Bu'ckshorn Plantain: u. f. [coronopus, Lat. from the form of the leaf.] A plant.

It agrees in flower and fruit with the plantain; but its leaves are deeply cut in on the edges; whereas the leaves of the plantain are cither entire, or but dightly indented. The fpecies are four; r. Garden bucksborn plantain, or hartho:n, E'c. The firft fpecies, though entitled a garden plant, yet is found wild upon moft commons, and barren heaths; where, from the poornefs of the foil, it appears to be very different from the garden kind, as being little more than a fourth part fo large. This fipecies was formerly cultivated in gardens as a falad herb, but, at prefent, is little regarded, and wholly difufed. Miller.
Bu'cithorn. n. f. [rbamnus, Lat. fuppofed to be fo called from bucc, Sax. the belly.]

It hath a funnel-fhaped fower, confifting of one leaf, divided toward the top into four or five fegments; out of the flowercup rifes the pointal, which becomes a foft roundifh berry, very full of juice, inclofing four hard feeds. The fpecies are, Common purging buckthorn. 2. Leffer purging buckthorn. 3 . Buchtlor i, with long fpines, and a white bark of Montpelier. The firtt of thefe trees is very common in hedges; the berries of which are ufed in medicine, particularly for making a fyrup, which was formerly in great ufe; though, of late, other forts of berries have either been mixed with thofe of the buckthorn, or wholly fubtituted in their place; which mixture hath fpoiled the fyrup, and rendered it lefs efteemed. The buchtborn berrics may be diftinguifhed whether they are right or not, by opening them, and obferving the number of feeds in each; for thefe have commonly four. The fecond fort is lefs common in England. Both thefe forts may be propagated, by laying down their tender branches in autunn. The firf fort will grow to the height of eighteen or twenty feet; the fecond fort feldom rifes above cight fcet high. They may alfo be propagated by feeds.
Bu'ckwheat: n. f. [buckwesitz, Germ. fagopyrum, Lat.]
The flowers grow in a fpike, or branched from the wings of the leaves; the cup of the flower is divided into five parts, and refembles the petals of a flower; the feeds are black, and three cornered. The fpecies are, I. Common upright buckwbeat. 2. Common creeping buckrwheat. The firft is cultivated in England, and is a great improvement to dry barren lands. The fecond grows wild, and is feldom cultivated. Miller.

Calcina'tion: n.f. [from calcine; calcination, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fufion; for when fufion is longer continued, not only the more fubtile particles of the body itfelf fly off, but the particles of fire likewife infmuate themfelves in fuch multitudes, and are fo blended through its whole fubftance, that the fluidity, firft caufed by the fire, can no longer fubfift. From this union arifes a third kind of body, which, being very porous and brittle, is eafily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated everywhere into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. 2 uincy.

Divers refidences of bodies are wont to be thrown away, as foon as the diftillation or calcination of the body that yielded them is ended.

It has a thort fpreading bell-fhaped flower, confifting of one leaf, cut into feveral parts, whofe pointal afterwards becomes a roundifh fruit, compofed of three cells joined together, each containing one oblong feed. To thefe notes fhould be added, male flowers having no pointal, and which, growing round the female flower, fall off, and are never fruitful. The fpecies are fix: 1. The common caffavi, or caffada. 2. The moft prickly caflavi, with a chafte tree leaf. 3 . Tree-like lefs prickly caffari, with white flowers growing in umbels, and a ftinging wolfsbane leaf. 4. Shrubby caffavi, without prickles, and fmooth leaves, which are lefs divided, $E_{c} c$. The firft fort is cultivated in all the warm parts of America, where the root, after being divefted of its milky juice, is ground to flour, and then made into cakes of bread. Of this there are two forts. The moft common has purplifh ftalks, with the veins and leaves of a purplifh colour; but the ftalks of the other are green, and the leaves of a lighter green. The laft fort is not venomous, even when the roots are frefh and full of juice; which the negroes frequently dig up, roaft, and eat, like potatoes, without any ill effects. The calfada is propagated by cuttings, about fifteen or fixteen inches long, taken from thofe plants whofe roots are grown to maturity. Thefe cuttings are planted by the Americins in their rainy feafons, a foot or fourteen inches deep in the ground; and the land in which they are placed, muft be well wrought. When the cuttings have taken root, they require no farther care than to be kept clear from weeds; and, in about eight or nine months, when grown to maturity, in good ground they will be as large as the calf of a man's leg, but commonly equal to the fize of good parfneps.

CEDAR. n. f. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.
It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than thofe of the pine-tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, refembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flawers, or katkins, produced at remote diftances from the fruit on the fame tree. The feeds are produced in large cones, fquamofe and turbinated. The extenfion of the branches is very regular in celar trees; the ends of the fhoots declining, and thereby fhewing. their upper furface, which is conftantly cloathed with green leaves, fo regularly as to appear at a diftance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable profpect. It is furprifing that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the fnow continues moft part of the year, What we find in Scripture, of the lofty cedar's, is no ways applicable to the ftature of this tree; for we find by thofe now growing in England, and by the teftimony of travellers, that have feen thofe few remaining trees on Mount Libanus, they are not inclined to grow very lofty, but extend their branches very far ; to which the allufion, made by the Pfalmift, agrees very well, when, defcribing the flourifhing flate of a poople, he fays, thoy fall Sprcad thcir branches like the cedar tree. Maundrel, in his Travels, fays, he meafured one of the largeft cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards fix inches in circumference, and found, and thirty feven yards in the fipread of its boughs. At about five or fix yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof againft the putrefaction of animal bodics.' The faw duft is thought to be one of the fecrets ufed by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming mytery. This wood is alfo faid to yield an oil, which is famous for preferving books and writings, and the wood is thought by my lord Bacon to continuc above a thoufand years found. It is alfo recorded, that, in the temple of Apollo, at Utica, there was found timber of near two thoufand years old; and the ftatue of the goddefs, in the famous Ephefian temple, was faid to be of this material, as well as the timber work of that glorious ftructure, This fort of timber is very dry, and fubject to fplit; nor does it well endure to be faftened with nails; therefore pins of the fame wood are much preferable.

I muft yield my body to the earth:
Thus yields the codar to the axe's edge,
Whofe arms gave thelter to the princely eagle;

There it is not flrange, that the mind fhould give itfelf up to the common opinion, or render itfelf to the firft comer. Locke. COMET. n. $\int$. [cometa, Latin, a hairy ftar.]

A heavenly body in the planetary region appearing fuddenly, and again difappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit, like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipfes, having one of their foci in the center of the fun; and being very long and eccentrick, they bccome invifible, when in that part moft remote from the fun. Comet., popularly called blazing ftars, are diftinguifhed fult from other ftars by a long train or tail of light, always oppofite to the fun: hence arifes a popular divifion of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and baired comets; though the divifion rather relates to the different circumiftances of the fame comet, than to the phxnomena of the feveral. Thus when the comet is eaftward of the fun, and moves from it, the comet is faid to be bearded, barbatus, becaufe the light marches before it. When the light is weftward of the fun, the comet is faid to be tailed, becaufe the train follows it. When the comet and the fun are diametrically oppofite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the hoily of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to Sir Ifaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin flender vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by their near neighbourhood to the fun, and this vapour is furnifhed by the atmolpheie of the comet. The tails are of various lengths; and being produced in the perihelions of the comets, will go off aiong with their heads into remote regions, and there gradually vainifh, 'till the comets return towards the fun. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarcfied, and diffufed through all the celeftial regions, may probably, by little and little, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmofpheres. For the confervation of the water, and moifure of the planets, comets feem abfolutely requifite; from whofe condenfed vapours and exhalations all that moifture which is fpent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be refupplied and recruited; for all vegetables grow and increafe wholly from fuids; and, as to their greateft part, turn by putrefaction into earth again, an earthy flime being perpetually precipitated to the bottom of putrefying liquors. Hence the quantity of dry earth muft continually increafe, and the moifture of the globe decreafe, and at laft be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual fupply from fome part or other of the univerie. And Ifufpect, adds Sir Ifaac, that the fpirit which makes the fineft, fubtilef, and beft part of our air, and which is abfolutely requifite for the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets. On this principle there feems to be fome foundation for the popular opinion of prefages from comets; fince the tail of a comet, thus intermingled with our atmofphere, may produce changes very fenfible in animal and vegetable bodies.

The fame great author has computed that the fun's heat, in the comet of 168 c , was, to his heat with us at Midfummer, as twenty-eight thoufand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet, was near two thoufand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He alfo calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimenfions of our earth, would fcarce be cool in fifty thoufand years. If then the comet be fuppofed to cool a hundred times as faft as red-hot iron, yet, fince its heat was a thoufand times greater, fuppofing it of the bignefs of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years. Hitherto no comet has threatened the earth with a nearer approach than that of 1680 ; for, by calculation, Dr. Halley found, on November II, that comet was not above one fem liameter of the earth to the northward of the way of the earth ; at which time, had the earth been in that part of its orbit, the comet would have had a parallax equal to that of the moon. What might have been the confequence of fo near an appulfe? a contact or fhock of the celeftial bodics? a deluge, Mr. Whifton fays. Aftronomers have been divided about the return of comets, and time and obfervation muft determine the queftion. However, Dr. Halley has foretold the return of one in $\mathbf{1 7 5}^{8}$, which formerly appeared in $145^{6}$.

1. Lord high confable is an ancient officer of the crown, long difufed in England, but lately fubfifting in France; where the confable commanded the marefchals, and was the firtt officer of the army. The function of the comfable of England confifted in the care of the cominon peace of the land in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. To the court of the conftable and marfhal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blafonry of arms within it. The firft confable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary 'till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid afide, as being fo powerful as to become troublefome to the king. From thefe mighty magiftrates are derived the inferiour' confables of hundreds and franchifes; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be chofen in evcry hundred for the confervation of the peace, and view of armour. Thefe are now called high confables, becaure continuance of time, and increafe both of people and offences, have occafioned others in every town of like nature, but inferiour authority, called petty confables. Befides thefe, we have conffables denominated from particular places; as conflable of the Tower, of Dover cafle, of the caftle of Carnarvon; but thefe are properly caffellani, or governours of caftles.
