. The Commonwealth (5 Virg. L. J. 366), it was held that the fact that a witness testified before the grand jury (see 2 Cent. L. J. 180; so, if before a coroner: Cullen's Case, 24 Gratt. 624; cf. R. v. Widdop, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 3), and on his evidence an indictment was found, will not deprive him of his privilege of declining to testify on the ground that he would criminate himself, on the trial of the party so indicted on his testimony. And if the witness answers questions improperly put, his answers may afterwards be used as evidence against him: Stockfleth v. De Tastet, 4 Camp. 10; Smith v. Beadrill, 1 ib. 30; R. v. Merceron, 2 Stark. 366; while, on the other hand, no inference as to the truth of the suggestion can be drawn from the fact that the witness declines to answer: Rose v. Blakemore, Ry. & M. 384; and where, under statutes enabling defendants in criminal cases to testify in their own behalf, they refuse to answer, the failure to do so cannot be taken into consideration by the jury in determining whether or not they are guilty: Com. v. Harlow, 110 Mass. 411; Com. v. Nichols, ubi supra; Com. v. Scott, 5 Cent. L. J. 415; and such refusal cannot be used against a witness upon his subsequent trial for the same offence: State v. Bailey, 20 Amer. L. Reg. 552. But, in India the court may presume that, if a man refuses to answer a question which he is not compelled to answer by law, the answer, if given, would be unfavourable to him: Ind. Ev. Act, s. 114, Illust. (A); see also, s. 148 (4).

To the general rule, however, certain exceptions have been established. For instance, in furtherance of the object of the bankrupt laws, to procure a discovery and equal distribution of the assets among all the creditors, a qualification has prevailed in bankruptcy; and it is now well settled that, while a witness is entitled to the usual protection (Re Firth, Ex p. Schofield, 5 Ch. Div. 230, 46 L. J. Ba. 112, 36 L. T. N. S. 281), the bankrupt himself is bound to answer all questions respecting his property, be the consequences what they may, with this exception, that he cannot be required to answer a question whether he has done some specific act clearly of a criminal nature: Ex p. Cossens, Buck, 540; Ex p. Kirby, M. & M. 225; Ex p. Heath, 2 D. & C. 214, Mont. & Bl. 184; Re Feaks, ib. 226; Re Smith, ib. 230; Ex p. Pratt, 1 G. & J. 62; but, he cannot, when examined touching his estate, trade, or dealings, refuse to give any information respecting them merely because such information may incidentally show that he has been guilty of some crime or misdemeanour: ib.; and his examination may be used as evidence against him on a criminal charge: R. v. Scott, 1 D. & B. 47, 2 Jur. N. S. 1096; R. v. Sloggett, 1 Dear. 656, 2 Jur. N. S. 476; R. v. Skeen, 1 Bell, C. C. R. 97, 5 Jur. N. S. 151; R. v. Robinson, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 80, 36 L. J. M. C. 78; R. v. Widdop, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 3, 27 L. T. N. S. 693, 42 L. J. M. C. 9 (and see 5 & 6 Vic., c. 39, 24 & 25 ib., c. 96, s. 85, as to examination of agent guilty of misdemeanour); and, as a general rule, all depositions on oath legally taken are evidence against a witness on a subsequent criminal charge, especially if he had not objected to them as criminatory: R. v. Coote, L. R. 4 P. C. 599, 42 L. J. P. C. 445. As to husbands and wives, see 1 Hale, P. C. 301; R. v. Cliviger, 2 T. R. 263; Cartwright v. Green, 8 Ves. 405; R. v. Bathwick, 2 B. & Ad. 639; R. v. Worcester, 6 M. & S. 194. "These cases show that even under the old law, which made the parties and their husbands and wives incompetent witnesses, a wife was not incompetent to prove matters which might tend to criminate her husband. R. v. Cliviger assumes that she was, and was to that extent overruled. The cases, however, do not decide that if the wife claimed the privilege of not answering she would be compelled to do so, and to some extent they suggest that she would not: "Stephen, Ev., Art. 120, n. And see 2 Stark. Ev., 3rd ed., 551; and Powell on Evidence (4th ed., 110), where it is observed, "The question whether a wife is bound to answer questions criminating her husband is not in a satisfactory state." In equity, however, there is no doubt that a wife cannot be compelled to answer any question which may expose her husband to a charge of felony: Cartwright v. Green, ubi supra; but as to high treason, see R. v. Griggs, T. Raym. 2. And as to "communications" between husband and wife during marriage, or when it is terminated by death or divorce, disclosure is not compellable: O'Connor v. Marjoribanks, 4 M. & Gr. 435; Monroe v. Twisleton, Peake 221. And in reference to the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 11, it has been said, "It is conceived that there is nothing in the statute to vary the rule by which communications between husband and wife, made during marriage, are held privileged and inadmissible in evidence, such privilege being based on general grounds of public policy: "Griffith, Mar. W. Prop. Acta, 4th ed., 53; see Taylor, Ev., 6th ed., 810; 16 & 17 Vic., c. 83, s. 3. For to admit such evidence would occasion domestic dissension and discord; it would compel a violation of that confidence which ought, from the nature of the relation, to be regarded as sacred; and it would be arming each of the parties with the means of offence, which might be used for very dangerous purposes: 1 Stark., Ev., 3rd ed., 70, 2 ib. 549; Co, Litt. 6, b.; 2 Haw. c. 46; 2 Hale, 279; and so, even though upon consent: Barker v. Dixie, Cas. temp. Hardw. 264. But, the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vic., c. 75), coming into operation on the 1st of January next (repealing the former Acts), introduces an important alteration; for by section 12, giving to married women a right to the same civil and criminal remedies in respect of separate property as if they were unmarried, it is provided that "in any proceeding under this section a husband or wife shall be competent to give evidence against each other, any statute or rule of law to the contrary notwithstanding;" and see s. 16 as to criminal liability of wives in reference to the property of their husbands.

"LAW JOURNAL REPORTS" FOR SEPTEMBER.

Of the Chancery cases Broadbent v. Barrow gives occasion for the decision by the Court of Appeal that a will which, after pecuniary legacies, gives all the personal estate, except money, to a person named, with the residue, real and personal, to trustees, does not give a specific legacy to that person. In Heming v. Worsam Mr. Justice Fry dismissed an action by husband and wife against the administrators of the will of the wife's father, to whom she had sold her share of the estate, settling the proceeds on her marriage, without prejudice to an action by the trustees. In re Hall-Dare's Contract, is an important decision of the Court of Appeal under the Conveyancing Acts. It decides that under section 70 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, a good title can be made to land as to which an order under the Settled Estates Act has been made, although such order improperly omitted to name the persons in remainder in dispensing with their concurrence. In the case of In re Palmer the Court of Appeal held that an application by a person aggrieved for the rectification of the register of trade-marks is not restricted to five years; neither does the lapse of that time make good a trade-mark registered in fact, but incapable of registration. In Ex parte Solomon, in re Tilley, the Court of Appeal held that a creditor in bankruptcy was entitled to have a shorthand writer at the debtor's examination. In Comton v. Preston Mr. Justice Fry struck out as embarrassing a counter-claim by a mortgagee for damages and for the possession of land in respect of which the plaintiff was not suing. Hunt v. Chambers is a decision of the Court of Appeal of great importance, as to the right of a party to a jury. It is held that he has, on giving notice, a prima facie right to that form of trial, which must be displaced by considerations advanced on his opponent's behalf. When a case in the Chancery Division is to be tried by a jury it will be transferred to the Queen's Bench Division. Morley v. Olifford lays down that there cannot be prescription for common of pasture without stint. In Ex parte Leslie, in re Guerrier, it was held that a bank might prove for an overdraft against a bankrupt although forged bills had been deposited to secure the overdraft, and no prosecution had taken place. This decision is without prejudice to the question, about which there has been much difference of opinion, whether a man is bound to prosecute for a crime before he treats it as a civil injury. In Forbes v. Jackson a surety who tendered the debt and interest was held entitled to securities taken by the creditor, although he had advanced further sums on the strength of them. In the case of In re Butler's Wharf Company Vice-Chancellor Hall stated that his practice was, when a party meant to appeal against an order in chambers, to require the matter to be mentioned in chambers, with a view to his saying whether the summons ought to be adjourned into Court. The variations of practice on this head are very inconvenient. In Mostyn v. Lancaster a power in tenants for life, without impeachment of waste, to grant mining leases for such terms and under such conditions as to them should "seem reasonable and proper," was held to authorise a lease for ninety-nine years, at a peppercorn rent, to secure £6,000. In The United Telephone Company v. Harrison, Cox-Walker & Co., a description of an invention written in German, but accompanied by plates and understood by an Englishman who did not read German, was held a publication. In The New London and Brazilian Bank v. Brocklebank the Court of Appeal upheld the decision of Vice-Chancellor Bacon that a Banking Company had, under its articles, a lien on the shares of a customer indebted to it, even when held in trust. In Tucker v. Linger a custom for tenants to take and sell flints was held good and reasonable, and not contrary to a reservation of "mines, quarries, brick, earth, and gravel pits" to the landlord. In Speight v. Gaunt a trustee who had paid money to a broker on a bought-note, was held liable to make good the loss to the fund. In Arnold v. Kayes a share of a sum certain given to children to their separate use, and without power of anticipation if married women, was allowed to be paid over to a married woman. In the case of In re Russell, ex parte Allen, it was held that a trustee in bankruptcy could not disclaim land and retain chattels, both being held under the same lease.

The first of the cases in the Queen's Bench Division is Miller v. Pilling, which decides on the authority of the Court of Appeal, overruling Mr. Justice Field, that a referee is not bound to set out the reasons for his decision, although he may be asked by the Court to give them. In Webber v. Lee the Court of Appeal held that an agreement to give a fourth share of shooting, and a fourth of all the game shot, was required to be in writing under the Statute of Frauds. In Keal v. Smith it was held that a solicitor does not authorise the sheriff to seize certain goods, by merely saying that he had better do so, nor has he any implied authority from his client to direct the sheriff to do so. Mr. Justice Stephen dissented from the latter proposition. In re Joel Emmanuel & Co., decides that the limitation of the sum recoverable for costs incurred in the "conduct" of a County Court action does not apply to work done before and after the suit. In Jennings v. Hammond it was held that a company, whose business was to lend money to its members only, was bound to be registered, and a person who sued as trustee for the company was held not entitled to recover. In Hetherington v. The North-Eastern Railway Company, the assistance, by money and otherwise, which a father, who was nearly blind and crippled, received from his son, was held good ground for an action for the son's death, under Lord Campbell's Act. In Blackmore v. The Vestry of Mile End Old Town a vestry was held liable for personal injuries arising from defects in the flap of a water-meter belonging to it. Two cases of interest, in regard to water-rates, follow. In The Warrington Waterworks Company v. Longshaw the "annual value, at which premises are assessed to the poor-rate," was held, for the purposes of calculation the water-rate, to mean the rateable value; and in Dobbe v. The Grand Junction Waterworks Company it was further held that, where a house is held on a long lease, subject to ground-rent, the actual rent cannot be ascertained, so that resort is had, under the Act, to the rateable value. In Enraght v. Lord Penance the House of Lords declined to prohibit the Dean of the Arches from inhibiting a clerk who had been admonished not to use specific practices in the service of the Church, or similar practices, and who used practices decided to be similar. In Harding v. Proce it was held that a disclaimer by the trustee in bankruptcy of the assignee of a lease does not destroy the liability of the lessee to the lessor, or of the assignee's surety for rent paid by the lessee to the lessor. In Clarison v. Musgrave it was held that an appellant from the County Court is bound strictly to the points of law taken at the trial—a view which appears somewhat narrow.

The Magistrates' Cases for the month are very largely occupied with the case of Regina v. The Local Government Board, which was an unsuccessful attempt to prohibit that body in an appeal with regard to apportioning expenses under the Public Health Act. In Davies v.

Evans Mr. Justice Grove and Baron Huddleston were unable to agree whether justices have a discretion in enforcing a bastardy order.—Law Journal.

THE STOLEN GOODS BILL.

Among the useful measures of intended legislation which, under the pressure of the past Session, failed to find their way into the Statute-book, a prominent place must be assigned to the Stolen Goods Bill, which, although it passed in an amended form through the House of Lords, was not equally successful in the House of Commons. It will, no doubt, be reintroduced on the first opportunity; and in the meanwhile it is not undesirable to call attention to its character, and to the urgent need which exists for some enactment of the kind. It has long been a maxim in criminal jurisprudence that the receiver is worse than the thief; and it is unquestionable that many forms of theft would hardly be attempted at all were it not for the facilities of disposing of stolen property which are afforded by persons who are in fact receivers, but who conceal their nefarious calling under the mask of legitimate trade. Besides these people, most of whom are well known to the police, but who escape detection because there is no sufficient power of searching their premises, there are, it is to be feared, veritable pawnbrokers whose honesty is not sufficient to induce them to exercise proper care in the reception of pledges, or to take trouble even when it is well known to them that robberies have been committed, and that goods like those which have been deposited with them form part of the booty. When the Stolen Goods Bill was introduced, it excited much indignation among pawnbrokers generally, rendering them strenuous in their opposition to its provisions, and loud in the assertion that it was unnecessary, and that their honour and honesty as tradesmen were improperly assailed. A useful commentary upon these assertions was furnished by the letter of our correspondent "Lex," published yesterday, in which he stated that a robbery was committed in the premises of Mr. Attenborough, a representative member of the trade, and that the valuable stolen goods were pledged by a mere boy at twenty different pawnshops, without any difficulty being thrown in his way and without any intimation or other assistance being afterwards afforded to Mr. Attenborough by any one of the number, although the nature of his losses had been made known by a special notice in the Pawnbrokers' Gazette, and although he had offered to defray all expenses connected with the restoration of his property. If this incident may be taken to express the amount of sympathy which was felt by pawnbrokers for a plundered member of their own craft, it is a fair inference that their sympathy with the general public would be less rather than more active; and it must be conceded that the existence of their shops not only affords dangerous facilities to the dishonest, but even holds out temptations to those whose honesty is merely feeble. While the professional receiver is the natural ally of the professional thief, the pawnbroker of not too highly strained integrity is a snare to the temporary servant or charwoman, or to the servant under notice to leave. Many of the robberies which are committed week after week by persons belonging to one of these classes would probably never have been committed at all if the sale of the stolen goods had been attended by any risk or difficulty; and every enactment which tends to create such risk may serve as a deterrent from first offences, which, in their turn, so often lead on to more serious ones.

The Bill, as finally amended and passed by the Peers, commences by empowering any justice of the peace, on the affidavit of a superior officer of police, to grant a warrant to search any premises therein specified for stolen goods and to seize them if found. The person in whose possession they are, if the Court considers he had reason to suspect that they were stolen, and if he thereupon failed to make reasonable inquiry, or to give information to the police, or if he fails to give a satisfactory account of the way in which he came by them, shall be liable to fines for the first two offences, and to fine or imprisonment, at the option of the Court, for the third. Willfully to conceal, melt, deface, or alter any stolen article is made an offence punishable in a similar manner; and all melting of second-hand precious metal is forbidden until after the lapse of seven days from the purchase of the same. The hours within which melting may be carried on by refiners are laid down, and a justice of the peace may issue a search-warrant on sworn information of the belief that this provision is being contravened. Where a police notice of any stolen article has been given to any pawnbroker or second-hand dealer he shall be required, if any such article shall come into his possession, to give notice to the police, with the best description he can furnish of the person from whom he received it; and he shall permit a duly authorised constable to inspect all articles in his possession of a description similar to that mentioned in the notice. He is to answer all reasonable inquiries made by an authorised constable with regard to any stolen property, and to permit an examination of his books with reference to his purchases of any similar articles subsequently to the commission of the theft. If an article is offered for sale which the pawnbroker or dealer suspects to be stolen, and if the person offering it fails to give a satisfactory account of the way in which he became possessed of it, the pawnbroker or dealer is authorised to detain both the article and the person offering it and to deliver them as soon as may be to a constable. Pawnbrokers and second-hand dealers are forbidden to take an article from any person who appears to be under the age of fourteen years or to be intoxicated, or to employ any servant or other person under the age of sixteen to purchase or receive goods. The hours of business are limited; and second-hand dealers are to be licensed by the police. Besides other penalties, certain offences against the Bill would entail "registration" upon these dealers; and a registered second-hand dealer would for a period of not more than three years be subject to more stringent rules than previously. Other clauses provide for the restitution or other disposal of stolen property, and for cases in which it would be urged as a defence, by persons charged under the Act, that the goods had been received by a servant or agent. The servant or agent would be held guilty, and would be punishable as a principal, only if the actual principal was able to establish his entire freedom from complicity in the offence.

The general effect of these provisions would be, therefore, that dealing in stolen property would entail upon pawnbrokers a statutory liability to do certain things in the way of facilitating the discovery of the thief. They would be bound to show their books, and their recent purchases or pledges, to a policeman duly authorised by his superiors; and would be compelled, in short, to do what most honest people would think it their duty to do without compulsion. The necessity for the Bill rests, it may be assumed, partly upon police knowledge of the extent to which the operations of pawnbrokers do actually encourage theft, and partly upon experience of their unwillingness to co-operate with the police for its detection. To some small extent the Bill, if it became law, might be a troublesome interference even with their legitimate occupation; but they have cut away the ground from beneath their feet by their past conduct, which, even in the above cited case of the robbery from Mr. Attenborough, has abundantly justified the assertions of those by whom the Bill was introduced and supported. Even if this were not the case, the passing of such a law would afford them no just cause of complaint. Their trade is a necessity to the poor, and cannot possibly be prohibited. A trade which cannot be prohibited, but which is frequently abused to the detriment of the public, must necessarily be brought under regulation, so that the abuses attendant upon the inevitable may be reduced to a minimum. Every pawnbroker or second-hand dealer may, if he pleases, comfort himself by the reflection that, if all other members of his calling were as blameless and as careful as himself, no legislation would be required. While he does this he must certainly admit that some of his fraternity are careless, and that some are dishonest; and he must admit, also, that carelessness and dishonesty in such a business are great causes of dishonesty in others. Legislation which rendered dishonesty more difficult and less profitable would naturally tend to drive the black sheep out of the trade; and when they have all disappeared, Parliament may, perhaps, be ready to consider whether provisions which are now called for might not safely be relaxed.—Times.

COVENANTS FOR PRODUCTION OF DEEDS IN CONNEXION WITH RECENT LEGISLATION.

These covenants are very often an essential part of the conveyance of purchased lands. Title deeds are, in England, the very sinews of the legal estate, and next to possession of the deeds the right to have them safely kept, and to obtain them when necessary, is most to be desired. Recent legislation has in several ways touched this important little branch of conveyancing. By sect. 2 (5) of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, the usual custom that the vendor retained the deeds, if he kept any part of the property to which they related, received statutory sanction. By sub-sect. (3) of the same section "an equitable right" to the production of deeds must now satisfy a purchaser, if the vendor is "unable" to furnish the purchaser with a legal covenant. It is not quite clear what "an equitable right to production" means: (Dart, 143.) It seems that a purchaser has a right to a covenant for production from his vendor, retaining the deeds, and if the covenant is given by person seized of the legal estate, he has a legal right to the production running with the purchased lands; but it is questionable whether it runs with lands reserved by the seller so as to bind an alienee: (Sug. V. & P. 453; Dart, 556, 775.) If the covenant does not run with the land, it gives the purchaser in equity a right to enforce production against persons claiming and holding through the seller: (Sug. V. & P. 453.) Mr. Dart seems to think that this depends on the persons having notice (pp. 143, 775), but we doubt this limited view: (see 1 Dav. Conv. 146.) In any case the covenantor and his real and personal representatives will be liable even after alienation: (Miller v. Small, 1 Macq. H. L. 346.) The Act then makes it quite clear that, where a legal covenant is unattainable, a right under a covenant, operating in equity, will suffice. So even a right, without a covenant, will be enough. This seems to suggest a return to the older and more liberal doctrine, that an equity existed entitling any party interested in a deed in consequence of a purchase from some person who retained the deed to call for its production by any other person succeeding to the custody of it; or, at all events, that the mere fact of the purchaser having neglected to take a covenant will not deprive him and his successors in title of the equitable right to production.

Fortunately, if there is considerable doubt as to the exact effect of such covenants and as to the consequences of neglecting them, there is none that the proper course is to take the covenant. The only question remaining is, whether the statutory forms given by sect. 9 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, should be adopted.

On comparing statutory "acknowledgment of the right to production of deeds and delivery of copies" with the common form of covenants by fiduciary owners in Davidson (vol. i. 223), we see that the covenantor is as efficiently protected. He is only liable while the deeds are in his custody (sub-sect. 2), and he is not liable for loss or injury to the deeds (sub-sect. 6). On the other hand, the covenantee has the advantage that the statute expressly binds the possessor for the time being, without reference to the troublesome questions about covenants "running with the land." Hence, we can safely advise mortgagees and trustees to give, and purchasers from them to accept the statutory "acknowledgment."

The more onerous undertaking for safe custody (sub-sect. 9) must be separately considered. It resembles the usual covenant by an absolute owner qualified, according to modern practice, by the insertion of a proviso that the covenant shall cease after the deeds have been handed over to some other person, and such other person has entered into a like covenant with the person for the time being entitled to the benefit of the former covenant, and has delivered the new covenant to such last-mentioned person: (David. i. 222; Dart, 555.)

The statutory form is more beneficial to the covenantor, because it relieves him from the obligation as soon as he parts with the deeds, without compelling him to secure a substituted covenant. It is, however, presumed that he can only safely hand them over to some person properly entitled to their custody. It is, in one way, an advantage to the covenantee, because his rights run with the deeds; but, on the other hand, it gives him no ready means of tracing them, and he may have a difficulty in finding out against whom he should bring his action. Also it would seem in some cases to bring liabilities on mortgagees and trustees who obtain possession of deeds. It would apparently even affect an equitable mortgagee who had no notice of any right to production. This, however, is really not very serious. If persons take deeds into their possession, they should be careful with them.

In James v. Rumsey (11 Ch. Div. 398) a mortgagor, whose principal title deed had disappeared when held by his mortgagee, was held entitled to an indemnity and certain costs, but not to compensation.

On the whole the statutory form is slightly best for the vendor; but the usual defeasible, or common form, covenant is preferable for the purchaser, for it is better to be sure where the deeds can be found and have a covenant with some ascertainable person than to have a covenant running with the deeds and not know where they are or upon whom the obligation of the covenant has devolved. But, by sub-sects. (8) and (11), the statutory acknowledgment and undertaking will satisfy any liability to give covenants for production, delivery of copies, and for safe custody. Hence, as in the absence of contract to the contrary the vendor has the choice, he should give only the proper statutory covenant. Of course, either of the statutory covenants will give "an equitable right to production" so as to satisfy sect. 2 (3) of the Vendor and Purchaser Act as quoted above.

So far we have only discussed the right to title deeds as between vendor and purchaser. In a settlement the legal tenant for life has a right to the custody, and the court will not take the deeds from him except in case of danger to the safety of the deeds or the court requires them for the purpose of carrying out trusts: (Leather v. Leather, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 646; 5 Ch. Div. 221.) On a partition the court generally gives the custody of the deeds to the person entitled to the share or estate of the largest value, and if they are equally entitled to the plaintiff, on entering into a covenant to produce and allow copies to be taken. Of course the provisions of sect. 9 will apply here also. The result is that the Conveyancing Act will greatly shorten these subordinate but important documents of title.—Law Times.

THE DECLINE AND FALL OF A GREAT HUMBUG.

The Great Humbug is, "JURY TRIAL IN CIVIL CASES." We have now had an experience of this institution since the year 1815, and we see the fate which has overtaken it, in its almost entire disuse.

Mr. Mackay, in his "Sketch of the History of Scots Law," which has been separately reprinted, and which first appeared in the pages of this Journal, has said that "the experiment of Civil Jury Trial, unpopular in its origin, and not conducted in a manner to remove prejudices by either the judges or the advocates, has never had a really fair trial in Scotland." The author adds to this amazing statement the following remark: "It was specially unfortunate that few opportunities were given for testing its value in mercantile causes at circuits, in the chief commercial centres, where it had proved useful and popular in England." The statement that it has not had a fair trial in Scotland is very singular indeed, coming from one who so perfectly knows its history. For a period of upwards of sixty years this system was the favourite of the Courts; it was forced upon the public and the profession, in season and out of season. It saved trouble; it rendered unnecessary the consideration of complicated proofs; the judges were no longer compelled to give reasoned opinions upon matters involving disputed fact; the House of Lords was freed from the laborious drudgery of hearing dreary Scottish appeals in which there was this matter of disputed fact. The parties were silenced by the verdict of an unlettered jury; and when they were silenced the House of Lords was at its ease. The trial by jury was applied not merely to simple questions of negligence arising from the overturning of a coach, but to all questions involving fact—to questions of fraud depending on the most involved circumstances of the transactions of a life-time, to questions of pedigree, such as the Shandwick Succession case, involving an inquiry into family history of upwards of a hundred years, and resting altogether upon documentary evidence. The result is before us in the instructive history of its gradual extinction.

Every successive Act of Parliament dealing with jury trial has been in the way of lopping off one part of it after another, until at last none of those peculiarities, which in the eyes of its friends constituted its great charm and beauty, are to be found existing now. The verdict is no longer required to be the unanimous verdict of the jury, and both parties may address the jury upon the evidence, even though evidence has been led for both. And, still most important of all, there are no cases now which must be tried by a jury, the mode of trial being entirely within the discretion of the Court.

There are, however, a certain number of cases yet, which apparently in the mind of some of the judges ought to go before a jury. These are actions of damages against railway companies, actions of damages for breach of promise of marriage and seduction, and declarators of a right of public road—which, with submission to these learned persons, are the very class of actions that ought not to be submitted to a jury. A railway company, although it have a good defence, has never, or at all events very seldom, a fair chance, when the pursuer of the action is the widow of the man who has been killed in the collision. In actions for breach of promise the defender is in as bad a case, when a pretty girl is the principal witness, and tells the story of her betrayal with touching pathos. And as for declarators of a right of public road, the defender ought at the very outset to surrender, because he will be obliged to do so at the conclusion, with a frightful account of expenses to pay.

It is sometimes said that questions of damages are peculiarly appropriate for jury trial. This is a statement which every day's experience teaches to be utterly and absolutely incorrect. Take, for example, those miserable actions for damages for technical informalities in the execution of the diligence of the law, or for saying that some one is no better than he should be—the low litigation which degrades the law, and constitutes nearly the half of the entire mass of our jury cases—in these actions the juries seem to forget all reason, justice, and common-sense; they disregard the suggestions and comments of the judge; and people who have not one unnecessary sixpence to rub upon another, will return verdicts for extravagant sums of damages. Two hundred pounds are often given where two hundred farthings would be too much. There is indeed no measure, nor reason, nor rule in the mode in which juries deal with damages; and to tell the truth, there is a kind of secret self-gratification in being enabled thus to lord it over the unfortunate defender—a railway company or a gentleman.

The statement of Mr. Mackay, that the system is very popular in England, is also one made without due consideration, and obtains a very direct contradiction from recent events in the South. All the cases in the County Courts may be tried with or without a jury, and nine-tenths of them are tried without a jury. The judges of the High Court of Justice in England have, moreover, reported that it should be confined, in the High Court, to a certain restricted class of cases; and even as regards them, that the judge should have a discretion to order the case to be tried before himself without a jury. The reason is the same in both countries. The instrument whereby we seek to administer justice is utterly unfit for its purpose. It is well described by George Combe: "A Scotch jury, even in Edinburgh, frequently presents the following features for observation:—It consists of twelve men, eight of whom are collected from the country, within a distance of twenty or thirty miles from the capital. These individuals hold the plough, wield the hammer or the hatchet, or carry on some other useful and respectable, but laborious occupation for six days in the week. Their muscular systems are in constant exercise, and their brains are rarely called on for any great exertion. Counsel address long speeches to them; numerous witnesses are examined, and the cause is branched out into complicated details of fact, and wire-worn deductions in argument. Without being allowed to breathe fresh air, or to take exercise, they are confined to their seats for many hours, and return a verdict by which they dispose of thousands of pounds." They are in truth very frequently a motley group; so opposite in opinions, so different in knowledge, and so distinct in professions, that they would never by any evolutions of chance have met together in this world before, and except to meet upon another jury, may never meet together for one and the same object again. The amazing paradox is to club together so party-coloured a group, and to ask a verdict from men who have not the same previous knowledge of the subject, and who cannot have the same appreciation of the evidence. To dovetail into one mass the grocer, the tailor, shoemaker, farmer, and clerk, is to call into being a tribunal in whose name indeed a verdict is given forth, but which in reality must be nothing more than the opinion of the most active or the most self-willed unit of the mass. It cannot indeed be otherwise, however much pains the judge may take to explain the evidence for them, and however industriously he may employ short sentences and words of one syllable. The jury are supposed, on the instant, to perform the most difficult of all the duties of the judicial office; on the instant they are supposed capable of separating good evidence from bad; giving due weight to what is important, and rejecting the immaterial; able to arrange, analyse, and apply the result of the labours of months of preparation. Masses of written evidence are read to them (as in the Shandwick Succession case), which they are not themselves allowed to read, even assuming that they had the capacity to do so. Let us, however, admit that the jurors themselves are more the objects of our pity than of our contempt or ridicule. They are compelled to assume an office for the discharge of which they are the strongest witnesses of their own incapacity; and all of them dread the summons that calls them to a wearisome labour and a lost day. Indeed it is not uncommon for a juror, who suspects the object of the registered letter which is the citation presented to him, to refuse to receive it.

But it is needless further to pour water upon a drowned rat. The institution has been nibbled away in bits, like the law of entail, and it will no doubt in a few more years have received the finishing stroke, which will entirely take it from practical life and relegate it to history.

The expedient which has been resorted to, to supply the place of jury trial, is one to which perfect justice has not yet been done. To have the whole of the evidence taken down by a shorthand writer secures, as nearly as possible, a perfect report of what witnesses have said; and one judge at least has the advantage of having seen the way in which the witnesses comported themselves. The judges of a Court of Review are deprived of this great aid in forming an estimate of the value of evidence; but this is in some measure supplied by the report of the judge who saw the witnesses, and whose opinion as to their credibility they would be slow to dispute.

The defects of the system are, that an immense quantity of trash is recorded, and proofs are protracted to a most unreasonable extent. All that is material or immaterial is duly recorded by the stenographer; and a bulky volume represents his labours, carrying along with it, of course, a bulky fee to him. The cause of this is greatly due to the want of preparation on the part of the counsel by whom these proofs are conducted. The same questions are repeated over and over again; the trial is protracted from day to day, because the counsel have to read up their prerecognitions in presence of the Court; and until a page of pre recognition has been read no question can be put, and the time of the Court—which is the time of the public—is absolutely wasted. Cross-examination, moreover, seems to be a lost art; the counsel who has to carry it out, instead of confining himself to those points where his client was hit, thinks it necessary to go through the whole case just as if there had been no examination-in-chief. The result is a wearisome repetition of the same statements; and in almost every case the cross-examining counsel has made the proof more damning against his own client than when he began. The remedy for this is in the hands of the Court themselves, by simply striking off the expense of two days out of the four during which the proof lasted.

Mr. Mackay's "Sketch," which has suggested the foregoing remarks, is one of the best introductory discourses to lectures upon Scots Law that we have ever read. Nowhere else can there be found within a limited compass so much interesting information about the rise and progress of Scottish Jurisprudence and the legal literature which it has called forth. If we differ from him here and there, our differences are not material. For example, he does not do justice altogether to a writer who has been unjustly neglected. Bankton's Institute contains a vast amount of interesting information (especially about country matters) besides law; and when one in the pursuit of an authority fails to find it in Stair or Erskine, he will in all probability find it in the Institute of Bankton. The judges who preside in the Small Debt Courts ought to make a note of the fact that they will find authority in Bankton for the conclusion, that a father is not liable for the damage caused by his youthful son, who in his playful negligence has broken the windows of a neighbour.

In his rapid sketch of the formation of the law at various epochs Mr. Mackay has also done less than justice to the judges of the seventeenth century—from 1600 till 1700. All our Equity Law dates from that century. The following century (1700 to 1800) was occupied almost entirely with cases on the Feudal Law; and it has only been within recent years that Equity Jurisprudence has again come to the front. We have a great leeway yet to make up in this matter; but we have now almost inexhaustible sources of supply in England and America, and in the yet unexhausted fountain of the Pandects.—Journal of Jurisprudence.

TREASURE TROVE.—The Judge of the Salisbury and Yeovil County Courts has had before him a singular claim. Dr. Garland, of Yeovil, and an elderly man named Hann, of Odcombe, being summoned for the value of an old Roman coin. A young woman, named Ross, who was the plaintiff, bought one of a number of old coins that were discovered, and she lent it to Hann, who showed it to Dr. Garland. Dr. Garland, who is the deputy coroner, detained it on behalf of the Crown. His Honour decided that the coin belonged to the Crown.

THE CONVICT FRANCIS HYNES.

The following letter was on Saturday received by Mr. Frost, the convict's solicitor:—

"DUBLIN CASTLE, 1st Sept., 1882.

"SIR,—With reference to your memorial on behalf of Francis Hynes, the prisoner under judgment in Limerick Male Prison, I am directed by the Lord Lieutenant to inform you that his Excellency, after a careful consideration of all the circumstances of the case, has felt it to be his painful duty to decide that the law must take its course.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

"W. S. B. KATE.

"John Frost, Esq., 6 Upper Ormond-quay."

ANCIENT EXECUTIONERS.

A very curious document has recently been discovered in the State archives of Hesse-Darmstadt. It is the official tariff of Darmstadt and Bessungen, in the latter part of the fourteenth century, to the executioners of those towns for the performance of their duties. Physical exertion seems to have had nothing to do with it, the rate being high or low, according to the degree of appallingness in the punishment. To boil a criminal in oil bought the executioner twenty-four florins, while breaking a man on the wheel gave but five florins and thirty kreutzers. Criminals were hung at ten florins per head, and burned alive for fourteen. To apply the torture of the rack brought but five florins, and branding on the back or forehead or cutting off nose and ears were the same price. The list is a commentary on the actual progress of civilisation. We are a step or two further toward humanity.—Washington Law Reporter.

THE RAILWAY COMMISSION.

The most important part of the report of the Committee on Railway Rates both to lawyers and laymen is that which deals with the railway commission. Many of the questions discussed by the committee, such as the carriage by companies of foreign produce on better terms than native produce, come within the existing jurisdiction of the commission, and the rest must depend for their satisfactory solution on the efficiency of the tribunal charged with carrying out the law. The result of the committee is favourable to the continued existence of the railway commission. Unless reinforced their powers expire with the present year, and they will, of course, now be, at least, renewed. A still better course would be to adopt at once the recommendation of the committee, and make the commission permanent, which recommendation was agreed to without a division. The commissioners have been in existence for nine years, and ought no longer to be considered on their trial. It is time now that they be either abolished or made permanent. Their continued instability is a source of weakness; and, if the railway companies knew that they were firmly established, there would probably cease to be any further attempts to starve them of business or bring them into ridicule. The reforms suggested by the committee are not of so crucial a character but that they can wait. Before Parliament separates, however, permanence ought to be given to the commission as one of the matters which the report has put beyond question.

The committee recommend that the commission shall not only be permanent, but that it shall be a Court of Record. We have no objection, although we cannot see what good it will do the commission. The object of the committee may possibly have been to give more the character of a Court of law to the tribunal; but, if so, why did they reject the proposal of Mr. Bolton that "the president or chief commissioner should be a lawyer, having the rank and position of a judge of the High Court?" If the railway commission is to be, as it ought to be, a Court, the legal element in it ought at least to predominate. As at present constituted the members of the commission are to consist of three persons, of whom "one shall be of experience in the law, and one of experience in railway business," and yet the president of the commission has been neither of these. The evident intention of the Legislature was that the lawyer should be first. There are two ways in which the commission might be satisfactorily constituted. One is that suggested by Mr. Bolton, in which case the Court would consist of a judge, aided by two men of business as assessors. The alternative is to constitute a Court of two lawyers and one man of business with equal powers. If there was a difference of opinion in such a Court the majority would in all probability be right. If one lawyer were in a minority the case would probably be one of mixed law, fact, and administration, in which the business man's opinion might well be allowed to turn the scale. If the business man found himself in a minority, the case would be one in which legal experience was most required, and which ought to be governed by the opinion of lawyers. In process of time the commission ought, we think, to take the shape, as it may under the present Act. If there were two lawyers on the commission, there would be no necessity for enacting that, in case of difference, each should give judgment for himself. Lawyers when they form opinions are fond of supporting them in words; and the present rule—sanctioned, we suppose, by the majority of the existing commission—would be rescinded if there were two lawyers on the commission. In fact, it would be rather ridiculous to pass an Act of Parliament insisting that a man shall give reasons for an opinion. The committee deal with the question of appeal with a lavish disposal of the time of the Court of Appeal which will hardly commend itself to the Lord Chancellor. They suggest that prohibition to the railway commissioners shall be abolished, but that there shall be an appeal to the English and Irish Courts of Appeal, and to the Court of Session, and no further. This appeal is to be of right, and it is to include questions of fact. In other words, there is to be a second hearing before a Court of Appeal in every case in which the railway company in question does not succeed, and in some in which they do succeed, amounting to at least three-fourth of all the cases. It is out of the question that the Court of Appeal in England, with its present numbers and its present duties, could respond to any such call on their time. If such a course were possible, it would be ill-advised. The recommendation of the committee is, to use a pleader's phrase, "bad for a departure." They first decline to make the legal element predominate in the commission, and then they put a tribunal composed exclusively of lawyers over the commission. A tribunal, the majority of which consists of men not lawyers, are to be controlled on questions of fact by a purely legal Court. If the commission is properly constituted as it is, then the Court of Appeal is the wrong tribunal to put over it. If the Court of Appeal is the right tribunal to revise the decisions of the commission, then the commission itself ought to be composed of lawyers. As a corollary to the recommendations as to appeal, the committee propose the abolition of prohibition and certiorari to the commissioners. If there is to be an appeal on the facts, no trouble need be taken to abolish these remedies, which are only used because there is no more extensive remedy. Why objection should be taken to them, we do not know. They form a very convenient way of testing the correctness of a decision of the commissioners in point of law, and of separating the law from the facts, and the inferences from facts, with which a Court of law ought not to be troubled.

The rest of the suggestions of the committee require little discussion. They are mainly directed to certain defects in the existing jurisdiction of the commission which are accidental—such as the making of an order which will compel two companies to co-operate for the benefit of an applicant. To this must be added the condition that both parties are made to the proceedings. The commission ought also to have power to see that the general and special railway Acts are carried out, instead of only possessing their present limited powers. The "granting of damages" suggested does not, of course, refer to compensation for personal injuries; and there is no reason, if a person proves that he has been overcharged, why the commission should not have power to order the return of the money, instead of putting the applicant to a second proceeding by action. The same approbation may be given to the proposal that the commissioners should, by consent of the parties, act as referees in rating cases. The existing tribunals may well be relieved of a class of case with which they cannot conveniently deal. The main recommendation of the committee—namely, that which proposes an appeal to the Court of Appeal on the facts—is, we think, altogether inadmissible. The railway commission was instituted as a special tribunal possessing special qualifications, and as such the committee approve it. The object was to give such assistance to the lawyers in the commission as would commend the decision on the facts to the community of business men. Unfortunately the law was outnumbered in the original constitution of the tribunal, and there has not as yet been an opportunity of repairing that initial blunder. To give an appeal on the facts is to restore the jurisdiction of the Common Pleas in a confused way, and mainly in the interests of the railway companies. Of course, the companies will appeal when the case goes against them; so that this, the leading recommendation of the committee, will have the effect of maintaining a lay tribunal to decide in favour of railway companies, and establishing a second chance for the companies in case a tribunal of pure lawyers should decide in their favour. This is a mixture which, we think, cannot work, and, in spite of the care with which the committee have taken evidence and considered the matter, their proposed reform of the railway commission seems out of the question.—Law Journal.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.

The Daily News gives the following summary of the paper on the State of Crime read by Professor Leone Levi, on the 24th Aug., at the meeting of the British Association:—The number of indictable offences reported to the police within the last ten years showed a slight increase in England and Wales from 1.97 per thousand in 1871 to 2.05 in 1880, and in Ireland from 1.51 to 1.62. The ten years included five of great prosperity and high wages, and five bad years, and indictable crimes were greater in number during the five bad years. The number of crimes reported in Ireland was uniformly smaller in proportion than in England. Evidence of the difficulties in the administration of justice in Ireland was given in the fact that in the ten years the percentage of convictions on committals was 75 in England and Wales, 76 in Scotland, and only 55 in Ireland. The aggregate of committals for trial and summary jurisdiction offences gave 26.5 per thousand for England and Wales, 32.82 for Scotland, and 36.12 for Ireland. Great differences existed in the classes of crime and offences in England, Scotland, and Ireland respectively. Honour and property were safest in Ireland. The person was safest in Great Britain. Drunkenness was worst in Ireland. Geographically, crime was least in the North-Midland and South-Western counties, and most in the North-Western. The bulk of our criminals consisted of persons having no occupation and of common labourers whose means were precarious. The numbers committed for trial in England in 1880 were 19 per cent. less than in Scotland, and 5.3 per cent. less than in Ireland. The amount of deposits in the savings banks was 80 per cent. more in England and Wales than it was in Scotland, and 7.3 per cent. more than in Ireland. Prosperity went hand in hand with virtue, misery with depression and crime.

COURTS OF JUSTICE.—The charge on the Consolidated Fund last year for Courts of Justice, was £587,124 8s. 2d.

TREASURE TROVE IN FRANCE.

Three hundred and seven thousand francs in gold, rolled up in wrappers of the Moniteur newspaper of the time of the Revolution, were discovered last April by a carpenter in the wall of a house at Dijon. Dr. Chanut, the owner of the house, claimed the money; but an adverse claim was set up by the descendants of the Vicomte de Monssier, who owned the house at the time of the Revolution, and memoranda in whose handwriting were detected on the wrappers. The Dijon tribunal has just decided in their favour, with costs against the owner of the house, on the ground that their ancestor must have hidden the money between 1794 and 1816.

COHABITATION AS EVIDENCE OF MARRIAGE.

The law has its romances, and the Courts witness many scenes much stranger than those we read of in works of fiction.

The Court of Appeals of New York have recently considered a case that involved a curious phase of life. (Badger v. Badger, 20 Ohio Law Journal, 592.) The plaintiff claimed dower in the lands of Jacob Badger, whom she alleged was her husband. There had been no formal marriage, nor any express agreement between the parties, but simply a very long cohabitation. The defendants denied the marital relation, and, in the course of the trial, the following curious history was developed:

"The decedent appears to have lived two lives. They ran parallel with each other for more than a third of a century, and without approach or collision. In one locality, and among his own relatives and friends, he seemed to be a bachelor, possessing considerable wealth, at the head of a respectable business, occupying rooms with his sister and with others during much of the period, and if not always at home, yet not so frequently absent as to arouse suspicion or remark. In another locality in the same city, but perhaps in an humbler neighbourhood, he appears as John Baker, living with the plaintiff as his wife, introducing her as such, called uncle by her nephew, and deemed father by her daughter, paying her bills and expenses, furnishing her with the food and shelter he shared, nursing her through severe and continued illness. Seldom absent at night, attending her mother's funeral as one of the family of mourners, the intercourse created no scandal, but reputed to be virtuous and respectable, and that of husband and wife."

Jacob Badger lived on Joralemon-street, in a state of single blessedness. John Baker lived on Macdougall-street, in a state of marital bliss. Jacob and John were the same person, and yet not the same. Those who knew Jacob knew not of John, and those who knew John had never heard of Jacob. The result was that the witnesses as to Jacob's celibacy could not testify as to John's reputation for chastity. Inasmuch, therefore, as no one cared whether Jacob had gone the way of the transgressor or not, the Court very properly held that witnesses who knew nothing about this alleged matrimonial reputation were not competent to testify that he was not married.

"That the decedent lived a single life without presence or appearance of wife or daughter, at his rooms when boarding with his sister, was a fact properly proved, and clearly admissible. But that among those who thus saw him, and before whom nothing had occurred to raise the question, he was reputed to be unmarried, was pure hearsay, explaining nothing since there was nothing to be explained. The life of John Baker, in Macdougall-street, was ambiguous in the sense that it might indicate an illicit intercourse or a matrimonial connexion. To ascertain which, the shadow it cast upon surrounding society could be examined and studied usefully for the solution of the doubt. The life of Jacob Badger, in Joralemon-street, was not ambiguous at all, and needed no help to solve its character. It is indeed said that the purpose was to show a divided repute, and so contradict the reputation of marriage, which, to be effective, must be general. But the general repute proved, and that required to be shown, does not and cannot go beyond the range of knowledge of the cohabitation. If within that range there is division as to the character of the fact, the divided repute merely continues the ambiguity and determines nothing."

In speaking of this cohabitation, the Court said: "So far as we know, the association began when the plaintiff was young and the decedent in middle life, and continued until he fell dead an old man of seventy-six. It lasted without break or interruption. It survived the loss of youth and its attractions; it ran on through sickness, paralysis, and some degree of mental weakness; it showed no trace of the satisfied passion that tires of its victim and abandons her for new temptation; it did not change when the girl had grown into the matron and became deaf and lame; it stayed with the tenacity of love and duty, remaining patient and faithful until the end. It is argued with great force that if this relation was that only of lover and mistress, it approached strangely near to matrimonial truth and devotion, and gave to unlawful lust an endurance and virtue not common or expected.

"The reputation attending this cohabitation in the neighbourhood where it existed and was known, among those brought into its presence by relationship, business, or society, was that which ordinarily attends the dwelling together of husband and wife. It has been well described as the shadow cast by their daily lives. (1 Bishop on Mar. and Div., s. 438.) In the general repute surrounding them, the slow growth of months and years, the resultant picture of forgotten incidents, passing events, habitual and daily conduct, presumably honest because disinterested and safe to be trusted because prone to suspect, we are enabled to see the character of the cohabitation and discern its distinctive features. It is for that reason that such general repute is permitted to be proven. It sums up a multitude of trivial details. It compacts into the brief phrase of a verdict the teaching of many incidents and the conduct of years. It is the average intelligence drawing its conclusion."

The judgment of the above Court was therefore reversed, because of the admission of evidence as to Jacob's celibacy given by those who knew nothing of John.

"We have been able to find no case where such evidence as was here given, upon its admissibility being challenged by objection, has been held competent. The evidence of reputation, when admitted, is an exception to general rules. It should never be allowed to stray beyond some useful or necessary purpose. In its application to cases of pedigree it is justified by the difficulties of proof, and confined generally to the family and relatives whose knowledge is assumed, and who have spoken before a controversy arisen. In its application to the fact of marriage it is more than mere hearsay. It involves and is made up of social conduct and recognition, giving character to an admitted and unconcealed cohabitation. But in its application to a man living in appearance a single life, it adds nothing to that fact, it creates no further contradiction to an intercourse carried on elsewhere under the appearance of matrimony, and throws no additional light upon it. It amounts to bare hearsay, and the unsworn declarations of persons knowing nothing of the facts in controversy. In the present case twenty-three different witnesses were allowed to testify to the reputation of the decedent as a bachelor, not one of whom, before his death, had seen or heard of the plaintiff, or known of her connexion with him. We do not think this evidence was admissible. Its very volume and frequency indicates the dangerous effect it may have produced upon the mind of the Court, and we cannot disregard the error.—Pacific Coast Law Journal.

In the last financial year the fees on "bills" in the House of Lords were £30,022, and in the House of Commons £31,609.

PROCESSIONS IN THE STREETS.

The case of Beatty v. Gillbanks, reported in the August number of the Law Journal Reports, deals with the interesting and important questions of law raised by the mode of proceeding adopted by the religious revivalists, styling themselves the "Salvation Army." As is well known, opinions have widely differed on this subject. Last October the Home Secretary was called upon to give his advice in the matter by the magistrates of Stamford. He suggested that if riotous proceedings were apprehended, an information should be sworn to that effect; notices should be issued forbidding the procession; and, in the last resort, the procession should forcibly be prevented from forming. The soundness of this advice in point of law is negatived in Beatty v. Gillbanks, by the judgment of Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Cave. Their judgment amounts to a decision that a procession in the streets is a lawful proceeding, and that those who take part in it cannot be bound over to keep the peace, notwithstanding that the procession may reasonably be expected to raise a tumult. In form the case only decides that a person charged with creating an unlawful assembly cannot be bound over to keep the peace because he is taking part in a procession which is, without his so intending it, likely to lead to a breach of the peace; but, in effect, the judges decide the larger proposition, that by no form of proceeding can this kind of procession be prevented. This is clear from the fact that Beatty v. Gillbanks has, since its decision, been considered conclusive in the case of a member of a similar procession convicted of assaulting a police constable who had proceeded to lay hands upon him to stop the procession. The conviction was quashed, with costs against the justices, as in the case of Beatty v. Gillbanks. There is grave doubt whether there is power to give costs against the justices upon a case stated; and some surprise has been caused by the Court taking this course when the justices acted under the suggestion of the Home Secretary, and when the point involved does not appear to be so clear as the judges seem to consider it.

The decision of the Court on the question upon which they considered the whole matter to turn—viz., whether those who took part in the procession were guilty of an unlawful assembly—may be accepted more easily than its application to all the questions involved. Even on this point, however, the admission of Mr. Justice Field suggests that there is much to be said. The learned judge concedes that "every one must be taken to intend the natural consequence of his acts; and, therefore, if this disturbance of the peace was the natural consequence of the acts of the appellants, they would be liable, and the justices would have been right in binding them over." But what does "natural consequence" mean? It does not refer merely to physical necessity. If a man carrying a red umbrella walks into a field where there is a savage bull, the natural consequence is that the bull attacks him. If on the day of an election the most unpopular candidate parades the streets conspicuously wearing his colours, the natural consequence is that rotten eggs, if at hand, are thrown at him. It could not, however, be said that the candidate in question could be convicted on an indictment of creating a riot or unlawful assembly. The present decision goes further, and assumes that he could not be lawfully taken under shelter against his will, still less prevented from leaving his house. We do not think that this is so clear as the judges appear to consider it. No doubt English law has the highest respect for private judgment and individual rights, and generally forbids no act which is not unlawful in itself. But there are some cases in which this principle has been made subservient to the rights of the public. For instance, it is in itself a lawful act for a shopkeeper to make his shop window as attractive as he can, and yet a shopkeeper who attracts a crowd outside his window can be convicted of causing an obstruction (Re v. Carville, 6 C. & P. 637). In these cases the intention is immaterial, as decided in Hall's case (1 Ventris, 169), in which an exhibition of acrobats, apparently in private ground, at Charing Cross was pronounced illegal, as it drew a disorderly crowd. Some forty years ago, a confectioner in Regent-street had a pretty daughter, and crowds collected outside the shop to see her, creating so great an obstruction that the girl's father was obliged to take her out of the shop. It would seem strange to indict a man for having a pretty daughter; but if the effect of putting her in a shop in public view is to cause a block in the street, it is quite in accordance with sound principles of public duty to make those who place her there amenable to the law. Before Northumberland House gave place to the present Avenue, two men, by way of bringing a bet to the test, stood gazing at the lion which used to stand over the front of the house. The consequence was that an immense crowd collected in Trafalgar-square, and, in all probability, an indictable offence was committed. In deference to the same principle the figures of Gog and Magog, which used to appear and strike the hours in front of a clock-maker's shop in Cheapside, have been silenced.

The class of cases, of which these are instances, are tolerably familiar. Whether or not the principle of them applies to processions in the street likely to arouse opposition requires, we think, at least grave consideration. If an act, innocent in itself, becomes illegal because its natural consequence is to obstruct the public street, is it legal to do an act having a riot as its natural consequence? If the freedom from obstruction of the streets is an object which may be attained at the expense of forbidding an innocent act, is not the maintenance of the public peace, a fortiori, such an object? It may be answered that the law never has been applied in this way; but the question remains whether the principle of the law does not necessarily include this application. There is a further question whether processions are in themselves a lawful use of the streets. If they are not, those who take part in them may lawfully be prevented from so doing. It is clear that the object of the defendant in Beatty v. Gillbanks was purely and simply to take part in a demonstration. It was not even a procession from one place to another. The "Army" with band of music, flags, and banners, started from their hall and returned again to the hall. The object was to beat up recruits. Whether this is a lawful use of the streets deserves discussion. It is true that the Army did not stand still in the street. If it had done so, doubtless an unlawful act would have been committed. If it walked in procession from one place of meeting to another, probably the streets would be lawfully used notwithstanding the flags and the band of music. But is it a lawful use of the streets to march through the principle thoroughfares of a town, and march back again to the same place? Do the objects with which the streets are dedicated to the public include this use? These are questions, amongst others, which appear involved in the present discussion; but which have hardly as yet received adequate treatment in the Courts. The decision, it is true, is in the healthy direction of individual liberty; but traditional principles of English law are apt sometimes to be pedantically applied, and to place the general rights of the public out of their true perspective.—Law Journal.

The search for lead, and ultimately for zinc also, was carried on in the Mendips, Somersetshire, even during the middle ages, and a curious code of laws was enacted, in the reign of the fourth Edward, for the regulation of the industry. Every man was entitled to dig a trench, and to "throw his hoes two ways after the rake;" and then none might work "within the compass of the throw." A thief of ore was treated as an Achan. He was shut in his house, with all that he had, and the building was fired; but after a time he was permitted to rush out through the flames, purged of his faults—like purified metal from the smelting.

The Legislature of Missouri has passed a bill forbidding the sale or manufacture in the State of any imitation of butter, whether represented to be genuine or not.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 93.
Godofroi and Shortt on Railways, 427.

The provision as to mile posts is for the benefit, not of the company's passengers, but of other persons than the company using the line for locomotion (Brown v. Great Western Railway Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 156).

S & W. IV., c. 27, s. 7.
Banning on Limitation, 117.

A title to land may be acquired against a railway company, although it is not superfluous land (Bobbett v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 161).

Carriers Act (11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV., c. 68), s. 1.

A trunk containing silk, &c., worth more than £10, and undeclared, is "lost" within the meaning of the Carriers Act, when sent the wrong way and delayed, so that the carriers are not liable for injury to the silk (Millen v. Brauch & Co., 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 166).

Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 150.

A collective notice to pave given to several owners is sufficient, and a separate notice to each not necessary (Simcox v. Handsworth Local Board, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 168).

Dart on Vendors and Purchasers (5th Edition), 157.

A purchaser who did not make his objection to title till the lapse of the seven days mentioned in the conditions, held not entitled to recover his deposit (Rosenberg v. Cook, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 170)—C.A.

As regards the incomes of the professional classes in London, the law stands first, the average yearly income of barristers and solicitors being computed at £575, while ten solicitors and five barristers are said to earn over £10,000 a year.

Box and Cox has just been enacted in real life. It was in Vienna, and the facts have been in an undramatic way disclosed at a police-court. A Madame Rosenthal (the Mrs. Bouncer of the piece) let a room to two men separately. One was engaged at some gas works, and was out all night, including Sundays. The other was porter at the establishment of a tradesman (not a hatter), and was employed all day. At last came the inevitable. One man, having a holiday, found the other in his bed. Mrs. Bouncer (Madame Rosenthal) tried to explain that she had let the room on the condition that one of them should use it only in the day and the other only at night. But the gasman carried the case to the police-court for the return of the caution-money he had lodged with her, and won the day. Plays are frequently founded on real incidents, but it is seldom that incidents, as in this case appear to be founded on a play.

FEE STAMPS.—The total revenue from fee stamps in the year ending the 31st of March was £653,449 10s. 2d., and net £650,883 11s. 8d.

Holloway's Pills.—Prevision.—As autumn treads on winter, slender, delicate, and pale-faced youths become listless, languid, and debilitated, unless an alterative, combined with some tonic, be administered to quicken their enfeebled organs. This precise requirement is supplied in these noted Pills, which can and will accomplish all that is wanted, provided the printed instructions surrounding them meet with scrupulous attention. Holloway's Pills are especially adapted to supply the medical wants of youth, because his medicine acts gently, though surely, as a purifier, regulator, alterative, tonic, and mild aperient. A very few doses of these Pills will convince any discouraged invalid that his cure lies in his own hands, and a little perseverance only is demanded for its completion.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 and 1882, with Notes showing the alteration in the law as affected by the Act of 1882, and Appendices of Statutes, Rules of Court, Forms and Precedents. By MICHAEL G. GUIRY, LL.B., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London: Waterlow & Sons, Limited, London Wall, E.C. 1882.

REVIEWS.

The Prevention of Crime (Ireland) Act, 1882, with a Review of the policy, bearing, and scope of the Act; Notes on the several Sections, chiefly those on the subject of Summary Procedure for Offences against the Act. By HENRY HUMPHREYS. Dublin: Hodges, Figgis, and Co., Grafton-street, Publishers to the University. 1882.

"COERCION was not only a failure, it had been a disaster. Suddenly one day Ireland awoke in joy to learn that Mr. Gladstone had turned from his dread experiment to courses more congenial to his nature. Mr. Forster was recalled; the prison doors were unbarred; the Land Act was to be made complete; the 'arrests' victims were to be saved; a peasant proprietary was to become a reality. It seemed too much of happiness—a moment too bright to last. The men to whom this blessed change was ruin, the men for whose designs this reconciliation was utter overthrow, were not to be thus baffled without a blow. How to turn away the spirit of amity, how to bring back the reign of hatred and fury, was the problem for them. They sought its solution, alas! in an act destined to roll, as it were, a sea of blood between the two nations." It was the act of the Phoenix Park assassins; but, adds Mr. A. M. Sullivan, "over the grave of the man who represented a policy of reconciliation and justice, the tears and the hearts of two peoples mingled, who long had warred in anger and hate. Here was an opportunity for such a fusion of feeling, such a grasp of friendship between the two countries, as had not arisen since the memorable settlement of 1782. Never before in our time had any Government such a chance for putting itself at one with Irish national sentiment. The popular leaders proclaimed their determination to take the field against crime, and to lead forth the popular array in behalf of public order, because justice henceforth was to be the law. The Government had opened the prison doors, had proclaimed aloud the abandonment of Coercion, and the advent of relief for the victims of oppression. It needed but a firm front and an honourable perseverance in this direction on both sides, and an era of happiness and peace might have closed a long and dreary strife. Yet it was at this juncture, and under such circumstances, the Government decided on introducing into Parliament a Coercion Bill for Ireland, which was frankly declared to be the worst and most desperate measure of its class ever conceived in the gloomy annals of despotic times." Of the Act thus referred to from his own standpoint by the author of "New Ireland," Mr. Humphreys says: "If it be allowed that what the preamble to this 'Prevention of Crimes (Ireland) Act, 1882,' sets forth is the truth, it can hardly be maintained that the subsequent enactments for the prevention and repression of crime are needlessly severe. The remedy does not appear to be more than adequate to the requirements of the disease. There may be other things to be taken into account; but then, as Lord Bacon says, the law does not judge of the causes of causes, but contenteth itself with the immediate cause, and so the Act does not for its purposes deem it requisite to look for reasons elsewhere. But although other causes be not, by the Act, looked for farther afield, the branches of the magistracy appointed to execute justice in these matters cannot quite exclude from view the means that produced the abnormal state of things to meet which the 'operation of the ordinary law has become insufficient.'"

To those branches of the magistracy, the edition of the Act now prepared by Mr. Humphreys will indeed prove invaluable; and certainly, the author of the well-known "Justice of the Peace for Ireland" has done all that was substantially needed in order to render the summary procedure for offences against the Act easily administered. His notes and observations appended to the various sections are pertinent and practical; while for convenient reference full marginal readings are added, and a clear and copious Index completes his excellent manual, which begins with a lucid Review of the policy, bearing and scope of the Act. Simple in its plan or outline, this stringent statute is most comprehensive in its character; but, however drastic, "as it is the law, it must, if necessary, be promptly and rigidly enforced, and so as that the intention of the legislature be not frustrated, but yet carried out in a sober and dispassionate spirit, inflicting no needless hardship, worry, or annoyance to innocent and simple folk." To this end we would gladly see the book, from which we quote those admirable remarks, in the hands of all who have to do with the execution of the enactment, as well as of those who will have professional occasion to deal with it; nor, from the constable up, will one be found to cavil with the opinion we express, that the book well deserves their attention and approbation.

Meantime, we heartily hope, with Mr. Humphreys, that long before the end of the statute's allotted duration of three years "the state of things which called this Act into existence will have dissolved and passed away from the country, and so the Act will quietly expire and fall into disuse." "Come what will," he observes, "it is far better that, for the reputation of justice, nothing be over-strained. Better, far better, that the transgressor escape punishment than that the inflexible rules of justice be overpassed to overtake him; for soon or late that personification of the moral reverence for law, the avenging Nemesis, will, for any wrong done in her name, exact a requital." With those estimable and righteous sentiments, the reader may collate the words of the Very Rev. Canon Pope, at the Mansion House meeting, on the 7th inst., when advocating a commutation of the sentence of death passed upon the convict Hynes, convicted of murder, on a trial under the Act: "I wish to say that the majesty of that law should be upheld; and to point out the fearful danger there is that the exasperation which has been caused by the many murders which have been committed with perfect impunity may induce our legislators to stretch the tension of the law too far, and seek for a victim. I fear that the majesty of the law may be deprived of its garb of justice, and I have a dread that it may be made to wear the garb of vindictiveness. It would be calamitous if the exasperation which has been justly caused not only in our own country, but throughout the world, at the fearful crimes that have been committed therein, should induce the law to look for a victim, or, where there is even an appearance of guilt, that a life should be sacrificed as an atonement for the murders committed, and for which there has been no personal expiation." And though there may be many disposed to differ from the speaker in reference to the particular case dealt with, none can dispute the validity of his observations in their general application. "The amelioration of the country would be dearly purchased by the evil of the crime of one murder," he added; "better that we should be reduced to the condition of the slaves of Zanzibar, of Africa, or of India, with the taskmaster's whip over our backs, than that our country should be stained with the guilt of one murder." Strong though this may seem to some now-a-days, the teaching of the true patriots of old has been no other. "I join," wrote Mr. D. Owen-Madden, in 1848, "with the son of our immortal Grattan, in saying, that 'for the honour of Ireland' the system of assassination must be put down. Not merely to save society from anarchy, but to rescue our national character from the infamy cast upon it, the assassins must be put down by every possible and justifiable means. In all our tribulations, in all our past feuds and sufferings, we were still esteemed through Europe as a people endowed with wit and courage; and every Irishman who really feels for his country must be galled at thinking of the dastardly system of assassination which in some districts had almost become habitual. 'Multitudes,' says Dr. Channing, 'never blush!' If they could do so, my countrymen, on contemplating the foul stains on our national fame cast by the assassins, might truly cry, in the soul-stirring words of Cowley:

"Come the eleventh plague rather than this should be!
Come sink us rather in the sea!
Come, pestilence, and reap us down!
Come, God's sword rather than our own!
Rather let Roman come again,
Or Saxon, Norman, or the Dane!
In all the bonds we ever bore,
We grieved, we sighed, we wept—we never BLUSHED before."

"The country has been stained with blood," exclaimed Canon Pope: "'Accursed shall you be, and accursed shall be the land which drank your brother's blood.' No wonder that we should be afflicted with famine and with pestilence; no wonder that our countrymen should be emigrants. 'Cain, where is thy brother?' The country has been stained with blood. Your country shall be killed, so that it shall give forth no fruit. Your people shall be vagabonds upon the face of the earth." Yes, too truly, in the words of the patriotic "Speranza,"

"Not our wrongs but our sins make the cloud
That darkens the land like a shroud."

OBITUARY.

THE HON. CHARLES JAMES TRENCH.

THE Hon. Charles James Trench, granduncle of Lord Ashtown (3rd Baron), who died at his residence, 6 Merrion-square, south, on the 31st ult., in the 77th year of his age, was a son of the late Mr. Francis Trench (next brother of the first Lord Ashtown), by his marriage with Mary, second daughter of Mr. Henry Mason, of Shrewsbury. Born in 1806, he was called to the Bar in Trinity Term 1830. Mr. Trench, who was until recently County Court Judge and Chairman of Quarter Sessions for the Co. Dublin, was raised to the rank and precedence of a baron's son in 1840.

MR. RICHARD ANNESLEY BILLING.

Mr. Richard Annesley Billing, who died at his residence, Balaclava-road, Melbourne, on the 21st of June last, was born in 1814, and was called to the Bar in 1839. After practising in Dublin for some years, he left Ireland in 1856, in consequence of ill-health, and in October of that year was admitted a member of the Victorian Bar. He was appointed one of the lecturers in law at the Melbourne University, and for a number of years gave a gold medal as a prize to the student who obtained the highest distinction in his classes. He was several times solicited to become a candidate for Parliamentary honours, but refused, and took no part in politics. At one time he had a leading practice at the Victorian Bar, and was usually retained in cases in which the Crown or the Board of Land and Works was a party, but for the last three years he had retired from general practice. In 1878 Mr. Billing was appointed Queen's Council for Victoria, and in April last he was appointed a County Court Judge.

MR. CHARLES HENRY TANDY.

Mr. Charles Henry Tandy, who died at Cliff Terrace, Tramore, on the 17th of August last, in the 68th year of his age, was a native of Waterford, and son of an eminent solicitor in that city, his brother Mr. Shipland Morris Tandy being also a solicitor. He was educated at the University of Dublin, where, among other distinctions, he won a silver medal in classics. He was called to the Bar in Hilary Term 1849, joined the Leinster Circuit, and took silk in 1866. Mr. Tandy, who was appointed a Crown Prosecutor for the Co. Tipperary, was standing counsel to the University of Dublin, and Professor of Constitutional, Criminal, and Crown Law at the King's Inns.

COURT PAPERS.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

List of Petitions presented to the Land Judges in the month of July, 1882.

DATE	TITLE OF MATTER	OBJECT OF PETITION	COUNTY	PROFIT RENT	SOLICITOR
July 1	John Patrick Cunningham, owner; Lucy Jane Kearna, petitioner	Sale	Galway	£ s. d. 124 16 6	Maxwell and Weldon
" 4	Robert Langley Hunt, owner; Rev. Jonathan C. Head, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Tipperary	Not stated	George H. Lyster
" 5	Wm. James Griffith, owner and petitioner	Receiver and sale	Sligo	970 10 8	Wm. Neilson and Son
" "	Michael Thomas O'Brien, owner; The National Bank, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Co. Clare	48 0 0	Michael Larkin
" 6	Samuel Livezey, owner; John Buckley, petitioner	Sale	Wicklow	Estimated 52 9 3	John Buckley
" 7	Sir William Carroll, Knt., owner and petitioner	Sale	City Dublin	476 14 7	Mark C. Bentley
" "	Michael Kavanagh and others, owners; Peter Moore, petitioner	Sale	City Dublin	Not stated	John T. Hinds
" 8	John Henry Roper, owner and petitioner	Sale	Cavan, Longford, Meath and Westmeath	471 6 4	William Whitton
" 10	Maurice Fitzgerald and another, owners and petitioners	Sale	Longford	487 13 4	Thomas Kiernan
" 11	Trustees of Anthony O'Reilly and another, owners; Mathew R. W. O'Connor and another, peti- tioners	Sale	Cavan and Meath	Estimated 2,895 12 8	J. E. Tarleton
" "	Andrew Samuel Kirkwood, owner; Wm. Labatt Payne and another, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Roscommon	175 0 0	George H. Lyster
" 12	Richard Keown Boyd, owner; Hugh Watson and James A. G. Johnson, petitioners	Sale	Down, Antrim, Wicklow	Estimated 5,075 10 10	James Murland &amp; Co.
" 18	Phillip W. Creagh, owner; Rt. Hon. Lord Clonbrock and others, peti- tioners	Receiver and sale	Cork and Kerry	559 4 0	Edward Roper
" 14	Andrew Bell Booth, owner; John T. Tallow and another, petitioners	Sale	Cavan	Not stated	John T. Tallow
" 17	Stephen Mackey, owner; National Discount Co. (Ireland), petitioners	Sale	Dublin	75 12 4	Wm. P. M'Evoy
" 18	Peter Alexander Daly, owner; The National Bank, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Galway	478 6 8	Michael Larkin
" "	B. Townley Balfour and others, owners; Blagney T. Balfour, petitioner	Sale	Meath	40 17 0	Edward Carraher
" "	William Cox, owner; Frances Peirce, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Limerick	1,198 0 6	Robert J. Ferguson
" "	Jeremiah Donovan, owner and petitioner	Sale	Cork	71 8 8	Daniel O'Donovan
" 19	Nicholas Butler, owner; Belinda Creagh, petitioner	Sale	Clare and Galway	Not stated	James Blaquières
" "	Thomas Byrne and others, owners and petitioners	Sale	Carlow	488 15 10	John D. Vanston
" 20	Sir James E. Tennant and Settled Estates Act	To sanction Building Lease	Antrim	—	Thomas H. Torrens
" 21	Michael Bishop and others, owners; Mathew Duffey and others, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Co. Dublin	53 0 0 Griffith's Valuation	Leonard Morrogh
" "	William Rodgers, owner; Jane M'Farlane, petitioner	Sale	Tyrone	67 0 0 Griffith's Valuation	King Houston
" 24	W. Langford Rae and another, owners; Catherine Ras and others, petitioners	Sale	Kerry	887 19 8	M'Gillicuddy and Morphy
" "	William M. H. Kirkwood, owner; The Commercial Union Assurance Co., peti- tioners	Receiver and sale	Mayo and Sligo	1,089 17 1	Misward Jones &amp; Co.
" 26	John T. Dillon, owner; Lord Emly and others, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Roscommon	1,496 6 4	John O'Hagan
" "	Samuel Lindsay, junr., owner; Mary Anne Lindsay, petitioner	Sale	King's Co.	Not stated	Adam Mitchell &amp; Son
" 28	James Watson, owner; The Belfast Building Society, petitioners	Sale	Armagh	80 0 0 Estimated letting value	W. E. Armstrong
" 29	Thomas P. Sherlock and another, owners; Richard Leyna, petitioner	Sale	Waterford	1,505 9 0	Maxwell and Weldon
" 31	Fitzameline M. Anketell and another, owners and petitioners	Sale	Tyrone	1,088 11 0	J. C. Smith and R. N. Barrow

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Stittings follow in Italics.

Bourke, William, of Main-street, Roscrea, in the county of Tipperary, draper, trading as "William Bourke and Co." August 29; Tuesday, September 19, and Friday, October 6. H. F. Leahman, solr.

Teston, Cornelius, of Winthrop-street, in the city of Cork, publican. August 22; Tuesday, September 19, and Friday, October 6. Thomas Ezham, Son, and Brett, solrs.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	SEPTEMBER
	Sat. 2	Mon. 4	Tues. 5	Wed. 6	Thur. 7	Fri. 8
*Paid Government
3 p c Consols ..			99½		99½
New 3 p c Stock ..		98½	98½	98½	98½	98½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1888 Trafic. at ..		103½	103½	103½		103½
3½ p c Jan. 1881 Bk. of Irel ..				100½
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..			317	318½	318½	318½
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..			35½
20 London and County (Ltd.) ..
15 London Joint Stock ..
20 London and Westminster, Ltd ..					70
10 Do. New ..
3½ Munster Bank (Limited) ..			7
Nat. Prov. of England, Lim. ..
10 National Bank (Limited) ..					23½
10 National of Liverpool (Ltd.) ..			14½		14½
25 Provincial Bank ..			27
10 Do. New ..
10 Royal Bank ..
25 Union of Australia ..		64			63½
Steam.
50 British & Irish ..
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..			5½
100 City of Dublin ..					104½
50 Dublin & Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co.
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance & Dub. Cons. '82 ..
8 Do. do. New ..
7½ Dub. Drapery Whouse, Ltd. ..
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance ..
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..
10 Dublin United Tramways ..		10½
10 L'pl Un'ed Tram & Bus l'ed ..
10 Nth Metr. Tramway, Lond.
Railways.
50 Belfast and County Down ..			46
50 Belfast and Northern Cos. ..
50 Cork and Bandon ..
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..		117	116½			116½
100 Midland Gt. Western ..
100 Waterford & Cent. Ireland ..
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast & Nth'n Cos. 4 p c ..
100 D., W., & W., 4 per cent ..
100 Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c ..		107½
100 Mid. Great Western. 4 p c ..			103½
Debenture Stocks.
Belfast & Nth'n Cos. 4 p c ..
Dublin & Wicklow 4 p c ..
Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..		110		110
Do. 4½ p c ..					114½
Do. 4 p c ..					105½
Do. 4½ p c ..					113
L'derry & Enniskillen 5 p c ..						107
Waterford & Central 6 p c ..
Miscellaneous Debent.
Ballast Office Deb. £92 6s 3d, 4 p c ..		93
City Deb. of £92 6s 3d, 4 p c ..			92½
Dub. & Glas. S. P. Co. (1887) 5 p c ..
Do. (1888), 6 p c ..
Dub. & Kingstown 4 p c ..			103

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. r x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—4 per cent.. 17th August, 1882
Of Deposit—1 per cent.. 23rd March, 1882

Name Days—September 13th and 26th, 1882.
Account Days—September 13th and 27th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

The Stock Exchange and Brokers' Offices will be closed on Saturdays during the month of September.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

ATKINSON—September 4, at Manorhamilton, County Leitrim, the wife of George A. Atkinson, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.
CHEARNLEY—September 4, at Salterbridge, Cappoquin, the wife of Henry Philip Chearnley, Esq., D.L., High Sheriff, County Waterford, of a son and heir.
BAUNDERS—September 2, at Leinster-road, the wife of Frederick G. Saunders, Esq., solicitor, of a son.
STAVELEY—September 2, at Somerset House, Nelson-street, the wife of Jones H. Staveley, Esq., A.B., barrister-at-law, of a son.
WILKINSON—August 29, at Falcarragh, County Donegal, the wife of Mr. John Wilkinson, Clerk of Petty Sessions, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

COHOON and FITZGERALD—September 6, by special licence, William Henry Cohoon, only son of William Cohoon, of Ringsend, Co. Dublin, to Bridget Josephine Fitzgerald, widow of the late John Vincent Fitzgerald, Esq., solicitor, of this city.
CURRY and BEDINGFIELD—September 7, at Northbourne, Deal, Kent, by the Rev. Thomas Wood, M.A., Vicar of St. Peter's, of London-gerry, to Philippa Frances, youngest daughter of Thomas Forrester Bedingfield, Esq., of Gilford, Western Australia.
MACLAUGHLIN and CAMPBELL—September 5, at the Private Oratory, Chichester Park, Belfast, by the Most Rev. Dr. Dorian, assisted by the Rev. John Lynch, P.P., V.F., Ballymena, the Rev. James Hamill, Adm., Belfast, and the Rev. F. McKenna, P.P., Portrush, Daniel MacLaughlin, Esq., solicitor, Coleraine, to Mary, eldest daughter of Bernard Campbell, Esq., Belfast.
MACUIRE and TURNCLIFFE—August 29, at St. Peter and Paul's, Great Crosby, Liverpool, by the Very Rev. Canon Maguire, uncle of the bridegroom, John Francis, eldest son of the late John Francis Maguire, Esq., M.P., Cork, to Lizzie, second daughter of John Turncliffe, Landsdowne, Blundell Sands, Liverpool.
NORTH-BOMFORD and KAYE—September 5, at St. George's Church, by the Rev. J. A. Chadwick, D.D., Rector of Armagh, assisted by the Rev. George Martin, Rector of Aber, County Meath, and the Rev. A. Elliott, M.A., John North-Bomford, Esq., J.P., of Ferrans, County Meath, late Captain H.M. 29th Regiment, to Mary W. Constance, eldest daughter of W. S. B. Kaye, Esq., Q.C., LL.D., Assistant Under-Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

DEATHS.

KINCHELA—August 27, at an advanced age, Lewis Chapellier Kinchela, M.D., son of the late John Kinchela, LL.D., formerly Chief Justice at Sydney, N. S. Wales, and nephew of the late Perrott Thornton, Esq., of Greenville, J.P., formerly High Sheriff Co. Cavan.
M'LAUGHLIN—September 7, at her father's residence, Gardiner's-place, aged 19 years, Margaret Mary, youngest surviving daughter of William M'Laughlin, Esq., Q.C.
ROWAN—August 11, at his residence, Florence-terrace, Londonderry, William Terence Rowan, Esq., solicitor.
TRENCH—August 31, at his residence, Merrion-square, Dublin, the Hon. Charles James Trench, formerly Chairman of the County of Dublin, aged 76 years.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50.
DENZILLE-STREET. 3-7

PUBLIC NOTICES:

EVERY MAN WHO SMOKES
Should invest 24 stamps for the
NEW PERFECTED

The Best
Selected Briars
only.

JENINGS & CO., Inventors, 97, NEWGATE-STREET.
The most Perfect Pipe invented since Smoking began.
Prospectus Free. 6r

D. W. C. A. R. R. O. L. L.,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His Large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-
randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges.
Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
Letterpress and Lithographic Printer

Estimates free of charge.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEEDED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane. 63

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 600 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PERCY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

HENDRICK and CO.,

PRINTERS, STATIONERS, SCRIVENERS,

and ARTISTS' WAREHOUSE,

98 CLARE-STREET,

DUBLIN. 106

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES and INVESTIGATIONS

CONDUCTED BY

MR. THOMAS DEANE,

17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange),

Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.

Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.

References.

ESTABLISHED 1878. 167

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,

the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 113 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs Stewart & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old

Lead, Zinc, Tallors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or wgt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S. F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c., for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111 GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's).
Late of WATERHOUSE & Co.'s 90

Printed and Published by the Proprietor, JOHN FALCONER, every Saturday, at 63, Upper Sackville-street, in the Parish of St. Thomas and City of Dublin.—Saturday, September 9, 1882.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

BILLIARD BALLS, CHALKS, CUES, and TIPS, and all other Billiard Table requisites, at HENNY BROU' Ivory Works, 11, High-street, London, W.C. Also the cheapest house in the trade for Ivory Hair-brushes, Mirrors, and all other Ivory Toilet articles and Ivory Goods in general. Old Balls adjusted or exchanged, and Tables re-covered. Price Lists, Cloth, and Cushion Rubber Samples Post Free.—Established 1862, 26

A RREARS OF RENT (IRELAND) ACT, 1882.

FORMS PRESCRIBED BY THE RULES.

- A.—Notice of Intention by Landlord or Tenant to apply for Arrears .. .. . 1d.
  - B.—Joint Application by the Landlord and Tenant .. .. 1d.
  - C.—Joint Application by Landlord and Tenants .. .. 4d.
  - D.—Notice by Treasury requiring Investigation of the Case .. 1d.
  - E.—Application by Tenant for an Order for Payment of Arrears to or for benefit of his Landlord .. .. . 1d.
  - F.—Application by Landlord for an Order for payment of Arrears due by Tenant to or for benefit of such Landlord .. 1d.
  - G.—Statement of Property and Effects of the above-named Tenant applicable to the satisfaction of the Arrears of Rent .. .. . 1d.
  - H.—Report of Investigator .. .. . 1d.
  - I.—Notice showing Cause against Conditional Order .. .. 1d.
  - J.—Notice to Landlord of Absolute Order for payment to him or for his benefit of sum in respect of Arrears .. .. 1d.
  - K.—Notice to Tenant that Arrears of Rent of Holding are Released and Extinguished .. .. . 1d.
  - L.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where the Landlord is absolutely entitled .. .. . 1d.
  - M.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where several Holdings are comprised in claim, and where the Landlord is absolutely entitled .. .. . 1d.
  - N.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where Landlord himself is not in receipt of Rent of Holding .. .. . 1d.
  - O.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where Landlord himself is not in receipt of the Rent, and where several Holdings are comprised in the claim .. .. . 1d.
  - P.—Notice by Incumbrancer, Trustee, or Receiver, claiming to be entitled to Arrears of Rent .. .. . 1d.
  - Q.—Notice of Appeal from Order of Legal Assistant Commissioner .. .. . 1d.
  - R.—Application by Landlord for cancelling of Rent-charge under 59th Section of Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881 .. .. 1d.
  - S.—Application by Tenant for cancelling Rent-charge, created under 59th Section of Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881 .. 1d.
  - T.—Joint Application by Landlord and Tenant for Advance by way of Loan under Section 18 .. .. . 4d.
- (Complete Set of Forms, post free, 2s. 8d.)

ROBERT WHYTE,

Ladies' & Gentlemen's Boot & Shoe Manufacturer,

1, NORTH FREDERICK-STREET
(Rutland-square),

ESTABLISHED OVER HALF A CENTURY.

Boots made for Weak Ankles, Deformed Feet, and Surgical purposes of every description.

All Work executed on the Premises under my personal superintendence.

None but first-class Workmen employed in either Making or Repairing.

CASES for holding THE IRISH LAW TIMES, AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, for One Year, can be had, Lettered on side, Price—half-bound Leather, 4s.; whole-bound Leather, 6s., by Post 4d. extra, at the Office of the Journal, 63 UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

ESTABLISHED 1867.

"THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL,"
"THE IRISH LAW TIMES REPORTS,"

AND

THE PUBLIC GENERAL STATUTES,
Yearly Subscription (payable in advance), £1 10s.; Single Copy, 9d.

Delivered Free in Town or Country.

BACK VOLUMES BOUND IN HALF-CALF CAN BE HAD AT THE OFFICE AT THE FOLLOWING RATES:—

VOLS. I. TO X. (1867 to 1876) .. .. . 20s. EACH.
VOLS. XI. TO XV. (1877 to 1881) .. .. . 30s. "

OFFICE: 63, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1882.

No. 816

PRIVILEGE OF WITNESSES AS TO CRIMINATING QUESTIONS.—III.

THE cause célèbre of The United States v. Guiteau is the most recent case on the subject of privilege as regards confidential communications between husband and wife, which came under consideration from a novel point of view, so that the judgment (reported in the August issue of the Western Jurist) is the more worth quoting from. Said James, J., on the appeal to the Supreme Court of Columbia:—"Mrs. Dunmire, who was married to the defendant in July, 1869, and was his wife for four years, but had been divorced from him, was asked the following question: 'I will ask you to state to the jury whether, in your association with him (the defendant), you ever saw anything that would indicate that he was a man of unsound mind?' The court had ruled that the confidential communications between husband and wife were protected in the examination. The question was admitted under exception, and the answer was: 'I never did.' This question called for the witness's observation of the defendant's soundness or unsoundness of mind, and the objection goes partly on the ground that, notwithstanding the ruling of the court that confidential communications between the husband and the wife were protected, she may have included, as a part of the basis of her answer, what are understood as communications from her former husband. We think that the exhibition of sanity or insanity is not a communication at all, in the sense of the rule which protects the privacy and confidence of the marriage relation, any more than the height or colour, or blindness, or the loss of an arm of one of the parties is a communication. The rule which is supposed to have been violated was established in order that the conduct, the voluntary conduct, of married life might rest secure upon a basis of peace and trust, and relates to matters which the parties may elect to disclose or not disclose. It was provided in order that matters should not come to the light, which would not do so at all without a disturbance and disregard of the bond of peace and confidence between the married pair. Therefore it has not been applied to any matter which the husband, for example, has elected to make public, by doing or saying it in the presence of third persons along with his wife; and it cannot be applied to that which, whether he will or no, he inevitably exhibits to the world as well as to his wife. Some diseases a husband may conceal, and he may choose whether to reveal them or not. If he should reveal the existence of such a disease to his wife, in the privacy of their relation, she may never disclose that communication, even after the relation between them has ceased. But sanity or insanity are conditions which are not of choice, and when the disease of insanity exists, the exhibition of it is neither a matter of voluntary confidence nor capable of being one of the secrets of the marriage relation. The fact that there are instances of cunning concealment for a time, does not affect the general truth that insanity reveals itself, whether the sufferer will or no, to friends and acquaintances as well as to the wife. In short, the law cannot regard it or protect it as one of the peculiar confidences of a particular relation. It may be added that it is difficult to perceive, in any view of this subject, how the witness's denial that she had seen indications of insanity can be said to reveal any fact which her husband had communicated to her. If our opinion that sanity or insanity cannot be a communication within the meaning of the rule should be wrong, it must be remembered that sanity is a presumption of law, and that the wife would seem to reveal nothing to the world, unless she should say that the existence of insanity in her husband had been communicated to her by his conduct during their connexion. We are of opinion that no error was committed in receiving this evidence." But while, apart from inter-communications, husband and wife are now competent and compellable witnesses against each other in civil, but not, save so far as the law Act, 1882, previously cited, in criminal proceedings has been altered by the Married Women's Property (14 & 15 Vic., c. 99, s. 3; 16 & 17 ib. c. 83), the Law of Evidence Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vic., c. 68, s. 3), renders the parties to proceedings instituted in consequence of adultery, and the husbands and wives of such parties competent witnesses; with the proviso that no witness to any proceeding, whether a party or not, is to be liable to be asked or bound to answer any question tending to show that he or she has been guilty of adultery, unless such witness has already given evidence in the same proceeding in disproof of such adultery. The effect of this statute has already been discussed in a former volume (14 Ir. L. T. 317); but, it may be added that in New York, while husband and wife were rendered competent witnesses in such actions in 1879, the legislature in 1880 thought fit to revert to the original rule, holding them incompetent to establish any fact, except that of marriage. But in general they are deemed competent witnesses for or against each other in civil causes, except with regard to confidential communications and actions of crim. con. By the Act of May 10, 1867, entitled "An Act to enable husband and wife, or either of them, to be a witness for or against the other, or on behalf of any party, in certain cases," it is provided that: "Nothing herein contained shall render any husband or wife competent or compellable to give evidence for or against each other . . . in any action or proceeding for or on account of criminal conversation." And this exception was considered in the notorious Tilton-Beecher case (1875), in reference to the admission of Mr. Tilton as a witness. The defendant claimed that Mr. Tilton was excluded altogether, on the ground that the issue was really the adultery of the wife (Mrs. Tilton), and, therefore, the plaintiff's testimony would be "against" his wife. Among others, the case of Dann v. Kingdom, 1 N. Y. Sup. 492, was cited where the husband was held to be incompetent under the Act of 1867 to prove the fact of marriage, in an action of crim. con. On the other hand, it was argued for the plaintiff that Mr. Tilton was not called to testify "against" his wife, because she was not a party. In refutation of the authority of Dann v. Kingdom, supra, the case of Petrie v. Howe, 4 N. Y. Sup. 85, decided in the same department, was cited. In the latter case it seems that the husband was allowed to testify in an action of crim. con., without objection either from counsel or court, and the point was neither raised by counsel nor passed upon by the court at general term. The defence also contended that the exclusion of the plaintiff would give the defendant an undue advantage, and if plaintiff was excluded as a witness he could not give his testimony even on general or collateral matters. Judge Neilson decided that the plaintiff was competent to be sworn and to testify in his own behalf; but that as to the principal question at issue, he was not competent to testify in respect to any confidential communication.

THE MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACT, 1882.

The Act is a measure of the utmost practical importance, and deserves the attention of a far larger public than generally concerns itself with the details of social legislation. It affects every one in England and Ireland who has a wife or husband. It is not couched in unduly technical phraseology. Though it has been discussed more or less fully in both Houses, there would be considerable difficulty in gathering its exact significance from any other source than its own provisions. It has an interest for the student of English institutions, as well as for those who, according to the fine old anti-Malthusian theory, recently revived by Mr. Henry George, have done their duty by the State, and its operation is postponed until the 1st Jan., 1883, as if to give every one ample time for making acquaintance with its sections. The old common law of England, as expounded and glorified by Sir William Blackstone, held, if that be not an inadmissible personification, that the husband was entitled to say to the wife, "What is yours is mine, and what is mine is my own." This simple rule, founded on the primitive maxim that if two ride on a horse one must ride behind, was mitigated and complicated by equitable doctrines concerning trusts. Though what was given directly to the wife became, by operation of law, the property of the husband, yet, if trustees held money on condition of paying the interest to a married woman, they did not fulfil their trust by giving it to her husband. They were bound to hand it over to her, and her receipt, not his, was their legal discharge. On this theory was based the practice of making settlements on the eve of marriage. But while equity, that elaborately technical system sometimes ignorantly confounded with the untutored promptings of natural justice, thus created and recognised the "separate property" of married women, the law remained the same in all cases where no express settlement had been made. Not till the year 1870 did Parliament see fit to rectify this extraordinary anomaly. The Married Women's Property Act of that year, freed from an error of inadvertence by the amending statute of 1874, secured to a married woman for her absolute use the wages which she earned by her own labour and the profits of her own literary, artistic, and scientific skill. Deposits in savings banks were also made her own, together with property to which she became entitled as next of kin, and pecuniary legacies not exceeding two hundred pounds. These tentative advances towards the principles that husband and wife may have separate as well as joint interests, and that it is not in the nature of things that marriage should affect legal ownership, have been greatly extended and simplified by the Act of the present session. A pauper who can persuade an heiress to marry him without a settlement has no moral and should have no legal right to squander her money unless she chooses to let him. In the reverse case settlements will still be necessary, and it may be that the unprotected bridegroom will learn to plead for the safeguard of a secured annuity. He will have the satisfaction of knowing that under this just and comprehensive statute, which consolidates besides amending the law, his wife is bound to maintain him if he would otherwise come upon the parish. Henceforth no one will be at a loss to discover what are the mutual and respective rights and liabilities of married people. He will find them all expressed in a moderately short compass and in fairly plain language. Though there may yet be room for improvement in some particulars, the law will now be substantially in accordance with sound principle and common sense. The Lord Chancellor is sincerely to be congratulated on his success in contributing to a comparatively barren session so excellent and practical a measure.—Daily News.

We print a letter which has considerable force in it. The writer, Mr. Platt, points out some of the evils which, in his opinion, are likely to result from it, side by side with the advantages that were not considered when the measure was under discussion before it passed. These advantages are obvious enough, for the Act will, in the absence of any express stipulation to the contrary, protect all property which the wife earns, gains, or inherits after the marriage from being appropriated or squandered by an unscrupulous or extravagant husband. Thus far its objects are such as no one can find fault with; and in all cases where reckless husbands have married without making a proper settlement, its operation will be distinctly beneficial both to the married couple and to the children. Unfortunately, these benefits are counterbalanced to some extent by drawbacks which have not been publicly exposed with quite sufficient force. Foremost amongst these, in the opinion of our correspondent, is the prospect now opened of "division" in the household. The wife, now that she will have the complete control over her part of the fortune brought into partnership by marriage, may, as Mr. Platt thinks, be inclined to set up a rival power in the domestic circle, and destroy the privileges of her lord and master as the recognised head of the establishment. There is something in this plea, but it must be remembered that in the large number of cases where settlements are made in the usual form, this system has already been for centuries established, and without leading to much of the inconvenience now anticipated. Perhaps a more potent argument against the Act is that it will expose the wife to the treacherous attacks of men who will attempt to ruin her after marriage for the sake of getting some pecuniary benefit out of the property which will still be hers if she quarrels with her husband. There is, moreover, some injustice in holding the husband generally responsible for the expenses of the matrimonial partnership, even where the bulk of the property upon which it is supported belongs to the wife and cannot be touched by him.—Globe.

Is the husband still the "better half" of the married entity? Those who have carefully studied the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, passed last session, will not answer in the affirmative with any great confidence. Opinions, indeed, seem pretty equally divided as to whether husbands are to be congratulated or pitied in regard to the alteration in their married state brought about by that measure. They are certainly relieved of some of the responsibilities; but, on the other hand, they are also despoiled of a good many powers. It is a moot point whether they have any right to continue to describe themselves as the "head" of the domestic establishment. They may still have "an eye like Mars, to threaten and command," but in pecuniary matters a wife with money can securely set this optical demonstration at defiance. There is nothing to surprise us in this further addition to the sum of women's legal rights. One of the most marked social tendencies of modern life has been in the direction of improving the relative position of women. But their legal status attracted comparatively little attention until within a recent period. All the rights of a wife were supposed to be merged in those of her husband. It was taken for granted that the husband and wife were one, and the husband was that one. And this continued to be the current opinion long after the social condition of women had been ameliorated, and men no longer talked before their wives and daughters as Squire Western talked to Sophia. Speaking generally, however, the women of the present generation have not had any serious ground for complaint as to the social treatment accorded them by the other sex. They have needed legislation in such matters as their employment in factories and mines, and this they somewhat tardily obtained. While these reforms were being gradually effected a new motive power appeared in the shape of a sort of feminine revolt from the dominion of man. A movement was started, the object of which was to redress those wrongs of women which consisted of the withholding from her of her rights. They have claimed a Parliamentary vote, but have, so far, succeeded in obtaining only a vote in School Board elections, with the additional privilege of themselves being elected to the Board. Having gained so much, one would have supposed that the triumphant sex would at least have respected the time-honoured institutions of married life; but it soon appeared that this was the very direction in which women were, with some reason, most determined to push their reforms; and their efforts, as usual, have been rewarded with success. The reversionary interests of married women were first cared for by an Act passed in the year 1857. In 1870 another Act was passed, giving a married woman an exclusive right to the enjoyment of her separate earnings. In 1874 this measure was amended by further legislation, and now we have the Act of last session to complete the business.

The position of a married woman with a separate estate is now almost exactly that of a feme sole. She is capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing of, by will or otherwise, all her real and personal belongings against the consent of her husband, and without the intervention of a trustee. She can enter into contracts, and either sue or be sued upon them, and is liable in respect of them to the extent of her personal estate. She can even become bankrupt on her own account—a privilege of which her unenfranchised sisters will not be greatly envious. Should a wife lend her husband money for use in his business, and he afterwards becomes bankrupt, it would appear that her claim upon his estate ranks after that of the other creditors. The new measure also contains some very stringent provisions for prevention of frauds upon creditors by gifts from husband to wife. Such frauds have frequently been committed in the past, though they were not easily effected under the old law governing a married woman's property. Under the new Act it will certainly be less difficult than formerly to effectually and quickly transfer property to a wife, and this fact would have been largely availed of by fraudulent debtors but for the prohibitive clause to which we have referred. The provision that a married woman may effect a policy of insurance on her husband's life for her own separate benefit will possibly alarm a few husbands whose hold on their helpmates' affections is not as strong as it ought to be. In regard to remedies for the protection of her property the married woman is now well off. She can take either civil or criminal proceedings against all persons, including her husband, to secure herself against loss. There is the proper proviso, however, that she shall not bring a criminal action against her husband while she still lives with him. In any anti-connubial proceedings, either husband or wife is competent to give evidence against the other; a fact which opens out a fearful vista of matrimonial revelations under the screw of a sharp cross examination. Something is done for the poor husband in the section which provides that a wife shall continue to be liable for her ante-nuptial debts to the extent of her separate estate. But the husband will also be liable for such debts to the extent of any property which he may have acquired from or through his wife. And, finally, the sections in former Acts, which rendered a married woman having property liable to the parish for the maintenance of her husband and children, are very properly repealed. Taken altogether, the changes in the law outlined above may be regarded as generally beneficial, not only to married women, but to spinsters, bachelors, and the community as a whole.—Daily Telegraph.

THE SUCCESSION DUTY.—The stampson succession duty in the last financial year produced net, £736,344 8s. 1d.

THE COMMITTAL OF MR. GRAY.

There seems to be a general opinion among the writers for the lay press that contempt of court can only be committed with regard to proceedings actually pending, and that Mr. Justice Lawson's committal of the Sheriff of Dublin is in some sense a new departure, and an extension, salutary in the particular circumstances, but somewhat dangerous as a precedent, of the doctrine of constructive contempt. It is important that it should be clearly understood that this is not the case. It is quite true that committals and fines for contempt in England have been usually, and for many years past entirely, resorted to only for the purpose of enforcing obedience to a court's orders, or preventing any attempt to influence improperly the mind of the court, or of jurymen, or of the public, with respect to pending or expected proceedings. This limitation is not, however, inherent in the jurisdiction, but has arisen simply from the happy circumstances of our times, which have not only prevented any actual attempt to obstruct the course of justice by bringing its general administration into discredit, but have made it inconceivable that any such intention should be entertained. It is clearly laid down in Starkie on Slander (p. 621) that contempt of court may consist in "the publishing reflections on the purity of its proceedings tending to obstruct the course of justice," and that "therefore every writing, letter, or publication which has for its object to divert the course of justice is a contempt of court." A comment upon a past case may evidently have for its object, or may have a natural tendency—and that is sufficient (Dow v. Eley, L. Rep. 7 Eq. 49)—to divert the course of justice in a future one; indeed we suppose few persons have any doubt that this was the actual purpose of the publications in the Freeman's Journal in the case before us. Nor have there been wanting, even in recent times, cases within the empire in which such comments have been punished as contempt of court. In 1868 the Court of British Guiana, and in 1849 the Chancery Court of the Isle of Man, committed persons to prison for having published in newspapers libellous comments on their proceedings, not apparently made with a view of influencing the result of any case actually pending. One case was brought by way of appeal before the Privy Council (M. Dermott v. The Judges of British Guiana, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S.; L. Rep. 2 P. C. 841), and the other by writ of habeas corpus before the Queen's Bench (Crawford's case, 13 Q. B. 613). But in each case the Superior Court recognised the jurisdiction to commit, held the committal regular, and refused to hear any appeal on the merits of the case. In answer to the argument that committal was not the proper remedy, except in cases where the action of the court was actually obstructed, the Court of Queen's Bench referred with approbation to the judgment prepared by Chief Justice Eardley Wilmot in the case of R. v. Almon (which was settled without coming to a hearing), and preserved in his opinions and judgments (p. 243). He there says: "The arraignment of the justice of the judges is arraignment the king's justice; it is an impeachment of his wisdom and goodness in the choice of his judges, and excites in the minds of the people a general dissatisfaction with all judicial determinations, and indisposes their minds to obey them; and, whenever men's allegiance to the laws is so fundamentally shaken, it is the most fatal and most dangerous obstruction of justice, and, in my opinion, calls out for a more rapid and immediate redress than any other obstruction whatever." If we substitute juries for judges these words might seem to have been written with direct reference to the present state of things in Ireland; and assuredly Irish juries who now venture to do their duty are pre-eminently entitled to the benefit of the doctrine quoted from Lord Hardwicke by Lord Eldon in Ex parte Jones (18 Ves. 238), that "persons concerned in the business of the court are under the protection of the court, and not to be driven to other remedies against libels upon them in that respect." It cannot be denied that this doctrine puts into the hands of the judges a power which might under some circumstances, be seriously abused; but should such cases ever arise, the constitution provides sufficient means of dealing with judges who abuse this or any other of the powers entrusted to them.

It is to be hoped that the Government will not be weak enough to be influenced by the suggestion that they ought to pardon Mr. Gray for fear a committee of the House of Commons should hereafter report that his arrest was a breach of privilege. In Mr. Long Wellesley's case, in 1831, the committee appointed by the House reported "that the present case" (i. e., a committal for contempt in disobeying an order of the Court of Chancery) "falls within the principle under which persons committing indictable offences have been considered not entitled to privilege" (2 R. & M. 644), and Lord Brougham, after argument, decided that that report was in accordance with the law. In the case of Mr. Lechmere Carlton, who was committed for attempting to influence the conduct of a master by an improper letter, the committee of the House refused to pronounce an opinion upon the general law, but reported "that, under all the circumstances of the case, Mr. Carlton's claim to be discharged from imprisonment by reason of privilege of Parliament ought not to be entertained" (2 M. & C. 351); and in the case arising out of the Tichborne trial, where Lord Chief Justice Cockburn fined, instead of committing Messrs. Onslow and Whalley, he was careful to guard against any supposition that he refrained from the severer course from any fear that the House of Commons would interfere on the score of privilege (28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 222; L. Rep. 9 Q. B. 229). From these precedents we may gather that it is exceedingly unlikely that any committee would advise the House to interfere to protect Mr. Gray.—Law Times.

MISCONDUCT OF JURIES.<sup>1</sup>

I. General Considerations.—Whether misconduct of the jury will entitle the losing party to a new trial, cannot be answered without taking into consideration several distinctions. 1. Reference must first be had to the nature of the cause on trial; and there are three classes of cases, in each of which, in some jurisdictions, a different rule obtains: First, civil cases, prosecutions for misdemeanour, and actions qui tam, and other proceedings which are deemed to partake of the nature of both civil and criminal actions; second, prosecutions for felonies not capital; third, prosecutions for treason and for capital felonies. 2. Another consideration relates to the nature of the particular act of misconduct complained of, and its tendency to prejudice or corrupt the verdict. 3. And, finally, distinctions are taken in some courts as to the time when the act of misconduct was committed: whether it was before the particular juror had been selected and sworn in the case, or during the progress of the trial, but before the jury had retired to deliberate, or after they had received the charge of the judge and had retired to consider of their verdict.

II. Rules Common to all Cases.—(1.) Misconduct not always Ground for new Trial.—Considering first those rules which are common to all actions, we find it laid down in many books that it is not every act of disobedience to the injunctions of the court, or other misconduct on the part of the members of the jury, which will entitle an unsuccessful party to a new trial. On the contrary, jurors may be guilty of many acts of impropriety which will subject them to punishment, but which will not operate to set aside their verdict when no injury appears to have resulted to the losing party.<sup>2</sup>

(2.) Eating and Drinking.—Thus, although the old law prohibited jurors from eating or drinking until they had agreed upon their verdict, yet it was always held that the mere fact that the jurors ate and drank during their deliberations would afford no ground for a new trial, unless such eating and drinking were at the expense of the successful party, though it would subject the jurors to punishment.<sup>3</sup>

(3.) Separating.—So, although by the old law jurors were kept together as prisoners of the court<sup>4</sup> until they had agreed upon their verdict, yet in later times, when justice came to be administered in a less summary manner, so that it was found necessary in some cases to protract the trial for several days, the old rule yielded to necessity, and the jurors were permitted to retire from the bar of the court for needed rest and refreshment, under such rules as the court saw fit to make to prevent them from being tampered with.<sup>5</sup> They were not allowed, in cases of treason or felony, to separate, pending the recesses of the court for these purposes, to go to their homes, or to mingle with the general public; but, according to a precedent set by Lord Kenyon, they were placed in charge of officers who were sworn "well and truly to keep the jury, and neither to speak to them themselves, nor to suffer any other person to speak to them, touching any matter relating to this trial."<sup>6</sup> This rule of practice was transplanted into this country, and the form of the oath thus prescribed has in some States been enacted by statute.<sup>7</sup>

But in the earlier periods of our history, and in some sections of the country at the present time, public accommodations have been so inadequate at the places of holding courts that it has been found extremely difficult, and sometimes wholly impossible, to keep jurors together and entirely isolated from the public, pending these adjournments or during their deliberations. Hence another rule has sprung up, which, in some of the States, is common to all cases, in others not admitted in capital cases, and in others not admitted in any cases of felony; and it is this, that the mere fact that jurors have separated from each other, or from the officer having them in charge during adjournments of the court, or pending their deliberations, is not ground for a new trial. Something more must be shown, sufficient to cast a reasonable suspicion upon the purity of their verdict.<sup>8</sup> This rule is subject to qualifications which will be explained hereafter, chief among which is this: that an unexplained separation, in cases where the jury are required by law or by practice to be kept together, creates a presumption against the integrity of the verdict, such as calls for the granting of a new trial.<sup>9</sup>

(4.) Holding Communication with Persons not of the Jury.—Upon the same footing rests the misconduct of holding communications with persons not of the jury. The mere fact that such communications have been held will not vitiate the verdict, unless they were of such a nature as manifestly to corrupt or prejudice the mind

(3) Purinton v. Humphreys, 6 Me., 379; The Commonwealth v. Roby, 12 Pick., 498, 516; Thompson v. The Commonwealth, 8 Gratt., 687, 687; Wilson v. Abraham, 1 Hill (N. Y.), 207; The State v. Sparrow, 3 Murph., 487.

(4) "When a jury are charged, they are, as it were, prisoners until they are discharged." Banister, J., in Bishop of N. v. Earl of Kent, Trin. T., 14 Hen. VII., c. 29.

(5) See, for instance, Hardy's Case, 24 How. St. Tr., 414, where this was done after much discussion.

(6) The King v. Stone, 6 Term Rep., 577.

(7) See, for instance, the oath prescribed by the statute of Missouri in trials for felony: 1 Rev. Stats. Mo., 1879, sect. 1910.

(8) The King v. Kinnear, 2 Barn. & Ald., 462; The King v. Woolf, 1 Chit. Rep., 401; Burns v. Paine, 8 Texas, 159; Brandin v. Grannis, 1 Conn., 402; The State v. O'Brien, 7 R. L., 388; Berry v. The State, 10 Ga., 511, 524; Nelson v. The State, 32 Texas, 71; The State v. Lytle, 5 Ired. L., 68, 62; Wakelield v. The State, 41 Texas, 556; Jack v. The State, 26 Texas, 1; The State v. Turner, 26 La. An., 573; The State v. Madoll, 12 Fla., 151; The State v. Fox, Ga. Dec., pt. 1, p. 85; Heiser v. Van Dyke, 27 Iowa, 359; Cook v. Walters, 4 Iowa, 72; Miller v. Mahon, 6 Iowa, 456; Smith v. Thompson, 1 Cow., 221; Stuteman v. Barringer, 16 Ind., 263; Porter v. The State, 2 Ind., 435; Edrington v. Kiger, 4 Texas, 89; The State v. Igo, 21 Mo., 459; Whitney v. The State, 8 Mo., 185; The State v. Harlow, 21 Mo., 448; The State v. Mcs., 15 Mo., 153. But see Rev. Stats. Mo., 1879, sect. 1966. The rule has been laid down in the following capital cases: Adams v. The People, 47 Ill., 376; Kins v. The People, 30 Ill., 258, 273; The People v. Douglass, 4 Cow., 26, 33; The State v. Babcock, 1 Conn., 401; Coker v. The State, 20 Ark., 53; Blancki v. The State, 3 Minn., 427, 431; The State v. Miller, 1 Dev. & B. 500, 509; Crane v. Syre, 6 N. J. L., 110; The People v. Bonney, 19 Cal., 428; The State v. Brannon, 46 Mo., 339; The State v. Barton, 19 Mo., 227; Caw v. The People, 3 Neb., 357.

(9) See cases infra, III. (7.)

(1) A Treatise on the Organization, Custody, and Conduct of Juries, by Seymour D. Thompson and Edwin G. Merriam. St. Louis: W. H. Stevenson.

(2) Purinton v. Humphreys, 6 Me., 379; Newell v. Ayer, 32 Me., 334; Mason v. Russell, 1 Texas, 721.

of the particular juror, or otherwise to interfere with the deliberations of the jury.<sup>10</sup> But, as an unexplained separation of jurors from their fellows leads to an inference of tampering, so the fact that jurors have held communications with the successful party to the suit, with his friends, counsel, or agents, the nature of which is not disclosed, will lead to such an inference of tampering as will require the verdict to be set aside;<sup>11</sup> for if the communication were innocent, it would be susceptible of explanation. I shall consider this subject again.<sup>12</sup>

(5.) Tampering with the Jury.—But where the successful party to the suit is shown to have attempted, by improper means, to influence the verdict in his favour, whether by corrupting or intimidating particular jurors, or by arousing prejudices in their minds against the opposite party or his cause, the verdict will be set aside, on grounds of public policy, as a punishment to the offender and as an example to others, without reference to the merits of the controversy, and without considering whether the attempt was successful or not.<sup>13</sup>

(To be continued.)

LAND LAW (IRELAND) ACT, 1881.

TO LANDLORDS AND TENANTS.

The Land Commission are desirous to afford further facilities to landlords and tenants, who may so desire, to have rents fixed free of expense and as rapidly as possible. With that view they have framed rules and a form under which parties may apply to the Commission to fix the rent in accordance with the report of two valuers. Under the rules now framed it is open to either party to object and show cause if so advised before the order made on the valuers' report becomes absolute.

In case cause against making the order absolute is allowed, the case may, according to circumstances, either be remitted to the same valuers or sent to be reported on by other valuers, or else may be sent to be heard in the usual course before the Sub-Commissioners.

The rules are as follows:—

167. The landlord and tenant of a holding instead of proceeding pursuant to Rules 143 to 147 inclusive, may serve upon the Court an originating notice in Form No. 73, applying to have a fair rent fixed, and consenting that such fair rent shall be determined pursuant to the report of valuers appointed by the Land Commission. The Land Commission may thereupon, appoint valuers and make an order fixing the fair rent pursuant to the report, unless cause be shown as in next rule. The originating notice, served as above, must be accompanied by the sheet of the Ordnance Map showing the holding.

168. The substance of the conditional order shall be notified by the Land Commission to both parties. Cause against the conditional order being made absolute, shall be shown by notice of motion, which shall be served on the opposite party and on the Land Commission, not later than ten days after the notification by the Commission of the substance of the conditional order. Such notice, showing cause, may be supported by affidavits, and it shall specify—1st, The grounds on which the conditional order should not be made absolute; and 2nd, The order which the party showing cause asks the court to make. The Court on hearing such motion, may, if it be of opinion that the conditional order should not be made absolute, remit the case to the same valuers or send it to be reported on by other valuers, or may send the case down to be heard before the Sub-Commission in the usual course, or may make such other as, under the circumstances, it may deem right.

159. In cases where an originating notice by a landlord or tenant to fix a fair rent has already been served, it shall be competent for the landlord and tenant, by consent, in Form 74, to agree that instead of the case being heard in the ordinary way the fair rent may be determined by valuers in the same manner, and with the same right of showing cause, as in the preceding rules.

ARREARS OF RENT (IRELAND) ACT, 1882.

The following GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS for the Guidance of Investigators have been issued by the Land Commission:—

The duties which you have to discharge are indicated in the Act of Parliament (see especially ss. 1 and 5), and in the form of report (H) in the appendix to the rules.

Before you proceed to the district assigned to you, it shall be your duty to communicate with the Petty Sessions Clerk or Sub-Inspector of Constabulary for the purpose of providing a fitting place to hold your inquiry.

By a 40 of the Land Act of 1881, incorporated with the Arrears Act, you are entitled to the use of the Quarter Sessions or Petty Sessions Courts.

If no court-house be available, you can, pursuant to rule 25, hold your sittings in any convenient place, and you may, if necessary, pay for the hire of a room, but this expense is, if possible, to be avoided. Fires and lights in court may also be paid for. The ordinary hour of sitting should be 10 a.m.

Cases will as a rule be listed according to electoral divisions, and it will be desirable, for the convenience of parties, to hold a sitting in each electoral division if possible, even though there may not be a court-house in the division.

You will keep a memorandum in a book, provided for the purpose, of all notices and official letters sent by you through the post or otherwise.

You have power to summon witnesses and enforce the production of rent books, receipts, and all other documents which form evidence on the question you have to try, and the production of which is enforceable by law. You can, if necessary, adjourn an investigation from day to day, or for such time as you may deem requisite. You may in some cases have to consider whether an adjournment should not be had in order to enable the Treasury to intervene.

Forms of summonses will be supplied to you.

If you find that the application is practically unopposed, it will necessarily be your duty carefully to sift the evidence so as to take care that no injustice be done to the public. You have not any direct power to adjudicate as to costs, but if any grounds, in your opinion, exist why one party should pay costs to another, you should state so in your report.

Your reports should be transmitted without delay, by post, to the Comptroller of Arrears, Land Commission, Merrion-square, Dublin. No postage is payable on letters or documents sent to the Land Commission.

We would direct your attention to the following points:—

You are to ascertain whether the holding is one to which the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, applies; you will see by s. 59 of that Act, the several classes of tenancies which are excluded from its operation; you will also have regard to s. 8 of the Arrears Act, bringing holdings subject to existing leases under its operation.

S. 1, sub-a 2, of the Arrears Act enacts that "the saleable value of the tenant's interest shall, so far as the Commissioners think it reasonable, be taken into account in ascertaining whether the tenant is unable to discharge such antecedent arrears." You will inquire and report whether, under all the circumstances of the case, you consider it reasonable to take the saleable

(10) Barlow v. The State, 2 Blackf., 114; The State v. Cucul, 31 N. J. L., 249, 252; March v. The State, 44 Texas, 64, 82.

(11) The Commonwealth v. Roby, 12 Pick., 496, 520; Hamilton v. Pease, 38 Conn., 115; Martin v. Morelock, 39 Ill., 485. See Pope v. The State, 36 Minn., 121; Ned v. The State, 33 Minn., 304; Organ v. The State, 26 Minn., 83; Hare v. The State, 4 How. (Minn.), 187; M'Conn v. The State, 9 Smed. & M., 465, 469.

(12) Infra, VI.

(13) Cottle v. Cottle, 6 Me., 140; Walker v. Walker, 11 Ga., 206; Vaughn v. Dotson, 2 Swan, 348; Seaton v. Letteorre, 4 Coldw., 11; Infra, VI. (3.)

value of the tenant's interest into account to any and what extent. This should be done so as not to conflict with previous enactment, under which the tenant's inability to pay the antecedent arrears is an inability to make such payment without loss of his holding or deprivation of the means necessary for the cultivation thereof.

In considering whether the tenant has satisfied the rent for the year of the tenancy expiring on the last gale day of 1881, you will have particular regard to the provisions of s. 1, sub-s. 3.

Under that sub-section payments made in the year of the tenancy expiring on the last gale day of 1881, or subsequently, down to the 30th of November, 1882, are deemed payments on foot of the year of the tenancy ending on the last gale day of 1881, so that if there were a May and November tenancy, a payment made between the 1st of May and 1st November, 1881, would be a credit as against the May rent of 1881, but not as against the November rent which had not then accrued due.

Further attention is requested to the provision regarding what is commonly termed "the hanging gale." By the sub-section referred to, wherever, according to the ordinary course of dealing, the May rent is paid in the following November, and the November rent in the following May, the usual time of payment is deemed to be the time when the rent accrued due, so that the March or May rent of 1881 would not, in case of the hanging gale, be deemed to have accrued due until the September or November of that year, and the September or November rent not until the following March or May, 1882.

Accordingly, payments made by the tenant which, in the absence of the custom of the hanging gale, would be credited as against the rent of 1881, may not be so where that custom exists.

THE BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT, 1882.

The Act which is now in operation is our first effort in the way of a code, and as such it is a most important and interesting experiment, that may lead to great things in the future. The subject was certainly a good one to begin upon; and the work, as far as can yet be judged, seems to be thoroughly well done. To have seventeen statutes either wholly or in part repealed is a step in the right direction; while that one Act should apply equally to the three kingdoms is an undoubted gain. Nearly all the statute is old law, but there are one or two new points that are worth noting, while in many cases doubtful questions have been set at rest. Then we see that post-dated bills and cheques are to be held valid, that notarial expenses will be recoverable against an acceptor, and that Christmas day and Good Friday in Scotland are placed in the same position as are those days in England with regard to bills falling due thereon. In one section we find that the custom of Liverpool notaries as to bills drawn upon cotton spinners in Lancashire under which they protest a bill returned by post dishonoured at their own offices instead of at the place of dishonour is made legal. In another it is laid down that where a bill is drawn in one country payable in another the due date is determined by the law of the latter country. This is, of course, not new, but it is well to have it thus clearly stated. No days of grace are allowed by the law of France, so that while bills drawn in Paris upon London get the three days' grace, this is not so vice versa. It was assuredly a good idea to make the Act include the Scotch law, and we are glad to see that this assimilation was found to be practicable except in one particular. In Scotland, where the drawee has funds in his hands available for payment the bill operates as an assignment of the sum for which it is drawn in favour of the holder from the time when it is presented to the drawee. The sound sense of this rule will be evident to every man of business, and its adoption in England was strongly recommended by the commission of 1855, but it has not yet been accepted amongst ourselves, and so it remains a solitary exception in the new code. With regard to the procedure upon bills of exchange no alteration has been made, so that we must continue content with our slow process by ordinary action, while the Scotch still enjoy their rapid proceeding of summary diligence, in favour of which there is much to be said. We cannot, however, get everything at once, and for the present we may rest satisfied with having obtained a clear and complete code of the law relating to bills of exchange.—Manchester Guardian.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4.

An agreement for sporting held to require a writing (Webber v. Lee, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 174).

Parliamentary Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vic., c. 26), s. 23.

Rogers on Elections (13th Edition), 156.

The revising barrister may amend an objection by inserting the abode of the objector (Adams v. Bostock, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 175).

Representation of People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vic., c. 102), s. 4.

Rogers on Elections (13th Edition), 129.

The declaration signed by a lodger claimant is prima facie evidence of the facts, whether on a first or subsequent claim, and the claimant need not appear to support them (Nuth v. Tamplin, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 177)—C.A.

Parliamentary Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vic., c. 29), s. 5.

Rogers on Elections (13th Edition), 75.

A claimant of a vote who is a lodger cannot claim as tenant of part of a house (Bradley v. Baylis, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 183)—C.A.

Dixon on Probate, 391.

The will of an English lady, the wife of an alien, executed according to English forms, cannot be proved (In the Goods of Baroness von Buseck, 51 Law J. Rep. P. D. & A. 9).

Merchant Shipping Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vic., c. 85), s. 17.

A ship driven from her moorings in a gale held excused from the liabilities of a want of side lights; but the suit dismissed without costs (The Buckhurst, 51 Law J. Rep. P. D. & A. 10).

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Institutes of Gaius and Justinian, the Twelve Tables, and the CXXVIIIth and CXXVIIth Novels. With Introduction and Translation. By T. LAMBERT MEARS, M.A., LL.D. (Lond.), of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, &c. London: Stevens and Sons, 119 Chancery-lane. 1882.

A Manual of the Law relating to Bills of Sale in Ireland, and their Registration under the Bills of Sale (Ireland) Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vic., c. 50), with a Collection of Forms and Precedents. By WILLIAM GREEN, B.A., Barrister-at-Law, &c. Dublin: E. Ponsonby, 116 Grafton-street. 1882.

Principles of the English Law of Contract and of Agency in its Relation to Contract. By Sir WILLIAM R. ANSON, Bart., D.C.L., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, &c. Second Edition. Oxford: At the Clarendon Press. 1882.

The Elements of Jurisprudence. By THOMAS ERSKINE HOLLAND, D.C.L., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, &c. Second Edition (Enlarged). Oxford: At the Clarendon Press. 1882.

REVIEWS.

The Irish Land Question: what it Involves, and how alone it can be settled. An Appeal to the Land Leagues. By HENRY GEORGE, author of "Progress and Poverty." London: Wm. Reeves, 185 Fleet-street. Manchester: John Heywood & Sons. Glasgow: Cameron & Ferguson, West Nile-street.

The Arrears of Rent (Ireland) Act, 1882, together with the Rules, Forms, Notes, and a General Index, and the additional Rules and Forms under the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881. By W. H. KISBEY, Esq., M.A., T.C.D., Barrister-at-Law, author of "The Law and Practice of the Irish Bankrupt Court," &c. Dublin: Hodges, Figgis, & Co., Grafton-street, Publishers to the University.

A. B. C. Guide to the Arrears Act, 1882. With the Act, Rules, and Principal Forms annexed. For the use of Irish Landlords and Tenants. By GEORGE FOTTRILL, Jun., Solicitor. Second Edition, Corrected and Enlarged. Dublin: M. H. Gill & Son, 50 Upper Sackville-street. 1882.

"MR. JUSTICE FITZGERALD speaks truth." This polite admission forms the subject of Mr. George's opening remarks, in the singular little tractate now before us. "In charging the Dublin jury in the Land League cases, Mr. Justice Fitzgerald told them that the land laws of Ireland were more favourable to the tenant than those of Great Britain, Belgium, or the United States. As a matter of fact, Justice Fitzgerald is right." Mr. George, thus writing in March, 1881, himself hails from America; and as to it he observes, "Let me ask the men who to applauding audiences are nightly comparing the freedom of America with the oppression of Ireland—let me ask the Representatives who voted for that resolution of sympathy with Ireland, this simple question: What would the Irish landlords lose, what would the Irish tenants gain, if, to-morrow, Ireland were made a State in the American Union and American law substituted for English law? I think it will puzzle them to reply. The truth is that the gain would be to the landlords, the loss to the tenants." And this, too, was said long before the passing of the Arrears of Rent (Ir.) Act, 1882—nay, before the Land Act of 1881 had come into operation; and while applauding audiences had all the reason they ever had for endorsing the land-law views of the orators of the Land Agitation, and sympathising in their anathemas against the landlords. The only wonder seemed to be that none of the rhetoricians of the day thought of pointing his peroration with Byron's lines:—

"For what were all those landed patriots born?
To hunt, and vote, and raise the price of corn.
Safe in their barns, these Sabine tillers sent Their brethren out to battle. Why? for rent.
Year after year they voted cent. per cent.;
Blood, sweat, and tear-wrung millions. Why? for rent.
They roared, they dined, they drank, they swore they meant
To die for England. Why, then, live for rent?
And will they not repay the treasures lent?
No! down with everything, and up with rent.
Their good, ill, health, wealth, joy, or discontent,
Being, end, aim, religion—rent, rent, rent!"

Well, we have had our land-quake, and not yet have we had Mr. George's scheme realised for the nationalization of the land—"not that it be bought from a small class and sold to a larger class, but that it be resumed by the whole people." "How shall this be done? Nothing is easier," in Mr. George's opinion: "The way to make land common property is simply to take rent for the common benefit. And to do this, the easy way is to abolish one tax after another, until the whole weight of taxation falls upon the value of land. When that point is reached," he anticipates, "the battle is won."

Meantime, a slow-moving legislature has just passed two measures, as coming within the present range of practical politics—measures with which the lawyer must needs be satisfied for his purposes, although they fall far short of the "simple measures" advocated by Mr. George and those who with him, according to his own apt quotation from Emerson, "have hitched their waggon to a star." One of those enactments is the Arrears of Rent (Ir.) Act, 1882; and the other amends the Land Act of last year, as regards the provisions relating to labourers' cottages and allotments. The Land Act gave power to the Commission to impose conditions as to providing accommodation for labourers, where an application is made to the Court for the determination of a judicial rent. The new amending statute makes a similar provision for cases where the landlord and the tenant agree on a "fair rent." For the Commission is empowered (at any time within six months from the passing of the statute—August 18—or within twelve months of the filing of the declaration and agreement as to the fair rent, whichever may happen last) to order the tenant to improve any cottages for the accommodation of the labourers employed on the holding, or to build new cottages for them, or to assign to any cottage an allotment not exceeding half an acre. The order may also fix the terms as to rent and otherwise, on which the accommodation is to be provided. An application for this purpose may be made either by the landlord or by the tenant, or by any labourer bond fide employed and required for the cultivation of the holding. In case of non-compliance with the Court's discretion a penalty of £1 per week can be recovered summarily on the complaint of a labourer in whose favour it has been made. These fines will be paid to the guardians in aid of the poor rate. The Commission has, however, authority to remit the penalty.

Now, singularly enough, Mr. Kisbey's excellent little manual, which, he says, may be regarded as a supplement to his edition of the Act of 1881, makes no allusion or reference whatever to the second of the Acts just mentioned. It comprises only the Arrears of Rent Act, some additional Rules which were not in his former book, and the Rules under the new Act made on August 22nd. In addition to these, other Rules were made on the 28th of August, besides the Instructions to Investigators; but these will be found in our own columns. Mr. Kisbey's able pen, however, has done good service in annotating fifteen out of forty-four sections of the Arrears of Rent Act; at the same time that, in the absence of decisions, his opinions must stand altogether on their own merits. Meritorious, indeed, his edition of the Act appears to us to be; and we only wish that he had further enhanced its utility by presenting a comprehensive summary of the scope and effect of the Act, in order to facilitate the task of those who will have to appeal out for themselves the general bearing and inter-connection of the various sections. In this, however, they will be aided by taking advantage of Mr. Kisbey's useful Index to the preceding 85 pages; and if they happen to hit upon one of the sections that are annotated, they will probably find the others in point more or less fully indicated and observed upon. We might, indeed, even from the columns of the daily press, quote several questions of doubt and difficulty on which he has offered no observations; but, so far as he has ventured, he has well performed his task, and his little manual not only deserved the advantages it derives from the admirable manner in which it has been printed and published, but is abundantly entitled to the esteem of the legal profession.

On the other hand, Mr. Fottrill's Guide may be especially recommended to the notice of landlords and tenants, as supplying the very need we have indicated—that of a plain explanatory summary of the scope and effect of the Act, showing what the statute enables them to do towards extinguishing arrears of rent, and how they can most easily and effectually do it. This little book, indeed, is so lucidly and practically written that we should have wished to favour our readers with some quotations from it, and only regret that we are precluded from doing so by not having received it earlier; but, it is faultless in its way and within its scope, and we can confidently recommend it to notice.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

The following gentlemen have been appointed Assistant Land Commissioners:—Mr. Wm. Roper, Barrister-at-Law; Messrs. Thomas Smith, Seamore, Greystones; A. B. Nolan, Swinford, county Mayo; and R. B. Heuston, Ballykedrea, county Tipperary.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

MICHAELMAS SITTINGS, 1882.

NOTICE.

The PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION of Candidates for Apprenticeship will be held at the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin, on Thursday and Friday, the 19th and 20th days of October, 1882, at Eleven o'clock.

N.B.—All Papers to be lodged on or before Tuesday, 3rd of October, 1882.

The FINAL EXAMINATION of Candidates seeking admission as Solicitors will be held at the same place, on Monday and Tuesday, the 23rd and 24th days of October, 1882, at the same hour.

By Order of the Council,
JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitor's Hall, Four Courts, Dublin.

The Competitive Examination for the Society's Prize will be held on Friday, Monday, and Tuesday, the 20th, 23rd, and 24th days of October, 1882, at Eleven o'clock each day.

N.B.—The decision of the Court of Examiners will be announced on Wednesday, the 8th of November, 1882, at Three o'clock, p.m.

Candidates residing in the Country need not remain in town to hear decision, but can learn same from the Dublin Morning Papers of the day following the announcement.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

HILARY SITTINGS, 1883.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

NOTICE.

Candidates wishing to present themselves at the above Examination must lodge their papers, &c., on or before the first day of Michaelmas Sittings, 1882.

By Order,
JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin,
September, 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Gorman, Patrick, of No. 28 North William-street, in the city of Dublin, Ex-Inspector of the Dublin Metropolitan Police. August 22; Tuesday, October 3, and Friday, October 20. W. G. Bradley & Sons, solrs.
Smith, Edward, of Feeagh, Moynalty, in the county of Meath, farmer. August 22; Friday, September 29, and Tuesday, October 17. John Mathews, solr.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	SEPTEMBER
	Sat. 9	Mon. 11	Tues. 12	Wed. 13	Thur. 14	Fr. 15
Paid Government.
3 p c Consols ..	—	—	99	99	99	99½
New 3 p c Stock ..	—	98½	98½	98½	98½	98½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1882 } Traffic at	—	—	103	102½	—	103
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	318½	318½	318½	—	318½
Hibernian Banking Co. ..	—	—	—	34½	—	—
35 London and County (Ld'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock ..	—	—	46	—	—	—
30 London and Westminster, Ld'd. ..	—	70½	—	—	—	70½
Do. New ..	—	—	61½	—	—	—
10 Munster Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	7	—	—	—
Nat. Prov. of England, Lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	24	24	24	24
National of Liverpool (Ld'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	27	27	—	26	—
Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	—	28½	28½	—
2½ Ulster Banking Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	11½
25 Union of Australia ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15½ Union of London ..	—	—	—	46½	—	46½
Steam.
50 British and Irish ..	—	37	—	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	—	—	—	104	104½	—
50 Dublin & Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance & Dub. Cons. Gas ..	—	16½	—	16½	—	—
8 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott & Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	5½	—	5½
7½ Dub. Drapery Warehouse, Ltd. ..	—	—	6½	xd	6	—
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	—	10½	10½	—
10 L'pl Un'ld Tram & Bus L'd ..	—	—	12½	—	—	—
10 N'th Metr. Tramway, Lond. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	46	—	—	—
50 Belfast and Northern Cos. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Cork and Bandon ..	—	—	—	—	84½	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	119	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	116	115½	—	115½	115½
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	xd	—	86½	—
100 Waterford & Cent. Ireland ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast & N'th'n Cos. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 D., W., & W., 6 per cent ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. N'th'n (Irlnd) gt'd 4 p c ..	—	—	—	107½	—	—
100 Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Mid. Great Western. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast & N'th'n Cos. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin & Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	—	105½	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. 6 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	127
— Gt. South'n & West'n. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	110	—
— Midland Gt. West'n. 4 p c ..	—	—	105½	—	—	105½
— Do. 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	109½	—
— Do. 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— L'derry & Enniskillen 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Waterford & Central 6 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
Ballast Office Deb., £92 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
City Deb. of £92 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	92½
Dub. & Glas. S. F. Co. (1887) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Do. (1888), 6 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Dub. & Kingstown 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	102½
Dublin Water Works, 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—4 per cent.. 17th August, 1882
Of Deposit—1 per cent.. 23rd March, 1882

Name Days—September 26th, and October 11th, 1882.

Account Days—September 27th, and October 12th, 1882.

Business commences at 1.30 p.m.

The Stock Exchange and Brokers' Offices will be closed on Saturdays during the month of September.

Holloway's Pills.—Epidemic Diseases.—The alarming increase of death from cholera and diarrhoea should be a warning to every one to subdue at once any irregularity tending towards disease. Holloway's Pills should now be in every household to rectify all impure states of the blood, to remedy weakness, and to overcome impaired general health. Nothing can be simpler than the instructions for taking this corrective medicine, nothing more efficient than its cleansing power, nothing more harmless than its vegetable ingredients. Holloway's is the best physic during the summer season, when decaying fruits and unwholesome vegetables are frequently deranging the bowels, and daily exposing thousands, through their negligence in permitting disordered action, to the dangers of diarrhoea, dysentery, and cholera.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

BLOOD—July 16, at Christ Church, Canter'ury, New Zealand, the wife of Alex. F. Blood, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

HILL and LONERGAN—September 13, at St. Stephen's Church, Upper Mount-street, Dublin, by the Rev. J. C. Walsh, D.D., George Thomas Hill, son of the late Lieutenant Thomas Hill, R.N., to Charlotte, daughter of the late Robert Howard, Esq., solicitor, Dublin.

O'CALLAGHAN and CHAMNEY—September 7, at Newcastle Church, County Wicklow, by the Rev. Charles Abbott, assisted by the Rev. Louis Rowland, Delamere William O'Callaghan, son of the late John O'Callaghan, of the City of Cork, Esq., solicitor, to Annie, youngest daughter of the late John Chamney, of Coolboy House, County Wicklow.

DEATHS.

STAVELEY—September 11, at Somerset House, Nelson-street, the infant son of Jones H. Staveley, Esq., B.A., barrister-at-law, aged nine days.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, W A L L E R, 50.
DENZILLE-STREET.

37

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO., LIMITED. SECURITY, &c.

RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—
39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 51

PUBLIC NOTICES:

EVERY MAN WHO SMOKES

Should invest 24 stamps for the NEW PERFECTED

The Best Selected Briars only.

JENINGS & CO., Inventors, 97, NEWGATE-STREET. The most Perfect Pipe invented since Smoking began. Prospectus Free. 61

D. W. CARROLL, 44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,

Wishes to call attention to his large STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES. Direct in every instance from the Makers. They are sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of LEATHER GOODS, Comprising Bags, Purses, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases, With every article connected with Stationery, Are sold much under usual charges. Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer. Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge. 72

STOKES BROTHERS,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS. LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS, 22, WESTMORELAND-STREET, DUBLIN. 293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO., 73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank), are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy, Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

N. PETERSON & SON,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS. LIVERPOOL AND LONDON CHAMBERS, 1, FOSTER-PLACE, COLLEGE-GREEN, DUBLIN. 813

PUBLIC NOTICES:

BILLIARD BALLS, CHALKS, CUES, and TIPS, and all other Billiard Table requisites, at HENNING BROS.' Ivory Works, 11, High-street, London, W.C. Also the cheapest house in the trade for Ivory Hair-brushes, Mirrors, and all other Ivory Toilet articles and Ivory Goods in general. Old Balls adjusted or exchanged, and Tables re-covered. Price Lists, Cloth, and Cushion Rubber Samples Post Free.—Established 1862. 26

A REARERS OF RENT (IRELAND) ACT, 1882.

FORMS PRESCRIBED BY THE RULES.

- A.—Notice of Intention by Landlord or Tenant to apply for Arrears .. .. . 1d.
  - B.—Joint Application by the Landlord and Tenant .. .. 1d.
  - C.—Joint Application by Landlord and Tenants .. .. 4d.
  - D.—Notice by Treasury requiring Investigation of the Case .. 1d.
  - E.—Application by Tenant for an Order for Payment of Arrears to or for benefit of his Landlord .. .. . 1d.
  - F.—Application by Landlord for an Order for payment of Arrears due by Tenant to or for benefit of such Landlord .. 1d.
  - G.—Statement of Property and Effects of the above-named Tenant applicable to the satisfaction of the Arrears of Rent .. .. . 1d.
  - H.—Report of Investigator .. .. . 1d.
  - I.—Notice showing Cause against Conditional Order .. .. 1d.
  - J.—Notice to Landlord of Absolute Order for payment to him or for his benefit of sum in respect of Arrears .. .. 1d.
  - K.—Notice to Tenant that Arrears of Rent of Holding are Released and Extinguished .. .. . 1d.
  - L.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where the Landlord is absolutely entitled .. .. . 1d.
  - M.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where several Holdings are comprised in claim, and where the Landlord is absolutely entitled .. .. . 1d.
  - N.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where Landlord himself is not in receipt of Rent of Holding .. .. . 1d.
  - O.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where Landlord himself is not in receipt of the Rent, and where several Holdings are comprised in the claim .. .. . 1d.
  - P.—Notice by Incumbrancer, Trustee, or Receiver, claiming to be entitled to Arrears of Rent .. .. . 1d.
  - Q.—Notice of Appeal from Order of Legal Assistant Commissioner .. .. . 1d.
  - R.—Application by Landlord for cancelling of Rent-charge under 59th Section of Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881 .. .. 1d.
  - S.—Application by Tenant for cancelling Rent-charge, created under 59th Section of Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881 .. 1d.
  - T.—Joint Application by Landlord and Tenant for Advance by way of Loan under Section 16 .. .. . 4d.
- (Complete Set of Forms, post free, 2s. 3d.)

ROBERT WHYTE,

Ladies' & Gentlemen's Boot & Shoe Manufacturer,

1, NORTH FREDERICK-STREET (Rutland-square),

ESTABLISHED OVER HALF A CENTURY.

Boots made for Weak Ankles, Deformed Feet, and Surgical purposes of every description.

All Work executed on the Premises under my personal superintendence.

None but first-class Workmen employed in either Making or Repairing

CASES for holding THE IRISH LAW TIMES, AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, for One Year, can be had, Lettered on side, Price—half-bound Leather, 4s.; whole-bound Leather, 5s., by Post 4d. extra, at the Office of the Journal, 53 UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET DUBLIN.

PATENT OFFICE, DUBLIN.

J. K. FAHIE & SON, Consulting Engineers and Patent Agents, 2, Nassau-street, Dublin, and 323, High Holborn, London, transact every description of business relating to Patents for Inventions, Registration of Designs, Copyrights, and Trade Marks. Authors of "Hand-book on British and Foreign Patent Law." A paper on the Law of Copyright &c., to be had on application, price 5s. 3d.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEEDED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

65

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PERCY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

HENDRICK AND CO.,
PRINTERS, STATIONERS, SCRIVENERS,
and ARTISTS' WAREHOUSE,
28 CLARE-STREET,
DUBLIN. 106

LIVERPOOL.
PRIVATE ENQUIRIES AND INVESTIGATIONS
CONDUCTED BY
MR. THOMAS DEANE,
17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange),
Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.
Efficient Staff.
MODERATE CHARGES.
Reference.

ESTABLISHED 1878.

167

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,
the oldest and largest Company, insuring Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London.
WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 113 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewarts & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S. F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c. for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111 GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's).
Late of WATERHOUSE & Co.'s

93

LEGAL POSTINGS:

In the HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE in IRELAND,
CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

In the Matter of the Estate of

JAMES FENTON, and ROBERT FENTON, and THOMAS WALTON GILLIBRAND, or some or one of them, Owners;

Ex parte—THE NORTHERN BANKING COMPANY, Petitioners.

TO BE SOLD,

On TUESDAY, the 7th day of NOVEMBER, 1882,

At the hour of Twelve o'clock,

Before the Right Honourable Judge Ormsby,

At his Court, Land Judges' Court, Inns-quay, in the City of Dublin, The aforementioned Property, In Eight Lots, viz.:

Lot. No. 1.—Part of the Lands of Carricknab, containing 146a 3r 27p statute measure, or thereabouts, and Part of the Lands of Corbally, containing 21a 3r 80p statute measure, or thereabouts, both held in Fee-farm, situate in the Barony of Lecale and County of Down Net annual rental, £29 0s. 7d. Tenement valuation, £188 5s.

Lot 2.—Part of the said Lands of Carricknab, containing 118a 0r 28p statute measure, or thereabouts, and part of the said Lands of Corbally, containing 34a 3r 86p statute measure, or thereabouts, both held in Fee-farm. Net annual rental, £106 5s. 10d. Tenement valuation, £180 5s.

Lot 3.—Part of the said Lands of Carricknab, containing 2a 0r 3p statute measure, or thereabouts, held in Fee-farm. Tenants' rents, 6d. Tenement valuation, £20.

Lot 4.—The Lands of Ringhaddy, and its sub-denomination of Castletland, with benefit of Rocks and Scars for wreck and seaweed belonging to same, Island More, Island Dunsay, Dunsay Rock, Green or Hay Island, and Island Darragh, containing in the whole 379a 1r 2p statute measure, or thereabouts, situate in the Barony of Dufferin and County of Down, held in Fee-farm. Net annual rental, £295 4s. 2d. Tenement valuation, £351.

Lot 5.—Part of the Lands of Ballow, containing 141a 1r 28p statute measure, or thereabouts, and the right enjoyed therewith or in respect thereof, to hold four Yearly Fairs, and a Weekly Market, and a Court of Pie Poudre during said Fairs and Markets, situate in the Barony of Dufferin and County of Down, held in Fee-simple. Net annual rent, £154 12s. 9d. Tenement valuation, £215.

Lot 6.—Part of the said Lands of Ballow, containing 28p statute measure, or thereabouts, held in Fee-simple. Net annual rent, 6d. Tenement valuation, £2 10s.

Lot 7.—Part of the said Lands of Ballow, containing 37p statute measure, or thereabouts, held in Fee-simple. Net annual rental, 1s. Tenement valuation, £8.

Lot 8.—The Manor, Town, and Lands of Ardmillan, together with the Rectorial Tithes of said Manor, and also all Courts Leet, Courts Baron, and Customs, and Fairs, and Markets, and comprising the Lands of Ballydrine, otherwise Ballindreen, otherwise Ballydrain, Ballyliddell, otherwise Ballyleghorn, Castle Espie, Tullynakill, together with Watson's Island, Lisbane, otherwise Ballylisbane, Island Reagh, Cross Island, Island Mahle, Bird and Gull Islands, Ringneal, otherwise Ballyranavale, including Rolly Island, Long Island, and Wood Island, Ballymartin, alias Ardmillan—all situate in the Barony of Castlereagh and County of Down, held under a Lease from the late Commissioners of Church Temporalities in Ireland, customarily renewable, as appears from the Orders abstracted in the Rental. Net annual rental, £782 14s. 10d. Tenement valuation, £2,908 15s.

Dated this 5th day of August, 1882.

JOHN MARTLEY, for Examiner.

N.B.—Proposals for the purchase by Private Contract will be received by the Solicitors having carriage of the Order for Sale on or before Saturday, the 28th day of October, 1882, and, if approved of, will be submitted to the Court for confirmation.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

Lots 1, 2, and 3 are situate within about three miles of the Town of Downpatrick, which is the County Town, and is in railway communication with Belfast and Newcastle, the latter a fashionable watering place, about seven miles distant. Tullymurry Station, on the Newcastle Line, is distant about one mile from Corbally.

Lot 4 Ringhaddy—is situate on the Shore of Strangford Lough, about four miles north of the important Town of Killyleagh, and the remainder of the Lot consists of adjacent Islands in that Lough. There is an abundant supply of Sea Weed on the Shore.

Lots 5, 6, and 7—Ballow—are situate adjacent to the Village of Killinchy, and within about five miles of the Town of Saintfield, a Station on the Belfast and County Down Railway.

Lot 8—The Manor of Ardmillan—is situate on the Shore of Strangford Lough, within about two miles south of the Town of Comber, Station on the Belfast and County Down Railway.

For Rentals and further particulars, apply at the Registrar's Office, Land Judges, Inns-quay, Dublin; or to

OWEN MARCHE, Esq., Solicitor, Rochdale;

R. P. BERRY, Esq., Solicitor, Market-place, Huddersfield; or to

HUGH WALLACE & CO., Solicitors having carriage of the Order for Sale, 45, Victoria-street, Belfast; English-street, Downpatrick; and 30 North Great George's-street, Dublin.

101

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1882.

No. 817

PRIVILEGE OF WITNESSES AS TO CRIMINATING QUESTIONS.—IV.

In Egbert v. Greenwalt (14 West. Jur. 542), in an action for crim. con., the testimony of the husband and wife, to the effect that they had no intercourse at the time the child was begotten, and that the defendant "must have been its father," was held inadmissible by the Supreme Court of Michigan, in 1880. "According to an ancient rule of the common law," said Graves, J., "the evidence of neither husband nor wife could be received to disprove the fact of sexual intercourse (R. v. Rook, 1 Wils. 340); and Lord Mansfield declared that it was 'founded in decency, morality, and policy' (Goodright v. Moss, Cowp. 591); and no judge or author has ever dissented from his strong approval. The reason of the rule prescribed limits to its application, but there is no present occasion for special reference to any of the qualifications. That the legislature intended to abrogate it is not to be assumed. No one will contend that the course of the legislature of 1861 was unfriendly to it. Nor can it be fairly argued that the terms or spirit of the amendment then made have supplanted it. The general purpose the legislature had in view was to sweep away a number of objections against the competency of witnesses, but not to break down any rule 'founded in decency, morality and policy;' and, so far as ascertained, the courts, wherever these general changes have taken place, have considered this rule of the common law as untouched: Tioga County v. South Creek Township, 75 Pa. St. 436; Boykin v. Boykin, 70 N. C. 262; Chamberlain v. The People, 23 N. Y. 88; People v. Overseers of Ontario, 15 Bart. 286; Hemminway v. Townner, 1 Allen, 209; Stephen, Ev., Art. 98. The effect of the statute upon the capability of the wife as a witness for the people, in a prosecution against a person for having committed adultery with her, was fully discussed in Parsons v. The People, 21 Mich. 509; but it was not found necessary to consider the present questions. I think the evidence of the plaintiff and his wife, which was adduced to show non-intercourse between them, was inadmissible." Certainly, however, there is room for the expression of an adverse opinion as to the propriety and policy of the rule applied in such cases (and see Anon., 22 Beav. 481, 23 ib. 273); and we observe that in a paper read before the Kentucky Bar Association, on the 23rd of June last, by Mr. Wilbur F. Browder, on Competency of Witnesses, the essayist, as regards divorce suits, advocates very strongly the admission of husband and wife to testify on their own behalf. "If marriage," he observes, "be a civil contract, as the books all declare, let ordinary business usages and methods minister to its infirmities and adjust its affairs. The inconsistent pretext of the law should no longer be tolerated. Under the chaste plea of shielding the sacredness of the marital relation from the vulgar gaze, the principals in these domestic dramas are driven behind the scenes, and the expectant public is served with a medley of innuendos and exaggerations, half-seen and half-heard misdoings, by the cook and chambermaid, the hired man and the omnipresent and omniscient next-door neighbour. In the very nature of things, the parties themselves alone know the facts. Matrimonial embarrassments and difficulties are always stealthy—seldom seen by the outer world—and the cruel and inhuman conduct, which forms one of the grounds of divorce often relied on, can never be proved completely or satisfactorily without invoking the personal knowledge of the parties themselves. They speak by their pleadings, why not by their evidence?" Mr. Browder, by the way, is also an advocate of the right of accused persons to testify for themselves. Many of the States, indeed, have already adopted statutes so permitting (see 12 Ir. L. T. 554, 563, 578, 593; 7 Southern L. Rev., N. S., 688); and it is also so proposed by the long-promised Criminal Code for this country, so that it is worth noting some of the cases (in addition to those already cited) upon such statutes. It has been held the privilege of the witness exclusively to elect whether or not he will testify: Ruloff v. The People, 45 N. Y. 218; Brandon v. The People, 42 ib. 265; Connors v. The People, 50 ib. 240; The Commonwealth v. Nichols, 114 Mass. 286; The State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234; but, whether, if he testify, his privilege not to answer questions putting his general reputation in issue must be claimed by him, or may be claimed by his counsel, the decisions are not in accord; The State v. Wentworth, ubi supra; The People v. Brown, 72 N. Y. 571. Indeed, whether he can decline to answer questions on that ground is also a disputed point: Brandon v. The People, and The People v. Brown, ubi supra (and see as to impeaching the credibility of witnesses, 15 Ir. L. T. 68; as to cross-examination as to credit, R. v. Whelan, 15 Ir. L. T. Dig. 22; and as to evidence as to character, 15 Ir. L. T. 155, 343). But if he elect to testify, he waives his right of immunity from testifying against himself; nor is he at liberty to state a part and withhold another part of the facts within his knowledge: State v. Wentworth, ubi supra; State v. Wilham, 72 Me. 581. It was held in Woden v. Henshaw (101 Mass. 200), that he would even be required to disclose confidential communications made to his counsel; but that case is practically overruled by Montgomery v. Pickering, 116 Mass. 227, and the contrary has been held in other States: see cases previously cited, ante, p. 443; Brandon v. Brandon, 39 How. Pr. 193. It has been held that omission to testify is a proper subject (unless otherwise expressly enacted) for comment by counsel and consideration by the jury; The State v. Lawrence, 57 Me. 374; but, see cases cited, ante, p. 443; and so, where he refuses to submit to a full cross-examination: The State v. Ober, 52 N. H. 495; State v. Wilham, ubi supra. We have already made reference to a former paper (14 Ir. L. T. 466, and see 15 Central L. J. 2) on the subject of compelling a prisoner (apart from such statutes) to furnish personal evidence of his identity, where the cases on that subject have been collected, including People v. M'Coy (45 How. Pr. 216), in which a woman, indicted for infanticide, having been examined by physicians in order to determine whether she had been recently delivered, the Court said that the proceeding was in violation of the constitution, declaring that "no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself," as they might as well have compelled her to testify that she had been pregnant. (Cf. Anon., 22 Beav. 481, 23 ib. 273; Storrs v. Scougal, N. W. Rep., June 17, 1862; and as to compelling party to write, so as to compare handwriting, on indictments for forgery, see 28 & 29 Vict., c. 18). In Gordon v. The State, noted in the Boston Reporter of the 23rd ult., it was held that, where a defendant in a criminal case voluntarily exhibited a scar on his head to sustain his defence, there was no error in requiring him to allow it afterwards to be examined by a physician who was put on the stand in rebuttal by counsel for the State. The prisoner himself exhibited it, and so put it before the jury voluntarily. Such being the case, it became a witness for him; his own voluntary act made it so, and this took the case out of the ruling in 63 Ga. 667, and the case of Rockwell v. The State, decided at the last term.

In the issue of the same serial on the 30th ult., by the way, we find a case (Reilly v. English, 14 Rep. 285) on another branch of our subject reported, which should here be noted. It appeared that a firm, Brewer & Stewart, formed in 1872, was dissolved in six months. Stewart then began business alone, and continued it until his death in 1878. He had in his store from 1873 a fire-proof safe belonging to Brewer, and after his death the plaintiff demanded the safe, having bought it from Brewer for $150, of which $18 was to be allowed for a debt of Brewer, and the balance to be paid when the possession of the safe was had. The defendant, as administrator of Stewart's estate, claimed the safe as property of the estate. After evidence was given tending to prove the plaintiff's case, the defendant produced testimony going to establish that Brewer had sold the safe to Stewart, and that he had been paid for it. Brewer was then called upon to rebut the evidence of the defendant, and asked to state the circumstances under which the safe was removed to Stewart's store, and the agreement between them about it. The question was objected to on the ground that he was not a competent witness to testify to transactions with, or statements made by, Stewart in his lifetime. Cooper, J., in delivering judgment, said:—"The question, it is obvious, went to the very heart of the controversy, and the materiality of the testimony is obvious, whatever might be the purport of the answer: Hagan v. State, 5 Baxt. 615. His Honour's ruling seems to have been based upon the idea that the real parties to the suit were Brewer and the personal representative of Stewart, and that the testimony was inadmissible under the Code, sec. 3813 a. That section is: 'In actions or proceedings by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with, or statement by, the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party.' But this suit is not against the defendant as administrator of Stewart. It is true the original summons, affidavit, and bond, did designate the defendant in his representative capacity; but these words of description (for in the form of action adopted they could only be treated as descriptio personæ) were stricken out before the trial by the justice. This suit was from the first in legal contemplation, and, after striking out the descriptive words, in form, an action against the defendant individually. He might rely in defence upon the title of his intestate, but that would not prevent the plaintiff from proving the contract between Brewer and Stewart in relation to the safe; nor, it seems, would it have prevented Brewer, if he had been the plaintiff, from testifying to the contract made with the deceased: Johnson v. Hall, 9 Baxt. 351. The statute cannot be extended by the courts to cases not within its terms, upon the idea that they fall within the evil which was intended to be guarded against: Hughlett v. Conner, 12 Heisk. 88; Fuqua v. Dinwiddie, 6 Lea, 645."

VENUE IN CRIMINAL CASES.

The law relating to venue in criminal cases is not altogether free from difficulty. At common law a prisoner could only be indicted for larceny in the county in which the offence was actually committed, but this was altered by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 76, of which 24 & 25 Vict., c. 96, s. 114, is a re-enactment. It is there provided that, if a man having stolen or otherwise feloniously taken any chattel, money, or valuable security, or other property whatsoever, in any one part of the United Kingdom afterwards have the same in his possession in any other part of the United Kingdom, he may be indicted, tried, and convicted in that part of the United Kingdom, in which he so had the property, in the same manner as if he had actually stolen it there.

It follows a fortiori that a man cannot be tried here for a larceny or other offence committed abroad, and it is also settled law that a prisoner cannot be convicted here for having in his possession property stolen abroad, even if received with a guilty knowledge. This has been decided in a long succession of cases, of which the earliest example is Reg. v. Proves (1 Moo. C. C. 349), decided in 1839, where a person who stole goods in the island of Jersey, had them in his possession in the county of Dorset, in which he was indicted and convicted. It was, however, held upon appeal that the conviction was wrong, because the original taking was such whereof the common law could not take notice. This decision has been followed in Reg. v. Madge (9 C. & P. 29); Reg. v. Debruiel and another (11 Cox, 207); and Reg. v. John Carr, reported in the Old Bailey Sessions Papers, Nov., 1877, and tried before Denman, J.

This case was fully argued, the Solicitor-General representing the Crown; but the learned judge held that, the prisoner being in possession of foreign bonds stolen abroad, the court had no jurisdiction to try him, and much stress was laid on Hogatorum's case (tried before the late Recorder, Mr. Russell Gurney, and reported in the Sessions Papers), in which the prisoner was found in possession, in a British ship on the high seas, of diamonds stolen at the Cape, and it had been held there was no jurisdiction.

A case of considerable interest was tried before Mr. Prentice, Q.C., at the Middlesex Sessions on the 28th ult., when the prisoner, one Brisker, was indicted for embezzlement. The prisoner was in the employment of Messrs. Challen, who carry on business in the county of Middlesex, and acted as their traveller in the island of Jersey, it being his duty to remit moneys received by him daily to his employers. The prisoner received a particular sum, but did not remit, and wrote to Messrs. Challen subsequently inclosing accounts, but omitting the sum in question, and in one letter denied having received it. It was objected by the learned counsel appearing for the prisoner that the court had no jurisdiction, as the offence had been committed, if at all, in the island of Jersey; that even assuming non-accounting forms a part of the offence of embezzlement, and is not merely evidence of it, the fact that the non-accounting took place in the county of Middlesex would not give the court jurisdiction, because the offence must be begun, continued, and ended in this country. The prosecution relied upon Reg. v. Rogers (3 Q. B. Div. 28), in which case the facts were as follows: A clerk whose duty it was to remit at once to his employers in Middlesex all moneys collected by him as their clerk, collected at York, on the 18th April, a sum of money as such clerk, but never remitted any portion of it. On the 19th and 20th April he wrote and posted from places in Yorkshire to his employers in Middlesex letters making no mention of the money so collected; and on the 21st April he wrote and posted at Doncaster, in Yorkshire, to his employers in Middlesex, a letter which was intended to make them believe he had not in fact collected the money in question; and in reply to a question put to them by the learned judge who tried the case, the jury found this fact specifically.

The prisoner was tried and convicted at the Middlesex Sessions; but a case was reserved upon the question as to whether he was rightly tried in the county of Middlesex. The court, consisting of Chief Baron Kelly, Justices Field, Lindley, and Manisty, affirmed the conviction; but Baron Huddleston, in an elaborate judgment, dissented on the ground that no part of the offence was committed in Middlesex, and that the prisoner was wrongly indicted in that county. The learned Baron said: "The stealing is the crime, the non-accounting the evidence of it, and as the evidence in the present case shows that the stealing was in Yorkshire, and that the prisoner never was in Middlesex until after he was arrested, I am of opinion that he was not rightly tried in Middlesex." Mr. Prentice stated that, in his opinion, Reg. v. Rogers was wrongly decided, and that he entirely concurred with the judgment of Baron Huddleston. We think a little examination will show that this view is based upon a transparent fallacy. Now, to receive money for and on account of an employer, and not account for it at the time, may or may not constitute the offence of embezzlement. The essence of the offence is the felonious intention; and it may well be that, if a traveller be pressed for money, say, to pay his rent with, and for that purpose keeps back some portion of his employer's money, he may have a full intention at the time of ultimately accounting for it.

If the judgments of the majority of the judges be carefully studied, it will be found that what they in effect say is this: We cannot say upon the evidence that the prisoner intended to appropriate the money at the time he took it, he may have had no felonious intention then; but the felonious intention became manifest for the first time by the letter of the 21st April, which, though written in Doncaster, was received in Middlesex; and in Evans v. Nicholson (32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 778) the court regarded a letter as speaking continuously from the moment of its being posted until its receipt by the addressee. For this reason we hold that the offence was completed when the prisoner by letter made the false statement to his employers as to the receipt of the money, and that he was so rightly tried in Middlesex. In other words, "We cannot say that the felonious intention or wicked mind was not first developed at the time the letter was written, as the felonious intention is the essence of the offence of embezzlement, and as the letter was received in Middlesex. Evans v. Nicholson is sufficient authority for saying that the offence was committed in Middlesex."

Mr. Prentice, Q.C., referred to Reg. v. Treadgold (48 L. J. 102, M. C.), and said that this case upheld the decision of Baron Huddleston, and overruled Reg. v. Rogers. We are quite unable to follow the learned editor of "Russell on Crimes" in this view, the facts being entirely different. In Reg. v. Treadgold it was the prisoner's duty to remit money daily to his employers, and on the 1st and 2nd March, 1878, he collected two sums of money at Newark which he did not account for; the prisoner resided at Grantham, but there was no evidence that he returned there on either of the days above mentioned. In the first week in April one of his employers went to Grantham and saw the prisoner, and taxed him with receiving moneys and not accounting for them, whereupon the prisoner handed his employers a list of moneys he had collected and not accounted for, including the above sums. He was indicted and convicted at the borough quarter sessions holden at Grantham, and the learned recorder, in the case submitted to the judges, stated that he had held he was triable there on the ground that, as he lived at Grantham, he might have returned there on the 1st and 2nd March when the several sums were embezzled. The judges held that there was no evidence to justify this view, and that the embezzlement took place, if at all, at Newark; the fact that the prisoner when taxed made to his employers what amounted in effect to a confession at Grantham, was never alluded to by anyone throughout the case as ground for laying the venue at Grantham.

Chief Baron Kelly, in giving judgment, said: "This conviction must be quashed. There was no evidence at all which showed the completion of the offence of embezzlement at Grantham. It is quite consistent with the facts stated in the case that there was probably an act of embezzlement at Newark, but even that is not clear. The case states that the prisoner resided at Grantham, and there was no evidence to show that he returned to Grantham on either of the days he received the several sums of money. It further states that one of the prisoner's employers proceeded to Grantham a month afterwards and had an interview with the prisoner, and taxed him with receiving moneys which he had not accounted for to them, and that the prisoner handed to him a list of amounts he had received and not accounted for, in which list the two items charged in the indictment appeared, and there the evidence stops. It is impossible to say on these facts that there was any evidence of embezzlement at Grantham." Reg. v. Rogers was referred to in the course of the argument, but if Chief Baron Kelly had intended to imply that he had reconsidered his decision in that case, and had adopted the views of Baron Huddleston, it is inconceivable that neither he, nor Mr. Justice Lindley, nor Mr. Justice Manisty, who also formed part of the court in both cases, should not have said one word about it.

We doubt whether Reg. v. Rogers has much authority when applied to Brisker's case which was actually before Mr. Prentice, because Jersey is a foreign country, though forming part of the dominions of the Crown, just as the Cape was held to be a foreign country in Hogatorum's case.

In the result, after first saying he was bound by the decision in Reg. v. Rogers, and could not say that there was not jurisdiction, the learned judge decided otherwise, the learned counsel for the prisoner pointing out that Jersey, being a foreign country, the offence must be begun, continued, and ended in this country in order to give the court jurisdiction, and therefore, that Reg. v. Rogers did not apply.—Law Times.

THE ANCIENT MONUMENTS ACT.

Spontaneously to cherish cromlechs, kistvens, sacred circles, dolmens, and the like—those relics of the prehistoric inhabitants of these isles—does not seem native to the Anglo-Saxon race. It is no excuse that we are not worse than other peoples with remains as mysterious in their midst. Hitherto we have not pushed our concern for these ancient monuments further than inert wonder and archæological speculation. It needed a prophet like Sir John Lubbock—not without faithful disciples—to inculcate the lesson that we ought not only to gaze at such venerable survivals and broach theories upon them, but to preserve them from unnecessary decay and destruction. The Ancient Monuments Bill, adopted by the Government, is at last made law, after a lengthy waiting. There is no definition in the Act of the sort of ancient monument which is entitled to the benefit of the enactment. But the monuments enumerated in the schedule, which may afterwards be added to, show that it is designed to protect a class of ruins peculiarly in need of protection. There are numerous "monuments" of antiquity the very beauty and grandeur of whose ruins may be held to furnish an ample guarantee for their protection. Of such are the ruined castles and abbeys with which this country abounds. But the camp and the cromlech are mostly left to themselves. Perhaps legends as to their origin still float about the neighbourhood. The native does not feel quite comfortable when he passes them in the dark on a stormy night. His awe, however, does not prevent him from carting away in broad daylight a tall monolith which will make a convenient corner-stone for his new cattle-shed, or which seems to him intended by Providence to serve as a scratching-post for his oxen. Sometimes, if the mountain will not come to Mahomet, Mahomet goes to the mountain. Giant stones where they stand make a massive framework for new farm-buildings, and a Roman vallum has been known to afford an excellent line of delimitation for a pigsty. Not merely so mischievous as this utilitarian species of rustic is the visitor who duly inscribes his illustrious name with a vulgarity erroneously supposed to belong exclusively to the Britisher, but really the common attribute of civilised mankind. The tourist only desecrates, while the rustic pillages. The Ancient Monuments Act aims at stopping both the desecration and the pillage. To quote an instance or two, the largest stone in the well-known remains at Abury, or Avebury, in Wiltshire, weighs 60 tons; but it was lighter by 30 tons than another known to have been blasted or otherwise broken up several years ago, by one who probably looked upon a stone, even a Celtic monolith, with as much insensibility as Peter Bell regarded a primrose. In the same way White Horse Stone, a household word of the country near Aylesford, in Kent, has been destroyed within living memory. Even at Stonehenge, a trilithon on the western side, which a little care might have kept standing, and might even now be set up again, is known to have fallen in 1797.

The Ancient Monuments Bill, then, aims at preserving those relics whose very strength, simplicity, and ruggedness seem at first sight to offer no motive to the destroyer, and therefore to disdain any protection which man could give. In truth, they are as much subject to vicissitude as other creations of human hands, and sentimental considerations, if no other, urge that we should arrest, so far as we can, the process of dilapidation. Often we have only a faint inkling of the uses of the weird circles of stones which dot our islands from north to south. A Roman or a Celtic camp is generally recognisable. We are tolerably sure that such and such a hillock is an ancient barrow, or that yonder long and lofty mould is an earth-work. We are more in the dark when we come to two or three huge stones surmounted by another, although plenty of people are confident that they enclosed the ashes of Celtic kings and can even give the departed monarchs a name. But Stonehenge and Abury and their analogues have not yielded to the most penetrating and ingenious conjectures. The British Archaeological Association, which held its annual congress at Plymouth a fortnight ago, did not this year venture far beyond the region of the known. Roman villas, churches, and country halls find them tolerably unanimous, when an excursion to Celtic or Druidical remains develops as many theories as there are members present. Not the personality of Homer nor the origin of the Etruscans has been more prolific of irreconcilable views and mutual derision than the question, For what was Stonehenge intended? Inigo Jones gave it as his opinion that it was a Roman work. Another savant of modern date declares that it is nothing but a group of cromlechs from which the soil has been washed or cleared away. The theory most in vogue is that Stonehenge is astronomical in its symbolism, and connected with the worship of the sun. The Friar's Heel, the keystone of the whole, it is pointed out, is so situated and arranged as to mark the rising of the sun at the summer solstice. To this it is answered that there lies prostrate a huge stone which, before it fell, must have effectually shut out any one standing at what is supposed to be the altar from the view of the sun over the Friar's Heel. Some enthusiasts compare Stonehenge with Baalbek; some talk significantly of Gilgal and the Hebrew practice of erecting stone pillars on every available occasion; and some superlative speculators do not shrink from the conclusion that the Druid and Hebrew worships were identical. The same veil of mystery which hangs over Stonehenge envelops, to a great extent, the origin of most of the Celtic remains to be found in the British Isles. Omne ignotum pro magnifico is the adage, and our awe for them ought, if anything, to be the greater. National or local legends have in many cases been grafted upon monuments far older than the legends themselves. The Celtic cairn takes to itself a Saxon or a Danish name and innately. The language and traditions of those who erected it have faded away, but fancy still invests the relic with a new history.

The provisions of the new Act are simple enough. The Commissioners of Works in England, the Board of Trustees for Manufactures in Scotland, and the Commissioners of Works in Ireland are respectively empowered to acquire by purchase or gift the monuments mentioned in the schedule, and others which an Order in Council may from time to time add to the number. Inspectors may be appointed to keep in order and preserve, as best may be, the monuments thus acquired; and penalties are instituted for acts of destruction. The language of the Act seems to indicate that in some cases the Commissioners will resort to "fencing, repairing, cleansing, and covering in." It is to be hoped that none of these artificial expedients will be employed except in circumstances of urgency. Many people will agree that the charm of antiquity forthwith departs from a spot when it is surrounded by a hoarding, scoured, and scraped, or roofed over. Better a natural decay than such an artificial life. It is to ward off the hand of the wilful destroyer, and not the weather, that the Act is most needed. Protected from human assault, and with the soil beneath them maintained in a firm state, pillars, cromlechs, and "rooking-stones" may be expected to last as long as they have lasted already. Barrows and intrenchments will need little attention from the Commissioners when it has become impossible for the land to fall into the hands of some improving landlord who makes no more account of a tumulus than of an ant-hill. The schedule comprises most of the best known ancient monuments in the three kingdoms. It is odd, however, that Cornwall, a county so rich in remains of Celtic Britain, should not contribute a single site to the list marked out for preservation. Sir John Lubbock evidently and with reason expects that many owners of well-known ancient sites will hand them over to the safe keeping of the Commissioners. He himself, it may be mentioned bought the site of the Abury remains to save them from the destruction which was overtaking them. Certainly the Act is only permissive, and permissive Acts are not noted for efficacy. But although a long period may elapse before the last monument even of those named in the schedule becomes vested in the representatives of the State, we can hardly doubt that the process of transfer will be speedily initiated.—Times.

MISCONDUCT OF JURIES.

(Continued from page 461, ante.)

III. Rules peculiar to particular Classes of Actions.—(1.) Separation of the Jury.—Considering, next, those rules which are different in the different classes of actions already named, let us look to those which relate to the separation of the jury as a ground for a new trial. It is not the general practice in this country to isolate jurors in civil cases from the rest of the public during the necessary adjournments which take place in the progress of the trial. On the contrary, they are permitted to return to their homes at night and to mingle freely with the public, after receiving an admonition from the bench not to converse with anyone, nor to receive communications from anyone, touching the cause on trial. In these cases they are not subjected to any restraint until they have received the charge of the judge, and have retired to consider of their verdict, when, regularly, they are to be kept together and prevented from communicating with persons not of the jury, until they have agreed upon their verdict. But even then, where their deliberations are protracted, or where, from the hour of adjournment, or other circumstance it seems necessary, it is believed to be within the discretion of the judge to allow them to separate for needed rest or refreshment before making up their verdict. For it would be an absurd restraint to prevent jurors, during the adjournments of a protracted trial, to separate and mingle freely with the public, and then to imprison them after its close until they should have agreed upon their verdict. Persons known to be members of the jury would not be less likely to be approached improperly after the termination of trial than during its progress. Courts have, therefore, in civil cases, not only exercised a sound discretion in regard to the disposition of the jury pending their deliberations, but it has even been held that a statute<sup>14</sup> requiring them to be confined under the care of an officer until they shall have agreed upon their verdict, or until they shall have been discharged by the court, is directory merely, in its application to civil cases.<sup>15</sup>

(2.) Separation in Civil Cases not Ground for new Trial.—It follows almost as a necessary conclusion that the fact that the jury in a civil case have separated without leave of the court after the cause has been committed to them, and before they have agreed upon their verdict, is not, as mere matter of law, ground for a new trial; nor will a new trial be granted in such a case unless the facts touching the separation are such as to raise reasonable suspicions of abuse.<sup>16</sup> If such a rule will hold as to a general dispersion of the jury, it will follow, for stronger reasons, that the temporary absence of a single juror from the jury-room, or from his fellows, through a mistake of duty, will not afford ground for disturbing the verdict, unless there is proof of other misconduct on his part, or of improper attempts to influence his vote as a juror, though it may be a contempt of court which will subject him to punishment.<sup>17</sup>

(3.) Nor in some States in Cases of Felony.—In some of the States this rule has been extended to prosecutions for felony, and the judges have exercised the discretionary power of discharging the jury upon the adjournments of the court from day to day, even in capital cases;<sup>18</sup> or, in such a case, of allowing a single juror to leave the box for a time while the trial is in progress, the proceedings being, of course, suspended to await his return.<sup>19</sup> And, corresponding to this, we find that some courts have so far relaxed the rule of the common law as to hold that a separation of the jury in cases of felony, even where there is no necessity for it, is no ground for a new trial, in the absence of circumstances which excite suspicion of abuse.<sup>20</sup>

Thus, in Iowa it is within the discretion of the court, after the jury is sworn and before the cause is submitted to them, to permit them to separate, or to keep them in charge of a proper officer.<sup>21</sup> It is not error, therefore, for the court to refuse, on the application of the defendant, to direct that the jury should be kept together during the trial, unless it is made apparent that the court in some manner exceeded the discretion vested in it, or exercised it to the prejudice of the defendant's rights.<sup>22</sup>

In Ohio the same rule obtains. Whether jurors shall be permitted to separate during the progress of the trial is no longer an open question in that State; it is settled that it is a matter committed to the sound discretion of the court.<sup>23</sup> "In both civil and criminal cases the court may, in their discretion, during the progress of the trial, permit the jury to disperse for the purpose of obtaining food and rest, and may, in either case, direct them to bring in a sealed verdict; but in no case can the jury, after they have retired to consider of their verdict, be permitted to separate and disperse until they have agreed."<sup>24</sup>

In Indiana there is a statute relating to State trials, in the following language: "When jurors are permitted to separate after being empanelled, and at each adjournment, they must be admonished by the court that it is their duty not to converse among themselves, nor to suffer others to converse with them, on any subject connected with the trial, or to form or express any opinion thereon until the case is fully submitted to them."<sup>25</sup> This statute permits the separation of the jury during the trial, and before the cause is submitted to them, without their being in charge of a sworn officer; and the case of Jones v. The State,<sup>26</sup> which holds the contrary, is no longer regarded as authority.<sup>27</sup>

In Missouri, the law was formerly well settled that the separation of the jury in a criminal case will not invalidate their verdict or furnish grounds for a new trial if there is no reason to suspect that they have been tampered with, or have acted improperly.<sup>28</sup> The rule has been applied equally in all criminal cases, including capital felonies.<sup>29</sup> It has been applied indifferently to cases where the separation took place before the jury retired to deliberate on their verdict, and to cases where it took place after they had retired.<sup>30</sup> It has been applied equally in cases where the separation was in violation of the duty of the separating jurors, and in cases where it was with the sanction of the court<sup>31</sup> and with the consent of the prisoner.<sup>32</sup> But now, by a recent statute,<sup>33</sup> "the court may grant a new trial . . . when the jury has been separated without leave of the court, after retiring to deliberate upon their verdict, or has been guilty of any misconduct tending to prevent a fair and due consideration of the case." This, it is seen, does not touch the case of separations before the jury have retired to consider of their verdict. It therefore leaves the rules of the foregoing cases in force in most of their applications.

The judges of the Court of Appeals of New York have not been unanimous upon this question. In a case where it was presented and considered at unusual length, six out of eight of them were of opinion that the court has power to permit the jury to separate during the progress of a capital trial, upon the application of the prisoner, or upon his consent tendered without solicitation, pending the adjournments of the court from day to day. Four of the judges were also of opinion that the court has power, in its discretion, independent of the consent of the parties, to permit the jury thus to separate. From both propositions two of the judges dissented, and upon the last point two of them expressed no opinion.<sup>34</sup> The conclusion of the court is aided by the fact that the only statute upon the subject in New York provided as follows: "The proceedings prescribed by law in civil cases in respect to the empanelling of juries, the keeping them together, and the manner of rendering their verdict, shall be had upon the trial of indictments,"<sup>35</sup> and that there was no statute in New York requiring the confinement and isolation of juries in civil cases.

(4.) The true Rule otherwise in Capital Felonies.—There can be no question, however, that the foregoing rule, at least in its application to capital felonies, is an entire departure from the rule of the common law. The rule of that law was no doubt uniform in all cases of felony, for by that law all felonies were capital. By that law, courts had no power in such cases to permit the jury to separate after they had been charged with a case; and such a separation anciently worked a discharge of the (14) Comp. Stats. Vt. 272, sect. 23.

(15) Downer v. Baxter, 30 Vt. 467, 474.

(16) Smith v. Thompson, 1 Cow. 221; Brandin v. Grannis, 1 Conn. 402, note; Downer v. Baxter, 30 Vt. 467; Evans v. Foss, 49 N. H. 490; Anthony v. Smith, 4 Bow. 503; Pulaski v. Ward, 2 Rich. L. 119.

(17) Milo v. Gardiner, 41 Mo. 649; Parkins v. Esmal, 2 Kan. 326; Burill v. Phillips, 1 Gall. 840; Alexander v. Dunn, 5 Ind. 122, 126; Graves v. Moad, 7 Swed. & M. 45; Oram v. Bishop, 12 N. J. L. 153.

(18) The State v. Anderson, 2 Bailey, 559; Bilanati v. The State, 3 Miss. 427.

(19) The State v. McElmurray, 3 Strobb. 28.

(20) Stephens v. The People, 4 Park. Cr. 369, 497 (affirmed 19 N. Y. 649); The People v. Douglas, 4 Cow. 26; The People v. Ransom, 7 Wend. 417.

(21) Code 1851, sect. 3611.

(22) The State v. Gillick, 10 Iowa, 98.

(23) Sargeant v. The State, 11 Iowa, 473; Davis v. The State, 15 Ohio, 73, 83.

(24) Sargeant v. The State, supra, per Read, J.

(25) 2 Rev. Stats. Ind. 376, sect. 112.

(26) 2 Blackf. 475.

(27) Evans v. The State, 7 Ind. 271.

(28) The State v. Brannon, 45 Mo. 329; The State v. Harlow, 21 Mo. 446; The State v. Igo, 21 Mo. 459; The State v. Barton, 19 Mo. 237; The State v. Mix, 15 Mo. 153; Whitney v. The State, 8 Mo. 165.

(29) The State v. Brannon, supra; The State v. Harlow, supra.

(30) Whitney v. The State, 8 Mo. 165; The State v. Igo, 21 Mo. 460.

(31) The State v. Brannon, 45 Mo. 329.

(32) Ibid.; The State v. Mix, 15 Mo. 153.

(33) 1 Rev. Stats. 1879, sect. 1964.

(34) Stephens v. The People, 19 N. Y. 649 (affirming a c. 4 Park. Cr. 369, 495, 503). This case follows the cases of The People v. Douglas, 4 Cow. 26, and The People v. Ransom, 7 Wend. 428, and in effect overrules the case of Eastwood v. The People, 3 Park. Cr. 95; though it is to be distinguished from all three of these cases on the ground that in them the question was as to the effect of an unauthorized separation:

(35) 2 Rev. Stats. N. Y. (2d. ed.) 648.

prisoner,<sup>36</sup> although in modern times it is merely ground for a new trial, even where unauthorised.<sup>37</sup> The provisions of our national and State constitutions which guarantee the right of trial by juries are understood to be intended to preserve that right substantially as it existed at common law. I affirm with confidence that where a jury empanelled to try a capital felony are permitted to separate, to mingle with the community, and to imbibe their prejudices, before rendering their verdict, the prisoner has been denied the right of trial by jury within the meaning of these constitutional provisions.

Upon this subject I feel justified in quoting at some length the language of Chief Justice Whelpley, of New Jersey, in a case in which he delivered the opinion of the Supreme Court of that State. He said:—

"It is clear that from the earliest times, as far back as tradition itself extends, it was a part of the method of proceedings, in the system of English law, in all capital cases to sequester the jury, to a certain extent, from the rest of the community. No one acquainted with the subject will deny that this practice prevailed for many successive ages, and so far as is known to me, it has never been departed from by any English judicature. In this State, almost from the epoch of its settlement by our ancestors to the present moment, as we are informed by history, both printed and oral, the same formula has been observed. From these admitted incidents, then, it would seem to be incontestably plain that the formula itself is invested with every possible claim to be considered a part of that legal system which this court is bound to sustain and administer. It is not a matter of unsubstantial form, but one of the means provided by the law to reach the result of a verdict founded exclusively on the evidence delivered in open court in the presence of the parties. It is, therefore, as much a right of the defendant as any other act which the law requires, by immemorial usage, to be performed at the trial. It is altogether impossible to admit the right of the court, at its pleasure, to waive the performance of this act. If the seclusion of the jury can be dispensed with before the charge of the court, why not dispense with it after such charge? And if the power to alter in one respect the admitted mode of ancient procedure is conceded to the court, what power to alter the forms of trial can be denied? Upon this point the case of Stephens v. The People,<sup>38</sup> was cited and relied on; but I must protest, with emphasis, against the introduction into the jurisprudence of this State of the doctrine upon which that case is placed. The theme is there treated, not as an inquiry as to the existence of power, but as a question of mere expediency.

"In the opinion delivered in the case, it seems to be considered as a matter but of small moment that the form of placing the jury apart from the rest of the public, in all capital cases, has been observed from the most remote era; but the argument proceeds upon the notion that the court can and should change the form, on the ground that the restraints upon the jury incident to such form are not compatible with the multifarious business, the comfort, and the intelligence of the present age. It is scarcely necessary to remark that this argumentative position, if tenable, will enable the courts, at their pleasure, to demolish any part and all parts of those forms of trial which are the safeguards of all private rights, and which have been established for centuries. It is, in effect, to assume that the entire trial by the country is in the hands of the court. Why put the intelligent witnesses of this age under pledge of an oath? Why doom the man whose affairs are pressing to the tedium of a protracted cross-examination? Why require of our intelligent jurors an unanimous verdict? The oath of the witness, the right of cross-examination, the unanimity of the jury, all rest upon the foundation of immemorial usage alone. It appears to be altogether illogical, admitting the great antiquity of the form of the separation of the jury from the mass of the community in capital cases, to maintain the right of the court to abolish such form, without at the same time admitting the right of the court to retain or set aside, at will, all the other essential circumstances which go to make up the proceedings of a trial at law. But it is enough for us to know that the court has heretofore laid claim to no such power; that it has ever conformed its practice with implicit obedience to the ancient usages, leaving to the legislative department of the government the task to modify the law so as to place it in harmony with the ever-shifting conditions of human life. Ascertaining, then, that the practice, in capital cases, of keeping the jury to a certain extent in privacy during the entire course of the trial, has, with complete uniformity, always prevailed, I feel bound to recognise in such form an institute of law which is wholly beyond the control of the court, and which belongs to the citizen, as a right. I entertain no doubt that in this State a conviction in a capital case, which should be founded on an order of the court for the jury to disperse during its recess, would be quite as illegal and unsustainable as would be a conviction which would ensue the ruling of the court permitting a witness to be examined without the test of an oath, or some equivalent sanction.

"I conclude, then, that the jury, in a case in which the life of a prisoner is at stake, must, during the continuance of the trial, be kept separate to the extent of the ancient practice, and that this is a requisition of absolute law, and is not, in any measure, a matter resting in the discretion of the court. It would be superfluous, after coming to this result, to enlarge at any length on the evident propriety of the legal form in question, or to do more than advert to its efficacy to keep the jury from the reach of the contagion of that excitement which generally infects the popular mind during the trial of a person charged with a flagitious crime, and its tendency to indicate to the community, and to keep alive in the heart of the jurors themselves, a lively sense of the solemnity and great importance of the office with which they are clothed. These and many similar considerations might be used in vindication of the legal practice under review, but they seem out of place on an occasion when not the propriety, but simply the existence of the form, is under discussion. It is the business of courts to ascertain what the law is, not to defend it when ascertained."<sup>39</sup>

(To be continued.)

MURDER BY POISONING.

Attention is directed to a little village in Hungary, where, until recently, as alleged, a gipsy woman, now seventy years of age, has for a long time carried on a prosperous trade as poisoner. Upwards of a hundred husbands or lovers are said to have been "done to death" under the direction and with the aid of this malevolent hag. By the treachery of her daughter the culprit has at length been brought to justice. The medical aspect of this case has not yet assumed a form which would justify us in making it the subject of professional remark. The most we know of the affair, and that solely from common report, is that the poison employed has, thus far at least, eluded the measures taken for its discovery. "Even now that the bodies of some of her victims have been exhumed, they show no signs of poisoning, though the stomachs are eaten away." It is stated that the destroyer of life "excited no suspicion because the drugs she administered acted slowly, though surely, and in their effects simulated the symptoms of disease." This is the hideous and significant feature of the case, giving ground for more than common dread lest the black art of the Eastern poisoner should find its way into Western Europe. It is an unexplained but most happy circumstance that, although European communities are every now and (36) Co. Lit. 227 b.; 3 Inet. 110; note in 7 How. St. Tr. 487, where many precedents are collected.

(37) Williams v. The State, 45 Ala. 57; The People v. Reagle, 60 Barb. 527, 544.

(38) 19 N. Y. 549.

(39) The State v. Cucuel, 31 N. J. L. 262-264.

again demoralised by the revelation of some atrocious case of poisoning, that mode of murder has not, and let us hope never will, become naturalised amongst us. The hideous and manifold possibilities of death being brought about by means which cannot be detected by the victim or those around him are enough to scare any community. It is well that we in England have no ground for serious alarm in regard to this crime of secret poisoning. At the same time, it is wise to be ever on the alert. It may be doubted whether, with all the perfection of our vaunted system of registration, we are as secure as we might be if only more attention were bestowed on all cases of chronic or slow disease of anomalous character. It is in connexion with maladies of this nature danger lurks. It cannot be disguised that there are deadly substances capable of inducing changes of tissue that must end in the death of the organism into which they are introduced. Against the administration of these "poisons" there is practically no safeguard. The scrutiny to which mysterious maladies are subjected cannot be too close, and it would tend to the triumph of justice over skilled crime, if attention were less exclusively directed to the recognition of those known mineral and vegetable drugs which are classed as poisons. It is not desirable to say more than this; but so much may and ought to be said in the interests of public prudence and the security of human life.—Lancet.

THE IRISH LAND COMMISSION.

The following Instructions for Assistant-Commissioners under the altered method of procedure have been issued:—

1. It will be seen on reference to the Delegation Order that the powers of the Sub-Commission may be exercised by any two members, of whom the Legal Assistant-Commissioner shall be one.

2. The contemplated mode of procedure is as follows:—A Valuer is attached to each Sub-Commission, who shall value the farms together with one of the Lay Assistant-Commissioners. The Commissioner accompanying the Valuer is to be the same by whom the case is heard in court, conjointly with the Legal Assistant-Commissioner.

Thus the Legal Assistant-Commissioner sits in court with one of his colleagues alternately, his other colleague during that time visiting, conjointly with the Valuer, those holdings of which he had heard or was about to hear the cases in court.

3. In carrying this out it will be desirable that the business should, so far as possible, be so divided as that cases on one estate should be heard and the holdings visited by the same Assistant-Commissioner. Subject to this recommendation the Land Commission desires to leave the Sub-Commission free to arrange its own business in the manner it may deem most convenient.

4. The Valuer shall take notes of the particulars of his valuation according to a settled form, and shall in every way assist the members of the Sub-Commission charged with the case in arriving at a just decision.

5. If the Valuer should be unavoidably absent, with leave of the Commission (as may happen where he is obliged to give evidence in cases of holdings valued by him for parties before his engagement as Court Valuer), the Sub-Commission may proceed according to the former practice, and let the holdings be visited by both of the Lay Assistant-Commissioners.

6. The Legal Assistant-Commissioner may, in all cases in which he deems it necessary or proper, require the second Lay Commissioner to visit and report on the holding.

7. As parties may be absent when decisions are given some time after the hearing, it shall be the duty of the Registrar to the Sub-Commission to notify by letter to the parties, landlord and tenant, or their solicitors, the result of the decisions.

LABOURERS' COTTAGES.

8. A copy of instructions, designs, and specifications issued by the Commissioners of Public Works, on the 31st July, 1882, in reference to labourers' cottages, is transmitted herewith for the use of each Sub-Commission.

9. Every order in respect of erection of a labourer's cottage should be made for the building of one or other of the dwellings suggested by the Board of Works in the accompanying papers.

10. It is desirable that when Sub-Commissions make orders for the building of labourers' cottages the same form of words should be used in the order in each case, except as regards the number designating the design and plan of the house to be erected.

11. It is requested that the form of order be as follows:—

And we further order that the tenant do within months from the date of this order erect a labourer's cottage upon the said holding, such cottage to be built according to plan, design, and specification No. 1 or No. 2, as the case may be, issued by the Commissioners of Public Works on the 1st July, 1882.

12. Any tenant applying to the Board of Works for a loan for the purpose of building a labourer's cottage will be supplied by that Board with all necessary information. A copy of the order of the Sub-Commission should be forwarded with the application.

13. Any tenant intending to build a labourer's cottage, in compliance with an order of a Sub-Commission, without a loan, will be supplied, on application to the Secretary of the Land Commission, with a plan, design, and specification, in conformity with the order of the Sub-Commission.

14. With regard to loans for the improvement of labourers' cottages, the Board of Works have informed the Land Commission that they will "entertain any application, however small, provided the sum applied for be sufficient to carry out the order of the Land Commission Court. It would, however, be well for the Sub-Commission Court to name some adequate sum, to leave a margin for contingencies and costs chargeable by the Board, and the Board on receiving their inspector's report would limit the actual loan to the sum necessary.

"But the Board would point out as an objection to making very small loans that the costs of inspection, &c., chargeable to the loan would be in a very high proportion to the amount available for expenditure; and they would further observe that where a fair rent has been secured to a tenant for 15 years, on a holding large enough to employ labour outside his own family, it would seem that the tenant should be able to incur the small expenditure necessary, without assistance."

15. When an order is made by a Sub-Commission for the improvement of a cottage, it should specify, as much in detail as possible, the extent and nature of the improvements directed.

By Order,

DEMS GODLEY.

24, Upper Merrion-street, Dublin,
September, 1882.

PUBLICANS' CERTIFICATES.

At Kildysart annual licensing sessions on Wednesday last, before Messrs. T. Rice Henn and P. Purcell, justices, the validity of the payment of 2s. 6d. to the petty sessions clerk for filling and countersigning a publican's certificate was questioned by a publican named B. Heher, on the grounds that he had filled the certificate himself, and that the supervisor at Ennis informed him that the signature of the petty sessions clerk was not required. The clerk objected to the renewal, stating that while he had got a list of all the publicans in the district from the clerk of the peace, he did not receive Heher's. Besides, the names of six householders in the certificate as to character were in applicant's own handwriting. Applicant stated his name was in the registry, that he had the consent of the householders, and insisted that as the police had no objection to the renewal, the magistrates should sign it without emolument to the clerk. The magistrates held that the householders' signatures should be their own, and objected to sign, whereupon the applicant left the court, filled another form, got the householders themselves to sign, and presented it then to the magistrates who signed it.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Letters and communications intended for publication, and addressed to THE EDITOR, 53 Upper Backville-street, Dublin, must be authenticated by the name of the writer, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We throw open the columns of this Journal most willingly for the discussion of subjects of interest to the Profession; but it must be understood that we do not necessarily agree with all the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

PREVENTION OF CRIME ACT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR.—There was a case came before two R.M.'s at Carrick-on-Suir, under the 11th section of the Act, a short time ago, and the defendant tendered himself and was examined by his solicitor as a witness, by virtue of sub-section 2, which declares that "Upon the hearing of a charge under this section against a person, that person may, if he thinks fit, be examined as an ordinary witness in the case."

It appeared that there were several persons with the accused on the occasion in question, but all of them got off except him. The Sessional Crown Solicitor, on cross-examination, asked the accused:—"Who were your companions on this night?" He said, "I will not tell you."

An application was then made to commit him for contempt, under the 13th section of the Petty Sessions Act, in not answering the question, or not giving any excuse for not doing so, but the magistrates, on consultation, held the accused was not bound to answer any question unless what he wished.

Do you think the magistrates were right in this decision?

Yours truly,

A SUBSCRIBER.

[We should prefer to decline answering questions of this kind—which might assume a wider range—and do not see that any useful purpose would be served by offering our opinion; but, other correspondents may well express theirs, as such matters clearly fall within the province of this department.—ED.]

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

The Right Hon. the Attorney-General has appointed David Lynch, Esq., Crown Prosecutor for the North Riding of Tipperary; Stephen P. Curtis, Esq., to the South Riding of Tipperary; and Henry William Lover, Esq., Crown Prosecutor for the City of Kilkenny.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Criminal and Judicial Statistics, 1881, Ireland. Part I.—Police—Criminal Proceedings—Prisons. Part II.—Civil Proceedings in Central and Larger and Smaller District Courts. Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty. Dublin: Printed by Alex. Thom & Co., 87, 88, & 89 Abbey-street, the Queen's Printing Office. For Her Majesty's Stationery Office. 1882.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

MICHAELMAS SITTINGS, 1882.

NOTICE.

The PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION of Candidates for Apprenticeship will be held at the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin, on Thursday and Friday, the 19th and 20th days of October, 1882, at Eleven o'clock.

N.B.—All Papers to be lodged on or before Tuesday, 3rd of October, 1882.

The FINAL EXAMINATION of Candidates seeking admission as Solicitors will be held at the same place, on Monday and Tuesday, the 23rd and 24th days of October, 1882, at the same hour.

By Order of the Council,

JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitor's Hall, Four Courts, Dublin.

The Competitive Examination for the Society's Prize will be held on Friday, Monday, and Tuesday, the 20th, 23rd, and 24th days of October, 1882, at Eleven o'clock each day.

N.B.—The decision of the Court of Examiners will be announced on Wednesday, the 8th of November, 1882, at Three o'clock, p.m.

Candidates residing in the Country need not remain in town to hear decision, but can learn same from the Dublin Morning Papers of the day following the announcement.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

HILARY SITTINGS, 1883.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

NOTICE.

Candidates wishing to present themselves at the above Examination must lodge their papers, &c., on or before the first day of Michaelmas Sittings, 1882.

By Order,

JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin,
September, 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in italics.

Flanagan, Thomas, of Ennistymon, in the county of Clare, draper. September 8; Tuesday, October 3, and Friday, October 20. Bennett Thompson, solr.

Kidd, George, of Raheen, Strabarth, in the county of Wexford, farmer. September 8; Tuesday, October 3, and Friday, October 20. John Mathews and Thomas J. O'Dempsey, solrs.

Moore, James, of Ballyllyn, in the county of Donegal, farmer. September 5; Tuesday, October 3, and Friday, October 20. Horace Wilm, solr.

Reynolds, Bernard, of No. 8 Bolton-street, in the city of Dublin, vintner. September 8; Tuesday, October 3, and Friday, October 20. M. Larkin & Co., solrs.

Whittle, James, of Longford, in the county of Longford, master tailor in Her Majesty's 18th Regiment of Hussars. September 5; Tuesday, October 3, and Friday, October 20. Casey & Clay, solrs.

There were 179,206 persons committed to prison last year, of whom 60,840 (40,619 males and 20,221 females) could neither read nor write.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	SEPTEMBER
	Sat. 16	Mon. 18	Tues. 19	Wed. 20	Thur. 21	Fri. 22
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	—	99½	99	99½	—	—
— New 3 p c Stock ..	—	98½	98½	98½	—	98½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1888 } Trafal. at ..	—	103	103	—	—	—
3½ p c Jan. 1891 } Bk. of Irel. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
BANKS.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	—	318	318½	318½	—
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	34
20 London and County (Ltd.) ..	—	—	—	—	77½	—
15 London Joint Stock ..	—	46½	—	—	—	—
20 London and W'minster, Ltd ..	—	—	—	70½	—	70½
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
3½ Munster Bank (Limited) ..	—	7	—	7	—	—
— Nat. Prov. of England, Hm. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	—	23½	—	—	24	23½
10 National of Liverpool (Ltd.) ..	—	14½	—	14½	—	—
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	26½	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
2½ Ulster Banking Co. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Union of Australia ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15½ Union of London ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British & Irish ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin ..	—	10½	—	—	—	—
50 Dublin & Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co. ..	—	—	—	—	60	—
50 Peninsular and Oriental ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance & Dub. Cona. Gas ..	—	16½	—	—	—	—
8 Do. do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott & Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
7½ Dub. Drapery Warehouse, Ltd. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 M'Kenzie & Sons (Ltd.) ..	—	—	—	—	6	—
4 National Discount, Inc., Ltd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance ..	CLOSED	—	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	10½	—	10½	10½
10 L'pl Un'td Tram & Bus Ltd ..	—	12½	—	—	—	—
10 N'th Metr. Tramway, Lond. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
50 Belfast and County Down ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Belfast and Northern Cos. ..	—	—	—	52	—	—
50 Cork and Bandon ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	119½	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	116½	—	—	—	116½
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	86½	86½	87	—	—
100 Waterford & Cent. Ireland ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 Belfast & N'th'n Cos, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 D., W., & W., 6 per cent ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. N'th'n (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	108½	—
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	—	—	101½	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast & N'th'n Cos, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin & Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	105½	—	—	105½	105½
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. 4½ p c ..	—	—	114½	114½	—	—
— Do. 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n & West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	105½	105½	—	—	106
— Do. 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
Belfast Office Deb., £92 6s 3d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
City Deb. of £92 6s 3d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Dub. & Glas. S. P. Co. (1887) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Do. (1888), 6 p c ..	—	100½	—	—	100	—
Dub. & Kingstown 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	102½	—
Dublin Water Works, 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discounts—4 per cent., 17th August, 1882
Of Deposits—1 per cent., 23rd March, 1882

Name Days—September 26th, and October 11th, 1882.
Account Days—September 27th, and October 12th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

The Stock Exchange and Brokers' Offices will be closed on Saturdays during the month of September.

Holloway's Pills.—Health or Wealth.—No sane person would hesitate an instant in the choice between these two conditions. Now is the season to secure the former either by restoring or confirming it. These Pills expel all impurities from the system which fogs, foul vapours, and variable temperatures engender during winter. This medicine also acts most wholesomely upon the skin by disgorging the liver of its accumulated bile, and by exciting the kidneys to more energetic action; it increases the appetite for food and strengthens the digestive process. The stomach and liver, with which most disorders originate, are fully under the control of these regenerative Pills, which act very kindly yet most efficiently on the tenderest bowels.

In Sergeant Ballantyne's "Recollections" we read: "Once in a case before Sir Lancelot Shadwell, Mr. Wakefield demanded that judgment should be given in his favour, because Sir Lancelot had already given his decision in the similar case of Jones v. Webb. The Vice-Chancellor had no recollection on the point. Mr. Bethell, on the other side, was equal to the occasion. He got up and said: 'I perfectly recollect the case of Jones v. Webb mentioned by my learned friend, but my learned friend, of course, accidentally, omitted to mention that your Honour's judgment was finally reversed on appeal in the House of Lords.' This was too much for the ingenious Mr. Wakefield, who, in his despair, was heard to mutter, 'What a d— lie, there never was such a case at all!'"

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

PRICE—September 19, at the Retreat, Greystones, the wife of George Robert Price, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a son (stillborn).

MARRIAGES.

GIRVIN and GIRVIN—September 14, at the Church of the Holy Trinity, Halstead, by the Rev J. Greenham, assisted by the Rev. L. Cornah, William J. Girvin, Esq., solicitor, Armagh, to Rowena, eldest daughter of Robert Girvin, Esq., Oaklands Park, Halstead, Essex.

MERRILL and CRAWFORD—September 19, at Temple Michael, Longford, by the Rev. W. R. Moore, B.A., J. Merrill, Esq., 18th Hussars, to Anne Phillips, only daughter of the late Henry Crawford, Esq., barrister-at-law, and J.P. for the County of Longford.

DEATHS.

TOWNSEND—September 18, at Cliff House, Dunmore East, J. H. Townsend, Esq., solicitor, late of Saintsbury, Killiney.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET. 3-7

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO., LIMITED.

SECURITY, &c.

RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—

39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 51

PUBLIC NOTICES:

EVERY MAN WHO SMOKES
Should invest 24 stamps for the
NEW PERFECTED

The Best
Selected Briars
only.

JENINGS & CO., Inventors, 97 NEWGATE-ST., LONDON.
The most Perfect Pipe invented since Smoking began.

Prospectus Free.

61

BINDING "THE IRISH LAW TIMES."

SUBSCRIBERS are informed that they can have THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, with TITLE PAGE and Copious INDEX, Bound at the following Prices, per Volume, viz.:—Whole-bound in Cloth, 2s. 6d.; half-bound in Law Calf, 4s.; whole-bound in Law Calf, 6s. 6d.; also, THE IRISH LAW TIMES REPORTS, or PUBLIC GENERAL STATUTES can be bound separately at the following charges each:—Whole-bound in Cloth, 1s. 9d.; half-bound in Law Calf, 3s.

AT THE OFFICE,

53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.
The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

63

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

LIVERPOOL.

PRIVATE ENQUIRIES and INVESTIGATIONS

CONDUCTED BY

MR. THOMAS DEANE,

17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange),

Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.

Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.

References.

ESTABLISHED 1878.

167

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,

the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

Agents—Messrs. Dudgeon & Son, 113 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewart & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin.

67

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S. F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c., for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111 GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's).

Late of WATERHOUSE & Co.'s

90

STOKES BROTHERS,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN.

293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
78, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c., &c.

160

N. PETERSON & SON,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LIVERPOOL AND LONDON CHAMBERS,
1, FOSTER-PLACE, COLLEGE-GREEN,
DUBLIN.

813

Printed and Published by the Proprietor, JOHN FALCONER, every Saturday, at 53, Upper Sackville-street, in the Parish of St. Thomas and City of Dublin.—Saturday, September 30, 1882.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ARREARS OF RENT (IRELAND) ACT, 1882.

FORMS PRESCRIBED BY THE RULES.

- A.—Notice of Intention by Landlord or Tenant to apply for Arrears .. .. . 1d.
- B.—Joint Application by the Landlord and Tenant .. .. . 1d.
- C.—Joint Application by Landlord and Tenants .. .. . 4d.
- D.—Notice by Treasury requiring Investigation of the Case .. .. . 1d.
- E.—Application by Tenant for an Order for Payment of Arrears to or for benefit of his Landlord .. .. . 1d.
- F.—Application by Landlord for an Order for payment of Arrears due by Tenant to or for benefit of such Landlord .. .. . 1d.
- G.—Statement of Property and Effects of the above-named Tenant applicable to the satisfaction of the Arrears of Rent .. .. . 1d.
- H.—Report of Investigator .. .. . 1d.
- I.—Notice showing Cause against Conditional Order .. .. . 1d.
- J.—Notice to Landlord of Absolute Order for payment to him or for his benefit of sum in respect of Arrears .. .. . 1d.
- K.—Notice to Tenant that Arrears of Rent of Holding are Released and Extinguished .. .. . 1d.
- L.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where the Landlord is absolutely entitled .. .. . 1d.
- M.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where several Holdings are comprised in claim, and where the Landlord is absolutely entitled .. .. . 1d.
- N.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where Landlord himself is not in receipt of Rent of Holding .. .. . 1d.
- O.—Claim by Landlord for payment of Amount ordered to be paid to or for his benefit, where Landlord himself is not in receipt of the Rent, and where several Holdings are comprised in the claim .. .. . 1d.
- P.—Notice by Incumbrancer, Trustee, or Receiver, claiming to be entitled to Arrears of Rent .. .. . 1d.
- Q.—Notice of Appeal from Order of Legal Assistant Commissioner .. .. . 1d.
- R.—Application by Landlord for cancelling of Rent-charge under 59th Section of Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881 .. .. . 1d.
- S.—Application by Tenant for cancelling Rent-charge, created under 59th Section of Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881 .. .. . 1d.
- T.—Joint Application by Landlord and Tenant for Advance by way of Loan under Section 16 .. .. . 4d.

(Complete Set of Forms, post free, 2s. 3d.)

BILLIARD BALLS, CHALKS,

B CUES, and TIPS, and all other Billiard Table requisites, at HENNING BROS.' Ivory Works, 11, High-street, London, W.C. Also the cheapest house in the trade for Ivory Hair-brushes, Mirrors, and all other Ivory Toilet articles and Ivory Goods in general. Old Balls adjusted or exchanged, and Tables re-covered. Price Lists, Cloth, and Cushion Rubber Samples Post Free.—Established 1862.

26

ROBERT WHYTE,

Ladies' & Gentlemen's Boot & Shoe Manufacturer,

1, NORTH FREDERICK-STREET

(Rutland-square),

ESTABLISHED OVER HALF A CENTURY.

Boots made for Weak Ankles, Deformed Feet, and Surgical purposes of every description.

All Work executed on the Premises under my personal superintendence.

None but first-class Workmen employed in either Making or Repairing

D. W. CARROLL,

44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,

Wishes to call attention to his large

STOCK OF NOTEPAPERS AND ENVELOPES,

Direct in every instance from the Makers.

They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of

LEATHER GOODS,

Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-

randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,

With every article connected with Stationery.

Are Sold much under usual charges.

Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.

Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge.

72

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1882.

No. 819

OUR WIVES.—I.

OUR readers are aware that by virtue of the provisions of the "Married Women's Property Act, 1882," which received the Royal assent upon the 16th of August last, and will come into operation on the 1st of January next, a large proportion of the married women of Ireland, as well as of England, will upon that day enter upon an entirely new and much-sought-for existence; but probably very few persons in this country have as yet any very distinct notion of the extent or precise character of the changes which this Act involves. It takes some time fully to realise the various effects of a statute which is about to confer upon every woman who happens to be then under coverture, or will subsequently become so, what may be described as a substantially unrestricted legal status—the capacity, so far as regards any woman whose marriage takes place any time after the close of the present year, to keep for herself, free from the control of her husband (without any marriage settlement, and without even the intervention of a trustee), all property of any description, movable or immovable, which was her own at the time of her marriage, and as regards every wife, whether married before or after that time, the capacity to hold and enjoy for her separate use, all property that will, after this year, devolve upon her, or be acquired by her in any trade or occupation, or otherwise, and to dispose of any of the hereinafore mentioned property by will or otherwise; and lastly—what, it is sometimes forgotten, is of paramount importance to the class of wives that will be chiefly affected by the Act—the capacity to bind themselves and others by contracts readily enforceable by law, thereby qualifying wives, for the first time in our legal history, to transact upon equal terms all ordinary business dealings with business men (45 & 46 Vict., c. 75, sections 1, 2, and 5). It is, furthermore, worthy of note that by section 1, sub-section 4, it is expressly enacted that "Every contract entered into by a married woman with respect to and to bind her separate property shall bind not only the separate property which she was possessed of or entitled to at the date of the contract, but also all separate property which she may thereafter acquire," thus reversing, in favour of persons having dealings with her, the rule laid down in the case of Pike v. Fitzgibbon, L. R. 17 Ch. Div. 454. Since 1870, married women have been competent to bring actions in their own names, just as if they were femes sole, for the enforcement of contracts entered into with them in respect of the limited class of statutory separate property created by the Act of that year (33 & 34 Vict., c. 93; see sub-section 11), and "for the protection and security" of it. Corresponding but wider provisions are contained in the enactment of this year (45 & 46 Vict., c. 75; see sections 1 and 12), which confer upon her the same direct remedies against all persons as if she were a feme sole, and give them with respect to all her separate property, including the new classes of property brought into that category by the new statute.

We wish, for the reasons we are about to state, to direct particular attention to the facilities for enforcing by law, claims against the separate estate of a married woman, which are affected by the two following sub-sections of section 1:—

Sec. 1, sub-sec. 2.—"A married woman shall be capable of entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of and to the extent of her separate property, on any contract, and of suing and being sued either in contract or in tort, or otherwise, in all respects as if she were a feme sole, and her husband need not be joined with her as plaintiff or defendant, or be made a party to any action or other legal proceeding brought by or taken against her; and any damages or costs recovered by her in any such action or proceeding shall be her separate property; and any damages or costs recovered against her in any such action or proceeding shall be payable out of her separate property, and not otherwise."

Sub-sec. 5.—"Every married woman carrying on a trade separately from her husband shall, in respect of her separate property, be subject to the bankruptcy laws in the same way as if she were a feme sole."

We observe in some quarters what appears to be an undue tendency to take a dark view of the possibly injurious influence upon home life and upon the peace of the domestic circle, that may accrue from an enactment like this, giving, as it does, to a wife (should she think fit to exercise it) absolute control as against her husband of what the law now allows her to call her own property; though previous long experience in the analogous case of the settlement of a woman's property to her separate use, points rather to a different conclusion; and it is to be borne in mind that marriage settlements of any kind can still be entered into where desirable, after the Act comes into operation (sect. 19). While the public mind has been perhaps too much troubled by such domestic considerations, too little attention has been hitherto directed to the other aspect of the question—namely, that in which, not the new relations of the husband and wife to one another are considered, but the improved relations introduced by the Act between the wife alone, or the husband and wife, on the one hand, and third parties with whom they, or either of them, wish to have dealings, on the other. Paradoxical though the statement may seem at first, it is nevertheless true that perhaps no one of the disabilities under which wives have hitherto laboured has pressed so hardly upon many a one amongst them, as that which has resulted from her practical incapacity to incur liabilities that could always be enforced against herself, cheaply and directly, without bringing before the court some other person, either husband or trustee, and from the consequent insecurity justly felt by the public as regards all business dealings with her. A little consideration, however, will satisfy us that, as the law has heretofore stood, many wives have suffered severely from the well-founded reluctance of traders and others to enter into business dealings with them. For instance (and this case is typical of a numerous class), many a married woman whose husband is abroad or engaged in some occupation which requires him to reside, to a greater or less extent, away from her—not to mention the case of wives who are not on terms with, or have been deserted by, their husbands—is thereby placed in great difficulty with respect to the obtaining of the goods necessary for the carrying on of some business, in procuring the possession of a house to reside in or let out in lodgings, or in any other way working out a livelihood; for, under such (10 Ex. 698), this view was doubted by Lord Wensleydale, who indicated his adhesion to the doctrine of R. v. Garbett, though deeming the rule still (1855) unsettled; while again, in Siblebottom v. Adkins (27 L. J. Ch. 152), Stewart, V.C., dissented from the rule laid down in Fisher v. Ronalds, though admitting that there might be cases in which the witness would be the sole judge. On the other hand, in Adams v. Lloyd (3 H. & N. 351), Pollock, C.B., approved of Fisher v. Ronalds, adding: "The only exception I would make would be this—if the circumstances disclosed made the judge perfectly certain that the witness was trifling with the court, and availing himself of a rule of law in which in fact there was no ground, then I think it is the duty of the judge to insist on his answering." But then, in R. v. Boyes (1 B. & S. 311, 30 L. J. Q. B. 801, 5 L. T. N. S. 147), an express and well-considered decision was pronounced on the subject, in 1861, holding that a witness can only claim the right of refusing to answer a question when the court is satisfied that there is any real danger of a prosecution if he does answer (and that the privilege cannot be claimed after a pardon under the great seal for the supposed offence). And in Ex p. Scholfeld, re Firth (6 Ch. Div. 230) there is a dictum, or something more, of James, L.J., in 1877, to the same effect.

"LAW JOURNAL REPORTS" FOR OCTOBER.

In the monthly number of the Law Journal Reports for October twenty-six cases are reported, of which nineteen are from the Chancery Division, and seven from the Queen's Bench Division.

Of the Chancery cases Hurst v. Hurst, in the Court of Appeal, is a case in which a life interest in certain freeholds and leaseholds, settled by will, with remainder to the children of the life tenant, and an acceleration on his alienation or bankruptcy, was held as to the freeholds well charged by the life tenant, who was heir-at-law of the testator, but not as to leaseholds, which were subject to a residuary bequest. In Munster v. Cammel & Co., a power under the articles of a company for the directors to fill casual vacancies among themselves was held well exercised, although an annual meeting had occurred between the vacancy and the appointment. In Ex parte Pitt, re Gosling, a bankruptcy was held by the Court of Appeal validly closed, although there were no assets; but, on reopening it, notices must be given to creditors since the adjudication to prove against property acquired since that date. In the case of Re Dickinson, ex parte Rosenthal, the Court of Appeal held the requirement of a deposit within twenty-one days from entering an appeal in bankruptcy to be imperative as to time. In Whittaker v. Whittaker the uncorroborated testimony of a widow as to loans made to her deceased husband was held not a sufficient proof against his estate. In the case of Re Hyatt's Trust an order under the Trustee Acts was made vesting property in new trustees when the existing trustees refused to transfer. In the case of In re the Great Western (Forest of Dean) Coal Consumers' Company a petition to wind up by the holder of a charge was ordered to stand over for six months, the company undertaking to give notice of other proceedings and not to wind up voluntarily. In The Attorney-General v. The Shrewsbury and Kingsland Bridge Company the Attorney-General was held entitled to sue for interference with public ways without proof of actual injury. In The Mayor of Hyde v. The Bank of England property acquired by a local authority under the powers of an Act was held "vested under" the Act, so as to pass to a borough under section 310 of the Public Health Act. In the case of In re Ward, ex parte Ward, in the Court of Appeal, the obtaining of a quotation on the Stock Exchange by fraud was held not to affect contracts by persons not parties to the fraud and a claim for the balance of money due from a defaulter on the Stock Exchange, whose assets had been distributed by the Stock Exchange assignee, was held maintainable. In the case of Re Reynolds, ex parte Reynolds, the Court of Appeal laid down that the statement of a witness that answers will criminate him is not conclusive; but the Court must be satisfied, allowing due latitude, that the witness is in peril. In Ex parte Vanderlinden, re Pagosa, an amendment to a petition in bankruptcy was allowed, although it stated, contrary to the fact, that the petitioner was unsecured, he having told the bankrupt that the security was worthless, and being willing to give it up. In the case of Re Clarke an infant was ordered to be educated in the Roman Catholic religion when such appeared to be the intention of his Protestant father, and seemed most beneficial. In the case of In re the Oak Pits Colliery Company (Limited) the Court of Appeal held that a landlord was not entitled to priority in respect of rent accruing since the liquidation when the property was in the possession of the company's mortgagees. In the case of Re Higgins and Hichman's Contract, it was held that where the vendor's predecessor in title had covenanted with a railway company not to use the property as a public-house, he did not make "a good title" according to his agreement. In Hill v. The Midland Railway Company the defendants were held entitled to enter on lands for the purpose of making a tunnel on paying the estimated value of the easement into Court, although they had power to take the easement only in the event of the jury or arbitrator finding that no damage would be done to the surface. In The Midland Railway Company v. The Haunchwood Brick and Tile Company, a bed of clay was held by Mr. Justice Kay to be "mines deemed to be excepted out of the conveyance" to a railway company, within the meaning of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act. In Glen v. Gregg it was held by the Court of Appeal that the sanction of the charity commissioners was not required to an action to administer the trusts of a place of religious worship. In Andrew v. Aitken the executors of a defendant were held entitled to an ex parte order to prosecute his counter-claim.

Of the Queen's Bench cases Brown v. The Great Western Railway Company, a gallant attack of an individual on a great company, is the first. The Court of Appeal held that when the Great Western Railway Company amalgamated with the Birmingham and Oxford Junction Railway, on condition of reducing the tolls to a penny a mile, this fare was payable in respect of the distance from Acton to Paddington, although originally the Great Western were entitled to charge 2s. for this distance of five and a half miles. It is also held that the company is not bound to maintain mile posts on the railway for the benefit of ordinary passengers, but only with a view to persons who may run their own trains. In Thompson v. Farrey the Court of Appeal lay down the law as between shipowners and the Board of Trade in detaining a vessel suspected of unseaworthiness. The Board may detain, provisionally, if there appear reasonable grounds for so doing, although those grounds turn out to be unfounded, and the question of reasonableness is for the jury, not the judge. In Griffiths v. Earl Dudley it was held that a workman may contract himself and his representatives, in case of death, out of the Employers' Liability Act. In Wall v. Taylor it was held that the public performance of a musical composition, without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright, is forbidden irrespectively of the place being a place of dramatic entertainment. In Burman v. Rodocanachi the House of Lords held that the value in a valued policy only binds the parties; and that, if the insured recovers more in respect of loss against which he was not insured from other sources, he is not trustee for the insurer. In Morgan v. Thomas a devise of land to L. for life, and after death to his issue and their heirs, was held to confer only a life interest on L. in spite of Shelley's case. In Ford v. Kettle an affidavit of attestation of a bill of sale, which only verified the signature of the solicitor, was held insufficient, as it did not prove his presence when the grantor executed.—Law Journal.

THE RELEASE OF MR. GRAY, M.P.

Although Mr. Gray is released from prison we hope that the subject of contempt of court will not be forgotten, but will be considered dispassionately, like other questions of legal procedure. There is no doubt that the courts should have power to repress and punish manifest contempts committed in open court. Thus, if a man insults or assaults a judge in court, he shall be liable to prompt fine and imprisonment; but there should be an appeal if the punishment exceeds a certain limit—say above £100 or six weeks' imprisonment. The present system is certainly contrary to the usual system of our procedure. The judge tries both law and fact, he may even be judge in his own case; for though, if the contempt was a personal insult, possibly some other judge would try it, yet if the contempt was only personal in the sense that it related to a trial over which a judge was presiding, he would probably try it himself. But the most serious aspect of the case is, that it may involve imprisonment for life. Thus, if a party to a suit is ordered to do some act and refuses, a lifelong imprisonment may be the result. Surely this ought to be avoided. If a plaintiff obstinately refuses to obey some order of the court during a trial, let his suit be dismissed; if a defendant let his defence be struck out. So if a defendant is ordered to do some physical act, such as pull a wall down, the simplest plan is to authorize either the plaintiff or an officer of the court to pull it down, and if needful send police to protect the workmen. The present plan is really absurd; the punishment is so greatly in excess of the fault, and after all, does not necessarily obtain obedience.—Law Times.

There can be little doubt that in exercising the prerogative which was vested in him alone, Mr. Justice Lawson had due regard to the expression of public opinion which was called forth by the strong measure which he felt it his duty to take, but none who knows his character would believe that he would have yielded to any pressure, however powerful and urgent, if he did not feel that a necessity for so stern a vindication of the sovereign authority of the court was no longer needed. He has been subjected to obloquy and insults on the part of those whose habit it is to malign the judges and endeavour to excite popular prejudices against them, but he has borne the attacks with calm and dignified indifference, unshaken as he was by the conviction that the step which he took was imperatively called for by the circumstances, and that the lesson which he gave would prove as salutary as it was undoubtedly severe. It was fully justified by the result. The course of justice which had been hindered and imperilled by the rash and intemperate writings which he condemned, writings which were calculated to paralyse the hand of the law and deter the jurors and officials from discharging their duty, has been clear and smooth. Perfect freedom has been secured to all, and the trials which, in all probability, would otherwise have been abortive, have ended in every case in the conviction of the guilty criminals. It is impossible to measure the value of the service thus rendered to the peace and welfare of the country, and whatever may be thought upon the abstract question whether a judge should be entrusted with an absolute uncontrollable power to punish for contempt of court, it cannot be with truth denied that the occasion was most critical and the offence proportionately great, having regard to the possible consequences and to the high and responsible position of the offender. The sole object which the judge had in view was to further the ends of justice and, that having been effected, he felt at liberty to yield to a generous inspiration and cancel the unsatisfied portion of the sentence.—Times.

Messrs. Kegan, Paul & Co., are about to publish two volumes of poetry from the Irish judicial bench. These are a new edition of Mr. Justice O'Hagan's excellent translation of The Song of Roland; and Hymni Usitati Latine Reddita, by Mr. Justice Lawson.

THE LAW RELATING TO BURGLARS.

Sharp experience is the only school for brutalized intelligences, and a burglar or two shot dead and his slayer not treated as a criminal, but rather as a public benefactor, would be an event as strictly in accordance with law as it would be likely to discourage further enterprises in that particular walk of crime. As it is, we are aware, a serious thing to tell a man that he is entitled to take a fellow-creature's life, we proceed, without further comment, to give our authorities for the position we have laid down.

In the municipal law of this country, we find a practical consensus of opinion to the effect that the killing of a burglar taken in the act of burglary falls under the head of justifiable homicide. The fallacy into which people have fallen on this point seems to be based on the idea that the only justification possible in such cases is that of personal danger to the man who is called upon to cope with the burglar. This is not so; a forcible and felonious attempt against a man's house or goods justifies the use even of extreme force in defence thereof just as much as a similar attempt against his person. Indeed in certain cases, not necessary to be referred to here, the law would appear to allow even greater latitude in the protection of the house than of the person. Burglary, from its very nature, comprises such an attempt both against house and goods; and accordingly in all the text-books it figures, so to speak, as the representative crime which it is lawful to repel by any amount of force. Thus in East's "Pleas of the Crown" we read:—"A man may repel force by force in defence of his person, habitation, or property against one who manifestly intends or endeavours by violence or surprise to commit a known felony such as robbery, arson, burglary, and the like, upon either. In these cases he is not obliged to retreat, but may pursue his adversary until he has secured himself from all danger; and, if he kill him in so doing, it is called justifiable self-defence." The next quotation is from Bacon's "Abridgment," a work of considerable authority, which we give, merely omitting immaterial parts, which we have also done in some of the succeeding extracts:—"It is clear that the killing of a person in the defence of a man's person, house, or goods, is justifiable in the following instances, as where the owner of a house, or any of his servants or lodgers, kills one who attempts to burn it or to commit in it murder, robbery, or other felony." So, again, Foster—"An attempt is made to commit burglary in a habitation; the owner, or any part of his family, or even a lodger with him, may lawfully kill the assailant to prevent the mischief intended." In Stephen's "Blackstone" we find that "If any person attempts to break open a house in the night-time, and shall be killed in such attempt either by the owner of the house or the servant attendant upon him, or by any other person present and interposing to prevent mischief, the slayer shall be acquitted and discharged." Again in Archbold's "Criminal Law" it is laid down as follows:—"If a person attempt burglariously to break any dwelling-house in the night-time, and be killed in the attempt, the slayer shall be acquitted and discharged, for the homicide is justifiable, and the killing is without felony; and not only the person whose property is thus attacked, but his servants or other members of his family, or even strangers who are present at the time, are equally justified in killing the assailant;" and the author specially lays down that the person defending his house is not constrained to give way to the offender. Mr. Justice Stephen in his "Digest of Criminal Law" states the law on the point as follows:—"Intentional infliction of death or bodily harm is not a crime when it is done by any person in order to prevent the commission of burglary, or any other felony in which the felon so acts as to give the person who kills or wounds him reasonable ground to believe that he intends to accomplish his purpose by open force," and he adds as a rider, "provided that the object cannot be otherwise attained." Mr. Justice Stephen would seem to imply that burglary is a felony the commission of which entitles a man to believe that the burglar intends to accomplish his purpose by open force. But even if the existence of this reasonable ground be an additional condition, we cannot see that it materially affects the position. In the ordinary course of such events, a man becomes suddenly aware of the presence of a burglar in his house; that burglar has ex hypothesi committed a crime of violence in breaking in; it is perfectly reasonable, therefore, to suppose that, unless prevented, he will proceed to accomplish his purpose—namely, that of stealing in a dwelling-house, in itself a felony—by force, whereby we understand not necessarily force as applied to the person. Nor do we believe that Mr. Justice Stephen would contend that a man placed in such a position is to forego the advantage that the possession of arms may give him, and, on the possibility that he may be able to eject the burglar by main force, to enter on a personal struggle with him with a view to ascertaining whether "his object can be so attained."

Summing up the authorities, then, it seems beyond question that in English law, if a householder, or anyone acting on his behalf, finds an intruder in or about to break into his house at night, with an obvious intention of committing a forcible felony therein, he is justified in shooting or otherwise killing him, without parley or previous warning, even setting aside the element of imminent peril to his own life which can scarcely be absent from such a case. It is perhaps unnecessary to add that the reverse of the proposition will not hold, and that the burglar who in such circumstances kills anyone, even though he has himself been repeatedly shot at or wounded first, is most unquestionably guilty of murder.—Saturday Review.

Plate and jewels are luxuries, and need especial care. A millionaire can afford to have an immense safe constructed in the butler's room, and to have it guarded by a night watchman. This is absolute security—as absolute, at any rate, as human affairs permit. But in a small household where there is no man servant, no safe, and no night watchman, we put a premium on burglary when we keep plate or jewels to any considerable amount. The whole philosophy of the matter is summed up in the well-known line of Juvenal—"Cantabit vacuus coram latrone visitor." For the rest there has been of late much dispute as to whether a householder is justified in shooting a burglar. Many learned disquisitions have been written on the subject; and, upon the whole, if we are to look to such antiquated sources of knowledge as Bacon's "Abridgment," and Coymyn's "Digest," and Hale's "Pleas of the Crown," we shall find it definitely ruled that a householder has a clear right to shoot a burglar in delicto. It is doubtful, however, whether old law is always good law, and the suburban householder will perhaps do best to restrain his impetuosity. Mr. Justice Hogan, of the Tombs, at New York, once captured an entire gang of thieves by a very ingenious paradox. Knocking at the door of the room in which they were, he announced his intention of entering, and arresting the whole dozen of them. The answer was that they would fire on him. The retort of Hogan was that, while they had only one man to fire at, he had a dozen, and that the chances were twelve to one in his favour. The burglar of the present day is well aware of this fact. He is one man against a dozen, and the chances are proportionately in his favour. The one instrument to be used against him with safety is, as we said last week, a blunderbuss well charged with swan-shot. A blunderbuss is now an antiquity, but it might well be revived, like Chippendale furniture and Queen Anne architecture. Of the orthodox kind, with a nozzle like that of an ophicleide, it will scatter a charge worthy of a mitrailleuse. It will not kill the burglar, but it will most certainly give him material for subsequent reflection. A country house protected by an honest watchman with a good blunderbuss is practically safe.—Observer.

Except in some special cases of felony, a man may not kill his assailant, unless he was himself at the moment in imminent danger of being killed. Even then, the act will amount to manslaughter, unless he can farther show that before delivering the mortal blow, he "retreated as far as he conveniently or safely could, to avoid the violence of the assault," and did so, to adopt the quaint language of an old authority, "not fictitiously, or in order to watch his opportunity, but from a real tenderness of shedding his brother's blood." The second principle, which is commonly embodied in the old legal maxim that a "man's house is his castle," justifies a man, although no violence has been offered to his person, in taking the aggressive, when a trespass has been committed on his house or lands. All necessary and reasonable force may be used to eject the intruder, although here, again, the law in its anxiety to discourage breaches of the peace, requires that, before stronger measures are resorted to, the wrongdoer shall be requested to leave; and it is only upon his refusal, expressed or to be inferred from his conduct, so to do, that the right to expel him by violence arises. If the trespasser seek to defend his wrongful possession by force, the rightful owner may retaliate upon him, and to avoid death, may even kill him, without being obliged, as in other cases, first to retreat, for as Hale says, "He has the protection of his house to excuse him from flying, as that would be to give up the protection of his house to his adversary." But unless and until his own life is in danger, the occupier of a house is not justified in killing an ordinary trespasser, whether he enter by night or by day.

Such being the general theory of the law, it might seem as though there were some ground for the complaint that it leaves the respectable householder comparatively powerless, in the presence of a burglar of average skill and resolution. The burglar will for obvious reasons, not as a rule, attack, unless he is first attacked, and to shoot him in cold blood would clearly not be an act of excusable homicide within the ordinary meaning of the term. On the other hand, it would be a mere farce to commence proceedings by politely requesting him to leave the house, and to follow up his refusal by "gently laying hands" upon him, and conducting him to the front door. Accordingly, the law, recognising the peculiar atrocity of the crime of nocturnal housebreaking, and sanctioning the universal instinct, which has led all civilised codes to regard it as justifying extreme measures of self-defence, has always treated this as a somewhat exceptional case. As long ago as the reign of Henry VIII., an Act of Parliament was passed by which it was provided that, "if any person attempts to break open a house in the night-time," and is killed in the attempt by one of the inmates, "the slayer shall be acquitted." This statute has since been repealed, but the better opinion appears to be that it simply embodies the common law, and that in substance the rule which it lays down is still in force. It must be remembered, however, that the protection is only given in cases where it is clear that a burglary is actually being committed or attempted, and when the criminal is slain while engaged in the act. The law in no way countenances the notion that any chance nocturnal trespasser may be safely shot at, on the suspicion, however well founded, that he is present with a felonious purpose. But provided it were perfectly plain that a burglary was being perpetrated, the Courts would, doubtless, still hold that the slaughter of the burglar was an act justified by the circumstances. Upon the whole, the law in this matter seems, as the English Criminal Law usually does, to embody the common sense view of the case, and to steer a judicious middle course between two equally perilous extremes. To restrict the householder who finds himself suddenly at the dead of the night in the presence of a burglar to the same measures of self-defence which he could employ against a mere trespasser, would be to treat an exceptionally atrocious crime with strangely misplaced tenderness. To permit him, on the other hand, to take away with impunity the life of any uninvited intruder whom he found on his premises after nine in the evening, on the mere suspicion that his victim was contemplating or engaged in a felony, would lead to a constant recurrence of tragic mistakes, and would expose such useful servants of the public as policemen and firemen to intolerable dangers.—Spectator.

MISCONDUCT OF JURIES.

(Continued from page 499, ante.)

V. Drinking Intoxicating Liquors.—There has been some division of opinion among the courts upon the question whether the mere fact that a jury drink intoxicating liquors during the progress of the trial, or while deliberating upon their verdict, is a sufficient ground for a new trial. Some courts have held, in criminal cases, that the use of such liquors, in quantities however small, without leave of the court, will be good cause for setting aside the verdict, without inquiring what effect it had upon the jurors who drank it;<sup>81</sup> and the rule has also been applied in civil cases,<sup>82</sup> even where the juror during the trial, drank brandy in a trifling quantity, and, as he explained under oath, for necessary medicinal purposes.<sup>83</sup> But the courts generally have adopted the more reasonable rule, that the mere fact that members of a jury have, during the trial of a cause, or while deliberating on their verdict, drank intoxicating liquors, will not be ground for a new trial, unless there is some reason to suppose that such liquors were drunk in such quantities as to unfit them for the performance of their duties, or unless such liquors were furnished by the party in whose favour the verdict was afterward rendered.<sup>84</sup> The circumstances must be such as to create a reasonable suspicion that the indulgence may have improperly influenced the verdict.<sup>85</sup>

A few cases apparently take a distinction between the use of intoxicating liquors by the jury pending adjournments of the court, and the circulating of it among them during the progress of the trial. Thus, in an old case in New York, it appeared that while the case was on trial before a justice of the peace, intoxicating liquors were circulated among the jury while sitting as such; that one of the jurors was disguised with the liquor thus given him; and that the plaintiff in error objected to the circulation of liquor among them while thus sitting. This was held a flagrant case of misbehaviour.<sup>86</sup> In an earlier case in the same State, it appeared that after the evidence on the trial before a justice of the peace and a jury had closed, each of the parties, by permission of the justice, treated the jury to a bottle of whiskey, in order, as the return stated, to "enable them to listen to the remarks of counsel." This was regarded as an act of gross misconduct on the part of the justice; and, as the verdict was also against the merits, the judgment was reversed.<sup>87</sup> On the other hand, where, pending an adjournment of such a trial, a bottle of liquor was passed around among the jurors and other persons present, and no harm appeared to have resulted from it, the verdict was not disturbed. In view of these cases it was said by Oldham, J., in a case in

Arkansas, that the circulation of spirituous liquors among the jury while sitting as such, even with consent of the parties, is cause for reversing the judgment.<sup>88</sup> But even this rule cannot be of universal application; for, obviously, circumstances may arise, though rarely, making it proper for the judge, even without consent of the parties, to permit jurors to partake of intoxicating liquors for medical purposes during the progress of a trial.<sup>89</sup>

Although the fact that a juror drank intoxicating liquors, in violation of his duty, may not be sufficient in a particular case to avoid the verdict, yet it seems that it may be thrown in as a make-weight in support of a motion for a new trial; so that if the act was accompanied with other circumstances of misconduct—as, where a juror separated from his fellows to drink in a bar-room,<sup>90</sup> or where, being interrogated touching his qualifications as a juror, he concealed a bias which he entertained against the opposite party<sup>91</sup>—a new trial may properly be granted.

VI. Improper Communications.—(1.) Between a Juror and the successful Party, his Agent or Attorney.—The grounds on which courts set aside verdicts, to punish attempts at tampering with the jury, have already been stated.<sup>92</sup> It is not to be supposed, however, that the principle there laid down extends so far as to require that the verdict shall be set aside whenever it appears that a communication has taken place between a juror and the prevailing party, or his counsel. Inadvertent remarks touching the case, in the presence of a juror, not knowing him to be such;<sup>93</sup> inadvertent remarks made by the counsel of the prevailing party, in a public place, touching the merits of the case, in the hearing of some of the jurors,<sup>94</sup> or the act of such counsel in asking a member of the jury if they had agreed upon a verdict,<sup>95</sup> have been held not to have this effect. But where the prosecutor in a criminal case exhibited at the place of trial, and at other public places, during the trial, certain papers which had a tendency to create an impression unfavourable to the accused, a verdict against him was set aside; he was held entitled to the benefit of the rule, the same as an unsuccessful party in a civil case.<sup>96</sup>

(2.) Between a Juror and Third Persons.—In conformity with the principle elsewhere stated,<sup>97</sup> the mere fact that a juror is shown to have conversed with a bystander with regard to the case during the progress of the trial, is not sufficient ground for a new trial, unless it be made to appear probable that his mind was thereby improperly influenced.<sup>98</sup> Some courts favour the rule which has been stated with reference to unlawful separations,<sup>99</sup> and hold that where it appears that there has been such a communication the verdict will be set aside, unless it also appear that the successful party receive no benefit therefrom;<sup>100</sup> the difference between the two classes of cases being, that in the one case the mere fact of a communication between a juror and a third person creates a presumption against the integrity of the verdict, and in the other case it does not.

(3.) Between a Juror and Friends of the prevailing Party.—If, during the progress of a trial, friends of the prevailing party have had conversations with members of the jury, or have made declarations in their hearing, with the obvious purpose of influencing the verdict in his favour, the direct tendency of which was so to influence it, the verdict will not be allowed to stand; and this is so, although it may not appear, in point of fact, that

(81) The People v. Douglas, 4 Cow. 26, 36; Jones v. The State, 13 Texas, 168, 179; The State v. Baldy, 17 Iowa, 39; The State v. Bullard, 16 N. H. 139, 145. In Iowa this view is no longer taken. Williamson v. Reddish, 45 Iowa, 550; Van Buitrek v. Daugherty, 44 Iowa, 42.

(82) Leighton v. Sargent, 81 N. H. 120, 137; Gregg v. M'Daniel, 4 Harr. (Del.), 387; Ryan v. Harrow, 27 Iowa, 494 (overruled, as stated in preceding note).

(83) Brant v. Fowler, 7 Cow. 562.

(84) W1 son v. Abrahams, 1 Hill (N. Y.), 207; Pelham v. Page, 6 Ark. 535, 539; The State v. Upton, 30 Mo. 397; Coleman v. Moody, 4 Hen. & M. 1; Redmond v. Royal Ins. Co., 7 Phila. 167; Tripp v. County Commissioners, 3 Allen, 556; Russell v. The State, 53 Miss. 367, 382; Pope v. The State, 36 Miss. 121, 136; Roman v. The State, 41 Wis. 312, 316; Kee v. The State, 28 Ark. 155, 165; Larimer v. Kelly, 18 Kan. 78; Westmoreland v. The State, 45 Ga. 225, 232; The State v. Jones, 7 Nev. 408, 414; Richardson v. Jones, 1 Nev. 405; The State v. Caulfield, 23 La. An. 148; Stone v. The State, 4 Humph. 27; Ross v. The State, 11 Humph. 491; Thompson v. The Commonwealth, 8 Gratt. 639, 649.

(85) Roman v. The State, 41 Wis. 312, 316; Bronson, J., in Wilson v. Abraham, 1 Hill (N. Y.), 207; The State v. Jones, 7 Nev. 408; Larimer v. Kelly, 18 Kan. 78; Parinton v. Humphreys, 3 Me. 379.

(86) Ross v. Davis, 4 Cow. 17.

(87) Kellogg v. Wilder, 15 Johns. 455.

(88) Pelham v. Page, 6 Ark. 535, 538.

(89) See, for instance, United States v. Gibert, 2 Sumn. 19, 81.

(90) Creek v. The State, 24 Ind. 151; Davis v. The State, 35 Ind. 496, 499.

(91) Studely v. Hall, 22 Ma. 198.

(92) Ante, II., (5).

(93) Wise v. Bosley, 32 Iowa, 34; Shes v. Lawrence, 1 Allen, 167.

(94) Turner v. St. John, 3 Coldw. 376.

(95) Carnaghan v. Ward, 8 Nev. 80.

(96) The State v. Hascall, 6 N. H. 352, 360, 363.

(97) Ante, II., (8).

(98) Barlow v. The State, 2 Blackf. 114; The State v. Counsel, 31 N. J. L. 249, 263; March v. The State, 44 Texas, 64, 82; The State v. Fruge, 28 La. An. 857.

(99) Ante, III., (7).

(100) Hamilton v. Pease, 38 Conn. 115.

the verdict was influenced by the unlawful conversations and although they were had without the knowledge of the prevailing party.<sup>101</sup>

VII. Hearing Testimony after retiring.—It is settled, and upon grounds too obvious for discussion, that if a jury, after retiring to consider of their verdict, hear other testimony, it will be ground for a new trial.<sup>102</sup> Where, therefore, after the jury retired, a witness who had been examined on the trial was sent for by them, admitted into their room, and re-examined, without the knowledge or consent of the court or of the parties, a new trial was granted.<sup>103</sup>

VIII. Examining Documents not in Evidence.—For the same reasons, if the jurors take out, or send for books and papers which were not admitted in evidence, and examine them in their room, pending their deliberations, a new trial will be granted, unless it is manifest that there was nothing in the documents so examined of a nature to influence their minds in favour of the verdict which was rendered.<sup>104</sup> For it would be idle to rule out incompetent documentary evidence, if the jury are afterward allowed to take it to their room and consider it while making up their verdict. But where a paper is taken out through inadvertence and soon after withdrawn,<sup>105</sup> or where the papers taken out consist of books which have been used on the trial and frequently referred to by witnesses,<sup>106</sup>—in these and like cases new trials have been refused. So, it is regarded as a safe practice in Pennsylvania to allow the parties to submit to the jury statements of their respective claims, in the nature of bills of particulars, plats of the land claimed in the suit, and the like. These memoranda serve to preserve in the minds of the jury masters which have been detailed to them orally by the witnesses, and so long as they understand that the memoranda themselves are not evidence, no prejudice is deemed to result from it.<sup>107</sup> So, if the paper is wholly immaterial to the issues, and if its delivery to the jury did not involve any attempt at tampering, it will furnish no ground for disturbing their verdict.<sup>108</sup> But the court must see that it was immaterial; and if the chances are equal whether or not it influenced the jury improperly, a new trial ought to be granted.<sup>109</sup> The question is not, however, so much whether the paper was technically material to the issues on trial, as whether it was of a nature to mislead or prejudice the jury against the losing party.<sup>110</sup>

IX. Taking Documentary Evidence to the Jury Room.—Whether the court will permit the jury, on retiring to consider of their verdict, to take to their room depositions and other documents which have been read in evidence, is probably a matter of sound discretion with the judge presiding at the trial.<sup>111</sup> Where all the testimony examined at the trial is in writing, it will ordinarily be proper to send it out with the jury;<sup>112</sup> but it is objectionable to allow the jury to take such depositions to their room unless all the testimony which has been adduced at the trial is in the form of depositions, or other written instruments, so that all of it may be taken out by the jury.<sup>113</sup> And even then, where parts of depositions have been suppressed, the whole deposition ought not to be sent to the jury, since the jury are likely to read the suppressed portions as well as the rest, and be influenced by them.<sup>114</sup> If such depositions are sent to the jury room, and it afterwards appear that the excluded portions were of such a character as to influence the minds of the jury to the injury of the unsuccessful party, a new trial must be granted.<sup>115</sup> The reason which excludes depositions from the jury room where all the testimony has not been given in writing, and sent out, is that the jury, by reading a second time the written evidence, are unconsciously led to give undue weight to that portion of the testimony; the witness who testifies orally speaks but once to the jury, in open court, but he whose testimony is thus reduced to writing speaks twice to them: first in court, and afterwards in the jury room.<sup>116</sup> But where such a deposition is taken out by the jury without leave of court or consent of parties, a new trial will not necessarily be granted.<sup>117</sup> Such a fact does not create a presumption against the verdict such as arises where the document taken out had not been received in evidence; on the contrary, it must appear that the deposition was read by the jury, or some of them, and that it was of itself so important that a re-reading of it would probably lead them to lay undue stress on the facts therein stated.<sup>118</sup> But if the deposition so taken out contain portions which have been excluded as evidence, and it is not clear what influence the excluded portions may have had on the verdict, then this presumption will work a new trial.<sup>119</sup> If a deposition, parts of which have been thus excluded, is handed to the jury by the counsel for the prevailing party, the verdict will be set aside without reference to the merits, upon the principle which avoids verdicts for tampering,<sup>120</sup> unless it is shown that it was wholly inadvertent and that no prejudice resulted from it,<sup>121</sup> and although it fully appear that the rejected portions were not read by the jury.<sup>122</sup> Upon the principle which admits the affidavits of jurors to sustain their verdict, if it appear by the affidavits that a paper which thus improperly went to the jury room was not read by any of them, a new trial will not be granted.<sup>123</sup>—Southern Law Review.

JUDGE O'HAGAN, AND "LIVE AND THRIVE."

Mr. Justice O'Hagan has paid Mr. Healy, M.P., a compliment of which his constituents may be proud. He has made a passage in Mr. Healy's speech at Wexford on Sunday the subject of a long letter to the Freeman, in which he takes the trouble to refute a slander which was repeated by the flippant young gentleman who represents the County Wexford. Irrespective of the person who made it, the charge which was brought against the learned Chief Commissioner hardly called for so much trouble. It referred to the words "live and thrive," which were uttered in Mr. Justice O'Hagan's statement when opening the Land Commission Court last year. The phrase attracted unusual attention at the time, and no ordinary importance was given to it, as a key to the meaning to be put upon the Act by the Sub-Commissioners. It naturally called forth a good deal of criticism at the time, and the sentiment which it was supposed to express has been re-echoed through (101) M'Daniels v. M'Daniels, 40 Vt. 363; Bradbury v. Cony, 62 Me. 223; Nesmith v. Clinton Fibre Ins. Co., 3 Abb. Pr. 141. See also Hamilton v. Pease, 38 Conn. 118; ante, II., (8).

(102) Edson v. The State, 9 Yerg. 406, 410; Booby v. The State, 4 Yerg. 111; Luttrell v. Mayville, Ac., R. Co., 18 B. Mon. 291; The State v. Brazil, 9 Ga. Dec. 107; Smith v. Graves, 1 Brev. 18; Deacon v. Shreve, 22 N. J. L. 178. See also Offt v. Vick, Wash. (Miss.) 99.

(103) Luttrell v. Mayville, Ac., R. Co., supra.
(104) Alger v. Thompson, 1 Allen, 453; Sheaf v. Gray, 2 Yeates, 273; Mundy v. Lambie, 126 Mass. 367; Hutchinson v. Deane, 8 Cranch, 291; Benson v. Fish, 6 Me. 143; United States v. Clarke, 3 Cranch C. Ct. 152.

(105) Templeman v. M'Cleary, 5 Cranch C. Ct. 163.
(106) Lott v. Mason, 3 Stroph. 178, 183.
(107) O'Hara v. Richardson, 46 Pa. St. 385, 389. So in Georgia, Way v. Arnold, 18 Ga. 181, 191.
(108) Lonsdale v. Brown, 4 Wash. C. Ct. 148, 157; Page v. Wheeler, 5 N. H. 91; The People v. Wilson, 8 Abb. Pr. 137; Peacham v. Carter, 21 Vt. 515.

(109) Cowen, J., in Farmers' Bank v. Whinsfield, 24 Wend. 419, 428.
(110) Walker v. Hunter, 17 Ga. 384, 414; Benson v. Fish, 6 Me. 141.
(111) Hosford v. Willett, 9 N. Y. 170, 175 (denying the dicta of Cowen, J., in Farmers' Bank v. Whinsfield, 24 Wend. 175); Hatgrove v. Millington, 8 Kan. 480.
(112) Hatgrove v. Millington, supra.

(113) Negro Jerry v. Townsend, 9 Md. 146, 159.
(114) Wood v. Stewart, 7 Vt. 149; Hopkinson v. Steel, 12 Vt. 589; Warden v. Warden, 22 Vt. 583; Kent v. Tyson, 20 N. H. 121, 127; Foster v. M'O'Blende, 13 Mo. 88, 91.
(115) Ransom v. Curtis, 19 Ill. 456, 481.
(116) Shields v. Guffy, 9 Iowa, 322; Ransom v. Curtis, 19 Ill. 456, 480.
(117) Andrews v. Tinsley, 19 Ga. 203.
(118) Shields v. Guffy, 9 Iowa, 322.
(119) Shepherd v. Thompson, 4 N. H. 213, 217.
(120) Ante, II., (5).
(121) Sheaf v. Gray, 2 Yeates, 273; Foster v. M'O'Blende, 13 Mo. 88, 91; Page v. Wheeler, 5 N. H. 91, 92.
(122) Lonsdale v. Brown, 4 Wash. C. Ct. 148, 157; Via. Abr., tit. "Verdict," G. 3, pl. 19.
(123) Hackley v. Hastie, 3 Johns. 282.

every Land Court in the country. It so happened, however, that the words were omitted from the legal report of the proceedings of the Court, prepared by two members of the Bar, who were supposed to be official, but who, it seems, were not responsible to the Commissioners or subject to their control. This incident afforded an opportunity for casting an imputation upon the Court, and ground for a question in the House of Commons by Mr. Gray, who found in the omission a circumstance of the gravest suspicion. It was only by accident that the learned Chief Commissioner discovered what was meant by the question, for until then he knew nothing about the report referred to. On making inquiry, he discovered that the two law reporters had omitted the passage from the report of his opening observations. He immediately wrote to Mr. Forster, who answered the question in the House. But Mr. Gray still suspected something wrong. He apparently did not believe the assurance given by Judge O'Hagan that he had nothing to do with the omission of the words, and he expressed himself dissatisfied. The learned Commissioner then sent a full categorical statement of the facts, explaining that Messrs. Roche and Dillon, who issued the report, did so without consulting him or submitting any report for revision and correction. It was, we cannot help thinking, a singular course for the reporters to take to omit the most remarkable words in the whole statement, but Mr. Justice O'Hagan knew nothing about it.—Daily Express.

It appears that no official report was submitted to Parliament at all by the Judge, and the report on which the allegation was founded is one published by two legal gentlemen from which the passage in which the phrase occurs has been omitted. It is explained by Judge O'Hagan that he described as a just rent such a rent as might be fairly paid, and "yet permit a tenant not deficient in those qualities of industry and providence, which are expected in any walk of life, to live and thrive." The phrase thus amplified, which is as the Judge spoke it, is something very different from the generally received idea. It is to be regretted that so important an expression of opinion should have been omitted from any report, even a purely legal one, and thus have given rise to so much misconception.—Free-man's Journal.

MR. GIBSON, M.P.

No Parliamentary speaker on either side has advanced to the front with greater rapidity than Mr. Gibson. Having filled, little more than two years ago, with no apparent incongruity, the post of official subordinate to Mr. Lowther, he has made such excellent use of his opportunities that he may now be counted a certain member of the next Conservative Cabinet. Mr. Gibson's rise has, no doubt, been hastened by a somewhat accidental concurrence of favourable conditions. It does not often happen in political life that an ambitious and able man is lucky enough to find a subject upon which he possesses the exclusive information of a specialist, absorbing public attention, and deciding the fate of a Ministry, at a moment when his own party is exceptionally poor, both in the technical knowledge which the occasion demands, and in general debating power. Yet this has been Mr. Gibson's good fortune during the session of 1881 and 1882. No measure was ever submitted to Parliament that raised a greater number of complex and unintelligible issues than the Irish Land Bill of last year. In that pathless waste of intricacies, in which so many even of the most clear-headed critics floundered hopelessly and lost their way, Mr. Gibson moved with the sure and easy step of a man to whom every inch of the ground was familiar. His speech on the second reading was, in its way, a masterpiece. For nearly two hours, with breathless speed and unflagging animation, he dragged the House through all the highways and byways of the Bill, penetrating every hole and corner of it, exposing every hidden flaw, tracking out the unsuspected consequences of unobserved provisions, multiplying illustrations, and accumulating instances, to the manifest embarrassment of his opponents and the bewildered admiration of his exhausted followers. When at last he sat down, and it was seen that no Minister ventured, on the spur of the moment, to reply, the Conservatives were seized with a fit of exultation which lasted for nearly a week, and Mr. Gibson was admitted on all hands to have passed from the second rank among the debaters of his party into the first. The position so won he has since not only maintained but improved. Over and over again, in the protracted debates on the Land Bill last year and on the Arrears Bill during the present session, his special knowledge, reinforced as it always is by a ready tongue and a business-like habit of mind, has been of invaluable service to the Opposition. Mr. Gibson, however, has been careful from the first to let it be known that he will not be content with the reputation of a mere specialist. Even in the House of Commons he has several times made excursions into the field of general politics, and he is rapidly becoming one of the most indefatigable, and at the same time one of the most popular of the platform speakers of his party. He is a vigorous, and, within his reach, a highly effective speaker, of whom may at least be said that whatever his hand finds to do—from the hazardous adventure of crossing swords with Mr. Gladstone in the House of Commons, down to the bloodless work of beating the drum and waving the flag at a Conservative demonstration—he does it manfully and with all his might. To a party officered and led as the Opposition is at present in the Lower House, the value of such a recruit cannot be easily appraised.—Spectator.

THE MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACT, 1882.

This Act marks an epoch in that legislation which for the last twelve years has been changing the legal relationship between man and wife in this country. As an organ of insurance interests, it is in our province to consider the Act in its bearings on the practical business of life insurance. It is often the case that Acts passed with the good intention of improving the position of certain classes have, in practice, been found to have caused vexatious trouble and needless expense to those intended to be benefited by them. It is, therefore, comforting to see so much good work done in this instance. We think that a widow may, under the Act, effect a policy for the benefit of her children which will not unless fraudulent—and then only to the extent specified—be subject to the claims of her creditors. A widower ("any man") seems also empowered to make a similar provision for his children. It also seems competent to include a second wife, if the policy is so drawn as not to exclude her. It is only reasonable that a future wife should be entitled to share with the children generally, seeing that a policy of assurance is often the principal, if not indeed the only, provision which her husband may be able to make for her. It is not necessary to state in the policy that it is effected under the Act, and it may be that a policy opened before the passing of this Act in favour of a woman married before the passing of the Act will, under sect. 5, be held to accrue to her when the Act comes into force. It may also be allowable, under sects. 7 and 10, for a husband to transfer to his wife, by indorsement thereon, a policy on his life opened before the Act, if the transfer is duly intimated, and provided he is solvent at the date of transfer and such transfer is not in fraud of his creditors. The provisions for payment of the sum assured are somewhat similar to those in the Married Women's Policies of Assurance (Scotland) Act, 1880, as regards payment to the legal personal representatives of the assured, and payment may safely be made to them in default of notice to the office that a trustee has been appointed. Where the estate is less than £300, or where administration is necessary, it may sometimes be more economical and convenient to take out administration for the purpose of giving a discharge to the office, than to apply to the court for appointment of a trustee. In cases where administration is required for other purposes, the policy moneys will often fall to be paid to executors and administrators to be held by them in trust. It seems, however, desirable in all cases, and especially where the amount is considerable, that the power of appointing trustees by separate memorandum should be exercised. It is difficult within the compass of a policy to fully state the objects of the trust, and it is desirable that the trustees should be able to retain the deed under which they are to act, which is not the case when their instructions are contained in the policy which has to be given up to the office at settlement of the claim. It should also be kept in view that, where no directions are given to the executors as to the purposes of the trust and investment and apportionment of the sum assured, they may naturally feel inclined to renounce probate, because, if they accept as executors, they will also have to act as trustees of the policy moneys, and may hesitate to accept the trust if they are without instructions for their guidance. It is also more probable, where the objects of the trusts are stated in a separate memorandum, that the interests to be taken by the cestuis que trust will be delared. The want of direction on this point has been a source of trouble, and has necessitated special applications to the court with uncertain result. There is one class of policies, extensively issued by insurance offices, in which the sum assured is payable at death or on the assured attaining a specified age. In the case of a husband assuring his life on this scale for the benefit of his wife and children, the sum assured would, on his attaining the specified age, vest (in default of appointment of trustees) in the husband in trust. It might be thought desirable in such policies to make the sum assurable payable to some other trustee. In the event of it being necessary to surrender a policy opened under the second clause of the section, or of a loan being necessary, it appears that payment of the surrender value will have to be made, or the loan advanced, to a trustee "duly appointed." In the case of a loan, we should say that only money necessary to pay premiums could be borrowed, unless the memorandum appointing trustees confers power to borrow for purposes of the trust, such as the advancement of the children. We may add that policies which, at the commencement of this Act, are standing in the sole name of a married woman, are, under sect. 6, to "be deemed, unless and until the contrary be shown, to be the separate property of such married woman," and that under sect. 2, policies belonging before marriage to any woman who marries after the commencement of this Act will remain her separate property. Also, that under sect. 18 a married woman, who is an executrix or administratrix, may discharge a policy forming part of the estate without the concurrence of her husband.—Review.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Banning on Limitation, 28.

Concealed fraud is a good reply to a plea of the Statute of Limitation in an action for false representation (Gibbs v. Guild, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 228).

Elmer on Lunacy (6th Edition), 119.

A lease of property belonging to a lunatic may be validly executed by his committee on his behalf (Lawrie v. Lees, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 209)—H. L.

Dart on Vendors and Purchasers (5th Edition), 169.

Upon a sale of a lease, subject to the usual condition that production of the last receipt for rent should be conclusive evidence of performance of the lessee's covenants or waiver of breaches, held that a good title was shown, notwithstanding continuing breaches (Lawrie v. Lees, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 209)—H. L.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Letters and communications intended for publication, and addressed to THE EDITOR, 53 Upper Sackville-street, Dublin, must be authenticated by the name of the writer, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We throw open the columns of this Journal most willingly for the discussion of subjects of interest to the Profession; but it must be understood that we do not necessarily agree with all the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

THE EFFECT OF ARRANGEMENTS IN BANKRUPTCY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Could any of your readers give me any information or advice regarding the following case, which, as the amount due is small, and the costs already incurred large in proportion to the amount which is recoverable, would not be worth expense to submit a case to counsel:—

A. sued B. for a sum due for goods sold. On the last day for appearance to the writ B. obtained protection of the Bankruptcy Court, and subsequently carried an arrangement (against which, however, B. voted) to pay a small dividend by four instalments extending over sixteen months. At the time of the arrangement A. was paid the costs payable on the writ, if settled within four days after the date of service. Promissory notes, unsecured, were issued for the instalment. The first has fallen due, was duly presented, and has been dishonoured. Does the original cause of action revive, and is A. in the same position that he would have been at the time for appearance if B. had not taken protection; at which time, as the writ was specially endorsed, he would, default of appearance, have been entitled to mark judgment for the full amount?

Is not the composition arrangement no longer binding on A.? Does not a composition under court merely act as a stay of proceeding, conditional on the debtor carrying out the arrangement?

Is not A. entitled now to mark judgment on the original writ without any further notice?

I have spoken to several professional gentlemen on the subject, but they all say that they have not before had a case of this kind since the Judicature Act came into force. One of them, however, suggested that the only remedy would be to sue on the composition bills; but this, besides being a matter of giving the debtor several weeks before he would be able to proceed, would necessitate the action being brought into the County Court, and would require the creditor to travel considerably over 100 miles to attend at court, besides being a loss of probably two or three days time.

Any information or reference to text-books which treat of this particular point in a practical manner would much oblige,

Yours truly,

SUBSCRIBER.

THE PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Some time ago a number of letters appeared in your Journal with reference to the advisability of adding a few new subjects to the present Preliminary Examination, and thereby making it a slight test of the educational qualifications of those presenting themselves at it. To those letters, however, no attention appears to have been paid by the Incorporated Law Society, although there is no subject of more importance to the profession, and none that requires more urgently their consideration.

The Preliminary Examination was at first planned for the purpose of satisfying the Law Society that those passing it had received at least a fair education; but to suppose that in these days of professional grinders it is any guarantee whatever of education is the greatest of fallacies.

The consequence of the present system is that the ranks of the profession are being filled up by men who should never have been admitted into it, and who certainly never would have been if intelligence or education had been a necessary qualification.

To see the absurdity of this Examination we have only to compare it, for example, with the Matriculation Examination of the Royal University. Now this latter is, in every sense of the word, an easy examination, and one which any person who is fit to enter upon the studies of a profession should without difficulty be able to pass; but although this is only an introduction to further study it is a hundred times more difficult than the Preliminary Examination, after which no further study is necessary.

I would, therefore, earnestly impress upon the Incorporated Law Society the necessity of raising the standard of the Examination referred to, and thus directly of placing the profession in a more respectable position; and I feel confident that if the opinion of Mr. Goodman is asked on this subject he cannot but agree in every particular with every word I have written.

Yours, &c.,
T.MOR.

11th October, 1882.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY
OF IRELAND.

MICHAELMAS SESSION, 1882.

LEGAL EDUCATION.

NOTICE.

WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Professor of Law for the Profession of Solicitors, will deliver his Course of Lectures for the Michaelmas Session, in the Lecture Hall, Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, on Mondays and Thursdays, at 10 Minutes before 10 o'clock, a.m.

The first Lecture will be delivered on Monday, the 6th day of November, 1882.

The Course will consist of Twelve Lectures, three-fourths of which must be attended, so as to entitle Candidates to Professor's Certificate.

By Order,

WILLIAM HICKSON, Professor.

Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, Dublin,
29th September, 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Fahany, John, of Tubbercurry, in the county of Sligo, draper. September 26; Tuesday, October 24, and Friday, November 10. Wm. Findlater & Co., solrs.

Stitt, Thomas, of Stranddown, in the county of Down, builder. October 8; Friday, October 27, and Tuesday, November 12. M. A. Gavin and W. J. Brett, solrs.

Holloway's Pills.—Epidemic Diseases.—The alarming increase of death from cholera and diarrhoea should be a warning to every one to subdue at once any irregularity tending towards disease. Holloway's Pills should now be in every household to rectify all impure states of the blood, to remedy weakness, and to overcome impaired general health. Nothing can be simpler than the instructions for taking this corrective medicine, nothing more efficient than its cleansing powers, nothing more harmless than its vegetable ingredients. Holloway's is the best physic during the summer season, when decaying fruits and unwholesome vegetables are frequently deranging the bowels, and daily exposing thousands, through their negligence in permitting disordered action, to the dangers of diarrhoea, dysentery, and cholera.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	OCTOBER
	Sat. 7	Mon. 9	Tues. 10	Wed. 11	Thur. 12	Fri. 13
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	—	—	—	—	100	100
— New 3 p c Stock ..	99	99½	99½	99½	99½	99½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1882 } Traffic at ..	102½	—	102½	102½	102½	102½
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	—	—	—	—	—	100
BANKS.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	318½	318	318	—	318½
35 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	—	—	—	33½	—	—
3½ Munster Bank (Limited) ..	—	7	7	7	—	7
— Nat. Prov. of England, lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	—	—	—	24	24	24
10 National of Liverpool (Ltd.) ..	—	—	—	14½	14½	—
15 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	23
10 Royal Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	29½
STEAM.
100 City of Dublin ..	—	—	102½	—	—	—
10 Dundalk (Limited) ..	—	—	—	x d	—	—
50 Peninsular and Oriental ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
MISCELLANEOUS.
10 Alliance & Dub. Cons. Gas ..	—	—	16½	16½	16½	—
8 Do. do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott & Co., limited ..	—	—	—	6	—	—
4 Cannon & Co. Lin. & Hd ..	—	—	—	4	—	—
7½ Dub. Drapery Whouse., Ltd. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
8 Goiding & Co., limited ..	—	—	—	8½	—	—
9-4-7 Patriotic Assurance ..	—	—	—	10	—	—
RAILWAYS.
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	117	—	—	116½	116½
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	88	88½	—
100 Waterford & Cent. Ireland ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
RAILWAY PREFERENCE.
100 D., W., & W., 5 p c (1880) ..	—	—	—	—	—	115½
100 Gt. N'h'n (Ireland) g'd 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	106
100 Do., 3½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c ..	108	—	—	—	—	108
LEASED AT FIXED RENTALS.
100 Dublin and Kingstown ..	—	—	—	—	—	234
DEBENTURE STOCKS.
— Belfast & N'h'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin & Wicklow 4 p c ..	—	105½	—	105½	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	109½
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	114½
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	114½	—	—	—	—
— Do., 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n & West'n, 4 p c ..	109½	—	—	109½	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	106	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	—	109	109½	109½	109½
— Do., 4½ p c ..	—	113	—	113½	—	—
— Waterford & Central 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
MISCELLANEOUS DEBENT.
Ballast Office Deb., £2 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	93½
City Deb. of 1873 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	92½	92	—	92½
Dub. & Glas. S. P. Co. (1887) 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	100½	—
Do. (1888), 6 p c ..	100½	—	—	—	—	—
Dub. & Kingstown 4 p c ..	—	102½	—	—	—	—
Dublin Water Works, 5 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—(1) Discount—4 per cent., 17th August, 1882

Of Deposit—1 per cent., 23rd March, 1882.

Name Days—October 26th, and November 15th, 1882.

Account Days—October 27th, and November 14th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

ATKINSON—October 6, at Fitzwilliam-square, the wife of John Atkinson, Esq., Q.C., of a son.

DEATHS.

KAVANAGH—October 3, at Arghnacloy, Ballybrack, after a few days' illness, Morgan Butler Kavanagh, Esq., barrister-at-law, of Merrion-square, only son of the late Morgan Kavanagh, Red Acres, County Kilkenny, aged 37 years.

SCANNELL—September 26, at Tivoli, Cork, Thos. Joseph Scannell, Esq., solicitor, son of the late Joseph Scannell, Esq., barrister-at-law, aged 50 years.

SCULLY—October 3, at George's-terrace, Ballybough-road, Dublin, James Aymer, eldest surviving son of the late James Daniel Scully, Esq., barrister-at-law.

STUART—October 7, at Dalkey, William James Stuart, Esq., solicitor, youngest surviving son of the late Rev. David Stuart, D.D.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50.
DENZILLE-STREET.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.
63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane. 63

LIVERPOOL.*PRIVATE ENQUIRIES AND INVESTIGATIONS

CONDUCTED BY

MR. THOMAS DEANE,

17, DALE-STREET (near the Exchange),

Twenty-five Years' varied POLICE and SOCIAL experience.
Efficient Staff.

MODERATE CHARGES.

References.

ESTABLISHED 1878.

167

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK FOR STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens; it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each. 581

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S. F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c., for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111 GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's).
Late of WATERHOUSE & Co.'s 90

STOKES BROTHERS,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,

LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN. 293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

N. PETERSON & SON,

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

LIVERPOOL AND LONDON CHAMBERS,

1, FOSTER-PLACE, COLLEGE-GREEN,
DUBLIN. 813

Printed and Published by the Proprietor, JOHN FALCONER, every Saturday, at 53, Upper Sackville-street, in the Parish of St. Thomas and City of Dublin.—Saturday, October 14, 1882.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. FROST, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

ROBERT WHYTE,

Ladies' &amp; Gentlemen's Boot &amp; Shoe Manufacturer,

1, NORTH FREDERICK-STREET

(Rutland-square),

ESTABLISHED OVER HALF A CENTURY.

Boots made for Weak Ankles, Deformed Feet, and Surgical purposes of every description.

All Work executed on the Premises under my personal superintendance.

None but first-class Workmen employed in either Making or Repairing

EVERY MAN WHO SMOKES
Should invest 24 stamps for the
NEW PERFECTED

The Best

Selected Briars

only.

JENINGS & CO., Inventors, 97 NEWGATE-ST., LONDON.
The most Perfect Pipe invented since Smoking began.

Prospectus Free.

61

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANBATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,
the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London.
WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 113 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewarts & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE,
Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection.

10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps.
21, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID,

Curls the straightest and most ungovernable Hair, 3s. 6d., sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE,

To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His

GREAT HAIR RESTORER,

3s. 6d.; it changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles.

As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 3s. 6d.; his DEPILATORY for removing Hair and his OANPHARIDS for the growth of Whiskers. 7

On the First Day of each Month.

FALCONER'S A-B-C RAILWAY GUIDE.

Price 3d., by post 4d.

THE MOST COMPLETE TIME TABLES,

AND

BEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM IN IRELAND.

JOHN FALCONER, 53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
And at all Booksellers and Railway Stalls.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1882.

No. 821

OUR WIVES.—II.

ALTHOUGH the new Married Women's Property Act will not come into operation until the 1st of January next, there are some results of its provisions which require immediate attention—such, for instance, as the necessity for introducing into conveyances, clauses restraining anticipation of corpus as well as of income, in cases where the desired result could previously have been attained without the introduction of such words. In order to understand how this comes about, it is necessary to observe that the word "property" in the Act is interpreted, by section 24, to include "a thing in action;" that section 5 provides that every woman married before the commencement of this Act shall be entitled to have and to hold and to dispose of, as her separate property, "all real and personal property her title to which, whether vested or contingent, and whether in possession, reversion, or remainder, shall accrue after the commencement of this Act . . . ;" and that a still more extensive power of acquiring property to her separate use, and the right of disposing thereof, is conferred by the Act upon women married after it comes into operation; because the effect of these provisions is that a married woman, whether married before or after the Act comes into operation, will, unless expressly restrained from alienating, be able to dispose of her own reversionary interests in personalty, including all choses in action, provided her title thereto has accrued after the termination of the present year. Heretofore, although a wife's charge upon land not expressly settled to her separate use, could, like any other interest of hers in land, be disposed of by her conjointly with her husband, before it came into possession, by deed acknowledged in pursuance of the Fines and Recoveries Abolition Act, there was no means by which a husband and wife, or either of them, could effectively alienate, before it fell into possession, the interest of a wife in mere personalty, unless in the very limited class of cases which were, as we shall see, dealt with by "Malins' Act" (20 & 21 Vict., c. 57); and, accordingly, many marriage settlements and other instruments intended to secure the wife against any alienation being made of her property during coverture, have been framed in reliance solely on this rule of law. Thus, the existing law upon this subject is pointedly illustrated by Lord St. Leonards in his Handy Book on Property Law (8th ed., 1869, p. 137), where he says, "although a married woman with her husband can convey or transfer all her interests in real property, yet neither can her husband deprive her, nor can she deprive herself, of any interest provided for her out of mere personal estate—funded property for example—to take effect upon her husband's death. So that if you provide a portion for your daughter on her marriage, and settle it on her husband for life, and then on your daughter for life, and then to the children, you may feel assured that your daughter will benefit by your bounty on her husband's death. Many attempts have been made in Parliament to take away this security, and to enable the husband and wife to sell her life interest, and so strip the woman of the provision made for her. These attempts have hitherto been successfully resisted." He adds that a partial measure (referring to "Malins' Act") had "been carried, providing that married women may, by deed acknowledged in manner required by the Act, with their husbands' concurrence, dispose of every future or reversionary interest to which the woman, or her husband in her right, shall be entitled in any personal estate under any instrument made after the 31st December, 1857, and relinquish or release any power she has, or her right or equity to a settlement out of any personal estate; but this power does not extend to any reversionary interest which she is restricted from alienating, nor does it enable her to dispose of any interest in personal estate settled upon her by any settlement, or agreement for a settlement, made on the occasion of her marriage." No doubt Lord St. Leonard's views on these matters are now old fashioned, and to us it is obvious that Malins' Act, as above accurately summarised by him, gave no relief in many cases where the inability to dispose of such property pending the coverture, though a source of great embarrassment to the parties interested, was never contemplated by the testator or settlor, being merely an unforeseen result of an imperfectly known rule of law. However, the tables are now completely turned by the provisions of the new Act making the reversionary interests in personalty which accrue to a wife after the 31st December next, her separate property, and liable to be disposed of by her at once; and it is for this reason that we wish to point out, that unless care be now taken by the framers of the "settlements, deeds, and other instruments" under which such interests will, after the Act comes into operation, "accrue" to married women, that an express clause restraining anticipation during the coverture, be inserted therein in every case where (as may often happen) such restraint is considered necessary, one of the most important objects of the instrument may be defeated. The case of In re Ellis' Trusts (L. R. 17 Eq. 409), decided by Jessel, M.R., in 1874, indicates the extent to which clauses of the kind we speak of may be safely relied on to protect from alienation, not the income only, but also the corpus of a fund; and it will be observed that section 19 of the "Married Women's Property Act, 1882," preserves to the fullest extent all the legitimate powers of settling property upon a married woman and of fettering her separate property by clauses in restraint of anticipation, that at present exist.

Besides indicating the general character of the provisions of the new Married Women's Property Act which are intended to confer upon every married woman, from the first of January next, the legal right to withhold her own earnings and other property from her husband, and to deal therewith as she thinks advisable, without his intervention, we have already directed attention to the importance of the provision of the first section (vid. sub-section 2), which renders the joinder of the husband as a party to the action no longer necessary either where the action is brought in right of the wife, or, where she is the substantial defendant and it is sought thereby to fasten liability upon her. We then dwelt more particularly upon the inconvenience and injury which had resulted to married women from their incapacity to bind themselves by contracts which could be enforced directly against themselves or their property under the previous, and still existing, state of the law, and referred, for illustration, to the well-known case of Handcock v. Lablache (12 Ir.

L. T. & S. J. 145), in which the non-joinder of the husband as a defendant to an action, brought for the purpose of charging the separate earnings of his wife with the amount of a debt due by her alone, was held fatal, although the address of the husband, who was living apart from her, could not be discovered. Closely connected therewith, although somewhat different in character from this subject of the capacity of a wife to incur such liabilities by contract as can be enforced by an action in which she alone is defendant—matters, as they are, of mixed “substantive” and “adjective” law—are the provisions of the new law as regards the continuing liability of wives upon contracts entered into by them, and torts committed, before marriage, and as regards the corresponding limitations upon the liability of the husband, with respect thereto. The new legislation upon this branch of the subject is sufficiently clear, and is contained in sections 13, 14, and 15; we shall, therefore, notice it very briefly. Before 1870 the husband as well as the wife should be made a defendant in such an action, and upon the judgment so obtained execution might be issued against the husband; and if any wife were sued alone, in respect of such a liability, she could plead “coverture,” and this was an answer to the action against her. If she did not so plead, and it did not otherwise appear from the pleadings that she was a married woman, judgment might, of course, be marked against her. By the Act of 1870 (August 9) it was provided that “a husband shall not, by reason of any marriage which shall take place after this Act shall come into operation, be liable for the debts of his wife contracted before marriage, but the wife shall be liable to be sued for, and any property belonging to her for her separate use, shall be liable to satisfy such debts, as if she had continued unmarried” (section 12); but this enactment applied to debts only, and the husband’s personal liability for his wife’s torts and breaches of contract committed before marriage, remained unchanged. So matters continued from August 9, 1870, until July 30, 1874, when the Act 37 & 38 Vict. c. 50 was passed, which, after reciting that “it is not just that the property which a woman has at the time of her marriage should pass to her husband, and that he should not be liable for her debts contracted before marriage, and that the law as to the recovery of such debts requires amendment,” proceeds to provide that “a husband and wife married after the passing of this Act may be jointly sued for any such debts” (s. 1); and that “the husband shall, in such action, and in any action brought for damages sustained by reason of any tort committed by the wife before marriage, or by reason of the breach of any contract made by the wife before marriage, be liable for the debt or damages respectively, to the extent only of the assets hereinafter specified” (see section 2): section 5 enumerates in detail the classes of assets here referred to—being the only assets regarded by this statute as having been acquired by the husband by virtue of his marriage. It is further provided, by section 4, that, “when a husband and wife are sued jointly, if by confession or otherwise it appears that the husband is liable for the debt or damages recovered or any part thereof, the judgment to the extent of the amount for which the husband is liable shall be a joint judgment against the husband and wife, and as to the residue, if any, of such debt or damages, the judgment shall be a separate judgment against the wife”—a provision the inadequacy of which is well illustrated by the difficulties which arose in the recent case of Morris v. Cranwell and wife (15 Ir. L. T. Rep. 32). In this complex and—at least as regards procedure—most inadequate state, the law with respect to actions founded upon the wife’s ante-nuptial contracts and liabilities at present stands; and, under the circumstances, we think, that intending plaintiffs in such cases—if not pressed for time—would act wisely by postponing the bringing of the action until next year; because, a plaintiff, by adopting this course, will have more intelligible rules of procedure to follow, and may at the same time be able (if necessary) to attach by his judgment against the wife, new descriptions of separate property which will not come within that category till the new Act comes into operation.

For sections 13, 14 & 15 enable the plaintiff to select as a defendant either the wife alone, the husband alone, or the husband and wife jointly, and indicate with sufficient particularity the results which shall follow from adopting either course. We may observe, for instance, that the doubt discussed by the learned editor of Griffith’s “Married Women’s Property Act,” 4th edition, p. 64, as to whether a judgment creditor under section 4 of the Act of 1874, could proceed on his joint judgment against both the husband’s assets and the wife’s separate estate, “and in addition, have the benefit of the separate judgment against the wife, in the event of his remedy under the joint judgment proving unproductive as inefficient,” has been set at rest after this year by sec. 15 of the Act of 1882, which expressly enacts that in any such action against husband and wife jointly, if it appear that the husband is liable for the debt or damages recovered, or any part thereof, the judgment to the extent of the amount for which the husband is liable shall be “a joint judgment against the husband personally and against the wife as to her separate property; and as to the residue, if any, of such debt and damages the judgment shall be a separate judgment against the wife as to her separate property only.” In concluding our remarks upon this branch of the subject we shall merely observe that the general character of these ante-nuptial liabilities themselves (as distinguished from the machinery for the enforcement of them) may be roughly summed up by saying that from the time that the new Act comes into operation every woman will, after her marriage, continue liable in respect and to the extent of her separate property, for all debts contracted and all contracts entered into or wrongs committed by her before marriage, including any sums to which she may be liable as a contributory under the Acts relating to Joint Stock Companies, and (see s. 24) as regards all liabilities by reason of a breach of trust or devastavit committed by her in the capacity of a trustee, executrix, or administratrix before (or after) her marriage; and, on the other hand, her husband will be liable on foot of all his wife’s said liabilities (except as regards her breaches of trust and devastavits) but only to the extent of “all property whatever belonging to his wife which he shall have acquired or become entitled to from or through his wife, after deducting therefrom any payment made by him and any sums for which judgments may have been bona fide recovered against him at law in respect of any of the wife’s said ante-nuptial liabilities.”

INVESTING IN EGYPT.

Prince Bismarck’s notable scheme, by which the British trustee is to control the Suez Canal as an investor of the money in his charge, imputes more patriotism and less prudence than is ordinarily possessed by this rather prosaic person and his advisers. A more minute acquaintance with English law than would be expected even from one who knows everything, would have suggested a better plan. By a statute passed in 1867, a trustee may “invest any trust fund in his possession, or under his control, the interest of which is or shall be guaranteed by Parliament.” Let Parliament guarantee, say, three and a-half per cent. on the capital of the Suez Canal, and in these days when Consols are above par, and Irish land out of the question, trustees may be tempted to turn their eyes to Egypt. As things are, the investments of trustees must not be built on the sand.

A more practical suggestion might be made in regard to investments. By section 23 of the Settled Land Act of last session "capital arising under this Act from settled land in England shall not be applied in the purchase of land out of England, unless the settlement expressly authorises the same." Why not allow the capital to be laid out in land in the colonies?—a form of investment now becoming not uncommon among great English landowners, and at once patriotic and prudent.—Law Journal.

THE CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACTS.

The elaborate report of the Select Committee, who have for three sessions been inquiring into the operation of the Contagious Diseases Acts, declares unhesitatingly that the purposes of the Acts have been amply fulfilled. Their beneficial effects from a hygienic and social point of view are incontestably proved by a copious mass of evidence; and it is evidently the opinion of the Committee that the Acts should be extended rather than repealed. The report deals also with the objections that have been raised to their provisions on legal and constitutional grounds. It has been said, for instance, that the Acts involve the recognition of vice by the State, and are therefore an outrage on public morality. To this the Committee reply that the Acts give prostitution no more toleration than it enjoyed before their existence; and it is not the Acts, but the ordinary laws that so tolerate it. "All that the Acts have done is to insist that the toleration permitted by the institutions of the country shall be exercised with less detriment to public health." A distinction is also drawn between the operation of the Acts and the Continental systems, in that the former make an attempt at reclamation an essential part of the effort to check the evil. Again, it is sometimes alleged that the Acts violate constitutional rights by conferring unusual powers over the person of the woman: in answer to which the report adduces instances of other diseases, against which special precautionary enactments have been passed. In all these the main purpose is "to diminish disease in the community by insisting on its prevention or cure in the individual." To the objection that the Acts subject women to restraints and penalties from which men are free, the Committee think it sufficient to answer that this follows necessarily from the nature of the case, and that it is only a particular class of women that are in this position. They deny also that the Acts were passed with any view of furthering the principle that vice should be encouraged by offering comparative immunity to its indulgence. A further objection that has been raised is of the highest importance in connexion with the administration of the law—viz., that respectable women have been capriciously and erroneously exposed to a degrading examination. It is a matter of public congratulation, that, on this point, the Committee are able to report favourably. The instances of abuse, they say, are very rare, and the police have, on the whole, acted with care and discretion. Special attention is also called to the fact that, in the course of sixteen years, no proceedings have been taken against the police in this respect.—Law Times.

THE DANGERS OF MORALISING.—The Judge: "Prisoner, you have been convicted by a jury of your countrymen of the crime of grand larceny. The Court is sorry for you. You look as if you had seen better days; as if you may have had a good father and loving mother, as well as decent friends and companions. What has become of your former companions?"—Prisoner, with a doleful expression of countenance: "Judge, you and me are all that's left of the old gang."—American Paper.

INDEMNITY OF TRUSTEES FOR WRONGS.

Much of the work done in this country, especially connected with sanitary matters, is accomplished by the agency of trustees and guardians, and other officials who usually act gratuitously, being elected by ratepayers or other constituents. In such cases it is often a question how far the body of trustees are responsible for some wrongful acts done by their servants, and if responsible, how far personal responsibility is incurred by themselves. There are two liabilities usually involved. The first is, whether the trustees are responsible to the third person injured; and secondly, if they are, whether they are personally held harmless, and so can indemnify themselves for the compensation paid by them by charging the same on the fund under their disposal. This is always an interesting question both to the wrongdoers and the injured person, and concerns a great variety of individuals.

Though the doctrine of trusts is remote from the practice of justices of the peace, yet it is not to be forgotten that public trustees are very much on the same footing as private trustees as regards their right to an indemnity out of the fund which they administer. And hence the doctrines of the Chancery Division of the High Court as to the indemnity of trustees who are the great functionaries under the supervision of that court, are almost identical with those which apply to guardians, overseers, and all kinds of statutory trustees, who are so much mixed up with magisterial business. One of the fundamental rules of equity is, that as a trustee acts gratuitously, and as he is liable to mistakes, or his servants are so, it is reasonable that he should not pay out of his own pocket for any mistake or loss suffered in the honest exercise of his duty. This doctrine appeals to the common sense of every one who can reflect on the course of business. And it is not wonderful that many illustrations of the rule occur in the decisions of both branches of the High Court of Justice.

To refer first to the rule acted on in Courts of Chancery, a case of Bennett v. Wyndham, 4 De G. F. & J. 529, once arose where a testator had devised his estates to trustees to possess and manage the same and pay the rents to a tenant for life in the usual way. Mr. Fane was the resident and managing trustee, and in course of his management it was discovered that some timber was wanted for roofing a barn on the estates. The trustee marked some oaks to be felled for the purpose, and gave orders to the bailiff to have them felled. The bailiff sent for that purpose the woodcutters, who were usually employed on the estate. One of these trees overhung a deep sunken lane, and as it fell a large bough swept into the lane and struck a person of the name of Leaney, a veterinary surgeon, who happened to be passing by, and broke his leg. Leaney made a demand for compensation against the trustees which they considered exorbitant, and the parties being unable to come to terms, Leaney brought this action, and recovered judgment for £1,200 and costs. This sum the trustee paid and afterwards sought to be reimbursed out of the trust estate. The tenant for life concurred, but urged that the sum should be charged on the inheritance, and not on his life estate. The Master of the Rolls expressed a clear opinion that the damages arising from a tort must be borne by the trustee personally. But on appeal the Lords Justices reversed this decision. Knight Bruce, L.J., observed that the trustee in this case appeared to have meant well, and to have acted with due diligence, and to have employed a proper agent to do an act, the directing which to be done was within the due discharge of his duty. The agent makes a mistake, the consequences of which subject the trustee to legal liability to a third party. This liability as between the trustee and the trust estate must be borne by the estate; and so the court decided.

The Court of Chancery had sometimes also to decide similar questions relating to guardians and overseers, who are, so to speak, statutory trustees, and have the same advantage in like cases. One rather curious case gave a good deal of trouble to the court and to the parish officers as to the imprisonment of a pauper. In Attorney-General v. Pearson, 2 Coll. 581, it appeared that the parish officer of Islington one day received information that a man named Eliot was found wandering about in a blanket, instead of wearing his clothes, and had damaged the premises in which he resided. The vestry clerk sent the relieving officer to make inquiries, and after hearing the circumstances the clerk considered it necessary that Eliot should be conveyed to the workhouse in a strait waistcoat, and afterwards should be taken before the magistrate to be examined. This was done, but owing to the medical officer withdrawing his certificate of insanity Eliot was discharged by the magistrate. He at once brought an action against the overseers and the relieving officer and everybody mixed up in the matter; and a separate claim also against the vestry clerk. He obtained a verdict for £200 in the first action, and the second action was not tried. The sum paid for damages and costs was charged in the parish accounts, but the ratepayers in open vestry met and disputed the item. Ultimately an information was filed against the parish trustees to compel them to pay the sum themselves and refund it. A long argument in the Court of Chancery followed, and vigorous contention was made to saddle this sum on the parish trustees. The Vice-Chancellor delivered a very long judgment on the whole details. He said that the acts of which complaint was made by the two actions, whether wholly or partly legal, were acts of the parish trustees and were done bona fide without any wrong intention upon the part of themselves and their agents and servants, or any one or more of them, and on the contrary with an intention upon the part of all to obey the law. They were acting duly in the execution and performance of the duties incumbent on the trustees. The belief they entertained, and on which they acted, was such a belief as any person in their position and circumstances might, from the apparent facts, have entertained without affording just ground for questioning their prudence, or diligence, or capacity, or honesty. The judge, therefore, allowed the trustees to charge the disputed sums on the rates.

The same views have been acted on in courts of law as to the indemnification of public trustees. In Hall v. Smith, 2 Bing. 156, an action was brought against certain commissioners for lighting, watching, and paving the town of Birmingham, or rather against the clerks. The point, however, involved was whether the commissioners were liable personally to pay compensation. The commissioners were alleged to have dug a deep ditch in a street in Birmingham, placed a quantity of rubbish near the same without any guard, or fence, or light, and the plaintiff not knowing of the heap when riding across the street fell into the ditch and broke his thigh, and the horse was also injured. The commissioners had employed a contractor, and the contractor had employed a labourer to do the work, and it was owing to the negligence of the workman employed by the contractor that the accident occurred. The action arose in the year 1824, and since then we have become more familiar with the points that occasionally arise and entail personal liability. But at that date the court, after taking time to consider, laid down the law which was deemed applicable, and the same law applies still. Best, C.J., said, if commissioners under an Act of Parliament order something to be done which is not within the scope of their authority, or were themselves guilty of negligence in doing that which they were empowered to do, they rendered themselves liable to an action; but they were not answerable for the misconduct of such as they were obliged to employ. If they were liable personally, who would be hardy enough to undertake any of those various offices by which much valuable yet unpaid service is rendered to the country? Our public roads are formed and kept in repair; our towns lighted and paved; our lands drained and protected from inundation; our internal navigation has been improved; ports have been made and kept in order, and many other public works are conducted by commissioners who act spontaneously. Such commissioners will act no longer, if they are to make amends from their own fortunes for the conduct of such as must be employed under them. It would be much better that an individual injured by the act of an agent should endure an injury unredressed than that the zeal of the most useful members of the community should be checked by subjecting them to a responsibility for agents from whose services they derive no benefit, and who are seldom under the immediate control of their employers whilst they are employed on the works they are ordered to do. If by taking their office of commissioners they have not undertaken the performance of the duties in detail, with what justice can they be charged with the consequences of the neglect of them? The verdict was accordingly entered for the defendants.

There may be difficulty occasionally in deciding whether the trustees have done something so illegal and so entirely beyond the scope of their authority that they will be held personally liable, and will have no claim to reimbursement. But when the injury done to a third party is done as it is usually, merely owing to some error of judgment such as all mankind are liable to, then no personal liability can befall them. This was well illustrated in the case of Southampton Bridge Company v. Local Board of Southampton, 8 E. & B. 801. The plaintiffs had the management and control of the floating bridge over the river Itchen at Southampton, and of the canals and approaches, and were entitled to recover tolls and profits from travellers and traffic. The defendants were the local board, and it was alleged that they negligently constructed certain sewers, that great quantities of filth and sewage matter were poured into the canals and approaches, so as to obstruct and damage the working of the bridge and cause offensive stenches. The plaintiffs had consequently been put to great expense in removing the sewage, and they claimed this expense from the local board. The defendants demurred, and part of the argument was that they had no funds out of which to pay any such claim, even if it were sustained, and the case turned partly on the words of the statutes. The Court of Queen's Bench came to the conclusion that there was nothing to prevent an action for negligence being brought against the local board. The court said that it had been argued that there were no funds in the hands of the local board applicable to the payment of damages recovered in an action, and no doubt there was difficulty in the matter. It might be that such damages were to be paid out of the general district rate. However, it was not necessary to determine that point. Then it was said that if such a payment could be made out of the rates by the board, it was a great hardship on the ratepayers that they should be made to pay for the blunders or neglect of the board. That objection, however, seemed to be met by the consideration that the members of the board are elected by the ratepayers, and were therefore their representatives. There would be greater injustice perhaps if it were held that persons injured by the negligence or wrongful acts of the board had no remedy. Upon the whole, therefore, an action for negligence might be maintained against the local board.

The result, therefore, seems to be that in all cases where damages are incurred by some default of the trustees or their servants in a matter within their jurisdiction to do, the damage is part of the necessary expenditure incurred in the ordinary discharge of the public duty, and as such must be defrayed out of the fund or general rate.—Justice of the Peace.

THE SETTLED LAND ACT.

Although the Settled Land Act (45 & 46 Vict., c. 38) does not come into operation until after the 31st Dec. next, there are some points connected with it which are of immediate importance to conveyancers. Large powers will be attached to the estates of "tenant for life" and other limited owners in a few months time, so that it will be a matter for the consideration of the conveyancer, even now, whether he shall insert the ordinary powers in any deed or will; and he should certainly endeavour to avoid any clash between the powers under the settlement, or will, and those under the Act, and not rely upon sects. 45, 56 for a remedy. If in a will of small property he feels inclined to trust to the Act, he must remember that sect. 15 excepts the principal mansion house—which apparently may be a cottage—from tenant for life's power of sale and leasing without consent, so that often it will be necessary in the deed or will to make provision as to this (see sect. 57). Also the near approach of the time for the coming into operation of the statute may make it wise to delay some transaction which would now be costly or less beneficial to the parties. Moreover, by waiting till next year, money which is held on trust to be laid out on settled land may be sometimes invested at higher interest or spent on the property in improvements (sects. 21, 25). We hope in a future series of articles fully to explain and annotate this important statute, especially with a view to the needs of conveyancers; so we content ourselves now with just indicating some points which require immediate attention.—Law Times.

THE RIGHT OF PRIVATE DEFENCE.

A correspondent of the Times writes as follows:—"Will you permit a former Indian magistrate, who has tried a great number of burglary cases, and committed for trial a great number of gang robbery cases, to draw attention to the admirable provisions of the Indian Penal Code in respect of the right of private defence? In view of the burglaries which are the pest of suburban life, and of the necessity of keeping firearms at hand, and of using them under certain circumstances, which I apprehend every householder to be under, I think it is as well that the public should become aware what are the provisions in respect of the right of private defence of a wise and intelligible code of laws under which the lives and property of some 250,000,000 of our fellow-subjects are protected. Under Indian law nothing is an offence done in the exercise of the right of private defence. This right extends to the protection of one's own or another's body and of one's own or another's property. It does not exist when there is time to have recourse to the protection of public authorities. More harm must not be caused in its exercise than is necessary for the purposes of defence. The right extends to the causing of death in cases of severe assault and of gross outrage against the person, including wrongful confinement. It commences and ends with the apprehension of danger. Death may also be caused in exercise of the right of private defence of property in cases of robbery, housebreaking by night, mischief by fire in a building, &c., and of theft and house trespass, when fear of death is involved. Now, let my fellow suburban householders act on these principles in respect of any burglars who may enter their houses, and whatever the English law may be, I doubt if they will not be upheld in their action. Danger to person and to property is involved in the burglaries of the present day, and we householders must not shrink from the duty of protecting ourselves and society from such pests because our law may be obscure and may not clearly enunciate what common sense dictates."

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

The attention of Mr. Justice Day, the vacation judge, having been drawn to reports appearing in newspapers of private judicial proceedings heard before him in chambers, it was represented to the learned judge that the Master of the Rolls had decided that the reporting or publishing of private judicial proceedings was a contempt of Court, and rendered the reporter liable to be committed. In reply, the judge's clerk writes: "I am directed by Mr. Justice Day to say that he intends to adopt the same rule as that adopted by the Master of the Rolls with regard to reporting in chambers."

COMMUNICATION BETWEEN SOLICITOR AND CLIENT IN PRESENCE OF A THIRD PERSON.

The doctrine that professional communications made to legal advisers are confidential and privileged is well established in English law. Whether, however, the term "privileged communication," often used in reference to this doctrine, is the best that could have been selected, is doubtful, when we consider that the natural meaning of the words "privileged communication" is, that the subject-matter of the communication is in itself privileged, not that the communication is one which may, or may not, be privileged, according to the class of persons present when it is made. This ambiguity in the term itself seems to have left the exact limits of the operation of the rule as to privileged communications somewhat undefined, and it is to the question, what are the exact limits of this rule, that we wish to direct attention. Now, one of the commonest things, indeed, an every-day occurrence among the lower middle class, is for clients to consult their solicitors in company with a friend. The presence of a third person seems to give them the courage needful for so formidable an interview. What is the position of this third person in regard to "privileged communications?" He is present at the consultation, and becomes acquainted with all the points in the client's case. The client is protected from disclosing any communication made by him to his legal adviser, and his legal adviser is not permitted, save with his client's consent, to make known any such communication. May the third person present at the interview, in the character of a friend, disclose information thus obtained? Is it a wholly "privileged communication," or is it a communication privileged only as between solicitor and client strictly? Before we attempt to answer this question, let us state a case which recently came under our notice. A testator who had made a valid will leaving all his property to a brother, was near death, and desired to make another will. The village schoolmaster, A., and his son, B., were called in, and a will leaving everything to D. a sister of the testator (who was keeping house for him), was drawn up and executed. The testator died, and D. accompanied by A. went to a neighbouring solicitor to instruct him to obtain probate of the second will. The solicitor put certain questions to A. and, finding that the will had been irregularly attested, he declined to act in the matter. Subsequently the brother of the testator brought to the same solicitor the first will, and this having been properly executed the solicitor undertook to get it proved. Probate of the first will was opposed, on the ground that it was revoked by a subsequent will, and the action was remitted by the Probate Court to the assizes for trial. On the trial of the action, the solicitor who was acting for the brother was called, and evidence of what passed between him and D. and A. was objected to on the ground of privilege. D. on being called, swore that she was in and out of the room at the time the will was executed, and did not see it signed, but knew they were signing it; and as to what passed at the solicitor's office, she claimed privilege. B. the son of A. swore that the will was properly attested. A. swore the same, and on being cross-examined as to what passed at the solicitor's office, counsel for D. claimed privilege. The judge was inclined to think that there was privilege, and so ruled, but reserved the point at the request of counsel. It was never cleared up, as the case was compromised. Here, then, we have a case where the whole issue depended upon the question of privilege or no privilege. No doubt it is a case which can very seldom arise, but still it seems strange that the text-books contain no reference to any single case bearing directly upon the presence of a third person present at an interview between solicitor and client.

If, however, we may apply the rules of common sense to such a case, we should be inclined to say that, if a client wished his communications with his solicitor to be secret, he should take measures to secure their privacy. It seems difficult to draw a distinction between such a case and that of a client saying something in a loud voice to his solicitor in court, so that it may be overheard by a dozen other people. And surely, if this occurred, the mouths of a dozen people could not be stopped. The only decision which seems to be at all near the case in point is that of Fountain v. Young, 6 Esp. 113, where it was held that a communication made to one who was not a solicitor, under the mistaken idea that he was one, was not privileged. Whether this would be still considered to be good law is, perhaps, doubtful, but if it goes rather far in declaring that privilege cannot be extended in cases of mistake, it seems, at any rate, to lay down the principle that the doctrine of privilege must not be carried beyond the strict limit of solicitor and client. At the same time there is, doubtless, much to be said in favour of the view that communications between a client and his solicitor are absolutely privileged. But considering the doubt which exists in the matter, solicitors will do well to caution clients who consult them in company with a friend, as to the possibility of danger in this respect, for it may easily happen that matters disclosed in consultation should be made the foundation of purely vexatious litigation.—Solicitor's Journal.

RECENT DECISIONS ON ATTACHMENT OF THE PERSON.

The provisions of the orders under the Judicature Act, and other recent legislation, made considerable alterations in this very important means of enforcing the decisions of the courts, and preserving them from the decaying process which disregarding judgments, or open contempt, is sure to occasion. By Order XLIV., r. 1, a writ of attachment is to have the same effect as such a writ issued out of Chancery had before the Judicature Acts, but a very important change has been introduced by rule 2, which requires that no writ of attachment shall be issued without notice to the party against whom the attachment is to be issued. In some respects this very reasonable provision as to notice has been construed rather strictly. Thus it applies to all orders made since the Judicature Act came in force, whether the suits in which the orders have been made are being carried on under the old law or the new practice (Dallas v. Glyn, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 897; 3 Ch. Div. 190). And "An attachment against the sheriff for not returning a writ of f. fa. is not as formerly obtained as of course, but since Order XLIV., r. 2, can only be applied for 'on notice.'" Jupp v. Cooper (5 C. P. Div. 26). And in Eynde v. Gould (9 Q. B. Div. 335), not only was this principle upheld, but the Court refused to give a rule nisi (which had been granted in Jupp v. Cooper), and rejected the argument that a rule nisi would in fact operate as a notice. This also conflicts with Fowler v. Ashford (45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 46).

There are several cases on the question of what amounts to sufficient service of notice of motion. In Browning v. Sabin (5 Ch. Div. 511) it was held that service on the solicitors on the record of the defendant was sufficient; see also Richards v. Kitchen (36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 730). In Re a Solicitor (42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 310; 14 Ch. Div. 152), leaving the notice of motion at the person's residence was considered enough, where the residence was unknown. But in Mann v. Perry (44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 248) service on the solicitor in the case was held insufficient. As to substituted service, see Tilney v. Stanfeld (W. N. 1880, p. 77; 28 W. Rep. 582). The preliminaries to the motion must be strictly complied with: see Re Holt (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 207; 11 Ch. Div. 168; Alph. Pr. 362, 367.)

An interlocutory order may be enforced by attachment (Hutchinson v. Hartmont, W. N. 1877, p. 29). By Order XLII., r. 20, orders may be enforced like judgments. Judgment includes "decree," and "order" includes rule (Judicature Act, 1873, s. 100).

The cases in which attachment may be ordered may be divided into those for disobedience to a judgment or order to pay money, and those for disobedience to some other judgment or order of the court. The first class is much limited by the Debtors Act (32 & 33 Vict., c. 62), s. 4, which abolished imprisonment, not only for debt, but generally for nonpayment of money, except in certain exceptional cases. There are, however, several cases mentioned in sect. 4 in which imprisonment for one year is still permitted on nonpayment of money. These are: (1) penalties, (2) sums recoverable summarily, (3) certain defaults by trustees or quasi trustees, (4) certain defaults by a solicitor, (5) default of bankrupt to pay salary, (6) defaults as to payments under Debtors Act 1869. See, as to these generally, Wms. Bank, 2nd edit. 562; Seton, 4th edit. 1567; Alph. Pr. 361. The third exception applies not only to trustees properly so called, but to an agent who received bills that he might discount them and hand the proceeds to the owner (Hutchinson v. Hartmont, W. N. 1877, p. 29); and see Marris v. Ingram (41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 613; 13 Ch. Div. 338). It has been held not to include a director who has been ordered under sect. 165 of the Companies Act to pay the value of gratuitous shares given him (Metcalf's case, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 178; 18 Ch. Div. 813), nor a trustee who has merely omitted to take steps to recover trust money (Ferguson v. Ferguson, 10 Ch. App. 661). As to attaching a receiver, see Poster v. Bell (L. Rep. 9 Eq. 173); Re Aiken (8 L. Rep. Ir. 50). Formerly the court was bound to order the attachment of a defaulting trustee, but by 41 & 42 Vict., c. 54, s. 1, a discretion is given to the court to inquire into the whole circumstances, and grant or refuse an attachment as it thinks fit. Practically, where a trustee has not been guilty of any moral delinquency, and there is no prospect that the attachment will cause the repayment of the money, attachment will be refused (Marris v. Ingram, ubi sup., explaining Barrett v. Hammond, 10 Ch. Div. 285; see also Street v. Hope (10 Ch. Div. 286) and Re Mackenzie (44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 618).

As to defaults by a solicitor, see Re White (23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 387); Re Hope (26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 814; L. Rep. 7 Ch. App. 523); Harvey v. Hall (28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 734; L. Rep. 16 Eq. 324); and Re Ball (L. Rep. 9 C. P. 104). He cannot be attached under this sub-section simply for nonpayment of costs as an unsuccessful litigant (Re Hope). See Alph. Pr. 362; Seton 1568. The court has now a discretion to refuse attachment in cases falling within this sub-section (41 & 42 Vict., c. 54).

Besides the six cases mentioned in sect. 4 of the Debtors Act, there is also power under sect. 5 to commit for six weeks, for ordinary debts where the debtor can pay but will not. It is not sufficient that his wife has considerable separate estate: (Chard v. Jarvis, 9 Q. B. Div. 178.) As to the distinction between procedure under this section and attachment for contempt, see Edaile v. Viner (41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 745; 13 Ch. Div. 421), and Alph. Pr. 367; Seton, 1569.

An order for payment of costs constitutes a debt within sect. 5 (Hewison v. Sherwin, L. Rep. 10 Eq. 53; and see Reg. v. Pratt, L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 176, 182). If the order is for payment of a debt by instalments, each instalment becomes a separate debt, for default in payment of which a separate order to commit may be made (Hornail v. Bruce, L. Rep. 8 C. P. 378; Evans v. Wills, 1 C. P. Div. 229); but a second warrant of committal will not be issued for the same default. The Debtors Act applies to an application under 41 Geo. 3, c. 90, s. 6, to enforce an order of the Irish Court of Chancery: (Ferguson v. Ferguson, L. Rep. 10 Ch. App. 661.)

Where an order alternatively directs either the doing of some act or the payment of money, attachment may be issued for disobedience (Harvey v. Hall, L. Rep. 11 Eq. 81); but where a party has obeyed an order, except that he has not paid costs, he cannot be committed for nonpayment of costs (Mickelthwait v. Fletcher, 27 W. R. 798); and where he was committed for not answering, and afterwards cleared his contempt by filing his answer, he was discharged from custody, although he had not paid costs; the Court, however, still ordered him to pay costs: (Jackson v. Mawby, 1 Ch. Div. 86.)

In Earl of Lewis v. Barnet (6 Ch. Div. 252) the Court refused to discharge a bankrupt defaulting trustee until he had passed his final examination. He was attached before the bankruptcy, so it was held that the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 12, did not apply, and Cobham v. Dalton (L. Rep. 10 Ch. App. 655) was distinguished. It seems that sect. 12 of the Bankruptcy Act does not extend protection to a compounding debtor: (Pashler v. Vincent, 8 Ch. Div. 825.) The Debtors Act does not apply to Crown debts: (Re Smith, 2 Ex. Div. 47.)

On application for the order, costs should be asked for; they are in the court's discretion (Abud v. Riches, 2 Ch. Div. 363), and will in some cases be given as between solicitor and client (Tilney v. Stanfeld, W. N. 1880, p. 77); see also Beall v. Smith (L. Rep. 9 Ch. App. 85). In the usual form no period is named for the period of detention, even in cases where it is limited to a year: (Alph. Pr. 366; Seton, 1569.) Such a form was held regular in Ireland: (Re Aiken, 8 L. R. Ir. 50). It seems that an order must be obtained for the discharge, although the year has expired since the committal: (Nalty v. Aylett, 80 L. T. Rep. N. S. 735)—Law Times.

THE INSURANCE ON DR. LAMSON'S LIFE.

The Hampshire Post states that Dr. Lamson's life was insured in the Scottish Widows' Assurance Office for £1,000, but only one premium had been paid prior to the arrest of the assured on a charge of poisoning his brother-in-law. Immediately before Lamson's conviction, the policy was assigned absolutely to Mr. A. W. Mills, the solicitor by whom he had been so zealously defended, to cover the balance of the costs of the defence. On the strength of a decision in the House of Lords—that, under such circumstances as those in the case of Lamson, a policy of insurance is void, even though such policy provide that death at the hands of justice shall not vitiate it—the company might have successfully resisted payment. They have, however, declined to avail themselves of any advantage on this ground, and have paid to Mr. Mills the full amount for which his client's life was insured—£1,000.

NICE POINTS IN FRENCH LAW.

A man wishing to steal fowls clambers over a garden-wall at night, and breaks into a fowl-house. He has a ladder or crowbar in his hands, but makes no use of either to inflict bodily hurt on those who capture him. Nevertheless, this man is a felon who has committed a burglary which the quarter circumstances aggravates, that is, in the night with escalade (climbing over walls), with effraction (breaking open a door), and a main arme (with a weapon in his hand). He can only be tried at the assizes, and, if convicted on the four counts, must get eight years' seclusion, or twenty years' transportation. On the other hand, take a man who by false pretences obtains admission to a house or shop, intending to commit a robbery there. He lays hands on some valuable, and being surprised in the act, catches up a poker and knocks his detector down, inflicting a serious wound. This man's crime is evidently worse than that of the other who went after the fowls—his is only a misdemeanour, however, for he gained admittance to the house without violence, and was unarmed; his catching up the poker, although it may have been a premeditated act, inasmuch as he intended from the first to defend himself somehow if caught, was, equally speaking, only an act of impulse committed on the spur of the moment and without malice prepense. Therefore, this man can only be tried by a correctional court, and cannot get more than five years' imprisonment. Again, if a man, wishing to inflict on an enemy some grievous bodily harm, walks into a café, says a few angry words to him, and disfigures him by smashing a decanter upon his face, it is a misdemeanour, extenuated by the apparent absence of premeditation. The man walked into the café unarmed, and in the heat of quarrel picked up the first weapon that came to his hand. It might fairly be alleged that the man knew that he should find a decanter in the café, and that his quarrel was purposely entered into, but the law will not take account of this. If, on the contrary, the man entered his enemy's house with a loaded stick in his hand and assaulted his enemy with that stick, he would be a felon who must go to the assizes on a charge of attempted murder. It might be that the man had taken the stick without reflecting that it had a leaden knob, but the onus of proving that his intentions were not murderous, and that in fact when he entered the room he did not even propose to commit a common assault, would rest upon himself. A jury would probably judge his case according to his antecedents, and if it were shown that his past life was not blameless he might fail to get extenuating circumstances, and might receive twenty years' transportation.—Cornhill Magazine.

PARENTAL RIGHTS.

The case of Vidler v. Collier is probably the strongest recent instance of the interference of the Court with a father's right to the custody of his infant son. The boy in this case was seventeen years of age, and was entitled to some benefit under the will of his maternal grandfather. His father, who was a widower, being in difficulties, his maternal relations had procured him an appointment as apprentice engineer in the Government dockyard at Devonport, where he had been two years. The father, who had failed as a farmer in England, and was an undischarged bankrupt, had taken passages for himself, his son, and five younger boys, to Manitoba, where he could procure a free grant of prairie land. The executors of the grandfather brought an action for the administration of his estate, thus making the infant a ward of court, and moved for an injunction to restrain the father from taking him out of the jurisdiction. Vice-Chancellor Bacon granted the injunction, refusing to allow any ward of court to be removed from a fair prospect of earning his living for the doubtful experiment of "gipsying in Manitoba." The Court of Appeal declined to interfere with the Vice-Chancellor's decision, considering it proved that it was for the interest of the infant that he should remain, though they gave the father leave to send for him after a year if he should succeed in Manitoba. The decision was based upon the ground of the infant's benefit only, and the principle has always been that a father cannot be deprived of the custody of his children merely because his means are small and the children would be better educated elsewhere, unless there are other reasons, which make the father unfit to have the custody of his infant children.—Public Opinion.

THE JUDGE, THE SAHEB, AND THE OLD WOMAN.

The Brahmo Public Opinion says:—The other day Mr. Justice Norris, while going home from court, saw a Sahab recklessly driving and running over an old native woman. His lordship immediately got out of the carriage, ran after and stopped the Sahab, and asked him to take the woman to a hospital, at the same time telling him that he should not have driven so furiously. The Sahab, a genuine Anglo-Indian, replied that Sahabs in this country do not care to take people to the hospital. Mr. Justice Norris cried shame to the Sahab, observing that to him humanity did not seem to be different here from what it is at home. He then came back and took the woman up in his own carriage to the hospital and placed her there. We trust and hope long residence in India will not chill the fervour of this genuine English spirit.

LORD CHIEF BARON POLLOCK was one of the most dexterous imitators of handwriting, and used to amuse himself by sending letters in other people's names and handwriting so correct that the person imitated would swear to its being his own work. Many practical jokes arose out of this little amusement.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Buckley on the Companies Acts (3rd Edition), 242.

A witness examined under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, may be attended by counsel and solicitor, who may re-examine him for the purpose of explaining his evidence, and may take and carry away notes (In re Cambrian Mining Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 221).

Judicature Act, 1873, s. 50, Order LVIII., Rule 15.Wilson on the Judicature Acts (2nd Edition), 329.Lely and Foulkes on the Judicature Acts (3rd Edition), 262.

Appeals from a judge in chambers must be brought within twenty-one days, to be computed from the date of the refusal, where no order is made; and, where an order has been made, from the perfecting of the same (Healty v. Newton, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 225)—C. A.

Daniell's Chancery Practice (6th Edition), 264.

Auctioneers who, having been parties to a fraud, were rightly made co-defendants to an action for rescission of a contract and return of the deposit, were held not entitled to be dismissed on paying the deposit into Court, with costs up to such payment (Healty v. Newton, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 225)—C. A.

Folkard on Slander and Libel (4th Edition), 135.

A man who, in defence of his own property, slanders the title of another, will not be held liable to an action unless it can be shown that he had a malis fide intention to injure (Halsey v. Brotherhood, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 233)—C. A.

Jarman on Wills (4th Edition), 782.

Where there is a gift of land the word "appurtenances" does not properly, either in a deed or will, include other land. But in a will, if circumstances and context show that other land was intended to pass as appurtenant, the word is flexible enough to carry it (Cuthbert v. Robinson, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 239).

Buckley on the Companies Acts (3rd Edition), 171.

The mere fact of there being fraudulent misrepresentation in the prospectus is not sufficient to induce the Court to order a winding-up (In re Haven Gold Mining Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 242)—C. A.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Letters and communications intended for publication, and addressed to THE EDITOR, 53 Upper Sackville-street, Dublin, must be authenticated by the name of the writer, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We throw open the columns of this Journal most willingly for the discussion of subjects of interest to the Profession; but it must be understood that we do not necessarily agree with all the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

THE PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I have read in your Journal of the 14th inst. a letter signed "Timon," relative to the Preliminary Examination of Candidates for Apprenticeship. I am sorry, as well as surprised, to see the evident lack of knowledge which, on his part, exists concerning the subject about which he writes. Referring to the Preliminary Examination, "Timon" in his letter states "that to suppose that, in those days of professional grinders, it is any guarantee whatever of education is the greatest of fallacies." Now, it is quite manifest, from this alone, that he knows little or nothing about the examination, the subjects for which it is his desire should be augmented. At the present time, the Preliminary Examination is considered to be a good and sufficient test of the candidate's education, not by me alone but by gentlemen much higher educated than "Timon." It is obvious that the consequences of the present system of examination are, that the ranks of the legal profession are being filled up by gentlemen of good education, and not "by men who should never have been admitted into it, and who certainly never would have been if intelligence or education had been a necessary qualification," as stated by "Timon." This is a gross insinuation—that the Incorporated Law Society admit into the ranks of the profession individuals who have neither intelligence nor education. Such is admittedly not so; for there are none admitted into the profession but who must have satisfied the examiners as to their education, and those who have education generally have intelligence, therefore "Timon's" statement regarding this is illogical and untrue. Furthermore, he, in support of his object, and in order to see what he calls the absurdity of the examination in question, compares it with the Matriculation Examination of the Royal University, and states that the latter is a hundred times more difficult than the Preliminary. This statement is totally devoid of truth. Such, indeed, would not be expected to emanate from the pen of an individual insane, and anything more absurd would be difficult to conceive. It is a comparison which clearly shows that "Timon" knows little about the examinations of which he in his letter makes mention. To say that the Matriculation Examination is more difficult than the Preliminary is perfectly untrue. For the Preliminary Examination the Latin course is—1st Book of Cæsar, Sallust, and 1st three Books of Virgil; whereas the Latin course for the Matriculation Examination is merely the 4th and 5th Books of Cæsar and the 1st Book of Virgil. A very great difference is here visible, and the other subjects for the Preliminary are more in number and more difficult in nature than those for the Matriculation, and yet "Timon" has the audacity to state that the latter is a hundred times more difficult than the former. The Latin course for the Preliminary is even more extensive than the Latin course for the B.A. examination in the Royal University. I would not be antagonistic to any movement which had for its object the furtherance of sound education, and if I could, but for a moment, think that the object of "Timon" was for that purpose, or that the present course for the Preliminary was insufficient, I should altogether refrain from saying anything in condemnation of his letter. On the contrary, I would endeavour to support him; but it is obvious that his object is not to further education but to embarrass those who may in future have to pass the Preliminary. It is entirely premature for "Timon" to dictate to such a body of learned gentlemen as those who constitute the Incorporated Law Society. "Timon's" letter from first to last is contrary to reason, and I consider he is almost dispossessed of that which he pretends to advocate. The Incorporated Law Society are highly competent to judge what is necessary for the Preliminary Examination, and well know that the present course therefor is quite sufficient to test the education of the candidate, and know their business better than to be dictated to or influenced by "Timon."

I am Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

BENEFICIUM.

17th October, 1882.

FRACTIONS OF A PENNY.—Among the last Acts passed in the session was one relating to the revenue. It recites that "fractions of a penny" have never been paid by the Bank of England on account of dividends on the National Debt, and the fractions so accumulated unpaid have exceeded £140,000. The Bank of England are now required, when directed by the Treasury, to certify the amount in hand arising from "fractions of a penny" not paid on account of dividends, and the Treasury may by warrant order the same to be paid into the Exchequer. By a schedule to the Act it appears that, up to March 31 inst., the "fractions of a penny" have amounted to £143,272 11s. 2d.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

MICHAELMAS SESSION, 1882.

LEGAL EDUCATION.

NOTICE.

WILLIAM HICKSON, Esq., Professor of Law for the Profession of Solicitors, will deliver his Course of Lectures for the Michaelmas Session, in the Lecture Hall, Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, on Mondays and Thursdays, at 10 Minutes before 10 o'clock, a.m.

The first Lecture will be delivered on Monday, the 6th day of November, 1882.

The Course will consist of Twelve Lectures, three-fourths of which must be attended, so as to entitle Candidates to Professor's Certificate.

By Order, WILLIAM HICKSON, Professor.

Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, Dublin, 29th September, 1882.

The Professor of Law has fixed upon the following Book for Lectures—viz., "Broom's Commentaries on the Common Law."—Last Edition.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

SOLICITORS' APPRENTICES.

NOTICE.

An Examination in the business of the last Session of Lectures will be held on Tuesday, the 7th day of November, 1882, for the convenience of Gentlemen who were unavoidably prevented from attending the regular Examination in last July. Any such Gentleman, if desirous of being examined, will please to send in, on or before the 30th day of October, instant, a written application to the Secretary's Office, addressed to the Professor of Law, stating the circumstances which prevented his attendance in July, with a Certificate from his Master that, having inquired, he believes the Apprentice's non-attendance was caused by the circumstances stated.

The Applicant will be afterwards apprised whether his attendance at the intended Examination can be permitted.

By Order, WILLIAM HICKSON, Professor.

Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, Dublin, 19th October, 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, theittings follow in Italics.

Byrnes, Roderick, and John J. Byrnes, trading as Roderick Byrnes, and Son, of Island Bann Mills, Nenagh, in the county of Tipperary, millers. October 6; Friday, November 8, and Tuesday, November 21. Peter V. Kennedy, solr.

Redmond, Edmond, of Main-street, Gorey, in the county of Wexford, draper and grocer. September 29; Tuesday, October 31, and Friday, November 17. Maxwell & Weldon, solrs.

Holloway's Pills.—Though good health is preferable to high honour, how regardless people often are of the former—how covetous of the latter! Many suffer their strength to drain away ere maturity is reached, through ignorance of the facility afforded by these incomparable Pills of checking the first untoward symptoms of derangement, and re-instating order without interfering in the least with their pleasure or pursuits. To the young especially it is important to maintain the highest digestive efficiency, without which the growth is stunted, the muscles become lax, the frame feeble, and the mind slothful. The removal of indigestion by these Pills is so easy that none save the most thoughtless would permit it to sap the springs of life.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

OCTOBER

Table with columns: DESCRIPTION OF STOCK, Sat. 14, Mon. 16, Tues. 17, Wed. 18, Thur. 19, Fri. 20. Rows include Government, India Stock, Banks, Miscellaneous, Debenture Stocks, and Dublin Water Works.

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d Bank Rate—Of Discount—4 per cent., 17th August, 1882. Of Deposits—1 per cent., 29rd March, 1882. Name Days—October 26th, and November 14th, 1882. Account Days—October 27th, and November 15th, 1882. Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

CREAGH—October 8, at Mallow, the wife of W. P. Creagh, Esq., solicitor, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

SHELL and KENNICOTT—At St. Mary of the Angels' Catholic Church, Bayswater, by the Rev. J. Keating, O.C.S.C., Henry Shell, Major Royal Artillery, youngest son of the late James Shell, Esq., Q.C., of Dungannon, County Tyrone, to Elizabeth Mary (Lilla), daughter of the Rev. R. Dutton Kennicott, Vicar of Stockton-on-Tees, Durham.

WATTERS and JOHNSTON—October 11, at St. Patrick's Church, Dundalk, by the Rev. Michael J. Watters, S.M., brother of the bridegroom, Alexander A. Watters, of Dundalk, Merchant, to Mary Agnes, eldest daughter of Arthur Johnston, Esq., solicitor, Dundalk.

DEATHS.

KERNAN—October 19, at Upper Prince Edward-terrace, Blackrock, Charles, second son of Chas. Kernan, Esq., solicitor, aged 41 years. LOUGHEED—October 14, at Portarlington, Henry M. Lougheed, Esq., solicitor.

M'CARNEY—October 16, at Middleton, Co. Cork, suddenly, Alexander M'Carthy, Esq., solicitor, aged 80 years. O'DONOVAN—October 11, at Sligo, Mary Elizabeth, the beloved child of Daniel O'Donovan, Esq., solicitor.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50, DENZILLE-STREET.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH. with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK FOR STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens: it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each. 58f

HENDRICK and CO.,

PRINTERS, STATIONERS, SCRIVENERS, and ARTISTS' WAREHOUSE, 28 CLARE-STREET, DUBLIN. 106

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S. F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c., for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111 GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's). Late of WATERHOUSE & Co.'s 90

STOKES BROTHERS, PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS, LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS, 22, WESTMORELAND-STREET, DUBLIN. 293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO., 73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank), are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy, Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

D. W. CARROLL, 44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,

Wishes to call attention to his large STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES, Direct in every instance from the Makers.

They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of

LEATHER GOODS,

Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases, With every article connected with Stationery, Are Sold much under usual charges.

Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer. Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge. 72

Printed and Published by the Proprietor, JOHN FALCONER, every Saturday, at 63, Upper Sackville-street, in the Parish of St. Thomas and City of Dublin.—Saturday, October 21, 1882.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PEROT, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

EVERY MAN WHO SMOKES Should invest 24 stamps for the NEW PERFECTED

The Best

Selected Briars

only.

JENINGS & CO., Inventors, 97 NEWGATE-ST., LONDON. The most Perfect Pipe invented since Smoking began. Prospectus Free. 61

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HANRATTY, 28, FISHER'S-LANE. 978

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS. ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE. ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA. ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO., the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

Agents—Messrs. Dugdon & Son, 118 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewart & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE, Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection. 10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps. 21, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBURN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID,

Curls the straightest and most ungovernable Hair, 2s. 6d., sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE,

To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His GREAT HAIR RESTORER.

2s. 6d.; it changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles.

As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 2s. 6d.; his DEPILATORY for removing Hair and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers. 7

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,

No. 8 D'Olier street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.

J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees, Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.

Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms. 91

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO. LIMITED. SECURITY &c. RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—

39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 51

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1882.

No. 822

PRIVILEGE OF WITNESSES AS TO CRIMINATING QUESTIONS.—VII.

CONFLICTING, however, as are the dicta of the English Judges, and irreconcilable as is the decision in Temple v. The Commonwealth with that in The Queen v. Boyes, it is satisfactory to have now an express judgment of the Court of Appeal in Ex p. Reynolds (which will be found fully reported in the October issue of the Law Journal), after a full examination of, at least, the English authorities, that a witness is not the sole judge whether a question put to him may tend to criminate him; and that, in order to entitle him to the privilege of silence, the court must see, from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the evidence which he is called upon to give, that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger (as to the various descriptions of which, see Seton, Decrees, 4th ed., 160, 1346) to him from his being compelled to answer—a bare possibility of legal peril to him not being sufficient to entitle him to protection (cf. M'Laughlin v. Prior, 9 Ir. L. T. Dig. 22); but, that if the fact of the witness being in danger be once made to appear, great latitude should be allowed him in judging for himself of the effect of any particular question. "The principle, no doubt, is important, because the liberty of the subject is at all times a sacred matter, and if I saw there was any chance of the answer to any one of these questions forming a link in a chain of evidence which might ultimately lead to the conviction of the witness, I would not compel him to answer," said Bacon, C.J., in the court below; and the case itself exemplifies the difficulties incident to administering the rule it establishes, but the facts need not be more particularly mentioned as the court expressly abstained from deciding that the witness should answer the particular questions asked. Suffice it to say that, while the maxim Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare constitutes one of our most salutary institutional safeguards of the private rights and personal liberty of the subject, the ruling in Ex p. Reynolds appears to us to furnish a necessary and adequate protection against its abuse, at the same time that, no doubt, as observed in the Justice of the Peace of the 9th ult., the rule there laid down "demands of the judge an acute and penetrating glance into the complications of the whole case, before he can be sure that the witness is not merely pretending to be alarmed, in order to get rid of a disagreeable duty in answering the questions put." So limited, the law (which, moreover, admits self-inculpatory evidence given out of court, and not elicited by appeals to the hopes or fears of the accused) still sufficiently averts the danger of assisting to convict a man out of his own mouth, by possibly false statements induced by the flattery of hope or suspicion of fear. "Perhaps our law has gone even too far in that direction," observed Jessel, M.R., in Ex p. Reynolds; "and, without at all impugning the policy of the law, there certainly must be a larger policy, which requires a person to answer, where the judge thinks that he is not bona fide objecting with the view of claiming privilege to protect himself, but to prevent other parties getting that testimony which is necessary for the purposes of justice." Be this as it may, the practice must now be taken as settled; although, considering that the principle affected was itself of comparatively recent introduction, silently crystallised into a regula juris, and that the practice had been the subject of such conflicting decisions—both principle and practice springing, also, from judicial considerations of policy—we cannot but regret that liberty to appeal to the House of Lords was refused.

For our own part, as already intimated, we do not propose to enter here into a discussion of the question of policy, which, by the way, as regards defendants in criminal cases, was debated at the Social Science Congress on the 22nd ult.; but, we may observe that we do not regard the commonly added statutable provisions, against the accused being prejudiced by his failure to avail himself of permission to testify, as amounting to any real safeguard that he shall not suffer thereby, even when administered in such a favourable spirit as was shown in Austin v. People (102 Ill. 261), in which we find it held by the Supreme Court of Illinois, last March, that any allusion to or comments by the prosecution in a criminal case on the fact that the defendant has not testified as a witness in his own behalf, especially when allowed by the court notwithstanding the defendant's objection, is such a violation of the letter and spirit of a statute of this kind, and such an error, as to require the reversal of a conviction, when the proofs of guilt are not so clear and conclusive that the court can affirmatively say the accused could not have been harmed through that cause. [As to criminating admissions of one joint defendant not being evidence against the other, see People v. Stevens, Alb. L.J., Sept. 23, 1882, p. 259; and as to evidence of husband for wife, when not accused but accusing, see 13 Ir. L. T. 463; and as to wife's continuing disability, after divorce, to testify in reference to confidential marital communications, see Homan v. Homan, 14 Rep. (Boston) 475, Oct. 11, 1882.] "It may be asked," writes Mr. Maury, "whether it is in the power of courts or legislatures to prevent the accused's failure to testify from prejudicing him in the minds of the jury. It is a fact in the case which the jury have derived from the infallible evidence of their own senses, and which must needs force itself on their minds. The failure of an accused to make an explanation in reply to an extra-judicial imputation of crime is not only relevant but strong evidence against him; but how tremendous must be the effect of his silence on that supreme occasion which is to decide forever the question of his guilt or innocence? A great and philosophical jurist says on this subject: 'The prisoner is invited to silence by being assured that it will do him no injury, when in the nature of things the jury cannot but infer guilt from false representations or from silence, without any motive but that of concealing the truth; either of which circumstances, when they occur, are given in evidence according to our present practice' (Livingstone's Int. Rep. to Code of Procedure). You might as well try to 'bind the sweet influences of the Pleiades or loose the bands of Orion' as try to erase from the minds of the jury a material relevant fact which has become a part of their consciousness through the evidence of their own senses. Indeed, if it were possible for the mind to escape the influence and effect of such evidence, there is no test by which it could be determined whether that result had been attained. No man of a high sense of honour would ever trust himself to sit as arbiter in a case where he had been in a position to contract the bias of a partisan, however firm his belief in his ability to do justice, because he would be conscious of the want of a touchstone by which to know that his mind was not, after all, under the dominion of some subtle, sinister, influence. No legislative command, no direction from the bench, can ever shake the intuitive conviction of men that the operations of the mind are beyond the control of human law, and, as a consequence, so long as statutes allowing the accused to testify exist, so long will innocent men be coerced to take the stand by the dread of being compromised by their silence. These views are not without judicial sanction" (citing State v. Lawrence, 57 Me. 581; State v. Cleaves, 59 ib. 298; State v. Bartlett, 55 ib. 216; Ruloff v. The People, 45 N. Y. 221). Be it added that we do not hold with the many writers who regard the rule excluding parties from being witnesses in civil cases as identical in principle with that which excludes the accused in criminal prosecutions. Suffice it to say, however, that as pointed out in a paper on "Profert of the Person in Criminal Cases," in the Central Law Journal of the 15th ult., the object of a criminal examination is not merely to investigate the facts and discover the truth (which is the province of the grand jury), but to obtain a fair trial of the accused, using only lawful evidence; while the introduction of the principle in question, protecting the accused (not to be confounded with the rule that made interest a disqualification in civil cases), was causally connected with the manner in which criminal justice was administered prior to the revolution of 1688, as pointed out by Mr. Maury. "Seeing," he adds, "that this great principle was introduced soon after the liberties of the English people were placed on a more stable foundation, and more securely guarded against the encroachments of prerogative, we do not think the careful student of the criminal jurisprudence of England can fail to be convinced that the change effected by this principle was not unwarranted, or the result of a sentimental tenderness for criminals, or a predilection for bad evidence, or a connivance at crime, as Mr. Bentham thought, but was a natural sequence of the change from tyranny to liberty, from a cruel and truckling judiciary to a judiciary made independent, that it might stand indifferent between the crown and the prisoner. It was a change demanded by the spirit of an age which had no tolerance for a procedure so intimately associated with the despotism from which the nation had so happily escaped, and which was to the mind what the rack and the thumb-screw had been to the body." This amelioration was effected, says Mr. Jardine (Cr. Tr.), "by the good sense and humanity which advancing civilisation has necessarily introduced into our institutions." And even if it be thought that the rule ought not to be now maintained to shield the objects of a criminal charge, it is still quite possible, with Mr. Goodeve, to distinguish in favour of retaining the privilege of witnesses as to questions tending to criminate them.

LEGAL EDUCATION.

"THE profession of the law is as ancient as justice, as noble as virtue itself. But it necessarily results that it calls for all the solicitude of government. It concerns too closely the fortune, the honour, and the life itself of citizens to be neglected. Those, whose purpose it is to practise it, ought to be held to make proof of their studies, of their capacity, of their good morals, and of their probity."

Since this eloquent exclamation of d'Aguesseau, how much has been said and written on the subject of the reform of legal education, and yet still the question remains in a state of unrest. Nay, now more than ever since the introduction of Lord Selborne's bill into Parliament for the creation of a State school of law, discontent with existing systems is being manifested wherever English law holds sway; and the legal serials of Canada and America, alike with our own, present the expression of a common feeling that the time is ripe for fresh practical consideration of the educational requirements that should be exacted, in order to qualify the present generation of students for a profession that so closely concerns "the fortune, the honour, and the life itself of citizens." Of the importance of this subject, indeed, it cannot for a moment be doubted that the Incorporated Law Society, too, is profoundly sensible, and the correspondence published in our columns in reference to the preliminary examinations may well serve to add a stronger zest to inquiry, nor will it fail in utility whether the result be to establish that the prevailing system is satisfactory or that it is susceptible of improvement.

But, however much is to be demanded in the way of compulsory education, a wide margin must ever remain for the exercise of voluntary self-education. Here, indeed, the field is limitless, but hardly less are the difficulties to be encountered; and to enlarge the opportunity for independent acquisition of knowledge, while lessening the impediments incident to it, such associations as the Solicitors' Apprentices' Debating Society (whose opening meeting is elsewhere announced) must particularly commend themselves to the attention of all who desire to acquire or strengthen what Spencer calls "intellectual muscle." We cannot, indeed, too strongly impress upon apprentices the substantial practical advantages to be thus derived, and we earnestly recommend the association to their notice. Few better aids to legal education exist, and none better calculated to cultivate and develop the intellectual qualities of the future members of the solicitors' profession; and truly, the apprentice who has availed himself of this resource will never have reason to think his time thrown away. He will have gone through a preparation perhaps more fitted than any other to render him expert and ready in the performance of the active functions of his vocation, and, facilitated by this preparatory trial, he will find it the more easy to discharge them. Young Indian lawyers, at all events, have more reason to find fault with the kind of trial they have to pass before entering into practice, as would appear from the following extract from the Indian Spectator:—"The young Desai of Olpad, who returned from England the other day after qualifying himself as barrister, has passed through another and a less pleasant trial. He has been sat upon by the orthodox, and has, at their command, eaten of the 'five products of the cow,' and re-entered caste."

QUARTERLY INDICES TO CASES.

The Index to Cases published quarterly in this Journal has proved of so much practical utility to the profession, that we have been engaged in considering whether further improvements might not be introduced; and we hope that its next issue will be found still more satisfactory. Inter alia, we propose to add references to the cases in the "Law Reports," &c., and generally to make the Index as complete as possible. Meantime, we should feel obliged to subscribers for any suggestions they may offer on the subject.

CHIEF JUSTICE MORRIS AT ROME.—Chief Justice Morris, who with his wife has been spending part of his holidays in Rome, has had a private audience of Leo XIII. before leaving for Athens and Constantinople.

ON BANKRUPTCY.

The following is the text of a paper, by Mr. W. H. S. MONCK, the learned Chief Clerk of the Court of Bankruptcy, read before the recent meeting of the Social Science Congress at Nottingham:—

Although my experience of bankruptcy has not been a very long one, it has enabled me to arrive at some conclusions on the subject which, in view of the contemplated changes in the law, I think it desirable to bring before you. I am aware that conclusions drawn from the present state of the law and practice of bankruptcy in Ireland cannot be applied to England without qualification; but, discontent with the existing conditions of affairs is as prevalent on one side of the Channel as on the other, and the ordinary complaints, moreover, appear to be of a very similar character in both instances. I may add that Irish creditors have given a practical verdict on the merits of the English system which is not without its significance. The Irish Act of 1872 gave the creditors the option of having the bankrupt's estate administered by a Trustee and Committee of Inspection instead of the Official and Trade Assignees, but they have hardly availed themselves of this option in one case out of fifty. The chief defects of the system, however, appear to exist equally in both countries, and, in my opinion, can only be remedied to a very limited extent by any amendment of the law or increased activity on the part of the officials. Organisation on the part of the creditors themselves would, I believe, accomplish more towards removing the evils complained of than all other remedies put together. These evils may I think be classed under three heads, viz.:—1, Imperfect realisation of the bankrupt's estate (including the acceptance of inadequate compositions, whether in bankruptcy or arrangement); 2, Excessive costs in collecting and distributing the bankrupt's assets; and 3, Errors in distribution, including the admission of debts not really due (whether wholly or in part), and proportional overpayments to particular classes of creditors. A fourth head—Delay—might perhaps be added. For all these defects the best remedy would, I think, be afforded by the formation of what I would term a Creditors' Association, considering the number of persons in this Kingdom who live by selling goods on credit and who often depend on payments made by their debtors to meet their own obligations. There should be no difficulty in founding such an association provided that the public was satisfied of its utility; and experience seems to prove that without such a central organisation the creditors of the individual bankrupt or arranging debtor will hardly ever be found ready to act in concert. In fact, they are often unaware even of each others existence at the very time when vigorous and united action on their part is most requisite. The association ought, as I shall hereafter notice, to be made to a large extent self-supporting, but it would be a mistake to endeavour to render it in itself a commercial success. Its object should not be to realise a profit but to render bankruptcies and arrangements more productive. I shall point out briefly what it should seek to accomplish under each of the heads already enumerated, pointing out at the same time the amendments of the law which seem to me desirable. Before entering on this discussion, however, I may state that the amendment of the law should be one of the objects of the association. Its managers would soon become aware of the defects of the present legislation, and would be the most competent persons to point them out to Parliament or in many cases to the judges of the court; for under existing statutes the judges possess considerable legislative powers, exercisable by what are known as General Orders; and the improvement of our bankruptcy legislation by means of revised General Orders is not attended with the difficulty, delay, and expense that usually occurs in the amendment of the statutes.

The first defect in the present system which I noticed is the imperfect realisation of the bankrupt's estate. This, together with the cost of realising, often leads to the acceptance of insufficient compositions, the creditors believing that a small or ill-secured composition is preferable to the administration of the estate in bankruptcy. Bankrupts' stocks as a rule sell for less than their intrinsic value. They are generally not of a very inviting character, and no one attends on behalf of the creditors to bid them up to a fair price. If there was an association willing to purchase them at reasonable prices, they would probably realise much more than at present without involving any pecuniary loss to the society. Again, the properties of bankrupts are often liable to mortgages, rents, or other charges, which make the trustee or assignees very cautious about interfering with them, especially if the funds available for making good the losses which may be occasioned thereby are scanty. Valuable interests are sometimes sacrificed through this timidity, and even where a sale ultimately takes place, I usually find that little or nothing has been received out of the premises during the interval between the bankruptcy and the sale, while head-rents, taxes, and interest have accumulated, and the premises have not improbably fallen into disrepair. An association willing to purchase mortgaged premises or leaseholds in which there is any interest, or to indemnify the trustee or assignees against the consequences of taking possession, would here prove of great utility to the creditors. The collection of debts due to the bankrupt is usually very incomplete, besides occasioning much expense and delay. An association willing either to purchase these debts, or to collect them at such a percentage as would on the average cover the expense of collection, would greatly increase the amount derived from this source. Questionable assignments of portions of the bankrupt's property, moreover, often pass unchallenged from want of funds to dispute them. An association willing to advance money for the purpose, to be reimbursed by a percentage on the property recovered, would often lead to successful efforts to set these transactions aside; and nothing would have a greater tendency to put an end to fraudulent assignments than the certainty that they would be disputed. Bills of exchange and promissory notes, too, might sometimes be taken up with advantage when the bankrupt was the drawer or indorser and the acceptor's name was good. It is sometimes very difficult to prevent banks from receiving (between dividends and securities) more than twenty shillings in the pound in respect of some of the bills held by them, and even where this is not the case, the additional sum that might have been received by pressing the acceptor is lost to the estate. As to insufficient or dishonest compositions, I have already noticed that a great check would be given to them by rendering bankruptcies more productive. But the association should not stop here. It should be a part of its business to watch arrangements and compositions, to hold proofs of debt and proxies for such creditors as were willing to pay a trifling charge for the purpose, and to turn every suspicious transaction into bankruptcy. When speaking of dishonest compositions or arrangements, I do not refer solely to those in which the sum offered is too small. In many cases the amount is sufficient, but is payable by promissory notes bearing either the name of the debtor alone or of the debtor together with some man of straw. In the interval between the resolution and the maturity of the notes the debtor or bankrupt makes away with his property and possibly absconds, leaving little or nothing for his creditors, or, to vary the programme, he pays some of the notes leaving the others unpaid, thus adding fraudulent preference to the fraudulent disposition of his assets. Indeed, the notes actually paid may be those payable to relatives or friends to whom nothing is really due, and whose names were placed on the composition list by a further act of fraud. On the proper mode of preventing this last kind of fraud I shall touch hereafter, but at present I will say that I think the Creditors' Association should set its face against all compositions payable by bills of exchange or promissory notes. The advantage to the creditor of a negotiable instrument with such names to it is seldom considerable, and when payment by instalments has to be accepted, a cash payment made through the court—no creditor to receive anything until enough had been lodged to pay that instalment to all—seems to me the proper mode of liquidation. When the amount lodged was insufficient and bankruptcy did not supervene, the sum lodged should be divided rateably. This system would not, of course, dispense with the sureties (or surety) who might be bound to lodge enough money to cover one or more of the instalments in case the principal neglected to do so, and banks would soon find means of advancing money on the security of the instalments to be lodged, together with the personal undertaking of the borrower. That the promissory note system is eminently unsatisfactory will, I think, be admitted; and the proportion of these notes which are ever negotiated, in Ireland at least, appears to be very small.

With regard to the realisation of the bankrupt's estate but little amendment in the law seems requisite. Greater facilities for selling mortgaged property should, however, be given to the assignees or trustees, and it should be provided that the landlord or mortgagee could not require them to pay any larger sum than the net amount received by them out of the premises until a demand of possession had been made and compliance therewith refused—such possession, if given to the landlord, to terminate the lease and liberate the assignees or trustee from all further or personal liability in relation to it. The assignees or trustee should, also, be empowered to compel any creditor to realise all collateral securities which he held, unless the person giving them was in substance a surety for the bankrupt, and to retain any dividends payable to him until these securities were realised. But, this latter point would be unimportant if the suggestion subsequently made as regards secured creditors should be adopted.

The second evil to which I referred is the large amount of costs and expenses incurred in bankruptcies. Here the association could not effect so much as in the former instance, and its chief utility would perhaps consist in calling the attention of the judges to the defects in the General Orders, and of Parliament to the defects in the existing law. In my capacity of taxing officer, I have been struck with some of the anomalies of the scale of solicitors' costs—anomalies which, I believe, exist equally in England. Thus, when the act of bankruptcy is absconding, sittings for the examination of the bankrupt are fixed and advertised in the usual way; a summons requiring his attendance for examination is issued with full knowledge that it cannot be served—or perhaps it is served on some member of his family, and an affidavit of service duly sworn and placed on the files of the court though the man is 1,000 miles away. The sitting duly comes off; the bankrupt is called and does not appear; an order is made up and filed solemnly recording this fact; and the solicitor, in addition to the various preliminary charges, becomes entitled to the highest fee that is allowed for any attendance at court! The higher or lower scale of costs depending on the estimated assets not the amount actually realised, the taxing officer is compelled to follow this estimate even when its error is manifest; and it is even contended that when the bankrupt has made no estimate of his assets (which often occurs in the very poorest cases) the higher scale becomes ipso facto applicable! Besides, however, calling attention to anomalies of this kind there is one thing which the association—if allowed a locus standi—could accomplish directly. It could employ an agent to attend on the taxation of solicitors' costs and see that these were reduced to their legitimate figure. My own experience has satisfied me of the difficulty of taxing costs properly when there is no real opposition. An energetic opponent almost always detects errors and overcharges which would otherwise have escaped me; and it may be remembered that a solicitor does not suffer either in purse or in reputation by including in his bills of costs overcharges, or charges for work not done at all, which, if inserted in an ordinary tradesman's bill, would be regarded as monstrous. The object of the association, however, should not be simply to cut down the solicitors' charges. One who has really done his utmost for the benefit of the estate should be dealt with liberally, while the mere cost-maker should experience no mercy. The solicitor should be fairly remunerated for every real service conferred by him in realising the estate and keeping down the claims against it; but the largest bills of costs are sometimes furnished in cases where, though all the forms permitted by the court have been exhausted, there has been positive neglect as regards everything of practical value. I may here remark that, in my opinion, the solicitor's remuneration for business transacted out of court—in collecting debts, for instance, and otherwise realising the bankrupt's estate—should be made more largely dependent on results than at present. The higher and lower scales of costs, moreover, should be extended to charges and sales by mortgagees, or else the costs of charge and sale should, in the absence of special circumstances, be limited to a percentage on the proceeds. Solicitors, moreover, are not the only persons whose charges require to be watched and moderated. Auctioneers, valuers, accountants, caretakers, and employees of every kind (to say nothing of sheriffs) frequently seek to retain, or to exact, more than they are entitled to, and sometimes succeed. If such charges were subjected to the scrutiny of an agent of the association, they might often be reduced. In this respect the Irish system of official assignees seems to me preferable to the trustee system adopted in England. The official assignee must vouch all his accounts before an officer of the court at a public sitting held for the purpose, and this officer is bound to disallow every item which he regards as improper. Having been passed as correct by the officer, there is a further public audit of the account before the judge. At either of these public sittings an agent of the society could attend and object to any item which seemed excessive or improper.

This last remark applies equally to the third defect which I noticed in the present bankruptcy system—errors in the distribution of the funds. No debt is admitted in an Irish bankruptcy until it has been brought before a judicial officer at a public sitting at which any interested party can object. The presence of an agent of the association at these meetings would, however, prove of great use to the presiding officer, who at present has often to start the objection himself, and, no doubt, in some cases fails to do so; but the great utility of such an agent would be in arrangements, where the officer is in fact bound to admit any debt returned on the debtor's statement of affairs, unless some interested party objects to it. It has been held that the arranging debtor cannot get his certificate of conformity without providing a composition for all the creditors returned on his statement of affairs whose debts have not been judicially disallowed, and it would evidently be unjust to deprive him of his certificate because some of his (alleged) creditors do not choose to bring forward their claims for investigation before the court. A formal objection by an interested party would compel them to do so, when, I believe, it would often appear that the debt could not be proved, or at least could not be proved for the full amount returned in the debtor's statement. Here, however, I think an alteration of the law is desirable. The arranging debtor should be held to have satisfied all his obligations when he has paid the composition to all creditors whose debts have been proved or admitted in the matter; and if a creditor having notice of the proceedings neglects to take the proper steps to have his debt proved or admitted, the consequences of his neglect should be the same as in bankruptcy. With this alteration in the law, there is no reason why proofs and claims should not be scrutinised with as much care in arrangements as in bankruptcies; and the court should have power to increase the amount of the composition, in case it appeared that the amount of debts placed on the composition list was materially less than those returned on the statement of affairs. An arranging debtor could then gain little by returning sham debts as due to his friends on his statement of affairs; more especially if all proofs and claims were investigated, and as far as possible disposed of, before a resolution accepting or rejecting the composition was arrived at. Arrangements in fact should be in all respects assimilated with compositions after bankruptcy.

Another serious error in distribution takes place as regards secured creditors, using that phrase in its widest sense for creditors who have any other mode of procuring payment of the debt except the ordinary dividend out of the bankrupt's estate. Here, I think, an amendment of the law is requisite, and I will briefly indicate what I think that amendment ought to be. I would, as I have intimated, treat every creditor who has any other remedy for any part of his debt as a secured creditor, the only exception being when the other person who (or whose property) was liable could prove against the bankrupt's estate for any payment which he might have to make. This would be the case, for instance, if the other person was a surety for the bankrupt, or if the bankrupt had given him a bill or promissory note for a debt due by the bankrupt, which he afterwards discounted. But wherever the liability was not of this character—wherever payment, if made by the other party, would really go to relieve the bankrupt's estate—I would require the secured creditor to make an estimate of the value of his securities, and to prove against the bankrupt's estate for the balance only. This estimate should be subject to the same provisions as regards redemption and realisation with the estimates of the value of securities made under the present system; but, I would allow the creditor to amend his estimate at any time before the final dividend, on satisfying the court that any depreciation which had taken place in the value of the securities was not the result of his own default. With this change in the law, a society willing to purchase securities at their estimated value (when satisfied that they were worth it) would often prove a great boon to all parties concerned. The amendment of the law, however, is what seems to me really essential. Using the phrase "secured creditor" in its widest sense, I would only allow him to prove against the bankrupt's general estate for the amount which would be totally lost in case he did not prove, or which, if not proved by him, would be proved by some one else. Whether his security consists of a lien on the bankrupt's estate, or on some one else's estate, or in the personal liability of some one else, or in a right to a dividend out of some other estate seems to me immaterial. If the creditor can obtain full payment of his debt otherwise than by means of a dividend out of the bankrupt's estate, I would give him no dividend out of it; and if he can obtain payment of part of the debt otherwise than by means of the dividend, I would give him no dividend upon that part of it. I would, moreover, exclude any proof of debt upon a contract or covenant, the sole object of which was to secure a debt. A proof for the amount of the debt, less by the value of the security (if any), would suffice to meet all the ends of justice. It seems to me inequitable to permit a creditor to prove for the whole amount of his debt as unsecured, and at the same time for the value of a covenant by the bankrupt to insure his life in order to secure it. At all events, the creditor should be bound to apply the dividends, or the value of the covenant, towards keeping up the policy, and should give the estate credit for the increased value of the policy when the dividends were exhausted.

If this amendment of the law was adopted, it would render my next head of faulty distribution unnecessary—viz, payment of full dividends where only a part of the debt is due, the residue having been discharged otherwise than out of the bankrupt's estate after the proof of debt was admitted. Thus, the full amount of £100 is due on foot of a bill of exchange when proof is admitted, but is reduced to £25 before a dividend is declared by payments from other parties. The creditor receives his dividend on £100, which is really four times the rate at which the dividend is declared. It is true that he is not to receive more than twenty shillings in the pound in all; but there is, in fact, no machinery for ascertaining whether he has or has not received more than that sum in respect of this particular bill, and it is plain that his dividend may be altogether in excess of those paid to the other creditors, even where the total payments fall short of twenty shillings in the pound. But, whatever becomes of the law on this point, every creditor who receives payment of any part of his debt from other sources should be bound to give information forthwith to the trustee or assignee, and some penalty should be imposed in cases where this information was withheld. Till this is done, the qualification which the judges introduce into their judgments—that the creditor is not to receive in all more than twenty shillings in the pound—is a mere salvo. The creditor is not bound to mark the payments made on account on his bills of exchange. Even if he did so, the person to whom the bill is produced, on payment of the dividend, probably has not at hand the information which would enable him to say whether more or less than twenty shillings in the pound had been paid; and if he had that information in examining a bundle of perhaps over 100 bills, the fact that one or two had been fully discharged would probably escape his observation. Payment of more than twenty shillings in the pound, in respect of one or more of a batch of bills, is not, I believe, an unusual occurrence; but I have not heard of an instance in which it was detected in the office of the Official Assignee. I am strongly of opinion not only that all payments, otherwise than out of the bankrupt's estate, should be forthwith notified, but also that the debt should be immediately reduced by the amount so notified, whether it is due on foot of a bill of exchange or otherwise.

Landlords are another class of creditors who seem to me unduly favoured under the present system. I would abolish the right of distress after bankruptcy unless the trustee or assignee accepted the tenancy. They might, on their acceptance, be bound to pay the rent in full, and to make good any breaches of covenant which had occurred; but if they disclaimed and gave up possession of the premises, I would leave the landlord to prove for his rent, and for any other losses which he had sustained, as an ordinary creditor. The question is sometimes complicated by the existence of a mortgage. In that case, I would allow the trustee or assignee to serve a notice on the mortgagee, requiring him either to take possession and pay the rent, or else to give up his mortgage—the adoption of the former alternative rendering him subject to the ordinary liabilities of a mortgagee in possession. Leases often contain clauses against alienation without the landlord's consent. I would enable the Court of Bankruptcy to dispense with these clauses in case such consent was unreasonably withheld. Clauses of forfeiture in case of bankruptcy are likewise not infrequent. Now, since the landlord can require the trustee or assignee, within a limited time, either to accept the lease and pay the rent in full, or else to give up the land—thus affording him all the benefits of a forfeiture—there is no rational ground for a forfeiture on bankruptcy, and the court should be at liberty to relieve against it. Every device for rendering the bankrupt's property unavailable after adjudication should be discouraged. The landlord should not be permitted (even under the pretext of a contract for valuable consideration) to assist in defrauding the creditors. He has in justice a right either to his rent, or to his land and dividend; but, I cannot see that he has a right to anything more. For example, A. sells goods on credit to B., who stores them on land which he rents from C.—which is no unusual case. B. becomes a bankrupt. Where is the justice of paying C. in full, while A., out of whose goods the payment was made, receives a small dividend, or perhaps nothing at all? The law of distress has been already limited in the case of bankruptcy. If natural justice is consistent with its limitation, why not also with its abolition? I may add, that where a distress is made before bankruptcy I would place it on the same footing with an execution for the like amount.

Another species of faulty distribution consists in payment of dividends to money-lenders who have swollen their real demands by interest at exorbitant rates, and even by compound interest. Here, also, an amendment of the law is requisite, though something might be effected if an agent of the association was present to expose the nature of the transaction whenever such a claim was brought forward for proof. Persons in difficulties often borrow money at the most extravagant rates, the lenders being well aware that the risk of bankruptcy is considerable. I would propose that interest at a rate exceeding 10 per cent. should not be allowed on any debt until all the other creditors had been paid in full, and that compound interest should likewise be disallowed. Nor would I permit this rule to be varied although bills of exchange had been obtained, or judgments entered up in respect of the interest in question. Such an enactment might lessen the amount of these loans, but that would, I think, be a step in the right direction. Loans at very high rates of interest seldom enable a man to right himself, and when they fail to accomplish that object they almost always diminish the dividends which are paid when bankruptcy finally supervenes. It is time that we regarded bankruptcy as one of our institutions, and looked on devices for unduly deferring the catastrophe as forms of concealed fraud. When a man cannot meet his liabilities in full, and has no prospect of being able to do so, he should squander no more of his creditors' money, and should proceed without delay to make a fair distribution of what he has left. Nor should he make any payment in full whether under pressure or otherwise, for against such pressure the court of Bankruptcy can, and will, protect him, if appealed to for the purpose. This protection, however, is now granted in arrangements, only on condition of the arranging debtor paying the costs. It is otherwise in bankruptcies. I would here, also, assimilate the law in the two cases, and remove all hindrances to the complete protection of deficient estates. The arranging debtor should of course satisfy the court that the estate was really deficient. In scrutinising proofs of debt and other claims, none require greater care than judgments obtained a short time before the failure—especially when obtained by default. Such proofs could, even under the existing law, be impeached by the agents of the association; but I should be disposed to enact that, whenever a judgment has been obtained by default within six months before the filing of a petition in arrangement or bankruptcy, the creditor should prove upon the consideration for the judgment. Where that was established—for the full amount—I would allow him to add the costs of the judgment to his claim, but overmarking the judgment should be punished by the loss of the costs.

Lastly, the association might accomplish a good deal towards preventing unnecessary delay in the realisation and distribution of the bankrupt's assets. What is called the law's delay is very frequently the solicitor's delay; but solicitors' delays are largely increased by the present scale of costs, which renders it quite a laborious undertaking to draw them in the first instance, and to tax them in the second. I had lately before me a bill of costs containing 3,650 items, the average amount of an item being under five shillings. As I can only devote one day in the week to the taxation of costs, the time which the solicitor required to vouch the various items comprised in the bill in question may be imagined. A simpler scale of costs, accompanied with fines for overcharges, would reduce the labour of the taxing officer by nine-tenths, and that of the solicitor in preparing and vouching his bills of costs by at least one half; and it may be remarked that when there is any pressure of business in a solicitor's office the task of drawing a bill of costs, comprising all the multifarious items included in the present scale, is naturally deferred for a more convenient season. Independently of this, however, an association whose agents were constantly on the watch would abridge the duration of the present proceedings in various ways. Trustees, assignees, solicitors would all be anxious to avoid being brought before the court on a well-founded charge of delay, and the purchases made by the association, especially those of outstanding debts, would enable estates to be wound up at an earlier period.

AUDIENCE OF SOLICITORS UNDER THE PREVENTION OF CRIMES ACT.

On the 20th inst. Mr. David Lynch, Barrister-at-Law, opened an inquiry in the County Courthouse, Tralee, into the applications of persons in the county of Kerry for compensation under the 19th section of the Prevention of Crimes Act.

The case of Patrick Murphy having been called on, G. Raymond, stated that before the application was gone into he had a preliminary objection to make. He objected to the appearance of any solicitor in these cases, the words of the Act being that the parties should be represented by counsel.

Mr. J. W. Roche, solicitor, who appeared for the applicant, hoped the Commissioner would give a wider interpretation to the word "counsel" than that insisted upon by Mr. Raymond. He submitted that the word "counsel" did not necessarily mean barrister, but meant any practitioner who gave legal advice or assistance to a suitor.

Mr. Lynch pointed out that under the Petty Sessions Act a counsel was a person who had been called to the Bar, and if it had that meaning, then how was he to give it a different interpretation under the present Act, which stated that "The parties should be heard personally or by counsel." It appeared to him that the word "counsel" meant a barrister either at the inner or the outer Bar.

Raymond.—A solicitor appearing in this way incurs a serious liability.

Mr. F. O. Downing, solicitor, who was concerned for a number of applicants, regretted exceedingly that this objection had been made by a member of the Kerry Bar. As long as he had the honour of practising as a solicitor in Kerry the greatest amity and good feeling had existed between the different branches of the profession. In any action the solicitors intended to take at that investigation they never meant to derogate from the rights or privileges of the Bar. They merely intended to vindicate what they believed to be their own rights. They were of opinion that the Legislature never contemplated that in every small case of this description the parties should be put to the serious expense of bringing counsel down from Dublin to represent them. Such an interpretation of the Act would involve the greatest hardship to the claimants and the ratepayers interested in opposing the application. The word "counsel" might mean a barrister, but he submitted that there were no words in the section excluding a solicitor from appearing at the investigation. He was informed that at Ballinasloe Mr. Byrne, Q.C., who had been deputed to hold a similar inquiry, decided that solicitors could appear before him; and he therefore asked for the sake of uniformity and for the sake of the public interest that in the exercise of the discretion which he had, and which it was his duty to interpret liberally, he should not exclude the professional body of whom he (Mr. Downing) happened to be the senior, from appearing before him. If he did his decision would cause serious hardship to the parties interested and great dissatisfaction to the public generally.

Mr. Neligan, solicitor, concurred in the observations of Mr. Downing.

Mr. J. P. Broderick, solicitor, who was also concerned in a number of cases, said he should regard it as the most extraordinary and unmitigated slight upon the profession to which he had the honour to belong if the word "counsel" were held to bear the limited meaning which was sought to be put upon it by interested members of the Bar. At the last assizes Judge Barry said he considered it a great misfortune that Acts of Parliament were framed in England, because English draftsmen were supremely ignorant of the requirements of this country; and in that observation of his lordship he entirely concurred. He had received very large fees from the parties for whom he was concerned on the express assurance that he should not employ counsel, because his clients did not believe in counsel, nor had they any confidence in them.

Mr. B. O'C. Horgan endorsed the sentiments of the preceding speakers, and pointed out that, as his clients were unable to fee counsel, it surely could not be expected that he should fee them out of his own pocket.

Raymond entirely reciprocated the kindly feelings referred to by Mr. Downing, but at the same time he was bound to stand up for the rights of his order, and he therefore called upon the Commissioner to construe the section strictly.

Mr. LYNCH said he had listened throughout the case to the very able arguments addressed to him. He had nothing to say to questions of hardship or inconvenience. He had merely to determine the meaning of the Act of Parliament under which he was sitting. The words of the Act were that "the parties shall be heard personally or by counsel," and his sole duty was to say what was the meaning he attached to the word counsel. In his opinion the word counsel had a well-defined and well-understood meaning, namely—a gentleman who had been called to the Bar and who acted on behalf of clients. Having heard that this point was to be raised he looked into the several Acts of Parliament in which the word counsel was used, and he found, for instance, that counsel were excluded from practising in registry courts in Dublin, whereas solicitors were allowed to practise. Questions of hardship should be addressed to the Legislature and not to him, as he said he had only to determine what was the meaning to be attached to the word "counsel." In his opinion it meant a gentleman who had been called to the Bar, and not a solicitor.

Mr. Broderick.—Then we decline to instruct counsel in any of these cases.

Messrs. Downing, Broderick, Neligan, Roche, M. J. Horgan, R. Huggard, B. O'C. Horgan, and C. Morphy, the solicitors engaged in the several cases then left the court.

Mr. LYNCH decided, in consequence of this incident, to proceed first with the cases in which counsel had been instructed before the investigation opened.

In the same Court, on the 21st inst.,

Mr. W. T. Neligan, solicitor, applied to the Chairman for permission to act for Thomas Clifford, whose case was shortly to be taken up.

The CHAIRMAN said that yesterday morning, immediately after the commission opened, when the first case was called on—namely, that of Patrick Murphy, junior—Mr. Raymond, counsel, rose and objected, and said that he (Chairman) had no jurisdiction, under section 19, sub-section 1, of the Prevention of Crimes Act, to hear a solicitor. He called upon him to give an interpretation of the words of the Act of Parliament. He had the question very fully argued and discussed between the counsel and the solicitors present in court, and Mr. Raymond's application amounted to this to him—Was he entitled, by the Act of Parliament under which he sat legally to hear a solicitor advocating on behalf of either party? He carefully considered the words of the Act of Parliament, and also the provisions of other Acts of Parliament, and he came to the conclusion that he had no discretion whatever in the matter when the Act said that parties would be heard personally or by counsel. Having, therefore, come to the conclusion that he had no discretion, he, with very great reluctance—for he believed he was coerced by the Act of Parliament—agreed not to hear solicitors. Of course, having ruled that yesterday the same ruling should be made again to-day.

Mr. Neligan.—Yes, but in case that counsel withdraw their objection?

The CHAIRMAN said that certainly there was no choice on the part of the counsel as to the solicitors in a question which was ruled on by the court at the commencement of the investigation. He was asked to give an interpretation of the Act of Parliament, and he gave it in the only way which he believed he could give it, and he did not see any way to go back from any interpretation which he believed to be right.

Mr. Broderick, solicitor, said that they had held a conference of the profession to-day, and that they (the solicitors) had come in the belief and in the confidence that the objection would not be made to-day, otherwise they would have adhered to the resolution yesterday to leave the court and not appear at all, as they considered it an unmerited slight upon their branch of the profession.

The CHAIRMAN.—You don't mean to say that I have passed any slight upon your profession?

Several Solicitors.—Oh! no, certainly not.

Mr. Broderick.—I would disclaim any such thing. It is entirely in this extraordinary Act of Parliament.

Raymond.—No slight has been passed by anyone; it was in consequence of the Act of Parliament it was necessary to make that application. There has since been an application by counsel to withdraw, but there is no doubt that counsel only should be heard, except the parties personally. The ruling which the court made yesterday is quite correct. I am very sorry the master could not be arranged. It is not merely, as we said before—

The CHAIRMAN.—It is useless to discuss it further.

The solicitors again left the court, and the applicant decided to go on with the case.

In the same Court, on the 33rd inst.,

Mr. Neligan, solicitor, said that the members of his profession had given the matter involved in the ruling of the court on Friday last their most careful attention, and they were glad to find that the public opinion of the country had amply justified the course they had adopted. They felt that they could without loss of dignity or self-respect, reconsider their position. They had done so; and having regard to the public interests involved in this Act of Parliament, and its serious importance to individuals and localities, and in fact to the due administration of justice, they thought that having vindicated their position, they ought no longer to be an obstacle to a more effectual working of the Act; and they were now, as they always had been until the excuse was raised, prepared to instruct barristers in such cases as the parties desired them, always maintaining their own right to appear as ratepayers, without counsel, before the investigation.

After some further discussion, the subject was allowed to drop.

PRESENTATION TO MR. HENRY HUMPHREYS.

The Associated Clerks of Petty Sessions in Ireland, at their annual meeting, paid a graceful compliment to their president, Mr. Henry Humphreys of Cork (author of a work on "Justices of the Peace"), by presenting to him a handsome silver tea and coffee service, value for 120 guineas, in token of their esteem for his personal character and worth, and as a grateful recognition of the many benefits they have derived from the measures successfully promoted by him for their advancement.

LORD SALISBURY ON POLICE INTERROGATORIES.

The Marquis of Salisbury presided at the Hertford Quarter Sessions on the 16th inst., and, in delivering the charge to the grand jury, said there was one circumstance which came out in two of the cases on which he should like to make an observation. It appeared that in two of the cases some of the evidence consisted of statements made by the prisoner to the police, in one case in reply to what seemed to be almost a cross-examination on the part of the policeman, and in the other in reply to a challenge from the officer, and in both cases the policemen were in plain clothes.

Evidence of this kind must form part of the material on which a jury must base a decision, and it could not be excluded from a court of justice. He did not wish to attach any blame to the policemen, who no doubt acted in accordance with what they believed to be their duty; but he drew attention to it because it appeared to him that there was a danger of a practice growing up which was inconsistent with the principles with which the law was administered in this country. The law declared that a prisoner should not be examined as to his innocence or guilt, except in court. With the merits or demerits of this rule they had no concern, but surely while that was the rule, it was inconsistent that a private cross-examination should take place. If it were desirable—and he would give no opinion as to whether it were or were not—that prisoners should be examined, at least it should be done in open court, before judges and juries, and with the assistance of counsel.

ENGLISH, SCOTCH, AND IRISH JUDGMENTS.

Among the statutes of importance to the legal profession passed last session is the Inferior Courts Judgments Extension Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict., c. 81), which was printed in the September number of the Law Journal Reports. It deals with a subject which occupies the attention of Parliament less frequently than it ought—namely, the closer association of the three kingdoms in legal administration. Ireland has laws based on the same principles as the laws of England; Scotland is a part of the same island, under the same Crown and Parliament, and all three possess the same ultimate Court of Appeal; and yet the law Courts of each look upon the Courts of the others as foreign Courts. The attitude of Scotch lawyers towards English law is not unnaturally that of some suspicion. They are jealous of the legal system under which they were educated, and are inclined to suspect designs on the part of their more powerful neighbour to swamp their own jurisprudence in his own. It would, no doubt, be a great advantage if the three kingdoms had but one system of law between them; but if an assimilation took place, there is no reason why full weight should not be given to those points in which the Scotch differs from the English law. As things stand, it was not till 1868 that judgments in the Courts of one of the sister kingdoms had any validity or recognition in the Courts of the others. It was necessary in England to bring an action on a Scotch judgment just as on a French or an Austrian judgment. A system by which the judgments of the superior Courts of one of the three kingdoms might be registered in the others was established by 31 & 32 Vict., c. 54. Inferior Court judgments were, however, left as before. Probably Scotland lost most by this omission, because her inferior Courts have a larger jurisdiction than those of her neighbours. It was, probably, for this reason that no opposition came from the quarter whence alone it was possible to the bill, which is now an Act; but the Act, as we shall see, is disfigured by some provisions which can only be accounted for by the existence of some international jealousy unworthy of any one of the three countries involved.

The first nine sections of the Act require little more than statement without comment. Judgments obtained in inferior Courts in England, Scotland, or Ireland are to entitle the judgment creditor to a certificate of the officer of the Court on payment of a fee. This certificate may be registered in an inferior Court in either of the other two kingdoms. Process may then issue in the new Court as if the judgment were one of its own. At this point we come upon one of the limitations placed on the operation of the Act. The process is only to be against the "goods and chattels" of the judgment debtor. His land cannot be taken, neither can his person. This limitation cannot, of course, be justified on principle, and is an illustration of a weakness in the British Parliament to make to bites of a cherry. In ten years' time or so, some case of extreme hardship will occur, when another Act will be passed, extending the present Act to executions against land. It is noticeable that the Act of 1868 was not limited to execution against goods, but gave the registered judgment the same effect as a judgment of the Court in which it was registered; so that the present limitation is all the more glaringly unnecessary. Section 9 provides that no judgment shall be registered in an inferior Court which amounts to a greater sum than that over which the Court has jurisdiction. Scotch inferior Court judgments, which may be prevented, under this provision, from registration in English or Irish inferior Courts, may, however, be registered under the Act of 1868 in the superior Courts. A similar privilege is not given to English and Irish judgments, probably because it was supposed that the jurisdiction of English and Irish inferior Courts would always be coextensive, and those of Scotland more extensive than either. Changes, however, may take place. It would have been well to make the Act more elastic and capable of surviving any such changes.

Section 10 evidently contains the main difficulties of the Act. It provides that "this Act shall not apply to any judgment pronounced by any inferior Court in England against any person domiciled in Scotland or Ireland at the time of the commencement of any action, unless the whole cause of action shall have arisen, or the obligation to which the judgment relates ought to have been fulfilled, within the district of such inferior Court, and the summons was served upon the defendant personally within the said district." Similar provisions relate to the judgments in Scotland and Ireland, and a certiorari or similar process in a superior Court is given to enable registration to be prevented. It is useless now to discuss the smallness of the policy which was unable to allow that the Courts of each of the three kingdoms might be trusted to see that judgments were not obtained without due notice to the defendant, but it may be pointed out that the usefulness of the Act is largely impaired by this provision. Take the case of the judgment of an English inferior Court which it is proposed to enforce in Scotland. It is not enough that the creditor has a judgment; he must have a judgment of peculiar sanctity. He must consider whether the defendant was, when the action was commenced, domiciled in Scotland. If so, the judgment is useless unless two circumstances accompany it—(1) that the whole cause of action arose in the district, or the obligation ought to have been fulfilled in the district; and (2) that the summons was personally served on the defendant within the district. To give an illustration. If a Scotchman goes away from Brighton without paying his hotel bill, he cannot be effectually sued in the Brighton County Court unless he can be served within the Brighton district. This limitation as to personal service goes far to nullify the Act, which, moreover, brings into fresh use the very inconvenient test of domicile—one of the most difficult of questions to decide, and one which ought not to be employed as a test. It will never be safe to assume that an Irishman or a Scotchman is not domiciled in those countries. The Irishman may be an absentee landlord, and the Scotchman frequently retains some interest in the soil of his birth. Moreover, a man may have two domiciles; and if one of these is not English it is of little use to obtain a judgment in an English County Court with a view to registration. Of course, if a judgment to which the Act does not apply is registered and execution issued, the creditor will be guilty of a trespass in addition to exposing his proceedings to the certiorari allowed by the Act.—Law Journal.

JUSTICE MAULE was singularly dexterous in picking locks, and which he could not only open but close again, with no other appliance than a stout piece of wire. He had acquired the art by the frequent loss of his keys when at the bar. He used to tell the story how upon one occasion he astonished a country locksmith who had been called in and pronounced a portmanteau beyond his skill, and which the judge opened with ease.

CONDITIONS OF SALE.

Mr. E. C. Ellis writes as follows to the Law Times :—
 "In response to your invitation to your subscribers to offer suggestions on the proposed Law Times Conditions, I venture to make the following observations as to the deposit and memorandum of agreement :—By condition 3 it is provided that the purchaser shall immediately after the sale pay to the vendor or his solicitor the deposit. In your observations on the memorandum you state that the memorandum can either take the form of an agreement between the parties or of an acknowledgment by the purchaser with an agreement to complete, and a ratification by the auctioneer as agent for the vendor, and you suggest that the latter form is preferable. The form of memorandum, however, given by you applies to the case of the vendor's solicitor receiving the deposit and confirming the sale, both of which he is expressed to do as agent of the vendor. Now, grave objections appear to me to present themselves to the use of the word 'agent,' either as applied to the solicitor or the auctioneer. In the case of Edgell v. Day (18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 829) it appeared that E. instructed the defendant, a solicitor, to sell certain real estate. By the conditions of sale the deposits were to be paid to the defendant as 'agent of the vendor.' The defendant attended the sale, and received the deposits, giving receipts in which he described himself as 'agent of the vendor.' E. having demanded the deposits, the defendant claimed to hold them as stakeholder till the completion of the sale. In an action by the executrix of E. to recover the deposits and interest at 5 per cent. it was held that the defendant was a mere agent, and, as such, was bound to hand over the deposits to his principal, and, having failed to do so, was liable to pay interest at 5 per cent. during the time that the money was in his hands. The case of Harrington v. Hoggart (1 B. & Ad. 577) was cited, being the case of an auctioneer, in which Lord Tenderden was represented to have expressly said that if the auctioneer had been an agent he would have been liable. It seems, therefore, that a solicitor signing the form of memorandum proposed in your article would be liable to hand the deposit over to the vendor whether the purchase were completed or not, and that a similar result would obtain in the case of an auctioneer. I would suggest, therefore, that for the word 'agent,' 'stakeholder' should be substituted in reference to the receipt of the deposit, and would submit, with great deference, for your consideration, the following form of memorandum which I invariably make use of myself in sales by auction :—

" MEMORANDUM.

"I, of , do hereby acknowledge that at the sale by auction this day of 18 , of the property mentioned in the within particulars, I was the highest bidder for lot , and was declared the purchaser thereof, subject to the within conditions, at the price of pounds, and that I have paid the sum of pounds by way of deposit and in part payment of the said purchase money to Messrs. as stakeholders, and I hereby bind myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay the remainder thereof, and to complete the said purchase according to the aforesaid conditions.

	£ s. d.
"Purchase money . . . . .	. . . . .
"Deposit . . . . .	. . . . .
"Balance . . . . .	. . . . .

"As agents for the vendor, we confirm this sale, and as stakeholders acknowledge to have received the deposit above mentioned.
 "Abstract to be sent to ."

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.—The proceeds of the sale of Parliamentary papers in the last financial year was £3,019 10s. 11d.

THE LAW OF LIBEL.

Mr. T. Hughes, Q.C., Judge of the Nantwich County Court, on the 11th inst., gave an important decision on the law of libel by deciding that an editor might alter an advertisement to prevent a libel. An application had been made by Dr. Mackie, of the Warrington Guardian, for a small account, the payment of which had been refused on the ground that he had changed "machinations" to "doings." This was brought forward as a test case and decided in favour of the newspaper.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Buckley on the Companies Acts (3rd Edition) 169.

When the Court is satisfied that the business for which a company was formed cannot be carried on, a winding-up order will be made, though the company is not insolvent, and against the wishes of a majority of shareholders (In re Haven Gold Mining Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 242)—C. A.

Partition Act, 1868, s. 8.
Shelford's Real Property Statutes, 748.

Where, under an order made in a partition action during the infancy of parties entitled, land has been actually sold, such land will thenceforth devolve as personalty (Mordaunt v. Benwell, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 247).

Sugden on Powers, 829.

An agreement by trustees of a settlement to lease the property—"the lessee to do the necessary repairs"—was held within a power to lease to any person who should improve or repair the property, or covenant to do so [Doe v. Withers, 2 B. & Ad. 896; 1 Law J. Rep. K. B. 83 questioned] (Truscott v. Diamond Rock Boring Company, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 259)—C. A.

Hodges on Railways, 130.

Where directors of a railway company, whose borrowing powers were exhausted, raised a loan by means of a transaction which was in effect a mortgage of rolling stock under the guise of a nominal sale, in an action against the company a defence that the transaction was ultra vires was held good at law (Yorkshire Railway Wagon Company v. Maclure, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 253).

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTA BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. Alfred C. Wallace, solicitor, has been elected Town Clerk of Limerick.

Mr. H. Story has been elected Clerk of Petty Sessions for Monasterevan.

Mr. N. Taylor has been elected Clerk of Petty Sessions for Fintona.

Mr. James M. Lowry, B.A., has been promoted to the position as a First Class Clerk in the Consolidated Record and Writ Office, vacated by the decease of Mr. R. W. Buchanan, M.A.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

A Collection of Concise Precedents of Wills. With Introduction, Notes, and an Appendix of Statutes. BY CHARLES WEAVER, B.A. (T.C.D.). London: Stevens and Sons, 119 Chancery-lane. Law Publishers and Booksellers. 1882.

The Solicitors' Diary, Almanac and Legal Directory, 1883, &c. Revised by H. S. BOND, Esq., of the Solicitors' Department, Inland Revenue Office, Somerset House. Thirty-ninth Year of Publication. London: Published by the Proprietors, Waterlow and Sons, Limited, 95 and 96 London-wall.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Letters and communications intended for publication, and addressed to THE EDITOR, 33 Upper Sackville-street, Dublin, must be authenticated by the name of the writer, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

THE PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I fully agree with "Timon" that the "Preliminary" should be such an Examination as would ensure the possession of a fairly liberal education by members of our profession.

The malapropisms that I have heard from professional brethren's lips at times, and the gross ignorance at other times, have often made me blush for the profession, and causes me to long for a preliminary test of education which would obviate similar displays from the coming race.

Why not add Greek and French to the course, and some alternative subjects, such as Euclid, Algebra, English Literature, and Modern History?

I am not an advocate for a hard and fast list of subjects. Difference of taste and capacity should always be consulted, and the Oxford undergraduate plan adopted in examinations as far as possible.

I lately heard a solicitor explaining away a confusion of names borne by a certain individual in a certain case; and meaning to say that one of the names was an alias, he solemnly informed the bench that it was "merely an alibi."

For goodness sake let us have such an entrance examination as will prevent such blunders in future; else we shall have members of our learned (?) profession soon calling alibis—owing to association of ideas—by the familiar alias of Arabia.

Yours,
A SOLICITOR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

SIR,—It is not my intention to endeavour to convince the person styling himself "Beneficium" that the preliminary examination is not a proper test of education, or that it is less difficult than the B.A. examination of the Royal University, as I would hardly be justified in asking you to give space to a letter having such an object. "Beneficium" appears to be an individual who, like a noted character in one of Byron's poems, has no great love for learning or the learned; and, if he thinks that the fact of his having passed the preliminary examination entitles him to consider himself properly educated, of course that is a matter entirely for himself; yet, notwithstanding his simulated indignation, I say that every word in my former letter is perfectly true, and the Incorporated Law Society must know that it is true, and I sincerely hope that they will give it their consideration, as there is no other subject they could give their attention to with more advantage to the profession.

Education is still advancing, and probably will continue to do so, if ignorance can find no abler advocate than poor "Beneficium."

25th Oct., 1882.

Yours
TIMON.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

KING'S INNS.

MICHAELMAS SESSION, 1882.

LEGAL EDUCATION.

GEORGE V. HART, Esq., King's Inns Professor of the Law of Personal Property, Pleading Practice, and Evidence, will deliver his Course of Lectures in the Lecture Room, at the King's Inns, on Tuesdays and Fridays, during the Michaelmas Session.

Professor HART will lecture during the Session on "The Law of Personal Property." The books to be referred to in connexion with the course will be "Williams on Personal Property," "Snell's Principles of Equity," and "Broom's Commentaries on the Common Law."

The First Lecture will be delivered on Friday, the 3rd November, at half-past Four o'clock.

The Lectures of the Professor will be delivered at Five o'clock, p.m., but all Students are to be in attendance in the Lecture Room at half-past Four o'clock, p.m.

The Course will contain Twelve Lectures, all open to the Public.

During Michaelmas Session, attendance on the Lectures of any one of the Law Professors in the University of Dublin, in addition to any other required attendance, will be accepted in lieu of attendance upon the King's Inns Professor of Constitutional and Criminal Law, and the Law of Torts, and such attendance followed by attendance on the King's Inns Professor when appointed, commencing in Hilary and ending in Easter Session, 1883, will be deemed an attendance on a continuous Course within the meaning of Rules X. and XIII.

"X.—A continuous Course of Lectures shall be delivered by each of the Professors, commencing in Michaelmas Term in each year, and consisting of Three Terms of Lectures. The number of Lectures in each term shall be Twelve, and the qualifying number to be attended by each Student shall be nine."

"XIII.—Each Student must attend three terms of the Lectures of each of the two Professors at the King's Inns, and of two of the three Professors in the Law School of Trinity College, Dublin, including at least one complete Course, commencing with Michaelmas Term, with each of two Professors. Attendance at Lectures may be commenced with any Term, but must extend over two years at the least. The Courses to be completed commencing with Michaelmas Term may be selected by the Student, and may be attended in the same year."

Extract from DUBLIN UNIVERSITY CALENDAR for 1882.

Monday, October 30th, International Law Lectures begin.
Tuesday, October 31st, Civil Law Lectures begin.
Wednesday, November 1st, Feudal and English Law Lectures begin.

By Order,
JOHN D. O'HANLON,
Under-Treasurer.

KING'S INNS, 19th October, 1882.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY
OF IRELAND.]

SOLICITORS' APPRENTICES.

NOTICE.

An Examination in the business of the last Session of Lectures will be held on Tuesday, the 7th day of November, 1882, for the convenience of Gentlemen who were unavoidably prevented from attending the regular Examination in last July. Any such Gentleman, if desirous of being examined, will please to send in, on or before the 30th day of October, instant, a written application to the Secretary's Office, addressed to the Professor of Law, stating the circumstances which prevented his attendance in July, with a Certificate from his Master that, having inquired, he believes the Apprentice's non-attendance was caused by the circumstances stated.

The Applicant will be afterwards apprised whether his attendance at the intended Examination can be permitted.

By Order,
WILLIAM HICKSON, Professor.

Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, Dublin,
19th October, 1882.

LAW STUDENTS' DEBATING SOCIETY.

The opening meeting of the 58rd session of this Society was held on Monday last. An address on the subject of the reform of real property law was delivered by the auditor, and among the speakers were Mr. Justice O'Hagan, Mr. Webb, Q.C.; Mr. Richey, Q.C.; and Mr. J. Gibson, Q.C.

SOLICITORS' APPRENTICES' DEBATING SOCIETY.

The opening meeting of this Society will be held on Monday Evening, the 18th of November, when the auditor, H. C. Weir, Esq., LL.B., will deliver the inaugural address.—M. J. Bannin, Hon. Sec.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—J. Trueman, confirm sale.—W. Deane, do.—E. A. Browne, allocate.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

W. Ledwidge, rental.—P. Lacy, do.—J. L. Hackett, do.—Trustees R. M'Question, ditto.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

H. LEADNER, . . . . .	3 lots.
S. OLDFIELD, . . . . .	3 lots.
J. KENNY, . . . . .	4 lots.
J. LENNON, . . . . .	2 lots.
ASSIGNEES W. H. PHILLAN, . . . . .	3 lots.
G. PAINÉ, . . . . .	2 lots.
H. J. LINDSAY, . . . . .	1 lot.
P. LEONARD, . . . . .	1 lot.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. T. M'Donough, rental.—T. Kelly, do.—H. M'Kavly, ditto.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—Administrator M. Montgomery, confirm sale.—W. Coleman, do.—G. Murdock, do.—M. R. Dalway, do.—G. V. Stewart, do.—J. Young, do.—E. Turner, ditto.

IN COURT.—S. A. Kelly, final schedule.—S. E. Goodwin, ditto.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

Rev. A. W. West, rental.—B. O'Malley, do.—J. Forde, do.—W. C. Josephs, do.—A. H. Irwin, do.—P. Rogan, do.—R. S. Armstrong, ditto.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

List of Petitions presented to the Land Judges in the month of August, 1882.

DATE	TITLE OF MATTER	OBJECT OF PETITION	COUNTY	PROFIT RENT	SOLICITOR
Aug. 8	Robert Mecredy, owner; Robert White, petitioner	Sale	Galway	£ s. d. In owner's possession	H. and W. Stanley
" 4	William Cox, owner; Thomas Turner and another, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Limerick	1,198 0 10	Thomas Kift
" "	Richard Jebb Posenett and others, owners; George Posenett, petitioner	Sale	Antrim	214 9 10	James Torrens and Son
" 5	James Moorhead, owner; Hugh C. Kelly, petitioner	Sale	Belfast	115 0 0	Robert Kelly
" 11	Hugh MacTernan, owner; Catherine Nevill, petitioner	Sale and receiver	Kilkenny	248 4 2	H. G. Hinson
" 12	Arthur George Judd, owner; Charles Cooper, petitioner	Sale and receiver	Clare	541 7 10	Michael Larkin and Co.
" "	Bartholomew Ernis, owner; Owen Boyle, petitioner	Sale	Meath	88 15 4	Edward Caraher
" 17	Francis C. Peet, owner; Sarah Blake and another, petitioners	Sale and receiver	Kerry	808 8 4	Lane and Lane
" 28	Thomas E. Rotheram, owner; Emily Rotheram, petitioner	Sale	Meath	Not known	Dudgeon and Emerson
" 26	Robert James M'Mullen, owner; Belfast Discount Company, petitioners	Sale	Belfast	Not stated	M. A. Galvin
" 29	Charles L. Fitzgerald, owner; Michael C. C. Burks, petitioner	Sale and receiver	Mayo	8,858 9 9	James Campbell
" 80	Administrator of Murdock Campbell, owner; National Bank, petitioners	Sale	Queen's Co.	Not stated	Michael Larkin
" 81	John Doyle and another, owners; Frederick Barnett, petitioner	Sale	Dublin	Not known	Henry C. Stephens

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Evans, Henry F., formerly of Frogmore Lodge, Youghal, in the county of Cork, but now of Esplanade-terrace, Bray in the county of Wicklow, gentleman. September 26; Tuesday, October 31, and Friday, November 17. Richard Daoren, solr.
Theobald, John Seymour, of North Main-street, Bandon, in the county of Cork, shopkeeper. October 6; Friday, November 8, and Tuesday, November 21. John L. and W. Scallan, solrs.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	OCTOBER
	Sat. 21	Mon. 23	Tues. 24	Wed. 25	Thur. 26	Fr. 27
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	100	—	100	100	100	—
— 3 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	100	—
— New 3 p c Stock ..	100	100	100	100	100	100
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1838 } Trafalgar at ..	—	102	103	103	103	103
3 1/2 p c Jan. 1821 } Bk. of Irel. ..	—	—	100	—	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	—	—	319	319	—	—
25 Hibernian Banking Co ..	—	—	—	—	—	34
20 London and County (Ltd.) ..	—	—	—	—	79	79
15 London Joint Stock ..	—	46	—	47	—	47
20 London and Westminster, Ltd ..	70	—	—	—	71	—
10 Do. New ..	63	—	—	—	—	—
3 1/2 Minster Bank (Limited) ..	6	6	6	—	—	—
— Nat. Prov. of England, Lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	23	24	24	24	24	24
25 Provincial Bank ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Standard of B. S. A., Ltd ..	—	—	—	56	—	—
Steam.
100 City of Dublin ..	—	—	—	—	100	100
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons. Gas ..	—	—	—	16	16	16
8 Do. do. New ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited ..	—	—	—	—	—	6
Tramways.
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	—	—	—	10
Railways.
50 Belfast and Northern Cos. ..	—	—	—	—	53	—
100 Dublin, Wicklow, &amp; W'ford ..	—	—	76	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	—	—	—	—	119
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	—	116	—	—	—
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	—	—	—	—	89	89
Railway Preference.
100 Gt. Nth'n (Ireland) 4 1/2 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., guaranteed 4 1/2 p c ..	—	—	—	113	113	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; Nth'n Cos., 4 p c ..	—	—	106	—	105	—
— Cork and Bandon, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	99
— Do., 4 1/2 p c ..	—	105	—	—	—	107
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4 1/2 p c ..	—	114	—	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4 1/2 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	105	—	—
— Do., 4 1/2 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	109
— Do., 4 1/2 p c ..	—	114	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
— Alliance &amp; Cons. Gas, 4 p c ..	—	99	—	—	99	—
— Ballast Office Deb., £22 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— City Deb. of £22 6s 2d, 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dub. &amp; Glas. S. P. Co. (1887) 5 p c ..	—	—	100	100	—	—
— Do. (1888), 6 p c ..	100	—	—	—	—	—
— Dub. &amp; Kingstown 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dub. Port &amp; Docks, 4 1/2 p c ..	—	—	100	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—4 per cent., 17th August, 1882
 Of Deposit—1 per cent., 23rd March, 1882

Name Days—November 14th and 29th, 1882.
 Account Days—November 15th and 30th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills—Coughs, Influenza.—The soothing properties of these medicaments render them well worthy of trial in all diseases of the respiratory organs. In common colds and influenza the Pills, taken internally, and the Ointment rubbed over the chest and throat, are exceedingly efficacious. When influenza is epidemic, this treatment is the easiest, safest, and surest. Holloway's Pills purify the blood, remove all obstacles to its free circulation through the lungs, relieve the over-gorged air tubes, and render respiration free, without reducing the strength, irritating the nerves, or depressing the spirits; such are the ready means of saving suffering when anyone is afflicted with cold, coughs, bronchitis, and other chest complaints, by which so many persons are seriously and permanently afflicted in most countries.

The following is a verbatim extract from a report of a wife-beating case in one of the London police courts the other day:—John Smith, witness for prosecution, is under examination. "Now, what do you know of this matter, Mr. Smith?" "I know everything. I seed Brown beat his wife." "How did he beat her?" was the text of the question put by the magistrate. "How did he beat her!" exclaimed the witness, with a look of scorn. "How would you beat your wife?" This to the worthy magistrate, who desired the witness to answer the question. "Well," at length said the witness, "Brown uses his boots, as I never do. I only uses my fists. I have often told him those here boots would get him into trouble." The worthy Smith was immediately turned out of the court by order of the magistrate.

A CRIMINAL information was laid before the Jersey Royal Court on Saturday last, by Her Majesty's Attorney-General in his capacity of Public Prosecutor against the publisher of the British Press and Jersey Times for the publication of an anonymous letter alleging dereliction of duty on the part of the police in failing to bring to justice two persons who were reported to have committed a burglary at the residence of Captain Seymour a few weeks ago, and who carried off a quantity of silver plate. It was alleged that out of family considerations the matter had been hushed up, though the police were well acquainted with the guilty parties. The Court ordered the arrest of Mr. Esnouf, the publisher, who had refused to give up the name of the writer.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES. AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

GAVAN DUFFY—October 21, Lady Gavan Duffy of a son.

MARRIAGES.

FLEMING and FRENCH—October 18, at Cappagh Church, by the Very Rev. the Dean of Clonfert, assisted by the Rev. R. S. O'Loughlin, Rector of Sixmilcross, Hans Beresford Fleming, Esq., only son of Hans Fleming, Esq., M.D., Omagh, to Emily Beatrice, fourth daughter of Theophilus Holton French, Esq., granddaughter of the late George French, Esq., Q.C., Mountjoy-square, Dublin.

DEATHS.

DONNELLY—October 20, at his residence, Adelaide-road, in the 58th year of his age, Thomas Donnelly, Esq., solicitor, of this city.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49. WALLER, 50, DENZILLE-STREET. 3/7

NOTICE OF REMOVAL:

MR. JAMES WILLIAM NAGLE, Solicitor, has removed his Offices from 52 Middle Abbey-street to 33 NORTH FREDERICK-STREET, DUBLIN, to which address all Letters, Notices, &c., should in future be directed. 141

WANTS:

TO COUNTRY SOLICITORS.

A FIRM OF SOLICITORS, having large and convenient Offices, are open to an engagement with a Country Correspondent. Address—"A. B., Solicitor," care of Messrs. DUFFY & SONS, Publishers, 15 Wellington-quay, Dublin. 140

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO., LIMITED. SECURITY, &c. RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 51

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

RENTALS, &c.

SOLICITORS having the Carriage of Sales of Property in the Landed Estates Court, are respectfully informed that they can have their Printing executed correctly, and with the utmost despatch by

J. FALCONER, 53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S. F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c., for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111 GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's).
Late of WATERHOUSE & Co.'s 90

STOKES BROTHERS,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN. 293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

N. PETERSON & SON,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.
LIVERPOOL AND LONDON CHAMBERS,
1, FOSTER-PLACE, COLLEGE-GREEN,
DUBLIN. 813

D. W. CARROLL,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
Wishes to call attention to his large

STOCK OF NOTEPAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of

LEATHER GOODS,
Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-
randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges.
Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge. 72

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY:

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,
the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnauld, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £740,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London.
WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 113 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewarts & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

IRISH LAW TIMES.

WANTED the following Numbers, for which full price will be given:—53, 54, 56, 68, 104, 112, 117, 208, 210.

Apply—53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE,
Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection.

10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps.
21, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID,

Curls the straightest and most ungovernable Hair, 3s. 6d., sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE,

To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His GREAT HAIR RESTOREE,

3s. 6d.; it changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles.

As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 6s. 6d.; his DEPLATORY for removing Hair and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers. 7

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,
No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.

J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees, Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.

Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms. 91

BOOKBINDING } of every description executed by

JOHN FALCONER,

53 UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET DUBLIN.

LITHOGRAPHY } MAPS, PLANS, MEDICAL PLATES CIRCULARS, &c., executed by

JOHN FALCONER,

53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PEROT, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK FOR STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens: it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each. 581

LEGAL POSTINGS:

In the HIGH COURT of JUSTICE in IRELAND,
CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

In the Matter of the Estate of

JAMES FENTON, and ROBERT FENTON, and THOMAS WALTON GILLIBRAND, or some or one of them,
Owners;
Es parte—THE NORTHERN BANKING COMPANY,
Petitioners.

TO BE SOLD,

On TUESDAY, the 7th day of NOVEMBER, 1882,

At the hour of Twelve o'clock,

Before the Right Honourable Judge Ormsby,

At his Court, Land Judges' Court, Inns-quay, in the City of Dublin,
The aftermentioned Property, in Eight Lots, viz.:-

Lot No. 1.—Part of the Lands of Carricknab, containing 146a 3r 27p statute measure, or thereabouts, and Part of the Lands of Corbally, containing 21a 3r 80p statute measure, or thereabouts, both held in Fee-farm, situate in the Barony of Lecale and County of Down. Net annual rental, £29 0s 7d. Tenement valuation, £188 6s.

Lot 2.—Part of the said Lands of Carricknab, containing 118a 0r 28p statute measure, or thereabouts, and part of the said Lands of Corbally, containing 34a 3r 86p statute measure, or thereabouts, both held in Fee-farm. Net annual rental, £105 6s 10d. Tenement valuation, £180 5s.

Lot 3.—Part of the said Lands of Carricknab, containing 2a 0r 3p statute measure, or thereabouts, held in Fee-farm. Tenants' rents, 6d. Tenement valuation, £30.

Lot 4.—The Lands of Ringhaddy, and its sub-denomination of Castleland, with benefit of Rocks and Scaps for wreck and seaweed belonging to same, Island More, Island Dunsay, Dunsay Rock, Green or Hay Island, and Island Darragh, containing in the whole 279a 1r 2p statute measure, or thereabouts, situate in the Barony of Dufferin and County of Down, held in Fee-farm. Net annual rental, £295 4s 2d. Tenement valuation, £351.

Lot 5.—Part of the Lands of Ballow, containing 141a 1r 28p statute measure, or thereabouts, and the right enjoyed therewith or in respect thereof, to hold four Yearly Fairs, and a Weekly Market, and a Court of Pie Poudre during said Fairs and Markets, situate in the Barony of Dufferin and County of Down, held in Fee-simple. Net annual rent, £14 12s 9d. Tenement valuation, £225.

Lot 6.—Part of the said Lands of Ballow, containing 23p statute measure, or thereabouts, held in Fee-simple. Net annual rent, 6d. Tenement valuation, £2 10s.

Lot 7.—Part of the said Lands of Ballow, containing 87p statute measure, or thereabouts, held in Fee-simple. Net annual rental, 1s. Tenement valuation, £5.

Lot 8.—The Manor, Town, and Lands of Ardmillan, together with the Rectorial Tithes of said Manor, and also all Courts Leet, Courts Baron, and Customs, and Fairs, and Markets, and comprising the Lands of Ballydrine, otherwise Ballindreen, otherwise Ballydrain, Ballyliddel, otherwise Ballyleghorn, Castle Espie, Tullynakill, together with Watson's Island, Lisbane, otherwise Ballylisbane, Island Reagh, Cross Island, Island Mahle, Bird and Gull Islands, Ringneal, otherwise Ballyranvale, including Rolly Island, Long Island, and Wood Island. Ballymartin, alias Ardmillan—all situate in the Barony of Castlereagh and County of Down, held under a Lease from the late Commissioners of Church Temporalities in Ireland, customarily renewable, as appears from the Orders abstracted in the Rental. Net annual rental, £783 14s 10d. Tenement valuation, £2,408 16s.

Dated this 5th day of August, 1882.

JOHN MARTLEY, for Examiner.

N.B.—Proposals for the purchase by Private Contract will be received by the Solicitors having carriage of the Order for Sale on or before Saturday, the 28th day of October, 1882, and, if approved of, will be submitted to the Court for confirmation.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

Lots 1, 2, and 3 are situate within about three miles of the Town of Downpatrick, which is the County Town, and is in railway communication with Belfast and Newcastle, the latter a fashionable watering place, about seven miles distant. Tullymurry Station, on the Newcastle Line, is distant about one mile from Corbally.

Lot 4.—Ringhaddy—is situate on the Shore of Strangford Lough, about four miles north of the important Town of Killybegh, and the remainder of the Lot consists of adjacent Islands in that Lough. There is an abundant supply of Sea Weed on the Shore.

Lots 5, 6, and 7 Ballow—are situate adjacent to the Village of Killinchy, and within about five miles of the Town of Saintfield, a Station on the Belfast and County Down Railway.

Lot 8.—The Manor of Ardmillan—is situate on the Shore of Strangford Lough, within about two miles south of the Town of Comber, Station on the Belfast and County Down Railway.

For Rentals and further particulars, apply at the Registrar's Office, Land Judges, Inns-quay, Dublin; or to

OWEN MARCH, Esq., Solicitor, Rochdale;
E. P. BERRY, Esq., Solicitor, Market-place, Huddersfield; or to HUGH WALLACE & CO., Solicitors having carriage of the Order for Sale, 45 Victoria-street, Belfast; English-street, Downpatrick; and 30 North Great George's-street, Dublin.

101

In the HIGH COURT of JUSTICE in IRELAND.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

COUNTY OF TYRONE.

SALE,

On TUESDAY, the 7th day of NOVEMBER, 1882.

In the Matter of the Estate of

NATHANIEL MAYNE,
Owner;

Es parte—ELIZABETH ANNE HURST,
Petitioner.

TO BE SOLD BY PUBLIC AUCTION,

In Two Lots,

Before the Right Honourable Judge Ormsby,

At his Court, Inns-quay, in the City of Dublin,

On TUESDAY, the 7th day of NOVEMBER, 1882,

At the hour of Twelve o'clock noon,

Lot 1.—Consisting of the Lands of the Ballyboes of Terligan and Teerhagan, otherwise Sesinghmore, now known as Terligan only, containing 264a 0r 17p statute measure, held in fee-farm, and producing a yearly profit rent of £109 14s 11d; and

Lot 2.—Consisting of part of the Lands of Tullybleety, containing 109a 3r 7p statute measure, also held in fee-farm, and producing a yearly profit rent of £86 4s 4d—all situate in the barony of Lower Dungannon and county of Tyrone.

Dated this 19th day of August, 1882.

IGNATIUS O'KEEFE, for Examiner.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The Lands of Terligan, exclusive of 86a 0r 6p in the owner's possession, of which the purchaser will get immediate possession, are let to yearly tenants, whose aggregate rents amount to £125 14s, which are, with one exception, judicial rents, and are only subject to £16 19s 1d head rent and rentcharge. The Lands of Tullybleety are all let to yearly tenants, the gross rent amounting to £97 10s, and subject to £11 6s 7d for head rent and rentcharge. The Lands of Tullybleety and Terligan, although they lie nearly two miles apart, are about an equal distance from the town of Aughnacloy, in county of Tyrone, both of them lying within 2½ miles of that town. Aughnacloy is a capital market town, and the lands are situate in a most orderly and peaceful neighbourhood. The Lands of Tullybleety are not a mile distant from the main line of road from Caledon to Aughnacloy, and lie within about eight miles of the Caledon Station on the Great Northern Railway. The Lands of Terligan lie close to the main line of road from Aughnacloy to Dungannon.

For rentals and further particulars apply at the Office of the Registrar of the Land Judges, Inns-quay, Dublin; to
WILLIAM CAREY and SON, Solicitors, No. 1 Wellington-quay, Dublin; and to ALEXANDER M'C' MBE, Solicitor having carriage of Sale,
1 Wellington-quay, Dublin, and Armagh. 105

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE
PERMANENT

BUILDING SOCIETY,

52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARRER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 2½ per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.

Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached.

Rates of Interest—2½ per cent. per annum if taken for one year, or 4 per cent. per annum if taken for 2 or more years.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:-

The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectuses and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.

52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

80

£10
TO £1,000

{ IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days.
TWO UNERRING RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free.
Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1882.

No. 823

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

Now that a Committee of the House of Commons is sitting in reference to the recent committal of Mr. Gray, M.P., for contempt of court (see ante, p. 499)—a case in which, it will be remembered, Lawson, J., relied on his previous decision in Re M'Alcese, 7 Ir. L. T. & S. J. 185 (the report of which he subsequently approved, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 148), commented on, ib. 181—it may not be inopportune to draw attention to Re The Publisher of the "Northern Argus" Newspaper, which we find reported in the Queensland Law Journal of Sept. 1st, 1882. "I am so convinced," said Lord Fitzgerald, in Re The Tyrone Election Petition (7 Ir. L. T. Rep. 166), "that the best safeguard we have in the administration of justice is the influence of healthy public opinion, that I would not, if I could, restrict the press in its just and free criticism on the proceedings in courts of justice, and on the conduct of particular judges in their administration of the laws; on the contrary, I would invite such criticism in a fair spirit and for the public good, but subject to the limitations laid down by Lord Hardwicke, Lord Romilly, and Malins, V.C." But, just because what may or may not fall within those limitations has to be decided, on summary process, by the judges themselves, it is the more interesting and instructive to observe the practical result in individual cases; while we presume that what would be punished as contempt of court in Queensland would probably not escape in this country.

Now, it appears that the action of Macdonald v. Tully having been tried at nisi prius, and a verdict having been given for the plaintiff, the case, on motion for judgment, was referred back to a jury for re-assessment of damages. Shortly afterwards, and before the second trial, an article was published in the Northern Argus reflecting upon the decision of the judges, and suggesting that it was influenced by improper motives. The writer thus began:—"We deferred making any comment upon the judgment pronounced by the Supreme Court on the 15th July, inst., in the case of Macdonald v. Tully, until the arrival of certain information. As that information is now to hand, we shall endeavour to show that the judgments pronounced by His Honor Chief Justice Lilley, and His Honor Mr. Justice Lutwyche, were not in accordance with opinions held and expressed by either gentleman when the case first came on for hearing." Further on, he says he will show that they have "from some unaccountable cause changed their opinions;" and the last paragraph declared that "it is a melancholy subject for consideration that, if a Queenslander requires justice at the hands of the Queensland Government, he should be compelled to appeal to the mother country; it is a sad thing for us all, that law and politics are here twin brothers and go hand-in-hand." The defendant was, accordingly, called upon to show cause why he should not be attached for contempt of court; and the decision was pronounced by Lilley, C.J., Lutwyche, and Harding, J.J. Said the former learned judge:—"The law gives authority to the court to prevent its proceedings being rendered powerless and suitors being deprived of the benefit of an impartial administration of justice. The respondent will be punished for his attempt to succeed—but fortunately I believe, not for his success in preventing the due administration of justice. Individually I should be disposed to pass over the offence as one of very little consequence, if I could see that no further mischief was likely to arise from writings of this kind being repeated, but I have a duty to perform, and that is to maintain—and more especially among persons whose minds may be biased by writings of this kind—the fullest possible respect for those who administer the law within the colony. The writer of the article complained of has said that he was not aware that the matter was still under the consideration of the court, but thought it had passed to a final stage within the colony. I regret I cannot say that I fully believe that statement, because the article itself contains internal evidence of the strongest kind that he knew that the matter had been referred to the decision of another jury. There can be no doubt whatever, at all events there is no doubt in my mind, that the article was expressly written and most carefully compiled, and it bears evidence of the most careful research with the view of directing the minds of the jury in opposition to the possible direction of the judge who may preside at the trial. It was designed, I think, and no reasonable man can doubt it after reading the article, to influence the jury to resist the authority of the judge, to lead them, in fact, to assume the functions of the judge, and refuse to perform their duty as jurors properly within the lines of the law. It would have been enough if a simple direction to that effect had been given to the jury, but when it is combined with language attributing to the judges a corrupt administration of justice, the article becomes more serious in its character. The administration of the law—the judges who delivered the judgment of the court in Macdonald v. Tully—are charged with this, that having decided that the plaintiff had a right, they deliberately in order to deprive him of the fruits of their judgment upon that right, referred the case to the jury for re-assessment of damages, and in that respect—for such must be the inference—going against their own conviction that he was entitled to the damages awarded by the jury. They are in fact charged with corruption in the administration of justice, and that they were influenced in their conduct by some political bias or motive. I have said that so far as the court is concerned we might very well leave our administration of justice to the opinion and sense of propriety and judgment of our fellow-colonists, and it is only from a consideration of the possible consequences which might result from a repetition of such conduct amongst those who are not so well instructed, that it is necessary to visit this offence with some punishment which must be of a severe character. It would be, I think, a grave scandal if judges were to be called upon to enter into the public press to defend their judgments, motives, and characters against anonymous writers. No one would be less disposed to interfere with the just influence of the press than I am. Large privileges have been necessarily conceded to it from its great general public usefulness, but if that indulgence—for it is nothing else—is to pass into absolute license, and our fellow-colonists are publicly told that no confidence can be placed in the judges who are moved by corrupt motives—for that is the effect of the article—that license may become a serious evil, and our administration of justice would be intolerable because ineffectual. The punishment inflicted upon this defendant will not be dictated by any feeling on the part of the court. The defendant has a right to complain. Whether it is a matter between the public or private individuals makes no difference; there is not one rule of law and justice for a private individual, and another for the Government. We must regard this as an offence against Mr. Tully, who has certain great interests in his hands. I think myself that the defendant should be fined. We will not go to the extent of sending him to prison on this occasion—what punishment a repetition may provoke I do not think it is necessary to say. He has given no assurance that it will not be repeated, but if he does, it will be dealt with when the time arrives." Lutwyche, J., in concurring said:—"Remarks of this kind so far as the judges themselves are concerned might well be allowed to pass, but it is in connexion with the wrong done to the defendant in the action that I look at the observations directed against the judges. I cannot do better than cite the opinions and language of Lord Erskine, in Ex parte Jones, (13 Vesey, 238), as expressed by his judgment in a similar matter. The Lord Chancellor said:—"It never has been or can be denied that a publication not only with an obvious tendency, but with the design to obstruct the ordinary course of justice is a very high contempt." And in speaking of the case which he had under consideration he says:—"The object of the writer is by defaming the proceedings of the court, to procure a different species of judgment from that which would be administered in the ordinary course, and by flattering the judge, to taint the source of justice." In this case, the person now supposed to be personally before the court, but in reality upon whose conduct we have to pass our judgment has not flattered the judges, but has endeavoured to obtain the same end by abusing them and so to pervert the ends of justice and wrong the defendant by inducing the future jury to disregard the direction of the judge, and to mulct the colony in damages which the State would not fairly be called upon to pay." Harding, J., in also concurring, observed that one of the grave imputations was, "that we have political judges, and that when a Government case comes on for consideration the people of the colony cannot obtain justice here. I think this article is written with the view of inducing the jurors to discredit those judges and to disregard the judge who would direct them as to the law on the re-assessment of damages. A man is presumed to know the law, and it has been laid down both in England and America, that the only case where that presumption does not hold is where he is a jurymen in the box—there he is presumed to be ignorant of all law and he must take it from the judge on the bench. If that be a correct definition of the duty of a jurymen, what does this article state with reference to the jury who are going to try this case. It tells them to discredit the law which the judge shall give them. That is a grievous dereliction of duty on the part of the press, and, in my judgment, if the action required it, deserves punishment, and no light punishment either. But their Honors have in this case, with the dignity which they uphold and have upheld in this colony for so many years, said that they pass it over; consequently I pass it over also, and do not allow it to influence the judgment I have arrived at. But at the same time, I think, the defendant in the case, whether it be Mr. Tully or the Government, is entitled to have it borne in mind in considering the amount of injury which the writer has done or may do him in his litigation. With regard to the second breach of the rules of this court, namely, that this article attempts to prejudice the fair trial of the question, I agree with their Honors, and so far as they have criticised the article, I think it unnecessary to say anything, but I think I can adopt the observations made in the case of Ex parte Howell, (8 N. S. W. Reports, 356), by Mr. Justice Hargrave. He characterised the article there complained of as a 'most abominable one,' and that is my opinion of this article. I think the writer of it should be punished severely."

Now, possibly some curiosity may be felt as to what would be considered a "severe" punishment for such an offence at the antipodes. And be it observed, the defendant avoided anything like a proper expression of contrition, and shirked an apology as much as possible—throughout, in fact, making no admission of his having done wrong, and no promise that he would not do wrong in the future. "His apology is limited to his sorrow that he did not wait till he could attack this court and the defendant's case with safety," said Harding, J.

He was fined £50, and ordered to pay the costs.

THE HON. MR. JUSTICE ANDREWS.

THE announcement (confirmed by the Attorney-General, in the House of Commons, last Monday) that Mr. William Drennan Andrews has been appointed a Judge of her Majesty's High Court of Justice in Ireland, is indeed gratifying in the extreme. Succeeding to the seat in the Exchequer Division vacated by Baron Fitzgerald, the first member of that court who will not bear the time-honoured title of Baron brings to the Bench judicial powers of the highest order, a clear and logical intellect, and a rare knowledge of law both civil and criminal, acquired not alone from studies to which his devotion amounted to a passion, but from a large practical experience in the foremost rank of his profession.

Mr. Andrews (whose family has given to the law other representatives, so respected as his uncles the late Robert Andrews, Q.C., Chairman of the Co. Donegal, and the late James Andrews, senior member of the eminent Belfast firm of Andrews and Maclean, solicitors) was educated in the University of Dublin, where he took the degree of LL.D. Called to the bar in Easter Term, 1855, he joined the North-East Circuit. Unlike his predecessor on the Bench, he rapidly rose into practice, and many were they who, yet remembering the earlier efforts of the young advocate in the Exchequer Chamber, predicted that his career would be crowned by the highest distinctions. Not until July 1872, however, did he receive silk; but, he who, without having held any intermediate law office under the Crown, has now been promoted to a seat in that tribunal which seems destined to maintain its pre-eminence, had long ago achieved public and professional recognition as meriting the highest legal honours, while the courtesy and kindness of his disposition and his exalted personal character had won for him universal esteem and respect. It was indeed with feelings of the strongest sympathy and regret that it was learned, about a year ago, that, in consequence of impaired sight, he had been obliged temporarily to relinquish active practice, and his recovery, accompanied by a promotion so well won, is truly gratifying. Beyond all question, the Administration (in whose interest, opposing Lord Castlereagh, he contested the Co. Down in 1878, on the decease of Mr. Crawford), in now raising him to the Bench, has done what no one, of whatever politics, can disapprove.

FORFEITED SUITORS' MONEY.—In the year ending the 31st of March the County Courts' forfeited suitors' money was £1,107 14s. 3d.

ADDRESS TO THE HON. F. A. FITZGERALD.

An influential requisition has been presented to the Father of the Bar, to convene a meeting in order to afford the members of the Irish Bar an opportunity of expressing their respect and esteem for the Hon. F. A. Fitzgerald, on the occasion of his retirement from the Bench.

CRIMINAL APPEAL.

The Trades Union Congress, which had been holding a discursive session at Manchester for a week, concluded its meetings on 23rd September, by adopting a resolution in favour of the abatement of "a grave and serious anomaly in the jurisprudence of this country," by the establishment of a Court of Criminal Appeal. "It is," said Sir John Holker, "startling to consider that while a man who is mulcted in £25 damages in a civil action can obtain a new trial if the verdict was against the weight of the evidence, a man who is convicted of murder by an erroneous verdict has no remedy." We have at present a threefold system of criminal appeal: on questions of procedure by proceedings in error; on questions of law by case reserved for the Court of Crown Cases Reserved; on questions of fact, but only in mitigation of punishment, by petition to the Crown through the Home Secretary. But of proceedings in error Sir John Holker said that "the lawyers, if only they could bring themselves to be perfectly honest, would admit they were a sealed book." The Court of Crown Cases Reserved is cumbersome, and cannot take into account points of law which are not raised at the trial and decided against the prisoner. The appeal to the Home Secretary is eminently unsatisfactory. He is probably not a trained lawyer; he sits in camera; he decides on ex parte evidence written and unsworn and not submitted to cross-examination; and, if satisfied that there has been a miscarriage of justice, he concludes an informal inquisition by pardoning a man for an offence which he has never committed. The reform necessary is of a very slight character, being rather a readjustment than a change. No new Court is required, but simply the application, with certain modifications, to all criminal trials of the rules now in force in criminal trials in the Queen's Bench Division.—Law Journal.

THE SETTLED LAND ACT.—I.

[From the Law Times.]

In the Law Times of the 30th Sep., 1882, p. 364, we gave a short synopsis of this most important statute, but we now propose more fully to discuss its provisions, and show how it affects both wills and settlements. At the same time we shall point out the alterations in the law which have been made by other recent legislation; for there are many provisions in the Conveyancing Acts, 1881 and 1882, which greatly affect wills and settlements, and which, therefore, for the convenience of both the adviser on the law and the conveyancer, should be considered at the same time. We propose to explain in detail how far reliance may safely be placed upon the Acts by the draftman, and where clauses usually introduced into wills and settlements may be omitted or modified.

While the main object of the Act is to facilitate transfers, by placing wide powers in the hands of "tenant for life," it has also, as the full title denotes, the subsidiary intention of facilitating improvements of land (see sects. 25-30), and it has the further object of affording landowners the opportunity of getting better interest for money which represents settled land (sect. 21). It is an Act for the relief of the "limited owner" as well as for the benefit of the public generally. The subject-matter of the Act is mainly "settled land"—i.e., "land" subject to "settlement," but both "land" and "settlement" have very wide definitions (sect. 2), and a further extension is given by sect. 63. Sect. 57 relates to what are called "heirlooms," and sects. 32, 33 to money liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be settled.

It will be convenient for us to mention some of the abbreviations we propose to use in these articles. We shall denote the present Act as S. L. A.; the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict., c. 41), as C. A.; the amendment Act of this year (45 & 46 Vict., c. 39) as C. A. Am.; the Settled Estates Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict., c. 18), as S. E. Act, 1877.

The Act commences immediately after the 31st Dec., 1882. It applies to Ireland subject to modifications (sect. 65), but not to Scotland (sect. 1).

What is a Settlement.

A definition of a settlement is given in sect. 2 (1) founded on sect. 2 of the S. E. Act, 1877, but having some differences in language. It includes wills and all kinds of settlements and agreements, whether made by Acts of Parliament, deed, or otherwise, by virtue of which any land or any estate or interest in lands stands limited to or in trust for any person by way of succession. The "settlement" may be made by any number of instruments, and either before or after the Act. Thus the Act is retrospective.

Estates reverting to a settlor, or descending to his heir, are considered as comprised in the settlement (sect. 2 (2)).

The definition of a settlement is still further extended by sect. 63 to certain instruments by which land is conveyed on trusts for sale and settlement of the proceeds. Thus the Act affects settlements and wills of land as personalty. It must be remembered that "settlement" includes "will."

What is Settled Land.

This includes land, and any estate or interest therein, which is the subject of a settlement (sect. 2 (3)). Of course where only a partial interest—e.g., a forty years' lease—is settled, the Act will apply only to the partial interest which is settled, and not to the reversion. But in some cases the person to whom power is given by the Act with respect to a partial interest may concur with the owners of other interests for the purposes of the Act. See sects. 19, 27.

"Land" includes incorporeal hereditaments, and also an undivided share in land (sect. 2 (10) (i)). Hereditaments is the widest possible word: (Co. Litt. 6a; David i. 90.) By virtue of Lord Brongham's Act (18 & 14 Vict., c. 21), s. 4, "land" in succeeding statutes includes "messuages, tenements and hereditaments, houses and buildings of any tenure" unless a contrary intention appear. It was therefore needless to provide in the S. L. A. that land should include messuages, &c. "Land" also includes an undivided share in land (sect. 2 (10) (i)).

The Act is further extended by sect. 59, which places "land" belonging to an infant absolutely on the same footing as settled land. This is not restricted to land to which the infant is entitled in fee simple, but applies to a leasehold or other partial interest which belongs to an infant absolutely otherwise than under a settlement. See above definition of land (sect. 2 (3)). But although infants' land is to be deemed "settled," the Act makes no provision as to any instrument being deemed a settlement in case of infants' absolute interests, but the practical working of sect. 59 depends on sect. 60. Compare C. A., s. 41, which declares that infants' fee simple and leasehold interests shall be settled estates within the S. E. Act, 1877; and see Wolst. & T. 67; Clerke & Brett, 2nd ed. 148. "The determination of the question whether land is settled land, for purposes of this Act, or not, is governed by the state of facts and the limitations of the settlement at the time of the settlement taking effect:" (sect. 2 (4)). After discussing what is the subject-matter over which the powers to be given by the Act are to be exercised, we must explain who is to exercise the powers.

Who is Tenant for Life.

"The person who is for the time being, under a settlement, beneficially entitled to possession of settled land for his life is, for purposes of this Act, the tenant for life of that land, and the tenant for life under that settlement" (sect. 2 (5)).

Now "possession of land" includes receipt of income, and income includes "rents and profits" (sect. 2 (10) (i.)); so, in the result, a person beneficially entitled to receipt of rents and profits for his life is tenant for life. There is no necessity for either physical possession or ownership of the legal estate.

"If, in any case, there are two or more persons so entitled as tenants in common, or as joint tenants, or for other concurrent estates or interests, they together constitute the tenant for life for purposes of this Act" (sect. 2 (6)). This applies only when all the persons are entitled under a settlement. Sect. 19 provides for cases where some are so entitled and others are not.

A person being tenant for life within the foregoing definitions shall be deemed such notwithstanding incumbrances (sect. 2 (7)). There are, however, many provisions in the Act protecting incumbrancers. See sects. 5, 20 (2), 50 (3).

Who is to be deemed Tenant for Life.

An infant absolutely entitled to land is to be deemed tenant for life (sect. 59). Hence, an infant to whom land belongs in fee simple is deemed tenant for life; so also, if his interest is partial, he is, for the purposes of this Act, tenant for life only of that partial interest whereof he is in reality absolute owner. We shall hereafter consider the case of infants more fully and especially with respect to other statutory legislation. We wish now merely to show the scope of the present Act.

Who has the Powers of Tenant for Life.

It would not be correct to say that all persons popularly known as limited owners are here included. The powers are not given to beneficed clergymen and other corporations sole, but still, with few exceptions, they are given to all persons who have estates greater than, or resembling, life estates, and are not absolute owners. Sect. 58 enumerates nine classes of persons so favoured. We shall, in future, refer to these only as limited owners, excluding those others who do not, under this Act, receive the powers of tenant for life. The following, then, have these powers:—(i.) (vii.) Tenant in tail of almost every description; (ii.) Tenant in fee simple with executory limitation, gift, or disposition over. In the case of instruments coming into operation after the 31st Dec., 1882, executory limitations over will sometimes become void, and incapable of taking effect, by virtue of sect. 10 of the C. A. Am. In such cases the fee simple would become absolute; (iii.) Person entitled to base fee; (iv.) (v.) Tenants for years determinable on life, and tenants pur autre vie (not merely holding under leases at rents). For definition of "rent," see sect. 2 (10) (ii.); (vi.) Tenant for his own or any other life whose estate is liable to cease in any event during that life . . . or is subject to trust for accumulation of income; (vii.) Tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct; (viii.) Tenant by the curtesy; (ix.) "A person entitled to the income of land under a trust or direction for payment thereof to him during his own or any other life, whether subject to expenses of management or not, or until sale of the land, or until forfeiture of his interest therein on bankruptcy or other event." In this case a trust for sale is not essential, so that it differs from the trusts dealt with by sect. 63.

In the above cases any reference in this Act to death as regards a tenant for life shall, where necessary, be deemed to refer to the determination by death or otherwise of the estate of the limited owner (sect. 58 (3)).

In case of infant being tenant for life or otherwise a limited owner the powers are exercisable by the trustees of the settlement, or, if there are none, as the court shall direct. This will also be the case under settlements where the infant is not tenant for life, but would be if he were of full age (sect. 60). See sect. 2 (8) for explanation who are trustees.

Married woman, being a tenant for life or otherwise a limited owner, and entitled to her separate use, may act as feme sole (sect. 61 (2)). This Act applies to land which becomes her separate property under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict., c. 75). See sect. 1 of that Act as to women married after the 31st Dec., 1882, and sect. 5 as to women married before that date.

When a married woman is not entitled to her separate use or for her separate property, she and her husband together will have the powers of tenant for life (sect. 61 (3)).

A restraint on anticipation will not prevent a married woman exercising powers under this Act (sect. 61 (6)).

The committee of a lunatic may exercise the powers of tenant for life, but there must first be an order made on petition (sect. 62).

When land is held on trust for sale and settlement of the proceeds, the person beneficially entitled to the income of the land until sale has the powers of tenant for life with regard to the land (sect. 63). This section contains certain modifications (sect. 63 (2)).

In our next article we propose to consider the effects of the Act in relation to settlements and wills already in operation.

(To be continued.)

THE DUTIES OF POLICE CONSTABLES.

Mr. C. E. Howard Vincent, Director of Criminal Investigations, has just issued an abridged edition of his "Police Code and Manual of the Criminal Law," to which the following address to police constables on their duties, written by Mr. Justice Hawkins, has been prefixed:—

In the few words I purpose addressing to you it is not my intention to define every duty of a police constable, but rather to point out some matters that all who desire to become good officers ought constantly to bear in mind, for, by strict attention to them, every man may assuredly raise himself to a high position in the force, and, by neglect of them, he is equally sure always to occupy a low one. First of all, let me impress upon you the necessity of absolute obedience to all who are placed in authority over you, and rigid observance of every regulation made for your general conduct. Such obedience and observance I regard as essential to the existence of a police force. Obey every order given to you by your superior officer without for a moment questioning the propriety of it. You are not responsible for the order, but for obedience. In yielding obedience, let the humblest member of the force feel that, by good conduct and cheerful submission, he may himself rise to be placed in authority to give those orders he is now called on to obey. As to the regulations, a single moment's reflection will teach you that, when so many men of different classes and habits are enlisted in one service, some rules applicable to all are necessary for the purpose of insuring uniformity in discipline, action, conduct, and appearance; therefore it is that there are regulations exacting sobriety, punctuality, cleanliness, and many other matters to which I need not refer. The slightest disobedience in one begets a bad example to others, and if this bad example is followed by a few it is calculated to disorganize and bring discredit upon the whole body. Let me now say something to each of you as to the mode in which your obligations to the public ought to be performed. Depend upon it, to become a good and efficient officer you must, when on duty, allow nothing but your duty to occupy your thoughts. You must studiously avoid all gossiping. You must not lounge about as though your sole object was to amuse yourself and kill the hours during which the public has a right to your best services, and during which constant vigilance and attention to what is passing around you is expected from you. It is this gossiping, lounging habit which sometimes gives rise to the observation that a policeman is never to be found when he is most wanted. Moreover, a man who gives way to such a habit never observes with so much accuracy that which occurs before his eyes, as he who makes it his endeavour to fix his attention upon all that is passing about him. This is a habit not difficult to acquire if you are in earnest, and when once acquired you will find the cultivation of it a source of pleasure, and the hours of duty will be much less irksome. I may add, too, that the man who takes no pains to acquire this habit, for want of attention, generally makes a very bad and inaccurate witness. I wish you to feel the importance of a steady constant endeavour, by your vigilance, to prevent crime as much as possible, and not by your negligence tempt persons to commit it; as you do if you fail in attention to your duty. To my mind, the constable who keeps his beat free from crime deserves much more credit than he does who only counts up the number of convictions he has obtained for offences committed within it. It is true the latter makes more show than the former, but the former is the better officer. The great object of the law is to prevent crime; and when many crimes are committed in any particular district one is apt to suspect that there has been something defective in the amount of vigilance exercised over it. Whatever duty you may be called on to perform keep a curb on your temper. An angry man is as unfit for duty as a drunken one, and is incapable of calmly exercising that discretion which a constable is so often called on to exercise. Be civil and listen respectfully to everybody who addresses you, and if occasionally you are remonstrated with for the course you are taking, do not hastily jump to the conclusion, as some constables do, that the person who so remonstrates wishes to obstruct you in the execution of your duty. Beware of being over-zealous or meddling. These are dangerous faults. Let your anxiety be to do your duty, but no more. A meddling constable who interferes unnecessarily upon every trifling occasion stirs up ill-feeling against the force, and does more harm than good. An over-zealous man who is always thinking of himself, and desiring to call attention to his own activity, is very likely to fall into a habit of exaggeration, which is a fatal fault, as I shall presently show you. Much power is vested in a police constable, and many opportunities are given him to be hard and oppressive, especially to those in his custody. Pray avoid hardness and oppression, be firm but not brutal, make only discreet use of your powers. If one person wishes to give another into your custody for felony you are not absolutely bound to arrest. You ought to exercise your discretion, having regard to the nature of the crime, the surrounding circumstances, and the condition and character of the accuser and the accused. Be very careful to distinguish between cases of illness and drunkenness. Many very serious errors have been committed for want of care in this respect. Much discussion has on various occasions arisen touching the conduct of the police in listening to and repeating statements of accused persons. I will try, therefore, to point out what I think is the proper course for a constable to take with regard to such statements. When a crime has been committed, and you are engaged in endeavouring to discover the author of it, there is no objection to your making inquiries of, or putting questions to any person from whom you think you can obtain useful information. It is your duty to discover the criminal if you can, and to do this you must make such inquiries, and if in the course of them you should chance to interrogate and to receive answers from a man who turns out to be the criminal himself, and who inculpates himself by these answers, they are, nevertheless, admissible in evidence, and may be used against him. When, however, a constable has a warrant to arrest, or is about to arrest a person on his own authority, or has a person in custody for a crime, it is wrong to question such person touching the crime of which he is accused. Neither judge, magistrate, nor juryman can interrogate an accused person, and require him to answer questions tending to criminate himself. Much less, then, ought a constable to do so, whose duty as regards that person is simply to arrest and detain him in safe custody. On arresting a man the constable ought simply to read his warrant, or tell the accused the nature of the charge upon which he is arrested, leaving it to the person so arrested to say anything or nothing as he pleases. For a constable to press any accused person to say anything with reference to the crime of which he is accused is very wrong. It is well also that it should be generally known that if a statement made by an accused person is made under or in consequence of any promise or threat, even though it amounts to an absolute confession, it cannot be used against the person making it. There is, however, no objection to a constable listening to any mere voluntary statement which a prisoner desires to make, and repeating such statement in evidence; nor is there any objection to his repeating in evidence any conversation he may have heard between the prisoner and any other person. But he ought not by anything he says or does, to invite or encourage an accused person to make any statement without first cautioning him that he is not bound to say anything tending to criminate himself, and that anything he says may be used against him. Perhaps the best maxim for a constable to bear in mind with respect to an accused person is, "Keep your eyes and your ears open, and your mouth shut." By silent watchfulness you will hear all you ought to hear. Never act unfairly to a prisoner by coaxing him by word or conduct to divulge anything. If you do, you will assuredly be severely handled at the trial, and it is not unlikely your evidence will be disbelieved. In detailing any conversation with an accused person, be sure to state the whole conversation from the commencement to the end in the very words used; and, in narrating facts, state every fact whether you think it material or not, for you are not the judge of its materiality. Tell, in short, everything, as well that which is in favour of an accused as that which is against him, for your desire and anxiety must be to be fair, and assist the innocent, and not convict any man by unfair means, such as suppressing something which may tell in his favour, even though you feel certain of his guilt. Unfairness is sure to bring discredit upon those who are guilty of it. If an accused in a conversation with you states any circumstances which you have the means of inquiring into, you ought, whether these circumstances are in his favour or against him, to make such inquiry, and witnesses who can prove or disprove the truth of the statement ought to be taken before the magistrate when the prisoner is examined; and if an accused person desires to call witnesses, the police should assist him to the best of their power. I cannot too strongly recommend every constable, however good he may fancy his memory to be, to write down word for word every syllable of every conversation in which an accused person has taken a part, and of every statement made to him by an accused person, and to have that written memorandum with him at the trial. The last but most important duty I would enjoin upon you is, on every occasion, "Speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." Let no considerations, no anxiety to appear of importance in a case, no desire to procure a conviction or an acquittal, no temptation of any sort to induce you ever to swerve one hair's breadth from the truth—the bare, plain, simple truth. Never exaggerate, or in repeating a conversation or statement add a tone or colour to it. Exaggeration is often even more dangerous than direct falsehood, for it is an addition of a false colour to truth; it is something more than the truth, and it is most dangerous, because it is difficult to detect and separate that which is exaggeration from that which is strictly true; and a man who exaggerates is very apt to be led on to say what he knows to be false. On the other hand, suppress no part of a conversation or statement, nor any tone or action which accompanies it, for everything you suppress is short of the whole truth. Remember always what reliance is of necessity placed in courts of justice upon the testimony of policemen, and bear constantly in mind that in many cases the fate of an accused man, which means his life or his liberty, depends upon that testimony, and seriously reflect how fearful a thing it is for a man to be convicted and put to death, or condemned to penal servitude or imprisonment, upon false testimony. Remember, also, when you are giving evidence, that you are not the person appointed to determine the guilt or the innocence of a person on his trial, nor have you any right to express an opinion upon the subject. Your duty is a very simple and easy one—namely, to tell the court all you know. The responsibility of the verdict, whether it be guilty or not guilty, rests entirely with the jury or the magistrate (if the case is tried in a police court), and they have a right to expect from you everything within your knowledge to enable them to form a just conclusion. It is right I should tell you that willfully to tell a falsehood, or pervert the truth, in a court of justice is perjury; and you all know perjury is a crime punishable with seven years' penal servitude, and your own common sense will tell you that when perjury is committed by an officer of justice he deserves and ought to receive a very severe sentence. Resolve, then, on every occasion to tell the plain, unbiassed, unvarnished truth in all things, even though it may for a moment expose you to censure or mortification, or defeat the object or expectations of those by whom you are called as a witness. Depend upon it such censure or mortification will be as nothing compared to the character you will earn for yourself as a truthful, reliable man, whose word can always be implicitly depended upon, and the very mortification you endure will be a useful warning to you to avoid in the future the error you have candidly confessed. I could write a good deal more on the subjects I have touched, but then my address would be too long for this little work, which is intended for your guide, and wherein you will find your duties upon various occasions more fully defined. I have only endeavoured in a few friendly sentences to point out to you a line of conduct, the steady adoption of which will enable every man in the police service to feel that he is on the high road to all he can desire, having regard to the important and very responsible calling he has selected for himself.

ABOLITION OF JUDICIAL OATHS.

In the current number of the North American Review, Judge Edward A. Thomas writes in favour of abolishing oaths in legal proceedings, on the ground that it is futile and unjust to require them. He objects to them in theory because they imply that God punishes perjury more severely than falsehood, and in practice because they do not restrain perjury, and exclude those who do not believe in a future state of rewards and punishments from testifying. He also raises the minor practical objection that men recognising various forms of oaths, it is sometimes inconvenient and unseemly to introduce the form which the particular witness considers binding on his conscience—as for example, the finger or toe of a Brahmin for a Hindoo to kiss, or a cow for a Parsee to hold by the tail, or a saucer for a Chinaman to break, or a cock for him to behead. He also objects to the inconsistency of the law in varying and adapting the form to the same conscience, according to circumstances—as political oaths more or less "iron-clad"—and to the carelessness and irreverence with which oaths are generally administered. The last objections are out of the question as to the morality and policy of requiring oaths. The idea of this essay is not new; it was strongly urged by Jeremy Bentham, as the essayist points out. It seems to us that the truth as usual lies between the extremes. It would be injudicious to dispense with oaths; it is unjust to exclude a man from testifying because he does not believe in a future state of rewards and punishments. The form, while it does not wholly prevent perjury, does something toward it; it restrains some; it makes many reflective and careful. It is no hardship upon anyone who is willing to take it. For the considerable class who are unwilling to take it, allowance should be made. Allowance is made for some of them, such as Quakers. But there are many good men who do not believe in any God or future life, or believe in them in a different form from that generally accepted by Christians. These men should not be shut out and stigmatised. We know of no reason why Col. Ingersoll should not be as competent and as credible a witness as Henry Ward Beecher; Ralph Waldo Emerson, it would seem, should have been as respectable a witness as Dr. Hall; Professor Tyndall as Dr. McCosh. But there should be a form of some sort to impose solemnity and dignity upon the proceeding; to impress the witness with the importance and responsibility of his position; and to mark his public acknowledgment of the sanction and the consequences. Men who profess to believe in God and a future state of rewards and punishments should be sworn by all the sanctions which their profession implies; others should at least be made publicly to acknowledge the solemnity of the occasion and solemnly to pledge themselves to tell the truth. We hope the day will never come when a man can give testimony in the same way he would tell the story to another out of court. We hate, as deeply as anybody, the making of a man's religious belief the test of his competency as a witness, but we see no reason why an "unbeliever" should be excused from a settled and common form, as nearly equivalent to the usual one as can be devised, which he shall recognise as binding his conscience. Judge Thomas objects to the public exposure of a man's unbelief, and the consequent "distrust and obloquy." The exposure may be "disagreeable," as he insists, but we see no help for that. We do not think that any man should be permitted to pass for a Christian if he is not, nor that he should be ashamed of not being what he thinks he ought not to be. When he says that the exaction of oaths leads to perjury he is technically right, inasmuch as there can be no perjury without oath; but it is not true that they lead to falsehood, for it is not the exaction of the oath, but the determination of the witness to lie, that induces falsehood, and this determination does not spring from the oath.—Albany Law Journal.

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

The restriction of the power to commit criminally for contempt of court, which is to be made the subject of a Government bill next session, is only an application of principles which have long been recognised. At common law the judges had an unlimited discretion to fine or imprison for misdemeanours. Magna Charta declared that fines ought to be secundum modum delicti; and the Bill of Rights prohibits cruel and unusual punishments and excessive fines. Modern legislation has not only fixed the punishment for felonies within precise limits, but for most misdemeanours. The other misdemeanours, and among them criminal contempts of court, have not hitherto had their respective penalties prescribed, partly because of the difficulty of defining them, and partly because of their infrequency. Contempts of court peculiarly call for limitation in respect of punishment, because both verdict and sentence are in the hands of the judge, who is in some instances also the prosecutor. In the case of County Court judges, punishment for contempt is limited by the County Court Act of 1846 to seven days' imprisonment and £5 fine, and the offence must be committed either in court or while the judge is going to and from the court. Courts of quarter sessions, as courts of record, have the same unlimited power to punish for contempt as the superior courts, except that, in case of an excess of jurisdiction, an appeal may be made to the High Court. Justices in petty sessions seem to have no power to punish for contempt; and according to the practice of the metropolitan bench, a magistrate who is insulted in his place simply orders a summons to be taken out before another justice. A power given to the judges to commit for trial on the spot, similar to that possessed in cases of perjury, would meet many of the exigencies to which the unsatisfactory practice of convicting of contempt of court is now applied; but, as we understand the proposal, it is not to take away the jurisdiction of summarily convicting for contempt, but to limit the punishment, and perhaps give an appeal.

The absence of an appeal in cases of contempt is a mere accident. The Judicature Acts allowed an appeal against all orders of the High Court; but they excepted criminal cases, in order to protect the finality of the decisions of the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved. The terms of the exception, however, went further than its object, and instead of being confined to cases in which that court had jurisdiction, it extended to all criminal cases, and, amongst them, to criminal contempts of court. If the Court for Crown Cases is abolished, and appeal in criminal cases allowed by motion, as in civil and County Court cases, all criminal cases, including summary convictions for contempt of court, will go to the Court of Appeal, and, if necessary, to the House of Lords.—Law Journal.

We trust that the Select Committee appointed to inquire into the circumstances of Mr. Gray's imprisonment will not find itself precluded from inquiring into the history and the development of the law of contempt. The earliest instance mentioned of its existence was the committal of Prince Henry by Chief Justice Gascoigne. It was not recorded in the year-books at the time, and some maintain that the story is apocryphal. However this may be it is somewhat singular that acts which would now by common consent be declared to amount to contempt, meriting condign punishment without formal trial on the part of the offended judge, were in early times made the subject matter of special penal enactments. The Court of Chancery introduced the practice of imprisoning those who, whether from obstinacy or inability, failed to comply with its decrees, but in all these cases it was presumed that the individual could purge his contempt and secure his liberty by obeying the orders of the court. The punishment by the common law judges of acts done outside the precincts of the courts on the ground of contempt does not, we believe, date anterior to the time of Lord Mansfield. On one occasion a prosecutor sought to influence the entire jury panel by circulating amongst them a pamphlet previous to the trial of the case in an assize town. An application was made to Lord Mansfield, one of the judges of assize, to deal with it as an outrageous act of contempt, and to commit the offender to prison. The Chief Justice, however, declined, on the ground that he had no power to do so, but he directed the case to stand over to the next assize, and ordered an indictment to be preferred against the offender. This was the proper course, and we see no reason why it should not have been taken with respect to Mr. Gray. It is not probable that the Government have yet settled on the form their measure will take, but we may assume that whilst leaving the judges all the necessary authority to vindicate their dignity and to prevent any interference with the administration of justice in their courts, it will restore those guarantees for the liberty of the subject and for the fitting trial of alleged offenders which have of late years gradually disappeared.—Morning Post.

AUDIENCE OF SOLICITORS UNDER THE CRIMES PREVENTION ACT.

In the House of Commons on the 2nd inst.,

Mr. SEXTON asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland whether he had observed that in one of the courts for investigation of claims for compensation for injuries under the Crimes Prevention Act the Commissioner refused to hear solicitors on behalf of the parties, on the ground that section 19 of the Crimes Prevention Act prescribed that the parties should be heard either personally or by counsel, and that this provision shut out solicitors from a hearing; and whether, considering the poverty of the ratepayers in many parts of Ireland, and the cost of engaging counsel in Dublin, the Government would take such steps as might be necessary, either by introducing a short Amending Bill, or otherwise, to facilitate protection of the interests of the ratepayers in cases of claims for compensation by entitling solicitors to appear?

Mr. TRAVELMAN said the question, being a legal one, should have been addressed to the Attorney-General for Ireland, but he was advised that while the 19th section of the Act in the first sub-section gave the absolute right of audience to parties personally or by counsel, the second sub-section gave investigating barristers, for the purposes of the investigation, all the same powers as justices sitting at quarter sessions, and there was nothing to prevent him hearing a solicitor if he thought fit. He had observed that solicitors had been heard by other investigating barristers appointed by his Excellency under this section. In his view no further statute appeared to be necessary.

INTERESTED JUSTICES.

We have from time to time noticed the decisions of the High Court on this subject, and the latest is of sufficient importance to call for attention. The case is Reg. v. Lee and others, and has been reported J. P., p. 404, and at 9 Q. B. D. 394. The facts were shortly these. In the borough of Wakefield the sanitary committee of the town council, who were the local authority under the Public Health Act, 1875, passed a resolution directing the town clerk to prosecute one S. for exposing for sale meat unfit for human food, contrary to the provisions of the Act, and at the hearing of an information laid in pursuance of this resolution S. was convicted before four justices of the borough, who imposed a penalty upon him. One of the justices was a member of the sanitary committee, and had been present at the meeting at which the resolution was passed. A rule was obtained in the High Court for a certiorari to bring up and quash the conviction on the ground that the justice just mentioned was disqualified by interest from sitting as a justice on the hearing of the information. It was contended that any disqualification which might otherwise have existed was removed by the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 258, which provides that "no justice of the peace shall be deemed incapable of acting in cases arising under this Act by reason of his being a member of a local authority." But the court (Field and Cave, JJ.) held that this section had not the effect of enabling a person to act as prosecutor and judge in the same matter. Section 258 of the Public Health Act, 1875, merely provided that the fact of membership of a sanitary authority should not disqualify: it did not provide that a justice who had acted as a member of the authority in directing a prosecution for an offence under the Act was a sufficiently disinterested person to be able to sit as a judge at the hearing of the information. The rule was therefore made absolute.

It will be observed that this decision proceeds on the same ground as Reg. v. Milledge, 4 Q. B. D. 332. There a town council had passed a resolution that steps should be taken against one B. for the removal of a nuisance. A summons was accordingly issued, and at the hearing two of the justices were members of the council, and had taken part in the discussion when the resolution was passed. It was held that they could not act both as prosecutors and as judges, and the order made by them was therefore quashed.

These cases must be carefully distinguished from other recent decisions. In Reg. v. Justices of Huntingdon, 4 Q. B. D. 522, three justices who were members of a town council, and as such had taken an active part in the making of an order under the Dogs Act, 1871, sat to hear a complaint for non-observance of the order. It was held that they had no such interest in the subject matter of the prosecution as to disqualify them. This was quite different from Reg. v. Lee and Reg. v. Milledge, for the justices had taken no part in ordering the prosecution. Had they done so, then, according to the latter cases, they would have been disqualified as having been both prosecutors and judges in the same matter.

Again in Reg. v. Handsley and others, J. P., p. 119, 8 Q. B. D. 386, the objection taken to the justice was merely that he was a member of the town council. He had not directed the prosecution nor had he acted in any way in or about the issuing of the summonses. The court, consisting of the same judges as decided Reg. v. Lee, held that it was not enough to show merely that an adjudicating justice was a member of the town council, and as such had a pecuniary interest in the result of the complaint or information, or that he was a member of the corporation which was charged with the duty of prosecuting the offence which he sat to adjudicate upon. It was necessary in order to disqualify him to show that he had such a substantial interest in the result of the hearing as to make it likely that he had a real bias in the matter.

It must not be forgotten that these decisions, except Reg. v. JJ. of Huntingdon, were all given in cases where there was a section similar to the 258th of the Public Health Act, 1875, and the principle of Reg. v. Handley was in the judgment of the court confined to such cases. That of Reg. v. Milledge and Reg. v. Lee, however, is of universal application. It proceeds upon the maxim nemo debet esse iudex in sua propria causa, no man shall be both prosecutor and judge.

When, therefore, a justice is a member of the sanitary authority he is not thereby disqualified from adjudicating upon informations or complaints at the instance of the sanitary authority, unless either he has a substantial interest in the result of the hearing of the case, or has taken such a part in the ordering of the proceedings as to bring him within the principle of Reg. v. Lee.—Justice of the Peace.

PRACTICE CASES IN CHANCERY.

There are three practice cases of considerable importance in the September number of the Law Journal Reports. The first is Comton v. Preston, regarding the right to counter-claim for the possession of land; the second is Hunt v. Chambers, regarding the right of parties to a jury; and the third is Anderson v. Butler's Wharf Company, regarding the mode of appealing from a Chancery judge's order in chambers. Hunt v. Chambers, both from its subject-matter and the fact of its being in the Court of Appeal, claims attention first. It was an action by the landlord of a farm against the executors of his tenant, for rent, and breach of a covenant to repair. It contained a claim for the administration of the estate in case the defendants did not admit assets. The defendants admitted assets in the statement of defence, but denied the liability, and gave notice that the action should be tried by a jury. Thereupon the plaintiff applied to Vice-Chancellor Bacon, that the action should be tried by a judge. The Vice-Chancellor made the order; but on appeal it was reversed by the Master of the Rolls and Lords Justices Cotton and Lindley. The question was one of those in which predisposition to the form of trial by a judge is likely to influence the discretion of the judge; but it cannot be said that either of the three judges in the Court of Appeal was, from his antecedents, likely to depreciate the Chancery form of trial. The matter was decided by a close reference to the Rules of Procedure. The Vice-Chancellor acted under Order XXXVI, Rule 26, which provides that "the judge may, if it appear desirable, direct a trial without a jury of any question or issue of fact, or partly of fact and partly of law, arising in any cause or matter which, previously to the passing of the Act, could, without any consent of parties, be tried without a jury." The present action, as it claimed an administration, could have been tried in Chancery without a jury before the passing of the Act. Whether the fact that the defendants admitted assets did or did not make it the less such an action, is a question of much interest, upon which the opinion of the Court would have been desirable; but the decision is based rather on the effect of Rule 3 of the same order. That rule provides that, "subject to the provisions of the following rules, . . . the defendant may, upon giving notice to the effect that he desires to have the issues of fact tried before a judge and jury, be entitled to have the same so tried." It is not very clear drafting to give a right subject to rules following, and, in those rules, to subject the right to the discretion of the judge; but the least effect that could be given to Rule 3 was to read it so as to give the party a prima facie right to trial by jury. It is for his opponent to make out that the case ought not to be tried by a jury. The Court of Appeal were satisfied that the Vice-Chancellor did not so construe the rules, but that he acted as if he had an absolute discretion. They therefore overruled his decision, guarding themselves against the supposition that they were interfering with the exercise of a discretion. The action for convenience of trial was also transferred to the Queen's Bench Division, which must be taken to be the practice on a jury trial being in prospect. The decision may be looked upon, so far as it goes, as a check to the tendency of the day to prefer trial by a judge.

The action of Comton v. Preston was for a declaration that the plaintiff had a first charge on a portion of a certain estate, and for a foreclosure. The defendant—the Imperial Bank—claimed the first charge for itself; and, by way of counter-claim, asked for a declaration that it was entitled to the possession of another portion of the estate, and also damages for a false recital. The plaintiff applied to strike out the counter-claim. In granting this application Mr. Justice Fry exposes some of the inconsistencies of the rules. Two rules deal with the subject of embarrassing counter-claims, of which Order XIX., Rule 8, allows an application to be made before trial, and Order XXII., Rule 9, allows an application before reply—the grounds on which the application is allowed being differently expressed, but, in the main, depending on convenience of trial. Mr. Justice Fry further refers to Order XVII., Rule 2, forbidding "other causes of action to be joined with an action for the possession of land," intimating an opinion that this rule applies also to counter-claims, although not so deciding. In the result, he comes to the conclusion that this counter-claim would be embarrassing, as the land in question is different from the land which is the subject of the claim. We cannot help thinking that this is a narrow application of a system a main object of which was to prevent multiplicity of actions.

The third case, that of In re Butler's Wharf Company, involves a subject on which we have commented before. The company was in liquidation, and the liquidator took out a summons for leave to bring an action for goods sold by the company. There was a cross-summons by the proposed defendant claiming from the liquidator a balance in his favour. The matter was adjourned to the Vice-Chancellor in Chambers, and he made an order. The liquidator desired to appeal; and a motion was made in Court for a certificate that the Vice-Chancellor did not desire to hear arguments in Court, or, in the alternative, for a discharge of the order. The original practice was for the judge to give a certificate that he did not wish to hear argument in Court or to adjourn the case for argument. Mr. Justice Chitty in Holloway v. Cheston, 51 Law. J. Rep. Chanc. 208, laid down that the right course was to move the judge to discharge his order made in chambers. Vice-Chancellor Hall, in the present case, declined to follow Mr. Justice Chitty, and ordered the matter to be mentioned to him again in chambers, thus apparently returning to the former practice. The inconveniences of the practice begun by Mr. Justice Chitty were pointed out by us at the time of his decision, and these inconveniences are insisted on by Vice-Chancellor Hall. It may be doubted, however, whether the inconveniences in question are greater than the inconveniences of the practice being constantly changed. The object of the Judicature Acts was to introduce uniformity of practice before every Court and every judge in relation to the same subject-matter, and yet we find Vice-Chancellor Hall saying, "I have never adopted that practice," as if he were entitled to a practice of his own. It is difficult to get rid of old abuses, which, like weeds, crop up again after they have been, to all appearance, killed. The Chancery judges, like the other judges, are only parts of a whole. They are bound by the practice of the High Court as expounded by their colleagues and the Court of Appeal, and have no right to introduce a private practice applicable to themselves. The case referred to is less important in itself than as an indication of a bad practice which may spread if not checked.—Law Journal.

ARABI'S JUDGES.

Ismail Eyoub Pasha, the president of the commission of inquiry, is a Circassian, and was the immediate predecessor of Colonel Gordon in the administration of the Soudan. It is stated that he was removed from his post on being charged with complicity in the slave trade. Ali Ghelib Pasha is a Turk, was an adherent of the ex-Khedive Ismail Pasha, and is a protégé of Sultan Pasha's, Yussuf Chondi Pasha, Mohamed Zéky Pasha, Saad-ed-Din Bey, Mohamed Hamdy Bey, Monstapha Ragheb Bey, Solomon Yourry Bey, and Monstapha Khoubrusi are all either Turks or Circassians, and were thrown out of employment by the National party Ministry. Mohamed Moukhtar Effendi is an Egyptian, was an officer of the Engineers, and talks English and French. He went with Raouf Pasha to the Soudan after Colonel Gordon's return. He received protection from Arabi, and was in his camp at Kafir-dawar, but deserted from it in September last. Mohamed Raouf Pasha, the president of the court-martial, is an Egyptian from Upper Egypt. During the war he passed between Cairo and Alexandria. He signed the National manifesto at Cairo, but definitely joined the Khedive the day before the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. Ibrahim Pasha el-Ferik, Ismail Kamil Pasha, Hussein Assim Pasha, and Kurshid Pasha are all Turks or Circassians, and were thrown out of employment by the National party. Suleyman Niazi Pasha, Osman Latif Pasha, Ahmed Hassaneim Pasha, and Suleiman Nadjati Bey are all either Turks or Circassians.

THE SALARIES OF SMALL JUDGES.

A comparison made between the salaries paid to magistrates and judges in various civilized countries leads, as most people are aware, says the Globe, to the conclusion that in Great Britain the judicial staff is better treated, and has a greater chance of being recruited from the most competent men, than anywhere else. It is in the case of judges occupying the highest position of all that this contrast is, perhaps, the most remarkable and the most in favour of our country; but there is also a strong balance to our advantage in the lower ranks of the judicial corps, as will readily be seen by a glance at the comparative table published by a French paper, which has been at the pains to collect these statistics. These figures show that in Italy, where the administration of justice is probably more scandalous than in any other part of Europe, the tariff of pay is also lowest, as the salaries of even the first class of juges de paix amount to less than £100 per annum. In Belgium, where there is only one scale of salaries for all officials in this position, the amount is £120, but in Switzerland, where the same rule prevails, it is no less than £180. In Austria and Holland there are three classes, and the pay ranges from £150 to £250, being uniformly higher in the smaller country, where the relative purchasing power of money is much less. In Germany the rate varies from £165 to £290, in Prussia from £150 to £375, and in Russia the officials corresponding to the juges de paix receive from £240 to £350. As for France, where there are no less than nine classes of judges of this description, their salaries vary from as high as £320 a year to as low as about £75. These salaries are compared by the French statistician with those of the English County Court judges, set down at £1,500, though he confesses that the functions of these latter officials correspond rather more nearly with those of the judges of the tribunals of First Instance than with those of the juges de paix. He forgets also to mention the fact that a very large part of the business coming before these last-mentioned dignitaries is done in England by the local magistrates, for whose services the nation pays nothing at all.

NEW BARRISTERS.

The following gentlemen will be called to the Bar at the present Sittings:—

Robert Francis Harrison, Esq., Scholar, T.C.D., and B.A., University of Dublin, eldest son of the Hon. Michael Harrison, of Mountjoy-square, in the City of Dublin, one of the Judges of the Common Pleas Division of Her Majesty's High Court of Justice in Ireland. Mr. Harrison obtained the John Brooke Scholarship of £50 per annum, to continue for three years, at the Honor Examination, held on 24th and 25th ult., and takes rank accordingly. Mr. Harrison also obtained First Class Scholarship in International and Constitutional Law, in January, 1882, and First Class Scholarship in Real and Personal Property, in June, 1882, at the Middle Temple.

Charles Francis Bastable, Esq., B.A., and Professor of Political Economy, University of Dublin, only son of the Rev. Robert Bastable, of Rathgar, in the County of Dublin. Mr. Bastable obtained the Exhibition of £21 per annum, to continue for three years, at the Honor Examination, held on 24th and 25th ult., and takes rank accordingly.

William Archibald Kilpatrick, Esq., Scholar, T.C.D., and B.A., University of Dublin, eldest son of Hugh Alexander Kilpatrick, late of Ballylane, in the County of Armagh, Esq., deceased. Mr. Kilpatrick obtained the prize of £21 at the Honor Examination, held on 24th and 25th ult., and takes rank accordingly.

William Philip Ross, Esq., eldest son of John Ross, late of Belfast, in the County of Antrim, contractor, deceased.

William Morgan Jellett, Esq., Scholar, T.C.D., and B.A., University of Dublin, eldest son of the Rev. John Hewitt Jellett, Provost of Trinity College, Dublin.

Henry Daniel Conner, Esq., B.A., University of Dublin, only son of Daniel Conner, of Manch, in the County of Cork, Esq., J.P.

George Chichester May, Esq., B.A., University of Dublin, second son of the Right Hon. the Lord Chief Justice May, of Fitzwilliam-square, in the City of Dublin.

Robert William Lucas, Esq., B.A., University of Dublin, eldest son of Edward Wm. Lucas, of Raconnell, in the County of Monaghan, Esq.

George Archibald Tindall, Esq., B.A., University of Dublin, only son of William Tindall, of Bellaray, in the County of Meath, Esq.

Wood Gibson Jefferson, Esq., B.A., University of Dublin, only son of Thomas Ross Jefferson, late of Carroby House, in the County of Roscommon, Esq., deceased.

John Francis Taylor, Esq., third son of John Taylor, late of Clevery, in the County of Sligo, gentleman, deceased.

Clason Porter, Esq., B.A., University of Dublin, third son of the Rev. Clason Porter, of Larne, in the County of Antrim.

Redmond Francis Carroll, Esq., youngest son of Redmond Carroll, late of Summer-hill, in the City of Dublin, Esq., solicitor, deceased.

Garrett William Walker, Esq., ex-Scholar, T.C.D., and B.A., University of Dublin, eldest son of John Francis Walker, of Gardiner's-place, in the City of Dublin, Esq., Q.C.

John MacGillycuddy, Esq., second son of Richard, The MacGillycuddy of the Reeks, in the County of Kerry.

The island of Anticosti is to be sold by auction to settle a lawsuit.

REVIEWS.

Readings from the Works of Charles Dickens. Condensed and Adapted by JOHN A. JENNINGS, B.A., Author of "Wayside Restings," and Editor of "The Modern Elocutionist." Dublin: Carson Brothers, 7 Grafton-street.

DICKENS has been, and, we venture to predict, will always be, a great favourite with lawyers. In the busy whirl of life it is seldom one can command the time to read again the books which enchanted us in the days of our youth, and it is with pleasure therefore that we welcome Mr. Jennings' volume. He has condensed, without mutilating or unduly curtailing, the masterpieces of the great novelist, and the mind of the reader is once more absorbed in the history of David Copperfield; in the excitement of the Estanswill Election; in the squabbles of the Editors of the Estanswill Gazette and of the Estanswill Independent; in the cause célèbre of Bardell v. Pickwick; in the tragedy of Poor Jo, &c. The work is evidently edited with very great care, and will rank with the author's "Modern Elocutionist"—a work which has now attained a world-wide reputation.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Nineteenth Century. A Monthly Review, Edited by JAMES KNOWLES, No. 69. November, 1882. London: C. Kegan Paul & Co.

Contemporary Review. November, 1882. London: Strahan and Co., Limited, Paternoster-row.

Milton's Paradise Lost. Illustrated by Gustave Doré. Edited, with Notes and a Life of Milton, by the late ROBERT VAUGHAN, D.D. London: Cassell, Petter, Galpin, & Co.

Cassell's History of England from the earliest period to the present time. With about 2,000 Illustrations. Part 86. London, Paris, and New York: Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. George M'Dermot, A.B., Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed an Investigator under the Arrears of Rent Act, 1882.

Mr. George H. Gartlan, A.B., Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed an Assistant Land Commissioner, in the place of Mr. Gerald Fitzgerald, A.B., Barrister-at-Law, resigned.

Mr. Thomas J. O'Dempsey, Solicitor, has been unanimously elected Solicitor to the Board of Guardians of the Enniscorthy Union.

CONVICT LABOUR.—In the last financial year £18,404 19s. 10d., of which £16,111 8s. 2d. from "manufacturing departments" was received from convict labour in England.

Holloway's Pills are the medicine most in repute for curing the multifarious maladies which attack humanity, when wet and cold weather gives place to more genial temperatures. In short, these Pills afford relief, if they fail of being an absolute remedy in all the disturbances of circulation, digestion, and nervous energy, which at times oppress a vast portion of the population. Under the wholesome, purifying and strengthening powers exerted by these excellent Pills, the tongue becomes clean, the appetite improves, digestion is quickened, and assimilation rendered perfect. Holloway's medicine possesses the highly estimable property of cleansing the whole mass of blood, which, in its renovated condition, carries purity, strength, and vigour to every tissue of the body.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

KING'S INNS.

HONOR EXAMINATION.—OCTOBER, 1882.

HISTORY OF LAW, CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, AND CRIMINAL LAW.

Examiner—Lord Justice FITZGIBBON.

1. "Four subjects of great importance occupied the Convention Parliament from the time of the King's return till their dissolution."—(Hallam.) What were these subjects, and how was each ultimately disposed of?
2. When, and under what circumstances, did the House of Commons establish the principles of Appropriation of Supplies and Inspection of the Public Accounts? Mention the earlier precedents for each practice.
3. What questions of Constitutional Law arose upon the impeachment of the Earl of Danby? How has the law been settled upon each of them?
4. Write a short historical account of the civil jurisdiction of the House of Lords, original and appellate.
5. Give the substance of:—
  - a. The Irish Acts of Settlement and Explanation.
  - β. The Bill of Rights.
  - γ. The Constitutional provisions of the Act of Settlement taking effect on the accession of the House of Hanover.
6. The Habeas Corpus Act was "subject to three defects."—(Tanvill-Langmead.) What were these defects, and how was each subsequently remedied?
7. Give an account of the Parliamentary controversy occasioned by the proceedings in the action of Ashby v. White and others.
8. Define an indictable conspiracy. How does Tindal, C.J., describe "the gist of the offence"?

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION FOR APPRENTICES TO SOLICITORS.

Pursuant to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (Ireland), 1866.

DUBLIN, MICHAELMAS SITTINGS, 1882.

HISTORY.

1. What was the Heptarchy? When and how established, and how long did it continue?
2. What claim did Stephen put forward to the throne? Mention some of the principal events in his reign.
3. Who was heir to the throne on the death of Richard I.? What was his fate?
4. State briefly the events of the war with France in the reign of Henry V., the terms of the treaty which concluded it, and the results to England.
5. Explain the respective titles of Richard Duke of York and Henry VI. to the throne. What was the fate of Richard?
6. How was the succession to the throne settled by the will of Henry VIII.? How by the will of Edward VI.?
7. Give some account of the origin of the Wars of the Roses.
8. What was the object, and what were the effects of the declaration of indulgence?
9. How were Gibraltar and Malta acquired by England?
10. What was the character of Cromwell's dictatorship? Give an account of his latter days and the date of his death.
11. What are the most remarkable events of the reign of George II., and who were some of his principal statesmen and generals?

12. For what events in English History are the following places remarkable :—Fontenoy, Pinkie, Lewes, Marston Moor ?

GEOGRAPHY.

1. What is meant by the words Isthmus, Strait, Estuary? Give instances of each.
2. How many Zones are there? Name them, giving the boundaries and extent of each.
3. Give a description of the largest desert in the world. What is the distinguishing feature of the great desert in Persia?
4. What are the principal branches of the Atlantic Ocean on its western side?
5. How is Asia bounded, and what are its political divisions?
6. What are the names of the straits between Sicily and Italy? Corsica and Sardinia?
7. Mention, and briefly describe, some of the island groups of the Pacific.
8. Name the chief rivers which rise in the Alps and Pyrenees, and the countries through which they flow?
9. Where are situated Campeachy Bay, Flamborough Head, Torbay, Carnsore Point, Lough Corrib, Valentia Island?
10. In what counties are the following situated :—Ipswich, Reading, Penrith, Exeter, St. Albans?

ARITHMETIC.

1. Express the result of—

$$\frac{3\frac{2}{3} \times \frac{4}{5}}{6\frac{2}{3} \div 1\frac{1}{2}}$$
2. Express 12s. 6d. as the decimal of £1.

3. Find the value of 5 cwt. 3 qrs. 21 lbs. at £1 5s. 8d. per cwt.
4. What is the dividend on £721 18s. 6d. at 14s. 2d. in the pound?
5. If 24 men can mow 18 acres in 15 hours, how many men will mow 27 acres in 20 hours?
6. What is the interest on £106 18s. 4d. for 15 months at  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. per annum.

BOOK-KEEPING.

1. When you open an account for stock in the ledger, on which side would you enter the cash in hand?
2. Enumerate the several classes of accounts used in Book-keeping by double entry.
3. How would you journalise the following :—
 (a.) When you pay money to another by order of your creditor?
 (b.) When you sell goods to a creditor for a debt due to him, their value amounting to more than the debt, and the overplus is paid to you in cash?
4. Define "Invoice"—"Bill of Lading."
5. Open a cash account; enter the following transactions, and balance the account :—

		£	s.	d.
January 1st.	Cash in hand,	348	0	0
"	Paid William Browne,	86	4	0
"	Sales for cash this day,	8	10	0
" 2nd.	Paid cash for goods,	10	15	0
"	Received for John Smith	5	13	6
"	Sales for cash this day,	4	10	0
" 3rd.	Paid house rent,	33	8	4
"	Paid taxes,	3	0	8
"	Paid William Jones,	84	10	5
"	Sales for cash,	9	5	0

COURT PAPERS.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAND JUDGES.

List of Petitions presented to the Land Judges in the month of September, 1882.

DATE	TITLE OF MATTER	OBJECT OF PETITION	COUNTY	PROFIT RENT	SOLICITOR
Sept. 1	Daniel M'Sweeney, owner; John M'Sweeney, petitioner	Receiver and sale	Co. Cork	£ s. d. 388 15 6	H. R. O'Kearney
" 5	Michael Cleary, owner; Margaret E. Pope, petitioner	Sale	Tipperary	100 0 0 Estimated	A. Robinson and Son
" 7	Owen Lynch and another, owners; Irish Civil Service Building Society, petitioners	Sale and partition	Galway	Not stated	H. T. Dix
" 9	Annie Gallagher and others, owners; James Watt and others, petitioners	Sale	Tyrone	Not stated	Patrick Gallagher
" "	Turlough B. O'Brien, owner; W. D. Griffith and another, petitioners	Receiver and sale	Clare	201 17 2	Chomley and St. George
" 14	Katherine R. Briscoe and another, owners; Bridget Walsh and another, petitioners	Sale and receiver	Westmeath	Not stated	Meldon and Co.
" 16	William Wolfe, owner; Jeremiah O'Donovan, petitioner	Sale and receiver	Cork	187 10 0 Valuation	Daniel O'Donovan
" "	John T. Dillon, owner; The Scottish Provident Institution, petitioners	Sale and receiver	Roscommon	Not stated	Webb, Scott, and Seymour
" 21	Richard Evans, owner; National Bank, petitioners	Sale and receiver	Cork	Not stated	Reuben T. Harvey
" 25	James A. M'Farland, owner; Matilda J. Clements, petitioner	Sale	Tyrone	101 10 0	King Houston
" 29	William Stevenson, owner; John Corry, petitioner	Sale	Tyrone	40 10 0 Valuation	A. Elliott

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN COURT.—R. Mecreedy, to make order absolute.—A. Bredin, re-entry notice.—J. Power, payment by receiver.—Munster Bank, objections.—W. P. Garnett, to appoint receiver.—P. Lawless, final schedule.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

M. Campbell, rental.—H. E. Anderson, do.—P. M'Nulty, do.—P. Hanley, vouch.—W. Ledwich, rental.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—J. Elliott, final schedule.—H. FitzGerald, do.—A. W. Travers, do.—G. H. Mayes, do.—M. Watson, do.—Trustee G. Webb, do.—J. Kenny, do.—T. Howett, as to receiver.—A. Costello, to stay proceeding.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. M. Cochrane, reference.—J. B. Scott, vouch.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

G. B. C. Simpson, rental.

FRIDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

F. BLAKE,	-	-	-	-	1 lot.
S. KELLER,	-	-	-	-	1 "
S. LICHFIELD,	-	-	-	-	1 "
M. DUFF,	-	-	-	-	2 lots.
R. L. WATSON,	-	-	-	-	8 "

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—G. Roe, proposal.—M. R. Dalway, from 2nd.

IN COURT.—T. Barklie, from 27th June.—M. J. M'Kee, final schedule.—W. Jones, payment.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

J. J. Bodkin, rental.

TUESDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

EXECUTORS C. HARRISON,	-	-	-	-	2 lots.
N. MAYNE,	-	-	-	-	2 "
G. V. STEWART,	-	-	-	-	5 "
M. O'KELLY,	-	-	-	-	5 "
J. FENTON,	-	-	-	-	8 "

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

A. H. Irwin, rental from 3rd.—P. Regan, do.—J. Forde, ditto.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

Scanlan v. Bunton, adjudication.—J. E. Nugent, rental.—W. Goggin, do.—J. Aiken, do.—Trustee L. A. Tottenham, do.—J. Emerson, for deeds.—N. Woods, reference.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—C. A. Keogh, for carriage and cross motion.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

J. Abernethy, rental.—J. Grant, do.—W. Miller, do.—W. Petrie, do.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Coffey, John, of Blacktrench, Naas, in the county of Kildara, farmer. October 17; Friday, November 17, and Tuesday, December 5. Molloy & Molloy, solrs.
 Henehan, James, of Claremorris, in the county of Mayo, shop-keeper. October 13; Friday, November 17, and Tuesday, December 5. Molloy & Molloy, solrs.
 M'Ardle, James, of Kilkerry, in the county of Louth, farmer. October 17; Friday, November 17, and Tuesday, December 5. C. J. Fay & Co., solrs.
 M'Loughlin, Peter, of Market-street, Clifden, in the county Galway, draper. October 17; Tuesday, November 7, and Friday, November 24. Wm. Findlater & Co., solrs.
 Scott, William, of Dromore, in the county of Tyrone, publican. October 10; Tuesday, November 14, and Friday, December 1. Bennett Thompson, solr.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	OCTOBER			NOVEMBER
	Sat. 28	Mon. 30	Tues. 31	Wed. 1	Thur. 2	Fri. 3
*Paid Government.
- 3 p c Consols ..	101½	-	101½	-	-	101½
- 3 p c Reduced ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
- New 3 p c Stock ..	100½	100½	100½	-	100½	100½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1882 } Traffic at ..	103½	103½	103½	-	103½	-
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel. ..	-	-	-	-	100½	-
BANKS.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	319	319	-	-	319	319
25 Hibernian Banking Co ..	35	-	-	-	-	-
20 London and County (Ld'g) ..	-	79	-	-	-	-
15 London Joint Stock ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
20 London and W'minster, N'd ..	-	70½	71	-	71½	-
10 Do. New ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
34 Munster Bank (Limited) ..	-	7	-	-	7	-
- Nat. Prov. of England, lim. ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	24	-	24½	-	24	23½
10 National of Liverpool (Lid'd) ..	-	-	-	-	14	-
10 Royal Bank ..	29½	29	29	-	29	-
25 Standard of B. S. A., N'd ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
Steam.
100 City of Dublin ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
50 Dublin & Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co. ..	59	-	-	-	-	-
50 British & Irish ..	-	49½	-	-	-	-
MINES.
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (N'd ..	-	2	-	-	-	-
MISCELLANEOUS.
10 Alliance & Dub. Com. G. A. ..	-	-	16	-	-	-
8 Do. New ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
4 Arnott & Co., Limited ..	-	-	-	-	-	6
7½ Dub. Drapery Whouse, Ltd. ..	-	-	5½	-	-	-
25 Ir. C. S. Building Society ..	-	-	-	-	-	39½
TRAMWAYS.
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	-	-	-	-	-	10
RAILWAYS.
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	116½	116½	-	-	-	116½
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	-	-	-	-	89½	-
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	-	-	-	-	-	27½
RAILWAY PREFERENCE.
100 Belfast & Nth'n Cos. 4 p c ..	-	101½	-	-	-	-
100 Cork & Bandon, 4 p c ..	-	-	-	-	96	-
100 D., W., & W., 5 p c (1880) ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
100 Do. do. (1884) ..	-	114½	-	-	-	-
100 Gt. Nth'n (Irlnd) gt'd 4 p c ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
100 Do., guaranteed 4½ p c ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	-	-	-	-	-	103½
100 Do., 5 p c ..	-	103½	-	-	-	-
LEASED AT FIXED RENTALS.
100 Gt. Northern and Western ..	-	-	-	-	124½	-
DEBENTURE STOCKS.
- Belfast & Nth'n Cos. 4 p c ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
- Cork and Bandon, 4 p c ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
- Do., 4½ p c ..	-	-	-	-	109	-
- Dublin & Wicklow 4 p c ..	-	-	-	-	105½	105½
- Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	109	-	-	-	-	-
- Do., 4½ p c ..	-	-	-	-	-	114½
- Gt. North'n & West'n 4½ p c ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
- Gt. South'n & West'n, 4 p c ..	-	-	-	-	109½	-
- L'derry & Enniskillen 5 p c ..	-	-	-	-	-	-
- Do., 4½ p c ..	110½	-	-	-	-	-
- Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c ..	106	106	-	-	-	106
- Do., 4½ p c ..	109½	-	-	-	-	109½

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Discount—4 per cent., 17th August, 1882
 Of Deposit—1 per cent., 23rd March, 1882

Name Days—November 14th and 29th, 1882.

Account Days—November 15th and 30th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

The judge in a breach of promise case recently gave the shortest charge on record to his jury. After the lawyers had talked for their fees, his honour said to the jury, "How much?"

VICE CHANCELLOR WICKENS amused himself with binding books, at which trade he was an adept, and had all the elaborate tools and machines to expedite his work, and he turned out his volumes in masterly style.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES. AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

CURRAN—October 4, at Abbey Court, Jamaica, the wife of the Hon. Mr. Justice Curran, of a son.

DEATHS.

BROOKE—October 25, at Taney Hill House, Dundrum, County Dublin, Catherine Anne Daschkaw, widow of the late Right Hon. W. Brooke, aged 68 years.

DUNN—October 31, at Belvidere-place, Kathleen, the infant daughter of M. J. Dunn, Esq., barrister-at-law, aged four and a half months.

HENDERSON—October 31, at Pembroke-road, George Carlisle Henderson, Esq., youngest son of the late William C. Henderson, Esq., Q.C., aged 36 years.

MACDONNELL—October 25, at Clona Castle, Westport, James MacDonnell, for many years Sub-sheriff of Mayo.

MALONE—October 28, at her residence, Leinster-road, Rathmines, of bronchitis, Wilhelmina Henrietta, the dearly beloved wife of Isaac Malone, and daughter of the late William Manifold, Esq., solicitor.

MINCHIN—October 30, at the residence of Mr. James Caldwell, Roalin Park, Sandymount-road, Eliza Ann Minchin, relict of the late Oliver Humphrey Minchin, Esq., of this city, and daughter of the late George Grant, Esq., barrister-at-law.

WARD—October 10, at Fairmount-avenue, Philadelphia, John J. Ward, Esq., attorney-at-law, nephew of Mr. Denis O'Loughlin, Ballybofey, aged 27 years.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50, DENZILLE-STREET.

3-7

NOTICE OF REMOVAL:

MR. JAMES WILLIAM NAGLE, Solicitor, has removed his Offices from 52 Middle Abbey-street to 33 NORTH FREDERICK-STREET, DUBLIN, to which address all Letters, Notices, &c., should in future be directed.

141

WANTS:

TO COUNTRY SOLICITORS.

A FIRM OF SOLICITORS, having large and convenient Offices, are open to an engagement with a Country Correspondent. Address—"A. B. Solicitor," care of Messrs. DUFFY & SONS, Publishers, 15 Wellington-quay, Dublin.

140

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO., LIMITED.

SECURITY, &c.

RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY.

The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—

39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN.

51

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ROBERT WHYTE,

Ladies' & Gentlemen's Boot & Shoe Manufacturer,

1, NORTH FREDERICK-STREET

(Rutland-square),

ESTABLISHED OVER HALF A CENTURY.

Boots made for Weak Ankles, Deformed Feet, and Surgical purposes of every description.

All Work executed on the Premises under my personal superintendance.

None but first-class Workmen employed in either Making or Repairing.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS. ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE. ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA. ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,

the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 118 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewarts & Kincaid, 8 Leinster-street, Dublin.

67

IRISH LAW TIMES.

WANTED the following Numbers, for which full price will be given:—53, 54, 56, 68, 104, 112, 117, 208, 210.

Apply—53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE,

Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection.

10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps. 31, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID,

Curls the straightest and most unmanageable Hair, 3s. 6d., sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE,

To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His GREAT HAIR RESTOREE, 3s. 6d.; it changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles.

As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 3s. 6d.; his DEPILATORY for removing Hair and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers.

7

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,

No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.

J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees, Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.

Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.

91

BOOKBINDING }

of every description executed by

JOHN FALCONER,

53 UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET DUBLIN.

LITHOGRAPHY }

MAPS, PLANS, MEDICAL PLATES CIRQUELARS, &c., executed by

JOHN FALCONER,

53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PERCY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham.

181

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK for STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens: it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each.

581

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ARRERS of RENT (IRELAND) ACT, 1882.
NOTICE.

The Land Commissioners desire to call the most serious attention of Tenants to the terms of Section 1, Sub-Sec. 1 (a), of the Arrears Act, by which it is enacted that the payment or satisfaction of a year's rent, if it has not already been sufficiently paid or satisfied, must be made ON OR BEFORE THE 30TH NOVEMBER, 1882. If, through a misconception of the meaning of the Act, a Tenant has not made a sufficient payment, and if his application is not inquired into by the Land Commission until after the 30th of November, 1882, it is impossible that he could by an additional payment after that date obtain the benefits of the Arrears Act. The Land Commissioners wish to point out that this danger does not arise in the case of joint applications in Form B or C. Where joint applications are not made, Tenants and Landlords who intend to apply in Form E and F respectively ought not to lose a single day in serving the notices in Form A, and in lodging, ten days after the service of the notices, the applications in Forms E or F.

- If a Tenant has not sufficiently paid or satisfied a year's rent, as required by the Act, it will be possible for him, PROVIDED AN INQUIRY INTO HIS APPLICATION IS HELD BEFORE THE END OF THIS MONTH, to make a sufficient payment before the 30th instant; but UNLESS APPLICATIONS ARE LODGED IN TIME TO ENABLE AN INVESTIGATOR TO BE MADE BEFORE THE END OF THE MONTH, it may not be possible for the Commissioners to hold an inquiry before the 30th instant, so as to afford an opportunity to the Tenant of making a sufficient or supplemental payment.

(By Order), WM. L. MICKS, Comptroller.

76 Merrion-square, South,
1st November, 1882.

145

ESTABLISHED 1851.

B I R K B E C K B A N K.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager. 63
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

RENTALS, &amp;c.

SOLICITORS having the Carriage of Sales of Property in the Landed Estates Court, are respectfully informed that they can have their Printing executed correctly, and with the utmost despatch by

J. FALCONER, 53, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c., for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111 GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's).
Late of WATERHOUSE & Co.'s 90

CASES for holding THE IRISH LAW TIMES, AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, for One Year, can be had. Lettered on side, Price—half-bound Leather, 4s.; whole-bound Leather, 6s., by Post 4d. extra, at the Office of the Journal, 53 UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

S T O K E S B R O T H E R S,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN. 293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

C R O W L E Y, H U M P H R I E S & C O.,
73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

D . W . C A R R O L L,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,

Wishes to call attention to his large

STOCK OF NOTEPAPERS AND ENVELOPES,

Direct in every instance from the Makers

They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of

LEATHER GOODS,

Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memorandum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,

With every article connected with Stationery,

Are Sold much under usual charges.

Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.

Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge. 2

E V E R Y M A N W H O S M O K E S

Should invest 24 stamps for the

NEW PERFECTED

The Best

Selected Briars

only.

JENINGS & CO., Inventors, 97 NEWGATE-ST., LONDON.
The most Perfect Pipe invented since Smoking began.

Prospectus Free. 61

MONEY:

I R I S H C I V I L S E R V I C E
PERMANENT

BUILDING SOCIETY,

52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 2½ per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.

Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached.

Rates of Interest:—3½ per cent. per annum if taken for one year, or 4 per cent. per annum if taken for 2 or more years.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:

The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to 80

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.

52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10
TO £1,000

{ IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days. Two UNERRING RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free.
Address G. O. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1882.

No. 824

OUR WIVES—III.

BESIDES conferring upon a wife, whether married before or after the "Married Women's Property Act, 1882," will come into operation (Jan. 1, 1883), power to avail herself of all the civil remedies "for the protection and security of her own separate property, as if such property belonged to her as a feme sole" (s. 12), the Act, by the second clause of section 1, further expressly provides that "a married woman shall be capable of entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of and to the extent of her separate property on any contract, and of suing and being sued, either in contract, or in tort, or otherwise, in all respects as if she were a feme sole, and her husband need not be joined with her as plaintiff or defendant, or be a party to any action or other legal proceeding brought by or taken against her; and any damages or costs recovered by her in any such action or proceeding shall be her separate property . . ." It is to the new power of suing that we at present wish, in the first place, to direct attention. Under the Act of 1870 she can, alone, maintain actions for the recovery of any property included in the class of statutory separate property thereby created; she can also avail herself, as if she were a feme sole, of all the ordinary legal remedies for the protection and security of her said statutory property,—including, for instance, the right to maintain an action against a bank (1) for not presenting for payment a bill of exchange deposited by her with them for that purpose; (2) for not giving notice to the plaintiff of the dishonour of a bill of exchange entrusted to them; or (3) for dishonouring a cheque drawn by her on the defendants, the defendants having at the time funds of hers sufficient to meet it: Summers v. The City Bank, L. R. 9 C. P. 580. But the above quoted clause of section 1 of the new Act, as we read it, not only sets at rest, after this year, all doubts which existed as to the wife's right to retain, as her separate property, all damages recovered by her in those actions which the Act of 1870 enabled her to bring alone, but confers on her the right to sue alone, not only in cases affecting her separate property, but also in actions of tort, for instance to recover damages for any species of injury to her person or to her reputation, &c., and,—at least, whenever such action is brought by her alone,—enable her to keep for her separate use the damages recovered in any case where, as the law at present stands, both the wife herself and her husband suing in her right, must be joined as co-plaintiffs in the action,—such presence of the husband as a co-plaintiff being now attended with this important consequence, that the husband may appropriate to himself alone the sum which is awarded to redress her, as distinguished from his, grievances. Any losses which may have been incurred by the husband himself, by reason of the same circumstances which have given rise to the wife's right of action, will, of course, be for the future, as they have hitherto been, recoverable by him in an action brought in his own right by him alone.

The hardships inflicted by this state of the law on wives who are not maintained and cared for by their husbands, though its mischiefs are too often concealed from the public eye, have long been a crying evil. We are glad to think that the publicity given to this particular aspect of the matter by our note of the case of Lynch and wife v. Cork and Macroom Railway Co. (see 13 Ir. L. T. & S. J. 260), has been in some degree instrumental in bringing about the present change of the law as regards such matters. In that case the action was brought by Eugene and Ellen Lynch, husband and wife, to recover damages for injuries sustained by the latter when travelling on the Cork and Macroom Railway. The defendants had paid into court the sum of £75 in satisfaction of the claim, and notice accepting this amount had been served upon the defendants' solicitor on behalf of Ellen Lynch. It is true that the statement of claim included a claim by the husband in his own right, in respect of the loss of the service of the wife occasioned by the injury; but, if the wife was to be believed, his losses, as regards such service, amounted to nil, because they were not on amicable terms, and lived separately—she being, in fact, according to her account, deserted by him, and supporting herself by letting lodgings, and by working as a dressmaker; and it is to be observed that the court considered this matter immaterial as regarded the question before them, and declined to allow the case to stand over to have the wife's statement on this subject contradicted. Admittedly, no "protection order" under 28 Vict., c. 43, had been obtained; and the application was that the £75 lodged by the defendants in court should be paid out to the female plaintiff. This, in the existing state of the law, the Court of Exchequer was, of course, obliged to refuse; but Baron Dowse, in so refusing, observed that this was a strong case for those who wish to have women legislating for women. We may observe, in passing, that the report of this case, extracted from our columns, was subsequently printed and circulated, along with some other cases involving somewhat similar hardship, by the promoters of the Married Women's Property Act recently passed. A still harder case,—Marshall v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co., tried at the Manchester Assizes, Feb., 1880, before Chief Justice Coleridge,—is there also recorded by them. It seems that the action purported to be brought by a husband and wife to recover damages for injuries sustained by the wife in an accident at the Victoria Station,—a collision, which occurred about a year before. Evidence was given in support of the action, to the effect that the male plaintiff was a green-grocer and fish dealer, of Heywood, and that his said business, before the accident in question, was carried on by his wife, the plaintiff himself being a stone mason. The female plaintiff was, at the time of the trial, still suffering from the effects of the collision. The defence set up was, that the plaintiff, John Marshall, was not the female plaintiff's real husband, her first husband being alive at the time of her second marriage. She had, it appeared, many years ago married a man named Lightfoot, by whom she had a family; but he deserted her, and after an interval of 17 years, during which she neither saw nor heard of the man, she married Marshall, the co-plaintiff. She now heard for the first time that her former husband was still living. Nevertheless, in accordance with the law, the Lord Chief Justice was obliged to direct a nonsuit, thus leaving the poor woman without any remedy for the injuries she had sustained; because, no action could be maintained unless Lightfoot was made a co-plaintiff with her; and, whatever damages she, nominally, recovered, he could walk off with—an appropriation, apparently, highly likely to occur, inasmuch as husbands who so absent themselves are rarely actuated in so doing by the motives of an Enoch Arden. It is satisfactory to think that in less than two months more we shall be relieved from the recurrence of such another parody of justice.

We have not overlooked the fact that it may be plausibly suggested that the comprehensive language of section 1, sub-section 2, purporting to confer upon every wife the substantive right of suing (together with the capacity of being sued) "either in contract or in tort or otherwise in all respects as if she were a feme sole," in addition to the privilege of suing, if she think fit, without joining her husband with her as a co-plaintiff in the now regular way (note the words, "and her husband need not be joined with her as a plaintiff or defendant"), ought to be read as controlled and limited in its operation by the introductory clause of the sub-section, which renders her "capable of entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of and to the extent of her separate property on any contract," a construction which would confine the right to sue so conferred, to actions in some way relating to her existing separate property. But, a careful examination of the whole clause has led us to the conclusion that this limiting clause, commencing with the words "in respect to," &c., refers only to the capacity to contract, and that these words are rather to be contrasted with the words "in all respects," &c., which terminate the clause conferring the right to sue, &c.; (see the quotation at the commencement of this article); while there are other portions of the statute which tend to negative any such restricted construction. Thus, it is clear that section 12 contemplates the possibility of some actions of tort other than those authorised by its own provisions, being brought by a wife suing alone; because it will be seen on reference to this section that, after enacting that every wife shall have in her own name and against all persons whatsoever the same civil remedies for the protection and security of her own separate property as if she were a feme sole, it expressly provides as follows, "but except as aforesaid, no husband or wife shall be entitled to sue the other for a tort." If torts unconnected with her separate property can be sued for by a wife alone, it can only be by virtue of section 1, sub-section 2, and it is only by the adoption of the wide construction thereof, for which we have been contending, that legislative warrant can be found for such a proceeding; and it is furthermore to be observed that such wide construction will apply not only to torts but make sub-section 2 embrace all actions.

We have already directed attention to the fact that the wife is not prohibited by section 1, sub-section 2, from joining her husband with her as a co-plaintiff in any action which she is thereby qualified for the first time to bring alone; similarly, on the other hand, the correlative right thereby conferred on third parties of proceeding against the wife alone does not prevent the third party from suing both husband and wife in the old-fashioned way, and thus making the husband responsible in every case where the action against both jointly can be at present maintained, excepting only in cases of devastavit and of breaches of trust committed by the wife, where the statute (section 24) expressly exempts him from liability. The words of the concluding portion of sub-section 2, providing that "any damages or costs recovered by her in any such action or proceeding shall be her separate property, and any damages or costs recovered against her in any such action or proceeding shall be payable out of her separate estate, and not otherwise," will therefore require serious attention. If our construction of the previous part of this sub-section be the correct one,—namely, that it confers upon every wife an optional right to sue without joining her husband as a co-plaintiff in every case where, according to the present law, the right of action would have survived to her if the husband had died before the bringing of the action,—the question will arise, what is to become of the damages recovered in such an action in case she thinks fit to proceed in the old-fashioned way as a co-plaintiff with her husband? We speak with diffidence upon this point; but so far as we can at present judge, an action brought in this way would not be such an action as is dealt with by the earlier part of the sub-section, and the damages so recovered in it by husband and wife would not therefore come within the terms of the clause which makes damages recovered "by her in any such action or proceeding" her separate property; and it does, accordingly, seem that the old consequences of such a proceeding will continue to follow. This is a matter well worthy of the attention of every pleader; for, if this construction of the clause in question be adopted, it is obvious that other consequences will follow from it, as regards the incidence, &c., of liability for costs, for instance, recovered in certain actions by or against husband and wife. We throw out these suggestions for the consideration of the profession, merely pointing out, in conclusion, that supposing it should be held upon the construction of the above clause, that a wife, by allowing her husband's name to be added as a co-plaintiff in an action for damages where she was competent to sue alone, loses her substantive right to hold as her separate property whatever damages may be therein recovered, it does not necessary follow that the same reasoning will be held applicable to actions for every money demand similarly recoverable by her; because, her separate property in her chooses in action is expressly dealt with by other provisions of the Act (see sections 2, 5, and 24), and of course "things in action" are distinguishable from the rights of action for damages dealt with by section 1, sub-section 2.

THE SETTLED LAND ACT.—II

(Continued from page 534, ante.)

Settlements made before the Act.

We must remind our readers of the extensive meaning of the words "settlement" (sect. 2 (1), "settled land," and "tenant for life," also that the Act applies to settlements made and in operation before the Act (sect. 2 (1), 51), notwithstanding there may be clauses which conflict with, or attempt to exclude the provisions of the Act. The settlement may give powers greater than those in the Act (sect. 56 (1), but where there is a conflict between the settlement and the Act, the Act will prevail (sect. 56 (2)). Of course, in future, the draftsman will be careful so to prepare instruments that there shall be no contradiction; but we have first to consider settlements which were drawn before the Act was passed.

In some settlements, powers of sale, &c., are given to trustees, without requiring the consent of tenant for life. It would be inconvenient to allow both the trustees and the tenant for life to possess independent powers of sale, &c. It is therefore enacted, that notwithstanding the settlement, the consent of the tenant for life shall be essential to sales by the trustees or other persons nominated by the settlement (sect. 56 (2)). We should call attention to the definition of the trustees (sect. 2 (8)). The very important result is that, in the case of settlements coming within the scope of this Act, the trustees cannot by themselves give a good title. This may be very awkward sometimes, especially in case of trusts for sale falling within sect. 68. And it will be necessary for purchasers to see that the person giving consent is really tenant for life. This will sometimes place an additional difficulty in the way of transfer. Where tenant for life is an infant the trustees may exercise the powers (sect. 60), and therefore it would seem that they can make a good title, but it will be necessary to obtain proof that the tenant for life is an infant. In case of a married woman being tenant for life and entitled to her separate use, her consent will suffice; but if she is not so entitled, the consents of both her and her husband will be needed. In case of a lunatic tenant for life the consent of his committee will be needed, and this will require an order made on petition (sect. 62). The Act makes no provision for the case of persons who are, from infirmity or old age or lunacy (not found by any inquisition), unable to exercise the powers of tenant for life. It takes the power from the trustees, and lodges it where it cannot practically be exercised.

The Act does not take away any powers that are exercisable by the trustees with the consent, or at the request, or by the direction of the tenant for life (sect. 56 (1)). It only involves the necessity of his consent in certain cases. "Notwithstanding anything in this Act," tenant for life may not sell the principal mansion-house and demesnes, &c., without consent of the trustees or order of the court (sect. 15). But, although the Act does not empower the tenant for life of his sole authority to make the sale, yet, if the settlement does, it seems the settlement will prevail, and the tenant for life will be able to sell without consent of the trustees. There are also other provisions in the Act which it is specially stated may be varied by the settlement: see sects. 11, 21, (xi.), 22 (2), 23, 39. Sect. 11 enacts that part of mining rent shall be set aside as capital—viz., three-fourths where tenant for life is impeachable for waste as to minerals, and otherwise one-fourth: It would seem that, where tenant for life has power to work or lease mines independently of this Act, he may still do so, and then he would not be bound to set aside the portion of rent (sects. 56, 57). Opened mines may be leased under the ordinary powers to grant leases for twenty-one years, and as ore is quasi rent for mines, a reservation of a proportion of ore has been held good. See David, iii. 512; Sug. Pow. 735, as to mining leases. Working opened mines is not waste (Co. Litt. 54 b; Daly v. Beckett, 24 Beav. 114); it is part of the ordinary rights of a tenant for life (Wms. R. P. 24; Tudor L. C. Conv. 103). As to what is an opened mine, see Elias v. Snowden Slate Quarries Company (38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 371; 4 App. Cas. 454). In the same way tenant for life may, if the settlement empowers him so to do, cut timber independently of sect. 35. As to law with respect to waste and timber, see David, iii. 279; Tudor L. C. Conv. 105. Whether action will lie for permissive waste, see Woodham v. Walker (42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 770; 5 Q. B. Div. 407), and Barnes v. Dowling (44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 809); as to "timber-like trees" and local custom with reference to timber, see Honeywood v. Honeywood (30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 271; L. Rep. 18 Eq. 806). As to ornamental timber, Baker v. Sebright (41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 614; 13 Ch. Div. 179). As to right to money produced by wrongful cutting, see Lovndes v. Norton (6 Ch. Div. 139).

It would seem that, even where a tenant is sans waste by the settlement, he would be unable to cut down timber planted as an "improvement" by means of expenditure of capital moneys—except in proper thinning (sect. 23 (2)).

We conclude this part of the subject by calling attention to the provisions respecting money representing land already in court or in the hands of trustees (sects. 32, 33). They make an important addition to the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts, and S. E. Act, 1877, and the numerous Acts incorporating the former.

We now proceed to consider settlements in general, whether made before or after the Act.

Short Summary of Chief Powers given by the Act to Tenant for Life.

The Act empowers tenant for life to sell, enfranchise, exchange, and partition (sects. 3, 4), to lease, in case of building, for ninety-nine years; for mining, sixty years, for other purposes twenty-one years (sect. 6); to accept surrender, and make new grants (sect. 13); to give licences to copyholders to lease (sect. 14); to dedicate streets, open spaces, &c. (sect. 16); to sell surface and minerals apart (sect. 17); to concur with other persons for the exercise of powers (sect. 19); and to raise money by mortgage (sect. 18); to make conveyances (sect. 20); and to contract for the exercise of his statutory powers (sect. 31). For exception of mansion-house, &c., from powers of sale and leasing, see sect. 15.

Also he can decide whether capital moneys be paid to the trustees or into court (sect. 22 (1), can direct the trustees how to invest or apply it (sect. 22 (2)) within the limits of investment and application allowed by the Act (sect. 21), or settlement (sect. 21 (xi.)), and can prevent alterations in investments, &c. (sect. 22 (4)). He may submit to the trustees or the court, as the case may require, a scheme for expending the money on improvements (sect. 26 (1), a long list of which is given (sect. 25): A certificate of land commissioners, engineer, or surveyor, or an order of the court, is necessary (sect. 26). The tenant for life cannot, of his sole authority, insist on the money being spent on improvements, he can only initiate proceedings, and, after he has received sanction, execute them (sect. 29), or concur with others in their execution (sects. 27, 19). He also has certain powers with respect to moneys in court, or with the trustees, which are liable to be laid out in purchase of land (sects. 32, 33). His powers are confirmed by sect. 56. They may be enlarged but not restricted (sects. 56, 57), and cannot be aliened or released (sect. 50), or their exercise prohibited (sect. 51), or render him liable to forfeiture (sect. 52). The rights, however, of assignees and mortgagees of the estate of tenant for life are practically protected by sect. 50, sub-sects. (3) and (4). The following powers are given to tenant for life with consent of court.

He may sell and let mansion-house and demesnes, &c. (sect. 15), also sell settled chattels and purchase others (sect. 37 (3)), may make leases in perpetuity, or otherwise beyond the statutory limits, or with certain other variations from the statutory requirements (sect. 10), may cut timber and appropriate one-fourth of the proceeds although he is impeachable for waste (sect. 35).

The court is the Chancery Division, and applications are to be made by petition or summons (sect. 46). The Palatine Court of Lancaster (sect. 46 (3)) has concurrent jurisdiction as to land in the County Palatine, and the County Court as to property not exceeding £30 annual rateable value, or £500 capital value. See sect. 46 (10) for the exact limits and details of jurisdiction of County Courts.

With the consent of the trustees tenant for life may sell and let mansion-house, &c. (sect. 15), and cut timber, although he is impeachable for waste (sect. 35).

Consent of tenant for life is necessary to the exercise by trustees "of any power conferred by the settlement exercisable for any purpose provided for in this Act" (sect. 56 (2)).

(To be continued.)

RETIREMENT OF MR. BRYAN GALLWEY, SESSIONAL CROWN SOLICITOR.

At the Quarter Sessions which have just concluded at Skibbereen the following tribute was paid to an old and valued public servant, Mr. B. Gallwey, who held the office of Sessional Crown Solicitor for the West Riding, Co. Cork, for a period of nearly fifty years.

Mr. Downes, solicitor, said: Before addressing the grand jury, he had to ask his worship's permission to speak a few words upon an occurrence which had taken place there, and the reference to which had, he was glad to say, in one respect, and sorry in another, fallen to his lot; because it was reserved for this the last, and if he might not be deemed egotistical in saying it, the most important town in the circuit. He alluded to the retirement from amongst them of one who is remembered, and will long be remembered here with esteem, and he might say with affection, Mr. Bryan Gallwey, their late Crown Solicitor; and he (Mr. Downes) felt sure that while assuming only to speak for himself and the members of his profession, he would be echoing the feelings of every magistrate, every juror, and every member of the community around him, when he stated it was with a genuine and heartfelt regret they now marked the absence of the genial and kindly face, and stood no longer in the cheery and enlivening presence of their old and long-tried friend. He had been a central figure amongst them, and in many respects a remarkable one. For a period of time—so long that it spans the greater portion of that which is generally allotted to the life of man—he had performed the responsible and onerous duties of his office with such zeal and loyalty to his Queen on the one hand, and with such even-handed impartiality to his fellow-men on the other, as to earn the esteem and regard of all creeds and classes, and so as to leave behind him nothing but the white and stainless record of an honoured and honourable life. He (Mr. Downes) felt, indeed, knowing him as he did, that it was not with him a difficult task to maintain that unsullied position; for he ever brought to the performance of his duties, and to the practice generally of a profession which he adorned, the instincts of an Irish gentleman, of the best and purest type, and all the virtues of a thorough and practical Christian. Very lately, indeed, they had witnessed, when he last stood amongst them, how much did these virtues stand by him in his need, when he was visited with domestic affliction, so sudden and so severe that they would have crushed many a younger and stronger man. He (Mr. Downes) was glad to know, as, indeed, they all were, that the authorities had recognised in a fitting and substantial manner his (Mr. Galloway's) long and faithful services; and he had only to say now, in conclusion, that it was not the interim of his profession to record merely, in his (Mr. Downes's) feeble and transitory words, the expression of their affection and regard, but to present him, in due time, with an address, which he was sure everybody would feel it a privilege and a pleasure to join in.

Mr. SOMERS PAYNE, barrister-at-law, on behalf of his branch of the profession, endorsed all that had been so well said by Mr. Downes. He knew Mr. Galloway for many years, in his public capacity, and it could be said of him that he never made an enemy in his life. Everyone that knew him regarded him with feelings of the warmest respect and esteem.

The CHAIRMAN said on his own behalf, and that of the magistrates, he fully concurred in the high opinion entertained of Mr. Bryan Galloway, as so aptly, happily, and eloquently expressed by Mr. Downes. They heard with sincere pleasure that he would not be allowed to retire from his office without receiving from his brethren and well wishers a mark of regard for his high character, which would afterwards be a source of gratification to him; and he need not add that the members of the Bench would cordially co-operate in any such demonstration. He had known Mr. Galloway for twelve years, in his private and public capacity, and without hesitation, he could say, that it was impossible to have a more zealous or efficient public officer. He always conducted the criminal business with great care, judgment, ability, and discretion. To the prisoner he was always fair—more than fair—when the circumstances of the case admitted of such leniency. To the Bench his great experience and practical knowledge afforded valuable assistance, while with his brethren in the profession, his cordial good nature and unvarying good humour, rendered him a universal favourite. His coming amongst them was hailed with pleasure, and his departure was a source of genuine regret. In the keen contests of forensic struggles, which must at times arise, he invariably threw oil on the troubled waters, and when the case was over he succeeded in preserving the friendliest relations on both sides.

A new metrical translation of the Hebrew Psalter, "commonly called the Psalms of David," by Mr. Digby Seymour, Q.C., the Recorder of Newcastle, is announced.

ARREARS OF RENT (IRELAND) ACT, 1882.

The following Rule respecting procedure under the Arrears Act, section 1, sub-section 5, has been made:—

"When a tenant, for the purpose of complying with the requirements of the Arrears of Rent (Ireland) Act, 1882, has tendered to his landlord or the landlord's agent, or the person to whom the rent is usually paid on account of the landlord or his agent, any amount in alleged payment or satisfaction of the year's rent required to be paid or satisfied under the said Act, and such sum had been refused, the tenant may remit by post, to W. L. Micks, the Comptroller of Arrears, such sum as he may deem necessary to discharge or satisfy such year's rent, accompanied by an affidavit, stating the time at which and the persons to and by whom such tender was made and refused respectively, and such affidavit may be in the form U."

The following Instructions for the guidance of Investigators at local inquiries have been issued:—

I. The duty of Investigators at local inquiries is to take evidence and to report whether in their judgment such applications as shall be referred to them do, or do not, comply with the preliminary and other conditions of the Act, and with the requirements of the rules.

II. Speaking generally, two classes of cases will be sent for local investigation, contentious, that is, applications which are not joint, but are made by a landlord or a tenant singly; and non-contentious, that is to say, where the application, although made by a landlord and a tenant jointly, may for some special reason be referred to an Investigator for local inquiry.

III. As contentious applications in Form E or F are unsupported by affidavits, it is necessary that proof should be given on oath of the statements put forward in the application. The parties, including the Treasury, may be represented by counsel or solicitors. The Investigator, in examining the applicant and the witnesses, will put such questions as shall seem most likely to test the truth of the statements in the application. All witnesses are subject to cross-examination.

IV. Similarly, in the non-contentious applications in Form B or O that are referred for local inquiry, evidence will be taken with a view to the explanation or confirmation of such portions of the affidavit or application as appear to the Investigator to require confirmatory evidence. It will be borne in mind that so-called contentious cases may be only nominally contentious, for the other party may not appear or he may not oppose the application.

V. Where the tenant is described in receipts for rent or in estate books as "Reps. of—," the Investigator need not require the production of letters of administration or other like evidence of the devolution of the tenancy: it will be sufficient to require proof that the applicant is the bona fide occupant of the farm who pays the rent and taxes.

VI. Where opposition is made by a landlord the real questions at issue, apart from objections to informalities in procedure, will probably be—(1.) Whether the Land Law Act applies to the holding; (2.) Whether the rent for "the year expiring as aforesaid" has been satisfied; (3.) Whether the tenant is unable within the meaning of the Act to discharge the antecedent arrears of rent.

VII. Where the tenant is out of the country, and his return before the end of the year is uncertain, or where the succession to the holding is unsettled, the application may, and probably will, be made by the landlord in Form F, which is suited to such cases.

VIII. In non-contentious cases, or in cases which, though nominally contentious, are really non-contentious, evidence must specially be taken as to—(1.) The application of the Land Law Act to the holding; (2.) The annual amount of the Poor Law Valuation; (3.) The possession of other holdings by the tenant; (4.) The existence of antecedent arrears; (5.) The annual rent in 1880 and 1881 respectively; (6.) The ability or inability of the tenant to pay the antecedent arrears.

IX. In the Report in Form H the Investigator has to answer certain inquiries.

X. Whether the Land Law Act applies to the holding must be decided upon the evidence, having regard to the 8rd section of the Arrears Act, applying to leaseholders, and to the 57th and 58th sections of the Land Law Act.

XI. The production of the receipt for the poor rate payable in respect of the holding may be accepted as sufficient prima facie proof as to the annual valuation of the holding, or the certificate of the Clerk of the union may be required. When the rent is very small the statement of the applicant as to the valuation may be sufficient.

XII. It should be ascertained whether the tenant is possessed of more than one holding, and, if he is, the total valuation of the holdings should be inquired into. The oath of the tenant, if uncontradicted, will be sufficient.

XIII. Whether the rent for the year expiring as aforesaid has been satisfied, and whether any sum is due in respect of antecedent arrears of rent are facts to be proved in evidence. The Investigator may require the production of the estate books. A receipt in writing is not essential as proof of the payment of rent.

XIV. In the case of joint applications it is generally to be assumed that the saleable value of the tenancy may be excluded from consideration, unless the value is so large as in itself to afford the means of easily raising the amount necessary for clearing off arrears of rent.

XV. In the case of contentious applications it would be impossible to set forth the circumstances under which it would be "reasonable" to take the saleable value of the tenancy into consideration. The Commissioners must in this rely very much upon the intelligence and discretion of the Investigators. The views of the Commissioners may, however, to some extent be stated generally.

XVI. It would not be "reasonable" to take the saleable value of the tenancy into consideration, if, as a result of the refusal of the application, the tenant would be obliged to encumber the value of his tenancy to an extent that might fairly be considered as a step likely to lead to the eventual loss of his holding, or to an extent that would cripple him in the proper management of his farm.

XVII. Nor would it, as a general rule, be "reasonable" to take the value of the tenancy into consideration if the value of the property and effects of the tenant appears to be utterly inadequate to the proper management of the farm.

XVIII. Again, it would not be "reasonable" to require the tenant to discharge his liability to rent by incurring a liability of a different kind to such an extent as to endanger the security of his holding, or so as to make impracticable proper cultivation.

XIX. In the case of very small holdings it would appear almost impossible that the saleable value could reasonably be taken into consideration, for it is most unlikely that any dealings could take place with respect to the tenant-right short of an absolute transfer—that is, the loss of the holding.

XX. In answering query No. 6 it is not required that you should state what, in your opinion, the saleable value of the tenancy amounts to in money, but it will be sufficient that the Investigator should state whether, in his opinion, the saleable value is such as should be taken into account in estimating the tenant's ability to pay under the special circumstances of the case.

XXI. In order to reply satisfactorily to the question as to the ability of the tenant to discharge the antecedent arrears of rent you must consider the entire facts of the case, including the amount of the tenant's liabilities other than rent up to and including the last gale day of the year 1881. Where evidence of any such liabilities is laid before you, when regarding those liabilities, it ought to be considered whether the property and effects, when they appear to be of substantial value, are nevertheless more than what may be deemed necessary for the proper and workmanlike treatment of the farm.

XXII. It is desirable that in every case the rent of the years 1880 and 1881 respectively should be ascertained.

XXIII. As a general rule the report will be silent as to costs, but, under special circumstances, the Investigator will, if he think it just, report as to costs. In this matter Investigators will be guided by Rule 28.

XXIV. The Investigator should report that the preliminary and other conditions have or have not been complied with: he need not, except in difficult cases, where he considers it necessary, reserve questions for the determination of the Commissioners. He should report simply either for or against the application, according to his judgment, it being open to any party who objects to show cause against the Conditional Order consequent on the report.

XXV. Short notes of the evidence in each case should be taken in the book provided for the purpose.

XXVI. The Land Commissioners in conclusion desire to impress most strongly upon the Investigators that they should to the very best of their ability and intelligence endeavour to ascertain what claims come bona fide within the Act, and to frustrate any which they may deem fraudulent or unfounded.

The following Instructions for the guidance of Office Investigators have been issued:—

I. The duty imposed upon Office Investigators is to examine and certify whether in their judgment joint applications in Form B or C comply with the requirements of the Rules and with the preliminary and other conditions of the Act; or whether, on the other hand, sufficient grounds exist to make it necessary that a local investigation should take place for inquiries as to the ability or inability of the tenant to pay his arrears of rent without loss of his holding or deprivation of the means necessary for the cultivation thereof.

II. The several statements in the application, being sworn to by both parties, may be accepted by the Investigators as proved, except so far as they regard the ability of the tenant to pay the antecedent arrear. The ability to pay, being a conclusion to be drawn from all the facts of the case, is to be considered by the Investigator when he has satisfied himself of the existence of the other conditions required by the Act. The amount of liability resting on the tenant for rent or otherwise, up to the date of the investigation is to be borne in mind.

III. If it appears from the sworn application that the preliminary and other conditions exist, and that there are not any reasons to be inferred from the facts, as stated, for concluding that the tenant is able to discharge his antecedent arrear, the Office Investigator will report accordingly that an Order for payment of the proper proportion of the arrear should be made to or for the benefit of the landlord.

IV. On the other hand, if the facts of the case lead the Investigator to believe that the tenant is able to pay his arrear without loss of his holding or deprivation of the means necessary for the cultivation thereof, he will report accordingly, so that the application may be referred for judicial investigation.

V. In making his report, whether approving of the application, or recommending a local inquiry, an Investigator will be guided in the first place by the existence or non-existence of the requisite conditions of fact, and secondly, as an inference therefrom, by the ability or inability of the tenant to discharge the arrear.

VI. The Land Commissioners feel, owing to the impossibility of issuing instructions comprehensive enough to embrace the complex cases which are certain to arise, that they must leave largely to the discretion of Investigators the duty of reporting upon questions arising out of applications.

VII. When, however, a case comes up for investigation, about which any doubt is felt, it will be the duty of the Investigator to bring it under the notice of the Comptroller, who will, if he thinks it necessary, obtain the directions of the Commissioners.

VIII. The conditions above referred to, the existence, non-existence, or co-existence of which will determine the Office Investigator in making his report are:

1. The application of the Land Act to the holding.

NOTE.—This may generally be assumed unless something exists in the documents to show that the holding is not within the Act.

2. The valuation of the holding being not over £30 a year.
3. The valuation of the holding in conjunction with any other holding that may be in the occupation of the tenant, being not more than £30 a year.
4. The valuation of the holding, if not valued separately, being, in proportion to the amount of the rent, valued at not more than £30 a year.
5. The existence of antecedent arrears of rent.
6. The inability of the tenant to discharge such antecedent arrears without the loss of his holding, or without deprivation of the means necessary for the cultivation of his holding.
7. The saleable value of the tenant's interest.

NOTE.—It would not be "reasonable," in the case of joint applications, to take the saleable value of the tenant's holding into consideration, unless the property and effects of the tenant are, after allowing for liabilities, sufficient to provide for the cultivation of the holding. In the case of joint applications it is generally to be assumed that the saleable value of the tenancy may be excluded from consideration unless the value is so large as in itself to afford the means of easily raising the amount necessary for clearing off all arrears of rent.

8. The value of his property and effects.
9. The amount of his liabilities other than rent up to and including the last gale day of the year 1881.

NOTE.—Nos. 8 and 9 should be considered carefully in order that an opinion may be formed whether the property and effects, when they appear to be of substantial value, are more than what ought to be considered necessary for the proper and workmanlike treatment of the farm.

IX. Office Investigators will, if they find that the preliminary and other conditions of the Act exist, ascertain what amount is payable to or for the benefit of the landlord in respect of each holding.

X. In the case of applications in Form B, one Office Investigator will certify as to the existence or non-existence of the necessary conditions. If he approves of the application he will proceed to ascertain and state the amount which is payable to or for the benefit of the landlord. Another Office Investigator will, with a view to securing accuracy in the calculations, verify the report of the first Investigator as regards the amount payable. The reports are to be written in red ink on the face of the application—Ex. gr.:

(1.) Application approved.

A. B. (Initials of Investigator.)
27/9/82. (Date.)

(2.) £ : payable.
A. B. (Initials of Investigator.)
27/9/82. (Date.)

C. D. (Initials of Investigator.)
28/9/82. (Date.)

XI. The instructions in the foregoing paragraph apply to applications in Form B. In the case of applications in Form C, a similar course will be adopted, except that the report as to the existence or non-existence of the necessary conditions will be written opposite to the signature of each tenant at the foot of the tenant's affidavit. The amount payable is to be entered in the last column of the schedule within Form C, headed "Amount Ordered to be Paid," and such amount is to be ascertained, examined, and initialled by two Office Investigators as in the case of applications in Form B.

XII. The Land Commissioners in conclusion desire to impress most strongly upon the Investigators that they should, to the very best of their ability and intelligence, endeavour to ascertain what claims come bona fide within the Act, and to frustrate any which they may deem fraudulent or unfounded.

THE VALUE OF CHILDREN.

We are not going to consider the value of babies as alarm clocks for arousing the male parent; nor as teachers of patience—the virtue, not the opera; nor as gainers of prizes at country fairs. Nor are we going to quote their market value south of Mason and Dixie's line in the days before the war; nor will we dilate upon the bounties offered by that paternal monarch, Louis XIV., for the production of children in New France, although he, in council, passed a decree, saying, "that in future all the inhabitants of the country of Canada who shall have living children to the number of ten, born in lawful wedlock, . . . shall each be paid out of the money sent by his majesty to the said country a pension of 300 livres a year, and those who have twelve children, a pension of 400 livres." Rich and poor were alike within the purview of this ordinance, whereas before Colbert's reward of 1,200 livres for those who had fifteen children, and 800 to those who had ten, was intended specially for the better class.

But we are about to refer to some of those cases where juries and judges have been called upon to estimate the sums that will compensate for injuries arising from the negligence of others to life or limb of infants, and the value of the services of which the parents of these injured innocents have been deprived by such hurts. This is a subject which must be replete with interest to every pater familias in humble circumstances and how many a solicitor of the High Court of Justice is so situated!

First, let us look at the value of children piece-meal, or rather what persons injuring portions of their little human forms divine have had to pay for their negligences and ignorances. A boy, seven years old was kicked by a horse, and had his eye, skull, and brain so badly hurt that the witnesses at the trial considered he would never be able to earn his own living; and they were right, for the poor little chap died nine days after the trial. The jury gave him £150 as a slight compensation; the owner of the horse not liking to pay that sum applied for a new trial, but the Court did not consider the damages excessive, and would not interfere: Kramer v. Waymark, L. R., 1 Ex. 241.

A child of two years was wandering about a railway track when it was struck by an iron horse, and was so injured that a leg and a hand were lost. The jury, when asked to assess the damages, gave $1,800 as a recompense: "Redfield on Railways," vol. 2, p. 248, n. Surely this little trot could not have brought more gain to its parents if it had been actually born with the legendary silver spoon in its mouth. This valuable child dwelt in Connecticut.

Out in Missouri a boy lost his hand through a defect in a moulding machine, and upon suing the owner, who was also his employer, he recovered $1,000. The Court sustained the verdict: M'Millan v. Union Press-Buck Works, 6 Mo. App. 434. Little Mangan, an English boy, had nothing like the same good fortune, although his misfortune was very similar. He was a small school-boy of four summers, and when passing homewards one day was induced, by a brother of the more mature age of seven, to put his fingers into a machine for crushing oil-cake that was standing unguarded beside the road. Another mischievous little wretch turned the handle and round went the wheels; the chubby fingers were seized and badly crushed, so that three of them had to be amputated. The owner of the machine was sued for negligence in allowing it to stand so exposed, and at the trial the sight of the fingerless and maimed little hand could only induce the twelve honest-hearted jurors to give a verdict of £10 in favour of the boy. Even this pittance Mangan was not able to get because the Court held that the defendant was not liable for the injury, as it was caused by the act of the plaintiff and the boy who turned the handle: Mangan v. Atherton, 4 H. & C. 388; L. R. 1 Ex. 289.

Another little boy in England, aged five years, was equally unfortunate. Being too young to take care of himself his granny went with him to Velvet Hall Station, to take the train to Berwick-upon-Tweed. After getting their tickets, on crossing a track they were struck by a freight train, the old lady was killed and the child severely injured. An action was brought for these injuries to the lad, and the jury awarded £20. The Court, however, set aside the verdict as the jury had found that the grandmother had been guilty of negligence, without which the accident could not have happened; and the Court considered that the infant was so identified with the grandmother that the action could not be maintained, her carelessness being a sufficient answer to the claim: Waite v. N. E. Ry., El. Bl. & El. 719.

In Mississippi a man had to pay $100 for merely whipping a child of five, who had, however, assaulted in a violent and brutal manner (so saith the reporter) the whipper's only child an infant of eighteen months: Lovell v. M'Donald, 58 Miss. 251. In Massachusetts a Miss of thirteen winters recovered damages to the extent of $5,000 against a railway company for an injury to an arm; and then when she was of age her father sued the company for the loss occasioned by the selfsame accident, of her services during minority, and he obtained $500 to compensate himself wherewith: Wilton v. Middlesex Ry., 125 Mass. 180. The gentler sex is highly prized in New England, judging by this and the Connecticut case. Boys, however, at least in the West, are deemed mere money-making machines. Old Miller's boy of nineteen, lost his arm through the negligence of a railway company, and the father recovered $2,000 for the value of the son's services until he came of age, and for the expense of medical attendance and nursing in consequence of the injury: Houston, &c., Railway v. Miller, 49 Tex. 322.

And now let us consider some of the amounts that have had to be paid where the wrong has caused the death of the child. In such case the rule is that damages of a pecuniary nature must be shown; the damages are not to be given merely for the loss of a legal right, but should be calculated with reference to a reasonable expectation of a pecuniary benefit, as of right or otherwise, from the continuance of the life of the lost one: Franklin v. S. E. Railway, 8 H. & N. 211; Walton v. S. E. Railway, 4 C. B., N. S. 296. In fact, what is laid down by the decisions is, that there must have been a reasonable expectation of pecuniary advantage to the parent from the life of the deceased: Field, J., Heatherington v. N. E. Railway, L. R. 11 Q. B. D. 160. Still it was held, in a case where a healthy boy of six years old was killed, that absence of proof of any special money damage flowing from the death of the child will not justify a non-suit, nor a direction on the part of the judge to the jury to find nominal damages only: Gorham v. N. Y. C., 28 Hun. (N. Y.) 449. The "necessary injury" to a parent by the negligent killing of a child, and for which he is to be compensated, comprises the loss of the service of the child during minority, the costs of nursing, medical attendance and the funeral expenses: Rain v. St Louis: &c., Railway, 71 Mo. 164. In England doubts have been suggested as to whether damages are obtainable to compensate for the loss of the services of a child so young as to be unable to earn anything: Bramhill v. Lee, 29 L. T. 11. But in the United States the doctrine has been well settled. In Hill v. Forth second Street Railway, 47 N. Y. 817, where a boy of three years and two months had been killed, and the jury had given a verdict for $1,000, the Court of Appeal sustained it, saying, "It was within the province of the jury, who had before them the parents, their position in life, the occupation of the father, and the age and sex of the child, to form an estimate of the damages with reference to the pecuniary injury, present and prospective, resulting to the next of kin. Except in very rare instances it would be impracticable to furnish direct evidence of any specific loss occasioned by the death of a child of such tender years, and to hold that without such proof the plaintiff could not recover, would in effect render the statute nugatory in most cases of this description. It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that there is a pecuniary damage in such a case, or that the expense of maintaining and educating the child would necessarily exceed any pecuniary advantage which the parents could have derived from his services had he lived. These calculations are for the jury." As Eliza Hooghkirk, a healthy and bright child of six, was being driven by her father, on a waggon, into Albany, the waggon was struck by a locomotive and substantially destroyed; all the inmates were injured, but the child was killed. The jury was particularly instructed that in estimating the damages they should be strictly confined to the pecuniary injuries resulting from such death to the next of kin of the deceased—that the pain and shock to the feelings of the parents, caused by the death of their daughter, could not in any way be considered, and that in fixing such damages they should be guided by what, in their honest judgment, they should deem a fair and just compensation for the pecuniary injuries resulting from such death, which compensation, however, could not, according to the statute, exceed $5,000. After this charge the jury awarded $6,000, and the Court was asked to set the verdict aside as excessive, but declined to interfere, saying, that as a matter of law it is impossible for any Court to say that the actual "pecuniary injuries" resulting from the death of the infant might not be $5,000. Possibly the probabilities are against it, but the statute in this region of conjecture has committed the formation of an opinion to a jury upon whose discretion the only limitation is the maximum which is thereby allowed. The discharge of such duty, expressly confided to a jury by statute, necessarily, in a case which presents reasonable grounds of conjecture, involves a wide discretion, and unless the evidence shows a plain error the verdict cannot be disturbed.

Hetty Downie, a girl of the age of about seven years, was run over by the cars of the New York and Harlem River Company, and killed. She lived with her mother. On the trial anon—suit was asked for on the ground, amongst others, "that there was no proof of any pecuniary or special damages sustained by the plaintiff or by the next of kin." The motion was overruled, and the plaintiff had a verdict of $1,800. The Court of Appeal said:—It is not required, to sustain the action, that there should be proof of actual pecuniary loss. The damages are to be assessed by the jury with reference to the pecuniary injuries sustained by the next of kin in consequence of such death. This is not the actual present loss which the death produces, and which could be proven, but prospective losses also. They may compensate for "pecuniary injuries," present and prospective: Oldfield v. N. Y. & H. R. Railway, 14 N. Y. 810. In M'Govern v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R., 87 N. Y. 417, the action being for the death of a boy eight years of age and the recovery, $2,500, the Court held that the jury could estimate the whole damages sustained by the father from the death, as well as those proceeding from the loss of services during minority as those after, and would not interfere.

On the other hand, in Arkansas, the Court considered that $4,500 was an excessive sum for a railway company to pay to a mother for the loss of the services of a child five years old, through the negligence of the company: Little Rock, &c., Railway v. Barker, 88 Ark. 850. In this case it was decided that no compensation was to be given to the dead infant's parent for the loss of the companionship of the child. In Indiana, in one case, a father made no claim for the loss of his child's future services, and gave no evidence to show his loss; so, although the jury gave him $1,800 therefor upon the death of his child, the Court considered it excessive: Penn Railroad v. Lilly, 73 Ind. 252. The amounts awarded in England have been by no means as great as in America. In one case where an action was brought by a father, who was a working mason, for injury resulting from the death of his son, a lad of fourteen, who had been earning four shillings a week, but at the time of his death was out of employment, the jury found a verdict with £20 damages. A motion was made to set it aside as excessive, but the Court held that the father was entitled to retain the amount: Duckworth v. Johnston, 4 H. & N. 653. We quite agree with Martin, B., when he says, "If damages are to be given, I think that £20 is not too much."—Canada Law Journal.

FRAUDULENT AGENTS.

The law as to the punishment of trustees, bankers, and agents of all kinds, who fraudulently misappropriate the moneys and property of their beneficiaries, has, almost within the memory of the present generation, undergone a great change. The old doctrine was that when a trustee appropriated the fund he had in charge it was deemed little more than a mere matter of account which the Court of Chancery alone could unravel. But by degrees, and after a long experience of the ineffective control thereby secured, it became apparent that some kind of criminal punishment was required, and one much more deterrent than an interminable Chancery suit. And when the criminal laws were consolidated and revised about a quarter of a century ago, there were two distinct sections in the Larceny Act which dealt with those cases. It seems, however, that these sections are not very complete, and when the long talked-of code makes its appearance some further improvements may be expected on this subject.

The 75th section of the Act 24 & 25 Vict., c. 96, is very long. It says in effect that whosoever having been intrusted as a banker, merchant, broker, attorney, or other agent, with any money or security for the payment of money, with any direction in writing to apply, pay, or deliver such money or security or any part thereof, or the proceeds, for any purpose, shall in violation of good faith, and contrary to the direction, convert to his own use or benefit, or the use of any other person, such money: and whosoever when intrusted in the same way with any chattel or valuable security shall sell, negotiate, transfer, pledge, or convert to his own use without any authority to do any of these things, and contrary to the object or purpose of such chattel or security, or the proceeds, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and be liable to be kept in penal servitude for seven years. And there was a saving in favour of bankers and others from enforcing their legal rights in reference to these funds.

The 76th section is shorter, and enacts that whosoever being a banker, merchant, broker, attorney, or agent, and being intrusted with the property of any other person for safe custody, shall with intent to defraud, sell, negotiate, transfer, pledge, or in any manner convert or appropriate the same or any part thereof to or for his own use or benefit, or the use or benefit of any person other than the person by whom he was so intrusted, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and being convicted thereof shall be liable at the discretion of the court to any of the punishments which the court may award as hereinbefore last-mentioned.

The construction and application of these sections to the common cases of agents who act in a fraudulent manner have caused some difficulty owing to the great variety of circumstances in the mutual relations of the parties. Sometimes it has been extremely difficult to fulfil the description of the offence, owing to there being no written instructions as to some investment, though it might be clearly proved otherwise, that the instructions were in substance violated. Stockbrokers and solicitors seem to have been the classes as to whom the cases have arisen. The evidence of a fraudulent intention has been sometimes defective or ambiguous, and as might be supposed acquittals have occurred where there was very strong evidence that something approaching to the offence had actually occurred. One or two of these cases will illustrate the kind of difficulty that is so frequently found, and the defects in the present statute.

In R. v. Cooper, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 123, the defendant, an attorney, was indicted under the 75th and 76th sections for misappropriating certain moneys intrusted to him. A Mr. Whitaker, before 1867, got a loan of £50 from Mr. Dewsbury, on a deposit of title deeds to some leasehold property. Whitaker wanted a further loan, and the defendant obtained for him £140 from Miss Taylor, and gave a mortgage deed for the same to her brother-in-law who acted for her. The defendant was, out of the money so received from her, to pay off Dewsbury and pay over the balance to Whitaker. But the defendant did not pay off Dewsbury, and kept the £60, paying interest thereon without Whitaker's knowledge, and he also paid to the mortgages the interest on the £140 without the knowledge of Whitaker, who did not know for some time how much had been borrowed from Miss Taylor. On a calculation afterwards it was found that the defendant had about £70, or at least £40 of Whitaker's in his possession. The judge told the jury that if the defendant had kept a substantial part of the £140 fraudulently they should find him guilty, which they did. A case was stated for the Court of Crown Cases Reserved, and it appeared that there had been no directions in writing to the defendant to apply the money or the proceeds. He was, however, intrusted with the mortgage deed to hand over on receipt of the mortgage money, and he kept a substantial part of the £140 contrary to the purpose of the deed, and converted it to his own use. The questions were whether this conduct came within either of the two sections. The court, which included Blackburn, J., and Lush, J., quashed the conviction. The indictment under section 76 was said to be out of the question, because there had been no improper dealing with any property intrusted for safe custody. And the 75th section did not hit him either. He did part of the business rightly, namely, in preparing the mortgage deed, recovering the mortgage money, and handing over the deed. Though he misappropriated part of the money, yet there was no direction in writing so as to satisfy the first part of section 75. And he did not fall within the latter part because it only applied where property was intrusted without any authority to sell or deal with it in the other ways mentioned, and where it was improperly sold or misappropriated.

In a case of R. v. Fullager, 14 Cox, C. C. 870, the defendant was a solicitor, and charged on an indictment under both the sections of the statute with having fraudulently converted a sum of £2,500. He was the family solicitor of Mary Mockett, and was intrusted by her with the sum mentioned, and had speculated with it and lost it. The money was part of the residuary estate of the lady's father, who bequeathed it to trustees to invest on mortgage, and after being so invested it came again into the hands of the solicitor. On receipt of the money the defendant wrote to the prosecutrix as follows: "The money was paid on Saturday last—£2,500 and interest. Let me know how you would like to have the sum invested—whether in the funds or on mortgage. I can get you four per cent. on a good security but not more. More than four per cent. is not to be obtained upon such securities as trustees would be justified in investing." The lady replied: "I will consult about the money and let you know. I do not wish it placed in the funds. I hope it will be well secured this time." She went about a fortnight afterwards and saw the defendant at his office, when he told her that he had placed the money on mortgage on a large estate at Worth, on a first mortgage, representing in answer to a question put by her that a deed then lying on the table, but which she did not further look at, was the mortgage deed. All this was wholly untrue, for the money had been then applied to the defendant's own purposes. He paid, however, what he called the interest regularly from 1872 to 1878, making, from time to time, excuses for not producing the mortgage deed, which was repeatedly asked for. At last another solicitor was employed, and an order of the court was obtained for the delivery of the deed, when the defendant confessed the real state of things, and acknowledged that he had made away with the money.

At the trial of the case, Cockburn, C.J., said that he had no doubt of the moral guilt, and directed a verdict of guilty, and sentenced the defendant to five years' penal servitude; but he doubted whether the case came within the first enactment of the 75th section by reason of the absence of any affirmative written direction as to the application of the money, or within the 76th section by reason of the latter being applicable to securities alone and not to money. He, therefore, respited the sentence, and submitted the case for the opinion of the Court for Crown Cases Reserved. It was then contended that the defendant was not intrusted with property for safe custody, but merely intrusted with money for investment. But the court, after a little consideration, came to the conclusion that the defendant was intrusted with property for safe custody, and so came within the 76th section. The court seem to think that there was not a sufficient direction in writing for investment according to the 75th section. The defendant was, therefore, held to be rightly convicted.

The recent case of Reg. v. Newman, J. P., p. 612, is another illustration of the difficulties of these sections. The defendant, a solicitor, was indicted under the 76th section. He was alleged to have been intrusted by Thomas Dawkins with property, to wit, sums of money amounting to £14,144 for safe custody, and to have unlawfully and with intent to defraud converted and appropriated the same property to his own use and benefit. Another count alleged that he appropriated it to the use of some other person, other than the person by whom he was intrusted. It appeared that at various times during the lifetime of Dawkins, since deceased, the defendant had been intrusted, as his solicitor, with sums of money to invest on mortgages. The defendant always represented that he had acted according to his instructions, and that the proper mortgages had been duly effected from time to time, and that the moneys intrusted to him were outstanding upon such mortgages, and he paid over from time to time sums for interest supposed to be received from the mortgages. It was discovered after the death of Dawkins by his trustees, and it was established at the trial, that the said mortgages were wholly fictitious and non-existent, and that the defendant, instead of investing the money intrusted to him upon such mortgages, had fraudulently and improperly appropriated the money to his own use. The defendant's counsel contended that there was no evidence of any money being intrusted for safe custody, but merely to be invested. The judge, however, thought there was evidence that the money was intrusted for safe custody, and until an investment should be effected. A verdict of guilty was entered, but a case was submitted for the opinion of the Court for Crown Cases Reserved.

The court, after consideration, came to the conclusion that the facts did not amount to evidence that the defendant was intrusted with any specified money for safe custody. He was evidently in possession of money which he was to invest, but until invested the money was and apparently might be without impropriety mixed with his own in the bank, or, at least, there was no evidence to the contrary. The result was that the court was obliged very reluctantly to quash the conviction, and thereby a very clear case of wrongdoing escaped any adequate punishment.—Justice of the Peace.

SERVICE OF WRITS IN DISTURBED DISTRICTS.

An order of the Lord Lieutenant and Privy Council printed in the Dublin Gazette of Nov. 7th, with the concurrence of the majority of the judges, directs that from and after the 9th day of November, 1882, in all cases where any defendant named in any writ of summons issuing out of any Division of the High Court of Justice in Ireland shall reside within any district for the time being proclaimed under sections 8, 11, 12, and 14 of "The Prevention of Crime (Ireland) Act, 1882," or any one or more of the said sections—such place of residence not being within a county of a city, or county of a town, service of such writ on such defendant by sending to him a copy of such writ, and a copy of this order by letter through the Post Office, addressed to him at his usual residence, and by posting a copy of such writ at the police station nearest to his said residence—shall be good and sufficient service of such writ, provided that the plaintiff or plaintiffs named in such writ of summons, or one of them, or his or their attorney, shall make and cause to be filed in the Division out of which such writ shall have issued, an affidavit stating the parish and barony in which the defendant resides, and that such place of residence is within a district which has been and is proclaimed as aforesaid, and that the above particulars as to service have been duly observed and performed. The time limited for the appearance of the defendant to any writ served under this rule shall be twelve days after the service thereof.

CALLS TO THE OUTER BAR.

On November 8th the fifteen gentlemen mentioned in our last issue were called to the Bar.

FRENCH HOUSES OF CORRECTION.

It rests with the Public Prosecutor and not with the judges to determine in what prison a delinquent sentenced by the Correctional Courts shall be confined. Herein favouritism comes largely into play. A prisoner of the lower orders, having no respectable connexions, will not get the option of serving his time in solitary confinement, and thereby earning a remittance. If he petitions for this favour, he will be told that there are no cells vacant, and he will be removed to Ste. Pélegie, or the Santé, where he will sleep in a dormitory and work in an associated atelier. If he be a shoemaker or tailor, he will work at his own trade; if not, he will be employed in making brass chains, cardboard boxes, paper bags, toys or knock-knocks for vendors of those thousand trifles which are comprised under the designation articles de Paris. Being paid by the piece, he will have every inducement to work hard. Of his earnings Government will retain one-third towards the expenses of his keep; one-third will be put aside and paid to him on his discharge, while the remaining third will be paid to him in money to enable him to buy little luxuries at the prison canteen. The things purchasable at the canteen are wine at the rate of a pint and a half a day, café au lait, chocolate, cheese, ham, sausages, eggs, butter, salad, fruit, tinned meat, biscuits, stationery, tobacco, and snuff. Prisoners are allowed to smoke in Parisian gaols, and a very sensible provision this is, for it prevents that illicit traffic in tobacco which brings so many prisoners and warders to trouble in English prisons, and it also supplies a ready means of punishing a refractory prisoner. Frenchmen decline to admit that order cannot be kept in a gaol without corporal punishment. As a rule French prisoners behave exceedingly well, because they know that they can greatly alleviate the hardships of their position by so doing. For a first offence, a man's tobacco and wine will be cut off for a week; for a second he may be forbidden to purchase anything at the canteen for a month; if he perseveres in his folly he will be prohibited from working, that is, from earning money, and will be locked up in a cell to endure the misery of utter solitude and idleness. If this severe measure fails and the man becomes obstreperous, he will be strait-waistcoated and put into a dark padded cell where he may scream and kick at the walls to his heart's content. To these rational methods of coercion the most stubborn natures generally yield. It must be confessed, however, that there are certain desperate characters who delight in giving trouble, and who, untamed by repeated punishments, will often commit murderous assaults upon warders, chaplain, or governor out of sheer bravado. It would really be a mercy to flog these men, for a timely infliction of the lash would frighten them into good behaviour, and often save them from the worse fate of lifelong reclusion. It has not been found practicable to abolish the lash in convict establishments, and since it continues in use there no sound reason can exist for not introducing it into gaols. There are no cranks or treadwheels in French prisons. These barbarous methods for wasting the energies of men in unprofitable labour are condemned by the good sense of a people who hold that it is for the public interest as well as for the good of the prisoners themselves that men in confinement should be so employed as to make them understand the blessedness of honest labour. In their treatment of untried prisoners, too, the French are much more humane than we. What can be more cruel and foolish than to force an untried man, who may be innocent, to spend several months in complete idleness, as is done in England? A Frenchman who has a trade that can be followed in prison may work at it in his cell, pending his trial, as if he were at home. Journeymen tailors, shoemakers, watchmakers, gilders, carvers, painters on porcelain and enamel, &c., continue working for their employers (unless of course, they are desperate men whom it would be dangerous to trust with tools), and it is a touching sight enough on visiting days to see the prisoners send out little parcels of money for their wives from whom they are separated by gratings. The same sight can be witnessed in the prisons for convicted offenders. Many prisoners will deny themselves every luxury procurable at the canteen in order to give the whole of their earnings to their wives.—Cornhill Magazine.

TEXT-BOOK ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

The Solicitors Act, 1843, s. 39.

The only way in which a cestui que trust, or other third party, can obtain taxation of the bill of costs of the trustees' solicitor is by petition under the bill of costs of the trustees' solicitor is by petition under the 'Solicitors Act, 1843, s. 39 (In re Spencer, Spencer v. Hart, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 271).—C. A.

Morgan on Costs, 117.

Costs of Administration, so far as they have been increased by the administration of real estate, are to be borne by the real estate [decision of Fry, J., 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 525, reversed] (In re Middleton, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 273).—C. A.

Levin on Trusts, 550.

A declaration by a testator that a particular person is to act as solicitor to his trustees in the management of his estate held not to constitute a trust in favour of such solicitor (Foster v. Blesley, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 275).

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Lawyer's Companion and Diary, and London and Provincial Law Directory for 1883, with Tables of Costs, &c. Edited by JOHN THOMPSON, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Thirty-seventh Annual Issue. London: Stevens and Sons, 119 Chancery-lane; Shaw & Sons, Fetter-lane. 1883.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Rheumatism and Gout.—These purifying and soothing remedies demand the earnest attention of all persons liable to gout, sciatica, or other painful affections of the muscles, nerves, or joints. The Ointment should be applied after the affected parts have been patiently fomented with warm water, when the unguent should be diligently rubbed upon the adjacent skin, unless the friction should cause pain. Holloway's Pills should be simultaneously taken to reduce inflammation and to purify the blood. This treatment abates the violence, and lessens the frequency of gout, rheumatism, and all spasmodic diseases, which spring from hereditary predisposition, or from any accidental weakness of constitution. This Ointment checks the local remedy. The Pills restore the vital powers.

REVIEWS.

The Law relating to Building Leases and Building Contracts, the Improvement of Land by, and the Construction of, Buildings. With a full Collection of Precedents of Agreements for Building Leases, Building Leases, Contracts for Building, Building Grants, Mortgages, and other Forms with respect to matters connected with Building. Together with the Statutes relating to Building, with Notes and the latest Cases under the various Sections. And a Glossary of Architectural and Building Terms. By ALFRED EMDEN, of the Inner Temple, Esquire, Barrister-at-Law. London: Stevens & Haynes, Law Publishers, Bell Yard, Temple Bar. 1882.

In the preface to the valuable work now before us, Mr. Emden draws attention to the wonderful increase of inhabited houses in England and Wales. He might well have added that in this country the increase is no less surprising. Nothing, indeed, is more astonishing than the apparently disproportionate development of residential buildings, urban and rural, witnessed in recent years, when compared with the not inordinate increase of the population; while it were devoutly to be wished that the multiplication of new public buildings and business premises, everywhere springing up, could be accepted as a decisive proof of the growing prosperity of the community. It may be that the spirit of enterprise has become less cautious than of yore in this direction, and that buildings are now run up less expensively and permanently. But, besides, the extended operations of modern building societies have lent a powerful and useful aid; nor has the investor in this class of speculation to encounter such risks as attach, nowadays, to investments in land. Whatever its cause, however, the fact remains that building has increased to an extraordinary extent; while, in a correlative degree, the want is now felt more than ever of an adequate treatise devoted to the law relating to building leases, contracts to build, and to the improvement of land by the construction of buildings and works of that kind generally.

Mr. Emden's pages present the result of an endeavour to supply that want—a result so truly excellent that long and painstaking his endeavours must have been. The lawyer, landowner, estate agent, architect, contractor, engineer, building society, will alike profit by the mass of information he has brought together upon this subject, and arranged with a simplicity and perspicuity that proves how fully he had himself mastered his materials. Divided into three parts, his book deals respectively with (1) the law relating to building leases, grants, contracts, and the construction of buildings; (2) precedents of contracts to build, agreements for building leases, building leases, grants, mortgages, and other forms with respect to building matters; (3) the statutes relating to building; and appended is a most useful glossary of architectural and building terms, used in the Acts, leases, contracts, &c. Certainly, to the legal profession in particular the latter feature will commend itself. The precedents, too, are apposite and well-prepared, and the provisions of the Conveyancing Act are noted in connexion with them, as well as wherever necessary throughout the book. But, the portion of Mr. Emden's 716 pages which appears to us to be mainly important, is that which is conversant with the law relating to contracts to build, building leases, &c.; and nothing, indeed, could be more able and thorough than his treatment of this subject. In a word, this is a practically useful book—a book which will obviate the necessity of research in many others, while it supplies an abundance of information not elsewhere available.

In a recent criminal trial, the prisoner, as an excuse for ill-treating his wife, pleaded "softening of the brain." Much more likely to have been "hardening of the heart."—Punch.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

Mr. Robert A. Beauchamp, solicitor, has been appointed a Notary Public for the district of Dublin.

Mr. John T. Huggard, Petty Sessions Clerk for the district of Milltown and Killorglin, has been appointed a Commissioner for taking Affidavits at Milltown, Co. Kerry.

Mr. Henry Atkinson has been elected Clerk of Petty Sessions for the Coolock, Howth, and Drumcondra districts, Co. Dublin.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

KING'S INNS.

HONOR EXAMINATION.—OCTOBER, 1882.

JURISPRUDENCE, CIVIL AND INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Examiner—H. P. JELLETT, Esq., Q.C.,

1. What is the nature of the contract Mandatum pecuniæ credendæ, and what are the main distinctions between this contract and the contracts Fidejussio and Negotiorum gestio in Roman, and Gestion d'Affaires in French Law?

2. A. confers a mandate on B. to buy an estate for him for a thousand pounds, B. purchases the estate for twelve hundred and has it transferred to him. What are the relative rights of A. and B. in this state of facts according to Roman and English Law? Assign reasons for the conclusion at which you arrive.

3. Write a short essay explaining the distinctions between the contracts created by a Mandatum and Depositum, and their resulting obligations, with their analogies in English Law.

4. Explain the nature of the following actions:—

Actio mandati directa,
Actio mandati contraria,

and the cases to which they respectively apply.

5. Write a short essay on the effect of the death of the Mandans and Mandataris in Roman Law, and compare its effect with that produced in English Law by the death of an Agent appointed generally, or by power of Attorney.

6. B. and C. separately and voluntarily promise A. to scour certain drains on his farm, specified in the proposal of each. B. omits to scour the drains specified in his proposal. C. scours the drains mentioned in his proposal but so insufficiently that the work is useless, and the result on the whole is that the farm is flooded, and the crops destroyed. Write a short essay on the several liabilities of B. and C. according to Roman and English Law in this state of facts.

7. What was the nature and effect of the forms of Mandatum denominated Assignatio and Cessio?

8. A. who is not a ship broker agrees voluntarily to enter a parcel of goods belonging to B. with a parcel of his own of the same sort, for exportation, but marks the entry under a wrong denomination, in consequence of which the goods are seized. Write an opinion on the liability of A. in this state of facts according to Roman and English Law.

9. Compare the provisions of Roman, French, and English Law, on the subject of the right of the Mandatory to appoint a procurator, substitutus or subagent, and the responsibility of such person to the Principal.

10. A. gives a mandate to B., which the latter accepts, to buy a farm for the heirs of A. after his death, and to become surety for the price. A. and B. die. Write an opinion as to the rights and obligations of the heirs of A. and B. in case,

(a.) No steps have been taken to fulfil the mandate in the lifetime of A. and B.

(b.) In case the heir of B. ab intestato has ceded the inheritance to C. (a purchaser) before aditio, and the latter has paid the purchase-money.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

MICHAELMAS SITTINGS, 1882.

At the Examination of Applicants seeking to become Apprentices to Solicitors, held on Thursday, the 19th, Friday, the 20th, and Saturday, the 21st of October, 1882, the under-named candidates were adjudged by the Court of Examiners to have passed said Examination, and their names were arranged in the following order, viz. :—

- |                          |                         |
|--------------------------|-------------------------|
| 1. Patrick T. Carroll    | 17. John M. Davies      |
| 2. William Dunlea        | 18. Gerald Cullen       |
| 3. Charles G. Carrothers | 19. Matthew J. Byrne    |
| 4. James Butler          | 20. Peter Paul O'Connor |
| 5. William J. Purcell    | 21. John F. Dunwoody    |
| 6. John Clune            | 22. Edward R. Foley     |
| 7. Denis Hannigan        | 23. William M'Mullin    |
| 8. Thomas J. Horgan      | 24. James M'Cullen      |
| 9. John Sheehy           | 25. Robert Cussen       |
| 10. Edward F. J. Gannon  | 26. James A. Henderson  |
| 11. Charles William Ashe | 27. John G. Lidwell     |
| 12. John Elliott         | 28. Rintoul A. M. Jones |
| 13. William H. Buckley   | 29. Thomas P. Mathews   |
| 14. Ernest R. Newland    | 30. William B. C. Kaye  |
| 15. William G. Wakeley   | 31. Richard N. Byrne    |
| 16. Robert Fulton        | 32. William C. Cooke    |

The Court of Examiners cannot permit any of the candidates on the "Admitted" List to compete for the Society's Prize.

The remaining candidates were postponed.

COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.

The Council have awarded a gold medal and £10 to Mr. James Boyle; and a silver medal and £5 to Mr. John Quinn.

THE FINDLATER SCHOLARSHIP.

This Scholarship has been awarded by the Council to Mr. William S. Collis.

MICHAELMAS SITTINGS, 1882.

At the Examination of Applicants seeking admission as Solicitors, held on Monday, the 23rd, and Tuesday, the 24th of October, 1882, the Court of Examiners decided that the under-named candidates should be allowed the Examination, and their names were arranged in the following order, viz. :—

- |                      |                         |
|----------------------|-------------------------|
| 1. George T. Harley  | 9. John G. Wheatley     |
| 2. Thomas Flynn      | 10. Michael O'Reilly    |
| 3. William F. Webb   | 11. Francis P. Murphy   |
| 4. William M'Ferran  | 12. Arthur J. Davidson  |
| 5. Fred. W. Meredith | 13. Richard J. P. Meade |
| 6. James Foley       | 14. Daniel M'Callum     |
| 7. Michael M'Cartan  | 15. Andrew Devereux     |
| 8. Leonard Sheil     | 16. William P. Carey    |

John Hewson has been allowed the Special Examination for which he had liberty to present himself, pursuant to Order of the Lord Chancellor.

The Court of Examiners awarded a gold medal to Mr. George T. Harley; a silver medal to Mr. Thomas Flynn; and special certificates to Messrs. William F. Webb, William M'Ferran, and Frederick W. Meredith.

The remaining candidates were postponed.

HENRY J. P. WESS, Esq. (President), then distributed the following prizes, awarded to candidates at last Trinity Sittings Final Examination, viz. :—A gold medal to Mr. William S. Collis; silver medals to Messrs. Patrick A. Chance, and Edward J. M'Ardle; and special certificates to Messrs. Maurice Healy, William H. Hancock, and James Clarke.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY
OF IRELAND.

FINAL EXAMINATION FOR APPRENTICES TO SOLICITORS,
Pursuant to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (Ireland), 1866.

MICHAELMAS SITTINGS EXAMINATIONS, 1882.

[Every answer is to be accompanied by reasons concisely stated.]

CHANCERY DIVISION.

Mr. FRANKS, Examiner.

1. State by whom an Administration Suit may be instituted and mode of procedure?
2. In what cases is a Summons for Administration inapplicable?
3. What is the effect of a bare denial of a Contract which has been alleged in any Pleading?
4. At what period, and how can a Plaintiff discontinue or withdraw his cause of complaint, and what is the result?
5. What is a Writ of Prohibition, and what difference in procedure is there, where there is an absence of jurisdiction, and where there is a general jurisdiction by the Inferior Court?
6. State the necessary steps to be taken in the appointment of a Receiver?

CHANCERY DIVISION—LAND JUDGES.

Mr. CROZIER, Examiner.

1. What additional jurisdiction has been conferred on the Land Judges by the Judicature Act?
2. What facility now exists for binding persons by the proceedings in any cause or matter pending before the Land Judges?
3. If it should appear after Order made as to sale of an unincumbered Estate that the Estate is incumbered, how do the Land Judges ordinarily deal with it?
4. Give a short outline of the directions prescribed by the rules for the preparation of Abstracts of Title to the lands of which a sale has been sought, and the forms of such Abstracts?
5. If Title Deeds of property which is being brought to sale be lost, state how the Land Judges may be satisfied to proceed in their absence?
6. State how the Tenants of an Estate being brought to sale may become the purchasers of their respective holdings; and provide also in the reply for the eventuality of all the Tenants not being able to purchase, and the owner not being favourable to a division of the Estate?

PROBATE AND MATRIMONIAL DIVISION PRACTICE.

Mr. MAXWELL, Examiner.

1. A. having made his Will, dies, leaving several Next of Kin and a residuary Legatee, but appoints no Executor—who is entitled to prove the Will?
2. B. dies, leaving by his Will a Legacy of £100 to the Daughter of one of the witnesses to his Will, would the Executor of the Will be justified in paying this Legacy? If so, why?
3. C. dies leaving £1,000, assets, but owing £800, in simple contract debts, on what sum should Probate Duty be paid? Describe the practice to obtain a refund of Probate Duty, state within what time it should be applied for, and how often an application for this purpose can be made?
4. How can a lost Will be proved?
5. State how proceedings for Alimony are instituted?
6. What steps should be taken to prosecute a suit for a Divorce in "forma pauperis"?

COMMON LAW DIVISIONS PRACTICE.

Mr. BARLEE, Examiner.

1. When must leave to issue Writ for service out of Jurisdiction be obtained, and when must endorsement be made on Writ?

2. What steps should a Plaintiff next take after Defendant's appearance—Defendant in such appearance not stating whether or not he requires Plaintiff to file a claim?

3. If no defence, state proceedings to be taken by Plaintiff to obtain Judgment?

4. State shortly the proceedings to be taken by Plaintiff to bring a defended action to trial?

5. How is a Defendant who is entitled to contribution or indemnity from a person not a party to the action to proceed in order to render such person liable?

6. Within what time must cause be shown against Order for new Trial?

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

IN COURT.—P. Kenny, as to ejectment.—G. West, for carriage.—J. Power, payment by receiver.—K. R. Briscoe, to appoint receiver.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

H. M'Kelvey, rental.—W. Ledwich, do.—A. W. Travers, vouch.

TUESDAY.

IN COURT.—T. Howett, receiver.

WEDNESDAY.

IN COURT.—R. L. Hunt, payment by receiver.—J. M Walker, ditto.

THURSDAY.

IN COURT.—H. Gillman, to appoint receiver.—G. Jackson, ditto.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

R. J. S. Lloyd, rental.—J. Robinson, vouch.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

IN COURT.—S. A. Kelly, payment.—C. A. Keogh, at hearing.—M. Hall, payment.—M. R. Dalway, as to order.—D. Ryan, for receiver.—Administratrix Carolan, payment.—J. Eyre, do.—R. Kellett, partition.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

De Montmorency, rental.

TUESDAY.

SALES IN COURT.

T. DOWLING,	-	-	-	-	1 lot.
TRUSTEES M. REILLY,	-	-	-	-	1 "
F. R. LAMBERT,	-	-	-	-	4 lots.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

A. H. Irwin, rental.—P. Regan, ditto.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

J. Evans, rental.—M. O'Neill, do.—P. Lawless, vouch.—Sir J. F. Godfrey, ditto.

THURSDAY.

IN CHAMBER.—M. R. Dalway, confirm sale.

IN COURT.—J. FitzGerald, examine witness.—F. Graham, from 9th.—N. J. Montgomery, objection.—R. A. Smith, from 9th.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Meetings follow in Italics.

Dempsey, John, formerly of Templepatrick, in the county of Antrim, carpenter, but now a prisoner in the county of Antrim Jail. October 24; Friday, November 24, and Tuesday, December 12. John D. Rosenthal, solr.

Hawkins, Robert J., of Newbridge, in the county of Kildare, grocer and hardware merchant. October 24; Tuesday, November 21; and Friday, December 8. Bouchier Eaton, solr.

Lennon, Thos., of Strokestown, county Roscommon, draper and provision merchant. October 31; Tuesday, November 28, and Friday, December 15. Maxwell & Weldon, solrs.

O'Sullivan, William, of Mondellehy, in the county of Limerick, farmer. October 17; Friday, November 24, and Tuesday, December 12. Richard Davoren, solr.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	NOVEMBER
	Sat. 4	Mon. 6	Tues. 7	Wed. 8	Thur. 9	Fri. 10	Sat. 11
*Paid Government.
— 3 p c Consols ..	101			101½
— 3 p c Reduced ..					100½
— New 3 p c Stock ..	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1858 } Traffic, at	103½		103½	103½	103½	103½
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel.						100½
BANKS.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	319			320½	321
25 Hibernian Banking Co.				33½
20 London and County (Lis'd.)
15 London Joint Stock				47½
20 London and W'minster, H'd	71	71½		71½		71½
10 Do. New
3½ Munster Bank (Limited)		7½	7½
— Nat. Prov. of England, Lim.
10 National Bank (Limited) ..	24			24	24
10 National of Liverpool (Lis'd.)
10 Royal Bank ..			29½
25 Standard of B. & A., H'd
25 Union of Australia ..						65½
Steam.
50 British & Irish ..					50
100 City of Dublin ..
50 Dublin & Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co.	102	102½
MINES.
1 Killaloe Slate Co. (Lit'd.)					12/-
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (Lit'd.)
MISCELLANEOUS.
10 Alliance & Dub. Cons.' Gas		16½
4 Arnott & Co., Limited ..	6
17 Hudson's Bay, ..	37
TRAMWAYS.
10 Dublin United Tramways			12
10 L'pl Un'td Tram & Bus l'bd
RAILWAYS.
100 Great Northern (Ireland).						119½
100 Gt. Southern and Western	116½
100 Midland Gt. Western ..	89½	89½			89½
50 Waterford and Limerick ..
RAILWAY PREFERENCE.
100 Gt. N'th'n (Irland) gt'd 4 p c
100 Do., guaranteed 4½ p c ..
100 Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c						108½
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c						104
100 Do., 5 p c ..
DEBENTURE STOCKS.
— Belfast & N'h'n Cos, 4 p c			105½
— Dublin & Wicklow 4 p c ..		105½			105½	105½
— Do., 4½ p c ..		113
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p					108½
— Do., 4½ p c ..	114½
— Do., 5 p c ..					132
— Gt. North'n & West'n 4½ p c			109			109½
— Gt. South'n & West'n, 4 p c	109½		109½	109½		109½
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c
— Do., 4½ p c ..	109½		109½			110
MISCELLANEOUS DEBENT.
Alliance & Cons. Gas, 4 p c ..						99½
Dub. & Glas. S. F. Co. (1887) 5 p c
Do. (1888), 6 p c ..						100½
Pipe Water—Old, £92 6s. 3d.
Do. New, £100, ..						99½

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—4 per cent., 17th August, 1882
Of Deposit—1 per cent., 23rd March, 1882.

Name Days—November 14th and 29th, 1882.
Account Days—November 15th and 30th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.
JACKSON—November 5, at Inniscorrig, Dalkey, the wife of Henry Vincent Jackson, J.P., High Sheriff, King's County, Inane, Roscrea, and Mountjoy-square, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.
MOSTYN and TREMENEHERE—November 6, at Wellington, Neilgherrie Hills, India, E. A. Mostyn, Esq., Captain the Royal Fusiliers, second son of the late Thomas Mostyn, Esq., Crown and Treasury Solicitor for Ireland, to Caroline Frances, youngest daughter of Major-General G. B. Tremenehere, R.E.

DEATHS.
DAVIS—November 5, at Sydenham road, Dundrum, Evelyn, daughter of James Davis, Esq., solicitor, aged four months.
DOLPHIN—November 4, at Turco, Loughrea, County Galway, Oliver Dolphin, Esq., barrister-at-law, in his 78th year.
LOVER—November 3, at Rathmines-road, May, the dearly-beloved and only child of Henry William Lover, Esq., barrister-at-law
MURPHY—November 7, at Skibbereen, Edmund Murphy, of Millford House, Borrisokane, Esq., J.P., Assistant Land Commissioner.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET.

3-7

NOTICE OF REMOVAL:

MR. JAMES WILLIAM NAGLE, Solicitor, has removed his Offices from 52 Middle Abbey-street to 33 NORTH FREDERICK-STREET, DUBLIN, to which address all Letters, Notices, &c., should in future be directed. 141

WANTS:

TO COUNTRY SOLICITORS.

A FIRM OF SOLICITORS, having large and convenient Offices, are open to an engagement with a Country Correspondent. Address—"A. B., Solicitor," care of Messrs. DUFFY & SONS, Publishers, 15 Wellington-quay, Dublin. 140

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO. LIMITED. SECURITY, &c. RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY. The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—32, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 51

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS. ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE. ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA. ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO., the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnauld, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary. Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 113 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewarts & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE, Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection. 10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps. 21, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON. HAIR CURLING FLUID, Curls the straightest and most ungovernable Hair, 3s. 6d., sent for 54 Stamps. ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE, To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His GREAT HAIR RESTORER, 3s. 6d.; it changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied. Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles. As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 3s. 6d.; his DEPILATORY for removing Hair and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers. 7

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ARRERS of RENT (IRELAND) ACT, 1882.RULERESPECTING PROCEDURE UNDER SECTION 1, SUB-SECTION 5.Thursday, the 2nd day of November, 1882.

When a Tenant, for the purpose of complying with the requirements of the Arrears of Rent (Ireland) Act, 1882, has tendered to his Landlord or the Landlord's Agent, or the person to whom the rent is usually paid on account of the Landlord or his Agent, any amount in alleged payment or satisfaction of the year's rent required to be paid or satisfied under the said Act, and such sum has been refused, the Tenant may remit by post, to W. L. Micks, the Comptroller of Arrears, such sum as he may deem necessary to discharge or satisfy such year's rent, accompanied by an affidavit, stating the time at which and the persons to and by whom such tender was made and refused respectively, and such affidavit may be in the Form U.

[SEAL OF THE IRISH LAND COMMISSION.]

146

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED
FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FRESHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

62

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S. F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c., for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111 GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's).
Late of WATERHOUSE & Co.'s

90

PATENT OFFICE, DUBLIN.

J. K. FAHIE & SON, Consulting Engineers and Patent Agents, 2, Nassau-street, Dublin, and 323, High Holborn, London, transact every description of business relating to Patents for Inventions, Registration of Designs, Copyrights, and Trade Marks. Authors of "Hand-book on British and Foreign Patent Law." A paper on the Law of Copyright &c., to be had on application, price 3s. 6d.

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW
WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK for STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens; it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen.

Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each.

581

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. PERCY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham.

181

PUBLIC NOTICES:

STOKES BROTHERS,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.
LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN. 293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
72, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c., &c. 160

N. PETERSON & SON,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.
LIVERPOOL AND LONDON CHAMBERS,
1, FOSTER-PLACE, COLLEGE-GREEN,
DUBLIN. 813

D. W. CARRROLL,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,

Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers.
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-
randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges.
Price Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge.

72

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,
No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.

J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees, Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.

Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.

91

MONEY:IRISH CIVIL SERVICE
PERMANENT
BUILDING SOCIETY,

52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 3½ per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied. Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached.

Rates of Interest:—3½ per cent. per annum if taken for one year, or 4 per cent. per annum if taken for 2 or more years.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:—

The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgage.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary,
52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10

TO

£1,000

{ IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days.
Two UNERRING RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free.
Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1882.

No. 825

OUR WIVES—IV.

SINCE the passing of the recent Act doubts have been raised as to whether or not a husband who survives his wife will be entitled to an estate for life, "by the curtesy of England," in the freehold estates of inheritance which shall have devolved upon or have been otherwise acquired by his wife after the 31st of December next, so as to become her separate property by virtue of the Act, a child of the marriage having been born capable of inheriting same. We do not, of course, refer to those estates in realty, so common in this country, created by leases for a definite or indefinite number of lives, known as "descendible freeholds," where the lands are held pur autre vie, and the heir who usually (but not always) succeeds, takes, not as heir, but as "special occupant;" because it is long well settled that no "curtesy" attaches to such estates even where the wife's property in them is not settled to her separate use: Stead v. Platt, 18 Beav. 50. Mere equitable estates, as such, were always liable to "curtesy," because here "equity followed the law;" but, for a long series of years different judges held different opinions as to whether the limitations of such an estate to the separate use of a wife, did not so far exclude the husband from all connexion with it as to deprive him of his curtesy; and, had the question still remained open, it would be a most important one as rendering it impossible for a wife alone to make a good title to the entire absolute interest in an estate of inheritance, though it be nominally held by her to her separate use. It seems to us, however, to be now settled that a wife can, by deed or by will, without the intervention of her husband, absolutely dispose of such separate property, and that it is only in the event of her failing to do so that the husband's tenancy by the curtesy, will take effect thereout.

In Cooper v. MacDonald, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 288, it was, in 1877, held by the Court of Appeal (James, Baggallay, and Thesiger, L.J.J.), affirming the decision of Jessel, M.R., that where a married woman who had children by her husband, and was, under the limitations of her father's will, equitable tenant in tail to her separate use of certain freehold estates, and was thereby precluded from anticipating the rents and profits, had, in pursuance of the Fines and Recoveries Abolition Act, barred the entail and limited the fee-simple thus acquired to her own separate use, and subsequently died, having by her will devised away the property from her husband, the effect of the will was to defeat the inchoate right of the husband to the usual estate for life conferred "by the curtesy of England," but that, if she had made no disposition of her estate, the estate by curtesy would have attached for the benefit of the husband—thus setting at rest the doubts raised by a series of conflicting decisions: Roberts v. Dixwell, 1 Atkins, 607; Hearle v. Greenbank, 3 Atkins, 695; Moore v. Webster, L. R. 3 Eq. 267; Appleton v. Rowley, L. R. 8 Eq. 139.

Bearing in mind the wording of the clause of the first section of the new statute, which provides that "a married woman shall in accordance with the provisions of this Act be capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing by will or otherwise of any real or personal property as her separate property, in the same manner as if she were a feme sole, without the intervention of a trustee," the masterly judgment of Jessel, M.R., in the court below is especially instructive, and illustrates the great analogy which exists between the ordinary incidents of separate property acquired by settlement, &c., and that separate property which the Act contemplates. He says, "A gift of a fee simple estate or a gift of a capital sum of money to the separate use of a married woman gives her the same power of alienation over it as if she were a single woman. She is entitled to dispose of it as if she were not a married woman at all, and that at once gets rid of any notion of the husband having an interest. Whatever interest he would have had in the absence of disposition is disposed of by the disposition. The separate use is a creature of equity, and equity says the estate may be so limited to the married woman as that she can get rid of every possible interest of the husband. That is the meaning of a limitation to her separate use and free from his interference and control. It is exactly the same for this purpose as if the estate had been limited to such uses as the married woman shall by will or deed appoint; it entirely destroys the notion of the husband having any interest in it as against her disposition;" and he refers to the judgment of Lord Westbury in Taylor v. Meads, 4 De Gex, Jon. & Sm. 607, as supporting this view.

Again, at page 295, he says:—"Now, I will first of all consider whether he had an estate by the curtesy or not, because that has been very much argued. It appears to me that he had and he had not—that is to say, as I understand the law, if the married woman had never appointed or alienated the estate but had died being tenant in tail in equity or tenant in fee in equity, the husband would have had an estate by the curtesy, whether the estate of the married woman was merely equitable without the separate use, or whether it was equitable together with the separate use; and my reason for saying so on principle is this, that with one notable exception familiar to conveyancers, that of dower, in the incidents of estates equity follows the law; and that would therefore give to the husband the same estate by the curtesy in his wife's equitable estate as he would have in her legal estate. There was no reason to the contrary. When the wife died intestate—for that is the assumption—her husband would take something and her eldest son would take something; and they would be both equitably entitled. As I have said before, there was no reason why that disposition should be altered in any degree. The wife's property would descend to her eldest son subject to the husband's estate; there equity followed the law; but then came the separate use of the wife which engrafted something on the equitable estate; it took away from the husband the right to receive the income during coverture, or, as it was called, the equitable estate during the coverture; it gave the wife the absolute ownership during the coverture, and, if the separate use attached also to the capital, it gave her the right of disposing of it either by deed or will irrespective of the husband." He accordingly in the particular case before him arrives at the conclusion that the wife's disposition of the property by will had put an end to the husband's inchoate right to curtesy, for, that "where a wife either by deed inter vivos, or by will, disposes of the fee simple settled to her separate use, that disposition takes effect free from any claim of the husband or eldest son or other heir at law; but that where she dies without making any such disposition, the rights of the husband and the rights of the heir are equally unaffected, and equity ought to follow the law."

As regards the devolution of estates of inheritance held by a wife to her separate use, the law, where the wife dies intestate, and without having alienated them by conveyance inter vivos, is thus placed upon an intelligible footing. On the other hand, the devolution under similar circumstances of the chattel interest in lands held by a wife to her separate use at the time of her death, will, like that of her other property, remain unaffected by the new Act. These will, therefore, of course, go to her administrator, and the husband is entitled, as of right, to take out administration. The law upon this subject is solemnly declared as regards Ireland by the Irish Statute of Distributions, 7 Wm. III. (Irish), c. 6, section 6: "Provided always that neither this Act nor anything therein contained shall be construed to extend to the estates of femes covert that shall die intestate, but that their husbands may demand and have administration of their rights, credits, and other personal estates, and recover and enjoy the same, as they might have done before the making of this Act;" and a similar enactment as regards England is contained in the English Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, section 25.

It is in the solution of the obscure questions of fact, to which the new legislation as regards married women will give rise, that we anticipate the greatest difficulty in the administration of it, rather than from the uncertainty of the substantive law itself—especially in those cases where it becomes necessary for a creditor to distinguish sharply between what moneys or other things are the property of the husband, and what the separate property of the wife. Even with the most innocent intentions, the property of wife and that of husband are apt to be considerably confounded together, while their action as regards such property partakes so little of the character of business dealings, that the ordinary tests rarely apply; besides all this, there is always an apprehension of their resorting to the process of "thimble-rigging," as it is vulgarly called, to evade an unwelcome demand. No test applicable to all such cases of difficulty can be laid down; but it is worthy of note that the Roman jurists, from whom so many of the practical maxims of English law have been borrowed, made use of what is called the presumptio Muciana in their endeavour to escape from somewhat similar difficulties,—the presumption that everything held by husband and wife, which the wife could not show to have come to her from some other source, had come from the husband. Thus, in Justinian's Digest, under the heading "De eo quod mulier acquisivit," we read, "Quintus Mucius ait: cum in controversiam venit, unde ad mulierem quid pervenerit, & verius, & honestius est, quod non demonstratur, unde habeat, existimari a viro, aut qui in potestate ejus esset, ad eam pervenisse. Evitandi autem turpis quæstus gratiâ circa uxorem hoc videtur Quintus Mucius probasse" (Book 23, Title 1, § 51). Although generally as regards such difficulties the recent statute leaves matters very much at large, claims founded on alleged loans, &c. made to a bankrupt by his wife out of her separate estate are not likely to be, for the future, much insisted upon, because it is expressly enacted that "any money or other estate of the wife lent or entrusted by her to her husband for the purpose of any trade or business carried on by him, or otherwise, shall be treated as assets of her husband's estate in case of his bankruptcy, under reservation of the wife's claim to a dividend as a creditor for the amount or value of such money or other estate after, but not before, all claims of the other creditors of the husband for valuable consideration in money or money's worth have been satisfied (s. 3).

THE ALLEGED ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE JUDGE LAWSON.

"A POPULAR judge is a deformed thing," said Lord Bacon; and, truly, it is difficult indeed for a judge to win "plaudites fitter for players than magistrates," without abandoning all that best becomes the ermine. Especially is this so in a troubled period, when integrity and firmness are most needed, but popular censure and misrepresentation are most rampant. "I have still observed," said Lord Hale, "that almost in all times, especially upon changes, judges have been ever exposed to the calumny and petulance of every discontented spirit." Worse than this, even the personal safety of judges in the dark days through which we are passing has to be assured by the detective. And it has come to pass that the ministers of the law who venture to pronounce its sentence on a criminal, or to enforce the mandates of a statute that meets disapproval, must possess not merely a disregard of popularity, but the courage that can brave the assassin.

It would seem, indeed, that it was only by a rare good fortune Mr. Justice Lawson escaped on Saturday last. Attended, as usual for some time past, by a guard consisting of two detectives and two army pensioners, he was walking along Leinster-street, apparently in the most complete security, when the vigilance of one of the pensioners, M'Donnell, who was walking on the opposite side of the street, was aroused by the sudden movement of a man who crossed from that side to where the learned judge was walking. Quickly rushing across also, M'Donnell caught the man as he arrived within a few paces of the judge, and, as alleged, was in the act of drawing from his breast-pocket what afterwards proved to be a fully-loaded seven-chambered revolver. He was disarmed, arrested, and identified as Patrick Delaney, a carpenter, who had already undergone a sentence of five years' penal servitude for highway robbery and presenting a pistol at several persons. "As this matter is at present the subject of legal investigation, we should be slow to do or say anything which would in the least prejudice or interfere with the course of justice," as the learned judge most properly remarked when, on a subsequent day, receiving the public congratulations of the Bar. But hardly need it be said that, in common with both branches of the profession and with every right-minded person of all politics and persuasions, we could have no feeling but one of unmitigated horror had a catastrophe happened that we shudder even to imagine.

What an awful termination to a brilliant career there might have been, but for the prompt sagacity and energetic courage of Charles M'Donnell, to whom, as was subsequently observed by the magistrate (Mr. Curran), not Mr. Justice Lawson alone, but the citizens of Dublin generally owe a debt of gratitude, for not only saving the life of an eminent judge, but the city from the stain of a terrible crime. The son of James Lawson, Esq., of Waterford, James Anthony Lawson was born in 1817. He was educated at the University of Dublin, where he took a scholarship in 1836, and in the following year won a gold medal in ethics. In 1841 he succeeded Mr. Butt as Professor of Political Economy. Called to the bar in 1840, he took silk in 1857, and was appointed a Sergeant-at-Law in 1860. In 1861 he was elected a Bencher of the King's Inns, and was appointed a Commissioner of National Education. In the same year he was appointed Solicitor-General, and Attorney-General in the year following.

He was appointed a puisne judge of the Court of Common Pleas in 1869, and in June last was transferred to the Queen's Bench Division. He was also, in 1869, appointed a Commissioner of Church Temporalities, and was a Commissioner for the Custody of the Great Seal in 1874. In 1865 he had been elected Member of Parliament for Portarlington, and was sworn of the Irish Privy Council, as of the English in 1870. But, not satisfied even with those many distinctions, the learned judge is now about to figure as an author; and we trust that he who has already escaped the bullet will yet survive the criticisms on his Hymni Usitate Latine Reddite, which, at all events, he will have no difficulty in doing if they prove as amiable as our own upon his able paper on "The Practicability of Codifying English Law," read before the Statistical Society in 1872. Judge Lawson is also well known in private circles as an admirable actor, and his humorous rendering of Shakespeare's (not Sheppard's) Touchstone, at the Presbyterian Association in April last will not soon be forgotten; nor do we doubt that the genial judge well deserved the magnificent silver salver which was presented to him on Tuesday last, as President of the Hibernian Catch Club. Able as he has proved himself in every capacity, he possesses, withal, in an eminent degree, that quality with which Dante specially accredited the judicial personage whom he encountered in purgatory—

"Nino, thou courteous judge! what joy I felt,
When I perceived thou wer't not with the bad!"

DEATH OF MR. A. J. PHIPPS.

Mr. Alfred J. Phipps, Accountant to the Land Commission, died on the 10th inst. at his residence in Bray, in the 59th year of his age. A courteous and efficient officer, he is deeply regretted. He had been over forty years in the public service, and previous to his appointment under the Land Commission, in Oct., 1881, had for sometime acted as accountant to the Khedive of Egypt, and formerly filled the office of book-keeper to the Commissioners of Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues, London.

"LAW JOURNAL REPORTS" FOR NOVEMBER.

The Law Journal Reports for November contain pages 49 to 64 of the Privy Council cases; pages 785 to 856 of the Chancery Division; pages 561 to 592 of the Queen's Bench Division; pages 57 to 80 of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division; and table and index of the Statutes of the Realm. In all forty-four cases are reported, of which two are from the Privy Council; twenty-nine from the Chancery Division; three from the Queen's Bench Division; and ten from the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division.

The first of the Privy Council cases is Allen v. Pullay, which decides that instruments, the stamps on which have, by inadvertence, not been properly cancelled, are not "duly stamped" within the meaning of an ordinance of the Straits Settlements, and may be subsequently stamped. Rhodes v. Rhodes, an appeal from New Zealand, contains an elaborate judgment of Lord Blackburn upon a will from which the words "from and after the decease of my said wife" were allowed to be omitted in the probate, or disregarded in construing the will.

Of the Chancery cases, in Tempest v. Camoys the Court of Appeal decides, in an administration action, that where two trustees disagree in the exercise of a discretionary power to invest in land, the court ought not to direct the investment. In Wilkinson v. The Hull Railway and Dock Company the Court of Appeal held that a railway company may, under their general powers, take land to make a road for the accommodation of a proprietor whose land they had severed. In Johnston & Co. v. Orr-Ewing & Co., in the House of Lords, the liability of natives of India to mistake the defendants' for the plaintiffs' trade mark in goods intended for the Indian market was allowed as a test, although a person reading English would not make the mistake. In Prestney v. The Corporation of Colchester Vice-Chancellor Hall decided that the proviso to section 2 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, reserving existing rights in property applied by "custom" to the benefit of individuals, did not refer to a legal custom, but merely to the existing practice. In the case of In re Pooley, ex parte Harper, the Court of Appeal condemned the practice of buying proxies in order to control the appointment of a trustee in bankruptcy, and disallowed the costs of the solicitor to the trustee, who was cognisant of the practice being resorted to by the bankrupt's friends. In Gray v. Webb Mr. Justice Kay excluded a counterclaim on the ground that the claim was practically undefended and the action would be delayed. In Marshall v. Gingell Mr. Justice Kay held that a testator who devised real estate in trust for his daughter during her life, and after her death gave the premises in trust for and devised them to her children, conferred the whole legal estate on the trustees. In Peareth v. Marriott a testator who created an annuity of £1,500, "clear annual income," out of his property for his widow, and added, "no deduction shall be made from any of the legacies for the legacy tax or any other matter, cause, or thing whatsoever," was considered by Vice-Chancellor Bacon to authorise the trustees to pay the widow's income tax. In the case of In re Moulson, ex parte Knightly, it was again held that an affidavit merely verifying the signature of a bill of sale was not an "affidavit of attestation," and that a grantor described as a stone merchant and quarry owner, who carried on business at two other places besides his residence, was sufficiently described. In Bennett v. Bowen it was held that an account against an executor, on the footing of a wilful default, is not an "ordinary account," such as can be endorsed on the writ and taken by judgment in default of appearance. In Gartside v. The Silketone and Dodsworth Collieries Company it was held that where debentures were executed on the same day, but in two sets, the debentures in each set to rank pari passu, the set sealed first had priority. In Re White's Trust a bequest of £1,000 to a city company upon trust, "when a proper site can be obtained," to build eight almshouses, was held not to be void under the Mortmain Act. In the case of In re West, ex parte Good, the trustee was held not entitled to books delivered a year before the bankruptcy to the bona fide purchaser of book debts, but entitled to inspect them. In Wolfe v. Mathews it was decided that an action could be brought to restrain a trades union formed to "assist strikes and provide sick pay to members" from amalgamating with another, as it was not to "directly enforce any agreement to provide benefits for members" in the words of the Trades Unions Act. In Gilroy v. Stephens an administratrix, whose solicitor had received dividends on a fund set apart for an infant next-of-kin, was ordered to account with interest at 3 per cent. and half-yearly rests. In Asquith v. Saville it was held that a bequest to a class—"and, if any of them die leaving issue, their shares to go to their respective issue"—did not benefit the issue of one dead at the date of the will. In Ricketts v. Lewis an administrator was held not entitled to mortgage leaseholds for repairs unless under covenant to repair. In Pratt v. Pratt it was decided, in accordance with the long-established practice, that the right to inspect documents gives a right to copy them. In Paul v. Paul the Court of Appeal, overruling a decision of Vice-Chancellor Malins, refused the petition of a husband and wife to divide between them a fund settled, if the wife should die first, as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to her next-of-kin; and, if the husband should die first, for her absolutely. In Walker v. Poole it was held that numerous letters must be described by bundles in an affidavit of documents, otherwise the affidavit will be taken off the file as prolix. In the case of The Scottish Petroleum Company a compromise, striking a name off the list of shareholders concluded before the commencement of the winding up, was upheld. In Hill v. Hart Davis a circular containing untrue statements as to a friendly society was restrained by Mr. Justice Kay although issued by one member to others for the purpose of obtaining an investigation. In The Attorney-General v. The Vestry of Bermondsey vestrymen who had been made parties to an action against the vestry for the purpose of paying costs, were dismissed from the action. In the case of The Working Men's Mutual Society Mr. Justice Kay decided that a guinea a day and first-class fare out and home is the sum to be tendered to an auctioneer summoned as a witness. In Nottage v. Buxton an interest given to children on attaining twenty-one, subject to the life interest of their respective mothers, was held to be vested in a child who attained twenty-one, but died before his mother. In Taylor v. Collier one of two members of a partnership was held entitled to put in an appearance for the firm independently of the other. In Woolley v. Colman it was held that the court might make an order for sale in a redemption action, under the Conveyancing Act, at any stage of the action. In the case of Re Clarke Consols, railway securities, and cash were left under settlement by will to a married woman's separate use without power of anticipation, and the cash was ordered to be paid to her, but only the income of the rest. In the case of Re White's Mortgage it was considered that an executor of a deceased mortgagee could not, under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, exercise the power of sale; and a vesting order was made.

Of the Queen's Bench cases, it was held by the majority of the Court of Appeal, in Pitman v. The Universal Marine Insurance Company, that where an insured ship is damaged at sea so that the cost of restoring her to her original value would be greater than that value, the shipowner who has sold the ship is entitled to recover from the insurers the difference between the amount realised and the original value, and not what would have been the cost of repairing the damage. In The Mersey Steel and Iron Company (Limited) v. Naylor, Benson, & Co. the Court of Appeal decide that a failure to pay for goods on the one hand, or deliver them on the other, by parties to a contract for the sale of goods from time to time, does not necessarily entitle the other party to rescind; and that a defendant to an action by a liquidator may set off a claim for damages. In Mostyn v. Stock Mr. Justice Lopes decided that where an execution debt is reduced to below £50 by payments to the sheriff's officer, section 87 of the Bankruptcy Act does not apply, and the execution creditor is entitled to the balance of his debt in full.

The first case in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division is the Guy Mannering, which has been the subject of some discussion. The Court of Appeal, affirming Sir Robert Phillimore, decide that, although a pilot in the Suez Canal is compulsory, yet, as the master under the regulations of the canal is still liable, the owners are liable for the negligence of the pilot. In Wigney v. Wigney the Court of Appeal upheld the decision of Sir James Hannen, depriving a guilty husband in a divorce suit of all benefit under the settlement of the wife's property. In the Golden Sea Sir James Hannen decided that there is no appeal from the Wreck Commissioner by the owner, although there is by the master. In the Rona Sir Robert Phillimore decided that, although the Admiralty Court had no jurisdiction in case of damage to goods shipped on a vessel of which the owner is domiciled in England, the County Courts have. In the Gaetano & Maria the Court of Appeal held that the master of a foreign ship may execute a binding bottomry bond without communication with the owners, if such is the law of the ship's flag. In the Rory the Court of Appeal, overruling Sir Robert Phillimore, held that in an action by cargo owners against ship-owners, based on defects in the ship, the defendants are entitled to particulars of defects as in a similar Queen's Bench case. In Medley v. Medley the Court of Appeal, overruling Sir James Hannen, held that where the husband has property on which provision for the wife may be secured, the court has not, under the Divorce Act, power to order weekly or monthly payments by the respondent husband to the petitioner. In the Ellin Sir Robert Phillimore decided that a judgment in respect of a collision has priority, as against the ship, over judgments by seamen for wages earned before and after the collision. In Rose v. Rose a wife, who had by a separation deed condoned the husband's previous acts, was not held entitled to take advantage of previous, cruelty, on the assumption that it was revived by a subsequent adultery. In Whittaker v. Whittaker a debt was attached for the payment of costs due in a divorce suit and a receiver ordered. The rest of the number is occupied with the index to the statutes for the year.—Law Journal.

THE SETTLED LAND ACT.—III

(Continued from page 547, ante.)

Capital Money arising under this Act.

This is defined to mean "capital money arising under this Act, and receivable for the trusts and purposes of the settlement" (sect. 2 (9)). The Bill, which afterwards became this Act, contained a provision in clause 21 (1) which explained that capital money included—

"Purchase money on sale, equality money on exchange or partition, fine on lease, grant, or licence, money raised on mortgage or charge, and mining rent set aside as capital."

This explanation is not in the Act verbatim, but it appears to be correct to say that capital money is usually still so inclusive. It is rather strange that, while a fine for a lease may clearly be taken—sects. 7 (2), 13 (5)—no definite provision is made that it shall be treated as capital, but we think clearly it must, except possibly in the case of a fixed certain fine (Brigstocke v. Brigstocke, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 760; 8 Ch. Div. 357). A tenant for life is entitled to heriots and casual profits, and in some cases to fines on renewal of leases, but these differ from a fine on a new lease granted by himself, where there is no custom. Sect. 11 directs that certain mining rents shall be capital, sect. 18 provides similarly for money raised by mortgage, sect. 35 as to certain money from sale of timber, sect. 37 as to produce of sale of personal chattels settled with land. Provision is made by sect. 34 for application of money produced by sale of leaseholds and reversions, &c., so that all parties interested may get the same benefit from the money as they would from the land. No express provision is made as to the "consideration" for acceptance of surrender under sect. 13 (1), or for payment for licence under sect. 14. See, however, sects. 53, 44, 45. As to consideration for rescission and variation of contracts, see sect. 31.

Capital moneys are to be settled, and represent, and are in lieu of, the settled land. They are not paid to the tenant for life, but to the trustees or into court, at the option of tenant for life (sect. 22 (1)), so that they may be applied for any special authorised object for which they are raised, or be invested (sect. 21) or spent on improvements (sect. 25). Capital money is not to be paid to a single trustee unless the settlement otherwise order (sect. 39). Where there is only one trustee left the money must be paid into court, or an additional trustee must be appointed. Money, now or hereafter in court, or in the hands of trustees, and liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be settled, can in like manner be invested or spent in improvements. This applies to money paid in under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts, the S. E. Act 1877, and any other Act (sects. 32, 33).

Additional powers—to whom they should be given.

As the powers of tenant for life cannot be taken away (sects. 51, 52) the principal questions for the draftsman are, what additional powers and privileges shall be inserted in the settlement or will, and to whom, and subject to what restrictions or consents, shall he give them.

Speaking very generally, and subject to exceptions and modifications, it may be said that the Act gives to tenants for life and other limited owners, without the consent of the trustees, powers of sale, exchange, enfranchisement, partition, and leasing, which were formerly given to trustees with consent of the tenant for life or to the trustee alone. Instead of consent of trustees being necessary they simply have notice given them (sect. 45), so that they may apply to the court if they think fit (sect. 44); but they are not bound to make any such application, and are indemnified if they adopt purchases, contracts, &c., of tenant for life without any inquiry (sect. 42). Practically, unless tenant for life appears to the trustees to be guilty of fraud or gross negligence, they will but seldom interfere.

It will be of no use in settlements and wills to give to the trustees any powers which conflict with those given by the Act to the tenant for life, for if this is done the powers in the settlement must give way (sect. 56). Hence the ordinary powers of sale, &c., should be omitted; but nevertheless trustees should be appointed "for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1882:" (see sect. 2 (8)). If desired, additional powers may be given to the tenant for life or to the trustees (sect. 57). But usually it will be best to give them to the tenant for life when they are required at all, for if given to the trustees there will often be a danger of conflict of powers. We have said that the powers should be given to the "tenant for life;" but it must be remembered that under the Act a large number of persons are either deemed tenants for life or have the powers of tenant for life (sect. 58). So that in the settlement the powers should be given accordingly. Additional powers are to operate like those given by the Act (sect. 57 (2)).

The following form will be convenient in a settlement inter vivos: "And it is hereby declared that every person who is, or is deemed to be, or has the powers of tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1882, with respect to the hereditaments and premises hereby granted, shall have the following additional powers, that is to say:" A little verbal alteration will be necessary in a will. In either case consent of trustees may be made essential, if desired. In giving additional powers regard should be had to sect. 58, which in some cases gives persons whose real interest in the family property may be small—e.g., tenant by the curtesy—the powers of tenant for life.

As to trustees, see sects. 2 (8), 38. Sometimes it will be convenient to substitute their consent for the sanction of the court. But in many cases the best plan will be to give the powers to tenant for life absolutely.

What additional Powers should be conferred.

This question is the most important to the draftsman of the "settlement," whether made inter vivos, by will, or private Act of Parliament. It will be the most convenient course, first to consider the sufficiency of the statutory powers with especial reference to settlements inter vivos of land as such; and then to discuss shortly settlements by way of trust for sale under sect. 63, and wills. Practically, most of what is said about supplementing the powers with reference to the first description of settlement will apply to others, except indeed in cases where the powers themselves are unsuitable.

We propose also to consider in detail some of the most usual and important forms of settlement individually, and show what omissions may prudently be made in reliance on this Act and the Conveyancing Acts.

(To be continued.)

THE SETTLED LAND ACT.

Writing to the Times, the Right Hon. J. G. Shaw Lefevre says:—

1. The Bill as it came from the House of Lords was very restrictive as to the investment of the money resulting from the sale of the settled property. Practically, it limited such investment to Government securities. Much of the operation of the Act will turn upon this, for tenants for life will not have much inducement to sell if they can invest only to pay at the rate of 3 per cent. Every additional quarter per cent.

to be obtained upon such investments will act as a great inducement to sell. The committee, by a majority of eleven to three, extended the power of investment to the bonds and debentures of railway companies in Great Britain and Ireland which for ten years have paid a dividend on their ordinary shares. By the casting vote of the chairman, it refused to extend this power to the case of debentures of railways in India, the interest of which is guaranteed by the Indian Government; and, by a majority of eight to six, it refused to extend it to the case of stocks or bonds of any municipal corporation in the United Kingdom secured by an Act of Parliament on local rates. Notwithstanding this decision, however, it would appear that, by the Local Loans Act of 1878, trustees who are authorised either by the terms of the settlement or by statute to invest in railway debentures are empowered to invest also in bonds raised under that Act by local authorities on the security of the rates. The authority, therefore, given by the Settled Land Act to invest in railway debentures seems to carry with it the right to invest in bonds or debentures secured on local rates under the Local Loans Act. It is probable that, if time had been given fully to discuss the measure in the House, there would have been further relaxation in this matter of investment.

2. The Bill as introduced permitted the expenditure of the proceeds of the sale of land in various specified improvements of the remaining entailed property, subject to the approval of the Inclosure Commissioners. This would have necessitated those constant references to the Inclosure Commissioners, and that minute superintendence on their part of every improvement, of which so much complaint has been made in the past, and which have proved to be so great an impediment to improvements of entailed property through this medium in the past. The committee insert an amendment to the effect that the certificate of an able practical surveyor, nominated by the trustees and approved by the commissioners, shall suffice for this purpose, and the question, therefore, may in future be decided locally and without reference to the commissioners except for approval of the surveyor.

3. The committee inserted an amendment extending the power of sale conferred upon a tenant for life under an entail to the case of any person interested for life under a marriage settlement, or other settlement vesting landed property in trustees. The result will be that it will be impossible to evade the intentions of the Act, or so to settle land as to deprive the person entitled for life of the power of sale; and although the trustees of a settlement may have absolute discretion as to the investment of the funds when consisting of personalty, they will never have the power of preventing a tenant for life from selling any land which may be settled under any form whatever.

Mr. Lefevre then, in the course of his letter, remarks:—Let me add a few words on the general scope of the measure. I think it is something of an exaggeration to describe it, as some speakers and writers have done, as a legal and social revolution; and that by its adoption the whole system of entail has been struck down at a blow. It is far more of a legal revolution than a social one. To give power to the tenant for life to sell the land without the consent of the trustees or the court would have frightened lawyers of the old school out of their senses. It is unquestionably a very important change, and will distinguish Lord Cairns as a great legal reformer. Among other things it will greatly facilitate the registration of title, for it will at once make it clear that the name of the tenant for life is the proper one to appear on the register, as the person having power to deal with the property. The measure also does the utmost that is possible to free properties already entailed from their economic evils; for it is scarcely to be expected that a British Legislature will ever do what was done in France in 1789—namely, annul all entails and vest the properties affected by them in the tenants for life, free from any restriction, or from any designation in favour of remaindermen. The measure, however, does nothing to limit the existing powers of entail, or to remove the legal distinction between land and personalty which now exists, and which enables the carving out of separate interests in property in land—it is this which so complicates and involves titles and makes the dealing with it so expensive and cumbrous; nor will it mitigate the social or family evils of entail, which result from the concentration of property in few hands, and from depriving the existing owners of settled land of the power of disposition among their children.

On these questions, however, I think a little reflection will show that the measure must have, at no distant date, a most important effect. The motive power of the measure, that which caused it to be accepted so readily by the House of Lords and by the landed interest, has been the embarrassments caused to so many landowners by the agricultural depression, the absolute necessity for many of them of selling portions of their land, and the moral which many of them have learnt that it is most unwise to have all their property invested in land. This motive power to any wider reforms will no doubt be greatly lessened, if not removed, as Mr. Arnold has pointed out in the Times. On the other hand, the arguments in favour of the existing system will be greatly weakened, and it is difficult to see how further changes can be resisted with any logic. When land and personalty under settlement have no longer any practical distinction and can be converted, the one into the other by the tenant for life, the legal distinction between them cannot long be defended, the great force must be given to those who claim that, for the purpose of intestacy and for all other legal purposes, no such difference should be recognised.

In the view also of an intending settlor of landed property and of the family the measure cannot fail to produce an important effect, when it comes to be thoroughly understood that, no matter how the property may be tied up, or how great the desire of the settlor or testator to keep the land in the family, or to put it beyond the danger of dispersion, his very next heir immediately on coming into possession may at once sell it and convert it into personalty; and the question will arise whether those great distinctions now drawn between eldest sons and other children can be justified and maintained. The feelings, sentiments, and traditions of many families are centred round the family estate, and the family opinion justifies and often applauds the maintenance of it in one hand; but under a system where the preservation of the family estate can no longer be secured and where it may be sold and converted into personalty by the temporary holder, it is impossible not to foresee a great change in the family view of such matters. Further, also, a great step has been taken in giving to the tenant for life a greater dominion over the property, in conceding to him the right of sale and the conversion of the land into personalty; but the dominion over the property in the direction of leaving it as he wishes among his children (secured as a rule in the ordinary marriage settlement with respect to personalty) will still be denied to the tenant for life under the ordinary entail; and when the idea is grasped that there is no longer any distinction between land and personalty, and that they are really convertible terms, it will not be long before it will be generally understood that entails, which destroy the dominion of tenants for life in respect of the distribution of their property among their children, and which consequently deprive them of parental power, are mischievous and indefensible.

For these reasons, while denying that the Act can properly be called a social revolution, it is, I think, a great and most beneficial reform; it will give a most important relief to landlords at present embarrassed by charges and settlements; it must inevitably weaken and destroy those arguments by which family entails have been permitted by law and sustained by the custom of families; and it must hasten a general assimilation of the law and practice as regards land and other personal property.

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

It may be asserted with perfect confidence that it would be difficult to devise any more effectual method of depriving courts of justice of all their most characteristic features than subjecting the power of committing for contempt of court to any considerable restriction. There is, in fact, hardly any branch of the law the existence of which is of greater importance to the public which is less liable to abuse, or which, if it is abused, is so sure to be noticed and so to bring about the redress of any evil which it causes. In the first place, it must never be forgotten that the proceedings of all courts of justice, and, above all, the proceedings of all criminal courts, appeal to the strongest passions of human nature, and excite the strongest partisanship which it is possible to feel. Every trial is a battle conducted, no doubt, according to rules intended to secure calmness and fair play, but still a battle between the parties for all that people hold most dear—life, liberty, character, property. The reason why people do not hiss and cheer at trials, why they do not make unseemly interruptions—and, in short, behave as they would at a play or a public meeting—is simply that a habit of respect has been formed, which is continually supported by the knowledge that the judge has both the power and the will to enforce propriety of behaviour by instant punishment. The knowledge that the power exists is in practice quite sufficient, as a rule, to supersede the necessity for its exercise. An intimation from the judge that he is prepared to use it will in almost every case secure the most absolute propriety of demeanour. The importance of maintaining decency and dignity in a court of justice is second only to the importance of maintaining substantial justice in its proceedings. Indeed, the two things are connected together in the closest way. If disorderly conduct in court were permitted, the worst of influences would be brought to bear directly upon jurors; and the only way in which it can be prevented is by lodging in the judge's hand the power of summary punishment. Apart from questions of actual misbehaviour in court by spectators, there are a great variety of other cases which can be reached only by the same summary mode of proceeding. If, for instance, a barrister, a juror, or a witness misbehaves, punishment inflicted on the instant is the only practicable remedy. If a juror, instead of discharging his duty properly, chose to amuse himself by reading a newspaper; or, having business of importance, absented himself at the beginning of the proceedings on the second day of a trial, so as to make it impossible to proceed; or if a barrister chose to persist in pressing upon the jury topics which he had clearly no right to address to them; punishment is practically not only useless but impossible unless it is inflicted at once. With a view to securing the due administration of justice, it is like the power of summary arrest with a view to securing a person committing a crime. If the refractory barrister, the negligent juror, the witness refusing to answer, could not be punished there and then, they would practically do the mischief which a power to commit for contempt would prevent; and it would not be worth while to punish them afterwards. With regard to the executive officers of courts of justice, such as the sheriff and the under-sheriff, power to punish in a peremptory way for neglect of duty or disobedience to lawful directions is essential to the maintenance of the authority of the court. Whatever may be thought of the exact amount of punishment awarded to Mr. Gray by Judge Lawson, can anyone doubt that Mr. Gray did commit an offence which rendered the immediate infliction of serious punishment—punishment which a man of Mr. Gray's position and standing in society would feel severely—absolutely indispensable? There can be no escape from the dilemma that if the jury were not to blame the sheriff ought to have been the last man to attack them falsely, and that if they were to blame he ought to have informed the court of their misconduct. Whether articles appearing after the verdict was given might not have been left to be prosecuted, if necessary, by a criminal information or an indictment, is a special question peculiar to the particular case, on which we have no desire at present to say more than we have already said. But unless trial by newspapers is to be substituted for trial by courts of justice, and in particular for trial by jury, it is absolutely necessary that the courts should have the power of preventing and, if necessary, of punishing all interference by the press with cases actually under trial or about to be tried. It must be recollected that the power to commit for contempt is a far more extensive matter than most people suppose. It is identical with the power by which a large part of the current business of the courts of justice is conducted, and without which they would be struck with impotence. A large part of the business of judges at chambers, especially judges of the Chancery Division, consists in issuing injunctions—that is, orders not to do this or that: for instance, not to sell goods seized under a bill of sale; not to trespass upon a place the ownership of which is in dispute; not to part with property claimed by some one not in possession of it. All these orders are sanctioned by the power to commit for contempt. If a man ordered not to sell does sell in defiance of the order, he is immediately sent to gaol, and kept there till he has purged his contempt to the utmost of his ability. If a solicitor who is ordered to send in his bill giving credit for moneys which he has received refuses or delays unreasonably to do so, or if a sheriff fails to execute a writ lodged with him for execution, the remedy is an attachment, which is the same thing as a commitment for contempt. The person in default is sent to gaol till he does as he is told, and makes amends as well as he can for what he has failed to do. There are, no doubt, some few particular matters on which alterations might perhaps be advantageously made in the law as it stands: but we greatly doubt the wisdom of interfering on account of a single case which may be represented as one of over-severity.—St. James's Gazette.

THE COMMITTEE ON MR. GRAY'S CASE.

There is reason to believe that the select committee of the House of Commons appointed to inquire into the case of Mr. Gray will take a thoroughly practical view of their duties, and confine themselves to the question whether the House is called upon to take any step whatever in the matter on the ground that there has been a breach of privilege. The inquiry was directed simply to the case of Mr. Gray, not to the law as to contempt of court. There would have been no committee at all had it not been that Mr. Gray is a member of the House; and the inquiry is not into the general law, nor even as to the propriety of its application to his case; but simply whether it is necessary or expedient for the House to take any further step in the matter. That was the nature of the inquiry in the two previous cases which have arisen—that of Mr. Charlton, and that of Mr. Whalley—and these inquiries were dealt with in that way. The Attorney-General, who is the chairman of the present committee, proposed the course taken in the case of Mr. Whalley; and there is very little doubt that, for similar reasons, he will propose and carry a similar course on the present occasion. In both the previous cases the House, on the report of its committee, declined to take any further step, thus showing that it does not deem itself under any obligation in every case to assert its privileges; and will not do so if, under the circumstances of the case, it does not deem it proper to do so. It probably would never interfere in any case in which the circumstances showed that the conduct of the member was gravely reprehensible, although his punishment came very near indeed to the boundary line of privilege.

There is, probably, no doubt, according to decided cases, that a member is privileged from arrest for contempt unless it has involved a breach of the peace. So the law was laid down in the last century in the case of Wilkes—even in the case of an infamous libel calculated to provoke a breach of the peace. So it was laid down in 1831, in the case of Lord Westmeath, in the case of an ordinary contempt by disobedience to the order of a court. On the other hand, in the case of Mr. Wellealey, who forcibly seized a ward of court, there was a breach of the peace, for which Lord Brougham committed the member. In the case of Charlton, who had challenged the Master sitting on his case, the offence came so near to a breach of the peace that it was considered by the House, on the report of its committee, as not a fit case in which to assert its privilege, though the report carefully set forth the authorities showing that the privilege existed. In the case of Mr. Whalley there was no breach of the peace; there was only, as in the case of Mr. Skipworth, disrespectful language towards the court. If the House had chosen to assert the privilege, there could be no doubt that it existed; but Parliament had been dissolved, and it was not thought worth while. In the present case, that of Mr. Gray, there was language calculated to incite to a breach of the peace, especially in the then state of Ireland, for there were grave imputations on the conduct of the jury while considering their verdict in a capital case; and there was this special aggravation, that Mr. Gray was the sheriff, charged with the protection and guardianship of the jury, which fact itself afforded a special ground of jurisdiction. The officers of the court have always been held specially subject to its summary control. The whole jurisdiction of attachment of the sheriff for contempt in not executing writs rests on that foundation, and there are many instances of its exercise against the sheriff—one curiously in point. It is not likely that in such a case a committee of the House of Commons will present a report recommending any further action in the matter, especially as it could only now take the form of some censure upon the judge for disregarding its privilege.

If, indeed, the committee were one for inquiry into the law as to contempt of court in general, there might be a good deal to be said; and perhaps a great deal of doubt as to the validity of the modern assertion of it by the judges, more especially in regard to utterances or publications by strangers out of court. There can be no doubt that some more recent decisions—especially in the Tichborne case—went far beyond any former authorities. This is shown by the simple fact that Mr. Justice Blackburn, in committing Mr. Whalley and Mr. Skipworth for mere words uttered or published out of court, reflecting on the court, could cite no cases as authorities except those of Wellealey and Charlton, which were so entirely different as really not to be in point at all. A brief review of the authorities prior to the Tichborne case will show that such a course had never been taken in a court of law before; and that, though similar proceedings had been taken in the Court of Chancery since the time of Lord Hardwicke, it was rested in that court on reasons arising out of its procedure which did not apply in courts of law. It was, moreover, of very doubtful legality, though, from the nature of the jurisdiction, it never could be tested in a court of law, as a committal by a superior court for contempt was deemed a good return to a habeas corpus. Originally, as the earlier authorities show, the process for contempt was only deemed applicable—as to strangers—in cases of insult to the court in its presence, and actual obstruction to its proceedings; and so strictly was the jurisdiction limited that mere words of disrespect towards the court, not in its presence, were never deemed a contempt, unless when uttered by a party served with its process; and acts contrary to its order were not deemed a contempt unless committed by parties to whom its writ or order had been directed. When the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery was established, it originally followed the law in this respect, and it was only attempts to deter witnesses from giving evidence which were deemed a contempt (Tothill's Reports). It was not until the time of Lord Hardwicke that the doctrine of “constructive contempts” was established in the Court of Chancery, and applied to language out of court reflecting on the court or prejudicial to the suitors (2 Atkins's Reports). His ascendancy, especially over the judicature, was great, lasting for twenty years, and it enabled him to establish the jurisdiction too firmly to be shaken. It has been acted upon in that court ever since, down to the time when that court was merged in the "High Court," and since then it has been exercised in the same way by the judges of the Chancery Division. It was attempted, in the time of Lord Mansfield, to assert a similar jurisdiction in courts of law. The printer, Almon, made a libellous attack upon him for something he had done in his office as Chief Justice. The Chief Justice desired to punish him for it summarily as for a contempt; and Mr. Justice Wilmot supported him to the utmost, and prepared an elaborate judgment in vindication of the jurisdiction thus attempted to be asserted. But Mr. Justice Yates and Mr. Justice Aston dissented, the attempt miscarried, the proceeding was abandoned, and the judgment never was delivered. The case in the form in which it appeared in a posthumous publication, without any explanation, has often been cited as an authority; but it is really no authority at all. On the contrary, the history of the case shows that the attempt to assert the jurisdiction was novel and was unsuccessful, which further appears from the fact that, though cases from time to time arose of a similar character—that is, attempts to prejudice a pending case by publications—these were never dealt with as contempt, but by criminal information (see Birkenshaw's case, Loftt.; R. v. Gray, 8 Burrow's Reports; R. v. Jolliffe, 4 T. R. 285).

So continued the law down to our own time; and, accordingly, as already noticed in the cases of Whalley and Skipworth, no authorities could be cited except the cases of Wellesley and Charlton—cases essentially different. It is, however, to be borne in mind that, since the Titchborne case, the Judicature Act has come into operation, constituting one High Court, vested with all the jurisdictions belonging to all the old courts; and, as this jurisdiction of contempt had become firmly vested in Chancery, it became vested in the High Court, to the extent to which it had thus been exercised in Chancery. That jurisdiction, however, had only been exercised in Chancery while a suit was pending, and on the ground that it interfered with the proceedings of the court. But in courts of law, cases have occurred in which the jurisdiction has been exercised over counsel and over the sheriff, for utterances or publications after the case was over. These cases, which are curiously in point, have occurred more than once at the assizes; and it is to be observed that all the courts in succession held, in the case of Ex parte Fernandez, 30 Law J. Rep. C. P. 821, that courts of assize have in this respect all the powers of the courts at Westminster, and that a court of assize continues while its commission is undetermined. Now in the Court of Queen's Bench it was held many years ago that counsel could be fined for language in court reflecting on a juror: Re Pater, 33 Law J. Rep. M. C. 142; and in the case of Mr. Charley, in 1870, the late Mr. Justice Willes, at the Manchester Assizes, held him amenable to the summary jurisdiction of contempt for a publication reflecting upon the jury in a case that had been tried. The learned judge caused Mr. Charley to be summoned before him, and asserted in the strongest terms that he had been guilty of a grave contempt, and only abstained from inflicting some sentence upon him in consideration of his prompt submission and the intercession of Mr. Aspinall, as the leading counsel present. Then there was the case of Mr. Evelyn, the sheriff of Surrey, who, in 1860, was brought before the judges of assize and fined £500 for a placard posted outside the court reflecting on the judges. That course was taken by the judges of assize, the late Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Blackburn, with the sanction of the Lord Chancellor, whom they consulted; and, excluding the point as to privilege, it goes the whole length of the case of Mr. Gray, except, indeed, that his case was far more serious than Mr. Evelyn's, and far worse than Mr. Charley's, as the publication by Mr. Gray imputed gross misconduct to the jury, who had just given a verdict of guilty on a capital case, and it was calculated to hold them up to popular vengeance. The case, therefore, in its character was as bad as can possibly be conceived; and, if it did not actually amount to a breach of the peace, it was calculated to incite to something far worse. Moreover, it was the conduct of the officer of the court, whose peculiar function it was to protect the court, and uphold its proceedings, and sustain and enforce the justice of the realm. It is very unlikely that, in such a case, a committee of the House of Commons will see any reason to recommend the House to interpose and take any step that might appear to reflect upon the judge, or weaken the power of the judicature to uphold the respect due to justice from their own officers.—Law Journal.

ARREARS OF RENT (IRELAND) ACT, 1882.

The following Instructions to Investigators have been issued:—

Having regard to the danger that tenants run of being excluded from the benefits of the Act through their not making a sufficient payment pursuant to section 1, sub-section 1 (a), the Land Commissioners empower you, where a tenant's application is referred to you for investigation, to issue in any such case to a tenant who may apply to you for same, a receivable order authorising him to lodge in bank to the credit of the Land Commission the particular sum, which, upon the investigation, you may consider he is bound to pay to his landlord in order to obtain the benefits of the Act.

If therefore it appears upon investigation that a tenant has not paid or satisfied the entire of the rent for "the year expiring as aforesaid," and that a further payment is requisite for the purpose, the Investigator will inform the tenant that, if he so desires, he can have a receivable order enabling him to lodge the necessary amount in any branch bank of the district on or before, but not after, the 30th November.

The Investigator shall then, if requested, fill up and sign one of the forms of orders herewith sent, specifying the particular sum, and the tenant can lodge the amount in any bank with such order.

The foil of the receivable order, filled in the same way as the order itself, is to be attached by the Investigator to the tenant's application in form E.

THE SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACTS FOR THE SALE OF SHARES IN CORPORATIONS.

The tendency of courts of equity to extend their jurisdiction to enforce the specific performance in the case of contracts for the sale of personal property has certainly been productive of some uncertainty as to what will be the result of proceedings in a given case unless an authoritative decision on a similar statement of facts has been rendered by the court in which relief is sought. The ancient practice of confining the jurisdiction, for the most part, to cases where the contract was for the sale of real estate, however much it might be criticised as setting up an arbitrary rule for which no satisfactory reason could be given, at least produced harmony and uniformity in the decisions, and furnished guidance in practice. This limitation, with exceptional jurisdiction, assumed in cases where the subject of sale was of no general value, and was valuable chiefly to the person seeking its delivery to himself, and who, unless there were delivery in specie, would be without adequate remedy, was generally recognised in the early English cases. It is stated generally in the books that the practice of decreeing specific performance of contracts for the sale of real estate, and of declining to so enforce those for the sale of personal property arose, not out of the inherent differences between real and personal estate, but because an action at law for damages for breach of the contract for the sale of real estate did not afford adequate relief, while such action did fully compensate when a bargain for the sale of personal property was not completed. The great increase in wealth, the more intimate and involved business and commercial intercourse between individuals and communities, the new and divers forms which rights in property have taken, long since rendered this doctrine too narrow to meet the necessities produced by changed circumstances, and the extension of jurisdiction in equity to decree specific performance in a great variety of contracts of sale has followed. The extension of the power of the court to enforce contracts for the sale of stock in corporations and other securities that are bought and sold in the stock markets of the world seems to be a step in the direction of general enforcement of contracts to sell personal property of every kind. An examination of the authorities shows that specific performance of contracts of this kind is decreed by some courts, and denied by others, under almost similar circumstances. In the early case (Cuddee v. Rutter, 6 Vin. Ab. 538), decided in 1719, the court declines to order specific performance of a contract for the sale of £1,000 of South Sea Company stock, saying that there is no difference between this £1,000 of stock and any other £1,000, and leave the plaintiff to seek his remedy at law where it can be fully secured. In Doloret v. Rothschild (1 Sim. & Stuart, 590), decided in 1824, without commenting on Cuddee v. Rutter, and disregarding its authority, the Vice-Chancellor says, that a bill asking specific performance of a contract for the sale of Neapolitan stock will lie, because the remedy at law may not be efficient, since the defendant may be irresponsible, and unable to respond to a judgment for damages. In Clark v. Flint (22 Pick. 231), where a bill is brought to obtain delivery of a ship according to a contract of sale, Wilde, J., referring to the doctrine that equity will grant relief because the efficiency of the legal remedy depends on the solvency of the defendant, says, that "the doctrine ought to be laid down with some limitation," but approves it if actual insolvency be shown. It is entirely true that for this reason there might be a failure of justice between the parties; but the general application of the rule would extend the exercise of this power of the court to the enforcement of all contracts for the sale of personal property, even to those for the sale of general merchandise, which all courts agree are not so enforceable. In Duncuft v. Albrecht (12 Sim. 189), decided in 1841, specific performance of an agreement to sell shares in the London and Southampton Railroad is decreed; and the Vice-Chancellor says, that such stock is not analogous to Government stock, because it is limited in amount, and not always to be had in the market. This decision has been repeatedly confirmed in England: (Cheale v. Kenward, 3 De. G. & J. 27; Parish v. Parish, 82 Beav. 207.) In Connecticut, a contract for the sale of bank shares is treated like one for the sale of flour, corn, or the public funds, and specific performance refused: (Cowles v. Whitman, 10 Conn. 120.) In New Hampshire the same rule prevails: (Eastman v. Plumer, 46 N. H. 464.) In Ross v. Union Pacific R. R. Co. (Woolw. C. C. 26), Mr. Justice Miller says, the rule should be the same, whether railroad shares or Government bonds are the subject of the contract, and questions the propriety of making the distinction mentioned in the English case. This, however, arguendo, as the case turned on other considerations. In Pennsylvania (Strasburg R. R. Co. v. Echernacht, 21 Penn. 220), the court declines to enforce specifically a subscription agreeing to take stock in a railroad, and says the remedy at law is complete. In another case in the same State (Foll's appeal, 91 Penn. 434), a bill was brought to compel the transfer of fifteen shares of a national bank. The plaintiff had purchased a large number of the shares, and contracted for the sale to him of the fifteen shares in question, which, secured, would give him a majority of the whole number. The court declines to enforce his contract, and says that a national bank is a quasi-public institution, that the note-holders, stockholders, and depositors are to be protected, and that those would not be benefited by the concentration of the majority of the stock in the hands of one man; also, that the court is not to use its extraordinary power to assist in "miscellaneous stockjobbing operations," and that the end sought to be obtained by the bill is against public policy. Nothing is said about the adequacy of legal remedy. If the language of the court means that it will decline to enforce a contract for the sale of shares of stock on the ground that it is improper to enforce such contracts because "miscellaneous stock-jobbing operations" are unlawful, it is placing such contracts on a different level with other contracts relating to personal property, and announcing that they are not entitled to the consideration of courts of equity. It is difficult to see why a capitalist may not lawfully and properly buy all the shares of any corporation that are purchasable, and why, if his purchase of the first lot be enforceable in equity against his vendee, his purchase of the last fifteen shares is not equally so, though the effect of securing them be to make him the owner of a majority of the whole stock. The court, in this case, assumed that the note-holders, depositors, and stockholders would be injuriously affected by a concentration of a majority of the stock in one man's hands, and that, therefore, it would be against public policy to allow the bill. It is not clear what is the purport of the phrase "miscellaneous stock-jobbing operations." But it is evidently intended by it to condemn the transaction in some way, though the facts show that the vendee (and appellant) was the actual owner of the shares, and made a contract for their sale binding at law, which ought to relieve the transaction from the imputation of being one of stock gambling, when the vendee is not the owner of the shares at the time of sale, and the real transaction is simply a wager on the future price. The fact that the result of decreeing specific performance is to place one party in control of a majority of the shares of a corporation, alone does not appear a sufficient reason for denying the relief asked for in the bill. The other shares may be owned or controlled by an adverse interest which opposes the plaintiff's proceedings, and the direct result of the court's inaction would be to give this interest the control instead of the plaintiff, who has been more diligent, and purchased the balance of power. The court is deciding virtually who shall control, whether it allows or denies the plaintiff's bill. A petition for a writ of mandamus is filed after a disputed election of officers in a parish where the parties were almost evenly divided, and the case turns on the legality of a single vote cast. It could not be claimed that the court should decline to act on the ground that it is against public policy to assist one set of electors in controlling a corporation, if it be shown that their candidates were rightfully chosen. In Baldwin v. Commonwealth (11 Bush, Ky. 417), specific performance is enforced when the State authorities sold shares in a turnpike in accordance with authority conferred by the Legislature. In Leach v. Fobes (11 Gray, 506) specific performance is decreed of an agreement of compromise which provided for the transfer of shares in a corporation, and for the conveyance of real estate. The court says that it will not undertake to decide whether a suit in equity can be supported for the sole purpose of enforcing a contract for the sale of shares in a corporation; but that, as the court will give relief for that part of the agreement which relates to the conveyance of real estate, it will also entertain jurisdiction of the whole agreement. Todd v. Taft (7 Allen, 371) is cited in some of the text-books as following the doctrine of Duncuft v. Albrecht, in holding that contracts for the sale of stock are to be specifically enforced in the same manner as those for the sale of real estate. An examination of the case shows that such statement is not exact. A bill in equity was brought for specific performance of this agreement: "Received of A. B. his note for $5,200, 40 dollars six months from date, for which I agree to transfer and deliver to said A. B. or his order fifty shares of the Providence and Worcester Railroad stock, upon the condition that said note is paid at maturity, without grace, and I am to have dividends upon said stock and deduct same from note at maturity, said A. B. to have full power to vote upon said stock. (Signed) R. T." It appeared in evidence that the parties had met before the maturity of the note, and that the plaintiff asked the defendant if he would renew the note, and spoke of it as maturing on the first and fourth of the month, by mistake, supposing that he was entitled to days of grace; that telegrams and letters were exchanged which resulted in the plaintiff's calling on the defendant on the fourth of the month and demanding the transfer of the stock; also, that the stock was worth 1,200 dollars more than when the contract was made. The defendant declined to accept the money and transfer the stock. In the opinion the court says that the contract was an executory one by A. B. to convey the stock upon certain conditions; but that, practically, as regards the rights of the plaintiff, it created all the liability to make payment that would have attended a purchase and transfer of the stock. And further, "In the view we take of this case, it is to be dealt with in equity much like the case of a sale of stock, absolute on its face, but in fact designed to secure the payment of a certain sum of money upon a future day certain, when a bond or other proper writing is given by the vendee, undertaking to transfer the shares to the debtor upon payment at the day named of the sum stated. It is so for the reason already stated, that Farnum had become the debtor of Taft for the balance of the purchase money: (Jones v. Robbins, 29 Maine, 351.) It seems, therefore, to be a proper case for relief from forfeiture of a right, occasioned by want of exact performance by the party on the day stipulated in the agreement, if there exist such ground for relief as entitles the party to the aid of a court of equity." The court finds that the evidence showed a neglect on the part of the defendant to inform the plaintiff of the precise day of payment and acquiescence in the plaintiff's error as to the day, and decrees specific performance. It is to be noticed that nothing is said in the opinion of the authority of Duncuft v. Albrecht and the English cases following it, or of the jurisdiction of courts of equity to enforce specifically simple contracts for the sale of stock; a singular omission, certainly, if the court were passing upon a doubtful question, and one hitherto never decided in this State. The decision seems to be put fairly by the court on the ground that it was "a proper case for relief from forfeiture of a right occasioned by want of exact performance." And, as the conclusion must have been the same had the subject of sale in the agreement been ten bales of cotton or a cargo of flour, it does not seem to be correct to cite the case as a decision of the Massachusetts court, that contracts for the sale of stock are to be enforced as of course. It is not to be expected, perhaps, that the various decisions shall be found to state a uniform principle which is to be applicable in all like cases, since, although the equitable discretion which is exercised in determining each case is a sound discretion governed by precedents and authorities, the different circumstances attending each case are sufficient in many instances to explain the conclusion reached. In Duncuft v. Albrecht the issue was clearly defined and simple, and the decision was reached that contracts for the sale of stock in corporations were enforceable because the plaintiff had not a complete remedy at law. There was no evidence in the case that the shares could not be had in the market, or that there was any difficulty in ascertaining their exact value so that a jury could assess damages for the broken contract at law; either of which circumstances existing might be good ground for decreeing specific performance and delivery. Are the reasons given for that decision applicable in this country, where the shares bargained for are sold daily, and pass from hand to hand with as little formality as accompanies the transfer of a promissory note? The shares of most of our railways, banks, and the large manufacturing companies are the subject of daily sale at the stock exchange of New York and other cities, and their price quoted with the same frequency as that of English consols or United States bonds. One hundred or one thousand shares of the Western Union Telegraph Company or the Union Pacific Railroad, for example, are ordinarily quite as readily obtained as 100,000 dols. U. S. 4's; and any lot of those amounts answer the requirements of a contract for their sale as well as the lot owned by the vendee. Indeed, it can hardly be said of some of our stocks, as it was by the Vice-Chancellor in the case before him, that they are limited in amount. The reasons given in Duncuft v. Albrecht for decreeing specific performance seem to exist in almost all conceivable cases where personal property is the subject of the contract; the kind of property is limited in amount, and may not be always obtainable in the market. And unless courts of equity are to take the ground that natural justice requires the enforcement by them of all valid contracts, the doctrine of Duncuft v. Albrecht, if applied here to contracts for the sale of securities which are frequently quoted and sold, seems to be anomalous and to extend jurisdiction to cases where there is full and complete remedy to be had at law.—American Law Review.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

NOTE BENE.—Information intended for publication under the above heading should reach us not later than Friday morning in each week, as publication is otherwise delayed.

Mr. J. G. Swift MacNeill, A.M., Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed Professor of Constitutional, Criminal, and Crown Law at the King's Inns.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

A Concise Exposition of the new Conveyancing Acts, 1881 & 1882, and of the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, and the General Order thereunder: with Practical Hints, and an Appendix containing the Acts and Order. Third Edition. By ARTHUR UNDERHILL, LL.D., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, &c., assisted by HARRY LINDSAY MANBY, M.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. London: Richard Amer, Law Publisher, Bookseller and Binder, Lincoln's Inn Gate, Carey-street, W.C. 1882.

Cassell's Illustrated Almanac for 1883. London, Paris, and New York: Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co.

Our Happy Family: Being the Little Folks Annual for 1883. London, Paris, and New York: Cassell, Petter, Galpin, & Co.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

KING'S INNS.

HONOR EXAMINATION.—25TH OCTOBER, 1882.

THE LAW OF MORTGAGE OF REAL ESTATE.

Examiner—PIERS F. WHITE, Esq., Q.C.

1. Why is parol evidence admissible to prove that an absolute conveyance of land is in reality a redeemable security?
2. What is an equitable mortgage, and in what ways may it be created? What was decided by Russell v. Russell?
3. The trustee of a settlement deposits the title deeds of the settled lands as a security for an advance without notice of the settlement. Are the cestuis que trust affected by the lien? Why is this so?
4. In what case is it advisable to take a mortgage by way of sub-lease? State the ordinary form of such a mortgage, and what covenants and powers are now implied where the mortgagor conveys as "Beneficial Owner?"
5. What is a judgment mortgage? Explain the process of making a judgment a charge on real estate in Ireland.

6. On what footing is a mortgagee in possession bound to account? What are annual rests?

7. Give the substance of Sections 40 and 42 of the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 William IV., c. 27, as affecting mortgages, and state how Section 40 has been amended by the Real Property Limitation Act of 1874, and as from what date?

8. What alteration in the law of mortgage was effected by Locke King's Act, 17 & 18 Vict., c. 118? From what time did it take effect?

9. How has Locke King's Act been amended by the subsequent Acts, 30 & 31 Vict., c. 69, and 40 & 41 Vict., c. 84, respectively?

10. Can a mortgagee on being paid off be compelled to assign the debt and security to a third person? Why so?

11. What are the rights of a mortgagee in the event of his debtor's bankruptcy?

12. A. mortgages Blackacre for £1,000 to B. in 1879, and Whiteacre for £3,000 to B. in 1882, can A. redeem one of these mortgages without redeeming the other?

13. What is the order of priority between registered legal mortgages and equitable mortgages by deposit without writing? Can you cite any leading authority, in Ireland or England, on this point?

MICHAELMAS SITTINGS, 1882.

The following gentlemen have been admitted as Students of Law:—

1. Edward Marmaduke Sellors, Student, T.C.D., eldest son of Michael Sellors, of George's-street, in the City of Limerick, Esq., Solicitor.

2. James Benjamin Byrne, Student, T.C.D., only son of John A. Byrne, of Leeson-street, in the City of Dublin, Esq., Q.C.

3. Reginald Thomas Harris, B.A., University of Dublin, youngest son of William Wallace Harris, of Mountjoy-square, in the City of Dublin, Esq., LL.D., Barrister-at-Law.

4. Daniel James Wilson, Student, T.C.D., eldest son of the Rev. Mervyn Wilson, of Camus Rectory, Strabane, in the County of Tyrone.

5. Percival David William Campbell Gausson, Student, T.C.D., eldest son of D. Campbell Gausson, of Shanemullagh House, in the County of Londonderry, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, J.P.

6. William Charles Gardner, Student, T.C.D., eldest son of Robert Gardner, of Clyde-road, in the County of Dublin, Esq.

7. J. Barcroft Anderson, Student, T.C.D., only son of Samuel Lee Anderson, of Lower Bagot-street, in the City of Dublin, Esq., Barrister-at-Law and Crown Solicitor.

8. William Sullivan, Student, T.C.D., second surviving son of The Right Hon. Sir Edward Sullivan, Bart., of Fitzwilliam-place, in the City of Dublin, Master of the Rolls.

9. George Arthur Mahon, B.A., University of Dublin, elder son of Henry Walshe Mahon, late of Westport, in the County of Mayo, Esq., M.D., R.M., deceased.

10. Henry Thomas Hulbert Hewetson, Student, T.C.D., eldest son of Henry Alexander Hewetson, of Aghnacloy, Ballybrack, in the County of Dublin, Esq., J.P.

11. William Cotter Stubbs, Student, T.C.D., only son of the Rev. John William Stubbs, of Fort William, Finglas, in the County of Dublin, D.D., S.F.T.C.D.

12. Charles William Henry Dunne, Student, T.C.D., only son of William Dunne, late of the City of Londonderry, Esq., M.D., deceased.

13. Robert James Drake, B.A., University of Dublin, third son of John Drake, late of Banbridge, in the County of Down, Esq., deceased.

14. Andrew Breakey Hamilton, M.A., Queen's University, third son of the Rev. Samuel Hamilton, of Saintfield, in the County of Down.

15. Thomas Harrison, B.A., Queen's University, eldest son of William Harrison, late of Ballycowan in the County of Down, Farmer, deceased.

16. John Stanley, Student, T.C.D., only surviving son of Colonel Edward Stanley, of Summer-hill, in the County of Armagh.

17. Richard Keene Gamble, Student, T.C.D., second son of Richard Wilson Gamble, of Fitzwilliam-square, in the City of Dublin, Esq., Q.C., County Court Judge.

18. John Beach Sandford, Student, T.C.D., eldest son of the Rev. William Sandford, of Clonmel, in the County of Tipperary, M.A.

19. George Comerford Green, Student, T.C.D., third son of James Sullivan Green, of Leeson-street, in the City of Dublin, Esq., Q.C.

20. Daniel Martin Wilson, Student, T.C.D., fifth son of the Rev. David Wilson, of the City of Limerick, D.D.

21. Edward Francis Ennis, Student, T.C.D., second son of Edward Armstrong Ennis, of Grosvenor-road, Rathgar, in the County of Dublin Esq., Solicitor.

22. John Donaldson, M.A., Queen's University, fourth son of the Rev. Joseph Donaldson, late of the Manse, Fermoy, in the County of Cork, M.A., deceased.

23. James Moody Lowry, B.A., University of Dublin, eldest son of Thomas Kennedy Lowry, late of Ballytrim, Killyleagh, in the County of Down, Esq., Q.C., deceased.

24. Brinsley John Hamilton Fitzgerald, B.A., University of Oxford, fourth son of Sir Peter Fitzgerald, late of Valentia, in the County of Kerry, Knight of Kerry, deceased.

25. Coleman Byrne, Student, T.C.D., second son of William L. Byrne, of Loughrea, in the County of Galway, Esq.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

FINAL EXAMINATION FOR APPRENTICES TO SOLICITORS, Pursuant to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (Ireland), 1866.

MICHAELMAS SITTINGS EXAMINATION, 1882.

PRACTICE OF THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. FINDLATER, M.P., Examiner.

1. Define any three acts of Bankruptcy, other than the filing of a Declaration of Insolvency—and an Assignment in trust for the benefit of Creditors?

2. Suppose a sheriff to levy by seizure and sale the amount of an execution against the goods of a trader, what are the duties of the sheriff in respect of the money so levied, and when does the execution creditor become entitled to get the amount from the sheriff?

3. If a bankrupt or arranging debtor shall have contracted a debt payable by instalments, can the creditor prove in the bankruptcy, or arrangement matter for the instalments not due at the filing of the petition?

4. At the sitting to adjudicate a trader on the petition of a creditor, state what matters must be proved? If on the petition of a debtor, state what matters must be proved?

5. State under what circumstances the Resolution or Agreement of Creditors, confirmed by the Court at the second private sitting in an arrangement matter, can be altered or annulled: What proceedings should be taken to alter or annul same; and what will be requisite to render the altered or annulled Resolution valid?

6. If the Court commits a person to prison for not fully answering to its satisfaction, what is absolutely necessary for the Solicitor having the carriage of the proceedings to do?

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY
OF IRELAND.

SOLICITORS' APPRENTICES.

Result of PROFESSOR HICKSON'S Special Examination in Law, held on 7th of November, 1882.

The following Apprentices have passed an Examination to the satisfaction of the Professor of Law in the subjects of the Lectures delivered in 1881-82, pursuant to the 25th of the Society's Rules of October, 1866.

The names are arranged in order of merit.

The gentlemen placed first, second, and third on the list, have answered very well:—

- No. 1. Hugh Falconer
" 2. Robert E. M'Lean
" 3. Edward J. M'Morrow
" 4. Daniel Murray
" 5. Richard S. Holland

Three other gentlemen attended the Examination, of whom two, not having answered sufficiently, cannot obtain their Certificates, pursuant to the Rules of the Incorporated Law Society.

The papers of the remaining gentleman are under consideration.

By Order,
WILLIAM HICKSON, Professor.

Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, Dublin,
16th November, 1882.

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.
Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

John Russell and others, re-entry of notice.—William Montgomery, to sell under Partition Act.—J. Power, payment and cross notice.—G. Paine, proposals.—J. C. Anderson, as to title.—C. Kearney and others, from 2nd inst.—W. Hackett and others, payment by receiver.—H. Fitzgerald, lodgment of purchase money.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

Assignees W. Butler, rental.—A. W. Travers, to vouch.—H. M'Kelvey, rental.

TUESDAY.

John Trueman, final schedule.

WEDNESDAY.

Robert C. Reid, appointment of receiver.—J. Simpson and Assignees Millar, to set aside lease and as to valuation.

THURSDAY.

H. Gillman, appointment of receiver.—Trustee J. C. Fitzgerald, to sell discharge of jointure.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE OMSBY.

MONDAY.

Administratrix of Carolan, payment.—M. H. Jordan, objection.—K. A. Smith, adjourned motion.—Anne Raymond, delay.—A. W. West, as to cost.—M. Hall, from 18th.—A. J. Montgomery, objection.—T. Barklie, adjourned motion.—T. O'Neill, payment.—J. Young, to confirm sale.—F. L. Comyn, payment.—S. White, from 16th.—E. Dease, as to map.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

G. F. Walsh, rental.—Trustee George Webb, to vouch.

THURSDAY.

William Thorn, to make order absolute.—T. Graham, from 16th.—J. Murphy, carriage.—W. Petrie, objection.—E. M. O'Callaghan, delay.—W. Goggin, as to annuity.—S. E. Goodman, objection.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).
Mary O'Neill, rental.

LAND JUDGES' COURT.

SALES.

Nov. 3.—Before the Right Hon. Judge FLANAGAN.

COUNTIES ARMAGH AND DOWN.—Estate of John Lemon and others, owners; Administrator of James Lemon, petitioner.

Lot 1.—The Rope-walk Concerns with Workers' Houses, Nos. 83 to 131 Lemon's-row, Nos. 1 to 17 Glasshouse-place, and Nos. 4 and 6 Short Strand and Building Ground fronting Mount Pottinger-road in Ballymacarrett, Belfast, all held in fee farm; estimated annual profit rent, £656 7s. 7d. Sold to A. D. Lemon for £5,100.

Lot 2.—Shops and Stores Nos. 7, 9, 11, and 13 Corporation-square, and Nos. 86, 88, 90, 92, and 94 Tomb-street, Belfast, held in fee; annual profit rent, £424 18s. 9d. Sold to same purchaser for £3,500.

Solicitors: Messrs. Crawford & Lockhart.

Co. COX.—Estate of Henry Leader, owner; Margaret Coleman, petitioner.

Lot 2.—A fee-farm rent of £92 8s. 3d, payable out of part of the Lands of Castlewidenham, containing 173a. 3r. 35p. in the barony of Fermoy, held in fee; Griffith's valuation, £390. Sold to Mr. V. Smith for £2,125.

Lot 3. Part of the Lands of Ballygarrett, containing 79a. 3r. 30p., in the same barony, held in fee farm; annual profit rent, £88 6s. 6d. Sold to J. Preston for £1,750.

Solicitors: Messrs. Hanrahan & Co.

DUBLIN.—Estate of Sarah Oldfield, owner and petitioner.

Lot 1.—Dwelling-houses and premises, Nos. 27, 29, 31, 33, 35, and 37 Waterloo-place, Upper Leeson-street, held under lease for 150 years from 1844; annual profit rent, £33; tenement valuation, £181. Sold to Samuel Trulock and others for £810.

Lot 2.—Dwelling-house and premises, No. 39 Waterloo-place, aforesaid, held under same lease as Lot 1; annual profit rent, £8 10s.; tenement valuation, £57. Sold to John D. Milne for £160.

Solicitor: T. A. Cusack.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Butler, Thomas, and Francis Butler, of Castleisland, in the county of Kerry, builders and contractors, trading as Thomas and Francis Butler. September 1; Tuesday, November 21, and Tuesday, December 5. Richard Davoren, solr.

Cairns, J. Davidson, and Samuel Freckleton, both of 22 Queen's Arcade, Donegall-place, Belfast, in the county of Antrim, tailors, trading as "J. Davidson Cairns and Freckleton." October 27; Friday, December 1, and Tuesday, December 19. H. and W. Seeds and B. Thompson, solrs.

Crawford, Henry, of Warrenpoint, in the county of Down, grocer and licensed publican. October 27; Friday, December 1, and Tuesday, December 19. Thomas O'Meara, solr.

Daly, John, of 29, 30, and 31 Fleet-street, and 6 College-street, in the city of Dublin, vintner. October 31; Friday, December 1, and Tuesday, December 19. Michael Carton O'Meara, solr.

Garmany, Hugh, of Portadown, in the county of Armagh, grocer. October 31; Tuesday, November 28, and Friday, December 15. H. C. Neilson, solr.

Neill, James, of Priory-street, New Ross, and Arthurstown, both in the county of Wexford, provision dealer, publican, coal merchant, and miller. November 7; Friday, December 1, and Tuesday, December 19. T. M. Govern, solr.

Woods, John, of Golree, in the county of Monaghan, farmer. November 7; Tuesday, December 5, and Tuesday, December 19. M'William & Henry, solrs.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	NOVEMBER
	Sat. 11	Mon. 13	Tues. 14	Wed. 15	Thur. 16	Fri. 17
Paid Government.
3 p c Consols .. ..	—	100½	100½	100½	100½	—
3 p c Reduced .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
New 3 p c Stock .. ..	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1888 } Trsble. at	103½	103½	103½	103½	—	102½
3½ p c Jan. 1881 } Bk. of Irel.	—	—	—	—	100½	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland .. ..	—	—	320½	—	—	—
25 Hibernian Banking Co. ..	—	—	—	—	33½	33½
20 London and County (Ld'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock .. ..	—	—	—	—	47½	—
Do. New Scrips .. ..	—	—	—	21½	—	—
10 London and Westminster, H'd ..	71½	71½	71½	—	—	—
10 Do. New .. ..	—	—	—	63½	63½	—
31 Minister Bank (Limited) .. ..	—	—	7	7	7	7
Nat. Prov. of England, lim. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited) .. ..	—	—	24½	24	24	24
10 National of Liverpool (Ld'd.) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank .. ..	—	—	29½	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank .. ..	—	27	—	—	—	—
25 Standard of B. S. A., H'd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Union of Australia .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British & Irish .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin .. ..	—	—	—	—	100	—
50 Dublin & Liverpool Steam Ship Building Co.	—	—	—	—	—	—
Mines.
1 Killaloe Slate Co. (H'd) .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (H'd) ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance & Dub. Cons.' Gas ..	—	—	16½	—	16½	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited .. ..	—	—	5½	—	—	—
17 Hudson's Bay .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Dublin United Tramways ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Edinburgh Street Trams ..	—	—	—	12	—	—
10 L'pl Un'd Tram & Bus l'rd ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
10 Cork and Macroom .. ..	—	—	—	5	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland) ..	—	119	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western ..	—	—	—	116	116	—
100 Midland Gt. Western .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	89½
50 Waterford and Limerick ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 D. W. & W., 6 per cent. ..	—	—	—	—	145½	—
100 Gt. Nth'n (Irid) gr'd 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	108	—
100 Do. guaranteed 4½ p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c ..	—	—	108½	—	108	—
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c ..	—	—	104	—	—	104½
100 Do. 5 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
Leased at Fixed Rentals
100 Dublin and Kingstown .. ..	—	—	235	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast & Nth'n Coa. 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	105½
— Dublin & Wicklow 4 p c ..	105½	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. 4½ p c .. ..	—	108½	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	109½
— Do. 4½ p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. 5 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Gt. North'n & West'n 4½ p c ..	109½	—	—	—	—	109½
— Gt. South'n & West'n 4 p c ..	—	110	110½	—	—	110½
— Midland Gt. West'n 4 p c ..	106	—	—	—	—	105
— Do. 4½ p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	110
Miscellaneous Debent.
Alliance & Cons.' Gas, 4 p c ..	—	99½	—	—	—	—
Ballast Office Deb., 22½ 6s 2d, 4 p c	—	—	—	93½	—	—
Dub. & Glas. S. F. Co. (1887) 4 p c	—	100	100	—	—	—
Do. (1888), 6 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	102½
Dub. & Kingstown 4 p c .. ..	—	—	—	—	—	105
Dublin Water Works, 6 p c ..	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—4 per cent., 17th August, 1882
Of Deposit—1 per cent., 23rd March, 1882

Name Days—November 29th, and December 13th, 1882.
Account Days—November 30th, and December 14th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Sure Relief.—The weak and enervated suffer severely from nervous affections when storms or electric disturbances agitate the atmosphere. Neuralgia, gouty pangs, and flying pains, very distressing to a delicate system, may be readily removed by rubbing this Ointment upon the affected part after it has been fomented with warm water. The Pills, taken occasionally in the doses prescribed by the instructions, keep the digestion in order, excite a free flow of healthy bile, and regenerate the impoverished blood with richer materials resulting from thoroughly assimilated food—wanting which, the strongest must inevitably soon sink into feebleness, and the delicate find it difficult to maintain existence. Holloway's Ointment and Pills are infallible remedies.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

MARRIAGES.

DAVIS and REED—November 11, at St. Michan's Church, by the Rev. Alfred Mitchell, assisted by the Rev. Charles B. Butck, Mr. John Davis, the Principal Registry, Court of Probate, Dublin, to Anne, widow of Mr. James Reed, Ballymoone, Gorey, County Wexford.

ERSKINE and HOWARD—November 2, at the Methodist Church, Clontarf, by the Rev. Pierce Martin, William James, third son of Joseph Erskine, Esq., Lower Abbey-street, to Mary Card (Polly), eldest daughter of James Howard, Esq., and granddaughter of the late Robert Howard, Esq., solicitor, formerly of Turret House, Glasnevin.

LITCHFIELD and CLARE—November 15, in St. Stephen's Church, Dublin, by the Rev. A. C. Thiselton, the Rev. George Litchfield, Curate of Stone, Staffordshire, to Emily, eldest daughter of Lewis Clara, of Warrington-place, Dublin, Esq., solicitor.

DEATHS.

BUCHANAN—November 11, at Great Charles-street, Mary Louisa, wife of Robert Buchanan, Esq., J.P., barrister-at-law, and youngest daughter of the late John Townsend Sinnott, Esq., J.P., Mountview House, Dundrum.

FITZGERALD—November 13, suddenly, in Dublin, John Alexander FitzGerald, Esq., solicitor, of Mountmellick, in the Queen's County, aged 61 years.

JOY—September 14, at Adelaide, South Australia, Conway Ludlow Holmes Joy, Esq., LL.B., third son of the late Henry Holmes Joy, Q.C., LL.D., of Belfast, and Mountjoy-square, Dublin.

LAWLESS—November 10, at his residence, Leinster Lodge, Rathmines, John Lawless, Esq., solicitor.

PHIPPS—November 9, at his residence, Bray, County Wicklow, in the 58th year of his age, Alfred John Phipps, Esq., of the Irish Land Commission.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50, DENZILLE-STREET. 3-7

INSURANCES:

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT CO. LIMITED.

SECURITY, &c. RECEIVERS IN CHANCERY. The Bonds of this Company are now accepted as Security for Receivers in Chancery, as provided by the Rules under the new Judicature Act. For particulars apply to the Manager—39, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN. 51

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS. ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE. ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA. ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,

the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 118 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewarts & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin. 67

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE,

Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection.

10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps. 21, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID, Curls the straightest and most unmanageable Hair, 3s. 6d., sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE, To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His GREAT HAIR RESTORE,

3s. 6d.; it changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Beware of Imitations of Ross's articles. As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 3s. 6d.; his DEPILATORY for removing Hair and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers. 7

IRISH LAW TIMES.

WANTED the following Numbers, for which full price will be given:—53, 54, 56, 68, 104, 112, 117, 208, 210.

Apply—53 UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ARRERS of RENT (IRELAND) ACT, 1882.

Wednesday, 15th November, 1882.

It is this day ordered by the Irish Land Commission that service of notice in Form A and of applications in Forms E and F effected by registered letter directed to the usual place of abode of the party intended to be served shall be deemed, for the purposes of the Act, good service, provided that the person by whom such letter has been posted shall prove to the satisfaction of the Investigator, upon the investigation or hearing of such application, the registry and posting of such letter, and that such letter contained a true copy of the notice or application intended to be served, and that it shall be also proved to the satisfaction of the Investigator that the address thereon endorsed was at the time of such posting the true address or usual place of abode of the party intended to be served, and that the said registered letter was not returned undelivered by the Post Office authorities, provided, nevertheless, that if it be shown that the notice did not in fact reach the party intended to be served, the Investigator shall not hold that good service was hereby effected.

[SEAL.]

151

ESTABLISHED 1851.

B I R K B E C K B A N K.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

62

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

S. F. FITZPATRICK wishes to inform the Solicitors of Ireland that he is a Licensed Valuator of Diamonds, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Pearl Ornaments, &c., for PROBATE and FAMILY DIVISION, and trusts from his long experience and practical knowledge to merit a share of their patronage.

111 GRAFTON-STREET (Opposite the Provost's).
Late of WATERHOUSE & Co.'s

90

AN IMPORTANT CONVENIENCE TO LAW WRITERS AND SOLICITORS.

STEPHENS'

SCARLET INK FOR STEEL PENS.

This Ink is unaffected by steel pens: it is a most brilliant and permanent colour; it retains its brilliant colour upon parchment, and consequently, of great value to Solicitors and Draughtsmen. Sold in stone bottles, by all Stationers, at 1s., 2s., 3s., and 6s. each; and in glass bottles at 6d. and 1s. each.

581

ROBERT WHYTE,

Ladies' & Gentlemen's  Boot & Shoe Manufacturer,1, NORTH FREDERICK-STREET
(Rutland-square),

ESTABLISHED OVER HALF A CENTURY.

Boots made for Weak Ankles, Deformed Feet, and Burgial purposes of every description.

All Work executed on the Premises under my personal superintendence.

None but first-class Workmen employed in either Making or Repairing.

WANTED—Waste Paper, Old Account Books, Old Lead, Zinc, Tailors' Cuttings, Printing Shavings. A quantity of Newspapers and Brown Lapping Paper always in stock, sold by the pound or cwt., at 7, Britain-lane. Address—PATRICK HARRATTY, 8, FISHER'S-LANE.

978

PUBLIC NOTICES:

S T O K E S B R O T H E R S,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN.

293

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

C R O W L E Y, H U M P H R I E S & C O.,
73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts, &c., &c.

160

D. W. C A R R O L L,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,

Wishes to call attention to his large

STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,

Direct in every instance from the Makers.
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of

LEATHER GOODS,
Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-
randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges.
Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge.

72

LITERARY and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,

No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.

J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 25 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones).

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees, Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.

Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.

91

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 500 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A. FROST, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham.

181

MONEY:

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE PERMANENT

BUILDING SOCIETY,

52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 2½ per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.

Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached.

Rates of Interest:—3½ per cent. per annum if taken for one year, or 4 per cent. per annum if taken for 2 or more years.

Depositors have the following guarantee, viz.:—
The entire funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgage of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.

80

52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.

£10
TO

£1,000

IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days.
Two UNERRING RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free.
Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London.

239

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1882.

No. 826

CRIMINAL ATTEMPTS.—I

SWEET are the uses of attempted assassination, if it be the means of shedding new light on one of the obscurest departments of the criminal law; and the alleged attempt to murder a judge may cause satisfaction to lawyers, from an abstract professional point of view, should it lead to a minuter examination and exposition of this description of crime authoritatively than it has yet received. On that charge (and for conspiracy to murder Judge Lawson) Patrick Delaney was committed for trial, on Monday last. Pending the issue, we shall apply no observations to the case, directly or indirectly. We accept of it merely as suggesting the subject of a paper, and shall here touch but briefly on the general doctrine, and some of the English decisions by which it has been authoritatively declared, as well as some less familiar American cases which, though not of binding efficacy, may prove instructive in point of exemplification.

It should be remembered that as a general rule intention is an element in crimes, as contradistinguished from torts or contracts; an intentional act being punished as a crime, when the same act if accidental would be only a tort, because an intentional act is likely to be repeated or imitated, and, therefore, there would be danger to the public safety if it were permitted with impunity. But such is the difficulty, or impossibility rather, of proving a mere intention, that per se it is not punishable criminally (unless there be an exception as regards treason). Some overt means must be used, by way of carrying out the intention, or, in the case of a crime of omission, there must be the absence of some overt act, from which the existence of the intention is inferred; and when thus coupled with an attempt to give effect to the intent, the subject may come within the orbit of the criminal law. Thus, "an intent to do a thing is not to be confounded with an attempt to do the thing," as observed by Worden, C.J., in Bechtelheimer v. The State (Indiana); "the first may exist without any steps being taken for the accomplishment of the purpose, while the other implies the taking of such steps." The history of the law on this subject is condensed in a few words by Sir James Stephen (Dig. Cr. L.). Originally the maxim Voluntas reputabitur pro facto appears to have prevailed, at least in some cases, though it is difficult to say how far it extended. The will, however, had to be shown by some overt act. After this maxim had become obsolete, a variety of cases were decided which proceeded on the principle that, though a bare intent to commit a crime was not punishable, an intent coupled with an act was criminal. The broadest expression of this view is to be found in Lord Mansfield's language in Scofield's case. More recently still, the view has been adopted that an act done with intent to commit a crime, and forming part of a series of acts which would constitute its actual commission if it were not interrupted, forms a criminal attempt. But, as Sir James Stephen observes, the other view has not been entirely given up, and he would hesitate to say that no act leading up to a crime could be criminal unless it amounted to an attempt.

Now, every attempt to commit an offence, whether treason, felony, or misdemeanour, is itself an indictable misdemeanour at common law, unless it is otherwise provided for by statute: see 1 Russ. Cr. L. 45; Burns, J., tit. "Attempt;" R. v. Cheeseman, 1 L. & C. 140, 9 C. C. C. 100; R. v. Gregory, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 77, 10 C. C. C. 459; R. v. Collins, infra; and so the American cases also hold, such as Nicholson v. State (Tenn., 1878). But, in some cases it is specially provided that attempts amount to felony, e.g., an attempt to murder (24 & 25 Vict., c. 100, ss. 11-15; 27 & 28 ib., c. 47)—an offence frequently described by the judges as, next to actual completed murder, the most serious crime known to the law: Harris & Toml., Cr. L., 2nd ed., 168. It is not easy, however, to formulate a strict definition of what constitutes an attempt, and the discussion on the subject in which, amongst others, the late Chief Justice of England and the authors of the (at that time proposed) criminal code of New York took part will be remembered. "An attempt may be said to be the doing of any of the acts which must be done in succession before the desired object can be accomplished; or rather, with the limitation that the attempt must be an act directly approximating to the commission of the offence;" Harris & Toml., Cr. L., 2nd ed., 16. "An attempt to commit a crime is an act done with intent to commit that crime, and forming part of a series of acts which would constitute its actual commission if it were not interrupted;" Steph., Dig. Cr. L. The point at which such a series of acts begins cannot be defined, but depends upon the circumstances of each particular case: ib. But an attempt can only be when there is such a beginning as, if uninterrupted, would end in the completion of the act: R. v. Collins, L. & C. 471, 9 C. C. C. 497, 33 L. J. M. C. 177, 10 L. T. N. S. 581, 10 Jur. N. S. 686.

In Collins' case, A, mistaking a log of wood for B, and intending to murder B, struck the log with an axe; and it was held that A had not attempted to murder B. But Sir James Stephen submits that A had committed an assault on B, with intent to commit a felony, within 24 & 25 Vic., c. 100, s. 38 (an offence with which Delaney does not appear to have been charged, in the case alluded to at the outset). With the highest deference, however, we doubt whether A had committed an assault. If it were so, it might be maintained, a fortiori, that a witch who punctures a puppet vicariously with needles in order to inflict sufferings on a living victim, thereby commits an assault on him. In a recent American case (The People v. Bird, 12 Reporter, 743), in which the defendant-appellant had "rushed," with a loaded pistol, towards the prosecuting witness, and gestured "menacingly," the jury were charged, upon a trial for assault with a deadly weapon, that, "if a person, having the present ability to commit a violent injury upon the person of another, and having with him a deadly weapon, rushes towards such other person with menacing gestures, and with a purpose to use such weapon, an assault is committed, though such person is prevented from striking or using the weapon before he comes near enough to do so." On appeal (Sept., 1881) from a conviction, it was objected that the charge had not said that the assailant must have reached a point near enough to inflict a wound. That, however, was implied from the words "though such person is prevented from using the weapon," according to M'Kinstry, J., who added: "The illustration of counsel, which supposes a person moving from San Francisco to assault another in Sacramento, and who is stopped at Benicia, is hardly applicable. The instruction, while expressed in general terms, is not abstract, but is to be construed with reference to the phase of the actual evidence which the jury might adopt." But, we find the necessity of a present ability to carry out the intent still more clearly announced, by the Supreme Court of Michigan, in another recent case: The People v. Lilley, 1 Crim. L. Mag. 605, 10 Reporter, 172. There the respondent had been found guilty of an assault with intent to commit manslaughter. A difficulty had arisen between M'Kenzie, the person claimed to have been assaulted, and the father of respondent, as to the proper division of certain wheat, then being threshed, and which led to blows. It appeared the respondent was struck on the head by M'Kenzie, and he thereupon "retreated" or walked toward the straw-stack, some ten or twelve feet distant. After respondent reached the straw-stack he turned around, took a knife out of his pocket, made some threat, and advanced towards M'Kenzie. After he had advanced one or two steps he was caught by a bystander, and there was some question as to whether the knife at this time was open or not, and witnesses testified that he was then ten or fifteen feet distant from M'Kenzie, and that respondent then put the knife in his pocket. This practically ended the matter. On exceptions taken, Marston, J., in delivering the opinion of the Court, said: "The instruction as given would seem to lay down the general proposition, 'that any intent to commit violence, accompanied by acts which, if not interrupted, will be followed by bodily injury, is sufficient to constitute an assault, although the assailant may not be at any time within striking distance.' Now, there may be an intent to commit violence, and this accompanied by acts preparatory thereto, which, if followed up, would clearly constitute an assault; yet, owing to the distance and surrounding circumstances, no possible assault would have been committed. Thus, one with a direct intent to do grievous bodily harm may purchase a deadly weapon, or having one he may, with like intent, put it in a condition to use with deadly effect. Yet, if the act stop here, it may, as a general proposition, be said that the party could not be convicted of an assault, and this irrespective of what may have caused the party to proceed no farther in the attempt. Other facts must be added, and this, we shall see, must be a present ability to carry out the intent. The act done must have been sufficiently proximate to the thing intended. It may be so remote, although a distinct and essential act, coupled with the intent, as to fall far short of constituting an assault. The act done must not only be criminal, but it must have proceeded far enough towards a consummation thereof, and this must necessarily be a question for the jury under proper instructions: 1 Bishop, Cr. L., c. 26; also s. 323. So, clearly, where the intent is formed, and some act done in performance thereof, but the party voluntarily abandons his purpose, or is prevented from proceeding farther, and this while at a distance too great to make an actual assault, he could not be convicted of an assault. What, then, constitutes an assault in law? It might be somewhat difficult to reconcile all the authorities upon this subject, and we shall not attempt it. Some of the tests, as putting the person assaulted in fear, cannot be relied upon, as evidently an assault may be made upon a person, even although he had no knowledge of the fact at the time. An assault is defined to be an inchoate violence to the person of another, with the present means of carrying the intent into effect. Threats are not sufficient; there must be proof of violence actually offered, and this within such a distance as that harm might ensue if the party was not prevented: 2 Greenleaf, Ev. s. 82; 3 ib. s. 59; 1 Bishop, Cr. L. s. 419; 3 Bl. Com. 120, note 3. We are of opinion, therefore, that the charge of the court as to what would constitute an assault was not sufficiently guarded, and had a tendency to mislead the jury. In cases of assault with intent to commit a felony, a specific intent must be found to exist, and it is very difficult to imagine how such a specific intent can be found to exist in the absence of reflection and deliberation. When once it appears that the assault was made with intent to take life, under circumstances where the killing would not be lawful or excusable, then, if under such circumstances death should ensue, the party would be guilty of murder. It seems like a contradiction of terms to say that a person can assault another with intent to commit manslaughter." See, also, Wright v. People, 33 Mich. 304. Threats, however, on which nothing appears to have turned in The People v. Lilley, might introduce another important element (though mere words will not amount to an assault: 1 Hawk. c. 62, s. 1; 2 Dick. J. 329; 1 Russ. C. & M. 750). But, they should be more unconditional than in The People v. Johnson (10 Reporter, 782), where the evidence was held insufficient to uphold a conviction for assault, the testimony showing that during an altercation the defendant took from her pocket a revolver, cocked it, and pointing it at the complainant, said, "If you come near me, I will shoot you," and thereupon the complainant went away. In State v. Shipman (81 N. C. 513) the defendant, after using threatening language with reference to the prosecutor, and in his hearing, advanced towards him with a knife, continuing the use of violent and menacing expressions. The evidence left it doubtful as to whether or not the knife was open; and when the defendant got within five or six feet of the prosecutor, the latter said, "I shall have to go away," and withdrew from the work upon which he was engaged. It was held that the defendant was properly convicted of an assault. In State v. Rawles (65 N. C. 334) it was decided that if a person be at a place where he has a right to be, and four other persons with a pitchfork, gun, &c., by following him, and using threatening and insulting language, put him in fear, and induced him to go home sooner than, or in a different way from the one he would otherwise have gone, the four were guilty of an assault, although they did not get nearer than seventy-five yards, and did not take the weapons from their shoulders. And in the recent case of State v. Martin (85 N. C. 508) where the defendant, being about twenty steps distant, advanced towards the prosecutor with a knife and stick, cursing and threatening to do him bodily harm—in consequence of which the prosecutor went into a store and remained until a warrant was obtained, the defendant walking in front of the store, saying he would whip the prosecutor if he came out—it was held (Oct., 1881) that the defendant was guilty of an assault; the principle being that no man by the show of violence has the right to put another in fear, and thereby force him to leave a place where he has the right to be.

INVESTIGATORS UNDER THE ARREARS OF RENT ACT.

It has always appeared to us that the office of Investigator under the Arrears of Rent (Ir.) Act, 1882, is one which solicitors are eminently suited to fill, and it is with regret, on public grounds, we have observed that their claims have been too apt to be overlooked. It is never too late to mend, however, and the appointment of Mr. Robert Ferguson cannot but be regarded as a step in the right direction. We feel confident not merely that he will give satisfaction, but that he will be the means of proving the propriety of promoting others from the ranks of his branch of the legal profession. The Act itself has expressly recognised the fitness for this office of solicitors, being members of a Sub-Commission.

VALEDICTORY ADDRESSES TO THE HON. F. A. FITZGERALD.

A special meeting of the Bar of Ireland was held on the 20th inst., at the Four Courts, for the purpose of presenting ex-BARON FITZGERALD with a valedictory address.

Amongst those present were :—

The Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, the Lord Chief Baron, Lord Justice Deasy, Lord Justice Fitzgibbon, Mr. Justice Andrews, Judge Warren, the Right Hon. Edward Gibson, Q. C., M. P.; Mr. Sergeant Sherlock, Q. C.; Mr. Sergeant Hemphill, Q. C.; Mr. De Moleyna, Q. C.; Mr. T. Parcell, Q. C.; Mr. Carton, Q. C.; Mr. Shekleton, Q. C.; Sir Samuel Ferguson, Q. C.; Master Bruce; Dr. Webb, Q. C.; Mr. Greene, Q. C.; Mr. John Gibson, Q. C.; Mr. Atkinson, Q. C.; Mr. John Monroe, Q. C.; Mr. Isaac Weir, Q. C.; The Maddermet, Q. C.; Dr. Boyd, Q. C.; Mr. Keys, Q. C.; Mr. J. A. Curran, Q. C.; Mr. J. A. Byrne, Q. C.; Mr. Hickson, Q. C.; Mr. Ryan, Q. C.; Mr. Lefroy, Q. C.; Mr. Jackson, Q. C.; Mr. Henry Fitzgibbon, Q. C.; Mr. T. P. Law, Q. C.; Mr. Ribey, Q. C.; Mr. Monahan, Q. C.; Mr. M'Laughlin, Q. C.; Mr. Jellett, Q. C.; Mr. Murphy, Q. C.; Mr. S. Walker, Q. C.; Mr. George Price, Mr. Orr, Mr. Bell, Mr. Wylie, Mr. Robertson, Mr. Cathrow, Mr. Shaw, Mr. Leech, Mr. Trench, Mr. H. Plunkett, Mr. S. N. Eirington, Mr. William Kenny, Mr. Sherlock, Mr. Newton, Mr. Alexander Holmes, Mr. Day, Mr. Brady, Mr. J. A. Rynd, &c.

Mr. SERGEANT SHERLOCK, Q. C., read the following :—

“Address from the Bar of Ireland, to the Honourable FRANCIS ALEXANDER FITZGERALD, LL.D., on his Retirement from the Bench.

“Sir,—On re-assembling at the close of the Summer Vacation, we, the Bar of Ireland, miss from the Bench in your person a judge who has so long presided over us with a dignity, impartiality, and gentle courtesy, our sense of which it will be difficult to embody in words. To dwell on the judicial qualities universally acknowledged which have so eminently distinguished you, would, we feel, be distasteful to one whose unobtrusiveness is well known, and whose advancement has always been unsought by himself, and due only to the public appreciation of his talents, learning, and integrity. But, whilst so refraining, we cannot suffer you to depart from us without expressing our deep sense of the loss which this country will sustain by your retirement, in the fulness of your powers, from the place which you have for over twenty years filled—to borrow words which can never be more worthily applied—‘without fear, and without reproach.’ On that Bench we can never hope to see a purer or more perfect character.—Signed on behalf of the Bar of Ireland, R. J. LANE, Father.”

The Hon. F. A. FITZGERALD, who was received with long-sustained applause, and seemed deeply affected, replied as follows :—Parting from active life and from the friends with whom I have been so long associated is to me a very serious and solemn matter. Even with your more than indulgent address before me, my thoughts will turn to the many failures and failings of a course of great responsibilities and unusually prolonged. But, be this as it may, it is natural, and I hope it is right, to take comfort and encouragement from the assurance that to the end of this long course I have retained the good opinion and the good-will of the profession to which it is and ever has been my pride to have belonged. You have given me this assurance, and I gratefully, most gratefully, thank you. I can truly say that of the honour of our common profession I have been always sensitive. You who are still bearing the burthen and heat of the day have maintained its honour as well as its reputation in all other respects, and I hope and believe that they ever will be maintained by those who follow you. Once more I thank you.

On the 22nd inst., the Council of the Incorporated Law Society of Ireland presented, on behalf of the Solicitors' profession, a valedictory address to the Hon.

F. A. FITZGERALD on the occasion of his retirement from the Bench.

The members of the Council present were :—

The President, Mr. Henry James Pelham West; the Vice-Presidents, Mr. Edward T. Stapleton and Mr. Henry L. Kelly; Messrs. William Findlater, M. P., ex-President; Henry Thomas Dix, Richard S. Reeves, Charles G. Stannell, John Henry Nunn, ex-President; Michael Larkin, Arthur Lee Barlee, John T. Hamerton, William Read, ex-President; J. Mathews, William D'Alton, Patrick Maxwell, W. Milward Jones, A. Tiedall, John Galloway, Shapland M. Tandy, Francis R. M. Crozier, Keith H. Hallows, Richard H. M. Orpen, Thomas C. Franks, Sydneyham Davis, Henry S. Mecreedy, Henry C. Nelson, Thomas R. Baillie-Gage, Robert O. Longfield, John B. Eaton, William B. Stanley, Thomas K. Roche, and John H. Goddard, the Secretary.

Among the general members of the Society present were :—

Messrs. Richard C. Walker, Samuel Walker, James O'Brien, R. Blair White, W. Grove White, Robt. Lyle, Patrick K. White, David Galbraith, Hubert C. West, Arthur H. Orpen, Henry B. Burton, E. Reginald Dix, Lewis Scallan, F. C. M'Gough, George W. Shannon, Mark C. Bentley, Ambrose Plunkett, John Read, Thomas Francis O'Connell, John D. Rosenthal, &c.

The PRESIDENT (Mr. West) said :—Sir,—The pleasant duty devolves on me, as President of the Incorporated Law Society, of reading to you the address which the council of that Society resolved should be presented to you; and I am sure, sir, it will not be unpleasing to you to learn from me that that address is the reflection of the unanimous opinion of a body, such as was composed of men having peculiar opportunities of forming that opinion, and who, while differing in politics and differing in creed are united, sir, in a sincere desire to pay a tribute of admiration and respect to one whom such a tribute is most justly due. I think, sir, it would be out of place for me to add any words of mine to the address, and with your permission I shall now read it.

“TO THE HON. BARON FITZGERALD.

“We, the Council of the Incorporated Law Society of Ireland, would but ill represent the feelings of our professional brethren if we allowed you to retire from the Bench without expressing our deep regret at the termination of your distinguished judicial career. For more than twenty years the solicitors of Ireland have had opportunities of observing your judicial life and character, and can bear testimony not only to your ability and learning as a judge, but also to your colourless impartiality and scrupulous fidelity in the administration of justice. Those who knew you at the Bar (a privilege enjoyed by some amongst us) well remember your brilliant qualities as a lawyer and an advocate, as well as the delicate sense of honour and purity of purpose which characterised your professional life. They expected a noble and spotless career upon the Bench to follow such a career at the Bar—and had the satisfaction of seeing their anticipations realised to the full in your judicial life. Although we well know that in the discharge of the high function committed to you, you have ever, in your conscious integrity, been regardless of praise or blame, we trust that you will accept this tribute of esteem which we desire to offer on behalf of our profession, and with it the most sincere assurance of our kindest wishes for your future welfare.—Signed on behalf of our profession, HENRY J. P. WEST, President; EDWARD M. STAPLETON and HENRY L. KELLY, Vice-Presidents; JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.”

The Hon. F. A. FITZGERALD replied as follows :—Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Council,—It would be strange indeed if I did not greatly value and gratefully receive this testimony of your regard. I know that—so as none other can—your profession truly represents the suitors and interests with which I have had to do as an advocate and judge. I know that you are gentlemen of high and unblemished honour in whom this confidence has been worthily reposed. That, in a long career, I have earned and enjoy, as you have been pleased to assure me, your esteem is to me a matter of incalculable worth, and I thank you most truly and sincerely. I also know it is true that there is an impulse of generous minds which leads them to forget that which is defective and to enhance what is good when they approve. I can, however, be sure that there will be in my own recollection of defaults and defects throughout a long and responsible career at least sufficient to allay, without rendering me less grateful for, your generous approval.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS SELECT COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGE.

(MR. GRAY, 1882.)

REPORT PROPOSED BY THE CHAIRMAN (adopted).

The Select Committee on Privilege to whom was referred the letter of the 16th August, 1882, from the Right Hon. Mr. Justice Lawson to Mr. Speaker, informing the House of the commitment of Mr. Edmund Dwyer Gray, a Member of this House, for contempt of court, "for the purpose of considering and reporting whether any of the matters referred to therein demand the further attention of the House," have considered the matters to them so referred, and have agreed to the following Report:—

1. Your committee have had before them an order dated the 16th August, 1882, made by the Rt. Hon. James Anthony Lawson, one of Her Majesty's judges, and presiding judge of Commission of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery, at a Session and Commission of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery, held at Dublin, in and for the County of the City of Dublin, and also a further order made and dated the 30th September, 1882.

2. By the first of these orders Mr. Edmund Dwyer Gray, the proprietor of a certain newspaper called the Freeman's Journal, and then and now one of the Members for Carlow, was adjudged to be guilty of contempt of court in having published during the said session, in the said Freeman's Journal newspaper, upon the 11th, 12th, 14th, and 15th days of August, 1882, respectively, certain publications and articles in contempt of the said court then sitting; and it was also thereby adjudged that the said Mr. Edmund Dwyer Gray should, for such his contempt of court, be imprisoned in her Majesty's prison in and for the County of the City of Dublin for the space of three calendar months, and that in addition, he should pay for his contempt a fine of £500 to her Majesty the Queen, to be levied off his goods and chattels, and that at the end of such period of imprisonment he should enter into recognizances, himself in the sum of £5,000, with two sureties each in the sum of £2,500, conditioned that he (the said Mr. Edmund Dwyer Gray) should be of good behaviour and of the peace for the space of twelve calendar months, and, in default thereof, should be imprisoned for a further period of three calendar months, unless in the meantime he should enter into such recognizances.

3. By the second of these orders it was ordered that on payment of a fine of £500 imposed on Mr. Gray he should be then discharged from further custody. These orders and the affidavits and exhibits on which they were founded are printed in the appendix hereto.

4. Your committee had also before them a transcript of notes taken by a shorthand writer of proceedings in the Dublin Commission Court on the 14th and 16th of August and 30th of September, 1882, in relation to such committal of Mr. E. D. Gray.

5. Your committee, having had such orders and affidavits and transcripts placed before them, proceeded to afford Mr. E. D. Gray an opportunity of making such observations on the matters referred to them as he might desire to offer.

6. Mr. Gray made an oral statement to your committee, and in the course and in support of such statement placed before your committee certain documents, which appear in the appendix under the heading "Papers handed in by Mr. Gray." A portion of such statement and the contents of such documents appear to your committee to be irrelevant to the specific object of the present inquiry; but your committee consider that it would not be expedient to omit from the appendix to this report any portion of what was laid before them, and therefore Mr. Gray's statement, and the documents above referred to, appear in the appendix.

7. Under all the circumstances of the case your committee are of opinion that the matters referred to them do not demand the further attention of the House.

8. And your committee also desire to express their opinion that Mr. Justice Lawson fulfilled his duty in informing the House that a Member of the House of Commons had been imprisoned by the order of the Commission Court of Oyer and Terminer before mentioned.

November, 1882.

MR. SEXTON'S REPORT (rejected).

1. Your committee have had before them an order dated the 16th of August, 1882, made by the Right Hon. James Anthony Lawson, one of her Majesty's judges, and presiding Judge and Commissioner of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery, at a Session and Commission of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery, held at Dublin, in and for the County of the City of Dublin, and also a further order made and dated the 30th of September, 1882.

2. By the first of these orders Mr. E. D. Gray, the proprietor of a certain newspaper called the Freeman's Journal, and then and now one of the Members for the County of Carlow, and High Sheriff of the County of the City of Dublin, was adjudged to be guilty of contempt of court in having published, during the said session, in the said Freeman's Journal newspaper, upon the 11th, 12th, 14th, and 15th days of August, 1882, respectively, certain publications and articles in contempt of the said court then sitting, and it was also thereby adjudged that the said Mr. E. D. Gray should, for such his contempt of court, be imprisoned in her Majesty's prison in and for the County of the City of Dublin for the space of three calendar months, and that in addition he pay for his contempt a fine of £500 to her Majesty the Queen, to be levied off his goods and chattels, and that at the end of such period of imprisonment he should enter into recognizances, himself in the sum of £5,000, with two sureties each in the sum of £2,500, conditioned that he, the said Mr. E. D. Gray, should be of good behaviour and of the peace for the space of twelve calendar months to her Majesty the Queen and all her subjects, and in default thereof should be imprisoned for a further period of three calendar months, unless in the meantime he should enter into such recognizances.

3. By the second of these orders it was ordered that on payment of the fine of £500 imposed on Mr. Gray he should be then discharged from further custody. These orders and the affidavits and exhibits on which they were founded are printed in the appendix hereto.

4. Your committee had also before them a transcript of notes taken by a shorthand writer of proceedings in the Dublin Commission Court on the 14th and 16th of August, and 30th of September, 1882, in relation to such committal of Mr. E. D. Gray, and your committee examined, in reference to the accuracy of such transcript, two shorthand writers whose evidence will be found in the appendix.

5. Your committee having had such orders and affidavits and transcript placed before them, proceeded to afford to Mr. E. D. Gray an opportunity of making such observations on the matters referred to them as he might desire to offer. Mr. Gray made an oral statement to your committee, which appears in the appendix, and in the course and in support of such statement placed before your committee certain documents which appear in the appendix under the heading, "Papers handed in by Mr. Gray."

6. Your committee, in considering whether any of the matters connected with the commitment of Mr. Gray demand the further attention of the House, have guided themselves by the principles laid down in the report of the select committee on Privilege appointed by the House in 1837 to consider and report upon the case of Mr. Leechmere Charlton, a member of the House, who had been committed to prison by the Lord Chancellor for writing a letter to a Master of the High Court of Chancery, "containing matters scandalous in respect to the said master," and "attempting improperly to influence his conduct in a matter pending before him."

7. The Select Committee in the case of Mr. Charlton felt it to be their duty not only to consider (1) the character of the letter in respect of which he had been committed to prison, and the reason he had for believing certain statements made in that letter to be true, but also to investigate (2) the particulars of the contempt, in order that the House might be informed of them, and might thereby be enabled to come to a decision upon the merits. The committee observed with reference to the letter that whilst it appeared "to be expressed in an intemperate and improper manner," it had, however, "been occasioned by information derived from the solicitor in the cause, the correctness of which Mr. Charlton had no reason to doubt," and, with regard to the particulars of the contempt, the committee reported that, "although the Lord Chancellor had the power to declare what he deemed to be a contempt of the High Court of Chancery, it was necessary that the House of Commons, as the sole and exclusive judge of its own privileges should be informed of the particulars of the contempt before they could decide whether the contempt was of such character as would justify the imprisonment of a member."

8. The Select Committee on Privilege in the case of Mr. Charlton therefore clearly laid down two principles, namely, (1), that it was their duty to consider and report as to the grounds of the belief of Mr. Charlton in the truth of the statements for which he had been committed; and (2) that it was their duty to ascertain and report the particulars of the contempt, in order that the House, as the sole and exclusive judge of its own privileges, should be enabled to decide whether the character of the contempt had been such as to justify the imprisonment of one of its members.

9. Applying these principles to the case of Mr. Gray, your committee have considered, in the first place, what grounds he had for believing that the statements made in the Freeman's Journal newspaper in the publications and articles alleged to have been in contempt of the said court were true. Those statements charged that in certain cases tried before the said court numbers of jurors of respectable position belonging to the Roman Catholic communion had been ordered by the Crown to "stand aside," whilst juries exclusively, or almost exclusively Protestant, had been sworn; and also that certain members of a jury empanelled in a capital case had been guilty of misconduct in the hotel where they were lodged during the night which intervened between the commencement of the trial and its conclusion. Your committee having heard the statement of Mr. Gray, and having examined the papers handed in by him, and the several exhibits in the case, are of opinion that he had no reason to doubt the correctness of the statements made in the Freeman's Journal newspaper, and alleged to have been in contempt of said court.

10. With regard to the second principle adopted by precedent from the case of Mr. Charlton—namely, that although the judge had the power to declare what he deemed to be contempt, the House should be informed of the particulars of the contempt, in order to decide whether it was of such a character as to justify the imprisonment of a member. Your committee reiterate the expression of their opinion that Mr. Gray had no reason to doubt the correctness of the statements alleged to be in contempt, and your committee in this connexion refer to the report of the judgment delivered in the case by Mr. Justice Lawson, from which it appears that the learned judge declared that one of the legal questions for him to consider, in order to come to a decision, was whether the publications and articles in the Freeman's Journal newspaper were intended to interfere with the administration of justice. Your committee are of opinion that, in order to arrive at an equitable decision upon that question, it was essential to inquire whether Mr. Gray believed, and had reason to believe, that the statements contained in the publications and articles were true. It is evident that statements made in good faith, even though held to constitute contempt, must be held to constitute contempt of a character materially different from that involved in statements made either with a knowledge of their falsehood or without a reasonable presumption of their truth. But Mr. Justice Lawson, although he declared "intention" to be a vital portion of the case, and thereby admitted to consideration the question of truth or falsehood, yet refused to hear a witness present in court who tendered his evidence on oath in support of the statements made in the Freeman's Journal; and, further, the learned judge declined either to allow Mr. Gray to go into the question of the truth of the statements or to grant an adjournment of the case, which was sought for by Mr. Gray on the plea that he would be able to clear himself of any charge as to the intention of the articles, and to prove that he had acted in good faith. Your committee consider that Mr. Gray, who it appears had received but a few hours' notice (from the evening of the 15th August to the morning of the 16th) of the intention to proceed against him, should have been allowed, by a reasonable adjournment, due facility for the preparation and production of his defence with regard to the intention of the publications and articles. Your committee also consider that the evidence tendered on his behalf in court should not have been rejected. The rejection of this evidence, and the refusal of an adjournment, are open the more gravely to question because, as it appears, the learned judge himself, in the course of the proceedings, repeatedly used expressions which left no doubt that he had already, by some method not indicated, brought his mind to a conclusion adverse to Mr. Gray upon the essential question of intention. Your committee consider that a member of the House charged with contempt of court should not have been denied those facilities for defence universally allowed to all who are charged with acts against the law. Your committee also consider, upon the question of the character of the contempt, that Mr. Gray, having no reason to doubt the correctness of the statements made in the Freeman's Journal, intended those statements not to "interfere with the administration of justice," but to secure the unimpeded admission to the jury box of persons duly qualified, without distinction of creed; and, in the particular case in which misconduct was charged against certain members of a jury, to induce the Executive to consider whether there was cause for recommending the extension of the Royal prerogative of clemency to the man who, on the verdict of the jury in question, had been condemned to death. Your committee, after careful consideration of all the facts in evidence before them, have no doubt of the accuracy of the statement of Mr. Gray, that the motive of the publications in the Freeman's Journal was to purify the administration of justice, so as to secure and increase respect for the law. Following the precedent laid down as hereinbefore recited by the Select Committee on Privilege, in the case of Mr. Charlton, your committee leave out of question the power of the judge to declare what he deemed to be contempt; but having ascertained and considered the particulars declared to be contempt in the present case, your committee, bearing in mind the law and usage of Parliament as to privilege of Parliament laid down in various statutes and numerous resolutions of both Houses, feel bound to report that in their opinion the character of the contempt was not such as to justify the imprisonment of Mr. Gray.

11. It appears, moreover, that Mr. Gray was adjudged to be guilty of contempt because of publications and articles referring to trials which had concluded before the publications and articles declared to be in contempt had appeared in the Freeman's Journal. Your committee are assured that it is the general practice of public journalists to comment freely in their journals on concluded trials, and the House may desire to consider whether a member of the House should have been condemned to imprisonment under the law of contempt of court for having acted according to the settled usage of the public Press, and whether, in the interests of independent public criticism of the administration of justice, it is any longer judicious to allow the law of contempt in this regard to remain without definition and limitation.

12. Apart from the questions raised in respect of the publications and articles in the Freeman's Journal, it is apparent to your committee that another question directly affecting the privilege of a member of the House, and his right to attend in Parliament was raised in the present case by Mr. Justice Lawson, and that it materially contributed to the judgment at which he arrived, and to the sentence passed by him upon Mr. Gray. The office of High Sheriff of the City of Dublin is held by Mr. Gray for the present year, and as it is part of the customary duty of the High Sheriff to attend upon the judges at the opening of the said Commission Court, Mr. Gray on the eve of such opening wrote to Mr. Justice Lawson, stating that he expected it would be needful for him to go at once to Parliament, and expressing confidence that his absence from the court would not be attributed to any want of due respect. At that time the learned judge made no reply, but in answer to an inquiry addressed to him by Mr. Gray some days after his committal to prison, Mr. Justice Lawson acknowledged the receipt of the letter sent to him by Mr. Gray before the opening of the Commission, and declared that the excuse, as he termed it, for the absence of Mr. Gray from the court had been quite sufficient. Nevertheless, at the hearing of the charge against Mr. Gray, the learned judge, in reply to observations by the defendant as to the need of further time to prepare his defence, said—"You are the High Sheriff, and you are bound to be always in attendance in this court;" and subsequently, upon the question of the alleged misconduct of certain members of a jury in the hotel, the learned judge declared that he held the High Sheriff "responsible for everything," although the High Sheriff, after notifying the judge of his intention, had proceeded to the House of Commons before the Commission opened, and had remained continuously in attendance upon the House, and in the discharge of his Parliamentary duty, until after the jurors accused of misconduct had delivered their verdict and been discharged, and until after the trials commented upon in the Freeman's Journal had concluded. There can be no doubt that the jurors in question, during their absence from court, were in charge of the Sub-Sheriff and of sworn constables and bailiffs, and that the High Sheriff was obliged to be absent all the time in London on Parliamentary duty. Yet, it appears that the learned judge, because of such absence, rebuked him, imposed a serious disability on him in regard to the preparation of his defence, and even went so far as to punish him for his absence in Parliament, since, in delivering judgment, the learned judge declared, "I think the position of Mr. Gray greatly aggravates his offence. I think he owed a duty to the court, which he has most seriously neglected." Your committee deem it to be impossible to come to any other conclusion than that Mr. Justice Lawson inflicted punishment on Mr. Gray for having performed his Parliamentary duty, and your committee are of opinion that this conduct on the part of the learned judge is a breach of the privilege of the House.

13. As the matter affects the honour of a member of the House, your committee deem it proper in reference to a complaint submitted to them by Mr. Gray to declare that certain charges made against him in the public papers, imputing to him wilful misuse of his capacity of High Sheriff to defeat the ends of justice, are entirely without foundation.

14. Your committee have to report that in their opinion the singularly anomalous condition of the law of contempt, as well as the facts set forth and the conclusions stated in paragraphs 9, 10, 11, and 12 of this report, demand the further attention of the House.

November, 1882.

MR. DILLWYN'S REPORT (rejected).

In this report the following conclusions were reached:—

Your committee, having had the orders and affidavits and transcript placed before them, proceeded to afford to Mr. E. D. Gray an opportunity of making such observations on the matter referred to them as he might desire to offer, and having examined Mr. Gray and considered the reports and comments in the Freeman's Journal which led to the commitment of Mr. Gray, the proprietor of that newspaper, are of opinion that the contempt which it is alleged Mr. Gray committed was not of such a character as to justify the imprisonment of a Member of Parliament.

It appears to your committee that by the law and usage of Parliament, privilege of Parliament belongs to every member of the House of Commons in all cases, excepting those of treason-felony and breach of the peace, and in the case of such exceptions it is obvious that punishment for such offences could only be awarded after trial and conviction by a jury.

The privilege of Parliament rests not only upon resolutions of the Houses of Parliament, but is also distinctly recognised by various Acts of Parliament. The resolution of the House above referred to, asserting the law and usage of Parliament in respect of privilege, was passed on the 20th of May, 1675, and in 1831 a Committee of Privileges reported that it had been considered as established generally that privilege is not desirable for any indictable offence, assuming thereby the preferment of an indictment.

The Acts of Parliament which recognise the privilege of Parliament which may be quoted are the 17th of Geo. II., c. 6; the 45th of Geo. III., c. 4; the 57th of Geo. III., c. 8; the 57th of Geo. III., c. 55; the 3rd of Geo. IV., c. 2; the 2nd and 3rd of Wm. IV., c. 93; and the 44th of Vict., c. 4. All these recognise the exemption of members of Parliament from arbitrary arrest until the matter of which he is suspected shall be first communicated to the House of which he is a member, and the consent of such House obtained for his committal.

Various cases have been brought under the notice of Parliament, in which members have been committed for contempt of court, in which the House, not insisting on its privileges, have not deemed it necessary to interfere; but there have been cases in which the contempt has consisted in a direct defiance or interference with one of the superior courts, as in the case of Mr. Wellesley Long in 1831, who took a ward of Chancery out of the jurisdiction of the court; or as in that of Mr. Leechmere Charlton in 1837, who, in writing a letter to one of the Masters in Chancery, attempted to interfere with an officer of the court in the performance of his duty with respect to a suit then pending. This latter case was referred to a Committee of Privilege; and your committee consider it desirable to quote some extracts from their report, which set forth the law and usage of Parliament in respect of privilege of members. The warrant for Mr. Charlton's commitment set forth that he was committed by the Lord Chancellor "for writing a letter to William Brougham, Esq., one of the Masters of the High Court of Chancery, containing matters scandalous with respect to the said Master, and an attempt improperly to influence his conduct in the matter pending before him." The reports, after preliminary matter, state that the committee are deeply impressed with the difficulty and importance of the question referred to them in the absence of authorities to which they can refer as clearly in point and directly bearing on this particular case. It will be seen from the early cases that the ancient definition of privilege of Parliament is that it belongs to every member of the House, except in cases of treason-felony, or refusing to give surety of the peace.

These exceptions, by the statement of the Commission of 1641, are further extended to all indictable offences by their resolution in 1697 to forcible entries and detainers; and in 1763, in conformity with the principle of the declaration of 1641, and of a subsequent resolution in 1675, to printing and publishing seditious libels, to which may be added the resolution of the Lords in 1757 that privilege shall not protect peers against process to enforce the habeas corpus. The ordinary process for contempts against persons having privilege of Parliament or of peerage has not been that of attachment of the person, but that of sequestration of the whole property, which has been found sufficient to vindicate the authority of the courts, even in cases of some aggravation.

It is stated by Blackstone that "contempts committed even by peers, when enormous and accompanied with violence, such as forcible rescues and the like, or when they import disobedience to the King's writs of prohibition, habeas corpus and the rest, are furnishable by attachment;" and the same doctrine has on different occasions been expressed by other writers and by judges of high authority.

The only cases, however, in which attachments have been found by the committee to have been actually issued against privileged persons are that of Earl Ferrers by the King's Bench, and that of Mr. Wellesley Long by the Court of Chancery, already referred to. The former was a case of disobedience to a writ of habeas corpus to which, while the discussion was pending it had been declared by the House of Lords privilege of Parliament did not extend; the other was that of the forcible removal of a ward of the Court of Chancery, and placing her out of the jurisdiction of the court, which obviously could only be checked by the most prompt and efficacious remedy.

Since the sitting of the last Committee of Privileges the Act of 2nd and 3rd William IV., c. 93, intitled "An Act for Enforcing the Process upon Contempts in the Courts Ecclesiastical of England and Ireland," was passed, by which contempts of the Ecclesiastical Courts in face of the court or the process thereof are directed to be signified to the Lord Chancellor, who is to issue a writ of de contumace capiendo for taking into custody persons charged with such contempt, "in case such persons shall not be a Peer, Lord of Parliament or Member of the House of Commons."

In the comments which appeared in the Freeman's Journal newspaper, and which led to the imprisonment of Mr. Gray, your committee do not consider that he intended to or did act in defiance of the court, or with the view of interfering with its action, as the trial to which they referred had been concluded, and the irregularities which were alleged to have occurred in reference to it, were of such a serious character as, if true, to render it desirable that public attention should be drawn to them, with the view of obtaining a full investigation; and your committee are of opinion that Mr. Gray's comments were made with this object, and not with the desire to prejudice or interfere with the administration of justice, but, on the contrary, to amend it.

On former occasions of committal of members for contempt the House has not considered it expedient to protest or take action in order to vindicate its privileges, but in no instance can it be considered to have waived them.

In the present instance, as Mr. Gray has been released from imprisonment, and under the circumstances of the case, your committee do not recommend that any further steps in the matter are necessary to be taken, although they are of opinion that there has been an infringement of the privilege of Parliament.

The order of reference desires your committee to report whether any of the matter referred to in the case of Mr. Gray demands the further attention of this House, and in compliance with this direction they express their opinion that if the present state of the law allows a judge to imprison or fine to an unlimited extent the editor of a public journal for criticising the proceedings on a criminal trial, after such trial has finished, your committee consider that it is desirable forthwith to amend the law relating to contempt of court.

THE SETTLED LAND ACT.—IV.

(Continued from page 562, ante.)

Powers of Sale, Enfranchisement, Exchange, and Partition (Sect. 3).

In considering the effect of this and subsequent powers the definitions of "manor," "mines and minerals," and "land" (sect. 2) must be kept in mind.

The Act gives these powers to tenant for life (sect. 3), and, during infancies, to the trustees (sect. 60). As to who are trustees, see sects. 2 (8), 38.

By sect. 15 a restriction is imposed as to sale and lease of mansion-house, &c.; we think that usually the settlement should remove this restriction. See on sect. 15 below. For old power of sale and exchange, see Davidson Settlements, 3rd edit. vol. iii. 1011; Bythewood, vii. 435; Priedaux, 11th edit. vol. ii. 816; Conoisc David. 12th edit. 333.

Power to make, vary, and rescind contracts is given by sect. 31, to make stipulations as to title, buy in at auction, &c., by sect. 4, to make conveyances by sect. 20, which also provides for priorities. Compare David. iii. 1018, and see ib. 593. The consideration for variation and rescission, if paid in money, is to be treated as capital (sect. 31 (ii)). This leaves it open to possible discussion whether tenant for life will have to account for "money's worth" which he receives. It would seem that no notice of rescission need be given to the trustees, but that notice of variation must. See sect. 45. Sale of easements, privileges, &c., is provided for by sect. 8 (i).

On sale, exchange, and partition, restrictions may be imposed (sect. 4 (6)); surface and minerals sold apart, and easements, &c., granted or reserved for mining purposes (sect. 17); proper conveyances made; easements, &c., created (sect. 20 (1)); and re-settlements made of land received on sale or exchange (sect. 24).

As to conveyances of easements, see sect. 20 (1), and C. A. s. 62; and as to re-settlement, sect. 24 (7).

As to sale of surface and minerals apart, compare David. iii. 1019, and as to re-settlements, ib. 1020.

The trusts of money received on sales, &c., are provided for by the Act (see sects. 21-25), but if it is desired that a single trustee should be able to give a receipt the settlement must so provide (sect. 39). But except in small settlements such a provision would be unwise.

Under the old power of re-purchase of lands (David. iii. 1020) the money might be spent on freeholds, or such leaseholds and copyholds as were convenient to hold with the freeholds. Under the Act this limitation is abolished (sect. 24 (3)), and any copyholds and leaseholds may be purchased as an investment and not merely as a convenience; but the leaseholds must have sixty years unexpired (sect. 21 (vi)). It will be for the personal advantage of tenant for life to purchase leaseholds, but he will be kept in check by sects. 45, 53. The Act provides that where purchase money arises from sale of lease or reversion, the court or the trustees may apply it so as to give to the tenant for life and remainderman the same benefit as they might have had from the property if unsold (sect. 34). Compare L. C. C. Act 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 74, and see Askew v. Woodhead (42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 567; 14 Ch. Div. 37). Apparently on sale of a short lease the trustees may give a share of the purchase money to tenant for life, but of course the purchaser must pay the whole into court or to the trustees (sect. 21).

It may be advisable to empower tenant for life to buy leaseholds with less than sixty years unexpired, convenient to be held with the settled property not exceeding in the whole a specified value.

Few settlers will desire that land in England shall be exchanged for land out of England, but, if it is desired, a power must be inserted. A comparison of sect. 4 (8) with the last words of sect. 23 gives rise to a doubt whether such a power is valid; but we are clearly of opinion that it is valid (see sects. 56, 57), "England" includes Wales: (Steph. Comm. 8th edit. vol. i. 84.)

Enfranchisement is treated by sect. 3 as a sale of the seignory, so that frequently when a sale is mentioned it includes an enfranchisement. For old power to enfranchise see David. iii. 1010, 1011; Bythewood, vii. 482; and as to the law of enfranchisement see David. ii. 386; iii. 544. The statutory power in sect. 4 gives no power to sell or enfranchise in consideration of a rentcharge or valuable consideration other than money (sect. 4 (2)). If this is desired it should be added. It will not be safe to consider a newly created rentcharge on the land as an incorporeal hereditament, falling within the definition of "land" in sect. 2 (10) (i), and treat the sale as an exchange. Rights of common, &c., may be regranted in an enfranchisement (sect. 4 (7)).

There seems no doubt but that the statutory powers authorise enfranchisements of copyholds for lives. As to the effect of the old powers, see David. iii. 541, and compare ib. ii. 388. Exchange or partition may be made in consideration of undivided share in mines and minerals (sect. 17 (2)).

Sect. 4 (2) empowers exchange and partition in consideration of money and "land;" restrictions and reservations are also empowered by sects. 4 (6), 17; and these will also form a consideration. Apparently there is no power to substitute a rent-charge. See above.

Money for equality of partition and exchange may be raised by mortgage of the settled land (sect. 18).

A power of sale and exchange vested in trustees, and exercisable with consent of tenant for life, may be exercised by selling to tenant for life himself (Howard v. Ducane, Turn. & Russ. 81; Sug. Pow. 868); but it seems that tenant for life is bound to communicate what he knows as to the value of the property: (Dicconson v. Talbot, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 49; L. Rep. 6. Ch. App. 32.)

It is submitted that, as tenant for life is placed in the position of a trustee (sect. 53), he cannot safely purchase from, or exchange with himself: (Lewin, 422). See, however, David. iii. 582; Sug. V. P. 692; Dart, 37, as to tenant for life with power of sale in general.

He might also purchase on a sale by the court, after having obtained the court's permission (Dart, 1195), and no doubt this will still be allowable; and possibly he may even buy from himself with the sanction of the court, for which application may be made under sects. 81 (3), 44.

A purchase by tenant for life in the name of a third person would of course be no better than if it was made in his own name; indeed, it would be rather indicative of fraud: (Dart 41; M'Pherson v. Watt, 3 App. Cas. 254, 263.) Even a perfectly fair sale by a trustee to himself may be set aside by the cestui que trust: (Lewin, 423.)

The practical result is, that it may be well to give tenant for life power to sell to, and exchange with, himself; but the consent of the trustees should be made requisite; and the power should be so framed as to prevent trustees from selling, &c., to themselves when they have the powers of "tenant for life" under sect. 60. The power to make partition resembles that of sale and exchange (David. iii. 552), so that now where tenant for life is absolute owner of an undivided share he should in the same way be empowered to make partition with himself, with the consent of the trustees. The power of partition can only be exercised with the concurrence of persons interested in the other share or shares (sect. 3 (iv.)). It arises, first, when the settlement comprises an undivided share (compare David. iii. 333, 1152, 1213); and, secondly, when the settled land has come to be held in undivided shares—e.g., among three children as tenants in common for life or in tail. Money may be taken for equality of partition (sect. 4 (2)), and minerals and undivided shares in minerals reserved (sect. 17).

Subject to the above remarks the powers in sect. 3 appear to be sufficient in ordinary settlements inter vivos. In many cases wider powers of investing money received on sale should be inserted.

Transfer of Incumbrances (Sect. 5).

This section empowers transfer of incumbrance with consent of the incumbrancer, but the power must not be used so as unfairly to affect the remainderman (sects. 53, 24 (5)). The incumbrancer is protected by sects. 20 (2), 50 (3) (4).

(To be continued.)

THE SETTLED LAND ACT.

The Settled Land Act, 1882, is only the latest and longest step in a direction in which we have for some time been proceeding. Its promoter, Lord Cairns, succinctly and correctly describes its main objects in the memorandum appended to it on the introduction, in the House of Lords, of the bill which has now become an Act. "The main object of this bill," he said, "is to enable a tenant for life (which term is used generally to include the class of limited owners) to dispose, by lease, sale, or otherwise, of any part of the settled land, or even of the whole of it; proper provision being made for securing the purchase-money on a sale, and otherwise for protecting the interests of the remainderman, and of others entitled to come in under the settlement;" and "the bill is not confined in its operation to future settlements." Every lawyer knows that for the last two generations at least, if not for more, every well-drawn settlement contained extensive powers of sale, exchange, mortgage, and leasing vested in the trustees, either with or without the direction or consent of tenants for life. But all settlements were not well drawn; a great many settlements were made by will in which these provisions were not inserted; and cases were continually occurring which were not met by the settlement. Hence arose great inconvenience, delay, and often damage to the property settled. In 1856 the Legislature came to the rescue with the Settled Estates Act. The main purport of that Act was to supplement imperfect settlements, by enabling the court, on the application of parties interested, to exercise, or give trustees power to exercise, the usual powers given in settlements. It also enabled tenants for life, without any intervention, to give leases for the usual agricultural term of twenty-one years. But, in all other cases, where the settlement did not give powers of management, application to the court had to be made. It is true they could be made, without administering the trusts of the settlement, on a simple petition. But so many consents and concurrences and notices had to be given, that there was a great deal of unnecessary delay, inconvenience, and expense caused in the management of estates. The Act of 1856 was amended by no less than four Acts, which were finally consolidated and amended in the Settled Estates Act, 1877. The present Act, except for a few slight alterations, leaves the Act of 1877 nominally untouched; but it is calculated effectually to repeal it in practice. The beneficial effect of the Settled Estates Acts did not extend far. There was but little temptation to a limited owner to incur all the worry and expense of an application to the court, when, after all, he could only, at the most, exchange  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent., the rental value of the land, for 3 per cent., the dividends on Consols; to which investment the proceeds of sale were, practically, limited. So with regard to the improvements on the land. Under the Improvement of Land Acts, great and beneficial improvements could be effected, at the expense partly of the inheritance in settled estates, but only after long and expensive proceedings before the Inclosure Commissioners, conducted, necessarily, on a system of red tape.

The present Act, without repealing—and, indeed, while extending—yet supersedes the Improvement of Land Act, 1864. The primary provision of the Act is that making a power of sale a necessary incident to the estate of a limited owner. This is to be an incident of which he cannot be deprived, directly or indirectly, by the instrument creating his estate, of which he cannot deprive himself by any bargain or contract, either with the settlor, with other persons interested under the settlement, or with outsiders, subject of course to the usual rights of a mortgagee or other assignee for value. Moreover, the power is cumulative—that is, it may enlarge, but it cannot curtail, powers given to the tenant for life or to the trustees by the settlement. If given to both tenant for life and trustees it is exercised by either; but in case of conflict the Act, and not the settlement, is to prevail. It is also specially enacted that the consent of the tenant for life shall be necessary to the exercise of any power given to the trustees, which power is exercisable for any of the purposes provided for by the Act. The initiation and control, therefore, of sales is in effect transferred by the Act from the trustee to the tenant for life. The inducement to the exercise of the power of sale under the present Act is to be found in the provisions in Part IV. relating to the investment or other application of capital moneys arising under the Act, and in Part VII. relating to improvements. Instead of being confined to Government securities, or securities authorised by the settlement, the range of investment is now extended to bonds and debentures of any railway in the United Kingdom which has for ten years paid a dividend on its ordinary stock; and in the discharge of incumbrances affecting the inheritance, though not, of course, of incumbrances affecting the life estate only. The impoverished landowner can, therefore, by selling, pay off mortgages, and so get rid of interest at 4 or 4½ per cent., and invest the residue of the purchase-moneys at 4 or 4½ per cent., and so get an increased income of perhaps 2 per cent. For the improving owner the further inducement is held out of being able to sell a portion of the estate to improve the remainder. For one of the objects on which capital moneys may be spent is the payment for any improvement authorised by the Act. Part VII. of the Act gives a list of such improvements, which is considerably more extensive than that given in section 9 of the Improvement of Land Act, 1864 (for which indeed section 25 of the Act is to be substituted). The former list was concerned chiefly with agricultural improvements; the new one includes improvements for building, mining, or manufacturing purposes. Then, instead of having to go to the Land Commissioners (into whom the present inclosure, tithe, and copyhold commissioners are translated), the tenant for life, if he has paid the purchase-money, as he has power to do, to the trustees of the settlement, has only to satisfy them that his proposed improvements are beneficial. They may then apply the money in payment for works executed, either on a certificate from the commissioners, or (the alternative course most likely to be adopted) on a certificate from a surveyor approved by the commissioners, that the works have been properly done. It will no longer be necessary, if there is an infant tenant in tail, for the tenant for life to get the sanction of the Chancery Division before the commissioners may sanction or proceed in a scheme of improvements. In the case where the tenant for life has paid the money into court, he will, indeed, still have to get the sanction of the court to his scheme, and to the payment of the money when it is executed. But as power is given under the Act in cases where there are no trustees to appoint trustees for the purposes of the Act, and as under the Conveyancing Acts, 1881 and 1882, the powers of appointing trustees are widely extended, it is probable that the work of the Chancery Division will not be largely increased under this Act. In fact, an application to the court with regard to improvements is only likely to be made in cases in which money has been paid into court under the Lands Clauses or other Acts; cases which, owing to the extended powers of tenants for life, will be much fewer than at present.

With regard to leases, the tenant for life is given the same power, which he can exercise of his own mere motion, as that which under the Settled Estates Act the trustees can exercise or obtain after application to the Court. He can lease for twenty-one years for agricultural, sixty for mining, and ninety-nine for building purposes. For any special term beyond that limit, he can get a general power for himself, instead of for the trustees. But, with minor additions and improvements Part IV. of the Act is simply a re-enactment of the Settled Estates Act on the same subject, only substituting the tenant for life for the trustees as the recipient of the powers given, and, as a rule, without the necessity of application to the court. As regards mortgages there is no great extension of the power of the tenant for life. He is given power to raise money for enfranchisement, or equality of exchange, or partition by mortgaging the fee or other whole interest settled, or by creating a term of years; but not otherwise. Power to mortgage for improvements is given under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864; but, practically, as that power entails the lengthy procedure before the Land Commissioners which is averted by a sale under the Act, it is probable it will be little resorted to.

Taken as a whole, in its practical effect on land owners, the Act, where there is an adult tenant for life, reduces the trustees to the position of mere bankers, to receive and pay money; the real management of the estate is vested in the tenant for life. He is made the practical owner of the land, or, perhaps we should rather say, the managing agent of it. For he is, as far as possible, tied down to deal with the land as the ideal "prudent owner" would deal with it, and is, indeed, expressly declared, by section 53, to be the trustee of the powers conferred on him by the Act for all parties entitled under the settlement. What the restrictions and conditions expressly imposed on him are, and the details of the Act generally, we propose to consider hereafter.—Law Journal.

MALICIOUS INJURIES.

The consolidating statute dealing with the important subject of malicious mischief (24 & 25 Vict., c. 97) contains several sections which have given rise to considerable difficulty in the matter of interpretation. In many sections of the Act an intent to injure or defraud is made an integral part of the offence, but in others this is not so, the offence consisting in doing a particular act "unlawfully and maliciously." Sect. 58 provides that "every punishment and forfeiture by this Act imposed on any person maliciously committing any offence, whether the same be punishable upon indictment or upon summary conviction, shall equally apply and be enforced, whether the offence shall be committed from malice conceived against the owner of the property in respect of which it shall be committed or otherwise." The expression owner "or otherwise" is no doubt used to cover the case of injury to property in the possession of some person not the owner, but who has a qualified right of ownership—e.g., a bailee. The 60th section provides that, when an intent to injure or defraud forms an integral part of the offence, it shall not be necessary to prove an intent to injure or defraud any particular person, but that proof that the accused did the act charged with an intent to injure or defraud, as the case may be, is sufficient.

It is as to the proper interpretation to be applied to the term "maliciously" that difficulty most frequently arises, and this difficulty has been not a little added to from an inability to recognise the fact that Reg. v. Pemiton (L. R. 2 C. C. R. 119) is merely an instance of a conviction being quashed in consequence of the case having been left to the jury without a proper direction from the Recorder of Wolverhampton, who tried the case, and is not a decision in point of principle at all. The facts in this case were very simple: the prisoner had been fighting with persons in the street, and threw a stone at them, which struck a window and did damage to an amount exceeding £5. He was indicted under the 51st section of the Malicious Injury to Property Act, which makes it a misdemeanour "unlawfully and maliciously" to commit any damage to any real or personal property whatsoever to an amount exceeding £5. The jury, after hearing the evidence, found that the prisoner threw the stone which broke the window, but that he threw it at the people he had been fighting with, intending to strike one or more of them with it, but not intending to break the window. On this a verdict of "guilty" was entered, and a case reserved. In the course of the argument Blackburn, J., observed: "I should have told the jury that if the prisoner knew there were windows behind, and that the probable consequence of his act would be to break one of them, that would be evidence for them of malice. The jury might perhaps have convicted on such a charge, but we have to consider their actual findings." Lord Coleridge in giving judgment said: "Without saying that if the case had been left to them in a different way the conviction would have been supported, if, on these facts, the jury had come to a conclusion that the prisoner was reckless of the consequences of his act, and might reasonably have expected that it would result in breaking the window, it is sufficient to say that the jury have expressly found the contrary." Lush, J., said: "On these findings we have no alternative. The jury might have found otherwise, but taking this finding I cannot say that there was an intent either actual or constructive, and 'malicious' certainly must be taken to imply an intention either actual or constructive."

The proper interpretation of the expression "unlawfully and maliciously" must be taken from the more recent case of Reg v. Welsh (L. Rep. 1 Q. B. Div. 23), where the prisoner was indicted under the 40th section of the Act dealing with malicious injury to property for "unlawfully and maliciously" killing a mare. The case was tried before Mr. Justice Lindley at the old Bailey on the 23rd Sept., 1875, who left two questions to the jury: (1) Did the prisoner in fact intend to kill the mare? (2) Did he know what he was doing would or might kill the mare; and did he, nevertheless, do what he did recklessly, and not caring whether the mare was injured or not? The jury negatived the first question, but answered the second in the affirmative, and a verdict of "guilty" was entered; and on the point being reserved as to whether the conviction should stand, Lord Coleridge, giving the judgment of the court said: "We are all of opinion that there was sufficient malice to sustain this conviction."

The application of this principle to the facts disclosed in a case tried at the Middlesex Sessions before the assistant-judge would have saved a good deal of time, and rendered it unnecessary for the learned assistant-judge more than once to point out that the principle involved in a particular decision required frequently to be eliminated from the facts, and that facts and principles were not identical, as some persons seemed oddly to suppose. The case was that of Reg. v. William Bennett, the evidence being that the prisoner went to a tavern in Fetter-lane about 11 o'clock on the evening of the 15th ult., and began to illtreat his wife who was in the bar, that subsequently he took up a pot and threw it at her, breaking a plate glass window of the value of £10. The learned counsel for the prisoner argued upon these facts with very great vigour that, on the authority of Reg. v. Penlton, there was no case to go to the jury, and seemed much aggrieved when the judge ruled otherwise. In consequence of the want of proper appreciation of his law the learned counsel proceeded to call witnesses to facts for the defence who swore with almost as much vigour as the learned counsel had argued that the prisoner never threw the pot at all. The jury took some time to consider, and finally returned a verdict of "not guilty," and were peremptorily requested to leave the box. Truly a "Comedy of Errors!"

The Criminal Code will, when it passes, get rid of the ambiguity attending the terms "malice" or "maliciously." The Royal Commissioners in their report (p. 15) observe: "We have avoided the use of the word 'malice' throughout the draft code, because there is considerable difference between its popular and legal meaning. For example, the expression 'malice aforethought,' in reference to murder, has received judicial interpretations which make its use positively misleading."—Law Times.

ACCORDING to the Daily News, the case of Mr. Green has been among those the consideration of which has brought the Government to the conclusion that it is necessary to define and limit the power of the judges to commit for contempt of court.

ARREARS OF RENT (IRELAND) ACT.

In a return just issued by the Court of the Land Commission it is stated that the total number of applications received up to and including October 31 was 5,528, the number of holdings being 8,114. The total amount of money involved in these applications was £61,058 15s. 11d., of which £55,549 8s. was expended in grants pursuant to section 1, £4,005 16s. 1d. in remission of rentcharges pursuant to section 15, and £1,503 11s. 10d. in loans pursuant to section 16. Conditional orders have been made in 1,369 holdings, absolute orders in 922; and the money absolutely ordered to be paid is £5,062 3s. 1d. Of 207 separate applications under section 1, inquired into by local investigators, 203 were granted and only four refused.

THE LAW OF TRADE MARKS.

In Burton v. Stratton, United States Circuit Court, Eastern District of Michigan, July 3, 1882, 12 Fed. Rep. 696, it was held that "Twin Brothers" is a valid trade-mark for yeast, in connexion with a label showing the figures of two men's heads. The principle declared is that mere words may become valid trade-marks, when purely arbitrary, or when indicative of the origin or original ownership. Brown, D.J., gave the following useful summary: "1. That a court of equity will enjoin unlawful competition in trade by means of a simulated label, or of the appropriation of a name; as where the defendant appropriates the name of a hotel conducted by the plaintiff, or imitates his label upon preparations. Howard v. Henriquez, 3 Sandf. 725 (Irving House case); Woodward v. Lazar, 21 Cal. 448 (What-Cheer House case); Howe v. Searing, 10 Abb. Pr. 264 (Howe's Bakery case); M'Cardel v. Peck, 28 id. 120 (M'Cardel House case); Williams v. Johnston, 2 Bos. 1 (Genuine Yankee Soap case); Day v. Croft, 2 Beav. 488 (Day & Martin Blacking case); Davis v. Kendall, 2 R. L. 566 (Pain-Killer case); Meriden Britannia Co. v. Parker, 89 Conn. 450. The ground of interference in this class of cases is fraud; that is, the attempt to palm off the goods of the defendant as the goods of the plaintiff. 2. A court of equity will not protect a person in the exclusive use of a word which expresses a falsehood; as, if the article bears the word "patented" when in fact it is not patented, or exhibits an untruth as to the place of manufacture or composition of the article. Leather Cloth Co. v. Leather American Cloth Co., 11 H. of L. 531; Brown on Trade-Marks, s. 72; Flavel v. Harrison, 10 Hare 467; Partridge v. Menck, 2 Barb. Ch. 101; Pidding v. How, 8 Sim. 477 (Howqua Mixture case); Palmer v. Harris, 60 Penn. St. 156, wherein the trade-mark indicated that certain cigars were made in Havana, when in fact they were made in New York; Fetridge v. Wells, 13 How. Pr. 385 (Balm of Thousand Flowers case); Phalon v. Wright, 5 Phila. 464 (Night-Blooming Cereus case); Cocks v. Chandler, L. R. 11 Eq. 446 (Reading Sauce case); Conwell v. Reed, 128 Mass. 477 (East Indian Remedy case). 3. That no one can extend his monopoly of a patented trade-mark. By the expiration of the patent the public acquires the right not only to make and sell the article, but to make and sell it under the name used by the patentee. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Stanage, 6 Fed. Rep. 279; In re Richardson, 3 O. G. 120; Tucker Manufacturing Co. v. Boyington, 9 id. 455. 4. A person cannot, by means of a trade-mark, monopolise the name of the place where the article is manufactured. Canal Co. v. Clark, 13 Wall. 311 (Lackawanna Coal case); Brooklyn White Lead Co. v. Masury, 25 Barb. 416. Nor the ordinary numerals or letters. Manufacturing Co. v. Truener, 101 U. S. 51 (A. C. A. case); A. M. Manufacturing Co. v. Spear, 2 Sandf. 559; Avery v. Meikle, 23 Alb. Law Jour. 443. This proposition, however, has been disputed. See Gillotti v. Esterbrook, 48 N. Y. (303 case); Boardman v. Meriden Britannia Co., 35 Conn. 402. Nor can a person monopolise a name expressive of the character or composition of an article. Conwell v. Davis, 35 How. Pr. 76 (Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya Bark case). 5. So where the words used are expressive only of the name or quality of the article, and have acquired that significance in the market. Am. Manufacturing Co. v. Spear, 2 Sandf. 599; Manufacturing Co. v. Trainer, 101 U. S. 51; Stokes v. Landgraf, 17 Barb. 608; Cornwin v. Daly, 7 Bos. 222 (Club House Gin case); Ferguson v. Davoll Mills, 2 Brewster, 814; Choynski v. Cohen, 89 Cal. 501 (Antiquarian Book Store case); Phalon v. Wright, 5 Phila. 464; Singleton v. Bolton 3 Doug. 298 (Case of Dr. Johnson's Yellow Ointment); Thomson v. Winchester, 19 Pick. 214 (Thomsonian Medicine case); Banninger v. Wattles, 24 How. Pr. 204 (Old London Dook Gin case); Raggett Friedlater, L. R. 17 Eq. 29 (Nourishing Stout case). 6. In order that mere words may be upheld as a trade-mark they must be merely arbitrary, or they must indicate the origin or ownership of the article or fabric to which they are affixed. Am. Manufacturing Co. v. Spear, 2 Sandf. 597; Canal Co. v. Clark, 13 Wall. 322; Falkinburgh v. Lucy, 85 Cal. 52; Brown, Trade-Marks, s. 16; Durham Tobacco Case, 8 Hughes 157; Wortherspoon v. Currie, L. R., 5 E. & L. App. 508 (Glenfield Starch case); Ford v. Forster, L. R., 7 Ch. App. 611 (Eureka Shirt case); Hier v. Abrahams, 82 N. Y. 519; S. C., 37 Am. Rep. 589 (Pride Tobacco case); M'Andrew v. Bassett, 10 Jur. (N. S.) 550; S. C. 12 Week. R. 777 (Anatole case); Lee v. Haley, L. R. 5 Ch. 155 (Grimes Coal Co. case); Seizo v. Provezende, L. R., 1 Ch. 192 (Seizo Wine case); Braham v. Bustard, 1 Hem. & M. 447 (Excelsior Soap case).—Albany Law Journal.

THE MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACT.

"The Married Women's Property Committee," held a meeting on Saturday afternoon at Willis's Rooms to celebrate its own dissolution, the object with which it was formed having now been fully attained, and no further reasons remaining for the continuance of its labours. The Married Women's Property Act of last Session passed through both Houses of Parliament with so little opposition or criticism that, as far, so Mr. Shaw Lefevre, the Chairman of the Committee, observed, the world at large is hardly aware of its existence. But it embodies all that reformers have been struggling to obtain for more than a quarter of a century, and makes a change in our social system which will probably ere long lead to others of equal, if not greater, importance. We are disposed to take a hopeful view of the operation of the future law. At the same time, we cannot refrain from suggesting that the independence conferred upon women by the new Act will probably make it necessary to extend, in some degree, the principle of limited ownership. If it were a great wrong that the personal property of a woman should become by her marriage absolutely at the disposal of her husband, it might be unwise for some reasons to leave it entirely in her own hands. In all such cases the interests of the children are the first thing which ought to be considered; and how far women are likely to make judicious investors, or to engage in business under sound and safe conditions, is a question perhaps more easily asked than answered.—Standard.

INDORSEMENT OF CHEQUES.

Judge Jones of the Ohio Common Pleas, at Cleveland, has recently decided a novel and interesting point of law respecting negotiable instruments. The suit was by the holder against the drawer of a cheque. The cheque was payable to order, duly indorsed in blank, and transferred to the plaintiff. On presentation the bank, drawee, demanded that the holder should also indorse it. This he refused to do, and thereupon had the cheque protested, and brought this suit. Judge Jones holds that the bank had no right to make such requirement, although it was proved that such was the local custom, and holds that the cheque was properly dishonoured. A correspondent asks us if we think this good law. Our impression is that it is. The bank certainly had no right to demand the holder's indorsement as additional security, for it was bound to pay the deposit on the depositor's order. The indorsement would not help to ascertain or guarantee the genuineness of the payee's indorsement. If the cheque had been drawn or indorsed payable to the order of the holder, the bank might reasonably have demanded, if he were a stranger, that he identify himself as the owner, and it might reasonably demand evidence of the genuineness of the payee's indorsement in blank, but nothing more. We think Judge Jones is right when he says: "A bank is ordinarily presumed to know the signatures of its own customers and depositors, but it will not be seriously doubted that when a cheque is drawn on a bank, which is a stranger to the payee and his signature, the bank is entitled to a reasonable time in which to ascertain the genuineness of the indorsement before paying a cheque payable to his order; and, indeed, some of the authorities seem to justify a bank or banker in calling on the holder of such a bill or cheque, when it is reasonable to do so, to furnish proof that the indorsement is the genuine one of the payee; but in this case neither of these things was required or asked; there was no demand by the bank for proof of the signature, nor for a reasonable delay to satisfy itself of the genuineness of the indorsement, but there was simply an absolute refusal to pay unless the person who presented the cheque would indorse it. That this refusal to pay without such indorsement is not justified by commercial law is, we think, perfectly clear; it is an attempt to limit the negotiability of such paper, and to fix terms and conditions for its payment not warranted by the law or by the drawer of the cheque, and to which neither he nor the holder is obliged to submit. The implied contract of a bank with its customers is to pay their cheques according to the law merchant." In respect to the custom, it may be said that it was merely local, contrary to the law merchant, and unavailing to protect the drawee, and therefore unreasonable. The custom of a bank is available for certain purposes, even where it is contrary to the law merchant; as, for example, where it is its custom to demand payment and give notice of nonpayment on the day next succeeding the third day of grace (Mills v. Bank of the United States, 11 Wheat. 431), or to give notice by mail to indorsers residing in the place where the bank is situated: (Carolina National Bank v. Wallace, 18 S. C. 347; s.c. 36 Am. Rep. 694.) But these customs do not tend to change the contract of the bank, as the custom in question does. We take it that no custom of a contracting party can be set up to excuse his non-fulfilment of his contract.—Chicago Legal News.

TEXT-BOOK, ADDENDA.

[From the Law Journal.]

Statute of Limitations (3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27), s. 34.

Subsequent acknowledgment or payment of rent is of no avail to re-vest a title extinguished by twenty years' adverse possession under the Statute of Limitations [decision of Malins, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 367, reversed] (Sanders v. Sanders, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 276)—C.A.

Dart on Vendors and Purchasers, 878.

Purchasers of small plots of land, who employed their vendors as agents to manage the business, were held affected with notice of a lien for money owing by the vendors; but purchasers, who employed the vendors only to procure the preparation of the conveyance to them, were held not so affected (Kettlewell v. Watson, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 281).

Redmond and Lyon on Bills of Sale (3rd Edition), 119.

A bill of sale for a debt and further advances, comprising the whole of the grantor's property, is void as an act of bankruptcy, unless there is a binding agreement or covenant by the grantee to make the further advances, the fact that they were contemplated by the parties not being sufficient to take it out of the general rule (Ex parte Dawson, in re Parker, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 291)—C. A.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

Mr. George Greer, A.B., Barrister-at-Law, Woodville, Lurgan, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace.

Mr. Robert Ferguson, LL.B., Solicitor, has been appointed an Investigator under the Arrears of Rent (Ireland) Act, 1882.

Mr. E. T. Bell has been appointed a Court Valuer under the Land Commission.

Mr. Rhodes, Clerk of Petty Sessions, Mountmellick, has been appointed a Commissioner of Oaths for the district.

Messrs. M. H. Harris, Accountant, F. B. Simms, Chamberlain of the Linen Hall, Belfast, and Kilmartin, Law Stationer, have been appointed Commissioners of Oaths for Belfast.

Mr. A. Crawford has been appointed a Notary Public at Belfast.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Settled Land Act, 1882; with an Introduction and Notes, and Concise Precedents of Conveyancing and Chancery Documents required under the Act. By ARTHUR UNDERHILL, M.A., LL.D., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, &c.; assisted by RALPH HAWTREY DEANE, B.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. London: Butterworths, 7 Fleet-street, Law Publishers to the Queen's most excellent Majesty. Dublin: Hodges, Figgis & Co., Grafton-street. 1882.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1882. With an Introduction and Critical and Explanatory Notes and Appendix, containing the Married Women's Property Acts, 1870 & 1874, &c. By H. ARTHUR SMITH, M.A., LL.B. (Lond), of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, &c. London: Stevens and Sons, 119 Chancery-lane, Law Publishers and Booksellers. 1882.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

FINAL EXAMINATION FOR APPRENTICES TO SOLICITORS, Pursuant to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (Ireland), 1866.

DUBLIN, MICHAELMAS SITTINGS, 1882.

[Every answer is to be accompanied by reasons concisely stated.]

COMMON LAW.

1. On what principle is it that evidence of usage is admissible to explain, control, or annex terms to a written contract? Give instances, and state the most important restrictions of the rule.

2. A conveyance made in contravention of some particular statute may be invalidated thereby quoad the object contemplated by the parties and yet may remain good and effectual as against the grantor. Explain and give instances of this.

3. When will a request be implied in case of an executed consideration, and in what cases will the law imply the promise as well as the request?

4. Explain and illustrate by examples the maxim:—Expressum facit cessare tacitum.

5. Enumerate shortly the provisions of the "Debtors Act (Ireland), 1872."

6. Discuss and illustrate by examples the following question:—A. and B. contract together and afterwards, without default by either party, performance of the contract, with a view to effecting what the parties to it had contemplated, becomes impossible. Does this affect, and if so, how, their reciprocal rights and remedies?

7. Explain what is an acceptance for honour. What course should be adopted when such a bill falls due? How should an agent not wishing to make himself personally liable indorse a bill of exchange?

8. The plaintiff intending to sell goods to a certain firm delivered them to a person who, in order to obtain the goods had falsely represented himself to the plaintiff as a member of the firm, and authorised to buy for them, and who, after receiving the goods pledged them with the defendant—was the plaintiff held entitled to recover the goods from defendant or not, and on what grounds?

9 "A." the owner of certain jewels places them in a bag duly sealed in the hands of "B," a jeweller, for safe custody; "B." breaks the seal, takes the jewels out of the bag and pledges them to "C." for an advance of money. Is there any and, if so, what civil remedy at suit of "A." against "C.?" Would any difficulty arise to affect "A.'s" right of action against "B." for the jewels or their value?

10. What is a "Joint Stock Company?" Mention the principal statutes which have been passed upon the subject. What is the meaning and effect of the "Memorandum of Association?"

11. Is it true, as a general proposition, that the actual injury offers, in an action ex delicto, the proper measure of damages to be given? Can such an action be maintainable without evidence being adduced of pecuniary loss or damnum to the plaintiff?

12. Explain the distinction between void and voidable contracts, and enumerate the principal classes of contracts which come under each head.

REAL PROPERTY, CONVEYANCING, AND EQUITY.

1. What gave rise to the passing of the "Statute of Inrolments?" What was its object, and had it the effect intended?

2. What are the principal enactments of the "Trustee Relief Act?"

3. An estate consisting partly of freehold and partly of leasehold is devised to "A." for life with remainder to "B." for life with remainder to the heirs of the body of "A.;" what interest does "A." take in the freehold and leasehold respectively?

4. How did a married woman pass her interest in freehold estate before the passing of the "Fines and Recoveries Act," and how since?

5. Give an example of an intended life estate created by will held to be an estate tail, and an intended fee-simple held to be only an estate for life. What statutory remedy was provided?

6. Explain the state of the law which rendered the passing of the following Acts desirable. Give their date and principal provisions:

"Act for the abolition of Fines and Recoveries, &c."
"The Real Property Amendment Act."

7. Explain what are executory interests. How did they originate, and how may they be created? Explain the difference between springing and shifting uses.

8. Lands are given to "A." a bachelor for life, and after the determination of that estate, by forfeiture or otherwise in his lifetime to "B." and his heirs during the life of "A.;" and after the decease of "A." to the eldest son of "A." and the heirs male of such son. Explain fully the nature of these two remainders.

9. Explain the origin and nature of "Protector of Settlement." When there is a tenancy in tail in remainder expectant on an estate for life, does the previous estate for life in all cases confer the office of Protector upon the tenant for life?

10. Explain accurately the nature and effect of a statutory mortgage. How created?

11. Cases in which Courts of Equity interfered by way of injunction (prior to Judicature Act) were usually classed under two heads. What change has been made by the Act? Explain and illustrate.

12. In case of a patent granted for an invention—"it is not a matter of course for Courts of Equity to interfere by way of injunction"—what will be inquired into, and what different courses may be adopted?

COURT PAPERS.

LAND JUDGES.

Sittings for next Week so far as same are appointed.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE FLANAGAN.

MONDAY.

J. Russell, compensation.—John A. Browne, payment by receiver.—T. E. Hearn, appointment of receiver.—G. S. Roper, proposal.—Edward Irwin, lodgment of deeds.—D. Bingham, payment.—H. Leader, ditto.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. L. Hackett, rental.—R. C. Hurley, proofs.

TUESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

A. W. Travers, to vouch.

WEDNESDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

E. M. Gannon, rental.

THURSDAY.

J. Trueman, proposal.—Sir J. N. M'Kenna, appointment of receiver.—G. S. Graves, proposal.—J. Chadwick, objections.

FRIDAY.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. Kennedy).

J. Martin, rental.

Before the Rt. Hon. JUDGE ORMSBY.

MONDAY.

Trustee Scanlan, as to notices.—B. M. Bloomfield, peremptorily.—J. J. Bodkin, payment.—Thomas Howett, as to possession.—George Bolton, ejectment.—Very Rev. A. W. West, as to costs.—F. L. Comyn, adjourned motion.—J. Murphy, ditto.

Before EXAMINER (Mr. M'Donnell).

Scanlon v. Bunton, from 8th.—Wood's Estate, to take account.—H. M. G. Archdall, to vouch.—Alexander Noble, do.—M. J. M'Kee, do.

THURSDAY.

W. Thom, adjourned motion.—Thomas Barklie, do.—G. E. Lambert, do.—F. O'Neill, do.—S. White, do.—F. Graham, do.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

ADJUDICATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The dates of Adjudications are first given, the Sittings follow in Italics.

Bigger, Thomas, of Mallusk, near Belfast, in the county of Antrim, farmer. November 14; Tuesday, December 5, and Tuesday, December 19. Bouchier Eaton, solr.

Lowry, Michael, of Ballaghaderreen, in the county of Mayo, shopkeeper. September 29; Friday, December 1, and Tuesday, December 12. Jeremiah Perry, solr.

"WHAT is this man charged with?" asked the judge. "With whisky, yer honour," replied the sententious policeman.

DUBLIN STOCK AND SHARE LIST.

DESCRIPTION OF STOCK	NOVEMBER
	Sat. 18	Mon. 20	Tues. 21	Wed. 22	Thur. 23	Fri. 24
*Paid Government.
3 p c Consols ..	100½	—	100½	—	100½	—
3 p c Reduced ..	—	—	—	—	—	—
New 3 p c Stock ..	—	100½	100½	100½	100½	100½
INDIA STOCK.
4 p c Oct. 1898 } Trafal. at	103½	—	103½	103½	103½	—
3½ p c Jan. 1891 } Bk. of Irel.	—	—	—	100½	—	—
Banks.
100 Bank of Ireland ..	320½	321	321½	323	—	—
25 Hibernian Banking Co	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and County (Ltd.)	—	—	—	—	—	—
15 London Joint Stock	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. New Scrips	—	—	—	—	—	—
20 London and Westminster, Ltd	—	—	—	—	7½	7½
10 Do. New	—	—	—	—	—	—
3½ Monster Bank (Limited)	7	—	—	—	—	—
— Nat. Prov. of England, Lim.	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 National Bank (Limited)	24½	—	24	24	—	24
10 National of Liverpool (Ltd.)	14½	—	—	—	—	—
10 Royal Bank	29½	—	—	—	—	—
25 Provincial Bank	—	26½	27	—	—	—
25 Standard of E. &amp; A., Ltd	—	—	—	—	—	—
25 Union of Australia	—	—	—	—	—	—
Steam.
50 British &amp; Irish	—	50	—	—	—	—
100 City of Dublin	—	—	—	—	—	—
50 Dublin and Glasgow	—	14	14	—	—	—
Mines.
1 Killaloe Slate Co. (Ltd.)	—	—	—	—	—	—
7 Mining Co. of Ireland (Ltd.)	—	—	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous.
10 Alliance &amp; Dub. Cons. Gas	16½	—	—	—	—	—
4 Arnott &amp; Co., Limited	—	—	—	—	—	—
17 Hudson's Bay	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tramways.
10 Belfast Trams	—	—	—	7½	—	—
10 Dublin United Tramways	—	—	—	—	—	—
10 Edinburgh Street Trams	—	—	—	—	—	—
9 Glasgow Tram &amp; Bus, Ltd	—	—	—	17½	—	—
10 L'pl Un'td Tram &amp; Bus Ltd	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railways.
10 Cork and Macroom	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Great Northern (Ireland)	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. Southern and Western	116½	—	116	116	—	115½
100 Midland Gt. Western	—	—	—	—	—	88½
50 Waterford and Limerick	—	—	—	—	—	—
Railway Preference.
100 D. W. &amp; W., 6 per cent	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. N'th'n (Irish) 4½ p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., guaranteed 4½ p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Gt. South'n &amp; West'n 4 p c	—	—	108	—	—	—
100 Mid. Great Western, 4 p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 5 p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Watfd. &amp; Limerick, 4 p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
100 Do., 4½ p c	—	100½	—	—	—	—
Debenture Stocks.
— Belfast &amp; N'th'n Con., 4 p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Dublin &amp; Wicklow 4 p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c	—	108	—	—	—	—
— Gt. Northern (Ireland) 4 p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c	—	—	114½	—	—	—
— Do., 5 p c	—	—	—	—	153	—
— Gt. North'n &amp; West'n 4½ p c	—	—	109½	109½	—	—
— Gt. South'n &amp; West'n, 4 p c	—	—	110½	—	—	—
— Midland Gt. West'n, 4 p c	—	—	106	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do., 4½ p c	—	114	—	—	—	—
Miscellaneous Debent.
— Alliance &amp; Cons. Gas, 4 p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Ballast Office Deb., 292 6s 2d, 4 p c	—	93½	93½	—	—	—
— City Deb. of 292 6s 2d, 4 p c	—	—	—	91½	—	—
— Dub. &amp; Glas. S. P. Co. (1887) 5 p c	—	—	—	—	—	—
— Do. (1888), 5 p c	—	—	—	—	—	101
— Dublin Water Works, 5 p c	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Shares not fully paid up are given in Italics. † x d

Bank Rate—Of Discount—4 per cent., 17th August, 1882.
Of Deposit—1 per cent., 23rd March, 1882.

Name Days—November 29th, and December 13th, 1882.

Account Days—November 30th, and December 14th, 1882.

Business commences at 1 30 p.m.

Holloway's Pills.—Sleeplessness, flatulency, acidity, nausea, and all dyspeptic indications may be speedily relieved by these famous Pills, of which large quantities are shipped to all parts of the world. The constantly increasing demands for Holloway's medicine proves its power over disease, and its estimation by the public. In weakness of the stomach, in diseases of the liver, and in disorders of the system caused by cold or a sluggish circulation, no medicine is so efficacious, no remedy so rapid, as these Pills, which are altogether incapable of doing mischief. By quickening digestion, they give refreshing sleep, sharpen the appetite, impart tone to the digestive organs, purify and enrich the blood, regulate the secretions, and strengthen the whole physical frame.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.*BIRTHS.

FENTON—November 21, at Albert-street, Sligo, the wife of W. R. Fenton, Esq., solicitor, of a son.

DEATHS.

BULL—November 10, at Dearock, Ralph Bull, Registrar of Court of Record, Cork, and Local Court of Admiralty, aged 46 years.

FOLEY—November 17, at his residence, South Mall, Lismore, County Waterford, Denis Foley, Esq., solicitor.

WRENFORDSLY—November 17, at his residence, Rathgar-road, Joseph Wrenfordslly, Esq., Parliamentary Agent.

FUNERAL REQUISITES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

49, WALLER, 50,
DENZILLE-STREET.

327

PUBLIC NOTICES:

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.,

the oldest and largest Company, insuring against Accidents of all kinds. The Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, Chairman. Subscribed Capital £1,000,000. Paid-up Capital and Reserve £240,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus Allowed to Insurers after five years. £1,700,000, has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64 Cornhill, or 8 Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing Cross, London.

Agents—Messrs Dudgeon & Son, 118 Grafton-street, Dublin, or 64 Cornhill, London. Messrs. Stewarts & Kincaid, 6 Leinster-street, Dublin.

67

ALEX. ROSS'S NOSE MACHINE,
Applied to the Nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection.

10s. 6d.; Post Free, 10s. 8d., secretly packed. Pamphlet, Two Stamps.
21, LAMB'S CONDUIT-ST., HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

HAIR CURLING FLUID,

Curls the straightest and most unmanageable Hair, 3s. 6d., sent for 54 Stamps.

ALEX. ROSS'S EAR MACHINE,

To remedy outstanding Ears, 10s. 6d., or Stamps. His GREAT HAIR RESTORER.

3s. 6d.; it changes Gray Hair to its original colour very quickly; sent for 54 Stamps. Every speciality for the Toilet supplied.

Repairs of imitations of Ross's articles.
As Chemists keep his articles, see that you get his HAIR DYE for either light or dark colours, 3s. 6d.; his DEPILATORY for removing Hair and his CANTHARIDES for the growth of Whiskers.

7

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

63

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and no rent to pay. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for building or gardening purposes. Apply at the office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

63

BILLIARD BALLS, CHALKS,

CUES, and TIPS, and all other Billiard Table requisites, at HENNING BROS.' Ivory Works, 11, High-street, London, W.C. Also the cheapest house in the trade for Ivory Hair-brushes, Mirrors, and all other Ivory Toilet articles and Ivory Goods in general. Old Balls adjusted or exchanged, and Tables re-covered. Price Lists, Cloth, and Cushion Rubber Samples Post Free.—Established 1862.

26

PUBLIC NOTICES:

STOKES BROTHERS,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS,
LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CHAMBERS,
22, WESTMORELAND-STREET,
DUBLIN. 298

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.

CROWLEY, HUMPHRIES & CO.,
73, DAME-STREET, DUBLIN (opposite Munster Bank),
are engaged in all Matters of Accounts in Chancery, Bankruptcy,
Partnership Accounts &c. &c. 160

N. PETERSON & SON,
PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS AND AUDITORS.
LIVERPOOL AND LONDON CHAMBERS,
1, FOSTER-PLACE, COLLEGE-GREEN,
DUBLIN. 813

D. W. CARROLL,
44, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN,
Wishes to call attention to his large
STOCK OF NOTE PAPERS AND ENVELOPES,
Direct in every instance from the Makers.
They are Sold to the Public at Wholesale Prices.

His large Stock of
LEATHER GOODS,
Comprising Bags, Purse, Wallets, Pocket Books, Metallic Memo-
randum Books, Blotters, Writing Cases,
With every article connected with Stationery,
Are Sold much under usual charges.
Prize Medal Account Book Manufacturer.
Letterpress and Lithographic Printer.

Estimates free of charge.

72

LITERARY AND GENERAL SALE ROOMS,
No. 8 D'Olier-street, the only Sale Rooms in Ireland wherein the Proprietor has a practical knowledge of the Book Department.
J. W. SULLIVAN, Auctioneer and Valuator (Assistant for 26 years to the late Mr. J. F. Jones),

Respectfully invites the attention of Solicitors, Executors, Trustees,
Assignees, or others interested in the disposal of Libraries, Artistic Effects, Household Furniture, &c., to the unequalled facilities that he possesses for realising the full value of all property entrusted to his care. Law Libraries receive the special attention that produced such satisfactory results in the sales of the Libraries of Baron Greene, Baron
Pigott, Judge Radcliffe, Sergeant Armstrong, and many others.

Valuations made for Probate or other purposes on moderate terms.

91

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a watch or jewellery, send for the Midland Counties Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 800 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free on application. Address—A.
PERCY, Manager, Vyse-street, Birmingham. 181.

MONEY:*IRISH CIVIL SERVICE

PERMANENT

BUILDING SOCIETY, DUBLIN.

52, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET, DUBLIN.

President—ALEXANDER PARKER, Esq., J.P.

The Directors invite attention to the revised Tables of the Society, under which unprecedented advantages are offered in assisting persons to acquire Freehold or Leasehold Property, or to pay off incumbrances, &c.

The Society has already advanced over Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling on Mortgage.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.

The present rate of Interest allowed on Deposit Receipts is 2½ per cent. per annum.

Current accounts opened and cheque books supplied.

Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balance.

Deposit Bonds and Deposit Notes are issued for sums not less than £100, repayable at such periods as may be desired—not less than one year—with half-yearly coupons for interest attached.

Rates of Interest:—2½ per cent. per annum if taken for one year, or 4 per cent. per annum if taken for 2 or more years.

Depositors have the following guarantees, viz.:—
The entire Funds must, under the Act of Parliament, be invested on mortgages of freehold or leasehold property.

The total amount receivable on deposit is limited by the Act to two-thirds of the balance due to the Society on its mortgages.

Prospectus and every information may be had free of expense, on application to

ALFRED H. MERCER, Secretary.

80

52, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.
£10 TO £1,000 IN STOCKS and SHARES often yield returns five to ten times the amount invested in as many days. Two UNERRING RULES for success, in Explanatory Book, sent free. Address GEO. EVANS & CO., Brokers, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London. 239

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

VOL. XVI.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1882.

No. 827

CRIMINAL ATTEMPTS.—II

We have sought to assault a learned judge, but claim acquittal of an "attempt," inasmuch as it appears that after all we were not in fact striking at him. For, since our previous remarks were published, we find that, with respect to the case of a man striking a log of wood in mistake for his intended victim, we erroneously, instead of referring to R. v. M'Pherson (D. & B., 201), cited the well-known case of R. v. Collins, where what was held was that, if a man puts his hand into an empty pocket, intending to steal whatever might be in it, he has not attempted to steal from the person; and it was in reference to that state of facts (and not to R. v. M'Pherson, per Bramwell, B.) that Sir James Stephen suggested that an assault with intent to commit a felony had been committed. We had been misled by thinking that his footnote numbered 8 referred to his illustration numbered 8. However, we are only the more strengthened in the view that no such assault could have been committed by merely decapitating the mooted log. But whether an "attempt" could have been so committed introduces other considerations; and here our illustration from the operations of witchcraft would not have the same bearing as it had on the question as to an "assault," for even the adherents of what is called the subjective theory as to attempts, admit, as an exception, that it is not an indictable attempt for a person, intending thereby to kill another, to resort, for instance, to incantations or invocations of supposed magicians or malevolent spirits, it being left discretionary with the supernatural beings to intervene or not. In attempts it is enough if the offender, intending to hurt, took means reasonably calculated to effectuate that end, and did some act, sufficiently proximate to the thing intended, by way of beginning which, if uninterrupted, would have eventuated in the consummation of the complete crime; whereas, an act done with intent to commit a crime, the commission of which in the manner proposed was, in fact, impossible, is not an attempt to commit that crime. One can no more pick a pocket with nothing in it, or steal an article from an empty room, than one can consummate murder by lacerating a log, or inflicting a wound on a corpse. However, we cannot here undertake to enlarge on the debatable questions whether it is necessary that the means selected should be suitable, and whether, in order to be indictable, the attempt must be on an object on which the complete crime could be consummated. Several learned treatises have been devoted by foreign jurists to that subject within the last few years; and the arguments pro and con. have been elaborately collated by Dr. Schwarze (attorney-general of Prussia)—who defends the subjective theory of attempts—and have been condensed with great clearness by Dr. F. Wharton (the well-known American text-writer) in a paper published in the Central Law Journal, 1879, while in his work on Criminal Law he maintained that an attempt is not indictable unless the means are apparently suitable, or the object probably existent. The proposed Criminal Code, as now settled, however, proposes (s. 74) to reverse the present law that an attempt to commit an offence under circumstances making its commission impossible is not indictable; though as originally framed (s. 32) the Bill maintained this principle. "A Habitual Criminal," discussing the matter, was heard to say:—"Many a time, standing in my place at the assizes, have I raised this contention. Always has the judge overruled it. My father died in a convict prison, having been sentenced to penal servitude for life on a charge of attempting to murder. He had fired a pistol at the head of a policeman, but uselessly, for the man, being a superintendent, had the skull of an elephant. The bullet was spoiled, but the policeman lives yet. My father, who was frankness itself, avowed his 'intent to commit,' and regretted that 'the commission of it in the manner proposed was, in fact, impossible,' owing, as he pointed out, to the abnormal and improper thickness of his adversary's skull. It was a vain contention. 'If the bone had been thinner you would now be a murderer,' said the judge. 'Do not let us argue on a hypothesis,' said my father; 'observe rather the facts. The bone was too strong for my bullet; but that is not my fault, and, therefore, you should not condemn me for it.' Said the judge, 'That is horrible impudence.' Does Sir Fitzjames Stephen mean it to be law? In the meantime I mourn the loss of the best of parents."

For our present purpose, it is sufficient to say that, not only must there be an overt act, that is, some means actually used to give effect to the intent, but those means must be reasonably calculated to effectuate it: R. v. Empson, Leach, 224; R. v. Lovel, 2 M. & Rob. 39. So, the means will not be sufficient, within this rule, if a gun be not loaded when pointed, as, for example, if it be plugged, or the flint had fallen out; R. v. Carr, R. & Ry. 377; R. v. Harris, 5 C. & P. 159; R. v. Lewis, 9 ib. 523; or at least when not loaded, if it were not sufficiently near to cause harm: R. v. Küchen, R. & Ry. 95; or if the gun be used too far off to harm: R. v. Abraham, 1 C. C. C. 208; but, the gun is not the less "loaded" merely because the means of firing it failed: 24 & 25 Vic., c. 100, s. 19. And it lies on the prosecution to give some evidence that the gun was loaded or the means used were sufficient: Whitley's Case, 1 Lew. C. C. 123; though certainly, as has been well observed, considering that the fear of the person aimed at is the same, and the matter is often involved in such doubt, this rule seems unjust, and the prisoner ought to be bound to disprove the possibility of harm: Paterson, Lib. Subj. In R. v. Lewis, ubi supra, on an indictment under 1 Vic., c. 85, for attempting to discharge loaded fire-arms at a person, it was held that some act must be shown to prove that the person did attempt to discharge the fire-arms, and that merely presenting them was not sufficient. In R. v. St. George (9 C. & P. 483), upon an indictment for attempting to discharge a pistol loaded with powder and ball with intent to murder, a witness testified: "The prisoner took out a small pistol and said, 'I will settle you,' or 'I will do you,' and either half or full cocked the pistol and pointed the muzzle at my brother," with his finger on the trigger. Yet, it was actually held that the charge of felony could not be supported, as it was not proved that the prisoner drew the trigger. Said Parke, B.: "Here a trigger was to be drawn, and it was not drawn. It seems to me the object of this Act was to punish proximate attempts, that is, those attempts which immediately lead to the discharge of loaded arms." We can but anxiously await the determination of Delaney's trial, in order to see how those cases (which were acted on in the American case of Stabler v. Commonwealth, 1880) will be distinguished, if it proceeds on the statutable enactment, and not on the possible common law misdemeanour, punishable with imprisonment, created by an intention to commit a felony, if evidenced by an overt act; but, it should be remembered that he is, also, charged with conspiracy to murder, and of this misdemeanour, when two or more persons agree to commit it, they would be guilty whether the crime agreed upon was committed or not: Mulcahy v. R., L. R. 3 H. L. 317; R. v. Bunn, 12 C. C. C. 316; Roscoe, Cr. Ev., 409-10; Arch., Cr. L. 1007; Harris & Toml., Cr. L., 2nd ed., 125; 24 & 25 Vic., c. 100, s. 4. "Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not go unpunished" (Proverbs).

REFORM OF CONTEMPT OF COURT BOTH CIVIL AND ECCLESIASTICAL.

A few weeks ago we gave an account of the recent decisions on attachment of the person, and discussed chiefly those cases where a person might be attached for nonpayment of money. Stated shortly the law is, that a man cannot be imprisoned for nonpayment of money, except either (1) he can pay but will not; (2) or when the nonpayment arises from something like a crime. Even in these cases a year's imprisonment is the limit. What a contrast this is to the life-long imprisonment which may be the result of disobedience to an order of the court "requiring a person to do any act other than the payment of money or to abstain from doing anything." (Order XLII, r. 5.) Such an order may be made in a civil action, which only would result in a judgment for money. So that while the worst result that could happen to the defendant, if the action was fought to the end and he lost, would be a short imprisonment for his obstinate folly in disobeying the order of the court for payment of money, yet if he disobeys the merely ancillary order to answer interrogatories, or to do some similar act, he is liable, if he persists, to imprisonment for life: (Order XXXI, r. 20.) Now, in nineteen cases out of twenty the whole object of an action is to obtain money or money's worth. Even an action for libel or slander takes this form, though, in a sense, the plaintiff's character may be also at stake. Attachment for contempts of court, which really do not affect the court should be treated simply as misconduct in the action, and punished accordingly. And this principle is recognised by Order XXXI, rule 20, empowering the court to dismiss the action, or strike out the defence according to circumstances. This alternative process by attachment permitted by that rule should be abolished. On the other hand, let contempts, which obstruct public justice, or which consist of wilful insult to a judge or other high officer of the law, be treated as crimes. To obviate the harm which might be occasioned by an offender continuing his contempts until he can be tried, let the judge have power to commit him for a short period until trial, and as far as possible let the trial be conducted like that of ordinary crimes. We do not advise having a jury, for obvious reasons; but in other respects the usual course might be very nearly followed. The present practice is partly a survival of the old and savage criminal law, and is partly due to an idea that "contempt" is necessarily an offence against the court. It is nothing of the kind in many cases, as has been well pointed out by Sir John Nichol in Barlee v. Barlee (1 Addams, 304). It is merely a process by which the court endeavours to constrain one person to give another person some right. The method is clumsy, and the end can usually better be obtained otherwise.

No doubt, when the contempt is disobedience to a final order of the court, a greater difficulty may arise, but even then usually imprisonment for contempt may be avoided. Thus, if the order is to pull a wall down and the party refuses, the court should order some other person to pull it down, and if necessary give the protection of the police. There will be very few cases which cannot be dealt with in the way we suggest.

Of course, in the reform of contempt of court the very peculiar powers of the Ecclesiastical Courts will also have to undergo reform.

By 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 3, imprisonment in consequence of excommunication is limited to six months, but it has been held that persons disobedient to a lawful order of the Ecclesiastical Court may be imprisoned for life unless they submit. Mr. Green's case is a recent example. Probably the only reason why this anomalous power has been left with the Church courts is, that it has been so little used for many years, and scarcely at all with regard to laymen during the present generation. In the County Court the punishment for wilful insult to a judge, &c., is limited to a week's imprisonment or a fine of £5; while it would seem that a County Court has the same power under 36 & 37 Vict., c. 65, s. 89, as the High Court to enforce obedience to an injunction by attachment: (Ex parte Martin, 4 Q. B. Div. 312; affirmed, W. N. 1879, p. 134.) The powers of the County Court should be modified like those of the High Court, while the whole procedure of the Ecclesiastical Court under the significavit should be abolished. Its decrees for costs should create a civil debt, and its orders should be enforceable on clergy and other church officers by deprivation in the proper manner and similar punishments; while its lawful orders, which declare rights as to monuments, pews, &c., should be considered declarations of right which should, when infringed, be made the ground of proceeding by way of trespass, &c., in the civil courts. If contempts, ecclesiastical and civil, are reformed as we suggest, it will be well for the dignity of the Bench as well as for the general satisfaction of the public.—Law Times.

MISCONDUCT OF JURORS IN THE USE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Probably the most extraordinary case, in the books, of the misconduct of jurors in the indulgence in intoxicating liquors, is People v. Gray, recently decided by the Supreme Court of California. The prosecution was for murder, and during a period of eight days occupied by the trial and their deliberations, the jury sustained the drain upon their physical and nervous systems by the consumption of seventeen and a half gallons of beer, two gallons of wine, and two flasks of whisky, besides wine and whisky drank at their meals. It appeared from the evidence that all the drinking by the jurors was without the permission of the court, or the consent of the defendant or of the counsel engaged in the cause, and in fact without the knowledge of either of them; that all the beer, wine and whisky drank were procured by such of the jurors as desired it of their own motion and at their own expense. The evidence further afforded strong reason to suspect that one of the jurors drank so much while deliberating on the verdict as to unfit him for the proper discharge of his duty.

Say the court: "The decisions as to how far drinking by a juror while in the discharge of his duties as such, at his own expense, without the permission of the court, or the consent of the party, is such misbehaviour that the verdict should be set aside and a new trial granted, are not uniform. In Iowa and Texas no drinking at all is allowed. See State v. Baldy, 17 Iowa, 89; Ryan v. Harrow, 27 id. 494; Jones v. State, 13 Tex. 166. It is held in these cases that if any liquor is drank while the juror is in the discharge of his duties, the verdict cannot stand. In each of the cases cited the drinking was done after the cause was submitted to the jury to deliberate on their verdict. In State v. Baldy, a juror in charge of a bailiff went to a grocery store to purchase some tobacco, and while there drank a glass of ale or lager beer, and then returned with the bailiff to the jury-room. In Ryan v. Harrow, a civil case, two of the jurors drank intoxicating liquors. In Jones v. State, the bailiff twice took the jury whisky, which they drank. The verdicts in these cases were set aside. These cases all hold that courts will not inquire whether the juror was affected by what he drank or not; that the only sure safeguard to the purity and correctness of the verdict is that no drinking shall be allowed. This rule is supported by the following cases: Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 496; Leighton v. Sargent, 11 Foster, 119; State v. Bullard, 16 N. H. 139; Pelham v. Page, 1 Eng. 535; Griggs v. M'Daniel, 4 Harrington, 867; People v. Douglass, 4 Cow. 26; Brant v. Fowler, 7 Cow. 562. The law seems to have been settled in New York to the same effect as in Iowa and Texas, until Wilson v. Abrahams, 1 Hill, 207, which was a civil case, as its title imports. In that case during the trial and before the cause was submitted to the jury for their consideration, and the jurors were allowed to separate, one of the jurors during an adjournment for dinner on the second day of the trial, went into a tavern and drank about half a gill of brandy. In the opinion of the court, Bronson, J., states the conclusion arrived at: "When in the course of the trial, a juror has in any way come under the influence of the party who afterwards has the verdict, or there is reason to suspect that he has drunk so much, at his own expense, as to unfit him for the proper discharge of his duty, or where he has so grossly misbehaved himself in any other respect as to show that he had no just sense of the responsibility of his station, the verdict ought not to stand. But every irregularity which would subject the juror to censure, whether in drinking spirituous liquor, separating from his fellows, or the like, should not overturn the verdict unless there be some reason to suspect that the irregularity may have had an influence on the final result."

"It may well be doubted whether it was the intention of the court, in Wilson v. Abrahams, to establish a rule in capital cases different from that held in Iowa and Texas. We express ourselves in this way in consequence of the guarded language of the opinion. The opinion opens by stating the rule in civil cases—and when it comes to remark on the case of People v. Douglass, in the 4th Cowen, holding a rule similar to that established in Iowa and Texas, it is said that the case under consideration is distinguished from it, and the feature of distinction first mentioned is that it is a capital case. The cases cited by counsel either follow the rule in the Iowa and Texas cases, or Wilson v. Abrahams. If any have gone further in a direction opposed to Ryan v. Harrow and Jones v. State, above cited, we are not disposed to follow them.

"It is not necessary in this case to say which rule should be adopted as the law in this State; but following the rule of Wilson v. Abrahams, 'that where there is reason to suspect that a juror has drunk so much as to unfit him for the proper discharge of his duty,' the verdict ought not to stand. In our judgment, there is strong reason to suspect this of one of the jurors, and therefore a new trial should be had. It should be added here that if it is necessary that intoxicating liquors of any kind should be drunk by a juror, application for leave to do so should be made to the court, who can make such allowance as will be proper. Jurors should not be allowed to judge for themselves in this matter. A defendant in a criminal case should not be called on to consent; and in any case when the party consents, if the juror becomes intoxicated, the verdict should not stand. The purity and correctness of the verdict should be guarded in every way, that the administration of justice should not be subjected to scandal and distrust."—Central Law Journal.

THE DEATH OF MR. F. T. PORTER.

In our obituary column will be found a notice of the death of Frank Thorpe Porter, Esq., A. M., barrister-at-law, who for many years was senior police magistrate of this city. Mr. Porter lived to the patriarchal age of 81 years. In his early life as a member of the Bar he was an active politician and one of the most earnest supporters and advocates of Mr. O'Connell. Like many other public men who have been strong partisans, his political views were diametrically opposed to those of his family; so that while his brother, a very respectable citizen, was a prominent member of the old Corporation of Dublin, Mr. Frank Thorpe Porter was a fiery agitator in the service of the multitude and of the great Tribune of the people. In acknowledgment of his services he was appointed by the Whig Government to be a police magistrate, and filled the office through many trying years. He was a sound lawyer, and also possessed a literary taste and a sense of humour which often brightened the gloom of the Police Court with a genial flash of wit and drollery. Until a recent period he retained his mental faculties with wonderful clearness, and not many years ago wrote a book giving his personal recollections, which contained some entertaining incidents of his life. As a magistrate he was generally esteemed for his impartiality and common sense.—Daily Express.

THE SETTLED LAND ACT.—V.

(Continued from page 580, ante.)

Leases in General (Sect. 6).

Comparing this power with the ordinary form (see Davidson (Settlements), 3rd ed. iii. 1005), we observe that the statutory power permits the taking of a fine, extends the period within which the lease must take effect in possession to twelve months instead of six, and does not absolutely require that the rent be "yearly" (see sect. 2 (10) (ii)), as is usually the case both in ordinary and building leases. The statutory form omits the clause permitting the lease to be "determinable at the option of either party or of one party only;" but this is really included in the power to lease: (David. iii. 485; Sug. Pow. 8th edit. 741; Edwards v. Milbank, 4 Drew. 606; Earl of Cardigan v. Montague, Sug. Pow. App. p. 918.) It provides that the lessee shall not only execute a counterpart, but shall deliver it to the lessor. But the execution of the lease by the tenant for life will be sufficient evidence of the execution and delivery of the counterpart (sect. 7 (4)), so that there will not be any need for a memorandum of the execution of the counterpart to be endorsed on the lease and signed by the lessor, as suggested in Sug. Pow. 826 and David. iii. 502. As to introducing reasonable conditions in power of re-entry, see David. iii. 503; Sug. Pow. 822. There appears to be no necessity for increasing the power of tenant for life with regard to ordinary leases for twenty-one years. He may even grant leases for purposes involving waste, although himself impeachable for waste (sect. 6). As to leases involving waste, see David. iii. 500-512. He is, however, subject to the checks of sect. 53. Compare David. iii. 509. Leases of easements, privileges, &c., are provided for by sects. 6, 20.

"Lease" is not defined, but "mining lease" includes "grant or licence for mining purposes" (sects. 2 (10) (iv)). Part of the consideration for a lease may be the execution of improvements (sects. 7 (2), 8 (1), 9 (2)).

Tenant for life may make a contract for lease so as to bind his successor, and may "with or without consideration" vary the terms. From a comparison of sect. 31 (iii.) with the last words of sect. 31 (ii.) it would seem that he might take the consideration for his own use. But see sects. 31 (3), 53. It is clear that tenant for life would not be allowed to manipulate this power into a mere source of personal profit.

For the purpose of comparison of these powers with those previously given in settlements we may refer the reader to Bythewood, vii. 424; Prideaux, 311; Conise David. 889; Wolst. & T. 143.

As a tenant for life is to be in the position of a trustee (sect. 53), and a trustee may not lease to himself, either directly or by means of a third party (Lewin, 423), it would therefore be well, in those exceptional cases where it is thought desirable that the "tenancy" of the limited owner and his personal representatives should continue longer than his ownership, to empower him to lease to himself with the consent of the trustees. This might be convenient where tenant for life was likely to spend money of his own on mining, manufacturing, or even high farming.

Building Leases (Sects. 6, 8).

We advise that power to grant building leases should be extended beyond ninety-nine years (sect. 6), say to 500 or 999 years. We think that the restriction to ninety-nine years is likely to encourage bad and defective building, which is a public evil; and in some districts, especially in the North of England, such a short term is not readily accepted by persons intending to build good houses. In districts where it is usual to grant leases at a fee-farm rent in perpetuity the power should be extended accordingly. Such leases are common in Manchester and its neighbourhood. For old form of power to grant leases on fee-farm rent, see David. iii. 1093, note, and Pridaux ii. 313.

If preferred it may, where the settled property is situate in different counties, be limited to those districts where it is likely to be useful.

Sect. 8 gives power to lease for building purposes, including repairs; see also definition of "building purposes" in sect. 2 (10) (iii.) As to distinction between building and repairing leases, see David. iii. 510. Sect. 8 also permits leases in consideration of statutory improvements (see sect. 26) in connexion with building purposes.

Rents may be apportioned where there has been a contract for lease in lots (sect. 8 (3)); or, if there has been an actual lease, there may be a surrender and apportionment (sect. 13).

The power with respect to building leases is generally sufficient except as to length of time. The simplest plan will be to give additional powers to tenant for life; but, if preferred, they may be given to him with consent of the trustees.

Mining Leases (Sects. 6, 9, 11).

The words "mines and minerals," "mining purposes," and "mining lease" receive very wide definitions in sect. 2 (10) (iv.) In comparing the form David. iii. 1008 with that given by the statute, the most important difference is that the latter requires that a portion of the rents or profits of the mines should be treated as capital. If the settlor does not desire this, provision must be made accordingly in the settlement. It will not be enough to declare that the tenant for life shall be without impeachment of waste; for even then one-fourth part would be set aside as capital. If he is impeachable three-fourths must be set aside.

The term of sixty years will usually be sufficient. Easements and privileges may be granted (sect. 6), and a lease may be made of surface and minerals together or in part, &c. (sect. 17).

It will be convenient to add a clause in the settlement permitting tenant for life to insert in the lease an arbitration clause and all other clauses usual in the district where the mines are situate. See David. iii. 1212.

This may save an application to the court under sect. 10 (1) (i.)

Power to authorise the lessee to make up short workings in any year is given by the statute (sect. 9 (1) (iii).)

Special Powers as to Leases (Sect. 12).

This authorises leases for giving effect to contracts made by predecessors (sect. 12 (i.)), see sect. 31 (2); also for giving effect to binding covenants for renewal. It also empowers leases in confirmation of certain "void or voidable" leases.

As to void and voidable leases, and relief given by statute, see David. iii. 517-523. For form giving power similar to that in sect. 12 (iii.) see David. iii. 1208.

It seems that a void lease is incapable of confirmation (Co. Litt. 295 b; Sug. Pow. 8th edit. 714) independently of statutory enactment. A void lease may be rendered good as against a remainderman where he lies by, and with notice permits the lessee to expend money in building: (David. iii. 521 n.; Woodfall, 11 edit. 6.) See for conveyance of fee-simple subject to void lease, Smith v. Wildlake (3 O. P. Div. 10; 47 L. J. 282 Ch.

Surrender of Leases (Sect. 13.)

This authorises tenant for life to accept surrenders and make new leases "either with or without consideration." For old forms see David. iii.; Prid. ii. 315. No provision is made as to whether this "consideration" is to be capital money. See, however, sect. 53, and compare David. iii. 515. The safe course for the tenant is to treat it as capital moneys, and pay it, with the sanction of the tenant for life, to the trustees or into court (sect. 22 (1)). The value of the surrendered lease may be taken into account. Compare David. iii. 1009, 1209, and see Ib. 491, 523 n. This confirms the view taken in Re Rawlins' Estate (13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 612; L. Rep. 1 Eq. 286.)

A portion of the land leased may be surrendered and the rent apportioned. Division of demised lands and apportionment of rent, conditions, covenants, &c., is facilitated by C. A. ss. 10-12. This section appears to empower the tenant for life to agree with the lessee as to what shall be the apportioned rent for that part of the land which the lessee retains. A legal tenant for life may accept a surrender of a lease for years independently of this Act: (Bac. Abr. tit. Leases, sects. 1, 2; Woodfall, 280.)

Copyholds (Sect. 14).

Manor includes lordship and reputed manor or lordship (sect. 2 (10) (v.)). The usual rule is, that if a copyholder grants a lease of more than a year, without a licence from the lord, he incurs a forfeiture. But in some manors, by special custom, a copyholder may make longer leases: (Scriven, 6th edit. 179, 193.) It seems that a lord with a limited interest cannot give a licence beyond his own interest except under a power: (Scriv. 194.) As to waiver of forfeiture see David. iii. 541; Scriven, 6th edit. 197.

It was therefore usual to insert in settlements a provision empowering the limited owner to grant licences for leases: (see David. iii. 1009, 1059, 1113.) A lease with licence is a common law interest and is assignable without licence: (Scriven, 196.)

The statutory power enables the tenant for life to fix the "annual value." This is necessary, because otherwise the remainderman could obtain fines on the improved value, and, therefore, nobody would take the copyhold land for building. The Act makes no provision as to whether tenant for life may take "a consideration" for such a licence, nor does it forbid it. In David. iii. 1009 a fine is forbidden, except the customary annual fine (if any) and usual fees: (see, however, Ib. 551.) It seems not impossible that in some cases tenant for life may keep such a consideration for his own use. If in any manor there is usually paid a fine on a licence of this description, it will be well to provide definitely that tenant for life may take the usual fine for his own use.

It would also be consistent, where the settlement gives additional leasing powers to the tenant for life, to give him power to grant licences for such additional leases (sect. 14 (1)), but this is of little consequence.

Subject to the above remarks the power is sufficient.

Power to deal with Mansion-house, &c. (Sect. 15).

In all settlements and wills of every description where the settlor or testator has no particular desire to keep the mansion-house unsold, a power should be given to tenant for life "to lease, sell, and otherwise deal with the principal mansion-house and the demesnes thereof and other land usually occupied therewith" without the consent of the trustees of the settlement or an order of the court, notwithstanding sect. 15 of the "Settled Land Act, 1882." The exception made in this section corresponds to that in S. E. Act, 1877, s. 46, giving power to tenant for life to lease for twenty-one years without applying to the court if the settlement was made after 1st November, 1856 (sect. 57). Sect. 15 does not prohibit exchange or partition, but it may be as well to insert the general expression "otherwise deal with." Mr. St. John Clerke thinks "mansion-house" would only include a hall, country seat, &c., and cites Re Spurway (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 877; 10 Ch. Div. 230), but it is clearly best to make provision.

Also it might be well sometimes to give an express power to trustees of infant tenant for life to lease and sell mansion-house, &c. For, although they have powers of tenant for life (sect. 60), a doubt may be raised as to whether they could "give consent" to their own transactions, and thus act in a double capacity. But many settlors will not desire to enable trustees to sell mansion-houses, &c., if they can help it.

In cases where it is not desired to facilitate the sale of the mansion, it may be convenient sometimes, in the settlement, to limit "the demesnes and other land usually occupied therewith" to the garden, &c. This may be done by giving power to sell "all the demesnes and other lands usually occupied with the mansion-house, except . . .," and then state specifically the garden, orchard, park, and any fields which it is desired to protect. But nothing can be done in this way to afford any further protection than that given by sect. 15, only that protection can be removed or diminished. One obvious advantage of such a specification is that, on a sale, it will prevent any difficulty being raised by the purchaser as to whether the land to be sold has been usually occupied with the mansion-house. The additional power must be given to the tenant for life alone; the Act gives it to him with consent of the trustees.

In the case of settlements and wills by way of trust for sale within sect. 63, either a general power of sale over the whole property should be given to the trustees with consent of the tenant for life, or the powers of tenant for life should be enlarged as above suggested.

(To be continued.)

THE SETTLED LAND ACT FURTHER CONSIDERED.

Last week we set forth the general effect of the Settled Land Act, and pointed out how it had altered the position of the tenant for life in the direction of freedom to manage the settled estate. We now proceed to point out certain restrictions in the exercise of the powers conferred on him. As a rule, these restrictions take the form of providing that the power to be restricted shall not be exercised without the consent of the trustees of the settlement or of the court. The most noticeable of these restrictions is contained in section 15, which provides that the principal mansion-house on any settled land, and the demesnes thereof, and other lands usually occupied therewith, shall not be sold or leased by the tenant for life without the consent of the trustees or of the court. It has been suggested that, under this section, if a suburban villa and garden of an acre in extent were settled, together with an adjoining cottage, the villa could not be let without the required consent. It may be so. The harm of the restriction would not be great if it were so, as one can hardly imagine that in such a case the trustees would refuse their consent. But it is more than doubtful whether there is not sufficient discretion allowed by the Act to the judge to construe the section in a reasonable manner as applying to the principal mansion-house of an estate of some size. The restriction is taken verbatim from section 46 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877, itself repeating section 32 of the Settled Estates Act, 1856, and it does not appear that any difficulty has arisen under either of those Acts. At the same time, there is no particular reason to be urged in favour of the restriction. In cases where the house may reasonably be sold, the tenant for life is the best judge of the desirableness of selling it. In other cases the trustees can invoke the interference of the court.

A similar exemption from the power of the tenant for life is made by section 37, sub-section 3, with regard to what are popularly called heirlooms, or chattels settled so as to go with real estate. He may sell them only if he has obtained the consent of the court, the consent of the trustees in this case not being sufficient. The purchase-moneys may either be treated as capital moneys arising under the Act, or may be applied in the purchase of other chattels to be settled on the same trusts as the chattels sold. In regard to timber, the powers of the tenant for life, "impeachable for waste in respect of timber," are limited to cutting timber which is "ripe and fit for cutting," and that only with the consent of the trustees or of the court; but, that consent obtained, he may pocket a fourth of the proceeds, and the residue only will be capital moneys arising under the Act. It would seem that this section applies even to ornamental timber; so that, though in one way a restriction on the general power given by the Act, it is in effect a very considerable extension of the powers ever given to the tenant for life or trustees by a settlement, and, by assigning a larger share of the spoils to the tenant for life, will considerably add to the inducements to cut it—a result not, perhaps, altogether to be desired.

Besides these special restrictions in particular cases, the Act sets up some very important general safeguards against the abuse of the powers conferred by it. In the first place, the provision of section 53—that the tenant for life is a trustee for all parties under the settlement—will effectually prevent his acting either by himself or in collusion with the trustees in making away with the value of the property. As a trustee, he certainly could neither sell to himself openly, nor do so secretly, by conveying to a trustee for himself. Then, before exercising any of the powers of sale or lease, or otherwise, he must, under section 45, give a month's notice in writing to each of the trustees, and to their solicitors, and by registered letter. This section will also entail an inquiry by the purchaser or lessee whether the requisite notice has been given, and given, too, in the prescribed form, and so will add another to the requisitions necessary to be made by an intending purchaser or lessee. For, although it is provided that a person dealing in good faith with the tenant for life is not concerned to inquire respecting the giving of any such notice, yet if the question of bona fides arises, as in case of any complaint by the trustees of a sale or lease at an alleged undervalue, a neglect to make the inquiry would be sure to be interpreted as an element tending to show mala fides. It is greatly to be feared that in the cases of leases this provision will prove an unnecessary hindrance, especially as it applies not only to a lease but to a contract for a lease. It seems unnecessary, because the provision that no lease shall be made except at the best rent that can reasonably be obtained (section 6, sub-section 2), and that purchase-moneys paid for a lease are capital moneys, and must be applied accordingly (section 34), are an adequate protection against improvident or fraudulent leases. With regard to sales, the provisions to check improvidence or fraud are abundant. The sale must be made for the best price (section 4, sub-section 1), and the purchase-money must be paid to the trustees, or into court, as capital money arising under the Act. Besides this precaution, by section 44 it is provided that "if, at any time, a question arises between a tenant for life and the trustees of the settlement respecting the exercise of any of the powers of the Act, or any matter relating thereto," the court, "on the application of either party," has absolute discretion to settle the matters in difference. It is to be hoped that the court will not construe this section in the narrow way in which it construed section 30 of Lord St. Leonards' Act.

By "the Court" for the purposes of the Act is meant, generally, the Chancery Division (section 46), but the Court of Chancery of the County Palatine has concurrent jurisdiction in Lancaster; and, as regards land not exceeding £500 in value, or £30 in annual rateable value, the County Court of the district where any part of the settled land is situate, may exercise a jurisdiction. Application to the Chancery Division is to be by petition or summons in chambers, and general rules (which have not yet appeared) may be made to regulate such proceedings.

Besides the provisions already incidentally noticed affecting the trustees of settlements, Part X. of the Act is specially devoted to them. The trustees, to whom capital moneys are to be paid, are never to be less than two in number, unless otherwise authorised by the settlement. Section 38 gives power to the court to appoint new trustees for the purposes of the Act, "where there are no trustees, or where it is expedient that new trustees should be appointed." It would seem that under these words, where there is a sole trustee, the court could not appoint a single new trustee, but only two or more—a result probably not intended by the framers of the Act. In view, however, of the Conveyancing Acts this slip is of little importance. The provision in section 40, with regard to trustees' receipts, being a good discharge, is also covered by the Conveyancing Act. But the proviso at the end of the section that a mortgagee, or other person advancing money, is not concerned to see that the money advanced is wanted for the purposes of the Act, or how much is wanted, may be useful. In section 41 the Act embodies the usual trustees' indemnity clause; but, as this was already embodied in section 81 of Lord St. Leonards' Act, it is difficult to see the use of repeating it here, except, perhaps, that the substitution of the present for the future tense may be intended to make its operation retrospective, whereas Lord St. Leonards' Act was confined to instruments subsequent to August 13, 1859. Section 42 is an extension of this indemnity clause to every act or default for which an attempt could possibly be made to hold them liable. Section 43 is the usual reimbursement clause. The re-enactment of these trustee clauses will, it is to be hoped, at least have the effect of curtailing settlements on real estate by the excision of adjuncts which have probably never been of any practical value, and the value of which, whatever it may be, is now by intendment of law contained in every such settlement in the wide sense given to that term by the definition clause of the Act, and by Part XV., which includes therein lands held upon trust upon sale.

