HO/NEY. n.f. [bunrç, Saxon; honig, Dutch; bonec, honag; German.]

1. A thick, vifcous, fluid fubftance, of a whitifh or yellowifh colour, fweet to the tafte, foluble in water; and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant fmeil. We have three kinds of honey: the firft and fineft is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant fmell: it is the firft produce of the fwarm, obtained by draining from the combs without preffing. The fecond is thicker than the firt, often almoft folid, procured from the combs by preflure: and the worft is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs over the fire, and then preffing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the bafis in the petals, is fecreted a fweet juice, which the bee, by means of its probofis or trunk, fucks up, fwallows it, flies a'way with it to the hive, and difcharges again from the ftomach through the mouth into fome of the cells of the comb. The honey thus taken up into the body of the bee, and depofited again into the cells of the comb, is deftined for the food of the young offspring; but in hard feafons the bees are fometimes reduced to the neceffity of feeding on it themfelves, and die of hunger after they have eat it all up. Honey, taken out of the new combs early in the Summer, is vaftly preferrable to that taken from the fame hive in Autumn. Honey is an excellent pectoral, is detergent, aperient, and diuretick.

Hill's Mat. Misd.
So work the boney bees,
Creatures that by a ruling nature teach

I,Is in Englifh confidered both as a vowel and confonant; though, fince the vowel and confonant differ in their form as well as found, they may be more properly accounted two letters.
$I$ vowel has a long found, as fine, thine, which is ufually marked by an $e$ final; and a fhort found, as fin, thin. Prefixed to $e$ it makes a diphthong of the fame found with the foft $i$, or double $e$, ee: thus field, yield, are fpoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is fpoken frend. Subjoined to a or $e$ it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o makes a mirgled found, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or found compofed of the founds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the Englifh language, as oil, coin. The found of $i$ before another $i$, and at the end of a word, is always expreffed by $y$.
7 confonant has invariably the fame found with that of $g$ in giant; as jade, jet, jilt, jolt, juff.

Dict.
To In a'rch. v. a. [in and arcb.]
Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is ufed when the ftock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and,' having fitted it to that part of the ftock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one fide about three inches in length: after the fame manner cut the ftock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, fo that they may join equally together that the fap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the ftock to admit it ; fo that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their flipping, and the graft will more clorely unite with the ftock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the flock: you fhould fix a ftake into the ground, to which that part of the ftock, as alfo the graft, nould be faftened, ts prevent the wind from breaking them afunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be fufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother-tree, obferving to flope it off clofe to the fock, and cover the joined parts with frefh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in Aprit or May, and is commonly practifed upon oranges, myrtles, jafmines, walnuts firrs, and pines, which will not fucceed by common grafting or budding. Miller.

I'RON. n. $\int$. [baiain, Welfh; 1renn, inen, Saxon; iorn, Erfe.]
I. A metal common to all parts of the world, plentiful in moff; and of a fmall price, though fuperior in real value to the deareft. Though the lighteft of all metals, except tin, it is confiderably the hardeft; and, when pure, natukally malleable, but in a lefs degree than gold, filver, lead, or copper: when wrought into fteel, or when in the impure ftate from its firft fufion, in which it is called caft iron, it is fcarce malleable; and the moft ductile iron, heated and fuddenly quenched in cold water, lofes much of this quality. Iron is more capable of ruft than any other metal, is very fonorous, and requires the ftrongeft fire of all the metals to melt it, and is with difficulty amalgamated with mercury. Moft of the other metals are brittle, while they are hot; but this is moft malleable as it approaches neareft to fufion. It confifts of a vitriolick falt, a vitrifiable earth, and a peculiar bituminous matter. The fpecifick gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 1000 . It is the only known fubifance that is attracted by the loadfone. Iron is not only foluble in all the ftronger acids, but even in common water. Pure iron has been found in fome places but very rarely. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals.

The leaves of the juniper are long, narrow, and prickly; the male flowers are, in fome fpecies, produced at remote diftances from the fruit on the fame tree; but in other fpecies they are produced on different trees from the fruit: the firft is a foft pulpy berry, containing three feeds in eacli. Miller.

Some of our common juniper fhrubs are males and fome females, of the fame feecies. The male flrubs produce, in April and May, a fmall kind of juli with apices on them, very large, and full of farina; the females produce none of thefe juli, but only the berries, which do not ripen till the fecond year, and then do not immediately fall off; fo that it is no uncommon thing to fee the berries of three different years at once on the fame tree. The fhrub is very common with us on heaths and barren tills, but the berries ufed medicinally in our fhops are brought from Germany, where it is greatly more abundant. The berries are powerful attenuants, diureticks, and carminative. Hill.

JU'Ry. n. f. [jurata, Lat. juré, Fr.]
Fury, a company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, fworn to deliver a truth upon fuch evidence as thall be delivered them touching the matter in queftion. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by affife or jury. The trial by affife, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, perfonal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, ro paffeth the judgment. This jury is ufed not only in circuits of juftices errant, but alfo in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the efcheatour make inquifition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inqueft: if the coroner inquire how a fubject found dead came to his end, he ufeth an inquert : the juftices of peace in their quarter$f$ felions, the fheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the fteward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any caufe between party and party, they do it by the fame manner: fo that where it is faid, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or affize; affize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inqueft, empanelled upon any caufe in a court where this kind of trial is ufed. This jury, though it appertain to moft courts of the common law, yet it is moft notorious in the half year courts of the juftices errants, commonly called the great affizes, and in the quarter-feffions, and in them it is moft ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil caufes; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inqueft. In the general affize, there are ufually many juries, becaufe there be itore of caufes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is calted the grand jury, and the reft petit juries. The grand jury confifts ordinarily of twenty-four grave and fubftantial gentlemen, or fome of them yeomen, chofen indifferently out of the whole fhire by the fheriff, to confider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upan them thefe words, billa vera, or dif-allow by writing ignoramus. Such as they do appprove, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be confidered of, becaufe the cafe is of fuch importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party wraverfe the indictment, or challenge it for infufficiency, or remove the caufe to a higher court by certiorari; in which two former cafes it is referred to another jury, and in the latter tranfmitted to the higher. Thofe that pafs upon civil caufes real, are all, or fo many as can conveniently be had, of the fame hundred, where the land or tenement in queftion doth lie, and four at the leaft; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant: according unto which, judgment paffeth afterward in the court where the caufe firt began; and the reafon hereof is, becaufe thefe juftices of affize are, in this cafe, for the eafe of the countries only to take the verdid of the jury by the virtue of the writ called $n / /_{1}$ prius, and fo return it to the court where the caufe is depending.
