INVITATION TO SINGING.

CHEERFULLY.
TENOR.

G. F. R.

1. Come, sisters, come, Come, brothers, come, come, come, come, come, come, Join in the song in the time of gladness, Join in the song in the time of sad-ness.

ALTO.

SOPRANO.

2. Come, sisters, come, Come, brothers, come, come, come, come, come, come, Sing when the soft summer breeze is playing, Sing when the cold winter winds are straying.

BASE.

Sing-ing is good for re-ere-a-tion, And 'tis good for con-so-la-tion, High, or low, or an-y oth-er sta-tion, Come, come, come, Come, come, come.

Whether at home with those you treasure, Or in halls of so-cial pleasure, Join and sing in ex-er-cheerful measure, Come, come, come, Come, come, come.

COME AND JOIN US.

ABEN BEN ADHEM AND THE ANGEL.

RECITANDO.
TENOR.

ALTO.

Aben Ben Adhem (may his tribe increase)
Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace,
And saw, within the moonlight in his room,
Making it rich and like a lily in bloom,
An angel writing in a } book of gold. { Exceeding peace had made Ben Adhem bold; } "What writest thou?" { The vision raised its head,

And to the presenee in the room he said, } And with a look made all of sweet accord
Answered,

"I pray thee, then, Write me as one that loves his fellow men." { The angel wrote and vanished: the next night } lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.
The angel came again with great awakening light,
And showed the names whom love of God had blessed, And

EXPLANATIONS AND DIRECTIONS.

The plot of the "Haymakers," as the title indicates, is founded upon scenes and incidents connected with the hay-field, the farmhouse, and the hay-making season. The whole may be given with or without characteristic costume, action, and scenery, at the convenience or pleasure of the performers. There is, however, no doubt that the effect with a popular audience would be greatly heightened by the use of such simple adjuncts as may easily be commanded by all. For instance, seats for the performers may be dispensed with, and the platform or stage decorated with trees. Such costume as would be appropriate to the hay-field may also be adopted, the men wearing straw hats and white jackets, or, still better, no jackets at all. Broad-brimmed straw hats would be appropriate for the ladies, who might also wear white dresses, and use flowers freely in decoration. It is not necessary to enlarge upon this matter of costume, however, as the appropriate details will readily occur to any who may undertake to get up the "Haymakers" in this way. Any one having a little ingenuity would also readily construct some light imitation scythes, hay-forks, and rakes, which could be used with good effect. If this plan should be adopted, the following explanations and directions may be of some service:

A part of the platform on each side should be concealed from the audience. This may be done by trees and shrubbery, leaving an open space in the center and in front, where the singers may appear. After a few chords, or an overture on the instrument (which should be out of sight), the farmer appears and sings No. 1.

It will be perceived that in this and other pieces in the cantata an attempt is made in the accompaniment to imitate some of the characteristic sounds of which the singers sing. In this, the notes of chanticleer and the lark are alluded to.

At the close of No. 1 the performers come on from both sides, singing, as they come, the chorus No. 2. The different pieces should be well connected, that the interest may be constantly kept up. If, for any reason, more interludes are wanted between verses or pieces, there is no objection to adding them, provided they are appropriate, and not too long. Let the singers avoid too much precision and stiffness in their position. It may be best to move about while singing the choruses, those of the same part keeping somewhat near each other.

In No. 3 Mary and Anna stand a little forward of the others. The small notes in the accompaniment may be played with the right hand, and both the other parts with the left. While singing No. 4, all remain in one position, and leave the stage at the close of the chorus.

William then comes on, accompanied by the mowers, who, while he sings, make ready for their work by going through the motions of whetting their scythes, etc., not, however, so as to disturb the song. Perhaps their movements may be mostly made in the interludes. In No. 6, the upper part of the accompaniment attempts some imitation of the singing of the scythe through the grass. If desirable, a part only of the singers in this chorus may appear, the others singing out of sight; or this chorus, and No. 8 also, may be sung by a few voices, perhaps two or three in a part. The mowers pass to and fro across the stage imitating the motions of mowing, giving the stroke at the commencement of each measure, and arranging their movements so that near the close of the piece they shall be out of sight, and their voices sound as if they were in the distance. During this performance the spreaders come on with their forks, and arrange themselves in groups as if conversing.

After No. 7, the spreaders sing their semi-chorus (No. 8), imitating the spreading of the hay, tossing the fork; those who sing first in the first part of the measure, those who sing the second at the second part, and those who sing third in either part, perhaps both. While the singers are in sight the voices are to sound near; while out of sight the voices should grow softer, as if more and more distant.

At the commencement of No. 9 the mowers are out of sight, but come on as they are singing, both parties passing to and fro across the platform or stage. Great care and pains will be necessary to make these choruses distinct, in good time, and well balanced.

At the close of No. 9 both mowers and spreaders are out of sight, the song appearing to die away in the distance. Either of these choruses may be repeated, if necessary, to make the crescendo or diminuendo more gradual. It may be a good plan to sing No. 6 twice, the first time making a diminuendo from the beginning to the end, as if the singers were mowing away into the distance, and the second time making a crescendo from the beginning to the end, as if they were mowing back again. So No. 8 might diminish, and then being joined by the mowers in No. 9, increase as they return.

Nos. 10, 11, and 12 need no explanation. At No. 13 the singers sing while coming out. Perhaps the base had better sing the single part, "Come to Dinner," as it is rather low for the tenor. If arrangements can be made, it will be a good plan to have places that they may be seated as the chorus closes; the seats should imitate banks or stones—perhaps rustic benches would answer. The seats should be well back, that at No. 14 the quartette may come in front, the chorus remaining seated during the performance. In this and all pieces where two choruses or parts sing together, great care should be taken to keep a good balance. The danger in this piece is that the chorus will sing too loud, and not accommodate themselves to the cres. and dim. of the quartette. At No. 15 the spreaders start up; the others may remain seated if they are not in the way—if they are, let them rise too, and pass out of sight. Here No. 8 is repeated, the performance being as before. In No. 16 the men remain out of sight, and the spreaders go out early in the chorus, and all the voices diminish, as if passing to another part of the field.

During the singing of No. 17 rakes are substituted for the forks and scythes; and during the singing of No. 18, as many as can be accommodated on the platform go through the motions of raking hay during a part of the chorus, keeping time with the music. Perhaps the rolling up of the winrow may also be imitated. As Mary sings No. 19, all gather about her, and remain until the last part of No. 20. The movements in this should be so timed that all will be off the stage by the time they have finished the piece. Here might be introduced an instrumental interlude as they are going home, or they might again repeat "Home, sweet Home," in chorus.

The scene is now supposed to be changed to the farm-house. In No. 21 Katy, the dairy-maid, comes on with her milk-pails, and sings, with appropriate manner and spirit, her song, passing quickly off as she comes to the close.

In No. 22 the singers may remain out of sight, if desired; if, however, they are on the stage, they should imitate the nodding and gaping of sleepy persons; possibly it may be convenient for some to recline in groups, and remain on, as if asleep, through the serenade. No. 22 would be improved by being accompanied with a melodeon instead of a piano.

A little interval of silence should elapse between No. 22 and the interlude (William's serenade). In this the accompaniment attempts some imitation of the whip-poor-will. In the dream song Mary is supposed to sing in her sleep. Be careful that the parts balance well in the duet. After the serenade, another short interval of silence; then the lights begin to grow brighter, and the intermission may take place. The first three or four "Good Mornings," in No. 23, may be sung before the singers come on, perhaps by single voices, as if calling to each other; or this may be carried still further by saying good morning, as if waking up the sleepers. When the singers come on, let them sing as if bidding each other good morning. If the two parts singing "Good Morning" are found too difficult, it will produce a very good effect to have some voices appointed to say good morning, as if answering to each other, while the chorus is going on. No direction is needed for Nos. 24 and 25, nor indeed for No. 26, excepting, perhaps, that as this chorus is very short it may be sung twice. Be careful that the echo voices are far enough off to make the echo appear natural. The singers may leave the stage after this chorus, if it does not make too much moving. No. 27 should be sung with spirit and animation. No direction is needed for Nos. 28, 29, and 30. In repeating Nos. 8 and 15, let the singers pair off as before. In No. 31, and in the other trios and quartettes, other voices than those indicated may be chosen, if desired. No particular direction is needed for this. At No. 32 the chorus again comes on. This piece will require some care to make it effective. No. 33 requires no particular direction. In this, however, as in all the pieces, the singer should sing and act as if he really were in the circumstances he describes. In No. 34, the raking and pitching may be imitated. The hay wagon may be imagined to stand just out of sight, yet so that the pitching can be seen. In No. 35, it will be perceived that John does not drive the oxen himself, but describes the driving of another. If the room can be darkened a little for No. 36 the effect will be good. It may be well to have a short, appropriate prelude to this chorus. In No. 37, the light should brighten again. No further direction is needed for Nos. 38, 39, and 40.

If during the performances generally the movements as here indicated should be found tiresome or inconvenient, the singers may often remain stationary. In this case, however, care should be taken not to assume positions that are too formal; arranging in little groups is a good plan. The music should be committed to memory, and no hooks be used in sight when the cantata is performed in this way.

In conclusion, the author hopes the "Haymakers" will be found useful and pleasant for musical practice, and innocent and healthful as a means of recreation and enjoyment.

DREAM-SONG. (MARY.) "There's none so brave as Willie."

(After First verse of "SERENADE.")

MARY.

There's none so brave as Wil-lie,.. None so strong and true; There's none with such a no-ble heart, And Wil-lie loves me too...

The first system of the musical score consists of three staves. The top staff is a vocal line for Mary, written in a treble clef with a key signature of one flat (B-flat) and a common time signature (C). The lyrics are written below the notes. The middle and bottom staves are piano accompaniment, with the middle staff in a treble clef and the bottom staff in a bass clef. The piano part features a simple harmonic accompaniment with chords and moving bass lines.

But when be-neath the elm-tree's shade, At sum-mer twi-light's hour, With man-ly voice he told his love, Why lost my tongue its power? Ah!

The second system of the musical score continues the piece. It follows the same three-staff format as the first system, with a vocal line and piano accompaniment. The lyrics are written below the vocal line.

me! 'tis strange, when he is near, That I can nev-er tell, But fain would hide from him the truth My fond heart knows so well...

The third system of the musical score concludes the piece. It maintains the three-staff format with a vocal line and piano accompaniment. The lyrics are written below the vocal line, and the piece ends with a double bar line.

No. 35. SONG. (JOHN.) "Now creaks the heavy wagon."

ALLEGRETTO, MA NON TROPPO.

Now creaks the heavy wagon with its towering load, While to his oxen the driver calls, Up, Buck, come, Bright, Now do your best, Up, win - ter's food. Gee up! gee up! g' a-lang! Do your best, do your best, brave beasts; O-pen wide, o-pen wide the doors.....

The first system of the musical score consists of three staves. The top staff is the vocal line, starting with a treble clef and a key signature of one sharp (F#). The lyrics are: "win - ter's food. Gee up! gee up! g' a-lang! Do your best, do your best, brave beasts; O-pen wide, o-pen wide the doors.....". The middle and bottom staves are the piano accompaniment, with a grand staff (treble and bass clefs) and a key signature of one sharp. The piano part features a steady bass line and chords that support the vocal melody.

..... Now for a mighty pull! Haw, Buck! Haw, Bright! Come here! Who ho!..... Who

The second system of the musical score continues from the first. The vocal line has a treble clef and a key signature of one sharp. The lyrics are: "..... Now for a mighty pull! Haw, Buck! Haw, Bright! Come here! Who ho!..... Who". The piano accompaniment continues with the same grand staff and key signature, providing harmonic support for the vocal line.

The fourth and final system of the musical score on this page. The vocal line has a treble clef and a key signature of one sharp. The lyrics are: "now, if all our friends as well sue-ceed the shel-ter gain-ing, With joy we'll sing our har-vest song, and care not for the rain-ing." The piano accompaniment concludes with the same grand staff and key signature, ending with a double bar line.
