(fithis word Mir. Drylen writes thus. My friends quarselled at the word falififed, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confeffed; for I remember not to have read it in any Einglifh author ; though perhaps it may be found in Spenfor's Fairy Queen. But fuppofe it be not there: why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polifhed language, the word which is wanting in my native tonguc? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, fi graco fonte callant, efpecially when other words are joined with them which explain the fenfe. I ufe the word faijify, in this piace, to mean that the frield of Turnus was not of proof againft the fpears and jareeins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain:

Ría fil'U iergo d'Ambi era perfetto,
Che mai poter falfarlo in ni (fumn canto. Ariofto, cant. xxvi. Fallir cannot otherwife be turned than by falfified; for his fhicld was faifer, is not Englifh. I might indeed have contented mylelf with faving his fhield was pierced, and bored, and fluck with javecins.

Dryden.
Drglen, with all this effort, was not able to naturalife the new fignification, which I have never fcen copied, except once by fume obfcure namejefs writer, and which indeed deferves not to be received.
To Fa'lsify. v. u. To tell lies; to violate truth.

FEE. n. f. [Feoh, Saxon; fee, Danifh, cattle; feudum, low Latin ; feu, Scottifh.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of fuperiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual eftate to him and his heirs, &cc. are divided into allodium and feudum: allcdium is every man's own land, which he pofiefles merely in his own right, without acknowledgment of any fervice, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe fervices, or pay rent, or both, to a fuperior lord. And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum: for though a man have land by defcent from his anceftors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of fuch a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by defcent or purchafe, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or firft of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all fuch to whom it might defcend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has dirctumnd minium, that is, the very property or demefne in any land, hut the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum Eo utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not fimply his own. Fee is divided into two forts; fee-abfolute, otherwife called fee-fimple, and fee-conditional, otherwife termed fee-tail: fee-fimple is that whereof we are feized in thofe general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are feifed to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body, &ic. And fee-tail is either general or fpecial: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fec-tail fpecial is that where a man and his wife are feifed of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. FLO'WER. n. f. [feur, French; flos, flores, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the feeds.

Such are reckoned perfect ficwers which have petala, a ftamen, apex and ftylus; and whatever fiver wants either. of thefe is reckoned imperfect. Perfect fiowers are divided into fimple ones, which are not compofed of other fmaller ones, and which ufually have but one fingle ftyle; and compounded, which confift of many fofculi, all making but one fower. Simple fowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the fiower all of one intire leaf, though fometimes cut or divided a little way into many feeming petala, or leaves; as in borage, buglofs, &c. or polypetalous, which have diftinct petala, and thofe falling off fingly, and not all together, as the feeming petala of monopetalous fowers always do : but thofe are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the difform have no fuch regularity, as in the fowers of fage, deadnettle, &c. A monopetalous difform fower is likewife further divided into, firf, femi-fifular, whofe upper part refembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the ariloftochia: 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and fcordium, or w.th two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is fometimes turned upwards, and fo turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæciffus, &ic. but moft commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and fo reprefents a kind of helmet, or monkfhood; and from thence thefe are frequently called galeate, cucullate, and galericulate flovers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and moft verticillate plants. Sometimes alfo the lamium is intire, and fometimes jagged or divided. 3 d , Corniculate; that is, fuch hollow $f$ : wers as have on their upper part a kind of fpur, or little horn, as in the linaria, delphinum, &c. and the carniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are either, firtt, difcous or difcoidal ; that is, whofe fofculi are fet together fo clofe, thick, and even, as to make the furface of the $f i$ wer plain and flat, which therefore, becaufe of its round form, will be like a difcus; which difk is fometimes radiated, when there is a row of petala ftanding round in the difk, like the points of a ftar, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and fometimes naked, having no fuch radiating leaves round the limb of its difk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolious, which is compofed of plain flowers, fet together in circular rows round the centre, and whofe face is ufual'y indented, notched uneven and jagged, as the hieracia, &c. 3d, fiftular, which is compounded of many long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect fliwers, becaufe they want the petala, are called ftamineous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and thofe which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the juli, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call thein cats-tail. The term campaniformis is ufed for fuch as are in the fhape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for fuch as are in the form of a funnel.

Miller.
Good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they ficken. Sbakefpeare's Macbeth.
With flow 'r inwoven trefles torn,
The nymphs in twilight dhade of tangled thickets mourn.
Beauteous fow'rs why do we fpread
Upon the monuments of the dead?
Though the fame fun with all-diffufive rays

Gala'ngal. n. $\int$. [galange, French.] A medicinal root, of which there are two fepecies. The leffer galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thicknefs of a man's little finger; a brownifh red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thicknefs : its colour is brown, with a faint caft of red in it: it has a difagreeable, but much lefs acrid and pungent tafte than the fmaller fort. They are both brought from the Eaft-Indies; the fimall kind fromChina, and the larger from the ifland of Java, wherewith the people, while it is frefh, by way of fpice, leafon their difhes. The fmall fort is ufed with us in medicine as a ftomachick, and is an ingredient in almoft all bitter infufions and mixtures. Hill.

We meet with galbanum fometimes in loofe granules, called drops or tears, which is the pureft, and fometimes in large mafles. It is foft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers of a yellowifh or reddifh colour : its finell is ftrong and dif agreeable; its tafte acrid, naufcous and bitterifh. It is of a middle liature between a gum and a refin, being inflammable as a refin, and foluble in water as a gum, and will not diffolve in oil as pure refins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant, whofe falks are about an inch thick, and five or fix feet high: its leaves are like the common anife, of a ftrong fimell, and acrid tante; but the flowers, and efpecially the feeds, much morefo. The whole plant abounds with a vifcous milky juice, which it yields when wounded, and which foon concretes inteo fubftance called gallanam. The plant is frequent in Perfia, and in many parts of Africa. Its medicinal virtues are confiderable in afthmas, coughs, and hyfterick conplaints. Hill's Materia Medica.

7. [From galla.]

Galls or galnuts are a kind of preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on various trees; but thofe of the oak only are ufed in medicine. We have two kinds, the Oriental and the European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bignefs of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their furface, of a very firm and folid texture, and a difagreeable, acerb, and aftringent tafte. The European galls are of the fame fize, with perfectly fmooth furfaces: they are light, often fpongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a lefs autcre tafte, and are of much lefs value than the firft fort, both in manufactures and medicine. The general hiftory of galls is this: an infect of the fly kind, for the fafety of her young, wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole depofites her egg: the lacerated veffels of the tree difcharging their contents, form a tumour or woody cafe about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour alfo ferves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg of the fly, which, as foon as it is perfect, and in its winged ftate, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is feen on its furface, the maggot, or its remains, are fure to be found within, on breaking it. It has been obferved, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this obfervation thould be confined to the medicinal galls; for all thufe excrefcencies which we find on this trec in our own woods, and call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true and genuine galls, though lefs firm in their texture. The true reafon of the hard ones not being produced with us, feems to be that we want the peculiar fpecies of infect to which they owe their origin, which is a fly of the ichneumon kind, only found in hot countries. The fecies of fly that occafions, by its punctures, the foft galls of France and Italy, is different both from the Syrian one and from ours, though ftill of the ichneumon kind; and we find the feveral kinds, which occafion the different galls in our own kingdom, produce different kinds, and thofe of different degrees of hardnefs, on the fame tree. Galls are ufed in making ink, and in dying and dreffing leather, and many other manufacturcs. In medicine they are very aftringent, and good under proper management. Hill.

 nally fignifies the art of meafuring the earth, or any diftances or dimenfions on or within it : but it is now ufed for the fcience of quantity, extenfion, or magnitude abftractedly confidered, without any regard to matter.
Geometry very probably had its firft rife in Egypt, where the Nile annually overflowing the country, and covering it with mud, obliged men to diftinguifh their lands one from another, by the confideration of their figure; and after which, 'tis probable, to be able alfo to meafure the quantity of it, and to know how to plot it, and lay it out again in its juft dimenfions, figure and proportion: after which, it is likely, a farther contemplation of thofe draughts and figures helped them to difcover many excellent and wonderful properties belonging to them; which fpeculations were continually improving, and are ftill to this day. Geometry is ufually divided into fpeculative and practical; the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abftractedly; and the latter applies thefe fpeculations and theorems to ufe and practice, and to the benefit and advantage of mankind.
