The catalogue of the Prince Consort's Raphael Collection will, it is hoped, form a welcome and interesting addition to the materials for the history of Painting: it will serve not only as a manual of reference and explanation for those who may have the opportunity of consulting and examining this important work which, by order of Her Majesty the Queen has now been completed at Windsor Castle; but it will also be useful for the information of amateurs and art-students in general, who may not be able to enjoy that privilege.

An explanation of the system which was planned, and so materially developed, by the incessant personal exertions and comprehensive artistic knowledge of His Royal Highness the Prince Consort, cannot fail to prove of interest and of material assistance to all who may desire to study the works of this, or indeed of any other, great painter: and a few introductory remarks concerning the history of the collection itself and of the system which has been finally adopted for its arrangement are requisite, in order to put the reader in complete possession of a knowledge of the means and resources which have been available for this work.

It occurred to His Royal Highness after his first examination of the various collections contained in the Royal Library at Windsor Castle, that it would be very desirable, and indeed necessary to re-arrange these collections, and he laid down one guiding principle which he considered should regulate any such proposed re-arrangement, which was: to afford increased facility of reference to these various valuable art-treasures, and thus to render them available for a thorough and critical illustration of the history of painting. The materials under consideration, though diverse in their nature, had one common feature, that they could all be applied to that purpose.

First and foremost from this point of view and of especial artistic importance and intrinsic value, was the magnificent collection of original drawings by the old masters, some fifteen thousand in number. It included every name inscribed on the roll of the Princes of Art, and represented the greatest of them, such as Leonardo, Raphael and his school, Michael Angelo, the Carracci and their followers, Poussin, Claude Lorraine, Holbein &c., with a richness scarcely ever surpassed in any of the most famous museums of Europe. Around this splendid nucleus were grouped numerous collections of engravings after paintings of every school and of every period. The works of Raphael and Michael Angelo were especially well represented, and the Peintre-Graveurs of the Italian school, although not represented by the choicest impressions from Marc Antonio's or Agostino Veneziano's plates, were of the greatest importance for the study of the Roman school in general. There were also many valuable volumes of the works of the later engravers; the works of Wenzel Hollar had already made a fair progress towards that completeness which enables us now to consider the collection at Windsor almost unique: there was a very curious and perfect illustrative series of William Hogarth's works, whilst the engravings of the English school, especially after the works of Sir Joshua Reynolds and Sir Edwin Landseer* were there to be seen in great profusion and beauty of impression.

* This collection formed by Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Prince Consort with the assistance of Sir E. Landseer himself, is extremely complete, and believed to be perfectly unique.

Other branches of the art of Painting, interesting to the historian as well as to the artist, were represented by a choice collection of original portrait miniatures, dating from the fifteenth century down to the present day; by tens of thousands of engraved portraits; of engravings recording memorable events; of political caricatures of the greatest variety &c. &c.

The student also found ample materials for a comparison between antique art and the productions of the Renaissance in a highly instructive collection of drawings of the ruins of palaces and temples, of statues, bassi-relievi, fresco-decorations, furniture &c. which had been carefully prepared by some unknown, but thoroughly competent artists of the XVIIth and XVIIIth centuries.

The general outline of the plan to be adopted for the re-arrangement of all these art treasures was fixed at once by His Royal Highness: all this vast material was to be made subservient to the representation of a systematic history of Painting, systematic not only in showing the succession of the various schools and periods of art, but also in illustrating individually the works of each of the great artists. The latter point could only be carried out by as complete an assemblage as possible of engravings after all the pictures of the Master, so that the student might be enabled from the collection of drawings first to observe the Master in his earliest and perhaps happiest moments of inspiration and artistic creation, and then from the engravings after the finished paintings, to perceive how far the first thoughts had been modified during the progress of the work and what had been their final developement.

It was evident that if anything like completeness was to be aimed at, the progress must necessarily be slow, and that the first step in such a direction should be to attempt to collect a complete representation of the works executed by each of the great masters during their artistic careers.

The discussion of the future plan having reached this point, it was apparent that it would be most desirable to make a commencement with a master, whose acknowledged pre-eminence in his art had influenced and regulated the style and treatment of painting for a long successive period, and whose works would afford an opportunity for the illustration of an uninterrupted and fully developed course of artistic progress.

The name of Raphael Santi da Urbino at once suggested itself: his life was one of constant artistic development, from the timid "Virgin and Child," the production of his sixteenth year, to the mystic glory of the "Madonna di San Sisto", or of the "Transfigured Redeemer on Mount Tabor"; and considering the uninterrupted admiration of three centuries and a half, it might be hoped that none of his works had escaped notice, and that nearly all had been described and engraved.

Without doubt the application of the above-mentioned scheme to the works of any-one master must involve a great amount of labour and assiduous research : but it was an additional recommendation, if this artist needed it, that in the instance of Raphael much valuable work had already been done towards the exposition of his life and works, for he had recently found a most careful and painstaking biographer in J. D. Passavant, * who in his work "Rafael von Urbino und sein Vater Giovanni Santi" had given us a very elaborate catalogue of every picture, and of nearly every drawing from the artist's hand. He had spent several years in visiting the galleries of Europe, and had examined many a private collection, and many archives; and every where his pen had been busy in noting documentary evidence of the various data of Raphael's life, and in describing every work of art which could claim the name of Raphael. His valuable history thus afforded a clear and detailed text-book for the illustration of the theme upon which he had written with such earnest research and ability.

With regard to the works of Leonardo and Michael Angelo no such exhaustive research has yet been carried out.

In the beginning of the year 1853, the first important step was taken by the completion as far as possible of the collection of engravings after the works of Raphael, which already existed in the Windsor Library. The Prince Consort's desire was to obtain the best representation which had been given of every painting justly ascribed to Raphael. Passavant's book contained a full list of engravings after all the various pictures, and these engravings were so numerous and of such different artistic value that a selection became absolutely necessary. The famous old prints of the XVIth century naturally first claimed admittance, for they record all that Marc Antonio, Agostino, or Caraglio had seen; moreover the greater part of them had been engraved during Raphael's life time, and many of them probably under his own direction. With the requisite additions from the best of the more modern engravings, a highly instructive and sufficiently faithful representation of all the authentic works was thus obtained.

Fortunately the matter did not rest there. In comparing the original drawings of Raphael, which are preserved in the Windsor Library, with the pictures for which they evidently were the studies, His Royal Highness's interest was attracted by observing in very many cases, the various discrepancies between the first sketch and the finished painting. With the exception of decided academical studies drawn from the model, nearly all the other drawings showed that important alterations had been adopted by the artist in the course of the execution of his pictures. To endeavour to trace the motives for these changes and variations was a deeply interesting task, the accomplishment of which alone would tend to give a real insight into the artist's mind, and also enable us to appreciate his creations, almost as if we had watched their origin and progress in his own studio. If the projected collection could supply the necessary materials for such a study of the master, then—and then only, would it be a worthy representation of the greatest and noblest genius in the history of art; then it would place before the student not only the entire series of the artist's works and demonstrate the general developement of his genius, but it would also explain the individual history of each of his conceptions, and would show how the first hasty sketch had ripened into the fully matured and conscientiously studied master piece.

Such a truly systematic plan fascinated the Prince and engaged his closest attention. It was decided that the best copies not only of the pictures but also of the drawings still existing should be received into the collection and grouped around those pictures for which they could be identified to be studies. The scope of the collection again became considerably enlarged. Various works existed, or were in course of publication, in which a goodly number of Raphael-drawings were represented in more or less faithful facsimiles: but of a far greater number of drawings no facsimiles or reproductions of any kind had ever been published, and here most fortunately the newly invented art of photography stepped in to supply the means for the introduction into the collection of facsimiles of unimpeachable fidelity. The Prince Consort thus took the lead by first causing all the Raphael drawings contained in the Royal Library to be photographed; other proprietors of drawings were then induced to follow his example, and frequently the impulse given by His Royal Highness's request for photographic copies, led to the publication of such copies, which thus became a boon to amateurs in general. When the owner did not render such assistance, the photographs had to be taken at the Prince's own expense and for his collection only; but it is pleasant to record that with one single exception, no owner ever refused to allow the faithful reproductions of his treasures to be deposited in the Prince's portfolios. Years of patient labour were required to gather together these hundreds of sheets from collections, which are dispersed all over Europe. Passavant, it is true, had catalogued the drawings according to the collections in which he had found them during his travels: but a great many private collections had been dispersed since the publication of his book, and the fate of each individual drawing had in very many instances to be traced through more or less carefully prepared sale-catalogues.

It now remains to notice one more development of the collection, which indeed gave it an entirely new interest and importance. At first, and for a considerable period, it had been the Prince Consort's declared intention to admit to the collection only such pictures and drawings as were generally considered to be the genuine works of Raphael; but it was found impossible to abide by this rule. Not only is there hardly a single picture upon the authenticity of which doubts have not been cast at one time or another by some over-conscientious critic, and that too in spite of the strongest intrinsic and documentary evidence, but with regard to drawings especially it frequently occurred that originals hitherto unsuspected, turned out to be only clever facsimiles, and vice versa, when the impartially faithful photographs of both were placed side by side in the collection. It was necessary to exercise much discretion and consideration, before assigning to each new addition its place in the collection, and in order that nothing of real importance should escape due notice, it was at last arranged to admit every work of art, to which Raphael's name had ever been attached by any definite authority. The collection was doubtless in considerable danger of being over-run by valueless objects which might claim admission on account of the name which had been attached to them, either by the avarice of a dealer or the partiality of an owner, and this danger could only be avoided by the most scrupulous separation of works, which were undoubtedly genuine, from those which were merely attributions. Criticism thus became unavoidable, but on the other hand the completeness of the materials submitted to the eye of the critic, placed that criticism upon a broader and a surer basis than it had ever been before. All that the art-critic might have studied, or had perhaps overlooked, at various times in the remotest capitals of Europe, he here found placed side by side; questions, which his recollections, dimmed by distance of time and place, had never allowed him to settle satisfactorily, could be, and have been in many instances solved and decided, often in a few minutes.

Without any exaggeration it may be asserted that the natural developement of the Prince Consort's first idea has given this collection such an importance that not only can no future biographer of Raphael Santi avoid giving to it the deepest attention, but it also forms a beautiful illustrative memorial of how an artist can be, and ought to be, studied, and what results may be obtained, when a mind capable of following the purest genius in its noblest aspirations, undertakes the task.

Having thus traced the growth of the general plan from its first conception to its condition of full maturity, a few more words must be added concerning the details of its execution.

Passavant's work was the guide from the very beginning. His second volume gives, in the first place, a list of the pictures chronologically arranged and accompanied by a sort of appendix of a certain number of more or less doubtful attributions, grouped according to subjects. With each picture are classed the drawings and studies belonging to it; they are briefly indicated, but these lists are most frequently incomplete. Two separate chapters then treat of a few works of sculpture, which have been generally ascribed to Raphael, and of various buildings &c.—erected after his designs. The second part of the volume is devoted to a valuable descriptive list of all the drawings which Passavant had seen, arranged according to the collections in which he had found them. A separate chapter describes a number of prints, chiefly of the Italian schools of the XVIth century, which are, or are said to be, engraved after Raphael's designs. The same divisions were adopted in the collection, but it was not very long, ere the practical use of the system exposed its inconveniences. The general principle by which such a vast collection should be arranged, ought to be simple and easily intelligible, and founded upon the materials themselves. In this particular case there was a choice of two systems: an arrangement either chronologically, or else according to subjects. Passavant had adopted the former plan for the most important part: the list of Raphael's pictures; using the latter for the arrangement of the doubtful paintings, works of architecture and sculpture, and introducing a third system, that of arrangement by localities, for the drawings. Unity was thus sacrificed, obviously for the special purpose of showing the developement of the artist's genius throughout his career by means of a strictly chronological list, examining merely those paintings which Passavant unhesitatingly ascribed to Raphael himself.

The first condition for the success of this plan must depend upon the certainty with which a precise date can be assigned to each picture; for by their dates they are to be arranged. Here at the outset we are immediately met by the difference of critics in their decisions with regard to such facts. The number of pictures signed and dated by Raphael himself is comparatively very small, and they alone can supply us with the landmarks of his artistic life, and enable us, by a comparison with them, to ascertain the dates of his other works. Yet even here again with regard to these pictures themselves no general agreement can be arrived at: it is a debatable question whether the date of the "Belle Jardinière" is to be read as 1507 or 1508: the grand Blenheim altar-piece had always been catalogued under the year 1505, until a recent more careful examination of the picture* has shown that the signature bears the date of 1507. Even the most conscientious study of the undated pictures, on the other hand, will seldom produce a more positive result, than to give us the extreme limits of two or three years, within which the work must have been created. We shall always be able to point out groups of pictures which for various reasons must be closely related to each other and bear evidences of a nearly contemporaneous origin, and we may then also indicate which of these groups must necessarily or most probably be, the earlier, and which the later in its origin: but to attempt more than this, will seldom result in more than the individual opinion of the critic, which he will find it difficult to justify by anything like conclusive reasons against the manifold attacks, to which he will undoubtedly find himself exposed. But we may go one step further and say, that should even the very year and month of each painting be fully determined, a collection arranged merely by these dates would fail to give a clear and easily comprehensive exposition of the artist's progress. This was felt very soon after His Royal Highness's collection had reached a certain stage of completeness: the constant change of subjects caused by the chronological arrangement brought a great want of unity and tranquillity. From a portrait the eye was conducted to a Holy Family; then to a mythological composition or to a large historical fresco &c, and it required a highly experienced mind in order not to be disturbed by such variety and such change of subjects. Under this chronological arrangement the contemplation of one class of Raphael's works at a time, e. g. his Holy Families, was all but impossible, or at least could only be done at the expense of the time and trouble requisite for turning over all the portfolios of this vast collection.

* made by Mr George Scharf when preparing his instructive "Catalogue Raisonné" of the pictures in Blenheim palace.

It will be seen therefore that the first part of Passavant's list would only supply a rather uncertain and certainly unsatisfactory system; but the difficulties increased on proceeding to the second part, which includes the drawings and engravings. Leaving the engravings aside for the present, we find the drawings catalogued according to the collections in which they had been seen by Passavant, in fact, according to a purely accidental opportunity, and so liable to frequent changes, that at the very moment of the publication of his work, many of the private collections therein described no longer existed, whilst many others have since been dispersed. In the next place a great many drawings had to be placed with the pictures to which they referred, and were therefore not any longer to be found under the head in which Passavant had described them. In fact so long as Passavant's lists were adhered to, the numerous facsimiles and photographs contained in this portion of the collection, represented originals which in this order or context did not exist any more, or at any rate they could only give an incomplete idea of the various collections.

Another not very well defined chapter, was that of the so called "old engravings": it contained chiefly the engravings of Marc Antonio and his scholars, who have preserved many compositions of Raphael which would otherwise have been lost to us, but in this chapter Passavant had also included prints down to quite modern times; some of them engraved after genuine drawings or paintings, with which for all purposes of correct reference they ought to have been catalogued, and many more bearing Raphael's name without any authority for such ascription.

As long as the collection was only in process of formation, all these inconveniences, were either felt less heavily or could be passed over for the time, for as long as Passavant's lists were closely adhered to, entire attention could be directed towards bringing together all that he had mentioned: but as the work progressed towards completion it soon became apparent to His Royal Highness that a totally fresh arrangement was imperatively necessary in order to render the work of efficient value, and practically useful for all those purposes for which it had been undertaken.

Towards the end of 1861 the collection had advanced far towards completion and the outlines of the new system of arrangement were so far matured that very little seemed to intervene between the final reconstruction of the collection, when on the 14th of December the sudden removal of His Royal Highness from the scene of his great and useful labours cast sorrow and desolation upon the hearts of all around him, and sent one universal pang of grief and bereavement throughout the land.

When the fitting time came for the question to be submitted for The Queen's consideration, Her Majesty expressed the wish, that with regard to the Raphael Collection, as in every other case, Her beloved Consort's intentions should be carried out as completely as possible. The Prince's views not only concerning the general outline, but also with respect to many details, had been laid down with sufficient clearness and completeness to insure that they could be strictly adhered to in everything that still remained to be done.

The difficulties which had arisen out of Passavant's attempt at an arrangement by order of date and locality, have been already explained; a few words must now be added as to the alteration which has been made, by adopting an arrangement according to subjects.

It is an incontestable advantage that this principle does not admit of any doubt as to the general position which ought to be given to any single work, for each thereby finds its kindred subjects and forms therewith an harmonious group. From a critical point of view again it must appear very useful to see all similar subjects placed together: should any spurious production have crept in amongst the genuine works of the master, it will be discovered much more easily when it is seen and studied side by side with a similar subject.

Again the very end which Passavant had chiefly in view; viz.: to show the developement of the genius of the artist, will be attained with greater facility, for his progress will be traced much more easily through a homogeneous series of works. Very frequently when seen in this way, one composition will throw a peculiar light upon another, and thus reveal their common origin out of one idea. In other cases the student cannot fail to be interested by discovering evident signs of important compositions which had been planned at various times but abandoned again: some of them indeed even after having reached a very high degree of artistic developement.*

Such being the general advantages of the system, the further details of arrangement will be easily understood. All similar subjects having once been grouped together, each class contained pictures as well as unfinished compositions, preserved either in original drawings or in engravings after them. It appeared advisable to keep the unfinished compositions separate in order not to interrupt

* It would lead us too far to describe here all such cases, and it may suffice to indicate one or two. Thus it will be seen (p. 40) that Raphael at one time had planned a grand composition of a Resurrection: Christ had risen and was floating above, surrounded by the heavenly host, whilst numerous groups of frightened guardians in the most varied, but all equally animated, attitudes, surrounded the sarcophagus below, looking aghast at the dazzling apparition of an angel seated upon the edge of the open tomb. The composition had been so far matured, that Raphael had commenced to study the single figures after the nude model; Passavant had known most of these studies, and as the style of their treatment and execution pointed to the latest period of Raphael's life, he had believed them to be rejected studies for the fresco of the Battle of Constantine. Their proper meaning was understood the moment they were placed side by side with the bold sketch for the lower part of the Resurrection, which is preserved in the Oxford collection. As most of these remarkable academical studies of nude soldiers strikingly resemble in treatment those for the apostles in the "Transfiguration", it may be concluded that, if Raphael's life had been spared for a few years longer, we should possess in this "Resurrection" a worthy companion to his now last master piece, "the Transfiguration".

Again, in turning to the designs of mythological subjects, we perceive a group of bold pen and ink sketches, evidently dating from the later years of Raphael's life, which represent the various labours of Hercules (p. 128), but of their intended destination, nothing has as yet been discovered.

the study of a series of finished paintings by the casual introduction of unconnected drawings or hasty sketches; it now remained to be seen, where it was most desirable to place the pictures or drawings which were ascertained not to be Raphael's own works; whether at the end of each class, or at the end of the whole collection, so as to form a sort of second part or appendix. The former plan has been adopted, as being more consonant with the leading thought which has been kept in view throughout the whole work: the importance of affording the greatest facilities for reference and comparison. By placing the attributions in close juxtaposition with genuine works of each class, their different quality is rendered far more apparent, or, as is not unfrequently the case, the great beauty and similarity of treatment in some of these doubtful pictures will explain the reason why they have hitherto passed, and might still continue to pass, for the genuine productions of the master.

All the pictures or unfinished drawings which are recognised as genuine, have been placed as far as possible in chronological order: the attributions then follow, and are generally grouped by subjects, but in a few cases* these have been placed first in instances where a closer connection with Raphael himself or at least with his school, could be distinctly traced.

Each class then consists of two parts, both again subdivided and forming the following sections:

- A. Pictures by Raphael.
- B. Pictures ascribed to Raphael.
- C. Compositions by Raphael, preserved in drawings or old engravings.

---

* Thus in the chapter of the Holy Families (pp. 81 to 84) where seven or eight thoroughly Peruginesque and Raphaellesque compositions head the long list of erroneous attributions; or amongst the ascribed Portraits (p. 154) where in several cases it must be admitted that the portrait, ordered from Raphael himself, was painted in his studio and under his supervision.

D. Compositions ascribed to Raphael.

The classes which have been adopted amount to twenty: they are,

1. Old Testament subjects.
2. New Testament subjects.
3. Sacred subjects, such as representations of Christ, the Almighty, the Angels.
4. Holy Families.
5. The life and legend of the Virgin Mary.
6. The legends of the Saints.
7. Mythological subjects.
8. Amorini; Playing children &c.
9. Allegorical subjects.
10. Portraits.
11. Historical subjects.
12. Battle-pieces.
13. Genre subjects.
14. The Vatican Frescoes: viz.: the Stanze della Segnatura, dell'Eliodoro, and dell'Incendio del Borgo; the Loggie; the Sala Vecchia dei Palafrenieri, and the Sala del Costantino.
15. The Vatican Tapestries.
16. The Siena Frescoes, executed by Pinturicchio, with the assistance of Raphael's designs.
17. Various other Frescoes.
18. Architectural works, including designs for, and after ornamental decorations.
19. Sculpture.
20. Studies of various groups and figures; of heads; of drapery; of animals; of landscapes; after sculpture; and after old Masters.

The selection of these twenty classes hardly requires explanation. Nos. 1 to 13 are arranged in the manner usually adopted since the time of Heineken and Bartsch. After the works of the master have been studied therein from the various points of view of the subjects represented, the succeeding four large classes, Nos. 14 to 17 refer to his fresco-paintings: the very acme of his artistic career. The most prominent position has been given to the decorations of the Vatican in Nos. 14 & 15. In order not to disturb their context, various frescoes executed at intervals either by Raphael himself, or by his pupils after his cartoons, have been reserved for Nos. 16 & 17.

The appearance of Pinturicchio's frescoes in the Library of the cathedral at Siena under class No. 16 may give rise to some comment, but it will be understood why this series has been included under the head of the various frescoes, if it is borne in mind that we still possess Raphael's own original designs for at least three of these compositions, that he perhaps assisted his friend in a like manner upon the other frescoes of this series, and that the commission entrusted to Pinturicchio thus gave Raphael the first practical opportunity of studying the laws of such great historical compositions as are adapted to mural decoration.

No. 18 contains illustrations of the buildings erected after Raphael's plans and various studies of architectural details and decorations. No. 19 is devoted to the few works of sculpture which can claim a Raphaelesque origin. Finally in No. 20 have been placed together all those drawings and studies, chiefly after the nude model, the antique or after old masters, which are neither connected with any of the finished paintings, nor are clearly defined as to the subject represented.

A few apparent deviations from the system still remain to be explained. Thus, for example, pictures which form part of a larger composition are placed with that composition.* Paintings attributed to Raphael, but in reality partial

* The Agony in the garden, the Procession to Golgotha, the Pietà (p. 57) do not appear amongst New Testament subjects but with Holy Family No. VI, because they formed part of its predella; and again for the same reason, the Annunciation, the Adoration of the Magi and the Presentation in the Temple (p. 104) have been catalogued amongst the "Legends of the Virgin", because they are the predelle of the Coronation of the Virgin, No I. .

copies or applications of parts of some genuine work are to be found with the genuine work.* When a genuine composition preserved in an original drawing or an old engraving has been made use of by some subsequent painter, this production is placed with the drawing instead of appearing by itself and unexplained amongst the erroneous attributions.† In all these and a few similar instances the illustrations of Raphael's genuine works has been ever kept in view: and if this fact is remembered, we shall not fail to perceive that any apparent inconsistencies are the necessary consequences of the adoption of this one leading idea.

A sort of introductory chapter has been devoted to the illustration of Raphael's person: it contains a series of whatever representations we possess of him, chronologically arranged. Those portraits of Raphael which are at the same time portraits by Raphael or attributed to him appear necessarily once more in the class No. 10. In a second part have been placed all those portraits, whether by Raphael or not, which have been erroneously supposed to represent the master. An appendix, containing a few miscellaneous illustrations: views of his birth place, facsimiles of his writing &c, will be found a useful addition.

It is now only necessary to complete the description of this vast collection by explaining the outward form under which it will meet the eye of the art student. All the thousands of engravings and photographs are firmly laid down upon large sheets of a uniform size, 84 centimetres high and 26 cm. wide (about 33<sup>1</sup>/<sub>8</sub> inches by 26 inches). These sheets

* For example, a certain oil painting of Charity will not be found amongst Allegorical Subjects, but with the tapestry of Ananias (p. 249) because it is only a repetition of one of the groups ornamenting the pilaster of that tapestry.

† For this reason the oil painting of the Last Supper formerly attributed to Raphael will be found along with the genuine drawing of the "Cène aux Pieds" of which it is only a reproduction (p. 37); and a Holy Family in the Gallery of Wilton House has been catalogued with the famous "Vierge au bassin" (p. 97) because the motive of the picture has been derived from the principal group of the composition, which we find preserved in Marc Antonio's engraving.

are formed by pasting two sheets of fine cartridge paper upon linen. Some surprise has been expressed on different occasions that His Royal Highness should have caused so many valuable prints to be laid down bodily upon the mounts. The reason for so doing was however a very good one. The Prince wished the collection to be used, and hoped that many a hand would in course of time turn over the leaves, and by thus pasting down the prints, they were protected, better than by any other mode of mounting, from all injury by rubbing or careless folding, as well as from the danger of being torn, mislaid or perhaps lost entirely. In comparison with these advantages, the diminution of their commercial value might well be overlooked, especially as a reasonable hope is cherished that in the Royal Collection, they have now found their last resting place. These large sheets are kept in 50 convenient cases; each case containing upwards of fifty sheets, and these cases are placed in a magnificent cabinet in the Print room of the Royal Library, forming one of its choicest ornaments. There they will remain, a lasting record of the Prince's earnest love of whatever was good and beautiful, and of the systematic and thoughtful principles which regulated every matter that he took in hand, and which guided him to render this collection not only a recreation for his leisure hours, and a memorial of the great master, whose works he so much admired, but also a permanent and valuable example of what might be done for the enlightenment of all future amateurs and lovers of art.

As soon as the entire re-arrangement of the collection had been completed, Passavant's lists could no longer serve as a guide. Not only did the collection contain much more than Passavant had ever mentioned, but it presented everything in a different way. It therefore became absolutely necessary to draw up a catalogue, easy for reference and giving a sufficient explanation of the entire collection, and so arranged that if it was wished to study any particular class of subjects or even any one single picture or drawing, the catalogue would at once point out where the required subject would be found; it is hoped that the present publication will be found to answer these various requirements.

One more question remained to be solved, viz.: whether the catalogue was to be limited to the form above described; that is, whether it was to be a mere hand-list, sufficient for the identification of every work, or whether it was to discuss and to justify the results submitted in the collection; to be indeed a so-called "Catalogue Raisonné". In the latter case every single piece must have been fully described, its history must have been given, all the reasons must have been stated, upon which every conclusion as to genuineness had been founded: in fact the catalogue would then have become an entirely altered and considerably enlarged reconstruction of Passavant's second volume. It has been considered that the very large amount of material necessary to be collected for such a work, would interfere with the principal end, which it was desired to attain, viz.: to facilitate and assist in the use of the Windsor Collection by the art student. As the matter stands therefore, this catalogue does not give more than what is sufficient for the identification of each object; the indications of the galleries or private collections in which the originals are to be found, are as short as they could be conveniently made, and are founded upon the latest information: in most cases references have been given to Passavant's book or when possible to the local catalogues.

This strict limitation of plan will it is thought, be open to little objection, for it is hoped that the results of a conscientious study of Raphael's works, as they are represented in the Prince Consort's Collection, will lead hereafter to a more extended elucidation of the great master's works.

In a few instances the catalogue contains some representations which are yet wanting in the collection itself: wherever this occurs the number has been placed in brackets [ ]: it is always either a photograph or an engraving which on account of its rarity, or some other unfavourable circumstance could not yet be obtained, but which will certainly be added at the earliest opportunity.

The chronological abstract which follows this preface contains a certain number of dates from Raphael's life, almost all of them derived from the evidence of contemporary documents. The earlier biographers of the great artist had interwoven their tale with so many productions of their own lively imagination, that Raphael's life was in great danger of becoming in course of time, little better than a pleasant myth. Happily the patient researches of men like Pungileoni, Gaye, Passavant, and the recent discoveries of Marchese Campori in the archives of Modena, have recovered a good many historical facts; it is to be hoped that more will be gained in future, and that all the uncertainties yet remaining will be gradually removed. By rejecting all that is mere hypothesis, the chronological table given herewith may at least claim the merit of presenting a reliable framework of Raphael's life.

The Indexes which conclude the volume have been drawn up on the plan which appeared to be simplest for answering any question that might arise.

The Prince Consort was assisted in the formation of the Collection by his librarian Dr E. Becker, now private secretary to H. R. H. the Princess Louis of Hesse, and subsequently by Mr C. Ruland, now Director of the Grand-ducal Museum at Weimar.

The systematic arrangement of the collection and the compilation of the present catalogue, have been the work of the under signed assisted by the late Mr B. B. Woodward, Librarian to The Queen, up to the date of his death in 1869, and afterwards by Mr R. R. Holmes, the present Librarian.

Weimar, May 1876.

* According to Vasari Raphael returned to Perugia once more, in order to paint the Entombment in the church for which it was destined.

** This date is supplied by an autograph document in the possession of the late Major Kühlen at Rome, dated "a di V di marzo in Roma": in it Angelo Canigiani is empowered to receive various sums of money due to Raphael. This fact seems to be confirmed by Raphael's letter to Simone Ciarla of April 21st, wherein he says: "e pochi dì fa io scrisse al Zio e a Giouane da Roma..." -- ("a few days ago I wrote from Rome to the uncle and to Giovanni.") Vide Grimm's Künstler und Kunstwerke, II, p. 113.

  1. Photograph of a pen and ink drawing; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 32.
- v. AN ELDERLY MAN, KNEELING; his hands joined in the attitude of prayer.

1. Photograph of a pen and ink study (perhaps after a painting?); in the Sketch-book of the Academy at Venice.—D. 72.
- VI. A YOUNG WOMAN, STANDING; turned a little towards the right.
  1. Photograph of a pen and ink study; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 9.
- VII. A NUDE BOY, reclining upon his left arm.
  1. Photograph of a pen and ink washed drawing; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 70.
- VIII. HEAD OF A CHILD, LOOKING UPWARDS; also two other slight studies of a child seated, and one walking.
  1. Photograph of a carefully finished pen and ink washed drawing; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 51.
- IX. TWO YOUNG MEN ON HORSEBACK.
  1. Photograph of a pen and slight ink washed drawing; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 39.
  2. Facsimile-engraving of it; published by Celotti, pl. xviii.
  3. Photograph of an early copy of one horseman; in the Teyler Museum at Haarlem.—D. 297.
- X. A GROUP OF THREE YOUNG MEN; the one on the left appearing to crown the centre one; also a boy kneeling, and a slight indication of a fourth figure in the background.
  1. Photograph of a pen and ink drawing from the nude model; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 17.
  2. Facsimile-engraving of it; published by Celotti, pl. xvi.
- XI. A MAN, STANDING, seen from behind; a study for the left figure of the preceding group, No. x.
  1. Photograph of a pen and ink study from the nude model; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 16.
- XII. A YOUNG MAN, STANDING, seen from behind; a different study for one figure in No. x.; also a young man playing on a double flute, and a child in a go-cart.

1. Photograph of a pen and ink drawing from the nude; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 15.
- XIII. A YOUNG MAN, PLAYING ON A DOUBLE FLUTE, slightly different from the one in No. xii.; also an outline of a right arm.
1. Photograph of a pen and ink drawing; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 76.
- XIV. A YOUNG MAN, playing on a shalm; also a right foot.*
1. Photograph of a pen and ink drawing from the nude; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 31.

- XIX. THE SAME, STANDING; seen from behind, a sword in the right hand.
1. Photograph of a pen and ink outline from the nude; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 37.

---

* The drawings catalogued under Nos. xiv to xxvii have been inserted here, although some doubts have arisen as to their authenticity. Passavant almost without hesitation allowed them as genuine, chiefly because they form part of the so-called Sketchbook of Raphael, the history of which has not however been yet entirely cleared up. Many of these sketches undoubtedly bear evident traces of having been retouched and gone over by later hands.

2. Photograph of a similar front view of the lower half of the body only; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 90.
- XX. AN OLD MAN, SEATED; holding a globe and sceptre.
1. Photograph of a pen and ink study from the nude, washed by a later hand; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 25.
- XXI. A MAN, STANDING, leaning on a balustrade.
1. Photograph of a pen and ink study from the nude, washed by a later hand; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 26.
- XXII. A LEFT HAND, the palm exposed.
1. Photograph of a carefully finished pen and ink drawing; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 86.
- XXIII. A LEFT HAND HOLDING A PAIR OF COMPASSES; also two elderly heads.
1. Photograph of a pen and ink study; in the Sketch-book at Venice. Apparently Raphael's faint outline has been gone over by an unskilful hand.
- XXIV. THE SHOULDER AND CHEST OF A MAN; in profile, turned to the right.
1. Photograph of a pen and ink washed study; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 89. A clumsy hand has gone over Raphael's faint black-chalk outline and added the right arm and the lower part of the body.
- XXV. THE BODY AND LEGS OF A MAN, STANDING, turned towards the right.
1. Photograph of a bold pen and ink sketch; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 30.
- XXVI. A RIGHT ARM; also a right shoulder and parts of the arm.
1. Photograph of a pen and ink study washed by a later hand; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 88.

- xxvii. A RIGHT ARM, in four different positions.
1. Photograph of a pen and ink study; in the Sketch-book at Venice.—D. 84.
- xxviii. A YOUNG WOMAN, STANDING, in profile, turned towards the right.
1. Photograph of a pen and ink drawing; in the University Collection, Oxford.—D. 550.
  2. Facsimile-engraving of it by W. Lewis; published in Ottley's "Italian School."
- xxix. A YOUNG WOMAN, STANDING; her left hand rests on a high balustrade.
1. Photograph of a pen and ink study in the University Collection, Oxford.—D. 544.
- xxx. A YOUNG WOMAN, SITTING ON THE GROUND; also the head of a child and three slight sketches for an Infant Christ.
1. Photograph of a silver-point study from the nude; in the private collection of the Grand-Duke of Tuscany.—D. 161.
- xxxi. A WOMAN, STANDING; turned to the left and looking down.
1. Photograph of a silver-point study from the nude; in the collection of Prince Esterhazy at Pesth.
- xxxii. A MAN IN ARMOUR, standing.
1. Photograph of a pen and ink drawing; in the collection of Mr Poynter at Paris.
  2. Photograph of a more finished study for the same figure, and for a child seated; on the back of this drawing.
- xxxiii. A YOUTH, LOOKING UPWARDS, holding some object; the hands repeated in a different position.
1. Photograph of a silver-point study; in the Royal Collection at Stockholm.—D. 314.
- xxxiv. A WOMAN, KNEELING, turned to the left; also the head of a man bending forwards.
1. Photograph of a very slight pen and ink sketch; in the collection of the Duke of Aumale.—D. 358.

- XXXV. A YOUTH, KNEELING, in the attitude of prayer.
1. Lithographic facsimile by N. Strixner of a pen and ink drawing; in the Royal Collection at Munich.—D. 272.
- XXXVI. A YOUNG MAN, STANDING, turned to the left; the head and legs alone are finished.

- XXXIX. A PHILOSOPHER, holding a book; also Apollo, holding a lyre.
1. Photograph of a vigorous pen and ink sketch; in the Wicar Museum at Lille.—D. 396.
- XL. THE PHILOSOPHER alone, more finished; and the right hand repeated.
1. Photograph of a pen and ink drawing; in the collection of F. Locker, Esq.
- XLI. TWO FIGURES CARRYING BOOKS; also two more, one seated, the other only partly drawn.
1. Photograph of some very rapid pen and ink sketches; on the back of No. xxxix., supra.—D. 396.
- XLII. A FIGURE IN AN ANTIQUE DRESS, holding a standard and some emblem.
1. Photograph of a slight pen and ink sketch; in the Wicar Museum at Lille.—D. 398.*

---

* The studies from Nos. xxxvii.—xlii. date most probably from the time of the execution of the frescoes in the Stanza della Segnatura; it may be interesting to compare e. g. Nos. xxxvii.—xxxix. with the philosopher on the steps, in the foreground of the School of Athens; No. xl. with the figure of Aristotle, or the Apollo in the niche, in the same fresco, etc.

XLIII. A GROUP OF FOUR YOUNG MEN, holding shields and lances; the one in the middle borrowed from Donatello's St George.

1. Photograph of a pen and ink drawing; in the University Collection, Oxford.—D. 541.

XLIV. TWO STUDIES FOR A TORSO, with the right arm; turned to the right; also the faint indication of the nude figure of a man, and a large pricked outline of a female head.

1. Photograph of some pen and ink studies; on the back of the preceding drawing.—D. 541.

XLV. A YOUNG MAN, WALKING TOWARDS THE RIGHT, looking back over his left shoulder; apparently a study for one of the figures in the drawing, No. xliii.

1. Photograph of a pen and ink drawing from the nude; in the British Museum.
2. Photograph of a similar study for the same figure, seen from behind; in the British Museum.

XLVI. THREE YOUNG MEN, STANDING, carrying weapons.

1. Photograph of a pen and ink sketch from the nude; in the collection of J. Malcolm, Esq.
2. Facsimile-engraving of it by W. Ryland; 1763.
3. Carbon-print of the same drawing by F. Joubert.
4. Photograph of a slightly altered copy; in the British Museum.—D. 451.

XLVII. TWO YOUNG MEN on an elevation; seen from behind.

1. Photograph of a pen and ink study from the nude; in the collection of Archduke Albert at Vienna.—D. 228.

1. Photograph of a pen and ink study from the nude; in the collection of Archduke Albert at Vienna.—D. 227.

1. Photograph of a red-chalk study from the nude; in the collection of Archduke Albert at Vienna.—D. 230.
- L. A YOUNG MAN CARRYING A VASE ON HIS SHOULDER; seen from behind.
  1. Photograph of a red-chalk study from the nude; in the Wicar Museum at Lille.—D. 400.
- LI. A YOUNG MAN WALKING TOWARDS THE RIGHT in an attitude of adoration; the right arm repeated.
  1. Photograph of a pen and ink study from the nude; in the collection of Archduke Albert at Vienna;—D. 228; on the back of No. xlvi., supra.
