Foreword

THE SOCIETY OF INDEPENDENT ARTISTS was incorporated under the laws of New York for the purpose of holding exhibitions in which all artists may participate independently of the decisions of juries. It gave its first annual exhibition at the Grand Central Palace in the Spring of 1917. Early this year an announcement of the present exhibition was sent to the members of the Society. This notice said, in part:

In view of the war in which our country is now actively engaged, and the generally unsettled state of affairs caused by the war, the directors of the Society considered seriously whether or not an exhibition at such a time was advisable. As the Society was formed to make its annual exhibition a permanently recurring event, it was decided to continue the work as it was begun.

The directors believe they represent the general opinion among the artists when they say that the work of the Society is sufficiently important to continue even in war-time. The results of the exhibition of 1917 — the largest of its kind ever given in America — are too great for us to endanger them by a lapse in our activity. The almost unanimous response of the artists, the quality of the work shown, the contributions from the most distinguished American artists and the amount of new talent brought to light, proved the need for the Society to a public whose attendance exceeded 20,000 and which purchased some forty-five works.

Many artists who joined the Society last year are now on the battle-front in France, or will soon be there. Others who are not doing military duty are engaged in war-work which absorbs all their attention and prevents their exhibiting this year. Those whose works form the present exhibition believe that in contributing to the effort of the Society at this moment, they are helping to give expression to the best spirit of the time. The Society's ideal is one of freedom; to continue the work under present conditions is to affirm our belief in the principle and to respond to the example of self-possession which French artists have given by pressing on in their work within hearing-distance of the battle.

It is hoped that the idea on which the Society is based — and on which the great French society of the same name is based — may soon be clear to all. The principle of “no jury, no prizes” simply means that every artist should have the opportunity to present his work to the people of his time. “To show one's work is the vital question, the sine qua non for the artist,” wrote Edouard Manet in a preface to the catalogue of one of his exhibitions. It is only when the chance to exhibit is given to all who ask for it that this country can know what the resources of its art really are. It will only be after years of co-operation such as has never existed before that we can judge the product of these resources. The Society takes no stand for or against any school of art or any individual. It has confidence that we have qualities worth working for and fighting for and will do its part to aid in their development.

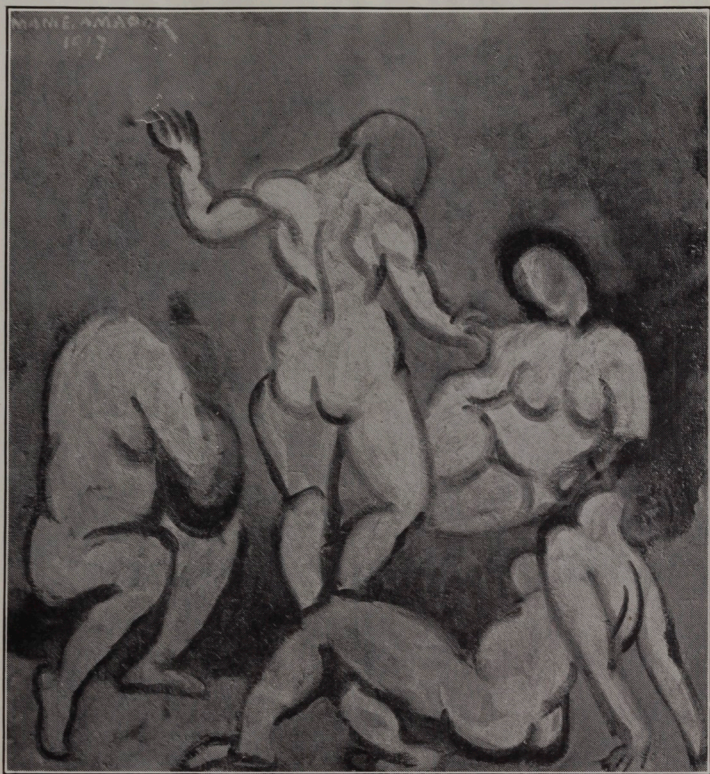

A MAJORITY of the works exhibited are for sale. The prices will be found on the number cards of the exhibits, except in cases where the word "Desk" replaces the price. For the prices of works not given on the cards, intending purchasers may consult the officials and attendants of the exhibition, or the sales agent at the catalogue desk. The members of the Society have been requested to state the lowest prices they will accept for their exhibits; the Directors therefore decline to consider or transmit any proposals for sales at prices other than those stated.

The fifty plates illustrating this catalogue were not selected by the Society, but are simply those of the first fifty members who applied for the space.
