The program title and institution form the URL of the program. The home wiki is the main wiki where participants will be working, and edits on this wiki will tracked by default. If your program spans multiple languages or projects, contributions will also be tracked for any wiki that has an 'Available Article' or 'Assignment' for that wiki. Click "Create my Program!" to start building the page for your wiki program.

Running Editathons and other Editing Events

This set of modules focuses on the development of editathons and other editing events.

Running Editathons

Training modules for running an editathon or other similar editing events. The training takes about 1.5-2 hours, and is in three parts

Module 1: Defining your event

What decisions do you need to make to identify and create and editing event?

Module 2: Planning well before the Editathon

Logistics, decisions and outreach that can be done well before editing events -- including Venue logistics, Communications plans and preparing contribution topics.

Module 3: Planning leading up to the event

Logistics, preparation and concerns that might arise in the final weeks before the event and during the event.

Welcome to this Editathon training!

The goal of this training is to introduce new and experienced facilitators to some of the best practices learned by the event running community for running editing events, frequently called editathons, backstage passes or editing workshops.

There are a lot of details, and a lot of opportunities for making mistakes when running these events: no editing event is ever perfect, and even the best organizers will forget some of the details that made previous events successful. Mistakes are lessons learned, and will help you better support events in the future.

This training comes in three parts: defining editing events, initial preparation for the event, and final planning and details as the event approaches.

The first two modules of this training include a series of preparation questions that can be used to help you plan an editing event. You may want to write down the answers to your questions in a separate document or offline to help make sure that you remember to followup on challenges that you identify with those questions.

Priority Goals identified by program leaders in 2015

Before running an event, it is important to ask why you want to run the event.

Wikimedia communities frequently use contributing events to achieve a number of different goals.

A 2015 study of Editathons, found that most organizers ran this type of event to meet end goals such as:

- Build and engage a community
- Increase awareness of Wikimedia projects
- Increase the diversity of information covered on Wikimedia Projects
- Help make contribution to the Wikimedia community easier
- Increase diversity of participants in Wikimedia projects.
