FOUNDED OCTOBER 30TH, 1840.

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

It is not expected that the following statistics will be matter of special interest to the public generally; but to those who rejoice in the progress of light and truth, and the upbuilding of literary institutions, and especially to those who have formerly been members of the Philalathean Society, and passed the most pleasant and instructive hours of their lives within her halls, it is hoped this little Catalogue will be an acceptable visitor.

The Philalathean Society was formed in the year 1840. Previous to this time, there were three literary societies connected with the College, entitled the "Union Literary," "Whig," and "Philosophronian" societies. The Philalathean Society was formed by the union of the two latter. One of these had always been, and was at the time of union, as large and prosperous as any in connection with the institution; the other, although it had formerly held a respectable position, both as to character and numbers, was then very small. As the number of students in College was then small, it was thought to be for the good of both College and Societies that a union should take place. Accordingly, in October, 1840, a meeting of the Whig and Philosophronian Societies was held, the union agreed upon, a new constitution drafted and adopted, and a new Society formed, assuming the name "Philalathean," and the motto "Excelsior." According to one of the By-Laws, all who had been members of the Whig and Philosophronian Societies were members of the Philalathean. From its formation to the present time, the Society, through every vicissitude, has been steadily advancing, until it is now larger, more independent, more zealous in its literary labors, and possessed of greater facilities than at any former period. The Society has a commodious and richly furnished hall, a large and well selected library, and in its members, embodies a high order of talent. Many of the best and most useful men in the land, look back to their connection with this Association as the source of their usefulness, success and greatness in the world. As a general thing, the Society is proud of the character sustained by those whom she has at various times sent out; yet at the present time, the Society has thrown around it a stronger and deeper moral and religious influence than at any former period of her history. Many of those whom she now sends forth into the world, are preparing themselves for the ministry, and many of those now connected with the Society have the ministry in view. It is hoped that those who have formerly been members will not forget the association where their first literary effort was made, and where their intellectual powers were awakened and called into vigorous exercise. The Philalathean Society will always be ready and happy to acknowledge the gratitude of her sons who return to visit their parent, and give encouragement and advice to those who are soon to follow them into the great theater of action.

THE following is a list of the members of this Society from October, 1840, to October, 1849. The Society grants an honorable dismissal to those who request it, and have paid their dues; and also confers Diplomas upon all her Graduates, and to any under graduate whom she may deem worthy of her honors. In assigning occupations, some mistakes may have been made, and some are unknown; and we have assigned to each one his residence at the time he connected himself with the Society :
