AN ACCOUNT OF THE CONTROVERSY BETWEEN
REGINALD LORD GREY OF RUTHYN
AND
SIR EDWARD HASTINGS, IN
The Court of Chivalry,
IN THE REIGN OF KING HENRY III.

The following sheets are printed at the expense of the Right Hon. JACOB BARON HASTINGS, for private distribution only.

CHAS. GEO. YOUNG,
York Herald.

College of Arms,
30th October, 1841.

THE following Proceedings in the celebrated contest between Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthyn and Sir Edward Hastings, respecting the right to bear the Arms of HASTINGS, which arose after the death of John, sixth Lord Hastings and third Earl of Pembroke, are printed from a Manuscript in the hand-writing of Robert Glover, Somerset Herald, and now remaining in the library of the College of Arms.¹ Glover appears to have transcribed these Proceedings from an ancient register, in the possession of Henry Earl of Kent in the years 1582 and 1583. The Earl of Kent was the lineal descendant and heir of Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthyn, the Plaintiff in the suit, and died in 1615.

The Harleian MS. N^o. 1178, contains a transcript of Glover's MS. made in the year 1614.

The Proceedings seem to be an Exemplification of the Process in the Court of Chivalry, certified under the seal

¹ Philpot, P. c. N^o. 1. formerly marked and referred to as N^o. I. 5. Glover.

A MS. formerly in the possession of Peter Le Neve, Esq., Norroy, appears to contain a more detailed and ample account of the evidence adduced, together with the Interrogatories put to the witnesses, a transcript of which is in the possession of Henry Lestrange Styleman Le Strange, of Hunstanton, Esq. one of the coheirs of Sir Edward Hastings.

The enrolment of the Process and Evidence in the Controversy between Sir Richard Serope and Sir Robert Grosvenor, in 11 Ric. II., equally celebrated, and probably more interesting from the historical events of the reign of Edward the Third mentioned by the various deponents, has already been printed.

The form and manner of proceeding in the Court of the Constable and Marshal, or Court Military, touching the use and bearing of Arms, collected from records, will be found in the second volume of a Collection of Curious Discourses by eminent Antiquaries, generally known as Hearne's Curious Discourses; 2nd ed. 2 vols. 8vo. 1773, p. 243.

of Prince John, son of King Henry the Fourth, then Constable of England, afterwards created Duke of Bedford, and so well known as the Regent of France, before whom, assisted by Ralph Neville, Earl of Westmorland, Marshal of England, and their respective officers, the cause was heard, by virtue of a Commission issued in the ninth year of the reign of King Henry the Fourth.

The Plaintiff contended for the right to bear the Arms of HASTINGS, as heir-general of John Earl of Pembroke and Baron Hastings, (the last person seised of the Lordship, Lands and Arms of Hastings,) being descended from Elizabeth, sister of the whole blood of John, third Lord Hastings. The Defendant asserted and maintained his right to the Arms as heir male, he being the great-grandson of Sir Hugh Hastings, brother of the half blood of the said John, third Lord Hastings. In the progress of the suit other incidental questions arose; such as, whether livery of Lands could transfer the right of bearing the Arms; whether a label of three points was the proper difference for the next heir of a family; and, whether the possession of the honours by the elder brother gave those honours to his sister of the whole blood, in preference to the right heirs of his younger brother of the half blood.

The decision of the Court was pronounced in the 11th of Henry the Fourth, against Sir Edward Hastings, who was condemned in costs; but from that judgment he entered an appeal, which was never heard.

Sir Edward Hastings denied the justice of the decision, and, notwithstanding he was confined in prison for the payment of the heavy costs in which he was condemned, invoked "God's curse and his own" on all his heirs that would not sue the right after him.

As, however, it is not intended here to discuss the several questions incidentally introduced, or to enter into an examination of the evidence, the following brief but interesting statement respecting this contest, taken from the Case of Sir Jacob Astley, drawn by Sir Harris Nicolas, and printed for the House of Lords, will be a sufficient introduction to the official detail of the Proceedings in the Court of Chivalry.

After the death of John, sixth Lord Hastings and third Earl of Pembroke, in 1389, a Controversy arose between Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthyn, the heir of the whole blood of the said Earl, and Sir Edward Hastings, the collateral heir male, respecting the right to bear the Arms of Hastings, without a mark of Difference or Abatement.

Though merely called "a Plea of Arms,"² it would appear that the *Honours*³ as well as the Arms of the Family were involved in the question, it being then considered that Dignities, like Lands, descended upon the heir of the whole blood of the person last seised, instead of upon the heir of the person first created. Reginald Lord Grey, who asserted that "the Arms, Inheritance, and Name of ² On the Rolls of Parliament, (vol. III. p. 480,) there is a Petition of Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthyn in 2 Hen. IV. 1400-1, stating that he had a suit before the Constable and Marshal of England, between him and Sir Edward de Hastings, Knight, for the Arms of the said Reginald, which suit had been delayed because the said Edward being within age, and in the King's Wardship, had not had a Curator assigned to him for the said suit: Lord Grey therefore prayed that a Curator might be appointed for Sir Edward Hastings, notwithstanding his minority.

³ At the Coronation of King Henry the Fourth, Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthyn claimed to carry the Great Spurs before the King, as John de Hastings Earl of Pembroke, and his ancestors, whose heir he is, had done; which was allowed. Sir Edward Hastings was then a minor; but, at the Coronation of King Henry the Fifth, when Lord Grey, by the Titles of "S^r de Hastings, de Weishford, et de Ruthin," petitioned to bear the Second Sword, as cousin and heir of John de Hastings Earl of Pembroke, and recited his descent, and also to carry the Great Spurs, Sir Edward Hastings, by the style of "Edward Sire de Hastings, Chevalier, cosin et heire universele et heire male" of John Earl of Pembroke, also claimed to bear the Second Sword and Great Spurs, and recited his pedigree.—Harleian MSS. 310, f. 36-39, where the authority referred to is "Ex Bundello Clamiorum de anno primo Henrici Quinti."

Lord Hastings" belonged to him, assumed that Title,⁴ and it was always borne by his descendants, the Lords Grey de Ruthyn and Earls of Kent, until 1640, when Charles Longueville, Esq. the heir-general of the Plaintiff, Lord Grey of Ruthyn, (and cousin and next heir of Henry Earl of Kent,) claimed the dignities of Lord Hastings and Ruthyn. The House of Lords, after hearing Counsel, referred the question to the Judges, who reported their opinion, that there could not be a possessio fratris in a dignity, and the House, conceiving the Claimant's Petition to be defective, ordered, that he should have leave to amend it, by inserting the title of Lord Grey, which was in effect rejecting the claim to the Barony of Hastings; and, accordingly, the Petition having been amended, by confining the claim to that of Grey of Ruthyn, the House resolved, that the Claimant should be admitted to the title and dignity of Lord de Grey.⁵

Sir Edward Hastings, however, also assumed the Title of "Lord Hastings," and never relinquished it.⁶ On the 9th of May, 11 Hen. IV. 1410, the Controversy was decided in favour of Lord Grey de Ruthyn; but Sir Edward Hastings immediately appealed against the judgment;⁷ and on the accession of King Henry the Fifth several Commissions were issued for hearing the Appeal.⁸ The Proceedings were interrupted by the absence of one of the Commissioners, and afterwards by the expedition to France in 1415, Sir Edward Hastings having been retained to serve in the retinue of the Earl of Dorset, by Indentures dated in May 1415, under the designation of "Edward Seigneur de Hastings et de Stuteville."⁹ In 1417 the Appeal was resumed, but (as would appear from a petition of Sir Edward Hastings to the King, about 1421) before judgment was given he was arrested by Lord Grey for the sum of £987, the costs of the original suit, and was thrown into the Marshalsea.¹⁰

⁴ In 1425 he styled himself "Reginald de Grey, Lord Hastynge, Weyford, and of Ruthyn," in a Petition in Parliament stating that he was entitled to Precedency of John Lord Talbot.—(Rot. Parl. vol. IV. p. 312.) His grandson Edmund Lord Grey of Ruthyn was created Earl of Kent in 1465, and was described in the Patent as "Consanguineus noster Edmundus Baro et Dominus de Hastynge, Waisford, et de Ruthyn."

Fearing that the payment of those costs would be deemed an acknowledgment of Lord Grey's right to the Honours and Arms of his family, Sir Edward Hastings continued a prisoner for twenty-six years, part of which time he was, he says in some pathetic documents on the subject,¹¹ "boundyn in fetters of iron liker a thief or a "traitor than like a gentleman of birth." Imprisonment and chains, the destruction of his own health, and the death of his wife and children,¹² could not shake his firmness. He steadily refused Lord Grey's offer to release him from the debt, if he would admit his superior right to the objects in dispute. The only compromise to which he could be induced to consent, was a marriage, either in his own person, or in that of one of his children, with one of those of his adversary; and in case his eldest son, John Hastings, should marry one of Lord Grey's daughters, he said he would relinquish to him and the heirs of that marriage "the Name, Right, Inheritance, and Arms," &c. which he claimed as heir of John last Earl of Pembroke, ⁹ The Original Indentures are in the possession of H. L. Styleman Le Strange, Esq. Sir Edward Hastings assumed the title of "Stuteville," from being the heir of one branch of the ancient baronial family of that name, through his great-grandmother Margery Foliot.

“for I doubt not,” he says, “to shew the possession, right, and claim of my father, my brother Hugh, and to me descended as well by right and possession of Arms, as it is to shew by diem clausit extremum for two parts after the decease of John Hastings last Earl of Pembroke, as for the third part to me after the decease of the last Countess of Pembroke, which Descent, Right, Claim, and Inheritance, God’s curse and mine have all mine heirs that will not sue the right after me, and upon these points I will life;” adding, “for plainly I will never renounce my right without that my son have a great parcel of my right, other than in semblable wise as I have proffered you.”¹³

The latest of those remarkable papers now extant was written about January 1433-4, when Sir Edward Hastings was still in prison, and in which, as before, he styled himself “Edward Lord Hastings.”¹⁴ After 1434 nothing has been discovered respecting him, except his death in January 1437. His son, John Hastings, warned perhaps by his father’s unhappy fate, seems to have yielded to the usurpation of his rights by the Lords Grey of Ruthyn; and, in the reign of King Henry the Eighth, the representation of the House of Hastings fell among Coheirs.

The recent revival of the BARONY OF HASTINGS in the person of Sir Jacob Astley, Bart. as one of the coheirs of Sir Edward Hastings, the Defendant, and in his right as a coheir of Sir Henry Hastings summoned to Parliament in the 49th year of King Henry the Third, has given a new interest to this remarkable case. After a lapse of four centuries the dignity has been restored to one of the heirs of Sir Edward Hastings, who has successfully “sued the right and inheritance after him.”

¹⁴ That document contains many facts corroborative of his descent from the Lords Hastings, and is in itself of much interest. See pp. xiv. xv.

And I say to the Reignald Grey beforesayd, that I Edward beforesaid have best right to bere, have, & use the armes of Hastings, the which ben of gold with a manche of goules. And where that thow hast said, that thow hast best right to have, bere, and use the same armes, and that I have wrongfully usurped the same armes, I say thow lyeest falsly. Over that I say, that thow Reignold Grey, Knight, with thyne adherentes and complices in this ptie, hast withdrawen the evidences and munimentz pteynge to me touchant the heritage of Hastings, colluding in subtraction of my proves by me to be made in this cause of armes, falsly and criminously, against knighthode, cōmon profit, in wicked ensample, in subversion of trewe lawes, and in illusion of the Kinge, the moneth of October the yere of the reigne of Kinge Richard the Second after the Conquest xv, and other monethes and yeres before and sith, at Westminster, Lydgate, Northampton, Doncastre, Bergaveney, and other places, &c.

Mon^r Wiltm Berdwell Ch^{lr} dist que de sa certain science Ex parte def.

Requis cest jure pour quoy sceit, dist pour tant que luy mesmes feust al temps de la faisance du d^{ce} eglise demourant en Elsyng, & vist & conust de sa science le dit Mon^{fr} Hugh le besaiel faire les costages mysés & expenses pour la oeuvre del corps du d^{ce} eglise. Et cest jure feust present illeques al temps de son enterrement, et vist a la messe de ses exeques un courseour noir arraiez tielment come hōme deust joster & un hōme armes seant sur luy presentez al offerant, &c.

Mon^{fr} Wilm Hoo Ch^{tr} d'age de lxxij ans et plus jure & requis en quelle manere appartient al prochein heir a porter ses armes, dist cest Ch^{tr} que del temps de sa discrecion il apptient al prochein heir a porter la labelle de troys poyntz en ses armes & a nulle autre, et cest la cōmune opinion de sa certaine science come il dist des aunciens & vaillantz gentz d'armes & heraudes as queux il appartient de avoir conusance de tielx choses. Et outre dist cest Ch^{tr} que unques ne vist ne oiast aucuns qui dirroient quils avoient vewe ou qui eussent oyez de leur predecessours le contraire selonc la custume d'armes Dengleterre, forspris seulement, que le Roy Edward qui darrein morust fesoit le Prince qui Dieu assoille & touz ses freres except' le Duc de Gloucestre user et porter en leur armes la labelle de trois pointz ove certainz differences en la labelle & en les pointz. Et dist ausi cest Ch^{tr} que les d^{ces} auncestres du d^{ce} partie defendant, cestassavoir besaille, aille, & pier, furent tenuz reputez & a^{ceptez} en usant & portant les ditz armes en manere come desus par luy est depose, successivement ch^{un} apres autre prochein heir as ditz armes des Hastings, & as terres et f^{ries} des Hastings, en cas que le Count mourust sans heir de son corps engendre.
