Many Things To Be Thankful For

Governor William Dennison Stephens has issued the following Thanksgiving proclamation:

"The President has by proclamation set apart Thursday, the 29th day of November, 1917, as Thanksgiving Day, and has urged that on that day we lay aside our appointed tasks to give thanks to Almighty God for the blessings He has bestowed upon us.

"In the State of California we have a multitude of things to be thankful for. On account of a generous season, our crops have been overwhelmingly bountiful. The resources of our banks are greater than ever before. The average individual is earning more money than he has for years. We owe thanks for the spirit of patriotism and self-sacrifice which the people of this State have shown in meeting the problems imposed by the war. That our people are blessed with such a sense of their duty to the nation is cause for the most sincere gratitude.

"Above all, however, our thanks should be given for the spirit which lives in the hearts of the men who are offering their lives in the service of their country. That is the spirit which gave strength to the men of Lexington and Valley Forge, and is the spirit which has built this nation into one of the great powers of the earth. We should all thank God that we as a people, in spite of our tremendous material prosperity, hold fast to the ideals of our forefathers.

Uncle John Staples, who has been residing in San Francisco for several months, is a welcome visitor here this week.

WEEKLY GREETING

Partiality to ourselves is dishonesty. For a man to judge that to be the equitable, right part for him, which he would see to be harsh, unjust, oppressive in another, is plain vice, and can proceed only from great unfairness of mind.—John Locke.

A Change for the Better

That there will be fewer than ever of the old-time holiday gift books this season is indicated by the publications that have already appeared.

Years ago the typical "gift book," printed on ornately decorated paper, with full-page color illustrations, elaborately bound, and "boxed" in a way that gave it the appearance of a toothsome package of confectionery, was very much in evidence.

People inflicted these gift books on their friends not because of a suspected literary value in the books themselves, but primarily because the latter were outwardly festive and "Christmasy."

But the war seems to have sounded the death-knell of this odd literary harlequin—and of all the changes that the war has brought about in the world of books this change may be least deplored.

And now that the sugary gift book of the past has disappeared, its place is being more than filled by books that are really worth while, books whose appeal is based on the printed page and not on decoration and fanciful binding. The new gift book is something that deserves a hearty welcome this year—and there is every indication that the welcome will be ungrudgingly accorded.—New York Times.

Our Weekly Recipe

Fig Pudding

Four ounces flour, four ounces bread crumbs, four ounces suet, four ounces sugar (brown is cheaper than granulated and does not require so much for sweetening), four ounces figs, one teaspoonful baking powder, one egg, a little milk, a pinch of salt. Chop figs up rather small and mix all the dry ingredients together, then add the beaten egg and enough milk to make it the right consistency. Put into a ground pudding mold, cover with greased paper and a scalded and floured cloth, steam for two hours and serve with a plain white pudding sauce or a lemon syrup.

The Right of Authors to Reply to Critics

Giving it as his deliberate opinion that an author ought to be allowed to a misrepresenting review, William Dean Howells has written:

"In any other relation of life, the man who thinks himself wronged tries to right himself, violently, if he is a mistaken man, and lawfully, if he is a wise man or a rich one, which is practically the same thing.

"But the author, dramatist, painter, sculptor, whose book, play, picture, statue has been unfairly dealt with, must make no effort to right himself with the public; he must bear his wrong in silence; he is even expected to grin and bear it as if it were funny. Everybody understands that it is not funny to him, not in the least funny, but everybody says that he cannot make an effort to get the public to take his point of view without loss of dignity.

"This is very odd but it is the fact, and I suppose it comes from the feeling that the author, dramatist, painter, sculptor has already said the best he can of his side in his book, play, picture, statue. This is partly true and yet if he wishes to add something more to prove the critic wrong, we do not see how his attempt to do so should involve loss of dignity. The public, which is so jealous for his dignity, does not otherwise use him as if he were a very great or invaluable creature.

"I should say that he lost dignity or not as he behaved, in his effort to right himself. If he betrayed a wounded vanity, if he impugned the motives and accused the lives of his critics, I should certainly feel that he was losing dignity; but if he temperately examined their theories, and

Carmel Entertains Men From Presidio

Dignity men of the medical and signal service corps, located at the Monterey Presidio, at the invitation of Rev. S. C. Thomas, of the Methodist church, attended an evening service here last Sunday.

The men came over under the direction of G. A. Collins, of the Y. M. C. A., and proceeded directly to the beach, where a cheerful bonfire was awaiting them. Later they adjourned to the bath house, where an abundance of sandwiches, cake, fruit and coffee, provided by Carmel residents, were disposed of.

Several of the autos met with mishaps. One went to the Point; another had trouble on the hill, and still another, carrying the secretary and the hymn-books, had to change two tires.

The men are a fine looking body, and were very appreciative of Carmel's hospitality.

The singing in the church was something to remember.

If the artists on the Atlantic Coast have their pet colonies, such as Nassau, Cape Cod and the Cornish Hills, so the western artists have their haunts in the Sierras and on the shores of the Pacific. If Monterey and Carmel are well known in northern California for their picturesque qualities, Laguna Beach is equally popular among the artists of the southern coast—in fact, it is often called the Carmel of the South.—Eastern ex.

La Playa Arrivals

The Erhardt family motored from the White Mountains, across the continent to Yellowstone Park and from there to Carmel. They are now on their way to San Diego.

Strange, that after the government acquired one of the finest natural sites for training large bodies of men, that Monterey lies passive and does nothing to secure a cantonment of size. It is impossible to obtain at San Diego accommodations of any kind. Why? Because, naturally, families are securing quarters near the men who are in training, to be with them until the very last moment.

From the East letters of regret are daily coming to hand "We shall sorely miss our usual Carmel trip, but we are with 'Our Boys' "
