PREFACE.

THE purpose of this volume is to supply, in as compact a form as is consistent with clearness, the orthography, pronunciation, meaning, and etymology of all English words which are likely to be encountered by the general reader or the student. Words of an exclusively technical or scientific nature are in general omitted, — both to reserve space for the adequate treatment of words in general use, and because the limited class of persons who desire information of this kind would in any case refer to encyclopedias or glossaries devoted to an especial field.

Although the book is small, it will be found to contain a more copious vocabulary and fuller definitions of the essential words, than many dictionaries of greater bulk. The illustrations, which have been profusely used wherever they could aid the understanding of the subject, will be found in many cases to afford a clearer explanation than could be given by the use of words.

Arrangement of Words. — The great condensation of the book is due in part to the exclusion of definitions of derived words, which are in fact self-explanatory as soon as the root-word is thoroughly defined. For instance, under the vocabulary word Blame (p. 51), Blamable is defined, but not Blamableness or Blamably; Blameless, but not Blamelessly or Blamelessness; Blameworthy, but not Blameworthiness: the words, however, are given; also their pronunciation is invariably indicated by accents, or by respelling when necessary; so also is the part of speech, by the conventional signs uniformly employed. — But the principal saving of space is due to the system of referring words, formed upon a common prefix, to the first of these words which occurs alphabetically; explaining there the prefix fully and once for all; and then leaving the etymology of the root-word to be ascertained by reference to the un-compounded word in its proper place in the vocabulary. For example, the inseparable prefix In-, having a negative force, is fully accounted for in its regular alphabetical place, and its etymology under the next following word, INABILITY; its euphonic changes (into i- before gn-; il- before l-; im- before m and p; and ir- before r-) are described; and then reference is made to the five vocabulary words under which such formatives are grouped: viz. : —

Ignoble , covering	24 words, and occupying	$\frac{1}{3}$ of a column.
Illandable , covering	25 words, and occupying	$\frac{1}{3}$ of a column.
Immaculate , covering	187 words, and occupying	3 $\frac{1}{2}$ columns.
Inability , covering	661 words, and occupying	12 $\frac{1}{4}$ columns.
Irrational , covering	72 words, and occupying	1 $\frac{1}{2}$ columns.
Total	969 words, occupying	17 $\frac{3}{8}$ columns.

In the Unabridged Dictionary the corresponding words, as ascertained by measurement, fill 147 of its much ampler columns; and — by reason of the strictly alphabetical arrangement of that work — extend over 65 pages (words of different derivation being of course intermingled with them), as against 8 $\frac{3}{8}$ pages of this volume.

Another similar economy, which has effected the saving of much space, is illustrated by the following entry (p. 42): —

Be-, prefix, has sometimes an intensive force, as besprinkle. Prefixed to nouns or adjectives, it often has the meaning to make, and transforms them into verbs: thus BEDIM, BEFOOL, mean to make dim, to make a fool of. Sometimes it has the meaning of by, as BESIDE. For words beginning with Be- not found in this vocabulary, see the original word: thus, for BEDAUB, BEDIM, etc., see DAUB, DIM, etc.

A like saving has been effected in the case of many of these prolific prefixes. Thus, Re-, with its form Red-, having been accounted for (p. 471), the generality of words so constructed are disposed of by the note: "It may be prefixed to almost any verb and many substantives, the word so formed being usually self-explanatory." Still, when a difference in either pronunciation or meaning has taken place, both forms are given and defined: for instance, Recollect' and Recollect' are combined in a single paragraph (p. 474), as being of identical derivation; but their widely divergent meanings are adequately defined; while their etymology is left to be sought under Collect.

System of Grouping.—A saving similar to that made by associating words having the same prefix has been accomplished by consolidating into one paragraph words derived from the same root, provided they have the same initial letter. Thus, under the noun Air (p. 11) are given, first, the direct derivatives, the verb, To Air, the noun Airing, adjective Airy, adverb Airily, noun Airiness; then follow, alphabetically, the derived compounds—viz.: Airbath, -bed, -bladder, etc.,—of which there are 16; and the result is that 21 words are adequately accounted for in 42 lines, although a space equal to 5 of these lines is given to an illustration showing the construction of an AIR-PUMP; whereas the corresponding words occupy just 200 lines of the broader columns of the Unabridged. Again, under Water (p. 668), this book covers 51 words in 188 lines, or about 2 columns, including 6 illustrations; while in the Unabridged the word and its derivations fill $7\frac{3}{4}$ columns, or 837 lines.—It must be explained, however, that, while words of identical etymology have been thus systematically grouped, great care has been taken to indicate the difference between words having the same spelling and pronunciation, but a different etymology. Thus, on page 551, there are 4 separate paragraphs headed Sound, both the meaning and origin of these words and their derivations being totally distinct. There are also 3 entirely different words, Smack (p. 543), yet of the same pronunciation. This point is dwelt upon because, in many elaborate dictionaries, words from totally different sources and of dissimilar meanings have been grouped as if they were of identical origin—which is hopelessly confusing to a student of the language.—It should, however, be understood that only words having the same initial letter are thus associated; but reference is made to cognate words, if they begin with a different prefix or compound, so as to show their common origin, however widely they may be separated alphabetically. For instance, the paragraph Stand (p. 563) includes 22 words and phrases which fall alphabetically under stand-; and these fill but 73 lines, or about three quarters of a column, although 17 of these lines are devoted to the matter of etymology. That is, the etymologies are traced from the Anglo-Saxon, Old High German, Gothic, Icelandic, Dutch, Latin, Greek, and Sanskrit: then follow references (marked s. rt. = "from the same root as") to 42 cognate words derived from the French and Latin, to 11 from the Greek, and to 31 from various sources,—to 84 different words in all. To trace out the significance of this group of allied words, the student should examine each of them, with its derivatives. For example, in the case of STAND, its derivatives UNDERSTAND, UNDERSTANDING, etc., are grouped among the 67 words associated under the leading word Under; as are WITHSTAND, etc., under With. But it is only under the stem-word—in this case STAND—that the etymologies have been printed in full, a note under each of the cognate words making a reference to the passage in which they are given. By this system many pages have been saved in the aggregate, although the etymologies are set forth with an almost unprecedented fullness in some one place, to which reference is clearly made under each derived word.

Pronunciation.—The marks indicating pronunciation have been made as few and as simple as is consistent with clearness and precision. The leading word of each paragraph is respelled phonetically; but subsequent words within the paragraph are respelled only in instances where the pronunciation changes, or where for any reason it might be doubtful.*—An unmarked vowel, followed by a consonant in the same syllable, is short (as am, end, in, odd, sun): an unmarked vowel forming a syllable by itself, or ending a syllable, is long, or has its name sound (as a, be, di-al, no, fu-el, by); but a, not under the accent, forming or ending a syllable; has a brief sound of a in far, or in some cases a brief sound of long a in fate. Vowel sounds which are not thus explained by their position, also the sounds of such consonants as have more than one sound, are marked in accordance with the key-line at the foot of each two adjoining pages. The diacritical marks there employed are self-explanatory, with the exception of that which designates the nasal sound illustrated in the key-line by the French word bonbon. This n indicates that the preceding vowel is nasal, but care should be taken that the back part of the tongue is not pressed against the palate as is done in producing the English ng. For example, in making the French sound ong we may proceed as if about to say ong (as in song), but stop before the sound ng is produced. Similarly the other French nasal vowels can be produced.

* Where alternative pronunciations are given for the leading word, the choice between them is understood to apply to the subsequent words in the paragraph, unless these are otherwise marked. For instance, in the paragraph Retroact (p. 488), the pronunciation of the first two syllables of all words in the paragraph may be either rét-tro- or rét'ro-.

For the sake of brevity, the second part of a compound word in the body of a paragraph is not respelled, if its true pronunciation is given in its alphabetical place in the vocabulary: thus, in the paragraph Sheep (p. 527), the compounds SHEEP-WALK, SHEEP'S-EYE, are presumed to require no respelling, since the few persons unaware of the pronunciation of the second word in the compound can seek it in its own place in the vocabulary. But in cases where there is a deviation from the sound of the original word, this is indicated by respelling, — as in HOUSEWIFE, under the vocabulary word House (p. 265). — In the large class of verbs and verbal adjectives spelled alike and terminating in -ate (as DEGENERATE, DUPLICATE, ELABORATE), the attempt has not been made to mark the different quantity of the a in the final syllable, which is always given its long sound, as found in the verb; but, in fact, it has a less prolonged sound in the adjectives, derived adverbs, and abstract nouns — approximating or falling into that of short e.

The Etymologies. — In tracing out the etymology of words, it has been the plan of the editor to indicate the source from which they in fact made their way into the English language, even though forms more closely resembling the modern English may be found in other tongues than those to which they are here attributed. Thus, sea terms may generally be held to come from the Scandinavian languages, less frequently from the Spanish and Portuguese, and only rarely from the French, although the modern form of the English term, modified by Norman and French influence, may appear on hasty consideration to have come from France. On the other hand, many words, both mediæval and modern, which have to do with law, dress, letters, art, science, etiquette, etc., are by many lexicographers attributed to the Latin and Greek, whereas they unquestionably reached England by way of France; and, where there has seemed to be a certainty or a reasonable presumption that this was the case, the French has here been indicated as the proximate, the Greek, Latin, or Italian, as the remoter source of the word. — The editor has consulted and freely used the results found in the most approved works on the derivation of English words. He has availed himself of the store of etymologies contributed by Professor Mahn to Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, and also of the admirable Etymological Dictionary recently published by Professor Skeat.

It is, perhaps, superfluous to explain that, where simply an initial is given in the place usually devoted to an etymology, the word so accounted for has simply been adopted into the English without change from the language indicated; — thus, on pp. 1, 2, of the vocabulary occur these etymologies: "Aard-vark [D., earth-pig.];" "Abdomen [L.];" "Abib [Heb.];" "Abreuve-voir [F.]," — where it is to be understood that these words have been appropriated, without change in spelling, from the Dutch, Latin, Hebrew, and French, respectively, — the meaning being also identical unless otherwise indicated.

The editor's thanks are due to Mr. ZENAS W. BLISS, of The Riverside Press, Cambridge, Mass., for many valuable suggestions and criticisms made while the book was passing through the press under his critical eye.

The Appendix. — After the conclusion of the vocabulary, there is given an Appendix, which contains: —

I. A Pronouncing Vocabulary of Biblical, Classical, Mythological, Historical, and Geographical Proper Names.

II. Abbreviations used in Writing and Printing.

III. Arbitrary Signs used in Writing and Printing.

Most of these sections require no explanation. But of the one devoted to proper names — including those which occur in Biblical, Classical, Egyptian, Hindoo, Modern, and Norse history and literature — the editor may explain that, after much inquiry, he was unable to find that such a collection had ever been made. Accordingly, starting upon the foundation of the Classical and Biblical vocabularies of Webster's Unabridged, and gathering from a variety of sources the names which occur in other literatures, he formed the consolidated Pronouncing Vocabulary of Proper Names (pp. 692-785). In this, the origin and pronunciation of all proper names which the reader is likely to encounter are indicated by the same system of marking employed in the body of the book.

CONDENSED DICTIONARY

OF

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A

A. An adjective, commonly called the indefinite article, and signifying one or any, but less emphatically; it is a contraction of the Anglo-Saxon an, one, and is used before words beginning with a consonant sound. See AN. — Mus. The nominal of the sixth tone in the model major scale (that in C), or of the first tone of the minor scale, which is named after it the scale in A minor. — A sharp (A ♯), the name of a musical tone intermediate between A and B. — A flat (A ♭), the name of a tone intermediate between A and G. — AA. (Med.) A sign written after the names of medicines in a prescription, denoting an equal quantity of each. [Contrac. of Gr. and throughout, of each.] — A 1, a-wun. An underwriter's registry mark for seaworthy vessels of the first or highest class, inferior grades being indicated by A 2, A 3, etc.; first-rate; prime.

Aard-vark, ard'vark, n. A plantigrade mammal of South Africa, allied to the armadillo, and feeding on ants. [D., earth-pig.] — Aard-wolf ard'woolf, n. A digitigrade carnivorous quadruped of South Africa. [D., earth-wolf.]

Aaronic, a-ron'ik, Aaron'ical, -ik-al, a. Pertaining to Aaron or to his priestly office.

Ab, ab, n. The 5th month of the Israelitish eccles. year, corresponding nearly with August. [Syriac.]

Abaca, ab'a-ka, n. Manila hemp. [Native name.]

Aback, a-bak', adv. (Naut.) Backward, as of sails caught in reverse by a change of wind. [AS. on bæc, on or at the back.] — Taken aback. Taken by surprise, unexpectedly baffled.

Abacus, ab'a-kus, n. A calculating-frame with sliding counters, for computing. (Arch.) The upper plate upon the capital of a column, supporting the architrave.

○○○○○○○○	○○○○○○○○
○○○○○○○○	○○○○○○○○
○○○○○○○○	○○○○○○○○
○○○○○○○○	○○○○○○○○
○○○○○○○○	○○○○○○○○

[L.] — Ab'acist, -sist, n. One who computes by an abacus.

Abate, a-bat', prep. (Naut.) Towards the stern from; back to. [AS. an abætan, after.]

Abalienate, ab-äl'yen-ät, v. t. (Law) To transfer the title of. [L. ab, from, and alienus, foreign.] — Abaliena'tion, -shun, n. Act of abalienating.

Abandon, a-ban'dun, v. t. [ABANDONED (-ban'dund), -don'ing.] To give up wholly and finally; to relinquish; forsake; forego. [F. abandonner, fr. L. ad, to, and LL. bandum, proclamation.] — Aban'doned, -dund, p. a. Given up entirely, as to a vice; depraved; reprobate. — Aban'donee', -dun-e', n. (Law) One to whom a thing is abandoned. — Aban'doner, n. One who, etc. — Aban'donment, n. Act of, or state of being, etc.: desertion. — Aban'don, a-ban'don', n. Complete absorption in some object or emotion. [F.]

A choice or select body; best part of anything. [F.]

Electrum, e-lek'trum, n. Amber; an amber-colored alloy of gold and silver used by the ancients; German silver plate. [L.; Gr. elektron, amber, which has electric powers when rubbed.]—Elect'ric, -tr'ic, -tr'ical, a. Pert. to, occasioned by, derived from, or containing, electricity; capable of occasioning electrical phenomena.—Elect'ricity, n. A non-conductor of electricity.—Elect'rically, adv. In the manner, or by means of, etc.—Electri'cian, -tr'ish'an, n. One versed in the science of, etc.—Electri'city, -tris'ty, -ty, n. A subtle agent or power in nature, evolved in any disturbance of molecular equilibrium, whether from chemical, physical, or mechanical cause; science of the phenomena of the electric fluid.—Elect'ricity, n. Capable of receiving, or of being charged with, etc.—Elect'rify, -fy, v. t. [-FIED (-'fid), -FYING.] To charge with electricity; to give an electric shock to; to excite suddenly; to surprise, esp. by something pleasing or inspiring. [L. facere, to make.]—Elect'rize, v. t. [-TRIZED (-'trizd), -TRIZING.] To electrify.—Elect'ro-biol'ogy, -bi-ol'o-jy, n. That phase of mesmerism in which the actions, feelings, etc., of a mesmerized person are supposed to be controlled by the will of the operator; science of the electrical currents developed in living organisms. [E. biology, q. v.]—Elect'ro-chem'istry, n. Science of the agency of electricity in effecting chemical changes.—Elect'rode, -tród, n. Either of the so-called poles of the voltaic circle. [Gr. hodos, a way, path.]—Elect'ro-gild'ing, n. Process of gilding copper, etc., by voltaic electricity.—Electrol'ogy, -jy, n. Science of the phenomena of electricity and its properties. [Gr. logos, discourse.]—Electrol'y'sis, -ty'sis, n. Act or process of chemical decomposition, by the action of electricity, or galvanism. [Gr. lysis, a dissolving, fr. luo, to loose, dissolve.]—Elect'rolyte, -lyt, n. A compound decomposable, or subjected to decomposition, by an electric current. [Gr. lytos, dissolvable.]—Elect'rolyze, -lyz, v. t. [-LYZED (-'lyzd), -LYZING.] To decompose by direct action of electricity or galvanism. [Gr. lyo, to dissolve.]—Elect'ro-mag'net, n. A mass of soft iron rendered temporarily magnetic by a surrounding coil of wire through which a current of electricity is passing.—Elect'ro-magn'et'ic, a. Pert. to magnetism, as connected with electricity, or affected by it.—Elect'ro-mag'netism, n. Science of the development of magnetism by voltaic electricity, and of the currents evolved.—Electrom'eter, n. An instrument for measuring the quantity or intensity of electricity, or which indicates its presence. [Gr. metron, measuring.]—Elect'ro-mo'tor, n. Apparatus for generating a current of electricity.—Elect'ro-mus'cular, a. Pert. to the reaction of the muscles under, or their sensibility to, etc.—Elect'ro-neg'ative, -tiv, a. Having the property of being attracted by an electro-positive body, or a tendency to pass to the positive pole in electrolysis.—n. A body which, etc.—Elect'rophone, -fón, n. An instrument for procuring sound by means of electric currents. [Gr. phone, sound.]—Elect'ro-pos'itive, a. Of such a nature relatively to associated bodies, as to tend to the negative pole of a voltaic pile, while the associated body tends to the positive pole.—Elect'roscope, -skóp, n. An instrument for detecting changes in the electric state of bodies, or the species of electricity present. [Gr. skopein, to see.]—Elect'rother'apeutic, -thér'a-pu't'iks, n. Science of the application of electricity as a curative agent.—Elect'rotype, -tip, n. A plate faced (by electric deposition) with a shell of copper, silver, etc., and backed with type-metal, presenting a facsimile of an engraving, page of type, etc.—pl. [-TYPE (-'tip), -TYPING.] To take copies by electrolysis. [Gr. typos, impression, fr. typtein, to strike.]—Elect'rotyp'er, n.—Elect'rotyp'ry, -y, n. Process of making electrotypes.

Electuary, e-lect'u-a-ry, n. A medicine composed of powders, made up into a confection. [OF. lectuaire, electuaire, L. electuarium, fr. elingere, Gr. ekleichein, to lick away, fr. ek and leichein, to lick.]

Eleemosynary, el-e-mos'y-na-ry, a. Pert. to, or intended for the distribution of, charity; given in, or founded or supported by, charity.—n. One who subsists on charity. [L. eleemosynarius, an almoner, fr. Gr. eleemosine, alms. See ALMS.]
