P R E F A C E.

IT is the fate of thofe who toil at the lower employments of life, to be rather driven by the feat of evil, than attracted by the profpect of good; to be expofed to cenfure, without hope of praife; to be difgraced by mifcarriage, or punifhed for neglect, where fuccefs would have been without applaufe, and diligence without reward.

Among thefe unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries; whom mankind have confidered, not as the pupil, but the flave of fcience, the pionier of literature, doomed only to remove ribbifh and clear obftructions from the paths of Learning and Genius, who prefs forward to conqueft and glory, without beftowing a fmile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progrefs. Every other authour may afpire to praife ; the lexicographer can only hope to efcape reproach, and even this negative recompenfe has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithftanding this difcouragement, attempted a dictionary of the Englifh language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every fecies of literature, has iffelf been hitherto neglected, fuffered to fpread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance, refigned to the tyranny of time and fafhion, and expofed to the corruptions of ignorancé; and caprices of innovatiori.

When I took the firtt furvey of my undertaking, I found our fpeech copious without order, and energetick without rules: wherever I turned my view, there was perplexity to be difentangled, and confufion to be regulated; choice was to be made out of boundlefs variety; without any eftablifhed principle of felection; adulterations were to be detected, without a fettled teft of purity; and modes of expreffion to be rejected or'received, without the fuffrages of any writers of claffical reputation or ac-knowledged authority.

Having therefore no affiftance but from general grammar, I applied myfelf to the perufal of our writers ; and noting whatever might be of ufe to afcertain or illuftrate any word or phrafe, accumulated in time the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, eftablifhing to myfelf, in the progrefs of the work, fuch rules as experience and analogy fuggetted to me; experience, which practice and obfervation were continually increafing; and analogy, which, though in fome words obfcure, was evident in others:

In adjufting the Orthography, which has been to this tithe unfettled and fortuitous, İ found it neceffary to diftinguifh thofe irregularities that are inherent in our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it , from others which the ignorance or negligence of later writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies, which, though inconvenient, and in themfelves once unneceffary, muft be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which require only to be regiftred; that they may not be increafed, and afcertained, that they may not be confounded : but every language has likewife its improprieties and abfurdities, which it is the duty of the lexicographer to correct or profcribe.

As language was at its beginning merely oral, all words of neceffary or common ufe were fpoken before they were written; and while they were unfixed by any vifible figns; muft have been fpoken with great diverfity, as we now obferve thofe who cannot read to catch founds imperfectly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous jargon was firt reduced to an alphabet, every penman endeavoured to exprefs, as he could, the founds which he was accuftomed to pronounce or to receive, and vitiated in writing fuch words as were already vitiated in fpeech. The powers of the letters, when they were applied to a new language, muft have been vague and unfettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the fane found by different combinations:

From this uncertain pronunciation arife in a great part the various dialects of the fame country, which will always be obferved to grow fewer, and lefs different, as books are multiplied ; and from this arbitrary reprefentation of founds by letters, proceeds that diverfity of fpelling obfervable in the Saxon remains, and I fuppofe in the firt books of every nation, which perplexes or deftroys analogy, and produces anomalous formations, which, being once incorporated, can never be afterward difniffed or reformed.

Of this kind are the derivatives length from long, Arengtb from Arong, darling from dear, breadtb from broad, from dry, drougbt, and from bigh, height, which Milton, in zeal for analogy, writes bighth; 2uid te exempta juvat Jpinis de pluribus una; to change all would be too much, and to change one is nothing.

PREFACE.

This uncertainty is mof frequent in the vowels, which are fo capricioufly pronouncel, and fo differently modified, by accident or affectation, not only in every province, but in every month, that to them, as is well known to ctymologifts, little regard is to be fhewn in the deduction of one language from another.

Such defects are not errours in orthography, but fpots of barbarity impreffed fo decp in the Englif/b language, that criticifm can never wafh them away; thefe, therefore, muft be permitted to remain untouched: but many words have likewife been altered by accident, or depraved by ignorance, as the pronunciation of the vulgar has been weakly followed; and fome fill continue to be varioufly written, as authours differ in their care or fkill: of thefe it was proper to enquire the true orthography, which I have always confidered as depending on their derivation, and have therefore referred them to their original languages: thus I write enchant, enchantment, enchonter, after the Fremol, and inicontation after the Latin; thus entire is chofen rather than initre, becaufe it pafied to us not from the Latin integer, but from the Frencls entier.

Of many words it is difficult to fay whether they were immediately reccived from the Latin or the French, fince at the time when we had dominions in France, we had Latin fervice in our chirches. It is, however, my opinion, that the French: generally fupplied us; for we have few Latin words; among the terms of domeflick ufe, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Even in words of which the derivation is apparent, I have been often obliged to facrifice uniformity to cuftom; thus I write, in compliance with a numberlefs majority, convey and inveigh, deceit and receipt, fancy and phantom; fometimes the derivative varies from the primitive; as explain and explanation, repeat and repetition.
Some combinations of letters having the fame power are ufed indifferently without any difcoverable reafon of choice, as in chook, cloke; foap, fope; fewel, fucl, and many others; which I have fometimes inferted twice, that thofe who fearch for them under either form, may not fearch in vain.

In examining the orthography of any doubtful word, the mode of fpelling by which it is inferted in the feries of the dictionary, is to be confidered as that to which I give, perhaps not often rafhly, the pre-ference: I have left, in the examples, to every authour his own practice unmolefted, that the reader may balance fuffrages, and judge between us: but this queftion is not always to be determined by reputed or by real learning ; fome men, intent upon greater things, have thought little on founds and derivations; fome, knowing in the ancient töngues, have neglected thofe in which our words are comimonly to be fought. Thus Hammond writes feciblenefs for feafblenefs, becaufe I fuppofe he imagined it der rived immediately from the Latin; and fome words, fuch as dependant, dependent; deperidance, depent dence, vary their final fyllable, as one or other language is prefent to the writer.

In this part of the work, where caprice has long wantoned without controul, and vanity fought praife by petty reformation, I have endeavoured to proceed with a fcholar's reverence for antiquity, and a grammarian's regard to the genius of our tongue. I have attempted few alterations, and among thofe few, perhaps the greater part is from the modern to the ancient pradice; and I hope I may be allowed to recommend to thofe, whofe thoughts have been, perhaps, employed too anxiounly on verbal fingularities; not to difturb, upon narrow views, or for minute propriety, the orthography of their fathers. It has been afferted, that for the law to be knocom, is of more importance than to be right. Change, fays Hooker, is not made without inconvenience, even from worfe to better. There is in conftancy and fability a general and lafting advantage, which will always overbalance the flow improvements of gradual correction. Much lefs ought our written language to comply with the corruptions of oral utterance, or copy that which every variation of time or place makes different from itfelf, and imitate thofe changes, which will again be changed, while imitation is employed in obferving them.

This recommendation of fteadinefs and uniformity does not proceed from an opinion, that particular combinations of letters have much influence on human happinefs; ; or that truth may not be fuccefffully taught by modes of fpelling fanciful and erroneous: I am not yet fo lof in lexicography, as to forget that words are the :daugbters of earth, and that things are the fons of beaven. Language is only the inftrument of fcience, and words are but the, figns of ideas: I wifh, however, that the inftriment might be lefs apt to decay, and that figns might be permanent, like the things which they denote.

In fettling the orthography, I have not wholly neglected the pronunciation, which I have directed, by printing an accent upon the acute or elevated fyllable. It will fometimes be found, that the accent is placed by the authour quoted, on a different fyllable, from that marked in the alphabetical feries; it is then to be underftood, that cuftom has varied, or that the authour has, in my opinion, pronounced wrong. Short directions are fometimes given where the found of letters is irregular; and if they are fometimes omitted, defect in fuch minute obfervations will be more cafily excufer, than fuperfluity.

In the inventigation both of the orthography and fignification of words, their Etraorocy was neceflarily to be confidered, and they were therefore to be divided into primitives and derivatives. A primitive word, is that which can be traced no further to any Englifhe root; thus circumfpect, circum-
sent，circumfance，delude，concave，and complicate，though compounds in the Latin，are to us primi－ tives．Derivatives，are all thofe that can be referred to any word in Englifh of greater fimplicity．

The derivatives $I$ have referred to their primitives，with an accuracy fometimes needlefs；for who does not fee that remotenefs comes from remote，lovely from love，concavity from concave，and demonfirative from demonflrate？but this grammatical exuberance the fcheme of my work did not allow me to reprefs． It is of great importance in examining the general fabrick of a language，to trace one word from another，by noting the ufual modes of derivation and inflection；and uniformity muft be preferved in fyftematical works，though fometimes at the expence of particular propriety．

Among other derivatives $I$ have been careful to infert and elucidate the anomalous plurals of nouns and preterites of verbs，which in the Teutonick dialects are very frequent，and，though familiar to thofe who have always ufed them，interrupt and embarrafs the learners of our language．

The two languages from which our primitives have been derived are the Roman and Teutonick：under the Roman I comprehend the French and provincial tongues；and under the Teutonick range the Saxon， German，and all their kindred dialects．Moft of our polyfyllables are Roman，and our words of one fyllable are very often Teutonick．

In affigning the Roman original，it has perhaps fometimes happened that I have mentioned only the Latin，when the word was borrowed from the French；and confidering myfelf as employed only in the illuftration of my own language，I have not been very careful to obferve whether the Latin word be pure or barbarous，or the French elegant or obfolete．

For the Teutonick etymologies I am commonly indebted to Funius and Skinner，the only names which I have forborn to quote when I copied their books；not that I might appropriate their labours or ufurp their honours，but that I might fpare a perpetual repetition by one general acknowledgment．Of thefe， whom I ought not to mention but with the reverence due to inftructors and benefactors，Funius ap－ pears to have excelled in extent of learning，and Skinner in rectitude of underftanding．Funius was accurately fkilled in all the northern languages，Skinner probably examined the ancient and remoter dialects only by occafional infpection into dictionaries；but the learning of Funius is often of no other ufe than to Hhow him a track by which he may deviate from his purpofe，to which Skinner always preffes forward by the fhorteft way．Skinner is often ignorant，but never ridiculous：Junius is always full of knowledge； but his variety diftracts his judgment，and his learning is very frequently difgraced by his abfurdities．

The votaries of the northern mufes will not perhaps eafily reftrain their indignation，when they find the name of Funius thus degraded by a difadvantageous comparifon；but whatever reverence is due to his diligence，or his attainments，it can be no criminal degree of cenforioufnefs to charge that etymo－ logift with want of judgment，who can ferioully derive dream from drama，becaufe life is a drama，and a drama is a dream；and who declares with a tone of defiance，that no man can fail to derive moan from Móva，monos，who confiders that grief naturally loves to be alone＊．

Our knowledge of the northern literature is fo fcanty，that of words undoubtedly Teutonick the original is not always to be found in any ancient language ；and I have therefore inferted Dutch or German fubfti－ tutes，which I confider not as radical but parallel，not as the parents，but fifters of the Englifh．

The words which are reprefented as thus related by defcent or cognation，do not always agree in fenfe； for it is incident to words，as to their authours，to degenerate from their anceftors，and to change their manners when they change their country．It is fufficient，in etymological enquiries，if the fenfes of kindred words be found fuch as may eafily pafs into each other，or fuch as may both be referred to one general idea．

The etymology，fo far as it is yet known，was eafily found in the volumes where it is par－ ticularly and profeffedly delivered；and，by proper attention to the rules of derivation，the orthogra－ phy was foon adjufted．But to collect the Words of our language was a tafk of greater difficulty： the deficiency of dictionaries was immediately apparent；and when they were exhaufted，what was yet wanting muft be fought by fortuitous and unguided excurfions into books，and gleaned as induftry thould find, or chance fhould offer it, in the boundlefs chaos of a living fpeech. My fearch, however, has been either fkilful or lucky; for I have much augmented the vocabulary.

As my defign was a dietionary, common or appellative, I have omitted all words which have relation to proper names; fuch as Arian, Socinian, Calvinift, Benedittine, Mabometan; but have retained thofe of a more general nature, as Heatben, Pagan.
Of the terms of art I have received fuch as could be found either in books of fcience or technical dietionaries ; and have often inferted, from philofophical writers, words which are fupported perhaps only by a fingle authority, and which being not admitted into general ufe, ftand yet as candidates or

The words which our authours have introduced by their knowledge of foreign languages, or ignorance of their own, by vanity or wantonnefs, by compliance with farhion, or luft of innovation, I have regiftred as they occurred, though commonly only to cenfure them, and warn others againft the folly of naturalizing: ufelefs foreigners to the injury of the natives.

I have not rejected any by defign, merely becaufe they were unneceffary or exuberant; but have received thofe which by different writers have been differently formed, as vifcid, and vifcidity, vijcous, and vijcofity.

Compounded or double words I have feldom noted, except when they obtain a fignification different from that which the components have in their fimple fate. Thus bigbwayman, woodman, and borfecourfer, require an explication; but of thiefike or coachdriver no notice was needed, becaufe the primitives contain the meaning of the compounds.

Words arbitrarily formed by a conftant and fettled analogy, like diminutive adjectives in $i / \int$, as $s$ greenij $h$, bluijh, adverbs in $l y$, as dully, openly, fubfantives in nefs, as vilenefs, faultinefs, were lefs diligently fought, and many fometimes have been omitted, when I had no authority that invited me to infert them; not that they are not genuine and regular offsprings of Englifh roots, but becaufe their relation to the primitive being always the fame, their fignification cannot be miftaken.

The verbal nouns in ing, fuch as the keeping of the cafle, the leading of the army, are always neglected, or placed only to illuftrate the fenfe of the verb, except when they fignify things as well as actions, and have therefore a plural number, as dwelling, living; or have an abfolute and abitract fignification, as colouring, painting, learning.

The participles are likewife omitted, unlefs, by fignifying rather qualities than action, they take the nature of adjectives; as a tbinking man, a man of prudence ; a pacing horfe, a horfe that can pace: thefe I have ventured to call participial adjectives. But neither are thefe always inferted, becaufe they are commonly to be underftood, without any danger of miftake, by confulting the verb.

Obfolete words are admitted, when they are found in authours not obfolete, or when they have any force or beauty that may deferve revival.

As compofition is one of the chief characterifticks of a language, I have endeavoured to make fome reparation for the univerfal negligence of my predeceffors, by inferting great numbers of compounded words, as may be found under after, fore, nezw, night, fair, and many more. Thefe, numerous as they are, might be multiplied, but that ufe and curiofity are here fatisfied, and the frame of our language and modes of our combination amply difcovered.

Of fome forms of compofition, fuch as that by which $r e$ is prefixed to note repetition, and $u n$ to fignify contrariety or privation, all the examples cannot be accumulated, becaufe the ufe of thefe particles, if not wholly arbitrary, is fo little limited, that they are hourly affixed to new words as occafion requires, or is imagined to require them.

There is another kind of compofition more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other, from which arifes to foreigners the greateft difficulty. We modify the fignification of many verbs by a particle fubjoined; as to come off, to efcape by a fetch; to fall on, to attack; to fall off, to apoftatize; to break off, to ftop abruptly; to bear out, to juftify; to fall in, to comply; to give over, to ceafe; to fet off, to embellifh; to fet in, to begin a continual tenour; to fet out, to begin a courfe or journey; to take off; to copy; with innumerable expreffions of the fame kind, of which fome appear wildly irregular, being fo far diftant from the fenfe of the fimple words, that no fagacity will be able to trace the fteps by which they arrived at the prefent ufe. Thefe I have noted with great care ; and though I canot flatter myfelf that the collection is complete, I believe I have fo far affifted the ftudents of our language, that this kind of phrafeology will be no longer infuperable; and the combinations of verbs and particles, by chance omitted, will be eafily explained by comparifon with thofe that may be found.

Many words yet ftand fupported only by the name of Bailey, Ainfiworth, Pbilips, or the contracted DiEt. for Dictionaries fubjoined: of thefe I am not always certain that they are read in any book but the works of lexicographers. Of fuch I have omitted many, becaufe I had never read them; and many I have inferted, becaufe they may perhaps exift, though they have efcaped my notice: they are, however, however, to be yet confidered as refting only upon the credit of former dictionaries. Others, which I confidered as ufeful, or know to be proper, though I could not at prefent fupport them by authorities, I have fuffered to ftand upon my own atteftation, claiming the fame privilege with my predeceffors of being fometimes credited without proof:

The words, thus felected and difpofed, are grammatically confidered: they are referred to the diffetent parts of fpeech; traced, when they are irregularly inflected, through their various terminations; and illuftrated by obfervations, not indeed of great or ftriking importance, feparately confidered, but neceffary to the elucidation of our language, and hitherto neglected or forgotten by Englifh grammarians.

That part of my work on which I expect malignity moft frequently to faften, is the Explanation; in which I cannot hope to. fatisfy thofe, who are perhaps not inclined to be pleafed, fince I have not always been able to fatisfy myfelf. To interpret a language by itfelf is very difficult; many words cannot be explained by fynonimes, becaufe the idea fignified by them has not more than one appellation; nor by paraphrafe, becaufe fimple ideas cannot be defcribed. When the nature of things is unknown, or the notion unfettled and indeffinite, and various in various minds, the words by which fuch notions are conveyed, or fuch things denoted, will be ambiguous and perplexed. And fuch is the fate of haplefs lexicography, that not only darknefs, but light, impedes and diftreffes it ; things may be not only too little, but too much known, to be happily illuftrated. To explain, requirẹs the ufe of terms lefs abffrufe than that which is to be explained, and fuch terms cantiot always be found; for as nothing can be proved obut by fuppofing fomething intuitively known, and evident without proof, fo nothing can be defined but by the ufe of words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the fenfe is too fubtle and evanefcent to be fixed in a paraphrafe; fuch are all thofe which are by the grammarians termed expletives, and, in dead languages, are fuffered to pafs for empty founds, of no other ufe than to fill a verfe, or to modulate a period, but which are eafily perceived in living tongues to have power and emphafis, though it be fometimes fuch as no other form of expreffion can convey.

My labour has likewife been much increafed by a clafs of verbs too frequent in the Englifblanguage, of which the fignification is fo loofe and general, the ufe fo vague and indeterminate, and the fenfes detorted fo widely from the firft idea, that it is hard to trace them through the maze of variation, to catch them on the brink of utter inanity, to circumfcribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of diftinct and fettled meaning : fuch are bear, break, come, caft, full, get, give, do, put, fet, go, run, make, take, turn, throw. If of thefe the whole power is not accurately delivered, it muft be remembered, that while our language is yet living, and variable by the caprice of every one that fpeaks it, thefe words are hourly fhifting their relations, and can no more be afcertained in a dictionary, than a grove, in the agitation of a ftorm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are among all nations applied with fo great latitude, that they are not eafily reducible under any regular fcheme of explication: this difficulty is not lefs, nor perhaps greater, in Englifh, than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with fuccefs; fuch at leaft as can be expected in a tafk, which no man, however learned or fagacious, has yet been able to perform.

- Some words there are which I cannot explain, becaufe I do not underftand them ; there might have, been omitted very often with little inconvenience, but I would not fo far indulge my vanity as to decline this confeffion: for when Tully owns himfelf ignorant whether leffus, in the twelve tables, means a funeral fong, or mourning garment; and Arifotle doubts whether ovjgevs, in the Iliad, fignifies a mule, or muleteer, I may freely, without fhame, leave fome obfcurities to happier induftry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation, and the word explained, fould be always reciprocal; this I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are feldom exactly fynonimous; a new term was not introduced, but becaufe the former was thought inadequate: names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was then neceffary to ufe the proximate word, for the deficiency of fingle terms can very feldom be fupplied by circumlocution; nor is the inconvenience great of fuch mutilated interpretations, becaufe the fenfe may eafily be collected entire from the examples.

In every word of extenfive ufe, it was requifite to mark the progrefs of its meaning, and fhow by what gradations of intermediate fenfe it has paffed from its primitive to its remote and accidental fignification; fo that every foregoing explanation fhould tend to that which follows, and the feries be regularly concatenated from the firft notion to the laft.

This is fpecious, but not always practicable; kindred fenfes may be fo interwoven, that the perplexity cannot be difentangled, nor any reafon be affigned why one fhould be ranged before the other. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications, how can a confecutive feries be formed of fenfes in their nature collateral? The fhades of meaning fometimes pafs imperceptibly into each other; fo that though on one fide they apparently differ, yet it is impoffible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the fame race, though not exactly alike, are fometimes fo little different, that no words can exprefs the diffimilitude, though the mind eafily perceives it, when they are exhibited together ; and fometimes there is fuch a confufion of acceptations, that difcernment is wearied, and diftinction puzzzled, and perfeverance herfulf hurries to an end, by crouding together what fhe cannot fcparate.

There complaints of difficulty will, by thofe that have never confidered words beyond their popular ufe, be thought only the jargoin of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his, fudies by involution and obfcurity. But every art is obfcure to thofe that have not learned it : this uncertainty of terms, and commixture of ideas, is well known to thofe who have joined philofophy with grammar; and if 1 have not expreffed thein very clearly, it muft be remembered that I am fpeaking of that which words are infufficient to explain.
The original fenfe of words is often driven out of ufe by their metaphorical acceptations, yet muft be inferted for the fake of a regular origination. Thus I know not whether ardour is ufed for material beat, or whether flagrant, in Eniglifs, ever fignifies the fame with burning; yet fuch are the primitive ideas of thefe words, which are therefore fet firt, though without exanples, that the figurative fenfes may be commodioufly deduced.

- Such is the exuberance of fignification which many words have obtaincd, that it was fcarcely pomble. to collect: all their fenfes; fometimes the meaning of derivatives muft be fought in the noother term, and fometimes deficient explanations of the primitive may be fupplied in the train of derivation. In any cafe of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the fäme race; for fome words are flightly paffed over to avoid repetition, fome admitted cafier and clearer explanation than others, and all will be better underftood, as they are confidered in greater varicty of ftructures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the fame fkill, or the fame happinefs: things equally eafy in themfelves, are not all equally eafy to any fringle mind. Every writer of a long work commits errours, where there appears. neither ambiguity to miflead, nor obfcurity to confound him; and in a fearch like this, many felicities of expreffion will be cafually uverlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars. will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.

But many feeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking, than the negligence of the performer. Thus' fome explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as bind, the female of the Alag; fag, the male of the bind: fometimes eafier words are changed into harder, as birial into fepulture or internent, drier into deficcative, diynefs into ficcity or aridity, fit into paroxyym; for the cafieft word, whatever it be, can never be trannlated into one more eafy. But eafinefs and difficility are merely relative, and if the prefent prevalenice of our language fhould invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be affifted by thofe words which now feem only to increafe or produce obfcurity. For this reafon I have endeavoured frequently to join' a Teutonick and Roman interpretation, as to CHEER to gladden, or exbilarate, that every learner of Englijh may be affifed by his own tongue.

The folution of all difficulties, and the fupply of all defects, muft be fought in the examples, fubjoined to the various fenfes of each word, and ranged according to the time of their authours.

When firft I collected thefe authorities, I wass defirous that every quotation fhould be ufeful to fome other end than the illuftration of a word ; I therefore extracted from philofophers principles of fcience; from hiftorians remarkable facts; from chymifts complete proceffes; from divines ftriking exhortations; and from poets beautiful defriptions. Such is defign; while it is yet at a diftance from execution. When the time called upon me to range this accumulation of elegance and wifdom into an alphabetical feries, I foon difcovered that the bulk of my volumes would fright away the ftudent, and was forced to depart from my fcheme of including all that was pleafing or ufeful in Englifh literature, and reduce my tranfcripts very often to clufters of words, in which fcarcely any meaning is retained; thus to the wearinefs of copying, I was condemned to add the vexation of expunging. Some paffages I have yet fpared, which may relieve the labour of verbal fearches, and interfperfe with verdure and flowers the dufty defarts of barren philology.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be confidered as conveying the fentiments or doctrine of their authours; the word for the fake of which they are inferted, with all its appendant claufes, has been carefully preferved; but it may fometimes happen, by hafty detruncation, that the general tendency of the fentence may be changed : the divine may defert his tenets, or the philofopher his fyftem.

Some of the examples have been taken from writers who were never mentioned as mafters of elegance or models of file; but words muft be fought where they are ufed; and in what pages, eminent for purity, can terms of manufacture or agriculture be found? Many quotations ferve no other purpofe, than that of proving the bare exiftence of words, and are therefore felected with lefs fcrupuloufnefs than thofe which are to teach their fructures and relations:

My purpofe was to admit no teftimony of living authours, that I might not be mifled by partiality, and that none of my cotemporarics might have reafon to complain ; nor have I departed from this refolution, but when fome performance of uncommon excellence excited my veneration, when my memory fupplied me, from late books, with an example that was wanting, or when my heart, in the tendernefs of friendfhip, folicited admiffion for a favourite name.

P R E F A C E.

So far have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have fudioufly cudeavoured to collect examples and authoritics from the writers before the reftoration, whofe works I regard as the reells of Englij/b undefied, as the pure fources of genuine diction. Our language, for almoft a century, has, by the concurrence of many caufes, been gradualiy departing from its original Teutonick character, and deviating towards a Gallick frructure and phrafeology, from which it ought to be our endeavour to recal it, by making our ancient volumes the ground-work of file, admitting among the additions of later times, only fuch as may fupply real deficiencies, fuch as are readily adopted by the genius of our tongue, and incorporate eafily with our native idioms.

But as evcry language has a time of rudenefs antecedent to perfection, as weld as of falfe refinement and declenfion, I have been cautious left my zeal for antiquity might drive me into times too remote, and croud my book with words now no longer underftood. I have fixed Sidney's work for the boundary, beyond which I make few excurfions. From the authours which rofe in the time of Elizabeth, a fpeech might be formed adequate to all the purpofes of ufe and elegance. If the language of theology were extracted from Hooker and the tranflation of the Bible; the terms of natural knowledge fron Bacon; the phrafes of policy, war, and navigation from Raleigh; the dialect of poetry and fiction from Spenfer and Sidney; and the diction of common life from Sbakefpeare, few ideas would be loft to mankind, for want of Englijh words, in which they might be expreffed.
It is not fufficient that a word is found, unlefs it be fo combined as that its meaning is apparently determined by the tract and tenour of the fentence; fuch paflages I have therefore chofen, and when it happened that any authour gave a definition of a term, or fuch an explanation as is equivalent to a definition, I have placed his authority as a fupplement to my own, without regard to the chronological order, that is otherwife obferved.

Some words, indeed, ftand unfupported by any authority, but they are commonly derivative nouns or adverbs, formed from their primitives by regular and conftant analogy, or names of things feldom occurring in books, or words of which I have reafon to doubt the exiftence.

There is more danger of cenfure from the multiplicity than paucity of examples; authorities will fometimes feem to have been accumulated without neceffity or ufe, and perhaps fome will be found, which might, without lofs, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not haftily to be charged with fuperfluities: thofe quotations which to carelefs or unfkilful perufers appear only to repeat the fame fenfe, will often exhibit, to a more accurate examiner, diverfities of fignification, or, at leaft, afford different fhades of the fame meaning: one will fhew the word applied to perfons, another to things; one will exprefs an ill, another a good, and a third a neutral fenfe; one will prove the expreffion genuine from an ancient authour; another will hhew it elegant from a modern: a doubtful authority is corroborated by another of more credit; an ambiguous fentence is afcertained by paffage clear and determinate ; the word, how often foever repeated, appears with new affociates and in diffrent combinations, and every quotation contributes fomething to the ftability or enlargement of the language.

When words are ufed equivocally, I receive them in either fenfe; when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptation.

I have fometimés, though rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of fentiments, by fhewing how one authour copied the thoughts and diction of another: fuch quotations are indeed little more than repetitions, which might juftly be cenfured, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual hiftory.

The various fyntactical Atructures occurring in the examples have been carefully noted ; the licence or negligence with which many words have been hitherto ufed, has made our ftile capricious and indeterminate; when the different combinations of the fame word are exhibited together, the preference is readily given to propriety, and I have often endeavoured to direct the choice.

Thus have I laboured to fettle the orthography, difplay the analogy, regulate the ftructures, and afcertain the fignification of Engli/h words, to perform all the parts of a faithful lexicographer: but I have not always executed my own fcheme, or fatisfied my own expectations. The work, whatever proofs of diligence and attention it may exhibit, is yet capable of many improvements : the orthography which I recommend is ftill controvertible, the etymology which I adopt is uncertain, and perhaps frequently erroneous; the explanations are fometimes too much contracted, and fometimes too much diffufed, the fignifications are diftinguifhed rather with fubtilty than fkill, and the attention is harraffed with unneceffary minutenefs.

The examples are too often injudicioufly truncated, and perhaps fometimes, I hope very rarely, alleged in a miftaken fenfe; for in making this collection I trufted more to memory, than, in a ftate of difquiet and embarraffment, memory can contain, and purpofed to fupply at the review what was left incomplete in the firft tranfcription.

Many terms appropriated to particular occupations, though neceffary and fignificant, are undoubtedly omitted; and of the words moft ftudioufly confidered and exemplified, many fenfes have efcaped obfervation.

Yet thefe failures, however frequent, may admit extenuation and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprize is above the ftrength that undertakes it: To reff below his own aim is incident to every one whofe fancy is active, and whofe views are comprehenfive; nor is any man fatisfied with himfelf becaufe he has done much, but becaufe he can conceive little. When firft I engaged in this work, I refolved to leave neither words nor things unexamined, and pleafed myrelf with a profpect of the hours which I fhould revel away in feafts of literature, the obifure receffes of horthern learning, which I fhould enter and ranfack, the treafures, with which I expected every fearch into thofe neglected mines to reward my labour, and the triumph with which I hoould difplay my acquiftions to mankind. When I had thus enquired into the original of words, I refolved to fhow likewife my attention to things; to picrce deep into every fcience, to enquire the nature of every fubftance of which I inferted the name, to linnit every idea by a definition frrictly logical, and exthibit every production of art or nature in an accurate defrription, that my book might be in place of all other dietionaries whether appellative or technical. But thefe were the dreams of a poet doomed at laft to wake a lexicographer. I foon found that it is too late to look for inffruments, when the work cills for execition, and that whatever abilities I had brought to my tafk, with thofe I muft finally perform it. To deliberate whenever I doubted, to enquire whenever I was ignorant, would have protracted the undertaking without end; and, perhaps, without much improvement; for I did not find by my firt experiments, that what I had not of my own was eafily to be obtained: I faw that one enquiry outly gave occafion to another, that book referred to book, that to fearch was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed; and that thus to perfue perfection; was, like the firft inhabitants of Arcidia, to chace the fun, which, when they had reached the hill where he feemed to reft, was ftill beheld at the fame diftance from them.

PREFA C E.

I then contracted my defign, determining to confide in myfelf, and no longer to folicit auxiliaries, which produced more incumbrance than affiffance: by this $\bar{I}$ obtained at leaft one advantage, that I fet limits to my work, which would in time be finifhed, though not completed.

Defpondency has never fo far prevailed as to deprefs me to negligence; fome faults will at laft appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and perfevering activity. The nice and fubtle ramifications of meaning were not eafily avoided by a mind intent upon accuracy, and convinced of the neceffity of difentangling combinations, and feparating fimilitudes. Many of the diftinctions which to common readers appear urelefs and idle, will be found real and important by men verfed in the fchool philofophy, without which no dictionary ever fhall be accurately compiled, or fkilfully examined.

Some fenfes however there are, which, though not the fame, are yet fo nearly allied, that they are often confounded. Moft men think indiftinctly, and therefore cannot fpeak with exactnefs; and confequently fome examples might be indifferently put to either fignification : this uncertainty is not to be imputed to me, who do not form, but regifter the language; who do not teach men how they fhould think, but relate how they have hitherto expreffed their thoughts.

The imperfect fenfe of fome examples I lamented, but could not remedy, and hope they will be compenfated by innumerable paffages felected with propriety, and preferved with exactnefs; fome fhining with fparks of imagination, and fome replete with treafures of wifdom.

3u. The orthography and etymology, though imperfect, are not imperfect for want of care, but becaufe care will not always be fuccefsful, and recollection or information come too late for ufe.

That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, muft be frankly acknowledged; but for this defect I may boldly allege that it was unavoidable: I could not vifit caverns to learn the miner's language, nor take a voyage to perfect my fkill iin the dialect of navigation, nor vifit the warehoufes of merchants, and fhops of artificers, to gain the names of wares, tools and operations, of which no mention is found in books ; what favourable accident, or eafy enquiry brought within my reach, has not been neglected ; but it had been a hopelefs labour to glean up words, by courting living information, and contefting with the fullennefs of one, and the roughnefs of another.

To furnifh the academicians della Crufca with words of this kind, a feries of comedies called la Fiera, or the Fair, was profeffedly written by Buonaroti; but I had no fuch affiftant, and therefore was content to want what they muft have wanted likewife, had they not luckily been fo fupplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be lamented as omiffions. Of the taborious and mercantile part of the people, the diction is in a great meafure cafual and mutable; many of their terms are formed for fome temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a fate of increafe or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore mult be fuffered to perifh with other things unworthy of prefervation.

Care will fometimes betray to the appearance of negligence. He that is catching opportunities which feldom occur; will fuffer thofe to pafs by unreguarded, which he expects hourly to return; he that is fearching for rare and remote things, will heglect thofe that are obvious and familiar : thus many of the moft common and curfory words have been inferted with little illuftration, becaufe in gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy thofe which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection, I found the word Se a unexemplificd.

P R E F A C E.

Thus it happens, that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things eafy from confidence ; the mind, afraid of greatnefs, and difdainful of littiencts, hattily withdraws herfelf from painful fearches, and paffes with fornful rapidity over tafles not adequate to her powers, fometimes too fecure for cation, and again too anxious for vigorous effort; fometimes idle in a plain path, and fometimes diftracted in labyrinth's, and diffipated by different intentions.

1 A large work is difficult becaufe it is large, even though all its parts might fingly be performed with facility; where there are many things to be done, each muft be allowed its fhare of time and labour, in the proportion only which it bears to the whole; nor can it be expected, that the fones which form the dome of'a temple, fhould be fquared and polifhed like the diamond of a ring.

Of the ctent of this work, for which, having laboured it with fo much application, I cannot but bave fome degree of parental fondnefs, it is natural to form conjectures. Thofe who have been perfuaded to think well of my defign, require that it fhould fix our language, and put a fop to thofe alterations which time and chance have hitherto been fuffered to make in it without oppofition. With this confequence I will confefs that I flatered myfelf for a while; but now begin to fear that I have indulged expectation which neither reafon nor experience can juntify. When we fee men grow old and die at a certain time one after another, from century to century, we laugh at the elixir that promifes to prolong life to a thoufand years; and with equal juftice may the lexicographer be derided, who heing able to produce no example of a nation that has preferved their words and plirafes from mutability, fhall imagine that his dictionary can embalm his language, and fecure it from corruption and decay, that it is in his power to change fublunary nature, or clear the world at once from folly, vanity, and affectation.

With this hope, however, academies have been infituted, to guard the avenues of their languages, to retain fugitives, and repulfe intruders; but their vigilance and activity have hitherto been vaiti; founds are too volatile and fubtile for legal reftraints; to enchain fyllables, and to lafh the wind, are equally the undertakings of pride, unwilling to meafure its defires by its frength. The French language Thas wifbly changed under the infpection of the academy; the ftile of Amelo's tranflation of father Poul is obferved by Le Courrayer to be run pen' pafiè; and no İcilien will maintain, that the diection of any modern writer is not perceptibly different from that of Boccace, Macbiavel, or Caro.
yed Total and fudden transformations of a language feldom happen ; conquefts and migrations are now very rare : but there are other caufes of change, which, though flow in their operation, and invifible in their progrefs, are perhaps as much fuperiour to human refiftance, as the revolutions of the $\mathfrak{f k y}$, or iintuincicence of the tide. Commerce, however neceflary, however lucrative, as it depraves the manners, corrupts the language ; they that have frequent intercourfe with ftrangers, to whom they endeavour to accommodate themelves, muft in time learn a mingled dialect, like the jargon which ferves the traffickers on the Mediterranean and Indian coafts. This will not always be confined to the exchange, the warehoure, or the port, but will be communicated by degrees to other ranks of the people, and be at lait incorporated with the current fpeech.

There are likewwife internal caufes equally forcible. The language mof likely to continue long without alteration, would be that of a nation raired a little, and but a little, above barbarity, recluded from frangers, and totally employed in procuring the conveniencies of life; either without books, or, like fome of the Mabometan countries, with very tew: men thus bufied and unlearned, having only fuch words as common ufe requires, would perhaps long continue to expreers the fame notions by the fame figns. But no fuch conitancy can be expected in a people polifhed by arts, and claffed by fubordination, where one part of the community is fuftained and accommodated by the labour of the other. Tho'e who have much leifure to think, will always be enlarging the fock of ideas, and every increare of knowledge, whether real or fancied, will produce new words, or combinations of words. When the mind is unchained from neceffity, it will range after convenience; when it is left at large in the fields of fpeculation, it will fhift opinions; as any cuftom is difufed, the words that expreffed it, muft perifh with it; as any opinion grows popular, it will innovate fpeech in the fame proportion as it alters practice.
As by the cultivation of various fiences, a language is amplified, it will be more furnifhed with words deflected from their original fenfe; the geometrician will talk of a courtier's zenith, or the excentrick virtue of a wild hero, and the phyfician of fanguine expectations and philegmatick delays. Copioufnefs of fpeech will give opportunities to capricious choice, by which fome words will be preterred, and others degraded; vicifitudes of fafhion will enforce the ufe of new, or extend the fig1ification of known terms. The tropes of poetry will make hourly encroachments, and the metaphorical will become the current fenfe : pronunciation will be varied by levity or ignorance, and the pen muft at length comply with the tongue; illiterate writers will at one time or other, by publick infatuation, rife into renown, who, not knowing the original import of words, will ure them with colloquial licentioufnefs, confound diftinction, and forget propricty. As politeners increafes, fome exprefficns will be confidered as too grofs and vulgar for the delicate, others as too formal and ceremonious for the gay and airy; new phrafes are therefore adopted, which muft, for the fame reafons, be in time difmiffed. Sruift, in his petty treatife on the Englijh language, allows that new words muft formetimes be introduced, but propofes that none fhould be fuffered to become obfolete. But what makes a word obfolete, more than general agreement to forbsear it? and how fhall it be continued, when it conveys an offenfive idea, or recalled agaiin into the moutthe of mankind, when it ha; ol ce by difufe become unfamiliar, and by unfamiliarity unpleafing.

P R E F A C E.

There is another caufe of alteration more prevalent than any other, which yet in the prefent ftate of the world cannot be obviated. A mixture of two languages will produce a third dintinet from both, and they will always be mixed, where the chief part of education, and the mont confpicuous accomplifhment, is fkill in ancient or in foreign tongues. He that has long cultivated anotber language, will find its words and combinations croud upon his memory; and hafte and negligence, refinement and affectation, will obtrude borrowed terms and exotick expreffions.

The great peft of fpeech is frequency of tranflation. No book was ever turned from one language into another, without imparting fomething of its native idiom; this is the moft mifchievous and comprehenfive innovation; fingle words may enter by thoufands, and the fabrick of the tongue continue the fame, but new phrafeology changes much at once; it alters not the fingle ftones of the building, but the order of the columns. If an academy fhould be eftablifhed for the cultivation of our flile, which I, who can never wifh to fee dependance multiplied, hope the fpirit of Englifb liberty will hinder or deftroy, let them, inftead of compiling grammars and dictionaries, endeavour, with all their influence, to ftop the licence of tranflatours, whofe idlenefs and ignorance, if it be fuffered to proceed, will reduce us to babble a dialect of France.

If the changes that we fear be thus irrefiftible, what remains but to acquiefce with filence, as in the other infurmountable diffreffes of humanity? it remains that we retard what we cannot repel, that we palliate what we cannot cure. Life may be lengthened by care, though death cannot be ultimately defeated: tongues, like governments, have a natural tendency to degeneration; we have long preferved our conftitution, let us make fome ftruggles for our language.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted this book, the labour of years, to the honour of my country, that we may no longer yield the palm of philology to the nations of the continent. The chief glory of every people arifes from its authours: whether I fhall add any thing by my own writings to the reputation of Einglifh literature, munt be left to time: much of my life has been loft under the preffures of difeafe; much has been trifled away; and much has always been fpent in provifion for the day that was paffing over me; but I fhall not think my employment ufelefs or ignoble, if by my affiftance foreign nations, and diftant ages, gain acceis to the propagators of knowledge, and underftand the teachers of truth; if my labours afford light to the repofitories of fcience, and add celebrity to Bacon, to Hooker, to Milton, and to Boyle.

When I am animated by this wihh, I look with pleafure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the fpirit of a man that has endeavoured well. That it will immediately become popular I have not promifed to myfelf: a few wild blunders, and rifible abfurdities, from which no work of fuch multiplicity was ever free, may for a time furnifh folly with laughter, and harden ignorance in contempt; but ufeful diligence will at laft prevail, and there never can be wanting fome who diftinguifh defert ; who will confider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, fince while it is haftening to publication, fome words are budding, and fome falling away; that a whole life cannot be fpent upon fyntax and etymology, and that even a whole life would not be fufficient; that he, whofe defign includes whatever language can exprefs, muft often fpeak of what he does not underfand; that a writer will fometimes be hurried by eagernefs to the end, and fometimes faint with wearinefs under a tafk, which Scaliger compares to the labours of the anvil and the mine; that what is obvious is not always known, and what is known is not always prefent ; that fudden fits of inadvertency will furprize vigilance, flight avocations will feduce attention, and cafual eclipfes of the mind will darken learning; and that the writer fhall often in vain trace his memory at the moment of need, for that which yefterday he knew with intuitive readinefs, and which will come uncalled into his thoughts to-morow.

In this work, when it fhall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewife is performed; and though no book was ever fpared out of tendernefs to the authour, and the world is little folicitous to know whence proceeded the faults of that which it condemns; yet it may gratify curiofity to inform it, that the Englifs Dictionary was written with little affifance of the learned, and without any patronage of the great ; not in the foft obfcurities of retirement, or under the flelter of academick bowers, but amidft inconvenience and diftraction, in ficknefs and in forrow: and it may reprefs the triumph of malignant criticifm to obferve, that if our language is not here fully difplayed, I have only failed in an atterrpt which no human powers have hitherto completed. If the lexicons of ancient tongues, now immutably fixed, and comprifed in a few volumes, be yet, after the toil of fucceffive ages, inadequate and delufive; if the aggregatedknowledge, and co-operating diligence of the Italian academicians, did not fecure them from the cenfure of Beni; if the embodied criticks of France, when fifty years had been fpent upon their work, were obliged to change its oeconomy, and give their fecond edition another form, I may furely be contented without the praife of perfection, which, if I could obtain, in this gloom of folitude, what would it avail me? I have protracted my work till moft of thoic whom I wifhed to pleafe, have funk into the grave, and fuccefs and mifcarriage are cmpty founds: I therefore difinifs it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from cenfure or from praife.

THOUGH the Britains or Welfb were the firft pofferfors of this inand，whofe names are re－ corded，and are therefore in civil hiftory al． ways confidered as the predeceffors of the prefent inha－ bitants；yet the deduction of the Englifl language， from the earlieft times of which we have any know－ ledge to its prefent ftate，requires no mention of them ： for we have fo few words，which can，with any proba－ bility，be refered to Britifh roots，that we juftly regard the Saxons and $W$ elf，as nations totally diftinct．It has been conjectured，that when the Saxons feized this country，they fuffered the Britains to live among them in a ftate of vaffalage，employed in the culture of the ground，and other laborious and ignoble fervices．But it is fcarcely poffible，that a nation，however depreffed， flould have been mixed in confiderable numbers with the Saxons without fome communication of their tongue， and therefore it may，with great reafon，be imagined， that thofe，who were not theltered in the mountains， perifhed by the fword．

The whole fabrick and fcheme of the Engliff lan－ guage is Gotbick or Teutonick：it is a dialect of that tongue，which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe，except thofe where the Sclavonian is fpoken． Of there languages Dr．Hickes has thus exhibited the genealogy．

Of the Gotbick，the only monument remaining is a copy of the golipels fomewhat mutilated，which，from the filver with which the characters are adorned，is called the fiver book．It is now preferved at $U_{p} f a l$ ，and has been twice publifhed．Whether the diction of this venerable manufcript be purely Gotbick，has been doubted；it leems however to exhibit the moft ancient dialect now to be found of the Teutonick race，and the Saxon，which is the original of the prefent Englifh，was either derived from it，or buth defcended from fome common parent．
What was the form of the Soxon language，when， about the year 450，they firit entred Britain，cannot now be known．They feem to have been a people wishout learning，and very probably without an alpha－ bet；their fpeech therefore，having been always curfory and extemporancous，mutt have been artlefs and uncon－ nected，without any modes of eranfition or involution of claufes；which abruptnefs and inconnection may be ob－ ferved even in their later writings．This barbarity may be fuppofed to have continued during their wars with the Britains，which for a time left them no leifure for fofter ftudies；nor is there any reafon for fuppofing it abated，till the year 570，when Augufine came from Rome to convert them to Chriftianity．The Chriftian religion always implies or produces a certain degree of civility and learning；they then became by degrees ac－ quainted with the Roman language，and fo gained，from time to time，fome knowledge and elegance，till in three centuries they had formed a language capable of＇ex－ preffing all the fentiments of a civilifed people，as appears by king Alfred＇s paraphrafe or imitation of Boetbius，and his inort preface，which I have felected as the firft fpecimen of ancient Englijb．

This may perhaps be confidered as a fpecimen of the Sexon in its higheft ftate of purity，for here are fcarcely any words borrowed from the Roman dialects．
yet they have often this convenience，that the fame book，being tranlated in different ages，affords oppor－ tunity of marking the gradations of change，and bring－ ing one age into comparifon with another．For this purpofe I have placed the Saxon verfion and that of Wickliffe，written about the year 1380 ，in oppofite co－ lumns；becaufe the convenience of eafy collation feems greater than that of regular chronology．

LUK，Chap．I．

IN the dayes of Eroude kyng of Judee ther was a preft Zacarye by name：of the fort of Abia，and his wyf was of the doughtris of Aaron：and hir name was Elizabeth．
2 An bothe weren jufte bifore God：goynge in alle the maundementis and juftifyingis of the Lord with－ outen playnt．
3 And thei hadden no child，for Elizabeth was bareyn and bothe weren of greet age in her dayes．

4 And it bifel that whanne Zacarye fchould do the office of prefthod in the ordir of his courfe to fore God．
5 Aftir the cuftom of the prefthod，he wente forth by lot and entride into the temple to encenfen．

6 And at the multitude of the puple was without forth and preyede in the our of encenfying．
7 And an aungel of the Lord apperide to him ：and flood on the right ha $f$ of the auter of encenfe．
8 And Zacarye feynge was afrayed ：and drede fel upon him．

9 And the aungel fayde to him，Zacarye drede thou not：for thy preier is herd，and Elizabeth thi wif fchal bere to thee a fone ：and his name fchal be clepid Jon．

10 And joye and gladyng fchal be to thee：and manye fchulen have joye in his natyvyte．

I i For he fchal be great bifore the Lord：and he fchal not drinke wyn ne fydyr，and he fchal be fulfild with the holy goft yit of his modir wombe．

12 And he fchal converte manye of the children of Ifrael to her Lord God．
13 And he fchal go bifore in the fpiryte and vertu of Helye：and he fchal turne the hertis of the faciris to the fonis，and men out of beleeve ：to the prudence of jutt men，to make redy a perfyt puple to the Lord．

ENGLISH LANGUAGE．

Of the saion poetry fome fpecimen is neceffary， though our ignorance of the laws of their metre and the quantities of their fyilables，which it would be very difficult，perhaps impoffible，to recover，excludes us from that plealure which the old bards undoubtedly gave to their contemporaries．

The firft poetry of the Saxons was without rhyme， and confequetitly muft have depended upon the quan－ tity of their fyllables；but they began in time to imi－ tate their neighbours，and clofe their verfes with cor－ refpondent founds．

The two pafiages，which I have felected，contain apparently the rudiments of our prefent lyrick meafures， and the writers may be juftly confidered as the genuine ancefors of the Englif poets．

About the year 1150 ，the Saxon began to take a form in which the beginning of the prefent Englifh may be plainly difcovered；this change feems not to have been the effect of the Norman conqueft，for very few French words are found to have been introduced in the firft hun－ dred years after it；the language muft therefore have been altered by caufes like thofe which，notwithltanding the care of writers and focieties inftituted to obviate them， are even now daily making innovations in every living language．I have exhibited a fpecimen of the language of this age from the year 1135 to 1140 of the Saxon chronicle，of which the latter part was apparently written near the time to which it relates．

Nearly about this time, the following pieces of poetry feem to have been written, of which I have inferted only fhort fragments ; the firft is a rude attempt at the prefent meafure of eight fyllables, and the fecond is a natural introduction to Robert of Gloucefter, being compoled in the fame meafure, which, however rude and barbarous it may feem, taught the way to the Alexandrines of the French poetry.

In thefe fragments, the aduiteration of the Saxon tongue, by a mixture of the Norman, becomes apparent; yet it is not fo much changed by the admixture of new words, which might be imputed to commerce with the continent, as by changes of its own forms and terminations ; for which no reafon can be given

Hitherto the language ufed in this inand, however different in fucceffive time, may be called Saxon; nor can it be expected, from the nature of things gradually changing, that any time can be affigned, when the Saxon may be faid to ceafe, and the Englifh to commence. Robert of Gloucefter however, who is placed by the criticks in the thirteenth century, feems to have ufed a kind of intermediate diction, neither Saxon nor Englifl; in his work therefore we fee the tranfition exhibited, and, as he is the firft of our writers in rhyme, of whom any large work remains, a more extenfive quotation is extracted. He writes apparently in the fame meafure with the foregoing authour of St. Margarite, which polifhed into greater exactnefs, appeared to our anceftors fo fuitable to the genius of the Englifh language, that it was continued in ufe almoft to the middle of the feventeenth century.

Sir fobn Mandeville wrote, as he himfelf informs us, in the fourteenth century, and his work, which comprifing a relation of many different particulars, confequently required the ufe of many words and phrafes, may be properly fpecified in this place. Of the following quotations, I have chofen the firft, becaufe it fhows, in fome meafure, the ftate of Europenn fcience as well as of the Engli/b tongue; and the fecond, becaufe it is valuable for the force of thought and beauty of expreffion.

IN that lond, ne in many othere bezonde that, no man may fee the fterre tranfmontane, that is clept the fterre of the fee, that is unmevable, and that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode fterre. But men feen another fterre, the contrarie to him, that is toward the Southe, that is clept Antartyk. And right as the fchip men taken here avys here, and governe hem be the lode fterre, right fo don fchip men bezonde the parties, be the fterre of the Southe, the which ferre apperethe not to us. And this fterre, that is toward the Northe, that wee clepen the lode fterre, ne apperethe not to hem. For whiche caufe, men may wel perceyve, that the lond and the fee ben of rownde fchapp and forme. For the partie of the firmament fchewethe in o contree, that fchewethe not in another contree. And men may well preven be experience and fotyle compaffement of wytt, that zif a man fond paffages be fchippes, that wolde go to ferchen the world, men myghte go be fchippe alle aboute the world, and aboven and benethen. The whiche thing I prove thus, aftre that I have feyn. For I have been toward the parties of Braban, and beholden the Aftrolabre, that the fterre that is clept the transmontayne, is 53 degrees highe. And more forthere in Almayne and Bewme, it hathe 58 degrees. And more forthe toward the parties feptemtrioneles, it is 62 degrees of heghte, and certyn mynutes. For I my felf have mefured it by the Allrolabre. Now fchulle ze knowe, that azen the Tranfmontayne, is the tother fterre, that is clept Antartyke; as I have feyd before. And tho 2 fterres ne meeven nevere. And be hem turnethe alle the firmament, righte as dothe a wheel, that turnethe be his axille tree : fo that tho ferres beren the firmament in 2 egalle parties; fo that it hathe als mochel aboven, as it hathe benethen. Aftre this, I have gon toward the parties meridionales, that is toward the Southe: and I have founden, that in Lybye, men feen firt the fterre Antartyk. And fo fer I have gon more in tho contrees, that I have founde that fterre more highe; fo that toward the highe Lybye, it is 18 degrees of heghte, and certeyn minutes (of the whiche, 60 minutes maken a degrec) aftre goynge be fee and be londe, toward this contree, of that I have fpoke, and to other yles and londes bezonde that contree, I have founden the fterre Antartyls of 33 degrees of heghte, and mo mynutes. And, zifi I hadde had companye and fchippynge, for to go more bezonde, I trowe wel in certyn, that wee fcholde have feen alle the roundneffe of the firmanient alle aboure. For as 1 have feyd zou be forn, the half of the firmament is betwene tho 2 fterres: the whiche halfondelle I have feyn. And of the tother halfondelle, I have feyn toward the Northe, undre the Tranfmointane $\sigma_{2}$ degrees and 10 mynutes; and toward the partie meridionalle, I have feen undre the Antartyk 33 degrecs and 16 mynutes : and thanne the halfondelle of the firmament in alle, ne holdethe not but 180 degrees. And of tho 180 , I have fcen 62 on that o part, and 33 on that ocher part, that ben 95 degrecs, and nyghe the halfonclelle of a degree; and fo. there ne faylethe but that I have feen alle the firmament, $f_{a f} 84$ degrees and the haltondelle of a degree; and that is not the foirthe part of the firmament. For the 4 partie of the roundneffe of the firmament holt 90 degrees: fo there faylethe but 5 degrees and an half, of the fourthe partic. And alfo I have feen the 3 parties of alle the roundneffe of the firmament, and more zit 5 degrees and an half. Be the whiche I feye zou certeynly, that men may envirowne alle the erthe of alle the world, as wel undre as aboven, and turnen azen to his contree, that hadde companye and fchippynge and conduyt: and alle weyes he fcholde fynde men, londes, and yles, als wel as in this contree. For zee wyten welle, that thei that ben toward the Antartyk, thei ben ftreghte, feet azen feet of hem, that dwellen undre the tranfmontane; als wel as wee and thei that dwellyn under us, ben feet azenft feet. For alle the parties of fee and of lond han here appofitees, habitables or trepaffables, and thei of this halt and bezond half. And wytethe wel, that aftre that, that I may parceyve and comprehende, the londes of Preftre John, emperour of Ynde ben undre us. For in goynge from Scotiond or from Englond toward Jerufalem, men gon upward alweys. For oure lond is in the lowe partie of the crthe, toward the Weft : and the lond of Preftre John is the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Eft: and thei han there the day, whan wee have the nyghte, and alfo highe to the contrarie, thei han the nyghte, whan wee han the day:. For the erthe and the fee ben of round forme and fchapp, as I have feyd beforn. And that that men gon upward to o coff, men gon dounward to another coft. Alfo zee have herd me feye, that Jerufalem is in the nyyddes of the world; and that may men preven and fchewen there, be a fpere, that is pighte in to the erthe, upon the hour of mydday, whan it is equenoxium, that fchewethe no fchadwe on no fyde. And that it fcholde ben in the myddes of the world, David wytneffethe it in the Pfautre, where he feythe, Deus operatus eft falute in medio terre. Thanne thei that parten fro the parties of the Weft, for to go toward Jerufalem, als many iorneyes as thei gon upward for to go thidre, in als many iorneyes may thei gon fro Jerufalem, unto other confynyes of the fuperficialtie of the erthe bezonde. And whan men gon bezonde tho iourneyes, towarde Ynde and to the foreyn yles, alle is envyronynge the roundneffe of the erthe and of the fee, undre oure contrees on this half. And therfore hathe it befallen many tymes of o thing, that I have herd cownted, whan I was zong ; how a worthi man departed fometyme from oure contrees, for to go ferche the world. And fo he paffed Ynde, and the yles bezonde Ynde, where ben mo than 5000 yles: and fo longe he wente be fee and lond, and fo enviround the world be many feyfons, that he fond an yle, where he herde fpeke his owne langage, callynge on oxen in the plowghe, fuche wordes as men fpelken to beftes in his owne contree: whereof he hadde gret mervayle: for he knewe not how it myghte be. But I feye, that he had gon fo lorge, be londe and be fee, that he had envyround alle the erthe, that he was comen azen envirounynge, that is to feye, goynge aboute, unto his owne marches, zif he wolde have paffed forthe, til he had founden his contree and his owne knouleche. But he turned azen from thens, from whens he was come fro; and fo he lofte moche peynefulle labour, as him felf feyde, a gret while aftre, that he was comen hom. For it befelle aftre, that he wente in to Norweye; and there tempeft of the fee toke him; and he arryved in an yle; and whan he was in that yle，he knew wel，that it was the yle，where he had herd fpeke his owne langage before，and the cal－ lynge of the oxen at the plowghe：and that was pofible thinge．But how it femethe to fymple men unlerned， that men ne mowe not go undre the erthe，and alfo that men fcholde falle toward the hevene，from undre！But that may not be，upon leffe，than wee mowe falle toward hevene，fro the erthe，where wee ben．For fro what partie of the erthe，that men duelle，outher aboven or benethen，it femethe alweyes to hem that duellen，that thei gon more righte than ony other folk．And righte as it femethe to us，that thei ben undre us，righte fo it femethe hem，that wee ben undre hem．For zif a man myghte falle fro the erthe unto the firmament；be grettere refoun，the erthe and the fee，that ben fo grete and fo hevy，fcholde fallen to the firmament ：but that may not be ：and therfore feithe oure Lord God，Non timeas me，quil fulpendi terrā ex nichilo？And alle be it，that it be poffible thing，that men may fo envyronne alle the world，natheles of a 1000 perfones，on ne myghte not happen to returnen in to his contree．Lor， for the gretneffe of the erthe and of the fee，men may go be a 1000 and a 1000 other weyes，that no man cowde redye him perfitely toward the parties that he cam fro，but zif it were be aventure and happ，or be the grace of God．For the erthe is fulle large and fulle gret，and hole in roundneffe and aboute envyroun，be aboven and be benethen 20425 myles，aftre the opynyoun of the olde wife aftronomeres．And here feyenges I repreve noughte．But aftre my lytylle wyt，it femethe me，favynge here reverence，that it is more，And for to have bettere undertondynge，I feye thus，be ther ymagyned a figure，that hathe a gret compas；and aboute the poynt of the gret compas，that is clept the centre，be made another litille compas：than aftre，be the gret compals devifed be lines in manye parties；and that alle the lynes meeten at the centre；fo that in as many parties，as the grete compas fchal be departed，in als manye，fchalle be departed the litille，that is aboute the centre，alle be it，that the fpaces ben leffe．Now thanne，be the gret compas reprefented for the firma－ ment，and the litille compas reprefented for the erthe． Now thanne the firmament is devyfed，be aftronomeres， in 12 fignes；and every figne is devyfed in 30 degrees， that is 360 degrees，that the firmament hathe aboven． Alfo，be the erthe devyfed in als many parties，as the firmament；and lat every partye anfwere to a degree of the firmament：and wytethe it wel，that aftre the auctoures of aftronomye， 700 furlonges of erthe an－ fweren to a degree of the firmament；and tho ben 87 miles and 4 furlonges．Now be that here multiplyed be 360 fithes；and than thei ben 31500 myles，every of 8 furlonges，aftre myles of oure contree．So moche hathe the erthe in roundneffe，and of heghte enviroun， aftre myn opynyoun and myn，undirftondynge．And zee fchulle undirftonde，that aftre the opynyoun of olde wife philofophres and aftronomeres，oure contree ne Ire－ lond ne Wales ne Scotlond ne Norweye ne the other yles coftynge to hem，ne ben not in the fuperficyalte cownted aboven the erthe；as it fchewethe be alle the bokes of aftronomye．For the fuperficialtee of the erthe is departed in 7 parties，for the 7 planetes：and tho par－ ties ben clept clymates．And oure parties be not of the 7 clymates：for thei ben defcendynge toward the Weft．And alfo thefe yles of Ynde，which beth evene azenft us，beth noght reckned in the climates：for the ben azenft us，that ben in the lowe contree．And the 7 clymates ftrecchen hem envyrounynge the world．

THE HISTORYOF THE

II．And I John Maundevylle knyghte abovefeyd，（alle thoughe I be unworthi）that departed from oure contrees and paffed，the fee，the zeer of grace 1322．that have paffed manye londes and manye yles and contrees，and cerched manye fulle ftraunge places，and have ben in many a fulle gode honourable companye，and at many a faire dede of armes，（alle be it that I dide none myfelf，for myn unable infufifance）now I am，comen hom（nawgree my felf）to refte：for gowtes，artetykes， that－me diftreynen，tho diffynen the ende of my labour， azent my：wille（God knowethe．）And thus takynge folace：in my wrecched refte，recordynge the tyme pafied，

I have fulfilled theife thinges and putte hem wryten in this boke，as it wolde come in to my mynde，the zeer of grace 1356 in the 34 zeer that I departede from oure contrees．Wherfore I preye to alle the rederes and hereres of this boke，zif it plefe hem，that thei wolde preyen to God for me：and I fchalle preye for hem And alle tho that feyn for me a Pater nofter，with an Ave Maria，that God forzeve me my fynnes，I make hem partneres and graunte hem part of alle the gode pilgrymages and of alle the gode dedes，that I have don，zif ony be to his plefance：and noghte only of tho，but of alle that evere I fchalle do unto my lyfes ende．And I befeche Almyghty God，fro whom alle godeneffe and grace comethe fro，that he vouchefaf，of his excellent mercy and habundant grace， to fulle fylle hire foules with infpiracioun of the Holy Goft，in makynge defence of alle hire goftly enemyes here in erthe，to hire falvacioun，bothe of body and foule；to worfchipe and thankynge of him，that is three and on，with outen begynnynge and withouten endynge； that is，with outen qualitee，good，and with outen quan－ tytee，gret；that in alle places is prefent，and alle thinges contenynynge；the whiche that no goodneffe may amende，ne non evelle empeyre ；that in perfeyte try－ nytee lyvethe and regnethe God，be alle worldes and be alle tymes．Amen，Amen，Amen．
The firt of our authours，who can be properly faid to have written Engli／h，was Sir Fobn Gower，who，in his Confeffion of a Lover，calls Cbaucer his difciple，and may therefore be confidered as the father of our poetry．

NOW E for to fpeke of the commune， It is to drede of that fortune，
Which hath befalle in fondrye londes：
But ofte for defaute of bondes
All fodeinly，er it be wift，
A tunne，whan his lie arift
Tobreketh，and renneth all aboute，
Whiche els fhulde nought gone out．
And eke full ofte a littell fkare
Vpon a banke，er men be ware，
Let in the ftreme，whiche with gret peine；
If any man it fhall reftreine．
Where lawe failleth，errour groweth．
He is not wife，who that ne troweth．
For it hath proued oft er this．
And thus the common clamour is
In euery londe，where people dwelleth ：
And eche in his complainte telleth，
How that the worlde is mifwent，
And thervpon his argument
Yeueth euery man in fondrie wife：
But what man wolde him felfe auife
His confcience，and nought mifufe，
He maie＇well at the firft excufe
His god，whiche euer ftant in one，
In him there is defaute none
So muft it ftande vpon vs felue，
Nought only vpon ten ne twelue，
But plenarly vpon vs all．
For man is caufe of that fhall fall．
The hiftory of our language is now brought to the point at which the hiftory of cur poetry is generally fup－ pofed to commence，the time of the illuftrious Geoffry Cbaucer，who may perhaps，with great juftice，be fililed the firft of our verfifyers who wrote poetically．He does not however appear to have deferved all the praife which he has received，or all the cenfure that he has fuffered．Dryden，who miftakes genius for learning， and，in confidence of his abilities，ventured to write of what he had not examined，afcribes to Cbaucer the firf refinement of our numbers，the firtt production of eafy and natural rhymes，and the improvement of our language，by words borrowed from the more polifhed languages of the continent．Skinner contrarily blames him in harfh terms for having vitiated his native fpeech by whole cartlonds of foreign zvords．But he that reads the works of Gorver will find finooth numbers and eafy thymes，of which Cbaucer is fuppofed to have been the inventor，and the French words，whether good or bad， of which Cbaucer is charged as the importer. Some innovations he might probably make, like others, in the infancy of our poetry, which the paucity of books does allow us to difcover with particular exactnefs; but the works of Gower and Lydgate fufficiently evince, that his diction was in general like that of his contemporaries: and fome improvements he undoubtedly made by the various difpofitions of his rhymes, and by the mixture

CHAUCER.

$\mathrm{A}^{\mathrm{L}}$LAS! I wepyng am conftrained to begin verfe of forowfull matter, that whilom in florifhyng ftudie made delitable ditees. For lo! rendyng mufes of Poetes enditen to me thinges to be writen, and drerie teres. At lafte no drede ne might overcame tho mufes, that thei ne werren fellowes, and foloweden my waie, that is to faie, when I was exiled, thei that weren of my youth whilom welfull and grene, comforten now forowfull wierdes of me olde man: for elde is comen unwarely upon me, hatted by the harmes that I have, and forowe hath commaunded his age to be in me. Heres hore aren fhad overtimeliche upon my hed : and the flacke fkinne trembleth of mine empted bodie. Thilke deth of men is welefull, that he ne cometh not in yeres that be fwete, but cometh to wretches often icleped: Alas, alas! with how defe an ere deth cruell turneth awaie fro wretches, and naieth for to clofe wepyng eyen. While fortune unfaithfull favoured me with light godes, that forowfull houre, that is to faie, the deth, had almofte drente myne hedde : but now for fortune cloudie hath chaunged her decevable chere to mewarde, myne unpitous life drawech along ungreable dwellynges. O ye my frendes, what, or whereto avaunted ye me to ben welfull? For he that hath fallin, fode in no fedfaft degre.

IN the mene while, that I ftill record thefe thynges with my felf, and marked my wepelie complainte with office of poinctell: I faugh ftondyng aboven the hight of myn hed a woman of full greete reverence, by femblaunt. Her eyen brennyng, and clere, feyng over the common might of menne, with a lively colour, and with foche vigour and ftrength that it ne might not be nempned, all were it fo, that the were full of fo grete age, that menne woulden not trowen in no manere, that the were of our elde.

The ftature of her was of doutous Judgemente, for fometyme fhe conftrained and inronke her felven, like to the common mefure of menie : And fometyme it femed, that fhe touched the heven with the hight of her hedde. And when fhe hove her hedde higher, fhe perced the felf heven, fo that the fight of menne lokyng was in ydell: her clothes wer maked of right delie thredes, and fubtel craft of perdurable matter. Thé whiche clothes fhe had woven with her owne handes, as I knewe well after by her felf declaryng, and fhewyng to me the beautie: The whiche clothes a darkneffe of a forleten and difpifed elde had durked and darked, as it is wonte to darke by fmoked Images.

In the nethereft hemme and border of thefe clothes menne redde iwoven therein a Grekifhe A. that fignifieth the life active, and above that letter, in the hieft bordure, a Grekifhe C. that fignifieth the life contemplatife. And betwene thefe two letters there were feen degrees nobly wrought, in maner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the nethereft letter to the uppereft : natheleffe handes of fome men hadden kerve that clothe, by violence or by flrength, and of different numbers, in which he feems to have been happy and judicious. I have felecterl ieveral fipecimens both of his profe and verfe; and among them, part of his tranflation of Boetius, to which another verfion, made in the time of queen Mary, is oppofed. It would be improper to quote very fparingly' an aurhour of fo much reputation, or to make very large extrais fiom'a book fo generally known.

COL.VILE.

IThat in tyme of profperite, and floryfhing fudye, made pleafaunte and delcettable dities, or veries: alas now beyng heauy and fad ouerthrowen in aduerfitie, am compelled to fele and taft heuines and greif. Beholde the mufes Poeticall, that is to faye : the pleafure that is in poetes verfes, do appoynt me, and compel me to writ thefe verfes in meter, and the forowitll verfes to wet my wretched face with very waterye reares, yfuinge out of my eyes for forowe. Whiche mules no feare without doute could ouercome, but that they wold folow me in my iourney of exile or banifment. Sometyme the ioye of happy and laity delectable youtih dyd comfort me, and nowe the courfe of forowfull olde age caufeth me to reioyfe. For hafty old age vnloked for is come vpon me with al her incommodities and euyls, and forow hath commaunded and broughte me into the fame old age, that is to fay: that forowe caufeth me to be olde, before my time come of olde age. The hoer heares do growe vntimely vpon miy heade, and my reuiled fkynne trembleth my fleht, cleane confumed and wafted with forowe. Mannes deach is happy, that cometh not in youth, when a man is luntye, and in pla. fure or welth : but in time of aduerfitie, when it is often defyred. Alas Alas howe dull and deffe be the eares of cruel death vnto men in mifery that would fayne dye: and yet refufythe to come and fhitte vp theyr carefull wepyng eyes. Whiles that falfe fortune fauoryd me with her tranfitorye goodes, then the howre of death had almof ouercom me. That is to fay deathe was redy to oppreffe me when I was in profperitie. Nowe for by caufe that fortune beynge turned, from profieritie into aduerfitie (as the clere day is darkyd with cloudes) and hath chaungyd her deceyuable countenaunce : my wretched life is yet prolonged and doth continue in dolour. O my frendes why have you fo often bofted me, fayinge that I was happy when I hat honor poffeffions riches, and authoritie whych be tranfitory thynges. He that hath fallen was in no ftedefart degre.
WH YLES that I confiderydde pryuylye with my felfe the thynges before fayd, and defrrybed my wofull complaynte after the maner and offyce of a wrytter, me thought I fawe a woman ftand ouer my head of a reuerend countenaunce, hauyng quycke and glyfteryng clere eye, aboue the common forte of men in lyuely and delectable coloure, and ful of ftrength, although fhe femed fo olde that by no meanes fhe is thought to be one of this oure tyme, her ftature is of douteful knowledge, for nowe fhe frewerhe herfelfe at the commen length or ftatur of men, and other whiles fhe femeth fo high, as though the touched heuen with the crown of her hed. And when fhe wold ftretch fourth her hed hygher, it allo perced thorough heauen, fo that mens fyghte coulde not attaine to behold her. Her veftures or cloths were perfyt of the finyfte thredes, and fubtyll workemanfhyp, and of fubftaunce permament, whych vefturs fhe had wouen with her own hands as I perceyued after by her owne faiynge. The kynde or beawtye of the whyche veftures, a certayne darkenes or rather ignoraunce of oldenes forgotten hadde obfcuryd and darkened, as the fmoke is wont to darken Images that ftand nyghe the fmoke. In the lower parte of the faid veftures was read the greke letter P. wouen whych fignifyeth practife or actyffe, and in the hygher part of the veftures the greke letter. T. whych eftandeth for theorica, that fignifieth fpeculacion or contemplation. And betwene both the fayd letters were fene certayne degrees, wrought after the maner of ladders, wherein was as it were a paffage or waye in fteppes or degrees from the lower part wher the letter. For why, in foche an unprofitable man myne ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrowen fro me this man, that hath ben nourifhed in my ftudies or fcoles of Eleaticis, and of Academicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaidens, whiche that ben fwete, till it be at the laft, and fuffreth this man to be cured and heled by my mufes, that is to fay, by my notefull fciences. And thus this companie of mufes iblamed caften wrothly the chere dounward to the yerth, and fhewing by redneffe ther fhame, thei paffeden forowfully the threfholde. And I of whom the fight plounged in teres was darked, fo that I ne might not know what that woman was, of fo Imperial aucthoritie, I woxe all abafhed and ftonied, and caft my fight doune to the yerth, and began ftill for to abide what the would doen afterward. Then came fhe nere, and fet her doune upon the uttereft corner of my bed, and fhe beholdyng my chere, that was caft to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with thefe wordes (that I hall faine) the perturbacion of my thought.

The conclufions of the Astrolabie.
This book (written to his fon in the year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II.) ftandeth fo good at this day, efpecially for the horizon of Oxford, as in the opinion of the learned it cannot be amended, fays an Edit. of Chaucer.

LY TEL Lowys my fonne, I perceve well by certaine evidences thyne abylyte to lerne fcyences, touching nombres and proporcions, and alfo well confydre I thy befye prayer in efpecyal to lerne the tretyfe of the aftrolabye. Than for as moche as a philofopher faithe, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that condifcendeth to the ryghtfull prayers of his frende: therfore I have given the a fufficient aftrolabye for oure orizont, compowned after the latitude of Oxenforde: upon the whiche by mediacion of this lytell tretife, I purpofe to teche the a certaine nombre of conclufions, pertainynge to this fame inftrument. 1 fay a certaine nombre of conclufions for thre caufes, the firtt caufe is this. Trufte wel that al the conclufions that have be founden, or ells poffiblye might be founde in fo noble an inftrument as in the aftrolabye, ben unknowen perfitely to anye mortal man in this region, as I fuppofe. Another caufe is this, that fothely in any cartes of the aftrolabye that I have yfene, ther ben fome conclufions, that wol not in al thinges perfourme ther beheftes: and fome of 'hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to concevc. This tretife divided in five partes, will. fhewe the wondir light rules and naked wordes in Englifhe, for Latine ne canft thou nat yet but fmale, my litel fonne. But neverthe leffe fuffifeth to the thefe trewe conclufyons in Englifhe, as well as fuffifeth to thefe noble clerkes grekes thefe fame conclufions in greke, and to the Arabines in Arabike, and to Jewes in Hebrewe, and to the Latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke had 'hem firfte out of other divers langages, and write 'hem in ther owne tonge, that is to faine in Latine.
the hygher parte wher, the letter $T$. was whych is vnderftand fpeculacion or contemplacion. Neuertheles the handes of fome vyolente perfones had cut the fayded verftures and had taken awaye certayne pecis thercof, fuch as euery one coulde catch. And the her feife dyd bare in her ryght hand litel bokes, and in her teffee liande fcepter, which forefayd plylofoply (when fhe fawt the mufes poetycal prefent at my bed, feekyng forrowful wordes to my wepynges) beyng angry fayd (with terrible or frownynge countenaunce) who fuffred thefe crafty harlottes to com to thys fycke man? whych can help hym by no means of hys griefe by any kind of medicines, but rather increafe the fame with fwete poyfon. Thefe be they that doo dyftroye the fertile and plentious commodytyes of reafon and the fruytes therof wyth their pryckynge thornes, or barren affectes, and accuftome or fubdue mens myndes with fickenes, and heuynes, and do not delyuer or heale them of the fame. But yf your flatterye had conueyed or wythdrawen from me, any vnlernyd man as the comen forte of people are wonte to be, I coulde haue ben better contentyd, for in that my worke fhould not be hurt or hynderyd. But you haue taken and conueyed from me thys man that hath ben broughte vp in the ftudyes of A riftotel and of Plato But yet get you hence maremaids (that feme fwete untyll you haue brought a man to deathe) and fuffer me to heale thys my man wyth my mufes or icyences that be holfome and good. And after that philofophy had fpoken thefe wordes the fayd companye of the mufys poeticall beynge rebukyd and fad, cafte down their countenaunce to the grounde, and by bluffyng confeffed their fhamfaftnes, and went out of the dores. But I (that had my fyght dull and blynd wyth wepyng, fo that I knew not what woman this was hauyng too great aucthoritie) was amafyd or aftonyed, and lokyng downeward, towarde the grounde, I began pryvylye to look what thyng the would faye ferther, then fhe had faid. Then fhe approching and drawynge nere vnto me , fat downe vpon the vttermoft part of my bed, and lokyng vpon my face fad with weping, and declynyd toward the earth for forow, bewayled the trouble of my minde wyth thefe fayinges folowynge.

And God wote that in all thefe languages and in manye mo, have thefe conclufyons ben fufficientlye lerned and taught, and yet by divers rules, right as divers pathes leden divers folke the right waye to Rome.
Now wol I pray mekely every perfon difcrete, that redeth or hereth this lityl tretife to have my rude ententing excufed, and my fuperfluite of wordes, for two caufes. The firft caufe is, for that curious endityng and harde fentences is ful hevy at ones, for foch a childe to lerne. And the feconde caufe is this, that fothely me femeth better to writen unto a childe twife a gode fentence, than he foriete it ones. And, Lowis, if it be fo that I fhewe the in my lith Englifhe, as trew conclufions touching this mater, and not only as trewe but as many and fubtil conclufions as ben y fhewed in latin, in any comon tretife of the aftrolabye, conne me the more thanke, and praye God fave the kinge, that is lorde of this langage, and all that him faith bereth, and obeiecth everiche in his degree, the more and the laffe. But confydreth well, that I ne ufurpe not to have founcien this werke of my labour or of myne engin. I n'ame but a leude compilatour of the laboure of olde aftrologiens, and have it tranlated in myn englifhe onely for thy doctrine : and with this fwerde fhal I fene envy.

The firft party,

The firt partye of this tretife fall roherce she figures, and the membres of thyne affrolaby, Oy caule that thou fhalte have the greter knowinge of thine owne inftrument.

The feconde party.
The feconde partye fhal teche the to werken the very practike of the forefaid conclufions, as ferforthe and allo narowe as may be fhewed in fo fmale an inftrument portatife aboute. For wel wote every aftrologien, that fmalleft fractions ine wol not be fhewed in fo fmal an inftrument, as in fubtil tables calculed for a caufe.

The Prulogue of the Testament of LOVE

MA N Y men there ben, that with eres openly fprad fo moche fwalowen the delicioufneffe of jeftes and of ryme, by queint knittinge coloures, that of the godeneffe or of the badneffe of the fentence take they litel hede or els none

Sothelye dulle witte and a thoughtfulle foule fo fore have mined and graffed in my fpirites, that foche craft of enditinge woll nat ben of mine acquaintaunce. And for rude wordes and boiftous percen the herte of the herer to the inreft point, and planten there the fentence of thinges, fo that with lite! helpe it is able to fpring, this boke, that nothynge hath of the grete flode of wytte, ne of femelyche colours, is dolven with rude wordes and boiftous, and fo drawe togiðer to maken the catchers therof ben the more redy to hent fentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with colours riche and fome with wers, as with red inke, and fome with coles and chalke : and yet is there gode matter ro the leude peple of thylke chalkye purtreyture, as 'hem thinketh for the time, and afterward the fyght of the better colours yeven to 'hem more joye for the firft leudeneffe. So fothly this leude clowdy occupacyon is not to prayfe, but by the leude, for comenly leude leudeneffe commendeth. Eke it fhal yeve fight that other precyous thynges fhall be the more in reverence. In Latin and French hath many foveraine wittes had grete delyte to endite, and have many noble thinges fulfilde, but certes there ben fome that fpeken ther poifye mater in Frenche, of whiche fpeche the Frenche men have as gode a fantafye as we have in heryng of Frenche mens Englifhe. And many termes there ben in Englyfhe, whiche unneth we Englifhe men connen declare the knowleginge : howe fhould than a Frenche man borne? foche termes connejumpere in his matter, but as the jay chatereth Englifhe. Right fo truely the underftandyn of Englifhmen woll not ftretche to the privie rermes in Frenche, what fo ever we boften of ftraunge langage. Let than clerkes enditen in Latin, for they have the propertie of fcience, and the knowinge in that facultie : and lette Frenche men in ther Frenche alfo enditen ther queint termes, for it is kyndely to ther mouthes; and let us fhewe our fantafies in fuch wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this boke be lytel thank worthy for the leudneffe in travaile, yet foch writing exiten men to thilke thinges that ben neceffarie: for every man therby may as by a perpetual myrrour fene the vices or vertues of other, in whyche thynge lightly may be conceved to efchue perils, and neceffaries to catch, after as aventures have tallen to other peple or perfons.

Certes the foverainft thinge of defire and mott creture refonable, have or els fhuld have full appetite to ther perfeccyon : unrefonable beftes mowen not, fithe refon hath in 'hem no workinge : than refonable that wol not, is comparifoned to unrefonable, and made lyke 'hem. Forfothe the moft foveraine and finall perfeccion of man is in knowynge of a fothe, withouten any entent decevable, and in love of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to knowe, and love his creator.

Nowe principally the mene to brynge in knowleging and lovynge his creatour, is the confideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thylke thinges that ben made, underftandynge here to our wyttes, arne the unfene pryvities of God made to us fyghtfull and knowinge, in our contemplacion and underftondinge. Thefe thinges than forfothe moche bringen us to the ful knowleginge fothe, and to the parfyte love of the maker of hevenly thynges. Lo! David faith: thou hafte delited me in makinge, as who faith, to have deJite in the tune how God hat lent me in confideracion of thy makinge: Wherof Ariftotle in the boke de Animalibus, faith to naturell philofophers: it is a grete likynge in love of knowinge ther cretoure: and alfo in knowinge of caufes in kindelye thynges, confidrid for1. the the formes of kindelye thinges and the thap, a gret kyndely love we fhulde have to the werkman that 'hem made. The crafte of a werkman is fhewed in the werk. Herefore trulie the philofophers with a lyvely fludic manic noble thinges, righte precious, and worthy to memorye, writen, and by a gret fwet and travaille to us leften of caufes the properties in natures of thinges, to whiche therfore philofophers it was more joy, more lykinge, more herty luft in kindely vertues and matters of refon the perfeccion by buly ftudy to knowe, than to have had all the trefour, al the richeffe, al the vaine glory, that the paffed emperours, princes, or kinges hadden. Therfore the names of 'hem in the boke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and pece arne writen ; and in the contrarie, that is to faine, in Styxe the foule pitte of helle arne thilke preffed that foch godenes hated. And bicaufe this boke fhall be of love, and the prime caufes of ftering in that doinge with paffions and difefes for wantinge of defire, I wil that this boke be cleped the teftament of love.
But nowe thou reder, who is thilke that will not in fcorne laughe, to here a dwarfe or els halfe a man, fay he wil rende out the fwerde of Hercules handes, and alfo he fhulde fet Hercules Gades a mile yet ferther, and over that he had power of ftrength to pull up the fpere, that Alifander the noble might never wagge, and that paffinge al thinge to ben mayfter of Fraunce by might, there as the noble gracious Edwarde the thirde for al his grete proweffe in victories ne might al yet conquere?
Certes I wote well, ther thall be made more foorne and jape of me, that I fo unworthely clothed altogither in the cloudie cloude of unconning, wil putten me in prees to fpeak of love, or els of the caufes in that mat. ter, fithen al the gretteft clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who faith gathered up clene toforne 'hem, and with ther fharp fithes of conning al mowen and made therof grete rekes and noble, ful of al plenties to fede me and many an other. Envye forfothe commendeth. noughte his refon, that he hath in hain, be it never fo trufty. And although thefe noble repers, as gode workmen and worthy ther hier, han al draw and bounde up in the fheves, and made many fhockes, yet have I enfample to gałer the fmale crommes, and fullin ma walet of tho that fallen from the bourde among the fimalle houndes, notwithftanding the travaile of the almoigner, that hath draw up in the cloth al the remiffailes, as trenchours, and the relefe to bere to the almeffe. Yet alfo have I leve of the noble hufbande Boece, although I be a ftraunger of conninge to come after his doctrine, and thefe grete workmen, and glene my handfuls of the Thedynge after ther handes, and yf me faile ought of my ful, to encrefe my porcion with that I fhal drawe by privyties out of fhockes; a flye fervaunte in his owne helpe is often moche commended; knowynge of trouthe in caufes of thynges, was more hardier in the firfte fechers, and fo fayth Ariftotle, and lighter in us that han folowed after. For ther paffing fudy han frefhed our wittes, and oure underftandynge han excited in confideracion of trouth by tharpenes of ther refons. Utterly thefe thinges be no dremes ne japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych mete for children of trouth, and as they me betiden whan I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, whan the wether out of mefure was boiftous, and the wyld wynd Boreas; as his kind afkech, with dryinge coldes maked the wawes of the ocean fe fo to arife unkindely over the commune bankes that it was in point to fpill all the erthe.
The Prologues of the Canterbury Tales of CHAUCER, from the MSS.

WHEN that Aprilis with his fhouris fote, The drought of March had percid to the rote, And bathid every veyn in fuch licour,
Of which vertue engendrid is the four.
When Zephyrus eke, with his fwetè breth
Enfpirid hath, in every holt and heth
The tender croppis; and that the yong Sunn Hath in the Ramm his halvè cours yrunn:
And fmalè foulis makin melodye,
That flepin alle night with opin eye,
(So prickith them nature in ther corage)
Then longin folk to go on pilgrimage:
And pa!mers for to fekin ftrangè ftrondes,
Fo fervin hallowes couth in fondry londes :
And fpecially fro every fhir'is end
Of England, to Canterbury they wend,

THE HISTORYOF THE

The holy blisfull martyr for to feke,
That them hath holpin, whan that they were feke.
Befell that in that fefon on a day
In Southwerk at the Tabberd as I lay,
Redy to wendin on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devote corage,
At night wer come into that hoftery
Wele nine and twenty in a cumpany
Of fundrie-folk, by aventure yfall
In felafhip; and pilgrimes wer they all;
That toward Canterbury wouldin ride.
The chambers and the ftablis werin wide,
And well we werin efid at the beft:
And fhortly whan the funnè was to reft, So had I fpokin with them everych one,
That I was of ther felarhip anone;
And madè forward erli for to rife,
To take our weye, ther as I did devife.
But nathlefs while that I have time and fpace,
Er' that I farther in this talè pace,
Methinkith it accordaunt to refon,
To tell you allè the condition
Of ech of them, fo as it femid me, And which they werin, and of what degree,
And eke in what array that they wer in :
And at a knight then woll I firt begin.

The Knig ht.

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the time that he firft began
To ridin out, he lovid Chevalrie,
Trouth and honour, fredome and curtefy:
Full worthy was he in his lord'is werre, And thereto had he riddin nane more ferre As well in Chriftendom, as in Hethnefs; And evyr honoured for his worthinefs.

At Aleffandre' he was whan it was won ; Full oft timis he had the bord begon Abovin allè naciouns in Pruce;
In Lettow had he riddin, and in Luce, No Chriften-man fo oft of his degree In Granada; in the fege had he be
Of Algezir, and ridd in Belmary; At Leyis was he, and at Sataly,
Whan that they wer won; and in the grete fee At many'a noble army had he be : At mortal battails had he ben fiftene, And foughtin for our feith at Tramefene, In liftis thrys, and alwey flein his fo.

This ilke worthy knight had ben alfo Sometimis with the lord of Palathy,
Ayens anothir hethin in Turky; And evirmore he had a fov'rane prize; And though that he was worthy, he was wife; And of his port as meke as is a maid, He nevir yet no villany ne faid In all his life unto no manner wight : He was a very parfit gentil knight. But for to tellin you of his array, His hors wer good; but he was nothing gay, Of furtian he werid a gipon,
Allè befmotrid with his haburgeon.
For he was late ycome from his viage, And wentè for to do his pilgrimağe.

 The Firf Boke.NO W herkin, as I have you faied, What that I mette or I abraied,
Of December the tenith daie,
When it was night, to flepe I laie,
Right as I was wonte for to doen,
And fill aflepè wondir fone,
As he that was werie forgo
On pilgrimagè milis two
To the corps of fainct Leonarde,
To makin lithe that erft was harde
But as me fiept me mette I was Within a temple' innade of glas,

In whiche there werin mo images
Of golde, ftandyng in fondrie ftages,
Sette in mo riche tabirnacles,
And with perrè mo pinnacles,
And mo curious portraituris,
And queint manir of figuris
Of golde worke, then 1 fawe evir.
But certainly I n'ift nevir
Where that it was, but well wift I
It was of Venus redily
This temple, for in purtreiture anmal
I fawe anone right her figure : $w, 1, \ldots$
Nakid yfletyng in a fe,
And alfo on her hedde parde
Her rofy garland white and redde,
And her combe for to kembe her hedde,
Her dovis, and Dan Cupido
Her blindè fonne, and Vulcano,
That in his face ywas full broune.
But as I romid up and doune,
I founde that on the wall there was
Thus writtin on a table' of bras.
I woll now fyng, if that I can,
The armis, and alfo the man,
That firft came through his deftine
Fugitife fro Troye the countre
Into Itaile, with full moche pine,
Unto the ftrondis of Lavine,
And tho began the florie' anone,
As I fhall tellin you echone.
Firt fawe I the diftruccion
Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
With his falfe untrue forfwerynges,
And with his chere and his lefynges,
That made a hore, brought into Troye,
By whiche Trojans lofte all ther joye.
And aftir this was graved, alas!
How Ilions caftill affailed was,
And won, and kyng Priamus flain,
And Polites his fonne certain,
Difpitoufly of Dan Pyrrhus.
And next that fawe I howe Venus,
When that the fawe the caftill brende,
Doune from hevin fhe gan difcende,
And bade her fonne Æneas fle,
And how he fled, and how that he
Efcapid was from all the pres,
And toke his fathre', old Anchifes,
And bare hym on his backe awaie,
Crying alas and welawaie!
The whiche Anchifes in his hande, Bare tho the goddis of the lande
I mene thilke that unbrennid were.
Then fawe I next that all in fere How Creufa, Dan Æneas wife,
Whom that he lovid all his life,
And her yong fonne clepid Julo,
And eke Afcanius alfo,
Fleddin eke, with full drerie chere,
That it was pite for to here,
And in a foreft as thei went
How at a tournyng of a went Creuifa was ilofte, alas!
That rede not I , how that it was
How he her fought, and how her ghofte Bad hym to flie the Grekis hofte, And faied he mult into Itaile,
As was his deftinic, fauns faile,
That it was pitie for to here,
When that her fpirite gan appere,
The wordis that fhe to hym faied,
And for to kepe her fonne hym praied.
There fawe I gravin eke how he
His fathir eke, and his meinè,
With his fhippis began to faile
Toward the countrey of Itaile,
As ftreight as ere thei mightin go.
There fawe I eke the, cruill Juno,
That art Dan Jupiter his wife,
That haft ihatid all thy life

Lydgate was a monk of Bury, who wrote about the fame time with Chaucer: Out of his prologue to his third book of the Fall of Princes a few ftanzas are felected, which, being compared with the fyle of his two contemporaries, will fhow that our language was then not written by caprice, but was in a fettled itate.

I IKE a pilgrime which that goeth on foote, And hath none horfe to releue his trauayle, Whote, drye and wery, and may find no bote Of wel cold whan thruft doth hym affayle, Wine nor licour, that may to hym auayle, Tight fo fare I which in my bufineffe,

THE HISTORYOF THE

Our life here fhort of wit the great dulnes The heny foule troubled with trauayle, And of memorye the glafyng brotelnes, Drede and vncunning haue made a ftrong batail With werines my fpirite to affayle,
And with their fubtil creping in moft queint
Hath made my fpirit in makyng for to feint.
And ouermore, the ferefull frowardnes
Of my ftepmother called oblivion,
Hath a baftyll of foryetfulnes,
To foppe the paffage, and fhadow my reafon That I might haue no clere direccion, In tranllating of new to quicke me, Stories to write of olde antiquire.

Thus was I fet and ftode in double werre At the metyng of feareful wayes tweyne, The one was this, who euer lift to lere, Whereas good wyll gan me conftrayne, Bochas taccomplifh for to doe my payne, Came ignoraunce, with a menace of drede, My penne to reft I durft not procede.

Fortefcue was chief juftice of the Common-Pleas, in the reign of king Henry VI. He retired in 1471. after the battle of Tewkefbury, and probably wrote moft of his works in his privacy. The following paffage is felected from his book of the Difference between an abfolute and linited Monarchy.

HY T may peraventure be marvelid by fome men, why one Realme is a Lordfhyp only Royall, and the Prynce thereof rulyth yt by his Law, callid Jus Regale; and another Kyngdome is a Lordichip, Royal and Politike, and the Prince thereof rulyth by a Lawe, callyd $\mathcal{F} u$ s Politicum $\S$ Regale; fythen thes two Princes beth of egall Aftate.

To this dowte it may be anfweryd in this manner; The firft Inftitution of thes twoo Realmys, upon the Incorporation of them, is the Caufe of this diverfyte.

When Nembroth by Might, for his own Glorye, made and incorporate the firt Realme, and fubduyd it to hymfelf by Tyrannye, he would not have it governyd by any other Rule or Lawe, but by his own Will; by which and for th' accomplifhment thereof he made it. And therfor, though he had thus made a Realme, holy Scripture denyyd to cal hym a Kyng, 2uia Rex dicitur as Regendo; Whych thyng he dyd not, but oppreffyd the People by Myght, and therfor he was a Tyrant, and callid Prinus Tyrannorum. But holy Writ callith hym Robustus Venator coram Deo. For as the Hunter takyth the wyld befte for to fcle and eate hym; fo Nembroth fubduyd to him the People with Might, to have their fervice and their goods, ufing upon them the Lordfchip that is callid Dominiumn Regale tantum. After hym Belus that was callid firft a Kyng, and after hym his Sone Nynus, and after hym other Panyms; They, by Example of Nembroth, made them Realmys, would not have them rulyd by other Lawys than by their own Wills. Which Lawys ben right good under good Princes; and their Kyngdoms a then moft refemblyd to the Kyngdome of God, which reynith upon Man, rulyng him by hys own Will. Wherfor many Crytyn Princes ufen the fame Lawe; and therfor it is, that the Lawys fayen, Quod Principi placuit Legis babet vigorem. And thus I fuppofe firft beganne in Realmvs, Dominium tentum Regale. But afterward, whan Mankynd was more manfuete, and better difpofyd to Vertue, Grete Communalcies, as was the Felifhip, that came into this Lond with Brute, wyllyng to be unyed and made a Body Politike callid a Realme, havyng an Heed to governe it; as after the Saying of the Philofopher, every Communaltie unyed of many parts muft needs have an Heed; than they chofe the fame Brute to be their Heed and Kyng. And they and he upon this Incorporation and Inftitution, and onyng of themfelf into a Realme, ordeynyd the fame Realme fo to be rulyd and juftyfyd by fuch Lawys, as they al would affent unto; which Law therfor is callid Politicumm; and bycaufe it is mynyftrid by a Kyng, it is callid Regale. Dominium Politicum dicitur quafi Regimen, pluriums Scientia, five Conflio miniffratum. The Kyng of Scotts reynith upon his P'eople by this Lawe, videlicet, Regimine Politico E Regali. And as Diodorus Syculus faith, in his Boke de prifcis Hijforiis, The Realme of Egypte is rulid by the fame Lawe, and therfor the Kyng therof chaungith not his Laves, without the Affent of his People. And in like forme as he faith is ruled the Kyngdome of Saba, in Felici Arabia, and the Lond of Libie; And alfo the more parte of al the Realmys in Afrike. Which manner of Rule and Lordfhip, the fayd Diodorus in that Boke, prayfith grete1y. For it is root only good for the Prince, that may thereby the more fewerly do Juftice, than by his owne Arbitriment; but it is alfo good for his People that receyve therby, fuch Juftice as they defyer themfelf. Now as me feymth, it ys fhewyd opinly ynough, why one Kyng rulyth and reynith on his People Dominio tantum Regali, and that other reynith Dominio Politico & Regali: For that one Kyngdome beganne, of and by, the Might of the Prince, and that other beganne, by the Defier and Inftitution of the People of the fame Prince.

Of the works of Sir Thomas More it was neceffary to give a larger fpecimen, both becaufe our language was then in a great degree formed and fettled, and becaufe it appears from Ben Fobnfon, that his works were confidered as models of pure and elegant ftyle. The tale, which is placed firft, becaufe earlieft written, will fhow what an attentive reader will, in perufing our old writers, often remark, that the familiar and colloquial part of our language, being difufed among thofe claffes who had no ambition of refinement, or affectation of novelty, has fuffered very little change. There is another reafon why the extracts from this authour are more copious : his works are carefully and correctly printed, and may therefore be better trufted than any other edition of the Englif/b books of that, or the preceding ages.
A merry ieft how a fergeant would learne to playe the frere. Written by maiter Thomas More in hys youth.

WY SE men alway, Affyrme and fay, That beft is for a man:
Diligently,
For to apply,
The bufines that he can,
And in no wyfe,
To enterpryfe,
An other faculte,
For he that wyll,
And can no fkyll,
Is neuer lyke to the.
He that hath lafte,
The hofiers crafte,
And falleth to making fhone,
The fnythe that fhall,
To payntyng fall,
His thrift is well nigh done.

Pletyng the lawe
For euery ftrawe,
Shall proue a thrifty man,
With bate and ftrife,
But by my life,
I cannot tell you whan.
Whan an hatter
Wyll go fmatter,
In philofophy,
Or a pedlar,
Ware a medlar
In theology,
All that enfue,
Suche craftes new,
They driue fo farre a caft,
That euermore,
They do therfore,
Befhrewe themfelfe at laft.
This thing was tryed
And verefyed,
Here by a fergeaunt late,
That thriftly was,
Or he coulde pas;
Rapped about the pate,
Whyle that he would
See how he could,
A little play the frere:
Now yf you wyll,
Knowe how it fyll,
Take hede and ye fhall heré.
It happed fo,
Not long ago,
A thrifty man there dyed,
An hundred pounde,
Of nobles rounde,
That had he layd a fide :
His fonne he wolde,
Should haue this golde,
For to beginne with all :

But to fuffire

His chylde, well thrife,
That money was to fimal.
Yet or this day
I have hard fay,
That many a man certeffe,
Hath with good caft,
Be ryche at laft,
That hath begonne with leffe
But this yonge manne,
So well beganne,
His money to imploy,
That certainly,
His policy,
To fee it. was a joy,
For left fum blat,
Myght ouer caft, $\therefore$
His hip, or by mifchaunce,
Men with fum wile,
Myght hym begyle,
And minifh his fubfaunce,
For to put out,
All maner dout,
He made a good puruay,
For euery whyt,
By his owne wyt,
And toke an other way:
Firt fayre and wele,
Therof much dele,
He dygged it in a pot,
But then him thought,
That way was nought,
And there he left it not.
So was he faine,
From thence agayne,
To put it in a cup,
And by and by,
Couetounly,
He fupped it fayre vp,
In his owne breft,
He thought it beft,
His money to enclofe, ...

Then wift he well,
What euer fell,
He coulde it neuer lofe.
He borrowed then,
Of other men,
Money and marchaundife :
Neuer payd it,
Up he laid it,
In like maner wyfe.
Yet on the gere,
That he would were,
He reight not what he fpent,
So it were nyce,
As for the price,
Could him not mifcontent.
With lufty fporte,
And with refort,
Of ioly company,
In mirth and play,
Full many a day,
He liued merely.
And men had fworne,
Some man is borne,
To haue a lucky howre,
And fo was he,
For fuch degre,
He gat and fuche honour,
That without dout,
Whan he went out,
A fergeaunt well and fayre,
Was redy ftrayte,
On him to wayte,
As fone as on the mayre.
But he doubtleffe,
Of his mekeneffe,
Hated fuch pompe and pride,
And would not go,
Companied fo,
But drewe himfelf a fide,
To faint Katharine,
Streight as a line,
He gate him at a tyde,
For deuocion,
Or promocion
There would he nedes abyde.
There fipent he faft,
Till all were paft,
And to him came there meny,
To afke theyr det,
But none could get,
The valour of a peny.
With vifage ftout,
He bare it out,
Euen vnto the harde hedge,
A month or twaine,
Tyll he was faine,
To laye his gowne to pledge.
Than was he there,
In greater feare,
I han ere that he came thither,
And would as fayne,
Depart againe,
But that he wift not whither.
Than after this,
To a frende of his,
He went and there abode,
Where as he lay,
So fick alway,
He myght not come abrode.
It happed than,
A marchant man,
That he ought money to,
Of an officere,
Than gan enquere,
What him was beft to do.
And he anfwerde,
Be not aferde,
Take an accion therfore, I you behefte,
I hall hym refte,
And than care for no more.

THE HISTORYOFTHE

I feare quod he,
It wyll not be,
For he wyll not come out.
The fergeaunt faid,
Be not âfrayd.
It fhall be brought about,
In many a game,
Lyke to the fame,
Haue I bene well in vre,
And for your fake
Let me be bake,
But yf 1 do this cure.
Thus part they both,
And foorth then goth,
A pace this officere,
And for a day,
All his array,
He chaunged with a frere
So was he dight,
That no man might,
Hym for a frere deny,
He dopped and dooked,
He fpake and looked,
So religiounly.
Yet in a glaffe,
Or he would paffe,
He toted and he peered,
His harte for pryde,
Lepte in his fyde,
To fee how well he freered.
Than forth a pace,

Unto the place,

He goeth withouten fhame
To do this dede,
But now take hede,
For here begynneth the game.
He drew hym ny,
And foftely,
Streyght at thedore he knocked;
And a damfell,
That hard hym well,
There came and it vnlocked.
The frere fayd,
Good fpede fayre mayd,
Here lodgeth fuch a man,
It is told me:
Well fyr quod fhe,
And yf he do what than.
Quod he maytreffe,
No harme doutleffe:
It longeth for our order,
To hurt no man,
But as we can,
Euery wight to forder.
With hym truly,
Fayne fpeake would I.
Sir quod fhe by my fay,
He is fo fike,
Ye be not lyke,
To fpeake with hym to day.
Quod he fayre may,
Yet I you pray,
This much at my defire,
Vouchefafe to do,
As go hym to,
And fay an auften frere
Would with hym fpeke,
And matters breake,
For his auayle certayn.
Quod the I wyll,
Stonde ye here ftyll,
Tyll I come downe agayn.
Vp is fhe go,
And told hym fo,
As fhe was bode to fay,
He miftruftying,
No maner thyng,
Sayd mayden go thy way,
And fetch him hyder,
That we togyder,
May talk. A downe the gothe,

Vp the hym brought,
No harme fhe thought,
But it made fome folke wrothe.
This officere,
This fayned frere,
Whan he was come aloft,
He dopped than,
And grete this man,
Religiounly and oft.
And he agayn,
Ryght glad and fayn,
Toke hym there by the hande,
The frere than fayd,
Ye be difmayd,
With trouble I underftande.
In dede quod he,
It hath with me,
Bene better than it is.
Syr quod the frere,
Be of good chere,
Yet fhall it after this.
But I would now,
Comen with you,
In counfayle yf you pleafe,
Or eilys nat
Of matters that,
Shall fet your heart at eafe.
Downe went the mayd,
The marchaunt fayd,
Now. fay on gentle frere,
Of thys tydyng,
That ye me bryng,
I long full fore to here.
Whan there was none,
But they alone,
The frere with euyll grace,
Sayd, I reft the,
Come on with me,
And out he toke his mace:
Thou fhalt obay,
Come on thy way,
I have the in my clouche,
Thou goeft not hence,
For all the penfe,
The mayre hath in his pouche.
This marchaunt there,
For wrath and fere,
He waxyng welnygh wood,
Sayd horfon thefe,
With a mifchefe,
Who hathtaught the thy good.
And with his firt,
Vpon the lyft,
He gaue hym fuch a blow,
That backward downe,
Almoft in fowne,
The frere is ouerthrow.
Yet was this man,
Well fearder than,
Left he the frere had flayne,
Tyll with good rappes,
And heuy clappes,
He dawde hym vp agayne.
The frere toke harte,
And vp he ftarte,
And well he layde about,
And fo there goth,
Betwene them both,
Many a lufty clout.
They rent and tere,
Eche others here,
And claue togyder faft,
Tyll with luggyng,
And with tuggyng,
They fell downe bothe at laft.
Than on the grounde,
Togyder rounde,
With many a fadde ftroke,
They roll and rumble,
They turne and tumble,
As pygges do in a polke.

So long aboue,
They heue and fhoue,
Togrider that at laft,
The mayd and wyfe,
To breake the ftrife,
Hyed them vpward faft.
And whan they fpye,
The captaynes lye,
Both waltring on the place,
The freres hood;
They pulled a good,
Adowne about his face.
Whyle he was blynde,
The wenche behynde,
Lent him leyd on the flore,
Many a ioule,
About the noule,
With a great batyldore.
The wyfe came yet,
And with her fete,
She holpe to k tpe him downe,
And with her rocke,
Many a knocke,
She gaue hym on the crowne.
They layd his mace,
About his face,
That he was wood for payne:
The fryre frappe,
Gate many a fwappe,
Tyll he was full nygh flayne.
Vp they hym lift,
And with yll thrift,
Hedlyng a long the ftayre,
Downe they hym threwe,
And fayde adewe,
Commende us to the mayre.
The frere arofe,
But I fuppofe,
Amafed was his hed,
He fhoke his eares,
And from grete feares,
He thought hym well yfled.
Quod he now loft,
Is all this coft,
We be newer the nere.
Ill mote he be,
That caufed me,
To make my felf a frere.
Now mafters all,
Here now I fhall,
Ende there as I began, In any wyfe,
I would auyfe,
And counfayle euery man,

His owne craft vfe,

All newe refufe,
And lyghtly let them gone:
Play not the frere,
Now make good chere,
And welcome euerych one.
A ruful lamentacion (writen by mafter Thomas More in his youth) of the deth of quene Elifabeth mother to king Henry the eight, wife to king Henry the feuenth, and eldent doughter to king Edward the fourth, which quene Elifabeth dyed in childbed in February in the yere of our Lord 1503. and in the 18 yere of the raigne of king Henry the feuenth.

OYe that put your truft and confidence, In worldly ioy and frayle profperite, That fo lyue here as ye fhould neuer hence, Remember death and loke here vppon me. Enfaumple I thynke there may no better be. Your felfe wotte well that in this realme was I, Your quene but late, and lo now here I lye.

Was I not borne of olde worthy linage? Was not my mother queene my father kyng? W as I not a kinges fere in marriage ? Had I not plenty of euery pleafaunt thyng? Mercifull god this is a ftraunge reckenyng: Rycheffe, honour, welth, and aunceftry? Hath me forfaken and lo now here I ly.

If worfhip myght haue kept me, I had not gone. If wyt myght haue me faued, I neded not fere. If money myght haue holpe, I lacked none.
But O good God what vayleth all this gere.
When deth is come thy mighty meffangere,
Obey we muft there is no remedy,
Me hath he fommoned, and lo now here I ly.
Yet was I late promifed otherwyfe,
This yere to live in welth and delice.
Lo where to commeth thy blandinhyng promyre,
O falfe aftrolagy and deuynatrice,
Of goddes fecretes makyng thy felfe fo wyfe.
How true is for this yere thy prophecy.
The yere yet latteth, and lo nowe here I ly.
O bryttill welth, as full of bitterneffe,
Thy fingle pleafure doubled is with payne.
Account my forow firft and my diftrefle,
In fondry wyfe, and recken there agayne,

- The ioy that I haue had, and I dare layne,

For all my honour, endured yet haue I,
More wo then welth, and lo now here I ly.
Where are our caftels, now where are our towers,
Goodly R.ychmonde fone art thou gone from me,
At Weftminfter that coftly worke of yours,
Myne owne dere lorde now fhall I neuer fee.
Almighty god vouchefafe to graunt that ye,
For you and your children well may edefy.
My palyce bylded is, and lo now here I ly.
Adew myne owne dere fpoufe my worthy lorde,
The faithfull loue, that dyd vs both combyne,
In mariage and peafable concorde,
Into your handes here I cleane refyne,
To be beftowed vppon your children and myne.
Erft wer you father, and now muft ye fupply,
The mothers part alfo, for lo now here I ly.
Farewell my doughter lady Margerete.
God wotte full oft it greued hath my mynde,
That ye fhould go where we fhould feldome mete.
Now am I gone, and haue left you behynde.
O mortall folke that we be very blynde.
That we leaft feare, full oft it is moft nye,
From you depart I fyrft, and lo now here I lye.
Farewell Madame my lordes worthy mother,
Comfort your fonne, and be ye of good chere.
Take all a worth, for it will be no nother.
Farewell my doughter Katherine late the fere,
To prince Arthur myne owne chyld fo dere,
It booteth not for me to wepe or cry,
Pray for my foule, for lo now here I ly.
Adew lord Henry my louyng fonne adew.
Our lorde encreafe your honour and eftate,
Adew my doughter Mary bright of hew,
God make you vertuous wyfe and fortunate.
Adew fwete hart my litle doughter Kate,
Thou fhalt fiwete babe fuche is thy defteny,
Thy mother neuer know, for lo now here I ly.
Lady Cicyly Anne and Karheryne,
Farewell my welbeloved fifters three,
O lady Briget other fifter myne,
Lo here the ende of worldly vanitee.
Now well are ye that earthly foly flee,
And heuenly thynges loue and magnify,
Farewell and pray for me, for lo now here Ily.
A dew my lordes, a dew my ladies all, A dew my faithful feruauntes euerych one, A dew my commons whom I neuer thall, See in this world wherfore to the alone, Immortall god verely three and one,
I me commende. Thy infinite mercy,
Shew to thy feruant, for lo now here I ly.
Certain meters in Englifh written by mafter Thomas More in hys youth for the boke of fortune, and caufed them to be printed in the begynnyng of that boke.

The wordes of Fortune to the people.

MINE high eftate power and auctoritie, If ye ne know, enferche and ye fhall fpye, That richeffe, worfhip, welth, and dignitie, Joy, reft, and peace, and all thyng fynally, That any pleafure or profit may come by, To mannes comfort, ayde, and fuftinaunce, Is all at my deuyfe and ordinaunce.

THE HISTORYOF OHE

Without my fauour there is nothyng wonne. Many a matter haue I brought at lait, To good conclufion, that fondly was begonne. And many a purpofe, bounden fure and taft With wifc prouifion, I hauc ouercaft.
Without grod lappe there may no wit fuffife.
Better is to be fortunate than wyfe.
And therefore hath there fome men benc or this,
My deadly foes and written many a boke,
To my difprayfe. And other caufe there nys, But for me lift not frendly on them loke. Thus lyke the fox they fare that once forfoke, The pleafaunt grapes, and gan for to defy them, Becaufe he lept and yet could not come by them.
But let them write theyr labour is in vayne.
For well ye wote," myrth, honour, and richeffe,
Much better is than penury and payne.
The nedy wretch that lingereth in diftreffe, Without myne helpe is euer comfortleffe, A wery burden odious and loth,
To all the world, and eke to him felfe both.
But he that by my fauour may afcende, To mighty power and excellent degree,
A common wele to gouerne and defende;
O in how blift condicion ftandeth he :
Him felf in honour and felicite,
And ouer that, may forther and increafe,
A region hole in ioyfull reft and peace.
Now in this poynt there is no more to fay,
Eche man hath of him felf the gouernaunce.
Let euery wight than folowe his owne way,
And he that out of pouertee and mifchaunce,
Lift for to liue, and wyll him felfe enhaunce, In wealth and richeffe, come forth and wayte on me. And he that wyll be a beggar, let hym be.

Thomas More to them that trùtt in Fortune.

THOU that are prowde of honour flape or kynne, That hepeft vp this wretched worldes treafure, Thy fingers fhrined with gold, thy tawny fkynne, With frefh apparyle garnifhed out of meafure, And weneft to haue fortune at thy pleafure, Calt vp thyne eye, and loke how fipper chaunce, Illudeth her men with chaunge and varyaunce. Sometyme the loketh as louely fayre and bright, As goodly Uenus mother of Cupyde. She becketh and fhe fmileth on euery wight. But this chere fayned, may not long abide. There cometh a cloide, and farewell all our pryde. Like any ferpent fhe beginneth to fwell, And looketh as fierce as any fury of hell.

Yet for all that we brotle men are fayne, (So wretched is our nature and fo blynde) As foone as Fortune lift to laugh agayne, With fayic countenaunce and difceitfull mynde, To crouche and knele and gape after the wynde, Not one or twayne but thoufandes in a rout,
Lyke fwarmyng bees come flickeryng her aboute.
Then as a bayte fle bryngeth forth her ware, Siluer, gold, riche perle, and precious ftone: On whiche the mafed people gafe and ftare, And gape therefore, as dogges doe for the bone. Fortune at them laugheth, and in her trone Amyd her treafure and waueryng rycheffe,
Prowdly fhe houeth as lady and empreffe.
Faft by her fyde doth wery labour ftand,
Pale fere alfo, and forow all bewept,
Difdayn and hatred on that other hand,
Eke reftles watche fro flepe with trauayle kept, His eyes drowfy and lokyng as he flept. Before her ftandeth daunger and enuy,
Flattery, dyfceyt, m:fchiefe and tiranny.
About her commeth all the world to begge.
He afketh lande, and he to pas would bryng,
This toye and that, and all not worth an egge :
He would in loue profper aboue all thyng :
He kneleth downe and would be made a kyng :
He forceth not fo he may moncy haue,
Though all the worlde accompt hym for a knaue.
Lo thus ye fee diuers heddes, diuers wittes.
Fortune alone as diuers as they all,

Vnftable here and there among them firtes: And at auenture downe her giftes fall, Catch who fo may the throweth great and fmall Not to all men, as commeth fonne or dewe, But for the moft part, all among a fewe.

And yet her brotell giffes long may not laft. He that fhe gaue them, loketh prowde and hye. She whirlth about and pluckth away as faft, And geueth them to an other by and by. And thus from man to man continually, She vfeth to geue and take, and fily toffe, One man to wynnyng of an others lofte.

And when nie robbeth one, down goth his pryde.
He wepeth and wayleth and curfeth her full fore.
But he that receueth it, on that other fyde,
Is glad, and blefth her often tymes therefore.
But in a whyle when fhe loueth hym no more,
She glydeth from hym, and her giftes to.
And he her curfeth, as other fooles do,
Alas the folyfh people can not ceafe,
Ne voyd her trayne, tyll they the harme do fele.
About her alway, befely they preace.
But lord how he doth thynk hym felf full wele.
That may fet once his hande vppon her whele.
He holdeth faft: but vpward as he fieth,
She whippeth her whele about, and there he lyeth.
Thus fell Julius from his mighty power.
Thus fell Darius the worthy kyng of Perfe.
Thus fell Alexander the great conquerour.
Thus many mo then I may well reherfe.
Thus doubie fortune, when fhe lyft reuerfe.
Her flipper favour fro them that in her truft,
She fleeth her wey and leyeth them in the duft.
She fodeinly enhaunceth them aloft.
And fodeynly mifcheueth all the flocke.
The head that late lay eafily and full foft, In ttede of pylows lyeth after on the blocke. And yet alas the moft cruell proude mocke: The deynty mowth that ladyes kiffed haue, She bryngeth in the cafe to kyffe a knaue.

In chaungyng of her courfe, the chaunge fhewth this, Vp ftartch a knaue, and downe there falth a knight,
The beggar ryche, and the ryche man pore is.
Hatred is turned to lcue, love to defpyght.
This is her fport, thus proueth the her myght.
Great bofte the maketh yf one be by her power,
Welthy and wretched both within an howre.
Pouertee that of her giftes wyl nothing take,
Wyth mery chere, looketh vppon the prece,

Nowe haue I fhewed you bothe: thefe whiche ye lyft, Stately fortune, or humble pouertee :
That is to fay, nowe lyeth it in your fyft, To take here bondage, or free libertee. But in thys poynte and ye do after me, Draw you to fortune, and labour her to pleafe, If that ye thynke your felfe to well at eafe.

And fyrft vppon the louely fhall the fmile, And frendly on the caft her wandering eyes, Embrace the in her armes, and for a whyle, Put the and kepe the in a fooles paradile : And foorth with all what fo thou lyft deuife She wyll the graunt it liberally parhappes: But for all that beware of after clappes.

Recken you neuer of her fauoure fure : Ye may in clowds as eafily trace an hare, Or in drye lande caufe filhes to endure, And make the burnyng fyre his heate to fpare, And all thys worlde in compace to forfare, As her to make by craft or engine ftable, That of her nature is euer variable.

Serue her day and nyght as reuerently, Vppon thy knees as any feruaunt may, And in conclufion, that thou fhalt winne thereby Shall not be worth thy fervyce I dare fay. And looke yet what fhe géueth the to day, With labour wonne fhe fhall happly to morow Pluck it agayne out of thyne hande with forow.

Wherefore yf thou in furetye lyft to fande, Take pouerties parte and let prowde fortune go, Receyue nothyng that commeth from her hande . Loue maner and vertue : they be onely tho. Whiche double fortune may not take the fro. Then mayft thou boidly defye her turnyng chaunce : She can the neyther hynder nor auaunce.

But and thou wylt nedes medle with her treafure, Truft not therein, and fpende it liberally. Beare the not proude, nor take not out of meafure. Bylde not thyne houfe on heyth vp in the fkye. None falleth farre, but he that climbeth hye, Remember nature fent the hyther bare, The gyftes of fortune count them borowed ware.

Thomas More to them that feke Fortune.

WHO fo delyteth to prouen and affay, Of waveryng fortune the vncertayne lot; If that the aunfwere pleafe you not alway, Blame ye not me: for I commaunde you not, Fortune to truft, and eke full well ye wot, I haue of her no brydle in my fift, She renneth loofe, and turneth where the lyft.

The rollyng dyfe in whome your lucke doth ftande, With whofe vnhappy chaunce ye be fo wroth, Ye knowe your felfe came neuer in myne hande. Lo in this ponde be fyfhe and frogges both. Caft in your nette : but be you liete or lothe, Hold you content as fortune lyft affyne: For it is your owne finhyng and not myne.

And though in one chaunce fortune you offend, Grudge not there at, but beare a mery face. In many an other the fhall it amende. There is no manne fo farre out of her grace, But he fometyme hath comfort and folace: Ne none agayne fo farre foorth in her fauour, That is full fatisfyed with her behauiour.

Fortune is ftately, folemne, prowde, and hye: And rycheffe geueth, to haue feruyce therefore. The nedy begger catcheth an halfpeny : Some manne a thoufande pounde, fome leffe fome more. But for all that fhe kepeth euer in ftore, From euery manne fome parcell of his wyll, That he may pray therfore and ferue her ftyll.

Some manne hath good, but chyldren hath he none. Some man hath both, but he can get none health. Some hath al thre, but vp to honours trone, Can he not crepe, by no maner of ftelth. To fome fhe fendeth, children, ryches, welthe, Honour, woorfhyp, and reuerence all hys lyfe: But yet the pyncheth hym with a Threwde wyfe.

Then for afmuch as it is fortunes guyfe, To graunt no manne all thyng that he wyll axe,

But as her felfe lyft order and deuyfe,
Doth euery manne his parte diuide and tax, I counfayle you eche one truffe vp your packes, And take no thyng at all, or be content,
With fuche rewarde as fortune hath you fent:
All thynges in this boke that ye fhall rede, Doe as je lytt, there fhall no manne you bynde, 'Them to beleue, as furely as your crede. But notwithftandyng certes in my mynde, I durft well fwere, as true ye fhall them fynde, In euery poynt eche anfwere by and by, As are the iudgenentes of aftronomye

The Defcripcion of Richard the thirde.

RICHARDE the third fonne, of whom we nowe entreate, was in witte and courage egall with either of them, in bodye and proweffe farre vnder them bothe, little of ftature, ill fetured of limmes, croke backed, his left Thoulder much higher than his right, hard fauoured of vifage, and fuch as is in ftates called warlye, in other menne otherwife, he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from afore his birth, euer frowarde. It is for trouth reported, that the duches his mother had fo much a doe in her trauaile, that fhee coulde not bee deliuered of hym vncutte: and that hee came into the worlde with the feete forwarde, as menne bee borne outwarde, and (as the fame runneth) alfo not vntothed, whither menne of hatred reporte aboue the trouthe, or elles that nature chaunged her courfe in hys beginninge, whiche in the courfe of his lyfe many thinges vnnaturallye committed. None euill captaine was hee in the warre, as to whiche his difpoficion was more metely then for peace. Sundrye victories hadde hee, and fommetime ouerthrowes, but neuer in defaulte as for his owne parfone, either of hardinefie or polytike order, free was hee called of dyfpence, and fommewhat aboue hys power liberall, with large giftes hee get him vnftedfafte frendefhippe, for whiche hee was fain to pil and fpoyle in other places, and get him ftedfaft hatred. Hee was clofe and fecrete, a deepe diffimuler, lowlye of counteynaunce, arrogant of heart, outwardly coumpinable where he inwardely hated, not letting to kiffe whome hee thoughte to kyll : difpitious and cruell, not for euill will alway, but after for ambicion, and either for the furetie or encreafe of his eftate. Frende and foo was muche what indifferent, where his aduauntage grew, he fpared no mans deathe, whofe life withftoode his purpofe. He newe with his owne handes king Henry the fixt, being prifoner in the Tower, as menne conltantly faye, and chat without commaundement or knoweledge of the king, whiche woulde vndoubtedly yf he had entended that thinge, haue appointed that boocherly office, to fome other then his owne borne brother.

Somme wife menne alfo weene, that his drift couertly conuayde, lacked not in helping furth his brother of Clarence to his death: whiche hee refifted openly, howbeit fomwhat (as menne deme) more faintly then he that wer hartely minded to his welth. And they that thus deme, think that he long time in king Edwardes life, forethought to be king in that cafe the king his brother (whofe life hee looked that euil dyete fhoulde fhorten) fhoulde happen to deceafe (as in dede he did) while his children wer yonge. And thei deme, that for thys intente he was gladde of his brothers death the duke of Clarence, whole life muft nedes-haue hindered hym fo entendynge, whither the fame duke of Clarence hadde kepte him true to his nephew the yonge king, or enterprifed to be kyng himfelfe. But of al this pointe, is there no certaintie, and whofo diuineth vppon coniectures, maye as wel thote to farre as to Mort. How beit this haue I by credible informacion learned, that the felfe nighte in whiche kynge Edwarde died, one Myftlebrooke longe ere mornynge, came in greate hafte to the houfe of one Pottyer dwellyng in Reddecrofe frete without Crepulgate : and when he was with haftye rappyng quickly letten in, hee fhewed vnto Pottyer that kynge Edwarde was departed. By my trouthe manne quod Pottier then wyll my mayfter the duke of Gloucefter bee kynge. What caufe hee hadde foo to thynke harde it is to faye, whyther hee being toward him, anye thynge knewe that hee fuche hynge purpofed, or otherwyfe had anye inkelynge thereof : for hee was not likelye to fpeake it of noughte.

But nowe to returne to the courfe of this hyftorye, were it that the duke of Gloucefter hadde of old foreminded this conclufion, or was nowe at ertte thereunto moued, and putte in hope by the occafion of the tender age of the younge princes, his nephues (as opportunitye and lykelyhoode of fpede, putteth a manne in courage of that hee neuer entended) certayn is it that hee contriued theyr deftruccion, with the vfurpacion of the regal dignitye vppon hymfelfe. And for as muche as hee well wifte and holpe to mayntayn, a long continued grudge and hearte brennynge betwene the quenes kinred and the kinges blood eyther partye enuying others authoritye, he nowe thought that their deuifion fhoulde bee (as it was in dede) a fortherlye begynnynge to the purfuite of his intente, and a fure ground for the foundacion of al lis building yf he mightit firte vnder the pretext of reuengynge of olde diipleafure, abufe the anger and ygnoraunce of the tone partie, to the deftruccion of the tother: and then wynne to his purpofe as manye as he coulde: and thofe that coulde not be wonne, myght be lofte ere they looked therefore. Forof one thynge was hee certayne, that if his entente were perceiued, he fhold foone haue made peace beetwene the bothe parties, with his owne bloude.

Kynge Edwarde in his life, albeit that this difcencion beetwene hys frendes fommewhat yrked hym: yet in his good health he fommewhat the lefic regarded it, becaufe hee thought whatfocuer bufines fhoulde falle betwene them, hymfelfe flould alwaye bee hable to rule bothe the parties.

But in his laft fickneffe, when hee receiued his naturall frengthe foo fore enfebled, that hee dyfpayred all recouerye, then hee confyderynge the youthe of his chyldren, albeit hee nothynge leffe miftrufted then that that happened, yet well forfeynge that manye harmes myghte growe by theyr debate, whyle the youth of hys children fhoulde lacke difcrecion of themfelf and good counfayle, of their frendes, of whiche either party thold counfayle for their owne commodity and rather by pleafaunte aduyfe too wynne themfelfe fauour, then by profitable aduertifemente to do the chiidren good, he called fome of then before him that were at variaunce, and in efpecyall the lorde marques Dorfette the quenes fonne by her fyrtte houfebande, and Richarde the lorde Haftynges, a noble man, than lorde chaumberlayne agayne whome the quene fpeciaily grudged, for the great fauoure the kyng bare hym, and alfo for that fhee thoughte hym fecretelye familyer with the kynge in wanton coumpanye. Her kynred alfo bare hym fore, as well for that the kynge hadde inade hym captayne of Calyce (whiche office the lorde Ryuers, brother to the quene claimed of the kinges former promyfe as for diuerfe other great giftes whiche hee receyued, that they loked for. When thefe lordes with diuerfe other of bothe the parties were comme in prefence, the kynge liftinge vppe himfelfe and vnderfette with pillowes, as it is reported on this wyfe fayd vnto them, My lordes, my dere kinfmenne and alies, in what plighte I lye you fee, and I feele. By whiche the leffe whyle I looke to lyue with you, the more depelye am I moued to care in what cafe I leaue you, for fuch as I leaue you, fuche bee my children lyke to fynde you. Whiche if they fhoulde (that Godde forbydde) fynde you at varyaunce, myght happe to fall themfelfe at warre ere their difcrecion woulde ferue to fette you at peace. Ye fe their youthe, of whiche I reckent the onely furetie to refte in youre concord, For it fuffifeth not that al you loue them, yf eche of you late other, If they wer menne, your faithfulneffe happelye woulde fuffife. But childehood muft be maintained by mens authoritye, and flipper youth vnderpropped with elder counfayle, which neither they can haue, but ye geue it, nor ye geue it, yf ye gree not. For wher eche laboureth to breake that the other maketh, and for hatred of ech of others parfon, impugneth eche others counfayle, there muft it nedes bee long ere anye good conclufion goe forwarde. And alfo while either partye laboureth to be chiefe, flattery fhall haue more place then plaine and faithfull aduyfe, of whyche mufte needes enfue the cuyll bringing vppe of the prynce, whofe mynd in tender youth infect, fhal redily fal to milchief and riot, and diawe down with this noble realme to ruine, but if grace turn him to wifdom : which if God fend, then thei that by euill mences before pleafed him beft, fhal after fall fartheft out of fauour, fo that euer at length cuil driftes dreue to nought, and good p ain wayes profper. Great variaunce hath ther long bene betwene you, not alway for great caufes. Sometime a thing right wel intended, our mifconftruccion turneth vnto worle or a fmal difpleafure done vs, eyther our owne affeccion or euil tongues agreueth. But this wote I well ye neuer had fo great caufe of hatred, as ye haue of loue. That we be al men, that we be chriften men, this flall I leaue for prechers to tel you (and yet I wote nere whither any preachers wordes ought more to moue you, then his that is by and by gooying to the place that thei ali preache of.) But this fhal I defire you to remember, that the one parte of you is of my bloode, the other of myne alies, and eche of yow with other, eythér of kinred or affinitie, whiche fpirytuall kynred of affynyty, if the facramentes of Chriftes churche, beare that weyghte with vs that woulde Godde thei did, fhoulde no. Jeffe moue vs to charitye, then the refpecte of flefhlye confanguinitye. Oure Lorde forbydde, that you loue together the worfe, for the felfe caufe that you ought to loue the better. And yet thiat happeneth. And no where fynde wee fo deadlye debate, as amonge them, whyche by nature and lawe mofte oughte to agree together. Suche a peftilente ferpente is ambicion and defyre of vaine glorye and foueraintye, whiche amonge fates where he once entrecth crepeth foorth fo farre, tyll with deuifion and variaunce hee turneth all to mifchiefe. Firtte longing to be nexte the beft, afterwarde egall with the befte, and at lafte chiefe and aboue the beltc. Of which immoderate appetite of woorfhip, and thereby. of debate and diffencion what loffe, what forowe, what trouble hathe within thefe fewe yeares growen in this realme, I praye Godde as well forgeate as wee well remember.

Whiche thinges yf I coulde as well haue forefene, as I haue with my more payne then pleafure proued, by Goddes bleffed Ladie (that was eut his othe) I woulde neuer haue won the courtefye of mennes knees, with the loffe of foo many heades. But fithen thynges piffed cannot be gaine called, muche oughte wee the more beware, by what occafion we haue taken foo greate harte afore, that we efteloones fall not in that occalion ayayne: Nowe be thofe griefes paffed, and all is (Godde be thanked) quiete, and likelie righte wel to profper in wealthfull peace vnder youre cofeyns my children, if Godde fende them life and you loue. Of whyche twoo thinges, the leffe loffe wer they by whome thoughe Godde dydde hys pleafure, yet fhoulde the realme alway finde kinges and paraduenture as good kinges. But yf you among youre felfe in a childes reygne fall at debate, many a good man fhall perifh and happely he to, and ye to, cre thys land finde peace again." Wherfore in thefe laft wordes that euer I looke to fpeak with you: I exhort you and require you al, for the loue that you hate euer borne to me, for the loue that 1 haue cuer born to you, for the loue that our Lord bearcth to vs all, from this time forwarde, all grieues forgotten, eche of you loue other. Whiche I verelye trutte you will, if ye any thing earthly regard, either Godde or your king, affnitie or kinred, this realme, your owne countrey, or your owne furety. And therewithal the king no longer enduring to fitte vp, laide him down on his right fide, his face towarde them: and none was there prefent that coulde refrain from weping. But the lordes recomforting him with as good wordes as they could, and anfwering for the time as thei thouglit to ftand with his pleafure, there in his prefence (as by their wordes appered ech forgauc other, and ioyned their hands together, when (as it after aupeared by their dedes) their hearts wer far a fonder. As fone as the king was departed, the noble prince his fonne drew toward London, which at the time of his deceafe, kept his houthold at Ludlow in Wales. Which countrey being far of from the law and recourfe to iuftice, was begon to be farre oute of good wyll and waxen wild, robbers and fiuers walking a libertie vncorrefted. And for this encieafon the prince was in the life of his father fente thither, to the end that the authoritie of his prefence, fhould refraine cuill difpofed parfons fro the boldues of their formar outerages, to the gouernaunce and ordering of this yong princé at his fending thyrher, was there appointed Sir Antony Woduile lord Riuers and brother vnto the quene, a right honourable man, as valiaunte of hande as politike in counfayle. Adioyned wer there vnto him other of the fame partie, and in effect eucry one as he was nereft of kin vnto the quene, fo was planted next about the prince. That dirifte by the cquene not vnwifely deuifed, whereby her bloode mighte of youth be rooted in the princes fauor, the duke of Gloucefter turned vnto their deftruccion, and vpon that grounde fet the foundacion of all. his vnhappy building. For whom foeuer he perceiued, either at variance with them, or bearing himfelf their fauor, hee brake vito them, fome by mouth, fom by writing and fecret mef. fengers, that it neyther was reafon nor in any wife to be fuffered, that the yong king their matter and kinfimanne, Thoold bee in the haudes and cultodye of his mothers kinred, fequeftred in maner from theyr compani and at tendance, of which cueri one ought him as taithtul feruice as they, and manye of them far more honorable part of kin then his mothers fide: whole blood (quod he) fauing the kinges pleafure, was ful vnmetely to be matched with his: whiche nowe to be as who fay remoued from the kyng, and the leffe noble to be left aboute him, is (quod he) neither honorable to hys mageftie, nor vnto vs, and alfo to his grace no furety to haue the mightieft of his frendes from him, and vnto vs no little ieopardy, to fufier our welproued enil willers, to grow in ouergret authoritie with the prince in youth, namely which is lighte of beliefe and fone perfwaded. Ye remember I trow king Edward himfelf, albeit he was a manne of age and of difcrecion, yet was he in manye thynges ruled by the bende, more then fode either with his honour, or our profite, or with the commoditie of any manne els, except onely the immoderate aduauncement of them felfe. Whiche whither they forer thirfted after their owne weale, or our woe, it wer hard I wene to geffe. And if fome folkes frend?hip had not holden better place with the king, then any refpect of kinred, thei might peraduenture eafily haue be trapped and brought to confufion fomme of vs ere - this. Why not as eafily as they haue done fome other alreadye, as neere of his royal bloode as we. But our Lord hath wrought his wil, and thanke be to his grace that peril is pafte. Howe be it as great is growing, yf wee fuffer this yonge kyng in oure enemyes hande, whiche without his wyttyng, might abufe the name of his commaundement, to ani of our vndoing, which thyng God and good prouinion forbyd. Of which good prouifion none of us hath any thing the leffe nede, for the late made attonemente, in whiche the kinges pleafure hadde more place then the parties willes. Nor none of vs. I beleue is fo vnwyfe, ouerfone to trufte a newe frende made of an olde foe, or to think that an houerly kindnes, fodainely contract in one houre continued, yet fcant a fortnight, fhold be deper fetled in their flomackes: then a long accuftomed malice many yeres rooted.

With thefe wordes and writynges and fuche other, the duke of Gloucefter fone fet a fyre, them that were of themfelf ethe to kindle, and in efpeciall twayne, Edwarde duke of Buckingham, and Richarde lorde Haftinges and chaumberlayn, both men of honour and of great power. The tone by longe fucceffion from his anceftrie, the tother by his office'and the kinges fauor. Thefe two not bearing eche to other fo muclie loue, as hatred bothe vnto the quenes parte: in this poynte accorded together wyth the duke of Gloucefter, that they wolde vtterlye amoue fro the kynges companye, all his mothers frendes, vnder the name of their enemyes. Vpon this concluded, the duke of Gloucefter vnderftandyng, that the lordes whiche at that tyme were aboute the kyng, entended to bryng him vppe to his coronacion, accoumpanied with fuche power of theyr frendes, that it fhoulde bee harde for hym to brynge his purpofe to paffe, without the gathering and great af femble of people and in maner of open warre, whereof the ende he wifte was donbtuous, and in which the kyng being on their fide, his part fhould haue: the face and name of a rebellion: he fecretiy therefore by diuters meanes, cauled the quene to be perfwaded and brought in the mynd, that it neither wer nede, and alfo fhotu ne ieopardous, the king to come vp ftrong. For whercas nowe euery lorde loued other, and none other thing fudyed vppon, but aboute the coronacion and honoure of the king: if the lordes of her kinred thold afiemble in the kinges name muche people, thei fhould geue the lordes acwixte whome and them hadde bene fommetyme debate, to feare and fufpecie, lefte chey floulde gather thys people, not for the kynges fauegarde whone no manne enpugned, but for theyr deftruccion, hauying more regarde to their olde variaunce, then their newe attonement. For whiche caufe thei fhoulde afiemble on the other partie muche people agayne for their delence, whofe power the wytte wel farre itretched. And thus fhould all the realme fall on a rore. And of al the hurte that therof fhould enfue, which was likely not to be lite, and the moft harme there like to fal wher fine left would, all the worlde woulde put her and her kinred in the wyght, and fay that thei had vnwyfelye and vntrewlye alfo, broken the amitie and peace that the kyng lier huiband fo prudentelye made, betwene hys kinne and hers in his death bed, and whiche the other party faithfully obferued.

The quene being in this wife perfwaded, fuche woorde fente vnto her fonne, and vinto her brother buing aboute the kynge, and ouer that the duke of Glouceiter hymfelfe and other lordes the chiefe of hys bende, wrote vito the kynge foo reuerentelye, and to the queenes frendes, there foo louyngelye, that they nothynge earthelye myftruntynge, broughte the kynge vppe in greate hafte, not in good fpede, with a lober coumpanye. Nowe was the king in his waye to London gone, Irom Northampton, when thefe dukes of Gloucefter and Buckyngham came thither. Where remained behynd, the lorde Ryucis the kynges vacle, entendyng on the morowe to folow the kynge, and bee with hym at Stonye Stratford miles thence, earely or hee departed. So was there made that nyghte muche frendely chere betwene the fe dukes and the lorde Rivers a greate while. But incontinente affer that they were oppenlye with greate courtefye departed, and the lorde Riuers lodged, the dukes fecretelye with a fewe of their molle priuye frendes, fette them downe in counfayle, wherin they fpent a great parte of the nyght. And at their rifinge in the dawnyng of the day, thei fent about priuily to their feruantes in their innes and lodgynges about, geuinge them commaundemente to make them felfe fhortely readye, for their lordes wer to horfebackward. Vppon whiche mefiages, manye of their folke were attendaunt, when manye of the lorde Riuers feruantes were vnreadye. Nowe hadde thefe dukes taken alfo into their cuftodye the kayes of the inne, that none floulde paffe foorth without theyr licence.
And ouer this in the hyghe waye towarde Stonye Stratforde where the kynge laye, they hadde beeftowed certayne of theyr folke, that fhoulde fende backe agayne, and compell to retourne, anye manne that were gotien oute of Northampton toward Stonye Stratforde, 'tyli they fhould geue other lycence. For as muche as the dukes themfelfe entended for the fhewe of theire dyly gence, to bee the fyrfe that fhoulde that daye atrende vppon the kynges highneffe oute of that towne: thus bare they folke in hande. But when the lorde Ryuers vnderfode the gates clofed, and the wayes on cuerye fide befette, neyther hys feruauntes nor hymfelf fuffered to go oute, parceiuyng well fo greate a thyng without his knowledge not begun for noughte, comparyng' this maner prefent with this laft nightes chere, in fo few houres fo gret a chaunge marucylounlye miniked. How be it fithe hee coulde not geat awaye, and keepe himfeife clore, hee woulde not, lefte he fhoulde feeme to hyde himfelfe for fome fecret feare of hys owne faulte, whereof he faw nio fuch caufe in hym felf : he determined vppon the furetie of his own confcience, to goe boldelye to them, and inquire what thys matter mygite meane. Whome as foone as they fawe, they-beganne to quarreli with hym, and faye, that hee intended to fette diftatunce beetweene the kynge and them, and to brynge them to confufion, but it houlde not lye in hys power. And when hee beganne (as hee was a very well (poken manne) in goodly wife to excufe himfelf, they taryed not the ende of his aunfwere, but fhortely tooke him and putte him in warde, and that done, foorthwyth wente to horfebacke, and tooke the waye to Stonye Stratforde. Where they founde the kinge with his companie readye to leape on horlebacke, and departe forwarde, to leaue that lodging for them, becaufe it was to ftreighte for bothe coumpanies. And as fone as they came in his prefence, they lighte adowne with all their companie aboute them. To whome the duke of Buckingham faide, goe afore gentlemenne and yeomen, kepe youre rowmes. And thus in goodly arraye, thei came to the kinge, and on theire knees in very humble wife, falued his grace; whiche receyued them in very ioyous and amiable maner, nothinge earthlye knowing nor miftruftinge as yet. But euen by and by in his prefence, they piked a quarell to the lorde Richard Graye, the kynges other brother by his mother, fayinge that hee with the lorde marques his brother and the lorde Rivers his vncle, hadde coumpaffed to rule the kinge and the realme, and to fette variaunce among the ftates, and to fubdewe and deftroye the noble blood of the realm. Toward the accoumplifhinge whereof, they fayde that the lorde Marques hadde entered into the Tower of London, and thence taken out the kinges treafor, and fent menne to the fea. All whiche thinge thefe dukes wifte well were done for good purpofes and neceffari by the whole counfaile at London, fauing that fommewhat thei muft fai. Vnto whiche woordes, the king aunfwered, what my brother Marques hath done I cannot faie. But in good faith I dare well aunfwere for myne vacle Riuers and my brother here, that thei be innocent of any' fuch matters. Ye my liege ${ }^{4} q u o d$ the duke of Buckingham thei haue kepte theire dealing in thete matters farre fro the knowledge of your good grace. And foorthwith thei arrefted the lord Richarde and Sir Thomas Waughan knighte, in the kinges prefence, and broughte the king and all backe vito Northampton, where they tooke againe further counfaile. And there they fent awaie from the kinge whom it pleafed them, and fette newe feruantes aboute him, fuche as lyked better them than him. At whiche dealinge hee wepte and was nothing contente, but it booted not. And at dyner the duke of Gloucelter fente a difhe from his owne table to the lord Riuers, prayinge him to bee of good chere, all fhould be well inough. And he tharked the duke, and prayed the meffenger to beare it to his nephewe the lorde Ri chard with the fame meffage for his comfort, who he thought had more nede of coumfort, as one to whom fuch aduerfitie was ftraunge. But himfelf had been al his dayes in vre therewith, and therfore coulde beare it the better. But for al this coumfortable courtefye of the duke of Gloucefter he fent the lord Riuers and the lorde Richarde with Sir Thomas Vaughan into the Northe countrey into diuers places to prifon, and afterward al to Pomfrait, where they were in conclufion beheaded.

A letter written with a cole by Sir Thomas More to hys doughter maiftres Margaret Roper, within a whyle after he was prifoner in the Towre.

MY N E own good doughter, our lorde be thanked I am in good helthe of bodye, and in good quiet of minde : and of worldly thynges I no more defyer then I haue. I befeche hym make you all mery in the hope of heauen. And fuch thynges as I fomewhat longed to talke with you all, concerning the worlde to come, our Lorde put theim into your myndes, as I trufte he dothe and better to by hys holy fpirite : who bleffe you and preferue you all. Written wyth a cole by your tender louing father, who in hys pore prayers forgetteth none of you all, nor your babes, nor your nurfes, nor your good hufbandes, nor your good hufbandes fhrewde wyues, nor your fathers fhrewde wyfe neither, nor our other frendes. And thus fare ye hartely well for lacke of paper.

Two fhurt ballettes which Sir Thomas More made for hys paftime while he was prifoner in the Tower of London.

At the fame time with Sir Thomas More lived Skelton, the poet laureate of Henry VIII. from whofe works it feems proper to infert a few ftanzas, though he cannot be faid to have attained great elegance of language.

The prologue to the Bouge of Courte.

INBy radyante hete enryped hath our corne Whan Luna full of mutabylyte

Of the wits that flourifhed in the reign of Henry VIII. none has been more frequently celebrated than the earl of Surry; and this hiftory would-therefore have been imperfect without fome fpecimens of his works, which yet it is not ealy to diftinguifh from thofe of Sir Tbonatas Wyat and others, witi which they are confounded in the edition that has fallen into my hards. The three firft are, I believe, Surry's ; the reft, being of the fame age, are felected, fome as examples of different meafures, and one as the oldeft compofition which I have found in blank verfe.

Somer is come, for every fray now fpringes.
The hart hath hunge hys olde head on the pale,
The bucke in brake his winter coate he flynges ;
The fifhes flete with newe repayred fcale:
The adder all her flough away the fynges,
The fwift fwallow purfueth the flyes simalle,
The buly bee her honiey how fhe mynges;
Winter is worne that was the floures bale.
And thus I fee among thefe pleafant thynges
Eche care decayes, and yet my forrow fprynges.

Defcripcion of the reftlefs eftate of a lover

Wen youth had led me half the race, That Cupides fcourge had made me runne;
I looked back to meet the place,
From whence my weary courfe begunne:
And then I faw howe my defyre
Mifguiding me had led the waye,
Myne eyne to greedy of theyre hyre,
Had made me lofe a better prey.
For when in fighes I fpent the day,
And could not cloake my grief with game;
The boyling fmoke dyd ftill bewray,
The prefent heat of fecret flame:
And when falt teares do bayne my breaft,
Where love his pleafent traynes hath fown,
Her beauty hath the fruytes oppreft,
Ere that the buddes were fpronge and blowne.
And when myne eyen dyd ftill purfue,
The flying chafe of theyre requeft;
Theyre greedy looks dyd oft renew,
The hydden wounde within ny brefte.
When every loke thêfe cheekes might flayne,
From dedly pale to glowing red;
By outward fignes appeared playne,
To her for helpe my hart was fled.
But all to late Love learneth me,
To paynt all kynd of Colours new;
To blynd theyre eyes that elfe fhould fee
My fpeckled chekes'with Cupids hew.
And now the covert breft I clame,
That worfhipt Cupide fecretely;
And nourifhed hys facred flame,
Frum whence no blairing farks do flye.
Defrripcion of the fickle Affections, Pangs, and Sleightes of Love.
S
UCH wayward wayes hath Love, that moft part in difcord
Our willes do ftand, whereby our hartes but feldom do accord :
Decyte is hys delighte, and to begyle and mocke
The fimple hartes which he doth frike with froward divers ftroke.
He caufeth th' one to rage with golden burning darte, And doth alay with Leaden cold, again the others harte.
Whofe gleames of burning fyre and eafy fparkes of flame,
In balance of unequal weyght he pondereth by ame
From eafye ford where I myghte wade and pafs full well,
He me withdrawes and doth me drive, into a depe dark hell :
And me witholdes where I am calde and offred place,
And willes me that my mortal foe I do befeke of Grace;
He lettes me to purfue a conqueft welnere wonne
To follow where my paynes were loft, ere that my fute begunne.
So by this means I know how foon a hart may turne
From warre to peace, from truce to ftryfe, and fo agayne returne.
I know how to content my felf in others luft,
Of little ftuffe unto my felf to weave a webbe of truft:
And how to hyde my harmes with fole dyffembling chere,
Whan in my face the painted thoughtes would outwardly appeare.
I know how that the bloud forfakes the face for dred;
And how by fhame it faynes agayne the Chekes with flamyng red:
I know under the Grene, the Serpent how he lurkes:
The hammer of the reftlefs forge I, More elie how it workes.

I know and con by roate the tale that I woulde tell
But ofte the woordes come iourth awrye of him that lovech well.
I know in heate and colde the Lover how he fhakes,
In fynging how he doth complayne, in neeping how he wakes
To languifh without ache, fickeieffe for to confume,
A thoufand thynges for to devyfe, refolvynge of his fume;
And though he lyfe to fee his Ladyes Grace full fore Such pleatures as delyght hys Eye, do not his helthe reftore.
I know to feke the tracte of my defyred foe,
And fere to fynde that I do feek, but chiefly this I know,
That Lovers muft transfourme into the thynge beloved,
And live (alas! who would believe?) with fprite from Lyfe removed.
I knowe in harty fighes and laughters of the fpleene,
At once to chaunge my ftate, my will, and eke my colour clene.
I know how to deceyve my felf wythe others helpe,
And how the Lyon chaftifed is, by beatynge of the whelpe.
In ftandynge nere the fyre, I know how that I freafe; Farre of I burne, in bothe I wafte, and fo my Lyfe I leefe.
I know how Love doth rage upon a yeylding mynde,
How fmalle a nete may take and mafe a harte of gentle kynde
Or elfe with feldom fwete to feafon hepes of gall,
Revived with a glymple of Grace old forrowes to let fall.
The hydden traynes I know, and fecret fnares of Love,
How foone a loke will prynte a thoughte that never may remove.
The flypper fate I know, the fodein turnies from welthe
The doubffull hope, the certaine wooe, and fure de-〔paired helthe.
A praife of his ladie.

GEVE place you ladies and be gone; .............ese Boaft not your felves at all,
For here at hande approcheth one,
Whofe face will ftayne you all.
The vertue of her lively lookes
Excels the precious ftone,
I wifhe to have none other bookes
To reade or look upon.
In eche of her two chriftall eyes,
Smyleth a naked boy;
It would you all in heart fuffife
To fee that lampe of joye.
I think nature hath loft the moulde,
Where fhe her fhape did take;
Or elfe I doubte if nature couilde
So fayre a creature make.
She may be well comparde
Unto the Phenix kinde,
Whofe like was never feene nor heard,
That any man can fynde.
In lyfe fhe is Diana cliaft
In trouth Penelopey,
In woord and eke in dede ftedfaft ;
What will you more we fay:
If all the world were fought fo farre,
Who could finde fuche a wight,
Her beauty twinkleth lyke a ftarre
Within the frofty night.
The Lover refufed of his love, embraceth vertue.

The Death of ZOROAS, an Egiptian aftronomer, in the firft fight that Alexander had with the Perfians.

NOW clattring armes, now raging broyls of warre, Gan paffe the noys of dredfull trumpetts clang, Shrowded with fhafts, the heaven with cloude of dartes, Covered the ayre. Againt full fatted bulles.
As forceth kyndled yre the lyons keene,
Whofe greedy gutts the gnawing hunger prickes;
So Macedons againft the Perfians fare,
Now, corpfes hyde the purpurde foyle with blood;
Large naughter on eche fide, but Perfes more,
Moyt fieldes bebled, theyr heartes and nurnbers bate,
Fainted while they gave backe, and fall to fighte.
The Jitening Macedon by fwordes, by gleaves,
By bandes and troupes of footemen, with his garde, Speedes to Dary, but hym his mereft kyn,
Oxate preferves with horfemen on a plumpe
Before his carr, that none his charge fhould give.
Here grunts, here groans, eche where flrong youth is fpent:
Shaking her bloudy hands, Bellone among
The Perfes foweth all kind of cruel death :
With throte yent he roares, he lyeth along
His entrailes with a launce through gryded quyte,
Hym fmytes the club, hym woundes farre ftryking bowe,
And him the fling, and him the fhining fword;
He dyeth, he is all dead, he pantes, he reftes.

Barclay wrote about 1550; his chief work is the Sbip of Fooles, of which the following extract will hew his ftyle.

Of Mockers and Scorners, and falle Accufers.
Heartlefs fooles, hafte here to our doctrine, Leaue off the wayes of your enormitie, Enforce you to my preceptes to encline, For here fhall I thewe you good and veritie: Encline, and ye finde fhall great profperitie, Enfuing the doctrine of our fathers olde, And godly lawes in valour worth great golde.
Who that will followe the graces manyfolde Which are in vertue, fhall finde auauncement : Wherforc ye fooles that in your finne are bolde, Enfue ye wifdome, and leaue your lewde intent, Wifdome is the way of men moft excellent: Therfore haue done, and fhortly fpede your pace, To quaynt your felf and company with grace.

Learne what is verue, therin is great folace, Learne what is cruch, fadnes and prudence, Let grutche be gone, and grauitie purchafe, Forlake your folly and inconuenience, Ceafe to be foolesi), and ay to fue offence, Collo me we chiefe roote of codlynes, Followe ye vertue, chiefe roote of godynes, $x, s t l y$ For it and wifedome is ground of clenlynes. Iom 70

Wifedome and vertue two thinges are doubtles, Whiche man enduéth with honour fpeciall, burinuM But fuche heartes as flepe in foolifhnes Knoweth nothing, and will nought know at all : But in this little barge in principall All foolifh mockers lipurpofe to reprene, Clawe he his backe that feeleth itche or greue.

Mockers and fcorners that are harde of beleue, With a rough combe here will I clawe and grate, To proue if they will from their vice remeue, And leaue their folly, which caufeth great debate: Suche caytiues fpare neyther poore man nor eftate, And where their felfe are mofte worthy derifion, Other men to forne is all their moft condition.

Yet are mo fooles of this abufion, Whiche of wife men defpifeth the doctrine, With mowes, mockes, fcorne, and collufion, Rewarding rebukes for their good difcipline: Shewe to fuche wifdome, yet thall they not encline Unto the fame, but fet nothing therby, But mocke thy doctrine, ftill or openly.

So in the worlde it appeareth commonly, That who that will a foole rebuke or blame, A mocke or mowe fhall he haue by and by: Thus in derifion haue fooles their fpeciall game. Correct a wife man that woulde efchue ill name, And fayne would learne, and his lewde life amende, And to thy wordes he gladly fhall intende.

If by misfortune a rightwife man offende, He gladly fuffereth a iutte correction,
And him that him teacheth taketh for his frende $e_{2}$ Him felfe putcing mekely unto fubiection, Folowing his preceptes and good direction: But yf that one a foole rebuke or blame, He fhall his teacher hate, flaunder and diffame.

Howbeit his wordes oft turne to his own fhame, And his owne dartes retourne to him agayne, And fo is he fore wounded with the fame, And in wo endeth, great mifery and payne. It alfo proued full often is certayne, That they that on mockers alway their mindes caft, Shall of all orher be mocked at the laft.

He that gueth right, ftedfaft, fure, and faft, May him well mocke that goeth halting and lame, And he that is white may well his fcornes caft, Agaynft a man of Inde : but no man ought to blame Anothers vice, while he vfeth the fame. But who that of finne is cleane in deede and thought, May him well fcorne whofe liuing is ftarke nought. The fcornes of Naball full dere fhould haue been bought, If Abigayl his wife difcrete and fage,
Had not by kindnes right crafty meanes fought, The wrath of Dauid to temper and affwage. Hath not two beares in their fury and rage

Thus have I deduced the Engli/h language from the age of Alfred to that of Elizabeth; in fome parts imperfectly for want of materials; but I hope, at leaft, in

Two and fortie children rent and torme,
For they the prophete Helyfeus did icorne.
So might they curfe the time that they were borne, For their mocking of this prophete diuine:
So many other of this fort often mourne
For their lewde mockes, and fall into ruiné.
Thus is it foly for wife men to encline,
To this lewde flocke of fooles, for fee thou fhall
Them mofte fcorning that are moft bad of all.
The Lenuoy of Barclay to the fooles.
Ye mocking fooles that in fcorne fet your ioy, Proudly defpiting Gods punition: Take ye example by Cham the fonne of Noy, Which laughed his father vnto derifion, Which him after curfed for his tranfgreffion, And made him feruaunt to all his lyne and focke. So fhall ye caytifs at the conclufion, Since ye are nought, and other fcorne and mocke.

About the year 1553 wrote Dr. Wilfon, a man celebrated for the politenefs of his fyle, and the extent of his knowledge: what was the ftate of our language in his time, the following may be of ufe to fhow.

PRonunciation is an apte orderinge bothe of the voyce, countenaunce, and all the whole bodye, accordynge to the worthines of fuche woordes and mater as by $f_{p}$ eache are declared. The vfe hereof is fuche for anye one that liketh to haue prayfe for tellynge his tale in open affemblie, that hauing a good tongue, and a comelye countenaunce, he fhalbe thought to paffe all other that haue the like vtteraunce : thoughe they haue much better learning. The tongue geueth a certayne grace to enerye matter, and beautifieth the caufe in like maner, as a fwete foundynge lute muche fetteth forthe a meane deuifed ballade. Or as the founde of a good inftrumente fyrreth the hearers, and moueth muche delite, fo a cleare foundyng voice comforteth muche our deintie eares, with muche fwete melodie, and caufeth vs to allowe the matter rather for the reporters fake, then the reporter for the matters fake. Demofthenes therfore, that famoufe oratour, beyng afked what was the chiefeft point in al oratorie, gaue the chiefe and onely praife to Pronunciation; being demaunded, what was the feconde, and the thirde, he ftil made anfwere, Pronunciation, and would make none other aunfwere, till they lefte afkyng, declaryng hereby that arte without vtteraunce can dooe nothyng, vtteraunce without arte can dooe right muche. And no doubte that man is in outwarde apparaunce halfe a good clarke, that hath a cleane tongue, and a comely gefture of his body. ÆEchines lykwyfe beyng bannifhed his countrie through Demotthenes, when he had redde to the Rhodians his own oration, and Demofthenes aunfwere thereunto, by force whereof he was bannifhed, and all they marueiled muche at the excellencie of the fame: then (qd Æfchines) you would have marueiled muche more if you had heard hymfelfe fpeak it. Thus beyng caft in miferie and bannifhed for euer, he could not but geue fuch great reporte of his deadly and mortal ennemy.
fuch a manner that its progrefs may be eafily traced, and the gradations obferved, by which it advanced from its firft rudenefs to its prefent elegance.

ENGLISHTONGUE.

GRAMMAR, which is the art of ufing words properly, comprifes four parts; Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Profody.
In this divifion and order of the parts of grammar I follow the common grammarians, without enquiring whether a fitter diftribution might not be found. Experience has long fhown this method to be fo diftinct as to obviate confufion, and fo comprehenfive as to prevent any inconvenient omiffions. I likewife ufe the terms already received, and already undertood, though perhaps others more proper might fometimes be invented. Sylburgius, and other innovators, whofe new terms have funk their learning into neglect, have left fuf ficient warning againt the trifling ambition of teaching arts in a new language.

Orthocraphy is the art of combining letters into fyllables, and fyllables into words. It therefore teaches previoully the form and found of letters.

The letters of the Englifh language are,

To thefe may be added certain combinations of letters univerfally ufed in printing; as $\mathrm{ct}, \mathrm{ft}, \mathrm{fl}, \mathrm{fl}$, $\mathrm{fb}, \mathrm{fl}, \mathrm{ff}, \mathrm{ff}, \mathrm{fi}, \mathrm{ffi}, \mathrm{fi}, \mathrm{ffi}, \mathrm{ffl}$, and $\&$, or and per $f c$, and. $\quad E, f t, f f, \Omega, \rho b, \int k, f f, \int f, \int i, f i, f i, f i$,

[^1]different forms, our alphabet may be properly faid to confift of twenty-fix letters
None of the fmall confonants have a double form, except $\int$, $s$; of which $\int$ is ufed in the beginning anid middle, and $s$ at the end.

Vowels are five, $a, e, i, o, u$.

Such is the number generally received; but for $i$ it is the practice to write $y$ in the end of words, as thy, holy'; before $i$, as from die, dying; from beautify, becuutifying; in the words fays, days, eyes; and in words derived from the Greek, and written originally with $v$, as fyfem,

For $u$ we often write $w$ after a vowel, to make a diphthong; as rawe, grew, view, vow, flowing, lownefs.

The founds of all the letters are various.
In treating on the letters, I fhall not, like fome other gramma rians, enquire into the original of their form as an antiquarian; nor into their formation and prolation by the organs of fpeech, as a mechanick, anatomift, or phyfiologif ; nor into the properties and gradation of founds, or the elegance or harfinefs of particular combinations, as a writer of univerfal and tranfcendental grammar. I confider the Englifh alphabet only as it is Englifh ; and even in this narrow view I follow the example of former granmarians, perhaps with more reverence than judgment, becaufe by writing in Englifh I fup pofe my reader already acquainted with the Englifh language; and becaufe of founds in general it may be obferved, that words are unable to defcribe them. An account therefore of the primitive and fimple letters is ufelefs almot alike to thofe who know their found, and thofe who know it not

Of $V$ O E L S.

A.
$A$ has three founds, the flender, open, and broad.
$A$ llender is found in moft words, as face, mane; and in words ending in ation, as creation, falvation, generation.
The $a$ flender is the proper Englifh $a$, called very juftly by Erpenius, in his Arabick Grammar, a Anglicum a, cume e miffum, as having a middie in his Arabick Grammar, a Anglicum, cume mifum, as having a middie found between the open $a$ and the $e$. The French have a fimilar found between the open $a$ and the $e$. The Fren.
found in the word pais, and in their $e$ mafculine.
$A$ open is the $a$ of the Italian, or nearly refembles it; as fatber, rather, congratulate, fancy, glafs.
$A$ broad refembles the $a$ of the German; as all, wall, call.
Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as fault, moult; and we ftill fay fuult, voult. This was probably the Saxon found, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the ruftick pronunciation; as maun for man, baund for band.

The fhort $a$ approaches to the $a$ open, as grafs.
The long $a$, if prolonged by $e$ at the end of the word, is always ीender, as graze, fame.
$A$ forms a diphthong only with $i$ or $y$, and $u$ or $w$. Ai or ay, as in plain, wain, gay, clay, has only the found of the long and flender $a$, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, wane.
$A u$ or aw has the found of the German $a$, as raw, naughty.
Ae is fometimes found in Latin words not compleatly naturalifed or afimilated, but is no Englifh diphthong; and is more properly exprefied by fingle $c$, as Cefar, Eneas.

A GRAMMAR OF THE ## E.

$E$ is the letter which occurs moft frequently in the Englifh language.
$E$ is long, as in fcenne; or fhort, as in céllar, feparate, cëlcurate, mën, thër.

It is always fhort before a double confonant, or two confonants, relënt, mëdlar, rëptile, fërpënt, cĕllar, cëffation, bléfling, féll, fëlling, dëbt.
$F$ is always mute at the end of a word, except in monofyllables that have no other vowel, as the; or proper names, as Penelope, Pbebe, Derbe; being ufed to modify the foregoing confonant, as fince, once, bedge, oblige; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as băn, bīne; cün, cāne; pün, pīne; tün, tūne; rơb, rōbe; pöp, pope; fïr, fire; cür, cüre; tüb, tübe.

Almolt all words which now terminate in confonants ended anciently in e, as year, yeare; ruildnefs, rildneffe; which e probably had the force of the French $e$ feminine, and conftituted a fyllable with its affociate confonant; for, in old editions, words are fometimes divided thus, clea-re, fel-le, knowoled-ge. This e was perhaps for a time rocal or filent in poetry as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden calls it the filent $e$.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glöve, live, givve.

It has fometimes in the end of words a found obfcure, and fcarcely perceptible, as operr. Bapon, Sootten, thiftle, participle, meire, lucre.
$E$ forms a diphthong with $a$, as near ; with $i$, as deign, receive; and with $u$ or $w$, as new, flew.
Ea founds like e long, as mean; or like ee, as dear, clear, ncar.

Ii is founded like e long, as feize, perceiving.
Eu founds as $u$ long and foft.
$E, a, u$ are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the found of $u$.
$E$ may be faid to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agree, fleeping.
Eo is found in yeomen, where it is founded as e fhort; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

$I$ has a found, long, as fine; and fhort, as fin.
That is eminently obfervable in $i$, which may be likewife remarked in other letters, that the fhort found is not the long found contrakted, but a found wholly different.

The long found in monofyllables is always marked by the $e$ final, as thin, thine.
$I$ is often founded before $r$ as a fhort $u$; as firt, firft, fivirt.

It forms a diphthong only with $e$, as field, 乃ield, which is founded as the double ee; except friend, which is founded as frënd.
$I$ is joined with eu in lieu, and eww in vierw; which triphthongs are founded as the open $u$.

O.

O is long, as böne, obbedient, corröding; or hort, as blöck, knöck, öblique, löll.
Women is pronounced vimen.
The fhort o has fometimes the found of a clofe $u$, as forn, come.
$O$ coalefces into a diphthong with $a$, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the found of o long.
$O$ is united to $e$ in fome words derived from Greek, as ceconomy ; but oc being not an Englifh diphthong, they are better written as they are founded, with only e, economy.

With $i$, as oil, foil, moil, noifome.
This coalition of letters feems to unite the founds of the two letters as far as two founds can be united without being deftroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.
With 0 , as boot, boot, cooler; 00 has the found of the Italian $u$.
With $u$ or $w$, as our, power, flower; but in fome words has only the found of o long, as in foul, bowl, fow, grow. Thefe different founds are ufed to diftinguifh different fignifications; as bore, an inftrument for fhooting; bow, a depreffion of the head: Sow, the the of a boar; fow, to fcatter feed : bcwl, an orbicular body; borol, a wooden veffel.

Ou is fometimes pronounced like o foft, as court; fometimes like o thort, as cough; fometimes like $u$ clofe, as could; or $u$ open, as rough, lough; which ufe only can teach.
$O u$ is frequently ufed in the laft fyllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are made Englifh, as honour, labour, farvour, from bonor, labor, favor.
Some late innovators have cjected the $u$, without confidering that the laff fyllable gives the found neither of or nor ur, but a found between them, if not compounded of both; befides that they are probably derived to us from the Frencl nouns in eur, as boneur, faveur.

U.

$U$ is long in $\bar{u} \int e$, confufion; or fhort, as $u s$, concuuffion.

It coalefces with $a, e, i, 0$; but has rather in thefe combinations the force of the $w$ confonant, as quaff, queft, quit, quite, longuifh; fometimes in ui the $i$ lofes its found, as in juice. It is fometimes mute before $a, c$, $i, y$, as guard, guef, guife, buy.

- $U$ is followed by $e$ in virtue, but the $e$ has no found.
Y.
$\Upsilon$ is a vowel, which, as Quintilian obferves of one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It fupplies the place of $i$. at the end of words, as thy; before an $i$, as dying; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive ; as deftroy, defroyer; betray, betrayed, betrayer; pray, prajer; Say, fayer; day, days.
$r$ being the Saxon vowel $\dot{y}$, which was commonly ufed where $i$ is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

General Rules.

A vowel in the beginning or middle fyllable, before two confonants, is commonly fhort, as öppörtunity.

In monofyllables a fingle vowel before a fingle confonant is fhort, as Jtag, frog.

Of CONSONANTS.

B.
$B$ has one unvaried found, fuch as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, fubtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, tbumb, climb, comb, womb.

It is ufed before $l$ and $r$, as black, brown.
C.
$C$ has before $e$ and $i$ the found of $\int$; as fincerely, centrick, century, circular, ciftern, city, jiccity: before $a, 0$, and $u$, it founds like $k$, as calm, concavity, copper, incorporate, curiofity, concupifcence.
$C$ might be omitted in the language without lofs, fince one of its founds might be fupplied by $f$, and the other by $k$, but that it preferves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, captive from captivus.
$C b$ has a found which is analyfed into $t /$, as cburch, cbin, crutch. It is the fame found which the Italians give to the $c$ fimple before $i$ and $e$, as citta, cerro.
$C b$ is founded like $k$ in words derived from the Greek, as cbymift, fcbeme, choler. Arch is commonly founded ark before a vowel, as archangel; and with the Englinh found of ch before a confonant, as archbibop.
$C h$, in fome French words not yet afimilated, founds like $\beta$, as mabine, cbaife.
C, according to Englifh orthography, never ends a word ; therefore we write flick, block, which were originally ficke, blocke, in fuch words. C is now mute.
It is ufed before $l$ and $r$, as clock, crols.

D

Is uniform in its found, as death, diligent:
It is ufed before $r$, as drarw, drofs; and $w$, as dwell.

F.

$F$, though having a name beginning with a vowel, it is numbered by the grammarians among the femivowels, yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiounly founded before a liquid, as $f(a f k$, $f y$, freckle. It has an unvariable found, except that of is fometimes fpoken nearly as ou.
G.
$G$ has two founds, one hard, as in gay, go, gun; the other foft, as in gem, giant.

E N G L, I S H

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, fnug, fong, frog.

Before $e$ and $i$ the found is uncertain:
$G$ before $e$ is foft, as gem, generation, except in gear, gold, geefe, get, gewegaw, and derivatives from words ending in $g$, as finging, fironger, and generally before or at the end of words, as finger.
$G$ is mute before n, as gnafo, fign, foreign.
$G$ before $i$ is hard, as give, except in giant, gigantick, gibbet, gite, giblets, giles, gill, gillifloweer, gin, ginger, gingle, gip $\sqrt{y}$.
$G b$ in the beginning of a word has the found of the hard $g$, as gbofly; in the middle, and fometimes at the end, it is quite filent, as though, right, fought, fpoken tho', rite, foute.

It has often at the end the found of $f$, as lough; whence laugbter retains the fame found in the middle; cough, trough, fough, tough, enough, Nough.
It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation $g /$ had the force of a confonant, deeply guttural, which is fill continued among the Scotch.
$G$ is ufed before $b, l$, and $r$.

H.

$H$ is a note of afpiration, and fhows that the following vowel mut be pronounced with a ftrong emiffion of the breath, at bat, borfe.

It feldom, perhaps never, begins any but the firft fyllable, in which it is always founded with a full breath, except in beir, berb, bofller, bonour, bumble, boneft, bumour, and their derivatives.

J.

$f$ confonant founds uniformly like the foft $g$, and is therefore a letter ufelefs, except in etymology, as ejacrilation, jefter, jocund, juice.

K :

$K$ has the found of hard $c$, and is ufed before $e$ and $i$, where, according to Englifh analogy, $c$ would be foft, as kept, king, fkirt, Jkeptick, for fo it hould be written, not ceptick.

It is ufed before $n$, as knell, knot, but totally lofes its found.
$K$ is never doubled; but $c$ is ufed before it to fhorten the vowel by a double confonant, as cöckle, pickle.

L.

$L$ has in Englifh the fame liquid found as in other languages.
The cuftom is to double the $l$ at the end of monofyllab'es, as kill, ruill, full. Thefe words were originally written kille, willc, fulle; and when the $e$ firft crew filert, and was afterwards omitted, the $l l$ was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.
$L$ is fometimes mute, as in calf, balf, balves, calves, could, would, , Bould, pfalm, talk, Salmon, falcon.

The Saxon, who delighted in guttural founds, fometimes afpirated the $l$ at the beginning of words, as hlap, a loaf, or bread; hlap.no, a lord; but this pronunciation is now diufed.

Le at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the $e$ is almoft mute, as table, fouttle.
M.
$M$ has always the fame found, as murmur, monumental.

N.

$N$ has always the fame found, as noble, monners.
$N$ is fometimes mute after $m$, as damn, condemn, byman.

P.

$P$ has always the fame found, which the Welfh and Germans confound with $B$.
$P$ is fometimes mute, as in $p \int a l m$, and between $m$ and $t$, as tempt.
$P b$ is ufed for $f$ in words derived from the Greek, as philofopber, pbilantlbropy, Pbilip.

Q.

2 as in other languages, is always followed by $u$, and has a found which our Saxon anceflors well ex-preffed by $\mathrm{cp}, \mathrm{cw}$, as quadrant, qucen, equeftrian, quilt, enquiry, quire, quotidian. 2u is never followed by $u$.
$2 u$ is fometimes founded, in words derived from the French, like $k$, as conquer, liquor, rifque, cbequer.

R.

$R$. has the fame rough fnarling found as in other tongues.

The Saxons ufed often to put $b$ before it, as before $l$ at the beginning of words.
$R b$ is ufed in words derived from the Greek, as myrrh, myrrbine, catarrbous, rbeum, rbeumatick, rbyme.

S.

$S$ has a hiffing found, as fibilation, fifter.

A fingle s feldom ends any word, except the third perfon of verbs, as loves, grozes; and the plurals of nouns, as trecs, buffoes, diftrefes; the pronouns this, bis, ours, yours, us; the adverb thus; and words derived from Latin, as rebus, furplus; the clofe being always either in $\mathcal{S}$, as boupfe, borfe, or in $f s$, as grafs, drefs, blifs, lefs, anciently grafic, dreffe.
$S$ fingle, at the end of words, has a groffer found, like that of $z$, as trees, cyes, except tbis, thus, us, rebus, furplus.

It founds like $z$ before inn, if a vowel goes before, as intrufion; and like $\int$, if it follows a confonant, as converfion.
It founds like $z$ before $e$ mute, as refufe, and before $y$ final, as rofy; and in thofe words, bofom, dєfire, wifdom, prifon, prifoner, préfent, prefènt, damfel, cafoment.

It is the peculiar quality of $f$, that it may be founded before all confonants, except $x$ and $\approx$, in which $\int$ is comprifed, $x$ being only $k s$, and $\approx$ a hard or grofs $f$. This $f$ is therefore termed by grammarians fure potefatis litera; the reafon of which the learned Dr . Clarke erroneouly fuppofed to be, that in fome words it might be doubled at pleafure. Thus we find in feveral languages:
 fgranare, foake, fumber, finell, firife, Spacc, Splendour, fpring, fquesee, jbrew, fep, Arength, framen, fiventura, freell.

T.

$\mathcal{T}$ has its cuftomary found, as take, temptation.
$T_{i}$ before a vowel has the found of $\sqrt{2}$, as folvation, except an $\int$ goes before, as queftion, excepting likewife derivatives from $y$, as mighty, miobtier.
$\tau b$ has two founds; the one foft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The found is foft in thefe words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds, that, thefe, thou, thee, thy, thine, their, they, this, thefe, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and beween $r$ and a vowel, as burtben.

In other words it is hard, as thick, tbunder, faith, faithful. Where it is foftened at the end of a word, an e filent muft be added, as breath, breathe; cloth, clothe.

V.

$V$ has a found of near affinity to that of $f$, vain, vanity.

From $f$ in the Iflandick alphabet, $v$ is only diftinguifhed by a diacritical point.
W.

Of $w$, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, fome grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a confonant; and not rather as it is called a double $u$ or ou, as water may be refolved into ouater; but letters of the fame found are always reckoned confonants in other alphabets: and it may be obferved, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as frofty winter.
$W b$ has a found accounted peculiar to the Englifh, which the Saxons better expreffed by hp, bre, as wobat, whence, whiting; in whore only, and fometimes in wholefome, wh is founded like a fimple $b$.

X.

$X$ begins no Englifh word; it has the found of $k s_{2}$ as axle, extraneous.
Y.
$\Upsilon$, when it follows a confonant, is a vowel; when it precedes cither vowel or diphthong, is a confonant, ye，young．It is thought by fome to be in all cales a vowel．But it may be obferved of $y$ as of $w$ ，that it follows a vowel without any hiatus，as rofy youth．

Z．

$Z$ begins no word originally Englifh；it has the found as its name izzard or $\int$ bard exprefles，of an $\int$ uttered with clofer comprefion of the palate by the tongue，as freeze，froze．

In orthography I have fuppofed orthoepy，or juft utterance of words， to be included；orthography being only the art of expreffing certain founds by proper characters．I have therefore obferved in what words any of the letters are mute．
Mof of the writers of Englifh grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwife than they are written，and feem not fuf－ ficiently to have confidered，that of Englifh，as of all living tongues， there is a double pronunciation，one curfory and colloquial，the other regular and folemn．The curfory pronunciation is always vague and uncertain，being made different in different mouths by negligence，un－ uncertain，being made different in different mouths by negligence，un－ fkilfulnefs，or affectation．The folemn pronunciation，though by no means immutable and permanent，is yet always lefs remote from the means immutable and permanent，is yet always lefs remote from the orthography，and lefs liable to capricious innovation．They have however generally formed their tables according to the curfory fpeech of thofe with whom they happened to converfe ；and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner，have often eftablifhed the jargon of the loweft of the people as the model of fpeech．
For pronunciation the beft general rule is，to confider thofe as the molt elegant fpeakers，who deviate leaff from the written words．

There have been many fchemes offered for the emendation and fettlement of our orthography，which，like that of other nations， being formed by chance，or according to the fancy of the carlieft writers in rude ages，was at firft very various and uncertain，and is yet fufficiently irregular．Of thefe reformers fome have endea－ voured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation； without confidering that this is to meafure by a fhadow，to take that for a model or ftandard which is changing while they apply it．Others， lefs abfurdly indeed，but with equal unlikelihood of fuccefs，have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of founds， that every found may have its own character，and every character a fingle found．Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a fynod of grammarians upon principles of fcience． But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice， But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice， and make all their old books ufelefs？or what advantage would a and make all their old books ufelefs？or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confufion and perplexity fuch an alteration？
Some of thefe fchemes I fhall however exhibit，which may be ufed according to the diverfities of genius，as a guide to reformers， or terrour to innovators．
One of the firt who propofed a fcheme of regular orthography， was Sir Thomas Smith，fecretary of ftate to Queen Elizabeth， man of real learning，and much practifed in grammatical difquif1－ tions．Had he written the following lines according to his fcheme， they would have appeared thus．

At length Erafmus，that great injur＇d name， The glory of the priefthood，and the fhame， Stemm＇d the wild torrent of a barb＇rous age， And drove thofe holy Vandals off the ftage．

At lenģ Erafmus，大ેat grët ingurd nâm，
$\Delta e$ glorï of te prëfhüd，and Je zâm，
Stemmd te quild torrent of a barb＇rous ât
And dıür ơös höli Vandals öff be fấr．
After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr．Gill，the celebrated mafter of St．Paul＇s fchool in London；which I cannot eprefent exactly for want of types，but will approach as nearly as I can by means of characters now in ufe as to make it underftood，ex－ hibiting two fianzas of Spenfer in the reformed orthography．

Spenfer，book iii．canto 5
Unthankful wretch，faid he，is this the meed，

Dr．Gill was followed by Charles Butler，a man who did not want an undertanding which might have qualified him for better em－ ployment．He feems to have been more fanguine than his prede－ ceffors，for he printed his book according to his own fcheme which the following fpecimen will make eafily underfood

But whenfoever you have occafion to trouble their patience，or to come among them being troubled，it is better to fand upon you guard，than to truft to their gentlenefs．For the fafeguard of your face，which they have moft mind unto，provide a purfehood，made of coarfe boultering，to be drawn and knit about your collar，which for more fafety is to be lined againft the eminent parts with woollen cloth．Firft cut a piece about an inch and a half broad，and lialf a yard long，to reach round by the temples and forehead，from one ear to the other ；which being fowed in his place，join unto it two hort peces of the fame breadth under the eyes，for the balls of the cheeks，and then fet an other piece about the breadth of a fhilling againft the top of the nofe．At other times，when they are not an－ gered，a little piece half a quarter broad，to cover the eyes and parts about them，may ferve though it be in the heat of the day．

In the time of Charles I．there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography；as appears，among other books，in fuch editions of the works of Milton as were publifhed by himfelf．Of thefe reformers every man had his own fcheme；but they agreed in one general defign of accommodating the letters to the pronuncia－ tion，by ejecting fuch as they thought fuperfluous．Some of them would have written thefe lines thus：

All the erth  Shall then be paradis，far happier place  Than this of Eden，and far happier dais．

Bifhop．Wilkins afterwards，in his great work of the philofophical language，propofed，without expecting to be followed，a regular or－ thography ；by which the Lord＇s prayer is to be written thus

Yer Fádher heitfh art in héven，halloed bi dhyi nám，dhyi cingdỳm cẏm，dhy sill bi dyn in erth as it is in héven，\＆c．

We have fince had no general reformers ；but fome ingenious men have endeavoured to deferve well of their country，by writing bonor and labor for bonour and labour，red for read in the preter－tenfe，sais for fays，repete for repeat，explane for explain，or declame for declains Of thefe it may be faid，that as they have done no good，they have done little harm；both becaufe they have innovated little，and be－ done little harm；both becaufe they have innovated little，and be－ caufe few have followed them．

E T Y M O L O G Y．

ETYMOLOG．Y teaches the deduction of one word from another，and the various modifica－ tions by which the fenfe of the fame word is diverfi－ fied；as borre，borfes；I love，I loved．

Of the Article．
The Englifh have two articles，an or $a$ ，and the：
$A_{N}, A$ ．
$A$ has an indefinite fignification，and means ore，with fome reference to more；as，This is a good book，that is， one among the books that are good．He rwas killed by a fword，that is，fome frword．Ibis is a better book for a man than a boy，that is，for one of thofe that are men than one of thoje that are boys．An army might enter witbout refiftance，that is，any army．

In the fenfes in which we ufe $a$ or $a n$ in the fingular， we fpeak in the plural without an article；as，$t$ befe are good books．

1 have made an the original article，becaufe it is only the Saxon ant，or $\mathfrak{m n}$ ，one，applied to a new ufe；as the German cin，and the

French

French un ; the $n$ being cut off before a confonant in the fpeed of ut terance.

Grammarians of the laft age direct, that an fhould be ufed before $b$; whence it appears that the Englifh anciently afpirated lefs. An is ftill ufed before the filent $b$, as an berb, an boneft man: but otherwife $a$; as,

A horfe, a horfe, my kingdom for a horfe.
SbakeJpearc.
The has a particular and definite fignification. The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whofe mortal tafte Brought death into the world. Milton.
That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green berbs for the ufe of man; that is, for thofe beings that are cattle, and bis ufe that is man.
$T$ he is ufed in both numbers.
I am as free as Nature firft made man,
Ere the bafe laws of fervitude began,
When wild in woods the noble favage ran. Dryd.
Many words are ufed without articles; as,

1. Proper names, as $\mathcal{F} \circ b n$, Alexander, Longinus, AriAtarcbus, Ferufalem, Atbens, Rome, London. God is ufed as a proper name.
2. Abftract names, as blacknefs, witchcraft, virtue, vice, beauty, ugliness, love, batred, anger, goodnature, kindnefs.
3. Words in which nothing but the mere being of any thing is implied: This is not beer, but water; This is not brafs, but feel.

Of Nouns Substantives.

The relations of Englifh nouns to words going before or following are not expreffed by cafes, or changes of termination, but as in moft of the other European languages by prepofitions, unlefs we may be faid to have a genitive cafe.

Singular.

Nom. Magifter, a Mafter, the Mafter.
Gen. Magiftri, of a Mafter, of the Mafter, or Mafters, the Mafters.
Dat. Magiftro, to a Mafter, to the Mafter.
Acc. Magiftrum, a Matter, the Mafter.
Voc. Magifter, Mafter, O Matter.
Abl. Magiftro, from a Mafter, from the Mafter.

Plural.
Nom. Magiftri, Mafters, the Mafters.
Gen. Magiftrorum, of Mafters, of the Maiters.
Dat. Magiftris, to Mafters, to the Matters.
Acc. Magiftros, Mafters, the Mafters.
Voc. Magiftri, Mafters, O Mafters.
Abl. Magiftris, from Mafters, from the Mafters.
Our nouns are therefore only declined thus :
Mafter, Gen. Mafters. Plur. Mafters.
Scholar, Gen. Scholars. Plur. Scholars.
Thefe genitives are always written with a mark of elifion, mafter's, fchclar's, according to an opinion long received, that the 's is a contraction of bis, as the foldier's waiour, for the foldier his valour: but this cannot be the true original, becaufe's is put to female nouns, Wocannot be the true Vi, gin's delicacy; Haugbty Yuno's unrelenting bate: man's beauty; the 1 ig gin's delicacy; Hexfons; the rabble's infolence; the and collechvel nouns, all thefe cafes it is apparent that bis cannot be multituae's We Wertor likewife, the foundation's Arength, the diamond's underftood. We fay likewile, the foundation's frength, the diamond st
Luftre, the winter's feverity; but in thefe cafes his may be underfood, luffre, the winter's Jeverity; but in there cales his may be underfood, be and his having formerly been applied to neuters in the place now fupplied by it and its.
The learned, the fagacious Wallis, to whom every Engling grammarian owes a tribute of reverence, calls this modification of the noun an adjective poffefive; I think with no more propriety than he might have applied the fame to the genitive in equitionn decus, Troje oris, or any other Latin genitive.
This termination of the noun feems to confitute a real genitive indicating poffeflion. It is derived to us from thofe who declined and fo in two other of therr leven declenfions.
It is a further confirmation of this opinion, that in the old poets both the genitive and plural were longer by a fyllable than the original word : Enitis, for knight's, in Chaucer; leavis, for leaves, in Spenifer. When a word ends in s, the genitive may be the fame with the nominative, as Venus temple.

T O N G U E.
The plural is formed by adding $s$, as table, tables; fly, fies; fifter, fifters; wood, woods; or es where $s$ could not otherwife be founded, as after $c h, s, f, x, z$; after $c$ founded like $s$, and $g$ like $j$; the mute $e$ is vocal before $s$, as lance, lances; outrage, outrages.

The formation of the plural and genitive fingular is the fame.
A few words yet make the plural in n, as men, reomen, oxen. fruine, and more anciently eyen and Boon. This formation is that which generally prevails in the Teutonick dialects.

Words that end in $f$ commonly form their plural by ves, as loaf, loaves; calf, calves.
Except a few, muff; muff's clieff, chiefs. So boof, roof, proof, relief, mijchief, puff, cuff, dwarf, bandherchief, grief.
Irregular plurals are teeth from tooth, lice fiom loufe, mice from moufe, geefe from goofe, feet from foot, dice from die, pence from penny, brethren from brother, children from child.

Plurals ending in $s$ have no genitives; but we fay, Womens excellencies, and Weigh the mens wits againft the ladies bairs. Pope.

Dr. Wallis thinks the Lords' houtfe may be faid for the boufe of Lord; but fuch phrafes are not now in ufe; and furely an Englifh ear rebels againft them.

Of ADJectives

Adjectives in the Englifh language are wholly indeclinable; having neither cafe, gender, nor number, and being added to fubftantives in all relations without any change; as, a good woman, good women, of a good woman; a good man, good men, of good men.

T゙be Comparifon of Adjectives.
The comparative degree of adjectives is formed by adding er, the fuperlative by adding eft, to the pofitive; as, fair, fairer, faireft; lovely, lovelier, lovelieft; fweet, fwecter, fweeteft; low, lower, loweft; bigh, higher, higheft.

Some words are irregularly compared; as good, better, beft; bad, worfe, worft; little, lefs, leaft; near, nearer, next ; much, more, moft; many (or moe), more (for moer), moft (for moeft); late, latter, lateft or laft.
Some comparatives form a fuperlative by adding moft, as netber, netbermoft; outer, outmoft; under, undermoft; up, upper, uppermoft; fore, former, foremoft.
Moft is fometimes added to a fubitantive, as topmoft, foutbmoft.

Many adjectives do not admit of comparifon by terminations, and are only compared by more and $m \circ f$, as benevolent, more benevolent, moft benevolent.

All adjectives may be compared by more and moft, even when they have comparatives and fuperlatives regularly formed; as fair; fairer, or more fair ; faireft, or moft fair.
In adjectives that admit a regular conparifon, the comparative more is oftener ufed than the fuperlative inof, as more fair is oftener written for fairer, than moff fair for faireft.

The comparifon of adjectives is very uncertain ; and being much regulated by commodioufnefs of utterance, or agreeablenefs of found, is not eafily reduced to rules.

Monofyllables are commonly compared.
Polyfyllables, or words of more than two fyllables, are feldom compared otherwife than by more and moft, as deplorable, more deplorable, moft deplorable.

Diffyllables are feldom compared if they terminate in Some, as fulfome, toilfome; in ful, as careful, spleenful, dreadful; in ing, as trifing, charming; in ous, as porous; in lefs, as carelefs, barmlefs; in ed, as curetched; in id, as candid; in al, as mortal; in ent, as recent, fervent; in ain, as certain; in ive, as miffive; in dy, as woody; in $f y$, as puffy; in $k y$, as rocky, except lucky; in my, as roomy; in ny, as finny; in py, as ropy, except bappy; in $r y$, as boary.
Some comparatives and fuperlatives are yet found in good writers formed withous regard to the foregoing rules; but in a language fubjected fo little and fo lateiy to grammar, fuch anomalies muit frequently occur.

So Boady is compared by Milton
Tun'd her nocturnal note.
What fle wills to fay or din.
Seems wifelt, virtnoufeft? difcrectef, belt

A GRAMMAR OF THE

So trifling, by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.
It is not fo decorous, in refpeet of God, that he fhould inmediately do all the meaneft and $t$ rifling eff things himfelf, without making ute of any inferior or fubordinate minister.

Famous, by Milton.
I fall be named among the famoufof
Of women, fug at folemn feftivals.
Ray on the Creaiton

Inventive, by Afcbam
Those have the inventiveff heads for all purposes, and roundel tongues in all matters.
Mortal, by Bacon.
The mortaleft poisons practifed by the Weft Indians, have rome mixture of the blood, fat, or fief of man. Bacon. Natural, by Wotton.

I will now deliver a few of the propereft and naturalleft confiderations that belong to this piece. Wotton's Architecture. Wretched, by Tobnfon.

The wretcheder are the contemners of all helps; fuch as pre fuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they underfand not things. B. Yobinfon. Powerful, by Milton.

We have fuftain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heav'n's great King hath porw'rfulleft to fend Againtt us from about his throne. Paradife Loft.
The termination in $i \beta$ may be accounted in rome fort a degree of comparifon, by which the fignification is diminished below the porilive, as black, blacki/h, or tending to blacknefs; Salt, faltijh, or having a little tate of fall: they therefore admit no comparifon. This termination is seldom added but to words expreffing fenfible qualities, nor often to words of above one fyllable, and is fcarcely fed in the folemn or fublime flyte.

Pronouns, in the Englifh language, are, $I$, thou, be, with their plurals we, ye, they, it, who, which, what, whether, whofoejer, what foever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, bis, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that, other, another, the fame.

The pronouns perfonal are irregularly inflected.

|  | Singular. | Plural. |
| :---: | :---: | :---: |
| $\left.\begin{array}{c}\text { Nom. } \\ \text { Accuf. and other } \\ \text { oblique cafes. }\end{array}\right\}$ | I | We |
| Nom. | Thou | Yes |
| Oblique. | Thee | You |

You is commonly unfed in modern writers for $y c$, particularly in the language of ceremony, where the fecond perron plural is ufed for the Second perron singular, You are my friend.

For it the practice of ancient writers was to use be, and for its, bis.

The poffefiive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without cafes or change of termination:
The pofferfive of the firft perfon is my, mine, our r, ours; of the fecond, thy, thine, you, yours; of the third, from be, bis, from he, her, and hers, and in the plural their, theirs, for both fexes.
Our, yours, hers, theirs, are fed when the fublantive preceding is Separated by a verb, as The fe are our books. Thee books are ours. Your childrcin excel ours in filature, but ours furpafs yours in learning. Ours, yours, hers, theirs, notwithftanding their feeming plural termination, are applied equally to fingular and plural fubttantives, as This book is ours. Teele books are ours.
Mine and thine were formerly fed before a vowel, as mine amiable lady; which though now difured in profe. might be fill properly continued in poetry, they are ufed as ours and yours, when they are referred to a fubftantive preceding.

Their and theirs are the poffeffives likewife of $i t$, and are therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are, who, which, what, wobether, whofocver, what forever.

Sing. and Plur.

Sing. and Plur.
Nom. Who
Gen. Whole
Other oblique cafes. Whom

Who is now fed in relation to perfons, and ribich in relation to things; but they were anciently confounded.
Choose is rather the poetical than regular genitive of rubbich:

> The fruit

Of that forbidden tree, wobofe mortal taft
Brought death into the world.
Milton.
Whether is only unfed in the nominative and accurative cafes; and has no plural, being applied only to one of a number, commonly to one of two, as, Whether of the se is left I know not. Whether fiscal I choofe? It is now almoft obsolete.

What, whether relative or interrogative, is without variation.

Whofoever, what foever, being compounded of who or what, and foever, follow the rule of their primitives.

The plural others is not unfed but when it is referred to a fubitantive preceding, as I have font other horfes. I have not font the fame horjes, but others.
Another, being only an other, has no plural.
Here, there, and where, joined with certain particles, have a relative and pronominal ufa. Hereof, herein, hereby, hereafter, herewith, thereof, therein, thereby, thereupon, thereivith, whereof, wherein, whereby, whereupon, wherewith, which fignify, of this, in this, &c. of that, in that, &xc. of which, in which, &c.

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly, there for and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in ufe. The reft feem to be paffing by degrees into neglect, though proper, ufeful, and analogous. They are referred both to fingular and plural antecedents.
There are two more words unfed only in conjunction with pronouns, own and Self.
Own is added to poffeffives, both fingular and plural, as my own band, our own bouse. It is emphatical, and implies a filent contrariety or oppofition; as, I live in ny own bouse, that is, not in a birred boule. This I did with my own band, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to poffeffives, as myself; your delves; and fometimes to perfonal pronouns, as bimfelf, itself, themselves. It then, like own, expreffes emphafis and oppofiction, as I did this my self, that is, not another; or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as We burt ourselves by vain rage.
Himself, itself, themferves, is fuppofed by Wallis to be put by corruption, for bis self, it' self, their Selves; fo that Self is always a cub. flantive. This Seems juftly observed, for we fay, He came bimfelf; Himself Bal do this; where bimfelf cannot be an accufative.

Of the V Е R в.

Englifh verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as $I$ languid. The neuters are formed like the actives.
Mort verbs fignifying action, may like wife fignify condition or habit, and become neuters, as $I$ love, I am in love; $I$ firike, I am now ftriking.

Verbs have only two tenfes inflected in their terminatons, the prefent, and fimple preterite; the other tenfes are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, foll, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The paffive voice is formed by joining the participle preterite to the fubftantive verb, as I am loved.

To Have. Indicative Mood.

PreSent Ten fe.

Sing. I have, thou haft, be hath or has ;
Plur. We have, ye have, they have.
Hos is a termination corrupted from bath, but now more frequently fed both in verfe and profe. ufed both in verfe and profe.

Simple Preterite.

Sing. I had, thou hadit, be had;
Plur. We had, ye had, they had.

Compound Preterite.

Sing. I have had, thou haft had, be has had;
Plur. We have have had, ye have had, they have had.

Preterpluperfect.
Sing. I had lad, thou hadtt had, be had had;
Plur. We had had, ye had had, they had had.
Future.
Sing. I fhall have, thou fhalt have, be fhall have;
Plur. We thall have, ge fhall have, they fhall have.

Second Future.

Sing. I will have, thou wilt have, be will have;
Plur. We will have, $y$ y will have, they will have.
By reading thefe future tenfes may be oblerved the variations of foall and weill.

Imperative Mood.
Sing. Have or have thou, let bim have;
Plur. Let us have, have or have ye, let them have.

Conjunctive Mood. Prefent.

Sing. I have, thou have, be have;
Plur. We have, ye have, they have.
Preterite fimple as in the Indicative.
Preterite compound.
Sing. I have had, they have had, be have had;
Plur. We have had, ye have had, they have had.
Future,
Sing. I fhall have, as in the Indicative.

> Second Future.

Sing. I fhall have had, thou fhalt have had, be fhall have had;
Plur. We fhall have had, ye fhall have had, they fhall have had.

Potential.

The potential form of fpeaking is expreffed by may, can, in the prefent; and might, could, or flould, in the preterite, joined with the infinitive mood of the verb.

Prefent.

Sing. I may have, thou maytt have, be may have;
Plur. We may have, ye may have, they may have.
Preterite.
Sing. I might have, thou mightt have, be might have; Plur. We might have, ye might have, they might have. Prefent.

Plur. We can have, ye can have, they can have.
Preterite.
Sing. I could have, thou couldrt have, be could have;
Plur. We could have, ye could have, they could have.
In like manner fhould is united to the verb.
There is likewife a double Preterite.
Sing. I fhould have had, thou fhouldft. have had, be fhould have had;
Plur. We flould have had, ye fhould have had, they fhould have had.
In like manner we ufe, I might have had ; I could have had, $\xi^{3}$.

Infinitive Mood.

Prefent. To have. Preterite. To have had.
Participle prefent. Having. Participle preter. Had:

Verb Active. To Love.

Indicative. Prefent.
Sing. I love, thou loveft, be loveth or loves;
Plur. We love, ye love, they love.
Preterite fimple.
Sing. I loved, thou lovedit, be loved;
Plur. We loved, ye loved, thcy loved.
Preterperfeit compared. I have loved, $\Xi^{\circ} c$.
Preterpluperfeer. I had loved, $\xi^{3}$ c.
Future. I hall love, $\mathcal{E}_{c}$ c. I will love, $\mathcal{E}_{c}$.
Imperative.
Sing. Love or love thou, let bim love;
Plur. Let us love, love or love ye, let them love.
Conjunctive. Prefent.
Sing. I love, thou love, he love;

Preterite fimple, as in the Indicative.
Preterite compound.. I have loved, © ©

Future. I fhall love, $\mathcal{E}_{6}$.
Second Fiturr. I fhall have loved, E $\overbrace{\text { c }}$.
Potential.
Prefent. I may or can love, Ėंc.
Preterite. I might, could, or fhould love, $\mathcal{J}_{6}$.
Double Pret. I might, could, or hould have loved, ©ic. Infinitive.
Prefent. To love. Preterite. To have loved.
Participle prefent. Loving. Participle paft. Loved.
The paffive is formed by the addition of the participle preterite, to the different tenfes of the verb to be, which muft therefore be here exhibited.
Indicative. Prefent.

Sing. $I \mathrm{am}$, thou art, be is ;
Plur. We are or be, ye arc or be, they are or be.
The plural $b e$ is now little in ufe.
Preterite.
Sing. I was, thou waft or wert, he was;
Plur. We were, ye were, they were.
Wert is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not to be ufed in the indicative.
Preterite compound. I have been, छcc.
Preterpluperfect. I had been, $\mathcal{J}^{c}$.
Future. I hall or will be, Ėc.
Imperative.
Sing. Be thou; let bim be;
Plur. Let us be; be $y e$; let them be. Conjunctive. Prefent.
Sing. I be, thou beeft, be be;
Plur. We be, ye be, they be.

Preterite.

Sing. I were, thou wert, be were;
Plur. We were, ye werc, they were.
Preterite compound. I have been, $\mathcal{E}$
Future. I fhall have been, $\mathcal{E}^{\circ}$ c.
Potential.
I may or can; would, could, or fhould be; could, would, or fhould have been, $\mathcal{E}^{2}$ c.

Infinitive.
Prefent. To be. Preterite. To have been:
Participle pref. Being. Participle preter. Having been.

Paffive Voice. Indicative Mood.

$I$ am loved, $E^{\circ} c$. $I$ was loved, $E_{c} c$. $I$ have been loved, $\underbrace{3}$ c.

Conjunctive Mood.
If $I$ be loved, $\underbrace{}_{c}$. If $I$ were loved, $\xi^{3}$. If $I$ fhall have been loved, $\mathcal{E}^{\circ} c$.

Potential Mood.
$I$ may or can be loved, $\xi^{\circ}$ c. I might, could, or hould be loved, $\mho^{c}$. I might, could, or fhould have been loved, E ${ }^{2}$.

Infinitive.
Prefent. To be loved. Preterite. To have been loved. Participle. Loved.

There is another form of Englifh verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflections, which are therefore to be learned in this place.
To Do.

Indicative. Prefent.
Sing. I do, thou doft, be doth;
Plur. We do, ye do, they do.
Preterite.
Sing. I did, thou didt, be did;
Plur. We did, ye did, they did.
Preterite, $\xi^{c} c$. 1 have done, $\mho^{\circ} c$. I had done, $E^{\circ} c$. Future. I hall or will do, $\Xi^{\circ} \mathrm{C}$.

Imperative.
Sing. Do thou, let bim do ;
Plur. Let $u s$ do, do $y e$, let them do. Conjunctive. Prefent.
Sing. I do, thou do, be do;
Plur. We do, ye do, they do.
The reft are as in the indicative.
Infinitive. To do; to have done.
Participle pref. Doing, Participle preter. Done.
$I$ do is fometinnes ufed fuperfluoully，as，$I$ do love，$I$ did love；fimply for Ilove，or Iloved；but this is confi－ dered as a vitious mode of fpeech．

It is fometimes ufed emphatically；as，

I do love thee，and when I love thee not，

Cbaos is come again．
Shakefpeare．
It is frequently joined with a negative；as，I like ber， but I do not love ber；I wiffed bim fuccefs，but did not belp him．

The Imperative prohibitory is feldom applied in the fecond perfon，at leaft in profe，without the word do； as，Stop bim，but do not burt bim；Praije beauty，but do not dote on it．

Its chief ufe is in interrogative forms of fpeech，in which it is ufed through all the perfons；as，Do I live？ Doft thou frike me？Do they rebel？Did I complain？ Didft thou love her？Did Jhe die？So likewife in nega－ tive interrogations；Do I not yet grieve？Did foe not die？

Do is thus ufed only in the fimple tenfes．
There is another manner of conjugating neuter verbs， which，when it is ufed，may not improperly denominate them neuter pofives，as they are inflected according to the paflive form by the help of the verb fuftantive to be． They anfwer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French； as，
I am rifen，furrexi，Latin；Je me fuis levé，French：
I was walked out，exieram；Je m＇etois promené．
In like manner we commonly exprefs the prefent tenfe；as，$I$ am going，ee．I am grieving，doleo．She is dying，illa moritur．The tempett is raging，furit procella．I am purfuing an enemy，bopecns infequor．So the other tenfes，as，$W_{e}$ evere zualking，ituroávous tesgincigniss，I bave been walking，I had been avalking，I fall or will le rwalking．
There is another manner of ufing the active participle，which cives it a pafive fignification；as，＇The grammar is now printing grammatica jam sume ckartis imprimitur．The brafs is forging，ara xxcuduntur．This is，in my opinion，a vitious expreffion，pro－ bably corrupted from a phrafe more pure，but now fomewhat obfo－ lete ：The book is a printing，The brafs is a forging；a being properly $a t$ ，and printing and forging verbal nouns fignifying action，according to the analogy of this language．
The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers fre－ quently confounded，or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected， when fome convenience of verfification does not invite its revival．It is ufed among the purer writers after if，though，ere，before，whetber， except，unlefs，rubatfoever，rebomfoever，and words of wifhing；as， Doubtlefs thou art our fatber，though Abrabanm be ignorant of us，and Ifrael acknowledge us uct．

Of Irregular Verbs

The Englifh verbs were divided by Ben Johnfon into four conjugations，without any reafon arifing from the nature of the language，which has properly but one conjugation，fuch as has been exemplified；from which all deviations are to be confidered as anomalies，which are indeed in our monoryllable Saxon verbs and the verbs derived from them very frequent；but almoft all the verbs which have been adopted from other languages， follow the regular form．

Our verbs ate obferved by Dr．Wallis to be irregular only in the formation of the preterite，and its participle．Indeed．in the fcanti－ nefs of our conjugations，there is farcely any other place for irre gularity．

The firft irregularity，is a night deviation from the regular form，by rapid utterance or poetical con－ traction：the laft fyllable ed is often joined with the former by fuppreffion of $e$ ；as，lov＇d for loved；after $c, c k, \rho_{3}, f, k, x$ ，and after the confonants $\int, t b$ ，when more flrongly pronounced，and fometimes after $m, n$ ， $r$ ，if preceded by a fhort vowel，$t$ is ufed in pronun－ ciation，but very feldom in writing，rather than $d$ ；as plac＇t，fratch＇t，ff／b＇t，wok＇t，droel＇t，fincl＇t；for plac＇d fnatch＇d，fifj＇d，wak＇d，drevel＇d，finel＇d；or placed，fratched， fifbed，waked，dwelled，fmelled．

Thofe words which terminate in $l$ or $l l$ ，or $p$ ，make their preterite in $t$ ，even in folemn language；as crept， felt，drvelt；fornetimes after $x$ ，ed is changed into $t$ ； as，vext ：this is not conftant．
A long vowel is often changed into a fhort one；thus， kept，Лept，wept，crept，fwept；from the verbs，to keep， to תleep，to weeep，to crrep，to fwect．
Where $d$ or $t$ go before，the addicional letter $d$ or $t$ ， in this contracted form，coalefee into one letter with the radical $d$ or $t$ ：if $t$ were the radical，they coalefce into $t$ ；
but if $d$ were the radical，then into $d$ or $t$ ，as the one or the other letter may be more eafily pronounced：as， read，led，，pread，fled，Jored，bid，bid，cbid，fed，bled，bred， sped，ftrid，rid；from the verbs，to read，to lead，to Jpread，to Jbed，to／bread，to bid，to bide，to chide，to feed， to bleed，to breed，to Speed，to firide，to Iide，to ride． And thus，caft，burt，coft，burft，eat，beat，fweat，fit， quit，fmit，worit，bit，bit，met，floot；from the verbs，to caft，to burt，to coft，to burft，to eat，to beat，to fweat， to $\sqrt{2 t}$ ，to quit，to fmite，to write，to bite，to bit，to meet， to floot．And in like manner，lent，Sent，rent，girt； from the verbs，to lend，to fend，to rend，to gird．

The participle preterite or paffive is often formed in en，inftead of ed；as been，taken，given，lain，known， from the verbs to be，to take，to give，to flay，to know．

Many words have two or more participles，as not only written，bitten，eaten，beaten，bidden，cbidden，hoot－ ten，cboJen，broken；but likewife writ，bit，eat，beat， bid，cbid，乃hot，choofe，broke，are promifcuouny ufed in the participle，from the verbs to write，to bite，to eat， to beat，to bide，to chide，to Jhoot，to clboofe，to briak， and many fuch like．
In the fame manner fown，及erwn，bewon，mown， loaden，laden，as well as fow＇d，fhew＇d，berw＇d，mow＇d， loaded，laded，from the verbs to fow，to 乃ew，to bew， to morv，to load，or lade．

Concerning thefe double participles it is difficult to give any rule；but he fhall feldom err who remembers， that when a verb has a participle diftinct from its pre－ terite，as write，wrote，written，that diftinct participle is more proper and elegant，as The book is written，is better than The book is wrote，though wrote may be ufed in poetry．

There are other anomalies in the preterite．
1．Win，Spin，begin，froim，Arike，ftick，fing，Aing，fing， ring，wring，Jpring，fwing，drink，fink，fbrink，Jink， come，run，find，bind，grind，wind，both in the pre－ terite imperfect and participle paffive，give won，$\sqrt{p} u n$ ， begun，foum，Aruck，fuck，fung，fung，flung，rung， worung，Sprung，fwung，drunk，unk，Jorunk，bung，come， run，found，bound，ground，wound．And moft of them are alfo formed in the preterite by $a$ ，as began，rang， fang，Sprang，drank，came，ran，and fome others；but mott of thefe are now obfolete．Some in the participle paffive likewife take en，as fricken，frucken，drunken， bounden．

2．Fight，teach，reach，feek，befeech，catch，buy，bring， think，work，make fought，taught，raught，fougbt，be－ Sougbt，caugbt，bougbt，brought，thougbt，wrougbt．

But a great many of thefe retain likewife the regular form，as teacbed，reached，befeched，catcbed，worked．

3．Take，乃bake，forfake，wake，awoke，Aland，break， speak，bear，Bear，fwear，tear，weave，cleave，Arive， thrive，drive，乃bine，rife，arife，fmite，worite，bide，abide， ride，choofe，cbufe，tread，get，beget，forget，feetbe，make in both preterite and participle took，for fook，wooke， awoke，flood，broke，fpoke，bore，flore，fwore，tore， wore，wove，clove，frove，throve，drove，Bone，rofe， arofe，smote，wrote，bode，abode，rode，chofe，trode，got， begot，forgot，fod．But we fay likewife，thrive，rife， $f_{m i t}$ ，writ，abid，rid．In the preterite fome are likewife formed by $a$ ，as brake，Spake，bare，bare， fware，tare，ware，clave，gat，begat，forgat，and per－ haps fome others，but more rarely．In the parti－ ciple paffive are many of them formed by en，as taken，Sbaken，for raken，broken，fpoken，born，JBorn， fworn，torn，worn，woven，cloven，tbriven，driven，rifen， finitten，ridden，chofen，trodden，gotten，begotten，forgot－ ten，fodden．And many do likewife retain the analogy in both，as woked，awoked，Beared，weaved，leaved， ab：ded，feetbed．

4．Give，bid，fit，make in the preterite gave，bade， Sate；in the participle paffive，given，bidden，fitten；but in both bid．

5．Draw，know，grow，throrv，blow，crowe like a cock， fyy，Nay，fee，ly，make their preterite drew，knew，grew， threw，blew，crew，flerw，flew，fare，lay；their parti－ ciples paffive by $n$ ，drazun，knowen，fnown，grown， thrown，blown，flow，Rain，Seen，lien，lain．Yet from， flee is made fled；from go，went，from the old woend， and the participle gone．

Of DERIVATION.

That the Englifi language may be more eafily unde thood, it is necefliary to enquire how its derivative words are deduced from their primitives, and how the primitives are borrowed from other languages. In this enquiry 1 fhall fometimes copy Dr. Watlis, and fometimes endeavour to lupply his detects, and ieciify his crrours.

Nouns are derived from verbs.
The thing implied in the verb as done or produced, is commonly either the prefent of the verb; as, to love, love; to fright, a fitight; to fight, a fight; or the preterite of the verb, as, to Atrike, Iftrick or ftrook, a ftroke.

The action is the fame with the participle prefent, as loving, frigbting, fighting, friking.

The agent, or perfon acting, is denoted by the fyllable er added to the verb, as lover, frighter, friker:

Subfantives, adjectives, and fometimes other parts of fpeech, are changed into verbs: in which cafe the vowel is often lengthened, or the confonant foftened; as, a houfe, to boufe; brafs, to braze; glafs, to glaze; grafs, to graze; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a finh, to filb; oyl, to oyl; further, to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to binder.

Sometimes the termination en is added, efpecially to adjectives; as, hatte, to bafteir; length, to lengthen; ftrength, to firengtben; fhort, to Jborten; faft, to faflen; white, to whiten; black, to blacken; hard, to barden; foft, to Soften.

From fubftantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination $y$; as, a loufe, loufy; wealth, wealthy; health, bealtky; might, mighiy; worth, woriby; wit, cvitty; luft, luffy; water, watery; earth, eartby; wood, a wood, woody; air, airy; a heart, bearty; a hand, bandy.

From fubftantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as, joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youtbful; care, careful; ufe, ufeful; délight, delightful; plenty, plentiful.; help, belpful.

Sometimes, in almoft the fame fenfe, but with fome kind of diminution thereof, the termination fome is added, denoting fometbing, or in fome degree; as, delight, delightfome; game, gamefome; irk, irkfome; burden, burdenfome; trouble, troublefome; light, lightfome; hand, bandfome; alone, lonefome; toil, toilfome.

On the contrary, the termination lefs added to fubftantives, makes adjectives fignifying want; as roorthlefs, witle $\sqrt[s]{ }$, beartlefs, joylefs, carelefs, belplefs. Thus comfort, comfortlefs; fap, faplefs.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the particle un prefixed to many adjectives, or in before words derived from the Latin; as, pleafant, unpleafont; wife, unwife; profitable, unprofitable; patient, impatient. Thus unwortly, unbealthy, unfruitful, unufeful, and many more

The original Enclifh privative is un; but as we ofien borrow from the Latin, or its deicendants, words already fignifying pisation, as ineficacious, impious, indificrect, the infeparable particles un and in have fallen into confufion, from which it is not cafy to difentangle them.
$U_{n}$ is prefixed to all words originally Englifh, as wntrue, untruth, untanght, unbandfome.
$U_{n}$ is prefixed to all participles mace privative adjectives, as un feeling, unadjifing, unaided, undelighted, unendeared.

Un ought never to be prefixed to a participle prefent, to mark a forbearance of action, as unfighing; but a privation of habit, as urpitying.

Un is prefixed to moft fubftantives which have an Englifh termina tion, as unfertilenefs, unperfecinefs, which, if they have borrowed terminations, take in or im, as infertility, imperfection; uncivil, in civility; unaciive, inactivity.
In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is ufual to retain the particle pref.xed, as indecency, inclegant, improper; but if we boriow the adjccive, and add the privative particle, we commonly prefix un, as unpolite, ungallant.

The prepofitive particles dis and mis, derived from the des and mes of the French, fignify almoft the fame as un; yet dis rather imports contrariety than privation, fince it anfwers to the Latin prepofition de. Nis infinuates fome error, and for the moft part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, 10 difike; honour, difbonour ; to honour, to grace, to difborzour, to difgrace; to deign, to difdeign; chance, hap, mifcbonce, mifhap; to take, to miftake; deed, mifdeed; to ufe, tô mifufe; to cmploy, to mijemploy; to apply, to mifapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the fame fignification, as difinguifh, diftinguo; de tract, detraho; defame, defamo; detain, detineo.

The termination ly added to fubftantives, and fometimes to adjectives, forms adjectives that import fome kind of fimilitude or agrecment, being formed by contraction of lick or like.

A giant, gianty, giantlike; carth, eartbly; heaven, beavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The fame termination $l y$ added to adjectives, forms adverbs of like fignification; as, beautiful, beautifully; fweet, frecetly; that is, in a beculiful manner; with fome degree of fweetnes.

The termination ifs added to adjectives, imports di-' minution; and added to fubfantives, imports fimilitude or tendency to a character; as, green, greenifs; white, wbitifs; foft, foftifs; a chief, thievifls; a wo!f, wolvifn; a child, childifs.

We have forms of diminutives in fubftantives, though not frequent; as, a hill, a billock; a cock, a cockrel; a pike, pickrel; this is a French termination: a goofe; a gofing; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a chicken; a man, a manikin; a pipe; a pipkin; and thus Halkin, whence the patronimick Hawekins, Wilkin, Thbomkin, and others:

Yet fill there is another form of diminution among the Englifh, by lefiening the found iffelf, efpecially of vowels; as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or even lengthening it; and that fomet mes not fo much by change of the letters, as of their pronunciation; as, fup, (its, foop, fop, $\sqrt{2} p p e t$, where, befides the extenuation of the vowel, there is added the French termination et ; top, tip; fit, fout ; babe, baby, booly, Bÿrass; great pronounced long, cfpeciSit, fpout; babe, baby, booby, Bÿturs; great pronounced long, clpecially if with a fronger found, grea-t; little pronounced long, lee-tle; ally if with a ftronger found, grea-t; little pronounced ong, lee-tle; ting, tang, tong, imports a fuccefion of fmaller and then greatcr founds; and fo in jingle, jangle, tingle, tangle, and many other made words.
Much bowever of. this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending wholly on? oral utterance, and therefore farcely worthy the notice of Wallis.
Of concrete adjectives are made abftract fubftan= tives, by adding the termination $n e f s$, and a few in bood or bead, noting character or qualities; as, white, whitenefs; hard, bardnefs; great, greainefs; fkilful, kilfulnefs, unfkilfulnefs; gadhead, manbaod, maidenbead, widowhood, knighthood, priefthood, likelibood, falfehood.

There are other abftracts, partly derived from adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination $t h$, a fmall change being fometimes made; as, long, length; ftrong, firengtlf; broad, wide, treadth, width; deep, depth; true, truth; warm, warmth; dear, deartb; llow, fowth; merry, mirth; heal, bealth; well, weal, wealth; dry, drougbth; young, youth; and fo moon, month.
Like thefe' are fome words derived from verbs; dy, death; till, tilth; grow, growth; mow, later mowth, after mow'th; commonly fpoken and written later math, after math; fteal, fealth; bear, birth; rue, ruib; and probably earth from to ear or plow; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, draught.
Thefc fhould rather be written fighth, frighth, only that cuftom prevails, lelk $b$ fhould be twice repeated.

Thc fame form retain faith, fpight, wureathe, wroth, broth, froth, breath, footh, reorth, light, wight, and the like, whofe primitives are either entircly obfolete, or feldom occur. Perhaps they are derived from fey or foy, Spry, wory, wreak, brew, moow, fiy, bray, fay, woork.

Some ending in Bip imply an office, employment, or condition; as, king flip, ward/bip, guardianßip, partner/bip, ftewerdjhip beadhbip, lordJhip.
Thus workip, that is, worthbip; whence worfbitful, to worSoip.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do efpecially denote dominion, at leaft ftate or condition; as kingdow, dukedom, carldom, princedom, popedom, chriftendom, freedom, wifdom, whoredom, bifhoprick, bailywick.

* Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the fame import with us as among them, fcarcely ever occuring, except in words derived from the French, as commandment, ufage.

A GRAMMAROFTHE

A. There are in Englith often lons trains of words allied by thcir meaning and derivation; as, to beat, a bat, batoon, a hattle, a beetle, a battle-door, to batter, butter, a kind of glutinous compofition for food. All thete are of fimilar fignification, and perhaps derived from the Latin batuo. Thus take, touch, tickle, tack, tackle; all imply a local conjunction, from the Latin tango, tetigi, tačium.

From truo are formed twain, trvice, twenty, truelve, twins, twine, ivijt, twirl, twig, twitch, twinge, between, betwixt, twilight, twibil.
The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more fubtlety than folidity, and fuch as perhaps might in every language be enlarged wihhout end.

Sn ufually implies the nofe, and what relates to it. From the Latin nafus are derived the French nes and the Englifh nofe; and nefe, a ponontory, as projelling like a nofe. But as if from the confonants $n s$ taken from nofius, and tranipofed, that they may the better correepond, fin denotes majus; and thence are derived many words that relate to the nofe, as fincut, fineeze, fnore, fnort, fnear, fnicker, finot, finevil, frite, fintf, finffle, finaffle, finarle, finudge.
There is another $\sqrt{n}$, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin finuo, as fnake, fineak, finail, fnare; fo likcwife fuap and fiatccl, fnib, finb. finub.
Bl implies a blaft; as, blorw, blaft, to blaft, to bligbt, and, metaPhorically, to blaft one's reputation; bleat, bleak, a bleak place, to look bleak or weather-beaten, bleak, blay, bleach, blufler, blurt, blifer, blab, bladder, bleb, blifer, blubbcr-lip't, blubber-chieek't, bloted, bluteherrings, blaft, blaze, to blowe, that is, blofom, bioom; and perhaps blood and blutio.
In the native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the letters and the thing fignified; and therefore the founds of letters finaller, fharper, louder, ciofer, fofter, ftronger, clearer, more nbfcure, and more ftridulous, do very often intimate the like effects in the things fignified.
Thus words that begin with $\mu$ r intimate the force and effect of the thing fignified, as if probably derived from sfowvpu, or frenums; as, Alrong, firength, Arew, frike, Areake, flroke, flripe, firive, firife, dilirain, Arefs, diffrefs, firing, firap, Arean, fireamer, Arand, Arip,

St in like manner implies itrength, but in a lefs degree, fo much -only as is futticient to preferve what has been already communifrom, rather than acquire any new degrec; as if it were derived from the Latin $A_{0}$ : for example, fland, ftay, that is, to remain, or to prop ; Aaff, ftuy, that is, to oppofe; Aop, to stuff, stiffe, to stay, that is, to fop; a fay, that is, an obftacle; stick, stut, stutter, stammer stagger, stickle, stick, stake, a harp pale, and any thing depofited 2t play; stock, stem, sting, to sting, stink, stitch, stud, stanchion, stuib, stubble, to stub up, stump, whence stumble, stalk, to stalk, step, to stamp with the feet, whence to stamp, that is, to make an impreffion and a flamp; storv, to forv, to beffow, sterward or storvard, stead, stcady, steadfaft, stable, a stable, a stall, to stall, stool, stall, still, stall, stallage, stall, stage, still adj. and still adv. stale, stout, sturciy, steed, stoat, stallion, stiff, stark-dead, to starve with hunger or cold; stone, steel, stern, stanch, to stanch blood, stee, stern, stanch, to stanch blood, to stare, steep, steeple, stair, stan $\frac{a}{} d$ denotes fomething firm and fixed. $\beta d$ denotes fomething firm and fixed.
Thbr implies a more violent degree of motion, as throw, thruf, throng, throb, through, threat, threaten, thrall, throwes.
Wr imply fome fort of obliquity or ditortion, as wer,
Wr imply fome fort of obliquity or diflortion, as wory, to cureatie, aureft, wurefle, nuring, wrong, wurinch, wrench, wurangle, wrinkle, suxath, zureak, zurack, wretch, zurift, werap.
Siw imply a filent agitation, or a fofter kind of lateral motion ; as Funy, frug, to fway, fragger, fwerve, fweat, fweep, fwill, fwin,

Nor is there much difference of mite, which fignifics the fame as to frike, but is a foter wime, fmirk firicl!, finack, fimother, fmart, a fimart blow properly fignifies fuch a kind of froke as with an oi iginaliy filent motion implied in fin, procecds to a quick violence, dicnoted by ar fuddenly ended, as is hewn by $t$ Cl denote a kind of adhefion or tenacity, as in cleave, clay, cling, clofe, to clope, a clod, a clot, as a clot of blooid, clouted cream, a cluter, a clufier.

Sp implies a kind of difipation or expanfion, efpecially a quick one, particularly if there be an $r$, as if it were from fpargo or Jeparo:
 /pit, jputter, Jpatter.
$S l$ denotes a kind of filent fall, or a lefs obfervable miction; as in Sap.
And fo likewife afle, in cra/h, rafh, gafh, fafb, cla/b, la/s, Лa/乃, plafh, trafh, indicates fomething acting more nimbly and harply. But u/h, in crufh, rulh, gulh, flu/h, bhufh, brufh, bu/h, pul/h, implies fomething as acting more obtufely and dully. Yet in both there is indicated a fwift and fudden motion, not inflantaneous, but gradual, by the continued found $/ \mathrm{p}$.
Thus in fing, fling, ding, fiving, cling, fing, auring, Aing, the tingling of the termination "g, and the tharpnefs of the vowel $i$, imply the continuation of a very flender motion or tremor, at length indeed vanilhing, but not fuddenly interrupted. Dut in tink, rwink, fink, clink, clink, think, that end in a mute confonaut, there is allo indi eated a fudden ending.
If there be an l, as in jingle, tingle, tinhtle, mingle, Sprinkle twinkli, there is inplied a frequency, or iteration of fnall acts. And the fime frequency of acts, but lefs fubtile by reafon of the clearer vowel $a$, is indicated in jangle, tangle, ipangle, mangle, rurangle, brangle, dingle; as alto in munulle, grumble, jumble, tumble, fumble, rumble, crumble, funble. But at the fame time the clote $u$ implies fonteching ubfcure or obtunded; and a congeries of confonants mbl, denotes a confufed kind of rolling or tumbling, as in raméle, fcamble, firamble, ruamble, ambie; but in thefe there is fomething acute.
In nimble, the acutenefs of the vowel denotes celcrity. In parkle, Jp denotes difipation, ar an acute crackling, $k$ a fudden interruption, Ia frequent iteration; and in like manner in $\sqrt{j r}$ inkle, unles is may imply the fubtility of the diffipated gutules. Theich and thin differ, in that the former ends with an obtufe confonant, and the, later with an acute.
In like manner, in /queek, Squeak, fqueal, Cqual!. braul, wraul, youl, Spaul, fcreck, Breek, 乃bril, Joarp, Brivivel, wrinkle, crack, crafb, cla/k, gnafh, plajb, crujb, bulb, bifle, filfe, whifl, foft, jarr, hurl, curl, wobivi, buz, bufsle, /pindle, dwindle, twine, twift, and in many more, we may obferve the agrecment of fuch fort of founds with the things fignified: and this fo frequently happens, that. Scarce any language which I know can be compared with ours. So that one monofyllable word, of which kind are almoft all ours, emphatically exprefies what in other languages can fcarce be explained but by compounds, or decompounds, or fometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin ; but the greateft part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as grace, face, elegant, elegance, refemble.

Some verbs, which feem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the prefent tenfe, and fome from the fupines.

From the prefent are formed $\int p e n d$, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco; dejpife, defpicio; approve, approbo; conceive, concipio.

From the fupines, fupplicate, fupplico; demonftrate, demonftro; difpofe, difpono; expotiate, expatior; supprefs, fupprimo; exempt, eximo.

Nothing is more apparent, than that Wallis goes too far in queit of originals. Many of thefe which feem felected as immediate defcendents from the Latin, are apparently French, as conceive, approve, expofe, exempt.

Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transterred into our language; as, garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, to plead, from the French jardin, jartier, bouclier, avancer, cryer, plaider. though indeed, even of thefe, part is of Latin original.

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans it is doubtful whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the La tins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from fome way, orgina way, via; reall, vallum; reallorv, volvo; rvonl, vellus; rvill, volo worm, vermis; worth, virtus; wafp, vefpa; day, dies; draw, traho tame, domo, dapáw; yoke, jugum, दєũyos; over, upper, fuper, iтsp am, fum, $\varepsilon \neq \mu$, brcak, frango; fy, volo; bloru; Ho. I I make ${ }^{\text {i }}$, doubt but the Teutonick is more ancient than the Latin make no no lefs certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great number of words, not only from the Greck, efpecially the Folict, but from other neighbouring languages, as the Offan and others, which from long become obfolete, received not a few from the Teutonit have certain, that the Englifh, German, and other Teutonick Iangu It retained fome derived fom the Greir, path, pfad, ax, acbs, mit, ford, pfurd, daugbter, tochter, mickle, mingle, moon, fear, grare, graft, to grave, to forape, whole, beal, froni out . Since they received thele immediately from the Greeks, with out the intervention of the Latin language, why may not other words be derived immediately from the fame fountain, though they be likewife found among the Latins.

Our anceftors were ftudious to form borrowed words, however long, into monofyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the firft fyllable, efpecially in words beginning with a vowel; and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewife confonants of a weaker found, retaining the ftronger, which feem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the fame organ, in order that the found might become the fofter; but efpecially tranfpofing their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example, in expendo, fpend; exemplum, fample; excipio, fcape; extraneus, Arange; extractum, fretch'd; excrucio, to fcrere; exfcorio, to fcour; excorio, to fourge; excortico, to foratch; and others beginning with ex: as alfo, emendo, to mend; epifcopus, bißop; in Danifh Bifp; epiftola, pifle; hofpitale, fpittle; Hifpania, Spain; hiltoria, fory.
Many of thefe etymologies are doubtful, and fome evidently miltaken. miltaken.
The following are fomewhat harder, Alcxander, Sander; Elifalethon, Lerty; apis, bce; aper, bur; p paling into $b$, as in lijt:op; and by cutting off a from the beginning, which is reftored in the middle but for the old bar or bare, we now fay loar; as for lang, long; for buin, bane; for flane, fone; aprugna, brazun, $p$ being changed into $b$, and a tranfpofed, as in aper, and $g$ changed into $w$, as in pignus, paren; lege, lawe; àoтris, for, cutting off the beginning, and changing $p$ into $f$, as in pellis, a fell; pullus, a foal; pater, father pavor, fear; polio. fle; pleo, impleo. fill, full; pifcis, filb; and tranfpofing $o$ into the middle, which was taken from the beginning apex, a piece; peak, pike; zophorus, frecfe; mullum, fum; defenfo, fence; difpenfator, pencer: afculto, efcouter, Vr. Jcout; exfcalpo forape, reftoring $l$ inftead of $r$, and hence forap, fcrable, fcrawl exculpo, froop; exterritus, start; extonitus, attonitus, stonn'd; llo machus, marw; offendo, fined; obftipo, stop; audere, dare; cavere, ware, whence a-zware, be ruare, ruary, warn, rvarning; for the Latin ov confonant formerly founded like our $v v$, and the mo. dern found of the $v$ confonant was formerly that of the letter $f$, that is, the Eolick digamma, which had the found of $\varphi$, and the modern found of the letter $f$ was that of the Greek $\phi$ or $p b$; ulcus, ulcere, ulcer, fore, and hence forry, forrow, forrowful; ingenium, engine, gin; fcalenus, leaning, unlefs you would rather derive it from x ${ }^{i}$ iva, whence inclino ; infundibulum, funnel; gagates, jett ; projectum, to jett forth, a jetty; cucullus; a cowl.

There are fyncopes fomewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina, dame; as the French bomme, femme, nom, from homine, fomina, nomine. Thus pagina, page; wolngrov, pot; xume $\lambda \lambda x$, capp; cantharus, can; tentorium, tent ; precor, pray; preda, prey; 反pecio, fpeculor, Spy; plico, ply: implico, imply; replico, reply; complico, comply; fedes epifcopalis, fee.
A vowel is alfo cut off in the middle, that the number of the fyllables may be leffened ; as, amita, aunt; fpiritus, fpright; debitum, debt; dubito, doubt; comes, comitis, count; clericus, clerk; quietus, quit, quite; acquieto, to acquit; feparo, to /pare; ftabilis, stuble; ftabulum, stable; pallacium. palace, place; rabula, rail, rawl, wraul, frabulum, stable; ; palle, brable; quefitio, quest.

As alfo a confonant, or at leaft one of a fofter found, or even a whole fyllable; rotundus, round; fragilis, frail; fecurus, fure; regula, rule; tegula, tile; fubtilis, fubtle; nomen, noun; decanus, dean; computo. count ; fubitaneus, fuddain, foon; fuperare, to foar; periculun, peril; mirabile, marvel; as magnus, main; dignor, deign; tingo, stain; tinctum, taint; pingo, paint; pradari, reach.

The contractions may feem harder, where many of them meet, as xűaros, kyrk, church; prefbyter, priest; facriltanus, fexton; frango, fregi, break, breach; fagus, $\varphi \tilde{r} \gamma x$, beech, $f$ changed into $b$, and $g$ into $c h$, which are letters near-a kin; frigefco, freeze; frigefco, fre $\beta$, $\rho_{c}$ into $\beta$, as above in bijbop, fi/b. fo in fcapba, $\Omega_{\text {liff }}$, hip, and refrigefco, refreß; but virefco, freß; phlebotomus, tieam; Lovina, beef; vitulina, weal; fcutifer, fquire; pœnitentia, penance; fanctuarium, fanctuary, fentry; quæfitio, chafe; perquifitio, purchafe; anguilla, eel; infula, ife, ile, ifand, iland; infuletta, ilet, ilet; cyght and more contractedly $\epsilon y$, whence O $w f r e y$, Ruley, Ely; examinare, to fcan, namely, by rejecting from the beginning and end $c$ and $o$, according to the ufual manner, the remainder xamin, which the Saxons, who did not ufe $x$, writ cfamen, or fcamen is contracted into fann; as from dominus, don; nomine, noun; abomino, ban; and indeed apum examen they turned into fciame; for which we fay fwarme, by inferting $r$ to denote the murmuring; thefaurus, store; fedile, stool; veris, rwet; fudo, freat; gaudium, gay; jocus, joy; fuccus, juice; catena, cbain; caliga, calga; chaufe, chauffe, Fr. bofe; extinguo, stanch, fquench, quench, stint; foras, forth; fpecies, foice; recito, read; adjuvo, aid; aiw, ævum, ay, age, erver; floccus, lock; excerpo, fcrape, fcrabble, fcrawl; extravagus, stray, straggle; collectum, clot, clutch; colligo, coil; recolligo, recoil; fevero, fzeear; ftrjdulus, 乃rill; procurator, proxy; pulfo, to fuß; calamus, a quill; impetere, to impcach; augeo, auxi, rwax; and vanefco, vanui, wane; fyllabare, to Jpell; puteus, pit; granum, corn; comprimo, cramp, crump, crumple, crinkle.
Some may feem harfher, yet may not be rejected, for it at lealt appears, that fome of them are dcrived from proper names, and there are others whofe etymology is acknowledged by every body; as, Alexander, Elick, Scander, Sander, Sandy, Sanny; Elizabeth, Elizabeth, Elifabeth, Betty, Eefs; Margareta, Margaret, Marget, Meg, Peg; Maria, Mary, Mal, Pal, Malkin, Marwkin, Mawkes; Matthreus, Mattba, Mattberw; Martha, Matt. Pat; Gulielmus, Willelmus, Girolamo, Guillaume, William, Will, Bil', Wiilkin, Wicken, Wicks, Weeks.
Thus cariophyllus, flos; gerofilo, Ital. giriflee, gilofer, Fr. gillifiozer, which the vulgar call julyforver, as if derived from the month Yuly; petrofelinum, parfy; portulaca, purfain; cydonium, quince ; cydoniatum, quiddeny; perficum, peach; eruca, eruke, which they corrupt to ear-ruig, as if it took its name from the ear; annulus geminus, a gimmal or gimbal ring; and thus the word gimbal and jumbal is transferred to other things thus interwoven; quelques chofes, kickfoaros. Since the origin of thefe, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any one if the ancients have thus disfigured many, efpecially as they fo much affected monofyllables; and, to make them found the fofter, took this liberty of maiming, taking away, changing, tranfpofing, and foftening them.

But while we derive thefe from the Latin, I do not mean to fay, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Danifh, Dutch, and Teutonick languages, and other dialects, and fome taken more lately from the French or Italians, or Spaniards.

The fame word, according to its different fignifications, often has a different origin; as, to bear a burden, from fero; but to bear, whence birth, born, bairn. comes from pario; and a bear, at leaft if it be of Latin original, from fera. Thus perch, a fifh. from perca; but perch, a meafure, from pertica, and likewife to perch. To fpell is from fyllaba; but fpell. an inchantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries are fo fixed in lands, that none can pafs them againlt the matter's will, from expello; and jpell, a meffenger, from epistole ; whence gofpel, good-1fel, or god-fpell. Thus freele, or frceze, from frieffo: but frecze, an architectonic word, from roplorzus; but friefe, for cloth, from Frifza, or perhaps from frigefoo, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

There are many words among us. cven monofyllables, compounded of two or more words, at leaft felving inftead of compounds, and comprifing the fignification of more words than one; as. from forip and roll connes fcroll; from proud and dance, prance; from st of the verb stay, or stand and stout, is made stout; from stout and hardy, fiurdy; from $\delta p$ of spit or fpew, and out, comes Jpout; from the lame $\hat{p}$, with the terminarion in, is spin ; and adding out, $\int p$ in out ; and from the fame $/ \hat{k}$, with it, is $\int_{i} i t$, which only differs from frout in that it is finaller, and with lefs noife and force ; but foutter is, becaufe of the obfcure $u$, fomething between fpit and fpout ; and by reafon of adding $r$, it intimates a frequent iteration and noife, but obfcurely confufed: whereas fpatter, on account of the fharper and clearer vowel $a$, intimates a more diftinct noife, in which it chiefly differs from foutter. From the fame fo, and the termination ark, comes fpark, fignifying a fingle emifion of fire with a noife namely, $f_{p}$ the emilfion, ar the more acute noife, and $k$, the mute confonant, intimates its being fuddenly terminated; but adding $l$, is made the frequentative $\delta$ parkle. The fame $\delta p$, by adding $r$, that is made the frequentative $\int p a r k l e$. The fame $\int p$, by adding $r$, that is ip , implies a more lively impetus of diffufing or expanding itfelf ipr, implies a more lively impetus of diffufing or expanding itfelf; to which adding the termination ing, it becomes Soring; its vito which adding the termination ing, it becomes fring; its vi gour $f p r$ imports, its fharpnefs the termination ing, and laftly in acute and tremulous, ends in the mute confonant $g$, denotes the acute and tremulous, ends in the mute confonant $g$, denotes the fudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary fignififudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary fignification, of a fingle, not a coniplicated exilition. Hence we call ffring whatever has an elaftick force; as alfo a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to pring, to germinate; and firing, one of the four feafons. From the fame $\int p r$ and out, is formed prout, and with the termination ig, prig ; of which the following for the moft part, is the difference : prost, of a croffer found in ports a fatter or croffer bud; fprig, of a flendeser found, denotes a maller fhoot. In like manner, from str of the verb strive, and out, comes strout and strut. From the fame str, and the termination $\mathrm{gg} / \mathrm{e}$, is made struggle; and this gl imports, but without any grea oife, by reafon of the obfcure found of the vowel 4 , In like man ner, from throw and roll is made trull; and almoft in the fame fenfe is trundle, from throw or tbrust, and rundle. Thus graff or grougb is compounded of grave and rough; and trudge from tread or trot, anc drudge.

In thefe obfervations it is eafy to difcover great fagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the defire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,
I. That Wallis's derivations are often fo made, that by the fame licence any language may be deduced from any other.
2. That he makes no difinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and thofe which being copied from other languages, can therefore afford no example of the genius of the Englifh language, or its laws of derivation.

That he derives from the Latin, often with great harfhnefs and violence, words apparently Teutonick; and therefore, according to his own declaration, pro bably older than the tongue to which he refers them.
4. That fome of his derivations are apparently erro neous.

S Y N T A X.

The eftablifhed practice of grammarians requires that I fhould here treat of the Syntax ; but our language has fo little inflestion, or variety of terminations, that its conflruction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore has totally omitted it ; and Johnfon, whofe defire of following the writers upon the learned languages made him think a fyntax indifpenfably neceffary, has publifhed fuch petty obfervations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and perfon; as, Thou fieft froms good; He runs to death.
Our adjectives and pronouns are invariable
Of two fubftantives the noun poffeflive is the genitive; as, His father's glory; The fun's beat.

Verbs tranfitive require an oblique cafe; as, He loves. me; You fear bim.

All prepofitions require an oblique cafe : He gave this to me; He took this from me; He Jays this of me; He came with me.

P R O S O D Y.

It is common for thofe that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit their Profody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Buomattei; that of the French by Defmarais ; and that of the Englifh by Wallis, Cooper, and even by Jobnfon though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to infert them

Profody comprifes ortboephy, or the rules of pronunciation; and ortbometry, or the laws of verfification.

Pronum-

Pronunesamion is juft, when every leter has its proper found, and wh n every fyllable has its proper accent, or which in Englifh verfification is the fame, its proper quantity.

The found of the ietters have been already explained ; and sules for the accent or quantity are not cafily to be given, being fubject to thall here propofe.

1. Of diffyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former fyllable is commonly accented, as childifh, kíngdom, ádifft, álled, tóllfome, lóver, foófier, faírer, foremoft, zéclous, fûlnefs, gódly, méekly, ártijt
2. Diffyllables formed by prefixing a fyllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter ; as, to begét, to befeem, to befóro.
3. Of diffyliables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former fyllable; as, to defcant, a défount; to comént, a ciment; to contráct, a contract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs feldom have their acrent on the former, yet touns often have it on the latter fyllable;
xi, delight, terffume. -
4. All difiyllables ending in $y$, as cromny; in our, as labotir, favour; in ow, as reíllow, wállow, except allow; in le, as battle, bíble; in i/h, as bánijb; in ck, as cámbrick, cáfjock; in ter, as to bátter; in age, as corirage; in ein, as faften; in et, as quiet, accent the former fyllable. 5. Diffyllable nouns in er, as cánker, buitter, have the accent on the former fyllable.
6 Diffyllable verbs terminating in a confonant and $e$ final, as comprife, efcápe; or having a diphthong in the laft fyllable, as oppéafe, revéar; or ending in two confonants, as attend; have the accent on the latter fyllable. 7. Diffillable nouns having a diphthong in the latter fyllable, have commonly their accent on the latter fyllable, as applaúfe; except words in ain, cértain, moüntain.
8. Trifyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a fyllable, retain the accent of the radical word, as lóvelincss, téndernefs, contémner, wágonner, ply'fical, befpatter, coinménting, comménding, afür ance.
9. Trifyllables onding in ous, as grácious, árduous; in al , as cafpical; in ion, as méntion, accent the firf.
10. Triflyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the firft fyllable, as cointenance, cóntinence, ármament, imminont, élegant, prôpagete, except they be derived from words having the accent on the laft, as connivence, acgliantance; or the middle fyllable hath a vowel before two confonants, as promillgate.

1:. Triffyllables ending in $y$, as éntity, fécify, líberly, ciaiory, fitbfidy, commonly accent the firtt fyllable.
12. Trifyllables in re or le accent the firft fyllable, as légizle, théctre, except difcíple, and fome words which have a pofition, as exámple, epifle.
13. Trifyllables in ude commonly accent the firft ryllable, as plénitude.
14. Triffyllables ending in ator or atour, as creatour, or having in the middle fyliable a diphthong, as endéazour'; or a vowel before two confonants, as doméffick, accent the mididle fyllable.
15. Triffyilabies that have their accent on the laft fylJable are commonly French, as acquiéfce, repartée, maoraine, or words formed by prefixing one or two fylJables to an acute fyllable, as immatưre, overcharge.
16. Polyfyllables, or words of more than three fyllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as árrogating, cóntinency, incóntinently, comméndable, commúnicablenefs.
17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as falciátion, perturbáticn, concóction; words in atozir or ator on the penult, as dedicitor.
18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the firft fyllable, as ámicable, unlefs the fecond fyllable have a vowel before two confonants, as combiffille.
19. Worcis ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as zuórious, vohiptzous.
20. Words ending in ly have their accent on the antepenult, as puffllanimity, aeizevity.

Thefe rules are not ajvanced as compleat or infailible, but propofed as ufeful. Almoft every rule of every language has its cxceptions ; and in Englifh, as in other tongues, much muft be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and bitter rules may be given that have efcaped my obfervation.

Versification is the arrangement of a certain number of fyllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verfes are either iambick, as aloft, crecute; or trochaick, as bóly, lofty.

Our iambick meafure comprifes verfes

A thoufand crannies in the walls are made; Nor gate nor bars exclude the bufy trade. 'Tis built of brafs, the better to diffule The fpreading founds, and multiply the news; Where echo's in repeated echo's play : A mart for ever full; and open night and day. Nor filence is within, nor voice exprefs, But a deaf noife of founds that never ceafe; Confus'd, and chiding, like the hollow rore Of tides, receding from th' infulted fhore; Or like the broken thunder, heard from far, When Jove to diftance crives the rolling war. The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din Of crouds, or ifluing forth, or entring in: A thorough-fare of news; where fome devife Things never heard, fome mingle truth with lies: The troubled air with empty founds they beat, Intent to hear, and eager to repeat.

Dryden.
In all thefe meafures the accents are to be placed on even fyllables; and every line confidered by itfelf is more harmonious, as this rule is more ftrictly obferved.

Our trochaick meafures are
Of three fyllables,

In thefe meafures the accent is to be placed on the odd fyllables.

Thefe are the meafures which are now in ure, and above the reft thofe of feven, eight, and ten fyllables. Our ancient poets wrote verfes fometimes of 'twelve fyllables, as Drayton's Polyolbion.

The paufe in the Alexandrine mull be at the fixth fyllabie.
The verfe of fourtecn fyllables is now broken into a foft lorick meafure of verfes, confiting alternately of eight fyllables aid inx.

She to receive thy radiant name, Selects a whiter fpace.
When all fhall praife, and ev'ry lay Devote a wreath to thee,
That day, for come it will, that day Shall I lament to fee.

We have another meafure very quick and lively, and therefore much ufed in fongs, which may be called the anateftick, in which the accent refts upon every third fyllable.

May I góvern my páfions with ábfolute fwáy,
And grow wifer and bétter as life wears away.
In this meafure a fyllable is often retrenched from the firf foot, as Diógenes fúrly and proúd.
I thínk not of I'ris, nor I'ris of mé.
Thefe meafures are varied by many combinations, and fometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroick meafurc.
'Tis heav'n itfelf that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man.
So in that of eight fyllables,
They neither added nor confounded,
They neither wanted nor abounded.
In that of feven,

$\dot{I}_{n}$ that of fix,
'Twas when the feas were roaring,
With hollow blatts of wind,
A damfel lay deploring,
All on a rock reclin'd.
In the anapeftick,
When terrible tempefts affail us;
And mountainous billows affright,
Nor power nor wealth can avail us;
But fkilful induftry fteers right.
To thefe meafures, and their laws, may be reduced every fpecies of Englifh verfe.

Our verffification admits of few licences, except a fynalappa, or elifion of $e$ in the before a vowel, as th'eternal; and more rarely of $o$ in $t o$, as $t$ 'accept; and a $\sqrt{y}$. narefis, by which two fhort vowels coalefce into one fyllable, as queftion, fpecial; or a word is contracted by the expulfion of a hort vowel before a liquid; as av'rice, temp'rance.

Thus have I collected rules and examples, by which the Englifh language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taight by a mafter to thofe that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for fuch as are not yet initiated in the fchools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at lal ineffectua).

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A

A.The firft letter of the European alphabets, has, in the Englifh language, three different founds, which may be termed the broad, open, and flender.

The broad found refembling that of the German $a$ is found, in many of our monofyllables, as all, wall, malt, falt; in which $a$ is pronounced as au in caufe, or aw in law. Many of thefe words were anciently written with au, as fault, waulk; which happens to be ftill retained in fault. This was probably the ancient found of the Saxons, fince it is almoft uniformly preferved in the ruftic pronunciation, and the Northern dialects, as maun for man, baund for hand.
A open, not unlike the $a$ of the Italians, is found in father, rather, and more obfcurely in fancy, faft, &c.
A flender or clofe, is the peculiar $a$ of the Englifh language, refembling the found of the French $e$ mafculine, or diphthong ai in païs, or perhaps a middle found between them, or between the $a$ and $e$; to this the Arabic $a$ is faid nearly to approach. Of this found we have examples in the words, place, face, wafte, and all thofe that terminate in ation; as, relation, nation, generation.
A is thort, as, glafs, grafs; or long, as, glaze, graze: it is marked long, generally, by an $e$ final, plane, or by an $i$ added, as, plain.
A, an article fet before nouns of the fingular number; a man, $a$ tree; denoting the number one, as, a man is coming, that is, no more than one; or an indefinite indication, as, a man may come this way; that is, any man. This article has no plural fignification. Before a word beginning with a vowel, it is written $a n$, as, an ox, an egg, of which $a$ is the contraction. A is fometimes a noun ; as, a great $A$, a little $a$.
A is placed before a participle, or participial noun; and is confidered by Wallis as a contraction of at, when it is put before a word denoting fome action not yet finifhed; as, I am a walking. It alfo feems to be anciently contracted from at, when placed before local furnames; as, Thomas a Becket. In other cafes, it feems to fignify to, like the French à.

With hellifh fiends, or furics mad uproar,
He then uprofe.
Affri'ght. n. $f$. [from the verb.]

1. Terrour; fear. This word is chiefly poetical.

As the moon, cloathed with cloudy night,
Does fhew to him, that walks in fear and did
Wide was his parifh, not contracted clofe
In frcets, but here and there a ftraggling houle;
Yet fill he was at hand, without requeit,
To ferve the fick; to fuccour the diftrefs'd :
Tempting, on foot, alone, without affright,
The dangers of a dark tempeftuous night.
Dryd. Fab.
2. The caufe of fear ; a terrible object.

Ifee the gods
Upbraid our fuff'rings, and would humble them,
By fending thefe affights, while wc are here,
Ihat we might laugh at their ridiculous fear. B. Fobmf. Catil. The war at hand appears with more affight,
And rifes ev'ry moment to the fight.

Some more there be, flight airlings, will be won
With dogs, and horfes, and perhaps a whore. B. Fobn. Catil. A'irpump. n. $\int$. [from air and pump.]

A machine by whofe means the air is exhaufted out of proper veffels. The principle on which it is built, is the elafticity of the air; as that on which the waterpump is founded, is on the gravity of the air. The invention of this curious inftrument is afcribed to Otto de Guerick, conful of Magdebourg, who exhibited his firft publick experiments before the emperour and the ftates of Germany, in 1654. But his machine laboured under feveral defects, in the force neceffary to work it, which was very great, and the progrefs very flow; befides, it was to be kept under water, and allowed of no change of fubjects for experiments. However, Mr. Boyle, with the affiftance of Dr. Hooke, removed feveral of thefe inconveniencies; though, ftill, the working of this pump was laborious, by reafon of the preffure of the atmofphere at every exfuction, after a vacuum was nearly obtained. This labour has been fince removed by Mr. Hawkßee; who, by adding a fecond barrel and pifton, to rife as the other fell, and fall as it rofe, made the preflure of the atmofphere on the defcending one, of as much fervice as it was of differvice in the afcending one. Vream made a further improvement in Hawkfbee's air-pump, by reducing the alternate motion of the hand and winch to a circular one. Cbambers.

For the air that, in exhaufted receivers of airpumps, is exhaled from minerals, and flefh, and fruits, and liquours, is as true and genuine as to elafticity and denfity, or rarefaction, as that we refpire in ; and yet this factitious air is fo far from being fit to be breathed in, that it kills animals in a moment, even fooncr than the very abfence of all air, or a vacuum itfelf.

Savary.
2. Aloes is a tree which grows in hot countries, and even in the mountains of Spain.
The leaves are thick, fucculent, and generally befet with fpines on the edges; the flower confifts of one leaf, is tubulous, and cut into fix fegments at the top, like the hyacinth; the fruit is oblong and cylindrical, divided into three cells, containing flat, and, for the moft part, femicircular feeds.
The fpecies are 39 ; i. The common large American aloe. 2. The narrow-leaved aloe, from Vera Cruz. 3. The American aloe, which produces young plants out of the flower ftems, $\mathcal{E}_{6}$.
Many of thefe plants, in Englifh gardens, are natives of the Eaft and Weft Indies ; but the moft curious are brought from the Cape of Good Hope.

The firft of thefc aloes is very hardy, and has endured the air, in nimild winters, in a very dry foil, and under a fouth wall; but they may be kept in a common greenhoufe, giving them very little moifture in winter. The other forts are preferved in an airy glafs-cafe, with a ftove. The aloes are all increafed by off-fets.

Moft of the African fpecies, after the fecond, third, or fourth year's growth, produce flowers with us annually; but the American aloes flower but once during the life of the plant, producing the flower-ftems from the centre of the plant, of a confiderable fizc, and fometimes fifteen feet in height.

A common error, relating to the firf \{pecies, is, that it never flowers till it be an hundred years old; but experience has proved, that fome have flowered in fifty years. Another errour is, that, when the flower opens, it makes a report like a Mun.
Millar. but the common aloes tree, by cutting the leaves, and expofing the juice that drops from them to the fin. A'L U M. n.f. [a'umen, Lat.]
A kind of mineral falt, of an acid tafte, leaving in the mouth a fenfe of fwectnefs, accompanied with a confiderable degrec of aftringency. The ancient naturalifts allow of two forts of alum, natural and factitious. The natural is found in the ifland of Milo, being a kind of whitifh ftone, very light, friable, and porous, and ftreaked with filaments refembling filver. The factiticus alum is prepared in different manners, according to the differcnt materials of which it is made. Hence arife red, Roman, and citron alums; alfo plumofe, faccharine, and burnt alums. England, Italy, and Flanders, are the countries where alum is priucipally produced; and the Englifh roche-alum is made from a bluifh mineral fone, frequent in the hills of Yorkfhire and Lancafhire. Alum is ufed in medicine as an abforbent ; but, being apt to excite vomiting, it is feldom prefcribed in wardly. It is ufed outwardly in aftringent lotions, and is an ingredient in feveral dentifrices and cofineticks. It is a principal ingredient in dying and colouring; neither of which can be well performed without it. It ferves to bind the colour upon the ftuffs, and has the fame ufes there, that gum water and glutinous oils have in painting. It alfo difpofes ftuffs to take the colour, and adds a degree of brisknefs and delicacy to it. This effect of aium feems to proceed from its ftyptick or aftringent quality, by which it binds the finer parts of colours together, and prevents their exhaling. Hence alfo it preferves paper, that has been dipped in its water, from finking when wrote upon.

Saccharine alum bears a near refemblance to fugar, and is a compofition of common alum, with rofe-water and whites of eggs boiled together, to the confiftence of a pafte, and thus moulded at pleafure. As it cools, it grows hard as a ftone, and is ufed as a cofmetick.

Burnt alum is alum 'calcined over the fire, and thus rendered whiter, more light, and more eafily pulverized.

Plumofe or plume alum is a fort of faline mineral ftonc, of various colours, moft commonly white, bordering on green, refembling Venetian talc, except that, inftead of fcales, it rifes in threads or fibres, refembling thofe of a feather; whence its name from pluma, a feather. Sume will have this to be the lapis amianthus of the ancients.

Chambers.

A'M BER. n. f. [from ambar, Arab. whence the lower writers

 formed ambarum.]A yellow tranfparent fubftance of a gummous or bituminous confiftence, but a refinous tafte, and a fmell like oil of turpentine; chiefly found in the Baltick fea, along the coafts of Pruffia. Some naturalifts refer it to the vegetable, others to the mi-- neral, and fome even to the animal kingdom. Pliny defcribes it as a refinous juice, oozing from aged pines and firs, and difcharged thence into the fea; where, undergoing fome alteration, it is thrown, in this form, upon the fhores of Pruffia, which lie very low. He adds, that it was hence the ancients gave it the denomination of fuccinum, from fuccus, juice. This opinion of the ancient naturalift is confirmed by the obfervation of many of the moderns, particularly Father Camelli. Pbilof. Tranfact. No 290. Some have imagined it a concretion of the tears of birds; others, the urine of a beaft; others, the fcum of the lake Cephifis, near the Atlantick; others, a congelation formed in the Baltick, and in fome fountains, where it is found fwimming like pitch. Others fuppofe it a bitumen trickling into the fea from fubterraneous fources; but this opinion is alfo difcarded, as good amber having been found in digging at a confiderable diftance from the fea, as that gathered on the coaft. Boerhanve ranks it with camphire, which is a concrete oil of aromatick plants, elaborated by heat into a cryftalline form. Amber affumes all figures in the ground; that of a pear, an almond, a pea; and, among others, there have been found letters very well formed, and even Hebrew and Arabick characters. Within fome pieces of amber have been found leaves, and infects included; which feems to indicate, either that the amber was originally in a fluid ftate, or, that having been expofed to the fun, it was foftened, and rendered fufceptible of the leaves and infects. Amber, when rubbed, draws or attracts bodies to it ; and, by friction, is brought to yield light pretty copioufly in the dark. Some diftinguifh amber into yellow, white, brown, and black: but the two latter are fuppofed to be of a different nature and denomination; the one called jet, the other ambergris. The white is moft valued for medicinal ufes, and the yellow for being wrought into beads and toys, becaufe of its tranfparency. Trev. Cbamb.

Liquid amber, is a kind of native balfam or refin, like turpentine; clear, reddifh, or yellowih; of a pleafant fmell, almoft like ambergris. It flows from an incifion made in the bark of a fine large tree in New Spain, called by the natives ofofol; but it lardens, as it grows older, into a folid form, and is brought to us in barrels. It is reputed an excellent balfam. Chambers.

A'MBERGRIS. $n$.f. [from amber and gris, or grey; that is, srcy amber.]

A fragrant drug, that melts almof like wax, commonly of a greyifh or afh colour, ufed both as a perfume and a cordial. It is found on the fea coafts of feveral warm countries, and on the weftern coafts of Ireland. Some imagine it to be the excrement of a bird, which, being melted by the heat of the fun, and wafhed off the fhore by the waves, is fwallowed by whales, who return it back in the condition we find it. Others conclude it to be the excrement of a cetaceous firh, becaufe fometimes found in the inteftines of fuch animals. But we have no inftance of any excrement capable of melting like wax; and if it were the excrement of a whale, it fhould rather be found where there animals abound, as about Greenland. Others take it for a kind of wax or gum, which diftils from trees, and drops into the fea, where it congeals. Many of the orientals imagine it fprings out of the fea, as naphtha does out of fome fountains. Others fuppofe it a fea mufhroom, torn up from the buttom by the violence of tempefts. Other: affert it to be a vegetable production, iffuing out of the root of a tree, whofe roots always fhoot toward the fea, and difcharge thernfelves into it. Others maintain, that ambergris is made from the honey-combs, which fall into the fea from the rocks, where the bees had formed their nefts; feveral perfons having feen pieces that were half ambergris, and half plain honey-comb; and others have found large pieces of anbergris, in which, when broke, honey-comb, and honey too, were found in the middle. Some affirm it to be a true animal concrete, formed in balls in the body of the male fpermaceti whale, and lodged in a large oval bag over the tefticles. But, befides that it is not one fpermaceti whale in a hundred, that is found to have ambergris, Neumann, chemift - to the king of Pruflia, abfolutely denies it to be an animal fubftance, as not yielding in the analyfis, any one animal principle. It may indeed be found in whales, but it muft have been fwallowed by them. He concludes it to be a bitumen iffuing out of the earth into the fea; at firft of a vifcous confiftence, but - hardening, by its mixture with fome liquid naphtha, into the form in which we find it.

AMMONI'AC. n. f. The name of a drug.
Gum Ammoniac is brought from the Eaft Indies, and is fuppofed to ooze from an umbelliferous plant. Diofcorides fays, it is the juice of a kind of ferula growing in Barbary, and the plant is called agafyllis. Pliny calls the tree metopion, which, he fays, grows near the temple of Jupiter Ammon, whence the gum takes its name. It ought to be in dry drops, white within, ycllowifh without, eafily fufible, refinous, fomewhat bitter, and of a very fharp tafte and fmell, fomewhat like garlick. This gum is faid to have ferved the ancients for incenfe, in their facrifices. It enters feveral medicinal compofitions, as an attenuant and detergent; and, outwardly applied, it is refolutive and fuppurative. Savary. Trevous.
Sal Ammoniac is a volatile falt of two kinds, ancient and modern. The ancient fort, defcribed by Pliny and Diofcorides, was a native falt, generated in thofe large inns or caravanferas, where the crouds of pilgrims, coming from the temple of Jupiter Ammon, ufed to lodge; who, in thofe parts, travelling upon camels, and thofe creatures when in Cyrene, a province of Egypt, where that celebrated temple ftood, urining in the flables, or, fay fome, in the parched fands, out of this urine, which is remarkably ftrong, arofe a kind of falt, denominated fometimes from the temple, Ammoniac, and fometimes from the country, Cyremiac. Since the ceffation of thefe pilgrimages, no more of this falt is produced there; and, from this deficiency, fome fufpect there never was any fuch thing: but this fufpicion is removed, by the large quantities of a falt, nearly of the fame nature, thrown out by mount Ætna. The characters of the ancient fal ammoniac are, that it cools water, turns aqua fortis into aqua regia, and confequently diffolves gold.
The modern fal ammoniac is entirely factitious, and made in Egypt ; where feveral long-necked glafs bottles, being filled with foot, a little fea falt, and the urine of cattle, and having their mouths luted with a piece of wet cotton, are placed over an oven or furnace, contrived for the purpole, in a thick bed of athes, nothing but the necks appearing, and kept there two days and a night, with a continual frong firc. The fteam fwells up the cotton, and forms a pafte at the vent-hole, hindering the falts from evaporating; which, being confined, ftick to the top of the bottle, and are, upon breaking it, taken out in thofe large cakes, which they fend to England. Only foot exhaled from dung, is the proper ingredient in this preparation; and the dung of camels affords the ftrongeft and beft.

Our chymifts imitate the Egyptian fal ammoniac, by adding one part of common falt to five of urine ; with which fome mix that quantity of foot, and putting the whole in a veffel, they raife from it, by fublimation, a white, friable, farinaceous fubftance, which they call fal ammoniac. There are various preparations of this falt ufed in pharmacy ; as, Jublimate of fal ammoniac, and flowers of fal ammoniac, ufed as fudorificks, diureticks, and good aperients; volatile fal ammoniac, ufed againft malignant fevers, as a fudorifick, and in pocket bottles ; §pirit of fal ammoniac, of various kinds.

The commentators on Pliny and Diofcorides differ about the ancient amomum; but the generality of them fuppofe it to be a fruit different from ours. Scaliger is confident, that the amomum was no fruit; but the wood, which bore fome refemblance to a bunch of grapes, and was ufed in embalming of bodies; whence the name mummy was given to bodies embalmed with it. The modern amomum appears to be the fifon, or fium, of the ancients, or baftard fone-parfley. It refembles the mufcat grape, grows in cluiters, and is about the thicknefs of a pea, round, membranous, and divided into three cells, that contain feveral brown angular grains, of a very ftrong aromatick tafte and finell. This fruit is brought from the Eaft Indies, and makes part of the compofition of treacle. It is of a hot fpicy afte and fmell. And amplitude of mind to greateft deeds. Parad. Regained.
4. Splendour; grandeur; dignity.

In the great frame of kingdoms and commonwealths, it is in the power of princes, or eftates, to add amplitude and greatnefs to their kingdoms.

Bacon's Efays.
5. Copioufinefs; abundance.

You fhould fay every thing which has a proper and direct tendency to this end; always proportioning the amplitude of your matter, and the fulnefs of your difcourfe, to your great defign; the length of your time, to the convenience of your hearers.

Watts's Logick.
6. Amplitude of the range of a projectile, denotes the horizontal line fubtending the path in which it moved.
7. Amplitude, in aftronomy, an arch of the horizon, intercepted between the true eaft and weft point thereof, and the centre of the fun or far at its rifing or fetting. It is eaftern or ortive, when the ftar rifes, and weftern or occiduous, when the far fets. The caftern or weftern amplitude, are alfo called northern or fouthern, as they fall in the northern or fouthern quarters of the horizon.
8. Magnetical amplitude, is an arch of the horizon contained between the fun at his rifing, and the eaft or weft point of the compafs; or, it is the difference of the rifing or fetting of the fun, from the eaft or weft parts of the compafs. Cbambers. A'mply. adv. [ample, Lat.]

Amputa'tion. n.f. [amputatio, Lat.]
The operation of cutting off a limb, or other part of the body, with an inftrument of fteel. The ufual method of performing it, in the intance of a leg, is as follows. The proper part for the operation being four or five inches below the knee, the finin and flefh are firtt to be drawn very tight upwards, and fecured from returning by a ligature two or three fingers broad : above this ligature another loofe one is paffed, for the gripe; which being twifted by means of a ftick, may be ftraitened to any degree at pleafure. Then the patient being conveniently fituated, and the operator placed to the infide of the limb, whicly is to be held by one affiftant above, and another below the part defigned for the operation, and the gripe fufficiently twitted, to prevent too large an hremorrhage, the flefh is, with a ftroke or two, to be feparated from the bone with the difmembering knife. Then the perioftium being alfo divided from the bone with the back of the knife, faw the bone afunder, with as few flrokes as poffible. When two parallel bones are concerned, the flefh that grows between them muft likewife be feparated before the ufe of the faw. This being done, the gripe may be flackened, to give an opportunity of fearching for the large blood veffels, and fecuring the hxmorrhage at their mouths. After making proper applications to the ftump, loofen the firt ligature, and pull both the fkin and the flefh, as far as conveniently may be, over the ftump, to cover it; and fecure them with the crofs ftitch made at the depth of half or three quarters of an inch in the fkin. Then apply pledgets, aftringents, plaiters, and other neceffaries.

thofe of filver and lead; that in gold mines is reckoned beft. It has alfo its own mines in Hungary, Germany, and France. It is found in clods or fones of feveral fizes, bearing a near refemblance to black lead, only being lighter and harder. Its texture is full of little fhining veins or threads, like ncedles; brittle as gafs. Sometimes veins of a red or golden colour are intermixed, which is called male antimony; that without them being denominated female antimony. It fufes in the fire, though with fome difficulty; and diffolves more eafily in water. When dug out of the earth, it is put into large crucibles, fufed by a violent fire, and then poured into cones, which make the crude antimony of the fhops. Of thefe cones the top is the pureft part, and the bafe the fouleft. It deftroys and diffipates all metals fufed with it, except gold; and is therefore ufeful in refining. It is a common ingredient in fpeculums, or burning concaves ; ferving to give them a finer polifh. It makes a part in bell metal ; and renders the found more clear. It is mingled with tin, to make it more hard, white, and found; and with lead, in the cafting of printers letters, to render them more fmooth and firm. It is a general help in the melting of metals, and efpecially in cafting of cannon balls. In pharmacy it is ufed under various forms, and with various intentions, chiefly as an emetick. It had no place in medicine before the fourteenth century; and was generally neglected, till Paracelfus brought it into efteem, in the beginning of the fixteenth century; but much mifchief was done by it, till the proper methods of preparing it were, after a long courfe of experiments, difcovered.

to the Grecians, and thefe again to the Romans. Under Auguftus, architcecture arrived to its greateft glory; but it afterwards dwindled by degrees, and at laft fell with the weftern empire, in the fifth century, when the Vifigoths deftroyed all the moft beautiful monuments of antiquity; and a new manner of building took its rife, called the Gothick, coarfe, artlefs, and maffive. Of the fame kind was the Arabesk, Moorisk or Moorifh arclizteczure, brought from the South by the Moors and Saracens. The architects of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries, who had fome knowledge of fculpture, feemed to make perfection confift feemed to make perfection confift altogether in the delicacy and multitude of ornaments, which they frequently beftowed on their buildings without any conduct or tafte. In the two laft centuries, the architects of Italy and France were wholly bent upon retrieving the primitive fimplicity and beauty of an cient architecturc, in which they did not fail of fuccefs. This art is divided into five orders; the Tufcan, Dorick, Ionick, Corinthian, and Compofite; which took their rife from the different proportions that the different kinds of buildings rendered neceflary, according to the bulk, ftrength, delicacy, ichnefs, or fimplicity required:

A'rsenick. n. f. [į́génroor.] A ponderous mineral fubftance, volatile and uninflammable, which gives a whitenefs to metals in fufion, and proves a violent corrofive poifon; of which there are three forts. Native or yellow arfenick, called alio auripigmentum or orpiment, is chiefly found in copper mines, in a fort of glebes or ftones of different figures and fizes. Its colour, though always yellow, yet admits of different fhades and mix tures, as a golden yellow, a reddifh yellow, or a green yellow. It contains a fimall portion of gold, but not worth the expence of feparating it. White or cryffalline ar fenick is extracted from the native kind, by fubliming it with a proportion of fea falt, and is chiefly ufed among us. It is faid to be found native in fome German mines. The fmalleft quantity of cryftalline arfenick, being mixed with any metal, abfolutely deftroys its malleability; and a fingle grain will turn a pound of copper into a beautiful feeming filver, but without ductility. There is a method practifed in Hungary, of procuring yellow and white arfenick from cobalt. Red arfenick is a preparation of the white, made by adding to it a mineral fulphur. There are feveral chymical preparations of $a r \int_{e n i c k}$, intended to blunt its corrofive falts, and render it a fafe medicine; but experience proves that it fhould never be ufed inwardly, in any form.

[of this word the etymologifts give many derivations; it feems to come from the French bailler, to put into the hand; to deliver up, as a man delivers himfelf up in furety.]
Bail is the freeing or fetting at liberty one arrefted or imprifoned upon action either civil or criminal, under fecurity taken for his appearance. There is both common and fpecial bail; common bail is in actions of fmall prejudice, or flight proof, called common, becaufe any fureties in that cafe are taken: whereas, upon caufes of greater weight, or apparent fpeciality, fpecial bail or furety muft be taken. There is a difference between bail and mainprife; for he that is mainprifed, is at large, until the day of his appearance : but where a man is bailed, he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward and cuftody for the time: and they may, if they will, keep him in ward or in prifon at that time, or otherwife at their will.

Farrier＇s Dict．
BARO＇METER．$n$ ．f．［from $\beta \dot{\alpha}_{5}^{\prime} \Theta$ ，weight，and $\mu$＇́rea＇，meafure．］ A machine for meafuring the weight of the atmofphere，and the variations in it，in order chiefly to determine the changes of the weather．It differs from the barofcope，which only fhews that the air is heavier at one time than another，without fpecifying the difference．The barometer is founded upon the Torricellian experiment，fo called from Torricelli the inventor of it，at Florence，in 1643 ；which is a glafs tube filled with mercury，horizontally fealed at one end；the other open and immerged in a bafon of ftagnant mercury；fo that，as the weig＇t of the atmofphere diminifhes，the mercury in the tube will defcend，and，as it encreafés，the mercury will afcend；the column of mercury fufpended in the tube，being always equal to the weight of the incumbent atmofphere．Many attempts have been made to render the changes in the barometer more fenfible， in order to meafure the atmofphere more accurately；and hence arofe a great number of barometers，of different fructures．Dr． Halley obferves，in the Pbilofophical Tranfactions，that in calm weather，when the air is inclined to rain，the mercury is com－ monly low；in ferene good fettled weather，high．On great winds，though unaccompanied with rain，the mercury is loweft of all，with regard to the point of the compafs the wind blows on．The greateft heights of the mercury are on eafterly and north－eafterly winds，cateris paribus．After great frorms of wind，when the mercury has been low，it rifes again very faft． In calm frofty weather，it fands high．The more northerly places find greater alterations than the more fouthern；and within the tropicks，and near them，there is little or no varia－ tion of the height of the mercury．The rifing of the mercury forebodes fair weather after foul，and an eafterly or north－ eaterly wind；its falling portends foutherly or welterly winds， or both．In a form，the mercury beginning to rife，is a pretty fure fign that it begins to abate．But there are frequently great changes in the air，without any perceptible alteration in the ba－ rometer．The alterations of the weight of the air，are gene－ rally allowed to be the caufe of thofe in the barometer；but philofophers cannot eafily determine whence thofe alterations rife in the atmofphere．

The meafuring the heights of mountains，and finding the elevation of places above the level of the fea，hath been much promoted by barometrical experiments，founded upon that ef－ fential property of the air，its gravity or preflure．As the co－ lumn of mercury in the barometer is counterpoifed by a column of air of equal weight，fo whatever caufes make the air heavier or lighter，the preflure of it will be thereby encreafed or leffen－ ed，and of confequence the mercury will rife or fall．Again， the air is condenfed or expanded，in proportion to the weight or force that prefles it．Hence it is，that the higher from the fea， in the midland countries，the mercury defcends the lower；be－ caufe the air becomes more rarified and lighter，and it falls loweft upon the tops of the higheft mountains．

Harris．
Gravity is another property of air，whereby it counterpoifes a column of mercury from twenty－feven inches and one half to thirty and one half，the gravity of the atmofphere varying one tenth，which are its utmoft limits；fo that the exact fpeci－ fick gravity of the air cannot be determined when the barometer ftands at thirty inches，with a moderate heat of the weather．

1．A degree of nobility next to a vifcount．It may be probably thought，that anciently，in England，all thofe were called ba－ rons，that had fuch figniories as we now call court barons．And it is faid，that，after the conqueft，all fuch came to the parlia－ ment，and fat as nobles in the upper houfe．But when，by ex－ perience，it appeared，that the parliament was too much crouded with fuch multitudes，it became a cuftom，that none fhould come，but fuch as the king，for their extraordinary wifdom or quality，thought good to call by writ；which writ ran bac vice tantum．After that，men，feeing that this ftate of nobility was but cafual，and depending merely on the prince＇s pleafure，ob－ tained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male ：and thefe were called barons by letters patent， or by creation；whofe pofterity are now thofe barons that are called lords of the parliament；of which kind the king may create more at his pleafure．It is neverthelefs thought，that there are yet barons by writ，as well as barons by letters patent，and that they may be difcerned by their titles ；the barons by writ being thofe，that to the title of lord have their own furnames annex－ ed；whereas the barons by letters patent，are named by their baronies．Thefe barons which were firft by writ，may now juftly alfo be called barons by prefcription；for that they have continued barons，in themfelves and their anceftors，beyond the memory of man．There are alfo barons by tenure，as the bi－ thops of the land，who，by virtue of baronies annexed to their bifhopricks，have always had place in the upper houfe of parlia－ ment，and are called lords fpiritual．
2．Baron is an officer，as barons of the exchequer to the king：of thefe the principal is called lord chief baron，and the three others are his affiifants，between the king and his fubjects，in caufes of juftice，belonging to the exchequer．
