AFFIDAVIT

Deponent: TAKAYAMA, Hikoichi

1. I was Staff Officer of the 37th Army in North Borneo from September 1944 till the termination of the war.

My last rank was Colonel.

Now I live at No. 89, Minami-Kivmawamachi, Maebashi-shi, Gumma Pref.

- 2. It was about the end of May 1945 when the 37th Army was removed from the direct control of the South Seas Expeditionary Army and put under the command of the 7th Area Army.
- In spite the change of command as stated about

  3. The Concentration Camp of North Borneo was directly controlled by the Headquarters of the South Seas Expeditionary Army and was not under the control of the 37th Army. The chief of the Concentration Camp received orders directly from the Headquarters and was in charge of the management of POW's.

The Army Commander was entrusted with the supply to the soldiers within the limits in accordance with the regulations of the Commander-in-Chief of the South Seas Expeditionary Army and was authorized to order some necessary measures to be taken in case of necessity for guard and air-defende, etc. in reference to the duty of defende. It was however not within this capacity to interfere in the management of the concentration camp or the theatment of POW's, the responsibility for which being assumed by the Chief of the Concentration Camp.

4. About January 1945 the Commander of the 37th Army received instructions from the Commander-in-Chief of the South Seas Expeditionary Army to move the main forces of the Army, which then stationed in the north east of Borneo, to the west coast of the Island.

In accordance with the instructions, the Commander of the attained on the east Coast of Borneo to move to the west coast and it was carried out. At the same time he ordered the transfer of POW's of the Allied Forces in the vicinity of Sandagan (phonetic) to a basin near Raman (phonetic) from the view point of defense taking consideration of the danger of bombings and the pressing situation of the food in the Sandagan District. (The market area was then comparatively safe and self-sufficient of food.) The transfer of the POW; was carried out on two accounts in Methods and May 1945.

5. The orders of the 37th Army commander to transfer at Sandakan to a place near Narau were issued in the circumstances as follows:

In the first place the Army Headquarters asked Chief of the Concentration Camp at North Borneo Lieut. Col. SUGA to reveal his opinion as to moving POW's at Sandakan to Ranan for the sake of defense. The Headquarters received this answer to agree about the matter, asking to have orders from the army. So that the Headquarters delivered an Army command concerning the transfer of POW's. We sounded the opinion of the Chief of the concentration camp by reason that the was responsible for the management of POW's and the command was issued from the Army with a view that the transfer was a measure in reference to military defense.

About May 1945 bombing of the Allied Forces became so intende that the communication by sea between North Borneo and French Indo-China, Malay, etc. was entirely cut off and also that by air was in great difficulty.

of planes to do the duty of communication between the Army Headquarters and the outside, But it took about one day to go between the Headquarters and the air-field. Although the telephone was operated between the places, it was frequently broken. Only the wireless was available so the communication with the 7th area army, but the apparatus was frequently broken as the period of Selection just before that time. Owing to the shortage of fuel, the telegraphing hours were greatly cut down. Thus the communication was run in an extremely insufficient way and was limited solely to the matters of emergent importance. The situation grew worse as the war neared its end.

The Kaningo (phonetic) air-field was employed for the use of planes acting as liaison between the irmy Headquarters and the outside but it took about one day to go between the Headquarters and the air-field.

Although the telephone was operated between the points, it was frequently broken.

Def. Doc. #2037

Only radio was available for communication with the 7th area army, but the apparatus was frequently broken as the machine had been removed from JESSELTON just before that time. Besides that owing to the shortage of fuel and batteries communication schedule hours were greatly cut down. Thus the communication was run in an extremely inefficient way, and was limited solely to the matters of prestry. Importance.

Even this was often intepupted. The situation grew werse as the war area neared its card.
