RUHR TRAIN BOMBED BY GERMANS AND NINE BELGIANS LOST LIVES

Twenty-Five Soldiers Wounded When Car Was Demolished While Train Was Crossing Rhine; Belgians About to Take Severe Measures of Repression.

Dusseldorf, June 30.—Nine Belgian soldiers were killed to-day by the explosion of a time bomb in a passenger car of a train carrying Belgian soldiers on leave back to Belgium from the Ruhr. Between twenty-five and thirty soldiers were wounded.

The explosion is regarded in military circles here as the German reply to the stiffening of the occupation regulations in the Belgian zone since the killing of two Belgian soldiers at Marl several days ago and is thought to have been carried out by the same organization that arranged the explosion that killed two Germans in the waiting room of the Wiesbaden railway station this week.

The bomb exploded as the train carrying 300 men on leave was crossing the Rhine. It completely demolished the car, killing or wounding every man in it and mortally injuring the sentinel who was guarding the bridge.

Several of the wounded are not expected to live. Investigation thus far tends to show the bomb was placed in the car at Duisburg.

To-day's affair is regarded as the most serious which has yet taken place in the Ruhr and the Belgians are expected to apply rigorous penalties, probably beginning with the city of Duisburg.

Severe Measures. Brussels, June 30.—When informed this afternoon of the bombing of the Belgian troop train at Duisburg, the Minister of National Defence sent General Roopuy, Chief of the General Staff, to Duisburg immediately with instructions to inaugurate the severest measures of repression.

FOUR KILLED IN U. S. DESTROYER

Firearm Crew Trapped When Accident Happened. Newport, R. I., June 30.—Four men killed and four injured, three probably fatally, when they were trapped in escaping steam and hot water in the fire room of the United States destroyer Williamson in Narragansett Bay to-day.

All were members of the firearm crew. The sudden pressure of air set the blower to racing, and when the governor failed to control it by shutting off the steam the blower exploded. The force of the explosion broke the water feed line and the steam line in the fire room, which was left almost without air and filled with steam.

The eight men could not escape, and it is believed the four who were killed died almost instantly.

Sydney, N. S., June 30.—An attempt to wreck the Canadian National troop train bringing soldiers from Halifax for strike duty here was discovered by railway employees early to-day just before the forces reached the city.

The first detachment of 250 men reached the station about four o'clock this morning.

COMMONS REJECTED PLAN OF SENATE

Disagreement On Amendment to Canada Temperance Act. Ottawa, June 30.—Shortly before the House adjourned this morning a motion was passed to disagree with one Senate amendment to the Canada Temperance Act.

This was the amendment requiring a referendum before the restriction on imports comes into effect.

The House concurred in the Senate amendments to the Pacific Bill, in the Senate amendments to the Senate and House of Commons Act and in the Senate amendments to the Board of Audit Act.

NEW HIGHWAY OPENED TO-DAY

Banff-Windermere Road Is Scene of Ceremony. Opens Ruggedly Attractive Part of Canada to Tourists.

Banff, Alta., June 30.—Fine weather and an assemblage of personages of wide distinction in governmental, railway and press circles on both sides of the international border promise to make the formal opening of the Banff-Windermere Motor Highway to-day the biggest event of its nature since the laying of the final rail of the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1885.

The distinguished guests of the Federal Government and the corporation, together with a large number of visitors, left Banff and Windermere at 5:30 this morning, starting on the delightful ascent to Kootenay Crossing, the half-way point.

At that beautiful spot high up in the snow-capped Canadian Rockies the two parties will meet at noon. After luncheon under the cool, crisp skies of this pristine environment, the Lieutenant-Governors of British Columbia and Alberta will cut the strips of red, white and blue ribbon stretched across the road as symbols of the natural obstacles which have heretofore closed this route to the west.

Addresses. Hon. J. H. King, Federal Minister of Public Works, will then deliver a five-minute address, which will be followed by similar brief speeches by Ross Mackin, representing the United States Department of the Interior, Premier Herbert Greenfield of Alberta, D. C. Coleman, Vice-President in charge of the Western Lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Harvey Toy, representing the California Automobile Association, and personal representatives of the Governors of California, Washington, Oregon and Montana.

The party from Banff will, then proceed west to Windermere, where a variety of local entertainments, including an Indian day on Monday, has been arranged. The Kootenay Indians, who were driven over the country of the new highway, will turn out in all their native splendor and treat the visitors to a display of native customs and dances. Likewise the Windermere party will proceed east to Banff.

The distance from Banff to Windermere is 125 miles, which represents the last link of the International Motor Highway which will now make it possible for tourists to travel with all the comforts of the best North American highways from Banff and Rocky Mountain Park in Alberta to Spokane, Portland, Seattle and California. Along this last historic link of one of the most popular tourist routes in the world; it reveals her most magnificent handiwork.

Altogether about twenty of the American Relief Workers married while in Russia. Those who have left include Frank Burland, Los Angeles, and Hugh Reynolds, Pasadena, California.

At a receiving hospital the four were found to be suffering from minor injuries.

OTTAWA SESSION COMES TO END

Prorogation Is Reached After Lengthy Period of Debates. Redistribution Made a Subject for Next Session.

Ottawa, June 30.—Official announcement is made that the Governor-General will prorogue Parliament at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Ottawa, June 30.—(Canadian Press)—The work of the Redistribution Committee was reviewed by the chairman, Hon. E. M. Macdonald, when the House resumed at 11 a. m. to-day.

Redistribution in each province, he said, had been taken up by sub-committees, on which each of the three parliamentary groups were represented.

Progress had been made in British Columbia, but considerable difficulty had been experienced by the sub-committees of the prairie provinces, particularly in Manitoba. In the maritime provinces there had been strong claims for minimum representation.

Very little progress had been made with regard to Ontario, Mr. Macdonald, and as the provincial general election approached, the members were frequently absent and the possibility of settlement grew less.

The end of the session approaching, the committee met as a whole and decided to recommend that the matter be held over and the bill finally acted upon next year.

Mr. Macdonald pointed out that on the last two occasions when a redistribution followed upon the taking of the decennial census, the bills had not been passed any sooner than would be the case in this instance.

U. S. OFFICIALS WOULD CONSIDER BRITISH SHIP LIQUOR SUGGESTION

Failing Negotiations Congress Ultimately Will Decide. Washington, June 30.—Unless Great Britain and other maritime powers indicate a willingness to enter into negotiations with the United States looking toward adjustment of the ship liquor problem, its solution, in the opinion of administration officials, probably will be left to Congress.

Although the suggestion of the United States Government for a prohibition treaty apparently is doomed to failure, hope is held out in some quarters that Great Britain may advance a counter-proposal.

It is also regarded as possible that a general conference for discussion of the liquor question in its international aspects may be suggested.

Despite these possibilities—and officials here admit they are nothing more—the belief is general that foreign shipping lines must look to Congress for relief. No one will venture an official opinion as to whether Congress would be inclined to amend the prohibition law to enable foreign vessels to bring liquor stocks into United States ports under seal, or recommend revision of the law.

To Enforce Rules. For the immediate future, it was reiterated to-day, the administration is determined rigidly to enforce the law as applied to foreign shipping, and although it is not believed such a step will be necessary, is prepared to carry into effect provisions for seizure of craft carrying contraband liquor in United States waters.

No Relaxation. London, June 30.—Andrew M. Mellon, United States Secretary of the Treasury, who arrived in England last night on the liner Majestic, told the newspaper here to-day that the United States Government had no intention of relaxing its attitude regarding the confiscation of liquor on board incoming liners. He saw no solution of the problem until Congress met, he added.

Much Smuggling. London, June 30.—The steamship Majestic, which arrived at Southampton last evening from New York, had anything but a dry eastward trip from New York, according to The Daily Mail.

The newspaper says that although the liner sailed without intoxicants, the ship's doctor, she had not got far before wins and liquors of all sorts, and even a large number of bottles of beer, began to appear in the baggage. Innocent looking trunks of passengers were found to be full of drinks.

The bar steward, The Daily Mail continues, was kept busy "making cocktails with smuggled liquor. Some of the passengers, obedient to the law, had taken nothing aboard to drink, but the smugglers were generous while their supplies lasted.

Mellon on Board. The Daily Mail says that the reporters tried vainly to get Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the United States Treasury, to talk about prohibiting liquor. Asked whether it was true he had taken nothing aboard to drink, he said he had taken nothing aboard to drink, but the smugglers were generous while their supplies lasted.

The Daily Mail says that the report was a pure invention.

C. N. R. DEVELOPMENT HERE TO SATISFY, PRESIDENT STATES

Conference With Sir Henry Results In Surprisingly Gratifying Decisions For Undertakings Here to Open Up the Island and Bring Great Line of Trade and General Activity to Victoria.

NOTHING TO WORRY ABOUT NOW.

Victoria has nothing to worry about from now on as far as Ogden Point piers and general port development and Island activities of the Canadian National Railways are concerned.

Sir Henry Thornton, energetic president of the Canadian National Railways, made this clear in an announcement to The Victoria Times last night before he went on the boat for Vancouver on his way East after conferences here yesterday and a survey of Victoria and Island conditions by high officials of the company under him.

"I can assure you that Victoria will have nothing to worry about now as regards developments by the Canadian National here along the lines of our plans to build up and create business," Sir Henry said in his announcement.

"The answers I have given to the proposals for C. N. E. development by the Chamber of Commerce here will be quite satisfactory to this city in every way, I am sure.

"You can take it from me that Victoria has nothing to worry about. That's all I think it advisable to say now for reasons agreed to to-day."

The conference between Sir Henry Thornton and other heads of the Canadian National Railway at the Chamber of Commerce yesterday was of a highly satisfactory nature from the point of view of this city.

Although it was held in private, it is understood that assurances were given that a programme will be undertaken which will operate to the marked advantage of this port.

The attitude of Sir Henry and his colleagues indicated that they were keenly alive to the opportunities available for the profitable development of the Canadian National Railway interests in this section of Vancouver Island.

The proposals submitted by the Chamber of Commerce were along the line of those urged upon them last year, with one or two additional matters which have developed since then. These, Times readers will remember, were the development of piers at Ogden Point, the erection of a grain elevator and the extension of the Canadian National Railway beyond Sooke into the rich timber district along the West Coast of Vancouver Island.

It was pointed out that as far as terminal improvements were concerned the sum of $450,000 was available in the coffers of the Canadian National Railway for expenditure at this port under the old Canadian Northern programme and that being earmarked for this purpose it could not be diverted elsewhere and ought to be put to some profitable use.

From what can be learned of the proceedings of the conference the railway heads were greatly interested in the recommendation being favored of the extension of the Canadian National Railway to Sooke in the form of a logging road to the timber districts of the West Coast, the point being made that cars bringing grain could return with lumber manufactured from the logs drawn from the timber districts.

It was urged also that in the event of the recommendation being favorably acted upon the export rate to this port be placed on a parity with that of Mainland export rates.

Altogether Satisfactory. The response of Sir Henry Thornton to these requests according to a statement issued by the Chamber of Commerce was altogether satisfactory and there is very good reason to believe that the Canadian National Railways proposes to play an important part in industrial railway development of Victoria and vicinity. Some of these developments may be expected in the near future.

The Canadian National Railways officials naturally are anxious to get as much business as they can for their enterprises on this island and the Chamber of Commerce apparent-

COMMITTEE'S PLAN WAS NOT ACCEPTED

Senate Upheld Insurance Principle in Pensions Bill
One Federal Appeal Board to Hear Ex-Soldiers' Cases

Ottawa, June 29.—The insurance principle in the matter of pensions for soldiers' dependents was upheld in the Senate yesterday afternoon, contrary to the recommendation of the special Senate committee which considered the House of Commons bill amending the Pensions, Insurance and Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Acts.

By a vote of forty-one to twenty the Senate, in committee, voted down the special committee's amendment to the Commons bill, Senators Dandurand and Griesbach, two members of the special committee, voting with the majority.

One Appeal Board
Approval was given to the amendment providing for one Federal traveling appeal board of seven members, instead of nine district review boards, and to a clause providing for compassionate treatment of meritorious cases not coming within the scope of the legislation.

In Favor of Dependents
Senator Calder explained that a number of these applications were actually rejected. Further, the original law gave the Minister absolute right to refuse policies where he found sufficient cause. It was agreed by the special committee, he said, that a soldier should be entitled to insure his life in favor of his dependents. It was advisable, however, to avoid exploitation of the Government for the benefit of people not dependents.

As a case in point he cited an application of a man for a $5,000 policy while he lay dying in a hospital. The beneficiaries were to be his parents, who were in no way dependent upon him.

A warm tribute was paid to the members of the Board of Pensions and officials of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment by Senator Griesbach. They were doing excellent work, he said, and Canada was fortunate in benefiting by their services.

Justice and Cost
In opposing the amendment to the Pensions Bill which would have struck out the clause revising the insurance principle, Senator Griesbach said that it was a matter involving justice and right, but there was also the matter of cost. This, it had been estimated, would amount to some $22,000,000 during the next twenty-five years over and above the present expenditures.

At Lower Cost
Senator Griesbach estimated that the annual cost of the proposed review boards would be $460,000. The traveling board would cost very considerably less, and thus it would be possible to spend the country's money upon the service men rather than upon officials. It was contemplated, he said, that three members of the board might form a quorum to hear an appeal from the decision of one member of the board.

Three clauses of the Commons bill were struck out, and instead a clause was inserted providing that meritorious cases not provided for in the legislation might be given consideration in the way of compassionate pension or allowances.

FARM BUILDINGS NEED REPAIRS
$75,000 for Experimental Farms Voted By Commons

Ottawa, June 30.—Answering Pro-Progressive criticism of a vote of $75,000 for experimental farms, Hon. E. M. Macdonald said in the House yesterday afternoon that some of the buildings were in a wretched condition. They must give proper facilities for the work of these farms or close them.

Workshop
Sir Henry Drayton criticized an item of $26,000 toward purchasing a building for a Government workshop in Ottawa.

Industry said the Government should use its own property. It had plenty of empty buildings in the town. It was hard to make new investments at a time when Ministers were protesting the necessity for economy.

Hon. E. M. Macdonald said the present building was insanitary and a danger to the health of the workmen. It was proposed to sell the present building and to negotiate for a new one.

T. M. Caldwell, Progressive, Victoria-Carleton, moved to strike the item from the estimates, but failed on a vote of seven-four to thirty-eight and the item carried.

In Nova Scotia
On a vote of $148,650 for public buildings in Nova Scotia, Hon. Arthur Meighen noted that three of the buildings were in the city of Halifax.

"Any one who might have had a doubt as to whether or not there was to be a by-election in that city may now have his doubts set at rest," Mr. Meighen said.

The item carried, and also $46,000 for public buildings in New Brunswick, $5,000 for Prince Edward Island and $5,200 for repairs to public buildings in the maritime provinces generally.

C. N. R. BILL GIVEN HOIST BY SENATE

Approval of Branch Line Construction Withheld

Total Amount Proposed Was $28,000,000 in Three Years

Ottawa, June 29.—The Senate by a vote of forty-seven to ten last night gave a six months' hoist to the Government's National Railway branch line programme. The Conservative Senators present voted for the amendment, and were joined by Senators David, Beique, Belcourt, Casgrain, Boyer and Montplaisir from the Government ranks. Those who voted in the negative were Senators Farrell, Ross, Dandurand, Watson, Thibault, Rose (Moose Jaw), McHugh, Harmer, Lavergne and Turfitt.

Elimination of Lines.
Senator Calder asked if the Senate had the power to eliminate any of the branches it desired.

Senator Dandurand replied that it had been affirmed that the Senate had this right.

Senator Calder said he knew many of the branch lines in Saskatchewan and they should be built, but the Government had put its legislation in such form that they had to accept all or none.

Lougheed's View.
"We have reached the stage when we have abandoned the fundamental principles of the constitution and handed to an irresponsible body control of finances without accounting to Parliament," said Sir James Lougheed.

The National Railway board was appointed to operate the road and not to extend the National system without an accounting to Parliament. The Government should follow the customary parliamentary practice and place the required sums in the estimates.

Senator Lynch-Staunton said the president had spent most of his time in this country making speeches and he had not had much time to investigate the railway requirements.

Districts Have Waited Long.
Senator Turfitt, while he did not approve of the form in which the bill was presented in Parliament, strongly urged that some understanding be reached between the two leaders that would enable the construction of lines to serve districts where people had been waiting for them for twenty years.

Senator J. D. Field claimed the National Railway board was exceeding its authority in carrying on its programme independently of Parliament. Many of the branch lines were unnecessary.

Sir Edward Kemp said the time had arrived when there must be economy to maintain the credit of the country.

"We have built railways for 18,000,000 instead of 3,000,000 people," he said. "Taxation is so heavy now that industry is being paralyzed. In our national, provincial and municipal debts we have accumulated a burden of more than $4,000,000,000."

For One Year.
Senator Robertson suggested that the Government forthwith withdraw this bill and proceed to amend the supplementary estimates for the expenditure required this year on the proposed railway programme.

Senator Laird pointed out the necessity of the lines in Saskatchewan, but said he could not support the bill as it was constituted.

AVIATORS CLAIM WORLD RECORDS

San Diego, June 30.—Two world records were made by Captain Lowell Smith and Lieutenant John B. Richter, arm-aviators, before lack of gasoline and a heavy fog compelled them to attempt a forced landing early yesterday morning, when their machine crashed, it was announced by E. N. Cooper, official timer of the flight.

The first new record was when they covered a distance of 2,500 kilometres in 18 hours, 15 minutes, 8 1/2 seconds, compared with the former mark of 26 hours, 1 minute and 22 seconds, held by Lieutenants Oakley Kelly and John A. Macrea.

Early yesterday morning Smith and Richter established a speed record for 3,000 kilometres, which they flew in 22 hours, 2 minutes, 36 seconds, breaking the former mark of 28 hours, 1 minute and 22 seconds, held by Kelly and Macrea.

Cooper also announced that Smith and Richter were in the air 22 hours, 50 minutes, 31 1/2 seconds, and that their average speed during that time was 84.73 miles per hour.

CANADA'S BIRTHDAY.

Canada as a Dominion will be fifty-six years old to-morrow. In point of time, as nations go, she is still an infant, yet she is the oldest in the British overseas sisterhood of self-governing states.

The British North America Act which was proclaimed fifty-six years ago to-morrow, like all human characters, was a long way from perfection. Time has disclosed certain material defects and limitations in it, but it has stood the test admirably especially when it is compared with the product of the founders of the republic on the south of us, and in the light of the difficult circumstances in which it originated.

ANOTHER ARMAMENT RACE?

What apology has statesmanship to make for the epidemic which has broken out in France and bids fair to spread to Great Britain? The Continental member of the Entente is reported to possess at this stage something like 3,300 aeroplanes.

What is the meaning of all this? France knows better than any other nation that such elaborate and costly plans are not necessary to protect her from Germany.

Assuming that this deduction has some point it would appear that Britain's policy should be one of warning to France that increasing outlay on aerial armaments would be looked upon with a scowl from Downing Street as long as the bill against the Quai d'Orsay is not reduced in tangible fashion.

INDIA THROUGH CANADIAN EYES.

After the somewhat biased and colorful accounts of conditions in India it is somewhat soothing to get the moderate and sensible view of a Canadian who has been in the Province of Mysore for fifteen years.

pression has been given on more than one occasion. He declares that the average native is beginning to realize that he will get home rule quicker by demonstrating a spirit of co-operation instead of following the gospel of such violent idealists as Gandhi and his tribe.

On the other hand there is a narrow-minded military caste in India whose outlook and conception of its place in the realm of government are matters of concern equally to the authorities and to India's cause at large.

Dr. Coleman expresses the view that the opinion is prevalent among the more serious-minded Indians that the time is not ripe for the British to move out of the country.

SHOWING OUR WARES.

Timely and important is a resolution recently passed by the Council of the Chamber of Commerce in London which urges Chambers of Commerce, Manufacturers' Associations, Boards of Trade and Bankers' Associations in this country to select a representative body of business men and experts to collect and co-ordinate available data on what Canada can offer to and receive from the Empire.

Prominent Canadians have encouraged this step on more than one occasion and it goes without saying that no feasible means of displaying this country's wares to potential traders should be neglected.

PARLIAMENTARY CANADA TO DECIDE

Premier Says Franchise for Hindus Not Question for Empire Conference

Ottawa, June 30.—The anticipated debate on the coming Imperial and Economic Conferences in London next Fall was held in the House last night, but was largely confined to a discussion of the proposed five Hindu franchise in British Columbia.

When Premier King proposed to take up this question on the appropriations for $5,000 for these conferences, Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, leader of the Conservative Opposition, pointed out that he had not been given sufficient notice, and he did not wish to discuss the debate until any extended remarks on the subject.

At the outset, however, Mr. Meighen asked whether the Prime Minister was prepared to state the attitude which the Government proposed to take at the Conferences.

In 1921, Premier King replied that he would, "insofar as it is possible to state it," but he recalled that before the conference of Premiers in 1921 the Canadian had taken the stand that he should not be asked to state his position as to what would be done at the conference.

"That is absolutely the right stand," replied Mr. Meighen, "but I did not expect it to come from the Prime Minister, because he took the other view."

Just before the discussion closed, the Prime Minister stated that at the time of the visit to Canada of Rt. Hon. Srinivasa Sastri, the Indian delegate, last Fall the whole question had been discussed fully with Mr. Sastri in British Columbia.

"I pointed out to Mr. Sastri," said Mr. King, "that when the Dominion franchise law would be under review the representative he had made would be presented to a committee, but that which was most important was how the members from the Province of British Columbia themselves would view the matter."

"I admitted quite frankly that if the members from British Columbia, regardless of political party, were unable to having the franchise granted to the Indians in British Columbia, the rest of Parliament would fall cordially into harmony with their view."

On the other hand, if it were clear to the members of the House that as far as British Columbia was concerned, instead of being in favor of granting the franchise, they were all pretty much the other way, it was hardly probable the members of Parliament generally would seek to impose any law upon the country which would be contrary to their wishes.

The Prime Minister added that the matter was a matter for the Canadian Parliament, and not for the Imperial Conference.

During the debate Mr. Meighen was asked by the Premier to say whether he considered that the resolution adopted by the conference of Premiers in 1921 bound Canada to give the Hindus the franchise.

Mr. Meighen replied that the resolution was quite clear and that he had not changed his views since that time.

The debate was opened by S. W. Jacobs, Liberal, Montreal, who made a plea for enfranchisement of Hindus domiciled in the Province of British Columbia, and who was opposed to this in British Columbia, and who was in favor of it in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Jacobs pleaded that Canada was morally bound to give British Indians the franchise by reason of a resolution adopted at the Conference of Premiers in 1921, which "recognized that there is an increase of inequality between the position of India and the position of the British Empire and the existence of disabilities upon British Indians lawfully domiciled in other parts of the Empire."

Mr. Meighen replied that the resolution was quite clear and that he had not changed his views since that time.

GARDEN PARTY AT GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Elaborate Plans for July 7 Function to Aid Navy League Funds

The arrangements for the Navy League Garden Party at Government House on Saturday, July 7, are being proceeded with under the careful direction of Mrs. Curtis Sampson and officers of the Municipal Chapter, assisted by all the chapters of the Imperial Daughters of the Empire, the Ladies' Auxiliary to the Boys' Naval Brigade and other workers contributing to its success. With the re-opening of the naval establishments at Esquimalt opportunity is afforded for presenting features of naval competition and skill which are reminiscent of the days when the navy was an important factor in the social activities of Victoria. Paymaster Cossette is arranging a very fine concert and has been able to secure the services of Arthur White, the boy comedian who hails from New Westminster, and whose versatile accomplishments are known throughout British Columbia. In addition there will be games and other entertainments and the panorama of enjoyment will be fittingly arranged in keeping with the beautiful grounds of Government House. Mrs. Walter C. Nichol will officially open the Garden Party at 3 p. m. and the Boys' Naval Brigade Band will play selections throughout the afternoon.

OAKLANDS CHURCH SCENE OF WEDDING OF POPULAR COUPLE

A very pretty wedding took place at Oakland's Methodist Church, Thursday, June 28, at 3 p. m., when the Rev. Wm. Elliot united in marriage Mary Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Mutch, of 2849 Delatour Street, and George, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was gowned in an exquisite frock of white crepe de Chine, with radium lace sleeves and figured satin. She wore a wreath of orange blossoms, and her bouquet was composed of Ophelia roses and gardenia hair fern.

The bridesmaid, Miss Miriam Mutch, sister of the bride, wore a gown of apricot crepe de Chine with panels, and grey hat trimmed to match. Her bouquet was of white carnations and asparagus fern. The groom was supported by Mr. Thomas Spouse, of this city. Both the groom and best man served for a considerable time overseas.

During the signing of the register Miss Emma Mutch, cousin of the bride, sang very sweetly "Because." As the bridal pair left the church to the strains of the wedding march played by Mr. John Mutch, uncle of the bride, rose petals were strewn by two little flower girls, Helen and Ada Mutch, sisters of the bride.

Following the marriage service the happy couple, standing under an arch covered with orange blossoms and rambler roses, at the home of the bride's parents, received the good wishes of all present.

A buffet supper was served, the table was prettily decorated with sweet peas and carnations, and centered with the handsome three-tiered wedding cake. Amid a shower of confetti and rice Mr. and Mrs. Thompson left on the midnight boat for Vancouver, where the honeymoon will be spent, after which they will reside at Edgewood Road.

STUDENTS' RECITAL

Beginners and students of the lower grades played at the recital which took place at Mrs. Cornett's piano studio, 1114 Pandora Avenue, on Thursday afternoon, and great interest was shown by the guests in the work done by the little folk ranging in age from five to nine years. Worthy of special mention among these was the little six-year-old Delphia Smith, who played a group of studies and also two duets by Wharfedale with her teacher. The work of those who had studied longer was also warmly praised. The names on the programme were Kenneth MacIvor, Harry Smith, Margaret Pringle, Gracia Genn, Muriel Smith, Madeleine Cornett, Maurice Foster, Delphia Smith, Marie Fisher and Juanita Cathcart. During the afternoon Mrs. W. E. Staneland delighted those present with a group of songs.

WELL-KNOWN GIRL MARRIED WEDNESDAY

Nuptials of Miss Jennie Savage and Howard Lillie

One of the prettiest weddings of the season was celebrated on Wednesday afternoon, June 27, when Miss Jennie Savage, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Savage, was married, at the home of her parents, to Mr. Howard Lillie, son of Mr. William Lillie, London, Ont.

The bride, who entered the drawing-room on the arm of her father, looked charming in an ivory charmeuse satin gown, with panels and sleeves of French silk lace and draped skirt caught with orange blossoms and pearls, and wearing the conventional wedding veil, caught beneath a coronet of orange blossoms. Her bouquet was a shower of Ophelia roses and lilies of the valley.

The bridesmaid, Miss Lilla Pitzer, wore a mauve charmeuse satin gown with panels headed with pearls and a wreath of silver leaves in her hair. Her bouquet was a shower of mauve sweet peas and pale pink rosebuds. Mr. Dennis Morgan, of Vancouver, B.C., supported the groom. The wedding march was played by Mrs. Albert Ward, aunt of the bride.

The drawing-room was unusually beautiful, with a huge horseshoe of white and pale pink roses, from which was suspended a floral wedding bell, under which the bridal party stood during the ceremony. Rev. Dr. W. J. Sipprell officiated.

The color scheme throughout the house was white and pink, with deep red roses in the reception hall. In the dining-room a delicious buffet luncheon was served, the table being centred with a handsome three-tiered wedding cake, surmounted by a cluster of white baby roses. Mrs. W. Savage and Mrs. E. Savage presided, assisted by Miss Irene Arnall, Miss Thelma Pitzer, Miss Alice White, Miss Jean Dalgarno, Miss Olive Scaplen, and Mrs. Walter Hall.

The groom's gift to the bride was a fuchsia scarf, to the bridesmaid a string of pearls, and to the best man a gold tie pin. Later in the afternoon the happy couple left on a motor trip to Portland. The bride traveled in an imported tulle of navy blue silk flat crepe, trimmed with King Tut embroidery and a cape of navy blue marvellous, beautifully embroidered in sand, and a blue hat of directoire inspiration. The bride's mother looked very smart in a French dress of nigger brown Canton crepe. Many relatives and friends were present. The young couple were the recipients of many beautiful and costly gifts, including a substantial cheque from the bride's father.

YOUR HOME AND YOU

 Playing With Water

The day was very warm and the mother of a young flock sat near a window sewing with her house guest, who was making a stay of some weeks. Suddenly the mother lifted her head, listening.

"There's that scamp of a baby turning on the water faucets again. She's simply playing with water," she exclaimed. "She makes her little pompers and dresses as fast as I get dry ones on her. I don't keep her out of the bathroom, where she can reach the tub faucets. I don't know what to do."

"Why not let her play with water?" inquired the guest quietly. "I think it is entirely natural that little children should be fascinated with water. Look at them at the seashore or the lake, and see how they love to go in wading in country brooks. In such weather as this your baby couldn't catch cold. If she were at the beach, her little feet would be wet half the time, but the warm sun would protect her."

"I think it is Dorothy Canfield Fisher, in her book on Montessori, who tells us that Montessori, after letting her little girl play with water, instead of scolding her for it, she deliberately gave her a big dishpan of water out on the grass and two little tin cups, the child not only had a joyous time but, by pouring water from one cup to another and back again, gained excellent control of her muscles and a trained eye."

"If I were you, I would let a large foot-tub out here in the yard and fill it with water every day. Put it where the sun will warm it, and let the children play in it. You live so far from the water that they never have the fun that many children know, and it isn't fair to them. They will be rapturous over this miniature lake and you can keep an eye on them and see that they do not stay wet too long. Let them splash and dangle their toes and eat small bits of Ewens. If they fall in, it can't hurt them, as it would be only eight or ten inches deep. It will equal the sandpile as a source of healthy enjoyment and a means of body building."

Makura Puts to Sea Carrying Liquor For Needs of Passengers

Locker Stores Will Be Sealed While Ship Bound for Australasia Is at Honolulu; Australian Premiers Bound Home From European Tour

When the liner Makura sailed to-day on her outward voyage to Auckland and Sydney she carried an adequate supply of stimulative beverages for the use of her passengers while crossing the Pacific. The decision was reached to take advantage of the fact that the Makura sailed from Sydney before June 10 and is still classed as a "wet" ship by the United States treasury department, and therefore will be allowed to take liquor into Honolulu under seal.

The only dry part of the Makura's homeward voyage will be while she is at Honolulu when customs seals will be made fast to the ship's lockers.

The Makura was dry for the greater part of the inward voyage owing to misinterpretation of the American dry law regulations as affecting foreign ships touching at the Hawaiian port of Honolulu when, owing to a misunderstanding, the ship's liquor stores were put ashore at Suva. The empty ship's lockers were replenished during the stay at Vancouver when the company took advantage of the Government's special prices for liquor supplied to ships. The choice brands put ashore at Suva will be re-shipped on the arrival of the liner at the Fiji port.

Hops for Best

Officers of the outbound liner expressed the hope to-day that the controversy over liquor carried by foreign ships in American waters will be favorably settled by the time the Makura again departs from Sydney for British Columbia.

The Makura put to sea this afternoon from Pier 1 on her homeward voyage after taking aboard a consignment of manufactured doors consigned by the Lemon, Gonnason Company to New Zealand. The ship took out 250 passengers, the first class list including Sir George Fyler, Premier of New South Wales.

The time used is Pacific standard, for the 120th Meridian west. It is counted from 8 to 24 hours from midnight to midnight. The figures for height serve to distinguish high water from low water. Where blanks occur in the table, the tide rises or falls continuously during two successive tidal periods without turning.

The height is in feet and tenths of a foot, above the average level of lower low water.

Equivalents—To find the depth of water on the sill of the dry dock at any tide, add 18.9 feet to the height of high water as above given.

Freighters Arriving And Leaving Over Week-End

Among the ship movements at this port over the week-end will be the arrival to-morrow of the freighter Orinoco to load 2,000,000 feet of lumber at the Canadian Puget Sound mills for New York. The ship will go to Genoa Bay to load part cargo after finishing here. The Orinoco is from Norfolk, Va.

The freighter Canadian Highlander will arrive here on Monday morning from the Orient via San Pedro and Seattle to discharge 300 tons of Manchurian maize at the Ogden Point docks. She will later go into drydock at Esquimalt.

The Norwegian freighter Golden Gate, which has been getting a new propeller in drydock at Esquimalt, will get away from port to-morrow for Gray's Harbor to load for the Orient.

MCKINLEY TAKES NEW AMERICAN ENVOY TO JAPAN

Cyrus E. Woods, Formerly of Madrid, Leaves To-morrow for Tokio

Cyrus E. Woods, new ambassador from the United States to Japan, will be a passenger sailing from this port to-morrow by the Admiral-Oriental liner President McKinley for Yokohama. He is accompanied by Mrs. Woods and her mother, Mrs. J. A. Marchand. Mr. Woods, who served two years as ambassador to Spain, left Madrid in May.

Ambassador Woods was succeeded at Madrid by Alexander P. Moore, publisher of The Pittsburgh Leader, and, in turn, will succeed Charles B. Warren, Detroit lawyer, at Tokio. Mr. Warren recently was named by President Harding on a commission to investigate conditions in Mexico. Hugh R. Wilson, counselor of the state of Pennsylvania, June 7, 1921, Mr. Woods' rise in the diplomatic service has been rapid. He was appointed Minister of Portugal by former President Taft, serving at Lisbon from January, 1912, until August, 1915. He resigned as secretary of state of Pennsylvania, June 7, 1921, to accept appointment from President Harding as Ambassador to Spain. Then, early this summer, came the appointment to the post in Tokio, considered among the most important in the diplomatic service. Ambassador Woods, a lawyer, resides in Greensburg, Pa. He graduated from Lafayette College in 1886 and was admitted to the Pennsylvania bar three years later, practicing in both Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. He was a member of the Pennsylvania bar from 1890 to 1903, serving as president of that body the last four years. A close friend of President Harding for years, Mr. Woods is one of his warmest admirers.

Blue Funneler Achilles Is Making Fast Time and Will Make Port To-morrow

Capt. Glossop Bringing Turbiner Across Pacific in Eleven Days; Holt Ship Has Big Oriental Cargo and Nearly Two Hundred Chinese in Steerage

On her second voyage from the Orient the big Blue Funneler turbiner Achilles is making a fast run and is expected to make port to-morrow afternoon, according to wireless advices received by Dodwell & Co. The Achilles is making the trans-Pacific run in about eleven days and is expected to better the time made by the Philoctetes, her sister ship in the North Pacific trade.

Under her schedule the Achilles is due to reach here on Tuesday next, so by arriving Sunday, she will be two days ahead of time. This voyage she is under the command of Capt. S. Glossop, who succeeded Capt. G. A. Flynn, the skipper who brought the new turbiner out from Liverpool.

The turbine ships Achilles and Philoctetes are the speed ships of the Blue Funnel fleet on the North Pacific and some keen rivalry is expected to develop between the two vessels.

Steerage Picking Up.

One hundred and seventy Chinese steerage passengers will disembark from the ship on her arrival here. Capt. Wilkinson, who was on the Pacific for a year in command of the steamship Talthybius, is back again, this time in charge of the bridge of the steamship Proteolus, which sailed from this port on Thursday for the Orient.

VIVID PORTRAYAL OF EASTERN COLOR

Forthcoming World Cruise of Empress of Canada Described in Booklet

The kaleidoscopic color of the East in artistic form with the two hemispheres in the background denoting the wonder route to be followed, embraces a delightful description of the places of world interest which will be visited by the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Canada next Winter during her circumnavigation of the globe.

"Around the World in an Hour" would be an excellent title for the latest souvenir booklet put out by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it would be a very pleasant hour that was spent in conning over its beautiful pages descriptive in picture and story of the wonderful places the "Empress of Canada" will next Winter visit as the traveling home of several hundred Canadian and American tourists. It is a beautiful book. Its illustrations of foreign places and people are more than usually good, and the letter-press takes one from one high point of interest to another until the world is circled. One is tempted to call this most unusual cover a riot of Oriental splendor, but that would be wrong. It is a symphony of color on a black background, effective and unique. One of the most notable things about the work is the fact that it is printed in Canada, a matter of great credit to the printers of this country.

GARDENA SAILS ON MAIDEN TRIP

New Union Boat Left Vancouver Last Night for Northern Coast

The Union Steamship Company's new coast steamer Gardena sailed from Vancouver at 9 o'clock last night on her maiden trip to northern British Columbia ports. All the settlements are eagerly awaiting the arrival of the ship which is to go on a 19-knot schedule. The company, with this first sail of the Gardena, is resuming the regular service to Stewart, at the urgent request of the Stewart shippers. Her schedule is: Ocean Falls, Swanson Bay, Prince Rupert, Alice Arm, Anxox and Stewart, with stops at ports between. She will sail at 9 p. m. every Friday, other changes, brought on by the arrival of the Gardena are: S. S. Camosun, sailing Thursday from Vancouver to Rivers Inlet, Ocean Falls and Bella Coola; S. S. Venture, sailing Tuesdays to Surf Inlet, Prince Rupert, Skeena and Naas rivers canneries; the Chelohsin on the run of the Cowichan; the Cowichan on the old Cheakamus run, the latter replaces the Cassiar, and the Cassiar is to go for annual inspection and then on service as a relief boat.

John Barnsley, managing director of the Union Company, states that the freight and passenger business up the coast is satisfactory, the boats are all busy and a prosperous season is assured. In addition to the freight and regular passenger traffic there is a marked increase in tourists who have been attracted to the coast by the wonders of the inland water route and the rugged beauties of the British Columbia mountains.

Sarazen Corrects Golf Faults

In these two pictures Gene Sarazen, the youthful open champion of the United States, points out the right and wrong way of "getting set" for a mashie shot. He points out the faults to be overcome by those who stand as shown in the "incorrect" pose. (Lower right)

By GENE SARAZEN. There are a number of things wrong with the "incorrect" posture for the mashie shot. In the first place, in trying to pivot I have bent my left knee forward instead of inward. When you reach the top of the back swing and the pivot is complete, the weight should be on the side of the left big toe—not on all toes, as shown in the picture at the right. Bend the knee inward and slightly forward—not straight forward.

Here Is Prize Essay of 10,000 Written By B. C. Pupils

Jean Halliday Mackay, aged 15, of the Junior Matriculation Class of the Prince Rupert High School, won the silver cup in the essay competition conducted by the forest branch of the Department of Lands on the need for protection of British Columbia forests.

Two other silver cups were awarded for the best essays in the intermediate and junior groups and a series of gold and silver medals. Here is the winning senior essay:

By JEAN HALLIDAY MACKAY

Subject: "Our Forests and Why We Should Protect Them From Fire."

About one hundred years ago, a playful little breeze was blowing through the boughs of a great tree, standing by itself on the side of a hill, and, as the breeze sang and danced among the branches, it blew the little cones off the tree, and they dropped to the ground one by one. For many months the little seeds lay there and then they sent tiny roots down into the ground, and little shoots grew up into the air. For many, many years, the little plants grew, and after over a hundred years, instead of one solitary tree there was a mighty forest. Now, after a century, these trees were ready for the people to use.

This forest was very beautiful and very valuable, so many people wanted to procure it, and many men came to look at it. First there came a great pulp and paper manufacturer, who counted his money by the millions. He looked at the trees and, as he looked, the trees faded away and he saw in their place millions of rolls of paper to be shipped to every part of the world, and he thought what a wonderful forest it was.

Then another man came—a man representing one of the great railroads—and, as he looked at the trees, he saw railroad ties, enough to stretch across the Dominion, and he also thought what a wonderful forest it was.

For many months men came, men representing aeroplane manufacturers, railroads, builders and contractors, lumber companies, great paper mills, men from all over Canada, and during these months the great trees waited impatiently to learn how they were going to help the world.

Then, one afternoon a happy, headless party of young people came to the forest and built a camp-fire, and after a lovely afternoon, they went away leaving their smouldering fire. That evening a breeze blowing through the forest fanned the embers into a bright flame, and the fire grew greedy and licked up the dry grass, then ran up a near-by tree, and in only two days all that was left of the mighty forest was a smoking mass of charred wood and cinders.

This is just one little forest fire, and yet a great deal was lost by it. Think of the loggers that would have been employed, and no matter who used the tree, employment would have been given to thousands. Our Province would have been enriched, and great good done by the product of the wood.

Last year there were over twenty-three hundred just such fires. Think of the awful destruction done by them! Millions of dollars were lost by these fires, men were put out of work, and families were made homeless. If those trees had been protected and saved, think of the good that would have accrued! Men would have been provided with work, more pulp and paper mills would be built in B. C., more lumber mills would be built, more people would come in and new towns would spring up, therefore, B. C. would prosper in every way.

I think that is a sufficient reason why we should protect our forests, for by so doing we would bring a new era of happiness and prosperity to our Province, the best in the whole Dominion.

GARDENS AND WILD FLOWERS

My friend Jones is exceedingly proud of his garden. His pride is more than that of possession, laudable as that may be. It springs from two main sources. One is the fact that he came as near as possible to making it himself. When he took it in hand it was chiefly rock, unashamed bed rock. Innumerable barrowfuls of earth were necessary to make flower beds on such a surface, and it needs constant watering in the months of Summer. But as we smoked our after-dinner cigars along the little paths it was difficult for me to picture the preliminaries of so fair a picture. The other source of pride is the personal interest he has in every plant. Every one has a history, an association, such as you cannot purchase and comes only from firsthand contact. Either you grow it from seed and watch over its development as a mother that of her child, or else you have adopted it from wild life into the domestic garden. Some people buy plants as others do books, by the wholesale, in shelves-full, for a color scheme or what not. Not so with Jones. His garden is the expansion of his personality. It is not in the office where he is to be found from nine till five that the man is known. Here is the place which fits him and which he has made as truly as the bird its nest or the caddis worm its case.

Wild Flowers at Home.

To me the chief charm of this garden lies in its wild plants. Jones has brought them here from forest and hill and valley. I am one of those whose delight it is to travel far afoot, believing that to be on the whole the most thorough way of seeing and knowing the countryside. No that motors or trains are to be despised; from my point of view they are means to an end. They put you down when rest intensive seeing and experience begin. In the garden, things in the world as it is and with human limitations I can only see a part of the plant world at a time, and sometimes I find a flower of my own sight or a scent of some favorite. But in this garden your friends are with you and you can see them bud and blossom at your ease. To give them their necessary environment, to make them feel at home is an art in itself, requiring imagination as well as skill. True, everything cannot be done; there are limits on city lot or even town. Jones, however, has done wonders. There are little details and rocky hillsides and open sunny glades. Everywhere in these is written in ink as permanent as may be the story of many excursions, mute testimony, too, to many a dream of journeys never taken and campfires never lit.

A Few Friends.

Under the delicious tender green shade of a vase-like group of lady ferns I found a curious little plant. Its large green heart-shaped leaves spring from a running stem, and they half conceal between them the strange flowers. They remind one of a lady's wavy hair, open with three strings. The strings extend from the tip of the large calyx lobes. These are yellowish on the outside, while the inside is a pale, almost white. A sarum candidum or Wild Ginger came to my friend's garden from Goldstream and has been an unfailing object of interest ever since. It is a cousin of the Dutchman's Pipe, Aristolochia clematitis or Birthwort, sometimes seen as a creeper on houses. A fine specimen overhangs the window at the Laxey Nurseries. The Birthwort family is well represented in South America, but has few representatives in northern lands. Great Britain has two, which are Asarum, somewhat like our species, is probably the only native.

A Carnivorous Plant.

On the edge of a tiny lakelet which he has much ado keeping near fullness in the summer, he showed me a plant of Sundew. Drosophyllum, which he obtained at Wrigley's Lake on the Malahat slopes. A little plant four or five inches high, with a few upright stems of an old-fashioned bone mustard spongy, and which are ruddy with glandular hairs, it has insignificant little white flowers crowning its leafless stalk. The leaves are the peculiar part. Growing in a tuft at the base of the stalk, they exude from the rosy hairs like drops of sticky fluid which attract small insects. The unfortunate creature which comes in contact with the leaves cannot escape from the sticky hairs, and these sensitive appendages proceed to close on their victim. In this way the sundew obtains a part at least of its nourishment and affords a striking example of a truly carnivorous plant. It is for the sake of its peculiar mode of living that my friend cherishes this anomaly; its flowers which incur themselves along one side of the stem at blossoming time are of no conspicuous beauty.

SUNDAY EVENING SERVICES AT CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL

The subject of the course of sermons to be preached in Christ Church Cathedral on the Sunday evenings of July and August by the Dean of Columbia is "Jesus Christ and the Fullness of Human Life."

In announcing this course of sermons the Dean stated last Sunday: "If the Christian is called to be unworried in temper there is a true sense in which no life is more worldly than his. A degree of voluntary asceticism he will have to practice, but he may go anywhere, do anything, eat or drink anything—sin only is barred. Jesus Christ would bless all that makes life happy and full, but in our desire to safeguard His Divinity we have sometimes forgotten His large humanity. It is in some such background of thought as this which lies behind a special course of sermons the Dean hopes to preach on the Sunday evenings of July as follows: July 1, "Reading"; July 8, "Art"; July 15, "Music"; July 22, "The Drama"; July 29, "Poetry"; August 5, "The Movies"; August 12, "Humor"; August 19, "Sex."

TO CONCLUDE SERIES ON DIVINE HEALING

On Sunday evening, at First Presbyterian Church, Dr. Wilson will give the concluding sermon of a series on Divine Healing. There has been a very keen interest taken in these sermons, and the topic for the sermon on Sunday evening will be "The Church, the Physician and the Christian, Pastor in Relation to Sickness." Dr. Wilson has been asked to preach on Church Union, and on Sunday morning next will give the congregation his views on this very important subject. This is a vital question with the Church to-day in view of the action of the General Assembly which was held at Port Arthur this month.

MISSION FUNDS

At a meeting of the Victoria Executive of the Presbyterian Church Association, the present position of the missionary fund of the Presbyterian Church was considered at some length, the tone of the discussion being that it was the duty of every member to support our missionaries, a motion being passed "that we strongly recommend our people to support to the extent of their ability the missionary funds of the Presbyterian Church in Canada with a view to wiping out the deficit."

The annual vacation Bible school will be conducted in the school room of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, Princess Avenue and Chambers Street, by the pastor, Rev. R. E. Kilbier. The school will open Monday morning at 9:30, and will continue for a course of four weeks, with sessions on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday mornings of each week. All the children of the congregation and district are invited to attend.

WONDER BOY TO BE MISSIONARY

New York, June 30.—A fourteen-year-old boy has made a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Chapter at Columbia University.
He is Edward Roche Hardy, Jr., of No. 419 West 118th Street. He is believed to be the youngest person ever admitted to the Greek letter fraternity, election to which is solely on a basis of scholarship.
The boy is the son of Prof. Edward R. Hardy of New York University. His mother, Dr. Sarah Drowne Reicher Hardy, has three scholarship degrees. At the age of five Edward entered New York University and took the course on school gardens. He made out his own enrolment blank.
He entered Columbia, at twelve in 1920 and became a senior in two and a half years. Edward's daily church is his mother. Although he is still in short trousers he is very large for his age.
Edward is said to have knowledge of twelve languages. He is also a student of history, sciences and mathematics, and plays the piano, harp, violin and mandolin. He intends to become a missionary.

Hereafter the president of Chicago University need not be a Baptist, according to action taken by the Northern Baptists' convention. Three-fifths of the Board of trustees must be Baptists, instead of two-thirds, as formerly was required.
The Salvation Army's self-denial week brought excellent results financially. For Eastern Canada, including Newfoundland and Bermuda, an objective of $260,000 had been set, but the amount actually raised was $275,214.

UNIVERSITY SCHOOL PROGRESSES WELL

Mr. Barnacle Closes Long Association With Institution

The departure of President J. B. Barnacle formed the subject of reference at the annual speech day at University Military School yesterday afternoon, at which Brig.-General R. P. Clark distributed the prizes.

Mr. Barnacle expressed the opinion that Dr. Macrae, his successor, "will prove an ideal head for the school."

Mr. Barnacle observed: "The four honor boards in the dining room testify to the successes the school has had in public examinations. Our boys have distinguished themselves at McGill, R. M. C., N. C., and latterly at the B. C. University. As to the outside activities, there is no trophy open to competition that we have not won. In shooting we have a Canadian reputation. In football, cricket and hockey we have invariably held first place.

The headmaster pointed out, in thanking Lieut.-Col. Godday and the staff, that not since the war has such good work been done as in the past twelve months.

The health of the school during the year had been excellent.

This year practically all the Sixth Form are sitting for their matriculation either at McGill, R. M. C., N. C., or the McGill Matric, and two for the B. C. Matric, who hope to enter the Royal Military College at Kingston.

Mr. Barnacle reviewed the work of the sports clubs in connection with the school, in rugby football, field hockey, cricket, boxing and gymnastics, shooting, tennis and in the athletic sports.

The prize list was as follows: Form VI.—The prizes will be awarded on the results of the matriculation examinations.

Form V.—Form prize, R. K. Martin. Mathematical prize, R. K. Martin. French and Latin prize, R. K. Martin. English prize, R. K. Martin.

Form IV.—Form prize, F. G. Frink. Mathematical prize, J. Drummond. French and Latin prize, F. G. Frink. English prize, F. G. Frink.

Form III.—Form prize, D. T. Tye. Mathematical prize, J. F. Nutt. French and Latin prize, D. H. Tye.

Form II.—Form prize, R. G. Abbey. Scripture prize (open to Forms IV. and III.)—R. Brinkley.

Drawing prize (open to Forms IV. and III.)—D. J. Macdonald.

VICTORIA, B. C., SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1923

TRAFFIC TANGLE COSTING LONDON MILLIONS YEARLY

Congestion in British Metropolis Blamed On Surprising Increase of Motors

Fifty New Buses a Week and Delay in Street Repairs Add to Confusion

Plan Mooted to Ban Horse and Other Slow Traffic From Busy Thoroughfares

London, June 30.—Despite the fact that in underground stations here one sees posters telling the public that London's subway trains, buses, taxis and pedestrians move faster than in New York...

London is waking up to the fact that since the war the number of motor-propelled vehicles in this city has increased out of all proportion to the rate which was regarded as normal in pre-war days.

For instance, yesterday 53,500 vehicles passed Hyde Park. At Piccadilly Circus there were 42,300, at Trafalgar Square, 41,000 and at Mansion House, 32,000.

To the uninitiated these repairs often seem to be carried out with a view to causing the maximum disturbance to traffic.

One is a chain of streets, of which Oxford Street and Holborn are a part, and the other is the Strand-Fleet Street system.

Except in this city, huge steam-driven trucks with trailers are allowed to pass through busy thoroughfares.

Lord Montagu suggested east and west elevated speedways from the Marble Arch to London Docks, and South Thames, between Clapham Junction and Surrey Docks.

There has been a tendency, therefore, to turn to Lord Ashfield's suggestion of co-ordinating present secondary roads by eliminating bottlenecks at the ends of wide thoroughfares and straightening some of the more crooked lanes.

In addition, the idea is to ban horse-drawn traffic and slow-moving lorries from the more important thoroughfares.

Provinces, there seems to be a hope that traffic delays in the Metropolis itself—which roughly is estimated as costing the public $100,000,000 a year—may next be tackled.

DUKE REVIVES JOUSTS

Knights to Tilt Again in Armour at Arundel Castle, One of Norfolk's Homes

London, June 30.—A jousting tournament with knights in ancient armor will be staged at Arundel Castle, one of the homes of the Duke of Norfolk, in August.

The present Duke of Norfolk is only sixteen, however, and so he won't do any tilting, but he will preside as the knight marshal of the lists and will be attended by Lady Beaumont, who will represent Queen Elizabeth. The Duke's young sister, Lady Rachel Howard, will act as her lady-in-waiting.

PRICED BY THE CARAT

J. H. Barlow is helping to solve the question of how much a dog can be worth. His eighteen-pound wire-haired terrier, Crockley Sensation, which collected $5,000 in prizes at the Olympia show, is valued at $15-an ounce.

Another One!

The latest romance of royalty came to light when announcement was made of the engagement of Princess Maud of England (above), the king's niece, to Lord Carnegie, eldest son of the Earl of Southesk.

London, June 30.—Believing that the ordinary sermon holds no interest for the man in the street and therefore makes no impression, the Rev. G. Ernest Thorne, of the Church of the Strangers, in a London suburb, is introducing an innovation by preaching in Biblical costume.

The pastor has had a stage equipped with footlights erected in his church, and to-night he is portraying Abraham with his sackground of tents and Eastern scenery, with appropriate lighting effects.

With me as Abraham to my birthplace and following me through my life," says Thorne. "I have impressed on my people that it is not amusement, I shall impersonate Abraham with all the reverence I can command, and people will forget I am their pastor. I shall be Abraham."

Preacher Acts Sermons, Dons Biblical Garb to Impress His Flock

London, June 30.—That the government should pay a portion of the expenses for the upkeep of historic houses whose owners throw them open to public view at certain periods of the year, is a suggestion made by Lord Lascelles at a meeting of the National Art Collections Fund in London.

Several members of the nobility have been obliged to break up their collections and place their houses on the market, and thus art objects which have been looked on as almost national possessions are being spread in all parts of the world.

Lord Lascelles Declares Owners of Historic Mansions Can no Longer Afford Expense of Upkeep

London, June 30.—That man should live to the age of 140 if he only paid proper attention to his diet and health laws is the contention of Dr. Leonard Williams, the eminent British medical lecturer. Other provocative remarks of the doctor are: "There is nothing inevitable about illness" and "If we get disease, we ought not to be pitted as victims, but condemned as fools."

ENVIES TALL BRUNETTES

Lady Astor Wants Romantic Picture Painted to Show Why Men Voted for Her

London, June 30.—The career of Lady Astor since she became a Parliamentarian continues to be crowded with surprises and a variety of activities. Addressing students at Oxford, Lady Astor said she seemed destined to be one of those women who "do things first." She admitted, laughingly, that she was likely to go down in history beside Susan Anthony and Mrs. Pankhurst.

She told the students that inasmuch as she was an historical figure she intended to prepare for distinction by having her portrait painted after her heart's desire: "A beautiful woman, tall, dark, with an intense and romantic faraway gaze—the kind of picture that would make future students at Oxford gaze and not be surprised that men had voted for her." Lady Astor is short and blonde.

WOMEN WRITERS DEBATE MERITS OF MODERN NOVEL

Sheila Kaye-Smith and Rebecca West Discuss Literary Interest

Love Disruptive Element, Therefore Literary Opportunity, Is Argument

Modern Books Too Easy to Read; Miss West Sarcastic Over Elinor Glynn

London, June 30.—"Is there any alternative to the sex novel?" This question is being debated by two eminent women novelists—Sheila Kaye-Smith and Rebecca West—at the London School of Economics. A summary of the views set forth by these two writers suggests that there is no alternative to life," she went on.

Sheila Kaye-Smith, whose books are as well known in the States as in England, declared that affairs of sex must be the chief concern of novelists, because the novel about sex concerns things which happen to every one and brings interest and excitement into every life.

"Sex," she said, "is one of the few surviving primitive emotions that has not been civilized out of Nature. Love is a great disruptive element, therefore it is a great literary opportunity."

She declared she did not think the novels of adventure, or politics, or business would ever become dangerous rivals of sex novels. She thought the ideal is a story with 50 per cent. love interest and the balance any other interests.

"Love stories which are demoralizing are those which give a falsely idealized picture of life," she went on. "There isn't any alternative to the sex novel and we don't want one." Rebecca West's line of argument was that the test is not whether the novel deals too much or too little with sex, but whether it deals with it from the point of view of art. She grew sarcastic about the books of Elinor Glynn and Victoria Cross, who, she said, could not invent real people, and therefore were forced to make their books interesting by stressing the sexual element.

She told her audience the story of the publisher who defended a certain woman novelist by saying "She is a plain woman, and she has too much temper for a plain woman, so she writes about sex." "I have impressed on my people that it is not amusement, I shall impersonate Abraham with all the reverence I can command, and people will forget I am their pastor. I shall be Abraham."

STORK, DEATH AND CAPID ARE SHUNNING ENGLAND, RATE DECREASE SHOWS

London, June 30.—If the next three quarters of 1923 are anything like the quarter ended March 31 England's population will not show much increase. The figures just published for the first quarter show that the birth rate in England and Wales was the lowest on record for any first quarter, with the exception of the war years.

WAVES FURNISH THE MUSIC

Students of the ancient Greek dances at the Mayfair School, Gorse-ton, England, rehearse on the shore, taking their rhythm from the restless waves.

London, June 30.—Major-General Adrian Carton de Wiart, a Belgian in the British army, considers himself one of the world's luckiest men. His friends call him one of the bravest. Although he has faced death hundreds of times, he says he is a coward in this respect: He fears the camera.

SHY PRINCESS ONCE FOUGHT DEATH IN SEA

Royal Maud Won Battle With Waves After Liner Sank Off Gibraltar

Is Fifth of Princess Mary's Bridesmaids to Become Engaged Or Married

Lord Carnegie, Her Fiance, Is Heir to Great Herd of Deer and Highland Cattle

London, June 30.—Unless the Prince of Wales or one of his brothers becomes engaged within the next six months, which is not at all likely, the marriage of Princess Maud, niece of the King, whose engagement has been announced to Lord Carnegie, will be the last wedding ceremony this year, in which a member of the royal family will be the principal figure.

Reversing the position of the last royal wedding, that of the Duke of York and Lady Elizabeth Bowes Lyon, the bride-to-be in this case is the royal figure, while the groom, as does the Duchess of York, comes from a noble Scottish family. The princess is a younger daughter of the Duchess of Fife, sister of King George, and was brought up with her cousins, Princess Mary and her brothers, Prince Edward and Prince George.

She is the fifth of Princess Mary's bridesmaids to become engaged or married, the four others being the Duchess of York, who was married last April; Lady Mary Cambridge, who was married in February; Lady Alice, now married to Clarke George Wyner, and Lady Rachael Cavendish, who is engaged to Captain the Hon. James Stuart.

Bravest Man

London, June 30.—Major-General Adrian Carton de Wiart, a Belgian in the British army, considers himself one of the world's luckiest men. His friends call him one of the bravest. Although he has faced death hundreds of times, he says he is a coward in this respect: He fears the camera.

During his army experience, which extended from the Boer War in South Africa to every battlefield of the World War, De Wiart lost an arm, an eye, part of a thigh, and has been operated on 15 times. He has won innumerable decorations.

He won the Victoria Cross at the Battle of the Somme. When some British units had been cut off by the Germans, General De Wiart organized a group of stragglers, inspired them with his own courage, and led them to the rescue of their hard-pressed comrades. He succeeded, but during the withdrawal he was severely wounded.

When he recovered in the hospital, the physicians decided that he had had enough. They wanted him to retire from active service. He refused. "Why should I retire?" he declared. "It is true that I am a limb of two short, but I am as good as ever." And now he says: "A photographer makes me nervous."

SEEK DORSET GOLD

Clergyman Known as Water Divines Feels Mystric Treasures Near and His Flock Joins in Hunt

Shaftesbury, June 30.—Inhabitants of this old world town in Dorset, the Wessex of Thomas Hardy, have joined in a search for gold at the foot of a hill near the old abbey walls. A short time ago a clergyman was taking a walk through the town when, just as he rounded the hill, he "felt the presence of something in the earth." The minister is a water diviner, but this feeling, he said, was quite different from that he experiences when walking over a hidden stream.

HERE'S PRINCE IN ANOTHER GARB

Britain's heir to the throne has created quite a reputation for himself as a sportsman. This is one of the latest pictures of him showing him bringing in his maddle after the Welsh Guards' regimental race in which he took part.

Several prominent townsfolk are convinced that the "something" is treasure, and excavations have been started. Opposite the place where the clergyman received "shocks," which he felt for a couple of days, is an old cottage which at one time was a mint. In a chimney not far away a number of buttons were found recently which were discovered to be gold coins, so that it is possible more of the old coins will be discovered.

ENGLAND LOOKS TO HIM

Premier and Mrs. Stanley Baldwin and their son, Oliver, snapped in the garden at the Premier's summer home.

London, June 30.—Because he fears that railroad trains, tramcars, automobiles and boats aren't safe enough, Lieutenant Willy Coppens, an attaché at the Belgian embassy here, travels around in an airplane whenever it is possible. He has crossed the English Channel more than 50 times, and has flown over most of Europe. He is more at home in the air than on land or sea. Among army men and aviators he is considered as one of the world's coolest and most daring air fighters.

During the war he brought down 40 enemy planes in flights over enemy lines. Once he fought a whole German squadron for five hours. He lost his leg in the encounter, but won his battle.

All told, he was wounded 13 times during the war. "I thought that that was going to be my unlucky number," he says. "But it wasn't."

It seems it was his lucky number, for later he went into action against Richthofen, ace of the German flyers. While flying low, the Belgian was attacked by his daring opponent. His machine was shot so badly that it started to drift helplessly toward the enemy. But somehow he righted the machine, turned it around and managed to steer it safely back to his own lines. Just as it touched the ground, its petrol tank exploded and the machine went up in flames. But Coppens' lucky star was with him and he escaped.

"I'd rather ride in an airplane than a taxi," says Coppens.

HORATIO BOBS UP AGAIN AND WRITES OPINIONS FROM JAIL

No Appetite, No Sleep, Former Editor-Financier Says He Is Just Rotting Away

Celebrates Year's Incarceration Telling of Much Sympathy From Bishop Down

Sorry for Those Who Have Not Got Money Back From His Clubs

London, June 30.—The following letter has been sent from prison by Horatio Bottomley, former editor of the London weekly, "John Bull," found guilty of embezzlement, to his wife and daughter:

No. 1779. Name, H. Bottomley, Wormwood Scrubs Prison. "Dearest, — Beginning — man-like — about myself, I cannot this time give a very good report. No appetite and no sleep make a bad combination, especially when aggravated by a variety of painful nerve disorders. The loss of weight, which has been considerable, may not necessarily be serious, provided the process is checked in time. But the insomnia, I confess, does cause me some anxiety and at times an almost some depression. But I fight it as best I can. I think I have had every narcotic in the British pharmacopoeia and out of it, but, you see, the surgery here, wonderful as it is, contains nothing labelled 'Pax vobiscum!' and suppose the chaplain would say that only one physician prescribes and dispenses that!"

After One Year. "Well, I have been here just on a year—as a matter of fact, according to the official scale, well over a year—rotting away a big slice out of the remaining portion of my life that counts. Of course I understand the wonderful messages of sympathy and hope you have received from all quarters—from the dear old Bishop down to those poor, humble folk who are good enough to remember the little things I did for them and theirs during and after the war. But it requires a lot of philosophy to face the awful reality of my position. And then there are those suggestions for a series of monster petitions (some unique in character); but I still discourage the idea. If what I have already endured since the trail—involving expulsion from Parliament and bankruptcy; my age, my health, my services to the States—had the accounts, I am now voicing—if, say, these things do not appear, then I am sure no number of petitions would.

"Sorry For B. L." "But I am sincerely sorry for members of those wretched clubs who may not yet have received their money, and for whom I am sure I could have done so much had I been permitted to proceed to France (either under escort or on parole and at no public expense). But enough of these sad thoughts!"

"From all I gather from the scanty news which reaches us once a week, I do not yet have received the impression of a very satisfactory condition. I am very sorry for 'B.L.' who ought to have taken warning from that breakdown two years or so ago, and not have allowed himself to have been prevailed upon to undertake his present heavy task. Honest, sincere, and possessed of a marvellous mentality—above all, of that inestimable gift of character—he has a rough job to tackle."

Teaching a Lesson. "Until they get cheaper food and drink, and better housing, the 'working classes' (to use a silly phrase) will continue to revolt. I believe, a strong feeling that we are not doing quite the right thing by France. Whatever may be the material result of the Ruhr occupation, I believe, I am very sorry for 'B.L.' who ought to have taken warning from that breakdown two years or so ago, and not have allowed himself to have been prevailed upon to undertake his present heavy task. Honest, sincere, and possessed of a marvellous mentality—above all, of that inestimable gift of character—he has a rough job to tackle."

First Labor Government. "But if not? A reshuffle of the Government, with 'F. E.' as Prime Minister, and Chamberlain, Horne, and others—with possibly Winston among them—in the Cabinet. For 'F. E.' is a second 'Diszy,' and is sure to come out with a bold, picturesque policy—probably an up-to-date version of Tory Democracy. Meanwhile, the Liberals will close up their ranks under a 'Lloyd George-Simon regime' for dear old Asquith, who must be over seventy now, has surely had enough of it."

"And so for a few years—I put it at from seven to ten—the game will go on between the old parties, as modified, and then at last we shall have the first Labor Government, of course with Ramsay MacDonald as Premier. He stands, as Parliamentarian, head and shoulders above all his colleagues, and so long as he keeps his hands off the Tories and avoids confrontation, there is no reason why we shouldn't sleep a night. And all the time 'the great big world keeps turning.'"

Famous Poet's Pipes Were Drug on Market

Stocky, Hospitable Man Who Offered
Canadians Clay Pipes at Belmont
Was Ruyard Kipling.

A FEW Canadians, one or two of them perhaps veterans of two wars, will recall a curious and little-known incident that occurred in the camp at Belmont, near the Orange River, in the early days of 1900, when the Royal Canadians were waiting for the "big push" that was to have its climax in the surrender of the rebellious Cronje at Paardeburg.

Rudyard Kipling

For a tragic week, just a little earlier, trains of wounded from the Magerfontein fight had been passing through Belmont on this particular day the little station showed few signs of activity beyond a bunch of soldiers loafing on platform and grousing against their inactive lot. They showed little interest when, by and by, a train came panting up the heavy-grade. It was an ordinary goods train with a few soldiers toing north to rejoin their regiments at the Modder River.

A civilian passenger hopped down to the platform, short, chunky, rather bull-necked, with a stout pair of shoulders and a slightly peering gaze from behind his glasses. While the train halted for water the passenger talked to the waiting Canadians, making interested inquiries regarding the kopjes surrounding Belmont.

He had with him a goodly load of clay pipes, and he beamed from behind his glasses as he approached one of the soldiers.

"Have a pipe?" he invited.

"Now," returned the soldier. "I've got a pipe."

"The little man, not in the least disconcerted, tackled the sentry on the platform with his gifts.

"Never use 'em, sir," returned the sentry stolidly.

The man with the pipes approached another soldier, who politely pointed out Guards' Kopje, Scott's Ridge and other surrounding landmarks—but he, too, balked at the clay pipes.

"I smoke nothing but cigarettes—thank you, sir," he declared.

So the round of the waiting soldiers progressed, till the train whistle blew and the stocky little civilian climbed on board, his stock of clay pipes quite undiminished.

One of the soldiers shouted after him: "Better luck, maybe, if you bring meerschaums next time!" and the train pulled out of sight.

As it happened, the Royal Canadians had all been supplied with English briars just a few weeks before.

As the train vanished one of the men remarked:

"Who is that little duffer, anyway? His face seemed familiar. Seems as if I saw him somewhere once before."

There were several wild guesses as to the visitor's identity; and then one chap burst forth:

"I've got it. I saw his picture just the other day in an old magazine. Boys, that's Rudyard Kipling."

And so it was.

Archie McKishnie Tells of Triumph of the Egg

Author Shares in Triumph of Homeless
Robin, Who Chooses His Eavestrough for Its Nest.

Archie P. McKishnie, nature-lover and favorite writer on the lives and ways of animals, seems to be a person about whom there are endless stories of adventure at home as well as in the wilds.

The other day a robin which had been building in McKishnie's district for a number of seasons, returned, much to the author's delight, and proceeded to erect her nest in his next door neighbor's eaves-trough. He mentioned it to several of his friends with pride that the little bird should have come back to the same neighborhood each year and especially where he could study her.

In a few days McKishnie's friends were apprised of a misfortune which had overtaken not only the bird but the author himself. The man on whose roof she had been building had discovered the nest and broken it up, fearing that his eaves-trough might clog with the obstruction. McKishnie was as broken-hearted as the bird. There was the robin homeless, and all her toil for naught; the summer coming on and her eggs unaided!

Another short period elapsed, and the telephone bells were set ringing in several places in Toronto by the still solicitous McKishnie.

"Say," he is reported to have announced to one of his North Toronto friends. "You know that robin?"

"What's the matter; is she suing for damages or something?"

"No; better than that."

"Has she instituted a squatter's revolution?"

"Worse than that!" declared the author in exultation. "Worse than that! She's building in my eaves-trough! What do you know about that?"

And with insatiable enthusiasm, McKishnie runs off to inform several others of his following of the triumph of the egg, or the robin's revenge.

Learned Judge Advises How to End Cutworms

Great Flower Lover and Student of Garden Problems Is Sir W.
R. Meredith.

Sir W. R. Meredith

By W. L. E.

SIR W. R. MEREDITH's fame as a floriculturist is as widespread as his fame as a jurist, and particularly in respect to the cultivation of roses, gladioli and dahlias. It may possibly be news to a great many of even his friends that he is also a close student of ways and means designed to exterminate the many varieties of pests that year in and year out threaten the life of plant and flower. Such, however, is the case. One of his friends who is aware of this fact recently approached him for a solution of the problem which perturbs all gardeners, to wit, how to exterminate the nefarious cutworm.

"My dear fellow," replied Sir William with as much dignity as if he were delivering a judgment in the Supreme Court of Ontario, "the task is a very simple one. You first secure two bricks. Then you take them into your garden and place them either on top of each other or side by side. It does not matter which as long as they are within easy distance. The next move in the process is to get down on your hands and knees, and with fingers or handy tool carefully turn over the soil in close vicinity to each plant, keeping your eyes alert at the same time for the presence of the lurking cutworm. When you discover one of the pests take it between finger and thumb, lay it on one of the bricks. Then grasp the other brick and press it with vigor upon the captured cutworm. Repeat the process with the discovery of every cutworm; and if you do not become weary in well-doing many cutworms will ultimately be exterminated and the life of many of your favorite plants saved."

ONE OF NATURE'S OWN
CONFIRMED PESSIMISTS

The buggy stopped before the local bank, and Mr. W. S. Reed, Frontenac's Farmer representative at Ottawa, backed out.

"Say, hadn't you better tie that horse up?" suggested the messenger, who happened to be enjoying a chew conveniently near the city train.

"Oh, no," replied Mr. Reed. "She won't run away."

"No, but she might fall down," sighed the long-suffering messenger as he edged away on urgent business.

A GREAT VIOLIN-MAKER

A great honor has been done to an English violin-maker who recently awarded a prize for making an instrument said to have a better tone than a Stradivarius when the two competed at the Aeolian Hall. He is Mr. Arthur Vincent, and it is his boast that he has worked sixteen hours a day for twenty years. Every morning he spends in his workshop carving out violins. Then at night he becomes the leader of the orchestra at His Majesty's Theatre.

Mr. Vincent's father was a violin-maker, and he was told as a boy that if he wanted an instrument he would have to make it himself!

Love Story of Famous Mme. Curie Recalls Romance of School Days

Woman Who Helped Scientist Work Out Radium Theory Married Him on $1200 a Year—Seemed Like Choosing Between Her Own Career and a Home, But She Got Both.

Marie Curie

INTIMATE views of the home life and scientific collaboration of Pierre and Marie Curie during their eleven years of married life have been afforded by Mme. Curie in a recent number of The Revue Bleue, a semi-weekly of Paris.

The co-discoverer of radium begins her article by telling how she was invited in the Spring of 1894 to the home of a fellow-countryman, a Polish scientist, who was a great admirer of the rising young physicist, Pierre Curie. Then she writes:

"When I entered, Pierre Curie was in a window opening on the balcony. He seemed very young to me, although he was thirty-five. I was struck by the expression in his clear eyes and an appearance of slight abandon in his tall figure. His somewhat slow and deliberate speech, his simplicity, his smile, both serious and youthful, all inspired one with confidence.

"We began a conversation which soon became friendly. There was a surprising kinship between his ideas and mine, despite the difference in our native countries.

"We met again at the Society of Physics and in the laboratory. Then he asked permission to call upon me. At that time I was living in a room on the sixth floor of a house in the school quarter. It was a poor lodging, for my resources were very limited. But I was happy there, nevertheless, having, at the age of twenty-five years, realized my long desire to make deep scientific studies.

"Pierre Curie came to see me with a sincere and simple sympathy for my hard-working life. Soon he got the habit of talking with me about his dream of a life wholly consecrated to scientific research, and he asked me to share such existence. But it was not easy to make such a decision, for it meant separation from my country, from my family and renunciation of plans for social work dear to me. Having grown up in an atmosphere of patriotism, kept alive by the oppression of Poland, I wished, like so many other young people of my country, to do my share in maintaining the national spirit."

"Such was the status of this courtship when Marie Sklodowska went to visit her father in Poland for the Summer vacations of 1894. Pierre Curie kept in touch with her by means of letters which Mme. Curie says were written in such a fine style that she is sure he would have been a great author if he had chosen the literary profession.

One of M. Curie's letters read:

"We have agreed (isn't this true?) to have at least a great friendship for each other. Provided you don't change your mind. For there are no promises that always hold good; they are things that can't be ordered.

"Nevertheless, it would be a beautiful thing, which I dare not believe, to pass our lives together, hypnotized by our dreams: your patriotic dream, our humanitarian dream and our scientific dream. Of all these dreams I believe only the last is justified. By this I mean to say that we are not able to change the social order and that if such were not the case we would not know what to do; and, in acting along any line we would never be sure of not doing more harm than good by retarding some inevitable evolution.

"Along scientific lines, on the contrary, we are able to attempt anything. The ground there is firmer and every discovery, no matter how small, is conserved."

In explaining that M. Curie had delayed marrying until he was thirty-six because he feared that he could not find a woman who could share his hopes, Mme. Curie quotes as follows from an entry made in his diary when he was twenty-two years old:

"Women, more than we, love life for life's sake; women of genius are rare. And so, when, impelled by some mystic love, we wish to enter some path removed from the main highway, when we devote all our thoughts to some task that removes us from the mass of humanity, we have to fight with the women. And the struggle is always unequal, for it is in the name of life and nature that they try to win us over."

After Marie Sklodowska returned from her vacation the courtship progressed, and on July 25, 1895, a simple civil marriage took place neither of them seeing any necessity for a religious ceremony. After telling of the satisfaction felt by the families on both sides at the union, Mme. Curie continues:

"Our first establishment, extremely modest, consisted of a three-roomed flat in the Rue de le Glaciere, not far from the School of Physics. Our limited furniture was made up of articles that had belonged to our relatives. Our resources did not allow us to have servants. So I had to attend to nearly all the household duties, something to which I had become accustomed during my student days.

"Pierre Curie's salary as a professor was 6,000 francs (then about $1,200) a year. For my part, I prepared for the competitive examination for young girls for a place on the teaching staff and I was admitted in 1896. Our existence was organized entirely for scientific work and our days were passed in the laboratory, where Schutzenberger had authorized me to work nearly my husband.

"During eleven years of life together we were hardly ever separated, so there exist but a few lines of correspondence between us during that period. Our days of rest or vacation were devoted to walking or bicycle riding in the country around Paris, at the seashore or in the mountains.

"Later, having our child with us, we were inclined to spend our vacations in one place, without traveling. We then lived as simply as possible in remote villages where we could hardly be distinguished from the local residents. I recall the stupefaction of an American journalist who found us in Pouilly just as I seated on the stone steps of the house, was busy shaking the sand out of my sandals. But his perplexity soon vanished and, playing his part in the scene, he sat beside me and began jotting down my answers to his questions.

"In our life together he allowed me to learn to know him as he wished and to understand his thoughts better every day. It was all and more than all I had been able to dream of at the time of our union. My admiration for his exceptional qualities grew constantly. They were of such a rare and elevated nature that he sometimes seemed to me to be a unique being, because of his detachment from all vanity and from those petty shortcomings that we discover in ourselves and in others and judge with indulgence, not without aspiring to a more nearly perfect ideal."

Pierre Curie was killed in a traffic accident.

Janey Canuck Proud of Her Matchmaking

Mrs. Magistrate Murphy's Twelve Questions Settled Match Between Her
Ward and Lonely Homesteader.

ABOUT a year ago The Edmonton Journal received a letter from a homesteader who lived five days' journey from the city and who had become rather lonely. He was an American by birth, had 160 acres fifty miles from the railroad, had served with the army in Siberia and was twenty-three years of age. Giving these qualifications, he asked if a suitable young woman to act as a life partner could be found in Edmonton.

Now it happened that just at this time Mrs. Magistrate Murphy had a particular interest in an eighteen-year-old girl whose mother had died and whose father had served overseas. Without informing the young lady she wrote to the homesteader asking him twelve questions as to his record, all of which he answered satisfactorily, sending in references as additional proof as to his good character. He admitted that he wasn't handsome, but claimed that no girl had ever been scared at the sight of his face.

The next step was to talk the matter over with the woman in the case. This was done, and it was not long before Mrs. Murphy and the girl had written an important missive

AUTOMOTIVE NEWS

NEW SYSTEM WILL AVOID BURSTING OF CAR RADIATOR

Thermostat Becomes Part of Expensive Car Appointments

There is no doubt that some control of the cooling system is very desirable, and it is becoming usual on the larger and more expensive chassis to install a thermostat for this purpose. In many cases this is arranged so that on starting the engine from cold, the radiator is short-circuited until such a time as the water in the cylinder jackets has become sufficiently warm to operate the thermostat, and in such cases, if the car be taken on the road in very cold weather immediately the engine is started there is a possibility of the water in the radiator becoming frozen and causing serious damage by bursting the pipes.

Actual examples of this trouble are not wanting, and on that account there is no doubt that the method of controlling the temperature of the cooling system by means of a variable speed fan has much to recommend it. On the thirty-four h.p. Spyker (Dutch) such a system is actually adopted, and in one or two other cases a clutch is incorporated in the fan drive, so that for starting and in cold weather the fan may be put out of action.

An ingenious idea has been developed in which a three-speed planetary bicycle hub is adapted for incorporation in the fan drive. This variable gear fan has been extensively tested, and has given every success, and has proved very beneficial to the running of the car, particularly in mountainous districts.

GEAR RATIO IS FULLY EXPLAINED

Method of Calculation Is Explained by Number of Driving Gear Teeth

By the term "gear ratio" is meant the number of revolutions a driven gear makes in relation to its driver. If the driving gear turns twice on each turn of the driven gear, the ratio is two to one. The size of the gears is immaterial; it is the relation between the number of teeth in the two gears which determines the ratio. On an automobile running in high gear, the transmission ratio, which is the ratio between the number of revolutions of the crankshaft and the driveshaft, is one to one. On second or third gear the ratio is lower; the driveshaft will turn slower than the crankshaft. The rear axle ratio is the ratio between the driveshaft and the rear axle. To calculate the gear ratio divide the number of teeth in the driving gear into the number of teeth in the driven gear. To find the total gear reduction between the crankshaft and the rear axle multiply the transmission gear ratio by the rear axle ratio. The same rules apply to chain-driven

FORD PLANTS OFFER GREATEST ACTIVITY SINCE ORGANIZING

Highland Park Plant Largest in World; 60,000 Men Work 8-Hour Shifts

The Highland Park plant of the Ford Motor Company is the largest individual motor plant in the world, covering a total of nearly 300 acres, of which 123 are under roof. Here the Ford car is built, the castings being received from the River Rouge plant and bodies from the various Ford body-building plants.

The unit of Highland Park includes the main offices, the Highland Park power plant, the Detroit sales branch, the boys' industrial school and the manufacturing unit. Under the latter head are included the motor assembly, car assembly, motor, test, top and upholstery departments, and rooms for drop forgings, glass factory and others.

Great Activity Prevails.

To-day these plants present the scene of the greatest activity in the history of the Ford Motor Company, as every energy is being directed to reaching the 6,000-cars-a-day schedule set by the manufacturing department.

The manufacture of 6,000 separate Ford units daily presents staggering production figures and calls for the highest degree of accuracy in the manufacturing operation. It means that in the motor assembly department 6,000 motor blocks are handled, 24,000 connecting rods, 48,000 valves and necessary mechanical materials. The installation of 18,000 main motor bearings with other production figures in the same ratio and to a uniform standard of quality.

Each of these parts is subjected to exacting balance and micrometer tests, and as production at the Highland Park plant increases it is necessarily accompanied with a sustained accuracy with which each individual part is made in order that the various assembly operations may progress smoothly and without interruption.

Production at the plant has not been increased by more work, but by increasing man power to the utmost of the mechanical capacity, and at the present time 60,000 men are employed at the plant, working in eight-hour shifts six days a week, on a 24-hour basis.

In the huge drop-forge plant, where 6,000 front axles, 6,000 crank shafts and other drop-forge parts are made, there has been added equipment, and greater man power is being used to produce the same individual part at the same time there has been an increased quality marking every phase of Ford construction.

To guard against the possibility of the outside manufacturer falling in this huge production schedule, the glass plant, the fabric plant, and other allied plants at the Highland Park group are all working on a 24-hour schedule.

In the glass factory there is a never-ending flow of molten glass from the furnace mouth, at which it is rolled out and slipped along a 465-foot ribbon to the cutting end, where it is cut into length and sent to the polishing machines.

In the plant the work on top material goes on unceasingly, and tops and upholstery are cut and sewed by hand into proper parts.

Endless Conveyors Operate.

From all departments the various finished parts emerge upon endless conveyors and are carried to the assembly lines, and the movement is so synchronized that each unit arrives at the proper point in exact ratio to the manufacturing need.

These parts are assembled by workmen, each performing his specific operation as the motors are carried along on a constantly moving conveyor until they come out completed at the end and in the same manner the motors come to the final assembly line, where cars and trucks are completed. There they are mounted upon the chassis and start-up, so that experts may pass upon the operation of the motor and other mechanical operations as they are conveyed along the lines to be turned out complete and leave the final station under their own power.

Though 1922 set up a production record of 1,351,333, the present year, under the schedule now on, will increase this by several hundred thousand.

This does not mean that every conceivable accessory will be, or should be, adopted by the car and truck manufacturer as standard equipment. A bargain must necessarily be allowed for personal whim, for local fashions, for peculiar changing needs, depending on type of use and of user. But the tendencies already indicated by the development of the last two years seem to show that vehicle manufacturers are more and more turning out complete cars and complete trucks, ready for use in every detail.

Instead of bringing about indiscriminate use of accessories, this trend will put the car equipment manufacturer to the test; only those accessories that are really useful and sound will meet the rigid requirements imposed by the engineers and executives of the vehicle builders, who in turn must be open-minded and constantly responsive to the dictates and needs of a public desiring more complete, more efficient and more economical vehicles.

There are more than 600 truck lines in operation in America, 150 of which are in Canada.

GOODYEAR'S FAST PACE.

Goodyear is going rapidly. The department of dealers' relations reports increasing demand for tires throughout the northern part of the state. With the mountain roads opening rapidly and touring soon to start in earnest, it is certain that the company here will set a new record before the year is out.

EVERY CAR OWNER SHOULD HAVE HIS CAR DESCRIPTION

The automobile owner who gives the welfare of his machine any consideration will at this time be thinking of things he would like to do to his car or a quiet day when he was another season's driving. After his car is overhauled he is probably considering the installation of a few conveniences which he has long felt during last season. He may want to install a stop signal, a new life-carrier, or a new speedometer, all of which are very good things in their places. There are, however, other things worth thinking about which are both interesting as well as valuable and which cost less money. Here are some of these, as given out by local garage men:

1. A record of the license number, manufacturer's series number and engine number.

2. Get a garageman to stamp a secret number or mark in several parts of the car in easily found, yet not prominent places, and make a record of these.

3. Record the names and serial numbers of the tires, also of the spares.

4. Keep a snapshot of both ends of the car in your book with these records. These are of tremendous value to detectives when looking for a car in case of theft. Give a snapshot picture of the bumper and other accessories and his chances of spotting the machine are increased probably twenty times. Peculiarities such as the color of gear and top, the kind and location of search-light, if any, should all be recorded and photographed.

5. The man who is able to place into the hands of the police a description of his car, such as the above, within a short time after a possible theft, has been discovered and immediately placed into the hands of the law a picture which will enable the force to boil the suspects down to a very few and chances of immediate recovery are very good.

The average car owner would be well advised to pay more attention to the ignition act, than to the crank case. The habit of buying oil in pints from any old wayside station as it is needed is not a good one from the standpoint of the engine's health, nor is it a money saver. For the average man the only test as to the merits of a certain cylinder oil is that of trying it out in his engine. This may or may not mean that the engine will suffer before the test is made; if the oil is an inferior one, then the closely fitted mechanism of the engine is sure to be damaged.

It does not pay a car owner to try out new oils for his own information. The more of his car he has done this job as well as it can be done, and most of them will recommend certain brands as being suitable for their engines. When these lists are compared, we find that those oils recommended by one firm are very much the same as those of the rest. This is just another way of saying that there are plenty of high-grade oils on the market. Our main concern then should not be so much which of these oils shall we use, but to make sure to use one of the good brands, and that we keep away from the non-descript oils which are sometimes offered at from twenty to fifty cents per gallon less than the good oils are sold for.

At this season of the year, select the kind of oil you know will be good for your car, get the best price you can on say, a twenty-gallon drum, and have it put in the home garage. Both the motor head and the engine will benefit by this method.

Because of the use of automobiles, trucks and tractors, which have largely supplanted the use of horses, American farmers are said to be losing approximately $300,000,000 a year on horse feed.

There is only one passenger automobile manufacturer in the United States having 12 cylinders; fourteen different makes of cars are produced that have eight cylinders, 34 with six cylinders and thirty-seven having four cylinders.

Three automobiles are all there are in Monrovia.

Three Months Motor Car Jant Is Planned; 25 in Party

Will Tour Thousands of Miles Before Trip Is Completed

Plans are being perfected by William Charles Bettis, of Toledo, to pilot a motor car caravan to the Pacific this summer providing 25 automobiles can be enrolled by June 15, the date set for the departure from Toledo of this personally conducted tour.

Bettis, who two years ago made a similar journey and published a story about it, will drive his Willys-Knight car, that already has 25,000 miles to its credit, without ever having a wrench on it. The caravan will pass through Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Minneapolis, then over the Yellowstone Trail to Livingston, Montana, where it will turn south to Gardner, a distance of 54 miles, and then enter the only natural entrance to the great Yellowstone Park.

Several days will be spent in the Park viewing the geysers and other natural phenomena, chief of which will be the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone.

After doing the Park, the caravan will return through the Gardner entrance, to Livingston, where it will again pick up the trail west, and pass through Butte, Montana, over the Camels Hump to Missoula, Wallace, Coeur d'Alene, into Spokane, and continue west through the Snoqualmie Pass to Seattle.

At Seattle the caravan will turn south to Tacoma, and then on to Mt. Rainier, into Paradise Valley and thence to Portland, Oregon.

From Portland, the party will take in the Columbia River Highway, noted for its extreme scenic beauty; and again direct the route south to Sacramento, San Francisco, Yosemite and Los Angeles.

Bettis is thoroughly familiar with the route all the way, and is in close touch with the Commerce Clubs in all towns on the trip. An advance agent will make arrangements for the reception of the visitors and reservations of space in the Municipal Camping grounds for those who will carry camping equipment.

The caravan will be conducted with military precision. A bugler will accompany it whose duty will be to get the tourists up in the morning only. There will be no "taps" for those who wish to linger beside the evening camp fires. The last car in the entourage will be a service truck with two mechanics to

SECRET MARK IS ESSENTIAL AND OWNERS WOULD DO WELL TO HAVE PICTURES

Not only is such a record of use for purposes mentioned above, but it is absolutely necessary that we are more careful about the details of our cars if we wish to keep them our possession throughout the coming season. Auto thieves is becoming more and more of a scourge to car owners and it is only after a car is gone that the owner realizes how little he knew about his own car. The first thing to do before entering the season is to keep a list of preparation of a description of the car in case of theft. This should consist of the following:

1. A record of the license number, manufacturer's series number and engine number.

2. Get a garageman to stamp a secret number or mark in several parts of the car in easily found, yet not prominent places, and make a record of these.

3. Record the names and serial numbers of the tires, also of the spares.

4. Keep a snapshot of both ends of the car in your book with these records. These are of tremendous value to detectives when looking for a car in case of theft. Give a snapshot picture of the bumper and other accessories and his chances of spotting the machine are increased probably twenty times. Peculiarities such as the color of gear and top, the kind and location of search-light, if any, should all be recorded and photographed.

5. The man who is able to place into the hands of the police a description of his car, such as the above, within a short time after a possible theft, has been discovered and immediately placed into the hands of the law a picture which will enable the force to boil the suspects down to a very few and chances of immediate recovery are very good.

The average car owner would be well advised to pay more attention to the ignition act, than to the crank case. The habit of buying oil in pints from any old wayside station as it is needed is not a good one from the standpoint of the engine's health, nor is it a money saver. For the average man the only test as to the merits of a certain cylinder oil is that of trying it out in his engine. This may or may not mean that the engine will suffer before the test is made; if the oil is an inferior one, then the closely fitted mechanism of the engine is sure to be damaged.

It does not pay a car owner to try out new oils for his own information. The more of his car he has done this job as well as it can be done, and most of them will recommend certain brands as being suitable for their engines. When these lists are compared, we find that those oils recommended by one firm are very much the same as those of the rest. This is just another way of saying that there are plenty of high-grade oils on the market. Our main concern then should not be so much which of these oils shall we use, but to make sure to use one of the good brands, and that we keep away from the non-descript oils which are sometimes offered at from twenty to fifty cents per gallon less than the good oils are sold for.

At this season of the year, select the kind of oil you know will be good for your car, get the best price you can on say, a twenty-gallon drum, and have it put in the home garage. Both the motor head and the engine will benefit by this method.

Because of the use of automobiles, trucks and tractors, which have largely supplanted the use of horses, American farmers are said to be losing approximately $300,000,000 a year on horse feed.

There is only one passenger automobile manufacturer in the United States having 12 cylinders; fourteen different makes of cars are produced that have eight cylinders, 34 with six cylinders and thirty-seven having four cylinders.

Three automobiles are all there are in Monrovia.

CHAINS

Chains can be placed on wheels without the use of a jack by stretching them on the road in the rear of the car, so that they will be in line with the wheels. The car can be moved back a few feet until the ends of the chain are brought to a convenient position for hooking them together.

THE TIMES DAILY PICTURE PAGE

WRECK OF A RUNAWAY CAR.—This one-man trolley car ran backwards eight blocks on Amsterdam Avenue, New York City, left the rails and crashed into a tenement building, killing a little girl and injuring several others. Three floors of the building walls were wrecked.

VESUVIUS THREATENS.—This picture, just arrived in Canada, shows the new cone of Mt. Vesuvius, which has been unusually active this year, particularly since the eruption of Mt. Etna, causing all the trouble in that part of the world.

SUES FOR MILLIONS.—A suit for half the fortune of Frank Jay Gould, estimated at $20,000,000, will be carried to the highest courts in France and the United States by Edith Kelly Gould, his former wife, according to an announcement made by her lawyers.

AN OPERA STAR.—Mme. Marguerite Namara, opera star, with her six-year-old daughter, Peggy Guy Holton, is traveling about Europe with her luxurious motor caravan. Radio equipment has been installed in this house on wheels, which is equipped with the most modern conveniences, comprising kitchen, bath, bed and living-room.

A GENUINE COW "BOY"—"Foghorn" Clancy (shown here) started traveling the other day to participate in his dad's rodeo. Someone asked the "cowlad" how he managed to tote the valise and saddle. "Here's how," replied Clancy, Jr., showing his arm.

JEWELS STOLEN.—Mrs. Wm. Ellis Corey, wife of the steel magnate, reported on her arrival in London from Paris the other day that she had been robbed of pearls valued at $100,000.

WEDS PRINCE.—Mrs. Wendell Phillips, noted war worker of New York City, has just announced her recent marriage to Prince Nicolas Vladimir von der Lippo-Lippaki, a page to the late czar of Russia, whom she met eight years ago.

A QUEEN'S CATCH.—Winifred C. Blair, of St. John, N. B., is not content with being Canada's beauty queen (she's called Miss Canada), but is striving for the piscatorial championship. She caught the first big one on a salmon-fishing trip on Cain's River, New Brunswick.

HERE'S WRECK THAT KILLED FOUR.—Four died and 27 were injured in this wreck near Durand, Mich. The engine overturned and cars were telescoped. It was a special train carrying Knights Templar to their state convention. In the foreground can be seen a freak of the crash—a window knocked out with glass still intact.

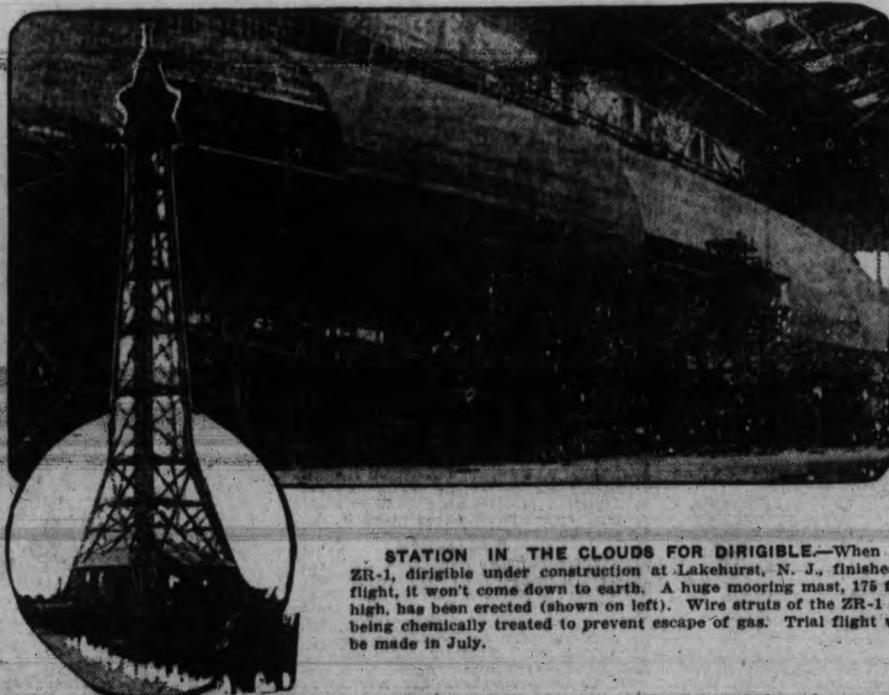

THIS IS ONE LONG HORSE ON YOU.—Introducing the first cousin of the dachshund—the elongated horse! The only question that comes to mind is "how does the horse keep his stomach from drooping?" You may scoff at the possibility of an animal like this actually existing. And you will be right! It's the trick of a clever photographer.

REPORT MANY KILLED IN QUAKE.—Turbet, a district of the province of Khorasan, Persia, is reported to be the scene of a terrible earthquake in which 8,000 or more may have perished. The city of Turbet, its capital, is situated on the bank of a deep ravine. The district of Turbet has a population of 30,000.

STATION IN THE CLOUDS FOR DIRIGIBLE.—When the ZR-1, dirigible under construction at Lakehurst, N. J., finishes a flight, it won't come down to earth. A huge mooring mast, 175 feet high, has been erected (shown on left). Wire struts of the ZR-1 are being chemically treated to prevent escape of gas. Trial flight will be made in July.

ARTIFICIAL LIGHTNING.—The eye could not catch the exact pattern of artificial lightning flashes recently generated by the General Electric Co. Here is what the camera caught of one. This triangular pattern of lacy light resulted from the discharge of 1,500,000 volts of three-phase alternating current at 60 cycles. The spark points at each corner are nine feet apart.

Banff-Windermere Road Is Open to Traffic To-day

The Banff-Windermere road, 125 miles long, will be opened to the public to-day. The proceedings will be under the auspices of the Federal Government, Hon. J. H. King, M.D., Minister of Public Works, representing the Dominion Cabinet, Premier Oliver, the British Columbia Government; and there will be many leading personages in attendance, including W. J. Bowser, K.C., Leader of the Opposition. The Indians determined to come to Invermere on the day of the opening of the Banff-Windermere highway to the number of some five hundred strong and show their white brothers just how pleased they were over the marking of the trails.

They camp in the midst of the town-site pitching their smoky wigwams and tepees on Bennett's plain, from whence the smoke for the cooking of their meals which the white people sell to them, finds its way in the peaceful evening down over the waters of Windermere lake. There was a council meeting held recently, and Lane Joe, Louis Abel, Neos Capilo and other chiefs burned the white man's tobacco and arranged details as the smoke curled above them. The plan of campaign includes the Lower Kootenays or Archa Plains from Creston, the Upper Kootenays from Tobacco Plains on both sides of the international boundary, from St. Eugene mission and from the local reserve. From this part also come the celebrated Shuswap with all their gaudy trappings.

Evening Celebration.
On the evening of Saturday, June 30, the great celebration pertaining to the opening being over, the members of the various bands in all their most joyous raiment and gaudy with paint will form in procession and to the music of tom-toms and rattles will parade to the memorial erected in honor of David Thompson, the great explorer and astronomer of the North West Company, and here they will give two successive exhibitions of the characteristic dances which have long made the tribes known. On Monday, July 2, they will attend the stampeede in full strength and take part in everything that offers, from horse racing to tackling the wild steer and the bucking broncho.

The New Highway.
The new highway opens up the glories of the rich scenic region which lies within the Banff and Kootenay national parks, which includes the famous resorts of Banff and Lake Louise, to motorists of the continent. It is also important because it forms the last link in the great 6,000-mile system of National highway linking up the national parks and great touring centres of the national parks of the Canadian Rockies. In view of these facts the opening ceremonies have a special interest to both countries and the occasion assumes something of an international aspect.

Opening at Kootenay Crossing.
The original intention was to hold the formal opening at Vermillion Crossing, a point almost equally distant from Banff and the Windermere valley. Owing to the indications of a much larger number of participants than had been anticipated, it has now been decided to have the ceremonies take place at Kootenay Crossing, a few miles farther west. The Kootenay valley is a wide and beautiful one, with green and level meadows which will provide ample space on both sides of the road to allow for the parking of approximately 1,000 cars as well as for the convenient handling of traffic in both directions. No one was allowed to travel over the road from either end before June 29.

The opening ceremonies, which took place about noon, after luncheon there was a short programme of addresses, following which ribbons stretched across the road were cut and the new highway declared officially open to traffic.

Camps Along the Road.
The new road, which was built by the engineering division of the Canadian National Parks Branch of the Department of the Interior, is 125 miles long and runs throughout its entire distance through wild and extremely beautiful mountainous country, crossing two mountain passes in its length. This is virgin country where many of the peaks as yet have not even been named and owing to the absence of towns and other settlement, special provision for the needs of the motorist has been necessary. Since the beginning of the season, workmen have been busily engaged clearing sites for camping grounds along the highway and equipping them with the necessary conveniences. Camps will be located at the following points: Vermillion Summit, Black's Camp, Hawk Creek, Vermillion Crossing, Kootenay Crossing, McLeod Meadows, Sinclair Summit and McKay Creek. The Canadian Pacific Railway has under course of construction a bungalow lodge similar to its Wapta camp, at Radium Hot Springs and a tea and rest house at Vermillion Crossing. Other tea houses will also be available at the western end of the road. In addition, the existing public camp site at Banff has been considerably enlarged and improved and when completed will be one of the best equipped on the continent. It will be connected with the excellent Banff water system and will be provided with service buildings, shelters, tables, benches and other conveniences, including a telephone system with long distance connections.

Don't let diapers irritate your baby's skin

NO matter how carefully you bathe and powder him—if his diapers are washed with harsh soap—his tender skin will suffer.

The diaper rash that is the source of such severe suffering to babies is caused by this very thing—washing diapers with harsh or impure soaps.

Safe for all his little clothes. Keep your baby's diapers soft and comfortable. Wash them in pure, safe Lux suds and thoroughly rinse.

There is no free alkali in Lux to stick to them and make them irritating. No harmful ingredient to inflame the sensitive skin. These pure flakes are safe for all the clothes that touch his tender skin.

Use Lux for your baby's soft woollen shirts and bands, his petticoats and dresses, his diapers and socks.

To keep diapers from irritating. To prepare for washing: Remove all solid matter immediately to soak in cold water. If diapers are simply wet place in a covered pail and let soak in cold water.

To wash: Whisk two tablespoonsful of Lux into a thick lather in a tub at very hot water. Let diapers soak for a few minutes then dip up and down pressing and repeatedly through them. Thoroughly rinse in three waters. Boil diapers once a week using one tablespoonful of Lux to a gallon of water.

WHAT THE BROOK SAW ON ITS BANK

SEEMING to spring from the earth itself water bubbled laughingly from a cleft in the rock and tripped on its course down the hillside. Gathering speed with the steep descent the streamlet danced its way through grass-green mosses and over rounded stones. It threw its arms lovingly around boulders in its path, as if giving them a hug before rushing down the hill to the valley below.

Graceful maidenhair ferns dipped their fronds in the dancing water. Birds snuggled down near its tiny waterfalls to drink their fill of the crystal waters. Deer paused reflectively and gazed at their image mirrored back from its calmer stretches. To all it seemed a welcome friend.

As the stream raced on its course, chattering gaily with the borders of its banks to it were added yet other streams, until quite a large volume of water was running down the hillside. Now it cut its own banks and chose its own way, for what could resist the ceaseless rush of waters from the spring above?

Down on the lower levels of the hillside the stream broadened and became a larger and less beautiful, existence. Now it flowed silently along under the trees, between banks deeply carpeted in moss and lichen-covered rocks. On the face of its waters flashed and danced a myriad glints as the sun crept through the leaves of the heavenly ceiling to play on the stream below. Near the opening of a larger pool than usual a tree trunk had fallen across the stream, the water filtering softly with the underside of its ageing bark.

This log served as a bridge connecting one side of the valley with the other. Anything that cared not to enter the water to ford its way across the stream might well cross at this point. Presently something did cross. A small furry little creature stepped daintily on one end of the log and traced a cautious path over the rough hewn bridge to the other side.

In size this creature was very little bigger than a squirrel, but with a much longer body. Its coat was a wealth of soft fur, turning from a spot of brown at the throat to deep brown and black on the legs and back. There was something suggestive of the weasel about its head and its tail was long and slightly bushy at the tip.

It was a marten. What had brought it out in daylight was hard to determine—for usually the marten waits until the cover of night falls like a blanket on the doings of the woodlands. Reaching the other side of the stream the marten padded silently to the end of the log and sprang from there on to another that lay transverse to the path of the stream. At this moment there was a flutter of wings through the trees and a covey of young grouse came zig-zagging their way between the trunks to settle near the edge of the stream.

The Sandman Story For To-night

THE VERY LITTLE BLACK COCK

Once there lived in a barnyard a very little Black Cock, with the finest red comb in the world and feathers as shiny black as a brand-new stove.

He had bright yellow legs and the loveliest long tail feathers, like the kind the women wear on their best hats.

Oh, he was a perfectly gorgeous creature, but that was no reason for strutting about as he did and bragging. For he was very little, and compared to the big Grandfather Cocks of the barnyard he was no larger than a thimble beside a big spool of thread.

Of course, being so little he could not have a very big voice to crow with, but that did not stop Little Black Cock from bragging all the barnyard folk gathered around to listen. Grandfather Cocks flapped his wings three times and crowed.

"Oh! what a crow it was. It must have been heard for miles around the countryside. There now, it is your turn," he said to the Little Black Cock.

Little Black Cock began to feel a little scared, for he knew that he must crow louder than ever before to even crow as loudly as Grandfather—not to think of beating him.

He puffed himself until he was filled with air, then solemnly flapped his wings three times and began to crow. Louder and louder he crowed. Even Grandfather Cocks felt a bit nervous.

Louder and louder and louder, and then off the wall tumbled Little Black Cock and landed a heap of feathers, in the dust.

Dr. Duck was there in a jiffy, and pretty soon Little Black Cock opened one eye and then the other, and looked about. "He pushed me off the wall because he was jealous of my beautiful crowing," weakly piped Little Black Cock.

"Oh, no; you tumbled off because you tried so hard to crow you almost burst your throat, my young friend," quacked Dr. Duck. "You take my advice and be satisfied with a voice the size of your body."

It crouched down on the log, seeming to even flatten itself until it looked nothing more than a bump on the bark. The grouse scattered along the edge of the stream and commenced to drink. Backing, the marten reached the opposite side of the log and dropped noiselessly to the ground. Then, silently, and without moving a blade of grass, it crept around the edge of the log. There it crouched.

It may have been five minutes later a young grouse stalked slowly up from the edge of the water right past the log.

There was a sudden spring and without an outcry the bird was dead. In its throat, sucking the warm blood, was the fangs of the killer. The blood seemed to madden the marten, for hardly before its first victim was cold it stalked a second, which fell in the same manner, without making a cry. A third grouse followed the way of its companions, dazed into helpless terror by the eyes of the marten—much as a snake is said to hypnotize a bird. It seemed as if the killer's victims became petrified, as soon as those cruel eyes turned their gaze on them.

Satiated at last with the slaughter, and with his fangs dripping from the blood of his victims, the killer left. Now he was sleepy, and walked with the insolent bearing of one for whom cover was no longer necessary. In this was his great mistake. Carelessness is followed by death in the woods, where each of nature's creatures has enemies larger and more powerful than themselves.

Hardly had the killer climber to the top of the hill before he was to pay for his misdeeds. The marten crossed underneath a log that spanned the trail at this point, when from right over his head sprang the living death. A great bundle of sinewy muscle, a biting and clawing monstrosity armed in a tawny fur, fell on the killer and enveloped him. Then ensued a short but vicious struggle for existence.

Nearly dragged with the fangs of blood in the valley the marten was at a disadvantage. Then, too, even in the best of trim, he was no match for this fury in the yellow fur. Razor-like claws ripped his throat open, jaws that clashed with the ring as of steel, bit deep into his neck, and the end was in sight. Losing his grip the wild cat stood up for a moment over his fallen adversary.

The marten did not know that in a nearby cleft of the rock the wild cat had a family of furry little kittens. Had it known, it would have chosen any other route through the forest but that. The penalty for one moment of carelessness was death—and the killer had earned the reward.

Chattering in its path to freedom the stream flowed on. The rushing waters wiping away the stains of the slaughter on its banks until nothing but the limp bodies of what once was a covey of young grouse remained. Up on the hillside a wild cat licked its wounds, and purred softly to a litter of kittens.

Thought the victor, and drowned in well-earned sleep.

BUDDY AND HIS FRIENDS

By Robt. L. Dickey

THE KIDS KNEW THAT THE OLD SPRING BOARD AT THE SWIMMING HOLE WAS LOOSE ANYHOW, BUT 'BUCKY' DIDN'T.

Johnny Has Needed Lesson In Manners

"Johnny! If you throw that dog in the water I'll see that you are not allowed at the beach any more." The warning came in sharp tones from an elderly lady sitting on a log at the water's edge. The boy referred to as "Johnny" was standing some distance away with a small black spaniel in his arms. The dog was whimpering pitifully as if it knew what the discussion was all about.

"He won't go in, Auntie, and I want to see if he can swim," was the tardy reply from the boy. "Well, remember what I said," cautioned the elderly lady. The doggie was creeping set down. What the dog heard, Johnny felt, was a whinnying protest. Johnny felt the tectress did not, was a whispered comment of the boy. "I'll chuck you in when she's not looking." The spaniel seemed to understand this, for it ran hither skelter away from the boy as soon as its four short legs touched the ground again.

It was later on in the afternoon when the boy got his chance. The spaniel had wandered too close to the edge of the water, and with a dexterous twist of his foot Johnny sent the dog rolling down the rock into the sea. The splash drew the elderly lady's attention. "Just for that, young man, we will go right home," Despite walls and tearful protests, Johnny felt himself seized by the hand, and the procession started for home. Dripping and shivering, the doggie trailed behind.

Now most dogs swim and like the water well—but it so happened that this doggie was not feeling well. It was sickening for dis-temper, in fact. That night Johnny was sent to bed an hour earlier than usual, to toss on the sheets in torment while through the open window came the "clock-clock" of a baseball bat and the sound of a driven ball striking the distant fence. While in that condition, where he was neither fully asleep nor quite awake, Johnny began to dream over the events of the day.

He was down at the beach, was his dream, and was sitting on the rock near the water's edge. Without any warning he was seized from behind. "I'll chuck you in when she's not looking," whispered a harsh voice in his ear. Johnny looked in terror for his Aunt—but that good lady was nowhere in sight.

"Now," continued the awesome voice, "One, two, three—go!" Johnny felt himself flying through the air. There came the splash. He hit in the water on his head, and swallowed a great mouthful of the strong brine. In spite of the fact that he was able to swim well, it was several seconds before he could fight his way to the top. His eyes were smarting from the salt, while his throat felt like as if he had been compelled to eat a tablespoon of dry salt.

Coughing and spluttering he swam to the shore. He was about to climb back to the rock when a huge hand was thrust out and shoved him under for the second time. He arose to the surface spluttering worse than ever. This happened twice or three times. Then Johnny decided that he would swim to another part of the shore.

Slowly and painfully the boy swam, he dreamed across the bay to another pile of rocks. When he got there, however, the dread hand pushed him again into the water. "Swim," commanded the terrible voice, "you like it, you said." In desperation Johnny turned again. This procedure went on, it seemed to Johnny, for ages, until finally he felt he must get on shore or drown. Just as the giant hand was pushing him under again, Johnny heard the words: "Now you know what it felt like to the spaniel." With that he woke up.

He was safely in bed—but the dream had been so real that Johnny thereupon crawled out and begged permission to say he was sorry to the doggie. The spaniel, better now for the care it had received, raised a pair of lovely eyes to his—and a forgiving tongue licked the boyish hand.

Ever after that when Johnny went to the beach, and he went often, he was accompanied by the spaniel—but what a change! Now it was Johnny who dived off first—and the spaniel who eagerly followed him into the water—there to race and play with all his doggie heart. The spaniel was no different than other doggies—indeed, it was a water-dog, but it liked its own way of doing things. Johnny never forgot that again.

KATHLEEN GLIMPSES THE WAY OF LIFE

WALKING one day along a strange path in the forest, a little girl came to the crest of a hill and looked into a valley she had not seen before. Along a broad road, which began far out of sight in one direction, and stretched beyond the limits of eyesight in the other, Kathleen, for such was her name, saw a multitude of people.

Children tripped along with the gay swing of youth, their footsteps measured to rhyme by the lilt of their laughter. Young men and women passed hand in hand, sauntering along the road, heedless of their surroundings. Older people, mostly alone, hurried on purposefully, as if they had an object in sight and would brook no delay. Elderly people trod on more slowly, but perhaps more steadily towards the other end of the road. This, thought Kathleen, must be the Way of Life.

Many of the travelers on that road seemed happy and carefree. Others again seemed to carry with them a load of troubles, as if looking back along the way they had come, and uncaring where they went. Pain and suffering spoke from the faces of others; these the cripples, hobbling with difficulty along the way. Kathleen noticed the greatest difference in the manner in which these fellow-travelers treated one another.

The young seemed to be friends with everyone, and sharing alike in their smiles and banter. The lovers seemed oblivious to all but themselves. The purposeful ones wore a worried look and regarded their fellows as so many obstructions which retarded progress on the way. The aged seemed to be universally kind to those around them, and shared with the cripples the courtesies of the way.

It was with the children, however, that the little girl's attention stayed. These seemed to grow very rapidly as they tripped along the road. About the time they came into sight they were toddling along, pushing tiny go-carts, and giving innumerable dollops an airing. A little further along they had left their dollies behind them, and were now carrying books. Some, noticed Kathleen, carried a prodigious quantity of books.

It was at this moment that the little girl was joined by an elderly man, who took a seat by her side at the vantage point. From the sand-glass in his hand and his snowy beard, Kathleen recognized the stranger as Old Father

Time. Would he explain the road and its travelers, asked the little girl.

Putting his sand-glass on the ground and rubbing his gnarled fingers until they crackled, the stranger arranged his flowing robes more comfortably about him, and began. Those with books were scholars. The more books they carried the greater scholars they were supposed to be. These were acquiring knowledge at a tremendous rate, he said, but it profited them little—for they carried the book in their hand and missed its contents. The contents, page after page of knowledge, held a grain of Wisdom and it was Wisdom that mattered on the Road of Life.

Those, continued the mentor, pointing to some people then passing with empty hands, but weather-beaten faces, were the most successful travelers on the way. They carried Wisdom in their heads and the lines on their faces were the wrinkles of Experience. Kathleen observed these people closely. They walked steadily and straight. Their faces were happy. Their manner was courteous to others on the way. Often they bore the burdens of others—or lent a helping hand to fellow travelers in difficulty on the road.

Their gait seemed to be slow, but so steady was it that these travelers far outstripped their fellows. They shared not in the jostle and rush for the crown of the road—but walked where the road was most open. Neither did they tread in the ditch.

"Wisdom," said Kathleen, speaking for the first time in many moments of watching, "must be a wonderful thing—what is this Wisdom?" "Wisdom," said her guide, "is the pure metal which is refined from the ores of knowledge. It is the flower that is picked from amid the weeds at the roadside. It is the orchid of life, and it is very rare."

"How does one get Wisdom?" pursued the little girl. "Ah! That is the secret of the way of life," said her guide. "For some it comes readily—for others not at all. Each must find the way for himself, or herself. There is no golden rule to Wisdom, it too has vanished. You see; obey your elders; listen to your conscience; be kind to all. You will then be searching in the right direction."

Kathleen looked around to thank her guide, but he had gone as silently and swiftly as he had come. The little girl turned to look again at the Way of Life, but it too had vanished. In its place was the countryside she knew with its rolling green plains and graceful trees. Curiously, though, everyone Kathleen met after that had an oddly familiar appearance. Somehow she seemed to have seen them all before on the road in the valley. This, then, thought Kathleen, must be the Way of Life.

Many Camps Planned For Summer Holidays

Camping proposals are increasing with the advance of the season. The Boys' Naval Brigade divisions from all over B. C. will go into camp at Rodd Hill on July 2. It is expected that some 150 boys will be in camp. Included in this number will be fifty from the Victoria Division and representatives of other Island units.

The cadets from Victoria and district schools will join those from the lower mainland and Gulf Islands in a camp to open at Sidney on June 30. If last year's figures are an indication, there will be in the neighbourhood of 1,500 cadets in camp, and these will undergo an interesting course of training.

The Y.M.C.A. Boys' Division is busy now preparing plans for its camp at Beaver Lake, where many weeks will be spent by boys arranged in groups according to age.

The various troops and wolf cub packs of the local Boy Scout Association are making individual plans for camp. The Scouts are keen advocates of the open air and it is expected that many and jolly will be the camps under the banner of the Fleur-de-lis this Summer.

Added to the organization camps will be a host of private camps, consequent upon the breaking up of school and the commencement of the long summer holidays. Healthy exercise, fresh air, and the lesson that nature's realm alone can teach will be the happy auspices under which all these camps will reign.

For those who intend camping in the woods where mountain streams and leaping trout call with all their old-time lure—let fire-prevention be your motto. The woods are now dry as only the hot Summer sun can make them—and the undergrowth is like so much tinder. In this game and other birds are hatching their young broods, and these little lives will suffer if the bush takes fire from any cause whatsoever. Have all the fires you want—but PUT THEM OUT!

Chemistry, The Door to Progress

Just how much of the comfort and convenience of modern life is due to chemistry few realize. In olden days chemistry was held in the nature of black magic, and those who studied it were put to death. Later men began to realize that these magicians were able to do things that they could not do. That created a more wholesome curiosity which led to a study of chemistry becoming more general and therefore more understood.

To-day in almost every branch of industry the chemist is an essential factor. Chemists spend a lifetime in the study of some phase of their science which may perchance lead to a discovery of benefit to all. The simplest things manufactured are in many cases the result of the brains of the men who have made a study of that industry through the glasses of a chemist. Dyes, soaps, clothing, breakfast foods and innumerable other lines of industry all owe their expert chemists to lead them into the wisest course in their several branches.

In the classroom, then, when you turn your mind to the elements and their action in relation to the various substances known to man, you are dabbling in one of the highest of sciences from a viewpoint of civilization and its needs. The discovery of to-day is the world use of to-morrow. Every year sees fresh advances in the knowledge of mankind. These advances in turn are put to practical account, and year by year we see new articles designed for our comfort. Do not treat chemistry as a dry-as-dust scientific subject. It is the door through which civilization passes to further and more pleasant fields of usefulness.

Bats Are Swallows Of the Night-Time

Belonging to a nation of upwards of eighty different genera, numbering in all about 400 species, bats are to be found in all corners of the wide world. They reach far up into the snow lines of the mountains, and up to the Arctic circle itself. Indeed, bats may be found where there is food to feed them.

Though ugly in appearance, the bats perform for mankind at night the same function kept by swallows by day—that of eating the noxious insects that destroy his fruit trees and other produce of the farm and field. Bats will eat flies, spiders, and many other insects. Moths are their chief delight.

Hanging by their toes from a well-concealed spot high up in a cave or tree in daytime, but bats emerge in clouds at night to hunt for their meal. The hunt continues with great activity in the dusk and dawn, and to a lesser degree all night. By day they are asleep and a prey to marten, weasels, rats, and even mice—but usually they are so well hidden that their numbers suffer very slightly from this cause.

When night comes they unfold their wings, unhook their toes from the tree or roof top, and set off on the chase. Fast of wing, they overtake the slow flying moths and devour their prey. In warmer climates than this they will eat fruit and in some cases suck the blood of animals—but the latter recourse is not common to all bats. The fruit-eating bats, of which the Flying Foxes of the South Sea Islands are a representative class, are monsters with often a wing spread of five feet from tip to tip. They have a fox-like head, with a sharp snout and ears, and a light brown fur. By day they hang from one foot, in colonies in the trees, and look like an unusually heavy crop of fruit on a pear tree.

After dusk they fly in search of food. In this they depend largely on their sense of smell, and even fish are not outside their notice. Observers have seen the klong, as it is sometimes called, hovering over a pond in which small fish are leaping. They dart down to the water's edge and seize in their feet the leaping fish—which are then carried off to be consumed. If one of their number gets a hurt it calls for help, and then from every hand bats will assemble to render aid or protection, whichever be most needed.

The insect-eating bats proper include such members as the long-eared bats, the pig-nosed bats, the water bats, leaf-nosed bats and many others. Of the last named variety the Vampire Bat is a well-known member. Students of natural history tell us that the Vampire Bat has been very much maligned in fable. It is not half so black as it is painted, they say. It does suck the blood of animals on occasion, but only after all normal means of food have failed and it is faced with starvation.

In appearance the Vampire Bat is perhaps the ugliest of the whole family, with a pair of awesome looking eyes and a wicked mouth.

At night, when you see bats flying around in this country you would not expect to see the Vampire bat, for it has its home in the warm climate of the South. In general bats are friend of mankind, destroying for him many pestiferous insects that would otherwise damage his crops and do untold mischief.

CHARACTER

J. Pierpoint Morgan once said on the witness stand, "Character is everything in business." He, of course, referred to the character of men who wished credit. Coal has character too—when it proves itself to be dependable. And coal buyers buy it because they have confidence in the service which it renders. Nainaimo-Wellington Coal enjoys the confidence of coal users everywhere, gained not by being dependable for a day, but by the character that it has shown during the last fifty years.

DIRECTORS NEED SUBSTANTIAL SUM TO FINISH WING

Jubilee Hospital Has Year of Steady Progress

Institution Improves X-Ray Department

A drive for funds to complete the building, amounting to about $100,000 was forecast in the report of the directors of the Royal Jubilee Hospital, presented to the annual meeting of subscribers held, yesterday afternoon. The steady progress made in the new wing during 1922 formed the subject of flattering references. Annual Report. The report, in part, stated: "5,334 patients were treated at the hospital, 2,249 of whom were in-patients, 1,500 out-patients attending the Pathological Laboratory and 1,584 out-patients attending the X-Ray Department, and 291 attended for ordinary dressings. "The total days' stay for in-patients was 47,929, 4,217 days less than for 1921-22. The average days' stay for each patient was 21.2, a little more than the days' stay of previous years and the daily average number of in-patients in hospital throughout the year was almost 131, a decrease of 23 patients per day in comparison with 1921-22. "As stated in the last year's report the hospital directors have taken over the management of the Isolation Hospital for the City Council and beg to report that 57 patients were admitted to that institution and that the total days' stay was 1,460, which is equal to four patients per day for the year round. This arrangement has so far been found very satisfactory. "Allusion was made to the installation of treatment with insulin for diabetes, and its effect on special diets. X-Ray Department. "X-Ray—in this department 2,567 in and out-patients were treated during the year—922 X-Ray treatment, 135 radium treatments and the remainder for diagnosis or examination," said the report. "During the latter part of last year a deep therapy plant was installed in addition to their diagnostic and treatment plant. This was purchased to relieve the smaller machine of much of the heavier work and the reason for this is easily understood when it is pointed out that some treatments last for hours at a time. Great care has also been taken in the use of this particular X-Ray machine as the least carelessness in the treatment may lead to disastrous results.

"The directors feel, however, that an appeal will have to be made in the near future to the people of Victoria and its adjoining municipalities for the $100,000 still required." The report paid a fitting tribute to the splendid assistance of the Women's Auxiliary. Receiving Room. The report said: "In the near future we hope to have a Receiving Room where patients will be registered before admission to hospital or special department to which they have been sent for treatment. The present arrangement whereby patients and their friends are accommodated in the telephone booth is unsatisfactory for all parties, but owing to lack of space this has been unavoidable. The transfer of the linen room from the main hall to below the Chapel will allow of a rearrangement of the main floor so as to provide the receiving room. The report concluded with a long list of organizations and friends of the hospital who during the year have made various donations to the institution. Directors Re-elected. Last year's directors Mrs. C. W. Rhodes, and Messrs. Charles Williams, D. James Angus and S. J. -ke, were returned to office for another year.

to the patient. The deep therapy plant was installed at a cost of approximately $6,000, and a separate insulated room was found for it which meant a further increased expenditure for alterations and re-organization of the whole system. This department has now become one of the best equipped, most up-to-date in Canada, only two other cities having a similar equipment, namely, Toronto and Montreal, and is able to treat with excellent results any known disease that will respond to X-Ray or radium treatment." Death of Dr. Hasell. Allusion was next made to the nurses' training department, and to the death of a former nurse recently in Miss Williams. The splendid services of the late Dr. Edward S. Hasell were fittingly the subject of tribute, and reference was made to the choice of a successor in Dr. E. Mounsey Pearce. New Wing of Hospital. A lengthy reference was made to the important question of the new building. The Board of Directors have been passing through an exceedingly trying and busy time during the past year in carrying out the construction of the wing of the hospital, said the report. "The meetings of the Building Committee have been very numerous and special meetings of the Board have had to be held more frequently than usual to decide questions and contracts that were submitted. It has been in the minds of the directors to have a building as up-to-date and as efficient as human ingenuity could make it with the least possible expense. With this end in view separate contracts have been let for every trade required in its construction, the great objective being to be able to pay for contracts upon their completion. In this the Board have been successful and they will have a small sum in hand in connection with about $100 when the present contracts are paid for. However, several other contracts have still to be called for, the cost of which will amount to approximately $100,000, the most of which will be absorbed for the tiling and flooring of the corridors and wards and the remodeling of the children's and maternity wards into kitchen and dining rooms. We need also an addition $50,000 to finish the work in hand by the contractors now in the building, such as hardware for windows and doors, lavatory and toilet fittings and sterilizers. These we have arranged to purchase on reserve direct from manufacturers but have arranged for the contractors to install them. "Our thanks are due the Provincial Government for the $100,000 paid on account of the grant towards the cost, but another $50,000 is expected on the promise made by the Government in the year 1914 that they would give $150,000 towards the cost of its construction. Must Make Appeal. "The directors feel, however, that an appeal will have to be made in the near future to the people of Victoria and its adjoining municipalities for the $100,000 still required." The report paid a fitting tribute to the splendid assistance of the Women's Auxiliary. Receiving Room. The report said: "In the near future we hope to have a Receiving Room where patients will be registered before admission to hospital or special department to which they have been sent for treatment. MOTHERS DEMAND REFORM OF CITY JUVENILE COURT

Present Court Fails Hopelessly to Meet Situation, Women Charge

Point to Lorenz Murder As Case of Court's Failure

Victoria's Juvenile Court system is failing utterly to cope with child delinquency here and the mothers of the city are determined that it shall be replaced by an efficient court. Such was the assertion of a strong delegation from the Local Council of Women which met the City Council yesterday and demanded broad reforms in the handling of children's problems here. Appointment of a woman judge, competent probation officers and ladies' delegation. It was lack of this machinery, they asserted, that caused such tragedies as the Lorenz murder, in which the murderer was under the supervision of the present court. Strong for Reform. It would be worse than useless for the city to undertake the establishment of a part of a juvenile court without establishing a complete institution, Mrs. C. de V. Schofield, leader of the delegation, declared. Members of the Provincial Government, she stated, were in favor of the scheme, which involved the appointment of a woman judge, a psychologist, a medical examiner and other experts to deal with delinquent children. She proposed that Victoria and neighboring municipalities should join in setting up a new juvenile court. Alderman George Sangster accused the Government of "passing the buck" in connection with such reforms as a juvenile court to the municipalities. The importance of a juvenile court was impressed on the Council by Dr. R. Boston Hudson, who told how delinquent children must be examined by trained mental experts to determine what measures must be taken to treat them. It was useless, she said, simply to send children to a reformatory. "It's no good saving money on the children and then paying it out on jails and reformatories," she urged. "You must have someone to treat them who understands their minds." Appointment of skilled men and women probation officers to care for delinquent children was advocated by Miss Olive Snyder, child welfare expert. One probation officer, she said, should not have to deal with more than thirty cases at a time, making reports to the judge of the juvenile court. A new detention home is needed here, she asserted, to replace the few attic rooms above the Children's Aid Home, at present used for the detention of delinquents. "I can't see the necessity for this," Alderman Sangster asserted. He felt that the present police organization here was capable of handling the situation. Serious Situations. "We have found some very, very serious situations here," Miss Snyder declared. She said she had been kept very busy dealing with delinquent children. "There is no constructive work being done here," Dr. Helen Ryan asserted. A Vancouver judge had told her, she stated, that more girls were sent from Victoria to reformatories than from the rest of British Columbia. The number of cases of delinquency here was alarming, she declared. Mrs. G. D. Gordon said that the Juvenile Court should be separated entirely from the police administration. One of the chief objections to the present court, she declared, was that the Police Magistrate presided over it. Another objection was the unsatisfactory work of the woman probation officer. She charged that present lack of organization to deal with children had led to such serious mistakes as the holding of young girls in cells all night. The Smith Example. As proof of the failure of the present Juvenile Court here, Mrs. Gordon pointed to the case of Ronald Smith, who killed Lionel Lorenz here early in the year. Smith, she said had been under the care of the Court. Indeed, he had reported to the Court the night after the murder. The Court, after hearing of Smith's robberies had allowed him to go loose until he had killed Lorenz, she affirmed. "Do you think a Court that does work like that is worth anything?" Mrs. Gordon demanded. "The mothers of Victoria have come to the last vestige of their patience with the work as it is done now. We won't endure it and we are going to back our statements with our ballots." She said that the cost of maintaining Smith and his comrade, Burton, in penitentiary would be more than the cost of establishing a proper Juvenile Court. The cost of maintaining the Court, she added, would be less than the city's annual cost of entertaining visitors. Results of the failures of the present Court to cope with the situation cost the city more than the expenses of a proper Court, Mrs. Gordon declared. The ladies will lay before the Council shortly details of their Juvenile Court scheme.

ASK DELAY IN NEW LICENSE INCREASE

Business Men Urge Council to Put By-Law Into Force Next Year

Business men, led by H. S. Stevenson and H. N. Finn, Assistant Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, asked the City Council yesterday to delay until next year the inauguration of new and greatly-increased business license fees. Mr. Stevenson warned the Council not to put on licenses that would put small white dealers out of business and leave Chinese operating. Watson Clark protested against increase of the tax on soft drink manufacturers who, he said, could not afford to pay any higher license fees. John Wood, of the Collender Newsstands, urged the Council not to levy higher licenses on such stands which, he said, were not making much revenue now. Alderman E. S. Woodward started a discussion on single tax by declaring that the idea of levying business taxes at all was unsound, but that the mayor hammering his desk with his gavel, refused to allow him to go on. Herbert Kent protested against the Council's plan to increase music dealers' fees three hundred per cent. "We have got to have nearly $2,500,000 this year and we can control only $800,000 of this expenditure," Mayor Remond Hayward told the business men. "We know it is hard but we must have this revenue." Alderman David Leeming, Chairman of the Finance Committee, explained to the business men that the Legislature had refused the city other revenues and left it to raise money through the license system. The Council had to have more money through this source. Licenses were being raised as a whole some twenty percent, he said, though in some cases dealers were asked to make greater increases than this.
